House OKs historic cuts

GOP budget would shrink government reach, responsibility

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Triumphant Republicans pushed a historic budget through the House on Thursday that would halt decades of federal deficits, slash spending and bestow the biggest tax break since the Reagan era.

By a near party-line vote of 238-193, lawmakers approved a plan they said would wring an unprecedented $1.4 trillion in savings from budgets over the next seven years. Medicare and Medicaid would take the biggest hits and hundreds of other programs would be eliminated, but the sting would be soothed for some by $350 billion worth of tax breaks for families, corporations and investors.

As a down payment, House Republicans later won passage of a bill paring $16.4 billion from previously enacted budgets. That bill to immediately cut $6 billion from housing programs, $2 billion from airport improvements, $1.5 billion from the Environmental Protection Agency and $875 million from school programs passed 235-189.

Down the hall, the Senate commenced a weeklong debate on its own $961 billion seven-year budget-balancing measure that for now lacked tax reductions. Passage there was certain, too. But for the moment, the focus was on the House, whose more conservative members have propelled the Republican drive to transform federal priorities.

President Clinton issued a terse statement in which he said the House plan "fails to meet that test" of a disciplined budget that reduces the deficit and reflects American values.

"It slashes Medicare to pay for tax cuts for the wealthy, reduces crucial investments in education and raises taxes on working people," Clinton said. "There is a right way and wrong way. This is the wrong way."

As the final roll call was under way, a line of Republican lawmakers snaked up the steps to the speaker's desk so Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., could autograph copies of the budget that claimed it would lead to a surplus in 2002, the first since 1969. Even Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M., visited the House to watch the roll call on final passage.

Six months after the GOP captured control of Congress on pledges to control the deficit and shrink government, Republicans trumpeted that their package would deliver just that, to the benefit of ordinary Amer-

Montgomery dies

LOS ANGELES — Elizabeth Montgomery, who charmed 1960s television viewers as a nose-twitching suburban sorceress married to a wary mortal in "Bewitched," died Wednesday after a battle with cancer. She was 62, according to numerous reference books and old clippings, though her family maintained that she was 57. Montgomery died at her home surrounded by husband Robert Foxworth and her children, said a family spokesman. Page 11A

Inquiry: 7 officers had loaded guns when paramedic accidentally shot

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

Seven officers were found to have had loaded weapons the night a Midland paramedic accidentally was shot during Midland Police Department SWAT training and were given days off without pay. Two other officers were given written reprimands, according to an internal investigation into the shooting.

A report, issued Thursday by a Midland Police Department Board of Inquiry, said the armed officers had violated an "unwritten procedure" that banned any loaded weapons from SWAT training.

"This was an unwritten guideline that apparently the SWAT team had gotten lax on," said Sgt. David Garcia. "Seven of the officers had loaded secondary weapons."

Secondary weapons are handguns that the officers were not using during training.

The internal investigation into the April 19 shooting of paramedic Charles Hare led to two command staff personnel and four team leaders/ranking officers receiving one to three days off without pay and two other officers receiving written reprimands.

Pickle draws tears, laughs, accolades

BIG SPRING — Joe Pickle, retiring secretary-treasurer of the Colorado River Municipal Water District, was courted Thursday with accolades, laughter and tears from his friends at the celebration of his 46 years in the post.

"There is a little bit of sadness when you come to the end of a road," Pickle told the gathering at Big Spring Country Club. "The thing I regret most of all is leaving you, but I'll be sticking around. And I want God to bless you."

Pickle, a historian, was honored at a ceremony that overshadowed the naming of John Grant as general manager of CRMWD, which supplies lake water to much of West Texas.

Death ends rampage down city streets in hijacked tank

By Amanda Covarrubias

SAN DIEGO — A tank rumbling through city streets is a vision seen more often in footage of foreign cities, from Beijing to Sarajevo. This time it was San Diego.

Police in 15 to 20 cruisers trailed the tank, helpless, at about 30 mph until it crunched into a 3-foot-tall highway barrier about 20 minutes after it was stolen from a National Guard armory.

Shawn Timothy Nelson, a 35-year-old Army veteran who had tank training in Germany, had driven his van through the open gate at the armory, used his know-how to hook up an M-60 tank's fuel and electric lines, and started it up.

He plowed Wednesday night through 15 unoccupied cars, a parked van with a woman and child inside, two utility poles, a public telephone and a bus bench. No bystanders were hurt.

"The guy was just going crazy," said witness Kelly Bird. "He was mowing cars over."

Four officers leaped atop the tank and opened the hatch with bolt cutters as it rocked back and forth atop the divider. They shouted at Nelson to surrender and when he didn't they shot him to death.

"He shifted into the proper gear and was preparing to spin the tank so he could get off the high-riser," police Capt. Tom Hall said. "He knew what he was doing."

Police said they opened fire

State bar pulls attorney's license

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Officials with the State Bar of Texas have suspended the license of Midland attorney Angel Nunez, but this action will not stall the upcoming capital murder trial of a Big Spring teen he was hired to defend.

Nunez was hired to defend Levy Lee Edmondson, 17, who is accused of fatally shooting Texas Department of Public Safety trooper Troy Hogue in late December.

About a month ago, 118th District Judge Bob Moore in Big Spring appointed Midland attorney Paul Williams and Big Spring attorney R. Scott Ferguson to work with Nunez on the defense.

The state bar's decision effectively removed Nunez from the case, since he will no longer be allowed to practice law, said an official with the district clerk's office in Big Spring.

The state bar's board of disciplinary appeals suspended Nunez's license for 18 months, said public information officer Steve Young. The board made its ruling May 12.

Nunez had been on probated suspension since April 1, 1994, because of an incident in which he is reported to have "failed to protect client funds" by tak-

Police discover cache of nerve gas ingredients in Japanese cult's hideout

TOKYO (AP) — The self-styled messiah who police believe was behind the Tokyo subway attack hinted Thursday that he may try to shift the blame for the deadly poisoning away from himself.

Yet even as cult leader Shoko Asahara was making his first court appearance, newspapers reported that police had found a sealed underground chamber at his rural hideout with yet another huge cache of nerve gas ingredients.

Asahara's hearing was closed to the public. Although the courthouse is only 40 yards from police headquarters, the guru was driven there in a police van, his usual purple robes replaced by a grey, prison-issue sweatsuit.

Police held back more than 300 reporters and photographers pressed up against a fence.

Asahara, arrested Tuesday, was bound over for at least 10 more days of interrogation. Police have another three weeks before they have to charge him.

On Wednesday, Asahara had insisted to a lawyer that neither he nor his followers had made nerve gas, and said police were trying to frame him in the March 20 gas attack, which killed a dozen people and sickened 5,500.

In questioning before Thursday's court session, Asahara indicated he was worried. "What will happen to me?" he asked plaintively, according to investigators.

He also suggested that he was unaware of everything his estimated 10,000 followers were up to, providing a hint of how he may defend himself against charges of masterminding the attack.

"Do you know what all of your underlings are doing?" media reports quoted him as asking his interrogators. "I have so many followers, it's impossible for me to know what everybody is doing."

The turnaround came amid indications that Asahara's top lieutenants are now pointing the finger at their leader. His jailed deputies are telling police he ordered the subway attack, media reports say.

Police suspect Asahara ordered more than 40 followers of his Aum Shinri Kyo (Supreme Truth) sect to carry out the gas attack. They have obtained arrest warrants for 41 cult members suspected of direct involvement, and say they now have arrested all but seven.

Among those arrested are all five of the "commandos" who actually placed the nerve gas on the subway trains, the newspaper Yomiuri said.

More than 150 cult members also have been arrested on charges not involving the subway attack.

Asahara was arrested Tuesday after police found him hiding in a tiny steel-plated compartment inside a building at the cult's Mount Fuji compound.

The nerve gas ingredients — some 275 drums of chemicals — were found in a basement room that had been sealed with concrete, news reports said Thursday.

Police raids on cult compounds since the attack had already yielded tons of chemicals and equipment believed necessary to make sarin, as well as evidence the cult was researching biological weapons.

Asahara is still without a lawyer. On Wednesday, attorney Makoto Endo — who has defended gangsters and violent left-wing radicals — declined to take the case, expressing skepticism about Asahara's innocence.

Asahara has reportedly been sleeping well since being jailed, though he told Endo he finds late-night interrogations tiring. Sleep deprivation is said to be a tactic favored by Japanese police when they are trying to obtain a confession.

If Asahara can't find a private lawyer, he will have to wait for a court-appointed one.

Virologist urges prevention, not quarantine for Ebola

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — A leading virologist criticized the government's response to the Ebola epidemic, saying Thursday that roadblocks and quarantines were a waste of valuable time in the race to contain the killer virus.

Instead of putting more soldiers on the highway to prevent stricken people from traveling, more doctors and equipment should be sent to the disease's epicenter, said Dr. Jean-Jacques Muyembe Ramfun, who helped identify the Ebola virus 19 years ago.

"The quarantine and the roadblocks are neither necessary nor effective, and more attention should be turned to prevention," Muyembe said.

Information would slow the rumors that have sent people who fear they have the disease into hiding, he said. Roadblocks, by contrast, create conditions ripe for a new outbreak.

Muyembe said 3,000 people trying to reach Kinshasa from Kikwit, the city of 600,000 where the epidemic broke out, have been camped out at the final roadblock for several days with little food or water — fertile ground for the virus.

Furthermore, anyone with enough money — $550, according to a car rental agency in Kinshasa — can bribe their way through the roadblocks, Muyembe told a news conference in Kikwit.

And people sick with Ebola were generally too disoriented and weak to travel long distances, making the quarantine largely unnecessary, Muyembe said. His comments were transmitted by radio to Kinshasa, 250 miles west.

So far, no Ebola cases have been diagnosed in Kinshasa, the capital of about 6 million people. In Kikwit, at least 114 people have been infected and five new cases are appearing daily, Muyembe said. So far, 79 people have died.

He urged the government to begin a radio and television campaign to explain how the virus is transmitted — through body fluids and the traditional washing of infected corpses — and to encourage people with symptoms to report to health authorities.

Health experts say fear of the disease could fuel its spread because people, afraid of going to the Kikwit hospital where many people have died, are staying home and spreading the infection.

"It's a more difficult environment to control now. We could have as many as 120 new cases in the next 10 days if we don't get a grip on it," said Larry Sthreshley, who is coordinating investigators who are searching for victims by car, motorcycle and bicycle.

"When you have an epidemic of disease, you have two other epidemics — panic and rumors," said a WHO spokesman, Igor Rozov. "At the same time we try to fight the disease, we also must fight the others, and it's not easy."

Doctors, vehicles, sanitation supplies and other medical equipment, are all needed in Kikwit, Muyembe said.

Health experts from the World Health Organization, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Pasteur Institute and other research institutes began arriving in Kikwit earlier this month after tests showed Ebola had struck again.\

China provides reassurances for Hong Kong

HONG KONG (AP) — China assured Hong Kong on Thursday that it would not do away with its civil service, capitalist system and freedom of travel after the British colony reverts to Chinese rule in 1997.

Lu Ping, Beijing's top official for Hong Kong affairs, gave the reassurances at a seminar highlighting the quickening pace of Chinese preparations for the handover.

Since arriving Monday, Lu has been involved in a dispute over his refusal to meet Gov. Chris Patten, whom China reviles for democratizing Hong Kong's electoral system.

But Lu appeared Thursday to lay the dispute to rest, saying he did not want to engage in megaphone diplomacy, and his address was notable for its detail and soothing tone.

He started with the Court of Final Appeal, planned as a safeguard of the freedoms the colony now enjoys, and finished by reiterating China's pledge to uphold Hong Kong's capitalist system for at least 50 years.

The Hong Kong government said it welcomed Lu's "very general assurances," but asked him to be more specific — especially on when China expects to approve plans for the appeals court.

Lu said foreign judges could sit on the court — an important encouragement for people who fear Chinese judges may be biased.

But Lu made clear that the court would not have a say on issues that Beijing considers its preserve, such as picking Hong Kong's top civil servants.

On another issue of concern — freedom of travel — Lu described the passports Hong Kong Chinese will carry, and assured those who have emigrated that they will suffer no ill will if they return.

Lu also praised Hong Kong's 180,000 civil servants as an asset that China wants to preserve after 1997, even if they have British nationality.

Shelling, shortages threaten Bosnian capital's residents

ZAGREB, Croatia (NYT) — If the worst shelling in two years doesn't bring Sarajevo residents to their knees, a growing shortage of food and trucks to deliver it plus air and road blockades might.

Humanitarian aid officials in Zagreb said Thursday the capital of Bosnia is almost totally sealed off from outside assistance.

"Already the elderly in Sarajevo are dropping like flies," said Bradley Busetto, spokesman for the United Nations World Food Program, which organizes food aid for Bosnia.

The U.N. peacekeeping operation in Bosnia is itself under review by U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali. U.N. soldiers may be pulled back from U.N.-declared safe havens such as Sarajevo and redeployed in reduced numbers out of harm's way.

If the fighting continues to intensify and relief agencies and U.N. peacekeepers are compelled to back away, the door may open to what one U.N. official called "a Bosnian-style solution."

That means a fight to the finish between the Bosnian Muslim government and rebel Bosnian Serbs, with the international community trying to make sure the conflict doesn't spread.

Sarajevo's airport, through which 75 percent of food aid previously reached the city, has been closed to humanitarian traffic since April 8. Overland truck shipments of food have been reduced by a third.

The food pipeline that supplies Sarajevo and central Bosnia is also slowly shrinking, despite a recent pledge of 42,000 metric tons of wheat flour, vegetable oil and beans from the United States.

Based on current projections, by July no sugar or milk powder will be available for Sarajevo, and other staples such as wheat flour and vegetable oil will be in short supply.

Mr. Weather calls for high 80s

From Staff Reports

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high in the upper 80s and south winds at 10 20 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low near 60, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Saturday should be mostly sunny with a high in the lower 90s.

After an overnight low of 52, Thursday's high reached 79, compared to the record high for that date of 98 set in 1946. The record low was 45 set in 1986.

STATE

Most of Texas was sunny, breezy and cool Thursday although clouds lingered along the Gulf Coast and a tornado danced down near Liberty.

No serious injuries were reported from the twister that caused damage to about a half-dozen homes and businesses near downtown Liberty, officials said.

The tornado touched down about 8:20 a.m., passing between a high school and a daycare center without damaging either, witnesses said.

"All of the sudden, there was a real big roar," said witness Dava Wood. "We all ran in, and it just passed right over us. It just started touching down in spots."

Storms south of San Antonio caused damage Wednesday night, according to the American Red Cross.

In Pleasanton, five homes sustained major damage, including roofs that were partially blown off. Eight homes had minor damage, the Red Cross said. In Floresville, eight houses sustained minor damage.

Texas was cooler Thursday in the wake of a front that pushed most of the clouds away. Readings at 3 p.m. ranged from 62 degrees at Sherman-Denison to 95 in Alice.

The North Texas forecast is for mostly sunny skies and warmer readings today. Highs 77 northeast to 87 west. Tonight, fair skies. Lows 56 to 63. Saturday, partly cloudy. Highs 85 to 90.

South Texas is expected to be clear to partly cloudy skies through today.

Afternoon highs in the upper 80s to lower 90s. Lows near 60 degrees.

Forecasters said West Texas would have fair nights and mostly sunny days through Saturday. Highs in the 80s and 90s mountains to more than 100 along the Rio Grande. Lows in the 50s and 60s.

NATION

Thunderstorms swept across the Mississippi, Tennessee and Ohio valleys on Thursday with tornadoes and drenching rain that caused flooding in the Midwest.

Missouri had received up to 10 inches of rain since Sunday, with more forecast through the weekend. Flooding along the Missouri River and small streams forced residents to evacuate.

Flooding also forced evacuations in southern Illinois.

Severe thunderstorms pounded areas of southeastern and south-central Texas in the morning and produced a tornado that damaged several houses and business in the town of Liberty. No serious injuries were reported.

Another tornado struck a shopping mall at Nashville, Tenn., shortly after noon, destroying businesses and injuring at least 19 people, officials said.

Kentucky also had a tornado, from a line of storms that rolled across the central part of the state, and about 50 people were injured, one seriously.

Mitch Cole of Nicholasville, Ky., compared it to a railroad train. "I felt like I was laying on the tracks and it was running right over me," said Cole, whose house was torn apart. He and three children took shelter in a ground-floor bathroom and were unharmed.

Thunderstorms also struck West Virginia, knocking out power to thousands of customers, toppling part of a brick wall, closing schools and causing minor flooding.

Elsewhere, a few showers and thunderstorms were scattered over the Intermountain region during the night.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

PICKLE: Retiree draws tears, laughs, accolades of the Fort Worth engineering firm of Freese & Nichols, said he is excited about the opportunity to manage CRMWD, which operates Lake J.B. Thomas, developed in the 1950s; Lake E.V. Spence, developed in the late 1960s; and Lake O.H. Ivie, which become operational earlier this year.

"They left a real good foundation for me," Grant said of J.B. Thomas, E.V. Spence, and O.H. Ivie, who trumpeted the development of reservoirs to supply water to much of West Texas.

"They have done an outstanding job. I hope I can just come close to matching what the people have done here in the past. We still have an obligation out here to supply people with the best quality water in sufficient quantities for the lowest costs that we can. That's what our job is."

CRMWD, through Lake Ivie near Ballinger, is to supply water to San Angelo, Abilene, Midland and Odessa well into the next century.

CRMWD, through a network of pipelines, provides water to 450,000 people in parts of 32 West Texas counties.

Ivie is working with Grant in his transition as CRMWD general manager.

In his salute to Pickle, Ivie said "there is no more sincere person than Joe Pickle," who imparts "words of encouragement."

Ivie said Pickle's optimistic philosophy is reflected in his slogan: "Tomorrow is going to be a better day" regardless of "how good today is."

Pickle, a retired editor of the Big Spring Herald, is author of the book, "Gettin' Started," about Big Spring's early history.

"Joe has the ability to write history in such a wonderful way," Ivie said. "He has a barrel of adjectives."

Ivie retold a story from the late 1940s when the water district was being formed. When somebody said that a system of lakes and pipelines to supply water to West Texas "can't be done" because of the multi-million-dollar cost, Big Spring Mayor George Dabney turned to Pickle, then a newspaper reporter and recorder of the minutes, and asked, "Joe, what's a drink of water worth in hell?" Pickle's wry reply was: "I'll tell you about it later."

Ivie said if Pickle had any faults, it is only one: "It's his inability to say 'no.'"

Another former newspaper editor, Tom Hart, briefly reviewed his newspaper days with Pickle. "Actually, he was a pretty good (baseball) hitter."

Joe Bradford, who, like Pickle, was a Boy Scout leader, said Pickle "was always there" and "always said the right things at the right time."

Bradford recalled a time when fellow leaders couldn't resolve a problem until Pickle came up with the solution: "Why don't we do what the book says?"

Fort Worth engineer Jim Nichols, who worked with Pickle on lakes, dams and other projects for 43 years, said of Pickle: "I learned to love him, to respect him, and to put up with him to some extent."

Nichols found application to Pickle in a proverb by the late consulting engineer, Simon Freese: "You should always leave the wood pile a little higher than you found it."

The Rev. Kenneth Patrick, cited his love for Big Spring and for "Joe Pickle (who) has been a deacon in the church for 101 years."

Patrick recited a parody on parables, which are counted among Pickle's favorite Scriptures, and paid tribute to Pickle with the Irish Blessing: "... May God hold you firmly in the palm of His hand."

John Taylor, CRMWD president, characterized Pickle as a "true gentleman" and a "remarkable role model." His claim to fame is that of a "wordsmith" who kept 12 volumes of meticulous minutes for the CRMWD from the late 1940s to the mid-1990s, he said,

Taylor said that throughout the years, "if Joe was on my side, I was on the right side."

Pickle also was the CRMWD spokesman. "To tell you the truth, I've been more like a caddie," Pickle said later. "They (CRMWD management) gave me a ringside seat. My job was to try to tell the public what they (CRMWD management) thought the (water) problems were and what the solutions were."

Pickle paid homage to Thomas, Spence, Ivie and those other "characters of great vision who dared to do something about" bringing fresh water to the semi-arrid cities of West Texas.

HIJACK: Man steals 60-ton tank, squashes cars

because they feared Nelson was preparing to steer the tank into oncoming traffic. "We had no other options," Hall said.

The tank's weapons — a 105 mm cannon, 12.7 mm anti-aircraft gun and 7.62 mm machine gun — were not loaded, Army Maj. Ed Gale said.

Nelson was on active duty from 1978 to 1980, including stints at Fort Knox, Ky., Fort Dix, N.J., and Mannheim, Germany, the Army said.

Neighbors said Nelson's life had been crumbling recently. His house was apparently in foreclosure, his utilities had been shut off, and he'd recently broken up with his girlfriend. His water was turned off Wednesday, just before the rampage.

Nelson also had a history of medical problems, including a broken back from a motorcycle accident.

His small gray house isn't far from the armory, where neighbor Bob Belton said children often play on the nine tanks.

A bumper sticker on the front door of the house reads, "Mean people suck." Inside, clothes littered the floor and ashtrays overflowed. There was a 20-foot-deep hole in the back yard. Neighbors said he'd been digging for gold.

After the rampage, tread marks led up to one 1983 Cadillac, which was smashed down to a height of 2 1/2 feet.

"I'm going to call my insurance adjuster and see what they can do about this," said Stacy Schindler, whose car also was smashed. "I don't have any tank insurance."

INQUIRY: Police investigate accidental shooting

(From 1A)

Officer Darin Clements, the officer who accidentally shot Hare during the training, received three days off without pay.

Clements will remain on the SWAT team, as will the other officers who received disciplinary action.

The other four SWAT team members at the April 19 training did not have loaded weapons. The SWAT team consists of 12 members.

The SWAT team had been practicing in the abandoned FDIC building at ClayDesta Plaza for about 11 hours on April 19. The team was on its last exercise, in which Hare and another volunteer were "bad guys," and officers dry-fired their weapons.

Garcia said Clements originally had an unloaded shotgun, but was then given a bunker — or shield — and had to reach for his handgun during the exercise.

"His role in the exercise changed and his secondary weapon became his primary weapon," Garcia said.

Clements fired on Hare, shooting him once in the upper chest. Hare was transported to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center. He was released last week.

The board report stated "..... Clements did not violate state law nor did he directly violate any departmental General Order.

"However, there were a number of mistakes in judgment and poor communication that took place over a period of several months and were compounded by the mistakes made on April 19, 1995."

The board recommended that the ban on loaded weapons during SWAT training be written up in the SWAT procedures and that SWAT commander Lt. Jerry Compton be present during all SWAT training exercises.

Compton was not present at the April 19 exercise.

Police Chief Richard Czech said of the results, ".... there was no maliciousness, no intentional misbehavior nor any horseplay involved in this accident. However, carelessness, imprudence and laxity were all causes."

Although the board's report closes the case for internal investigation, the report was turned over to District Attorney Al Schorre for presentation to a Midland grand jury.

In addition, an outside law-enforcement agency will be called in to review the SWAT team policies and procedures, according to Assistant City Manager Rick Menchaca.

SUSPENDS: State bar withholds attorney's license

ing money from a trust fund that did not belong to him, Young said.

In a more recent incident, the attorney reportedly used a client's funds for personal expenses, Young said. Because of this, the board decided to revoke the probation and place Nunez on active suspension.

Nunez's suspension leaves Williams as lead attorney for Edmondson's defense, said the official in the district clerk's office.

The trial, scheduled to begin July 8, will not be moved back. Weekly pretrial hearings on the case are scheduled until then to ensure that the discovery procedures and legal questions are dealt with in a timely fashion, she said.

Since he was appointed only a month ago, Williams said this is not as much time as he would like to prepare for a case of this magnitude. Being involved in a capital murder trial for only one month is like being "real new" to the case, he said.

Moore allowed the original trial date of mid-May to be moved to July, but has ruled against further delays. "The judge tells me I'm going to keep the July trial date," Williams said.

Williams filed several discovery motions in the case Monday. The next pretrial hearing to deal with these motions will be May 30.

Prosecutors with the 118th District intend to seek the death penalty for Edmondson, who is accused of producing a large-caliber revolver during a routine traffic stop and shooting Hogue one time in the head.

Other police officers at the scene witnessed the shooting, according to police reports.

BUDGET: House vote approves historic blueprint

icans.

"The 21st century is about the power of the individual, not the power of bureaucracy or the power of red tape," said the plan's chief architect, House Budget Committee Chairman John Kasich, R-Ohio.

As they have for weeks, Democrats protested that the Republican blueprints would cruelly siphon money from Medicare, Medicaid and other programs for the elderly and poor to help provide tax cuts to the well-to-do.

"Republicans are trying to sell the idea to the American people that you can make massive cuts in programs and give big tax breaks to the wealthy in this country and nobody will feel it," scoffed Rep. Jim McDermott, D-Wash.

Clinton and Democratic leaders offered criticism but no competing plans of their own to eliminate the deficit, while Senate Democrats planned efforts — sure to fail — to ease GOP reductions in Medicare, education and tax breaks for low-income workers.

House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., told reporters before the vote: "They won the election, they control Congress, and they're going to pass something that represents their values."

White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta talked strategy with Democratic senators and offered a perspective the administration hopes voters will remember next year.

"The last thing we need to do is to cut the investments we make in our children, for example, in order to give tax breaks to the wealthy citizens of this country," Panetta told reporters.

'The 21st century is about the power of the individual, not the power of bureaucracy or the power of red tape.'

— John Kasich, R-Ohio,
House Budget Committee chairman, plan's chief architect

But Republicans used to occasion to try to reap credit for being alone in trying to end deficits.

"One team favors bigger government, larger bureaucracy and higher taxes," taunted Gingrich in a breakfast speech to the National Association of Manufacturers. "The other team favors smaller government, less bureaucracy and lower taxes. Now I'm fairly comfortable giving the American people in the '96 election that choice."

On final passage, Rep. Michael Flanagan, R-Ill., was the only Republican to vote against the plan. Eight conservative Democrats defected and voted for it.

In the Senate, Dole planned to try embarrassing Democrats by forcing them to vote Friday on Clinton's budget. The president's plan left deficits at $200 billion indefinitely.

But Senate Republicans were not without internal differences. Seven of them, led by Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., sent Dole a letter saying they would not support the Republican budget-balancing plan if major tax cuts were inserted into it.

With the GOP commanding the House for the first time in 41 years and the Senate for the first time in nine, both fiscal outlines represented long-awaited chances for Republicans to demonstrate how they would reshape government. And reshape they would, as their bills called for constricting its very reach by eliminating hundreds of agencies and programs from the Commerce Department to aid to Russia and trimming benefits for the poor, farmers, veterans and college students.

Name-use scandal hits conservatives in British Parliament hard, some say

LONDON — For Prime Minister John Major and his besieged Conservatives, the timing could not have been worse.

Just as the House of Commons was getting ready to wade into a provocative debate over the scandalous conduct of members of Parliament, a new scandal broke over the heads of the ruling Tories.

Coming at a time when the government wants to limit political damage by embracing reform proposals, the scandal practically ensures that Parliament will adopt a sweeping code to regulate the behavior of its members. The goal would be to try to wean them from the influence of lobbyists and businesses that up to now have legally carried them on the payroll.

The latest revelation concerns Sir Jerry Wiggin, a senior Conservative lawmaker and former minister. Paid to represent a trade association, he tried to attach an amendment to a bill under the name of another lawmaker, Sebastian Coe, the world record-holding runner.

Coe, unlike Wiggin, is a member of the committee considering the bill, which would have loosened some restrictions on trailer park owners when it comes to supplying gas to trailers. When Coe learned that someone else was using his name, he withdrew the amendment and went public.

Wiggin, 58, a former junior minister in the defense ministry, is a paid adviser to the British Holiday and Home Parks Association. He is currently on a trip to South Africa sponsored by the House of Commons, and British news programs have shown him refusing all substantive comment on the ground that he has not had a chance to read the newspapers.

But in comments taped before the scandal broke and broadcast by Channel 4's "Despatches" program, which together with The Guardian newspaper first disclosed the allegations against him, he implied that the practice of using "a friend" to insert amendments was not uncommon.

"I personally find it more tactful if possible to find people who are interested in the subject than to do it oneself," he said.

The speaker of the House of Commons, Betty Boothroyd, said on Wednesday that she was "seriously examining" the case. Judging from the waves of denunciation from opposition Labor Party figures and the odd wavelet of halfhearted support from fellow Tories, Wiggin has few allies left in Parliament

Year of self-rule goes unnoticed by Palestinians

Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — A Palestinian official looked surprised when asked what festivities Yasser Arafat's self-rule government had planned for Thursday.

"What's the occasion?" he asked.

The first anniversary of self-rule in the Palestinian autonomous areas passed unmarked amid widespread disappointment that peace with Israel hasn't brought prosperity and security.

There were no official rallies or parades, no slogans or banners, and none of the euphoria that accompanied the withdrawal of the last Israeli troops from cities and towns in the Gaza Strip last May 18.

Schools were open, people went to work as usual.

Maj. Gen. Nasr Youssef, commander of the Palestinian police force, attributed the absence of fanfare to lack of progress in talks with Israel on the withdrawal of troops from the West Bank and elections for a self-rule council, and because of Israel's plan to confiscate Arab land in contested east Jerusalem.

"The current conditions do not allow for celebrations," he said.

Palestinians interviewed on the street said little has changed since autonomy began a year ago in Gaza and the West Bank town of Jericho.

The only positive developments were the Israeli troop withdrawal, the end of the 8 p.m. curfew that constricted their lives for six years, and the return of some exiles and prisoners, they said.

"The Jews got rid of us and handed over our burden to Palestinian officials," said street vendor Abu Suleiman, 45.

Marwan Kanafani, Arafat's spokesman, said the peace accord the PLO signed with Israel in September 1993 has lost the "credibility and charm that made the people happy in this part of the world."

"Our hopes were much, much bigger," he told reporters. "We have problems from all sides."

Gazans had hoped autonomy would turn the Gaza Strip into a prosperous free trade port — a Middle Eastern Hong Kong.

Pope makes visit to Czech Republic

PRAGUE, Czech Republic (AP) — Pope John Paul II visits this historically secular nation amid government resistance to returning church property and Protestants' objections to plans to canonize a 17th century Jesuit.

Tens of thousands of Czechs and believers from neighboring countries are expected to attend an open-air Mass at Prague's Strahov stadium on the first day of the pope's visit Saturday.

John Paul's first trip to then-Czechoslovakia in April 1990 celebrated the end of communism and symbolized regained freedom of religion.

The church frequently claimed under communism that 70 percent of Czechoslovaks were Catholic. But while Slovaks are heavily Catholic, just 20 percent of the 10 million Czechs say they are Catholic, according to a September 1994 poll for the liberal weekly Respekt.

Other churches claimed 3 percent membership, but the overwhelming majority of people claimed no religious affiliation, the poll said.

On Sunday, the pontiff plans to canonize 17th Century Jesuit Jan Sarkandr, who played a prominent role in the Counter-Reformation and died in prison, and a Catholic noblewoman in Olomouc, 170 miles east of Prague.

For non-Catholics, Sarkandr symbolizes the often violent re-Catholicization of Protestant Czechs in the 17th century.

Pavel Smetana, head of the Ecumenical Council of Churches and a Czech Protestant, protested the canonization in a letter to the Vatican in which he called Sarkandr a "tool of a violent totalitarian system." He said he would boycott papal festivities.

Sarkandr was suspected of helping Catholic foreigners and organizing military raids during the anti-Catholic uprising in 1620. He was arrested for high treason, and after being interrogated and tortured, died in prison in Olomouc.

The pope will take up the restitution of church property seized by the Communists after the 1948 takeover during a meeting Monday with Premier Vaclav Klaus.

Membership of new French Cabinet reflects social problems, attitude of president

PARIS (AP) — The new Cabinet named Thursday includes a record number of women, an Olympic hurdles champion and some tongue-twisting new portfolios reflecting France's complex social problems.

There is a minister for Solidarity Between Generations, another for Neighborhoods in Difficulty, a third for Integration and the Fight Against Exclusion.

But behind the awkward-sounding names is a clear signal from the new president, Jacques Chirac, and his premier, Alain Juppe, that they are ready to experiment as they work to reduce unemployment and ease social tension.

"We're going to get to work very quickly and strongly," Juppe said in a radio interview. "This is a declaration of war against unemployment."

He said "concrete measures" would be proposed next week, probably dealing with incentives to businesses to hire long-term unemployed people.

Though both leaders are from the conservative Rally for the Republic party, their government will be assessed by the public on its ability to carry out at least some of the sweeping proposals Chirac made during the election campaign.

Chirac, elected May 7 and inaugurated Wednesday, will preside over the Cabinet's first meeting Saturday.

Next week, he will get to work on his first priority — developing jobs programs to reduce the 12.2 percent unemployment rate.

The new socially oriented portfolios are targeted at a phenomenon that the French call "exclusion" — the sense of alienation felt by the unemployed, the homeless, the poor, and immigrants, especially from North Africa.

The 42-member Cabinet includes 12 women, a record, although eight of them are junior ministers. The Cabinet's average age is 48 — four years younger than its predecessor.

Chirac had wooed the votes of women and youth during the campaign by promising them greater representation in government.

The youngest junior minister is Francois Baroin, 29, who will serve as Cabinet spokesman.

The youth and sports minister is Guy Drut, 44, winner of the gold medal in the 110-meter hurdles at the 1976 Olympics.

Twenty-nine of the ministers have never held Cabinet posts, but several key portfolios went to veterans of other ministries. Justice Minister Jacques Toubon, Foreign Minister Herve de Charette and Finance Minister Alain Madelin were among 10, including Juppe, who served in the previous Cabinet of conservative Premier Edouard Balladur.

Madelin, 49, was given a powerful portfolio combining the previously separate finance and budget ministries. He said his priorities will focus on "the struggle against public deficits and public waste while waging war against unemployment."

British retailer re-introduces 'natural quality' food to France

PARIS (NYT) — In the land of foie gras and chateaubriand, fish and chips has always been regarded as indigestible.

The French eat well, the British merely take nourishment — but Marks & Spencer, the British-based food and clothing retailer, is changing that notion fast.

"Almost everything we've brought in from Britain has been successful," said Peter Matthews, the manager of its largest Paris store, on the Boulevard Haussmann opposite its French competitors Au Printemps and Galeries Lafayette.

"Baby new potatoes, seedless grapes, Cox's apples," he said, naming a few of his wares. "We're trying to help the French discover things that are new to them, because they've lost that wonderful natural quality with a lot of their own produce."

Such blasphemy would be enough to make Escoffier spin in his grave, but in the age of the European single market, English palates have become more demanding and French eating habits are either becoming lazier or — dare one say it? — less provincial.

The French, like everybody else, don't have the time or the waistlines any more to go home and prepare gourmet meals from scratch at lunchtime, and increasingly supermarkets here offer ready-to-eat, or at least ready-to-microwave, substitutes.

The surprise at "Marks & Sparks," as it is familiarly known, is that the French are no longer turning up their noses at things like potato and spicy tomato bake, or carrots and cauliflower proudly marked "produce of England," but taking them home and finding them as good as home-grown.

Marks and Spencer's hottest-selling food item in Paris, one of its 16 stores in France, is an Indian dish, chicken tikka masala. "There aren't many Indian restaurants in France," Matthews explained.

The food department is packed with French customers at lunchtime, when they buy $60,000 a week worth of neatly packaged $2 tp $3 English-style sandwiches like egg and watercress on wholewheat bread to take back to the office to eat.

The sandwiches are much less calorie-laden, messy, expensive and crisp than the traditional French loaf split down the middle, lathered with butter, and stuffed with ham or camembert, but the shelves are stripped bare by the end of every day.

On Saturdays and holidays, the store looks like a refuge for lost British and American tourists. But its growing French clientele caused the store to expand its food selling space from 15,000 to 18,000 square feet, covering the entire ground floor, last month. Food now accounts for 21 percent of its business, with the rest mainly from clothing.

McVeigh's attorney accuses government of engaging in 'psychological warfare'

EL RENO, Okla. (AP) — Bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh is being subjected to a "kind of psychological warfare" with 24-hour camera surveillance in his prison isolation cell, his lawyer said Thursday.

Calling the treatment unnecessary and potentially harmful, lawyer Stephen Jones said he'll ask Attorney General Janet Reno to remove the camera.

Jones spoke after a preliminary hearing at which a federal magistrate ordered that a second suspect, Terry Nichols, also remain jailed at the El Reno Federal Correctional Institution.

Jones said he will have McVeigh's mental and physical health examined to ensure he is competent to stand trial, although he said he had no reason to doubt McVeigh's mental health. McVeigh hasn't attempted or threatened suicide or even been unruly, Jones said.

"I see the camera as simply an attempt to engage in a kind of psychological warfare and I think ultimately, perhaps, would have an effect on his mental stability — which might in turn affect the trial, at least the date of the trial, or whether one is ever held," Jones said.

Justice Department spokesman Carl Stern would not comment on Jones' statement.

McVeigh, 27, has been in federal custody since two days after the April 19 bombing, which killed 167 people when it shattered a federal office building in Oklahoma City.

U.S. Magistrate Ronald Howland ruled after Thursday's hearing that there was probable cause to keep Nichols, 41 — a buddy of McVeigh — in custody on bombing charges.

Nichols' lawyer, Michael Tigar, argued that his client is a victim of guilt by association and questionable circumstantial evidence.

"There are people out there who hold anti-government views," Tigar said. "Making inferences from associations is always dangerous."

Nichols has been in custody since he surrendered to police near his home in Herington, Kan., after hearing he was wanted for questioning. Tigar suggested that his voluntary surrender showed Nichols is innocent.

"The guilty flee where no man pursueth, but the righteous are as bold as a lion," Tigar said, quoting from the Bible's Book of Proverbs.

That drew a reply from Merrick Garland, of Reno's office, that Nichols "came in voluntarily because he knew he was being looked for. That does not suggest innocence."

Howland gave Tigar seven days to file a motion in support of bail for Nichols. After that, prosecutors will have seven days to respond before a judge schedules a hearing.

The lone witness at Thursday's hearing, FBI Agent Errol Myers, testified mainly about what authorities have said was bomb-making material found in Nichols' home. The material had already been cited in an affidavit that supported charging Nichols.

Nichols, not shackled or handcuffed, listened calmly and sometimes took notes.

Questioned by Tigar on a point that could suggest Nicholas was not in Oklahoma City the day of the bombing, Myers acknowledged there was evidence that someone with a male voice made telephone calls from Nichols' house that day.

Tigar asked about a fuel meter that agents said might have been used to measure fuel oil for the fertilizer-and-fuel-oil bomb that blew up the federal building. Myers admitted that the meter was not working when agents found it in Nichols' home days after the bombing.

Tigar also attacked FBI statements about detonator cord found at Nichols' home, and Myers admitted that federal bomb experts have not positively determined that detonator cord was used to set off the Oklahoma City bomb.

"I kind of believe what Sherlock Holmes said to Watson: It's like a stick on the ground. It does point in one direction until you turn around and look at it from the other side, and then it points in the other direction," Tigar told reporters outside the prison.

Jones refused to comment directly on his conversations with McVeigh.

"He was cooperative and is working with us on the case," Jones said. "Like any other person in jail, he seems anxious."

He said McVeigh has been getting mail from friends and the general public, and has subscribed to The Daily Oklahoman newspaper and Newsweek.

Essay contest stressed lack of voter activity

Students in Midland schools recently had the opportunity to participate in an essay contest to answer the question "Is voting a privilege or a responsibility?"

The contest, sponsored by the League of Women Voters of Midland, was designed to teach students as well as to educate them about the reality of voter participation in a republic such as ours. And judging from their comments there's no doubt that the contest proved to be an eye opener!

What the students learned is that even though newspapers such as the Reporter-Telegram and the other media go to great lengths to make information about the importance of elections and of voter involvement in the election process available to the public, actual voter involvement is depressingly low. That means, of course, that the officials being elected often are chosen by a minority of the qualified voters, not a majority.

Does that affect the quality of our government? Well, while as a point that is arguable, it certainly is a distinct possibility. One thing is clear: The more people involved in the elections process, the more people actually are drawn into the political life of the nation at all levels. That means more concerns can be expressed and, hopefully, addressed by government.

This contest was beneficial because it should spark interest on the part of students to know more about and actually become involved in the political process.

Congratulations go out to contest winners Cathleen Wright of Midland High School, who won first place; Alena Oetting of Lee High School, second place; Graciela Lake of Lee, third place; John Patrick Duffy who is home-schooled, honorable mention; and Carrie Lewis of Lee, honorable mention.

Hopefully the contest will impress on the students the importance of taking part in the choosing of our leaders at all levels of government.

Congress canceled the partially constructed $11 billion physics lab in 1993. Ever since, a few scientists and consultants have been searching for another use for the project's assets.

Last week, state leaders gave up. Legislators decided to liquidate Texas' collider assets and use the proceeds, along with cash from the federal government, to start paying off $250 million in general obligation bonds. The decision, while understandable, is a great disappointment.

The decision meant there will be no proton therapy center at the former collider site outside Waxahachie. The federal government gave Texas $65 million to build the center. Texas would have contributed about $5 million annually to operate the facility.

When first proposed, the proton center would have piggybacked on the collider. Overhead costs would have been relatively modest. The center would have used fast-moving subatomic particles, called protons, to treat malignancies such as prostate cancer. The only regularly operating proton centers in the country are in Massachusetts and California.

Once the collider was canceled, the proposed center became a stand-alone facility. It would have been more expensive and logistically difficult to operate than the original center — which made administrators at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas lose interest in the project. If Southwestern didn't want it, legislators quite reasonably didn't want to fund it.

Nevertheless, this decision hurts. It's also frustrating that it took so long to reach this conclusion. Wishful thinking, politics and self-interest may have occasionally subverted a rational evaluation of proposals to re-use the collider's assets.

Texas will reduce its collider-related debt by selling off assets. But legislators shouldn't be hasty about auctioning off the 10,500 acres of land it acquired. Profits from land sales wouldn't equal the millions of dollars Texas spent to acquire the acreage. And it took thousands of hours of work to assemble the parcels of rolling prairie.

The state should bank the land until a more farsighted use can be found. It is a unique and flexible asset. Future Texans may need it for an educational institution, a research station, a wildlife preserve or a state home. The current Legislature shouldn't rob future generations of those options.

— The Dallas Morning News

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.
- We do not publish "open" letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702, or you may fax to 682-3793.

Gallery displays careless attitude for art

Anderson

Two months ago, we reported that officials were trying to airbrush allegations that the gallery takes sloppy care of its artwork — more than 75,000 pieces ranging from Picassos to van Goghs. A confidential report by an independent team of experts revealed that it was "unanimous in its opinion that the conditions of the facilities and the organizational problems" at the gallery "threaten the security of the collection."

Art galleries — like laboratories — are meant to be controlled environments, as excess humidity or heat can sometimes cause permanent damage to old, delicate paintings. Yet investigators found the National Gallery in a condition far below what most people would accept in their own home.

According to the report, the skylights and roof at the gallery "leak extensively," allowing water to seep into the East and West buildings. Heating and cooling systems were assailed for frequent temperature and humidity malfunctions that "could easily exceed poorly trained workers' abilities" to fix them before damage is done.

After our initial column appeared, the head of the gallery promised a congressional subcommittee that the problems were being fixed. But a letter from one of our readers in Washington, D.C. — who works at another Smithsonian Museum and requested anonymity — suggests that the gallery still hasn't gotten the picture.

Our faithful reader was skeptical of our story until he attended a special exhibit at the gallery — "The Glory of Venice" — where he saw an employee checking the readings on some of the thermostats.

"As the lighting was dim, one might have expected him to use a flashlight to read the dials," he told us. "Instead, he used a cigarette lighter! In a room full of paintings belonging to the Queen of England and notable European museums! I had visions of the lighter flaring up and seeing a Canaletto meet its demise. Surely this is a careless and incompetent attitude at work here."

MISSING THE BOAT — The U.S. State Department apparently believes that when it comes to managing taxpayers' money, it's best to buy high and sell low.

By selling or leasing some of its Japanese property holdings at the height of the Tokyo real estate boom, the State Department could have netted hundreds of millions of dollars for American taxpayers. But bureaucratic bickering and stall tactics kept any deals from being made. Now that the boom has turned to bust, so have chances for a quick and tidy profit.

Throughout the 1980s, real estate values in Tokyo climbed an average of 30 percent per year. That pattern fell into reverse in 1990, with land values falling 30 percent or more since then. Separate studies in 1988 and 1991 recommended that the U.S. mission in Tokyo either sell or lease parts of its holdings that weren't needed. This included three largely unused acres of the Mitsui compound (valued at $795 million), the deputy chief of mission's residence, and the Treasury House — set aside for the top financial attache — valued in 1990 at $15.1 million.

According to a report by congressional investigators, plans to sell the Treasury House have now been put on hold after "interagency squabbles" between the Treasury and State Departments caused delays. In the meantime, land values plummeted and the house was allowed to deteriorate to where it's now worth about $5 million — or one-third the original price. State Department officials also refused to part with the deputy chief of mission's residence, even though this half-acre estate is worth $92 million and is no longer needed.

Teen-ager readies himself for life, adulthood

Dear John,

I tap out these words with the seeming self-confidence of one who knows a computer is far more than a high-class typewriter. Whappety-whap-whap-whap, and this, your birthday salute, is done. But it's all, shhhhhhh, a bluff. Your dad doesn't know beans about computers.

Murchison

The worst of it is, he doesn't care. He knows you know enough about these chilly machines for both of us — not to mention extended family and the approximate seating capacity of the Cotton Bowl. This is where we are at age 14, and it is some place to be.

Fourteen! Pardon me while I exclaim. That is the province of old folks — exclaiming over all the once-unimaginable things young folks can do.

This computer thing is at the head of the list. Your mother, brother (himself highly literate in computerese) and I, your father, have watched your fascination with computers flower into astonishing competence; to the point we never doubt what gift you want for special occasions — something related to computers; something to go with the Mac. The current objective, I believe, is an extra telephone line for the transmission or receipt of something-or-the-other.

It's nice, at all events, to think that our very own 14-year-old, at double that age, shouldn't lack for gainful employment. "Where's the Mac?" you'll demand of such potential employers as you allow to interview you. And then, "Lemme at it!" What employer could resist such determination? Maybe, instead of writing my memoirs, I will simply commission you to put them on CD-ROM, with background music.

So much for your father's technical vocabulary, O Best Beloved! Time to talk of other teenage matters and preoccupations. This isn't easy, inasmuch as teen-agers, painfully aware of their unique vulnerabilities (no one, absolutely no one in human history ever was 14 before!), are a delicate and prickly breed.

Age 14 comes for John in the merry month of May, just as the middle-school world suddenly vaporizes. Immediately ahead: high school. How much more fitting does it get — the simultaneous putting off of childhood (which overlaps age 13 in considerable degree) and the putting on of — adulthood? Well, not in the full-blown sense. But when high school begins, life in some sense begins. So it was for your father, 39 years ago, and things aren't all that different today.

John-of-the-blonde-curls-his-mother-cut-with-tenderest-reluctance is pointed toward life: toward a new century, Class of 1999; our present century's last roll of the academic dice. The thin, wiry body toughens — and fattens, which is what you might expect, given all those Extra Value Meals at McDonalds: double meat with cheese and fries.

We are building up for a physical explosion: outward and upward. And for a corresponding implosion of parental bank accounts, as the old wardrobe goes to the Salvation Army, and a new one takes over your closet. It shouldn't be long now. Your manner, your outlook, your judgments and observations all point the same direction. The voice that once chirped Mozart's Exultate with the sweetness of the angels is a little more gravelly all the time.

I gather all this suits you to a T. Well, it should! It suits your parents, too, if you want the truth — though, in unguarded moments, they find themselves remembering with nostalgia a happy, huggy little baby who appeared 14 years ago this month, named John Alexander. And now he wants driving lessons! Remember that parents, when the parental spirit is on them, can be disgusting. I advise taking them with several grains of salt.

Just go on doing what you're doing — growing, going, glowing with the excitement of this new moment. Hold tight to your sweetness of temperament, your intellectual curiosity and sound judgment, and give them room to blossom. They are gifts to cherish.

But, then, you probably knew that already. Something like it, at one time or another, was probably on the electronic bulletin board. But I bet "Happy Birthday, John" wasn't. Remember, you read it here first.

With love,
Dad

Americans can make dreams come true

Recent news from the media headlines has been filled with violence and social injustice. Consequently, America has been shoved into the world's spotlight as a dangerous country to visit, yet the United States remains to be the "dream" destination of many teenagers across the globe. As Americans it is our responsibility to show the people of the world that America is one of the most beautiful, wonderful countries on earth. Our citizens are kind, generous and anxious to share our cultural heritage with people of other countries.

Over 1,000 volunteers have been hard at work for more than a decade to show nations of the world what an exceptional country we have. American Intercultural Student Exchange (AISE) has been placing foreign students with caring American families for over 13 years. By spending a school year with an American family, these students return to their countries with a deeper understanding of Texas, the United States and its people.

AISE is seeking host families in every city and town, every ranch and farm, in urban areas, mountain areas, desert areas, rural areas and every place between no matter how small or large the community is. AISE needs loving families who can volunteer to host an exchange student beginning in August 1994. Many students who applied for host families last fall are still waiting for a home.

If we could just show other nations that the spirit of volunteerism and love across cultural boundaries still exists in the family of America as was intended when our Constitution was drafted, the world would understand that the people of America still care. Help make dreams become reality and be an "International Family" by opening your homes and hearts to a student for the upcoming school year. Call now to begin corresponding with your newest family member immediately! Call AISE at 1-800-SIBLING for more information. Locally call Susan Lillard at (915) 697-6582.

Bush's NRA gesture seems insincere

I read in this morning's (Tuesday, May 16) paper that ex-President George Bush will not renew his NRA membership. Now let's consider what he has done to be so Pecksniffian. He spent four years of doing little. His only claim to fame will be the Desert Storm war. (This was more influenced by big oil money than any sense of patriotism).

He had more than a passing influence in the Contra debate. Ditto for the savings and loan fiasco. Some of the "jack booted" conduct by our law enforcement agencies were perpetrated on his watch. So why am I not surprised by his attitude when the Second Amendment is concerned? Actually, I feel much better about the organization now that he is no longer a member.

Oh, we do owe Bush one thing. His incompetence is directly responsible for the anomaly that now resides in the White House and for all the deviates he has appointed to high offices.

Era ends with death of legionnaire

On Friday, April 28, I witnessed the end of an era. Oh, nothing dramatic to most, but in the annals of American Legion history, it was truly the end of an era. On this day, in a quiet ceremony, John Tarleton was laid to rest. Tarleton was one of a few World War I veterans that could claim the distinction of being a 75-year member of the American Legion.

There were no newspapers or TV cameras on hand, though well there should have been, to witness the passing of this veteran from WWI. He may no longer be a part of the present or future, but he will always be a part of the past.

I remember Tarleton and his desire for life; the love he shared with his family; the love he had for dancing; his final days in the Big Spring Veterans Hospital; and now, his final stop. I know he has joined the ranks of all veterans who have lived, fought and died for our country.

We at the American Legion wish to extend our condolences and deepest sympathy to the Tarleton family. This longtime member of Woods W. Lynch Post 19, The American Legion, will join other legionnaires as a constant reminder of what the veteran has sacrificed, to give us our freedom, peace of mind and this great country in which we live.

The Nation in brief

■ Tennessee tornado kills three, injures 20

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A tornado ripped through the small Amish community of Ethridge in southern Tennessee on Thursday, killing three and injuring at least 20 others.

The tornado, one of about 40 that hit the state, also damaged 32 homes and destroyed the town's utility building, knocking out power to the community about 50 miles southwest of Nashville. One-third of the county's roads were closed.

Earlier in the day a twister slammed into a Nashville mall, injuring at least 19. Two dozen businesses were damaged.

■ Saturn's rings to disappear for 24 minutes

WASHINGTON — In an astronomical event that happens every 15 years, the rings of Saturn will all but disappear for 24 minutes on Monday. Most of the world's big telescopes will be trained on the planet to record the event, which allows astronomers to look for new moons.

The phenomenon, known as a ring plane crossing, causes Saturn's distinctive rings to be seen edge-on from Earth. With the rings temporarily invisible because of the Earth-Saturn alignment, telescopes can pick out faint objects near the planet.

Previous plane crossings have enabled astronomers to discover 13 of Saturn's 18 known moons.

■ Former Soviet dancer Godunov dies at 45

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. — Alexander Godunov, the flaxen-haired ballet dancer whose headline-making defection from the Soviet Union helped catapult him into a successful acting career, was found dead Thursday. He was 45.

Paramedics called to his home found Godunov dead shortly before noon, sheriff's Sgt. Bob Minutello said. It was not immediately known when Godunov died.

Godunov had been seeing a physician who will list the death as natural causes, Minutello said. Godunov was discovered by a nurse who had not heard from Godunov since May 8, Minutello said.

Godunov came to the United States in 1979 after spending 13 years with the Bolshoi Ballet. He joined the American Ballet Theatre in New York, dancing there for the next three years until he had a falling out with the ABT's artistic director, Mikhail Baryshnikov, also a Soviet defector.

The two had studied together at the Bolshoi, but an angry Godunov said his old friend "threw me away like a potato peel."

Former 'Bewitched' star loses battle with cancer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Elizabeth Montgomery, who charmed 1960s television viewers as a nose-twitching suburban sorceress married to a wary mortal in "Bewitched," died today after a battle with cancer.

She was 62, according to numerous reference books and old clippings, though her family maintained that she was 57.

Montgomery died at her home surrounded by husband Robert Foxworth and her children, said family spokesman Howard Bragman. The actress underwent surgery in April to remove what was described only as a small malignant tumor.

In a statement, her husband and children said she was known as "a friend who has been in our living room thousands of times and has impacted our lives in many ways."

Montgomery's post-"Bewitched" career focused on TV movies, including "Deadline for Murder," broadcast on CBS just last week. It was her second TV film based on the career of reporter Edna Buchanan.

The daughter of Hollywood star Robert Montgomery appeared in a few films in the 1950s and 60s, including "The Court-Martial of Billy Mitchell." But television was her medium of choice. "I guess you'd say I'm a TV baby," she once told an interviewer.

"Bewitched," which ran on ABC from 1964 to 1972, was her only series. It was an instant hit, ranking second only to "Bonanza" in its first season. Montgomery starred as Samantha, a pretty suburban witch who, to please her advertising executive husband, tries to avoid using her powers.

She was surrounded by relatives who disapproved of her efforts to abandon her supernatural roots, notably her mother, played by Agnes Moorehead. When Samantha wound up using sorcery as a last resort to solve a comic problem, a twitch of the nose was usually all it took.

Montgomery also played Samantha's mischievous look-alike cousin, Serena. Samantha and husband Darrin (played by Dick York, then by Dick Sargent) first became script parents in 1966 with the birth of daughter Tabitha. The pregnancy coincided with a real-life pregnancy for Montgomery.

York, who suffered from emphysema, died at age 63 in February 1992. Sargent, 64, died in July 1994 after a battle with prostate cancer.

Montgomery went on to star in made-for-TV movies that often won her critical acclaim.

They included "A Case of Rape" (1974); "The Legend of Lizzie Borden" (1975); "Black Widow Murders: The Blanche Taylor Moore Story" (1993), and "The Corpse Had a Familiar Face," about Buchanan, in 1994.

She worked with Foxworth in television movies ("Mrs. Sundance," 1974, "Face to Face," 1990) and in a 1989 New York production of the play "Love Letters."

She also tackled more serious subjects, working for liberal causes and narrating "The Panama Deception," a documentary that criticized the 1989 U.S. invasion of Panama. The film won the Academy Award for best feature documentary in 1993.

Sen. Packwood has next move, chairman says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Bob Packwood soon will receive a major delivery from the Senate ethics committee — reams of evidence it gathered over 30 months on his alleged sexual misconduct, improper use of influence with lobbyists and obstruction of its own inquiry.

The next move is up to him, ethics committee Chairman Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., said Thursday.

"I think it's safe to say that the ball is now in Sen. Packwood's court," McConnell said at a news conference with the committee's vice chairman, Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev.

Packwood, a five-term Oregon Republican who chairs the Senate Finance Committee, can request a meeting with the committee. He can also ask for a public hearing.

But if he asks the committee to conduct all its further proceedings behind closed doors, he may not get his wish. The committee's three Democrats and three Republicans don't need his approval to choose to question him in public.

Open hearings have been the norm in the committee all the way back to those that led to the Senate condemnation of Sen. Joseph McCarthy, R-Wis., in 1954, Bryan said.

Bryan and McConnell said there was no set schedule by which Packwood must respond to the committee's evidence. However, committee staff said Packwood will be presented with an expected timetable when he receives the evidence.

The day after making public an explicit list of allegations against Packwood, including 18 reported cases of sexual misconduct with 17 different women, McConnell and Bryan discussed what had gone into their findings.

The two senators said committee staff members have spent more than 11,000 hours since December 1992 looking into the allegations against Packwood, interviewing or taking testimony from more than 260 witnesses and reviewing more than 16,000 pages of documents. They also mailed some 300 questionnaires to female former staffers of Packwood and reviewed and compared more than 2,600 pages of Packwood's diary transcripts with 350 original audiotapes.

Senators on the committee met as a group on the matter at least 43 times, and spent about 1,000 hours in meetings, they said.

The inquiry was delayed by about a year as Packwood fought in court to keep his diaries private.

But all that wasn't the hard part, said Bryan, who called the case "really without precedent in the annals of the ethics committee."

"This is a difficult case," he said. "Any time that you're required to pass judgment upon a colleague with whom you have a close personal working relationship day by day, it's very difficult."

Neither McConnell nor Bryan would comment on the future proceedings in the investigation that ultimately could lead to Packwood being publicly rebuked, stripped of the Finance Committee chairmanship or even expelled from the Senate.

Plenty of peaceful Americans are angry, fearful of government, experts say

By David Foster and Arlene Levinson
Associated Press

AP Laserphoto

Samuel Sherwood, head of the United States Militia Association, speaks to a full house Tuesday, May 2, in Twin Falls, Idaho. Sherwood bills himself as a reasonable militiaman, but evangelizes his audience to be prepared for hard times ahead.

CLAYTON, Idaho — In the sagebrush canyon sheltering this town of 28 souls, don't bother looking for armed militias to find rebellion in the air.

Peace-loving Americans are angry enough.

"If We Can't Reform It, We Will Overthrow It!" warns a bumper sticker pasted to a window of the Clayton Mercantile, a general store and bar along the Salmon River.

Inside, three loaded rifles and a shotgun lean against a wall. They belong to the owners, Marilyn and Kirk Brower, who offer a visitor a milk crate to sit on and chat.

Who's fed up with the federal government? Lots of folks, says Marilyn, 48. Her gripes soon grow as thick as the firs and pines in the national forests surrounding this central Idaho hamlet.

"They tell us we can't log, we can't mine, cattlemen can't turn their cattle out. Yes, people are upset. People are ANGRY," she says.

Upon hearing of the Oklahoma City bombing, Marilyn was not surprised.

"I was horrified," she says. "But not surprised. That first day, when everybody was saying Middle Eastern terrorists, I said they better look a lot closer to home."

In the month since a truck bomb tore up the Alfred P. Murrah federal building, killing 167 men, women and children, a shocked nation has awakened to a fury in its midst. The arrests of suspects Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols, who hold fierce antipathy toward the federal government, have exposed an undercurrent of right-wing extremists who walk and talk violence in the name of protecting freedom.

Experts estimate no more than 100,000 Americans, probably many fewer, belong to paramilitary groups, which wouldn't even fill the Rose Bowl. But they warn that the same feeling of alienation that feeds such organized efforts has become part of mainstream American attitudes in the late 20th century.

"Some of these people hold beliefs that are charitably regarded as paranoid," says Chip Berlet, who analyzes anti-democratic movements for Political Research Associates in Cambridge, Mass. "But the concerns are real, and these people are just like your neighbor. They're angry and frustrated."

In the rubble of Oklahoma City, more questions than answers remain about where this anger will lead: Why would Americans wage war on America? What kind of anti-government fever lashes out and kills babies?

Could such insanity explode again? The violence of the radical Weather Underground did not stifle anti-war sentiment in the 1960s and 1970s. Why should outrage over the April 19 bombing shame away the disaffections of today?

Marilyn Brower, for example, was wooed by a militia group in Idaho. She found it too extreme for her tastes, but she's still angry.

"People are afraid of the government," she says. "McNamara comes out 30 years later and says the Vietnam War was a tragic mistake. We know the Cold War was perpetuated by the industrial-military complex. The public knows the government has lied to us."

Experts say her feelings are increasingly common.

"People feel terribly frustrated about the body politic," says Seymour Martin Lipset, a political sociologist at George Mason University in Fairfax, Va. "They think the people in power aren't interested in people like them."

The reasons are diverse: Despite success on Wall Street, people are losing jobs. Even presidents can't stay employed past one term. Homelessness persists.

Without communism to worry about, Washington is in upheaval over where to direct the federal government's energy and taxpayers' money. Statistics show less crime, but polls show Americans more concerned about it. The welfare system doesn't work. Sending U.S. troops to the Gulf War, Somalia and Haiti raises questions about the country's role as global peacekeeper while it has woes at home.

Some anxious Americans find comfort voting — or not voting. Some, like Brower, simply let off steam. Pundits read anger in the 1994 Republican sweep. Ross Perot had his better idea. So did House Speaker Newt Gingrich and his "Contract With America."

History reassures us, and yet frightens us, that this rhetoric of rebellion is as old as our flag.

"If you want to blame anything, you can blame the Bill of Rights," Lipset says. "We killed the king."

But for some who feel shut out of the system today, free speech seems a feeble defense against dark powers they believe are rallying against liberty. Particularly in remote and rural strongholds, there are gathering streams of Americans who are deeply afraid.

Afraid of what?

According to right-wing literature: Bar codes. The federal government and its agents. Gun confiscation. A United Nations plotting to become our world government. Jews. George Bush and his New World Order. Blacks. Republicans. Democrats. Bankers. Foreigners. Technology. The IRS. Incumbent politicians. Immigrants, legal or not. A complacent public. International meetings on the environment and population control.

Newsletters of the right weave a world view in which passage of the Brady Bill or the federal government's bloody raid on the Branch Davidians at Waco — or even the Oklahoma City bombing — are not isolated events, but part of an international plot to enslave freedom-loving Americans.

A paranoid fringe looking for scapegoats is nothing new in America, either. But today's technology gives fear and blame a broader reach, spread by fax and phone hot lines, by shortwave radio and the Internet.

This web of fear has found new life in the past year's rapid rise of militias — small, ad hoc armies with names like the Gadsden Minutemen in Alabama or the Hillsborough Troop of Dragoons in New Hampshire.

Many such groups train in the woods with modern weapons. They cache food and ammunition against the impending U.N. invasion they foresee. They make veiled threats toward elected officials from the local sheriff to President Clinton.

Floodwaters rise, bring back bad memories of '93

HARTSBURG, Mo. (AP) — Anxieties rose Thursday along with the Missouri River, as hundreds of people who suffered during the Flood of '93 packed up and moved out.

"You get out and let the river do what it has to do," said Dennis Groves, a 38-year Hartsburg resident who had 5 feet of water in his white frame house two summers ago. A dozen friends helped load his belongings onto pickup trucks.

Missouri has gotten 5 to 10 inches of rain since Sunday, and more is forecast through the weekend. The rain follows a couple of weeks of wet weather upstream in South Dakota and Nebraska that had already swollen the river.

Two deaths were blamed on flooding in Missouri: One man drowned when he tried to drive through a flooded creek, and one traffic death was blamed on standing water. Hundreds of people were also evacuated in Illinois.

Spring flooding along the Missouri River's lowlands isn't unusual; residents expect a flood about every five to 10 years.

And this week's high water is a far cry from the 1993 flood, which was caused by a month and a half of rain measured in feet. That disaster was blamed for 48 deaths and up to $16 billion in damage in nine Midwest states.

But with memories of 1993 still fresh, and broken levees not all replaced along the river, flood survivors are taking no chances this time.

Inmates must wear hot pink uniforms, state's officials say

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — The latest from the state that brought back chain gangs: hot-pink uniforms for male inmates who habitually expose themselves to female guards.

The Corrections Department has ordered 50 of the garish outfits to be worn by public masturbators in an attempt to shame them into behaving.

Nothing else has worked, officials said Thursday.

"We've even taken disposable cameras and taken a picture of them and told them we were going to send it to their mothers. They don't care," said Charlie Bodiford, a spokesman at 800-man Holman Prison.

Administrators are hoping the sexually aggressive inmates — known as "gunslingers" in prison lingo — will change their ways once fellow prisoners get a look at them in pink pants and shirts.

"The heckling from the other inmates is the thing (they) are not going to like," Deputy Commissioner J.D. White told The Montgomery Advertiser.

The newspaper quoted White as saying at least one guard has quit, citing stress related to harassment from masturbating inmates.

Plans for the uniforms were disclosed just two weeks after Alabama became the first state to bring back chain gangs. That program was part of Gov. Fob James' attempt to make prison so unpleasant no one will want to return.

Sewer, water accord nears end

City to start last phase of service to windowpane residents

■ County Commissioner Louisa Valencia plans to resume push for area's annexation.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

The final phase of an agreement to provide city sewer and water services to a Midland County neighborhood south of Gist Avenue is nearing completion.

Meanwhile, a county commissioner hopes to resume the push to have the area annexed by the city after the services are in place.

The windowpane area — so called because it is surrounded by the city — has been targeted to receive the city services for several years. The majority of services have been made available in the last three years.

Midland County has installed main sewer and water lines to the area, while the city of Midland has agreed to provide sewer and water service to residents — who don't pay city taxes — at 1 1/2 the regular rate.

In 1992, about 50 homes — south of Gist Avenue, north of the alley south of Longview Avenue, and bordered on the east by Fort Worth Street and the west by Baird Street — began receiving water and sewer services.

In 1993, the 24 homes west of Fort Worth Street and just east of Terrell Street with the same north-south boundary, began receiving water services.

In the final phase of the project, the homes west of Fort Worth Street will receive sewer service. The city is currently securing sewer service agreements from home owners while the county is completing sewer line installation.

"They (residents) should be getting sewer service within six weeks," city Utilities Director Ken Jones said.

City sewer and water services have been much needed in the windowpane area because of water contamination caused by the close proximity of wells to septic tanks, according to county and city officials.

"The reason we were delayed was because we did not have enough funds," County Commissioner Louisa Valencia said.

The sewer and water line installation has been dependent on intermittent availability of federal Community Development Grants to Midland County. The grant funds have largely been matched

Man's relatives give testimony about aunt's, his relationship

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Relatives of a man who killed his elderly aunt last year testified Thursday about his difficult childhood and the antagonistic relationship he had with her.

Colby Ryan Goodman's adopted mother said she was afraid "he might do it again."

Goodman, 19, pleaded guilty Tuesday to the May 2, 1994, stabbing death of his 77-year-old aunt, Wanda Lucille Goodman. The slaying followed a dispute the two had over the location of some of her jewelry, according to a police detective.

Sue McDaniel, Goodman's aunt and adopted mother, testified Goodman told her he stabbed the victim because she called him a "bastard."

The woman was found in a storage unit behind the house at 3515 Thomas Ave. that she shared with the defendant. She had been stabbed about 18 times, including one stab to the head that left the tip of the knife embedded in her skull.

Wings 'n' Things to animate CAF event

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Aerobatic flying and air-power demonstrations will enliven the sky over Midland International Airport Saturday and Sunday when the Confederate Air Force presents "Wings 'n' Things."

Bob Rice, the CAF's executive director, said the event's aerial and ground shows are shaping up. "We have programmed good weather and winds not to exceed 8 miles per hour."

He said various airplanes are to be flown in precision aerobatic maneuvers and in straight-and-level flights. Other aircraft — including vintage World War II warplanes, classic and antique general-aviation airplanes and modern jet-powered aircraft — will be on static display.

Flying acts, which begin each day at 2 p.m., include power maneuvers by World War II pilot Lefty Gardner in his twin-boom Lockheed P-38 Lightning; Ole Olsen in his aerobatic Extra 230 monoplane; pilots flying World War I biplanes out of Arizona; and other aviators demonstrating their skills in helicopters and jet fighters.

"It will be classic," Rice said of Gardner's series of flights. "Lefty is absolutely masterful at putting an

Milling about: Midland needs to get back to West Texas ways

Todd

Milling. That is what the world — particularly Midland — needs today. Milling around.

We don't seem to do it much anymore. Not in the business world hereabouts.

Hand-shake deals, in the main, seem to be as rare as 10-gallon hats, high-topped cowboy boots, drugstore soda fountains, typewriters, leaky ol' fountain pens, galloping horses and ambling cowhands in downtown Midland.

What has become of hand-shake deals and letter-writing and chewing the fat and gazing toward the horizon?

Well, hand-shake deals have succumbed to lawyers, contracts, sneaky trades and facsimiles — those ubiquitous fax machines that virtually nobody can do without. There is a fax-hold over businessmen and businesswomen in the 1990s, just as photocopying took hold a couple of decades earlier.

Now. We want it now. And, presently, we will forget the urgency and wonder why we fell to the craving.

It seems that all too often we lose the patience, the art, the finesse and the caring associated with note-writing and letter-writing and posting the messages. The process gives us all time for reflection.

Milling around town does that, too.

We need to reflect, not just respond and react.

Of Midland's old heydays, I hear of the glitter and doom of the droughts and of the boom-to-bust years. And I note old-timers' sentimental reflections on hand-shake deals in the old Hotel Scharbauer cafe, in Agnes' old cafe, in The Spot and in other nickel-coffee shops in days long ago.

I hear of community rodeos over at Fairgrounds Road and grand-champion steers — big ol' calves — year after year bellowing over hay in the lobby of the grand old hotel.

Back then, Midland, a West Texas town, you know, was Western. Gentlemen dressed Western: boots, cowboy hats, pants, shirts, coats and all. Now, we are looking more like Dallas than Fort Worth. We may be

Former Midlander to take post as Richardson's city manager

From Staff Reports

Bill Keffler is a 1971 graduate of Lee High School.

Former Midlander Bill Keffler has been appointed to the city manager's post in Richardson.

The City Council named Keffler to his new position in the wake of City Manager Bob Hughey's retirement.

Keffler, a 1971 graduate of Lee High School, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Keffler of Midland.

"Bill Keffler is an excellent fit for the position of Richardson city manager," Mayor Gary Slagel said. "On the basis of his 18 years of service with the city, his most recent position as deputy city manager and his various leadership roles within the Dallas/Fort Worth region, Bill is well-qualified to deal with the future opportunities and challenges facing Richardson."

Keffler, who held the position of deputy city manager since October 1985, began his tenure with the city in 1977 when he joined the staff as an administrative assistant.

He was promoted to assistant to the city manager in 1979, and in October 1981, he was named assistant city manager.

"I am grateful to the City Council for their vote of support," Keffler said. "I am honored to be provided this opportunity to continue my association with the outstanding public service commitment so well reinforced by the city of Richardson employees."

Keffler graduated from the University of Notre Dame in 1975 with a bachelor's degree in government and received his master of public administration from Texas Tech in 1977.

He has received numerous professional recognitions, including an "Alumni of the Year" award presented in 1986 by The Center for Public Service at Texas Tech. He was selected as "Outstanding Civil Servant" by the Richardson Jaycees in 1989 and was honored as "Citizen of the Year" by the Richardson Central Rotary Club for 1992-93.

Keffler is affiliated with several community organizations. He is on the board of directors of the Richardson Central Rotary Club, is co-chairman of the Richardson Chamber of Commerce Industrial Development Committee, is on the board of directors and the executive committee for the Richardson YMCA, is a member of the Richardson Junior League Advisory Board and serves as president of the parish advisory council for St. Paul The Apostle Catholic Church.

Keffler and his wife, Chrissie, have five children, Abby, Joe, Sam, Ellis and Will.

RELATIVES: Goodman's family takes stand in trial

(From 1B)

Five relatives testified Goodman had a short attention span and was immature. Each also testified that the victim "picked" on Goodman.

One of Ms. Goodman's sisters testified she warned the victim not to try and discipline Goodman, who lived with his adopted parents and Ms. Goodman.

"I told her to leave him alone because you never know when he's gonna blow his top," Iola Deaver said.

She said she warned her sister because she has read so much about teen violence. She said she also asked Goodman to respect Ms. Goodman and walk away when she picked on him.

Ms. Deaver said that when Goodman would call the McDaniels his mother and father, Ms. Goodman would tell him they weren't.

"I told her not to say it anymore because it was cruel because he didn't have anyone," she said.

Ms. Deaver said she wanted to help Goodman, "but I don't want him off free."

The son of Goodman's adopted parents, Keith McDaniel, testified that Ms. Goodman was antagonistic toward Goodman and was always finding fault.

Keith McDaniel's wife said Ms. Goodman would criticize Goodman by telling him things such as, he was taking too much ice, drinking too many soda pops, eating her food and telling him to turn down his stereo.

Sue McDaniel said she has had custody of Goodman since he was 6 years old and said he has always had emotional problems.

When he was 11, she said she and her husband, Carl, placed Goodman in a psychiatric hospital because he was depressed and suicidal. She said the hospital stay was a bad influence on him because he was placed with drug and alcohol-abusing teens. She said that after a nine-week stay she removed him without the doctor's approval.

She said he was diagnosed with attention deficit disorder at that time and placed on medication that improved his school performance.

Mrs. McDaniel said Goodman was "under tremendous pressure" before his aunt's slaying because he was going to school all day and then attending night classes in order to graduate on time. He was also spending extra time at school to complete an industrial technology project, she said.

She testified that Ms. Goodman was "on to Colby all the time. Whatever Colby would do, if we didn't see it ... she would tattle to us."

She said the victim was never affectionate with Goodman and said she treated him differently from her other nieces and nephews and blamed him for anything that happened.

On the night of the murder, Mrs. McDaniel said everything seemed normal when she and her husband left the house to eat dinner with their daughter. She said Goodman called them at her daughter's house and said something had happened to Ms. Goodman.

When the McDaniels arrived at the house, she said they saw Goodman crying hysterically in the driveway with blood on his hands, shirt and legs. Later that night, Goodman reportedly confessed to police.

"I was in shock ... when I got to see him I asked him why ... I asked him why and he put his arms around me and his head on my shoulder and said 'She called me a bastard. She called me a bastard,'" Mrs. McDaniel said.

Mrs. McDaniel said that was not the first time Ms. Goodman had referred to her nephew in that term.

Despite this, she characterized the victim as a very good woman who was kind to Goodman at times.

She said she loves Goodman, but doesn't want him in her home.

Midland County Assistant District Attorney Robin Sams asked her, "I know it's uncomfortable, but you are scared of Colby, aren't you?"

After a hesitation, Mrs. McDaniel replied: "I guess you could say I would be. I wouldn't feel safe ... he might do it again. But my biggest fear is for my grandchildren."

She said he never threatened her or her grandchildren, but added she believes he "needs help."

Also testifying Thursday on Goodman's behalf was his industrial technology teacher from last year. The teacher indicated that Goodman got off to a slow start in the class and showed symptoms of ADD, such as impulsiveness and short attention span.

He said Goodman won first place at a regional competition for a lamp he built and also received a superior rating at state competition.

A remodeler testified that Goodman was a good worker on the jobs he assisted him with and said he had told Goodman he could have a job with him following his graduation if business was still good.

Testimony, which began Wednesday in the punishment phase of the trial, will resume this morning.

Goodman could be sentenced in the range of five to 99 years or life in prison. Goodman remains in the Midland County Detention Center in lieu of $50,000 bond.

with A-1 Mobile Homes in Bryan, was indicted for allegedly making a fraudulent application to a "federally chartered or insured financial institution."

In the indictment, Davis is alleged to have filled out a loan application, listing the buyer's income as $2,000 a month when the buyer's stated income was $1,213 a month. The buyer was listed as having his present job for two years, when he had only been employed for three months, according to the indictment.

■ Jessie Lee Brooks was indicted on five counts, including conspiracy to distribute crack cocaine, possession of crack cocaine within 1,000 feet of Central Park in Odessa, possession of a .380 semi-automatic pistol in the commission of these offenses, being a convicted felon in possession of a firearm and "knowing and having reasonable cause to believe that said firearm was stolen.

Gwendolyn Cooks was indicted with Brooks on the cocaine charges. A U.S. attorney has asked that the charges against both be enhanced because more than five grams of cocaine were allegedly involved.

■ Terry Don Fillmore was indicted for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute.

■ Claude Wayne Chadwick was indicted for the federal crime of being a convicted felon in possession of a .30-30 caliber rifle that had been transported in interstate commerce.

Odessa resident, '95 nursing graduates to represent campus at commencement

From Staff Reports

LUBBOCK — Betsy Triplett-Hurt and the Class of '95 from the School of Nursing in the Permian Basin will represent the Odessa regional campus today and Saturday at commencement exercises for Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center (TTUHSC).

Ms. Triplett-Hurt will receive the Dean's Distinguished Service Award for 1995.

She becomes the third Odessa resident to receive the award. Former State Representative Gary Watkins received the award in 1990, and Dr. William Wiesner, who helped break ground for the regional campus, earned the 1984 award.

Ms. Triplett-Hurt is a 1973 graduate of Texas Tech and has been an Odessa resident for more than 20 years. She serves on the Advisory Council for TTUHSC-Odessa, the campus' Medical Foundation and the President's Council for Texas Tech.

This year's TTUHSC-Odessa graduates are: Dwight Barry, Vicki Flowers, Diane Hogan, Vanessa Wilson and Charlotte Wright, all of Midland; Beth Avary, Tracey Bailey, Ronnell Carlson, Mary Douglas, Zassar Gatson, Cheryl Gilbreath, Francisca Ju, Jeanine Latham and Cindy Marriner, all of Odessa; and Carol Reyes, Karen Stevens and Ming Taylor, all of Big Spring.

Church to host track, field event

From Staff Reports

A track & field event, sponsored by Mount Rose Baptist Church Sanctuary Choir, begins at 9 a.m. Saturday at Memorial Stadium.

Activities include 100-, 200- and 400-meter runs, 400-meter relay, long jumps and softball throwing. They are open to children between the ages of 5 and 18.

The seven churches or youth groups with the best times will qualify for the finals. The church or youth group that accumulates the largest number of points will win the trophy. However, all participants will receive some type of recognition.

Churches requiring registration forms may acquire them by calling Carolyn Palmer, 684-6550. Registration is $2 an individual for each event.

ACCORD: City to enter final phase of service agreement by in-kind services to the county along with some county funds, Ms. Valencia said.

"By the time we are finished with this project, it will be over $1 million ... and a lot of headache," she said.

Plans for the city to supply sewer and water services to the windowpane area dates back almost a dozen years. An informal city-county agreement made in 1984 reportedly called for the city to annex the area contingent on the county providing water and sewer lines.

But when the City Council considered annexation in May 1992, the measure was denied because of drainage and street problems that the city also would acquire.

Ms. Valencia, who inherited the situation when she assumed office seven years ago, maintained the city reneged on its promise.

"I'm still going to the city for annexation as soon as this (current) project is finished," she said.

Ms. Valencia said incorporating the area boxed in by the city makes sense and would better the lives of residents.

"If you just cross the street (to the north) you're at Midland Freshman ... and Travis Elementary to the east," she said.

Being within the city limits would provide needed police service and local ordinances, she said.

airplane through its paces."

Ground-level activities will include carnival rides, a medley of musical acts and trade and information booths. Antique and exotic automobiles also will be on exhibit.

Admission is $4 for adults and $2 for children 6 to 12; children under 6 are admitted free. Gates will be open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Near the CAF hangar will be military re-enactment groups who, in uniform and arms, will represent the armed services in the Civil War period, World War I, World War II, the Korean War and the Vietnam War.

During Wings 'n' Things, admission to the American Airpower Heritage Museum will be free.

Nearby in the CAF hangar will be the latest museum exhibit: "The Dynamics of Flight."

"We want to create the awe (of flight)," said museum Director Tami O'Bannion.

Through working exhibits and film footage, such as "The History of Flying Flops," the exhibit features a wind tunnel to demonstrate lift, gravity, thrust and drag; has a cut-away of a radial engine to demonstrate the force turning the propeller; and a scale model of the Republic P-47 Thunderbolt fighter from the World War II era.

SUNDAY
WELCOME TO YOUR WORLD, GRADUATES!
It's a world we've been preparing for you. And, hopefully, you are now prepared by academic training to receive it. Find your place and success, and make a difference. But I've got to warn you...it won't be easy!
But you can do it. Solomon said in Ecclesiastes 12:1, "Remember now your Creator in the days of your youth, before the days of trouble come and the years approach when you will say, 'I find no pleasure in them.'" Sounds like good advice.
No matter that God is a bad word at school, and gangs and sex and drugs seem to dominate your world. When you get close to God, and stay, such trash will go away.
It's still a world of opportunity and blessings. So, welcome! Take your education, and God, and go to work making it a better place...right now!

NASA restructuring plan won't crush space center

■ Sweeping agenda to be unveiled today will nick — not unfairly — Johnson Space Center, state lawmakers say.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Johnson Space Center will preserve thousands of engineering jobs that NASA had contemplated transferring to Alabama, Texas lawmakers said Thursday.

Emerging from a meeting with NASA Administrator Daniel Goldin, the Texans said the sweeping restructuring plan the space agency will unveil today nicks Johnson Space Center — but not unfairly.

Goldin and the Texans declined to discuss job loss numbers or any details of the agency-wide restructuring in advance of today's announcement.

"I think when we have our press conference tomorrow, you will see that we haven't done anything dumb," Goldin said.

But, he cautioned: "We have made some cuts; they will impact human beings."

Goldin, who is being squeezed by both the Clinton administration and Congress to cut spending, reiterated that Johnson Space Center and its employees "are absolutely critical to the NASA mission."

Said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, who hosted the meeting with Goldin and a handful of Texas lawmakers: "The good news is our engineering function is going to stay at the Johnson Space Center."

"We are going to see reductions like every other part of NASA, but we are going to see relatively fewer reductions," he added.

Four of the Houston-area House members attended the meeting with Goldin, as did Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas; and Rep. Ralph Hall, D-Rockwall, who is ranking Democrat on the House space subcommittee. Rep. Steve Stockman, R-Friendswood, whose district includes Johnson Space Center, didn't attend.

In recent days, the Texas lawmakers had discounted reports that NASA would move thousands of Johnson engineering jobs to the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala. — a proposal under review earlier this year.

The engineering component accounts for thousands of the Texas space center's 14,200 civilian and private contractor jobs.

The restructuring was prompted by a directive from President Clinton to prune the space agency's $14 billion budget by $1 billion annually in each of the next five years.

Those cuts will result in thousands of jobs lost within the space agency's 22,000-person work force and significantly more in the ranks of private contractors who do business with NASA. The Washington Post has reported the job losses could total 55,000 by 2002.

For their part, House Republicans want to reduce NASA's budget to $11.7 billion by 2000 — some $1.3 billion more in cuts annually than the administration wants.

Gov. George W. Bush signs five tort reform bills into law Thursday in Austin. Behind Bush are sponsors of the bill, from left to right, Rep. Todd Hunter, D-Corpus Christi, Sen. David Sibley, R-Waco, and Sen. Florence Shapiro, R-Plano.

Governor makes 5 bills legal that limit lawsuits

■ Signing marks passage of one of Bush's top four legislative priorities; other three — education, welfare, juvenile justice reform — are still pending.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Gov. George W. Bush celebrated passage of one of his top legislative priorities Thursday by signing five bills into law aimed at stopping frivolous lawsuits and limiting damages awarded in civil court.

Bush called the measures "job creation bills" and brushed aside criticism that they will strip away valuable consumer protections.

"To the critics I say, 'You're wrong,'" Bush said. "This will make Texas even a better place with a better economy."

Calling it protection for wrongdoers, Tim Curtis of Texas Citizen Action, said: "The signing of these bills is a blatant attack on the citizens of Texas and their ability to do safe business in the state."

The five bills limit where civil lawsuits can be filed; prohibit frivolous lawsuits; limit the percentage of fault in a civil claim involving multiple defendants; limit the liability of government employees; and prohibit frivolous medical malpractice claims.

Bush had earlier signed a bill limiting punitive damages.

"The people of Texas rallied, organized, went to seminars and made a difference in shaping public opinion that enabled Texas to be on the leading edge of tort reform for the country," Bush said.

The bill signings marked passage of one of Bush's top four legislative priorities. The other three — education, welfare and juvenile justice reform — are still pending.

Bush signed the bills at El Arroyo restaurant, owned by former University of Texas and Detroit Lions football star Doug English. English is an active member of Citizens Against Lawsuit Abuse and a Bush supporter.

"As a small business owner, we literally live in constant fear of being sued," English said.

"That fear needs to be there for all business owners, and that fear will be there regardless of these bills. But what we live in constant fear of is being sued frivolously."

English's Mexican restaurant is known for its whimsical messages posted each day on a roadside sign.

Thursday's message was: "Tortilla Reform. You Don't Pay If It's Nacho Fault."

Richard Weekley, president of Texans for Lawsuit Reform, a pro-business group that helped write most of the bills signed by Bush, praised legislators.

"We think it's the most far-reaching tort reform literally in decades, so we are extraordinarily pleased," Weekley said.

The last significant civil justice reform measure, which revises the state's laws against deceptive trade, is expected to be approved by the House and sent to Bush in the next few days.

"The deceptive trade bill will be signed shortly," Bush said.

The governor said he also would sign a proposal by Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, that would call for mandated rollbacks in insurance premiums in light of the civil justice reforms.

Stiles said insurance groups have complained that their costs were being driven up by unreasonable civil claims. Stiles said he wants to ensure that Texans reap the benefits of the reforms.

No-new-taxes budget totals $79.7 million

AUSTIN (AP) — Public education is a winner in a no-new-taxes state budget that will pay for government services in 1996-97, lawmakers said Thursday.

Rep. Rob Junell, D-San Angelo, top House negotiator on the committee that worked out differences between House and Senate budget proposals, said public education would receive $2 billion more than is currently being spent. The increase would include $292 million for a teacher pay raise.

"The governor, lieutenant governor and speaker of the House all said to make public education number one," Junell said. "We took that seriously and that's what we've done."

The Legislative Budget Board says that the state's next two-year spending plan tentatively totals $79.7 billion, an increase in state funding of $4.8 billion or 6.5 percent compared to 1994-95.

The House-Senate conference committee on appropriations finished technical work on the bill Thursday. After the voluminous bill is printed, the committee will take a final vote on the measure and forward it to each chamber for consideration.

The Texas Constitution requires that the comptroller set the maximum amount the state can spend during the next two years.

Andy Welch, a spokesman for Comptroller John Sharp, said the budget plan will be "a real tight fit in terms of meeting certification."

"We can't certify the bill until we have had a chance to review it in detail, line by line," Welch said. "That could take days, if not weeks."

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said this week he feared that the budget proposal might be close to violating constitutional spending limits.

"We can't have that," Bullock said.

Junell said, "I think it's a responsible budget. It doesn't fill all the needs ... but I think it fills the basic needs of Texans without having to raise taxes."

Gov. George W. Bush has made education one of his top legislative priorities.

According to the Legislative Budget Board, the proposed spending plan comprises $45.3 billion in general revenue funds, an increase of $4.6 billion or 11.4 percent over current levels. General revenue includes the sales and corporate franchise taxes.

Judge doesn't reduce Selena slaying suspect's bond

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A judge on Thursday denied the request to lower the bond of the woman charged with killing Tejano music star Selena.

Yolanda Saldivar, 34, will continue to be jailed on $500,000 bond on a charge of murder under the ruling by state District Judge Mike Westergren.

Calling the $500,000 bond excessive, court-appointed defense attorney Doug Tinker had asked Westergren to reduce it to $10,000. Prosecutors opposed any reduction in bond.

It was Ms. Saldivar's first appearance in court since she was arrested after the March 31 shooting at a Corpus Christi motel.

Ms. Saldivar founded the Selena Fan Club and was a personal assistant to the star. She also managed Selena's boutique in San Antonio.

Selena's father and manager, Abraham Quintanilla Jr., told investigators that Ms. Saldivar had embezzled more than $30,000 from his daughter's businesses.

Ms. Saldivar has pleaded innocent. The trial is scheduled for Oct. 9.

uptown, but we still are out West.

And Western folk mill, mill around. It seems like we ought, somehow, to get back into acting and being more friendly and neighborly to our friends and neighbors and to passersby. They are just as apt to be friends and neighbors as not.

Perhaps we ought to take the time to write and reflect and mail and not be so hasty to jot and fax or pick up the telephone and chatter.

It would just seem so honest and so genuine to mill around with folk with whom we deal and to break the bread of fellowship.

Jurassic Park revisited

Scientists revive bacteria from 25 million years of hibernation inside fossilized insect

WASHINGTON (AP) — When an ancient stingless bee died after becoming trapped in tree sap, bacteria in its gut turned into a spore. Now, in an experiment reminiscent of "Jurassic Park," scientists have awakened the bacteria from a 25-million-year sleep.

Not only is the prehistoric microbe alive and well, it is producing a natural antibiotic that is being studied to determine if it has any medical value, Raul J. Cano of California Polytechnic University said Thursday.

Cano said the bacteria spore was found in the remains of a bee that had been entombed in amber, a hardened resin from ancient pine trees. When the bee died, he said, the bacteria apparently turned into a spore and remained trapped until it was uncovered in the laboratory.

■ More national news/3D

"Some bacteria make spores as a means of survival," Cano said. "These spores are very resistant to chemicals, heat and to pressure. They enable a bacteria to withstand long periods of dormancy."

The researcher said the spores were not a form of reproduction for the bacteria, but a type of hibernation.

"They were in a deep slumber and we reawakened them," said Cano.

The amber that contained the bee was age-dated at 25 million to 40 million years. Bacteria also have been found in amber that is at least 135 million years old, but Cano said this specimen has not been studied closely and its uniqueness has not been confirmed.

A report on the research, by Cano and Monica K. Borucki, also of Cal Poly, is to be published Friday in Science, the journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The study resembles work described in the novel and movie "Jurassic Park." In that fictional plot, scientists recovered dinosaur DNA from mosquitoes that had been preserved in amber. The bee in the Cal Poly amber lived millions of years after dinosaurs died out.

Other researchers applauded Cano's work, but questioned whether the bacteria are, in fact, a modern contaminant and not from spores stored in the amber.

"The data are consistent with it being ancient," Peter Setlow, a University of Connecticut biochemist, said in Science. But he said the work did not actually prove the age of the bacteria. Others said the work needs to be duplicated by other labs to be accepted.

But Cano said the uniqueness of the ancient bee bacteria has already been identified by a drug company, Amberjean, Inc. of San Francisco, and Cal Poly has sold the microbe to the firm. Phone messages seeking comment from Amberjean were not returned.

In the experiment, Cano and Borucki obtained from a dealer some Dominican amber that contained remains of an extinct, stingless bee.

The researchers sterilized the surface of the amber and placed it inside a glass cabinet designed for the study of specimens in a germ-free environment. This prevented outside bacteria from contaminating the specimens.

Cano said the amber was cracked open and the bee removed. Spores found in the bee's stomach were then separated and cultured. They quickly revived.

The genetic pattern of the bacteria is unique, said Cano, but very similar to Bacillus sphaericus, a modern microbe that plays a key role in the lives of bees.

"This bacteria helps bees digest food that they couldn't digest otherwise," said Cano. He said bees also use the bacteria in their hives to preserve the food supply and to protect against disease.

Bacillus sphaericus does this by making an antibiotic that kills other bacteria, said Cano. "Making the natural antibiotic is part of the microbe's strategy of survival," he said. "It kills competing bacteria."

AIDS activists say they are not surprised about FBI surveillance

By Andrea Hamilton
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The FBI is spying on AIDS activists and gay rights groups, apparently out of fear they might resort to violence or throw infected blood during demonstrations, according to FBI documents and a civil rights group.

The documents, made public under the Freedom of Information Act, indicate that informants gave the FBI information and that the bureau has had its own people at some meetings.

The documents were obtained by the Center for Constitutional Rights, based in New York City.

The records involve surveillance of the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power, or ACT UP, in 1990 and 1991. The FBI refused to release 177 pages of the 199-page file, claiming "ongoing law enforcement activity."

The Justice Department told the center in releasing the file that the FBI also has files on the Gay Men's Health Crisis, the Coalition for Lesbian and Gay Rights and Senior Action in a Gay Environment, said Michael E. Deutsch, legal director for the constitutional rights group.

The FBI's spokesman in New York, Joe Valiquette, said the FBI had no comment on its surveillance practices.

ACT UP said it announces at the start of every meeting that undercover officers probably are present.

"It's just a given they're there, and it's a waste of their time," said Ann Northrop, an AIDS educator and a spokeswoman for ACT UP. "I think the Oklahoma bombing proves that they're looking in the wrong place for trouble."

The activist group has never committed violent acts, including throwing blood or condoms, Northrop said.

One memo shows agents were worried about AIDS contamination at demonstrations.

After a 1990 ACT UP protest outside the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., the FBI's office in Silver Spring, Md., issued a memo saying: "No infected blood or used condoms were exhibited or thrown."

Another memo, containing blacked-out material from an informant, describes ACT UP members pouring "theatrical blood over the fence" at a protest near the Capitol in Washington on Oct. 1, 1991.

ACT UP is known for its loud, highly emotional demonstrations. Members have carried makeshift coffins during protests, held "die-ins" and chained themselves to the White House gate.

"We are loud and angry, and we yell at people," Northrop said. "If you embarrass the government in public, it is just a given they will spy on you."

"This has been going on forever," said Eleanor Cooper, a spokeswoman for the Coalition for Lesbian and Gay Rights who has been an activist for more than two decades. "They're very good at spying on us, but they've never been good at spying on people like those miserable creatures in Oklahoma."

"What really needs to be investigated is why the government isn't spending all their time and efforts and money on finding a cure for AIDS," said Stephen Soba, a spokesman for the Gay Men's Health Crisis. The nonprofit group provides a range of services for people with AIDS.

Deutsch said the center requested the documents as part of a project for law students.

"At the same time that the FBI is telling us it needs more resources to look into right-wing groups, it is wasting time and money on peaceful, nonviolent groups," he said. "It's a question of priorities, and the priorities are wrong.

"I think they should monitor and infiltrate groups that talk about guns, violence and hate."

Self-styled patriots traffic beliefs in popular tabloids

By Arlene Levinson
Associated Press

Readers of The Spotlight, a fear-mongering tabloid look-alike, were treated last September to a report describing Soviet-made tanks spotted on U.S. highways and railroads.

"American Citizens Want to Know ... IS OUR TOWN NEXT? Why Are Strange Military Maneuvers Taking Place All Over America?" the headline screamed. The Spotlight never named an enemy. It never stated the presumed purpose of tanks and other vehicles shown in photographs. It only implied a nasty surprise, which would take place with President Clinton's consent.

"Obviously, the military has done nothing about it, which leads many to suspect that its intentions are not altogether innocent," The Spotlight said.

The Spotlight, which claims a weekly circulation of 100,000, comes from the Washington-based Liberty Lobby, an organization the Anti-Defamation League calls an anti-Semitic "network of hate."

Like scores of publications, newsletters, Internet chatter, radio shows and other sources, the tabloid traffics in the folklore of the paranoid.

Here's a sampling of beliefs offered in the popular literature of self-styled American patriots:

■ The United Nations plans to take over the U.S. Army, police the United States with foreign troops, and disarm all Americans.

n Rewritten versions of the Bill of Rights and the U.S. Constitution have been drafted in wait for a U.S. takeover by the New World Order.

■ The United States owns aircraft propelled by unconventional means, described as the flying boomerang, the flying cigar, the classical disk and teardrop.

■ A U.S. military training compound in Fort Polk, La., is really the United Nations North American training center.

■ State and federal governments are conspiring to subvert and eliminate your local sheriff.

■ The federal government plans to stage fake chemical spills in a few towns in Texas and Kansas, prompting evacuations that will allow "government forces" to search homes for guns and other contraband.

■ Dots on the front of road signs in Michigan signal directions for invading U.N. forces.

■ Stickers on the back of road signs in Colorado, bearing codes such as CDOT95, designate routes for takeover forces. So do bar codes on the back of highway signs.

■ President Clinton will hire 100,000 Hong Kong Chinese for his personal police and order them to seize every gun in America.

■ Electronic devices the size of a rice grain allow the government to track people anywhere in the world, change their mood and personality and control reproduction.

The conspiracies and imagined secrets spin out, endlessly and everywhere. Last fall, officials at Yellowstone National Park got calls from people asking if the United Nations was running the park.

"We assured them it isn't," said Cheryl Matthews, a park spokeswoman in Mammoth Hot Springs, Wyo., "that it's managed by the National Park Service, a federal agency, and it's owned by the American people."

Social psychologists and scholars of myth say these scary stories are invented and believed by people who need to explain their misfortunes and discomforts in life.

Youth enroll in newly chartered high school for teens with chemical dependency

By Michael Dougan
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. — Amy Becker, 15, bottomed out — and started her climb to the top — when she was arrested for smoking pot during a lunch break.

Thera Fleming, 18, remembers "almost dying" from her dependence on methamphetamines.

Sixteen-year-old Evan got straight when his parents put him into a Wyoming treatment center.

These three Marin County, Calif., teen-agers once lived with a painful present and a future clouded by addiction.

Now they are learning to love sobriety. Beginning in September "people like us" — as Becker put it — will have a school of their own: They're naming it Sobriety High.

The charter high school for teenagers with chemical dependencies was approved recently by the county Board of Education. It must now get a nod from the state Department of Education.

Many school districts already have drop-out prevention programs for high school students that include drug and alcohol counseling. But schools focusing on drug-addicted and alcohol-dependent kids are new. There are two in Arizona and one in Minnesota. And as teen substance abuse escalates — the surgeon general's office says a third of seniors admit to heavy drinking — more may be on the way.

Fleming, a senior, described her experience with "crank" during a break from studies in the Sober Classroom, a 4-year-old program in San Rafael that serves as a prototype for Sobriety High.

"I got addicted to a drug that took me down pretty fast," she said.

AFTER OBSERVING distressing changes in their daughter's behavior, her parents forced her into the special class.

"Everyone in this class, when they first came in here, didn't want to be here," Fleming admitted. "I was scared, really scared. I came here just to get people off my back."

Fleming said she quickly realized that the Sober Classroom was where she wanted to be. Now she smiles easily as she talks about a future that includes college and a career: She hopes to be a cop.

Evan, who asked that his last name be withheld, sat nearby reading Bertrand Russell's "A History of Western Philosophy."

"Until last year," he admitted, "I pretty much used anything put in front of me. My drugs of choice were pot and psychedelics."

The Redwood High School student from San Rafael said that on June 5 "I will have been sober for a year, God willing. If you want to stay sober, you find out how by coming here."

'Everyone in this class, when they first came in here, didn't want to be here. I was scared, really scared. I came here just to get people off my back.'
— Thera Fleming

Becker once smoked marijuana "from the time I got up until the time I went to bed."

A DRUG bust led her into the Sober Classroom. "I look at getting arrested as the best thing that ever happened in my life," said the freshman.

Currently, only those Marin teen-agers whose substance abuse brings them to the attention of probation or school authorities get into the Sober Classroom, according to Liza Schwartz, principal in charge of that program and future administrator of Sobriety High.

With the expansion, students who simply know they need help will be able to apply, Schwartz said.

"We're going to be able to serve kids who are not yet blacking out, not yet experiencing a decrease in tolerance, but (for whom) drugs and alcohol are affecting their lives," she said.

Officials said Sobriety High will accept up to 47 students. The Sober Classroom has a capacity of 18.

"To many people's surprise, there are many more kids in Marin County who could benefit," said Tom Peters, chief of Marin County's Health and Human Services Department. His offices, as well as the county Probation Department, will help provide services to Sobriety High students, said Mary Jane Burke, county school superintendent.

PARENTS WILL also play a big role in the program, said Clara MacNa mee, a veteran teacher and substance abuse counselor who created, and teaches, the Sober Classroom. Currently, she said, "parents are required to come here every Wednesday night for a Multi-Family Group and (after that) a Parent Support Group."

To get a desk at Sobriety High, students and their parents must sign contracts with the school district. Students will vow to abstain from booze and dope, submit to random urine analysis and join a program such as Alcoholics Anonymous.

Parents will promise to provide a sober home environment, attend weekly group meetings and volunteer to work at the school for a minimum of four hours a month.

'This is the greatest thing ever, no kidding. This is the kind of program that will save students' lives.'
—Mary Jane Burke
county school superintendent

Burke said the program will add $70,000 in cost to the current county school budget. Other money will come from the Marin Community Foundation, Marin General Hospital, county agencies and student enterprises such as bake sales and dances.

"(This) is the greatest thing ever, no kidding," Burke said. "This is the kind of program that will save students lives."

FAMILY MATTERS

Woman suspects her friend's fiance is being unfaithful

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: I have a good friend who I have known ever since we moved to Midland almost 12 years ago. We've been through a lot together, including having one of my babies and two of hers. She's also been through the pain of having her husband leave her because of another woman. My friend is a wonderful person and mother, and she was just destroyed by her husband's leaving her.

May

She started dating recently and has fallen in love with the first person who really showed some interest in her. I and the rest of her friends and family have warned her about getting serious with someone so soon (six months) after her divorce. But I guess if I were in her position, I might not listen to anyone either. I really do believe that she's an adult and deserves the right to find her own happiness.

According to her, this guy is just perfect. He even does things with her kids and they really like that because their father moved away and rarely sees them. She hasn't told me much about him, but he has been married twice before and has a total of four children from the two marriages.

My problem is that three weeks ago my husband ran into this guy at a bar being real "friendly" with another woman. The guy didn't see my husband and left with the woman. My husband only told me because he was worried about our friend getting hurt again.

I've been worrying about this ever since because I didn't know if I should say anything to her or not. She seems so happy that I didn't want to spoil her happiness.

I talked with her yesterday and she said that they were planning on getting married in June. I didn't know what to say and I'm sure that she could tell that I didn't react the way she expected. She looked hurt that I wasn't thrilled like she wanted, and I really normally would have been.

My husband and I talked most of last night about whether or not I should tell her what he saw. I don't want to ruin our friendship but I really don't want her to get hurt like this again.

Should I tell her or should I just pretend that everything is fine? She even asked me to be in the wedding party. Should I do that knowing what I know? Please tell me what to do. I really need to do the right thing. CONFUSED

DEAR CONFUSED: Your friend is fortunate to have a concerned friend like you. I believe that you should tell her what your husband saw. The fact that she is considering getting married so soon after her divorce is scary enough. The research is clear in pointing to the importance of waiting about two years before considering remarriage. She needs time to process the grief and learn from the experiences of the failed marriage.

I believe that relationships are as ideal as they ever get during the courtship phase. If her fiance is demonstrating that he is possibly unfaithful to her during this phase, I would be very concerned about their future.

Find quiet time to meet with your friend to discuss your concerns. You may even find it easier to show her this column when you meet with her. Usually, what we do not know about relationships is what often proves to be the most painful in the future. I also strongly recommend that you give her a copy of Dr. Bruce Fisher's book, "Rebuilding: When Your Relationship Ends," as well as encouraging her to attend one or both of the divorce recovery workshops offered at Golf Course Road Church of Christ or First United Methodist Church.

THE FOLLOWING RULES FOR SAFETY FOR YOUR CHILDREN ARE OFFERED BY THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES:

- Before you go anywhere, check first — check with your parents or the person in charge.
- Tell your parents or the person in charge where you are going, how you will get there, who will be going with you and when you will be back.
- Check first for permission from your parents before getting into a car or leaving with anyone, even someone you know.
- It is safer for you to be with other people when going places or playing outside. Always use the "buddy system."
- You say NO if someone tries to touch you in ways that make you feel frightened, uncomfortable or confused.
- You know it is not your fault if someone touches you in a way that is not OK. You don't have to keep secrets about those touches.
- You trust your feelings and talk to grownups about problems that are too big for you to handle on your own. You are not alone.
- It is never too late to ask for help. You can keep asking until you get the help you need.
- You are a special person and deserve to feel safe.

'Frequent buyer' gifts are offered

By Patricia Rodriguez
N.Y. Times News Service

So, if you count points by the mile in frequent-flier programs, how do you count them in Harlequin's new frequent-romance-novel-reader program? By the smooch? The spat? The swoon?

Much simpler. In a nod to the frequent-purchaser programs that have proliferated in every business from airlines to coffeehouses to department stores, Harlequin this month begins rewarding readers who religiously buy the company's titles. The more books you buy, the more stuff you get — perfumes, hotel discounts, books and other incentives.

The program, believed to be the first by a publisher, is viewed by some analysts as just the latest weapon in the competitive romance field. About half of all mass-market paperbacks sold in the United States are romances. With total annual sales at an estimated $600 million, more publishing houses have entered the field in the past decade.

"People used to be very loyal to certain stores or products, but now they're looking for the best deal," says Al Meyers, vice president of Dallas' Management Horizons, the retail consulting division of Price Waterhouse. "That's (a reason) there are a lot of these programs now."

Harlequin's program starts with May titles. To get credit, participants must send in a cash register receipt and proof of purchase from the cover for each book. Prizes are awarded upon joining, and afterward in increments of 10 purchases.

"I think it's a great idea; it certainly brings the books into reality. You buy books and you can stay in a nice hotel, take a trip, get some new perfumes," says Kathryn Falk, publisher of Romantic Times magazine, which covers the romance-novel industry. However, the program is not likely to be copied by other publishers, romance or otherwise, Falk said.

Harlequin, which includes sister company Silhouette, is the largest of the dozen or so major romance-novel publishers, producing about 70 new titles each month in North America. Harlequin and Silhouette sell about one-sixth of all the mass-market paperbacks sold each year in this country, or about one-third of all romance paperbacks.

Other romance houses don't publish enough titles monthly to make such a program worth their economic while, analysts say. And it wouldn't work in most fields.

"I don't think you can say people usually buy other books based on the publisher; you wouldn't go out and buy all Random House books," says Meyers. "Romances are a special case."

To spank or not to spank: That is many parents' question

By Clare Collins
N.Y. Times News Service

Have you ever spanked your child? Perhaps a better question is, would you admit to it?

"We spank as a last resort, when the children are either very rebellious or very rude," said Kellie Nienajadly, a Syracuse, N.Y., mother of a 2-year-old and a 3-year-old. "There's only so much reasoning you can do with children this young."

On the other hand, Rose Zagaja, who lives outside Hartford and has two children, ages 7 and 8, adamantly opposes spanking. "I think it's degrading and infuriating" to the child, she said.

Ms. Nienajadly's and Ms. Zagaja's differing views point to an emotional debate over a form of discipline that few of today's adults escaped as children. Is spanking merely a quick and decisive form of discipline, or is it to be shunned as ineffective, even cruel?

A RECENT Harris poll found that spanking is far from an uncommon parental act: 80 percent of the 1,250 adults surveyed said they had spanked their children.

And 87 percent of those polled said that spanking is sometimes appropriate.

The telephone poll, conducted between Feb. 6 and 9, had a margin of error of plus or minus three percentage points. It did not ask respondents how frequently they spanked, nor did it define spanking.

The poll's findings run counter to the advice handed out by a growing number of child development experts who say spanking not only is ineffective but also breeds aggression.

"Spanking teaches kids that when someone is doing something you don't like and they won't stop doing it, you hit them," said Murray A. Straus, a professor of sociology at the University of New Hampshire in Durham and the author of "Beating the Devil Out of Them: Corporal Punishment in American Families" (Lexington Books, 1994), which argues against spanking.

Straus said that studies he had conducted found that children who are frequently spanked are more likely to act aggressively toward their peers and may then go on to be aggressive teen-agers and depressed, abusive adults.

ACCORDING TO Straus's definition, spanking refers to any kind of swatting or slapping "intended to cause a child physical pain but not injury, for purposes of correction or control."

"Spanking is very subjective," Straus said. "Some people think you have to hit hard enough to leave a mark that doesn't last very long. Others would define that as abuse." He would like to see corporal punishment outlawed in this country. Spanking is illegal in many European countries.

"Parents spank young children because they don't know what else to do," said Alvin Rosenfeld, a child psychiatrist in Manhattan and co-author of "The Art of the Obvious" with the late Bruno Bettelheim. "Spanking does work. It puts a stop on certain behaviors. But the question is, does it achieve what you're trying to achieve?"

Even the strongest of statements against physical punishment usually stop short of condemning parents who have spanked. "We're all human," said Linda S. Budd, a St. Paul psychologist and the author of "Living With the Active Alert Child" (Parenting Press, 1993).

"The fact that you lost it once and smacked your child doesn't mean you've ruined him for life. It does indicate a need to slow down and stop before you act."

SOME EXPERTS condone spanking, usually on an extremely limited basis when the issue is safety or willful disobedience. One of the most widely quoted is James C. Dobson, the author of "The New Dare to Discipline" (Tyndale House Publishers, 1992).

Dobson, who writes that his theories are firmly rooted in Judeo-Christian beliefs, advocates spanking for children between the ages of 18 months and 10 years who directly challenge a parent's authority. He states in his book that spanking — which should be done in a calm, "I'm doing this for your own good" fashion — "is the shortest route to an attitude adjustment."

John Rosemond, a psychologist, supports spanking but suggests it be followed by consequences appropriate to the misbehavior. For instance, if a child leaves the house when told not to and is spanked, the parent should then take away television or other privileges. Rosemond says spanking can be far less detrimental than extreme verbal abuse or overly severe punishment.

'Spanking is very subjection. Some people think you have to hit hard enough to leave a mark that doesn't last very long. Others would define that as abuse.'

— Murray A. Straus, sociology professor and author

More and more, though, spanking is emerging as the don't of the 1990s.

Dr. Budd said that she and most of her colleagues had given up on forms of therapy that change behaviors out of fear. She favors alternative methods of disciplining like time-outs and the taking away of privileges.

ALTHOUGH STILL a majority, the number of parents who spank is on the decline, said Straus, whose first study, in 1968, showed that "94 percent of the adult U.S. population believed it was sometimes necessary to give a child a spanking."

In a survey he conducted in 1994, Straus found that only 68 percent of the adult population — even fewer than in the Harris poll — believed in spanking. "In my line of work, that's actually an astronomical speed of social change," he said.

The Harris poll seems to support his contention that spanking is on the decline. It found that among the newest generation of parents — ages 18 to 24 — 31 percent said they had never spanked, compared with 19 percent among all parents. That trend is likely to continue, since the survey also found that most parents who were not spanked have not spanked their children.

Parents who do spank often feel they can't admit to it without risking harsh criticism. In a recent forum on Compuserve, the online service, only a handful of parents who responded to a query about spanking would speak for attribution.

"It used to be parents who didn't spank were the ones who wouldn't be quoted," Straus said. "They were seen as the crackpots."

SPANKING, ROSENFELD said, does nothing to further the long-term goal of successful parenting: raising happy, well-socialized adults.

"Spanking deprives you of an opportunity to show your child that you have superior reasoning skills," he added.

"I came to the realization that spanking isn't all that effective," said Jebbie Crowe of Mystic, Conn., who is the mother of six children ages 14 to 28. She spanked her oldest children but changed her theory with her youngest.

"My kids actually preferred it to other punishments because it was over quickly," she said. "It was an easy way out for both of us."

Dr. Budd says she believes that many parents spank because they have unrealistic expectations. "Often, parents just don't understand child development," she said. "They spank a child for being developmentally appropriate."

And rather than spanking a child who is rude or otherwise out of control, Rosenfeld recommended saying: "You must go to your room. I'm so disappointed in the way you're behaving. You are a good boy, a smart boy, but you are annoying me."

"In the long run," he added, "removing your approval works much better than spanking."

What if despite your best intentions, you do lose it? "Apologize," Dr. Budd said. "Own up to your mistake. That's parenting at its best."

Travel plans fall victim to illness

By Henry F. Page, M.D.

What greater joy can there be than to journey to far-off exotic climes, pilgrimage historic shrines, edify oneself with foreigh culture past and present, tour the good old USA or renew family relationships in distant places? The answer, dear reader, is arrival back home! The psychology resembles that of finally selling a recently acquired new boat.

Page

Scales measuring the "yin and yang" of pleasure travel varies with the advancing years of the voyageur. Originally yin reigns supreme with the achievement of the desired objection, while the yang effort seems negligible. Then with the passing of many years, the sheer mechanics and logistics of travel become increasingly stressful and magnified by the population explosion. This tips the scales to the harsher, negative yang side.

For example, consider the recent visit to our daughter and her family in Florida — a trip, incidently, from which I am still slowly recovering and thereby prejudicial. The day of departure required a 5 a.m. "rise and shine" alarm, jolting us out of a long established routine and thereby creating confusion as to timing medication, what to eat, what to wear and maintenance of digestive rhythm. The plane was prompt and well staffed, but therein lies a health problem now reaching almost desperate proporation. The cabin air became increasingly stuffy and the passengers rebreathed the communal exhalations, which includes variated viruses undetectable on air culture. Recently, even organisms the size of TB bacteria create some proven problems. Me thinks that on our plane there might have been a sick gentleman from central Africa!

The arrival in Jacksonville, greeting my healthy, happy daughter, son-in-law and grandson, provided a source of joy and profound satisfaction immeasurable in worldly terms. All went well until the next day, when on returning from a visit to St. Augustine, Carol (my lovely wife) suddenly developed a severe headache, followed by shaking chills, sweats, physical prostration, imbalance (two falls) plus all the symptoms of a severe fever. The usual signs – such as ear, throat, chest, lungs, GI tract, abnormal nerve function — were all absent. She remained bed bound for six days but finally, with the help of a wheelchair and attendant, could make the trip home. Our sole entertainment consisted of leaving Carol in the care of a 21-year-old Russian house guest and eloping to a nearby gay, artistic, flamboyant gourmet restaurant where the maitre'd moonlighted as the owner of a hair dressing salon for transvestites.

The return flight the next day featured good wheelchair service and the thrill of being squeezed into a mid-aisle seat by a young mother holding on her lap a 32-pound baby sick with cough and running ear and endowed with strong vocal cords and an active GI system.

Arrival home featured a duplication on my part of Carol's complaint and symptomology. For six days my temperature fluctuated between 102 and 104 degrees with the blood pressure falling below 100. I felt so low I could have put on stilts and walked under a rug. Maddeningly, the causative organism could not be identified, despite blood smears and counts, tests, X-rays and various cultures. The diagnosis thus becomes a FUO (fever unknown origin). The anedotal incidence of similar situations in other returning tourists appears quite high.

Tourism still remains a sound investment. Once you have actually seen a place or thing, no stock market crash or other misfortune can erase the memory which will permanently enrich your life, albeit the price may eventually be too high. Perhaps one should emulate Farraqut who, on visiting Mobile Bay, said: "Full speed ahead and damn the torpedoes."

My personal reaction to the above is that we just added another link in the chain of love that binds us together. Carol's comment, "We flew to Florida and got the flu."

Henry F. Page, M.D., F.A.C.P., is health and safety consultant to Midland Presbyterian Homes.

DEAR ABBY

Grief at husband's funeral is shared by his wife, ex-wife

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter in your column signed "Faithful Reader," asking if her husband should attend the funeral of his former wife.

Van Buren

Four weeks ago today, I lost my husband. He, too, had a former wife. He and "Chris" had been married for 12 years and had four children together. Their divorce had been very bitter, but fortunately, in the last year, they had come to terms with each other.

I invited Chris to attend the funeral, as it seemed to me that she, too, needed to say goodbye. I felt quite at ease including her in the family circle with all the children — his, mine and ours.

I agree with you, Abby, when you said the wishes of the immediate family should be respected.

Please let "Faithful Reader" know that whatever the decision is, she should support her husband when the time comes, as he will go through the grieving process.

My prayers are with them. You may use my name. — MARY KINSTLER, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

DEAR MARY: What a gracious, understanding woman you are. Because my column is a trouble dump, I rarely hear from anyone who has survived divorce with no bitter aftertaste.

How much better for the divorced couple — and the children — when they put the bitterness behind them and behave civilly toward each other. Anger and bitterness eat away at those who harbor these feelings, as well as those who are near and dear to them.

DEAR ABBY: This is the first Dear Abby letter I have ever written, so please answer.

We have lived in Northern California for three years, but my husband just got a new job that forces us to move to Southern California.

Our 17-year-old daughter refuses to move with us because she doesn't want to leave her friends and her school. I know it's hard for kids to move in their senior year, but she will be leaving for college in a year anyway.

I don't know if we should try to find a family for her to stay with during her senior year, or insist that she move with us. Please advise. — DESPERATE IN DANVILLE

DEAR DESPERATE IN DANVILLE: Your daughter is still a minor, and she must abide by your decision, but she is old enough to participate in making that decision. Much depends upon her level of maturity and whether there is a responsible family to whom you could entrust her. If she has a level head, you could allow her to spend her senior year with her classmates in the town she has grown to love.

DEAR ABBY: A quick note to add to the letter signed "Tired of Waiting" (in the outer offices of dentists and doctors):

How about the medical professionals whose patients are kept waiting anywhere from an hour to forever? They have a framed notice on their walls saying: "Appointments must be canceled 24 hours in advance, or patient will be billed for the visit."

Abby, how are patients supposed to know 24 hours in advance that they will have an emergency? — ELTHREE IN NASHUA, N.H.

DEAR ELTHREE: Good question. However, not all cancellations are due to emergencies. Some folks just have a change of plans, or an irresistible invitation. Readers?

DEAR ABBY: I am a high school student who is concerned about teen-age pregnancy. About 75 percent of the kids in my school are sexually active, and some even have children who are cared for by the school's day-care.

All schools should stress abstinence, but kids my age think they are invincible, and are not about to stop having sex because they are told not to. While students need to know the risks and consequences of sex, they also need information about how to protect themselves should they become sexually active.

If schools don't make the information available, there will be more children having children, unwed mothers on welfare, and teen-agers unable to finish their educations — not to mention those who feel abortion is the only choice. — CONCERNED VIRGIN IN WASHINGTON

DEAR CONCERNED: Thank you for an intelligent letter. You make a strong case for sex education in schools. Opponents of such programs fear that information will encourage sexual activity. But in reality, the lack of information puts teens at risk for pregnancy, sexually transmitted diseases, and possibly death.

DEAR READERS: "Make a bet every day; otherwise, you might walk around lucky and not even know it." (Jimmy Jones)

Good advice for everyone - teens to seniors — is in "The Anger in All of Us and How to Deal With It." To order, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Anger Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Abigail Van Buren's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Woman's dream house becomes reality in West Virginia

By Harriet Edleson
N.Y. Times News Service

It was the opening sentence of her letter that captured his interest: I just bought a lot on a cliff 350 feet above the Cacapon River in West Virginia, and I'm interested in building a house.

"It could have stopped right there and I'd still have accepted," Mark McInturff, the architect, said. "You just imagine Frank Lloyd Wright getting a letter like that about Falling Water."

The letter writer, Jane Couch, had something a lot simpler in mind for her weekend retreat: three barnlike structures that she had dreamed about for years. Once she even built her own scale model. Her cat chewed one corner off before Ms. Couch, a computer programmer in Washington, gave up on finding the right site.

Then in 1991, driving near Paw Paw, W.Va., about three hours from home, she came upon the cliff and ravine she had pictured in her mind many years before, five and a half acres of mostly wooded hillside. "Just enough flat space for a house," she remembers thinking.

Ms. Couch bought the land for $33,000 and began to create the dream house with a budget of $127,000.

She had admired the rural simplicity of a friend's home designed by McInturff of Bethesda, Md. Could he create agricultural shapes with black roofs that looked like they fit the land, not like some import from another place or time? And could she have a two-story main house (living room, kitchen and sleeping loft), a one-story work studio with windows on three sides and, the avid bird watcher requested, a three-story tower of porches? No dining room needed. She planned to eat at a little counter overlooking the river.

"I brought my orange cardboard model," Ms. Couch said, breaking into a smile. "It's a wonder he didn't throw me out or laugh in my face."

In fact, McInturff was intrigued. He'd never had a client who was as clear as Ms. Couch about what she wanted.

The project, almost three years from conception to completion, was, by design, developed and executed in stages by the owner, the architect and the builders, Bruce Behrens and Mark Smith.

"We all helped it along," Ms. Couch said. "Then it sort of took on a life of its own." To economize and to allow herself time to become comfortable with the house, McInturff said, "she would hire us for a few days, go away and think about it for a long time, and then she'd come back and say, 'OK, I like this.' "

The house on Hemlock Hill, as Ms. Couch calls her retreat, is a unique contemporary structure that opens onto a panoramic view of the Cacapon River below. Perched atop a mountain dotted with hemlock trees, some of which are 350 years old, the house combines a rustic exterior with a minimalist interior.

"It's almost like a lunar landing site," McInturff said, adding that the house "just comes down and touches the ground very delicately." Since he designed the house to fit the land, he situated the pieces at the level he wanted it, then, as he described it, "dropped the legs down."

At the cliff side of the main building, the legs are 4 to 5 feet above the ground; at the studio, the legs are 8 to 10 feet tall. An 88-foot stone wall visually and structurally anchors the house to the crest of the hill and connects the three buildings.

Beginning outside the studio, it zigzags through the living room of the main house and continues along the outside of the tower building, which comprises a storage space at ground level, a second-story screened porch and a third-story open but roofed platform.

The road side of the 1,000-square-foot compound has just four small windows and presents an enigmatic facade, playing with scale and expectation. Shallow stairs peek out between the main house and the studio.

Inside the main house, the drama begins. Windows dominate three sides of the 16x32-foot living area, framing various views of the river and the surrounding mountains. Except for a small cabin in the distance, no sign of human life can be seen.

A stone, tile and hand-hewn-beam fireplace and the interior section of the stone wall are the focal points of the step-down living space. A contiguous kitchen with an eating counter, which affords an upstream river view, completes the first floor. There is no dining table for lingering — Ms. Couch designed her home with privacy in mind.

A staircase leads to the second-floor 12x12-foot sleeping loft, where Ms. Couch can view the first two houses built on Hemlock Hill — birdhouses. Her two cats use the loft as their retreat. From here, a bridge leads to the 12x12-foot second-story screened porch and outdoor stairs, which climb to the tower lookout.

Since moving in on New Year's Eve, Ms. Couch has been awed. "I still find it hard to believe that I have this wonderful house," she said. Recalling her first morning in the house, she said: "I woke up and there were icicles on the trees. It was like a fairyland."

Yet, she said, "the way I live didn't change — it's just a whole lot better." She still bird-watches, but from a more spectacular vantage point; reads, and intends to spend more time drawing and painting in the studio as she gets more settled.

There were times during construction when Ms. Couch felt overwhelmed by the enormity of what she had undertaken. "I wondered, 'Will this ever end?' " she said.

Now, she speaks of her determination to see it through and the peace of mind the house has brought her. Have the courage to live out — and in — your fantasy, she urges others.

"If you want something badly enough," she said, "if you have it in your mind all the time, chances are it's going to happen."

Austin crisis team focused on emotional wounds from Oklahoma City's bombing

By Starita Smith
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN — On the first day of a mission to Oklahoma City intended to help the living deal with the loss of the dead, Mary McCabe, an Austin trauma counselor, saw the magnitude of the task embodied in a frustrated 9-year-old boy.

"I will never forget it," said McCabe, one of the 17 Austin trauma counselors summoned to Oklahoma City because of their crisis training.

The boy believed that his aunt, who had worked in the day-care center of the bombed Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, would have lived if only a rescuer could have carried two people out of the debris at the same time.

Anger and pain poured out of him during the counseling session. He got up, pretended to be the rescuer and acted out his fantasy.

"The man had two hands, two hands. He could have grabbed the baby with one hand and my aunt with the other," he told McCabe as he frantically acted out pulling bodies from the wreckage.

The flawed logic was the child's way of finding an explanation for his aunt's death when there is none, the counselor said.

THE SESSION was one of many conducted by McCabe and her colleagues at Oklahoma City schools. The Austin group arrived six days after the bombing to join hundreds of professionals and volunteers from around the country who worked in various capacities.

All but one of the Austin team members visited elementary and middle schools in inner-city neighborhoods within earshot of the blast. They worked with children who had become so immersed in the inescapable tragedy that the kids were turning off televisions just to get a break from the saturation news coverage.

The counselors urged the children to write, draw pictures; ask questions and engage in play therapy.

An 11-year-old boy, struggling with the loss of his little brother, a toddler at the day-care center, was given finger puppets. He put puppets representing his two living siblings and himself on his fingers and one representing his baby brother on his thumb.

Then he used the puppets on his fingers to tell the baby how each of them felt. It was a way for the child to say goodbye to the brother he lost so abruptly, said Joann Garner, a member of the team.

Getting the children to express their feelings and air their questions allowed counselors the opportunity to provide correct information.

"Some people think they are protecting them by not talking about things, but the children will just fill in the blanks for themselves," said Garner, who recommends that adults respond to children's questions about death and crises with simple, honest, direct answers.

ONE GIRL asked Garner why one of the men who was arrested in the bombing investigation had his coat over his head when he walked to a police car. Garner asked the girl what she thought the reason was.

"Probably because the police blew his head off," the girl said. The counselors told her that had not happened, but they also allowed her to say that she was so angry at the man she wanted him blown up.

> 'Some people think they are protecting them by not talking about things, but the children will just fill in the blanks for themselves.'
> — Joanne Garner
> member of team

The Austin counselors also offered help to many adults — teachers who lost friends, a nurse who had run from school to treat injured people and a cafeteria manager who ran the food line at the bomb site command post.

FOR THE first time, stressed teachers and principals were able to relax, weep and talk with understanding adults, McCabe said.

One member of the Austin team, Lupita Lujan, a veteran trauma counselor who interrupted her vacation to fly to Oklahoma, did not work in the schools. She arrived on April 23, before the others, and was assigned to working 18-hour days in the bombing site command post debriefing weary law enforcement officers.

It was far from her first time in a tense situation. She worked with Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents in Waco during the 1993 Branch Davidian standoff and helped survivors of the 1991 Luby's restaurant shootings that left 24 dead in Killeen.

Lujan said that the police she saw in Oklahoma City were worn out.

"Some were still in shock. They had not slept for several days. They were exhausted. Some were angry, and, of course, there was a lot of sadness," she said.

Some of the officers would steer others to Lujan's team at the command post for debriefing, a process through which they could vent their feelings and relieve stress.

"At some point, they were mandating that some people come to us, like the bomb squad members who were there constantly recovering bodies and attempting to recover evidence," she said.

McCabe said the U.S. Justice Deparment's National Organization for Victim Assistance asked for the Austin group because several team members have been trained in the organization's techniques.

THE TEXANS are part of Austin's Linkage of Emergency Response Teams, a network of mental health professionals and volunteers who work with people who have experienced a catastrophe. The 17 who went to Oklahoma all work with the Austin Police Department or the Austin Independent School District.

Soon after they arrived, each member of the team was taken to the blast site. On the way there, they saw destruction everywhere. The bomb killed 168 people and injured more than 400 others. The explosion rocked and damaged 337 other buildings and caused 10 more to collapse.

"I knew it was going to be real bad," said Lujan. "You could see the devastation for blocks around the building. It's hard to imagine an explosion caused that damage. That was something I wasn't expecting. It was amazing that anyone got out alive."

ALBUQUERQUE — Rick Reinsberg birdied the first four holes Thursday en route to a 4-under-par 68 to lead California to a first place tie with Arizona State after the first round of the NCAA West Regional.

California and ASU shared the lead with a score of 283 over the 7,300-yard-long Championship Course.

Reinsberg and New Mexico's Mike Sauer share the individual lead going into Friday's second round.

Reinsberg turned the front side in 31 before cooling off to a 1-over 37 on the back nine. Sauer also benefited from a fast start, making birdie on his first three holes.

Six players were a shot back with 69s. Among those at three-under-par 69 is former Midland College standout and Andrews native Chad Campbell, now competing for Nevada-Las Vegas. Ryan Hietala of Texas-El Paso, Kris Isackson of New Mexico State, Kevin Marsh of Pepperdine, Tim Beans of Arizona, and Larry Barber of Arizona State are also at 69.

Rebels hope to turn 'quarters' into wins

Ladies must climb tough half of bracket

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

AUSTIN— Midland Lee coach J.C. Gotcher said he is not surprised to be there. The players can't wait to get there. But there's still work to do as the Lady Rebels do battle against the rest of the state's best teams at the UIL State Softball Tournament today and Saturday.

The Lady Rebels, 28-0 and the No. 2 seed in the tournament, go into the tournament at the Pleasant Valley Sports Complex in Austin, feeling like they have something to prove. This mission starts today when Lee takes on Pearland, 28-5 and winners of the Region V final, at 1 p.m.

"I love being the underdog," said Midland Lee coach J.C. Gotcher. "We might as well show our best side. Our girls can compete against anyone."

Midland Lee, the Region 1-5A champ, is competing in its first year at the UIL level. However, the strong team led by senior pitcher Emily Hayes (18-0) went through the region I playoffs without missing a beat. In the three wins (3-1 over Richland High, 11-1 in five innings over El Paso Hanks and 4-0 over Haltom in the regional final), the Lady Rebels never trailed. In fact, the Lady Rebels haven't trailed in a game since April 5 when they trailed Odessa Permian before coming back win 7-2.

Lee meets Monterey in winner-take-all

LUBBOCK— Lowrey Field in Lubbock has become a falling ground for opposing playoff teams in years past. Many good teams from Midland have fallen by the wayside at the hands of Lubbock Monterey and coach Bobby Moegel.

In 36 years of coaching in the Hub City, Moegel has amassed 1,002 victories to make him the winningest high school baseball coach in the country. Tradition has bred success in Lubbock.

Midland Lee is trying to build its own little dynasty in West Texas. Lee coach Jesse Benavidez has won 99 games in four-plus seasons at Lee. The last time a Lee team advanced past the region quarterfinals round was 1978 when the Rebels made it to the region finals. A playoff series win over Monterey would be just the foundation Benavidez is looking for to make Lee a perennial state tournament contender.

This year's Midland Lee baseball team enters Lowrey Field well-armed as the Rebels meet Monterey in a one-game Region I quarterfinals matchup beginning at 4:30 p.m. today.

The winner advances to next weekend's region semifinals against either Grapevine (17-8-1) or Fort Worth Western Hills (20-7), who begin a best-of-three set today in Grapevine.

Rockets refuse to fizzle

By Michael A. Lutz

HOUSTON — The Houston Rockets still weren't ready to give up. Hakeem Olajuwon wouldn't let them.

Olajuwon scored 30 points and Houston's sharpshooters scored 15 straight fourth-quarter points on 3-pointers as the Rockets, trying to become the fifth team to recover from a 3-1 deficit, defeated Phoenix 116-103 Thursday night.

That tied the Western Conference semifinal at 3-3, with Game 7 on Saturday at Phoenix. The Rockets extended their record to 9-1 when facing elimination from a playoff series.

"It's hard to find words to describe what warriors, what fighters, what big-time players; they've done it again," Rockets coach Rudy Tomjanovich said. "We've given ourselves a chance to win this thing.

"It's one game for all the marbles. We've gained their respect. We've had a great road record this year. I feel we've got a good chance."

CHICAGO — The first time, Michael Jordan ended an era himself. This time, the Orlando Magic ended it for him.

Bucks blocking Greenwood's 3A playoff path

By Mike Butts
Sports Writer

GREENWOOD — Greenwood's four-year baseball program has a pretty good idea where it stands against teams in its own district. The Rangers have made the playoffs three of four years under coach Tony Pallanez.

But the team will have to get past Alpine if it wants to compare its program to Class 3A playoff teams other than the Bucks.

And getting past Alpine is something the Rangers haven't figured out how to do, falling to the District 7-3A team in bi-district play in both 1992 and last year. They play Alpine, ranked No. 3 in the state, again Friday at 1 p.m. in Monahans in a bi-district playoff.

■ Class 3A Playoffs

"If you keep playing good people eventually you'll beat them," Pallanez said. "We're glad we're playing the No. 3 team in the state."

Pallanez is probably also glad the Rangers won't have to face Ben Gallegos, who beat Greenwood in both play-

Big Spring holds on for playoff win

Staff Report

LUBBOCK — Big Spring's baseball team is at again. The team will play a Region I semifinal Wednesday at

Big Spring, with only three returners from last year's state finalist team, was not expected to make a strong bid for the playoffs. Now they are two rounds away from getting back to the state tournament.

Winning pitcher Zac Leslie (12-5) held off six and seventh inning rallies by Randall at Lubbock Christian University for the Big Spring win. The Steers (18-11-1) took a 3-0 lead after four innings, but Randall loaded the bases in the sixth with no outs down 3-1. Bottom line, Bulldogs better

■ Midland shows new found depth in final spring scrimmage.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

We'll leave the scoring woes to the fans that attended Midland High's spring football game at Memorial Stadium Thursday night, but the bottom line was clear for all to see. Midland High is a better football team than they have been in this decade.

If you just count the varsity portion of the scrimmage, the Gold came away with a 24-14 victory while the White junior varsity members came from behind to beat the Red 26-21. But since they were playing as part of the Gold and Purple squads, you could claim an overall 45-40 win for the Gold.

Don't try to figure it out. That isn't important anyway. What is of major importance is the depth shown on the field, by far the best during the Ronnie Reeger era.

In fact, you saw things that were only dreamed of a year ago. MHS used what looked like a double wing set at times that shows some dynamite potential.

"Oh, we've been running something like that for the last 20 years, but just not here," claims MHS offensive coach Jim Edwards. "We just haven't had enough running backs to use it here. But now we do."

Halfback Michael Van Dyke was the star of this scrimmage with 158 yards rushing, including touchdown runs of 39 and 68 yards, but it's clear that Van Dyke won't have to shoulder the burdens of a Roy Coats a year ago when he was basically the MHS attack.

Halfback Sam "Small Bam" Powell turned in 85 yards rushing, including a TD romp of 48 yards. Jeffrey Arnold had 58 yards rushing and a seven-yard TD. In all, MHS gave the ball to 13 backs and two potential backs (Paul Howard, a starter at the end of the season last year, and Jerome Eldridge) didn't even play.

"There is no question that we are able to do more things this year with the depth we have at running back," Reeger said. "In fact, Eldridge didn't play tonight and he may be one of our starters next year."

Greer's grand slam lifts Rangers

The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Pinch-hitter Rusty Greer hit his first career grand slam with two outs in the bottom of the eighth to give the Texas Rangers a 6-2 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers on Thursday night.

Will Clark lead off the eighth with a single off Graeme Lloyd (0-2) and went to second on Mickey Tettleton's sacrifice. Dean Palmer was intentionally walked, and reliever Mark Kiefer walked Mark McLemore to load the bases.

Greer followed with his second homer of the year.

That made a winner of Ranger starter Roger Pavlik (2-1), who allowed two runs on five hits over eight innings with one walk and two strikeouts.

The Rangers won for the fifth time in the last six games at home. The Brewers have lost five in a row.

Jack Voight, acquired in a trade with the Baltimore Orioles on Tuesday, tied the game at 2-2 with a homer leading off the seventh. That knocked out Angel Miranda, who allowed two runs and 11 hits with four strikeouts and no walks.

The Brewers broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth. Kevin Seitzer led off with a double, advanced to third on Joe Oliver's single and crossed the plate on Greg Vaughn's groundout.

The Rangers got a run in the first when Otis Nixon led off with a single, went to second on Jeff Frye's single, took third on a fly ball out and scored on Miranda's wild pitch.

Texas hit well early against Miranda but managed only the one run on six hits in the first two innings. Two baserunning mistakes cost the Rangers. Frye was thrown out at second while trying to advance from first on a fly out, and Mark McLemore was picked off second.

Milwaukee tied the game in the second when Joe Oliver doubled, took third on a groundout and scored on Derrick May's single.

White Sox 4, Athletics 2

CHICAGO — Alex Fernandez and Roberto Hernandez combined on a six-hitter to lead Chicago to a victory over Oakland.

■ AL Roundup

Fernandez (2-2) struck out a season-high 10 and retired the first 11 batters he faced before issuing a walk. His no-hit bid ended in the sixth when Fautso Cruz blooped a single to right.

Fernandez gave up four hits in eight innings before Hernandez pitched the ninth for his fifth save.

Mike Devereaux hit a two-run homer in the seventh for Chicago.

Dave Stewart (2-3) took the loss, giving up nine hits, walking three and striking out six over seven innings, his longest outing this season.

Mark McGwire spoiled Fernandez's shutout bid in the seventh with a leadoff 442-foot homer, his ninth, to straightaway center field. It extended his hitting streak to 15 games and gave him homers in six of his last eight games.

Devereaux hit his homer with two out in the bottom of the inning, his second, to score Robin Ventura and make it 4-1.

Ventura doubled off the left field wall to lead off the fourth, advanced on Devereaux's single and scored on Ray Durham's sacrifice fly to give Chicago a 1-0 lead. Devereaux went to second on a groundout and scored on Ozzie Guillen's single.

Hernandez got the save despite allowing a leadoff homer in the ninth to Geronimo Berroa, his eighth.

Fernandez retired everyone he faced before walking Berroa with two out in the fourth. He then got McGwire out on a called third strike to end the inning, and struck out three of the next four batters.

Orioles 3, Tigers 2

BALTIMORE — Mike Mussina pitched seven innings of four-hit ball and Baltimore scored all their runs off Detroit miscues in a victory.

Baltimore got two runs on an error by Cecil Fielder and the go-ahead run in the sixth inning on a balk by David Wells. That was enough offense for Mussina, who improved his lifetime record against the Tigers to 6-1.

Mussina (3-1) allowed two runs, struck out four and walked one in winning his third straight start. Armando Benitez and Jesse Orosco worked the eighth and Doug Jones got the last three outs for his third save.

Bob Higginson and Chad Curtis homered for the Tigers, who fell into last place in the AL East by losing two of three to Baltimore.

Wells (1-3) went the distance, giving up four hits and two costly walks. He struck out six.

Higginson gave the Tigers a 1-0 lead in the first inning with his fourth homer, and Curtis made it 2-0 in the third with a drive that cleared the wall in center.

Baltimore tied it in the bottom of the inning with two unearned runs. Brady Anderson and Kevin Bass walked, moved up on a double steal and scored when Fielder botched Palmeiro's one-hopper to first base.

Red Sox 4, Indians 3

BOSTON — Mike Macfarlane homered for the fourth time in five games to break an eighth-inning tie and gave Boston its fifth consecutive win, over Cleveland .

Stan Belinda (2-0) pitched 2 2-3 perfect innings, getting Albert Belle to hit into an inning-ending, bases-loaded double play in the seventh and then retiring the next six batters.

Losing pitcher Jim Poole (1-2) gave up the one-out homer to Macfarlane, his sixth, that landed in the screen above the Green Monster. The Red Sox have homered in nine consecutive games and 16 of 19 this season.

Carlos Baerga went 3-for-4 and drove in two runs for the Indians.

Boston took a 2-0 lead with two unearned runs in the first. Lee Tinsley singled, took second on an error by pitcher Dennis Martinez and moved to third on a fly ball. Vaughn walked and stole second — a career-high sixth stolen base of the year for the 245-pound first baseman — and scored when Mike Greenwell's grounder to third was thrown away by Jim Thome.

Angels 15, Twins 9

MINNEAPOLIS — Andy Allanson, who had hit just one homer since 1991, homered twice and drove in six runs as California routed Minnesota.

Allanson went 4-for-5 after coming in with an .048 average. He had been just 1-for-21 this season — a home run against Detroit on on opening day. That was his first since May 27, 1991.

Against the Twins, he hit an RBI single in the first for the first run of the game, a two-run single in the third, a solo homer in the fifth and a two-run homer in the eighth.

Tony Phillips went 3-for-5, including a homer and an RBI single in a seven-run third. Spike Owen homered in the ninth for the Angels, who led 10-1 before the Twins scored seven runs in the sixth.

Pedro Munoz homered twice for Minnesota and Marty Cordova homered in his third consecutive game.

Bonilla bonks ball into 'Dome orbit, Mets win 8-1

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Bobby Bonilla hit his fifth home run and two other Mets had two RBIs each as New York beat Doug Drabek for the first time in nearly three years with an 8-1 victory over the Houston Astros on Thursday night.

Rookie Dave Mlicki (2-0) allowed five hits in seven innings and lowered his ERA to 1.40, helping the Mets win the three-game series 2-1.

Drabek (1-3) had not lost to the Mets since October 2, 1992, and was 4-0 with a 2.38 ERA in six starts against New York since coming to the Astros in 1993.

Jeff Kent and Todd Hundley drove in two runs apiece in the first inning. Brett Butler led off with a triple and scored along with Rico Brogna on Kent's two-run double. Hundley's two-run single drove in Kent and Joe Orsulak.

The Astros cut the lead to 4-1 in the bottom of the inning when James Mouton scored from third on a ground ball off the bat of Derek Bell.

Drabek lasted only four innings, allowing seven hits, five earned runs and walking five.

Braves 3, Rockies 2

ATLANTA — Javier Lopez hit a tie-breaking two-run homer in the seventh to lift the Braves over Colorado.

With the score tied 1-1, David Justice singled off Mike Munoz (0-1) to open the seventh. Ryan Klesko struck out, but Steve Reed relieved and gave up Lopez's fourth homer, a shot that landed in the seats in left-center.

Greg McMichael (3-0) yielded an eighth-inning home run to Larry Walker, his sixth, cutting the lead to 3-2. Mark Wohlers allowed runners to reach first and second in the ninth before Pedro Borbon got the last out for his second save, retiring Walker on a fly ball to the wall in left.

Cardinals 4, Giants 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Bernard Gilkey hit an RBI double in the 10th inning and Ray Lankford added a sacrifice fly, giving St. Louis the victory.

Barry Bonds homered for the second straight game and Matt Williams had three singles for the Giants. Todd Zeile homered for the Cardinals, who broke a three-game losing streak.

Pinch-hitter Darnell Coles led off the 10th with a nubber that was booted by pitcher Steve Frey (0-1). Gilkey followed with a double into the right-center gap and Lankford drove in Gilkey two batters later.

Rene Arocha (3-1) got four outs for St. Louis. Tom Henke pitched a perfect 10th for his seventh save.

REBELS: Pitchers duel for supremacy

again," said Midland Lee senior catcher Mike Phillips, who was a member of last year's 25-5 team that was eliminated after dropping two games to Monterey at Lowrey Field in the region quarterfinal round. Monterey went on to the state tournament. "All five losses came to Monterey last year. We have lost a couple of more games this year but we don't want to lose to them again. We are going to go out and play our game and see what happens."

A year wiser, Lee opted for a one game series with Monterey this time instead of the three game series of a year ago.

"That is something that is in my favor," said Lee coach Jesse Benavidez, who will be searching for his 100th win at Lee. "I thought about it when I got back from El Paso last weekend. I talked to (Midland Lee assistant baseball coach) Randy Josey, who scouted Monterey, and we decided when you have got a guy like (Lance) Watters throwing the way he is right now you feel like you are going to win with him. Why not just play the one game? That's the main reason we are doing it."

Lee enters the game well-armed with a deep pitching staff for a one-game showdown. Junior Mark Holly (5-1, 3.64 ERA and one save), senior right-hander Jeremy Gilliam (2-0, 2.74 ERA, two saves) and junior right-hander Jesse Ramos (1-1, 4.77) will be in the bullpen at Benavidez' beckon call.

Watters (7-2, 1.70) will match up against Monterey's Monty Ward (11-4, 1.67). Watters threw a four-hit gem in an 8-1 win over El Paso Hanks last week while Ward pitched a nine-inning complete game in the Plainsmen's 2-1 win over El Paso Riverside on Friday and then came back to throw three innings of no-hit relief in a 3-2, 11 inning win on Saturday.

The two have compiled impressive numbers. Watters has allowed 18 earned runs while he struck out 87 batters over 74 innings. Ward has been dominating all season with 155 strike outs and 19 earned runs.

Watters will try to keep a potent Monterey lineup off the bases. The Plainsmen's top four hitter are all hitting over .350 with 108 runs and 95 RBIs. Leading the hitting attack is first baseman Jason Grissom with a .527 average, three home runs and a team-high 33 runs scored.

Designated hitter J.R. Mize, who played catcher early in the year but has been moved to designated hitter and left field since district play, is hitting .400 with seven home runs and 40 RBIs. As a team, Monterey is batting .356 prior to the postseason.

"They have moved some positions around, but it is the same nine kids playing as before," said Benavidez. "They are not any different than what we have seen. They have just jelled since then, just like we have."

After losing five games to Monterey last year, the Rebels have won two of three meetings this year. Lee defeated Monterey 2-0 and 7-5 in a doubleheader at Lowrey Field on February 27, but lost a 7-2 decision to the Pla.nsmen during the Tournament of Champions hips the first week of the season. In that game, Monterey starter Mark Martinez held Lee to one hit and the Rebels made four errors.

"Anytime you get a win you are going to get a big confidence booster. Winning in El Paso gives them a big boost. Here we go on the road again. I don't intend for that to happen, it just does. We might as well get used to it because you are going to have to travel anyway," Benavidez said.

Offensively the Rebels have been steady during the playoffs. Lee collected 11 hits in an 8-6 practice game win over Andrews on May 8 and then had 10 hits in the win over Hanks.

Senior outfielder Britt Harper (.325) has been hot during the last two games in the clean-up spot, going 4-for-7 with four RBIs. Phillips is also 4-for-7 over the past two games. The Rebels had seven players batting over .300 and are batting .310 as a team.

LEE NOTES: Today's game will be broadcast on KCRS (AM 550) with pregame beginning at 4 p.m. and the first pitch 30 minutes after.

Nomo leaves Dodgers wanting more

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hideo Nomo isn't just a pitcher, he's an event.

After Nomo struck out 14 in seven shutout innings against Pittsburgh on Wednesday night, Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda said it reminded him of Fernandomania '81.

"It's worse. It's really worse, believe me," Lasorda said.

Pittsburgh rallied for a 3-2 victory after Nomo left the game. He doesn't have a decision in four starts and has a 3.48 ERA.

"I'm not frustrated," Nomo said through interpreter Michael Okumura. "But I'm a little disappointed because I want to pick up wins for the team."

Dodger Stadium is different when the 26-year-old rookie starts.

"I came to the ballpark at 1:30 today and there were 15 guys out there with cameras waiting on him," Lasorda said.

About 85 Japanese reporters chronicle his every move.

Nomo's strikeouts were the most in the majors this year. The only hits he allowed were a third-inning single by Mark Parent and a sixth-inning double by pinch-hitter Steve Segues. He left after 106 pitches with a 2-0 lead, but Rudy Seanez, Omar Daal and Todd Williams allowed the Pirates to rally.

"He didn't have any pitch limit," Lasorda said. "We just felt he hasn't pitched very long, and he hadn't gone more than five innings before. So we weren't going to push him any farther."

Nomo held the Giants scoreless on one hit over five innings in his major league debut. In his next start, he was tagged for seven runs and three homers at Coors Field.

He no-hit St. Louis for four innings in his Dodgers debut, but left after walking seven and allowing three unearned runs.

"He threw everything for strikes, and I was impressed by that," Pittsburgh outfielder Jacob Brumfield said. "I've seen him twice on tape and he wasn't throwing a lot of strikes. So I told myself to take a lot of pitches and I took too many pitches."

Brumfield fanned his first two times up against Nomo's corkscrew delivery, which begins with an exaggerated windup. Jay Bell and Freddy Garcia each struck out three times as Nomo piled up the most strikeouts by a Dodger since Ramon Martinez tied Sandy Koufax's club record with 18 on June 4, 1990.

Former Dodgers pitcher Jim Gott, now with the Pirates, praised Dodgers owner Peter O'Malley for signing Nomo.

"Mr. O'Malley's been at the forefront of international baseball, and it's been wonderful to see the opportunities that he's given — especially with Chan Ho (Park) and Mr. Nomo," Gott said. "I think this is just going to open the door for us to have some of the better players over here playing in our major leagues.")

Los Angeles Dodger starting Hideo Nomo struckout 14 batters in seven innings on Wednesday night, brining back thoughts of 'Fernandomania' back to the Dodgers.

Disney strikes deal to buy into Angels organization

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The Walt Disney Co., expanding its venture into professional sports, has agreed to buy 25 percent interest in the California Angels and become managing general partner, with an option to purchase the rest of the American League team.

Completion of the deal, which was announced Thursday, is subject to the approval of baseball owners.

Jackie Autry, co-owner of the Angels along with husband Gene Autry, has indicated the team won't be sold completely so long as her husband is alive.

Gene Autry, who paid a reported $2.15 million for the expansion franchise which began play in 1961, is 87. The Angels had been the only team other than the Los Angeles Dodgers to be owned by individuals rather than multiple partners.

No financial terms of the deal with Disney were announced. The Angels are reportedly valued at $125 million to $135 million.

Jackie Autry estimated the organization had operating losses of $8 million in 1994, when the Angels finished the strike-shortened season with a 47-68 record, second-worst in franchise history.

The Angels have had dwindling attendance, with less than 10,000 season tickets sold for 1995, and crowds of less than 13,000 for many of their home games.

The Autrys had talked with a number of interested buyers. Peter Ueberroth, who headed the financially successful 1984 Los Angeles Olympics and later was baseball commissioner, reportedly was among those interested in buying a share of the Angels.

Rangers, Astros pull string on trade

ARLINGTON (AP) — The Texas Rangers made a deal to upgrade their organizational pitching depth Thursday, acquiring right-hander Domingo Jean from the Houston Astros for minor league catcher Roger Luce.

Jean was assigned to the Rangers' Class AAA farm team in Oklahoma City.

Luce, who was on the suspended list for Texas' Class AA minor league team at Tulsa, has been assigned to the Astros' extended spring training program. The University of Texas product attended Clear Lake High School in Houston.

Borland takes Pro Wire 12

Rick Borland completed 273 laps to win the Pro Wire 12 Wednesday at Roadrunners slot car racing in Midland. Borland's best time was 4.7807450. Adam Klauss was second with 260 laps and Hoot Fox third with 190.

Big Springer makes Texas Hall

Big Spring resident Toots Mansfield will be the first rodeo performer to reach the Texas Sports Hall of Fame later this year, the Hall announced Thursday. Mansfield will join former Texas A&M coaches Emory Bellard and Gene Stallings and Tut Bartzen, Sandra Haynie and Mike Singletary as new inductees.

Mansfield won seven calf roping world championships between 1939 and 1950. Bellard, who retired from a 43-year football coaching career, gained national fame in the 1960s as creator of the Wishbone offense. Stallings coached the Aggies for seven years and won a national championship at Alabama in '92.

Singletary disrupted offenses as a middle linebacker with Baylor ('78-'80) and the Chicago Bears ('78-'80). He shares the NFL record with 10 Pro Bowl appearances. He helped the Bears win the Super Bowl after the '85 season.

Haynie was elected to the LPGA Hall of Fame in '77. She won 42 LPGA tour stops in a career that began in 1961. Bartzen coaches the TCU tennis team, where he has compiled a 418-152 record in 22 years. TCU has been in the nation's top 20 all but one year since '78.

Former Chap wins at NCAA tourney

MALIBU, Calif.— Former Midland College tennis standout Lucie Ludvigova, now with the University of Texas, defeated Lisa Alipaz of San Diego State 6-3, 6-2 in the second round of the NCAA Division I Women's tennis Championships at Ralphs-Straus Tennis Center at Pepperdine University.

Ludvigova, who played one season at Midland College before the school disbanded the women's tennis program, is a senior at the Univesity of Texas and is ranked among the top 10 collegiate singles players.

Wilson winner at TAM tourney

Toffee Wilson won the boys 16-year-old singles round robin in last week's Tennis Association of Midland Junior Circuit Tournament by winning all three of his matches. Jason Yelley was second. Here are other final match and round robin results:

Girls 14,16,18 doubles: Essex-Geib def. Scharbauer-McMinn 6-1, 7-6. Boys 12 singles: Marshall Viney def. Ryan May 6-2, 6-4. Girls 10 singles: 1. Catherine Cobb (three matches), 2. Stacey Moore (two matches). Boys 10 singles: 1. Steven Hofer (four matches), 2. Wade Morgan (three matches).

City athletes get scholar honors

District 4-5A officials announced Thursday two outstanding athletes from each league school including Allison Miller and Blake Johnson of Midland High and Tiffany Rodgers and Michael Roads of Midland Lee. The male and female senior athletes with the highest ranking grade-point averages are recognized by the district as outstanding scholar-athletes for 1994-95 as part of a policy adopted by the District Executive Committee in February this year.

The 4-5A outstanding scholor-athletes for this school year:

Allison Miller, Blake Johnson - Midland High; Tiffany Rodgers, Michael Roads - Midland Lee; Amber Cherrie, Stacy Beaty - Abilene High; Sherry Sakamoto, Anthony Bruster - Abilene Cooper; Jaime Arrott, Jeremy Scott - San Angelo Central; Brandi Raymond, Zack Norris - Odessa High; Linda Castillejos, John Lasiter - Odessa Permian

GREENWOOD: Bucks stand in Rangers way off games. Last season the Buck right-hander, now with New Mexico Junior College, three-hit Greenwood on the way to an 11-2 Alpine win and an eventual Buck appearance in the state final four tournament.

Greenwood pitchers walked 10 batters and the Ranger defense made five errors in the game.

"I know that a lot of those errors that they made last year will be eliminated," Alpine coach Mike Pallanez, Tony's cousin, said. "We're not going to take them lightly."

Alpine (22-3) has won 11 straight bi-district titles. They return all but two full-time starters from last year.

The Rangers have their best team in four years, Tony Pallanez said, with five juniors that have started for three years and two key seniors. Four players have over .400 batting averages and hit .342 as a team in going 16-10-1.

"We compete against the No. 3 team in the state so I think we'll know pretty quick if we're a final four team," Tony Pallanez said. "If we get by Alpine we'll have a pretty good chance."

The Bucks are 24-3 this year and won district 7-3A with a 5-1 mark.

The Rangers finished second in District 8-3A at 8-2 behind Kermit, which they split with in league play.

Greenwood's top player this year is pitcher-first baseman Andy Watzl. The senior has knocked in 27 RBIs and hit for a .488 average to lead the Rangers in both categories. He also plays his position well.

"He's one heck of a defensive player," Tony Pallanez said. "He's pitched for us a little but his strong suit is first base."

Senior third baseman Rusty Purser hits .451, junior shortstop Casey Otho .442 and freshman catcher Michael Otho .407. Junior second baseman Bucky Smith leads the team in home runs with four and is second in RBIs with 21.

The Rangers will throw top pitcher Josh Jones, the junior football quarterback, at Alpine. Jones is 4-2 this year with six saves while batting .352.

Mike Pallanez has not decided which of three pitchers he will start. Junior Kevin Losoya is 7-1, sophomore left-hander Ervay Ramos is 5-1 and senior Danny Villanueva is 4-1.

"We'd like to have Gallegos back of course," Mike Pallanez said. "But the other pitchers we have have really done their job."

So have the Buck hitters. Two average over .500: Losoya (.517) and second baseman Seth Scown (.515). First baseman Tony Pallanez (.460) and designated hitter Tim Jimenez (.477) have also made good contact this year. Today's winner faces the Graham-Boyd winner in the Class 3A area round.

In other area playoff baseball, 4-4A winner Andrews (20-5) begins a best-of-three series with Borger (19-11) in Plainview at 7 p.m. today. The series continues Saturday at 1 p.m. with a third game, if necessary, 30 minutes after game 2.

SOFTBALL: Pearland enters game batting .400

invincibility, the Lady Rebels know they will have to play their best ball for this last trip of the season to be a successful one. However, going up against the other schools in the state doesn't have the Lady Rebels running scared.

"We've played ball over the summer and we've played teams like Houston," said Lee shortstop Susanna Reed. "We know how to compete against higher quality. It will be another road trip."

Lee will go into its game Friday with Hayes on the mound, looking to continue the groove that she has been in over the last week. The left hander has allowed only one earned run in the three playoff games and has allowed only six hits. She has also struck out 29 batters in the post season while only walking two. Of course, this success is nothing brand new. Hayes has a season ERA of 0.19 and has given up no more than three runs in a game.

That type of pitching is nice but hasn't really been needed in the playoffs as Lee is hitting .410 in the postseason and has scored 18 runs in three games. Junior shortstop Susanna Reed is the team's leading hitter in the second season with a .666 average.

"If you get good hitting good, pitching and play defense, you are dangerous," said Gotcher. "That's what I'm looking for. We're good in all three areas."

Houston is one of the top regions for softball in the state. And Pearland, which has been competing at the UIL level for over five years, is 28-5, but has outscored its opponents 222-47. Its pitching staff consists of two starters, Missy Ladd (13-2 with a 0.2 ERA) and Melissa Coronado (15-2). The team is also hitting .400. In fact Pearland coach Holly Nuber says the team has no weaknesses.

"We have such a solid game," Nuber said. "If we play our ball game, we can rely on anybody to come through. We'll play 100 percent through May 21."

Pearland got to the state finals by winning four games. They started with a 11-1 win over Stratford in the bi-district round. Following a 5-0 win over Houston Cy Creek in an area matchup and a 4-0 win over Houston Bellaire, the Lady Oilers beat Cypress Fairbanks 3-2. Melissa Coronado had 11 strikeouts while allowing three hits in that win. The team has no starting senior and three freshman on the first 10. According to Nuber, the District 35-5A champs are mature and playoff tested.

"The girls are so intrinsically motivated," said Nuber said. "They are young but they are mature. Being in the playoffs is just another step for us."

The other teams in Lee's portion of the bracket are San Antonio Marshall and Plano East. The two teams will play at 3 p.m. today. The other team to watch is Pasadena Dobie High school, who is led by its staff ace Krista Williams. Williams, 24-0, struck out 32 batters in 19 innings in Dobie's 1-0 win over Pasadena Rayburn. Williams, who threw 222 pitches in that game, played on the United States Pan American team and the junior is already considered the nation's top college prospect.

Big Eight golfers take lead at NCAA Central Regional tournament

■ NCAA Golf

MONTGOMERY (AP) — Junior Alex Munoz shot a 66 to lead the Oklahoma Sooners to the first-round lead of the NCAA Central Regional golf tournament Thursday.

Munoz had six birdies without a bogey as he successfully battled the afternoon wind. His 6-under-par score was two strokes better than his closest competitors and Oklahoma, which finished third in the Big Eight Tournament this year, led second-place Kent State by three strokes with a 283 total.

Twenty-one teams are competing in the three-day tournament at Bentwater Country Club, north of Houston. The top 10 teams and two individuals who are not on one of the qualifying teams will advance to the NCAA Championships May 31-June 3 at Columbus, Ohio.

Oklahoma State, the top-ranked team in the country and Big Eight champion, is in third place with a 287, followed by Iowa and Southwest Conference champion Texas at 289. Rice and Houston are tied for sixth at 290.

John Lawrence of Rice, Sean Rowen of Iowa, Donnie Darr of Kent and Dennis Hillman of Tulsa are tied for second at 68.

St. James to give Indy oval another spin

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The all-important announcement of a sponsorship that will allow Lyn St. James to try for her fourth Indianapolis 500 start was under way when she heard the sound of race engines.

"I hear cars going around the race track, so I'm getting antsy. ... I haven't had that many laps," said St. James, who soon excused herself to don a driving uniform and get in some running before rain shut down the Indianapolis Motor Speedway Thursday afternoon.

She managed only seven laps, with a top speed of 216.118 mph, but St. James was still smiling even when rain came.

The reason she was able to get into the 1995 Lola-Ford previously driven by Dean Hall was that Whitlock Corp., a chain of auto supply and service centers that operates under a variety of names in six Midwestern states, came up with the necessary sponsor dollars.

And the reason that came about is that Dick Carmell, president of the company, read in his local paper that St. James, the 1992 Indy 500 rookie of the year, had lost her sponsorship package and was out of a ride.

"I read about it in the Chicago Tribune at about 10 o'clock (last) Wednesday night," Carmell said. "I was on the phone to Indianapolis at about 10:02.

"We're extremely delighted to have a person with the caliber of Lyn St. James become one of our spokespersons," Carmell added. "We need to be more customer friendly. ... When I heard that Lyn was available, it didn't take me long to realize she's the right person to get the message across."

Carmell said he flew to Indy the next day to put the deal together with car owner Dick Simon. The deal could eventually include several other races.

"This is one of those 11th-hour situations. If any driver can pull it off, I believe Lyn can," Simon said of her need to reach qualifying speed for the May 28 race before time trials conclude Sunday night.

Rain has limited the teams to less than an hour of practice time the past two days and today is the final full day of practice before the resumption of time trials on Saturday.

Nike grad takes driver's seat at Buick Classic

■ A former U.S. Open prep tournament, the Buick Classic is kind on opening day.

By Larry Dorman
N.Y. Times News Service

HARRISON, N.Y. — The calendar says May, but it feels a lot like June out here at the Westchester Country Club. It's cloudy. It's muggy. It's as crowded as the Midtown Tunnel at rush hour. And somebody you may have never heard of is leading the golf tournament.

That's the way it always seems to be in the early going at the Buick Classic, which no longer falls the week before the United States Open but remains the perfect Open prep. And Thursday, on a dank, gray day, what unfolded was typical of the chaos that usually marks the first round of most Opens.

It was a free-for-all. And emerging from the high rough and fast greens was Doug Martin, who eagled the 18th hole for a round of 67 and a one-stroke lead over a mixed bag of five golfers at 68. Among that fivesome, Ernie Els, 25, is the only one who requires no introduction. He is the reigning United States Open champion, the winner last week at the GTE Byron Nelson Classic and arguably the best young player in the world.

"I was really quite comfortable out there," said Els, who is oozing confidence after last week's victory. "This wasn't a grind, like a lot of first rounds are. I really set my mind to enjoy my golf."

And he did, with an effortless round of four birdies and one bogey. Els, who last year set a worldwide earnings record with $2.86 million, has had more TV air time in the last week and magazine cover photos in the last year than the supporting cast here has in their careers. But some background material is required for the rest of the leader-board occupants, from the leader to the cast of characters who are breathing down his neck.

Martin is in the field on the basis of his 11th-place finish at the 1994 Qualifying School. He is 28 years old, has never won, and his best finish as a touring pro was a tie for fourth at the 1993 Deposit Guaranty Classic. Last week, he trailed Els by one stroke after two rounds but faltered on the weekend and finished tied for 55th.

"Last week was a learning experience for me," Martin said. "Hopefully, it will help me this week."

Mike Hulbert, 37, who putts one-handed.

Bruce Fleisher, 46, whose tendinitis is so severe he almost plays one-armed.

Mike McCullough, who just turned 50 and got into the field as the penultimate alternate. Grant Waite, 30, a New Zealander who won the Kemper Open two years ago but slipped to 172d on the money list last year.

So, within a stroke of the lead are one member of Who's Who and five members of Who's That? Of course. And there is a group of 11 players at 69, just two strokes behind. That group includes Paul Azinger, Chip Beck and David Duval. Thirty-five players are within three strokes of the lead.

Brad Faxon would be included among the leaders, but for a slight mishap. Faxon, who was four-under par through 16 holes, finished bogey-quadruple bogey and wound up with a one-over-par 72. It seems Faxon played the wrong ball on his final hole, using a different model of Titleist handed to him by his caddie as he went to the tee. He discovered it when he reached the green, called it to the attention of a rules official and added two penalty strokes to his double bogey for a total of nine.

"This really is the kind of error you just can't make," he said.

Faxon also played a wrong ball earlier this year when he was near the lead at the Buick Invitational of California. In the second round, one stroke behind the leaders, he played Phil Mickelson's ball. He finished the tournament 11 strokes behind the winner, Peter Jacobsen.

"I'm going to handle this one a lot better than I handled San Diego," Faxon said.

Penguins whitewash Caps to complete series comeback

■ Pittsburgh goalie Ken Wregget stops 33 shots as the Penguins win 3-0.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Goaltender Ken Wregget again came up big in a Game 7 in Pittsburgh, stopping all 33 Washington shots as the Penguins completed a comeback from a 3-1 deficit to oust the Capitals 3-0 Thursday night.

Washington, only one win away from eliminating Pittsburgh after consecutive 6-2 victories in Games 3 and 4, became only the 13th NHL team — and the third in Capitals' history — to blow a 3-1 series lead.

The Capitals also couldn't hold such leads against the eventual Stanley Cup champion Penguins in 1992, and the New York Islanders in a 1987 collapse finished off by a four-overtime Game 7.

Norm Maciver and Ron Francis scored first-period goals and the Penguins, who twice rallied from two-goal deficits at home earlier in the series, made just such a lead stand up behind Wregget.

Wregget, yanked for the rusty Tom Barrasso during Pittsburgh's two blowout losses at Landover, Md., stopped all but one of the Capitals' 64 shots in the pivotal final two games. The Capitals' only goal following a 6-5 loss in Game 5 came with Pittsburgh up 7-0 in Game 6.

A longtime backup who led NHL goaltenders with 25 regular-season victories — none of them shutouts — Wregget hadn't played a Game 7 in Pittsburgh since 1989. He replaced injured Ron Hextall that season to lead the Philadelphia Flyers to a 4-1 victory over the Penguins.

The Capitals got a solid game from suddenly steady goaltender Jim Carey, who stopped only 7 of 13 shots in Game 6, but they couldn't solve Wregget or Pittsburgh's suddenly tight defense.

The Capitals outshot Pittsburgh 33-18, but few of the scoring chances were particularly good, and they couldn't get to Wregget even when they got them. Their best chance came when Peter Bondra, the NHL regular-season goal scoring leader, was stopped point blank on a breakaway with three minutes left.

BULLDOGS: Offense shines in game

yards rushing while completing two of four passes for 56 yards) didn't have a great outing, but he is probably the starter. But depth showed there, too. Junior-to-be Russell Dunlavy had a TD run of 37 yards. Ky Edwards, a returning defensive starter, also looked adequate at quarterback, but expect to see him on the other side of the ball next season. Then there was incoming sophomore Camar Jackson, who looks to have a bright future with a strong arm, good size and running ability. Tyler Nobles also shows promise in the sophomore ranks.

The only two passes caught by varsity players in the scrimmage was an 18-yarder by Matt Cobb and a 38-yarder by Craig Noland. The MHS varsity attempted only five passes on the night. It's clear that the running game is the central theme, and it's well stocked.

And everyone knows what kind of kicking game MHS will have with David Leaverton back. He had what you might call an average night. He kicked all five extra points, booted a 52-yard field goal and had two punts for a 50-yard average. Leaverton's 52-yard field goal would have been good from another two blocks away.

Defensively, Sean Butler had a big night with a sack and a fumble recovery for the varsity while Wilson Roberts, Dustin Stockwell, Trey Morris and Jarivan McDaniel all had fumble recoveries in the game. That was the low point for the backs in an otherwise sterling performance.

Reeger says that there is more defensive work to be done, but defense works better with a cohesive unit and this scrimmage was divided equally. You really didn't see the offense or defense that will be on the field next year.

"We didn't stop too much on the corners and that concerns us some," Reeger said. "We liked the offensive part. We had a good spring and we got most of our offense in. There are still areas to correct, but we felt like we corrected a lot in a good 18 days of workouts."

For the junior varsity, Ryan Stewart scored on runs of four and 26 yards while Kurt Esslinger scored on runs of five and seven yards. Others to score were Devin Butts (1), Jack Murphy (11) and Richard Montez 17. Zachary Inman was true on five of seven extra point tries.

The theory in District 4-5A that games are won with depth. Depth can replace key injuries. If that theory is true, the Bulldogs face the 1995 season in a better position than they have had since 1988, the year they claimed a tri-championship with Odessa Permian and Midland Lee.

STEERS: Leslie gives up five hits in victory

Quisenberry and Drew Daiz to end the inning.

"It probably comes from us not expected to be here," Steer coach Bobby Doe said about his team's ability to win the close game.

Randall threatened again in the bottom of the seventh when Jason Richardson singled, stole second and went to third on a wild throw from Big Spring catcher Rogelio Carvantes. But Cervantes later picked Richardson off third to end the game.

Leslie gave up five hits and struck out seven in the win.

Big Spring scored in the top of the third when Michael Sizenbach walked and scored on Leslie Adkins' double. Adkins stole third and scored on Trey Terrazas' sacrifice fly. In the fourth the Steers went up 3-0 when designated hitter T.J. Rios singled, courtesy runner Brian Thompson stole second and came home on consecutive wild pitches by Randall starter and loser Drew Daniel (10-4).

Edberg climbs back up tennis ladder with win

■ Tennis

ROME (AP) — While it was a bust for the upset-hungry fans, Stefan Edberg's quick rout of a local hero served notice the former No. 1 player is climbing back.

Out of the top 10 for the first time in a decade, Edberg says he hasn't played so well in a long time. The question is, how far can a 29-year-old serve and volleyer get on the red clay of the Italian Open?

"I am playing good tennis, especially the last two matches," Edberg said after defeating Italian qualifier Corrado Borroni 6-0, 6-2 in less than an hour to reach the quarterfinals..

"The conditions obviously suit my game with the balls and the court that are very quick, especially if the sun is out. I like it," Edberg said.

It is only the Swede's second appearance in Rome and first since 1984. He said he came back because the clay has been hardened to speed up the courts to accommodate players with power games.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: The more you give, the greater your return. Business decisions made in midsummer result in a raise or promotion. September is full of emotional drama. As one relationship ends, another begins. New financial gains are featured in November. Terrific social connections get 1996 off to a flying start. Romance blossoms before Valentine's Day. Listen for the peal of wedding bells next spring!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS-DATE: singer Grace Jones, Black Muslim leader Malcolm X, actress Nancy Kwan, musician Peter Townshend.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Act a little less independent and you will get what you want. Students share good news with their families. Money worries may be coming to an end. Stay within your budget even when socializing.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You feel confident of your ability to handle a new challenge. Although managing details can be exasperating, you get things done in record time. Stick to a regular exercise program. Romance looks rosy by moonlight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A stroke of luck and a new competitive spirit will make this a banner day. You may be falling in love with someone who is very gifted. Understand what lies ahead before saying "yes."

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Romance provides some very exciting moments. You could risk a major explosion unless you face up to family responsibilities. Your financial prospects are bright, thanks to someone else's actions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Someone may disrupt your schedule today. Be patient but stand your ground on matters of principle. A co-worker may be up to no good. The domestic scene is tranquil this evening. Romantic feelings dominate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Postpone negotiating a real estate deal until conditions are more favorable. You could encounter both dishonest people and deceptive documents if you push ahead right now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): With the help of experts, you can break out of restrictive circumstances. The financial picture improves. Make plans. A combination of hard work and outside influences pays off handsomely where career or business is concerned.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stay alert! Careless errors can be costly. What was previously established could be changed by today's events. Stand up for your rights. A mood of nostalgia may prevail this evening. Romance reigns supreme.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A period of reconstruction and revitalization lies ahead. Attend to creative endeavors and you may find new career opportunities. Travel can be complicated now. Cheer up a loved one who in under the weather.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Refuse to be drawn into a conflict that does not concern you. Play the role of mediator only if asked by both parties. A lack of enthusiasm may slow your efforts to resolve a dilemma.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An unexpected message is a source of inspiration. Strike a balance between two extremes and your effectiveness will increase. Be careful about the tactics you use to attain a special objective. Dreams can be prophetic.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Original ideas abound today, but you must be practical. Use greater diplomacy when dealing with an opinionated older person. A sparkling social life could prove expensive. Keep your long-term goals in mind at all times.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1NT	Pass	3NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ◇

Suppose you were South, declaring this hand at three no trump. West leads a low diamond, on which East plays the queen. How would you proceed?

You have reached your game in textbook style. The opening bid was classic and partner, with 11 high-card points and no four-card or longer major, was interested in nothing more than game.

We suggest you claim your contract! Of course, there is one little detail to attend to — first you must allow East's queen of diamonds to win the first trick! Once you've done that, only a most improbable lie of the cards, on this defense, can defeat the contract.

Suppose that East returns a diamond. (Nothing else is any better.) You play the jack, West can win and force out your last diamond stopper. But now you can take the club finesse safely into the East hand and come to 10 tricks no matter what.

What if West allows the second diamond to hold and East has three cards in the suit? Your contract is still safe. If East can return a diamond, the suit is breaking 4-3 and you can lose only three diamond tricks and a club.

Note that if you win the first diamond, the game will be defeated. Without at least three club tricks, nine tricks are out of reach. When East gains the lead with the king of clubs, a diamond return through the jack allows West to score four diamond tricks for a one-trick set.

Illusionists Siegfried, Roy walk off with 2nd Liberace Legend Award

Siegried and Roy receive Liberace award.

LAS VEGAS — Thanks, Liberace. Siegfried and Roy couldn't have done it without you.

The illusionists say the flashy pianist encouraged them when they were trying to crack the tough Las Vegas entertainment scene 25 years ago.

"We were nobodys, but he treated us as equals," Siegfried said. "He told us, 'Never take your audience for granted. Love your audience and they'll love you back.'"

Siegfried and Roy received the second annual Liberace Legend Award on Wednesday at a fund-raiser for the Liberace Foundation for the Performing and Creative Arts. Liberace died in 1987.

VATICAN CITY — It was just another workday Thursday for Pope John Paul II, except for that serenade to remind him he's 75 years old.

In the morning, he delivered three speeches. He had lunch with six cardinals and worked on speeches he will give during a trip this weekend to the Czech Republic and his native Poland.

And he received a group of Indian bishops who sang "Happy Birthday" in English, said spokesman Joaquin Navarro. The pope sang along, Navarro said.

SIMI VALLEY, Calif. — Nancy Reagan says a new collection of the wit and wisdom of Ronald Reagan will bring tears to your eyes.

"If you ever want to get the essence of the man, it's there," Mrs. Reagan said Wednesday as she looked at one of the first copies of "Ronald Reagan: The Wisdom and Humor of the Great Communicator."

The book, due in stores May 30, was put together by Frederick J. Ryan Jr., an aide to Reagan after he left the White House.

"It makes you laugh, think, turns your heart," Ryan said.

"Cry," interjected Mrs. Reagan, who signed copies for more than 400 people at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library.

Ronald Reagan disclosed in November that he has Alzheimer's disease.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. — Joseph Wambaugh's legal burden is a little lighter.

A federal judge has thrown out part of a lawsuit accusing the "Onion Field" novelist and former police officer of conspiracy and evidence-tampering in a murder case chronicled in his book "Echoes in the Darkness."

U.S. District Judge James F. McClure Jr. ruled Monday that a two-year statute of limitations had expired for claims filed under state law. He left intact a federal claim of conspiracy to violate Jay C. Smith's civil rights.

Smith, a former high school principal, was convicted in the 1979 slaying of a teacher and her two children. The state Supreme Court in 1992 overturned the conviction, citing prosecutorial misconduct.

Wambaugh had paid a state investigator $50,000, some of it before Smith's conviction, for information used in "Echoes," later made into an ABC miniseries.

CINCINNATI — New York Jets quarterback Boomer Esiason is pledging $1.6 million to the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation to help fight the disease that afflicts his 4-year-old son.

Esiason pledges $1.6 million to Cystic Fibrosis foundation.

The former Cincinnati Bengals quarterback will announce his pledge Friday at Children's Hospital Medical Center, where son Gunnar receives treatment. The hospital is naming its pulmonary medicine clinic for the boy.

The money is to be raised through Boomer Esiason's Heroes Foundation.

Cystic fibrosis is a genetic disease that causes mucus to clog the lungs, creating infections. Most of victims die before age 30.

NBA PLAYOFFS

MAGIC: Grant returns despite hand injury

ing 102-94 with less than three minutes to play.

O'Neal had 27 points and Hardaway 21 for Orlando, which will meet the winner of the Indiana-New York series in the Eastern Conference finals.

It was the earliest postseason exit since 1990 for Jordan, who carried the Bulls to NBA titles the next three seasons before leaving in his prime, only to return exactly two months ago with his simple and dramatic "I'm back."

The Bulls were immediately considered favorites for another championship, partly because of Jordan's ability to dominate in the clutch.

But for the third time this series, the NBA's all-time leader in playoff scoring average faded down the stretch and the Magic gladly accepted Chicago's generosity to claim the biggest victory since joining the league in 1989.

Horace Grant, the steady but underappreciated power forward who left the Bulls as a free agent after last season, dislocated a finger during the game. He was lifted onto his teammates shoulders after the buzzer as the rest of the Magic's players and coaches celebrated in deathly quiet United Center.

Grant became the quiet leader of the Magic, which was playing in only its third postseason series. The Bulls could have used him.

Pippen and B.J. Armstrong, Chicago's two championship-era holdovers besides Jordan, also made crucial mistakes in the closing minutes.

The Bulls could have gone ahead by 11 points with about three minutes left, but Armstrong missed a wide-open 3-pointer.

Orlando's rally began when O'Neal rebounded Dennis Scott's missed 3-pointer and made a short hook shot. Scott stole the ball from Toni Kukoc and Anderson made a 3-pointer from the right side.

After Pippen missed a layup and tip, he fouled Brian Shaw, who made two free throws. Jordan, contested closely by Anderson, shot an airball on a jumper from just inside the foul line. With 42.8 seconds left, Anderson's 18-footer from the right side put the Magic ahead to stay, 103-102.

Anderson then forced Jordan to pass to Luc Longley, who missed a layup. He appeared to have been fouled by Hardaway, but there was no call.

Scott made one free throw before Jordan, again pressured by Anderson, tried a difficult bounce pass for Longley that was tipped by Shaw to Hardaway. Hardaway made two free throws with 12.8 seconds remaining, Armstrong missed a 3-pointer and O'Neal finished the game with a breakaway dunk.

Jordan finished with 24 points on 8-of-19 shooting. Jordan, who professed love for the old Chicago Stadium and disdain for the United Center, never made more shots than he missed in any game at the new $175 million palace.

Pippen had 26 points and 12 rebounds but couldn't keep the Bulls from losing the sixth game of a playoff series at home for the first time since May 11, 1975.

Scott added 21 points and Anderson 18 for the Magic.

The Magic came out firing, hitting their first five 3-point attempts and 9-of-11 shots overall to take a 25-16 lead. Hardaway and Scott each had eight points and two 3-pointers.

But Orlando was only 2-of-11 the rest of the period, which Chicago finished with a 20-5 run for a 36-31 lead. Pippen had 12 points and five assists as the Bulls shot 67 percent in the quarter.

Two more 3-pointers by Hardaway helped the Magic take a 63-61 halftime lead. Hardaway had 19 first-half points as Orlando shot 55 percent. Pippen scored 17 points for the Bulls, who shot 56 percent despite Jordan's 3-for-9 half. Jordan even missed two free throws, snapping his string of 28 straight.

Orlando opened a 78-69 lead in the third quarter, as O'Neal scored on two drives and Scott and Anderson made 3-pointers. Jordan, meanwhile, missed three shots, including two layups, and had a turnover before making a 3-pointer that began a 14-5 run to make it 83-83.

Grant, who averaged 20.4 points on 70 percent shooting the first five games, played sparingly after leaving late in the third quarter with his finger injury.

Armstrong's 3-pointer with about 3 1/2 minutes to play capped an 11-2 run that gave Chicago its 102-94 lead but the Bulls missed their last six shots.

Celtic's Ford chooses high road out of Boston

By Jackie Macmullan
N.Y. Times News Service

BOSTON — Chris Ford closed out his career as Celtics coach the way he started: dressed in a suit and tie, and flanked by his family. His no-nonsense approach and his unfailing honesty made him attractive to the ball club in the beginning; those same qualities cost him his job in the end.

"I have no regrets," Ford declared Thursday during his press conference at Boston Garden's Blades and Boards Club. "I enjoyed the way I carried myself, as a Celtic and as a member of the NBA."

Ford's five-year tenure as coach ended Wednesday morning when M.L. Carr informed him the team no longer needed his services. That brief meeting was the culmination of a full season of frustrations for Ford, who not only felt undermined in his final months, but powerless to stop it.

"It's easy to sit back and be a Monday morning quarterback," said Ford. "But this is not the easiest place in the NBA to work. A lot of people are involved, and everyone has an opinion.

"There's always going to be some second-guessing."

Ford said he sensed that second-guessing intensifying shortly after he returned from a hiatus to undergo colon surgery, which kept him away from the team for six weeks.

"I came back," said Ford, "and certain things went on that gave me the inclination this (relationship) would not work out."

Ford did not offer specifics, yet it is known that during that period, both Dino Radja and Dominique Wilkins went behind the coach's back to express their unhappiness to Carr.

Asked if those were the kinds of things that caused him to lose faith, Ford answered.

"I heard rumors just like you people hear rumors. I heard the rumors about me, but I didn't let it affect my job. I went out and did my job.

"Someone said, 'Make the playoffs.' That's what I did."

Boston stumbled into the postseason with a 35-47 record but salvaged its season in part with a strong, albeit unsuccessful, showing against Orlando in the first round.

On the day Ford was fired, owner Paul Gaston was quoted as saying anyone who loved basketball, and the Celtics, "would have liked for us to do a lot better this year."

Ford maintains those kinds of expectations were unrealistic.

"I think I did a hell of a job here under the circumstances," he said.

Those circumstances include a team that has no undisputed leader, and no player of All-Star caliber. The Celtics have locked several complementary players into expensive long-term contracts, leaving them little flexibility to alter a roster that desperately needs an overhaul. Add an aging superstar in Wilkins, who still hasn't quite come to grips with how far his game has fallen, and a front line that might have been the worst defensive unit in basketball, and the future is suspect.

Yet from ownership down to Carr, the spin continues to be talk of a "championship-driven" franchise. That false optimism, as much as anything, rankled Ford, and ultimately alienated him from the front office. He remained brutally honest about his team's shortcomings, and the dim prospects for the future, until the end.

ROCKETS: 18-5 run keys Houston win

(From 1C)

Trailing 84-83 with 35 seconds to go in the third quarter, the Rockets went on an 18-5 charge that carried over into the fourth period and gave them a 101-89 lead with 5:32 left.

Olajuwon, who had nine points in the fourth quarter, then turned the game over to the Rockets' 3-point shooters and they hit four in a row, starting with Mario Elie, who had two in the burst that kept alive the Rockets' hopes of defending their NBA title.

"We get sick and tired of hearing how much heart they have," Charles Barkley said. "They don't have any more heart than we do. We will be ready Saturday."

Sam Cassell also hit two 3-pointers and Robert Horry got one.

"Sam Cassell, Mario Elie and Chucky Brown, the way they continued to carry the team was fantastic," Olajuwon said. "In the fourth quarter, the concentration level was there.

"I think the confidence was there all along. Our record is really deceiving in the regular season (47-35). In the playoffs we have a championship team. You have to respect this team."

Only four teams in NBA history have recovered to win a playoff series after trailing 3-1. Boston did it in 1968 and 1981, both times against Philadelphia, the Los Angeles Lakers overcame Phoenix in 1970 and Washington in 1979 against San Antonio.

"We've been in these do-or-die situations so often, it's like another day at the office for us," Cassell said.

Barkley, with sub-par performances in Games 3 and 5, hit his first 10 shots and finished the half with 27 points as the Suns led 58-55. But Barkley took only two shots in the fourth quarter and finished with 34 points.

"The fourth quarter was the difference when they started raining 3s," Barkley said. "They took me out of the game in the second half. They changed their defense. I was just trying to make something happen. I think we're going to win Saturday. We're fine."

Wesley Persons added 15 points for Phoenix. Clyde Drexler, still recovering from the flu, scored 20 for the Rockets.

The third quarter went back and forth until the Rockets started their charge, pulling to an 87-84 advantage on four points by Drexler in the final 23 seconds. Drexler had a three-point play with 23 seconds left and hit 1-of-2 free throws following a loose-ball foul on Kevin Johnson with two seconds showing.

Wall Street takes big tumble

By PATRICIA LAMIELL
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market tumbled Thursday in the most serious sell-off in six months, as investors grew alarmed that the recent steep drop in interest rates may have ended.

The Dow Jones industrial average plunged 81.96 points to close at 4,340.64. That was the worst decline since the blue-chip index fell 91.52 points on Nov. 22 and was the third straight daily loss following six consecutive record highs.

The sell-off was aggressive and widespread, with declining issues leading advancers by a 5-to-2 margin on the New York Stock Exchange. NYSE volume was moderately heavy at 348.37 million shares as of 4 p.m., against 347.91 million in the previous session.

The steep drop in the Dow caused the New York Stock Exchange to impose restrictions on computerized program trading at 3:35 p.m.

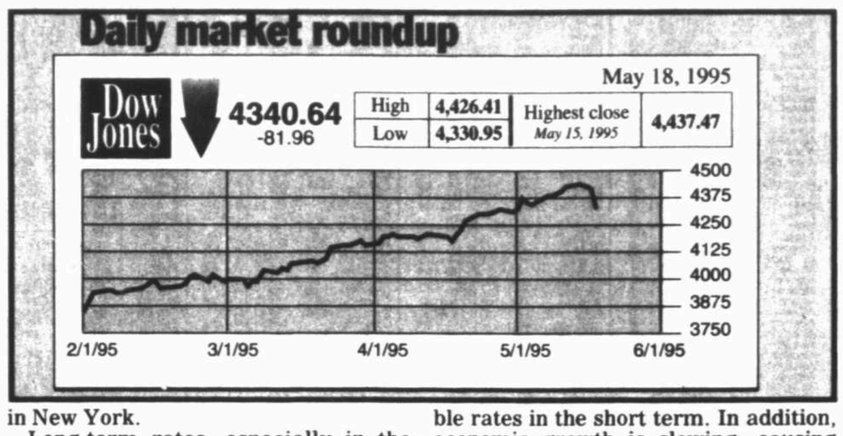
Broad-market indexes also fell. The NYSE's composite index fell 3.72 to 279.80. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index slid 7.49 to 519.58.

The Nasdaq composite index lost 7.87 to 864.06, while the American Stock Exchange's market value index descended 2.07 to 487.45.

Stock prices headed lower at the opening bell as bond prices lost ground, pushing interest rates higher. The 30-year Treasury bond was down 3/8 point late in the day, pushing its yield, which rises when prices fall, up to 6.89 percent.

Bonds slipped after the government reported disappointing trade deficit data. Although the deficit fell slightly in March to $9.12 billion, from a revised $9.15 billion in February, analysts had expected a bigger decline. Exports rose 5 percent to $65.34 billion, while imports went up 4 percent to $74.46 billion.

"The market has rallied exceptionally over the last six months, and much of it is justified as the result of sharply lower long-term interest rates, but it looks like we're coming to the end of that interest rate decline," said James Solloway, director of research for Argus Research in New York.



Long-term rates, especially in the market for U.S. Treasury issues, have been falling for months. Low rates make corporate borrowing cheaper and can boost profits, which enhances stock values.

Solloway said the outlook is now for stable rates in the short term. In addition, economic growth is slowing, causing forecasts for second-quarter profit growth to be slower than the sharp rises in the first quarter, he said.

The sell-off was intensified by Friday's expiration of options tied to stock indexes, which often adds to volatility.

Crude higher

Crude oil futures prices finished slightly higher Thursday in a day marked by quiet, technical trading.
WTI crude oil for delivery in June finished at $20.00 per barrel, up 4 cents, on the New York Mercantile Exchange. On Wednesday it finished down 12 cents at $19.96 per barrel.
"It was a very quiet day. Again, more movement than change," said Peter Beutel, president of Cameron Hanover Inc., a brokerage and consulting firm based in Bronxville, N.Y.
Gasoline prices fell on the heels of a rally that has taken it to 3-year highs. Unleaded gasoline for delivery in June finished at 66.50 cents per gallon, down 0.26 cent. Refinery outages and expectations of strong demand by summer drivers have helped lift gasoline futures recently. The June contract finished up 0.46 cent a gallon Wednesday at 66.76 cents.

Disney and angels

ANAHEIM,—The California Angels and The Walt Disney Company (NYSE: DIS) have reached an agreement in principle for Disney to acquire a twenty-five percent interest in the baseball team and to assume the role of managing general partner, it was announced today by Gene and Jackie Autry, owners of the Angels, and Michael D. Eisner, Disney's chairman and CEO.
Under terms of the agreement, Disney would have the option to purchase the rest of the team at a later date. Completion of the deal is subject to certain conditions including the approval of Major League Baseball.

Another trump

New Jersey regulators ruled Thursday that letting Donald J. Trump open another casino won't drive out competitors or discourage new entries into the casino market here.
In a long-awaited decision, the state Casino Control Commission voted 5-0 to let him reopen a dormant casino in Trump Regency hotel and link it with nearby Trump Plaza Hotel Casino.
The vote came after two economists — one hired by Trump, one hired by the state Division of Gaming enforcement — testified that the addition wouldn't result in "undue economic concentration" of the Atlantic City casino market by Trump, who already has three casinos.
For 17 years, the state Casino Control Act barred any one person or company from owning more than three casinos. But a deregulation bill signed by Gov. Christie Whitman in January eliminated the cap. It gave the Casino Control Commission the power to deny licenses if it believes the casino would give an operator too dominant a share of the market.

Southwest profits expected to show signs of recovery

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Airlines Co. expects its slumping profits to start recovering this quarter, although they likely won't match last year's second-quarter profits of $59 million, chairman Herbert Kelleher said Thursday.

Kelleher told reporters after the company's annual shareholder meeting that Southwest's earnings should recover by the third quarter, barring any unforeseen events.

Profits for Southwest, which has struggled to cope with rapid expansion, were down 47 percent year-over-year in the fourth quarter of 1994, and 72 percent in the first quarter of this year.

"We anticipate that we'll be recovered in the third quarter. And that's what I've told the financial community, that you will see an upward progression, the trend will improve in the second quarter. In the third quarter we expect to be back to full speed," Kelleher said.

The Dallas-based airline has cut costs and increased fares, he said. Kelleher also said flights in its new markets, which make up 20 percent of its capacity, are more full and yields are growing. Southwest obtained the new markets through its December 1993 purchase of Morris Air.

Trade gap narrows

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit narrowed slightly but the gap with Japan soared and the imbalance with Mexico set an all-time high. Stock prices broke a string of record highs and plunged following the news Thursday.

The Clinton administration, already threatening huge sanctions against Japan, said the new figures only stiffened its resolve to break Japanese trade barriers.

The trade report Thursday from the Commerce Department showed that the overall deficit in goods and services narrowed 0.4 percent in March to a seasonally adjusted $9.12 billion, compared to February's deficit of $9.15 billion.

America's deficit with Japan shot up 30 percent to $6.14 billion, close to the all-time high of $6.7 billion set last October. Japanese shipments to the United States rose by 21 percent with one-fourth of that increase coming from Japanese autos and parts.

A REAL FLYING BILLBOARD

The Simpsons Fox cartoon family is emblazened across the exterior of a Western Pacific Airlines, Boeing 737-300. SThe low fare Colorado Springs-based airline sells advertising on the exterior of its plandes.

And now, the flying Simpsons

DENVER (AP) — When passengers board a bright, yellow Western Pacific Airlines jet starting next month, they will do well to heed Bart Simpson's advice, "Don't have a cow, man."

From nose to tail, the Boeing 737-300 jet features the cartoon characters of the television show, "The Simpsons," as part of a joint promotion by Fox Broadcasting Corp. and the Colorado Springs-based airline.

"I think sometimes ideas come about that are so fun and so really cool that you need to do them," said Doug Biznak, a Fox senior vice president. "We hooked up with a new airline which kind of has the same attitude."

Starting with a bright yellow background, artists have painted Lisa and Maggie Simpson near the nose of the 138-seat jet, with Homer and Bart just behind the wings. Marge Simpson's trademark blue bouffant hairdo stretches up the tail.

Biznak said the purpose of the promotion is to give people a chuckle. "People at the airports will notice it," he said. "Bart would say, 'Let me drive, man.' I think the passengers would say, 'Let's not let that happen.' "

The promotion is the second "flying billboard" for Western Pacific, which began operations April 28. The other Boeing 737 jet is painted with the corporate logo of The Broadmoor, a Colorado Springs luxury hotel.

Other airlines have, at times, organized similar promotions. For example, America West Airlines has flown a jet painted with the Phoenix Sons logo.

"We feel it's effective marketing for us," said Ed Beauvais, Western Pacific president and chief executive officer. "We take safety and service very, very seriously. But we also think flying is fun. And what could be more fun than flying in a Simpsons airplane?"

Beauvais declined to specify financial details of the joint promotion, but said Fox paid for the jet's new paint job, which cost an estimated $100,000.

He said the plane will be put in service throughout Western Pacific's region beginning June 1. He said no decision has been made on how long the promotion will run.

Western Pacific, which bills itself as a low-fare airline, serves Los Angeles, San Francisco, Las Vegas, Phoenix, Oklahoma City and Kansas City. It plans to add service to Chicago, Seattle and Dallas-Fort Worth on June 1.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Interest rate on U.S. EE bonds can be confusing

By Bill Doyle

Q: My husband and I bought several $5,000 Series EE U.S. savings bonds in August 1992. We were told the interest rate on EE bonds was 6.75 percent at that time. So we got the bonds, instead of certificates of deposit or some other investment.

When we cashed the bonds, on April 3 this year, we received only $316 interest on each. Why?

Doyle

We thought EE bonds built up interest at the rate in effect at the time they were bought — not the current lower rate. We understand the current rate is variable, with a 4 percent guarantee for the first 18 years.

A: You received the correct amount of interest.

You were misinformed about the interest rate at the time you purchased those bonds. EE bonds issued from November 1986 through February 1993 had a guaranteed accrual rate of 6 percent — not 6.75 percent — compounded semiannually for their 12-year initial maturity period. The double-E moniker refers to the fact that EE bonds are guaranteed to double in value over an initial maturity.

Because EEs are purchased for half of face value, you paid $2,500 for each of those $5,000 face value bonds. At 6 percent, the $2,500 accumulated exactly $316 from August 1992 through April 1995. So, you received $2,816 for each bond you redeemed. That is confirmed by the Treasury Department's booklet listing EE bond tables of redemption values.

The 4 percent guaranteed rate you mention applies to EEs issued from March 1993 through April 1995, as well as every E and EE bond that entered an extended maturity period after February 1993.

After being held for five years, all those bonds also are eligible for a variable "market-based" rate, which changes every May 1 and Nov. 1. That rate is equal to 85 percent of the average yield on five-year U.S. Treasury securities.

If you kept your bonds for five years, they would have accumulated interest at the guaranteed 6 percent or the market-based rate, whichever turned out to be higher.

Q: Series EE bonds issued since May 1 have two sets of market-based rates — one for the first five years, the other for the following 12 years.

To me, this indicates our federal government has stopped providing a guaranteed interest rate on EEs it sells now or in the future. Am I correct?

A: Not really. In the unlikely event the market-based rates don't double a bond's value after 17 years, a one-time adjustment will be made to accomplish just that and thereby provide a guaranteed annual yield a bit higher than 4 percent.

Granted, 17 years is a long time to wait for the guarantee. However, during that waiting period, interest most likely will accrue on the EEs at market-based rates higher than 4 percent.

The rate at which new EEs accrue interest for the first five years is equal to 85 percent of the average yield on six-month marketable U.S. Treasury securities during the preceding three months.

For years 6 through 17, the EE market-based rate is equal to 85 percent of the average yield on five-year Treasury securities during the preceding six months.

If it all makes your eyes glaze over, keep this happy thought in mind: The complicated new arrangement means that EE bonds will always accrue interest at rates roughly competitive with interest available elsewhere.

Q: Please settle an argument. Exactly when do savings bonds reach final maturity?

A: That depends on each bond's series and issue date.

Series E bonds issued before December 1965 reach final maturity and stop accruing interest 40 years after their issue dates. E bonds issued later finally mature in 30 years, as do all EE bonds, H bonds and U.S. savings notes. The latter are also called "Freedom Shares."

HH bonds have 20-year final maturities. Unlike Es, EEs and savings notes, on which interest accumulates, Hs and HHs pay out interest every six months.

'Laverne & Shirley' reunion not half bad

By Frazier Moore
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — Laverne and Shirley live!

And not just in 178 eponymous half-hours, some of whose wackiest, slapstickiest moments have been rounded up for "The Laverne & Shirley Reunion" Monday at 7 p.m. CDT on KMID-TV.

No, those zany working girls of 1950s-era Milwaukee and 1970s-era prime time live on, even now, in the actresses who gave them life.

"Just older and fatter," pronounces Penny Marshall (a k a Laverne DeFazio), these days the hot director of such films as "Awakenings" and "A League of Their Own."

"That's right!" chimes in Cynthia Williams (forever Shirley Feeney), whose current role is being the mother of two children and who was last seen in series TV two years ago in the short-lived "Getting By."

They must be joking. Which would sum up a recent interview with this still-dynamic duo a dozen years, almost to the day, after "Laverne & Shirley" ended its eight-season run.

Williams in the green pantsuit, Marshall in the black pantsuit: Between a reporter's questions, they cut up like the life-long pals they played on TV. And like anything but two actresses who supposedly spent the entire run of their series at each other's throat.

"Who do you think started THAT rumor?"

Sub thriller opens to good reviews, better crowds

By Michael H. Price
N.Y. Times News Service

In Tony Scott's expertly crafted thriller "Crimson Tide," Gene Hackman drops the soft-pedal gentlemanly approach that characterized much of his work in recent years and reverts to the rock-'em, sock-'em outspoken troublemaker.

Hackman even gets to rough up co-star Denzel Washington, who rises to the occasion with a performance that fully justifies Hackman's anti-social behavior.

The players are antagonists struggling over who should be in control of a Trident submarine containing enough nuclear firepower to touch off a third world war. The threat is hardly new to the movies, but something about the sheer precariousness of Michael Schiffer's screenplay makes it all seem scary enough to get the audience thinking about a new wave of bomb-shelter construction.

The Cold War was never like the state of global turmoil portrayed in "Crimson Tide."

The problem is simply the biggest threat of war since the Cuban Missile Crisis: A Russian nationalist renegade faction pulls a coup on a missile base, threatening to blow the planet to smithereens. The USS Alabama sets out in response, ready to launch its own Armageddon as needed.

For all the glossiness of his approach, director Scott —

Forget Paris? Just forget the movie

By Yardena Arar
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Billy Crystal is a very funny man — so funny that you believe Debra Winger would choose him over the rich, handsome Frenchman she's married to in "Forget Paris" because he makes her laugh.

■ "Forget Paris" is playing at the North Park Cinema.

Whether he's funny enough to carry "Forget Paris" is another question. A collection of mildly amusing anecdotes about an upscale middle-aged marriage, it's the sort of film that relies heavily on the appeal of the players and the scenery because there really isn't much else going on.

And players is the applicable word here. In addition to Crystal, Winger and several familiar faces in the supporting cast — most notably Joe Mantegna, Richard Masur, Julie Kavner and Cathy Moriarty — "Forget Paris" also features a number of National Basketball Association greats playing themselves: Charles Barkley, David Robinson, Kevin Johnson, Sean Elliot, Spudd Webb, Tim Hardaway, Reggie Miller, Isiah Thomas and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

That's because Crystal's character, Mickey Gordon, is one of the most controversial referees in the NBA, and his antics on the court are at least as funny as anything that happens between Mickey and Ellen, Winger's career-girl heroine.

They meet when the coffin of Mickey's recently deceased — and previously estranged — dad is lost in transit to France, where he had asked to be interred alongside his World War II buddies. As the customer service representative for the offending airline, Ellen fields Mickey's sarcasm and complaints with grace and style, even showing up at the cemetery.

After a whirlwind romance in Paris at its prettiest, Mickey returns to his job, only to fly back to Paris to propose to Ellen — which is when he learns about the rich, handsome husband she's separated from. Of course, they eventually do get together, but that's only a third of the movie.

The film derives its title from the advice Ellen gets when she wonders what happened to the romance of her courtship as she and Mickey grapple with a grab bag of middle-class marital problems — career conflicts, infertility and so forth. It's the kind of stuff routinely discussed on Oprah, Geraldo and Donahue, and the sitcom treatment it gets here doesn't contribute much to the dialogue.

Crystal's direction isn't the problem here, nor are his and Winger's performances. They are both charming to a fault. The material, however, is simply too flimsy and insubstantial to sustain a feature film.

Kline goes native for 'French Kiss'

By Ric Leyva
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Playing a Frenchman had a lasting effect on Kevin Kline.

Before he'll field any questions nowadays, he needs a jolt of high-octane java. Not that wimpy American brew either, mon frere.

The man needs capuccino. Make it a double.

"I got addicted in France," he says, stirring in four sugars when it's finally delivered.

Kline, dapper in an Irish tweed jacket and sage tie, is perhaps America's finest classic actor. He's also a silly guy.

Sipping eagerly, yet gingerly because of the steam, he gets a foamy milk mustache on his upper lip, then starts talking as if he hasn't noticed.

■ "French Kiss" is playing at the UA Cine 4.

In his latest film, "French Kiss," an old-style romantic comedy he made with Meg Ryan, the acting challenge was to be convincing as a French lout.

"We did everything we could to make me look French," he says. "I couldn't shave. On the set it was always, 'Grease, more grease in the hair. Hey, did you bathe again this month?'"

But seriously folks, the Shakespearean trouper and two-time Tony winner who won an Academy Award for "A Fish Called Wanda" didn't take the job lightly. Intensive language study was required. Several scenes feature Kline speaking French over subtitles.

"I had always wanted to become fluent, but the only way to really do that is to spend time in the country," he says. "So I thought, 'Well, not only spending time in France, but also playing a Frenchman, would be a good crash course.' It dovetailed nicely."

Third 'Die Hard' movie works with a vengeance

By Bob Strauss
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — They made "Die Hard With a Vengeance" with, well, a vengeance. No punch was pulled in the filmmakers' determination to turn New York City into the craziest movie thrill ride of the year.

There are, of course, big explosions — although, as luck would have it for a production shot before the Oklahoma City tragedy, rather few for a film that seems to be about a mad bomber.

There are those old action movie staples, ridiculous car chases, but shot on the streets of Manhattan with a witty, controlled recklessness. You actually look forward to them instead of looking at your watch.

■ "Die Hard With a Vengeance" is playing at the UA Cine 4.

And boy, are there stunts. Bruce Willis and Samuel L. Jackson, who play the movie's bickering heroes, are killed at least a dozen times each by blasts, crashes, falls, beatings, bullets and a subway car with a mind of its own. Naturally, they survive each fatal encounter — this is live-action Wile E. Coyote cinema of the highest order — and the former "Pulp Fiction" co-stars are complete bloody pulps themselves by this movie's midpoint.

WILLIS: 'Vengeance' non-stop action

(From 1D)

"Vengeance's" plot differs just enough from the previous two "Die Hards" and their numerous knockoffs to play fresh. It was based on a script, "Simon Says" by Jonathan Hensleigh, that was not originally intended as a sequel. The new perspective is most welcome. That the story is as diabolically clever as its master villain is, of course, the best news of all.

He's the mysterious Simon (Jeremy Irons, all rock starred-up in a bad blond dye job and mesh muscle T-shirt), who starts things off by blowing the bejabbers out of a department store. With New York in a panic, Simon phones John McClane's old boss, police chief Cobb (Larry Bryggman), with the demand that McClane walk alone, through Harlem, wearing a sandwich board bearing a racial slur.

Trouble is, Willis' McClane is off the force and lying drunk somewhere due to yet another long-distance breakup with his wife. He's found, halfway sobered up and dropped off north of 125th Street to die. Lucky for him, Jackson's touchy black-pride advocate, Zeus Carver, saves McClane in the nick of time.

This will be the last time Carver's dumb enough to play good Samaritan.

Simon, who seems to see all and is always 10 steps ahead of the cops, insists that Carver joins Willis in city-spanning goose chases — if they don't play, something else goes boom.

The sheer, high-velocity craftsmanship of it all makes the film, at the very worst, too much of a really good, noisy thing.

KLINE: Actor switches emphasis to family

(From 1D)

There also was the, er, challenge of being convincing as a glib French lover boy plagued by a spell of impotency.

"Oh, that took a lot of research, too," he says, keeping a straight face. "I did the whole movie blithely confident all the impotence jokes would be taken out. Boy was I surprised when I went to a screening and they got the biggest laughs."

After draining his cup with a greedy slurp, Kline soon starts fidgeting, adopting awkward, uncomfortable poses in his armchair as the caffeine kicks in. Asked whether landing the lead opposite Ryan was particularly satisfying because he's 47, Kline laughs out loud, unable to quit for a painfully long stretch of time.

When he finally gets a hold of himself, he's suddenly all business, saying it's no major casting coup because "French Kiss" isn't a dramatic love story.

"Cary Grant was doing romantic comedies well into his 50s," he says. "It really knows no age, that particular comic device, of the couple who is at odds with each other, who fight their attraction for one another, who deny it right up until the end."

Kline is taking a little time for interviews before flying off to London to begin shooting the sequel to "A Fish Called Wanda." The bottom line is that he's in his prime, happily married to actress Phoebe Cates and the father of two children. He's not worried about critical reviews or box-office numbers.

"I have nothing riding on any movie anymore," he says, which launches him on the topic of U.S.-French cultural differences.

"It's a very American notion — the idea that a movie is no good if it doesn't make $100 million, that you're not a movie star unless your movies make at least $100 million," he said. "And these journalists who say, 'Is this the one that's going to get you into that top echelon of superduper megastardom?' Gosh, I don't know."

He longingly fingers his empty coffee cup.

"Right after 'Sophie's Choice' and then 'The Big Chill,'" he says, "I was doing 'Richard III' in Central Park and someone wrote in to Parade magazine, 'What happened to Kevin Kline's career?'

"'It seemed to be going so well, but now he's doing FREE Shakespeare in the park.'" Kline can't help but giggle.

"To me that was the highlight of my career. I was playing 'Richard III'! In New York City! Yes, it's free," he says, slightly agitated. "That's one of the great things the city offers and yet it was perceived as, 'He's working for free, and doing THEATER! ... We had such hopes.'

"So you know, I try not to take that kind of stuff too seriously."

A major grounding element in his life is parenthood. Son Owen is 3 1/2, his little sister Greta is 1.

"I was up at a quarter of six this morning," Kline says, finally explaining his dire need for caffeine. "That's the life. I don't miss not going out at night. I saw about three movies last year and maybe two plays."

The family is tight. The children aren't left behind when their parents go on location. Kline and Cates alternate film projects so the one who isn't working can be there with the kids.

Thinking as a father, Kline says the chaotic, information-packed present doesn't worry him much. Neither does the future.

"I think because things are happening so much faster now than they were for our parents, we will develop ... a higher sensitivity to filtering out, although evidence is to the contrary, what is useful information and what is bad information or useless information," he says.

"And maybe we'll be forced to become more discerning to survive."

REUNION: Williams still the perky type

(From 1D)

asks Marshall, fixing her hangdog gaze on the reporter.

Er, uh, the press?

"Bingo," says the pert-to-this-day Williams.

"The trouble between us was an impression started in the first year of the show," Marshall declares. "The press just perpetuated it for eight seasons."

"Penny said it best when she said, 'Yeah, we would argue, but it was like a family.' You would have had to be there."

While most of the reunion special is clips, the intro segments, taped last December, actually did reunite Marshall and Williams with the rest of the "family" — Eddie Mekka (Shirley's boyfriend Carmine Ragusa), as well as Michael McKean and David L. Lander (nitwit neighbors Lenny and Squiggy). It was the first time they had all been together since the series wrapped.

They were writing partners, each making $30 a day, when they were cast as Laverne and Shirley for a guest shot on "Happy Days." That led to its spinoff "Laverne & Shirley," which premiered Jan. 27, 1976 — as the week's top-rated show.

"But the first day of shooting they wouldn't let Cindy on the studio lot," recalls Marshall.

"They didn't have my name on the list! After I rammed the gate, the guard chased me with his bicycle. He was an old guy with a gun on his hip. I was crying."

Sometimes the set was no less tumultuous.

"We made no bones about our disagreements," says Williams. "But in about eight seconds it would be over."

"Most of the time our fighting was with the writers, not each other," Marshall adds. "Sometimes we blatantly yelled about the writing. Other times we wore funny hats during the rehearsal scenes to say, 'We're in trouble.'"

"Then we fell into a trap," Williams recalls. "We'd say, 'OK, we'll show you the scene.' But then we'd make it work, and the writers would say, 'So what's wrong with THAT?'"

They often made it work by adding slapstick to prop up the jokes.

TIDE: Movie's ideas conveyed in sensational context whose credits include "Top Gun" (1986) and "True Romance" (1993) — remains capable of conveying ideas in a sensational context.

But "Crimson Tide" is a film of no small intelligence, thanks largely to the clash that escalates between Hackman and Washington. A battle that could decide the future of civilization is taking place in cramped, isolated quarters that bring out the worst in the rival commanders.

Bringing out the worst in ill-tempered authoritarian Capt. Frank Ramsey (Hackman) and brilliant smart-aleck Lt. Cmdr. Ron Hunter (Washington) brings out the best of the stars who contribute their most memorable work of recent years.

Hackman is intent on tearing into the enemy with full firepower — a man maddened by power, who still believes America should have blown Russia off the map back in the early '60s.

And this brings out the mutinous instincts in Washington's character, an authority figure who despises authority.

Essentially a wise polemic against strength through brute force, "Crimson Tide" also is an edge-of-the-seat exercise that should keep even the most practiced suspense fans guessing. The horrors of uncertainty have never seemed quite so palpable.

America takes precautions against viral infection brought by foreign travellers

WASHINGTON (AP) — America is taking fresh measures to seal its borders against the Ebola virus now killing people in Africa, but a strain of the disease has slipped in before and scientists say it could again.

Immigration and Naturalization Service agents who check passports at all U.S. international airports have been told to be alert for any passengers who are obviously ill, the agency said Thursday.

Agents also are alerted to double-screen travelers returning from Africa, particularly from Zaire. In one province of Zaire, at least 87 people have been killed by an outbreak of Ebola, a vicious virus that kills about 90 percent of those infected.

"We are now screening everybody coming in from anywhere overseas," said Robert Steve of the INS. "If they are coming from Africa, then they will have a second screening."

Passports carry ink stamps from each country visited. INS agents also are provided lists of people arriving directly or indirectly from Africa.

Steve said if the travelers have recently been in Zaire, they are referred for a third screening to experts from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention who are standing by at major ports of entry.

"Those passengers could be quarantined if necessary," said Steve.

The extra screening applies not only to immigrants and visitors from Africa, but also to American tourists returning from Africa, he said.

Most travelers arriving from Africa, said Steve, have stopped off in Europe and immigration authorities in those countries are alerted to screen for ill passengers.

'We are now screening everybody coming in from anywhere overseas. If they are coming from Africa, then they will have a second screening.'
— Rod Steger, who lives in Malibu, Calif.

A man arriving from Zaire was quarantined in Toronto on Wednesday after he told Canadian health officials that his mother had died in Africa of Ebola.

On Monday, the CDC ordered airlines to notify the agency of U.S.-bound passengers who appear to have fever or who are vomiting blood, both symptoms of Ebola.

Some of the airlines also are handing out CDC fliers about Ebola.

Travelers suspected of Ebola infection would be taken to a hospital and other passengers on the airline flight would be monitored by CDC personnel, said Chuck McCance, director of the CDC's Division of Quarantine.

Robert Novak, a University of Illinois expert on tropical diseases, said the intensified monitoring "is a good start." But, he added, "We are never fully protected. We are not immune from things that float around the world."

He said modern airline travel makes it possible for people to carry disease halfway around the world within a matter of hours and there is no practical way to absolutely assure that everyone coming into the country is free of infectious disease.

"You can't build a brick wall around America or take blood and stool samples (for disease screening) from everybody arriving at a U.S. port," said Novak.

The scientist said the only protection will come from unrelenting international vigilance against disease, research to find sources of the infections and swift efforts at control.

"The best way to interdict a disease is not at the borders, but at the source," he said.

Ebola and another African virus, Marburg, are the most lethal viruses known. There is no treatment or vaccine. The viruses kill by causing massive hemorrhage. Victims often die within days, usually bleeding from the eye, ears, nose and mouth.

In 1989, Ebola was identified in a group of imported monkeys in Reston, Va. The animals were quarantined and federal disease fighters, wearing airtight suits for protection, entered the building and systematically killed each monkey with injections. The remains were destroyed.

Four people were known to have been exposed to the virus, but none became ill. Some believe the Reston Ebola was a strain that is not infectious for humans, but Novak said this was never proved and it still is officially considered to be lethal.

Rate & Credit Policies

Rate charges are determined at the time of placement. All ads accepted are subject to credit approval. Some classified categories require payment in advance. Credit applications are also required for business accounts. Yearly contract agreements are available. The Midland Reporter-Telegram reserves the right to correctly classify and edit all copy or to reject or cancel any advertisement at any time.

Cancellations

The price of your ad will be based on the number of days published according to our rate structure. Call (915) 682-6222 - ask for your cancellation number. This is your record of cancellation and it is important that you have it in the event of any misunderstanding or adjustment. "Super Seller" and "Real Wheel Deal" ads may be cancelled, but are non-adjustable and non-refundable.

Errors and Adjustments

Please check your ad the first day that it appears to be sure that all of the information is correct. This will ensure that your ad is exactly what you want readers to see. Call us the first day if you find an error at 915-682-6222. To report an error in: Saturday's edition call Saturday morning between 8a.m. and 10a.m. Errors in Sunday's edition should be reported on Monday morning after 8:00 a.m. We must limit our financial responsiblity, if any, to the charge for the word or space, and cannot be held responsible for incorrect ads after the first day of publication.

Omissions of Ads

The Midland Reporter-Telegram assumes no financial responsiblity in an ad beyond the cost of the ad itself, and no responsiblity for the omission of an ad.

IF YOU ARE READING THIS AD, YOU ARE UNHAPPY, YOU ARE EITHER OUT OF WORK, OR YOU JUST HAVE A "JOB"

Do you want a career? Do you want to earn $30,000+ per year? Do you want a benefit package second to none?

I am going to hire 5 people this week to service families in the Midland-Odessa area with funeral & cemetery pre-arrangements. The people I am looking for must be honest, sincere, self-motivated, and be willing to treat every person they talk to the same way they would want to be treated. I work strictly above the board, and I expect the same from the people that work with me.

If you have these qualifications, I would very much enjoy talking to you, and explain the benefits our company has to offer you. Interviewing at 9:30 Wed. May 24th and Thurs. May 25th.

Ellis/Resthaven
Funeral Home & Cemetery
4616 N. Big Spring
