Weather causes 'killer frost' talk

BY SPEEDY NIEMAN
Editor-Publisher

Weather is often a prime topic for conversation, but the cold front that dropped temperatures near the freezing mark here Thursday night really had Hereford residents talking about the possible effects of an early "killing freeze."

As it turned out, the temperature got close to the 32-degree mark. Farmers breathed a sigh of relief but it remains to be seen what effect the lower mercury readings had on area crops.

Crops like sorghum, corn and sugarbeets can take temperature variations in the lower 30s without much damage, according to Deaf Smith County Ag Agent Dennis Newton.

"These crops normally have to see temperatures at 32 degrees for about four hours to see any significant damage," said Newton. "Fortunately for us, this did not occur," he said Friday afternoon. "These crops should go ahead and continue to mature and make close to normal yields."

But cotton is different, having a completely different type of maturity pattern. "Cotton is much more temperature sensitive and fluctuations can cause damage in a number of ways," reported Newton.

"Cotton needs to mature for the fiber to be of high quality, and temperatures as low as 45 degrees can cause the plant to stop maturing," added the extension agent. "Hopefully, we can warm up for several days and the plant can mature some more."

This area could have been lucky, according to Dr. Kater Hake, cotton specialist for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Lubbock, who agreed with Newton's assessment of the potential damage.

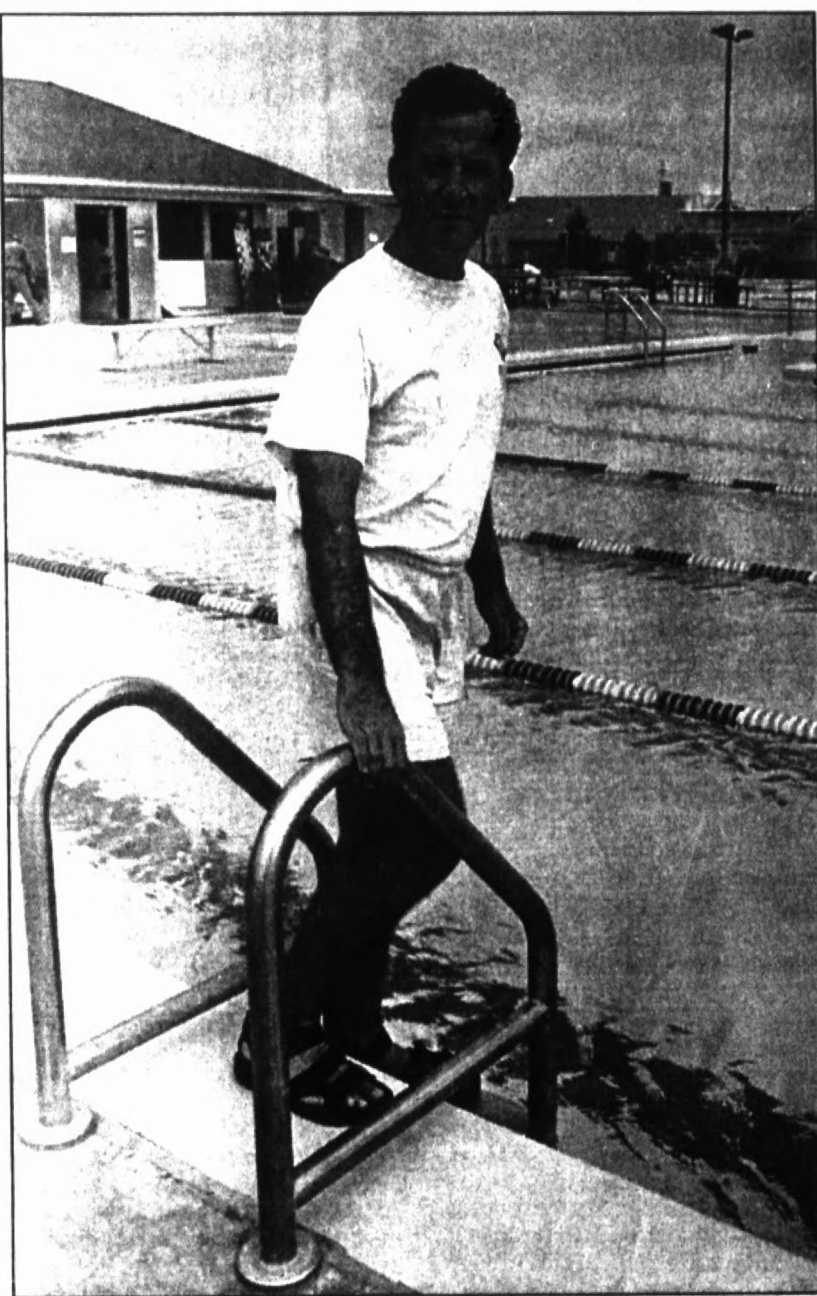

He says the 36-degree weather reported here may not have been enough to damage the crops severely. "If the temperature had dropped below 32 degrees, there would be no chance of dry weight transfer. Therefore, bolls close to maturity would die."

Dr. Hake said the cold blast is expected to cause the leaves of the cotton plant to turn purple within three or four days, but the plants will gain some additional growth with warm weather.

"Of course, the Panhandle is looking at only about seven more days of maturing time for cotton," said Dr. Hake. "What was not near maturity will not make it, or greatly reduce the yield."

Newton pointed out that some

Splish Splash Kilanowski ready to dive into swim class

By GEORGIA TYLER
Staff Writer

For Danny Kilanowski, the goal is very simple: establish a swim program for Hereford.

And, next on his agenda is a desire to bring a better understanding of a sport that claims more worldwide interest than any other, soccer.

If the name Kilanowski sounds familiar, it should. Danny's wife is Sandra Kilanowski who joined the City of Hereford several months ago as manager of the Hereford Aquatic Center.

While he finished a commitment in Lubbock, she commuted between the South Plains city and Hereford. Now, he is working on contract with the city in a swimming instructional program at HAC and they have moved here with their three-year-old son, Daniel.

The experience here is not the first for the husband-wife team. And, they've found that they work together "unusually" well, said Kilanowski.

"It's more like friends... we have our own thing to do," he said.

Kilanowski has his hands full with a school swimming instructional program, currently teaching Hereford

High School freshmen and sophomores. Junior high classes are taught by another instructor, Shawn Gonzales.

Sometime later, he hopes swim classes will spread into elementary schools but in the meantime, he is enjoying the "opportunity to develop a swim program."

But, now about his first love... soccer. Kilanowski brings with him a deep-seated interest in the game, undoubtedly from his background in his native England. But, he doesn't limit his sports interest to soccer and swimming.

"I'm a big Dallas Cowboy fan," he admitted. "I don't know as much as some do, but I enjoy the sport."

Because of his eclectic sports interests, Kilanowski believes youth should be given the chance to find their own niche for participation.

Young men and women who don't enjoy the traditional high school sports of football, basketball, baseball, volleyball, tennis and track may find they are better suited to swimming, possibly because of body size or temperament.

As the classes progress, he expects

HISD trustees set meeting Tuesday

The Hereford ISD board of trustees will hold its regular September board meeting -- the last single monthly meeting before going to a dual-meeting format in October -- on Tuesday in the HISD administration building.

The regular session will be preceded by a 5 p.m. special meeting.

At the special meeting, there will be a public hearing regarding Hereford High School, which has been designated as a low-performing campus because of TAAS math scores, dropout rate and absenteeism.

In addition, at the special meeting trustees will consider the high school Campus Improvement Plan.

The Texas Education Agency requires campuses designated as low-performing present a revised campus plan to the board to address shortcomings at the school.

The special meeting will be held in the board room.

The regular board meeting will start at 6 p.m.

Trustees will face a wide variety of items at the session, including a 10-item action agenda, a two-item discussion agenda and a one-item information agenda.

Among the action items is a proposed settlement in a lawsuit filed

Dome of the pool

Workers on Friday installed the inflatable bubble over the main pool at the Hereford Aquatic Center, preparing the year-round pool for winter use. A door was cut in the side of the bubble to allow access to the outdoor pool until it closes at a later date.

Shown above is Danny Kilanowski, who has been hired to teach swimming at the center. He will work in a Hereford ISD program that allows junior high and high school students to take swimming classes at the center.

Hereford man turns eye to old jeans

By SHELLY SCHILLING
Staff Writer

Remember those old clothes and antiques of your parents or grandparents that you threw out because you thought they were junk?

Well, they may be worth more than you think.

Hereford resident, Eldon Fortenberry, may have a good idea how much they could have brought.

Fortenberry has been buying and selling old Levis 501s -- mainly vintage -- for about two years.

"I became interested in buying and selling 501s nearly by accident," he said. "A little over two years ago."

Fortenberry had been a garage sale and antique store customer for several years buying supplies and antiques to renovate rental property.

While in an antique store, he noticed a sign that said "buying old 501s."

His interest was piqued and he asked the store owner how valuable the 501s were. He then decided that he had been shopping in the same places that many of the jeans are found.

He still goes to estate sales, garage sales and flea markets in search of the type of jeans that he wore in school and at stock shows in Lockney, Tx. where he was reared.

Some of Fortenberry's jeans have been purchased by French, Italian and Japanese buyers.

"I think the reason Europeans and Japanese buy the jeans is ego," he said. "It is a visible way in which to show value. Some buy to collect, some buy to wear."

Of course, not all 501s are valuable.

Newer jeans are not valuable compared to the so-called vintage jeans.

Vintage are jeans made from the 1930s to mid 1960s.

From the 1960s to today the jeans are very similar and less costly.

Fortenberry said that there have been about six eras of change in stitching, labels and material over the past 60 years.

Jeans that have a red line running through the selvage indicate older jeans. New jeans have a white zig zag in the selvage.

A big E on the red rear pocket "LEVIS" label have more value as do those that have a double "X" or that have rivets exposed in back over the pockets are also more valuable.

He said all eras deal with time and value.

No matter from what era or year they came, or what type of stitching they have, the jeans must be in good condition.

"Trashed-out jeans are used only to salvage the small red tab from the right pocket or the leather-like size patch," Fortenberry said.

Some buyers have been known to purchase only the patch from colored or scrappy blues.

Some are sold to work clothes stores who may rebuild and redye them for sale.

In addition to the jeans, Fortenberry buys and sells jackets.

Levis jackets with the least amount of pockets are more valuable than those with two or more.

"A jacket with no more than one pocket is usually vintage," he said. "That means it was probably made in the late 30s or 40s."

Fortenberry also said old jackets with "union made" labels and made of old indigo are fairly valuable.

"Every day has something new to be learned, making this project very interesting," he said.

Once at a garage sale he came across 20 pairs of good, clean jeans and made a good profit on them.

"I had to go back and give that lady an extra $60," he said. "I felt like I owed it to her because she really didn't know what she had, and she had a better garage sale that way."

He admits that he has made some purchasing mistakes and has learned the hard way on several occasions but as long as the market is good he will continue to buy and sell the Levis.

"Oh, well, nothing ventured - nothing gained," he said.

Birds may have brought down plane that crashed in Alaska

ELMENDORF AIR FORCE BASE, Alaska (AP) - A flock of Canada geese may have been sucked into an engine of a huge AWACS radar plane that crashed in a fireball moments after takeoff, killing all 24 crew members on board.

The remains of a dozen geese were found at the end of the runway after Friday's crash, and a source who spoke the condition of anonymity said they were likely the cause.

Birds being sucked into an engine would produce symptoms crash witnesses described - flames, and laboring and stalling sounds, the source said.

The Air Force would not speculate on a cause, and said a board of officers would investigate.

Witnesses said that as the huge plane roared down the runway, one of its four engines caught fire. And though it managed to get off the ground, it could not get enough power and plunged into a grove of trees two miles away.

"Just as he got wheels up, the front left engine started popping and I could see fire shooting out the end," Clay Wallace, an Army National Guard captain who was at the base, told radio station KENI.

"I said, 'Where the hell did he go?' and all of a sudden down he went in a huge fireball."

The bodies of 22 crew members were found.

The big "E"

A big E on the red rear pocket of the "LEVIS" label gives the jeans more value, according to Eldon Fortenberry, Hereford resident. Fortenberry has been buying and selling LEVIS jeans for over two years. When he is buying jeans he looks for vintage, or those jeans made in the early 1930s through the 1960s. Most of his jeans are sold overseas to the Japanese and Italians.

KILANOWSKI

to pinpoint youth who may be interested in becoming members of a swim team. His hope is there will be students willing to spend the time to swim competitively.

Talking about competitive swimming, Kilanowski observed that students "don't need size" but a "body style."

"I've seen some students who may fit very well, some with long arms and long legs," he added.

During the introductory swim classes, the emphasis is on basic skills, safety and aquatic games, he explained about the lessons.

In the freshman and sophomore classes, Kilanowski said about 75 percent of the students have some basic swim skills. The remainder are learning.

He believes that the HAC program has "something for everyone," whatever the age. Kilanowski is full of admiration for the swim complex that opened the first of August.

"There has been some very progressive leadership... people who want to see things happen," he declared.

Kilanowski came with his wife to the United States in the early 1980s, arriving in Dallas, then went to Lubbock where she had family.

"There was a recession in England and we came to the states," he said. They went to Alaska in 1986 and came back to Texas in 1994.

He studied at Loughborough University in Lancashire in England and finished work toward a degree in physical education at the University of Alaska in Anchorage.

WEATHER

people believe that cotton opens after the plant is killed by a freeze or by defoliation. The truth is that the cotton boll opening is a living process.

"The plant must be alive for this process to be at its maximum. When the temperature gets to 45 degrees, the plant shifts gears and--very simply put--says, 'I had better quit putting on bolls and try to open those that I already have.'" in 1993.

His career has been devoted almost entirely to teaching and coaching sports, especially swimming and soccer. Kilanowski recognizes that children and youth have varying interests in sport.

"We need to be concerned about the needs of kids... not our needs as coaches," he declared. He is convinced that sports can be of major importance in lives today.

"This is a sports-minded nation," he reminded. "There is a lot of stress in people's lives, too, and they need something to alleviate that stress. Sports can help."

Kilanowski fears, also, that children and youth are becoming more and more sedentary, becoming "couch potatoes."

Teaching the swim classes for Hereford High School has been successful, so far, he said, because of the cooperation between the school district and the city.

"Teachers come with the students and so they know what we're doing all the time," Kilanowski explained.

During swim classes, the pool manager, Sandra Kilanowski, said she stations a lifeguard on the deck to assist the instructor, if needed. Other programs offered by HAC, such as water aerobics and lap swimming are staffed with guards, as well.

Since opening of the center, response to programming has been satisfying, said the manager, and some has been outstanding.

The water aerobics class schedule has been expanded to three periods on five days a week because of heavy demand.

With installation of the wintertime bubble top on the year-round pool, open swim and family swim times are expected to grow in numbers.

Sandra Kilanowski and Robin Watts are the only fulltime HAC employees although there are nine others who are temporary and parttime workers.

BOARD

against the district by Hereford resident Trini Gamez.

Last month, trustees were asked to approve a realignment of the district that would eliminate the current five-district, two-at-large system in favor of one with seven single-member trustee districts.

That matter was tabled while details of the proposed settlement were worked out.

Also Tuesday, trustees will consider career and technology bids, vehicle bids, a staff development grant for Bluebonnet Intermediate School and a request for use of school gymnasiums.

Trustees will also formally adopt a policy change to a two-meeting format. Under the new format, they will meet on the second Monday of each month on a campus to hear information items and conduct the discussion agenda.

The discussion agenda for Tuesday's session contains talk about a proposed tennis facility and a proposed audio/PA system.

sion, says Newton, is short term and will not provide much help to that cotton that is still extremely immature.

Newton said there is still hope that the cotton will make it. "It's like I heard one farmer say, 'I'd much rather harvest one-half bale to the acre of open cotton than to harvest enough unopened bolls that would have made two bales some day.'"

The official report showed 2.06 inches of rain since last Friday. The measurements varied from farmer to farmer, ranging from 1.5 to 5 inches.

Roberts blasts cotton-state Republicans

WASHINGTON (AP) - Facing gridlock in the House Agriculture Committee he chairs, Rep. Pat Roberts complained publicly about the four cotton-state Republicans who voted against his proposed overhaul of farm programs.

"We will not let narrow, special-interest groups stand in the way of reforms in U.S. agricultural policy, nor derail our historic efforts to balance the federal budget," Roberts, R-Kan., said in a statement Friday.

The harsh rhetoric was aimed at isolating the four by linking them to a single interest, the cotton lobby, and putting them outside the fold of reform-minded Republicans. He said his proposal was supported "by an overwhelming majority of the Agriculture Committee."

Roberts needs to win over just two of the four dissident Republicans - Reps. Richard Baker of Louisiana, Saxby Chambliss of Georgia, Larry Combest of Texas and Bill Emerson of Missouri - if his measure is to clear the committee and be part of the Republican effort to balance the budget.

None of the four Republicans could be reached immediately for comment.

Jesse James WAS in the grave; but buried face down

By THOMAS S. WATSON
Associated Press Writer
LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) - A forensic scientist had an answer for one historic puzzle about 19th century outlaw Jesse James on Friday, but also raised a new question.

Preliminary results from DNA tests revealed that remains exhumed from the grave of the infamous Missourian are most likely his, said James Starrs of George Washington University.

But Starrs also told a conference Friday that a study of bone fragments showed James was buried face down when his grave was moved in 1902.

Why?
"There's a mystery you can sink your teeth into," Starrs said at the James-Younger Gang 1995 Kentucky Roots Conference.

In July, Starrs led an exhumation of the remains in Kearney, Mo. to resolve lingering doubts about whether James' body had ever really been buried there.

A Texan claiming to be the great-grandson of the outlaw had contended that James had staged his death as a hoax, lived under aliases and finally died in 1951 in Granbury, Texas, at the age of 107. Jesse Franklin James of Leander, Texas, had claimed that the remains that were exhumed belonged to Charlie Bigelow, a James gang member.

But, Starrs said Friday that just about everything historians had initially believed about James was confirmed by preliminary results from the DNA tests.

That included genetic proof that the James family line extended from the outlaw's mother, Zerelda James, to living descendants who gave their blood for analysis.

James and other members of his robber band held up banks and trains from 1866 until around 1880. He was shot and killed by Robert Ford, a new member of the gang who turned traitor, at St. Joseph, Mo. on April 3, 1882.

"We've been very fortunate in light of the degraded condition of the remains," Starrs said.

A complete report on the study will be unveiled Feb. 23 in Nashville at a meeting of the American Academy of Forensic Sciences.

Starrs findings also showed that James:

-Was 5-foot-8 to 5-foot-10 inches tall.

-Was buried in a pine box with ash handles, not in a metal coffin as reported by newspapers in 1882.

-Had two bullet wounds - one on the lower right side of the back of his head and another in the area of the right ribs.

After he was killed, James was initially buried in the front yard of his mother's home. When the body was later moved to a cemetery, some skull fragments, a tooth and toe bone were supposed to have been placed in a container and reburied in the original grave.

Starrs and his team obtained the container but it was empty. He speculated that someone kept them for souvenirs or thought they were valuable.

Starrs said plans to make a clay image of James' face from his rebuilt skull will be hampered if the missing pieces aren't found, but it can still be done. He said the skull has already been reconstructed down to the bridge of the nose.

A piece of skull bone showed traces of lead, Starrs said. Still to be determined is whether it came from a second bullet to the back of James' head or if it was left by the saw blade of a coroner.

By The Associated Press

Among findings from the exhumation of Jesse James, according to forensic scientist James Starrs of George Washington University:

-His coffin had a viewing glass and silver-plated mountings.

-There was a name plate that said "At Rest."

-There was cotton fabric in the grave in a herringbone weave.

-A tie tack, 5mm by 5mm and made of volcanic glass was found in the grave.

-There was a .36-caliber Colt Navy pistol bullet in the area of high right ribs.

-Fine gold fillings from his teeth. They will be reburied.

-He was 30 to 40 years old, based on examination of his teeth.

-James probably chewed a low-grade of tobacco.

-His teeth were badly corroded.

-A laceration on his forehead likely occurred when he fell after being shot.

Chess championships hit record eighth draw

NEW YORK (AP) - The eighth game of the Professional Chess Association world championship ended Friday in a draw between Viswanathan Anand and titleholder Garry Kasparov.

The game set a record for number of consecutive draws at the beginning of a championship match.

After eight games, the score in the 20-game series is tied at 4.

"It's not the one record I wanted to break," Anand told reporters after the game.

Showing sensitivity to outsiders who may be bored by the record-breaking series of draws, Anand referred to a segment on Thursday's "The Tonight Show With Jay Leno," where actors mimicking the players were covered in cobwebs.

"It was very funny, but it's a perception I expected to have," Anand said.

"There's a lot going on," he said of the complicated chess battles. "But it isn't always easy to convince."

The record-breaking match came in the most exciting game of the match.

In a Scotch opening, Anand, playing black, unleashed a spectacular ninth move when he pushed his "g" pawn forward two squares. The "g" pawn starts the game in front of the knight on the right side of the board. It is rarely moved so early in championship chess.

"This is a really shocking new move, it looks absolutely outrageous," British Grandmaster Danny King told spectators.

In a weird and complex sequence, Anand won a rook in the corner in exchange for a bishop and two pawns.

Kasparov thought for 42 minutes before playing his 17th move in an effort to keep control of the position.

Argentinian Grandmaster Miguel Najdorf said Anand had the better position but didn't know if it was enough for the challenger to prevail.

"Black is a little better, but I'm not sure it's enough," Najdorf said.

With his 18th move, Kasparov forced Anand to trade off a dangerous bishop and the challenger offered a draw four moves later.

"If the position is a draw, what can you do," Anand said.

The previous record for consecutive draws was set in 1978 when former world champion Anatoly Karpov and challenger Viktor Korchnoi drew their first seven games before Karpov won the eighth and went on to win the match.

The ninth game in the contest is scheduled for Monday, with Anand playing with the advantage of white.

Simpson speaks mind as both sides brings cases to a close

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Just as he did on the football field, O.J. Simpson had a glimmer of daylight and made the most of it.

Instead of merely stating his decision not to testify, he stood and launched into a dramatic plea of innocence, hammered home with the words: "I did not, could not and would not have committed this crime."

And though it came outside the jury's presence before both sides rested Friday, enraged prosecutors and the father of one victim had little doubt it would reach sequestered panelists during this weekend's conjugal visits.

"Are we nuts? Do we really believe that these people are sequestered to the point where they don't know what's going on in the outside world?" asked Fred Goldman, whose son Ron was slashed to death along with Nicole Brown

Simpson 15 months ago.

"This was part of the normal orchestrated defense," Goldman said, "throwing garbage out there on a regular basis to influence this jury above and beyond testimony."

Even before Simpson spoke, prosecutor Marcia Clark suggested the defense was trying to manipulate public opinion.

That feller on Tierra Blanca Creek says we are born with our eyes shut and our mouth open and spend the rest of our lives trying to correct nature's mistakes.

"I didn't speak to my wife all weekend," said a farmer at the coffee shop. "Why not," asked one of the guys.

"I didn't want to interrupt her!"

Other people's mistakes are always more amusing, but folks in the newspaper business know that every time a key is touched, there is a possibility for error.

Even with the new-fangled computers, "SpellCheck" does not guarantee against errors. Nor do correctly-spelled words always wind up in the right place. A headline in an area paper, concerning financial woes at the senior citizen center, stated: "Senior Citizens need money for operations."

A newspaper trade journal recently ran a collection of some goofs:

--The governor, making one of her bare public appearances, presented trophies to the policeman.

--Judge D.H. Milton administered the oaths of office.

--Men's Activity Night begins march in the Women's Gym.

--The church will form a Mothers' Club. All ladies who would like to be a mother are asked to get with the minister.

--A lot of people look like Abraham Lincoln and make a living impersonating him.

--She will attempt Indiana University in the fall.

--The Nashville man said churches are dominated by a "bunch of old hens." He explained he was speaking of lay members.

--There's nothing like sitting down with a good book in your hand, your faithful dog in your mouth and your pipe at your feet.

--Dr. Gilbert Murry, who has been married 66 years, will speak tonight on The Unfinished Battle.

--Statistics show that 9 out of 10 county residents are painfully employed.

--Her most recent book, "Star Money," is expected to out-smell her first two efforts.

--She is a junior at the University of Maine where she is working on a bachelor.

A reader brought us a humorous story, warning that we might not want to use it because some folks might think it was sacrilegious. However, we think it's just a commentary on the times. Here it is:

A preacher was holding a tent revival and doing a wondrous job with divine healing. He called up three men from the audience. One was blind; one was deaf, and the other was on crutches.

The preacher laid his hand on the eyes of the blind man and announced, "If you believe, if you really believe, you will see."

Suddenly, the man looked around and shouted, "I can see, I can see!"

The evangelist turned to the second man and told him in sign language, "If you believe, really believe, you will hear." The preacher then placed his hands over the man's ears.

Suddenly, the man's face lit up and he exclaimed to the audience, "I can hear, I can hear!"

The preacher then turned to the third man on crutches, but the man backed off. Throwing up his hands, the man protested, "Not me, not me, I'm on worker's comp!"

There is another tale making the rounds about a fellow who found himself facing St. Peter at the Pearly Gates.

"You don't get into heaven anymore just by being good," said St. Peter. "You have to have done something truly great. Have you done anything that you can say is truly great in your life?"

The man thought for a minute and replied, "I saw a group of Hell's Angels harassing an old lady. I kicked over the leader's bike, slapped him and spit in his face."

"That's great," St. Peter said, "When did you do that?"

"About three minutes ago," the man answered.

Cockleburrs and Devil's Claws

By Georgia Tyler

Some older citizens -- those who have three score and ten, or more, under their belts -- have a knack for remembering their early years, to the amusement of family and friends.

Then there are some, like my grandmother, who chose to talk about the future instead of the past. When she died at 100 years and nine months, I couldn't remember a time when she wanted to regale us with stories of the past.

Much of what I knew about her childhood came from one of her brothers, who had a memory sharp as the proverbial tack until just a few years ago. He loved to tell tales about the family's move from Somervell County to the Panhandle.

Much as I would like, for the romance of the story, I can't say they traveled by covered wagon.

It's hard to imagine, but they traveled on an "emigrant train," so called because the emigrants loaded all their belongings on a rail car for the trip.

In those days -- we're talking about the pre-1910 era -- the principal train stop for most of the northern Panhandle was Channing. When the train arrived there from Fort Worth, boxcars were uncoupled so the travelers could unload their belongings.

Besides human beings, the rail cars moved livestock, farm equipment and furniture. When they unloaded at Channing, they loaded the wagons and drove to the homestead, about 15 miles east of Channing.

All this history came to me from my uncle who prided himself on being one of the early settlers in the area, even though he was hardly a teenager at the time.

The men -- father and sons -- of the family were the vanguard of the migration. They rode in the boxcar (don't you know that was wonderful, with the horses, cows and sheep?) so they could get the homestead semi-settled before the mother and daughters arrived.

Once, at an old settlers' reunion, I heard by grandmother and her brother arguing about their longevity in the county. At stake was a tiny trophy.

She insisted that they had lived in the county the same length of time.

He argued against her and clinched the trophy when he said, "Don't you remember? Papa and the boys came here a week before Mama and you girls came."

Thus endeth the argument, although she was none too happy about it.

There was something about touching the past through them that always gave me a tingly feeling.

The man that became my grandmother's husband (my grandfather, obviously) was only a year behind in his arrival in the Panhandle, but he came horseback, I guess, though no one ever told me so.

Since he was a bachelor, he looked for a boardinghouse, but being 15 miles from any town, there wasn't one. He arranged for meals with his nearest neighbor, who just happened to be my grandmother's family.

How and when the romance began I never learned because neither of them ever talked much about it. That it was truly a love match was never doubted.

When he proposed to her, he gave her an engagement ring that he ordered from Fort Worth. He wrote his sister to pick out a diamond ring and send it to him because he lived too far from a jewelry store. She wore that diamond the rest of her life. As a legacy from them, I wear it now.

My grandfather was a gruff cattleman who could swear louder and longer than any sailor. She was a quiet-spoken woman who never uttered a bad word about or to anyone. He went to church for funerals. She attended Sunday after Sunday.

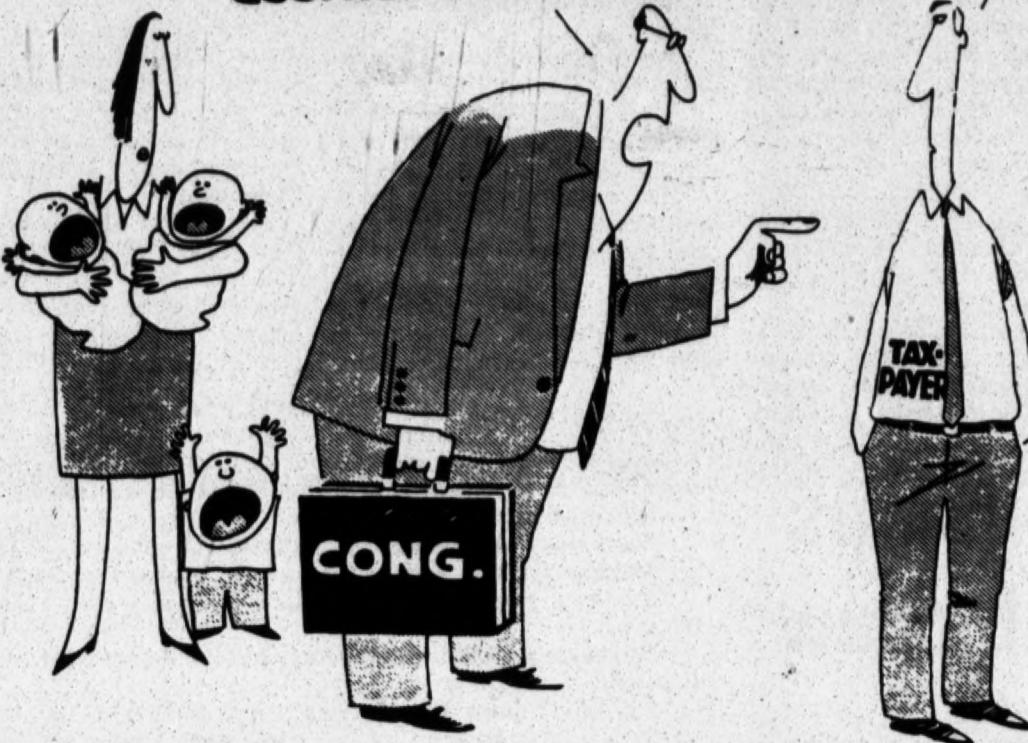

He didn't care whether his clothes matched or not, as long as they were clean. (He was just as apt to wear a suit coat and vest with a pair of khaki trousers as he was to wear the whole suit. But he was never without a tie.) She loved pretty clothes and wore them at every opportunity. Their common love was their family.

Before he died, he recognized what a gem he'd married. He asked his attorney to prepare a deed to place a piece of land in her name, saying, "Anyone who'd put up with me for more than 50 years ought to have something in her own name."

Thinking about Brother Buck Hatfield

Out of the Blue

By Garry Wesner

I got to thinking last Sunday at church about Brother Buck Hatfield. Now I'm sure very few of you know Brother Hatfield, but he sure was a character.

He lived in Snyder, where he pastored an independent Baptist Church.

My encounters with Brother Hatfield were in Lubbock, when he would come to town to preach during the annual Sunday School membership campaign.

Our campaigns were "Hatfield and McCoy" campaigns, in which each Sunday School class was designated as one side of the feud. The classes competed to see which one brought in the most new members.

Finally, as the campaign ended, Brother Hatfield -- a "real" Hatfield, we always said -- would come to church to preach the last Sunday.

He'd preach awhile then we'd all go in to Fellowship Hall for a potluck lunch to celebrate the completion of the campaign.

Brother Hatfield went home to Heaven recently after a lengthy battle with cancer.

I heard he battled valiantly, but finally reached the point when his body gave out and he left this world behind.

In the front of my Bible are autographs from many of the preachers and missionaries I've had the privilege to hear over the years. Each one contains "their" Bible verse, something unique to that man and special to him.

Brother Hatfield, when he signed my Bible, included Psalm 126: 5-6.

I looked it up at church last week and marveled once again at how appropriate that verse was: "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

Brother Hatfield, I know, is rejoicing today.

For having known him, I rejoice as well.

I had not heard of the tradition of having preachers and missionaries autograph Bibles until I moved to Lubbock in 1986 and saw others approaching visiting speakers to get their autographs.

For me, having the signature of a pastor or missionary makes that man come to life in my Bible. I remember something about that person because of his name and get special inspiration from their favorite verses.

Let me introduce you to a few of them:

-- Dr. Jack Hyles. Dr. Hyles pastors First Baptist Church of Hammond, Ind., which has 30,000 members.

He is the most powerful preacher I have ever heard.

I collected his signature and verse (Daniel 12:3) in Tucumcari, N.M., where a group of us went to hear him speak to a pastor's conference.

Never has a 90-minute sermon gone by so fast, nor so many preachers prostrated themselves at the altar to pray for themselves and their churches afterwards.

-- Tommy Ashcraft, missionary to Monterrey, Mexico.

Outside Dr. Hyles, Tommy is, I believe, the greatest preacher alive today.

His was one of the first I collected. Tommy pulls no punches, tells the truth and makes no compromises on the Bible's truth. But he does it in love.

He pastors a church of more than 1,000 members and operates a Bible training institute that has graduates pastoring churches literally all over Mexico.

His verse: "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work." John 9:4.

I'm proud to have heard him preach and proud to call him my brother-in-law.

-- Glenn Border, pastor, Faith Baptist Church, Lubbock.

Clinton pounces on social issues

By TERENCE HUNT

AP White House Correspondent WASHINGTON (AP) - Rap music, Racy movies. Now ads for jeans. They are all symbols of the cultural wars buffeting presidential politics, underscoring the growing importance of social issues in the contest for the White House.

President Clinton fired the latest shot, denouncing Calvin Klein advertisements that show young people in strikingly suggestive poses.

"Outrageous," said Clinton, the father of a teen-age daughter. "It was wrong to manipulate those children and use them for commercial benefit."

Already criticized as kiddie porn and withdrawn under pressure by Klein, the ads were ripe for political attack.

Clinton pounced after reading an advance copy of a newspaper column written by his wife, Hillary, condemning the Klein ads as disturbing exploitation.

The first lady took her attack well beyond the Klein ads. She encouraged Americans to "stay away from the theaters and turn off our (television) sets because we are so offended by the gratuitous violence, sexual degradation and bad taste we are subjected to on the screen."

The criticism from the White House was just the latest volley by a politician in the name of family values.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, made headlines by attacking Hollywood for sex and violence in music and movies.

For Clinton, the emphasis on family values is yet another move toward the political center. On school prayer, a favorite Republican issue, Clinton asserted that the First Amendment "does not convert our schools into religion-free zones."

Under GOP pressure, Clinton proposed a balanced-budget plan that was scorned by many Democrats. And to the dismay of liberals, he embraced a Senate welfare reform plan that would abolish the longstanding federal guarantee of aid for every poor family that is eligible.

All of this comes as one of Clinton's pollsters, Stanley Greenberg, warns that the president is "fundamentally mispositioned for 1996" among working class, non-college educated white voters.

They are also extremely anxious about a decline in values, and some question Clinton's authority to deal with the issue, given questions about his personal life.

"The national character deficit is more important than any budget deficit or all the problems being talked about in Washington," former education secretary William Bennett said last week. "My only worry is that it becomes a fad, the flavor of the month. We did granola. We did jogging. Now we're doing virtue."

"This ain't some passing fancy," he said. "This is important stuff."

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

Los Ciboleros Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, appreciates all in Hereford who participated Sept. 17-23 in the annual commemoration of the signing of the United States Constitution.

It is hoped that this observance will remind future generations of the importance of Constitutional government. Governments do not preserve themselves. The responsibility rests upon each of us as citizens to perpetuate those institutions of this great nation which protect our lives, our liberty and our property.

Ruth Newsom, Chairman, Constitution Week, Los Ciboleros, DAR

Dear Editor:

Thank you for taking time to read these Letters to the Editor written by our eighth-grade Creative Communications class. Our Nazarene Christian Academy students are learning to form and express opinions.

Priscilla Power (Letters follow):

Dear Editor:

I am a teenager and I am writing to express my opinions on teenage smoking. I am so happy to hear the President is making it harder for teens to purchase cigarettes. I don't think that cigarettes should even be manufactured.

I feel sorry for the people who smoke because many end up with diseases like lung cancer. Smokers stink, ruin their teeth and gums, and pollute the air around them. God didn't give us our bodies to destroy them with smoke, alcohol or drugs.

One of the worst things about it is that even pregnant women are smoking and their babies are suffering for it. I think smoking is disgusting and should not be permitted.

Jessica Mendoza

Dear Editor:

Recently the City of Hereford decided to make a law that people must keep their cats inside the house, in a cage, staked, or be with their cat and keep it on a leash while outside. If the cat is reported to animal control officers as roaming around the neighborhood, traps will be set to catch it.

The cat will then be taken to the pound, kept for three days and, if not claimed, put to sleep. My opinion of this is that it is animal abuse. Cats are made for roaming. It is their nature to roam around. It would not be sensible to go against God's law.

Derrick Adams

Dear Editor:

I would like to express my opinion. Recently, Mrs. Clinton went to China to speak on women's rights. While there, she mentioned how horrible it was to kill a baby just because she was a girl.

I was outraged when I heard about this! Why would anyone in their right mind go and speak on such a delicate subject such as that when they believe in abortion? Yes, I think it's great that she is standing up for the right of little girls, but she sounds double-minded to me. I think this little paragraph gives everyone something to think about.

Sally Cochran

Dear Editor:

We would like to thank all the merchants in Hereford who helped sponsor the 5th annual Fiesta of Castro County. You helped make it possible!

Journalist, admiral formulate reporting rules of war

By STEVE BAKER
Associated Press Writer
NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) - Correspondents reporting on the next war should eat, sleep and drink with the troops they're covering, says a new study on how the news media and military can improve their often frosty relations.

The study, cowritten by a veteran journalist and retired vice admiral, offers 13 recommendations on bringing some order to the chaos of reporting from battle, including:

- A tier system of coverage, giving the military and the news media an ordered list of which reporters will accompany invasion forces and which will follow later.

- A policy of "security at the source." Reporters attached to military units would be trusted not to report battle plans or positions that put the entire unit, including themselves, at risk.

"If they've been standing shoulder-to-shoulder with troops, reporters will know better than to pick up a phone and call in our invasion plans," said retired Vice Adm. William P. Lawrence.

He and Frank Aukofer, Washington bureau chief for the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel, spent nine months surveying 2,000 military officers and 350 journalists for the 180-page report. It was released Friday at the National Conference of Editorial Writers convention in San Antonio.

"America's Team: The Odd Couple" found some problems too thorny and said they should be left to an Office of Military Media Relations, which the authors said should be set up by The Freedom Forum, the McCormick Tribune Foundation, the Knight Foundation and similar private groups.

"One of the biggest concerns in the military is what they call real-time reporting from the battlefield," said Aukofer, an original member of the Pentagon's press pool set up in 1984.

"Sometime in the future a guy with a knapsack, a (satellite) dish and a tiny camera is going to do his own stand up while the battle goes on in the desert behind him."

The report concludes that censorship of reporters in the field is a thing of the past. Technology has reduced the control commanders once had over the news media, Lawrence said.

"If we put reporters with units and brief them on the mission, we feel they can be trusted," Lawrence said. "They won't show planes taking off with paratroopers."

The Freedom Forum First Amendment Center at Vanderbilt University paid for the project.

John Seigenthaler, chairman of the center and publisher emeritus of The Tennessean, said some of the recommendations are common sense, others are visionary.

"Their recommendation that in the next war there should be no effort at censorship by the military will upset many in the military," he said.

"Their suggestion that there may be some rare occasion when national security requires an exception to their 'no censorship' rule will upset many in the media."

Among the questions Lawrence and Aukofer asked the journalists and officers dealt with CNN's broadcasts from Baghdad during the Persian Gulf War and how such reports should be handled in the future.

Seventy-eight percent of the military officers responding said such reporting should be allowed providing the reporters note the broadcast was censored by the enemy. Eighty-five percent of the journalists agreed with that approach.

Another question asked whether military leaders should be allowed to use the news media to deceive the enemy and thereby the American public. Sixty percent of the military respondents said yes, while only eight percent of journalists thought that was appropriate.

By The Associated Press

Highlights from recommendations in "America's Team: The Odd Couple," a report on improving relations between the military and news media:

- The Department of Defense should consider adopting the "security at the source" policy. Informally in effect in many ways, this policy would eliminate virtually all censorship. Reporters assigned to military units would be briefed about the operations and be trusted not to divulge sensitive material, such as positions and battle plans.

- Reporters should recognize there may be extraordinary circumstances in which civilian or military defense leaders would exercise some temporary censorship to keep the enemy from learning plans or to save lives.

- Because of rapid advances in communications technology, news media and military leaders should jointly study the security issues posed by real-time reporting from the battlefield.

- The news media and the military should jointly establish an Independent Coverage Tier System, built on the concept of the Department of Defense National Media Pool now in use. The tier system is a list by which reporters would be included in war coverage.

- Foundations, including but not limited to such news-oriented organizations as The Freedom Forum, the McCormick Tribune Foundation and the Knight Foundation, should jointly establish an Office of Military Media Relations.

- News organizations must make a better effort to cover military affairs, beginning at the local level with coverage of National Guard, Reserve and ROTC units.

Ex-pathologist Erdmann sentenced in gun matter

SEATTLE (AP) - Former Texas pathologist Ralph Erdmann, who moved here after pleading no contest in 1992 to felony charges of falsifying autopsies, was sentenced Friday to a year in jail for possessing a machine gun.

With credit for the five months he's already spent behind bars and time off for good behavior, the 69-year-old Erdmann could complete his sentence in three months.

King County Superior Court Judge Patricia Aitken said he would then be returned to Texas, where he faces additional punishment for violating parole by possessing firearms. Also, a grand jury in Amarillo, Texas, has indicted him on three counts of tampering with evidence during the 1992 capital murder trial of Johnny Lee Rey.

Erdmann was convicted last month of one count of possession of a machine gun. He was arrested in May after a cache of guns - including a fully automatic M-16 assault rifle - were seized in a raid at his suburban home in Redmond and at a Kirkland storage facility.

"What really hurts is that I have a family ... and they need me," a tearful Erdmann said before his sentencing.

Under Washington state law regarding felony convictions, Erdmann will no longer be able to possess firearms.

Aitken said she would write a letter to Texas authorities suggesting that Erdmann's time in the King County Jail be taken into consideration if he should be imprisoned for parole violations or the indictments in his home state.

Erdmann's defense team had suggested he be sentenced to only four months, pointing out his 30 years of military service and the fact that he had moved here after learning that his wife had cancer.

During closing arguments last month, defense attorney Steven Witchley argued that Erdmann had forgotten the machine gun was in Washington state and questioned the prosecution's case on whether the weapon was a machine gun under state law.

But Friday, Aitken said Erdmann clearly knew he had broken the law and violated his probation when he entered Washington with the weapons.

Erdmann pleaded no contest in 1992 to seven felonies tied to falsified evidence and botched autopsies in Lubbock, Texas, and two Texas counties. He surrendered his medical license and was sentenced to 10 years probation and 200 hours of community service. He also was ordered to repay nearly $17,000 in autopsy fees.

Erdmann and his wife and children moved here about 2-1/2 years ago. He was hired by the Lake Washington School District last September as a substitute teacher's assistant for special education.

The district normally doesn't hire convicted felons, but made an exception in Erdmann's case because of his medical qualifications. District officials said he as fired April 5 for insubordination.

Coronado turns momentum around on Herd

By JAY PEDEN
Sports Editor

The Hereford football team committed two crucial second-half turnovers, setting Lubbock Coronado up for 20 unanswered points and a 34-18 win Friday night at Jones Stadium in Lubbock.

The Herd fell to 1-2 on the season, while Coronado improved to 2-1.

Hereford took an 18-14 lead with a touchdown early in the second half, then stopped Coronado's 241-pound running back Yabrodrick Ward on a fourth-down-and-two-yards situation in Hereford territory.

Just when the momentum seemed headed towards a Hereford win, Herd tailback Marquise Brown was stripped of the ball. Coronado recovered, and three plays later tailback Anthony Tharrington sprinted 50 yards for a touchdown and a 21-18 Mustang lead.

The Herd's fourth-down stop was big, but the fumble and quick touchdown turned out to be even bigger.

"We came back with the offense, got it down to the (43-yard line) and we get the turnover there," Herd coach Danny Haney said. "If we put it in the end zone there, I think we've got them."

Coronado: Yabrodrick Ward, 26-163; Anthony Tharrington, 11-141; Dwight Culver, 2-13; Rex Henderson, 5-3; Landon Winton, 1-3; David Ferniough, 1-(-4); Darrell Jones, 1-(-6).

PASSING-Hereford: Dudley, 16-36-1-199; Coronado: Henderson, 3-7-0-18; Ferniough, 0-1-0-0.

RECEIVING-Hereford: Ronald Torres, 7-84; Armando Zambrano, 5-65; Brown, 3-31; C.J. Kuback, 1-19. Coronado: Jones, 2-3; Rudy Gomez, 1-15.

On the ensuing kickoff, Brown muffed the football and Coronado recovered at the Hereford 20-yard line. The Mustangs needed only five plays to score, with Ward blasting into the end zone from two yards out. Trevor Cotham's kick made it 28-18 with 10:55 left in the game.

The Mustangs defense held the Herd in the fourth quarter, and Ward added a 30-yard TD run with three minutes left to provide the final score.

Haney didn't blame the loss entirely on the turnovers. "We had plenty of opportunities we could have availed ourselves of," he said. "We weren't able to move the ball early. It wasn't until we started throwing that we had any kind of offensive consistency. Lots of things go into a football game besides two turnovers."

The Whitefaces used a balanced offense to put up big numbers. Brown accounted for 175 of the Herd's 178 rushing yards and all three of the touchdowns.

The passing game also worked well. Todd Dudley threw for 199 yards, hitting 16-of-36. Ronald Torres had seven receptions for 84 yards, and Armando Zambrano caught five balls for 65 yards.

"We had good protection, good routes and good passes, Haney said. "That's something we strive for. They can't sit on the run and defend the pass too."

Dudley was especially good in the second quarter, when he hit on 8-of-14 for 115 yards and led the Herd on two touchdown drives. Hereford came back from a 14-0 deficit midway through the quarter to a 14-12 deficit at halftime. Passing dominated the two drives, which Brown finished off with TD runs of 12 and six yards.

"In the first half, we had lots of success with short passes and slant (patterns)," Dudley said. "Their secondary was designed to cover deep, so we knew we could throw short."

Dudley hit 7-of-19 in the second half. His one interception came immediately after Coronado went up 28-18. On Hereford's next possession, he had four straight incompletions into a stiff wind, the fourth of which came on fourth down.

"In the second half, they scooted their linebackers out a little to try and help against the slant," Dudley said, "and they started rushing more people, or stunted more."

The one constant in the game was the hard running of CHS fullback Ward, who ran 28 times for 163 yards and three touchdowns. He broke at least one tackle on at least half those carries. The only times Hereford stopped him cold was on two fourth-down plays.

"He was like a train coming at you," said Herd linebacker Bric Wall, who combined with Tanner Murphey to stuff Ward on a fourth-and-two play early in the game. "You had to hit him in the legs or you didn't tackle him."

Tharrington, the CHS tailback, was used as a change of pace, rushing 11 times, mostly outside, for 141 yards. Coronado totaled 313 yards on the ground, with only 18 yards passing.

Both teams' first drives of the game were impressive, but both were stopped at the opponents' 29-yard line.

Ward rumbled for 12 yards on the first play of the game, but six plays later Murphey and Wall stopped him on fourth-down-and-two. Hereford drove to the CHS 32 but couldn't overcome Shane Mackey's sack of Dudley for a 10-yard loss.

Those drives chewed up most of the first quarter, which ended with no score.

Coronado scored quickly in the second quarter, getting a 15-yard punt return into Hereford territory, a 15-yard pass play and an 18-yard run by Tharrington to the Hereford nine-yard line. Two plays later, Ward crashed over from the two, but the pass for two points failed.

The Mustangs stopped Hereford on three plays, then partially blocked Brian Betzen's punt. It went eight yards, setting CHS up at the Hereford 41. Four plays later, Tharrington went 21 yards, tightrope-running the left sideline for the Mustangs' second score. Ward ran for two points and a 14-0 lead.

That's when Dudley got his arm warm. Hereford went 77 yards in 13 plays, including passes of 15, 14 and 19 yards to three different receivers. Brown ran the last 12 yards. John Marty Galan's kick was wide right, and CHS led 14-6.

Hereford forced a punt and put together another beauty of a drive: 71 yards on 12 plays. Dudley connected on passes of 24, 15 and 24 yards, again to three receivers. The third pass came on fourth down-and-five; Torres took a short pass on a slant pattern 24 yards to the CHS five-yard line. Three plays later, Brown ran six yards for the score, with eight seconds left. The pass for two failed.

Hereford opened the second half with a more-or-less drive that went 82 yards on 15 plays, two of which were punts. The first punt was another one that was partially blocked, but David Hicks recovered it for a first down. After three plays, Hereford punted again, but Coronado was called for running into the kicker, and the penalty gave Hereford another first down.

Hereford didn't need any more gifts. Brown ran for 28 yards, then Dudley hit Zambrano for an 18-yard pass down to the CHS one-yard line. Brown scored on the next play. Again the pass failed, but Hereford led 18-14.

On Coronado's next possession, Hereford was called for a questionable late hit which seemed to fire the team up. Hicks chased CHS quarterback Henderson towards the sideline and got an arm around him in bounds, but Henderson didn't go down until he was out of bounds.

Hereford was penalized 15 yards but the defense rose up. On fourth-and-two, half the Herd defense hit Ward and stopped him after a one-yard gain.

The Herd got the ball over on downs, but Brown's fumble came four plays later. Tharrington's 50-yard touchdown run put Coronado on its way to the victory.

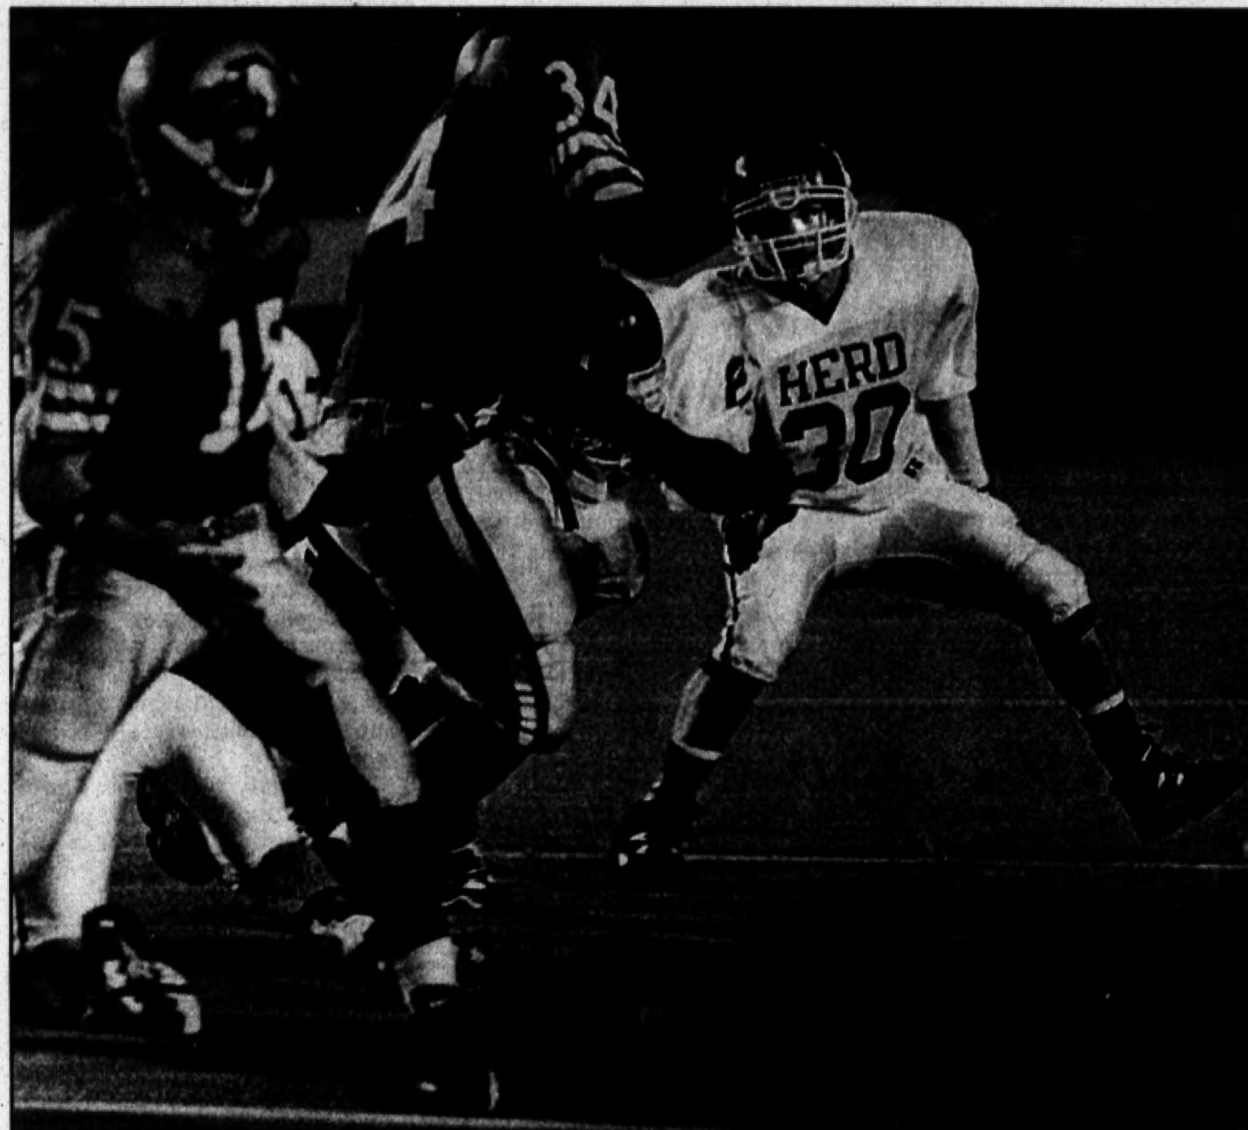

Haney talked about the three parts of a team that need to perform well for the team to win: offense, defense and special teams.

"All three phases were good at one time or another," he said, "but we didn't get all three phases together."

Hereford has one game - at Frenship next Friday - left on the schedule before it opens District 1-4A play at Randall Oct. 6. Haney seems optimistic about the Whitefaces.

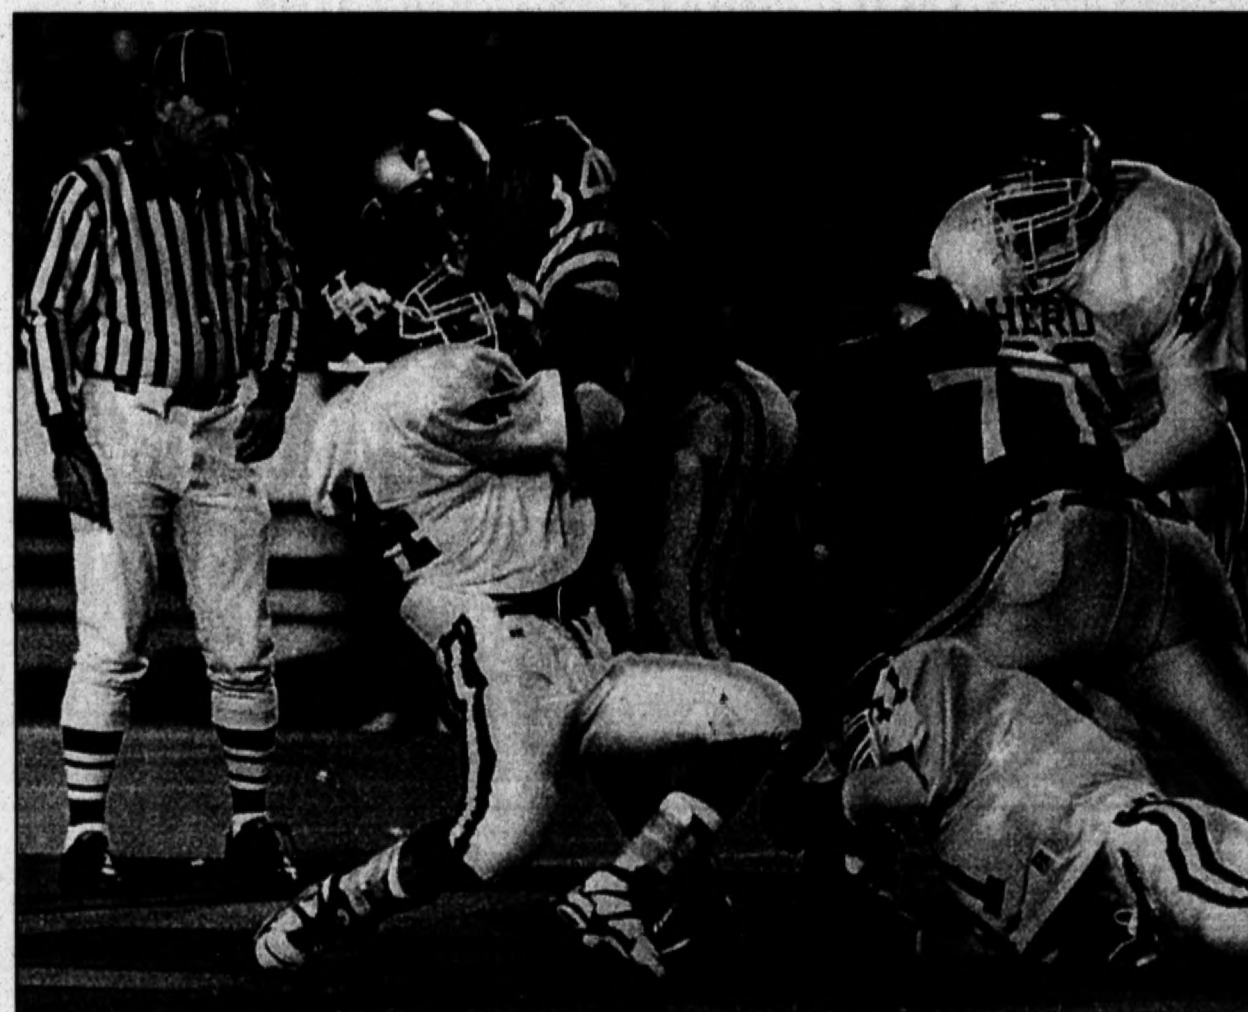

"They proved to me they're a good football team, going from down 14-0 to up 18-14," he said. "Nobody hates to lose more than I do, but I see lots of positives out of this game."

Standing on the tracks

Hereford safety Jeb Skiles (30) prepares to stand his ground against Coronado's 241-pound running back, Yabrodrick Ward. The fullback ran for 163 hard yards and three touchdowns in the Mustangs' 34-18 defeat of Hereford Friday night at Jones Stadium in Lubbock.

Hereford linebacker Bric Wall bends over backwards in an effort to tackle Coronado fullback Yabrodrick Ward, while Tanner Murphey holds onto one of Ward's ankles. Hereford end Martin Martinez rushes up to get in on the play.

NCA spikers fall to St. Andrews

The Nazarene Christian Academy volleyball team lost a match to St. Andrews, 15-6, 15-13 Thursday in Amarillo.

NCA's Jessica Mendoza served for five points, including two aces. The team will play San Jacinto Monday in Amarillo.

NCA's flag football game with St. Andrews was postponed until Oct. 9 because of Thursday's cold weather.

Hereford Sports Association forms youth basketball teams

The Hereford Sports Association is forming fifth and sixth grade basketball teams with the purpose of improving Hereford kids' basketball skills at an earlier age.

The entry deadline is Oct. 1. There will be two boys teams and two girls teams formed from students of Hereford public schools. Registration forms are available at the offices of Hereford intermediate schools, or from any HSA officer.

Children who attend private schools are excluded so as to not weaken the teams those schools already have in their physical education programs. The program also is designed not to interfere with YMCA football or volleyball, or with the Hereford Stars basketball fundamentals program.

A fee of $25 per child will go towards buying uniforms and equipment.

RB Sanford, No. 2 Corsicana slaughter No. 6 Waxahachie

By MARK BABINECK
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) - The week following Waxahachie's 39th straight regular season victory went much like the week before the streak began in 1991: a loss to Corsicana.

Ketric Sanford provided the Tigers with another eye-popping performance in a 45-7 victory Friday night by Class 4A's second-ranked team over No. 6 Waxahachie, which was out of contention by halftime.

Sanford, a senior who set the 4A single-season rushing record with 4,611 yards last year, piled up 283 yards and scored four touchdowns as Corsicana rolled to a 3-0 start. He accomplished his career second-best rushing day on just 26 carries, relatively low for him.

"I think I was more hyped for this game than any other one I've played, including the playoffs," Sanford said. "We lost to them my sophomore and junior years, and everybody wanted to make big plays."

The Tigers scored on seven of their first eight possessions and left no opportunity for Waxahachie to gain a foothold.

The Tigers probably won't gain any poll ground, though, as No. 1 La Marque - which owns a 40-game regular season streak of its own - clobbered Texas City 37-0. The Cougars held their crosstown rivals to just 23 total yards and one first down.

La Marque (3-0) has yet to yield a point.

As impressive as Sanford's performance was, it paled to that of Cayuga sophomore Gary Turner. His

Coleman's slam launches M's into 1st place

AP Baseball Writer

On what could be the road to their first championship season, the Seattle Mariners saw another sign that this could really be their year.

Vince Coleman hit the first grand slam of his career Friday night, and the Mariners took over first place in the AL West with a 10-7 victory over the Oakland Athletics and a 8-3 loss by California to Texas.

Coleman's slam came in his 5,268th at-bat and on his 34th birthday. A crowd of 51,500 saw Seattle overcome a six-run deficit and take a one-game lead over California, which lost its eighth in a row.

Never before in their 19-year history had the Mariners been alone in first place after the month of May. Seattle has won four in a row and 11 of 13.

"That has got to be the most memorable play in my career," Coleman said. "To hit a grand slam homer on my birthday in a big come-from-behind win - that was the most special baseball experience of my life."

In other AL games, Cleveland downed Kansas City 5-3, Baltimore beat Milwaukee 10-3 and Chicago defeated Minnesota 5-4 in 10 innings.

Two games were rained out, Detroit at New York and Toronto at Boston. They were both to be made up Saturday as part of doubleheaders.

Coleman's slam capped a six-run sixth inning that made it 6-0. Earlier in the evening, he stole his 738th base, tying Max Carey for sixth place on the career list.

Ken Griffey Jr. and Edgar Martinez homered to help the Mariners come back. Pinch-hitter Alex Diaz connected for a three-run shot in the eighth that provided the difference.

"As soon as I hit it, I wanted to celebrate," Diaz said. "I didn't want to show up the pitcher, but there's not so many times I get a chance to do that."

Tonight, the Mariners send ace Randy Johnson to the mound to face the Athletics.

"They say pitching and defense win games, but grand slams and three-run homers win games, too," Mariners manager Lou Piniella said.

Rangers 8, Angels 3

Texas took an early 3-0 lead and never trailed in winning at The Ballpark in Arlington. California has not led in its last 66 innings, and has been behind in 39 of its last 40 games.

The Angels lost for the 26th time in 34 games, and manager Marcel Lachemann held a team meeting after the defeat. They had been in first place for 79 straight days.

All-Star shortstop Gary DiSarcina returned to the California lineup for the first time since injuring his thumb

Aug. 3. He went 0-for-3 and made an error.

Juan Gonzalez hit a three-run double during a five-run seventh inning that broke a 3-all tie. Kenny Rogers (15-7) gave up seven hits in his third complete game.

Indians 5, Royals 3

Orel Hershiser won for the eighth time in nine decisions, pitching Cleveland past Kansas City.

The Indians won their 94th game, their most since winning 111 in 1954. The Royals dropped their fifth in a row, all at home, and stayed four games behind in the wild-card race.

Hershiser (15-6) was scratched from a start earlier this week because of wet and cold conditions in Chicago. The Indians beat Kansas City for the seventh straight time, their longest winning streak ever against the Royals.

Orioles 10, Brewers 3

Cal Ripken homered and drove in a season-high five runs, and Harold Baines hit his 300th career home run to lead Baltimore over Milwaukee.

Rafael Palmeiro added his 38th homer, the most by an Orioles player since Frank Robinson hit 49 in 1966.

Ripken has 18 homers and 69 RBIs lifetime at County Stadium, his highest total at any opposing park. In the third inning, a fan in his 20s ran onto the field and shook Ripken's hand before being tackled by security officers. The man was fined $155.

When Baines hit his 300th homer, making him the 69th major leaguer to reach the mark, the fan who caught the ball returned it and asked for something in exchange - a bat, from Ripken.

White Sox 5, Twins 4, 10 innings

Frank Thomas hit his 38th homer and scored his 100th run as Chicago won at the Metrodome.

Thomas, batting .311, only needs to keep his batting average above .300 to become the first player in major league history to hit at least .300 with 20 homers, 100 RBIs, 100 walks and 100 runs five years in a row. Lou Gehrig and Ted Williams both did it four straight seasons.

Rockies keep lead over LA

By The Associated Press

While Cincinnati was celebrating - 18 1/2 hours after the Reds actually clinched the NL Central - the Rockies maintained their 1 1/2-game lead over Los Angeles in the NL West.

Dante Bichette hit his 38th homer and Kevin Ritz combined with two relievers on a two-hitter Friday night as Colorado beat the San Francisco Giants 6-1. Down the coast, the Dodgers beat San Diego 6-5 and opened a 1 1/2-game lead over Houston in the wild-card race.

"I think everybody's sort of stepping their game up a little bit," Bichette said.

Bichette drove in three runs to increase his major league-leading RBIs total to 122. He is second in homers to Cleveland's Albert Belle, who has 44.

Ritz (11-10) limited the Giants to two hits over six innings, striking out five and walking three. Shawn Estes (0-2) was the loser.

In other games, St. Louis beat Houston 3-0, Cincinnati beat Philadelphia 3-2, Chicago beat Pittsburgh 6-3, Atlanta beat Montreal 5-1 and Florida beat New York 3-0 in a rain-shortened game.

Dodgers 6, Padres 5

Eric Karros hit a two-run homer at Dodger Stadium, reaching the 100-RBI mark for the first time in his career.

"Unbelievable," said Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda, who turned 68. "We lost the lead, then we came right back and got a couple of runs. It was a great birthday present. That's what I needed today."

Bryce Florie (2-2) gave up two runs in the fifth, getting himself in trouble with a fielding error when Piazza led off the inning with a grounder back to the mound. Both runs were unearned.

Pedro Astacio (7-8) pitched the fifth, allowing one hit. Todd Worrell shut out the Padres in the last 1 1/3 innings to become first Dodger ever to record 30 saves. With runners on first and third and one out in the ninth, Worrell fanned Andujar Cedeño, then threw a called third strike past Roberto Petagine.

Cardinals 3, Astros 0

Allen Watson (7-8) allowed four hits in eight innings and Ray Lankford hit a two-run homer for visiting St. Louis.

"This was a tough one. We really never got anything going," Astros second baseman Craig Biggio said.

Watson (7-8) retired 13 of his first 14 batters, allowing only a double in the third to Doug Drabek (10-9).

Tom Henke pitched a perfect ninth for his 34th save in 36 chances. The Astros, who had won five of their previous six games, began the night a half-game behind Los Angeles in the wild-card race.

Reds 3, Phillies 2

The Reds found out right before the game that they'd clinched the NL Central title, then got a two-run double from Bret Boone in the ninth inning to rally at Veterans Stadium.

Because of the intricacies of the new wild-card playoff setup, the Reds were unaware they had actually won the division late Thursday night when Los Angeles lost to San Diego 5-1.

"I don't understand it. I don't think anyone understands. The whole team doesn't understand it," Reds owner Marge Schott said before the game. "It's too confusing, honey."

How can they say we won?"

Dave Burba (10-3) pitched a hitless inning, and Jeff Brantley got three outs for his 26th save. Toby Borland (1-3) was the loser.

Cubs 6, Pirates 3

Kevin Foster (11-11) allowed two hits in eight innings, and Scott Servais hit a go-ahead, two-run double at Wrigley Field. Randy Myers pitched the ninth for his 35th save.

John Ericks (3-9) gave up six runs and seven hits in four innings, walked seven, threw a wild pitch and hit a batter.

Braves 5, Expos 1

Tom Glavine (16-6) allowed four hits in seven innings, and four errors by the visiting Expos led to three unearned runs.

David Justice hit a solo home run, his 24th, and Glavine contributed an RBI squeeze bunt in a three-run fourth against Carlos Perez (10-8), who is 0-5 with three no-decisions since Aug. 6.

Marlins 3, Mets 0

Pat Rapp (13-7) pitched his second straight shutout and tied a club record with his eighth consecutive victory. He allowed four hits at Joe Robbie Stadium during a game shortened to 7 2/3 innings because of rain.

Florida scored two runs in the first against Reid Cornelius (2-7), who allowed the first four batters to reach base.

The Marlins may have lost second baseman Quilvio Vera for the rest of the season because of a pulled left hamstring. Vera, who leads the major leagues with 56 stolen bases, left after he stumbled over first base trying to beat out a grounder.

PREP

454 yards on 38 carries in a 37-21 victory over Frost was the second-best rushing performance in 2A history. Only seven backs at any level have gained more yardage in one game.

Turner scored four touchdowns on runs of 4, 5, 50 and 75 yards.

Tyler John Tyler used a nine-minute span in its second quarter against Dallas Kimball to show why the defending 5A champs are ranked first in the Associated Press poll. Tyler scored four touchdowns, including two set up by Kimball fumbles, in that time period in a 35-6 romp.

Boyd, of 3A, knocked off 2A's fourth-ranked Pilot Point 21-15 thanks to an epic 92-yard, 17-play scoring drive directed by Philip Beyer that resulted in its second touchdown. The teams traded fourth quarter touchdowns as Pilot Point suffered its first loss of the year.

The only competition in West Orange-Stark's 37-0 rout of 4A's eighth-ranked Jasper was to see who could score more points, the Mustangs' offense or defense.

Tim Feathers returned an interception 72 yards for a TD and Quinton Chargois recovered a fumble in the end zone for two defensive scores as they helped hold Jasper (2-1) to 92 total yards.

Angleton limited Deer Park, ranked No. 8 in 5A, to just 36 rushing yards and scrapped out a 17-13 upset of the Deer.

Hitchcock gave perennial 3A power Cuero, ranked second, its second game effort in as many years, but the Gobblers rallied in the second half to prevail 33-12. The Bulldogs went into halftime down just 15-12 before Cuero (3-0) took control in the second half.

Another team unaccustomed to being behind is 1A's top-ranked Thorndale, which actually trailed Hutto following an early field goal before thundering to a 41-3 victory. That kick by Justin Conlee was from 50 yards as the Hippos never got much going against the Bulldogs (3-0).

Cody Armbrister, the banged-up quarterback of run-happy Plano, the seventh-ranked school in the 5A poll, completed just two passes in a 14-7 victory over Mesquite, but both were notable. The first was a 35-yard strike to Greg Schmidt early in the fourth quarter that rallied the Wildcats to a 7-6 deficit.

The second, a 33-yarder to Judd Smith, set up David Strain's game-winning 3-yard plunge that cinched victory.

It wasn't the only tough loss for a Mesquite school. Class 4A's seventh-ranked Southlake Carroll paid back Mesquite Potet for a rout last season with a 7-2 victory. Rob Hamilton blocked a punt to set up the game's only touchdown, a 1-yard run by Andy Wood.

A blocked punt going the other direction resulted in Potet's safety. In Carroll's first season at the 4A level last year, Potet slayed the Dragons 36-0.

Stephenville, No. 9 in 4A, improved to 2-1 by scoring in its first two second half possessions in a 27-14 victory over Dallas Roosevelt.

Aikman hopes to survive Cardinals' blitz

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer
IRVING, Texas (AP) - For Troy Aikman, a game against the Arizona Cardinals means battling "Buddyball" and trying to dodge an all-out rush to get passes airborne.

"The blitz will be coming Sunday," Aikman said. "If you are a quarterback going against a Buddy Ryan defense, you know it's going to get physical."

Aikman should know. He was knocked silly last year by Wilber Marshall's hit to his chin.

"I'm glad Marshall isn't around this year," Aikman said. "They've also lost Eric Swann. But Buddy likes to try to intimidate the quarterback, so we know what's going to happen. "There's no team Buddy tries to beat more than Dallas. The Cardinals are always tough and give us problems."

Aikman has added an extra long facemask to protect his chin. Still, he got it cut in a 31-21 victory over Denver. Now, Aikman has put on a big chin pad.

"It seems all someone has to do to get to my chin is just brush by it or something," Aikman said.

Fullback Daryl Johnston said the meetings with the Cardinals are full-contact football, even if the Cowboys have won nine consecutive games against the Cardinals, including wins of 38-3 in Dallas and 28-21 in Phoenix last year.

"It gets physical," Johnston said. "I see they are giving up more yardage this year, but we know it will be a struggle going against them."

Ryan was booed and harassed by the fans chanting "Budd-y, Budd-y, Budd-y" after last year's game. Fans displeasure with Ryan dates back to the Jimmy Johnson era, when the annual meetings became one of the biggest rivalries on the Cowboys' calendar.

Things have cooled somewhat in the Barry Switzer era. "Arizona will be ready to play us, because we're their Super Bowl," Switzer said. "But I don't think the rivalry is like it was when Jimmy was around."

Ryan said he misses coaching against Johnston.

"I miss the rivalry with Jimmy," Ryan said. "When you've got a whipping post, you love to keep him around so you can whip him. When I was in Philadelphia, we had some intense games."

Ryan, who is 0-2 against Switzer, added "I admire Barry's winning percentage. He's done a great job. He always seems to have talent around him."

Wide receiver Kevin Williams said the Cowboys will have to give maximum protection to Aikman, a notion Aikman certainly would second.

"They like to blitz Troy and get to him anyway then can," Williams said. "They tried to put him out of the game last year. I guess 'Buddyball' will be just as bad this year."

Ryan said he blitzes Aikman because he respects him.

"I've always been a fan of Troy's since he was a rookie," Ryan said.

"He's one of the best in the league. He's right at the top. He does what he has to do to win. He's right up there with Joe Namath."

The Cardinals (1-2) will also have to stop Emmitt Smith, who is leading the NFL in rushing for the 3-0 Cowboys. Smith already has 427 yards and has scored seven touchdowns.

"Emmitt also presents a problem," Ryan said. "The Cowboys have a lot of weapons. But we have a lot of good schemes, too."

Chargers must avoid Elway's magic

AP Football Writer

John Elway can't possibly top his heroics of last weekend. Or can he?

Elway threw a 43-yard touchdown pass to rookie Rod Smith on the final play of the game last Sunday, lifting the Denver Broncos over the Washington Redskins 38-31. The king of late-game excitement, Elway has staged 35 game-saving, fourth-quarter drives, but it was the first time he connected on a TD pass at the final gun.

"That last one was the first time that we've really been in that situation, where we scored from that far out, with the touchdown on the last play," Elway said. "We've always had scoring with maybe 30, 25 seconds or something left on the clock. I think that's the first time we've scored with no time left."

The San Diego Chargers, this week's opponent, don't doubt Elway is capable of more such magic. In fact, they've seen it first-hand.

Five of Elway's game-saving drives have been against San Diego. Last year, in Game 7, Elway led two drives that culminated in field goals from Jason Elam, the second with 4:07 to play, for a 20-15 win at San Diego.

"I think pound for pound he's the toughest quarterback in the league, just because he knows that he's been in position where he's had to throw the ball and carry that team a long time and sit there in the pocket and take the licks," defensive end Leslie O'Neal said of Elway.

Added linebacker Junior Seau, who scored his first NFL touchdown by returning a fumble last week in a victory at Philadelphia. "You get into the two-minute drill at the end of the game, you definitely have to be up eight points or nine. It's what he does best."

He doesn't always do it, though. In the 1994 opener, the Broncos were at the Chargers 3-yard line with 43 seconds left when Elway's bizarre fumble on a rollout ended up in Seau's hands. San Diego won 37-34.

Elsewhere Sunday, it's Chicago at St. Louis, New Orleans at the New York Giants, the New York Jets at Atlanta, Kansas City at Cleveland, Green Bay at Jacksonville, Houston at Cincinnati, Washington at Tampa Bay, Minnesota at Pittsburgh, Arizona at Dallas and Philadelphia at Oakland.

On Monday night, San Francisco is at Detroit.

While the drama could be high at San Diego, don't expect much stimulation at Giants Stadium, where two 0-3 teams converge.

The Giants have shown no offense and lost their only home game 35-0 to Dallas. The Saints dropped three straight close games, displaying little killer instinct.

"I didn't think we would be in this situation or the Giants football team would be 0-3," said Saints quarterback Jim Everett, who has thrown for six touchdowns and had two interceptions returned for TDs.

"Throughout the season teams are going to lose one, two or three games, either back-to-back or in a month. But there is no way that I thought we would have a September like that with the type team we have."

New York expected to challenge the Cowboys in the NFC East. Right now, they are being challenged just to find the end zone - they have only one offensive TD.

"I'd say anytime you're 0-3, the same things are going to be plaguing both teams: The mistakes, the penalties and the consistency," coach Dan Reeves said. "There are times you can do things and do them fairly well."

Rangers disappoint their fans again

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) - Bad baseball has haunted this part of the world since 1972.

Let's see, it's September so that must mean the Texas Rangers have brought up their farm hands and are trying to decide whether to fire their manager after another miserable year. Football is in full swing and how 'bout those Dallas Cowboys? When's Deion coming aboard? What's up with Troy and Emmitt?

You can usually stir the baseball malaise with a rowing oar once school starts around here.

The Rangers have seldom given their fans any reason to care otherwise after Labor Day.

Oh, there was a minor case of pennant fever in 1974 when Billy Martin was the manager. But most fans cured this with several swigs of reality. The Rangers were chasing the mighty Oakland A's and you couldn't find anyone who thought they would catch the world champs. They didn't. The Rangers finished five games out.

Martin was hailed as something of a hero, but the next year he was fired by Brad Corbett of plastic pipe fame when the Rangers slipped 19 games behind the A's.

Billy Hunter got the Rangers within five games in 1978 but nobody checked into local hospitals with pennant fever symptoms.

Pat Corrales, Don Zimmer and Bobby Valentine also whipped the Rangers to within five lengths of the leaders in other campaigns, but never threatened to win or arouse the local populace into a full baseball froth.

No pennant flies at The Ballpark in Arlington. Oh, the Rangers were in first place when the strike hit last year but nobody gives them credit for winning the American League West. The owners were so excited about it they fired the manager, Kevin Kennedy.

Although Texas was one game ahead of the AL West pack, they were a dreadful 10 games under .500.

Now Johnny Oates has the Rangers in meaningful September games for one of the few times in their history. Nobody seems to care.

Most eyes are on Deion Sanders, Jerry Jones and the Dallas Cowboys. And so's the newspaper space.

Tune in one of the many talk radio shows in Dallas-Fort Worth and three-fourths of the questions are going to be about the Cowboys, or Texas A&M and Texas football, or the Dallas Mavericks or Dallas Stars.

The Rangers are actually in a pennant race but people either don't seem to know it or they figure the team will fold as it always does in July and August.

It did Tuesday night when it went into the ninth inning with a two-run lead before Oates took out his virtually unhittable starter Kevin Gross for questionable reliever Jeff Russell, who immediately gave up a game-tying homer to former Ranger Doug Strange. Then former Ranger Strange (Texas always seems to be undone by players it used to have on the roster) scores the winning run for Seattle in extra innings.

If ever there was a game that summed up the Rangers history it was that one.

Instead of putting the game away with such multimillionaires as Juan Gonzalez and Will Clark in the lineup, the Rangers let it get to the stage where they can be defeated by a poor managerial decision and - have you heard this song before? - a former Ranger.

Guess Who's 21?
Happy Birthday Mark!
Wishing you many more Love, Mom, Dad, Raquel, Carlos, Richard & Melissa

'The Blob' just a small portion of filmmaker's life, career

By DINAH WISENBERG BRIN
Associated Press Writer

PAOLI, Pa. (AP) - As he sits in a study lined with books on film and God, Irvin S. Yeaworth Jr. holds up a Mason jar with a piece of gooey, red silicon labeled "Blob."

"I want you to know this is a very small part of my life," he says, looking at the jar.

"This" is "The Blob," the 1958 horror film directed by Yeaworth that launched Steve McQueen's career and became an instant hit with audiences spooked by the man-eating gelatinous mass.

While "The Blob" evolved into a cult classic, it and two subsequent science fiction films - "4-D Man" and "Dinosaurs" - were anomalies for Yeaworth, who has devoted much of his career to projects involving religious and social issues.

Yeaworth said he and his partners shot "The Blob" in Philadelphia's suburbs for $120,000, then sold it for $300,000 to Paramount Pictures, which made millions on the movie. "We took our share and threw it into 'Secret Island,'" a television program offering moral lessons for preschoolers. During that one-year run, the only WFIL-TV show that got more mail was "Bandstand," Yeaworth said.

"We know what happened to Dick Clark. We don't ever know what happened to Yeaworth," he said with a smile.

With a lean frame, full head of light hair and good humor, the father of five appears far younger than his 69 years.

"I knew I should be in film years and years ago," said Yeaworth. "There was no film training on the university level but I took every book out of the library I could find. ... I felt that films were stories that could be used to get across important ideas to people."

Starting in 1949, the Franklin & Marshall College graduate produced television programs through his company, Good News Productions, which also made religious and educational films.

In the early 1950s, Good News bought a 150-acre campus in Chester Springs with 18 buildings, including three sound stages that became Valley Forge Films Inc. Yeaworth, his staff and their families lived there for 22 years, the first few working without pay and living on checks from home.

"We all went to the commissary every day for three meals a day," he said. Sometimes, he added, they didn't have money for stamps to mail invoices.

"Our goal, of course, was to make serious film for theatrical release. We knew we shouldn't make our first theatrical film on a subject that was precious to us, because we weren't that good."

Opportunity came with an offer to direct "The Molten Meteor," working title for "The Blob." He wasn't into science fiction, but

Yeaworth knew that producer Jack Harris could get the film released. (Harris currently is working on a "Blob" CD-ROM.)

Yeaworth shot "The Blob" in color, a departure from 1950s sci-fi fare, and cast familiar character actors along with the little-known McQueen. He said his wife, Jean, composed the love theme for the film - but not the jaunty overall theme song that Paramount added, "Beware of the Blob," by a soon-to-be-famous Burt Bacharach.

"We were just delighted that a major studio bought our film," he said. "We weren't proud of it as a film. ... It became a campy thing."

But the film about teens alerting their town to the killer goo creature had a strong effect.

"We know a lot of people in their 40s and 50s now who slept with their lights on," Yeaworth said.

Some of those scared youngsters grew into aficionados. Starlog magazine ran a "Blob" story in May, the same month that fans from Baltimore came to Pennsylvania and re-enacted the scene of teens running screaming from a theater.

"The Blob" is glorious because it puts you completely in a teen-age juvenile delinquent mind set," said

"Mad Professor" Mike Marano, a public radio film reviewer in Berkeley, Calif.

"It eats these great American icons. It eats the local diner, it eats the local movie theater, it first appears at the local makeout joint," he said.

Although fans read deep messages into the movie, Yeaworth said it means nothing and was pure science fiction.

Midland, victim's mother still stunned by killing of Julianne

By JEAN PAGEL
Associated Press Writer

MIDLAND, Texas (AP) - Friends of Julianne Powell remember a 10-year-old redhead who loved her cat Snickers.

The freckled fifth-grader collected rocks, looked forward to braces and hadn't lived in Texas long before inserting "y'all" into her vocabulary. Her murder Feb. 10 stunned this city.

"Losing Julianne is the worst loss there is," said her mother, Lynn Fisher. "I have days when I can't cry. And I have days when I can't stop."

The search for Julianne took about two hours the afternoon she disappeared. Police found her nude body in a neighbor's laundry hamper.

Henry Lopez Ortiz, 42, was charged with kidnapping, raping and strangling Julianne. He has pleaded innocent.

Jury selection in his capital murder trial begins Oct. 3 in Amarillo, where proceedings were moved to escape intense news coverage in the Permian Basin.

Ms. Fisher says she came home from a matinee at 4:25 p.m. that Friday in February. Her daughter's shoes and backpack were there;

Julianne was gone.

Ortiz, who lived in the apartment downstairs, tried to comfort Ms. Fisher during the search for her only child, she testified during a hearing.

"Somehow I feel this is all my fault," the mother quoted him as saying. "If I would have known she was alone, I would have stayed with her until you got home."

Police questioned Ortiz and arrested him at 6:52 p.m. after the body turned up in his spare bedroom.

Ortiz testified at a hearing last month that he couldn't remember anyone reading him his rights or seeking his consent for hair and blood samples. But he could recall stepping on a splinter en route to the patrol car. "You remember pain," he testified. "I don't know. I just remember the splinter in my foot."

Defense attorney H.W. "Woody" Leverett has contended that his client was intimidated into consenting that his apartment be searched.

Neither Leverett nor the prosecutors - district attorney Al Shorre and assistant district attorney Teresa Clingan - would comment for this story.

On the day of the murder, Ortiz was working as a counselor's assistant at a facility for troubled adolescent boys. Ortiz has associate's degree of applied science in criminal justice from Odessa College.

This is not Ortiz' first criminal trial. In 1991, a Reeves County jury acquitted him of sexual assault of an 18-year-old woman who came to his house for Bible study.

Ms. Fisher declines to speak of the murder, one of six in Midland this year.

"My fondest wish is to let loose of that night and completely bury it, so I can remember my daughter for who she was and not for what she went through," she said during a recent interview at her new residence.

She tenderly shows a visitor some keepsakes: A photo of baby Julianne at Christmas. Her sketches. The corsage she would have worn this summer as a junior bridesmaid.

Julianne was buried in California, where her father lives. The girl and her mother had moved to Midland from California just last year.

Ms. Fisher, a nurse, said she has no plans after the trial.

She described the stages of grief - shock, confusion, indescribable pain - she encountered as life, to her surprise, went on.

"It amazed the heck out of me that I woke up every morning still breathing, that things grew and the sun came up and went down," Ms. Fisher said. "As far as I was concerned, the world should stop and cry with me."

Names in the News

LAS VEGAS (AP) - Golfer Chi Chi Rodriguez sees nothing funny about the hit comedy "To Wong Foo, Thanks for Everything! Julie Newmar."

The 59-year-old Rodriguez has sued the movie's production company and Universal Pictures over a drag queen character named Chi Chi Rodriguez.

The golfer's lawyers said that the character, played by John Leguizamo, "engages in numerous disreputable acts and is portrayed as sexually promiscuous."

A spokesman for Universal, Alan Sutton, declined to comment.

Rodriguez, who lives in Florida but has business interests in Las Vegas, wants to stop showings of the movie with his name.

The comedy is about three drag queens who become stranded in a small Nebraska town while traveling across the country to Hollywood.

Childhood dream is realized when artist illustrates book

By BECKY CAMP
Lifestyles Editor

"This was the biggest project I have ever had," said former Hereford resident Rhonda Childress.

Mrs. Childress, formerly Rhonda Stephan, was referring to the illustrations she did for a book titled "The Fence Was Too High."

The story was written by Olivia Esh, an elementary school student from Reedsville, Pa. It was a winner in the Raintree/Steck-Vaughn Young Publish-A-Book Contest in 1993.

"I felt honored and privileged to be asked to illustrate the book," said Mrs. Childress.

She was selected by the art director of Raintree/Steck-Vaughn to illustrate the story of a young boy who liked playing in his back yard, but didn't like the surrounding wooden fence that was too high for him to see over.

Mrs. Childress was free to create her own design for the book, limited only by the space required for the text on each page and the number of pages.

She worked in water colors as the base then did top shadowing and highlights with pastel chalk.

"Since I was 6 or 7 years old, I have wanted to draw children's books," said Mrs. Childress, daughter of Weldon and Betty Stephan of the Frio Community.

Mrs. Childress had no formal art training until her senior year at Hereford High School when a charcoal drawing she had made from a photo of an Indian woman was entered in a Panhandle-wide contest.

The drawing was a winner and Mrs. Childress was awarded a scholarship to West Texas State University.

"It was a dream come true to be able to select art classes while I was in college," she said.

After attending West Texas, she attended the University of Texas and graduated with a bachelor's degree in fine arts.

She worked in advertising for several years, then decided to put her career on hold to be a full-time mother.

Even though illustrating children's books had been a childhood dream, Mrs. Childress said, "I did not pursue it. It pursued me."

Although she was not actively working, Mrs. Childress was offered the opportunity to do the book.

"I enjoyed the project, but I wanted to do my best work so I probably made it harder on myself. But if you will put your priorities right, the Lord will see you through," she said.

Mrs. Childress has not met the girl whose story she illustrated because the publishing company selects the illustrator. But she said she received "a real sweet letter" from the child's sponsor in the contest.

When Raintree/Steck-Vaughn decided to offer some books for sale on a cable shopping network, "The Fence Was Too High" was one of the books selected. The author was interviewed on the air, but Mrs. Childress was not included. She does hope, however, to be able to see a video tape of the interview.

"The contest is an excellent opportunity for young authors," said Mrs. Childress. "The winners receive a cash prize in addition to getting to see their story in print."

The contest is being held again this year by Raintree/Steck-Vaughn.

The theme is "Mysteries." There is a division for students in the second and third grades, and a division for fourth through sixth graders. Information is available at the Deaf Smith County Library.

Mrs. Childress and her husband, D., have two children, Camille, 8, and Wade, 4. They live in Smithville, a small town near Austin.

Illustrator

Rhonda Childress, former Hereford resident, illustrated the children's book titled "The Fence Was Too High," published by Raintree/Steck-Vaughn. A portion of one of the illustrations is shown at left.

The word "paradise" comes from the Persian word used for the amusement parks of kings.

Panhandle Community Services receive top performance awards

The Panhandle Community Services, operating in Hereford and 25 other area counties, has been presented top performance awards for its Families in Training program.

Johnny Raymond of Amarillo, executive director of PCS, and Phyllis Cook, FIT coordinator, accepted grant awards totalling $20,468 in a recent Austin event which recognized PCS for assisting low-income persons toward the goal of self-sufficiency.

FIT is an educationally-driven housing program offered in 26 of the Texas Panhandle counties. Benefits consist of rental assistance, case management and other services to low-income parents who are pursuing post-secondary education.

Currently there are 142 families active in the program, including some in Hereford. Operating since 1990, FIT has had more than 300 families participate with a completion rate of more than 85 percent.

"This is not a giveaway program--it is hard work and sacrifice for participants," said Cook. "The program is successful when adults are motivated and determined to complete their education and make a better life for themselves."

Applicants for the FIT program must be eligible for rental assistance, be a parent with dependent child/children, and be attending or preparing to attend college or post-secondary vocational education.

Demographically, 90% of the participants are female heads of household, and 70% are AFDC recipients.

After meeting eligibility requirements, each applicant must go through an intensive assessment process to be accepted. This includes being interviewed by a committee of community leaders and representatives of resource agencies.

The average entry wage for those who have graduated from the program is more than $9 an hour. Besides financial assistance, the program provides emotional support to help people escape welfare and become financially independent.

The PCS actually received two grant awards--a $5,328 award for 1993, and the top award in the state for 1994 was in the amount of $15,140.

Final payment must be made by December. Staff members who will take orders are: Janet Blakely, Riley Hall, Victoria Lucio, Shyla Martin, Josephine Nunez, Marisol Trevizo and Mrs. Reiter, sponsor.

Junior Historians will be conducting their fund raiser soon. They will begin their program October 5. This project will include the sale of gift wrap and of Christmas items. If you have plans for such a purchase, please wait until you see their catalogs. Funds raised will be used for the chapter activities which include several community service projects.

Officers for Junior Historians and for Builders Club will be elected soon. Campaign posters and speeches will be prepared for this event.

Next Friday will be another early out day for the HISD campuses. This means that all classes will dismiss one hour early.

We welcome Tracy Flood Stewart, who has joined our staff as a long term substitute filling in for Bob Horton in American History. Tracy observed at HJH several times during her college days and she "fits right in."

Heart Savers, a mini CPR course, will be held for our staff on September 28 and October 5. Staff members who have current CPR certification will not be required to attend.

Seventh grade history students are studying the early Texans, the various tribes of Indians who once lived in Texas. Some classes are just beginning this study while others have already spent several days on the unit. This always proves to be an interesting unit and one that gets the students involved in research.

It has been said that the deepest need of the human being is the need to be needed -- so -- make it a point to meet someone's need today!

By BEVERLY HARDER
County Extension Agent - FCE

Real listening is one of the highest forms of human influence. It is a learned art, and requires an inner sensitivity that goes beyond words to the feelings and real meanings of what is said. By truly listening, we are saying to our children, "You are a person of worth; I love you, respect you and want to understand you."

Unfortunately, we are often so eager to get our point across that we don't pay enough attention to what is being said. The goal of listening is simply to hear, understand and accept the other person's feelings and views.

Parents need to set aside their lectures and opinions and really strive to understand from the point of view of their children. It is almost impossible to train children to speak openly, honestly and constructively of their innermost feelings, wishes and needs unless they have acquired the faith that such expression will meet with acceptance rather than with coolness or rejection.

While striving to understand, avoid giving advice, talking about our own experiences instead of theirs, or making the child's concern seem unimportant. A common strategy is the following:

* Give children full attention. Put aside lectures, reactions, feelings, perceptions and judgments. Eliminate distractions such as the newspaper, TV or radio.

Parents must put themselves in their child's shoes and try with all their heart to see the world through his or her eyes. The attitude and spirit parents adopt is probably the most important aspect of listening.

They can go through the outward motions of listening but do not hear anything unless they have the proper attitude and spirit.

* Physically, parents can show children that they have their full attention by leaning toward and looking at the child to show involvement and concern. Emotions are often communicated through the eyes, and parents can better understand their child's feelings by watching their eyes.

* Pay attention to nonverbal communication. The eyes and the upper lip give us clues to what is happening to a person emotionally. However, the eyes can be controlled to a large extent.

Because less voluntary control is possible, the upper lip is often a more reliable indicator of the emotional state of a person. A quivering lip is a pretty good indicator that a person is upset.

If the lip is straight and slightly tight, a person is probably stressed. If it is relaxed and moves easily, emotions are usually less intense.

Acknowledge the child's feelings. Sometimes we don't really want to deny our children's feelings by trying to get them to see or feel the way we do. As Haim Ginnett said, "Many people have been educated out of knowing what their feelings are." Parents need to acknowledge and respect a child's feelings and views.

Extension News

For example, a child may return from school and say "The bus driver yelled at me and everybody laughed!" A parent might skirt the feeling and instead ask, "What did you do to make the bus driver so upset?" A better response might be: "That must have been embarrassing for you," or "Sounds as if that was embarrassing."

After acknowledging the feeling, then the parent can help the child come up with solutions to avoid future conflicts with the bus driver.

Invite more discussion. Sometimes acknowledging a child with a simple "Oh...Mmm...I see" is enough to invite more discussion and, when coupled with a caring attitude, invites children to explore their own thoughts and feelings and possibly come up with their own solutions.

"Educational programs of the Texas Agricultural Extension service are open to citizens without regard to race, color, sex, disability, religion, age or national origin."

Hints from Heloise

Dear Heloise: Most of the mail-order companies use the plastic foam peanuts in packing boxes. I save them to reuse, but I don't use them quick enough to warrant the space they take up in the storage closet.

My husband said he thought you had an address or phone number of an organization that collects these pesky peanuts. If so, could you share this info with me? — A.D., Omaha, Neb.

You bet I can and I'm happy to! Plastic foam peanuts can be reused by other businesses, like mail and parcel firms.

The Plastic Loosefill Council's collection program lists businesses closest to you that accept the plastic foam peanuts and plastic loosefill. The toll-free number is 1-800-828-2214.

SOLICITATION CALLS

Dear Heloise: My boss, a wonderful gentleman, is plagued by phone calls several times a week from a certain political party he belongs to asking for donations.

He has come up with a good solution. He answers, "I'm busy at the moment, but if you would like to leave me your home phone number, I will return your call at my convenience."

Not one of them has given their home number yet. — Kathie Stepp, Makawao, Hawaii

Between the Covers

By JOE WEAVER

As you read this, we are just returning from vacation -- a trip to Colorado Springs to visit friends and see the sights, spend some time hiking in the mountains and square dancing in the valleys, and something I have wanted to do for years -- a long distance train ride. Our plans include boarding in Denver, riding to Salt Lake City where we will spend a day sightseeing, and riding back via a different route to Denver. Experience has shown me that the most eagerly awaited things are sometimes the most disappointing, so we'll see how it all turns out.

One of the things we do as a family is read. Most of the time we are all reading different books, but we try to have a "family" book going, too. For this trip the kids selected Miracles on Maple Hill, a Newbery Award winner by Virginia Sorenson, and Cheaper By the Dozen by Frank Gilbreth, Jr. and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey -- an oldie but still a goodie. We have a supply of books-on-tape as well, most notably Hank The Cowdog. Not trip would be complete without Hank, and the tapes capture the spirit of the action much better than the books do.

Getting back to reading as a family -- I highly recommend it. We started years ago -- just the two of us -- reading to each other on trips and A Christmas Carol in season. (James Herriot was a popular choice for us to share, except the last time we tried it, I got all the chapters where the animal dies. I would be trying to read with a lump in my throat, and Linda would be driving holding back tears, so we moved to happier subjects.)

We try to select a book we all will enjoy to read aloud, but something that will challenge the kids a little. Tom Sawyer was a success. Little Britches could not hold the girls' interest, so I finished it by myself (they should have kept with it a little longer). Now we're on The Prince and the Pauper by Mark Twain. I read it myself a few years ago and really enjoyed it, but I forgot how much archaic English he used in the book. Fortunately, the library has an edition that footnotes the unusual terms, and our youngest follows along in it to explain words or phrases we may not understand.

Mark your calendars now to attend the Friends of the Library's annual book sale, October 20-21, Friday evening's preview sale is for members only (memberships may be purchased at the door) and Saturday's sale is open to all. The prices are the same as always -- 10 cents for paperbacks and 25 cents for hardbacks. Sets have special prices. Book bags with the library logo will be available for $7.50. And speaking of the Friends, they have changed their fiscal year to begin on Oct. 1.

Since many members pay their dues at the sale, this will give them a full year of membership. Besides getting first choice at the sale books, members receive a monthly calendar of library "doins", and the opportunity to help at various functions through the year.

Annual memberships are $3 for an individual, $6 for a family, $10 for a club, organization, or business, OR if you would like to do it once and have it done with, $100 buys a lifetime membership!

This is the last week of September. That means our new fiscal year starts next week and that means that we can start buying books again. Actually, we already have, since the bills wouldn't arrive for a while, and some should be arriving this week. We have also received recently a new packet of talking books from Texas Panhandle Library System, so you might want to see what's available there. We'll have this set until December. Among the books going out this week:

I'm Only One Man, an autobiography of Regis Philbin

A biography of Harriet Beecher Stowe

Christmas Scroll Saw Patterns (it's not too early to start!)

The first operating escalator was installed in a New York City elevated train station in 1900.

Creation's Journey: Native American Identity and Belief, and Thin for Life -- 10 Keys to Success from People Who Have Lost

Weights & Kept It Off (probably the only ten people in the world who have!) and ten new fiction titles -- mostly mystery and western -- in large print.

Thank You

The family of George H. Jones wishes to thank all our friends and loved ones for all the food and concern shown to us during our time of sorrow. Special thanks to Ray Sanders for the special service and Darla Stengel for the beautiful music.

Thank You

*We never lose the ones we love
For, even though they're gone,
Within the hearts of those who care,
Their memory lingers on.*

We would like to extend our gratitude to each and every person who sent cards, flowers, plants, food and prayers to us in our time of sorrow as we mourned the death of our mother, grandmother and sister, Martha Bridges. We all have very special memories of her that will last forever.

A very special thank you to Hereford Elks Lodge, VFW Auxiliary, the Rebekahs, the Presbyterian Church, and some very special friends.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Now I've heard everything. You have printed columns about some addle-brained decisions handed down by judges, but this one takes the cake:

Hamilton County, Ohio, municipal judge Albert Mestemaker ordered a man who punched his girlfriend in the mouth to marry her as a condition of his parole. The judge decided it would be better for them and their out-of-wedlock children if they married.

Zauzi Smith, the president of the Cincinnati chapter of the National Organization for Women, was less enthusiastic. She believes the judge's statement sends the wrong message to victims of domestic violence. "It is completely out of line," Smith said. "Why would anybody think that if they were married, he wouldn't hit her?" She added, "The offense of the judge is almost as bad as the offense of the abuser."

After considerable heat from the community, Judge Mestemaker dropped his order but said in closing, "I still think they should marry."

Mobile Shop in Hereford

The Texas Plains Girl Scout Council will bring its Mobile Shop to Hereford on Tuesday to make it easier for Hereford Girl Scouts to obtain official Girl Scout items.

The Mobile Shop will be open from 5:30 p.m.-7 p.m. at the First United Methodist Church, 501 N. Main. Items available will include uniform components, handbooks, tee-shirts, camping equipment and accessories.

Girl Scouts may use the "Cookie Currency" they earned from selling Girl Scout cookies earlier this year. Cookie Currency, which spends just like regular money, must be used by Nov. 30.

The council's Mobile Shop gives Hereford Girl Scouts an opportunity to buy Girl Scout items without having to go to Amarillo.

For more information call Linda Cotter, council shop manager, at 1-800-687-4475.

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Jon Bon Jovi is being sued over a no-show in Peru.

Phantom Productions, a Latin American theatrical promoter, sued the rock singer and his band Tuesday, seeking return of a $155,000 advance, compensation for other expenses and unspecified punitive damages.

The lawsuit alleges that Bon Jovi's agent canceled the November 1993 concert for security reasons and because of Peru's political instability. But a lawyer for the promoter, Michael Novicoff, said the political situation in Peru was "well known" when Bon Jovi agreed to appear there and many other U.S. artists have performed there during and after 1993.

Calls to Creative Artists Agency, which represents Bon Jovi, weren't immediately returned Wednesday.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) - Waylon Jennings is in the hospital and canceled 11 shows this month while he undergoes tests.

The 58-year-old country star has been feeling weak, but doctors had no diagnosis so far, spokeswoman Schatzi Hageman said Friday.

Dr. Taylor Wray, Jennings' physician, said he advised him not to perform "until further notice." A condition report wasn't released.

Where does Ohio find judges like this? -- Boiling Mad

DEAR BOILING: Thanks for your letter and the clipping. I don't know if Judge Mestemaker was elected or appointed, but it seems to me that Ohio can do better. Keep reading for a letter from another reader who is not happy with the law.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: This is in response to your letter about adoption laws. I'm so angry I can barely see to type this.

Since some state courts have changed the laws so that "sperm parents" may now re-enter the lives of the children they discarded, why not add some requirements that would ensure a level playing field?

The adoptive parents should present an itemized bill to the "sperm parents" to cover all expenses incurred in raising and caring for the adopted child. This would include charges for the daily 24-hour baby-sitting, loving, caring and nurturing that the adoptive parents gave so willingly. When the total amount has been paid, the "sperm parents" may then re-enter the life of the child they discarded.

I wonder how many "sperm parents" would still feel the need to contact their adopted child if they had to meet these financial requirements. Not many, I'll bet. The laws regarding adoption are a mess, and I am -- Sad in Illinois

DEAR ILLINOIS: I agree wholeheartedly. A few months ago, the Baby Richard case in Chicago created a great deal of resentment when the 4-year-old child's adoptive parents were forced to return him to his natural father.

Anyone who saw the TV coverage of that badly handled case will vouch for the fact that the biggest loser is Baby Richard. In my opinion, that Illinois Supreme Court decision was a disgrace.

Now that sealed adoption records can be opened, fewer children will be adopted. So again, the losers are the children.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: There are so many automated phone systems that it won't be long until the emergency 900 service sounds like this:

"If you are calling from a touch-tone telephone, press '1.' If you have been in an accident, press '2.' If you are having a heart attack and have difficulty breathing, enter your Social Security number and press the pound key on the lower right of your telephone. Hold for the next available operator." -- Rockville, Md., Futurist

DEAR ROCK: Let's hope it never gets that bad.

"A Collection of My Favorite Gems of the Day" is the perfect little gift for that special someone who is impossible to buy for. Send a self-addressed, long, business-size envelope and a check or money order for $5.25 (this includes postage and handling) to: Collection, c/o Ann Landers, P.O. Master Gardeners are holding a fall gardening class at HCC

As the fall season arrives with the thermometer dropping and the leaves turning, many people consider gardening for 1995 to be past history, but if you hope for a healthy and beautiful yard and garden in 1996, there is still much work to do.

For this reason the Master Gardeners of Deaf Smith County are holding a class titled "Fall Gardening: Preparation for Winter and Spring" and will be given by professionals in the area and Master Gardeners in the county.

The class will be Thursday at 7 p.m. in the lounge of the Hereford Community Center.

Topics to be addressed will be preparing turf grass for winter, feeding trees and shrubs going into cold weather and what to do with your vegetable garden. Other topics will cover preparation of flower beds and borders with a focus on next spring and also selecting and planting spring blooming bulbs for beauty when the earth comes alive after the long, cold winter months.

There is no charge for the class and everyone is welcome and encouraged to attend with their questions and problems.

The Deaf Smith County Master

Gardeners are a group of local gardeners who have completed the course in gardening offered each spring in Amarillo by Texas A&M University through the County Extension agents in the area.

After completion of the required 16 classes, each participant must give a minimum of 50 hours each year to educating people in the community about proper gardening practices in order to maintain their designation as Master Gardeners.

Other classes will be offered in future months by this group, and information on how to become a Master Gardener yourself will be shared.

Members of the Deaf Smith County Master Gardeners are Peggy Hyer, Cal Garrett, Cyndi Walker, Jan Furr, Ella Marie Veigel and Carmen Flood. They would be happy to answer any questions you may have about how to become a Master Gardener.

Information may be obtained at the County Extension office any time.

Maintaining traditional philosophies in church difficult when trying to attract new members to congregation

By STARITA SMITH

Austin American-Statesman
LOCKHART, Texas - With a Bible and a prayer book in his saddlebags, the Rev. Joseph Wood Dunn rode into town in 1853 to start Emmanuel Episcopal Church with a group of 19 men and their families.
The congregation that now worships in the tiny Spanish-style concrete building constructed by Dunn and his parishioners is about the same size as the first one, according to the Rev. Barry Thiering, rector of the church.
Since Thiering became rector four years ago, he has seen weekly attendance double, but the challenge to keep members is constant.
"It is still hard, very, very hard to keep things going," he said.
The struggle for Emmanuel is emblematic of what many mainline Protestant churches face in trying to maintain traditional philosophies and practices while seeking ways to attract the new members they need to remain viable.
To reach out to more people in this town of Lockhart, a city of 10,000 people 25 miles south of Austin, some church leaders have begun evangelizing. There also are more activities for young people and involvement in a variety of civic and social service work.
These types of strategies have become more prominent at denominational churches as the implications of declining attendance have been felt.
"Since the mid-'60s, the mainline Protestant denominations have suffered a decline in membership and financial support and a decrease in influence in the larger culture," said Wade Clark Roof, a professor of religion and society at the University of California at Santa Barbara.
Baby boomers have dropped out of these churches and in many cases embraced evangelical churches instead. Mainline congregations, especially Episcopal, Presbyterian and United Church of Christ, are graying as younger members fall away, Roof said.

Roof wrote that some of the aging pattern reflects the fact that the American population is growing older and that lower birth rates and longer life expectancies have increased average ages. These trends have had a heavy impact on mainline Protestant churches.
The trends put pressure on church members to bring what they see as the positive power of their spirituality to others through evangelizing.

"Most of us are wounded people all seeking to be made whole. We must figure out how the church is going to help ... (us) in our lives," said Patti Payne, an Emmanuel leader.

She and her husband and law partner Todd Blomerth attend evangelical retreats and believe the best way to keep the church alive is by having its members spreading their spiritual beliefs to outsiders.

Even at tiny Emmanuel, there are ongoing conflicting ideas within the congregation. Not everyone believes evangelism is the way to go.

"I'm seeing more (evangelistic activity) in the church, but that is not something that I personally am very interested in," said Linda Maupin, who is a physician's wife and works part time in an antique shop owned by another church member.

"I'm just a little more private about my spirituality. I don't like witnessing. ... I'm probably more conservative, but neither am I really against change in the church as long as change is not a radical type."

Like Maupin, Payne and Blomerth said the church is a sorely needed institution.

"The renewal movement shows us how we can minister to and support each other," Payne said.

"Unless the church can get past the idea that you only go one hour a week, that your faith is cubbyholed in that little niche in time, it's going to fail," said Blomerth.

With that idea in mind, Emmanuel members also volunteer for community social service and civic groups.

While the general population of the United States has steadily increased in recent decades, National Council of Churches statistics show these denominations have not kept pace. As a result, the percentages of the population mainline churches can claim as members have decreased over the years.

At Emmanuel, Thiering estimates the founding congregation at between 80 and 90 people; his current membership is between 90 to 100, with an average weekly attendance of 64 worshippers.

Baby boom seekers have "a broader world view" and don't believe that one church is the only way, said Dean Hoje, a sociology professor at the Catholic University of America.

"The churches that have lost people are Episcopal, Presbyterian and United Church of Christ - the oldest, most established and most elite," he said. "The ones that have grown are a new grouping of Pentecostals - Assemblies of God is one - and Mormons, and the (California-based) Vineyard Fellowship."

Steiert captures honors at Better Bake Show

Jaime Steiert, Deaf Smith County 4-Her, baked her way to a third place win in the Panhandle 4-H Better Bake Show.

The contest is held in conjunction with the Tri-State Fair and culminates workshops and learning experiences in the area of wheat production, uses in making food products and importance of the commodity in the economy of the Texas Panhandle.

Jaime baked Pumpkin Bread using a blend of whole wheat flour and enriched all purpose flour for her entry. Judges complimented the blending of spice flavors in her entry.

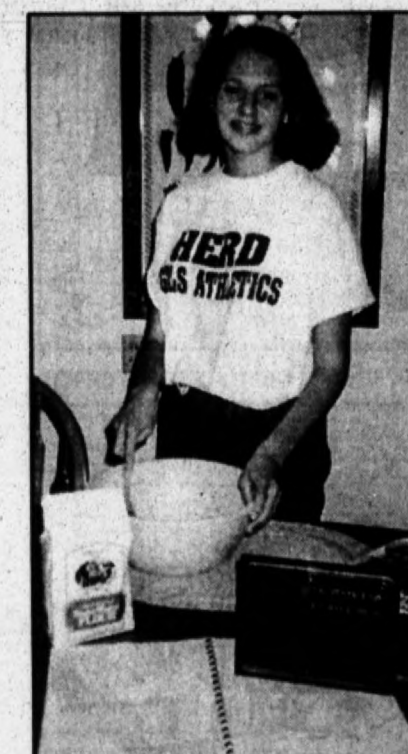

The contest was sponsored by the Tri-State Fair Association, who provided prizes of bread maker, mixer and bakeware to the top three winners, Texas Wheat Producers Association who provided plaques to each of the winners, and Arrowhead Mills of Hereford provided packages of flour to each of the participants.

Pumpkin Bread

1 1/2 cup white sugar
1 1/2 cup brown sugar
4 eggs
1 16 oz. can of pumpkin
1 cup oil
4 tsp. cinnamon
1/4 tsp. ginger
2 tsp. nutmeg
1/2 tsp. cloves
1/2 tsp. mace
1 1/2 tsp. salt
2 tsp. soda
2/3 cup water
2 1/4 cup white flour
1 1/4 cup wheat flour

Cream sugars, eggs, oil and pumpkin in large bowl. Combine spices, salt and soda in small bowl and mix well before adding to large bowl. Pour in water. Add flours while stirring. Grease and flour loaf pan before filling with bread batter.

Bake at 350 degrees for 1 hour. (This recipe can also be baked in coffee cans, which work well for freezing.)

—YOUR EYES—

ANTI-GLARE COATINGS

To cut the glare that often interferes with vision, many eyeglass wearers have discovered the advantages of anti-reflective coatings for their lenses.

The kind of coating can almost completely avoid the starburst effect created by oncoming headlights on the road at night, and limit the glare from other kinds of lighting as well. It can eliminate the annoyance of seeing your own eye or eyelashes in your glasses, or seeing double when looking at a bright light. At the same time, the anti-glare coating does away with the light that reflects off your own eyeglasses, so that viewers are able to see your eyes, too.

On the downside—and it is minimal—that coating seems to make the glasses smudge up more than others do, so that it's a little more difficult to keep lenses clean. In the works is a Teflon coating that goes over the anti-glare coating to eliminate the problem.

MINDING YOUR OWN BUSINESS

Don Taylor

SLED DOG PHILOSOPHY

Someone once made the observation that only the lead dog in the sled dog team has an unobstructed view of what's in front of him. You can say the same thing for the typical small business owner. Usually, he or she is the only one in the organization who knows where the team is headed.

In a small business, the owner exchanges the great view for the responsibility of setting the pace and establishing the direction for everyone else. It's tough to be the leader because you're often out front by yourself. Here are some tips that will help you set the pace, establish direction and motivate the team.

Doggone good ideas

• Pick good dogs. President Franklin D. Roosevelt admitted publicly that he wasn't the brightest or most talented leader this country ever had. To compensate, he surrounded himself with the best and brightest in our nation. Then he empowered his "brain trust" of key employees with the authority to make decisions in their areas of responsibility.

I've observed that most small business owners hire too quickly and fire too slowly. By spending more time on the selecting and hiring process, you'll get better employees. Reward them well, and let them help you pull the sled.

• Plan before you pack the sled. Too often I see bright talented men and women load their sled, harness a team and then ask themselves where they are going.

By planning first and implementing later you can get a good idea of how large a sled you'll need and how many dogs it will take to pull it. You will also have time to plot a safe, comfortable course and select a trail to follow.

Following your plan all through the journey will keep you from getting lost along the way. Which reminds me of the two sled dog drivers who were hopelessly lost in the Yukon. The first one asked, "Do you have any idea where we are?" The second replied, "No, but we're making great time."

• Teach old dogs new tricks. Every team member can benefit from building new skills and learning new techniques. No dog is too old to learn. Some are more stubborn than others and resist change with all their might, but with proper motivation you can teach them.

Some of the strongest, most effective business teams are cross-trained so there is never an empty slot in the harness. If a dog drops out, another can quickly step into its place.

• If you're the leader, stay out in front. There are many styles of leadership. Some leaders are pushers. They lead from behind with a whip. Some leaders are yellers. They holler "hurry up" from the back of the pack. The best leaders are out in front. They are always in sight of the team, they don't get too far ahead and they make certain that the team is following.

• Share the view. When you're out front you truly have the unobstructed view. The great leaders communicate their vision to the rest of the team.

Even the dogs at the back of the pack want to know where the team is headed. How long is the journey? How rough is the trail? Who else is in the race? Can we win? Do I get a bigger bone if we do? (I'll leave the translation of the dog questions up to you.)

I believe in open-book management, where leaders share not only the mission and vision of the company, but also its financial performance. Then they give every employee a stake in improving the operation. The team concept works best when all team members know where they are headed, what is expected of each of them and how they are doing.

Noise will be reduced with interior insulation

Home has always been a busy place... and a noisy one. What with activities such as the kids' music practice, plus TV, appliances, computer printers, or even animated conversation when friends come over.

What to do when mom or dad just want to read the paper or relax? When kids need to concentrate on homework? The answer is interior-wall insulation that reduces noise between rooms.

When you add on a room, or take on a major remodeling project, start at the beginning - with what's inside your walls.

Insulation for exterior walls, floors and ceilings will cut your fuel bills and make your home more comfortable.

Adding interior-wall insulation, however, helps make your home a haven by reducing noise from plumbing pipes, heating and cooling units, and everyday living.

You can install interior-wall insulation, such as Schuller GoldLine™ R-11 ProPak™ Batts or PowerPak™ Rolls, when your walls are moved, installed or refaced with new wallboard.

It is better to ask some of the questions than to know all of the answers.

Woman watched family, ranch flourish then die

For the past four years she has kept vigil in hospitals, courtrooms

By MICHAEL RAMEY
Longview News-Journal
LONGVIEW, Texas - Carla Robertson has watched a family and a ranch flourish, then die.

For the past four years, she has kept vigil in hospitals and courtrooms. She has watched her 4-year-old son die of cancer and has helped her father grapple with the disease. Now doctors fear her mother too has cancer. During this time, Carla also fought a battle in court, taking on chemical companies associated with a well site on her Panola County property where she says all her problems began.

The scars of these trials are vivid in her voice, in her eyes and in her determination. She has lived a lifetime in her 29 years, and is beginning anew with the memory of her late son as her guide.

Carla's odyssey began four years ago. Some two dozen horses and colts on her large ranch in Clayton, a tiny community just west of Carthage in Panola County, had become sick, and many ultimately died.

Carla believed the problem stemmed from chemicals used at a gas well on the land and she set out to prove it.

Over the following months, she contacted every state agency she believed would help find the problem. Texas Railroad Commission officials said their soil analysis showed no contamination. The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department took samples at the site, but did not complete tests because there was no evidence of adverse effects on wildlife. And the Texas Water Commission said the location was not within its jurisdiction.

After six months of fighting to save the lives of the few horses she had left, Carla found herself battling a new foe - neuroblastoma - a rare form of cancer which had ripped through the body of her 2-year-old son, Carl.

She moved out of her home, renting one 10 miles away. She again blamed the well site and vowed to prove it caused her son's illness.

In March 1992, as Carl fought his way through chemotherapy and radiation treatments, his mother filed suit in Harris County state district court against Texas Utilities Fuel Co., Snyder Oil Corp. and others.

While the legal skirmishing dragged on for three years, Carla made 87 trips from Panola County to Galveston's John Sealy hospital for Carl's treatments.

"He hated the hospital. He would cry and scream through the whole four-hour trip from Panola County to Galveston," Carla recalls. "Do you know what that does to a mother? I watched him suffer through treatment after treatment, and at times had to hold him down while the doctors and nurses worked."

Carla tried everything to nurse her son back to health, even delving into alternative treatments involving diet and vitamins.

In April 1993, while her lawsuit sat in the courts, Carla became pregnant. Two-and-a-half months later, Carl relapsed for the final time.

"He fought it to the bitter end. He was in excruciating pain and was so frail he couldn't even sit up," she said. "One day, about three weeks before he died, Carl asked me if it made me sad to see him hurt. How do you answer that?"

Carl died Nov. 23, 1993.

Carla gave birth to a son, Kelton, two months after Carl died. But it would be March 1995 before her lawsuit would see the inside of a courtroom - only a few weeks after her father, who also lived on the well-site property, was diagnosed with cancer of the bladder.

Texas Utilities Fuel Co. "resolved the claim before trial" with Carla, said Kathi Miller, TU spokeswoman, who declined to comment further. Snyder Oil Corp. took its defense before a jury.

Snyder Oil stated in court documents that Carl's cancer and death was caused "by an act of God," and was in no way related to the well site. The company's attorneys told the court that the well site had been maintained to U.S. Occupation Safety and Health Administration regulations and denied that it was "defective" in any way.

"Everything out there is common to well sites everywhere, and in no way violates regulations covering such sites," said Devon Decker, Houston-based attorney for Snyder.

Carla's attorneys came armed with dozens of soil and ground water analyses from the gas well site. They gathered experts from throughout the state and the nation to review the data and, in many cases, testify in court.

Dr. Malcolm Skolnick, University of Texas Health Center-Houston director of technology management and professor of health, law and technology, was one such expert.

Skolnick said he found high levels of radiation, heavy metals and chlorides at and around the well site.

"I found radiation levels in the area where tanks once stood to be excessively high - in some cases 10-20 times higher than normal for the area," Skolnick said. "I am talking about dangerous levels of (radioactive isotopes) Radium 226 and 228."

Court records show Skolnick and other experts reported they also found higher than normal levels of the metals lead, arsenic and chromium, as well as the carcinogen benzene.

"I have seen some cases where the naturally occurring radioactive material (NORM) brought up in wells was excessive, but never have I seen a case before where there was such a plenitude of heavy metals, NORMs and petroleum distillates," he told the Longview News-Journal. "The pollution was so widespread, you could see a track of dead vegetation all over the property and into the neighbor's property."

In court, Carla's experts cited Texas Railroad Commission reports, including one outlining a 300-barrel drilling mud and saltwater spill. William F. Wilson, geologist and consultant in the case, reported to the court that the presence of elevated levels of sodium, chlorides and radiation "indicate a massive salt water release has occurred over a very wide area over a considerable length of time."

Even with all the site-test evidence presented by experts, Carla's case was hampered by the lack of research on childhood neuroblastoma.

"There just haven't been a lot of studies done on childhood cancers, other than leukemia. Even fewer on neuroblastoma," said Martha Adams, Carla's attorney in the case.

Adams said the key was that benzene and other chemicals found at the well site are known to cause cancer in humans, and were found in exceptionally high levels within the family's environment.

Decker disagrees. "It was a tragedy. But tragedies happen and sometimes cancer happens to people. There is not always something out there to blame it on."

The case went to the jury, but after three days of deliberations, Snyder Oil settled with Carla.

"What we had was the tragic circumstances of a young boy who suffered from cancer and was in pain for quite some time before his death," Decker said. "This was a very difficult thing for a defendant to deal with during a trial."

The monetary amount of Snyder Oil's settlement is sealed by a court order. However, in a May 9 news release, the company reported a $6 million loss, "$4.4 million related to the settlement of litigation as well as additional severance costs in connection with a reduction in personnel."

The release says "The litigation settlement related to a suit filed in Harris County, Texas, by certain landowners relating to certain alleged problems at a Company well site."

In its settlement agreement, Snyder Oil promised to purchase the well-site property and Carla's parents' home, located on the land.

The company also pledged to fund a remediation study to be used by a state mediator, who will recommend a cleanup plan for the well site.

Carla's parents moved from the site less than a month ago, and a retired judge in charge of the cleanup said the studies were just beginning.

With the settlement, Carla has set up the nonprofit Carl Robertson Foundation in memory of her son. Its goals are to help fund research projects on childhood cancers, such as neuroblastoma, and to help make people aware of the environmental dangers which may surround them.

"I didn't want to file the lawsuit, and once I did, I didn't want to settle," Carla said recently. "But with my father's fight with cancer, I wanted to make his life easier and carry out my mission for Carl - not be caught up in endless court appeals, which would have happened had we received a favorable jury verdict."

To further her purpose, Carla has purchased a 40-acre ranch just east of Nacogdoches, where she has begun raising paint horses. She wants the ranch to be a place where underprivileged children can get out of the city and back to nature. "There is nothing better to capture a child's attention than a horse."

She also hopes the ranch will help return normalcy to her son Kelton's life after a tumultuous beginning for him.

Carla said she hopes to base the Carl Robertson Foundation's office in Carthage, where her fight began.

"I promised Carl that I would do what I could to ensure no other child had to suffer the way he did. That is why I continued to fight the way I did, and why I decided the best way to honor him - his kindness, his strength and his courage - was through a namesake foundation."

"I was given the honor of knowing him, and if this saves one child, it's worth it."

Insects getting ready to 'dig in' for winter

WASHINGTON (AP) - With the beginning of autumn just days away, many insects are preparing to dig in for the winter - and survive the freezing weather that's ahead.

Scientists don't know exactly how they do it, but they know that many insects - including the pesky fruit fly and the common house fly - produce specific proteins that protect them when the mercury dips below freezing.

Agricultural Research Service scientists have identified several of the proteins produced by the tiny insect known as the "no-see-em," which transmits bluetongue virus.

Bluetongue disease causes about $120 million in annual losses to domestic livestock producers. Attempts to halt transmission of the disease are hampered by the ability of the insect carrying the virus to survive the winter, researchers said.

"The quantity of proteins the insects produce is proportional to the severity and duration of the cold," Richard A. Nunamaker, an entomologist at an ARS laboratory in Laramie, Wyo., said in the September issue of USDA's Agricultural Research magazine.

The no-see-em, known scientifically as Culicoides variipennis sonoriensis, produces the protective proteins during a process of acclimation called cold-hardening.

It may be possible, he said, to interrupt the cold-hardening process through genetic manipulation, and reduce the likelihood that bluetongue virus would survive cold weather.

Retained ownership option for producers

AMARILLO -- With Today's prices for weaned calves, a growing number of cow/calf producers are considering the options of continuing ownership of calves beyond the ranch gate, says Dr. Ted McCollum, area beef cattle specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, headquartered in Amarillo.

Retaining ownership offers the opportunity to capture more value from weaned calves but increased profits are not guaranteed. McCollum is advising producers to look at all the aspects involved before moving into the program.

Taking the long view is crucial especially when grain prices may be rising and cattle markets are moving lower. Profit margins start narrowing in such circumstances, the specialist said. Several factors need to be considered and it doesn't matter whether the livestock go directly to the feedyard or grazing program.

"Pricing calves into retained ownership budgets should be according to prevailing offers," he said. And, include the costs of preconditioning, transportation and health. Use good numbers for animal feeding on pasture and supplements, or feedlot rations. It is important to include interest accruing on any livestock loans, the specialist said.

Death loss should be estimated and accurate projections made on the number of days on feed or pasture, including weight gains on feed conversion rates.

"The producer's best estimates will be derived from past experience, but when the numbers aren't readily available," McCollum said, "calling on county agents, feedlot managers and ranchers nearby will help."

"It's not a process solely about profits, nor should decisions be driven by improving profits alone," he added.

Managing risk and developing strategies to increase profits becomes paramount. If the producer isn't using options and futures, or is not comfortable with these tools, feedlot managers, commodity brokers and Extension Service economists often can provide the help required.

"When producer can target their price range based on budgeted breakevens and profit margins, then having the information aids them in making sound decisions," he said.

Still another consideration is the producer's tax liability. Income from calf sales are deferred in retained ownership programs and this may affect tax obligations in future years.

For more information on retained ownership and other livestock issues, contact Dr. Ted McCollum, area Extension beef cattle specialist at the Texas A&M Research and Extension Center located in Amarillo, (806) 359-5401.

Rio Grande Valley faces worst crop ever

By PAULINE ARRILLAGA
Associated Press Writer

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) - One of the worst cotton seasons in Rio Grande Valley history has ended, and the final numbers are even more dismal than initially projected.

"They're historical lows," Wayne Labar, executive director of the Rio Grande Valley Cotton and Grain Producers, said Thursday. "It's the worst anybody's ever seen."

This season's 370,000-acre crop in the Valley's four cotton-producing counties yielded 54,101 bales, according to the Valley Co-op Oil Mill of Harlingen.

That's compared with a total of 307,943 bales last year, 333,228 bales in 1993, 266,439 bales in 1992 and 338,549 bales in 1991.

The disaster cost cotton growers at least $140 million in gross sales, Labar said.

Bale production was much lower than growers and economists had anticipated earlier in the season, when they first realized that drought, heat and an unusually strong pest invasion would take its toll.

Labar had estimated the crop between 125,000 and 150,000 bales.

"I don't think anybody anticipated this or they wouldn't have planted that much cotton," he said. "Nobody expected this."

The U.S. Department of Agriculture on Wednesday designated three South Texas counties as disaster areas. The designation allows family-sized farm operators to be considered for low-interest emergency loans from the Consolidated Farm Service Agency.

Financial stability following this season will play an important role in next year's crop, said John Norman, a cotton entomologist with the Texas Agriculture Extension Service in Weslaco.

"What happened this year is going to influence how growers are financed for the 1996 season because a disaster of this magnitude puts a lot of pressure on the grower and puts a lot of pressure on the banker," Norman said.

Growers who do get refinanced may choose to avoid cotton and another possible disaster, Norman said.

Breakdown of bale production

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) - A breakdown of bale production for the four cotton-producing counties in the Rio Grande Valley compared with last year's count, according to the Valley Co-op Oil Mill of Harlingen:

Hidalgo County - 28,677 in 1995, 97,372 in 1994
Cameron County - 15,516 in 1995, 95,804 in 1994
Willacy County - 7,595 in 1995, 111,454 in 1994
Starr County - 2,313 in 1995, 3,313 in 1994

Agriculture Briefs

Agricultural Research.

The plants grow to be about 5 feet tall.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A microbe found in municipal sewage sludge may be ideal for breaking down weed-killing chemicals rinsed from tractor-drawn spray tanks, researchers report.

Now, farmers must store this contaminated rinse water while they look for an environmentally safe disposal site.

Agricultural Research Service scientists have been able to treat the rinse water with the microbe, called Klebsiella terrigena. After 24 hours of mixing the two, about all that's left is carbon dioxide and water, which farmers can safely dump on the ground, ARS said.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Farm income is expected to be between $40 billion and $50 billion this year - about the same as the 1990-94 annual average, the Agriculture Department forecasts.

Prices for agricultural products should be higher because of the smaller harvests this year, and that could push farm receipts to a record high. Livestock receipts, however, may be lower than the five-year average because large supplies have depressed prices.

Also, grain prices are higher, so government payments in the range of $5 billion to $7 billion this year probably won't stretch quite as far.

Recent figures on 1994 net farm income put the total at $46.7 billion, up about $4.7 billion from the previous year. Gains from 1994's record crops were offset at least partly by lower harvest prices, the department said.

At $147 billion, highest since 1986, total farm business debt was about $5 billion higher in 1994 than the previous year. But even though farmers didn't have as much cash to pay down that debt, the growth in farm borrowing "does not appear to place an unmanageable burden on the sector's ability to repay," the USDA report said.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Agricultural researchers have developed a new variety of blueberries formulated for pick-your-own farms and backyard gardeners that should be available in limited numbers by 1997.

The new variety, developed by USDA's Agricultural Research Service, produces high yields of large berries that mature later in the season than Bluecrop, which has been the standard since 1952.

The berries were designed to be picked by hand over several weeks in July and August, according to ARS, which described the research that developed the berries in the September issue of its publication,

Farmer Stockman Show to be held in Lubbock

Five hundred acres of west Texas will be the center of attention for thousands of farmers and ranchers October 10-12 as the third annual Texas Farmer-Stockman Show kicks off in Lubbock.

The show, sponsored by the Texas Farmer-Stockman magazine and Farm Progress companies, is the largest "working show" in the southwestern United States, drawing visitors from Texas and surrounding states, says Monica Hightower, show manager.

The show runs from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day, October 10-12, at its permanent site just outside Lubbock's southeast loop on 50th Street. Admission is $3 for adults, students and children under 18 are admitted free. Once you get there's plenty of parking and a shuttle system to deliver you to the exhibit field.

To Your Good Health

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Can you stand one more question on gout? My husband, 50, had an interesting spell with his ankle. Out of the blue, while sitting at a restaurant, he had a sharp pain in his ankle. I thought of gout, and he had been drinking a few beers. But his ankle had a swelling also. It hurt all evening, until he took Nuprin for it. He hasn't had it since. Does this sound like gout to you? — Mrs. E.

ANSWER: Several of your husband's signs point to gout.

There are five, in fact:
• A gouty joint may be swollen.
• Age 50 is a prime time for gout.
• Gout usually does occur with an explosive onset of pain in a joint on one side of the body.

• Alcohol can be a pain trigger for gout-prone people.

• Anti-inflammatory medicines such as the one your husband took are often effective in easing an attack — a negative diagnostic clue, so to speak.

Actual diagnosis comes with finding of uric-acid crystals in the fluid of the painful joint. Also the blood shows a high level of uric acid.

We usually mention the big toe joint as the classic gout target, but others, including the ankle, are often first to be affected.

Pseudogout is another possibility. It has similar symptoms, but calcium pyrophosphate crystals are present, instead of the uric-acid kind.

If your husband had a gout attack, you can bet on a subsequent one unless he sees a doctor. Gout and pseudogout can be treated and prevented.

For further discussion, see my gout report. Readers can order it by writing: Dr. Donohue — No. 13, Box 5539, Riverton, NJ 08077-5539. Enclose $3 and a self-addressed, stamped (55 cents) No. 10 envelope.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I am a moderately active 22-year-old woman. I've been diagnosed with costochondritis, with swollen ribs and sternum. It causes a great deal of discomfort. What is costochondritis, and where does it come from?

Is it related to other problems, such as bowel problems or stomach pain? — D.M.

ANSWER: "Chondro" means "cartilage." "Costo" means "ribs."

Cartilage anchors your ribs to your sternum. It's when you add inflammation to the equation that you come up with costochondritis, a painful disturbance of one or more of the cartilage-bone junctures.

I can sympathize with you. Costochondritis can be mighty painful. Involuntary acts of sharp breathing, coughing or sneezing become torture. Twisting the body invites deep pain in the area.

I can't say why your inflammation came about. I don't think anyone can give you a satisfactory answer at this point.

Anti-inflammatories such as indomethacin often suffice, and if not, a carefully placed cortisone injection in the pain area can do the job.

I can't relate stomach pain or constipation to costochondritis. Those should be explored for other answers.

You might have seen Tietze's syndrome mentioned here. It is another name for costochondritis.

DEAR DOCTOR: At 80, I'm having cataract surgery. I have a red vein-like streak in the eye white. Is it serious? — Mrs. M.S.

ANSWER: It could be something irritating your eye — an ingrown lash, for example. It could be a bit of dust embedded in the underlid, irritating with each blink. It could mean nothing more than a drying out of the structure, one of the less-welcome companions of aging.

It is not likely to interfere with the cataract removal planned. You can be sure your eye doctor will evaluate it before surgery.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him at P.O. Box 5539, Riverton, NJ 08077-5539.

Rock music documentary proves the beat goes on

BY AMY HIBBERT

Lenny Kravitz is singing "Rock 'n' roll is dead," but PBS knows differently.

Premiering Sunday, Sept. 24 (check local listings), PBS takes a wild trip down memory lane to look at the evolution of this innovative style of music in the documentary Rock & Roll.

The special, which airs in five parts from Sunday to Thursday, Sept. 28, explores the different performers, musical ingredients and social events that shaped rock into what it is today.

"We ... wanted to focus on the innovators, those artists, producers, session musicians and others who actually managed to change the music, to keep it dynamic and alive," executive producer Elizabeth Deane says.

And the documentary does just that. Viewers hear firsthand accounts about famous artists from people who played a part in the success of performers like Jerry Lee Lewis and Elvis Presley, as well as the musicians themselves.

Producer Sam Phillips shares his memories of recording the music of singers like bluesman B.B. King and discovering a young Presley. Cholly Atkins remembers his days choreographing moves for various acts at Motown. And Maxine Powell talks about the different groups, including the Supremes, who attended her Motown finishing school.

Rock doesn't take a step-by-step chronological look at the history of music, though. Instead, it explores the different styles of music, how they overlapped and distinguished themselves, as well.

"I saw that it was going to be, above all, a serious look at the music and where it came from and a serious recognition of the fact that it isn't created by a few stars, it's created by singers ... great producers and songwriters, recording engineers, session musicians, stage designers," says Robert Palmer, prominent music critic and creative consultant for the special. "It shows you rock 'n' roll as a collaborative art form."

Packed with interviews, archival footage and an abundance of music, the special is sure to keep even non-lovers of rock tapping their toes and snapping their fingers.

The melody begins Sunday with a look at the pioneers of rock. From Fats Domino's "Blueberry Hill" to Presley's hound dog, Rock explores the mixed sounds of jazz, rhythm and blues, country and gospel, that combined to form the early stages of rock.

"Rock began as the music of outsiders, the music of youth and rebellion and freedom," Deane comments. "But, it has emerged as the music that dominates our culture - it's the soundtrack for the last half-century."

Subsequent episodes focus on different facets of rock music, exploring each style's evolution and development.

"There's a strong sense of story and theme in each program, and a strong sense of place," Deane says.

The documentary also examines world events that had an impact on the development of rock, the most influential being the civil rights movement.

Performers like Bob Dylan sang protest songs about civil rights, and the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr. proved to be a turning point for black music. Attitudes of black singers changed as gospel-based music declined and a more rhythmic funk, such as James Brown's "Say It Loud, I'm Black and I'm Proud," emerged.

The music documentary successfully proves the beat still goes on.

Bogart's son addresses father, his legacy, in volume, 'Bogart: In Search of My Father'

(EDITOR'S NOTE: "Bogart: In Search of My Father" will soon be available at Deaf Smith County Library. "Play It Again" is now available at the library.)

By BOB THOMAS

Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - At 8 years old, Stephen Humphrey Bogart was living a sheltered and privileged life as son of two much-loved movie stars when his world was shattered by the death from lung cancer of his famous father.

Now 46, Bogart finally has come to grips with his father's legacy in a new book, "Bogart: In Search of My Father," published by Dutton. It is a heartfelt story, marked by loneliness, rebellion, a broken marriage, drugs and ultimate redemption.

Why did he wait so long to write his story?

"Because the time wasn't right," he said in an interview from his home in New Jersey. "There were so many things I had to go through, so many things I had to deal with."

"You know what I really think it is? Maturity. At some point in your life you can deal with things that were problems in your past. It came to that point. I was in the right frame of mind. That's why I wrote it then."

In the book, Bogart is sometimes critical of his mother, Lauren Bacall, particularly in her leaving him for four months to accompany her husband, Humphrey, on the African location of "The African Queen."

Bacall's reaction?

"She doesn't agree with everything," Stephen Bogart says. "I think that's good, from my perspective, because we're coming from different points of view. But she supported it. She's been long trying to get me to reconcile my feelings about my father, about celebrity in general, and the problems in my life."

"This (book) is very cathartic and therapeutic, and I think she definitely supports it. She wrote the forward."

Bogart said he wrote the book in seven months, assisted by Gary Provost, who has since died. It is a hybrid: part biography of Humphrey Bogart, part autobiography, dwelling on Stephen Humphrey Bogart's troubles in dealing with second-hand fame.

"I resented Humphrey Bogart for reasons I only now understand," he writes, "and for almost four decades I avoided learning about him, talking about him, and thinking about him."

The actor, who had his first child at 45, was not an attentive parent, Stephen said.

"My father liked the idea of having kids. He was proud of (sister) Leslie and me, and he would never hurt us or neglect our basic needs. But he was not about to integrate us into his life. Kids had to fit into his life, where it was comfortable for him."

Stephen recalls sailing on his father's beloved yacht, Santana, and sharing lunch at Romanoff's. More vivid are the grim months as the boy watched his father decline to 85 pounds as cancer destroyed him.

The boy was to suffer another trauma. His nanny took him to the airport for Bacall's departure to a film location in Europe. After the plane had left, the nanny fell dead of a cerebral hemorrhage, Stephen in his arms.

Stephen admits that he was a rebellious student, getting expelled from most of his schools. Part of the reason was his fellow students' attitude toward his father's fame.

"Bogie's reputation has often made normal conversation difficult," he writes. "It brought me attention I didn't want. And often it has deprived me of attention that I did want. And it has sometimes made me distrustful of friendly people. It has, I am forced to admit, placed that big chip on my shoulder."

Bogart has also written a mystery, "Play It Again."

"I'd like to continue with my mystery novels," he said. "But boy, it's tough out there. There's a guy named Grisham, and I hear his latest book was 2 million copies. I'm going, 'Holy cow!'"

THE WONDERFUL SEVEN WONDERS

Have you ever wondered about the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World? They are made up of the greatest feats of ancient technology, architecture, and art...

All have disappeared except the Great Pyramids of Egypt. They include:

1. The Colossus of Rhodes: A bronze statue of a young god wearing a sunray crown and looking out to sea. The Colossus of Rhodes was built by the citizens of Rhodes in 305 B.C. Many stories have exaggerated the size of this statue, but it was estimated at 120 feet high. Although it was reinforced with stone and iron, the Colossus broke at the knees and fell in an earthquake 60 years later. It remained a wonder until the Arab invasion (AD 653), when it was broken up and sold for scrap metal.
2. The Hanging Gardens of Babylon: Although nobody knows for sure, the Hanging Gardens of Babylon are said to be built for the wife of King Nebuchadnezzar II to remind her of her mountainous homeland. This terraced garden was thought to be comprised of a 23 foot wall which trees had been planted to create majestic view.
3. The Tomb at Halicarnassus: A massive tomb built for a Ruler of Persia, Mausolus, its roof was a 24-step pyramid with a chariot on top. This tomb became so famous that now all large tombs are called mausoleums.
4. The Pharos of Alexandria: The prototype for ancient lighthouses, the Pharos of Alexandria was a rectangular, tiered tower that stood 400 feet high. It had a wood fire burning on top. The 15th-century fort of Qait Bay now stands on its ruins.
5. The Pyramids of Egypt: The only standing of the Wonders today, the Pyramids were old before the other six wonders were built. They were giant tombs built for ancient Egyptian Kings (pharaohs). The largest is the Great Pyramid of Khufu, which stands 482 feet high with a base of 755 sq. ft.
6. The Statue of Zeus at Olympia: Made of Gold and Ivory, this statue was approximately 40 feet high. The figure sat on an elaborate throne covered with ebony, glass, and gemstone inlays. In front of the figure was a stone basin filled with oil to protect it from the damp air of Olympia. The famous Athenian sculptor Phidias made the figure in a special workshop behind the temple.
7. The Temple of Artemis at Ephesus: With a base of 377 by 180 feet, this roofless temple housed a primitive statue of Artemis. The columns of the porch carried reliefs of mythical characters and inscriptions recording donations by King Croesus of Lydia. The original structure burned in the rebellion of 356 BC and was rebuilt on a higher base. It was finally destroyed by the Goths in AD 263.

HOROSCOPES

★ ★ September 24-30 ★ ★

ARIES -- March 21/April 20
Try not to be too difficult with others this week. Be more understanding and less critical. Giving a show of affection will be a much-appreciated treat to a loved one starving for your attention. A favor you once did for someone will be returned in an odd way. Finances look good.

TAURUS -- April 21/May 21
Don't make promises you know you can't keep or you could end up hurting a loved one. Learn to say "no." Minor problems that crop up at work could end up being a lesson for future projects. Policy could be changed for the better. Emotions and business are a bad combination.

GEMINI -- May 22/June 21
A long-term plan may have to be revised because of an unexpected mishap. Let creative thinking be your guide. A friend's actions may be the source of disappointment. Don't take it personally. There could be motive of which you are not aware. Dress your best on Saturday.

CANCER -- June 22/July 22
Think twice before borrowing money from a relative. There could be more to pay back than you realize. A troubled friend will need your shoulder to cry on. A few kind words will go a very long way. Education and learning play a major role towards the end of the week. Be open to new ideas.

LEO -- July 23/August 23
A busier-than-usual social schedule may interfere with work and household tasks. While these things are not as much fun as socializing, you will have to tend to them at one point or another. Something will have to give. Single Leos could be faced with a complex and difficult decision.

VIRGO -- Aug 24/Sept 22
A recent disagreement with a loved one will weigh heavily on your mind. Instead of holding a grudge, think of a way to smooth things over. This is especially true if you're involved with a Taurus. Be constructive rather than destructive. Your eye for detail saves the day on an important project.

LIBRA -- Sept 23/Oct 23
Let your aggressive side take over in business matters. Take the initiative and you will make things happen. A few late nights are sure to pay off. A good time for closeness and romance. A loved one will surprise you with an extra-special treat. Be sure to show your appreciation. Keep an eye on spending.

SCORPIO -- Oct 24/Nov 22
A stubborn attitude will get you nowhere -- especially in the workplace. Resistance to change will only prolong the agony. Cooperation is not such a bad thing, you'll see. A favorite possession that has been lost for some time will finally show up. Romantic moments are in store.

SAGITTARIUS -- Nov 23/Dec 21
Too-high expectations will put a major strain on a romantic relationship -- especially if it is relatively new. Be realistic or you could let a good thing get away. If you have an important meeting scheduled, be sure to give yourself extra time. Young children are in the picture this week.

CAPRICORN -- Dec 22/Jan 20
Work and day-to-day activities will consume your time and energy. Consider taking a day off just to recharge your batteries. Your productivity level could go up 100 percent! Thoughts of a past love make you nostalgic for a time long ago. Can you be the person you once were?

AQUARIUS -- Jan 21/Feb 18
Upsetting news regarding a close friend will make you grateful for what you have. You may be asked to give your time to someone in need. Look at things from the outside to see what you're really up against. A financial decision needs to be made. Don't procrastinate!

PISCES -- Feb 19/March 20
A can-do attitude is what you need to succeed in business. Negativity will only lead to unhappiness and possible failure. Be positive and you'll get far. Your deep, emotional side may be too heavy for a loved one. Keep to yourself if you're feeling moody. Plans could be cancelled this weekend.

YOUR BIRTHDAY THIS WEEK

The next 12 months:
What was important to you this time last year may not hold as much water now. Your shift in priorities will have you focused in an entirely new direction. A loved one's success will have a very positive impact on you this winter. A friendship could become strained this year if you're not careful. If you hold a grudge, it could be lost forever. Don't let pride get in the way of years of friendship. Single? If so, this could be a slow year in the romance department. But don't let it get you down. Remember, good things come to those who wait. Luck will be on your side this spring. Summer brings a learning experience.

IN FOCUS

Mel Gibson battles crime for a third time in Lethal Weapon III, airing Sunday, Sept. 24, on ABC.

Gibson stars as Detective Martin Riggs, a reckless risk-taker. Danny Glover plays his partner, Detective Roger Murtaugh, a loving family man who just wants to retire quietly.

That is not to be the case, though. The detectives find themselves in the thick of things, yet again, when they investigate an armed robbery and discover an ex-policeman is selling confiscated guns.

HIGHLIGHTS

Ed O'Neill (Married... With Children) plays Dr. Monochian, head of a group of young scientists in W.E.I.R.D. World, Fox's Tuesday movie. W.E.I.R.D. is one of many new movies airing this week.

TV movies put familiar faces in odd places this week

BY JOHN CROOK

Several familiar TV actors turn up in unexpected roles during this eclectic week at the (TV) movies.

The least definable entry (and unavailable for preview) is W.E.I.R.D. World, an offbeat thriller set in the near future from several of the creative forces behind Tales From the Crypt. Premiering Tuesday, Sept. 26, it focuses on a group of young scientists at the Wilson Emery Institute for Research and Development (W.E.I.R.D.).

Ed O'Neill sheds his familiar Married... With Children persona for a cameo role as their supervisor.

The week's quality offering is NBC's The Unspoken Truth, bowing Sunday, Sept. 24. Lea Thompson (Caroline in the City) goes through agonies of every description in this abuse drama that rises above the usual TV movie standard. If Patricia Kalember's role as her sibling is not a far cry from her Sisters environment, check out who plays her husband: Robert Englund, best known as Freddy Krueger from the Nightmare on Elm Street shockers.

Also Sunday, CBS' Whose Daughter Is She? casts two well-known actresses as adversaries in a bitter custody dispute. Stephanie Zimbalist, the plucky and level-headed Laura Holt from Remington Steele, stars as Cathy, an overwhelmed young wife and mother who abruptly abandons her husband and two toddlers.

Years later, following the death of the husband, a new and improved Cathy returns, hoping to start over again with her children. Not surprisingly, their stepmother, Laura (Joanna Kerns from Growing Pains), is not amused.

Mel Harris, who seemed to spend most of her thirtysomething stint talking to a shrink of one kind or another, plays a therapist trying to help a young woman (Candace Cameron of Full House) accused of murdering her parents in USA Network's Sharon's Secret, premiering Wednesday, Sept. 27. Soon, however, the good doctor discovers someone is dead set on getting her off the case -- and it may be the family's attorney (Alex McArthur of the Desperado movies).

TV PIPELINE

BY TAYLOR MICHAELS

Q: Please give me some background information on Christine Baranski, who plays Maryann on Cybill. She's great. —Matt LeFevre, Hesperia, Mich.

A: When I spoke to her last winter, Baranski was in her Los Angeles hotel room, reading a New York Times and pining for her home in Connecticut. She lives there with her husband, former soap star Matthew Cowles, and their two children. Still, she says she's having a blast on Cybill, where she's earned accolades from critics.

The actress, a native of Buffalo, N.Y., is best known for her triumphs in New York theater, including The Real Thing (Tony Award and Drama Desk Award); Neil Simon's Rumors (Tony Award); Lips Together, Teeth Apart (Drama Desk Award); and The House of Blue Leaves (the production also aired on PBS).

Don't miss her hilarious cameo in the current comedy Jeffrey. Other films, all available on video, include The Ref, Addams Family Values, Reversal of Fortune, Legal Eagles, Life With Mikey and 9 1/2 Weeks.

Q: I have heard rumors Keanu Reeves (Speed, A Walk in the Clouds) is gay. True? —Elizabeth Church, Indian Trail, N.C.

A: Several months ago, apparently as a joke, someone started a rumor openly gay mogul David Geffen had "married" Reeves and sent his new mate on a lavish spending spree at a New York department store.

The story took on more life when the actor didn't immediately step forward with a denial. Finally, at the insistence of his managers, Reeves gave an interview to the national gay magazine Out, in which he said, for the record, he is not gay. "Guess this means I have to give the clothes back," he joked.

Q: Is that Tommy Lee Jones' voice

on the Red Dog beer commercials? —J.A.B., Valley, Ala.

A: Yes.

Q: I watched The Winds of War on A&E Network, but they didn't show War & Remembrance as advertised. What happened? —Don Douglas, Rome, N.Y.

A: You missed the "fine print," Don. War & Remembrance aired on A&E's sister service, The History Channel, which was offered free to most cable systems during that week as part of a promotional campaign.

Q: I recently enjoyed watching Interview With the Vampire and wonder how I can write to author Anne Rice. —E.B., Flint, Mich.

A: The short answer is you can write to the author of any current book c/o his or her publisher.

Rice, however, has a special address she asks her fans to use. Address your letter to: Anne Rice, 1239 First St., New Orleans, La. 70130.

Send questions to TV Pipeline, Features Dept., TV Data, Northway Plaza, Queensbury, N.Y. 12804. Because of the volume of mail received, personal replies cannot be sent.

SOAP TALK

Holbrook welcomes new family member

BY CANDACE HAVENS

Fans who've wondered what happened to Sharlene (Anna Holbrook) on Another World are in for some good news: Holbrook is expected back on the set any day.

Holbrook had a new baby boy back in July. His name is Henry James, and he weighed 7 pounds, 9 ounces. Since the pregnancy was not written into the show, the writers sent Sharlene back to her hometown for an extended visit in order to explain the maternity leave.

Sadly, AW lost Kevin John Gee, who played Carl's servant Ito. Gee died of pneumonia on Aug. 3.

Gee is survived by his mother and sister, who have requested donations, in lieu of flowers, be made to: Broadway Cares/Equity Fights AIDS, 165 W. 46th St., Suite 1300, New York, N.Y. 10036.

There is some rather surprising news from the set of The Bold and the Beautiful.

Barbara Crampton announced she and Kristoffer Tabori are no longer engaged. Crampton had moved to the West Coast so she could spend more time with Tabori.

Unfortunately, it seems the couple had a more successful relationship when it was long distance.

Dear Candace: I was wondering if you could tell me what actress played the marriage counselor for Danny on The Young and the Restless. She looked so familiar. -Janet in Georgia.

Dear Reader: Patsy Pease portrayed Patricia Fennel, a marriage counselor who gave Danny advice about his marriage to Phyllis. Many soap fans may remember Pease from her popular role as Kimberly on Days of Our Lives.

Pease and Charles Shaughnessy (The Nanny) played the soap opera supercouple Kimberly and Shane on Days.

There has been no word as to whether Pease will appear on future episodes of Y&R. Pease has a great many fans who would most likely follow her to Y&R. She left her role on Days after she became quite ill. But the actress has recovered.

HIGHLIGHTS

Fall Highlights on The Family Channel

Determined to keep America laughing, Woody Fraser has produced, developed and created some of television's wackiest and most successful family fare for more than three decades, including the eighties' hit series "That's Incredible," "Those Amazing Animals," "People Do the Craziest Things," and current Nickelodeon favorites "Wild and Crazy Kids" and "What Would You Do?"

The Family Channel walks on the wild side this fall with two new zany family-oriented game shows, produced by Fraser. Titled "Wild Animal Games" and "Family Challenge," the game shows begin October 2, challenging animals and humans to perform outrageous feats for laughs, points and prizes.

"Wild Animal Games" is a high-energy 30-minute game show that is nothing shy of a day at the zoo. "Wild Animal Games" challenges children and their parents chosen from a studio audience to coax professionally-trained animals to participate in three outrageous contests each show. "Wild Animal Games" includes contest involving elephants squashing watermelons, pigs slalom racing and donkeys playing polo. Premiering at 3:00 p.m. The series will also air on Sundays at 9:00 a.m.

"Family Challenge" capitalizes on the competitive nature of families. In the hour-long series, two families battle for points and prizes in fun-filled contests utilizing dessert favorites such as whipped cream pies, ice cream sundaes and Jell-O, and sibling familiarity contests and traditional contests like "rock, paper, scissors." Premiering at 4:00 p.m. And then again Sunday at 9:30 p.m.

Both series are produced by Woody Fraser Productions in association with The Family Channel.

A new futuristic, filled to the brim with new technology show with live cyberspace is the destination this fall when The Family Channel's "Masters of the Maze" takes kids on a journey into the video game of the future. Boasting new host Mario Lopez, and an extended journey in the enchanted electronic video game adventure with interactive technology from Image Design the creators of Nintendo's Power Glove. It premieres Monday, October 2, at 3:30 p.m.

"The show is designed to let viewers get inside the video game," said Richard Kline ("Win, Lose or Draw"), one of the show's three executive producers. It is named as one of the top children's game shows by the TV Guide in 1994, "Masters of the Maze" returns this fall with new interactive features, modified interactive power suits designed by Image Ent., and new maze topography including a working waterfall, geysers, stalactite-filled ice chamber and the latest course addition calling lightning mountain.

"I'm kind of the big brother to the kids on the show. The big brother tells you the rules and every now and then gives an encouraging pat," said Lopez, who's probably best known as Slater, ("Saved By the Bell"). Lopez also hosted the Saturday morning series "Name Your Adventure."

"Masters" challenges three pairs of contestants ages 10 to 14 to decipher images on an electronic video screen. The pair scoring the highest points wins an opportunity to wage a battle of wits and physical endurance against time in a high-tech maze containing the Hologram lady, the newly animated chamber of knowledge. This season brings new technology to the power suits worn by contestants which are now equipped with real lasers. With the use of the suit, a child contestant masked by an opaque visor races through the maze with assistance from a partner who navigates the way. Offering vision and direction, the navigator guides the partner through the maze by watching a video monitor that displays an aerial view of the maze. Alkin to playing a video game, the navigator guides the partner through obstacles to the finish.

During its first season, "Masters" received a Daytime Emmy nomination for editing by the Television Arts and Sciences and was also recognized by the Columbia University media journal "Children of the Media" for the show's use of technology.

A new to FAM drama was announced to enter the fall line-up by Gus Lucas, senior vice-president, programming for FAM. The critically-acclaimed family drama "Christy," which originally debuted on CBS Easter Sunday, will now move to The Family Channel starting October 7, at 6:00 p.m.

"More than 30 million viewers tuned in to the network premiere of 'Christy,'" said Lucas. "The popular series inspired a following among its audience that became the focus of discussions and projects in thousands of schools, churches and libraries across the country."

Lucas added, "Despite this interest, as well as an enormous write-in campaign by concerned viewers, the network didn't renew 'Christy' for a second season. This is disappointing, especially at a time when America is looking for more family entertainment. However, we are more than proud and pleased to welcome this positive programming to FAM this fall."

"Christy," starring Kellie Martin, Tyne Daly and Tess Harper is based on the classic best-selling novel by the late Catherine Marshall, and tells about the story of a spirited woman who leaves her sheltered city life to teach at a missionary school in a remote Appalachian community in pre-World War I Tennessee.

"Highway to Heaven," a heartwarming FAM drama, that's sure to stir up your sensitive side, will begin October 2, airing weekdays at 1:00 p.m. and again at 7:00 p.m. And then on Sundays at 11:00 a.m.

Jonathan Smith doesn't have a golden halo or white wings, but he is working hard to achieve heavenly status by providing divine guidance to orphaned children, elderly grandparents and hospitalized quadriplegics and cancer victims. Michael Landon, who stars as the angel Smith, also was the creator and executive producer of "Highway."

In addition to Michael Landon and

CHITTER - CHATTER

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) - There's no turning back for the cast of "Friends."

Jennifer Aniston, who plays Rachel, said the attention brought on by the show's wildly successful first season can be unnerving.

"This is when I say, '... I just want my life back.' But I know it's too late," she told TV Guide in its Sept. 23 issue.

David Schwimmer, who plays Ross, fears typecasting.

"Each of us likes to believe that we will have careers beyond this," he said. "But when a series starts getting into things like a hit record and a music video and mugs and T-shirts ... well, I don't want to be known as Ross when I'm 60."

Mark Gorden (Victor French), who plays a retired Oakland, CA, policeman and Smith's sidekick, will also feature guest star appearances by Bob Hope, Leslie Nielsen and Dick Van Dyke.

New episodes this fall of "Snowy River: The McGregor Saga," might have Matt and Kathleen tie the knot. The untamed Australian frontier draws an equally untamed settler and the characters are driven to the melting point as they attempt to live up to their legendary reputations as the saga continues on October 7 at 5:00 p.m.

The premiere episode, "A Sea of Troubles," finds Matt in conflict with an old rancher friend when a Government committee, of which Matt is a member, votes to acquire the man's ranch, dam a river and flood his land. The rancher friend accuses him of not looking after his interests, even though the project is in the best interest of the High Country community. Matt looks to Kathleen for comfort from this enormous strain, asks her to be his wife, and it is then that Kathleen realizes her own moment of truth is at hand.

A new offbeat comedy also enters the FAM fall lineup. "Newhart," will air in the "Firsts on the First" marathon Sunday, October 1, from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - Radio talk-show host Barbara Carlson has embarrassed her ex-husband, Gov. Arne Carlson, before by talking about their failed marriage on the air.

Now she's planning a tell-all book, and the governor is warning that he won't tolerate any "defamatory material."

The book, "This Broad's Life," is scheduled for release next summer. She chronicles her years of alcohol abuse and her dozen years of marriage to Carlson.

"Part of this book deals with my life and drinking, and the governor is part of that," Ms. Carlson said. "There are some things that are very painful in the book."

p.m. And beginning October 2, "Newhart" will air a full hour each weekday at 11:00 a.m. and again at 5:00 p.m.

Dick Loudon (Bob Newhart) is an average guy who writes how-to books, hosts his own TV show and manages a country inn in Vermont. In spite of his attempt to lead a normal life, his custom-made world is transformed by quirky characters like the inimitable brothers Larry, Darryl and his other brother Darryl.

Margie's Notes

By Margie Daniels, HSCA Executive Director

It is time for Festival of Trees again! We always look forward to this time of the year. As you know this is our major fund raiser and is very important to us both financially and as a community project.

We also need a lot of help and support. At this time we need more decorators for the trees. Most of our program is on schedule and sponsors have been contacted and we still need items for the bazaar and bake sale. Let us know if you can help.

We still have some space on our fall tour. We will see some beautiful scenery, shows, eat good food and have a lot of fun! Call me at 364-5681 or 364-0428 as soon as possible.

I told you last month about the condition of our van "Old Blue" and the need for retirement. Well as of today we have $6,300 toward a replacement. This has been a wonderful response. Thanks so much to you who have given.

I would like to thank all of our volunteers again for your help in every area of the Center. There is no way HSCA could do what we do without you.

Remember the United Way Campaign!

Daily activities at HSCC

By PEGGY MAXWELL
Activities Director

There are many activities at the Senior Center. The quilters enjoy working on the many varied quilts. The ladies work every morning and afternoon.

If you would like to learn to quilt or enjoy visiting and quilting, please come to the Center any time for fun and friendship.

The quilters enjoyed a coffee and cake party last month, to celebrate the many hours of quilting they have shared together.

We have a crafter's class on Wednesday afternoon from 1-3. Bring your project and come join the fun. We are working with latch hook, crochet, knitting, cross stitch, jewelry making and various other projects. Mary Ann Carroll is the instructor. She will help you start or re-start any project you enjoy.

Do you want to learn how to paint ceramic pieces? The classes are free. Come join the painters. We clean the green ware, paint and fire the pieces on Wednesday afternoons at 1:30.

We have porcelain doll classes on Monday afternoons from 1-4:30. Jolene Bledsoe and Rosalee McGowen will help you make any of the beautiful dolls. They start with liquid porcelain and pour the molds. The dolls are ready to be cleaned, fire, then painted. After the china firing you are ready to complete your doll. Come visit the class and pick out your doll.

Thursday mornings the oil painters relax and paint with Lorene Newman. The classes are free. Come visit with the painters and choose your next painting project. We would welcome all new painters from beginners to the more detailed painters.

President's Corner

By Shirley Garrison, HSCA President

Some time ago the news reported that "The Ole Philosopher", Clint Formby, had broadcast 12,000 times without missing a single day.

I certainly can't match that record with my column, after all I'm not as old as he is. After all he does it every day and I only write this once a month.

I guess what brings all of this up is, I have done this for six years, with a break of one year between two three-year terms. Next month, you, the reader, will get a break and will get to read a new President's Corner.

You see, HSCA directors serve three year terms, there being nine directors with three rotating off each year. On Sept. 18, the association held its annual membership meeting, and due to unusual circumstances, four members rotated off and four new ones were elected.

Those going off were Clarence Betzen, Wayne Amstutz, Truman Thurston and myself. The newly elected directors are Mark Koenig, Norma Thurston, Cecil Boyer and L.J. Clark. The carryover directors are Audrey Powell, George Olson, Clara Reinart, Gid Brownd, and Rueben McGilvary.

New officers will be elected at their first board meeting in October, which is the first Friday following the first Monday of each month.

I want to thank each board member for their contributions during the past years. I want to congratulate the new members coming on the board and challenge them to carry on the good work of their predecessors.

The other person making up the team is our indispensable Executive Director, Margie Daniels. We think we have the best director, program and facilities of any Senior Center in this part of Texas, maybe all of Texas.

I have enjoyed being a part of this and will continue to support our new board and our center to help keep it the best.

Hasta la vista!

Nutrition Notes

By CHARLOTTE R. CLARK
MS RD/LD

"In matters of taste, consider nutrition and in matters of nutrition consider taste. In all cases, consider individual needs and preferences."

This is the philosophy and doctrine of the American Institute of Wine and Food and illustrates the desire of health care professionals to help consumers rediscover the joys of eating within a healthy diet.

Several other values noted are: (1) appreciation for psychological, physiological, cultural and economic influences on food preferences. (2) recognition that all foods fit in a healthful diet that should be balanced over several days. (3) belief that dietary recommendations should respect culinary traditions while advocating nutritional adequacy.

Considering these values as challenges we, the consumers, need to take a perspective look at the practices that the Food Guide Pyramid, the official food guide for the United States, which was released in 1992 have outlined and distributed.

This guide is the only one recognized by federal agencies or departments and the one used by nutrition and dietetics practitioners to teach clients basic nutrition and life style of healthy eating.

In this article let us conduct an evaluation of this important good guideline and consider some ideas, activities, and explanations of the changes embodied in the program's conception.

For almost forty years, nutrition educators relied heavily on the four or five food group approach to teach nutrition to children and adults. In 1985 the Human Nutrition Information Service developed an updated Food Wheel to illustrate the Dietary Guidelines. This format did not catch on and was only a reference material. The Food Guide Pyramid, in essence, replaces both the basic four or five food groups, the Food Wheel. This program in focus, content, and philosophy is a unique entity altogether.

First, the Food Guide Pyramid teaches the total diet instead of the foundation diet represented by the basic four or five food groups.

The four food groups were designed to teach nutrient adequacy and to guard against nutrient deficiencies.

Based on health concerns that are at least partially the result of nutrient excesses, the Food Group Pyramid addresses overnutrition as well as undernutrition. This approach should be less confusing as it notes a guide for the total diet, not just parts of it.

Second, the Food Guide Pyramid was based on consumer research. Evaluation of the 1985 and 1990 versions documented that these two did not help the consumers understand the Dietary Guidelines.

The research effort to identify an image that was memorable and understandable by a variety of audiences. The result was a simple easily recognized figure that was developed to ensure the public to remember the concepts of the Pyramid which was designed to help them remember food for healthy living.

Third, the Food Guide Pyramid illustrates the three principles of variety, moderation, and proportionality.

Variety is defined as eating a wide selection of food within and among the major food groups. In other words, no one major food group is more or less important than any other food group.

Also, it is important to eat a variety of foods within each food group. Moderation is defined by two components: (a) eating portions, especially those high in fat and/or added sugars, in recommended serving sizes, and (b) eating fats, oils, and sweets sparingly.

Proportionality is defined as eating relatively more foods from the larger food groups and fewer foods from the smaller food groups.

The Food Guide Pyramid illustrates some of the Dietary Guidelines: "Eat a variety of foods"; "Choose a diet low in fat, saturated fat and cholesterol"; "Choose a diet with plenty of vegetables, fruits and grain products"; and "Use sugars only in moderation."

The Food Guide Pyramid does not illustrate three other important Dietary Guidelines: "Maintain healthy weight"; "Use salt and sodium only in moderation"; "If you drink alcohol, do so in moderation". These last three guidelines are important and should not be left out of educational efforts just because they are not included on the food guide Pyramid.

The key changes in the content of the Food Guide Pyramid are as follows:

* Dietary advice has shifted from a foundation diet to the total diet.

* The number of food groups has changed to five major food groups.

Each group provided some, but not all of the nutrients needed for good health, and no one group is more important than another. The tip of the Pyramid (ie, the fats, oils, and sweets group) does not count as a major depicted. Foods in the tip provide energy and little else nutritionally.

* The names of the food groups have changed. The names of the Food Guide Pyramid food groups are:

- bread, cereal, rice and pasta groups
- the vegetable group
- the fruit group
- the milk, yogurt, and cheese group
- the meat, poultry, fish, dry beans, eggs, and nut group

The names are longer and more unwieldy, but their purpose is to clarify composition of each food group. The public will discover these name groups do not match any other names in other guides.

* Fruits are now separated from vegetables. The bigger size of the spacing of this vegetable than the fruit groups indicates that more servings are needed from the large vegetable group. Vegetables are emphasized on the Pyramid because they contribute notable amounts of minerals and vitamins, whereas fruits contribute mainly vitamins.

* The number of servings per group have changed. The number of servings for each food group must match the recommended serving sizes.

* The tip of the Pyramid is now called the fats, oils, and sweet group.

The rationale for what does or does not go in the tip is based on the function or use of the food.

* Serving sizes have changed for some foods and food groups. The pyramid's servings sizes are the recommended amounts; the new label's standardized serving sizes are the amounts that most Americans currently consume.

* Protein equivalents have changed; ie 1 egg = 1 oz lean meat;

2 Tbs peanut butter = 1 oz lean meat; or 1/2 cup cooked dry beans = 1 oz lean meat.

* Symbols for fat and sugar have been added. The circles on the Pyramid signify added or naturally occurring fat; the inverted triangles signify added, but not naturally occurring sugar.

The purpose of the symbols is to teach that fat and sugar are found in all food groups, not just in the tip.

SOCIAL SECURITY QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Q: I need a new Social Security card because I lost my old one. How much does it cost to get the new card? I heard that a private company can get one through Social Security for me for $10. Is this a good deal?

A: You can get a new Social Security card by contacting us yourself. You will get the same number, and it will not cost you a penny. This service is free as is all of our services. This seems to us a better deal than paying $10.

Q: I recently turned 65 and signed up for Medicare. Will Medicare pay for prescription drugs?

A: No, Medicare does not pay for prescription drugs. If you have any other general questions about Medicare, you may like to have a Medicare Handbook. It is available free from Social Security. To get one, call our toll-free number of 1-800-772-1213.

Q: It is time for me to file for Social Security retirement benefits. How do I make an appointment?

A: To make an appointment, call our toll-free number (1-800-772-1213). The SSA representative will obtain some information from you, such as Social Security number, date of birth, etc. The representative will give you the choice of filing in person or by phone and will also tell you what information and documents you will need to supply to Social Security.

Q: I am going to be 62 in 1996 and plan to file for Social Security retirement at that time. However, I recently got a copy of my earnings record from Social Security and saw that I got no credit for my 1991 earnings. I made $22,000, but my SSA record shows no earnings. What can I do?

A: You should contact Social Security as soon as you can. If you have proof of your 1991 earnings, such as a W-2 form, it will be very easy to correct your record. Even if you do not have proof, the Social Security personnel can help get the record corrected.

Q: I've misplaced my Medicare card. How do I get a new one?

A: Just call Social Security. You'll have a replacement within 30 days. We also will tell you the correct number so that you can still have Medicare claims filed from processed during the time you are without a card.

Q: My Social Security check is not nearly for me to live on. Is there anything Social Security can do to help me?

A: You should contact Social Security to see if you might be eligible for Supplement Security Income. Supplement Security Income (SSI) is a program which supplies a monthly payment to persons who are 65 or older or who are blind or disabled and who have limited income and assets. The Social Security Administration administers the SSI program. However, the money used to pay SSI checks comes from general revenues of the federal government, not from Social Security taxes.

If you wish to have your questions answered in this column, please write to Byron Sansom, district Manager, Senior Scene, Social Security Administration, 3501 W. 45th, Suite E., Amarillo, Texas 79106.

Ways to increase your Social Security benefit

You may not want to know how to build a better mousetrap -- but how about three ways to increase your Social Security benefit? They're fool-proof and guaranteed.

Here's one way. If you begin receiving benefits before you're 65, we'll reduce your check by five-ninths of one percent for each month you are under age 65. However -- and here's your cue -- when you turn 65, we re-figure your benefit to give back the five-ninth of one percent for each month you didn't receive a check. This feature is important if you're still working and have some months in which you don't receive a check because your earnings exceed the annual earnings limit. (The 1995 limit for someone under age 65 is $8,160).

As an example, let's say you started receiving Social Security when you turned 62. We reduced your benefits by 20 percent (36 months times five-ninths of one percent equals 20 percent). A year later you returned to work for awhile and earned so much money that you didn't receive a Social Security check for nine months. When you reach 65, we will re-figure your benefit, increasing it by five percent -- five-ninths of one percent for each of the nine months you didn't get a check. From then on, your reduction will be 15 percent instead of 20 percent.

Here's another way to increase your benefit. If you continue working after you start getting benefits and your annual earnings are higher than the lowest of the years we used to compute your benefit, we'll re-figure your benefit each year. We add in the higher year of earnings to see whether it will increase your benefit.

The third way to get a higher Social Security benefit is to delay your retirement beyond age 65 -- up to age 70. The percentage of increase depends on what year you were born and is based on a graduated scale. For example, if you were born in 1938, you receive a 6.5 percent increase for each year beyond your full retirement age that you delay signing up for Social Security. And if you're at the top of the graduated scale because you were born in 1943 or later, your benefit will be increased by eight percent for each year you delay retirement.

It was the custom in the Roman Empire to bring along some of the old hearth fire when moving from one home to another.

Want to learn about hurricanes? Fly into one

By TOM WELLS

Associated Press Writer

IN THE EYE OF HURRICANE

LUIS (AP) - There is only one way to know for sure what a hurricane is doing: Fly through its hundreds of miles of turbulent winds, penetrate the howling eyewall of thunderstorms that toss an airplane around like a toy, swoop down into the calm of the eye, take some measurements, climb back up and then bounce through more thunderstorms so thick with rain the tips of the wings can't be seen.

It's all in a routine day's work for the Air Force Reserve's hurricane hunters.

That day begins early when a six-man hurricane-hunting crew climbs aboard a Hercules C-130 at a South Florida military base.

Their mission: track Hurricane Luis, prowling the Atlantic 600 miles off the Eastern Seaboard. Total flying time: 11 hours 5 minutes but some of it with all the excitement of being in a free-fall elevator.

They fly at 10,000 feet in the upper reaches of the hurricane. The ride is more scary the lower you fly, said Master Sgt. Billy Gates, of Ocean Springs, Miss.

The National Hurricane Center in Miami decides when a storm is serious enough and close enough to land to be monitored by the hurricane hunters during the June-to-November hurricane season. Scientists at the center estimate that the hunters increase the center's accuracy in issuing hurricane warnings by 25 percent to 30 percent.

Since hurricane forecasters are in the midst of the busiest tropical weather season in decades, they've been keeping the hurricane hunters airborne.

The hunters are based at Kessler Air Force Base at Biloxi, Miss., and comprise the 53rd Weather Reconnaissance Squadron. They cover tropical storms and hurricanes in the Atlantic, the Caribbean, the Gulf of Mexico and the Central Pacific. The unit also flies winter storm missions off both coasts of the United States.

The information that the hunters report determines whether people should start putting up hurricane shutters. Or head inland to drop the kids off with their grandparents. Or pray.

Six reporters and two scientists along for the ride toward Hurricane Luis received headsets so they could listen to the crew.

"Lights. Check. Fuel. Check. Clear No. 3 engine. Turning. Standby. Roger. Clear No. 4 engine. Turning."

Soon the four engines create so much noise it is impossible to hear anyone say anything. That's the way it will stay during the entire 11-hour flight on the military plane.

Tech Sgt. Scott Denham, of Austin, Tex., distributes earplugs. He cautions the visitors to stay strapped in when the plane prepares to penetrate the eyewall of the hurricane.

At 4:51 a.m., the Hercules is airborne and heading due east. At 6:55 a.m., the sky looks dark and gloomy. The plane begins to be jostled around.

The whitecaps look enormous, even from 10,000 feet. A ship that had blundered into the hurricane had reported in the previous 24 hours that waves were 47 feet high.

The counterclockwise winds from Luis are coming from the north and pushing the eastward-bound plane off course to the south.

7:05 a.m.: "We're going into the eyewall in about 45 miles," navigator Maj. Charlie Whitt of Baton Rouge, La., says. Ahead can be seen the hole. The vortex. The eye. And around it, the brooding eyewall, a wall of tightly compacted, severe thunderstorms.

The plane hits the wall. The winds want to rip off the wings. The knowledge that only one hurricane hunter plane has ever been lost isn't that comforting.

7:16 a.m.: "100 knots (115 mph)," Whitt says.

The plane bucks violently now. The pilot, Lt. Col. Terry Self, of Greensboro, N.C., tries to keep it on course to cut through the center of the eye as close as possible so a parachuted pack of instruments, called the dropsonde, can be released for measuring temperature, pressure and humidity.

Maj. Rich Woodford, of St. Louis, the meteorologist, tells the pilot where he wants the plane to go, so the tube of instruments can be dropped into the eye by parachute. Winds are buffeting the plane.

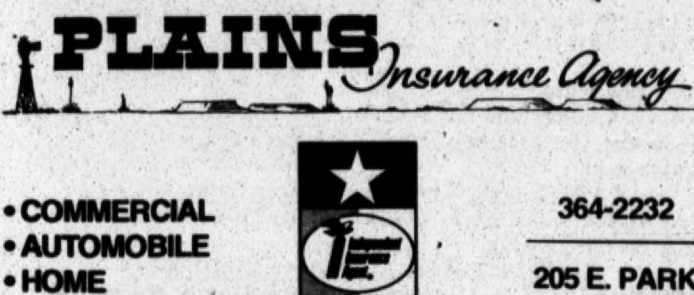

The sonde operator, Denham, sits before instruments and a computer screen in the back of the Hercules; he's cramped between the ramp and a huge fuel tank. He pushes a button, and the cylinder of instruments drops from the plane with a metallic "whang."

The sonde deploys its chute 10 seconds after ejection and then falls with a velocity of about 1,000 feet per minute.

The sonde is a meteorological instrument 18-1/2 inches long by 3-1/2 inches in diameter and weighing about 3 pounds. It has sensors, a receiver and a transmitter, plus a battery pack. The sonde will drop into the Atlantic slowly.

A radio navigational signal is received and retransmitted by the sonde to the launching aircraft. The signal is used to track the sonde in relationship to eight stations around the world to produce calculations on the speed of the storm's winds.

Co-generational learning innovative program

By LINDA A. JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) - Older people and teen-agers will be sitting desk-to-desk this year in high school classrooms in a suburban school district.

In classes from economics to Italian, they'll be learning together in an innovative new program in Lawrence Township that educators believe is the first formal one for co-generational learning in New Jersey.

Although other districts haven't tried such programs, educators say some have discussed it and most have long had elderly pupils attending classes outside regular school hours.

"Many districts over the years have provided classes for senior citizens as part of their community education," said Jim Murphy, executive director of the New Jersey Association of School Administrators. "This is really an extension of community education."

"I thought it was a great idea," Murphy said of Lawrence's program.

"I think if anything, it'll have a calming effect on everyone, even the teachers ... They're going to be dealing with taxpayers" in their classes.

Claire Sheff Kohn, superintendent of the Lawrence Township school district, is hoping the program will also be stimulating, for both the older residents and their teen-age classmates.

"It will break down stereotypes on both sides about how they think and act," she said.

Older people who have heard media reports about teens in trouble, "will be able to see that kids go to school and learn and do their homework," Kohn said. "Kids are going to see that people are interested in learning for its own sake, not just for a grade or credit."

"They'll also see that people of all ages are intellectually stimulated and can learn well into their senior years," she said.

So far, 10 older residents have signed up for a class each at the district's high school, which has an enrollment of about 1,100. Classes are free to all township residents over age 65.

"We are providing a service to a constituency in the community that pays taxes and that doesn't necessarily derive direct benefit from the school district," Kohn explained. Lawrence Township, just outside Trenton, has a population of about 26,000.

Enrollment of older students is limited to classes that have space available, so that the Mercer County district won't need any additional teachers.

"Right now, the main interests are in foreign languages, economics and photography," Kohn said.

Two people planning a trip to Italy will begin studying Italian; the rest are simply taking courses on subjects that interest them.

Kohn noted that many residents attend adult education classes run by the school district, but the new program has two advantages. Class times are convenient for people who may be hesitant to go out after dark, and they cover material in much more depth than the typical night school course that runs two to three hours a week for eight to 10 weeks.

The program is being jointly promoted by the school district, the Lawrence Township Senior Center and the Lawrence Township Recreation Department.

Educators around New Jersey said that while a few districts are discussing similar programs, none have begun a structured one.

"I don't know of any school district that's doing anything like that," said Josette Peterson, president of the New Jersey Association for Lifelong Learning.

Calls to the coordinating school superintendents for New Jersey's 21 counties found only one program in which older people and students meet together, but for only 45 minutes a week.

In the Verona district in Essex County, about a dozen residents of a senior citizens complex opposite the high school sit in on a Friday sociology class for a group discussion on a sociological topic, anything from World War II to the ins and outs of dating, according to John Brennan, adviser to the school's "Intergenerational Club."

Attending church has beneficial side effects

By DAVID BRIGGS
AP Religion Writer

Going to church on Sunday may be the most effective means of reducing the fear of dying among older Americans.

A major study of religion and death anxiety found that visits from children and friends and outside activities do not seem to reduce the fear of death among people in the final stage of life. Not even private religious activities such as prayer or Bible reading appear to significantly lessen the fear of the next life.

What does appear to make older people less fearful of dying is regular attendance at religious services, researchers Robert W. Duff of the University of Portland and Lawrence K. Hong of California State University, Los Angeles, report in the September issue of the Review of Religious Research.

"The research indicates that it is primarily the ceremonial acts that provide the life-enriching effects of religion," Duff said. "Rituals provide a sense of togetherness. They sustain us by fostering a sense of going beyond."

The study was based on a random sample in 1988 of 674 generally healthy residents from six retirement communities in California and Oregon. The average age of respondents was 75.6 years. Community residents suffering from serious illness or severe bereavement due to an imminent or immediate death in the family were excluded from the survey.

Death anxiety was measured from a scale based on respondents' answers to questions such as whether they were very afraid to die or their willingness to talk to dying individuals about their upcoming deaths.

The one community oriented toward retired religious workers scored lowest on the death anxiety scale. In testing several variables that might lower or raise death anxiety, researchers found little evidence to support other hypotheses.

The findings did not indicate that living in a retirement community, with its concentration of people nearing the end of their lives, created an atmosphere fostering anxiety about death.

Other factors that could be thought to lower death anxiety, such as frequently participating in social activities or regularly visiting with friends and children, also were not statistically significant.

The only significant and strong predictor that older people would be less fearful of dying was regular attendance at religious services, Duff and Hong concluded.

In attempting to explain their finding, the researchers turned to the theories of sociologist Emile Durkheim, who argued that solidarity, shared meanings and "a sense of transcendence become more powerful in public religious rites."

Durkheim said regular participation is needed to renew those emotional states, which in turn strengthen individuals and protect them from the vicissitudes of life.

Duff said group celebrations of religious rituals lift people up and give them "a sense of continuity beyond the grave."

Dr. Harold Koenig, director of the Program on Religion, Aging and Health at Duke University Medical Center, said he was not surprised by the finding that visits by children and friends do not significantly reduce death anxiety - "they're not coming with you," he said.

He said there is a need for further research to distinguish the benefits of public and private religious practices, both of which he said would seem to be important to older persons coping with death.

Ellen L. Idler, a sociologist at Rutgers University, said the findings by Duff and Hong are consistent with her research about the positive benefits of religion for older people.

She also spoke of the continuity provided by religious rituals, where the memories of shared services with parents and grandparents and other important people in the social circle of older worshippers "brings the presence of people who are no longer alive back into this circle again."

By JIM MCDANIEL

You've probably heard that the Social Security Administration is committed to providing "world-class service" to our customers -- you, the public. That's what we say in our published customer service standards, and that's what we aim to deliver.

Most of us who provide direct service to Social Security customers work in one of our 1,299 district and branch offices located throughout the country. Branch offices are smaller but generally offer the same services as district offices. My office, located at 3501 West 45th Street in Amarillo, is a district office.

Our agency has a long tradition of providing tailored public service through this network of accessible, community-based offices. To give you an idea of the size and variety of our agency workloads, Social Security will, in the new fiscal year beginning in October:

*Pay benefits to about 48 million people;

*Process more than 6 million new claims for benefits;

*Process about 16 million requests for Social Security cards;

*Post about 235 million earnings items to workers' earnings records;

*Handle about 70 million telephone calls to our toll-free number, 1-800-772-1213.

Our field office employees conduct public information activities to increase community awareness and confidence in our programs. We help people apply for benefits and get the evidence needed to support their applications. We respond to inquiries on almost any subject dealing with government services, and we investigate charges of program abuse.

We work with other Federal, State and local government agencies and social services organizations -- such as sheltered workshops, hospitals, and community based providers -- to help the public get "one-stop" access to services. For example, we help people establish their entitlement to Medicare benefits.

A growing number of walk-in visitors to our offices can't access government services any other way. We provide service to many clients who can't read, who have difficulty communicating in English, who live in remote rural locations where they do not have access to transportation, or who have severe disabling conditions that restrict their ability to communicate.

These clients need personal service -- face-to-face interviews, assistance in obtaining documents, and referrals to other agencies for services.

So when we at Social Security talk about service to the public, these are the kinds of services we mean.

To Your Good Health

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: When I graduated from nursing school, I left with the understanding that there was no known cure for glaucoma. Now, 50 years later, I am informed that I have the disease. My only treatment is eye drops. Could you comment on recent progress in glaucoma? — G.K.

ANSWER: Glaucoma treatments today were only dreamed of 50 years ago. The fear, as always, lies in failure to diagnose it.

Glaucoma clues are fairly obvious. Dimmed vision in changing circumstances, such as in darkened rooms or while driving at night, are classic. Other signs include the inability to improve vision with a new lens prescription, or seeing non-existent halos around streetlamps.

Glaucoma stems from a buildup of aqueous humor pressure in the eyes. Aqueous humor nourishes inner-eye structures, and it normally maintains a balance between production and drainage from the eye. Obstruction of drainage or a rise in humor production quickly produces a pressure rise, which in time can damage the optic nerve. That's glaucoma.

Timely diagnosis and treatment permit lowering of pressure and preservation of vision. Your medicated eye drops help promote drainage, and there are oral medicines. Procedures utilizing laser instruments are treatment options in restoration of fluid balance. We had none of that in your youth.

Another, more rare form of glaucoma, a kind that comes on suddenly, should be mentioned. I don't think you have that, but if you do, write back and I'll discuss it.

Glaucoma has nothing to do with blood pressure.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I would be interested in knowing if there is any toxic effect from the use of psyllium. Also, what would a daily dosage be? — N.L.

ANSWER: Psyllium is not toxic in any way, but you should use it according to instructions on the package, for many good reasons.

Psyllium is a fiber product, a medical counterpart of food fiber, as found in bran. The psyllium seed product has the ability to hold on to fluid in the digestive tract. That permits easier progress of undigested matter along the gastrointestinal tract.

Presence of stomach pain is one contraindication to use of psyllium. Any sudden change in elimination patterns is another reason not to use such products.

If you are using psyllium, you need to consume extra fluids, for without sufficient fluid, fiber therapy can be constipating.

Metamucil is one familiar psyllium product, and there are others a pharmacist can list for you.

For a discussion of constipation, write: Dr. Donohue — No. 7, Box 5539, Riverton, NJ 08077-5539. Enclose $3 and a self-addressed, stamped (55 cents) No. 10 envelope.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him at P.O. Box 5539, Riverton, NJ 08077-5539.
