Reagan agrees to plan halting aid

Iran-Contra Affair

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan agreed to a plan halting military aid to the Contras if the leftist government of Nicaragua agrees to a cease-fire and accepts democratic reforms, House Speaker Jim Wright said today.

Following an hour-long morning meeting with the president, Wright said an agreement had been reached in the negotiations between White House and congressional leaders.

The White House said Reagan and Secretary of State George Shultz would make a statement to reporters later in the day.

Wright, in an impromptu session with reporters, said his proposal, as accepted by Reagan, "declares there would be a cease-fire and when it is in place we would stop sending military aid to the Contras."

The speaker gave no other details of the plan, but said further statements would be forthcoming from the White House and congressional leaders.

Included in the session with Reagan were Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd of West Virginia, Minority Leader Robert Dole of Kansas, House Majority Leader Thomas Foley of Washington and Minority Leader Robert Michel of Illinois.

Earlier, a senior White House official said both sides were close to reaching an agreement.

"I think we're pretty close, but there's still some discussion of the fine points," said a senior official, speaking on condition he not be identified. "The basic tenets are there."

But when asked if an agreement had been struck, he said: "not yet — we don't even have an agreement among ourselves," referring to White House aides.

The official emphasized that "intense discussions" were under way to work out the details.

But congressional sources, also speaking on condition of anonymity, said it was the understanding of members of both parties that the administration would agree to withhold any request for additional Contra military aid for 60 days.

The sudden movement towards a possible compromise between the White House and Capitol Hill on the touchy issue of Contra aid comes as the $100 million in U.S. support for the rebels expires Sept. 30.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, contending that the Iran-Contra hearings have increased public support for the Contra cause, has said the administration was looking at the possibility of sending Congress a request for some $150 million to keep aid moving for the remaining months of Reagan's presidency.

Administration officials said they would not agree to a compromise without the concurrence of the Contra leaders, six of whom were in Washington to lobby for continued support.

Trailways pulls into Greyhound station

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

AT THE BUS STATION — Hoopla surrounding the melding of the country's two largest bus systems — Greyhound and Trailways — hasn't really changed many of the givens of bus travel, if a visit to Midland's Greyhound terminal Tuesday is any indication.

Probably the biggest change locally is that bus travelers now must catch their silver stratoliners only at the Greyhound station at 1308 W. Front street, local Greyhound manager M.J. Dixon said.

The last bus pulled out of the Trailways terminal at 703 W. Wall Street Monday night, he said.

But aside from that change, bus travel remains strikingly the same: there's a whole lot of waiting going on.

One man interviewed at the Midland station seemed resigned not just to waiting for the bus Tuesday afternoon, but waiting out the next eight months or so of his life in a prison cell.

Brian Henley, 31, of Dallas, a man of medium height and strong build, was on his way — unescorted — to the Big Spring Federal Prison Camp.

Henley said he was to start serving a three-year sentence for income tax evasion — although he maintained his innocence with a few choice words about the federal court system.

However, "You can get into trouble anywhere, if that's what you're looking for," he said.

Originally charged with conspiracy to manufacture amphetamines, Henley decided to "plead to a lesser charge and come to the country club," he said, referring to the minimum security prison's laid back reputation.

The married father of a 6 year old received a three-year sentence, but expects to be out by next spring, he said.

He acknowledged feeling apprehensive about his impending incarceration. "The closer I get the worse that stomach feeling gets," he said. "It's not freedom, but all I can do is try to make the best of it I can."

But one of his gripes about prison's daily routine probably is the least of his worries: "I hate standing in lines," he said. "You stand up in line, you go eat in line — everything's in line."

Henley was one of four passengers who smoked cigarettes, thumbed through magazines or just shot the bull with others waiting for a 1:50 p.m. bus scheduled for eastbound destinations. It was about an hour late.

Dixon explained the delay probably was the result of the bus' having to stop at both the Odessa Greyhound and Trailways terminals, which were not scheduled for the changeover until today.

MC approves pay hikes, copies last year's tax rate

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The worst possible scenario Midland College officials feared as a result of the Texas Legislative special sessions did not gel.

Tuesday's meeting of MC trustees found them instead approving a pay raise for teachers and a tax rate identical to that of last year's.

Needless to say, MC President Jess Parrish was beaming throughout the budget discussion at the board meeting.

Trustees unanimously approved a $5,089,081 budget for the 1987-88 school year which includes an actual $400,629 increase in state funding.

Things were looking grim for Midland College during the recent special legislative session, Parrish had said.

A governor who had in November promised "no new taxes" stood to undermine — if not wipe out — the future of higher education in Texas, Parrish had warned.

However, when the lieutenant governor, speaker of the house and governor put an end to their financial bickering and agreed to a compromise, Midland's college came out in better-than-feared shape.

It was the bearish attitude of Parrish last year — underbudgeting by an extra four percent for anticipated state funding decreases — that garnered MC this year a slight surplus in it's bank account, Parrish told trustees Tuesday.

That — coupled with the successful lobbying efforts of the state's 50 community colleges and former University of Texas Regent Jess Hay — was what "saved higher education in Texas" and more specifically, Midland's junior college.

Parrish had worked and reworked his budget proposal to keep away from a tax increase. It paid off Tuesday.

Midland residents — facing a 17 percent decrease in their property valuation over the past two years — will pay the college district next year the exact tax rate they did in 1986-87: 9.89 cents per $100 of valuation.

This will result in a decrease of about $42,412 in tax revenue this year, the budget showed.

Nonetheless, MC's future is one replete with a restoration of eight of the 19 teaching positions cut last year, a three percent pay hike for professors, and the same tax rate as last year — all without dipping into the college's reserve fund.

Parrish dubbed it a "maintenance budget" but said there were a few capital outlays included in the new budget — a move which last year would have only been a dream.

Professors — while receiving more in their paychecks — will be expending more next year for their family's insurance premiums, however.

Trustees also voted Tuesday to adopt a new insurance carrier — which will cost the district an extra $18 a month per employee.

However, professors can expect to see a raise in the monthly premium rates for their spouses and dependents anywhere from $19 to $23.

Trustees — facing a 75 percent increase in their medical, dental, life, pharmaceutical and accidental death and disability insurance — nixed their current carrier in favor of a Dallas firm — the Texas Educators Health Trust.

Of the seven bids presented to the college, TEHT was next to the least expensive on medical, dental, accidental death and disability and pharmaceutical; while maintaining the lowest bid for the life insurance faction.

College trustees noted they did not receive a timely bid from Midland Memorial Hospital's Premier Health Plan — a new self-insurance program.

However, some five hours after bids were due, the hospital did propose a $19,000 bid to become the college's " insurance consultant," MC's business manager said.

Physicians & Surgeons Executive Director Richard Liley was at the meeting Tuesday.

Liley, in identifying himself to the college board, said he was the "opposition" to MMH.

Man may have exposed young victims to AIDS

MARLIN, Texas (AP) — Juvenile authorities say they are warning children listed in an insurance salesman's computer records that the man may have exposed them to the AIDS virus through sexual contact.

Jimmy G. Ethridge, 38, of Marlin, who was found in an autopsy to have carried the virus, may have exposed as many as 40 children to the virus linked to the fatal and incurable disease, said Debra Coca, a Falls County juvenile probation officer.

She said anyone with whom Etheridge had sexual relations has an 80 percent chance of contracting acquired immune deficiency syndrome, a disease that weakens the body's ability to fight germs.

AIDS is caused by a virus believed passed through the blood and semen.

It cripples the body's ability to fight germs and disease. Groups at highest risk are homosexual men and intravenous drug users.

Ms. Coca said she has interviewed 10 of the 40 children.

Most of the 40 children were Hispanic or black and between 13 and 16 years old, although some were as young as 7, Ms. Coca said.

All 10 children who were interviewed Monday and Tuesday are Marlin residents, Ms. Coca said. Many of them agreed to take an AIDS test, she said.

The rest of the 40 children live in Louisiana, Arkansas and Mexico, Ms. Coca said. She said an unknown number of the children live in Waco.

Ms. Coca said she plans to send letters telling the other children about the case and advising them to seek medical care.

Ethridge was found in his bedroom with a bullet wound to his head. A 16-year-old Marlin boy, who apparently was living with Ethridge, was a suspect but authorities said there was not enough evidence to prosecute him for the death.

Man dies after shooting by Pentagon guard

WASHINGTON (AP) — An armed man who bolted past two Pentagon security guards in an apparent dash toward the National Command Center was shot today and died later, authorities said.

A Pentagon spokesman said the man, identified by CBS News as Duane Wallace, 30, of Youngstown, Ohio, pulled a gun outside a Pentagon entrance and tried to bolt toward the center.

A spokeswoman for the General Services Administration, the agency that provides Federal Protective Service guards to government buildings, said the man was stopped by a guard at the building's River Entrance shortly after 8 a.m. and asked for identification.

The spokeswoman, Susanne Murphy, said the man "could not produce ID. He bolted past the officer and he bolted past the second...officer. At that point, he was asked to stop several times. He turned to the officers and produced a handgun.... One of the Federal Protective Service officers fired two shots, one striking the man."

The man died less than two hours later at the National Orthopedic Hospital in Arlington, Va., said spokeswoman Beth Ellington.

Court 'lacks jurisdiction' in lawsuit filed against UTPB

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The Texas Attorney General contends Ector County's 358th District Court "lacks jurisdiction" to hear a $9.5 million breach of contract lawsuit filed July 7 against University of Texas of the Permian Basin, the University of Texas System and two univeristy officials.

The suit was filed by Troyt B. York, former director of the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, who was fired last January.

The lawsuit specifically names UTPB President Duane M. Leach, Vice President Warren H. Gardner, individually and in their official capacities, as well as UTPB and the University of Texas System.

York's suit, filed locally by Odessa Attorney Michael McLeaisch for the Washington D.C. law firm of Hamel & Park, seeks $8.5 million in actual damages and $1 million in punitive damages for "fraud, negligence, third-party interference with contract, and violation of his due process rights," as guaranteed by the U.S. and Texas constitutions.

York contends he was hired by Leach and Gardner to serve as director of the Energy Center, effective Sept. 6, 1985, and was guaranteed a tenured position as a professor of business management at UTPB and in the U.T. System.

Midlander to direct state panel on alcohol, drug abuse

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse Tuesday chose Midlander Bob Dickson as the new executive director of the $21-million-a-year agency.

Dickson, 55, is the owner of New Horizons in Midland, a consulting firm that helps businesses obtain counselling for troubled employees and performs outpatient substance abuse treatment specializing in cocaine-related problems. Before that, he served 16 years as executive director of the Permian Basin Community Centers for Mental Health and Mental Retardation, reducing by 75 percent the number of clients sent from the area to state hospitals.

Dickson replaces Ross Newby of Amarillo, who is leaving state government Aug. 30 after 15 years with the two commissions.

Gulf traffic slowed by Iran's war games

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iranian speedboats attacked dummy "enemy ships" and anti-aircraft fire crackled along the Iranian coast as Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's troops conducted war games aimed at a possible clash with the United States.

Shipping traffic slowed to a crawl in the Strait of Hormuz because of Iran's three-day exercises, scheduled to end Thursday. Pentagon officials in Washington said U.S.-escorted Kuwaiti tankers would probably not set sail in the gulf until next week.

Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980, but the muscle-flexing in the narrow Persian Gulf gateway appeared aimed at impressing Washington.

State-run Tehran radio said "martyrdom-seeking" volunteers "have become quite capable of approaching U.S. warships in their fast boats and dealing deadly blows."

Among Iran's weapons are "speedboats loaded with explosives" that would slam into their targets in suicide attacks, the radio said.

It said the volunteers were practicing on dummy "enemy ships."

Iran has threatened U.S. vessels in the Persian Gulf since the Reagan administration agreed to reregister and protect 11 Kuwaiti tankers plying the waterway. Tehran has stepped up its threats since Friday's killing of hundreds of Iranian pilgrims in a clash with Saudi Arabian police in Mecca.

State-run Tehran radio said "martyrdom-seeking" volunteers "have become quite capable of approaching U.S. warships in their fast boats and dealing deadly blows."

■ Saudis fear Iranian seizure of mosque; Related story — 3A

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency Tuesday quoted Cmdr. Mohammad Malekzadegan as saying: "Iran's naval forces are fully prepared to take revenge on the United States and its criminal accomplices for shedding the blood of innocent pilgrims."

Iran claims the Saudis opened fire on the pilgrims and acted with U.S. acquiescence. The Saudis say the Iranians were fatally wounded when a political demonstration turned violent.

Pentagon officials have said they believe Iran laid a mine that blew a hole in the tanker Bridgeton last week near Farsi Island.

The Defense Department's chief spokesman, Robert Sims, said Tuesday that the Iranian naval maneuvers did not affect the United States.

"We will continue to operate...in a normal way in the gulf," he told a news conference in Washington. But other officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the U.S. Navy would not begin escorting the partially-loaded Bridgeton on its 500-mile return trip through the gulf until next week, after the Iranian exercises concluded.

Iranian television on Tuesday showed Iranian speedboats darting through the gulf, their crews perched behind heavy machine guns and rocket-propelled grenade launchers.

On shore, onlookers waved a huge banner that said in Farsi, the Iranian language: "Persian Gulf of Iran, Graveyard of Reagan."

At night, flares and tracer bullets lit up the sky, and the crackle of automatic and anti-aircraft fire could be heard.

Tehran radio said naval units of the irregular Revolutionary Guards, devout followers of Khomeini, approached three American ships escorting the Bridgeton and its companion, the Gas Prince, last week through the gulf. It did not say where or when.

The radio said the Iranian ships "easily approached the warships" and carried out reconnaissance operations, showing that "U.S. warships have considerable weaknesses."

The Gas Prince and its Navy escorts passed through the Strait of Hormuz hours before the Iranian exercises began Monday night. U.S. military officials said an Iranian frigate tailed the convoy, but stayed several miles behind. U.S. officials did not report any other encounters with Iranian ships.

One shipping official said "almost no ships" were making the west-east journey from the gulf through the Strait of Hormuz during Iran's exercises.

Traffic in the other direction, into the southern end of the gulf, was reported down by one-third to half.

Another shipping agent, also speaking on condition of anonymity, said ship owners panicked at hearing reports, apparently exaggerated, that Iran had blocked shipping channels in the strait. Hormuz is 44 miles wide, with Iranian territory on the north shore and Oman on the south.

At the United Nations in New York, Iran circulated a letter accusing U.S. warplanes patrolling the gulf of violating Iranian airspace July 11. On that day, it said, three American F-14s entered Iranian airspace at 25,000 feet and were followed by two others at 20,000 feet.

Arrival ceremonies for USS Stark subdued

MAYPORT NAVAL STATION, Fla. (AP) — The USS Stark came home today to yellow ribbons, hand-lettered welcome signs, a brass band and dozens of relatives of the crew, but the homecoming hoopla was subdued by the memory of the 37 men killed aboard the ship.

The Stark and its crew of 170 pulled into Bravo 2 dock, from which it departed exactly six months ago for the Persian Gulf where it was hit by an Iraqi missile.

Earlier, the Stark's sister ship, the USS Steven W. Groves, steamed up the St. Johns River docks shooting streams of red water in great arcs from its bow, then tied up as waiting sailors stood at attention.

Relatives waited at the dock. Laura Theriault of St. Petersburg said she was waiting for her brother, Stark crewman Robert Kummrow, with whom she had spoken three times by telephone since the attack.

"He's real excited about coming home," she said, but added, "I feel really sad for the families that can't be here today."

Twenty members of the Cummings family from Sandusky, Ohio, were together for the first time since the attack to welcome home Kevin Cummings, who was slightly injured fighting fires.

The Stark was struck and set ablaze May 17 by two missiles fired by an Iraqi warplane off Kuwait. A memorial to the dead was unveiled here Saturday.

The emphasis today was on the those who battled the fire to save the vessel from sinking. "These kids did a magnificent job. The fact they saved that ship is just awesome," Rear Adm. Michael Kalleres said last week.

Mayport Chaplain Bill Perry said the families of the victims would not be forgotten today. Chaplains were asked to comfort them "while everybody else is celebrating," he said.

"We want those families to know they haven't been forgotten. It will be an extremely difficult day for them. We want to demonstrate the Navy is really committed to them," Perry said.

Wives of the crewmen had begun planning what they hoped would be one of the biggest homecomings ever at this north Florida port shortly after the Stark left port on a rainy February day. Many of the plans were continued despite the attack, which Iraq called an accident and contributed to a U.S. buildup in the strategic waterway.

Pat Weber, wife of a crewman, said the welcome-home festivities would include cheerleaders and a hot-air balloon.

Jacksonville Mayor Tommy Hazouri proclaimed today as Yellow Ribbon Day and urged residents to display yellow ribbons to welcome the Stark. A radio station offered $1,000 for the largest yellow-ribbon display.

Dozens of businesses put up signs welcoming home the Stark crewmen.

Perry said most of the families of the dead just want to be alone. Several private functions, including a dinner sponsored by several local hotels, were planned this week for the crew and families of the Stark and Groves.

A celebration was scheduled for Saturday on base featuring several bands, including the rhythm and blues group the Commdores, and fireworks. A private chapel service was scheduled for Sunday.

UTPB

He further contends he was fired with no regard of his tenured position, which should have provided employment for no less than seven years, unless he was terminated for cause and in accordance with certain procedures governed by the U.T. System Board of Regents.

In the answer filed with the Ector County District Clerk Tuesday by Kevin T. O'Hanlon, an assistant to Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox, O'Hanlon generally denied the allegations contained in the York suit and asked that the action be dismissed. He contends the court lacks jurisdiction since UTPB and UT System "are agencies of the State of Texas, entitled to sovereign immunity" and that Leach and Gardner, as state officials "acting within the scope of his authority" are also immune from prosecution.

The attorney general's response to York's suit notes "a suit brought to control state actions or to subject the state to liability is not maintainable without legislative consent or statutory authorization" and that York failed to obtain legislative consent.

Sandra R. Comenetz, an attorney with Hamel & Park, today said, "That comes as no surprise that they would do that. But, at present, we are not commenting on the case because we'd like to see it move ahead a little bit more. We will be responding to their answer (within 20 days, or more if we should seek an extension), but beyond that," she said, "I presently don't have anything to say. The issues just haven't been clarified yet."

As to the potential individual liability of Leach and Gardner, the state attorney general contends York "has failed to state a cause of action" against them that would be beyond their official capacities that might subject them to liability under Texas law.

York says that on Sept. 6, 1985, he signed a letter contract with Leach which provided him an initial salary of $60,000 per year, with a review and increase to $70,000 after six months. UTPB, through Leach, also agreed to pay moving expenses to Odessa for York and his family, as well as give him academic rank with tenure and U.T. System benefits among other things.

York, who now resides in Gaithersburg, Maryland, claims the terms of his written contract, copies of which are included in his original petition filed July 7, has been violated and that he is entitled to actual and punitive damages.

York maintains he abandoned "21 years of service with the U.S. government" to accept the position of Energy Center director and that he did so only "for a tenured, full professor, faculty position at UTPB and UT with a compensation and benefits package equal to or better than his then-existing U.S. government income and benefits."

According to a spokesman for the U.T. System, York's position as Energy Center director was "an administrative appointment" only, with no tenure involved.

James Duncan, U.T. System vice chancellor for academic affairs, has indicated no request for tenure for York was ever submitted to the Board of Regents for consideration.

AIDS

During the investigation, police found enlarged photographs of nude children and a computer containing information about them, Ms. Coca said.

The addresses and names of the 40 children were discovered after the computer code was broken Tuesday, Ms. Coca said.

Ethridge apparently kept files about those boys he had "long-term relations with," Ms. Coca said. The files included addresses, names, telephone numbers and dates when Ethridge met the boys, she said.

"Usually those relationships were 10 years or longer," Ms. Coca said. "Some of the boys were 7 and 9 at the beginning and are now between 17 and 19."

For "short-term" relations, Ethridge apparently kept computer stories on what transpired, Ms. Coca said.

Last week, Ms. Coca interviewed two Marlin children who knew Ethridge and expects one of them, a girl, to be tested for AIDS.

BUS

The wait didn't seem to bother the other three passengers in the terminal, two of whom had an easy enough time entertaining themselves.

Husband and wife Michael and Suzy Amaral, 22 and 21, married only about eight months, were on their way to San Angelo to visit a friend of Suzy's, they said amid jibes, giggles and cut ups about each other.

"He never shuts up, and I barely can get a word in," said Mrs. Amaral.

By coincidence, the couple call Leavenworth, Kan. home, they said, but disavowed any connection with incarceration in that famous town of prisons.

Within the general giggling and gossip, Suzy allowed how she didn't much like travelling in Texas. "It just seems that everybody is stuck up — or thinks you are," she said.

But the observation was offered in an offhand manner, as if she really didn't believe it as she said it. One has to talk about something while waiting for a bus.

The fourth traveler, 15-year-old Jeremy Leopold, didn't seem to have much to say as he waited with his mother and little brother, who had come to the terminal to see him off to visit his father in San Antonio.

But he brightened up when asked about his gear, which included a $160 skateboard. "It's like my transportation," he said.

Jeremy seemed unsure as he talked about the trip to San Antonio. His father had preceded the family to the south Texas city to start work in a hospital and set up their household, he said.

Jeremy said he'd rather have taken a plane to see his father, but might have spoken for many bus travelers when he said the trip "was too short to spend so much money."

Correction

It was incorrectly reported in Tuesday's edition of the Reporter-Telegram that the state convention of Texas Association of Mexican American Chambers of Commerce was held in San Antonio. The meeting was in Houston. Also, Manuel Carrasco and not Roger Robles is chairman of the Eastside Economic Development Task Force.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the errors.

Jerry Cunningham, chairman of the commission's governing board, said Dickson's combination of experience in substance abuse treatement and management helped win him the job. "These difficult financial times demand that we manage our resources to the fullest to provide Texans with the best possible chemical dependency services for their tax dollars," Cunningham said.

Dickson said he is "very optimistic" about his new position. "Due to the tremendous national interest in chemical dependency at the level of government, industry, education and down to the family, there has never been a better time to make this agency effective to maintain and enhance its leadership role in the chemical dependency field."

Lawmakers combined the old Commission on Alcoholism with the drug abuse programs of several other state agencies to make the Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse in 1985. The Legislature gave the combined agency a 32.5-percent increase in appropriations earlier this year.

SHOOTING

Just beyond the River Entrance is a main corridor leading to the National Command Center, the heavily secured area of the building where the Joint Chiefs of Staff meet. the office of Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger is one floor above the entrance.

"The man produced a gun and proceeded to run past the guard and make a dash toward the National Command Center," said Pentagon spokesman William Caldwell.

"An investigation has been initiated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Federal Protective Service," Caldwell said.

The Pentagon and GSA declined to identify the guards.

Caldwell said no one else was injured in the incident.

Although the spokesman said it was unclear how many people were in the area at the time, the River Entrance is normally quite busy at that hour of the morning.

Caldwell said Weinberger was in the building at the time of the shooting, but he didn't know if the defense secretary was in his office.

The spokesman said there were no reports of any verbal threats or statements by the intruder before the shooting.

The spokesman said he did not know what type of weapon the man had, beyond the fact that it was a small-caliber handgun.

The National Command Center includes a number of offices, conference rooms and an area known as the "war room" where the members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff meet. The center is reached through a corridor directly across from the River Entrance.

The spokesman estimated the man was about 30 feet past the River Entrance security checkpoint when he was shot.

The incident was believed to be the most serious involving Pentagon security in more than 15 years. In May 1972, a bomb went off late at night inside a 4th-floor restroom in the building, causing extensive damage but no injuries.

U.S.S.R., Iran condemn 'dangerous' U.S. moves

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union and Iran have agreed to cooperate in large-scale economic projects and have condemned "dangerous actions" by the United States in the Persian Gulf, Pravda said today.

The Communist Party daily said Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Yuli M. Vorontsov held talks with top Iranian officials, including President Ali Khamenei, during a trip to Tehran that ended Tuesday.

Vorontsov is on a three-nation tour of the Middle East and Persian Gulf region that Soviet media say is aimed at helping negotiate an end to the nearly 7-year-old war between Iran and Iraq. Vorontsov has already visited Iraq and Syria.

Pravda published a dispatch from the official Tass news agency that said the Soviet Union and Iran "declared for the implementation of large-scale projects of mutually beneficial economic cooperation." The report gave no specifics.

Both sides expressed interest in further developing political contacts, the report said, without providing any details.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Cyprus, reported that Vorontsov said the Soviet Union was willing to consider cooperation on long-term projects in the fields of energy and industry, including steel production.

The agency, monitored in Cyprus, said Vorontsov said he expected Iranian representatives to visit Moscow for talks on the projects. It gave no details.

The Soviet report said that during discussions on the situation in the Persian Gulf, the Soviets and Iranians expressed "mutual concern over U.S. dangerous actions and over the unprecedented buildup of the U.S. military presence in the area."

The Reagan administration has agreed to reflag Kuwaiti tankers and provide them with U.S. Navy protection to defend them from Iranian attacks. Tehran accuses Kuwait of aiding Iraq in the war.

The Soviet Union has called for the removal of all foreign naval forces from the strategic waterway.

The report published by Pravda said Iran supported the Kremlin stance on "withdrawal of all naval ships of non-gulf countries from the gulf as soon as possible."

JIDDA, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Saudi officials say thousands of Iranians in Mecca for the annual Moslem pilgrimage planned to seize the Grand Mosque and force pilgrims to proclaim Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini their religious leader.

In Mecca today, King Fahd vowed to defend Islam's holy shrines and Saudi Arabian territory against any conspiracy of hate.

The first planeload of Iranian pilgrims wounded in Friday's clashes in the holy city landed in Iran's capital of Tehran today, the official Islamic Republic News Agency said. The pilgrims reiterated Iranian officials' claims that Saudi authorities were to blame for the violence that left hundreds of people dead, according to the agency, monitored in Cyprus.

The plane also bore the bodies of 58 victims.

"We will never relent in the defense of our homeland and sacred shrines with souls and money," Fahd told heads of Moslem delegations making the annual hajj, or pilgrimmage.

The Saudi monarch did not mention Iran directly, but his address clearly alluded to the clashes, in which Iranian pilgrims battled with Saudi riot police. Saudi officials said at least 402 people were killed, 275 of them Iranians, and hundreds were injured in a stampede.

Iran claims Saudi police mowed down pilgrims with machine guns, killing at least 600 Iranians and injuring 4,500. Saudi authorities say no shots were fired.

Meanwhile, Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa headed for Tehran with a letter from President Hafez Assad to Iranian President Ali Khamenei, an official announcement in Damascus said today.

Sharaa's visit was seen as a Syrian attempt to cool down the Saudi-Iranian confrontation. Sharaa flew to the Iranian capital Tuesday night. No details were given.

According to officials in Mecca, who spoke on condition of anonymity, Iranians interrogated by authorities confessed they planned to take over the Grand Mosque in Mecca, where 2.1 million Moslems from 123 countries gathered for the pilgrimage.

An estimated 157,000 Iranians were among those making the pilgrimage, which is required at least once in the lifetime of Moslems who can afford the trip.

The Iranians planned to lock pilgrims inside the huge mosque and force them to declare Khomeini, Iran's revolutionary patriarch, the religious leader of the world's 850 million Moslems, the officials said.

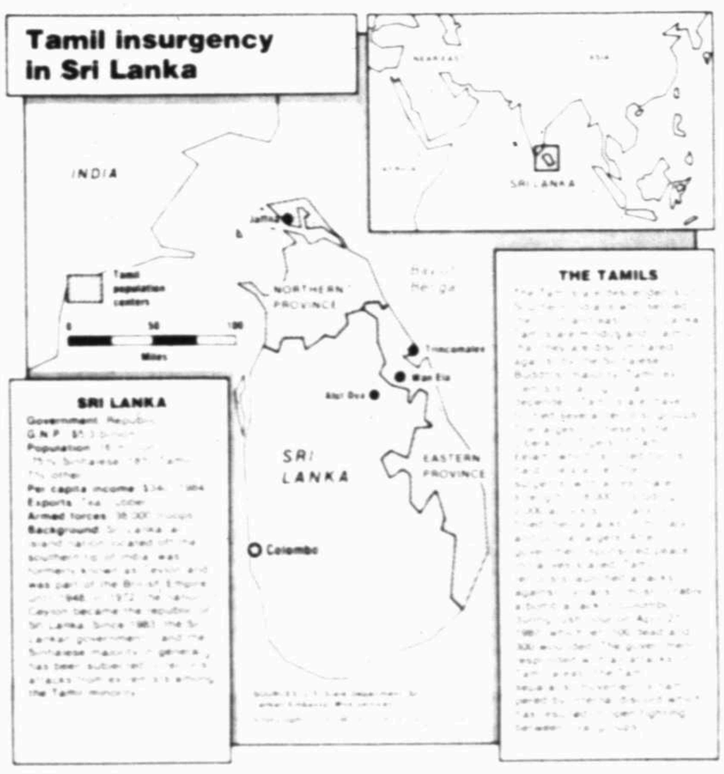

If the trapped pilgrims resisted, the plan called for killing the mosque's prayer leader and setting fire to parts of the building, the officials said.

Nearly all Iranian Moslems are Shiites, a minority sect at odds for 1,300 years with the Sunni sect that includes the Saudi royal family and 85 percent of the world's Moslems. Khomeini has said the Saudi rulers are unfit to be custodians of Islam's holy sites.

In Tehran, the 35 returning pilgrims were greeted by Iranian Prime Minister Hussein Musavi, who praised their spirit of resistance and repeated allegations that the deaths were planned by the Saudis "upon the recommendations of their United States advisors," IRNA said.

Iranian television, monitored in Nicosia, showed a score of coffins, wrapped with the Iranian green, red and white flag, lined up on the tarmac.

Tamil rebels begin surrendering weapons under Indian-backed plan

JAFFNA, Sri Lanka (AP) — The most powerful Tamil rebel militia began surrendering its weapons today under an Indian-brokered peace accord to end four years of separatist fighting on this island nation.

"The war is over now," a rebel spokesman, codenamed Raheem, told reporters.

The insurgents delivered at least three truckloads of guns, ammunition and explosives to the military base at Pilali, about 12 miles northeast of Jaffna.

The surrender began with a ceremony at the base.

A political leader of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, known as Yogi, turned over his German-made Luger pistol to Sepala Attygale, a retired general who serves as secretary in the Sri Lankan Defense Ministry.

Attygale, in turn, gave Yogi a letter granting amnesty to the Tamil fighters. About 6,000 people have been killed in the civil war between the majority Sinhalese government and minority Tamil rebels.

On Tuesday, Yogi was the first speaker at a massive Tigers' rally in Jaffna to announce that the militia had agreed to abide by the peace accord.

Shortly after the exchange, three trucks driven by Tamil fighters drove in with guns, ammunition, grenades, rockets and cans of explosives.

Government officials said they could not say how many weapons were on the trucks. State-run radio said they included anti-aircraft guns and "a large number" of mortars.

Palali, the main military airfield on the northern peninsula, had been headquarters for the Sri Lankan army. It now is the base for more than 4,000 Indian peacekeeping soldiers sent here to oversee the accord, signed last week by India and Sri Lanka.

Raheem said earlier the rebels would send a total of about 5,000 weapons in truckloads to the Indian army.

Tiger leader Velupillai Prabhakaran announced at the rally Tuesday that the militia would respect the peace accord, although it would not sign it, and abandon its armed struggle for a separate Tamil nation.

The other four Tamil rebel groups also have agreed to surrender their weapons.

"If we do not hand over our weapons, there will be a confrontation between us and the Indian military," Prabhakaran said. "We have no choice. We have to toe the line of the Indian government."

Tamils, who are mostly Hindus, make up 18 percent of Sri Lanka's 16 million people. They maintain they are discriminated against by the majority Sinhalese Buddhists, who control the government.

India, which is predominantly Hindu, has a large Tamil population in the southern part of the country. It has served as exile headquarters for the Tigers and other Tamil militant groups, and can exert great influence on the rebels.

The rebels are not a party to the accord, pushed by Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi. India has sent more than 4,000 troops to Tamil-dominated northern Sri Lanka to guarantee its implementation.

Hundreds of militiamen armed with AK-47 assault rifles guarded the rally Tuesday. The Tigers also are known to have mortars, rocket-propelled grenades and machine guns.

Prabhakaran told the rally he had been promised the Indian army would protect the Tamil minority once the Tigers surrendered their weapons.

"Although we do not like this agreement, we trust India and Mr. Gandhi and expect them to safeguard us after we surrender our arms," he said.

The 33-year-old Prabhakaran received cheers when he declared the struggle for an independent Tamil homeland would go on despite loss of the rebels' arms.

"The mode of our struggle will change, but we'll be fighting for Tamil Eelam with the support of the Tamil-speaking people," he declared.

The rebels wanted a separate nation, to be called Eelam, in Sri Lanka's northern and eastern provinces. The peace accord calls for a single provincial council to govern the two regions but does not meet the Tigers' minimum demand for a formal merger of the two.

Chilean jet bursts into flame after tire blows out

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — A Chilean jetliner with 33 people on board broke in half and burst into flames after a tire blew out on impact. One passenger, a U.S. citizen, was killed, airline officials said.

Television broadcasts monitored in Santiago showed the Lan Chile Boeing 737 engulfed in flames on the runway, its fuselage split in two, following the Tuesday evening crash in the northern city of Calama. Firefighters, working under bright lights, sprayed foam on the wreckage.

The government news agency Orbe said 10 people were injured in the crash, including a flight attendant who required emergency surgery.

Airline officials said Ronald Josey, an employee of Peoria, Ill.-based Caterpillar Inc., was killed. His age and hometown were not released.

Gil Nolde, a spokesman for the equipment company, said by telephone late Tuesday from Peoria that he did not recognize Josey's name.

"The plane broke in half, right at the section where I was," said Sergio Stoppel, a doctor on board. "The roof fell in and several things, including chairs, went flying."

Diplomatic immunity under scrutiny

By SANDY JOHNSON

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department's chief of protocol defended diplomatic immunity today, despite testimony from victims who told tales of rapes and assaults gone unpunished, saying "we are an honorable nation — we are not an Iran. We have set our signature on a treaty."

Selwa Roosevelt testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on legislation that would limit immunity for foreign diplomats. She said the policy of diplomatic immunity protects U.S. diplomats and their families at missions abroad.

"If the United States government unilaterally alters its treaty obligation, we surely will invite more harmful reciprocal action," she said.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., has introduced legislation that would limit immunity for diplomats accused of violent crimes, drug trafficking and driving while intoxicated or under the influence of drugs.

Helms was spurred by incidents such as the 1982 shooting of nightclub bouncer Kenny Skeen allegedly by the son of the Brazilian ambassador.

While Skeen lay unconscious in a Washington hospital, police confiscated two guns from the son, Antonio da Silveira, and charged him with assault. But when he revealed his father's diplomatic status, the complaint was droppedand the son was released to embassy officials.

State Department officials then huddled with a Brazilian official, who volunteered that da Silveira and his mother would leave the country.

Diplomatic immunity put the government in a bind, as spelled out in a declassified inner-departmental memo obtained by British journalist Chuck Ashman, author of "Diplomatic Crime."

"Legally we cannot force the boy to leave," the memo to Mrs. Roosevelt said. She was advised to "use a counseling approach" with the Brazilian embassy officials.

Skeen, recovering but angry, wrote to President Reagan about his predicament. He got back a letter from a State Department official indicating regret that he had been injured but reaffirming the government's support of diplomatic immunity. Skeen eventually sued Brazil and the ambassador and received an undisclosed settlement.

The State Department says such immunity protects U.S. diplomats and their families from harassment by unfriendly governments.

The department has estimated that about 27,000 foreigners and their families are covered by diplomatic immunity. That principle, codified in international law under the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, means a diplomat charged with a crime can't be tried in court unless the home country waives immunity.

There are no data on diplomatic crime, but some cases occasionally appear in the media. A few recent examples:

— On July 17 in New York City, Margaret Curry of Queens said she was rammed by a car driven by a high-ranking Afghan diplomat's son. Ms. Curry said she was directing her boyfriend into a parking space when the diplomat's car pulled up and Shah Mohammad Dost, Afghanistan's envoy to the United Nations, demanded she relinquish the space. When she refused, the diplomat directed his son to hit her with the car. The Afghans denied the allegations and said Ms. Curry "tripped." She was treated for cuts and bruises.

— On Feb. 13 in Washington, Kiatro Abisinito, ambassador of Papua New Guinea, was involved in a car crash that critically injured an ABC radio newsman. He voluntarily left the country when federal officials launched an investigation.

Steve Goldstein, a New York City mortgage broker who says he was assaulted by the Mexican ambassador to the U.N. in 1985, on Tuesday called diplomatic immunity "a license to kill."

Goldstein said he parked his car in front of an Upper East Side residence on April 4 for a few minutes to retrieve an umbrella from a nearby apartment. When he came out, a blue Mercedes had pulled up behind him bumper-to-bumper.

"I motioned him to back up so I could get out. He was screaming, 'You're in my spot,' " Goldstein said. Photographs later showed that 18 inches of his car protruded into a diplomatic parking space.

The driver disappeared into a townhouse, so Goldstein said he attempted to maneuver his car out of the parking space. The next thing Goldstein knew, "He's looking at me through a closed passenger window with a pistol. ... I was petrified. I thought I was going to die. He's screaming. He takes the gun and he smashes the window. He puts the gun to my head. I expected to hear the click of the gun next."

The man ran back into the townhouse. Shaken, Goldstein flagged down police. The man reappeared, flashed a diplomatic badge at police and walked away.

There was nothing authorities could do. They said the man was Porerio Munoz-Ledo, the Mexican envoy to the U.N. The Mexican embassy later said the ambassador's chauffeur was driving the car and that Goldstein had attacked the chauffer with a pipe.

North's attorneys make waves against Walsh

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorneys for Lt. Col. Oliver L. North are making another attempt to knock down independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh's authority to investigate the Iran-Contra affair.

With the stage dark on Capitol Hill after 11 weeks of congressional hearings, North's lawyers were due in the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals today for their third argument on whether Walsh can legally conduct a grand jury investigation.

Walsh was appointed to investigate the sale of U.S. weapons to Iran and covert military support of the Nicaraguan Contras. North, in his congressional testimony, acknowedged being deeply involved in both activities while assigned to the National Security Council.

Grand jury investigations are conducted secretly, but the latest legal maneuvering reportedly stems from North's refusal to comply with a subpoena for a sample of his handwriting.

U.S. District Judge Aubrey E. Robinson Jr. ruled last month that Walsh was acting under authority properly conferred by the Justice Department in a March 5 regulation issued to blunt North's first challenge to the constitutionality of the independent counsel statute.

Robinson also said he saw no reason to rule on the constitutionality of the independent counsel provisions of the 1979 Ethics in Government Act.

The judge issued a sealed order, presumably ordering North to comply with the subpoena.

In a brief filed in advance of today's arguments, North's lawyers contend Walsh is not acting under the Justice Department regulation and therefore the ethics law is still at issue.

"There is no evidence that the particular exercise of authority at issue has derived from anything other than the authority under the" ethics law, said the brief filed by attorneys Brendan V. Sullivan Jr. and Barry Simon.

"While the independent counsel has in theory wrapped himself in the Department of Justice's regulations, in an attempt to deflect judicial review of the constitutionality of the Ethics in Government Act, he has in actuality gone out of his way to reject any suggestion that he has accepted an appointment as an officer of the Department of Justice," the defense brief said.

North was held in contempt of court in May for refusing to comply with the subpoena, court records indicate.

Following a June hearing, the appeals court ordered Robinson to review North's legal challenge before holding him in contempt.

Repeal of fairness doctrine under debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fairness doctrine supporters say the Federal Communications Commission's decision to abolish the 38-year-old policy strikes at the heart of the law requiring broadcasters to serve the public interest.

Media groups, however, hailed Tuesday's landmark decision as an important step toward giving broadcast journalists the same First Amendment guarantees that have protected the print media — a freedom most broadcasters will handle "professionally and fairly," they say.

But members of Congress promised to accelerate efforts to write into law the doctrine that requires broadcasters to present contrasting views of controversial issues. They claim the FCC's action was an "end-run" around Congress, which earlier this year passed a bill to codify the doctrine but has been unable to override President Reagan's veto.

Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., chairman of the House telecommunications subcommittee, declared "The honeymoon between Congress and the Patrick Commission is over."

Dennis R. Patrick took over as chairman of the commission last spring.

The doctrine, which evolved through FCC decisions and case law, required radio and TV stations to cover "controversial issues of public importance" in their communities and present contrasting views on those issues. If someone bought time to present a position on a controversial issue, the station had to ensure that its overall programming covered all sides, by selling ads or making free time available to groups with opposing views.

Unless and until Congress acts, radio and television broadcasters no longer will have to use the doctrine as a measure of their fairness in news and public affairs coverage.

"This action really strikes at the American system of broadcasting, at the Communications Act of 1934," the basis for most broadcast regulation, said former FCC commissioner Abbott Washburn, who served on the FCC from 1974 to 1982.

"The foundation of the act is the trusteeship concept" that broadcasters are licensed to serve the public interest, "and the fairness doctrine is at the core of that concept," Washburn said. "You're really undermining the system of broadcasting that has worked so well in this country."

Rosel Hyde, who was acting chairman of the FCC when the commission adopted a report in 1949 that formalized the doctrine, shared Washburn's concern.

"I recognize with the passage of time the need to change (regulation) in light of new technology, but this is a proposed change in the basic conditions of issuing a license" to a broadcaster, he said.

The broadcast and print media dismissed such concerns.

"Government does not belong in any newsroom," said Bob Mulholland, director of the Television Information Office, which represents the commercial television industry.

Edward O. Fritts, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, the industry trade group, applauded the FCC for "erasing this blight on the First Amendment."

"We are all now much closer to enjoying the same freedom to serve the American public's news and information needs as the printed press," he said, adding that "the vast majority of broadcasters will do this professionally and fully."

The commissioner's four sitting members voted unanimously to abandon the doctrine on grounds that it allows government to intrude in the editorial affairs of broadcasters in violation of the Constitution, and that the proliferation of radio and TV stations has made the policy unnecessary in assuring that diverse viewpoints are aired.

They also said the policy "chills" discussion of important issues because broadcasters avoid coverage that might cause the doctrine to be invoked.

"Today we reaffirm our faith in the American people — our faith in their ability to distinguish between fact and fiction without any help from the government," Patrick said.

The FCC's action to end enforcement of the doctrine came on a lawsuit brought by the Meredith Corp., a Des Moines, Iowa, broadcast group.

A House subcommittee says bad bolts have crippled 1,220 of the Army's M-60 main battle tanks, above. The subcommittee has been examining the spread of cheaply made bolts, nuts and fasteners throughout American industry.

Army tanks pulled due to 'faulty bolts'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Faulty bolts have crippled 1,220 of the Army's main battle tanks, according to a House subcommittee member who said hearings today were intended to determine whether similar problems exist elsewhere in the military.

The House Energy and Commerce oversight subcommittee was scheduled to hear Army officials testify today about the problems with guns on nearly one-eighth of the service's 10,000 M-60 tanks, said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore.

"They can't fire the main gun except in a national emergency because the screws are in such bad shape," said Wyden, who had seen copies of the Army's prepared testimony.

The panel also planned to hear testimony about other weapons problems caused by substandard fasteners, the congressman said.

Wyden said Army officials told him that 1,220 of the tanks, each costing $1.6 million, need repairs because of the bolts.

The subcommittee has been examining the spread of cheaply made, counterfeit bolts, nuts, rivets and other fasteners throughout American industry. Some have turned up on Pentagon weapons, the lawmakers have been told.

"There are millions of defective bolts now in the Pentagon system," said Wyden.

Blind sailor experiencing 'harmony, beauty' of open sea

By ALAN FLIPPEN

PORTSMOUTH, R.I. (AP) — The clamor that surrounded the start of Jim Dickson's solo voyage across the Atlantic Ocean left the blind sailor longing for the solitude of the open sea.

"There really is a harmony and a beauty to the sea that I've shared with other people on boats and that I've experienced to a limited degree myself," Dickson said before departing Tuesday for Plymouth, England. "When alone, I think it will have a whole new magnitude."

Dickson delayed his voyage by almost an hour to say individual goodbyes to many of the more than 70 relatives and friends who crowded Bend Boat Basin. He admitted to some anxieties at the start of the trip, expected to take a month.

"Is there going to be enough wind? Is there going to be too much wind?" he wondered. "Am I ever going to get this press conference over with?"

He intends his trip to be a dramatic demonstration of the ways in which modern technology can help blind people lead productive lives.

Dickson's 36-foot sloop The Eye-Opener is equipped with a $12,000 talking computer system. At the touch of a few buttons, it will tell him his position, wind speed and direction. His radar will whistle if it detects an obstruction in front of the boat.

Dickson stressed that the equipment he is using is commercially available and can be put to use by blind people with little adaptation.

"On the boat, there is a ham radio," he said. "I push a button, and a female voice reads out the frequency. That's an off-the-shelf device. It costs $45.

"Blind people have been telephone operators because of computers," he said. "Any job where there's a computer, a blind person can do it and can function completely independently."

Dickson, 41, is associate director of Project Vote, a national voter registration organization in Washington. Retinitis pigmentosa, a disease that destroys the retina, left him legally blind at age 7.

Dickson's equipment got its first real test Tuesday afternoon, after two yachtsmen who helped guide him through Narragansett Bay left the boat and headed back to Portsmouth.

The waters outside the bay are crisscrossed by shipping lanes leading to Boston, New York and Providence, and are hazardous for small craft, said Norman Kaplan, who operates tour and charter boats in the ocean and bay.

Dickson, attached to the boat by a life belt to guard against being washed overboard, gave a confident wave as he adjusted the sails and settled in for the journey.

Jim Dickson, Washington, D.C., left Newport today to sail single-handed for Plymouth, England. Dickson, who is legally blind since age 7, will sail his 36-foot sloop, Eye Opener, across the Atlantic hoping to arrive in 30 days.

AP Laserphoto

He said he has been sailing for 17 years, but has never sailed alone before for more than an afternoon.

"Most of my sailing has been done with a sighted crew, and I've had to adjust my sailing to their schedules," he said. "For the next 30 days, I'm not going to have to turn around because a crew member has got a family, or a job, or is seasick."

"I love to sail," he said. "I'm one of these people who, if I had a car, the bumper sticker would read, 'I'd rather be sailing.'"

Meese did not comply with disclosure law according to GAO

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III failed to comply with financial disclosure requirements, and two government offices didn't press him for information about the matter, a General Accounting Office report says.

Rep. Gerry Sikorski, D-Minn., called a hearing today of the House Civil Service subcommittee on human resources to examine the report dealing with Meese's links to a businessman tied to the Wedtech Corp. scandal.

The report by the GAO, the congressional watchdog agency, said that in his 1985 financial disclosure form, Meese "did not disclose the assets held, purchased, or sold by his partnership with FMII (Financial Management International Inc.), or income attributable to specific assets of the partnership, as required by the Ethics in Government Act."

Financial Management is a firm of W. Franklyn Chinn, a San Francisco businessman and former Wedtech director. Chinn is under criminal investigation for ties to Wedtech, a New York City defense contractor accused of bribing public officials.

Last month, the ethics office said Meese should have listed details of his limited blind partnership investment with Chinn on his financial disclosure forms. The attorney general recently filed amended forms showing he invested $54,500, reaping profits of nearly $40,000 on 23 highly speculative one-day stock trades in 19 months.

Here are some of the highlights of the 18-page GAO report:

— Meese did not have permission from the Office of Government Ethics to hide from view the investments with Chinn under a limited blind trust arrangement.

— Meese incorrectly reported the Financial Management partnership as a single asset, rather than spelling out how much income the partnership generated, including stock transactions.

— Meese inaccurately identified the partnership as Financial Management International Inc. Financial Management was actually the general partner that managed the investments of Meese and his wife, Ursula.

— Justice Department officials accepted Meese's reasoning for not disclosing his assets on the grounds the partnership was "blind."

— The ethics office did not question the partnership or request additional information until April 1987.

Neither agency "obtained information from Mr. Meese concerning holdings of his partnership and the transactions involving those holdings as required by the disclosure provisions of the Ethics Act," the report said.

Meese and his attorneys repeatedly have denied any wrongdoing involving the attorney general's ties with Chinn. Any omissions on the disclosure forms were inadvertant, Meese said.

A Justice Department spokesman, Patrick Korten, said it was up to the ethics office to indicate whether Meese's disclosure report was adequate.

"No word was ever received from the Office of Government Ethics indicating they had any problem with the report until these political attacks began to appear in the media," Korten said.

He said no one from the Justice Department would attend today's hearing because the session was an attempt to "buy a headline at Ed Meese's expense."

Small plane, airliner collide; Pilots land safely

LANCASTER, Calif. (AP) — A small plane collided with a commuter airliner over the Mojave Desert, but pilots of both damaged aircraft landed safely and the 11 people aboard walked away uninjured.

The accident was one of three involving small planes in the Los Angeles area Tuesday. The two earlier accidents involved crash landings, one of which caused cuts and bruises to two motorists on the ground.

In the collision, tragedy was averted 5,800 feet above the Antelope Valley when the pilot of the Trans World Express commuter carrier dived after spotting the small craft, officials said.

The twin-engine DeHavilland DHC-6 was on final approach to Lancaster's Fox Field when it was clipped by the single-engine Cessna 172 shortly after noon, said Federal Aviation Administration spokeswoman Elly Brekke.

"The pilot took some evasive action to avoid a more disastrous accident," Ms. Brekke said. "The Cessna struck the tail end of the DeHavilland with the Cessna's left wing."

The planes were flying without radar guidance under visual flight rules.

U.S. must keep oil lifeline open

Once again the civilized world was shocked by the predictably unpredictability of Islamic fundamentalist upheaval brought on by Iran's fanatical leader, the Ayatollah Khomeini.

Tehran's unrelenting drive to extend its rule over the entire Persian Gulf was laid bare by last week's rioting in Saudi Arabia. Incited by the ayatollah's call to turn the annual pilgrimage to Mecca into a battlefield, thousands of Iranians erupted in violent demonstrations intended to undermine the Saudi royal family's control over the richest oil-producing region of the Middle East.

The tremors that shook Saudi Arabia are only a foretaste of a more destabilizing shock wave that could engulf the oil fields of the Persian Gulf if the United States retreats from its long-standing strategic commitment to defend the flow of petroleum to the West and Japan.

The Reagan administration's controversial policy of escorting Kuwaiti tankers through the Strait of Hormuz, the choke point for 15 percent of the world's petroleum shipments, is the prime counterweight to Iran's campaign to intimidate the states of the gulf. Critics who contend the United States should pull back from the growing turmoil in the region can't deny the dangerous consequences of American inaction — which would give Tehran free rein to spread its Islamic revolt.

Iran's reactionary regime is seeking to dominate its Arab neighbors by exploiting the 1,300-year-old divisions between Sunni and Shiite Moslems.

The great schism in Islam, which originated with a struggle for control after the death of the prophet Mohammed in 632 A.D., is a source of deep-rooted bitterness among Shiites. In contrast to the prosperous Sunnis, the Shiite sect often has been viewed as an underclass by other Moslems.

Shiites comprise only 10 percent of the world's 850 million Moslems, but they constitute a majority in Iran and sizable minorities in Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, and other Arab states along the western shores of the gulf. Because of their sympathies for the Ayatollah Khomeini's fundamentalist revolution, the Shiites of the Arab world can be a potent force on behalf of Tehran.

The heavy loss of life in Mecca, which included hundreds of Shiite pilgrims who apparently were trampled to death in the melee, is a testament to the ayatollah's hold over his followers. The Shiites' zeal is fanned by a strong emphasis on martyrdom as a high religious virtue.

For the theocracy in Tehran, this backdrop also provides a convenient springboard for inciting anti-American and anti-European sentiment in the Arab world, inasmuch as Westerners, as non-believers, can be branded infidels in the struggle to promote the fundamentalist order.

To contain this Islamic fury, the United States and the other oil-consuming nations of the West must demonstrate their collective resolve to stand firm in the face of the Iranian menace. In addition to defending freedom of navigation in the gulf, the Reagan administration must continue to take the lead in international efforts, in the United Nations and other arenas, to isolate Tehran and staunch the supply of Western arms that prolongs the war with Iraq.

The only alternative to determined American action is to allow instability inspired by the ayatollah to prevail throughout the Persian Gulf. That could lead to a break in the oil lifeline that sustains the democracies of Japan and the West and the United States cannot in good conscience stand by and allow that to occur.

Reconsider closings

In the recent past I have been following the articles in the newspaper regarding closing of two of Midland's fire stations. I could see the economics of the closings but kept putting myself in the place of the many residents that reside in that area and could not help but wish they could find some other means with which to cut the city budget for the coming years. Could we not save money by not mowing vacant lots, grading alleys or even watering city parks? Which is most important to the health and welfare of the city?

A recent night brought the situation too close to home. At the apartment complex where I reside, a dryer in the laundry room did not operate properly and a number of residents sitting by the pool smelled smoke and noticed smoke coming from the laundry room. Quick reaction on the part of the residents but, moreso, a less-than-three-minute response by the fire department, kept a minor incident from becoming a major hazard. As the inner courtyard is surrounded by grape stake fences which are old and dry and located in some places not more than 10 to 12 feet from the laundry room, if the fire department had not contained it to a very small area, it could have been disastrous for hundreds of people.

The council should reconsider the closings so the fire department can continue to respond quickly and efficiently to any situation that might arise which places the people of Midland in jeopardy.

Don't waste expertise

I'd like to add my name to the list of those concerned over the reduction of emergency services personnel and the closing of two fire stations. This decision has an enormous impact on the safety of Midland County residents and every effort should be made to persuade the City Council to investigate other means of budget reduction.

The responsibilities of the emergency services provided by the fire department are not ones that can be delegated to other personnel and departments within the city. The amount of time expended in the training and development of experience and expertise of these men should not be wasted and lost to those of us who consider their service of vital importance to the people of Midland.

On one hand we have a group of citizens going all out to promote Midland as a great place to live and retire, while on the other hand we have a City Council making decisions that indicate they don't believe in the growth and progress of our city.

In an article recently, one of our councilmen stated that while on the way to work he noted little activity at one of the stations targeted for closure. As most of us know, the emergency services provided do not occur at the fire stations themselves; therefore, you wouldn't expect to see a great deal of emergency activity taking place at the station.

Working for the city

Can someone tell me why the city of Midland does not own a steam roller? Or, if in fact they do own one, why they don't use it?

They tar the roads, dump the gravel on, and then expect our cars to finish the job and smooth it all out.

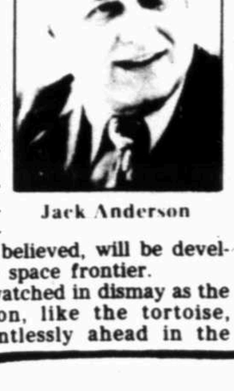

I did not buy my car to be used as a city maintenance vehicle. As I am required to use it as one, can you tell me what the current salary is for road maintenance personnel?

Baldrige saw space as nation's hope

WASHINGTON — The violent death of Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige has cheated America of a leader who had a vision of the future. In his quiet corner of Washington, he sought to open up the space frontier to entrepreneurs as well as explorers.

Jack Anderson

As he saw the future, it would belong to the nation that conquered space. For the technology of tomorrow, he believed, will be developed on the space frontier.

Baldrige watched in dismay as the Soviet Union, like the tortoise, pulled relentlessly ahead in the space race. Rabbit-like, America would leap ahead briefly, then sit back on its haunches while the plodding Russians moved steadily onward and upward.

The Soviets launched their rockets in all kinds of weather, undeterred by accidents or failures. A few cosmonauts died, some on the launch pad, others in orbit. The Soviet Union paused a moment to mourn and deliver medals to the survivors, then immediately resumed the space flights.

All told, the Soviets have sent up 40 times more space launches than we have. Of 103 rockets that roared into orbit last year, 91 came out of the Soviet Union. It was their lowest number in six years.

Soviet cosmonauts have had far more experience in space than American astronauts. The cosmonauts have performed unmatched feats in space. They have trained aboard space stations that the United States won't be able to duplicate until the mid-1990s.

Jane's Space Flight Directory, the most eminent authority on space, calls the Soviet lead in space "frightening." According to Jane's, the Soviet Union is now 10 years ahead of the United States in space development.

Yet Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has assigned still higher priority to the Soviet space program. Intelligence reports explain that he believes space exploration will boost Soviet technology and give the Soviet Union an edge in the high-tech age.

All these facts troubled Malcolm Baldrige. He believed that progress in space was too important to be left to the scientists and specialists alone. "Space is no longer the exclusive domain of science," he contended. He wanted to turn the free enterprise system loose on this new frontier.

"Cutting-edge technology has always been one of America's competitive advantages," he wrote shortly before he died. "It is important to our security and prosperity that we maintain leadership in this field." We will fall behind in technology, he warned, unless we "maintain our space leadership into the 21st century and beyond."

Baldrige contended that "government should devote itself to research and leave the commercial development and application of new technologies to the private sector." He looked upon space as a "national laboratory" where the government should conduct research. But as fast as businesses could adopt the new technologies and operate in space, he wanted to declare the orbit path around the earth a "commercial zone" open to entrepreneurs.

It was his vision that space explorers and entrepreneurs, working together, would develop technologies that would improve everyday life, thus ensuring that America's best years lie ahead.

Footnote: Before he died, Baldrige was working with Transportation Secretary Elisabeth Dole on a campaign to promote space exploration, development and commercialization. Those who share their dream can contact Upward America, P.O. Box 65432, Washington, D.C., 20036.

LIBERIAN AID DIVERSION — Much of the $434 million worth of U.S. aid provided to Liberia from 1980 to 1986 appears to have been misused or misappropriated, according to General Accounting Office auditors. The aid included food, military housing, development funds and other economic projects. The investigation, made at the request of Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., turned up evidence that some of the money was pocketed by Liberian government officials.

In 1984, the GAO auditors reported, the United States sold Liberia 44,000 tons of rice at a bargain price under the International Food Assistance Program. Some of the rice was given to Liberian soldiers in lieu of pay; more was simply stolen, ending up in the hands of government officials and favored corporations. Little of it got to the people for whom it was intended.

JAMES RESTON

After 48 years, columnist remains optimistic

WASHINGTON — After 48 years as a reporter on The New York Times, writing a column two or three times a week for more than 30 years, I concluded a little while ago that a man can stick in the trench too long.

James Reston

It's not that writing a column is so hard. As my old buddy Red Smith used to say, all you have to do is open a vein and bleed. But if you have to do it on deadline, you sleep funny the night before.

George Bernard Shaw tried it for a few years on The Spectator in London but finally gave it up because, he said, he felt like a man standing under a windmill.

Just when he finished an article, he said, one sail of the windmill would knock him over, and when he staggered through another column, the next sail would send him spinning ... and the next and the next.

So I'm not moving out but just moving over out of the way to write when I please, confident despite the recent silliness in Washington that things here are seldom as good or as bad as most people think they are.

Officials are no worse today than they used to be, but the reporting is better. People know more about the danger of atomic weapons, so we haven't had a world war for over 40 years whereas there were only 20 years between the two great catastrophes of the century.

In America, we have learned something about how to deal with adversity since the Great Depression, but not much about how to deal with prosperity. We're very rich but we're not having a very good time. We are producing so much food that we don't know what to do with the garbage, while half the human race goes to bed hungry every night.

I have some other funny ideas. I think we've won the cold war and don't know it. I think the Constitution is still working on its 200th birthday, against the corruption in politics, commerce and even in the pulpit. I don't like nuclear weapons or the plague of AIDS, but fear may be bringing us to our senses.

It takes a strong country to survive a government that doesn't know what's going on in its own shop and sweeps the Persian Gulf without minesweepers, but things balance out. If this no-fault government the people chose not once but twice were any better we wouldn't deserve it, and if it were any worse, we couldn't bear it.

Even so, we're probably going to get an agreement with the Russians to eliminate all short- and medium-range nuclear weapons, the first real reduction in these monsters since the invention of the atom bomb. When we do, both sides will still be left with more than twice the number of nuclear weapons they had at the time of the Cuban missile crisis, but we're turning a corner.

All the nations are speaking in different voices about the ideal goal of human life. In the Golden Age of their dreams, "nation shall no more lift sword against nation" ... "the free development of each will lead to the free development of all" ... "the world shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

But with regard to the roads to this ideal, there is utter confusion and the clash of contradictory opinion acted upon with the violence of fanaticism. There is, however, a gleam of hope.

For all the nations, including our own, are discovering the limits of ideology. President Mitterrand is modifying his socialism in France, President Reagan is looking at his deficits and wondering about his "supply-siders," and even Mikhail Gorbachev is recognizing that communism, on the 70th anniversary of the 1917 revolution, has been a spectacular economic and philosophic failure.

So after more than 50 years in journalism's greatest era — a quarter of the two centuries since the pamphleteers wrote the Constitution — I remain an up-to-date, stick-in-the-mud optimist.

There are theaters of violence, rebellions and uprisings of all sorts, mass hypocrisy and false sincerity fueled by television, and a general decline in courtesy and a decay of decency, but I don't despair.

I would feel better if marriage were more popular, but I doubt if so many people were ever so well fed, well read or bright-minded and curious and critical as the rising generation is today. My hope for them, after more than 52 years of married life, is that they'll finally know what old love means.

A while ago, I gathered some of these old columns in a book that my old sidekick Alistair Cooke reviewed in The New Yorker. When I thanked him for his amiable lies, every one of which I enjoyed, he explained that there were only two kinds of obituaries — vertical and horizontal, and he thought I'd like the vertical sort better.

So I'm off for a while, and I have some plans for what's left of my vertical years. I'm going to slow down my backswing. I'm going to move my vegetable garden at Fiery Run closer to the kitchen door, and I'm going to spend a little more time on Martha's Vineyard before they hang out the standing-room-only signs. Later, I'm going to try to bring back the smoke-filled room so that the next presidential candidates will be chosen by people who know something about them. And finally, if I'm lucky, I'm going to write a long love letter to America.

ART BUCHWALD

Building pool adds up — and that's no joke!

As part of my war on poverty, I decided to install a swimming pool in our new house. I didn't realize how complicated the purchase of a swimming pool can be. Next to used-car dealers, swimming pool salesmen are the most sincere of all businessmen, and one tends to believe everything they tell you.

Art Buchwald

I interviewed a swimming pool salesman the other day.

After looking over the property he said, "I can put in a pool — complete — for $25,000."

"Does this include everything?" I asked.

"Of course. That's my price — complete."

"Well, it's a little high," I said, "but perhaps I can make it. I'd like a rectangular pool."

"A rectangular pool? I wish you had told me that before. That's $8,000 extra. It's very difficult to dig a rectangle in the ground."

"That brings it up to $33,000," I said.

"Yes, but that will be complete with everything. Now I'd like to ask you a few questions."

"Yes, sir."

"Did you plan on putting water in the pool?" he asked.

"I thought it would be fun."

"That will be an extra $7,500. If we add water we have to get a permit and that takes a great deal of time."

"I knew I shouldn't have asked for water," I said.

"Did you want concrete in the pool?"

"I think so. Why do you ask?"

"Well, the pool gets so muddy otherwise. The concrete will be $3,000 extra. If you want Gunite, it will be $4,500."

"What's the difference?"

"If you use regular concrete, the pool will leak."

He wrote everything down in his book.

"Let me ask you this," he continued. "Had you planned on filtering the water?"

"What are the advantages?"

"Well, if you filter the water, there is less chance of the children catching typhoid or yellow fever. We can give you an excellent filter for $1,900."

"I guess in the long run it would be cheaper," I said.

"Now what about a ladder to get out of the pool?"

"Couldn't people just climb over the side?" I inquired.

"They could, but that would mean we'd have to install coping. The steps cost $700, and the coping $1,200."

"You better give us the ladder."

"What had you planned to put around the pool?" he asked.

"I don't know. What do you usually put around a pool?"

"We could give you a concrete walk for $3,000."

"It sounds as if you're losing money on the job," I said.

"That's our problem," he replied. "Now what about leaves in the pool?"

"I don't want any leaves in the pool," I said, hoping to save some money.

"We don't put leaves in the pool," he said. "We take them out. You'll want a skimmer for $1,100. Did you plan on a diving board?"

"Sure, why not?"

"That will be $10,000."

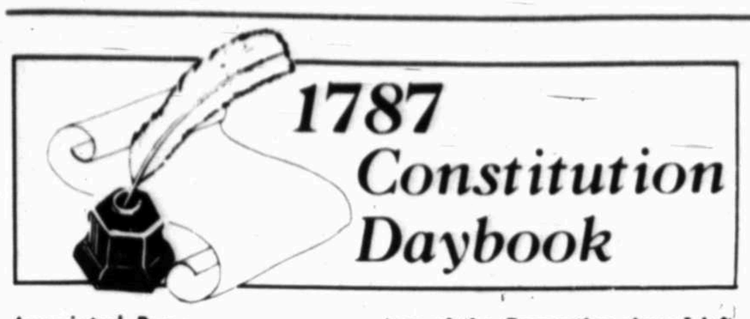

"Ten thousand dollars for a diving board?" I asked, incredulously.

"Not just for a diving board," he said. "If you're going to have a diving board, you'll need deep water. The price I gave you was for a shallow pool. I thought you understood that. Why don't you get anything I say straight?"

"I'm sorry," I apologized.

He wrote down $10,000 in his notebook. "OK, but no more jokes. Pool-building is a serious business."

Associated Press

Sunday, Aug. 5, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The day was very warm — 82 in the city — and fair.

Jacob Hiltzheimer "went to Church fore and afternoon, in the evening took a ride with my wife around by the Banks of Schuylkill."

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Congress had had a quorum nearly every day since July 4. However, today Mr. Holten was on his way home to Massachusetts and Mr. Blount of North Carolina was on his way back to Philadelphia. When Monday came, only five states had the minimum of two deputies required to vote. It would not have a quorum again until the Convention adjourned.

CONVENTION TODAY

The Convention remained in recess. All sorts of rumors concerning its work passed up and down the 13 states. For example, James Warren wrote from Milton, Mass., to his old friend Elbridge Gerry:

"We hear that you have brought the great Business of the Convention nearly to a Conclusion. I wish it may be a happy one. We are told it will make us happy if it be not our own faults; but every Curiosity is raised to know the result in detail, every pen is held ready for Action & perhaps it will be as thoroughly scanned out doors as it had been in Convention."

Lafayette wrote to James Madison from Paris with a somewhat different view:

"I am Very Anxious to Hear of the Convention. The fame of the United States Requires that Some thing be immediately done. It is Still More Important to their happiness."

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson (Conn.) awoke in Burlington, N.J., to find that he could not get a passage to Philadelphia. His expenses for the day came to 12 shillings.

George Washington had an early dinner at Col. Ogden's, after which he returned to Philadelphia with Gouverneur Morris (Pa.) and Robert Morris (Pa.), arriving about 9 p.m.

James McClurg (Va.) wrote from Richmond to James Madison:

"I am much obliged to you for your communication of the proceedings of the Convention since I left them; for I feel that anxiety about the result, which its importance must give to every honest citizen. If I thought that my return could contribute in the smallest degree to its improvement, nothing should keep me away."

Elbridge Gerry turned 43 today.

LOOKING BACK
Elbridge Gerry (July 7, 1744 — Nov. 23, 1814)

Elbridge Gerry, the son of a prosperous Marblehead, Mass., merchant, graduated from Harvard in 1762, and promptly joined the family firm. In 1772, Marblehead sent him to the Massachusetts House of Delegates.

An ardent defender of colonial rights, Gerry soon became a protege of Sam Adams. On April 18, 1775, he escaped the British troops on their way to Concord by fleeing into a nearby field in his nightshirt. Chosen to represent Massachusetts in the Congress, he signed both the Declaration of Independence and the Articles of Confederation.

On Jan. 12, 1786, Gerry had married 20-year-old Ann Thompson of New York. She and their infant daughter Catherine joined him in Philadelphia in June, but returned to New York at the July recess, and remained there.

Gerry was a republican in the 18th-century sense. As such, he distrusted power and those who wielded it, feared standing armies, believed that successful republican government required a virtuous and eternally suspicious electorate which would elect virtuous and unselfish and devoted leaders (like Gerry), and that not even virtuous leaders could be trusted very long with any real power.

Gerry was by nature an "aginer" — far more prone to criticize a proposal than to originate one. Thus, personality reinforced philosophy to assure that Gerry's major contribution would be to see that any power granted in the Constitution had been carefully considered. Also, however reluctant his support and vote for the Connecticut Compromise, it was vital in resolving the fight over representation. Nevertheless, Gerry refused to sign the Constitution. His opposition encouraged Massachusetts anti-Federalists to wage a tough ratification battle.

Congress 'like junkie, addicted to debt bills'

By STEVEN KOMAROW

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is racing to raise the national debt ceiling for the third time in four months to prevent the Treasury from being pushed into default.

But it's not like the Lone Ranger riding out to save humanity. It's like a junkie needing a fix.

Congress is addicted to debt bills.

Lawmakers could dispose of the Treasury's debt needs for years, simply by approving the credit that it already knows the government will need. Instead, Congress just keeps passing short-term debt bills, good for a year or two at the most and often only good for days.

The reason?

Amendments. Congress loves to load the debt bill with items that often have nothing to do with the national debt. After waiting until the last minute to extend the government more debt, whatever gets attached to the debt bill is on a fast track to becoming law.

For Congress, creating an occasional debt crisis raises the pulse and gets the legislative juices running. Only a few times a year does a bill come along that must be passed, that speeds its way through the House and Senate and is signed by the president.

In the 1970s, annual cost-of-living increase for Social Security was the usual dressing on the debt bill. Then Congress made that automatic.

The House then decided to make the debt bill itself automatic, deemed to have passed when the House approves the budget. That left the Senate alone to think up amendments, and the Senate took complete advantage.

Last year's debt bill was loaded with everything from Indian fishing rights to free feed for drought-plagued livestock farmers.

The debt limit and the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law have now been linked since 1985. Even many conservatives view Gramm-Rudman as a logical excuse to vote for a debt bill.

The amendments help to sugar coat the bitter medicine, giving lawmakers a politically acceptable excuse to vote for a bill that Congress has no choice but to swallow.

"It has nothing to do with the realities of the debt ceiling," says Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., a member of the House task force on budget reform. "It has everything to do with legislative strategy."

Sometimes the fuss over the debt bill all seems a charade, since most lawmakers never would allow the Treasury actually to default. Congress has often pushed it to the brink, but never beyond.

Debt bills are a kind of therapy for a Congress that has done little over the years to reduce red ink. Spending is much more fun, and the $2.3 trillion in debt is a legacy of government mismanagement for which future generations of Americans will pay.

Members take to the floors of the House and Senate and rail against it, forgetting that they passed the spending bills that caused it. House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, describes it in terms of dollars bills lined up to the sun and back.

If cashed into pennies, the debt would fill every train boxcar in the world several times over, other members have said.

House Majority Leader Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., calls the debt bill a fraudulent issue for those opposing it, and he constantly pushes for long-term extensions acknowledging the spending and tax patterns that Congress and the president have adopted.

But Sen. Bill Armstrong, R-Colo., says the House showed a "failure of courage" by making its debt bill an automatic procedure — and not for fear the legislation would get tied up with amendments there.

Armstrong is one of a few conservatives in Congress who have suggested turning the budget strategy on its head. Instead of controlling the debt by cutting spending or raising taxes — an approach that has failed so far — he suggests killing debt bills to force the government to live within its means.

"The amount of debt now is so large that it's beyond an economic issue and it's a moral issue now," says Armstrong, pointing to the huge burden on the future presented by today's deficits.

A default by the Treasury would be "a humiliation for our national credit standing, a great pity and a disaster," he says.

"But we've gone so far, and we're now so deeply in debt and the prospects for the future are so gruesome," he says, "I really think default at this stage is the lesser evil."

NRC rules to omit cost as factor in safety

By JAMES ROWLEY

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is being ordered to rewrite its rules to exclude cost as a factor in determining if nuclear plants need upgrading to meet minimum safety standards.

The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled Tuesday that using cost-benefit analysis in defining compliance with minimum safety standards was a violation of the Atomic Energy Act.

"The overall focus and purposes of the act, as reflected in its history, support the conclusion that the commission may not consider economic costs in ensuring the adequate protection of health and safety," the court said in an opinion by Judge Abner Mikva.

The NRC "must determine the content of the adequate-protection standard without reference to economic costs; the commission must then apply that standard to individual applicants and licensees notwithstanding any pleas of poverty," Mikva said.

The court overturned the 1985 NRC rule, which was challenged by the Union of Concerned Scientists. Diane Curran, an attorney for the group, called the ruling "a clear mandate to the NRC that safety comes first."

She said the NRC must consider how to upgrade the safety of many existing nuclear power plants. "The major issue is going to be how to deal with them," she said.

The judges did, however, reject the union's argument that the NRC could not use cost-benefit analysis under any circumstances.

The court said the NRC could weigh the cost of retrofitting a plant that has already met minimum safety standards against the resulting improvements beyond the minimum requirement. Agency spokesmen emphasized that part of the ruling in their reaction.

William H. Briggs Jr., the agency's solicitor, said the court's decision was narrow. "It was clear all along that the main thrust of the rule was things we were requiring over and above adequate protection," he said.

NRC spokesman Joe Fouchard added that "to a substantial degree, the court has approved the commission's approach to giving limited consideration to cost in regulating nuclear power plants."

The decision came a week after the full appeals court unanimously ordered the Environmental Protection Agency to consider only health, not cost, in setting emission standards for cancer-causing chemicals.

In the nuclear power case, Mikva said "the backfitting rule is an exemplar of ambiguity and vagueness; indeed we suspect that the commission designed the rule to achieve this very result."

Challenger crew depicted in patch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The crew of the next shuttle mission will wear a patch in memory of Challenger's astronauts, NASA said.

The patch, unveiled Tuesday, was designed by artist Stephen R. Hustvedt of Annapolis, Md.

It depicts the Big Dipper, a rising sun and a shuttle climbing on a plume of flame.

Along the edges of the patch are the last names of the crewmen of the next flight — Commander Frederick Hauck, pilot Richard Covey and mission specialists George Nelson, John Lounge and David Hilmers.

NASA said the sunrise represents a new beginning and the seven stars in the Big Dipper the astronauts killed in the Challenger explosion Jan. 28, 1986.

NASA has targeted June 2, 1988, for the next shuttle mission, the 26th.

NATION IN BRIEF

Man goes on shooting spree in emergency room

CLEVELAND (AP) — A man grabbed a policeman's revolver and opened fire in a hospital emergency room Tuesday night, seriously wounding the officer before being fatally shot by the man's partner, authorities said.

A young woman also was wounded in the shootout, but it was not clear whether the bullet came from the gun-wielding assailant or the second officer's weapon, police said.

The gunman, who was not identified, died in surgery, said Detective Robert Bolton. The names of the injured bystander, believed to be in her late teens, and the two officers also were not released.

The incident occurred in the emergency room waiting area of St. Vincent Charity Hospital and Health Center about 8:20 p.m., said nursing supervisor Bernadette Reitz.

Bolton said the shooting occurred shortly after the two officers, a male and female, brought a prisoner to the hospital for treatment. Bolton said he didn't know the nature of the prisoner's ailment.

A man in the emergency room approached the female officer, demanding that she take a report for an unrelated incident, Bolton said. When the policewoman told the man she was busy, the man approached her partner with the same request.

The man grabbed the male officer's revolver and shot him in the chest. The bullet went through the policeman's chest after piercing his badge, Bolton said.

Norelco ads misleading

WASHINGTON (AP) — The makers of the Norelco Clean Water Machine failed to disclose that the machine at one time added a possibly dangerous chemical to water it was filtering, the government charged.

The Federal Trade Commission said Tuesday that it has filed an administrative complaint against North American Philipps Corp. of New York.

Ads for the Clean Water Machine failed to disclose that the filters formerly used in the product actually added methylene chloride to the water, the FTC charged.

The filters are no longer in use, but the FTC said it was concerned that some might remain in stores. They can be identified either by the lack of a date code, or a code of 472 or lower on the underside of the filter dial, the agency said.

Planes eyed for new device

WASHINGTON (AP) — Airplanes would be required to use devices that warn pilots of possible collisions with other aircraft, under a measure approved by a House committee.

Legislation that cleared the House Public Works and Transportation Committee on Tuesday calls for the equipment to be required on planes capable of carrying more than 30 passengers.

In addition, all planes flying in the nation's busiest areas — generally around the largest cities — would be required to have other instruments that signal the craft's altitude to ground stations and to other pilots.

Light cord cause of mishap

WASHINGTON (AP) — The failure last month of the country's last Atlas-Centaur rocket because of a ruined fuel tank was caused when a light cord got in the way while a work platform was being removed, NASA officials said.

The accident at Cape Canaveral, Fla., will cause a dealy in launching the $78 million rocket for up to one year, officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration told a House space science subcommitte on Tuesday.

The panel also heard testimony about the March 26 accident in which lightning caused an Atlas-Centaur rocket to be destroyed. The testimony reiterated findings in May by an investigative board that launch rules were skirted and poor judgment used in launching the rocket during severe weather.

Contras give no datails

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA neglected to ask Contra fighters who killed an American volunteer in Nicaragua last April 28 to detail the exact circumstances under which he died, according to a declassified CIA investigative report released by a Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Ore.

The leftist Sandinista government maintains that Benjamin Linder, 27, of Portland, Ore., was shot in cold blood while unarmed. The U.S.-backed Contras maintain that Linder was armed and killed during a battle.

Fair skies forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies are in the forecast for the Permian Basin area tonight. The low will reach near 70, according to reports from the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The NWS is predicting mild, southeasterly winds at five to 15 mph for tonight.

Sunny skies and continued hot temperatures are in store for Thursday with the high to reach the upper 90s. Winds will shift slightly to the south at 10-15 mph.

Tuesday's high of 98 was six degrees below the record high of 104 set for that date in 1944. The low for today of 66 was five degrees above the record low of 61 set for this day in 1978.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms developed over the Panhandle early today, while strong thunderstorms pounded the area between El Paso and Marfa in West Texas, the National Weather Service said.

South to southwest winds breezed most of the state, but winds over the Trans Pecos were variable. Skies remained fair to partly cloudy across most of the Lone Star state.

Temeperatures were in the 60s over the Panhandle and mountainous southwest. The rest of Texas had readings mostly in the 70s and low 80s. The early morning extremes ranged from 64 degrees at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 83 degrees at the Naval Air Station in Corpus Christi.

A cold front that had become nearly stationary over the north central plains across to the the Trans Pecos, was expected to weaken and retreat to the northwest today.

Widely scattered thunderstorms were possible over the northwest part of northwest Texas, the Panhandle and the far West with daytime thundershowers over the east and southeast.

NATION

A heat wave-snapping cold front brought more than 2 inches of rain to the North Carolina coast overnight, while cooling, scattered showers and thunderstorms ranged across much of the rest of the Middle South today.

A cold front that relieved the Midwest from the 19-day-old heat wave pushed southeast, but today's forecast called for temperatures in the middle 90s to 100 degrees from the southern Plains to the lower Mississippi Valleyy.

Disbarred lawyer sentenced to 25 years

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

PECOS — "A waste has been committed," U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton III declared moments before he on Tuesday sentenced ex-trial lawyer John Webster Flanagan of Austin to 25 years in prison for continuing criminal enterprise and to three concurrent 20-year sentences for cocaine smuggling.

"You stand before me begging for mercy." The judge was not lenient.

Bunton, in noting how Flanagan "flat misspent your life," briefly reviewed his criminal life following his 1969 conviction for income-tax evasion and subsequent convictions for cocaine and marijuana smuggling.

Flanagan was suspended from the State Bar of Texas in 1970 and was disbarred in 1972.

Since then, noted Bunton, the government has recorded "page after page after page of Flanagan escapades in dealing in dope" and in his being "in and out of prisons" and a fugitive for years.

Bunton told the graying ex-lawyer, who was convicted here July 2, that many other dope-related defendants often are "not very smart" and are poor and let other people use them as paid "mules" by hauling marijuana and cocaine into the United States from Mexico and Central and South America.

But the judge noted that Flanagan was intelligent, had three college degrees, including those in engineering and law. And as a practicing attorney, Flanagan had "commanded good fees" and "the respect of other lawyers and the court."

"Mr. Flanagan, it is with a heavy heart that I sentence you," Bunton told the 63-year-old Flanagan. "Mr. Flanagan can't be expected to be freed soon," Bunton said.

Flanagan's attorney, Melvin Carson Bruder of Dallas, said Flanagan might be eligible for parole in 16½ years when Flanagan will be almost 80 years old. "I think he's upset," Bruder said.

Flanagan has been held without bail in the Reeves County Jail since early this year. He was shackled and handcuffed when he was escorted by deputy United States marshals from the jail to the federal courthouse and back.

In his plea, Flanagan told the judge that "there's not too much I can say that you don't already know. I can't tell you much about age."

Bunton is 62.

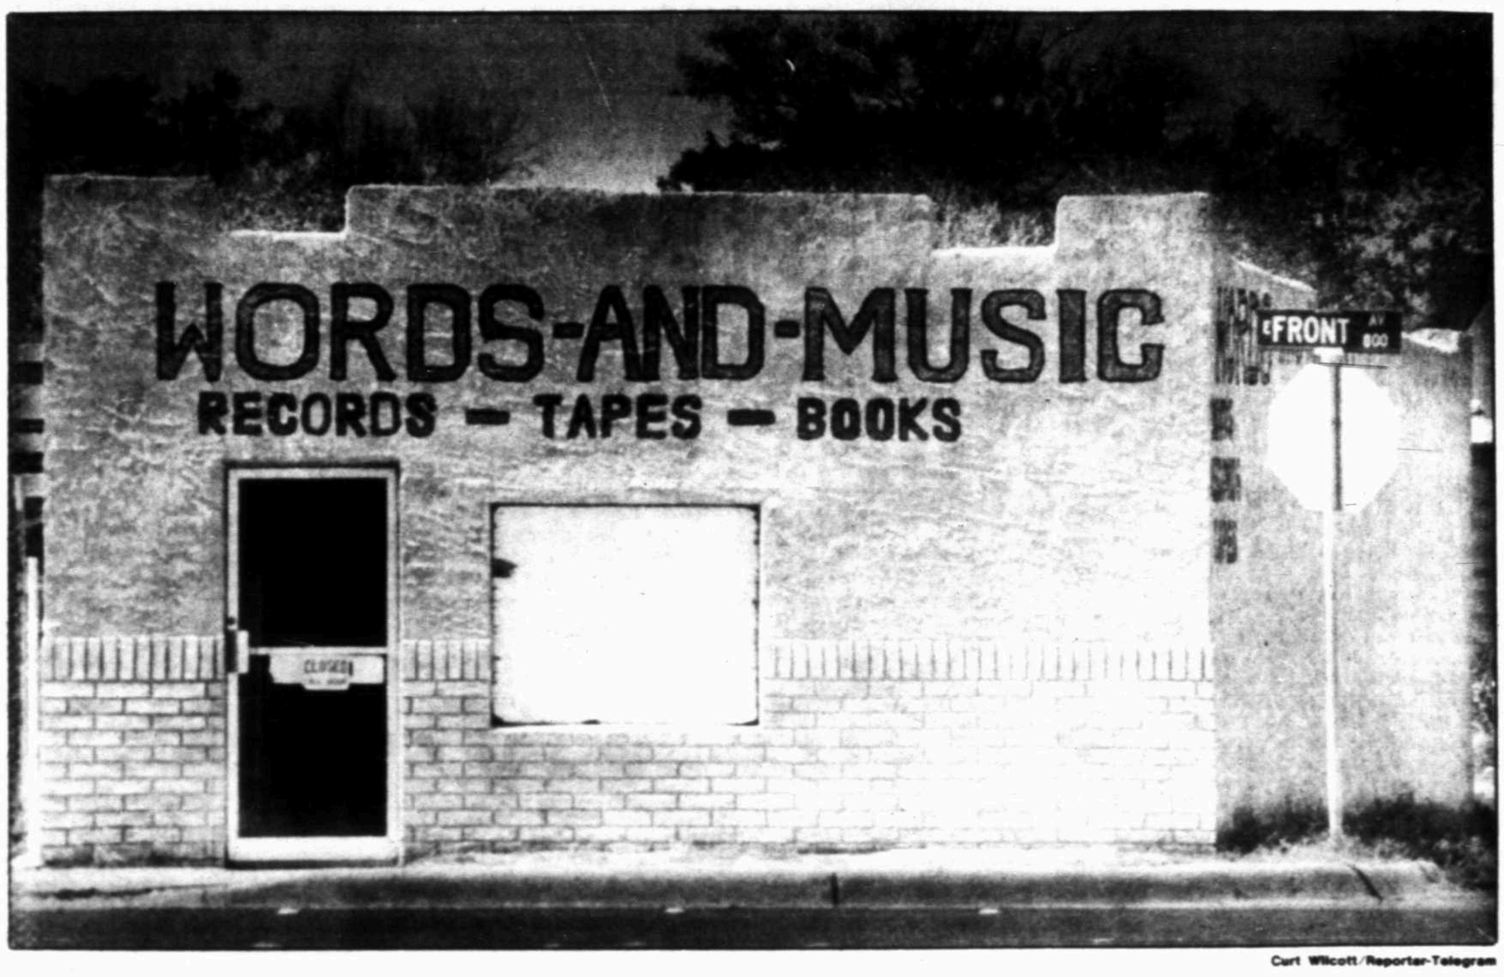

"Age doesn't affect my outlook," Flanagan said. But he asked for a sentence which would "at least" give him hope of "getting out of the penitentiary before I die."

"I know the judge has got to give me some serious time," Flanagan said.

Following a 1½-day jury trial in early July, Flanagan was convicted in Pecos on July 2 for continuing criminal enterprise and cocaine smuggling. A continuing-criminal-enterprise conviction carries a mandatory 20-year sentence and a possible life sentence.

In the trial's closing arguments, Assistant U.S. Attorney Mike McDonald of El Paso noted that Flanagan in 1986 had imported 1,650 pounds of cocaine, valued at $1,500 per ounce. The poundage would amount to almost $40 million in illicit sales, and Flanagan's cut of the imported drug would be about $2 million.

One of the few remaining adobe buildings in Midland has been rejected by the Texas Historical Commission as a candidate for the National Register of Historic Places. The building will be torn down to make way for a Lamesa Road construction project.

Adobe building rejected for national register

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

One of the few remaining adobe buildings in Midland — which could have delayed a Lamesa Road construction project — was rejected Tuesday by state historians as a candidate for the National Register of Historic Places.

A cement plaster covering original adobe bricks was one reason the Texas Historical Commission decided a 50-year-old building at 803 E. Highway 80 was not eligible for the national register, said Peter Maxson, a senior architectural historian with the state commission.

Local historical society officials said they have no interest in the building.

But state historical commission employees said they took a close look at the structure, scheduled to be torn down by Lamesa Road construction, because it is one of the few adobe buildings remaining in Midland.

"Midland — because it has lost so much or has so much that is new — we have a special need to look at projects carefully," Maxson explained.

The road construction that will cause the building to be torn down will realign Lamesa with its arterial south of U.S. Highway 80.

Straightening and widening the road to four lanes is expected to double traffic traveling to the east side and bring jobs and economic development, said Nancy Vickrey, a project coordinator.

The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation is expected to provide the $1.285 million needed for road construction, but the city must buy the right of way.

The city will use $767,803 in U.S. Housing and Urban Development funds to buy about 195 pieces of land to clear the way for the road construction, Ms. Vickrey said.

Discussing the one-room structure, Maxson said, "It's not an unique building and it has had some unsympathetic alterations."

But he added, "It's just one of an handful of adobe buildings left in Midland."

Maxson acknowledged an adobe building in El Paso probably wouldn't catch the commission's attention, but Midland on a statewide basis is viewed as the "adobe frontier."

"An adobe may not seem so important in Midland, but there are very few places east of Midland that have adobe," he explained.

The Midland County Historical Society does not consider the small building — that houses "Words and Music" store — to be of cultural importance or the scene of a "high human endeavor," said Nancy McKinley.

"We do not have the funds or staff to acquire the property even if it merited preservation and according to our research it doesn't," Mrs. McKinley said.

City planner Sylvester Cantu said construction began on the building in the '30s. The structure was completed in 1937 or 1938 and may have opened as a bar.

While the building will be destroyed by construction, the state commission is asking the city to photograph and record the architecture before it's torn down, Maxson said.

Ms. Vickrey said the city probably will comply with the state's wishes.

United Way's 1988 goal set at $2,350,000

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

United Way of Midland kicked off its pilot campaign Tuesday, and announced a general campaign goal for 1987 which will be "an easy stretch" to achieve after last year's campaign.

At a Plaza Club luncheon sponsored by First RepublicBank of Midland, representatives of the 18 pilot organizations, United Way board members and agency directors heard from the 1987-88 campaign chairman.

"Midlanders are again setting and reaching their goals," said Judy Devenport. She mentioned the July 4 "Live Again Midland" celebration at Claydesta Plaza; Alysheba, the thoroughbred owned by the Scharbauer family that achieved two jewels of horse racing's Triple Crown; and the groundbreaking of the northeast branch of the YMCA as indications that the city is bouncing back from economic hardship.

Last year, a goal for the general campaign was not announced because of the uncertain economy. But, a goal of $2,350,000 has been set for the 1988 campaign, a bit more than the $2,330,000 raised in last year's campaign, Ms. Devenport said.

She called the new goal "an easy stretch" after last year's impressive total.

"Every pledge dollar is going toward agency allocations," Ms. Devenport said. She said a $250,000 gift has been given each of the past two years to underwrite administrative costs of United Way. Last year, the gift was from Wagner and Brown.

This year, Beverly and Joe Pevehouse made the donation.

"Our United Way agencies are here as our caring representatives," Ms. Devenport said. "We can raise the needed dollars for these agencies because we care."

The United Way pilot campaign is a barometer for contributions during the later general campaign, according to Cindy Ford, the agency's communication director.

"It gives us a head start," she said. "It gives us an idea how fund-raising is going to go."

"Our United Way agencies are here as our caring representatives. We can raise the needed dollars for these agencies because we care."

— Judy Devenport, campaign chairman

Last year's pilot campaign raised over $415,000, nearly 18 percent of the total amount raised, according to the agency. The pilot campaign this year will last through Sept. 18.

The 1987-88 general campaign begins Sept. 30 and concludes Nov. 12.

A 15-minute film on United Way activities in Midland was premiered at the luncheon. The film will be shown during fund-raising activities for the 1987-88 campaign.

The organizations represented in the pilot campaign are Energas, First City National Bank, Price Waterhouse, TMCT of Midland, United Bank, Elcor Corp., Midland Memorial Hospital, Texas American Bank, Texas Instruments, Compressor Systems, J.C. Penney, Southwestern Bell, Texaco, the City of Midland, ClayDesta National Bank, Earle M. Craig, Jr., Corp., Lynch, Chappell, Allday & Alsup, and TU Electric Co.

Midland/Lee Youth Centers and Midland Need to Read are the two newest agencies that will be funded by United Way in 1988.

Midland Need to Read was established in 1985 to assist functionally illiterate adults. The youth centers were established in 1942 at Midland High and Midland Lee High schools.

Other agencies include the American Cancer Society, American Red Cross, Big Brothers and Sisters, Boy Scouts, Boys' Club of Midland, Casa De Amigos, Council on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, Family Services, Rape Crisis Center, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, Girl Scouts, Camp Fire, Salvation Army, and the YMCA.

Calvert: Absentee voter turnout 'disappointing'

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County election officials — disheartened by a low absentee turnout — are scrambling to interest residents in casting ballots for a county sales tax election before the votes are counted Saturday.

On Tuesday — the last day in which voters could cast absentee ballots — voting totaled 356 — less than 1 percent of the total number of registered voters.

"It (voter turnout) is very low," said Bettye Calvert, Midland County Election administrator. "It's disappointingly low."

Mrs. Calvert said she's not sure why more voters didn't request absentee ballots, but she added there seems to be a trend toward lower turnouts in local elections.

In April 1985, 9.48 percent of the total number of registered voters cast ballots in city, school and hospital elections, compared to 3.9 percent last April.

The largest turnout among Midland County voters occurred in November 1986, when 52 percent of the electorate voted in county and statewide races.

The number of registered voters also has dropped significantly in the past two years, said Mrs. Calvert.

Support sought for coliseum bond election

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Efforts will get under way shortly to gather 5,000 signatures on petitions that will be presented to Ector County Commissioners in October to show support for an $18 million proposed bond issue to refurbish and improve the 33-year-old Ector County Coliseum.

The purpose of the petitions will be to convince commissioners that a sufficient number of Ector County citizens favor renovation of the coliseum to warrant setting a December date for a bond election on the question.

At a news conference late Tuesday afternoon, Price Womack, strategy committee chairman and Glen Atkins, chairman of the coliseum improvements committee, announced that the results of a survey conducted in May to "test the waters," concerning local support for a bond issue to improve the coliseum, showed "our citizens recognize the improvements that must be made in order to help our county grow," Womack said.

"Events such as the oil show, the fair, rodeo, Ice Capades, Chuck Wagon Gang feeds, concerts, and other activities," he said, "help build a better quality of life in West Texas."

In announcing the course of action recommended by the strategy committee and approved by the coliseum improvements committee, Womack said, "A large majority of voters have told us they favor the calling of a bond election, passage of which would guarantee an upgrade, renovation and expansion of the coliseum complex."

In addition to the petition drive and an early December target date for a bond election, Womack said, efforts will begin immediately to raise funds necessary "to launch public information activities to insure a knowledgeable vote."

Earlier, in announcing the survey conducted by Interface Communications, Atkins stated that the improvements committee felt "the time is right and the cost of construction and financing funds would cost us less than at any other time."

Former Odessa City Councilman Vern Foreman, a member of the improvements committee, following the news conference, said he believes improvement of the coliseum is vital to the quality of life and future of Odessa.

Foreman said he views the proposed project as "just another facet of economic development" because quality of life is an important factor in attracting new industry to the area."

Under a master plan developed for the coliseum, the main building would be enlarged and modernized.

Modernization, according to coliseum manager Don Thorn, would include installation of a refrigerated air conditioning system. Plans also call for expansion of the coliseum to include a theater suitable for presentation of various cultural activities, such as touring ballet and theatrical productions.

The complex's dilapidated barns would be refurbished and several other activity buildings would be constructed.

According to Thorn, the coliseum attracts about 500,000 people a year. He estimates about a third of those attending various events at the coliseum come from out of town.

Thorn further esitmates annual upkeep cost of the coliseum to Ector County, due partly to its age and state of disrepair, is about $300,000.

Despite recent 'near-misses,' flying still beats fighting traffic

Ott

Maybe I'm weird, but the latest rash of news accounts regarding "near misses" involving airplanes — both large jets and small private planes — has not made me want to stop flying.

It still beats fighting the freeway traffic in an automobile. It also beats getting stuck behind a little old lady with blue hair, bless her heart, who insists on straddling the center stripe, thus effectively preventing you from passing her from either direction.

But don't get me wrong. I'm not oblivious to the dangers of flying.

The news reports about mid-air collisions have indeed been frightening, especially given the fact there have been so many lately, but still, I've never been much of a worrier.

I have always sort of assumed, I guess, that bad things would never happen to me. That kind of misery was meant for the other guy.

When the surgeon general issues his latest warnings on cigarettes, I figure he's talking to all the other smokers, not me.

When the Baptist preacher works himself into a frenzy and shouts that we're all headed for hellfire and damnation if we don't change our ways, I assumed I'm the exception. God would never do such horrible things to me. He likes me.

When the doctor tells me to improve my eating habits and to drink less, I just laugh. The things he said will eventually happen to my body are just part of his scare tactics, I tell myself. I'm immune to such things. So, praise the Lord, and pass the cream gravy.

I also take comfort in those statistics that seem to prove flying is still safer than driving a car. Your chances of dying are far greater in an automobile than an airplane.

Lewis Grizzard, a syndicated columnist out of Atlanta, Ga., who hates flying, scoffs at those statistics. He refuses to believe them.

Or, as he put it recently in a column: Driving is safer than flying because when your car engine overheats you can pull the vehicle into the emergency lane, leave it and hitch a ride to the nearest gas station.

Try pulling an airborne jetliner into the emergency lane and hitching a ride to the next town, he said. It doesn't work.

Grizzard, like many other airplane-haters, prefers to ride on trains.

If you have four days to get from here to Dallas, I suppose the train would be a nice way to go. They do have a certain charm. Oldtimers — especially those in the rural Deep South — will tell you that there is not a sweeter sound in the world than to be lying in bed, on the verge of falling asleep, and hearing the familiar ring of a train whistle making its nightly run to Chattanooga.

"It's God's way of saying 'all is well,'" my grandmother, a great philosopher who lives in a small Georgia community, once told me while I was visiting her.

Later that night, after I was securely tucked away in my bed, I listened intently for the train whistle.

Sure enough, shortly before 10 p.m. I could hear the sound faintly in the far distance. It grew louder and louder. Then it began to fade. Finally, it was gone. Northbound for Chattanooga, I thought. God is pleased.

I also remember being told as a child that God works in mysterious ways. I suppose that means He can speak in mysterious ways, too.

If He can talk to my grandmother through a train whistle, it would only seem logical that He could reach others through different sounds.

For example, if a businessman who has been working frantically for months on a touchy deal in Houston suddenly hears the roar of a jet engine overhead, he might assume it's God's way of saying, "Get thee to Houston immediately, or thy job will be lost."

Brooks: 'Hearings accomplished a great deal'

BEAUMONT (AP) — U.S. Rep. Jack Brooks thinks the Iran-Contra investigation succeeded in fleshing out the main facts in 14 weeks of sometimes numbing testimony and in the future may prevent a similar government within a government.

"I think the hearings accomplished a great deal," Brooks, D-Beaumont, said in a telephone interview with the Beaumont Enterprise from his Washington office Tuesday evening.

Among the main accomplishments he cited: "It exposed the government within a government that Adm. (John) Poindexter, Col. (Oliver) North and CIA Director (Wiliam) Casey had created.

"(The hearings) showed the president rejected the counsel and advice of his long-trusted advisers, Secretary of State (George) Shultz and Secretary of Defense (Caspar) Weinberger, and they were essentially frozen out of the most serious foreign policy decision of the nation.

"The hearings exposed just how deeply involved the nation was in shipping weapons to a terrorist state in negotiation for the release of hostages, and they showed the extent to which the administration was willing to bend and sometimes break the law to promote their particular methods of aiding the Contras.

"The hearings exposed an incredible amount of lying to Congress, and even to members of the administration, and an eagerness to shred documents that would have shown what they were doing," Brooks said.

He concluded, "The hearings focused the American people's attention on just how fragile our constitutional system can be and how it can be abused, and how absolutely essential it is that we all be vigilant at all times to protect our governmental institutions and our system of laws."

The committee learned little from several CIA agents who testified Tuesday in a closed session, Brooks said.

"They could have testified on the front steps," he said. "I'll bet if you asked one of them what his name was, he'd tell you, 'I don't deny that I have one, but I don't recall what it is.' "

Brooks said some of the discrepancies in previous testimony probably would be cleared.

He questioned the knowledge of Casey, who died before the hearings started.

"North said Casey knew all about it...Meese said Casey told him he didn't know. Which one of them is lying and which one of them is telling the truth? You'll never resolve that. They both told different stories under oath," he said.

Brooks tends to believe the Cabinet officials, who testified they had opposed the plan and advised Reagan against it, "and that's what the record reflected," he said. "They were not fully informed by Admiral Poindexter and nobody found records of (Poindexter) laying out a complete rundown of the little scheme, addressed to Weinberger, Schultz or Regan."

As the hearings closed, he said, "It became pretty obvious it was just a kind of runaway group, a little government within a government that got started and the president didn't stop it. He didn't know too much about it. He knew about the arms sales, of course, that generated $31 million, and they still are trying to keep $8 million in Switzerland."

LAWYER

Prior to his sentencing Flanagan, Bunton sentenced a Flanagan accomplice, 29-year-old Jeffrey Glen Stephens of Melissa, to 10 years in prison. Neither defendant testified in the trial, although Flanagan did offer closing arguments in his defense.

"I offer no excuse for what I've done, because it was totally wrong," Stephens told the judge. Stephens, a landscaper, said he has participated in cocaine smuggling to earn funds to pay off a house. "I did it for something dear to me — my family. Words cannot describe the grief of my family."

His attorney, Dallas lawyer George Milner, said Stephens "impressed me with one thing: He is devoted to his family."

Milner asked the judge to give Stephens a "constructive sentence. I don't ask for any short sentence for Mr. Stephens. He brought that (trouble) upon himself. I think there is a limit on what he ought to pay. I guess this is the time the piper gets paid."

Stephens' wife, Cathy, sobbingly asked the judge to assign her husband to a prison "close to where we are living" in the Dallas area. "I need him, and the kids need him." Bunton said he would recommend that Stephens be sent to a federal correctional institution near his family's home.

"Mr. Stephens," the judge said, "your pre-sentence report and recommendations and commendations look like your friends and your family love you and respect you. They think the world of you. They think you're great."

Nevertheless, Bunton noted that Stephens was convicted for "hauling dope."

"You've committed some pretty bad acts. You come from good stock," Bunton told Stephens, "and, yet, you get yourself involved (in cocaine) for some stupid reason — some dumb house. The best hope for you, sir, is that you'll just be half the person the people who love you think you are."

VOTER

In April 1985, there were 54,802 registered voters, compared to 48,471 this year, she said.

"You have some people who are always interested in an election and concerned about the issues. And you always have some people who aren't interested," Mrs. Calvert said.

The election administrator said the county sales tax election is one that voters should take interest in "because it is an issue that will have the greatest impact on their daily lives."

Mrs. Calvert said she anticipates turnout on election day to be at about 8 percent.

"It's summertime and people aren't expecting an election in August because we don't usually have one," she said. "We've also got only one proposition on the ballot."

Mrs. Calvert said the most discouraging aspect of the low voter turnout is the disinterest among residents regarding local government and the price tag government places on holding elections.

"Local elections are where voters have the most direct impact on government...Things that directly affect our daily lives," she said.

Mrs. Calvert estimated the cost of Saturday's election between $12,000 and $14,000.

Last April, taxpayers forked out $13,381 to pay for the city and hospital elections and only 1,886 voters cast ballots. That averages $7.08 per vote, Mrs. Calvert said.

Honor roll student charged in shooting of gymnast

DALLAS (AP) — A high school senior accused of the murder of a champion college gymnast was a member of the honor roll, competed in school talent and beauty contests and sang in her church choir.

Shelia Hill is charged in connection with the Saturday shooting death of Glenn Michael "Mike" Sims, who was trying to retrieve a purse snatched from a woman at a shopping mall. Miss Hill's mother said she had not talked with her 17-year-old daughter since the girl's arrest.

"I sit down and think, Lord, why ...," Hazel Pugh said. "But I just don't know why."

She said her daughter sang in the church choir and sometimes read from the Bible during services.

"She said she wanted to be a model," Mrs. Pugh said. "She is always talking about being a model."

On Tuesday, the teen-ager was being held without bond in Richardson City Jail on capital murder charges in connection with the shooting death, police said. She also was charged with attempted capital murder and burglary of a motor vehicle, in connection with the purse-snatching. Bond on those charges totaled $101,000.

Sylvanna Quiroga, 23, of Dallas, accused of driving the car in which Miss Hill fled the scene of the purse-snatching, also was charged with capital murder and car burglary.

Police say Sims was shot and killed after he followed the two women and tried to retrieve the purse they are accused of stealing.

Officers hope blood offers clues

SULPHUR SPRINGS (AP) — Officials are hoping a sample of blood found in a convenience store where a woman was abducted will give them some clues to the woman's whereabouts.

Diana Havner, 38, of Sulphur Springs, was last seen while working the midnight shift at the EZ Mart store at 3:15 a.m. Sunday. Police officer Jay Owens discovered the store empty at 4:47 a.m. Ms. Havner's purse and vehicle were still at the store.

Sulphur Springs detectives and FBI agents from Tyler and Texarkana searched Tuesday by airplane for Ms. Havner.

The sample of blood found inside the store was sent to a forensic lab for testing. "We don't know how long the blood had been there or whether it has any to do with the abduction and robbery. For that matter, we don't know yet if it was human or animal blood," said Stidham, adding that there was no sign of a struggle at the scene.

Ms. Havner was last seen wearing a brown and white pullover shirt, blue jeans and brown sandals. She was described as a white female about 5-foot-5, 110 pounds, with brown hair, green eyes and a dark complexion.

Police found $230 dollars missing from the store's register.

"Because the EZ Mart stores in Sulphur Springs do not have holdup alarm systems the police were not aware of the situaition sooner," police Detective Robert Stidham said.

EZ Mart has offered a $1,000 reward for information about the incident, and the local Crimestoppers organization has put up a $1,000 reward.

AIDS group criticizes state for failure to seek federal funds

DALLAS (AP) — An official of an AIDS community group says the state health department has a laid-back attitude that is hampering its pursuit of federal funds to halt the spread of the fatal disease in Texas.

Mike Richards, education director of the Dallas AIDS Resource Center, said the Texas Health Department's request for $510,000 from the federal Centers for Disease Control is the latest example of the state failing to aggressively seek AIDS funding.

Dr. Robert Bernstein, state health commissioner, said he couldn't say if the state had enough money for its AIDS programs, but he contends it is much more now than it used to be. "Dollars alone don't solve problems," he said.

Richards said more federal money is available and there are programs in Texas that need it.

Texas has 2,370 reported cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, the fourth-largest number in the nation. Both Florida and New Jersey — which have a similar number of cases — consistently request and receive more federal funds from the Atlanta-based CDC, state and federal budgets indicate.

"The department has an overall laid-back attitude," Richards said. "Why are they not asked for funds that we can prove we legitimately need?"

Texas' half-million-dollar request seeks funds from a $27 million supplemental appropriation bill for AIDS prevention programs passed by Congress two weeks ago.

"We can't give (Texas) the money if they don't ask for it," said Leo Sanders, grants manager for AIDS programs at the CDC.

With 2,506 AIDS cases, Florida has asked for $2.5 million, while New Jersey, with 2,251, is seeking $2.3 million.

"Our philosophy is to request what we hope we can get, knowing full well that if the CDC doubled our request, that still wouldn't be anywhere near enough," said Spencer Lieb, AIDS program supervisor in Flordia.

A gay rights lobbyist in Austin said the state has underestimated the impact of AIDS in Texas, which he claims is experiencing a boom in the number of reported cases of the disease.

"We're not dealing with the fact that AIDS in Texas is going to mushroom on a curve that New York and California were on two or three years ago," said Glen Maxey, a lobbyist who represents gay and lesbian rights. "The department of health is just twiddling their thumbs."

Tom Walsh, AIDS coordinator for the state, agreed with the criticism and said Texas has catch-up work to do.

"You have to remember that some of the states had longstanding relationships with the CDC, which we really didn't have before all this started," he said. "Give us hell — maybe it will help."

Soldier faces trial for exposing women to virus

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An Army soldier stationed at Fort Sam Houston is being court-martialed after being accused of exposing several women to the AIDS virus, an official said.

No date has been set for the court-martial proceeding for Sgt. Richard Sargeant, a former medical instructor at the post's Academy of Health Sciences, said an Army official who asked not to be identified.

Sargeant, 27, faces charges of sodomy, aggravated assault, adultery, reckless endangerment and disobeying an officer, the offical said Tuesday. The charges involve three women. The official said he could not discuss details of the alleged violations of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

The San Antonio Express-News reported that three charges originally brought against Sargeant on May 5 accuse him of committing sodomy with a female soldier, aggravated assault for engaging in sexual intercourse with the woman while knowing he carries the virus, and adultery with the woman.

Sargeant has since been accused of reckless endangerment for knowingly exposing the first married woman to the risk of contracting AIDS by engaging in sexual intercourse.

Three additional charges allege Sargeant disobeyed a superior commissioned officer by failing to follow an order to advise all prospective sexual partners of his condition and to wear a condom if he engaged in sexual intercourse; committed aggravated assault for engaging in sexual intercourse with a second woman and a third woman while knowing he was an AIDS carrier; engaged in adultery and reckless endangerment by having sexual intercourse with the second married woman and knowingly exposing the second woman and the third woman to the risk of AIDS, the Express-News reported.

Sargeant has not been confined to quarters or incarcerated, but he has been placed on restricted basis. The Army official said he could not elaborate on the restrictions.

Sargeant, a Barbados native whose home is listed in Brooklyn, N.Y., has been in the Army since February 1980.

Banker's widow agrees to have body exhumed

Lemon

AMARILLO (AP) — The body of Booker banker Glen E. Lemon will be exhumed in order to resolve insurance company allegations that his death in a fiery plane crash last fall may have been staged, attorneys said.

Lemon's widow, Helaine, filed documents Monday in U.S. District Court in Amarillo agreeing to the exhumation. According to the documents, Mrs. Lemon said the action would spare her and her family further mental anguish, grief and emotional trauma associated with her husband's death.

Iowa-based American Mutual Life Insurance Co. said last week it wanted Lemon's body exhumed before paying off an $1.5 million policy because his charred remains never were identified in a plane crash near Liberal, Kan., in November.

Wayne Sturdivant, an Amarillo attorney representing Mrs. Lemon, said she agreed to the exhumation under protest.

"She did not want her husband dug up," he said. "She's a very religious woman and very much opposed to it."

"We want to remove any stigma on Glen Lemon concerning these completely unfounded allegations," said Lemon's brother Robert, a Perryton attorney.

The insurance company filed a motion last week in federal court alleging Lemon's plane could have been pre-set to take off and crash without a living person at the controls.

A Seward County, Kan., coroner's report said the body found in the charred plane's wreckage was burned beyond recognition and was identified only by a billfold and a ring with Lemon's initials on it. No autopsy was conducted.

Mrs. Lemon's consent said the company's spurious allegations link Lemon to "a scheme that at the worst suggests murder and at the best fraud of the most egregious type," but that the family "cannot leave unchallenged these unfounded allegations."

Larry Lesh, a Dallas attorney representing American Mutual, said the consent surprised him, but declined to comment further.

Lemon, 54, was president, chief executive officer and part owner of First Bank & Trust of Booker, which was closed by regulators due to bad loans in energy and agriculture six weeks after the plane crash.

At the time of his death, Lemon reportedly held about $12.2 million in life insurance from several different companies. More than $8 million of that amount was purchased during the nine months prior to his death, according to records. American Mutual contends Lemon lied about how much life insurance he held to get the company to insure him.

A date for the exhumation has not been set.

Lawyer appointed

AUSTIN (AP) — Harry M. Whittington, an Austin lawyer, has been appointed to the Texas Public Building Authority board, Gov. Bill Clements' office announced.

Whittington, 60, is to succeed Marilyn Jones of San Antonio, on the board that is responsible for issuing bonds to finance the acquisition, construction and repair of buildings used by state agencies and institutions.

Tomato King: 'I don't have any secrets'

By KATHY WILLIAMS

TRENTON (AP) — The Tomato King of Trenton lives with his wife of 50 years and tends a small garden realm. In winter, he whittles animal figures.

S.L. Mackey stands vigilant but friendly guard over his vegetable subjects, fending off nematodes and mockingbirds. He battles nematodes with ebony rye plantings and mockingbirds with wooden fans and hanging bird carcasses. An underground irrigation system delivers water to his thirsty kingdom.

Velma Mackey cultivates flowers around their stucco farmhouse crowded with 12 winters of figurines.

The pride of Mackey's garden is two rows of Better Boy hybrid tomatoes. The deceptively small crop produces a bountiful harvest.

"We give them away and sell 'em. I don't give them to anybody who sells. When I get too many, I sell them to the grocery store or the little cafe. They like to get them, too, because they think they're wonderful. I'm the Tomato King of Trenton," said Mackey.

1987 been a good year for the Better Boys, but Mackey's seen better.

"WE'VE MADE more tomatoes than we did this year. I know because one year — one Friday — me and that woman over there (Velma) picked 12 half-a-bushels on those two rows. This year, we got about 10 half-bushels. So they weren't as good this year as we have had. They were beautiful. We had lots of ripe tomatoes and lots of green tomatoes and they showed out. You could see them from the road," said Mackey.

And what's the king's secret for such high yield?

"I'm the caretaker here — that's all. I don't have any secrets. Anytime you think you're the one, you're wrong: it's Mother Nature, it's God. A farmer is closer to God than anyone because you can see every day what he does and what he's done."

But Mackey is a resourceful and hardworking caretaker. In addition to the irrigation system, he designed special fencing to help the plants bear their load. In fact, he's so proud of the prop system, he's entering "Texas Gardener" magazine's Texas Gardener of the Year contest, partly to encourage others to adopt the technique.

"I don't guess there's anybody no one that I know of or have read about in the magazine — that ties 'em up. They (Mackey's tomatoes) never touch the ground.

"I've got a fence, steel posts set with five wires up. I just keep a going up, tying them (branches) up and they (tomatoes) don't ever touch the ground. That's what I wanted to get over (in the contest)," said Mackey.

Last year's Better Boys were so lush and laden that Mackey had to set seven-foot wooden posts beside the fence and add extra strands of wire.

MRS. MACKEY said, "They don't rot when you tie them up off the ground."

Mackey said, "Yeah, I don't have any that rotted. Most people around here this year had tomatoes that just rotted green on the ground."

The Tomato King of Trenton knows there's no substitute for hard work in a garden. Soil must be worked and conditioned. He tills bales of straw into the black earth and adds compost made from "anything good I can find." He puts down heavy layers of straw (mulch) around plants and between rows to retain moisture in the soil.

"A lot of people come down and go in my garden say, 'Oh you really got some good soil.' That's not no part of it. It don't make no difference about the soil. You're going to have to build it. You're going to have to build it each year."

He builds the soil and lets winter freezes help with weed and bug control.

"I open that row up every fall and leave it open in the winter time. It's just the way we've always done it. What I'd like to see, I'd like to see some young people get interested in it enough to get into it. We're always going to have to eat. But they don't do it. I have them say they will, but they don't do it. Because it is a lot of work."

"But he loves to work," said Mrs. Mackey.

"I DO work on it every day in the summer early in the morning and late in the afternoon. I usually come in that back door there about 9 o'clock (at night.)"

Why would someone who farmed for 31 years; ginned cotton for 15 years and was a plumber after that, work so hard on a tomato crop he mostly gives away?

"I know people think I'm crazy, but I can't help that. I love to work with the soil...It thrills me to feel like I've learned something about the soil. It does me good — it makes me feel good," Mackey replied.

Neighbors have some misconceptions about his success, said Mackey. That disturbs the tomato king because, he said, he'd "like for people to get as interested enough to try as hard as I do."

"A lot of people think I know what I'm doing. And a lot of people think that it's the soil — that it's the best soil in the world. But they're both wrong, because that's not the way it goes. That's not the way it is.

"I do the very best I can and anything I think is right, then I'll try it. And sometimes that's not it and I just think, well, I must have been wrong there," Mackey said.

Mackey said he feels it's most important to raise his own tomato stock from seeds. He starts seeds in peat pots buried to their tops in sand-lined cold frames.

"WHEN I put my plants out, they start growing right then. Hot house plants when you put them out, they lose about two weeks," he said.

Mrs. Mackey explained "He opens his (cold frames) up every day to strengthen them (the plants.) They are the thriftiest plants you've ever seen. So dark green."

Mackey said, "They (his Better Boy) always look like tomato plants, just as soon they sprout. Hot-house plants are always tall with a few leaves at the top."

The tomato king raises many more baby plants than he needs, and these, too, he gives away.

"I usually put out 500 seeds, but I don't need but about 100 myself. What I do is I give them away. But there's a little hitch to it: when I give 'em plants, I don't give 'em tomatoes."

As the summer heats up and the garden produces less, Mackey ruminates about his winter carvings. He gives most of them away, too. But he does have a line of armadillos on sale at a Trenton store.

"I know I'm getting better at whittlin' those armadillos," Mackey said. "Not too long ago I cut myself and I thought it was the armadillo bleeding."

Whether he's named Texas Gardner of the Year, Mackey said, he plans to continue trying new angles and working hard to live up to his royal title.

Robbery may be motive in UT student's death

WESTPORT, Calif. (AP) — Robbery may have been the motive in the killing of a University of Texas graduate student found last weekend with a bullet in his head at the bottom of a cliff, Mendocino County Sheriff Tim Shea said Tuesday.

The body of Harlan T. Sutherland, 24, was recovered Saturday, his neck broken from a 100-foot fall from the top of the cliff, Shea said.

Sheriff's deputies have discovered that Sutherland's wallet and camera were missing from his car, calling into question their earlier belief he had simply fallen off the cliff, according to Shea.

Sutherland apparently had been camping alone in Westport Union Landing Beach State Park, located about 150 miles north of San Francisco. Investigators are seeking to interview anyone who was camping in the park while Sutherland was there.

NTSB says inaccurate map may be cause of gas line accident

WASHINGTON (AP) — The possible absence of a gas line on a map could have caused a 1986 blast in downtown Fort Worth that caused more than $1.5 million in damage, officials said.

The National Transportation Safety Board said Tuesday Lone Star Gas Co. may have failed to show the line on its maps used by construction workers.

The explosion shook downtown Fort Worth the morning of March 12 after a work crew operating a backhoe punctured a natural gas line. Twenty-two people were injured, one building and 57 automobiles at a car dealership were destroyed, and 40 other buildings were damaged, according to the NTSB report.

"Safety issues raised by this accident concern the accuracy of gas company maps, the gas company's emergency response procedures, the training of gas company employees, and how gas companies use civil agencies to respond more rapidly and effectively to major pipeline emergencies," according to the report.

The NTSB said Lone Star Gas contributed to the explosion by inadequately training employees in locating gas lines, and failing to use civilian emergency authorities, evacuate accident sites and ventilate buildings.

According to an NTSB spokesman, the building may not have gone up in a fireball if the doors and windows had been opened to allow the gas to dissipate.

Howard Matson, director of communications for Lone Star Gas, said the company would not discuss the report because the utility was involved in several lawsuits arising from the blast.

"We feel confident the facts, including the NTSB report, will be presented in the courtroom, and we will address any and all remaining questions after the lawsuits are disposed of," Matson said from the company's corporate offices in Dallas.

Although the company has not seen the report, Matson said it disagreed with points officials had heard had been made by the NTSB.

In recommendations to the gas company, the NTSB issued a series of suggestions:

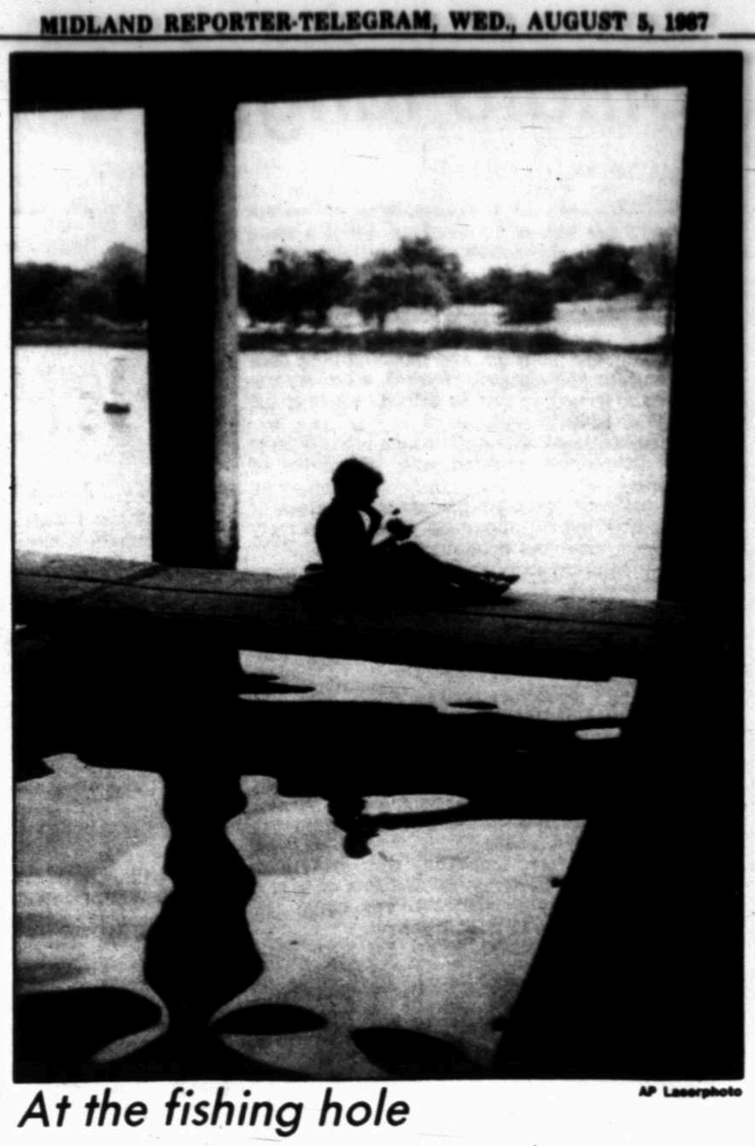

— Update and maintain system maps to show the location of all active gas mains and service lines.

— Review emergency procedures to determine if they encompass all response actions expected of employees who could be dispatched to an accident.

— Conduct periodic training and testing in emergency procedures with particular emphasis on employees hired before 1982.

— Revise procedures for locating lines to provide guidelines for obtaining additional information when system maps are suspected of being inaccurate.

— Revise procedures for responding to major leaks to specify when and who should alert the fire department in an emergency.

Ethnic cultures can show off food, crafts at Folklife Festival

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — When Chiev and Thida Khus came to Texas from Cambodia eight years ago, the mixture of cultures confused them and they decided to learn more about America's melting pot.

On Thursday, the couple will be among 6,000 participants in the Texas Folklife Festival, where ethnic foods, dance and music will be displayed.

"We thought it was important for us to mix with the community and to make ourselves known and to introduce people to our community," said Mrs. Khus.

Mrs. Khus and the Khmer Society of San Antonio will feature barbecue chicken with lemon, Cambodian salad and fried bananas.

"Many of the people who come to our booth ask us about our recent trauma and what happened to us," she said. "They only know about the Khmer Rouge. We're Khmer, not Khmer Rouge and we have been doing a lot of explaining about that."

The Texas Folklife Festival is in its 15th year and more than 100,000 people are expected to participate in this year's festivities on the grounds of the University of Texas Institute of Texan Cultures.

"Each year we've been able to improve and refine the physical intentions, but the spirit of the festival and the intent is still intact," said Jo Ann Andera, the festival's director.

Ms. Andera was a tour guide at the first festival in 1972 and has been coordinating the overall event the past seven years.

She said many people have been participating in the event since it first began.

"It's just a massive effort of a lot of people all over the state of Texas and they just love it," she said. "There's just a sense of affection that's tremendous."

Food will include Belgian sauteed mussels, Norwegian stew called "Lapskaus," Polish cabbage rolls called "Golabki," and other delights such as Vietnamese egg rolls, fish and chips and fajitas.

Gospel music, blues and bluegrass sounds, among others, will fill the air. Tapping from flamenco dancers, the girations from Indian dancers and the displays of polka steps also will entertain the crowds.

Spectators also will be able to take part in arts and crafts, from Mexican pinatas and pottery to sheep shearing and goose plucking.

Valerie Grace, a member of the Polish Arts and Culture Foundation of San Antonio, participated in the first festival in 1972.

"It was something we wanted to do," she said. "It has provided avenues for clubs such as ours to be on stage as an ethnic group."

Ms. Andera said the food proprietors are members of non-profit groups and retain 80 percent of their earnings and reinvest it in their communities.

"We're supporting the ethnic communities by giving them a place to come show their crafts," Ms. Andera said.

Masked gunman robs bank

DONIE (AP) — A man who grabbed a handful of cash while holding a gun on a teller may have fled in a car that officials found abandoned about two miles outside this Freestone County city, police said.

Police continued searching today for the man who robbed the Donie State Bank. Bloodhounds from the Texas Department of Corrections were enlisted for a search near the car.

Wearing a ski mask and gloves, the man walked into the bank Tuesday about 1:15 p.m. and pulled a gun on teller Winnie Jefferson.

"He just said, 'Give me your money,' " said Cloner Gilliam, chairman of the bank's board of directors. "She more or less froze. He reached over and opened the teller drawer himself, and he reached in and got what money he could carry in one hand."

Gilliam said the teller and two other women who saw the robber described him as nervous and said that he appeared to be an amateur.

The bank shut down for about 10 minutes following the incident until a sheriff's deputy arrived.

Fire's cause puzzles official

ORANGE (AP) — The local fire marshal says he's stumped by what caused a house fire earlier this week that killed a woman, who apparently was in labor, and the woman's mother.

Marshal Allen Armfield first suspected the Monday afternoon fire was caused by natural gas, but several hours of inspection Tuesday led him to change his mind. "The more I dig, the more puzzled I become," he said.

Cynthia Richards, about 26, apparently was in labor when she died, Justice of the Peace Claude Wimberley said. The autopsy revealed she was carrying a full-term baby, he said. Juanita Richards, about 48, also died in the fire.

The women died of smoke inhalation, Wimberly ruled.

Curley Richards, husband of Juanita Richards, suffered smoke inhalation and was listed in stable condition Tuesday at Orange Memorial Hospital.

Serious summer fires are unusual, Armfield said. But this one at "that time of the day, that quick, that severe" is unusual for anytime of the year, he said.

Armfield said the family had gasoline and butane stored in the carport.

Banker's wife missing

KERRVILLE (AP) — Jewelry and clothing found along the bank of a creek here belong to the wife of a wealthy rancher and banker, officials said.

The discovery prompted a search Tuesday for Joyce Louise Walters, 44, who was last seen at about 10 p.m. Monday, said Kerr County Sheriff Cliff Greeson.

The items were discovered Tuesday afternoon along the bank of Verde Creek, about a third of a mile from a store owned by Mrs. Walters and about five miles from her house, authorities said.

A purse containing her identification was found near the creek and jewelry belonging to the woman was found in and around the creek, Greeson said.

Authorities said Mrs. Walters is being listed as a missing person.

Mrs. Walters and her husband, Roland Walters, live at the 10,000-acre Prison Canyon Ranch. Walters is an entrepreneur with holdings in real estate and other interests. He is chairman of the board of the Bank of Kerrville.

Capitol celebration slated

AUSTIN (AP) — A May 16, 1988, celebration is planned to mark the 100th anniversary of the dedication of the Capitol, the pink granite building that houses much of state government.

Construction of the Capitol began in 1882 and was completed in May 1888, with a dedication ceremony held May 16, 1888, according to Roy Graham, architect of the Capitol.

Graham told Gov. Bill Clements and other members of the State Preservation Board on Tuesday about the plans for the ceremony.

"I am certain the centennial celebration will serve to reinforce the significance of the building as architecture and as history," Graham said.

The board also was told Tuesday that 1,140 blocks on the Capitol's Great Walk have been sold.

The Capitol Committee, the fund-raising arm of the Capitol restoration effort, is selling the blocks for $300 each, with the purchaser allowed to have his or her name engraved on the block.

Capitol Committee chairman George Bristol said most of the 1,775 blocks should be sold by the May 1988 centennial celebration.

Grand jury clears officers

DALLAS (AP) — Two police officers who maintained they shot an 81-year-old crime watch volunteer because he ignored their orders to lower his weapon were cleared of any wrongdoing by a grand jury.

The grand jury cleared the officers Tuesday, capping a two-month district attorney's investigation of the shooting of David Horton near the Park Manor apartments on the night of May 18.

Police said Horton was shot after he pointed a rifle at officers Donald Moten and John B. Nichols while they investigated reports of a suspicious person in the parking lot.

Police believe Horton had gone to the apartment parking lot to investigate what he thought was a car theft.

Horton's death came shortly after a congressional hearing in Dallas on the police department's use of deadly force and its relations with the minority community.

TDC remains closed

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The Texas prison system remains closed today with the inmate population exceeding a state-mandated 95 percent capacity, a prison spokesman said.

The inmate population at midnight Monday and announced Tuesday afternoon was 38,528 convicts, or 95.16 percent — 64 over the cap, Texas Department of Corrections spokesman David Nunnelee said. About 122 inmates were being released Tuesday, he said.

Prison doors have been closed to new inmates since last Thursday, prison spokesman Charles Brown said. The department does not accept new inmates on weekends, he said.

Tuesday's closure is the 18th this year for the Texas prison system, the nation's third largest behind California and New York.

Earlier this year, the department was operating under an open-and-shut cycle of being open two days and closed the rest of the week.

Girl's body found in yard

TEXARKANA (AP) — The Texarkana, Texas, Police Department has asked for assistance from its Texarkana, Ark., counterpart in solving the slaying of a 9-year-old girl whose body was found in an overgrown yard last week.

Lt. Earl Cox, spokesman for the Texas police, said Tuesday Devondrea Woodall's age and the brutality of the slaying prompted the request for assistance. An autopsy has been ordered.

Dollar slips

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against all key currencies except the Canadian dollar in active European trading early today amid reports that central banks sold dollars in the open market to stem its recent gains.

In Tokyo, the dollar eased to a closing 151.55 Japanese yen from 151.60 yen at Tuesday's close. Later, in London, it fell further to 150.95 yen.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.5780, up from Tuesday's five-month low of $1.5665.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Tuesday:

—1.8785 West German marks, down from 1.8835

—1.5555 Swiss francs, down from 1.5610

—6.2500 French francs, down from 6.2675

—2.1125 Dutch guilders, down from 2.1200

—1,359.50 Italian lire, down from 1,364.50

—1.3251 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3240

Gold prices, which jumped around $11 a troy ounce on Monday, fell sharply in early European trading.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $474.50 a troy ounce, down from $475.30 late Tuesday. At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $469.85.

In Zurich, the bid price was $469.60, down from $475 bid late Tuesday.

Silver bullion also dipped in London to a bid price of $8.49 a troy ounce, down from $8.73 bid late Tuesday.

Dow tumbles

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks surrendered more of their record July gains Tuesday in moderate trading, hurt by investor anxiety over persistent turbulence in the Middle East and higher interest rates at home.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, which lost 14.99 points Monday, relinquished another 10.36 and ended the session at 2,546.72. Broader market barometers also declined.

Losing stocks outnumbered gainers by about a 3-2 ratio in New York Stock Exchange composite trading, with 947 down, 656 up and 389 unchanged. Big Board volume totaled 166.49 million shares, versus 207.84 million on Monday.

The NYSE's composite index, which measures all listed issues, lost 0.68 to 177.39. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index declined 1.99 to 358.32.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market closed at 432.77, off 0.36.

Uncertainty over Gulf action drives crude oil prices lower

By LEE A. DANIELS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK (NYT) — Prices of crude oil and petroleum products sagged on world markets Tuesday, reacting to a day of inconclusive developments in the Persian Gulf.

The near-month futures price for West Texas Intermediate grade, the American benchmark, closed at $21.97 a barrel, down 19 cents on the New York Mercantile Exchange, after shooting up 79 cents Monday. It was trading at $22.02 a barrel, down 18 cents on the London-based open market. Brent North Sea crude oil, the British blend that's a key international marker, had slipped 10 cents, to $20.60 a barrel.

Petroleum products also moved downward slightly in cautious trading. Heating oil slumped about half a cent, to 56 cents a gallon, while unleaded gasoline shifted minutely on the negative side to 56 cents a gallon as well.

Furthermore, stocks of many major oil companies retreated from the strong showing they made Monday on the New York Stock Exchange, although many of the decliners did manage to hold a considerable portion of their previous gain.

"The market reacted sharply yesterday, and it remained nervous today," said Michael Rothman, senior petroleum analyst for Merrill Lynch Futures Inc. "But it's cautious, too. They're not going to jack up the market without evidence."

The market did react to several reports from the Middle East during the day:

One was that Iraq had successfully tested a ground-to-ground missile that could reach Tehran. That depressed the market because of the prospect that it could force Iran to the bargaining table, ending the war — and thus, increase the two countries' exports of crude oil.

Another was that Saudi Arabia had detained an Iranian delegation sent there to retrieve the corpses of the Iranians killed during the riot in Mecca. This pushed the market up briefly because it was felt that the Saudis would hold the delegation hostage in order to trade them for its diplomats now being held in Iran, and thus, was contributing to a further increase in tensions in the areas.

William L. Randol, a First Boston Corp. analyst, said that the market is still keeping crude oil prices at a level considerably higher than they should be in fundamental terms because it is uncertain about what will happen in the region.

Randol said he believed that the events of the weekend had opened up "a myriad of possible scenarios" involving attacks against United States forces, or Saudi Arabian or Kuwaiti personnel or oil fields, and that no one can be certain now what will or will not happen.

SEC: Foreign investment busy, two-way street

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans purchased a record $102 billion in foreign stocks last year, but that amount was dwarfed by the $277.6 billion foreigners invested in U.S. stocks, also a record, the Securities and Exchange Commission said today.

In a major study of international investments, the SEC told Congress that investments across international boundaries have soared since 1980.

"Vast amounts of capital are now being raised internationally," the SEC staff study said. "The world's economies are more interdependent and economic, technological and regulatory changes are altering the international financial landscape in an unprecedented manner."

Among the SEC report's findings:

- The total amount of international bonds mushroomed from $38 billion in 1980 to $254 billion in 1986. Of this 1986 total, only $44 billion was raised by U.S. investors.
- Other nations have been investing in U.S. corporations at a far faster pace than U.S. investors have been investing in overseas securities.
- By the end of 1986 the total market value of U.S. stocks was $2.6 trillion, or 43 percent of the worldwide total, down from a 56 percent share just two years ago.
- Foreign investment by U.S. private pension funds has grown dramatically, from $3.3 billion in 1980 to approximately $45 billion in 1986.

The SEC report was prepared for the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on telecommunications and finance, which was holding a hearing on the findings today.

The staff report said tough U.S. disclosure regulations, while ensuring investor protection, "may discourage some foreign investors and move trading offshore, adversely impacting the ability of U.S. markets to compete with others."

IBM unveils PS for school, home market

NEW YORK (NYT) — Two and a half years after an embarrassed International Business Machines Corp. canceled its PCjr, company executives who once appeared to have forsworn the school and home computer markets announced Tuesday that they are trying again.

This time, the smallest member of the IBM line, called the Personal System-2 Model 25, comes with a standard keyboard — not the rubbery "chiclet" keys that helped to kill its predecessor. The new machine has enough internal memory to run most software designed for larger PC's, and it can execute those programs at about twice the speed of the old IBM Personal Computer.

"We're committed to being a major player in this market," William C Lowe, the head of IBM's personal computer division, said in an interview Tuesday. Brushing aside comparisons with the defunct PCjr, he added: "I don't believe the products are comparable. This computer is a real member of the IBM line."

Analysts said that for IBM, re-entering the low end of the market is as much a matter of pride as profits. Compared with the market for high-powered office machines, educational sales are a small and only marginally profitable part of the computer giant's business. But the company, one senior IBM executive said last month, "has been a little spooked by the vision of a generation of kids growing up looking at colorful little Apples." It is uncertain at best, however, whether the Model 25 can succeed in dislodging Apple Computer Inc. from thousands of classrooms and dormitories across the country.

Although industry analysts and school officials praised the Model 25's technology Tuesday, they complained that its price — $1,350 to $1,695, depending on the configuration — is too high.

Undaunted by the failure of its PCjr, IBM is again pursuing the 'low end' of the personal computing market with its PS-2 Model 25. William C. Lowe, president of the company's entry systems division, presided at Tuesday's launching of the new system.

Carmakers survive flat July

By PHILIP E. ROSS
New York Times News Service

DETROIT (NYT) — Sales of American-made passenger vehicles totaled 398,436 cars in late July, down 3.6 percent from the same period last year, the eight domestic manufacturers reported Tuesday.

Domestic car sales totaled 257,655, a decline of 8.5 percent from last year's 281,514. But domestic light trucks, which often substitute for cars, rose 6.9 percent from last year's 131,689 units, to 140,781.

In the last 10 days of July, domestic cars sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 7.25 million, up from the 6.8 million and 7.0 million rate of the previous two periods, but about the same as the 7.2 million rate in late July of 1986. The rates were calculated from a newly-revised adjustment formula that is used by the Department of Commerce.

Analysts said current sales would not suffice to clear bloated stocks of 1987 models in preparation for the new model year, which begins in the fall. Production levels have already been pared by 10 percent from last year and cannot be cut much more, analysts said. That suggests a new round of buyer incentives is in the offing for the fall.

For the month, domestic and imported vehicle sales totaled an estimated 1,334,619 units, down 2 percent from June 1986. Of this, cars comprised 611,928 units, down 2.9 percent from last year, and light trucks comprised 422,691 units, up 5.6 percent. Two-thirds of the cars, and three-quarters of the trucks, were produced in the United States.

Domestic cars sold at a seasonally adjusted rate of 7.1 million a year, while imported cars sold at a 3.3 million rate. In last year's period, domestics were running at 7.5 million and imports, at a 3.2 million rate, though in recent months imports hovered around the 2.9 million mark.

July truck sales totaled an estimated 422,691 units, up 5.6 percent from July 1986. Domestic sales totaled 342,051.

Edward J. Sullivan, an auto analyst with Wharton Econometrics, said it was not surprising that imports had increased.

"The Big Three auto makers are yielding share, and they're going to continue to yield share" to imports, Sullivan said, arguing that imports could better withstand the tightening of the market.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

FCC cancels broadcasting fairness doctrine

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission abolished the 38-year-old fairness doctrine, which requires broadcasters to present all sides of controversial issues.

The FCC voted 4-0 Tuesday to scrap the doctrine on the grounds it is unconstitutional, unnecessary and hinders coverage of important issues.

Doctrine supporters promised quick action in Congress to overturn the commission's dismantling of the policy and enact the doctrine into law.

UT finance professor to head FHLB of Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — Robert D. Mettlen, a University of Texas finance professor, was appointed as acting president of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas, bank officials said.

Mettlen will replace Roy G. Green, who resigned last month. He has served as chairman of the bank's board of directors since 1982, when he was named to the board as a public interest director.

FTC approves Chrysler-AMC merger plans

DETROIT (NYT) — The Federal Trade Commission approved the proposed acquisition of the American Motors Corp. by the Chrysler Corp., and an AMC spokesman said the merger would probably be approved by the company's shareholders at a special meeting Wednesday.

The two companies have gained the consent of Chrysler's shareholders; the French, Canadian and United States governments, and Renault, the French company that agreed to sell its 46 percent stake in AMC to Chrysler for $200 million. Chrysler's offer to AMC shareholders is $4.50 a share.

Senate sends FSLIC rescue bill to president

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate passed and sent the president a compromise banking bill that allows the insolvent Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. to raise $10.8 billion by selling long-term bonds.

The Senate voted 96-2 Tuesday to approve the bill, which also includes a ban on new "non-bank banks," limited-service financial institutions that are exempt from federal restrictions on bank ownership and interstate banking.

The bill prohibits federal regulators for nearly a year from giving commercial banks additional powers.

FCC proposes new AT&T pricing mechanism

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission proposed a new method of regulating American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s long-distance rates by imposing a cap on prices.

The rate-cap method, which the FCC voted 4-0 Tuesday to study, would replace the current regulatory approach that sets limits on AT&T's profits.

The commission also will study the rate-cap approach for the regional Bell operating companies, some of whose charges it regulates. The new method would be applied first to AT&T.

Postal labor contract won't affect stamp hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — New labor contracts signed last month by the U.S. Postal Service won't affect a plan to raise first-class stamp prices to a quarter next year, Postmaster General Preston R. Tisch said.

The Postal Service proposed new rates in May and is awaiting approval from the independent Postal Rate Commission, expected sometime in early 1988.

AIDS insurance claims may total $50 billion

BOSTON (AP) — The cost of AIDS-related deaths to U.S. life insurance companies from existing claims could reach $50 billion by the turn of the century, according to the the first major study of the disease's effect on the industry.

The study released Tuesday said AIDS-related deaths could account for more than 20 percent of the claims against some firms.

Individually insured AIDS-related life insurance claims on people already with policies could amount to more than $30 billion between now and the year 2000, the study said.

IEA: World crude oil stocks at normal level

PARIS (AP) — Major industrialized nations have normal levels of crude oil supplies and could handle a possible brief interruption of deliveries from the war-torn Persian Gulf, the International Energy Agency said Wednesday.

The agency's monthly oil market report said total crude oil stocks on land in the 24 member nations of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development as of July 1 are estimated at about 430 million metric tons, equivalent to about 3 billion barrels of oil.

That figure is about 3 million tons higher than a year earlier, and equivalent to about 97 days of consumption, the agency said.

"If there were to be a supply disruption of a week or so from the gulf, then I think we could make up for it pretty quickly," said an agency analyst.

He said there was between 2 million and 3 million barrels per day of excess production capacity in such non-gulf countries as Mexico, Venezuela, Nigeria and Indonesia.

The agency said oil consumption in the non-communist world is expected to rise to 46.6 million barrels per day in the third quarter of 1987 from 45.8 million barrels per day in the second quarter.

At the same time, crude oil production from non-members of the Organization of Oil Exporting Countries is expected to rise to 29 million barrels per day.

Halliburton income recovers $1.5 million

DALLAS (AP) — Citing signs of a recovery in the oil industry, Halliburton Co. Tuesday posted net income of $1.5 million, compared with a $524.6 million loss in the second quarter of 1986.

Per-share earnings for the second quarter of 1987 were 2 cents per share on revenues of $776.6 million, compared with $4.94 per share on revenues of $854.9 million in the year-earlier period.

Company officials called the return to profitability a further indication of the gradual recovery of the domestic oil industry.

"We continue to believe that further gradual improvements will occur during the second half of 1987and that 1988 will be a reasonably good year," said Halliburton president and chief executive officer Thomas H. Cruikshank.

Halliburton said the company's results reflected reduced operating losses in domestic operations, principally due to a combination of increased activity levels, continuing benefits from cost-cutting programs implemented in 1986 and firmer pricing.

For the first six months of 1987, Halliburton posted a $6.7 million, or 6 cents a share, net loss on revenues of $1.476 billion. In the first six months of 1986, the company reported a net loss of $513.4 million, or $4.83 per share, on revenues of $1.86 billion.

Adobe posts $19.9 million profit

From Staff Reports

Adobe Resources Corp. reported $19.9 million of net income for the second quarter compared to a $23.5 million loss for the same period last year. After preferred dividend requirements of $4.9 million, the second quarter net income applicable to common shareholders was $15 million.

Pretax income from operations totaled $2.5 million. Nonoperating income includes a $19.5 million book gain related to the company's sale of 5.2 million shares of Conquest Exploration Co. during the quarter. Cash provided by operations for the second quarter 1987 was $12.8 million.

The comparable 1986 second quarter results included a $17.6 million loss from operations after a full cost ceiling impairment of $20.5 million, and a nonoperating loss which totaled $3.9 million. After preferred dividends, the second quarter net loss applicable to common shareholders was $28.4 million for 1986.

The company's sales volumes of both oil and natural gas were lower during the second quarter compared to last year, in part reflecting the sale of properties in the Rocky Mountain region at the end of 1986. Daily domestic oil production in the second quarter was 4,545 bopd compared to 6,511 bopd in the March-June period a year ago.

Natural gas sales dropped to 48.9 MMcfgd from 49.86 MMcfgd in last year's second quarter.

Average prices received for production reflect market improvement for oil and continued erosion in gas markets. In the second quarter Adobe averaged $16.64 per barrel for oil sold, up from $12.65 per barrel last year, while gas prices slipped to $2.11 per Mcf from $2.30 per Mcf in 1986.

The corporation announced that Robert F. Vagt has been elected executive vice president. Vagt has been with Adobe and predecessor companies since July 1980, most recently as senior vice president.

The corporation also reported the addition of two new board members: John E. Kolb and Russell L. Allen. Kolb is a partner in the Houston law firm of Vinson & Elkins. Allen is senior vice president and chief financial officer of Adobe.

As previously announced, during the second quarter the company issued 8,121,288 common shares in connection with the conversion of $84,870,000 principal amount of convertible subordinated debentures. The company also issued 816,000 shares in connection with the acquisition of the minority interest of High Plains Oil Corp.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Income taxes on E bonds deferred until redemption

By BILL DOYLE

Q. In October 1986, I invested $15,000 in Series E, U.S. Savings Bonds. I plan to keep them until they mature, when they will be worth $30,000. I know I can wait until I redeem the bonds at maturity and, on the federal income tax I file for that year, pay tax on all the $15,000 accrued interest. From reading your column, I also know I can report and pay tax on the interest as it builds up each year.

It seems to me I should pay the tax each year. Reporting $15,000 of additional taxable income in one future year could create a large tax burden. What are your thoughts on this?

Doyle

A. Unless your other taxable income is quite small and you are in a low tax bracket, my thoughts are to defer reporting your savings bond interest until you redeem the bonds.

The new tax law sets five federal income tax brackets for 1987 — at 11, 15, 28, 35 and 38.5 percent. For 1988 and beyond, there are scheduled to be two brackets — 15 and 28 percent, but a 5 percent surtax will put some very high-income people into a 33 percent bracket.

Under the rules as they now stand, it's doubtful $15,000 of additional taxable income would put you in a higher tax bracket. More likely, you'll pay either 15 or 28 percent tax on your EE bond interest, whether you report it all at once or each year as it accumulates.

Anyway, you won't have to redeem all your bonds at one time You can spread the redemptions and your tax liability on the interest out over a period of years.

EE bonds can be cashed six months after their issue dates. However, that's not a wise move. They will earn higher interest if held for at least five years.

Also, there is a possibility that interest won't stop accruing on your EEs and you won't have to redeem them at their stated maturities. Their predecessor E bonds were granted extended maturities of up to 40 years. Although the U.S. Treasury Department has made no promises, it is generally expected that EEs will be given extended maturities.

Assuming that happens, you'll be able to cash your EEs over a period of years and spread out your tax liability on the interest long after your EEs pass their original stated maturities.

Even if EEs are not given extended maturities, you can exchange them for HH bonds and defer paying tax on the EE interest until you redeem the HHs received in the exchange.

Q. My late husband and I had Series E bonds in co-ownership. When he died, I had the Es reissued in my name only. And, on our final joint federal income tax return, I paid tax on all the interest accrued on the bonds up to the date of reissue.

Since then, when I cash some of the bonds, I collect all the interest accrued from the time the original bonds were purchased. But I am required to pay income tax only on the interest earned since the reissue date. So far, so good.

Here's the problem. Each year, the bank at which I cash the bonds sends me a Form 1099 listing the full amount of the bonds' interest — from the original issue dates until the time they were redeemed. A copy of each Form 1099 goes to the Internal Revenue Service.

On my annual income tax return, I report only the interest on the cashed bonds from the reissue date and I have to attach an explanatory note to my return.

Shouldn't there be a provision on the Form 1099, so that this recurring aggravation is eliminated? Or am I the only one who ever handled savings bond tax this way?

A. You're not the only one, but you are in the minority. The vast majority of owners of E and EE bonds and U.S. Savings Notes report and pay tax on all the interest after they redeem their bonds and notes. Unfortunately for you, 1099s and other "information returns" don't take cases such as yours into consideration.

You're handling an unusual and difficult problem correctly and exceptionally well. Be sure to keep accurate records, just in case the Internal Revenue Service questions your returns and asks for proof that tax was paid on the E bond interest up to the time of your husband's death.

Health benefit costs rising for employers

NEW YORK (NYT) — As chairman of the health subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, Fortney H. Stark, D-Calif., is one of the most influential members of Congress on national health-care issues. In an interview, Stark, who is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and has an MBA degree from the University of California at Berkeley, discussed the increasing health-care responsibilities that Congress has been asking employers to assume. Excerpts follow:

Q. Why should employers take more of the burden for paying for health care?

A. There's no free lunch. If somebody goes to the hospital, if they don't pay, who pays? Everybody. You pay in higher real estate taxes. The employer pays in higher costs to whoever is handling his employee benefit plan, because of higher hospital costs. I just see the issue now in terms of redistributing the costs and how you do that fairly.

Q. But what is the proper responsibility of business?

A. There ought to be minimum fringe benefits. Instead of an addition to the minimum wage this go-round, I would support an addition to the minimum wage of a minimum health benefit.

If the businesses don't want to buy it from Blue Cross, I think you're eventually going to have to provide risk pools (to subsidize coverage for the uninsured) in the states, just like you provide them for uninsured motorists. That's just sharing the costs a little more equitably.

Q. What kind of money are you talking about?

A. Senator Kennedy says it's $1,000 a year per employee for his proposal. That comes out to 50 cents an hour.

Q. Will employers be asked to take on additional obligations?

A. The only thing that I see on the immediate horizon are the risk pools, which deal with uninsurable people, people with Hodgkin's disease or leukemia or AIDS, people who just can't get insurance — a very small number — but it should reduce the cost of insurance for all employers. It's a voluntary program; it will have to be done by each state. Until we get to something like Kennedy proposes, some kind of minimum-benefit coverage, we will have to start out in that vein — risk pools.

Q. Individuals in the risk pools would pay a premium covering part of the cost. The rest would be subsidized. How would that be financed?

A. Probably the best way would be out of broad-based general revenues, whether state or federal. Absent that, they ought to be financed by all working people, just as they pay for unemployment compensation or workers' compensation, some kind of a shared tax. I would presume it would be paid partly by the employee and partly the employer. It's eventually paid by the consumer.

Q. Is it proper to require small businesses, or businesses with people working only 17½ hours or more a week, to provide health insurance?

A. It certainly isn't fair for those people to shove those costs off onto the community at large and to have a competitive advantage over employers who do provide the benefits.

Q. Are health benefits a drag on American competitiveness internationally?

A. No. Lousy management is what affects our competitiveness. In Canada and Japan and Germany, the benefits are far greater than ours.

Q. Are we moving toward a universal health insurance system?

A. No. What we're moving toward is universal coverage — the people in the military covered under one plan; the major union-negotiated plans are another. We've got about 35 million people we haven't figured out how to coyer yet.

Q. Would the catastrophic health insurance bill as passed by the House relieve employers of some obligations?

A. Absolutely. It will relieve those employers who offer retirement benefits.

Q. What is your solution for these large unfunded liabilities for health benefits for retired employees?

A. When I went to business school, I always understood that stockholders who make a profit also take a risk. I'm afraid that this just comes out of the pocket of the stockholders, the good old American way.

SEC

Between 1978 and 1986, Japanese markets grew at an annual rate of 23 percent, Italy's at 39 percent, Britain's at 18 percent and the United States' at 14 percent.

As international markets grow, concerns about the efforts by the SEC and self-regulatory organizations "to regulate these markets will intensify," the study said.

"The degree to which the world's securities markets have become internationalized is unprecedented," the report said.

"The ability to move capital quickly across national boundaries and to engage in securities transactions through offshore entities provides new mechanisms for the unscrupulous to engage in securities fraud, and presents new obstacles for law enforcement agencies," the SEC study said.

Much of the relative increase in foreign markets is directly due to the devaluation of the U.S. dollar over the past few years, particularly against the Japanese yen, the study noted.

SUMMER ENTERTAINING Alfresco

The perfect invitation for a summer barbecue is a light entree prepared alfresco. Guests can't resist the delicate flavor of fresh herbs, summer vegetables and premium North Pacific halibut cooked to perfection over a barbecue grill. Follow this with an attractive but no-fuss dessert and you're sure to have a summer barbecue success.

In the menu photographed, Lemon Grilled Halibut combines fresh summer peppers, zucchini and halibut with a lemon and fresh basil marinade. Firm in texture with a mild delicate flavor, North Pacific halibut steaks adapt well to the grill. The halibut is open-roasted in pans made from heavy duty aluminum foil. To enhance the barbecue flavor, kiln-dried alder or mesquite wood chunks or chips *, used according to package directions, can be added to the hot coals. A covered grill encloses the aromas and the entree is ready in about 10 minutes.

An Apricot Pear Tart serves as an attractive conclusion for this outdoor meal. Canned Bartlett pears grown in the orchards of California, Oregon and Washington provide the inspiration for this easy-to-make dessert. Pears are chilled and fanned as an attractive topping for this tart. For convenience in making the shell, an aluminum foilware deep pie pan can be substituted for the 9-inch tart pan.

For another great barbecue meal, prepare Grilled Halibut With Vegetables. This combination captures the flavor of halibut, fresh vegetables and pecans. Using heavy duty aluminum foil, this complete menu of low-fat North Pacific halibut and vitamin-packed fresh vegetables is grilled in one step. The foil provides individual cooking packets for start-to-finish cooking in 15 minutes.

As dessert for this second menu, prepare Pears Foster. Nothing can beat the convenience of perfectly ripened, peeled, poached and ready-to-use canned Bartlett pears. To add to the convenience, an aluminum foilware cake pan is used as a sturdy container for grill-top heating of this rum-flavored dessert sauce—the perfect topping for your favorite gourmet ice cream.

*Available in many grocery and specialty food stores.

Lemon Grilled Halibut

4 North Pacific halibut steaks (about 6 oz. each), thawed if necessary
1 red pepper, cut in thin strips
1 green pepper, cut in thin strips
1 medium onion, thinly sliced
2 medium zucchini, thinly sliced

Marinade:
1/4 cup fresh lemon juice
2/3 cup vegetable oil
1 garlic clove, minced
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon fresh ground pepper
2 tablespoons chopped fresh basil or 2 teaspoons dried basil leaves
1/2 teaspoon grated lemon peel

Line fire bowl of a covered grill with Heavy Duty aluminum foil. Puncture foil at grill vent openings. Place halibut steaks and peppers in a 13x9x2-inch glass baking dish. Combine marinade ingredients; pour over halibut and peppers. Cover dish with plastic wrap. Marinate 1 hour, turning halibut once. Make 2 grill pans*. Place half of the onion slices in bottom of each grill pan. Remove halibut and peppers from marinade and place 2 halibut steaks, half the peppers and zucchini slices on top of the onions in each grill pan. Pour any remaining marinade over halibut. Cook halibut and vegetables in covered grill over medium-hot, direct heat, allowing 10 minutes cooking time per inch of thickness of halibut measured at its thickest part, or until halibut flakes at thickest part when tested with a fork. Serve halibut and vegetables with a slotted spatula.
Makes: 4 servings.

Apricot Pear Tart

Pastry for 9-inch single crust pie
1 can (16 oz.) Bartlett pear halves, chilled
1 package (8 oz.) cream cheese, softened to room temperature
2 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons grated orange peel
1/2 teaspoon vanilla
1 can (8 oz.) apricot halves, drained
1 teaspoon unflavored gelatin

Line a 9-inch tart pan with pastry; prick bottom and sides. Bake at 400° F. 10 minutes or until golden; cool. Drain pears; reserve liquid. Blend cream cheese, 3 tablespoons reserved pear liquid, sugar, orange peel and vanilla; spread evenly over bottom of baked crust. Puree apricots in blender or food processor. Sprinkle gelatin over 1/2 cup reserved pear liquid; heat and stir to dissolve. Stir into apricot puree. Spread apricot mixture over cream cheese. Slice pear halves vertically to 1 inch from top; fan halves and arrange on tart. Cover with plastic wrap. Refrigerate 2 to 3 hours or until ready to serve.
Makes: 8 servings.

A Redi-Pan deep pie pan may be substituted.

Grilled Halibut With Vegetables

4 North Pacific halibut steaks (about 6 oz. each), thawed if necessary
2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine
Salt and pepper
Thyme leaves

Vegetable Mixture:

Place each halibut steak in center of each sheet of foil. Brush both sides of halibut steaks with 2 tablespoons melted butter. Season with salt, pepper and thyme. Combine vegetable mixture. Place 1 cup vegetable mixture in a circle around each halibut steak. To drugstore wrap, bring two sides of heavy duty aluminum foil together over food. Fold down loosely in locked folds, allowing for heat circulation and expansion. Fold up remaining ends; crimp to seal. Cook foil packets in covered grill over medium-hot, direct heat, allowing 15 minutes cooking time per inch of thickness of halibut measured at its thickest part, or until halibut flakes easily at thickest part when tested with a fork.
Makes: 4 servings.

Place one scoop vanilla ice cream between two pear halves in individual dishes; drizzle with sauce.
Makes: 4 servings.

1. Layer two 18x12-inch sheets of aluminum foil to make a double thickness. Fold in all edges 1-1/2 inches.
2. Fold all edges upright to form sides of pan.
3. Pinch corners diagonally together, press corners against sides of pan.

THE BUTCHER

Pork has 50 percent less fat than pork of 20 years ago

By MERLE ELLIS

Today's pork is a far cry from, and yet in certain ways somewhat similar to, those first swine Columbus brought to the New World in 1493. Those animals were razor-backed with narrow bodies, extended snouts and long-boned legs, unlike pigs as we have known them, with their short snouts, rounded bodies, and meaty hams. But very like their European ancestors, which early on became a staple of the American diet, today's hogs are lean. Not as mean as those razorbacks that run wild in the woods, but very near as lean.

Until very recently, we bred pigs to be fat in this country. We wanted them fat. We needed them fat. Pork fat - lard - was what we cooked with. We fried chicken in it, and potatoes. We used it to make pie crusts (I still do). Our pioneer forefathers packed bacon and sausage in lard to preserve them for the long trek "Westward-ho-the-wagons." We needed pork fat. Not too many generations ago, hogs were raised as much for the lard they provided as for the meat. Things are different now. Todays, hogs are scientifically bred and fed specifically for the meat they provide — and that meat contains 22 percent more protein and 57 percent less fat than the pork of 20 years ago.

Cooking today's pork is a far cry from cooking yesterday's, too! The pork you buy now comes to market younger and therefore far more tender than it did back when. It does not require, indeed, cannot tolerate, the kind of treatment we gave the fat pigs we used to have. To cook today's pork to the 185 degrees of doneness that was recommended in most cookbooks of a generation ago would be akin to cremation. An internal temperature of 155 or 160 will produce more more tender juicy results. We now have cuts of pork that can be cooked in minutes — in no more time than it takes to cook a steak, or saute a veal cutlet or a chicken breast.

Here are recipes specifically concocted to make lean pork taste its best.

HONEY SESAME TENDERLOIN

1 pound whole pork tenderloin
1/2 cup soy sauce
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon grated fresh ginger or 1 teaspoon dry ginger
1 tablespoon sesame oil
1/4 cup honey
2 tablespoons brown sugar
4 tablespoons sesame seed

Combine soy sauce, garlic, ginger, and sesame oil. Place tenderloin in a heavy plastic bag, pour soy mixture over to coat. Let marinate 2 hours at room temperature, or overnight in refrigerator. Remove pork from marinade, pat dry. Mix together honey and brown sugar in a shallow plate. Place sesame seeds on a separate shallow plate. Roll pork well in honey mixture, coating well; then roll in sesame seed. Roast in a shallow pan at 375 degrees for 20-30 minutes, until meat thermometer inserted registers 160 degrees. Remove to serving platter, slice thinly to serve.

HOT PORK AND PEAR SALAD

1 pound pork tenderloin
2 large firm pears
2 to 4 tablespoons cooking oil
1/4 cup cider vinegar
2 tablespoons sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 cup raisins
1/2 cup walnuts, toasted
5 to 6 cups salad greens

Cut pork into 3-inch-by-1/4-inch strips; set aside. Pare and core pears; cut into 12 slices. Heat 2 tablespoons oil in a heavy fry pan; saute the pears until tender but firm. Remove from pan and set aside. Stir fry pork strips, adding additional oil if necessary, until done, about 3 minutes. Remove meat from pan, pour off excess fat. Add vinegar, sugar, and salt to pan juices; heat until sugar dissolves. Add pears, pork, and raisins; stir to heat and mix. Put salad greens in a large salad bowl; spoon over pork mixture, toss. Sprinkle with walnuts. Serves 6.

CHEF TELL'S RED PEPPER PORK

6 slices boneless pork tenderloin
Salt
Freshly ground black pepper
3 tablespoons vegetable oil
2 large red peppers, seeded and sliced
1/2 cup heavy cream

Pound the pork slices lightly with a flat mallet. Sprinkle them with salt and pepper.

Heat the oil in a large frying pan. When it is hot, add the pork. Cook for 2 minutes on each side. Transfer the pork slices to a serving plate and keep them warm.

Add the sliced red peppers to the pan and saute for 2 minutes, stirring constantly. Add the cream and cook for 1 minute. Correct the seasonings, if necessary, and pour the sauce over the pork. Serve immediately.

DEAR ABBY

Peach of a deal turns rotten for couple selling orchard

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our problem is failure. Now, in our late 60s, my husband and I have lost all of our savings in an effort to do more for our children, especially our 40-year-old son who talked us into mortgaging our farm and going into debt to purchase a nearby peach orchard in Georgia.

We desperately need to sell our peach orchard. There are so many people with so much money now; surely the prospect of expenses deductible from income tax should appeal to them. And the expense of operating a peach orchard is considerable, and it's deductible.

Abby, can you help us find a buyer? — NEEDS A BUYER

P.S. Our son is tall, blond, handsome and has been married and divorced twice. He's a real charmer. He could have tried to land him. My only other hope is that some wealthy girl who loves horses as we all do will show up.

DEAR NEEDS: I urge you to advertise in your newspaper and contact an agent whose business it is to sell such properties. If that doesn't bear fruit, forget the orchard and advertise your son. (Only kidding.)

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a real couch potato. Now, don't get me wrong, I like TV as much as the next person, but here's my problem: He stays up until all hours watching old movies and reruns and then comes to bed late. It's not that he ignores me or is trying to avoid sex — it's just the opposite. He wakes me up at 2 or 3 a.m. wanting to be romantic.

I have asked him to come to bed first, then watch TV afterward, but he says it takes away all the spontaneity. But, Abby, once I go to sleep I would like to stay asleep.

What do you think? — MRS. COUCH POTATO, GLENDALE HEIGHTS, ILL.

DEAR MRS. POTATO: Forget spontaneity and plan ahead. Talk this out together while you're both wide awake.

DEAR ABBY: This October, my husband and I will have been married for five years, and I have never sent thank-you notes to relatives and friends who gave us wedding gifts. Needless to say, I feel terribly guilty about this.

Is there a way I can now, at this late date, send the thank-yous along with an apology? I guess what I'm hoping for is a "magic phrase" that I can incorporate into the "thank-you" note which will enable them to forgive me, and, I hope, to understand that I not only want to thank them, but also want to correct this seemingly rude omission.

Thank you in advance, Abby! — C.H.M. IN BRAINTREE, MASS.

DEAR C.H.M.: The "magic phrase" is: "We are profoundly embarrassed to be writing at this very late date to thank you for the beautiful ice bucket you gave us when we were married.

"Please forgive us for what must seem an inexcusably tardy acknowledgment. Believe us to be terribly ashamed. However, the pleasure we have received from that wonderful ice bucket would warm your heart" etc."

I hope you have kept a list of what each giver gave because if you can make an identifying comment about the gift, you may be more readily forgiven. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: My friend's daughter was married last week in a beautiful wedding in a synagogue. I was greatly surprised — yes, shocked — to see the bride's great-aunt walking down the aisle as the matron of honor! The fact that the bride's mother is very fond of her elderly aunt is totally irrelevant in my opinion.

I think the bridal party should consist of young adults, full of life, not someone like this little old 75-year-old lady. She looked so out of place. I just couldn't believe my eyes! What could that bride have been thinking when she had so many young friends and relatives to choose from? I hope this is not a new trend.

What is your opinion? — NEW YORK POST READER

DEAR READER: If you expected support for your opinion, you rattled the wrong cage. Weddings are celebrations of love, and when it comes to love, age is irrelevant. I think choosing a 75-year-old matron of honor is truly wonderful.

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

WHAT'S COOKING

Minister's wife gives time, recipes

EDITORS NOTE: This series of "What's Cooking" interviews will feature nonprofit organizations that have published cookbooks. This is the first article in a series of interviews with members of First Baptist Church.

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Becky Elliott, wife of the Rev. Charles Elliott of Midland's First Baptist Church, contributed more than recipes to the church women's cookbook. "I put the cookbook together," she said. "It took about eight days. I'm interested in the writing part of it. I've even helped put together a church history of the last 10 years ... since Dr. Vestal has come."

Mrs. Elliott said she helped Lu Calhoun "put this book ('Great Things He Has Done') together and it took about 20 days."

The book is a companion of the book, "To God Be The Glory," by Billy Keith, which is a history of First Baptist Church's first 90 years. "We're being very careful about keeping our history (up to date) this time because, did we have to dig to find things to put in the book!"

But compiling recipes and gathering church history are not Mrs. Elliott's only church activities. Her husband is minister of activities at First Baptist Church, and "one of his responsibilities is to provide activities for the senior adults. They meet once a month, and once a year they come to our house for a backyard supper."

Mrs. Elliott teaches a senior adult Sunday school class and "likes for the ladies to come to my house for special occasions." One of her guests' favorite dishes is Sweet and Sour Turkey Sausage.

Another function her husband guides is "a conference each summer in Grindelwald, Switzerland," Mrs. Elliott said. This summer the couple also led a pre-conference tour of England, Scotland, the Netherlands and Switzerland, during which she discovered English Shepherd's Pie. Feeling that the dish would please her two sons, she learned to make it — but with Texas-style ingredients.

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Becky Elliott

The Elliotts have lived in Midland for 20 years. Mrs. Elliott teaches English as a second language and seventh- and eighth-grade English at San Jacinto Junior High School.

The recipes for Sweet and Sour Turkey Sausage and English Shepherd's Pie Texas Style follow:

SWEET AND SOUR TURKEY SAUSAGE

2 long, German- or Polish-style turkey sausages
1 10-ounce can condensed tomato soup
¼ cup grape jelly
¼ cup vinegar
1 tablespoon prepared mustard

Cut turkey sausage into bite-sized chunks. Place in warming dish. Heat all other ingredients until jelly melts. Pour over sausage and serve warm.

ENGLISH SHEPHERD'S PIE — TEXAS STYLE

1 pound lean ground sirloin
2 tablespoons flour
½ to 1 cup milk
3 cups fluffy mashed potatoes
2 cups grated Cheddar cheese

Brown ground sirloin in small amount of oil in skillet. Stir in flour until it is browned. Add milk to make thin gravy. Pour into greased casserole dish. Spread mashed potatoes over meat; cover potatoes with grated cheese. Bake at 350 degrees for 20 minutes.

Columnist famous for cooking

BY ELAINE WIKSTROM

KIRBYVILLE (AP) — Homemade biscuits fresh from the oven, hot tea and goblets of water sit on the table in the homey kitchen with the high ceilings.

Lexie Causey Herndon of Kirbyville, better known as Miss Lexie, apparently believes in having light refreshments ready for company. That shouldn't surprise anyone. After all, she has a reputation. She's been responsible for a cooking column, "Country Cookin'," in the Beaumont Enterprise for somewhere between 40 and 50 years.

"I've been with them almost 50 years," she recalls. At one time "I had something in the paper ever day. I reported sports, tragedies, fires, weddings, deaths — the whole shebang. I've always been interested in sports."

But the longest part of her part-time newspaper career has dealt with food. It seems that a few year after its beginning, Miss Lexie — "People will not know me except as 'Miss Lexie,' " she says — reported the arrival of an important man having to do with the Burkeville sawmill. He came from "Indiana or one of those Midwestert states," and was to stay at a local home for New Year's dinner.

The cook made black-eyed peas with hog jowl for luck, and the visitor was entranced. "It was about the first feature I ever wrote," Miss Lexie says, adding that "It went over big" at the office.

She says the boss asked one of ther friends, "Could Mrs. Herndon give us some more like that?" and with that, "Country Cookin' " was born about 45 years ago.

NOW MISS Lexie is not one who says she's a perfect housekeeper. "Honey, I think that keeping house is for the birds," she says.

She generally has had help at her house, and often that person, not Miss Lexie, was responsible for the big meal in the middle of the day. That isn't true anymore, but she's certainly not a regular at any of the restaurants now available in Kirbyville.

"I like my own cooking. I like to cook," she says. "I remember as a child, I used to get out in the back yard and build a fire under bricks and fry potatoes." Fried potatoes still are one of her favorites.

And Miss Lexie still is on the lookout for new recipes. She finds them everywhere, particularly at pot lucks and such, and has files "all over the house." That's where she gets her weekly column.

When people find out how many recipes she has, Miss Lexie says they invariably suggest she write a cookbook. "Cookbooks are a dime a dozen," she retorts.

Besides, she's already masterminded a book. It's called "Memories of Kirbyville" and it contains some of her own as well as those provided by others. And she wrote for a while for a now-defunct music magazine, "Etude."

The mention of her real career as a music teacher brings an extra light into her eyes. "That's my legacy to Kirbyville. Music."

SHE RECEIVED her education first at San Antonio Female College — "And I mean it was female" — and more music instruction later at North Texas State University.

She says she continued to take instruction whenever and wherever possible, even if it meant her beloved husband of 50 years, Henry, had to take her to Beaumont. That was no small feat in earlier years, involving a circuitous route to get to the one ferry that could get her here.

Miss Lexie received a permanent certificate to teach music in any high school in the state, and she taught in the Kirbyville area. Rural youths taught her their folk dances and she, in turn, brought them new forms of music with her Victrola and Red Seal records. "I believe in culture,' she says. "They got music appreciation."

Others learned to play instruments. "My piano recitals were outstanding. I always had something different. I had some outstanding piano pupils," she says with pride. One of the crowning achievements was on May 14, 1930, when she concluded the recital by having 32 pupils play simultaneously on eight pianos, more than one of them borrowed.

Miss Lexie also had a girls camp from about 1930 to 1940, and "I had the first drum major activity in the state of Texas."

That didn't count the time she spent behind the keyboard of the local Methodist church's musical instruments as organist. She started with the pump organ and a piano, later moving up to an electric organ.

Her duties didn't stop with making melodies either. It seemed one year the choir was preparing for an Easter cantata, and the group really wanted to have choir robes for the big occasion. Well, Miss Lexie and another woman heard that there might be some robes to be had.

THE ONLY problem was that they had belonged to a short-lived chapter of the Ku Klux Klan a number of years before. They had been stored in a room above a local business, and had been rained on — presenting what Miss Lexie described in her book as a "sorry sight.' She says the businessman in question also was a Methodist, and he told the women they could have the robes if they would rip out the names of the former owners and promise never to divulge who had belonged to the Klan.

So, the women ripped them out (reading more than one along the way), got a pattern for surplices and remade the dirty old robes into the snowy white garments they had so desired. "That was the first robed cantata we ever had in Kirbyville," she recalls.

Then, of course, there was the sponsorship of the music club and another 10 years of work as executive director of the Kirbyville Housing Authority. Many of her efforts are summed up in a "Certificate of Recognition to an Outstanding Older Texan," which praises her for the continued contributions and unselfish service she has rendered to the community, signed by former Gov. Dolph Briscoe and awarded through the Jasper County Committee on Aging in 1978.

But her crowning achievement in the eyes of beholders on that recent afternoon was the biscuits.

"They were made to eat," she says encouragingly. "They're the easiest things in the world to make."

LEXIE'S ANGEL BISCUITS

2½ cups self-rising flour
½ to ¾ teaspoon sugar
1½ packages dry yeast dissolved in ½ cup lukewarm water
1 cup buttermilk at room temperature, with pinch of soda added and dissolved ½ cup oil

Put flour and sugar in large bowl and mix well. Add yeast-milk mixture and mix well. Add oil and mix again.

Cover with wet, warm cup towel and leave about 1 hour or until doubled in bulk.

Punch down. Pinch off a handful, put on a floured board and add enough flour to make dough pliable. Roll out and cut into individual biscuits.

Place in oiled pan and let rise until doubled in size.

Bake at 450 degrees until nice and brown. Butter each, and pass the jelly.

CORN PUDDING

2 large eggs
1 (17-ounce) can cream-style corn
1 (17-ounce) can drained whole kernel corn
½ cup evaporated milk
¾ cup corn muffin mix
½ cup margarine
Black pepper
Paprika

Beat eggs in bowl. Add corn, milk and muffin mix, folding in ingredients.

Melt margarine in an oblong baking dish. Pour mixture into dish. Sprinkle black pepper and paprika on top.

Bake at 350 degrees from 35 to 45 minutes or until done.

Touch of chocolate adds new taste to banana bread

Associated Press

Breads give chocolate lovers yet another way to enjoy their favorite flavor.

CHOCOLATE BANANA BREAD

1 cup all-purpose flour
¾ cup whole wheat flour
1¼ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
⅓ cup sugar
⅓ cup margarine or butter, softened
2 eggs
2 tablespoons milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup mashed ripe banana
⅓ cup flaked coconut
½ cup semisweet chocolate pieces

In mixing bowl stir together all-purpose and whole wheat flours, baking powder, soda and salt; set aside.

In small mixer bowl beat sugar and margarine with electric mixer until light, scraping sides of bowl often.

Add eggs, one at a time, beat well after each addition. Stir in milk and vanilla. Add flour mixture and banana alternately to sugar mixture, beating until smooth after each addition. Fold in coconut and chocolate pieces.

Turn batter into a lightly greased 9x5x3-inch loaf pan. Bake in a 350-degree oven 45 to 50 minutes or until a wooden toothpick inserted near center comes out clean. Cool 10 minutes. Remove from pan, cool on wire rack.

Kabob tips make cookout winners

Associated Press

Build a better kabob and hungry barbecue fans will beat a path to your backyard. Here are some guidelines to make you kabob champ of the neighborhood.

■ Allow 4 servings per pound of boneless meat or fish, 3 servings per pound of shrimp with shell or chicken with the bone. Plan on 1 cup of fruit or vegetables per person.

■ Cut meat for kabobs in even-sized pieces. Our test kitchen found that 1-inch cubes are the best; meat and vegetables get done at the same time.

■ Kabobs cook more evenly if there's breathing space between pieces.

■ Short of time? Look in the fresh meat case of your supermarket for ready-to-cook kabobs.

■ Add flavor with a marinade. Place the meat or seafood cubes in a plastic bag in a shallow dish. Add your favorite marinade and close the bag. Chill 2 to 4 hours for fish, seafood or chicken; 6 hours or overnight for beef, pork or lamb. Reserve the marinade to brush over the kabobs as they cook.

■ Precook for 1 to 2 minutes: ½-inch slices of summer squash, broccoli or cauliflower flowerets, and baby scallopini squash; 4 to 5 minutes: baby carrots, 1-inch pieces of green onion or leek; 6 to 8 minutes: 1-inch pieces of fresh corn on the cob; 12 to 15 minutes: halved tiny new potatoes.

■ Cherry tomatoes cook fast. Put them on the skewer for the last 2 minutes of cooking.

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of ten women in the United States will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 wome die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancers are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate and a 90% 10 year survival rate.

A mammgram can detect a cancer this small, ● even before it can be felt.

Appointments may be made by calling 561-9999

The Mobile Breast Cancer Detection Unit from Odessa Women's & Childrens Hospital will be in Midland on the Old Gibsons parking lot on Cuthbert St.

The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease). Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Academy of Family Physicians, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and The American College of Radiology. THose guidelines are:

I. 35-40 years of age-One baseline mammogram.

II. 40-50 years of age-A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.

III. 50 years of age and over-An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.

IV. Asymptomatic women under years of age with signifiant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intervals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancdr.

V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who i highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $50.00. The Unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

Approved by the American Cancer Society.

Food, wine of France memorable

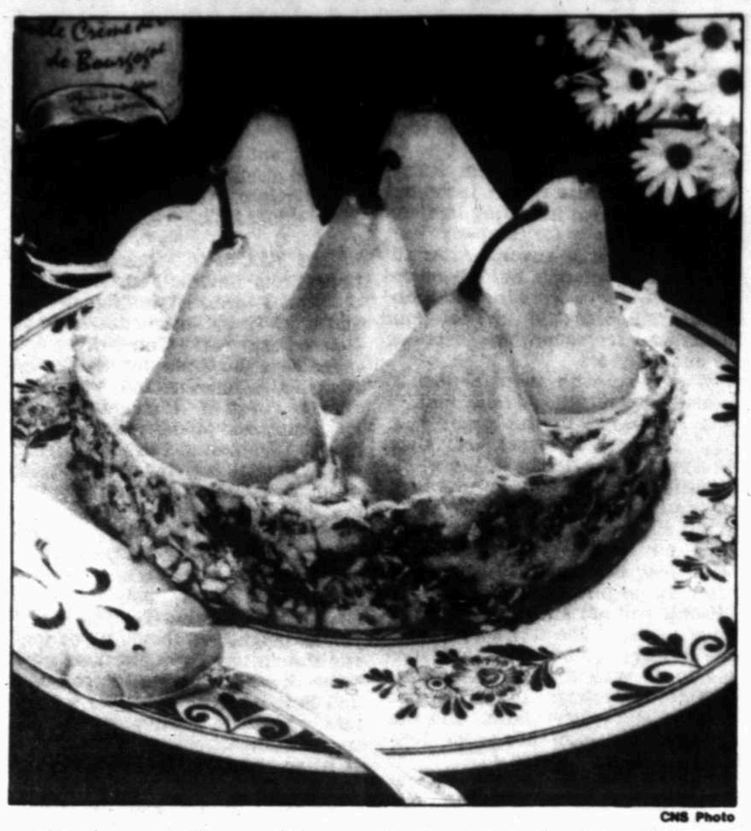

By ANTONIA ALLEGRA
Copley News Service

BURGUNDY, France — The hills of Burgundy slope as gently as the shoulders on bottles of the area's famous wine. The land, striped with traces of vines and supports, stretches beyond the eye, punctuated only by an occasional stone house, castle or small village.

There are no signs designating where one vineyard ends and the next begins; yet, natives can look at a hillside and with the wave of a hand easily point out the lines of demarcation.

In mid-spring, twisted black trunks of grapevines push from the rocky chalk-veined soil along the Cte d'Or like rows of blackened withered hands. Workers in the vineyards prune the dark sprigs left from last year's growth. The men, with hands as tough as saddle leather, carefully zero in on the cuttings to be made and then toss the twigs into age-rusted metal drums glowing with burning coals.

This is the Gold Coast region of France, so named for the amber hue of grape leaves in the height of the harvest. And it was to this dormant land that Thomas Jefferson came 200 years ago to visit, to observe and to learn about wine and food and the hearty people of the land. On his return, Jefferson — the U.S. minister to France from 1785 to 1789 — took with him Julien Lemaire, who became the first White House French chef, as well as the first bottles of Burgundy wine for the cellars of the White House.

This dramatic Crown of Pears with Cassis is in the style of dessert served at the Clos Vougeot in France.

FOR TODAY'S visitor to Burgundy, the chance to taste wines at the source is still a major lure. Drink Chablis in Chablis. Nuits-Saint-George in Nuits-Saint-George. Savigny-les-Beaune. ...

And the food of the area, which has developed over centuries, is a perfect accompaniment to the wines. Parslied ham, onion soup, lentil salad, marinated cepes, Burgundian lake trout with sorrel, spinach tart and Beef Bourguignonne are but a few of the local home-style classics. Cassis, the black currant-based liquor, and variations of dishes with cherries are popular due to the quantity of the fruit in the region. Both were planted in areas of diseased vineyards and became a major crop of the area.

Many of the dishes are eaten with Dijon mustard, which hails from the lively city of the same name — the capital of the region.

Also, this is a part of France well-peppered with celebrated restaurants. For instance, a two-hour drive from Paris can take you to dining in extraordinary style at hotel-restaurants such as La Cte Saint Jacques in Joigny (where Chef Michel Lorain creates such ethereal dishes as a jellied terrine of oysters with vegetables and shallots simmered in red wine and tiny baked chocolate mousses with a thin, sugary crust) or, at l'Esprance in Saint-Pre-sous-Vzelay, Chef Marc Meneau serves chunky cubes of polenta heated and skewered with foie gras, as well as single oysters bedded on an onion-cream sauce in their shells, topped with watercress leaves and glazed with gelatin.

COURONNE AUX POIRES AVEC CASSIS
(Crown of Pears with Cassis)

1½ quarts vanilla ice cream (homemade preferred)
9-inch pastry crust
Aluminum foil (for pre-baking crust)
3 cups dried beans, rice or lentils (for pre-baking crust)
Poached pears:
5 cups sugar
1 quart dry white wine or water
1 vanilla bean, slit open
6 Bosc pears
Assembly:
Apricot preserves
Sliced almonds, toasted and chopped
Creme de Cassis

Crust: Preheat oven to 450 degrees and adjust oven rack to middle level.

On lightly floured surface, roll dough into 10-inch circle. Fit into 8-inch springform pan, overlapping and bringing dough up sides of pan. Line dough with sheet of aluminum foil and fill center with dried beans, rice or lentils. (This is to weigh down dough as it pre-bakes.) Bake crust 10 minutes; remove dried beans and aluminum foil. Perforate crust with tines of a fork, piercing crust sides and bottom. Return crust to oven and bake another 4-6 minutes or until crust is lightly browned. Remove crust from oven and let cool.

Poached pears: Make sugar syrup: Boil wine or water with sugar until all sugar is dissolved; continue to boil 10 minutes. Set aside. Slit vanilla bean, open it and place vanilla bean in hot sugar syrup.

Meanwhile, peel pears, leaving stems. At base of each pear, cut a small core about ½-inch into the fruit. Place pears, stem-up, in Dutch oven and surround with sugar syrup. Over medium-high heat, bring liquid to boil, then cover pan and let pears simmer 15 minutes or until early stages of tender (a knife easily pierces the fruit). Remove from heat and let cool. This can be done the day before serving dessert.

Assembly: Leaving baked crust in springform pan, fill crust three-quarters of the way up with ice cream. Freeze. (This can be done up to a week in advance.)

Release filled crust from springform mold. Brush sides of crust with apricot preserves slightly thinned with water. Holding the frozen dessert in one hand, press toasted, chopped almonds to side of vertical crust. Some nuts will hold; others will fall off. Cover all crust in this way. (This can be prepared up to a day in advance to this point, then covered and frozen.)

When ready to serve, remove prepared dessert from freezer. Use long knife or spatula to release the base of springform mold. Place dessert on serving platter. Remove poached pears from sugar syrup, dry them with paper toweling and arrange on top of ice cream.

Present dessert with accompanying Creme de Cassis, to be poured over pears at the table.

Notes: To thicken Creme de Cassis, place the bottle in the freezer.

Instead of making the crust, use 1 refrigerated pre-made crust.

Buy a fine-quality ice cream.

This hors d'oeuvre tastes and smells as wonderful as it looks. It is basically a cream-puff paste (pte chou) with cheese and seasoning added. It can be made into individual little rounds or into a large fluffy crown. Gougere (pronounced goo-jere) is the perfect accompaniment for wine tasting or it can be offered as an appetizer with a chilled kir.

GOUGERE
(Cream puff with cheese)

¾ cup warm milk
¾ cup warm water
8 tablespoons (¼ pound) unsalted butter
1½ cups unbleached flour
Salt
Cayenne pepper
Freshly ground white pepper
Freshly grated nutmeg
6 large eggs
1½ cups plus 2 tablespoons Swiss cheese, cut into ¼-inch dice
1 tablespoon French Dijon mustard (optional)
1 tablespoon milk

To make cheesy cream puff paste: Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Bring milk and water to boil; add butter. Remove from heat and stir in flour, salt, cayenne, pepper and nutmeg all at once. Stir vigorously with a big wooden spoon.

After a few minutes, the mixture should come away from sides of pan and form a ball. Add eggs 1 by 1, beating with spoon after each addition.

Pour in 1½ cups of diced cheese and mustard, if desired. Mixture will be shiny and smooth. Taste for seasoning; mixture is best when highly seasoned.

To bake: Butter large, heavy cookie sheet and, using a tablespoon, pile cream puff paste in any of following forms: in individual rounds, by spooning generous tablespoons of paste on cookie sheet, leaving about 1½ inches of space around each little gougre OR spoon out in shape of 9-inch-wide crown with 2-inch hole in center OR fill buttered muffin tins with 2 tablespoons of dough in each mold.

Bake crown 45 minutes, little puffs 20 minutes. Do not open oven door during baking. After baking, open door and leave Gougre in oven 5 minutes. It should then be firm to touch, though it will collapse a bit when out of the oven.

This is better served warm or lukewarm. Serve Gougre with a dry white wine, a strong ros or a hearty red wine.

This recipe is from La Toison d'Or, a restaurant/wine tasting bar in Dijon.

CASSOLETTE D'ESCARGOTS FORESTIERE

⅓ cup (1¾ ounces) thick bacon cut into ½-inch chunks
3 ounces fresh mushrooms
3 ounces wild mushrooms
4 dozen snails (from cans or frozen)
½ cup Meursault or Aligote white wine
2 tablespoons shallots, finely minced
1 tablespoon cream
1 to 1½ sticks butter
Salt, pepper
1 clove garlic, finely minced
¼ medium onion, finely minced

In saute pan, over medium-high heat cook bacon chunks. When they are slightly colored, add mushrooms. Let cook until mushrooms are soft and most of moisture has evaporated. Add snails and saute 2 minutes.

Meanwhile, reduce to half the white wine with minced shallots. Add cream and continue reduction until sauce is slightly thick. At that moment, whisk in butter. Season with salt, pepper, garlic and minced onion. Continue cooking a bit, then pour sauce over snail mixture, bring to boil, taste for seasonings and serve in individual casseroles.

Atlanta restaurants: Quality dining

By CAROL CUTLER
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

In a recent survey, 33 percent of the chief executive officers polled cited Atlanta, Ga., as the most desirable city in the country in which to relocate employees, making it the No. 1 choice.

Many considerations went into that selection: housing costs, schools, ease of travel, culture and, of course, food and restaurants.

Since company executives do a lot of restaurant entertaining, the quality of a city's eating establishments is, obviously, important.

The number of choice dining spots in Atlanta has grown impressively, and happily they are not all clustered together.

The increase in the costlier places has not wiped out the traditional, simple places that serve Southern cooking.

AS MIGHT be expected, one of the more impressive dining rooms is in the Ritz-Carlton.

Atlanta boasts two Ritz-Carltons, but the one in Buckhead, a northern outreach of the city, is the newer, and grander of the two. The newly refurbished Buckhead Dining Room also has been lucky in snagging the extremely talented Guenter Seeger as executive chef.

Seeger ruled over a Michelin two-star restaurant in his native Germany. His fame brought him to these shores and a celebrated stint in Washington, D.C., before being lured to Atlanta.

To launch the new restaurant after its face-lift, Jean-Louis Palladin came from Washington to cook with his friend for a few days.

Although Jean-Louis has long since returned to his restaurant in the Watergate hotel, Seeger continues to weave remarkable meals.

One cannot cite a particular dish to try. What's there one day is gone the next. Every day, following the dictates of what products are best, the chef composes a new dinner menu.

Lunches are more standard. Seeger offers a four-course menu that will generally offer an appetizer, fish dish, main course and dessert.

Seeger's lighter style of cooking might include smoked salmon and lobster salad with quail egg, crayfish in caviar sauce with spinach, duck breast with date puree in cumin sauce, shiitake terrine, lime mousse with blood orange sorbet, white and dark chocolate mousse in bittersweet chocolate.

The wine list is extensive, with many fine vintages to be enjoyed. Buckhead is in the new fashionable section of the city, and the style and flair of Seeger's cuisine are right at home there.

The Ritz-Carlton, Buckhead, 3434 Peachtree Road, (404) 237-2700. Dinner menu without wine, $44, with appropriate wines for each course, $65, plus tax and gratuities.

IF THERE is one place in Atlanta that attracts beautiful women, elegant clothes and the jet set, 103 West is it. The minute you walk into this fairyland of decoration, it vibrates. You know you're going to have a good time, even if the food doesn't count. But the food does count, and impressively so.

French-born Gerard Vullien rules the kitchen. With many years of training and cooking in France, he stamps the food with a definite Gallic flavor.

But do not think of his food in the traditional sense of haute cuisine. Crab meat is quickly sauteed, brushed with a white butter sauce and sparked with a basil and red pepper mayonnaise. His snails come expectedly well-garlicked, but they nestle under a dome of gold puff pastry.

One of the Vullien's most popular dishes is batter fried baby Maine lobster tails. The coating is very light, and not one bit greasy. The unexpected fillip, however, is the accompanying Chinese mustard with honey. The combination works wonderfully.

Free-range chicken pot-au-feu brings to mind a French bistro's hearty version: a whole steaming pot of poultry and vegetables. 103 West, however, serves a discreet portion, and a delicious one it is. All meats, poultry and fish are selected with excruciating care, and the payoff is on the palate.

103 West is part of a mini-empire of restaurants owned by Pano Karatassos and Paul Albrecht. Though of different styles, they all enjoy great popularity: Pano's and Paul, The Fish Market and Capriccio.

103 West, 103 West Paces Ferry Road, N.W., (404) 233-5993. Dinner for two with wine, about $80, plus tax and gratuities. Dinner only.

MARY MAC'S not-so-subtle menu blurb doesn't sound much like Southern hospitality: "Mary Mac's is the place for good food — for fast service — for value given. Mary Mac's is NOT the place for a leisurely luncheon — for a business meeting — for customers who are not in a hurry."

Don't think of this as a brush-off, it's simply facing the fact that Mary Mac's serves almost 2,000 meals a day — and has been for more than 50 years!

People do not flock to this thoroughly undecorated place without good reason. In fact, there are many reasons. The food is good, old-fashioned Southern cooking, everything is super-fresh, right down to the yeasty Parker House rolls; and the prices remind you of the good old days.

Remember the days of baked chicken with dressing and gravy, plus vegetable, hot breads and beverage for $4? Yesterday's prices are today's at Mary Mac's.

Forget fancy, think hearty, think turnip and collard greens with cracklin' corn bread, black-eyed peas, deep-fried whole catfish (2), country ham and red-eye gravy, chicken pan pie, plain Jell-O (yep), and congealed fruit salad. As you may guess, the latter is Jell-O gussied up with fruit.

When ordering tea in this part of the world, remember to ask for it hot if that's the way you want it. Iced tea is standard. The menu changes daily but always includes six vegetables and two meats.

Mary Mac's Ltd., 228 Ponce de Leon, N.E., (404) 876-6604. Lunch 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., dinner 5 to 8 p.m.; Sunday 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Closed Saturday. Dinner for two with wine, about $20, plus tax and gratuities.

IF RESTAURANTS in Atlanta can stress freshness of produce, they can thank the Dekalb Farmers Market, which is open to one and all. There are no real farmers there, but one of the most staggering displays of fruits, vegetables, fish, meats, poultry, bakery products and packaged products in the country. The prices are enough to make visitors weep with envy.

One counter of greens displayed brilliantly fresh collard greens, kale, sorel, mustard greens, rocket, broccoli rabe. Try to match that.

Produce is rotated twice a day, with price markdowns, to keep the supply fresh. The enormous variety of fish attracts huge crowds who select at one counter, get a number, and pick up the dressed or filleted fish at another counter. The organization is staggering.

Robert Blazer opened his first market in 1977, and last September moved to this new and larger shed to accommodate the thousands of shoppers who come through every day.

If you're not a food junkie before walking into the New Dekalb Farmers Market, you will be by the time you leave.

New Dekalb Farmers Market, 3000 East Ponce de Leon. About a 15-minute drive from downtown Atlanta, at Dekalb, exit 31 off No. 285. Open Tuesday through Sunday, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Carve correctly

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Roast cornish game hens are relatively easy to make and very tasty.

The proper way to carve the hen, says Better Homes and Gardens, is to remove the stuffing from the body cavity. Using a long, sharp knife, split the roasted hen straight along the center of the breast bone, making right and left halves of the hen. If desired, use a small sharp and flexible knife to cut off the legs and wings. Then slice the meat on the breast halves.

Summer fruits — ripe, juicy, versatile, delicious!

By ANTONIA ALLEGRA
Copley News Service

Hot summer days. Kids running through sprinklers. Ice clinking along a glass interior. Little League games lasting into the long-shadow hours of the afternoon.

Eating outdoors and, for dessert, a big bowl of summer fruit.

This is the time of bounty when it comes to seasonal juicy fruits, fresh from leafy trees. Let's take a look at apricots, nectarines, peaches, pears and plums and offer hints on how to choose them, store them and recipes to enjoy cooking with them.

Apricots

Be sure to look for plump apricots with as much golden orange color as possible. Soft-ripe fruit has the best flavor, but, because it is difficult to handle, it must be used immediately.

"Cots" are an excellent source of vitamin A and a fair source of vitamin C. Counting calories? Three apricots have 50 calories. It's best to ripen apricots at room temperature, until they give to gentle pressure. To speed up the ripening process, group the fruit in a loosely closed paper bag and check the apricots daily. For ripe fruit, refrigerate it unwashed in a paper or plastic bag for up to two days.

Peaches

For fragrant, ripe peaches, choose fruits that are free from bruises and green color; then, once home, put peaches in a loosely closed paper bag and leave them at room temperature. Check daily for peaches that give to gentle palm pressure. Refrigerate ripe peaches, no matter which of the hundreds of varieties available to you at the market.

Peaches, which peak in abundance in August, are a healthy diet choice. They provide a variety of vitamins, including beta-carotene (pro-vitamin A) and vitamin C. Peaches are high in potassium and contain many other minerals. They are high in carbohydrates and, eaten with the skin on, peaches contain more dietary fiber than without the skin.

ALL OF this for a juicy sweet snack that is only 50 calories per medium fruit.

To retain beautiful peach color, or that of nectarines or pears, dip fruit into a mixture of 2 tablespoons lemon juice and ¼ cup water when using peach slices as garnish or cut fruit.

For every 10 peaches or nectarines you want frozen, mix 1 cup sugar and 1 tablespoon lemon juice thoroughly. Dip the whole fruit in boiling water 30 seconds. With slotted spoon, transfer to cold water. Halve and slip off skins. Toss in the arranged sugar mixture, then put at once into freezer-proof pint containers or plastic freezer bags. (Allow 6 peach halves per pint.) Cover or twist close and freeze. Yields 3 pints frozen fruit.

Nectarines

The nectarines you'll find in the produce department today have little resemblance to their original "cousins" that were eaten around 2,000 years ago. Today's fruit has a golden flesh and it is larger, redder, firmer fruit than centuries ago — it is neither a cross between a plum and a peach nor a peach sans fuzz.

Count on an abundant crop of nectarines through mid-September and be sure to choose nectarines that have an orange-yellow background color between the red areas. When nectarines are ripe, they yield to gentle pressure, but the are not as soft as ripe peaches.

Nectarines, which have 85 calories per each medium fruit, are an excellent source of viamin A.

Pears

Here is a juicy fruit that, although available year-round, is a favorite for the summer. Stumped by the shape? There are two different classes; those that have a typical pear shape are in the European category; those that are round with crunchy flesh are Asian pears.

LATE AUGUST will mark the arrival of fresh Bartlett pear season. Fresh pears are one of the few fruits that are best ripened off the tree. Because of this, pears in the marketplace may still be firm. Simply leave firm pears at room temperature a few days or until they yield to gentle pressure at the stem end. Also, ripe Bartletts will turn from green to yellow; red Bartletts will take on a bright red color.

To keep the flesh of cut pears from darkening immediately, brush or dip the cut fruit in lemon or lime juice to help delay darkening. This darkening is an enzymatic browning that in no way affects the flavor or useability of the fruit. Apples, bananas and other fruits have similar reactions.

A medium European pear contains about 100 calories and a boon for diabetics: they are rich in levulose sugar, which is more easily digested than glucose.

Plums

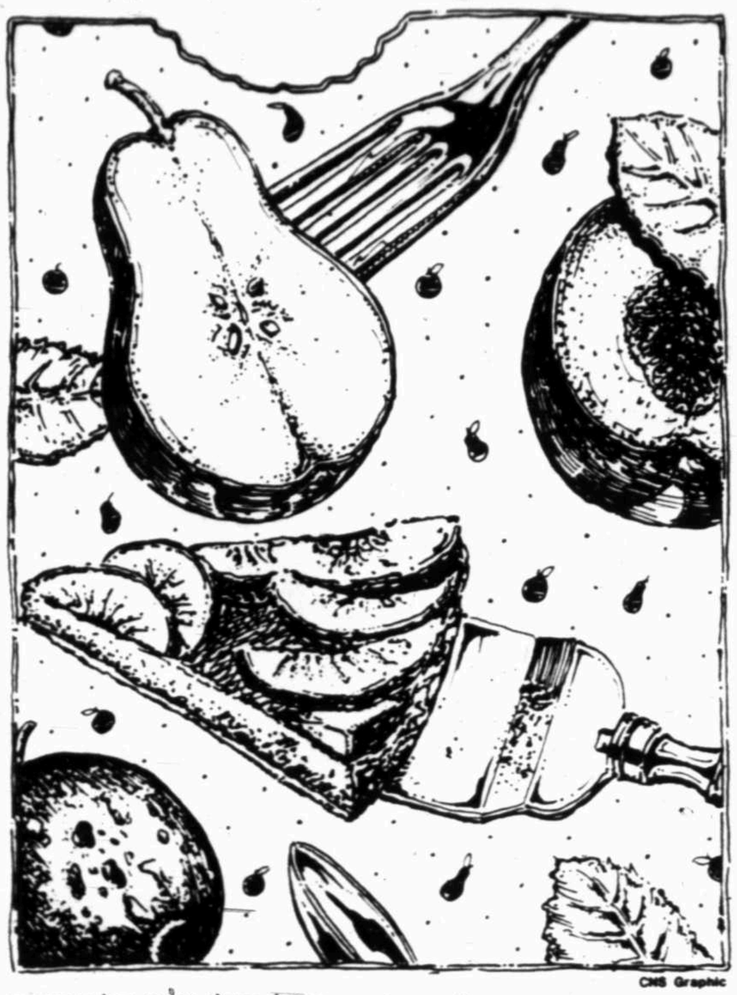

Plums can be green, red, golden, pink and even cream in color and the flavors can range from tart to extra sweet. Most of the varieties stem from Japanese roots, which produce the shiny-skinned little fruits. The European-style plums are less juicy, smaller and firmer than Japanese varieties. they are the plums that are sold as prunes when dried.

Plums are in abundance, with their peak time in August. When choosing plums, try to choose fruit that is full-colored for its variety and that is slightly soft at the tip end. It's best to ignore plums with broken or shriveled skin or brownish discoloration, and to speed ripening place a group of plums inside a loosely closed paper bag and leave at room temperature, checking plums daily.

AS FOR ripe fruit, keep it in the refrigerator, unwashed, in a plastic or paper bag up to three days.

Here's a variety of recipes featuring the flavorful bounty of summer's fruit bowl:

APRICOT SAUCE

1½ pounds firm-ripe or fully ripe apricots or plums
½ cup water
½ to 1 cup sugar

Cut apricots in halves or quarters, discard pits. In 2- to 3-quart pan, combine fruit and water. Bring to boil, then reduce heat, cover and simmer until fruit begins to soften (3 to 5 minutes). If needed, add more water to give sauce desired consistency. Stir in sugar, adjusting to taste. Continue to simmer until fruit falls apart to make sauce (2 to 5 minutes). Serve warm or chilled. To store, cover and refrigerate up to 2 days.

Yields 3 or 4 servings.

OLD-FASHIONED NECTARINE PIE

6 large, fresh nectarines
½ cup flour
½ cup sugar
½ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon lemon zest
Unbaked pastry for double-crust 9-inch pie
¼ cup margarine

Slice nectarines to measure 1½ quarts. Combine flour, sugar, cinnamon, salt and lemon zest. Mix lightly with nectarines. Roll half the pastry and fit into 9-inch deep-dish pie plate. Heap nectarine mixture into shell, mounding up in center; dot with butter. Roll remaining pastry for top crust and place over fruit; crimp edges to seal well. Cut 4 slits in top of steam to escape. Bake in 400 degrees oven 45 minutes or until crust is brown and syrup boils with heavy bubbles that do not burst. Cool before cutting for best results.

Yields 8 servings.

This cheesecake is a version of a New York-style cheesecake gone California-style. It is lighter in texture and taste but has good creamy cheese flavor.

CALIFORNIA PEACH CHEESECAKE

1 4-ounce package zwieback
3 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
3 tablespoons butter, cut into chunks
2 lemons
4 eggs
⅔ cup sugar
3 8-ounce cartons part skim ricotta or low-fat cottage cheese
3 tablespoons flour
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
3 fresh peaches, sliced

Place zwieback, 3 tablespoons sugar and cinnamon in food processor. Process until crumbs are formed. Add butter; process until well mixed. Reserve 2 tablespoons crumb mixture. Press remaining crumb mixture firmly over bottom and halfway up sides of 8-inch springform pan. Bake in 325 degree oven 15 minutes. Cool on wire rack. Peel zest from 1 lemon; place in food processor. Squeeze juice from both lemons; reserve. Process lemon zest until finely chopped. Add eggs and cup sugar. Process until eggs are thick and lemon-colored, about 4 minutes. Add cheese, flour, 3 tablespoons reserved lemon juice and vanilla extract. Process until thick, about 3 minutes.

Pour cheese mixture over cooled crust. Sprinkle lightly with reserved crumb mixture. Bake 1 hour, 15 minutes or until knife inserted in center comes out clean. Turn off oven and leave oven door ajar. Allow cake to cool in oven 2 hours. Cool cake completely on wire rack before storing. Refrigerate, covered, at least 4 hours, no longer than 48 hours. To serve, remove springform pan sides. Arrange peach slices on top of cake.

Yields 10 servings.

PEACH BREAD PUDDING

6 slices day-old or stale bread
8 dates, chopped (about 2 ounces)
2 medium peaches, peeled and sliced (about 9 ounces)
2½ cups non-fat milk
3 eggs, beaten
4 tablespoons sugar
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
⅛ teaspoon ground nutmeg

Spray 1½-quart baking dish with non-stick cooking spray. Cut each bread slice into quarters. Layer half of bread pieces on bottom of baking dish. Top with remaining bread and fruits. In medium bowl, beat milk, eggs, sugar and spices with electric mixer; when well mixed, pour over bread. Let stand at room temperature about 1 hour. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Place baking dish in larger, deep baking dish; place on oven rack. Fill larger dish with hot water to depth of 1 inch. Bake about 50 to 60 minutes or until knife inserted in center comes out clean. Serve warm.

Yields 6 servings, 1 cup each, 220 calories and 4 grams fat each.

Recipe from "Eat Well, Be Well Cookbook," by Gail L. Becker, R.D. and Delia A. Hammock, M.S., R.D.

BAKED FRESH PEACHES

6 large peaches, cut in half, pits removed Juice of 1 lemon
1 cup crushed macaroons
2 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons butter, melted
1 egg yolk
2 tablespoons sweet Marsala, or more
Few slivered almonds

Butter baking dish large enough to hold 12 peach halves. Lay unpeeled peach halves cut side up in baking dish. Using melon baller, enlarge cavity in each peach.

Put scooped-out pieces of fruit in bowl with lemon juice. Add macaroons, sugar, butter and egg yolk. Crush with fork and mix to blend. Moisten with Marsala, enough to make a paste of the mixture.

Divide mixture among 12 peach halves. Sprinkle each half with a few almond slivers. Place in 375 degree oven and bake 25-30 minutes. Check for doneness after 20 minutes. Serve warm or cold, with or without heavy cream.

Yields 6 servings.

PEACH PLUM JAM

2 pounds ripe peaches
1½ pounds ripe plums
6 cups (2 pounds, 10 ounces) sugar
1 (1¾ ounce) box powdered fruit pectin

PREPARE FRUIT: Peel, pit and finely chop or grind peaches. Halve, pit and chop plums. (Do not peel plums.) Combine fruits and measure 5 cups of fruit mixture into 6- or 8-quart saucepan.

MAKE JAM: Measure sugar and set aside. Mix fruit pectin into fruit in saucepan. Place over high heat and stir until mixture comes to full boil. Immediately add all sugar and stir. Bring to full rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat and skim off foam with metal spoon. Ladle quickly into hot sterilized jars, filling to within ⅛-inch of tops. Wipe jar rims and threads. Cover with two-piece lids. Screw bands tightly. Invert jars 5 minutes, then turn upright. After 1 hour, check seals.

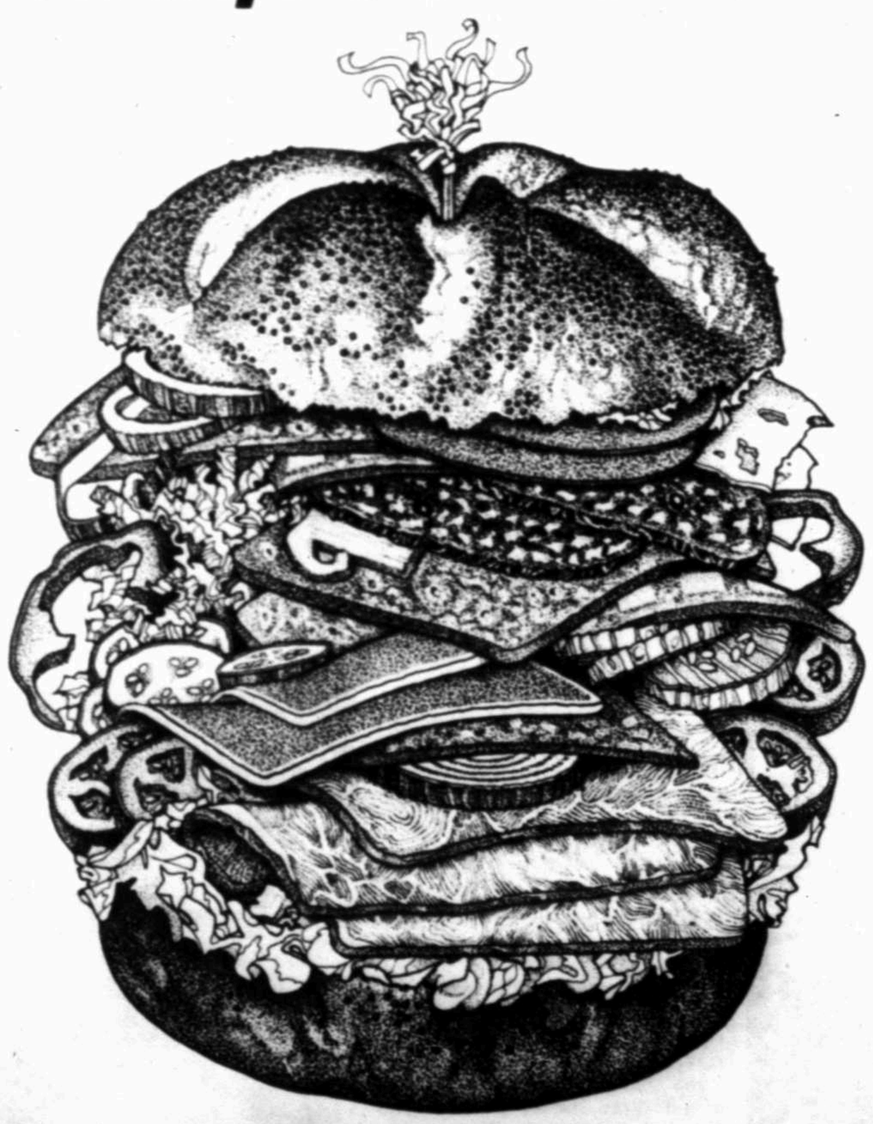

Yields about 10 (8 fluid ounces) jars.

BISCOTTI LATTE PARFAIT

1 quart coffee ice cream
1 package (8 ounces) almond biscotti (cookies)
4 medium peaches or nectarines, sliced
2 tablespoons sugar (optional)
3 tablespoons almond liqueur (optional)

Allow ice cream to soften slightly. Crush 4 ounces of biscotti (cookies) into small pieces. Toss peach or nectarine slices with sugar, then liqueur if desired. Layer crushed cookies, fruit slices and coffee ice cream in 4 to 6 parfait glasses. Freeze until serving time. Garnish with a biscotti and chocolate coffee beans, if desired.

Opening lead: Jack of ♡ Players hate to squander the trick-taking ability of a high card. Once in a while, however, it has a more important function to fulfill.

South's jump to game on his ratty suit was somewhat optimistic. However, he had no convenient invitational bid available, and he was afraid three spades would sound merely competitive. The auction made it obvious that the high cards would be well situated, so we feel he made the best of an awkward situation, and he justified his bidding in the play of what turned out to be an excellent contract.

The opening lead of the jack of hearts was ducked all around and West continued the suit for declarer to ruff. Since declarer did not wish to spend a high trump unnecessarily, it was important to lead the first round of spades from dummy. So declarer crossed to the table by overtaking the queen of clubs with the king.

A trump fetched the ace from East. That worthy continued with a third round of hearts, but declarer was ready. He ruffed with the king and boldly finessed the ten of trumps. When that held, it was a simple matter to draw the last trump, force out the ace of diamonds and claim his contract.

It was possible that East held a doubleton ace-jack of trumps, and that the finesse would fail. However, the odds were on declarer's side—East was more likely to have a bare ace of spades than specifically the ace-jack.

Selleck will be back in Magnum role

Selleck

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Even though Tom Selleck's character apparently died in last season's finale of "Magnum, P.I.," the actor is returning for an eighth TV season as the laid-back private eye.

"We keep saying to ourselves, we've got this little catch phrase, 'no showers, no dreams.' We haven't painted ourselves into a corner. I will say the story continues where it left off," he said Tuesday.

Selleck was referring to last year's shower scene in a "Dallas" season premier that allowed Patrick Duffy to come back after his character died with the explanation that "it was all a dream."

Last season's final episode of the Hawaii-based action series ended with Magnum, who had been shot, walking off into the heavens. Selleck would say only that Magnum had an "out of body" experience and was dying, not dead.

"You won't feel manipulated when you see it, I hope," he said.

Selleck said he agreed to another season for the rest of the cast and crew, but his one-year deal allows him to opt out mid-season. Therefore, there could be as few as 13 "Magnum" episodes this season, or as many as 22, he said.

Selleck said "Magnum" might return in TV movies.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — British actress Emily Lloyd, who plays a repressed, 1950s teen-ager in the movie "Wish You Were Here," says she's fallen in love with the United States and would rather be an American.

"I'm really unhappy in England," she said. "I wish I could go to high school here and be a true USA kid."

The 16-year-old actress, critically acclaimed in her first movie role, said in a recent interview that she fell in love with the United States while visiting San Francisco a year ago.

Reflecting on the status of teen-agers in England today, she said, "I think there's a lot more freedom than in the '50s, but I think people's attitudes are bad. If the young speak up, they're completely put down."

Miss Lloyd returns to England in September to make another movie and hopes to return to the United States in December.

Harper

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The producers of "Valerie" say they're "thrilled and delighted" to have actress Valerie Harper back following her salary dispute that caused her to miss an episode of the NBC sitcom.

Miss Harper and her husband, co-executive producer Tony Cacciotti, refused to report for work on Monday, July 27, in a demand for a higher salary, said a Lorimar-Telepictures spokeswoman.

Lorimar and NBC declined to meet her demand and the show was filmed without her. Lorimar also filed a lawsuit against her, seeking to prevent her from working elsewhere during the remaining four years of her six-year contract.

Lorimar spokeswoman Barbara Brogliatti said she could not comment on the settlement.

There was no comment on Miss Harper's present salary or how much she was asking, but Lorimar spokesman Barry Stagg, said she was "one of the highest-paid performers in television," suggesting a salary in excess of $100,000 a week.

"We are thrilled and delighted that Valerie and Tony are back," said David E. Salzman, president of Lorimar Television, in a statement. "We have resolved our differences and put this matter behind us."

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Ballet star Mikhail Baryshnikov, hobbled by an ankle injury, has canceled part of a tour across the South.

Baryshnikov was scheduled to dance here Thursday in a benefit for the Big Bend Hospice. The tickets, which sold for $50, $100 and $200 each, will be refunded, said benefit chairman Marcia Elder.

"He felt badly about it," she said. "He expressed his sincere regrets."

Baryshnikov hurt his ankle during a performance in Atlanta last week. He re-injured it at a Sunday night performance in Jacksonville, and his doctor ordered the dancer to stay off his feet for seven to 10 days, Elder said.

Baryshnikov, who dances with the American Ballet Theater, also had to cancel dates at Birmingham, Ala., and Pensacola, Elder said.

Mehta

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — New York Philharmonic conductor Zubin Mehta is applauding the huge Brazilian audiences that have turned out during the orchestra's tour of South America.

Mehta conducted the United States' oldest symphony orchestra in a packed performance Tuesday at Rio's municipal theater. On Sunday, the orchestra performed for 150,000 people in Sao Paulo, South America's largest city.

"The Brazilian public has been absolutely wonderful," Mehta told a news conference.

The orchestra performed in Brasilia, the capital, Sao Paulo, Belo Horizonte and Rio, before departing for Buenos Aires.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A blind woman who was bloodied and bruised by a crazed bus passenger will re-enact the experience in the fall premiere episode of the CBS police series "Houston Knights."

Millicent Collinsworth, an actress who lost her sight in an accident eight years ago, said she has appeared in several theater productions but never in a television show.

Ms. Collinsworth received wide attention after reporting in May that she was hit in the face on a bus during rush hour and no one offered to help her as she walked 15 blocks to her home with blood dripping down her face.

Ms. Collinsworth said she was hit accidentally by a man who suddenly "went berserk," flailing his arms and demanding to be let off the bus.

She re-enacts her part Wednesday in the episode, "Moving Violation," in which she gets off a bus and is knocked down by a man who is running down the street after committing a murder.

Later, when two policemen played by actors Michael Pare and Michael Beck investigate the incident, they discover that several witnesses saw the woman knocked down, but no one helped her. They search for her, believing she can identify the murderer.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Holy mackerel, Andy! Amos and Andy and Sapphire and the Kingfish won't be coming to Broadway.

U.S. District Court Judge Gerard Goettel ruled Tuesday that CBS still holds the rights to the characters from the "Amos 'n' Andy" show — and CBS has so far refused to give permission for a musical based on the old radio and TV series.

Angels rally past Pilots, still trail Diablos

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

It was a good news-bad news kind of day for the Midland Angels Tuesday in the Texas League.

First, the good news. The Angels defeated the Wichita Pilots by a 9-5 margin to record a 4-1 homestand mark against the first half West Division champions.

One would think at first glance that there couldn't be much bad news after results like that. But, that leaves us with the bad news.

Despite the 4-1 homestand, the Angels remain ½-game behind El Paso in the second half West race as the Diablos won a 4-3, 14-inning decision over San Antonio Tuesday to compete a five-game sweep of the Dodgers.

Midland came into its brief homestand with a ½-game lead over El Paso, but even the 4-1 record against the Pilots, the Angels ended up losing a game in the standings. Thus the bad news.

But for the Texas League baseball fan, the fun has just started. Midland will face El Paso the next five days in a key Sun City series and that has the Angels geared for a major war.

"That's kind of tough when you have a homestand like we've had and lose a game in the standings," said Angel shortstop John Hotchkiss after his two-run homer in the fifth inning broke open a wild 5-5 tie with the Pilots.

AND NOW Hotchkiss looks for a battle royal in El Paso.

"This series just might decide the winner in the second half," said Hotchkiss. "If one of the teams gets hot, they could really set the tone down the stretch. At the very least, it's going to decide a leader since we're playing five games."

Midland first baseman Stan Holmes, who took the club lead in homers when he hit his 25th of the season in the third inning, said, "The series with El Paso is pretty important. Ideally you would like to go out there and win them all, but realistically, you have to hope we get ready to play each game.

"It's a little different playing in El Paso. The fans really get into the game and that stadium really gets to rockin' when that announcer gets the fans all heated up. The ball carries really well out there and they have this high fence and a lot of balls bounce off the fence. They call it 'Wall Ball' out there."

Hotchkiss agreed, "The secret is for your pitching to shut them down, but that doesn't happen very often. Hopefully, we'll continue to score a lot of runs like we have lately. It's usually more like a basketball game than baseball in El Paso."

So, you might say the second half preliminaries are over. It's time for one of these two teams to take charge in head-to-head competition. Still, Midland has played strong enough to be in a position to challenge the Diablos, who have had the best of the schedule lately, playing Tulsa and San Antonio the last 10 games while Midland stayed close with first half champions Shreveport and Wichita.

THE ANGELS rallied from a 4-1 deficit Tuesday to beat the Pilots. Wichita scored four runs in the second inning to erase Midland's 1-0 first inning lead.

Midland's Jim Thomas, who had four hits, singled in the first and later scored on a single by Doug Jennings. Wichita's four runs came off Midland starter Steve McGuire, who survived the onslaught to record his third win in five decisions.

Roberto Alomar's two-run triple started the Pilot rally while Scott Rainey and Mike DeButch had run scoring singles.

Midland cut the lead to 4-2 when Edwin Marquez' grounder scored Joe Redfield from third in the second.

Wichita climbed to a 5-2 lead in the top of the third when Chris Knabenshue scored on a single by Jeff Yurtin, but Midland again cut the lead to 5-4 when Holmes connected with his homer, leaving him only five short of tying the franchise record of 30 by Kevin King in 1986. Holmes also tied Joe Redfield for the team lead in RBI with 88.

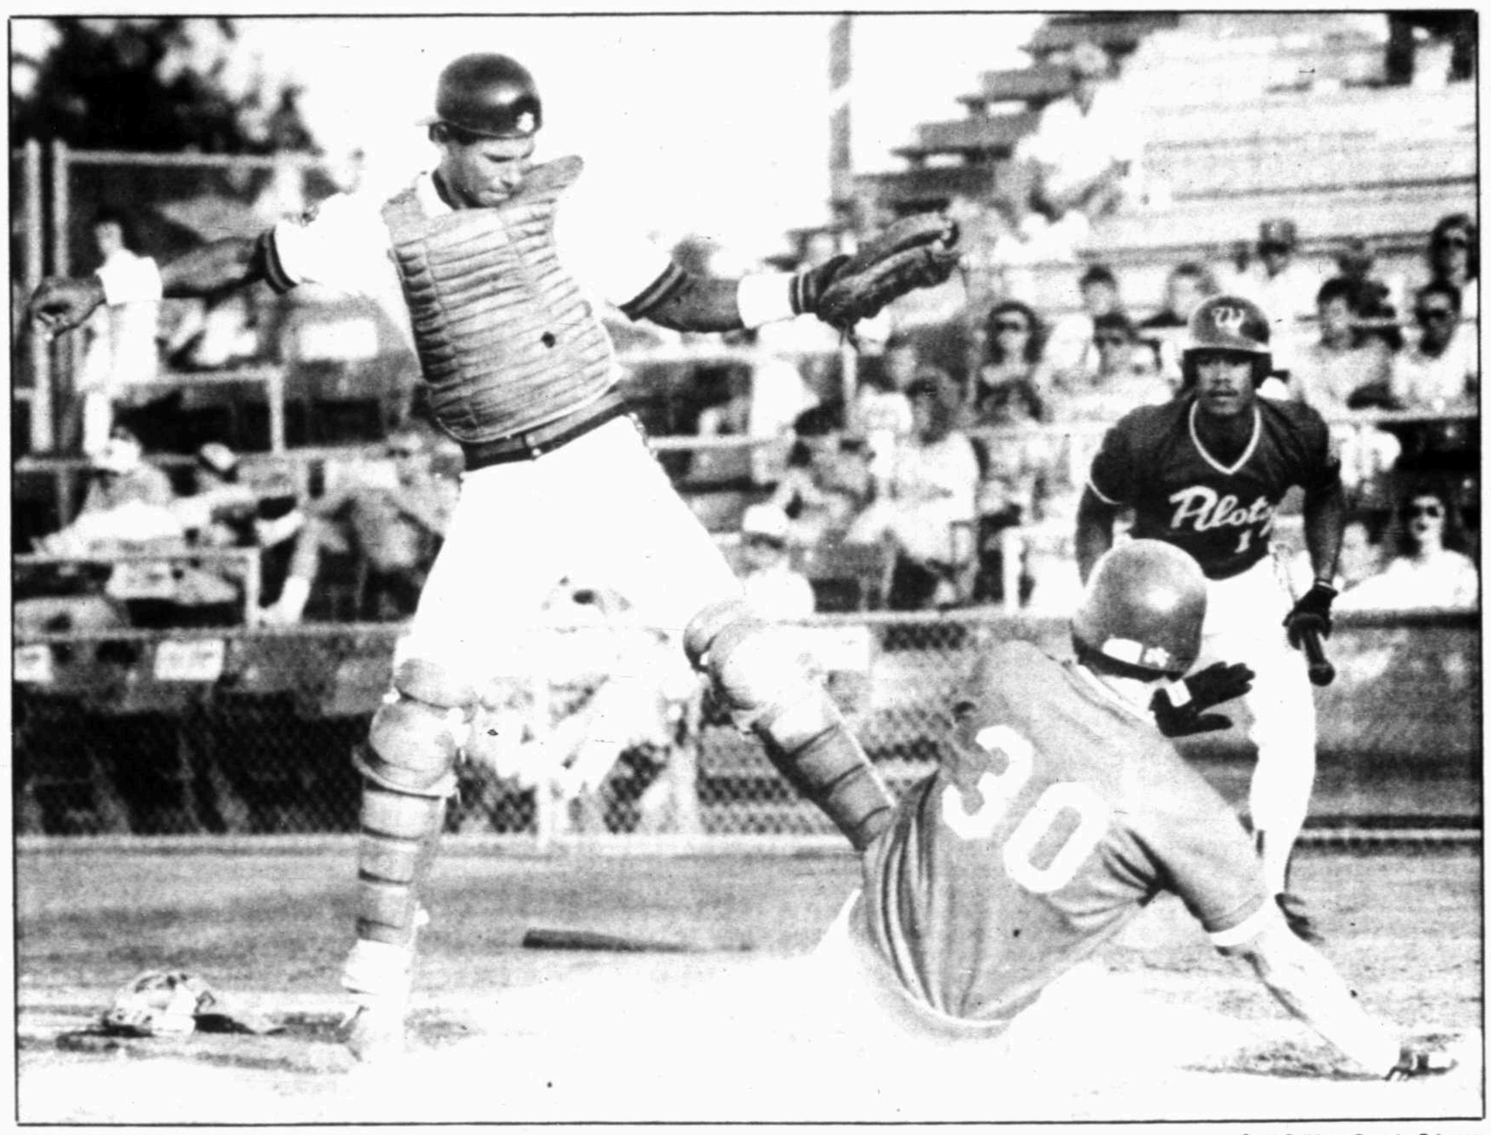

But the homer record doesn't seem to be on the mind of Holmes at this point in time.

"The homer thing is nothing," said Holmes. "The goal right now is to come out and win the second half title. Not much else matters."

Jenning's sacrifice fly scored Marquez to tie the game in the fourth and Hotchkiss' sixth homer of the year in the fifth gave Midland a 7-5 lead and the Angels never trailed again as Barry Dacus and Miguel Garcia finished off the Pilots with 3⅓-innings of scoreless relief.

The Angels got an insurance run in the sixth when Reggie Montgomery hit his fifth homer of the year and second in two days. The three homers accounted for five of the Angels' nine runs.

The Angels also had three homers Monday against Wichita. Maybe it's a rehearsal for the drama to come in El Paso.

Rohrer, Cowboys find way around 'nonsense'

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) Linebacker Jeff Rohrer, who missed five days of training camp and was fined $5,000, has a new two-year agreement with the Dallas Cowboys.

"I'm very happy and I just wish it hadn't come down to all the name-calling," Rober, the second leading tackler on the NFL team in 1986, said Tuesday.

The six-year veteran left camp last Thursday when he found out his $192,000 salary for his option year was less than the money made by Dallas' other starting linebackers, Eugene Lockhart and Mike Hegman.

He signed for $220,000 this year and $240,000 next year.

"We both have a deal we can live with," Rohrer said. "I wanted to be here and I wanted to play. I'm ready to hit somebody. We took the bull by the horns, cut out all the stuff, and did the deal."

With a scrimmage set for today against the San Diego Chargers, Rohrer said he was so pumped up he was "sleeping with my uniform on."

After Rohrer reported on Thursday, he was notified he was subject to the "Riggins rule."

It's a rule for players who report to camp and leave. A player who stays away from camp five days after he first reports is subject to being placed on a reserve roster where he can't go to any other team in the NFL.

Jeff Rohrer

"It was sort of a do or die situation tonight for me and the Cowboys," Rohrer said. "I wanted to play for the Cowboys. They could have waived me. I'm glad it worked out. We were mired down in a lot of nonsense."

Rohrer had a two-hour negotiation with vice president Joe Bailey of the Cowboys after talking to Coach Tom Landry.

"I owe Coach Landry a lot and I want to repay him someday," Rohrer said. "I'll have to pay the $5,000 fine but I' m willing to do that."

Bailey said "We're very pleased that Jeff is back and has agreed to a new contract. It's not our policy to announce the particulars of a package."

Bailey added "that just leaves first round pick Danny Noonan of Nebraska out now. I see the ice beginning to thaw a little. I hope something breaks in short order."

Rohrer's 1986 season was his best as right outside linebacker for the Cowboys.

"Jeff is a smart, steady player and could have his best season. He has some catching up to do but he can do it," Landry said.

Rohrer, who went to Yale, did his own negotiating.

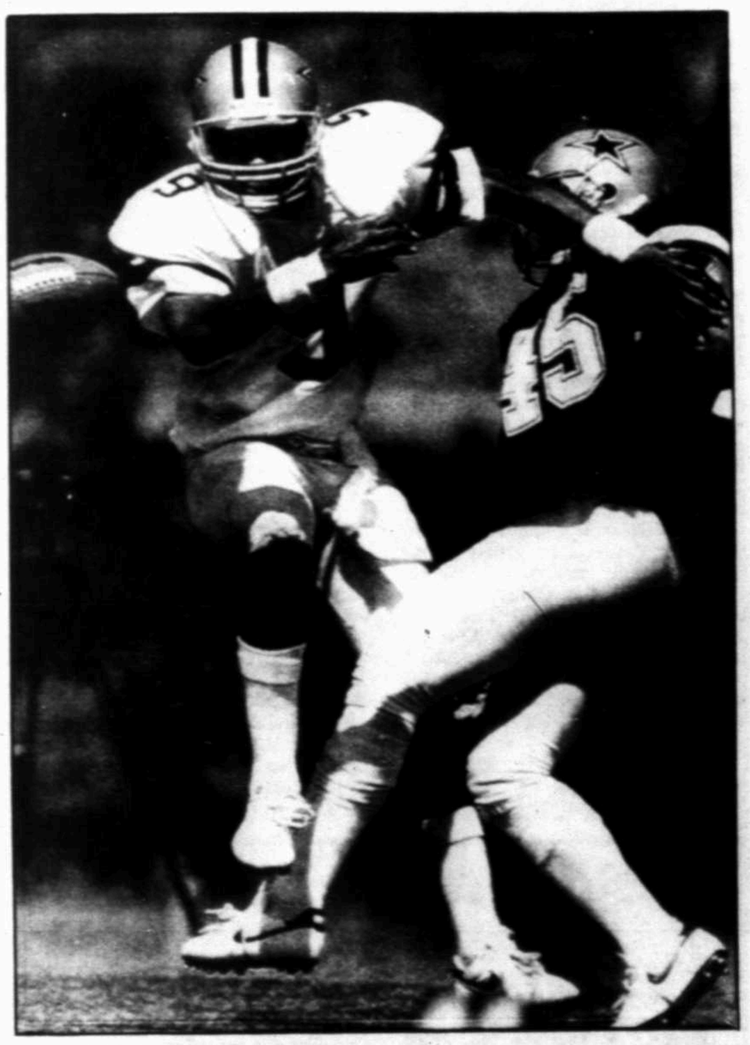

"I just wish it hadn't come to all this miscommunication," Rohrer said. "It's over now and it will be awhile before I have to do it again."

He is something of a free spirit.

Last year he bet he could wear an earring for a month without Landry saying anything.

Landry never said a word about the earring and Rohrer won the bet.

Rohrer's 111 tackles were second to 121 by Lockhart. Rohrer also had two quarterback traps, forced four fumbles, and recovered one.

Cosbie to play bigger role for Dallas in '87

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — They call Doug Cosbie the forgotten Cowboy.

Once a prime weapon in the Dallas Cowboys' offensive arsenal, Cosbie was relegated to little more than a blocking role from his tight end position in 1986.

Cosbie caught only 28 passes for 312 yards and just one touchdown last year. In 1985, Cosbie caught 64 passes for 793 yards and six touchdowns, and in 1984, he had 60 receptions for 789 yards and four touchdowns.

"It's been different and a little frustrating, I can tell you that," Cosbie said.

Coach Tom Landry promised things will be different in 1987.

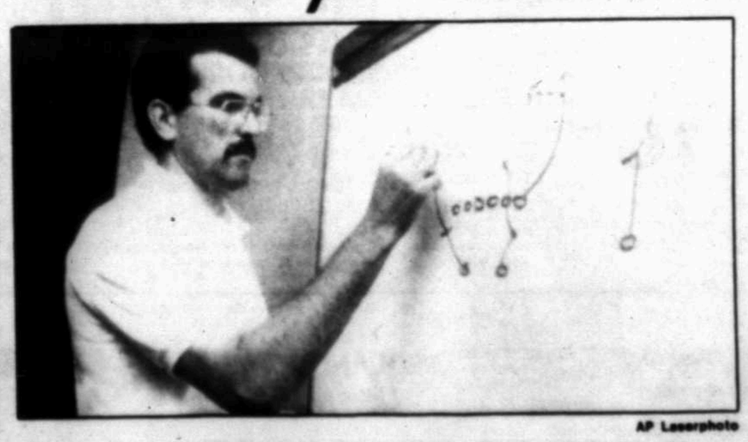

"We'll use Cosbie a lot more this year than we did last year," Landry said. "He's an excellent pass catcher who has already proven what he can do."

Cosbie, a third-round draft pick out of Santa Clara in 1979, said, "The indication I get is that I will be more involved in the passing game."

He admitted, though, "We've put some plays for me back in the playbook but I'm afraid my 50-catch seasons are gone. There just aren't that many plays for the tight end because

Jones says Oilers not planning run-and-shoot attack

AP Laserphoto

Houston quarterback coach June Jones diagrams a play.

SAN ANGELO (AP) — June Jones, a master of the run-and-shoot offense, is quick to point out that he wasn't hired by the Houston Oilers to install his specialty.

"We're not by any means running the run-and-shoot, we're just building on the concepts that were started last year," said Jones, starting his first season with the Oilers.

Jones played a key role in the offense of the USFL Houston Gamblers, who made the pass-oriented run-and-shoot famous.

The Oilers opened up their offense over the last half of the season and finished 4-3 with an offense featuring quarterback Warren Moon and 1,000-yard receivers Drew Hill and Ernest Givins.

Then in the off-season, Coach Jerry Glanville hired Jones as the quarterback coach, leading to assumptions that the run-and-shoot would once again light up the Astrodome scoreboard.

The Oilers want to do more scoring in 1987 but not with a purebred run-and-shoot.

"Jerry has some definite thoughts on what he wants to get done offensively and that is to feature the players that we have," Jones said.

"We have a lot of skilled wideouts and we'd like to be able to get the ball to them in different situations."

The Oilers added to their offensive weaponry in the NFL draft by selecting wide receiver Haywood Jeffires and Miami running back Alonzo Highsmith with their two first-round picks.

Highsmith, 6-1 and 235, will be counted on to add punch to the Oiler running game, something Jones doesn't want overlooked.

"We also have to have the ability to hammer it up in there when we need to and hopefully, we'll be able to with better efficiency," Jones said.

The Oilers finished the 1986 season ranked 16th in total offense. They had the 19th best rushing attack and rated 13th in passing.

But the Oilers scored only 274 points for the season, 22nd among the 28 NFL teams.

"We're trying to make ourselves an Oiler offense," Jones said. "We're building on what was done last year

UT cornerback ineligible, being reviewed by NCAA

AUSTIN (AP) — University of Texas defensive back James Lott, a likely Longhorn starter, has been declared ineligible pending a review of his case by the NCAA.

UT Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds said Tuesday that Lott had accepted a cash loan from sports agent Lloyd Bloom.

In a letter to the National Collegiate Athletic Association, Dodds said Lott admitted signing a promissory note for an $800 loan from Bloom. The letter asked that the NCAA review the case to determine whether there was a violation of its rules.

"James' situation is different from those of other players who have been publicly tied to those agents," Dodds said. "As best we can determine, he did not sign a contract or negotiate a contract."

Bloom and partner Norby Walters are being investigated by a Chicago grand jury that has been looking into their dealings with more than 60 college athletes.

Lott, of Refugio, was projected as a starter for the 1987 Longhorns at cornerback. Although he was redshirted last year in football, the 6-foot, 184-pound senior competed in track and field, where he is considered a world class athlete. He is a two-time NCAA indoor high jump champion and won the NCAA's outdoor high jump in 1986.

Bill Little, UT sports information director, said the loan was made last September. Dodds' letter to the NCAA said Lott accepted the loan from Bloom while the agent was in Austin to talk with another Texas player.

"Bloom loaned him $800 and Lott signed a promissory note on the loan," Dodds said.

Lott has one year of eligiblity remaining in both football and track. Dodds said that while the school's decision Tuesday applies to football, it would be extended to track if a rules violation is verified.

Dodds said he hopes to have the question resolved quickly. Texas is scheduled to open its season Sept. 5 at Auburn.

"At this point we've got to plan on going without him," said Longhorns Coach David McWilliams. Redshirt freshman Stanley Richard, sophomore Waymond Wesley or senior free safety John Hagy probably will play at Lott's cornerback position. "When you lose that kind of experience and techniques and all, it certainly hurts."

The Atlanta Constitution, in a copyright story last week, had reported that Lott would be declared ineligible.

The Austin American-Statesman, in a story published Tuesday, quoted Lott as saying he did nothing wrong. Lott also reiterated his claim that he has had only phone conversations with Bloom and Walters.

"I knew they were writing a letter to the NCAA asking for (clarification)," Lott told the newspaper Monday. "Did I accept a loan? No, man. Did I sign a note? No."

Lott told the newspaper Monday he would be in Austin Tuesday, but never showed up.

Astros nip Giants, move into second

HOUSTON (AP) — An exciting three-team race for the National League Western Division title League intensified as the Astros moved into second placee, just 3½ games behind the Cinncinnati Reds.

The Astros moved ahead of San Francisco with a 5-4 victory Tuesday, edging the Giants by one-half game.

The Astros got ten hits and took advantage of three Giants fielding mistakes and a wild pitch to secure the victory.

"We scored runs when we had to and got the key base hits when we needed them," said Astros Manager Hal Lanier.

"We need to get a good run of wins going," said Astros relief pitcher Dave Smith, who pitched one inning and picked up his 19th save of the year. "This is a big win because it gives us a chance to sweep the series."

The Giants took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on the 13th home run of the year by third baseman Kevin Mitchell and singles by Jeffrey Leonard and Will Clark.

The Astros improve their record to 53-53 while the Giants fall to 53-54.

Angels give Sutton easy win over Carlton

Associated Press

The California Angels' hitters stole the show in the fourth meeting of 300-game winners in this century.

They hammered out a season-high 19 hits, including home runs by Doug DeCinces and Wally Joyner, spoiling Steve Carlton's debut with Minnesota and pounding the Twins 12-3 Tuesday night.

"I don't know how hard he threw. We didn't have a gun on him," Minnesota Manager Tom Kelly said of Carlton, who was acquired last Friday from Cleveland and was battered for 11 hits and nine runs in 4 2-3 innings. "But I thought he threw pretty well."

The Angels loved the way Carlton threw. Bill Buckner had RBI singles in the first and third innings and DeCinces led off the third with his first homer since July 7. Gary Pettis capped the Angels' three-run third with a run-scoring double, his first RBI since the All-Star break.

The Angels chased Carlton during a five-run fifth, capped by DeCinces' two-run single off Roy Smith. They made it 10-3 in the sixth on Pettis' RBI single and continued their assault in the seventh on Wally Joyner's two-run homer, his 23rd. Joyner hit 22 last season.

The setback cut Minnesota's lead in the American League West to one game over Oakland, a 9-3 winner over Seattle, and 1½ over California.

Don Sutton allowed four hits over six innings, including Steve Lombardozzi's three-run homer in the fourth, for his 318th career victory, tying Phil Niekro for 11th place on the all-time list.

"All I had to do was not screw up and get off the field to let our guys hit," said Sutton, who won his third straight decision, but still has an 8-9 record. "Obviously it'd be nicer if I'd never have been 5-9. But I figure to have 10 more starts, and if the team wins all 10 and I finish 8-9 it'd be fine with me. At this stage of the season there's one of two things I like to do — win, or at least not cause us to lose."

Red Sox 8, Rangers 6

Several years ago, before they built the billboard above the bleachers, the wind made Arlington Stadium a hitter's graveyard.

Now the place has been called a jetstream and the hitters can't wait to get here. And it's the pitchers who are getting buried.

"I've always enjoyed playing in this park," Boston first baseman Dwight Evans said Tuesday night. "If you hit the ball hard here, it's got a chance to go out."

American League

Evans hit a couple of them hard Tuesday night — and both went deep into the seats. One came with two runners on and the other with one aboard. The latter came in the ninth to lift the Red Sox from a 6-5 deficit to a 7-6 lead and they went on to beat the Texas Rangers 8-6.

Evans had also homered in Monday night's 11-2 win over the Rangers and had two on Sunday at Kansas City, giving him five in the last three games and 25 for the season.

Athletics 9, Mariners 3

Jose Canseco and Terry Steinbach hit two-run singles in a five-run fifth-inning rally aided by Seattle's sloppy fielding. Winner Steve Ontiveros gave up three runs in seven innings to snap his four-game losing streak.

Seattle's Gary Matthews got his 2,000th career hit, a single in the third.

Loser Lee Guetterman retired the first 10 Oakland batters but fell behind 2-0 in the fourth after Carney Lansford beat out a bunt that extended his hitting streak to 13 games.

Indians 15, Yankees 3

Pat Tabler drove in four runs and Ken Schrom pitched a six-hitter over seven innings for his first victory since May 24. The Indians scored five times in the third and fifth innings in piling up their highest run total of the season.

Loser Tommy John gave up seven runs, five of them earned, on six hits and three walks in 2⅓ innings. The Indians took a 2-0 lead in the second inning on a two-out error by Yankee left fielder Dan Pasqua, who dropped Jay Bell's fly ball with runners on first and second and two out.

Blue Jays 4, White Sox 1

Rookie Fred McGriff had two tape-measure home runs and John Cerutti held Chicago to six hits and an unearned run in 7 2-3 innings. Despite an 18-mph wind blowing in, McGriff led off the fourth inning with a home run into the upper deck in right field at Comiskey Park.

In the sixth, his 15th home run hit high against the back wall of the center-field bullpen, a drive of some 450 feet. Both homers came off Neil Allen, winless since July 20, 1986.

Royals 8, Tigers 4

Kansas City used home runs by Lonnie Smith and Steve Balboni, plus a five-run fifth inning, and Danny Jackson broke a personal three-game losing streak with a seven-hitter as the Royals beat Detroit for the sixth time in seven meetings this season. Dan Petry, whose record dropped to 0-7 against the Royals in Tiger Stadium, gave up nine hits and seven runs in 4 1-3 innings.

The Royals tied the game 2-2 on Smith's third-inning homer and went ahead 3-2 on Balboni's homer in the fourth. They made it 8-2 in the fifth, including consecutive singles by Smith, George Brett, Danny Tartabull and Bo Jackson.

Jackson, 5-13, returned after a three-game suspension for his role in a July 8 brawl in Cleveland.

Brewers 9, Orioles 8

Pinch hitter B.J. Surhoff singled with the bases loaded and one out in the 12th inning to break a tie. Glenn Braggs and Rob Deer singled off Mark Williamson to begin the 12th. Greg Brock sacrificed and Williamson intentionally walked pinch hitter Ernest Riles to load the bases. Surhoff then slapped a pitch on the ground to right field to end the game.

The Orioles tied the game in the top of the ninth when Ray Knight hit a three-run homer off Brewers relief ace Dan Plesac.

Raines sparks Montreal rally

Associated Press

It was do or die time for Tim Raines and the Montreal Expos, and both came out alive and kicking against the St. Louis Cardinals.

Raines singled to spark a four-run fifth inning and hit a two-run homer in the sixth as Montreal rallied from a five-run deficit to beat St. Louis 10-5 at Olympic Stadium Tuesday night.

The loss reduced the Cardinals' lead to 5½ games over second-place New York in the National League East. The Expos are third, six games back.

"It was a very important game for us because we would have been eight games out if we lost," Raines said. "And it would have left us with no chance to win this series, which we felt we had to."

The Montreal bullpen turned in an excellent performance with Bob McClure, 5-1, pitching three innings of one-hit ball and Jeff Parrett tossing four perfect innings for his fourth save.

"The key thing is for your bullpen to shut down the other team and give you a chance. That's what happened tonight. Our relievers were great," Raines said.

The Expos, who snapped a three-game losing streak, were trailing 5-2 when Raines opened the fifth with a single. Mitch Webster and Hubie Brooks walked to load the bases and Tim Wallach drove in Raines with an infield out.

Andres Galarraga singled in Webster and Vance Law drove home Brooks with a base hit off starter Lee Tunnell, 4-3. Galarraga also scored on the play as third baseman Terry Pendleton made a wild throw trying to get Law going into second.

The Expos added three runs in the sixth, two on Raines' 11th home run and one on Law's sacrifice fly.

Mets 5, Phillies 3

Dwight Gooden pitched six-hit ball for eight innings and struck out a season-high 11 as New York defeated visiting Philadelphia for the ninth time in 11 games this season.

It was the Mets' seventh victory in their last eight games and the Phillies' fourth straight loss. Gooden, 9-3, walked three and the strikeouts marked the 33rd time he has been in double figures in his career, but only the second time in 13 starts this year.

Cubs 3, Pirates 2

Andre Dawson hit his 32nd home run of the season in the 11th inning to lift Chicago over host Pittsburgh. It was only the third victory in 11 games for the Cubs against the last-place Pirates.

Dawson's homer equaled his career high set in 1983 with Montreal. Leading off the 11th, he hit an 0-1 pitch from reliever Brett Gideon, 1-2, deep into the lower right-field seats.

Reds 10, Dodgers 4

Bo Diaz continued his hot hitting against Los Angeles, driving in four runs with a pair of homers to pace Cininnati.

Diaz hit a solo homer in the second inning off Tim Leary and a three-run homer in the fifth off Rick Honeycutt to help left-hander Guy Hoffman, 8-6, secure his first victory since July 3.

Braves 12, Padres 7

Ken Oberkfell drove in four runs and Dale Murphy added a three-run homer, leading host Atlanta over San Diego despite seven runs batted in by John Kruk.

Kruk had three-run homers in the first and ninth innings and a run-scoring single in the fifth.

Oberkfell's second home run of the season and Ozzie Virgil's triple to right center keyed a five-run Atlanta second inning off Padres' starter Eric Show, 5-12.

John McEnroe celebrates his victory over Jonathan Canter Tuesday.

Holmes eliminates No. 2 Connors in first round upset

STRATTON MOUNTAIN, Vt. (AP) — Jimmy Connors didn't blame the wind, his equipment, or much of anything else for his first-round loss at the Volvo International tennis tounament.

"I didn't do one thing out there to do anybody any good, let alone myself," the tournament's No. 2 seed said after losing 7-5, 7-5 to Greg Holmes on Tuesday.

The other top three seeds — Ivan Lendl, Pat Cash and John McEnroe — all advanced to today's second round.

Lendl, the No. 1 seed, plays Jim Pugh today after defeating Marc Flur 6-4, 6-3. McEnroe, seeded fourth, plays Peter Lundgren following a 6-3, 6-2 victory over Jonathan Canter.

Cash, seeded third, will play the winner of a match between Andre Agassi and Luke Jensen. The match was postponed Tuesday with each player taking one set.

Cash lost a first-set tiebreaker but rebounded to beat Kelly Evernden, 6-7, 6-2, 6-4.

CONNORS AND Holmes, the 1983 NCAA champion, each held serve in the second set until the 12th and last game. Holmes went up three points with Connors serving.

Connors survived one match point with a shot out of Holmes' reach. Holmes hit the next two shots into the net, allowing Connors to survive two more match points.

Holmes took the advantage when Connors hit the next shot into the net. He tried to recover with an overhand stroke, but hit the shot long and lost the match.

Connors, who turns 35 in a month, blamed his loss on the difficulty adjusting to the 1,900-foot altitude, and to just being "flat."

"What I did was just try to keep the ball in play, to try to get a little feel ... zip on my shots, but also to try to get to a point where I would feel I was in there," Connors said. "I just didn't feel I was in the meat of the match at all."

Holmes, who lives in Salt Lake City, said he may have had an advantage because he is used to higher altitudes.

"It's about the same as here, and I was there before I came here," he said.

McENROE BROKE serve once in the first set and twice in the second to handily defeat Canter.

"I did what I had to do," said the tournament's No. 4 seed, who won the 1985 Volvo and caused a stir at Stratton last year, where he made his return to tennis after an eight-month sabbatical, his marriage to actress Tatum O'Neal and the birth of their first child.

The family will join McEnroe later in the week. The couple is expecting a second child the week of the U.S. Open.

Tuinei unsure how he ended up on hot spot

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Mark Tuinei isn't certain how he got put on the hot spot.

"I think I kind of sifted into left tackle," is the way he puts it.

A former defensive player, Tuinei is now starting at the toughest position in the offensive line for the Dallas Cowboys.

"They put all the fast defensive ends on the right side so the left tackle really catches it," said Tuinei, a 6-foot-5, 283-pounder from Hawaii.

Tuinei, a free agent, was signed for his defensive talents five years ago.

"I never really liked offense," Tuinei said. "Defense is my first love. I don't have a lot of experience on offense — just about a year and a half's worth."

The Cowboys have been openly trying to trade for a left tackle during summer camp while working with Tuinei.

"We need to strengthen the tackle position," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "Tuinei shows a lot of potential. He didn't reach it last year.

"But he's an athlete. He's got quick feet, he can move and he's bigger than you think he is. Hopefully, line Coach Jim Erkenbeck can make something out of him."

Erkenbeck has been working hard with Tuinei.

"Mark shows some ability and he tries hard," Erkenbeck said. "That's all you can ask."

Tuinei said Erkenbeck "is a different breed of coach. He is definitely straight with you. There is no bull about him.

"He has an attack philosophy. And he expects you to be aggressive."

Tuinei said one reason left tackle is so important is that "it's on the blind side of the quarterback. If you let one of those speed defensive ends get through it's tough on the quarterback."

He is aware of the trade talk.

"If they are going to trade for somebody they better get it done soon because I will have a big advantage over whoever they bring in," Tuinei said. "The trade talk doesn't bother me.

Three MHS grads to play soccer at CSW

From Staff Reports

Billy Wayne Doan and David Hitchcock, 1987 Midland High grads, will attend College of the Southwest in Hobbs, N.M., on soccer scholarships while Tim Madonna, a 1986 grad of MHS, returns to CSW for his second season with the NAIA Mustangs.

Doan played in high school under Coach Paul Brietzman, who coached for CSW last year. Hitchcock also played under Breitzman at MHS and also played basketball at MHS. Both plan to enter the business curriculum at CSW.

The team begins practice Aug. 11 and plays its first game in Albuquerque on Sept. 4.

U.S. investigating Panamanian leader

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department is investigating Panama's military leader on suspicion of involvement in money laundering and other drug-related crimes, according to a federal law enforcement official with knowledge of the inquiry.

The official said a federal grand jury in Miami was overseeing the investigation, which he said had turned up "large amounts of evidence" to back up the allegations against the Panamanian leader, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega.

The grand jury's investigation, which was disclosed Tuesday in The Los Angeles Times, is focusing on charges that Noriega has been skimming off a portion of the proceeds from illicit drug shipments through Panama, the official said.

The investigation is expected to further strain relations between the United States and Noriega, who is, in effect, the leader of Panama. The general has blamed the United States for violent demonstrations in recent weeks by opponents of his regime.

The Panamanian Embassy in Washington had no comment Tuesday on the charges against Noriega. In the past, the general and his military colleagues have denied reports of wrongdoing.

The federal law enforcement official said the grand jury, working in conjunction with the Drug Enforcement Administration, was still far from deciding whether to start criminal procedures against the general.

There is insufficient evidence now to consider an indictment, the official said. He noted that even if indicted, Noriega would almost certainly refuse to be extradited and tried in the United States.

American intelligence agencies have gathered extensive evidence indicating that Noriega maintains tight control of drug and money-laundering activities by his associates in Panama's military.

Reagan administration officials say the United States has intelligence showing that in the early 1980s, Noriega held a major financial interest in an opium-processing plan that was discovered, according to a congressional committee, in operation along the Panamanian-Colombian border.

Officials said last year that there was also evidence tying Noriega and members of Panama's military to financial involvement in a small airline charter company that flies weekly money-laundering missions in and out of the United States.

The federal law enforcement official said the Miami grand jury was considering evidence that Noriega demanded as much as 1.5 percent of the proceeds from drug shipments through Panama, which is a major transshipment point for illicit drugs being transferred from Latin America to the United States.

The payoffs, the official said, would represent millions of dollars each year. According to the official, the payments are, in effect, protection money for the drug traffickers, who are permitted to go about their business without police interference.

The Panamanian government has been shaken in recent weeks by street violence after statements by a retired colonel that Noriega was involved in corruption.

In what he said was a fit of conscience, the colonel, Roberto Diaz Herrera, Noriega's former deputy, accused the general and others of political assassinations and election fraud.

Coast Guard returns Haitians to island

New York Times News Service

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Mothers, children and out-of-work men were among the 339 Haitians who sailed into the Port-au-Prince harbor Tuesday, courtesy of the U.S. Coast Guard.

The group was intercepted 350 miles southeast of Miami, their shrimp boat dead in the water and their dreams of escaping poverty dashed. It was the largest group of Haitians picked up on a single craft this year, U.S. Coast Guard officials said.

After unloading at the capital's pier, the group stood around waiting to register with the Haitian Red Cross and pick up the $5 to help them get back home. Most were from the northern coast of Haiti, and said they heard about plans for the trip by word-of-mouth.

"Everybody was going in the boat, so I went too," said Louise Joseph, 27, who took her 5- and 6-year-old daughters with her. "I can't work here, I have two children, no food, no nothing."

But when the ship's engine quit, just past Inagua in The Bahamas, and the ship started rocking precariously with its overloaded cargo, Joseph said she got scared.

"I'm not going to try it again," she said. "I'll try to make it here."

Not so Jean Johnson. Johnson, 34, said he regularly makes the trip north to pick up money from his family in Fort Lauderdale and bring it back to Haiti.

"I like to travel," Johnson said.

He said he always does the trip the same way: illegally.

"Things are tough," he said, shrugging.

Johnson said the boat left on Friday afternoon from Cap Haitien on Haiti's northern coast and lost power on Saturday morning. He said there was no captain aboard and that he didn't pay anyone to make the trip.

Another passenger said she paid $300. Jocelyne Pierre, 43, said she left her two children behind so that she could try to make a living in the United States.

"I try to go find money and I could send it to my children," she said.

None of the passengers interviewed said they were worried about reprisals from the Haitian government, and the Haitian Red Cross official confirmed that they would have no problems. A U.S. embassy official said that American authorities have stopped interviewing passengers because they no longer are traveling to escape the dictatorship of Jean-Claude Duvalier.

The refuge they seek is economic.

Haiti, which shares the island of Hispaniola with the Dominican Republic, is the poorest nation in the Western Hemisphere. The average per capita income is about $350.

Nicaraguan minister skeptical of U.S. plan

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Nicaragua's foreign minister charged that President Reagan's plan to delay asking Congress for more Contra aid is a ploy to make it appear he is willing to make peace.

Miguel D'Escoto made the charge Tuesday night during a break in the meeting of five Central American foreign ministers. The officials are working on a proposed peace plan to be considered by the region's presidents this week.

"I think he (Reagan) is becoming more and more convinced that it's going to be difficult to obtain more funding for the Contras...He's trying to create the impression that he is not a warlike president, that he's open to peace. But he is a true bandolero, a man who operates totally outside the law," D'Escoto said.

In Washington Tuesday, an official said the Reagan administration had tentatively agreed to delay a request for more aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, or Contras, if Nicaragua's leftist government agreed to a cease-fire and democratic reforms.

The administration gave the leftist Sandinista government until Sept. 30 — the day the current $100 million U.S. allocation to the Contras expires — to take steps the United States is proposing. The administration had been expected to request more aid early next month.

Like the other foreign ministers, D'Escoto said news reports of the plan were the first he had heard of it.

"I don't know of any Reagan plan for anything, except for continuing to make war," he said. "I haven't received nor neither did I know that any plan was announced."

The Sandinistas, who came to power in 1979 with the overthrow of rightist dictator Anastasio Somoza, have been battling U.S.-financed rebels for more than five years.

Costa Rican Foreign Minister Rodrigo Madrigal said: "I would like to study (the Reagan plan) before offering any comment...I think the Congress will be very pleased with it. It will give them an excuse to vote in favor" of more Contra aid.

The administration plan would cut off aid to the rebels if the Sandinistas took steps toward democracy, including restoring a free press and the right of free assembly.

According to the plan, the administration would not request Contra aid after Sept. 30 if the Sandinistas were found to be acting in good faith. If it determined they were not, the administration would seek additional aid for the rebels.

The foreign ministers of Nicaragua, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala met throughout the night at the Camino Real Hotel. Reporters were barred from the meeting.

The ministers are trying to smooth the way for consideration at this week's presidential summit of a controversial peace plan proposed Feb. 15 by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias.

D'Escoto said despite earlier differences among the five countries, "The summit is sure to happen Thursday and Friday, and that is a major step forward."

Madrigal and D'Escoto, however, indicated the summit will not produce a final agreement and that more talks would be necessaary.

Prosecution ends cross-examination of Demjanjuk

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prosecutor Michael Shaked ended six days of heated cross-examination of John Demjanjuk today, saying "there is no way to avoid concluding" the former Ohio man operated gas chambers in a World War II death camp.

"That's a lie...you want to trip me up," Demjanjuk replied, shaking his hand in the air as his face reddened. As he spoke, many spectators in the audience of 650 murmured and laughed.

Demjanjuk, 67, a retired autoworker from a suburb of Cleveland, is accused of being the notorious guard "Ivan the Terrible," who ran the gas chambers in the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland. About 850,000 Jews were killed in the camp's gas chambers in 1942-43.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk claims he is a victim of mistaken identity. He has testified that during the period in question, he was serving in the Soviet Red Army, was captured by the Germans and incarcerated in two prisoner of war camps.

The defendant underwent grueling cross-examination by Israeli prosecutors, often assisted by Presiding Judge Dov Levine.

Levine intervened in today's session after Demjanjuk told the prosecutor: "I know one of my problems is I don't understand you, and you don't understand me."

Levine rebuked the defendant, saying, "You just don't want to answer the question."

The exchange followed questions by Shaked to Demjanjuk about whether the defendant saw Russian officers forcing freed Soviet prisoners to return to the Soviet Union after the war.

Demjanjuk has claimed he lied about his Russian past on United Nations refugee forms and a 1951 immigration document to the United States so that he would not be forcibly repatriated to the Soviet Union. Demjanjuk was extradited to Israel in February 1986.

"I saw people were taken from the camp," Demjanjuk said, referring to an American-run refugee camp in Landsheut, West Germany, where he was brought after the war.

But Shaked claimed Demjanjuk told a U.S. court that he never saw Russians taking people "with your own eyes."

"That's the truth. I didn't see the Russian officers doing it because the Russian officers didn't come in person," Demjanjuk replied. "There were Americans, and they put people on trucks. We didn't know where they were taken, but in our opinion they were taken to the Soviet Union."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Communist rebels kill vice mayor in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Suspected Communist rebels killed a vice mayor today in northern Luzon, and 13 people were injured when troops fired on striking workers at a meat-packing plant in suburban Manila.

Police continued questioning two men in Sunday's killing of Local Governments Secretary Jaime Ferrer and his chauffeur. State-run television said one man had been "positively identified" as one of the killers and the other was believed to be the mastermind.

But Maj. Jose Balbas, chief of police in Paranaque, where the slayings occurred, told The Associated Press there was insufficient evidence to charge them.

No group has claimed responsibility for the murder of Ferrer, 70, a Cabinet member who supported civilian vigilante groups to fight the 18-year Communist insurgency.

Brig. Gen. Jesus de la Cruz said about 100 New People's Army guerrillas attacked the municipal hall of Bangui, 270 miles north of Manila, and killed Vice Mayor Lorenzo Mabini in a pre-dawn raid today.

SBC missionary killed

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Two Americans, a missionary and a pilot, died in a helicopter crash near Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, the Southern Baptist Convention office said today.

Troy Waldron, a 33-year-old missionary from Silver Spring, Md., and pilot Steve Bartalsky, also in his early 30s, were the only people in the Bell Jetranger when it crashed Tuesday morning 11 miles northeast of the Ethiopian capital, officials said.

In a telephone interview from the Baptists' office in Addis Ababa, volunteer Vi Mason said the cause of the accident was unknown and authorities were investigating.

She said the two men were on their way to a drought area called Alen Ketma to estimate villagers' needs for relief supplies.

The helicopter belonged to the Swiss development agency Helimission, Bartalsky's employer.

Crash victims unidentified

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Authorities continued attempts to identify six bodies of victims of the fiery crash of a Boeing 377 last week on a Mexico City highway.

The deaths of a man and woman raised to 43 the number of fatalities, according to the Red Cross.

Officials said Tuesday that the plane's pilot said he had trouble with the landing gear.

Pilot Frederick Morr, 49, of Hialeah, Fla., on Monday made statements to government investigators at the American-British-Cowdray Hospital where he was recovering from injuries suffered in Thursday's crash.

An official of the Mexico City International Airport, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Morr complained about having landing gear problems after taking off from the airport.

But the official, who was present during the meeting, said, "This is not the only cause of the accident."
