'Union is strong, but economy troubled'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's midterm appeal for a standby tax hike and the "strong medicine" of a domestic spending freeze faces trouble in Congress, even though Democratic leaders say they will accept his summons to find a bipartisan cure for the nation's economic ills.

The president, in his nationally broadcast State of the Union address to a joint House-Senate session Tuesday night, called for holding federal spending at about roughly 5 percent above current levels — except for defense programs.

And he urged a 1 percent income tax hike to take effect Oct. 1, 1985 if economic recovery fails to materialize. Reagan also called for excise taxes on domestic and imported oil.

Reagan said cost-of-living increases in Social Security and government retirement benefits should be delayed for six months.

And he said federal pay and retirement benefits, both military and civilian, should be frozen for one year.

"The state of our union is strong, but our economy is troubled," Reagan declared, adding: "We have a long way to go...but America is on the mend."

He called his plan "bipartisan, fair, prudent (and) realistic."

And while praised by Republican leaders, the president's prescription was greeted with skepticism and even sharp criticism from leading Democrats. They complained the proposed freeze would still permit an increase of defense spending of around 14 percent a year.

"I found the speech was neither fair nor realistic," said Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va.

"He's freezing the wrong thing. He offering a freeze on Medicaid payments instead of a nuclear freeze," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

However, Kennedy added: "There is a strong bipartisan feeling on the Hill to try to work together on the principal issue of the economy."

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan was to defend the president's new proposals today before a meeting of the House-Senate Joint Economic Committee.

Congressional leaders on both sides of the aisle said Reagan would have a hard time winning approval for his provisional tax increase, either in the GOP controlled Senate or the Democratic-led House.

Reagan's proposed standby tax surcharge would be levied as of Oct. 1, 1985 only if the deficit is projected to exceed 2.5 percent of the gross national product — and only if Congress has first adopted his freeze proposal.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., called Reagan's proposals "heroic and necessary" and said they "will be controverisal but I think Congress will respond to the challenge he uttered."

Reagan, referring to the highest level of unemployment since the Depression, agreed this was "a painful period" for the nation's 12 million unemployed. And he declared: "We must all do everything in our power to bring their ordeal to an end."

Reagan said his freeze proposal — to be contained in the budget he submits to Congress next week — would hold the federal deficit at about $189 billion in fiscal 1984, the year in which he once promised to balance the budget.

"I know this is strong medicine," Reagan said.

"In recognizing the responsibility to take action, President Reagan has taken the first, necessary step in putting America back to work," said House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass.

But, the Democratic leader added: "The next step is to present a program for action that goes substantially beyond those proposals mentioned by the president."

Republicans did most of the applauding during Reagan's 43-minute speech — his first address to Congress since Democratic gains of 26 House seats in last November's elections.

But one line brought Democrats to their feet in hearty, partly mocking, applause — Reagan's declaration that "we who are in government must take the lead in restoring the economy."

Addressing the Democratic side of the aisle, Reagan ad libbed: "All the time I thought you were sitting there reading the papers."

O'Neill later said Democrats applauded because "this represents a historic political reversal.... Two years ago, before the current recession had begun, President Reagan said that "government is not the solution to our problem. Government is the problem.'"

Senate Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., said Reagan's comments were "very well a recognition on his part that if industry can't respond at this point, there's room for government to move in."

Some of Reagan's proposals have already been endorsed by O'Neill, including the six-month delay in Social Security increases. That plan is part of a Social Security rescue package Reagan said should be approved by Easter.

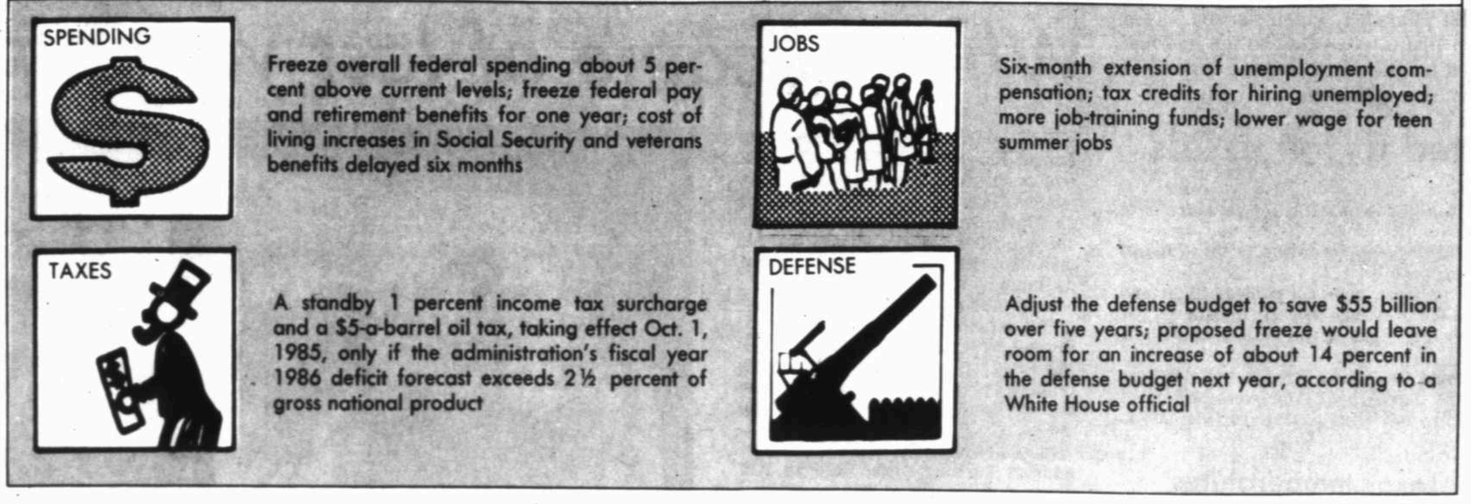

Reagan said he would trim his defense budget to save some $55 billion over the next five years, although administration officials conceded the proposed freeze would leave room for an increase of about 14 percent in the defense budget next year.

The president proposed a six-month extension of unemployment compensation for those who have exhausted their benefits, tax credits for employers who hire the long-term unemployed, additional job training funds, and a below-minimum wage for teenagers hired for summer jobs.

Reagan declined to endorse the kind of public works jobs program favored by Democrats, although said he would send Congress legislation offering "short-term help and long-term hope for our unemployed."

He mentioned only in passing the "new federalism" proposals that had been a major element of his State of the Union address last year, but which Congress ignored — a plan for turning over to states many programs now run by the government.

Freeze includes one 'hole in ice'

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's federal spending freeze — with a hole in the ice for the Pentagon — is a repackaging of the budget control campaign he has been waging ever since he came to the White House.

The change is in title and slogan, not in the substance of what Reagan proposed in his State of the Union message Tuesday night.

It was a catchier way of saying what he has been saying:

He wants domestic spending curbed because it is out of control and feeds dangerous deficits in the federal budget.

He wants Pentagon spending increased because without a defense buildup, the national security will be in jeopardy.

Those goals, and, indeed, many of the spending curbs drafted earlier by budget director David A. Stockman, fit into the kind of selective freeze Reagan wants Congress to approve.

In weighing the president's budget, congressional leaders — particularly the Democrats — will probably seek better balance between military and domestic programs than Reagan proposes. Under his freeze plan, defense spending would increase by about 14 percent, while domestic programs would get about 2 percent more.

Not long ago, Stockman and other budget advisers were lined up against the idea of a spending freeze, deeming it impractical and saying it wouldn't work. But the idea gained credence in Congress in the face of soaring deficit projections. And Reagan needed a dramatic gesture to counter the fact that the deficits he had said would be declining by now are soaring instead.

Budget-makers don't like freezes because they want room for change, adjustment, and, they hope, improvement on what went before. An outright freeze would amount to a replay of the last budget, and nobody argues that was even close to perfect.

No point in doing that again.

But a flexible freeze provides a slogan, an understandable administration goal, and a catchword Reagan and his allies can invoke again and again, as they will in the months ahead.

And a flexible freeze is the kind Reagan proposed.

"I will recommend a federal spending freeze," he said. "I know this is strong medicine, but so far we have only cut the rate of increases in federal spending. The government has continued to spend more money each year, though not as much more as it did in the past."

Under the Reagan freeze plan, it will continue to do so, spending more money next year than this year. The new element is in Reagan's proposal that the rate of increase be no greater than the rate of inflation.

The administration figures that will be in the neighborhood of 5 percent for the period involved. That is the leeway and if spending, as expected, winds up at about $800 billion, it is $40 billion worth of leeway.

Actually, given the far higher inflation rate of the previous budget year, the increase in federal spending between Reagan's first and second years in office comes close to fitting the freeze formula he proposed Tuesday night.

There is further maneuvering room in the fact that Reagan's freeze applies to the bottom line on federal spending. It is not across the board, item by item. Total federal spending would be frozen to an increase within the inflation rate.

Texas congressmen don't favor oil tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's proposed cure for the American economy included some particulary bad-tasting medicine for Texas, in the form of a possible new $5 per barrel tax on oil.

And following Reagan's State of the Union address on Tuesday, a number of Texas congressmen said they weren't prepared to swallow it.

"That (kind of tax) creates a problem for us in Texas," said Rep. Jack Fields, a Republican from Humble, who said it would adversely affect oil refining and exploration. "That's something I hope does not see the light of day."

"If (Reagan) really started pushing that one, 1984 is going to be a long year for him in Texas," predicted Rep. Kent Hance, a Democrat from Lubbock who has generally supported Reagan's economic programs.

Several Texas congressmen also expressed concern over Reagan's proposal for a one-year freeze on military pay, which would have extensive impact in a state with a heavy military presence.

"I think military personnel deserve more than adequate pay," said Rep. Mickey Leland, a Houston Democrat. "His reference to (cutting pay for) them is absolutely crass."

The oil tax proposal was not immediately evident in Reagan's address, in which he proposed a standby tax program that would begin on Oct. 1, 1985 under certain circumstances. One of those circumstances would be a federal deficit of more than 2½ percent of the Gross National Product.

Reagan did not specifically detail in his speech the kind of taxes he had in mind. But a fact sheet provided by the White House indicated that one was an excise tax on domestic and imported oil that would raise about $5 per barrel.

"I think it's first of all very tricky of the president to leave it out of his text," said Rep. John Bryant, a Democrat from Dallas. Bryant said he "wouldn't support a tax on the Texas economy to bail him out" of his economic problems.

"That was the biggest shock to somebody from Texas," said Hance, who said the proposal was "just ludicrous" coming from a president who had campaigned against the windfall profits tax on oil.

"It would run the price of gasoline through the top of the ceiling," commented Rep. Ralph Hall, a Rockwall Democrat.

Hall, Hance and Rep. Martin Frost, a Dallas Democrat, said they could support such a tax on foreign oil, but not oil produced domestically.

But Frost predicted that "this whole idea of contingency taxes...is not going to get far.

"Either we pass taxes or we don't pass them," said Frost.

Frost also called the military pay freeze "a terrible step backwards" and said many military leaders would "rather sacrifice some of the fancy new weapons" than provide no pay increases.

"I don't see that (wage freeze) as the solution to the overall economic problems," said Rep. Ron Coleman, an El Paso Democrat.

Rep. Jack Hightower, a Democrat from Vernon, said a wage freeze might be justified with a lower inflation rate, but that "to freeze salaries while we have inflation continuing to grow is going to be very unfair."

Rep. Bill Patman, a Ganado Democrat, indicated he might be able to support a military wage freeze if he became convinced it would help solve the nation's economic problems.

"It's not really acceptable to me," he said.

Council willing to trade four sections

Surface rights offered in exchange for water rights

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

As a safeguard for future needs, Midland City Counil on Tuesday approved advertising an intention to trade surface rights of four sections of land in West Texas for additional water rights.

The action came during the panel's regular meeting in City Hall Council Chambers, which was disturbed occasionally by the sound of a jack hammer as workers began putting up the steel beams for a two-story addition.

The council, in a short session which ended at 5:30 p.m., also approved a tree nursery in north Midland, two permits to sell alcoholic beverages, allotting money to the Midland Arts Assembly and instituting more flashing lights at some school crossings.

The city of Midland owns land in Loving and Winkler counties, known as the T-Bar Ranch. Under that sits an untapped water supply which the city has been holding in reserve for future needs.

According to Assistant City Manager Fred Poe, the city has had several inquiries from persons in that area of West Texas wanting to get surface rights to part of that ranch. The sections being considered for the trade have very little water under them, he said.

Councilman Tom Sloan suggested that instead of selling the land in exchange for other land with more water, the city trade water rights on the parcels of land and also retain surface rights to have access to that water.

AFTERWARD, POE emphasized the city isn't giving up any of its water reserves, but would be adding to them.

Rejected on his first attempt a year ago because of objections by residents in north Midland, R.H. Davis succeeded this time in getting a slim-margin approval of his plan for a tree nursey on the southeast corner of Midkiff Road and Bluebird Lane.

Attorney Harrell Feldt pointed out that a condominium development and apartment complex sit directly south of the proposed nursery. He explained that Davis had purchased that land in 1974 for a tree nursery before the city annexed that area, and has been growing trees out there. However, the council apparently designated land north of Bluebird Lane to retain its status of large lots under an Agricultural Estates zoning. The tree nursery would be on the south side of Bluebird Lane.

"I think the concerns of many of the people in the area are that someone doesn't get their foot in the door to develop a typical retail area, such as a pizza parlor or a service station," Feldt said.

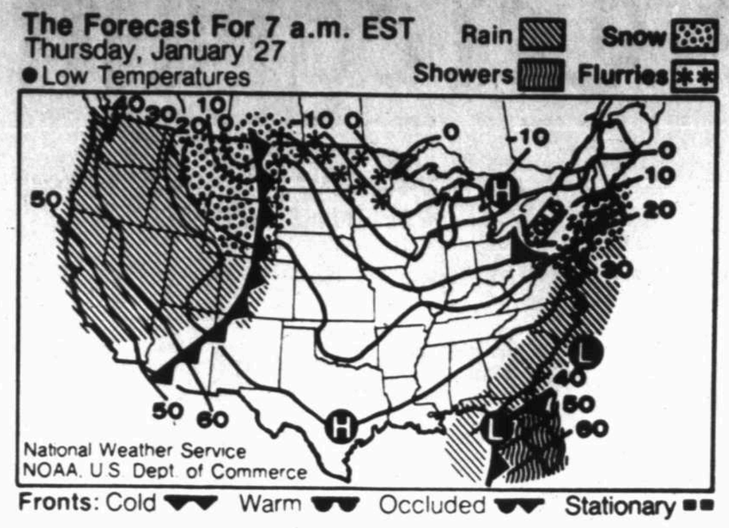

Under the proposal, the nursery would be developed under stringent requirements set up under a Planned District. And if the nursery ceased operation on that tract, the zoning would go back into single family, 1F-1.

THE NURSERY would include landscaping in front and Mondale pines, which will reach 40 to 60 feet in height, along the northern edge. This would shield the nursery from the view of residences to the north, according to Feldt. Total development will cost in excess of $200,000, he added.

Opposing was Carol Gee, 2602 Bluebird Lane, who said her family is building a house in excess of $350,000 and she feels the nursery would bring

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

Rain is forecast for most of the West Thursday, which snow expected in the northern Rockies and northern Plains, according to the National Weather Service. Rain also is precidted for the Atlantic Coast, turning to snow from the Chesapeake to southern New England.

Temperature expected to fall to 20s

The chill of winter again will set in tonight, when the temperature is to drop to the upper 20s.

The low temperature early today was 32 degrees, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The forecast, without a hint of snow or sleet, calls for a clear night and winds shifting from northerly to southerly at 5 to 10 mph by early tonight.

For Thursday, the weatherman is predicting highs in the mid-60s and southwesterly winds at 10 to 20 mph and gusty.

Tuesday's daytime high temperature was 62 degrees, which was nowhere near the record high of 83 degrees for the date in 1952. The overnight low of 32 degrees was more than double the record low of 15 degrees for the date in 1940.

Storm could drop 12 inches of rain

By The Associated Press

Forecasters were looking for up to 12 inches of rain from the latest in a series of storms that have saturated Northern California since the weekend. Today's storm carried gusts up to 40 mph, and winds were expected to build as the main body of the cold front hit the coast.

The National Weather Service said that it was just one in a series of storms lined up across the Pacific, and that they all seemed headed for Northern California.

Meanwhile, the nation's mid-section was getting rain and snow today, with snow flurries reported from northern Illinois into central and eastern Kansas and rain in Oklahoma and Texas.

Snow was forecast for later today from the Ohio Valley into New York and Pennsylvania. Rain was predicted from the lower Mississippi Valley to the central Gulf Coast.

Rain also was expected from the northern and central Pacific Coast to the northern Rockies with snow in the higher elevations.

Skies were predicted to be fair along the Atlantic Coast and in the Southwest.

Other reports:

—East: Atlanta 30 cloudy; Boston 37 fair; Buffalo 20 snow; Charleston, S.C., 38 fair; Cincinnati 30 cloudy; Cleveland 26 cloudy; Detroit 23 cloudy; Miami 55 fair; New York 37 partly cloudy; Philadelphia 36 cloudy; Pittsburgh 29 cloudy, Washington 38 cloudy.

—Central: Bismarck minus 2 snow; Chicago 22 hazy; Dallas-Fort Worth 47 fair; Denver 26 foggy; Des Moines 18 snow; Indianapolis 29 cloudy; Kansas City 29 snow; Minneapolis-St. Paul minus 6 cloudy; Nashville 36 hazy; New Orleans 53 partly cloudy, St. Louis 31 hazy.

—West: Albuquerque 28 fair; Anchorage 24 cloudy; Las Vegas 44 cloudy; Los Angeles 56 hazy; Phoenix 50 fair; Salt Lake City 36 cloudy; San Diego 59 cloudy; San Francisco 58 windy, Seattle 48 rain.

—Canada: Montreal minus 7 fair; Toronto 14 fair.

Council willing to trade four sections

down property values.

If the council allowed the nursery, she contended, "It won't be long before you allow other commercial developments and then we'll be another Andrews Highway."

Also objecting was Ken Nolen, who lives in Saddle Ridge Country Estates.

Councilman Jesse Hatfield noted that Davis had bought the land for a nursery before it was annexed and he has a problem because the city wouldn't let him carry out its intended use.

Sloan added that since Davis already had been growing trees out there, "Don't you think the precedent is already set? If we made it a PD, the trees and everything there could be enforced. As it is now, he can do anything he wants to. Don't you think trees would be more aesthetically pleasing?" he asked Nolen.

The objector agreed with the idea of trees, but said the concensus of residents in his development is they don't want the land rezoned to allow it.

Councilman Gordon Marcum II noted that he had grown up about a block away from Davis' nursery when it was located on Golf Course Road. "He did a good job of keeping up his business. After I grew up, I moved back in the same block, so it didn't deter me."

THE PD ZONING was approved, although Councilman Carroll Thomas voted against, saying, "To me it's spot zoning and contrary to the promises we made to the people. Davis got trapped by annexation, and that's unfortunate."

Pete Flores was granted a specific use permit to sell alcoholic beverages at his restaurant in San Miguel Square, even though residents in back of the center opposed it.

Kelly Scott, 3301 Maxwell, said they were concerned about late hours and trash in the alley.

Flores agreed with the council's recommendation to close the restaurant at 9 p.m. and to pay for two additional Dumpsters in the alley.

Although the council agreed in concept at its Jan. 11 meeting to give $23,800 to pay for services of the Midland Arts Assembly, it approved the resolution at this meeting over some objections.

Councilman Steve Davidson and Sloan argued briefly over the idea of allowing the money to be used to hire a professional director. Sloan insisted the Arts Assembly could be run entirely by volunteers. Davidson pointed out that the chamber of commerce isn't strictly a volunteer organization and both organizations are designed to promote Midland.

"WE'RE JUST trying to give them a breath of air to see if it can be a viable vehicle," Davidson added.

In the voting, Thomas noted, "I'm very strongly opposed to this."

Fred Baker, director of public works, said a flashing school zone light at M and Wall streets isn't warranted according to the latest survey. But he recommended it be retained, and the council agreed. The panel also approved his recommendations to put flashing school zone lights at Indiana and Tilden streets, Midland Drive and Cuthbert and Garfield and Cuthbert.

In other action, the council approved buying 600 Dumpsters, landscaping for the Municipal Court, changing the city code to cover junk automobiles and accepting a bid for a paint striping machine.

What became of last year's promises?

WASHINGTON (AP) — A year ago, Ronald Reagan stood before Congress and proposed to lower deficits, promised to seek no new taxes, pledged to dismantle the departments of energy and education and prophesied that his plans would "pull the economy out of its slump."

None of those things happened.

The deficit rose to an all-time high. Reagan signed two bills raising taxes. The energy and education departments remained intact. The slump turned into the worst economic times since the 1940s.

In his second State of the Union address Tuesday night, Reagan laid down more proposals and again foresaw better economic times.

Here are the highlights of what the president said in his first State of the Union address on Jan. 26, 1982 — and what happened:

THE ECONOMY: "The program for economic recovery that is in place will pull the economy out of its slump and put us on the road to prosperity and stable growth by the latter half of this year," Reagan said.

The recession worsened in 1982. Unemployment reached its worst level in 42 years. The nation's output declined at the steepest rate since 1946. But by the end of the year, economists said the recession had hit bottom.

THE DEFICIT: "The policies we have in place will reduce the deficit steadily, surely and, in time, completely," Reagan said.

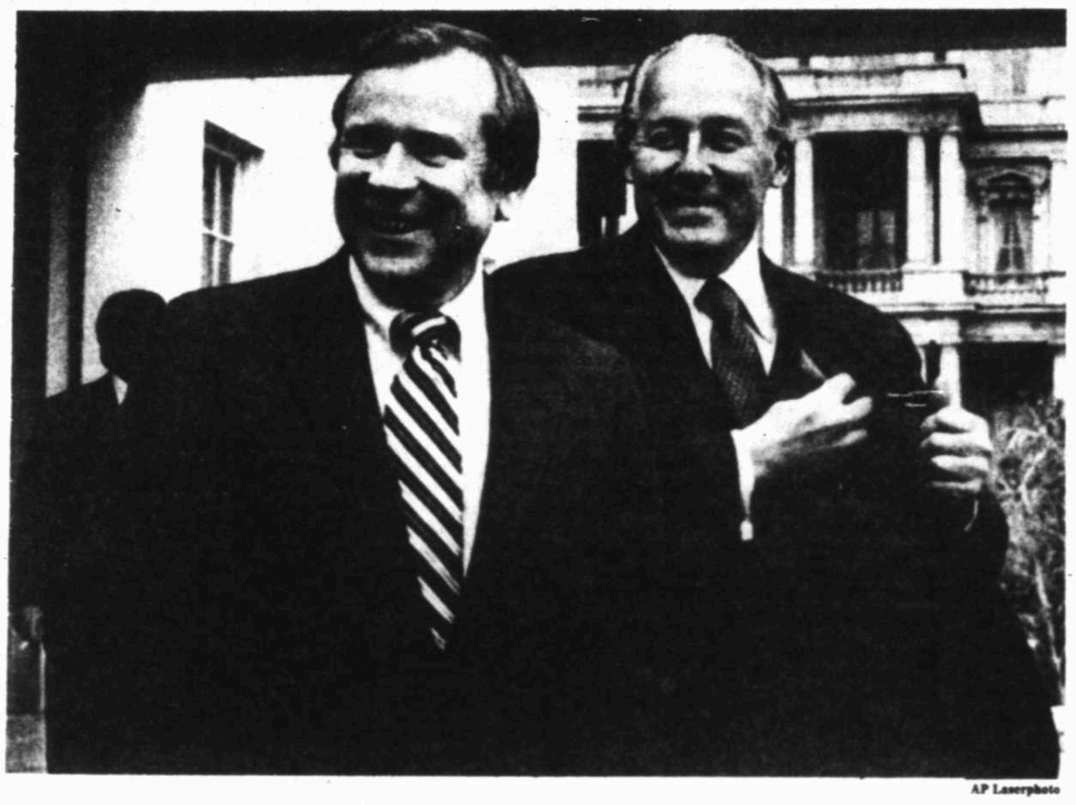

In fiscal 1982 the deficit reached $111 billion, a record. It will set another record in the current fiscal year, estimated at $180 billion. In his budget message next week, Reagan is expected to forecast a deficit of $188 billion in fiscal 1984.

TAXES: "I will seek no tax increases this year and I have no intention of retreating from our basic program of tax relief," Reagan said.

On Sept. 4, Reagan signed a tax bill he proposed to raise $98.3 billion in revenues over three years, wiping out a third of the business tax reductions he sought in 1982. The measure doubled the cigarette tax to 16 cents a pack, tripled the 1 percent tax on telephone service and provided for automatic withholding of taxes on most interest and dividends.

On Jan. 6, Reagan signed a bill boosting the gasoline tax by five cents a gallon to raise $5 billion a year for road repair and other transportation needs.

REORGANIZATION: Reagan proposed "dismantling the Departments of Energy and Education." The bill breaking up the Energy Department was not put to a vote in either chamber; the administration introduced no bill to abolish the Education Department.

ARMS TALKS: "We are working for reduction of arms and military activities," Reagan said. Talks on European arms levels resume Thursday in Geneva; talks on global arms curbs resume Feb. 3. Reagan proposed in May a strategic arms treaty that would reduce the numbers of Soviet and U.S. warheads by one third.

ENTITLEMENTS: Reagan proposed cuts in entitlement programs of $63 billion over four years. Congress enacted $13 billion in cuts in Medicare and Medicaid over three years.

GOVERNMENT PAYROLL: Reagan said he would continue efforts to trim the federal work force by 75,000, a goal that appeared within reach. By the end of the fiscal year Sept. 30, a total of 66,972 jobs had been eliminated.

"NEW FEDERALISM": In his chief initiative, Reagan proposed in "a single, bold step" to transfer scores of welfare, food stamp and other social programs — and the revenues to pay for them — to state and local governments.

In a year of negotiations with governors, state legislators, county officials and mayors, no agreement was reached on what to include in such a "new federalism" program. Officials said the administration was not willing to turn over enough revenue to pay for the transferred programs. Moreover, they said, Medicaid and welfare were federal responsibilities. A toned-down 'new federalism" bill is to be introduced soon.

ENTERPRISE ZONES: Reagan proposed a plan under which depressed urban areas would be designated enterprize zones with special tax and regulatory relief to induce industries to locate in them. Congress took no action.

CIVIL RIGHTS: Reagan said, "We must and shall see that those basic laws that guarantee equal rights are preserved and, when necessary, strengthened."

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights on Dec. 7 criticized the administration's education policies, charging that attempts to cut school and and opposition to forced busing are clouding the future for poor children. On Jan. 11, the commission said the Justice Department is prosecuting too few cases of racially and religious motivated violence.

Chairman Clarence M. Pendleton Jr., appointed by Reagan, made public a letter telling the president: "You must respond to the public perception that the narrow interpretation of civil rights policy by this administration is a retreat from current civil rights protections."

CLEAN AIR: Reagan sought "enactment of a responsible Clean Air Act to increase jobs while continuing to improve te quality of our air." For a second year, the administration's bill was rejected by Congress.

CARIBBEAN BASIN: Reagan proposed a program of aid, trade and investment incentives to promote economic growth in the Caribbean. The administration bill died in the lame-duck session of Congress.

Second message has different flavor

WASHINGTON (AP) — When he first came into office, a time when things still were the last guy's fault, Ronald Reagan cast his eyes at the economy and saw it was bad.

"I regret to say that we're in the worst economic mess since the Great Depression," he said then. Not one of the worst messes — but The Worst Mess.

A year ago, the message was not to worry. The fix was in.

"I can report to you tonight, that in the near future the state of the union and the economy will be better." Reagan said. Much better, he stressed, "if we summon the strength to continue on the course that we've charted."

On Tuesday night, he had to confess to hasty judgments.

"The state of our union is strong, but our economy is troubled," he said."The problems we inherited were far worse than most inside and out of government had predicted."

And yet, Ronald Reagan is not one to deliver a message without hope. America is on the mend, declared the president. Neighbors helping neighbors; building, working and giving to make the country great again.

"I believe this because I believe in them," said Reagan.

Democrats spell out own plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic Party leaders, trying to blunt Republican criticism that they don't have an alternative economic program, have spelled out proposals to reform taxes, reduce interest rates and control spending.

During a 28-minute filmed response to President Reagan's State of the Union address Tuesday night, the Democrats described the economy as "sliding backwards toward catastrophe."

But early in the film, Sen. Joseph Biden Jr., D-Del., said: "It's time we put up or shut up."

Produced at a cost of $120,000, the Democratic film aired on the three major commercial television networks shortly after the president's speech. Democratic members of Congress described 18 alternatives to Reagan's policies.

At a briefing earlier in the day, Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., acknowledged the Democrats believed they had to counter the claim from the president and other Republicans that only the GOP was offering a program to deal with the nation's economic problems.

"Our polls have indicated the people just don't know we have alternatives," said Coelho, chairman of the House Democratic Campaign committee.

The president's address was one of the few occasions he didn't chide the Democrats for failing to offer alternatives.

Frank J. Fahrenkopf Jr., scheduled to be installed Friday as Republican Party chairman, took that role.

In a statement issued hours before the Democratic film was aired, Fahrenkopf said, "If the Democrats have one new idea as to how we can solve the problems which confront this nation, it is time to come forward with it."

Like the president, the Democrats focused in the film on the record budget deficits of the past two years.

Harry McPherson, a White House aide to Lyndon B. Johnson and narrator of the Democratic response, said a "combination of wreckless defense spending and unproductive tax cuts is a disaster. It's a federal budget out of control."

Interspersed among the politicians were a carpenter and an electrician, both unemployed, college and high school students, farmers and a retired businessman. All of them complained about life during the past two years Reagan has been in office.

Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey said his fair tax plan "will simplify tax laws and make them equitable by eliminating unfair loopholes."

Rep. George Miller of California said his pay-as-you-go-budget bill would provide that "no bill or program can be enacted until a way of paying for it has been found."

"We Democrats have an answer," said Rep. Barbara Kennelly of Connecticut, addressing the need to lower interest rates. She described a bill sponsored by Sen. Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia and Rep. Jim Wright of Texas that would direct the Federal Reserve Board to make sure that interest rates "are lowered and lowered automatically in relation to inflation."

There also were Democratic proposals to increase aid to education, encourage energy conservation and help farmers and small businessmen compete in international as well as domestic markets.

Reagan gives Congress deadline for Social Security package

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, declaring the survival of Social Security requires "some sacrifice by all," is calling on Congress to enact by Easter a bipartisan rescue package including payroll tax hikes and a benefit freeze.

Meanwhile, two top congressional Democrats are suggesting the $168 billion Social Security bailout plan be used to force a postponement of this year's personal income tax cut that Reagan said he will fight to retain.

In his State of the Union address Tuesday night, the president praised recommendations hammered out by the Social Security reform commission, adding that he joined House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., and Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., "in urging the Congress to enact this plan by Easter." Easter falls on April 3 this year.

"There are elements in it, of course, that none of us prefers, but taken together it forms a package all of us can support," Reagan said.

"It asks for some sacrifice by all — the self-employed, beneficiaries, workers, government employees, and the better-off among the retired — but it imposes an undue burden on none."

With enactment of the plan, Reagan said, "The integrity of the Social Security system will be preserved — and no one's payments will be reduced."

The plan calls for a six-month delay in this July's cost-of-living increase in benefits, a tax next year on half of Social Security benefits for middle- and upper-income retirees, higher payroll taxes in 1984, 1988 and 1989 and other steps.

Besides generating $168 billion in new revenues or savings for the beleaguered retirement system between now and the end of 1989, the package would wipe out two-thirds of its long-term deficit over the next 75 years.

Before Reagan's speech, Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia and House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, suggested linking the proposed delay in Social Security cost-of-living increases to a postponement of this year's tax cut for high income earners.

Reagan, however, made clear in his address that he would not support such a move.

"I will oppose any efforts to undo the basic tax reforms we have already enacted — including the 10 percent tax break coming to taxpayers this July."

But Wright told reporters, "It would be grossly unfair and enormously unjust to require these sacrifices of the old...and not exact any sacrifice at all from the wealthiest."

He suggested linking the Social Security benefit freeze to one of several possible changes in this year's scheduled personal income tax rate cut, including eliminating or delaying the cut for the largest wage earners or limiting the size of a tax cut anyone can receive to $700.

Byrd, speaking earlier in the day, suggested linking Social Security with the tax cut.

Theismann realizes dream

By WILL GRIMSLEY

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Every kid ought to be able to relate to Joe Theismann — his dreams, frustrations, highs and lows, his fractured and fulfilled fantasies.

He's run the gamut.

Now the dreams have turned rosy red for this saucy, gutsy little quarterback of the Washington Redskins who leads his teammates against the Miami Dolphins Sunday in football's Super Bowl.

"I am a 13-year-old kid wrapped up in a 33-year-old body," he confessed Tuesday in his press briefing.

Cordons of newsmen in relays crowded around him at the workout in nearby Anaheim. He enjoyed every minute of it.

"I'm happy to represent the team," he said. "But it just goes with the territory. I am just 1-49th of this team."

IT WAS a role he always dreamed of.

"I had visions of floating and filling the air with footballs," he said.

"Johnny Unitas, Bart Starr, Joe Namath — all of them were my idols," he added. "I watched Dan Fouts so much on TV I got to believing every football team wore yellow and blue uniforms."

Born and reared in New Brunswick, N. J., he recalled that his greatest ambition always had been to quarterback the New York Giants or Jets.

"My dad was a Giants fan," he added. "We would take a bus from New Brunswick to see the Giants. I always had to sit behind a pole and strain to see around it.

"We would go watch the Jets. I loved to watch Joe Namath. Later we became good friends."

Theismann recalled his playing days at Notre Dame when he led the Fighting Irish to consecutive Cotton Bowls and also had those great pulse-pounding games against Southern Cal.

He dreamed of winning the Heisman Trophy. The Notre Dame public relations director, Roger Valdiserri, got him to change the pronunciation of his last name from "Theesman" to "Thighsman" to rhyme with Heisman.

It didn't do any good. Although he beat out Jim Plunkett for the spot on the AP All-America team, he lost college football's highest award to his Stanford rival.

The two New York teams never made a serious move to get him. The closest he got was the Philadelphia Eagles.

"I had dinner with one of the Eagles' coaches," he recalled. "First thing the man did was ask me how tall I was. 'Six feet,' I said. 'You look 5-10,' he said.

"Then he asked how much I weighed. 'One-seventy five,' I replied. 'You look 165,' he said. That ended the interview."

Deemed too fragile for an NFL quarterback, Theismann wasn't picked in the draft until the fourth round by Miami. Embittered, he opted to play with the Toronoto Argonauts in the Canadian Football League.

"The game isn't the same," he said. "But Canada gave me a chance to work on my physical skills. Looking back, I regard it as a foreign sabbatical."

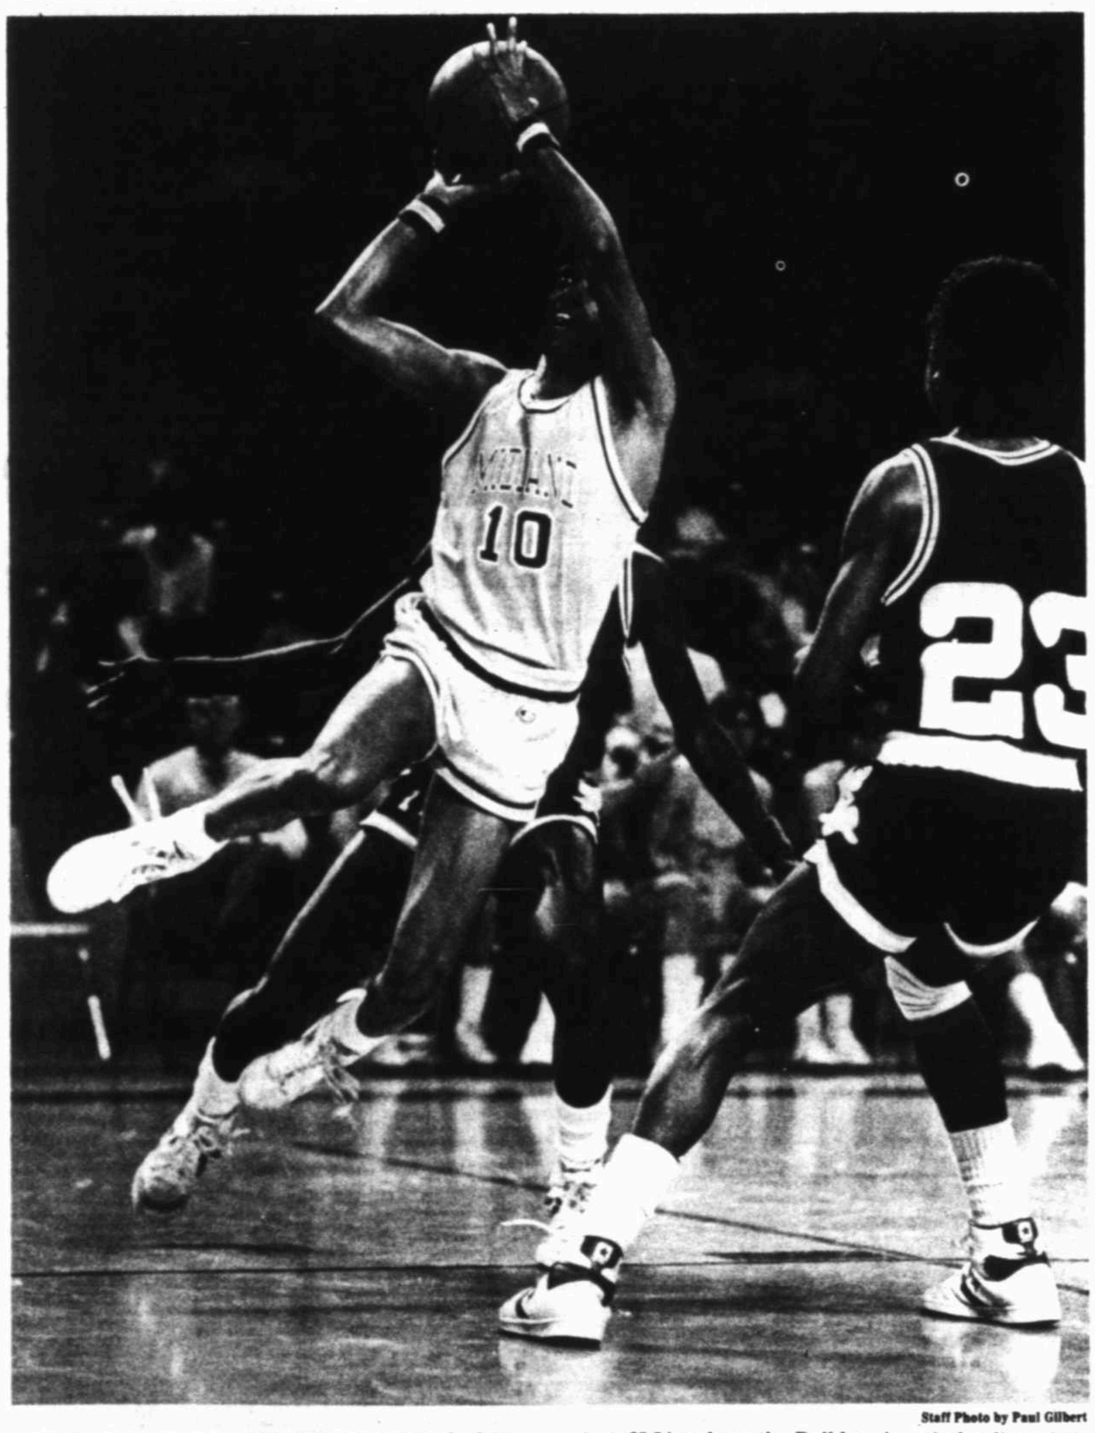

In 1974, the Redskins obtained Joe's rights from the Dolphins. For four years, Theismann performed in the shadows of Billy Kilmer and Sonny Jurgensen.

Midland High's James Pitts (10) moves into the lane for a shot against Midland Lee's Alvin Henry (23) at Chaparral Center Tuesday night. MHS won the contest, 65-54, to keep the Bulldogs in a tie for first place in the District 4-5A race. The Bulldogs now have two straight wins over the Rebels.

Bulldogs sack Rebels

Pack rallies to overcome 'early' lead

By TERRY WILLIAMSON

The victory starved Midland Lee Rebels had a two-point lead over the Midland High Bulldogs with 31 minutes and 16 seconds left in the game Tuesday night at Chaparral Center before the Purple Pack reeled off 16 unanswered points to end the first half District 4-5A basketball schedule with a near wire-to-wire win.

Yes, the 3-20 Rebels held a lead in this one — short lived to be sure, but a lead. The only trouble was that Lee missed its next 15 shots and found themselves clawing for respectability as the Bulldogs threatened to run them out of town on a rail.

Well, the Bulldogs stopped short of any rail running, but did come away with a 65-54 verdict, and MHS will take the win no matter by how many points. After all, the Bulldogs are still running toward the 4-5A title and a playoff berth. They are now 5-2 in loop play, still tied with Abilene High and Odessa High for the league lead with seven games left to play. The race to the wire is on.

IN A WAY it was a crazy night for 4-5A. All the leaders won. That's rare in itself and the first district night that a true upset didn't occur. Lee could have had a shot at an upset if it hadn't been for the first quarter.

The Bulldogs hit eight of their first 12 shots to post a 16-2 margin over the Rebels. The Rebels hit only one of 15 efforts in the first period and could have died on the spot. They didn't and gave the Bulldogs a mild scare in the third period, three times moving to within six points. Lee trailed by a 40-34 margin after a Sylvester Johnson bucket with 5:00 left in the period, but Midland High's Doug Hixon canned four straight free throws to stall the Lee comeback. Lee never got back in the game after that.

"We've done this all year," noted MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "We've gotten the big lead and let up. We need to learn to turn it on even when we have a big lead.

"But you have to give Lee a lot of credit. Those kids played a great game. If they were a bunch of rag-knots, they would have died when it was 16-2. But they kept their heads up and played hard."

LEE COACH Paul Stueckler felt much the same way. "If it hadn't been for that bad start, we might have done a lot better, but I thought the kids showed a lot of character and poise to come back in the game.

Lee ended up playing into the hands of Midland High, running with the Bulldogs. That was to the advantage of MHS, but the Rebels never got a chance to slow the game down after the first quarter onslaught by the Bulldogs.

"It's a little hard to slow down the game unless you get the lead. We did lead 2-0, but then made some ball handling mistakes and it kind of got out of hand for us," noted Stueckler.

After trailing by a 16-2 margin, Lee came back with 24 points in the second period to trail 36-26 at the half. It would have been closer if Midland High's Johnny Pannell hadn't got hot and hit 10 points in the period. Pannell ended up with 14 points, hitting seven of 10 from the field.

Johnson led Lee with nine of his 11 points in the second quarter and Bryan White had seven of his 14 in the period.

But it proved to be a tough chore for Lee to come all the way back from the horrendous start because MHS ended the night with a 56 percent shooting eye (23 of 41 from the field) while hitting 19 of 27 from the charity line. That compared to 19 of 53 shots for a 36 percent floor mark for Lee and 16 of 22 from the line. Before downgrading the Lee cause, however, remember the one of 15 in the first period. The Rebels hit 47 percent the rest of the game.

Doug Hixon led the Bulldogs in scoring with 17 points and in rebounds with six. The Bulldogs outrebounded Lee by a narrow 26-20 margin as Hixon, Blake Liberty and David McFarland hit the boards well. Lee's Johnson and Derek Westbrook carried the load for Lee in the rebounding department. Johnson and Liberty proved to be a class matchup and they were something to watch under the offensive and defensive boards. That was the biggest war of the night in an anything goes affair.

MCFARLAND had 12 points and Liberty 11 as the Bulldogs put four players in double figures. But it was really Pannell and White who had the great shooting night. Lee's White hit five of six shots while Pannell countered with seven of 10.

Midland High will have little time to enjoy this victory, however. They host Odessa Permian at the Chap Friday and it doesn't take a long memory to remember that the Panthers struck down the Bulldogs to open the district race seven games ago. Permian ended the first half with a 2-5 mark, but they kept MHS from owning sole possession of first place.

Lee now becomes Midland High's best friend as the Bulldogs will pull hard for the Rebels in a road game Friday against Odessa High, one of the teams tied with MHS for first place.

Lee did taste victory in the junior varsity outing with a 66-56 win over the Bullpups. Lee's Victor Brown scored 16 points and Alton Davis had 10. Tim Hickey led MHS with 11.

College playoff talk returns

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

With the Super Bowl about to decide the king of professional football and runner-up Southern Methodist University still refusing to concede that Penn State deserved the 1982 national championship, talk of a possible major college playoff is surfacing again.

Dr. Fred Miller, former athletic director at Arizona State University, has a plan for such a playoff to begin in the mid-1980s. It would involve pay television and, Miller says, could result in a staggering annual gross of $1 billion on pay subscription TV and perhaps $2 billion on pay per view TV. It would be, he says, "the most significant sporting event in the U.S."

"I don't hold this plan sacred," he says. "But not only can this be the most quality athletic event in this country, but the cash flows generated will help fund total university athletic programs and reverse the alarming trend of sports reduction, primarily in Olympic development sports."

Miller's playoff formula would involve 24 teams, with 16 unseeded teams playing during the first week of December and the winners of those games playing seven seeded conference champions plus one independent during the second full week of December. The last two weeks of the year would be reserved for final exams and Christmas holidays.

The post-season bowls, of course, are vehemently opposed to any sort of playoff, even one utilizing their games, as Miller's proposal would do. It would, in fact, involve all of the current bowls, except possibly the Independence Bowl, and would even establish a few more.

"ALL BOWLS in a championship format will have meaning and are the primary vehicle with which the championship is organized," Miller says.

The plan assumes there will be two pay TV networks with an average of 25 million households during the period from 1986-1996. An average $10-a-month charge per household, Miller says, would produce $3 billion annually per network ($10 per month equals $120 per household per year, multiplied by 25 million households). With two networks, that means a $6-billion annual gross. The football playoffs, involving 16 games in December, would share in one-twelfth of that gross and seven January games would share in another one-twelfth.

"This yields a total of one-sixth (two months out of 12 programming months) or $1 billion gross for the football championships," Miller says.

His sample playoff schedule looks like this:

Las Vegas cashes in on NFL betting

By GORDON EDES
Los Angeles Times and
Washington Post News Service

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — It was 9 o'clock on a sullen-skied Sunday morning and, on the four color-TV sets atop the elevated platforms at the front of the room, Oral Roberts was appealing for money.

But he was working the wrong crowd. Not that there was not cash in the room. All denominations were represented — Franklins, Grants, Hamiltons and Jacksons.

And it was not that the men lounging in the three rows of oversize naugahyde chairs were not devout. They were true believers, pilgrims from all over the country drawn to this shrine.

But this was no Sunday-come-to-meeting, give-me-that-old-time-religion session. This was the Church of Sunday Football. Gary Austin's Sports Book, to be exact, where they quote you overs and unders instead of chapter and verse, and no one has ever had to pass a collection plate. Onward, betting soldiers.

FOR GAMBLERS, this was a high holy day — the day of the American Football Conference title game, Jets versus the Dolphins, and business at all five tellers' windows was brisk. Sure, there still was wagering on NBA games (Celtics giving away 16 1-2 points to the Cavaliers), college basketball (N.C. State's gettin' five at home?!), hockey, even tennis. And while they drew on their cigarettes and clutched their tout sheets, an electronic system kept the high rollers and two-dollar guys abreast of the latest scores.

But the serious action — as always — was on pro football. Which is why Mike from New York, a heavyset kid in his early 20s, had been in and out of Austin's since at least an hour before. Mike wore a Dolphins jersey but was betting the Jets ("I like orange," he said with a shrug, explaining his dress. "Besides, it was clean"). And, he was sampling the other sports bookmaking joints, like Santa Anita's just down the street and at the Stardust, to see how their betting lines compared to the one at Austin's.

"It's like going to the grocery market," he said. "Everybody's shopping for prices."

Two hours before gametime, Austin's had the Dolphins favoredge, Mike he line dropped to a point. Each time there was a change, Mike headed fdropped to a poin to call this book was a change, Mike headed for a phone. "Got to call this bookie back change, Mike headed for a phone. "Got to call this bookie back in ge, Mike headed for a phone. "Got to call this bookie back in New Yore headed for a phone. "Got to call this bookie back in New York," he said. "He wants to know."

THE GAME started, Oral Roberts' face was replaced by Dick Enberg's, and the room seemed evenly divided in its allegiances. Just the way a good line would have it. A Jets turnover, loud cheers for the Miami money. David Woodley nd a perpetual sneer jumps up and challengeFrank Gorshin face and a perpetual sneer jumps up and challenges the room.

"Intercepted," he shouts. "Yeah, you punks."

Before the afternoon was through, the crowd baiter, of course, was a loser. He was not alone. In sports wagering, that is the surest bet of all. You are going to lose.

Gary Austin — who made some money in Southern California real estate, won a couple of handicapping contests and opened his own book joint about six months ago — came out of his office late Sunday afternoon. It had been a couple of hours since the winning tickets had been cashed, the losing tickets scattered on the floor. Within minutes from the end of the Dolphins-Jets game, the line on the Super Bowl — Dolphins favored by 3 — had been posted on the board.

"I could list on both hands the guys in town who consistently win in the long run," Austin said. "Ninety-seven percent of the people who bet on sports lose. Maybe 3 percent win, and I'm not even sure of that — but everybody wants to be part of that 3 percent."

"MAN-TO-MAN, bookmaker-to-bookmaker, pro-to-pro, high rollers and the $2 guys ... there's no sporting event that attracts the kind of business the Super Bowl generates. You're thinking the World Series? The NBA championship? A prize fight? No way.

"Why the Super Bowl? Because everyone has an opinion. The housewives, the kids, guys like myself. Everybody thinks they can pick a winner."

Who sets the line, and how is it determined?

The idea for the bookmaker is to draw a line that will attract about the same amount of action on both sides. With people laying down $11, say, to win $10, the bookie is going to make his regardless of who wins.

Gary Austin said he sets his own line, and the other legal books in town follow his, with slight deviations. He said there used to be a private bookmaker in town who had a "strong influence" on what line was set. "But to tell you the truth," Austin said, "he doesn't have the money to back his line any more."

As of Tuesday, Miami was favored by three points, and Austin's explanations of the spread sound like the ones you would hear in any bar where football is discussed in "expert" fashion.

"No. 1 is the coaches," he said. "Don Shula (Miami coach) draws money. Just for Shula, Miami has to get a point, if not more.

"No. 2 is the quarterbacks. You've got to give Joe Theismann (of Washington) the edge over (David) Woodley.

"The other big thing is what the public opinion of these teams is. When the Rams played Pittsburgh three years ago, everybody loved Pittsburgh. They'd been such a dominant team, to the Super Bowl before, the fans knew all the players by name, the line was at least 2 1-2 points higher — 9, 9 1-2 at gametime, than what most bookmakers would have set it."

LEFTY ROSENTHAL chuckled when told that Austin considers himself the principal line-maker. "Gary Austin ... is a Johnny-come-lately, and that's not demeaning," Rosenthal said, "but he hasn't been a .300 hitter for 10 years.... It would be in his best interests to convince you that he's the Prime Minister, the pope. But he doesn't set the line."

Rosenthal said the line to be used nationally is set by two or three men. A recent public TV documentary on gambling in football called it the "outlaw line" and is controlled by the underworld. Rosenthal prefers to call it "private ... the real McCoy amongst better minds. Once it's discussed it becomes public property."

Quarterback

Receivers

Running backs

Offensive line

Defensive line
Best in league.

Linebackers
Solid group.

Defensive backs
Dolphins should hold well against the pass.

Abilene, Odessa keep pace with MHS in 4-5A

That's the bottom line as the first half of the 14-game 4-5A schedule came to an end. For the first night in 4-5A play there wasn't a true upset. Midland High, Abilene High and Odessa High all captured victories to maintain a three-way tie for first place, all with 5-2 records heading into second half action.

San Angelo did beat Big Spring on the road by a narrow 64-59 margin and that could be considered an upset of sorts since both teams had 3-3 loop records going into the game.

Abilene High got 22 points from Les Hines, 16 from Mike Simmons and 12 from Shannon Daniel to produce a 70-54 runaway over Abilene Cooper, who got 21 points from Bob Estes and 14 from Sam Lowry.

Odessa High kept pace with a 74-50 win over Odessa Permian with Joe Terry hitting 19, Howard Harris 16 and Thomas Taylor 11. Permian's Greg Williams and Paul Logan each scored 14 points.

But league honors went to San Angelo's Lorand White, who scored 35 points against Big Spring with 16 points coming in the third quarter on an eight of 10 shooting effort. Jerald Wrightsil led the Steers with 18 while Tony Randle and Jinx Vanlenzuela each had 10 points.

Theismann too short, too skinny as pro draftee

"It was very depressing for me," he said. "I tried to wear my face mask like Kenny Stabler. I cultivated the little limp of Joe Namath. I adopted all the mannerisms of guys like Roger Staubach, Unitas and Starr.

"I was sure I was as good as anybody."

JOE DIDN'T get to start a game until five weeks into the 1976 season and didn't become a permanent starter until Jack Pardee succeeded George Allen as coach in 1978.

Although by 1979 he had developed into the second highest rated quarterback in the NFL, his troubles weren't over.

In 1981, the Redskins got off to a miserable 0-5 start and tensions developed between him and the team's rookie coach, Joe Cribbs.

Theismann didn't let the problem fester.

"I went over and knocked on Coach Cribbs' door," he said. "I told him I wanted to talk. We talked a long time. We smoothed everything out. He told me I had been trying to do too much. I should just concentrate on my job."

Result: The Redskins finished 8-8 and in 1982 compiled the league's best record to reach the Super Bowl.

"Coach Gibbs deserves all the credit," Theismann said. "He makes football fun. He treats you like a man. If he asks you to do something, you don't want to let him down."

ber would be the Tangerine, Peach, Liberty and Aloha Bowls, plus new bowls in Las Vegas, Tucson, Seattle and Indianapolis.

The second week in December would match the Atlantic Coast Conference champion against a first-round winner in the Gator Bowl; the Big Eight champ against a first-round winner in the Sun Bowl; the Southeastern Conference champ against a first-round winner in the Hall of Fame Bowl; the Western Athletic Conference champ against a first-round winner in the Holiday Bowl; the Pacific-10 champ against a first-round winner in the Fiesta Bowl; the Southwest Conference champ against a first-round winner in the Bluebonnet Bowl and the Big Ten and top-rated indepedent against first-round winners in the Pontiac, Mich., Silverdome and Syracuse University's Carrier Dome.

On Jan.1, quarter-final games would be held in the Orange, Cotton, Rose and Sugar Bowls.

Miller says a partnership concept should exist between the colleges and the pay TV networks. He suggests a split of 70-30, 65-35 or 60-40 between the universities, who collectively own the property rights, and the pay TV networks. Under a 70-30 split, the colleges would average $700 million and the networks $300 million annually during the 10-year period.

Rose Bowl, $14 million; Cotton, $5.5 million; Orange and Sugar, $4.5 million; Fiesta, $2.8 million; Gator, Liberty and Bluebonnet, $1.5 million; Holiday and Peach, $1.2 million; Sun, $1 million; Hall of Fame, Tangerine and Independence, $900,000; Aloha, $600,000. That total of $42.5 million would rise to more than $60 million for the 1986-87 games, using a 10 percent annual increase.

Under Miller's pay TV format, each Division I-A school would receive $3.5 million, regardless of post-season participation.

In golf, it's a case of grin and bear it

Los Angeles Times and Washington Post News Service

PALM DESERT — Rex Caldwell, who has never won a tour golf tournament, stood on the side of the 18th green of the La Quinta golf course Sunday and watched as his opponent lined up a 20-foot putt half in sun, half in shade and with two breaks in it.

If Keith Fergus made that putt, Rex Caldwell still would never have won his first golf tournament. If he missed, Caldwell would win $67,500 and become a tour winner.

Everyone who ever came down to the final hole of a $10 Nassau on a Texas municipal needing the money to get home knew what Caldwell's play was there: cough, jingle coins, pretend to faint, sneeze, or, if that doesn't work, step in his line with a size 12 Footjoy and grind the heel in.

Rex Caldwell could do none of the above. He had to stand there like some Boy Scout or wooden Indian and even pretend to smile as that 20-foot snake rolled right into the center of the cup. He must have known he'd never see that $67,500 nor, maybe, his first tournament win ever.

"That's golf," he shrugged as some heartless wretch thrust a microphone in front of him.

WELL, IT IS. And it isn't. I mean, why should these guys be allowed to sink 20-foot putts for all the money when the guys at Hustle Heights would make you putt it through a chorus of the quartette from Rigoletto or through a panel of fresh cleat marks or to a dog barking or threats to your family if you made it.

"When I came up to that 20-foot putt, I knew that out there, everything breaks toward Indio," Keith Fergus said. "And I knew where Indio is."

Well, with the guys we play with, someone would have been sure to advise him that the putt broke toward the ocean (150 miles away) or toward the Indian Ocean, or offered to read a break for him that wasn't there.

The pro tour is a phony. These guys play golf under library conditions in a sea of politeness. Keith Fergus even admitted he spent the day smiling because, "Well, it was a pretty day, the sun was shining, the birds were singing. Any time you can be outside on a pretty day like this and play, I think you're pretty lucky."

REX CALDWELL probably found the ambience much less inspiring. He probably remembers it as a day in the haunted house. For five hours, he had been playing impeccable golf, firing a near-perfect 65 at the treacherous La Quinta course in the Bob Hope Desert classic. One's first tournament win is hard to come by. It's a bar mitzvah, a debut, a signal you have arrived with the big boys.

Caldwell birdied 17 while Keith Fergus was going into the water with his tee shot on No. 16, a two-shot swing which seemed to decide the tournament in favor of Caldwell. When Fergus made a bogey on the water hole and slipped to 24-under-par, or one shot back of Caldwell, Rex must have felt like tiptoeing in.

On 18, Rex Caldwell approached brilliantly with a 7-iron which ended up seven feet from the hole. Nobody jingled any coins or rattled any cans or released any puppies — but the chaos was all internal. He hit one of those stomach-clenching, spasm-ridden putts which bit off four of the seven feet and wound up wide of the hole. The putt would have changed Rex Caldwell's career had he made it.

On the way to the 15th tee for the start of the playoff, the tied golfers murmured pleasantries. Recalled Fergus: "He said something like, 'Nice putt,' and I said something like 'Nice tournament.'"

Note that, 25-handicappers. Caldwell, who just had his pockets picked, said "Nice putt." You can see these guys play a game with which we are not familiar. No wonder they go around shooting 65s. I mean, when they get to their ball, nobody's stepped on it, or kicked it into the rough, or even stolen it, for all of that. That's like playing baseball where the pitcher promises not to curve you or football where they promise not to hold you or boxing where they promise not to stick a finger in your eye. Or playing poker with guys who promise not to cheat.

KEITH FERGUS is a nice enough young man, probably good to his mother, was in time for his wedding. May even vote Republican.

But Rex Caldwell had to just stand there for the most important half-minute of his life. He had to make believe he even liked watching his whole career go down the tubes when he probably would have liked to attack Fergus with a one-iron or a one-wood.

When the players got out to the first sudden-death playoff hole, Rex Caldwell won the toss. His luck was still running bad. Again there was convent silence. But the uproar within forced him to hit the kind of shot you do when someone slaps you on the back in the middle of your backswing. He wound up under a tree where he had to hit a putter backwards. We all know the shot.

He lost the hole, of course, the tournament, the $67,500 and the chance to join the big boys. Rex is almost 33 years old and he may not get within seven feet of immortality again.

THAT'S THE trouble with golf. Almost any other sport, you don't have to stand there and watch your whole life flash before your eyes while some guy buries you and you can do nothing about it. I mean, you can go chasing after that line drive in baseball and try to make an off-the-wall catch. You can throttle the guy trying to catch a pass over your shoulder and take the bread from your table in football. You can get off the floor in boxing, if you're of a mind to. You can knock a serve back over the net.

In golf, you just stand there like a guy thumping a Salvation Army drum and try to smile as some guy rams you back into obscurity with a 20-foot putt. Here in this lah-dee-dah game, you don't even get to negotiate strokes. Keith Fergus has won three pro tournaments and $650,000 in his career. Twenty feet made all the difference. All I can say is, it's a good thing he was playing with Rex Caldwell and for Bob Hope's money. I know some guys, he would have had as much chance of swimming the English Channel in the shark season as making a 20-footer. He would have had a better chance getting home with the money through Central Park at two in the morning. Even if he did make the putt, someone would have piped up, "Very nice. But I just figured out I get two pops here."

Golf as it should be is where you not only have to watch the ball but the caddies, crocodiles, human and animal, and nobody lets you roll in a winning 20-footer without a fight. Until the tour makes you play under combat conditions like the Saturday scramble at Montalvo, these guys are not champions, they're pampered darlings. Pressure is when you got to make that putt looking over both shoulders at once.

Murphy to make bundle with A's

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Center fielder Dwayne Murphy, despite a .241 batting average last season, will make almost a half million dollars more this year after signing a $3.3 million 4-year contract with the Oakland A's, it was reported today.

Murphy, an excellent fielder who also posted career highs with 27 homers and 94 runs batted in, became the highest paid player on the A's.

Old, familiar faces beginning to fade from golf scene

By BOB GREEN

PHOENIX (AP) — They're beginning to fade now, those familiar faces carrying the names of the giants who have dominated golf so long.

Arnold Palmer organized an expedition into nostalgia a couple of weeks ago with his gallant but futile title chase in Los Angeles. For Palmer, 53, it was his first serious challenge in several seasons.

And it came at precisely the right time. Palmer had said, prior to that tournament, "I must start playing better, or play not at all. I don't want to embarrass myself out there."

Jack Nicklaus, 43, has played a limited schedule of about 17 worldwide events for the last four years. And he said he will reduce that number in the very near future, saying, "I don't think I'll play a full schedule very long."

And now it's Lee Trevino who's looking at a reduced schedule. Trevino, for many years one of the busiest of the touring pros, last week started a new career as a television commentator, a job that will cut heavily into his playing appearances.

He said he expects to play about 16 tournaments a year.

"It's no secret I'm 43," he said. "After the operation last year, my back is fine. I can still play.

"But every day? Every week? Day by day and week by week I can't keep up with these young lions out here. No way. They hit it too long."

He shook his head.

And is there a young player, 10 years behind Watson, ready to ride the crest of the next wave? Or, as some have suggested, is the competition now so intense, is the level of play so high, are there so many good players that no one man will again be able to dominate?

"There always will be a No. 1," Watson said. "There's always someone who will rise above the others."

That next star is not yet readily identifiable. The young players, years behind Watson, still are in the process of getting themselves sorted out.

John Cook and Bobby Clampett already have won. Their credentials are being built. Fred Couples, Mark O'Meara and Gary Hallberg rank among the candidates.

Trevino has another choice.

"Hal Sutton," he said without a moment's hesitation.

"He hits it long and straight," Trevino added. But he was quick to point out that was not the only — or even most important — qualification held by Sutton, who won the Disney World and set a rookie money-winning record of $237,434 last year.

"He's got that look in his eye," Trevino said almost wistfully, looking away as if rembering his own, younger days.

Hayes rips Rocket coach for sorry state of affairs

BASKETBALL— Elvin Hayes, angered at being exiled to the bench, blamed Coach Del Harris the Houston Rockets record, worst in the NBA. "I've never been in a situation like this with a coach before in my entire career. And if things are going to get any better around here, things are going to have to change... Hey, I don't care if you bring Ralph Sampson or anybody else in here next season. We are not going to win if things continue to go on the same way under this man... He's a petty person. He's paranoid. And he's not a good coach. I think that you've got to think about changes. I don't think you can say that, right now, there is anybody who automatically has the right to come back."

Hayes noted Indiana Coach Jack McKinney, whose three-year contract ends this season, would be ideal to rebuild the Rockets, who are 6-35 this season...

Illinois State guard Dwayne Tyus and Creighton's 7-foot center, Benoit Benjamin, have been named Missouri Valley Conference players of the week. Tyus,scored 15 points including a game-winning 17-footer with 15 seconds left as the Redbirds halted Wichita State's 13-game winning streak, 54-53. Benjamin scored 36 points against New Mexico State...

Sports commentators Billy Packer and Al McGuire reportedly are negotiating with Syracuse University officials to stage an all-star basketball game between college seniors from the Big East Conference and the rest of the country. Packer said he views the game as an annual event played here because "Syracuse has put itself up as the real capital of college basketball from an attendance standpoint and from an enthusiasm standpoint."

Joe Barry Carroll, Golden State's 7-foot center, was named NBA player of the week after averaging 27.5 points and 11 rebounds in four games...The Lakers' Pat Riley will coach the West in the all-star game on Feb. 13...

FOOTBALL—A Raiders' official has charged that a city councilman opposed the team's move from Oakland to Los Angeles because he got campaign contributions from a law firm representing the NFL. The alleged contributions "clear up a mystery — John Ferraro's change of heart from an avid Raider advocate to a hard-core Raider obstructionist," said Al LoCasale, an assistant to Raiders owner Al Davis.

LoCasale claimed the contributions were made by O'Melveny & Myers — a law firm representing the NFL — and Los Angeles attorney Neil Papiano, who reportedly had pursued an expansion franchise for LA. Ferraro, who is up for re-election this year, said: "I do not object to the Raiders moving to Los Angeles. What I do object to is the Coliseum going broke."...

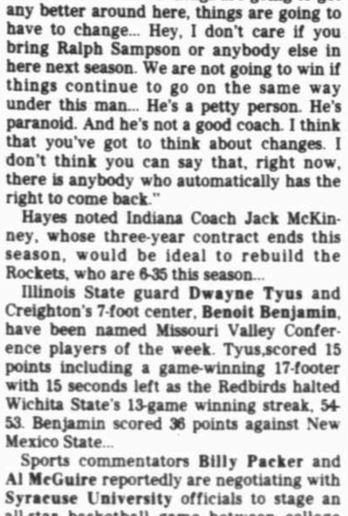

Chicago Tribune Charities, which founded and sponsored the now-defunct College All-Star Game, will sponsor the USFL home opener of the Chicago Blitz...

HOCKEY—Rookie Flyers' goalie Bob Froese was named NHL player of the week after allowing only three goals in three starts since being called up from the AHL Maine Mariners...

GENERAL—Boise State AD Gene Bleymaier said the NCAA will determine whether any recruiting rules were violated over the weekend when Matthew Hombs, 17, Hungtington Beach, Calif., died of head injuries in a car collission Saturday night.

One NCAA rule says recruits may not be entertained off campus. But an interpretation provides that if there is no entertainment on campus, a recruit may be entertained off campus, but only in communities continguous to the city where the school is located. Bleymaier said the recruits reportedly were returning from a snowmobiling outing at Cougar Mountain Lodge, about 55 miles from Boise...

Playoffs deadly serious business

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

One irate football fan, objecting to Sunday's "Silver-Lining" column, demanded to know why this corner continues to treat the NFL playoffs so lightly when they are deadly serious business.

It's difficult to get serious about something when the players take off half the season and "agree to terms" only because it's to their benefit not to lose the entire season's pay check. Then, too, how serious can the players be and how demanding can the sport be when some of the top talents in the league can "compete" effectively while confessing a "serious drug dependency" problem. See, it's easy to be nasty...

The best thing about this year's Super Bowl is that there is only one week between the NFC and AFC championship game until the Super Bowl, instead of the usual two weeks. Of course, that brings up the bad thing about this year's Super Bowl. Only one week in which to overplay the game is not sufficient time to build the colossal meeting to the lofty heights from which the fan has become accustomed to be let down...

IT'S UNBELIEVABLE how cruel some readers can be. One called in to say he couldn't wait for our pick on this week's game so he can place his money. "Since you picked the Cowboys and Jets to meet in the Super Bowl, I need to know how you are picking this one so I can bet the other way."...

Washington might be the logical choice to some, since the Redskins are on a roll, but they were so emotionally drained after the win over the Cowboys, one wonders if they can recover in time for the Dolphins. That also can work the other way. The Skins may be so carefree they can do no wrong...

Dr. Al Langford, former Midland College president, likes the Dolphins by four to 10. Dr. Langford had the Chaparral Center named in his honor for his administrative achievements at MC, which makes him a hero in the Tall City, but how much of an authority on football does that make him?

We can remember when Al was a football coach and a villian in Midland.

It was back in the late 1950s. Midland, still a one high school city, always opened the season against Lamesa. The game annually drew the biggest crowd of the year, because Lamesa would lock up and come to Midland en masse.

Of course, Midland, being a bigger school in a higher classification, always won a close game. Then Lamesa hired Langford. His Tornadoes beat Midland two straight and Lamesa hasn't been on the MHS schedule since...

AS EXPECTED, much is being made of the fact that the Dallas Cowboys have now lost three straight NFC championship games, not to mention a Super Bowl game to the Steelers.

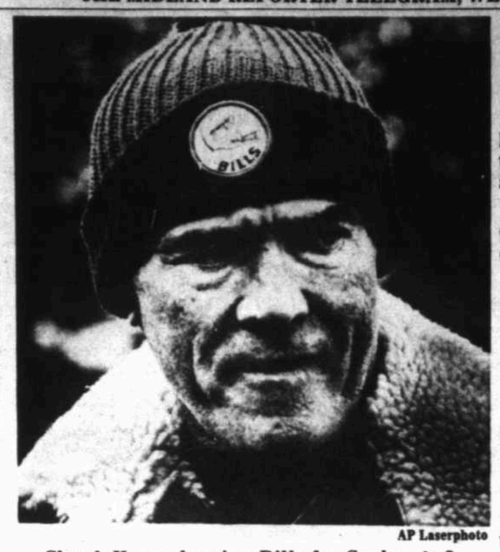

The inevitable What's wrong with the Cowboys? and How come they can't win the big one? hand-wringing resumes on schedule.

Let's see, now, the Rams, 49ers and Eagles, the teams that have been dealing the Cowboys their grief in recent years, had their day, and that's what it amounted to, in the sun, but where are they now?

Even such established regimes as those of the Steelers, Raiders and Dolphins have paused to catch their breath now and then in recent years, but amazingly the Cowboys are the team to beat each year, year after year. And you can put money on it that they'll be back next year... Only time will tell whether the Redskins, the Cowboys' latest tormentor, will be back.

THE REDSKINS do seem more substantial than the Rams or 49ers were in their "glory year." If the Skins are vulnerable, it may be in proven depth should injury or a slump befall quarterback Joe Theismann or running back John Riggins. That, and the tendency of championship teams to lose the intensity which made them winners.

That ability to keep alive the thrill of the chase may be the most overlooked contribution Coach Tom Landry makes to the Cowboys, a talent that at the same time gives the lie to the "computerized robot" image of the Dallas organization.

Chuck Knox...leaving Bills for Seahawks?

Knox headed for Seattle

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Chuck Knox has given up his job as head coach of the Buffalo Bills to assume that position with the Seattle Seahawks next season, according to several reports.

IT was also reported that defensive coordinator Tom Catlin may replace Knox, and was set to meet with club owner Ralph Wilson today in Detroit.

Knox, who had one year left on a six-year contract, met with Wilson Tuesday. Upon his return here, he told reporters at the airport:

"I was offered an extension of my contract, but I decided that I should resign and be relieved of any contractual obligations."

Differences between Knox and Wilson reportedly stemmed from the team's refusal to sign or keep satisfied top players such as linebacker Tom Cousineau, running back Joe Cribbs and nose tackle Fred Smerlas.

Cousineau, the first player picked in the 1979 draft, rejected a Bills' contract and played in Canada. When the Bills had a shot at signing him last summer, they traded him to Cleveland.

Cribbs, who held out unsuccessfully from training camp and the team's first two games this year to force a new contract, and Smerlas are All-Pros.

Fifteen players on the 49-man roster become free agents Feb. 1 and Knox reportedly was unhappy at the slow progress being made to re-sign them, and to extend his own contract.

As usual, however, he kept his views of the team to himself.

"In order for me to remain, a lot had to be resolved and a lot had to happen," he said. "I don't want to go into anything like that right now. That's not my style."

Knox and players said Catlin, a linebacker coach with the Los Angeles Rams for 12 seasons through 1978, would be a worthy successor.

"If they move up someone from the ranks, like Tom Catlin, maybe rebuilding wouldn't be affected," reserve wide receiver Lou Piccone said.

Catlin, 51, told WKBW that he would like to move up. "I'm interested in the head job, sure," Catlin said. "Most coaches are."

No basketball soon for Wildcats' Bowie

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The long-range medical prospects seem excellent for Kentucky center Sam Bowie, but the immediate future will find him sitting out a second straight college basketball season. That was confirmed Tuesday, when orthopedists placed Bowie's celebrated broken left leg into another cast.

The 7-foot-1 Bowie, who has not played since March 1981 because of the fractured shinbone, was X-rayed Tuesday at the Campbell Clinic in Memphis, Tenn.

"Sam's leg looks a great deal better than at the last examination. The stress fracture is healing," Dr. R.A. Calandruccio said. "We're going to play it safe and keep him in a new cast for another six weeks."

Hayes lands on Rocket bench

HOUSTON — After a record 47,947 minutes of playing time in the NBA, Houston forward Elvin Hayes has become a substitute.

Rockets Coach Del Harris decided before Tuesday night's 114-111 victory over the New Jersey Nets that the time was right to put "Plan A" in effect.

Hayes' initial reaction to the decision was to call Harris petty, paranoid and a bad coach, a statement that cost him an undisclosed fine.

But when the dust settled from Hayes' statement on Tuesday, the plan worked to perfection.

After his 16 minutes of playing time against the Nets, Hayes called his new role "a lot of fun." "Everybody has to face this at some time in his career. Willie Mays and Hank Aaron didn't start in the latter stages of their careers. It's not as big a thing as everybody is making it."

Bryant suffers chest pains

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Former Alabama Coach Paul "Bear" Bryant was kept overnight for observation after he was admitted to a hospital complaining of chest pains.

John Lucas, assistant administrator at Druid City Hospital, said the 69-year-old Bryant was brought into the emergency room at 6:15 p.m. Tuesday.

Lucas said Bryant did not suffer a heart attack, and "there appears to be no present danger."

Autopsy due for Tarleton coach

STEPHENVILLE (AP) — An autopsy has been ordered on Charles "Buddy" Fornes, Tarleton State University's former head coach and athletic director, who was found dead of a shotgun wound to the chest.

Police said Fornes' wife reported finding the body shortly before 7 p.m. Tuesday in a workshop attached to the garage of their home. A 20-gauge shotgun and a spent shell were found near his body, police said.

Fornes, 51, had just completed his 17th year of collegiate coaching and his 10th at Tarleton after leaving McMurry College in 1973. The final game of the 1982 season was Fornes' 100th game at Tarleton.

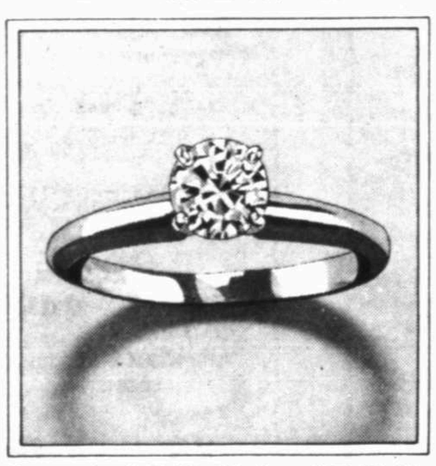

Last Dec. 2, Fornes asked to be reassigned as a member of the Tarleton faculty and was teaching in the department of physical education.

Fornes was a native of Winters and graduated from McMurry in 1956 with a bachelor of science degree in physical education. He was a McMurry football player and received a master of science degree in 1961 from McMurry.

OPEC's inability to fix oil prices can hurt industry

By WILLIAM GARLAND
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Analysts in Washington downplayed the breakdown in OPEC's attempt to set oil prices this week in Geneva.

But the analysts said the domestic petroleum industry would certainly suffer if the price of oil declines significantly.

"If the price drops much more than it has, you're going to have real problems out there (in oil-producing regions)," said a spokesman for the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

The analysts doubted that the price of oil would go down much, and said the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would quickly resolve their differences.

OPEC Oil ministers broke up their meeting in Geneva after countries in northern Africa refused to go along with a Saudi Arabian request that they raise the price of their crude oil so that the overall production from those countries would decline.

OPEC oil ministers had been attempting to bring into line OPEC nations that had been undercutting the official OPEC price. The oil ministers had proposed holding total production to 17.5 million barrels per day and the price at $34 per barrel.

Henry Schuler, an expert with the Georgetown University Center for Strategic Studies, said the disagreement among OPEC members would soon pass.

"I think it's a tempest in a teapot frankly," said Schuler, who advises congress on issues related to OPEC. In dealings with OPEC, he represented the interests of Dallas oilman Bunker Hunt in the 1970s.

"Anybody who thinks the collapse of an OPEC meeting is synonymous with the collapse of the international oil market hasn't studied it very carefully," said Schuler.

"They'd agreed to rough things, and for some reason it came apart on a really insignificant portion of it (the OPEC negotiations)," he said.

"For the life of me, I cannot see why the Africans disagree to increase the price by the amount that the Saudis are asking," he added. "That's in their interest."

He said there probably was not a plan on the part of OPEC to manipulate the oil price by giving false signals from the Geneva meeting. Representatives from the African countries (Nigeria, Libya and Algeria) may not have had authority to agree to the new Saudi Arabian demand or Muammar al-Qaddafi of Libya may not have wanted to be blamed for higher prices.

Speaking of al-Qaddafi, Schuler said he "has spent a decade being the bad guy who makes everything go up (and) he may just enjoy the reversal of roles."

The major concession was already made by Saudi Arabia, which agreed to reduce its share of the market from 40 percent to 25 percent, said Schuler.

"You can't read too much into this over the long term. Probably the Saudi Arabians will cut production and be successful in maintaining the price of OPEC oil generally," he said.

Ed Rothschild with the liberal Energy Action Project took a different view. He said the worldwide recession had finally caught up with OPEC and that they would be unable to bolster the price. He predicted the price of oil would now be set in the spot market and that it would fall $5 to $6 within two months.

"I think it's all healthy," said Rothschild. "It's good for consumers."

But a spokesman for natural gas producers said the decline of the oil price would not be good for natural gas consumers.

"If the price of oil keeps falling, then industrial users (of natural gas) are going to switch to oil (and) residential consumers would have to pay more because the pipelines and utilities would suffer load loss," said Michael Waters with the Natural Gas Supply Association.

Wellish with IPAA said a decline in oil price would be more bad news for companies that provide services for oil drilling, which have already been hit hard by the slump in the oil patch.

"There's not going to be any exploration or research for supplies. Then OPEC will have us back over the barrel and charge what they want again," said Wellish.

Tipperary sees good '83

The successful exchange of Tipperary Corp. common shares for at least 75 percent of the stock of Tiproc N.V. and Pearsall Petroleum N.V. was announced during Tipperary's annual shareholder meeting Tuesday.

Deane H. Stoltz, chairman of Tipperary's board, also reported a profit for the first quarter of fiscal year 1983, ending Dec. 31, 1982, and announced the board had declared a 5 percent stock dividend payable March 11 to shareholders of record February 11. Cash will be paid for fractional shares.

Stoltz said fiscal 1983 should be a turnaround year for the company. He said the exchange and subsequent acquisitions of the remaining minority interest in Tiproc and Pearsall should produce an annualized $1 million in earnings, a $2.8 million decrease in long-term debt, 100,000 barrels of oil and gas reserve equivalents, a 0.73 percent increased working interest under Tipperary's 950,000 undeveloped oil and gas leasehold acres, and approximately $1.95 million in cash.

Tipperary will exchange a maximum of 507,747 shares of its common stock for all of the shares of Pearsal Petroleum N.V. and a maximum of 353,010 shares of its common stock for all of the shares of Tiproc N.V.

Pearsall and Tiproc were created by Tipperary two years ago. The partnerships, of which Tipperary is the general partner, are incorporated in the Netherlands Antillies. Pearsall is engaged in exploratory drilling in the U.S. Tiproc was created by the sale of 0.73 percent overriding royalty under Tipperary's undeveloped oil and gas leases in the U.S.

"The ultimate objective, near term, of course," Stoltz said, "would be to have 100 percent ownership of those two companies.

The past year was a very difficult year, Stoltz told the shareholders. "We projected a turnaround during the year, and this turnaround finally occured in September, the 12th month of the 1982 fiscal year.

"We had some credit lines that were far too extensive at the time of the shut down of the industry almost 12 months ago. These credit lines were strained and we were overloaded with interest and general administrative expenses.

" We have begun to reduce some of our interest load with the repayment of some of our debt, but we have a long way to go in this area. We did reduce general administrative expense during the course of the year an annualized $4 million.

Effective Sept. 1, 1982, Tipperary acquired Sunburst Energies, which was an intrastate Texas gas pipeline company. Stoltz said the acquisition provides not only cash flow, to service not only the acquisition debt, but also makes available monies for capital expenditures.

"The end result of the expense reduction and the pipeline acquisition was a profitable first quarter in fiscal 1983," he said. "This was the first time in seven quarters the company had recorded an operating profit. The continuing theme of this company is to continue to produce this kind of profitablity," Stoltz said.

"We believe that '83 will be the beginning of a new growth cycle for the company," he told the shareholders. He said growth will take place through carefully selected, and better quality oil and gas drilling prospects, more efficient production practices, improved gas processing operations and expanded gas transmission facilities.

Tipperary's capital budget this year will vary from $7.5 to $15 million, he said, "depending on our success in achieving the sale of non-earning assets. We have internally indentified up to $75 million of such assets. We are currently having discussions with selected buyers on a number of these."

Stoltz said income from sales of assets would be used to reduce debt, establish equity positions and property acquisitions and for other capital expenditures that would be profitable to the company.

"We are pursuing additional acquistions ... where the acquired cash flow will not only service the new debt, but provide additional capital expenditure dollars. The acquistions will be made by utilizing bank debt, corporate loans, equity — including warrants — and our new stockholder-approved preferred stock issues."

During the annual meeting, shareholders re-elected Stoltz, Gerard C. Gambs, Rush Moody Jr., Robert P. Brooks, John J. McKetta Jr., and James D. Ross to the board of directors. Shareholders also ratified the appointmonet of Price Waterhouse as auditors.

Slightly more than 82 percent of Tipperary's 5,763,768 outstanding shares were voted.

"I will note that 82 percent, by the way," Stoltz said, "is the highest number that we have ever had presented by our shareholders, by proxy or in person for this meeting."

OPEC troubles may hurt Texas oilmen

DALLAS (AP) — A possible plunge in oil prices precipitated by the discord within the major oil producers cartel could send alarming tremors through Texas' energy-dependent economy, experts say.

The pinch could be felt most heavily by oil exploration firms, banks holding loans to Mexico or fragile oil companies, suppliers of drilling equipment and oil field services, and the state treasury, which depends on oil taxing for 10 percent of its total revenue.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries failed to reach agreement Monday on production quotas that might buoy the falling world price by limiting supply.

In Texas, that's good news for motorists who might pay less at the gas pump. But it's bad news for those that depend on oil for income, experts say.

"It really depends on whether you're a producer or consumer of oil," said University of Texas-Dallas economist Bernard Weinstein. "We do both in Texas. On balance, though, I'd say a decline in oil prices is bad for the Texas economy."

"The amount of harm depends on how far the prices fall," Houston energy analyst Dennis Eklof told The Dallas Morning News. "Right now, it's anybody's guess."

"I don't think there is any question that this is going to have an unsettling effect on the energy-related customer base," said Leland Clemons, a senior vice president at First National Bank of Fort Worth.

Energy experts told the News that in the unlikely event OPEC collapsed, the average price per barrel of $32 could drop to $25, or lower, causing more layoffs in the Texas oil industry, steeper drilling declines and more bankruptcies of "marginal" oil companies.

"I don't believe that's going to happen. There are too many people who have a vested interest in keeping the price of oil at a reasonable level," said B. Gil Clements, president of Sedco Inc., a Dallas-based international drilling company.

Bankers are afraid firms will be unable to repay their loans if the price drops. In addition, Mexico, which relies heavily on oil revenue, already is burdened with a heavy debt.

"It is unclear what is happening and that is a decisive point with determining the impact on the Texas banks," said James J. McDermott Jr., an analyst with Feefe, Bruyette & Woods Inc. in New York.

"It is unclear as to whether we are talking about a $1 drop in prices or $12," he said.

"A lot would depend on the magnitude of the price drop and the pattern," agreed Kidder, Peabody & Co. analyst J. Frederick Meinke. "Would it be abrupt and short, or would it be phased in over a period of time?"

If oil prices fall quickly, "the decline itself breeds a sort of panic," said Rick Barry, an oil analyst at Eppler, Guerin & Tucker Inc. As a result, oil companies would cut back more aggressively, he said.

But Thomas Plaut, an economist at the University of Texas' Bureau of Business Research in Austin, said Texas would not experience severe problems if the price dipped below $28 per barrel.

"I don't think that's likely. The renewed strength of the world economy will support a price above $28 a barrel," Plaut said.

Perhaps the biggest loser from lower oil prices, The News said, would be the state government, which figured to take in $1.2 billion in each of the next three fiscal years from a wellhead tax. The tax draws 10 percent of all state revenues.

The Texas treasury could lose $40 million annually from each $1-a-barrel decline in oil prices, said Billy Hamilton, chief revenue estimator for the state comptrollers' office.

"Our assumption was that OPEC would get together and support prices," Hamilton said. "Whether they do that, it's too early to tell. If they don't, we're not going to stick to our estimates."

It has become 'Miller Time' for the entire sudsy U.S. beer industry

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Thirst-withered workmen use it to irrigate an impatient palate. Trendy socialites pour it on the rocks in wine glasses, suggesting that it's what the hip should sip. And macho ex-athletes extol it on the tube, claiming it's the Lite of their post-career lives.

Beer. Whether quaffed voraciously by a longshoreman or nursed meticulously by a bon vivant, it is a beverage whose time has come. Miller time, as the commercial would have us believe.

Americans are getting a wider variety of it today than ever before, despite the fact the number of breweries in the United States has in 60 years diminished from 1,700 to 81.

Hundreds of imports flood into the U.S. market daily, many finding their way to supermarket shelves. Domestic brewers, in order to compete, offer an ever-expanding array of rich super-premiums and low-calorie lights, hoping to supply a beer for every palate, pocketbook and occasion.

Sophistication? Tom McMullen, an Anaheim, Calif., publisher, thinks so much of the American public's interest in the frothy nectar that in October he started a monthly magazine, All About Beer, which he claims will reach 750,000 nationwide circulation by the end of the year. (Newsstand circulation was 180,000 for its first issue.)

Most serious beer drinkers — from blue-collar to white-collar types — would disdain such innovations as quaffing their foamy favorite in wine glasses. On the rocks.

Yet that, according to some observers of the Hollywood party scene, is the chic new trend, especially among women, who, according to the Anheuser Busch brewery, account for 30 percent of all low-calorie beer consumption in the United States.

If the picture of women sipping beer over ice represents a contradiction to the traditional image of the hard-core beer drinker, so, too, do the demographics of a 50,000-member group that calls itself Beer Drinkers International.

The club, based in Southern California, inspired McMullen to introduce his All About Beer magazine to a parched public.

Said McMullen: "It's incredible. These people earn more than $50,000 a year. They're businessmen, teachers, professional people, some with tremendous educational backgrounds."

McMullen said the club's newsletter was the forerunner of his magazine, which includes features on cooking with beer, home brewing, a pub and barmaid of the month, beer can and bottle collecting, trends within the industry and results of blind beer tastings.

"We do a tasting with different beers every month," said McMullen. "We've used longshoremen, college sorority girls and lumberyard workers as tasters so far. One month we tasted lights, another time imports, ales and stouts and locals, evaluating them on a 1 to 10 scale."

Nationally, the U.S. Brewers Association reports that imports account for little more than 3 percent of the beer market.

Four- and five-liter cans of German imports such as Henninger and Warsteiner, with taps or corks at the top, are a new attraction. So is a rather bizarre domestic, J.R. Ewing, the TV "Dallas" answer to the once-chic Billy Beer, named for the brother of former President Jimmy Carter.

"Sure the prices are higher for the imports," a liquor store salesman said, "but if somebody wants it, they'll pay for it. They don't shop around looking for the best price. In today's economy, a liquor store has to have a specialty, and ours is imported beer."

One trend he sees is the development of small breweries that emphasize more meticulous brewing techniques and more costly ingredients than the mass-produced varieties.

"They're beginning to proliferate, like small boutique wineries," he said. "We may see a number of them in the next few years. A wave of the future."

One, in Sonoma, Calif., produces New Albion, an ale some connoisseurs rank among the best in the world.

They hand-deliver it to selected outlets in the San Francisco Bay area, making sure it's totally refrigerated at all times.

From such rarity and reputation do mystiques originate. Henry Weinhard, a super-premium made in limited quantities in Portland, Ore., acquired such an image before widely increasing its distribution and advertising (which continues to emphasize its handmade quality and limited availability).

A similar mystique has surrounded Coors, the esteemed Colorado beer, because it is unavailable in many Eastern states. And Stroh's, brewed in Detroit and unavailable on the West Coast, is acquiring a reputation that is making it increasingly sought among the suds cognoscenti.

Anchor Steam, brewed in San Francisco, has long been a favorite of the connoisseur. And River City and Sierra Nevada — newcomers on the boutique brewery scene in Sacramento and Chico, Calif., respectively — are piquing palates conditioned to the blander, mass-produced brews.

Providing venture capital: business up for moneymen

By the Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

DENVER — It was a match made in high-tech heaven.

Entrepreneur Theodore A. Waibel Jr. and his management team had the idea, an ultrasonic alarm system called Ultrak.

Together, they hope over the next six to 10 years to nurture the fledgling, Broomfield, Colo.-based company to a robust profitability.

The venture partners, part of a vanguard of risk-taking capitalists operating along the Front Range of Colorado's Rocky Mountains, are making financial bets on high-tech startup firms that a traditional banker would not dare touch.

The payoff — a national stock offering or sale to a big company — could make them rich.

"We're looking for $50 million and $100 million companies and up," said John G. Hill, of the Hill Partnership of Boulder, Colo., about 25 miles northwest of Denver. "We're trying to start major corporations."

The companies they help spawn could drive a self-generating economy of electronics and computers, following the tradition of Intel, Apple, Rolm and Tandem Computers that has made Silicon Valley the high-tech heartland near San Jose, Calif.

Or, like so many other promises of Colorado-bred booms, it all could go bust.

Halstedt, former vice president for investment banking at the Denver cable company of Daniels & Associates, started the $28 million Centennial Fund, Denver's largest venture capital pool, in 1980 with two other partners experienced in high-technology management and finance.

About the same time, Hill left his job as vice president of marketing for Storage Technology Corp. in Broomfield, about 15 miles northwest of Denver, hooked up with two major venture capital groups operating out of the Silicon Valley area between San Jose and San Francisco, and started an $11 million fund.

People with new ideas clamoring for money have been knocking on their doors. And making approaches to at least 10 other venture capital groups operating in the Denver area.

"Colorado has emerged as an area very much on the upswing in terms of attracting money," said Jane Morris, managing editor of the nationally distributed Venture Capital Journal. "A lot of venture capitalists perceive that Colorado is an area to watch."

The deals are pouring in. At Centennial, "three hundred to six hundred deals a year ... two per day ... 50 deals in one month," Halstedt said in a speech last week to the Colorado Council of the American Electronics Institute.

City OKs M-System

Midland's Department of Inspections and Permits issued 42 building permits Jan. 17 through 21 for construction valued at $1,938,457. This brings the total for the year to date to just over $9 million.

Topping the list of commercial projects was a permit granted to General Building Corporation, Odessa, for a new M-System grocery store at 2200 South Rankin Highway. Estimated cost is $768,600. Other commercial and commercial alteration permits were issued to Bill Wilkerson, 106 Carlton, $8,400; Harold Shull, 2900 W. Washington, $20,000; and Gary Gunn, 2318 W. Ohio, $42,167.

Builders also received permits for 24 new single family residences, mostly townhomes, ranging in price from $24,000 to $50,000. The city granted 10 permits for residential alterations.

OIL FACTS

1748

North America is visited by Peter Kalm, a Swedish naturalist, who publishes an account of his travels, together with a map on which the oil springs of Oil Creek, Pa. are indicated.

1755

A map is made in London, with the word "petroleum" written across the territory in Pennsylvania in which the oil springs occurred.

1761

Oils are distilled from black bituminous shales for medicinal purposes, and it is found that they can be used instead of both oil of turpentine and "oil of petre."

1764

A Frenchman, Pierre Joseph Macquer, defines bitumen as a mineral substance yielding, on distillation, " A great deal of oil very like petroleum."

UT accounting program ranked second

AUSTIN — The undergraduate accounting program at The University of Texas at Austin has been ranked No. 2 in the nation, according to a recent survey of accounting department cairmen in the nation.

Among the top 20 programs, UT ranks only behind the University of Illinois and ahead of other institutions such as Michigan, Ohio State, Southern Cal, Michigan State, Wharton School (University of Pennsylvania), Wisconsin, Minnesota, Penn State and California-Berkeley.

A report of the survey appeared in the December issue of Public Accounting Report, a montly newsletter in the profession.

Respondents were asked to name the five best undergraduate programs. Answers were ranked on a weighted scale that allowed five points for a first-place vote, four points for second-place, etc. Illinois received 318 points; Texas, 268, and third-place Michigan, 114. Illinois and Texas were both mentioned on about 60 per cent of the completed questionnaires, while no other institution was named more than 30 per cent of the time.

In a number of earlier studies, the UT accounting program also has been recognized nationally, according to Dr. Robert G. May, chairman of the Accounting Department.

In a 1981 issue of the Accounting Review, UT was ranked first for the number of faculty articles appearing in 12 of the leading accounting journals between 1973 and 1977. Other surveys have shown the UT Accounting Department rating fourth for quality of faculty (as perceived by accounting faculty members around the country), fourth for quality of doctoral and masters prograams, and third for effectiveness of doctoral programs.

Concerning the undergraduate accounting program at Texas, Dr. Mays says the faculty" has been dedicated for decades to quality instruction, regardless of class level." He notes that such well-known accounting educators as Profs. Glenn Welsch and Charles Zlatkovich, both former presidents of the American Accounting Association," still teach undergraduate courses."

The UT chairman adds that UT also has been a key producer of PH.D.'s in accounting in the South and Southwest for at least three decades.

A major problem the department now faces, Dr. May says, is" trying to sustain such quality teaching" in the face of large enrollments.

HOT OFF THE PRESS

Witherspoon blazes new trails in annual reports. We produced 15 during the past year — more than one a month — for energy companies, retailers and manufacturers, big and small, old and new. Careful planning plus award-winning writing and design helped pioneer a "new readability" in these important documents.

As a result, ADWEEK/Southwest magazine recently named Witherspoon one of only six "hot shops" in a five-state region. Now that we're all warmed up, bring us in on your next annual report.

RepublicBank. Fueling the petroleum industry for over 50 years.

At RepublicBank, we've been financing the petroleum industry longer than any other bank in the nation. This has made us a leading bank in the petroleum industry. In addition, we provide all the non-credit services you need—from cash management to corporate trust management.

Part of our success is due to over 50 years of experience, not only as bankers but as professionals in the petroleum field.

Another reason we've become a leader is our resources.

Our Energy Banking Group has its own engineering staff. This allows us to independently estimate your oil and gas reserves, reducing the need for an outside consultant... saving you time and money.

When you come in with a financing request, we can assess the value of your assets whether located in the North Sea, Williston Basin or Gulf Coast.

Our professionals successfully serve the diverse requirements of independent producers, major integrated oil companies, refining and petrochemical plant owners, pipeline companies, utilities, drilling contractors, and related service companies.

If you're working anywhere in the petroleum field, work with the bank that has been there longer than anyone. Together, there's no limit to what we can do.

Truckers make point

WASHINGTON (AP) — A spokesman for independent truckers says he's not disappointed that only 42 trucks took part in a convoy past the Capitol and through Washington, D.C., streets to protest new highway taxes and fees.

Mark Perry, spokesman for the Owner-Operators Independent Drivers Association of America, which sponsored the demonstration Monday, said truckers made a point to Congress and the Reagan administration despite the relatively small turnout.

Leaders of independent driver-operators said last week that 150 to 200 trucks would take part in the convoy to protest the fees, which they say will increase trucker costs from $1,700 to more than $4,400 a year over the next six years.

The rival Independent Truckers Association has called for a strike Jan. 31 to protest the new taxes and fees enacted last month as part of the 5-cent per gallon increase in the federal gasoline tax. There are about 100,000 independent driver-operators in the country, accounting for about one-sixth of the large trucks on the nation's highways.

Equipment bound for Italy seized

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal agents have blocked shipment of $420,000 worth of sensitive electronic equipment bound for Italy, citing national security reasons and the lack of required export licenses.

The equipment, a photoreading system used in the manufacture of semiconductor devices, was seized at John F. Kennedy Airport in New York by special agents of the Commerce Department's office of export enforcement.

Theodore W. Wu, deputy assistant secretary for export enforcement, said the photoreader is highly sought by the Soviet Union and Soviet bloc countries. The photoreader is manufactured by CCA Corp. of Burlington, Mass., which Wu said isn't under investigation.

Wu said the equipment belonged to Buel Electronic Connectors and was destined for a company in Italy. He released no other details of the case.

Schweiker wants children adopted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker has asked the nation's governors to step up state efforts to put hard-to-place children from foster homes in permanent, adoptive homes.

Schweiker asked that the states double the number of permanent placements this fiscal year and to decrease the number of such children in foster care by 10 percent.

Eleven states used federal aid to help place 1,324 such children in adoptive homes during fiscal year 1982. Michigan, which placed 669 children, accounted for more than half of the national total, department records show.

Children whose placement in adoptive homes can be subsidized because of their special circumstances include sibling groups, older children, emotionally or physically handicapped children and minority children. The department estimates that there are about 50,000 children in foster care nationwide who are eligible for such aid.

Reagan to visit Boston today

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan plans to take a look at high technology industry today in a visit to Boston, his spokesman says.

During the four-hour stop, Reagan will visit the Opportunities Industrialization Center-IBM High Technology Training Center, where IBM instructors give computer courses, the Digital Equipment Corp., and the Millipore Corp., according to deputy press secretary Larry Speakes.

Family averts disclosure

BERNARDS TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Averting a threatened foreclosure, the family of the Kienast quintuplets has reached agreement with the bank that holds an $84,303 mortgage on their six-bedroom house.

"My husband talked to the bank and everybody is more or less happy," Margaret Kienast said.

Crestmont Federal Savings & Loan Association had threatened to foreclose because the Kienasts had not made a payment in four years. An auction was set for Feb. 14, Valentine's Day, nine days before the quints' 13th birthday.

Details of the agreement were not disclosed. Crestmont executive vice president James Baumgartner confirmed that an agreement had been reached.

Bogus ad offers nonexistent jobs

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The Milwaukee Journal says it will seek prosecuton of whoever bought a classified ad for 10 bogus job openings at an engineering company that had no work to offer.

Bevco Engineering Co. has been deluged with calls about the nonexistent jobs. "It's a cruel hoax," said company President Frank Schoenauer. "I've got people coming in from out of town."

He said he did not authorize the ad in the Sunday Journal, which sought applicants for jobs assembling electrical control panels.

State law punishes false advertising by up to nine months in jail and a $10,000 fine.

Black Panther: Trial was farce

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Black Panther Anthony LaBorde, sentenced to up to 25 years in prison for the attempted murder of a policeman, says he is a "prisoner of war" in a 400-year-old struggle against white America.

"Black people will not get justice until they take justice into their own hands," LaBorde said at his sentencing. He dismissed his trial as a charade and farce.

LaBorde, 33, and James Dixon York, 42, had been charged with murder and attempted murder in an April 1981 ambush in which one police officer was killed and a second wounded. Jurors deadlocked on the murder charge and a new trial will be held later this year.

York also was convicted of attempted murder and sentenced in December to up to 25 years in prison.

London chief copies U.S.

LONDON (AP) — London's police chief is proposing setting up U.S.-style neighborhood crime-watch committees in a renewed effort to curb lawbreaking.

Sir Kenneth Newman also said he wants to put more officers on the streets.

Newman's special report, issued this week, stopped short of demands by some groups for local control of the capital's 26,615-member force. It has been criticized for a rising crime rate, and black leaders have accused police of racial harassment.

Another Union City mayor guilty

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Union City Mayor Robert C. Botti, who faces 18 months in federal prison, says he will appeal his conviction in a scheme involving sales of janitorial supplies.

Botti, sentenced earlier this week, is the second Union City mayor in less than a year to be sent to a federal prison. His predecessor, William V. Musto, was forced to resign in May when he was sentenced in a kickback scheme.

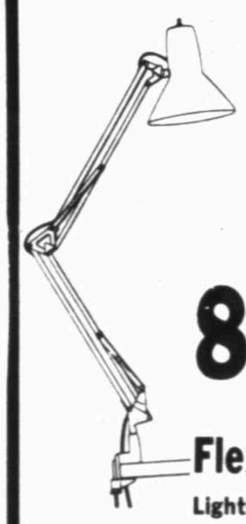

Botti was convicted Dec. 22 of one count of conspiracy, 15 counts of mail fraud and two counts of tax evasion.

Eisenhower farmhouse stays same

GETTYSBURG, Pa. (AP) — This winter, you can pretend to be a private guest at Mamie and Dwight Eisenhower's farm. The 12-room farmhouse can be explored in a tranquility never known by summer visitors.

On most winter days, fewer than 40 people visit the farm as compared to summer's daily average of 1,000 visitors.

And, with just a little bit of imagination, you can pretend that Mamie, who died in 1979, and Ike, who died in 1969, will be back in minutes to show you through one of the home's six bedrooms.

The illusion of a house still lived in is quite deliberate — as it has been a national historic site operated by the National Park Service since 1980.

"We've kept everything as we found it," says Constance Dillon, a park service ranger. "We didn't even remove the food from the cupboards until last year."

Ms. Dillon says relatives and frequent guests of the Eisenhowers were surveyed to reconstruct items in the farmhouse that were missing.

Under the former president's bequest, the house was to be willed to the National Park Service within six months of his death. Mamie appealed the stipulation, so that she could remain on the farm until her death a decade later.

In the kitchen, a cookbook lies open to a recipe for oven-fried chicken and you can read Mamie's list of things to get at the grocery — a one-pound can of peaches and a bottle of dish detergent.

But the sun porch, where the Eisenhowers spent a great deal of their time at the farm, gives the most sense of a time machine.

Ike's half-finished painting of a castle in Spain leans against an easel in one corner. And on the other side of the room, comfortable chairs surround a 1960s television.

"They were really very simple people," says Ms. Dillon. "See these TV trays. Often they had their meals here while they watched their favorite shows."

Perhaps the most striking aspect of the home is its combination of impressive gifts from visiting dignitaries, like a silver service from Winston Churchill, and the simple tastes reflected in the few pieces the Eisenhowers bought themselves, like the TV snack trays.

Dog to be fought over in court

GREENSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Two families battling over custody of a 9-month-old German shepherd named Smurf have taken their dogfight to court.

City officials said they took Smurf from Frank Snyder of Greensburg last year after he was charged with letting the animal run loose and improperly transferring the dog's license from another pet.

After the charges were filed, Snyder appealed before Magistrate Justice Michael Moschcetti to have his dog returned. The magistrate ruled that Snyder could have the dog back if he made some effort to pay $233 in fines and costs.

The dog was adopted last month by Chester and Elaine Ludwig of Norvelt after Snyder failed to pay the fines within two weeks.

Snyder hired an attorney and filed a writ of seizure to regain possession of the animal pending a trial.

After an hour-long hearing earlier this week,, Westmoreland County Judge Joseph A. Hudock granted Snyder's request and ordered that Smurf be returned to its original owner.

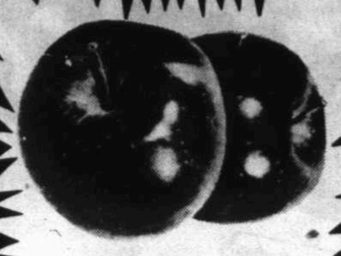

Mrs. Ludwig said, however, she's convinced that Smurf is hers because a 10-day waiting period required by city ordinance for ownership of adopted animals has ended. She vowed to continue the legal battle.

Citizens stand up for trees

Hearst Feature Service

MONTE RIO, Calif. — A plan to cut down 70 redwood trees along a four-mile stretch of highway near here has been temporarily shelved following a stormy session with townspeople who opposed the plan.

The state Department of Transportation, which takes care of state roads, had "blue-ribboned" the trees, which stand by a highway alongside the Russian River.

Engineers said the trees should be removed to "improve the safety of the road." It is a high-accident area, they said, and the trees and stumps either obstruct vision or get in the way along the narrow, winding road.

But one night last week, more than 200 area residents gathered for a standing-room-only meeting with Caltrans officials in Guerneville and expressed their dismay and concern.

The meeting lasted for two hours. Speaker after speaker, many angry, spoke in defense of keeping the trees intact.

Leonard Weinstein, a local sign painter, was outraged when he discovered that some of the trees were along his property.

"Caltrans is supposed to be the servant of the people. These roads, these trees, some of which are 200 feet tall and more than 100 years old, are ours. We are fighting for our rights, our environment," he said.

Most agreed that the $60,000 allocated for tree removal could better be spent on flashing warning lights, speed-limit signs and other safety devices.

State Engineer Richard Green said the trees make that stretch of highway one of the most dangerous in the state.

He said 172 accidents occurred on the four-mile section between January 1979 and October 1982. Forty-four of them involved hitting trees or power poles, he said, causing 31 injuries but no fatalities.

Weinstein and Green agreed that most of the accidents are caused by drunken drivers, and Weinstein asked, rhetorically, "Why destroy the environment for a few drivers?"

To combat Caltrans' method of marking the trees for removal, the local residents have set up their own system of marking the trees and have attached colorful paper hearts on all the trees along a 20-mile stretch of the road.

Green, who is in charge of the highway safety project, said the state would try to come up with a variety of alternative plans, including cutting the trees, and present them to the community in the spring.

Presley day proposed

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — "Don't be cruel," pleaded one lawmaker as the state Senate spent nearly an hour deciding whether to adopt a resolution honoring the late Elvis Presley.

Sen. Howard Babbush, who proposed the resolution earlier this week, said it would honor Presley "for his contribution to the field of music."

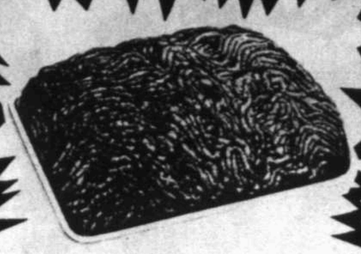

However, another lawmaker declared that "half a generation is tone deaf" because of what Presley did on stage and in the recording studio.

And Sen. John Daly asked, "Would you want your son or daughter to emulate the life of this unfortunate human being?" He spoke of the singer's "frenzied, hedonistic lifestyle."

Presley was found dead in his mansion near Memphis, Tenn., in 1978. Authorities said his death may have been related to drug abuse.

"Don't be such a hound dog and don't be cruel," urged Sen. Jeremy Weinstein, 32, urging approval of the resolution.

The measure, which finally passed 37-17, asks Gov. Mario Cuomo to proclaim Presley's birthday, Jan. 8, "Elvis Presley Memorial Day."

Blood linked to illness

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors should consider eliminating the most common and convenient treatment for the bleeding disease hemophilia because two new studies link it with a mysterious breakdown of the body's ability to fight illness, researchers say.

Because their blood doesn't clot properly, people with hemophilia risk prolonged internal bleeding, which can occur spontaneously or after an accident. Most of them take doses of a freeze-dried blood protein their bodies lack — a substance called Factor VIII.

However, studies published today show that some people who use this form of Factor VIII have an imbalance in their immune systems. It is similar to that seen in victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS, a deadly, recently discovered disorder concentrated primarily among homosexual men.

AIDS causes an apparently irreversible breakdown of the body's ability to fight disease. This allows the development of strange illnesses, such as rare forms of cancer and pneumonia.

"We have to be very much on top of this, because this is the biggest problem facing hemophiliacs today," said one of the researchers, Dr. Jay E. Menitove of the Blood Center of Southeastern Wisconsin.

The doctors said the link, if confirmed by more studies, may provide a dilemma for the nation's 15,000 hemophiliacs. Another form of Factor VIII appears to be safe, but it must be kept frozen in special refrigerators.

Doctors say many patients would be reluctant to switch, because they cannot carry this form of the drug with them.

So far, eight cases of AIDS have been confirmed among hemophiliacs, and five of the victims have died. The national Centers for Disease Control say several other possible cases are being investigated.

The two new studies were published in recently in the New England Journal of Medicine. One was conducted by Case Western Reserve University School of Medicine and University Hospitals of Cleveland, and the other was done by the Blood Bank of Southeastern Wisconsin, the Great Lakes Hemophilia Foundation and the Medical College of Wisconsin.

The new research found an upset in the balance of white blood cells that regulate the body's response to foreign substances. Ordinarily, people have twice as many helper cells, which turn on the production of disease-fighting antibodies, as suppressor cells, which turn it off.

But hemophiliacs taking commercial Factor VIII had roughly equal numbers of the two kinds of cells. The imbalance is similar, though not as extreme, as that seen in victims of AIDS.

Panda cub surviving with care

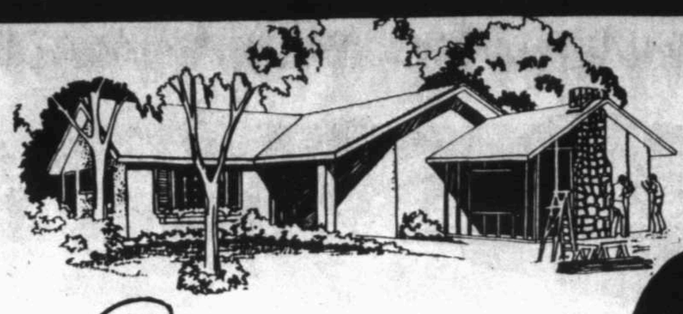

PEKING (AP) — Xingyue, a panda cub whose mother died two weeks after giving birth, is doing well at age 5 months after receiving some unusual hospital treatment, the official Xinhua news agency said today.

Xingyue's mother died when she was only 2 weeks old. Past experience indicated little chance of survival for a baby panda left without its mother's care at such an early age, Xinhua said.

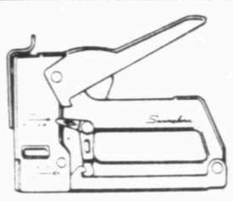

But keepers were sent to care for the Panda day and night, the news agency added.

An army health center offered a sterilized ward when Xingyue contracted a respiratory tract infection, and she then was reared for two months in an incubator at the Shanghai Children's Hospital.

Political compass changing

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consider the congressional freshman, in a new job in a new city, looking for a political compass. There may not be any, not even for the politician bent on following the precise instructions of the constituents back home.

That's the suggestion of a scholar-pollster, who thinks the old formulas and the old ideologies offer no guide to what's going on in the minds of the voters.

Everett C. Ladd, writing for the American Enterprise Institute, says that "liberal and conservative, or left and right...simply do not capture the predominant drift of the last 10 to 20 years."

An Analysis

As a result, he says, the congressman looking for guidance is bound to get a mixed message.

He sees the frustration of the voters with the federal government. "Again and again they tell him that their government has become too powerful, too intrusive, far too wasteful, and has become as well the main cause of inflation and other plagues," Ladd writes. The conclusion is obvious: the country is turning to the right.

But it isn't that clear or that tidy.

"At the very moment three-fourths of the people are saying tax money spent for human services is poorly used, three-fourths are arguing that the federal government should provide medical care and legal assistance for everyone who can't afford them," Ladd says. "Overwhelming majorities say federal spending is too high — but majorities just as big say even more should be spent for basic services like education and Social Security."

To further complicate the message, he says, "it is the very same people who offer the contrasting assessments," and both their support and their criticism of government have intensified.

More people than ever before believe that government is is too powerful, too wasteful, too inflationary. More people than ever before believe that government is a proper and necessary vehicle to provide an assortment of services and guarantees to the public.

"Americans have mixed minds about government and say so to all who care to listen," Ladd writes.

At the same time American values are more liberal, in that they are more responsive to individual choice, they are more conservative, in new dedication to traditional values.

As a result, Ladd says, the old politics of aligning conservative or liberal groups into coalitions won't work any more.

"Contemporary political conflict is not so much between social groups, where politicians must bring together enough groups to establish a majority, as it is within individuals, where they must appeal to contrasting predispositions in the very same people," he writes.

So the politician looking for an old-fashioned compass is going to be frustrated.

Plane saved from hijacker

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Staff members overpowered and turned over to the police a young man who threatened to blow up an Indian Airlines plane, the United News of India reported.

The would-be hijacker, identified as Sahala Raju, 22, claimed Monday that he was holding a bomb in his hand but it turned out to be only a leather belt wrapped in a cloth, the news agency said.

Raju had threatened to blow up the plane on the ground unless the pilot flew him from Madras to Hyderabad in southern India, the Indian news agency said.

Brazilians 'cooking' with gas

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Tens of thousands of Brazilians, squeezed by recession, inflation and high gasoline prices, are illegally driving on cheap cooking gas, risking death in fiery explosions.

The Traffic Department in Sao Paulo, the nation's biggest city, estimates that 20,000 of the 33,000 licensed taxis there have converted their motors in clandestine garages to run on liquefied gas that is supposed to be used in humble Brazilians' kitchens to heat food. There are reports the phenomenon is spreading to other major cities.

Several such cars have spontaneously caught fire and blown up on Sao Paulo streets. There has been one known death. Since January the Sao Paulo police have impounded about a thousand illegally converted vehicles discovered in surprise roadblocks.

In a recent expose on cooking-gas motoring, TV GLOBO, Brazil's largest television network, called the outlaw cars "moving firebombs."

"DRIVING with cooking gas is a good deal financially," the president of the Sao Paulo Taxi Drivers Union, Rogerio Atorre, told a TV interviewer. And he added, "This has been going on for years."

As Brazil produces only one-fourth of the crude oil it needs and must import the rest at high OPEC prices, gasoline here costs $2.66 a gallon. But so millions of poor people throughout this vast South American country can have daily hot meals, the government subsidizes cooking gas. A metal container holding 28 pounds of pressurized liquefied gas for kitchen use costs just $3.64.

One of these steel gas tanks, when connected to a stove, can cook an average couple's rice and beans for nearly a month. It also can, when hooked up illegally to the carburetor of a standard car engine, make a Brazilian-made Volkswagen "beetle" run 135 miles.

A driver would have to pay $25 for an equivalent amount of gasoline, cabbies say.

THE government registered a 15 percent drop in gasoline consumption in Brazil in July, compared with the same month a year earlier, while at the same time discovering a 13.7 percent increase in the use of liquefied gas. The Mines and Energy Ministry says the figures are due directly to illegal conversions of automobiles to run on cooking gas.

With the economy in recession and inflation bordering 100 percent, fewer Brazilians can afford to take taxis. Cab drivers must work grueling hours to make ends meet and often waste precious gasoline cruising the streets in search of fares.

"The problem is not the danger of cooking gas exploding but rather that of starving to death by driving a taxi that runs on gasoline," said Tadeu Batista, 22, whose illegally converted car was apprehended in Sao Paulo. "I've got nine brothers and sisters to support. Cooking gas is the only solution."

"I WOULDN'T take the risk," Francisco Paulo Gomes, a Rio taxi driver, told a foreign correspondent. "But I think the government should create a special price for gasoline for taxis." And he added, "The next time you get into a cab and see one of those signs that says, 'Please don't smoke. The driver is allergic,' you can be sure it's running on bottled gas."

A clandestine car conversion, in which the metal gas container is secured to a hole drilled in the trunk — or in the case of a small VW, between the rear passenger seat and the motor — costs around $200.

Experts say gas-leak concentration of just 2 percent, coupled with a lighted cigarette or even the intense tropical Brazilian sun, can turn an illegally converted car into a ball of 3,000-degree-Centigrade flames.

OPEC's inability to fix oil prices can hurt industry

By WILLIAM GARLAND
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Analysts in Washington downplayed the breakdown in OPEC's attempt to set oil prices this week in Geneva.

But the analysts said the domestic petroleum industry would certainly suffer if the price of oil declines significantly.

"If the price drops much more than it has, you're going to have real problems out there (in oil-producing regions)," said a spokesman for the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

The analysts doubted that the price of oil would go down much, and said the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would quickly resolve their differences.

OPEC Oil ministers broke up their meeting in Geneva after countries in northern Africa refused to go along with a Saudi Arabian request that they raise the price of their crude oil so that the overall production from those countries would decline.

OPEC oil ministers had been attempting to bring into line OPEC nations that had been undercutting the official OPEC price. The oil ministers had proposed holding total production to 17.5 million barrels per day and the price at $34 per barrel.

Henry Schuler, an expert with the Georgetown University Center for Strategic Studies, said the disagreement among OPEC members would soon pass.

"I think it's a tempest in a teapot frankly," said Schuler, who advises congress on issues related to OPEC. In dealings with OPEC, he represented the interests of Dallas oilman Bunker Hunt in the 1970s.

"Anybody who thinks the collapse of an OPEC meeting is synonymous with the collapse of the international oil market hasn't studied it very carefully," said Schuler.

"They'd agreed to rough things, and for some reason it came apart on a really insignificant portion of it (the OPEC negotiations)," he said.

"For the life of me, I cannot see why the Africans disagree to increase the price by the amount that the Saudis are asking," he added. "That's in their interest."

He said there probably was not a plan on the part of OPEC to manipulate the oil price by giving false signals from the Geneva meeting. Representatives from the African countries (Nigeria, Libya and Algeria) may not have had authority to agree to the new Saudi Arabian demand or Muammar al-Qaddafi of Libya may not have wanted to be blamed for higher prices.

Speaking of al-Qaddafi, Schuler said he "has spent a decade being the bad guy who makes everything go up (and) he may just enjoy the reversal of roles."

The major concession was already made by Saudi Arabia, which agreed to reduce its share of the market from 40 percent to 25 percent, said Schuler.

A congressional staff member who follows the OPEC situation agreed with Schuler.

"You can't read too much into this over the long term. Probably the Saudi Arabians will cut production and be successful in maintaining the price of OPEC oil generally," he said.

Ed Rothschild with the liberal Energy Action Project took a different view. He said the worldwide recession had finally caught up with OPEC and that they would be unable to bolster the price. He predicted the price of oil would now be set in the spot market and that it would fall $5 to $6 within two months.

"I think it's all healthy," said Rothschild. "It's good for consumers."

But a spokesman for natural gas producers said the decline of the oil price would not be good for natural gas consumers.

"If the price of oil keeps falling, then industrial users (of natural gas) are going to switch to oil (and) residential consumers would have to pay more because the pipelines and utilities would suffer load loss," said Michael Waters with the Natural Gas Supply Association.

Wellish with IPAA said a decline in oil price would be more bad news for companies that provide services for oil drilling, which have already been hit hard by the slump in the oil patch.

"There's not going to be any exploration or research for supplies. Then OPEC will have us back over the barrel and charge what they want again," said Wellish.

Budget freeze may not dent '84 federal deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even if President Reagan gets the spending freeze he wants from Congress, the federal budget could grow another $40 billion next year — and the deficit still would reach $189 billion.

The spending freeze was the centerpiece of an "economic growth" plan Reagan outlined Tuesday night in his State of the Union message.

Reagan's plan did not include any government job-creating programs, but it did contain additional aid for America's unemployed to tide them over until the long-overdue arrival of the better days that he has promised.

Details of the fiscal 1984 budget will not be released officially until next week, but the administration's broad strategy for curbing the giant deficits it faces were sketched by the president and by senior aides who spoke with reporters only on the condition that their names not be used.

Reagan's proposed freeze would not stop spending in its tracks. Rather, it would allow spending for the fiscal year beginning next October to rise at the same rate as inflation.

With inflation expected to be running at just under 5 percent, and with spending in fiscal 1983 now likely to hit $800 billion, the president's inflation-adjusted freeze could push spending to $840 billion in fiscal 1984.

Without it, administration officials said the budget deficit would swell from $231 billion in 1984 to $300 billion in 1988, and an emerging economic recovery would be drowned in the flood of red ink.

The administration conceded it already is too late to do much about the fiscal 1983 budget deficit, which is now estimated to top $200 billion.

To deal with deficits after 1983, Reagan proposed the spending reductions together with a "standby" tax package for the late 1980s to whittle the red ink down to $117 billion by 1988.

Highlights of his economic proposals include:

—A six-month delay in annual cost-of-living increases for pension and disability programs, including Social Security.

—A 12-month freeze of government pay scales and pensions.

—A $55 billion reduction in the president's record $1,600 billion, five-year spending plan for the Pentagon.

—A three-year "standby" increase in income and energy taxes that would take effect from fiscal 1986 through fiscal 1988 only if projected deficits continued to run above $100 billion a year.

—A six-month extension of unemployment compensation for people who have exhausted their jobless benefits.

—Increased spending on job training, tax credits for businesses that hire the long-term unemployed and a below-minimum wage for youths holding summer jobs.

—Stepped-up efforts to increase U.S. exports of goods and services, with emphasis on helping workers and farmers hurt by import competition.

—Creation of special tax-exempt savings accounts for lower- and middle-income parents to put their children through college.

—A renewed effort to win congressional approval of tuition tax credits for parents who send their children to private elementary and secondary schools.

Although Reagan wants to keep overall spending next year to a 5 percent rise, defense spending would rise 14 percent.

OPEC troubles may hurt Texas oilmen

DALLAS (AP) — A possible plunge in oil prices precipitated by the discord within the major oil producers cartel could send alarming tremors through Texas' energy-dependent economy, experts say.

The pinch could be felt most heavily by oil exploration firms, banks holding loans to Mexico or fragile oil companies, suppliers of drilling equipment and oil field services, and the state treasury, which depends on oil taxing for 10 percent of its total revenue.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries failed to reach agreement Monday on production quotas that might buoy the falling world price by limiting supply.

In Texas, that's good news for motorists who might pay less at the gas pump. But it's bad news for those that depend on oil for income, experts say.

"It really depends on whether you're a producer or consumer of oil," said University of Texas-Dallas economist Bernard Weinstein. "We do both in Texas. On balance, though, I'd say a decline in oil prices is bad for the Texas economy."

"The amount of harm depends on how far the prices fall," Houston energy analyst Dennis Eklof told The Dallas Morning News. "Right now, it's anybody's guess."

"I don't think there is any question that this is going to have an unsettling effect on the energy-related customer base," said Leland Clemons, a senior vice president at First National Bank of Fort Worth.

Energy experts told the News that in the unlikely event OPEC collapsed, the average price per barrel of $32 could drop to $25, or lower, causing more layoffs in the Texas oil industry, steeper drilling declines and more bankruptcies of "marginal" oil companies.

"I don't believe that's going to happen. There are too many people who have a vested interest in keeping the price of oil at a reasonable level," said B. Gil Clements, president of Sedco Inc., a Dallas-based international drilling company.

Bankers are afraid firms will be unable to repay their loans if the price drops. In addition, Mexico, which relies heavily on oil revenue, already is burdened with a heavy debt.

"It is unclear what is happening and that is a decisive point with determining the impact on the Texas banks," said James J. McDermott Jr., an analyst with Feefe, Bruyette & Woods Inc. in New York.

"It is unclear as to whether we are talking about a $1 drop in prices or $12," he said.

"A lot would depend on the magnitude of the price drop and the pattern," agreed Kidder, Peabody & Co. analyst J. Frederick Meinke. "Would it be abrupt and short, or would it be phased in over a period of time?"

If oil prices fall quickly, "the decline itself breeds a sort of panic," said Rick Barry, an oil analyst at Eppler, Guerin & Tucker Inc. As a result, oil companies would cut back more aggressively, he said.

But Thomas Plaut, an economist at the University of Texas' Bureau of Business Research in Austin, said Texas would not experience severe problems if the price dipped below $28 per barrel.

"I don't think that's likely. The renewed strength of the world economy will support a price above $28 a barrel," Plaut said.

Perhaps the biggest loser from lower oil prices, The News said, would be the state government, which figured to take in $1.2 billion in each of the next three fiscal years from a wellhead tax. The tax draws 10 percent of all state revenues.

The Texas treasury could lose $40 million annually from each $1-a-barrel decline in oil prices, said Billy Hamilton, chief revenue estimator for the state comptrollers' office.

"Our assumption was that OPEC would get together and support prices," Hamilton said. "Whether they do that, it's too early to tell. If they don't, we're not going to stick to our estimates."

It has become 'Miller Time' for the entire sudsy U.S. beer industry

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Thirst-withered workmen use it to irrigate an impatient palate. Trendy socialites pour it on the rocks in wine glasses, suggesting that it's what the hip should sip. And macho ex-athletes extol it on the tube, claiming it's the Lite of their post-career lives.

Beer. Whether quaffed voraciously by a longshoreman or nursed meticulously by a bon vivant, it is a beverage whose time has come. Miller time, as the commercial would have us believe.

Americans are getting a wider variety of it today than ever before, despite the fact the number of breweries in the United States has in 60 years diminished from 1,700 to 81.

Hundreds of imports flood into the U.S. market daily, many finding their way to supermarket shelves. Domestic brewers, in order to compete, offer an ever-expanding array of rich super-premiums and low-calorie lights, hoping to supply a beer for every palate, pocketbook and occasion.

Sophistication? Tom McMullen, an Anaheim, Calif., publisher, thinks so much of the American public's interest in the frothy nectar that in October he started a monthly magazine, All About Beer, which he claims will reach 750,000 nationwide circulation by the end of the year. (Newsstand circulation was 180,000 for its first issue.)

Most serious beer drinkers — from blue-collar to white-collar types — would disdain such innovations as quaffing their foamy favorite in wine glasses. On the rocks.

Yet that, according to some observers of the Hollywood party scene, is the chic new trend, especially among women, who, according to the Anheuser Busch brewery, account for 30 percent of all low-calorie beer consumption in the United States.

If the picture of women sipping beer over ice represents a contradiction to the traditional image of the hard-core beer drinker, so, too, do the demographics of a 50,000-member group that calls itself Beer Drinkers International.

The club, based in Southern California, inspired McMullen to introduce his All About Beer magazine to a parched public.

Said McMullen: "It's incredible. These people earn more than $50,000 a year. They're businessmen, teachers, professional people, some with tremendous educational backgrounds."

McMullen said the club's newsletter was the forerunner of his magazine, which includes features on cooking with beer, home brewing, a pub and barmaid of the month, beer can and bottle collecting, trends within the industry and results of blind beer tastings.

"We do a tasting with different beers every month," said McMullen. "We've used longshoremen, college sorority girls and lumberyard workers as tasters so far. One month we tasted lights, another time imports, ales and stouts and locals, evaluating them on a 1 to 10 scale."

Nationally, the U.S. Brewers Association reports that imports account for little more than 3 percent of the beer market.

Four- and five-liter cans of German imports such as Henninger and Warsteiner, with taps or corks at the top, are a new attraction. So is a rather bizarre domestic, J.R. Ewing, the TV "Dallas" answer to the once-chic Billy Beer, named for the brother of former President Jimmy Carter.

"Sure the prices are higher for the imports," a liquor store salesman said, "but if somebody wants it, they'll pay for it. They don't shop around looking for the best price. In today's economy, a liquor store has to have a specialty, and ours is imported beer."

One trend he sees is the development of small breweries that emphasize more meticulous brewing techniques and more costly ingredients than the mass-produced varieties.

"They're beginning to proliferate, like small boutique wineries," he said. "We may see a number of them in the next few years. A wave of the future."

One, in Sonoma, Calif., produces New Albion, an ale some connoisseurs rank among the best in the world.

They hand-deliver it to selected outlets in the San Francisco Bay area, making sure it's totally refrigerated at all times.

From such rarity and reputation do mystiques originate. Henry Weinhard, a super-premium made in limited quantities in Portland, Ore., acquired such an image before widely increasing its distribution and advertising (which continues to emphasize its hand-made quality and limited availability).

A similar mystique has surrounded Coors, the esteemed Colorado beer, because it is unavailable in many Eastern states. And Stroh's, brewed in Detroit and unavailable on the West Coast, is acquiring a reputation that is making it increasingly sought among the suds cognoscenti.

Anchor Steam, brewed in San Francisco, has long been a favorite of the connoisseur. And River City and Sierra Nevada — newcomers on the boutique brewery scene in Sacramento and Chico, Calif., respectively — are piquing palates conditioned to the blander, mass-produced brews.

By the Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

DENVER — It was a match made in high-tech heaven.

Entrepreneur Theodore A. Waibel Jr. and his management team had the idea, an ultrasonic alarm system called Ultrak.

Together, they hope over the next six to 10 years to nurture the fledgling, Broomfield, Colo.-based company to a robust profitability.

The venture partners, part of a vanguard of risk-taking capitalists operating along the Front Range of Colorado's Rocky Mountains, are making financial bets on high-tech startup firms that a traditional banker would not dare touch.

The payoff — a national stock offering or sale to a big company — could make them rich.

"We're looking for $50 million and $100 million companies and up," said John G. Hill, of the Hill Partnership of Boulder, Colo., about 25 miles northwest of Denver. "We're trying to start major corporations."

The companies they help spawn could drive a self-generating economy of electronics and computers, following the tradition of Intel, Apple, Rolm and Tandem Computers that has made Silicon Valley the high-tech heartland near San Jose, Calif.

Or, like so many other promises of Colorado-bred booms, it all could go bust.

Halstedt, former vice president for investment banking at the Denver cable company of Daniels & Associates, started the $28 million Centennial Fund, Denver's largest venture capital pool, in 1980 with two other partners experienced in high-technology management and finance.

About the same time, Hill left his job as vice president of marketing for Storage Technology Corp. in Broomfield, about 15 miles northwest of Denver, hooked up with two major venture capital groups operating out of the Silicon Valley area between San Jose and San Francisco, and started an $11 million fund.

People with new ideas clamoring for money have been knocking on their doors. And making approaches to at least 10 other venture capital groups operating in the Denver area.

"Colorado has emerged as an area very much on the upswing in terms of attracting money," said Jane Morris, managing editor of the nationally distributed Venture Capital Journal. "A lot of venture capitalists perceive that Colorado is an area to watch."

The deals are pouring in. At Centennial, "three hundred to six hundred deals a year ... two per day ... 50 deals in one month," Halstedt said in a speech last week to the Colorado Council of the American Electronics Institute.

Some of them are so far-fetched that Halstedt applies the "snicker test."

"If you can't make it all the way through a proposal without laughing out loud, don't do the deal," he explained.

Ultimately, only a few deals get made. Halstedt estimated that in 1981, 28 venture companies in and out of Denver invested $25 million in 11 different ventures in the Denver market. In 1982, more than 30 funds pumped $60 million into about 20 enterprises.

"I thought there would be a glut of venture capital," observed Bob Keeley, a vice president of Electro-Science Management Corp., an established venture fund that opened a Boulder branch four years ago. "But the expanding (capital) pool has brought an enormous number of new startups out of the woodwork. Most venture capitalists are busier than ever."

The trademark of a venture capitalist is familiarity with what it takes to turn an idea into a successful product. The investment decisions hinge as much on a new company's management team as on a promising new gadget.

City OKs M-System

Midland's Department of Inspections and Permits issued 42 building permits Jan. 17 through 21 for construction valued at $1,938,457. This brings the total for the year to date to just over $9 million.

Topping the list of commercial projects was a permit granted to General Building Corporation, Odessa, for a new M-System grocery store at 2200 South Rankin Highway. Estimated cost is $768,600. Other commercial and commercial alteration permits were issued to Bill Wilkerson, 106 Carlton, $8,400; Harold Shull, 2900 W. Washington, $20,000; and Gary Gunn, 2318 W. Ohio, $42,167.

Builders also received permits for 24 new single family residences, mostly townhomes, ranging in price from $24,000 to $50,000. The city granted 10 permits for residential alterations.

1748

North America is visited by Peter Kalm, a Swedish naturalist, who publishes an account of his travels, together with a map on which the oil springs of Oil Creek, Pa. are indicated.

1755

1761

Oils are distilled from black bituminous shales for medicinal purposes, and it is found that they can be used instead of both oil of turpentine and "oil of petre."

1764

A Frenchman, Pierre Joseph Macquer, defines bitumen as a mineral substance yielding, on distillation, "A great deal of oil very like petroleum."

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

If any members of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees were afraid student enrollment projections may have been a tad too optimistic, their fears were eliminated during a regular meeting Tuesday afternoon.

Athough the housing market may indicate otherwise, the student population is still going through adolescence and enrollment projections made for the 1982-83 school year hit close to the actual growing enrollment.

In related action, trustees heard reports on enrollment projections for next year and progress of a flooded Quanah Parker Elementary School. The new elementary school constructed at the "Bluebird site" was given a name and a procedure for selecting staff for all three new elementary schools, scheduled to open for classes next fall, was approved.

Undoubtedly, misgivings about the need for new elementary schools have popped up in several minds, but taxpayers and board members were assured the schools will be filled by fall 1983.

—Total district, 17,395, 17,432; total elementary, 9,758, 10,029; total secondary, 7,364, 7,094; and special education, 273, 309.

Actual enrollment in primary grades, kindergarten through third, was 281 students above the projected increase, according to Baressi, who added that the elementary enrollment was remaining constant and increased by only 660 students from January 1982.

Growth at the high school level, however, was not as high as expected, with only 45 more students enrolling between January 1982 and January 1983, he noted.

"We were 281 over what we'd projected at the primary level and 185 under projections for high school," he said.

Projections for 1983-84, however, indicate the district will grow because of a "roll-up" factor rather than a "move-in" factor, trustees were told.

While an increase of 582 students, or 5.8 percent, is projected at the elementary level for the 1983-84 year, Baressi pointed out that because of the large number of students currently in kindergarten through grade six, the actual growth of new students is projected to be 306, or an increase of 2.97 percent.

Freshman level enrollments, projected to increase by 173 students, or 14.52 percent, indicate a move-in growth of 22 new students, or 1.64 percent.

TOTAL DISTRICT projections show a growth of 1,072 students and a percent growth of 6.14 percent; meanwhile, the actual move-in growth is expected to increase by 444 students, or 2.46 percent.

Actual enrollments from Jan. 14, 1982, followed by actual enrollments Jan. 13, 1983, and projected enrollments for Oct. 7, 1983, are as follows:

MISD total, 16,278, 17,432, 18,504; primary grades, 5,340, 6,000, 6,502; intermediate grades, 3,832, 4,029, 4,109; junior high, 2,486, 2,705, 2,869; freshman, 1,164, 1,191, 1,364; senior high, 3,153, 3,198, 3,352; special education, 303, 309, 308.

"The greatest impact we are projecting is at the kindergarten level," Baressi said. "We project we'll have 500 more kindergarten students in the next five years."

The two new elementary schools, along with the new De Zavala Elementary School, are scheduled to be ready for students next fall. However, a line connecting a sink and fountain in one of the Parker Elementary classrooms "apparently was not soldered correctly and we had a nice supply of water," Dr. James H. Mailey, consultant for school plant planning and construction, told trustees. "Needless to say, a considerable amount of damage has been done."

Because carpet will have to be relaid and some doors and cabinets will have to be replaced, Mailey requested an extension on the completion date. Trustees extended the date to Feb. 24.

A NAME FOR the other new elementary school, referred to as the "Bluebird School" was approved following a report from Frank Marlow, director of elementary education and chairman of the committee appointed to name the new school.

A total of 35 names, places and events were submitted by the committee, which recommended naming the school Santa Rita Elementary School after the oil well, discovered in 1923 about 60 miles southeast of Midland.

According to background information used in the name selection, about 18 percent of the nation's oil reserves, excluding Alaska, are in the Permian Basin because of the flow from the Santa Rita discovery. The information indicated that a group of Catholic women were worried about their investment in the unproducing well and, after consulting with their priest, were advised to invoke the help of Saint Rita, the patron saint of the impossible.

Other members of the committee were Dr. Duane Moore, Dr. Robert Carter, Gayle Dodson, Frances Collins, Carolyn Sowell, Bertha Starks, Ricardo Torres and Robert Milam.

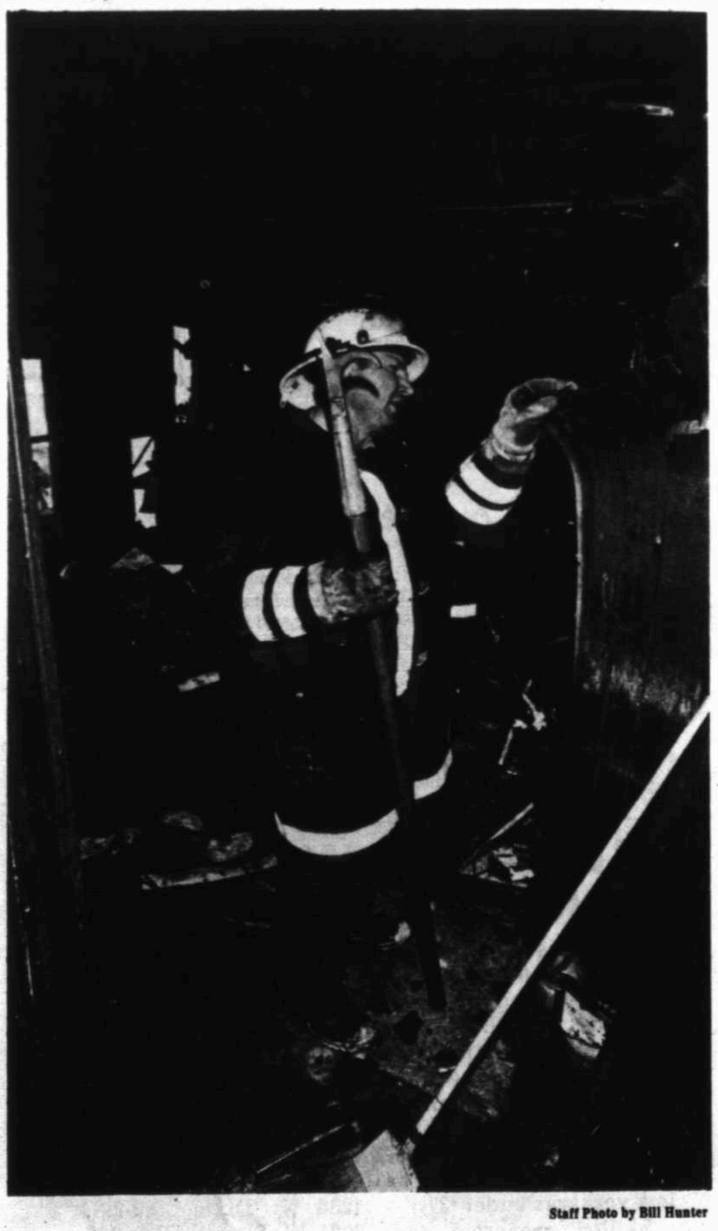

TRUSTEES APPROVED a procedure for staffing the new schools, proposed by Ron Whitmore, director of human resource services. Teachers in the district who request a transfer to a new school will be screened by Whitmore, who will approve assignments "so that there is no undue loss of teachers from any one school," he explained. Before approving the item, trustees added an amendment that stated no more than two teachers from each school could be transferred without Baressi's consent.

In other action, trustees tabled an item dealing with preliminary architectural drawings for the addition to Rusk Elementary School and authorized the employment of Schumann Engineering Co., Inc., of Midland, to design plans for the street project at Santa Rita Elementary School. Maximum rate of the firm will not exceed $12,000 and work, expected to begin within 30 days, should be completed in two to three weeks so that bids may be taken on the project, Mailey said.

Trustees also approved the first reading on a revision to the student transfer policy. Transfer requests based on physical handicaps, admission of a member of the family into a special education class at a special education center, courses not offered in the attendance zone of residence, majority to minority, and specific transfers that were previously granted will continue to be approved administratively. However, under the revision those requests that are denied will no longer be appealed before the board of trustees.

THE REVISION calls for a Pupil Transfer Review Board, consisting of the superintendent, staff members he appoints and a rotating board member, to hear the appeals. The change was made to provide a more discreet environment in which parents of students seeking transfers may discuss their reasons for such requests, according to Becky Ferguson, MISD director of communications. Other revisions concern non-resident transfer applications.

Trustees also approved a procedure for documentation of employee performance/behavior problems, a request from the Lee High School Band and Orchestra to attend the Buccaneer Day's Music Festival in Corpus Christi in April and bids on equipment for the new schools. A gift from Pease Elementary PTA of seven basketball standards and goals and four portable soccer goals also was accepted. Total value of the gift, possible through donations made by The Ortloff Corportation, was $4,000.

Striking construction workers have lost their jobs

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

About 30 Midessa Construction Co. workers who walked off their jobs at ClayDesta Plaza Tuesday to seek union help in settling a wage grievance with the company have been fired, according to the firm's president.

Max DeVilbiss said the workers were asked to pick up their final paychecks Tuesday afternoon after he declined to negotiate with a five-man committee and two representatives of Carpenters Union 1428.

Meanwhile, Jim Purcell, union representative, said all of the workers have signed applications to join the union. Purcell said no picketing or further strike action was planned for today.

The non-unionized interior mechanics and laborers elected the committee and voted unanimously to accept union representation in negotiating a contract with Midessa in an attempt to resolve a dispute over the company's failure to pay union scale wages to its non-union personnel.

According to Purcell, the union is now seeking approval from the National Labor Relations Board to represent the workers.

Till January 1982, Midessa had kept pace with union scale. But the company chose not to meet two pay increases granted union employees within the past year.

DeVilbiss told workers the company was no longer able to keep pace with the union scale. He offered to meet with about four representatives of the group to discuss the matter, but the workers declined and sought union help.

"As far as I'm concerned, they're fired," said DeVilbiss, who added that replacements had been found for about half the workers by Tuesday afternoon.

"I told them that anyone that wasn't on the job at 10 a.m. (Tuesday) doesn't have a job anymore," he said.

DeVilbiss said the remainder of Midessa's approximate 100 employees continued work Tuesday on several buildings in the ClayDesta project. He said the bank construction was most affected by the walkout, and added: "I imagine in a day or two we'll have enough to man it."

Purcell said the workers planned to contact and seek support from Midessa employees not participating in the walkout.

"They are going to stand by their guns, go with what they started," Purcell said of the striking workers. "To my knowledge, they're not planning to return to work."

As yet, none of the workers has joined the union, Purcell said. He noted that the local carpenters union is currently operating under a special dispensation from the national union. The dispensation allows all qualified craftsmen to join the union without paying the initiation fee.

Purcell explained that those wishing to join the union would only have to pay three month's dues — about $112 — instead of one month's dues and an initiation fee of $250 for new members and $300 for ex-members.

DeVilbiss said he offered to meet with the workers on an individual basis in a few days to discuss the possibility of giving them back their jobs. He stressed, however, that the offer is merely to "talk it over," and does not

MMH committees charged with monitoring patient care

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Besides their day-to-day office duties, night calls and continuing education, Midland physicians are also committed to assuring quality care at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Committees are often viewed as bureaucratic gatherings where a lot of information is exchanged, but not much is ever accomplished. However, some 19 committees at MMH are "working" committees charged with monitoring the type of care Midlanders are receiving.

Within the hospital, the MMH administration runs the everyday operations of the facility, and the physicians also have a type of "hospital administration."

At its December 1982 meeting, the general medical staff elected its officers and announced MMH's new service chiefs for 1983.

The committees "are the trenches, where things happen," said John Holt, MMH vice president of quality assurance. "This is where there is an impact

MC to show Gutenberg Bible

Dr. Karen Gould, professor of history from The University of Texas at Austin, will present a lecture at Midland College Thursday on the history and background of the Gutenberg Bible.

Open to the public without charge, the one-hour lecture will be presented at 10 a.m. in the lecture hall of the Allison Fine Arts Building. Dr. Gould will be at the college in conjunction with the opening of the display of UT-Austin's copy of the Gutenberg Bible.

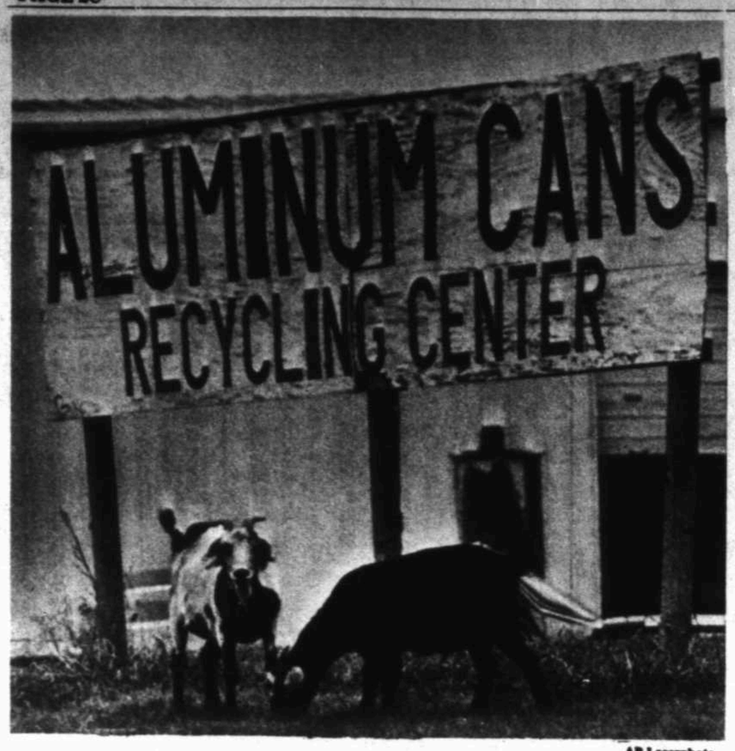

Entitled "The Gutenberg Bible: The Beginning of the Printed Word," the exhibition in the McCormick Gallery, located in the Allison Fine Arts Building, will be open daily from Thursday through Feb. 6. The exhibit is one of 10 throughout the state as part of the centennial celebration of UT-Austin.

"Dr. Gould has done a considerable amount of research about the development of movable type by German Johann Gutenberg in the 15th Century," Warren Taylor, art instructor and exhibits chairman at Midland College, said. "Her lecture will include slides and considerable information about the history of this particular volume of the extremely rare Gutenberg Bible."

Also being shown at McCormick Gallery are 40 etchings done by famous artist Marc Chagall, illustrating the Bible. The works are on loan to Midland College from the Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University. They are from SMU's Birdwell Collection.

In order to explain the significance of the Gutenberg Bible, the exhibit will include three self-sustaining panels of background information plus a six-minute video tape presentation. Visitors also will receive free explanatory brochures.

For this exhibition, McCormick Gallery is open from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and from 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday.

Lawyer says death penalty should be unconstitutional

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A lawyer trying to save a man sentenced to death for poisoning his son has argued that the Texas death penalty law should be ruled unconstitutional.

Attorney Will Gray, representing Ronald Clark O'Bryan, told the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Tuesday that Texas judges should be required to tell jurors to consider "mitigating circumstances" before assessing the death penalty.

O'Bryan, 38, is a Deer Park man sentenced to die for feeding cyanide-laced Halloween candy to his 8-year-old son in order to collect a life insurance payoff.

The former optician, nicknamed "Candy Man" by his fellow Death Row inmates, was to have been executed last Halloween but won a stay from the 5th Circuit pending the presentation of further defense evidence.

The three-judge court, presided over by Judge Carolyn Randall of Houston, took under advisement the arguments by Gray and Leslie Benitez, an assistant Texas attorney general.

Gray maintained in a pre-hearing brief and during Tuesday's 20-minute hearing that Texas law violates the U.S. Constitution "because it contains no provisions for directing and instructing the jury's consideration of mitigating circumstances at the punishment phase of trial."

In death penalty cases, a jury first decides the issue of guilt. If the defendent is convicted, another hearing is held before the same jury on punishment. If the jury rejects the defense's mitigating factors a death penalty may be imposed.

Gray said punishment really "bottoms on the jury answer to one special issue: 'whether there is a probability that the defendant would commit criminal acts of violence that would constitute a continuing threat to society.'"

At O'Bryan's trial in Houston, the jury found he probably would commit other acts of violence and be a continuing threat.

Thus, said Gray, the jury was given "unbridled discretion by an arbitrary and discriminatory answer to a special issue" that does not require hard facts and evidence as a foundation.

In fact, Gray said, almost a dozen defense witnesses testified O'Bryan was not a violent man and probably would not be a continuing threat to society if his life were spared.

He argued Texas' law is inadequate because it does not require a trial judge to tell jurors "there is a balance between aggravated circumstances and mitigating circumstances" in capital cases.

Gray said the Texas law "is heavily weighed in favor of mandatory assessment of the death penalty in all Texas murder prosecutions."

For instance, Gray argued, too, that Texas law allows judges and prosecutors to seat jurors who express merely a reasonable willingness to impose the death penalty, a provision that Ms. Benitez defended.

"Unfortunately, in the State of Texas, many trial judges are ex-prosecutors and there is a feeling many of them are still prosecutors, although I am not suggesting this is true in this case," Gray said.

White may call for PUC commissioners to be elected

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White's speech to legislators Thursday could include a call for election of Public Utility Commission members. At present, they are appointed by the governor.

Gov. Mark White

White said Tuesday that his staff is looking into the potential pitfalls of an elected commission, including the chance it could be dominated by utility companies armed with enough money to influence the elections.

"I don't want to see an elected commission that would be dominated by the industry," White told reporters, adding he also fears an elected commission in which "whoever promises the lowest rate gets elected."

He said an elected commission is "one of the alternatives we are considering."

Sens. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, and Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, already have filed bills that would abolish the three-member appointed commission and replace it with an elected panel.

Caperton wants three commissioners, elected statewide. Doggett's bill calls for six commissioners from single-member districts.

White was not specific about his own proposal, which he said he would discuss in detail Thursday when he lays out his legislative program to state lawmakers during a joint session. He acknowledged there could be legal barriers to a ban on contributions from utility firms.

"It's not easily done, I'll admit," said White.

"We don't want a (utility companies-) dominated elected commission. We don't want an appointed commission of people who don't understand their responsibilities. I think we've seen examples of both of these," he said.

White opposed elected commissioners during the spring primary campaign. Now he says his opposition was to an elected commission that would be "dominated by the industry."

"A majority of Texans are simply fed up with the current sham of utility regulation," Caperton said. "It seems the only people who like the way the PUC is run are the utility companies, who complain lamely on the way to the bank, and the folks up on Wall Street, who think we give the utility companies the softest and easiest deal in the country."

An elected commision "is the only way that we're going to make commissioners understand there's a public out there."

on certain aspects of patient care."

Holt, who assists the committees in fulfilling their obligations, cited the infection control committee as an example of how a committee impacts patient care.

"For example, infection control committee monitors, prevents and investigates hospital-acquired infections among the patients and employees," he said.

The 1983 medical staff appointments for 10 of these committees are:

Dr. John Young, tissue committee; Dr. J. Mendez, infection control; Dr. Shelton Viney, pharmacy and therapeutics; Dr. Durwood Clader, cancer; Dr. Donald Floyd, physical therapy; Dr. John McKenna, cardiopulmonary; Dr. William McGavran, critical care; Dr. David Mallams, emergency services; Dr. David Shneidman, continuing medical education; and Dr. Brian Mohr, utilization review.

Other MMH committees include credentials, institutional review, bylaws, dietary ad hoc, cost containment, radiation safety, joint conference, search, product evaluation and standardization, physician's equipment, safety, quality assurance steering and medical records.

Court upholds ruling in demotion case

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Supreme Court today let stand lower court rulings involving the demotion of a Midland police officer.

James D. McFadden brought suit against Midland officials after he was demoted in August 1979 from lieutenant to sergeant for reasons including alleged disrespect to a superior officer.

The trial court granted a summary judgment in August 1980 against McFadden, who appealed, contending his constitutional rights, including that of free speech, had been violated.

The trial court ruling was upheld on appeal and the Supreme Court ruled today that "no reversible error" had been made by the lower courts.

McFadden, who is no longer with the Midland police, could not be reached for comment.

Williams to be honored in Fort Stockton

FORT STOCKTON — Four former Fort Stockton residents who have excelled in their fields will be recognized at the annual Fort Stockton Chamber of Commerce banquet at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Middle School cafeteria at 2100 West 5th St.

Giving 10-minute speeches will be honorees Clayton Williams Jr. of Midland, Oran Nicks of College Station, Domingo Dominguez of Austin and Fain Downs of Abilene.

The outstanding citizen of the year also will be recognized at the affair, which carries a "western" theme.

Outgoing president E. F. Triplett will hand over the reigns of the chamber to Frank Espino.

Tickets for out-of-towners at $8.50 per person will be available at the door.

Certificate of need to be considered

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Health Facilities Commission will consider Friday a request from Upton County Convalescent Center of McCamey to amend a certificate of need authorizing the construction of an addition.

The convalescent center is requesting an extension of the completion deadline from Dec. 1, 1982 to March 1, 1983.

The certificate of need authorizes the construction of a 5,952-square-foot addition to the existing 13-bed, intermediate-care nusring home facility for the expansion of support areas and 17 additional intermediate beds.

Dallas woman dies of hypothermia

DALLAS (AP) — A 94-year-old woman lay injured on the floor of her unheated kitchen for three days, then died of exposure after the temperature outside fell to 24 degrees, officials say.

Cora L. Davis was still conscious when police found her about 6:30 a.m. in her southside home. She told officers she had been on the floor since Saturday. She died about an hour later Tuesday.

Bids will be taken for airport access road

AUSTIN — A highway project to provide a western access to Midland Regional Airport from FM 1788 will go up for bid at the State Department of Highways and Transportation this month.

Upon completion of Texas 191, the new access road is expected to become the favored route for area users of the airport, according to highway officials.

"When this new entrance into Midland Regional is completed, it will provide better access from Interstate 20 and also from Texas 191 and FM 1788," said Bill Lancaster, head of the DHT Odessa district office. "It is expected to be the major access for persons desiring airport services in this area."

Announcement of the successful low bidders is expected to come later this month. Further information may be obtained by calling the Odessa office at 332-0501.

Astros strike out Democratic convention

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros' schedule makes it impossible for Houston to host the 1984 Democratic National Convention, Mayor Kathy Whitmire says.

Mrs. Whitmire said Tuesday she was withdrawing the city's bid to host the meeting, which will be held in the summer of 1984.

The only facility large enough to house the convention would be the Astrodome, which will be booked for much of the baseball season, she said.

She said the committee required free access to major meeting halls for at least 30 days.

"The Houston Sports Association said it would be possible for the Astros to schedule a two-week road trip but difficult to make alternate arrangements for the team to play away for one month," Ms. Whitmire said.

Computer helps dieters counting their calories

By HENRY UNGER
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — You're 20 pounds overweight. You've tried countless diets with little success. You've bought books, watched television and invested your time, energy and money to make the diet business a $14 billion a year industry.

And now Harry Friedman comes along with a computer gizmo he says can make losing weight easier. It's called Compucal, costs $130, and is a computerized digital scale that measures the exact number of calories in more than 600 food items.

Compucal is simple to use. Each food item has a code number. For example, an apple has the number 225, so you press 225 and place the apple on the two-pound, battery-powered scale. You'll get the apple's precise weight, calorie count and, in addition, its protein, fat, carbohydrate, sodium and cholesterol content.

"I think by making the process of dieting easier and taking the guesswork out, it will help dieters," said Friedman, a former "Hollywood Squares" television quiz show producer who developed Compucal with business associate Stuart Oliver. "There are 40 million dieters out there, and when they see how many calories there are, it takes it out of the abstract and makes a greater impact."

Although Friedman's Sherman Oaks-based company, Personal Computer Industries, planned to sell 10,000 units, he now thinks sales may be four or five times greater. At $130 each, that's more than $5 million. Compucal will be available in March at department stores throughout the country.

The idea came to Friedman one night when he went out to dinner with his wife and another couple. They all wanted cheesecake, but decided to get only one piece and share it. That's when Friedman thought, "Wouldn't it be nice to know exactly how many calories were in that piece?" Soon after, he teamed up with Oliver, a research scientist, and together they developed the computer and founded the company.

Oliver, who has a heart condition, believes the sodium, cholesterol and fat content information will help people with hypertension or heart trouble. "I started on this project because I need a computer like this," Oliver said. "I think it's at the level that people who need it can afford."

Friedman also needed a machine like this. His 5-foot-9 frame used to carry 235 pounds. He now weighs 157 pounds — but he lost the weight without the computer.

New knowledge on infertility helps many couples

By SANDY ROVNER
The Los Angeles — Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — There are few things in this world more agonizing than wanting to have children — and not being able to.

"Don't talk to me about population control," snaps a young publicist who delayed her pregnancy to establish her career and who now has been unable to conceive.

"Believe me," she sighs, "when you're 24 or 25 it never occurs to you you won't be able to get pregnant when you want ... you just don't think about that."

She has been thinking about little else for about three years now, but she is optimistic that after a laparascopic diagnosis and some microsurgery on her tubes, her chances have improved.

She is nearly 35 and she feels that time is working against her, but, the experts are saying, maybe not.

THERE IS AN EXPLOSION of new knowledge not only about what causes infertility, but about remedies — from something as simple as relaxation techniques to sophisticated hormonal manipulation, microsurgery and, as a last step, in vitro fertilization (IVF). These, along with genetic testing, "give women the election of having children even in their middle 50s," says infertility expert Dr. John L. Young, "with no more risk of having abnormalities than younger women, assuming she undergoes all the available testing."

(Now such age-related problems as Down's syndrome are identifiable through amniocentesis, and the potential for neural-tube defects can be screened by a series of blood tests with amniocentesis needed for only a tiny percentage.)

MOST FERTILITY experts agree that more couples than ever are seeking help in starting families — up to nearly 6 million married couples in this country, about 15 percent, are unable to conceive naturally — and that today's lifestyles account for at least some of the problems. Fertility in women begins to wane after 30 and in men after 40. So just postponing pregnancy can have some effect.

Endometriosis, a disease in which tissue from the uterine cavity implants in other parts of the female reproductive system, is one of the major causes of infertility-although only about 10 percent of those who have it become infertile as a result. It seems to be on the increase among young women. However, according to Dr. Richard Falk, chief of the reproductive endocrinology divisions at both Georgetown University Medical Center and Columbia Hospital for Women (a joint fertility program), it simply may be that it is being more easily diagnosed.

ACCORDING TO FALK, most infertility experts see tubal problems as the top cause of infertility in women along with ovulation problems. There are also more problems with male fertility than had been previously recognized. "Contrary to what used to be accepted gynecological dogma," says Young, "infertility is caused almost as much by male as by female problems." Falk says it has been his experience that male problems account for about 30 percent of infertility problems. Often there is a mixture of male and female factors. (Experts disagree on which problems rank in what order, all conceding there are vast areas yet to be explored.)

However, it is known that sperm are exquisitely sensitive to temperature, for example, and even the presence of a varicose vein in the scrotum — a not uncommon occurrence — can raise the temperature enough to damage the sperm or lower the count. (This can be surgically corrected.) Sperm levels — 20 million per ejaculate is considered sub-fertile — also can be affected by smoking, alcohol, tension, even poor diet and fatigue. When semen samples are examined, the specialist looks for fast swimmers that look like they know where they're going. In collecting sperm for artificial insemination or IVF, in fact, the technique resembles nothing so much as a swimming contest.

Falk also notes that studies suggest that the average sperm count is dropping in this country, although no one can say for sure what impact that has on fertility, or why it is happening.

AND IT DOES NOT help that human reproduction is not particularly efficient to begin with. If the woman's cervical mucous is too thick or too watery, or if its temperature is too hot or too cold, even a healthy and determined-looking sperm cannot make it to the egg. The miracle, it is said, is that as many babies get made as are.

Infertility tests for women are mainly non-invasive in the early stages. The physician checks for proper ovulation, proper responsiveness of her uterine lining or for blocked fallopian tubes. Ovulation can be stimulated or regularized through the proper use of some new drugs, like Clomid or Pergonal, but the patient ought to be monitored constantly. It is not enough, specialists emphasize, to just give her some pills and send her away. (Both these drugs increase the likelihood of multiple births, although Pergonal is more likely to do so.)

After an elaborate radiological procedure called a hysterosalpingogram, there may be a laparoscopy, minor surgery to diagnose and possibly treat tubal blocking caused by previous infections or endometriosis. A laparoscopy will also determine if the woman's ovaries may be reached surgically to remove an egg if she is to become a candidate for an in vitro program.

MALE PROBLEMS sometimes can be treated with drugs or surgery. Occasionally the husband's sperm is incompatible with the wife's cervical mucous, and sometimes this, too, can be adjusted hormonally. Some new artifical insemination techniques may be indicated in which a concentrated amount of the best sperm are put directly into the uterine cavity. As the final resort for the parents to have their own baby, there is the use, where it is available, of in vitro fertilization — surgically removing an egg at the time of ovulation, fertilizing it with the husband's sperm in a laboratory and reimplanting it into the mother's uterus.

Young, a board-certified obstetrician-gynecologist and his partner, Mark R. Geier, a physician with a Ph.D. in genetics, and ob-gyn training, have just begun to accept patients in their suburban in vitro fertilization program, which they call MAP, for "medically assisted pregnancy." Sophisticated fertility centers — without IVF programs — exist at George Washington Medical Center, Columbia Hospital for Women (in conjunction with Georgetown University) and at Johns Hopkins in Baltimore. Although they and several other facilities are planning IVF programs, they are still several months away. The MAP program in Bethesda, Md., is the only one currently doing in vitro fertilizations in the area and is believed to be the only non-hospital private program operating anywhere. According to Falk, Columbia's unit has just had a $500,000 budget approved for its forthcoming IVF unit. There already are 2,000 active patients at the Columbia center and there is a wait of about 4 months for a consultation. Falk believes that the first candidates for IVF there will be drawn from their current patient population.

COUPLES ELIGIBLE for Young and Geier's MAP program for in vitro fertilization must be healthy, stable and married. They should have tried, and not responded to treatment for any known obstacles to their fertility. So far, Young and Geier have implanted fertilized eggs in two patients and currently are awaiting results. It usually takes several tries before there is a pregnancy.

The experience in other IVF programs has taught the experts that sperm may be handled more safely and easily than had been feared at first. And new techniques already can make some distinctions between sperm with a male's Y chromosome or a female's X. (The extra leg on the X makes the female sperm minutely heavier and slower.)

For free brochures on the MAP program or on genetic counseling, phone 301-530-6900 or write Genetic Consultants, 5616 Shields Dr., Bethesda, Md. 20817.

Many patients are misled on gum disease, researcher says

By HARRY NELSON
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Millions of Americans who believe that they can treat their gum and tooth bone disease merely by brushing with baking soda, peroxide and salt have been misled, says the dentist who is most closely associated with that notion.

The dentist, Dr. Paul Keyes, a former investigator with the National Institute for Dental Research, has been under fire by periodontists for allegedly advocating the home remedy treatment instead of surgical and other methods used by dentists to treat periodontal disease.

But after a careful 1 1-2-hour explanation of what he does believe, Keyes seemed to have pretty well convinced his audience of dentists at the School of Dentistry at the University of Southern California last week that his overall concept of treatment, ranging from inexpensive brushing remedies to surgery, may be worth exploring.

Periodontal disease is the leading cause of tooth loss in the United States and is estimated to affect at least 75 percent of the population. It eats away not only the gums but underlying bone around the teeth.

Keyes believes that one reason that periodontal disease is so widespread is that the profession has relied on brushing and flossing as the chief methods of prevention — methods he believes depend too heavily on the deficient skills of the patient.

Also, he believes that the dental profession has largely ignored the role played by bacteria in causing the disease.

Keyes said his approach has been to concentrate on the cause of the disease — the bacteria — and then, for each individual patient, to select the treatment that seems best able to eradicate the bacteria.

Contrary to the reputation he has acquired, Keyes said he is not opposed to surgical treatment or the various non-surgical methods used by conventional periodontists.

"There are many alternative treatments. There are no panaceas," he said. "It's foolish to argue about a specific treatment."

A mixture of baking soda, peroxide and salt is one of the methods used by some of his patients. It is advocated, he said, because it is known to kill certain of the bacteria that he has associated with the disease.

However, he added, the treatment does not work in all patients, and it is not the only one that he uses. In some patients, he said, surgery is required. In others it is necessary to resort to antibiotics, he said.

A key element in Keyes' program is to monitor the success of the treatment by removing small amounts of tissue and examining them under a microscope for evidence of bacteria. If certain types of bacteria — spirochetes — can still be seen after a particular treatment has been in use, it usually means that that treatment has not been effective.

Keyes believes that successful treatment depends on the close monitoring of those bacteria — something he says most dentists do not do.

Periodontists have pointed out that Keyes does not know that the bacteria he sees under the microscope are the actual cause of the disease. They may be there only because the disease process is under way, the periodontists reason.

However, Keyes contends that animal experiments indicate that the gum and bone destruction do not occur if the bacteria are not present. "If we see no organisms, there are no lesions," he said.

Several studies conducted at university dental clinics have concluded that the salt, soda and peroxide regimen recommended by Keyes was no better than toothpaste or other commercially available products.

DEAR ABBY

Troubled family's trauma requires expert care

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I just found out that my mature 13-year-old son has been molesting my daughters. They are 3 and 6 years old. I think I should have the girls checked by a doctor to make sure they are OK, but I need some information first.

How much do I have to tell the doctor? Does a doctor have to report such cases to the law or the social service people? Would the police or social service people take my son or the girls away from me and put them in a foster home? I don't want to lose any of my children.

I talked to my son and he promised it will never happen again. If my children need counseling, is there free or low-cost counseling available?

I don't feel close enough to anyone I know to ask these questions and I don't trust my mail to be private. Answer, please, in your column. Sign me ... UTAH MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: The welfare of all your children should be your first concern. Take the little girls to a doctor to be examined and tell the doctor the truth. Your son should be examined by a psychiatrist. Take him to your local mental health facility and be honest with the people there. Please don't worry that your children will be taken from you. You need to put your problem into the hands of professionals. Even though your son has promised it will never happen again, he should be evaluated and counseled. And on the chance that the little girls have been psychologically damaged, they need counseling, too. Please follow this advice and let me hear from you again. I care.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 19-year-old housewife with a 13-month-old baby boy. My problem is I always seem to start an argument with my husband over the slightest little thing. For example:

He has started to grow a beard, knowing I don't like beards. I stupidly asked, "Who are you growing that for?"

Of course he got mad and we had a big fight. Now he's threatened to walk out on me, and I really need him for my sake as well as the baby's. Can you give me some advice on how to keep my big mouth shut? — STUPID IN ARDMORE, OKLA.

DEAR STUPID: Think twice before you speak. And make sure your brain is engaged before you put your mouth in gear.

DEAR ABBY: Our father died suddenly three months ago. We will be forever grateful to his second wife, "Mary," for making his last 12 years so happy.

Dad and our mother had been happily married for 40 years. When Mother died 14 years ago, Dad bought a double plot and expressed the wish to be laid to rest beside Mother.

When Dad died, Mary handled all the funeral arrangements. She hurriedly bought another double plot for Dad and herself, ignoring his wishes to be buried with his first wife.

We, the children, were outraged, but said nothing at the time of Dad's funeral because we didn't want to cause an ugly scene. Also, Mary had been a devoted companion to Dad, and her obvious grief was sincere.

Should we confront Mary and have Dad's remains moved to the plot next to Mother in the spring? Two brothers say, "Wait until after Mary goes, then do it."

What do you say? — TWO SISTERS

DEAR SISTERS: I vote with your brothers.

DEAR ABBY: About sex: What you do in private can affect your whole personality. If you do something perverted with another consenting adult, it can twist your character, damage your personality, warp your morals and scar your soul. What you do in private CAN hurt you and everyone around you.

DEAR BILL: If my "anything goes" disturbs you, tell me what you think does "go." In the meantime, I fail to see how anything done privately by two consenting adults can twist, damage, warp or scar them. Or hurt anyone around them.

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Cash Customer in Canada," who had to pay his wife for sex, that he's behind the game.

I used to charge my husband $2 every time, and when he didn't have the money, I'd let him charge it, but it would cost him 50 cents extra for carrying charges.

A few years later, I told this to an old friend, and she said, "That's nothing new. I used to charge my husband $3, and when I had to pay HIM he said, 'That will be $5. I'm a union man.'" — L.P.M., ANCHORAGE, ALASKA

NEWS FOR SHOPPERS

THE TAX HIKE: HOW CONSUMERS ARE REACTING

When your favorite product increases in price how do you react? If you're like most Americans you either buy that product fewer times, or look for a lower priced product of the same or better quality.

With the federal tax hike on cigarettes bringing the cost of a pack of branded cigarettes to a dollar or more, cost-conscious smokers are looking for ways to get the same quality but at a lower price. Increasingly, they are turning to generic cigarettes, those with no name, usually packaged in a plain wrapper.

These "no-name" cigarettes, sold in supermarkets and discount stores, are priced at an average of 10 to 15 cents less per pack (or $1-$1.50 less per carton) than national brands.

Market research has shown that nearly 85 percent of the smokers who try generics like them as well or better than their current brand, and 94 percent of those who try them would buy generics again. According to a spokesman for Gary Tobacco Co., the nation's leading manufacturer of generics, "You can get someone to try a product once because of the price, but they will not buy it again at any price unless it has the high quality they're used to."

Valentine sweets please young cupids

Say "I love you" with "Love" Cookie Cards and Cupcake Cones — both made with candy coated chocolate candies — for easy to make and fun to eat Valentine's Day treats.

Kids love to play cupid on Valentine's Day. This year let your cupid cooks take a turn on tradition in the kitchen as they bake and create handmade cards and homemade treats.

"Love" Cookie Cards are a delicious and easy way to say "I love you." Make these edible Valentine's Day cards by simply cutting and shaping sugar cookie dough to form hearts. The fun continues when the kids decorate their glazed cookies by writing names, initials or special messages to favorite family and friends with tube frosting and candy-coated chocolate candies.

Your creative cooks can also send vibrant Valentine messages and initials by shaping cookies into letters. Jazz up the "love" letters by pressing colorful candies into the sugar dough before baking.

Cupcake Cones are another fun-to-make, easy-to-eat treat. Kids will love these cupcakes that come alive in cones. The cones provide a crunchy shell for the moist cake. Frost and decorate unique cupcakes for a perfect portable party snack at home or at school.

"LOVE" COOKIE CARDS

1 roll (16 oz.) refrigerated sugar slice and bake cookies
1 can (16.5 oz.) prepared frosting
Food coloring, as desred
Tube decorating frosting or gel, as desired
Candy coated chocolate candies

Cut cookie dough into 1/2-inch thick slices. Roll or flatten on ungreased cookie sheet to form three-inch circles, about 1/8-inch thick. Shape to form hearts by making an indentation in the top and shaping bottom to form point. Bake at 325 degrees for 10 to 12 minutes or until edges are lightly browned. Cool about one minute on cookie sheet; remove carefully to wire rack to cool thoroughly. Tint frosting with food coloring, as desired. Frost cooled cookies with prepared canned frosting and decorate by writing love messages or names with decorating frosting, and whole or halved candies, as desired. Makes about one dozen three-inch heart-shaped cookies.

Variations: For medium hearts, cut dough into one-inch thick slices. Roll or flatten on ungreased cookie sheet to form four-inch circles, about 1/8 inch thick. Shape to form hearts by making an indentation in the top and shaping bottom to form point. Bake at 325 degrees for 12 to 14 minutes or until edges are lightly browned. Frost and decorate as directed above. Makes about nine four-inch heart-shaped cookies.

For large hearts, cut dough into two-inch thick slices. Roll or flatten to forn six-inch circles, about 1/8 inch thick. Shape to form hearts by making an indentation in the top and shaping bottom to form point. Bake at 325 degrees for 13 to 15 minutes or until edges are lightly browned. Frost and decorate as directed above. Makes about four six-inch heart-shaped cookies.

For letters, follow rolling directions for small hearts. Shape and cut to form into desired letters, reshaping when necessary. Press in whole candies to decorate. Bake at 352 degrees for 10 to 12 minutes. Cool about one minute on cookie sheet. Remove to wire rack to cool thoroughly. Makes about one dozen three-inch letter cookies.

CUPCAKE CONES

1 package (18.5 oz) plain favorite flavor cake mix
2 packages (1-3/4 oz. each) small flat bottom ice cream cones (about two to three inches high)
2 cans (16.5 oz. each) prepared canned frosting
Candy coated chocolate candies
Candy sprinkles, cinnamon flavored cadies, gumdrops, toasted coconut or nuts, as desired

Prepare cake mix according to package directions. Fill each cone with three measuring tablespoons of batter. Place on ungreased cookie sheet about three inches apart. Bake at 350 degrees for 30 to 35 minutes or until wooden pick inserted in center comes out clean. Cool thoroughly on wire rack. Frost; decorate with candies and toppings, as desired. Makes 24 cupcake cones.

Washington entertained guests lavishly all his life

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

If we can forget that fallen tree and all the cherry pies it inspires every Washington's Birthday celebration, it might be noted that the father of our country was a man who liked fine foods and set a lavish table, even in wartime.

In the early days as a young country squire at Mount Vernon, Washington served memorable meals to the parade of guests who visited the stately mansion. An English visitor described those spreads as "bountiful," citing one dinner where there was a leg of pork at the head of the table and a roast goose at the foot, with two kinds of beef and a platter of mutton chops in between; not to mention the various vegetables and breads.

When war broke out, Martha found Mount Vernon lonely with her husband away commanding the armed forces. So when conditions permitted she visited the general at some of his encampments with the Continental Army. The meals were hardly on a par with Mount Vernon, but the Washingtons did manage to entertain occasionally.

In the years after the war, Washington returned home and soon found his house swamped with such a flow of guests that he called Mount Vernon a "well resorted tavern."

WITH A DOZEN or more dinner guests most evenings, the kitchen at Mount Vernon was kept busy turning out roast pigs, fish from the river and game from the nearby marshes. A steady flow of claret and Madeira wines was needed to wash down the food.

When Washington became our first president, he was well fitted to serve as the nation's No. 1 host, which meant entertaining a parade of statesmen and diplomats.

Sen. William Maclay of Pennsylvania described one banquet which led off with a rich cream soup, followed by salmon and several other fish, various kinds of meat, an array of pies, puddings, ice cream and baskets of fruits, many of them hard to get in those days.

Breakfast at the White House was a bracing meal, including toast and fresh rolls with sliced tongue, jams and jellies. But no broiled fish, as one disappointed British guest observed.

Washington was especially fond of desserts, such as this recipe for trifle.

18 slices jelly roll, or sponge cake cut into slices
½ cup white wine
Custard (see recipe)
1 pint whipping cream
1 tablespoon sugar
Candied fruits for decoration

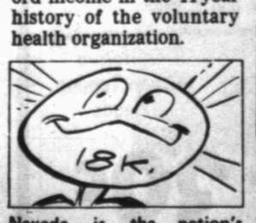

Line deep dish with slices of jelly roll and wet with 1-3rd cup wine. Fill dish nearly to top with custard. Season half pint heavy cream with one tablespoon wine and 1 tablespoon sugar. Whip to a froth and spread over custard. Decorate with remaining whipped cream and candied fruits.

To make custard, scald 1 quart milk. Add ½ cup sugar and pinch salt. Beat 6 whole eggs and add half cup cold milk to them. Stir and slowly add to hot milk mixture. Cook in top of double boiler until custard coats spoon. When cooled, add ¼ teaspoon vanilla and gently mix.

THE BUTCHER

Watch for butcher counter rip-offs

By MERLE ELLIS

The practices of some of my brethren in the butcher business drive me up the wall. I learned the trade from an honest butcher who taught me that you don't have to cheat customers to make a living.

It is possible that some of the things that disturb me are not done intentionally. Some bad practices may have been handed down from one generation of butchers to the next until today some don't really know the right way to trim a flank steak, how to crack a chine bone properly or how many ribs there are (or should be) on a rack of lamb. Because some butchers don't seem to know about things like that (We'll give them the benefit of the doubt.), it's important that you do. If you don't, you're apt to be taken.

For example, last week I bought a rack of lamb from a little market in my neighborhood. It's a nice little market. The old-fashioned kind with real butchers to whom you can talk; it even has a bit of sawdust on the floor. I can't tell you how disappointed I was when I got home, opened my package and discovered that my rack of lamb had nine ribs. Come on fellows, nine ribs on a rack of lamb? That's a rip-off.

The rack of lamb is from the rib section of the animal and it usually contains only seven ribs. Oh, there are butchers who cut an eight-rib rack — I can tolerate that — that's just a "little lie." There even are lambs that do, in fact, have an extra rib, so it may be the lamb's fault. But nine ribs? No way!

According to what my father taught me, and according to most retail meat merchandising manuals (including the one put out by the American Lamb Council), the cutting method for a rack of lamb is:

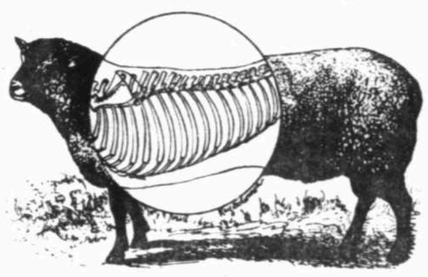

"Remove the full rack from a lamb carcass by cutting between the fifth and sixth ribs at the shoulder end and the floating rib at the loin end." Basically, it's very simple. I'm surprised some butchers seem to have a hard time understanding it.

A carcass of lamb normally has (as have most animals including you and me) 13 ribs. Over the years — hundreds of years — in order to make sense of things so that one generation of butchers could pass on to the next the knowledge and skills of the trade — it has become tradition to count those ribs from the front to the back.

Rib one lies in the shoulder near the neck. In the process of dividing the lamb carcass into its various component parts (shoulder, rib, loin, leg, etc.), the butcher (traditionally) counts back five ribs and makes a cut between the fifth and sixth rib to separate the shoulder from the neck.

He then makes a cut in the middle of the back, between the 12th and 13th ribs to separate the rack from the loin. The first five ribs remain in the shoulder and the 13th is left in the loin.

Ribs number six through twelve are the ones that traditionally are the rack of lamb. If a rack contains more than those seven ribs, it means one of two things. Either the lamb was some sort of freak or your butcher is selling you a couple of shoulder lamb chops at rack of lamb prices. Whether his action results from lack of proper training or lack of scruples, you are being cheated.

Flank steak is another cut of meat that some butchers seem to have a hard time trimming properly. It should be the simplest of cuts to do right. It is a well-defined, easy-to-identify flat muscle embedded in the inside of the beef flank.

It is removed from the whole beef flank by stripping the tough membrane from over the flank steak, loosening the narrow end of the muscle and separating it from the thick, tough, fatty membrane that lies underneath. All too often, however, butchers leave an inch or two of that fatty membrane attached to the broad end of a flank steak. That's not very nice! This cut should be practically free of fat and membrane. If it isn't, don't buy it! At the price of flank steak these days, if it isn't well-trimmed, you're being well-trimmed.

Grapefruit good food seasoner

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

Salt may be essential in our lives, but many of us consume more than we need. Too much can boost hypertension which in turn can lead to heart disease, strokes and other ailments.

There are ways to enhance the flavor of a dish without going in for sodium. They include not only herbs, but natural salt-free products like the zesty citrus.

One of the tangiest such fruits is the grapefruit, which is sharper in flavor than the orange but not as sour as the lemon. It gives a lift to a number of dishes that tend to be bland, such as scallop casserole.

The grapefruit is said to have originated in the Western Hemisphere and was once called the pomelo. Weighing anywhere from 2 to 12 pounds, it grows in clusters on trees up to 40 feet tall.

The precise origins of this fruit are uncertain, but it is believed to have descended from the shaddock, a native of India that was imported to the West Indies many years ago.

The grapefruit was unknown in Europe's citrus-growing countries, Spain, Italy and Greece, until it was brought there from America.

Citrus fruits have unique properties. A single citrus tree, with the help of a botanist, can bear lemons, oranges and grapefruit all at the same time.

Grapefruit-scallop casserole gets its flavor not only from grapefruit, but from such herbs as parsley and chervil, which give it a savory bouquet without boosting the sodium content. Here is the recipe.

GRAPEFRUIT-SCALLOP CASSEROLE

1 pound frozen or fresh bay or sea scallops
½ cup vegetable oil
⅓ cup grapefruit juice
¼ cup finely chopped parsley
1 garlic clove, crushed
1½ teaspoons dried leaf chervil, crumbled
½ teaspoon pepper
½ cup plus 2 tablespoons packaged bread crumbs, divided
1½ cups grapefruit sections, cut into bite-size pieces
1 teaspoon paprika

If using sea scallops, cut into quarters, and if frozen, thaw scallops by rinsing in cold water. In medium bowl, combine vegetable oil, grapefruit juice, parsley, garlic, chervil and pepper. Mix well. Add scallops and refrigerate at least one hour. Drain scallops, reserving oil and juice mixture. Toss scallops with ½ cup crumbs. Add grapefruit sections and mix well. Spoon mixture into 4 scallop shells or individual ramekins. Mix remaining two tablespoons crumbs with paprika and sprinkle over each serving. Spoon one tablespoon reserved oil-juice mixture over each serving. Broil 6 inches from heat 10 to 12 minutes, until topping is golden brown. Serves 4. Good with chilled dry white wine.

Making orange marmalade

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

If you're interested in making orange marmalade — a thrifty pursuit many cooks find satisfying — this is the time of year when large navel oranges are plentiful and good to use in the preserves.

Part of the procedure involves removing the pulp from the shells after the orange juice has been squeezed from them; then this pulp is drained and the liquid pressed from it is added to the squeezed orange juice. Our Scottish expert advised doing this because this pressed-out liquid contains pectin — which makes for good "jellying."

ORANGE MARMALADE

3 pounds (about) navel oranges (about 5 large)
1 large lemon
2½ quarts (about) water
3½ cups sugar
1 cup light corn syrup

Rinse oranges and lemon; cut a thin slice from stem ends and discard. In a 5 or 6-quart non-corrosive saucepot, cover oranges and lemon with water — about 2½ quarts. Over medium heat bring to a boil; boil gently until tender — about 30 minutes; drain. Rinse fruit under cold water; cover with fresh cold water and cool about 15 minutes; drain.

Halve oranges and lemon crosswise. With a juicer, extract as much juice as possible; reserve both juice and shells. Using a tablespoon, remove pulp from shells, again reserving shells. Turn pulp into a strainer and extract remaining liquid by firmly pressing down with a spoon. Discard pulp; add liquid to reserved juice; add enough water to make 2½ cups.

With the steel blade of a food processor, or with a knife, finely chop the reserved shells in 2 batches (the large pieces should be about the size of rolled oats).

Into the 5-quart non-corrosive saucepot, turn the 2½ cups liquid and the chopped shells; bring to a boil; simmer 5 minutes. Add sugar and corn syrup and stir until dissolved; cool. Cover; let stand 8 hours or overnight.

Bring to a boil; stirring often, boil gently (skimming foam if necessary) until thick and light-amber colored (220 degrees on a candy or jelly thermometer) — about 25 minutes. Ladle into clean hot ½-pint jars leaving ¼-inch headspace. Wipe top edges with damp towel. Seal according to jar manufacturer's directions. Process in boiling water bath for 10 minutes. Cool jars on a wire rack or folded towel. Makes 5 to 6 one-half pint jars.

Pork in Chinese cooking

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Chinese cuisine has been on the Texas scene for more than a century. Railroad construction first brought the Chinese to Texas in 1870. This marked their entry into Texas culture and introduced various types of Chinese food.

Chinese-style food is exciting, but different in flavor and takes a minimum of time to prepare. "Stir-frying" is the most popular cooking technique. Slivered or diced vegetables and meat are cooked in hot oil over high heat and stirred constantly. Scarcity of fuel in China dictate this rapid cooking method over high heat.

A large heavy skillet or a wok — a round-bottomed, high sided metal pan — can be used to produce crip, crunchy vegetables and distinct flavors that typify this technique.

GUIDELINES FOR SELECTING PORK

Pork — fresh or in cured forms — has been a favorite in Chinese dishes. When selecting pork for all types of cookery, use appearance as your guide to quality. Choose fresh or cured pork that has a high proportion of lean to fat and bone. The flesh should be fine textured but firm, and color of the lean in fresh pork should range from grayish pink to red. Lean cured pork, on the other hand, should have a deep pink color.

In stir-frying pork, the meat will lose its pinkness and turn white when cooked. Never add more than one pound of pork or other meat at a time to the fry pan or wok for this method of cookery.

CHINESE SWEET-SOUR PORK

1 egg, beaten
1/2 c. flour, unsifted
1/2 t. salt
1 t. soy sauce
1/4 c. water
1 1/2 pounds pork shoulder, cut in 1/2-inch cubes
2 T. cornstarch
1/4 c. sugar
1/3 c. vinegar
3/4 c. water
1 T. soy sauce
1/2 c. green pepper, cut in squares
13-ounce can pineapple chunks
1/2 c. sweet mixed pickles, drained
Oil as needed for deep fat fryer

Heat oil to 375 degrees in deep fat fryer or heavy saucepan. Mix egg, flour, salt, 1 t. soy sauce and 1/4 c. water. Coat pork pieces with egg mixture. Fry in hot fat until brown, about 5 minutes. Drain on absorbent paper.

Mix cornstarch and sugar in saucepan. Add vinegar, 3/4 c. water, 1 T. soy sauce, green pepper, pineapple and pickles. Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is thickened and clear. Stir in meat. Heat to serving temperature.

Makes six servings, one cup each. Calories per serving: about 430. Menu suggestion: serve with buttered rice and broccoli spears.

CHOW MEIN

3 c. pork, cooked and cut in julienne strips
1 1/2 c. celery, cut into thin 1-inch strips
1 c. onion, sliced
1 T. fat or oil
2 T. cornstarch
1 1/2 c. bean sprout liquid plus water
1/2 t. salt
few grains pepper
3 T. soy sauce
16-ounce can bean sprouts, drained
chow mein noodles

Cook pork with celery and onion in the fat in a large frypan until mixture begins to brown. Mix cornstarch with a little of the liquid. Add to meat mixture with remaining liquid, salt, pepper and soy sauce. Stir until well mixed. Cook until thickened, stirring as needed.

Makes six servings, 3/4 c. each. Calories per serving: 430. Menu suggestion: serve with parsley buttered potatoes and a spinach salad.

Note: If preferred, start with 1 1/2 pounds lean raw pork cut into julienne strips. Brown the meat in the fat. Add 1/2 c. water and simmer covered, until the meat is almost tender, about 45 minutes.

Add celery and onion and cook until the vegetables are tender. Add cornstarch-liquid mixture and continue as directed in recipe.

Cold tea is a good cleaning agent for varnished floors or woodwork of any kind.

Wine, wine lovers had excellent year in 1982

By NATHAN CHROMAN

The grape smiled favorably on wine lovers in 1982. A plethora of wine at reasonable prices helped to ease recession pains. Conversely, world wine producers suffered mightily from decreased consumer demand, high interest rates and spirited competition from within. Whether it was a happy year or not for all concerned, 1982 had moments that prompt my annual awards of Sweet Grapes representing cheers, Sour Grapes for jeers and Sediment for downright awful.

Sweet Grapes — To American consumers who are beginning to resist excessively priced new releases from boutique wineries. Time was when every new release was purchased and worshiped, but now consumers are tasting more discriminately and buying only the best at more affordable prices. A welcome sign of greater sophistication.

Sweet Grapes — To American wine makers who continue to wrestle with Pinot Noir, the elusive grape that refuses to be tied to high quality and a universal character. Strong strides were made in 1982 and should continue in 1983. Try Kalin Cellars 1979 and Domaine Laurier 1979. Also be certain to try Oregon's Knudsen-Erath (Yamhill Vineyard).

Sweet Grapes — To the many new American sparkling-wine producers, who in the next several years should provide an interesting array of styles and choices. Note a few of the newer labels such as Chateau St. Jean, S. Anderson, Piper-Sonoma, Scharffenberger Cellars, Ventana Vineyards and Adler Fels.

Sweet Grapes — To Angelo Papagni, who labors unceasingly in the heat of the San Joaquin Valley to produce a decent Chardonnay. Most growers would have quit long ago, but Papagni's confidence reigns supreme, so much so that his 1980 will include a vineyard designation for the Bonita Ranch.

Sediment — To the glut of so-called wine symposiums and conferences that are featured throughout the country at hundreds of dollars per attendee. Many repeat the same basic material as well as the serving of new California releases that never are pre-tasted or pre-selected by the host-promoters.

Sour Grapes — To the promoters who are selling — would you believe? — individual vines to consumers. Buying and owning a solitary vine is getting a bit cutesy. Money can be better spent by filling the cellar.

Sweet Grapes — To California's "cheap but good" producers such as Gallo, Colony, Giumarra, Cribari and Franzia who are filling a prime need during these hard money times. A jug wine never tasted better.

Sour Grapes — To the Italian wine producers who are deliberately attempting to imitate California wine styles in order to better appeal to Americans. Although some style emulation may be constructive, an Italian style and quality is preferred by wine buyers interested in Italian wines. Why buy a California wine produced in Italy?

Sweet Grapes — To the many American hosts throughout the country who are arranging spectacular vertical and horizontal tastings for credentialed French wine. Events of this type have too long been the exclusive sphere of the British and the French. In 1982 alone, there were 1961 Claret, Monrose, Cheval-Blanc and 1945 Bordeaux spectaculars.

Sediment — To classifiers of California wine, who compare it to Bordeaux's 1855 Grand Cru Classe. Much too early. Indeed, some rated wineries produce the same label annually with varying blends of grapes and still are searching for a style.

Sediment — To restaurateurs unwilling to allow clientele to bring their own wine at a reasonable corkage fee. This is a much overlooked profit area that would be a boon to restaurant wine consumption as well as dining enhancement.

Sour Grapes — To Julia Child for suggesting the mating of chocolate with sweet white Bordeaux, i.e. Sauternes. No wine, in my opinion, especially fine Sauternes, can make it with chocolate. Of course, there is always chocolate wine.

Cherry Molds make perfect valentines

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

To use as dessert for a St. Valentine's Day party, I hope you'll like my choice of sweet cherry heart-shape molds served with a rich custard sauce. It's a pretty offering. The molds themselves are light and refreshing, the sauce sweet and satisfying.

Individual heart-shape molds are available in many variety stores, housewares sections of department stores and cookware boutiques. They're usually inexpensive and I consider them worth having on hand. However, if you like, you can use molds of some other shape. Just make sure these have plain (not convoluted) bottoms, for the best effect.

CHERRY MOLDS

1 envelope unflavored gelatin
16 or 17-ounce can or jar light or dark sweet cherries (packed in heavy syrup)
1 cup rose wine
⅛ teaspoon almond extract
Custard Sauce, recipe follows

Sprinkle gelatin over ¼ cup cold water to soften — about 5 minutes. Pit cherries if necessary; drain, saving syrup, and reserve. Add enough water to the cherry syrup to make 1 cup; heat until boiling; pour over gelatin and stir until dissolved. Stir in rose, almond extract and reserved cherries. Chill until slightly thickened; stir to distribute cherries. Makes 2 and 2-3rd cups. Turn into eight 1-3rd cup heart-shape molds. Chill until set. At serving time, unmold. Serve with Custard Sauce. Makes 8 servings.

CUSTARD SAUCE

1 cup milk
3 large egg yolks
1-3rd cup sugar
Pinch of salt
1 teaspoon vanilla

In a small saucepan heat milk until bubbles appear around edge, keep hot. In a heavy 1½-quart saucepan, with a whisk, vigorously beat together egg yolks, sugar and salt. Whisking constantly, pour the hot milk in a steady stream into the yolk mixture. Cook over low heat (without boiling), stirring constantly, until mixture evenly coats a metal spoon. Place saucepan in cold water, stirring often, to cool custard quickly. Stir in vanilla. Turn into a bowl; cover surface with saran without pressing down; chill. Makes about 1¼ cups. This is a rich sauce so only 2 generous tablespoonfuls will be needed to serve with each of the 8 cherry molds.

Arts grants given

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Commission on the Arts has awarded more than $15,000 to the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale for financial assistance, and Midland College and Renwood Productions for touring arts programs.

The Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale will receive $5,250 for professional staff and administrative staff development and $750 for string quartet commission; Midland College will receive $5,650 for its presentation of Texas Opera Theater; and Renwood Productions will receive $3,550 for its presentation of the Texas Little Symphony.

The commission has approved $929,874 in awards for fall financial assistance, 1982-83 touring arts programs and artists-in-education residencies.

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Two persons sent to prison from the West Texas area have been released on parole by the governor upon the recommendation of the Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Joel Adams, convicted in Howard County July 9, 1982, of theft over $200, was paroled to Howard County after serving and earning one year of a three-year sentence.

Joe Bob Taylor, convicted in Ector County July 30, 1982, of driving while intoxicated, was paroled to Ector County after serving and earning 11 months of a two-year sentence.

Bible maker won't fight board ban

WARRENSBURG, Ill. (AP) — Gideons International says it will not fight a school board ruling banning distribution of Bibles to local students, who have received the Gideons since the mid-1940s.

Last fall the state Board of Education issued a legal opinion that the practice was unconstitutional, but the Warrensburg school board decided to continue allowing the distribution unless challenged.

Then Dr. Arthur Baum and his wife Susan, who are Jewish, objected and the board voted 4-3 last month to ban distribution.

Gideons want to maintain "a very low profile" in the controversy, said a spokesman for the organization, Art Figurski.

Oregon will circumvent new law

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — To preserve teen-agers' confidentiality, Oregon's Health Division said it will forgo federal funds and use state money to provide birth control services to girls under 18.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services recently announced regulations requiring parents to be notified if minor children receive certain federally financed family planning services.

Separating state from federal money will be "an accountant's nightmare," Health Division Administrator Kristine Gebbie said, but she said confidentiality is more important.

Thinness girl's desire

From Wire Reports

The girl, Maria Lindstroem, is now down to 73 pounds, the result of three years of being afflicted by anorexia nervosa, a psychological illness in which losing weight becomes an obsession.

In their desperation, her parents, Boerje and Christina Lindstroem, took out an advertisement in the daily newspaper Svenska Dagladet asking the public for help in changing Maria's determination to lose more weight, even if it means her death.

So far, the couple has received 85 letters and 130 calls, often from other parents in a similar crisis and who, plagued by feelings of guilt, also do not know how to help.

Maria, who, when asked by a newspaper reporter about the interest her case has aroused, said it was "really nice that people are worried about me. People aren't so apathetic toward each other as it seems."

But she rejects various doctors' advice on how to start regaining weight.

"I don't dare follow such advice," she said. "I am afraid that I shall regain my appetite. It may sound strange, but I won't recover my health. I know that I'll die."

To her, this is a natural idea, and she does not want to spend her remaining time in the hospital. "It is a wonderful feeling to get down to 30 kilograms (66 pounds). It is like a drug, it is intoxicating," she said.

But Maria admits that others might have a difficult time understanding her yearning for death, and then adds, "I would not wish this hell on my worst enemy."

Swedish doctors say that young women between the ages of 13 and 21 are most susceptible, with nearly 1 percent of them suffering from anorexia nervosa to varying degrees.

Sten Theander, a psychiatrist at the Lund University Psychiatric Clinic, said, "It is a fact that many women wish to lose weight, but a mystery as to when losing weight becomes anorexia nervosa. It is an illness we know very little about."

Home sought for pig

TEL AVIV, (AP) — Can a wayward pig overcome the Jewish prejudice against all things nonkosher and find happiness on a kibbutz?

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals hopes so. It is looking for a communal farm that will give the lost, anonymous pig a home in its children's animal corner.

The society took in the frightened animal after residents of the city of Holon'n, near Tel Aviv, found it hunting around for a meal by a trash can.

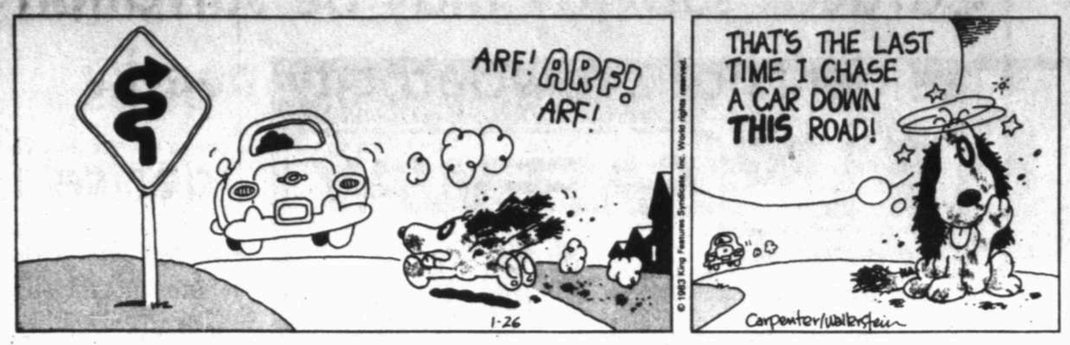

Excited Israelis, who rarely get to see pigs, chased it with lassos and blankets. Finally, two SPCA workers tied it up and led it away.

An SPCA spokeswoman refused to give details about the pig, saying she was afraid it would be claimed by a butcher and slaughtered. She said it would be offered to a kibbutz if it was not collected by its rightful owner in 10 days.

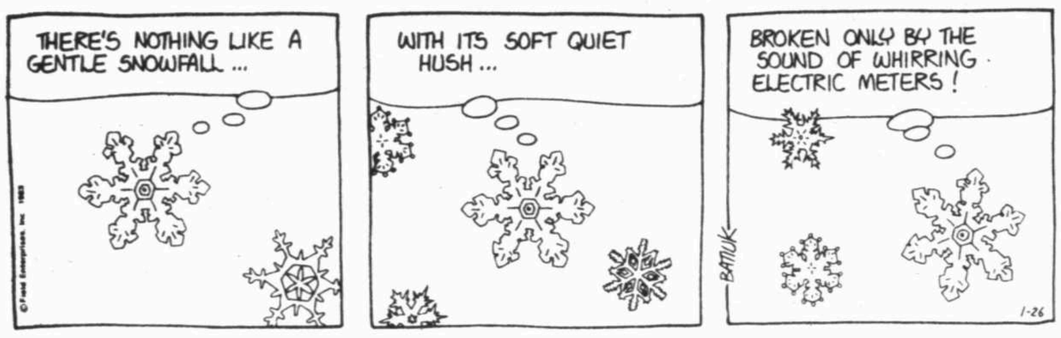

Religious Jews revile pork as unclean and nonkosher. But while many cities outlaw its sale, it is widely sold in Israel under the euphemistic title of "white steak."

Opening lead: Four of ♠.

At times, high cards can create a false picture. Had declarer been dealt a low club instead of the queen, he probably would have made his contract.

The auction was routine. Both North and South had minimum holdings for their first actions, so neither was inclined to move beyond game.

West led his fourth-best club. Even if hearts were divided 3-0, declarer was delighted with his contract. He saw that he would still succeed if West held king of clubs or if East held one of the two missing spade honors – a 76 percent chance.

So declarer finessed the jack of clubs at trick one. East won and shifted to a spade. Declarer finessed. West won the queen and exited with a club. Declarer tried two rounds of trumps, ending in dummy, and then took his last shot at the contract – he repeated the spade finesse. When this also failed, a line of play that had considerably better than a 90 percent chance had foundered.

Had declarer not been dealt the queen of clubs, he might have noticed that he had a sure-fire line. Instead of taking three finesses, he should not have taken any!

Declarer should go up with the ace of clubs at trick one, then cash the top hearts. When he discovers he has a trump loser, declarer should cash the king-ace of diamonds and ruff a diamond in hand. Then he eliminates the minor suits by exiting with a club.

East can win the club and cash his high trump, but his only safe exit is a spade. Now declarer takes the finesse. West wins, but he is end played. A spade return would be into declarer's ace-jack tenace; any other return would allow declarer to sluff his spade loser while ruffing in dummy.

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, January 27, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Premier ballet dancer Mikhail Baryshnikov, tennis star Brian Gottfried, publisher William Randolph Hearst Jr. and Baltimore Orioles outfielder John Lowenstein share your birthday. Also born on this date: the father of the atomic submarine, Ret. Admiral Hyman Rickover. Those celebrating birthdays today are cheerful, resourceful and sometimes brash. Although you have recently strayed from your goals, you will soon be back on track. Make sure your left hand knows what your right one is doing. It would be a mistake to give higher-ups too little information. Everything is coming up roses in romance.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Demonstrate your ability and you will have no difficulty obtaining the new responsibilities you want. A romantic triangle can bring nothing but heartache. Get your priorities in better order.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep your word or risk losing important backing. You take the first step towards an important career goal. A former love reappears. Flexibility pays off when trying to solve a cash crisis.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The best job for you right now is one that lets you operate behind the scenes. Although technical advances intimidate you, you know that they are your future. Take a special course.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You deserve the credit for something another claims he did. Play a waiting game. It could be love at first sight when someone unexpectedly shows up for lunch.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may be going too fast for your own good. Slow down! A dream could be prophetic. Romance will fizzle unless you do something to keep the fires burning.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A couple finds that working together brings both larger profits and a better understanding. Family members may be interfering in your personal life. Tell them to back off.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be cautious in everything you do today. A visitor brings glorious news from your loved ones. Postpone travel. Business improves and profits begin to pick up. Turn your attention to romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Use your peacemaking skills in both career and a friendship. Your plans begin to crystallize. Share the limelight with mate or partner. You need to be cautious about making commitments.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Successful travel brings you fresh business. Your creativity will be richly rewarded. A new love thrills you but could also tax your pocketbook. Keep spending within reasonable limits.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Focus on financial problems early in the day. Seek experts' advice on getting rid of outdated methods. Singers, writers and musicians get special breaks. Look into an unusual opportunity.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Mate or partner could throw a monkey wrench into your business plans. Try to keep your personal and professional lives strictly separate. Secret agreements could work against you. Be upfront in romance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Romance holds few surprises. Exercise caution when handling money. An emotional response could prove more powerful than logic. Postpone making a financial decision. A self-improvement project will boost your ego.

Caracas subway may be salvation residents of crowded city need

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Residents of this overmotorized metropolis who use the city's chronic traffic congestion as an excuse for arriving late for work or appointments will have to place the blame elsewhere.

And people who complain that they seem to spend half their lives trapped in autos or buses that crawl from one end of the city to the other will be doing less inhaling of gasoline fumes and fuming less at surrounding drivers.

Caracas has been in need of a "great solution" for at least 30 years, since urban planners first warned that the city, which resembles a long, narrow parking lot during rush hour, was in danger of choking on its own engine exhaust.

With the new subway, being built with help from two French firms, planners hope to take some 100,000 vehicles off many of the most congested streets in the world, giving 4 million Caracas inhabitants a lot more breathing room.

"Maybe soon we will have a life in this city that is a little more human," said Antonio Padron, manager of the commercial promotion of Caracas Metro in an interview.

"The people in the western part of the city will be able to spend more time enjoying the parks and shopping malls in the east. Life will change for many people."

Venezuela's vast oil wealth - 2 million barrels a day average in 1982 - financed the hundreds of modern buildings which have sprung up like mushrooms in recent decades throughout the narrow valley that contains Caracas.

In the building frenzy, skyscrapers were often slapped down as capriciously as the contents of a child's toybox, turning the city's traffic system into a huge, snarled jigsaw puzzle.

At the same time, immigrants from the countryside and neighboring countries invaded Caracas, covering the hills in the southern and western parts of the city with their red-brick shacks and increasing the population tenfold within 40 years.

The oil money helped fund a fine, if somewhat contorted, system of roads and highways at the same time the buildings were springing up, but the city's 700,000 cars caused an overload on the transportation system. During rush hour, traffic frequently creeps along at 100 yards an hour — a speed at which even a turtle's pace seems enviable.

The initial part of the Caracas Metro is expected to carry 600,000 passengers a day on an eight-mile, 14-station route.

The 45 mph speed of the subway, which will run its entire route in 16 minutes, will seem incredible to people who are used to traveling the same distance in over an hour, Padron predicts.

Red tide, asthma connection possible

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — The fish-killing red tide organism also may cause asthma attacks in people, researchers say.

Scientists from the University of South Florida believe that the red tide toxin, which becomes airborne when picked up in wind-blown spray, induces attacks in asthmatics by causing the windpipe to contract.

The little-understood toxin blooms sporadically in the tepid waters along Florida's Gulf Coast, turning the water a murky reddish color and depleting oxygen which supports fish life.

Scientists have known for years that it can cause respiratory problems, especially for people living near the beach. Some complain of eye and nose irritation, wheezing, coughing and shortness of breath.

For the past three years, a possible link between red tide and asthmatic patients has been under study by four scientists at the university and its College of Medicine: Dr. Richard Lockey, director of immunology and allergy; researchers Joseph Krzanowski and Sadahiro Asai and chemist Dean F. Martin.

Oklahoma governor doesn't want dog racing

A western Oklahoma House member's attempt to add greyhound racing to county questions seeking to legalize pari-mutuel horse racing drew the first veto threat of the session from the governop.

It's not really a threat, said Nigh in promising to veto any bill deviating from the state question passed by voters last year. It's just a statement of how the vote will go when the roll is called on the second floor of the Capitol.

But Nigh claims the legislators, by tampering with the bill, are seeking to overpower the votes of Oklahomans who approved legalized betting on horse races.

The dog racing issue lacked the trappings of a serious issue. One member of the House Rules Committee barked when his name was called to vote on the issue. His "arf" was recorded as an "aye."

The committee's action uncovered a vein a humor at tha Capitol — if dogs, why not pari-mutuel racing jumping frogs, hamsters, cockroaches at Tahlequah's Cucaracha Downs, even politicians in election years?

Lurking behind the grins is a moral on the limits of referendums and balance among the branches of government.

The pari-mutuel referendum specified horse racing. The people voted on horse racing. But their vote was for a statute, not a constitutional amendment.

The Oklahoma Constitution cannot be changed without a popular vote. A statute, once it begins its run through the tortuous legislative maze, is fair game for any lawmaker who can drum up the votes to alter it.

It may be unethical, as Nigh implies, to change the bill from the question passed by the people. It is entirely legal, however.

Nigh's threatened veto may be an usurpation, as one lawmaker claimed. It, too, is entirely legal.

Children's abnormalities lead mom on search for hereditary

That question has injected a note of urgency into a search for her natural mother, who was raised in Oklahoma and probably was about 17 when Mrs. Doll was born July 6, 1952.

Of seven pregnancies, one child was born retarded, one was born hyperactive, one died 11 days after birth and another suffers convulsions and mysterious blackouts.

There were two miscarraiges.

Only Terry Jr., the fifth child, appears completely healthy.

"I sat down one day after Christopher died and started putting it all together," Mrs. Doll said Friday.

Was something hereditary responsible?

Armed with a doctor's statement asking for access to her birth records for medical reasons, Mrs. Doll was successful in obtaining her birth and adoption records.

For personal reasons she prefers not to publicly reveal her mother's full name, saying only that it was Marie H. and she was born Aug. 23, 1935.

Cuts in defense spending: More shadow than substance?

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's prospective $8 billion cut in defense spending for fiscal 1984 appears to be more shadow than substance.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, who reluctantly offered to reduce by 3 percent his planned request from $247 billion to $239 billion as a contribution to the war on federal deficits, says that about half the cut would be realized from lower inflation than had been originally estimated and by falling fuel prices.

So, $4 billion or more of the total isn't really a cut — not in programs, at least — because the Pentagon will still be able to obtain its planned purchases. It just won't have to spend as much for them.

Weinberger noted that the rest of the reduction would come from the military construction, training, and personnel accounts.

If the administration were to opt for a military-civil service pay freeze, as is reportedly being considered, it would account for by far the largest part of the remaining $4 billion in prospective cuts.

(Originally, the White House had planned on a 7.6 percent government-wide pay hike. In addition to a possible freeze, there is speculation of a 4 percent ceiling or cap on any increase).

Talk of a freeze has disturbed military leaders. They fear that the gains of the past two years in retention of skilled personnel and in the recruitment of increasingly well-qualified young men and women would soon be eroded if the erratic and penny-pinching policies of the past were to return.

But Weinberger and company may be playing a clever game. They know that Congress would not have the gall to approve a freeze — or even a raise that failed to match cost-of-living increases — after what the members arranged for themselves in the last session.

To recall: They voted a $9,138 a year pay raise to $69,800 for representatives and agreed to permit senators, whose salaries would remain at $60,662.50, to earn as much as they could in outside income, including legal fees and honoraria for speeches and newspaper and magazine articles written or signed by them.

Either way, the Reagan administration can say it has offered to cut the Pentagon budget in a way least harmful to national security, but that Congress is bent upon making its own ill-advised reductions in strategic and tactical programs vital to America's future defense.

There is little doubt that the new Congress is gearing up for an assault on military spending. All indications are that, barring some stupid and/or dangerous move by the Soviet Union in the meantime, the cut will be considerably more than $8 billion. And it won't be in credit for declining inflation rates or out of the pockets of service personnel.

Family seeks deer killer

HAGERSTOWN, Md. (AP) — A local family is offering a $100 reward for the arrest of those responsible for the death of Tammy, their pet deer.

Patsy Burkett said she and her husband, Henry, hope the capture of whoever killed and butchered the deer over the weekend will prevent the death of another innocent animal.

Negotiators to have flexibility

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Ambassador Edward L. Rowny, America's chief strategic nuclear arms (START) negotiator, recently said that both he and Paul Nitze, chief of the talks to limit medium-range nuclear weapons, will go back to Geneva on Thursday with sufficient flexibility to smoke out Russia's true positions.

"In Geneva, we'll put it to them — 'what is your real proposition ?' " Rowny said in an interview. It was the first time since the forced resignation of arms control director Eugene W. Rostow that either top negotiator has said he will have the power to be more flexible.

Rostow was in effect fired because he authorized, without seeking prior approval of either President Reagan or Secretary of State Shultz, a series of informal contacts with Soviet negotiators in Geneva that led to a draft agreement to limit medium-range missiles in Europe.

The White House said that the accord was inadequate and in any event was immediately rejected when the Soviet negotiator, Yuli A. Kvitsinsky, presented it to the Soviet Government.

The Kremlin has since launched a "peace offensive" to undermine NATO plans to deploy a new generation of U.S. missiles in Europe.

Rowny said that the Russians were having a field day misleading the West into believing they had made genuinely new, far-reaching proposals. He suggested that the Soviet Union has gotten away with this by cleverly mixing apples and oranges in both the long-range strategic and medium-range nuclear talks.

"What is genuine is that they are talking about reductions," Rowny said. "What is unknown is whether or not some of these things will really be in our interest." He explained that Russia has accepted the target of 1,800 strategic delivery systems and promised a "full 25-per cent" reduction.

"They have also said they would agree to an equal number of warheads. But they haven't said what that number is," the chief negotiator explained. "Therefore, worst-casing it, they could have as many warheads, as much throwweight (payload) or more, than they had in SALT II."

Rowny said this could be accomplished by simply putting 600 of their current arsenal of 2,400 nuclear systems in mothballs and converting 30 leftover SS13s, which carry only a single warhead, to more modern six-warhead systems. That would be "perfectly legitimate under the SALT II accords," he said.

"In other words, until you know what the fine print is, they could reduce by a quarter and still increase their total power," he added. "Now a similar thing happens" in the medium-range negotiations, Rowny explained. It's no good for the Russians simply to reduce to 162 the number of SS-20 missiles.

"The question that immediately comes up is what are you going to do with the others," Rowny went on. 'Some people say oh, they are going to dismantle and destroy them. But make no mistake about it," he said.

"The day after they made that proposal their official spokesman Leontin Zamyatin said: 'Look, we're not going to dismantle or destroy the remainder. We're simply going to move them east of the Urals. Now (a) you can hit from east of the Urals into Europe so you haven't gotten a damn thing.

"And (b) you could move them back (into Europe)."

Since the December proposal, Andropov has "thrown out some more bait and said, 'well, we would actually reduce some', but he hasn't said how many. We don't know how many or where," Rowny said. Besides, he contended, the Russians have confused things deliberately.

"It's not accidental that they talk systems on their side and warheads on our side. And we fall for it," the chief negotiator explained. "If you talk about (Soviet) SS20s, you should talk about 1000 or so warheads because they've got at least 340 SS-20s each with three warheads."

In addition, the Soviets have about 250 older SS-4 and SS-5 missiles or a total of about 1,250 warheads targeted against Western Europe and China. The U.S. and its NATO allies, if they complete the scheduled deployment of a new generation of Pershing II and cruise missiles, will have 572 warheads.

Similarly, if you count systems or launchers (that is, the missiles themselves), Rowny explained, NATO will have 108 new Pershing launchers and 116 ground-launched cruise missiles or a total of 224. The Russians already have 340 SS-20s plus the older 250 missiles or a total of 590 launchers.

So no wonder they are mixing apples and oranges in counting their launchers (590) against our warheads, he said.

Reagan contends press corps, not administration, in disarray

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Disarray is in the eyes of the beholders, and President Reagan doesn't like what they say they see.

The proof, or disproof, of his insistence that the administration is proceeding in a planned and ordered fashion will be in the product.

An Analysis

He contends the press corps is in disarray, misguided by anonymous and inaccurate sources, and that the White House is in order.

The first evidence points in his direction. It came with the bipartisan agreement reached by his Social Security reform commission on future financing of the troubled pension system.

It is a compromise in which the White House accepted tax increases while the Democrats agreed to long-term benefit curbs. Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. both endorsed the plan, which would settle an issue that has troubled Reagan for years — and a financial crisis confronting Congress with the need to act swiftly.

That gives both sides a way out, and it could be a model for compromise and progress on the tangled problem of the federal budget to be submitted to Congress Jan. 30. That already has been delayed a week. Talk of discord and indecision in budget preparations led to reports of trouble in Reagan's shop. They led also to the president's crackdown on leaks of information from his official family.

White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III said the Social Security settlement, which now goes to Congress, certainly didn't fit the notion of disarray in presidential leadership. Sen. Pete V. Domenici of New Mexico, the budget committee chairman, said the compromise averted the possibility of "a kind of policy paralysis."

At the same time, Reagan has shown a willingness to bend on the budget, while insisting that he has not and will not sacrifice principle. He has agreed to recommend tax increases later in the decade, to take effect if budget deficits keep climbing. He is willing to trim military spending, a step he had earlier resisted despite constant demands from Congress.

A year ago, Congress balked at the budget he submitted, because of a deficit only about half the $200 billion-plus that now is in prospect. It took half a year to sort that into a compromise budget. A repeat performance would be politically intolerable for an administration heading toward a presidential campaign year, and already facing the assertions of internal discord that so angered the president.

Reagan said he called his last news conference to counter those suggestions. "That is why I came in," he said, "to point out to you accurately where the disarray lies. It is in these stories that seem to be going around, because they are not based on fact."

Then came the Social Security compromise, fashioned by a long-stalled commission late Saturday.

Environ fiberglass retreat

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — For burned-out businessmen or harried housewives, a world of gentle lights, massage, scented air and motivational tapes is only a step away — for a $9,000 price tag.

It's the Environ Personal Retreat, a computerized fiberglass cocoon that resembles a high-tech portable potty. Its developer hopes to see the oval devices in executive suites, airports and shopping malls, helping Americans deal with the stresses of life.

The retreat "is a calm and nurturing environment...designed to enhance your own learning and retentive potentials while fine-tuning your personal resources," according to the manufacturer, 3-year-old Environ Inc. of El Toro, Calif.

When the door glides shut, the Environ user settles into an orthopedically designed lounge chair with lumbar massage, adjustable footrest and digital pulse monitor. Filtered, ionized air with a pleasant scent is piped in as the subject selects one of 36 self-improvement tapes such as "Relax and Affirm," "You and Food: New Scenarios" and "Self-Motivation for Winners."

The pod also features colored lights keyed to the tape being used. For example, a stress-reduction program is accompanyed by soothing blue and green hues, while "Positive Expectancy to Win" bathes the listener in stimulating shades of orange and red.

"The motivational tapes aren't designed to relax. They're designed to help someone close that sale or meet that adversary in a confrontational situation," Charles McHenry, executive vice president of Environ, said Wednesday.

McHenry said stress reduction is the main selling point for the retreats, which were invented by Environ's president, Frank Italiane.

"We hope that our biggest market is going to be large corporations," McHenry said. "American industry loses billions of dollars every year to burnout, from the rank and file all the way up to the executive suite, people taking 'mental health' days and so on. And that's crippling our ability to compete."

Environ, which attracted a steady stream of visitors during a Pasadena computer show this week, has sold 10 pods so far. Among the buyers are health clinics and beauty salons.

"The salons put it next to the tanning booths and use a series of programs dubbed 'Inner Beauty Conditioning' that deal with self-image, personal affirmation, that kind of thing," McHenry said.

Although Environ thinks its biggest market is industry, McHenry also said the retreats could be set up for individual use at $2 or $3 per 20-minute session, adding they may be the coming thing in electronic amusements.

'New Lebanon' still embroiled in old internecine conflicts

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BEIRUT, Lebanon — At the international airport here, there is a poster showing a confident Lebanese soldier breaking chains of bondage wound around him while he steps with both feet on a long snake writhing on the ground. At the bottom are the words, "The Dawn of Salvation."

A departing visitor asked a Lebanese airport employee what the snake represente. "All the evil forces alive and working against us in this country," he replied. "But you'll notice," he added with a smile, "the soldier's foot is still not on the head of the snake."

Four months after President Amin Gemayel took office in a wave of short-lived optimism stirred by the reunification of Christian East and Moslem West Beirut, the forces of evil indeed still seem very much alive in this hapless land of apparently eternal conflict.

Fighting between Christian and Druze militiamen in the mountainous Chouf region has now reached the outskirts of the capital, with both sides using increasingly heavy artillery. Pro- and anti-Syrian Moslem factions are at war in the northern port of Tripoli. Iranian fundamentalists have all but taken over in Baalbek in the east, and the Israelis are busy setting up a bewildering array of militias across the south.

THE FAMILIAR pattern in which political and religious chieftains gather to discuss local clashes, issue orders for a cease-fire and then go home to watch it break down the next day has reemerged as the norm. Despite innumerable palavers among warring factions, no underlying political accord has been struck in either the Chouf or Tripoli.

Even the Israelis, with their formidable armor and determined mediating skills, have proven unable to halt what one Beirut editor called "the ugly turn" in the Chouf toward raw sectarian strife.

Where a few months ago there was heady talk of "the new Lebanon" and "the second republic," Lebanese today debate instead the likelihood of an Israeli-Syrian "condominium" over the country or of separate Druze and Christian "ministates," making puns about "the new Lebanons."

They joke, too, about their new president and his dogged efforts to put together a strong central government and army, some noting the irony that a Christian rules only over Moslem West Beirut. The powerful Christian militia, the Lebanese Forces, dominates the eastern half of the city, and Gemayels's tiny realm is dubbed "the duchy of Hamra Street" after its main downtown boulevard.

"AMIN IS A good president because he is a weak president," one Christian editor of a major local newspaper remarked wryly. "Who really wants a strong government in Lebanon?"

But this dark humor barely conceals the real fears lurking in the minds of many Lebanese that their country, far from being on the verge of emergence as a "new Lebanon," is again on the slippery slope heading toward renewed chaos and civil war.

The past nightmares of Lebanese history — the Druze massacre of Christians in 1960 and 1977, the division of the country's mountainous Chouf heartland into separate Christian and Druze townships in the mid-19th century and the 1975-76 civil war — have all come back to haunt the national psyche again.

As usual, the Lebanese blame outsiders for all their new woes, even as they look to them once again for salvation from their own sectarian strife. Before, it was all the fault of the Palestinians. Now they are gone, so the Israelis, Syrians or Americans are taking the blame — with some justification in each case.

By all accounts, one of the main underlying causes of the worsening situation is the U.S. failure to get a quick withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian troops from the country. This has made it impossible for Gemayel to extend central government rule beyond the capital's city limits and has left the rest of the country at the mercy of the outside powers.

"THIS IS A deteriorating situation," a visiting U.S. diplomat remarked. "We realize that as long as there is a failure to get negotiations going, Gemayel is stymied on the domestic front. (And) there is a blood feud in this country that will take decades to work out."

Moslem West Beirut, disarmed and deceptively peaceful, is increasingly jittery and fearful. There has been a spate of recent reports about the Lebanese Forces sending in armed men, kidnaping people, stockpiling arms and opening underground cells.

The belief is that the Phalangist Party, which dominates the Lebanese Forces, is getting ready to push back into areas inside West Beirut where it once held sway before Moslem militias drove them out in the 1975-76 civil war.

In early December the Phalangists tried to reopen an office in Museitbeh, near the headquarters of Druze leader Walid Jumblatt's Socialist Progressive Party, the scene of several recent shooting incidents.

"The Moslems in Beirut are very frightened and concerned. They have been disarmed while the Lebanese Forces are still intact and acquiring additional strength," said a Moslem editor who asked that his name not be mentioned. "They feel the Lebanese Forces are already getting into West Beirut."

"I THINK WE are going to have another civil war," he added grimly.

The reaction among the Moslems is to get ready for the next round. Leftist groups belonging to the old National Movement led by Jumblatt are now reviving and busy smuggling their own arms and men into the city.

They also are re-establishing the underground infrastructures that they had before the Israelis and then the Lebanese army combed the streets and homes of West Beirut last September.

A sign of the times, in the Moslem view at least, came on Dec. 27 when Moslems poured into the streets of West Beirut on the pretext of celebrating the prophet Mohammed's birthday. Banners drapped across the streets said, "Moslems are not just a community. They are the spirit of Lebanon." Cardboard imitations of the Kaaba, the Moslem holy of holies in Mecca, were hung from lampposts.

"This never happened except before the troubles started in 1958," remarked the Moslem editor, referring to an earlier time of difficulties during which U.S. Marines were last sent to Lebanon.

MOSLEM FEARS for the future really began last September when the army, in its first show of muscle-flexing and authority after eight years, moved into West Beirut and carried out a house-to-house search for arms and illegal aliens. Moslem leaders did not protest until it became clear that the army had no intention of treating Christian East Beirut to the same intensive search or of disarming the Lebanese Forces.

Since then, the army's security branch, the Deuxieme Bureau, steadily has worked to uproot remaining underground cells of the Palestine Liberation Organization and leftist Moslem militia groups, combing the Palestinian refugee camps for wanted persons whose names often are provided by the Israeli or the Lebanese Forces' intelligence services.

This has badly shaken the Moslems' confidence in the supposed neutrality of the national army, whose new commander, Ibrahim Tannous, was a close friend of the slain Lebanese Forces leader and younger brother of the president, Bashir Gemayel.

FADI FREM, the new Lebanese Forces commander, set forth the rightist Christian view of the "new Lebanon" at celebrations Nov. 28 marking the 46th anniversary of the Phalangist Party's foundation.

"Let us not return to the no-win, no-lose formula," he said. "This time there is a victor and a vanquished. The victor is the Lebanese way of thinking, and the vanquished are imported ideas."

While political parties upholding "the Lebanese idea" are the winners, he declared, "we can consider vanquished each party that adhered to, or supported, or gave local cover to imported ideas."

It is this view of Lebanese politics that has Moslems convinced that the Lebanese Forces intends to impose its will by force of arms and must be resisted in a similar fashion if the "Moslem spirit" is to breathe at all in the new Christian-dominated Lebanon.

'Copycat' suicides studied

Copley News Service

Suicide rates in the United States go up "significantly" when a suicide is reported on network television newscasts, according to a study by a sociologist.

"For a very brief period of time," David P. Phillips said, "U.S. suicides increase significantly just after the appearance of a non-fictional suicide story carried by the network evening news."

Phillips was discussing the findings of a study that correlated day-by-day suicide rates with seven TV suicide reports aired from 1972 to 1976. He conducted the study jointly with Kenneth A. Bollen, then of the General Motors Research Laboratories (now of Dartmouth University). It was published in the current issue of the American Sociological Review.

His newest study of network reports showed that "the increase was about 28 suicides per story nationwide in the week following," he said, or about 7 percent. Suicide figures following the reports, provided by the National Center For Health Statistics, were compared with the those of the weeks immediately previous in a research method called "time series regression analysis."

Among those suicides reported were those of British actor George Sanders in 1972, and the death of Christine Chubbuck, a Florida television talk show hostess who killed herself on the air.

Phillips, an associate professor of sociology, has conducted several other studies of "imitative suicide." Previous research has found that suspicious fatal single-car crashes also increase after major news stories on suicides, and that suicides gain in number after fictional characters in television soap operas kill themselves.

"As with (the suspicious single-car) auto accidents, there are two separate peaks of deaths," Phillips explained. "In the suicides, the first peak comes on the day of the story and the day after. And the second peak comes six and seven days after the story. And it's not known why this is the case."

His paper, however, speculates that "the early responders (suicide victims) in the first peak may be more impulsive and may have already contemplated suicide, even before the example of the publicized suicide occurred...In contrast, late responders may make a less impulsive, more considered response to the publicized suicide. These persons may not have contemplated suicide prior to the example of the publicized suicide.

"Taken together," Phillips' newest paper says of his research, "all of these findings support the hypothesis that publicized suicides trigger imitative behavior."

Chris Lemmon following gladly in dad's footsteps

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Motorists on Pico Boulevard may have been startled the other day by a young, familiar-looking driver who was waving his arms and shouting with delight.

"I couldn't help it," said Chris Lemmon. "I had just found out that I'm going to do 'Barefoot in the Park' with Marion Ross at the La Habra dinner theater. Jerry Paris of 'Happy Days' is going to direct. I'm so excited! And when I get excited, I'm liable to go a little crazy."

It's easy to see where he gets it. Not only does he have the excitability and rapid-fire conversational style of his father, Jack Lemmon, but he's also a slightly taller, more athletic replica of his old man.

He was the only child of the marriage of Jack Lemmon and Cynthia Stone. After his parents' divorce, he attended school in Sedona, Ariz. Lemmon later graduated from the California Institute of the Arts in Valencia, Calif., with a Bachelor of Fine Arts in classical piano.

"For a time I had a job selling light bulbs over the telephone — $4.50 a bulb with a five-year guarantee," Lemmon recalled. "I was the worst salesman the company ever had — too honest, I'm afraid. I made $37 in three weeks."

Lemmon studied acting with David Alexander, once his father's teacher, and comedian Harvey Lembeck. He also did some little-theater work.

"I usually say that my father has never intervened in my career; that's not true," says the 28-year-old Lemmon. "I got my Screen Actors Guild card by working on 'Airport 77.' The fact that my father was the star of the picture may have had something to do with my getting the job."

Other, mostly forgettable, movies followed: "The Happy Hooker Goes to Hollywood," "Snap," "C.O.D.," "Just Before Dawn." He also made TV movies and a series, "Brothers and Sisters" — one of the "Animal House" clones.

"That was bad for my career," Lemmon said. "When you're a lead in a series that fails, it takes time to recover."

Lemmon has bounced back with "Fantasy," NBC's ambitious try to capture the lucrative afternoon TV audience. The Columbia Pictures production seems to be a combination of "Queen for a Day" and "This Is Your Life," with a dash of "Fantasy Island." Peter Marshall and Leslie Uggams head the show, with Meredith MacRae and Lemmon touring the country to surprise citizens who deserve recognition.

" 'Fantasy' was a gift," Lemmon says. "The biggest reward for me is to be able to touch the lives of people who have done worthy things. Not only to touch them, but to give them things they deserve."

He sees himself not merely as a latter-day Jack Bailey or Ralph Edwards.

"It's also the best possible exercise for an actor," he said. "I have to listen, to react and to steer the people where they should go. Listening is the most important thing an actor can do."

Animal feeding not just ducky

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Charles H. Davis said he was just being kind to his web-footed friends. His neighbors said he was creating a nuisance. And the judge said six months probation.

"I got railroaded," Davis said. "If you were hungry and asked me for something to eat, I'd give you something."

Each morning for the past year, Davis would wait for the freeloaders with kernels of corn and bread he bought at three loaves for $1.

"The ducks come here. They're harmless," he says.

But neighbors didn't agree. They complained that the hungry birds roosted in flower pots, pulled out plant bulbs and made themselves at home in mud puddles created for them by Davis.

Williams Buckler, Davis' next-door neighbor, said his yard-man threatened to quit because of duck droppings.

"We didn't have this problem until he moved here," said Buckler, who testified at a hearing last week. "It's all this man's fault for feeding the birds. There used to be two or three ducks around here. Now, since he's moved in, we have about 100 of them."

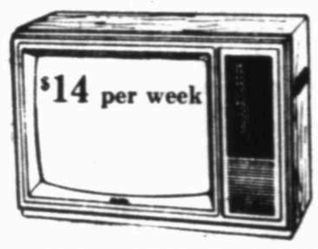

Davis maintained the ducks were already visiting backyards when he moved here about a year ago.

MISD enrollment projections hit close to the mark

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

If any members of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees were afraid student enrollment projections may have been a tad too optimistic, their fears were eliminated during a regular meeting Tuesday afternoon.

Athough the housing market may indicate otherwise, the student population is still going through adolescence and enrollment projections made for the 1982-83 school year hit close to the actual growing enrollment.

In related action, trustees heard reports on enrollment projections for next year and progress of a flooded Quanah Parker Elementary School. The new elementary school constructed at the "Bluebird site" was given a name and a procedure for selecting staff for all three new elementary schools, scheduled to open for classes next fall, was approved.

Undoubtedly, misgivings about the need for new elementary schools have popped up in several minds, but taxpayers and board members were assured the schools will be filled by fall 1983.

—Total district, 17,395, 17,432; total elementary, 9,758, 10,029; total secondary, 7,364, 7,094; and special education, 273, 309.

Actual enrollment in primary grades, kindergarten through third, was 281 students above the projected increase, according to Baressi, who added that the elementary enrollment was remaining constant and increased by only 660 students from January 1982.

Growth at the high school level, however, was not as high as expected, with only 45 more students enrolling between January 1982 and January 1983, he noted.

"We were 281 over what we'd projected at the primary level and 185 under projections for high school," he said.

Projections for 1983-84, however, indicate the district will grow because of a "roll-up" factor rather than a "move-in" factor, trustees were told.

While an increase of 582 students, or 5.8 percent, is projected at the elementary level for the 1983-84 year, Baressi pointed out that because of the large number of students currently in kindergarten through grade six, the actual growth of new students is projected to be 306, or an increase of 2.97 percent.

Freshman level enrollments, projected to increase by 173 students, or 14.52 percent, indicate a move-in growth of 22 new students, or 1.64 percent.

TOTAL DISTRICT projections show a growth of 1,072 students and a percent growth of 6.14 percent; meanwhile, the actual move-in growth is expected to increase by 444 students, or 2.46 percent.

Actual enrollments from Jan. 14, 1982, followed by actual enrollments Jan. 13, 1983, and projected enrollments for Oct. 7, 1983, are as follows:

MISD total, 16,278, 17,432, 18,504; primary grades, 5,340, 6,000, 6,502; intermediate grades, 3,832, 4,029, 4,109; junior high, 2,486, 2,705, 2,869; freshman, 1,164, 1,191, 1,364; senior high, 3,153, 3,198, 3,352; special education, 303, 309, 308.

"The greatest impact we are projecting is at the kindergarten level," Baressi said. "We project we'll have 500 more kindergarten students in the next five years."

The two new elementary schools, along with the new De Zavala Elementary School, are scheduled to be ready for students next fall. However, a line connecting a sink and fountain in one of the Parker Elementary classrooms "apparently was not soldered correctly and we had a nice supply of water," Dr. James H. Mailey, consultant for school plant planning and construction, told trustees. "Needless to say, a considerable amount of damage has been done."

Because carpet will have to be relaid and some doors and cabinets will have to be replaced, Mailey requested an extension on the completion date. Trustees extended the date to Feb. 24.

A NAME FOR the other new elementary school, referred to as the "Bluebird School" was approved following a report from Frank Marlow, director of elementary education and chairman of the committee appointed to name the new school.

A total of 35 names, places and events were submitted by the committee, which recommended naming the school Santa Rita Elementary School after the oil well, discovered in 1923 about 60 miles southeast of Midland.

According to background information used in the name selection, about 18 percent of the nation's oil reserves, excluding Alaska, are in the Permian Basin because of the flow from the Santa Rita discovery. The information indicated that a group of Catholic women were worried about their investment in the unproducing well and, after consulting with their priest, were advised to invoke the help of Saint Rita, the patron saint of the impossible.

Other members of the committee were Dr. Duane Moore, Dr. Robert Carter, Gayle Dodson, Frances Collins, Carolyn Sowell, Bertha Starks, Ricardo Torres and Robert Milam.

TRUSTEES APPROVED a procedure for staffing the new schools, proposed by Ron Whitmore, director of human resource services. Teachers in the district who request a transfer to a new school will be screened by Whitmore, who will approve assignments "so that there is no undue loss of teachers from any one school," he explained. Before approving the item, trustees added an amendment that stated no more than two teachers from each school could be transferred without Baressi's consent.

In other action, trustees tabled an item dealing with preliminary architectural drawings for the addition to Rusk Elementary School and authorized the employment of Schumann Engineering Co., Inc., of Midland, to design plans for the street project at Santa Rita Elementary School. Maximum rate of the firm will not exceed $12,000 and work, expected to begin within 30 days, should be completed in two to three weeks so that bids may be taken on the project, Mailey said.

Trustees also approved the first reading on a revision to the student transfer policy. Transfer requests based on physical handicaps, admission of a member of the family into a special education class at a special education center, courses not offered in the attendance zone of residence, majority to minority, and specific transfers that were previously granted will continue to be approved administratively. However, under the revision those requests that are denied will no longer be appealed before the board of trustees.

THE REVISION calls for a Pupil Transfer Review Board, consisting of the superintendent, staff members he appoints and a rotating board member, to hear the appeals. The change was made to provide a more discreet environment in which parents of students seeking transfers may discuss their reasons for such requests, according to Becky Ferguson, MISD director of communications. Other revisions concern non-resident transfer applications.

Trustees also approved a procedure for documentation of employee performance/behavior problems, a request from the Lee High School Band and Orchestra to attend the Buccaneer Day's Music Festival in Corpus Christi in April and bids on equipment for the new schools. A gift from Pease Elementary PTA of seven basketball standards and goals and four portable soccer goals also was accepted. Total value of the gift, possible through donations made by The Ortloff Corportation, was $4,000.

Striking construction workers have lost their jobs

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

About 30 Midessa Construction Co. workers who walked off their jobs at ClayDesta Plaza Tuesday to seek union help in settling a wage grievance with the company have been fired, according to the firm's president.

Max DeVilbiss said the workers were asked to pick up their final paychecks Tuesday afternoon after he declined to negotiate with a five-man committee and two representatives of Carpenters Union 1428.

Meanwhile, Jim Purcell, union representative, said all of the workers have signed applications to join the union. Purcell said no picketing or further strike action was planned for today.

The non-unionized interior mechanics and laborers elected the committee and voted unanimously to accept union representation in negotiating a contract with Midessa in an attempt to resolve a dispute over the company's failure to pay union scale wages to its non-union personnel.

Until January 1982, Midessa had kept pace with union scale. But the company chose not meet two pay increases granted union employees within the past year.

DeVilbiss told workers the company was no longer able to keep pace with the union scale. He offered to meet with about four representatives of the group to discuss the matter, but the workers declined and sought union help.

"As far as I'm concerned, they're fired," said DeVilbiss, who added that replacements had been found for about half the workers by Tuesday afternoon.

"I told them that anyone that wasn't on the job at 10 a.m. (Tuesday) doesn't have a job anymore," he said.

DeVilbiss said the remainder of Midessa's approximate 100 employees continued work Tuesday on several buildings in the ClayDesta project. He said the bank construction was most affected by the walkout, and added: "I imagine in a day or two we'll have enough to man it."

Purcell said the workers planned to contact and seek support from Midessa employees not participating in the walkout.

"They are going to stand by their guns, go with what they started," Purcell said of the striking workers. "To my knowledge, they're not planning to return to work."

As yet, none of the workers has joined the union, Purcell said. He noted that local carpenters unions are currently operating under a special dispensation from the national union. The dispensation allows all qualified craftsmen to join the union without paying the initiation fee.

Purcell explained that those wishing to join the union would only have to pay three month's dues — about $112 — instead of one month's dues and an initiation fee of $250 for new members and $300 for ex-members.

DeVilbiss said he offered to meet with the workers on an individual basis in a few days to discuss the possiblity of giving them back their jobs. He stressed, however, that the offer is merely to "talk it over," and does not represent a guarantee that the workers will be rehired.

MMH committees charged with monitoring patient care

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Besides their day-to-day office duties, night calls and continuing education, Midland physicians are also committed to assuring quality care at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Committees are often viewed as bureaucratic gatherings where a lot of information is exchanged, but not much is ever accomplished. However, some 19 committees at MMH are "working" committees charged with monitoring the type of care Midlanders are receiving.

Within the hospital, the MMH administration runs the everyday operations of the facility, and the physicians also have a type of "hospital administration."

At its December 1982 meeting, the general medical staff elected its officers and announced MMH's new service chiefs for 1983.

The committees "are the trenches, where things happen," said John Holt, MMH vice president of quality assurance. "This is where there is an impact

MC to show Gutenberg Bible

Dr. Karen Gould, professor of history from The University of Texas at Austin, will present a lecture at Midland College Thursday on the history and background of the Gutenberg Bible.

Open to the public without charge, the one-hour lecture will be presented at 10 a.m. in the lecture hall of the Allison Fine Arts Building. Dr. Gould will be at the college in conjunction with the opening of the display of UT-Austin's copy of the Gutenberg Bible.

Entitled "The Gutenberg Bible: The Beginning of the Printed Word," the exhibition in the McCormick Gallery, located in the Allison Fine Arts Building, will be open daily from Thursday through Feb. 6. The exhibit is one of 10 throughout the state as part of the centennial celebration of UT-Austin.

"Dr. Gould has done a considerable amount of research about the development of movable type by German Johann Gutenberg in the 15th Century," Warren Taylor, art instructor and exhibits chairmin at Midland College, said. "Her lecture will include slides and considerable information about the history of this particular volume of the extremely rare Gutenberg Bible."

Also being shown at McCormick Gallery are 40 etchings done by famous artist Marc Chagall, illustrating the Bible. The works are on loan to Midland College from the Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University. They are from SMU's Birdwell Collection.

In order to explain the significance of the Gutenberg Bible, the exhibit will include three self-sustaining panels of background information plus a six-minute video tape presentation. Visitors also will receive free explanatory brochures.

For this exhibition, McCormick Gallery is open from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and from 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday.

Lawyer says death penalty should be unconstitutional

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A lawyer trying to save a man sentenced to death for poisoning his son has argued that the Texas death penalty law should be ruled unconstitutional.

Attorney Will Gray, representing Ronald Clark O'Bryan, told the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Tuesday that Texas judges should be required to tell jurors to consider "mitigating circumstances" before assessing the death penalty.

O'Bryan, 38, is a Deer Park man sentenced to die for feeding cyanide-laced Halloween candy to his 8-year-old son in order to collect a life insurance payoff.

The former optician, nicknamed "Candy Man" by his fellow Death Row inmates, was to have been executed last Halloween but won a stay from the 5th Circuit pending the presentation of further defense evidence.

The three-judge court, presided over by Judge Carolyn Randall of Houston, took under advisement the arguments by Gray and Leslie Benitez, an assistant Texas attorney general.

Gray maintained in a pre-hearing brief and during Tuesday's 20-minute hearing that Texas law violates the U.S. Constitution "because it contains no provisions for directing and instructing the jury's consideration of mitigating circumstances at the punishment phase of trial."

In death penalty cases, a jury first decides the issue of guilt. If the defendent is convicted, another hearing is held before the same jury on punishment. If the jury rejects the defense's mitigating factors a death penalty may be imposed.

Gray said punishment really "bottoms on the jury answer to one special issue: 'whether there is a probability that the defendant would commit criminal acts of violence that would constitute a continuing threat to society.'"

At O'Bryan's trial in Houston, the jury found he probably would commit other acts of violence and be a continuing threat.

Thus, said Gray, the jury was given "unbridled discretion by an arbitrary and discriminatory answer to a special issue" that does not require hard facts and evidence as a foundation.

In fact, Gray said, almost a dozen defense witnesses testified O'Bryan was not a violent man and probably would not be a continuing threat to society if his life were spared.

He argued Texas' law is inadequate because it does not require a trial judge to tell jurors "there is a balance between aggravated circumstances and mitigating circumstances" in capital cases.

Gray said the Texas law "is heavily weighed in favor of mandatory assessment of the death penalty in all Texas murder prosecutions."

For instance, Gray argued, too, that Texas law allows judges and prosecutors to seat jurors who express merely a reasonable willingness to impose the death penalty, a provision that Ms. Benitez defended.

"Unfortunately, in the State of Texas, many trial judges are ex-prosecutors and there is a feeling many of them are still prosecutors, although I am not suggesting this is true in this case," Gray said.

White may call for PUC commissioners to be elected

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White's speech to legislators Thursday could include a call for election of Public Utility Commission members. At present, they are appointed by the governor.

Gov. Mark White

White said Tuesday that his staff is looking into the potential pitfalls of an elected commission, including the chance it could be dominated by utility companies armed with enough money to influence the elections.

"I don't want to see an elected commission that would be dominated by the industry," White told reporters, adding he also fears an elected commission in which "whoever promises the lowest rate gets elected."

He said an elected commission is "one of the alternatives we are considering."

Sens. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, and Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, already have filed bills that would abolish the three-member appointed commission and replace it with an elected panel.

Caperton wants three commissioners, elected statewide. Doggett's bill calls for six commissioners from single-member districts.

White was not specific about his own proposal, which he said he would discuss in detail Thursday when he lays out his legislative program to state lawmakers during a joint session. He acknowledged there could be legal barriers to a ban on contributions from utility firms.

"It's not easily done, I'll admit," said White.

"We don't want a (utility companies-) dominated elected commission. We don't want an appointed commission of people who don't understand their responsibilities. I think we've seen examples of both of these," he said.

White opposed elected commissioners during the spring primary campaign. Now he says his opposition was to an elected commission that would be "dominated by the industry."

"A majority of Texans are simply fed up with the current sham of utility regulation," Caperton said. "It seems the only people who like the way the PUC is run are the utility companies, who complain lamely on the way to the bank, and the folks up on Wall Street, who think we give the utility companies the softest and easiest deal in the country."

An elected commision "is the only way that we're going to make commissioners understand there's a public out there."

Sen. Chet Brooks

Sen. Chet Brooks said Tuesday that Pope has only two choices — retire before April 1984 or be rejected by the Senate. Brooks had asked Clements not to appoint anyone to the job.

Brooks, a Pasadena Democrat, said anyone besides Pope probably already would have been rejected.

Fourteen Democratic senators signed a letter Nov. 8, six days after Democrat Mark White defeated the Republican Clements, saying they did not want Clements to fill the chief justice vacancy, which was created when Joe Greenhill resigned to practice law here.

Although the Senate's authority to confirm or reject Pope has been questioned, Sen. Chet Brooks said even Pope thinks the Senate has that power. An informal opinion is being sought from Attorney General Jim Mattox.

"The Senate's honor is at stake here," said Brooks, who signed the November letter. "Fourteen members of the Senate signed the letter to Gov. Clements saying that we don't want to see a lame-duck appointment in this position."

There has been speculation that White wants to appoint former Attorney General John Hill as chief justice before the May 1984 Democratic primary so Hill could run as an incumbent. Clements defeated Hill for governor in 1978.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby told reporters he hears from Hill "about once a week" about the position, but that Hill has never discussed being appointed so he could run as an incumbent.

"I think all of us are really leaning over backwards to give him (Pope) every chance in the world...to get confirmed and finish his career honorably, and still accommodate what all of us want — and that is the right of the new administration to fill that vacancy at some point. But nobody is trying to push him into a definite (retirement) date," Brooks said.

Pope, a 69-year-old lifelong Democrat, is scheduled to appear at a public hearing before the Senate Nominations Subcommittee on Feb. 8, and Brooks said he thought the full Senate would vote on his appointment that week.

"It seems to me 70 is an appropriate time (to retire)," Brooks said, "but also 71, because he really doesn't lose any retirement benefits until he's 71.

"I don't think anybody would object to him until he's 71, which would be in April 1984," the senator said.

A reporter told Brooks that Pope had said "the chief justice should not have to make a deal."

"I just think it is a very reasonable thing to ask, and it indicates that 14 members who signed that letter are leaning over backwards to try to accommodate him," Brooks said. "Those 14 would already have busted anybody else, I think."

DEATHS

Jim Keefer

BIG SPRING — Services for Jim Keefer, 62, of Denver, Colo., and formerly of Big Spring, will be at 10 a.m. Thursday in Nalley-Pickle Funeral Home's Rosewood Chapel with Dr. Claude Craven, pastor of Trinity Baptist Church, officiating.

Burial will be in Mount Olive Memorial Park.

Services for Sidney Allen Yates, 64, of Breckenridge and formerly of Midland, will be at 1 p.m. Thursday at Alamo Heights Baptist Church in Midland with the Rev. Milo Arbuckle officiating. Burial will be in Trinity Memorial Gardens in Big Spring under the direction of Gilbreath Funeral Home.

Yates was born May 3, 1918, in Taylor County. He was a resident of Midland for 26 years. He had lived in Breckenridge for the past seven months. He was a retired building contractor. Yates married Loreta Yater Oct. 30, 1980, in Midland. He was a member of Fraternal Order of Eagles, the Elks Lodge and Alamo Heights Baptist Church in Midland.

Survivors include his wife, Loreta Yates of Breckenridge; a son, Kenneth C. Yates of Oklahoma City, Okla.; two daughters, Robbie Graves of Stanton and Karen Kast of Eugene, Ore.; two sisters, Madred Bradley of Dallas and Muriel Prockshal of Cranfils Gap; three brothers, Gorden Yates of Santa Rosa, Calif., Arthur E. Yates of Breckenridge and Don Yates of Big Spring; and 10 grandchildren.

Mary B. Grubaugh

Rosary for Mary B. Grubaugh, 94, of 700 W. Scharbauer Drive, were recited Tuesday in the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Cliff Blackburn, pastor of St. Ann's Catholic Church, officiating. Burial will be in All Saints Cemetery in Des Plaines, Ill.

Mrs. Grubaugh died Monday in a Midland hospital.

She was born Sept. 15, 1888, in Hubbardston, Mich., grew up there and moved to Lansing, Mich., in the 1940s. Later, she lived in Chicago for 15 years and then in Midland for 15 years. She was a member of the Catholic Church.

Holt, who assists the committees in fulfilling their obligations, cited the infection control committee as an example of how a committee impacts patient care.

"For example, infection control committee monitors, prevents and investigates hospital-acquired infections among the patients and employees," he said.

Dr. John Young, tissue committee; Dr. J. Mendez, infection control; Dr. Shelton Viney, pharmacy and therapeutics; Dr. Durwood Clader, cancer; Dr. Donald Floyd, physical therapy; Dr. John McKenna, cardiopulmonary; Dr. William McGavran, critical care; Dr. David Mallams, emergency services; Dr. David Shneidman, continuing medical education; and Dr. Brian Mohr, utilization review.

Other MMH committees include credentials, institutional review, bylaws, dietary ad hoc, cost containment, radiation safety, joint conference, search, product evaluation and standardization, physician's equipment, safety, quality assurance steering and medical records.

Doctor pleads guilty to illegally prescribing Preludin

DALLAS (AP) — His weight reduction clinics helped Dr. John Hall Thomas live the good life in a restored three-story Victorian mansion. He had a swimming pool and was building a carriage house. Then the law caught up with him.

Thomas, 38, ran clinics in Dallas and Nacogdoches, and a prosecutor says that between January and June of 1982, Thomas wrote almost half the prescriptions for the stimulant Preludin issued in Texas.

Thomas was indicted Sept. 28 on 63 counts of illegally prescribing the highly restricted drug, conspiring to dispense the drug illegally, and operating a continuing criminal enterprise. His license to practice medicine has been revoked, and in a plea bargain arrangement, he pleaded guilty Monday in U.S. District Court to one count of illegally prescribing the drug.

Thomas is free on $1,000 bond awaiting sentencing by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice. He faces a five-year sentence and $15,000 fine, Assistant U.S. Attorney Chris Harrison said Tuesday.

His undoing came when neighbors began complaining that as many as 150 people at a time lined up as long as eight hours to see the doctor, Harrison said.

"Pushers would bring eight or 10 people with them, and for $60 for the office visits, they'd get the prescriptions of 28 pills," he said.

Harrison said investigators arranged to send Allen Byrd, a Harris County sheriff's deputy working as an undercover agent, to the clinic to buy Preludin. Byrd is not overweight, Harrison said.

"Byrd, using the name Allen Smith, went to Thomas' office and told him he wanted the drug and he was going to use it to shoot up," Harrison said. "Thomas told him they would have to make it look legal, so Byrd would have to bring four fat girls with him.

"He came back with the girls, all law enforcement officers, and got the prescriptions."

Authorities ran a computer check on the triplicate prescription forms doctors must file with law enforcement agencies on restricted drugs and discovered the extraordinary number of prescriptions for Preludin, a drug with limited therapeutic value to which legitimate users develop a tolerance after about three weeks, he said.

Bids will be taken for airport access road

AUSTIN — A highway project to provide a western access to Midland Regional Airport from FM 1788 will go up for bid at the State Department of Highways and Transportation this month.

Upon completion of Texas 191, the new access road is expected to become the favored route for area users of the airport, according to highway officials.

"When this new entrance into Midland Regional is completed, it will provide better access from Interstate 20 and also from Texas 191 and FM 1788," said Bill Lancaster, head of the DHT Odessa district office. "It is expected to be the major access for persons desiring airport services in this area."

Announcement of the successful low bidders is expected to come later this month. Further information may be obtained by calling the Odessa office at 332-0501.

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros' schedule makes it impossible for Houston to host the 1984 Democratic National Convention, Mayor Kathy Whitmire says.

Mrs. Whitmire said Tuesday she was withdrawing the city's bid to host the meeting, which will be held in the summer of 1984.

The only facility large enough to house the convention would be the Astrodome, which will be booked for much of the baseball season, she said.

She said the committee required free access to major meeting halls for at least 30 days.

"The Houston Sports Association said it would be possible for the Astros to schedule a two-week road trip but difficult to make alternate arrangements for the team to play away for one month," Ms. Whitmire said.

Judge won't dismiss riot trial defendants

DUBLIN, Ga. (AP) — A federal judge hearing the trial of four lawsuits stemming from racial unrest in Wrightsville has refused to dismiss any of the 16 white defendants completely from the case.

Under the judge's rulings Tuesday, all 16 remain as defendants in one or more lawsuits, either in their capacities as elected officials or as private citizens.

U.S. District Judge Dudley Bowen Jr. noted the complexity of his rulings, but said they would eliminate the "potential for confusion" once the case goes to the jury.

The central issue in the Bowen's rulings was what responsibility, if any, the Johnson County commissioners and Wrightsville City Council members had for actions allegedly taken by police officers against blacks in the spring of 1980.

The plaintiffs' attorneys rested their case without soliciting testimony from the principal defendant, Roland Attaway, the sheriff of Johnson County since 1960.

Attaway is accused of leading armed whites, including police officers, in an attack on black demonstrators at the Johnson County courthouse in Wrightsville on April 8, 1980. He is also accused of unlawfully arresting and detaining 41 blacks on the night of May 19, 1980, following a shooting in a black neighborhood of Wrightsville.

Three of the lawsuits, seeking a total of $21.3 million in damages from Attaway and his 15 co-defendants, will be considered collectively by the all-white jury. Bowen will rule on the fourth suit, which asks that Johnson County officials be prevented from prosecuting blacks indicted on charges of rioting in connection with the May 19, 1980, violence.

Attaway's co-defendants include four past and present law enforcement officers, Wrightsville Mayor Willis Wombles and the council members and commissioners.

Attorney W.W. Larsen of Dublin, who is representing all 16 defendants, asked Bowen to dismiss the co-defendants in some or all of the lawsuits. Bowen granted many of his requests without dismissing any defendant completely.

Watt: Indians' future in their hands

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interior Secretary James Watt says American Indian leaders have an opportunity to ease the plight of their people if they don't "muff it."

Watt made a surprise appearance at the opening session of the National Congress of American Indians to clarify controversial remarks he made last week about Indian reservations.

In the interview, Watt said Indian reservations demonstrated the "failures of socialism," and fostered the highest rates of unemployment, divorce, alcoholism, drug addiction and social diseases in the country.

Watt told the Indians Tuesday that his comments focused attention on problems that have been around for decades.

"I have given you an opportunity, don't muff it," Watt said. "Based on what I have had to go through, I don't know if you will ever get another secretary of interior to address these problems. Don't let them sweep it under the rug."

Watt said he was making his appearance to clear up the "tremendous confusion," which he blamed on inaccurate news reports about his comments on the Satellite Program Network interview show.

"If my words caused hurt, I apologize for that hurt, but I don't apologize for the message," Watt said. "The Indian people have been abused by the U.S. government for too many years and we have got to bring about change."

Watt admitted he may have used some "unartful language. But, boy, I got attention."

Ex-Boston official pleads guilty to perjury in deal

BOSTON (AP) — A former official of the Boston Redevelopment Authority pleaded guilty Tuesday to lying to a federal grand jury about his role as a campaign fund-raiser for Mayor Kevin H. White.

George Collatos, 62, a former senior administrative assistant for the authority, pleaded guilty to four of 12 perjury counts under a plea-bargain agreement worked out Monday night.

The action was under a plea bargaining agreement which the defense attorney, James G. Reardon, said was developed only Monday night, and copies had to be made before the court session could continue.

He ordered Collatos returned to the federal prison at Danbury, Conn., where he is serving a three-year sentence for extorting money from a local businessman. White has insisted Collatos never raised funds for him.

The plea bargain came at the scheduled start of trial for Collatos on charges of testfying falsely to a grand jury that is still investigating alleged public corruption in Boston.

Under the plea bargain announced in court, the U.S. Attorney's office agreed to dismiss the other eight counts in the indictment. Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert J. Cordy said he would recommend Collatos serve a six-year term after his current three-year sentence.

Reardon told the court he will oppose the consecutive terms for his client at the sentence hearing.

"He could not live with a six-year term on and after (the current sentence)," Reardon said outside court. "He is 62 years old. There are family considerations here. And he has heart disease. How much is enough?"

Garrity spent 40 minutes in court explaining the law and the plea bargain to Collatos, and hearing a brief outline of the prosecution's case.

According to Cordy, Collatos perjured himself in the following testimony to the grand jury:

—When he said he couldn't remember soliciting campaign contributions from contractors and developers.

—When he said he did not remember making arrangements for two political fund-raisers in 1979.

—When he denied talking with anyone in the Massachusetts Executive Council about a case involving Lawrence Ready Mix Concrete Corp.

Seven contractors gave Collatos $8,000 for the 1979 White mayoral campaign, according to court testimony.

Collatos had been arrested on the extortion charge Oct. 21, 1981, after a meeting with William H. Clark, treasurer of Lawrence Ready Mix, which wanted to build a plant in Boston's Dorchester section.

The FBI said Clark had complained to them about being shaken down, and had cooperated with them, including use of a taping device to record meetings with Collatos.

Cordy said the prosecution was prepared to introduce a variety of recordings in which Collatos told of his fund-raising activities, and a number of contractors and developers as witnesses to testify about Collatos asking them for political contributions.

Meter taken to prove point

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A 25-year-old man who said a parking meter cheated him was charged with vandalism after he yanked out the meter, pole and all, to bring in as evidence, police said.

Guy Stuart Wedthohl was released Monday on $200 bond after he was charged with damaging city property.

Police spokeswoman Ann Peterson said the man was angry because the meter took his dime and didn't register the proper amount of time. She said he brought the meter to the police station to prove that he had put in his money.

"I guess he just pulled it up out of the ground. He had the meter, the pole, the whole bit," she said. "He was even madder after they charged him."

A hearing was scheduled for Feb. 16 in Buncombe County District Court.

His death and those last year of four other Norwegian boys, ages 10-14, have turned Norway's attention to the question of young suicides and what causes them. Three of the five were in the Arctic Circle town of Tromsoe, the other two in Oslo, the capital.

National newspapers attributed the deaths of the 12-year-old and at least one of the other Tromsoe boys to "long-lasting harassment at and outside school."

The 12-year-old's mother, who asked not to be identified, told the Oslo newspaper Dagbladet that her son was harassed both in and out of school, especially after he and a friend accidentally set fire to an old empty house.

"After that he was blamed for every wrong thing that happened in our area. Other children always put the blame on him," she said. "Shortly before his death, he was accused of having stolen some flower bulbs. I think that was too much for him."

School Superintendent Alf J. Karlsen, quoting psychological experts, denied that any of the Tromsoe deaths was caused solely by harassment.

"But we realize the problem of harassment exists here, just as it exists at many schools in our country, and we have set up a committee which by March will make proposals to combat it," Karlsen said.

Norwegians call harassment among children "mobbing," a word borrowed from English. "Mobbing" is the common denominator for teasing and other forms of minor harassment as well as deliberate and systematic, even violent, persecution.

Karlsen said the new committee includes representatives of schools and organizations dealing with children's welfare.

"The proposals will be directed toward pupils, teachers and parents alike," he said. "We must cooperate on all levels to solve the mobbing problem."

Professor Dan Olweus of Bergen University, who studies school harassment and wrote a book "School Rowdies and Their Victims," estimates that between 25,000 and 30,000 children are harassed seriously in Norway every year, mostly at school.

"The victims are usually the psychologically and physically weakest, the most emotionally unsure and anxious," Olweus said. "They fail to report the harassment because they are afraid of being treated even worse."

Olweus' current project, in Sweden, is a study of whether harassment of children causes lasting harm. Nine hundred volunteers, victims of harassment and former admitted school bullies, have been observed over several years and remain subjects of the research project.

"There is seldom only one reason for suicides among kids, but harassment can often be a contributing factor," Olweus said.

In Norway, there was an average one suicide a year among every 100,000 children under 14 in the 1960s, two per100,000 in 1971-75 and one per 100,000 in 1976-80.

Since 1980, however, "It worries us that the rate in this age group has increased to three per 100,000," said Dr. Per Nyhus, head of the National Center for Children and Youth Psychiatry.

"There is also every reason to be deeply concerned about the increase in the suicide rate among boys in the age group between 15 and 19. During the 1960s there were only three suicides among 100,000 boys of that age. Now the rate is 14 per 100,000," he said.

"One thing is the lack of sufficient and necessary supervision of children and attention for them caused by the increases in divorces and the breakup of families," he said.

Nyhus added that modern society has become more competitive, creating a gap between those who are successful and those who are not. He said this creates a stress situation for many children and teen-agers.

Grant provides for newspaper syndication of eight short stories

WASHINGTON (AP) — Just as Charles Dickens, O. Henry and F. Scott Fitzgerald published some of their early fiction in newspapers, some of today's best American fiction writers are trying with the help of a federal grant to get their work printed in newspapers.

Under a pilot project financed with a $120,000 award from the literature program of the National Endowment for the Arts, eight previously unpublished short stories selected by a jury of distinguished writers will be syndicated each month starting next June.

The stories will be sent to a maximum of 10 newspapers across the country which agree to print at least two stories each month.

"In its first year, the pilot project will provide a new source of income and a chance for greater national readership to approximately 100 fine American authors among the 1,200 who have received creative writer fellowships from the endowment," said Frank Conroy, director of the endowment's literature program.

"It will also give thousands of people an opportunity to read some of the best new short stories written," he said.

Frank Hodsoll, chairman of the endowment, noted that fiction was a prominent feature of most newspapers before the growth of mass-circulation magazines began in the early 20th century.

"Now, in a time when general audience magazines specializing in fiction have declined dramatically, this effort to return fiction to newspapers is particularly important," he said.

Funeral rule to be debated

The regulation, approved last July by the Federal Trade Commission, is expected to be submitted to Congress this week, possibly as early as today. Both houses then will have 90 days to veto the regulation.

Supporters of the funeral rule expect that a resolution of disapproval will be introduced by Rep. Marty Russo, D-Ill., who has been one of the most vocal congressional opponents. An aide to Russo said the congressman would not be available to discuss the regulation until today.

"We're going to do everything we can to make sure a veto resolution is not passed," said Kent Brunette of the American Association of Retired Persons.

"We haven't heard any groundswell of opposition," he said.

The National Funeral Directors Association opposes the rule, but the executive director, Howard Raether, said the group was not actively lobbying Congress for a veto.

"We presume a veto resolution will be introduced and will support it," he said.

Last May, Congress vetoed an FTC reguation aimed at ending abuses in the used car industry. It was the first time lawmakers had used the power it granted itself in 1980.

The veto was overturned in October by a federal appeals court and is now pending before the Supreme Court.

The funeral rule requires undertakers to provide an item-by-item list of costs before funeral arrangements can be ageed to and orders them to inform callers that prices can be discussed over the telephone.

The rule stemmed from complaints that funeral homes may have taken advantage of grieving families by selling package funerals, including costly, unwanted features. A lack of price competition in the industry also has been cited.

FTC approval of the rule came 10 years after the agency began investigating the funeral industry. The only dissenter was James C. Miller III, the FTC chairman who cited a "lack of evidence in the record...that the rule approved...will adequately deal with alleged market imperfections, assuming they exist."

But FTC Commissioner Michael Pertschuk, a leading advocate of the rule, said, "We have determined that millions of Americans faced with the unnerving and painful task of arranging a funeral for a loved one are victimized by a marketing system sustained by unfair and deceptive practices."

Trained guard dogs protect sheep from coyotes

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Dogs with a distaste for coyotes that have a taste for lamb have been helping some sheep ranchers keep the clever predators on the other side of the fence.

"People are finding out that if you have predator problems, you can't shoot them off or poison them," said Larry Griffin, 36, who raises sheep and dogs called komondorok near Silver City, N.M.

And Stan Metcalf, 37, said he cannot do without the dogs he breeds to guard his sheep on his ranch west of Hereford, Texas.

"It was either get out of the sheep business or run the dogs. We can't operate without them," he said.

Coyotes are the bane of sheep ranchers in the West and for years ranchers used toxic Compound 1080 to control the varmints. But use of the controversial poison against coyotes was banned by the Environmental Protection Agency in 1972.

Griffin's komondorok, plural for komondor, originated from Hungary and weigh 80 to 135 pounds. Their coarse snow-white hair is like a cotton mop and protect them from predators, Griffin said.

He said he hasn't lost any sheep to predators since he started breeding the dogs four years ago.

"When a coyote finds out a komondor is in the area, they won't even come to that area," Griffin said. "These dogs are three times bigger than a coyote."

Metcalf raises Great Pyrenees — large white dogs that range from 120 to 180 pounds and resemble Newfoundlands. He said his losses to predators have decreased by 95 percent since he began using the dogs four years ago.

"Great Pyrenees have a natural protective instinct," he said. "We raise them with the sheep and treat them as such. We don't make pets out of them."

Jim Sachse, extension sheep specialist with New Mexico State University, said the school will begin an experiment this spring to examine methods of repelling coyotes.

"The guard dog situation isn't all that clear from the standpoint of controlling predation in extremely large pastures," Sachse said.

"Our pastures are too large," said Truman Pierce, 60, president of the New Mexico Woolgrowers Association. Pierce runs about 1,000 sheep on 18,000 acres 50 miles northwest of Roswell.

"They experimented with these dogs in Washington state and about a 500-acre tract or pasture is about as large as they could work in," he said.

Pierce said the return of Compound 1080 would be the best way to control coyotes, but Griffin said he is not that thrilled with using poison.

"Natural control sure is a hell of a lot better than poison in my opinion," he said.

Komondorok "have run in large pastures for centuries," said Griffin, who runs about 200 ewes on his "fairly small operation" two miles north of Silver City. "They have roamed with the flock and stayed with the flock."

Ranchers overseeing a lot of land just need more dogs, Griffin said. "There is potential there and I think it will work if they will try."

A komondor will attack a coyote if the predator strays into the komondor's neck of the woods, he said. However, he said ranchers are hesitant to buy trained dogs because they are not a proven deterrent "in this part of the country."

"At one time, there was a national law in Hungary that every sheepman had to have a sheep dog to protect the sheep from timber wolves," he said.

Komondorok are friendly toward their owners and in the environment they're trained to be in, Griffin said. But they're tough on coyotes.

"We have coyotes who come to our back fence every night and the dogs go crazy. But they (coyotes) never come in," Griffin said.

"They are not a kill dog like Dobermans or German shepherds, but they will not back up," he said. "They know where their territory is and they know what is supposed to be there."

Metcalf said he runs 10,000 head of sheep on different tracts of land, some as large as 10,000 acres, and his dogs have handled their jobs despite the vast acreage.

"Mostly the dogs don't go and catch coyotes, they just keep them out of the sheep," Metcalf said.

"I've had (wild) dogs get at the sheep and kill as many as 50 lambs in one morning," he said. But that has not happened since the Great Pyrenees started guard duty, Metcalf said.

The dogs are very protective of their charges, he said.

Griffin and Metcalf said the depressed agricultural economy has hurt sale of the dogs. Griffin said he sells a train komondor for between $500 and $1,000. Metcalf said he sells his trained dogs for $1,000 each.

Beside the expense, Pierce said there are other problems with guard dogs — it takes a lot of time to round them up to feed and water them.

"Some of these pastures of mine are real rough and rocky. There's no way we're going to be able to go out there and find the dogs," he said.

However, Metcalf said self-feeders for dogs could be placed at water holes where sheep congregate.

He said he lent five Great Pyrenees to a rancher near Duran, N.M., who turned out 4,000 ewes to pasture and placed feeders at each water hole.

"The (sheep) losses stopped when he put the dogs out," Metcalf said. "When

IRS expands undercover, intelligence operations

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The special intelligence unit of the Internal Revenue Service, long under a cloud for spying on the personal activities of political figures and for using other tactics that flouted the law, is undergoing a rebirth.

Acting under new guidelines drafted to protect the rights of citizens, the IRS' Criminal Investigation Division is expanding its undercover operations and resuming the collection of intelligence on a national basis, with the emphasis on developing major criminal cases, especially against drug dealers.

Now that the gap between income taxes owed and those paid has reached an estimated $87 billion, large-scale fraud has become the division's highest priority,especially nationwide tax-shelter schemes and the illicit profits earned by major drug rings.

The IRS will play a key role in regional law enforcement task forces that the Reagan administration is creating to combat narcotics trafficking in Los Angeles and 12 other cities.

"We intend to tax the profitability of narcotics trafficking. Billions of dollars are generated from it, and large amounts are moved, or laundered, through banks in (Caribbean) tax-haven countries," Richard C. Wassenaar, the new head of the Criminal Investigation Division, said.

WASSENAAR, WHO supervises the government's criminal income tax investigations, is the key to the division's resurgence. The career IRS official, a former Californian, said that he was determined to restore the agency's toughness and morale but also to increase its sensitivity to citizens' rights.

Wassenaar, who until last year headed all criminal investigations in the IRS' Western region, said in a recent interview that he was sensitive to individual liberties and that none of his new projects would violate the Fourth Amendment guarantees of privacy.

However, "honest taxpayers" have rights, too, he said. "I'm referring to the unwritten right of the honest, taxpaying citizen to believe and to be convinced that those who choose to violate the tax laws will be brought to the bar," Wassenaar said.

He was promoted here from the regional office in San Francisco and is no stranger to tough situations. He once interrogated a militant tax protester who had a loaded revolver in his belt. "He said he would have no hesitancy to shoot me on the spot if he found we were violating his rights," Wassenaar recalled.

The incident occurred 14 years ago, when Wassenaar was a young agent in Chicago. But his coolness during that living-room interview (he later disarmed and arrested the protester) is still remembered by some of the 2,700 special agents he now commands.

Wassenaar, 43, has come to head the tax agency's Criminal Investigation Division at a critical juncture in its history.

FROM A LOW point in 1975, when some IRS agents pried into the personal lives of Miami politicians, a disclosure that led to the suspension of all IRS intelligence-gathering activities throughout the nation, the division is seeking more respectability and more structure. Wassenaar said that he was also encouraging his agents to go after bigger game.

He will still use, and even expand, undercover projects to catch all types of tax cheaters, he said. He has also cautiously resurrected the collection of intelligence data on a national basis, he said, putting a trusted friend and colleague in charge.

For some agents, gathering intelligence once meant spying on the sex and drinking habits of prominent Miamians under a secret operation code-named Lepre-chaun. That was in 1975, and Congress and IRS headquarters officials expressed horror when they learned of it.

Later, IRS Commissioner Donald C. Alexander suspended another major investigation on grounds that IRS agents had overstepped their bounds in secretly photographing records from a Bahamian banker's briefcase.

But Wassenaar insists that his division can go after big-time tax cheats without trampling on individuals' rights.

While stressing that his soon-to-be-computerized intelligence office is a much-needed clearinghouse for data on important investigations, Wassenaar took pains to say that "we will not be collecting and storing data on any taxpayers and holding on to that information for any period of time. We will not be a repository of information on any taxpayer."

"I JUST DON'T think it's right for IRS or most other federal law enforcement agencies to collect large data bases relative to the citizens of this country," Wassenaar said. "We only intend to receive information that is current and involves tax evasion. We will keep nothing that is unnecessary or irrelevant."

Crime croups targeted precisely because large criminal organizations are being targeted by IRS, Wassenaar has established a central intelligence-gathering office and put Andy Flodin, a former IRS group manager from Las Vegas, Nev., in charge. Flodin is a recognized expert on organized crime and has worked closely with Wassenaar for years.

Now, when investigators in any of the tax agency's seven regions come across evidence of an illegal tax shelter or narcotics operation, for example, they are encouraged to report it to Flodin, in case the same suspects may be operating in other regions. This procedure is new, Wassenaar explained, for until now most IRS criminal investigations have been completed and approved at the regional level before Washington was informed of the details.

"Before, we might be chopping off just one tentacle of the octopus," he said, referring to regional investigations. "Now we can get a picture of the whole creature and take appropriate action at an early date."

In commenting on fraudulent tax shelters, he said the IRS is looking into schemes in which taxpayers try to shield income from taxes by investing in bogus property or by showing losses from phony business enterprises. Sometimes thousands of taxpayers are involved in such a scheme by a single promoter or attorney, and the sophisticated transactions often involve foreign bank accounts, Wassenaar said.

One example, he said, was the conviction in Seattle last year of tax analyst Karl L. Dahlstrom and four associates. Dahlstrom ran afoul of the law by establishing foreign trust accounts for several hundred of his clients, then using sham transactions to reduce their taxable income. The best evidence against him, Wassenaar said, was a damaging series of admissions of fraud that Dahlstrom made to undercover IRS agents who were posing as potential clients.

WASSENAAR SAID HE would cooperate with Senate investigators who are planning new hearings this spring into the massive evasion of U.S. income taxes by Americans who use offshore bank accounts.

Fraudulent tax shelters alone are costing the U.S. Treasury more than $3 billion in revenue annually, IRS officials have estimated. Sen. William V. Roth Jr., R-Del., chairman of the permanent subcommittee on investigations of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, said that "the pervasiveness of the problem has become almost mind-boggling," with many ordinary citizens joining wealthier taxpayers in a rush to buy questionable tax-shelter packages.

Police apparently losing battle against Irish guerrillas

EDITOR'S NOTE: Guerrilla groups in Northern Ireland have built up crime empires to bankroll their operations and cement the hold on areas they control. Police are trying to crack down, with little success so far. Here's a report on how it all works and the implications for the battered province.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Chief Supt. Bill Mooney, Northern Ireland's top crimebuster, is leading a police crackdown on the lucrative rackets run by the IRA and other extremists to bankroll their guerrilla campaigns.

So far the operation has made little impact on a network of organized crime police chiefs say is controlled by the province's "godfathers" of terrorism.

Investigators say that after 13 years of sectarian violence, Protestant and Roman Catholic guerrillas are deeply entrenched in extortion, protection rackets, tax and welfare frauds as well as running amusement arcades, bars, stores and taxi fleets behind legitimate business fronts.

Much of the estimated $1.67 million a year that goes into the warchests from the rackets is used to buy guns and explosives, says Sir Jack Hermon, the province's chief constable of police.

"EVERY POUND in the coffers of the paramilitary organizations is a nail in the coffin of an innocent victim of their murder gangs," Hermon says.

"The money they steal or extort is blood money because it finishes up in blood. It keeps in comfortable power the godfathers who organize and direct the death and destruction."

Says Hermon: "What we're faced with here is gangsterism of the very worst kind and all the viciousness that goes with it. Money is a crucial factor in the continuance of terrorism."

Police say the rackets are run by the almost exclusively Catholic Provisional Irish Republican Army, its Marxist offshoot, the Irish National Liberation Army, and their main Protestant rivals, the Ulster Defense Association and the Ulster Volunteer Force.

The IRA is fighting to wrest Ulster from British rule and Protestant domination. It seeks to reunite the province with the overwhelmingly Catholic Irish Republic and to end 60 years of partition. Northern Ireland's one million Protestants oppose its goals.

THE PARAMILITARY factions all deny any criminal activity. But hundreds of men claiming allegiance to these groups have been convicted for armed robbery in recent years.

The syndicates are part of a general breakdown in law and order spawned by Ireland's troubles. There was no organized crime before the sectarian feuding flared in 1969.

The gunmen force small shopkeepers to pay around $40 a week, prosperous bars up to $412 and large businesses up to $1,670.

The guerrillas have gone into the one-armed bandit and video game business too. Well-informed Catholic sources say one IRA group, using a legitimate company front, controls amusement arcades in several parts of Belfast and installs its machines in bars — sometimes at gunpoint.

But the biggest racket is in the construction industry, police sources say. Contractors pay an average $660 a week in protection money and are forced to hire out-of-work activists who only show up to collect their paychecks.

THEY KEEP ABOUT a quarter of the money. The rest goes to the paramilitary groups. Police suspect at least two construction companies controlled by the IRA have skimmed as much as $4.95 million from state-funded Housing Executive projects in recent years.

The guerrillas also carry out bank robberies and payroll holdups in Northern Ireland and the Republic, where police are battling a crime wave blamed largely on underground factions.

There were 700 armed robberies in Northern Ireland last year, netting gunmen more than $3.3 million.

James Sherrard, secretary of Northern Ireland's Union of Small Shopkeepers, notes: "Fear is the worst factor. Shopkeepers won't even tell us how much they pay in protection money.

THE LAWLESSNESS has rent the social fabric of the province, where in 1968, the year before the troubles erupted, there was one murder. Since 1969, at least 2,234 people have been slain.

Belfast councilman Paddy Devlin, a Catholic and longtime critic of the IRA, says that some businessmen and banks pay voluntary contributions to welfare organizations controlled by the Provos and other factions, disguising the payments in their books as donations to charities.

The violence has also bred welfare frauds in working-class districts where the gunmen have influence.

Sociologists fear the long-term damage being caused ghetto children amid the breakdown in authority and the lawless environment.

The Provos and other groups have used profits from their rackets to establish their own social welfare system.

"THESE PEOPLE ARE building up a network of control that could in a few years' time change the structure of society in some areas of Belfast unless steps are taken to stop it," says a senior police officer who asked not to be identified.

Devlin, forced to move house in West Belfast last year by Provo intimidation, says: "There used to be an element of patriotism in what these fellows did. But now it's just plain gangsterism.

"I knew guys in the early '60s whose backsides were coming out (of) their pants, they were so badly off. Now they live the life of Reilly and it's all done in the name of the Republic or Loyalism."

Others who have done so or been prepared to testify in court have been killed or crippled by gunmen. There have been few convictions for racketeering since the terrorist syndicates first emerged in the early 1970s.

DEVLIN DOES NOT believe the police crackdown will be effective "because they can't get people to testify in court against the people running the rackets. People are scared to death to get out of line."

Hermon stresses the investigation will be "a methodical, painstaking process. I want the criminals concerned to know they're under scrutiny."

A key strand of the police drive is compiling dossiers on the syndicates' financial operations. British Inland Revenue investigators, customs officers and Scotland Yard fraud specialists are working with Mooney's detectives.

One detective notes: "We often have to wait to pick someone up for a routine terrorist crime to get the people we know are running the rackets. Remember, the FBI only got Al Capone for tax evasion."

Soviets bordering on causing China boundary trouble

By DUSKO DODER
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union's sudden denunciation of Chinese land claims was not only intended as a warning to Peking that the time has come to get serious in their normalization talks but also a skillfully aimed billiard shot now caroming toward two other targets.

One is Secretary of State George P. Shultz, whose arrival in Peking, set for Feb. 2, is anticipated here with concern. The Russians are apparently calculating that Shultz may be ready to offer the Chinese leaders something that might deflect them from pursuing their present course of improving relations with Moscow.

According to analysts here, last week's New Times article raising the sensitive territorial issue appears to signal to Washington that there are no prospects for a sudden improvement in Sino-Soviet relations. This presumably is expected to strengthen the hand of those in Washington who contend that the Chinese are only bluffing a move toward Moscow and who oppose any substantial U.S. concessions to Peking.

The Russians have an exceptionally high regard for Shultz' negotiating skills, and Moscow's aim is to make his task more difficult.

The second target is the Nonaligned Movement, planning to hold a highly publicized summit meeting in New Delhi in March. The New Times article was published as Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang was concluding an extensive tour of Africa, the first by a Chinese premier since Chou En-lai went to Africa at the end of 1963 in an effort to win the continent's revolutionary movements away from Moscow and to build up Peking's influence at the 1964 Nonaligned summit in Cairo.

Zhao Ziyang's tour, while taking place in different circumstances, nevertheless reflects Peking's effort to influence African nations and the outcome of the New Delhi summit. Although Zhao made no anti-Soviet statements in public, the Russians believe he may have privately conveyed Chinese grievances against Moscow to African leaders.

Hence, the Russians have moved to publicize their complaints about Peking and have chosen to stress the issue of territorial claims, knowing that border changes are an extremely sensitive issue in post-colonial Africa.

New Times is well suited for this purpose, for the widely translated journal is published in several African languages and is one of the Soviet publications most often read in Africa.

The more than 577,000 square miles of territory claimed by China includes the city of Vladivostok, huge Lake Baikal and much of the Soviet republic of Kazakhstan, the New Times article said.

As for the Chinese, the article sends a double signal in advance of the March round of Sino-Soviet political talks.

First, the Russians seem to be telling the Chinese that the time has come to stop all polemics and get down to business. Moscow had turned off its rhetorical attacks before the first round of talks in Peking last October, and it now expects China to do the same.

Second, the Russians view contradictory statements coming from Peking as an indication that parts of the Chinese hierarchy are resisting the process of normalization with Moscow. The Soviet assessment is that the Chinese opponents of rapprochement are using the highly emotional issue of "lost territories" to rally support against what is still a fragile search for accommodation.

By ridiculing the extent of the Chinese border claims and by proposing the resumption of border negotiations to resolve all such issues, the Russians are asking for a Chinese response that will enable Moscow to judge the relative strengths of those in Peking who favor normalization and those who oppose it.

The border dispute goes far back into Russo-Chinese history. The Russians had conquered the Far East in the mid-17th century but, preoccupied by a war with the Tatars, yielded the whole Amur River basin to the Manchu Dynasty. The negotiations were conducted at Nerchinsk, on the Amur River, while it was surrounded by a large Chinese fleet and 17,000 Chinese soldiers.

The Russians subsequently claimed that the Treaty of Nerchinsk was imposed on them. In the 19th century the tables were turned and Russia took back 380,000 square miles of territory under treaties that Peking says were imposed on weak Chinese emperors.

Rayne, La., residents line up, left, to receive fresh water after a caller warned the city's water supply had been poisoned with cyanide. Above, Jeanne Mixon, a lab technician for the state's Department of Health, checks a water sample to determine its cyanide content. Since Thursday the state has been victim of a series of threatening calls proclaiming cities' water supplies have been contaminated with cyanide.

HAMMOND, La. (AP) — Six people have been arrested for allegedly threatening to poison water systems with cyanide, and state officials, believing dozens of calls are "copycat" hoaxes, urged local authorities to keep water flowing unless poison is found.

The threats have disrupted service to 220,000 people and prompted emergency tests on 55 waterworks in the state. Of the six people arrested, five were teenagers.

One test, performed Monday night in Hammond, found traces of cyanide, but not enough to be hazardous. A second test Tuesday found no cyanide at all. Health officials said they could not tell whether the cyanide in the Hammond water occurred naturally or had been introduced deliberately.

Sue Ellen Lewis, spokeswoman for the state Department of Health and Human Resources, said Tuesday night that since the first threat Thursday in St. Gabriel, 55 threatening calls had been received by waterworks for parishes, cities, towns, subdivisions and private industries.

Ms. Lewis said she had no comprehensive list of the communities that cut off water after getting the threats, but an estimated 220,000 people were without water for at least part of Tuesday.

Gov. Dave Treen termed the callers "kooks" and vowed to find the money for a thorough investigation, even if it means taking funds from other state budgets. And Louisiana State Police and the FBI were forming a joint task force to find all the callers.

Gregory Larks, 20, of Gonzales, was arrested late Monday and booked for investigation of criminal mischief for allegedly making anonymous calls threatening contamination of the Gonzales water system, state police said Tuesday.

Three 14-year-olds were arrested Tuesday, two from Basile and one from Abbeville, troopers said. On Monday, a 14-year-old was arrested in Lake Arthur, and a 13-year-old boy was arrested in Scotlandville, and booked on criminal mischief and telephone harassment charges, according to the state police.

The identities of the teen-agers were being withheld.

Ms. Lewis said the health department was urging local officials to keep water flowing unless tests find it to be contaminated, because most of the telephone threats appeared to be from "copycats."

"Water systems need not be shut down in most cases," said Gwen Stewart, another health department spokeswoman in Baton Rouge. She said the state was recommending that citizens simply be notified quickly about threats to their water.

"Health officials advise that even if water supplies are contaminated with cyanide, the use of such water for bathing purposes would involve little or no risk," she said.

Hammond Mayor Debbie Pope said chemists at West Payne Laboratories in Baton Rouge found about 7 parts of cyanide per billion parts of water from her city's system, but the level was so low that "an individual would have to drink about a swimming pool full to kill himself."

Las Vegas man denies monitored phone call with Dorfman

CHICAGO (AP) — A Las Vegas hotel operator denies that he received a telephone call that was monitored by the FBI from slain Teamsters associate Allen Dorfman allegedly demanding cash from him for the Chicago crime syndicate.

The three-way conversation between Dorfman, reputed mobster Joseph Lombardo and Morris Shenker, was reported in Tuesday's editions of The Wall Street Journal.

Authorities, meanwhile, were continuing their search for three men believed responsible for killing Dorfman gangland-style Thursday while he was awaiting sentencing on a bribery conviction.

In the May 22, 1979, conversation, Lombardo, Dorfman's co-defendant in the Teamsters bribery-conspiracy trial, allegedly warned the hotel operator "if they come back and tell me to give you a message and if you want to defy it, I assure you that you will never reach 73."

However, Shenker, who was then 72 and operator of the Dunes Hotel in Las Vegas, denies that the conversation took place, according to The Wall Street Journal.

Sherman Magidson, Lombardo's attorney, and Harvey Silets, Dorfman's attorney, refused comment on the report Tuesday. After repeated telephone calls, Douglas Roller, the federal prosecutor in the Teamsters bribery-conspiracy case, could not be reached for comment.

Lombardo is being held in the Metropolitan Correctional Center in lieu of a $2.5 million bond. Sentencing is set for Feb. 10.

The Wall Street Journal reported that in the FBI-wiretapped conversation Dorfman, a millionaire insurance executive, demanded money for the Chicago mob from the Dunes operation in a talk with Shenker.

Lombardo then entered the conversation and made an apparent reference to Dorfman, saying: "Allen is meek and Allen is harmless. But the people behind him are not meek and harmless. Do you know what I mean?...If he's got something coming, they got a piece of him and they're going to get it."

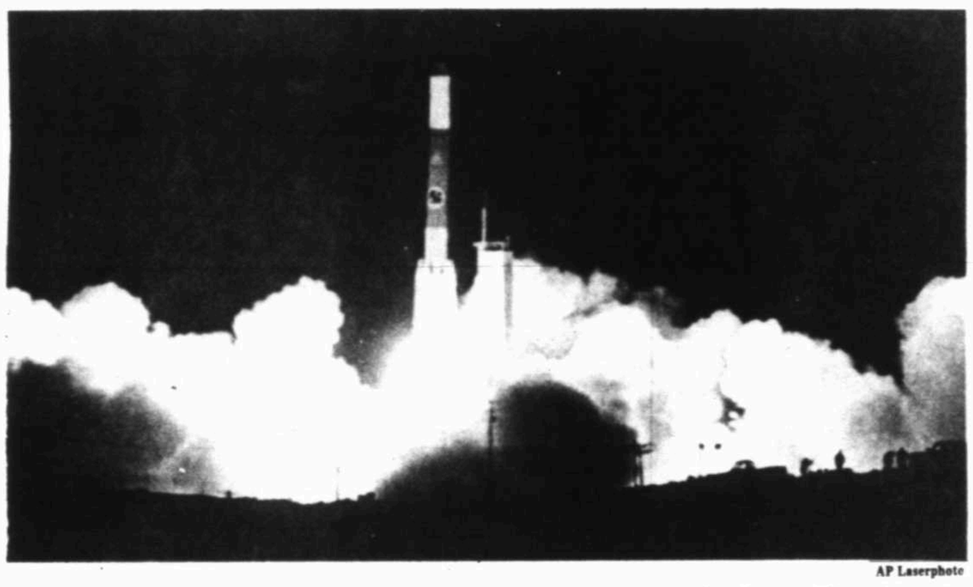

The transcript published in the Journal was part of an extensive wiretap surveillance that led to the conviction of Lombardo, Dorfman, Teamsters President Roy Williams and two others. They were accused of conspiring to bribe former Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev, who was not indicted in the case.

Meanwhile, police Tuesday canvassed a six-block area in Chicago in search of witnesses who may have seen a man discard a pistol apparently used in Dorfman's murder.

About a half-dozen officers went door to door in the city's Northwest Side, where the .22-caliber pistol was found Monday, said police spokeswoman Jaye Schroeder.

FBI agents and police from north suburban Lincolnwood already had combed part of the neighborhood Monday night but found no witnesses or clues, said Lincolnwood Police Chief Daniel Martin.

Dorfman, a former Teamsters pension fund consultant, could have been sentenced to 55 years in prison in the Teamsters case. He also was indicted in Chicago on an extortion charge and accused in San Francisco of taking part in an alleged kickback scheme involving two local unions.

An infrared space telescope was launched successfully Tuesday evening from Vandenberg Air Force Base in California. The telescope should be operational in about two weeks.

Infrared space telescope launched

VANDENBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — An infrared space telescope so powerful it can spot a speck of dust a mile away has been launched into orbit and should be operational in about two weeks, according to astronomers.

The launch of the Infrared Astronomical Satellite, or IRAS, went off as scheduled Tuesday evening into cloudy skies.

"Every indication we have shows that it was a good birth," said Frank Bristow, spokesman for the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena. "Everything to do with the orbit is right on the money."

If it works properly, astronomers hope the telescope will spot new stars invisible from Earth and perhaps tell more about Halley's comet, which is due to be seen from Earth in three years.

JPL is managing the U.S. phase of the mission, a joint project of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the Netherlands and Great Britain.

The infrared telescope should be operational in about two weeks, Bristow said, providing astronomers with a fuller picture of the galaxy and universe by detecting objects that either have been dimly seen in the past or never seen before.

"Everybody associated with it says it will rewrite the astronomy science books," he said.

The telescope detects infrared radiation, which is heat radiation but is not necessarily "hot" in the sense of human perception. Even cool objects emit infrared waves.

"Everything in nature radiates," said Dutch professor Harm Habing of the University of Leiden, European co-chairman of the project. "If it is cool, it radiates in the infrared. If it is hot, it radiates in the invisible (portion of the radiation spectrum). And if it is very hot, it radiates in X-rays."

Challenger leak could be serious

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A tiny hydrogen leak which reappeared during a test firing of the space shuttle Challenger's main engines may set back the entire shuttle program, including the U.S.-European Skylab mission, officials say.

The gas leak was found in Challenger's main engine compartment after a test firing Tuesday, and the director of the shuttle program said the start of the craft's five-day maiden mission will be delayed at least until mid-March.

Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson, associate administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said the delay could be much longer if one or more engines must be replaced. Officials said any replacement might come from the the shuttle Columbia, a veteran of five space missions which is undergoing extensive overhaul at the Kennedy Space Center.

Abrahamson said the entire shuttle program could be set back if Challenger's problem is serious. But he emphasized that it would be some time before all test data is analyzed and the full extent of the problem is known.

The hydrogen leak detected in Tuesday's test firing was "of the same order of magnitude as it was the first time," Abrahamson said. The problem first cropped up after the first engine test on Dec. 18.

"We've concluded, in our own mind, that it is a high-pressure leak in the high-pressure portions of the engines," said Horace Lamberth, fluid systems chief at the space center. He said it would take up to four weeks to replace one of the three main engines.

Finding the problem is going to be a "real detective job, and one that will be difficult," Abrahamson said. He said a third engine test, called a flight-readiness firing, may be made, causing even more delay.

"A good taco should be in you, not on you."

Tacos belong in your mouth, not on your shirt. So I make my Tio Sancho taco shells slightly thicker to hold together better.

Hoffman, Seegar join to aid New York rivers

NEW YORK (AP) — Abbie Hoffman, the former Yippie radical turned ecologist, and folk singer Pete Seeger are teaming up to help clean up New York state's rivers.

Abbie Hoffman

They will work with the New York Public Interest Research Group to stage a benefit "River Rat Ball" on Jan. 31 at Studio 54.

"When you talk about water," Hoffman told a news conference Tuesday, "you are talking about life itself. So this is a dance of life!"

The $20-a-ticket benefit will bring together as sponsors Seeger's Hudson River Clearwater organization and Hoffman's Save the River organization from the Thousand Islands area in the St. Lawrence River.

Hoffman calls the River Rat Ball "a cultural event of great importance." He said 75 celebrities, including former New York Jets quarterback Joe Namath and high wire walker Philippe Petit, are expected to be among 1,500 in attendance.

"We're going to put on our dancing boots and kick up our heels," said NYPIRG executive director Marilyn Ondrasik.

Hoffman explained that the term "River Rat" refers to people who live along rivers and are concerned about pollution. The expression, he said, comes from muskrats — "not like New York City rats which are icky-pooey."

NEW YORK (AP) — Former national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski is drawing sellout crowds on the lecture circuit — at Columbia University.

The Carter administration official is attracting so many students to his course that the meeting place had to be changed to a larger room in the School of International Affairs.

A class of 100 is considered large at the university, but 400 turned out Monday to hear Brzezinski lecture in his course, United States National Security Policies for the 1980s.

He told the students not to expect a "standard academic enterprise" because he does not intend to be objective. "What you'll be hearing is what I think and why I think so. That is the purpose of this course," said Brzezinski, leaning over a lectern.

Z. Brzezinski

Brzezinski said he was surprised by the turnout. But, he added, "It's better than being ignored."

LONDON (AP) — A new play by Tom Stoppard, called "The Real Thing," had enough right stuff to be named the best play of 1982 by The Standard, a London evening newspaper.

Tom Stoppard

The play about love and infidelity stars Roger Rees, who played Nicholas in the Royal Shakespeare Co.'s recent and acclaimed adaptation of Dickens' "Nicholas Nickleby."

Alec McGowan's portrayal of an aging Adolf Hitler in the play "The Portage to St. Cristobal of A.H." won him the best actor award.

Judi Dench was best actress for her performances as Lady Bracknell in "The Importance of Being Earnest" and in Harold Pinter's latest play, "A Kind of Alaska."

A special award to Sir John Gielgud was presented by his longtime colleague, Sir Ralph Richardson, in honor of his six decades on the British stage.

Judge will keep record filing secret in De Lorean case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The judge in John De Lorean's cocaine trafficking case has reaffirmed an order that all documents in the case be filed secretly, insisting there was no other way to ensure the automaker a fair trial.

U.S. District Judge Robert Takasugi said Tuesday that publicity surrounding the upcoming trial had declined since he issued the order Dec. 22.

"The court's intention is not the preservation of secrecy but of the judicial system's integrity to preserve a fair trial," Takasugi said, rejecting a motion by The Associated Press to lift or modify his order.

Attorney John Karaczynski, representing the AP, argued that the judge's order reverses the presumption that court documents should be public and available to the press.

"The press can only view a proceeding in a meaningful way if they have access to the documents," Karaczynski argued. He said the AP was considering an appeal.

The AP was joined in its motion by attorneys representing NBC, CBS, the Los Angeles Herald Examiner and the Greater Los Angeles Press Club.

De Lorean attorney Howard Weitzman called the judge's order "admirable" and said the trial should not be held in the media.

Co-defendants William Morgan Hetrick and Stephen Lee Arrington, who also are affected by the secrecy order, were present in court for the arguments Tuesday. De Lorean, 57, free on bail after his arrest last October, did not appear.

Takasugi also said he has decided to unseal certain briefs that were filed by the defense and the prosecution in secret on technical issues of discovery in the case.

The judge will announce which documents he is unsealing when he issues a written statement detailing the reasons for his secrecy order, Takasugi's clerk said.

The issue of access to pre-trial documents in the De Lorean case has delayed previously scheduled hearings for the automaker, who is charged with setting up a $24 million cocaine deal in an effort to raise money for his failing automobile company.

On another matter, the judge took under submission a motion by NBC to copy videotapes which the government plans to introduce as evidence at De Lorean's trial.

In Detroit, attorneys for De Lorean asked a U.S. Bankruptcy Court for some $700,000 they say the former automaker is owed by his firm.

The money was in the form of secured loans he made to keep De Lorean Motor Co. afloat last year, according to the petition filed Tuesday.

Statue to mark graveyard

ATLANTA (AP) — A blue granite statue of Jesus, 7 feet high, will be placed next to an exit along Interstate 75 to mark a pre-Civil War graveyard for blacks.

Slaves were buried in the plot before the Civil War, and later it continued to be used as a burial ground for blacks.

Peter Malphurs, an environmentalist with the state Department of Transportation, said that during the 1950s, the 4.4-acre plot became the site for a motel and liquor store.

Nearby residents, whose ancestors are buried in the plot, protested when the transportation department condemned the land to widen the highway.

A Superior Court judge last spring ruled that the DOT had the right to condemn the land, but instructed the state Department of Transportation to work with area residents to create a memorial for the cemetery.

"I think it is wonderful, and everything is working out fine," said the Rev. C.J. Johnson, a local pastor.

Trial pushed back

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Saying jurors need time to forget the publicity, a federal judge has delayed for a month the trial of seven New Orleans policemen whose case was explored by the CBS news show "60 Minutes" on Jan. 16.

The officers were charged with violating the civil rights of people they questioned about the murder of Officer Gregory Neupert, shot to death Nov. 8, 1980.

Their trial, shifted to U.S. District Court in Dallas on a change of venue, was scheduled to begin Feb. 7. U.S. District Judge Adrian Duplantier of New Orleans, who failed in two attempts to block the broadcast, set a new trial date of March 7.

Duplantier's action on Tuesday came after defense lawyers filed a motion seeking a six-month delay. They said that "would allow the impact of the program to dissipate and make it possible to pick a fair and impartial jury."

The defense got the trial shifted to Dallas on the claim that there had been so much publicity about the case here a fair trial would be impossible.

Priest: God over money

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — An American missionary in France says his peace with God is worth more than a $30 fine he thought he owed for a 2-year-old speeding ticket.

Officials in the Davidson County Criminal Court clerk's office said Tuesday they received a letter with a $35 check from Frank C. Goss, a missionary based in Sumene, France, but cannot locate the outstanding citation.

"This thing with the ticket came up this morning as I was praying," Goss wrote. "Can I ask God to bless a cheater? A thief? I will pay gladly rather than have something between my Lord and myself. I count peace with God to be worth more than $35."
