To draw out a child

Tedda McAnear, director of the Victim Assistance Program of the Midland District Attorney's Office, uses anatomically correct dolls to interview children who are victims of sexual assault.

More molestations reported

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A recent increase in the number of child molestation cases in Midland is due to increased reporting by the public and does not indicate the crime is committed more frequently in the community, according to law enforcement officials.

Investigators and prosecutors have been receiving new reports of sexual assaults involving children at a dizzying rate since late April, according to the director of the Victim Assistance Program of the District Attorney's office.

"I am thinking that more cases are being reported," said Tedda McAnear. "In 1988 we had 20 cases presented to our office. This year we already have had 30. A lot of it can be directly tied to a lot more public awareness, the fact that we are educating our community. We need to bring it out of the closet, and we are doing that very well."

On April 19, a Midland grand jury indicted a former public school teacher on three charges of indecency with a child. The indecency allegedly occurred twice and involved a student at the school, according to officers.

On April 25, police announced the arrest of a 46-year-old Midland geologist. He has been charged with 10 felony counts of sexual assault and indecency with a child, and is awaiting a trial scheduled to begin in October.

A week later, a 16-year-old girl told detectives she was sexually assaulted dozens of times over eight years by her long-time karate instructor. He has been charged in Midland with two counts of aggravated sexual assault, and in Odessa on one count of aggravated sexual assault.

On May 10, Midland County Sheriff's investigators revealed a 19-year-old babysitter had been charged with assaulting several children while under her care. She was tried in July and convicted of indecency with a child. A jury could not reach a verdict on charges of aggravated sexual assault and aggravated assault.

The most recent case of alleged child molestation came to light a week ago, and also involved multiple counts. A 23-year-old man has been charged with two counts of indecency with a child and three counts of aggravated sexual assault.

A veteran police detective estimates the number of reported child molestations is up at most 12 percent. But the number of assaults allegedly committed by a single individual has jumped drastically.

"The increase really began two years ago, and was an increase over previous years," said Detective Sgt. B.G. Johnson. "Recently though we have had this serial-type of offender. That is definitely not the norm. It is not unheard of, but it is not the norm we have seen."

Johnson also attributes the increase to greater public awareness.

"Most of the children today are more educated about" the problem of sexual abuse, the detective said. "They know the 'good touch' and the 'bad touch'. The reporting has done it. I don't think it (the incidence of child molestation) is up."

Iran snubs Bush's hostage message

■ U.S. still hoping for diplomatic solution — 2A

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran said Saturday it has refused to accept a message from President Bush about the foreign hostages in Lebanon, but a U.N. spokesman working on the issue talked of "optimism in the air."

In Washington, a government source said the Bush administration had succeeded in communicating with Iran, which is believed to have strong influence over groups holding hostages.

Algeria assumed a leading role in efforts to win release of the captives.

The pro-Iranian group Hezbollah, believed to be the umbrella for factions holding hostages, named five prisoners held in Israel that it wants released, in addition to a Shiite Moslem cleric kidnapped by Israel.

The statement indirectly endorsed demands made Thursday by the Revolutionary Justice Organization after it suspended threats to kill American hostage Joseph Cicippio.

Israel said it was exploring all ways of winning freedom for hostages but would not engage in "public debate" on the demands.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency quoted an unidentified Foreign Ministry official as saying: "The U.S. administration sent a message to Iran's Foreign Ministry last week through a third country. Since the content had nothing to do with Iran, the message was not accepted."

Iran has denied involvement in hostage-taking.

The agency, monitored in Nicosia, said the official was responding to reports that Bush sent a message to Iran to prevent the killing of hostages. It gave no further details.

A closely involved source in Washington said on condition of anonymity, "Basically, we've been trying to get different people to weigh in."

"We have been able to get our messages, one way or another, through to the parties — certainly to the Iranians," the source said.

Iran's new president, Hashemi Rafsanjani, on Friday offered to help solve the hostage problem.

However, he said the United States must pressure Israel to free Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, a Shiite Moslem clergyman abducted July 28 from south Lebanon.

On Monday, a pro-Iranian group said it hanged an American hostage, Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, in retaliation for Israel's refusal to free Obeid. Revolutionary Justice then threatened to kill Cicippio but said Thursday it was "freezing" the order while demanding freedom for Obeid and Palestinian and Lebanese prisoners in Israel.

Israel has accused Obeid of instigating attacks on Israel and has offered to free him only if the foreign hostages and three Israeli soldiers held in Lebanon are freed.

In Israel, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's top aide, Yossi Ahimeir, said Israel's original offer stands and that the country refuses to "engage in a public debate" over Hezbollah demands.

"We are holding contacts and making efforts to bring about the release of hostages and prisoners and it's not worthwhile to add any details now," he said.

There are 16 foreigners, including eight Americans, held in Lebanon. The hostage held longest is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press. He was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

In Damascus, Syria, the head of U.N. peacekeeping operations, Marrack Goulding, told a news conference there was "optimism in the air" in Beirut about the release of hostages.

But he warned there would be no "quick fixes, no simple solution."

Goulding arrived in Syria from Lebanon, where he was investigating the killing of Higgins, who was working with a U.N. observer force when he was abducted in February 1988.

After three days of discussions in Beirut, Goulding said he had not yet "obtained concrete proof that Colonel Higgins is dead, and I pray he is not dead."

U.S. officials have said they are virtually certain Higgins is dead.

Goulding also told reporters: "Algeria is playing an extra part in trying to resolve the hostage problem as Algeria has done in previous cases."

The North African country, which has strong ties to both the West and radical Moslem groups, has successfully mediated hostage crises in the past 10 years. Algerian diplomats helped win the release of American hostages in January 1981 after they were held 444 days at the U.S. Embassy in Iran.

Algeria's ambassador to Beirut, Khaled Hasnawi, was quoted Saturday by Beirut radio stations as saying his country was undertaking a new initiative to free all hostages.

Radio Algiers said his talks involved all hostages, whether "Lebanese, Palestinians, Americans, Europeans or Israelis." It cited "progress in this mediation."

Several Beirut radio stations said Bush had specifically asked Algeria to intercede.

A Hezbollah statement issued in Beirut on Saturday demanded freedom from Israeli prisons of five "uprising heroes," identified as Nidal Zaloum, Itaf Alyan and Abdul-Hadi Suleiman Ghanem and "Lebanese resistance heroes" Anwar Yaseen and Soha Bishara.

It also demanded Israel release Obeid, Palestinians jailed during the anti-Israeli uprising in the occupied territories, and guerrillas it has captured.

Police, fire pay comparisons 'don't tell story'

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

A 1989 study showing that the city's maximum pay for police and firefighters is the highest in West Texas doesn't reflect the fact no one comes near to earning those amounts, two local officials said.

Midland Police Chief Richard Czech and Midland Fire Chief James Roberts said last week the salary comparison technically is correct, but misleading.

The two departments' pay scales are divided into nine pay levels with the first being the lowest-paying. An increase in pay is deemed a merit raise by the city, with a specific level budgeted yearly.

None of the men and women working for either department has progressed beyond the fourth tier, the chiefs said.

"The possibility of an officer getting to the top is less than 10 percent," Czech explained. "We're only allotted about $30,000 to $35,000 for 200 employees."

Down the street at the Midland Fire Department, Roberts said none of his firefighters earn more than $1,888 a month, though technically they could be eligible to earn as much as $2,391.

Roberts blamed that instance on his department's merit raise appraisal system which he said "doesn't have credibility in the fire department," and a money shortage in city coffers.

A fire captain who is the merit raise "appraiser" also is the man who lives with those he must evaluate, Roberts explained.

"The appraisal system is not adequate ... there are many factors ... and part of it is our own philosophy within the fire department.

"In the fire world a group of two or three guys live together including the captain. He's supposed to appraise the people he lives with?" Roberts questioned.

"He can't tell them he's not recommending them for a raise. We have real difficulties doing a fair appraisal," the fire chief said.

The salary study was released last month in response to a police officer organization's request for a 15 percent pay raise next year and its consequent disgust upon hearing the 1989-90 increase will be only 2 percent.

City Manager Fred Poe understands the raise "bothers them," but notes the police and firefighters belong to one of only two forces in West Texas which authorizes private use of squad cars fueled with gas the city pays for.

Lubbock Police also may take their squad cars home after work.

"There's no question that (off-duty car usage) is a benefit. As long as they're in the city ... if they're going to the grocery store ... the city pays all of it.

"We don't feel like it costs that much. The exposure is worth it," the city manager said.

The study — outlined in a July 17 letter from Mayor Carroll Thomas to Czech — also shows the city of Midland pays more toward the continuing education of its lawmen than Abilene, Amarillo, Odessa or Lubbock do.

According to the January 1989 salary comparison, monthly minimum salaries for Midland police are $1,743 and for Midland firefighters, $1,662. Those figures will increase slightly when the 2 percent raise is effective next October.

The most a Midland patrol officer can earn is $2,578 monthly. A Midland firefighter can earn no more than $2,391, the study shows.

In Odessa, minimum salaries for patrol officers and firefighters are $1,725 and $1,340 a month. The most police and firefighters can earn monthly in Odessa is $2,470 and $1,701.

Abilene's beginning monthly wages for patrol officers and firefighters are $1,531 and $952 respectively. The maximum pay ceiling for police and firefighters in that city is $1,962 and $1,877, the study shows.

In Wichita Falls, the minimum salaries for police and firefighters are $1,975 and $1,543. The Wichita Falls policeman receives no pay increases, but longevity bonuses while firefighters can earn a maximum of $1,786, the study shows.

The larger cities of Lubbock and Amarillo pay less than Midland, the study shows.

Amarillo patrol officers and firefighters earn $1,555 and $1,492 to start and progress to a pay ceiling of $2,147 and $1,999, the study shows.

In Lubbock, beginning police and firefighters both earn $1,619. The pay limits for both the patrol officers and firefighters is set at $2,149.

Complaints about the 2 percent pay raise have been "rather minor," Poe said. "We'd rather have given them more, but we hope they appreciate the two percent."

City employees have not had a pay raise since 1985.

"Our people can't understand why we can't give as much" as the other taxing entities have given their employees in raises, the city manager speculated.

The two chiefs also said that one should not equate higher salaries here with equality of living expenses. They think it costs more to live here than any other comparable West Texas city.

"Comparing wages on a city-by-city basis doesn't always tell the whole story. What's traditional in Odessa or San Angelo may not be traditional here," Czech said.

Nonetheless, the two chiefs last week said their men and women will abide by the 2 percent raise and, in the words of the police chief, "continue to do a very good job."

Said Chief Roberts: "I've told them the cold reality is there's just so much money in the pot and until the city of Midland can get its budget balanced we're going to have difficult times."

County debating judicial pay request

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

When Midland County commissioners resume work on a proposed 1990 budget next week, they could have before them a formal proposal from three state district judges for continued $10,000 salary supplements each year.

And despite a hefty 15 percent pay raise given them by Texas lawmakers, one county commissioner commenting on executive session activity said the judges have been pressing for even more money from the county.

"It made me sick to my stomach," that commissioner said in reference to the request, observing that it "bordered on the ridiculous."

The commissioners have been holding a series of discussions with State District Judges Pat Baskin, Vann Culp and Dean Rucker, suggesting that they may have to discontinue the supplemental salaries.

"We just don't have the money," asserted Democratic Precinct 3 Commissioner Louisa Valencia, confirming that the judicial supplements may fall to the wayside because of proposed cutbacks in the 1990 budget.

Mrs. Valencia said the county faces a monumental budget crisis because of increased costs for law enforcement and this year's $220 million decline in the county tax base.

Baskin, a Republican who presides over the 142nd District Court, preferred "not to discuss" his feelings about the proposed cutback in supplemental income, calling it an "inappropriate" topic for discussion.

Culp and Rucker were unavailable for comment despite attempts by the Reporter-Telegram to contact them last week.

Except for the state district judges, two court-at-law judges and district attorney who are in store for sizeable salary increases, most other county employees will have to do without a raise this year, according to Mrs. Valencia.

Last year, county employees received a 3 percent salary hike on average, which was the first pay hike allocated by county commissioners in three years.

Under the state salary schedule for judicial districts, Baskin and his fellow state district judges are allowed to collect no more than $87,250 in combined state and county-supplemented income.

That's about $2,000 less than the salary given the chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court and the presiding judge of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, he said.

The 71st Texas Legislature mandated the salary increases for the entire state judiciary, from the chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court to court-at-law judges in all 254 Texas counties.

U.S. still waiting in hostage drama

By RITA BEAMISH

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is in a "holding pattern" as it pins its hopes on continued diplomatic efforts to resolve the crisis involving hostages held by Moslem extremists, an official said.

The administration on Friday voiced optimism, tinged with caution, at the promise of Iran's new president, Hashemi Rafsanjani, to help find a solution to the hostage situation.

President Bush said he would explore the overture "to the fullest."

"I don't want to raise hopes beyond fulfillment, but there's reason to be somewhat encouraged," Bush said about Rafsanjani's comments.

Still, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the United States is "always skeptical of what we hear from Iran," while State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler sounded a slightly more positive reaction.

"Based on the excerpts we have seen, President Rafsanjani's remarks appear to be moderate and are therefore encouraging," she said. "We have reason to believe that Iran is genuinely engaged and no reason to believe that its engagement is not focused in a positive direction."

The United States, which does not have direct relations with Iran, was using Switzerland as an intermediary to seek help from Iran, generally believed to wield influence with the Shiite kidnappers, officials said.

The president also called the head of the Geneva-based International Red Cross, Cornelio Sommaruga, on Friday to voice support for the agency's involvement in trying to free the hostages, said Fitzwater.

Efforts by the Red Cross were alluded to by Rafsanjani when he said he would help the United States find solutions.

Bush spoke of a "very extraordinarily broad exercise of diplomacy here in the last couple of days" during which aides said he has appealed to dozens of world leaders for help.

The diplomatic efforts are continuing, Fitzwater said.

Another administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said "It's in a holding pattern," while the administration watches for its diplomatic overtures to produce results. No new messages went to Iran on Friday, the official said.

During a photo session, Bush was asked about the massing of U.S. naval strength in the Mediterranean Sea and the Indian Ocean as a possible indicator he had decided to retaliate militarily if another U.S. hostage was killed.

"If I had made such a decision, I expect this would be the last place I'd be talking about it," Bush said.

But Fitzwater denied Bush had selected specific Lebanese targets to hit if kidnappers had carried out a threat to kill American hostage Joseph Cicippio.

"I will say he did not make final decisions," Fitzwater said. "It does not help the United States government or the United States to be discussing military tactics ... to be flexing our muscles in public."

Bush was he was "certainly pleased" that the kidnappers on Thursday indefinitely suspended their death threat against Cicippio.

"I'm encouraged. But I don't want to get the hopes of the hostages' loved ones up once again, to have those hopes dashed. This is a brutal process, where you see people paraded before cameras and their families get their hopes up," the president said.

Vermont flooded; High winds, thunderstorms ravaging Midwest

Associated Press

Flooding washed away a house, forced the evacuation of a trailer park and closed roads in Vermont on Saturday as thunderstorm winds up to 85 mph downed trees, power lines and telephone service in the Midwest.

A falling tree injured a child after a tornado reportedly touched down briefly 25 miles southeast of Columbus, Ohio, on Saturday night, authorities said.

In Wisconsin, the Coast Guard searched Lake Michigan for a stranded boat believed to have two people aboard.

The storms appeared to be the remnants of Hurricane Chantal, which washed ashore in Texas last week, the National Weather Service said.

An overnight storm dumped up to 5 inches of rain on parts of central Vermont. Plainfield, 12 miles east of Montpelier, was the worst hit.

One home was washed away by the rising Great Brook.

Several stretches of road connecting Plainfield and the neighboring town of Orange remained flooded, state Rep. Peter Youngbaer said at an emergency town meeting.

"There are several families in there, who are isolated between washouts," he said. "One of the priorities is to figure out a way to get emergency vehicles in there if they're needed."

Plainfield sits astride the confluence of the Great Brook and the Winooski River. Yards along the brook were 6 inches deep in silt and were strewn with debris, residents said.

At the River Run Trailer Park in Berlin, the Stevens Branch, another Winooski tributary, overflowed its banks. Dozens of residents were forced to flee waist-deep water, state police said.

The river receded by noon and residents returned to their homes.

Main Street in nearby Barre was 6 to 8 inches deep in water for a time, and several businesses' basements were flooded. A car was seen up to its door handles in water.

Roads were washed out or closed by mudslides in East Montpelier, Northfield, Moretown and East Middlebury.

In Oakland, Ohio, residents reported a tornado, said Fairfield County Sheriff's Deputy Luke Danner.

"We've got trees and power lines down virtually all over the place," Danner said.

The extent of the child's injuries was not known.

In addition to the homes reported damaged by high winds, several fires, probably electrical, were reported, Danner said. None of the fires appeared to be serious.

In Iowa, severe thunderstorms packed winds up to 85 mph, pelting cities and farm fields with hail and leaving a trail of broken trees, damaged buildings and power outages that affected more than 15,000 customers.

In western Iowa, about two-thirds of an inch of rain were accompanied by winds that stripped leaves from corn stalks, blew down part of a barn and knocked down tree limbs near Little Sioux.

"Clouds came in rolling over each other, the sky turned black, the wind came up and the garbage cans took off," said Gina Duncan, a convenience store clerk in the central Iowa town of Boone.

Winds hit 75 mph in Wisconsin, where powerful thunderstorms knocked out electrical power to about 15,000 residents and stranded the boaters.

The overnight storms flooded many streets and caused problems on Lake Michigan.

The Coast Guard belives the missing 18-foot boat might have been blown out on the lake.

Winds as high 75 mph were reported in surburban Milwaukee on Friday night.

Thunderstorms and high winds did similar damage in Nebraska and Indiana.

Texas firm paid doctors for referrals

PHOENIX (AP) — The private corporation that wants to acquire Phoenix-based Baptist Hospital and Health Systems used to offer doctors cash incentives for referring privately insured patients to its hospitals, records indicate.

Columbia Hospital Corp. of Fort Worth, Texas, ended the practice in April after it received media attention and the Texas Medical Association issued a guideline indicating such a practice would be unethical, said Richard Scott, Columbia chairman.

He said before Columbia implemented the practice last year it was reviewed by lawyers who deemed it ethical.

Doctors were offered amounts based on the size of the patient's bill at hospitals and laboratories coowned by physicians and Columbia, the El Paso Times reported in March.

Paying physicians for referrals or the revenue they generate is not allowed when patients' bills are paid by such government programs as Medicare, and the practice has been listed as unethical in American Medical Association guidelines since 1986.

"Columbia does not pay its doctors a kickback for non-Medicare referrals any more, but the mere fact that it did stands as pretty damning evidence of their true motives. They are just buying referrals," said Rep. Pete Stark, D-Calif., who has introduced legislation that would ban physicians from referring Medicare patients to medical facilities in which they have an ownership interest.

MOLEST

Ms. McAnear credits the Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Project (CAPP) and the Midland Rape Crisis Center with the education of Midlanders about a painful subject. But she wants to do more, and wants to become involved with the Midland Independent School District.

"Some of the teachers have been instructed about what to watch for," she said. "We've said there is appropriate touching of children and inappropriate touching — but we've stopped there. I'd like to go further.

"I'd like to get with the school district and actually take the kids to the courthouse, and let them meet some officers, some prosecutors, and maybe even the judges. I'd like to let them see the courtroom."

Children should be taught before — not after — they are victims that they should report child molesting. Too often, children are introduced to the criminal justice system as victims, Ms. McAnear says.

Several of the child assault cases under investigation occurred during summer months when the children are out of school, and when they are involved with adults in outdoor activities such as swimming. But in past years the incidence of reported cases has not picked up in the hot months, according to Ms. McAnear.

"You would think that more reporting would be seen during the school year, when the children are in class," and are being watched closely by adults, she said. "Sexual assault of children goes on all the time ... it starts with inappropriate touching and goes on from there. A lot of that goes unreported."

Johnson agrees that "a lot" of child molestation occurs in Midland but goes unreported.

Most of the sexual assault cases involving children follow familiar patterns: they usually involve someone the child knows or is related to. A common offender is a stepfather or stepbrother, which makes the investigation of cases more difficult, according to investigators.

"A very low percentage of these cases are reported," Johnson said. "You have to get to the point where the child believes it is not his fault.

"I had one child who told me the other day 'That's one of my best friends. I wouldn't want to get him in trouble.'"

COUNTY

Texas' Supreme Court chief justice and the presiding judge of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals are to receive $91,875 for the 1990-91 biennium, while justices on those courts will get up to $89,250 per year.

The chief judges of the Court of Appeals in each of Texas' 14 districts are due for salary increases to $80,850 per year. Sitting judges on those courts are scheduled to receive $80,325.

Base salaries for state district judges have jumped 15 percent to $76,309 per year for each year of the 1990-91 biennium.

Texas lawmakers also mandated $68,500 salaries for Court-at-Law Judges James Fitz-Gerald and Willie Dubose.

Precinct 4 Commissioner Win Brown said those salaries would have to be paid for out of the county coffers.

Hurricane threatens Bermuda

MIAMI (AP) — A hurricane warning was posted Saturday for Bermuda as Hurricane Dean churned north with 85 mph winds on a path heading for the Atlantic Ocean island, forecasters said.

At 9 p.m. EDT, Dean's center was located near 28.2 north latitude and 64.3 west longitude, or 290 miles south of Bermuda.

Little change in strength was expected, said forecasters at the National Hurricane Center in suburban Coral Gables.

Dean was pushing north at 21 mph, and was expected to keep the same heading for the next 24 hours, putting the center near Bermuda on Sunday morning.

Winds were expected to hit 50 mph in Bermuda, with gusts to 60 mph, on Sunday afternoon, Bermuda television said. Tides of 3 to 5 feet above normal were considered possible.

The storm could easily miss Bermuda because of its small size, but forecasters said they wanted to alert the island's 65,000 residents to the possibility of hurricane conditions.

A hurricane watch was upgraded later in the day to a hurricane warning.

Planes from the U.S. Naval Air Station on the island flew toward the storm.

Stores and businesses in Bermuda have been closed since Thursday for a four-day holiday that revolves around the island's championship cricket match.

The hurricane's strongest winds are limited to a small area near the center, but tropical-storm force winds of 39 mph extend 125 miles east of the center and 50 miles to the west.

Dean, the second hurricane of the Atlantic season, became a tropical storm Monday night, passed the hurricane threshold of 74 mph winds Tuesday and threatened the northern Caribbean islands before shifting north late in the week.

Author Erica Jong marries attorney

NEW YORK (AP) — "Fear of Flying" author Erica Jong on Saturday married New York lawyer Kenneth David Burrows.

The wedding, which took place at Burrows' home in Warren, Vt., was the third for Jong and the second for Burrows. Their previous marriages ended in divorce.

In addition to the best-selling "Fear of Flying," Jong has written "Serenissima" and several books of poetry.

Burrows is a senior partner in the law firm of Burrows, Poster and Franzblau.

Jong, who will keep her name, was attended by her daughter from a previous marriage, Molly Miranda Jong-Fast.

'Equals' drawn in 1557

The "equals" sign (=) was first used by Robert Record of Oxford University in England in an algebra text he published in 1557. He argued that nothing could be more equal than two parallel lines. (CNS)

Dallas suspends clinics for homeless

DALLAS (AP) — An inability to fill nursing vacancies has forced the city to suspend most of its health clinics at homeless shelters, officials said.

"Like many of the city programs, we are not attracting nurse applicants to our program," Fred Pond, a registered nurse who serves as nursing supervisor for the city's homeless health-care program, said Friday. "We've never been fully staffed. We have more positions funded than we've ever filled."

The clinics are funded by the federal government but staffed by the city. Although the clinics receives enough money for five full-time registered nurses and one full-time licensed vocational nurse, they are unable to offer nurses competitive wages, Pond said.

That's because the city puts a limit on clinic nurses' salaries, he said.

Three of the clinics' registered nurses resigned this summer, Pond said, leaving only a half-time registered nurse and a full-time licensed vocational nurse.

"We are bound to the city civil service job classifications," Pond told The Dallas Morning News. "They couldn't just give our program a raise."

Jean Brown, manager of community health services for the city, said her department has been working to upgrade the pay scale for all nurses.

Meanwhile, Pond said, the homeless health-care program is looking at alternative ways to staff clinics, such as using volunteers.

In 1988, the city's dozen clinics at homeless shelters served about 4,100 children and adults, with a total of about 12,000 visits, Pond said. He said the nursing shortage has forced suspension of adult and children's clinics at the Downtown Family Shelter and Ruff House and adult clinics at Genesis House, Union Gospel Mission and Trinity Ministry to the Poor. The city also has suspended one of its two clinics at the Stewpot at First Presbyterian Church, he said.

Judge rules Dallas created segregated housing system

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge has ruled that the city of Dallas helped create a separate and unequal system of public housing and now must pay to dismantle it.

"The undisputed facts establish that the city was a substantial cause of (the Dallas Housing Authority's) deliberate racial segregation and discrimination in its public housing programs in Dallas," U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer said in a ruling issued Friday.

Buchmeyer also ruled that the city should be added to the list of defendants in a four-year-old desegregation case against the DHA and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Seven black women filed suit in 1985 contending that thousands of federally assisted apartments in Dallas remained segregated by race and unequal in conditions because of a longstanding pattern of discrimination by the two agencies.

In January 1987 the judge approved a settlement requiring demolition of most of the dilapidated West Dallas housing project and relocation of tenants to private, rent-subsidized apartments throughout Dallas and the suburbs.

On Friday, Buchmeyer found that Mayor Annette Strauss and other city officials have chosen to ignore the decree.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs said Buchmeyer's ruling was unprecedented and would lead to improvements for thousands of poor families living in federally financed slums.

"It's the first time a city has been ordered to join with a housing authority to desegregate its housing," attorney Mike Daniel told The Dallas Morning News. "And it's the first time a city has been ordered to fund the remedies for the separate and unequal conditions it helped create."

"It's fantastic," said Mary Dews, one of the original plaintiffs in the case who has lived in subsidized housing for the last 20 years.

"There's a lot of people who say racism doesn't exist in Dallas, but this (opinion) shows that it does," she told the Dallas Times Herald.

Buchmeyer said he will conduct a hearing later to determine the "financial obligations to be imposed upon the city."

Mrs. Strauss, who was contacted by the Times Herald while vacationing in California Friday, would not comment on the ruling on the advise of the city attorney until the council could be briefed.

"We have to hear what the attorney will recommend," Mrs. Strauss said. "Until we know that, we don't do anything."

Assistant City Attorn Donald Postell declined to comm..t, as did attorneys for the DHA and HUD.

Congress sends landmark thrift bailout to president

By MATT YANCY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress sent a landmark savings and loan bailout to President Bush early today after a frantic two days of wrangling over the finishing touches on the biggest financial rescue in history.

The House passed the $159 billion legislation shortly after midnight Friday on a 201-175 vote, allowing weary members of Congress to begin a monthlong vacation that had been threatened by a bitter fight with the administration over the financing of the package.

House Democrats abandoned the bill in large numbers after key congressional negotiators bowed to a veto threat by Bush and agreed to hide 60 percent of the bailout's cost from the federal deficit.

But with the losses of government-insured deposits mounting at a rate of $20 million to $30 million daily, House and Senate leaders from both parties — with vigorous personal lobbying by Bush over the telephone — put together enough votes to replenish an insolvent S&L insurance fund with $50 billion.

"The savings of million of Americans are at stake unless we do something," Sen. Christopher Bond, R-Mo., said just before the Senate approved the bill on a non-roll call late Thursday night.

Rep. Chalmers Wylie, R-Ohio, said the nation risked "another bank holiday" similar to the wave of bank closings of 1933 when depositors lined up for blocks demanding their savings, turning what was then a recession into the Great Depression.

The $50 billion will be used over the next three years to close and merge 500 insolvent S&Ls and pay off depositors whose savings were lost to failed and often fraudulent loans over the past decade, most of them in Texas.

The legislation also overhauls the regulation of the industry, requiring owners of the nation's 3,000 thrift institutions to put up billions of dollars more of their own money as capital to serve as a buffer between risky loans and federal deposit insurance funds.

Congress and the administration had worked out the reforms weeks ago, leaving the sticky issue of how to pay for the bailout without raising taxes or dipping into other government programs as the major roadblock to fixing the S&L crisis.

Bush insisted that the money be raised through an elaborate scheme using non-Treasury bonds to be issued by a new government agency created only for that purpose as a way of keeping the bailout costs out of the government's official deficit figures.

Democrats demanded that the money be borrowed directly through the Treasury, a move that would have swelled the deficit by $44 billion over three years but would have reduced the 30-year interest costs on the borrowing by $4.5 billion.

After Bush on Thursday threatened to veto the bill if it ballooned the deficit, the two sides agreed to split the financing both ways.

Under an accord hammered out by Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady and White House Budget Director Richard Darman with key lawmakers, the Treasury will borrow $20 billion before October, swelling the estimated deficit for this year from $148 billion to $168 billion.

But the non-Treasury bonds will be used to raise the other $30 billion in 1990 and 1991, raising the deficit a maximum of only $3.5 billion — the annual interest payments on the borrowing — each of those years if current interest rates prevail.

Just before the vote today, Rep. Sam Gibbons of Florida, one of 135 House Democrats voting against the bill, complained his colleagues had lost their conscience and their backbone in response to Bush's veto threat.

"It should have been paid for by taxes, but the president could not bring himself to say the word," said Gibbons. "So we have fostered this unconscionable debt on our children and grandchildren."

By the administration's latest estimates, the bailout is expected to cost $159 billion — including interest on the borrowing to pay for it — over the next 10 years.

Over 30 years, the costs mushroom to $285 billion, of which taxpayers will pay at least $157 billion, according to the congressional auditors in the General Accounting Office.

The bill also requires S&Ls to channel more of their lending to home mortgages and away from speculative commercial real estate ventures and high-yield, high-risk junk bonds.

It gives the Justice Department $75 million a year to root out fraud at financial institutions and establishes a new agency, the Resolution Trust Corp., to dispose of $300 billion of real estate and other property falling into the government's hands through failed S&L loans.

For the first time, banks will be able to buy and own healthy S&Ls, their biggest lending market competitor in many communities. And the thrift industry will be required to pour $50 million to $100 million of its profits each year into subsidizing mortgages at below-market interest rates for low-income families.

Investigation: S&L executives misused funds

DALLAS (AP) — A federal investigation of Vernon Savings Association shows thrift executives used customers' funds to provide prostitutes, hunting trips and other perks to a former Texas savings and loan commissioner while he supervised the troubled Dallas thrift, according to a federal lawsuit filed against Vernon's former president.

Patrick G. King, former Vernon president and former deputy thrift commissioner, is scheduled to be tried Monday on federal charges of conspiracy, misapplication of funds and making false entries on Vernon's books in connection with the illegal use of thrift money. He has pleaded innocent.

The 37-count federal indictment alleges King illegally used thrift money to hire prostitutes and make $55,000 worth of political contributions to congressmen, including former House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth, and U.S. Rep. Jack Kemp, R-New York.

Prosecution documents filed late Thursday detail the alleged use of Vernon funds to provide female escorts, lavish trips and other entertainment for former thrift commissioner L. Linton Bowman III, Vernon Savings owner Don R. Dixon, King and other Vernon officials, The Dallas Morning News reported.

But King's attorney, Emmett Colvin of Dallas, filed motions contending prostitution-hiring charges may been improperly handled because Bowman was impotent at the time of the alleged incidents.

King was employed by the savings and loan commission under Bowman's supervision, eventually becoming deputy commissioner, before joining Vernon as president of a thrift subsidiary in 1983.

Bowman was appointed state savings and loan commissioner in 1983, presiding over the Texas thrift industry until November 1987, when he resigned.

Vernon Savings was closed by federal regulators that month, with losses totaling more than $1.3 billion.

Prosecutors allege shortly after King was hired at Vernon, he set up several excursions that included paid female companionship for his former boss at Dixon's request.

The alleged excursions reportedly continued from January 1985 to January 1986, while state regulators — under Bowman's supervision — and federal thrift examiners became increasingly critical of speculative lending, insider dealings and other questionable practices at Vernon.

"The first trip to Kansas in January 1985 to go pheasant hunting was a get-acquainted session with Dixon, King and (Vernon officer Pat) Malone hosting Bowman," according to court documents filed by prosecutors Thursday. "By March 1985, King again invited Bowman on a trip, this time to Dixon's home in Solana Beach, Calif., and to a lavish suite at the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco."

The documents also allege King arranged for two women to accompany him and Bowman to the Sheraton D-FW in October 1985 and paid for the arrangements with thrift funds.

Woman senator uses methodical approach to build might

AUSTIN (AP) — State Sen. Judith Zaffirini is clear about her priorities.

"When we adjourn, the flash you see is my body, heading back to Laredo," says the Laredo Democrat, who puts her husband, 7-year-old son, ailing father, and religious faith ahead of her public duties. "Faith and family first."

But no one's saying Ms. Zaffirini shirks her legislative work.

In her 2½ years as a lawmaker, she has had perfect attendance in the Senate and a 100 percent voting record.

She says she often is at her Capitol desk by 5 a.m.

For every bill she sponsors, Ms. Zaffirini carries a notebook recording its background, rationale and general and specific statements about the measure.

She has memorized all the motions used in Senate business.

She says she has never met anyone better organized than herself.

"I am very committed and hard-working," she says. "And I can't tell you how many times I've been called tireless."

She is consistently methodical, building, she says, to "whirlwind production."

Out of her methodical approach she has built political might. She is recognized as a potential major player should the Texas Legislature take up the abortion issue in a special session this year or the regular session in 1991. She is against abortion — "deeply pro-life," she says.

Ms. Zaffirini was the first Hispanic woman to be elected to the Texas Senate.

She says she has been active politically since she was 5, with her first job telephoning people to encourage them to vote.

AP Laserphoto

State Senator Judith Zaffirini, the first Hispanic woman to be elected to the Texas Senate, is spending more time with her family now that the legislature is out of session.

She and her husband, Carlos Zaffirini, a lawyer, worked for state Sen. Wayne Connally in 1967-73. In 1984-86 she was vice chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee.

A Senate staff member who admires Ms. Zaffirini calls her "the most driven person I've ever known."

The 43-year-old senator says that's not accurate. But consider this brief episode in her life:

In the late 1970s when she was a doctoral candidate in communications at the University of Texas, she left Laredo after lunch on Sunday, drove 235 miles to Austin and studied through the night. On Monday she was in class until 10 p.m. On Tuesday she got up at 4 a.m. and drove back to Laredo, where she taught junior college classes from 9:30 a.m. to 9 p.m.

She received her Ph.D. in 1978.

"I've learned to prioritize my work, and my priority has been the same for years — faith and family first, and business and politics later," she says.

"I automatically organize everything. If you walk into my closet, you will see that it's organized — white blouses, off-white, beige, brown. It just makes things simpler," she says.

At home, Sunday is bake day, and Ms. Zaffirini every other week bakes her husband's favorite cake, apricot. After he eats a piece or two, she slices the remainder into individual pieces and freezes them for snacks.

When her son, Carlos Jr., was in kindergarten, she baked some 30 items for his class and received a plaque as "the best cooker in the whole world." That is included on her official profile, distributed by her office.

She also bakes "goodies" for Laredo reporters and other Capitol press corps favorites and recently sent a heart-shaped box of sweets to Rep. Tony Polumbo, D-Houston, who in the absence of the House committee chairman had held a hearing on three of Ms. Zaffirini's bills.

On Christmas Eve, after preparing for weeks, Ms. Zaffirini hosts more than 100 family members for a buffet. Each year, she said, there are 21 items on the main table, 15 on the dessert table.

The birth of her child is yet another example of persistence and attention to detail.

After four miscarriages between the third and seventh years of marriage, she became pregnant in 1981, and read more than 100 books on pregnancy, labor, types of delivery and infant nutrition.

Her physician, she recalls, told her that because of her age — 36 — there was a great likelihood that the child would be retarded, brain-damaged or deformed.

"I said, you could tell me without a doubt that my baby's going to be retarded, brain-damaged or deformed, and I will not consider having an abortion. I told my husband, and he totally agreed."

Ms. Zaffirini, a staunch Roman Catholic, said her physician asked her to consider counseling, but she declined. "I had done my reading. I was informed on the subject. And it wasn't until that point that I realized how deeply pro-life I was."

Wanting her faculties to be at their best at birth, Ms. Zaffirini refused drugs even though her labor lasted 18 hours.

Methodically laying the groundwork for her Senate race in 1986, she told supporters she would run against incumbent John Traeger once she had $100,000 in the bank and 100 percent commitment from a list she had compiled of people throughout the 20-county district.

"If one person on that list told me 'No,' I would not have run. But they all told me 'Yes,'" she said.

Traeger, D-Seguin, later announced his retirement. Ms. Zaffirini won the Democratic primary in a runoff against state Rep. Billy Hall, D-Laredo, and the general election against former state Rep. Bennie Bock II of New Braunfels.

Human remains discovered at suspected lab

HAMILTON (AP) — Authorities discovered human bones, teeth and ashes at a rendering plant used as an illegal drug manufacturing lab near Hamilton where authorities found the grisly remains of a woman in June.

Hamilton County Sheriff's Department dispatcher Beverly Riley said Saturday seven people remain jailed on drug-related charges in connection with the lab, which originally was raided May 13.

An eighth suspect — a 38-year-old Dublin man — remains at large.

On June 30, authorities found the body of an 18- to 22-year-old, blonde- or light-brown-haired woman stuffed in a barrel at the site.

After receiving information from an informant, sheriff's deputies found a second barrel Friday containing the cremated remains of a man.

Ms. Riley said neither victim has been identified.

Ms. Riley added that authorities believe the victim were "probably involved in the operation somehow," but it is not clear whether they may have worked at the plant or been killed in a drug vengeance slaying.

"At this time we don't believe there's others," Johnston said of the bodies. "Hopefully, of course, there's not."

The remains found Friday are believed to be those of a man killed elsewhere and brought to the site for cremation, said Bill Johnston, assistant U.S. attorney.

Johnston said the woman's body also had been found in a 55-gallon drum, but the barrel was packed with lime, ostensibly to speed decomposition.

"There was a methamphetamine laboratory here," said Johnston. "There were controlled substances seized here, and a number of people as well."

Ms. Riley said three people were arrested May 13, another two between May 13 and June 30 and two more since then.

Bentsen pushes products made at maquiladoras

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. leaders should urge Mexico, Japan and Europe to buy more products made at maquiladoras, twin plants on both sides of the U.S.-Mexico border, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said Saturday.

Under the law, Mexico can buy up to 20 percent of goods made at maquiladoras, Bentsen said, but "they're not doing anything like that."

"In fact, only one out of 10 of those maquiladora plants has asked for a permit to be able to sell into Mexico," Bentsen said.

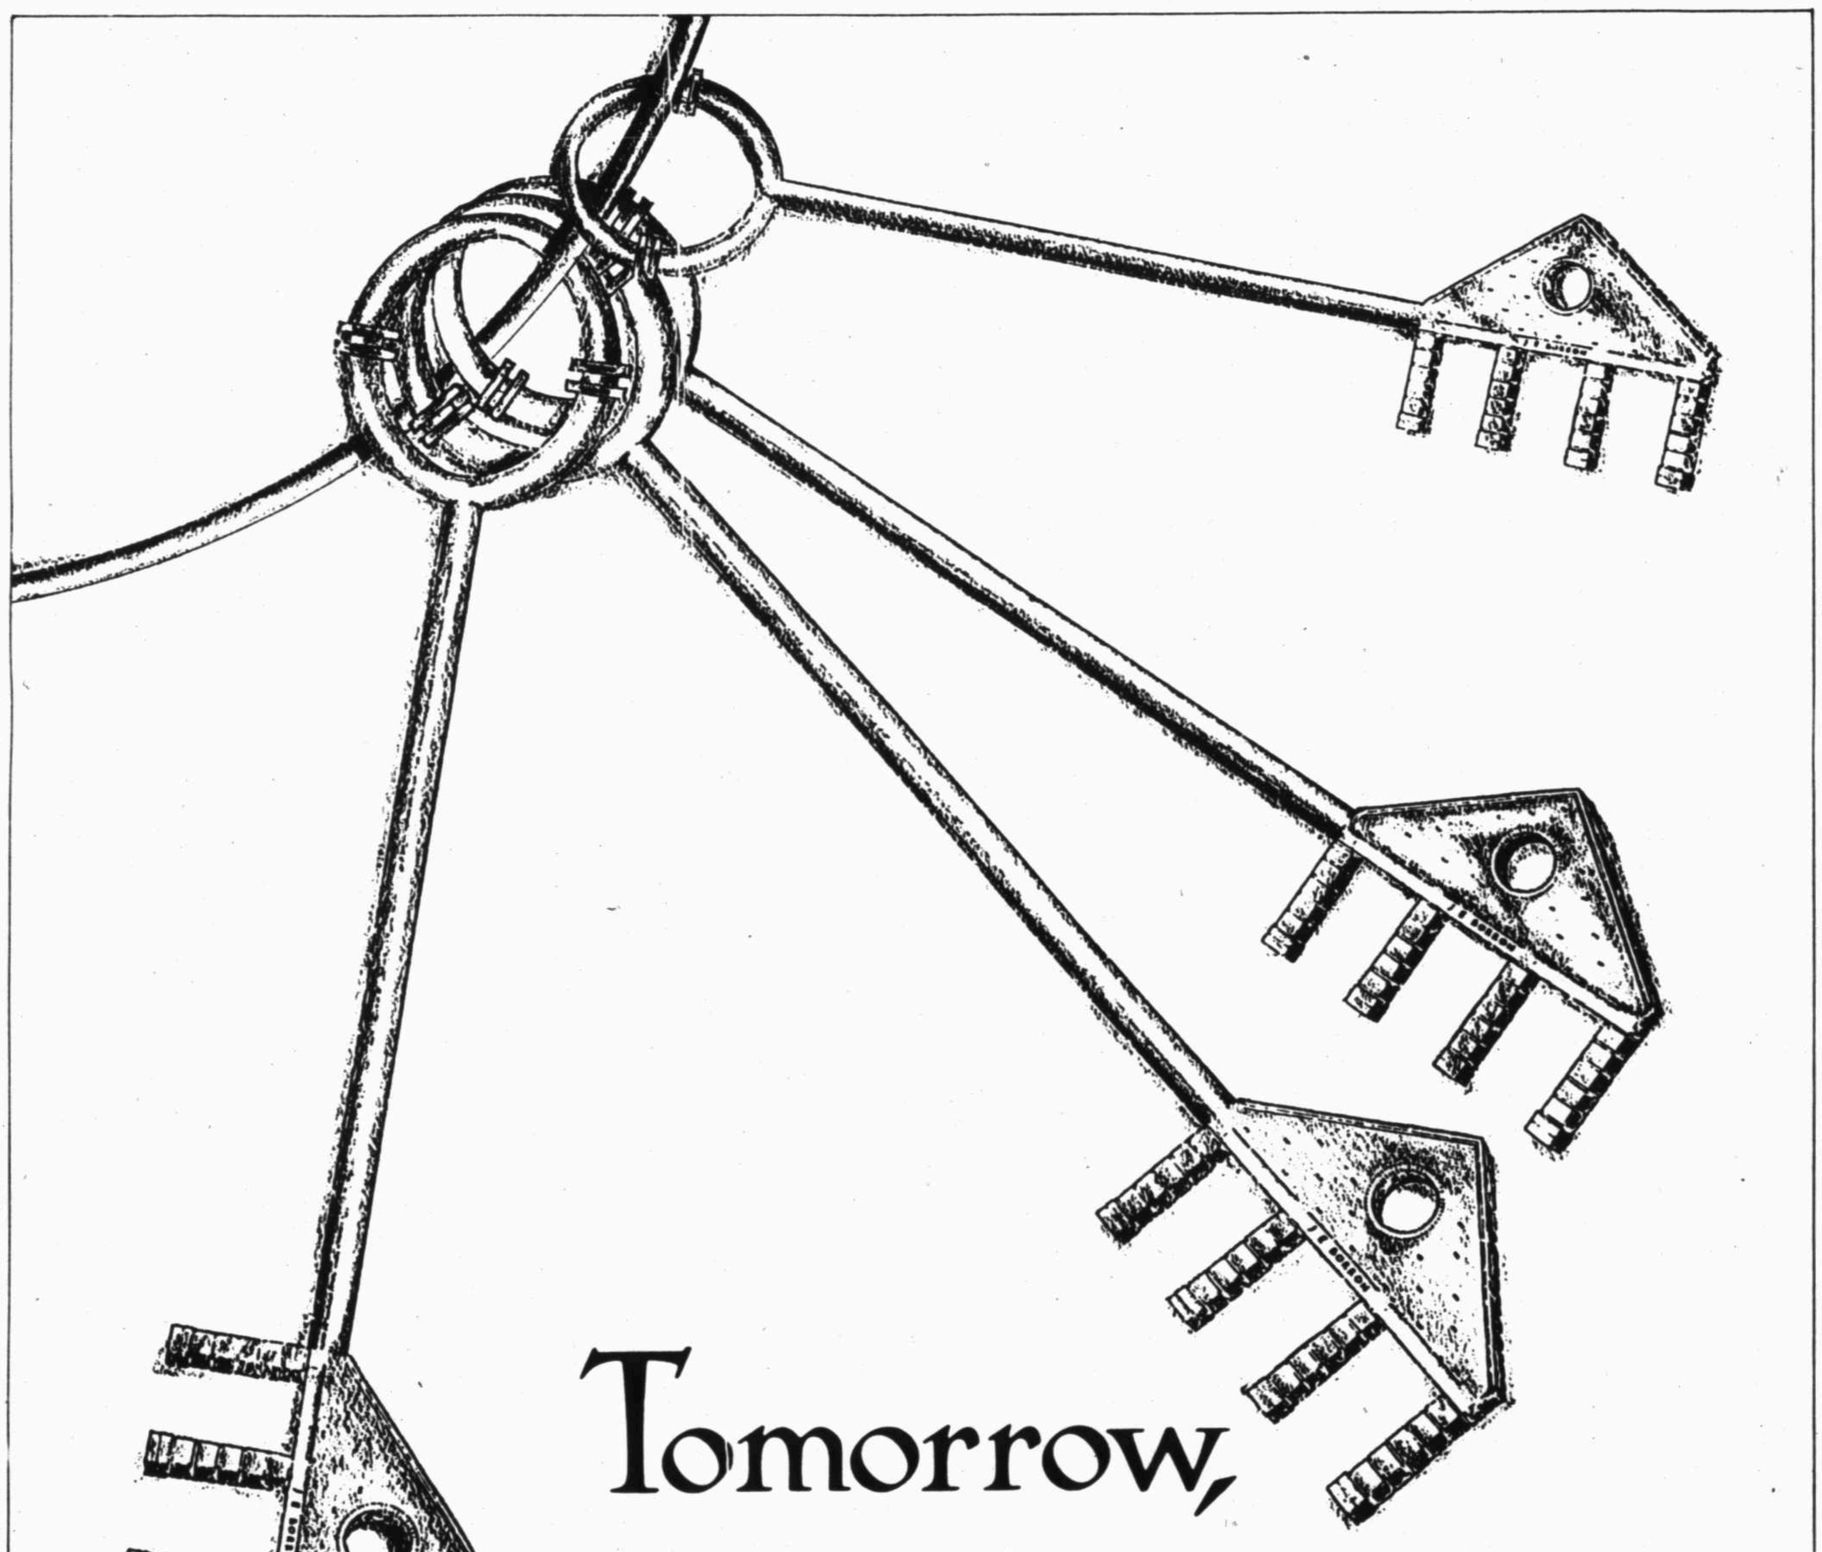

In a letter Friday to U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills and Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, Bentsen said the two should use a meeting in Mexico this week to push for a relaxation of Mexico's cap on in-country maquiladora sales.

Bentsen said the U.S. officials should build on the success of a July 23 agreement to restructure Mexico's debts during talks at the Bi-National Commission meeting in Mexico City. The agreement may reduce Mexico's foreign debt service burden by at least $1.5 billion annually.

"I encourage you to build on that success by expanding trade opportunity in both Europe and Japan for United States' and maquiladora products," Bentsen wrote.

The Texas Democrat said the approval process for in-country maquiladora sales is cumbersome and only a handful of firms have participated.

"Since maquiladoras are among the most efficient firms in Mexico, a relaxation of this process for in-country sales would likely result in increased maquiladora production," said Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. "That would translate into more United States exports and new jobs, especially along the border and in Texas."

FORT WORTH (AP) — For more than three decades, Fort Worth Democrats have had a lock on the District 12 congressional seat. But with this month's contest to replace deposed House Speaker Jim Wright, they face the prospect of a Republican representing the Democratic stronghold.

"It's a race that we shouldn't lose, but we could lose," said Texas Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle.

Both parties call the Aug. 12 special election a toss-up.

Sissy Day, a Democratic political consultant and a former Wright aide, said Democrats, angry and disillusioned about Wright's resignation during an ethics investigation, might not vote.

Slagle also wonders if their anger over Wright leaving Congress will inspire them to vote or make them stay away.

"The ones that are maddest about it are really disillusioned about it," Slagle said. "And they might just say to heck with it."

All the better, say Republicans, who have been inching into Texas government and now boast influence as high as the governor's office. But Republicans aren't sure about this election, either.

"Clearly, we have an opportunity ...but the power of incumbency is great," said Fred Meyer, state Republican Party chairman. "Whoever turns out their vote on election day is going to win."

Texas now is represented by nine Republicans and 20 Democrats in Congress.

Four Democrats, three Republicans and a Libertarian have filed for the District 12 race.

The Democrats are Pete Geren, Jim Lane, George Petrovich Jr. and Bill Turner. Laraine Bethke, Jim Hunter and Bob Lanier are the Republicans. Robert Buckingham Jr., is the Libertarian.

Because one candidate must get 51 percent of the vote to win, a runoff is expected. Lanier, host of the nationally-syndicated television show "60 Second Housecall," and Geren are considered the frontrunners. Each has his party's endorsement.

Wright has not endorsed anyone.

Since the candidates differ little on the issues, the ones with money for advertising may stand the best chance, especially during such a short campaign, which started in July.

Geren, who is plastering the city with his placards, and Lanier, because of his television show, have the best name-recognition. But Jim Lane has obtained important endorsements from labor and police.

Republicans, who claim a strong defense plank, hope the national Democratic Party's perceived withdrawal from defense will swing votes to the GOP.

The largely Democratic district voted for Ronald Reagan, George Bush and Sen. Phil Gramm in 1980, 1984 and 1988.

But Democrats say the district's traditional blue collar, conservative, defense-oriented voters will continue to support their party.

And, Democrats are counting on a backlash against the Republican Party for the ouster of their 34-year veteran congressman, who was the third-most powerful politician on Capitol Hill.

Democrats don't intend to let voters forget who started the investigation that caused the downfall of their cherished power-broker.

Geren has been blasting Republican U.S. Rep. Newt Gingrich "and his Washington gang," as the group responsible for Wright's political demise.

Lane, considered Geren's strongest opponent, calls himself a "Jim Wright Democrat," and is appearing with Wright's son on campaign stops.

And Petrovich is putting up billboards with the slogan "To Protect Us," aimed at a city that fears losing everything it gained under Wright's considerable influence.

Battleship Texas moved to water

GALVESTON (AP) — Hundreds watched as the Battleship Texas returned to water Saturday after spending eight months in dry dock for repairs.

"She has been floated. She was tugged out of the Big T dry dock and now moored two docks away," said a spokesman for Todd Shipyards, who declined to give his name.

The 27-ton national landmark is in the midst of a $6 million restoration meant to return the rusting and leaky ship to the way it looked in World War II when the ship participated in the bombardment of Iwo Jima and Okinawa in the Pacific in 1945.

Blocks holding the ship were removed when the dry dock area was flooded with water. Tugboats then moved the 75-year-old vessel to another pier for three to four weeks of work on its topside.

The Texas has been an attraction at the San Jacinto Battleground near Houston since 1948 and was taken over by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department in 1983.

The Texas, commissioned in 1914, is the only surviving U.S. combat ship to have served in both world wars.

Last December, it was moved for the first time in 40 years when five tugboats guided it 40 miles down the Houston Ship Channel to Galveston.

Crews began moving the Texas about 8 a.m. Saturday with hundreds of spectators watching from surrounding piers and in other boats, the spokesman said.

So far, the Texas has been coated and all of the structural and repainting work on the underwater hull completed, said Sue Moss, the project historian.

"We have replaced almost 350,000 pounds of steel on the ship, primarily on the hull but some on the main deck also," Ms. Moss said Friday. "The remaining work topside primarily is sandblasting and coating."

AP Laserphoto

The Battleship Texas was removed from dry dock Saturday morning as hundreds watched from surrounding piers and boats.

Once painted, the ship will carry the same camouflage it wore during World War II, including a deep blue on all vertical surfaces and a gray-blue on the decks.

When Todd Shipyards crews complete their work, the Texas will be moved elsewhere in Galveston, then be transferred to a terminal near Houston for final repairs.

While shipyard work is being completed, work also will be done at the ship's berth near the San Jacinto Monument.

Shrimpers ready to try limited trawls

HOUSTON (AP) — Shrimpers are ready and willing to try temporary regulations proposed by the U.S. Commerce Department that could abandon the shrimpers from using the controversial turtle excluder devices, the president of a national shrimpers group said Saturday.

Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher finalized the proposal Friday and is expected to submit it to U.S. District Judge Thomas Hogan in Washington on Monday. The proposal includes not using the TEDs in favor of limited trawls — 105 minutes — to keep endangered sea turtles from drowning in their nets.

The plan is scheduled to take effect Tuesday.

"This is exactly what we proposed during the public hearings. How can I argue against that?" said Tee John Mialjevich, president of the 2,000-member Concerned Shrimpers of America.

"They got good data that says TEDs work, but they don't have data that say TEDs clogs up. We have a valid problem with TEDs clogging," Mialjevich said.

The devices, he said, clog up with trash from the bottom of the Gulf. If the turtles do get in the TEDs, they are not readily able to get out because the escape hatch is usually clogged with trash, he said.

"That means fishing in trash to make a living," said Mialjevich, who has been shrimping for over 20 years. "We're not the villains. We're just like the turtles here — innocent victims."

In a court hearing Thursday, Hogan gave Mosbacher until Monday to draft a plan to protect endangered sea turtles from becoming entangled in shrimpers' nets and dying.

Environmentalists say the Kemp's ridley sea turtle face quick extinction if the government abandons turtle excluder devices in favor of limited shrimp-fishing trawl times. Shrimpers say the TEDs reduce their catch and threaten their very livelihood.

"Shrimping has never been the cause of the decline for the turtles decrease, so how are we going to be the solution," Mialjevich said.

Alicia Briones, 10, right, who has an aging disease called progeria, snuggles up to her mom, Theresa, recently.

Houston girl aging in overdrive

Family's strength keeps hopes alive

HOUSTON (AP) — Theresa Briones, a patient woman and a strong one, once had a fistfight in a Laundromat.

Children were taunting her daughter, Alicia.

"She is not an alien. She is not a monster," Mrs. Briones told the kids. "She is just like you and me."

The children's name-calling grew louder.

"Mom, Mom," they shouted. "Come look at the monster."

The children's mother came to investigate. "I see it," she said.

"My baby is not an 'it,' " Mrs. Briones said, and decked the woman.

Life has been one challenge after another for Alicia and her family. She has progeria, a genetic aging disease that strikes one child in 8 million.

Under Alicia's delicate white bonnet, she is bald. Her knees are arthritic, her fingers bony. She is 10, yet she weighs only 22 pounds, and she is as tall as the average 3-year-old. Her nose is pinched; her hips are creaky; her hearing is bad.

Alicia has the stamina of a 70-year-old, because that's about how old she is, physically.

Mentally, however, she is a child — a sweet, funny, smart, sprite-like child.

She loves to rock in her rocking chair, made to fit a toddler or an oversize teddy bear, and watch soap operas.

She loves school and her friends. She rattles off the names of half a dozen buddies without taking a breath.

She loves her little brother, Domingo, even though he sometimes plays with her Barbie dolls as if they were soldiers. "OK," she says, rolling her eyes at the 7-year-old who is usually putty in her hands. "Gawd."

"This," said her mother, raising her eyebrows and trying not to laugh, "is Alicia."

Her birthday is Sept. 10. She was born in 1978, a year after her parents, Theresa and Domingo Sr., married. They were 15 and 14 at the time of the wedding. They had known each other most of their lives.

Theresa wanted to escape problems at home. Domingo wanted to emulate his older brother — who had just married and had a child.

Theresa had a normal pregnancy, a normal delivery.

At about two months, she noticed that the skin on Alicia's stomach seemed tight. "And she threw up all the time. I'd give her 3 ounces of milk, and she'd throw up 2½. And she cried. The doctors called that colic."

Alicia was remarkable. She was sitting up at three months, walking at six months, talking at seven months.

But her hair was falling out. And she wasn't growing. "She had no kind of weight," Theresa said. "I was going from doctor to doctor. Something was wrong."

Theresa had just about quit the doctor circuit when she took Alicia to see Dr. Michael Scott. "Give me three days," he said, and had a diagnosis in two. He asked Theresa, seven months pregnant with Little Mingo, to gather her family.

The 19-year-old Theresa arrived hours before the appointed time, only to find Scott planning to postpone the conference. He had an emergency. She was going to have to wait just a little bit longer.

But she could not. She had waited too long already.

That's when Theresa learned about progeria, a disease without a treatment or cure. There are 15 known progeria children in the world. Alicia is one of two known to live in Texas. The other is Mickey Hayes, now 17, of Longview. Life spans of such children range, generally, from 7 to 20 years.

"He told me progeria children don't live very long," Theresa said of Dr. Scott. "He said one didn't live to 4. He told me I had to try to understand. Alicia might not live to 4.

"I said, no, that can't be. He was holding me. I was crying. I said, 'You're lying to me.' He said, 'I wish I were.' "

At the family conference, Alicia's dad walked out and didn't come back until the next day.

That was seven years ago. Sometimes, Theresa says, her husband still has problems coping.

"I want him to face it," she said. "Sometimes I'd say he does. Sometimes I think he doesn't. When she gets sick, he gets real scared."

Scott saw the family once a month for two years. Before he moved to California, he laid down the law to Theresa.

"Dr. Scott told me I was being too protective," Theresa remembered. "He told me I was going to smother her. He told me, 'You treat her the way you treat your son, or she'll grow up thinking she's different. She's not any different than Little Mingo.'"

Dr. Jerry Loving, the doctor who delivered Alicia and still treats her, may come close to understanding Theresa's struggles.

"This mother is a lot different than most mothers," Loving said. "She is very strong and very understanding."

Over the years, the Brioneses have moved around quite a bit. They lived near DeChaumes Elementary the year Alicia started kindergarten.

"Alicia didn't like it," Theresa said. "People were telling her she was going to die. They'd say, 'You ain't died yet?' "

The Brioneses didn't insist she go back for first grade. Their next experience with academic officialdom was enrolling Little Mingo in preschool at Port Houston Elementary.

"They asked me," Theresa said, " 'Why isn't Alicia in school?' "

Just two days later, the child was a certified, regulation, everyday first grader. In those 48 hours, however, there had been considerable commotion at school.

The nurse read up on progeria, then talked to the staff and students. The art teacher helped the children make welcoming banners and cards. The administration cut a desk down to Alicia's size and added a cushion.

That was Christmas, 1985. Alicia was doing well, except for frequent absences.

"She is a warm, loving child, and the other children really responded to her," said Mary Nataline Broussard, Alicia's first-grade teacher and still her friend. "When she couldn't open the door, they would run to help. A calm came over the room when she came in."

Ms. Broussard and Alicia's mother agreed Alicia should remain in first grade an extra year. "She felt secure with me and wanted to stay with me, and her mom didn't want her pushed," Ms. Broussard said.

Air Force officer suspect in spy probe

By JIM MICHAELS
Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — A U.S. Air Force officer suspected of selling sensitive information while posted at a top-secret installation in West Berlin is being held at an air force base here while the military conducts a spy probe into his activities in Germany.

Capt. John Vladimir Hirsch, 33, was brought to Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio earlier this week from West Berlin, where he was an electrical engineer with a top-secret security clearance.

"He has not been charged and the investigation is still going on," Lt. Col. John Worthington, a spokesman for the Electronic Security Command at Kelly Air Base, said late Friday.

NBC News reported that Hirsch is suspected of selling military secrets, and during a search of his home in Berlin, investigators last week found uncashed paychecks, photographs of NATO military installations and classified documents.

The Air Force also wants to know why Hirsch made frequent trips to France, Austria and Italy during the past three years, NBC reported.

The network said he had failed a lie-detector test last week and refused to take another.

Because he has not been formally charged, Hirsch is free to roam the base. However, he cannot leave the base and always is accompanied by an unarmed escort, officials said.

Worthington and other Air Force officials would not confirm any details of the probe except to say that normal security procedures detected something unusual in Hirsch's activities while in West Berlin.

"They (security officials) detected an anomaly in Capt. Hirsch's behavior," said Lt. Erlinda Baker, an Air Force spokeswoman.

In West Berlin, Hirsch headed the engineering and installation branch of the 690th Electronic Security Wing, a unit stationed at Tempelhof Central Airport responsible for ensuring that Air Force communications are kept secure.

The 690th falls under the Electronic Security Command, which is headquartered at Kelly Air Force Base. The command's operations are considered extremely sensitive and Hirsch held a top-secret clearance, officials said.

Hirsch arrived at the base Sunday aboard military aircraft. Hirsch, who had been stationed in West Berlin since April 1987, has specialized in electrical engineering during much of his Air Force career, officials said.

A 1978 graduate of Cleveland State University with an electrical engineering degree, Hirsch lists his hometown as Cleveland Heights, Ohio. He was born in Prague, Czechoslovakia, and came to the United States when he was 15.

STATE IN BRIEF

Juror called attorney before sentencing

HOUSTON (AP) — A day before a jury decided to sentence a former Houston police officer to 10 years' probation for raping a prisoner, a juror telephoned the officer's attorney and asked for a job.

Attorney Dick DeGuerin, who represented James Cebula, said he was surprised when juror James E. Darby Jr. called him last Sunday and asked for a job as a paralegal.

At the time, Darby and other jurors had been sent home for the weekend after hearing emotional closing arguments and deliberating briefly on Cebula's punishment.

The jury on Monday — a day after Darby, a Texas Southern University law student, called DeGuerin — granted Cebula 10 years probation for kidnapping and raping a 24-year-old woman at a park.

"I was taken aback and wanted to get it out in the open as quickly as possible," said DeGuerin, who told State District Judge Michael McSpadden of the call Sunday night.

DeGuerin then taped a subsequent conversation with Darby and gave a transcript of the call to McSpadden and prosecutor Brian Johnson on Monday.

McSpadden, who took over the case when State District Judge Lupe Salinas had to leave town, said job request had nothing to do with the case and that Johnson did not ask for a mistrial.

Bill Taylor, chief of the district attorney's Special Crimes Bureau which prosecuted Cebula, said he was not aware of the call.

Stun guns can be carried

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas parole officers can carry stun guns for the first time as protection, but only after they first get zapped themselves, a newspaper reported Saturday.

Officials told the Austin American-Statesman the training rule is part of a new policy adopted by the state Board of Pardons and Paroles, allowing field personnel to legally carry the electronic-shock devices.

"The idea is (officers) will use them more responsibly if they have to feel the jolt themselves," said agency spokeswoman Karin Armstrong.

"This wouldn't be the same thing to shooting someone during pistol training, just to see how it felt, because stun guns are non-lethal weapons. Guns are not," she said.

In a recent survey, 39 percent of Texas' 700 parole officers expressed interest in carrying some form of protection such as a stun gun, Ms. Armstrong said. Parole officers are not certified law enforcement officers and do not carry guns.

After the rape of a Beaumont parole officer last year while checking on a parolee at his home, the agency was criticized for not protecting its officers.

In November, the board approved issuing Mace to officers. As with stun guns, officers who want to carry Mace must take a dose themselves during training by having it rubbed on their skin.

Higgins pledges pour in AUSTIN (AP) — A scholarship fund started for Lt. Col. William Higgins' daughter has prompted a nationwide outpouring of patriotism and emotion — as well as $10,000 in pledges.

Austin attorney Pat Mullen and Dallas businessman Schuyler Page set up the fund when they heard that Higgins allegedly had been hanged by Shiite Moslem captors.

Higgins, 44, was in Lebanon serving as part of an international peacekeeping force when he was taken captive in February 1988.

An extremist Shiite Moslem group calling itself the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth said it hanged Higgins Monday because Israel refused to free a Moslem cleric it abducted from south Lebanon.

Hostage crisis forces Bush to feel anguish of past presidents

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — George Bush had watched a hostage crisis help destroy one president and ensnarl another in scandal, so he knew full well he was plunging into high-risk territory when terrorists claimed to have killed one American and set an execution date for another in Lebanon.

For the first six months of his presidency, Bush had been largely spared from any pressures over the hostages' plight, even though nine Americans remained in captivity in Lebanon.

That suddenly changed after Israeli commandos seized a Shiite Moslem cleric in Lebanon. Three days later, a shadowy organization called the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth declared it had hanged Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins and released a videotape purportedly showing the execution.

Suddenly, Bush began to feel the sting of experiences that had bludgeoned Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan. Bush spoke of "the overwhelming events" of the hostage crisis and commented, "These are not easy days."

With telephone calls to world leaders on behalf of the hostages, Bush initiated what his press secretary, Marlin Fitzwater, called "the most defined and high-level diplomatic effort I have ever seen" in the Bush and Reagan administrations.

Complaining of inadequate intelligence from Lebanon, Bush anguished with "a heavy heart" for four days over Higgins and awaited word on hostage Joseph Cicippio, under a death threat from the radical Revolutionary Justice Organization.

After a long suspense, as the White House waged its intense diplomatic effort and the Pentagon put on a display of military muscle in the Middle East, Cicippio got a temporary reprieve from his captors.

No one knew for sure why Cicippio's sentenced was suspended. "I like to think that a broad-spread appeal to nations in every corner of the globe had something to do with it," Bush said.

The outcome spared Bush — at least temporarily — from pressure to find an appropriate way to punish the terrorists without endangering the remaining hostages or innocent civilians.

Even so, Bush said Friday, "I feel the burden of going to every end possible to try to find — get the return of these Americans to their loved ones and find out the truth about Col. Higgins."

Such a burden can be perilous to presidents.

Carter's White House became branded as a presidency held hostage by the 441-day captivity of Americans in Iran, and the ordeal, including a disastrous rescue attempt, helped drive him from office.

For Reagan, the kidnapping of Americans in Lebanon led the White House into the improbable Iran-Contra affair with embarrassing revelations about criminal wrongdoing and clumsy attempts to trade arms for hostages.

William Schneider, a political analyst at the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative think tank, said Bush "looked the same way all presidents look when they get to a hostage crisis. He looked ineffectual and the United States look helpless.

"He's under pressure to do something and there's nothing he can do," Schneider said. "He rediscovered a lesson he should have learned ...to resist the temptation to allow these things to become a serious national crisis because you cannot control events."

On the other hand, Stephen Hess, a presidential scholar at the Brookings Institution, said Bush had performed well.

"He's a naturally cautious man and this is one of those times when it was probably useful," said Hess. He said Bush had learned from the experiences of Carter and Reagan.

With the announcement of Higgins' death, Bush cut short a speechmaking trip in the West and rushed back to Washington, hurriedly ordered a meeting Monday with military, diplomatic and national security advisers, and then delivered a briefing to congressional leaders.

High-ranking Pentagon officials were seen entering the White House carrying large charts and maps, giving rise to speculation that a military strike was being planned.

Nothing happened after the apparent shift to a crisis mode.

At the Tuesday morning meeting of top White House aides, chief of staff John Sununu emphasized the limitations Bush faced in trying to employ military options.

Stephen Studdert, a high-ranking aide, described Bush as "outraged, incensed, but cognizant of the limitations on his options and the need to be responsible."

Bush himself acknowledged in a 1986 report on terrorism that retaliation was not an easy course. "Our principles of justice will not permit random retaliation against groups of countries," the report said.

The White House began to reverse course. There was no crisis and the government was not being immobilized by terrorists, press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said Tuesday.

Bush went ahead with a festive barbecue on the South Lawn Tuesday night.

With the immediate crisis behind him, Bush said he wanted to follow up an offer from Iran's new president, Hashemi Rafsanjani, to help find a solution to the hostage crisis. There also were intriguing clues that the Soviet Union and Syria had been helpful.

Fitzwater said the United States hoped last week's developments "may open up some opportunity for improvement over the long haul ...don't think we're back at square one."

Strategy to elect pro-choice candidates unveiled

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The National Women's Political Caucus will concentrate next year on electing abortion-rights candidates in key states across the nation, the group's leader said Saturday.

The campaign, called "Empower America," will target races in Oregon, Arizona, Colorado, Nevada, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Ohio, North Carolina, Maryland and Delaware, caucus chairwoman Irene Natividad said at the organization's annual convention.

"We are the pro-choice foot soldiers in the electoral trenches of this country," Natividad told 1,200 delegates and guests. "They say we have not yet proven that women vote as a bloc. Well, let me tell you, that is going to change."

Actress Cybill Shepherd and former Republican National Committee Chairwoman Mary Louise Smith also addressed the organization of female politicians.

Outside, about 30 anti-abortion activists picketed for about two hours.

"We believe the majority of women around the country are not pro-choice," said protester Georgeann McGarry of New Brighton. "They are pro-life, and we are here to represent them."

The campaign is a response to a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision allowing states to restrict abortions.

Natividad said target states have legislatures that could swing in favor of abortion rights depending on the outcome of a small number of races.

Actress Cybill Shepherd, right, puts an arm around Wynona Lipman, New Jersey senator, Saturday as the two participated in a panel discussion at the National Women's Political Caucus.

"This is a pragmatic political plan that we know as pragmatic politicians will be effective," Natividad said. "The times are tough for the women in this country, but we are tougher. We are not going to get mad. We are going to get even."

"The pro-choice issue is the winning issue because women aren't willing to go backward," said U.S. Rep. Nita Lowey, D-N.Y. "We aren't willing to go back to those back-alley abortions and to those coat hangers."

Political consultant Harrison Hickman told the convention that abortion-rights candidates must appeal to what he said was the majority of Americans who support a women's choice to have an abortion although they might disagree with it.

Natividad said local abortion-rights groups will recruit and train legislative candidates. She had no estimate for the campaign's cost.

Miss Shepherd, spokeswoman for a political action committee called Voters for Choice, said reproductive decisions should rest with the individual.

"It will be a test of our commitment and political will (as to) whether the same rights will be available to an unemployed women in a New Orleans housing project, the 16-year-old daughter of a coal miner in the hills of Kentucky or a Native American woman living in the far reaches of Utah," she said. "Their plight must be our fight."

Former RNC Chairwoman Smith told the group the caucus must convey the message that supporting reproductive rights is "a good thing to do."

"Mainstream Republican voices have not been heard from loudly on this issue," she said. "Maybe we should turn up the volume."

At a news conference, former Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro said she expected the abortion issue to affect every political race in the country.

"The choice has to be left to women and it has to be a safe procedure," she said. "I think that what this issue will do is mobilize people who care about human rights and civil rights."

The four-day convention is scheduled to end Sunday. The caucus has about 77,000 members of all political affiliations, Natividad said.

Tough issues to greet Congress after recess

WASHINGTON (AP) — A sense of businesslike calm pervaded the 101st Congress as lawmakers left for a month-long vacation, but storms loom ahead when they return to face a series of long-deferred divisive issues, from child care to the minimum wage.

"We've gotten the easy stuff out of the way," said Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., a member of the House Republican leadership. "September and October are going to be much tougher."

For the moment, members of Congress were content to marvel at what they had accomplished so far despite a year marred by ethics problems and other internal conflicts.

Leading the list was a compromise bailout plan for the nation's ailing savings and loan industry, the costliest financial rescue in the nation's history. The bill, which also imposes strict new controls on the industry, was worked out in concert with the White House.

The House also finished-initial work on the 13 spending bills that are the essentials of keeping the government running, and steps had been taken toward strengthening the Clean Air Act and meeting the year's budget deficit reduction target. The Senate, too, was well into the process of dealing with spending measures.

"We've picked up ground," said Rep. Robert Michel, R-Ill., the House minority leader. Michel and others gave credit to new Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., who two months ago assumed leadership of a chamber bitterly divided and virtually paralyzed by the resignation of former speaker Jim Wright over ethics charges.

"It's friendlier," said Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., the No. 2 GOP leadership official. "The entire mood of the House is more productive."

But while Foley has restarted the machinery of the House, which has responsibility for initiating tax and spending bills, he has yet to define a legislative agenda and point the way for the Democratic majority.

"As far as the issue of comity, I think there is a much better relation between the two parties and cooperation between the two leaderships here in the House," Foley said. He noted that the House had passed some 150 bills since he assumed the speakership, as many as had been passed in the previous five months.

But Democratic leadership aides acknowledge that progress thus far has come on legislative nuts and bolts that have not been a true test of leadership or party cohesion. September and October, when Congress returns, will be a time of ideological definition for Democrats, they said.

Foley — the party's highest elected official — began that priority-setting process last week in a private luncheon with the Democratic chairmen of House committees, beginning to answer the question of where his party's perspective differs from that of Bush.

"Bush's time to set the agenda has run out, and Democrats now have to answer that question for themselves," said a top party aide, speaking only on condition of anonymity. He acknowledged that a sharper drawing of party lines also will bring conflict.

"The major substantive battles are yet to come," said Rep. Vin Weber of Minnesota, an influential Republican. "We will be seeing the issues that will translate into the next election: child care, taxes, economic growth. The stage could be set for some fairly good battles."

Other than progress on the 13 major spending measures, the list of bills passed so far this year is fairly modest: Items like a $900 million farm drought relief bill, natural gas price decontrol, protection for government whistleblowers, and a $1.2 billion supplemental money bill for veterans programs.

But after early expressions of bipartisanship and cooperation, conflicts with the White House have proliferated in recent months:

■ Bush vetoed an increase in the minimum wage and the House failed to override it, leaving the issue moribund. Democrats vow to revive it this fall.

■ The House gutted Bush's defense priorities, cutting funds for the B-2 stealth bomber, the strategic defense initiative, the rail garrison MX missile and the midgetman missile, while restoring money for two programs he did not want, the V-22 Osprey and the F-14D fighter. The White House hopes to win reversals of some of those positions in a House-Senate conference.

■ The House approved a list of sanctions against China which went beyond what Bush wanted in the wake of Beijing's crackdown on pro-democracy demonstrators.

Mayor appears cool despite investigations

LOS ANGELES (AP) — For a few moments, a Beverly Hills fund-raising dinner looked like the good old days before Mayor Tom Bradley's fifth term turned into a tangle of investigations that cut into his reputation of integrity.

Bradley

As Bradley took the podium last week in a hotel ballroom, 800 organized labor activists stood and applauded. Pocket cameras flashed. Busboys turned from clearing tables to catch a look at the mayor.

The 71-year-old Bradley was in characteristic form, tall and athletic like the UCLA track star he used to be, his voice deep and monotone as he delivered a speech praising organized labor.

The mayor gave no clue of the problems dogging the fifth term he won in April — the allegations of conflict of interest and influence peddling, accusations of coverup and speculation that he may resign.

City Attorney James Hahn is probing, among other things, the mayor's ties to two financial institutions that paid Bradley while doing business with the city.

Bradley, who denies any wrongdoing, said Friday he has established an account for supporter contributions to cover his legal expenses.

Hahn's probe, expected to be completed by mid-September, hangs over City Hall.

"All conversations begin with a discussion of this. It's the first thing people say as they shake your hand," said Joy Picus, a member of the City Council.

Shortly before the election, newspaper reports said the city treasurer directed the deposit of $2 million in a bank paying $18,000 to the mayor to act as adviser.

The deposit was made in Far East National Bank on the day the mayor called Treasurer Leonard Rittenberg, and one day after the mayor spoke with the bank president about the city's failure to renew a $1 million certificate of deposit.

Rittenberg denied the mayor influenced him and the mayor denied any wrongdoing. Bradley returned the $18,000, and made it through the election, barely avoiding a runoff.

But questions persisted.

An official in the treasurer's office testified before a City Council committee that his two bosses, including Rittenberg, tried to cover up the mayor's role in the Far East deposit, an allegation Rittenberg denies.

The official, George Sehlmeyer, said a city form was doctored so that the notation "per the mayor" next to the Far East deposit record was covered with correction fluid.

"I was stunned to hear the mayor was even involved," said Sehlmeyer.

Other probes of Bradley include:

■ A city-funded Africa task force whose executive director, Juanita St. John, is involved in a lucrative real estate deal with the mayor.

Ms. St. John has been charged with misdemeanor failure to comply with a subpoena after refusing to turn over documents on $180,000 in task force checks written to herself, or for "cash."

■ The Justice Department is looking into whether investment banking firm Drexel Burnham Lambert gave the mayor favorable treatment in stock deals in exchange for favored treatment by the city.

■ The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission is reviewing whether Bradley's stock and bond trades were tainted by insider trading.

Walter Zelman, executive director of the political watchdog group Common Cause, said that Bradley's acceptance of money from Far East was "pretty unusual and pretty blatant and a really serious mistake."

The mayor also was hired by Valley Federal Savings & Loan to act as adviser while that institution was doing business with the city.

If Bradley did use his influence to direct city dollars to the institutions, he could face criminal charges, said Zelman.

But until the city attorney completes his investigation, many city officials and business leaders refuse to speculate about the mayor.

"Everyone is entitled to a fair hearing," said Councilman Nate Holden, who opposed Bradley in the last election. "You don't jump up and down on a guy just because he's been accused."

But even the mayor's supporters said they have found it hard to believe he would work for a bank that was doing business with the city.

"In all the years I've known him, I've never known him before these matters came up to be anything but completely honest and forthright," said Councilwoman Joan Milke Flores. "In that way it's a surprise that he would even allow these things to happen."

San Angelo men walk away from crash

RUIDOSO, N.M. (AP) — Three San Angelo, Texas, men walked away Saturday from the wreckage of a single-engine airplane which crashed while attempting to take off from the Ruidoso Regional Airport.

State police identified the three as the pilot, Gary Hudman, 42, and passengers Billy Smith, 36, and Melvin Gray, 47.

State police officer Michael Howard said the three were taken to a Ruidoso hospital for observation and released.

Thornburgh downplays difficulties

By JAMES ROWLEY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fresh from stinging defeats in separate battles with conservative Republicans and liberal Democrats, Attorney General Dick Thornburgh brushes aside talk about his difficulties with Congress.

Thornburgh

"I'm a difficult attorney general, I think," a smiling Thornburgh told reporters last week after the Senate Judiciary Committee killed the nomination of William Lucas, his choice to be assistant attorney general for civil rights.

In making the comment, Thornburgh seemed to revel in the prickly side of his personality, which surfaces frequently in flashes of anger when questioned about sensitive issues by legislators or reporters.

That anger flared last week when he blamed Lucas' defeat on "raw politics" and later accused the Judiciary Committee of blocking the nominee for failing a "litmus test" on civil rights issues.

Thornburgh denies his political standing was hurt by the losing bouts with Democrats over Lucas for the civil rights post, and, earlier, with Republicans over Robert B. Fiske Jr. to be deputy attorney general.

Democrats questioned the qualifications of Lucas, a black Detroit Republican who has never tried court case but was once sheriff and later chief executive of Wayne County, Mich.

Fiske, a prominent Wall Street lawyer with strong legal credentials, ran afoul of conservative Republicans because of his role in screening President Reagan's judicial nominees for the American Bar Association.

After his public anger cooled, Thornburgh waxed a bit philosophical about Lucas' defeat last week on a pair of 7-7 votes by the Judiciary Committee.

"I've been in this business a long time. There are some efforts that are worth fighting for," Thornburgh said. "It's worth the effort and the criticism that comes from trying to attract good people to serve in government."

But as he prepares to celebrate the first anniversary of his swearing in this week, Thornburgh is still searching for people to fill the two important positions at the Justice Department.

Thornburgh also is also skirmishing with Congress over his plans to close the department's 14 organized-crime strike forces and merge them with local U.S. attorney's offices and may be heading for a confrontation by claiming a right to ignore congressional objections to his plans to reorganize the department.

The Lucas battle has raised some questions about Thornburgh's ability to operate on Capitol Hill, spokesman David Runkel dismissed any suggestion Thornburgh and his aides misread the situation.

"Our people had every expectation that even on a tie vote, the committee would send the name forward to the Senate," he said. "I don't think there was any way for us to predict" the outcome until an eleventh-hour Democratic caucus. "It's clear that they made the decision late to play hardball."

After rejecting a motion to recommend Lucas on a 7-7 tie, the committee also defeated on the same vote an attempt to report the nomination to the floor for further action.

"This is a journey, you have some things you win, some things you lose," Runkel said. "The things you lose you learn by them."

The Lucas vote last Tuesday came barely a month after Fiske withdrew from consideration for the Justice Department's No. 2 spot.

Senate Republicans including Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Gordon Humphrey objected to Fiske, saying that as chairman of the ABA's judicial screening panel he had scuttled some of Reagan's nominees to the federal bench.

Thornburgh tried to allay the conservatives' suspicions about Fiske last spring, telling Congress Fiske had help negotiate an agreement whereby the ABA consented not to evaluate a judicial candidate's political or ideological views.

But Thornburgh's announcement blew up in his face hours later when the ABA said there was no such agreement.

An angry Thornburgh then threatened to cut the ABA out of all judicial screening unless his terms were accepted.

The ABA and Thornburgh came to terms after a one-month delay, but that gave Fiske's opponents more time to raise doubts about the appointment and Fisk bowed out in early July.

"Something you learn is timing," a lesson that can be applied to the Lucas case as well as the Fiske episode, Runkel said.

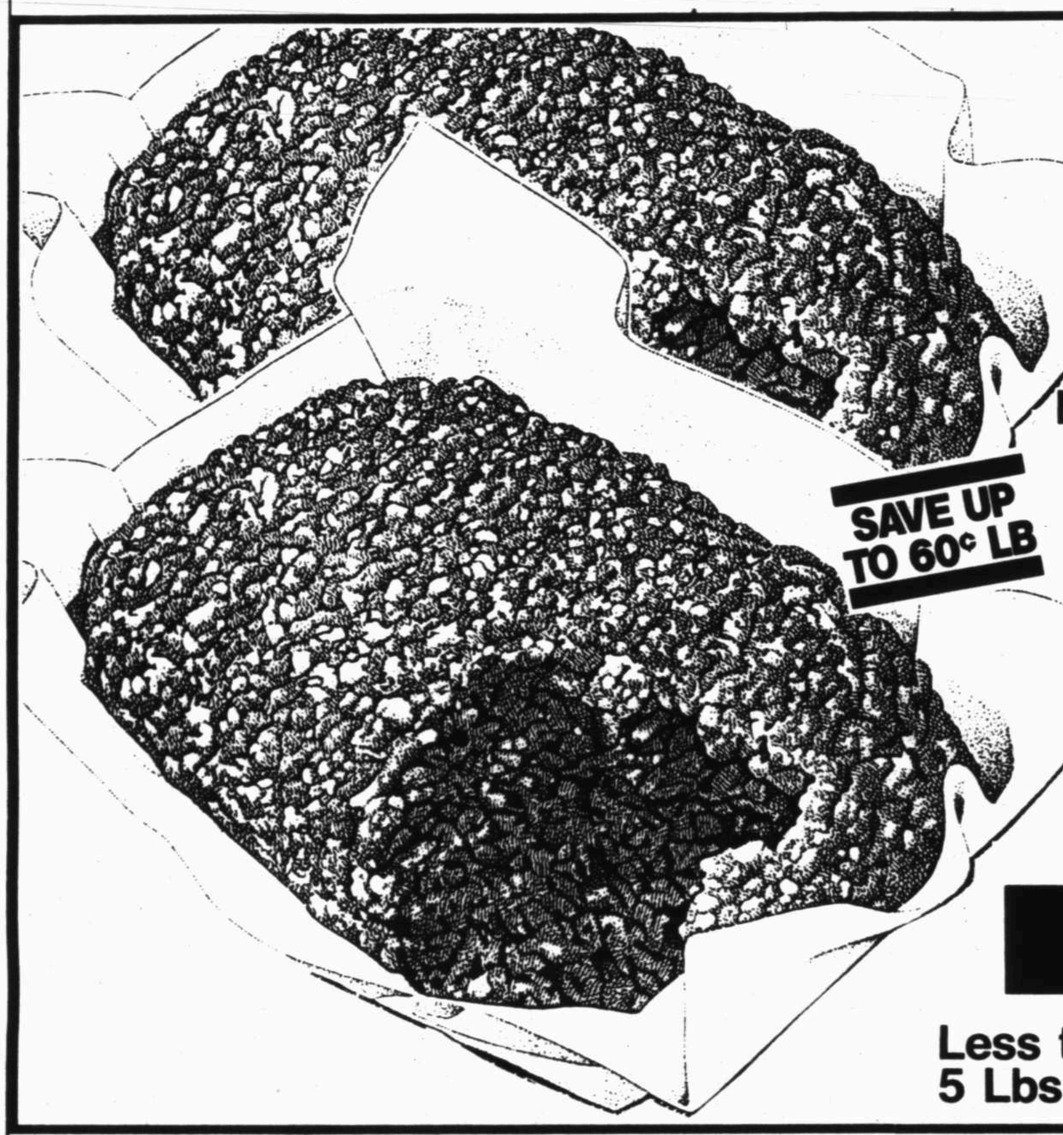

"I don't think anybody doubts Lucas would have been confirmed if the Senate had voted on him prior to all the recent Supreme Court decisions," Runkel said.

Lucas defended the series of high court rulings on civil rights that are unpopular with liberal Democrats, echoing the Bush administration policy that no legislation is needed to overturn them.

Lucas's answers disturbed several Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, prompting Thornburgh later to accuse the panel of applying too narrow a test on civil rights issues.

"I find it somewhat bizarre to expect an appointee of the president to begin his career in opposition to the president in an important area of the law," Thornburgh said.

Employees at the Boise Interagency Fire Center field hundreds of calls per day for firefighters and equipment for Idaho's current wildfires.

Fire headquarters run at high pitch

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Lightning has set the West ablaze this summer, and electricity is again surging through the nation's wildfire command post.

"The whole place is running at the max, full out," Reed Jarvis of the Boise Interagency Fire Center said last week.

But this year is different because the center's strategists and quartermasters who direct the nation's wildfire battles can see some of the worst blazes from their windows.

As nearly half the acreage afire burns within 150 miles, specialists in the logistics center marshal resources from around the nation. On Saturday, there were about 220,000 acres ablaze in four states, with 102,000 of them in Idaho and the rest in Oregon, California and Utah.

"Tell me when the airplane's got to leave and I'll have the team on it," coordinator Lynn Findley says into the phone cradled on his shoulder.

He hangs up, makes another call and arranges for a procurement expert to fly from Atlanta to LaGrande, Ore.

Another staff member fields a caller searching for a fire officer called "Joe Blow."

"Can you believe it?" she says over her shoulder. "He spells his name B-L-O-U-G-H."

Others juggle as many as three of the constantly ringing phones, scanning computer terminals for personnel, airplanes, red chemical retardant and gear.

"We drop slimy red mud on burning trees from antique airplanes," declares the slogan on one T-shirt.

In one leg of the L-shaped logistics room, the intelligence division keeps track of fires around the country. The other finds the crews and equipment to attack the flames. A big chalkboard plots the fires as they eat up mile after mile of fuel. Magnets resembling aircraft dot a map of the country, giving the location and type of equipment available.

"Obviously, firefighting on the line is stressful," said Fire Center spokesman Arnold Hartigan. "But the support people are dealing with human life facing fire, which is inherently dangerous."

Hundreds of fires burned fitfully in the Idaho backcountry for days after the last "lightning bust." One storm laid down 2,000 strikes an hour with little rain. Then winds reaching 80 mph and temperatures pushing triple digits whipped those spots into major conflagrations.

Three-inch-thick burning branches blew up to two miles ahead of the main fires. Flames swept over thousands of acres in several hours' time, creating a smoky miasma around Idaho's capital city. The buzz at the wildfire nerve center intensified dramatically.

"Fortunately we don't work at this level all year," Hartigan said. "It would be unbearable if we had to do this 365 days a year."

The complex has taken on a military look. National Guard troops in camouflage fatigues march toward trucks for transportation to the fire lines. Smoke jumpers sit in the shade of a building waiting for their next leap into 100-foot-tall ponderosa pines, laden with chainsaws or water pumps.

"We are definitely an assault organization," Hartigan said. "It's patterned after military operations because they work. We're the supply lines for the troops."

In the logistics center, specialists spin Lazy Susans with pink and blue requisition forms as each plea from the fire line is answered.

The requests are for airplanes, helicopters, axes and shovels, portable marine pumps, hoses, fresh fruit, disposable sleeping bags, soft drinks and, most important, manpower.

World War II Navy bombers — PB-4Y2s and Neptunes — are lined up on the flight deck, spattered with red retardant. They fill up again and again with thousands of gallons of "slurry," a fertilizer-based substance that stops fires cold. Then the craft roar aloft toward the smoky mountains to the north.

Church challenges ordinances outlawing animal sacrifices

MIAMI (AP) — An Afro-Cuban sect that slaughters chickens, turtles and sometimes goats as part of its ritual is challenging a town's ban on the practice, saying it violates religious freedom.

A trial began last week in the federal lawsuit filed by Santeria priest Ernesto Pichardo and his Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye in suburban Hialeah, the first known church in the usually secretive sect.

The dispute between the Santeria church and the town of Hialeah raises questions of religious persecution and animal cruelty as it delves into the most unsettling Santeria ritual — animal sacrifice.

The religion was linked — mistakenly — to a sadistic drug-smuggling cult after human remains were found in Matamoros, Mexico, last April.

Experts on Santeria and its practitioners have said that human bones are not part of any Santeria ritual. But chickens, pigeons, doves and turtles, and occasionally goats and pigs, are sacrificed for the initiation of priests, in faith-healing and for help in love, business and family affairs.

Sometimes, the animal remains are cooked and eaten, but in some cases they are left by roadsides or in other public places.

The trial in Pichardo's lawsuit began Monday and will continue this week. U.S. District Judge Eugene Spellman is hearing the case without a jury.

Officials in Hialeah, a predominantly Hispanic city on the edge of Miami, deny that their efforts to limit Santeria rituals amount to an attack on religion. Instead, they cite such factors as the possibility of infection spread by animal carcasses, cruelty to animals, and the danger that children who witness the sacrifices will be psychologically scarred.

In court documents, city attorneys noted that bans on snake handling and marijuana smoking have been upheld even when the acts are considered an integral element of a religion.

Santeria, believed to have more than 50,000 followers in the Miami area, had its origins in the region of Africa that is now Nigeria. It was carried by slaves to Cuban sugar plantations, adopted many Roman Catholic saints as guardians and evolved into a folk religion that remains largely underground. Most adherents are Cubans or Cuban-Americans.

Pichardo, 34, says he is trying to remove the stigma against the religion as a low-class practice and institutionalize its rituals, which previously have been performed largely in private homes.

After he announced plans for his church in 1987, the city delayed its opening with extensive zoning and building code requirements.

"Once we complied with everything they threw at us, then it became an animal sacrifice issue," said Pichardo.

The council voted to outlaw sacrifices, allow animal slaughter only for human consumption, prohibit the possession of animals for slaughter or sacrifice, and incorporate the state animal cruelty law in city ordinances.

Pichardo accuses city council members of discrimination and misusing their political power because of their personal religious convictions.

Dr. Charles Wetli, a witness for the church, testified last week that most Santeria adherents "are practicing it because of white magic or neutral magic" to produce good results, not to hurt others. As chief deputy medical examiner in Dade County, he has studied Afro-Caribbean religions as part of his work.

In Santeria ceremonies, a few feathers are sometimes plucked from live chickens, but never all of them, he said. A bisected goat left on a Miami Beach street and cases when human bones — apparently obtained after people died of normal causes — have been boiled in cauldrons were, in his view, signs of a different Afro-Caribbean cult called Palo Mayombe.

Pichardo said Santeria's history of practice in the home hurts his effort to bring the religion into the open, and may have contributed to the mistaken link of Santeria to the Matamoros mass killings this spring.

The alleged leader of the Matamoros cult, Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, was a Cuban-American raised in Miami around Santeria practices, but the cult's use of human bones in its rituals deviated from accepted Santeria principles.

"It sets off this domino effect and sort of darkens the idea in people's minds of what we are," Pichardo said. But the attention generated by the mass murders also helped educate the public, he said.

"There is an enormous lack of material in English that seriously deals with the subject matter," Pichardo said, "which allows for a lot of myths to roam around."

Probe set for lawmakers on sex misconduct

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House ethics committee can now begin interviewing witnesses and receiving documents as it proceeds with preliminary investigations of three lawmakers accused of sexual misbehavior.

The committee on Friday announced preliminary inquiries into the conduct of Reps. Gus Savage, D-Ill., Donald E. "Buz" Lukens, R-Ohio, and Jim Bates, D-Calif., to determine if there's "a reason to believe" rules violations occurred.

Bates denied any wrongdoing. Lukens' press aide said the Ohio congressman welcomed "a full and open investigation." Savage, who also has denied wrongdoing, could not be reached for comment.

If the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, as the panel is formally named, decides "there is reason to believe" a violation occurred in any of the cases, it could issue a statement of alleged violation, similar to an indictment. Later in the process, the committee could hold disciplinary hearings and eventually recommend punishment to the full House.

The House Republican Conference, composed of all Republicans in the chamber, asked the ethics panel to investigate Lukens, who was convicted in Ohio on a misdemeanor charge of contributing to the unruliness of a child. Lukens, who is appealing, was sentenced June 30 to 180 days in jail and fined $1,000 for having sex with a teen-age girl.

The committee said the complaint alleged that Lukens' conduct violated a House rule which states, "A member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives shall conduct himself at all times in a manner which shall reflect creditably on the House of Representatives."

Jarrell, Lukens' press aide, said the Ohio Republican "has already said he welcomes a full and open investigation where his accusers' motives and the full record can be brought forth."

He added that Lukens would be able to bring the committee information about the credibility of the teen-age girl and her mother, which was ruled inadmissible for the trial.

Three House Democrats filed a complaint against Savage this month, after news accounts said a Peace Corps volunteer complained the lawmaker fondled her while he was traveling in Zaire.

The ethics panel said it "has been presented with complaints concerning the actions of Rep. Gus Savage while that member traveled to Africa in connection with his official duties and responsibilities in March 1989."

Unions strike; BellSouth reaches tentative agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unions representing 60,000 workers struck NYNEX Corp. early Sunday while a tentative agreement was reached between BellSouth and 64,000 phone workers in the Southeast.

Strikes loomed at two more "Baby Bell" regional phone companies but negotiations continued early Sunday. At Bell Atlantic, the unions agreed to bargain past the midnight expiration of their contracts. On the West Coast, the unions and Pacific Telesis negotiated as their deadline approached.

In all, 221,000 telecommunications workers were covered by the talks to replace contracts that expired at 11:59 p.m. Saturday. The four companies provide service to 24 states and the nation's capital.

NYNEX serves most of the Northeast. It was struck for nine days in 1986, the last time it negotiated with the unions.

The Communications Workers of America and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers announced the strike against New York-based NYNEX well before the deadline, saying myriad differences remained. So great were the differences that no formal talks were held Saturday.

The unions rejected new contract offers from Bell Atlantic and Pacific Telesis and strikes against those companies were possible as well. But talks continued as the deadlines approached.

The tentative agreement with Atlanta-based BellSouth on a three-year contract was announced in the final hour of the existing contract. Details were not immediately available.

Union officials left open the possibility of continuing the Bell Atlantic and Pacific Telesis talks past the deadlines if agreements appeared near.

The companies said management personnel would replace union workers in the event of strikes. The companies and unions agreed that strikes would cause little immediate impact on service but ultimately could snarl repairs, installations and directory assistance.

Saturday marked the first of two major deadlines in the negotiations between the CWA, IBEW and the regional companies spawned by the 1984 breakup of American Telephone & Telegraph.

Contracts with three of the other "Baby Bells" — Ameritech, US West and Southwestern Bell — expire Aug. 12. Those three companies employ 131,000 union workers and provide phone service in 24 states.

The strike against NYNEX was announced in New York by CWA Vice President Jan Pierce, who said the unions and the company were far apart on wages and even further apart on the contentious issue of health insurance. Numerous other issues also were unresolved, including use of subcontractors, differential pay for night work and other work rules, he said.

"All of our management people are available for use to step in where needed," said NYNEX spokesman John Bonomo.

NYNEX serves seven Northeast states: New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and parts of Connecticut. CWA represents 40,000 NYNEX workers; IBEW 20,000.

Countdown begins for space shuttle flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space officials were confident Saturday as a veiled countdown began for launching the shuttle Columbia on Tuesday with five military astronauts and a secret spy satellite.

It will be the first flight in 3½ years for Columbia, the oldest shuttle, which required more extensive overhaul than its two sister ships after the 1986 Challenger explosion.

NASA gave the go-ahead to start the countdown early Saturday even though workers were several hours behind schedule in completing routine work on the spaceship's engine compartment.

Officials said later that the launch team was optimistic that all lagging work would be caught up by Sunday and that liftoff would occur as planned between 7:30 a.m. and 11:30 a.m. Tuesday.

The Pentagon will not let NASA disclose the status of the countdown or the exact launch time, citing national security reasons.

Because the mission is classified, countdown displays normally available to the news media remained blank, and only members of the launch team and key NASA and Pentagon officials were supposed to know where the clock stood.

The countdown will be made public just nine minutes before the planned liftoff.

The five astronauts flew here Saturday from their training base in Houston to make final preparations for launch.

Asked by a reporter if he had confidence in riding in Columbia after it had been grounded for so long, commander Brewster Shaw, an Air Force colonel, replied: "Absolutely; you bet I do. I wouldn't fly it if I didn't...I flew Columbia a long time ago. It's a great machine."

Shaw piloted Columbia on a November 1983 trip.

With him on the upcoming flight will be Navy Cmdr. Richard Richards, Navy Cmdr. David Leestma, Army Lt. Col. James Adamson and Air Force Maj. Mark Brown.

The Defense Department will not disclose the nature of their mission. But sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said that during four or five days in orbit they will deploy a large reconnaissance satellite and a smaller research payload and conduct experiments designed to define what role military astronauts can play in space.

Once Columbia is in orbit, about nine minutes after liftoff, the Pentagon will impose a blackout on all information about the flight, except for three brief announcements about the health of the spacecraft and the landing time.

The silence will be broken only if there is a major problem.

Defense officials contend the secrecy makes it more difficult for Soviet satellites and spy ships stationed off Cape Canaveral to monitor the flight and learn its purpose.

Critics argue that such secrecy is unnecessary because the Soviets, with their intelligence capabilities, undoubtedly already know a great deal about the mission and that once Columbia's satellite is in orbit, the Soviets will be able to track it precisely and know what it is doing.

This will be the 30th space shuttle flight and the fourth dedicated to a Defense Department mission.

Columbia last was launched in January 1986, returning to Earth just 10 days before the Challenger explosion killed seven astronauts. After the accident, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration concentrated on modifying the newer orbiters, Discovery and Atlantis, before getting Columbia ready.

Discovery and Atlantis each flew twice since flights resumed last September after a 32-month hiatus.

African stowaways healthy, moved to ship, NAACP says

New York Times News Service

ORANGE, Texas — Two stowaways on the Lykes Lines ship Gennevive Lykes were being held Friday in a ship cabin and are apparently being treated well.

Three representatives of the Orange chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on Friday spoke with Martin Larius, captain of the Gennevive Lykes, about the condition of the stowaways.

Velma Jeter, president of the local NAACP, said she wanted to thank Larius for moving the stowaways to better conditions.

Larius told Jeter that the stowaways were never at any time treated inhumanely. The men are not handcuffed, he told Jeter, and NAACP vice presidents Daniel Jackson and James Zay Roberts and two registered nurses have examined the stowaways and pronounced them in good health. Both men are being held in the best conditions possible, Larius said.

Meanwhile, no new progress was made Friday in identifying the two men who are believed to have boarded the ship at Dar-es-Salaam, the capital of Tanzania, the African nation the men reportedly claimed they were from at first.

Royce McGill, port director for the Immigration and Naturalization Service office in Galveston, said Friday that the two men, ages 17 and 19, were under guard in a cabin with sleeping quarters, bathroom facilities and air conditioning. The men were not handcuffed, he said.

"As long as they don't try to damage their cabin or any part of the vessel, they won't be handcuffed," McGill said. There is a guard outside the cabin door to ensure the men do not try to escape, he said.

McGill said a member of his staff will make daily visits to the ship to see that the men are being well cared for.

According to state Rep. Al Price, D-Beaumont, the men were being held handcuffed together in a six-foot by 12-foot latrine that had no ventilation. Price described the conditions the men were being held in as inhumane.

Getting the men off of the ship hinges on finding documentation for the two men, McGill said. Federal immigration law states that nobody may enter the country without documentation.

Price said the two stowaways have no passports or documents of any kind. He described them Thursday as "men without a country."

South Carolina swimming pool opens to both blacks, whites

SALUDA, S.C. (AP) — A swimming pool that was off-limits to blacks for 34 years reopened Saturday to both blacks and whites following complaints by a church group.

"It's about time," said Bernard Daniel, a 34-year-old black man who stopped outside the Saluda Swim and Tennis Club on his way to a wedding.

Few people showed up at the pool despite a temperature of 100 degrees.

Daniel said he and a friend tried to obtain a pool membership three years ago, but were refused.

"I was told it was for white men," he recalled. Nothing was done at the time, although there were "people here who knew it was wrong," Daniel said.

The pool in this town 45 miles south of Columbia was closed July 26 following publicity about the club's refusal July 13 to admit three black youths who were part of a church group that had arranged to use the pool.

The land on which the club stands was deeded to the town in 1933 with the stipulation that it was for the use by the "white children" of the county and town of Saluda. The stipulation remained when the town sold the land to the Saluda Jaycees for $5 in 1955.

The swim and tennis club rents the land from the Jaycees and enforced the rule. After the church group complained, the Jaycees ordered the pool closed until it was desegregated.

A few black families purchased half-price memberships Saturday, but no one was waiting in line when the pool opened. About five black people swam, and about 50 cars stopped so occupants could get a glimpse.

Janet Sibert, who is black, brought her two children and purchased a membership. "I'm happy the kids will be able to swim," said Mrs. Sibert, who lives in Greenwood, about 28 miles from Saluda.

Asked why she brought her children to the Saluda pool, Mrs. Sibert, who works in Saluda, said, "I think that's obvious. We were interested, and we came.

"I want my children to feel good about themselves and know they can swim where they want to," she said.

Robert Booth, president of the pool's seven-member board of directors, said he was pleased that the pool opened under the desegregation policy.

"It's going well," he said. "I feel like (blacks) will start coming to the pool."

Jamie Willis, 17, who is white, said they probably wouldn't.

"They think they're not wanted there," said Miss Willis, who was watching and said she was not a club member.

City hopes incinerator boosts image

CENTRAL FALLS, R.I. (AP) — Rhode Island's smallest and poorest city, eager to relieve its financial crisis and downtrodden image, is staking its future on something nobody else wanted — a trash incinerator.

Other Rhode Island communities have fought expensive legal battles against landfills and incinerators, but Mayor Carlos A. Silva Jr. offered Central Falls as a site for a state disposal plant in hopes of raising from $750,000 to $1.5 million a year in revenue from the state waste agency. The exact amount of revenue to be paid is under negotiation.

Residents who voted for the incinerator in a July 25 referendum said they accepted Silva's argument that it was the city's only available source of new cash, even though the plant faces a barrage of environmental hearings and cannot open for at least three years.

"Nobody wants us. Everybody's trying to put us down and here's this man (the mayor) trying to boost us up by saying, 'Let's have the incinerator,'" said Anne Marie Healey, who voted in favor. "I think we have to trust him."

The incinerator, one of three waste-to-energy plants the state's Solid Waste Management Corp. is required to build, already has been rejected on environmental grounds by Woonsocket and North Smithfield. Another plant, in North Kingstown, has been tied up in legal battles for 1½ years by residents and town officials who fear the pollution it could cause.

Opponents of the Central Falls plant raised similar concerns, saying the state's smallest, most densely populated city, with an estimated 17,556 residents packed into 1.2 square miles, was no place for a trash incinerator.

Some residents fear the 1,447-to-1,274 vote in favor of the plant means critics of the town will have a new reason to look down on it.

"I work with a lot of people from neighboring communities and they say, 'Burn the city.' They think it's all druggies," said a 35-year-old nurse who voted against the incinerator.

Officials in the neighboring communities of Cumberland, Lincoln and Pawtucket are threatening to do what they can to block the project, but the threats have added to the fighting spirit among those who remember the slights their city received from its neighbors over the years.

"I think it's good to put it on the Pawtucket line because they didn't regionalize the schools, and on the Lincoln line because they wouldn't rent us their school," said the nurse. "All the garbage trucks are going to go through their towns. I'm glad about that."

The nurse, like some other residents, would discuss the volatile issue only anonymously for fear of antagonizing her neighbors.

Charles Manson, his 'family' face middle age in prison

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Charles Manson, the most famous inmate in the California prison system, lives in solitary confinement, subject to threats by prisoners who want the glory of killing him.

At 54, the one-time wild-eyed guru of a murderous communal "family" still gets stacks of mail and requests for interviews. Lately he's been declining, because "he says he doesn't want to give away anything for free," says Evelyn Mazon, spokeswoman for the high security state prison at Corcoran, where Manson was moved early this year.

The three giggly, long-haired young women who once followed Manson's commands to murder have drifted into middle age behind bars. Patricia Krenwinkel, 42, Susan Atkins, 41, and Leslie Van Houten, who turns 40 this summer, appear regularly at parole hearings seeking freedom that seems more elusive each year.

Manson's chief lieutenant, Charles "Tex" Watson, is a Christian minister and father of three children through conjugal visits with his wife at the California Men's Colony at San Luis Obispo. Miss Atkins also is married.

Twenty years after the Sharon Tate-LaBianca murders, the Manson Family killers have settled into prison life. Most are model prisoners, but only one, Leslie Van Houten, seems a possible candidate for parole.

Miss Van Houten, who was not at the Tate home but admitted stabbing Rosemary LaBianca, perhaps after she was dead, was the youngest of those convicted. Her first conviction was reversed, her second trial ended with a hung jury, her third resulted in another conviction.

Will any of them ever be released?

"Manson will never get out," says Paul Fitzgerald, the lead defense attorney who represented Miss Krenwinkel. "He doesn't want to get out. He's perfectly adjusted to where he is.

"The girls, I think, will be released eventually," he says. "I think Leslie will get out first, Patricia second, then probably Susan."

"They have been rehabilitated," he says. "I don't think the public safety argument is a good argument anymore. Now it's simply vengeance."

Daye Shinn, who defended Miss Atkins, has a different view.

"People may say I'm crazy, but I believe the first one to get out will be Charlie Manson, because he didn't do any of the killings."

According to testimony, Manson sent his followers to Miss Tate's home on Aug. 9, 1969, and the next night accompanied them to the LaBianca house but left before the killing began.

Deputy District Attorney Stephen Kay is committed to keeping Manson locked up for the rest of his life. Except for Miss Van Houten, he says the killers have little hope of parole. Miss Tate's mother, Doris, has gathered thousands of signatures on petitions urging that the killers never be released.

Other members of the communal Manson Family have scattered.

Somewhere in America, Michael Manson, the cult leader's son, has turned 21. In New England, Linda Kasabian, the star witness of the Manson trial, has raised her children to adulthood. Susan Atkins' son grew up with an adoptive family.

Bruce Davis and Robert Beausoleil, convicted with Manson in the murder of Malibu musician Gary Hinman, are imprisoned at San Luis Obispo.

Lynette "Squeaky" Fromme, who aimed a gun at President Ford in Sacramento, Calif., is serving a life term at a federal prison in Florida where she was moved after a brief escape from her quarters at Alderson, W.Va.

Sandra Good, who was in federal prison for writing threatening letters to business executives, is free on parole, as is Steve Grogan, convicted in the Manson-ordered murder of stuntman Donald "Shorty" Shea.

The Manson trial defense attorneys continue to practice law in Los Angeles.

Manson's lawyer, Irving Kanarek, contends the cult leader was a victim of bad publicity.

Shinn regrets Miss Atkins wouldn't plead diminished capacity. Manson ordered his followers to present no defense and they obeyed.

"The defendants were naive kids, products of the times," said Fitzgerald. "Most of them had no arrest records. Yet the public loathes and detests them and sees them as some symbol of evil...They were the perfect symbols of innocence, young girls."

In 20 years, he said, he has heard no public expressions of sympathy for these daughters of middle class American families.

"People don't say, 'There but for the grace of God goes my daughter,'" he said. "I haven't heard that once."

20 years after slaying, Tate's mother helps others

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It has been years since Doris Tate and Roman Polanski saw each other.

"For awhile, I couldn't bear to see him because in my state of denial I would always expect to see Sharon with him," says Mrs. Tate.

Twenty years after the nation's most notorious mass murder, the mother and husband of slain actress Sharon Tate are the most visible survivors of the gruesome tragedy.

Mrs. Tate, 64, who says her grief kept her immobilized for 10 years, has emerged as an articulate spokeswoman for victims' rights and a source of comfort to the grieving.

"If they look at me and see that I have gone on for 20 years, then they feel there is hope," she says. Her group, Parents of Murdered Children, has helped hundreds cope with a child's loss.

Her husband, Paul, a retired Army colonel, has avoided the limelight.

Polanski, 55, a film director and actor, is a fugitive from justice, having fled to France in 1978 rather than appear for sentencing after he was convicted of having unlawful intercourse with a 13-year-old girl.

Nine years earlier, on Aug. 9, 1969, his 26-year-old wife, 8½ months pregnant, was found murdered along with three friends and a caretaker's guest. The following night market owners Leno and Rosemary LaBianca were slain in another gruesome killing.

Charles Manson and a group of his young disciples were convicted of the murders.

Polanski was abroad when his wife and friends were slain. Devastated by the tragedy, he returned to the horror of suspicions surrounding him because he had directed "Rosemary's Baby," a film about devil worship.

The arrests of the Manson "Family" ended that part of his nightmare. He went on to direct the Academy Award-winning film "Chinatown" in 1974.

Living in Paris after the scandal surrounding his trial, he directed the stunningly beautiful "Tess," which won critical acclaim.

But his fugitive status makes negotiations with Hollywood studios difficult. His two most recent films — "Pirates" in 1985 and "Frantic" in 1987 — did not do well.

Polanski won plaudits in France for his interpretation of a man turned into an insect in the 1988 stage version of Kafka's "Metamorphosis" at a Paris theater.

He is occasionally seen at theater openings or taking refreshments in a cafe like the chic Fouquet's on the Champs-Elysees. Friends talk of negotiating his return to the United States, but so far it is only talk.

Mrs. Tate's odyssey from grieving mother to outspoken advocate is a lesson in survival. She credits her Roman Catholic faith with sustaining her and sees herself as "a soldier of the Lord."

"Since the victims don't have a voice, we that are left behind that represent our loved ones must be counted," Mrs. Tate says.

She recently formed an umbrella organization, Cover, to coordinate some 400 victims' rights groups around California. She serves on a Department of Corrections advisory board and visits prisons to tell inmates serving time for lesser crimes the devastation suffered by survivors of the murdered.

"If I can change two of those people before they go on to murder, then I have saved two victims," says Mrs. Tate.

She also campaigns to keep the Tate-LaBianca murderers in prison. She attends parole hearings for Charles Manson, Susan Atkins, Patricia Krenwinkel and Charles "Tex" Watson and for Leslie Van Houten, who was not involved in the Tate murder but admitted being at the LaBianca slayings.

When Miss Van Houten's friends gathered 900 signatures urging her release, Mrs. Tate gathered 352,000 urging her continued imprisonment.

She is adamant that the killers of her daughter remain behind bars.

Doris Tate, mother of slain actress Sharon Tate, helps others cope with the loss of their children.

"When a person has murdered eight people — I always include the baby — then they're untrustworthy to be released into society," she says. "They have proven they cannot live in a normal society."

Two decades later, she realizes the murder case will be famous forever.

"It won't go away and that's the reason I feel I've got to do whatever I can do," she says. "That it won't go away is fine with me. It affords me an opportunity to do something in my daughter's name. If there's such a thing as destiny, then this is my plight."

Pierce did favors for law firm, files show

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Despite a pledge during his Senate confirmation hearings to "sever" his ties to his New York law firm, Samuel R. Pierce Jr. regularly did personal favors for his former colleagues and interceded with subordinates in the Department of Housing and Urban Development on their behalf, documents from his office files show.

While there is no indication that the former secretary broke the law or directed subordinates to act improperly, Rep. Tom Lantos, D-Calif., said the documents raised "additional questions about Pierce's management at HUD."

Lantos' subcommittee is investigating allegations of abuse and mismanagement at the housing department. He said the panel would examine the documents about Pierce's relationship with his law firm "to see what overall pattern emerges."

In telephone interviews, several lawyers at Pierce's old firm, Battle, Fowler, Jaffin & Kheel, insisted that their dealings with him were ethical, considering that he was a former partner and close friend. Some lawyers added that their dealings with Pierce led to no fees and did not involve HUD programs.

Speaking for the firm, its managing partner, Eric W. Shaw, said Saturday, "It is the policy of the law firm not to comment on the matter of the clients."

The documents, obtained by The New York Times under the Freedom of Information Act, make it clear that the former secretary ordered subordinates to investigate problems that Battle, Fowler was having in securing HUD financing, though there is no evidence that applications were approved as a result.

They show that he passed along inquiries by his old firm's lawyers on other legal problems with HUD programs, and that he helped his former colleagues gain access to officials at other government agencies.

Asked whether such practices were standard for Cabinet secretaries in the Reagan administration, a former high official who dealt with issues of ethics said it "was certainly customary and expected that you recuse yourself from all matters having to do with your immediate prior employer."

The official, who spoke on the condition that he not be identified, said that top Reagan administration officials were expected to follow ethical guidelines to avoid the appearance of conflict of interest.

A senior Bush administration official, also speaking on the condition of anonymity, said Pierce's dealings with his former firm "looked bad" because they raised such an appearance.

One expert on legal ethics, Stephen Gillers, a professor at New York University, said the sheer frequency of Pierce's dealings with his former firm, even if each were deemed proper, could lead to the appearance of a conflict, a situation the laws are intended to prevent.

These dealings began within weeks of Pierce's confirmation as secretary in January 1981 and continued through much of his tenure.

Efforts to reach Edelman for comment were unsuccessful, but in an interview last month he said he could not discuss details of projects because they were protected by attorney-client privilege.

At that time, Edelman said of his contacts with Pierce, "I never talked to him. I never did anything with respect to the secretary."

Power outage sparks fights at beach resort

SEASIDE HEIGHTS, N.J. (AP) — Fighting broke out among a crowd of thousands on this beach resort's mile-long boardwalk after a power outage left the area in darkness, authorities said.

"The lights flickered and everybody went crazy," said Eric Slavin, manager of Lucky's Towels on the boardwalk. "People started kicking down garbage cans, people were yelling and screaming and egging it on."

People smashed windows, overturned garbage cans and began fighting after the lights went out around 1 a.m. Saturday, police said.

About 25 people were arrested, most for misdemeanors such as fighting and disturbing the peace, said Mayor George Tompkins.

More than 200 police officers and 14 police dogs from 45 departments arrived on the scene, said Borough Police Capt. Gerald LaStella.

Police blocked the bridge leading to the island community and evacuated people from the boardwalk.

"There were kids running around throwing bottles, knocking over garbage cans and some attempted to steal some things from the stands," said LaStella.

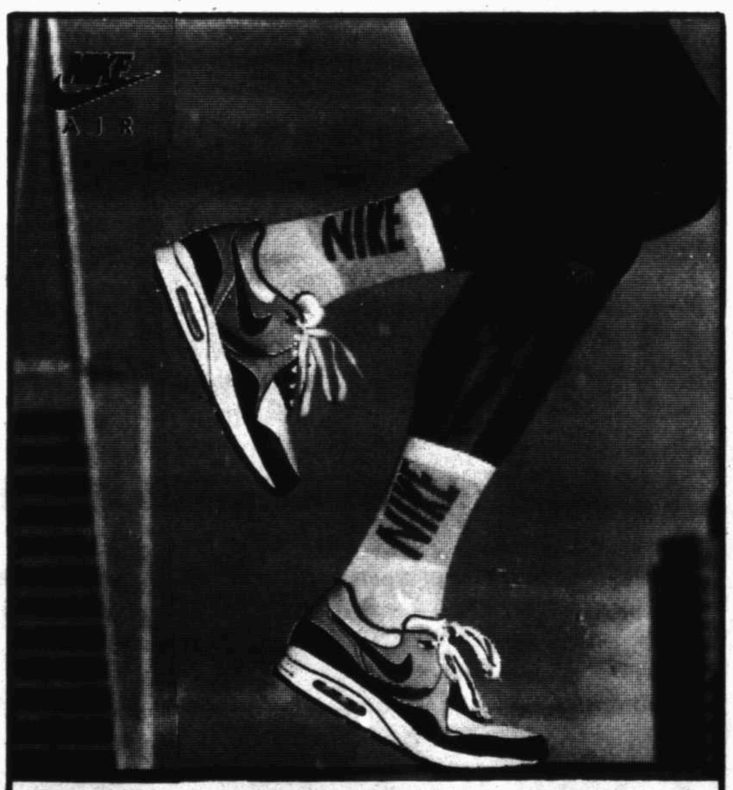

No injuries were reported, police said. Water and sewer service was maintained by back-up generators.

"The boardwalk was full and the nightclubs were full. It wasn't rioting, it was fighting," said Tompkins, who added that damage was minor.

Some people were stuck on amusement rides, but police helped them off, he said.

Order was restored about 3 a.m., Tompkins said.

LaStella said up to 25,000 people were on the boardwalk at the time of the power failure.

Central park victim begins jogging again

NEW YORK (AP) — The woman who was attacked and raped by a gang of youths in Central Park four months ago has started jogging again as part of her rehabilitation, one of her doctors said.

"She jogged a couple of times around the facility," Dr. Craig Foster said. Foster, a plastic surgeon, operated on the woman to correct her double-vision.

The 28-year-old investment banker is recuperating at the Gaylord Rehabilitation Hospital in Wallingford, Conn.

She was attacked while jogging in Central Park on April 19. She was beaten unconscious and left for dead. Six youths have been charged in the attack.

The victim's recovery has physicians convinced "she'll be able to take care of herself and be employed someday," Foster said.

Hamburger record set

SEYMOUR, Wis. (AP) — This farm town, which claims it invented the hamburger, fried up a 5,520-pound patty Saturday and served it to about 10,000 people in a bid for a spot in the Guinness Book of World Records.

"It was nice and juicy," said Doris Witbrow of Suamico.

The event at the Outagamie County Fairgrounds was a tribute to Charles "Hamburger Charlie" Nagreen, who — according to local historians — mashed a meatball to make the world's first hamburger in 1885.

About 50 cooks in aprons worked around a specially designed grill 21 feet in diameter and heated by 12 gas burners. It took about two hours to cook the 6-inch-thick layer of ground chuck.

To avoid having to flip the patty, grill designers Steve Mielke and Joe Sauer used a cover to cook both sides at once. A truck-mounted crane lifted the cover into place and suspended Sauer over the patty as he sprinkled salt.

The burger was intended to serve 15,000 people, but the meat ran out after an hour and 45 minutes and 10,000 diners. Five thousand buns were left over.

Seymour plans to submit its claim to the biggest burger to publishers of the Guinness Book.

According to the Guinness Book, the largest hamburger on record weighed 5,005 pounds, 13.8 ounces and was cooked in Cape Town, South Africa.

Adoptees wants access

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of adoptees, birth mothers and adoptive parents say their rally at the Lincoln Memorial is part of an effort to seek the unsealing of confidential birth records.

The 40 participants concluded a 2½-week march from New York to Washington on Friday and launched a two-day public awareness campaign that will include the rally today at the Lincoln Memorial.

The group picketed Friday in front of the city's Office of Vital Records while five members went inside to request original birth certificates.

The five, including two adoptees and three women who had given up children they bore in the District of Columbia when they were teenagers, were turned down by Registrar Jack Crandall.

"I have the old nothing answer, I guess, because it's the law," Crandall, an adoptive father himself, told the group. "The law says that when a person is adopted...we create a new birth certificate and the old certificate is under seal and can only be opened by order of the court."

Four killed in accident

WARREN, Maine (AP) — A tour bus collided head-on with a car Saturday, killing four people and injuring 20, authorities said.

The accident occurred shortly before 4 p.m. on U.S. 1 and involved a Travel Tours of Oklahoma bus carrying 43 people, many of them senior citizens, state police Sgt. Herbert Cram said.

The dead, including an 8-year-old boy and a pregnant girl, were in the car, officials said.

A 10-year-old boy was hospitalized in fair condition, said Penobscot Bay Medical Center spokesman Russell Donahue. The remaining injured were treated and released.

The car, traveling south, hit the bus and a second car, unable to avoid the wreckage, slammed into the car, witnesses said.

The first car "veered off and hit the bus head-on, and that threw him right into me," said Edwin Antz, the driver of the second car.

The first car burst into flames. People from a nearby campground pulled a boy from the car, then put the fire out.

Bush to name panel

WASHINGTON (NYT) — President Bush has agreed to name an independent commission to investigate aviation security in the aftermath of the bombing of a Pan American airliner over Scotland last December, members of Congress say.

Responding to requests from relatives of people killed in the bombing, the lawmakers had drafted legislation calling for an investigation separate from the ones by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and international law enforcement agencies.

Although the White House resisted the idea at first, presidential aides telephoned the sponsors Friday to tell them the panel would be appointed by executive order next week.

The hot air balloon "Chariot of Fire Too" falls to the ground after suddenly deflating during the 20th annual U.S. National Hot Air Balloon Championship Saturday in Baton Rouge, La.

Balloon crash kills pilot

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A balloon deflated, caught fire and plunged about 2,000 feet to the ground Saturday night at the National Hot Air Balloon Championships, killing its lone occupant as thousands of spectators watched.

Robert Mock, 52, of Paonia, Colo., died at Our Lady of the Lake Medical Center about an hour after the 5:55 p.m. accident, said a nursing supervisor who refused to give her name.

The cause of the accident was not known, but witnesses said Mock's balloon suddenly deflated, burst into flames and plunged to the ground.

Mock told his ground crew by radio that the flaps on his balloon were loose, and he apparently tried to compensate by pumping more hot air into the balloon, said East Baton Rouge Parish sheriff's Capt. Robert Shorter.

"At that point, the balloon collapsed and he plunged approximately 2,000 feet," Shorter said.

Up to 10,000 people may have seen the accident at the Greater Baton Rouge State Fairgrounds, Shorter said.

Saturday was the second day of the largest annual gathering of America's hot-air balloonists. The championships end Aug. 13.

Search for missing workers ended

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Coast Guard and Chevron on Friday abandoned the search for six workers missing from a capsized rig in the Gulf of Mexico on Friday.

"Chevron has exhausted all efforts for the search for the missing people by divers," the oil company said in a statement. Avis Bourg Co., which owns the rig, will salvage it and continue the search for the workers, Chevron said.

Avis Bourg officials did not return repeated telephone calls to their office.

The Coast Guard on Monday will open hearings into the accident Monday which killed at least four men when the rig capsized Monday. Four crewmen were rescued immediately after the accident.

The lift boat, or "jackup rig," with legs that can be moved up while traveling or down while working, remains on its side in 30 feet of water. It overturned while heading for shore while Hurricane Chantal approached.

Divers for Chevron, which had contracted the rig and workers, searched through Thursday night and recovered four bodies from the rig.

21 people killed, 82 wounded in Lebanon shelling duel

WORLD

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syria sent tanks and rocket launchers to the edge of the city's Christian sector Saturday, indicating it may be preparing to invade or fend off a Christian assault, police said.

The artillery movement followed a savage shelling duel on residential neighborhoods that killed 21 people and wounded 82, police said. They said 10 of the victims died when mortar shells hit an underground shelter.

The Christian Voice of Lebanon called it a "shelling storm." Among the dead were seven soldiers serving under Christian army commander Gen. Michel Aoun, who also heads the Christian half of this nation's divided government.

A police spokesman, who cannot be identified under standing rules, said it was not clear if the Syrian reinforcements "are a prelude to storming the Christian sector or facing an invasion by Aoun's forces."

The movement could also be intended as a show of force.

Both sectors of the city have been buzzing with rumors that Aoun's forces were planning to storm Moslem west Beirut in an effort to drive out the Syrians and seize Lebanon's central bank. It contains the nation's currency reserves.

Aoun, who sparked the current round of fighting 20 weeks ago by blockading militia-run ports, has vowed to force the Syrians out of Lebanon. The Syrians arrived under a 1976 Arab League peacekeeping mandate, but Aoun says they betrayed that mandate by siding with Moslem militias in the civil war.

The spokesman said the tanks, mostly Soviet-designed T-62s, rolled down the central Lebanese mountains from east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley, clogging traffic along the Beirut-Damascus highway.

They took up positions on hills overlooking Christian east Beirut as well as the three-mile Green Line that splits the city into Moslem and Christian zones, the spokesman said.

Dozens of multi-barreled rocket launchers, which fire 40 rockets a minute, were deployed in several poor neighborhoods along the Moslem side of the line.

Earlier Saturday, a six-hour barrage took casualties in Beirut, the surrounding mountain villages and the Bekaa Valley, according to the police spokesman.

A reliable Christian source said seven of those killed in the shelter, beneath a residential building in the Christian suburb of Fayadiyeh, were Lebanese army soldiers.

The source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the targeted building was used by Aoun's army as a communications station. Aoun's command refused comment on the report.

The shelter was hit by three 240mm mortar shells fired from a Syrian emplacement in Baaleshmeieh, a few miles east of Fayadiyeh.

The shells pierced the parking lot of the 10-story building and blasted the shelter, he said, causing part of the building to collapse and burying the victims.

Aoun's command at the Defense Ministry in the suburb of Yarze, 1.5 miles east of Fayadiyeh, sent hundreds of soldiers to evacuate casualties from the collapsed shelter, the police spokesman said.

He said casualties were taken away in armored personnel carriers because "it was very risky for ambulances to operate due to the intensity of the barrage."

At peak times of the duel, according to the spokesman, 60 shells per minute were being fired. He said the two sides fired about 10,000 shells and rockets in the exchange.

By police count, the 20-week-old confrontation between Aoun's 20,000 mainly Christian troops and the 40,000 Syrian soldiers in Lebanon has killed 537 people and wounded 2,266.

Moslems are fighting for a greater share of power in Lebanon, which has been controlled by the Christian minority.

The latest duel began late Friday and sent civilians fleeing to basements and underground shelters. It escalated sharply after the Syrians hit the shelter, the spokesman said.

Aoun's gunners and their right-wing Christian allies, the Lebanese Forces militia, entrenched in Lebanon's 310-square-mile Christian enclave, "responded heavily," the spokesman said.

Christian militia gunners sprayed residential districts in west Beirut and other Moslem areas with Grad missiles from rocket launchers, according to the spokesman.

He said the 122mm projectiles left gaping holes in apartment buildings, shattering walls and glass and starting several fires.

Syrian gunners, manning howitzer emplacements along west Beirut's seaside boulevard, responded by firing on residential distriacts in east Beirut.

The exchanges spread to Moslem Druse and Christian mountains, south and northeast of the capital.

Aoun's gunners also shelled the Bekaa Valley town of Chtoura, which commands the Syrian army's supply routes from Damascus, the police spokesman said.

Japan has first imperial news session in 14 years

New York Times News Service

TOKYO — In Japan's first imperial news conference in 14 years, Emperor Akihito and the Empress, Princess Michiko, on Friday balanced a modern sharing of answers to prescreened questions with a traditional circumspection about topics with controversial implications.

"I'd like to search for a way for the royal family to fit into contemporary society," Akihito said. "I shall bear in mind what the emperor is and what the emperor should be with respect to the constitution of Japan."

The constitution denies him specific governing powers and labels him the symbol of the nation and its people.

At a time when Japan's economic partners are showing mounting impatience with this country's lumbering trade imbalance, the princess sent the message that buying foreign goods needn't compromise the ethnic purity of the Japanese.

"In our everyday life, many foreign articles are used," Princess Michiko said. "Japaneseness, as well as internationalization, is seen both in our spirit and in actual goods, materials. We will have to think of this further and deeper in the future."

In a reflection of the emerging role of women at some levels of Japanese society, she participated equally with her husband throughout the event, which was videotaped and later telecast nationally in Japan.

The two sat beside each other in twin high-backed wooden chairs behind a pair of knee-level tables covered with gold colored cloth.

Princess Michiko, 54, spoke softly but directly with the 43 Japanese and 12 foreign reporters, clutching her hands in her lap. She wore a beige dress, pearl necklace and white pumps.

Akihito, 55, wore a grey double-breasted suit, white shirt and blue tie for his first public remarks since the funeral of his father, Hirohito, in February. He delivered carefully scripted answers to questions submitted a week in advance for the scrupulously orchestrated 37-minute session in the Stone Bridge Room at the Imperial Palace.

■ He pledged to seek world peace, but politely declined to shed light on the unanswered questions surrounding his father's role in Japan's last war.

■ He called for protection of the global environment, yet stopped short of assessing Japan's responsibilities as a major world polluter.

■ He expressed hope that his 29-year-old son, Crown Prince Naruhito, would pursue close ties with foreign friends, yet made it clear that any bride selected by or for his son must meet the requirements set forth by the Imperial Household Agency.

Those who hadn't expected Akihito to detail his version of his late father's role in World War II were correct.

"From my own position, I do not believe that I'm in a position to answer that question," Akihito said.

As Supreme Commander of Japan's military forces, Hirohito is presumed by many historians to have figured prominently in Japan's invasion of much of East Asia and the Japanese air raid on Pearl Harbor. On the other hand, testimony during postwar trials indicated that Hirohito had opposed the war but was used by hawkish politicians and generals to gather public support for their militaristic aims.

"The Emperor Showa (as Hirohito is posthumously called) cherished peace and he also did his best to act in accordance with the need to uphold or look up to the constitution," Akihito said. "And I'm sure that he had to go through many difficult circumstances."

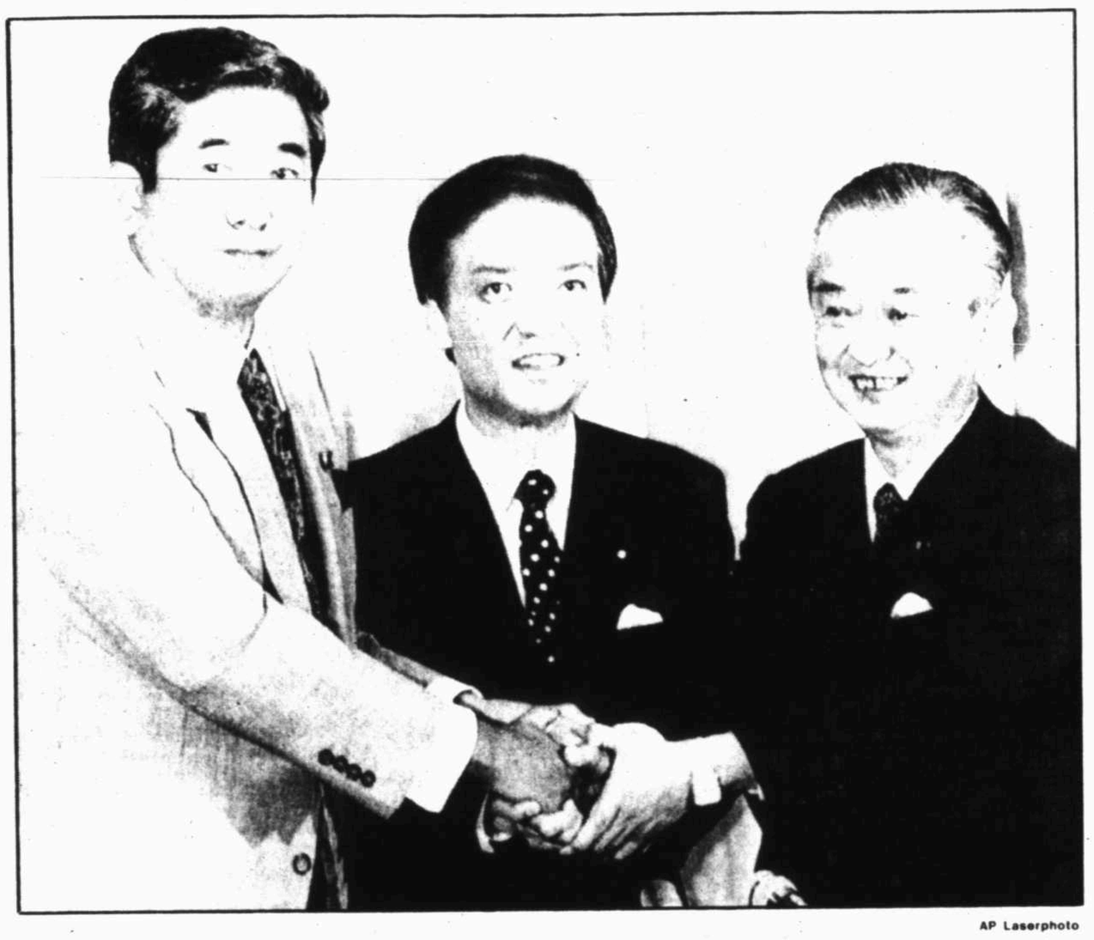

Some people had looked for Akihito to apologize Friday for Japan's regional military adventurism during the first half of the century, when his country employed brutal force to colonize Korea, much of China and parts of Southeast Asia.

Instead, Akihito spoke more obliquely of the sorrow he felt for all victims of the Second World War.

"During the last war, many people in Japan, as well as outside of Japan, lost their lives, and others went through great suffering," Akihito said. "That pains my heart. I sincerely hope, from the bottom of my heart, that peace will prevail around the world as early as possible."

Since public comments from the imperial family are rare, it would have been hard for the royal couple to have disappointed the Japanese. And they didn't.

"In the past, our generation revered the emperor and empress as something of a god, up in the clouds," a senior citizen here told a Japanese television reporter shortly after watching the imperial press conference. "But looking at the new emperor and empress, I feel that they are really closer to the people."

Education minister, two politicians to run for Japanese prime minister

TOKYO (AP) — Education Minister Toshiki Kaifu and two veteran politicians from the ruling party today applied to run in next week's election to choose the third prime minister in Japan this year.

Scandals involving bribery and sex have forced Noboru Takeshita and his successor, Sousuke Uno, from office prematurely.

While the 58-year-old Kaifu remains the front-runner, some party leaders complained that he had been selected in backroom factional manuevers. Offended by those wanting reform pledges, two party veterans announced at the last minute Friday that they would challenge Kaifu.

All three put in nomination papers shortly before the deadline this morning at the headquarters of the governing Liberal Democratic Party, which holds a secret ballot Tuesday to elect a successor to Prime Minister Uno.

Uno took office June 2, replacing Takeshita, who resigned as an influence-peddling scandal sent the party's popularity skidding to record lows in opinion polls. Uno became the target of allegations he kept paid mistresses, and he decided to step down after the party lost in July voting for half the seats in the upper house of Parliament.

The other candidates are Yoshiro Hayashi, 62, a former welfare minister, and ex-Transportation Minister Shintaro Ishihara, 56, who comes from the strongly nationalist wing of the party.

Whoever is elected to head the party is assured the prime ministership because of its majority in the House of Representatives in the Diet, Japan's parliament.

Kaifu, known as an eloquent speaker, pledged to promote political reforms to restore public trust in the scandal-plagued party. In a statement formally announcing his candidacy today, he also stressed the continuation of Japan's close ties with the United States and development aid to third world countries.

"In order to protect the peace of our nation and the world, I will maintain the Japan-U.S. security system and continue our efforts to defend our own country by our own hands," Kaifu said.

Though his career as a 10-term member of the House of Representatives qualifies him as a contender for prime minister in the eyes of many party members, he has not served in top Cabinet or party posts, and his faction in the party is one of the smallest, giving him little political power.

On Friday, the large faction led by former Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa decided to support Hayashi, who also belongs to one of the smallest groups in the party.

Seiichi Ohta, a leading member of the Miyazawa faction, called for an open selection process for the next leader and criticized Kaifu's candidacy as a product of factional maneuvering.

The ruling party is a collection of a half-dozen major factions that are differentiated more by personal and financial allegiances than by policy or ideology.

Ishihara, a prominent author known for his conservative, often nationalist views, is supported by some young members of the party across factional lines.

He said Friday, "Politics do not exist for politicians, but for the country. If we leave the situation as it is now, factionalism and power politics will continue to prevail."

Analysts said Kaifu remained the leading candidate because of strong backing from factions led by Takeshita and former Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe, two of the most powerful members of the party.

The party's 405 lawmakers and 47 representatives from local chapters will vote in a secret ballot Tuesday to chose its new president. The party plans to have the winner elected as the new prime minister in Parliament Wednesday. A new cabinet is expected to be announced by late Wednesday.

The Liberal Democrats have been seeking a strong leader who can restore public trust in the scandal-ridden party.

The party's popular No. 2 official, Ryutaro Hashimoto, 52, had been regarded as a potential contender, but he formally declined to run Friday, saying his candidacy would have created a further split in the party.

Group claims man wanted to kill Rushdie

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A previously unknown group claimed in a statement published today that a man killed in a London hotel explosion was preparing an attack on British author Salman Rushdie.

Rushdie has been in hiding in Britain since Feb. 14, when the late Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said his novel "The Satanic Verses" blasphemed Islam and called on Moslems to kill the author.

Scotland Yard said a man was killed Thursday as he worked with a handmade explosive charge inside a London hotel near Paddington Station.

The statement from a group calling itself the Organization of Islam's Mujahedeen did not identify the man, which it said was the group's "first martyr."

"Others would follow his example to try to kill Rushdie," said the statement published in Beirut's leading newspaper, An-Nahar.

"Henceforth, we warn all those who supported and facilitated Rushdie's works and helped publish the satanic book to back off because our hand will reach out for them all," the group said.

The statement called on British authorities to preserve the dead man's body, saying it would make arrangements to recover it later.

In London, a spokesman for Scotland Yard said police were discounting claims that Rushdie was the intended target of the bomb.

The dead man, the only victim of the Thursday blast at the 18-room Beverley House Hotel, had been staying there for several days, police said.

He was believed to have a French passport and be of Moroccan background, according to hotel records, although his passport had not been recovered, said a representative of Scotland Yard's press office, who spoke on condition of anonymity. The dead man's surname was given as Mazeh, he said, but there was no first name yet.

English dream hotel celebrates 100 years

LONDON (AP) — Johann Strauss conducted Viennese waltzes in its restaurant, Anna Pavlova danced in the ballroom, and Claude Monet painted his impressionist views of the Thames from a fifth-floor suite.

The Savoy, the distinctly English dream hotel, on Sunday marks 100 years of catering to high society, providing an opulent, discreet and dramatic rendezvous for celebrities, magnates, potentates and royalty.

Modeled on the great American hotels of the day, the Savoy was built by impresario Richard D'Oyly Carte adjoining his Savoy Theater, home of the Gilbert and Sullivan operettas. From the outset, it was a byword for exclusivity.

Princess Elizabeth, later Queen Elizabeth II, first danced here with Prince Philip. Winston Churchill got the word he had become prime minister at the Savoy and held War Cabinet meetings in the Pinafore Room.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower sent his dirty linen from the battle front. The Maharaja of Patiala had 3,000 roses delivered daily. Rock singer Elton John left his bath running and flooded three floors.

"Forty years ago, people were excluded mainly because of money," said Stanley Jackson, 78, author of "The Savoy: A Century of Taste."

"There's now a more international flavor, an infiltration which rather destroys the ultra-snobbishness.

"The hotel is not snooty or overintroverted. It has kept a good balance. You've got your dukes and your Sinatras, and they seem to mix very well together," Jackson said in an interview.

Single rooms go for 140 pounds, or $224 a night, while a suite can cost as much as 520 pounds, about $832.

When it opened in 1889, the Savoy was a wonder of the Victorian age, with 24-hour room service, speaking tubes on every floor, and 67 bathrooms at a time when its most luxurious rival, the Victoria, had just four. Oscar Wilde scorned the built-in washstands, saying that if he wanted hot water he would ring for it.

All 202 rooms have buttons marked waiter, valet and maid. The hotel still insists on its own custom-made mattresses, pure linen sheets and towels. It keeps separate kitchens on all eight floors and decorates no two rooms the same, using Art Deco and traditional English country styles.

The reservation office keeps 120,000 file cards listing the needs and idiosyncrasies of regular visitors. A staff of 650 attends to 300 guests, who in an average year order 350 pounds of caviar, 9,500 sides of smoked salmon, 52,000 oysters and half a ton of foie gras.

Requests are almost never too eccentric.

Frank Sinatra hankered after an espresso machine, so the manager bought one for him. An Italian marquise required live rabbits to feed his roommates, a pair of boa constrictors.

In 1905, a South African millionaire flooded the forecourt to recreate a Venetian canal, and Enrico Caruso serenaded from a gondola. The Maharaja of Patiala booked 35 rooms and installed a silver bathtub and a private elevator in scarlet and gold lacquer.

U.S. golf champion Walter Hagen started a tradition of driving golf balls off the roof into a barge on the Thames.

Asked how long he would be staying, Groucho Marx snapped, "Till it stops raining."

But a visitor from Chicago who bought a bulletproof vest and summoned a waiter to test it was politely turned down.

Weekend celebrations include a birthday ball, a tea party and fair for 320 disadvantaged children, and a fireworks display over the Thames.

History-making Supreme Soviet leaders head home

New York Times News Service

MOSCOW — Tired, exhilarated and rather proud of themselves, the deputies of the Supreme Soviet checked out of their hotels and went home Saturday, having given birth to a new branch of government.

In their six-week first session, the 542 political debutantes confirmed a new government, put their stamp on several laws and surprised almost everyone by growing from a timid assembly of unknowns to an amateur but increasingly credible legislature.

"For the time being, we're still a convention of dilettantes," said Anatoly A. Sobchak, a Leningrad lawyer who has become one of the Parliament's new celebrities.

"We're not quite prepared for this," he said. "But we came here with an honest desire to solve the problems of the people, and that makes up for a lack of professionalism."

After a vacation and a sounding of their constituents' moods, the deputies are to return Sept. 25 for a law-writing marathon that will include their first immersion in the mysteries of the deficit-ridden Soviet budget.

The standing legislature was selected in late May by its parent body, the 2,250-member Congress of Peoples Deputies, which had been elected in March. The exclusion of many outspoken independents prompted predictions that it would be a subservient body — "a Stalinist-Brezhnevite Supreme Soviet," in the estimation of one rejected candidate, the historian Yuri N. Afanasyev.

The Legislature has so far proved itself cautious and usually deferential to the wishes of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev. But not always.

Gorbachev has also bent to accommodate the deputies on several issues.

"What often happens is that Mr. Gorbachev, when he feels that a resolution is not popular, changes it and brings in revisions, which then pass," Sobchak said.

As Communist Party leader, Gorbachev could invoke party discipline over the 85 percent of the deputies who are Communists. But has not yet chosen to test that power, preferring to rule by consensus and compromise.

For a country where legislatures had been for 70 years a kind of puppet theater, assembled for a few days each year to rubber-stamp the decrees of the Communist Party, the new Supreme Soviet has been a crash course in representative government.

"The majority of them have become completely different people," said Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov of the deputies who spurned some of his nominees for top government jobs and sent many of his legislative proposals back to the drawing board.

"They're looking at the country, and not just representing their narrow, territorial interests," he told reporters. "They're beginning to think of the fate of the country."

Before adjourning, a minority of deputies impatient with Gorbachev's pace organized an independent parliamentary bloc called the interregional group, led by the renegade Communist Boris N. Yeltsin and other self-described radicals.

"I can't fathom what good this will bring to our cause," Gorbachev said in a closing speech Friday, declaring the new faction unnecessary and divisive.

But he also made a point of consulting the group on a plan to let the 15 Soviet republics proceed this year with local elections.

Leaders of the interregional group said Gorbachev's compromise generally satisfied their demand for more democratic voting procedures that they hope will enable independent candidates to take charge of local governments across the country.

Among the most significant laws and resolutions adopted in the debut session were measures permitting the Baltic republics to experiment with market-style economies, eliminating some of the central controls on industrial managers and allowing them to issue stock, easing taxes on private entrepreneurs, increasing pensions for millions of the country's poor, and relaxing the laws forbidding "anti-state" activities.

American sailors mingle with Soviets

SEVASTOPOL, U.S.S.R. (AP) — One of the first Soviet visitors to tour the USS Thomas S. Gates looked at the cruiser's on-board helicopter with admiration.

"Great helicopter!" he told aviator Matt Gentry of Seattle.

"Great country!" Gentry responded, gesturing toward shore.

Around this Black Sea port's streets over the weekend, residents mingled in friendship with about 600 seamen from the first two American warships ever to dock here.

This city of almost 400,000 people, founded as a Greek colony in 422 B.C., often has known visitors of a less welcome variety. Its strategic position on the Crimean peninsula across from Turkey led to attacks over the centuries by Turks, French, British, and Germans.

On Saturday, Sevastopol residents mobbed the Americans almost everywhere they went. Many had never seen Westerners because this port city is headquarters of the Soviet Black Sea fleet and normally is a restricted zone.

The Ameircan sailors sampled the wares of a local wine factory, relaxed in the local officers' club, and shopped in a military store. They strolled through the seaside town and hobnobbed with locals, many of whom showered them with gifts and invited them home.

"It looks like the Soviets are trying to match what we gave them," said Bill Hayes from Poland, a village in upstate New York. "So far, it looks like they're doing pretty well."

Soviet crews of three ships were feted in Norfolk, Va., last month as part of the first such Soviet-American exchange of port calls in 14 years.

Navigator George Hughes, who is based in Norfolk, set out to trade some American souvenirs for Soviet items.

"My wife wrote me that she did a little trading when the Soviet fleet hit Norfolk, so I've got to match her," he said.

Soviet gifts to the American sailors included candy, rubles, children's toys, scarves, flowers, postcards and emblems from Soviet naval uniforms.

However, the American ships were ready for the gift exchanges, said Montana native Pierre Ross, the Gates' chief petty officer. They had special T-shirts printed up and provided sailors with pins, hats and other knickknacks.

Hayes, the Gates' dispersing officer, said his ship's crew of 350 had been given a total of about $10,000 in rubles to spend in town.

"We're especially curious about how the beer tastes," he said.

In a store where Soviet military uniforms are sold and only Soviet servicemen are normally allowed to shop, two American sailors were unfazed when told of the store's restrictions.

"That's okay," one said. "We're military too."

In fact, plenty of American seamen could be seen sporting Soviet medals and caps. Their own round, white sailor hats graced the heads of more than a few young Sevastopol women.

Greg Marlatt, the Gates' medical officer, said he wanted to spend his time in Sevastopol exploring Soviet medical practices.

One sailor apologized as he extricated himself from a crowd of children and adolescents, explaining, "Sorry, I'm just all out of pennies."

Tours of the American ships, the Gates and the frigate USS Kauffman, were scheduled to continue until their departure Tuesday. They arrived Friday.

A year ago, the city played host to a small delegation with Frank Carlucci, then U.S. defense secretary. But Navy public affairs officer Paul Weishaupt said this was the first time U.S. ships had docked at Sevastopol.

"This is a very unusual flag to see here," agreed former Soviet Navy Lt. Valery Karyakin as he looked at the Stars and Stripes on one of the ships.

Speech reveals Soviet national debt at nearly $500 billion

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union on Saturday portrayed a gloomy picture of an economy sliding toward disaster with a national debt of nearly $500 billion and growing faster than that of the United States.

The revelation was made in a speech by State Planning Committee Chairman Yuri Maslyukov to the Supreme Soviet, or legislature.

Despite the dismal prognosis, Maslyukov's speech was markedly different from previous statements by Soviet economic authorities in that he acknowledged some key problems and outlined ways to solve them.

The proposals likely will be taken up by the Supreme Soviet when it considers the 1990 budget in a session that begins Sept. 25.

Human rights activist Andrei Sakharov, speaking in the United States last week, reported the latest sad joke. The difference between an optimist and a pessimist, he said, depends on whether a person expects economic disaster to strike the Soviet Union in one, two or five years.

Soviet stores are expected to become even more barren because wages now are rising twice as fast as the production of consumer goods, according to Maslyukov's figures. Imports alone are not the answer, he said.

"No foreign uncle is going to solve this problem for us," he warned.

Inflationary pressures are growing, and the deficit for 1989 is now projected at $192 billion, up 20 percent from estimates given six months ago.

That is four times more than the U.S. budget deficit in terms of the economy's ability to adjust to it. The Soviet deficit amounts to 13.8 percent of all the country's goods and services produced in a year.

In November, Finance Minister Boris Gostev made world headlines by admitting to a budget deficit for the first time, but his figure hid two-thirds of the deficit with bookkeeping tricks.

In his speech, made Friday and reported Saturday by Pravda, Maslyukov called for an end to such smoke screens. He proposed issuing government bonds to cover the deficit and paying interest to savers.

That would sop up some of the public's extra cash, which it is now trying to spend on inadequate supplies of consumer goods, Maslyukov said.

"We must stop the worsening of the economic situation and social tension," he said. Hundreds of thousands of Soviet miners went on strike in July, in part because of shortages of housing and simple goods like soap and meat.

In 1990, the government plans for consumer goods production to grow 11 times faster than heavy industry, he said. Already this year, government investment in factories and machinery has dropped by 30 percent.

That would be a dramatic turnaround for the Soviet government, which has traditionally emphasized heavy industry and defense at the expense of housing and consumer goods.

But even Maslyukov's promised doubling and tripling of the growth rates for manufacturing of televisions and washing machines will meet just a tiny fraction of the demand.

For example, the growth rate for television manufacturing will triple — bringing total production to 10.6 million sets a year for a population of 287 million.

Maslyukov said the deficit could be cut in half next year by reducing the losses at state enterprises and trimming defense spending and government investment in industry.

Hungary may grant asylum to fleeing East Germans

New York Times News Service

BONN, West Germany — Opening a novel rift in the Warsaw Pact, Hungary has said it would consider granting political asylum to some East Germans, effectively assisting them in their flight from another communist nation.

Yet both Hungary, an ally of East Germany, and West Germany have strongly sought to discourage East Germans from seeking to flee their country by using Budapest as an escape route.

This summer, vacation season has seen an unusually high number of East Germans attempting another avenue of escape — several hundred of them have in recent days thronged West German diplomatic missions in Budapest, Prague, and East Berlin, staging what amount to sit-ins demanding passage to the West.

In a radio interview in Budapest on Thursday, Judith Toth, head of the refugee department in the Ministry of Internal Affairs, said that "it would not be impossible" for Hungary to grant asylum to East German citizens if, as expected, Parliament adopts a refugee statute under discussion.

"Requests for asylum will be examined, but individually, not as a group," she said. "It is not enough just to be from the German Democratic Republic."

After these remarks caused something of a sensation in Central Europe, Col. Karoly Nagy, the head of the Hungarian Office for the Control of Foreigners, called a news conference on Friday to emphasize that so far no East German seeking to flee to the West had been able to demonstrate that he or she qualified for political asylum in Hungary.

Nagy's remarks appeared aimed at dampening expectations that had been raised the day before by Toth. But he did not exclude the possibility that asylum might be granted in individual cases.

This spring, Hungary began dismantling its barbed-wire frontier with Austria, offering a potential way out of communist Eastern Europe for East Germans, who are walled into their own country but permitted to visit other communist countries.

The Austrian police report that at least 237 East Germans have fled across the open frontier since May, but the number is believed to be considerably higher, since many do not report to the Austrian authorities. On Friday alone, some 60 East Germans were said to have illegally crossed the frontier to neutral Austria.

In June, Hungary signed — though it has not yet ratified — the United Nations Convention on Refugees, which commits signatories not to turn asylum-seekers back to their homelands if they could face persecution there for their political, religious, or national beliefs.

Police fire tear gas to break up activists' funeral

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Police fired tear gas into a church Saturday to disperse peaceful mourners at a post-funeral ceremony for two black activists killed in a bomb blast, a Roman Catholic priest said.

The Rev. Richard O'Rourke said police used dozens of canisters of tear gas to break up the traditional post-funeral meal attended by about 500 people at St. Matthew's Catholic Church in Bonteheuwel, a mixed-race area outside Cape Town.

"The people couldn't get out of the church so they broke down the emergency doors and came into (an adjoining) house," O'Rourke said. "Every time the people tried to go out, they were beaten back time and time again."

Later, police fired tear gas on about 50 people trying to visit South Africa's oldest imprisoned activist, Oscar Mpetha, who turned 80 on Saturday.

Police refused to allow the group into Groote Schuur Hospital in Cape Town, where Mpetha receives treatment for diabetes. He was sentenced to five years' jail for terrorism in 1985.

In the first incident, O'Rourke said police acted without provocation from mourners, who had come from a joint funeral for Coline Williams, 23, and Robbie Waterwitch, 20.

Police said there were no arrests or serious injuries, but they refused to comment further.

Ms. Williams and Waterwitch died last month when a bomb they were planting in a public toilet exploded prematurely, according to police.

Friends said the two supported the outlawed African National Congress guerrilla movement, which is fighting the South African government.

"One must not be surprised that in the end, young people begin to think that to plant bombs is the only way to bring change," said the Rev. Allan Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, at the funeral.

There have been several bombings in the last two weeks as the country prepares for elections Sept. 6, which exclude the black majority. Under apartheid, South African blacks have no voice in national affairs. The white minority controls the government and economy.

"Thank you, Coline. Thank you, Robbie. Thanks especially to you young people in your dedication to justice and peace, caring and humanity," said Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu.

About 5,000 people attended the funeral service at St. Mark's Catholic Church in the mixed-race township of Athlone, singing freedom songs and waving the banned green, gold and black flag of the guerrilla organization.

Police confiscated flags draped over the two coffins. But additional flags were smuggled past them at the Maitland Cemetery and placed on the coffins just before the burial.

The 5,000 mourners formed one of the largest crowds allowed at a funeral for black activists in the past two years.

Luis, a 30-year-old guerilla commander, stands with a AK-47 slung across his back at his mountainside command post in southeastern El Salvador.

Salvadoran guerrillas scoff at military claim of turning war's tide

CERRO EL TIGRE, El Salvador (AP) — An AK-47 automatic rifle slung across his back, Luis smiles beneath his bushy black mustache at the Salvadoran army's claim that the tide has been turned against anti-government guerrillas.

"The military analyzes the war mechanically," said the guerrilla commander at his mountainside command post here. "Because such-and-such a detachment carried out 40 patrols last month and 45 patrols this month, they're supposedly winning the war.

"But we're not schematic. We can slow down the military rhythm at times to concentrate on organization and political work. So when the crucial moment arrives, we're ready."

At the age of 30, Luis is a 10-year veteran of the civil war.

The armed forces and the U.S. government, which foots the bills, say professionalization and tactical reform of El Salvador's military — combined with the "strategic bankruptcy" of the insurgent army — have provided a light at the end of the long tunnel of civil war.

The conflict has killed an estimated 70,000 people, most of them civilians. The leftist Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, or FMLN, says it is fighting to do away with what it calls an "oligarchic" system that has enriched a few while leaving the vast majority of Salvadorans destitute.

The rebels also say they want to end what they consider U.S. domination of their country.

El Salvador's military command and U.S. Embassy point out that FMLN forces have not scored a resounding military success, such as the overrunning of a brigade, in two years.

Even so, combat continues daily in the countryside. The rebels have also struck in the capital and they have acquired new weapons to counter the government's air power — its single biggest tactical advantage.

By the government's count, its forces suffered a 40 percent increase in casualties in the 12 months ending May 31, compared with the previous year. Casualties inflicted on rebel forces were up 47 percent, according to the Defense Ministry in San Salvador.

The government has 56,000 men in three military branches and the militarized police forces. It has 72 helicopters and 63 fixed-wing aircraft — A-37 fighter-bombers and O-2 reconnaissance planes. The military receives $85 million annually from the United States.

The FMLN has about 7,000 combatants, down from 12,000 early in the decade but stable since about 1986, according to U.S. and Salvadoran figures. It relies heavily on "popular armament" — mines, mortars, bombs and grenades devised of homemade explosives, scrap metal, nails, tape, twine and burlap.

The rebels reportedly get some arms from Nicaragua and Cuba and receive some money from Communist governments in Eastern Europe.

Ortega discusses how to disband Contras

TELA, Honduras (AP) — Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega said Saturday that the only thing left to discuss regarding the U.S.-supported Contra guerrillas is how to disband them.

He and four other Central American presidents began a three-day meeting in this Caribbean resort to iron out the details of a regional peace accord that seeks to dismantle the Nicaraguan rebels.

The five presidents appeared together on a stage to formally begin the talks. They made no statements during the ceremony.

Ortega's comments came a day after he signed an agreement with his domestic opposition that calls for disbanding the Contra rebel force in Honduras in exchange for electoral and political reforms.

"President Bush will have to accept reality, and the reality is that the people of Central America are tired of war. We want peace because Central Americans are dying, not Americans, and they should respect our decisions," said Ortega as he arrived for the meeting.

Ortega said the United States should take charge of disbanding the Contras and that the final issue to be settled was "how to get the Contras out peacefully and in an orderly manner," Ortega said.

Although the United States halted arms supplies to the Contras in 1988, it is still providing non-lethal aid to guerrillas and family members camped in the Honduran mountains near the Nicaraguan border.

The Central American presidents agreed at a February summit in El Salvador to resettle the Contras, but deferred considering details until this meeting.

The conference will also see the diplomatic debut of Salvadoran President Alfredo Cristiani of the right-wing Arena party, who replaced Jose Napoleon Duarte on June 1.

Cristiani has indicated he wants to tie dismantling of the Contras to elimination of the leftist rebels who have waged civil war in El Salvador for nine years. U.S. and Salvadoran officials say Nicaragua helps supply those guerrillas.

"We have been willing to negotiate with them since June 1," Cristiani said upon his arrival.

Salvadoran rebels say the commission he has named to meet with them has no authority and would only give the appearance of negotiations. Members of the Christian Democratic Party and other opposition groups met with rebel leaders in Mexico City last week and were to report to Cristiani.

Nicaragua opposes linking the conflicts in the two countries.

In Washington, Nicaraguan rebel leaders who met with President Bush said demobilization of their force must be tied to democratic reforms by the Sandinista government.

The U.S. government in recent days has tried to urge Central American governments not to abandon the Contras until general elections scheduled in that country in February.

Asked about the U.S. position, Guatemalan President Vinicio Cerezo said on arrival, "What is important is what the Central American presidents decide." He said his government was neutral on the issue.

"We are the ones responsible for finding answers to conflicts that divide our peoples," said President Oscar Arias of Costa Rica. Arias won the Nobel Peace prize for his efforts to reach a regional accord in 1987.

The U.S. government is not attending the talks, but Barry Sklar, a staff member of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, said he hopes to discuss a possible regional economic aid package with the leaders.

The leaders also hope to agree on a plan that would allow U.N. forces to patrol the Honduras-Nicaragua and Honduras-El Salvador borders. The United Nations has expressed its willingness to send peacekeeping forces to the region.

Honduran President Jose Azcona Hoyo said earlier that he would present a plan to demobilize and resettle the 11,000 Contras and 12,000 dependents in his country along the Nicaraguan border. The Contras have worn out their welcome in Honduras, where most citizens would like to see the insurgents go home.

Since last year, a cease-fire has been in effect between Nicaragua and the U.S.-backed rebels. But the two sides have yet to settle on a lasting peace.

The Contras have been fighting the leftist Sandinistas since 1981, alleging the government betrayed the goals of the 1979 revolution that ousted dictator Anastasio Somoza in 1979.

El Salvador's civil war has left 70,000 dead, while 50,000 people have been killed in Nicaragua's conflict.

The peace talks are taking place in this steamy Caribbean resort, a collection of weather-beaten, wood-frame houses 200 miles north of Tegucigalpa.

Bolivian congress elects new president

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — Jaime Paz Zamora, the third-place finisher in May elections, was elected president of Bolivia following an all-night debate in Congress, officials said today.

Zamora

Paz Zamora garnered 98 of the 156 votes after former dictator Gen. Hugo Banzer Suarez cast his support to the 50-year-old. Paz Zamora, head of the Social Democratic Movement of the Revolutionary Left, had been arrested by Banzer in 1974 and accused of trying to overthrow the government.

Luis Ossio Sanjines, an ally of Banzer and head of the Christian Democratic Party, was elected vice president.

Swearing-in ceremonies for the Bolivian leaders' four-year terms is scheduled for Sunday afternoon.

The opposition had held up balloting because of alleged voting irregularities in the May 7 election.

No candidate received a majority in the voting, so under Bolivia's Constitution, the Congress chose from the top three contenders.

Squeezed out by the Paz Zamora-Banzer alliance was Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozada of the governing Nationalist Revolutionary Movement.

Sanchez de Lozada had received 24 percent of the vote in May while Banzer, who ruled Bolivia from 1971-79, had 23 percent and Paz Zamora 18 percent.

The alliance with Banzer assured Paz Zamora of the votes to win the presidency with their two parties holding 79 of the congressional seats.

Bolivia has had more than 100 coups or revolutions since it gained its independence from Spain in 1825 and Sunday's inauguration will be the first time in 25 years that a government has completed its term and transferred power to a democratically elected president.

The alliance between Paz Zamora's party and Banzer's conservative Nationalist Democratic Action could be an uneasy partnership.

Paz Zamora was jailed for six months after he was arrested in 1974 and accused of trying to overthrow Banzer.

Announcement of the alliance came as a surprise to many Bolivians and led to a run on banks. In two days depositers withdrew the equivalent of $13 million from the banks.

Paz Zamora met with business and banking officials Thursday and told them his government would maintain a free market economy and the current stabilization program.

President Victor Paz Estenssoro implemented tough austerity measures when he took over in 1985. They included a restructuring of state companies, firing 23,000 government-employed miners, a tenfold increase in the price of gasoline and a wage freeze. The measures lowered inflation from 24,000 percent in 1985 to an estimated 6 percent for 1989. Paz Estenssoro is Paz Zamora's uncle.

U.S. Ambassador Robert Gelbard said Friday, "We expect to have a very good relationship with this government and Paz Zamora has indicated to me his interest in attracting foreign investments to Bolivia."

Paz Zamora is the son of a career army officer.

He attended a Roman Catholic seminary in Argentina but then went to Belgium.

When he returned to Bolivia in 1971 he founded the Movement of the Revolutionary Left and advocated armed struggle to overthrow Banzer, who seized power in a coup in 1971.

After he was released, Paz Zamora went into exile abroad. He came back to Bolivia in 1977 and resumed his political activities.

In 1980, his party formed a coalition with the Communist Party and the Leftist Revolutionary Nationalist Movement under the leadership of Hernan Siles Zuazo and the coalition won the election.

Panama closes schools after university shooting

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega's government ordered schools closed Friday after government plainclothesmen fired on demonstrators at the national university, killing one student and wounding at least six.

An Education Ministry statement said public and private schools were being closed nationwide "until further notice...for the safety of students, to preserve the peace of mind of their families and peace throughout the community in general."

The order did not affect the University of Panama, but it announced earlier it was closing down its campus to protest the Thursday night shootings.

University officials in a statement Friday accused Panama's Defense Forces of acting "brutally against unarmed students" and for "the excessive and indiscriminate use of toxic gases and shotguns."

In a veiled reference to foes of Noriega who have been pressing for his ouster, the Education Ministry statement accused "those who have been advocating violence and confrontations among Panamanians" of encouraging the students to demonstrate.

An estimated 700,000 students were left without classes. About half of them were in Panama City and the port of Colon, located across the isthmus at the northern entrance of the Panama Canal.

Witnesses, speaking on condition of anonymity, said plainclothes members of the Defense Forces fired shotguns at a student protest.

Demonstrators were protesting an Organization of American States proposal to end Panama's political turmoil by holding a plebiscite Aug. 20.

The students and opposition parties insist that elections May 7, which their candidate Guillermo Endara won overwhelmingly, should be declared valid. The Noriega-controlled government annulled the elections, claiming fraud.

Noriega runs Panama through his command of the Defense Forces, which include both soldiers and police.

Student leaders said in a news release that Ecuador's foreign minister, Diego Cordovez, "was not welcome any more" in Panama because of the plebiscite proposal. Cordovez heads an OAS mission of diplomats trying to mediate here.

In July, the Washington-based OAS voted to give Cordova's mission until Sept. 1 to mediate a solution.

The United States has tried to oust Noriega since he was indicted in February 1988 on U.S. drug trafficking charges, but trade and economic sanctions have failed to budge the general.

Noriega denies the charges and says the United States is attacking him as part of a plan to abrogate the Panama Canal treaties, which call for the canal to be turned over to Panama at the end of the century.

Early Friday, about 200 U.S. soldiers stationed at the canal staged the latest of a series of military shows of strength.

The Southern Command said the five-hour exercise involved combat-equipped soldiers, backed by helicopters and armored vehicles, established "blocking positions" at Fort Amador, which the United States shares with the Panamanian Defense Forces.

The positions were established at the intersections near the Amador Officers Club and the Golf Club, the command said — only a block or so from Noriega's Fort Amador office.

WORLD IN BRIEF

U.S. diplomats visit Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Secretary of State James Baker and three other members of President Bush's cabinet are traveling to Mexico on Sunday on a visit viewed here as a milestone in U.S.-Mexico relations that have hit a high point in recent months.

Mexican officials say they hope the meeting of the U.S.-Mexico Binational Commission will ratify the "spirit of Houston" and provide a platform for further progress.

Aides say Bush and President Carlos Salinas de Gortari hit it off well at a meeting last November in Houston, when both were presidents-elect.

The rank and size of the U.S. delegation alone are a good sign for the meeting being held here Sunday and Monday, high-ranking Mexican officials said on condition their names not be revealed.

The binational commission has not met for 2 1-2 years, although meetings were supposed to be held every six months. Mexican and U.S. officials blamed the lapse on 1988's being a presidential election year in both nations.

Although relations between the Salinas and Bush administrations are going well, similar honeymoon periods at the beginning of recent Mexican presidencies have ended in bitterness, recrimination and nationalist anger.

"In the past, we have sometimes had a dialogue of the deaf," said a top Salinas administration official.

The United States is sending Baker, Attorney General Richard Thornburgh, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady and Commerce Secretary Robert A. Mosbacher.

Other top officials include FBI director William Sessions, Drug Enforcement Administration head John C. Lawn, Environmental Protection Agency head William Reilly and U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills.

The Mexican delegation will be led by the Foreign Minister, Fernando Solana, and five other cabinet ministers, chief among them Treasury Secretary Pedro Aspe.

Civil war news hot seller

LONDON (AP) — American newspapers that recorded events from the Civil War were the hottest sellers Friday at an auction of old newspapers, the auctioneers Bonhams said.

The newspapers were sold by an anonymous English collector who said his family was "being driven bananas by all my newspapers all over the house," but that he was so avid he was keeping newspapers mentioning the auction.

About 300 newspapers were sold for a total of about $5,000, said auctioneer Duncan Chilcott.

"The trend from the sale would suggest that there's a great market for 17th century and 18th century newspapers and an even better market for American newspapers," Chilcott said.

"American newspapers describing the Civil War, they were most eagerly sought after, they were the ones we had the most competition for from the bidders," he said.

The oldest newspaper in the sale, The Perfect Diurnall, of Aug. 28, 1648, fetched the highest price, about $246.

China denies Deng is ill

BEIJING (AP) — The Foreign Ministry issued a terse statement Saturday denying a Japanese news report that 84-year-old senior leader Deng Xiaoping is seriously ill.

"The report is sheer fabrication with ulterior motives," the statement said in full.

The ministry rarely comments on news reports about major Chinese leaders, particularly Deng, who repeatedly has been rumored ill, dying or dead over the last few years. However, the latest report came weeks after Deng purged his No. 2 man, Communist Party General Secretary Zhao Ziyang, setting the stage for a power struggle after his death.

The report by Japan's Jiji Press quoted unidentified Chinese sources as saying Deng's health deteriorated seriously a few days ago and emergency medical personnel were sent to care for him at a coastal resort east of Beijing.

Earthquake takes 116 lives

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Rescue teams have found 19 more bodies, bringing to 116 the death toll from an earthquake that triggered landslides in the country's easternmost province, a government official said today.

The Social Affairs Ministry official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said rescue workers retrieved the bodies Friday from under demolished houses and masses of earth in the village of Soba, in the mountainous district of Kurima.

Soba was the hardest hit of three villages, including Holuan and Pasema, nearest the quake's epicenter 219 miles south of the provincial city of Jayapura, 2,188 miles east of Jakarta.

India works to restore Angkor Wat

International community plans to join movement

By DENIS D. GRAY

ANGKOR, Cambodia (AP) — With the shadows of war receding from ancient Angkor, the international community is mobilizing to rescue from decay one of civilization's greatest artistic achievements.

The Hindu and Buddhist edifices, dating from the ninth through 12th centuries, have been assaulted by jungle growth, monsoon rains and thieves as armies clashed around them over the past two decades.

India, the only non-communist nation to recognize the pro-Hanoi government in Phnom Penh, is already restoring the colossal Angkor Wat, the crowning jewel, but hundreds of other temples and architectural relics from Cambodia's Golden Age remain untended.

Security has been a major problem in recent years, with the Khmer Rouge and other anti-government guerrillas within striking distance of Angkor. And diplomatic isolation of the Phnom Penh government has prevented most international assistance.

While the guerrillas remain a potential threat, there is optimism that a peaceful political solution may be reached following the promised withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia in September.

"We are waiting for the first available opportunity to restore the magnificent monuments," says Mahfuz Anam, regional spokesman for the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. "UNESCO's director general is hopeful of a political solution."

Although it is restricted from working with the Phnom Penh government, which the United Nations does not recognize, UNESCO this spring quietly dispatched two experts for a preliminary, on-site diagnosis of Angkor's ills.

UNESCO may help organize an international symposium on Angkor and eventually launch a worldwide fund-raising campaign such as those which helped resurrect Egypt's pyramids, Indonesia's Borobudur temple and the ancient north African city of Carthage.

"Everyone wants to get involved in Angkor," said one Western aid official in Phnom Penh.

Ung Von, who heads Cambodia's conservation effort here, says the Poles will arrive late this year to begin work on the Bayon, an intricate, 800-year-old shrine of mysterious galleries and 54 stone towers sculpted with the faces of smiling dieties.

The wondrous structure is currently looked after by two old sweepers and guarded by two teen-age policemen. Its eastern gate caved in like a deck of cards several years ago. Green algae and white fungi mar its friezes of ancient battles and court life.

The French, who hacked Angkor out of the jungle in the last century and became its most expert overseers, refuse to provide valuable archival material to Phnom Penh but have asked to restore the 11th-century Baphuon, Ung Von says.

The Indians are midway through their six-year, $10 million project to renew Angkor Wat, a massive representation of the Hindu cosmos in stone which rises in three successive flights to five central towers that have become the symbol of Cambodia.

The work by 13 Indians and more than 400 Cambodians has included cleaning the friezes, dismantling and reassembling the gateways, and the excavation of ditches to allow drainage of water within the moat-girded complex.

The work on Angkor Wat's nearly 1,440 square yards of friezes is painstaking. Brushes are used to scrub off moss, insect nests and clinging vegetation, the latter sometimes requiring injections of weed killer in a syringe. Other chemicals are used to attack fungi, micro-vegetable matter and corrosive bat droppings before a protective coating is applied.

Heavy machinery is limited to the occasional use of a borrowed crane while obtaining construction supplies like cement is a logistical nightmare. Work proceeds with the use of hands, hoes and bamboo baskets, not unlike the way Angkor Wat was probably constructed.

Some old, expert craftsmen who had worked with the French have returned but Ung Von says local expertise was decimated during the Khmer Rouge rule and by lack of training since. Some also criticize the Indians.

"They need our help," Ung Von says. "Sometimes they don't have the experience. They have done their job well but their technique is different from the French."

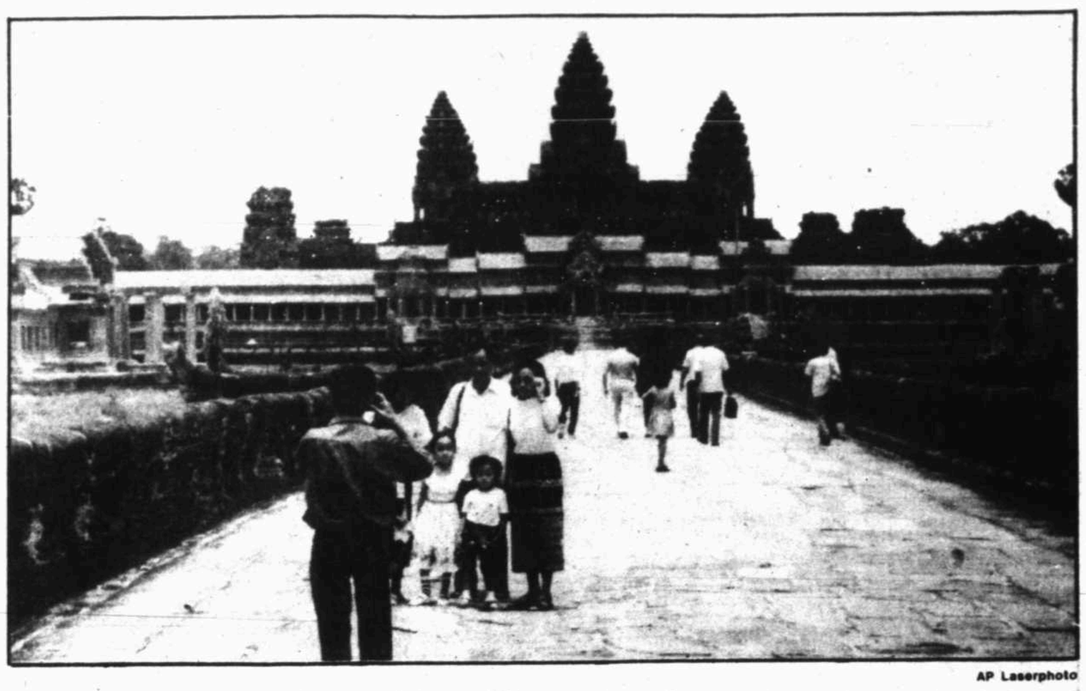

Some Cambodians and Westerners say privately that the Indian team uses inferior chemicals, is reassembling galleries in a way that allows water seepage, and is stubbornly clinging to some techniques abandoned by international leaders in conservation.

But an expert, independent evaluation of their work has yet to be made and the Cambodians are publicly reluctant to criticize because they have made a major political issue of non-communist India coming to their aid.

The Indian restoration, which began in 1987, was the first meaningful attempt to keep the rapid deterioration at bay since French archaeologist Bernard-Phillipe Groslier was expelled from Angkor by the Khmer Rouge in 1972.

Angkor has fought against the elements since being abandoned in the 15th century as the capital of a once-powerful Cambodian empire. The Khmer Rouge occupied the area during their war against the U.S.-backed government in Phnom Penh and did nothing to restore Angkor during their brutal time in power.

Since 1979, the pro-Hanoi government has made efforts but with very few resources and expertise. Now, says Ung Von, there are prospects for real progress.

Flowering again

Ellen West, a retired Midland teacher, now operates an artificial flower and home accessory shop. She is one of several ex-teachers now working in other fields.

Retired teachers 'enroll' in varied new activities

By BRIAN PEARSON

The smell of scent chips hangs in the air inside an organized jungle of colorful floral displays as a cassette player somewhere softly churns out piano music over the loudspeakers.

Perhaps the only thing that could bring the ambiance of Ellen West's heaven on earth a little closer to her perception of the real thing is a lava-rock water fountain babbling in a corner of her store.

Owning SonSilkS artificial flower and home accessory shop in Midland has been one of Ms. West's rewards for 24 years of service as a fine arts teacher, an equally gratifying experience, she said.

Ms. West, 56, does not call her retirement from Midland Independent School District this year a throwing of the towel of life into the ring of relative inactivity.

"I've re-tired," she said, comparing her new lifestyle to a retreaded tire. "That's all I've done."

EVERY YEAR between 30 and 40 MISD teachers officially hang up their chalk sticks and retire. And each one has a different version of what "re-tiring" is all about.

For Ms. West, who had spent almost half her life teaching the arts to eager elementary school children, it meant going full throttle with her store.

"I still see them everywhere," she said of her former pupils. "It's fun when they come in with a smile on their face and say, 'You were my teacher.' "

Ms. West's business started as a "fun and games" venture in 1966, when she and a friend arranged artifical flowers for homes and parties. The business grew and eventually was moved to the 2050 W. Ohio Ave. store about a year ago.

But at about the age when Ms. West decided to spread her wings and leave the education nest, Johnnie Shelton had just alighted into the classroom.

With a teaching certificate fresh from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, Ms. Shelton took on special education classes at Lee Freshman High School in 1976. She was 57.

Years ago, she attended one year of college after she graduated from high school but dropped out to raise her children. She worked as a maid and beautician before earning her teaching degree.

AFTER 14 YEARS as a MISD educator, Ms. Shelton, 71, retired this year.

"It was time," she said of leaving education. "I loved my job, but I thought the kids would appreciate having a younger teacher."

Ms. Shelton is far from hunkering down in a cozy chair and letting the rest of the world race by. She recently returned from a trip to Jamaica and said she wants to take flying lessons.

Former elementary school home economics teacher Marie Shannon joined her husband in retirement this year and is basically relaxing and "enjoying life." Her husband, Lee Roy, retired as an MISD elementary school principal three years ago.

After 32 years in education, 28 of them spent in MISD, Mrs. Shannon, 60, has finally found time to spend visiting her grandchildren, taking daily walks and sewing.

"I'm doing some things I didn't have time to do previously," she said. "But I still don't feel retired yet."

About the only thing slated on the Shannon's agenda are vague plans to travel, Mrs. Shannon said.

SAM VOLPE, 59, a Lee High School math teacher and track coach who left the district in 1985, has had the best of both worlds in his retirement. He works and plays.

While visiting his daughter in Austin in August 1987, Volpe stopped by the Internal Revenue Service office on a whim and took a tax examiner's test.

From January through May for the past two years, Volpe has lived with his daughter and spent the work days pouring through tax returns, readying them for the computer.

When he is not wielding a fiscal hammer for the IRS, Volpe paints and refinishes furniture "for whoever needs any work done" and travels. He recently returned from a trip to Europe with his wife.

"I wanted the freedom to do what I wanted, when I wanted to and while I was still young enough to do it," Volpe said of his retirement.

Marjolaine Lewis, MISD employee benefits specialist, said that while some teachers pursue other careers after education, a majority dive into play relaxation.

A few, though, still can't resist the thrill of teaching, Ms. Lewis said. Retired educators are allowed to come back and work as substitute teacher for up to 120 days a year.

While some teachers, like Volpe, retire while the getting is good and the legs are still young, others have burned out on education or must leave for medical reasons, Ms. Lewis said.

MISD SEES a constant flow of between 30 and 40 teachers a year retire, with a majority leaving between the ages of 55 and 60, Ms. Lewis said. There is no mandatory retirement age, she added.

The usual number of retirees doubled in 1986, when the state forced teachers to take the Texas Examination of Certified Administrators and Teachers competency test, Ms. Lewis said. Although a the passing percentage statewide was in the high 90s, some chose to retire early rather than face the TECAT, she said.

And with state-mandated improvements in retirement benefits for the coming year, MISD may see a higher-than-usual number of retirements again, Ms. Lewis said.

Retired teachers now get two percent of their salary for every year of work, meaning that for 30 years of service they get 60 percent of their best three-year average salary for the rest of their lives.

But retirees get only a percentage of that if they either retire before age 60 or have limited experience.

A teacher who retires at 55 years old and has between 20 and 24 years of experience only receives 70 percent of their 2 percent-a-year formula benefits. A 59-year-old educator with similar experience gets 94 percent.

State lawmakers this year improved the benefits requirements, under which the 55-year-old would receive 90 percent and the 59-year-old would get 98 percent. The percentage was raised for all experience levels between 20 and 29 and ages 55 and 59.

Did Odessa foster draw suit publicity?

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

In a move to get Midland-based Monahans Draw trial cases shuffled out of Midland, Odessa "fully and eagerly" participated in the publication of "so-called adverse publicity," Midland lawyer Paul Bohannon said in a court brief which argued for keeping the cases in Midland.

"It is inappropriate for someone to stir up publicity knowing that it is attempting to create grounds for change of venue," Bohannon wrote.

As it turned out, Judge Pat Baskin of Midland's 142nd Texas District Court decided to keep the Anderson-Gay lawsuits against the city of Odessa in the Midland court system. His ruling appeared contrary to Odessa's contention that anti-Odessa sentiment in Midland would preclude a fair trial in Midland.

In denying Odessa's request for moving the two cases out of Midland, the judge, however, did not elaborate on his ruling.

But his ruling appeared influenced by a Texas civil statute that discourages a change of courtroom setting if motions for a change of venue are not timely filed.

THE STATUTE says that "The court, on motion filed and served concurrently with or before the filing of the answer, shall transfer an action to another county of proper venue if ... an impartial trial cannot be had in the county in which the action is pending." However, the statute states, a change of venue may be effected if "written consent of the parties to transfer to any other county is filed at any time."

Despite wording of the statute, Odessa City Attorney Joel Roberts maintained that certain "controlling rules" do not require that a motion for change of venue be filed "prior to or contemporaneously with the answer."

Bohannon held that Odessa filed motions for a change of venue after the defendant, the city of Odessa, filed its answer to the formal complaints of Midland farmers George Anderson Sr. and his son, George Anderson Jr., and by Midland businesswoman Louise Gay.

In representing Anderson and son and Ms. Gay, Bohannon noted that Odessa had ample time to make the change-of-venue motions before Odessa's legal counsel filed responses to the allegations.

Joel Roberts and Jim O'Leary, who are Odessa's attorneys in the dispute, reasoned that publicity deemed adverse over Monahans Draw and other controversial matters between the neighboring cities would inhibit a fair and impartial trial by Midland jurors.

Bohannon disagreed.

"Odessa did not meet its burden of showing a widespread form of prejudice which could not be ferreted out in the jury-selection process," he reasoned.

CONTROVERSIES THAT fuel anti-Odessa prejudice, Odessa has contended, include the Midland-Odessa football rivalry, the Monahans Draw flooding, the lingering disputed location of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, and the deletion of the place name "Odessa" from the regional airport, now called Midland International Airport, owned and operated by Midland.

Midland had wanted the UTPB campus to be located on rangeland midway between the two cities and just south of the airport. Odessa politicked and got the campus located on Odessa's east side in the early 1970s. Subsequently, Midland withdrew Odessa's name from the airport.

And the stereotyping of Midland as a "white-collar" town and Odessa as a "blue-collar" town apparently has caused some contentions between the two cities.

The bantered statute does provide for moving a case from one jurisdiction to another "at any time" if the adversary parties to a lawsuit agree on a change of venue.

That was not the case here. But such was the case in a Monahans Draw case, filed in 1983 by Midland farmer Lee Bell. In that dispute, the litigation was moved to Stanton under a "friendly" agreement. And Bell came out the winner by $454,000 when the jury awarded him actual and exemplary damages. Odessa is appealing the verdict.

The essence of Bell's stance is similar to those of Anderson and son and Ms. Gay.

Bell charged that effluent — treated wastewater — discharged by two Odessa-operated sewage-treatment plants into Monahans Draw flooded his cotton fields and land reserved for residential development. Bell alleged that the effluent intermingled with rainwater to cause the flooding, which cut into cotton production and discouraged residential development.

HIS ACREAGE is southeast of Midland.

Anderson and son, whose farmland is downstream from Bell's farm, are claiming that the Odessa effluent floods their land. Ms. Gay contends that her horse-stabling and trucking operations were flooded out by the draw's overflow.

Odessa, which denied any liability in the flooding, has noted that the city holds Texas Water Commission (TWC) permits to discharge effluent into the draw.

However, a provision of the permits says that the effluent is not to infringe — trespass — on private property.

In an oral deposition taken in June, Odessa Mayor Don Carter cited the TWC permits.

"We felt — and we still feel that way — that our discharge that was permitted by TWC was what was allowed for us to discharge into Monahans Draw," Carter said.

However, Carter noted that water in West Texas "should not be wasted." As a result, Odessa officials have "explored a number of areas in an attempt to see what would be the most economical and most feasible method in which to reuse that water rather than discharge it in the Monahans Draw."

CARTER SAID the city has considered constructing pipelines to the north to furnish irrigation water to three golf courses, to the University of Texas of the Permian Basin (UTPB) campus, and to three or four city parks. The effluent would be used instead of "using potable water or raw water."

Cost of running the lines northward to those sites in Odessa would be between $8 million and $12 million, Carter said.

In a similar move, the city of Midland has installed underground lines to divert its effluent from Midland Draw to the Spraberry area southeast of Midland. There, the treated wastewater is used for agricultural irrigation. The Spraberry route was taken after citizens in the Greenwood area complained of effluent overflowing the draw and flooding their land.

Prior to Carter's deposition and after Bell won the $454,000 judgment in Stanton, Carter was quoted that Odessa has "not inflicted any harm on the downstream landowners on the Monahans Draw."

Just how Midland County jurors will response to the Monahans Draw dispute in the Anderson-Gay cases may be determined in October when trial on the controversy is to held.

"It is about high time that a Midland County jury gets an opportunity to hear the facts of this case, which involves a sewer plant located in Midland County but owned and operated by the city of Odessa," Bohannon said last week.

Odessa's Joel Roberts said Odessa "will just go forward with the case" even though Odessa wanted the Anderson-Gay cases moved out of Midland. "We made the motion (for a change of venue) looking for a favorable ruling," Roberts said, "and we are disappointed that we didn't get a favorable ruling."

Orbison tribute planned at Wink

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Staff Writer

Few achieve the status of living legend, but Roy Orbison of the small West Texas town of Wink was one of them. A 1987 inductee into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, he along with a handful of other greats — Elvis Presley, Jerry Lee Lewis, Carl Perkins, Little Richard, Chuck Berry and others — helped give birth to a new musical form known as "rock and roll."

When he died last December at the age of 52, he was at the peak of a revitalized career with a handful of hit records and was recognized by rock fans around the world as a legend in his own time.

Now Roy Orbison's hometown of Wink is preparing to honor and remember him in the down-to-earth West Texas style he would have appreciated — with a barbecue, concert and reunion.

Maxie Watts, mayor of Wink, and chairman of the city of Wink Roy Orbison Memorial Committee says the town will be going all out on Saturday August 26 to produce a celebration that will be a lasting tribute to the singer whose three-octave voice range captured the hearts of music lovers for over three decades.

The concert will begin at 2 p.m. and last until 11 p.m., with barbecue plates and other food being served throughout the day. The event will be at the Wink High School football stadium, where Orbison often participated as a member of the Wildcat marching band.

Kenny Morrill, who portrays Roy Orbison in the Legends in Concert Show in Las Vegas, Reno and Lake Tahoe, will headline a Roy Orbison concert and tribute at Wink, Texas, August 26.

The concert is being produced without charge by Denis "Wemus" Grubb of Midland and will be headlined by Kenny Morrill, who portrays the West Texas singer in the Legends in Concert Show now performing in Las Vegas, Reno and Lake Tahoe.

Morrill, who bears an uncanny resemblance to Orbison and sounds so much like him that even close friends can hardly tell the difference, is not only donating his talent to the Orbison tribute, but has designated a portion of the earnings from an upcoming record to the establishment of the Roy Orbison Museum.

Horse racing sports a surprisingly active 'atmosphere'

Somehow I always figured horse racing would be one of those sports, not unlike soccer and water polo, that would simply come and go and leave no lasting impression on me.

Ott

Simply put, it has always struck me as a rather boring endeavor. You watch a race that in some cases lasts less than 60 seconds and then sit around for 20 minutes waiting for the next one to start. And this goes on all afternoon?

Give me a break, please. I need a sport with real action ... something where grown men jump on fumbles and physically attack the hated opposition. Horse racing simply is too quaint and civilized.

At least that's the way I always had it figured.

Predictably, I was wrong again.

After spending two recent afternoons "watching the ponies run," as we oldtimers like to say, I have become hooked on this sport favored by big-city businessmen as well as rugged cowboys who rarely leave the ranch. Suddenly, golf doesn't seem like so much fun. All things considered, I'd rather be at the track. Funny how things change. One day you're dreaming of Augusta National in April and the next day your mind is at Churchill Downs.

The reason for this quick turnaround?

I'm glad you asked. To sum up in one word, it's called "atmosphere."

There's something truly special about sitting at an open window in the Turf Club with a cigarette in one hand and a drink in the other. The temperature is a mild 68 degrees and a cool mountain breeze makes a light jacket a welcomed comfort. A young man wearing white trousers and a red blazer takes center stage and plays his trumpet, signalling that post time is nearing. The horses, with jockeys on board, strut before the crowd. Old men with wrinkled faces and deep, rusty tans can be heard saying things like, "No. 4 doesn't like this distance. Those odds are way out of line." Or, "No. 3, there, is carrying too much weight. I wouldn't put anything on him."

Which brings us to a most important factor of horse racing — betting. Not Pete Rose's brand of gambling, mind you, but rather a kinder and gentler form of betting — the "two dollars to show" version.

The idea of wagering — even at two dollars a race — can be downright exhilirating to the novice. A horse race becomes far more exciting when its outcome directly affects your pocketbook.

When the horses come down the home stretch and your hand-picked choice is a nose in the lead, the thrill can be overwhelming. You clench your fists and scream for the jockey to "bring her on home." If he does, your heart pumps wildly. If not, you slump in disappointment. Either way, though, the excitement is unmistakeable.

So the newcomer should be prepared. He needs to know "how" to pick the winners. After all, there's more to betting on the horses than meets the eye.

Now, you're probably thinking, "But, how do I accomplish that?"

I'll tell you how. You go with your gut feelings. Ignore what the so-called experts tell you and instead look for little subtleties about the horse you like — things such as the animal's name, the jockey's name and the owner's hometown.

Let's take the horse's name, as an example. Give it a good look. Is it catchy? Does it imply speed? Does it sound sissy? A horse named "Ready to Rumble," for example, was a big winner at Ruidoso last week. "Precious Memories," on the other hand, brought up the rear.

Why?

Their names. "Ready to Rumble" is bold and sounds fast. "Precious Memories" is a song that gets played at funerals.

That should tell you something right there. Funerals and horse racing don't mix.

Believe me, I know.

I had $10 on "Precious Memories."

Minorities clash on charter vote

DALLAS (AP) — When President John F. Kennedy planned to visit Dallas more than 25 years ago, advisors warned him about racial tensions dividing the city.

The tensions remain.

Dallas minorities say they fear police brutality, accuse the city of unfair housing practices and stage protests before a city council they say overly represents the white and the wealthy.

City leaders hope to defuse much of that tension in an Aug. 12 special election that could change the council's complexion. They say a proposed charter change to add two single-district seats, plus four others representing city quadrants, would give minorities a louder voice in local government.

Ray Hutchison, a white attorney who heads the Dallas Citizens Charter Review Committee, said the plan "provides tremendous opportunities for the racial and language minorities."

MINORITY OPINION is split, but many Hispanics and most black activists say the proposed plan would dilute, not bolster, their political clout. They also accuse the city of rushing the issue to the ballot in hopes of circumventing a court-ordered election plan.

It was to settle a lawsuit that the city scrapped its all-at-large council in 1975 for the current one comprised of eight single-district members and three at-large, including the mayor.

Today, minorities comprise more than half the city's population, but there are only two non-whites on the council.

Blacks — roughly 30 percent of the city's 985,000 residents — continually have elected black council members from the city's two, largely black districts. But Hispanics, who now make up more than 18 percent of the city, have elected only one Hispanic from a single-member district and one at-large member — neither currently on the council. The Asian and American Indian population, about 5 percent of the city, has no ethnic representative on the council.

The "10-4-1" proposal on the ballot would add two single districts and four quadrant representatives, leaving the mayor the only at-large member.

HUTCHISON BELIEVES most minorities support the charter change.

"I don't think there is that much racial division in Dallas," Hutchison said. "I think we have an image problem. I don't think Dallas is all that divided.

"I do think the issues of race have to be addressed," Hutchison said. "We have to take steps to correct that problem. But it defies me why the media listens to the vocal opposition to a 10-4-1 plan that gives minorities the greatest opportunity to achieve racial equality."

The charter review committee grew out of an interracial group, Dallas Together, appointed by Mayor Annette Strauss last year to help ease racial tensions.

AP Laserphoto

Pete Johnson, right, executive director of the Dallas chapter of the Southern Christian Leadership Council, is seen in a recent march for democracy. He doubts minorities in Dallas will gain city hall representation under a 10-4-1 charter amendment going before the voters Saturday.

Friction was growing over confrontations between minorities and police. Dallas officers had their deadliest year on record with five officers slain, and several blacks and Hispanics — some merely bystanders to crime — were shot by police. A congressional inquiry found no misuse of deadly force, but recommended police hire more minorities and study alternatives to force. The inquiry did little to calm minority fears.

Since then, protesters have marched the streets of Dallas, dumped tea in the City Hall pond, come chained and gagged to council meetings, locked arms and sung, "We Shall Overcome," to council members, and chased Mayor Strauss from the chambers.

"I've never seen our community more unified on any subject before," said Pete Johnson, executive director of the Dallas chapter of the Southern Christian Leadership Council, a civil rights group. "Not any black organization — not even the Black Chamber of Commerce — has come out in support of this plan."

Johnson, who's black, doesn't believe minorities would gain any representation under the 10-4-1 plan. And adding council seats that minorities might not win could dilute instead of strengthen their political power, he said.

m

WITH TWO seats out of 10 — excluding the mayor — blacks now make up a fifth of the council. They'd lose voting strength if they had only two sure seats out of 14 under the 10-4-1 plan, he said. "Percentage wise ... it's crazy. I've always thought it's because they think we can't add."

Some Hispanics believe they stand to gain under the proposed charter change.

"Right now we don't have a Chicano on the council. I think this plan will give us the chance to have probably two," said Rene Martinez, a minority business activist who leads the pro-change Vote Yes for Dallas campaign.

"It has been exciting to talk and touch the people in the barrios," Martinez said. "Our people want change."

The 10-4-1 plan is backed by the Dallas Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

But other Hispanics side with the black opponents.

Diana Orozco, co-chair of Dallas Citizens for Democracy, said she believes city leaders thought the ballot issue would help them answer a federal lawsuit challenging the city's voting system.

THE SUIT, filed last year by two black activists, is scheduled to be heard in September.

"I think that they (city leaders) felt that by placing the 10-4-1 Plan on the ballot that the federal judge would delay the matter, but that did not happen," Ms. Orozco said. "I think we're just dividing the city on this issue and wasting money when it is in the federal courts."

Her group believes the city needs at least 12 single-member districts to give minorities fair representation.

Johnson agrees the court case is likely to supersede whatever voters say Aug. 12, but fears that even a court ruling supporting minorities could backlash.

"I kind of think we need to force them back to the table," Johnson said of his hope to negotiate settlement of the issue. "If this thing ends up in the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court rules against us, it would set a frightening precedent."

Indians upset by funds spent on Treaty Oak

DALLAS (AP) — State Indian leaders say they are bitter about the huge sums of money being spent to save the historic Treaty Oak, explaining the promises of the treaty it represents have long since withered away.

The Indian leaders say the state's real commitment to honoring its agreements was shown when state legislators decided on May 29 to do away with the Texas Indian Commission.

Particularly rankling, the Indians say, was a foundry owner's suggestion that the tree be bronzed if it dies at a cost that could run about $1 million.

"I hate to see a tree die, but they're making such a big deal about what it stands for," said Ardena Rodriguez, a Cheyenne Indian who is president of the San Antonio Council of Native Americans. "And I read now that they want to bronze it if it dies. What a waste of money while we Indians are at the bottom of the heap."

The Treaty Oak was poisoned by the herbicide Velpar last spring and is teetering on the edge of death. Private citizens, including Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot, have donated thousands of dollars to save it.

"They're being so protective of this treaty tree and most don't know what it is — just folklore," said Greg Gomez of Dallas, an Apache who specializes in Indian child welfare cases for the U.S. government.

Traci Haney of Corpus Christi, a Seminole and Creek Indian who serves as a spokeswoman for the Coastal Bend Council of Native Americans, said Texans ignore matters important to Indians.

"Down here in Corpus, they're digging up 25, 30 bodies in our botanical gardens," Ms. Haney said. "They say they want to learn about Indians. Why can't they learn from people that are living instead of digging up our dead?"

Despite previous votes in the state legislature to keep the Texas Indian Commission, state Rep. Bruce Gibson, D-Godley, prevented a full House vote on a "sunset" bill on the agency in the closing days of the regular legislative session.

Gibson, chairman of the House Government Organization Committee, which prevented the bill's progress, said the Indian Commission should not be saved "just because we didn't want to upset a few Indian activists."

On the final day of the session, Gibson donned on his head a fake arrow while walking around the House floor.

He said the commission had become little more than "an advocacy agency for urban Indians."

But Indian leaders contend an estimated 62,000 Indians who live in Texas cities are without other help. They say only the 2,500 Indians who live on three small federally recognized reservations are eligible for most assistance in job training, housing and health care.

Raymond Apodaca of El Paso, who recently resigned as executive director of the commission, said the commission switched gears once federal officials increased their assistance to Texas reservations, and the state agency had been preparing to place its emphasis on the non-reservation population.

The Indian Commission was originally established for administering the state's trust responsibility for the Alabama-Coushatta reservation in Livingston, and the Tigua Indian reservation in El Campo. The agency also had some authority to provide assistance to the Texas Band of Kickapoo Indians.

Nadia Bice, the acting director of the Indian Commission, said the state agency has liquidated office property to stay alive until Aug. 31, the day it ceases to exist.

The agency is still getting calls for information and assistance, primarily from non-reservation Indians, and will try to help until it shuts down, Ms. Bice said.

"We were only asking $150,000 to $200,000 a year to operate. That's not very much money in the grand scheme," she said.

TRIBUTE

Morrill has drawn standing ovations from crowds at Las Vegas, Reno and Take Tahoe and has received rave reviews from entertainment writers who call his portrayal of Orbison "a show stopper and near perfection." Describing himself as an Orbison fan, Morrill says he has to psyche himself up and "loosen" his vocal cords by warming up in the wings immediately before going on stage.

The 48 year old musician says his intent is not to be Roy Orbison, but some of the fans get so into the performance that it is sometimes like the "twilight" zone. Morrill says he is looking forward to performing in Orbison's hometown and visiting with some of his family and friends in order to fine tune his performance.

Seven bands performing fifties rock and roll, country and rhythm and blues will also be on hand to add their services to the tribute. The bands are the Prime Time Band, The Sparkles, Billy Dee and the Debonaires, The Marbles, Showdown, Stuart-James Project, and the North Star Band.

"Everyone is contributing their time and talent to this tribute," says Grubb, a longtime friend and fan of Orbison, "because Roy Orbison truly was a legend and a tribute to West Texas. He was a clean-living, good ol' boy and he deserves a Texas-style tribute." Grubb said he would not be surprised if fans from overseas turned out for the Wink concert and tribute. "Orbison was even bigger in Europe than he is here in the U.S."

Also planned is a reunion in which Orbison fans will have an opportunity to mingle with friends, classmates and others who knew him best. The entire Roy Orbison family including his mother, wife, sons, and brother have been invited to the event as well as the original members of the Wink Westerners and Teen Kings, the first bands Orbison organized while still at Wink.

It is not known how many of the family members will be able to attend the tribute, but all have given their blessing to the event. Wesley Orbison, Roy's son and a singer in his own right, said he would welcome the opportunity to perform with the Wink Westerners or the Teen Kings.

The entire proceeds from the concert and barbecue will go towards building the Roy Orbison Museum in Wink and erecting a life size bronze in his memory. The Roy Orbison Museum will house memorabilia from the singers long and colorful career, and the sculptor who created the statue of Buddy Holly for the City of Lubbock, has already contacted the Memorial Committee about doing the Orbison statue. The town has already named a major street for Orbison.

"It is fitting and proper that we build a museum as a tribute to Orbison here in Wink, because he really was one of the greats and a credit to his hometown," said Maxie Watts.

Orbison spoke fondly of his life in this West Texas oil town. Said Orbison in an 1987 interview at a Midland concert: "Everybody has to be from somewhere, and I am from Wink. My fondest memory of Wink is that I always felt at home there. I can't explain it, but I always felt secure and peaceful at Wink."

Orbison's father was a oilfield driller and toolpusher, and moved frequently, following oil booms. "I didn't know if we would stay long in Wink when I arrived there in the fourth grade. But for some strange reason. I felt at home at Wink the minute I arrived," remembered Orbison, who was known in his youth more for his dead-eyed pool shooting talent than his ballad singing.

Orbison attended Wink schools from the fourth grade until graduation in 1955. He played French horn in the Wink High marching band and on weekends traveled to country and western clubs throughout the Permian Basin.

MC's revamped early registration plan gets rave reviews

By H.A. Tuck

Early registration for the 1989 fall semester heads into its second week tomorrow, with some rave reviews for the changes that were initiated as early registration started last week. Especially appreciated was the call-in registration which can be used by returning students.

Tuck

By using a special telephone number, former and returning students can identify the courses they wish to take; they are immediately assigned to specific sections or notified if those classes already are filled. Once all the courses are noted, a bill is printed and mailed to the student. If the bill is paid within five days, the student is enrolled. If payment isn't made, the student is deleted from the course rolls and those slots are opened again.

• • •

Students also can come in to the Administration Building for the next three weeks to register in person. This is necessary for students receiving financial aid, needing to talk with counselors, or working to complete a degree plan. Freshmen students who took pre-admission tests Thursday also may come in this week. Students should visit in alphabetical order: Monday, A-E; Tuesday, S-Z; Wednesday, M-R, and Thursday F-L. Hours are 7 a.m.-4:30 p.m.

And students who don't want to pay fees at this time can come in by the same alphabetical order to obtain time permits that will be used for registration on Aug. 30. Last day to obtain a time permit will be Aug. 24.

• • •

First-time students who didn't have their pre-entrance advisors' meeting and orientation last week should call 685-4501 this week to obtain a slot in the next freshman testing group on Aug. 10. After that time, the next freshman testing will be held on Aug. 29.

EDUCATION

Fans who've seen the Chaparral cheeleaders aren't surprised about all the honors they got at a recent camp. MC basketball fans especially have seen this bunch do all sorts of entertaining stunts.

And smaller folks who want to learn some of the Chaps' secrets can do so at a Cheerleading Camp that's going to be held this week at the Central YMCA. There will be sessions for those in first through third grades, fourth through sixth, and seventh through ninth. The camp guidelines and safety requirements are those established by the Greater Football League. Call Kathy Martin at 682-2551 for details.

• • •

Honors also have been given other MC folks concerned with athletics. The 1988-89 basketball poster received second place from the College Sports Information Directors Association. The poster was designed by Athletic Director Delnor Poss and this writer, using the artwork of Norman Johnson. The entry was judged against others from community colleges, NCAA Division III, and NAIA universities.

An Orchestra Camp begins tomorrow on campus. In cooperation with the Midland Inedependent School District's string program, the sessions will be held at the Allison Fine Arts Building for the next eight days from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

Dr. Grace Osadchuk, coordinator of fine arts for the MISD, is in charge of the camp.

The new Continuing Education bulletin is available now, listing all the offerings for fall. There are lots of new courses, plus many recurring favorites. Registration for fall classes is under way, so check out the bulletin, then send in your registration. You can obtain a bulletin from the office, if you don't have one. Registrations are being accepted, so don't delay too long or the ones you want might be full. Call 685-4518 for more information.

Parents' homework role explained

By ORLANDO RAMIREZ
Copley News Service

Getting the best out of your children begins at home. It's not enough to teach them manners, give them religious training and then let the teachers do the rest.

Today, parents and teachers are partners in learning excellence, and there are many areas where parents can help their kids learn better in school.

LEARN TO LEARN

Dr. Glenn Hogan of the Sylvan Learning Centers, a nationwide franchise for supplemental education, says, "Children are presented with a great deal of information in school, but many don't know how to 'process it.'"

Having trouble processing information isn't just a problem for kids. Given the amount of information available in various formats and media, processing all this input can be overwhelming even for adults.

Learning how to pick and choose which information is necessary and helpful is an important ability, and it is never too early to start teaching this skill to kids.

However, learning how to learn isn't just picking and choosing what you want to know, it's also organizing the material in useful ways and remembering it.

In McCall's magazine, Dr. Hogan suggests the following tips for students to learn how to learn:

When a lesson is introduced, try to grasp the main idea before focusing on the details.

When a teacher writes something on the board or repeats it, write it down.

Ask questions if you're confused.

Repeat the idea in your own words to see if you're getting it right.

Take notes.

These may seem like commonsense suggestions, but many of these study habits are not learned until high school or college. The sooner these habits are instilled in youngsters, the quicker they will be able to use them to their benefit.

DOING HOMEWORK

All fine and good, you say, but I can't get Junior to even do his homework. Variations of the following scenario have been played out in your home as well as thousands across the land every school night of the year.

"When are you going to start your homework?"

"After this show's over."

"Now!"

"I don't really have any."

"What does that mean?"

"I left my books at school."

Dr. Robert R. Butterworth, a psychologist who has done much research on the subject, the parent/child dynamic follows this pattern: Parents start out concerned, get upset when the child doesn't meet their expectations, then calm down and let the child do what he or she wants.

Breaking this cycle requires discipline, not only from the student, but from the parents, too. By nature children will constantly test their limits. It is up to adults to set those limits and maintain them as well as possible, always keeping the right amount of flexibility so the child's creative nature isn't squelched because of an overly strict regimen.

Lee Canter and Lee Hausner, authors of "Homework Without Tears" (Perennial Library), suggest the following guidelines to create a successful homework schedule.

Set up a proper study area. It is important that students have a quiet place to work. This can't be accomplished when there are too many distractions — television, toys, stereo, telephone, other siblings — to allow them to concentrate on the task at hand. Eliminate these distractions as much as possible.

Choosing the appropriate location is important. If the child's bedroom has too many distractions, then the kitchen table or a desk in a quiet area of the living room may be suitable.

Create a work space with pens, papers, dictionaries and other study aids to define the area's purpose. If that's not possible, create a kit, maybe a box or book bag, to carry those items from bedroom to workplace each evening.

Homework must be done on schedule. Kids today are busy not just with school but also with all manner of extracurricular activity, such as judo or dance classes, religious instruction or sports. Homework must fit into that schedule, too.

Canter and Hausner suggest arranging a "Daily Homework Time," a preplanned period when your child must do his or her homework. They suggest that you schedule the time with your child, then make him or her understand that getting the homework done is top priority. No television or playing with friends until it is finished.

Children must do their own homework. If you step in and help your children finish their homework because "it's too hard," you may be doing them a disservice. By stepping in, you deprive your children of the learning experiences that build confidence. Remember, they learn from their mistakes.

It may be painful for you as a parent to see your children struggle, but the best you can do is offer encouragement and reinforcement. Encouraging them to work alone fosters the independent spirit necessary for success later in life.

Motivate your children to do their best. Building your child's confidence is perhaps the most important thing you do as a parent, and learning to motivate by praise rather than threat is the best tool.

In this case, Hausner and Canter say that it's important to be consistent in your praise and to explain specifically what you found worthy of praise in their homework. When praise doesn't seem enough, the authors suggest that setting up a system of rewards can also be helpful.

Although these guidelines may be difficult to implement at once, it should be remembered that children like routine. Once the program is in place, it will be easier for your young scholar to focus on his or her homework without undue stress.

To Bush, school choice 'promising idea'

By JILL LAWRENCE
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON — If President Bush had his druthers, all parents would have the right to choose the public school their child attends. But it's a controversial vision that makes some people nervous.

With little money available to sink into education, Bush is promoting concepts that may help him fulfill his campaign pledge to be the "education president" without making new demands on the federal treasury — choice foremost among them.

At a White House workshop held before he took office, Bush called public school choice "the single most promising idea" in education today. And Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos refers to choice as the cornerstone of education reform.

Against this backdrop of high-level exhortation, scores of districts and state legislatures across the country are enacting or at least discussing various types of open enrollment plans.

Some, like Minnesota's pioneering plan, allow parents to choose schools in any district in the state while others, such as a highly successful East Harlem, N.Y., program, are confined to a single district. Some plans rely heavily on magnet schools. Some provide transportation and others do not.

A MAJOR DEFEAT occurred in New Mexico when a state Senate committee killed a statewide choice plan. But setbacks have been the exception, not the rule.

At least two states, Arkansas and Iowa, have followed Minnesota's lead and enacted open enrollment programs allowing students to attend any school in the state. Nearly two dozen states this year were studying or considering similar comprehensive choice proposals or narrower ones that apply to dropouts, upperclassmen or at-risk students.

In a series of steps designed to fuel the movement, Cavazos appointed a special adviser and task force to promote and evaluate choice projects. He said he would hold regional conferences on choice strategies and give top priority to choice projects in awarding education innovation grants.

The theory behind public school choice is that it gives parents more control over their children's education and at the same time creates competition that will theoretically shake up and improve bad schools.

But reactions among educators and even parents have been mixed. Some predict logistical nightmares and soaring transportation costs; others wonder if it is possible to ensure equity under an open enrollment system — whether some inner-city schools will be virtually abandoned to those least able to take advantage of their new options.

"It's a very complicated issue," Harvard education professor Sara Lawrence Lightfoot said recently. "We have to think about making knowledge about schools available to everyone."

Lightfoot said the concern is that better educated, higher status people will have more information and make better choices for their children. She described a scenario where "the brighter, more capable, more affluent people are drawn to a certain setting. The cream is taken from the milk and the others are left behind."

LEADERS OF THE two teacher unions have expressed cautious optimism about school choice, provided there are safeguards to make sure deprived children are not further penalized. Some of the strongest reservations are found among administrators and school board presidents.

A survey of the board presidents earlier this year found that only 36 percent believed parents should be able to select their child's school; that compares to 71 percent of the public who supported the idea in a 1987 Gallup poll.

"In essence, the secretary's approach would do the least for those who have the least," charged Richard Miller, executive director of the American Association of School Administrators, after Cavazos had announced his choice initiatives.

In a speech this year to newspaper editors, Cavazos made a special point of saying any public school choice program must be "very, very sensitive to equity in the system" by upgrading ghetto schools and making transportation available to poor students who opt to go elsewhere.

If schools are unacceptable, he said, states should take them over.

UT Longhorns may invade Austin hotel

AUSTIN (AP) — As many as 100 University of Texas students may live in a luxury downtown hotel while renovations are completed at their dormitory, the Austin-American Statesman reported Saturday.

Work on the $10 million renovation on the 29-story, privately owned Dobie Center and Mall at the Austin campus probably won't be completed when students return to school Aug. 27, said John Grasso, Dobie director of resident programs.

Grasso said from 50 to 100 Dobie-dormers will probably bunk for several weeks in the Radisson Plaza Hotel, an upscale hotel which boasts of spending $20,000 furnishing each room and offers a swimming pool, Jacuzzi and work-out room.

The students affected — the last ones to reserve Dobie rooms — have been advised of the possibilities and "most of them are pretty enthusiastic," he said.

Juan Garcia, Radisson Plaza's director of sales, said the contract had not been signed yet, but added the hotel has "good feelings about it.'

"Enough preparations are being made to make sure it's a smooth transition," Garcia said.

While the hotel surroundings might appear lush for many college students, the Dobie offers much the same.

The largest private dorm in the United States houses close to 1,000 students, has a pool, weight room, game room, two saunas and is installing hot tubs. Also being added this fall is a computer room.

MC's cheerleaders win top honors at camp

From Staff Reports

Midland College captured top honors at a recent National Cheerleaders Association camp held at Trinity Valley Community College. The Chaparral squad was chosen for the Award of Excellence, Spirit Award, top evaluations, and two individual All-American selections during the week-long camp.

The Chaps were one of 11 community college cheerleader squad from four states which attended the camp.

At the week's conclusion, Midland College was given the Award of Excellence as the most outstanding squad for its tumbling, stunts, cheers, and jumps. MC also was voted by the other groups to recieve the NCA Spirit Award, exemplifying the best qualities of a professional cheerleader squad. This qualifies Midland College to participate in the NCA national cheerleader championships in January.

The Chaparrals also received superior evaluations three of the four days and an excellent evaluation on the other day. The group also took a second place trophy for its performance of a school fight song.

Kelli Nicks and Jerry Mauldin, both sophomore members of the MC squad, were selected for NCA All-American honors. Only three of the 120 cheerleaders attending the camp were named as All-Americans. Mauldin is serving as captain of the MC squad for the second year.

Other returning members of the squad are Maria "Spud" de la Rosa, Rhonda Neagele, Eddie Rodriquez, Steven Cole, Randy Fulton, and Jennifer Lynch. New on the squad this season are Charlesanne Gardner, Christy Mires, Karlis Gruzins, Steve Williams and Mike Burnett.

"This is the first time we had attended an NCA camp that was planned exclusively for community colleges," noted Betty Murrah, sponsor and coach for the Chaparrals, "Many of the topics are the same, but we also have some unique differences from universities."

The Chap cheerleaders will conduct cheerleading camp at the Midland Central YMCA Aug. 7-11. Sessions are scheduled from 9 a.m. to 12 noon, with separate instruction for grades one through three, four through six and seven through nine.

For camp information, contact Kathy Martin at 682-2551.

News simulations TV's latest danger

Television news is venturing into dangerous waters by using actors to simulate news characters who were unavailable for the cameras. Unfortunately, this latest twist in the television news industry is merely a part of what has become a trend throughout journalism to spice up news and present something to viewers or readers that the competition doesn't have.

The most recent violator was ABC-TV News, which used actors to show how a U.S. diplomat, Felix Bloch, reportedly passed a briefcase to a known Soviet agent. The bizarre story even dragged President George Bush into the limelight and he commented on the case before the cameras. Meanwhile the FBI and various reporters were tailing Bloch as closely as his shadow in his Washington, D.C., neighborhood and elsewhere.

The purpose, of course, was to catch Bloch in an act on film that no other news organization would have, in order to "scoop" the competition to use an industry phrase. Never mind that Felix Bloch has not been charged although he is suspected as a spy.

How far do we go, as news organizations, in the interest of getting a story — or a film clip — and whose civil rights and right to privacy do we jeopardize in the process? Have we really forgotten the meaning of common decency in the reporting of news events or even suspected news events? Do we want all makeup and pretty faces, but no professional journalists in front of the camera? Where will it all end?

Granted, television is the prime culprit because of its ability to do such enormous damage in such a brief time. But newspapers are certainly not out of the picture where news responsibility is concerned.

That responsibility is to be evenhanded in the coverage of news events, to report both sides of the story, to tell all the facts of the story but not to speculate on what might be — and, in the process, to it better and more accurately than the competition. It's a difficult job and it's getting more difficult all the time due to advances in technology and the ever-increasing crush of competition.

And it's true that television programs, such as the Fox TV Network's popular Crimestoppers potentially have contributed to the problem rather than lessening it since they, too, utilize simulations of actual crimes. But there is a difference. Crimestoppers is presented not as a news program, but rather as simulations of real crimes in the interest of helping solve them. Those programs already have proven their worth. By mixing such simulation with a regular news program, however, ABC News is in danger of confusing the public as to what is real and what is not. The tragedy is that the public already acknowledges that it doesn't have a lot of faith in journalists.

Journalists from the print, broadcast and television media face a tremendous challenge devising ways to get the story to the reader, listener or viewer faster and with more details. That won't be easy, but the "greats" in the media in years gone by did it successfully. Television viewers will certainly recall David Huntley, Edward R. Murrow and Walter Cronkite. They attained their status by doing the job the old-fashioned way: They scooped the competition, did it quickly and accurately.

They gave viewers what they wanted, but didn't compromise their professionalism in order to do it. Simulations are not the answer to winning in news; rather, the answer is hard work based on solid journalistic principles and practices.

Another View:

Lucas' defeat bitter

Without question, the Senate Judiciary Committee's rejection of William Lucas as assistant attorney general for civil rights was a bitter defeat for the Bush administration. But it is also an opportunity to redo the job of filling this most important post and do it right.

Despite the hosannas sung by Lucas's supporters, his credentials for the job were very thin: his Republican Party affiliation, personal affability and his record as a black achiever. There are far more important qualifications, including experience in the law. Lucas has next to none such experience.

The Judiciary Committee's 7-to-7 vote last Tuesday followed party lines. All seven negative votes were cast by Democrats. One Democrat, Sen. Dennis DeConcini of Arizona, joined the six Republicans in supporting the nomination. Endorsement required a clear majority; the tie vote meant a loss.

The Lucas nomination produced some of the most heated debate since the battle two years ago over Robert H. Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court. Indeed, many Lucas supporters compared his treatment by the civil rights community and the committee's Democratic majority to the allegedly unfair treatment given Bork. That stretches the facts. The only real similarity would be if the administration, out of pique, sent up as a replacement a Douglas Ginsburg-type nomination that would have to be withdrawn later.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh's comments suggested more than pique. "Raw politics," he said, describing the motivation for Lucas's rejection. Earlier, a spokesman for the attorney general warned that the civil rights community risked its friendly relationship with the Justice Department by opposing Lucas.

What relationship? The administration has only the barest outline of a civil rights policy. A true relationship will develop only as the department, through the new assistant attorney general, begins to develop a policy. Why shouldn't Thornburgh invite cooperation now by seeking the civil rights community's advice on a new nominee?

There are men and women of substantial legal experience and scholarship who could fit philosophically into the Bush administration and win the support of the civil rights community. Instead of angry words, let the two sides exchange views and names.

As of Tuesday, the Bush Administration had not withdrawn Lucas's name and there was even talk of a recess appointment. That's not constructive. The sooner a qualified nominee is designated and confirmed, the sooner civil rights enforcement can go forward.

Today's highlight in history:

In 1787, the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia began to debate the articles contained in a draft of the U.S. Constitution.

In 1825, Bolivia declared its independence from Peru.

JACK ANDERSON

Soviet people seek pure socialist utopia

YAROSLAVL, U.S.S.R. — Americans touring in the Soviet Union used to explain democracy by saying they were free to stand in front of the White House and shout "President Reagan is a fool!"

Jack Anderson

The wry response in Yaroslavl was, so what? "I can go to Red Square and shout, 'President Reagan is a fool!'"

The joke doesn't mean much anymore, because in the city of Yaroslavl, the people embrace glasnost with a passion. They can call their own leaders fools and stand a good chance of getting away with it. Better yet, they can choose their own leaders and get people whom they don't consider to be fools.

This is a city where the people fielded their own candidate for the new Congress of People's Deputies — an upstart lieutenant colonel — and he beat a powerful Soviet general in a fair and open election.

That remarkable outcome, and this city's attitude, point in a new direction — a direction which the majority of Soviets living outside major cities hope that their country is going.

When Mikhail Gorbachev announced political reforms and the new congress and said that anyone could run, the people of Yaroslavl took him at his word. The locals fired up a grass-roots political movement called the Yaroslavl Popular Front.

The front launched the candidacy of Lt. Col. Viktor Podziruk, a 44-year-old army soldier who wanted to shake up the military from top to bottom and abolish the draft forever.

His conservative opponent was a heavyweight, Gen. Boris V. Snetkov. He was no ordinary general, but the supreme commander of Soviet forces in East Germany. He supported the status quo — a system that had elevated him to the higher perks and privileges of the nomenklatura.

Elsewhere in the Soviet Union, candidates came out of the woodwork for the March 26 election. There were closet capitalists, maverick writers, dissident historians and nationalists of every stripe, as well as the usual hand-picked Communist Party officials.

When the votes were counted, the number of upsets by upstarts caused a stir. And one of the most startling upsets was in Yaroslavl, where Lt. Col. Podziruk beat Gen. Snetkov.

It was a new day in Yaroslavl. "It is a genuine revolution," says sociologist Evgeni V. Zinkovski, a visiting lecturer. "You see, what is at stake is power. And the revolution of 1917 was supposed to give it all to the people. But Josef Stalin ruled as a dictator. It was not the end of dictatorship when he died, either."

That comes mighty close to standing in Red Square and calling the whole post-revolutionary Kremlin hierarchy fools. But Americans would be fools too if they interpreted what is happening in the Soviet Union as nascent democratic capitalism.

Zinkovski is a committed socialist who believes that the Soviet system can still work and that Podziruk's win was an important sign of the future. "You must understand that 99 percent of the Russian people are dissidents, inasmuch as they want drastic change," he said. But he added that the United States shouldn't mistake that for an embrace of capitalism or a total rejection of Marxism. "What the people want here is not to say goodbye to socialism," Zinkovski told us. "We have a distorted type of socialism today." He said the people want the pure socialist utopia envisioned by Lenin. "So the goals of perestroika strike us as sounding exactly the way the 1917 revolution sounded."

Zinkovski summed it up: "We are still an authoritarian state, even with Gorbachev at the top."

Policy of restraint hasn't mollified terrorists

WASHINGTON — In the past, I have provided readers with a list of suggested knee-jerk reactions to carry through the August news doldrums.

Not this year. As I slouch toward vacation, the march of events is quickening.

William Safire

■ Confrontation With the Terrorist Murderers.

Israel's painful but gutsy decision to capture the Hezbollah's field commander and his aides, after the failure of all other means of handling hostage-taking over a decade, is being criticized as provocative.

After the deaths of 63 people in the blowup of our Beirut embassy, we practiced restraint; after the slaughter of 241 servicemen in their barracks in 1983, we practiced restraint; after the torture-murder of our kidnapped CIA station chief in 1985, we practiced restraint; after a terrorist bomb on Pan Am 103 killed 270, we practiced restraint.

Our policy of infinite patience has not mollified the terrorists. Republican leader, Bob Dole, should think twice before criticizing another nation's willingness to carry the war to the enemy.

In weeks to come, we should condemn the murderers and their backers in Teheran and Damascus — and not our brave allies trying their best to root out the evil of hostage-taking terror.

■ The Whipsawing of Our Attorney General.

Last month, Senate right-wingers forced Dick Thornburgh to drop his choice for deputy because his pick was too cozy with Bar Association liberals.

This month, Senate Judiciary Democrats blocked his choice of civil rights chief because the views of the black nominee were too close to those of the president.

Taken together with the precedent-shattering rejection of John Tower at Defense, this double humiliation of the attorney general has eroded the separation of powers. Never has the Senate interfered so brazenly in the prerogative of a newly elected president to choose his administration.

Bush's reaction has been to turn the other cheek, and his aides pass the word that the choices were Thornburgh's, not his. This misses the point.

To restore traditional balance, the next president will have to wrest back from the legislative branch the power drained from today's White House.

Thornburgh, who dreams of being that next president, should at least urge Bush to give the unapproved nominee, William Lucas, an interim appointment.

That would irritate Senate Democrats but would show Trumanesque spunk. It would also help get the minds of critics off Bush Justice's first embarrassment, which is —

■ The Justice-Media Third Degree.

If the criminal division chief, Edward Dennis, cannot justify an arrest six weeks after warning State to lift the building pass of a suspect, he should stop tying Felix Bloch to a stakeout. The press should not be used as a lawman's rubber hose.

Thornburgh, Dennis and the FBI panicked over the possibility that a suspect would flee. If the danger is so great that national security would be compromised, they should seek a law authorizing preventive detention in such cases.

I presume Justice and State have asked the government of Austria for an opportunity to interrogate Alois Mock, its foreign minister, about his frequent meetings with our unaccused Foreign Service officer.

If Bloch was spying, as the prosecuties insinuate, was Mock one of his targets or what?

And speaking of investigations —

■ The Drama Behind Iran-Contra: I'm Not Rappaport.

If money diverted to the Contras so outraged liberals, why does money diverted from the Contras not outrage conservatives?

In the deposit of $10 million from the sultan of Brunei to the Swiss bank account of Bruce Rappaport, we have the mirror image of the diversion that caused an uproar three years ago.

That $10 million was secretly raised by our secretary of state to fight Communism in Nicaragua.

Instead, it was channeled into the account of a Swiss-Israeli oil man who had been in the White House a year before, represented by Ed Meese's friend E. Robert Wallach.

The Contras never saw the money, which was returned only after the big fuss about the other diversion began.

Senate investigators were bamboozled. Now our special prosecutor, with his flock of gumshoes on the public payroll for two years, is equally at a loss for evidence.

Maybe he should get in touch with Assistant Attorney General Ed Dennis at the Ninth Street Homeless Lawyers Soup Kitchen, to sic the Geneva press corps on the mysterious Rappaport.

It's going to be a hot, busy August in the news business. Perfect month to be out of touch.

GEORGE F. WILL

U.S.' handling of terrorist acts demoralizing

WASHINGTON — V.S. Naipaul watched Teheran volunteers, full of revolutionary fervor, loading hot bread on open trucks in winter for transportation to flood victims. "It was frenziedly stuffed, as though it was a matter of life and death, into plastic sacks and dumped into a truck with blankets and clothes.

George F. Will

Wouldn't this bread have turned to stone by the time it got to Khuzistan? But the bread didn't matter. The gesture and the excitement mattered."

We are back making gestures at murderous gesturers, saying things we do not mean to people who do not care what we say. Worse, some American voices are sincerely deploring, with fine impartiality, terrorism and Israel's measures against it. Robert Dole, senator from Kansas (which is not lapped by angry waves of Islamic fanaticism), accuses Israel of acting irresponsibly.

One person, Samuel Lewis, former U.S. ambassador to Israel, gets it right: "Israel is at war. We are not." Right on both counts.

Israel has a solemn compact with its soldiers: It will do whatever it can to get them out of captivity. We have sold arms to the terrorist state that runs the group that killed Lt. Col. William R. Higgins. The State Department has written scripts for a terrorist group — the PLO — for a charade of conversion to civility. This, so we can do openly what hitherto we did in violation of stated policy: deal with the PLO. So today, U.S. diplomats sit across the table from a PLO "diplomat" who organized the murder of two U.S. diplomats.

Given the U.S. record of hypocrisy, incoherence and impotence, it is demoralizing to watch Washington shift into its well-rehearsed, highly routinized melodrama mode. There are so many cameras, microphones and pens hovering over poised notepads, that episodes like this unleash a torrent of talk. In Washington, the intensity of talk about a problem is usually inversely proportional to the number of ideas for doing something about the problem.

Archimedes said, "Give me a firm spot on which to stand and I shall move the Earth." Iran, standing (through its marionettes) on Lebanon's artillery-churned earth, and using the leverage of hostages — a renewable resource, moves the U.S. government. It moves it into the awkward position of demonstrating a dangerous asymmetry between words and capabilities.

At times like this, a president must perform a cathartic function, expressing the nation's anger. But he also must conspicuously proceed with the normal agenda of governance, lest terrorists be magnified, and for that reason multiply.

Terrorism, the gesture of the week, is a tragedy for individuals but not a crisis for nations. It conquers no territory, topples no regimes. Terrorism's goal is maximum commotion with minimal risk of retaliation. So until the president finds a way to retaliate, he is right to minimize the commotion: Call the pope but proceed with the barbeque, which he did.

But the Bush administration bears a burden of proving two things: that we do not know Iran's involvement in the killing of Higgins, and that we lack the ingenuity and military assets to make Iran pay. If we do not know and lack those assets, people should be fired by the battalions for failures of intelligence and procurement. If we do know and have appropriate assets and still do not retaliate, we are violating the principle of "statistical morality."

In an essay in Science magazine pertaining to public policy about punishment of drunk driving, Daniel Koshland defines statistical morality as the precept that a policy that may cause some individuals immediate harm will result in greater benefits for more individuals in the future. For example, when whooping-cough vaccine is given to one million children, about 100 will have serious reactions, some fatal. In Britain, public anxiety about this caused withdrawal of the vaccination requirement, until whopping-cough deaths soared. The requirement was reinstated.

Or, when criminal sanctions designed to deter are not imposed by courts, deterrence is weakened and it is a statistical certainty that some people are thereby condemned to become crime statistics — victims.

Every time terrorists go unpunished, innocent people are by that fact condemned to death. Conversely, the U.S. raid on Libya cost lives but probably saved more.

Crude utilitarianism, the greatest benefit for the greatest number, is often not a morally acceptable policy, even if one can predict the allocation of the future benefits of an action. But in the lives of nations, policies often must rest on just such crude calculations.

Making such calculations is a cruel burden on a president. But no one is compelled to be president. And too many Western leaders ignore the warning of Trollope's crusty old Duke of Omnium: "There is such a thing as a conscience with so fine an edge that it will allow a man to do nothing."

Bomb anniversaries a time to re-examine

By MIKE GRAY

Mike Gray of Midland is a gardener and a student of history and conflict resolution. He attends the Quaker Meeting for Worship.

Forty-four years ago today, we experimented with the most destructive force known to humankind. Today, we again stop to acknowledge the anniversary of that first use of a nuclear weapon in wartime.

In three more days we will mark the last use against another country's population. We will again try to rationalize those experiments for conscience's sake. We will either believe that we "won" something by that experiment or we will examine the cost of allowing a secret bureaucracy to dominate all three branches of governnent in this country.

We will remember how the project was developed in secrecy, because we could not be trusted with anything so important. We were told that there was a small group of scientists, politicians and military strategists who could now make better decisions than the public could. We could trust them. They would keep us safe from evil empires.

We were somehow convinced that since they had already been allowed to do anything they wanted without any oversight, we should continue to give them as much money as they needed to build as many weapons of any type they deemed necessary, to be aimed in any direction from which they felt threatened and to be triggered by who knows who or maybe even a what.

There were, of course, a few skeptics who doubted the wisdom of encouraging this new cult, but post-war celebrations and national pride kept people from hearing them. Even Albert Einstein, whose weight helped sell the bomb plot to the president, later had regrets. Peace-seeking scientists who wanted to develop a "weapon so terrifying, that it will end all wars forever" forgot that Alfred Nobel, at the invention of dynamite, declared that it would be that weapon. The scientists also failed to understand that the military directors of the program had no intention of retiring from their profession.

Fortunately for us, those skeptics remained skeptical. In 1959, when the U.S. was blowing up atolls in the Pacific Ocean, those naysayers sailed their boats into the target area to protest the contamination. Those boats were rammed and those aboard were arrested, but a movement was launched which ended with an above ground nuclear test ban signed in 1963. Did I say ended? When Greenpeace ships played tag with a Navy submarine last week to delay a test of the Trident missile, they showed how that movement has continued to grow and mature over the last 30 years. A treaty to ban all nuclear testing is now possible.

Four thousand four hundred seventy people were arrested protesting against the nuclear war industry in 1988. They all agree those skeptics were right. The Department of Energy is a greater peril to us than to any foreign power. To others, they are merely a threat. To us, they are a clear and ever-present danger. Several DOE plants were closed last year because of pollution and mismanagement. Several more are under investigation. Radioactive wastes are piling up because there is no safe place to put it. Nuclear warheads are trucked daily down the interstates and flown overhead on chartered aircraft from factories to military bases all across the U.S.A.

The DOE estimates it will take $200 billion to construct a new generation of plants to continue the production and testing of nuclear weapons during the next 20 years. Last Monday, Westinghouse Electric Corp. announced it had reached agreement with the DOE on a timetable for restarting the closed Savannah River plant. They also raised the original cost estimates by 400%. Nuclear plants get more expensive every year. We will soon begin paying for the Comanche Peak generator which had a cost overrun of over 1,000 percent. Once you have a few billion dollars invested, it's hard to stop construction just because costs go up.

But we must stop. There is no better time to stop and take a close look at what we are doing to ourselves and the cost of doing it. There will be plenty of time to build new plants if we decide we need more nuclear weapons. For now, we should trust that, if a nuclear weapon is ever used in anger again, we won't have time to use all of the 23,000 warheads that we now have ready.

Wadley and I streets issue not cast in stone

For two years, I have attended the regular meetings of the 8 a.m. briefing sessions of the Midland City Council, most of the time just observing, sometimes lobbying and, on occasion, making impassioned pleas.

There have been some satisfying results; the signal light at I Street no longer causes east and west traffic to back up when there is no vehicle on I wanting access to Wadley; removal of the unnecessary crossing guard at that intersection saved a few tax dollars.

Now, friends, in regard to the possibility of having the speed limit at Hillander School adjusted to 20 miles-per-hour only during the times when the school day begins and ends from the current 20 mph for a full eight hours, it has been made abundantly clear that the above proposal has the chance of a snowball in hell of any further consideration by the City Council. Only the Ten Commandments are written in stone.

This citizen is making a strategic retreat from this issue. However, if the situation "chaps your hide" daily, you have the right to phone and/or write your councilman, the mayor, and the city manager. The change was made at Trinity School where the children play at recess on an open field east of the school.

Kudos to new councilman Jose Cuevas, who is not only a dedicated representative for the people of his district but serves the majority of Midland residents as the recently "at large" candidates do not.

Finally, in the last election only 8 percent of the registered voters bothered to cast a ballot, which means that perhaps 4-6 percent of residents make the decision of what happens in this city. A devastating thought in light of the fact that people all over the world are actually dying for the right to cast a ballot.

That's not 'thought' behind flag effort

In his letter published in the Reporter-Telegram on July 30, James F. Groce noted that the proposed "flag-burning amendment" would limit our rights, in contrast with every other amendment except prohibition. He argued that liberty should not be limited in order to protect this symbol. Finally, he asked "those who have thought this through more thoroughly than I" to explain why the amendment is a good idea.

Groce is looking for help in the wrong direction. In fact, he has already thought it through too carefully. Let me explain. When President Bush announced he would seek the amendment, a reporter asked why such a drastic step was called for (when a law might suffice). The President stressed that he had a "visceral reaction" to flag-burning, which led him to abhor the Supreme Court decision and propose the most radical of remedies.

"Visceral" is defined as "instinctive," "appetitive," and "dealing with crude or elemental emotions." So there is no need to strain oneself philosophically to decide whether or not to support the amendment. Just decide whether constitutional amendments should originate in the head or the abdomen.

Why should teachers earn so much more?

As a citizen and taxpayer of Midland, I am outraged the only increase the city can find to give their employees in over four years is 2 percent! Without demeaning the jobs of school district workers, Midland College personnel, nurses and other Midland Memorial Hospital workers, what makes them better to receive larger pay raises than our firefighters and police officers?

Fifteen dollars every two weeks doesn't help the incentive of a firefighter who works so diligently in 100 degree temperature to put out grass fires that seem to be so rampant this dry summer. Or the police officers who seem to be a step behind intruders who are intent on burglarizing our homes. This too is not much incentive for the families of a large portion of city employees who hold down a total of three jobs — the extra job an employee may hold because his primary job does not provide an adequate living due to the cost of living increases and the third job held by the wife who has to compensate for the differences.

Fred Poe ought to be ashamed to say the feelings held by the city employees are "unjustified" and they should "appreciate" this increase. With the city surplus of well over $10 million, I hardly believe the decent raise these men and women are asking would adversely affect the city's budget.

One of the city's main priorities should be to provide citizens with the best police and fire protection and emergency services possible. This only can be obtained by offering these men and women salaries they caqn live on. This will also keep morale and loyalty at a high level.

Midland citizens need to realize we are losing many qualified and experienced firefighters and police officers due to the low morale and neglect the city has towards its employees. I honestly feel if the citizens of Midland were given the opportunity to decide the increase debate, we would do a much better job because we know they deserve it and I'm sure after four years their morale deserves it, too.

I sincerely hope the city will reconsider this ridiculous proposal of 2 percent and get to work on one that will make us all proud.

'Vive la difference' in French, Spanish

Every Francophile in Midland was groaning Sunday morning (July 23) over your headline for Georgia Temple's article on the French Revolution.

"Vive la France" is one of the most internationally famous phrases in the French language, unless you count "Vive la difference." "Viva" is an Italian and a Spanish word, well enough known to us in West Texas in such expressions as "Viva Mexico!" and "Viva Zapata!"

"Viva la France" is enough to start the French Revolution over again, this time over abuse of a language spoken by millions of very touchy people.

I recommend the American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language, which obligingly includes the spelling of "vive," and uses "Vive la France" as its example.

Jerry Franks

EDITOR'S NOTE: You are correct. While we hope this example of linguistic "abuse" doesn't start another French Revolution, we apologize to the people of France and to Francophiles here and everywhere.

Planned Parenthood makes class enjoyable

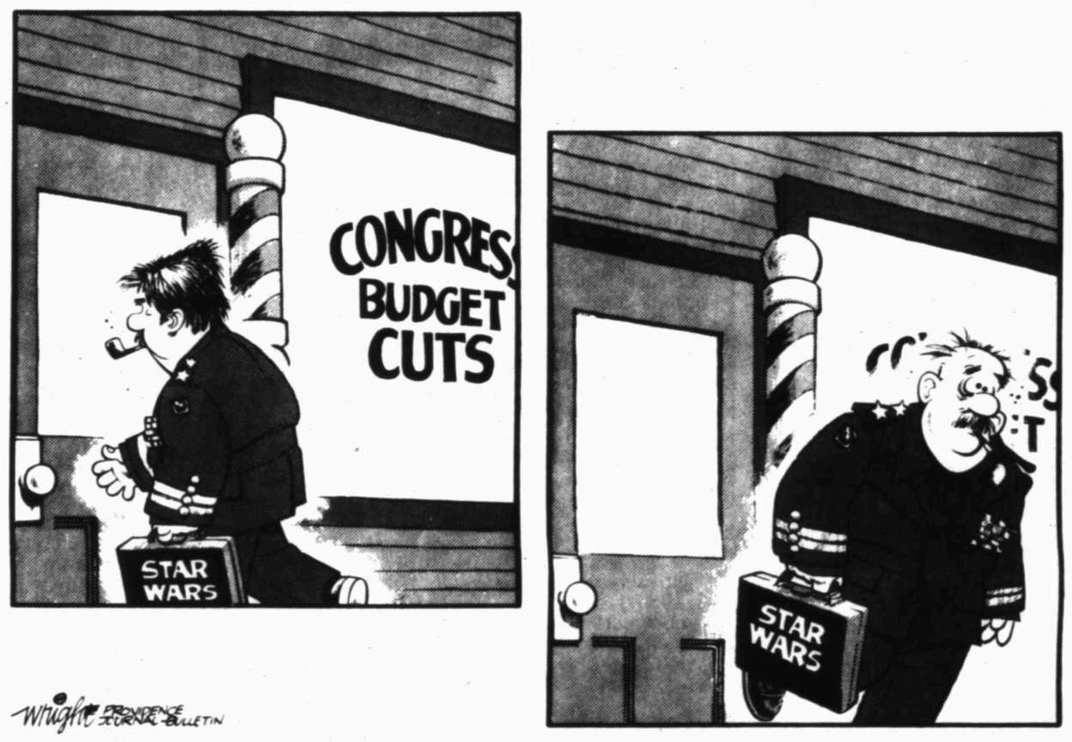

This letter is in reply to statements quoted in your July 26th article headlined, "Planned Parenthood Seminar Picketed." The pro-life representative, Larry McMillion, knows nothing about the sex education offered by Planned Parenthood, but I do.

I have taken my child to the sex education classes offered by Planned Parenthood. They offer mother/daughter and father/son classes. The classes are very well-organized and make sex education with your child an enjoyable experience.

The teacher was well-educated and the material was presented in a comfortable manner. Planned Parenthood is not a "leftist, liberal organization," as McMillion would like people to believe and they do not advocate abortions for minors.

It's really a shame Midland Independent School District does not have a sex education program comparable to Planned Parenthood's.

TOM WICKER

At this point, 'sleazy' behavior not necessarily 'criminal'

You don't have to read the polls to know that a lot of Americans have little use for the Washington political establishment, or that minorities and the poor believe the criminal justice system prosecutes them but protects the rich and the powerful.

Tom Wicker

Both impressions are going to be powerfully reinforced by the growing liklihood that no one important is going to be jailed, fined or even sentenced to community service for ripping off the taxpayers in the smelly scandal at the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Former Secretary of the Interior James G. Watt is handed $300,000 in public funds for doing nothing but making telephone calls; but as they say in court, "He's going to walk."

But if some illiterate street kid from a broken family with no hope of a job gets caught knocking over a gas station for $50, he'll do hard time in one of our overcrowded, inhumane prisons.

That's unfair enough. But it's worse, an indictment of society's values, or lack of them, that Watt will walk because what he did is not illegal. Nor was paying him the money. There's no law against either. As an "expert in corruption law" told The Washington Post:

"It's sleazy and it looks awful. It's just not criminal."

Why not? Rep. Barney Frank of Massachusetts observes that Congress "can't pass a law saying don't be a bum." Indeed it can't and shouldn't. But he also wants the Department of Justice to be more aggressive in seeking possible violations of the law. Amen to that, but don't hold your breath.

Distinctions do have to be made. A House subcommittee apparently concluded, for example, that in her dealings with the Housing Department Carla Hills, now the U.S. trade representative, earned a legitimate lawyer's fee rather than taking a payoff for influence.

But the HUD inspector general, Paul Adams — whose warnings were ignored during the Reagan administration, when Samuel Pierce headed the department — reports that more than $5.7 million was paid in "consulting fees" to just 20 recipients.

Some of them, like Watt and Bill Taylor, a former Florida Republican chairman, knew no more about housing than they know about nuclear physics. They just knew the right people in the right place.

That $5.7 million was not the cost of the housing rehabilitation program at issue; it's only the cost of the "consulting fees" alone.

When the whole mess is finally exposed, if it ever is, no one yet knows how much waste and fraud will be discovered in the tens of millions in federal subsidies paid to the developers who employed the consultants and may or may not have improved the housing.

If Watt committed no crime, was there nothing legally culpable in the administration by Pierce and his associates of a department in which such outrages could be perpetrated?

The Bush administration's Department of Justice, after "investigating" the Reagan Administration's Department of Housing and Urban Development, concluded that there were no grounds to prosecute Thomas T. Demery, who administered the housing rehabilitation program. But what about Deborah Gore Dean, a close aide to Pierce, who pled the 5th Amendment against self-incrimination?

Adams told Congress that Joseph Strauss, a former special assistant to Pierce, later collected $1.7 million in consulting fees.

That would be illegal, apparently, if he did the consulting within a year after leaving HUD. Precisely the same acts and precisely the same fees would be legal one year and one day after he left. That may be a necessary legal distinction but why shouldn't the proscribed period be 5 or 10 years? And anyway, why should a consultant who obtains a federal subsidy for a developer be paid by the government rather than by the developer?

Are the American people really to be given to understand that political big shots — in this case Republicans — can get rich on $5.7 million of taxpayers' money intended to improve low-income housing, and nothing can be done about it?

What about perjury? Lying to Congress? Mis- or malfeasance in administration? Neglect of duty? Defrauding the public?

If none of these or any other statutes can be made to apply to the sleazy conduct being documented and the sleazy people being identified, then something is badly wrong — not just at HUD but in the values and processes of American politics and American justice.

Stronger measures needed to counter Islamic barbarism

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

SAN SIMEON — Regardless of the outcome of the latest terrorist crisis in the Middle East, the time has come for the civilized nations to take strong concerted action against those countries that directly or indirectly support the barbaric Islamic fanatics in Lebanon.

W.R. Hearst Jr.

With or without military action, there are ways to make it more difficult, if not impossible, for the terrorists to continue to use war-ravaged Lebanon not only for deadly attacks against Israeli civilians, including women and children, but also as a base for spreading throughout the Middle East the most oppressive religious fundamentalism the world has seen since the Dark Ages.

With disclosure of the murder of Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, captured by pro-Iranian terrorists in February 1988, when he was serving in Beirut on a U.N. truce commission, and threats to hang other American hostages, President Bush ordered powerful naval forces to the eastern Mediterranean and Persian Gulf areas.

The initial purpose was to apply pressure on Iran to stop the terrorists from killing any of the other eight American hostages. This appears to have paid off quickly because the terrorists, after postponing three times the threatened execution of American hostage Joseph Cicippio, announced "suspension" of his execution for some "days" pending release of a terrorist leader and about 200 Lebanese and Palestinian guerrillas held in Isreal.

The Israeli government had offered to exchange the Hezbollah leader and the Moslem guerrillas in return for the release of three Israeli military POWs and all U.S and other western hostages held in Lebanon. The announcement about suspension of Cicippio's execution said nothing about release of any hostages.

The other purpose of the U.S. naval buildup was to have strong forces in place for retaliatory action against Iran or the terrorist lairs in Lebanon if any of the American hostages are executed.

My hope is there will be no further killing of hostages and the terrorists will accept the Israeli exchange offer.

Even that good news may not stop new kidnapping of Americans who remain in Beirut for diplomatic or other justified reasons.

What must be done is to threaten, and if necessary, take drastic military action against the two governments primarily responsible for Lebanese-based Moslem terrorism. Those are the Iranian and Syrian regimes. They supply and protect the terrorists. Their leaders lie when they claim they have no control over the terrorists.

Iran proved its influence this past week when it caused the terrorists to suspend temporarily the threatened murder of Cicippio.

If Iran and Syrian leaders fail to stop the killing of hostages, they will be responsible for their deaths — as they are for those already murdered. The Iranian leadership previously showed its influence during the Iran-Contra affair when it obtained the release of American and later several other western hostages.

Syria protects with 30,000 troops the Lebanese areas in which the terrorists hold our hostages. The Damascus dictatorship announced a few days ago it had alerted its antiaircraft forces in Lebanon to fire on any U.S. planes that bombed the area, as they did following the 1983 car-bombing slaughter of the U.S. Marine barracks that left 241 Americans dead. What more proof is needed for the responsibility of Iran and Syria?

My sympathy goes out to President Bush for the worst crisis of his presidency. Prudence, however, won't solve the terrorist problem in Lebanon, although hopefully it may get our hostages released.

More drastic measures must be taken if we are going to stop Iran and Syrian support of the Lebanese terrorists. President Bush must show he has the political courage to take action which will make it too dangerous and unprofitable for Iran and Syria to continue to support the terrorists.

Sending in U.S. commandos to try to find and rescue the hostages makes no sense. It would probably cause the killing of the commandos as well as most, if not all, of the hostages. Nor would bombing the area solve the problem. When our Navy did that in 1983, most of the bombs hit the wrong places.

There is, in my opinion, a solution that could be much more effective. President Bush should send a secret ultimatum to Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani that unless all our hostages are released within one week, we will blockade Iran's Persian Gulf ports to cut off shipment of oil supplies essential to prevent an economic collapse in Iran.

That, according to well informed naval experts, could be done with little or no loss of U.S. servicemen's lives by having naval planes mine the Iranian harbors during nighttime. Our warships could destroy Iranian ships that attempted to sweep away the mines, just as we destroyed Iranian naval vessels when they challenged our navy in the Persian Gulf.

We should likewise inform Syria that if it does not cease supplying and protecting the terrorists, we will blockade the port of Tartus, Syria's only oil outlet to the sea through which it receives military supplies from the Soviet Union that have totaled more than $10 billion in the last six years. Moscow has a defensive alliance with Syria, but I don't think President Mikhail Gorbachev is going to start a nuclear war with us over Syria.

What I am suggesting are strong measures. President Bush said Wednesday the terrorist situation is "a matter that concerns the entire civilized world."

Former Navy Secretary John Lehman said on the MacNeil/Lehrer TV news program Wednesday that it would be "appropriate" to blockade Iran, adding: "We brought the Iraq-Iran war to an end after they (the Iranian naval forces) came out and tried to attack us. We sank half their navy."

So strong measures can be effective. They are needed to put an end to Iranian and Syrian support of the Moslem terrorists in Lebanon.

WIPP environmental study criticized

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Four environmental groups and the Texas attorney general contend an environmental impact study of the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant is hopelessly flawed, suggesting WIPP won't be ready to open soon.

The groups' lengthy critique followed release earlier in the week of a report by the state Environmental Evaluation Group, a watchdog agency.

The EEG's report found similar flaws in the U.S. Department of Energy's study of the nation's first permanent waste repository, which is proposed near Carlsbad. However, many of the formal comments by Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox and the environmental groups are even more critical of WIPP than EEG's review.

"The criticisms set forth in these comments clearly demonstrate that DOE is not ready to open WIPP now or in the near future," the groups' report said, calling the impact study "fatally flawed."

The review said the environmental study fails to meet the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act and contains an inadequate analysis of WIPP's effects on the environment, socioeconomics and transportation.

The critique was submitted by Mattox and Concerned Citizens for Nuclear Safety of Santa Fe; the Southwest Research and Information Center of Albuquerque; the Environmental Defense Fund in Boulder, Colo.; and the National Resources Defense Council in Washington, D.C.

The groups sent a letter last month to Energy Secretary James Watkins, asking him to withdraw and the environmental study and draft a new one. They threatened in March to sue DOE if certain technical and legal hurdles were not resolved to their satisfaction.

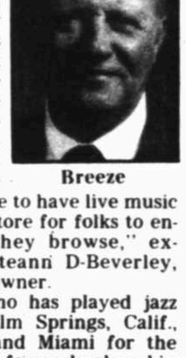

WIPP is designed to store radioactive tools, clothing and other discarded materials from the nation's weapons plants.

DOE hoped to open WIPP this fall, but Watkins has said he doesn't expect the plant to begin receiving waste until next year.

Piano music to be featured

From Staff Reports

Classical pianist Larry Breeze will be the featured guest artist at Pages and Prints Bookstore, 40 Plaza Center, on Friday from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

Breeze

"There are several restaurants in Plaza Center and families like to walk around the center in the evenings after they eat. We thought it would be sort of festive to have live music in the bookstore for folks to enjoy while they browse," explained Patteann D-Beverley, the store's owner.

Breeze, who has played jazz piano in Palm Springs, Calif., New York and Miami for the past 20 years, formerly played in local clubs and hotels.

Back in Midland for engagements at the Hilton Hotel and several clubs, Breeze will be playing at Pages and Prints in August and September, along with other local artists.

The public is invited to the evenings of informal music.

Pecos man indicted for 'indecency'

PECOS (AP) — Pecos City Councilman Manuel A. "Monnie" Mendoza, 36, was indicted by a Reeves County grand jury on three charges of indecency with a child, a second-degree felony.

If convicted, he could be sentenced to 2 to 20 years in prison on each count and fined up to $10,000, said District Attorney Hal Upchurch. Mendoza also could be removed from the city council.

The alleged offenses began in October 1988 and continued intermittently until March, according to the 14-year-old female victim. The offenses included touching and attempted sexual intercourse, sheriff's reports said.

Mendoza, who was indicted Thursday, surrendered to sheriff's deputies that day and posted $15,000 bail on each charge.

Cockroaches can trigger asthma

Asthma sufferers beware of cockroaches.

An asthma attack can be triggered by many things, including cockroaches.

At first, researchers thought that people were allergic to the remains of dead cockroaches.

But now a study has shown that dried cockroach droppings are the culprit.

Doctors in New Orleans did skin tests on 13 people and found all of them to be much more sensitive to a cockroach's droppings than to the cockroach itself.

One more reason to hate those guys.

'Don't Mess With Texas' campaign scoring a hit with ruffian litterers

AUSTIN (AP) — The "Don't Mess With Texas" campaign seems to have hit its target: slobs who need more than a gentle reminder to stop littering.

Although the slogan has been criticized as antagonistic, a student of roadside refuse says there has been more than a 60 percent reduction in Texas litter since he started doing an annual survey here in 1985.

"That's a remarkable reduction," said Dan Syrek, 63, a California-based industrial engineer whose observations helped state officials devise the "Don't Mess With Texas" campaign four years ago.

By studying Texas trash, Syrek said he found that most litterers are men, and they "don't respond positively when you use the word 'please' in telling them to stop."

Syrek annually evaluates roadside litter for 16 state governments, from Alaska and Hawaii to New York. On the average, he said, 2,500 items of trash can be found along every mile of road.

"We also found that people who throw the stuff are real slobs," Syrek told the Austin American-Statesman. "You had to explain to them that what they were doing was littering."

Syrek was hired in 1985 by GSD&M, an Austin advertising agency that shaped the $2 million state campaign against roadside litter.

With his on-site inspections, Syrek found that men did 70 percent of all deliberate littering.

"And 90 percent of all accidental littering — where things fly off the bed of a pickup truck, for example — involve male drivers," he said. Seventy-five percent of the men involved were under age 35.

So the ad agency aimed its campaign at that group.

Radio and television promotions were prepared with Texas professional athletes and entertainers. This summer country singer Willie Nelson joined the campaign.

"In 1985, Texas became the first state to rely entirely on a commercial ad campaign to reduce roadside trash, and the success was immediate," Syrek said.

By 1986, Syrek reported a 29 percent decline in litter.

The following year, state highway cleanup crews began to notice they were collecting less and making their rounds faster than before, the American-Statesman reported.

Syrek and his wife, Betty, recently conducted three weeks of scientific field studies in Texas. They are scheduled to issue a 30-page report Aug. 22 to the state highway department.

Studying roadside trash is a good way to see the United States, Syrek said.

"There is some incredibly beautiful countryside that we get to see in detail," he said. "At least, we do when the litter is gone."

Woman suggests armadillo license plates

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin woman says Texas' official state mammal and unofficial roadside distraction could solve the current license plate flap.

Margaret Knox has written the Texas Highway Commission, saying it should drop its plans to put "The Friendship State" on Texas license plates, and instead issue plates shaped like an armadillo.

Between the numbers and letters on the plate would be a star, representing Texas' standing as the Lone Star State.

"I think it's very realistic. It would be real neat," Mrs. Knox, 64, said Saturday.

Since unveiling the design for "The Friendship State" plate last month, the highway department has been flooded with complaints from people saying the slogan doesn't fit the spirit of Texas. Politicians have entered the controversy, saying the slogan is wimpy.

Mrs. Knox agreed.

"If you have to advertise that you're friendly, forget it. I think it's terrible," she said.

"It flies in the face of 'Don't Mess With Texas,'" she said, referring to the popular and effective state anti-littering campaign.

"With the armadillo and the Lone Star — that really says it all," she said.

She got the idea for the armadillo plate six years ago on a Canadian trip when she saw a license plate for the Northwest Territories shaped like a polar bear. "It was striking," she said, and took a photograph of it.

Earlier this week, Mrs. Knox sent her letter, the photograph and a drawing of an armadillo plate to Texas Highway Commission chairman Robert Dedman.

Mrs. Knox's daughter, Patricia Partridge, 43, an artist who works at the Lyndon Baines Johnson Library and Museum, drew the armadillo illustration to match the size of a Texas license plate.

"If they can't cut the plate in the shape of an armadillo, they could print the armadillo on a regular-sized plate," Mrs. Knox said.

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending Aug. 4, 1989.

House approves $70 billion increase in national debt. The House voted 231-185 Aug. 1 to raise the debt ceiling by $70 billion in order to ensure that the federal government could meet its obligations through the end of the fiscal year, Sept. 30, 1989.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady warned lawmakers that if the $2.8 trillion debt limit is not raised, the government would default on its obligations August 15.

Supporters of the measure warned that the bill had to be passed before Congress' scheduled adjournment August 5. Bill Archer, R-Texas, claimed that by raising the debt ceiling, lawmakers would give Congress time to "complete this year's deficit reduction effort and to enact a longer term debt limit extension in a less frenzied atmosphere."

Opponents charged that, by passing the measure, members were taking the easy way out and once again pushing the debt onto the next generation. "By allowing this short-term hike of the debt limit, once again, we are absolving ourselves of our responsibility to face some very fundamental questions that are undermining the economic viability of this nation," said Paul B. Henry, R-Mich.

Voting to increase the debt ceiling: Combest (R), Gonzalez (D), Stenholm (D).

Voting against: Smith (R), Sarpalius (D).

Pro-choice abortion position gains victory in House. On Aug. 2, the House on a 206-219 vote, rejected an amendment prohibiting any public funds from being used for abortions in the District of Columbia, including abortions for women whose lives are in danger from a pregnancy.

In highly charged debate, the House reversed its position on an amendment included each year since 1980 in the District of Columbia Appropriations bill prohibiting publicly-financed abortions in Washington D.C. The difference between this year's amendment and earlier years' was that it contained no exception allowing public payment for an abortion performed to save a mother's life. Pro-choice members of the House were able to use the House's rules to force a vote on the stripped-down language.

This was the first vote in Congress on abortion since the Supreme Court decided last month to give states more latitude on abortion policy.

Supporters argued the amendment was a reaffirmation of current law that prohibits tax money from paying for abortions. Christopher H. Smith, R-N.J., said, "(T)his amendment simply continues current law as it relates to public funding of abortion....The language...stipulates that no appropriated funds can be used to subsidize abortion."

Opponents saw the vote as one that went beyond abortion. Norman Y.

Mineta, D-Calif., argued the amendment "threatens the health, well-being and safety of women in the District who, without public subsidy, are unable to afford adequate health care....It is also unconscionable that we should attempt to deny the people of the District of Columbia the opportunity to determine for themselves how they should be treated."

Voting to prohibit publicly-funded abortions in Washington, D.C.: Smith (R), Combest (R), Stenholm (D), Sarpalius (D).

Voting against: Gonzalez (D).

House ignores veto threats on thrift bailout. The House Aug. 3 voted 221-199 to adopt the first-round House-Senate compromise of the $50 billion savings and loan bailout bill, thus putting the cost of bailing out the ailing thrift industry on federal budget books in 1990 and raising the budget deficit above the Gramm-Rudman deficit ceiling.

The close House vote was followed the same day by a Senate vote that upset the compromise and sent the bill back to a House-Senate conference. The Senate vote supported President Bush's view that the cost of the bailout should be kept off the federal budget — thus, keeping the budget within Gramm-Rudman's $100 billion deficit ceiling for 1990.

House and Senate conferees worked into the night to reach a new compromise between the House, Senate and the president, which called for part of the cost of the bailout to be on-budget and part to be off-budget. The new compromise is expected to be passed before Congress' scheduled adjournment Aug. 5 for its summer recess.

Democrats, who were the prime supporters of the measure to keep the bailout cost on the federal budget sheet, argued that the plan to keep the cost off-budget was equal to a Gramm-Rudman dodge. Moreover, they said the alternative would cost more because a quasi-governmental agency rather than the government would borrow the money. "Funding on-budget ... assures that the facts about the costs will be laid clearly before the American people and not hidden in some high cost off-budget gimmick," noted Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas.

Opponents of the bill, mostly Republicans, countered that the $50 billion is private, not public, money and does not belong on the budget.

They also said that such a large exemption from the Gramm-Rudman ceiling would defeat the deficit-reduction process. "The Republican approach has the advantage of forcing greater discipline on Congress through the Gramm-Rudman process," said Jim Leach, R-Iowa.

Voting for the first-round thrift bailout compromise: Gonzalez (D), Stenholm (D), Sarpalius (D).

Voting against: Smith (R), Combest (R).

Senate fails to kill anti-drug smuggling amendment. The Senate Aug. 1 tried but failed to kill an amendment to the 1990 defense authorization bill to allow drug-enforcement agents to shoot down planes suspected of smuggling drugs. The motion to table (kill) the amendment lost 45-55.

The provision gives federal law-enforcement officials authority to go so far as to fire into an aircraft in order to force it down, if the aircraft fails to land after being asked to and warned of the consequences of not responding. The Senate overwhelmingly passed the defense authorization bill the next day, leaving the future of the amendment in the hands of a House-Senate conference committee.

Proponents of the motion to kill the amendment worried about the implementation of such a program without additional study, expressing concern that innocent people would be shot down. John Glenn, D-Ohio, who pilots his own plane, explained, "The intercepting aircraft do not have the means of communicating with me unless they happen to know what frequency I am on. There is no requirement for frequency, and there is no requirement for whatever the warning signal would be."

The motion's opponents favored the amendment and argued that it was time the United States took the drug war seriously. "If we really mean what we say, if we really want to stop the flow, we must give our drug enforcement agencies the tools they need to do their job," declared Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., sponsor of the provision.

Voting to kill the anti-drug smuggling amendment: Bentsen (D).

Voting not to kill: Gramm (R).

Senate supports president on MX. In sharp contrast to last week's House cuts in MX funding, the Senate Aug. 1 voted 61-39 to reject a proposal to slash $502 million from the controversial rail-based MX missile program in 1990.

The vote to defeat the MX cost-cutting amendment came during debate of the 1990-91 defense authorization bill, which passed by an overwhelming margin the following day. Rejection of the amendment left intact an administration request for $1.1 billion for the MX program and an agreement on defense spending reached earlier between the Bush administration and Congress.

Voting to kill the MX cost-cutting amendment: Bentsen (D), Gramm (R).

Voting against: None.

Lawmaker defends accepting honoraria

BEAUMONT (AP) — U.S. Rep. Charles Wilson defended on Friday his acceptance of thousands of dollars in honoraria from defense contractors and disputed a magazine's characterization of him as the best at the "honoraria blitz."

Wilson, D-Lufkin, and several other Texas politicians made the 1988 list of "big spenders" compiled by the National Taxpayers Union. The conservative, non-partisan group targets members of Congress it contends vote for too much federal spending.

In 1988, according to his staff, Wilson earned about $25,000 in honoraria fees for speeches and personal appearances — slightly less than the $26,850 maximum that congressmen legally may keep.

"If it's legal, I'm going to keep on taking it," Wilson told the Beaumont Enterprise Journal, "just like my constituents would and all the reporters I know."

The cover story of the July-August issue of Common Cause magazine discusses what the non-profit, nonpartisan lobbying group sees as problems with congressional honoraria. A portion of the article titled "Moonlighting" deals with how politicians "collect the most money in the least time."

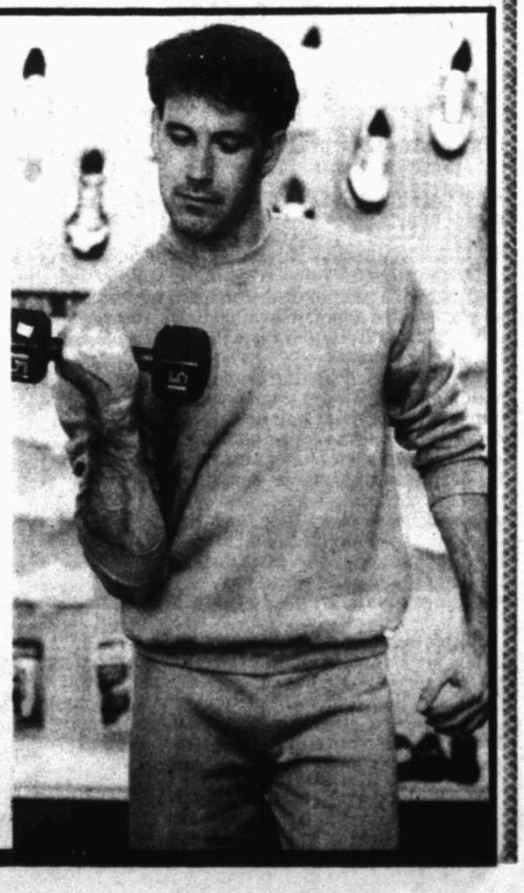

Wilson, a member of the House defense appropriations subcommittee, "appears to be the champ," the magazine states. The article states that six defense contractors, including General Dynamics, LTV, McDonnell Douglas Helicopter and Northrop, paid Wilson $1,000 on Feb. 1, 1988. Wilson said he earned the money making six speeches on several days in January.

U.S. Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, made $10,000 in honoraria, his staff reported.

Brooks, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and other Democrats made the latest list. Their offices would not comment on the 1988 ratings.

Adam West files lawsuit over advertising likeness

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) -- Adam West, who played Batman in the 1960s TV show, is hoping to zap $9 million from a group of ad agencies he said didn't use him in its commercials.

West claims in a Superior Court lawsuit that the agencies filmed television commercials with someone else who used "likeness, personality, voice and mannerisms" in such as a way as to lead viewers to believe the person was West.

Judge Stephen O'Neil on Friday denied a motion by the agencies to dismiss the case and ordered both sides to trial Nov. 6.

The suit named Ian Leech and Associates of Los Angeles; Ingalls, Quinn and Johnson of Boston; and BBDO New York as defendants.

The agencies' attorney, Anthony E. Liebig, said the rights to the Batman character were purchased from DC Comics.

West played a fairly lighthearted Batman in the 1960s TV show. Michael Keaton plays the caped crusader in the current hit movie.

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — The Rolling Stones will bring their "Steel Wheels" tour to Syracuse's Carrier Dome for one appearance to make up for the canceled tour opener in Buffalo, stadium officials said.

Syracuse University officials said they expected to sign a formal contract by Monday for the Sept. 22 concert.

The canceled Buffalo appearance upset New York rock fans, who heard the show was called off because of poor attendance at a concert by The Who at Buffalo's Rich Stadium on July 18. That show drew slightly more than 30,000 spectators in a stadium seating 89,000 people.

The Stones' tour, which starts Sept. 1 in Philadelphia, will take them to Toronto; Pittsburgh; East Troy, Wis.; Cincinnati; Raleigh, N.C.; St. Louis; Syracuse; Washington, D.C., and Cleveland.

Hampton

NEW YORK (AP) — Musicians who quit Lionel Hampton's band because of inadequate pay are demanding that he rehire them, and a musicians union tried to picket the band leader's rehearsal space.

Twelve of Hampton's 16 musicians refused to board an airplane for Japan on July 25, saying they wanted more money per performance than Hampton was offering.

Hampton hired Japanese musicians while he was in the Far East and hired Americans when he returned last week, said publicist Chuck Jones.

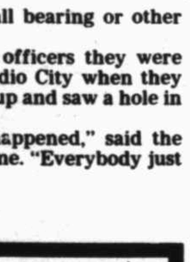

Local 802 of the Associated Musicians of Greater New York sent a telegram to Hampton on Thursday saying his striking members were ready to come back to work pending negotiations, said union President John Glasel.

No answer came back, Glasel said. The union tried to picket Hampton on Friday but he did not show up at his rehearsal.

"Here's a union that got them to strike and now wants to get their jobs back," said Jones. "He's willing to take them back, but Lionel's got a new band."

Jones said the striking musicians would be the first hired should the new band members quit, adding that two of the 12 striking members had rejoined the band.

Selleck

BIG TIMBER, Mont. (AP) — Actor Tom Selleck, who plays an American marksman in an upcoming movie about frontier Australia, won't need a stuntman to hit his marks.

Selleck proved to be a dead-eye with a black-powder buffalo gun last week when he visited Shiloh Rifle Manufacturing Co., which is making three of the guns for the movie.

He fired about 50 rounds from a 13-pound, single-shot rifle with a 34-inch barrel, similar to the guns that will be used in "Quigley Down Under," and his first shot hit the 24-inch target at 425 yards.

Selleck will play Matthew Quigley, an American rifleman brought to Australia in the 1800s, supposedly to shoot wild dogs called dingos. Instead, a landowner wants him to kill aborigines, but Quigley rebels against the order. The movie will be filmed in Australia.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Grammy Award-winning rapper Fresh Prince won his case against assault charges during a preliminary hearing, but his bodyguard will stand trial on charges he punched a record promoter.

"I have a renewed faith in the justice system," Willard Smith, 20, one half of the rap duo, D.J. Jazzy Jeff and the Fresh Prince, said after his hearing Friday.

Smith's bodyguard, Charles Alston, 23, was ordered to stand trial on charges that include aggravated assault and conspiracy. Alston allegedly twice punched record promoter William Hendricks, 38, while he was interviewing Smith at a radio studio.

The incident occurred March 3, police said, nine days after Smith and his partner, Jeffrey Townes, won a Grammy Award for their hit, "Parents Just Don't Understand."

Hendricks testified at the hearing that Smith ordered Alston to punch him. He said he was treated for a fracture of his left eye socket and for a cut.

Hendricks taunted Smith during the interview by claiming that the group's ex-manager deserved some credit for their song, defense attorneys said.

Judge J. Earl Simmons Jr. said no proof was offered that Smith controlled his bodyguard's actions.

Hendricks will file a civil suit against Smith, his attorney said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer Frank Sinatra Jr. was among diners at a restaurant where dozens of people went diving under tables early Saturday when someone fired an object from a slingshot through a front window.

Initial reports called the incident a drive-by shooting, but no gun was involved, said police Sgt. Tom Toutant.

"Somebody probably driving by in traffic fired a ball bearing or other hard object at the window," he said.

The sergeant said Sinatra and other witnesses told officers they were dining at about midnight at Twain's Restaurant in Studio City when they heard something smash against the window and looked up and saw a hole in the glass.

"We were right in the middle of a rush when it happened," said the restaurant's night manager, who would not give her name. "Everybody just ducked. No one was hurt."

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Dr. Louis Sullivan, the U.S. Health and Human Services secretary, says he wishes he still had the time to check a pulse now and then.

"But I just don't have the time anymore," Sullivan said Friday at Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport on his way to a speaking engagement.

Sullivan now spends his time keeping his finger on the pulse of 250 programs dealing with such issues as escalating health care costs, disease prevention and welfare reform.

"There is such a sheer volume of issues," said Sullivan, who took charge of the department five months ago.

Sullivan, 55, previously served as president and dean of the Morehouse School of Medicine in Atlanta.

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — TV executives are standing behind photographers who got into a confrontation with security people when they defied Bob Dylan's policy of banning cameras at his concerts.

Dylan thinks it is unfair that paying customers might have their views blocked by photographers on free passes, the singer's representative, Eliot Mintz, said from Los Angeles Friday.

When press photographers shot a concert Thursday after being notified they couldn't, security guards and concert promoters tried to confiscate videotape from one television station, attempted to interrupt a live broadcast of another, and refused to admit a photographer from the Star Tribune.

A St. Paul Pioneer Press Dispatch photographer who arrived early shot the event without incident. But KARE-TV complained that its photographer had to flee to the station's van to keep tape from being seized.

"Our basic position is that this was a news story, so it falls under fair use," said Janet Mason, KARE's vice president of news.

DALLAS (AP) — "Downtown" Julie Brown, the MTV video jockey who is known for being on the cutting edge of fashion, wasn't a gracious gift recipient when she brought the "Club MTV Live" dance and music revue to Dallas.

A local radio sponsor came onstage as the show started Thursday night to hand her a commemorative T-shirt. Ms. Brown's distaste was immediately evident, according to The Dallas Morning News.

"I don't wear T-shirts," she said.

Hot fashions were very much in evidence during the show at a Dallas amphitheater and Ms. Brown's Club MTV dancers changed costumes a half-dozen times.

The MTV tour is headlined by Paula Abdul, Milli Vanilli, Information Society and Was (Not Was).

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Associated Press erroneously reported Friday that jurors found divorce attorney Marvin Mitchelson innocent in a civil lawsuit filed by a former client who had accused him of legal malpractice in her 1984 divorce case.

The verdict was actually a two-part ruling.

Jurors found that Mitchelson had failed to exercise the care and skill ordinarily used by an attorney in such cases. But the jury refused to assess any damages against Mitchelson, ruling that his failure had not injured his former client.

In a separate finding, jurors denied a counter-suit filed by Mitchelson seeking unpaid legal fees for handling the divorce case.

ATLANTA (AP) — Actor Rob Lowe passed out after videotaping two young women having sex in his hotel room, and the women took the tape and began circulating copies of it the next day, Rolling Stone magazine reports.

Lowe last week agreed to perform 20 hours of community service to avoid prosecution for allegedly seducing then 16-year-old Jan Parsons. Her mother drew attention to the video of Miss Parsons and the girl's friend, Tara Seburt, when she filed suit in May against Lowe. The civil suit is pending.

The movie star and Miss Parsons met at a downtown disco during the 1988 Democratic National Convention.

Rolling Stone, in its Aug. 24 edition, quoted the dance club's publicity director, Susan Sullivan, as saying Miss Seburt called her the morning after the tape was made to tell her about it. Ms. Sullivan said Miss Seburt told her that when Lowe passed out, she and Miss Parsons left the hotel room, taking $200 from his wallet, along with pills and the tape.

The young women arranged through a friend at a hair salon where they worked to have someone make copies, the magazine said.

Lowe, who is filming a movie called "Bad Influence," declined to be interviewed for the article, and his publicists refused to comment.

Rolling Stone said the videotape consists of three segments, starting with a sex escapade involving Lowe and a male and a female friend in Paris before he went to the convention. The second segment shows Lowe's visit to an Atlanta Braves baseball game with California Assemblyman Tom Hayden and the third shows the encounter with the two young women, which took place at a hotel on July 18, 1988.

Rural America divided into two worlds

One still 'hanging on;' Another disappearing forever

EDITOR'S NOTE: Hundreds of thousands of rural Americans every year are giving up and moving to cities and suburbs. Frustrated by farming troubles or left without jobs when factories close, many leave houses, schools, even whole towns abandoned to the winds. Congressional hearings on the crisis begin this week. Yet as one part of rural America disappears, another part is hanging on, even flourishing: the town that attracts a shopping mall, that happens to lie along an interstate route. In this first story in an AP Extra presentation, "Rural Crossroads," Midwest Regional Reporter Sharon Cohen and Mountain States Regional Reporter Tad Bartimus look at the two rural Americas.

As unobtrusive as a church bell, as final as a funeral notice, the passing away of so much of rural America began with a going-out-of-business sign.

Perhaps it appeared in a shoe store window, or the florist's shop where every bride of the past 50 years ordered her bouquet. It happened because the railroad died, the hotel closed, jobs dried up, folks moved on.

The vast stretch of America, beyond the nighttime glow of cities, where stars and a few street lights mean rural life, has been shrinking and struggling for decades.

As the nation faces the 1990s, farmers and small-town citizens no longer live in the countryside found in a Willa Cather novel or on a Norman Rockwell canvas. Today there are two rural Americas: one is dying, the other surviving, often by its wits.

Isolated, one-industry towns and backroads hamlets that once defined "country" are fading into history. At the same time modern little communities with diverse economic foundations and fortuitous locations are going strong.

"The remote rural areas that are falling farther and farther behind have little prospect for attracting industry," said Cynthia Duncan, associate director of the Rural Economic Policy Program of the Aspen Institute, a think tank that does social and economic research. "Rural areas that are closer to cities ... are more resilient and are going to recover faster."

THE DYING RURAL America is evident in the country school, its once-white clapboards peeling gray in the unrelenting wind of the Nebraska prairie, and in the dilapidated homesteads of North Dakota where roof-high lilac bushes grow untended.

A way of life is disappearing when, in Montana, a homemakers' group cancels its annual Mother's Day tea because so few members remain.

But the other rural America, the one that will survive, has its symbols, too.

Aggressive communities in Missouri and other states entice business with free land and other incentives. In Iowa, little towns struggling to pay for police protection or individual schools are banding together in "clusters" that share the costs. In Texas, the county with the largest quail population started organizing hunts that now attract hunters from 26 states.

"If they can do it, you can do it all over," said David Guarino of the Texas Department of Agriculture, which helped with a grant.

For almost two centuries, the historical and emotional pull of rural and small-town life put the heartbeat in the heartland. The idealized myth of a homogeneous rural America, where a family lived off a bountiful land, shopped in a small town free of crime and perpetuated itself in prosperity and harmony through grit, hard work and lofty moral principles goes back to the day the Pilgrims landed.

Thomas Jefferson articulated the ideal, holding that land ownership must be broad-based, that democracy must be rooted in the individual efforts of small farmers and merchants.

And yet, except for a brief "rural renaissance" in the 1970s, when 4.5 million people fled the cities to earn livings in the country as coal and farming boomed, much of rural life has been on a long decline.

"In the '80s," said Calvin Beale, chief Agriculture Department demographer, "we simply do not see many of the back-to-the-landers, homesteader or urban refugees who go out to upper Michigan, upper Minnesota, the Ozarks, northeastern New England to make their living in a small-town community because they prefer to do it."

THE '80S ADDED new crises to old challenges: tumbling land values, farm foreclosures, two droughts, school consolidation, falling commodity and petroleum prices, deregulation and declining services, a brain drain and a loss of jobs caused by mechanization, factory closings and increased use of cheap Third World labor.

The result has been an exodus to urban centers and dire predictions for the future.

"Unless action is taken, virtually every citizen of the country will be forced to live in a metropolitan area," said Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla., whose House Agriculture subcommittee opens hearings Monday on rural development. The first hearing is in Clarksdale, Miss. Future hearings will be in Amarillo, Texas; Marshalltown, Iowa, and Blackfoot, Idaho.

Nearly 1 million people left rural America in 1986-'87. "That scenario is good for no one," said English. "It would overburden our cities and suburbs as much as it would devastate our rural communities."

Through the '80s, rural America has witnessed a decline in services and jobs and a rise in poverty.

"You can draw a lot of parallels between remote rural areas and the inner city," said the Aspen Institute's Duncan. "In both cases, people with education and skills left. ... You end up without a middle class, without role models. They don't have the economic security and economic opportunity. They can't invest in the schools and good government at the local level."

Television has let the rural poor "know how different their lives are from the rest of the world," said David Lollis, director of the Federation of Appalachian Housing Enterprises in Kentucky.

Propping up many dying small towns is the elderly retired population, which lives off transfer payments such as pensions, medical and disability insurance and income maintenance programs. In nearly half of Kansas' counties in 1985, 44 percent of income came from transfer payments or property income.

"The world has changed and our population has aged," said Mary Schissel, city clerk in Dougherty, Iowa, a town of 128. "A lot of our leaders want to take a break. They're in their mid- to late-60s. They say it's time for someone else to do this."

BUT WHO? Not young people. Of the hundreds of thousands leaving rural places in 1986-87, one-third were 18 to 24 years old. More than half had at least one year of college.

"The brain drain in rural areas is enormous," said Bob Bergland, agriculture secretary under President Carter and now head of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association. "The kids who stay are the ones who fail to graduate. ... You can't get an employer who requires a high level of skill to come into a place with crummy schools."

And without jobs, people leave.

"If you've got a college degree, about the only thing you can do is become a teacher or a nurse, and there are dozens of applicants for every job," said Anne Smith of Bainville, Mont., who spends her work week 100 miles from her husband so her teacher's salary can help pay for their ranch.

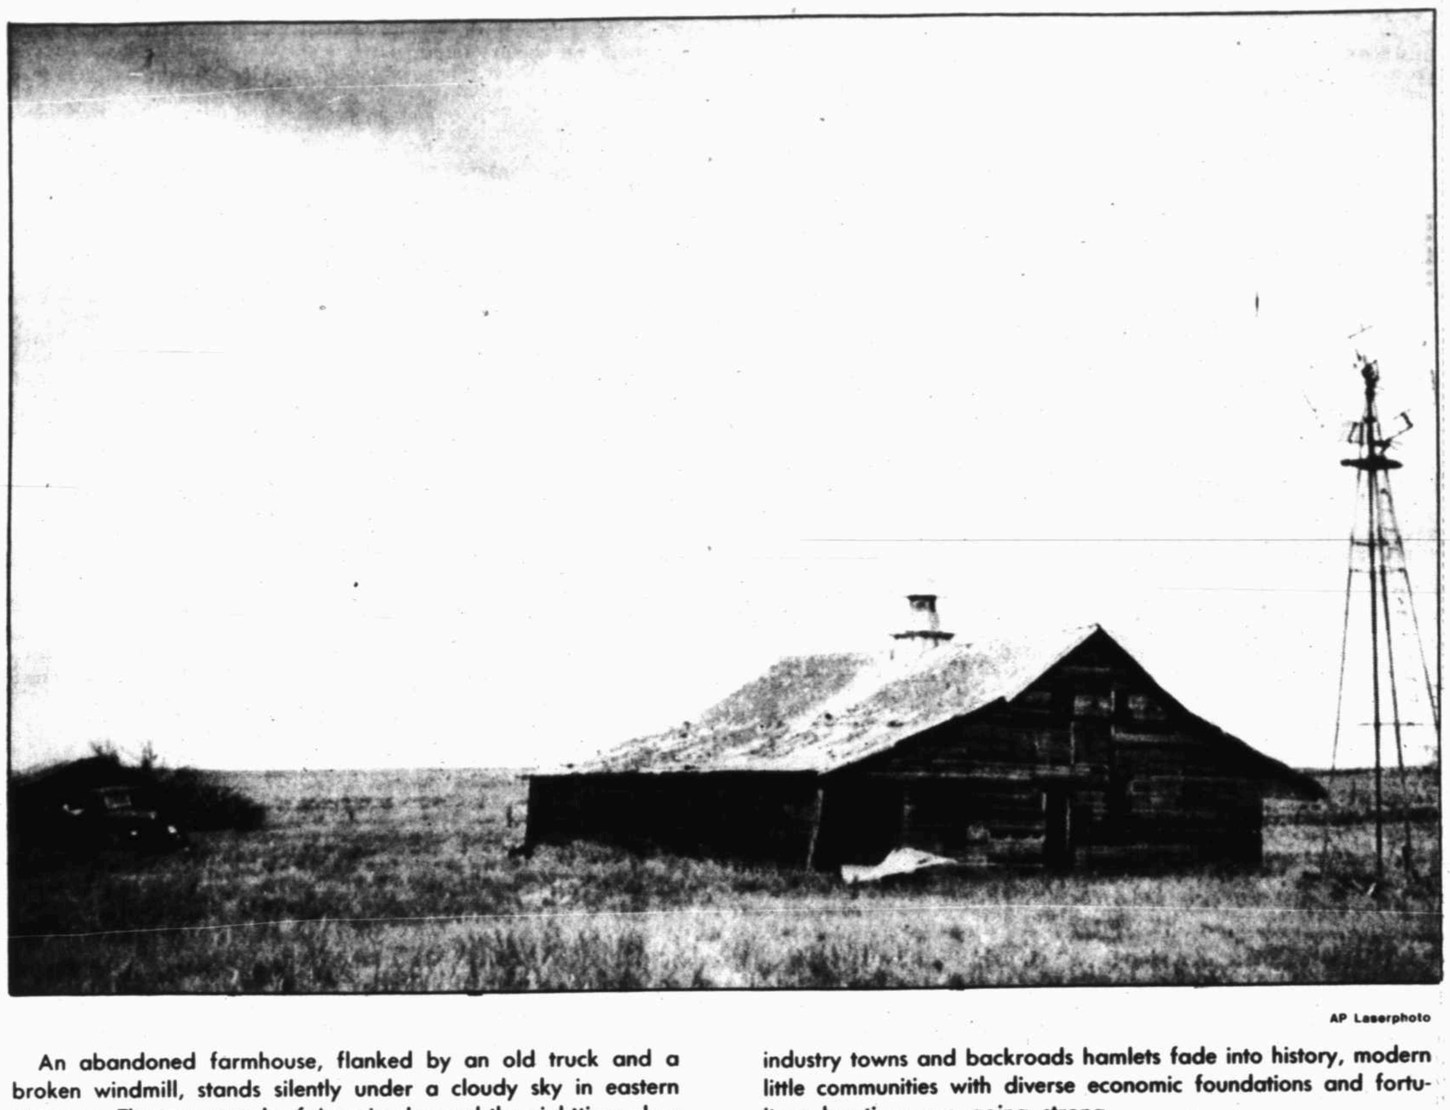

Hard times on ranches and farms in the early '80s also pushed many people off the land.

"Our biggest worry right now is that we've lost an entire generation of farmers," said Heather Ball, an economist with the Texas Department of Agriculture. "You don't go out to rural Texas and find young farmers anymore. The whole future has packed up and moved away."

It's a new chapter in an old story. Farm population has been dropping since 1916 and and small towns have been struggling for more than a century, said Beale, the Agriculture Department demographer. He cites a book titled "Dead Towns of Georgia" — published in 1874.

NEW FIGURES do provide a bit of good news for farmers who toughed out the '80s. For 1988, Agriculture Department studies said net farm income was at a record high of $57.7 billion — though some experts caution that a small percentage of large-scale farmers account for a huge chunk of that.

Also last year, loan delinquencies reported by the Farm Credit System dropped $2 billion to half the level of two years ago. Two thousand farmers filed Chapter 12 bankruptcies, but that was less than a third of 1987's filings.

There is prosperity in some rural areas — often in towns with a unifying core such as a county courthouse or a medical center, usually near a major highway.

"If your town isn't on an interstate, forget it," said James R. Shortridge, a cultural biographer at the University of Kansas.

"Development comes more quickly within 100 miles of a major trading center or a city," Bergland said.

For many small towns, survival is assured with the arrival of a major merchandising center with an anchor store, usually a Wal-Mart.

And yet this regional draw for one town often takes customers away from the Main Street retailers of surrounding communities.

Rex Campbell, a University of Missouri rural sociologist, considers the spread of chain stores a major reason for the shifting rural landscape.

"Wal-Mart is the innovator, they know how to target growth and they're expert marketers and mass merchandisers. They were able to go into smaller markets than K mart or other competitors, and now they're replacing several mom-and-pop businesses, which formerly sold hardware, dry goods, clothes, shoes, and such."

After Wal-Mart and some other discounters moved into Mason City, Iowa, people in outlying towns noticed their business dropping off.

Gene Persons, who has a grocery in Sheffield, 16 miles away, acknowledged, "We sit here and try to do what we can to stop them. ... There's only so many dollars to go around." He and others have formed a "commonwealth" of neighboring small towns that pool resources to promote themselves.

For other pragmatic rural residents, adapting means working in the city in order to live in the countryside.

SOME MISSOURIANS, for example, drive 150 miles each way to the Chrysler Corp. plant in the St. Louis suburb of Fenton to earn $15 an hour, Campbell said. "For every $1 of hourly wage, they'll commute an average of 10 miles each way."

Ultimately, authorities say, these approaches will not be enough to ensure the survival of many little towns. They must rebuild their economies locally — get access to investment money, telecommunications, transportation and educational opportunities. Perhaps most importantly, they must diversify.

"How does rural America participate in the growth of a service-oriented economy? That's the basic underlying question," Beale said. "It can't come out of agriculture. It has to come of the industries driving the national economy."

Rural residents must even look beyond that, to the global economy. Whereas corporations in the '50s and '60s moved to rural America for cheaper labor, now the Third World market is even more enticing.

"What it means for people is the same — someone is out of a job, a small town is dying," said Ann Tickamyer, assistant professor of sociology at the University of Kentucky. "Unless major efforts are taken to re-evaluate what we want in a rural economy, the prognosis is fairly grim."

A few residents, perhaps, will stay on in small towns that don't rethink and adjust, that don't go looking for employers to diversify a one-industry, boom-and-bust economy.

"Those little places are never going to die, there will always be a housing unit or so, but they'll deteriorate," Campbell said. "What has been lost is the heart, and what you're left with is the shell."

91-year-old son of the soil looks back

WELLINGTON, Kan. (AP) — Raymond Frye has spent all of his 91 years in Kansas and become a keen observer of the drastic changes in rural life.

Born to homesteaders when William McKinley was in the White House, Frye has always kept a close kinship with the land.

"My dad and mother farmed 80 acres with horses and mules, and I remember when they passed up the chance to buy another 80 acres for $300 because they were afraid they'd lose it because of the debt."

He went through eight grades in a one-room school, then worked as a janitor and a waiter to attend what is now Kansas State University when it offered high school courses. "But I had to quit in 1919 to come home and get the wheat in that fall." He eventually graduated from Anthony High School.

"When we drove the team to Anthony, which was nine miles away, we took our lunch because it was an all-day trip. It was subsistence life, people had to make their living right there," Frye said.

"The machinery was good-looking and there was pride of ownership. But that's when they got into trouble. I wasn't really surprised when the bottom fell out (in the 1980s), only sad to watch it go."

— Raymond Frye

"When we got cars the towns began to shrink. Transportation meant freedom."

As times got tougher on the farm in the 1920s, Frye supplemented his income by teaching grade school in Freeport in south-central Kansas.

"It had a bank and a post office, three grocery stores, a hotel, and was a thriving wheat community. Now it's down to a dozen families."

As the Great Depression oppressed the land, Frye finally got his degree from Kansas State in 1930, finishing in only two years and working for wages 100 hours a month to support himself and his new bride.

He taught vocational agriculture in various small Kansas towns for 13 years, then became the Sumner County extension agent based in Wellington, a county seat of 8,300 people about 35 miles south of Wichita.

Except for this year's drought, which has decimated the crop, Sumner County traditionally produces more hard red winter wheat than any county in the nation. In 1880, as a major stop on the Chisholm Trail and the Santa Fe Railroad, it boasted 20,886 people. Today there are still just 26,000 residents in the county.

"In the '40s, after the war, things got better for farmers, and in the '50s and '60s life was pretty good," said Frye. "Then I watched as many people thought bigger was better and started thinking they needed $100,000 tractors and $100,000 combines.

"The machinery was good-looking and there was pride of ownership. But that's when they got into trouble. I wasn't really surprised when the bottom fell out (in the 1980s), only sad to watch it go."

A widower without children, Frye has lavished his leisure time and extra money on a modern building to house Sumner County's 4-H activities, extension agents and home economists. He believes in earning a living off the land, but his long life has given him a sense of realism about the future of rural America.

"Farming will continue, our production will continue, but small towns will die out. It's too bad, but I guess that's what they call progress."

He just couldn't stay down on the farm

By TAD BARTIMUS

SHAWNEE MISSION, Kan. (AP) — At 40, Bill Hoch has been gone from his parents' Emporia dairy farm half his life, but he says he carries its early lessons with him every day.

He believes many of his generation left rural life behind because they were profoundly influenced by global images conveyed through mass communications.

"All of a sudden we started seeing things from around the nation, around the world, even from the moon. For our parents that was the stuff of which daydreams were made, not reality. But for us, it could become reality.

"The mid to late '60s created an enormous, almost magnetic pull on people like myself, pulling us away from small-town rural life. The attraction was political, social, artistic, but it all crested on the wave of the communications revolution."

Hoch remembers growing up on the farm and delivering milk to small towns, country schools and neighborhood farms that no longer exist.

"The mid to late '60s created an enormous, almost magnetic pull on people like myself, pulling us away from small-town rural life. The attraction was political, social, artistic, but it all crested on the wave of the communications revolution."

— Bill Hoch

"When you look at rural life and how it's changed in the last 20 years it's easy to get depressed," he said. "I find it destructive and regrettable that so much has disappeared, because beyond the economic impact, the loss has created a vacuum."

Now a resident of this suburb, Hoch regularly enjoys the concerts, plays and sporting events Kansas City offers, "and I'd be reluctant to give that up. I enjoy the amenities of a city." He says he needs the metropolitan environment for his communications business.

But he and his wife, Ellen, visit Emporia frequently. His hometown, 100 miles southwest of Kansas City, has grown from 15,000 residents when he lived there to about 30,000 today.

"There's an enormous sense of stability in knowing my family still lives on that same 100 acres we've owned for the better part of a century."

Hoch's pet pony, Rusty, died only a few years ago at the age of 35 and was lovingly buried in his corral near the ancestral home. A baby raccoon he rescued from a city tree was turned loose to roam free in his parents' pastures. The pull of the place, where wheat still grows and coming home for Christmas is expected, remains strong for Bill Hoch.

"There used to be dozens of trucks and cars coming and going every hour to the dairy. Now Mom and Dad go to town once a day and that's the only dust churned up in the driveway. Even town has changed. It used to be 10 miles away. Now it's grown so much it's only three or four miles to the outskirts."

Hoch is grateful for the values he learned in his first two decades on the farm. He credits them as the foundation upon which he's built his urban life.

"I never intended to stay away. I always thought I would go back. I still think that."

Yes, we get a lot of wind in West Texas. But a gadget like this just can't do the job when you want to mow your lawn.

Letters urge judge to keep woman in jail

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — More than 1,700 people — ranging from teachers to businessmen to preachers — have sent letters and petitions urging that convicted murderer Verna Stafford remain in prison when she is resentenced.

Oklahoma County District Judge Richard Freeman is to resentence Ms. Stafford after hearing testimony Monday and Tuesday. Freeman ruled June 2 that she was sentenced improperly in 1980.

Freeman said he has read each letter and petition. "There's not a vote in favor of Verna," he said.

Freeman said he was surprised by the number of letters and petitions. Normally, judges receive only about a half-dozen letters before a sentencing and those usually are from supporters of the defendants, he said.

"It's highly unusual," Freeman said.

Ms. Stafford, 36, is known for her role in the killings of six employees of the Sirloin Stockade steakhouse in Oklahoma City on July 17, 1978. A month earlier, she also helped kill a Texas man, his wife and son along Interstate 35 near Purcell.

At the time, she was married to Roger Dale Stafford, who is on death row for the nine murders.

Ms. Stafford pleaded guilty on March 11, 1980, to two deaths. She had been serving an indeterminate sentence of 10 years to life in prison for second-degree murder, the result of a plea agreement reached after she had testified against her husband.

She challenged her punishment in May after three other convicted killers with the same type of sentence won appeals and were released.

Freeman said it was clear he had to set aside her punishment because the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals had decided in those cases that certain indeterminate sentences are impermissable.

Ms. Stafford will be eligible for release almost immediately if her new sentence is 18 years or less. She already has been in prison nine years and four months, and she has credit for almost eight more years, her records show.

Freeman said Ms. Stafford's attorney plans to bring letters in support of Ms. Stafford to the resentencing.

"I'm not going to count up the letters pro and con and make a decision," he said. "But the strength of the public opinion is, in some ways, important to the court. Courts are supposed to reflect the morals of the community."

Dog's death regretted

DALLAS (AP) — A spokesman said U.S. Drug Enforcement Agents regret the fatal shooting of a dog guarding a suspected drug laboratory but maintain the animal's death could not be avoided.

"We're not heartless, you know," said DEA group supervisor Bruce Morgan on Thursday.

The pit bull terrier was slain during a raid on a suspected amphetamine laboratory Wednesday night after the animal attacked and bit an agent's leg.

Morgan said the agents felt particularly bad when they found a puppy, apparently the dog's offspring, in the garage.

Inmate found hanged

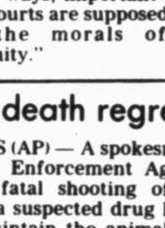

CLEBURNE (AP) — A jailer Friday discovered the hanged body of a 21-year-old inmate at the Johnson County Law Enforcement Center.

Dr. Arthur Raines, Johnson County medical examiner, said the preliminary ruling was suicide.

Center spokeswoman Pam Jetzel said the body of Curtis Guinn Reece was discovered around 4:30 a.m. as a jailer made his half-hour rounds. The inmate appeared to be fine at 4 a.m., she said.

Reece hanged himself using a strip of material from his mattress, and attached it to a metal plate in the ceiling, said Ms. Jetzel.

Alabama man captured in Texas 12 years after escape

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — A former Alabama police officer convicted of murder but free since his escape 12 years ago was behind bars Saturday in Texas, where police said he had adopted a new name and family.

The restaurant worker known for years in San Antonio as Ben Francis Hurst actually was ex-Lt. Jimmy Ray Hurst, 56, convicted in the 1973 gunshot slaying of his wife's boyfriend, authorities said.

Circuit Judge William Sullivan, who sentenced Hurst to life imprisonment for the slaying of Charles "Cooter" Mann, said the Alabama Bureau of Investigation told him Hurst's identity had been confirmed through fingerprints.

San Antonio police arrested Hurst late Thursday, a little more than a week after Alabama investigators asked them to watch a house from which telephone calls had been placed to his mother, Julia Hurst of Talladega. Mrs. Hurst declined comment on the arrest.

"I asked him last night how he escaped, and he said he wouldn't tell: he might want to do it again."
— Detective Bob Farley

Evidence in Hurst's 1973 trial showed he used a female friend to lure Mann, 26, into a wooded area, where he shot him in the face with a shotgun. Hurst had been a fugitive since March 1977, when he made his second escape from an Alabama state prison.

Hurst supervised 12 men with the Talladega Police Department at the time of the killing. He previously was a police officer in nearby Anniston.

A Texas neighbor, who regularly barbecued with Hurst and his family, said the man seemed like a model father to the three children he adopted when he married his wife, Estela Gonzalez Hurst, in 1978.

"You couldn't think Ben would be capable of something like that. He's very friendly. It's just incredible," Linda Lopez said.

Police said Hurst seemed very good-natured.

"He seemed like a real good guy. He was real funny," Detective Bob Farley said. "I asked him last night how he escaped, and he said he wouldn't tell: he might want to do it again."

Police are uncertain whether his wife knew of Hurst's past.

"She just couldn't believe it when I called her. She asked me several times if I was lying," Farley said. The Hurst family has an unlisted telephone number in San Antonio.

Hurst and his wife in Talladega had five children, records show. It was unclear whether they remained married.

Richard Moreno, a police investigator in San Antonio, said Hurst had not made any effort to change his appearance, although he seemed to have aged well beyond his years while on the run.

Hurst offered no resistance when confronted outside the Denny's restaurant where he told officers he had worked for the past eight years as a cook.

"Oh God, Jesus, no," said the restaurant's evening manager when contacted by telephone Friday. She declined further comment and would not give her name.

Police said Hurst apparently apparently had spent some time in South Carolina, since a drivers license from that state was used to obtain his Texas license.

Sandy Perez, a spokeswoman with the San Antonio Police Department, said Hurst was being held without bond on two fugitive warrants. He will be returned to Alabama as soon as possible, she said.

Dallas police again walking beat

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas police have a trove of technology with which to arm themselves: helicopters, computer-equipped patrol cars and even genetic tests that can identify a murderer or victim from a speck of blood.

And they have the feet of officer Charles Marsh and Cpl. J.W. Beard.

In a high-tech world, Marsh and Beard walk a 10-block beat in a formerly drug-infected enclave of South Dallas, talking to people about their hobbies, children and worries. Appearances aside, these two officers represent a popular innovation in law enforcement in which police immerse themselves in a neighborhood to prevent crimes and restore residents' sense of well being.

In South Dallas, the innovation is working. "The community is beginning to talk to us now," said Beard, a 12-year veteran of the force, as he and Marsh began their foot patrol in an area once deemed the city's narcotics war zone.

"These people," added Marsh, "see a change coming."

The change is coming from what experts call community policing. More than 300 departments have tried it in some form, said Robert Trojanowicz, who teaches police officials how to adapt the concept. The idea, experts say, is to tighten the partnership between community and police.

"The reason for its inception is that most police departments have fewer resources than they had 10 years ago. So how can we deal with ever-increasing crimes? You have to actively solicit the input of the citizens. They have to help us more," said Trojanowicz, director of Michigan State University's School of Criminal Justice.

PUT SIMPLY, community policing involves almost any technique that gets patrol officers out of their cars and into people's homes and lives. On Houston's West Side, for example, a special station of 325 officers, crime analysts and detectives are assigned to specific neighborhoods — all in an attempt to learn what the people living there want and to help them get it.

The idea, said West Side commander Capt. Bill Young, is to identify neighborhood problems, both those relating to crime and other difficulties such as trash pickup and burned-out street lights.

"The bottom line is that it is a reverting back to that era when police officers were part of the community, not apart from it," he said.

In the Rio Grande Valley city of McAllen, the entire force of 171 officers has received community training, and the department has set up six outreach stations, which serve residents in the same way that settlement houses did immigrants at the turn of the century. Recently, for example, the outreach stations held classes on homemade pesticides.

For Chief Alejandro Longorio, it's all part of knowing the community — and its problems — better.

"For the last decade or so or better than that, we've strictly been a responsive organization. We get a call and answer it," Longorio said. "Now we're trying to get ahead of the game."

Dallas has used the concept for several years in its adopt-a-block program, neighborhood storefronts and foot patrols in places like Maple Avenue, said Deputy Chief Ray Hawkins, who studied community policing before taking over the crimes against persons unit late last year.

ALL THE PROGRAMS come down to a central goal of trying to get neighborhoods to identify what they want from police so limited resources won't be wasted.

"If we can fix whatever is causing the problem, we don't have to keep going back and arresting people," Hawkins explained.

Marsh and Beard represent the latest, and perhaps the most intensive, use of the community policing idea in Dallas. They signal an innovation that Alvis Gilbert, who owns two apartment buildings on their tiny beat, calls "the greatest thing since the invention of bologna."

In fact, Marsh and Beard are the finishing touches of Operation CLEAN, an anti-drug program that began in mid-March when police saturated the South Dallas neighborhood, making 80 arrests and seizing narcotics and guns. Later, city crews cleaned up vacant lots, boarded up vacant buildings and demolished others.

Before that assault, the little strip of South Dallas bounded by Ervay, Parnell, Grand and South was the city's dark and bloody ground in the battle against crack, a cheap, highly addictive form of cocaine. Children became too frightened to use a neighborhood park, and their parents too uneasy to sit outside on a hot evening.

"You can't enjoy yourself dodging and ducking bullets," said Bennie Carthron, 47, who in the last 18 months has had his apartment broken into, his dog shot to death and his sense of security threatened countless times by reports from automatic weapons. "They got to get that crack, and they'll steal anything you got to get it."

THE NEIGHBORHOOD has not become a paradise. Indeed, one resident complained to Beard and Marsh last week that automatic gunfire from across the street was still breaking the peace of the last hours before dawn. And neighborhood graffiti crudely glorifies the bartering of sex for crack.

But the neighborhood has been pacified. Reports of serious crimes dropped 70 percent in about a month's time, Beard said. Even more encouraging, Beard and Marsh said, is that neighborhood residents seem more willing to report criminal activity.

A couple of weeks ago, police arrested thieves who were ripping the copper plumbing out of a vacant apartment building. That wouldn't have occurred a few months ago, the officers said.

"People were afraid to speak up. There was a lot of retaliation," Beard said.

Beard and Marsh achieved that small victory after spending hours inside the modest apartments and duplexes of the neighborhood, talking to nearly every one of the 150 or so residents in the 10 blocks.

When they were done, Beard and Marsh exhausted their supply of business cards and had filled a large looseleaf notebook with each resident's name, age and address, as well as children's names and the names of relatives to call in emergencies.

Gaining people's confidence hasn't been easy. On their first day on the job in late March, they approached a domino game only to see the players scatter in fear.

"The only time they saw police in the past is when officers wanted to ask them something," said Marsh, who has been with the department for four years. "They were sort of apprehensive. They were used to police just driving by."

IN FACT, Marsh and Beard have been careful not to ask too many questions. "We only ask people's ages — not their DOBs (dates of birth, which are a key to checking criminal records). We didn't want them to think we were going to get a rap sheet on them," Beard said.

Some people remain uneasy at the sight of the officers, suspicious of their intentions and unmoved by their friendly greetings. One afternoon last week, two women were quickly trying to hide the beers they were drinking as the partners approached. Marsh and Beard only laughed and joked why the women weren't offering a male friend any liquid refreshment.

After all, Beard had explained earlier, "most of these people just want to be left alone and be able to sit on the front step and drink a cool one without having bullets fly over their heads."

As Beard and Marsh strolled through the neighborhood, they stopped to chat with Linnie Broadnax, 79, who runs the Ebony apartments with her husband, Henry. Then, it was upstairs to check on Otis Ervin, a 72-year-old man the officers hadn't seen for several days. Ervin engaged them in a long conversation that skipped from the earthquake in Mexico to classical music to his Air Force duty in Tokyo more than 35 years ago.

The patrol continued in much the same way as the officers inquired about people's health and occasionally heard complaints about crime. Those that they couldn't handle during their day watch were passed on to the patrolmen who periodically drive through the neighborhood at night.

Ramon Galindo has taught his grandchildren, Jennifer and Jason Caballero, foreground, to keep the art of magic alive in their family. Last year, the youngsters won the Texas Association of Magicians' junior trophy.

Texas man's magic dreams passed on to grandchildren

AUSTIN (AP) — Since he was 8 years old, Ramon G. Galindo has dreamed of being a professional magician, traveling around the world and showcasing his bird tricks.

But reality set in. There was World War II, where he fought in the Battle of the Bulge and in Czechoslovakia. After the war, he returned home, married and raised a family.

"I wanted to travel as a professional, but that meant living out of a suitcase," said Galindo, 68, the owner of Ace Custom Tailors. "It's hard to establish a business and raise a family and do that, too."

Today, shades of Galindo's dream are coming back with his grandchildren.

Jennifer and Jason Galindo Caballero, two of Galindo's seven grandchildren, recently traveled to San Diego to perform at a convention that drew magicians from 18 countries. The International Brotherhood of Magicians convention drew well-known magicians such as David Copperfield and Harry Blackstone.

Last year in Fort Worth, the youngsters — who live in El Paso — won the Texas Association of Magicians junior trophy — a fact noted on the business cards they give out at parties and conventions where they perform.

Galindo, who has kept a hand in the world of magic, has been training Jennifer, 9, and Jason, 11, for about five years.

It seemed natural that "magic fever" would rub off on the two. Galindo had trained his two daughters as his magician's assistants, including the youngsters' mother, Josie G. Caballero.

Jennifer said she became interested in magic when she was about 4 years old and her grandfather tried a levitation trick on her. Jason also decided he wanted to learn after watching his grandfather.

Now, Jennifer can do disappearing soda cap tricks as well as magic cards. Jason does handkerchiefs and disappearing birds — including doves and parakeets.

"It's not hard," Jason said. "After you do it over and over, it becomes easy. But it is hard to rehearse when you want to watch TV or play."

The young magicians said they don't practice much at home in El Paso, but do so when they visit their grandfather during spring break and in the summer. In a small studio Galindo has built — complete with spotlights and video cameras — the two practice their routines and then critique the videos so they can improve not only their technique, but their stage presence as well.

"That's very important," Galindo said. "Notice how Jason smiles every time he does a new trick."

That presence is enhanced by the use of charro costumes. Galindo wore a charro outfit when he performed a couple of decades ago, and because no one else was doing so, he thought the youngsters should continue the tradition.

Galindo thinks it was prophetic that his grandchildren attended their first convention in Corpus Christi as he did. They also won a first-place trophy in Fort Worth, where 32 years ago he won a trophy at the Texas Association of Magicians convention for most original act.

"I was filming them when they won the trophy," Galindo said. "You should have seen me. My eyes were rivers of tears. I couldn't believe it."

Model ship builder finds homes for his craft inside old light bulbs

TEXAS CITY (AP) — Building model ships in a bottle has been a popular pastime for hobbyists around the world — dating back many centuries.

Long hours are required to assemble a ship by passing the parts through the small pouring hole of a bottle and then assembling the vessel inside.

But whoever heard of building a ship inside a light bulb?

After a co-worker suggested he try such a feat 10 years ago, Norman Kautz has transformed his model ship building into a very unique hobby.

Kautz, a machinist for Sterling Chemical, built the first of his nearly 200 ships-in-a-bottle in 1952.

Since his co-worker's idea, Kautz has made 63 of the light bulb variety.

Creating such a ship takes Kautz about a week, depending on his daily schedule. He gets the burned-out, 400-watt sodium mercury vapor bulbs from work and brings them home for cleaning. The bulbs measure 10½-inches long and 4½-inches in diameter.

To make his ships, Kautz first cuts out the pieces from balsa wood and puts the ship together without gluing it.

Sails made of paper envelopes are added and the entire model is painted. The ship is then disassembled.

Next, while operating through a hole 1⅛-inch in diameter — at the end of the bulb that screws into the socket — Kautz carefully places the parts inside.

Using tools that he often has to make for himself, he arranges the pieces inside the bulb and glues them in place.

Because he must chip away a porcelain shield covering the opening of the bulb, Kautz loses about one out of every three bulbs by accidentally breaking them.

Many ship builders assemble their boats outside the bottle so that they can be folded on hinges to fit through the bottle's opening — a procedure called "pull ups." The ship is then inserted and erected inside with a simple pull.

Kautz, however, still prefers to build his the old fashion way — one piece at a time.

Choco Gonzalez Meza sees building human potential as the prime role of San Antonio's YWCA, where she serves as director.

YWCA director working for change in San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Choco Gonzalez Meza remembers gaping with childhood awe as her father drove the family around the nicer parts of Uvalde in his black 1948 Chevrolet.

The ride always ended with a stop at the Dairy Queen, where her parents would buy a round of ice cream cones — the only treat they could afford — for Ms. Meza, her three older brothers and sister.

It is not her fondest childhood memory, but it is one that has had a lasting effect.

"I remember this feeling of, 'It's not fair,' " Ms. Meza, executive director of the YWCA, said while munching sunflower seeds in her office earlier this week. "I couldn't understand why their yards looked so pretty, or why they had more Christmas lights than me."

Today, at 37, Ms. Meza understands. But she is trying to make a change.

It is a big order for the Mexican native whose goal of "building human potential" extends far beyond the walls of her modest YWCA office.

"I have a background with Hispanics and a background with women, but I think what's real important is human services," she said. "To me, building human potential is key."

Ms. Meza's personal crusade has crossed both professional and political lines.

Under her leadership, the YWCA has grown from a budget of $500,000 with 30 employees nearly six years ago to $1.7 million with 100 workers and after-school programs at five local housing projects.

Her career began in 1977 when the late Willie Velasquez recruited her as research director for the Southwest Voter Registration Education Project. Since then, she has been active in numerous political events.

Also, Ms. Meza's involvement in women's issues has been extensive, earning her many awards including induction this year into the San Antonio Women's Hall of Fame.

But the soft-spoken mother of two will not tell you that. Nor will her office walls. Instead of displaying plaques and certificates, most of which she keeps hidden at home or stuffed inside her personnel file, Ms. Meza decorates her surroundings with crayon drawings by her 7-year-old daughter, Ivalis.

She also brags on her 14-year-old son, Danny, who is a City Council intern and wants to become either a lawyer or a judge and maybe own stock in Pepsi-Cola, Coca-Cola or Oreo cookies.

"When I was his age I didn't even know what stock was," Ms. Meza said.

Texan to relive D-Day on television

Waco man will join newscaster on trip to Utah Beach

WACO (AP) — Paul Marable is going back to Utah Beach.

A few million Americans will watch his journey, thanks to public television reporter Bill Moyers, whose program about the trip is to be broadcast next spring.

Marable, vice-chairman of First Savings and Loan Association, leaves Aug. 23 for Europe, to stand again on the beach where he landed on D-Day-plus-two, and the French hill where German soldiers captured him 12 days later.

"Bill Moyers wants me to take him to that hill, and go on camera and explain what happened," said Marable, who will be one of about a dozen World War II veterans who will share personal memories at war sites with Moyers.

The veterans and others interested in military history will be part of a University of Texas travel-study group. The two-week tour will visit major European battlefields and historic sites of World War II. Moyers's program about the trip is scheduled to be broadcast around the 45th anniversary of Victory-in-Europe Day on May 8, 1990.

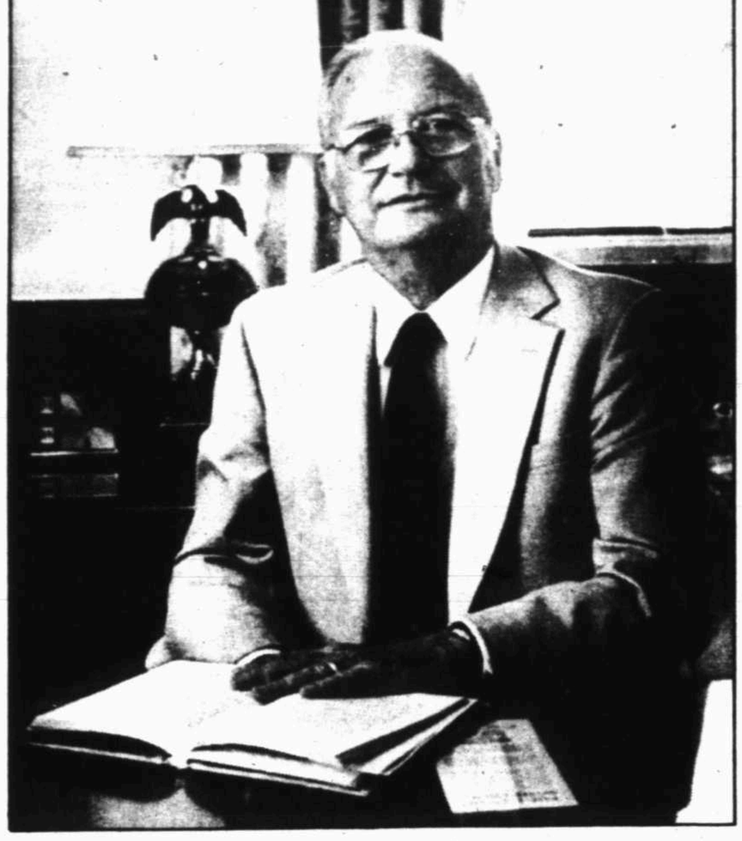

The trip has been organized and led during the last three summers by Thomas Hatfield, dean of the UT Division of Continuing Education.

"Moyers's intention is not to make a documentary about war, but about the effects of war on individuals, on their values, their careers, and their families," Hatfield said. "He will ask them, these 45 years later, about what they saw or did at these places during the war. He wants these men with the rich stories to have a chance to tell them to the American people."

Most members of the travel-study group responded to mailings describing the upcoming tour, Hatfield said. Marable's daughter, Betty Sue Flowers, a UT faculty member, has worked as a consultant and editor for Moyers on other projects. When Ms. Flowers showed Moyers her father's book of memoirs about the war, Moyers invited Marable to join the program.

Group members will fly to London, then travel to the beaches of Normandy and to other battlefields, stopping along the way for talks by military-history experts. Moyers and a film crew will follow the group's bus in a van.

"They will leave us and go to the sites where the veterans saw combat and interview them there," Hatfield said, giving as an example the hilltop where Marable was captured in June 1944. "Mr. Marable tells me as a young man it was burned into his memory, and he will be able to find it again."

Paul Marable, vice chairman of First Savings and Loan in Waco, will recount his story of the D-Day invasion for millions of Americans in an upcoming PBS television news program.

Marable, now 67, landed on Utah Beach two days after D-Day, escorting two trucks loaded with ammunition, then directing his men to their assembly point. He was a 22-year-old second lieutenant.

"Was I afraid? I think the term 'exhilaration' describes it best. Maybe fear was part of that. Or maybe it was anxiety," Marable said, recalling his feelings that day as he swung down the side of the transport ship on a rope ladder.

This will not be Marable's first visit back to the beach. In 1971, he and his wife, Betty, went back to Normandy.

"I could not pinpoint the very 50 yards of beach, but a monument to the 90th Infantry Division has been erected on a German gun emplacement there. ... I had a strange feeling while I was there," Marable said. "Later, I realized it was because I could walk upright — not running around, bent over, then stop and fall down."

His division's mission was to cross the peninsula and stop the Germans from escaping or being reenforced. Along the way, on June 19, 1944, Marable was captured.

He ended up in a POW camp in Poland after spending two months marching, riding charcoal-burning trucks, and crowding into boxcars so tightly "in sleeping, we had to all turn the same direction on our sides. Then when we got so sore we couldn't stand it, we all changed sides."

Marable didn't help dig the escape tunnel prisoners were working on in his POW camp. He didn't even know where it was, but he helped hide the dirt, carrying it in a tube inside his trousers, and scuffling his feet through the snow so the dirt would be hidden in the mud.

The result was feet so badly swollen his toenails cracked, meaning he couldn't wear shoes, despite temperatures that dropped to 40 degrees below zero.

Five months after he arrived at the Polish prison, most of the prisoners were marched out of the camp as the Germans fled the approaching Russian liberators. Marable, unable to walk because of his swollen feet, remained behind with 30 to 40 other sick, wounded and lame men. They feasted on sugar found in the warehouse — and beef from a cow the Russians provided.

"Everyone got so sick," he said.

Several years ago, Marable wrote his war memoirs, mostly about his capture and imprisonment. As a gift while he worked for the Waco Chamber of Commerce, friends and colleagues had the memoirs reprinted in hardback books. Few battle stories are included — but not because Marable has forgotten them.

"Bill Moyers says in a letter that he hopes to have us recapture our emotions when we're visiting these places over there," Marable said. "And one question he mentions is what will I tell my children and grandchildren. And my answer is, 'Nothing.' I don't talk about the battle stories. I don't really want to recall that."

Soldiers learn street-fighting technique in Fort Hood 'town'

FORT HOOD (AP) — Sgt. Doris Adams, running the point for her squad, darted across the rubble-strewn street, past the burned-out hull of a car, in front of the German street signs and slammed into the concrete outer wall of the hotel building.

Other members of the security team followed her, fanning out with clocklike precision to different building corners in a pre-determined pattern.

All were armed with M-16s.

Behind them, an M-1 tank lumbered through the winding streets. Adams motioned to her comrades to hold position. The tank stopped.

All was quiet. Then Staff Sgt. Grady Johnson, who had stood in the street watching the soldiers maneuver, shook his head and spoke:

"What's something we forgot? What did we forget?"

NO ANSWER. He turned his back on the squad and looked at the large building a few dozen yards away. He motioned with his hand.

Someone reacted, firing toward the third floor. A figure appeared in the window.

Too late, Johnson explained. Had the person standing in the window been a real sniper, Adams and her buddies would be dead.

The enemy sniper was really a Fort Hood tank corps sergeant. The guns used by the squad fired blanks and were equipped with an elaborate laser system used to register kills in war games.

And the town wasn't a European village but in fact a $7.8 million U.S. Army training center, built on a wooded hilltop in an isolated corner of the post.

St. Elijiah, the name given to the Military Operations in Urban Terrain facility, is one of a handful of training centers designed to turn soldiers into street fighters.

The site was created on the premise that in a conventional war, much of the fighting will be in Europe's cities and villages.

Urban warfare poses problems not addressed in most Army training, said Sgt. 1st Class Patrick Kennedy, the chief instructor here.

"In a jungle, you can be separated by foliage but you can still talk to your buddies," he said.

"In a city, you're separated by reinforced concrete. You can't talk to your buddies. You've got enemy on top of you, you've got enemy below you and enemy around you."

SO THE ARMY built St. Elijiah, a 32-building compound designed like a European village.

It's got hotels, a school, stores, homes, a pair of gas stations and a police station, each built as authentically as possible.

There's even a four-foot sewer to teach subterranean search techniques.

And during a one-week training course, the students — ranging from sergeants to captains — will become familiar with every inch of the town by climbing, running, crawling, rolling and rappeling their way through a course designed to teach them how to pass the skills on to their soldiers.

"This is down and dirty training," Kennedy said.

Here soldiers learn to wear chicken wire on their feet when negotiating a sewer, using the mesh as a mountain climber would ice hooks.

They learn to fashion a weighted string that's tied to the end of a pole to check the ground in front for booby traps.

They learn to put a grenade in a shoe before tossing it up a stairway so the explosive doesn't roll back on the hurler.

They're also taught when not to use a grenade.

"If you're in a home, most of the walls are made of wood," Kennedy said. If your buddies are against the wall, you don't toss a grenade into the room behind them. You don't want to frag your buddies."

THE CLASSES HERE are far from basic training for grunts. There is a class that teaches the correct way to leave a room. There are instructions in building concertina (the rolled military barbed wire) fences.

There's even a class in learning how to make and throw Molotov cocktails.

The idea is to teach the 40 students how to fight their way through a concrete jungle without leveling it.

"People have to be familiar with cities," Kennedy said. "You don't rubble cities. That's Hollywood."

Nor do they kill everything that moves.

"We don't want to kill friendlies," he said, using the military term for sympathetic civilian bystanders. He added in jest: "We just want to kill communists."

St. Elijiah is ambitious; high tech it isn't.

"We're teaching things that can be used by a soldier who's just carrying beans and bullets," Kennedy said.

Adams' squad was learning to escort a tank through a town.

"In the field, a tank is relatively safe," Kennedy said. "But in a town, the size of the tank is magnified 50 times."

The normally invulnerable machine becomes an easy target because of its lack of maneuverability in tight places and because drivers can only see 25 percent of what's around them.

The technique used involves tossing out smoke grenades and having an advance team — the security squad — go around each corner well in advance of the tank.

A marksman at the first corner keeps an eye out while the squad moves. If the way is clear, the tank follows. Then comes another squad that watches the tank's rear.

On the first run through, Adams ran in the rear guard. The squad leader took the security team around the first corner and through the clouds of white smoke.

Kennedy, standing on the roof of a nearby four-story building, was not pleased with what he saw.

"Put your weapon around the corner so you can shoot down the street," he admonished the marksman. The squad bolted for the far side of the street.

Kennedy erupted.

"You weren't covering nobody!"

He sprang for the stairs down.

As the drill continued, Staff Sgt. Robert Lucas waited just inside a doorway, unknown to the squad.

He supervises the armored vehicles — the M-1 tank and Bradley armored personnel carrier — that were being used in that day's exercises.

Today, like the guy on the third floor, he was playing sniper.

"I'm supposed to ambush the rear guard," he said.

He did. Four members ran by and didn't notice him even though he stood a few feet from the street.

"Killed four guys and they didn't even know it," he said.

Competition isn't the motive here, Kennedy said.

"We want to teach these people things that'll help them out," he said. "Things they can pass on to their people."

Kennedy, a 17-year soldier, has been teaching here since the center opened two years ago. He and his staff took a look at the pristine village site and decided it needed a war-torn look.

They trashed it themselves, burning car tires against walls to make them look grimy and getting discarded bricks and blocks to create rubble.

Kennedy and his cadre — the eight non-commissioned officers who assist him — operate out of a metal building on the edge of town that holds equipment and the classroom. Two models, of the main village and a smaller, 16-building site, sit under a sign that says "TRAIN OR DIE."

Students here are instructed in theory for two days and then take the live-action classes. They take written tests twice daily and a final test on the fifth day.

A highly visible member of Kennedy's staff is Corporal Thug, a poodle that has free run of the site.

Fetching, a quality that's desirable in most dogs, may be Thug's downfall one day, Kennedy said.

"He likes to go after those simulated grenades," Kennedy said, smirking. "We've got to stay on him about that."

During a class on Molotov cocktails on a recent day, Thug tried several times to retrieve bombs that didn't break open. Kennedy scolded him each time.

Between Thug's escapades, Sgt. Gerthart Lewis gave students a quick lesson in mixing the bomb's contents.

The Molotov cocktail is useless in most instances, Kennedy chipped in. The best use, he added, is to make tank drivers lock themselves up in their vehicle for protection, known in the military as "buttoning up."

Making a tank crew button up makes the tank useless in town and dependent on its soldier escort.

Controversy mars Bradshaw's induction

By RUSTY MILLER

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — Terry Bradshaw, never one to avoid controversy, jumped right into one at his induction into the Pro Football Hall of Fame Saturday.

The former Pittsburgh Steeler quarterback had been criticized for choosing his CBS Sports television partner, Verne Lundquist, to be his presenter, rather than a former coach or teammate.

"It's the greatest day of my life and I get nailed down here," Bradshaw said at a news conference prior to the induction ceremonies. "What's with you people? My choice is very simple. For all you Pittsburghers, listen one more time and see if you all can't get this through your head.

"(Former Steeler owner) Art Rooney is gone. He was my presenter, but he's dead, people. That's the only person that would have represented me. The reason is, he and I were close.

"And I'm the type of person, in an event like this, that I'm not going to have some athlete or coach present me who I'm not going to see ever again."

Bradshaw said he selected Lundquist because "I want someone I was close to."

Bradshaw, Mel Blount, Art Shell and Willie Wood knew the joy of winning when they starred in the NFL.

They shared that feeling again at the induction.

"I loved winning. I didn't care. I just wanted to win," Bradshaw said when asked how he wanted to be remembered. "I'd like people to say nothing else but, 'That sucker just loved to win.' That would cover it pretty good."

Bradshaw

Blount

Shell

Wood

The same could be said for the other three inductees.

Bradshaw was the quarterback and Blount a cornerback as Pittsburgh won four Super Bowl championships. Willie Wood was at safety as Green Bay won two Super Bowls. Shell played offensive tackle as the Raiders won two Super Bowls.

The Packers dominated the 1960's. The Steelers won their four Super Bowls in the 1970's and 1980's. And the Raiders had a higher winning percentage than any pro sports franchise over those years.

Blount said it was no coincidence that the four inductees came from such successful backgrounds.

"One of the great things about the Steelers is that we drew strength from one another," he said. "It wasn't a black guy you drew it from. It was a group of men who had a lot of respect for one another, who had a lot of talent and who had a lot of love of the game."

Blount said it wasn't easy being on the ground floor of the Steelers' building years.

"The first three or four years were very difficult," he said.

"First of all, we had to clean up our image in a town that didn't fit our character. Pittsburgh was known as a dirty steel mill town. The players were known as a bunch of guys who would drink and get in bar fights. So we had a difficult task in front of us. We had to turn around our image and gain the confidence and respect of the the fans. And we had to win. That was the only way to do it."

Blount intercepted 57 passes and recovered 13 opposing fumbles during his 14-year career. He is currently director of player relations in the NFL office.

In his induction speech, he said, "this is a long way from a small farm near Vidalia, Georgia."

The youngest of 11 children, he thanked his parents and said, "It doesn't matter where you come from. It's where you're going. That is the difference between failure and success."

Blount was presented by Dan Rooney, president of the Steelers.

Drafted in the third round out of Southern University in 1970, Blount said, "I thought somebody had cursed me" when told he had been taken by the Steelers.

Not so Bradshaw.

Gee moves to five under

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Bobby Gee would seem to have this year's Men's City Golf Championship in the bag after shooting 64 and 66 on the first two days for a five-shot lead going into today's final round at Hogan Park.

Still, the Texas A&M junior-to-be is looking over his shoulder. And with good reason.

Two-time city champion Steve Whiteside continued to lurk in the shadows with a second-round 66. Sure, Whiteside's two-day total of 135 puts him five shots behind Gee.

Not far enough, Gee said.

"You have to remember who's back there," he said. "I have a lot of respect for Steve's game.

"I think I need to play like I've been playing to win."

In other words, he has to hit well off the tee and chip to within sight of a birdie. Both Whiteside and fourth-place Kelly Cox think Gee could be tough to catch.

"He's hitting the ball so well, and you know he's not going to make very many mistakes," Whiteside said.

"Bobby's in the driver's seat," Cox added. "It's almost going to take birdies for me and bogeys for him."

After starting the day two strokes off the pace, Cox may have played himself out of title contention with a three-over par 39 on the front nine, but rebounded to shoot below par on the back nine. Still, he's nine shots behind Gee going into the final day.

"I was just trying to be aggressive, but I three-putted three holes and you just can't afford to do that.

"Tomorrow they could go in. It'll be a whole new day."

Incredible as it may sound, both Gee and Whiteside could have lowered their 66s by two or three strokes if a couple of long putts hadn't have lipped out for each man.

Angels fall to first place tie

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Led by Ruben Amaro's 4-for-5, Midland's Angels lashed out 15 hits, yet wound up not only losing to El Paso, 9-6, before 2,314 at Angels Stadium Saturday night, but tumbled into a tie for first place in the Texas League West with the Diablos.

On Friday night, Bob Rose hit for the cycle, the first time ever in a baseball career that stretches back to Little League days, Midland collected 13 hits and also lost to El Paso.

You figure it out.

El Paso has 30 hits over the two games, but Midland has hit eight doubles, two triples and two homers compared to three doubles and two homers for the Diablos.

The secret may be that Midland has used 11 pitchers in the two games to a mere five for El Paso.

In any case, despite the first place tie, neither one deserves to be in first, not with 22-23 records. The TL West is looking like the AL (L)east.

THIS WAS another one that slipped away in the late innings.

Despite Dave Martinez' withdrawal three batters into the first inning with back stiffness, Midland held a 4-1 lead going into the sixth when Tim Burcham suddenly lost his stuff.

Sandy Guerrero powered a two-run homer to right to cut Midland's lead to 4-3 and when Shon Ashley singled, his second hit of a four-hit night, it brought lefty Frank DeMichele came out of the bullpen. A walk to Greg Edge, a force out, a wild pitch moving the runners to second and third set the stage for Ramon Sambo's bad hop single down the right field line. Sambo chopped the ball in front of the plate, but it bounced high enough to go over first baseman Cris Cron's head for two runs and a 5-4 lead.

An error on a Gary DiSarcina grounder and Amaro's double to right tied it in the sixth, but El Paso kept scoring. Ashley's two-run double in the seventh hung the loss on Luis Merejo, 5-4, who hasn't been the same since going on the DL with a bad heel.

Lefthander Jim Townsend was touched for runs in the eighth and ninth, only one of which was earned.

So Chris Cron's 19th homer in the fourth and enough hitting to win most games went for naught.

TD's future dim after surgery

By JOHN MOSSMAN

GREELEY, Colo. (AP) — Denver's Tony Dorsett, the NFL's No. 2 all-time rusher, underwent major reconstructive knee surgery on Saturday, leaving his football future in jeopardy.

Dorsett, 35, injured his left knee Thursday in a non-contact passing drill He suffered a torn anterior cruciate ligament, a torn lateral cartilage and a partial tear of the medial collateral ligament.

Using an arthroscope, Broncos' team physician Dr. Roger Greenberg reconstructed the anterior cruciate ligament and repaired the cartilage. The medial collateral ligament will be allowed to heal on its own.

JIMMY PATTERSON

Give the gentleman a microphone

And now ladies and gentlemen, making his return to The Punchline Club, please put your hands together and welcome back one of your favorites ... a former Southwest Conference coach turned stand-up comic — he calls himself The Spikester — everyone say hello again to the one, the only, Spike Dykes ... (wild applause) ...

Patterson

OK, so it's a dream. For now at least. But if Spike ever loses his job security as Texas Tech's head coach — which is bound to happen someday, as it does to all coaches — this guy could hit the college circuit. Instead of standing on the sidelines, he could stand on stage and keep the audience rolling.

He's the heir apparent to Jerry Clower. Well, not quite as bad as Clower, but he is kinda cornball. And he also happens to be a genuinely funny man. Sort of like Andy Griffith when he used to do his routine about a country boy trying to explain the first game of football he'd ever seen.

During a press conference last week in Dallas, Dykes' timing and delivery approached really good comedy, which takes either the work of a naturally funny guy, or of someone who stands in front of a mirror to make sure he has all his punchlines in place. Spike's a little of both.

(I can just picture him in front of the mirror, straightening that flaming red jacket, tugging at his collar, cocking his head from one side to the other. "No respect, no respect at all," Spike would say to himself in his best Rodney Dangerfield.)

While impossible to portray Spike's sense of timing in print, you can at least get a feel for his sense of humor:

■ On his education: "I went to Rice in 1955, but there wasn't enough academic challenge for me so I changed schools."

■ On the absence of the kicking tee on extra points this season, a new rule instituted by the NCAA rules committee: "They wanted to stay in Anaheim an extra day, and the only way they could do that was to make a new rule."

■ On sophomore placekicker Lin Elliott: "The guy we have coming back as a kicker is fair. He's OK, I guess ... We took the tee out and in the first scrimmage we had, we said 'We'll just see if he can kick it.' Well, he had a 48 yarder, he kicked it. Then he had a 59 yarder, he kicked it. We thought 'My God.' The next time, he had a 60 yarder, and we said 'We'll he can't make three in a row.' He kicked it. Later he had a 62 yarder, and we said to ourselves 'Well, let's just let him try, hell it won't hurt anything.' He kicked it. He went through the spring without missing a field goal. So I wouldn't be surprised if he missed everyone he kicked this fall."

■ On 1989 Tech graduate Tyrone Thurman, and whether he will make the Dallas Cowboys, despite his small build: "He's 5-2, 130. How big do you have to be to play in the NFL?"

■ On one of the Red Raiders' freshmen signees who is currently in a Florida instructional baseball league: "He's pitching down there somewhere, but I understand he's walked 22 guys in seven innings, so he's not gonna be down there for long."

Humor aside for a moment, Dykes continues to speak kindly of everyone's favorite Rebel/Raider: Tyrone.

Like Spike, Tyrone has reached that level of recognition — at least in these parts — when last names aren't necessary.

"He's not real big, but for four years, he lacked about 80 yards at becoming the all-time leader in NCAA history in return yardage. He's won a lot of games for us. He's what college football is all about."

With the graduation of Billy Joe Tolliver, Tyrone and the rest of Tech's 1988 receiving crew, a sense of humor would be mighty handy for Spike. And if, as is widely expected, the Red Raiders fail to make it to a bowl game this season, Spike can just turn to all of the alumni and say "Excuuuuuse Me!!"

Cocaine cause of Buccaneers' downfall

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — Cocaine use by Tampa Bay Buccaneers at the start of the decade disrupted the team and was a factor in the franchise's decline, owner Hugh Culverhouse and other team executives say.

Cocaine use was a new phenomenon at the time, and assistant to the president Phil Krueger acknowledges it was one for which he and the NFL were unprepared.

"We had some key players who were involved with drugs — with cocaine," he told the Tampa Tribune, but did not identify the players.

"It was just at the onset when drugs were starting to come on. Marijuana had been around before. But cocaine, freebasing, I didn't know what they were talking about," Krueger said. "I'm pretty well aware of drugs these days and the symptoms. But I didn't know anything then. None of us did."

Culverhouse and former coach John McKay also confirmed in recent interviews that several members of the 1979 Bucs, the NFC Central Division champions, became victims of their own success.

Tampa Bay finished 1979 at 10-6, but went 5-10-1 the following season.

The team would soon spend $500,000 on drug training alone.

Coach Ray Perkins, who joined the Bucs in 1987, questioned the relevance of the report and said: "If you look back to every National Football League team in 1980, three-quarters had some level of a drug problem. So it wasn't the Buccaneers. It wasn't just the Buccaneers. It was the entire league. That's what brought about the NFL's so-called Pete Rozelle drug program."

Drug testing wasn't addressed until 1982 in the NFL's collective bargaining agreement.

"It was Party Time, U.S.A.," said Culverhouse, who made it clear that such problems have been erased.

Added McKay: "There's no question we had a drug problem. There were some fine players that made some mistakes."

Cocaine use by key players disrupted the team, coaches and management, Krueger said.

"When you're talking about 40-some guys on a team, you don't need more than a half-dozen or so guys to get a pretty good percentage," he said. "And that percent affects other guys on the team, which is gonna affect even more guys and so on."

Defensive players "don't want to hit anybody anymore," and the focus was lost by players, coaches and management, he said.

"I don't want to damage the whole team, but there were enough key players involved that it disturbed other key players and the focus to win was not there," Krueger explained.

The team tried to trade as many drug-using players as it could, obtained counseling for some and sent some to treatment centers, Culverhouse said.

"We were all greatly concerned," the owner said. "It was some problem."

The failure to remove quarterback Doug Williams after the 1982 season and subsequent bad drafts also contributed to the team's decline.

But because of drugs, team emphasis shifted somewhat from training to investigating.

"We had to do our own investigating. We had to become more educated in drug problems," Krueger said. "It was taking away my focus and taking away Coach McKay's focus — and breaking his heart, really. These were guys he loved, and I had to go and tell him what the deal was. It ripped the heart out of the team."

Culverhouse said he was angry, upset and frustrated.

"I wanted to cry out," he said. "So I went and learned about it. And then I spent a half-million dollars, not on treating players, but on the education program alone. It was tough, but you could spot it."

Dorsett latest to pen kiss-and-tell book

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Tony Dorsett's autobiography gives a glimpse of the good life of a college football star and claims three agents represented him before he left the University of Pittsburgh for the National Football League.

In an uncorrected proof of "Running Tough," Dorsett said Jackie Sherrill, then an assistant under Pitt Coach Johnny Majors, organized parties for players.

"Jackie understood the black athlete," Dorsett said. "He'd arrange for us to be taken up to Mount Washington, where we'd stay in a high rise and eat soul food. We'd have a couple beers, relax and have a good time. But we realized that just as we were treated well off the field, we were expected to work hard on the field, and we did."

The book was reported Saturday in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, which said "the events described would appear to violate NCAA rules dealing with extra benefits and agents, although the statute of limitations has expired."

Pitt officials declined comment on Dorsett's book, which is to be published by Doubleday and is due out in October.

Dorsett identified the three agents in his review of his financial problems, including a half million dollar loss on a soured oil investment that he attributed to poor representation.

"I've had my moments with agents," he said. "When I was playing for Pitt I was represented for a short time by Nelson Goldberg. Then I was with Don Cronson and then Mike Trope."

The Post-Gazette said Goldberg first laughed at Dorsett's account then angrily denied that he broke NCAA rules in his dealings with the player.

"Good old Tony," Goldberg said. "I never did anything except try to help a kid out."

Goldberg said he never took any money from Dorsett and at Majors' request tried to help Dorsett resolve bad financial deals he had already made with Trope. Goldberg said he stepped in only after Dorsett's last college game, the Sugar Bowl in 1977.

The 1976 Heisman Trophy winner led Pitt to the national championship in his senior year with a record 6,526 yards rushing, and then played for the Dallas Cowboys. In the book, he described former Cowboys coach Tom Landry as a cold, emotionless man.

Dorsett criticized former Cowboys player personnel director Gil Brandt.

"He's a likeable guy. You want to trust him. He'll smile at you, but you know he's got the knife ready, and when you turn he'll stick it in." Dorsett wrote.

Dorsett said he received illegal recruiting offers from college coaches during his senior year at Hopewell High School, but he did not identify the coaches.

Redskins defeat Bills as NFL season begins

By RUSTY MILLER

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — Joe Gibbs took attendance, then gave his team a passing grade.

"The high point was that everyone played and we still won," Gibbs said Saturday after his Washington Redskins beat the Buffalo Bills 31-6 in the Hall of Fame Game.

Three quarterbacks and eight running backs got a chance to show Gibbs what they could do as the Redskins opened the NFL exhibition season by outgaining the Bills 404-170.

"There were no serious injuries and both teams looked sharp," Gibbs added.

Buffalo coach Marv Levy disagreed with part of Gibbs' statement.

"Our goal was to play everyone and get a good look at a a lot of people," Levy said. "We did that.

"What was disappointing was that no one stood out. That the game was on national television didn't bother me. That the score was a considerable margin did bother me."

Willard Reaves scored on a pair of short runs and Mark Rypien went 10-for-12 for 133 yards and a touchdown to lead the Washington offense.

"Our quarterbacks played cautious," Gibbs said. "We ran a lot of out patterns, a lot of safe patterns. But I was pleased with the tempo of the quarterbacks. I thought the quarterbacks got off to a good start."

Rypien, a fourth-year pro and the starter while Doug Williams recovers from back problems, said he's not worried about losing the No. 1 job when Williams gets healthy. Williams was released from the hospital Saturday morning.

"That's always a possibility," Rypien said of Williams retaking the job. "I can't worry about it. I've got to go out every day and play hard. We've got to just see what happens."

"Rypien looked good," Levy said. "He got a lot of plays and made some big ones."

Prior to the game, quarterback Terry Bradshaw and cornerback Mel Blount of the Pittsburgh Steelers, offensive tackle Art Shell of the Los Angeles and Oakland Raiders and Green Bay Packers safety Willie Wood were inducted into the Hall of Fame.

The Redskins erased Buffalo's 3-0 lead by scoring 17 points in the second quarter.

Rypien hit Gary Clark with a 27-yard touchdown pass on the first play of the quarter. Reaves, a second-year running back, then scored on a 1-yard run to make it 14-3.

After Charlie Baumann kicked his second field goal for Buffalo, Chip Lohmiller added a 35-yard field goal as time expired for a 17-6 halftime lead.

Reaves scored on a 3-yard run in the third quarter and reserve quarterback Stan Humphries ran for a 6-yard touchdown in the final period.

Reaves' two touchdowns tied a Hall of Fame exhibition game record shared by eight others.

Rypien, who played only the first half, was followed by Humphries, who went 7-for-10 for 106 yards, and rookie Jeff Graham, who was 2-for-3 for 27 yards.

Buffalo starter Jim Kelly, who played only one series, hit 2 of 5 passes for 32 yards. Frank Reich was 9 of 15 for 57 yards, Stan Gelbaugh 3 of 8 for 16 yards and Gale Gilbert 3 of 5 for 15 yards with an interception.

Reaves led all rushers with 51 yards on 13 carries. Gerald Riggs, acquired by the Redskins from Atlanta on draft day, had 38 yards on six carries.

BRADSHAW

"I wanted to go to a lousy team to establish an identity," he said. "I didn't know anything about the Steelers, I'd never seen them play. They were losers. That was good. I said, 'Hey, I like this.' "

Bradshaw, a 6-foot-3, 210-pounder out of Louisiana Tech, completed 2,025 of his 3,901 career passes for almost 16 miles in yardage. He threw for 212 touchdowns.

Twice he was named the most valuable player in a Super Bowl, in 1979 and again in 1980.

Bradshaw said the Steelers were characterized by players who would not accept a setback.

"I always believed (a bad thing) never did happen," he said. "There's always one more pass, one more great game, always something I can do a little bit better to overcome."

Shell was a pillar up front for 15 years for the Raiders. A third-round draft pick out of Maryland-Eastern Shore in 1968, the 6-5, 285-pounder played in eight Pro Bowls.

Shell said he appreciated the "Raider way" because diverse personalities could still come together for a common goal.

"You could be a renegade or a nice guy. They didn't try to program us. Be yourself, be a man," Shell said. "They would allow you to be yourself. We had (Ted) Hendricks and (John) Matuszak. They'd do wild things. But on Sunday, we came to play. We came to play as one. We were a team."

Shell pointed to Al Davis, who presented him at the induction ceremonies, as the backbone of the Raiders.

"He's the reason I'm here," he said of the Raiders managing general partner. "He took a chance on a small kid — I mean a kid from a small college — and showed me a lot of patience. I had a lot to learn."

Shell closed his induction speech by saying, "Hopefully next year (Davis) will be a presenter as well as an inductee."

Wood had no pretense of coming out of college and turning a program around or continuing an already successful one.

He only wanted a job.

"I was just satisfied to be a Green Bay Packer and having all the success we had as Packers," he said. "Being in the Hall of Fame, that was something that was beyond my wildest dreams."

Wood came out of Southern Cal as an unheralded backup quarterback and defensive back. Undrafted, he signed as a free agent with the Packers after a friend's letter-writing campaign on his behalf.

"In 1960, when I walked into the Packers camp, the only thing I had in my mind was to make the team," he said. "I had no goals, no aspirations at all to be a Hall of Famer. That just came about."

Wood, who intercepted 48 passes between 1960 and 1971 while winning two Super Bowls with the Packers, said he only wished that his late coach, Vince Lombardi, were present for his induction.

"When I first walked into the Packer camp, there was no doubt who was in charge," Wood said. "The first time I met Vince Lombardi, he scared the hell out of me. And I've been shaking ever since."

Ryan's luck remains sour against Birds

Associated Press

AL Roundup

Rookie Bob Milacki won for the first time in exactly a month Saturday night, scattering seven hits in 8 1-3 innings as the Baltimore Orioles won for only the third time in 17 games, beating Texas 5-2 and contuning their domination of Rangers ace Nolan Ryan.

Milacki, 6-9, hadn't won since beating Toronto on July 5 and hadn't won at home since April 23. He made three starts without a decision after the All-Star break and lost last Monday when he was knocked out in the second inning by Boiston. His eight strikeouts were the most by a Baltimore pitcher this season.

The Orioles took advantage of the wildness of Ryan, 12-7, who walked six batters in the first three innings and pushed his major-league record for bases on balls to 2,501.

Ryan is 0-8 in his last 11 starts against the Orioles and 0-7 in his last eight starts at Memorial Stadium. He last won here on May 18, 1975, and posted his last win over the Orioles on April 20, 1976, in Anaheim when he pitched for California. He is 5-15 lifetime against Baltimore, 3-10 at Memorial Stadium.

Baltimore scored twice in the first inning. Mike Devereaux singled, Phil Bradley walked and they executed a double steal and scored on groundouts by Cal Ripken and Larry Sheets.

In the second, Craig Worthington led off with his 10th home run, Baltimore's only run-producing hit.

In the third inning, Sheets led off with a double and Randy Milligan hit a fly ball that right fielder Harold Baines caught in the corner. Sheets broke for third and scored when Baines' wild throw bounced into the Orioles' dugout.

The Orioles loaded the bases on two walks around a single by Worthington. Joe Orsulak scored on Ryan's wild pitch.

Milacki gave up a run in the fifth on Julio Franco's bases-loaded single off the chest of third baseman Worthington. Pete Incaviglia struck out to end the inning but accounted for the other Texas run with a home run in the eighth, his 14th. Gregg Olson got the last two outs for his 17th save.

Ryan threw 130 pitches in seven innings, yielding six hits and six walks while fanning eight. He also holds the major-league record for strikeouts with 4,773.

Red Sox 10, Indians 2

Danny Heep and Jody Reed hit solo homers in the sixth inning and Wade Boggs added another to ignite a seven-run seventh as the Boston Red Sox ended a three-game losing streak with a victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Mike Smithson, 6-9, scattered six hits, all singles, for seven innings and Dennis Lamp completed the victory, snapping Cleveland's three-game winning streak.

John Farrell, 6-11, blanked Boston for four innings before Ellis Burks singled home a run in the fifth. The Red Sox then went ahead for the first time with just their third two-homer inning of the season

After the Indians took a 2-1 lead on Cory Snyder's sacrifice fly in the sixth, Heep led off the Boston half with his third homer, a drive into the Cleveland bullpen in right. Two outs later, Reed hit a drive off an upright above the left field wall for his first homer of the season and second of his career, both off Farrell.

With one out in the seventh, Boggs hit a 1-1 pitch into the Boston bullpen in right-center for his third homer.

Yankees 5, Blue Jays 4

Ken Phelps had a pinch-hit two-run homer in the top of the eighth and left fielder Mel Hall threw out a Toronto runner at the plate in the bottom of the inning to lead the New York Yankees over the Blue Jays.

Hall was walked by reliever Duane Ward, 4-9, to lead off the eighth. One out later, Phelps, batting for Randy Velarde, hit a 1-0 pitch into the middle deck in right for his third pinch-hit homer of the season.

Dave Righetti relieved in the bottom of the eighth with Tony Fernandez on third and no outs. One out later, Hall caught Kelly Gruber's fly ball and threw a strike to home plate to erase Fernandez.

Andy Hawkins, 13-10, gave up six hits, struck out two and walked two in seven-plus innings to get the victory. Righetti earned his 18th save.

The game was played in front of a crowd of 49,155, the largest ever to see the Blue Jays in Toronto.

Steve Sax and Alvero Espinoza led off the game with singles. After they pulled off a double steal, Sax scored on Steve Balboni's groundout.

White Sox 7, Tigers 6

The Chicago White Sox stretched their home winning streak to 13 games, defeating the Detroit Tigers 7-6 as Carlton Fisk had four hits for the 13th time in his career and drove in four runs.

The White Sox won their third straight overall as Eric King, 5-8, who came to Chicago from Detroit in a preseason trade, held the Tigers to three hits until Lou Whitaker's 24th home run triggered a three-run seventh inning.

A two-out walk and singles by Doug Strange and Mike Heath made it 3-2 and chased King. Detroit added its third run on a bases-loaded walk off Bill Long. Bobby Thigpen pitched the last 1 2-3 innings for his 24th save. He allowed a two-run triple to Doug Strange in the eighth after Long yielded two singles and was touched for a run in the ninth on a sacrifice fly by Whitaker.

Brewers 5, Angels 2

Teddy Higuera pitched a five-hitter for his first complete game of the season — and fourth straight victory — as the Milwaukee Brewers beat California, ending the Angels' three-game winning streak.

Higuera, 7-4, allowed Lance Parrish's 15th homer in the second inning and Wally Joyners's ninth with one out left in the game but was backed by a 13-hit attack that included two singles and a double by Greg Brock.

The Brewers bunched four hits to take a 2-1 lead in the fourth against Mike Witt, 7-9, who hasn't won since July 9.Rob Deer doubled and moved to third on Brock's fly ball double. Glenn Braggs and B.J. Surhoff followed with RBI singles against Witt, who gave up 10 hits and four runs in six innings.

Twins 6, Royals 4

Kent Hrbek's three-run homer with two out in the seventh inning completed Minnesota's comeback from a 4-0 deficit and gave the Twins a 6-4 win over the Kansas City Royals.

Hrbek, who twice ended earlier rallies, hit a 2-2 pitch from reliever Jeff Montgomery into the upper deck in right field for his 16th home run.

Juan Berenguer, 7-3, won in relief of Mark Guthrie, who went 6 2-3 innings in his second major-league start. Jeff Reardon pitched the ninth inning for his 19th save.

Pokes win scrimmage; Walsh shows his worth

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Steve Walsh showed Saturday why the Dallas Cowboys appear headed for a quarterback controversy in 1989.

Walsh completed 6 of 6 passes for 74 yards to lead the Cowboys to a 14-3 scrimmage victory over the San Diego Chargers in Coach Jimmy Johnson's first NFL test.

"I keep telling everybody Steve's a winner and people won't listen," said Johnson, who coached the NFL's top supplemental draft pick at the University of Miami. "He wins games and the only loss he had in college (Notre Dame) he set an all-time passing record. What he did today doesn't surprise me."

Troy Aikman, the Cowboys' $11.037 million quarterback from UCLA and the first player selected in the NFL draft, completed 3 of 5 passes for 26 yards.

"Troy had a good scrimmage, too," Johnson said.

Johnson said he won't name a starting quarterback until the Cowboys' final exhibition game against the Houston Oilers on Sept. 2.

"This game didn't go into the win column but it's still not a scrimmage you want to lose," Walsh said. "Losing is state of mind and you don't ever want to get used to it.

"I challenged our offensive line in the huddle. I told them if they blocked, the backs and receivers would get the job done."

Walsh refused to stake a claim to the starter's job.

"Troy and I are still learning," Walsh said. "It's too early for that (to pick who is No. 1). Coach Johnson will decide that later."

On a 65-yard scoring drive, Walsh completed 18-yard passes to tight end Anthony Jones and running back Kevin Scott.

Broderick Sargent scored from the 1 to give Dallas a 7-3 lead.

With Scott Secules at quarterback, the Cowboys scored again on a 4-yard run by Junior Tautalatasi.

Cornerback Ron Francis returned a fumble by Darren Flutie 47 yards for a score but the points were disallowed under the rules of the scrimmage, which allowed no points by the defense.

The Cowboys also stopped San Diego on fourth and inches at the goal when Rod Carter and Darryl Ford tackled San Diego running back Marion Butts.

Scott led Dallas in rushing with 21 yards on five carries while Sargent had 16 yards on two runs.

San Diego, which got its only points on a 19-yard field goal by Vince Abbott, was led by rookie Billy Joe Tolliver of Texas Tech, who was 7-of-13 for 76 yards.

"It might have been just a scrimmage but I like succeeding at anything no matter whether it's marbles or checkers," Johnson said."I want to win."

Owner Jerry Jones patrolled the sidelines and said, "I'm smiling while I can."

Now Jerry likes camp

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Owner Jerry Jones and coach Jimmy Johnson said Saturday they have been so impressed with their training camp at Thousand Oaks that they likely will come back next year.

"We are definitely leaning toward coming back here," Jones said. "The Cowboys have a long history of playing themselves in shape out here. We'll make a decision before we leave camp."

Jones added: "It's not an economic decision. We're seeing a lot more benefits by having camp here. We get more media attention by being out here. We're seeing the advantages of being here outweigh maybe being in Dallas."

Johnson, who had said he likes to practice in the heat, said he could see the benefits of coming back.

"I told Jerry I would concur on leaning toward coming back here," Johnson said. "Thousand Oaks has a lot of possibilities. Besides, winning a scrimmage 14-3 over the (San Diego) Chargers makes it even better. I have fond memories of places where I win."

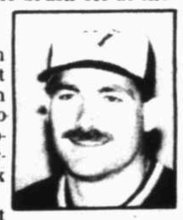

The Cowboys had looked into the "remote" possibility of going to Vail, Colo., with the Kansas City Chiefs.

However, until Johnson and Jones came out in favor of Thousand Oaks on Saturday it had been generally conceded that the team would work out at Texas Stadium next summer.

Once, twice, three times the lady eludes Stieb

TORONTO (AP) — Lady Luck keeps teasing Dave Stieb, only to give him the brush off at the last moment.

Talk about frustration.

Dave Stieb

Stieb, for the third time in less than a year, lost a no-hit bid with two out in the ninth inning Friday night. He had to settle for a two-hitter as the Toronto Blue Jays scored a 2-1 victory over the New York Yankees.

This time, Stieb was perfect until Roberto Kelly lined a 2-0 slider into the left field corner for a double that eventually scored on a line-single to right by Steve Sax. "I didn't do myself any favors by falling behind 2-0 on Kelly," Stieb said. "But it was a good slider. It was low and away and he just went out and got it. If he swings any later, he hits it right at George (Bell)."

Stieb carried a no-hitter into the ninth inning in Cleveland last year only to give up a two-out bad hop single to Julio Franco. A week later, in his very next start, Stieb no-hit the Orioles through 8 2-3 innings before Jim Traber singled to right.

"That first one probably hurt the most, going from elation to dissapointment and then having it happen in my next start. This game was nothing compared to those two."

The way the game started, no-hit looked like the furthest thing from Stieb's mind. Sax opened the game with a hard liner right at centerfielder Lloyd Moseby and Don Mattingly lined hard to center to close out the inning.

"In the first inning I was feeling out my location. I didn't think I had no-hit stuff after the way they hit the ball in the first inning, but that's what is so strange about this game. Ten guys might hit the ball hard at someone and you get an out. One guy just gets a piece of the ball and flares a single to right. You just can't count on things turning out the way you expect."

Stieb struck out a season-high 11 batters in improving to 11-6. He needed only 89 pitches in the 2 hour and 2 minute game. "That's a pretty low total for 11 strikeouts," Stieb said. "But I got a lot of guys on first pitch ground-outs."

Stieb started the ninth with two quick strikeouts, bringing the record crowd of 48,789 to its feet. "You can't help thinking about the no-hitter when you're out there with two out in the ninth. Basically you try to keep your concentration and try not to let the fans get to you. Sure I heard them. It's pretty hard not to."

After Kelly's hit, Stieb stepped off the mound, took a deep breath and went after the next hitter.

Kelly was delighted to play the spoiler.

"I just felt it was up to me," he said. "I felt relief, because as soon as I hit it, I knew it would fall."

The Blue Jays got on the board on Ernie Whitt's run-scoring fielder's choice for a 1-0 lead in the bottom of the second.

Mookie Wilson's ground-rule double scored a single by Nelson Liriano from second for a 2-0 Blue Jays lead in the bottom of the sixth.

Toronto pitcher cuts hand in sleep

Associated Press

TORONTO — Left-hander David Wells put his hand through a window while sleepwalking and will be out of action for three or four days, the Toronto Blue Jays said Saturday.

Wells needed five stitches to close a gash on his left thumb.

A relief pitcher, Wells has allowed just 12 earned runs in his last 28 appearances. He has a 5-4 record with a 2.73 earned run average.

With Wells out, Tony Castillo is Toronto's only left-handed reliever. Castillo started the season with Toronto but was demoted to Class AAA Syracuse on May 15.

The Blue Jays recalled him last Tuesday.

Lemond to race again

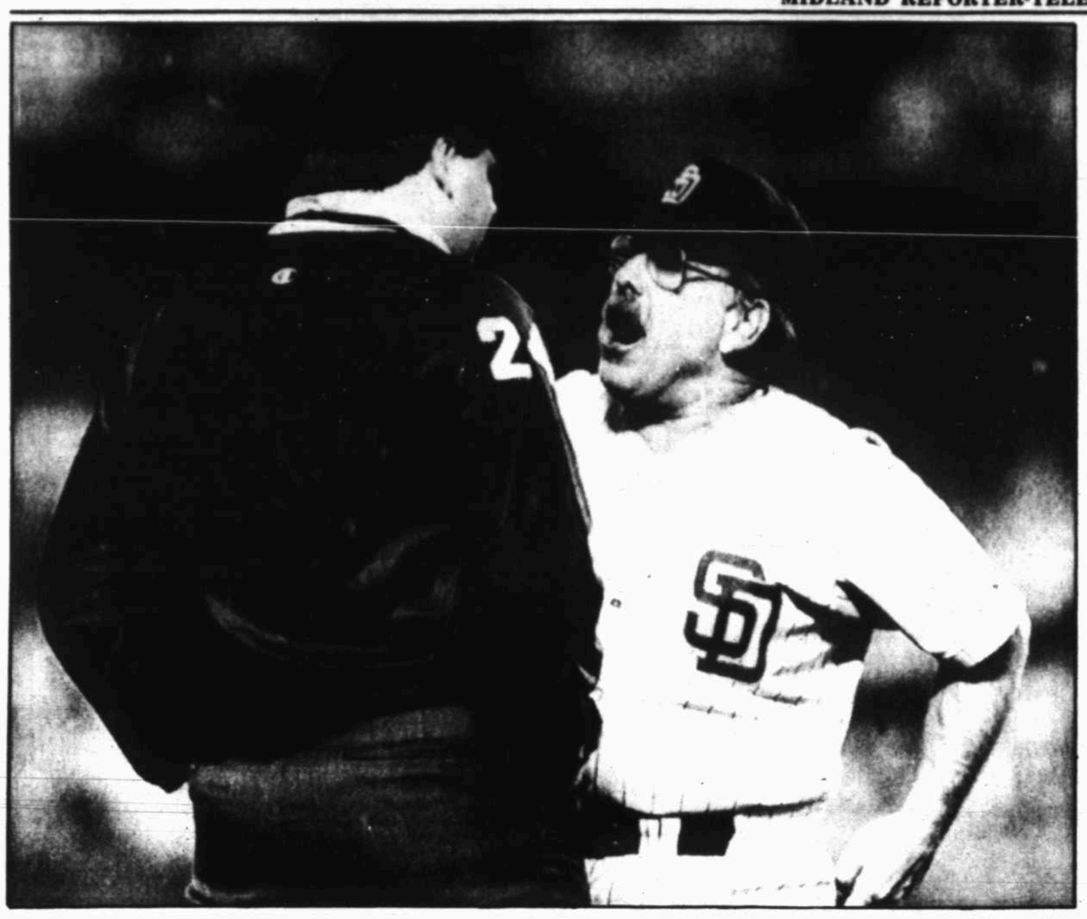

MONTREAL (AP) — Tour de France champion Greg LeMond said Saturday he hopes to race for an American team next season.

Rumours surfaced last week that the U.S.-based 7-Eleven team had offered LeMond a $1.1 million contract, the richest in the sport.

San Diego Padres' manager Jack McKeon,right, leaves no question as to his opinion on a call made by umpire Jerry Layne.

Giants blank Astros, 7-0

Houston stymied at Candlestick this season

Associated Press

Right-hander Mike LaCoss pitched seven shutout innings and the San Francisco Giants continued their mastery of the Houston Astros at Candlestick Park, 7-0.

LaCoss, 6-7, yielded four singles in his seven-inning stint, and reliever Ernie Camacho completed the shutout, giving the Astros only one earned run in their last 39 innings at Candlestick.

The Giants improved to 5-0 against Houston at home this season to build a three-game lead over the Astros in the National League West. San Francisco leads the season series 7-4 with seven games remaining.

Brett Butler snapped a 6-for-47 hitting slump with a third-inning homer and triggered a four-run fifth with a leadoff double off loser Mike Scott, 17-6. Scott lost for the first time since July 9.

Butler's fourth homer of the season came with two outs in the third and broke a scoreless tie. The Giants took a 3-0 lead in the fourth.

Kevin Mitchell singled with one out, advanced to third on a wild pitch and a long fly, and scored on Pat Sheridan's single. Terry Kennedy followed with a run-scoring double.

Butler, who finished with three hits, opened the fifth with a double and scored on Will Clark's one-out double. Mitchell was walked intentionally and Larry Andersen replaced Scott, who had won 11 of his previous 13 decisions.

Sheridan singled with two outs, loading the bases. Kennedy's walk forced home a run and Jose Uribe followed with a two-run single on a ball bobbled by first baseman Glenn Davis following a diving stop.

LaCoss, 6-7, was lifted after holding Houston hitless over his final 3 2-3 innings. Camacho, recently recalled from Triple A, worked the eighth inning and Steve Bedrosian pitched a scoreless ninth, completing the Giants' 12th combined shutout of the season.

Padres 4, Dodgers 2

Marvell Wynne and Chris James hit home runs Saturday as the San Diego Padres ended the Los Angeles Dodgers' three-game wining streak.

Greg Harris, 4-6, held the Dodgers to just four hits in 7 1-3 innings before Mark Davis came on to gain his career-high 29th save. Harris struck out four and walked none.

Harris, who had lost all three of his previous starts this year, began the season with 29 straight relief appearances before taking over injured Eric Show's spot in the starting rotation.

Mets 3, Exops 2

Pinch-hitter Darryl Strawberry tied the score with a double in the eighth inning and Kevin Elster's run-scoring single off relief ace Tim Burke gave New York a dramatic victory over Montreal as the Expos fell into a first-place tie with Chicago in the National League East.

Mark Langston had allowed six hits and struck out six in seven innings when he was replaced by Burke, 6-2.

Kevin McReynolds led off the eighth with a single, and, after Tim Teufel failed to bunt him over, Strawberry doubled to left. Strawberry moved to third on a grounder and scored on Elster's single.

Cubs 4, Pirates 2

Shawon Dunston's single just inside the right field line drove in the go-ahead run in Chicago's three-run ninth inning against Pittsburgh bullpen ace Bill Landrum, rallying the Cubs to a victory over the Pirates.

The Cubs won for the 12th time in 15 games, but the victory could be costly because major-league save leader Mitch Williams, going for his 29th save, had to leave the game with one out in the ninth inning when he was hit above the left ear with a line drive off the bat of Jeff King. Williams has allowed only one earned run in his last 22 appearances.

Braves 7, Reds 1

Darrell Evans' tie-breaking home run in the fourth inning, one of four solo shots hit by Atlanta, led the Braves to over the Cincinnati Reds in a rain-delayed game.

Rookie left-hander Derrik Lilliquist, 7-6, notched his second victory of the week over the Reds, allowing seven hits in 5 2-3 innings. He beat them 5-2 in Atlanta on Sunday.

After a rain delay of one hour, Atlanta opened the scoring in the first inning when Jeff Treadway hit a 2-2 pitch from Scott Scudder, 2-4, over the right field wall.

Phillies 7, Cardinals 3

Ricky Jordan hit a three-run homer and Terry Mulholland won his first game in over a month as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the St. Louis Cardinals.

Mulholland, 2-5, allowed five hits and two runs in six-plus innings in notching his first triumph since June 30. Since then he had been 0-3 in six starts.

The Cardinals rallied for two runs off Mulholland and reliever Jeff Parrett in the seventh inning before Parrett finished up for his fifth save.

Jose DeLeon, 11-10, who had won his last three starts, was the loser. DeLeon is 0-3 against the Phillies this season.

NL Roundup

Mets give division rivals a chance

By JIM DONAGHY

NEW YORK (AP) — At the start of the season, the New York Mets were the team to beat in the National League East. Four teams in the division are doing a pretty good job of it so far.

The first-place Montreal Expos came to town this weekend leading the Mets by seven games. The Mets, coming off a 2-5 road trip in Chicago and St. Louis, know they are on the ropes.

"We have to win two of three in every series the rest of the season," said left-hander Bob Ojeda, who beat the Expos 11-5 Friday night.

"The Expos are the team to beat now," St. Louis manager Whitey Herzog said.

The defending division champs have a losing record against every team in the NL East except the last-place Philadelphia Phillies.

"The Mets are a good team, but you have to give the rest of the teams in the division credit, too," Pittsburgh outfielder Glenn Wilson said.

There was good reason to pick the Mets at the start of the year.

Want pitching?

There was a starting rotation of Dwight Gooden, Ron Darling, David Cone, Bob Ojeda and Sid Fernandez with Randy Myers and Roger McDowell in relief.

Want hitting?

Gregg Jefferies looked like a sure bet for NL Rookie of the Year and there was the veteran leadership of Keith Hernandez and Gary Carter to go with big boppers Darryl Strawberry, Kevin McReynolds and Howard Johnson.

The Mets entered 1989 with five consecutive seasons of 90 victories or more but only one World Series to show for it.

The team that General Manager Frank Cashen so carefully crafted began to show cracks when Carter and Hernandez were slowed by age and injury.

Jefferies, who Manager Davey Johnson pinned the Mets' future on, struggled from Day 1 and now has a place on the bench.

All spring the Mets sought a right-handed power hitter and on June 18 they sent Len Dykstra and McDowell to the Phillies for Juan Samuel, who failed in a leadoff role.

The Mets survived the loss of Carter and Hernandez, but when Gooden went down with an arm injury on July 2, the Mets started their decline. Since the All-Star break, New York is 11-12.

With Gooden's status for the rest of the season uncertain, the Mets traded for another Cy Young Award winner, Frank Viola.

Some said the Mets panicked, sending their future — pitchers Rick Aguilera, David West and Kevin Tapani to Minnesota for the 29-year-old Viola.

The reasons for the Mets' problems are not all that complicated.

Except for Johnson and Dave Magadan, everyone is having an off-year. Strawberry promised a "monster year," but is hitting .229 with only 54 RBIs on 22 homers.

McReynolds, slowed by a ribcage injury, has only recently started to show signs of life at the plate.

When Gooden left the rotation, there was no stopper.

And worst of all, the Mets have problems with the simple fundamentals of the game — like bunting and hitting the cutoff man.

"I don't think we've been a good fundamental team for a few years," coach Bud Harrelson said, "but it shows up more when you're losing."

Dykstra, McDowell, Mookie Wilson, Lee Mazzilli are already gone and Carter and Hernandez are in the last year of multimillion dollar contracts. Time is running out on the Mets of the '80s and they know it.

Before Friday night's victory over the Expos, Cashen called a team meeting. He told his club it had the talent to win the pennant and now was the time to show it.

"I look for the club now to be more disciplined, play harder and play more aggressive the rest of the way and we could surprise a lot of people," Davey Johnson said.

The Mets will also surprise a lot of people if they don't.

Sports News cable channel coming

By RICK WARNER
Associated Press

Can't get enough sports on ESPN, CNN, NBC, CBS, ABC, TBS and USA? Well, you're in luck.

SNN is on the way.

Sports News Network, a cable creation of Mizlou Communications, is scheduled to debut in November with round-the-clock scores, stories and sidelights on the games people play.

"It's a video age sports page," Jon Steinlauf, executive vice president of SNN, said.

"Cable has its front page with CNN and its business page with FNN and CNBC. And it certainly has its weather page with the Weather Channel. But it doesn't have a sports page."

What about ESPN, the pioneer of all-sports networks?

Steinlauf said SNN's format will be much different. And he should know. Before joining SNN, Steinlauf spent four years as a sales executive at ESPN.

While ESPN devotes most of its time to events, SNN will spend virtually all of its time delivering sports news and information. Already, some people are calling it a sports version of CNN, the 24-hour news network.

"We're not going to be in the event business," Steinlauf said. "ESPN is the pre-eminent provider of live sports events on television, and we have tremendous respect for them.

"We're not going to compete with ESPN. We're going to provide an entirely different kind of service."

The heart of the service will be constant previews, updates and recaps on the major sports events of the day.

Midland team in finals

From Staff Reports

Midland will play the winner of this morning's Lamesa-Big Spring game in the finals of The Shootout, a Little League tournament for 14-15 year old boys.

Lamesa and Big Spring play today at 9 a.m. The championship game begins at 1 p.m.

In Saturday action, Andrews eliminated Odessa's No. 1 team, 6-4, but then Andrews fell to Big Spring 4-2 to be ousted from the tourney.

Midland beat Lamesa 12-10 in a slugfest; Julian Urquidez struck out 10 Lamesa batters on the way to the win.

Big Spring won the other game Saturday, defeating Odessa's No. 2 squad, 7-3.

Whiteside wouldn't have minded having those putts, either, for even he faces a tall order in his effort to catch Gee.

"It will take six or seven under par to beat him," Whiteside said. "I'm going to have to go out and try to get some birdies early."

While Gee and Whiteside tied for the day's best round, several other golfers broke par. Mike Johnson fired a 67 to move into third place by one stroke over Cox, while Scott Gillespy shot 68 to pull into a fifth-place tie with Benton Spradlin at one-under-par 141.

Spradlin added a 71 to his opening-round 70, but still dropped from fourth and fifth as a result of Johnson's hot round.

Whiteside said the Hogan Park layout this year is playing much easier than last year's wind tunnel.

"There's not a solid wind, and the greens are really soft so the ball holds well."

Five golfers are under par after two rounds in this year's tourney, while Whiteside was the only golfer under par last year.

Today's golfers will play holes one through nine and 18 through 27.

Daniel closer to first LPGA win

By DAVID GINSBURG

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Beth Daniel moved one step closer to her first LPGA victory since 1985 Saturday by shooting a 68 to take a four-stroke lead after two rounds of the Greater Washington Open.

Daniel, who began the day with a one-shot lead, opened the round with two straight birdies. She bogeyed Nos. 8 and 10, but used birdies on three of the final five holes to finish with a two-day total of 8-under-par 134.

Penny Hammel, who also shot a 3-under-par 68, was second at 138. Pam Allen also shot a 68 and was next at 140, one shot ahead of five players, including Pat Bradley.

Despite her lead, Daniel isn't ready to claim victory.

"I'd be crazy if I didn't like my position," she said. "But I've been in position for my first win a bunch of times since 1985. I can't worry about winning the golf tournament, because if I do I'll be in big trouble."

Daniel pulled away with a 30-foot birdie putt on No. 14 and a 10-footer for a birdie on No. 16. On No. 18, she hit the pin with her 8-iron before tapping in a 10-foot birdie putt.

"Things went my way coming down the stretch," said Daniel, who is fourth on the LPGA winnings list thanks to four second-place finishes.

Hammel had a 3-under 68 that included six birdies. She used birdies on Nos. 12 and 13 to go 5-under and temporarily gain a share of the lead, but bogeyed 14 and finished the round by three-putting on 18.

She said playing for a second straight in temperatures that reached the mid-90s wore her down.

Langer, Gilder share St. Jude lead

By SKIP LATT

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Bernhard Langer and Bob Gilder both survived shaky front nines Saturday to emerge as co-leaders after the third round of the $1 million Federal Express St. Jude Classic.

Langher overcame bogeys the the first and eighth holes at the 7,006-yard, par-71 Tournament Players Club course to shoot a 3-under-par 68, while Gilder offset five bogeys, three on the front nine, with six birdies for a 70. Both were tied at 9-under-par 204 after 54 holes.

Billy Ray Brown, who had an even-par 71, was alone at 205. Bob Tway and Mike Donald, who each had a share of the lead during the round, were next at 206. Tway shot a 68 and Donald had a 69.

Second-round leader Ed Fiori soared to a 76 and was four shots behind the leaders.

Langer, Gilder and Brown all birdied the par-5, 528-yard 16th hole to go 9-under, while Donald also birdied to tie Tway, who parred the hole, at 8-under.

Brown saw his share of the lead evaporate on the 464-yard 17th hole when he missed a 25-foot par-saving putt.

PGA

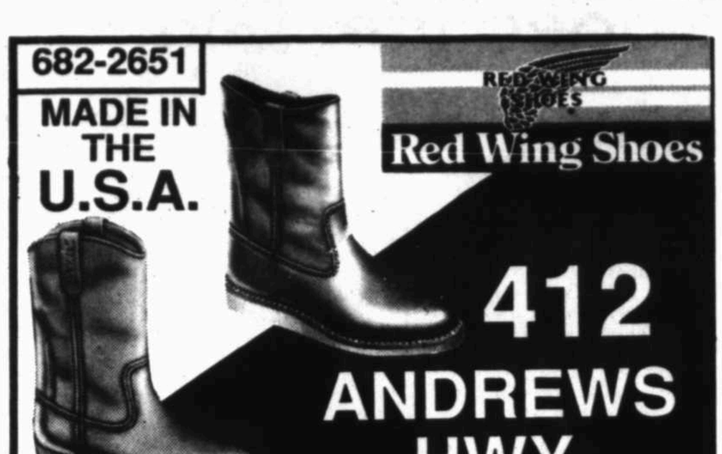

Donald and Tway fell two shots back when they bogeyed the par-4, 437-yard 18th hole.

Donald, who started the day at 5-under, took the lead from Fiori when he birdied the par-3 11th hole to go 10-under while Fiori was bogeying the eighth.

Gilder, who made the turn at 9-under, moved into a tie with a birdie on No. 10 and found himself alone in the lead two holes later despite battling to salvage a bogey-5 at the 12th hole when Donald, playing one hole ahead of hi, took a double bogey on No. 13.

But Gilder bogyeed the 13th to fall into a three-way tie with Langer and Tway, who made four straight birdies on the front nine to move to 8-under.

Bogeys at No. 8 and No. 9 dropped Tway to 6-under, but he moved up with birdies on the 11th and 16th holes before missing a 15-foot par putt on the final hole.

AMARO SINGLED his first three times up, but refused to call this his best night in AA ball. "Not when we lose," he said. Still, he jumped his average from .333 to .369 and appears to be in the TL to stay. Last year in a 13-game TL opportunity, he hit .129.

As for Martinez, who was going for his 10th win, he experienced back problems for the third straight game, but this was the first time he hadn't been able to pitch through it.

"The arm feels fine," the Austin native said of the source of his problems the last two years. "Tonight I just couldn't bend my back to throw my slider."

Brian Clutterbuck, on 20-day rehab from Milwaukee, has been bothered by elbow and back problems, but Saturday got through five innings before turning it over to Mike Mills, who pitched four-hit ball over the final for innings to go 3-0.

HALO HOOPS: The battle for sole possession of first in the TL West at 6 p.m. today will see Chris Beasley, 4-3, for Midland against Jim Hunter, 6-6...El Paso Manager Marc Bombard's protest of Friday's game was based on two leftfielders on Midland's line up card, the one presented to the umps at the plate before the game. "The umpires weren't positive, but didn't think the protest would hold up, contending once the game started, the defensive positions didn't matter, so I asked 'What if I turn in a lineup card with nine first basemen?" ... Standby for further details ...

El Paso centerfielder Rafel Skeete got the heave-ho in the eighth for protesting a called strike. Skeete had been called out on strikes twice earlier by plate umpire Brian Owen and had disagreed with the calls ... Reed Peters' 13-game hitting streak went up in smoke, thanks to a ninth inning play by shortstop Greg Edge ...

"Things are looking pretty bleak," he said. "I'm 35 years of age, with 12 years worth of licks. To have to rehabilitate and come back ... the odds are against it.

"I cried about it last night. It happened the way I didn't want it to happen. I wanted to play this one more year. If I was not going to play, I wanted it to be because Tony Dorsett couldn't cut the mustard."

Rodeo life: Glamorous for winners, desperate for losers

By JULIA PRODIS

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — It is not uncommon for Roy Cooper, the eight-time world champion calf roper, to have a Lear jet waiting — motor running — to take him from rodeo to rodeo.

"No one has an earthly idea what it's like to rope at Pecos, Texas, at 8 a.m., Prescott (Ariz.) at 2 p.m., Greeley (Colo.) at 9 p.m. and the next morning at Springdale (Ark.)," said the 33-year-old guru of calf ropers while competing at the 93rd annual Cheyenne Frontier Days in late July.

He wasn't complaining. He was reveling.

"I'm the second man to win over a million dollars in my career," said the cowboy from Childress, Texas, flashing a cereal-box smile and spitting a wad of chew.

"I'm a first-class cowboy. I want it good all the time. I like good horses, pretty women and old whiskey."

And with little effort, he gets all three.

But to the vast majority of cowboys on the professional rodeo circuit, life is an old pickup truck, an ace bandage and a cold beer to wash the trail dust down.

"WE SLEEP in the back seat of the pickup, mostly," said steer wrestler John Thompson, 27, who grew up on a ranch in San Luis Obispo, Calif. "There's lots of times you just want to be home."

Thompson is traveling the circuit with three cowboys from Montana. The week before Cheyenne's "Daddy of 'Em All," the group had competed at Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah, and Nampa, Idaho. With a 6.5-second time early in the week at Cheyenne, Thompson qualified for the Sunday finals.

But there was no time for rest in the Cowboy State while waiting for the finals. By the end of the week, he had competed in rodeos in Helena, Great Falls and Glasglow, Mont., before returning to Cheyenne.

"There's a misconception of rodeo cowboys. Everybody thinks we drink a lot and raise a lot of heck," he said, while feeding his horse, Bill. "It's not that way anymore. We go to too many rodeos. We spend more time traveling than anything."

Last year, Thompson's second year of professional rodeo, the Top 20 bull dogger entered 123 rodeos in a 270-day stretch, all the while nursing a wounded shoulder.

"YOU HAVE to have some mental preparation," he said. "You have to fool yourself and say 'I feel good, I'm not tired' when you are tired and you don't feel good."

He does it for one reason — to get to the National Finals Rodeo held each year in Las Vegas. Only the top 15 in each event qualify for the finals. Last year, Thompson was 16th.

"If someone asked me that day if I wanted to go to a rodeo, I would have slugged him," he said. "It's hard to put that effort out and not qualify."

For weekend cowboys, however, the pressure to win is not as intense because the financial security of a working ranch back home keeps them afloat.

"I've got the best of both," said 67-year-old calf roper Bud Tillard, who owns a sheep ranch in Douglas, Wyo. "We can go home and rest up. And it's just fine to participate once in a while."

Tillard has been roping since he entered competitions at the Wyoming State Fair when he was 6. Sixty-one years later, he has two sons who rope, often in the same rodeos, and grandchildren who are already roping haystacks.

Tillard says he's happy with his life and never considered trading it for that of a full-time cowboy.

"ALL THEY'VE got on their mind is roping. I'm calling home and saying, 'Did they get the hay in?'" he said, leaning against a corral while awaiting his turn to compete. "Those guys get to traveling night and day. They forget they've got a wife and pretty soon they've got another one."

For many, roping becomes an addiction and priorities are left in the dust.

"I know cowboys who have roped their ranch away," Tillard said. "It gets pretty desperate sometimes. These guys don't have any money and they go on the road. They win a little, and by the end of the year they're broke."

But for rookie Dano Spradlin from Buffalo Creek, Colo., the life of a cowboy is the life of Roy Cooper, who, incidently, is writing a book tentatively titled "Fast Times or Victim of Success."

"It's a kind of an unexplained desire," said the 26-year-old who has been on the back of only 18 bucking saddle broncs. "My parents are kind of against it. They think the sport is history."

SPRADLIN WRAPPED a bandage around his midsection, favoring a back injury from a bad ride, before his last ride at Cheyenne.

"You think about riding correctly, being strong, getting psyched up — like a boxer would," he said. "You think about winning, but most of all, staying on."

The young cowboy was bucked off both saddle broncs in the Cheyenne competition.

"It's discouraging enough to make you want to get on again," he said. "A lot of guys get a real nice buckle and lots of money — I'm just doing it for a good time. I got the fever."

Graf disposes of Bunge in GAB Tennis Classic

By WENDY E. LANE

SAN DIEGO (AP) — After spending two years out of tennis recovering from injuries, Bettina Bunge got a firsthand look at just how good Steffi Graf has become.

"I haven't had a match like that in years," said Bunge after falling to Graf 6-1, 6-2 in the semifinals of the $200,000 Great American Bank Tennis Classic.

Managing just six points off the serve of the world's top woman player, Bunge realized she had been away too long.

"I think she's improved all around — her serve, her forehand, she's bigger, she's stronger," said Bunge, a West German native who saw Graf play as a young teen-ager.

And like most of Graf's opponents these days, Bunge was pleased to win even three games against the Wimbledon champion, against whom she is now 0-for-5.

"I thought I played quite well under the circumstances, playing Steffi in a big match," she said. "I hadn't been in a big match in a long time."

Making her first singles appearance since 1987, Bunge gave Graf her biggest challenge of the tourney thus far in a 62-minute match.

Graf's previous longest match in the tournament lasted only 43 minutes. No opponent had managed to win more than 22 points and two games off her in her first tournament since winning at Wimbledon last month.

"I didn't know what to expect," said Graf, who advanced to meet the winner of the other semifinal match pitting second seed Zina Garrison of Houston and sixth-seeded Nathalie Tauziat of France. "I knew she has the touch But she left no doubt about her own touch, winning the match on two consecutive aces.

"She's serving like (Ivan) Lendl, really hard," Bunge said. "Once that first serve comes in it's hard to return."

Graf surrendered just two points in the last five games of the first set, hitting precise placement shots and using an improved backhand.

"It was always my weakness more or less," she said. "Now I'm being more aggressive."

Down two games to none in the second set, Bunge mounted a challenge in the third game, overcoming a double fault on an ad point in to win the next two points off Graf.

In the fifth game, Graf needed five break points to win on Bunge's serve. Bunge made a series of unforced errors to lose the game.

Down 5-1 in the final set, Bunge mounted her last challenge, serving up an her third ace of the match to win the seventh game.

But Graf came back in the next game to finish off the match with a pair of aces at 30 all.

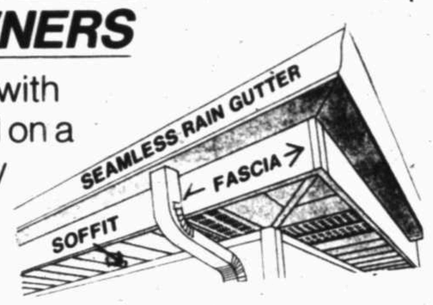

"If I hit the ball too short I got punished," said Bunge, whose ranking peaked at No. 6 in 1983. "If I would get tentative, I was dead."

In the first set, Bunge fended off two break points to win the second game after scoring three consecutive service winners.

But Graf came back strong, using whizzing forehand shots and capitalizing on Bunge's errors.

Gilbert advances to final

By JILL ARABAS

STRATTON MOUNTAIN, Vt. (AP) — Brad Gilbert, the only high seed left in the Volvo International tennis tournament, took advantage of David Wheaton's match-point double fault Saturday to join Jim Pugh in Sunday's final.

Gilbert, who was runnerup last week at Washington, was pushed to three sets by Wheaton, a surprise semifinalist who upset top-seeded Andre Agassi in the third round on Thursday. Gilbert won 5-7, 7-6 (7-5), 6-4.

Pugh, ranked first in the world in doubles but only 59th in singles, double faulted on his first match point but beat Jim Grabb 6-2, 6-4 with a service winner.

Gilbert, the tournament's third seed, and Pugh will meet Sunday for the $114,000 first prize. The runnerup will receive $57,000.

Wheaton, a Minneapolis native ranked 122nd in the world in his second year as a pro, broke Gilbert twice in the first set and went up 3-0 in the second before Gilbert battled back with passing shots and an occasional ace.

Gilbert took the tiebreaker with a passing shot and broke Wheaton in the fourth and 10th games of the third set.

"It was a combination of him (raising) his game a little bit and me being a little nervous and a little tentative," Wheaton said. "I missed a couple of shots when I needed to make them, and usually I do make those shots. But today I had a little more trouble making them."

"He has a big serve and does a lot of things well," the 11th-ranked Gilbert said of Wheaton. "I think for him to make the big improvement like Chang or Agassi, he needs to have more speed."

Second-seeded Michael Chang was ousted in the quarterfinals Friday.

"I wanted him to at least work to win the match," Gilbert said of Wheaton. "He didn't play a great game."

Pugh, who is seeded 14th, has overcome great odds to make it to the final. He was down 4-3 in the third set of two of his previous matches, and fought off two match points in a third.

"I hadn't played for two weeks, and I was a little rusty in the beginning," said the 25-year-old from Burbank, Calif., who won his first singles title only three weeks ago in Newport. "Now I feel like I'm just lucky to still be in the tournament, let alone in the finals. So I'm playing a lot looser now."

Both he and Grabb were bothered by gusty winds on Stratton Mountain, which affected their serve-and-volley games. But Pugh was steadier, breaking Grabb three times in the first set.

Pat McEnroe — John's brother — begins to make his own tennis noise, as he and partner Jim Grabb reached the semifinal round at the Volvo International Saturday.

"I definitely had a hard time feeling the ball out there, and he kept the ball in play," said Grabb, of Tucson, Ariz., who is ranked 114th. "It didn't seem to affect him. I don't know if it's two hands (on the racket), or what it is."

Pugh uses two hands on both forehand and backhand shots.

"The wind was moving the tosses around so much, so I was able to return pretty good to him," Pugh said. "I heard he had only been broken twice in the whole tournament before this. Once I got him where he was staying back, that's not his natural game, and that favors me a lot more."

A Fatal Attraction: OU and it's football

By WILLIAM C. RHODEN
New York Times News Service

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. — Although he has grown into a giant of a young man, older and wiser in the ways of the game, Joey Mickey flashes a boyish grin when he recalls his earliest memories of football in his home state.

"I began watching Oklahoma when I was in grade school, my grandmother and I used to watch football in Anadarko, Oklahoma," Mickey said. "Then I used to go out and play, I'd have my little red OU shirt on and a football."

The idea that he might play for Oklahoma someday was a fantastic dream that Mickey shared with virtually every boy in the state.

But today the 6-foot-7-inch, 255-pound tight end will step out of the dream and into reality when he reports to the Wilkinson Athletic Dormitory with the other Oklahoma University freshmen in a ritual that signals the beginning of a new college season.

On the eve of the university's 94th football season, Mickey is part of a freshman class whose mission is more compelling than merely making the team. They are the first wave of an effort to polish the image of a badly tarnished state treasure.

As a result of sanctions imposed by the National Collegiate Athletic Association, Oklahoma will be on probation for at least the next two seasons.

The Sooners will not be able to compete in bowl games or on television, and the number of visits by recruits will be reduced. As it happens, Oklahoma State is also on probation, for three years, marking the first time in state history that both institutions have been shelved at the same time.

There are those who think that the dual probations may prompt a true turnaround and reassessment of priorities within the universities.

Others think that the pattern of abuses, coupled with a deep-rooted, statewide identification with Oklahoma football, suggests that Mickey, along with the first-year president, Dr. Richard Van Horn, and the new head coach, Gary Gibbs, are joining an order that will be difficult to change.

"The attitude here is everybody does it, you can't succeed if you don't," said Chuck Edgely, a professor of sociology at Oklahoma State. "I just don't hear much in the state from the average fan about 'Hey, that's really wrong what they're doing and they really shouldn't be doing that.' It's more like 'Well, maybe we did some things wrong, but we didn't do anything worse than anybody else did."

Oklahoma, which was founded in December 1890, fielded its first team in 1895. It has won six national titles, but has also been put on probation four times: 1955, 1960, 1973 and 1989. Oklahoma State, which was also founded in December 1890, fielded its first team in 1901 and was placed on probation in 1978, 1980, and 1989.

Given the bitter competition between the two schools for everything from state resources to athletes, the irony of the current situation is that, on the eve of their centennials, they find themselves facing a familiar paradox: searching for a philosophy to fit a busy enterprise.

The problem was that the football team, regarded by the administration and faculty as a recreational adjunct of the university, blossomed into a profitable, highly visible business venture before the various presidents could designate its proper role within the institution.

When presidents finally decided to take control many discovered that the athletic department had become a free-standing entity with an intricate infrastructure and powerbase that insured its independence.

"We recognize special skills, and we provide recognition to young people who have special skills," said Van Horn, who became Oklahoma's 12th president last month. "Athletic ability is one of those skills that we recognize, and students who excel in athletic ability add to the environment of the campus. They provide an aspect of campus life, and the university provides an opportunity for an education. That's an idea that's part of our society. Whether it's a good idea is another question. I don't want to argue that the emphasis we place on athletics is the appropriate emphasis."

Van Horn's first order of business was to move beyond the resignation on June 19 of Barry Switzer, the Sooners' head football coach. Switzer replaced Chuck Fairbanks in 1973 and expanded Oklahoma football from a kingdom, which it had been under Bud Wilkinson in the 1950s, to an empire.

Switzer is easily the most controversial coach in Sooner history. Critics have accused him of exhibiting poor judgment in recruting players, lacking supervision of his players, and routinely giving them second and third chances.

Switzer had been cited for off-field misconduct and recruiting violations in the past, but the latest volley of problems and questions regarding how much he knew about them became too much for even Switzer to survive, especially with a new university administration promising reform.

As Oklahoma and Oklahoma State prepare for a new season, the question remains: what it is it about football, or about the people of the state who love football, that drives coaches to break house rules and, in some cases, contribute to the moral delinquency of teen-agers in proportion to their ability to run, pass and tackle?

Part of the answer can be seen in Mickey, a high school all-American with a 3.5 cumulative grade-point average. His presence attests to the strong attraction and the loyalty that run through the state.

Mickey was recruited by hundreds of schools, including USC, UCLA, Miami and Notre Dame. He decided that Oklahoma, despite its problems, was the best place for him.

"The probation doesn't bother me," Mickey said. "When you say 'OU football,' the name speaks for itself. Everyone around the nation is going to hear about OU football regardless of whether or not we're on TV. It doesn't bother me not being on TV, as a matter of fact, I think it might help. It'll help push our team through this together and help build everything back and help prove that we aren't misfits."

Indeed, Oklahoma's problems did not involve mere violations of club rules — an extra soda here, a leased car there — but criminal acts by players, and possibly a coach.

Charles Thompson, the Sooners' talented 19-year-old quarterback, was arrested in January for selling drugs to an undercover agent.

Later, three Oklahoma football players were charged with raping a female student and in another incident, one teammate shot another.

A former assistant coach, Scott Hill, resigned because of recruiting violations and has been reported to be under investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

"I was a little stunned and shocked," Mickey said about the criminal charges. "I started pulling out the other offers. The main thing that bothered me was that everything was adding up. First it was the probation, then it was in the dorm room. I was like 'Is it really worth it?' Over all it is. They have a great business school and engineering school. Stuff like this has happened in the past, it can happen and it will happen. You can't hold down a whole football program because of a few misfits."

What nearly drove Mickey away was the resignation of Switzer.

"I was real disappointed; I was shocked," he said. "I was scared. I didn't know which way to go. The day he resigned three of the schools I visited called me. I figured it wasn't worth it. I figured it'll work out."

Ultimately, the lure of Oklahoma football is larger than the legends who have coached there, and the reasons why unfold as one travels through the state: east to Eufaula, south to Ardmore, west to Elk City or north to Ponca City.

Acres of rolling plains are broken up by farming communities and towns, with shopping centers and bowling alleys.

The Oklahoman is a willing hostage to entertainment. Oklahoma and Oklahoma State are the pro franchises that the state does not have. The thrust for winning begins in various high school communities and has its full expression at the college level on Saturday.

"The drive to win doesn't come from OU or OSU," Edgely said, "it comes from the population of the state. It's fan-driven, it's ethnocentrism driven. This state is not well known for much of anything except football. And the one thing we've done historically and traditionally well, they want to be the best at it of anybody."

For Oklahoma, with 40 years of tradition and a $14 million athletic budget, the NCAA penalty is largely an embarrassment.

The presence of freshmen like Mickey reflects a tradition that is larger than sanctions, televison, and in a sense, larger than the NCAA. Oklahoma's postwar football program was a calculated invention designed to elevate the collective morale of Oklahomans.

Two walls in the master bedroom have plantation shuttered windows that overlook the lovely backyard. Pale mauve walls and a cozy sitting area provide for a dreamy atmosphere.

Sweet Dreams

One of the disadvantages of growing up and becoming a parent is that no longer are you being lulled to sleep with a dreamy tale at night. Instead, parents are carrying on the tradition of a nightly bedtime story with their own children in order to help them fall asleep more easily.

For parents who have problems falling asleep at night, the softly colored walls and homey atmosphere in the master bedroom helps to ensure they will have a night of sweet dreams, especially if the dream includes the amenities in this week's featured home.

Located in a sequestered section of Green Tree Estates, this two-story home features three living areas, four bedrooms and four bathrooms. This home was built by Greg Frazier a little over a year ago and the windows across the back of the house provide a breathtaking view of the golf course.

The formal living room, above, and the dining room, left, provide an elegant setting when entertaining friends. These rooms are situated to the left of the entrance and arched windows frame the beautiful front yard.

The fireplace features a carved mantle and a marble hearth and serves as the focal point in the formal living room.

A navy wallcovering with a floral motif adorns the walls in the dining room. Due to the design of this spacious room, a table can be placed at an angle and two walls can be used for displaying a china cabinet and a server.

DREAMS

A leaded glass front door opens onto a tile foyer that extends to the many downstairs rooms — the formal dining and living, family room, kitchen area, nursery and the master bedroom. A staircase in the foyer provides access upstairs to two bedrooms and a game room.

The tile flooring flows past the staircase and turns left into the formal living areas. A navy blue wallpaper with rose flowers lines the walls of the dining room, creating a contrast above the white wainscoting. An arched window overlooks the front yard and a plantation shuttered accents the window.

The hallway extends into the formal living area. A fireplace with a carved mantle and a marble hearth serves as the focal point of the room. Windows, also with plantation shutters, are situated on each side. The vaulted ceiling is highlighted by inlaid moulding.

Centrally located downstairs, the family room has a wall of windows that have a great view of the beautiful backyard. An atrium door opens onto the back patio. A lightly stained oak wainscoting and a built-in wet bar are the other amenities in the room. The bar features a wine rack and enclosed shelves for bar glasses.

A doorway in the family room leads into the kitchen and breakfast room. Access into these rooms can also be made through two doorways in the corridor that is adjacent to the formal dining and living room.

The well-designed kitchen has Whirlpool appliances and would delight any mother, even if she is not a gourmet cook! The appliances include a double self-cleaning oven, microwave, cooktop, dishwasher and trash compactor. The kitchen is built around a central work island and a small breakfast bar that can accommodate three stools separates the kitchen and the breakfast room. A floral wallpaper in shades of blue and rose line the walls in these rooms.

Although this home has many elegant appointments, the breakfast room may be one of the most welcoming and cozy rooms in the entire house. A bay window frames the backyard and provides one the best views in this neighborhood of the golf course. A person could sit for hours at the breakfast table drinking a cup of hot tea and feel that they were miles from Midland. A china cabinet with server is inset next to an angled wall and a light fixture ascends from the tiered ceiling.

A walk-in pantry is conveniently located to both of these rooms.

A hall, to the right of the front door, leads past the three-car garage with automatic door openers and the well-designed laundry room, to the downstairs bedrooms.

The first bedroom has a nursery motif with teddy bears playing on a swing set. This spacious room is perfect for a younger child that needs to be close to the master bedroom. A walk-in closet with built-in shelves provides ample room for clothes and toys.

A door in the hall leads into a tan and blue bathroom which features an old-fashioned sink and a bathtub. This bath also opens into the nursery.

The master suite is situated at the end of this tile corridor. Two walls of plantation shuttered windows brighten the pale mauve bedroom with a tiered ceiling. A couple will immensely enjoy the relaxing atmosphere in the sitting area anytime during the day.

The wallpaper in the master bath — a floral pattern which features white flowers with yellow, rose and blue centers against a black background — provides a dramatic contrast to the white Corian marble vanity and jacuzzi tub. The vanity has two sinks and a make-up area. A skylight is centered above the marble tub which is framed on three sides with a horizontal beveled mirrors. The bath also includes a built-in shower, gold fixtures and two walk-in closets with mirrored doors.

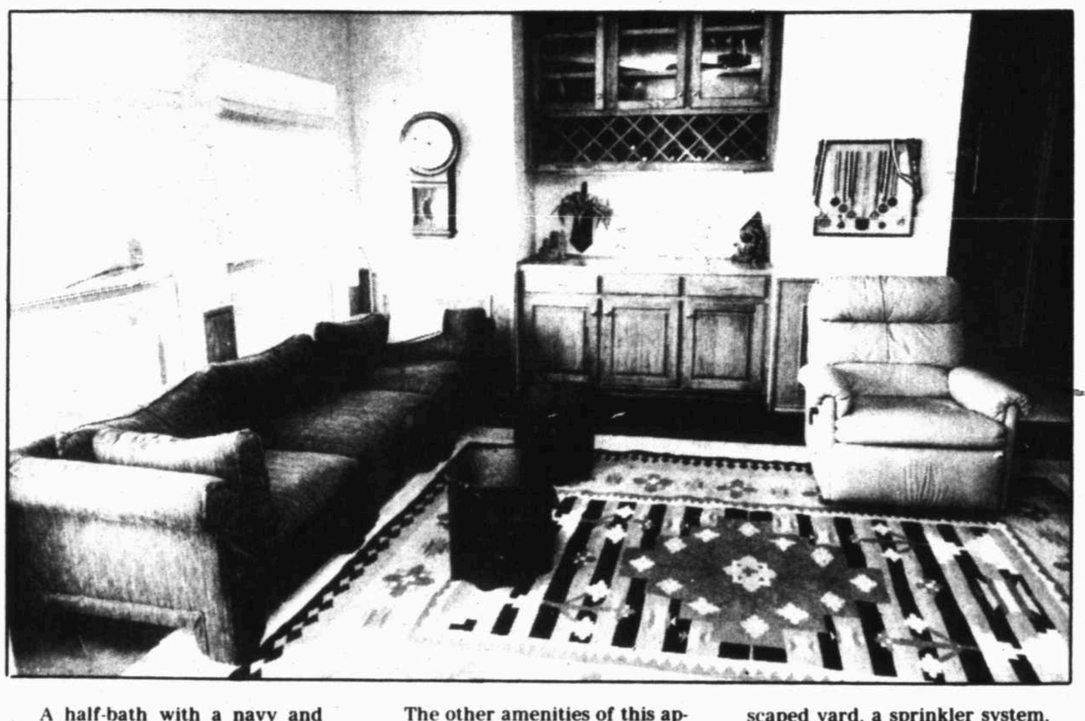

The second story of the home — two bedrooms and a game room — was planned for older children. A red wall highlights the first bedroom where a window views the front yard. The second bedroom has a window which overlooks the golf course. Both of these bedrooms have walk-in closets with built-in shelves.

These upstairs bedrooms are connected with a full-bath that is decorated in a colorful sports border.

The amenities of the game room probably surpasses any child's dream. This room is ideal for children and their friends because they can watch their favorite movies or play video games without disturbing their parents. A cabinet with bookshelves is built-in along one wall and the game room can easily accommodate a sitting area and a computer desk. A door opens onto a private deck area where a family can enjoy watching the sun set in the evenings.

Families will enjoy gathering in the kitchen and breakfast room, above, and the family room, left, of this week's featured home. The kitchen is designed around a central work island and has lots of storage cabinets. A bay window in the breakfast room provides a great view of the Green Tree Country Club golf course.

The family room has a wet bar inset in one wall and is centrally located between the downstair bedrooms and the kitchen. A wall of windows overlooks the back patio.

A half-bath with a navy and red small-print wallcovering is adjacent to the game room.

The other amenities of this approximately 3,600 square foot home are a professionally landscaped yard, a sprinkler system, outside lighting, an alarm system and an intercom system.

First Realty of Midland/Better Homes and Gardens is offering this dream home for $269,000.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

'Big 5' update, relocation book to be published for transferees

Q. What is the status on your much publicized "Big 5" program? J.G.

A. The first winner of Langston Realtors highly successful "Big 5" contest will be named Monday afternoon, August 7. All eligible sales associates have been invited to attend the 4 p.m. champagne reception and drawing for $5,000.

Langston

Over $2,225,000 in properties were sold in the "Big 5" promotion by seven Langston associates and 15 associates from eight other Midland real estate offices. Pat Paxton of Langston's sold three properties, and Langston associate Roberta Aldridge sold two. All licensed sales associates who sold a Langston "Big 5" property are automatically entered in the drawing.

Homeowners who have their homes listed with Langston Realtors have the option to participate in the "Big 5" promotion. The purpose of the program is to create additional agent awareness, interest and showings of the eligible properties.

We are intensely aware of the need to be extra creative and aggressive in marketing our company's listings because there are so many properties for sale and competition is keen for every home! For example, an agent who is showing a customer $70,000, three-bedroom homes can choose among 80 or so properties! Therefore, we in our office feel we must do everything that we can to promote other agents' knowledge and familiarity with our listings.

We schedule open houses, luncheons, wine and cheese parties specifically for Realtors; we distribute flyers to offices and place them in the homes; we are particularly aware of the necessity for accurate and comprehensive descriptions in the Multiple Listing books and we are always planning special promotions of one kind or another! Finally, when we become aware that a Realtor is showing in a particular price range or area, we contact the agent to encourage the showing of Langston listings in the category.

The "Big 5" program is one of the tools that we created for our marketing kit. Each time an agent sells a "Big 5" property, his or her name is entered in the contest. When 25 of the properties have closed, one of the sellings agent's names is drawn to receive $5,000. Agents from every office are eligible; the only requirement is that they have sold a "Big 5" property.

Several "Big 5" properties are already under contract for the next contest and their selling agents are eligible for the next drawing. Over 100 properties are entered in the Langston "Big 5" program. For more information on how your home can qualify for the "Big 5" program, contact Langston, Realtors at 682-9495.

Q. I am considering a transfer to Midland. Do you have any special material that would give us additional information on lifestyle, retailers, services, things for kids to do, etc.? H.M.

A. We have a wonderful relocation kit that we will be happy to send you. Plus, we are in the process of publishing a very attractive 26 page book created especially for transferees. Our experience over the past 23 years with thousands of families moving into Midland has certainly provided us with the questions most often asked by newcomers to Midland, and with the type of information usually sought. Education, health facilities, the arts, neighborhoods, general housings costs, sports, transportations, builders, shopping and entertaining are just a few of the topics that we will cover in the book.

Numerous retailers and service people are cooperating with us in the publication. We will personally be distributing the book to transferees with whom we are in contact. Anyone knowing a possible newcomer to the city who might be interested in a copy is invited to call me, Pat Orseth or Richard Langston and we will put a book in the mail immediately on publication.

If you have any questions on real estate that you would like answered in this column, you are invited to call or write me at Langston, Realtors, 1908 West Wall, Midland, Texas, 79701, (915) 682-9495.

Don Harvey, Realtors has been serving Midlanders for many years

In Midland, the names Don Harvey and Don Harvey, Realtors have become synonymous with real estate. In fact, nearly one out of every three homes reported sold through MLS in Midland are listed for sale with Don Harvey, Realtors.

The name and reputation, however, are by no means limited to the boundaries of Midland, or even to West Texas. Having been very active in the National Association of Realtors, the Texas Association of Realtors and having served as chairman of the Texas Real Estate Commission, Don Harvey has become well known and respected throughout the real estate industry nationwide.

Mr. Harvey became very actively involved in the employee relocation industry during its earliest beginnings. As that industry has grown Don Harvey has grown with it and become a very integral part of its success in West Texas. Over the years, Mr. Harvey has been a regular participant and frequent speaker at the Employee Relocation Council meetings across the country. He has also become the key Realtor and network member for the largest relocation companies, as well as many of the small ones active in our area.

As job relocations have become more and more a fact of life for all Americans, the highly mobile oil industry employees have moved to and from Midland with an ever increasing frequency. Their own companies, the relocation companies and their co-workers, have consistently recommended they utilize the knowledge and experience in relocation gained by Don Harvey over the years.

Don Harvey

Having grown up in Midland and having spent 25 years in the real estate business here, no one has been more concerned with the growth and future of Midland than Mr. Harvey. His role as a highly demanded guest and motivational speaker frequently calls him to other cities in Texas and across the country. But the planes can never get him back home to Midland quickly enough.

Long-term and life-time Midlanders who stay in our area also buy and sell real estate and will do so an average of three or four times throughout their lives. A tremendous percentage of those will number themselves amount the satisfied clients and customers of Don Harvey, Realtors.

Although his company has consistently been one of the largest, if not the largest by several measurement standards, just having lots of sales people around has been one of Mr. Harvey's objectives. While having a good number of highly experienced, long tenured and well-trained associates has. This has facilitated the highest average number of years of experience in the business and longest tenure, as well as the highest average productivity per associate of any of the major companies in town.

Midland's economy has seen many ups and downs with the rise and fall of the oil industry over the years. The real estate industry has prospered and suffered as well through these cycles. But through these many phases, Mr. Harvey has always taught and practiced consistency. And that consistency in optimism, work and service has kept Don Harvey, Realtors at the top in Midland for more than 16 years.

THE SUPER HANDYMAN

Discusses the uses of plastic utensils, magnets

By AL CARRELL

Dear Super:

Plastic knives, like you get with take-out food, have a useful afterlife around our house. I use them in my garden and greenhouse to tell me what I planted, when and where. I just write the info on the knife with a wax pencil and stick them into the ground. They don't rot like wooden markers. I use red and white knives because they are easy to spot when I'm tilling and weeding. — H.G.

A SUPER HINT — This is the time of the year when all sorts of recreational equipment is being used — and abused. If you leave your tents, sleeping bags and boat canopies out in the elements, you might find a stuck zipper or two. You'll avoid this is you rub a candle over these zippers ever so often to make sure they don't lose their zip.

Dear Al:

Discarded refrigerator magnets come in real handy in the workshop. I keep mine in the individual parts bins in my shop. It keeps all the little nuts and bolts together. If I ever tip over any of the bins, it's likely to be much easier to round the little parts back up. — T.R.

Q: I bought a beautiful dining room set at an auction which had some stick-on tags on the wood. I peeled the tags off, but some glue is still on the wood. How should I get this off without ruining the finish?

A: Rub the area with cooking oil and a rag. The oil should loosen the glue from the surface and the rag can get most of it up.

Dear Al:

At some point this past spring, the handle on my outside faucet broke off halfway so that it was pretty hard to turn off and on. I fixed it by removing the old handle completely and replacing it with an old doorknob. I put the knob on in its place and tightened the set screw. It also gives the faucet a touch of class. — H.H.

Entrepreneurial concept has proven itself to RE/MAX associates

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

During 1988, the entrepreneurial RE/MAX concept established a clear leadership position by attracting professionals who had been waiting for this concept to prove itself. Locally, RE/MAX of Midland has 11 professional, full-time agents — many are top producers in Midland — who enjoy the advantages that the RE/MAX concept offers them.

According to a report in NARE, a publication of RE/MAX International, RE/MAX associates have noticed a substantial increase in the average earning power of RE/MAX agents. "Increases in the volume of real estate transactions, the average age of associates, the number of women in the RE/MAX ranks and the number of professional designations earned by RE/MAX associates during the past calendar year also indicate the dynamic growth of the RE/MAX concept in the North American real estate scene," the reported stated.

"These factors are documented in the third consecutive RE/MAX Association Profile, which is an annual computerized analysis of the income, age, gender, industry experience and professional education of the sales associates that are associated with the international RE/MAX network," explained Jan Melton.

These figures included in the report indicate that the average RE/MAX associate income is up $6,200 per agent throughout the system — an 8.2 percent increase over 1987. In an economy with a 4 percent inflation rate, RE/MAX agents are doing more business in 1988 while keeping ahead of inflation.

During 1988, the average age of associates increased by only 2½ months, a statistic that does not match the age increase in the overall population. The figures do suggest that the RE/MAX system is attracting and retaining younger professionals in the ranks. While RE/MAX associates have 8.9 years experience in the real estate industry on the average, RE/MAX agents are generally younger than in the years past.

"This year, more women joined the RE/MAX network. The figures, which grew from 46.3 percent in 1987 to 47.8 percent in 1988, show the increase reflects the growing entrepreneurial spirit in the female population as women meet the challenge of the entrepreneurial RE/MAX concept," added Carolyn Nickell.

Nickell also added that in both Canada and the United States, figures indicated that income grows along with advanced training. Professional designations such as the GRI, CRS, CCIM and FRI equate with earning power as well as credibility and prestige.

The report states that these statistics characterize increasing strength in the RE/MAX network. As the system passes 30 percent of its goal of being the largest real estate organization in North America, the synergy pushes RE/MAX development to a critical-mass point at which growth begins to occur at an unprecedented rate.

"Many top producers who watched the RE/MAX concept succeed throughout its first 15 years of 30 to 40 percent annual growth have begun to join the RE/MAX team. Last year, we established a clear leadership position in the industry by attracting many professionals who had been waiting for RE/MAX to prove itself," explained Melton. "The addition of thousands of the industry's traditional leaders solidifies the RE/MAX position the the real estate marketplace."

According to Nickell, data for this NARE survey was compiled from information RE/MAX agents submit to RE/MAX International for use in the RE/MAX Roster and is based upon membership profiles of associates who had been part of the RE/MAX organization for a least a year before the end of 1988.

In 1988, the RE/MAX system secured its position as the highest-producing real estate organization in Canada and the second-highest in the United States. With 23,000 associates and more than 1,500 opened offices, the RE/MAX network is poised at the threshold of its original 1973 goal of being the largest, most efficient, most service-orientated real estate orginazation in North America.

"At RE/MAX, agents are truly in business for themselves, but not by themselves. This concept has become a fresh model for the entire industry and it has provided a framework for individuals within the business to function as entrepreneurs themselves," stated Melton. "In our offices, our agents are in business for themselves and they are able to receive the highest possible commission, 100 percent!"

RE/MAX of Midland is currently offering an incentive for agents who want to join this independent team of professional agents. Information can be obtained by calling Jan Melton or Carolyn Nickell at 697-8232 for a private consultation.

Coldwell Banker Adobe has many qualified agents to assist with all real estate needs

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

Coldwell Banker was founded in 1906 its residential group operates companies that supply a complete range of residential real estate services, including brokerage, financing, title, escrow and relocation. There are more than 2,100 company-owned offices with more than 38,000 sales associates nationwide. Coldwell Banker is also a member of the Sears Financial Network.

Locally, Coldwell Banker Adobe Inc. Realtors has many qualified professional associates that bring many years of experience to the Midland real estate market. Four of the agents — Janis Cook, Jack Ovadia, Richard Reker and Roy Sewell — help make this company one of America largest full-service real estate companies.

Cook

After being a co-owner of Laughlin Interiors for 12 years, Janis Cook became a sales associate of Coldwell Banker Adobe Inc. Realtors in 1985. During this time she has received her GRI (Graduate of Realtor Institute) designation from the Texas Association of Realtors (TAR). Cook has a degree in business administration and attended Midland College where she took various real estate courses.

Cook's professional career also has included working for Globe Universal Science and Globe Exploration Company where she was an executive secretary to the president of the company. She also was a security officer and received training during this period in industrial security management at the U.S. Army Intelligence School in Maryland.

Cook is a member of the Midland Board of Realtors (MBR), the Women's Council of Realtors, the TAR and the National Association of Realtors (NAR). She is also a member of Ranchland Hills Country Club where she is a beginning golfer and First Baptist Church. She and her husband, Lawson, are the proud grandparents of two boys, ages four and six.

Ovadia

The air force brought Jack Ovadia to West Texas and after fours years of service at Webb Air Force base in Big Spring, Ovadia moved to Midland in 1972. After studying mechanical engineering in Providence, R.I. for two-and-a-half years, Ovadia decided that was not a career he wanted to pursue.

"Although I am just starting out in selling and listing real estate, the real estate field is nothing new to me. I have been self-employed investing in residential real estate, remodeling, managing, maintaining and leasing rental properties full-time for the past five years. Prior to that, I did this part-time for 12 years," explained Ovadia. "At that point in time, I was also working full-time as an electrician in commercial buildings. I have worked and watched lots of high rise building erecting all over Midland. This is where most of my remodeling experience was picked up."

After studying several real estate courses at Midland College, Ovadia is looking forward to his association with Coldwell Banker. He is a member of the MBR, TAR and NAR.

Reker

Richard A. Reker has been a Midland resident since 1978 and prior to entering the real estate field, he was a controller of an independent oil company. Since Sept. of 1987, Reker has been active in the residential and commercial real estate field.

"I enjoy helping people make one of the biggest decisions that they must make. Working in real estate gives me the satisfaction of helping people find a home and making their real estate transaction as easy as possible," said Reker.

Reker and his wife, Susie, have three sons and the youngest son is a student at Texas Tech University.

Reker is a member of Ranchland Hills Country Club, Knights of Columbus and St. Ann's Catholic Church. He is also a member of the MBR, TAR and NAR.

Although Roy Sewell is relatively new to the real estate business, his wide experiences in the past 30 years has made this real estate business a natural.

Sewell

Until he retired in 1986, Sewell was a multi-million producer for most of the 23 years that he worked for a wholesale hardware company in Abilene. All of his past business experiences have been based on the ability of helping people upgrade their standard of living. "I have been helping people modernize their homes back in my early years when I was a younger man. Of course I don't feel old now and never intend to. I want to continue working with people and real estate enables me to do this," stated Sewell.

"The real estate business is hard work and most gratifying when you show houses, and more houses and then your customers walk into the right one. The smiles of satisfaction you feel and see in their faces are very gratifying. That is a reward that is hard to express — besides we make a few bucks that way" explained Sewell.

Sewell has lived in Midland for the past 26 years. He was born in a small town, Talpa, in Coleman County and is very proud of being a veteran of World War II.

"I love working in real estate and wish I could have been in this profession a long time ago, however, I was too busy selling hardware to stop and get my real estate education that is now required to obtain our license," concluded Sewell.

Sandboxes are easy to build

Associated Press

Children of all ages love sand.

Here are instructions for an easy-to-build wood sandbox that will provide them with years of fun.

Tools and Materials:

■ A hammer, saw and screwdriver are all you'll need.

■ The base for the box is made of patio blocks, available at building product or home centers. The box itself has no bottom, so that rainwater can drain out. Get at least 21 8- by 16- by 2-inch blocks for the base. A lid allows the box to serve as a low play table and also acts as a barrier to pets.

■ The box and lid are built of lumber. To minimize waste, buy the lumber in standard lengths. You will need seven 8-foot lengths, one 10-foot length, and two 12-foot lengths.

■ Redwood needs no wood preservative because the wood resists rot, but it is expensive. Pine or other softwood is cheaper but should be treated with a non-toxic wood preservative or paint.

■ Saw the wood into the pieces listed below:

Parts List:

Six 48-inch side boards; six 26-inch end boards; 10 12-inch uprights; 14 28½-inch lid boards, and two 46-inch lid crosspieces. All the lumnber is 1-by-4.

Hardware and Supplies:

■ Four mending plates with ½-inch screws.

■ Galvanized nails: 2-inches and 2½-inches.

■ Two 36-inch lengths of ⅜-inch steel curtain rod cut into six 12-inch pieces.

■ Three 50-pound bags of washed white sea sand, available at building or home centers.

Assembling the Box:

1. Use 8-foot pieces for side boards, lid crosspieces, end boards and the uprights. Cut side boards and lid crosspieces first. Then cut end boards. Use the leftover 3-foot lengths for the uprights. Use the 10- and 12-foot lengths for lid boards.

2. The sandbox is 12 inches (or three boards) high. Nail three uprights, evenly spaced, to the end boards and two uprights to the side boards. Use 2-inch nails driven from the outside. Hammer two nails through the uprights into each board. Stagger the nails to prevent splitting. The nail points will project ½-inch from the inside surface. Hammer and bend these points down and into the wood (clinch-nail) so they won't scratch. This will also make a stronger bond.

3. Assemble the completed sides and ends. Fasten the sides to the end pieces with 2½-inch nails.

4. Position lid crosspieces 10-inches apart on the lid boards. Adjust the crosspieces so they will fit inside the ends of the box. Clinch-nail the crosspieces into the endboards with 2-inch nails driven from the outside. To reinforce the lid boards at the corners of the lid, attach mending plates outside the crosspieces with ½-inch screws.

5. Lay the patio blocks. Set the box on the blocks. Anchor the box by driving two rods into the ground on each side and one at each end in the spaces between the blocks.

BUICK LeSABRE. THE MOST TROUBLE FREE CAR BUILT IN AMERICA.

Until now, this kind of quality was known to only an elite group, Le Sabre owners.

Great selections of New fully loaded LeSabres in stock now!

Prices starting at $15,295

(List $18,341, Stock#9228)

The latest J.D. Power and Associates Initial Quality Survey* states something Buick LeSabre owners can be proud to know and something all new-car buyers should know. The fact that Buick LeSabre is the most trouble free full-size car sold in America. Import or domestic.

The Initial Quality Survey, which measures things gone wrong with new vehicles during the first 90 days of ownership, marks an improvement in Buick quality for the third year in a row. And today, the Buick nameplate ranks as the most trouble free American brand. Higher than Lincoln. Higher than other prestige cars costing thousands more.

To our way of thinking, it all means that if you're looking for quality, you should just look down the Great American Road for the Buick tri-shield. The new symbol for quality. The sign of your Buick dealer.

*J.D. Power & Associates 1989 Initial Quality Survey covering November and December, 1988. Based upon owner-related problems during the first 90 days of ownership.

BUICK LeSABRE. THE MOST TROUBLE FREE CAR BUILT IN AMERICA.

Until now, this kind of quality was known to only an elite group, Le Sabre owners.

Great selections of New fully loaded LeSabres in stock now!

Prices starting at $15,295
(List $18,341, Stock#9228)

The latest J.D. Power and Associates Initial Quality Survey* states something Buick LeSabre owners can be proud to know and something all new-car buyers should know. The fact that Buick LeSabre is the most trouble free full-size car sold in America. Import or domestic.

The Initial Quality Survey, which measures things gone wrong with new vehicles during the first 90 days of ownership, marks an improvement in Buick quality for the third year in a row. And today, the Buick nameplate ranks as the most trouble free American brand. Higher than Lincoln. Higher than other prestige cars costing thousands more.

To our way of thinking, it all means that if you're looking for quality, you should just look down the Great American Road for the Buick tri-shield. The new symbol for quality. The sign of your Buick dealer.

*J.D. Power & Associates 1989 Initial Quality Survey covering November and December, 1988. Based upon owner-related problems during the first 90 days of ownership.

Color is everywhere in our lives; it is an important part of everything we do, everything we perceive. Color is a means of communication. It designates one sports team from another, it directs traffic, it describes someone you have never met.

It's the beauty in the sunset and the autumn leaves. It's the essence of the rainbow and of light shining through a prism. It's televisions and photographs.

We even use the names of colors to express our emotions. When a person is sad, they are feeling blue. When a person is angry, they see red. When a person is jealous, they are green with envy. When a person is a coward, they are yellow.

So it's no wonder that color has an affect on the way we perceive everything around us, from clothing to decor to food.

"There are so many interesting facets to color," said Bobbye Harper, executive director of University Affairs for the University of Texas at the Permian Basin and a certified color analyst. "Since I've been in the business, I've been amazed at the difference color makes in our lives."

COLOR AND the affects it has on individuals has been the topic of study since at least 1930 when architect Robert Door discovered his theory of color and the mixes of pigments. In his color system, every color has either a blue or a gold undertone. Those with blue undertones are cool colors and are called Key I colors. Those colors with gold undertones are warm colors and are called Key II colors.

Only one shade, true orange, is not found in Key I colors; in Key II colors, a strong magenta is the only shade not found, according to Ms. Harper. Every other shade can be found in the cool or warm pallette; the difference between the pallettes is the undertones.

In fact, the cosmetic industry is even beginning to label their products according to cool or warm colors, such a cool beige or warm beige foundations, Ms. Harper said, in response to people becoming more cognizant of the importance of color.

IN THE last 15 years, Ms. Harper believes people have become much more conscious of color usage, even though color analysis has been used subconsciously for much longer.

"We are easily influenced by color," Ms. Harper said. As owner of Image Management, a private color consulting business, she believes that a person's knowledge of their best color "seems to be instinctive."

"When I do someone's colors, I've discovered that people usually reach for the right color (in their wardrobes). On the average, 60 percent of their wardrobe will be the right colors, the remaining 40 percent was bought on sale, or it was a bargain just too good to pass up, or it was a gift," Ms. Harper said.

Jeanelle Adanak, director of fund-raising for Odessa College's PBS station and also a color analyst, agreed. "Color has been used by businesses for years, I think they are just more aware of how it is being used now and more aware of what they were doing wrong," she said.

Adanak became interested in color about 12 years ago while living in Chicago. She and a friend began studying and researching the effects of color. They opened an image consulting business which lasted for 7 years, until Ms. Adanak moved to Odessa.

While in Chicago, she did a lot of consultations for newscasters on local news programs. "We worked to find the best colors for each individual, as well as colors that would look good on camera and convey trustworthiness and confidence," she said.

"There isn't as much demand for consulting here," Ms. Adanak said. However, she does teach a class at OC called "Looking Good" which deals with learning the proper colors for each individual and learning what messages different colors convey.

WITH THE knowledge of colors, Ms. Harper said individuals can manage their image. "I have five pairs of glasses in different colors and different shapes to create different images," she said, quickly adding, "But one thing you have to remember is that you must be consistent in your image, you must manage your credibility. You may think that you are just going to sit behind your desk all day shuffling papers, but that will be the day that an important client will drop in unexpected or something will happen."

According to Ms. Harper, it takes nine positive images to negate one negative image, so maintaining a consistent image is important.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS are another reason Ms. Harper cited for maintaining your image. "The brain is a computer. In the first 30 seconds that you see someone — before they even say anything — you make a strong opinion of that person from their overall look," she said. "You assess an impression of their economic background, their morals, their tastes, their education, their style, what type of person they are overall. This first impression is often hard to change; it takes some time.

"Only 7 percent of communication is actually verbal, the rest is nonverbal," Ms. Harper continued. "At least 40 percent of the 93 percent left is body language. The rest of that image is based on style; the cut of the clothes, the way the clothes fit, if the clothes are wrinkled or pressed, what colors are worn, if those colors create a positive feeling to you.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT-HARRISON

A surprise party recently honored Betty Sumner on her 50th birthday. Hosted by her family, the party was held poolside at the Racquet Club.

The clever invitations included name tags, which were to be cut out and worn to the party. Guests were asked to check the places from which they knew Betty best, and the various locations listed included Kermit, Texas, where she once taught school, to "lunching anywhere."

A baby picture of the honoree adorned the front of the invite, with an artist's rendition of a gavel in her hand. How appropriate, since Betty has served as president and chairman of numerous organizations and committees in Midland!

Cocktails and hors d'oeuvres were served, and guests sat at tables decorated with baskets of green plants and multi-colored balloons. Enlarged photographs of Betty at various ages and stages of her life were strategically placed around the party area.

Hosting were her husband, Bill, and children, Sara of Alexandria, Va., who serves on the White House staff; Nancy, a senior at the University of Texas-Austin, and Whit, a Midland High School senior.

Special guests included the honoree's parents, Avalyn and Harwell Whitmire of Odessa; her sister, Mary (Mrs. Steve) Fish, and children, Shannon and Derrick of Tempe, Ariz., and her former Rice University roommate, Bobbie Dunn of Houston.

LONGTIME TRAVELING companions, Jo and Michael Cristiani and Michael's sister and brother-in-law, Nicki and Al Naclerio of White Plains, N.Y., recently returned from a delightful two-week trip to Europe.

Their itinerary, which included Austria, Hungary, Switzerland and Germany, began at Salzburg with a cruise on the Danube River.

While in Vienna, they crossed the border to Budapest, Hungary, for a visit. In Salzburg, they were entertained at the world famous Marionette Theater and in Vienna with a symphony concert and an evening of Johann Strauss music in the park where the composer once performed.

From Vienna, they crossed over Austria's highest mountain, the Grosslockner, and continued on to Innsbruck. Highlights of their stay there included a concert of folk music, which featured yodeling, Tyrolean zither and harp, and a visit to the Linderhoff Castle. They crossed over into Germany to Oberammergua, site of the world famous Passion Play, and lunched in Liechtenstein.

The group enjoyed two nights in Zurich, with a day trip to Lake Lucerne and a cable train ride to the top of Mt. Pilatus. They continued their journey through the Black Forest to Munich, where they enjoyed its many attractions before enplaning for home.

THE HOME of Lorraine and Charles Coffman in Saddle Club South was the locale for a recent ice cream social for members of Chapter BS of the P.E.O. Sisterhood and guests.

The group enjoyed homemade ice cream, cake and cookies in the beautiful back yard setting. The Sisterhood's colors of yellow and white were featured in party appointments.

Social chairman Dorothy Sharrick was assisted by Fay Edrington with arangements.

Among those attending were Doris Monroe, Pat and Chuck Dougherty, Marjorie and Clarence Cardwell, Sharri and Jim Ketcham, Sally and John Omernick and Beverly and Bill Stone.

ELLA (MRS. H.P.) HOLLANDER hosted a family reunion in Midland recently, along with her daughter and son-in-law, Jo and Ed Petersen. Approximately 50 family members came from Illinois, Nebraska, California and other points in Texas.

Special events included a brunch at Ranchland Hills Country Club honoring Mrs. Hollander, who will celebrate her 87th birthday on Aug. 26, and a dinner at El Chico Restaurant hosted by Mrs. Hollander's son, John Hollander.

Other Midlanders attending were Janine and Larry Petersen and daughter, CeJay; Kim and Stanley Woodard and children, Justin and Nathan, and Joni and Darrell Weddle and children, Chris and Kyle.

Headquarters for the reunion, which was held July 12-17, was the Ed Petersen home on Linda Court.

Colors have meanings associated

By ELIZABETH EDWIN
Lifestyle Editor

Every image has a color associated with it in the mind. For instance, little girls are pink, little boys are blue, saloons conjure up the images of red and funerals are usually associated with black.

The following are a few of the basic colors and the effects they are believed to have on people. The color meanings following are a compilation of ideas from several books put together by Jeanne Adanak, director of fund-raising for Odessa College's PBS station, with some additions by Bobbye Harper, director of University Affairs for the University of Texas at the Permian Basin. Both women are color analysts.

■ RED: Red is the most powerful color of all and the darker the red, the more violent and powerful it is. Red will give you a forceful manner, an air of confidence and the desire to win.

Red is a sensual and active color. It evokes emotions and stimulates the appetite. The person who wears red gets what he or she wants, whether it is the lady vamp out to snare her guy or the man who sports a red jacket at the racetrack.

Red is also the color that combats injustice. If you have to go to court and you feel you are right, wear red.

■ PINK: Pink is the color of balance, sanity and mental health. If you want to feel relaxed at home, paint you walls pink. If you suffer insomnia, paint and decorate you bedroom in shades of pink and wear pink pajamas or lingerie. Pink sheets and pillow cases also lead to restful slumber. If you have had a quarrel with a loved one, wear pink when you try to patch this up. It is the color of meditation and helps restore harmony when discord exists.

On the other hand, pink is the color of laziness. It drains energy and offers a calming effect. It is one of the best colors for hyperactive children. If someone is showing to many signs of laziness, get him or her to wear something other than pink.

■ BLACK: Black is an authoritative color. It commands respect and honor. The psychic qualities of black are steadfastness, stubbornness and solidity. If you know somebody is going to try to get you to change you mind about something, wear black during the argument. He will never win.

Black is also the color of strong sexual attraction, not the passionate lust of scarlet or crimson, but the subtle attraction that can lead to a deep and lasting relationship. If you want a one-night stand, wear crimson, but if you are looking for a serious soul mate, wear black on that special date.

Black also helps eliminate worry and stress. If you are under pressure, wear black and it will help ease the tension. Black also helps you cut down on eating, so it you have a weight problem, wear black.

■ SILVER: Silver is the color of compassion, understanding and it helps you keep secrets, it is the color of the moon and it radiates the moons psychic powers.

If a woman wants to keep her man home, she should give him a silver ring. If you want to keep your secrets to yourself, wear silver, the color of secretiveness. But if you suffer from ulcers or digestive problems, don't wear silver. It can aggravate stomach disorders.

■ YELLOW: Yellow and gold in metal is a ruling color. It represents leadership, ferocity, courage, fidelity, pride, ambition, command and power.

If you want to command others as a boss, salesman or promoter, wear a lot of gold rings and other ornaments. The woman who wants to be the center of her social world should also wear yellow and gold to make use of the psychic powers of this powerful color.

Yellow impels others to notice and to follow. It is the color of the sun and radiates the psychic power. It is a happy color. It is said that yellow, yellow-orange and yellow-green can raise a child's IQ by 10 points — also vice versa.

■ WHITE: White is the color of true love, faithfulness, generosity, purity and sincerity. It also radiates health. So if you wish to ward off sickness, wear white. The color also carries authoritative qualities, as does black.

White also is the color of thrift, so it is a good color to wear when going shopping. It will prevent you from splurging or buying something expensive that you don't need.

The combination of black for financial management and white for thrift is an excellent combination for the compulsive spender to wear while shopping.

■ ORANGE: Orange is the color of successful politicians. If you want to become involved in politics, wear something orange.

Orange also will bring out qualities like bluntness of speech, good humor, health, confidence, generosity and frankness. But it also has the power to make people resent authority and rebel against conventional behavior. It is considered the most offensive of all colors.

Orange is a good color for gamblers and professional entertainers.

Orange and red-orange are appetite stimulants.

■ BLUE: Blue is the color of credibility. If you want someone to believe what you are saying, wear blue. Deep blues lend themselves to royalty.

Blue also in the color of psychics. It can give you the insight to solve problems that have included you and helps you analyze difficult problems.

Blue can help you turn down somebody who is trying to get you to give him a loan, or to borrow something from you. If you are always being pestered by moochers, wear blue.

Blue helps people keep from being carried away by sudden passion. If you want your head to rule your heart, wear blue.

■ GREEN: Green is the color of strength, force, vitality, energy and vigor. Light green creates a changeable personality, while dark green impels sudden bursts of energy that can help get the job finished on time.

If your find yourself listless on the job, wear dark green. If you want material change such as a better salary, better apartment, wear light green.

Green is also the color of brutality and sadism, so don't wear green when you are going to be involved in situations in which violence may erupt.

Green helps you gain self-confidence and it is a good color to wear while proposing to the one you love. Green is said to be able to ward off sicknesses such as the common cold and other infections. Green is the color of life.

However, it is not a credible color for those who deal with money. Money handlers are better off in blue.

■ PURPLE: Purple is the color of creativity and passion. If you want your imagination to flourish, wear purple. It is a feeling color, a sensitive color. You'll find all kinds of inspiration and ideas coming to you.

Purple also is the color of impulsiveness. Don't wear purple if you're going to a party and don't want to lose control. But it will allow you to let loose and have a good time.

Mauve brings out your romantic and sexual nature. Members of the opposite sex will find you alluring in this color. Bright purple, on the other hand, brings out your wild and crazy characteristics and wearing it will undoubtedly make others think you're interesting, but unpredictable.

COLORS

"Color has to play a large part in the impressions we get," Ms. Harper said. "For instance, black and white (separately or in combination) are authoritative colors. Think about the professions that dress in black such as judges and priest. And nurses and doctors dress in white. These colors invoke confidence. Can you imagine a judge in a different color than black?"

ALONG THE same line, blue conveys credibility, Ms. Harper said. "I have counseled with some lawyers for their court room presentations and I usually tell them to wear credible blues and grays. And (business) men should not wear pink or green," she said. "Pink and green are not credible colors, particularly for those who deal with money. However, for a more casually dressed profession such as a golf or tennis pro, green would be very appropriate. In that setting, green becomes a credible color. It also is the color of life."

She recommended sticking to blues for job interviews because it is considered credible and the most believable color. (For more meanings of colors, please see related story, Page 2E.)

"People who have spent a lot of time polishing their professional image will lean toward the darker colors that are more authoritative, they don't go too flashy" Ms. Adanak said. "On the flip side, entertainers and singers go for the bright, bold colors that attract attention and make your think of fun.'

"How we act and react has much more to do with color than we realize," according to Jean Wood Mumford, author of "Everyone is Someone in Color" and a member of the Color Marketing Association, an invitation only group which is responsible for selecting marketing and product colors five years in advance.

FOR INSTANCE, most children react to the bright colors of red and yellow. "In a small box of crayons, young children will usually reach for the red first and then the yellow," Ms. Adanak said.

"Brighter colors solicit more activity, so fast food chains generally use bright colors. They are designed to get you in and out in a hurry," said Tyler Tindal, a professor of speech communication at Midland College. "Look at McDonald's. They are geared to children and are a fast food establishment, so they used the bright red and yellow that kids like. On the other hand, elegant restaurants will use greens and browns to give a feeling of relaxation. ... Pastels are also less offensive."

For the flip side, Ms. Harper said, "Orange is absolutely the most offensive color, I think it is because it is so strong."

Often strong, or hot, colors are mixed with weaker colors for effect she said. "Usually school colors are a mixed harmony to create attention. For example, the hot orange and the cool white for UT (University of Texas at Austin), or the hot maroon and cool white of Texas A&M (University), or the hot yellow with the cool green for the Baylor bears," Ms. Harper said.

In product marketing, companies often deliberately use this same theory of mixed harmony to create attention to their product packaging. Tide laundry detergent is an excellent example of mixed harmony. The orange and yellow are hot colors, while the blue is a cool color, Ms. Harper said. "Also, notice that the company put it's name in blue, a color that conveys confidence and believability. The Tide company also has updated their logo, but they kept the same colors.

"You should also take a look at what doesn't get your attention," Ms. Harper said.

"My husband works in marketing, and sometimes when a product is not selling well, they will pull it off the shelf and repackage it, and sometimes sales will pick up," Ms. Adanak said.

COLOR ALSO is important in home and working environments (see related story on Page 1G). A decor done in cool colors is more relaxing and welcoming than an environment of warm colors. Warm colors are active colors and work well in a gym class and sports clubs, Ms. Adanak said, while cool colors are good for babies nurseries, bed rooms and schools for children with learning disabilities.

"I've also found that there is less turnover in employees and customers in offices decorated in cool colors. Warm colors, like the browns and golds that used to be see in offices, are more active, and these offices seem to have more frequent turnovers," Ms. Adanak said.

Ms. Harper pointed out that the latest decor trend is mauves and blues, the cooler colors, "and I think interior designers are becoming more aware of the importance of color and the reactions it creates."

So the next time you look at a rainbow, or watch a football game, or reach in your closet for that special outfit that always makes you feel good, just remember, it's color that makes it all possible.

Wall maintainance takes care; caution

Associated Press

Maintaining a beautiful paint job or stylish wall covering takes care and caution.

Here are some tips from Decorating magazine:

As part of the household cleaning routine, walls should be dusted or vacuumed to remove surface dirt and keep cobwebs under control. When heavy-duty wall cleaning is necessary, however, keep in mind that the same cleaner that works wonders on wood paneling can ruin a fancy glazed wall finish.

To head off trouble, check the labels on paint cans or wallpaper packaging upon purchase for specific cleaning instructions. It's particularly important to use the right cleaning solution for a job.

Test an inconspicuous spot before attacking an entire wall, whether it's painted, paneled, papered or covered with fabric. Don't use strong cleaners on glossy finishes. They can dull the surface. Don't saturate nonwashable surfaces. Use commercial powdered cleaners or blot gently with cleaning fluid.

Remember, too, that applying too much of any cleaner may do more harm than good to wall coverings. Excessive elbow grease or cleaning too frequently can actually shorten the life of a finish.

Here are some tried-and-true cleaning solutions that work on various surfaces:

■ FLAT PAINT: 14 cup ammonia, borax and white vinegar per gallon of warm water.

■ GLOSSY PAINT: 1 tablespoon washing soda per gallon of water.

■ MILDEW: 1 cup chlorine bleach per gallon of water.

■ WOOD PANELING STAINS: Mineral spirits or paint thinner, applied sparingly with a soft cloth.

■ GREASE STAINS: Cleaning fluid mixed with fuller's earth (dark) or powdered whiting (light).

DEAR ABBY

Reunion 'honors' need a kinder, gentler focus

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: As summer is high school class-reunion time, I am reminded of something that happened two years ago at my son's 10th high school reunion: He was "honored" as the class member who had lost the most hair. And as if that wasn't bad enough, the weekly newspaper printed a story about the reunion and publicized the "distinction."

Abby, I would like to ask your assistance in educating the planners of class reunions about such insensitive "fun." I am dead serious about this! Hair loss is not anythin, o laugh about.

How about honoring the class member who has lost the most teeth? Or honoring the woman who raised the most prominent moustache? How about honoring the person with the biggest belly?

How about it, Abby? Will you please put the word out that class reunions can be even more fun without hurting people's feelings with this kind of sick humor? — MIDWEST MAMMA IN IOWA CITY

DEAR MAMMA: Consider the word out. As a fellow Iowan, I apologize for such a tasteless stunt. A boo-by prize for the insensitive boob who conceived the idea.

DEAR ABBY: I am in my late 30s. My father (if you can call him that) was an abusive drunk from the time I was born — and earlier, so I'm told.

Through years of abuse, my mother did nothing to stop his hideous abuse of both me and my sister. She sat there and watched, and did absolutely nothing to protect us or stop him. My father is now in his 60s, still drinking and as abusive as ever.

Would you believe that there are people who actually call mother a "living saint" for having put up with Dad's abusiveness through the years? Dad's family (and Mom's) go on and on about how "saintly" she is to have stayed with him through all of this.

Abby, am I missing something? Will you please tell me how anyone can consider it "saintly" to take abuse and allow your children to be abused?

I simply do not see my mother as a "saint." Tell me, honestly — do you? — ABUSED AND CONFUSED

DEAR ABUSED AND CONFUSED: Knowing that your father was abusing you and your sister, and allowing the abuse to continue, makes your mother a party to the crime. A "saint" she ain't.

DEAR ABBY: Since you recently published a poem about goldfish, I thought your readers might find this one about a butterfly and a bee entertaining. I hope you think it's worth printing. — GARTH NEVILLE, OLD HICKORY, TENN.

DEAR GARTH: Worth printing? It gave me the best laugh I've had all week. Thanks for sending it my way.

THE BUTTERFLY AND THE BEE
(Author Unknown)

Once upon a time
A handsome honeybee
Fell in love with a butterfly
He met in a tulip tree.

He said, "I love you madly
"And want to share your life
"Let's fly away together,
"Will you be my wife?"

She shook her head in sorrow,
"No, no, no," cried she.
"For I'm a monarch's daughter
"And you're just a son of a bee."

DEAR ABBY: Concerning your staid British clergyman who finds the American practice of bear-hugging the clergy too close for comfort:

I wonder what he would think of our wonderful Bishop Francis Quinn of Sacramento, who sports a bumper sticker on his car that says: HAVE YOU HUGGED YOUR BISHOP TODAY?

He means it, too, judging from the way this beautiful man offers himself to hugs galore to any and all of the flock he shepherds. — THERESE MALOUF, SACRAMENTO

DEAR ABBY: I know from reading your column that you disagree with me, but I believe that a friend should tell when someone is cheating, because that person needs to know what kind of person he or she is in a relationship with.

My husband is a minister, and he has counseled many couples. Often, one partner cheated even before the marriage, which usually carries over into the marriage at some later date.

However, there is one misconception in regards to cheating, and that is that the "wounded party" is always blameless. Abby, that just isn't so! Nine times out of 10, the "wounded" party drove the other party into an affair because of nagging, coldness, lack of understanding and withholding sex.

There are always three to blame in every affair, and the wounded party must take responsibility for his or her part in provoking the affair, or the marriage can never be healed. — JANET G.

DEAR JANET: I don't know where you found your "statistics," but your generalities and absolutes make your conclusions questionable.

It's NOT true that the wounded party always provokes the affair and drives the cheater to cheat. It's possible that the wounded party is entirely blameless, so the "excuses" you offer to justify cheating miss the mark by a mile.

AT WIT'S END

A mother's work is never done

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I've seen it happen. Children grow up and move away from home, and invariably there will be a mother somewhere running behind the car with a "Just Married" sign on it yelling to her son, "Wait! I'm not finished with you yet!"

So little time ... so much to teach ... so many pearls of wisdom that you are sure fell on deaf ears. The panic sets in.

Many mothers have been known to have nightmares for months, even years, after their children are grown and on their own. I had a dream of the wedding of my daughter. It was held in St. Patrick's Cathedral, and guests filled it to capacity. Everyone was there — Dr. Spock, my daughter's old teachers, grandparents and all my friends. We watched breathlessly as the couple exchanged vows and rings.

Finally, the minister said, "You may kiss the bride now." As the bride turned, her new husband lifted the veil of illusion tulle from her face to reveal my daughter with a pacifier in her mouth! All eyes in the church turned to me in disgust. I had never weaned her off the pacifier, but had taken the easy road to motherhood. It was a nightmare.

There were other restless nights when the bad dreams persisted. One night I dreamed I was in a great room in Stockholm. My husband was wearing a rented tuxedo and I was dressed in a tasteful beige dress and matching coat. My son was summoned to accept the Nobel Prize for literature. The audience rose to their feet and applauded wildly. When they had settled down for his acceptance speech, there was a long silence. He just stood there like a wall. The greatest prize in the world of literature had just been given to him and he didn't know what to say.

I dropped on my hands and knees and crawled along the floor until I was within reach of his trousers I tugged at them and whispered, "What do you say when someone gives you a treat? You say thank you!" I had failed again.

The years go by so fast. When my son eats an ice-cream cone like a lizard, I want to paste a disclaimer on his forehead saying, "This child's mother had him eat with a mirror in front of his plate for three years and is not responsible for what you see." When a visit to his apartment is like dropping into the Temple of Doom, I want him to use a fake name on the lease.

We all try. We just never know what sticks and what doesn't. Recently, when I viewed one of my kids in a shirt that had never seen an iron, he said, "Remember when I was in a school play and you only pressed the trouser leg that faced the audience?"

Why do they always remember the crummy stuff!

Citrus peels easily

Copley News Service

Peels of citrus fruit "almost fall off" after it is immersed in an enzyme called pectinase and then put in a vacuum chamber for few minutes, say U.S. Agriculture Department researchers in Winter Haven, Fla, which would be a boon to commercial canners of citrus fruit.

Old Man Winter may 'do in' killer bees

Copley News Service

Public officials are concerned about how people will react when the so-called "killer" bees hit North America.

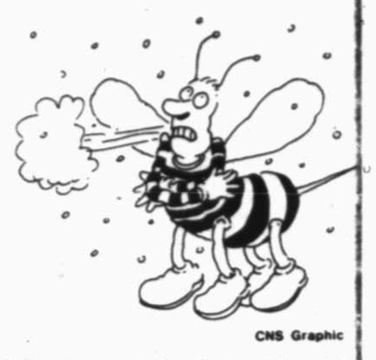

There's no denying that five Mexicans and 70 Venezuelans have died since killer bees invaded Latin America.

And experts warn the irritable insect is easily agitated, stings in large swarms and pursues people over a much greater distance.

But the U.S. Department of Agriculture's national program director, Dr. James Tew, says killer bees won't arrive in a mass that darkens the sky as some ridiculous TV shows portray.

Instead, Tew says they will show up in single little swarms.

And perhaps the best news is that killer bees may be flying into a big trap.

CNS Graphic

Africanized bees, it seems, need a year-round food supply, so harsh North American winters may very well be their death blow.

'Old Maid's Insanity' affects men, women

Copley News Service

It turns out that what was once called "Old Maid's Insanity" also afflicts men.

You know it as loving someone who doesn't love you back. But therapists call it "erotomania."

And Canadian psychiatrist Hannah Wilansky says men in love with women who don't love them may turn love into hate. She says a male patient can get violent when his affections aren't returned.

Wilansky cites the case of a 23-year-old who became psychotic after constantly phoning and appearing at his so-called love's doorstep.

Another case involved a man who — after seven years of unrequited love — assaulted the boyfriend of a woman he thought loved him.

Engagement rings feature new designs

Copley News Service

Creating excitement among brides as an engagement ring is a diamond flanked by triangular-cut rubies or sapphires, says Nancy Spitzer of Heller's Jewelers, Chevy Chase, Md.

Often the avant-garde bride, she says, chooses rubies or sapphires surrounded by diamonds. Some designs that have been around for ages are coming back, she says, like the "eternity ring," a band of diamonds or colored stones and diamonds.

Cambodian wedding is old-fashioned romance

By EVELYN IRITANI
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — "First kiss?" Hin Chanrotha is asked after the giggles subside.

The 26-year-old Cambodian man smiles and looks over at his 22-year-old bride, Khung Sokunthea. They have just brushed lips trying to bite a tiny cluster of grapes being held by one of the women crowded into the bedroom of this small apartment in South Seattle.

"It's a way to get them closer together," explains one of their self-appointed instructors in marital togetherness.

The bride and groom, seated in their elaborate silk and brocade wedding costumes, are being challenged to bite into a variety of fruit — grapes, peaches and bananas — dangled between their faces. This is only the second time they've met. The pressure is on.

For the first time today, they burst into laughter.

It is a moment of levity in an intense, daylong celebration that mixes Hindu and Buddhist traditions and Cambodian folklore, incense and ancestral offerings, a pig's head and cigarettes.

For many young Cambodian refugees, the traditional wedding celebration is a step back into a world left behind when their families fled their war-torn homeland in the mid-1970s and '80s.

FOR THEIR parents and grandparents, these rites of passage are a precious piece of a culture they can't afford to lose.

"I am so happy because my granddaughter followed my customs," said Siev Chheng Y., patriarch of this family. "She does not have another boyfriend. She and her parents agree to follow the traditions. We can let people know she is married, but she is following the right way."

For many Cambodians, the right way is still the old way. In the case of Hin and Khung, that means a marriage arranged by their parents. Two month ago, Hin and his parents, Hin Hill and Hin Porleng, flew out to Seattle from Sterling, Va., to meet the bride and her family. After a brief meeting, a date was set.

"Both children agree with the parents that this is good," says the groom's father, a machine operator.

The elder Hin says his highest priority was finding a young woman who never had a relationship with another man and had good moral character. Sex before marriage is frowned upon in this conservative community.

"We do not care about the outside, but the inside," he says.

The bride, who came to the U.S. a year ago from a refugee camp, met their expectations. She and her husband will follow custom and return to Virginia and live with his parents.

WHEN ASKED how he feels about an arranged marriage, Hin Chanrotha just shrugs his shoulders and smiles. "It's the Cambodian custom," he says.

Siev Kimnay, the bride's mother, is thrilled. She is training to be a seamstress and has four other children still at home.

"My daughter is very good," she says during the ceremony. "I hope she will be happy."

Her daughter, a soft-spoken young woman, is a "little nervous" but says she is "happy" with her wedding day.

For the Siev family, who settled all over the U.S. after fleeing from Cambodia, there are many reasons for happiness. This is the first time in 14 years that the elder Sievs and their six children have been reunited. Two other children are lost, and presumed dead, in Cambodia.

"At first, I thought my family was all dead," says Po Sin, the 46-year-old son who escaped from Cambodia first and came to the U.S. in 1975. His parents and youngest brother, Po Heng, didn't arrive until five years ago.

Multicolored metallic streamers hang from the ceiling and the Sievs' floors are covered with woven Oriental rugs. In the corner sits a gold statue of Buddha flanked by offerings of incense-studded apples and silver containers holding grain husk bouquets and artificial flowers.

THE WEDDING begins shortly after dawn with a processional of the groom, his family and the wedding guests to the home of the elder Sievs. They arrive bearing silver platters with bottles of cognac, a large pig's head, fruit, clothing, cigarettes, candy and other gifts.

This marks the beginning of an elaborate wooing ritual in which Prak Sarim, the wedding official, or achar, acts as a go-between for the groom's family. He shows the elder Sievs the room full of gifts, which include a platter holding two diamond wedding bands and two gold necklaces worth $5,000. He asks if there is anything else the groom can do to win their daughter's hand in marriage. After some banter, the Sievs indicate their willingness to accept the offer.

The bride enters the living room in a green and gold silk chang kheng, the first of four elaborate silk wedding dresses she will wear during the five-hour morning ceremony. For a lavish evening banquet at a local Chinese restaurant, she has three additional outfits in the closet.

Chan Samneng, the woman who rents the Cambodian wedding apparel, says the average charge for a wedding is about $350 for makeup, assistance in dressing and use of the costumes.

"It's a chance to dress up and look pretty," she says, explaining the frequent changes.

THE RING exchange is followed by the haircut ceremony, a ritual symbolizing the cutting away of the old and a new start in life. The couple re-enters the room and sits down in adjacent chairs, while the achar does a dance around them carrying a pair of scissors that have been blessed for this occasion. With each skip, he takes a few pretend snips at the heads of the bride and the groom. The parents, grandparents and close friends also take their turn at the shears.

That is followed by a shift into the solemn for a lengthy blessing by two Buddhist monks. The two stern-faced men lead a series of chants while the room fills with the sweet smell of incense. The bride and groom bow repeatedly as a sign of respect.

The last scene — the sword ceremony — calls for the elaborate silk costumes of the king and the queen. The achar places the sword across the couple's hands and they are symbolically bound together for life. He ties pieces of colored strings around their wrist to show his good wishes for their eternal happiness. He dips a flower into water and flicks droplets onto their hands and heads. The other guests get up to pay their wishes.

"It's time to eat," whispers one tired guest.

Hin and Khung, kneeling on the ground with their heads bowed, are an easy target. Within moments, the crowd begins tearing apart bouquets of dried husks and pelting the wedding couple with tiny brown grains. They get up and walk back into the bedroom followed by a group of smiling women.

It's finally time for the fruit.

Color-blind Dalton's name remembered

Copley News Service

When English Quaker schoolmaster John Dalton, who turned chemist and physicist, was 27, he took his mother a pair of stockings as a birthday present. She said: "Thou hast brought me a pair of grand hose, John, but what made thee fancy such a bright color? I can never show myself at meeting in them."

Dalton was astounded, because to him they seemed a drab bluish color; in fact, they were a bright cherry red.

He and his brother had lived all those years without realizing they were color blind, he studied this aberration, presented a paper on it in 1794, and now this condition is known as Daltonism.

The shallow, migrating shoals of the Atlantic coast are known for moving the "hot" surfing waves up and down the beach from season to season. But dedicated boarders seek out the best breakers along the length of the Carolina beaches every year.

Text & Photos by ALLEN E. HOWLAND

GRAND STRAND

With views like the one above, it's easy to see why this island is called Sunset Beach. Below, bright beach umbrellas polka-dot the sand at Myrtle Beach, a mid-south mecca which rivals more famous Florida beach resorts.

SUNSET BEACH, N.C. — Carolinians aren't satisfied to call the stretches of sand running along their shorelines a beach, they call it "the strand." And the grandest strand of all is the virtually uninterrupted one spanning the northern shore of South Carolina to the state line into the Tarheel State.

Myrtle Beach, the mid-south's Spring Break answer to Fort Lauderale and Daytona, is the heart of the Grand Strand. Its Civil Jet Port, served by four major airlines, is the gateway to beach and golf vacations for thousands of visitors annually.

The fairways of more than two dozen golf clubs wind through the lush trees of the lowlands surrounding the city of about 20,000, creating a duffers' paradise.

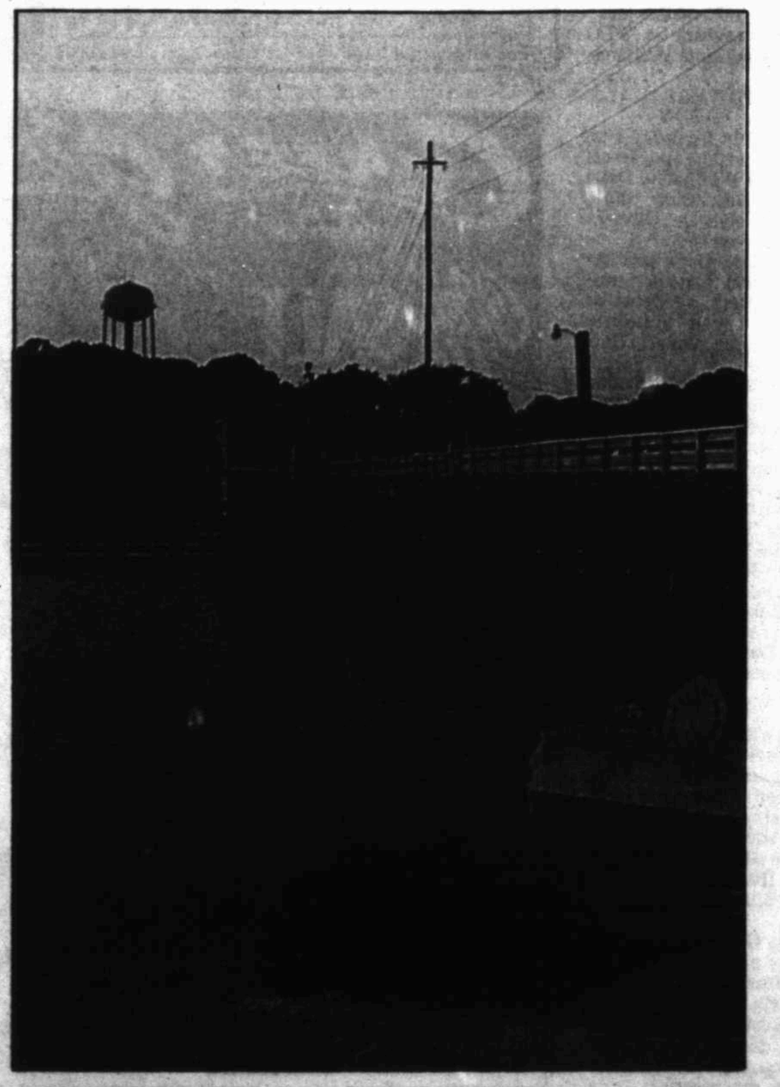

In the middle of town, The Pavilion serves as the social and commercial hub of beach activity. Its amusement park rides, carnival games, shops, restaurants and bars are a magnet for bored beachcombers and adventurous visitors.

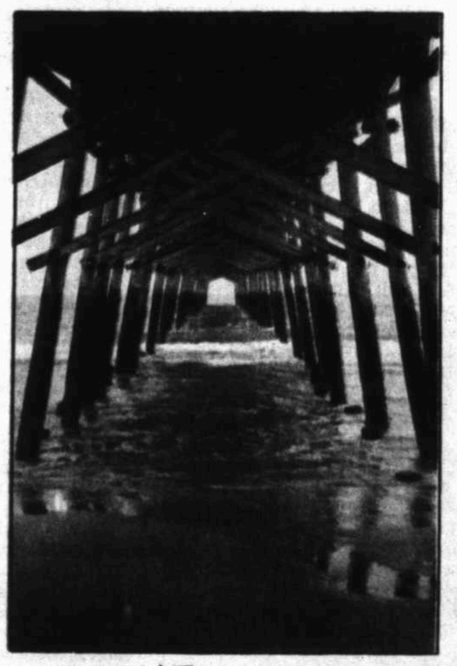

North of town on U.S. Highway 17 stands "restaurant row" a series of sprawling wooden seafood houses with inviting porches and mammoth parking lots, lining both sides of the road.

Please see BEACH, Page 2F

Rolling waves make the Atlantic a perfect playground for flotation devices, from inner tubes and rafts to "boogie boards."

The only access to Sunset Beach is by way of a drawbridge, left, which disconnects at one end and floats aside to allow boats passage through the narrow channel of the Intracoastal Waterway. The bridge deck floats with the tide, taking drivers above ground level at high tide and through a sharp dip at low tide. The island's pier, above, offers picturesque vistas and shade to beachcombers and a fishing spot for saltwater anglers.

Berkeley: City of color, contrast

By ART GARCIA
Copley News Service

BERKELEY, Calif. — Some places defy description; Berkeley, across the bay from San Francisco, resists classification. What it does is offer a diversity that ranges from architecturally classic homes, a hillside grande dame Victorian hotel that used to be a castle and now is the nation's only urban international spa and its own sociopolitical culture bred of turmoil and trends at both collegiate and city government levels.

A visit to Berkeley will add adventure to your stay in San Francisco and the Bay area. Located about 10 miles across the Bay Bridge from San Francisco and essentially a college town, Berkeley is home for the main campus of the University of California, which has more Nobel Laureates on its faculty than any other school in the world.

The 30,000-student campus is the generator for the intellectual energy that courses through all levels of Berkeley. Home of the Free Speech Movement, the university's high-tension electrified campuses across the country during the revolution of protest in the 1960s and '70s, and still remains at the forefront of student unrest movements.

This city of 111,000 is a living montage of color and contrast. It bustles with street vendors and street people along Telegraph Avenue, the colorful thoroughfare that ends at the university's main gate. Specialty shops dot chic Solano Avenue in neighboring Albany, avant-garde book and record stores abound around the campus community and art galleries highlight the talented and the tasteless.

MEANWHILE, BERKELEY'S collection of top-rated restaurants form what has become popularly known as the San Francisco Bay area's Gourmet Ghetto.

One of the "ghetto's" brightest stars is chef Alice Waters' Chez Panisse, where critics say California cuisine is presented in its most "refined" version and in whose kitchens top chefs across the country received their training.

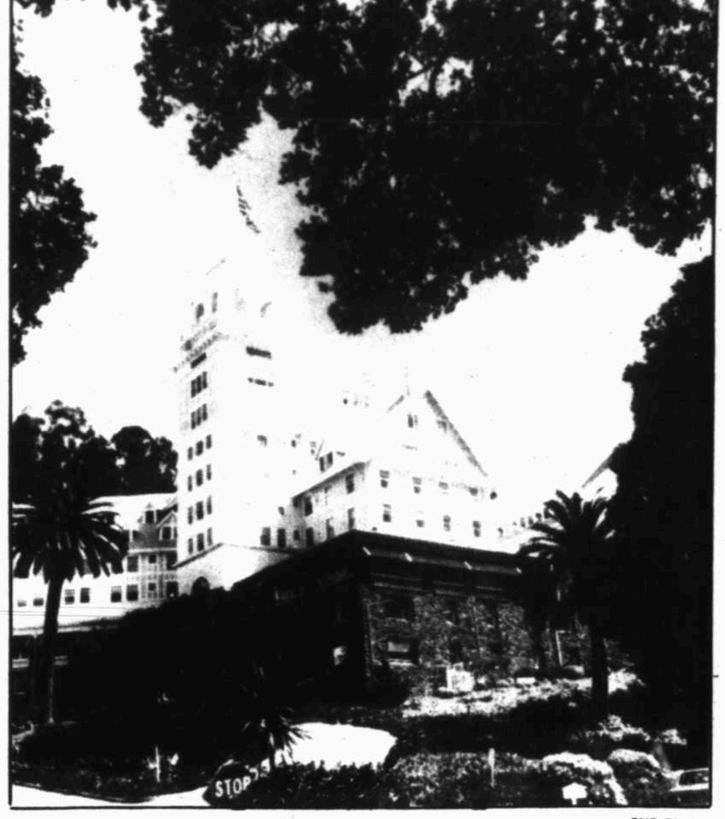

La Paloma and the Santa Fe Bar & Grill, the latter a former train station, entice with fresh ingredients (Santa Fe grows its own on the premises) for all aspects of their savory cuisine. Sedona Bar & Grill in the Shattuck Hotel downtown rounds out the trio of newer dining experiences winning rave reviews.

Nationally known chic chef Jeremiah Tower opened the Santa Fe, closed it in a squabble with partners and saw it win a new reputation when taken over last year by Fazol "Faz" Poursohi, who also runs three top restaurants in San Francisco.

Above this culinary collection rests one of the area's classic hotels, the Claremont, an all-white, 239-room Victorian queen now known as the Claremont Resort & Spa after completion of a $22 million renovation. The classiest place to stay in the entire east bay, the Claremont, which this year unveiled its own "crossover cuisine" and bills it as matching gourmet dining with the nutritional values of a healthy lifestyle.

Last January, the nation's first international luxury resort spa in a metropolitan setting opened at the Claremont. The hotel/spa maintains its 19th century primness and tradition of European-style elegance, even after its recent step into new-age living with the spa's emphasis on revitalizing and rejuvenating the body and the mind.

HONEYMOON HEADQUARTERS for the Bay area for more than seven decades, the hotel offers guests an Olympic-size swimming pool, 10 day/night tennis courts, Jacuzzi and sauna facilities, as well as the spa.

CNS Photo

The Claremont Resort and Spa is a 239-room Victorian delight in Berkeley, Calif.

Behind the Claremont, Tilden Regional Park provides a "top of the world" view from much of its 2,100-acre spread in the Berkeley hills. The park is a rustic escape from the metropolitan Bay area sprawl below and includes picnic areas, hiking and riding trails, golf course, swimming, sports fields, nature areas, pony rides, a merry-go-round and other recreational facilities.

Also in the hills is the university's Lawrence Hall of Science, open daily from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., with extended hours Thursdays until 9 p.m. There's educational fun for visitors of all ages who can take part in science activities, watch films, conduct biology experiments, operate computer terminals and study dinosaurs.

Often referred to as "Berserkely," Berkeley's radical local politics also has branded it as America's only city with a "foreign policy," in recognition of city officials who have made unofficial state visits to other countries.

People's Park, former vacant land owned by the university that was turned into a "park" in a spontaneous rebellion by students and townspeople in 1969, now is being described as "sacred ground" by activists seeking to block the building of student housing there. The park is a place for conversation and confrontation.

SIGHT-SEEING IN Berkeley can include sit-ins on and around the campus, bizarre bazaars, brewery pubs that make their own beer, jazz and blues music from cellar saloons or the big-name showrooms at Yoshi's on the Berkeley-Oakland border and the newly opened Kimball's East in adjoining Emeryville beside the bay.

Make the charms of Solano Avenue in Albany to the north, easily a day's excursion to funky boutiques, antique shops, espresso bars and eateries, especially the highly rated Chinese, Thai and Vietnamese restaurants. Along the Albany waterfront is the 142-acre Golden Gate Fields horse racetrack.

The "flatlands" that stretch to the Berkeley Marina and its vintage 3,000-foot pier offer their own special variety of dining experiences. On Fourth Street alone are always famed Spenger's Fish Grotto, Betty's Ocean View Diner, the Fourth Street Grill, Brennan's hofbrau of hefty servings and Celia's Mexican restaurant.

While on Fourth Street, stop by the Takara Sake USA brewery's traditional tasting room, open daily, 12 to 6 p.m. Takara is the U.S. subsidiary of a Japanese company that has been producing sake for more than 150 years.

Skates on the Marina features beers from around the world, a broad menu and waterside views of San Francisco's skyline and bridges.

But the east bay's most panoramic settings for drinks or dining are from the Terrace Lounge and Pavilion Restaurant at the Claremont, 20 minutes and a million miles away from San Francisco.

HIGHLIGHT OF the spa stay is luxuriating in the centuries-old restorative treatments supervised by spa director Vicki Poth. Leave stress at home and prepare for a series of facials, aroma therapy and traditional massages, hydrotherapy, loofah baths, salt glo, herbal wraps, whirlpool and steam rooms.

The Claremont's crossover cuisine allows guests to dine from special menus without worrying about their overall health program.

The Claremont, holder of Mobil four-star and AAA four-diamond ratings, is a member of Preferred Hotels, an association of more than 70 luxury hotels and resorts worldwide. For information, contact the Claremont Resort, P.O. Box 23363, Oakland, Calif. 94623; (415) 843-3000.

BEACH

As the beach road continues north, past North Myrtle Beach and Little River, S.C., and Calabash, N.C., commercial development becomes less noticeable and the natural vegetation more so.

Just beyond Calabash, at a sharp left turn on State Highway 179, a small paved road leads to the right, between a pair of seafood cafes. A stoplight controls traffic across a single-lane bridge leading to a marshy-looking flat.

At low tide, the deck of the bridge — which floats on the water — isn't visible to approaching drivers at the light.

Across the bridge extends a marshy grassland with a backdrop of multi-storied homes silhouetted against the sky in the distance.

Closer inspection reveals that the houses, all on stilts, have a few consistent features — lots of hammocks, towels and wet swimsuits on the patios; screened porches and widows' walks across the tops of the rooflines.

These observation decks offer a clue to one of this island's most popular pastimes: sunset watching.

Rental cottages, ranging from modest to grand, comprise all of Sunset Beach's buildings save three — the rental agent's office, the combination convenience store/arcade/gift shop and the pier's bait shop.

On the south edge of the island expanses of white sand connect rolling dunes with the sea. The constant pounding of waves and tides has packed sand nearest the waterline to a concrete-like hardness, perfect for an early morning or late evening stroll.

Families participate in a daily ritual of early-morning excursions to the beach, sunbathing and playing in the surf, midday siestas and low key afternoons in a place where relaxation isn't a luxury, but a way of life.

Mother Nature caps virtually every evening with a breathtaking version of the event for which the tiny island is named. Sunsets, in shades from pink and orange to purple and gold reflect across the waterways creating an atmosphere of anticipation for the day to end, but a hope that a week-long vacation never will.

Broker specializes in owners' private islands

Associated Press

Farhad Vladi travels all over the world, looking for island paradises that will fulfill the dream of his clients.

Vladi is the world's preeminent broker of privately owned islands, according to an article in Connoisseur, and his portfolio of retreats from the Caribbean to the Seychelles and Fijis are priced from $30,000 to $30 million.

Last year Vladi, of Vladi Private Islands, Hamburg and Halifax, Nova Scotia, logged more than 500,000 miles, selling islands in Panama, off Maine or Australia. He sold 30 islands, earning an average commission of $40,000.

Balancing his clients' fantasies with the realities of transportation needs, energy sources and housing costs, it typically takes a year from the time he meets a new client to the time he closes the deal.

"There is no hard sell here," Vladi said. "The buyer knows he wants an island, and since I represent only his interests — not the seller's — I have to get the one that will work for his personality at the best price.

"I can do that only by really knowing my clients, taking them on exploration trips if necessary, and tending to my archive."

That archive consists of maps, brochures and a data base on some 3,000 islands.

"An island," Vladi said, "is not just another piece of real estate. Each one has a soul, a sense of romance."

When he successfully matches island and buyer, he is rewarded with an 8.5 percent commission. He has sold 450 islands in 15 years.

The Caribbean is not his favorite place to go island shopping because island prices in the region have doubled over the past two years. He still can find a bargain among the Grenadines, the French Antilles or off Belize and Panama. The 80-acre island Taborcillo, which formerly belonged to John Wayne, is now selling for $450,000.

The Bahamas pose other problems. The government has been racked by turmoil, which can be worrisome. Also, in efforts to curb drug traffic, the Bahamas has passed laws restricting ownership of islands with airstrips. Vladi's richer clients demand plane access, especially on larger, more remote islands.

Vladi prefers islands in the world's northern climes, particularly properties off France's Brittany coast, in Scotland and in Nova Scotia.

Prices are rising there, too — the dwindling supply of private islands is heating up the market everywhere — but Vladi insists these areas are still "very affordable." A 620-acre oceanside site near Halifax lists for $640,000 and Scottish isles average $65,000. But most island buyers are hooked on a standard, sun-drenched fantasy.

The Japanese, who are rapidly replacing Americans as his best customers, demand to be in Polynesia, Hawaii or off New Zealand.

The French prefer to luxuriate in Indian Ocean locales.

Disney park re-creates Hollywood's heyday

By GLENDA WINDERS
Copley News Service

Anybody who says you can't turn back the clock or move a city from one coast to the other hasn't been to Orlando, Fla., lately. The Walt Disney Co. has once again worked its unfailing magic, this time to re-create the Hollywood of the '30s, '40s and '50s at Walt Disney World.

Disney-MGM Studios is both a theme park and a working movie studio. You can stroll down Hollywood Boulevard past the Brown Derby to the Chinese Theater, complete with authentic footprints in the sidewalk, and through the studio gates to watch actual movie scenes being filmed.

Three major attractions are already open, and several others are scheduled for completion in the near future. The Great Movie Ride begins inside the Chinese Theater, where you'll watch clips from major films while you wait for the tour to begin. The trip leaves from a cyclorama of Hollywood, where you're loaded into cars by "stagehands" for a trip through movieland.

For the next several minutes you'll watch as lifelike audio-animatronics of Gene Kelly, James Cagney, Julie Andrews, Dick Van Dyke and others entertain you with scenes from their most famous movies.

Tarzan swings through the jungle on his grapevine while Jane watches from her seat on an elephant. The Wicked Witch of the West makes a surprise visit to Munchkinland, and Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman say their famous goodbye from "Casablanca" as the engines on a nearby airplane sputter and start up. Some special surprises are in store aboard the "Alien" spaceship.

This ride is worth taking twice. Since the sets and characters are so detailed, it is impossible to see everything the first time. On my second trip through, I realized the snakes in the subterranean vault from "Raiders of the Lost Ark" actually did slither!

Another reason for a second trip is that there is more than one version of the live-action portion of the tour. In one guests become involved in a Wild West bank robbery, in another a Prohibition-era gangland shootout.

THE RIDE finishes up in the Land of Oz and is then followed by a montage of film clips from movies past and present.

Be sure to budget time for the two-hour backstage tour. Here you'll ride a shuttle train for part of the trip, walk for the rest. The train tunnels first through costuming and set-building warehouses, where huge windows allow visitors to watch professionals at work without disturbing them. More than 2 million costume pieces are housed here, with originals from such movies as "Mary Poppins" and "Dick Tracy" on special display.

Back outside, it's on to a residential street, where you can see the exterior of "The Golden Girls" house and many others. At one, Herbie, "The Love Bug," is parked in the driveway and gives guests a surprise show.

Not far away is New York City, with both brownstones and high-rises. Using a technique called forced perspective allows Disney filmmakers to create the illusion of tall buildings in the distance with closer, smaller-scale facades. Down one street a crew was filming as our tour train passed by; around the next corner we saw the "Dipmobile" from "Who Framed Roger Rabbit?" at work.

Catastrophe Canyon is the most exciting and fun. An oil truck explodes into flames and rolls down the hill toward visitors. At the same time, an earthquake erupts and flood waters engulf the train.

While the walking portion of the tour isn't quite that dramatic, it provides a fascinating look at how movies are made. At the Water Effects Tank, a volunteer from the audience helps illustrate how effects such as a ship on a stormy sea are created. At the Special Effects Workshop and Shooting Stage, an expert explains the magic of illusion.

A couple from our group rode on the back of a giant stationary bee against a blue background. When superimposed on scenes from "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids," it looked exactly as if they were in the movie.

NEXT, IT'S on through the soundstages, where we saw the new "Mickey Mouse Club" being taped, to the post-production editing area.

The third major attraction is the Indiana Jones Epic Stunt Spectacular, where stunt experts leap from tall buildings, are chased by runaway boulders and encounter every sort of danger — which is then explained to the audience.

The lines are long for these special attractions, but informational and entertaining videos featuring top stars will keep you occupied until your turn comes.

During your stay at the park, be sure to take the tour through the animation studio for a look at how cartoons are developed and brought to life. A film featuring Robin Williams shows him entering the cartoon world for a look at how the procedure works from the point of view of the characters themselves. Follow this with a walk through the studios to see cartoons from their inception as rough sketches to their production and painting on plastic "cels."

There's lots more to see and do. At the Monster Sound Show guests view a scene from a horror movie; then volunteers from the audience create sound effects that are compared with the original sound track. SuperStar Television allows visitors to be cast alongside the stars of their favorite programs.

All of this touring is likely to make you hungry, and there are plenty of places to eat. The most popular are packed at lunchtime, so it's a good idea to stop by and make reservations as soon as you get to the park in the morning.

The Brown Derby is an exact reproduction of the one in Hollywood, complete with the caricatures on the walls and tiny lamps on the cloth-covered tables. The '50s Prime Time Cafe re-creates a household from that era. You'll enjoy plate lunches and soda-fountain treats on plastic and chrome dinette sets while black-and-white television plays in the background. Stop in the adjoining Tune in Lounge for cocktails before your meal.

IT'S ALSO possible to eat on the run, leaving more time for seeing the sights. Try Min and Bill's Dockside Diner, a docked freighter that offers sandwiches and seafood, or the Studio Catering Company for quick, cafeteria-style eating.

Shopping is great fun here. Souvenirs run the gamut from Donald Duck pencils to jewel-encrusted Mickey Mouse watches. Antique car buffs will want to make a stop at Oscar's Super Service, a '50s-style service station where you can also rent strollers and wheelchairs or stow your baggage in a locker.

Stop by Movieland Memorabilia or Celebrity 5 and 10 for clothes, jewelry and movie props. At Sid Cahuenga's One-of-a-Kind, look for pricey star memorabilia such as a wig worn by Cher for $250, Steve Martin's red robe from "All of Me" for $400 or Errol Flynn's suitcase for $7,200.

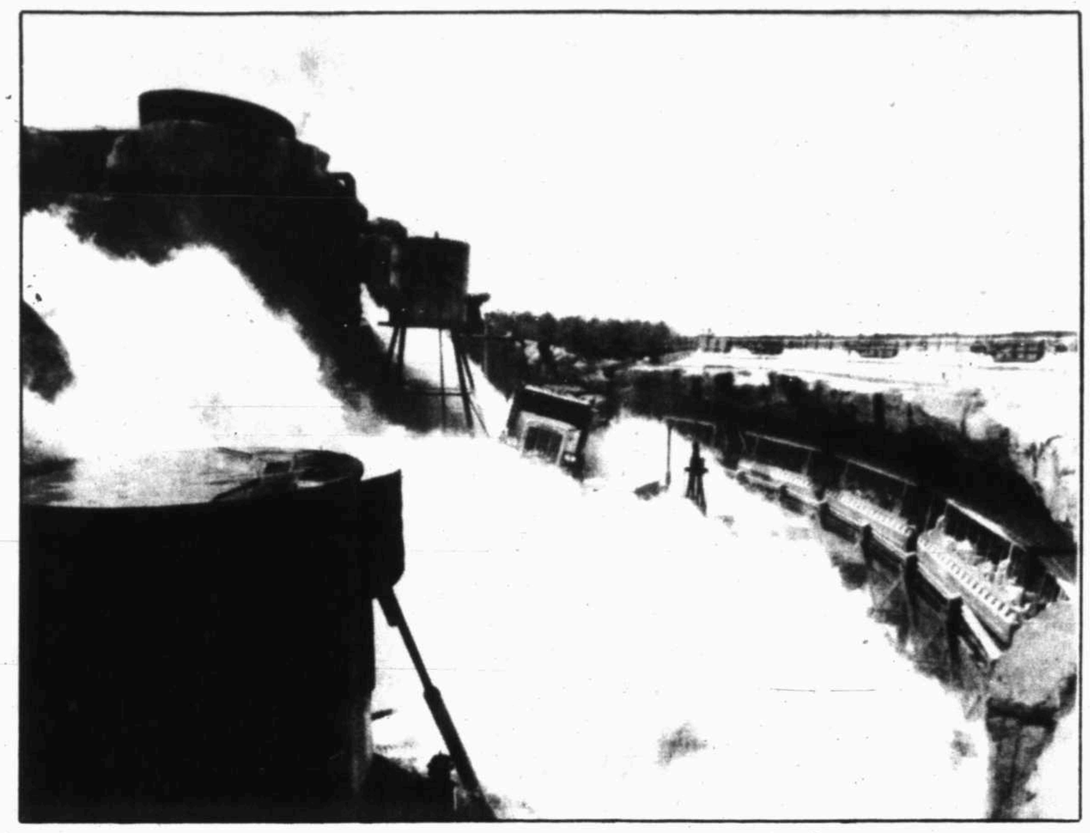

Other new additions to Walt Disney World are Typhoon Lagoon, a 50-acre water park that offers swimming, water-sliding, surfing and snorkeling, and Pleasure Island, a restaurant, shopping and nightclub entertainment area.

For a perfect family vacation, fly into Orlando and stop at the Disney kiosk at the airport, where a representative will arrange your transportation to the Disney complex. It's a good idea to stay at one of the 13 Disney hotels since transportation to all of the parks by bus, monorail or boat is included in the price of your room.

If you're planning to visit the Magic Kingdom and Epcot Center, too, buy a four- or five-day passport that will include admission to those parks as well as the studios. Sundays, Thursdays and Fridays are the least crowded days, January, May and fall months the least busy times. Bring comfortable clothes and walking shoes, sweaters and jackets for winter months and sunscreen.

Plan to arrive at the Disney-MGM Studios early and have breakfast there to get a head start on your full day. Avoid long lines by shopping and seeing the lesser attractions in the morning and taking in the major events in the afternoon.

Remember that this is a magic place where anything can happen. Don't be surprised if you find yourself in a movie scene — or if someone asks for your autograph.

Shopping Disney's 125 shops is more than child's play

By JUDITH GLYNN
Copley News Service

ORLANDO, Fla. — Granted, the top three purchases at Disney World are Mickey Mouse ear hats ($3.95), the Mickey and Minnie shopping bag ($1.50) and a Mickey back scratcher ($3), but anyone who thinks shopping here is child's play is in for a surprise.

Across the board, the 125 shops in the Magic Kingdom, Epcot Center and the Walt Disney World Village are among the finest anywhere.

They sell everything from English antiques and bone china, Disneyana collectibles and clothing, German Hummels, Scottish cashmere sweaters, Moroccan rugs and much more from around the world.

Since the parks are themed, so are the shops. Disney officials know most purchases are made impulsively. Prices, therefore, are competitive with outside stores, quality is excellent and service is with a smile. But keep a daily log of spending because the carefree atmosphere encourages splurges.

In the Magic Kingdom, Main Street's Disney Clothiers Ltd. has trendy clothing made for Disney by the J.G. Hook brand. Sweatshirts begin at around $25, a satin bomber jacket with an embroidered Mickey as the Sorcerer's Apprentice costs $120.

Tomorrowland's Space Port shop has space food selling from $2 to $5.90. Hologram watches have 3-D faces and cost $61.

In Fantasyland, Tinkerbell Toy Shop carries the latest Madame Alexander dolls. Fourteen-inch Disney characters vary in cost: Snow White is $75, Cinderella is $66. If out of stock, order and Disney ships. The shop has hundreds of trinkets and children's clothes.

The Disneyana Shop next door is home for the collector. Original hand-painted Disney movie film cels (matted about 16 inches by 20 inches) cost from $125 to $1,000. Pewter character figures begin at $17. Gold and silver limited Disney coins sell like hotcakes since the value of many soar almost overnight.

Disney's antique buyers scour the United States and Europe looking for treasures to sell in the Olde World Antiques shop located in Frontierland's Liberty Square. All are authenticated by Sotheby's and come with a story of origin. The 1800s, Victorian and Georgian periods predominate. Antique jewelry and small silver items are super.

Nearby Heritage House is the only place selling bicentennial memorabilia; the 75-cent Bill of Rights reproduction on parchment is the most popular.

Forget a bathing suit? The Kiki Tropic Shop has plenty. The Elephant's Trunk has safari-type clothes. The Golden Galleon specializes in resort wear with water sports motifs and accessories. All are in Adventureland.

Epcot Center shopping has an international flavor. Disney's buyers visit the represented countries, making selections (except for Japan and China, who control their stock). Certain manufacturers, such as Pringle of Scotland and Royal Doulton, have exclusivities.

Some items become exclusive simply because Disney buys up the entire production. The Moroccan pavilion is the largest retail outlet for that country outside of Morocco.

King Hassan's favorite rug and wall-hanging artisan sells here in the $250-$1,200 price range. Brass trays begin at $4; top-stitched cotton blouses start at $12.

With refurbishing complete, Disney on-site hotels have spruced-up storefronts and upgraded merchandise.

Upscale shoppers should visit the Contemporary Resort shops. Liz Claiborne is a new brand for Disney World, and Dominique fashions are covered with sequins.

At the Polynesian Village hotel, additional shops emphasize resort family wear and giftware with Polynesian themes.

More than 25 shops encircle a cove at the Walt Disney World Village. Planters double as resting spots under the shade, and the atmosphere is suburban shopping mall.

Mickey's Character Shop is special because of its wide selection of Disney clothing, toys and trinkets. Expect to pay from $8.50 to $300 for plush toys.

Disney Dollars are new, sold in $1 and $5 denominations and interchangeable with U.S. dollars in all Disney shops.

Kitty Hawk's hills offer glimpse of flight

Wright brothers' first flight commemorated

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

The locals living on the Outer Banks of North Carolina must have thought these two brothers were a bit odd. Day after day, they went up to the highest sand dunes at Kill Devil Hills and jumped off.

When they first started coming in 1900, the brothers just flew large boxlike kites. Then they came back with a large glider and rode it high into the sky. But this latest bit of tomfoolery was too much. They wanted to put an engine on it and fly like a bird.

And they did.

Orville and Wilbur Wright piloted the world's first heavier-than-air craft on Dec. 17, 1903, and flew into the history books as pioneers in manned flight.

At the same time, they put the quiet little coastal town of Kitty Hawk on the map. The Wright Brothers are long gone, but their memory lingers at the Wright Brothers National Memorial at Kitty Hawk.

The brothers were typical seat-of-the-pants inventors. They didn't have any training in engineering or aeronautics. Although both attended high school, neither graduated.

In 1892, they started the Wright Cycle Co. in Dayton, Ohio, to repair and manufacture bicycles. But while their livelihood lay firmly rooted to the ground, their thoughts soared.

IN THEIR spare time, using profits from their bicycle business, the brothers began experimenting with gliders. Their bicycle-making equipment came in handy when it came to building models.

Since the winds around Dayton were not reliable or predictable, the brothers decided to move their experiments to the Outer Banks. In fall, the prevailing winds are strong and steady, perfect for aeronautic experiments.

The Wright Brothers spent three years, from 1900 to 1902, testing ever larger and more complicated gliders at Kitty Hawk. In 1902 they made more than 1,000 flights.

Then in 1903, they added an engine and propeller to a new, larger glider. Since there were no airplane engines, they fabricated their own.

After many frustrating weeks at Kitty Hawk, Wilbur climbed onto the flimsy-looking craft, cranked up the engine and headed down the wooden rail.

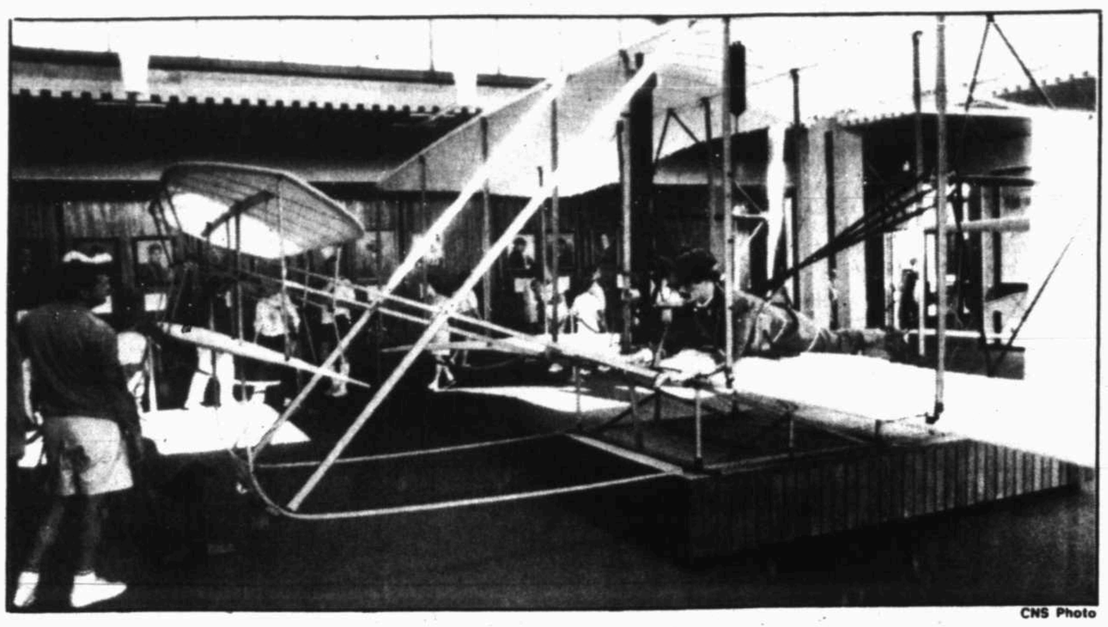

The plane flopped. He couldn't get airborne.

The next day, it was Orville's turn. This time there was a strong 21-knot wind. So when the engine was started at 10:35 a.m. on Dec. 17, The Flyer lifted gently off the ground.

For 12 seconds, the craft flew under its own power, the first time in history that man flew a heavier-than-air craft.

The plane floated to earth 120 feet later, and the brothers were ecstatic. There were three more flights that day, each farther and longer than before. Their last flight lasted 52 seconds and went an astounding 852 feet, before a hard landing cracked the frame and ended their experiments for the year.

But they had flown. History would never be the same again.

CNS Photo

A replica of the first airplane flown by the Wright brothers at Kitty Hawk, N.C., is on display at the visitors center at the Wright Brothers National Monument in North Carolina.

THE NATIONAL monument is a green oasis amid the brown sand dunes, clustered beach houses and shopping centers along the Outer Banks. When Orville and Wilbur were here, it was nothing but a bare strip of sand separating the ocean from the mainland.

The modern visitors center houses an exact replica of the first flying machine, as well as a smaller glider like one the Wrights used in their experiments.

The Flyer was a flimsy-looking contraption of wood, fabric and metal cables. But as park rangers explain in their frequent talks, each piece of the plane had its function, a function worked out laboriously through thousands of experiments both in a wind tunnel at the Dayton bicycle shop and at Kitty Hawk.

Some cables moved the two horizontal elevators in front of the pilot; others moved the two vertical rudders in back. Other cables were attached to a carriage under the pilot, who could warp the twin 40-foot wings for greater maneuverability. The pilot laid next to the engine, which was attached to two hand-crafted propellers in the rear.

The center also contains museum exhibits about the brothers and their experiments, such as a replica of the wind tunnel they used to test out their theories.

Behind the center, two of the small clapboard buildings built by the Wright Brothers have been duplicated. The originals served as living quarters and workshop for the brothers during visits in 1902 and 1903.

Nearby, a stone monument marks the takeoff spot for the historic flight. A wooden rail capped with metal buried in the sand traces the flight path. Markers along the track pinpoint the landing spots of the four flights — 120, 175, 200 and 852 feet.

LOOMING OVER the flat flying field is one of the tallest of the Kill Devil Hills, huge sand dunes jutting up out of Albemarle Sound. But the hill hardly resembles that found by the Wright Brothers when they first came to the Outer Banks.

The bare sandy dunes are always shifting and moving with the prevailing winds. The present hill has shifted 50 yards to the southwest from where it was when the brothers climbed up the 90 feet to the top to test their gliders.

Now the dune is topped by a 60-foot obelisk dedicated to man's first flight.

The Outer Banks are now a popular tourist spot, not only because of the fame brought by the Wright Brothers, but also because of the miles and miles of sandy beaches stretching for more than 100 miles along the North Carolina coast.

The villages of Kitty Hawk, Kill Devil Hills and Nags Head join together to form a concentrated area of tourist attractions, such as beachfront resorts, restaurants and water sports facilities.

To the south lies Cape Hatteras National Seashore, a pristine wilderness of sand dunes and marshes inhabited by flocks of birds and other wildlife. The coast is dotted with shipwrecks, lighthouses and an old lifesaving station.

To the west, on Roanoke Island, lies the site of England's first unsuccessful attempt at colonization in the 1600s. The settlement disappeared without a trace, and is now known as The Lost Colony.

BESIDES THE national monument, with a reconstructed earthworks and visitors center, there is an outdoor drama in summer, reliving the story of the settlement. A few miles away is a reconstructed sailing ship, the Elizabeth II, similar to one that the Colonists may have used to migrate to the New World.

More of the Wright heritage can be found back in Dayton. During 1904 and 1905 the brothers perfected their airplane and flying skills at Huffman Prairie, now a part of Wright-Patterson Air Force Base. The base is also home to the U.S. Air Force Museum, which also honors the Wrights.

Inside one of the cavernous hangars at the air museum, a replica of the 1909 Military Flyer stands awaiting flight. (The original is in the National Air and Space Museum of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C.)

The Wrights built the first military airplane for the Army Signal Corps for a $30,000 fee. The plane made a significant contribution to military aviation history.

The exhibit also contains a piece of the material that covered the original Wright Flyer, as well as propeller, engine, chain drive and other items used in the Wright flight experiments.

Also in the exhibit is a bicycle from the Wrights' shop, as well as a model of a 1911 Modified "B" Flyer, which they constructed for the Army.

The Wrights' bicycle shop and family home have long since disappeared from Dayton. They were moved to Greenfield Village in Dearborn, Mich., in 1938. Today they have been restored to their appearance in the 1900-1910 period.

Wing frames, wheels, struts and other aircraft parts litter the cramped workshop behind the Wrights' brick storefront. Their wind tunnel sits ready for its next test. Half-finished bicycles have been pushed into corners to make room for the airplane construction.

NEXT DOOR, the Wright house awaits the return of the brothers. The home, with its Victorian furniture, is comfortable but not elegant. The parlor, dining room, bedrooms and kitchen are much as they must have appeared when the brothers lived there. Neither Wilbur nor Orville ever married, and continued to live in the house for many years.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Glaucoma can be repaired if treatments begin early

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Since ancient times, people have worried and wondered about their eyes. Some cultures even gave the eye magical powers for good and evil. Early Egyptians worshipped Horus, the sky god, whose battle-damaged and restored left eye, was considered a powerful amulet for safeguarding health and vision.

In 2100 B.C., the Code of Hammurabi specified severe punishment for the physician whose treatments caused the loss of a patient's eye. If the patient losing an eye was a free man, the surgeon's fingers were cut off; if the lost eye was that of a slave, the surgeon had to pay half the price of the slave. The surgeon who saved a person's eye, however, received the same payment as a doctor who saved a human life.

Today, people are still worrying and wondering about their eyes. A recent Gallup poll found that adult Americans fear blindness more than most other afflictions, except cancer. When compared with the loss of speech, limb, hearing, smell or taste, blindness was rated the worst disability by more than 75 percent of those polled.

One cause of blindness is glaucoma, aptly called "the sneak thief of sight." Glaucoma is not one, but a group of eye diseases. Symptoms include increased pressure of the fluid within the eye, certain changes in the optic disk (a part of the optic nerve) or changes in the visual fluid. If undiagnosed and untreated, glaucoma can eventually cause blindness. With early diagnosis and treatment, much vision loss can be prevented.

An estimated 8 million Americans suffer from glaucoma, but nearly half do not know they have the disease. The disease claims too many victims every year.

Recent studies have revealed that there are nearly 200,000 new cases of glaucoma among Americans every year. More than 1 million Americans have had their vision impaired or damaged by the disease. Of this number, more than 200,000 cannot read ordinary newsprint, even with the aid of glasses, and almost 60,000 are legally blind. Glaucoma is the third leading cause of blindness.

Today, visual loss from glaucoma is almost entirely preventable. Individuals, especially older people, should study and understand how vision loss can be prevented and, how glaucoma kept under control.

New treatments and medications help deal with the disease, but awareness is critically important in reducing or preventing vision loss.

The pace of tradition and the power of progress are daily contrasts in Lancaster County, Pa. Motorcoach touring is popular in this vacation destination where Amish buggies are an everyday part of the scenery.

Traditional, modern blend in Pennsylvania

By KIT SNEDAKER
Copley News Service

Much of Lancaster County, Pa., is 250 years behind the times and that's the way it wants to stay.

Beyond the gray Amish (say AH-mish) buggies clipping along county roads lies a patchwork of farms, many run by windmills and horse power. It's Pennsylvania's "Dutch" country.

No Hollanders, these German and Swiss immigrants were called Dutch as a corruption of Deutsch, their German word for German, and they still speak a dialect of Palatinate German and their own special English.

"It wonders me," they say for puzzled awe or, "It spritzes," in a light rain.

Such whimsy along with the honest German food from their magnificent produce, the 18th century lifestyle maintained by Old Order Mennonites and Amish farmers, and handcrafts that produce astonishing quilts, attract thousands of tourists each year.

They come up Route 222 into Lancaster, go east on side roads to Bird-in-Hand, Paradise and Intercourse, stopping at The Amish Homestead, Plain and Fancy Farm and Dining Room, Dutch Wonderland, Kauffman's country store and farmers' markets. They take rides in buggies, tour a pretzel factory and visit The People's Place for films, lectures, arts and crafts of Amish and Mennonite life.

IT'S AN overwhelming day trip.

The best way to experience Pennsylvania Dutch country is to settle in a small town and make short, daily sallies.

Figuring motels are identical everywhere, I took my grandaughter, Becky with her friend, Meredith (10-to-11-year-olds travel in pairs) to a working farm in Christiana, Pa., that accepts tourists.

Winding Glen is a 200-year-old dairy farm belonging to Minnie and Bob Metzler. Just as the Pennsylvania Dutch Visitors Bureau's leaflet promised, it had air conditioning, nearby swimming, meals, but not television, children's recreation or private baths.

We came in the back door to a kitchen smelling of bread rising. A rosy-cheeked woman in a simple cotton dress, dark stockings and shoes, her hair covered by a small organdy cap, welcomed us. She was Mrs. Metzler's sister, she said, and when she learned I was from Los Angeles, exclaimed, "That's where Merv Griffin is!"

Mrs. Metzler came up from a kiln in the basement where she fires her ceramics, to welcome us and show us to a large front room with two double beds, braided rugs, and arched cupboards on either side of a boarded-up fireplace. We shared the bathroom next door with a family from Long Island, N.Y.

That first afternoon was taken up by watching cows come in from pasture to be milked by machine, but it was the 30 barn cats and kittens that intrigued the girls. Each called home for permission to bring one back, and accepted the inevitable refusal in good spirits.

WE STARED at first at the gray Amish or black Old Order Mennonite buggies that wheeled by the house, but when one black-bonneted Amish woman surprised us with a smile and wave, the girls turned into cheerleaders, waving at each buggy that went by. Rosy-cheeked Amish children and smiling adults waved back.

At 6:30 promptly we sat down to a family-style dinner of potatoes, corn pudding, the homemade rolls we had smelled rising, fresh beans from the garden, Swiss steak, carrots in orange jello salad, banana and coconut pudding, ice cream and homemade chiffon cake. Raw milk, coffee and iced peppermint tea sat in pitchers and pots around the table.

Even after a meal like that, all the children played ball in the yard after supper until dark when the Metzlers, who are Mennonites, summoned us to watch a slide show in the parlor. Besides a piano and pump organ, the room served as a showplace for Minnie Metzler's ceramics.

Their eldest son put the show together — the history of the Mennonite movement from slides he had taken here and in Europe, matching the transparencies to music that ranged from "The Messiah" to Bob Dylan.

Mennonites, I discovered, differ from their brethren, the Amish, in degree rather than kind.

As a persecuted group that took advantage of William Penn's offer of land and religious freedom, the Mennonites came to Pennsylvania in the early 1700s to live their faith as "the quiet in the land."

To promote a classless society and avoid worldly influences, the Old Amish or Home Amish (who worship at a different home each Sunday rather than in a church) banned cars and electricity, dressed in somber clothes, all cut to the same pattern, with hooks and eyes instead of buttons and prayer veilings, as the soft head coverings are called, for women, broad-brimmed hats for men.

WITHIN EACH group separate groups emerged such as Beachy Amish, or Black Bumper Mennonites who drive cars, but blacken the chrome bumpers, Conservative Mennonite, Church Amish, who worship in churches rather than homes, and all vary in their acceptance of the outside world.

The Metzlers, for instance, have electricity and a radio, but no television. Mrs. Metzler wore a small cap of veiling and quiet prints, but said she didn't make her own butter anymore because it was, "too much like work." She has taken in tourist for 11 years, and, like most of the farm tourist homes, charges include huge meals.

My two children ate ravenously, trying dishes they couldn't identify, and drooped by 9 p.m., going gratefully to bed in the middle of the slide show.

More than two days in this setting and they might have been bored, but by noon on the third day we were in the Berkshire Sheraton Inn in Reading ready to shop its famous outlet stores.

Along the back roads en route to Reading are antique shops and flea markets of which The Green Dragon in Ephrata (Ephrata back, the Pennsylvania Dutch say, meaning beyond Ephrata) is typical.

An auction attracted a crowd at the cattle barn, but we sampled ice cream homemade with milk from the dairy of the booth owners. It was incomparable.

I FOUND an old-fashioned scrubbing board for $8. My daughter bought a CB antenna. We wandered among produce stands, booths that resembled garage sales and others more like small antique shops or craft and quilt stores.

I didn't see how Reading could underprice this place, but it did. Possibly Reading has department stores, but the place is known for its factory outlets. A whole block of a building such as the Reading Outlet Center houses brand-name clothes, linens, shirts, shoes, sportswear, leather sporting goods, even housewares. I saw, but did not buy, Spode, Wedgwood, imported crystal, copper pans, aluminum and stainless baskets, gadgets, knives, bowls, mugs, entire place settings, at half price.

Many outlets will mail items home for you. Perhaps the stuff was irregular or seconds, but I couldn't spot the flaws. Some places take credit cards, some only checks or cash.

Colonial taverns offer taste of earlier times

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

Thomas Jefferson had a good time when he visited the Raleigh Tavern in Williamsburg, Va., in 1763. Too good.

"Last night as merry as agreeable company and dancing with Belinda in the Apollo could make me, I never could have thought the succeeding sun would have seen me so wretched," he wrote to a friend.

George Washington favored Christiana Campbell's Tavern. "Col. Washington is one of the more genteel men to favor me with his company," she would brag. "He's most fond of me fresh oysters."

And to lure guests away from his competitors, Josiah Chowning advertised on his opening in 1766, "All who please to favor me with their custom may depend on the best of entertainment for themselves, servants, and horses, and good pastorage."

Yes, Williamsburg was the place to come for good food, lodging and companionship in the Virginia territory. After all, it was the capital, and all of the important personages of Colonial America would come to debate and socialize.

Colonial Williamsburg is just as hospitable a place today. Its taverns and lodgings are crowded with guests intent on immersing themselves totally in the Colonial experience. Guests can spend the night in 200-year-old houses, dine on spit-roasted game in a reconstructed 1750s tavern and chat with costumed shopkeepers as they browse for a quill pen or feathered hat.

THE NEWEST addition to Williamsburg, the mecca of American history buffs, is Shields Tavern. The eatery opened earlier this year on Duke of Gloucester Street, within view of the Capitol building.

In Colonial times, a tavern was much more than a drinking establishment. It provided food and lodging for both man and beast; it served as a social center and entertainment complex for the town, and was the site of various and sundry meetings and gatherings for the townsfolk.

The Shields site has been used as a tavern on and off since 1708, when John Marot purchased the lot. After several additions by several owners, James Shields bought the property and opened his tavern in the early 1740s. The tavern as it appears today reflects this period.

Shields Tavern was a popular gathering spot for burgesses, travelers and townspeople. It served the "middling" crowd, the middle class of the era. The elite of the community favored the more refined Raleigh's Tavern down the street.

Shields operated his tavern until he died in 1750, when his wife took over. But she married one of their competitors, Henry Wetherbaum, and merged her business with his. The building was used for a variety of purposes after that, until it was destroyed sometime before the Civil War.

The present building was reconstructed in the 1950s, but stood empty until the interior was completed in 1988. The tavern is accurate in almost every detail to the original, thanks to an extensive archaeological excavation of the site and accurate historical records.

THE COOL, brick cellars, with rough wooden tables and benches squeezed between crates and barrels, is lit only by dim flickering candles. Upstairs, waiters in long waistcoats deliver servings of chicken and oyster pie or Chesapeake Bay lump crabmeat sandwiches on china with the same blue fish-patterned design used by Shields 240 years ago.

While the tavern and its furnishings are historically accurate, its food isn't. The menu also includes such things as a glorified ham and cheese sandwich, roast beef on rye or fish of the day. But they do have an appetizer "Shields Sampler" with a variety of 1700s food to try.

Three other taverns in Colonial Williamsburg serve up meals with their history as well. At Christiana Campbell's, seafood is the specialty. Just ask George Washington.

The patrons who frequented her establishment on the far side of the Capitol would rave at her delicious sweet potato muffins and spoon breads served today. The tavern is decorated in checkered window curtains and mismatched reproduction Colonial furniture.

The King's Arms Tavern, adjacent to Shields' establishment, catered to the "more genteel" of the colony's folks, those with the money and land to afford the finer things in life. The Queen Anne furnishings and pewter flatware today reflect that refinement.

At Chowning's Tavern a block away, those of lesser means gathered. The often-rowdy crowd of common folks dined on a menu of simple "hearty food to replenish craving stomachs," he boasted.

Today, Brunswick stew, Welsh rabbit and barbecued pork back ribs are served up in a plain and unpretentious dining room with iron candlesticks and hard benches and tables.

Menus differ at each of the four taverns, as do the surroundings, tableware and costumes of the servers, all based on historical fact.

Bed-and-breakfasts not created equal

Associated Press

There are 5,000 to 6,000 bed-and-breakfast inns in the United States and thousands of private homes that offer B-and-B — which makes it hard to pick your dream vacation spot.

That dream, according to an article in a recent issue of House Beautiful, consists of beautifully furnished bedrooms, five-star breakfasts and innkeepers who resemble Sam Shepard and Jessica Lange. Reality can be bedrooms facing a truck route, six people sharing a bathroom and intrusive hosts.

Memorable B-and-Bs do exist, but with no comprehensive rating books, finding the perfect one becomes a challenge.

Even those guidebooks that do list B-and-Bs can be tricky. A skilled travel writer could say of "Psycho's" Bates Motel: "Quirky young innkeeper Norman Bates has cleverly decorated this handsome roadside rancher with campy '50s bric-a-brac. Don't miss his stuffed fowl collection in the homey parlor."

One reason some guidebook writers include nothing negative about the B-and-Bs and inns they describe is that they charge the owners a fee to be featured — from $25 to $100. Even guides that don't accept fees would find it hard to do an annual evaluation of all the small operations opening each year.

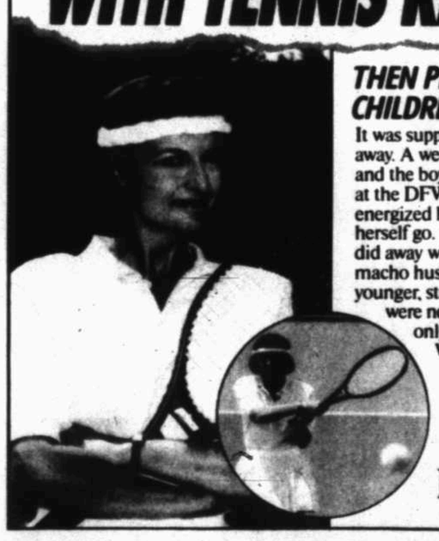

Another idea is to play 20 questions with B-and-B hosts. Former B-and-B owner Shepley Metcalf, of Cambridge, Mass., suggests calling and "asking really specific questions, like how many rooms there are, how many people share a bath, how large the dining room is, whether it is open only to guests, and how long the innkeepers have been running their business.

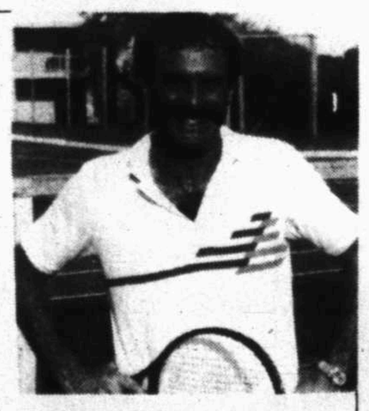

Many people prefer using B-and-B Reservations Service Organizations or RSOs. Created in the early 1980s and often run by private B-and-B owners, the organizations inspect all lodgings to make sure they are clean and suitable for visitors.

RSOs can be found in virtually every part of the country, listed under "Bed and Breakfast" in the Yellow Pages. Prospective guests can call the RSO, usually for a fee, and ask questions that might be embarrassing to ask an innkeeper directly.

The disadvantages are that some RSOs charge innkeepers a listing fee and so may not be completely impartial.

We just returned from an exciting one week trip to Russia, which was filled with adventures and good memories.
After picking up with a tour group in Moscow, we settled into our hotel — the Intourist Belgravia.
My biggest impression of Moscow is that the people don't smile. They all look very sad. Furthermore, people are always in line for something — there are queues for everything in Moscow as well as the entire country, from vodka to blue jeans.
Our full day in Moscow included visits to the fantastically beautiful St. Basil's Church, Lenin's tomb, Red Square and the Kremlin. Also very interesting was the Cathedral of the Annunciation, which is within the walls of the Kremlin. This was the private church of the czars, where they were crowned. It is no longer a church, but like the churches in Russia, the cathedral has been renamed a "museum," but nevertheless it is truly beautiful.
We also had the opportunity to see the Moscow Circus in Gorky Park. The acts were all contained in one ring, and we saw dancing bears, high wire acts and more.
Our second day in Moscow was cut short for reasons unknown to us, and we were off to Vilnius, Lithuania. Before we were in the air, however, we had to wait several hours on the runway while Gorbachev left for Paris. When the "Big G" flies, no one uses the air lanes but him.
Once again we stayed in an Intourist hotel, this one was called the Viesbutis. Intourist owns all the hotels in Russia where tourists are allowed to stay. As our guide said, for a country that does not believe in monopolies, they have some big ones, namely Intourist. All tourists who come into the country must have an Intourist guide with them at all times, and must stay at an Intourist hotel owned by the government. Likewise, Aeroflot, also owned by the government, is the only airline that flies within the country.
The churches in Vilnius have started having church services again — it is a Catholic country. The people here are happier — they have only been having tourists from America for the last year. They are a bit more free-acting and they smile!
In addition to the churches, there are healing chapels where people go to pray. They take charms made of gold and silver and made in the form of the part of their body that hurts and then they attach it around the altar.
While we were in Leningrad, we were able to break away from the group and we went to the Literature Cafe — mostly a cafe for Russian scholars — but definitely a restaurant for Russians. We had to pay to get in, the menu was in Russian, and there was really no choice on the menu anyway as the menu was set. The meal was "iffy," but we enjoyed being there.
That night we saw a performance of Swan Lake. The glasnost twist here was that no one got shot at the end!
We also toured the Winter and Summer Palaces, saw other famous cathedrals, and rode the Metro.
Now that I'm back, I'd be happy to answer any questions you might have on touring Russia. Please call me at Midland Travel, 684-7428 or 1-800-356-9435.

Tiny Colorado mining town is known for peace, quiet

By WILL H. PARRY
Copley News Service

OURAY, Colo. — This legendary little mining town nestled in the top of the rugged Rocky Mountains is the last place on earth to visit if you are looking for glitz and glitter.

Try Las Vegas, Atlantic City or even nearby Vail, the yuppie-ville of Colorado.

Ouray is tame compared to those places, more suited to families who want to enjoy the great outdoors, hiking, swimming, hunting or four-wheeling up as high as 13,000 feet to explore the remains of an old abandoned mining claim.

They roll up the sidewalks at night in Ouray. Sitting around a campfire at night, listening to a miner tell stories about the dangers of his profession — the fires, the explosions, the cave-ins and the floodings — is about as exciting as it gets in these parts.

Mountain climbing in the San Juan range of the Rockies — where peaks have names like Sneffles, Abrams and Twin Peaks — is another form of recreation for vacationers. Last summer climbers came from all over the country to test their skills and endurance against what they call the "fourteeners," the family of peaks in this range that exceed 14,000 feet in height.

OURAY IS called "The Switzerland of America," and rightly so. It also has been tabbed "The Gem of the Rockies." The village of 800, once a world-famous mining town, is surrounded by mountains that rival anything in the Alps or Andes. No matter which direction you look or drive, it's beautiful, especially in the wildflower season.

But remember. No nightclubs. No floor shows. No Hollywood stars. Ouray has as many churches as it has bars, and the steaks they serve at the Outlaw or the Silver Nugget compare with anything in New York or San Francisco.

Ouray is somewhere between New York and San Francisco and is difficult to reach.

One local wag, David McMurrin, says, "The only people who find Ouray are lost. They are looking for someplace else when they drive in here."

McMurrin, a former miner, works at a local gasoline station. (When he was a miner, McMurrin was a trammer — an ore train driver.)

Indeed, you are "far out" when you arrive in Ouray, so far out that there are only two public telephones in the town, which shrinks to 400 people in the winter and grows to 800 average in the summer. The numbers don't count the thousands of visitors who come from America's growing number of paved jungles looking for some peace and quiet. At least one writer has called Ouray a "story book village."

There is no airport. There is not near enough flat space for such a facility. There is no rail service, nor bus service.

Ouray was named after a Ute Indian chief who spent his summers here, hunting deer and elk and bathing in the natural hot springs. It sits in a tiny valley 7,800 feet up that is bisected by the Uncompaghre River and Highway 550 between Grand Junction and Durango in southwest Colorado.

THE VICTORIAN village is six blocks wide and eight blocks long and nothing, absolutely nothing, in the tiny valley is flat. In fact, the whole town, which was incorporated in 1875, looks like it was built on the side of a roof.

Highway 550 is Main Street, the only paved street in town.

"Some people complain because the streets aren't paved," said Al Fedel, a former mayor of Ouray, and miner who operated a service station until his retirement.

"It's a good thing they aren't paved," Fedel said in an interview. "If they ever were paved, these streets would turn into ski runs in the winter, they're so steep."

Colorful, towering brick-colored cliffs rise 5,000 feet from street level.

Fedel, who was born here on Second Street, can remember Ouray "when it was a town of 1,200 people, 5,000 horses and mules, lots and lots of saloons, gambling houses and boardinghouses for 'ladies of the evening.'"

It got its start back in the 1870s when settlers arrived looking for gold. By 1890, at the height of a mining boom, more than 2,000 people lived in Ouray. Then the town entered a boom-or-bust cycle after the turn of the century. Now tourism, ranching and mining keep the little village going.

Four-wheeling up into the mountains is probably the most popular family sport. Bring your own four-wheel-drive or trail bike to enjoy easy scenic rides or rugged challenges on trails the miners built to spectacular heights. You can rent a Jeep or enjoy the convenience of a Jeep tour with an experienced driver who will explain some of the most beautiful scenery in the world.

Ouray, a little town tucked in the Colorado Rockies, takes on a storybook quality in this photo shot from several thousand feet above the valley floor.

THERE ARE ghost towns scattered through the mountains, which contain an estimated 10,000 mine shafts, tunnels, holes and cuts within a 10-mile radius of Ouray made by miners hoping to strike it rich. A total of $735 million in gold, silver, lead, zinc and copper was taken from 50 mining districts over the past century.

From the "Jeep Capital of the World" — another monicker that has been hung on Ouray County — you can four-wheel to places such as Yankee Boy Basin, Red Mountain-Corkscrew, Poughkeepsie Gulch, The Blowout or Governor Basin, to name a few.

Hikers can hire llamas to carry their picnic lunch and gear as they enjoy the Cascade Trail, Bear Creek Trail, Dexter Creek Trail and many others that originate in Ouray Valley.

Barbara Morss, manager of the Ouray County Chamber of Commerce, says there are 34 motels to accommodate vacationers in Ouray. And the rates are comparatively low, maybe a fifth of what you might pay in Las Vegas or San Francisco.

Morss said the chamber has adopted a new policy of selling Ouray as a year-round vacation area.

"People are telling us they come here for the peace and quiet," said Morss. "Last winter, we logged in a couple who came from England. They said they appreciated the quietness of our little town and just wanted to sit and enjoy the beauty of our mountains."

Residents here have a lot of pride in their town. Mayor Bill Fries is one of the town's staunchest supporters. You may remember Fries as the CB radio king of the 1970s who recorded "Convoy." The record sold more than 7 million copies. It made Fries the hero of the truckers.

FRIES MOVED here from Oklahoma several years ago. He, too, wants Ouray to become more of a year-round town to help stabilize the local economy. At his suggestion, the Ouray City Council voted two years ago to keep the municipal plunge open year-round. The pool, fed by natural hot springs, gets as hot as 104 degrees Fahrenheit summer and winter.

During the winter, some parents loll in the steaming hot springs surrounded by snow and ice while their youngsters enjoy skiing on a municipally owned ski hill at the upper end of the valley. The rope ski tow that operates on the hill is one of the few free ski tows anywhere in the West.

Recently, the City Council and Chamber of Commerce began promoting such events as art shows and chili cook-offs during the off-season to attract more visitors.

Ouray's historic Victorian architecture has been carefully preserved. The town has been declared a National Historic District, thanks to the work of Roger Henn, a resident who moved here from Chicago several years ago when he retired. There are dozens of well-preserved commercial and residential structures in town so it's a fun place for a walking tour of the past with its colorful gingerbread designs.

In a matter of an hour's walk, you might see the Western Hotel, where meals once cost 25 cents and room and board was $1.25 a day; Wright's Opera House, with its typical iron front structural style; the St. Elmo Hotel, built in 1898, and the Tanner House, built in 1896 with mill work from Pennsylvania.

OTHER HIGHLIGHTS along the walk include the Ashley House at Fourth Street and Fifth Avenue, built in 1888, and the Ouray County Courthouse, where scenes from John Wayne's movie "True Grit" were shot.

"Everybody seems to love this old architecture," said Alvin Fico, a local carpenter, who was born here. "I build mountain cabins for the wealthy people who love these mountains. But a big share of my business is restoring these beautiful old Victorian places," Fico said, pointing at a miner's cabin known as the "Hobbit House."

Tom Walsh was the kind of stuff that legends are made of. He struck it rich before the turn of the century when he discovered the fabulous Camp Bird Mine five miles southwest of town. Walsh took millions from the mine — $26 million between 1896 and 1910 — and sold it for millions more.

Walsh's daughter Evelyn later became a famous Washington, D.C., hostess and had enough scratch to purchase the famous 45-carat Hope diamond.

Dee and Glen Williams operate the V&S Variety at 700 Main St. Next to the post office and Duckett's market, the variety store is the most popular place in town. It is right out of the pages of a Victorian novel, carrying every conceivable item — baby diapers, film, ski clothing, kids' toys, kitchen equipment, fishing gear, etc. It's all there, if you look long enough.

The City Hall was built in 1901 and included a library donated by Walsh, Ouray's most famous miner. However, the building was gutted by fire in 1950.

"The fire happened after midnight in the middle of January," town administrator David Vince told a reporter. "Our fire hydrants were frozen so they (the Volunteer Fire Department) more or less had to watch the thing burn."

LATER IT was rebuilt but the original architecture was lost in the process. Stucco covered the original stone and column facade. Then a few years ago movies were shown of the fire at a town meeting and the showing triggered a campaign to restore City Hall to its original look.

With the support of Fries and Joyce Jorgensen, the publisher of the Plaindealer, Ouray's prizewinning weekly newspaper, nearly $200,000 was raised to complete the restoration.

Computers make mistakes, too

By FRED FERRETTI
Copley News Service

I didn't know what to make of the letter I received the other day in my pile of travel and vacation ads and brochures.

"Dear Mr. Ferretti," it opened. "We're delighted that when you traveled to Washington on business, The Watergate has been your choice. We hope it's because you've found that our hotel provides all the amenities the traveling executive appreciates."

It concluded, "And we look foward to welcoming you again to The Watergate, on your next trip to Washington."

It was signed by Alan H. Fitzgerald, its managing director.

It does seem pretty straightforward, does it not? And I agree with that except that I have never been to The Watergate.

What to do? I was, as you might expect, anxious. After all, if they had me in a hotel I have never entered, stealthily or otherwise, they might have a billing for me, might they not? So I telephoned the hotel and asked to speak with Mr. Fitzgerald.

He was not in but I could be switched to a manager, it was suggested, and I was.

"Is this a manager?" I asked.

"Yes sir," answered a voice. "Can I serve you?"

I told him about the letter I had from The Watergate and that I had never stayed at the hotel during a trip to Washington. Never.

"You've never been to The Watergate?" the manager asked after I read him the first paragraph of the letter. "You're sure?"

"Yes, I'm sure," I replied.

"Hmm," said the manager.

"Hmm?" I repeated.

"You're sure?" he asked again.

"Yes! Yes! I'm sure," I said.

I knew I was beginning to sound shrill.

"Have any of your relations stayed with us?"

"I don't know for certain, but I do not think so. In fact, I'm pretty sure none of my relatives has ever stayed there."

"It's a tough one to explain," said the manager.

I heard some noise in the background and then he said, "Your name doesn't show up on our computers. Strange."

"Why is that strange? I told you I've never been to your hotel," I said.

"Have you ever stayed at any of our Cunard properties? Have you ever gone anywhere on a Cunard property?"

"Well, I had lunch on the QE2 when it was in port in New York once," I said.

"Aha!" said the manager. "That could be it."

I wondered how a lunch on the QE2 could become an overnight business stay at The Watergate Hotel in Washington, but the manager suggested that by merely breaking bread in a dining room that belonged to Cunard, my name could have gotten into the computers. I told him I thought that was silly.

"And you've never visited any other Cunard property?" he asked.

"Well, I've stayed at The Ritz Hotel in London when my good friend Julian was its general manager."

"Aha!" said the manager.

He is very good at "aha's," and I speculated briefly that perhaps a good "aha" was a necessity for becoming a manager. "I knew you had visited a property!"

"And I had a marvelous lunch at Hotel Atop the Bellevue with my friend Michael, who is general manger there."

"Aha!" said the manager. "Aha!"

"Aha, what?" I asked.

"Aha! I knew it had to be something like that. You know that we're all Cunard and we're all connected together. I am assuming those lunches and your stay in London got you into our computer ..."

"But you said I wasn't in the computer."

"Our master computer."

"Oh," I said.

"And please do come visit us when you're in Washington next. It would please us."

I don't know about that.

Fred Ferretti's musings on travel and food have appeared in The New York Times and Gourmet magazine.

Cory Skinner, new manager of Midland Park Mall, plans to be in the center of a great deal of activity at both the mall and in the community as he gets settled into his new position.

RETAILING UPDATE

New manager tells mall status

Lists retail strategy for coming months

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Midland Park Mall is in "good shape" considering the recent downturn in the economy, according to new mall manager Cory Skinner.

Skinner has been on the job only two weeks, but he has already fleshed out a plan of action that include: attracting new stores, expanding the retail base in the mall, focusing on promotions, community relations, and assisting stores in the mall with training programs.

With the mall only 85 percent occupied, Skinner says one of his priorities will be to attract new merchants: "I'd like to lease to new business categories that we don't already have to give the customer more choices. Choice — that's what helps you become a strong center."

He adds that the mall already has a good mix of national and local retailers. National retailers are essential to a good mall operation, says Skinner, but it's the local and regional store that give a center its character.

Skinner said a good and varied retail base would serve to keep retail dollars in Midland.

While Midland Park Mall's merchants might wonder about his plans for the center, he says he will not alter the center's business and budget plans, which were set earlier this year.

Assisting the mall's merchants will continue to be a high priority, through the use of videotapes and training manuals, according to Skinner. In addition, he said, "We plan to keep working to keep costs at an equitable level for our merchants."

The mall's marketing strategy will continue to focus on the major selling seasons, and to let consumers know what the mall mercants have to offer.

Events scheduled for the coming months include a back-to-school fashion show, the return of the Midland Park Mall train, a visit by the Famous Chicken, and two arts-and-crafts shows. In addition, the mall will have its annual Halloween festivities, and is already looking for temporary Christmas retailers.

"We'll continue to have community events, because we feel we're an integral part of the community," Skinner states. "I feel we have a good relationship with the community, and I intend to maintain that, even expand on it."

> "We'll continue to have community events (Such as arts and craft fairs, health shows and Halloween trick-or-treating), because we feel we're an integral part of the community. I feel we have a good relationship with the community, and I intend to maintain that, even expand on it."
> Cory Skinner, new manager of Midland Park Mall.

Skinner, has a promotional background which makes him well suited for the task of community relations. He studied advertising at the University of Kansas, earning a bachelor's degree in journalism from the school.

He says he more or less stumbled into the career of shopping center management through a placement agency, which got him his first job with another management firm in January 1986.

"I thought it sounded like a position where I would be involved in all phases of business, from accounting to marketing, security to janitorial," he recalls. "The focus is always changing."

He worked in two centers, one in Colorado, one in Virgina while with his first management company.

In February 1988, he joined Melvin Simon & Associates, now known as Simon Management Co. Simon built and manages Midland Park Mall.

Skinner's first assignment with Simon was at the Westridge Mall in his hometown of Topeka, Kan. After opening the Westridge, an 800,000 square foot center, he was sent to the Crossroads Mall in Omaha, Neb.

After re-opening the refurbished Crossroads, he was promoted to manager and sent to Midland.

COLOR IT MONEY

Proper hues can impact bottom line

By JULIE JEROME
Business/Oil Writer

The proper colors in a business environment can improve sales.

And since we're all in business to make money, you might say that's an eye-catching statement.

In fact, according to a local color expert and interior designer, color is the single most important aspect in designing an office or company plant. Lighting — the method in which color is presented — plays a similarly important role.

Sherry O'Kelley, an interior designer with the Midland firm of DFI Contract Design Inc., recently attended a seminar on how hues can "color" an individual's mood or perspective in the work place. She also has studied at Wagner Institute for Color in Santa Barbara, Calif.

At the most recent seminar, she learned the importance of selecting the proper color for an office setting.

"Selecting colors for a project is a complicated process," she said. "You don't just pick a color because it's pretty. People respond to color subconsciously, and are not aware of the impact of color on their moods or personalities."

Recently, Chrysler Corp., hired a color analysis firm to tell it what colors to paint its cars, and what regions to send these cars, she said. Another firm, which was making a mass mailing of checks to individuals as part of a marketing campaign, selected an offensive bronze to print the checks on. As a result, she said, most of the individuals who received these ugly-colored checks threw them away and never cashed them.

An example of improper color scheming O'Kelley noted is a sales-based firm that couldn't close any deals in spite of the fact that the salespeople were doing everything right. She said that after studying the office environment, she discovered the color scheme was turning customers away.

"If you're selling something, color can have a negative effect," she said. "The psychological and subconscious effects can be dramatic."

It is extremely important, for example, to arrange colors in a waiting room so the waiting time doesn't seem long. Also, food presented around a certain color can encourage the customer to eat more and stay longer at the restaurant, she noted.

"A creative atmosphere in an office can be enhanced by the proper color," she said. "For example, in a women's retail shop, if there is a wrong color scheme, it could put a damper on buying."

And productivity can be affected by color.

According to a study conducted by the National Industrial Conference Board, 27.9 percent of 350 companies that changed or used color in their offices felt their productivity had increased because of the new color scheme.

Some 64.7 percent of the respondents said the color had improved lighting. In addition, 19.1 percent said fatigue had been reduced, and 14.7 percent said absenteeism had gone down.

The most effective way to design an office with the proper color, O'Kelley said, is to analyze the clientele this particular establishment is trying to attract.

Colors in the office

- WHITE...Increases feeling of light and space, but it's hard on people who have to work at computer screens
- BLUE...Decreases blood pressure and is relaxing to the point that its overuse makes people depressed
- YELLOW...Can cause eyestrain, but stimulates and raises spirits
- GREEN...Quiet and refreshing color that has a calming effect

Sleeping related to economic opportunity

By PETER PASSELL
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Most people think they sleep because they are tired.

Now come two economists from Michigan State University who say people sleep because they have nothing better — or remunerative — to do.

The findings, in a study for the National Bureau of Economic Research by Jeff Biddle and Daniel Hamermesh, offer a striking example of economists' relentless search for economic motivations in everything from having babies to mugging tourists to going to church — and how, in the process, they sometimes generate real insight.

This latest intellectual excursion from the economist's usual turf is unlikely to turn academia on its ear.

But it should still surprise a lot of people to discover that sleep is, in part, a matter of economic discretion. People sleep less when time on the job is more valuable and more when they have the financial luxury of choice.

The study also offers hints that women, burdened with both jobs and family obligations, are working close to the biological edge.

Labor economists used to wonder about things like earnings differentials in the auto industry and the effect of unionization on unemployment rates in recessions. Some still do.

But since the 1960s, many have followed the lead of Gary Becker at the University of Chicago, broadening their horizons to explain how people use their time.

Some of these studies have had an important impact on the social sciences.

For example, it is now widely believed that family decisions about children are motivated by economic considerations. Women choose to have fewer babies if the "opportunity cost" of their time — the income they are sacrificing by staying home — goes up.

This idea has helped to explain what development specialists call the "demographic transition," the stage of growth in every successful economy at which birthrates plummet.

Perhaps the most carefully examined issue in this new economics of time allocation is the choice between work and leisure.

The Becker disciples say higher wages raise the opportunity cost of spending evenings at softball practice or Saturdays mowing the lawn.

Other things being equal, then, higher wages should lead people to substitute work for leisure.

But other things are not equal. Higher wages mean higher incomes, and one of the things workers can buy with the extra cash is leisure time.

For example, an hourly worker who gets a raise might decide to work less overtime.

TEXAS BUSINESS

Lubbock firm 'socks' away profits

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — In Japan, where the only familiar words an American might hear are "Sony" and "Mitsubishi," there's a new appellation: Oak Creek.

Coined in Lubbock by Cal and Susan Brints, Oak Creek is the name for a Lubbock company that produces fashion and athletic socks for accounts ranging from Caesar's Palace in Nevada to the Sony Corp. in Japan.

Specialty fashion shops, J.C. Penney and a nationwide confederation of mercantile stores also appear on the firm's 1,600-plus client roster.

Athletes from the high school, university and professional levels are among the wearers of the sports footwear and headbands produced by Oak Creek Products Inc. in its plant at 505 32nd St. They include baseball, basketball, football, soccer and rugby players.

The company began full production early this year after a limited production start-up began on Dec. 1, 1988, according to the Brintses, who are eight-year veterans of the textile manufacturing industry.

"We had wanted to locate a plant in this area for some time," Brints said. "We did some planning, then got in contact with the Chamber of Commerce."

He credits the chamber with providing the necessary information, services and some incentive funding for renovating a suitable building. "If it hadn't been for them, we wouldn't be in Lubbock," he said.

A major portion of the financing for the operation was handled through investors, according to the Brints.

The Brintses earlier built Texas Knitting Inc., a facility near Crosbyton that still is in business.

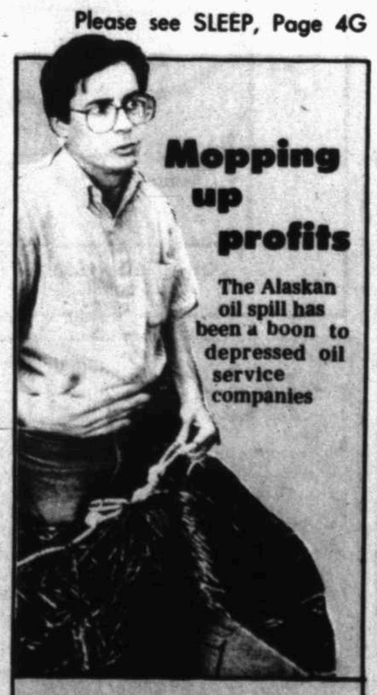

"We have manufacturer representatives that handle the contact with the individual stores," Brints said.

Oak Creek, which utilizes a network of sales representatives to span the nation from coast to coast, also has won approved-vendor status to supply hosiery to Penney's.

The company builds the socks from design to the pressing of the finished product. But to supply growing orders, the firm also buys basic socks from large knitting mills and brings them to Lubbock to be finished.

Oak Creek is just one of the company's labels. "We do private labeling also for the customers," Mrs. Brints said. "Right now, we are shipping the Hobie label. We produce the socks for Caesar's Palace, and all the Caesar's stores."

Basin tally slips, U.S. climbs 40

From Staff Reports

The U.S. rig count jumped while the Permian Basin count retreated some during the previous week, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The company reported that the U.S. county jumped 40 to 870 this week, as drier weather made drilling more favorable in northern Louisiana and northeastern Texas.

At the same time, the Permian Basin count fell four to 85.

Lea County, N.M. continues to be the most active in the Permian Basin, with 12 rigs at work, followed by Andrews County with 11.

Chaves County, N.M. lost all seven rigs during the week and was left with no drilling activity.

Among major oil producing states, Texas posted the biggest gain with 12; followed by Louisiana, eight; Oklahoma, six; Wyoming, five; Kansas and New Mexico, three each; and Pennsylvania, one.

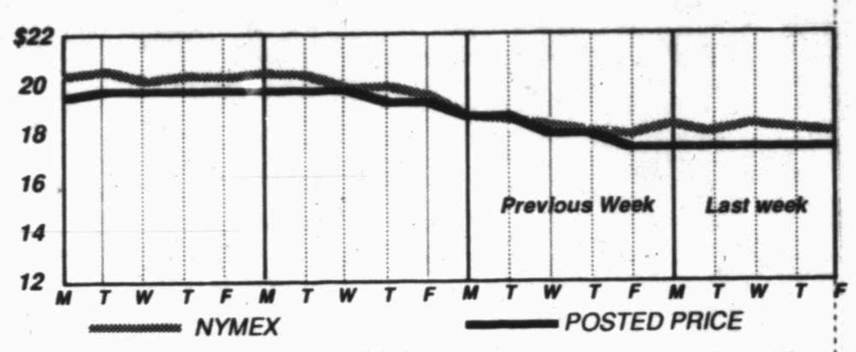

North Dakota dropped by three and California and Colorado slipped by one each. Michigan and Ohio had no change from last week.

Magazine forecasts drilling increase

From Staff Reports

A survey completed by World Oil magazine finds a sharp gain is expected in drilling activity during the last half of 1989.

The August issue of the magazine forecasts:

- The drilling of 17,328 wells and 92 million feet of hole in the last six months, up 19 percent and 21 percent, respectively over the first six months of 1989.
- The drilling of 663 Gulf of Mexico wells, up 32 percent from the 502 recorded the first half.
- An average rig count of around 900, up from 784 the first six months.
- The drilling of 31,833 wells and 168 million feet of hole for the full year 1989, about 9 percent fewer wells than in 1988, but about the same footage.

The forecast is based on a June survey of 20 major and 215 independent U.S. operating companies.

The magazine stated activity "is expected to increase as confidence builds that OPEC will be able to maintain its production quota and thus oil price stability. Further stimulus will come from more natural gas exploration and develoment in reponse to increasing environmental concerns." Also, operators' E&P budgets were underspent the first half, resulting in extra cash available for programs the remainder of this year.

Early in the year, oil prices rose sharply, breaking $20 and reaching the highest level since January 1986. They have since settled in the $18 to $19 range, well above the $15 planning price used by many operators. Indicators point to prices rising again for several reasons: World energy demand is rising faster than anticipated; domestic inventories are down, U.S. industrial activity is up, and North Sea and Alaskan production is expected to decine. Additionally, the U.S.S.R. and China could become net importers, thus taking some surplus oil off the world markets.

Natural gas should continue to spur domestic drilling, especially with heightened concern about air quality, global warming and acid rain. Utilities are already switching heavily to gas and most new orders for electric generators are gas-fired turbines.

One potential problem facing U.S. operators is equipment and personnel limitations. According to World Oil editors, "there should not be difficulty in finding enough rigs to achieve this forecast, but contractors may not have any drill pipe to drill with or be able to find experienced people to run it."

King Ranch sells Australia assets

By NELSON ANTOSH
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON – The historic King Ranch in south Texas – founded in 1853 by a steamboat captain –has sold its vast Australian ranching operation covering 7.6 million acres.

The sale announced Tuesday by the company, which recently moved its headquarters to Houston, includes nine cattle stations in the Northern Territories and Queensland and 117,000 head of cattle.

The price was not revealed. But newspapers in Australia were speculating it would be $80 million to $100 million.

The successful bidder was identified as a person represented by Bankers Trust Australia Ltd., a subsidiary of the New York-based bank holding company. A Bankers Trust spokesman in New York would not disclose the name of the buyer.

The transaction is expected to close this month, said Roger L. Jarvis of Houston, King Ranch president and chief executive officer.

King Ranch Chairman Leroy Denman Jr. of San Antonio said the transaction is another step in the ranch's strategy of "divesting foreign ranching operations and redeployment of those assets to U.S.- based investment."

"Our strategy, to a large extent, is to insulate ourselves from the vagaries of the world beef market," said Jarvis.

The investments here have been centered on oil and gas exploration, real estate development, farming, ranching and horses.

The sale of Australian assets will leave the King Ranch in Brazil as the operation's only major foreign ranch. The company, though, still maintains interests in ranches in Argentina, Spain and Morocco. It has sold ranches in Venezuela, and U.S. properties in Pennsylvania and Mississippi.

The original south Texas ranch at Kingsville consists of 825,000 acres, said Jarvis. There is a large farming operation in Florida and a throughbred horse farm in Lexington, Ky.

The ranch was founded by steamboat captain Richard King in 1853 with land purchases in the forbidding region then known as the Wild Horse Desert. The going price at the time was less than 2 cents an acre and in time grew to be the largest spread in the United States.

Senators request IRS fairness for Hunts

DALLAS (AP) - A letter from two powerful senators asked the Internal Revenue Service to give "full and mature consideration" and be guided by a "profound sense of fairness" in the court trial in which the IRS is seeking $300 million from Nelson Bunker Hunt and Wiliam Herbert Hunt, government lawyers say.

The letters from Sens. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., were sent to the IRS June 12, a month before the Hunt brothers went to trial over a $300 million federal tax bill, lawyers said Tuesday.

Sens. Helms and Thurmond, described as longtime friends of the Hunt borthers, said in the letter they were not writing to ask for special treatment, but to ensure the Hunts were treated fairly by the IRS.

"No one was out soliciting any political favors on behalf of Hunt," Hunt bankruptcy attorney Henry Simon, who helped draft the letter. said. "He just has a lot of friends. Bunker has supported a lot of political figures over the last 25 years, and there are a lot of people who wanted to help him."

The tax trial, now in a three-week recess, centers around $300 million in 1982 taxes allegedly owed by three Hunt brothers, Lamar, Bunker and Herbert.

The IRS claims Bunker and Herbert each owe about $150 million while Lamar is said to owe about $500,000.

The trial could affect how much taxes the Hunts must pay in other tax years under dispute. The 1982 case also is being watched closely by creditors in the Herbert and Bunker Hunt bankruptcy cases in Dallas, since it could impact how much money is left to pay the Hunts' other debts.

In total, the IRS says Bunker owes about $700 million and Herbert $300 million, more than both ex-billionaires' estates combined. The IRS has proposed that the brothers pay a portion of their tax bill after they emerge from bankruptcy, something Sens. Helms and Thurmond objected to strongly in their IRS letter.

"We are not persuaded that it is appropriate for the tax collection agency of the United States to pursue individuals' past bankruptcy to their graves and beyond," said the letter, written on Senate stationary.

"We both hope and suggest that when the opportunity arises for the Internal Revenue Service to give full and mature consideration to this matter, the Service will be guided by principles which involve both a profound sense of fairness and a desire to resolve these disputes."

Christopher Simpson, Thurmond's press secretary, said Helms approached Thurman on the Senate floor in June asking if he would consider signing a letter addressed to the IRS.

Teachers put oil in classroom

N.Y. Times News Service

When Marsha Barber told one of her students that she was going to be employed by Amoco Corp. in Denver this summer, he asked her which gas station she would be working at.

The question, said Ms. Barber, who teaches earth science at Chatfield High School in Littleton, Colo., typifies teen-agers' limited association with the oil and gas industry. Ms. Barber and three other Denver-area teachers of earth science intend to change all that in the coming academic year, when they will bring the realities of oil and gas exploration and development into the science classroom.

The new curriculum is the product of the teachers' participation in Amoco's Denver Earth Science Project, a five-week crash course in applied geosciences at the company's regional hedquarters. About 25 Amoco employees supplied data on locating and producing oil and gas, which the teachers are adapting for students in the 9th- to 12th-grades. Organizers believe that the project, which is supported by $12,000 in foundation grants, is the first partnership of its kind between the oil industry and public schools.

"Teaching teen-agers is tough because they say nothing has to do with their life," Ms. Barber said. "The gist of this program is to show the real application of topics that we are already studying, and make them relevant."

"We're coming into this program with different backgrounds," said Steve Williams, a program participant who teaches at Bear Creek High School in Lakewood. "The Amoco people know a lot about the oil and gas business, and the teachers know a lot about writing a curriculum and what you can teach ninth-graders." Williams is a former petroleum geologist.

The curriculum is divided into eight sections, covering topics such as where oil deposits are found, how analysts determine whether or not it pays to produce oil at a particular site and who uses the finished products. Packets of crude oil, core-drilling samples and other materials will be included in the laboratory portion of the course. Students will conduct simple experiments, showing, for example, how oil and water don't mix, and how this fact is used in the field to locate oil deposits.

The teachers will also talk to students about career opportunities in the oil and gas industry. Laura Wray, a senior petroleum geologist with Amoco who has been working with the project, said oil and gas employment was down 70 percent since 1982.

"We will always need petroleum reserves," she explained, "and as we progress, we're going to need sharper and sharper scientists to help develop them. We think it will help to start motivating students early on."

New 'Snoopy' line aimed for racks

N.Y. Times News Service

Good Grief! "Peanuts" is turning 40 and Snoopy is becoming a clothes horse.

Determined Productions Inc., the San Francisco-based licensing company for Peanuts products, is celebrating the anniversary of Charles Schulz's comic strip in 1990 with a barrage of new products.

Additions to the Peanuts line include Snoopy sportswear, a Snoopy-shaped towel, Snoopy baby bibs, Peanuts sheets and pajamas and two books featuring photos of Snoopy and his sister, Belle, dressed in clothing created by such famous names as L.L. Bean, Mary Quant, Esprit, Norma Kamali and Fioricci.

In addition, a Snoopy shop is opening in the new FAO Schwarz toy store in San Francisco next month.

"Snoopy is on a nice roll again," said Connie Boucher, founder and chairman of the licensing company, which also handles products for the Beatles and Felix the Cat.

Several thousand Peanuts items are already on the market — everything from dolls to mugs to flea collars — with sales of an estimated $1 billion a year.

"Virtually any product category you can think of, we've either done or we're thinking of doing," said Ronald Nelson, vice president of Creative Associates, Schulz's Santa Rosa, Calif.-based business managers.

Clothing accounts for between 20 percent and 30 percent of sales, followed by books (10 percent to 15 percent) and accessories and toys (15 percent).

Greeting cards and other items make up the rest. Peanuts greeting cards are Hallmark's biggest sellers, according to the 65-year-old Schulz.

Overall, said Nelson, sales of Peanuts items are second only to Disney.

"You'd be astounded at the enthusiasm of Peanuts collectors," said Schulz, who once resembled his round-faced Charlie Brown character.

"It's like our worship of all kinds of heroes."

COLOR

O'Kelley terms it problem solving.

"Men differ from women in color preferences," she said. "People with different socio-economic backgrounds are attracted to different colors. People with different educational backgrounds prefer different colors."

For example, men tend to respond better to yellow-based reds, while women tend to respond to blue-based reds, she said.

When asked their favorite color, 85 percent of the respondents will say blue, O'Kelley said.

"But most times their favorite color isn't blue," she said. "They may think it's a pretty color. But color has a subconscious and psychological effect that no one is aware of."

Perhaps most striking is that all color costs the same, O'Kelley said.

"You can get the right color at the same price as the wrong color," she said, emphasizing that proper color can increase sales and productivity.

J.C. Chancellor, owner of DFI, noted that color analysis for the office setting is something new to the interior designing industry.

"Clients have been interested in color for years," he said. "But this is a whole new concept."

Chancellor, who has been in the design business for 30 years, noted that function is always a factor in commercial design.

"Companies want to project an image — and design can help do that for them," he said.

DFI has a policy of conducting conferences with the client so he understands DFI's "scope of services," he said. "In these meetings we find out what the client organization is, what they are striving for, what their goals are, what their image is within their industry. We talk about facilities, inventory, square footage; we cover the entire interiors package: floors, walls, ceilings, lighting, furnishings and accessories."

One of Chancellor's strongest interests is lighting.

"Lighting is so important in West Texas," he said. "We live in the most gorgeous place in the world in the early morning and late at night. But the rest of the time we live in this (artificial) light. And everything around us is brown, brown, brown."

SOCKS

One of the company socks has a design patent. "We have the exclusive distribution of it," Brints said. "It has a cotton foot and Orlon top. It will sell for about $7.50 or $8 per pair retail."

Another sock designed this year by Mrs. Brints features a fashionable bow on one side and has proven to be popular in both Japan and the United States.

"Socks have become a fashion item now," she said. "They are not purchase just for wear, they have become a statement in themselves, especially with the youth."

Oak Creek uses cotton for a portion of its products.

"There are a lot of requests for a dress sock which has a cotton foot," Mrs. Brints said.

The company makes that product of 60 percent acrylic and 40 percent cotton. Some of the latter originates in South Plains fields.

Mrs. Brints said, "It's a shame that we have one of the two leading textile research centers in the nation here at Texas Tech, and have one of the largest concentrated cotton growing areas, yet there is little textile industry."

Brints believes the paradox can be attributed to a shortage in textile expertise. "It's difficult to start a plant like this with no trained help," he said.

The company currently has 15 trained employees, and expects that number to grow to 25 next year. Sales for 1989 have been projected at $350,000. The plant turns out an average of 1,800 dozen pairs of socks a week, including those brought in for finishing.

The Brintses recently opened a retail outlet store in the same building to sell seconds and some firsts from the factory's output. The seconds will be comprised of structurally-sound fabric, but will have some cosmetic defect, such as an area of differently-colored yarn. Some socks will be sold by the pound in the store.

Business runs in the Brints family. Two daughters, Nicole and Aimee, students at Texas Tech, are nearing their first anniversary in the operation of their own shop in Salem Village. Oak Creek is one of 15 suppliers for the store.

"It's theirs," Brints said, "It's not ours. They do it."

Mrs. Brints added, "We serve as advisers, but they do all the ordering and the hiring. Sometimes they take our advice, sometimes they don't."

The Oak Creek co-managers say the factory's orders have been growing steadily since it opened. They are relying not only on contacts by salesmen, but are making the trade show circuit to add exposure and bring in additional orders.

AT&T intends to eliminate CFC emissions

NEW YORK (AP) — American Telephone & Telegraph Co. says it intends to eliminate by 1994 all emissions from its factories of a chemical that destroys the ozone layer.

AT&T said Tuesday it was the first American electronics manufacturer to set such a target for emissions of chlorofluorocarbons.

The company said it already has a policy of not accepting any packaging from its suppliers that is made with chlorofluorocarbons.

AT&T said it uses the chemicals in hundreds of manufacturing processes. It said it intends to cut emissions in half from 1986 levels by 1991 as an interim step.

SLEEP

In wealthy societies, this "income effect," in which greater spending power leads people to take more leisure, seems to outweigh the "substitution effect," in which higher wages induce more work effort.

This explains why the average numbers of hours on the job has been falling steadily for a century in Europe and America.

And it may explain why the workaholic Japanese are finally learning to slow down and smell the cherry blossoms.

But there has been a missing element in these time-allocation studies: sleep.

Economists have assumed that the third of the day most people spend in bed is dictated by biology and is thus beyond the realm of personal choice.

Not so, say Biddle and Hamermesh. According to the evidence, a solid fraction of sleep time is a matter of economic discretion.

Their study uses statistical regression techniques to analyze the minute-to-minute diaries kept by 706 people between the ages of 23 and 65.

The average person slept a shade less than 8 hours a night. But 12 percent of the people in the study slept more than 9 hours, and 10 percent less than 6½ hours.

An increase in wages of 25 percent, they found, reduces sleep time by about 1 percent. If the wages of an average worker are doubled, that person will spend 20 minutes less in bed.

Investment in alternate energy dwindling

By MATTHEW L. WALD
New York Times News Service

Even as the nation increasingly worries about high oil imports and dirty air, construction of power plants that run on low-pollution, "renewable" electricity sources is beginning to drop sharply, experts say.

Renewable sources include sunlight, water, wood, wind, geothermal steam and landfill gas.

A comprehensive survey by an investor research group projects that completions of such plants will peak this year after rising sharply since the beginning of the decade and will decline substantially in the next five years.

It found that the prospects for such plants have been hurt by low prices for the fuels they would replace, like oil and gas; by changes in some state regulations that discourage investment in such plants, and by an electricity surplus in parts of the country.

"It's an irony that just as policy makers and the general public are latching onto the benefits of renewables, we're poised for a big decline," said one of the authors of the study, Susan Williams, of the Investor Responsibility Research Center, a nonprofit group in Washington financed by institutional investors.

The falloff comes just as a growth in demand for electricity in much of the East is creating a boom for the independent companies that sell power to utilities and that in the past were the primary builders of renewable-source energy projects.

But most of the new independent projects in the East will use natural gas or coal. Some will also use oil.

Williams and another researcher, Kevin Porter, surveyed 108 renewable energy companies and found that plant completions will peak this year at 1,280 megawatts, which is about the capacity of a single large nuclear plant and is enough to power about 600,000 households.

But the plants under construction or planned by the companies for completion in 1993 come to only 200 megawatts.

All told, the plants already operating can produce about 7,600 megawatts, about 1 percent of the nation's generating capacity.

But growth in the use of renewable energy sources is widely viewed as inevitable as fossil fuels like oil and gas are exhausted and as concern rises about ground-level ozone, the greenhouse effect and other forms of pollution.

Still, those factors are entering into development decisions less now than they did previously, according to experts.

"A great deal of attention was paid in the late 70s and early 80s to renewables," said Charles T. Condy, chief executive of the California Energy Co., a geothermal concern in San Francisco.

"But the sex appeal got lost someplace. I think it got lost at $8 a barrel."

Condy said that geothermal development was continuing, but more slowly than it would if oil and gas prices were higher.

"The industry ought to be thinking long term," he said. "But we're encouraging a short-term solution."

Condy is not alone.

"Anyone who thinks oil prices are going to stay over the long term at a low level is making a mistake," said Jeffrey C. Genzer, of the National Association of State Energy Officials.

But Genzer said the states and federal government might return soon to promoting alternative energy.

Federal research and development money for alternative energy sources is down by 82 percent since its peak in 1980.

Solar and wind projects also benefited from a tax credit, although most of the solar products did not involve the production of electricity.

David B. Goldstein, a senior staff scientist at the Natural Resources Defense Council, said: "There's lots of vocalizations about the importance of oil independence, the greenhouse effect and acid rain.

"But when it comes down to a decision being made, not one penny is being spent to avoid these kinds of impacts."

Goldstein said that, in the choice among conventional energy sources — like oil, gas and coal — renewables, and conservation, the conventional sources are the most expensive.

He added that many alternative sources cost less, although efficiency improvements are cheaper than either.

Experts say geothermal, hydroelectric and biomass projects including wood-and garbage-burning plants are the least expensive of the alternative technologies.

Other alternative technologies are still more expensive than conventional sources.

They could decline in price with more investment in research and development, but that money will probably be available only if there are orders for more plants.

One example, according to Goldstein and other experts, is photovoltaic cells, which make electricity from sunlight and could supply a major portion of the nation's electricity in the next century.

The 456-page study concluded: "As they approach the 1990s, many of these developers believe that their markets can only improve, but wonder if they will survive long enough to benefit."

The strongest renewable-source contenders now are waste-to-energy plants, although the primary reason for them remains disposing of waste rather than producing energy. Also strong are hydroelectric and geothermal plants.

Windmills have fallen by the wayside because of the expiration of tax provisions that favored their construction.

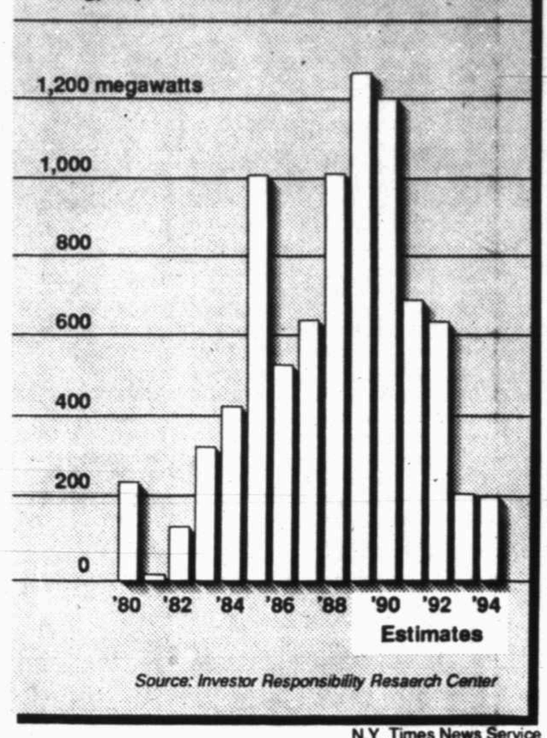

Photovoltaic cells — which make electricity directly from sunlight — are still uncompetitive financially.

But solar thermal plants — using the sun's heat to boil water to make electricity — are competitive.

Louisiana firm soaking up profits from oil spill

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The oil spilled into Prince William Sound by the Exxon tanker Valdez has been a windfall for a little Louisiana company which makes systems to clean up, soak up and remove oil from water.

"A lot of equipment and people that probably would not be working right now are employed because of the spill. It will end, of course, but I would envision staying in a pretty fast-paced mode for at least another two months," said Wallace landry, general manager of Oil Mop Inc.

Oil Mop says its profits have increased sharply; it expects to make $4 million this year, double the 1988 figure. It has boosted permanent employees from 15 to 50 and hired an additional 50 temporary workers, and announced plans to expand its manufacturing facility by 80 percent.

"There's no doubt about it. The cleanup operation in Alaska is the reason we're booming," said Landry.

Exxon disclosed last week that its estimated cleanup cost for the March 24 spill would total $1.28 billion, making it one of the most expensive industrial accidents in history.

The giant oil company said the figure represented the price for 3,000 workers running hundreds of vessels and pumping equipment in Alaska.

Landry said Oil Mop is one of at least 100 small companies that have benefited from the cleanup operation. In Louisiana, where the depressed oil-based economy has hurt many companies, the spill has been a boon.

Companies that supply tow boats, pumps and generators, as well as service and catering companies, are all busy, Landry said.

Oil Mop, founded in 1970, is not new to the job of cleaning up major spills. The company helped clean up the Ixtoc I well blowout on Mexico's Bay of Campeche in 1979, which spewed 100 million gallons of crude and ranks with the Exxon spill as one of the worst oil disasters.

Oil Mop's technicians had to recover diesel fuel from beneath 3 feet of ice to clean up a spill in Nome, Alaska. When a tanker went aground in the St. Lawrence Seaway, the company recovered 100,000 gallons of oil in seven days.

The Oil Mop system uses a rope made of a fiber that attracts oil and repels water. An engine pulls the rope across the water surface and then between rollers that squeeze the recovered oil ito a container.

ENERGY

If development of such energy sources declines, experts say, the nation will face a harder transition to a post-petroleum era, or may end up importing the technology it needs.

The American lead in some alternative technologies is already threatened. For example, in photovoltaic cells, which were invented in the United States, Japanese and German companies are making technical progress.

A second solar approach, using the sun's heat to boil water and make electricity, is also showing promise, and the most prominent builder of such plants in this country is an Israeli concern, Luz International.

According to experts in the field, the oil price shocks of 1973 and 1979 created a boom in construction of alternative energy plants.

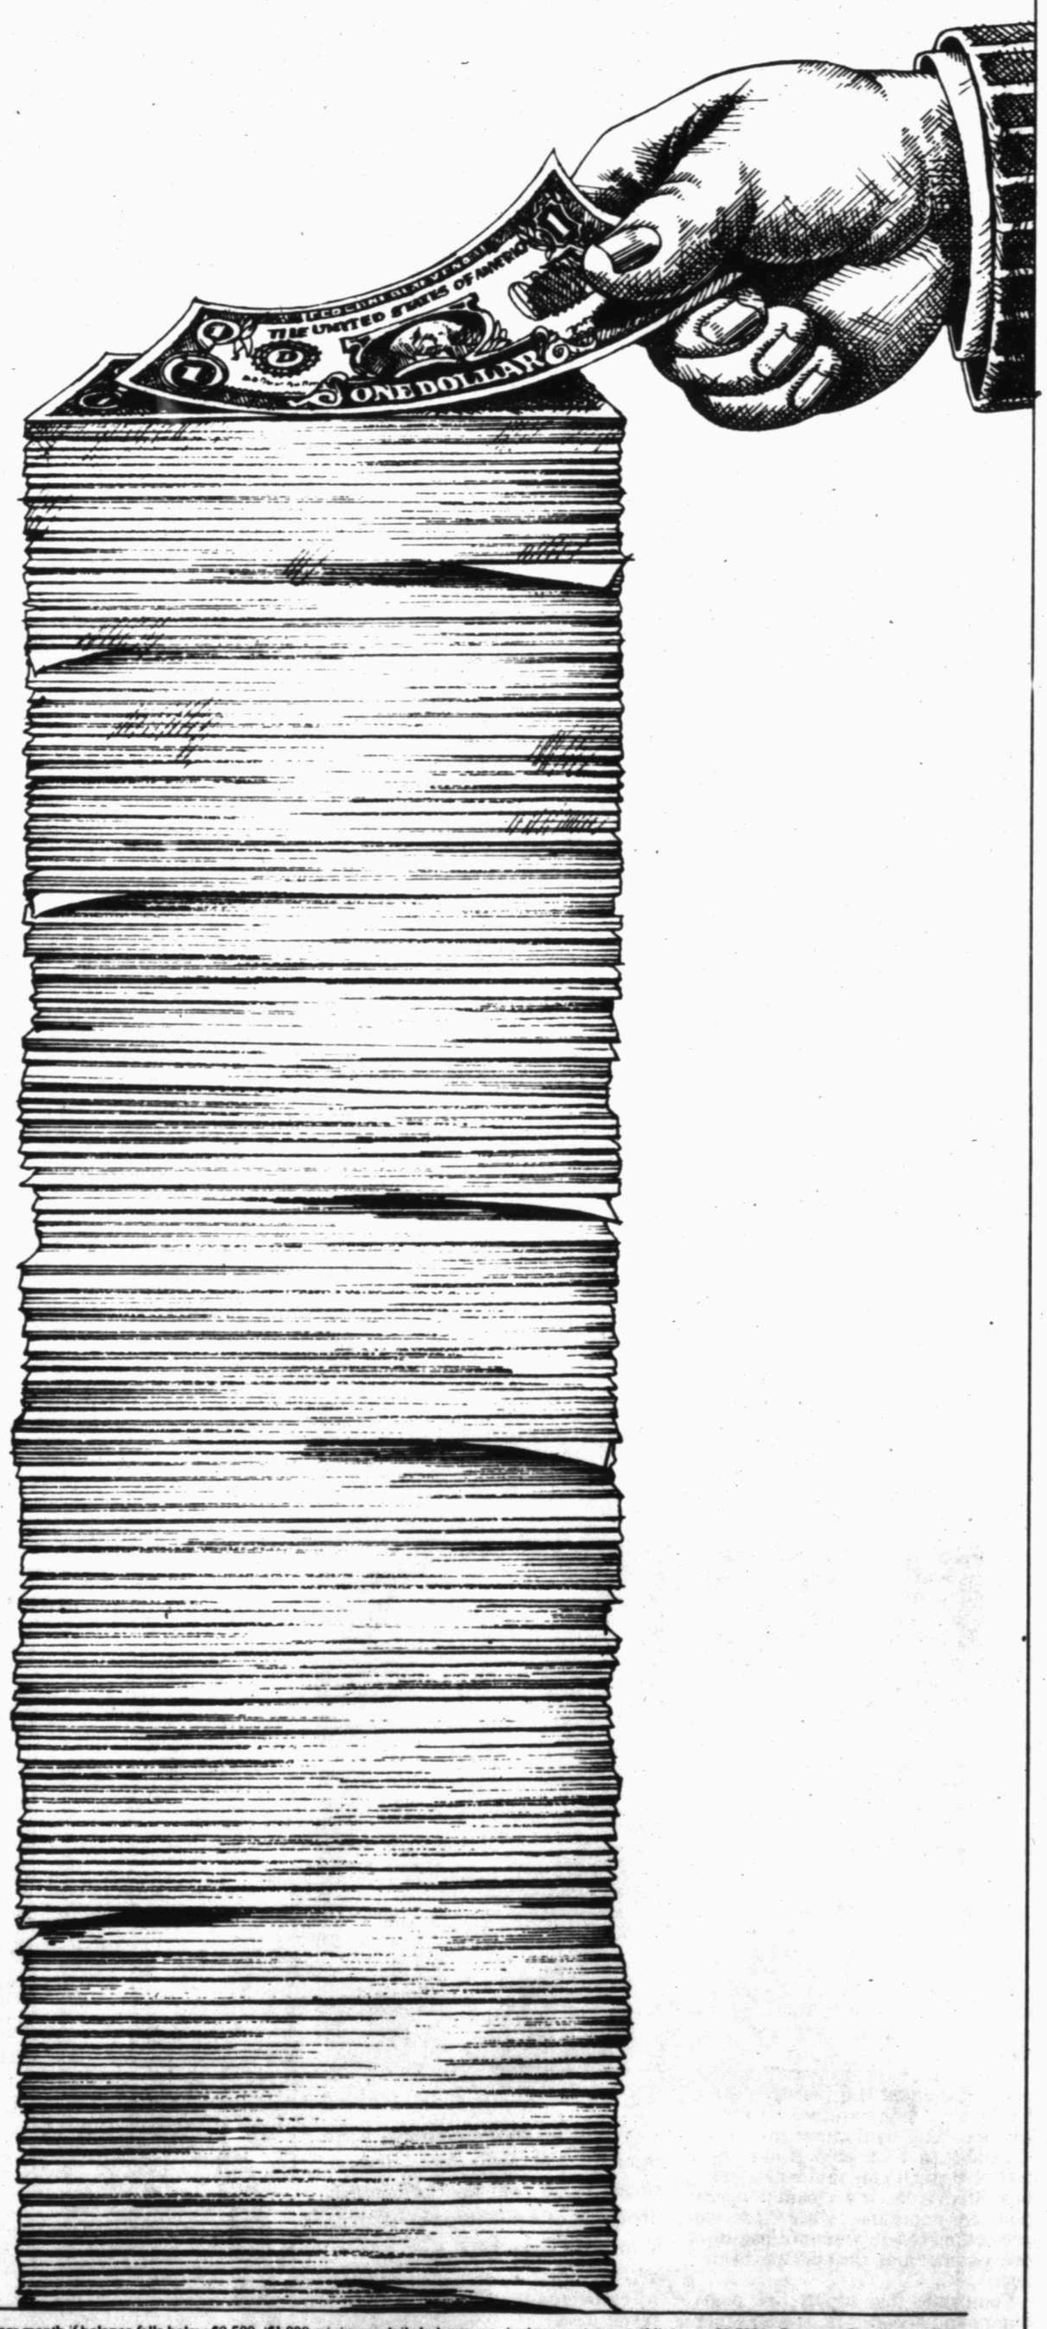

But the price collapse of 1986, and the expectation that oil prices would not continue to escalate, were a major blow.

Pickwicks play villains and a cat

"A story, a story, I've come to tell a story.
A story, a story, they call me the Storyman.
Behold the magic right here on this stage.
Come join the journey of a boy and his pet as they see the world off the printed page.
Poof, pretending's alive for the tale to set.
I'll sing a tale of a walking, talking cat.
Come laugh at chases, tricks and wild prat falls,
An ugly monster — oh, a wicked rat — that ogre who eats folks large and small."
— lyrics by Debbie Waddell
music by Matt Rose

"I'll read it," Boris says, grabbing at his father's will.

"No. I'll read it," Horace says, reaching out for the document.

"I'm the oldest," Boris says. "I'll read it."

"But I read better than you do," Horace replies.

"You couldn't even get out of the first grade," Boris says.

"You never even got into the first grade," Horace says.

Boris wins the argument, and attempts to read their father's will. Both brothers are shocked at their father's bequests. Boris receives the shoe shop. Horace is given the house. Their father's favorite son, Marcus, who is the youngest, receives the cat, Puss, and a pair of boots.

None of the three brothers realizes the special nature of the bequest given Marcus. Soon, Marcus will discover his boots are hardly standard, and Puss is not the usual feline.

Thus begins the adventure of "Puss in Boots," opening Thursday at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

The production, which is being staged by Midland Community theatre's performing youth troupe, the Pickwick Players, will be on stage at Davis Theatre I at 1:30 p.m. Thursday through Saturday and at 10:30 a.m. on Saturday. Admission is $3; adults accompanied by a young person under 12 are admitted free. For reservations call 682-4111.

This production has a couple of unusual elements.

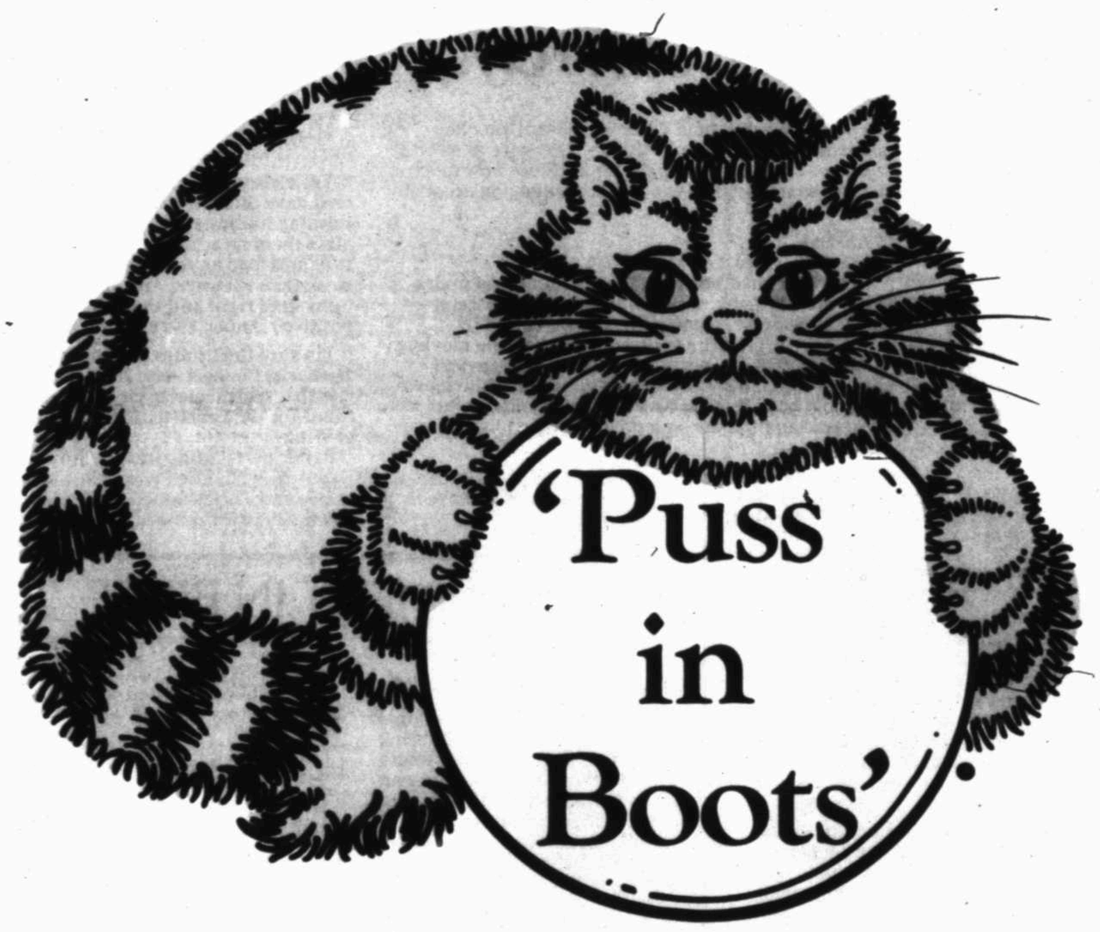

"This is a participation play," says Debbie Waddell, guest director for the production. "We'll have the kids on stage with us. The kids will be helping to defeat the villains. They will do strange things like buzz, and the stage fills with honey, and the villains can't walk."

Audience members will be sitting on platforms on the stage in a production which abounds with villainous sorts.

"There's all kinds of chases and a lot of comic interplay between the villains and the cat. We have about five people who are trying to get at Puss, but Puss is so clever he gets away."

Pickwick Players, from left, Matt Dennis, Sara Smith, Laura Sumpter, Jennifer Garner, and in front, Susanna Morrow as Puss, prepare for Thursday's opening of "Puss in Boots." Showtime is 1:30 p.m. Thursday through Friday and 10:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. Saturday at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

New comedy rates high

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NBC might have flopped with its nurse drama "Nightingales," but its summer nurse comedy "13 East" finished in the Top 10, helping the network win another Nielsen ratings derby victory.

For the week ended July 30, NBC's "Cheers" landed in first place for the fourth time in five weeks, narrowly topping ABC's "Roseanne." "Cheers" had a rating of 17.5, only one-tenth of a point ahead of "Roseanne."

Last week they tied for first place at 17.4.

NBC easily won the week for its 58th straight victory in the A.C. Nielsen Co. survey. The only surprise in the Top 10 was the appearance of lightly regarded "13 East," which finished 10th.

Other than CBS' "60 Minutes" and "Murder, She Wrote," all the shows in the Top 10 were comedies.

The ratings are certainly proof of the resurgence of the situation comedy, which was all but written off a few years ago.

Prime-time soap operas like "Dallas" and "Dynasty" dominated the ratings until the appearance of "The Cosby Show" in 1984. In the 1983-84 season the only comedy in the Top 10 was CBS' "Kate & Allie."

Comedy also dominated the second 10 highest-rated shows this past week with seven entries.

Here are the Top 10: NBC's "Cheers," ABC's "Roseanne," NBC's "The Cosby Show," NBC's "A Different World," NBC's "Dear John," NBC's "The Golden Girls" and CBS' "60 Minutes" tied, CBS "Murder, She Wrote," ABC's "The Wonder Years" and NBC's "13 East."

Fox Broadcasting continued its summer surge in the ratings. "Married ... With Children" was in 29th place, "America's Most Wanted" was tied for 34th and "Totally Hidden Video" was tied for 39th place.

NBC was first with an average of 10.8, CBS was second with 8.9 and ABC was third with 8.7. The averages since the fall season began on Sept. 19 were: NBC 14.8, ABC 11.9 and CBS 11.8.

Choral group to debut

A new singing group, The Symphony Pops Choir, will make its first public performance at the Museum of the Southwest's Summer Sundays Concert at 7:45 p.m. today.

The choir, directed by Robert Hunt, will be performing at the Pops Concerts with the Midland-Odessa Symphony.

At the museum event, the choir will perform a variety of music including the "Star Spangled Banner" to "In the Mood," "Tuxedo Junction," the theme from "Sesame Street" and "Over the Rainbow" as an introduction to the kinds of music they will present during the Pops symphony season.

Hunt is the director of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale and assistant director of the symphony. He is a doctoral candidate in conducting at the Indiana University and holds a master of arts degree in musicology from Texas Christian University, Fort Worth, and a bachelor of arts in piano performance from Southern Methodist University, Dallas.

In addition to being conductor and accompanist for such popular performers as Willie Nelson, Ray Price and Julius LaRosa, he has worked with Boris Goldovsky Opera Institute, Dallas Opera and American Cabaret Company of New York.

He also teaches in the Midland Independent School District and at Odessa College.

NBC's 'Hunter' reversing TV trend

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NBC's "Hunter," a detective drama starring Fred Dryer, is a show that is reversing a television trend.

The usual course for a hit series is to reach a ratings plateau, then slowly decline as the show becomes complacent and finally runs out of steam.

"Hunter," which begins its sixth season in September, turned that routine on its ear. "Forget the first two years," Dryer says. "They don't count. We're going into our fourth season."

The show has been climbing in the ratings, finishing in a tie for 16th place this past season. The stories have also gotten better and have more substance. "Hunter" has bounced about the schedule, but seems to do best on Saturday at 10 p.m.

In the beginning, the ratings were lackluster. So were the stories. The show was a blatant rip-off of Clint Eastwood's "Dirty Harry" film character.

Dryer, the 6-foot-6 former All-Pro defensive end for the Los Angeles Rams, even closely resembles Eastwood. Hunter began as a swaggering, unorthodox cop who carried a .357-caliber Magnum, relentlessly pursued the bad guys and constantly fought with his superiors.

Stepfanie Kramer also stars as his partner, Sgt. Dee Dee McCall, an equally hard-boiled detective who was nicknamed "the brass cupcake."

"We've evolved way out from that," says Dryer. "He's unorthodox today if it's unorthodox to be compassionate, to live your job and take it home with you. I credit Roy Huggins with turning the show around during his time as executive producer. He took a show that was making very small concentric circles and opened it up and set up guidelines to make it bigger and better with more emphasis on stories.

"What I contributed was to take those stories and tell them through the characterizations of Hunter and McCall. The audience must see how we react, how we feel about things. The relationship between Hunter and McCall is drastically important. You must care about the people you are watching."

More changes are due in the fall. Dryer and his partner, Lawrence Kubik, will become executive producers.

"You're going to see a lot of subtle changes in communications, in quality control and in post-production," Dryer says. "Hunter and McCall are moving away from the station house to Parker Center. It'll give it a more contemporary, high-tech look."

Film's final minutes make watching it worth while

Some surprises I don't like. Like the one I received Wednesday night. I rented this movie with the understanding it was a comedy.

It wasn't.

In fact, it had one funny scene in the entire film. One.

Temple

The movie had such a somber, depressing tone — the dominant color was gray — that it didn't take long to realize the error. Only two of the neurotic characters seemed to know their faces were capable of laughing without cracking.

Unfortunately, I wasn't alone in watching it. I wanted to change films, but the others held out the hope it would cheer up.

It was a long wait. I was half-watching the film and half-doing other things, when the male lead, played by William Hurt, whom I discovered can look like the saddest of lost puppy dogs, told his wife as he was leaving — "I'm beginning to think it's not how much we love someone, but who you are when you are with them."

Ah. Hah.

I rapidly wrote it down.

I still wish I had been watching a comedy. I understand that the book, which won a Pulitzer prize, is stronger than the movie. And, I've been told by someone who read the book and watched the movie, in that order, that I'm being too hard on the movie. I certainly wouldn't want to do that. Besides, the movie might not have bothered me if I had wanted to be depressed and somber — a state of being I hardly ever choose.

Perhaps it wasn't accidental that I rented this particular movie because I am glad I caught the last few minutes. The author's on to something.

Maybe it doesn't apply only to love relationships, but to all our lives.

For example, almost 100 percent of the performers I have interviewed say there is nothing like performing live in front of an audience. The experience gives them an adrenaline charge which they find hard to compare to anything else. Some say they become more than they are. And, on those nights when everything goes right and the audience is responding in a positive manner, the evening takes on a magical feel.

I'm sure the groups playing for the Roy Orbison Memorial Concert Aug. 26 at Wink, hope the event carries that special electricity. The concert will raise funds for the construction of the Roy Orbison Museum at Wink.

Bands performing include Roy Orbison imitator Kenny Morrill, The Prime Time Band, The Sparkles, Billy Dee and The Debonaires, The Marbles, Showdown, Stuart-James Project, North Star Band, The Wink Westerners and The Teen Kings, members of Orbison's second band who recorded with him on the Sun Label of Memphis, Tenn.

The last item is for an old friend.

Is Andrea Jane Wiggins experiencing an altered state of mind?

Most who have fallen in love know that the "in love" state has that magical feel to it as well. Miss Wiggins, the granddaughter of Florence Aldridge, is getting married Aug. 19 in Arkansas.

Congratulations and, most importantly, good luck.

Love is hard work.

Is it how much we love someone or who we become when we are with the other person or both? It's a good question. Possibly one which has no answer.

PUSS

"It's good to get in on the ground floor and teach kids all the way through school. I think that's the only way you are going to develop any kind of ensemble work when they're older."

Ms. Waddell prefers starting kids in drama when they are in preschool because "that's where they really learn to think and problem solve."

"It's best when you start them real young before they have a preconceived idea of what they should do — like copying what they see on TV or in a movie."

She recalls her experience holding auditions for "Puss in Boots."

"I noticed when I started giving some of these kids improvisations to do, a lot of these kids were really scared to death because they weren't used to creating something on their own."

When she is directing, she provides her students with a "framework and the structure of the script," then she wants to see the kids develop "the nucleus of an idea" which she can then pull out of them "so they're creating an original character."

"It's like a process. Whether I'm teaching or directing, it's a process of questioning and challenging — 'What do they think happened under these circumstances?' 'What would they do then?' I like to pull their own ideas out of them rather than saying what I would do. I want them to be thinking performers."

Cast members are Matt Rose, Kyle Gassiott, Sara Smith, Matt Dennis, Will Coombes, Susanna Morrow, Jennifer Garner, Laura Sumpter, Russell Parker, Elaine McKinney, Charlotte Martin and Effie Brunson.

Those working behind the scenes include Kendra Alvey, stage manager; Louise Ramirez, light board operator; and Justin Zabel, props and puppet.

Ms. Waddell, who spent two years teaching English and drama at Trinity School when she first returned to the Permian Basin, obtained a master of fine arts degree from the Dallas Theater Center where she studied under Paul Baker. While she was working on her master's, she knew Sally Netzel, then a company member of DTC, and the author of the script being used for the Midland production.

In tailoring the production for the Pickwicks and Midland audiences, Ms. Waddell and the students created two songs and a new character, Storyman, who acts as the show's narrator.

"The designer here, Eddie Taylor, wanted the idea of a large book, and we would just change the pages for a set change. I thought, 'Who am I going to have to turn the pages?' I'm going to create a storyteller.

"When I had auditions, one of the boys auditioning played a guitar so I decided he would be kind of a storyteller and troubadour. We started to develop dialogue for between the scenes, and that's when I wrote the song."

Storyman actually has some additional duties.

"Since we have children on stage with us, we can't have as much set so he becomes whatever we need him to be — a tree, a window," Ms. Waddell says. "And that made the script a little more flexible."

With a week to go before the production opens, Ms. Waddell says, "The kids are extremely excited and are working well. It's really a lot of fun."

Hobbs armory renamed

HOBBS, N.M. — The newly renovated National Guard Armory in Hobbs has been named the John J. Fletcher Jr. Multi-Purpose Center in memory of Fletcher who passed away in February.

Fletcher, a former resident of Midland, retired from Amoco, and served 14 years on the Hobbs City Commission from 1972 through 1986. During this time, he served as mayor of the City of Hobbs in 1975, 1979 and 1983.

The center was officially dedicated July 12 during an open house attended by more than 125.

The Fletcher Center was donated to the city in October 1988, after the National Guard built a new armory at Hobbs Industrial Air Park.

Since that time, $220,000 in state funds were spent on renovation of the facility for use by the public. The facility houses a fully operational kitchen, four meeting rooms and carpeted gymnasium areas.

The center also is available to the public free of charge for use as meeting space or recreational use from 6 to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 2 to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Private and profit-making organizations will be charged rent for use of the Fletcher Center. All bookings will be by the Hobbs Recreation Division.

Some stars don't want top billing

From Wire Reports

NEW YORK CITY — Hollywood actors will do practically anything to secure high billing in a major motion picture — right? According to The Movie Channel's daily reporter Robert Osborne in a recent news release, that's not always the case.

"For more actors, billing is their life's blood. They thrive on it, live by it and fire agents because of it," noted Osborne in answer to a question from a viewer of the Movie Channel. But he goes on to point out a recent trend that runs counter to this logic. Many box office stars have requested that their billing be dropped from recent releases — and in several cases their contracts stipulate no participation whatsoever in advertising, publicity or promotional campaigns.

For instance, the throngs crowding theaters to catch "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" will enjoy seeing teen star River Phoenix cast in the role of "Indy" as a lad — but according to Osborne, they won't see him in any ads for the movie.

And while Robin Williams may well be the biggest box office draw for Terry Gilliam's "The Adventures of Baron Munchausen," Columbia Pictures — which released the film — is contractually forbidden to use the actor's name or face in its efforts to attract an audience.

"While not commonplace," says Osborne, "this sort of thing is happening for a variety of reasons."

The Movie Channel reports several notable examples: Jack Nicholson played a critical role in the Oscar-nominated "Broadcast News," but his name is nowhere to be seen in the credit "crawl", nor does he appear on any poster for the movie. Why?

"It wasn't a major role, and if I'd been billed, it might have been a disappointment to people waiting for me to show up and then only have a few lines," explains the star.

Lloyd Bridges was behaving like any caring, protective dad when he requested no billing in last year's "Tucker, The Man And His Dream." He didn't want his participation to shift any focus away from the star — son Jeff Bridges.

Family loyalty also played a role in Debra Winger's decision to forego billing in the romantic fantasy "Made In Heaven." The last thing she wanted to do was upstage then-husband Timothy Hutton, the film's star.

Magnanimity motivated Kathleen Turner to turn down billing as the steamy voice of Roger Rabbit's girlfriend Jessica in "Who Framed Roger Rabbit." She said she'd rather have audiences concentrate on the movie, not the woman behind the voice (or is it the voice behind the woman?)

Funnyman Bill Murray put in one of the best performances of his career in an unbilled role — that of Dustin Hoffman's friend in "Tootsie." Murray claimed he didn't want people to come to the theater expecting to see a Bill Murray comedy. "Tootsie" is a Dustin Hoffman comedy.

"It is rather remarkable to find actors working without star billing," opines Osborne. "But, it's encouraging."

Without such credits, actors may agree to play smaller parts than they would normally consider — giving them an opportunity to stretch their acting muscles while adding unexpected magic to the movie.

The Movie Channel reporter concludes that ironically, by taking no billing, some actors garner more attention than if they had.

Martin County swimming event will benefit Cystic Fibrosis Foundation

STANTON — People of all ages are invited to help fight the number one genetic killer of children and young adults in the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation's Great Waves swimming event set for August 14 at Martin County Country Club in Stanton.

All money raised will help the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation fund the research that is closing in on a cure for CF.

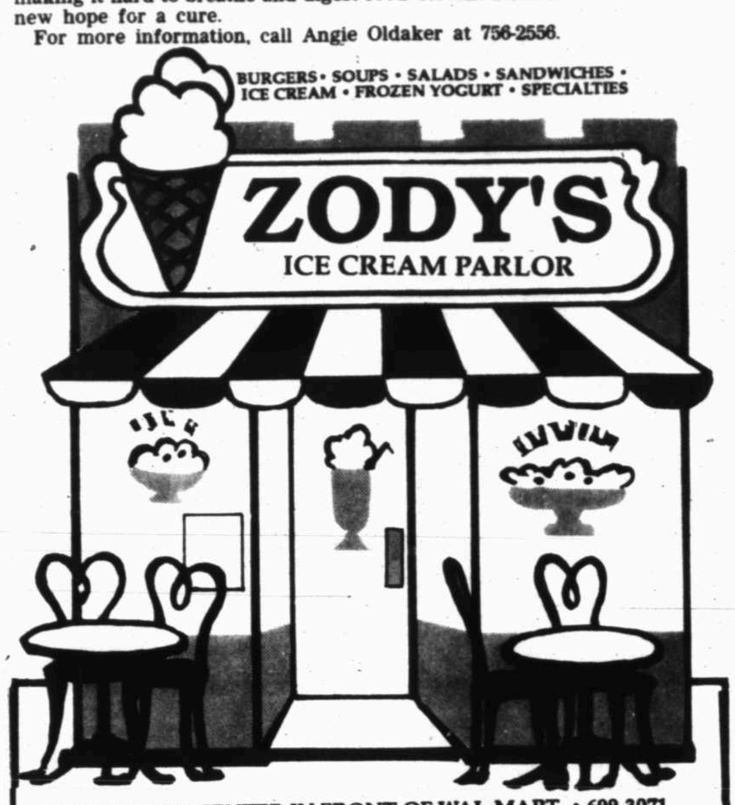

"Participants will collect pledges for each lap they swim during Great Waves and can win prizes ranging from T-shirts to stereos to VCRs," said Angie Oldaker, chairperson of the event.

Cystic fibrosis clogs the lungs and pancreas with a thick sticky mucous, making it hard to breathe and digest food. Recent scientific advances offer new hope for a cure.

For more information, call Angie Oldaker at 756-2556.

Top drum corps to compete at Falls Fanfare

From Staff Reports

WICHITA FALLS — Seven of the nation's top drum corps will compete in Wichita Falls Friday for the Falls Fanfare.

The 1989 Blue Devils from Concord, Calif., are opening with a blast from the past with Sammy Nestico's "You Gotta Try." This is pure "shove it down your throat" Blue Devils jazz.

The next is the ballad, "If We Were in Love" by composer John Williams from the movie "Yes, Giorgio."

"This work showcases the corps other persona; the Blue Devils which charm you with subtlety and nuance," Suzanne Ashlock of Falls Fanfare said in a news release.

"From the New World...To a New Age" is the title of the show chosen by Phantom Regiment from Rockford-Love's Park, Ill. Dvorak's New World Symphony combines native Czech influences with American rhythms and Black spirituals. The Phantom Regiment staff researched those idioms which influenced Dvorak and decided to paint a musical picture not limited solely by what Dvorak wrote.

The presentation will be unique, utilizing jazz and blues motifs in a manner which may surprise the purists.

This year, Spirit of Atlanta from Atlanta, Ga., will pull a musical surprise out of the hat with Amin Bhatia's "Interstellar Suite." The piece is in the spirit of a space movie sound track with soaring melodic lines and pounding rhythmic motifs.

The Colts from Dubuque, Iowa, will be showcasing contemporary jazz band music of the 70's and 80's with "Matchpoint" as the opener. It is a straight-ahead, blow-your-face-off type of tune.

After experiencing their highest placement ever — 17th at the Drum Corps International World Championships last year, Denver, Colo.'s, Blue Knights are trying to establish an upbeat "Colorado" identity. They are performing Holst's stirring "Moorside March" and famed American band composer Alfred Reed's "Punchinello."

"It's no big deal to the Troopers of Casper, Wy., that they are touring cross-country most of the season. They invented the concept of the modern day touring drum corps," Ms. Ashlock said. "Audiences from other regions were thrilled to experience the Troopers unique old West style. This year, they are performing music from the movie 'How the West Was Won,' which is perhaps the one show that more than anything else has their name written all over it."

In 1989 Black Gold of Tulsa, Okla., is on the road for the DCI World Championships in Kansas City. Their sights are set on the Class A title as well as getting into the prestigious ranks of the top 25 DCI corps. Their show this year could very well achieve those goals.

Fall Fanfare will present these corps at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Memorial Stadium. Tickets are $8 reserved and $6 general admission. For information, call 1-512-696-5663 or 1-512-761-1149.

Oates lives to haunt her readers

By DAVID GERMAIN

TROY, N.Y. (AP) — Inside her house of glass, Joyce Carol Oates lives to haunt her readers, writing books with all the anguish of Thomas Hardy and all the breadth of Dickens.

Oates

Outside her glass-walled house in Princeton, N.J., there's a different Oates, one who makes fewer demands, one who really wants to be liked.

Oates surprised her audience at a recent literary reading at Russell Sage College in Troy, just north of Albany. The audience knew of Oates' fascination with doubles and alter egos. They also wondered how one writer could churn out two or more hefty books a year while teaching and lecturing. But hearing her on stage, they thought there really might be two Joyce Carol Oates, and that night they got the funny one.

She began with a terse, cryptic piece that was over before the audience had a chance to really tune in. There was a silence, a few coughs. No one was sure if literary etiquette allowed them to applaud.

"If that means nothing to you, you're very lucky," Oates said before moving on to a slightly longer piece. "I feel you're getting strength now and can handle longer work."

Later, when the audience did applaud, she thanked them, but added, "I assume you're applauding to hurry me up."

The audience had come to hear the bookish, 50-year-old Princeton professor who has published 50 works since 1963 — harsh and haunting and lyrical books in which used furniture salesmen fall victim to McCarthyism, and suicide is always an option.

Instead, they saw a lanky woman who told funny stories.

When she first started publishing, she submitted stories under the name "J.C. Oates."

"I had the erroneous idea it was a world inhospitable to women writers," she said. "Editors would assume 'J.C. Oates' was a man. Maybe they were right in some symbolic way."

That leads to her fascination with doubles. The worst day of her life was caused by her alter ego, or "the double who undone me," Oates says.

The double is Rosamond Smith, the pseudonym she adopted to publish last year's novel, "Lives of the Twins." Oates didn't tell her agent or her publisher, E.P. Dutton. Both were peeved.

"I just wanted a new identity, kind of a freshness, to have a book come out where nobody was comparing it to other books," she said in an interview. "You can't escape your identity. That's very frustrating."

"Lives of the Twins" deals with twin brothers whose polar personalities merge as they fight for the same woman. Oates has written a second novel as Rosamond Smith — being happily published by Dutton — which centers again on doubles. "Soul Mate," due out this spring, is about a Princeton-type professor involved with her opposite, a charming, Ted Bundyish psychopathic killer.

Her latest novel, "American Appetites," takes place in a fictional town in New York's lower Hudson Valley. The setting is a camouflaged Princeton, and the main characters live in the same glass-walled house Oates shares with her husband, Raymond Smith.

Like all her writing, "American Appetites" has an intensity and ferocity that disturbs readers. The main character, Ian McCullough, is tried for manslaughter in the accidental death of hi wife:

"Had he really thought she would be returned to him and their life would continue as always? — as if nothing had happened? — seizing her shoulders as he had, in a paroxysm of murderous rage, and throwing her backward, helplessly backward, into death: into a sheet of glass."

A Princeton colleague has called Oates the fourth Bronte sister, while John Updike suggested Oates was born 100 years too late, that she belonged amid "a race of Victorian word-eaters."

"She has, I fear, rather overwhelmed the puny, parsimonious critical establishment of this country," Updike writes.

She won the National Book Award for her novel, "them," received the O. Henry Prize for Continuing Achievement in the Short Story and is a perpetual Nobel Prize candidate.

Even so, critics complain about the complexity of Oates' work and her handling of traditionally male subjects. She's been accused of writing like a man, even of writing too much.

If there's a question Oates hates, it's "Why so much violence?" In her novel "Wonderland," a father kills his family before shooting himself. In "Expensive People," a young son plans suicide by gorging himself after killing his mother. In "Bellefleur," a vulture flies off with a bleeding baby in its talons, and the heir-apparent of a dynastic clan wipes out his family by crashing an airplane into their castle.

So why so much violence?

Most writers have violence in their fiction, Oates says, citing former Princeton colleague E.L. Doctorow's novel "Billy Bathgate," about gangster Dutch Schultz.

"It's much more violent than anything I've written," she said. "But I notice in the reviews that (Doctorow) gets, there's never any mention of that. I think that's because he's a male writer."

There's violence in Oates' ancestry. Oates' grandfather died in a tavern brawl, and her great-grandfather killed himself after trying to shoot his wife.

Oates grew up just outside the Erie Canal town of Lockport, N.Y. Her father, Frederic, was an autoworker and signpainter; her mother, Carolina, a housewife.

Oates' characters viewed with pity

"American Appetites," the title of Joyce Carol Oates' latest novel, is also the title of the book one of her characters is working on.

A Review

The fictional Glynnis McCullough is a food writer and her new book will be about regional American cooking. Oates' novel deals with characters in a region of American society who seemingly have lives of plenty spread around them, but whose sense of something wrong or missing shows under pressure.

Glynnis and Ian, her husband, a distinguished demographer, live in a prosperous academic milieu in a house of glass — a home in which there are literally walls of glass overlooking the beauty of the natural setting. Oates' novel tells what happens to cause that house of glass to shatter and shows that it was built on sand in the first place.

The McCulloughs' 19-year marriage is not in trouble by outward appearance, although there are those questions, such as "Do you feel, Glynnis, that you have a soul?" that Ian can abruptly ask his wife. Questions she feels have no answers and that suggest there is much that they do not know about each other.

Oates describes with glowing precision the warmth and elegance of the couple's home and their social life. But at the same time she conveys their unexamined sense of dissatisfaction — the questions they do not articulate — so that it is shocking but believable when an explosion of violence is touched off.

Much of the novel after that is taken up with the criminal charges that are brought and that lead to a trial — and that have the effect, as with the protagonist in Tom Wolfe's "The Bonfire of the Vanities," of leaving the accused person bereft of previous identity, soul-destroyed.

Oates' achievement in this work is, first, to pull drama and pain so vividly out of a situation that would not seem to leave its inhabitants — successful, intelligent and settled people — so vulnerable. Second, it is to make a reader share with some understanding and pity what is, after all, abstract anguish.

Fred Oates, a former amateur boxer, got his daughter interested in boxing when he took her to Golden Gloves matches in Buffalo in the 1950s. The interest revived when she researched her novel, "You Must Remember This," leading her to a friendship with heavyweight champ Mike Tyson and to ringside commentary at fights. Oates also wrote a book-length essay, "On Boxing," examining the sport not so much as athletics but as drama or dance.

Felix Stevick, a character in "You Must Remember This," is a boxer; Oates' research makes her feel as if she's been in the ring herself.

"I really had to be in that mind that would naturally think like a boxer, so I just imbued myself with it," she said. "It was as if I had a lifetime partly as Felix Stevick."

Filmmaker Martin Scorsese, who memorialized boxer Jake LaMotta in "Raging Bull," has optioned the movie version of "You Must Remember This."

As Rosamond Smith, Oates writes simpler tales of suspense, books that might win her broader appeal.

Historic town inspiration for novel

By MARY G. SALTARELLI

GRANBURY, Texas (AP) — One short visit to historic Granbury inspired the setting of author Nancy Landon's first published novel, "Midnight Blue."

When Landon visited Granbury in 1985, she fell in love with the town's restored Victorian square and colorful heritage.

"Granbury is absolutely gorgeous," Landon said. "When you drive into the square, it takes your breath away."

"Midnight Blue" begins with Granbury's annual July 4th celebration, and Landon was been in Granbury last weekend for autograph parties at the town's two bookstores, Books on the Square and Gary's Books.

Landon's romance novel features two Granbury High School graduates who return home to their growing town. The handsome entrepreneur and lovely preservationist immediately are at odds over the development of a theme park in Granbury.

Ironically, this conflict between historic preservation and modern progress is an ongoing issue in this historic North Texas town established in 1871. Granbury's courthouse square was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1974.

Several years ago, a proposed religious theme park and amphitheater were slated to be built near Granbury. After much local controversy and debate, the amphitheater is now under construction in nearby Glen Rose.

"I was absolutely amazed at how much insight Nancy had into Granbury after visiting here just once," said Dee Gormley, owner of Books on the Square.

Landon, who is from Oklahoma City, said that similarities between her novel and actual happenings in Granbury are strangely coincidental.

"I just considered what kind of people would be in this town in conflict, and it hit me right away that historic preservation is important to the people of Granbury," Landon said. "Someone who threatened that would cause conflict."

Granbury's residents have reacted enthusiastically to the novel, and those who have read it are having fun speculating just who the characters could be and what the different plot conflicts might represent.

Former mayors Howard Clemmons and Enar "Bud" Olson have been teasing each other over who the novel's nasty mayor of Granbury's past could be.

"The mean mayor, that's Bud," Clemmons said.

Landon researched everything from Victorian architecture to the National Trust's historic preservation programs before writing "Midnight Blue." She said she purposely did not get to know any local people before beginning her book.

"I think it's cute that it's causing speculation," she said. "I figured that might happen, but I was very, very, careful not to include real people."

The two bookstores have ordered 1,400 copies of "Midnight Blue." Each store has sold more than 300 copies.

On Sunday, the stores' owners honored Landon at a reception aboard the Granbury Queen Riverboat, and she rode in Granbury's Fourth of July parade.

Landon and her publisher, Harlequin Superromance, are surprised with Granbury's response to her novel.

"This is an author's dream," Landon said. "My publisher is thrilled."

Harlequin officials have been so impressed with Granbury's reaction to "Midnight Blue" that its distributor, Simon and Schuster, discussed the book's marketing success at a recent national sales conference.

A career journalist and public relations professional, Landon has a degree in journalism from the University of Oklahoma. One year after her visit to Granbury, she decided to pursue her longtime dream of writing fiction.

Before she began writing, Landon researched the marketplace and the different genres of fiction. Romance novels seemed like a natural for Landon, who describes herself as "truly a real romantic."

"You have to think of the market when you write," Landon said. "I do not believe in writing to be creative, I believe in writing to market."

And Harlequin statistics show that the market for romance novels is growing. Landon said that most romance readers are women with higher than average educations and income levels.

"Midnight Blue" is actually Landon's third book, but it was the first one to be published. Last year on Flag Day, Harlequin officials contacted Landon about her novel that begins on the Fourth of July.

"The day you sell your first book is like your birthday," she said. "You never forget it."

Landon attributes her success to what she calls the three C's of fiction writing: Fiction courses, writers' conferences and writing contests.

She said that aspiring novelists should set short-term and long-term goals and stick to them. Landon met her first goal when "Midnight Blue" placed in the finals of the 1988 Romance Writers of America Golden Heart contest.

"Make writing a business and put everything you have into it," she said.

Landon recently sold another novel to Harlequin and she is working on a romance set in Jefferson, Texas. And she said she is discussing with her publisher a possible sequel to "Midnight Blue."

"My ultimate goal is to be on the New York Times bestseller list with a mainstream novel," Landon said.

'YOUNG READER' REVIEW

Readers from the third grade on up will be visiting with an old friend when they read "Bill Peet: An Autobiography." While people will readily recognize his picture books, they might not be aware of his long career with the Disney Studios.

All of this and more is covered in this enthusiastic and heart-felt autobiography, written in Peet's picture-book style. He starts with his earliest memories of a traditional Midwestern town and continues through his country boyhood, high school and art school years.

After winning local prizes for his paintings, he was invited to audition for the Disney Studios, where he eventually worked on many films, including "Snow White," "Dumbo," and "Sleeping Beauty." At the same time, he was working at his home studio on reams of picture stories, but he was at a loss for the accompanying words.

The familiar characters from his books and movies are included throughout the book and will encourage readers to finish the lengthy text. The pictures tell their own story and can be appreciated on many age levels. This book is an excellent choice for inspiring young gifted and talented students as well as general readers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Baking or canning is an excellent outlet for pent-up energy. Share the bounty of your kitchen or garden with good friends. A restless mood gradually gives way to contentment. Make that special phone call.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Hop a train or plane if you can and visit a favorite relative. Do not despair if you cannot get away, however. Someone has to keep the home fires burning. Love surrounds you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Making your point with an employer or co-worker is easier than in the recent past. You will feel as good as new soon. Persevere. Never give up on a good idea!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be creative; tackle boring tasks in a more imaginative way. Your enthusiasm and positive attitude will impress those in authority. Show you are ready for more important responsibilities. A promotion is likely.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It is time to take off your rose-colored glasses and reassess a relationship. Do not let love blind you to the truth. You triumph when others least expect it. Shrewd moves boost profits.

Study this hand. Can South guarantee his heart slam regardless of which defender holds the king of clubs, or how the trumps are divided?

LAY THE GROUNDWORK

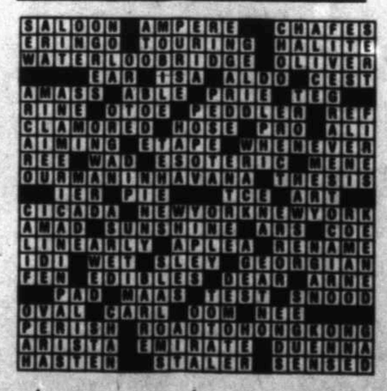

More than 50 years ago Ely Culbertson introduced what he considered his greatest technical achievement, but which was a practical failure—asking bids. Using them, South would be able to find out whether North held the major-suit kings, missing ace and third-round spade control. Without the aid of such elaborate methods, South settled for what we consider to be the eminently practical bid of six hearts.

Declarer won the diamond opening lead, entered dummy with the king of spades and discarded a spade on the king of diamonds. After ruffing a diamond, he crossed to the ace of clubs and led a trump. When East showed out, declarer rose with the ace and exited with a heart to endplay West.

That worthy had a choice of losing options. A spade return would solve declarer's problem in that suit; a diamond would present South suit when declarer leads a trump from the table? There is an even prettier riposte available. Declarer must take the trump finesse, an anti-percentage play. Should West have the king and win the trick, the same endplay operates. If East has the king, the finesse succeeds and declarer can try the spade finesse for an overtrick.

PUZZLE ANSWER

Entertainment complex opens

A multi-purpose entertainment complex recently opened next to WaterWonderland.

Heartland, once the Ranger Camp next to WaterWonderland, has been made into a complex designed specifically as a showcase for local talent.

A stage provides live performances by stand up comics, folk singers, ventriloquists, magicians, pianists and solo performers.

The establishment plays '60s and '70s style music low enough that conversations can be carried on among patrons.

Outside is an old style beer and wine garden with a large covered stage for the noisier groups. The stage outside features bands playing oldies, country, classical and polkas.

In addition, the garden area is available for private parties.

Also a part of the complex's attractions are games such as horseshoes, washers, croquet and volyball outside and dominoes, cribbage, checkers, trivia pursuit and some board games inside.
