UTPB 4-year status bill dies with session

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — Proposed legislation to make the University of Texas of the Permian Basin (UTPB) a four-year school died at midnight Friday, as the 68th biennial session of Texas Legislature drew to a halt.

The bill, which passed the Senate in late April, died after it failed to be moved out of the calendar committee upon a second reading and was not submitted to a House vote. The House's 72-hour rule provides for the death of a bill if it's not on the floor of the House of Representatives 72 hours prior to the end of the legislative session. The current session ends at midnight Monday.

"We opposed it on educational reasons," said Dr. Jess Parrish, Midland College president who obviously was pleased with the bill's demise.

The bill would have allowed UTPB to offer freshman- and sophomore-level courses in an effort to stimulate enrollment at the upper-level university, which now offers junior, senior and graduate-level courses.

Parrish said presidents of 46 junior colleges opposed the bill. The president of Odessa College, however, did not, Parrish said.

Midland's Rep. Tom Craddick, who worked against the bill, noted, "I don't think anybody...is opposed" to getting enrollments up at UTPB and junior colleges.

Craddick is working on a measure to get UTPB out of its 60 semester-hour bind. The university currently can't enroll any prospective student who has earned less than 60 semester credit hours, which is equivalent to the first two years of college.

"We don't agree that the lack of freshman and sophomore years was their (UTPB's) problem," said Parrish, who elected not to delve into that area. "I do know that they had a little problem finding students who had achieved that 60 (semester) hours. They (the Legislature) didn't give them an equal shake with other (upper-level) institutions" which are not hindered by similar restrictions.

Unlike UTPB, most other upper-level universities are not legislatively-bound on how many semester hours a student must have before he or she is allowed to enroll.

The 60-hour restriction imposed on UTPB was not done with the intentions of being "harmful or detrimental" to the university, Craddick said, "but I think that's what it has been."

Of his opposition to UTPB's proposed four-year status, Parrish said, "We just feel that it's an unnecessary duplication." He noted that other Texas junior college presidents, except for Odessa College's chief administrator, had fought the measure in their common interest: To discourage any of the other several upper-level universities from seeking four-year status and thus undermining the junior colleges' enrollments and purposes.

The bill's proponents, including Rep. Jay Gibson of Odessa, failed to get the bill to the House floor, where an observer speculated it would have been resoundly defeated anyway.

Parrish said the re-appearance of a similar bill was slim.

"I think they know there's a formidable force" against it, Parrish said.

"We were very pleased with the support we got across the state" in the campaign against the measure and to help the cause of junior colleges. "I think they were appreciative of the fact that there's a lot of people in Austin and across the state working for them."

Reagan sees differences as 'fewer, less critical'

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Leaders of the world's major industrialized democracies arrived in this town of picket fences and clapboard houses Saturday as President Reagan told the nation that differences with the allies are "fewer and less critical today than in a long time."

The president held separate, private meetings on a brick patio behind an 18th century plantation house with French President Francois Mitterrand and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

A senior Reagan administration official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified by name, indicated the leaders were determined to move ahead with the politically sensitive deployment of new medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe while they continued to disagree on economic matters.

"People haven't come here to fight. They've come here to share ideas and demonstrate a greater sense of momentum in solving the problems of the free world," the official said.

One by one, in an order worked out by protocol, each of the visitors arrived for 10-minute meetings with Reagan at the Governor's Palace, a red and gray-brick building furnished as it was just before the American Revolution when it served the British colonial governor.

The flags of the summit nations flew outside and a variety of honor guards were on display, either in the powdered wigs and clothing of 18th century soldiers or modern military uniforms.

In the morning, the president made a brief tour of the restored colonial village of Williamsburg before turning to the business at hand, the ninth annual economic summit conference of the United States, Britain, Canada, France, West Germany, Italy and Japan.

The fife, drum and bugle corps played "Yankee Doodle" marching past the reviewing stand for all the visiting leaders except Mrs. Thatcher. Rather than stir echoes of the Revolutionary War, the band played "The British Grenadier" instead.

For their extended talks with the president after the welcoming ceremonies, Mitterrand and Mrs. Thatcher strolled under sunny skies from their quarters in restored 18th century homes up a pebble driveway to Providence Hall, Reagan's temporary residence.

'Restraint' in Mideast urged

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — The United States accused the Soviet Union on Saturday of contributing to new tensions in the Middle East and urged all sides "to exercise the utmost restraint so that the risk of conflict can be reduced."

In a statement reflecting rising concern that the "uneasy peace" in Lebanon was breaking down, the administration said "renewed conflict serves no one's interest."

Issued before the start of President Reagan's summit meeting with the leaders of six other industrialized nations, the statement said Syria's military buildup complicated diplomatic efforts to arrange a withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon.

Israel also drew a slap on the wrist for reversing its pullout of troops. But Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman, said that while no military buildup was justified, Israel was responding to Syrian provocations.

"I do not think we can pass judgment on the Israeli conduct in view of that they are clearly responding to a rather substantial buildup of the Syrian forces," Speakes said.

The statement was issued after Reagan met with his top advisers. It made no direct mention of the Soviet Union, but Speakes left no doubt the administration considered the Soviets responsible for increased tensions.

"They have been introducing additional weapons into the area and resupply the Syrians," he said.

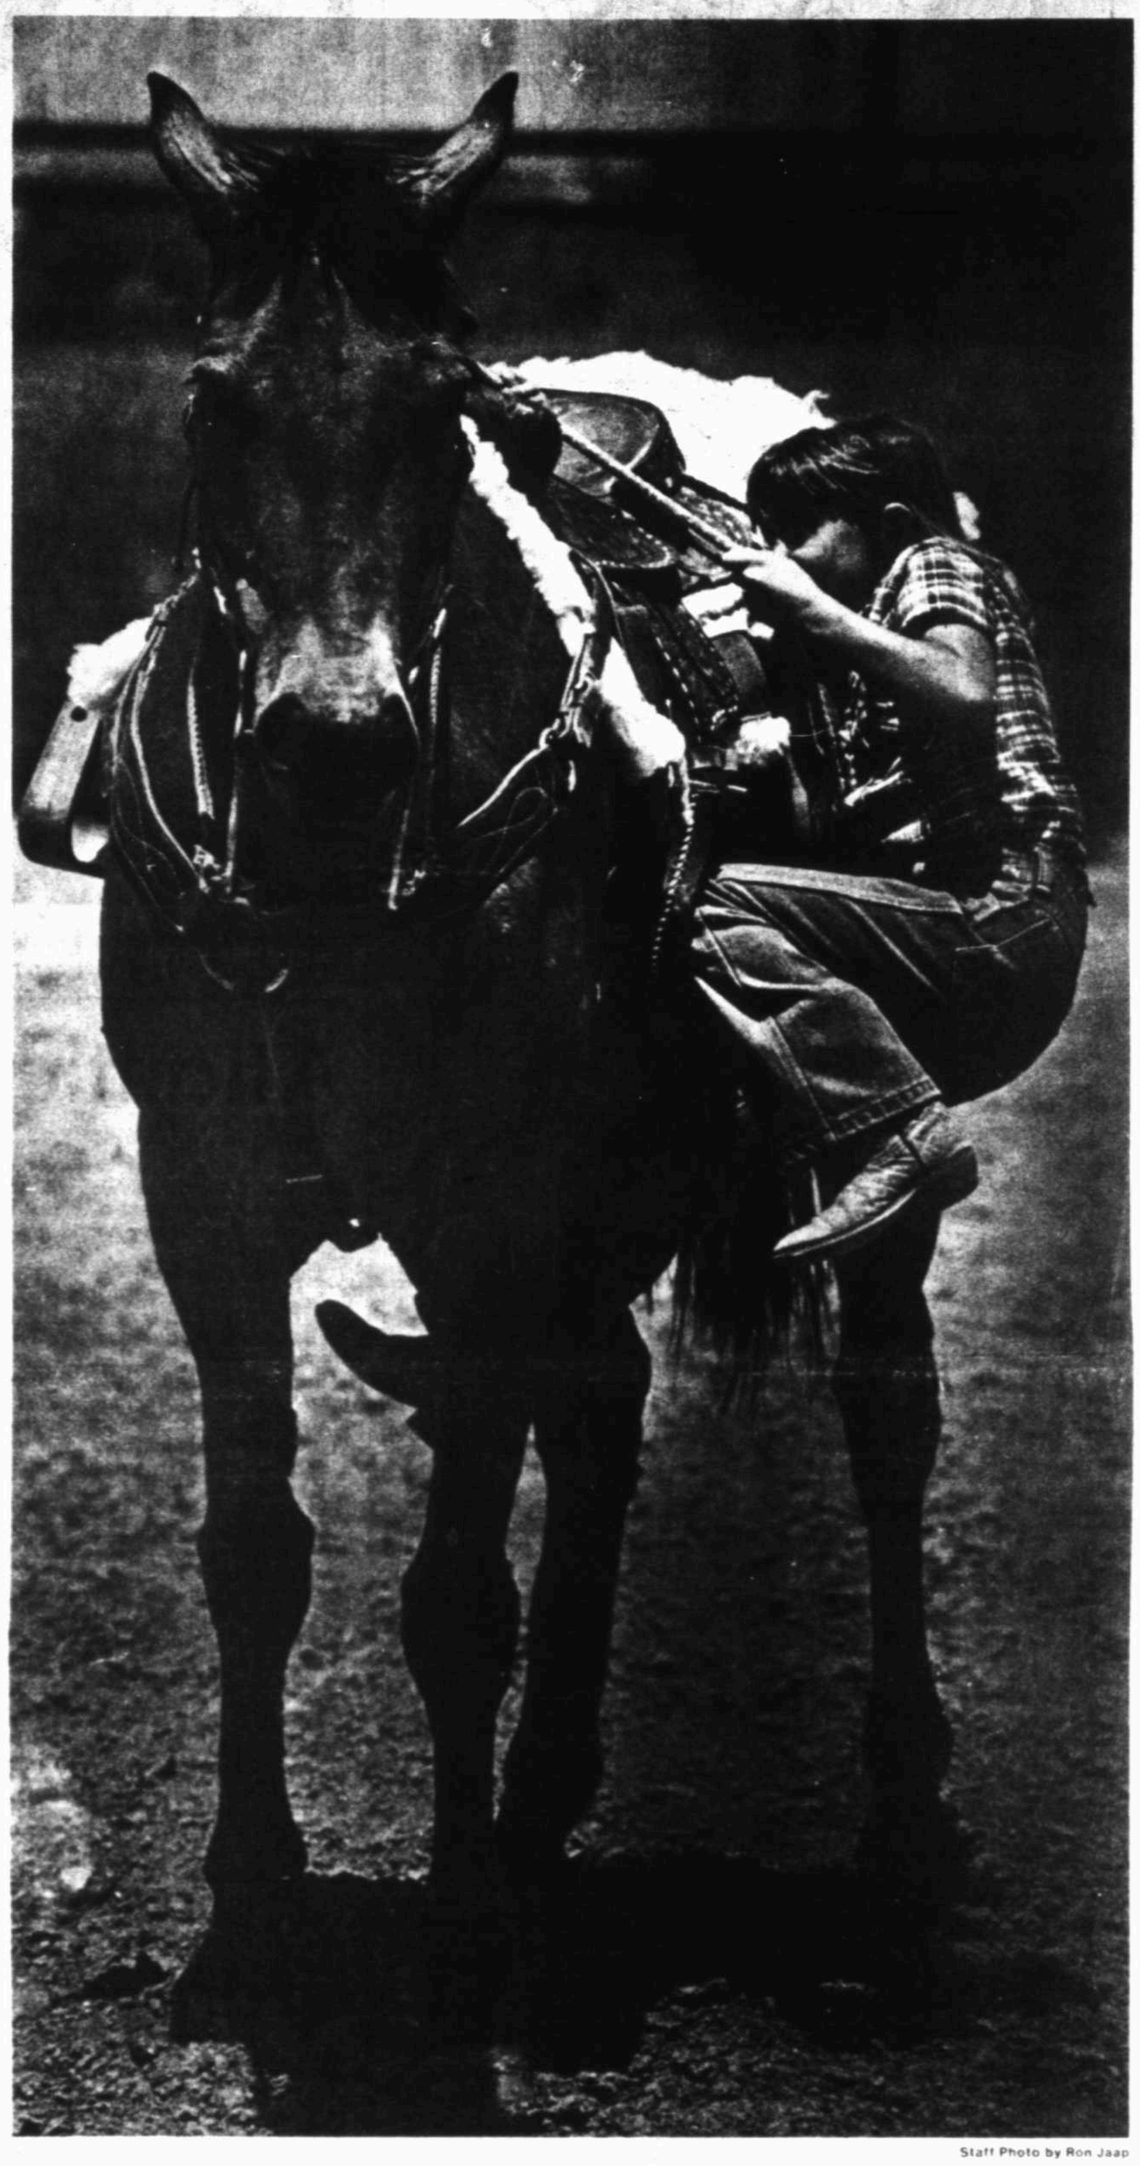

Asked if the statement referred to the Soviets as one of those "contributing to the tensions," he replied, "Yes, it does."

The U.S. criticism was focused principally on the Syrians, who had undertaken major military maneuvers in their country, moved an additional 1,000 troops into Lebanon and a few thousand closer to the Lebanese border, according to State Department officials.

Speakes said some of the buildup had been characterized as routine spring exercises. But, in any event, he said, "the main concern is that we do not have another outbreak of violence in the Middle East."

In Damascus, the Syrian military command issued a communique saying its armed forces had concluded the maneuvers with success and "have now returned to their normal situation and status."

In Lebanon, the state radio said Israel and Syria were sending more troops and tanks to their front lines in the Bekaa valley and in the central highlands.

Getting a 'hand' up

Riding the horse is easy compared to getting on it for 7-year-old Kim Meldrum. With the stirrup too high for her foot to reach, Kim pulls herself on with the aid of a rope tied to the saddle horn and a lot of determination. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Steve Meldrum, she was preparing for a meeting of the Tall City Youth Horse Club at the County Exhihibt Building on East Highway 80.

In Southie, they still remember

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — It was a rite of passage. In South Boston, you finished school and you joined the Marines. You did your time and you passed the test.

And on Memorial Day, Southie remembers.

Memorial Day is special in South Boston, a tough, Irish working class neighborhood of three-decker houses and 34,000 people. Southie is dotted with squares named after the dead from four wars. It has its own Vietnam War memorial, a black granite plaque set in a windswept park overlooking the Boston Edison generating plant.

In World War II a waterfront street named Marine Drive took on a double meaning as many of its young men joined the Corps after Pearl Harbor. In the Vietnam War, Southie lost 25 of its sons — a casualty ratio three times higher than the national average.

"The rich boys from Boston went to Exeter and Andover. We went to Parris Island (S.C.) for our finishing school," says Thomas Irwin, an alumni of Southie street corners, Gate of Heaven High School and the Marine Corps.

Irwin was one of hundreds who left South Boston in the 1960s bound for the service.

"It's what you did," says Mike Kelly, owner of the Corner Tavern, a gathering spot for Vietnam vets.

Tommy Lyons, who spent 13 months with the 3rd Marine Division along the Demilitarized Zone in Vietnam, remembers a childhood filled with family friends and neighborhood acquaintances who had served in the Marines.

They talked about the Corps with the same kind of pride they had about Southie," he says. "It went hand-in-hand."

An estimated 300 Southie residents served in Vietnam. There were no grand welcomes, no bands or parades when they came home. But neither was there the animosity that veterans complained of elsewhere.

So Lyons, Irwin and other Vietnam vets set out to remember their friends. They held a dance, sold bumper stickers and put jars in the neighborhood bars. Southie's residents chipped in and raised $34,000 for a memorial.

Lyons' concern was for the sons of Southie who returned to flag-marked graves. Eighteen of his friends who had hung out on the corner of O and 2nd streets served in Vietnam; three of them were killed. Eight members of Lyons' park league football team didn't come back.

"Once you realized the kids you grew up with weren't going to be hanging around the corner or calling you on the phone you wanted to do something," he said.

"People were sending money from as far away as California," Lyons says. "These were former Southie people who wanted to help out."

On Sept. 13, 1981, Southie dedicated its small memorial — more than a year before the Vietnam Memorial in Washington was dedicated. There were parades and speeches with the families of the 25 servicemen who died in Vietnam treated as the honored guests.

"Those 25 families were one family that day," says Walter Milan, whose son Eddie died in Vietnam at the age of 23.

The memorial remains a focal point for the community. It sits in a circle of grass, surrounded by a low iron fence. The 25 names cut into the black rock are flanked by the image of two M-16 rifles, muzzles down, with helmets hanging from the stock — the sign of a fallen soldier. "If you forget my death, then I died in vain," the monument reads.

Southie has not forgotten. Funeral homes send surplus flowers to the monument each week. The families — each with a key to the memorial's gate — keep the grounds clear. Passers-by stop to pick up bits of litter caught in the fence.

"The country asked and they went," says Eddie Milan's father. "It's just the way we were brought up."

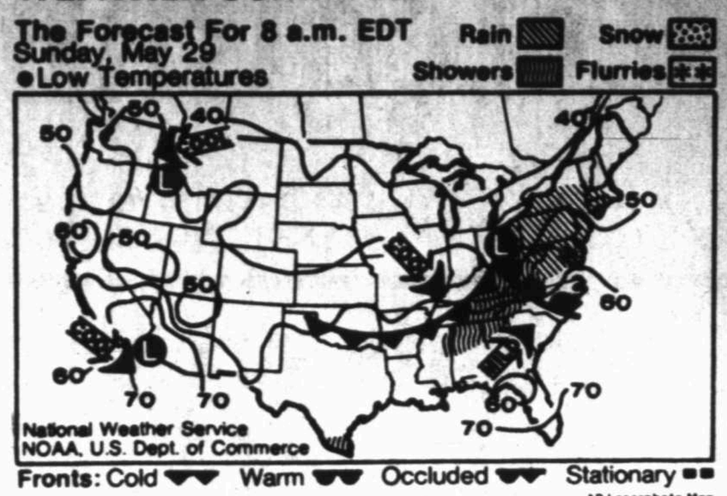

Memorial Day events grow from observance held in 1868

By The Associated Press

Many Americans will pay tribute to their fallen warriors on Memorial Day weekend with the laying of graveside wreaths and the establishment of new monuments in communities from Alabama to Minnesota.

The holiday was begun in 1868 as Decoration Day, set aside for the decoration of graves of Civil War dead. It later became an observance for all American war dead.

WEATHER SUMMARY

The National Weather Service forecast for Sunday predicts rain for parts of most seaboard states stretching west to the Ohio River Valley.

Weekend weather still pleasant

The last half of the Memorial Day weekend is expected to mirror the first half: pleasant.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, skies today will be partly cloudy with temperatures near 90. Tonight's low, again under partly cloudy skies, will be in the mid-60s.

Monday will dawn partly cloudy and the temperature will rise to the low 90s. No rain is forecast for either day.

The record high temperature of 102 for this date was set in 1974. The record low was 50, established in 1952.

Rainfall this month has totaled .27 of an inch and for the year to date 1.94 inches.

Atlantic hurricane season blows in

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — Warm Pacific Ocean winds that caused a drought in Australia and torrential rains in Peru may meddle next with the summer hurricanes in the Atlantic.

The hurricane season, responsible for fierce storms with winds that can reach 150 mph or more, officially starts Wednesday and continues through Nov. 30.

Forecasters at the National Hurricane Center say the big monster storms will be delayed until mid-August or September because of the return of the El Nino phenomena, the occasional unusual warming of the sea.

The forecasters said El Ninos have been warmer and more whimsical than ever this year.

The phenomenon adds unusual strength to the upper atmosphere jet stream and "blows the tops off" storms before they can become hurricanes, National Hurricane Center forecaster Gil Clark said.

The dramatic reduction in the southeastern trade winds that cause El Ninos happens every 10 to 15 years. El Nino, Spanish for child, is is named for the Christ child because it usually comes in late December.

El Ninos surprised meteorologists by starting in September last year, bringing the most severe temperature fluctuations of the century for the "the warmest event ever recorded," Clark said.

El Ninos have been blamed for droughts this year in Australia and Southeast Asia, the flooding that caused mudslides in Ecuador and Peru, less than normal monsoon rains in India and the heavy storms in California and across the southern United States.

Scientists are beginning to believe the periodic warm currents are linked to a huge shift in barometric pressure in the Southern Hemisphere known as the southern oscillation. The event usually lasts 12 to 18 months.

El Ninos form when the surface winds over the ocean drop dramatically, allowing the water to warm rapidly. The heat from the ocean rises, adding strength to the jet stream. "The jet stream begins to increase and blows the top off these developing tropical storms," Clark said.

Ordinarily during hurricane season, the jet stream diminishes to almost nothing.

If the pattern holds, El Ninos will last a few more months and "by September, things will be back to normal," Clark said.

Clark said the short season would have no effect on the severity of storms at the height of hurricane season in September and October or the development of small tropical storms earlier in the season.

"It does look like there will be less than the total average number of storms, but you still have a chance of major storms later on. We do know that we've seen in the past you can have some very serious storms after El Nino," he said.

During the last major El Nino in 1973-74 hurricanes didn't develop until August. The season brought six storms, including three hurricanes. They all developed from August through October.

"This pattern may be similar to 1973," Clark said.

Dr. John Byrne, director of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration in Washington, said further statistics show hurricanes are more frequent following the reduction in winds. That would be August or September.

For example, Hurricane Donna, which claimed 50 lives in 1960, followed an El Nino year, as did Hurricane Audrey in 1957, which killed 300 in Cameron, La., he said.

Some of those hurrinames might make storms himmicanes

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — Alicia, Barry, Chantal and Dean may be remembered in years to come. Or perhaps Erin, Felix, Gabrielle and Hugo will be the storms to talk about.

They are the names heading the list of the 1983 Atlantic hurricane season, which begins Wednesday.

For several hundred years, West Indies hurricanes were named after the saint's day on which the storm hit, such as Hurricane Santa Ana, which struck Puerto Rico in 1825.

During World War II, forecasters began using women's names. In 1979, they changed to an alternating male-female list.

The rest of the names on this year's list are: Iris, Jerry, Karen, Luis, Marilyn, Noel, Opal, Pablo, Roxanne, Sebastian, Tanya, Van and Wendy.

Utah city's streets becoming canals

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A busy city street was turned into a makeshift canal Saturday to help drain a dangerously swollen reservoir, while rising temperatures turned mountain snowpack into floods that lapped at homes, forced evacuations and closed roads.

Cities in the northern half of the state reported isolated flooding and officials feared the water could rise as temperatures reached the low 90s in the area, where most of Utah's 1.5 million residents live.

In Bountiful, just north of Salt Lake City, about 200 residents of nursing homes were evacuated because of flooding.

Floods closed some mountain roads throughout northern and central Utah, and a state road near the Sundance ski resort at Provo Canyon was choked off by rising water that threatened several cabins.

The flooding began early last week as the record mountain snowpack, held firm by unseasonable cold, withered under temperatures that suddenly pushed into the 80s and 90s.

"Some moderating temperatures would help us," said Dave Lovell, Salt Lake County planning administrator. "The high temperatures are bringing it down all at once."

But the forecast was for continued hot weather through Sunday.

In Salt Lake City, water up to 5 feet deep rolled along a 6-foot-high sandbag-and-plastic dike along 1300 South Street to the Jordan River to keep rapidly filling Mountain Dell Reservoir from overflowing.

City and county crews and volunteers worked overnight to build the 2-mile-long dike on the four-lane highway. Water was released from Mountain Dell about 5 a.m. and kept flowing at 50-cubic-foot increments, said John Hiskey, aide to Mayor Ted Wilson.

The sudden pressure pushed runoff "with a percolating effect" through Sugarhouse Park upstream and runoff seeped into basements in several nearby homes, Hiskey said.

And before the dike was completed, knee-deep runoff covered a four-block area where flows from three creeks converged, said Al Haines, city administrative officer.

Runoff was cut off when the dike was completed and city officials were inspecting damage to several homes and businesses in the area.

Terry Holzworth, Salt Lake County flood control director, said the flow through the makeshift canal eventually would reach 390 cubic feet of water per second.

System scatters showers

By The Associated Press

A low pressure system over the middle Mississippi Valley scattered showers and thunderstorms Saturday from northeastern Arkansas and western Tennessee into Kentucky, southern Illinois, Indiana and Ohio.

Bowling Green, Ky., got 0.66 of an inch of rain in the 6-hour period ended at 2 p.m. EDT.

Farther north, another Mississippi Valley weather system triggered thunderstorms over Minnesota and southeastern South Dakota. Half-inch hailstones were reported at Redwood Falls, Minn.

A severe thunderstorm watch was issued for parts of Minnesota, South Dakota, Nebraska snd Iowa.

An isolated cluster of midday thunderstorms dumped 0.94 of an inch of rain at Dallas and spawned two funnel clouds at Red Oak, Texas, just south of Dallas.

Some Arkansas fields too wet, even for rice

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Low-lying lands in northeastern Arkansas are so wet that farmers think they'll have trouble making money this year on rice — a crop that thrives on water.

Farmers and agricultural officials said last week that rain will be welcome once the rice has been sown and grows a bit. Rice is easier and cheaper to plant in dry ground.

"If it continues like this, it's going to be a problem on a lot of this low-lying land," A.B. Clark "I don't know if we'll get anything at all on it. Those areas are in pretty drastic shape now."

Clark said Wednesday he had 4 feet of water on some of his land.

Arkansas is the nation's leading rice producer with acreage growing the fastest in the northeastern part of the state. Last year, Craighead County alone grew 85,000 acres of rice while the state had 1.35 million planted.

But much of northeastern Arkansas was hit hard during December's floods and frequent, heavy showers have kept the water table high.

Clark, who farms 3,000 acres, said he planned to sow 950 acres with rice this year. He had 725 acres planted Wednesday, but the sowing was done late and by airplane instead of tractor.

James Peachey, Craighead County extension agent chairman, said farmers can plant rice in wet weather, but they might have problems later.

Peachey said the most desirable long-grain varieties of rice require long seasons and farmers are having to turn to medium- and short-grain rices because of planting delays.

Despite optimistic air, summit facing some serious issues

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — The idyllic colonial surroundings will surely prompt optimistic talk of a budding economic restoration, but western leaders are certain to rivet summit attention to several serious and nagging problems:

—Persistent and high unemployment, particularly in Great Britain, West Germany, Italy and the United States.

—The gruesome international debt situation — with $750 billion at stake — that perils the western nations, which made massive loans to developing countries pinched by lingering recession.

—Trade barrier disagreements between practically everyone and Japan.

Despite these troubles, and more security-oriented issues such as upcoming missile deployments in Europe, summit organizers are hoping for an upbeat message from sessions that began Saturday and run through Monday.

"Confidence ... will be a major part of the message of Williamsburg," says Allen Wallis, undersecretary of state for economic affairs and a key planner of the summit attended by leaders from the United States, Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, West Germany and the European Common Market.

Adds French Ambassador Bernard Vernier-Palliez, "The summit is not the place for confrontation."

Beneath this surface calm, most of the leaders are struggling with economies crippled by high unemployment, still-lingering inflation, slow or no growth, and weakened currencies.

They blame some of their problems on the United States.

French President Francois Mitterand recently complained that the United States was making Europe pay the bill for its mammoth budget deficits, contending that federal borrowing keeps interest rates high and raises the value of the dollar compared with other major currencies.

President Reagan, asked about European complaints in interviews before he arrived here, said he believes his economic plan is working. "I don't care what the pessimists say and what the opponents say about it," he said.

He noted the decline in interest and inflation rates and the upturn in the housing and retail industries, and said: "All of these things have taken place and they didn't just come like locusts because the seasons changed ... we must have been doing something that was right."

He added, "We are not ignoring our economic responsibilities. We didn't ask for the strong dollar. The strong dollar came about because of our success, so far, in reducing inflation in our country in comparison to the decline of inflation in other countries. ...

"I think the relationship between the currencies must be resolved by this general recovery and by more stability."

Peruvian military sources say 213 killed in guerrilla war

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LIMA, Peru — In a sharp rise in the death toll in the guerrilla war in Peru's central highlands, military sources said this week that 213 people were killed last week.

Brigadier Clemente Noel y Moral, military commander of the nine-province antiguerrilla emergency zone based in the city of Ayacucho, said 160 of the victims were guerrillas, 51 were civilians and 2 were from the security forces.

The latest casualties bring the official death count to more than 1,000 since the Maoist-led Sendero Luminoso ("Shining Path") movement began armed struggle three years ago. More than 800 have died since January, when President Fernando Belaunde Terry dispatched an armed forces task force, estimated to be 4,000 strong, to Ayacucho to back up a failing police effort.

Belaunde said Sunday that the armed forces will be gradually withdrawn and replaced by fresh police units. However, many observers consider this unlikely, since the recent killings have had little impact on the Senderos' military capacity. Unofficial reports indicate that the majority of victims have been peasants, killed in helicopter raids by the security forces on isolated Quechua Indian communities.

British party finds niceness not enough

An Analysis

By MAUREEN JOHNSON

CROSBY, England (AP) — In a shopping center of this rambling northwest England district, a few dozen people cluster round Britain's other woman political heavyweight: Shirley Williams, the president of the Social Democratic Party.

Some come to argue, but most just want to say good luck to the politician Crosby returned to Parliament 18 months ago in a stunning special election defeat for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative Party.

"She's a marvelous person, she's always here, she cares, she's natural and, well, she's not like Mrs. Thatcher, is she?" says 42-year-old Eileen Clark. "I'll vote for her any time."

If being likeable were enough, Mrs. Williams and the centrist SDP-Liberal Party alliance would be poised to shatter the stranglehold of Britain's two major parties in the June 9 elections.

Instead, Mrs. Williams and the alliance — which was favored by 44 percent of the public in opinion polls in December 1981 — are battling to stay alive. Opinion polls now give the alliance support from 18-22 percent of the public, about 30 percentage points behind the Conservatives and 15 points behind the Labor Party.

ALLIANCE LEADERS blame their problems on last year's Falklands war, which boosted Mrs. Thatcher's popularity, and voters' resignation to the prime minister's tough fiscal policies. And the leaders say voters fear supporting the alliance would result in left-wing Labor assuming power.

Critics say the alliance, which seeks to end politics based on social class, is too bland, too nice and tries too hard to be all things to all people.

"During this 1983 campaign the alliance is destroying itself before televiewers' eyes by adopting the policies of the dead center which would send Britain back to sleep," commented the Economist magazine, no friend to Mrs. Thatcher or Labor.

There's also a sense of deja vu about some of the alliance's platform.

For example, it supports voluntary wage controls to curb inflation without inviting strikes. The last two administrations — one Tory and one Labor — before Mrs. Thatcher's 1979 victory were defeated after trying just that.

The alliance maintains it can still win by depriving Mrs. Thatcher of a majority and thereby holding the balance of power.

LIBERAL LEADER David Steel has told campaign managers to turn their attention from Labor and concentrate instead on blocking a Thatcher landslide by seeking support from wavering Conservatives.

"Labor is terminally ill," Mrs. Williams said during a respite from shaking hands in a pub.

"If Labor can't win now with nearly 4 million unemployed, and it can't, it can never win again. I haven't any doubt the alliance at this election or the next is destined to become the major opposition party at first and then the alternative government."

Mrs. Williams' forays into this mainly middle-class district six miles outside Liverpool show how tough the immediate battle is — like the three other SDP co-founders, she is in danger of losing her seat in Parliament.

All four are former Labor cabinet ministers who broke away in protest over Labor's leftward drift. They were joined by 25 others and linked up with the Liberals for a 42-seat block in the 635-member House of Commons.

The 74,000-voter Crosby district was safe for the Tories for 60 years, and the 52-year-old Mrs. Williams, who won by 5,000 votes in 1981, concedes it will be hard to hold.

IN ONE LOW-INCOME housing project, she traipses through decaying apartment blocks. A young woman complains about a leaky roof, a disabled man hobbles up to thank her for answering a letter about his pension.

Meanwhile, a Williams campaign truck heads for a nearby suburb, bearing a huge poster reading, "Vote for one nation for a change."

Later, at the temporary SDP campaign office, Mrs. Williams holds a news conference for three reporters. Watched by a half-dozen young, enthusiastic aides, she says:

"The polls will soon begin to turn. You'll see."

Probe of death begun

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Officials have discovered that the probe of the murder of a U.S. military adviser was started by the wrong court, and have transferred it to another jurisdiction, a court official said Saturday.

Navy Lt. Cmdr. Albert Schaufelberger III, the deputy commander of U.S. military advisers, in El Salvador was gunned down last Wednesday evening as he waited in his car to pick up a girlfriend.

The Popular Liberation Forces, largest of five leftist rebel groups, claimed responsibility and called the killing a warning of bloodshed to come if the Reagan administration increases U.S. involvement in the civil war here.

The case originally was assigned to San Salvador's 6th Penal Court, which started to conduct the equivalent of a grand jury investigation. But it has been transferred to the 2nd Penal Court in Santa Tecla, seven miles west of the capital, Santa Tecla court clerk Edgardo Ventura said in a telephone interview Saturday.

He said that in the confusion following the murder, the case was assigned to the 6th Penal Court because Schaufelberger's body was brought to the capital, where an autopsy was performed and a justice of the peace conducted the equivalent of a coroner's inquiry.

Apparently, the justice of the peace sent his report to the 6th penal court. But Ventura said the mistake was discovered, and the case transferred to the 2nd Penal Court, in whose jurisdiction Schaufelberger was murdered.

Ventura said the Santa Tecla court took up where the San Salvador court left off. He said the National Police also is investigating the case, and that the results would be given to the court for indictments.

Students demolish classroom

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Student protesters caused an estimated $17,000 in damage when they used axes and Molotov cocktails to wreck a rented classroom building in this Mexican border town, a professor says.

A policeman and a fireman were injured in Friday's siege by about 500 Hermanos Escobar agricultural college students, who also blocked the bridge between here and El Paso.

"This is no longer vandalism, but terrorism," said Victor de la Rosa, a professor and member of a group that split with the protest movement.

"The proof is the strategic management of the assault. We see there is a power vacuum in the city. There's no authority," he said.

De la Rosa, who with the 356 students in the splinter group have used the rented building since early May, estimated damage at $17,000.

"The protest's purpose changed. They just want power. These (356) students are tired of wasting time," de la Rosa said.

Protest leader Alfredo Aguirre Carrette, 24, conceded the violence "reached extremes we hadn't planned on."

The destruction was part of an ongoing protest by the Hermanos Escobar agricultural college students, who want the private school to become a public university so it can receive federal funds.

The school's campus has been under the de facto control of a committee of students, teachers and workers for a year.

Walesa asks for time off

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa, leader of the outlawed Solidarity union, has asked the Lenin Shipyard for time off during Pope John Paul II's visit to Poland June 16-23, informed sources said Saturday.

In another development, police interrogated Walesa for three hours Saturday, but he said he still refused to answer questions about his jailed advisers. It was the second day he had been questioned, and he was summoned for a third time on Monday.

The sources said Walesa wrote a letter to the shipyard's management Friday which read:

"I ask the management to grant me a leave between June 16-24 as my annual vacation. I intend to use that time for participating along with my family in His Holiness John Paul II's pilgrimage to Poland.

"I express conviction that the management of Lenin Shipyard will not deprive me of the possibilities of participation in this great event."

Sources said Walesa hopes to present a plaque with an allegorical picture depicting "the Pieta of martyred Poland" to John Paul.

Walsea has declined to discuss his plans for that week with Western reporters, and Polish authorities have indicated they oppose a public meeting between the the labor leader and the pope. But Vatican sources have said the two men plan to meet.

Emerging from Gdansk police headquarters, Walesa told Western reporters he was told to report to police headquarters again Sunday but won a 24-hour reprieve after arguing that he was overworked from long shifts at the Lenin Shipyard and needed to rest.

Walesa, 39, said he refused for a second time to answer any questions about the five advisers, members of the Committee of Defense of Workers-Committee of Social Defense (KOR-KSS).

They have been jailed since the December 1981 imposition of martial law in Poland on charges of seeking to overthrow the Communist system.

Crewmen to be held responsible

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Police said Saturday the Nile steamer that sank in flames last week had no functioning fire extinguishers and that 38 crewmen will be charged with negligence in the disaster, believed to have killed 317 people.

Maj. Gen. Farouk Noureddin, security director for the southern province of Aswan, said two more bodies were found Saturday in the waters of Lake Nasser, where the ferry 10th of Ramadan sank at dawn last Wednesday.

That raised the official death toll to 196, with 121 still missing. Noureddin said 325 people survived out of the 600 passengers and 42 crew members aboard when the steamer caught fire and sank about 525 miles south of Cairo.

The newspaper Al-Ahram, which has a team of reporters at the scene, said 75 more bodies were recovered Friday and that this brought the confirmed dead to 272.

Noureddin said the search would continue, but Aswan police Capt. Samir Aly said he did not think all the missing ever would be found because of the crocodiles in the area.

In a telephone interview from Aswan, Noureddin said 38 crew members who survived the fiery sinking had been detained by authorities and that they would be charged with negligence.

Lebanese fear war between Israel, Syria

EDITOR'S NOTE — Associated Press writer Scheherezade Faramarzi traveled to the front line on the Israeli-held side of the Bekaa Valley on Saturday, while AP writer Terry A. Anderson toured the Syrian side a few miles away. This dispatch, written by Anderson, is based on their reporting.

By TERRY A. ANDERSON

CHTAURA, Lebanon (AP) — Hundreds of Syrian troops moved eastward Saturday from this Bekaa Valley town toward the Syrian border, while the opposing Israeli army moved more reinforcements up to a tense cease-fire line.

Farmers and others who live in the Bekaa valley say they are frightened that war might break out. And soldiers on each side blame the other for increasing tensions on the front lines.

Several dozen camouflage-painted Syrian trucks, each carrying between 6 and 30 soldiers, rolled eastward during the day down the Beirut-Damascus highway from Chtaura, the Syrian army's Bekaa headquarters 20 miles east of Beirut and 10 miles to the south or west from the Israeli-Syrian front line.

Dozens of tanks were parked on the south side of the highway outside the Palestinian-held village of Majdal Anjar, with a dozen large artillery pieces in a semicircle in a field across the road. No other tanks or heavy artillery were seen along the main highway or several roads to the north and south.

A Palestinian commander, who asked not to be named, confirmed Syria had brought reinforcements into the Bekaa recently, as well as new Soviet-made SAM-6 missiles, a mobile anti-aircraft system.

THE COMMANDER would give no numbers or locations of the Syrian reinforcements. U.S. intelligence sources say Syria added two brigades to its 40,000-man force in eastern and northern Lebanon last week.

On the Israeli side of the line, AP reporter Scheherezade Faramarzi counted at least 60 Israeli vehicles — including trucks carrying ammunition and other supplies, fuel tankers and troop buses — at one checkpoint along the road leading toward the Bekaa from the southern towns of Marjayoun and Jezzine.

A source close to the Israeli-backed militia of Saad Haddad told AP reporter Edmond Shedid in southern Lebanon that about 500 Israeli tanks, armored personnel carriers, troop buses and other vehicles had crossed into Lebanon on Friday and Saturday.

Diplomatic sources in Beirut say the Israelis now have more than 28,000 soldiers and 400 tanks in Lebanon.

"There have been (shelling exchanges) every night. Sometimes we watch the lights from the roof," said the owner of a local hotel, who requested anonymity.

Saleh Bergheshi, a 50-year-old farmer near Rachaya, told Miss Faramarzi: "Everyone is speaking about war. The radios are mentioning it. What do you think?"

"The situation is not normal," added another farmer, 60-year-old Mahmoud Sharafedding. "You see all these tanks and armored cars moving up and down the road."

DONIA KHAMIS, a 15-year-old Druse girl said: "I'm afraid. Do you think there will be war? They (the Israelis) want it, don't they? Everyone is talking about war. Families discuss it at home, there are unusual Israeli movements on the road. They move all night. All this scares us."

Soldiers on both sides said they were ready for war, but they hoped fighting didn't break out.

"The Israelis always want war," said the Palestinian commander. "The Syrians must be ready. They will fight, but they do not want to. The Israeli planes (making repeated reconnaissance runs over Syrian-held territory this week) show it. When they get ready to fight they always do that."

An Israeli major at Rachaya, 22 miles to the south, said to Miss Faramarzi: "I don't see any war. Of course, we have to (be ready). The Syrians want the war. We won't start one but if they do, we will make them shut up."

Despite more stringent checks by Syrian soldiers, civilian traffic was nearly normal on the Syrian side of the Bekaa. Shops were open for business in Majdal Anjar, Chtaura, Zahle and other towns.

IN THE CENTRAL mountains between the Bekaa and Beirut, Syrian checkpoints were frequent — some only a few hundred yards apart — and the soldiers manning them were more strict than usual.

Travellers' papers were checked carefully and sometimes their cars were searched. Visible weaponry ranged from rifles to rocket-propelled grenades and occasional heavy machineguns.

At the first checkpoint manned by Israeli soldiers, just outside the Syrian-held town of Sofar, at least four Israeli tanks had been brought forward within the past few days.

Until last week, the large barricade of earth, barbed wire and sandbags had been manned only by a few soldiers and an armored personnel carrier, with a single M60 tank parked several hundred yards down the road.

Israeli defense minister says military ready for anything

JERUSALEM (DPA) — Israel's military forces are prepared for any eventuality, Defense Minister Moshe Arens said in an interview with Radio Jerusalem Saturday.

He said Israel's leadership was not certain whether Syria had embarked on a war of nerves against Israel or was planning an armed offensive against the Israeli forces in Lebanon.

Arens said he hoped Syria's most recent military moves and the troop buildup in occupied East Lebanon were only meant for defensive purposes as Syrian War Minister Mustafa Tlass had said in his statement Friday.

Arens said Syria regarded the Israeli-Lebanese agreement on a troop withdrawal from Lebanon as a "far-reaching Israeli success." Syrian President Hafez Assad was doing all in his power to prevent the implementation of the agreement, Arens added.

Sources: Assad visited Moscow

BEIRUT, Lebanon (DPA) — Syrian President Hafez Assad visited Moscow secretly last weekend, the Beirut daily Al Safir reported Saturday, quoting informed Arab sources.

The sources gave no details about the talks said to have taken place between Assad and Soviet leaders during the secret visit. But they pointed out that the talks undoubtedly related to current developments in Lebanon and the Middle East.

The sources added that it was probable that Assad had also discussed with Soviet leaders bilateral relations in the political and military fields in the wake of the signing of the Lebanese-Israeli agreement on the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon.

Muscovites banned from forests

MOSCOW (AP) — While West Europeans soak in unseasonal rainstorms, Moscow's May is so hot that city authorities Saturday banned Muscovites from certain forested areas outside the capital and warned them not to start any fires.

Soviets head for the countryside on weekends and a country outing traditionally includes a campfire gathering.

The government banned travel to areas that are danger spots for forest or peatbog fires. The order also prohibits Muscovites from starting campfires, and burning garbage or tree branches in any agricultural areas, private plots, and junkyards in the restricted areas.

Gunmen kill guards in Spain

PAMPLONA, Spain (AP) — Gunmen believed to be Basque separatists shot and killed two paramilitary civil guards Saturday at the Pamplona post office in northern Spain, police said.

Police said they suspected the terrorists were members of Basque Nation and Liberty (ETA), the Basque separatist organization.

One man died on the scene and another was pronounced dead on arrival at a hospital.

They were 15th and 16th victims of political violence in Spain this year.

The attackers, witnesses said, were two young men that shot their pistols at the guards standing a yard away from them. Both guards died from head wounds.

Officer killed in gangland war

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — Gunmen killed a police officer Friday night and an unidentified man in his 30s early Saturday, raising the 1983 death toll in a bloody gang war to 101, officials said.

Police said four men armed with hand guns killed the 22-year-old paramilitary police officer Friday night before making off in a speeding car.

An unidentified man in his early 30s was shot to death Saturday morning in the countryside outside this southern port city.

Both killings appeared to be gangland murders, officials said. A battle for control of the city's lucrative cigarette smuggling racket among rival gangs of the Camorra, a Mafia-styled crime gang, claimed 265 lives last year.

Nazi buff confesses to forging diaries

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BONN, West Germany — A flamboyant, free-spending Stuttgart dealer in Nazi memorabilia has confessed to forging the discredited diaries of Adolf Hitler, and the reporter he sold them to has been arrested on fraud charges, the Hamburg state prosecutor announced Friday.

Prosecutor Peter Beck said that Konrad Kujau, 44, who occasionally wore an old Nazi uniform during his frequent visits to Stuttgart night spots, has admitted faking the 62 volumes of the purported diaries. Beck refused, however, to disclose details of Kujau's alleged confession.

Excerpts of the purported diaries were published in the mass-circulation news-magazine Stern, which originally hailed the diaries as a major journalistic coup of the post-World War II era. It has since described the diaries "as the most expensive waste paper collection in the world."

The diaries were exposed by government experts on May 6 as "blatant, grotesque and superficial forgeries," and the magazine was widely condemned for failing to take adequate steps to authenticate the diaries.

Disclosure of the forgeries led to a major shakeup at the magazine and the dismissal of its veteran reporter, Gerd Heidemann, 52, who had secured the diaries from Kujau at the magazine's behalf.

Beck said that Kujau's alleged confession led to the arrest of Heidemann at his home in Hamburg Thursday night. He was charged with fraud and withholding information in the investigation into the diaries.

THE MAGAZINE had previously accused Heidemann of fraud in the civil suit filed the day before his dismissal. Heidemann has steadfastly insisted that he was an innocent dupe in the affair. Beck said however, in response to a question on television Friday night, "I am not in a position to say that Heidemann actually participated in the forgery.

"But it does at least look, at the present stage of the investigation, as if Heidemann knew that the diaries which Kujau gave him were forgeries."

Heidemann was taken into custody following a preliminary hearing in Hamburg. The court accepted Beck's argument that there was a possibility that Heidemann would flee the country or tamper with evidence in the case. Heidemann's lawyer did not contest the decision.

Until his reported confession, Kujau, who has been in custody since shortly after the diaries were declared fakes, had insisted that he was merely a go-between in securing the diaries from relatives in East Germany and turning them over to Heidemann.

Stern said that Kujau sold the diaries to Heidemann for the equivalent of $3.75 million. Heidemann has insisted that he had not kept any of the money himself, but Kujau maintained that he received only about $1 million in the deal.

The magazine later sold publication rights to newspapers and other journals in Britain, Italy, and France for nearly a million dollars. The payments were later refunded.

KUJAU REPORTEDLY fled the country immediately after the diaries were exposed as fakes. He was arrested May 14 after he surrendered to police at a Bavarian border station.

Kujau's role in what became one of the most widely publicized forgery cases in the post-war era, was disclosed in a recent issue of Stern.

In an effort to moderate the deep embarrassment it has suffered over the forgeries, and to blunt the widespread condemnation over its activities in the affair, Stern published a lengthy cover story on how the diaries came into Heidemann's possession.

The cover showed a photograph of Kujau, wearing a fedora and long sideburns sighting along the barrel of a gun. The account, in the wake of Kujau's confession, is as fanciful as the claim that the diaries were authentic.

The magazine said that Heidemann, as part of his lifelong quest for Nazi memorabilia, contacted Kujau in 1980 after learning that the Stuttgart dealer had sold a book, supposedly hand-written by Hitler, to a former Nazi SS official.

Kujau, who used the name Konrad Fischer, told Heidemann that he could get the Hitler diaries from relatives in East Germany — a brother, Heinz Fischer, whom he described as a major general in the East German army, and a brother-in-law, Guenther Krebs, described as a director of a provincial museum.

IT HAS SINCE been learned that the brother is a reserve East German policeman and a railway porter. The brother-in-law is a heating maintenance man in a hospital. Stern said neither was involved in the diaries affair.

According to the story Kujau was said to have told Heidemann, the two relatives had secured the diaries and other Hitler documents from farmers who had gotten them from the wreckage of a Nazi transport plane that had crashed near the town of Boernersdorf in what is now East Germany while on a flight from Hitler's headquarters in Berlin to Austria on April 21, 1945, shortly before Hitler's suicide.

Central American nations meet in Panama

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

MEXICO CITY — Five troubled Central American countries and four neighbors who want to help them are sending high-ranking officials to Panama this weekend to talk about peace.

The troubled five are Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica and Guatemala. The four neighbors are Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama, known as the Contadora Group for the Panamanian island where they first met last January.

But before there can be any talk about reducing Central American tensions, the foreign ministers of the nine countries will have to agree on some ground rules. For one thing, there has been no agreement yet on whether peace talks should be regional or bilateral.

Nicaragua wants bilateral talks; that is, separate talks with each of its neighbors. Its neighbors want regional talks, with all five governments taking part. The Contadora Group has been unable to agree on whether a regional agreement would be effective or whether bilateral accords are needed.

A diplomat who asked not to be identified by name or nationality said, "Nicaragua, remember, has offended each of its four neighbors one way or another, either by supporting terrorist groups or because of border violations. It feels that if it takes them on one-on-one it will be a fair fight. But, if it's four-on-one, they can't win. So the Nicaraguans don't want to sit down with all their neighbors at once."

At the last meeting of representatives of the nine nations in Panama last month, they were unable to agree on a joint statement, indicating to diplomats that there were serious divisions. The Contadora Group issued a statement; Nicaragua issued a statement; and the other four issued still another statement.

The United States, which wants a regional settlement, has not been invited, but State Department spokesmen in Washington have said that the United States wishes the Contadora Group success. Privately, U.S. diplomats say that their expectations are not high.

Maverick Moscow announcer sent packing

From Wire Reports

MOSCOW — A Radio Moscow news announcer who startled Western listeners by referring to the "Soviet invaders" of Afghanistan, in contrast to the official line that Soviet troops were invited into the country, has been relieved of his duties and will probably undergo psychiatric examination, according to reports being circulated here by semi-official Soviet sources.

The sources said Vladimir Danchev, a 36-year-old announcer with Radio Moscow's world service, has told investigators that his unauthorized comments were a personal protest against the war in Afghanistan. Danchev reportedly explained that in doing so he was "fighting for justice."

In five separate English-language news broadcasts on May 18 and again on Monday, Danchev abandoned the official Soviet propaganda line on Afghanistan and said the Afghan people are defending their country against "Soviet occupants" and "Soviet invaders."

Workers carry one of eleven victims out of the wooded area around the Webb Bait Farm near Benton, Tenn., Friday evening. A secret fireworks factory on the grounds exploded Friday morning, killing eleven and injuring one.

Factory owner wanted

BENTON, Tenn. (AP) — Authorities issued a nationwide warrant Saturday for the owner of a bait farm that allegedly fronted an illegal explosives factory where 11 workers were killed in a series of earthshaking blasts, the sheriff said.

Polk County Sheriff Frank Payne said Dan Lee Webb was charged Saturday with the manufacture and possession of illegal explosives.

Webb's wife, Linda Sue Webb, who was in their home next door to the 40-by-65 foot metal barn that was shredded by Friday's blast, has told officials she thinks her husband is in the New York or New Jersey area, Payne said.

Seven bodies had been identified by Saturday, said Dr. William Bass, an anthropologist from the University of Tennessee in Knoxville. He said it probably will be "a couple of weeks" before all 11 are identified.

As federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents searched through the charred wreckage at the isolated hillside farm in this southeastern Tennessee town of 1,000 people, families and friends of the dead gathered quietly outside the small Polk County sheriff's office three miles from the blast site.

A refrigerated tractor-trailer truck next to the office contained the bodies.

A blast site crew cordoned off a quarter-mile area near the shattered building Saturday and a state trooper said a truck was summoned to haul away a cache of undetonated fireworks found in a trailer on the farm.

Inside the trailer, Payne said, authorities found 30 to 40 boxes of fireworks, including silver-husked M-100s.

Federal firearms agents found husks 8-10 inches wide and 3-4 inches in diameter that prompted Payne to speculate "more than just fireworks" were involved.

He said the large husks could have packed a blast "easily 10 times bigger than the largest firecracker we saw out there."

Tom Stokes, head of the ATF office in Nashville, said, however, his agents had found nothing to indicate the operation was anything more than an illegal fireworks factory. He noted that a similar operation in Orangeburg, S.C., blew up Tuesday, killing two people.

"I don't know where that rumor got started," he said, referring to Payne's speculation about a clandestine explosives laboratory. "This is the time of year these places get geared up for the Fourth of July."

Stokes said the cause of the explosion may never be determined.

At least a half dozen drums containing solid chemicals were found on the site and an electronic surveillance eye could be seen at the gate to the property.

Some residents in houses along Welcome Valley Road suffered minor cuts when glass in windows and doors was shattered.

One man, identified as Tommy Webb, was critically injured when the building blew apart and a white cloud mushroomed 600 to 800 feet at 9:15 a.m. EDT Friday.

Bomb explodes

MIAMI (AP) — A pipe bomb exploded in the Little Havana section, damaging a bank, injuring a bomb squad officer and shattering glass in a building across the street, police said.

Agent Al Hogan said the FBI was trying to determine whether it was the work of the anti-Castro Omega 7 terrorist group. A short time after the Friday night blast a man with a Spanish accent phoned The Miami Herald to claim that Omega 7 was responsible for the bombing.

Miami firefighters and a police bomb squad, tipped by a call to a radio station, arrived at the Continental National Bank at 10:50 p.m. Friday and found the bomb smoking, police spokesman Juan Santos said.

It blew up as the area was being cleared and the blast threw Officer Felix Acruvida 10 feet across the front of a car.

It was the second terrorist attack this year apparently aimed against Cuban-Americans who five years ago led talks with the Cuban government that produced the release of 3,600 Cuban political prisoners and their relatives.

Hard rock broadcast leads to arrest

WEST SENECA, N.Y. (AP) — A radio station manager who was fired for playing too much hard rock music barricaded himself inside the station's transmitter shack and made an "emergency broadcast" for 43 minutes until he was arrested.

Robert Allen, 33, of nearby Buffalo, and former chief engineer John Bunkfeldt, 35, of Utica, were arrested Friday and charged with criminal trespass at station WUWU-FM, Wyoming County deputies said.

Reagan aide dies in sleep

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Joseph Holmes, a special assistant to President Reagan, died in his sleep early Friday at the George Washington University Hospital in Washington after a long bout with cancer.

Holmes, 55, of San Diego, was part of a small group of White House officials who also had served Mr. Reagan when he was governor of California.

After working in Mr. Reagan's 1980 presidential campaign, Holmes became director of White House audio-visual services, compiling a videotaped history of the president's public and private years in the office.

The record, photographed by Navy technicians under Holmes' direction, will be turned over to the National Archives but not made public until 12 years after Mr. Reagan leaves office. It is said to be unprecedented in its intimacy.

"Nancy and I and all the members of the White House staff are deeply saddened today at the news of the death of our dear friend and respected colleague," the president said in a written statement.

"In mourning Joe's passing, however, we can't help but admire the courage and tenacity with which Joe battled his cancer, always maintaining his sense of humor and conducting business from his bed until the very end.

"It is difficult to think of Joe not being with us any longer," Mr. Reagan added, "but knowing him, he would not want us to dwell on sadness, but rather to tell a funny story and enjoy life, as he always did."

Holmes learned in September 1980 that he had cancer, but he told few people until a recurrence last year forced him to seek hospital treatment.

Married and divorced three times, Mr. Holmes is survived by two sons, Tom and Quinlan of San Diego.

Funeral services will be held at 10 a.m. Wednesday at the Clairemont Mortuary in San Diego, followed by graveside services at 1 p.m. at the Ft. Rosecrans National Cemetary at Pt. Loma.

Mr. Holmes was well known around the White House as a close friend and trusted aide of Mr. and Mrs. Reagan. It was this relationship that allowed him to photograph the President in private settings as part of the archival record.

He also established Mr. Reagan's monthly conversations with high school students in the White House. The program is televised by the national Cable Satellite Public Affairs Network (C-SPAN). Mr. Holmes had to overcome a powerful White House bureaucracy that initially was opposed to this use of the president's time.

In addition, he conceived the idea of President Reagan's weekly radio broadcasts, but, characteristically, he remained silent when a higher-ranking White House official took credit for it, several colleagues recalled.

And he initiated and produced intimate videotaped records of White House visits by foreign leaders and other distinguished official guests. Mr. Reagan then would give copies of the tapes to the visitors as farewell gifts.

Colleagues, citing examples of Mr. Holmes' close relationship with the Reagans, said he was the person the president's son, Ron Jr., called first to get details of the assassination attempt on his father in March 1981.

And last fall, Mr. Reagan interrupted a National Security Council meeting to step into a White House corridor to greet Holmes, who had just returned to his job after a brief period of hospitalization.

Born in Scranton, Pa., in 1928, Holmes enlisted in the Navy when he was 17 and later served in the Korean War as a Navy press official.

NAACP board asks chairwoman to resign

NEW YORK (AP) — By a 50-to-1 vote, members of the board of the NAACP voted Saturday to ask board chairwoman Margaret Bush Wilson to resign because of her suspension of Executive Director Benjamin L. Hooks.

The board members, meeting in Brooklyn, also drastically reduced Mrs. Wilson's powers and formally reinstated Hooks, despite Mrs. Wilson's announcement Thursday that she had ended the suspension after eight days.

"I've never seen the board so unanimous in my life. There was no bickering, no fighting," said board member Nathaniel Colley of Sacramento, Calif.

Vice chairman Kelly Alexander Sr., who presided at the meeting, said the board has "expressed a sincere desire ... for Mrs. Wilson to resign." He said the board cannot impeach her.

He said the board had decreed that Mrs. Wilson "shall not act as spokesman for the NAACP at this time," that she may not make expenditures without board approval, or "interfere with the day-to-day operations of the organization."

"The board praised Mr. Hooks highly, noting his actions as executive director have been above reproach," Alexander said.

Mrs. Wilson did not attend the meeting. There was no answer Saturday at her home or office in St. Louis.

While those present represented a clear majority of the 64-member board, Mrs. Wilson's supporters claimed it was an unconstitutional rump session. She had scheduled what she called an official meeting in Detroit on June 11.

Hooks smiled broadly when the meeting's outcome was announced. His wife Frances cried as she carried two dozen roses presented by 80 demonstrators who supported her husband.

"I am happy of course to have been vindicated," Hooks said. "I want to make it clear that I hold no animosities. I bear no grudges, revenge and what we call in the South 'getting back' is not part of my character. I intend to go forward. The association must go forward."

Colley said if Mrs. Wilson challenges the board's action, "We'll do it again anytime we have to do it, as often as we have to.

"It is our intent that the executive director, whoever he or she may be, be the chief executive officer of this organization. Mrs. Wilson is the only board chairman in the history of the NAACP who has tried to run the organization on a day-to-day basis," Colley said.

About 80 demonstrators marched in front of NAACP headquarters, protesting Hooks' suspension with such signs as "Hooks in, Wilson out," "Dump Wilson" and "It's pruning time. Wilson must go."

Mrs. Wilson, a St. Louis attorney, never explained why she suspended Hooks. When she reinstated him, she released a statement in which she said "the purposes for which the action was taken have been served, and no useful purpose will be gained by its continuance."

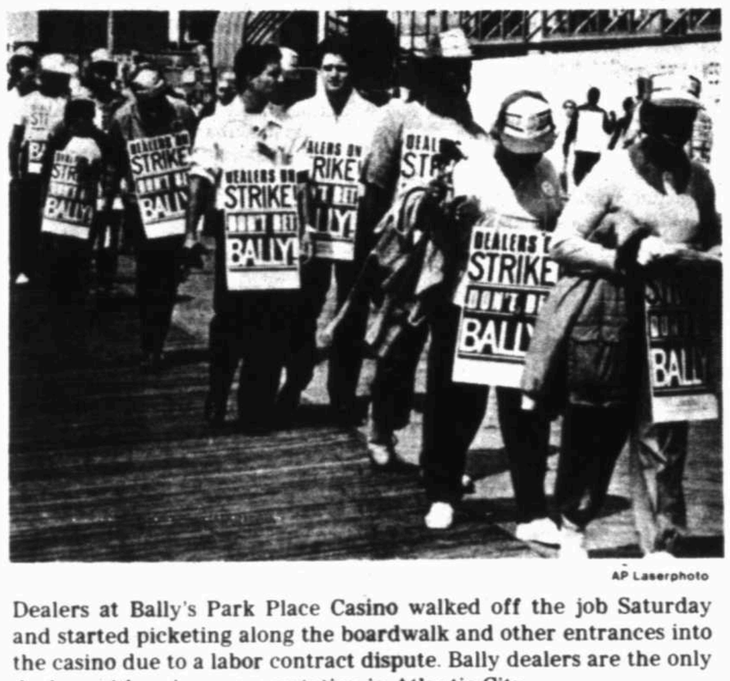

It was known, however, that the two have clashed over control of the organization and that the dispute came into the open at a recent executive board meeting in Chicago.

The suspension of Hooks — a 58-year-old lawyer, banker and Baptist minister who was selected in 1976 to succeed Roy Wilkins as executive director — was greeted with immediate protests in the organization.

Dealers at Bally's Park Place Casino walked off the job Saturday and started picketing along the boardwalk and other entrances into the casino due to a labor contract dispute. Bally dealers are the only dealers with union representation in Atlantic City.

Casino workers strike for first dealers' union contract

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Casino workers set up picket lines around Bally's Park Place at the start of the holiday weekend Saturday in the nation's first strike by dealers and croupiers.

Picketing began at 9 a.m., an hour before the Boardwalk casino opened, after talks broke down Friday night, said William Eggeling, business manager for Local 137 of the Sports Arena and Casino Workers Union.

The employees are trying to win the first casino dealers' union contract in the United States.

Jerold E. Glassman, Bally's top negotiator, warned that striking workers could lose their jobs. Casino supervisors and card-handlers recruited in recent weeks were filling in for the striking workers, and the casino's operations were not affected Saturday, he said.

Management said that more than two-thirds of the dealers scheduled to work reported for duty, while union officials said an "overwhelming" number of dealers and croupiers stayed off the job.

City police, who set up a mobile command post and assigned 16 officers to monitor the strike, reported that picketing was peaceful.

Corning: Nation's longest tenured big city mayor dies

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Mayor Erastus Corning II, the nation's longest-tenured big-city mayor, first sworn in the same month Pearl Harbor was bombed, died Saturday of an apparent heart attack. He was 73.

The white-haired mayor was serving his 11th four-year term in New York's capital. He had been a childhood friend of the Rockefellers and Roosevelts.

There have been seven New York City mayors and nine U.S. presidents since Corning took office Jan. 1, 1942, in this city of 115,000 people.

City Council president Thomas M. Whalen III automatically succeeds Corning as mayor.

Corning died at Boston University Hospital at 12:20 p.m., officials there said. He was transferred Oct. 6 from Albany Medical Center, where he had been hospitalized since June 15 for chronic asthma, bronchitis and emphysema.

Doctors said the cardiac arrest resulted from a blood clot in a lung.

Corning's health had deteriorated gradually. On Feb. 22, he had half his large intestine removed to stop bleeding and in March he suffered a "small heart attack," doctors said.

Corning's organization controls thousands of patronage jobs in a city where Democrats outnumber Republicans 16-1.

There had been reports that decision-making at all levels, including the filling of police vacancies, was stalled by Corning's illness.

When first moved to Boston, Corning maintained contact with the daily government 170 miles away by consulting aides who visited him almost daily and through extensive hand-written correspondence.

But Corning was denied a bedside phone and as his condition worsened, his visitors were limited to family members and he no longer received mail at doctor's orders, McCullough said.

"Erastus Corning's death ends an era. He ran Albany in a special way and was respected by friends and foes alike," said New York City Mayor Edward Koch said Saturday.

"The Empire State mourns the loss of one of her grandest sons, Erastus Corning II — 'The Mayor,'" New York Gov. Mario Cuomo said. "In a weekend set aside for remembering those who died in service, we remember him as one who lived his entire lifetime in the service of his fellow New Yorkers."

Corning became Albany's youngest elected mayor at 32 when he was sworn in Dec. 31, 1941. His grandfather, Erastus Corning, was elected mayor 105 years earlier.

The Democratic stalwart was elected with 70 to 86 percent of the vote every four years since then, except in 1973 when he won with 53.2 percent over businessman Carl Touhey.

During World War II, when Corning was drafted into the Army as a private, the "G.I. Mayor" returned on furloughs to help run the city while stand-in Frank S. Harris served on a temporary basis.

Corning was a one-man show in Albany. He chaired the Democratic Party County Committee and was said to influence hiring by the city school system and to control hiring by county agencies and virtually all state patronage in Albany County.

So powerful is the Albany County Democratic machine, it was considered a key factor in the nomination of President Harry S. Truman in 1948 and aided significantly in nominating John F. Kennedy for president in 1960.

A personal defeat came in 1946 when Corning ran for lieutenant governor and lost in a nationwide Republican landslide. Four years later, many party leaders boosted him for governor, but Corning declined, later saying he wasn't motivated.

Anti-Klan outnumber Ku Klux Klan at rally

COLLEGE PARK, Ga. (AP) — About 100 robed Ku Klux Klan members marched 10 blocks Saturday while an equal number of demonstrators hounded them from sidewalks and lawns. No violence was reported.

The counterdemonstrators all but drowned out a speech by Klan leader Bill Wilkinson.

One man was arrested for having an illegal knife, but police in this Atlanta suburb said no one was charged in connection with the march.

The march by a Klan chapter from nearby Hapeville was allowed by a federal judge, who imposed a 40-minute limit on the rally. Immediately after the rally the Klansmen took off their robes, boarded a bus and a truck.

The city council had refused three times to grant the Klan a parade permit and the American Civil Liberties Union went to court for the Klan and won them the right to march.

Local and state police stayed between the groups.

Wilkinson, of Denham Springs, La., and imperial wizard of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, led the march and spoke for 20 minutes at a City Hall rally in support of segregated schools and against affirmative action. His words were drowned out frequently by protesters.

The counterdemonstrators were about evenly divided between black and white. They gathered at the march's starting point and walked on sidewalks and road medians to stay alongside the marchers, chanting, "Ku Klux Klan, Scum of the Land."

Wilkinson was applauded by several groups of white spectators along the way.

The crowd grew to about 500 people at City Hall and the anti-Klan outnumbered Klan supporters.

U.S. District Judge William O'Kelley, who allowed the rally, also set the marchers' route down Main Street.

Hundreds evacuated from residential area of city

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — Hydrochloric tacid leaked from a parked tanker truck Saturday, releasing ta white cloud of gas and forcing hundreds of people to evacuate residential areas of downtown Fairbanks for five hours, officials said.

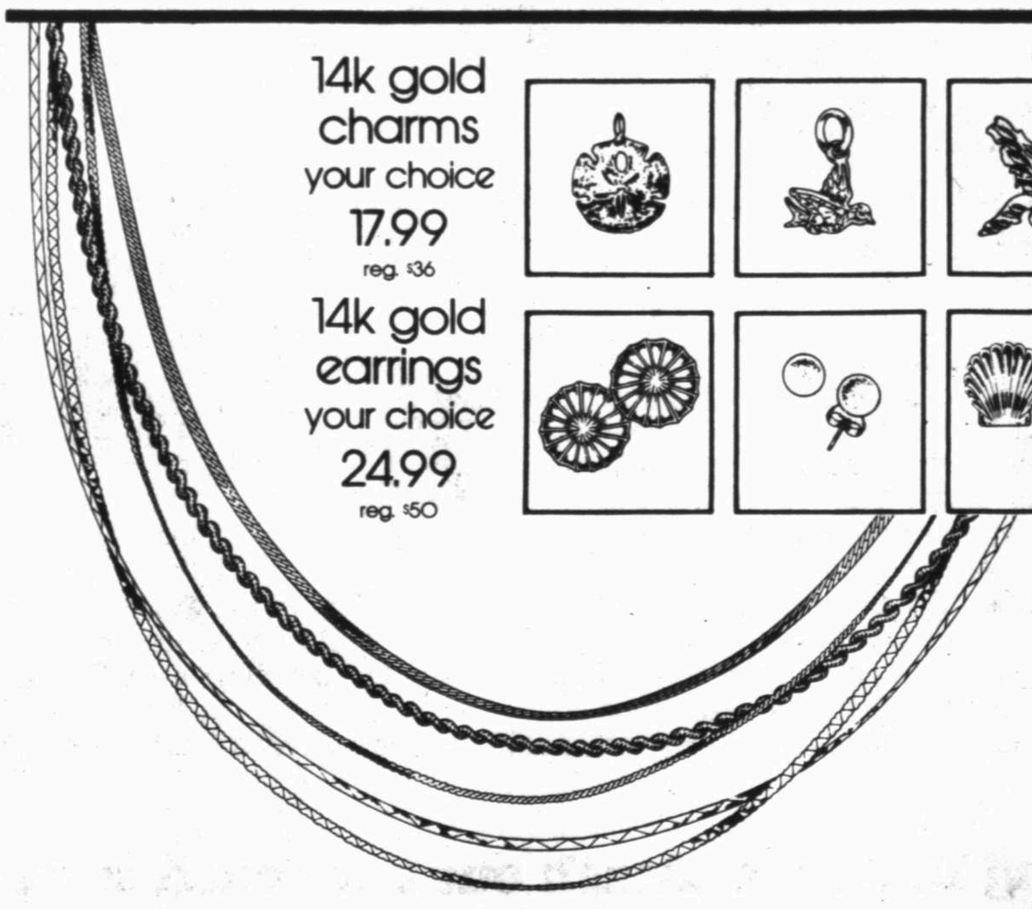

Bob Cavanaugh, director of Civil Defense, said the evacuation was a precaution taken under a "worst-case tscenario." He said there never was imminent danger, and no injuries twere reported.

Authorities worked to transfer the acid to another truck, but said it could take a good part of the day to complete the task. They were assisted tby several national experts who happened to be in Fairbanks for a seminar on toxic materials.

Court division being created

MIAMI (AP) — A new Dade County court division is being created to handle a burgeoning backlog of major drug-trafficking cases, officials said.

Chief Judge Gerald Wetherington said Friday he is forming a new Circuit Court division, made up of existing civil division judges, to reduce the volume of pending drug cases, some of which were filed two years ago.

Under the plan, as many as 25 civil judges will volunteer to serve a one-week rotation to hear the drug cases. Starting Sept. 1, five to 10 cases will be scheduled for trial before the special drug court.

Foes of house make appeals

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Foes of the Bannon Street poorhouse are appealing a judge's decision allowing the county to force poor people to live there rather than giving them cash welfare payments.

Northern California Legal Services on Friday filed the appeal of Sacramento County Superior Court Judge Fred Marler Jr.'s May 23 ruling that the county could continue ordering welfare recipients to stay at the poorhouse.

Bannon Street was started by the county last October as a way to cut costs in the welfare budget. However, opponents claim the 72-bed shelter for employable, single county welfare recipients violates constitutional rights to privacy and free association.

Medicine causes poisoning

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A folk medicine widely used by Laotian refugees is the apparent cause of lead poisoning among children in the Twin Cities' Hmong community.

Health officials have urged the Hmong to immediately discontinue using the red powder, which is called "Pay'-loo-ah."

The powder was identified as a source of lead poisoning when the parents of a 6-month-old Hmong girl suffering from lead poisoning gave the powder to St. Paul pediatrician Dr. Carolyn Levitt.

Ms. Levitt said Friday that since the lead was identified, two more Hmong children have been treated after receiving the same powder. Up to 10 more baffling cases of lead poisoning among Hmong children may have been caused by the powder.

Stolen drug never leaves office

LAPLACE, La. (AP) — The sheriff's office has discovered that 25 to 30 pounds of marijuana reported stolen from police two weeks ago never left the office.

St. John the Baptist Parish Sheriff Lloyd Johnson said Friday that the box stolen May 16 from the evidence locker did not contain the marijuana, as originally believed. Instead, a deputy had put the marijuana in another locker awaiting a judge's order to destroy it.

The mixup was discovered when the stolen box was recovered last week, along with an inventory sheet of its contents that did not list the marijuana, he said.

Bullet train depends on traffic

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Low fares, expansion of parking and more congestion on a local interstate will be needed to ensure the success of the proposed Los Angeles-to-San Diego bullet train, a study shows.

A summary of the evaluation of the high-speed train's financial prospects was issued Friday by the train's promoter, American High Speed Rail Corp.

The company has forecast 100,000 riders a day would use 50 trains traveling at 160 mph, but the new summary warns of critical factors that may change the figures. In particular, the study says riders in residential areas may not travel as far as five miles to take the train.

Bike group on Little Rock campus

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A group of professors is trading in mortarboards for motorcycle helmets this summer to teach a different kind of summer school — a course on motorcycle safety.

The well-educated bikers' gang is headed by Richard Sieber, chairman of the music department at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock. Fellow cyclists include the university's associate vice chancellor for academic affairs, the chairman of the library science department, an associate dean of the college of education and an art professor and political-science professor.

The non-credit course they're teaching at the campus is a joint project of the university and the national Motorcycle Safety Foundation. A dozen experienced riders in the Little Rock area, including Sieber and his academic colleagues, completed a foundation training program last fall in order to qualify to teach the summer course in rider safety procedures.

Sieber, 56, said in a recent interview that he used to raise his eyebrows at the thought of being astride a motorcycle.

But "I didn't like driving a car," and riding a motorcycle to school is a cheap way to travel, he said. So his ears, used to the sweeter strains of Beethoven, became accustomed to the heavy rumble of his Honda Gold Wing.

Though drained from work, he plunges into dance

Lewis Jones: Plumber by day, serious ballet student by night

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Lewis Jones works with his hands all day, installing or fixing someone's plumbing, but at night he's on his toes performing a pax de deux or tour en l'air.

He's the first to admit that he's something of a novelty. "As far as I know, I'm the only dancing plumber in the country," he says with a grin.

A serious ballet student for five years, his advertisement in the telephone company's yellow pages features a large wrench and the phrase, "The Dancing Plumber."

AP Laserphoto

Lewis Jones says anyone can move around on the stage, but to dance well, "you must dance with soul."

And while the visions conjured by the two vocations might seem as different as John Wayne and Rudolf Nureyev, Jones sees them as just differing expressions of civilization.

"Doctors keep you well, but plumbing keeps you from dying before your time," he explains. "Doctors and plumbing grew up together as civilization grew. Ballet is about the ultimate expression of real civilization."

Jones, clad in blue jeans and a green shirt with a dirt smudge on one shoulder, talks animatedly about both ballet and plumbing. His two Manx cats, Mark Anthony and Cleopatra, wander through the living room of his home. Air bubbles in tanks containing salt-water fish, and he insists that a visitor accompany him to another room to meet "Fang," his Burmese reticulated python.

Recently separated, he is reticent to talk much about his private life. But the raw energy that sustains him on the stage — and in a ditch installing a sewer line — bubbles through when he talks about ballet.

"It's a demanding vocation, or avocation," Jones says. "It looks easy, just to watch it, but there are hours and hours of hard work that go into just one small movement, to get it just right."

It also has its lighter moments.

There was the time, for instance, when he was installing a new water heater for a customer.

"I looked at my watch and said, 'I've got to leave for awhile to go to ballet practice.'

"Well," says Jones, "he looked at me with a look that as much said, 'Oh, yeah?' We were rehearsing 'The Nutcracker,' and one of the local television stations was there and he saw me on TV, dancing.

"When I went back he said, 'You really weren't kidding.' He thought I had gone out to get drunk or something."

He adds that, still too often, he gets a questioning look when he explains that he is a ballet dancer.

"But I think, more and more, men are beginning to realize that ballet dancing is not what it had the stigma of for so long," he says. "I think a lot of them are finally realizing that it takes a real athlete to be a male ballet dancer."

If ballet dancing is at one end of the scale, the martial arts are at the other. But strange as it may seem, it was the martial arts that got Jones into ballet in the first place.

He was deeply involved in kung fu under master George Ing and was taking part in a demonstration at St. Gregory's College in Shawnee.

"I mentioned to one of the other participants, Donnie Hardin, that I had seen some ballet on TV the night before and how some of the moves looked very much like what we were doing.

"The next thing I knew, he was introducing me as the kung fu practitioner who used to take ballet and that I would now show some of the similarities."

Jones says he did some ballet positions — "Boy, they were really terrible" — and afterward "about 100 people came up to me and said, 'I didn't know you had taken ballet.'"

As he tells it now, just so he wouldn't have to fib, he went to the University of Oklahoma and took one semester of ballet.

That was about 10 years ago, and the tiny seed that was planted at St. Gregory's didn't take firm root until he went to a ballet performance and saw Bojan Spassoff.

"Man, he was really tearing them up," Jones says.

That was enough to make him a dedicated dancer. He spent one year in classes with the Metropolitan Ballet and the last four with Spassoff and his wife, Stephanie Wolf, who are the instructors at the School of Ballet Oklahoma.

"I couldn't have done it without the support," says Jones, 30. "Sometimes I go to practice all covered with dirt and just sort of shake myself a little, get into my dance tights and we're all the same."

He mentions several female dancers and their families, as being particularly supportive.

Reagan displays harmony among staff

WASHINGTON (AP) — With his abrupt dismissal of Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders, President Reagan has shown he considers Central America so important that he must have harmony among his top aides.

Much like former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig, who was replaced in equally unceremonious fashion 11 months ago, Enders came to be viewed as a man more interested in preserving his bureaucratic prerogatives than in working as a team player.

The more that Central America emerged as a priority issue for the White House, the more diluted Enders' authority became.

In recent months, Enders found himself competing for control over policy with such figures as National Security adviser William Clark, United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick and, more recently, Ambassador Richard Stone, the newly designated special envoy for Central America.

Among his associates, Enders evoked a wide array of opinions, ranging from admiration to contempt.

One Enders supporter, who asked not to be identified, complained about the lack of appreciation in the administration for Enders' success in convincing a highly skeptical Congress to continue providing military aid to El Salvador.

"The administration soon will realize how much they needed him," the official said.

Other officials found Enders, with his lofty, 6-foot-7 bearing and his Ivy League — Yale and Harvard — education, difficult to deal with.

These qualities, combined with his well placed social connections and his widely acknowledged brilliance, helped Enders, 51, move quickly up the State Department promotion ladder.

But despite his considerable assets, he proved no match for Clark, whose admitted lack of foreign policy expertise was more than offset by the trust and confidence he enjoys with the one man that counts, the president.

Enders' departure is belived related to personality clashes as well as the White House perception that he may have been too willing to pursue a negotiated settlement with the Salvadoran guerillas.

Early this year, the White House rejected an Enders proposal under which the armed struggle against the guerillas would continue on the one hand, while on the other, an attempt would be made to settle the conflict through negotiations.

One official, speaking privately, summed up Enders sudden departure in a single sentence: "He was on the outs with Clark."

Some associates found Enders rude and aloof; others said that even during the most trying periods, Enders never lost his sense of humor.

Another informant said he believes there will be far less friction between the State Department and the White House once Enders' proposed successor, Langhorne Motley, takes over.

Motley, now ambassador to Brazil, is credited with having improved relations with that country and is said to have impressed Reagan with his smooth performance during two meetings Reagan has had with Brazilian President Joao Figueiredo.

But Enders' friends wonder whether Motley will be able to maintain the coalition of support Enders stitched together for Central America policy on Capitol Hill.

Enders served in his post, formally known as assistant secretary for inter-American affairs, for 25 months. By recent standards, his tenure was unusually long.

Six officials have headed the Latin America bureau over the past 10 years, none longer than Enders. He is expected to be assigned to Spain, replacing Ambassador Terence A. Todman, a predecessor of Enders assistant secretary who held the job only 13 months.

Christian school marks first grad

NORTH PLATTE, Neb. (AP) — Corinna Bauer Friday night became the first graduate of North tPlatte Christian School, but her high school memories won't be those of a typical high school graduate.

Her memories will include court battles and controversy for the school, which has been involved in a court battle over its lack of state certification.

"The court case hasn't affected the students much. Most of the kids don't really even understand what's going on," she said. "The state probably has the right to know if we're being educated, but it's evident through testing that we are. The job is being accomplished."

Ms. Bauer said she feels fortunate to have attended the Christian School. "I think I got just as high quality an education as I would have gotten somewhere else. It's been a good experience."

Contribution brews internal conflict

DALLAS (AP) — The founder of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers (MADD), the grass-roots group that has won legal battles with drunken drivers nationwide, now faces an internal conflict over a $180,000 donation from a brewery.

The donation from Anheuser-Busch Co. of St. Louis, the nation's largest brewery, has drawn criticism from MADD board members who say it poses a conflict of interest for the organization.

The group's 37-year-old president, Candice Lightner, also has drawn criticism for appointing to the board public relations expert Robert Garrick of Pasadena, Calif., who has handled an Anheuser-Busch account for 30 years.

"I believe when you start having representatives of the liquor industry on your board of directors, it raises doubts in the public's mind," said board member Andrew McGuire. "You don't put the wolves in with the chickens."

Anheuser-Busch spokesman Randy Myers said the $180,000 grant has "no strings attached" and will be used to produce two television public service announcements and to develop other MADD chapters.

Hawkins regrets taking action

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Bert W. Hawkins of the Agriculture Department whose job it became Friday to order the quarantine of Texas cattle expressed "sincere regret" at taking this action.

Immediate reason was failure of the Texas Senate to pass a bill authorizing compliance with brucellosis controls.

Hawkins is the new administrator of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

AUSTIN (AP) — Here are highlights of floor action in the Legislature on Friday:

SENATE

HB701, controlling brucellosis, refused two-third majority to debatte 20-11.

HB885, continuing the Texas Employment Commission, approved on voice vote, returned to House with amendment.

SJR31, authorizing the Legislature to exempt veterans' organizations from property taxes, approved House amendment 31-0.

SB1, increasing DWI penalties, approved conference committee report 30-1, sent to governor.

SB22, outlawing armor-piercing ammunition, approved House amendment on voice vote, sent to governor.

'Slavery' tentatively approved

AUSTIN (AP) — A welfare-work program labeled "slavery" a month ago in the House was tentatively approved by the Senate on Saturday.

Senate sponsor J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson, said, "This is a different approach to handling welfare recipients."

Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, said had former Republican Gov. Bill Clements not vetoed a bill four years ago that would have reduced welfare rolls, this measure — sponsored by a Republican — would not be necessary.

"We have to make up for the failures of the Republican administration," Doggett said.

Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, put on amendment that would make the program voluntary. The same amendment failed in the House, which approved the bill.

Under Brown's proposal, recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children, or AFDC, would spend up to two months in a job-training program conducted by a participating employer. During that time, the trainee would receive only the AFDC payment, plus subsidized child and health care.

The training would be followed by four months of job experience, with the pay at least the federal minimum wage, and then, ideally, full employment of the welfare recipient.

A total of $1 million in AFDC money would be diverted to the program and would be used to subsidize child and health care and the trainee's salary during the four-month work-experience stage.

Three women compile 15 years of romance in book

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Jennifer Wilde wears a coat and tie. At a recent romance novelists' convention, Ms. Wilde used the men's bathroom. Her real name is Tom Huff.

Three women in San Antonio could have told you that. Or what year a certain Barbara Cartland romance was published. Or how many flowery pseudonyms romance author Ida Pollack uses (answer: seven).

Inscribed on a picture in the modest Second Edition bookstore, which deals in the resale of thousands of romance novels, is this: "To June, with love to a lovely lady — Jennifer Wilde (and Tom, too!)"

June Manning, Kay Garteiser and Mary Hotchkiss spent two years working on "The Romantic Spirit," a compilation of 19,000 romance book titles, 3,700 authors and 750 pseudonyms published in the past 15 years.

"We had people come in with little lists and they didn't know if they had read something or not," Mrs. Hotchkiss said. "An incredible amount of romance novels are put out each month."

With no writing or publishing experience, the three women — "let's just say we're of retirement age" — put up their own money and published the book themselves in January.

The meticulous, cross-indexed lists in their book grew after countless trips to garage sales, prowling around other old bookstores, libraries, private collections and contacts with the authors themselves.

"It was kind of hard to figure out what an author had written," Ms. Manning said. "The publishers of the books don't care if you ever know the pseudonyms. They don't want anyone to know."

Romance readers are a loyal bunch. The average romance reader, Mrs. Manning estimated, reads one novel a night. Some read four a day. And not all are women.

"Sure, we have some men who buy romances," Mrs. Hotchkiss said. "They're just as open about it as anyone. I don't know why there seems to be a stigma about reading romances anyway."

The bookstore is owned by Ms. Manning and Mrs. Hotchkiss, who are sisters and retired civil servants. Ms. Garteiser is a word processor specialist with a national accounting firm.

The first-time authors recently were named the first recipients of the Gaye Tardy Award, in honor of the late editor of Pinncale Publishing.

It was presented to Ms. Manning and Ms. Garteiser by the queen of the romance novelists — Barbara Cartland — at the Second Annual Romantic Book Lovers Conference in New York.

"She presented it and I gave her one of our books," Ms. Manning said. "She really does fancy herself a queen. She gave me an autograph, but it looked more like Ty Cobb's."

The romance writers were wonderfully responsive to "The Romantic Spirit" and impressed by the amount of work the three women did, Ms. Manning said.

The book will be updated periodically to reflect the flood of romances being published each month and has blanks where readers can do a little updating themselves.

"The romance industry just didn't have a reference book," Ms. Manning said. "Now, they do."

In true romance fashion, the "Romantic Spirit" authors used their first names to coin a pseudonym: Mary June Kay.

Committee talks of judicial reform

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Rep. Bob Bush, D-Sherman, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, recently summed up the continuing arguments over judicial reform — particularly election of judges — as "accountability versus independence."

Judges, Bush argues, should be independent.

But they also should be accountable, he says.

Bush has been active during the 1983 Legislature with a series of proposals aimed at judicial reform, although he agrees that his efforts haven't been totally successful.

But, he says, "we're batting over .500," particularly with changes within the judicial structure recommended by the Judiciary Committee as part of its interim studies before the current Legislature convened.

Some of the work, Bush admits, isn't likely to create great excitement among the general population — but that doesn't mean the work isn't important.

One such measure in that category which Bush has been working for provides for overhaul of Texas' venue laws.

Venue involves what would seem to be the relatively simple question of where a case should be tried.

Of course, in practice, the question usually turns out to be more complicated.

Texas Supreme Court Justice Jack Pope, in his "state of the judiciary" message to the Legislature in January, criticized Texas' venue laws as "an extravagant waste of money for the state and litigants."

It's hard to disagree with the chief justice, particularly since Texas, according to Pope's figures, generates more appeals on venues than all the other 49 states combined.

The results, Pope says, is a waste of time — for judges, court reporters, lawyers, jurors and litigants — and a waste of money.

Bush has found somewhat more interest, however, in another area of judicial reform, that being the argument over how, or even whether, to elect judges.

One complaint over election of judges to the state's highest courts has been that having candidates run statewide is expensive.

Charges dropped against classmate

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Prosecutors say they have run into a dead end and have dropped capital murder charges against a Texas man accused of killing a co-telephone company trainee earlier this month.

Released after the murder charge and one accusing him of robbery were dropped was Laverne C. Simmons, 35, of Converse, Texas, who had been accused in the May 6 stabbing death of Diana Marie Ferrell, 22, of Dallas.

Bill approved to regulate water

AUSTIN (AP) — House members finally approved Saturday a bill that would take regulation of water and sewer rates from the Public Utility Commission and transfer it to the Texas Water Commission.

The vote was 119-25, sending the measure to the governor for signature.

Green and other opponents claimed that water utilities would get less scrutiny under the Water Commission than they now receive at PUC.

At present the Water Commission regulates water rates sold among cities and utilities but does not set household rates.

Keller said the PUC already has jurisdiction over telephone and electric utilities, which bring in $11 billion in revenues, while he said 56 small, scattered water companies generate only $9 billion.

Berlanga successful with bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, House sponsor of the much discussed but unsuccessful horse race betting bill finally was successful Saturday with a racing measure.

"With my record this year I need to pass this," Berlanga said as he introduced a resolution commending sponsors of a series of camel races July 2,3 and 4 at Luckenbach, near Fredericksburg.

"There's no pari-mutuel, no betting," he stressed.

The resolution passed on voice vote.

Bentsen wants Hispanic on board

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Senator Lloyd Bentsen, D., Texas has asked President Ronald Reagan to reconsider his action replacing an Hispanic on the Civil Rights Commission.

The Texas senator pointed out that since 1968 there has always been an Hispanic on the Commission. Now with recent Reagan action in asking that three new persons of his choice replace the only Hispanic on the Commission and two others, there will be no Hispanic representation.

The Reagan changes took Blandina Cardenas Ramires of San Antonio off the commission.

"The President's action will politicize the commission for the first time since the Eisenhower administration," said Bentsen.

He spoke highly of the service on the Commission by Ramires.

LBJ aide, colonel dies of cancer

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Col. Juanita Roberts, U.S. Army Retired, Washington, long time aide to President Lyndon B. Johnson and acknowledged as originator of the Lyndon B. Johnson Library in Austin, died in Emory University hospital Thursday of cancer.

Funeral services will be held Monday in Yazoo, Miss., where her family formerly lived. She had lived for some years in Port Arthur, Texas.

Colonel Roberts was in the first class of officers chosen from civilian life for the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps.

Formerly she was married to former Rep. Ray Roberts of McKinney.

The Roberts, the Lyndon Johnsons and the John Connallys came to Washington together. Lyndon, at first, worked for a Texas congressman and Connally worked with him.

Youths captured in Grayson County

GORDONVILLE, Texas (AP) — Four escapees from a Texas Youth Council facility were in the custody of Grayson County authorities Saturday.

The four youths escaped from the Gainesville facility Friday, authorities said. One was caught by Grayson County deputies Friday night and the other three were arrested about 10:30 Saturday morning.

Deputy Tom Mrozisnski said officers received a tip that the trio was in a cafe in this Northeast Texas town Saturday morning.

Deputies arrested two of the teen-agers as they climbed out a back window of the cafe and caught the third in a wooded area nearby, he said.

New state bank charter approved

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Banking board has approved a charter application for the Bank of Commerce-Fossil Creek in Fort Worth, the banking department said Saturday.

The approval allows the bank to collect capital funds and go ahead with organization.

Bill would change highway's name

AUSTIN (AP) — The Legislature passed a bill Saturday that would designate U.S. 83, stretching from Brownsville through the Panhandle, as the Texas Vietnam Veterans Memorial Highway.

The Senate passed the House-approved measure 30-1 and sent it to the governor to be signed into law.

Senator sponsor Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, said the memorial was particularly appropriate "in view of the lack of recognition given to Vietnam veterans."

House 'chubs' night away

AUSTIN (AP) — In the Senate, you filibuster. In the House, where filibusters are prohibited, you "chub."

While a single senator with a single bill on his mind talked the night away across the rotunda, in the House a pack of state representatives looking to sink an assortment of bills took turns killing time in the House.

Friday night was the last time for House floor debate of bills that have yet to come up for debate. When midnight struck — 72 hours before the end of the session — the rules said no floor action on new bills.

It was the death of scores of bills on the day's calendar, including some representatives' pet projects.

To "chub," in legispeak, is to delay, to postpone to death, to make sure bills you don't like don't get in before the deadline.

Friday night's champion chubbing came on a Senate-approved measure that would require ramps at the polls to help the handicapped vote. It took over an hour to get the bill approved, with the vote coming with 90 minutes to go before the deadline.

"I didn't mean to take up this much time with my bill," said House sponsor Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, who withstood world-class chubbing by lawmakers who pushed hopeless amendments and managed to get two lengthy roll call votes.

At the time, Farmers Branch Rep. Bill Blanton, one of the House's slowest talkers, was manning the speaker's seat.

As the House's digital clock moved toward midnight, members watched their bills die at the bottom of a long agenda.

Rep. Ed Emmett, R-Kingwood, saw the demise of a bill that started with an emotional trip to a state prison school. Emmett, upset after he watched an inmate hug his child for the first time, decided to push for "contact visits" for prison inmates.

"I regret it. I'd wish we'd have done House bills instead of Senate bills," he said, referring to the Calendars Committee decision to work on measures already approved in the Senate.

Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, watched the unspoken death of a proposed amendment to the U.S. Constitution that would give Washington D.C. two senators and a voting member of the U.S. House.

"I'm afraid it's a ship whose sails never unfolded or something," a tired Wilson said as he searched for the cliche. "It's just one of those that got buried."

Not far from Wilson, Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, was talking about the bill he hoped would die — a somewhat obscure measure setting up a Texas Advisory Board of Occupational Therapy.

"It's a few more dollars," he said of the proposed board.

The bill came up and won approval, but House sponsor Gerald Hill, D-Austin, conceded he was less than certain about parts of it.

"I cannot tell you exactly what they do," he said in answer to a colleague's question about occupational therapists.

Rep. Bob Bush, D-Sherman, is among the wisest to the ways of the House. But even Bush grew nervous as one of his major bills faced deadline death.

"Are they trying to kill venue?" he asked Speaker Pro Tem Hugo Berlanga.

"Venue" is a bill that streamlines the change of venue process in civil trials. It's of major importance to Texas judges and lawyers, so much so that Supreme Court Chief Justice Jack Pope remained in the House gallery until the bill was approved.

"It's just the usual killing stuff," Bush said of the night's activity.

As the deadline approached, Wilson made a last-ditch effort to protect the view of the Capitol dome, which is quickly being lost to high-rises in downtown Austin.

Wilson spoke of the dome's beauty while San Antonio Rep. Matt Garcia hummed a soft and haunting version of "The Eyes of Texas" on the back microphone.

Wilson's effort died because his attempt came as an amendment to an unrelated bill.

The chubbing was over. Rep. Anita Hill, R-Garland, had watched the death of her measure to require safety seats for children in automobiles.

She headed out the door, mumbling sarcastically, "It's overwhelming, isn't it?"

As is the House custom, Speaker Gib Lewis adjourned the House with a memorial message.

"In memory of all those bills that got killed tonight," he said.

"El chubbo," said Rep. Froy Salinas, D-Lubbock.

Myrtle Brick, 73, of Rankin displays the craft for which she has become well known in West Texas — quilt-making.

Miss Brick builds with quilt blocks

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

RANKIN — Creativity transformed into creation through the dexterity of fingers — it's the process that has filled quilt maker Myrtle Brick's spare time for six decades.

But behind the creativity, say those who know her best, lies a spirit of giving which serves as a motivating force.

"My life philosophy is to show appreciation for things people have done for me," the 73-year-old Rankin resident said while displaying examples of her handiwork in her living room. Lifelong, she has refused pay for quilts, instead presenting them to those lucky enough to be adopted by the septuagenarian. "I've never charged; they've all been gifts. I want to wish them well — my best friends, my former teachers, my colleagues in the college, girls growing up to teach who were my students."

Miss Brick is as real as they come, a genuine, down-to-earth individual so beloved by fellow Rankinites that they sprang a community-wide birthday party for her a few years back.

"She not only gives by giving her quilts away; she gives a lot of other ways," said Donna Bell of Rankin. "She's always doing something for someone."

Ever-present in Miss Brick's living room and quilting area is a wall plaque which proclaims "God shall supply all your need," and it's there for more than just aesthetic purposes — it's an indication of the Christian beliefs which have led to her affability and concern for others. "I have a very deep faith, very active faith," she said.

The holder of numerous blue, red and white ribbons for quilting from West Texas county fairs, Miss Brick threaded her initial quilt needle as a first grader growing up in Brownwood.

"My mother quilted nearly all the time," she recalled. "In the first world war the church ladies were trying to make money (and) each afternoon they'd quilt at the church. When I'd get out of school, she'd have me come over and I'd stand there from four to six just threading needles for those older ladies. And then as soon as I could, I started to quilt."

She made her first quilt as an 11-year-old ("It had three pounds of cotton in it my mama carded," she recalled), and the next 62 years have seen 109 more leap from her hands.

"I love to see a pattern worked out in my fingers that I've had in my mind, and I'm satisfied with it," she explained. "It's like painting a picture. I choose the colors. I'm satisfied. It's a nice hobby, and certainly an inexpensive hobby. It's brought a lot of pleasure to other people."

The real pleasure to many students and acquaintances, however, has been the opportunity to know Miss Brick as a friend. She attended Daniel Baker Presbyterian College in Brownwood and received a master's degree from Sul Ross College before assuming a teaching career in public schools.

She taught Spanish in Odessa, Kerrville and Brownwood, then ascended to the college ranks as an education instructor at Sul Ross and Howard Payne College. But it was during her tenure as Rankin principal from 1942-1947 that she looked three decades ahead and made plans.

"I retired (from Howard Payne) on Friday and I moved to Rankin on Saturday," she said, recalling May of 1974. "When I was principal here, I liked the people. I liked the climate, and I knew when I retired this is where I'd come."

It wasn't until this master quilt-maker became a Rankinite for the second time that she began to receive long-overdue notoriety. As a wedding gift, she presented a quilt to a California woman whose fine eye for craftmanship resulted in its entry in a California fair. A quarter million people passed before it, and when the judges handed out ribbons, it took the blue.

Had she been materialistic, it could have taken the green as well. A homemade quilt, she said, sells for $400 in a church auction and $500-$600 in a bed and bath shop.

Midlander draws on talents

Painting, music are fire official's outlet

By VINCE GIORGI

From making black marks on a wall as a child, Bobby Williams has grown up to become Midland's assistant fire marshal, a talented painter and musician.

In the continuing argument over whether artists are born or built, Bobby Williams offers strong evidence for the former.

At a young age — he estimates about 3 or 4 — Williams would scoop up his father's oil well gauging tablets and "make marks" with a pencil. Williams said his favorite markings were those which eventually resembled cowboys, Indians and horses.

"I could draw before I could write," said Williams, now 38 and Midland's assistant fire marshal. "I seemed to be possessed by this need to make marks with a pencil."

While Williams was in elementary school in Coahoma, an artist from Walt Disney visited the school to draw Donald Duck, Mickey Mouse and work other artistic wonders for the students.

"I COULD SEE with just a few simple lines you could make these little cartoon characters," said Williams, who translated the lesson into a knack for drawing caricatures.

Williams' artistic urge overflowed one day when he sketched his brother — complete with sailor hat and anchor tattoo — on the family's bathroom wall. "It might have been a prophetic drawing," he explained, noting that his brother later joined the Navy.

As a teen-ager, Williams found another creative outlet when he acquired an "old, Sears Silvertone guitar and started plunking around on that."

After working in the oil field and driving trucks for a time, 21-year-old Williams joined the Big Spring police force. In 1966, Williams the patrolman, painter, guitar player and good-natured drawer of pot-bellied officers began work for the Midland Police Department.

Williams said he enjoyed police work and won a few marksmanship trophies during his stint as a Midland cop. But, needing a change after almost nine years prowling Midland's streets, Williams transferred to the city's fire department.

"I JUST FELT, at some point, that I needed a change," he said. "Tragedy seems to hit the poor people more than anybody else. The reason I like the fire service is you get more of an opportunity to be of help."

First as a firefighter — later as an inspector, emergency medical technician and now assistant fire marshal and chief arson investigator — Williams witnessed the sights, sounds, smells and sadness of fire fighting.

"The worst part of it is the little children. You go out and see them burned, injured. You can really get in a rut if you stay in that 'trench' all the time. You have to try and look on the bright side as much as you can."

Through music and painting, "you kind of put yourself in a place where you're not worrying about these other things."

About eight times each month — often more — Williams plays guitar, banjo and sings with one of two local groups. He said one band plays plenty of standards and some Western swing while the other offers more pop and country and Western tunes.

Midlander in Profile

THE ENTIRE Williams family has a musical bent. His wife, Bea, plays piano and ocassionally sings with his bands; son Hank, 19, plays guitar; daughter Shelley, 16, is versed in piano and organ; and 7-year-old Jason recently began "plunking" on his first guitar.

Playing several gigs each month is "refreshing" and "a lot of fun," said Williams. He hopes to learn to play the bass and steel guitars and counts the mandolin as his favorite instrument.

His taste in music spans a spectrum from jazz to bluegrass, from blues to classical guitar. In fact, Williams said he enjoys mixing Bach and brushes, listening to classical guitar while he paints.

Besides his artful avocations, Williams spends time keeping his body and intellect in shape.

He found himself "getting older and not in real good shape" when he took a fitness test with rookie firefighters a few years ago. About two years ago, to save stress on his spine while enabling him to exercise, Williams built an apparatus which allows him to lift weights while hanging upside down. He lifts about two or three times each week and jokes that he's now in sufficient shape so as not to arrive out of breath when running to answer the phone.

He also enjoys spending evenings in the library, searching for books on anthropology and other favorite subjects. He finds American Indian cultures, from which he traces some of his ancestors, especially fascinating.

"THOSE PEOPLE had a lot more on the ball than we thought," said Williams, noting that many modern medicines, for instance, were first used by the Indians.

Animals and landscapes have replaced cowboys and Indians as some of Williams' favorite subjects. He's painted several pictures for friends, charity, the fire chief — and many just for fun. He signs each with his middle name, Dean, because his last name is so common and because, "Maybe I'm lazy, that's the shortest name I've got."

Capturing on canvas the particular nature of a subject — whether it be the strength of a buffalo or the blooming bluebonnets and 98 per-cent humidity of a Central Texas field — is for Williams both the challenge and the reward of painting.

Oil executive suing Tulsa tax attorney

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland oil executive Billy R. Jones who became dissatisfied with his attorney in a tax case after paying almost a half-million dollars in legal fees is suing the Tulsa, Okla., lawyer in federal court here.

Jones is seeking release of his files from the attorney, G. Booker Schmidt, who says he won't give them up, claims Jones, until he gets an additional $425,000 in fees needed to complete the filing of Jones' tax returns.

On that basis, Jones has requested a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction to prevent Schmidt from disclosing confidential information in those files and to get release of the files.

U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton is to hold a hearing on the Jones vs. Schmidt matter at noon Thursday in Waco.

Jones, president of Refiners & Producers Marketing Co. of Midland, maintains the $475,000 which he already has paid in legal fees are "excessive and unconscionable."

According to court records, Jones retained Schmidt in 1980 "with regard to various civil and potential criminal matters" arising out of Jones' "business activities in the purchase and resale of petroleum products."

Jones says Schmidt notified him in writing on April 27 that if he refused to pay his latest bill, then Schmidt "would disclose confidential information" which, Jones says, would be in violation of the attorney-client privilege.

In a "personal and confidential" letter, dated April 27, to Jones, Schmidt noted that he has "enjoyed our relationship" and thinks that it has been "mutually beneficial." However, Schmidt warned that it would be "in no one's interest to publicly air our dirty linen" should their dispute be taken to court.

In his otherwise cordial letter, Schmidt said that under the Code of Professional Responsibility he would be released from any claim of privilege of confidentiality based on our attorney-client relationship and will be forced to testify and present evidence concerning the nature and value of my services to you.

"This will lead to a very unprofessional situation," Schmidt wrote. "I however, trust you will appreciate the potential adverse impact such evidence will have on pending Internal Revenue Service, Department of Justice, Department of Energy and other governmental investigations presently underway."

"It is in no one's interest to publicly air our dirty linen. I do not want to end our relationship on a sour note and in a nasty court proceeding," Schmidt said in his letter. "I, therefore, feel it is in both our interests to resolve this matter in an amiable and mature fashion so that we may devote our energies to our separate pursuit. I believe that now more than any other time it is important and essential that the privileged nature of our prior communications and correspondence be maintained."

In addition, Schmidt said it's "important" that Jones' new attorney, Charles "Chuck" Kaufmann of Stafford, have use of Schmidt's legal files on Jones, so that Kaufmann "can competently handle your complex tax and other pending legal matters. As soon as I receive full payment, I will forward my files to him."

In his complaint against Schmidt, Jones claims the Tulsa lawyer "made numerous mispresentations" about the "type and quality" of services Schmidt would provide Jones, that Schmidt "frauduently breached" his professional and fiduciary responsibilities to Jones, and that Jones will suffer "extreme hardship" and "irreparable damage" if Schmidt is not restrained from violating the attorney-client privilege.

Love: Many-splendored and much-maligned

Back in the days of our youth, the vision of love was a many-splendored thing. It was just beyond the rainbow — into the morrow. Someday we knew that love would suddenly appear, and everything would be all right. The movie scripts said so, too. So did the sonnets. Love would be forever.

"Well, it's not there now," cried the cynic. "It's just a fantasy."

There's some truth in the cynic's observations: The expectation often was the romance. The trip was the thrill.

Those romantic songs, poems, short stories, books and movies said love could be bliss, a veritable panacea, a salvation. Love might not be as earthy as Chaucer made it out or as sublime as Shakespeare pretended it was. But it could be heavenly. Those promises were to come.

"I'm still waiting," growled the impatient cynic.

Now, love could be painful and deadly, too. But the morbid side of sexual love came out of the mystery novels, the macabre movies and short stories. That was the nightmare side of love gone berserk.

Songs sung of eternal love, of splendid love from dusk to dawn, of broken-hearted love and of the dreams of the great pretenders.

"Well, it's all a bunch of bunk," sneered the cynic.

Songwriters and poets spoke of that man-woman sexual love which often transcends the physical and finds the spiritual.

But the poets' words don't tell you how to blend the physical, which we're in 'til death, with the spiritual, which is forever.

Most of us from high school on just groped around for love or whatever we called it. It was the big thrill of the year. But when it was over, we wondered where the love went. And out of fear, apprehension and ignorance, we joked about it.

"See what I mean," said the cynic. "Love's just a hype. You might as well go to the bawdy house, into the closet or up to the pasture."

Youthful years and romances (let's call them "adventures") soon were part of the past. And along came marriage — the major contract of a lifetime.

The honeymoon was just another trip.

After a while, images of love lost their luster again and again. The commitment and the spirituality fled. Working toward a career and pursuing material things became consuming. Even in marriage, love was on the wane. There were so many distractions.

Love turned to resentment. The divorces in so many of our lives tell the finality of untrue love.

"See, fool!" yelled cynic. "See what great expectations get you. Love is for Hollywood and prostitutes. Both make money out of it. It's for fool kids and dreamers."

After enough divorces, love became just another movie or just another song. It would last two hours or three minutes. No big thrill. Just entertainment. It wasn't the misery or bitterness of a failed marriage or the ecstasy or disappointment of youths on Lovers Leap or just off a country road.

"Now, you're learning," advised the cynic. "Take it easy. The love you want, if you know what you want, is just a daydream."

The old cynic may be somewhat of a sage, too. He's been around — been in and out of marriages, has fooled around and has been in some relationships. He's got experience. Lots of it.

"I know what I'm talking about," he boasted. "Look at me now — I'm free."

That's a half-truth. He's enslaved in his own selfishness.

He forgot — if he ever knew — that love is giving, not taking. He never knew the reward, for he never sowed the right seeds in fertile soil.

"Hell's bells," lamented the cynic, "the right girl just never came along."

Truth is, he never cared.

Robber sought in Iredell area

IREDELL, Texas (AP) — Bosque County officials and helicopters combed a heavily woooded area in the rain Saturday in search of a gunman who robbed the Iredell State Bank and briefly held an employee hostage.

"We haven't found him yet. But our group is still out there. We've got the sheriff's department out there and DPS units, rangers and game wardens," said Bosque County sheriff's dispatcher Tom Oglethorpe.

The McLennan County Sheriff's office had a helicopter in the area but had to return because of rain.

The robbery occurred about 12:40 p.m. Saturday, when a gunman entered the bank carrying a .22 caliber pistol. Bank President Don Harris, who was inside at the time of the robbery, said the gunman took off with $4,500.

Harris said the suspect apparently staked out the bank early Saturday and rifled the cars of bank employees, picking up a second handgun in the process.

"He had two guns, and we didn't want to get shot," Harris said. "Of course, that wouldn't have bothered me if I had a weapon, but I didn't have a weapon." a Tracy Fletcher, a 24-year-old bookeeper at the bank who was taken hostage for about two hours, said she knew the man. She described him as a 46-year-old unemployed factory worker who recently quit his job in Lampasas.

"He was real nice," she said.

Harris said Mrs. Fletcher tried to talk him out of the robbery.

"She tried to talk him out of it. She was very self-controlled, very self-controlled," Harris said.

While Mrs. Fletcher spoke with the gunman, cashier Ronald Baron was forced into the bank vault to scoop up more cash, Harris said.

At one time, the man's gun accidently went off but no one was hurt.

"I thought he'd shot (Baron), but it just went off and hit the wall," Harris said.

"The gun discharged, but it was accidental. He apologized for that," Mrs. Fletcher said.

Harris said he tried to chase the gunman in his pickup after the robber took Mrs. Fletcher hostage and drove off in her car. But said he gave up when the robber fled with a cash-filled feed bag into a wooded area off Texas Highway 6.

"I told him my car wouldn't go fast," Mrs. Fletcher said after she was released. "When I was driving, he kept telling me to go fast, but I said, no, we're not in a hurry."

Law enforcement sources said the robber freed Mrs. Fletcher, ditched her stolen car and fled on foot.

141 illegal aliens arrested, deported

CONROE, Texas (AP) — Three buses carried 141 illegal aliens, who were arrested in a gambling raid, back to the U.S-Mexico border Saturday for deportation, a Montgomery County sheriff's spokesman said.

The illegal aliens, along with two 13-year-old alleged prostitutes, were arrested in a raid at an apartment Friday night, said sheriff's spokesman Ed deForrest.

It was the third time in the past two weeks that authorities have arrested a group of illegal aliens. Groups of 34 and 58 illegal aliens were arrested earlier this month.

Rankin woman shares her quilts

Like all artists, Miss Brick displays the perseverance and fortitude necessary for a project of long duration — in this case, months for each quilt. Because they are intended as gifts, she first determines the colors preferred by the prospective recipient. Then come the fine details of workmanship which separate a quality quilt from an ordinary one.

"I just cut one block at a time so they fit," she said. "I guess you'd say that's a perfectionist. But I think that's why they look as nice as they do."

Sometimes judges agree, sometimes not. Regardless, Miss Brick remains a good sport — though she is not averse, on occasion, to doing some judging of the judges.

"I like the Odessa judges best," she commented, a wry smile creasing the corners of her mouth. "They know a blue ribbon quilt when they see one."

Mattox, ranchers to file suit against U.S. cattle quarantine

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox and a group of ranchers vowed Saturday to file suit in federal court to forestall the government's threat to quarantine Texas cattle.

Mattox and the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association made the statements a day after Texas senators refused to debate a bill that might head off the threat by bringing the state into compliance with a federal program.

"By Tuesday, I will file suit in federal court in an attempt to stop the quarantine," Mattox said.

TSCRA president Frates Seeligson said Saturday his group would file suit to halt the quarantine Tuesday morning in Austin federal district court.

"A federal quarantine on interstate shipments of Texas cattle will cost our livestock industry and a lot of decent ranchers millions of dollars," Seeligson said.

He urged Gov. Mark White to call a special session of the Legislature to deal with the problem.

Seeligson criticized senators for rejecting the bill, saying "they will have put a totally unnecessary financial burden on our industry."

TSCRA "is now going to explore every legal avenue to stop the quarantine," he added.

Meanwhile, a federal attorney moved to shift the issue from state to federal court in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Although the Independent Cattlemen's Association of Texas obtained an order from State District Judge John Dominguez in Edinburg on Thursday to stop the federal government temporarily from enforcing its quarantine, attorney William Jenson of the U.S. Department of Agriculture said, "As far as we're concerned the (state court) order is ineffective," Jenson said.

Marvin Maloney, assistant U.S. attorney in Brownsville, said Friday he had filed a petition to remove the case from state court and place it in federal court. He also said he had filed a motion to set aside the temporary restraining order.

Maloney said he is sure his motion will be approved because "it's very clear the federal court has jurisdiction and that the state court does not."

Sen. Bob Glasgow, sponsor of a brucellosis control measure, needed 21 votes to get his bill before the Senate for final passage, but he got only 20.

Brucellosis causes weight loss and miscarriages in cattle but poses no danger to consumers of meat and pasteurized dairy products. It can, however, be transmitted to slaughter plant workers and others in contact with infected animals or their freshly killed carcassses.

His bill would give the Texas Animal Health Commission authority to adopt rules to comply with the federal program of testing and vaccinations. Steers and spayed heifers more than six months old would be exempt.

Odessa's ZIP codes changing

ODESSA — ZIP codes for the Odessa Post Office are changing and five are being added, according to Officer in Charge H.C. Field.

ZIP code for post office boxes at the Main Post Office, 200 N. Texas Ave., will remain 79760. However, boxes at Crestwood Station, 3634 N. Dixie Ave., have been assigned ZIP code 79767 and the post ofice box unit at Winwood Mall will use 79768.

Three ZIPS were added to outlying sections — 79764, 79765 and 79766. Existing delivery ZIP code areas 79761, 79762 and 79763 have been changed slightly.

Field added that within six weeks every mailing address served by the Odessa Post Office would receive a notice advising them of their correct ZIP code. Customers needing additional information may call 332-6436.

Man killed, wife injured in mishap

ODESSA — An Odessa man was killed and his wife injured in a one-car accident here early Saturday morning.

Pronounced dead at the scene by Ector County Justice of the Peace Manuel Valles was 53-year-old Oscar Lee Rogge.

In critical condition Saturday afternoon with head and internal injuries at Medical Center Hospital was Ella Ruth Rogge, 39, also of Odessa.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Mrs. Rogge was driving a 1981 Lincoln Continental when she apparently ran a stop sign at the intersection of 8th Street and West Loop 338 about 2:15 a.m. Saturday.

The car, which was westbound on 8th Street, crossed the loop road and struck an embankment on the northwest corner of the intersection.

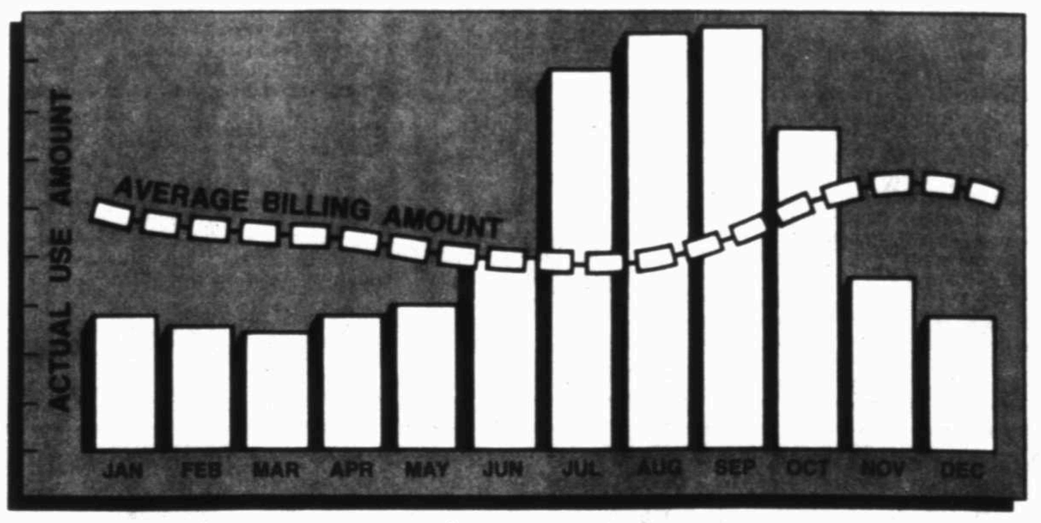

Church storage building burglarized

Murry Stehle, pastor of the Petroplex Covenant Church at 1901 N. Midland Drive, told police a storage building at 5005 Andrews Highway was burglarized sometime in the past week.

Taken were assorted goods valued at $6,130. The loss included $4,000 worth of silverware. Entry was gained by removing a lock.

In another burglary complaint, Gary Garlitz of 1609 North L St. said numerous items — including a guitar, camera and jewelry — were stolen in a break-in at his residence. Entry was gained through a bedroom window. Total loss was placed in excess of $3,000.

Average Billing can help smooth out high summer electric bills.

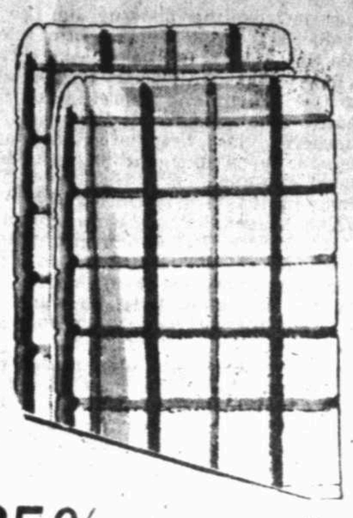

In the summer, intense Texas heat can make your air conditioner work longer and drive your electric bill up in a hurry.

Our Average Billing Plan can help by "averaging out" your payments. You still pay for all the electricity you use, and your payments will still vary from month to month. However, in high-use months you pay for less electricity than you use, and in low-use months you pay for more.

Average Billing can help smooth out high summer electric bills. It's available to both residential customers and churches. If you'd like to know more, give us a call at Texas Electric.

St. Luke's nominates two as lay delegates

The administrative board of Midland's St. Luke's United Methodist Church placed the names of Helen Clemmer and Verne Griffith Jr. in nomination for election as lay delegates to the General Conference and the jurisdictional Conference of the UMC.

The election of lay delegates will be held at the 74th session of the Northwest Texas Annual Conference being held in Lubbock Tuesday through Thursday.

Mrs. Clemmer has been active in the UMC for the past 40 years and has made her most significant contributions in the areas of Christian education and UM Women. She was a member of the first graduating class of certified Christian educators from Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University.

She served St. Luke's UMC as director of Christian education for 12 years and has continued to use her skills in a variety of service positions in the church. Currently vice president of UMW, she has held every UMW office both locally and at the district level. She has served as local and district president of Church Women United and as vice president of Midland Association of Churches. She is church lay leader at St. Luke's.

Griffith is administrative board chairman of St. Luke's and has served as a member of most boards, committees and work areas within the church. He received a bachelor of science degree in chemical engineering from the University of Oklahoma and is executive vice president of Ortloff Corporation.

His civic activities include board member of Casa de Amigos and Big Brothers/Big Sisters, committee chairman of Troop 85 of Boy Scouts of America, adviser of Junior Achievement Company and member of the University of Oklahoma chemical engineering school advisory board.

Bishop Louis W. Schowengerdt will convene the 74th session at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday at First UMC in Lubbock.

CRMWD annexes acreage, makes boundaries coincide

BIG SPRING — Directors of the Colorado River Municipal Water District annexed 3,101 acres after a public hearing. The territory previously had been annexed by the Odessa City Council, and the CRMWD board duplicated the action to make the district and Odessa boundaries coincide.

No one appeared at the hearing.

The board also authorized up to $35,000 for purchase of a large electrical transformer to be held in reserve in event either transformer at Lake E.V. Spence or Spade pump stations go out. With some 30 million gallons of water a day being pumped from Lake Spence, a critical supply situation would develop for the system if this volume were halted for any appreciable length of time, General Manager O.V. Ivie told the board.

Sharp increases in costs for employee hospitalization insurance were announced, and directors voted to absorb 75 percent of the premium charges for dependents of employees. All employees are covered 100 percent.

Ivie reported to the board on a jury award of $408,000 in its contract dispute with the SACROC oil production unit in southwest Scurry County. The jury held for the district in interpretation of the contract. Ernest E. Lillard, former public works director at Big Spring and Wichita Falls, was introduced as a new member of the district's administrative staff.

Directors also voted to file for an extension of its Stacy reservoir permit, which has been held up in litigation. The permit's appeal now is before the Texas Supreme Court.

Dana Tompkins, daughter of Tommy and Barbara Tompkins of 13 Metz St., was named a Youth Merit Award Winner by the Midland West Rotary Club. A senior at Lee High School, her school activities included Student Council, the National Forensic League, the Junior Council, the Rebelettes, and the National Honor Society. Graduating with a 4.5 GPA, Miss Tompkins was a National Merit Scholarship Commended Student and salutatorian of Lee High School.

Celena Rae Fawks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Fawks of 3310 W. Kansas, is the recipient of a Lee High School choir booster club scholarship. She is a senior at Lee, and has been a member of Lee High Chorale and the musical group Origin. American Cancer Society seeks Memorial Day gifts

There's one race that goes on all year long.

The American Cancer Society is racing to find a cure for cancer, a disease that will strike three out of four families. According to ACS, about 85,000 people will be diagnosed this year as having cancer.

The race is one the ACS is determined to win — and end. But victory won't come cheaply.

The ACS asks Midlanders to accelerate the pace in research during a special event — the Memorial Day 500, a campaign focusing on memorials for cancer victims.

While memorials are often thought of during times of immediate grief, continuing memorials are something overlooked.

On Monday, when West Texans think of family or friends who have died, the ACS is reminding local residents that a gift to the ACS is a lasting memorial.

According to ACS, if each of the Texas Division's units can achieve its goals of $500 with this special Memorial Day event, it will increase the amount the Texas Division can add to its important work.

Memorials, specifying in whose memory the gift is made, may be sent to the American Cancer Society, 601 S. Main St., Midland 79701.

MHA to consider income limits

An increase in the admission income limits will be studied by the Midland Housing Authority board when it meets at 2 p.m. Wednesday in the Hillcrest Manor Community Room, 700 W. Scharbauer Drive.

Hillcrest Manor is the housing project constructed with federal funds for low-income elderly and/or handicapped persons. It is operated by the Housing Authority.

Under a proposed resolution, income limits as proposed by the Department of Housing and Urban Development would be as follows: one person, $11,700 a year, up from $10,550; two persons, $13,400, up from $12,100.

The board also will consider approving a contract with Midland Housing Finance Corporation pertaining to possible land acquisition.

And the status of the housing rehabilitation program will be reviewed by Horace Berry, rehabilitation inspector; Susan Howell, community development coordinator; and Gloria Ellis, Human Relations Council.

Bigger not always better

'Return' omits original ingredients

Since the release of George Lucas' second commercial movie in 1973, "American Graffiti" (the first was "THX 1138" in 1971), his story has been one of successes and superlatives.

Of the five all-time movie grosses, Lucas has had a hand in on three: "Star Wars," "Raiders Of The Lost Ark" and "The Empire Strikes Back." Now, with "Return Of The Jedi" bringing in record first-day receipts of more than $6.25 million, Lucas is destined once again to place at the top of the movie industry profit columns.

But as the myth grows, so does what makes up the myth.

"The Empire Strikes Back" was made with profits from "Star Wars" for $25 million and "Return Of The Jedi" with profits from "Empire" for $32.5 million. Similarly increasing was actual running time with "Star Wars" at 121 minutes, "Empire" at 124 minutes and "Return Of The Jedi" at 135 minutes.

In special effects, there has been an increase as well, from a reported 365 shots in "Star Wars" and 415 shots in "Empire" to 517 shots in "Return Of The Jedi".

So, with all the superlatives, does bigger make better? Not in the case of Lucas' latest "Return Of The Jedi."

Somewhere on the way to making a conclusion to the middle trilogy of the "Star Wars" saga, the heart got left out. It's simply a case of ignoring the recipe to make a favorite family pie. With the original ingredients left out, it just isn't the same.

What originally attracted us — the simplicity of plot and characters, their courage and right-thinking and doing — are still there but are victims of an unnecessary sophistication. Granted, our hero, Luke Skywalker, had to grow and he has. From the callow youth in baggy canvas clothes to the military guard of his pre-Jedi knight days to the ultimate costume of identification with the myth, the jet black of a Jedi knight, Luke has shown the outward changes. But always before there were moments of personal confrontation — sometimes with Han Solo and Princess Leia in concert. In "Return Of The Jedi" Luke is the means whereby the plot unravels, a conduit. No more.

In this story by Lucas with the screenplay by Lawrence Kasdan and Lucas, Luke Skywalker (Mark Hamill) and Princess Leia Organa (Carrie Fisher) go in search of fellow confederate Han Solo (Harrison Ford), who has been frozen in carbonite and shipped to the planet Tatooine, home of space gangster, Jabba the Hutt. There they plan to free Solo and join with rebel forces to destroy the Galactic Empire now busily building a second and more powerful Death Star in space.

There is the inevitable confrontation between Skywalker and arch villain Darth Vader (David Prowse with the voice by James Earl Jones) and several surprises which bring the trilogy to a conclusion, leaving only the question of "what next?" for the faithful.

Actually the answer to "what next?" may be what came first since Lucas has plans to return to the beginning of the saga before going on, introducing us to the young versions of Darth Vader and Ben (Obi-Wan) Kenobi as well as the women in their lives.

It is hoped that a return to the soup out of which the middle trilogy came will be a return to more than just story origins. For in "Return Of The Jedi" technical excess is as proliferous as the spaceships in the final battle. There are more weird and wondrous creatures than ever, making a serious bid for the title the Muppets creators now hold. But this time around, the outrageous outer space inhabitants are not realistic.

Jabba the Hutt, a large larva-looking leech, burps and slurps his way through an exotic language while reclined opium-den-style before an obliging and fearful audience. His entourage of swinish soldiers, the Gamorrean guards, an ever-faithful gnat of a creature that huddles at Jabba's tail, Salacious Crumb, and the semi-human Bib Fortuna are just three of the least believable in creation. The Ewoks, those fuzzy adorable teddy bears that come to the aid of Princess Leia and Solo, do have their moments, however, providing what humor there is in "Return Of The Jedi."

But all the creations present their own problem; they take away from the main characters. Providing the time to develop the creatures into believable entities with dialogue and action leaves the core of what has made up the "Star Wars" saga, namely, Skywalker, Solo, Princess Leia, Chewbacca, See Threepio (C-3PO) and Artoo Detoo (R2-D2) without the chance to interact as we have come to expect.

Rated PG, "Return Of The Jedi," rounds out the trilogy and for those with a sense for completeness, it is a must. Sure to enthrall the young and perpetuate the idea of right is might, "Return Of The Jedi" will assuredly delight those who have come to enjoy the special effects. But for those who like the story of comrades in action, the special relationship of true friendship, "Return Of The Jedi" is a dimmer star in the galaxy of the "Star Wars" epic.

— BEULAH CASEY

Luke Skywalker (Mark Hamill), in the robe of a Jedi Knight, is surrounded by the creatures in Jabba the Hutt's court when he goes there to rescue Han Solo (Harrison Ford).

Stallone reveals plans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The suspense is over. After months of speculation about what Sylvester Stallone would do after directing John Travolta in "Staying Alive," the straight stuff is available.

Final negotiations are now underway for several projects, according to Stallone's manager and agent, Ron Meyer.

First, if all goes well, Stallone will star for Paramount Pictures in a movie called "50-50." A search is now underway for another leading actor to play opposite Stallone.

Filmmaker 'so ordinary that lots of people can relate to me'

ENTERTAINMENT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Filmmaker George Lucas, who gave the world Luke Skywalker and Darth Vadar, is just an ordinary guy.

"I'm so ordinary that a lot of people can relate to me, because it's the same kind of ordinary that they are," he says. "I think that gives me an insight into the mass audience. I know what I liked as a kid, and I still like it."

Putting his childhood fantasies on the screen in the "Star Wars" movies has brought Lucas extraordinary rewards. He estimates his personal net worth at $25 million. He and his wife, Marcia, also own Lucasfilm, which owns $35 million in cash and assets. With the release of "Return of the Jedi" this week, many more millions will pour in.

A rare, intimate look at the 39-year-old filmmaker is provided in "Skywalking, The Life and Films of George Lucas," a new book by Dale Pollock, entertainment reporter for the Los Angeles Times. Lucas has rarely been interviewed since his rise to fame.

THE book traces Lucas' beginnings as the shy, introverted son of a Modesto, Calif., stationer. The boy's imagination soared when his father bought a television set in 1954. Lucas loved watching the old-time serials on "Adventure Theater."

As an adult, he viewed the serials again. "I was appalled at how I could have been enthralled with something so bad," he says. "And I said, 'Holy smokes, if I got this excited about this stuff, it's going to be easy for me to get kids excited about the same thing, only better.'"

The result can be seen in the cliffhangers of "Raiders of the Lost Ark."

There were other influences, as well. Comic books, especially the Scrooge McDuck stories, played a part. "That kind of greed attracts all kids, because you want to have all this stuff! Having it in a safe place and protecting it — that's real kid stuff."

LUCAS grew up during World War II. "It was a big deal when I was growing up. It was on all the coffee tables in the form of books, and on television with things like 'Victory at Sea.' I was inundated by these war things."

Lucas found his destiny when he enrolled in the University of Southern California film school. He didn't need the drugs of the 1960s. Instead, he was high on movies. "Suddenly my whole life was film — every waking hour. It was all new, neat and exciting."

"Skywalking" traces Lucas' rise in the film world, from student films to his first feature, "THX 1138," then "American Graffiti."

Along the way, he became disenchanted with the studio system: "I think some of the people in the movie business are sleazy and unscrupulous, and I would say that the majority are bad."

SMALL wonder that he moved his operations to northern California as soon as he had become established.

Rock music lovers converge on site

AP Laserphoto

US Festival workers attempt to hold back scores of surging rock fans as the gates to the festival site opened early Saturday morning at Glen Helen Regional Park in Devore, Calif.

DEVORE, Calif. (AP) — A desert city sprang to colorful life Saturday as thousands of rock music lovers trooped into Glen Helen Regional Park for the second three-day US Festival.

Armed with blankets, towels, suntan lotion and squirt bottles, the crowd quickly settled into the park's concert bowl for the Memorial Day weekend event. Some had arrived as early as Wednesday.

As they waited for New Wave rock from The Clash, rockabilly from the Stray Cats and Men at Work's music from Australia, most crowd members seemed pleased with the facilities provided by the festival organizers at UNUSON Corp., the company set up by Apple computer inventor Steve Wozniak.

"When they get this place almost full, it remains to see how well it'll hold up. But right now, there's plenty of water, there's bathroom facilities, people are courteous to an extent — it's nice," said Mark Petrizzo, a 27-year-old postal worker visiting California for the first time.

"It was great last year — it's going to be great this year, too," said Sue Haron, a 19-year-old from Richardson, Texas.

The scene was similar to the first US Festival last Labor Day weekend, which drew an estimated 400,000 people over three days but cost Wozniak a reported $5 million.

As the sun burned off morning haze and temperatures began to soar, most of the scantily clad fans stretched out on blankets and listened to taped music coming from the 400-foot stage, a towering web of black scaffolding decorated with banners and balloons.

Hundreds also strolled through dozens of concession tents and a huge pavilion of technology exhibits.

The audience provided plenty of business for the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department. By 8 a.m. Saturday, the department had already reported 50 arrests at camp sites and parking lots inhabited by an estimated 50,000 to 60,000 concertgoers.

Summer movie menu heavy on laughs, thrills

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Laughs and thrills. That's the menu for the summer movie season that may have even the most rabid of film fans muttering, "This is where I came in."

Do young people think? The film companies don't seem to believe they do, because the summer fare is aimed directly at the viscera, not the intellect. The same companies also believe that what works once will work again, and again.

Hence the hot-weather movies feature the returns of James Bond, Superman, Luke Skywalker, Norman Bates, the Great White shark, Smoky, the Bandit, Tony Manero and those lovable slobs from Porky's.

Talk about terminal deja vu!

Nonetheless, Hollywood insiders are predicting the season's 40-plus major releases will break last year's $1.2 billion record.

"I think this summer has the potential to be the biggest in movie history," says Tad Danz, president of the Sterling Recreation Organization, a major West Coast theater chain.

Two thrill movies jumped the gun and made their debuts in May to big results: "Blue Thunder" and "Return of the Jedi" — the third of the "Star Wars" trilogy. It will be in the theaters through Labor Day and beyond. "Blue Thunder," which drew a stylish $8 million, may not last as long.

Nor will "FlashDance" and "Breathless," two other early starters. The problem is bookings. Theater owners will drop so-so performers to acquire the big guns of June. They include:

— "Octopussy," with Roger Moore starring in the 13th and perhaps the last of the James Bond series (except for the Sean Connery "Never Say Never Again," due next fall). Star, producer (Cubby Broccoli) and possibly the public are suffering from Bond fatigue.

— "Superman III," with Christopher Reeve back in the cape and Richard Pryor as the enemy.

— "WarGames," another adventure by John Badham ("Blue Thunder") about a high schooler who plugs his computer into the U.S. defense system.

— "Psycho II," with Norman Bates (Anthony Perkins) out of the loony-bin 23 years later. Vera Miles also returns, but not Janet Leigh, who remains in the shower.

— "Twilight Zone," four sequences from the old Rod Serling TV series, redone by young directors.

Plus this quartet of comedies: "Trading Places," Dan Aykroyd and Eddie Murphy; "Yellowbeard," Monty Python members, plus Cheech and Chong, James Mason and the late Marty Feldman; "The Man With Two Brains," another collaboration of Steve Martin and Carl Reiner; "The Survivors," Walter Matthau and Robin Williams.

"Spacehunter: Adventures in the Forbidden Zone," released in May, was the first of three major summer films in 3-D. The others: "Jaws 3-D," Randy Quaid and Bess Armstrong; "The Man Who Was Not There," Steve Guttenberg.

More big features will come along in July and August to replace the failures of early summer. One is much anticipated: "Brainstorm," the science fiction movie that was completed after co-star Natalie Wood's death.

John Travolta will continue the adventures of Tony Ramero ("Saturday Night Fever") in "Staying Alive," directed by Sylvester Stallone. Other returnees: "Pursuit of the Pink Panther," with Ted Wass shouldering the mantle of the late Peter Sellers; "Smoky and the Bandit, Part III," Jackie Gleason back, with Jerry Reed in the Burt Reynolds role; "Porky's II...The Next Day."

Reynolds himself will make his usual summer appearance, this time with Loni Anderson in "Stroker Ace."

Also in the comedy vein: "National Lampoon's Vacation," Chevy Chase and Beverly D'Angelo; "Zelig," Woody Allen and Mia Farrow; "Mr. Mom," Teri Garr and Michael Keaton; "Class," Jacqueline Bisset and Cliff Robertson; and "Easy Money," Roger Dangerfield.

Students presented in spring recitals

Those performing in a Monday recital included Cynthia Miller, Melissa Miller, Christy Heller, Spencer Sale, Shanie Loftin, John Sikes Johnson, Ginger Miller, Katherine Bash, Adair Rogers, Alexis Beck, Keith Beck, Christy Carl, Kevin Parks and Kathleen Callaway.

Those performing a Sunday recital were Andrea Hamilton, Mary Darlington, Sharon Karcher, Jill Sager, Janis Sager, David Sager, Tiffany Taylor, Michael Taylor, Brandon Pope, Julie Dillman and Maria Huff.

All of the students received awards for the year, including certificates, pins and report cards from the National Piano Guild Auditions. In addition, students of Mrs. Motter who were recipients of the three-year superior ratings at the Junior Federated Club Festival were Andrea Hamilton, Cynthia Miller, Melissa Miller, Alexis Beck, Adair Rogers, Julie Dillman, Janis Sager and Christy Heller.

'Star Wars' crosses into hypersound

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Han Solo and Luke Skywalker, who have spent some time in hyperspace in the "Star Wars" saga, are going into hypersound in the theaters.

Lucasfilm Ltd. sent teams of technicians to theaters around the country to "tune up" the sound systems for the recent release of "Return of the Jedi," the third movie in the series.

"Our attempt is to maximize the theater's performance," said Jim Kessler, general manager of Sprocket Systems, the post-production division of Lucasfilm. "In conjunction with theater management, we're doing things like changing amplifiers and upgrading lamps."

The system complements movie houses already equipped with Dolby Stereo. The loudspeaker changes offer a deeper bass and higher treble, more sensitive response and less distortion.

MCT adds performances

Four additional performances of Midland Community Theatre's "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," currently onstage at Yucca Theatre, will be presented. The dates are June 8-12.

For reservations call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Coors distributor ordered to pay $8,000 to estate of Lester Flatt

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The local Coors beer distributor has been ordered to pay the estate of Lester Flatt $8,000 for using the deceased Bluegrass entertainer's likeness on a promotional poster.

The Flatt estate had sued Coors for $1.5 million because a likeness of the guitarist-singer, his former partner, Earl Scruggs, and their band was used on the poster.

According to testimony on behalf of Flatt, who died in 1979 at age 64, he never allowed alcoholic beverages to be associated with his work. Other testimony said the likeness of Flatt was the equivalent of an endorsement worth $200,000 to $250,000.

The Chancery Court jury made the $8,000 award Friday. A $2 million suit against Coors by Scruggs has not yet gone to trial.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Sunshine personified, motivation glorified and humanity edified" is how Mayor Tom Bradley described Bob Hope in naming this week in honor of the comedian.

Sunday is Hope's 80th birthday, and Bradley noted the entertainer has called Los Angeles home for the last 46 years.

"He has proven that while it is nice to be important, it is more important to be nice," said Bradley's proclamation designating May 23 to May 29 Bob Hope Week.

On his birthday, Hope is scheduled to do a benefit show for the Kosair Crippled Children's Hospital in Louisville, Ky.

Michael Murphey begins to write songs of the heart

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The room was empty except for a grand piano. He walked over to it, sat down and began, with the view of the sun setting over the Florida beach, to compose another love song.

Long known as a southwestern song writer and singer, 38-year-old Michael Murphey has changed his style, moving from hard country tales to songs from the heart.

Thursday he opened the Oak Ridge Boys' concert at Ector County Coliseum, receiving foot-stomping, hand-clapping standing ovations during his set from the 4,700 fans, who insisted, with another standing ovation, that he return for an encore.

Although Murphey has a history of memorable live performances, the kind which turn on audiences of any age, the type of success and name recognition which has come to some of his contemporaries has eluded him, perhaps because it has never been his goal, not even now when it may happen in his life.

"Since the 'Hard Country' thing happened and didn't happen," Murphey says, referring to the 1980 movie project he was involved in, part of which was shot on location in Midland, "I went back to concentrating on my music totally. I think that paid off.

"I got involved with a producer named Jim Ed Norman...He really taught me some new things about production and song writing — really tore my work apart and helped me put it back together again.

"MOST OF MY songs over the last 10 years of my career have been primarily songs grounded in the Southwest — a lot of story type songs, a lot of imagery that's directly related to Texas, New Mexico and Colorado," says this Dallas native, who now lives in Taos, where he often performs at his club at the Kachina Lodge when he's not touring.

"When Jim Ed started producing me, he said, 'I think that stuff is real good, and we should always have some of it on the albums, but there's a lot of that and nothing else.' He pointed out to me a weakness in my song writing...I have really written very few love songs."

In his dry manner, Murphey interjected the next comment, laughing at its conclusion, "For a man who has been married three times, I mean, I should be an authority on romance — both the good and bad sides."

Murphey relates the story of how Norman got him to re-examine his work.

Norman asked him, "You're good at taking your personal experiences meeting old Indians in train stations and writing songs about that. Have you ever thought about taking your romantic experiences and opening up and talking about them on a record?"

Murphey told him, "'No, I've always found that to be kind of embarrassing.' I didn't want to talk about my personal life.'

"HE (NORMAN) confronted me with the fact that you're never really a true artist until you really share all of yourself with the people you're trying to communicate with, and really open up your heart and talk about your most inner feelings. That's what the greatest art has always been."

Murphey wasn't convinced.

"I thought that doing those kind of things sort of made a 'National Enquirer' out of your life. I didn't want to do that," Murphey said.

But after thinking about it for some time, he realized Norman was right.

— Michael Martin Murphey

"I had been hiding behind a lot of rattlesnake, pine tree, mountain and desert rat songs," Murphey says.

That was when Murphey began trying to write love songs based upon his personal experiences only to discover, "I was enjoying it, but I was like a kid starting all over again."

Again Norman helped him.

"He showed me how to keep those kinds of things from becoming overly sentimental, to keep them in an area where you're still saying something.

"I think the number one thing on people's minds is will they be happy in life, are they going to find any love in life, no matter what the political situation is, or how much they might be interested in lots of other things," Murphey says, adding, "And when you realize that, you write totally different music."

The result was his latest album, "Michael Martin Murphey," which includes the singles "Still Taking Chances" and "What's Forever For?"

"It's primarily an album about difficulties in love and the problem of maintaining relationships with people that you love in the 1980s. It's an album about society breaking down on a family level, and that's something I know about.

"WHEN I HEARD that song ('What's Forever For?') for the first time, it really hit home with me, and I reasoned that if it hit home with me, it might hit home with a lot of other people because two out three marriages in this society end in divorce."

Reflecting on the meaning of "What's Forever For?" which he feels is "the centerpiece of the album," Murphey says: "Maybe we're never going to find everlasting happiness until we reconsider the idea that love is the most important thing in life and does have a chance of going on possibly even beyond this life."

On May 9, Murphey won the Academy of Country Music's award for best new male vocalist. Murphey, who has cut 11 albums during his career and had a crossover hit song in 1975, "Wildfire," is reported to have said, "Just think how long it takes to get old, if it takes this long to get new."

Today, Murphey has "been extensively touring around the country" and has "a little bit better gigs since the record started taking off." But, "other than that, I haven't changed my game plan too much. I still want to live in Taos.

"If I make more money as a result of the hit records and the personal appearances this time, I think I've learned how to hang on to it a little bit better because I went through a period of having to survive and didn't have anything going at all. I learned a lot during that period."

LAUGHING, MURPHEY says, "I've gone through ups and downs and the downs seem to teach you more than the ups do."

His latest success has enabled him to begin fulfilling a lifetime dream.

"I bought a little ranch out in eastern New Mexico, which I'm hoping to fix up this summer. It's already fenced. It's got a couple of old houses on it I hope to restore, and then I'll have a real honest-to-goodness cowboy ranch for the first time in my life."

And he's also discovered, "There were just as many cowboy songs that were sung on the range that were love songs as there were songs about outlaws and story songs. I realized that I had really been leaving out a real important part of the country music tradition in my life by not doing these love songs."

Watercolor workshop to begin

Charles A. Stewart, chairman of Midland College's fine arts department, will conduct his 14th Annual Watercolor Workshop beginning Thursday. The two-week class is open to watercolorists on all levels of experience from the beginner to the professional.

"We will explore the possibilities and limits of transparent watercolor," Stewart said of the class. "Three professionals will join the group as visiting teachers to offer a wide range of ideas and approaches."

Juanite Tittle Pollard of Buffalo Gap will present a lecture and slide demonstration entitled "Watercolor — Pushing its Limits." Dr. Nancy Lee Stewart will discuss "Watercolor, the Subjective Approach" and Warren Taylor will lecture and demonstrate on "Watercolor, the Contemporary Idiom."

Ms. Pollard is a retired professor of painting from Texas Tech University with a long record of exhibitions and commissions. Dr. Nancy Lee Stewart is an art consultant for public school systems and a former public school and university art teacher. She has studios in Midland and Red River, N.M. Taylor, an MC art instructor, is on the summer school 1983 staff at Chataugua, N.Y. He is a member of the American Watercolor Society.

The workshop will run from 8 a.m. to noon. Labs will be held each afternoon. Enrollment is limited.

Information and reservations may be obtained by calling or coming by the fine arts office in the Allison Fine Arts Building at MC.

FNB to host youth orchestra concert

The First National Bank of Midland will host a concert of popular music by the West Texas Youth Orchestra at noon Thursday in the Plaza.

To conclude its second season, the orchestra will play a medley of well known tunes including the theme from "E.T.," "Arkansas Traveler," and "America the Beautiful."

The WTYO, directed by Charles Nail, is composed of gifted young musicians from the Midland-Odessa area.

Primary goal of the WTYO is to provide quality extracurricular performance opportunities and musical enrichment for its members. Members are accepted by audition without regard to age or grade in school. The only prerequisite is that a student is a member of a school instrumental program. To assist in maintaining high performance standards, professional musicians, such as the Thouvenel String Quartet of Midland, are engaged to coach orchestra members throughout the year.

The WTYO has performed at Midland College and Odessa's Globe Theatre.

The concert is free and open to the public. Everyone is invited to bring a sack lunch.

The photography exhibit "Texas West of the Pecos" is on display through Tuesday at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and Library Hall of Fame, Interstate-20 East.

The exhibit features color photographs by Texas native Jim Bones. The 34 dye transfer prints depict landscapes containing colorful vegetation, rushing streams and sheer canyon walls.

The photographs also appear in the book "Texas West of the Pecos," published by Texas A&M Press. The exhibit, originally organized by the Dallas Museum of Natural History, is being circulated by the Amon Carter Museum in Fort Worth.

The Midland petroleum museum is the first stop for the traveling show. Museum hours are Monday-Saturday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2-5 p.m. Admission is $1.50 for adults and 75 cents for children under 12 and free for preschoolers.

farm-ranch roundup

Ranchers from many states, nations expected at roundup

SAN ANGELO — Ranchers from 25 states and several nations will convene here Aug. 1-5 for the Third Annual International Ranchers Roundup in the San Angelo Convention Center.

The roundup, which will be keyed to the theme "Innovative Management," will feature general sessions of interest to ranchers and landowners plus three days of intensified concurrent sessions on beef cattle, sheep and goats, grazing management, wildlife, marketing, business management for the ranch family and computers.

Keynote speakers will include Dub Waldrip, president of the National Cattlemen's Association; U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler; Cas Maree, South African rancher, and Dr. Arthur G. Hansen, chancellor of the Texas A&M University System.

Ranchers at the conference may choose from four ranch tours to be conducted Aug. 5. Tours will be to West Texas ranches noted for innovative management practices in beef cattle, sheep and goats, grazing systems and to the scenic wildlife Texas Hill Country near Kerrville.

Ranchers and others interested in attending the Roundup may write International Ranchers Roundup, P.O. Drawer 1849, Uvalde, Texas 78801 or may call county extension agents.

Planting conditions questioned

LUBBOCK — Conditions both too dry and too wet for planting are prompting the same questions from cotton producers on the High Plains and in the mid-South and Southeast.

They want to know if they will be eligible for price deficiency payments this fall (1) if they are unable to plant cotton at all this spring; (2) if they can't plant cotton until after the "final planting date" established for their farm, or (3) if they plant their permitted base cotton acres to another crop after the final planting date.

Unfortunately, says Donald Johnson, executive vice president of the Lubbock-based Plains Cotton Growers Inc., the U.S. Department of Agriculture lawyers have answered with a flat "no" when asked if unplanted cotton acreage will be eligible for deficiency payments. The USDA's counsel quote a parenthetical provision, carried over from the 1977 Farm Act to 1981 law, which says payments in no event will be made "...on a greater acreage than the acreage actually planted to cotton for harvest...."

PGC, the National Cotton Council and the Agricultural Council of Arkansas have sought ways to reduce the impact of this provision on farmers unable to plant for reasons beyond their control.

Planting after the established final planting date will qualify producers for deficiency payments if payments are due, according to a U.S. Agricultual Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) officials.

Producers who dry plant will retain deficiency payment elibibility if the planting is done in a bona fide effort to produce a crop.

Producers who fail, after making every effort, to get and keep a stand of cotton through the final planting date may plant and harvest another crop on base cotton acres and still collect deficiency payments. The second crop may be any non-program commodity.

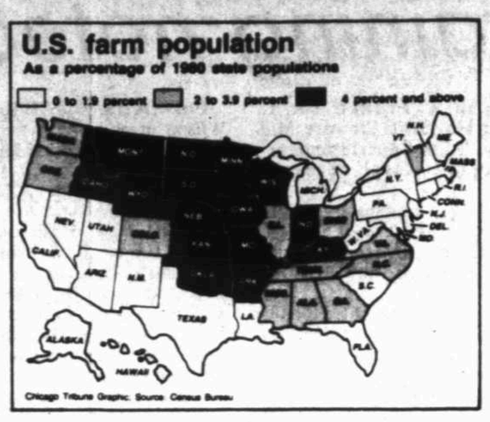

Bikers' rodeo set at Lamesa

LAMESA — The Dawson County 4-H Motorcycle and Three-Wheeler Rodeo will be held at 7 p.m. June 18 in the Lamesa Rodeo Arena, according to John Farris, Dawson County agricultural agent.

Events will include the keyhole, barrel race, wheelie, osbtacle jump, pole bending and the flat track.

Motorcycle and three-wheeler classes will be held for all age groups.

Entry forms, available at the Texas Agricultural Extension Service office in the Dawson County Courthouse, may be mailed to Jimmie Williams, 111 N.E. 24th St., Lamesa, Texas 79331, or may be filled out at the 5 p.m. registration just prior to the rodeo.

Casebearer action advised

STANTON — Now is the time to check pecan nutlet clusters for pecan nut casebearer eggs or nutlet feeding damage from this destructive pecan insect pest, says David G. Foster, Texas Agricultural Extension Service entomologist for Martin, Howard and Midland counties.

Detection of eggs or feeding damage indicates when chemicals to control the pests should be applied.

Adult female moths soon will be laying eggs on the pollinated nutlets. Eggs should hatch in four to seven days and then the young worms will attack the nutlets. The first significant nut entry is expected in early June.

Young worms cut holes into the base of the nutlets and feed inside the nutlet. As the worm feeds, pellets of frass are produced and collected in fine webs outside the nutlet.

If eggs are detected on trees, chemical treatment should be made right away, says Foster. Sevin, Zolone or Malathion sprays may be used to control pecan nut casebearers on home yard trees. Commerical producers can use azinphosmethyl (Guthion), carbaryl (Sevin), endosulfon (Thiodan) or phosalane (Zolone) to control the pests.

A second insecticide application seven days after the first generally is needed for effective casebearer control.

Red meat production declines

AUSTIN — The 303.6 million pounds of red meat produced in Texas commercial slaughtering plants in April was 9 percent below the previous month's yield, according to the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service.

Commercial cattle slaughtered in April totaled 465,000 head; the average liveweight was 983 pounds. About 107,600 head of hogs were slaughtered; average liveweight was 258 pounds.

State statistician Doug Murfield reported the April calf slaughter of 18,600 head had a total liveweight of 8.7 million pounds. The sheep and lambs slaughter for the month totaled 62,700 head; average liveweight was 109 pounds.

Nationwide, commercial red meat production in April totaled 3 billion pounds. Beef production accounted for 1.7 billion pounds of the yield.

The total U.S. cattle slaughter for April reached 2.8 million head. The total hog kill was almost 7.3 billion. Overall, cattle liveweight averaged 1,068 pounds per head. Hogs average 243 pounds.

Trucks still haul most produce

WASHINGTON (AP) — The amount of fresh fruits and vegetables shipped on trailers that are then hauled on railroad flat cars has increased steadily — from 2.9 percent of the total produce shipments in 1981 to 4.3 percent last year, says the Agriculture Department.

In 1983, the piggyback method could account for 5 percent of the shipments.

Despite the gains, however, trucks "still form the backbone of fresh fruit and vegetable transportation" in the United States, according to a report by the department's Economic Research Service.

Overall, trucks are expected to account for 88 percent of the shipments of produce this year, the same share as in 1982. Rail shipments may account for 7 percent, down from 7.7 last year.

"The generally depressed state of the trucking industry suggests that trucks will be readily available for summer fruit and vegetable harvests, and that rates will continue relatively low," the report said.

Further, equipment should be in ample supply this year. Manufacturers delivered 15,081 new refrigerated trailers in 1982, 14 percent more than in 1981.

Drip irrigation ideal for gardens

Home gardeners can produce maximum yields of quality vegetables with a drip irrigation system. Such a system applies water to the soil at the center of the row with great precision and economy. It's possible to reduce water usage in a garden by more than 50 percent with a well-designed drip system.

Drip irrigation involves a system of plastic pipes with tiny openings called "emitters" which deliver water, drop by drop, in to the soil at the base of plants along the row. The water soaks in immediately when the rate of irrigation is adjusted correctly. No water is wasted because there is neither flooding nor runoff.

Home garden drip systems operate at low pressure — 4 to 10 pounds per square inch of tubing. Most gardeners quickly learn how often and how long to operate their drip systems to satisfy their plants' water needs.

Even when a drip system is on, the middles between rows are dry enough to walk on, permitting harvesting and other garden work during irrigation. On the other hand, sprinkler and furrow-irrigated gardens are too wet to walk in for a day or two after each irrigation.

Drip-irrigated plants are more productive and water is not sprayed over the leaves as with sprinkler irrigation, thus reducing disease problems.

At the current rates for city water, savings in water cost alone can pay for a drip system in less than two growing seasons. A 1,000 square foot garden, irrigated twice weekly for a month in midsummer, requires about 10,000 gallons of water via furrow irrigation. This same garden, drip irrigated, will use less than half that amount. Thus, over a full season of gardening, water savings can be substantial.

Drip irrigation system costs vary widely but are reasonable for the home gardener. A system can last for 4 to 10 years, depending on its care.

• • •

To insure good yields of high quality produce, insect control in the home garden is a "must." So, learning about these pests will prepare you for them when they arrive on the scene.

There are more than 30 insect pests which will attack vegetables in the home garden, and these are divided into three groups.

One group includes those insects which live in the soil and attack seedlings and underground parts of plants. These include cutworms, wireworms, soil maggots and white grubs.

The other two groups are sucking insects and chewing insects. Sucking insects damage plants by inserting their mouthparts into plant tissue and sucking plant juices. Sucking insects include aphids, whiteflies, leaf-hoppers, squash bush and stick bugs.

Chewing insects damage plants by actually feeding on foliage, stems, or fruits. This group includes cabbage loopers, armyworms, flea beetles, grasshoppers and many others.

However, not all insects are bad. There are numerous beneficial insects that prey on those that harm plants. These include praying mantis, assassin bugs, ladybird beetles, lacewings, parasitic wasps and spiders.

Every day — Monday through Friday — at least twice a day and sometimes more, on my way to work I pass a house in the 2100 block of Whitney that has a hitch-on trailer sitting out in front of the house.

I live in this MaMar area and am proud of it as it is a lovely area and the people living there take pride in their homes, but with this trailer out in front, it is really an eye sore and degrading to this nice neighborhood.

I believe there are city laws and regulations in Midland to prevent this sort of thing. Won't you look into it and see that the owner is notified of this?

From a proud Midlander who takes pride in his property. — C.C.

ANSWER: Warren Cloyd with the Code Enforcement Department of the City of Midland has been informed and says you can call him at 683-4281 with more specific information as to the location of the trailer on Whitney Street, etc.

The city code, says Cloyd, does not specify types of trailers which can be parked in front of or behind a residence, with the exception of travel trailers and recreational vehicles.

For these two types of trailers, those 20 feet and under may be parked in a front driveway. Those over 20 feet must be parked in the rear yard, and those over 40 feet must be parked in a mobile home commercial district.

Cloyd will be glad to inspect the situation when he hears from you and will, if necessary in this case, send a letter to the owner to have it moved.

Could you please tell me if the movie, "Waltz Across Texas," will be shown again anytime in Midland? I have been unable to find out this information and hoped you might be able to help me. Thanks. — W. Huff

ANSWER: Answer Line does not know the answer to this one at the present time. Linda Bond with The Producers was contacted and she in turn has attempted to contact persons associated with the movie to obtain an answer. However, at this time, according to Ms. Bond, these people are in Europe. She believes the movie has been sold to television, and, if true, the production would not be shown other than on television. She will confirm this as soon as possible.

I would like to know why there are no crosswalks on Florida Street for children attending South Elementary School. This is a busy street and I am afraid there might be an accident with the children trying to cross the street. — S.B.

ANSWER: Carl Pirkle, principal of South Elementary School, was contacted and he reports that there are crossings for the children on Dakota Street in front of the school, and that there are stop signals on Main and Big Spring Streets. He referred Answer Line to the city for information.

The city's Traffic Engineering Department says the department has been in the process of reviewing all school crossings in the city. The results of this study and recommendations will be presented to the City Council in the near future.

TO GLYNDA JONES: Answer Line has received additional information on your question about installation of a traffic signal at the intersection of Highway 158 and FM 715. It was reported at first that the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation was in charge of the study, but Robert Wilson, traffic engineer with the state department in Odessa, called to say that this particular intersection is under study by the City of Midland.

Gary Saunders, acting traffic engineer, was contacted and he stated that a traffic study of this intersection was done in April 1982. At that time, Saunders says, the machine counters indicated that because of the traffic flow, a signal was needed. At the present time, this intersection traffic signal is on the list of requests to be presented to the City Council. Possibly, within the next year, approval and funds will be available for the installation, Saunders states.

Accused nurse's attorneys planning to challenge toxicology tests

Woman pleads innocent to eight-count indictment

JUNCTION, Texas (AP) — A defense attorney for a nurse charged with using a powerful drug to murder a toddler and injure six other young patients plans to challenge the validity of toxicology tests that resulted in the woman's indictment.

Genene Jones, 32, pleaded innocent Friday to the eight-count indictment, which charges her with the injuries and the Sept. 17, 1982, death of 15-month-old Chelsea Ann McClellan of Kerrville.

The children were under the care of Dr. Kathleen Holland, a Kerrville pediatrician who employed Ms. Jones.

A grand jury is investigating a series of suspicious infant deaths at a San Antonio hospital where Ms. Jones previously worked, and authorities have said they are taking a "close look" at Ms. Jones in connection with those deaths.

Chelsea's mother, Petti McClellan, attended the arraignment before state District Judge V. Murray Jordan on Friday afternoon and wept when District Attorney Ronald Sutton read the murder indictment.

Ms. Jones sat expresionless during the proceeding, matter-of-factly answering "not guilty" when the charges were read.

Jordan set a $50,000 bond on the murder indictment and a $25,000 bond on each of the six other injury counts. He denied a bond reduction request by Ms. Jones' court-appointed lawyer, William Chenault.

The murder indictment alleges that Ms. Jones "intentionally and knowingly" killed Chelsea by injecting her with the drug succinyl choline, a muscle relaxant that can cause respiratory arrest.

Chelsea's body was exhumed May 7, and Sutton said Swedish toxicologist Dr. Bo Holmstedt "found several locations of the presence of succinyl choline" in samples of her tissue.

However, Chenault said Ms. Jones was not guilty of any of the charges against her. "There's not any evidence. He (Sutton) has been trying for months to get an indictment, and he finally found a grand jury who would bring one in."

Chenault said the defense probably will challenge the validity of the Swedish test, saying Holmstedt was "a very unorthodox toxicologist."

Chenault added he probably would request a second exhumation of the body in order to conduct the defense's own tissue-sample tests.

After the arraignment, Ms. Jones was transferred to the Kerr County Jail in Kerrville. The trial is scheduled to begin Aug. 1 in Kerrville.

Technology hasn't replaced history, tradition

People keep coming back to Indy; 25 years is nothing

By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — The car is a multi-colored blur as it whips past, just inches from the concrete wall. The radar gun clicks and the digital readout blinks. The yellow numbers read: 209.440.

The car, a three-foot-high, 1,500-pound missile designed and built in the English countryside, suddenly dives low on the track and disappears around the first turn, the raspy whine of its turbocharged engine echoing for a moment after it's out of sight.

Crewmen stand along the narrow grassy strip between the black ribbon of the pit road and low gray wall at the inside of the racetrack. They talk quietly among themselves; terms such as "et," "rpm," "top end" and "setup" sprinkle the conversation.

It takes just 44.46 seconds for their team car to negotiate the four turns of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway's 2½-mile oval, and the radar gun again is pointed at the bullet-shaped front of the racer.

This time the straightaway speed is 210.351 mph, the entire lap averaging 202.704.

Aerospace technology and dazzling speeds. Yet, as the 67th edition of the Indianapolis 500 approaches Sunday, history and tradition still play major roles.

"What's most important to me about the Indianapolis 500 is the tradition," said Donald Davidson, statistician and historian for the United States Auto Club, which sanctions the race.

"You could go out into the stands and talk to people at random," he continued, "and most of them would tell you they've been coming here for 20, 30, 40 years. Twenty-five years at this place is nothing.

"I've seen films of the races in the '30s, and they had a mob then, too. Heck, it was a tradition then. They celebrated the 25th annivrsary of Indy in 1938."

LIGHT YEARS ago, technologically — 1911 to be exact — the first Indianapolis 500 was run. The dimensions of the track, built in 1909 as a test facility, have remained the same. Physically, most everything else has changed.

The racing surface, cobbled with bricks, and the few permanent stands are gone. The track, with the exception of a 3-foot-wide strip of original bricks to mark the start-finish line and give a nod to history and tradition, is paved and smooth. Huge modern stands and bleachers have risen around much of the sprawling oval, giving the Speedway about 230,000 permanent seats.

There are two golf courses and a motel on the 433-acre grounds, as well as maintenance and service buildings, a medical center and a series of hospitality suites for the big-money teams and commercial sponsors, who foot most of the bills.

The most dramatic changes since that first race, though, have been in the cars and the speeds.

COMPARING THE Marmon Wasp, which Ray Harroun drove to victory in 1911, with the March, Penske, Wildcat and Eagle racers that now dominate Indianapolis is like comparing a log cabin with the World Trade Center.

The only requisite for getting into that race 72 years ago was that each car hit a minimum speed of 75 mph while going through a quarter-mile speed trap on the main straightaway. And Harroun's high-tailed, blunt-nosed Wasp was the only one of the 40 cars in the 1911 Indy debut that ran without benefit of a riding mechanic.

Today, the cars must complete a four-lap qualification run and be among the fastest 33 qualifiers on the basis of average speed. The record for four laps now stands at 207.395 mph, set by Teo Fabi, a veteran of the world sports car circuit but a rookie here, in grabbing the pole position for this year's race.

The medical doctor who once warned pioneer car maker Henry Ford in the late 1800s that the human body was not built to take speeds over 15 mph, would be aghast.

THE SPEEDWAY, where one of the the single sports events of each year now carries a purse over $2 million, has been the catalyst for the development of technology and speed.

The names of the men who raced here in the early days — the Chevrolet brothers, Louis, Gaston and Arthur; Barney Oldfield; Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, who later owned the Speedway — are synomymous with daring deeds, motor car development and the quest for speed.

Rene Thomas first went over 100 mph here in 1919, averaging 104.785. It was 54 years later, 1963, that Parnelli Jones topped 150, turning a lap at 150.729.

From that moment, the upward movement has been steady.

Scotsman Jimmy Clark broke 160 in 1965. England's Graham Hill got above 170 in 1968. Bill Vukovich soared above 180 and Bobby Unser later broke 190 during May of 1972. And Tom Sneva finally, officially, hit the mystical 200 — once considered as unreachable as running the mile in four minutes — in 1977.

Cubs win two from Captains

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland's Cubs swept their first doubleheader of the season, defeating Shreveport 5-2 and 7-1 behind the pitching of Ken Pryce and Stan Kyles at Cubs Stadium Saturday night.

The win gives Midland a 3-2 edge in the series going into tonight's 7 p.m. final game and three wins in its last four starts.

Steve Wilhelmi, author of a perfect game earlier this season, will be seeking his fourth win in five decisions while Doug Welenc, 1-6, will be trying to shake a four-game losing streak. A Midland win not only would give the Cubs an even break on the homestand but an even break on the 10-game season's series with the Texas League East Division leaders.

Pryce, who won in relief in Thursday's doubleheader, relieved Carlos Gil with two out in the first inning and the Captains leading 2-0. The righthander from San Diego blanked Shreveport the final 6 1/3 innings and got his third win without a defeat when the Cubs rallied for five runs in the third inning.

Mark Grant, who was 16-5 with 243 strikeouts in 198 innings at Clinton, Midwest League last year, walked Bill Hatcher, Mel Hall and Tom Lombarski in the third and Trey Brooks emptied the bases with a three-run double to give Midland a 3-2 lead.

Randy LaVigne and Mike Anicich followed with run scoring doubles and that's all the encouragement Pryce needed.

The 6 1/3 innings gives Pryce 15 2/3 innings without yielding an earned run in six relief appearances. It also lowers his earned run average to 2.16.

When Anicich singled in the fifth, it was his seventh straight hit in the last three games.

In the nightcap, the Cubs gave Stan Kyles an early lead and the righthander responded with a five-hitter. In fact, the lone run came as a result of a misjudged fly ball, error and passed ball or he would have had the first shutout by a Midland pitcher this year.

Midland scored twice in the first when Rick Baker and stole the first of six bases pilfered by the Cubs in this game, moved to third on an infield out and scored on a passed ball. Tom Lombarski walked, stole second and scored on LaVigne's single.

Infield hits by Jim Walsh and George Borges plus Baker's sac fly produced another run. In the third a walk to Mel Hall, a stolen base and Lombarski's run-scoring single to center.

Midland sewed it up with three runs in the fourth as Walsh singled, Borges doubled and A.J. Hill singled to drive relief pitcher John Violette to a quick shower. Jon Reelhorn got Baker on a grounder to first and then trapped Borges off third, however, catcher Jim Stassi dropped the ball on the tag at the plate. Hall then tripled home the third run, a towering fly that looked as though it might clear the centerfield fence.

Texas beats Tulane, 7-5 to gain finals

AUSTIN (AP) — Mike Brumley drove in a run with a triple, scored and pushed in another run with a bases-loaded walk as the Texas Longhorns beat Tulane 7-5 Saturday to eliminate the Green Wave from the NCAA Central Regional baseball tournament.

The Longhorns will face Mississippi State, a 7-5 winner over Pan American Saturday, in the tournament title game at 1 p.m. today.

Mike Capel, 12-1, scattered eight hits during 7⅔ innings to pick up the win. Kirk Killingsworth got his seventh save.

Tulane led 1-0 in the first inning when Tommy Mathews doubled to center field to score John Zelenka.

Texas scored twice in the bottom of the first on Brumley's RBI triple and a single by Jose Tolentino.

Tulane starter Scott Mujrphy was relieved in the second inning by Kevin Burdine.

Bill Bates and Darren Loy each drove in a run for Texas in the second to increase the Longhorn lead to 4-1.

Tulane got a run in the third and tied the score on Dan Wagner's two-run homer in the fourth.

Brumley walked with the bases loaded in the fourth to give Texas the lead and Loy scored to make it 6-4. Johnny Sutton ended Texas' scoring in the fifth with a run-scoring single.

Texas is now 58-14 for the season. Burdine, 1-2, took the loss for Tulane, which closed out the year 45-17.

MISSISSIPPI STATE, 42-13, overcame a 5-0 deficit to give relief pitcher Will McRaney his second win in three decisions.

Pan American rocked Bulldog starter Harold Myles for four runs in the first inning. Pat Marshall drove in one with a sacrifice, Mark Reissener hit a two-run single to center field and on the next pitch, Rafael Barbosa hit his second home run of the tournament, a 425-foot shot to center field.

Pan American, 64-18-1, widened its lead in the second on Marshall's RBI double.

Mississippi State scored four runs in the fifth. Chris Maloney and Dan Van Cleve singled, and Winkler singled in Maloney. J. Porter, Will Clark and Pete White also had RBI's in the inning.

The Bulldogs took the lead for good in the sixth on Winkler's two-run double and Palmeiro's RBI single.

McRaney relieved Myles with two outs in the first and allowed just one run in 5⅓ innings. Robbin Geter picked up a save with three shutout innings.

CAPE GIRARDEAU, Mo. (AP) — Dale Jenkins of Abilene Christian set a new NCAA Division II record of 18' 1" in the pole vault and his teammates finished second, third and fifth to lead their school to the 1983 track and field championships Saturday.

Abilene Christian finished with 169.5 points, followed by Angelo State with 145 and Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo with 117.5 in the men's division.

Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo, paced by a record-setting 1-2 finish in the 5,000-meter run by Amy Harper and Leslie White, rolled up 206 points to finish well ahead of Morgan State's 116 points to take the women's championship for the second year in a row.

In the men's pole vault, Abilene Christian's Brad Beardsley, the defending Division II champion and the American record holder, was able to clear only 16' 6" Saturday, good enough for second place behind Jenkins. In third was decathalon winner Tim Bright, also with 16' 6". Fourth went to Steve Snyder of South Dakota with a vault of 16' 2", followed by Bobby Williams of Abilene Christian with 15' 10¼".

Another Abilene Christian standout was Charlie Phillips, who set a record of 45.12 seconds to win the men's 400-meter dash and anchored the school's winning 4 x 400-meter relay with a record time of 3:06.84.

Lakers must win both at home

Sixers playing with more aggressiveness

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers, behind 2-0 in the National Basketball Association championship series against Philadelphia going into Sunday's third game, say they must beat the 76ers in their next two meetings to have a realistic chance of defending their title.

"We have to win these two games, no question about it," said forward Jamaal Wilkes. "If we can do it, then it's a mini-series."

The Lakers face a difficult task in catching Philadelphia, who they beat in the championship series in 1980 and last year. Only two teams — the 1969 Boston Celtics against Los Angeles and the 1977 Portland Trail Blazers against the 76ers — have come back from 2-0 deficits to win a best-of-seven NBA final series.

"We're disappointed, but to keep it in perspective, we're playing a team that's been a bridesmaid for a long time," Wilkes said. "They're hungry. They've played good, hard basketball, and made the big plays when they needed them."

PHILADELPHIA CAME into the series fully rested, while the Lakers had just completed a tough six-game battle with San Antonio in the Western Conference final series.

The 76ers have outhustled the Lakers in the first two contests, and in the second game, Los Angeles' lack of aggressiveness netted them only five free throw attempts, an all-time NBA playoff low.

"The truth is, we've been outplayed," said Lakers General Manager Jerry West. "They've wanted it more than we have."

Reserve forward Bob McAdoo, whose sharpshooting helped Los Angeles beat the 76ers in six games in last year's final series, said it's time for the Lakers to get mad.

"We've got to get more aggressive as a team," McAdoo said. "I just get angrier and I play angrier. We're going to have to play like we're possessed."

THE LAKERS will need more aggressiveness from center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who has been outrebounded 30-8 by his counterpart on the 76ers, Moses Malone, in the series.

Abdul-Jabbar, however, scored 10 of the Lakers' 12 points in the first 10:50 of the fourth quarter Thursday night when the 76ers pulled away for a 103-93 victory.

But as the Lakers tried to force the ball into Abdul-Jabbar, they committed eight turnovers in the fourth quarter, and their other starters went 0-for-9 from the field.

McAdoo hit three-point goals in the final 1:10 to keep the score respectable.

The third game at The Forum in Inglewood, Calif. starts at 12:30 p.m. PDT and will be nationally televised by CBS. Game 4 also will be at the Forum, on Tuesday night.

Lakers Coach Pat Riley said after practice Saturday that "having to go to Kareem in the fourth quarter is not so bad. But he has to get more rebounds. We need 10 or 11 from him, not four. That's reality."

"It's going to be wham-bam," Lakers guard Ervin "Magic" Johnson said. "We're home now, and we've got to catch up one game at a time. We have to make it 2-1 and then 2-2."

Winkel-Walling fire 63 to lead RHCC Stampede

Jamie Winkel and Mike Walling fired a 63 Saturday to take over the lead in the 18th annual Ranchland Hills Country Club Stampede golf tournament as first day leaders Bob Herrell and Steve Thompson all but lost hopes of a championship.

Herrell and Thompson took the first round lead Friday with a 69, but ballooned to 79 Saturday to fall from serious contention.

Winkel and Walling were tied for third place with a first round 71 Friday, but the tournament's best round of 63 vaulted them into first place by one stroke over Craig and John Adams, the defending champions, with a two-day score of 134.

The Adams brothers posted a fine 65, but ended Saturday's play with a two-round total of 135, still in position to repeat.

Rick Peterson and Gary Littlejohn are also in serious title contention after Saturday's 67 gave them a two-round total of 138, four strokes off the pace. Ron Hicks and Dub Huckabee stand at 139 after a 68 round Saturday and they too still have hopes heading into today's final tournament round.

Al Boudreaux and Ted Collins own a 140 while Herrell and Thompson head the rest of the field at 143 as championship scores climb.

Saturday's flight leaders are as follows:

Ram Rod Flight: Winkel-Walling 134, Adams-Adams 135, Peterson-Littlejohn 138, Hicks-Huckabee 139, Boudreaux-Collins 140, Herrell-Thompson 143.

Astros dump Cards, 9-2

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Jose Cruz highlighted Houston's four-run fifth inning with a two-run pinch double, and shortstop Dickie Thon drove home two runs and scored two more as the Astros beat St. Louis 9-2 Saturday night.

Astros' first baseman Ray Knight also contributed to Houston's 13-hit attack with a two-run home run in the seventh inning.

Thon, whose 12-game hitting streak was snapped Friday night, grounded to second base scoring one run in the first inning, tripled and scored a run on Knight's hit in the third inning, and singled home another run in the Astros' breakaway fifth inning.

Joe Niekro, 3-4, yielded one run in the first inning when Dane Iorg hit into a double play, scoring Tom Herr.

Braves 6, Cubs 4

ATLANTA — Chris Chambliss drilled a tie-breaking two-run, two-out pinch single in the sixth inning to give the Atlanta Braves a 6-4 victory over Chicago for their first triumph in five games against the Cubs this season.

National League

Chambliss' two-out hit off reliever Bill Campbell came after Dale Murphy singled and Bob Horner doubled him to third with none out against loser Mike Proly, 1-2. Campbell struck out Bob Watson, walked Glenn Hubbard intentionally and got Bruce Benedict to hit into a forceout at the plate before Chambliss, batting for winning pitcher Donnie Moore, 1-0, delivered.

Steve Bedrosian worked the final three innings for his fifth save.

Phillies 5, Expos 3

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Schmidt slammed a two-out homer in the bottom of the ninth inning to give the Phillies a 5-3 victory over the Montreal Expos, snapping Philadelphia's six-game losing streak.

Schmidt, who had been 0-for-22 and had struck out four times on 12 pitches in the game, blasted the first pitch from reliever Jeff Reardon for his eighth home

Reds 4, Pirates 3

CINCINNATI — Gary Redus stole home with one out in the bottom of the eighth inning to give the Cincinnati Reds a 4-3 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Redus got an infield single off reliever Rod Scurry, 2-2, to lead off the eighth, took second on Scurry's wild pitch and stole third, his 14th stolen base of the season.

Dodgers 5, Giants 0

LOS ANGELES — Fernando Valenzuela fired a two-hitter for his second staright shutout and fourth of the season in pitching the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 5-0 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

The victory snapped the Giants' four-game winning streak. They had won seven straight in Los Angeles dating back to last year. Valenzuela, 6-2, ended a personal six-game losing streak against the Giants and has allowed only two earned runs in his last 28 innings.

Bill Russell singled home two runs to highlight the Dodgers' four-run second inning against loser Andy McGaffigan, 2-5.

Graham takes Memorial lead

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) - David Graham converted his 3-under-par 69 and Andy Bean's double bogey on the final hole into a 2-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the $400,000 Memorial Tournament.

Bean, the second round leader, shared the top spot when he and Graham went to the 18th tee. But Bean drove into a fairway bunker and had to play his second shot with the ball well below the level of his feet, a stance that produces a tendency to hit to the right.

Bean did just that, hitting a shot that sent the soggy gallery scurrying.

Shortly after the national television cameras ended their coverage for the day, he chipped down and then 3-putted, missing from 4 feet on his second putt in a drizzling rain and providing Graham with a 2-shot cushion going into Sunday's scheduled final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize.

Graham, a former U.S. Open and PGA champion and the 1980 winner of this tournament, finished three rounds over Jack Nicklaus' Muirfield Village Golf Club course with a 208 total, eight shots under par.

Bean's double bogey completed a 74 and left him in a tie for second at 210 with Scott Hoch. Hoch had a 70 under the gray, threatening skies that produced occasional drizzle and light showers.

Ben Crenshaw, with a 73, and Peter Jacobsen, who matched par 72, were another shot back at 211.

Tom Watson had to rally from a series of double bogeys to remain in contention at 212, four under par and only four off the pace with 18 holes to go.

Watson had consecutive double bogeys on the second and third holes, but birdied three of the last four holes and managed to get in with a round of par 72.

He was tied with Hale Irwin, Jack Renner, Jim Thorpe and Calvin Peete. Peete, a winner last week in Atlanta, had a 69. Fought, Irwin and Thorpe had 70s and Renner 71.

Bean, who held a 2-shot lead at the turn, shrugged off the fat 40 he compiled over the back nine.

"Just one of those things," said Bean, who has won at least once in each of the last six seasons.

"The putts I was making the first couple of days were lipping out today, like that one (the 4-footer) on the last hole."

Graham, a winner in Houston three weeks ago, had five birdies and two bogeys, caught Bean with a 12-foot birdie putt on the ninth hole but pointed to a hard-won par-5 on the 15th hole as the key to his round.

Lanny Wadkins, who has taken two titles and leads the Tour in money-winnings this year, slipped to a 75 and was at 214. Defending champion Ray Floyd struggled to a 41 over the back nine, went to a 76 and was at 217. Nicklaus, the host and founder of the tournament, as well as the course designer, got in with a 70 and was at 218, two over par.

Sheehan takes one-shot Corning Classic lead

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Patty Sheehan, twice a bridesmaid at the Corning Classic, birdied three of four holes midway through her third round Saturday to lead the $150,000 event by one stroke.

Sheehan's 209 for 54 holes was barely enough for an edge over Kathy Hite going into Sunday's conclusion of the five-year-old Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament which Sheehan has never won despite two high finishes.

Hite recovered from 68-76 first two days with a record-tying 6-under-par 66 and an aggregate of 210, six strokes under par.

The 1981 LPGA Rookie of the Year, Sheehan finished third here that year and second to Sandra Spuzich in a one-hole playoff in 1982.

Midpoint leader Kathy Young shot an even-par 72 for sole possession of third place at 211, while Australian Jane Lock — who nearly matched Hite with a sparkling 67 — and Cindy Hill remained in the hunt, three shots off the pace at 212.

Sandra Haynie and rookie Lauren Howe were paired at 213, while JoAnne Carner, Sarah LeVeque, Cathy Mant and Sue Ertl were bunched at 215.

Sheehan, 26, who won $225,000 last year as a tour sophomore, is looking for her fifth LPGA title and represents the only consistent winner among the leaders. Hite's only championship was at Corning, while the $22,500 first prize would be a novelty for Young, Hill and Lock.

Playing head-to-head with Young, Sheehan pulled into a tie for the lead with a birdie 3 on the fourth hole.

Both women parred the next four holes and birdied No. 9 to go six under, but on the back nine Young fell back when she began a string of three straight bogeys on the 10th hole.

Meanwhile, Sheehan birdied Nos. 10 and 14, lost a stroke with a bogey on the 16th hole, got it back on the 17th and then bogeyed No. 18.

Hite, 34, also had a roller coaster round, while tying the tournament record held by six other women, including Sheehan, and setting a record with nine birdies in one round. Hite missed her chance to set the record at 65 or lower because of bogeys on the first, seventh and 10th holes.

The Corning tournament is the first event in a triple crown which carries the greatest purse offered in women's golf. The winner here would collect $450,000 in addition to the winner's share here by winning either the West Virginia Classic next week or the McDonald's Classic at Malvern, Pa., July 14-17. And $1.35 million by winning all three titles.

Rockets center attention on Fitch

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Rockets, continuing to search for a new head coach to shepherd future draft pick Ralph Sampson into the National Basketball Association, have centered their attention on Bill Fitch, who has resigned as coach of the Boston Celtics.

Fitch resigned Friday and probably will be a candidate of other NBA teams seeking new coaches.

But the Houston Post quoted sources in Boston as saying Fitch may favor the Houston job because of the chance to build a team around Sampson, the 7-4 All-American from Virginia who will be the Rockets' selection in the June 2 draft.

"Bill is a great teacher and would fit in exceptionally well with our current program," Rockets General Manager Ray Patterson said. "I'll probably talk to him at length on Wednesday in Chicago at the pre draft camp.

"I would say Bill Fitch is certainly the prime candidate now in Houston, based on his record and track ground, if nothing else."

Fitch compiled a 242-86 record in four seasons at Boston, posted three 60-win seasons and won the NBA title in 1981 when the Celtics beat the Rockets in the championship series.

On way to alter...It's Yanks 3-1 in 8th

By KEN O'QUINN

ORONO, Maine (AP) — John Winkin loves baseball. Events of his wedding day prove it.

It was in September 1960. The Boston Red Sox were playing the New York Yankees in a crucial American League game, and Winkin was listening as he drove to the church.

When he arrived, he switched off his car radio and, without missing a pitch, grabbed his transistor, keeping it pinned to his ear in the small room at the front of the church.

Minutes later, as Winkin strolled down the aisle, he passed a friend who asked the score of the game. Without hesitation, Winkin whispered: "The Yankees, 3-1 in the eighth."

WINKIN NOW is the baseball coach at the University of Maine, and his enthusiasm for the game has not diminished. He works 12-hour days and drives nearly 20,000 miles around New England, flying to more distant spots each summer to scout players he hopes will continue his record of success at Maine.

The Black Bears won the New England championship for a record fourth consecutive season this year, and are in the NCAA tournament this week for the sixth time under Winkin.

Unlike head coaches at many larger colleges, Winkin has no full-time assistant, and therefore must serve as coach, recruiter and fund-raiser. He refuses to slow down.

"The worst fear I have in life is the day I have to retire. That's the one thing I don't want to do," said the 63-year-old Winkin. "I don't plan to. That's why I take such good care of myself."

After 29 years of coaching, his once-brown hair has turned gray, but Winkin's daily routine of calisthenics and a five-mile jog have allowed him to carry the same 145 pounds on his 5-foot-4 frame that he had when he graduated from Duke in 1941.

WINKIN CONDUCTS his summer odyssey in a dark blue Plymouth Horizon, averaging 300 miles a day as he scouts American Legion games around New England. He'll return home each night and tune in a major league game to help him fall asleep.

"A lot of things I've done have come from having studied people like (former Yankees' managers) Casey Stengel and Joe McCarthy, and modern managers," said Winkin. He immerses himself in the game, wondering "why does a guy do this or why does he do that? What's he going to do in certain situations?

Winkin joined the university in 1974 after 20 years as baseball coach and 10 years as athletic director at Colby College in Waterville, Maine. He still lives in Waterville with his wife, Kris, 55, son David, 18, and daughter Mary, 15.

At the family's summer cottage in China, Maine, Winkin swims, does yard work — and thinks baseball.

"I like to sit out in the sun with a pad and begin to think about the fall," he said. "I'm always fussing around. I'm smart enough to know that it doesn't take much to slip."

IN THE past year, Winkin's passion for baseball also has become his avenue for escape. It has helped him deal with his wife's battle with cancer.

"Her courage has been remarkable," he said. "If it weren't for baseball, life would be tough for me right now. This team here is an unusually great bunch of kids. They've been extremely thoughtful of her. I can't tell you how many times they've sent her plants, flowers."

Earlier this year, several players "were thinking more about him than the game," said senior Kevin Bernier. "All they were thinking about was not doing anything wrong."

Winkin is a gracious man who is soft-spoken and friendly off the field, in stark contrast to the intense coach who is known to vent his anger when his team's performance is subpar.

During the school year, in warm weather, he rises at 5 a.m., does calisthenics, jogs and eats breakfast before making the 65-mile drive to his small office in Memorial Gym.

He gets home about 7 p.m., but there is no immediate rest; there are more recruiting calls to make to high school prospects, and the next day's practice to organize.

WITH A career record of 235-100, and honors such as his selection as coach of the 1983 USA College All-Star team, opportunities to coach or manage in the pro ranks have been dangled before Winkin. He has always said "no." His family was content in Waterville, he said, so he stayed and built the Maine program to one of national stature.

"My family has had to pay for my work habits," said Winkin, who, despite his wife's exhortations, does not take a vacation. "I love to watch the kids play," but the opportunities are rare.

He tries to arrange his summer travel so he can see games in communities where his daughter has a swim meet that day. His son, who competes in track at Waterville High, will attend Maine this fall, and his father is delighted.

Winkin acknowledges that he and David "may have missed something in companionship, but I hope not."

"If I'm going to have a strong program, I've got to work at it," he said.

Baseball season never ends for Maine baseball coach John Winkin, who even went to alter listening to game on his transister.

Rent It or Own It

by Bob Howle

Now that spring has arrived, your attention should be turning to the outside clean-up jobs. If you are about to repaint a home's exterior, it is a good idea to first completely wash the house. After correcting all the peeled paint spots and popped nails, rent a high-pressure washer. Use it to apply a detergent solution to the exterior of the house. The typical unit operates at a nozzle pressure of 1000 pounds and up. Let the detergent set a few minutes to lift the dirt then, using clean water, use the washer to spray the dirt away. This cleaning techniqueassures good adhesion of your fresh coat of paint.

There is no question that using such equipment is far better than washing the house with a sponge. It certainly is practical, it certainly is logical, and when you rent it from BOB's RENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy. 685-1271 & 2909 N. Big Spring, 684-8294, it certainly is affordable. So come in soon and see how we can make life easy. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

HANDY HINT: Never leave the gun-jet of a high pressure washer in a closed position for longer than five minutes.

Paciorek bats in five to lift Chisox past Rangers, 8-3

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Tom Paciorek drove in five runs with a tie-breaking two-run homer in the sixth inning and a bases-loaded double in the seventh, powering Richard Dotson and the Chicago White Sox to an 8-3 victory over the slumping Texas Rangers.

Harold Baines, who homered in the first inning, walked to open the sixth before Paciorek tagged loser Charlie Hough, 2-5, for his fourth home run of the season and a 4-2 lead.

Dotson, 5-5, was nicked for two runs in the first on singles by Wayne Tolleson, Buddy Bell and Pete O'Brien and a sacrifice fly by Larry Parrish. He did not allow another hit until George Wright singled in the seventh and gave way to Dick Tidrow with none out in the inning.

Baines hit his third homer in the bottom of the first and the Sox tied it in the fifth on a pair of walks and a looping double by Jerry Dybzinski.

American League

Billy Sample drew a walk to open the Texas seventh and went to third on Wright's single. Tidrow, gaining his fourth save, relieved Dotson and got out of the inning after Sample scored on a sacrifice fly by pinch hitter Bill Stein.

That made it 4-3, but the White Sox wrapped it up with four runs in the seventh in handing the Rangers their sixth setback in the last seven games. Vance Law tripled and scored on a pinch double by Jerry Hairston. Rudy Law beat out a bunt and Baines walked to load the bases before Paciorek doubled to clear them.

Blue Jays 9, Red Sox 5

TORONTO — Lloyd Moseby doubled to snap a 5-5 tie in the sixth inning and later scored on Barry Bonnell's sacrifice fly and Rance Mulliniks drove in three runs with three hits, including a homer, to spark the Toronto Blue Jays to a 9-5 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

The victory snapped Boston's three-game winning streak and ended Toronto's three-game skid. It also moved the Blue Jays within one game of the first-place Red Sox in the American League East.

Roy Lee Jackson, 4-1, the third of four Toronto pitchers, went 2⅓ innings and gave up one run on three hits. Joey McLaughlin went the final 2⅔ innings for his fourth save.

Tigers 6, Twins 1

DETROIT — Chet Lemon ignited a three-run sixth inning with his fourth home run of the season and Milt Wilcox pitched a four-hitter as the Detroit Tigers extended their winning streak to four games with a 6-1 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Lemon's high fly ball off Twins starter Al Williams, 2-6, dropped into the stands just inside the left-field foul pole to snap a 1-1 tie. The Tigers added two more runs in the inning on a single by Rick Leach, Tom Brookens' double, a walk and a two-run single by Lou Whitaker.

Wilcox, 5-5, allowed only two baserunners after the second inning. Tom Brunansky singled to lead off the fifth but was picked off first by Wilcox. The Detroit right-hander struck out seven and walked one as he pitched his sixth complete game to tie Toronto's Dave Stieb for the American League lead.

Angels 7, Indians 4

CLEVELAND — Rookie Daryl Sconiers capped a five-run first inning with his second grand slam of the season, and Geoff Zahn pitched the California Angels to their sixth straight victory, a 7-4 triumph over the Cleveland Indians.

Sconiers also drove in a run in the ninth with a double, giving him five RBI on the night. His home run off Cleveland starter Len Barker, 4-4, helped send the Indians to their 10th defeat in 12 games.

Zahn, 5-3, scattered nine hits, walked two and did not strike out a batter as he recorded his fifth complete game.

Yankees 5, A's 2

NEW YORK — Roy Smalley drove in two runs with a single and his seventh homer, and Dave Righetti scattered seven hits, leading the New York Yankees to a 5-2 victory over the Oakland A's.

Right fielder Oscar Gamble, who saved a run with a diving catch in the top of the third, singled a run home in the bottom of the inning to help Righetti notch his seventh triumph in nine decisions. Righetti struck out a season-high eight.

Mariners 4, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — Manny Castillo drove in the tying run with a pinch triple and scored the winning run on Richie Zisk's sacrifice fly as the Seattle Mariners came from behind with two eighth-inning runs to edge the Milwaukee Brewers 4-3.

Orioles 1, Royals 0

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Left-hander Scott McGregor pitched a two-hitter, and Eddie Murray had one of Baltimore's three hits, a massive home run, to lead the Orioles past the Kansas City Royals, 1-0.

McGregor, 5-3, retired the first 10 Royals before John Wathan singled into left field with one out in the fourth. Onix Concepcion had the Royals' other hit, an eighth-inning single, as McGregor finished with one strikeout and four walks.

Murray connected in the top of the seventh off Mike Armstrong, 2-2, who entered the game in the fourth when starter Dennis Leonard crumpled to the ground as his left knee buckled while throwing a pitch.

Ballesteros shares lead

SANDWICH, England (AP) — Severiano Ballesteros of Spain shot a par-4 on the last hole and grabbed a share of the lead at the halfway stage of the $144,000 Sun Alliance PGA Golf Championship at the Royal St. George course Saturday.

Ballesteros seemed certain to finish one stroke behind Irishman Des Smyth when he miscued his three-wood approach shot and ended up in deep, clinging wet rough.

"I had to bend down and part the grass just to see the ball," said the U.S. Masters champion. "Then I hacked at it and was thinking I would be lucky to make 5 or possibly 6.

"But the ball landed on the green and I then holed from 25 feet. It was unbelievable."

Pledging liberty

Thomas Jefferson said "the tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants. It is its natural manure."

Jefferson was a wise man who understood the concept of liberty and recognized the dark side of man that would test it again and again. On Monday the nation will pause for a day to think of the thousands of Americans who have given their all that the tree of liberty would flourish.

It's appropriate Americans honor their war dead each year. Those who lay down their lives so that our way of life — our freedom — will continue to exist deserve an eternal place of honor in our hearts. In Midland, war dead will be honored in a ceremony at 6:30 p.m. Monday at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Down through history Americans have nourished the tree of liberty with their blood and the blood of tyrants. That is a high price, but one Americans have gladly agreed to pay because we recognize the value of our liberty. We also recognize that with liberty comes a responsibility; Americans have unselfishly met that responsibility.

Americans will continue to meet that responsibility because the maintenance of liberty requires eternal vigilance. Once lost, liberty is difficult to regain.

On this Memorial Day and all future Memorial Days Americans must pledge to safeguard their liberty at all costs. The Americans we honor today must not have died in vain.

Symms on lobbies

Senator Steve Symms said something interesting in Washington the other day about lobbies. Let's hear it directly from the Idaho Republican:

"Everybody knows that special interest groups spend a lot of money trying to influence Congress," he said. "And almost everybody knows that the biggest spenders are the banks, the oil companies, the 'military-industrial complex,' and conservative organizations campaigning for limited government and a return to traditional American values.

"But almost everybody is wrong.

"The plain fact is that the biggest lobbyists in Washington do not represent corporate or conservative interests. They are the unions, the environmentalists, the gun-controllers and other liberal groups that are promoting big government at the expense of private enterprise and individual freedom.

"The astonishing thing is that the record has been ignored. And, ironically, the groups which have been lobbying Congress the hardest have been successful in convincing the public that lobbying is an evil practiced only by people who do not share their views or special interests."

Sen. Symms went on to cite a few of the big-spending lobbyists, the top one being Common Cause, which spent $442,537 trying to influence Congress in three months in 1982. The top five also included Handgun Control, Inc.; the American Postal Union; the Sierra Club; and the AFL-CIO.

"I don't have anything against lobbyists, as long as the public knows who they are, what they stand for and how much they are spending to promote their views. Unfortunately, the public has been given a very distorted picture," said Symms.

He has put the picture in clearer focus.

Another View:

Discrimination costs

"Entitlement to tax exemption depends on meeting certain common-law standards of charity — namely, that an institution seeking tax-exempt status must serve a public purpose and not be contrary to established public policy." Simple? Eight members of the Supreme Court think so.

Tuesday they found that Bob Jones University and the Goldsboro Christian Schools in North Carolina are not entitled to tax exemption, because they practice racial discrimination.

The Goldsboro schools admit no black children at all and hold that this policy is based on religious belief. Bob Jones admits some blacks but expels anyone who marries or, as the college regulation says, dates a person of another race, and anyone who encourages such conduct.

Tax exemption is a big-money issue. Charitable organizations that qualify have two important benefits: contributions to the organization are tax-deductible — a significant incentive to giving — and the organization itself need pay no federal taxes.

In the case of an educational institution with many employees, Social Security and unemployment taxes can run into hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, as is the case for Bob Jones University.

In what can only be described as a disastrous legal and political blunder, the administration attempted to reverse longstanding tax policy and grant these benefits to the plaintiffs in this case on grounds that only an act of Congress could limit the deduction to institutions whose policies were in the public interest.

That attempt, widely protested by lawyers inside the government as well as vast numbers of private citizens, has now been firmly and finally squelched by the court.

The case is not without interesting legal questions. Congress could have been more explicit in denying tax exemption to schools that discriminate. Justice Rehnquist, alone in dissent, believes that without such statutory authority, the IRS cannot withhold an exemption because of discrimination.

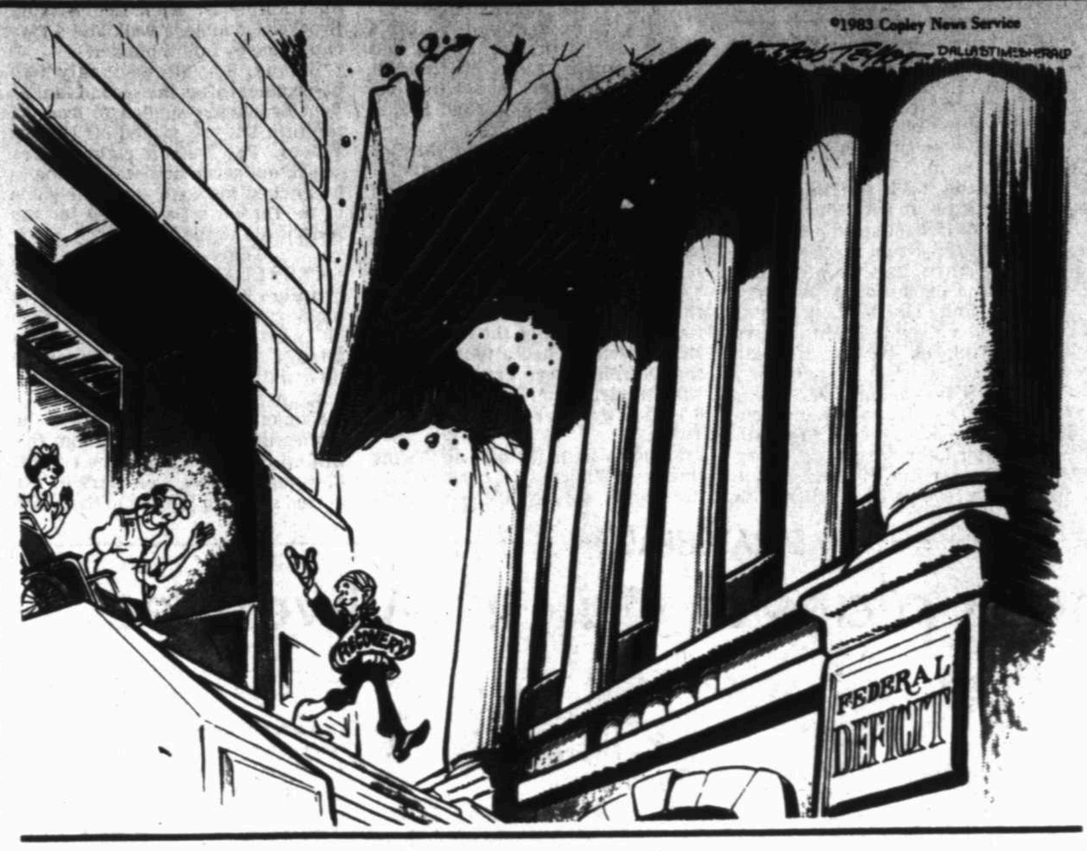

But the majority points out that Congress for a dozen years acquiesced in the IRS ruling, refused steadfastly to change it and even referred to its validity in voting to deny tax exemptions to discriminatory social clubs.

Then there is the religious question. Is it all right to segregate your private school if you believe that's required by your religion? Maybe, but don't expect the taxpayers to help you with a subsidy.

Career attorneys in Justice, Treasury and the IRS who stood up to administration officials and protested this unconscionable reversal of policy have been vindicated. Political advisers who counseled special treatment for the segregated academies will have to live with the backlash created by their proposal.

As for Bob Jones University and the Goldsboro schools, they still have a choice for the future: stop discriminating or pay the price.

ART BUCHWALD

It's business as usual at summit!

How goes the economic summit conference in Williamsburg this weekend?

No better or worse than anyone expected.

Art Buchwald

When French President Francois Mitterrand checked in, he asked what kind of bed he was sleeping in. The room clerk told him he had been provided with a large, American colonial king-size one. Mitterrand said it was out of the question. He only had $275 worth of French francs to spend and he could only afford an army cot. He said his austerity measures at home would be threatened if it was reported he was sleeping in a king-size bed.

The flustered clerk said that there were no army cots available in Williamsburg.

The Japanese prime minister, who was waiting to check in after Mr Mitterrand, slipped off quietly to a telephone and called Tokyo. He told his minister of commerce there was a shortage of army cots in the United States and ordered the Sony Company to start manufacturing them at once. The minister assured Mr. Nakasone the cots would be in Williamsburg by Monday.

Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau was the next to check in. He was wearing a heavy yellow slicker and carrying an umbrella to make his point that the only reason he had come to the conference was to discuss acid rain. When told the hotel would not accept Canadian dollars, Mr. Trudeau threatened to go home.

Fortunately, the West German chancellor, Helmut Kohl, was in the lobby and offered to lend Mr. Trudeau German marks, which could be charged against Canada's drawing rights to the International Monetary Fund.

Italy's prime minister, Amintore Fanfani, was asked to pay in advance, and when he produced traveler's checks from the Vatican Bank, the cashier said he couldn't honor them.

Mr. Fanfani said the traveler's checks were now backed by the Bank of Italy, and the cashier replied, "That's why we can't take them."

The Italian prime minister was prepared to leave the conference in a huff, when a representative of the American Express Credit Card Company asked Mr. Fanfani if he might be interested in doing a TV commercial. All he had to say was, "You don't know me, but I am the prime minister of Italy. The only reason they let me attend an economic summit conference is because I carry an American Express Credit Card."

Mr. Fanfani did the commercial in the hotel lobby and was then immediately shown to his room.

Margaret Thatcher had no problem at the desk. President Reagan had left orders that she could pay in British pounds to strengthen her chances of winning the June elections in Great Britain.

In the meantime, the Japanese prime minister, Nakasone, was taking photographs of all the colonial furniture in the Williamsburg Inn, so his people back in Tokyo could copy it and flood the American market.

The German chancellor, Kohl, was shown to his room, where he found a bowl of fruit on the table and a Pershing II missile placed in a champagne bucket with a note, "There's plenty more where these came from. — Love Ronnie and Nancy."

After everyone washed up, they all came down to dinner, which President Reagan was hosting.

President Mitterrand got down to business right away.

He said the worldwide recession was caused by high American interest rates and enormous U.S. budget deficits. President Reagan replied he had inherited them from 40 years of wasteful Democratic spending and he couldn't change them overnight.

Mrs. Thatcher said high unemployment in her country was caused by French farmers flooding the Common Market with cheap poultry and artichokes.

The German chancellor said the British were subsidizing coal and steel exports to the United States, taking jobs away from the West Germans.

The Italian prime minister accused the French of refusing to drink Italian wine and dumping it into the streets.

Prime Minister Trudeau refused to take off his yellow slicker during dinner, and warned all the other heads of state not to drink the water.

While everyone bickered through the meal, Prime Minister Nakasone kept taking photographs of the Williamsburg china and glassware. As soon as he got back he planned to show them to the Mitsubishi Company, to see if they could reproduce them at half the price.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Soviet economy offers chance

WASHINGTON — President Reagan and the allied leaders meeting in Williamsburg have an unparalleled opportunity waiting to be grasped. If they play their cards right, they can cripple the Soviet Union economically to the point where the Kremlin will have no choice but to cut back on its military spending.

Jack Anderson

The Soviet economy is foundering. The inherent inefficiency of doctrinaire Marxist production and distribution techniques have left the Soviet leaders unable to give their long-suffering people the consumer goods they have been told for decades were just around the corner.

One serious contributing factor in the Soviet economic mess is the huge percentage of the country's gross national product that is eaten up in the arms race.

The hawks in the Reagan administration hope to push the Russians beyond their economic capabilities by forcing them either to spend billions in response to our new weapons systems, or to cry uncle and come to the negotiating table for serious disarmament talks. It's a neat theory, but it could bankrupt us in the process.

How much better it would be all around to flip the other side of the coin and force the Kremlin to disarm by driving it to the wall economically. The president might even consider unleashing the CIA for a little covert action — but on the economic front, not the dangerous military one. Surely, among all the blood-and-thunder types in the CIA, there must be one cerebral pipe-smoker who can come up with a creative way to exacerbate the Soviet Union's growing economic distress.

All it would take, really, is seeing to it that world oil prices stay down — or fall even lower.

National Security Adviser William Clark recognizes the advantages of economic warfare. He has said it should be U.S. policy to "force our principal adversary... to bear the brunt of its economic shortcomings."

The CIA, for reasons that are not at all clear, has been less than enthusiastic about the economic strategy. Maybe it's because it lacks the macho glamor of a covert military operation. Nevertheless, the CIA at least allowed a hint of the Soviet's precarious economic situation — and its potential for exploitation by the West — to surface in a Special National Intelligence Estimate (SNIE, pronounced "Snee"). It's classified secret, but a copy was obtained by my associate Dale Van Atta.

In the 1970s, the report notes, "rapid increase in Soviet imports from the West... was made possible by large windfall gains in export earnings due to the surge in oil prices and the willingness of Western countries to provide large credits, most of which were government guaranteed."

But today the Soviet Union "is encountering growing economic difficulties, which will make it more difficult to increase its imports from the West in the future," the report states, adding: "The outlook for most Soviet exports, including oil, is not favorable...."

But there is one exception: natural gas.

"Moscow's best hope of improving its strained hard-currency position in the longer run is to secure the cooperation of Western Europe in building large new pipelines for the delivery of additional natural gas in the late 1980s or in the 1990s," the CIA concludes. "With enormous gas reserves and a powerful incentive to earn more hard currency, Moscow is prepared to sell as much gas as the West Europeans will accept."

The inevitable result? "Making Western military-related technology, subsidized credit and locked-in gas markets available helps the Soviet build military buildup," the CIA estimate warns. "Western governments would then be under increased pressure to raise defense costs, a move that requires heavy taxes, sometimes leads to deficit spending" (sometimes?) "and contributes to inflation and high interest rates."

On the other hand, the CIA explains, "shortfalls in Soviet hard currency earnings... would force further cuts in imports of machinery and equipment." The report adds significantly: "Moscow fears that reductions in food imports would cause popular unrest...."

In other words, selling the Russians grain doesn't help their military machine, it hurts it, by eating up precious hard currency that could otherwise go for guns.

Finally, the CIA points out, the combination of restricted Western technology exports and the Soviets' shortage of hard currency "would raise the cost of Soviet military modernization while at the same time weakening the industrial base for military production."

Unfortunately, President Reagan's attempt to sell renewed sanctions to the allies is being undercut by the greed of American business interests — many of them multinational corporations more loyal to the dollar than to the United States. They want to do business with the Soviets and abhor the idea of economic warfare that would cut into their profits.

Maybe Ronald Reagan will be able to resist these powerful forces. Maybe he'll be able to persuade the European leaders to go along with an economic squeeze on the Soviet Union instead of a costly military buildup.

GEORGE F. WILL

Supreme Court unwise to decide

WASHINGTON — Again the Supreme Court has done something it should not have done, and has done it because Congress has not done something it should have done. When liberals are done applauding Chief Justice Burger's opinion for the majority in the Bob Jones University case, they should read it, and ponder the formulation on which it turns. The formulation is factually false and philosophically illiberal.

George F. Will

Bob Jones University forbids the practice or advocacy of interracial marriage or dating. All nine justices believe that elimination of such discrimination is a fundamental government interest, and that Congress could choose to deny tax-exempt status to schools that discriminate. Burger argues that Congress has chosen, implicitly, by inaction. Justice Rehnquist, dissenting alone, disagreed.

In 1970, parents of black pupils in Mississippi public schools sued the Internal Revenue Service to stop it from giving tax-exempt status to private schools that discriminate. IRS said it did not have the power to deny tax exemption to schools that met the requirements of the law. The law simply says that tax exemption shall be awarded to institutions that are organized for any of eight purposes (including education), that are nonprofit and are not involved in lobbying or political campaigns.

But during the ligitation IRS suddenly reversed itself and said a tax-exempt school must be a "charity" within common-law concepts, and IRS said that means the institution must "serve a public purpose and not be contrary to public policy." At various points in his opinion Burger says the common-law definition of a charity means the institution must not have practices "contrary to established public policy," must not be "contrary to settled public policy," must not violate "a fundamental public policy," and must be "in harmony with the public interest." Burger says Bob Jones University is disqualified from exemption because its practices are "affirmatively at odds with" a fundamental public policy.

But is it reasonable to suppose that Congress ever intended IRS to exercise the untrammeled discretion involved in improvising judgments about which institutions are and which are not in harmony with "settled" or "established" or "fundamental" (those are not synonyms) policy? Rehnquist thinks not.

Congress, he says, has been remarkably explicit about the criteria for tax-exempt status, adding new criteria from time to time. And he reminds the Court that it has traditionally been reluctant to infer Congress's ratification of a policy from the mere fact of Congress's acquiescence in the policy. Now the Court says Congress adopted the IRS position by not reversing it.

Burger says this is an unusually strong case of legislative acquiescence, in part because in 1976 Congress amended the law to require denial of tax-exempt status to social clubs that discriminate racially. Rehnquist says, reasonably, that Burger's example refutes Burger's position. The example shows that when Congress wants a policy change, it makes its intention clear in action.

Paradoxically, the severest criticism of the ruling is in Justice Powell's concurring opinion, a notably uneasy concurrence. He notes that in 1981 more than 106,000 organizations received tax-exempt status, organizations as different as the Moral Majority and Friends of the Earth. How many of these could prove that they are (in Burger's words) not acting contrary to established or settled or fundamental public policy, or are in harmony with public policy?

As Powell says, Burger's analysis suggests that the primary function of tax-exempt organizations is to carry out government-approved aims and strengthen government orthodoxy. But Powell believes that another, better justification is that tax exemptions nurture creative disharmony by leavening America's pluralism with groups that challenge settled, established policy.

Powell concludes by saying that the legislature, not IRS, should develop national policy regarding tax exemption: "There no longer is any justification for Congress to hesitate — as it apparently has — in articulating and codifying its desired policy as to tax exemptions for discriminatory organizations." But the ruling with which Powell concurs means there is no reason for Congress to act. Policy is supposedly packed into the concept of a "charitable" organization and Congress supposedly has affirmed, by acquiescence, IRS's power to unpack the policy.

Reagan achieves notable personal triumph with MX

EDITOR'S REPORT

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — President Reagan achieved a notable personal triumph when the House of Representatives approved his plan to base 100 MX missiles in existing shelters under the plains of Nebraska and Wyoming. Then the Senate swiftly endorsed the plan. When you consider that only a couple of weeks before, the opposition was regarded as near-insurmountable, the approval for his House resolution, 239-to-186, must be chalked up by all factions as a major triumph for the president.

Hearst

He used his powers of persuasion to the utmost, especially in arguing that the missile was essential leverage in the search for an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union which only recently resumed in Geneva. The turn-around in the vote unblocked a decision by Congress last year to deny funds for the mammoth weapon which can deliver 10 warheads on Soviet targets with extreme accuracy.

This measure now will release $625 million for flight testing and engineering of the missile. Those funds were frozen last year by legislators who disagreed with an earlier program known as "dense pack." President Reagan started out way behind on the new plan. He called in congressmen to the White House, explaining what it means in detail to our national security. I rooted for him to make an impression but wondered if he hadn't left it a little too late.

BUT THE president's strategy confounded everyone, supporters and skeptics alike. The House, remember, has a Democratic majority. Speaker Tip O'Neill, at first super-confident of a negative vote, began to wilt before noses were counted. He offered a lame excuse, suggesting that the MX was better than anything the Russians had but it would encourage them to try to outdo us.

Besides, declaimed the speaker, it was up to the president to cut back on military spending and reduce the national deficit. I'm not inclined to go along with big deficits but neither do I want to see American security vulnerable in any way. The House saw the issue in a few days without caustic references to deficits which don't hold water in the face of national survival.

A great debate in Washington is whether raising taxes can reduce the deficit or if it's the other way around. An intriguing answer to the tax-deficit question came recently from Louis Rukeyser who writes a column for the McNaught Syndicate. His father, Merryle Stanley Rukeyser, a famed economist, wrote for The Hearst Newspapers for years and was a personal friend of Pop's and mine. In the Gannet Westchester Newspapers the other day Louis wrote:

"PICKING THE most dangerous fallacy now beguiling Congress could be a difficult job. My one nomination this spring is the notion, currently so popular with some politicians on both sides of the aisle — and with many of their media acolytes — that the sensible way to deal with the ugly deficits looming out to far horizon is to resume raising taxes. From this, we get the smug assumption that it is somehow 'responsible' to increase taxes and 'irresponsible' to reduce them."

Mr. Rukeyser's response to this assumption was quick, and blunt:

"Well, sorry, gang, but balderdash."

Then he went on with these interesting observations:

"There is no evidence in either the distant or recent past that overburdening the private economy with revenue demands is the route to a balanced budget. There is, on the contrary, abundant evidence that endless increases in taxes promote and expand endless deficits."

Then came this snapper from Mr. Rukeyser:

"Consider: If raising taxes were truly the way to eliminate deficits, we would have had the biggest surpluses in U.S. history right through the 1970s.

"INSTEAD, WE quite predictably produced the most horrendous series of budget deficits on record — as the gargantuan tax increases encouraged greedy legislators to spend all these bountiful new revenues — and more."

Mr. Rukeyser concluded with an optimistic note about the nation's economy. It is a note shared by most of the nation's economists, and increasingly by politicians of both parties:

"Truth is, this economy is looking better and better.

"The chief threats now are Washington-based. The Federal Reserve has to moderate the recent inflationary growth of money without overreacting and choking the recovery. And Congress has to ease the Fed's job, not by raising ecnomically destructive taxes but by finally coming to grips with major reductions in federal spending.

"Myths can be comforting in the fantasy economic land of Washington. But in the real world, as we have had ample opportunity to discover, they can kill the golden goose."

THE VOTE approving President Reagan's plan for basing the MX represented a broad cross-section of the House. Joining 148 Republicans in support of the measure were 91 Democrats. That's the kind of bipartisanship, particularly on issues of national security and foreign affairs, the president seeks. A day after House acceptance, the Senate easily voted approval of the same funds for the MX, accentuating the president's dramatic triumph. The House has the whole issue now.

To be sure, partisan pols like Tip O'Neill haven't yet conceded. The speaker, trying to build up brownie points, emphasized that freeing the $625 million was just the first obstacle facing the MX in coming weeks. Congress also must vote on bills to authorize and appropriate $4.5 billion for actual procurement of the weapons. In the face of existing national deficits and how the Soviets will respond, argued Speaker O'Neill, the president's plan won't fly again. I suggest that Tip might review what President Reagan did this time, as he is bound to get directly involved again.

One comment bears repetition: "At stake is the future of arms reductions — balanced, verifiable arms reductions that can make the world a safer place for all the earth's people."

The Congress heard the president loud and clear. I think it will again in the next round.

Humans generous with criticisms but stingy with praise

By WANDA K. MOHR

Wanda K. Mohr is a Midland behavioral scientist and serves as a director of the Midland County Hospital District.

As a behavioral scientist, one of my pet peeves is that appropriate behavior generates too little positive reinforcement.

Positive reinforcement in psychologists' jargon is that which follows an event that results in an increased likelihood that the event will happen again. Most frequently in "real life" that is a reward of some kind, especially in the case of attention, praise and payment for work. Positive reinforcement in principle is nothing more complex or common sensical than the good old American incentive system at work. Unfortunately, all too frequently in "real life" it seems that when something is right, little comment is made, little attention is paid. But when something goes wrong, we humans tend to gripe and holler and complain. How stingy we are with our positive reinforcement and how generous we are with our criticism, although both are free and just as easy to do.

A case in point is the comment made by Brenda Adams, the young woman who organized the repainting of the "Wall." She said: "We want people to know that teenagers could do something good instead of something bad." Yes, Brenda, most teenagers, like most adults do mostly good things. But many of us, I'm afraid, have difficulties seeing that goodness and commenting on it. It's no wonder that adolescents frequently feel alienated and demoralized when they are portrayed so often as dope smoking, sex-crazed misfits. The efforts by Brenda and her friends as well as the profiles last week of Stace Bradshaw, Dana Tompkins, Steve Baskin and Amy Candiotti argue eloquently against a negative view of Midland teens.

I RECENTLY conducted a study with the University of Texas of the Permian Basin and the Midland Independent School District that was designed to empirically and anonymously determine at what levels Midland adolescents were using drugs. The study was validated by a control sample that was retested one week later. The study proved to be at least 95 percent reliable.

The results of that study have been published and widely publicized, but they bear repeating, both as information and as positive reinforcement to Midland's teenagers, parents and institutions. Of the 866 juniors polled, 63 percent indicated that they never use marijuana. This compares to a national figure of 40.5 percent. Even more impressive was the finding that 23.3 percent of our juniors say that they never drink liquor (including wine and beer) as compared to 7.4 percent nationwide for the same figure. The figures for use of other drugs such as narcotics, tranquilizers, inhalants, cocaine and stimulants are very small. Less than 10 percent (mean percent) report ever having used or tried these drugs.

OF THE KIDS who use drugs and drink, 85 percent reported they did not use these substances in school. Those students who did not use either alcohol or drugs reported spending more time in recreation with their parents, stronger religious convictions and higher over-all grade point averages than users.

This is good news and something that is very right about our town. So to whom do we give the positive reinforcement? Parents who work hard to provide good examples and instill good traditional values, Midland clergy, who help shape their moral convictions and an excellent school system that educates our young people and raises their consciousness about life's issues and dilemmas, all need and deserve our praise. But the biggest pat on the back should go to the youngsters who are the final determiners of their behavior.

Adolescence is a difficult and confusing time at best and one that many adults would not care to repeat. It is a time when peer influences gain ascendancy and parental control wanes — a time of passage into independence and adulthood. It is plain from the national figures on drug and alcohol usage that many teenagers succumb to peer pressures and frequently make clearly harmful decisions and choices. It is also clear from Midland's statistics that we have a group of young persons of whom we can be very, very proud.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Stop intimidation

To The Editor:

My plea is to black and Spanish origin people who live within this town or narrow mindedness. It is time that this town is brought headon with the reality that we live within the 20th century and we are rapidly approaching the 21st century.

The issue is: How many of you have been faced with the problem of going into a store to shop and have been intimidated by sales personnel or so-called security personnel as you shop? There could be 30 other people within the store but, because of your skin color or origin of birth, you are watched like a common criminal. Heaven forbid if you with all your wit and common intelligence, realize that the shopper who has been on your heels all this time is an unprofessional store detective who has no more style than a third grader or experience than the reading of a Dick Tracy comic book as a child. I know those of you who spend countless dollars within these stores must be fed up! We all know and realize that shoplifting hurts us all, by higher prices, and none of us want that. But to shop in places where you have purchased countless items and spent numerous dollars, you at least want to feel as if your patronage is appreciated.

But to the majority of Spanish or black customers who embark upon these stores to shop and browse, privacy is invaded as they walk around these stores by store detectives.

When will we be treated as human beings? When will store managers realize that all walks of life regardless of skin color or origin of birth have faults? If you as individuals are fed up, stand up for your human rights. Speak out to store managers. Don't except this type of behavior or punishment for your skin color or origin any more. It is time that stores realize that without the black or Spanish dollar they will be losing at least one half of their profits.

It is time that stores employed professional personnel or enhanced a program for present personnel to learn the professional ropes — so that they won't look or sound as ignorant as the woman I encountered in a store in Midland Park Mall. She asked me if I felt I could do her job better. My answer to her and her male counterpart is: "definitely, and more professionally and discreetly."

This absurd behavior must stop within that store and all other stores who willingly participate. Should we shop in Odessa?

Traffic flow?

To The Editor:

It is amazing to me that the city of Midland talks about the flow of traffic being so bad, but yet the city cannot even time the traffic lights so that the flow can be halfway decent. As huge as Houston is, the downtown traffic flow is wonderful because the lights are timed perfectly. Why can't Midland accomplish just a minimal synchronization of the few lights in downtown traffic areas (or how about just every other Tuesday and Thursday of the month, just for a start).

Some of the ones that I have noticed that are the worse are going east on Missouri, south on Main and on Andrews Highway around the intersections of Illinois, Texas, Wall and Missouri.

I would be interested to know if there is a specific reason for letting these lights be so ill-timed or if it is just lack of getting it done.

Congratulations

To The Editor:

I wish to congratulate Theatre Midland for their creative and inspiring production of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas." It is great to see that all the arts are growing and gaining attention in the Midland community. Local talent seems endless and they should all be thanked for their creative efforts and hours of work.

The Yucca Theatre has taken the best step forward in creating an arts environment in the downtown area. The Yucca sets a fine example for future downtown projects. I recommend it for all!

My applause and thanks to Theatre Midland for making Midland's quality of life so exceptional.

MCT triumph

To The Editor:

Midland Community Theatre is now enjoying one of its greatest triumphs, the Yucca Theatre production of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas." Is it an incredible show? Just ask a friend (or clergyman) who has seen it! (Or try to buy a ticket!)

This is to sincerely thank the little old ladies in tennis shoes who have graciously written the Reporter-Telegram to condemn the production. We wouldn't be a sellout without you girls...keep 'em coming!

Decency first

To The Editor:

Sir, recently I read in U.S. News and World Report that Midland is the richest town in this nation (page 15 of May 25th issue). Not bad publicity even as you think (?) of the south side.

Your paper, however, gives much publicity to a different sort of "first place" — we have the "Best Little Whorehouse in Texas."

A great contrast between the decency of the first and the indecency of the second — why not feature the first and forget the second?

Church and state

To The Editor:

Some years ago I served on a committee charged with the reponsibility to recommend to the Baptist General Convention of Texas whether its institutions of hospitals, universities and children's homes should accept federal monies allowed by law. During that two-year period, the committee, composed of many prominent Baptists across the state of Texas, studied discussed and, yes, even argued the depths of this subject of separation of church and state. At no time did I hear a more gifted insight of this subject than did Cynthia Lehman-Budd give in her statement Sunday.

When we hear from young people like her who have studied and thought these subjects out and can express them so clearly, the future is in good hands. I am happy to say that I stand among those who believe that true voluntary prayer has not nor cannot be banned from any place. On the other hand, programmed verbage that sounds like prayer can be voted in or out.

Thank you for printing Cynthia's paper. She presented her subject well and should be complimented on constructive thinking.

Texas faces environmental challenge of acid rain

Twenty-one years ago Rachel Carson forewarned the nation of coming disaster stemming from use of chemical pesticides.

Bill Modisett

In her environmental text entitled "Silent Spring," Miss Carson wrote: "Future historians may well be amazed by our distorted sense of proportion. How could intelligent beings seek to control a few unwanted species by a method that contaminated the entire environment and brought the threat of disease and death even to their own kind?"

Miss Carson's work created a storm of controversy. The agriculture chemicals industry challenged her prediction of the future. But Miss Carson's attempt to restrict use of chemical pesticides proved successful. The federal government heeded the warning in "Silent Spring," published in 1962, by banning in the 1970s most uses of DDT and other potent chemicals that threatened both man and his environment.

Miss Carson succeeded by making farm producers and consumers aware of the hazards involved in chemical dusting and spraying. That was no average feat.

Today there's a new environmental challenge in Texas. Officials of the Texas Air Control Board confirm that acid rain has been found in the state. Suddenly, something Texans have only heard about — something that supposedly only happens "back East" — has been elevated to the status of something Texans need to be concerned about.

Why? Because acid rain, formed when sulfur dioxide and atmospheric moisture mix to form sulfuric acid, can destroy lakes and damage forests. "Back East" acid rain has left its mark on the land and now scientists are urging Texas officials to act before acid rain becomes a problem in the state.

Geologically Texas is two states. The western half of the state probably won't experience acid rain problems, scientists say, because the soil is alkaline with high buffering ability. Rainfall is considerably lower than in the eastern half of the state.

The eastern half of the state is geologically conducive to acid rain, though. It's dotted with the state's largest lakes — Toledo Bend, Sam Rayburn, Livingston, Lake o' the Pines, Texoma — and covered with oak and pine forests. In fact, according to Michael Perley of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain, "East Texas is shown as one of the most sensitive areas of the Southeast" to acid rain damage.

In the late 1970s the Texas Air Control Board began monitoring several points throughout the state to determine acidity levels. Although acid rain has been found in Tyler, Beaumont, Houston, Galveston and Dallas, TACB officials are quick to point out that the acidity level of the state's streams and lakes is "well within normal ranges" although lower than average. They also note that the soil and water of East Texas still contain a good degree of buffering action.

No, Texas doesn't have an acid rain problem yet. Texas doesn't need an acid rain problem either. Years might pass before increasing acidity caused East Texas lakes to fail to support life and would be termed "dead" or before forests there show the effects of acid rain. At that point, though, there's not much purpose in trying to prevent environmental damage. Preventive action must come prior to the damage.

A state is limited in what it can do to protect itself against acid rain because of the possibility of what scientists call "long-range transit" — the ability of acid range components to be produced in one area, to be moved by the wind and to fall to earth in another region or state. A state can enforce stringent environmental standards on its industry and still not be protected from environmental damage.

Texas' acid rain awakening reaffirms how interlocked man is to the actions of his fellow man. But recognizing a problem is not enough.

Thomas Henry Huxley, the zoologist, lecturer and writer of the 19th Century defined the challenge when he said, "The great end of life is not knowledge but action."

Another 'fed up' Boston owner decides to sell out

An AP Sport Analysis
By DAVE O'HARA

BOSTON — Harry Mangurian's decision to sell the Boston Celtics came as a shock to sports fans, but if history is any guide it could have been expected.

Turmoil goes with the territory when it comes to ownership of a major league franchise in New England.

Somewhere down the line it had to be. Mangurian and the Celtics are no different. Sooner or later they were destined to join the troubled-owners club.

The only surprise in Mangurian's announcement he is putting the Celtics on the block is the timing.

A wealthy businessman and sportsman, Mangurian is fed up after just four years as sole owner — even though the club is one of the most profitable in the National Basketball Association.

When Mangurian bought out partner John Y. Brown in 1979, it marked the 14th shift in ownership since the late Walter Brown founded the club in 1946 while he was president of the Boston Garden.

Those were rough times and Brown had to hock just about everything he owned to keep the club when the Boston Garden-Arena Corp. pulled out as a partner in 1948.

Then, with help from the late Lou Pieri of Providence, R.I., Brown kept the Celtics alive until the franchise became successful with the first of 14 NBA championships in the 1950s.

Ironically, the Boston Bruins are indirectly involved in Mangurian's desire to rid himself of a headache. The Bruins are owned by Delaware North, which also owns Boston Garden and is landlord for Mangurian and the Celtics. In announcing he wants out, Mangurian cited poor relations with the Garden owners.

And reports persist that Delaware North would be happy to sell both the Bruins and the Garden — but only if it could retain the rich concession rights for all events at the arena.

While Mangurian decided to leave, across town at Fenway Park, a split among the Boston Red Sox owners has commanded almost as much attention as the play on the field.

Jean Yawkey and Buddy LeRoux, two of the three general partners, are at odds on operation of the franchise. Haywood Sullivan, the third general partner in the group which bought the club in 1978, has sided with Mrs. Yawkey, a longtime friend. The two have offered to buy out LeRoux and his limited partners who own 42 per cent of the franchise.

The bumpy trail for sports owners here goes back to the World War I era when theatrical promoter Harry Frazee purchased the Red Sox and began selling the team's stars to pay for Broadway productions.

In 1920, Frazee outraged New England fans when he sold Babe Ruth to the New York Yankees for $125,000, money he needed to save a Broadway show.

Three years later Frazee sold the Red Sox to Bob Quinn, who lasted 10 years before selling out to Tom Yawkey. A multimillionaire, Yawkey owned the club for 43 years. However, while active before his death in 1976, Yawkey decided he had shelled out enough money and directed his top executives to operate the club on a business basis.

Every major league sports franchise in Boston has had its troubles at one time or another — baseball, basketball, football, hockey, soccer and even box lacrosse.

In the 1930s, owner George Preston Marshall had it with Boston and moved his National Football League franchise to Washington, where the Redskins became a household name.

Quinn got back into baseball by buying the old Boston Braves. He sold out in the 1940s to three local construction company owners, headed by Lou Perini.

Faced with dwindling attendance, Perini moved the Braves to Milwaukee just before the start of the 1953 season. That move triggered baseball's game of musical chairs with franchises transferring from coast to coast.

Billy Sullivan now owns the New England Patriots, but he had to survive bitter struggles. He founded the club in the old American Football League in 1960 with the help of several partners.

Sullivan hung in through various ownership fights, finally acquiring full control just a few years ago.

Many professional soccer teams have come and gone. They tried to provide major league competition, but were unable to gain enough fan support.

Wilson's strength also weakness

NEW YORK (AP) — At the plate, Mookie Wilson's strength also is his weakness.

His aggressiveness makes him an undisciplined, bad-ball hitter. He has been criticizied for not bunting well, striking out too often and drawing too few walks, cardinal sins for a leadoff man.

But there's no getting around one fact: Wilson is the core of the New York Mets' attack. If he gets on base, he can disrupt the defense, rush the pitcher and force catchers into throwing errors.

He is a pest — a pest who scores runs.

"For us to win, we need Mookie on base," Mets Manager George Bamberger. "When he gets on, whether it's by a walk, error or base hit, it's a double."

Wilson has outstanding baserunning talent. Last year, his second with the Mets, Wilson stole a club-record 58 bases, beating the 1979 mark of Frank Taveras by 16. He was caught only 16 times, most of those on pickoffs including four by Philadelphia left-hander Steve Carlton.

"He steals at will," Bamberger said.

The pace has continued this season. Going into this weekend's series against San Diego, Wilson led the National League with 16 steals.

But no matter how high his stolen base total gets, there will be those who wonder how high he could go if he got on base more.

Though Wilson batted a respectable .279 last season, his on-base percentage was a mediocre .314. In 639 at-bats, he struck out 102 times, drew only 32 walks and collected only four bunt singles.

After 39 games and 173 at-bats this year, he was hitting .283, with 26 strikeouts, three walks and two bunt hits for a .302 on-base average.

"I'm very disappointed in those numbers," said Wilson, 27, who won a $325,000-a-year contract in an arbitration hearing last winter.

Inronically, the idea behind Wilson, a natural right-handed hitter, learning to bat left-handed was to get the most out of his speed and get on base more. Mets personnel hoped he would perfect a left-handed drag bunt. Four years later, they're still hoping.

"I know I should bunt more," he admitted. "But I don't feel confortable doing it."

Wilson treats his bat like a weapon, slashing, swiping and hacking away at pitches. He often swings at the first pitch, a bad habit for a leadoff hitter. Knowing this, pitchers constantly throw him bad balls.

Bamberger won't try to change him.

"I don't ever want him to be a defensive hitter," said Bamberger. "That would be to take the bat out of his hands and take away his game. For him to be effective, he has to get his good swings. Tell him to be more selective and he'll end up taking fastballs up the middle. He's an aggressive player. I want him to stay that way."

That aggressiveness sometimes gives Bamberger pause.

"Part of me says that I need to have him in the lineup every day," he said. "But then, I realize it may be too much on him. Listen, he always gives me 100 percent. A manager couldn't ask for more. But...maybe I should rest him every once in a while."

"I hate days off," Wilson said. "I love to play. And I love to play hard. I guess it's my pride."

One of 12 children in a close-knit family, Wilson, who turned down an offer from the Los Angeles Dodgers to go to college, signed with the Mets in 1977. After four minor league seasons, he broke in with the Mets at the end of 1980 and played 27 games, batting .249.

In May 1981, however, Wilson, then a right-fielder and batting a dismal .203, was dealt his first professional blow when then-Manager Joe Torre benched him.

Jones Ramsey, right, accepts going away present from Texas football coach Fred Akers.

After 30 years, Ramsey calls it quits

Just 2 sports...football, spring football

AN AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

The "world's tallest fat man" hangs his bucket up Aug. 31 and Southwest Conference sports won't be the same without him around.

After 30 years as sports information director at Texas A&M University and the University of Texas, Jones Ramsey retires to the easy living in Ponca City, Okla.

Writers, broadcasters, and associates will miss his press-box efficiency and zinging one-liners which made him a Hall of Famer in his class.

Of course, some of his quips got him into hot water, but that was Ramsey. Any man who could quit smoking (July 4, 1961) and drinking (July 25, 1976) cold turkey deserved a few fumbles.

Ramsey's line in 1971 that there are only two sports at Texas, "football and spring football" caused him ever-lasting grief.

"It was at a drinking session and I just threw it out and somebody used it,' Ramsey said. "I shouldn't have said it. Darrell Royal chewed me out good.

"It was a bad thing for a public relations guy to say. It sure lasted a long time. Sports Illustrated has run it six times down through the years. Time Magazine had it last week."

The 6-foot-4 and (fill in your own figure)-pound Ramsey has a sense of humor as large as his appetite for nachos at El Ranchos.

During the week preceding the Great Shootout with Arkansas in 1969, Blackie Sherrod of the Dallas Times Herald flew to Austin to interview quarterback James Street.

Ramsey met Sherrod at the airport and told him grimly, "Street's not available. He's afraid it will hurt his concentration."

A miffed Sherrod walked to a waiting car, handed his luggage to the driver and slammed the door. He then looked up to see the smiling driver: James Street.

"You should have seen the look on Blackie's face," Ramsey said, delighted with his scam.

Ramsey's press boxes were pure working labs with few free-loaders making it through the security system. If they did, Ramsey personally wrestled them to the door (once, Ramsey couldn't get in because he didn't have the proper pass).

"I was proud of my press boxes and wanted the proper working atmosphere," Ramsey said.

The only exception would be midway of the fourth quarter if the Longhorns had a big lead. Then the "cookie fairy" as Ramsey called himself would visit each and every seat with a snack.

Ramsey, the 1974 president of the College Sports Information Directors of America and winner of the coveted Arch Ward trophy, worked for Paul "Bear" Bryant at Texas A&M.

He named his son after Bryant and they remained close after the Bear went to Alabama. Bryant's recent death hit Ramsey hard.

That wasn't the reason Ramsey decided to retire early.

"I just got tired of dealing with some of the young, negative, and cynical writers," Ramsey said. "Writers used to look for positive stories, now they seem to dwell on the negative."

Ramsey started the famed 2001 sessions with Royal at the Villa Capri in the 1960s and early 1970s so writers could get to know the coach better and have easy access to follow stories.

"Those were great sessions," he said. "And very informative."

Ramsey's legacy will include such one-liners as:

"I'm sick and tired of waking up sick and tired.

"I nicked my neck shaving this morning and I'm glad. It gave my eyeballs a chance to drain."

And the greeting "How you hitting 'em?"

Ramsey wasn't talking about golf; he was asking how life was going.

Sporting life in the SWC will trundle along without Ramsey, but there won't be as much zest for it.

Top-rated ump seems sentenced to minors

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Bill Emslie, rated the International League's top umpire for four straight years, says major league officials are playing political hard ball with his future.

Emslie, who has been fired twice in the past three seasons, recently was rehired a second time after Richie Philips, general counsel for the major league umpires, filed an unfair labor practices suit with the National Labor Relations Board.

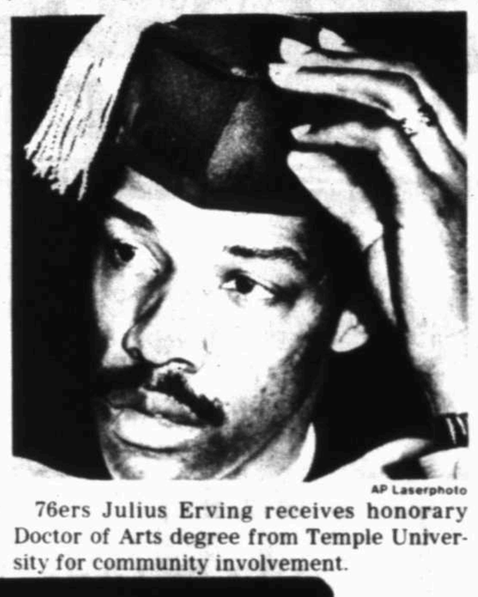

Despite being voted the league's best umpire by the players, managers and general manager for four straight years, the 32-year-old Emslie never has been promoted.

"I was not given a chance to advance because of what I did on behalf of the umpires association during their work stoppage," he said.

In 1979, when major league umpires went on strike, Emslie was one of 12 minor league umpires selected to work American and National league games.

But Emslie, unlike several other minor league umpires, refused to cross the picket lines.

"I had believed and had been told I was a big-league prospect. I had been told that since I came out of umpires school," said Emslie.

FOR NCAA TRACK MEET

SMU's Carter builds steam

HOUSTON (AP) — The collision will take place this week at Robertson Stadium on the University of Houston campus during the NCAA Track and Field Championships.

Coming from one direction will be Southern Methodist's Michael Carter building up steam as he tries to regain his supremacy in the NCAA shot put event.

But Oregon's Dean Crouser will have the momemtum going into the confrontation.

Crouser won a rare double in both the shot and discus last year while Carter was sideined recovering from a football injury. Crouser was only the fifth athlete to win the shot-discus double in meet history.

Carter has never lost an NCAA national meet with three indoor titles and two outdoor championships to his credit.

He was building toward a 70-foot toss in 1981 when he suffered a knee injury in a fooball game against the University of Texas and missed the entire 1982 football and track campaigns.

Carter, 6-2, 275, achieved his personal record of 69-6 3/4 in Sacramento, Calif. in 1981 prior to his injury but is now building steadily toward that figure again with a seven straight outdoor victories this season and a best of 68-6 1/2.

Indy cars go from hulking dinosaur to spaceage bullet

THE FIRST cars here were hulking, heavy brutes, with all the agility of a dinosaur. The machinery has evolved to the spaceage bullets of the 1980s — sleek, lowslung, rear-engine cars with aerodynamic bodies shaped by wind-tunnel tests and built with carbon fiber and other lightweight yet incredibly durable materials.

These fragile-looking, 1,500-pound cars of the 1980s are far safer than the slower upright front and rear-engine roadsters that preceded them. The very materials that are used to cloak the chassis also act as energy absorbers in a high-speed crash.

When these cars collide with the concrete boundaries at 190 or more, their outer shells shatter and fly away from the wreck, taking enormous amounts of gravity with them, away from the driver.

Gasoline was the exclusive fuel for the cars until 1938, when teams were allowed to choose whatever fuel they wanted. Some stuck with gasoline until a terrible flaming crash claimed the lives of Eddie Sachs and Dave MacDonald in 1964. Since then, methanol — which burns hotter than gasoline but is more stable to handle — has been the only fuel in use.

Fire was a constant fear, though, until crashworthy fuel cells were developed and put into full use in 1974 — the year after Swede Savage died in a flaming crash in the fourth turn.

AMONG OTHER engineering discoveries at the Speedway over the years, the most famous are the rear-view mirror, four-wheel and disc brakes, hydraulic shock absorbers, ethyl gasoline, low-pressure balloon tires, improved suspension systems, fuel injection, turbocharged engines and improvements in motor oils and high-temperature lubricants.

The sport's technological contribution to the auto industry increases, particularly with the development of aerodynamic principles and devices and suspension parts that cut down on drag and resistance, allowing the cars to roll easier and improve mileage.

There are, however, other facets to Indianapolis. There is a mystique here, much of it produced by the spectacle of it all.

TRADITION IS very important here, and virtually everything that happens in May falls under that designation.

"Weather permitting, you can rely on dozens and dozens of things happening every year in the same, correct order," Davidson said. "And I don't think it all stays the same because nobody wants to change it; I think it stays the same because (Speedway officials) make an effort to keep it the same."

One tradition that fell by the wayside in the 1970s, though, was the running of the race on Memorial Day. It is now scheduled on the Sunday of Memorial Day weekend, with Monday as a rain date.

Another change was the designation of the first Saturday in the month as the opening of practice. The Arab oil embargo of 1973 shortened the practice period by a week and sliced two hours a day off the schedule. Those changes have remained, although there still are two weekends of qualifications to fill the traditional 33-car starting field.

WHATEVER THE changes, the crowds turn out. A bright, sunny practice day will draw 50,000 people or more. The first day of time trials is usually attended by about 125,000 people. And the race-day crowd, normally more than 350,000, remains the biggest single sports gathering of the year.

The combination of an enormous crowd, the deeply felt tradition of the event, the spectacle of the race and the danger inherent in the sport born of speed produces a race-day electricity in the air that fairly crackles.

"The final 30 minutes of planned pomp and circumstance sends a tingle through you," Davidson said. "There is just an incredible surge of emotion coming from 350,000 or 400,000 people.

"And when 'Taps' is played (just before the start of the race), it's the most amazing thing — total silence. Everybody — the crazies, the drugged out ones, the beer drinkers — you've got those hundreds of thousands of people there and nobody screams an obscenity, nobody makes a sound."

THERE IS no more dramatic moment in sports than when, with the last notes of the sentimental "Back Home Again in Indiana" echoing in the distance and thousands of brightly colored ballons being released into the sky, a member of the Hulman family — the people who have owned the Speedway since 1945 — says "Gentlemen, start your engines."

It is also a chilling moment because the start of the race has proven over and over again to be the most dangerous part of an event which has claimed the lives of 33 people. Thirty others — drivers, mechanics, track workers and spectators — have been killed during practice or qualifications since the track opened in 1909.

Last year, youthful Kevin Cogan ignited the latest of the starting-line crashes when he either lost control of his car or was the victim of a broken part — depending on whom you talk to — as the 33 cars sped toward the green flag. There were no injuries, but Cogan, former winner Mario Andretti and two other drivers were eliminated before the race had even begun. And the car of A.J. Foyt, the only four-time Indy winner, was damaged in the melee.

If the start of the 66th Indianapolis 500 was frightening, the finish was awesome in its drama. With most of the enormous crowd on its feet screaming, Gordon Johncock held off a cavalry charge by Rick Mears to win by just sixteen-hundredths of a second — the closest finish in the history of this event.

"The cars keep gettin' better, the competition gets better and the racing is better," said Foyt, who will start a record 26th Indy 500 Sunday and has been witness to most of the biggest changes and technological advancements. "There's no other place like Indianapolis anywhere in sports. It's one of a kind."

Boston looking to 'Break' Stars' eight-game streak

By The Associated Press

USFL Roundup

The Boston Breakers will be trying to break the Philadelphia Stars' eight-game winning streak in one of three United States Football League games Sunday. If they do, they can stop the Stars from becoming the first team to clinch one of the four playoff berths.

"Their defense is great, but one of the reasons for it is they don't alllow your offense to be on the field very long," said Boston Coach Dick Coury. "If we can get 68 to 70 snaps against Philadelphia, we can beat them."

Philadelphia, 11-1, has limited opponents to 9.8 points and ranks second in the league in total defense, allowing only 290.4 yards per game.

Boston, 7-5 and winner of two straight, counts on quarterback Johnnie Walton to lead its offense. He ranks first in pass attempts and completions and is second in yards.

Running back Kelvin Bryant, the No. 2 rusher in the league behind New Jersey's Herschel Walker, keys the Philadelphia offense.

ABC will televise the game nationally starting at 1:30 p.m. EDT from Boston. The Stars won the first meeting 23-16.

Another key Sunday game will be the battle between the visiting Los Angeles Express and the Oakland Invaders for supremacy in the Pacific Division. Los Angeles, 6-6, holds first place by a game over Oakland, 5-7.

The Express beat the Invaders 10-7 earlier this season but since has lost three defensive starters because of injuries.

Los Angeles Coach Hugh Campbell said, "This is the biggest game we've played to this point because it is sort of a double counting game. We not only have a good chance to pick up a win, but we can give Oakland a loss, which puts us in better shape within our division."

Oakland has the league's top-ranked passer in Fred Besana and the No. 3 rusher in Arthur Whittington, who also is seventh in receiving. Quarterback Tom Ramsey, sidelined last week, is expected to share duties with Mike Rae Sunday.

Two of the USFL's worst teams, the New Jersey Generals, 3-9, and the Washington Federals, 1-11, meet at Washington in Sunday's other game.

In Friday night's only game, the Denver Gold snapped a five-game losing streak in beating the visiting Birmingham Stallions 21-19 and made Craig Morton's head coaching debut a successful one. Birmingham, which had a five-game winning streak broken, now is 7-6, while Denver is 5-8.

Quarterback Fred Mortensen scored on runs of 3 and 5 yards and David Dumars returned an interception 78 yards to lead the Gold.

In Monday night games, the Tampa Bay Bandits, 9-3, visit the Michigan Panthers, 7-5, and the Arizona Wranglers, 4-8, go to Chicago to meet the Blitz, 8-4.

Earnhardt wins Mello Yello 300

HARRISBURG, N.C. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt made up for two straight years of frustration by overcoming a one-lap deficit to win the $125,375 Mello Yello 300 Late Model Sportsman race Saturday at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Earnhardt, who had finished second each of the past two years, led a group of five drivers who regularly compete in the Winston Cup Grand National circuit across the finish line.

Earnhardt took the lead on lap 136 and stretched the margin to three seconds by race's end.

While Earnhardt steadily pulled away, the race for second place among Neil Bonnett, Bill Elliott and Harry Gant intensified. With four laps to go, Bonnett took advantage of Gant's high angle in the second turn to take over second place and Elliott slipped underneath for third.

Elliott was driving Darrell Waltrip's car, with Waltrip serving as crew chief.

Bonnett led much of the early portions while Earnhardt and Gant each fell a lap behind. Earnhardt had a tire go flat on lap 51, requiring a pit stop under the green flag. Gant dropped a lap when he pitted just before a caution period.

Earnhardt made up his lap during a 10-car accident on lap 79, which caused sheet metal damage to several cars but resulted in no injuries.

Gant got back on the lead lap during a caution period on lap 98 and by lap 118 had moved into the lead. But he began having tire problems and gradually fell off the pace.

Earnhardt, who won $9,100, was one of six drivers who shared in 19 lead changes. He averaged 117.724 mph, far below the race record of 131.243 mph set by Waltrip in 1979. He led four times for a total of 83 laps.

Bobby Allison finished fifth, one lap down, the same deficit as Jack Ingram, the highest finishing non-regular on the Grand National circuit, and Joe Ruttman and Tommy Houston, who started in the 41st position in the 42-car field. Davey Allison, Bobby Allison's son, finished in ninth place, two laps behind, while Joe Kelly was 10th.

Milton claims Denver Open

DENVER (AP) — Tom Milton threw strikes on nine of 12 rolls Saturday to defeat Steve Cook 248-177 and win the $100,000 Denver Open.

Milton, 27, of St. Petersburg, Fla., notched his third Professional Bowlers Association tour victory of the year in defeating the Roseville, Calif., bowler.

Cook opened with a 6-7 split in the second frame and never recovered as Milton threw five consecutive strikes from the fourth through the eighth frames.

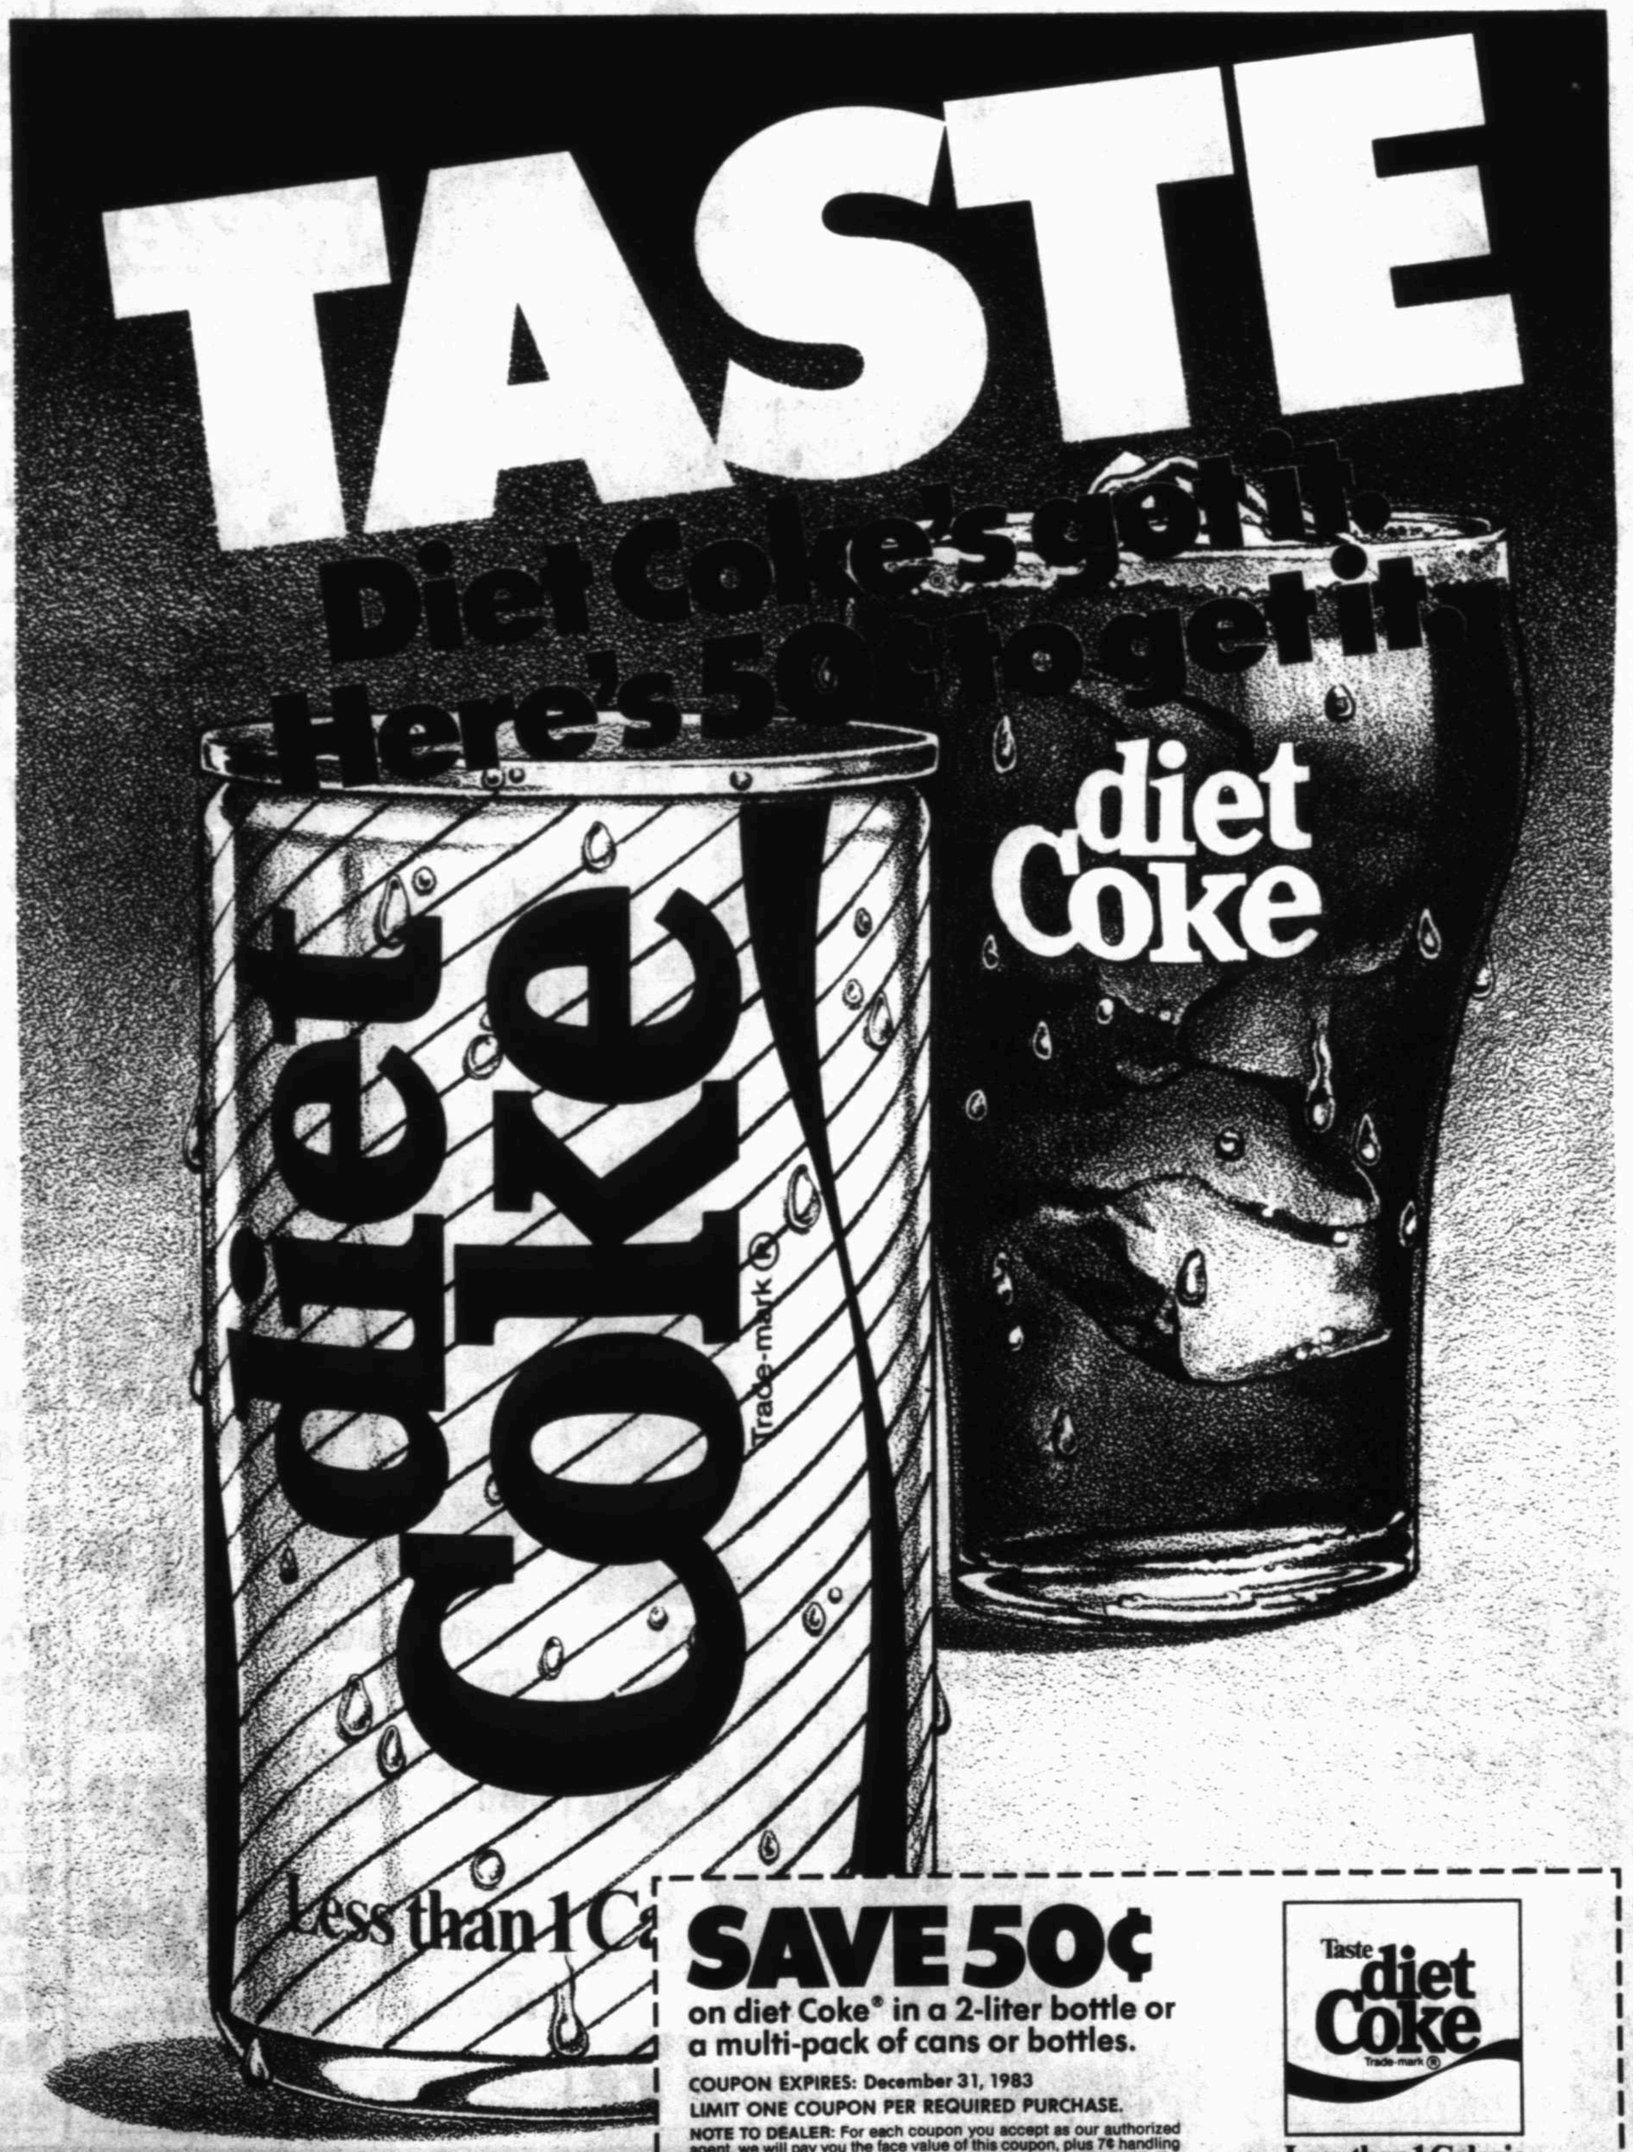

The victory was worth $13,000 to Milton, moving him into second place in the money-winning standings with $78,173, far back of Earl Anthony's $127,605 total after finishing third here.

Cook earned $7,500 for second place. He earlier dfeated Anthony, 225-176 in the final round.

Hatcher just not living up to '82 statistics

Cubs' Bill Hatcher adds 10 pounds and a bunch of extra base hits during winter layoff.

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Let's face it. Bill Hatcher isn't the ball player Midland expected him to be coming out of Mesa, Ariz., this spring.

His statistics from last season at Salinas, California League, were graphic enough. His 84 stolen bases indicated a slap-to-all-fields singles hitter who usually wound up on second on the next pitch. He could drop a bunt in front of the plate and beat it out or put so much pressure on an infielder with a slow roller that he wound up on second on the wild throw.

Everything pointed to Bill Hatcher being an ideal leadoff man, a guy who got on base by hook or crook and then made things happen.

HATCHER NOT only has been a disappointment as a lead off man, but it's obvious he's not going to duplicate his 84 stolen bases of a year ago in the Texas League. But you don't hear any complaints from Manager Tom Harmon.

Hatcher is more hitter than the Cubs anticipated. His average is up around .350 and last year's singles are this year's doubles. To better utilize Bill's unexpectedly productive bat, Harmon has dropped the 22-year-old from Prescott, Ariz., to the No. 3 spot in the order.

The dramatic change in Bill is written in his extra base statistics. Last year at Salinas he had 18 doubles, eight triples and eight homers and 59 rbi.

This year, with more than half the season to go, Hatcher has 16 doubles, five triples and five homers. With 29 rbi, he's ahead of production there, too.

A THREE-sport star in high school, Hatcher isn't all that surprised at the turnabout. "I worked on the weights during the off season to build myself up and I'm 10 pounds heavier and feel stronger."

His 20 stolen bases aren't all that bad and are more an indication that there have just been fewer opportunities.

"Last year he got off to a phenomenal start in stealing bases," says Harmon. "But there's a difference in AA ball and you don't want to run yourself out of any inning just to fatten your base-stealing statistics," says Harmon.

"He figures to hit 15 homers, drive in 80 runs and steal 50 bases. Now, how many do you find around that can do that?"

Harmon rates Hatcher's biggest improvement over last season as his arm. A hit down the line isn't an automatic double with Hatcher in left. As an ex-pitcher, he always had a strong wing, but now it's under control.

In high school, the 5-9, 175-pounder both pitched and played outfield-second base at Williams, Ariz. As a junior, he pitched an 11-inning no-hitter, retiring the first 30 batters he faced.

"I quit pitching when I went to college," he says. "I figured that wasn't my future in baseball." Still, in one of those 20-19 games, who knows.

On Saturdays, when there was a lull in the game back in his high school days, he'd compete in the long jump, on the relays and clear 6-10 in the high jump. "I didn't run the sprints, I just didn't have the time."

In the fall, he lettered in football, but was only too happy to give it up an concentrate on baseball when he went to Yavapai Community College, where he also gave up pitching.

IT WAS a good decision. He was named to the NJCAA All-America and was spotted by Chicago scout Gene Thompson, signing after being taken in the sixth round of the Jan. 1981 draft.

This is his third year in pro ball. After a .280 season with 13 thefts at Geneva in 1981, he batted .311 last season, finishing second to El Paso's Mike Felder in stolen bases. Felder swiped 92 for Lodi.

Last fall, in the Arizona Instructional League, he perahps gave an indication of what was in store in 1983 by hitting a robust .354 while working on his throwing and defense.

While Hatcher may not be living up to those past statistics, you can bet the Chicago Cubs are happy with the new dimensions he is showing.

Teo Fabio rookie only in terms of Indy 500

By HAL BOCK

INDIANPOLIS (AP) — Who is this man, Teo Fabi, the diminutive Italian who will be sitting on the pole in Sunday's Indianapolis 500?

Well, for one thing, he's a rookie only in terms of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

It is true that Fabi will be making his first race-day tour of this challenging racing plant, but this is no fresh-faced kid. He is a veteran road racer, the winner of the Italian championship in 1977.

"He doesn't need any advice," said Rick Mears, last year's 500 pole sitter, who will be on the outside of the first row today. "He's been around a long time. He knows what's going on."

In the pageantry that is Indy, the stars are the familiar faces — A.J. Foyt, perhaps the most flamboyant member of this fraternity of daredevils; Mario Andretti, who'll fight you every mile of the way; Al Unser, celebrating his 44th birthday on race day; Gordon Johncock, defending the championship he won in the closest race in Indy history.

Into this community stepped Fabi, a balding, bookish little man who looks more like a bank clerk than a race driver.

"I am a quiet person," the 28-year-old from Milan said. "Nobody noticed me when I first came here. I don't think they knew I was a driver."

He is easy to miss because he's just 5-foot-5. You can lose him in a crowd with no trouble at all. Now, though, he must battle his way through the strollers at Indy. He's the pole-sitter and now they recognize his thinning hair, his blue eyes, his Mona Lisa smile.

There are times when he must long for the solitude of his other passion — downhill skiing. There aren't many autograph hunters on the slopes.

Fabi has handled the demands on his time judiciously. He has not been caught up in the social whirl of Indy.

"Mostly," he said, "I stay in my room and watch television."

It has been on television that he has seen his only glimpses of previous Indy races. "A few minutes, here and there. Never a whole race," he said.

He calls Indy "a marathon. It is a very long race. The last half hour is a very important part. It is not important to go fast at the start."

The start is his responsibility because he is on the pole. He plans a slow pace.

Turkey callers so good it's getting dangerous

By BILL SCHULZ

ATLANTA (AP) — Turkey hunters have become such good turkey callers that hunting the big birds is getting to be a very dangerous sport, according to Ben Rodgers Lee, five-time world turkey calling champion.

Turkey calling has become a sport in its own right, in addition to being a necessity to hunt the wary gobblers, said Lee, of Coffeeville, Ala.

"Without calling, you simply wouldn't kill a turkey," Lee said.

The object is to call like a hen during mating season and attract a gobbler.The problem is that sometimes, good callers attract other hunters, and one or the other catches a load of shot.

Habitat destruction and hunting almost wiped out the North American wild turkey. But changes in land use restored habitat, and state game departments began trapping birds where they still survived and moving them back into their old homelands. The birds thrived.

In an interview during the first International Conservation and Outdoor Show, Lee said there are six basic calls:Old hen assembly yelp; Kiki run; Cackle; Putt; Tree Call, and Gobble.

"Most of your contests ask for five of those calls, performed on any kind of hand- or mouth-operated device," Lee said. These range from little plastic horns to resonate boxes, which are scraped to make the call.

Lee advised the novice turkey hunter to seek advice from a veteran or from a conservation office in the area where he plans to hunt.

"Get a good cassette tape on turkey calling and get the simplest call you can find," then learn some basic calls, he said.

Calling is about 10 percent of turkey hunting, he said. A large part is scouting, learning "where that gobbler is at, what he eats, his roosting habits and his mating habits."

Be sure you — including your hands, face and gun — are camouflaged.

Luck sure his will change in 2nd year

BLUEFIELD, W.Va. (AP) — Oliver Luck, once the most recognizable man in a football uniform on a Saturday afternoon in West Virginia, has graduated into ranks of the anonymous as a third-stringer with the Houston Oilers of the National Football League.

But Luck, who didn't play a down during his rookie season, says he is confident that next year will be better.

"Sure, I would have liked to have played, but I know I have a lot to learn," Luck said.

"All I could do last year was stay ready and prepare myself each week as if I were starting a ball game. I know I'll get my chance, and I'll just have to be ready when I do."

During his four years at West Virginia University, Luck set 13 school records. But with the Oilers, who won only one game during the strike-shortened 1982 season, he could do no better than sit on the bench behind Gifford Neilsen and Archie Manning.

"Sometimes it gets tough," Luck said. "There were weeks last year when I knew I wouldn't get to play, and I'd slack off and not pay attention in meetings. I just have to keep working hard because I never know when I'll have to go in.

"In the pros, your job is to play football and only to play football, so you have a lot more free time. In college, not only did you have to play, but you had to study, so I'm enjoying the lifestyle."

Kay Dalton, the Oilers' new offensive coordinator, said he intends to test Luck in game action this year.

"To tell you the truth, I think Oliver was brought along too slowly last year," Dalton said. "He's really good in the classroom and he picks up as well as the other two quarterbacks, but you never know until you get out there on the field.

"Some people are smart, and some are football-smart, and you never know the difference until they get out there with people coming after them. Even in seven-on-seven drills we'll be able to see how well Oliver handles pressure."

Luck, named an academic all-America in 1980 and 1981, said he is preparing for the end of his playing days.

"I'm thinking of going to law school during next off-season, but for right now I'm a professional football player and I'm going to work to be the best pro football player I can be," he said.

POSITIVE THINKING

Clear, calm mind stifles hysteria

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

How to handle oneself when a crisis develops is something everyone needs to master. For sure as the sun rises and sets, as sure as spring follows winter, crisis will come to every person and sometimes it pounces upon you suddenly and can cause panic and hopelessness.

To keep hysteria down, the chief requirement is a calm unruffled mind with which one can think. And when the brain goes to work forming an image or picture of a good outcome, the chances of successfully resolving the crisis are greatly enhanced.

Even when a situation seems hopeless, a calm, resolute imaging can hold off despair and bring a good result. Last winter I read a newspaper story about a truck driver in a Midwestern state who was caught in a roaring blizzard. His wife had begged him not to make the run that night, for the radio was forecasting a snowstorm of major proportions. But he had a load of steel wire that had to be delivered, so he didn't listen to her. Halfway to his destination the howling storm swept down on him. When driving conditions became impossible, he pulled the big truck off the road and went to sleep.

When he woke up, everything was dark. Although he didn't know it, the truck was buried in a snowdrift thirty feet deep. The truck was completely covered; no part of it was visible from the highway. The driver could not open the doors. He was trapped. On his CB radio, he could dimly hear the voices of state police and other rescue teams, but he could not communicate with them. His CB could receive but could not transmit through all the snow.

For five days and nights he stayed in his icy tomb. He had no food. To quench his thirst he ate snow. But he didn't panic. He didn't despair. He waited calmly and stoically, to be rescued; and finally he was.

I was so impressed when I read his story that I called him on the telephone. "Weren't you afraid?" I asked.

"No," he said, "and I didn't panic. I just sat and thought about my problem. I knew my brother would be looking for me. In my mind I could see him searching all up and down that highway, never getting discouraged, never giving up. I could see him just as plain as day, finally locating the drift I was buried in. And as long as I could see him like that, I wasn't afraid. It was just a question of when he'd find me, not if he'd find me. And finally he did."

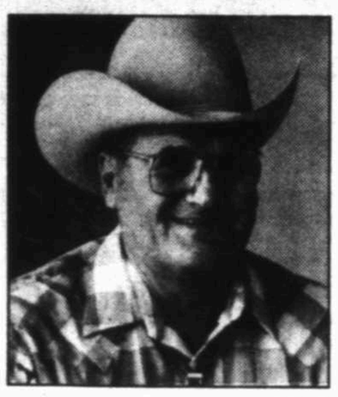

TEA may use funds to buy newspapers

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill that would allow the Texas Education Agency to set aside a portion of its textbook money to buy newspapers for public schools cleared the Senate on Saturday.

The House-approved bill was returned to the House on a 30-0 vote for consideration of an amendment.

The newspapers would be used as supplements in history and government courses, according to a printed bill analysis.

The Legislative Budget Board estimated the cost of the program at $500,000 for the next two years.

Oral contraceptives may be best for some women

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have heard that the pill is the best birth-control method ever invented, and I have also heard that it causes all sorts of problems. How can it be best if it causes problems? Will you please explain so that I can make an intelligent choice? — Cissie, Ames, Iowa

Dear Cissie: Oral contraceptives may be an excellent form of birth control for some women. However, that does not mean that it is the best for all women.

Dr. William C. Andrews of Eastern Virginia Medical School in Norfolk, notes that the risk of serious complications stemming from the use of oral contraceptives is very small in young women who do not smoke. The reports of increased coronary disease that may have come to your attention primarily involve older women who smoke. Diabetes and high blood pressure are other major risk factors for oral contraceptive users.

According to Dr. Andrews, the use of oral contraceptives is not advisable in women more than 30 years of age who smoke, or in women over 35 years of age who have any of the major risk factors. On the other hand, oral contraceptives appear to have a protective effect against certain cancers, including endometrial and ovarian cancer.

The bottom line is that oral contraceptives constitute an effective form of birth control for specific patients, but are not for everyone.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is is possible for a couple to have sexual relations when the woman is having her period? — John, Roanoke, Va.

Dear John: Sexual relations during menstruation is possible, although many people prefer to abstain during that time. From a medical standpoint, there is no evidence that the practice is harmful or otherwise inadvisable.

At least one study has indicated that only a minority of women object to having sexual relations during their menstrual period and more than half express a positive interest in sexual activity during menstruation.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am planning a trip that will take me to a number of developing countries, and I would like to know if I should have a polio vaccination. I am 46 years old and in good health. — Guy, New York City

Dear Guy: People who travel to developing countries have a relatively small risk of exposure to the polio virus, but there is a risk. The Immunization Practices Advisory Committee of the United States Public Health Service recommends immunization for people traveling to areas where poliomyelitis is known to exist, such as Southeast Asia.

For Cynthia, South Bend, Ind.: Mortality from measles may be low in otherwise healthy patients, but it may be as high as 10 percent or more in children who are malnourished and who live in crowded slum areas. Measles usually has a 10-day period of symptomatic illness.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Veteran fights for aid

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A Texas congressman expects President Ronald Reagan to intervene to protect the Social Security payments of a Texas Congressional Medal of Honor recipient should Roy P. Benavidez of El Campo receive an adverse ruling.

Rep. Bill Patman, D., Ganado, in whose district the Viet Nam veteran resides, has offered to help Benavidez to retain disability payments. Benavidez, fighting a Social Security ruling under the new screening policy of the Reagan administration has been judged able to work and therefore faces losing his Social Security status. He did not accept Patman's offer of congressional help, saying he thought he had a competent representative in his attorney. Now the case has been heard by an administrative law judge in Victoria. The case is under consideration. A verdict is not expected for four to six weeks.

Patman Friday said publicly that he would like to intervene. But Benavidez is a proud man.

"I am sure that President Reagan who bestowed the Congressional Medal of Honor on him two years ago will not want to see the Social Security safety net pulled fast under a man whose heroism in Viet Nam earned him the highest medal," said Patman.

Texas highway honors veterans

AUSTIN (AP) — The Legislature passed a bill Saturday that would designate U.S. 83, stretching from Brownsville through the Panhandle, as the Texas Vietnam Veterans Memorial Highway.

The Senate passed the House-approved measure 30-1.

ATTENTION BUILDERS

of our new home inventory has closed or gone under contract in the last six weeks. Four of our builder/clients are now involved in lot acquisitions, plan approval, etc. to begin more new homes.

But while these new houses are being framed we need additional homes to show our customers and sell!

We presently market homes in the Wydewood, Superior, Fairmont and Green Tree sub-divisions.

Our firm features a unique combination of years of experience and education in advertising, marketing and promotional strategies with a proven sales record in residential property and a thorough, on-going knowledge of new home finance.

If you need assistance in marketing your residential products give us a call, or drop by our office in San Miguel Square (next door to Mortgage & Trust).

MEMORIAL DAY

Have A Safe Holiday Weekend

A nation that sustains the course of history's great struggles owes its' existence to the people who protect it — the men and women who stand ready to fight for it. America can be proud of those who have served in the armed forces throughout the past, and sadly, mourn those who gave their lives. Memorial Day is a time to remember, and a time to honor, the very people whose greatest sacrifice contributed to the strength and growth of this nation. May their heroic deeds never be forgotten.

A farrier's work is never done

Text by David Lee Forrest

Even in West Texas the horse's place as the major means of transportation was long ago taken by the automobile and pickup truck. In 20th century Midland County, however, shoeing horses is far from being a lost or dying art.

"It's bigger right now than it's ever been and getting bigger," said Pete Hyatt, a local horseshoer or, more formally, farrier. "If you can do a pretty good job at this, you can stay busy wherever you go.

"People come by and see me shoeing and say, 'You're one of the last.' Like I'm the last of the Mohicans. I'm not.

"There's lots all over the country. And it takes a lot."

Hyatt said he guessed that Midland County's horse population is about "3,000 head, maybe more."

A horse has to have its shoes reset "an average of about six weeks," Hyatt said. He said if a person shoed six horses a day for six days a week, in six weeks he would have done only 216 horses. The ones he did six weeks earlier would then need to be reset again.

A modern horseshoer working at that pace would only need 216 horses to keep him busy indefinitely, which hardly makes a dent in Midland's horse population.

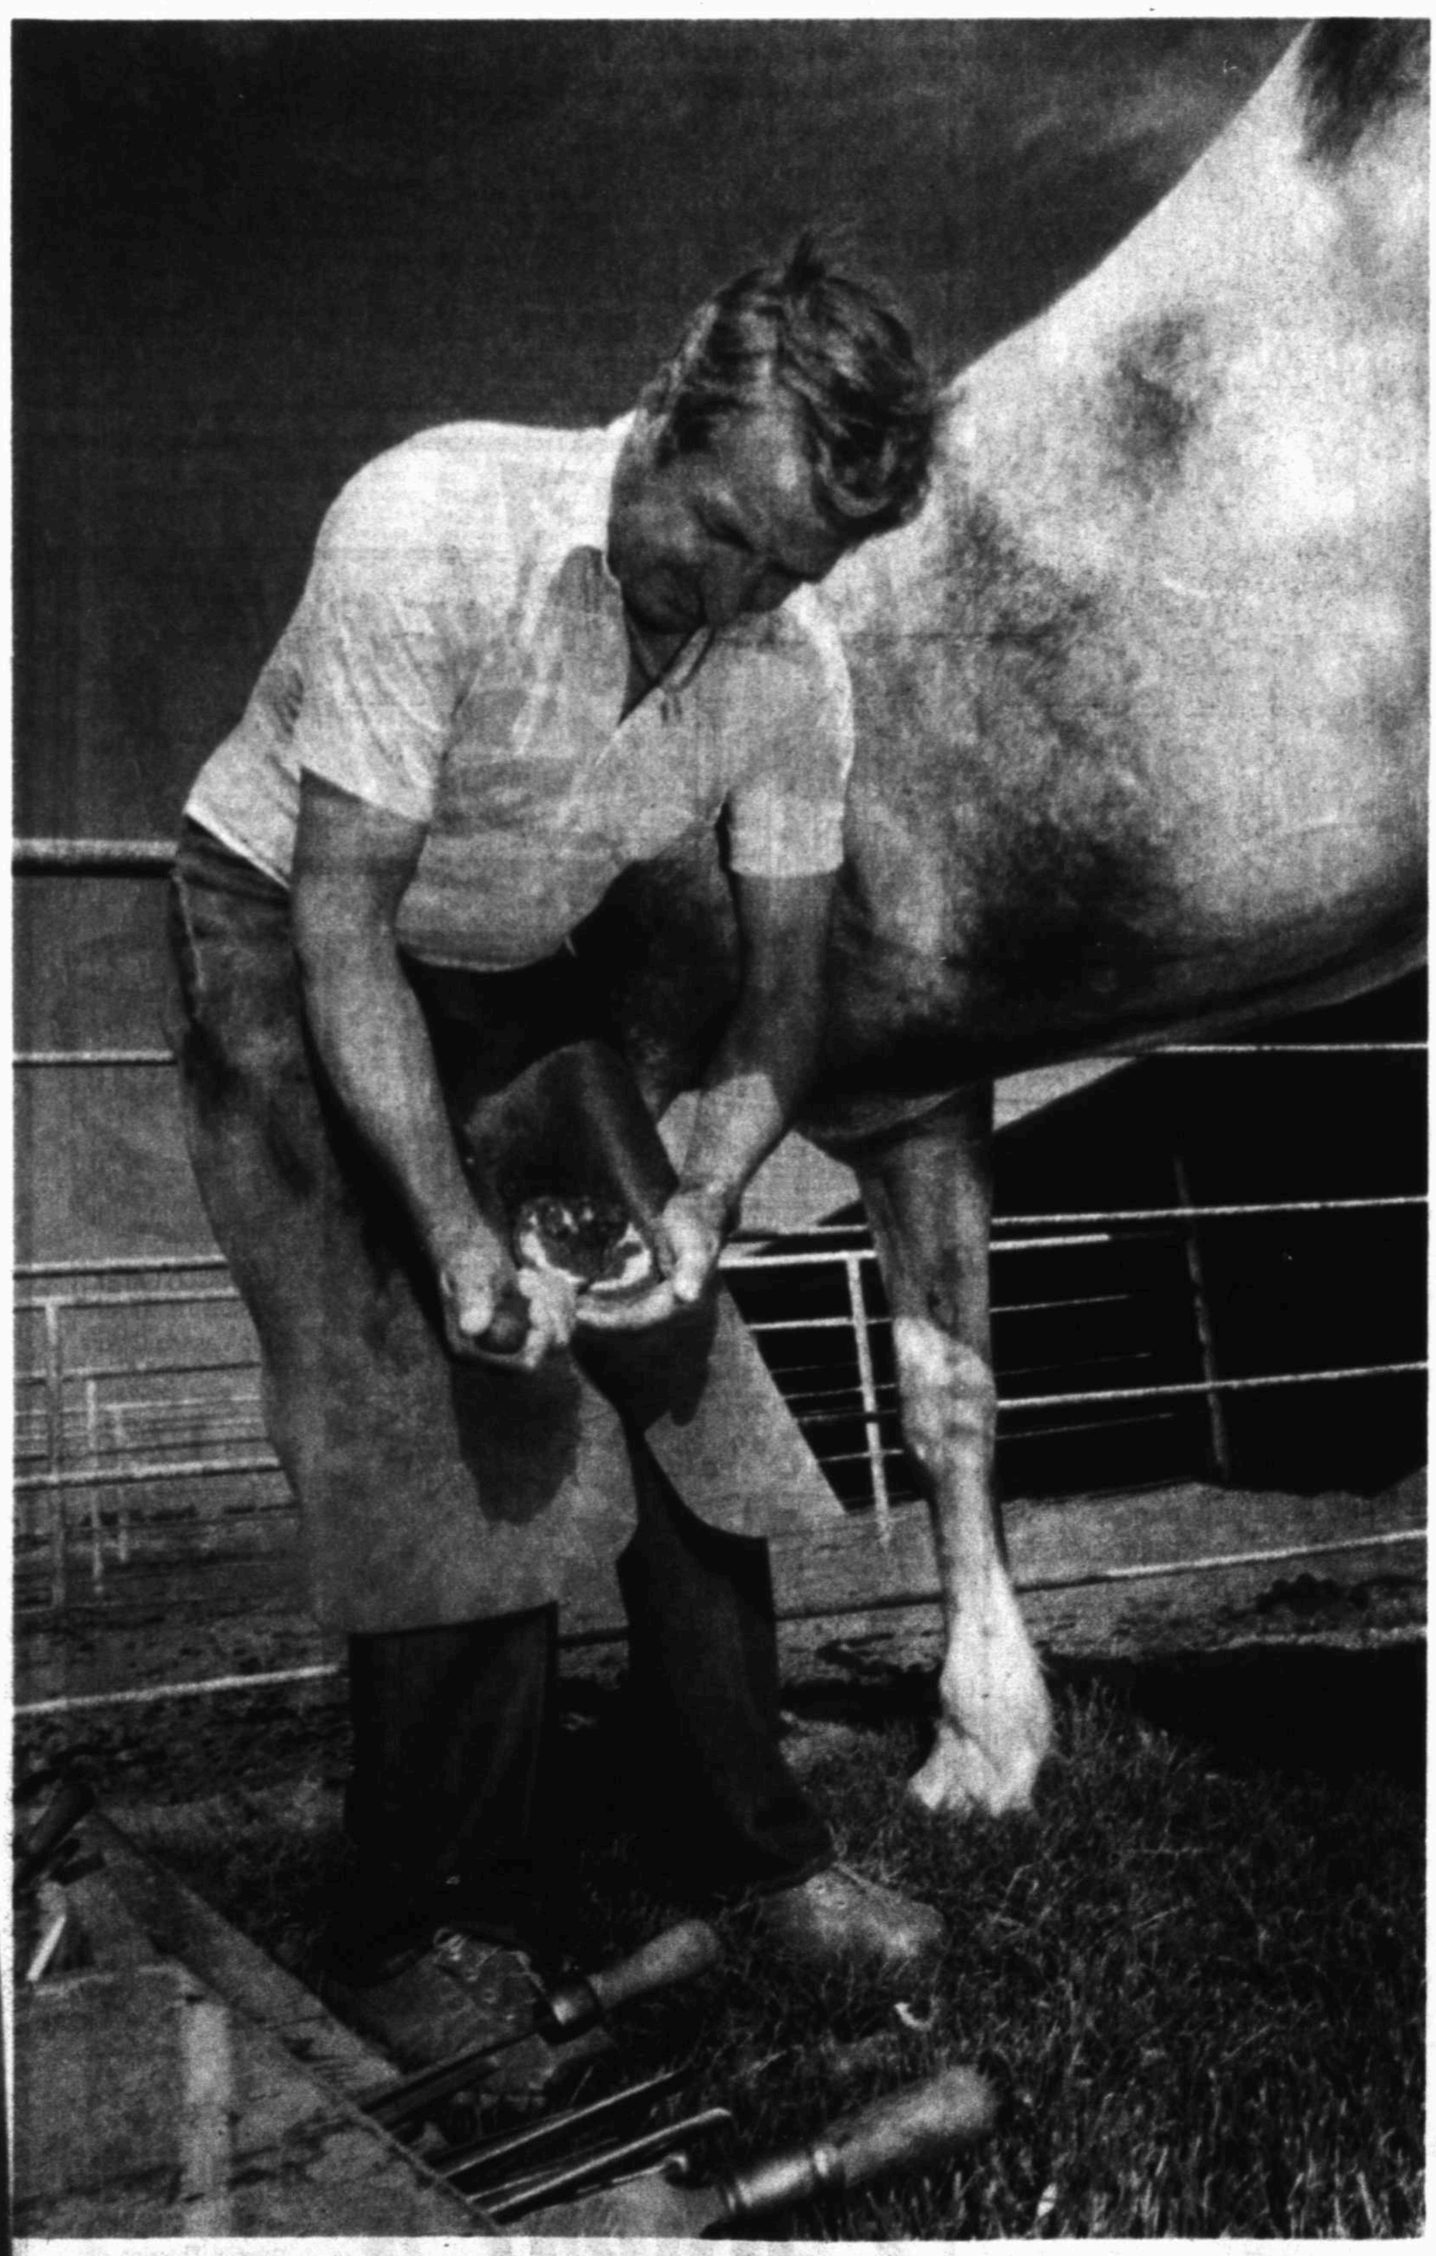

Although Hyatt does occassionally forge custom shoes, factories which mass-produce presized shoes have in most cases replaced the blacksmith's forge and anvil. Shoeing horses, however, is still done much the same in the 1980s as it always has been.

At the Midland Polo Club's stables, Hyatt tied a customer's horse to a tree before he took his tools out of the silver Ford van he uses to travel from horse to horse. Then he pulled on a long leather apron, slit in the front like a cowboy's chaps.

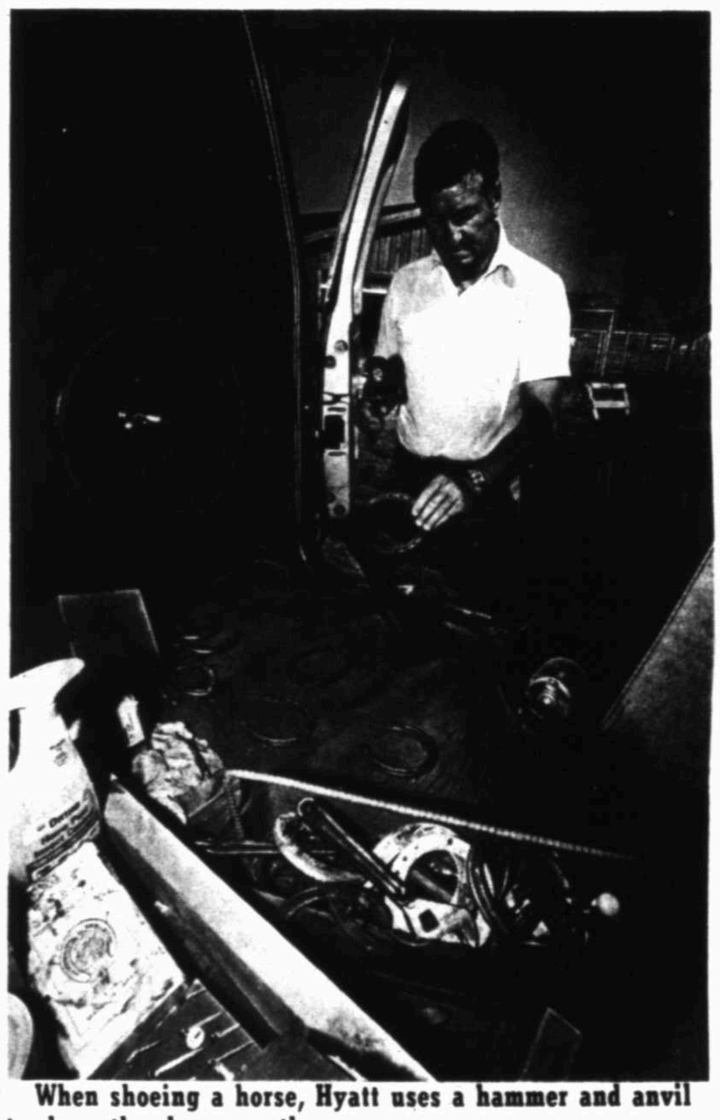

The horse had a good set of shoes on already, but its hooves had to be trimmed back and the shoes reset.

"If you don't trim them they can grow just real long," he said.

(See FARRIER, Page 2E)

The horse's hooves need to be cleaned and trimmed before shoes are put on.

When shoeing a horse, Hyatt uses a hammer and anvil to shape the shoes exactly.

Six nails are carefully driven into the hoof through holes in the U-shaped shoe.

Farrier...

Hyatt lifted one of the horse's feet and used a curved hoof pick to clean out the packed dirt, grass and greenish manure from inside the hoof.

He held the foot clenched between his knees as he trimmed the hoof using hoof nippers and a hoof knife.

He shaped the hoof to keep "a little concavity" in it for properly distributing the pressure when the horse puts its foot down. The cuttings from the hoof had much the same texture as the sole of a man's dress shoe.

Hyatt next used a rasp to file the trimmed wall evenly.

"You have to keep them level and on angle," he said. The angle at which the hoof is trimmed is based on the individual horse's bone structure.

He explained that the hoof's wall is as insensitive as a fingernail, so cutting and driving nails into it does not hurt the horse. If it is cut or nailed too deeply the shoeing would be as painful as pounding nails into the cuticle of a finger. A white line around the hoof marks the point where the wall ends and the sensitive sole begins.

The nails must be hammered through the wall carefully so they will not pass into the area beyond the white line.

With the foot still held between his knees, Hyatt placed the shoe firmly against the hoof and began driving six nails through the holes in the shoe. Although a horseshoe comes with eight holes in it, Hyatt said that normally six nails are enough to hold it in place.

The nails are made with one side beveled down so that it will curve out away from the white line as it is hammered in. When the nails are in the points emerge on the outside of the hoof.

After the shoe was on, Hyatt had to place the foot atop a short metal post mounted on a stand he carries with him. The horse, very cooperative up to that point, balked.

"Come on and act like a horse," Hyatt said to it.

Once he finally persuaded the animal to quietly rest its foot on the post, he told it, "Now that wasn't so bad, was it?"

Hyatt used the claw end of the hammer to wrench off the sharp points of the protruding nails. He filed the nails with a rasp to square the ends and used clinch tongs to bend them down.

Then he could move on to the next foot.

It takes Hyatt an average of 35 to 40 minutes to reset all four shoes on a horse "if his feet are in good shape," he said.

Hyatt stressed the importance of doing the job correctly.

"No foot, no horse," he said. "They can't ride in a wheelchair like us."

"It looks easy but it's hard on you, all the bending over.

"These flies, they're just starting in. They'll run you nuts," Hyatt said as he brushed away a few of the annoying black insects.

"And the horse beating you in the face with the tail, it kind of takes the romance out of the work," Hyatt added.

Sometimes the horses can be difficult to handle.

"You'll get all kinds," he said. "It's the ones they (horse owners) let get their way that are about the worst you can get for shoeing.

"I've had it all. I've been run over, kicked, pawed, anything they can do to you."

He does it, he said, because "I like to work outside and I like to work with horses."

The 51-year-old Hyatt has been shoeing horses since he was 16 in Lubbock.

"I started when I was a kid. My Dad and I trained racehorses. Shoers were scarce and you could hardly find one," he said.

After he learned how to shoe his family's horses his friends began bringing him their horses to shoe.

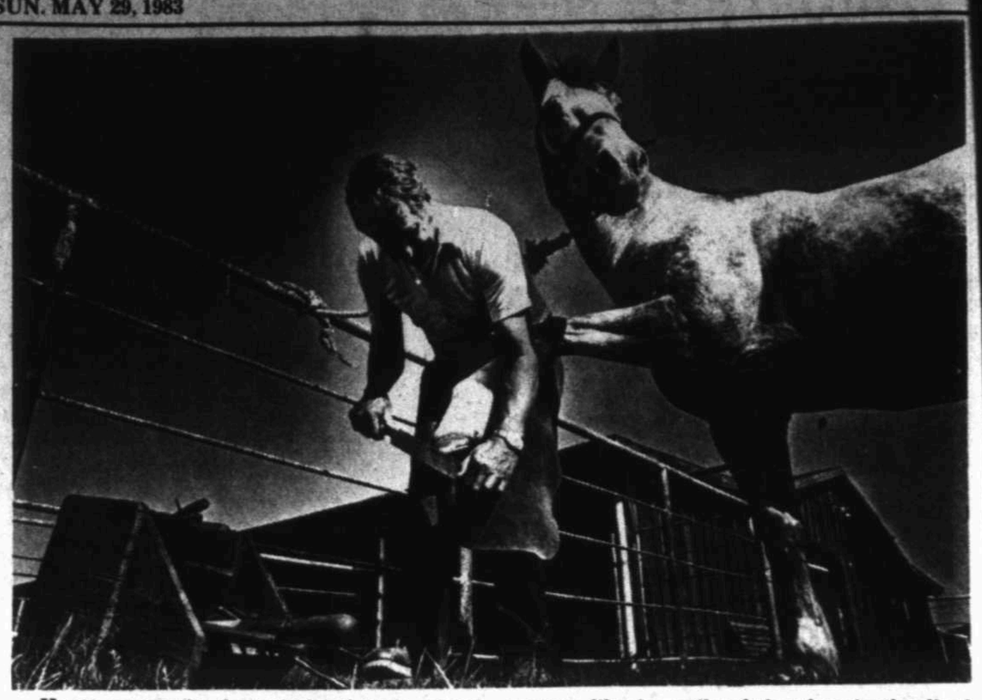

"One day I looked around and I was in the horseshoeing business," he said.

Hyatt went on to teach a college course in horseshoeing at Grayson County Junior College in Sherman. In 1974 he started his own school, the Hyatt School of Horseshoeing, in Pottsboro.

In 1980, he gave up horseshoeing and the school after he injured his back while roping steers from horseback.

After he moved to Midland in March 1982, he decided to try to return gradually to horseshoeing and now he works on an average of six horses a day, five days a week.

When Hyatt started in 1948, the going rate to reset shoes was about $4 — a dollar a foot. He now makes $30 for the same job.

Hyatt props the horse's hoof on a metal post to file the nails of the shoe in the final process of shoeing.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

After a week-long honeymoon at Little Dix Bay in the Virgin Islands, Billy Hickey and his bride, the former Mary Margaret Bennett, are at home in Dallas. Approximately 40 Midlanders went in for the May 14 wedding, which was held in Perkins Chapel on the SMU campus and was followed by a reception at the Belo Mansion in downtown Dallas.

The son of Andree and Bill Hickey of Midland, Billy is with Lincoln Property Inc. in Dallas. The bride, daughter of Sidney Ann and Bill Kilgore of Dallas, is an assistant buyer for Neiman-Marcus. The couple met during their undergraduate days at the University of Texas in Austin, where the bride's sorority was Kappa Kappa Gamma, and the groom was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

For the 11 a.m. ceremony, Mary Margaret was wearing her mother's wedding gown and was carrying an heirloom French prayer book that the groom's grandmother, mother and two aunts carried with them when they were married. The bride is an only child, but the groom is one of six children, and his three sisters and two brothers, as well as his two brothers-in-law, were among the attendants.

Special guests at the wedding were Billy's grandmother, Veronica Hickey of Nashua, New Hampshire, and Mary Margaret's grandparents, Margaret and Sid Collins of Marlin and a grand-aunt and uncle, Mary and Ralph Coffelt of Waco, who are like a second set of grandparents.

At the rehearsal dinner held in Brook Hollow Golf Club and hosted by Billy's parents, his parents, his brothers and sisters presented a humorous skit and slide show, which featured pictures of the bridal couple from their childhood days through their courtship years at UT.

A number of parties were given both in Dallas and Midland for the couple. Locally they were honored at a large dance in the Petroleum Club hosted by Dyan and Kip Agar, Marty and Jim Conine, Johnna and Sid Curle and Mary and Bill Kennedy. The party guests represented several generations of Midlanders, as well as young friends of the couple from out of town, who were seen dancing to the music of the Paula Craig Quartet from Dallas and enjoying a late night supper.

A brunch was given the following day by Pat and Brent Blonkvist, Emily and Kevin Blonkvist, Patti and Watson LaForce, Chris Renaud and Janet and Bob Pollard and son, Clay, at the Pollards' home in its lovely country setting.

To start off the wedding week, 14 of Billy's friends traveled to New Orleans for a bachelor party, planned by his brother and best man, Cliff Hickey. They returned to Dallas for more parties, including a Mexican dinner given by Billy's sisters and their husbands, Michele and Rob Arnot of Breckenridge and Dallasites Cynthia and Rob Brown. Another sister, Laura Hickey of Midland, was hostess for the bridesmaids' luncheon.

CONGRATULATIONS TO former Midlander Gloria (Mrs. LaDoyce) Lambert, who was installed as president of the Odessa Symphony Guild at a recent coffee in Odessa's new Petroleum Club. While a member of the Midland guild, Gloria was chairman of the 1978 National Young Artists competition and served as the organization's membership chairman. She is the daughter of long-time Midlanders Monette and Paul Hicks.

ROSALIND AND JOHN REDFERN, JR. spent a pleasant weekend in Austin recently. Attending the annual meeting of the Chancellor's Council of the University of Texas System, they enjoyed a luncheon at the Faculty Center and dinner at Bauer House, where Chancellor and Mrs. Donald Walker reside. They also enjoyed a visit with former Midlanders, Dorothy and Dr. Sam Ellison.

John also has been to Houston for a meeting of the President's Council of the UT System's Cancer Center. He was accompanied by his daughter, Houston resident Robin Redfern.

ENJOYING THE BEAUTY and charm of San Antonio while at a recent convention were Cecelia (Mrs. Robert) Davis, Martha (Mrs. Dan) Kallus and Colleen (Mrs. Vincent) Scury. Driving down a day early, they explored Fredericksburg and its unique shops before going on to the Alamo City for the American Association of University Women's state-wide conference. They were house guests of Midlander Louise (Mrs. Loyd) Whitley in the Whitleys' San Antonio home. Louise and Bambi (Mrs. A.E.) Byars, who accompanied her husband to his Trinity University reunion, joined them for some of the sessions.

The convention coincided with Fiesta, and while taking a river taxi to dinner, the Midlanders saw one of several parades which play an important role in the ten-day celebration. They enjoyed a Saturday evening dinner party at the home of San Antonio City Attorney Jane Macon, to which all 300 convention-goers were invited, and a tour of the city by chartered bus to view the many historic sights.

PERMIAN HIGH graduate Jennifer Kelm was honored at a recent luncheon at Bah Humbug Herbal Tea Room in Midland. Hostesses were her grandmother, Mrs. Agnes Brown, and her aunts, Karon (Mrs. Fred) Brown and Sylvia (Mrs. John) Hampton. Guests included several of her graduating friends from Odessa. School colors of black and white were featured in the party decor and included balloons and boy and girl graduate figures.

Jennifer is the daughter of Loretta and the Rev. A. Dean Kelm of Odessa. Her future plans include Odessa College and UT-Austin.

Honorary degrees

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

The awarding of honorary degrees is a growth industry in the United States. This month 4,000 to 5,000 men and women will receive diplomas making them doctors of a wide variety of things such as law, divinity, literature, music and humane letters.

Some new records are almost certain to be set. Father Theodore M. Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame University, will set a new individual record for honorary degrees every time he receives one, because he recently broke the old record held by Herbert Hoover. The former president has been variously reported to have received 89 to 93 honorary degrees; even if the 93 figure is accepted as correct, Hesburgh has topped him. In fact, Hesburgh will pass the 100 mark in 1983 if he receives as many degrees this year as he did in 1982, when he was awarded eight.

The female record-holder for honorary degrees is former Sen. Margaret Chase Smith of Maine, with 86. During the early 1970s, when she was picking up six or seven degrees per year, it seemed likely that she might break Hoover's record. She had 60 by 1970, and was far ahead of Hesburgh, who had only 34 at that point. Lately, however, Smith has slowed up, and has added only two LL.D.s to her total since 1978.

DEAR ABBY

Senile mother needs nursing

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: How does one answer the senile elderly nursing home patient who asks, "Why am I here?"

My mother, who is in her late 80s, has been in a small, comfortable nursing facility for almost five years. She is in fairly good physical health, but her mind has been failing for 10 to 15 years.

There are days when she doesn't know me, and nights when she gets up at 2 a.m. to prowl the nursing home searching for her husband who has been dead for five years, but in her more lucid moments, she asks, "Why am I living here with strangers?"

She says she is a "prisoner" and wants to live where she has more freedom. But in order for her to be "free," a still-productive member of the family with other responsibilities would then become the prisoner.

How can I answer my mother? This is the heartbreak of my life. – GETTING OLD MYSELF

DEAR GETTIMG OLD: An increasing number of people are experiencing the same kind of heartache.

The fact that your mother is confused most of the time indicates that she needs around-the-clock care and attention, and unless you can provide this in your own home, she is much better off in a private nursing facility. (Be glad you can afford it.)

In her more lucid moments, take her in your arms, tell her you love her, and explain honestly that she is where she is because of your concern for her safety.

I know it must be painful to send your mother who has nursed you, fed you and sacrificed for you to "live with strangers," but believe me, in your case, it is the most sensible solution for all concerned, so don't feel guilty.

DEAR ABBY: Last night my 17-year-old daughter came home from a date at 1:15 a.m. She invited her date in and they went to the family room to watch TV.

Knowing she was home for the night, I dropped off to sleep. At 3:30 a.m. I awakened. I went downstairs to turn off the lights and found my daughter and her date sleeping with the TV still on! I woke them up and told them it was 3:30, then I went back to bed, thinking the boy would leave. At 4 a.m. he was still there, so I called my daughter out of the room and sternly told her it was time her date went home. At 4:30, he still had not left, so I went downstairs and calmly said, "I think it's time you went home, young man." I stood right there until he left (a matter of seconds).

Afterward I grounded my daughter for the weekend. Now she is angry with me. She says I "embarrassed" her, and because of me the boy will probably never ask her out again.

Was I wrong? What would you have done, Abby? -- MIDWEST MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: You were not wrong. I would have done exactly what you did. Only I'd have done it sooner.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 34-year-old divorced woman, raising five children alone. My problem is my 15-year-old daughter. She skips school, lies, smokes and runs away. My other children are well-behaved and abide by my rules, which are not too strict. I've been to counselors, social workers, priests, etc., but nothing seems to help.

I don't know where else to turn. I love this child, but she refuses to cooperate, and I don't want her attitude to rub off on the younger ones. Where can I send her to make her behave? – END OF MY ROPE

DEAR END: You can't send a 15-year-old incorrigible child anywhere to "make her behave."

First, to find out whether her antisocial behavior is caused by a medical or emotional disorder, she needs to be examined. If she's healthy and normal, try LOVE.

Let her know that you love her and want to be her friend. Open your arms and your heart, and make her feel secure, worthwhile and loved. Control your anger and disappointment. Be calm and forgiving.

Wipe the slate clean and give your daughter a chance to be her best self. Every child needs love, but those who defy authority and break their mothers' hearts need it even more.

Unfertilized embryo grew

LONDON (AP) — A team of British medical researchers reports that a human embryo spontaneously developed in a laboratory without being fertilized by male sperm.

The five-member team, headed by Dr. Roslyn R. Angell of Britain's Medical Research Council and including four colleagues from the reproductive biology unit at Edinburgh University, reported the occurrence Thursday in the prestigious British weekly, Nature.

They said the embryo was found to contain only maternal chromosomes, but had divided four times to reach the eight-cell stage in the normal way ebfore it died.

Dr. Dennis Lincoln, director of the state-funded Medical Research Council, commented on the discovery Thursday.

Gems truly eternal

Diamonds are the hardest substance known and only a diamond can cut another diamond, reports the Jewelry Industry Council. On the Mohs scale of hardness which ranges from 1 to 10, diamond is rated 10. It is actually 150 times harder than sapphires. No man-made material even approaches the hardness of the diamond. Hence, the diamond is truly eternal, the perfect symbol of love everlasting.

Love language

Copley News Service

Flowers have always held a special meaning for lovers; during the ultra-romantic Victorian era, bouquets were an intrinsic part of the courtship ritual. What better way to express your sentiments on your wedding day than to carry flowers that symbolize your feelings?

For example, brides traditionally carry or wear orange blossoms as a symbol of chastity. And the lily of the valley is an age-old symbol of true love.

"Flowers speak a romantic language all their own," says Katherine Orr, consumer relations director for Harlequin Books. She offers the following list of flower meanings based on a Victorian dictionary of nosegays:

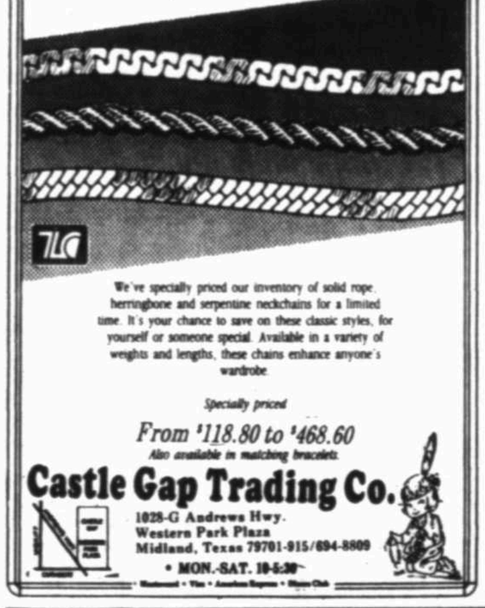

Red roses — love, beauty; yellow roses — joy; tropicana roses — desire; violets — steadfastness; iris — hope; tulip — ardent love.

Wagon journey

Copley News Service

Two newlyweds chased a dream during their cross-country honeymoon — in a covered wagon. Joe and Beverly Bowley were married in North Hampton, N.H., and left immediately for Los Angeles. The couple averaged about 25 miles per day in a 100-year-old covered wagon equipped with all the comforts of a home — a CB radio, stereo system, portable TV and refrigerator.

California auction the 'Super Bowl' of wine sales

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — For the last few days, they had been arriving from all areas of the United States. Carl Mayhue of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., for instance, David Dana of Manchester, N.H., Bert Bidwell of Aspen, Colo. — all the heavy players.

On Wednesday, they joined a Southern California contingent to sip, savor and spit out into silver buckets some of the world's costliest wines. In all, about 1,100 connoisseurs jostled each other at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel here as they debated bouquet, acidity, balance and after taste. Each had paid $35 ($40 at the door) for the privilege of attending this preview tasting and the 15th annual Heublein auction of rare wines, which is scheduled for Thursday.

Some had waited in line up to three hours before being allowed to enter the hotel's main ballroom where, under glimmering chandeliers and silver candelabra, wines dating back to the last century awaited.

As he has since the first Heublein wine auction, Alexander McNally, the "wine sleuth" who digs out rare-vintage treasures for the auction, presided over Wednesday's preview tasting. At 10-minute intervals a uniformed major domo rang a bell and McNally uncorked another gem, each time setting off a rush among those who had been tasting more pedestrian vintages.

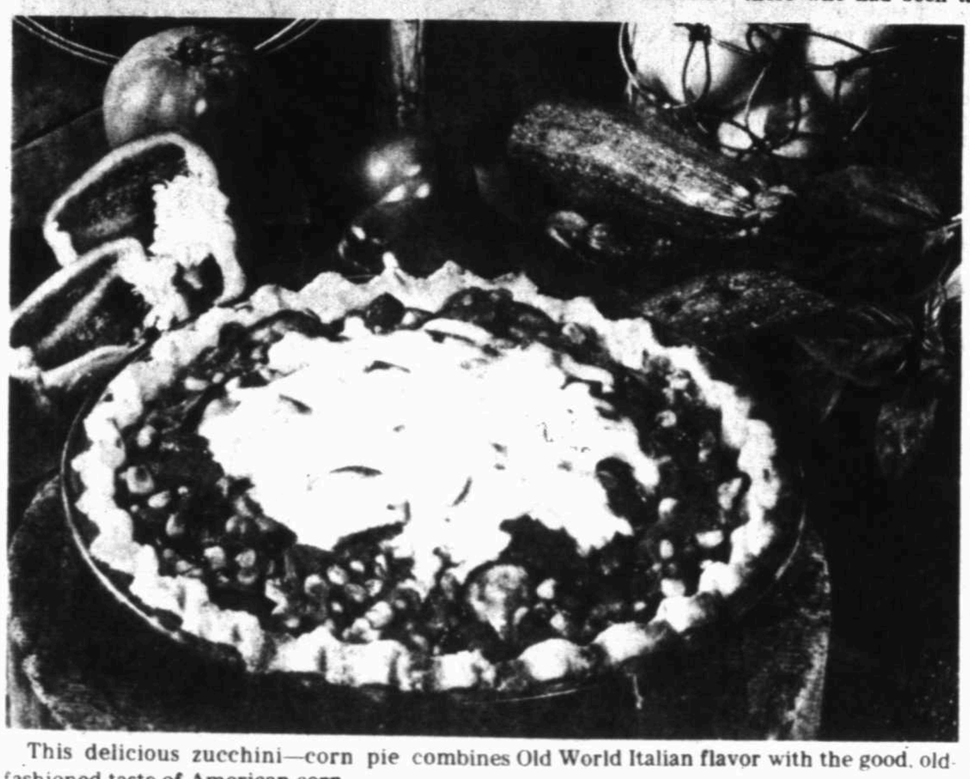

McNally and two other winemasters drew the maximum response from each cork pulling. Each was accompanied by a sharp but rhapsodic lecture.

The Heublein auction has become the "super bowl" of wine sales, offering collectors prizes unobtainable elsewhere. But each has a different reason for bidding so high. Mayhue, for instance, is a teetotaler who says that he buys wine for the pride of possession, "to know that I have it in my cellar. To look at."

In this, the first time the event has been held in Southern California, the largest wine market in the United States, some 17,000 bottles of wine from 1872 Madeira to 1982 California are expected to bring more than $500,000 with two bottles of 1806 Chateau Lafite expected to bring $30,000 apiece.

Wednesday's preview tasting was the third for this year's Heublein auction. Following Heublein's practice, the wines also have been sampled at tastings in two other cities, this year in Washington, D.C., and Miami.

This is the first auction since Heublein Inc., the nation's third largest wine and liquor company, was purchased by R.J. Reynolds Industries Inc. for $1.2 billion last year. Reynolds has pledged that the practice will continue. The Heublein auction was the first of its type in the United States and is still billed as the largest single-day auction of fine wine in the world.

This delicious zucchini—corn pie combines Old World Italian flavor with the good, old-fashioned taste of American corn.

Italian zucchini-corn pie zesty

Canned corn adds an American flavor to this Italian-influenced main dish pie. Corn is not only economical but good tasting.

CRUST

1 cup potato flakes
⅓ cup flour
¼ cup parmesan cheese
⅛ teaspoon onion salt
⅓ cup margarine or butter
¼ cup milk

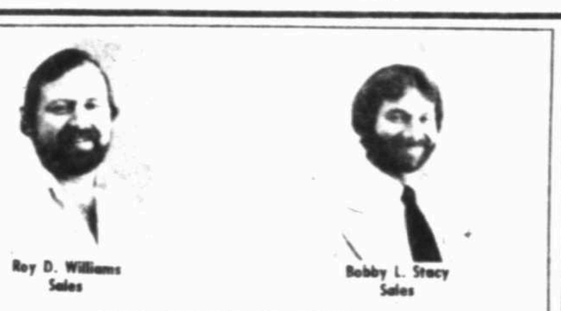

FILLING

2 tablespoons oil
2 cups thinly sliced zucchini
½ cup thinly sliced onion
½ cup chopped green pepper
12-ounce can whole kernel corn, drained
8-ounce can stewed tomatoes
6-ounce can tomato paste
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon oregano
¼ teaspoon basil
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 cup shredded mozzarella cheese

Heat oven to 350 degrees. In medium bowl combine potato flakes, flour, parmesan cheese and onion salt. Cut in margarine to resemble coarse crumbs. Add milk; stirring until dough holds together. Press into bottom and up sides of ungreased 9 or 10-inche pie pan. Bake at 350 degrees for 20 minutes.

In large skillet, saute zucchini, onion and green pepper in oil until zucchini is tender. Add remaining ingredients except mozzarella cheese; mix well. Heat through. Spread mixture into baked crust. Sprinkle mozzarella cheese over top. Bake at 350 degrees for 10 minutes. Makes 6 servings

Small touches make the big difference in decorating. A room grows dull if it has no subtleties to be discovered as you live in it. Accessories—that just right lamp, the little table and, of course, the pictures on the walls—bring life into the big furnishings in the room. So do "intimate" objects that reveal the personalities of the people who live among them. The little things that turn a room into a success are not always tangible objects. The way the plants are arranged, the pictures hung, the braid trim used, etc. In the weeks to follow, we hope to make you aware of all the little subtleties that will enhance your home.

AT WIT'S END

She has bottomless threshold

By ERMA BOMBECK

A psychologist once said that everyone has a dirt threshold, a boiling point that will drive him or her to dig out from under all the mess.

A 59-year-old widow in Albertson, N.Y., obviously found hers when she not only burned down her home because it was dirty, but tried to stop the firemen from putting out the fire.

So did city officials in Charleston, S.C., when they required horses carrying visitors on carriage tours throughout the historic district to wear diapers.

I haven't found mine yet.

How could I? It's been years since I've seen my threshold. And I think I know why. It's because I'm first generation immaculate. I was raised in a home that I dubbed Our Lady of Perpetual Dusting. Everyone knows cleanliness skips a generation.

I used to watch my mother. She was the kind who washed out a measuring cup with soap and water after she had used it only to measure WATER!

Whenever she hadn't used her good dishes, say in a year or so, she'd wash them again before setting the table. There was never any gum stuck in the bottom of her waste cans. I was impressed by that. And she was the only person I knew who ironed dish towels.

The only hope for me of surviving in this environment was my mother's love for boxes. Amid all this organized sparkle and alphabetized spices was a closet full of old boxes and ribbons that would have taken the sight out of a good eye.

It must have been her threshold of cleanliness where you can just take so much Lysol and you freak out.

No box was too flimsy or too worn to be added to mother's collection. Sometimes, she'd snatch a box away from us before we got the gift out of the tissue. You never knew what you were getting. Just when you thought you were getting a rectal thermometer for your birthday, you opened the lid and voila, a new pen-and-pencil set.

We have lived with one another's attitudes toward neatness. She considers dust a drug never to be inhaled. I consider dust God's way of measuring time.

According to the psychologists, I should have one area where spit and polish prevail . . . some part of my life that is clutter-free. I don't.

BONN, West Germany — "Experienced secretaries with a knowledge of languages who like to work under chaotic conditions" are being sought by the parliamentary faction of the Greens, West Germany's newest political party.

The anti-nuclear, environmentally concerned Greens, who are known for their long, informal meetings, lack of clerical staff and loose organization, recently placed the advertisement for secretaries in a Bonn newspaper.

Saronno dessert flashy dish

Let's admit it. We all like to show off once in awhile. And if ever there's a time to parade our culinary talents, it is when friends and family gather. This is the moment to have a dramatic dessert up your sleeve to end a delicious dinner on a spectacular note.

One candidate to win you applause might be a yummy Charlotte Glace Saronno, a showy delight that is easily assembled though it looks most complicated. You don't even need a special charlotte mold, a two-pound coffee can does the trick.

Miniature jelly-roll slices provide a jewel-like look to the charlotte and a sprinkling of Amaretto di Saronno adds intriguing flavor. Layers of vanilla and either peach or coffee ice cream are suggested for the filling, but others could be substituted, if desired. Happily, Amaretto di Saronno complements them all delectably as does the luscious raspberry sauce that crowns all this goodness.

CHARLOTTE GLACE SARONNO

2 packages (7 ounces each) miniature jelly rolls
⅓ cup amaretto
1½ pints peach or coffee ice cream, softened
1½ pints vanilla ice cream, softened
2 tablespoons cornstarch
½ cup amaretto
2 packages (10 ounces each) frozen raspberries, thawed

Cut jelly rolls into ½-inch thick slices. Line the bottom and sides of a 2-pound coffee can with jelly-roll slices. Reserve some slices to cover top. Sprinkle jelly roll slices with ½ cup amaretto. Spoon peach or coffee ice cream and then vanilla ice cream into can. Cover top with remaining jelly roll slices. Freeze for several hours or until hard.

To prepare sauce, mix cornstarch, ½ cup amaretto and juice drained from raspberries. Stir over medium heat until sauce bubbles and thickens. Stir in raspberries. Cover and chill. To remove charlotte from can, cut bottom from can with a can opener and use the lid to push out the contents.

Garnish charlotte with rosettes of whipped cream, if desired. To serve, cut into long wedges and top with raspberry sauce. Makes 8 servings.

Compliments are certain to follow the serving of this wonderous Charlotte Glace Saronno along with raspberry sauce to be spooned over every tempting portion. Amaretto di Saronno liqueur, a taste of the Renaissance, lends its intriguing flavor to both the charlotte and the sauce. This dessert is not only delicious, but its appearance also brings a truly dramatic flair to the dinner table.

Search for finest American dishes

By R. H. GROWALD
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Calvin Trillin, a happy warrior in the cause of making spaghetti carbonara America's national dish in place of turkey, examines a cloth napkin as Pope Leo X regarded Martin Luther and says no hamburger, thank you.

Trillin is touring America to whoop and holler for his third and latest book, "Third Helpings."

For years, in The New Yorker and other publications, Trillin has reported on how and what Americans eat. He does not celebrate the grub of Julia Child, Craig Claiborne, Ronald McDonald, Col. Sanders and others known for French sauces or faster foods.

Trillin also has written of the wilder corners of America for The New Yorker under the heading "U.S. Journal" and held high his civil rights banners for the magazine The Nation. But eats in America is the subject of two of his books, his tummy and, little doubt, his heart.

The best he will say of the hamburger is that once, in Los Angeles, he judged a hamburger "extremely adequate."

No substitutes for real, live foods

Copley News Service

What are imitation foods? Those eaten by imitation people in imitation houses who are raising imitation children?

They look like the real thing, smell like the real thing, taste and act like the real thing, but are they really real?

Well, as the old ads used to say, "Only the hairdresser knows for sure," but in this case, it may be "only the nutritionist knows for sure."

When even highly trained health professionals are challenged to decipher words and labels on thousands of packaged food products, and properly interpret their contents, how in the world can the average consumer know what he is buying when he goes to the grocery store? Is it real, or is it imitation? Not only may the consumer be confused by imitation food products, but he may be even further confused by "substitute" foods. Are "imitation foods" and "substitute foods" the same thing or are they different?

At a recent Nutrition Press Conference, sponsored by the Dairy Council of California, the question of imitation foods and their nutritional adequacy was presented by Debra Dyer, a clinical dietitian at the Memorial Hospital Medical Center in Long Beach, Calif.

To try to help people better understand all these confusing labels, imitation foods were first identified as those which are nutritionally inferior to the real thing.

So, if you see the word imitation on any food package, you are spending your money for less nutrition than if you bought the real thing.

A good example of total confusion is the use of the word "dietetic" on synthetic foods. What does that mean? Who knows? It could mean low salt or low fat or low calorie or low cholesterol or nothing at all, which is often the case.

The fact that most people associate the word with low calorie or weight loss, is utilized by many food manufacturers to fool the consumer into buying his phony product.

Examining the label of one dietetic ice cream revealed that it actually had more fat and more calories than a less-expensive regular ice cream.

Fruit beverage products are highly advertised today as being equally good or somehow even better than real fruit juice. They often stress their nutrient values as providing us with 100 percent of our vitamin C, 20 percent of our vitamin A and even 20 percent of our thiamin needs.

Job tips for disabled

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Q — I would like to do social work, career counseling, or entry-level personnel. I am limited by my inexperience plus physical handicaps (low vision), slow reading and writing, plus reliance on crutches or an electric wheel-chair. I have worked with the handicapped - managing training programs, teaching and counseling, writing reports and grants. I am suffering from "rejection blues." Where can I find resources to help support me or raise capital to form my own organization?

A - Congratulate yourself for coming so far! The obstacle you face now is helping others overcome their ignorance of handicaps. The areas that you have chosen within the helping profession are the hardest in many ways.

Do you know any elected politician or appointed staff member whose campaigning you helped or whose votes you and your groups substantially contributed to? If so, go to that person and ask for a job or for a project (soft money projects usually have no guarantee of continuing but give plenty of opportunities to make contacts along the way).

Or, consider doing work at home — starting with phone interviews, collections, surveying, canvassing, etc. to get your foot in the door to organizations. As far as starting your own business, you may not have the experience or credit rating a banker would look for. Therefore, before you would consider starting a enterprise on your own, start a freelance one assisting already existing organizations.

The hottest ones, given the economy, might be in bill collections. By the way, the most successful collections people are compassionate social workers who counsel people into paying their bills in an acceptable way rather than the old stereotypical tyrants yelling, "Pay the rent or else!"

Or, since you already have talent for writing proposals, what about getting some consulting jobs doing just that — helping with proposal or project reports. You'd either write or edit, then hire secretaries to get the material out for nearby industries.

There's a business in helping people out with their problems. And getting literate, perfect reports and proposals out are critical problems for such industries as architecture, engineering, computer sciences. It's worth a try.

Q — My friend and I want to start a small business of looking after people's homes while they are away. We would water plants, take care of papers, mail, lights. How do we know what to charge and what other services to offer?

A — Investigate more. See if any such service already exists in your town. Then buy some city magazines (New York, Los Angeles, etc.) and survey those services in the advertising section.

Write to each or call and find out from their brochures the services they offer for what fees. You could even ask each one how long they have been in business, where they advertise, which kind of advertising pays off, whether they approach individuals or go through businesses or community groups. Being a partner or managing their second office would be to your advantage at least initially to get your feet wet.

Q — How can I convert my 10 years of diversified management skills into a profitable business venture? With a financial partner, I feel my "internal drive" would blossom. Any suggestions?

A — There are two parts to your question. The prime one comes in the second part. You obviously want a partner to help you come alive. What does that person have to do to make that happen? What stops you from doing it yourself?

Entering a private or entrepreneurial venture takes tremendous drive to not only start a business but also to keep it going. Let me suggest that before you think of your own private business, you find a smaller company to work for and run. Practice playing a variety of roles — initiator, supporter, expander — and see what fits best to determine what to try next.

Got a problem on the job? Write to Dr. Scheele, care of this newspaper. Watch for her answer in this column.

U. S. education system report card reveals failing grades

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

As the school year ends, America's education system has gotten its grades: flunks. Two report cards — "A Nation at Risk," the Report of the National Commission on Excellence in Education, and a report for the Twentieth Century Fund — have, like all national commission reports, told us what we already know. And refuse to hear.

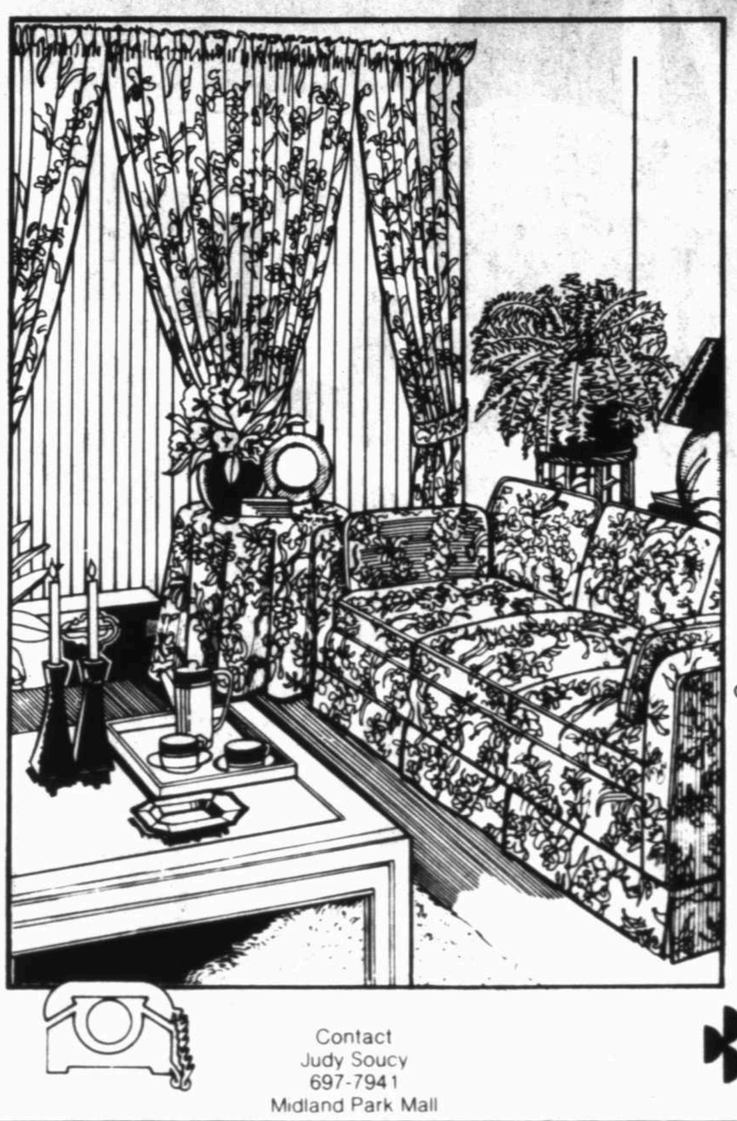

Briefly stated, the average graduate today is worse educated than the average graduate a generation ago. College Board scores, literacy, training in science and mathematics, etc., are so poor that not just the quality of our culture but even our national security is in jeopardy, victim of a "rising tide of mediocrity."

I suspect that we refuse to really hear this — that is, to be converted by it — when we know that it is true, because collectively the nation has freely chosen intellectual mediocrity. It fits our current generational life style. On one level we are like the bright, handsome, personable kid on the basketball team who is having a great time at college — making friends, drinking beer, avoiding tough courses and collecting C-minuses, with no awareness that a C-minus student will be a C-minus citizen.

The soul, the diamond, of "A Nation at Risk" is the central principle of Western civilization, Christian humanism and, paradoxically, American democracy: the dignity of the individual who, because of that dignity, must be challenged to develop his or her talents to the fullest.

Yet the underside, or a misreading, of democracy militates against excellence. Mediocrity is not just a "rising tide," it is an active political and economic force, a cousin of the capitalism that profits from the "sweetheart contract," the silent conspiracy among students, teachers and parents in which no one will bother anyone else. Parents set social and economic, rather than intellectual, goals for the young; then they pursue their own social lives. Teachers give little or no homework, and so, with no papers to mark, can spend the week watching "The Winds of War." Rather than read, high-school students hang out, watch soaps and sitcoms and play video games. They do not complain about not being challenged as long as they get good grades and get into college.

Mrs. Phil Adams, left, on the Manor Park board of directors, and a future resident of the retirement community, chats with Mrs. Joy Rivers, Director of Admissions.

Manor Park offers independence

Text by Diane Booth

Growing old should not mean sacrificing a person's independence or settling for a less desirable lifestyle, according to Mrs. Joy Rivers, Director of Admissions and Public Relations at Manor Park, a residential community in Midland for people 62 years and older.

Sponsored by Midland Presbyterian Homes, a non-profit organization chartered in Texas, Manor Park is in the first development phase on 40 acres at Holiday Hill Road and Sinclair Avenue.

By January 1984, approximately 40-50 garden homes and townhouses will be ready for occupancy, said Mrs. Rivers. A total of 80 units will be completed by June 1984.

Manor Park provides a balance of independent residential living and offers health care for residents, Mrs. Rivers said.

Personal health care and infirmary care in the facility's planned nursing unit is available to residents.

Most retirement communities do not take responsibility for the residents' health, Mrs. Rivers said. "This is a new concept just now taking hold here and in other parts of the country."

When a person's health fails, she said, he must leave familiar surroundings, family and friends for medical attention.

Manor Park provides residents with an indoor physical fitness center furnished with exercise equipment to help maintain good health and to help rehabilitate residents recovering from strokes, coronaries or other health problems.

The retirement community is designed to eventually include numerous facilities including a non-denominational chapel, shops, dining room and recreational facilities including an indoor-outdoor pool and golf course.

The planned 700 units measure from 516 to 2,390 square feet. The housing selection varies from compact one bedroom, one bath apartments to spacious three bedroom, three bath homes.

"Manor Park doesn't look like an old folks' home," Mrs. Rivers said. "The goal at Manor Park is to provide housing for retired people where they can feel secure, remain as independent as possible, and at the same time have all the services they need."

Manor Park has round-the-clock security guards seven days a week and each home has an emergency communications system to contact security or medical personnel. Housekeeping services are provided on a weekly basis and building maintenance and repair work is provided.

(See MANOR PARK, Page 2F)

Midlanders see future in new community

Mrs. Phil Adams knows she will soon need to move to a retirement community, but she does not want to change her life when she does.

The Midland widow, who is on the board of directors of Manor Park, a Midland residential community for people 62 years of age and older, said she plans to live there someday.

"Manor Park is definitely in my future. I want independent living. I have lived in Midland since 1955 and I want to stay here. This is where my home is and my friends are here. I have a daughter in Lubbock and she wants me to live with her and her family. We are very devoted to each other but I want to live independently."

Although she enjoys good health now, she knows "so many things can happen just overnight. A lot of people are afraid of having something happen to them during the middle of the night and someone won't find them for a week."

Availability of health care at Manor Park makes the community attractive as a retirement home, she said.

As she gets older, Mrs. Adams said caring for a yard and repairing appliances when they break is a burden. "The more relaxed living style at Manor Park will appeal to people."

But the community is appealing because it is not a retirement home, she said. "There are activities there to help people keep up with things they want to do and do some new things, too. As people get older they are able to let go of things if they want to."

Viola Lindeblad, also a widow, has decided to make Manor Park her home. A 30-year Midland resident, she said it is "important to think about what I am going to do before it happens to me."

The 76-year-old does not have children and lives far from relatives. She would like to live in a nice community with other senior citizens. "Midland is very lucky to have a place like Trinity Towers," she said, "and I think I will find all that at Manor Park."

Trinity Towers, established in 1970 by the non-profit organization, Midland Presbyterian Homes, is a residential community for persons 62 years and over.

Plagued by arthritis, Mrs. Lindeblad remains active despite a lack of mobility. "I like an independent living situation so I like the idea of an apartment close to everything." She also is interested in someone assuming the responsibility of running her home and yard.

The Midland woman said she has given a lot of thought to her decision. "This will be my next to last move. I don't want to wait until it is too late and I have to go to a rest home."

Mrs. Lindeblad does not think she will be giving up anything to move to Manor Park, in fact she said she may come out ahead. "I am giving up an ordinary house in an ordinary neighborhood. I just don't have anybody I can count on now."

Although Mary Maude and Ralph Hickman have not decided if they will move to Manor Park, they are "interested" in the retirement community. "I think of Manor Park as our future," Mrs. Hickman said.

A 24-hour security patrol and health care are strong selling points, she said.

"Midland is our home and we plan to continue to make our home here. A yard and responsibilities of a home are becoming a bit heavy," Mrs. Hickman said. "It would be wonderful for those of us who want to continue to be independent."

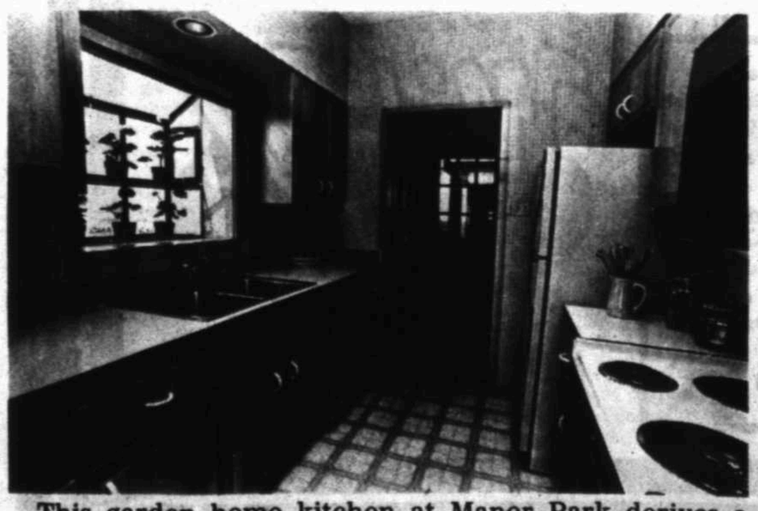

Manor Park would be a good place to live, she said based on her experience with Trinity Towers. Her late mother and aunt "lived wonderful years" there, she said. "They give residents such personal and tender loving care."

Since her husband is 75 years old and she is in her late sixties, Mrs. Hickman said she is comforted knowing if something happened to either herself or her spouse, "the other would have security in the future and not loneliness," at Manor Park.

Moving is a difficult adjustment, Mrs. Hickman said. But she emphasized the importance of making that decision before "your children make the decision to put you in a nursing home."

"I want to be in control of what I am doing."

Although she admits she doesn't relish aging, Mrs. Hickman said, "we can make the most of it by putting ourselves in a situation we feel comfortable with."

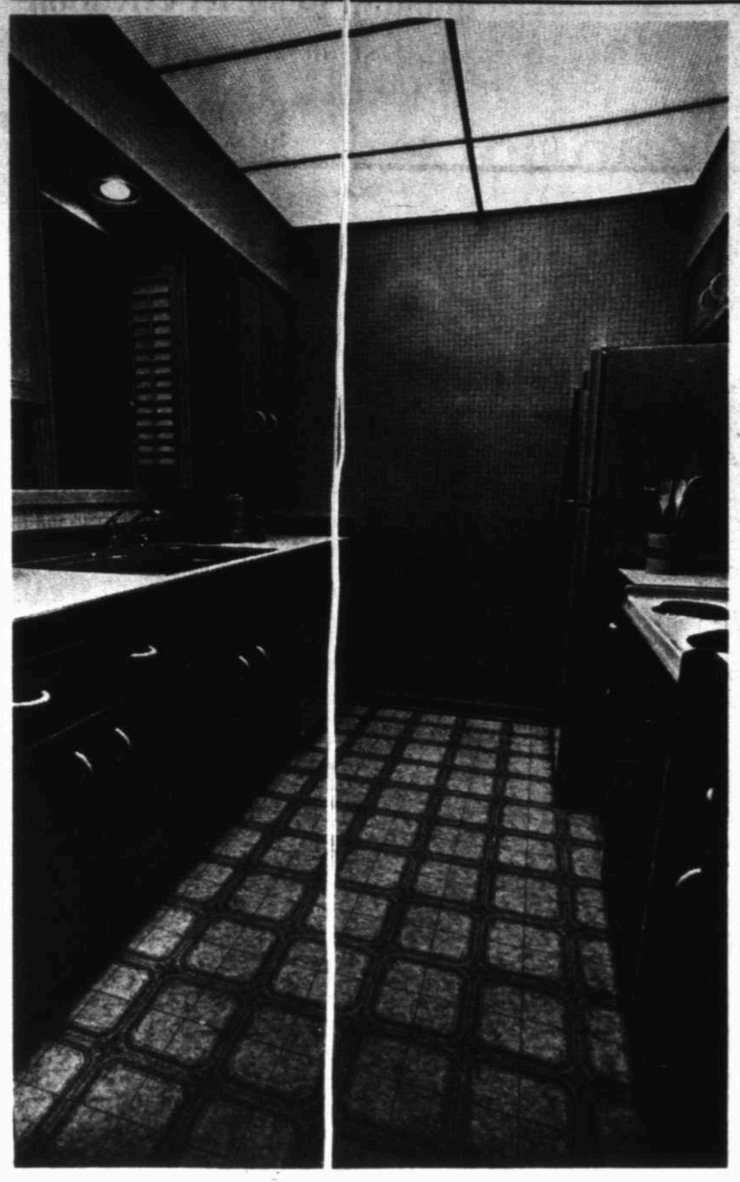

This garden home kitchen at Manor Park derives a special character from the kitchen sink window box.

Residents don't have to settle for cramped quarters at Manor Park's townhouses.

Ample space and comfortably stylish surroundings make this living room the hub of a townhouse.

Manor Park...

Meals may be purchased in the planned dining room and a variety of diversions will be available to residents including exercise and education classes and outings such as shopping trips and concerts.

All residents must pass a physical exam to ensure good health to qualify to live at Manor Park, Mrs. Rivers said.

"We don't expect people moving in here to be in perfect health," she said, but "they must be able to care for themselves, although we know that won't last forever.

"This is the only move a retired person would have to consider making. No matter what their physical condition, their needs can be met here."

Personal health care in a 364 square foot room runs $20,000 for the entrance deposit, and the single occupancy monthly maintenance fee is $1,100. Health care in a 598 square foot suite calls for a $40,000 deposit and the single occupancy montly maintenance fee is $1,800.

Whether an individual or a couple desires to lease a townhouse, garden home or apartment, a refundable entrance deposit is required, said Mrs. Rivers.

When the resident or residents vacate the community, the deposit is refunded in full and the home is relet, she said.

Residents must also pay monthly maintenance fees based on single or double occupancy.

To lease a one bedroom, one bath townhouse consisting of 881 square feet, a tenant must put down a deposit of $68,000. Monthly maintenance fees for a single person are $410 and $510 for two occupants. An efficiency garden home measuring 516 square feet requires a $33,000 deposit and monthly maintenance costs $330 for one person or two persons.

A two bedroom, two bath townhouse totalling 1,305 square feet may be leased for a $99,000 deposit and $515 a month in maintenance fees for one person or $615 for two persons.

Most people who own their own homes can afford to live at Manor Park, Rivers said. "It is really appealing to the middle class on up."

However, if a person or couple wants to live in the community, but can't quite afford it, Mrs. Phil Adams, a director on the Manor Park Board, which oversees itsoperations, said there is an Assist Fund to lend financial aid.

A five-year waiting list for apartments at Trinity Towers, a non-profit senior citizen community run by Presbyterian Homes, prompted plans for Manor Park, Mrs. Adams said.

"Some of those people could die while waiting on the list for Trinity Towers," she said.

A fundraising campaign initiated by the Trinity Towers board of directors and volunteers netted $4 million in two years, Mrs. Adams said.

The project acreage was donated by Capt. W. E. Wallace of Midland, said Mrs. Adams.

The funds are earmarked to finance the dining room, recreational facilities and other buildings and facilities available to all residents, which they do not pay for directly.

Beginning in June, Rivers said, tax-exempt bonds will be sold t raise $17 million to combine wi entrance fees to finance residen housing.

Mrs. Rivers, formerly the Direct of Admissions and an associate pr fessor for the Kent School of Soci Work at the University of Louisvil in Kentucky, attempts to fit re dents' financial, physical and em tional needs to the appropriate hou ing at Manor Park.

Living at Manor Park, she said, " a way of taking care of yourself in very independent way."

Peace on earth found in remote New Zealand

Copley News Service

"The hardest thing I've ever had to do was to leave New Zealand." The young reporter shook his head in dismay at the thought of leaving the paradise where he had discovered beauty, peace and a lifestyle that, for him, was a dream come true.

"While you are there, would you please check the post office at Milford Sound for me? We fell so in love with that place; we took a box just so we would feel that part of us was always in New Zealand." The expression on the face of the corporate executive softened as he remembered days in that magnificent, remote place.

"I can't really stay here forever, but I do try to get back at least once a year — the fishing is so far and away the best in the entire world." The international sportsman awaiting his plane at Auckland beamed. "I wouldn't miss it for anything." His friend nodded in agreement.

"It's the people who really get to you — they're the friendliest in the world." That came from numerous persons with whom we talked before departure.

Anyone who has ever visited New Zealand is anxious to tell you how beautiful a country it is, how peaceful, how rich in the simple good things of life — how warm and wonderful the people are to travelers.

So much so that it was easy to be a little cynical about it all. Maybe the Tourist Office puts something in the water to inspire such reactions. Surely it can't all be perfect — no place is — no people are. We thought to discredit the myth.

So, armed with copies of Robert Bone's "Maverick Guide to New Zealand" and John McDermott's "Getting Lost and Found in New Zealand," and a fistful of notes, maps and directions from the New Zealand Tourist Office, we set forth.

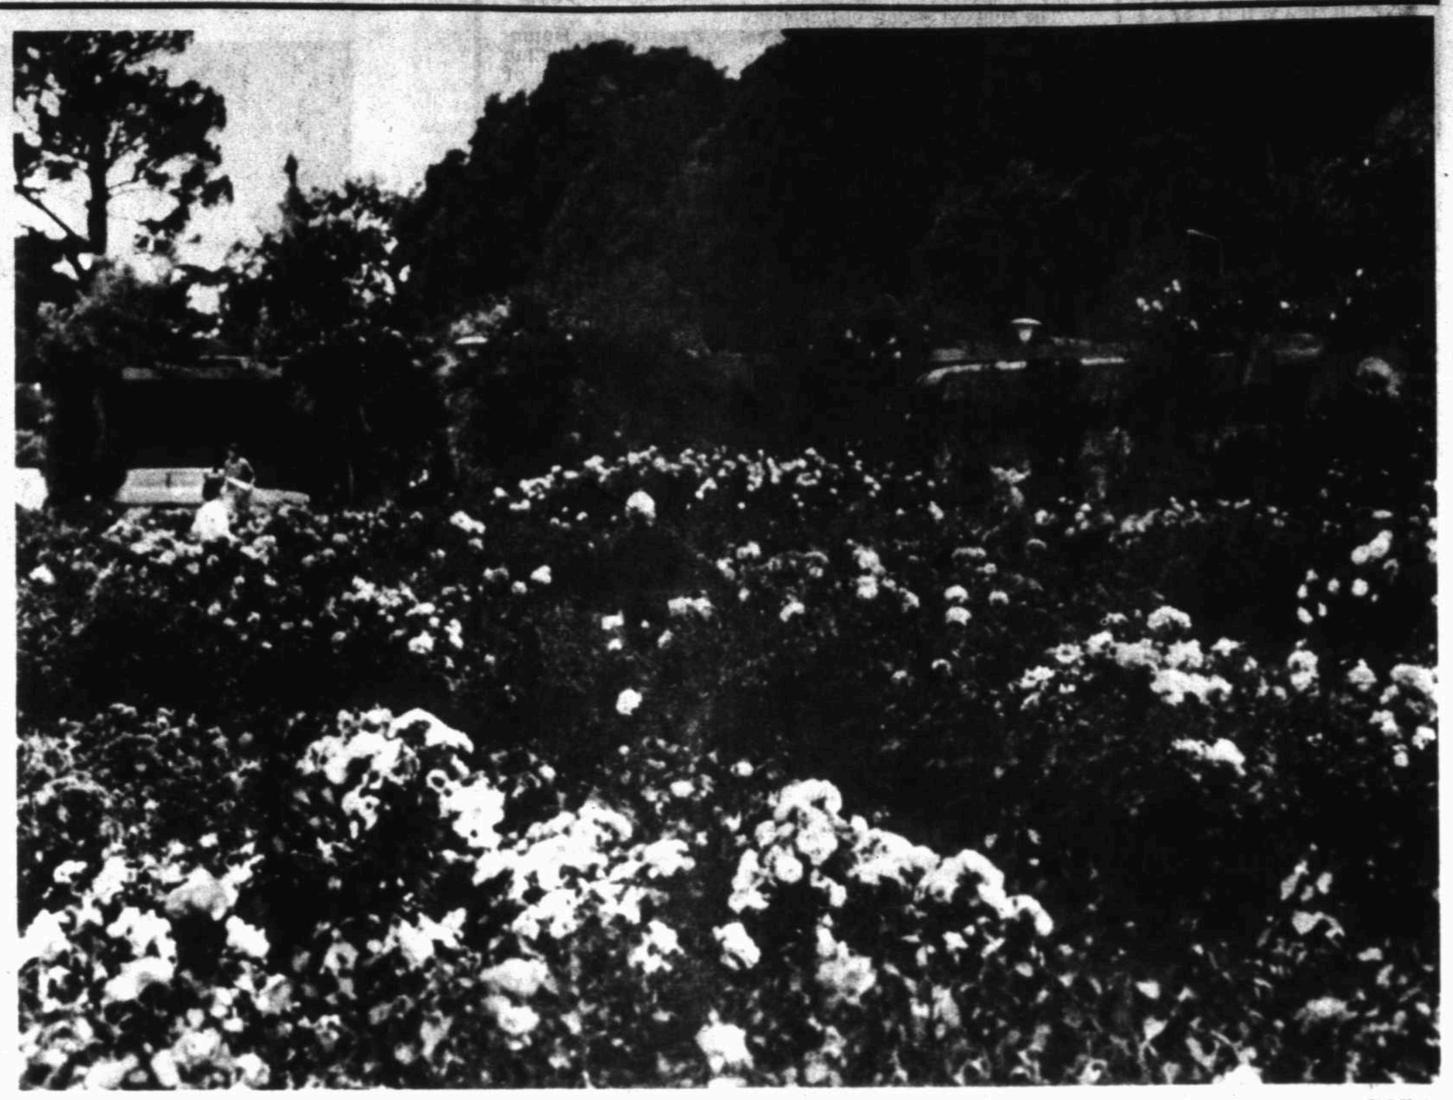

Well, of course New Zealand isn't perfect. But it sure comes close.

In a two-week tour of the country, we visited its cities — Auckland, Rotorua, Wellington, Christchurch, Queenstown. Found them universally clean, simple, built around rivers, bays, water of some sort, flourishing with flowers, gardens, wide avenues, pretty vistas. They are cities built for the people who spend their lives there. They function well, are pleasant places in which to live — and all are within easy reach of magnificent recreational areas.

We flew — big planes between cities, small ones to explore the glaciers, the wilderness. And we drove — mile after peaceful mile through some of the most beautiful country imaginable. Vast open areas covered in golden grasses. Rich, fertile hills covered with sheep. Over mountains and through passes, across plains and into villages and towns. And never tired.

We talked with people everywhere — spent a few days on a working cattle station near Rotorua; dined with a charming woman in a beautiful home in Christchurch; chatted with people over tea in little shops, on ferry boats, sight-seeing buses.

We visited the famous sights: the geysers at Rotorua and the Maori Cultural Center there. We saw the strange and wondrous caves at Waitomo lighted by glow worms. Flew a plane over mountain country, then landed on Tasman Glacier (the planes are equipped with skis). Ate wild boar in a magnificent formal English dining room with a view that reminded us of the Tetons.

Seasons are reversed in the lands below the equator and wild flowers bloom all through the months which are wintertime in the Northern Hemisphere. On South Island, across long vistas of gentle fields and peaceful herds, under the bluest skies imaginable, the air is redolent with the sweet fragrance of wild clover and lupine and sunny with daisies and deep golden gorse.

Prizes are awarded every year for the most beautiful private and business gardens in Christchurch. Interest in this highly effective city-beautifying program remains constantly high, making Christchurch probably the loveliest New Zealand city.

Christchurch: Prettiest, city in New Zealand

Copley News Service

Christchurch is surely the prettiest city in New Zealand — and the most British. Built around the romantic, meandering, willow-woven Avon River, it is green and shaded with great trees, bright with award-winning gardens, filled with Edwardian and Victorian buildings and altogether blissful.

It is also quite well-known to many Americans who have ported here and to those who have been involved with the fabulous Operation Deep Freeze, the multinational cooperative exploration of Antarctica.

Christchurch began under the auspices of the Church of England in 1850. Four shiploads of carefully chosen immigrants, typical of all English towns, were sent to the nearby port of Lyttelton. By 1880, they had spread out across the Canterbury Plains, which now were home to more than a million sheep. Today, Christchurch is New Zealand's second-largest city and a cultural center non-pareil.

The city was planned around the gray-stone Canterbury Cathedral and the square where it is located. The area today is a mosaic of Gothic, semi-Tudor, Victorian and high-tech modern buildings, with a great pedestrian walkway among the shops, theaters and restaurants which fill the City Mall.

On weekdays, it is the hub of city activity. On Sundays, except at times for church services, it is left to the pigeons and a handful of tourists who don't know that all shops and businesses are shut tight in New Zealand every Sunday.

But even on Sunday Christchurch is a wonderful city to walk in. Among the trees and gardens, the gray-stone buildings have an air of solidarity. The old Canterbury University buildings have become a lively center for museums, gardens and the performing arts.

We strolled through the quiet streets to the Botanical Gardens — a brilliant quilt of color; visited the McDougall Art Gallery and walked along Rolleston Avenue. At old Christ College the strains of music floated out to the street. Wandering in, we discovered a wonderful classical concert by a full brass band in the enclosed square.

Removatron is a safe method of permanent and painless hair removal. It works but it does not hurt.

Tasmania has changed since Capt. Bligh's days

CNS Photo

This jewel of a small city, located in northern Tasmania, affords access to Tasmania's mountains.

By CARL LARSEN
Copley News Service

Nightlife in Hobart, capital city of Tasmania, is centered at the Wrest Point Hotel-Casino, a waterfront complex a short drive from downtown.

At its opening in 1973, Wrest Point was the only legalized casino in the South Pacific. But gambling casinos are a spreading phenomena in Australia, with others now open in Alice Springs and Darwin and a second Tasmanian operation in Launceston.

It's an indication of how Tasmania has changed since Capt. William Bligh, aboard the HMS Bounty, stopped to plant apple trees in 1788.

The Wrest Point floor show is patterned after a Las Vegas, Nev., or Parisian revue, but on a smaller scale. There are the usual bare-breasted dancing girls but you won't see an extravaganza with the Titanic sinking on stage or a cast numbering 100 as in Las Vegas.

For its size, the show does hold up, with one annoyance — the main revue was done to recorded music, while later, a live combo backed up a female vocalist. For an operation of the caliber of this hotel, certainly live music for the entire show was to be expected.

If big-name entertainment is more to your liking, Wrest Point regularly attracts such stars as Charles Aznavour, Manhattan Transfer, Eartha Kitt and Buddy Rich.

When gambling here, abandon your Las Vegas notions. First, forget the one-arm bandits. They're illegal in Tasmania.

Instead you can try your skill at blackjack, roulette, keno, mini-dice and two-up — a distinctively Australian coin toss where money is won based on whether the toss of two coins comes up with both coins landing heads or tails.

Bettors wager around a large horseshoe table while one of the bettors takes his turn throwing the coins.

Baccarat and craps are added on weekends. The money doesn't change hands all day and night, either. The casino closes somewhere between 3 and 4 a.m., shut until the late morning.

An attractive revolving restaurant atop Wrest Point's tower affords a spectacular view of Hobart and the harbor at night. But, as is the practice at many Australian restaurants, a 15 percent surcharge is added for food and drink on weekends and holidays.

Traveling inland to the west from Hobart over narrow two-lane roads, Tasmania changes dramatically.

Small towns and fields of hops strung high above the ground along the Derwent River valley give way to rolling hills and mighty forests.

Then comes a toll gate, the start of the 55-mile Gordon River Road, cut through the mountainous heart of the island to the site of the $200 million Lake Pedder and Lake Gordon hydroelectric power development — completed in 1978.

The road runs by rock formations blasted out by crews, past "Danger — watch for wallabies" signs and finally snakes high above stands of huon pine and leatherwood in the glacial valleys below paralleling the twin lakes.

A short drive and ferry ride from Hobart is Bruny, an unspoiled windswept island lacking the traveler's amenities.

Brooklyn Bridge is age 100

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — The people of New York gave the Brooklyn Bridge a 100th birthday party last week, and the stone and steel grande dame of the East River dominated the festivities with serenity and splendor.

The spectaular celebration included a parade of thousands of citizens across the bridge, a ship salute, a sound and light show, and a great burst of fireworks, but nothing that could overshadow the bridge itself.

The bridge's soaring stone gothic arches and delicate spun steel spiderwebs have remained an architectural triumph and a part of the American psyche for a century.

"I think this is a tribute to America," said Mary Roebling, the widow of the grandson of engineer Washington Roebling, the bridge's designer. She spoke while perched on a horse-drawn wagon like the one that carried Roebling's wife, Emily, across the bridge during its opening ceremonies. She was among the 18,000 official marchers in the parade across the bridge Tuesday.

"That bridge was built by people who were building a cathedral," added Mayor Edward I. Koch, who wore a old Brooklyn Dodgers baseball cap for the occasion.

The Brooklyn Bridge cost $15 million, took 14 years and 20 lives to build and put Brooklyn on the map. Few structures over the decades have been so celebrated by artists and poets, writers and critics.

"The lands welded together. The shapes arise," exulted the poet Walt Whitman. Hart Crane wrote of its "harp and altar," its "choiring strings." John Dos Passos described the bridge on a fog-choked afternoon "dripping and aloof like an arbor in a dense garden of steamboat whistles."

The critic Lewis Mumford sought to place the bridge in transition, contrasting its massive heavy granite of the past with its "spidery steel" — "the architecture of the future."

The rationale of its designer, John A. Roebling, who did not live to see it finished, was simple: The bridge to Manhattan would be one of history's great connecting works — symbolic of the splendor of the Victorian Age — an engineering triumph to match the trans-Atlantic cable, the Suez Canal and the transcontinental Railroad.

The bridge was finished by Roebling's son, Washington, after his father died from tetnus. At one point, when Washington became an invalid after suffering the bends while inspecting the bridge's underwater foundations, his wife relayed instructions to the crews' foremen.

At the time, it was the world's largest suspension bridge, one half again the size of a bridge over the Ohio at Cincinnati. The statistics were staggering: 5,989 feet long with twin stone towers, 276 feet high.

History of ancient Yugoslavia makes trip interesting

By JUNE GALLAGHER
Copley News Service

"Why go to Yugoslavia?" was the question everyone asked when I gave the destination of my vacation.

At first I hemmed a bit, but as the question prevailed, I rattled off my reasons.

Jugotours was offering off-season tours for senior citizens (me) at a bargain price.

The Adriatic coast of Yugoslavia has been called the "Eastern Riviera" and one of the most beautiful parts of Eastern Europe.

I'd never been to an ancient land. Yugoslavian history dates back to antiquity and many preserved buildings date to the Romans and Venetians' Golden Age of architecture.

Our flight was to be non-stop to Zagreb, the capital of Croatia.

Another hour's flight and a trip by smooth hydrofoil on the Adriatic Sea would bring us to the island of Hvar for one week.

Then we would sail down the Adriatic to the city of Dubrovnik for a second week.

We also could take either short side trips for little money or a three-day trip to Greece and Rome or Porta Rosa for $220.

We deplaned at Zagreb. It looked like most airports, until we saw a soldier standing guard beside the plane with his fingers on the trigger of an automatic rifle.

This was the Balkans, land of volatile politics and victim of numerous conquerors since ancient times.

Today, it is part of the communist world and all men are conscripted into the army for a year.

Airports tend to bring out the herding instinct, and Zagreb has to be tops at shuttling passengers from line to line.

Employees were sharp, blunt, not friendly. We were tired and tempers grew short as we struggled with our own luggage until the last line shot us like water from a funnel near our second plane.

A few hours later, plane and hydrofoil brought us to Hvar's lovely harbor.

It had been a hard trip of 17 hours, plus a seven-hour time zone change.

However, Hvar offered recompense. White buildings with red tile roofs nestle against a backdrop curtain of tall, dark mountains.

A Roman wall which once edged the town climbs almost out of sight to an ancient fortress.

The cobblestone walkway leads around the harbor and ties it all to the blue Adriatic Sea and sky.

The Renaissance town square to the north is paved with square polished marble stones, where no cars are allowed.

A medieval Roman Catholic cathedral and tiny shops — a grocery, eyeglass store, pharmacy — are grouped around the square. Narrow side streets edged with apartments, houses and small shops arch up to the surrounding hills.

During the day, the square is crowded with cooing pigeons and children playing soccer or high jumping.

The people spend most of their time outdoors, walking and calling across to each other, gossiping, exchanging greetings or just sitting in the sun.

They exhibit a closeness, a camaraderie that both excluded and ignored the presence of strangers.

Surrounded by people speaking a language we could not understand, we gathered visual and auditory impressions.

— Walking on the wet marble stones in the square during a rainstorm, the Adriatic shows another side. It can be angry and treacherous, not just blue and beautiful.

No fishermen went out that day. There was no fresh fish for dinner that night at the Palace Hotel.

— People-watching: The children and the men are both very handsome, while many of the women appear overly strong. Some of the prettier ones wear too much makeup, like ours during the 1940s and '50s. The weather is cool and young girls wear boots, boots, boots.

Teenagers wear their universal uniforms: The girls favor jogging pants with white T-shirts hanging beneath sweat shirts, jogging shoes; the boys, jeans and gym or jogging shoes and, of course, T-shirts.

The grandfathers and their grandsons walk companionably hand-in-hand or fish together in the sea.

The old women, wearing all-black clothes, look dignified as they gossip together in front of the stores.

There is a far greater mixture of ages here, from the very young to the very old, all taking part in daily doings.

— Freezing in the icy, bone-chilling cathedral one dark night. A few candles barely bent back the blackness of the vast recesses. The dim paintings over the six large side altars were hardly discernible.

I exchange the "Peace be with you" greeting with an old, old Yugoslavian woman and marvel at her handclasp — strong and hard as the rocks of their mountains — and her sweet smile.

— Avid readers crowding around the kiosk when the truck arrives with the day's newspapers, reading them as they stand there.

— As the daily boat from Split arrives, the islanders greet each other loudly and openly. Family reunions are filled with laughter. A man joyfully smothers his baby with kisses.

— Touring the island by bus along winding mountain roads built for donkeys and mules, our guide offers a prayer for our safe return.

We pass fields of lavender and rosemary, raspberry bushes, olive trees and vines. The soil is too rocky for other crops.

Ancient Romans have left geometric piles of stones. Their meaning is lost in history.

— We climb the fortification at Vrboska, built against the Turks.

We gaze over the countryside from the top of a battlement at the same sea that brought former invaders.

In the medieval church, a 16th century painting on the martyrdom of St. Stephen signed by famed Venetian artist Titian hangs over the main altar. The priest shows his magnificently embroidered vestments dating from the Middle Ages.

There also is a local nude beach, very popular with Western Germans tourists. The new vs. the old.

— Back at our hotel, we eat homemade soup, freshly caught fish from the sea, horrible coffee (until we discovered Turkish coffee) and wonderful bread in a vine-laced dining room.

— A ferryboat ride to Split brings us to the Roman Emperor Diocletian's 4th century palace within the walled part of the city.

An old woman shakes a rug over her balcony from one of the apartments built into the city walls. She lives across the street from the palace.

— Outside the walls, we buy violets for 25 cents a bunch at an outdoor market selling vegetables, fruits, flowers, shoes, blouses, rugs, craft items, everything. The quality of goods is disappointing.

— We puzzle over the number of men walking around the city and drinking Turkish coffee during the late morning hours.

We are told workers often take breaks at 10:30 a.m. and don't return until noon. Shops close from noon until 4 p.m. then reopen until 8 or 9 p.m.

Our trip from Hvar by boat to Dubrovnik takes place during a fierce Adriatic storm.

A poor sailor, I visit the pharmacy early that morning to buy Dramamine. The proprietress smiles and understands my gestures of seasickness.

The sight of Dubrovnik is welcomed. It has been described as "preserving the Renaissance in stone" and "the Croatian Athens of the Slavic south."

Dubrovnik, formerly called Ragusa, arose from the ancient city of Epidaurum. While all of present-day Yugoslavia was ruled by the Venetians and Turks, Dubrovnik alone remained a city-state until conquered by Napoleon.

It built the best galleons on the Mediterranean and was the first city to quarantine merchandise and seamen for 40 days to prevent plague from entering the city.

Yugoslavia has preserved most of its past and keeps many old traditions, but its people appear to be its real strength.

The secret of Parallel Petroleum's success is ...

Is there any parallel between the fact Frank Delay knows how to say 'no', and his company, Parallel Petroleum, has operating income in excess of overhead and no debt?

Delay, president and chief executive officer of the oil and gas firm, would like to think so.

"Sometimes you can fall in love with a prospect," he says. "Rome wasn't built in a day, and I just want to be sure we stay in business and have a minimum financial exposure.

"Don't get the impression I'm a 'no man' any more than I'm a 'yes man.' Drilling for oil and gas is a gamble no matter how you look at it."

His young partner, Larry Oldham, vice president and finance man, definitely thinks saying no is the key to Parallel's survival and growth. (The company is looking seriously at acquiring an out-of-state independent with like cash flow and reserves.).

"HE (DELAY) is the guy who says no. We bring him the prospect, run the numbers, and he has the final say so," Oldham says.

"It's one thing to find oil — but a lot of the time, that's when you start to spend money."

Delay's belief in minimizing the company's risk on any one well or prospect and operating only on cash flow has apparently rubbed off on Oldham.

Because Delay believes in what he calls a conservative, mature approach to the business, and because he has been in accounting or finances all his life, Parallel has adopted the successful efforts method of accounting where dry holes and other exploration costs are charged to expenses.

Most new companies adopt other methods so their balance sheet looks better sooner, at least in the eyes of shareholders.

BECAUSE OF the successful efforts method, the company showed a loss in 1982 of $641,854. Of the $2.25 million Parallel has spent on drilling activity since its inception, 70 percent of that amount, or $1.58 million, is reflected on the balance sheet as producing oil and gas properties.

"Let me say this: if we had not used this method, we would not have shown a loss," Delay says. "But this more closely parallels tax reporting requirements and more fully describes the real world."

The balance sheet at the end of April 30 of this year showed net income of $55,387, compared with a net loss in the same period a year earlier of $208,985.

Delay prefers to look at the figures from a longer term vantage point, however — from the company's inception in 1979, when there was $10,000 capital and little else.

HE LOOKS at the numbers this way because he says it gives a better indication of where he's been and where he's going. "If I don't like the results, then I can change," he says.

For example, since Parallel really got rolling in 1980, gains of $730,339 from selling leasehold interests have topped dry hole and abandonment costs by $52,084.

The company's tactic is to generate a prospect for drilling, turn it over to an industry partner, retain a back-in or overriding royalty interest of some kind and then "just get out of their way," as Oldham puts it.

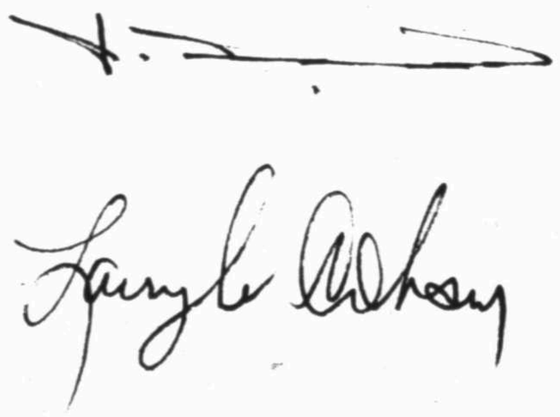

"We lay out 75 percent of it and keep a quarter, or we'll merely keep an override and go on to the next prospect."

In this way, Parallel has a stake in some interesting action around Borden, Dawson, Fisher, Nolan and Glasscock counties, and at what Oldham recently told shareholders is an "undisclosed" location which, if it pays out, will be materially signifcant to the company.

SOMETIMES PARALLEL operates a well itself, especially if it's a shallow one. It retained a 50 percent working interest at the undisclosed location, he added.

Since drilling funds are more difficult to flush from the bushes these days, larger companies are more often turning deals to smaller industry partners themselves. "We get better farm-outs now because money is tight," Oldham adds.

At Dec. 31, 1982, Parallel reported oil production at 12,233 barrels, versus 3,998 a year earlier. Gas production was 27,751 million cubic feet, compared to 6,529 MCF.

In the oil and gas business for 34 years, albeit in the financial arena only, Delay worked for British Petroleum, Signal Oil Company, Richfield Company, Coastal States, Dorchester Gas and others.

He and Oldham got together in the summer of 1979 and worked nights and weekends to create Parallel "while otherwise employed."

DELAY SAYS now, with a laugh, that he wanted to do it for this reason: "I've been sold out, merged out and thrown out — the only security you'll ever have is to create your own company."

He is quite proud of how Parallel started. Within 35 days of initial registration in March 1980, he had sold 32 individuals, mostly Midland oil and gas people, on putting up $1 million to get the game started.

Later that year, in November, he and Oldham closed a public stock offering on the Denver penny market to raise another $3 million.

Parallel was involved in its first well in the first quarter of 1981.

"Timing is everything," concedes Oldham. "The equity window is only open for a short time. The market for new oil and gas issues evaporated by the second quarter of 1982."

SINCE THEN, Parallel has tried to wean itself away from its image as "one of those Denver penny stocks," Delay says. Shareholders approved a one-for-ten reverse stock split last August. Before that, the company had 37.5 million shares outstanding, "which is pretty unmanageable," as Delay puts it.

Oldham adds: "Also, anything we do now will have a more material affect on each individual shareholder." He calls the move a "corporate clean-up."

Delay monitors the stock closely and notes that 65 percent of it is in Texas hands, although there are shareholders in all 50 states and four foreign countries.

"Every now and then, we are so grateful," Delay says, putting out another cigarette in his ashtray. "The people we owe the most to are local people who were in on the private placement initially. All we had then was our bare face and a business plan or idea."

During the company's first two years, it has raised an additional $14.8 million from founding shareholders, industry partners and joint venturers.

"IN THIS business, you get to know who's who and who ain't," he says with a laugh.

Most of the original 32 stockholders are still with Parallel, "keeping it in the family," he notes. Many lend their time and advice, their "learning curve" as Oldham calls it, to the company, which now has just five or six employees.

In addition, Parallel provides two independent geologists with office space in exchange for the privilege of having first look at whatever they develop.

When the company grows large enough, it will hire more people, Delay says.

And, growing is the definite goal.

PARALLEL HAS approached the major shareholders of a similarly-sized oil firm from out of state. Delay will not give details, except to say it's a public firm which would compliment Parallel nicely.

Three times in the last four months Parallel was ready to borrow money to acquire oil and gas reserves, but each time, it and the seller were unable to agree on the value of the oil and gas in place. Delay says he will keep looking.

In the meantime, he is not too worried about the industry downturn.

"This business is a risk because, even if you have the best prospects generated by the highest technology, you are still going to get dry holes.

"Our industry partners understand this and they don't cry in their beer. They just say 'That's too bad,' and go on."

SBI examines alcoholism insurance coverage

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Board of Insurance is surveying group health insurers and related operations to determine how the 1981 law on coverage of alcoholism and drug dependency is performing.

Some 1,300 insurers, health maintenance organizations and hospital service plans are being sent questionnaires, which should be returned to SBI by July 15.

The law providing for offering such coverage took effect Jan. 1, 1982. It requires group health insurers to offer coverage and benefits "not less favorable" than for treatment of illnesses generally.

However, there is no requirement that anyone buy the package.

The information being sought is on policies in force for calendar 1982.

Lawmakers have approved legislation providing for continuation of the State Securities Board under the "sunset" review process, after rejecting attempts to move Texas away from use of "merit regulation" to "full disclosure" in the regulation of securities.

Rep. Steve Wolens, D-Dallas, attempted to amend the bill (SB 106 by Sen. Ed Howard, D-Texarkana), to move the board to the "full disclosure" standard, but opponents warned the change could result in Texas becoming a "dumping ground" for questionable stock issues.

Wolens argued the current standard is too restrictive, and makes it too difficult for new companies to obtain venture capital.

At a time when Texas should be encouraging high-technology firms, Wolens argued, the current standard prevents such firms from qualifying issues in Texas — when they can do so in other states.

Gov. Mark White has named Ralph Donald Reed, College Station, to the Texas Finance commission for a term ending Feb. 1, 1989.

Reed, 35, is executive vice president of Brazos Savings Association, and holds a master's degree from Texas A&M University.

Reed replaces Michael Lallinger, Houston, whose term expired.

• • •

State Board of Insurance has set a hearing for 9 a.m., June 23, to consider revisions in the personal auto insurance policy, which have been recommended by an advisory committee.

The changes, SBI reports, are intended to eliminate "flaws" which have emerged from using the policy over the past two years.

Committee members reported there has been "substantial misunderstanding" about property damage coverage on non-owned autos — as to whether such coverage is "excess over collision" on non-owned vehicles.

The hearing will be held in the DeWitt Greer State Office Building (Department of Highways and Public Transportation) if the auditorium is available.

The Legislature has passed a proposed constitutional amendment providing that State-chartered banks have the same "rights and privileges" which are given, or which may be given, to National banks.

The bill will be submitted to voters November 6, 1984.

The sponsors say the proposal is supported by State and National banks in Texas and is intended to help assure continuation of the dual banking system in the state.

One area of concern has been that Federal officials could grant branching privileges to National banks — while State-chartered banks would remain under the Texas Constitution's provision which prohibits branch banking.

• • •

Gov. White named Ada Williams, Dallas, to the Texas Credit Union Commission for a term ending Feb. 15, 1985.

Williams attended undergraduate school at Huston-Tillotson College, Austin, and received her master's degree from North Texas State University.

She replaces Velma Brooks, Dallas, whose appointment was rejected by the Senate.

• • •

National Council on Compensation Insurance has approved tentative revisions on its simplified worker's compensation policy to meet objections raised in Texas.

The Texas Classification and Rating Subcommittee asked for revisions in the policy (intended for use nationwide) regarding "dual capacity" and "consequential bodily injury."

A third change being considered is removal of the disease time limitation. NCCI delayed planned implementation of the policy earlier, after a number of states indicated they cound not implement it this year.

Index futures feature great thrills

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

First there were roller coasters, Star Wars movies, and video games. Now, similarly featuring great thrills and a voracious appetite for pocket money, there are stock-index futures.

Because they offer speculators and other traders a way to make stock-market plays with the quickness and financial potency traditionally associated with commodity trading, stock-index futures are emerging as the newest, wildest, and some say strangest ride to sweep the nation's financial community. Perhaps inevitably, they have also earned the label of "pin-striped pork-bellies."

They have also earned a place in history as the fastest-growing new contracts ever offered for sale on a commodities exchange.

Before index futures, the most popular contracts ever offered by the Chicago Mercantile Exchange were the U.S. Treasury Bill futures, which reached a volume of 1 million contracts traded about three years after they were introduced in January 1976. The "Merc's" future on the widely known Standard & Poor's index of 500 blue-chip stocks was first traded April 21, 1982, and reached the 1 million mark within four months.

In March, average daily index volume on the three exchanges trading index futures — the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the New York Futures Exchange, and the Kansas City Board of Trade — exceeded that of equivalent shares in the stock market itself.

Futures contracts are essentially commitments by a buyer to purchase the underlying commodity some months in advance at a price set today. A buyer of June pork bellies, for example, can set the price today by which he will purchase a carload of raw bacon later.

Stock-index futures are based not on the price of some marketable commodity, but on the price of a hypothetical portfolio of stock, expressed by any one of three major indexes of which the Standard & Poor's index of 500 stocks is perhaps the most familiar.

That allows stock traders to hedge, or set a value on their portfolio today against possible adverse moves tomorrow. If the S&P 500 index is at 150 points today, for example, and the owner of $500,000 worth of stock fears it will fall to 100 in the next few months, he can use index futures to lock his portfolio's value at the equivalent of 150. He will not lose as much value if the market indeed declines, but the penalty he pays is that he will not earn as much from a rise in the stock market as he would have if he never bought or sold a future.

The risk our stockowner has sold off has to go somewhere, and that is where speculators come in. Those are traders who are eager to accept risk (in the hope, of course, that the risk will pay off in a big profit), and thus buy the risk that other investors want to unload. Hedgers and speculators, in simple terms, sit at the opposite seats of the index futures seesaw.

"It's a dream product to play the market," said Peter Stubben, a former Peace Corps volunteer who now trades as a "scalper" — a speculator attempting to profit from nearly constant trading every day — on the frenetic New York Futures Exchange, or NYFE, where many former stock traders are hawking a futures contract based on the New York Stock Exchange composite index of 1,522 stocks.

LLoyds 'heavily involved' in Olypics

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Lloyd's of London is "heavily involved" in insuring that the 1984 Olympic Games will come off as planned in Los Angeles, with total coverage estimated to amount to hundreds of millions of dollars, the syndicate's chairman said Thursday.

"I don't think it's in the billions yet," Lloyd's Chairman Sir Peter Green said in an interview.

Lloyd's, the venerable English insurance market named after the coffee house where it was founded in 1688, is insuring against "abandonment of the games in whole or part for any cause." That could include, Green said, anything from an earthquake that levels the city — which Lloyd's considers a very real risk — to a boycott by Eastern Bloc countries.

The policy holders range from television networks "down to the fellow who sells Olympics T-shirts ... because if there's no Olympics, he can't sell his T-shirts, can he?" Green said. Lloyd's provided similar coverage for the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow, and ended up paying $78.3 million to NBC when the U.S. Olympics team failed to participate.

The official insurance company of the 1984 games is San Francisco-based Transamerica Corp., which will handle, among other things, the more mundane insurance of Olympic sites, plus health and workman's compensation plans.

Lloyd's puts together insurance and reinsurance syndicates around the world, thereby spreading the risk of its sometimes unusual policies. About half of Lloyd's business is done in the United States, and a major reason for Green's U.S. visit was to investigate rumors that U.S. insurers were worried about the security behind Lloyd's policies following a series of reinsurance scandals that rocked the insurance exchange last year.

But apparently no one was worried. "Everybody we have talked to ... has expressed absolutely no concern whatsoever," Green said.

The scandals involved some of Lloyd's underwriters who were accused of secretly diverting money to offshore companies they controlled. As part of a series of moves to set the situation straight, an outsider, Ian Hay Davison, was appointed chief executive in January. The former Arthur Anderson senior partner promised "far-reaching changes," including increased disclosure.

"I think what has happened with Lloyd's is that up until 10 years ago it really was not a terribly big place and those who worked in the market — by gossip, surmise, the ability to read upside down, and very long ears — were pretty much aware of what was going on, and that was self-regulation," Green said. He added that as Lloyd's grew and the industry became more complicated, this informal self-regulation began to break down.

Green said Lloyd's now is requiring more disclosure, but to Lloyd's itself and its investors rather than to the general public.

Simple question stumps executives

From Wire Reports

If your supervisor's boss invites you to lunch, what do you do when you return? Give your boss a detailed report of the conversation, say nothing or just mention the lunch casually?

That question stumped 30 percent of 200 executives taking a new multiple-choice test produced by Communispond Inc., a New York-based management consultant company, which is designed to measure an executive's skills in handling office problems. The self-scoring test, titled "How Well Do You Communicate," is available free to executives.

Questions cover situations ranging from what should you do if your boss makes an inaccurate statement at a meeting with a customer to the proper response to a writer who quotes you accurately in an article.

Communispond says 70 percent of the 200 executives who initially took the test scored above the passing grade of 55 out of a possible 100 points. The top score was 83.

Making Midland A Better Hometown
THE WAITING GAME

Are you waiting for housing costs to drop and interest rates to settle lower before you buy a home? If you are, you may be living at your same address for the rest of your life. The factors that determine the cost of housing-availability and demand-haven't gone down for 30 years and there's no reason to believe they'll start dropping now.

Beware of the mental trap of waiting until your income increases so that you will have enough money to buy the house you "really" want. The financial gap may get wider rather than narrower. For example, during the last ten years, family incomes increased 83% while home prices moved ahead at a wider 124%.

If you've been wondering when the best time might be to buy a home, the answer is simple: As soon as possible. Many homes bought ten years ago for around $50,000 are worth close to $120,000 today. The fact is, the sooner you invest in a home, the better are your chances of coming out ahead on that investment.

American workers' productivity higher

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Productivity among American workers is on the rise, a development economists say could help businesses rebuild profits without rekindling double-digit inflation.

The Labor Department said this past week that productivity, as measured by output for each hour worked in non-farm businesses, rose at an annual rate of 4.7 percent in the first three months of the year compared with 0.4 percent growth in the final quarter of 1982 and no growth at all for all of last year. Among factory workers, productivity rose 8.3 percent in the first quarter against 1 percent over the previous three months.

Rapid growth in productivity is typical in the early stages of an economic recovery, and strong improvements are also expected in the current quarter, said Burton Zwick, a vice president and economist at Prudential Insurance Co. of America.

With factories running well below capacity as a result of two recessions since 1980, employers can step up production without recalling laid off workers, thereby increasing output without raising labor costs.

"Productivity gains help improve profits," said Zwick, "It enables corporations to recoup."

There is a lot of lost ground to recover.

After-tax corporate profit fell 4.6 percent in the first quarter of the year following a 22.4 percent slide in all of 1982.

While the economy is now showing signs of growth, "jobs will still be expanding more slowly than overall output, thus contributing to another sizeable rise in productivity in the current quarter," Maury Harris, a vice president and senior economist at Paine Webber Inc., said in a recent report.

Paine Webber recently revised its estimate for economic growth upward by two percentage points to 6.9 percent for the April-June quarter. That compares with a subpar 2.5 percent rate of increase in the gross national product recorded in the first three months of the year.

Many analysts are predicting a surge in corporate earnings this year, and Zwick said the typical estimate is for 30 percent growth.

But some economists are questioning the optimism.

The combination of sluggish earnings and lackluster growth of the economy in the first quarter, a period of improved productivity, "raise the implication of a less rapid rise in profitability," said Gordon Richards, director of economic analysis at the National Association of Manufacturers.

He attributed the rapid growth in productivity to the persistent double-digit unemployment rate and said it is too early to say if the productivity gains will be sustained.

But Richards added that the high level of unemployment continues to hold down wage gains, and predicted low rates of inflation "well into 1984."

Zwick also said the slowdown in the growth of labor costs is helping contain inflation, but added the improved business climate will enable producers to raise prices for their products.

The Labor Department reported this past week that consumer prices rose 0.6 percent in April, the sharpest monthly rise in nine months. Much of the increase reflected a 4 percent jump in gasoline prices as a nickel-a-gallon increase in federal gasoline taxes took effect.

In other business and economic developments this past week:

—The Labor Department said average weekly earnings rose an inflation-adjusted 0.7 percent in April, the fifth increase in the past six months. The growth in earnings raised hopes for stepped up consumer spending, something economists say is a key ingredient for a sustained recovery.

—The National Association of Realtors, a real estate trade organization, said sales of previously owned homes increased by 1.5 percent in April to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 2.8 million, the highest level since December 1980. Relatively stable home prices and falling interest rates on home mortgages have helped revive sagging housing sales.

—Congress passed, and President Reagan signed into law, a bill raising the national debt limit by nearly $99 billion to a record high $1.389 trillion. The Treasury said government spending exceeded revenue by $3.31 billion in April, rolling up the first deficit since 1964 for the month when personal income taxes payments are due. For the first seven months of the fiscal year, the deficit has grown to $132.53 billion, well above the record $110.7 billion for all of the previous fiscal year.

—The nation's five leading automakers said sales slipped 2.6 percent in mid-May from the same 10-day period last year, reflecting a 14.3 percent slide in sales by General Motors Corp. Analysts said the industry's performance remained strong. Ward's Automotive Reports, an industry trade publication, said production so far this year totals 2.6 million cars, up 25 percent from a year ago.

—The Labor Department said 453,000 Americans filed first-time claims for unemployment benefits in the week ended May 14, down 30,000 from the previous week's seasonally adjusted level and the lowest level of applications since September 1981. But some businesses continue to add to the rolls of the unemployed. The Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Group announced plans to reduce its work force by 2,200 people as of next Friday, its largest layoff ever. The furlough plans reflect a slump in the commercial airline industry, the division of United Technologies Corp. said.

—The Federal Communications Commission approved a new licensing plan that could allow more than 1,000 new FM radio stations to operate across the country. More than 3,400 commercial FM stations already are on the air in addition to nearly 1,100 non-commercial stations. The FCC said it may be next year before the commission is ready to accept applications for the new stations.

—W.T. Grimm & Co., a private merger consultant firm, said merger and acquisition activity fell for the third consecutive quarter during the first three months of 1983, dropping to the lowest level since the fourth quarter of 1980. Grimm said net mergers and acquisitions slid 11 percent in the first quarter to 540 from 604 a year earlier and that no hostile takeovers were recorded.

Craddick's oil lien bill to Governor

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bill sponsored by Midland Rep. Tom Craddick allowing oil and gas producers and royalty owners to retain a security interest in their producjtion after initial sale has passed the Senate on a voice vote.

HB 846, which now goes to Gov. Mark White for consideration, provides that an interest owner has a "continuing purchase money security interest in and a lien on" such production — and the proceeds from the sale of such production by the first purchaser — until "the purchase price, royalty owed to the state, and taxes have been paid to the person entitled to recieve those payments."

Senate sponsor John Montford (D-Lubbock) introduced an amendment on the Senate floor defining the concept of "first purchaser." The amendment was passed without debate.

The bill has been endorsed by the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association.

HB 846 also sets out provisions regarding termination of liens in cases where disputes arise, the manner of perfecting and enforcing liens and related matters.

IPAA stands against oil taxes

SEATTLE (SWN) — The Independent Petroleum Association of America said Friday in a resolution coming out of its mid-year meeting in Seattle that any tax on imported oil would likely result in a simultaneous increase in taxes on domestic crude oil production.

The IPAA, a national trade association representing America's 15,000 independent oil and natural gas producers, said that tax measures should not be employed because "all proposed forms of an import fee carry the probability of significant market distortions."

"Such distortions," the IPAA said in its formal resolution on the issue, "result in artificial entitlement and allocation programs which only compound rather than solve the problems."

The trade association noted, however, that "protecting the economy and national security against an overabundance of foreign produced energy is in the national interest."

"Actions to prevent such overabundance are a legitimate concern of the federal government, warranting under certain circumstances intervention in the marketplace. However, policies and actions by the federal government in this area should not involve use of tax measures," the resolution stated.

The IPAA said that "imposition of any tax on imported crude is unlikely to be accomplished without some increase in tax on domestic production. And any increase taxes on domestic production, for whatever reason, will be counterproductive, reducing both future domestic production and general economic activity. Such actions will in the long term increase rather than reduce dependence on imported energy."

In a study of the issue the IPAA tax committee noted that "it cannot be assumed that a $5 per barrel import fee would translate to a $5 gain in the domestic price. What may well occur could be a marginal gain in the domestic price which after windfall taxes would be next to meaningless."

Where Your Money Makes A Difference

Mutuals booming, investors enthusiastic

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Sales of mutual funds are booming, and stock-market investors are responding to the news with an enthusiasm reminiscent of the go-go years in the 1960s.

The Investment Company Institute, a mutual-fund trade group, reported this past week that a record $4.7 billion in shares of long-term mutual funds was sold in April, topping the previous peak of $3.7 billion set in March.

After only four months this year, fund sales stood at $14.4 billion, and were closing in fast on the yearly record of $15.7 billion set in 1982.

The way many stock traders see it, these numbers provide powerful support for a bullish view of the market outlook.

For one thing, they signal the kind of appetite for stocks among small investors that can help sustain a bull market. More specifically, they mean the mutual funds themselves are inundated with money that they must invest somewhere. Since many of these funds specialize in stocks, it is logical to assume that a lot of the money is destined for the market.

"There is no doubt that the enormous money going into equity funds has been a big, perhaps even the biggest, factor in the market's advance this year," said Newton Zinder, analyst at E.F. Hutton & Co. It has, he said, "more than offset the increased supply of stocks resulting from heavy equity offerings and insider sales."

Zinder pointed out that the latest data showed the funds with 9.7 percent of their assets in cash and equivalents, including short-term money market securities. "This was only slightly below the reading at the end of March," he said. "Thus these funds should continue to be an important source of demand."

When the fund figures were issued on Wednesday, they touched off a flurry of buying that helped carry stock prices to a solid gain for the week.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, after flirting briefly with the all-time closing high of 1,232.59 it reached on May 6, settled for a 26.12-point gain at 1,216.14.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index, up 1.52 at 95.23, and the American Stock Exchange market value index, up 13.77 at 463.38, both touched new highs.

Big Board volume averaged 97.43 million shares a day, against 82.39 million the week before.

One big stimulus to fund sales has been Individual Retirement Accounts, which were made available to all working Americans for the first time last year. The Investment Company Institute said new IRA accounts were responsible for about $1 billion worth of April's sales alone.

Another trade group, the No-Load Mutual Fund Association, said a survey of its members underscored that point.

In the first quarter of 1982, the association said, about three of four fund IRA accounts were directed into money-market funds. In the first three months of this year, about three of every four went into funds that invest in stocks.

"For the foreseeable future, we see this trend continuing," declared Marshall Front, president of the no-load association.

As Michael Weisberg, an analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities, pointed out, "the flow of cash into mutual funds is not only going heavily into growth funds in general, but is heavily targeted toward smaller aggressive growth funds."

Some observers, he acknowledged, see this as a potential danger signal — one of several indications lately that speculative enthusiasm has risen, possibly to excessive levels. Optimists argue, on the other hand, that investors are rightly flocking to a new generation of young growth companies in high-technology and other fields.

Weisberg concluded in a recent report, "Given the early stage of the economic recovery, we would choose the latter alternative."

Good ol' Smitty isn't what he used to be

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Used to be, a motorist would pull into the corner service station and Smitty, the grease-stained pump-jockey, would come out from under the car he was working on to fill the customer's order of "wipe the windows, check the oil and gimme a dollar's worth of gas."

Today Smitty more often than not sits clean and comfortable in a kiosk that's surrounded by a dozen or more gas pumps. He's often selling bread, milk and cigarettes while making change for the customer who has just wiped his own window, checked his own oil and pumped his own gas.

Spiraling increases in prices, flattened gasoline demand, changes in driving habits, new technologies and evolving market strategies in the past decade have wrought profound changes in the way gasoline is sold, and oil industry officials and analysts say more changes are down the road.

The driver setting out for a long-distance trip this summer is likely to encounter such new gasoline-buying experiences as 7-Eleven convenience stores with gas pumps out front, and electronic pumps that dispense gasoline and automatically bill the purchase to the customer's credit card or bank account.

Motorists can't expect always to find a favorite brand of gasoline on that cross-country trip, either. Rising costs and falling market shares have caused most major oil companies to stop selling gasoline in some regions.

Meanwhile, the number of service stations continues to dwindle: from 290,000 at the industry's peak in 1970, the number has shrunk to 185,000 as the changes in the industry have forced many stations to close up shop.

That shakeout was necessary and overdue, according to industry officials. "There were just too doggone many service stations," said Ron Hall, senior vice president for marketing at Gulf Oil Corp., who added that the shakeout "is good for everybody, and it's got to continue."

The changes in gasoline marketing also reflect a change in philosophy at the oil companies, which once saw gasoline retailing as a way to get rid of a petroleum product that wasn't as profitable as many of the others that came from a barrel of crude oil.

Advertising, sales promotions and games of the 1960s notwithstanding, the kind of aggressive marketing that is going on now is a relatively new development as spiraling prices and increased competition have forced oil companies to reevaluate their gasoline-selling operations.

Perhaps the biggest development in gasoline marketing is self-service. More than two-thirds of the gasoline sold in the United States is pumped by motorists, up from 12 percent less than a decade ago.

Self-service pumps now are legal in every state except New Jersey and Oregon, and experts expect their percentage of the market to increase. Even though some motorists still will be willing to pay a premium for full service, self-service eventually is likely to be available at virtually every station in the country.

The principal reason is price. Self-service gas usually costs about 20 cents a gallon less than full-serve gas, and the American motorist, shocked by two price-spiking oil shortages in less than a decade, is sensitive to gasoline prices.

Customers also like the speed and convenience of pumping their own gas, moving in and out of a station in an average of 4 1-2 minutes, according to Shell Oil Co. studies, which also frees up the pumps faster for other customers, boosting volume and profits. Exxon Corp. found that, when it tested self-serve and full-service gasoline at the same price, most customers still drove to the self-service islands.

The popularity of self-service led to a new kind of gas-station design — the high-volume "pumpers," with a dozen or more pumps and a booth for the cashier.

Oil companies discovered that a location that once sold 50,000 gallons of gasoline a month through two or three pumps out in front of the repair bays could just as easily move three times that amount when turned over exclusively to gasoline pumping.

As a result, most of the stations built in the past few years, or on the drawing boards, are pumpers. And many of them are augmented with some other form of business-convenience stores, car washes or, in an ironic throwback to Smitty's corner service station, car-repair facilities.

"A piece of real estate that sells gasoline only is going to have a very difficult time competing in the marketplace," observed John Adkins, manager of retail services and advertising at Exxon USA, the domestic refining and marketing arm of Exxon Corp. "The more revenue streams you've got from a piece of property, the lower you can price your gasoline."

Although they once scorned them, virtually all oil companies now are experimenting with convenience-store gasoline stations — known as C-stores — such as Arco's AM-PM Mini-Markets. Selling bread, milk, sundries and other basic items in a small space, C-stores add revenue without significantly increasing overhead or labor costs.

"You almost get the gasoline portion of your labor free," said Gulf Oil's Hall.

In the most significant endorsement of the C-store concept, Southland Corp., owner of the huge 7-Eleven chain, is spending more than $1 billion to purchase the refining and marketing operations of Cities Service Co.

That purchase is from Occidental Petroleum Corp.

The acquisition will guarantee Southland a gasoline supply for the 2,800 7-Eleven stores already selling gasoline, as well as allow expansion. Gasoline already accounts for about 25 percent of total 7-Eleven sales.

Oil companies also are adding car washes to stations as low-cost revenue producers. And in the past couple of years there has been a trend toward adding service bays to new stations, allaying fears that the self-service, high-volume pumpers would make auto-repair outlets extinct.

The oil industry argued that the proliferation of specialized car-repair operations — muffler and transmission shops, for instance — was reducing the need for service bays at gas stations. In addition, many gas-station geease-monkeys weren't particularly good mechanics, industry officials concede. "That's an area, no matter how hard we tried, the oil industry didn't do a very good job in," Hall said.

But in its search for additional revenue for the new self-service stations, the industry is returning to the car-repair business — and trying to beat the specialized shops at their own game. The new stations that include car-care facilities feature highly trained mechanics and expensive, high-technology diagnostic equipment.

"There's no reason in my mind that you can't run the service facility and still sell a lot of gasoline if you do it properly," said William J. Bittles Jr., vice president of retail sales for Shell Oil Co.

Technology also is changing the way gasoline is sold. The electronic digital gas pumps that seem light years away from the old clicking mechanical pumps are just a precursor.

Test marketing already has begun in some areas on pumps that dispense gasoline when a customer inserts a credit card. Further down the road is the use of debit cards, similar to bank-machine cards, that will take the cost of a fill-up directly out of a customer's bank account.

"I think that's coming very fast," Adkins said. "The customer can come in, put his credit card in, get his gasoline and never see a human soul."

"We're all looking toward gasoline stations being more and more automated," said Richard R. Dickinson, senior vice president of marketing and transportation at Texaco USA, Texaco Inc.'s gasoline-marketing division. "If you look at the long-term future of the gasoline station, some type of card is going to be very important."

In another phase of their strategy oil companies are sounding retreat. Companies once strove for some semblance of national coverage for their gasoline brand, but most now have pulled back to concentrate on particularly profitable regions.

The timing of these retrenchments has coincided with the lifting of government controls on gasoline sales, including requirements that companies hold to traditional marketing patterns. But the withdrawals reflect basic market realities.

For years, the gasoline industry could count on remarkably steady growth in sales, which fueled the construction of more and more service stations. But that growth stopped with the 1973 oil embargo and the run-up in prices that ensued over the next decade.

With the reduced number of stations, higher prices and changed driving habits, the amount of gasoline being sold today is little changed from a decade ago.

"You could count on gasoline (consumption) going up 2 to 4 percent a year," recalled Exxon's Adkins. "The pie was getting bigger and bigger for everyone to split."

Now, however, the pie is shrinking, so companies have left markets that were not profitable, or marginally so. "We've gotten out of those sections of the country where we had basically small market share, high transportation costs, high distribution costs," Dickinson of Texaco explained. "There's kind of a minimum market share — if you don't have somewhere around 10 percent as a market share, you're at kind of a disadvantage."

Because many major metropolitan areas are near refineries and offer a lot of sales potential, they have been affected less by the withdrawals than have many rural areas.

Customers in upstate New York have been particularly hard hit. Citing high costs and low market shares, Gulf, Amoco, BP, Shell, Texaco and Exxon have pulled out of the area.

Tipperary Corp. completes well in Louisiana

Tipperary Corporation announced the completion of its No. 1 Henry Bango well in Caddo Parish, Louisiana, as a Pettit oil discovery.

The well had a pumping potential of 55 barrels of oil and 30 barrels of water per day through perforations from 5,650 to 5,655 feet.

Tipperary is the operator and owns a 45 percent interest in the well and has varying interests from 15 to 31.5 percent in the surrounding 6,000 acres.

Louisiana Land and Exploration Company has a 38.25 percent interest in the well and the surrounding acreage. There are five possible development locations on the prospect.

"When I started in the tire business, I needed a bank that would stay with me. Texas American Bank has for 20 years."

Don Flatt, Executive Vice President

Bill Williams, President, Owner, Bill Williams Tire Center

When Bill Williams started banking at Texas American Bank back in 1963, he had ideas of starting his own tire business. He needed a bank that would start with him and stay with him.

Now Bill is president of both Bill Williams Tire Center, a B.F. Goodrich dealership, and West Texas Bandag Recapping, Inc., a tire recapping business serving the trucking industry.

Over the years Texas American has worked closely with Bill to meet the financial needs of his growing business. This long-standing relationship continues today with Don Flatt, Executive Vice President and Manager of Our Commercial Lending Division.

Bill stayed with the tire business and came out a winner. Staying with winners is what makes Texas American a great bank.

Let's talk business.

Leaders want President's support for plan

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — America's education and corporate leaders want President Reagan to support a new national program aimed at restoring the country's ability to compete with other industrial nations.

The call by the task force of the Business-Higher Education Forum, suggesting changes in trade, taxation, investment and educational policies to solve "deep-rooted and structural economic problems," will hit a responsive cord in Congress considering how best to invest tax dollars to meet the challenge of international competition.

The task force recommended the easing of anti-trust laws which would allow companies to cooperate in sponsoring basic research, suggested further reductions in the capital gains tax on long-term investments, and proposed federal loans for graduate engineering students who agree to become teachers.

In its recent report, the panel also urged additional tax incentives for investment in productive plant, equipment and technology, proposed longer patent terms, recommended additional support for the public and private sectors to train secondary school science and math teachers, and a suggested a national displaced worker program that would be modeled after the G.I. Bill.

The suggestion by the Forum, affiliated with the American Council on Education and made up of chairmen, presidents and chief executive officers of major U.S. corporations and universities, was made at the time Congress is looking at such proposed bills as the American Defense Education Act, Education for Economic Security Act, Emergency Mathematics and Science Education Act, and Economic Security Act.

Though the bill titles sound like a call for major action to save the nation from a disaster, their primary mission is simple. The proposed measures are designed to upgrade math and science education which most everybody in the country insists is in a terrible shape.

The House passed in March the Emergency Mathematics and Science Education Act calling for $425 million in fiscal 1984 to improve the teaching of mathematics, science and foreign language programs. A Senate Education Committee approved last month the Education for Economic Security Act authorizing $800 million for fiscal 1984 and 1985.

The bills are being enacted, Sen. Lawton Chiles, D.-Fla., said, to renew the nation's commitment to quality education.

He added:"The U.S. should never have abandoned the post-Sputnik emphasis on supporting improvement and innovation in math and science education. We are paying the price for our shortsightedness. And if we do not act quickly and effectively...we are going to pay a much higher price."

In a letter to Reagan, the task force warned that "unless the U.S. improves its ability to compete, unless we develop a comprehensive, coherent, long-term approach, and unless we rebuild our economy and strengthen our eductional system, it will be increasingly difficult — if not impossible — to maintain a just society, a high standard of living for all Americans and a strong national defense."

SHORTAGE OF ENGINEERS

The nuclear industry faces a shortage of 20,000 engineers qualified for nuclear generating plants over the next 10 years, according to a "Power Engineering" magazine. The publication claims that the shortage can be traced to a "questionable perception among students that the nuclear industry is dead."

The April issue of "Mechanical Engineering" magazine claims engineers and scientists in the U.S. are losing out on a valuable resource by not taking full advantage of technology developed in the Soviet Union. An article says that "not only are new Russian books not abstracted or even listed in American publications, but most of them are not available even in the Library of Congress."

CARIBBEAN BASIN INITIATIVE

The House Ways and Means Committee will hold a hearing June 9 on President Reagan's proposed Caribbean Basin Initiative (CBI) — a program of trade and tax incentives to promote economic development and greater stability in the Caribbean region. The legislation would establish a 12-year duty-free scheme for imports from qualifying Caribbean countries. The bill contains two important tax provisions: to rebate all excise taxes on imported rum to the treasuries of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and to permit a deduction for attendance at conventions held in a qualifying Caribbean country or Bermuda.

WOMEN-OWNED BUSINESSES

The Department of Housing and Urban Development is collecting the names of women-owned businesses in an effort to provide opportunities to the firms to become HUD contractors. HUD's Office of Small and Disadvantaged Business Utilization is the collecting agency. Especially sought are firms with expertise in the areas of housing maintenance, repair and management, survey research, financial and program audits, audio visual and graphics services, and automated data processesing services.

AIRPORT STUDY FLAWED

A government-sponsored study that recommends eliminating fire and rescue facilities at small and medium airports because of small number of flights is "seriously flawed and could lead to unnecessary loss of lives in airport accidents, according to comments submitted to the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) by the Air Line Pilots Association. The study was commissioned by the FAA to find ways to make rescue operations more efficient.

GSA AND BUSINESS

The General Services Administration (GSA) is seeking bids to provide overnight express small package delivery for government agencies from San Francisco, Los Angeles, Atlanta, Washington and Chicago to 24 cities. Bidding closes June 20. Contracts will be awarded Aug.5 and the test program, aimed at reducing costs and speeding delivery, will begin by Sept. 19. Among the 24 cities involved are Seattle, San Diego, Baltimore, Boston, and Detroit.

The GSA also has good news for commercial car rental companies. Effective Oct. 1, the agency plans to eliminate its fleet of 4,000 vehicles that federal officials can call on when they need a car. Instead, workers will have to turn to those rental companies which have signed contracts with GSA. The "dispatch" vehicles, primarily sedans and station wagons, are now available for short-term use from 140 motor pools around the country. Under the new procedure, employees will have to make their own arrangements to rent a vehicle for rates averaging $11 a day.

The government's housekeeping agency, the GSA, which in the past seven months has sold 122 parcel of surplus federal real estate for $27 million, has expanded its national sales promotion activities by experimenting with direct mail to reach more than 2,000 investmnt decision-makers at large and small financial services institutions, development firms, retailers, manufacturers, utilities and service industries. The agency will provide them regularly the monthly "U.S. Real Property Sales List" which describes each parcel to be offered for sale an announces when and how the property will be sold. Nearly 600 properties were in the GSA inventory on May 1 in various stages of disposal processing.

The GSA has also embarked on a 10-year plan to upgrade into more readily usable ferroalloys significant quantities of National Defense Stockpile managenese and chromite ores.

The presidentially directed project calls for processing about 1.2 million tons of manganese ore into 576,822 tons of high-carbon ferromanganese and 1.3 million tons of chromite ore into 518,000 tons of high-carbon ferrochromium. The cost of upgrading will run $40 million a year, excluding transportation. The GSA plans to award contracts fo upgrading the ores by competitive negotiation.

SHIPPING ACT BAD

Federal Trade Commission Chairman James C. Miller III thinks the proposed Shipping Act of 1983 "uses taxpayers' money to finance enforcement of a price-fixing enterprise." Miller told a recent House committee hearing that the bill "perpetuates the legitimacy and formal recognition of cartels." The proposed act is designd to streamline federal regulation of shipping industry and, in particular, its collective ratemaking procedures. Currently, shipping operators meet in conferences and collectively negotiate prices and other terms of operation, a process permissible under the Shipping Act of 1916.

HEAVY DUTY TRANSPORT

The Energy Department (DOE) is conducting a long-range research and development program to improve the fuel efficiency of heavy duty transport vehicles. The program's aim is to establish a prototype that will be available to industry for the design, development and production of advanced truck engines.

AROUND AND ABOUT

Each year four billion tons of hazardous materials ranging from gasoline to sulfuric acid are transported on the nation's highways and rails. How can their transport be made safer and more efficient? That question, along with recommendations for a national strategy for hazardous materials transport, will be the topics of a new report from a committee of the National Research Council's Transportation Research Board next week...The Defense Department and the Footwear Industries of America are sponsoring a military footwear symposium June 13 in Philadelphia...The Soviet Union's recent decison to renew negotiations on a long term grain agreement means it may once again become a major customer of U.S. grain. The subject will be discussed at a forum sponsored by the Food and Agriculture Policy Program Resources for the Future and the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry on June 6 at the Dirksen Office Building...Twenty-eight predominantly Black colleges have enriched their business education programs and increased student involvement in the small business community through a project funded by the Small Business Administration (SBA)...Linda Tedeschi, a California deputy attorney general since 1975, is the new director of the San Francisco Regional office of the Federal Trade Commission...Janice E. Wolfe, who has served in a number of SBA executive positions, has been named director of the Washington, D.C. district office of the Small Business Administration.

Uncle Sam tries to rustle up jobs

With school about to let out, companies are girding for a flood of applicants from students looking for a summer job. Unfortunately, those who need the money most are those who usually do not get hired — poor kids.

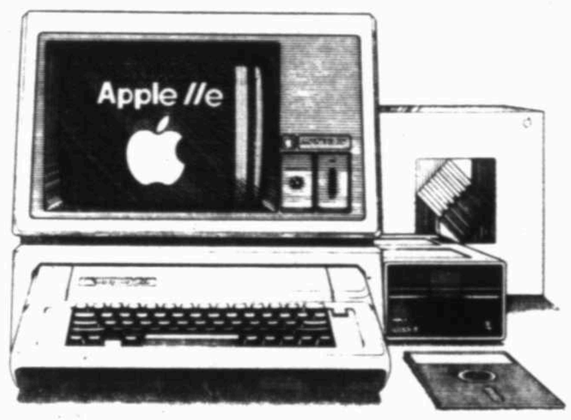

Uncle Sam is trying to remedy that situation this year with the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit Program that is designed to encourage hiring of economically disadvantaged youths by offering employers a special federal tax break.

Michael B. Sedgwick, partner-in-charge of taxes at the Los Angeles office of Ernst & Whinney, a Big 8 accounting concern, explains that the nationwide program will allow employers a credit on wages paid between May 1 and Sept. 15 to any needy youth who is 16 or 17 years old. To qualify, the youth must be unrelated to the employer and be a first-time employee of the company.

Sedgwick says an employer can claim an 85 percent tax credit on a maximum of $3,000 in wages earned by a needy youth. That translates into a $2,550 credit per qualified employee — which means the employer can do well by doing good.

Each state has its own rules for handling the program, Sedgwick says, so employers would be wise to check with their local state employment office.

First Quarter Mutual Fund Sales 1979-1983

(In Billions of Dollars)

Source: Investment Company Institute

Small investors are heading back to Wall Street — and picking mutual funds as the way to go. Sales of mutual funds for the first quarter in 1983 were $9.72 billion, close to four times the level of a year earlier — and six times what they were for the first quarter in 1979. The figures cover all types of mutual funds except for short-term funds. "Mutual fund shareholders have been participating fully in the strong stock and bond markets while reducing the risks of doing so as individual investors," said David Silver, president of the Investment Company Institute.

Cable industry has image problem

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

An Analysis

NEW YORK — At a time when the cable industry's program to wire America is at a critical juncture, the industry seems to have a growing problem with the material that cable brings to the screen.

Although a lot of attention throughout the cable business is focusing on the rising costs of building urban cable systems, and the difficulty of winning and living up to franchise agreements with large municipalities, some industry executives and others see increasing signs of the public's unwillingness to buy cable.

Not only do most cable companies fail miserably at sophisticated approaches to marketing their services, but the public seems to be wondering whether there is really anything there to sell.

For despite all the attention on cable, the dramatic expansion of local systems and a host of new services, cable is reaching about the same percentage of people with access to it as it did two years ago — 39 percent of the public. According to a study released here this week, only about 58 percent of the households who can take cable do so, a figure up only 3 percent since 1981.

The study, prepared by the advertising agency Benton & Bowles Inc., suggests even more ominously that the people who have rejected cable are even more negative about it than they were in 1981, when a similar survey was conducted.

Citing the cost of subscription and the fact that they don't need cable for improved reception, 84 percent of the so-called cable rejectors surveyed said they were unlikely to subscribe in the future, a figure up from 79 percent two years ago. And the total of "rejectors" who said they would definitely not subscribe rose from 38 percent two years ago to 43 percent in 1983.

Moreover, potential subscribers increasingly object to the programming content, particularly its suitability for children. Just over a third of those rejecting cable say they would not want their children to see some cable offerings, while 32 percent say they themselves object to cable, presumably its more risque, adult fare.

It is increasingly men interested in the added sports coverage cable offers and people wanting access to cable's pay television film products that are pulling in cable subscribers, according to the Benton & Bowles study. About 75 percent of the respondents in the study who signed up for cable in the past two years get at least one pay service.

That, too, is hardly good news for many in the cable business who had viewed the emerging medium as a way to focus programming and advertising on particular audiences, such as women at home during the day. An ABC-Hearst programming effort directed at just such an audience continues to struggle.

But the survey research only tells part of the story. CBS failed at advertiser-supported cable. The lofty, critically praised Entertainment Channel, an RCA-Rockefeller Center service recently failed embarassingly, losing at least $30 million despite Broadway shows, films and British Broadcasting Co. programming.

This recent subscriber to Manhattan Cable, perhaps the nation's most prestigious system because of the New York City audience it serves, has concluded that sports from three sources — ESPN, the Getty Oil station losing millions a month; USA Network, a hodgepodge of entertainment and sports, and Atlanta's WTBS — public affairs and news from Cable News Network and C-SPAN and occasional worthy movies and specials from Home Box Office are the only cable offerings able to pull the dial away from the magnet of network television. MTV's round-the-clock rock serves as background music, an attaction for wide-eyed out-of-town guests.

Much of the rest of it seems nonsensical. There's the round-the-clock weather and health channels, the local access bill of titillating talk and badly produced community discussion groups, and nonstop want ads for overpriced apartments and summer homes on Long Island. Most of it can barely be classified as either entertaining or informative.

That, then, is cable programming as it stands today. Only the country music of the Group W's Nashville Channel and the family fare of the Disney Channel are missing in Manhattan of the major advertiser-supported services, and Showtime and the Disney Channel are the major pay services missing from Time Inc.'s Manhattan Cable lineup.

Put it all together and what's left is, so far, a fairly disappointing picture.

As new cable systems in the big cities become increasingly important over the next year or two, cable's potential to expand television's and, in turn, its viewers' horizons will be sorely tested. The challenge for those hoping to make a buck in cable is to put something appealing on that wire.

Conspiracy theory just not in the cards

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

HOUSTON — If you fancy conspiracy theories and believe that the big oil companies move in lockstep against the consumer, consider the industry's policies on credit cards:

— Exxon Corp. and Amoco Oil Co. take credit cards or cash but charge customers 4 cents a gallon more for credit card purchases.

— Shell Oil Co. takes both but charges the same price to both credit-card and cash customers.

— Gulf Oil Co. used to charge a fee for credit-card purchases but now has the same price for both credit-card and cash sales of gasoline.

— Texaco Inc. charges its dealers a fee for credit-card sales but doesn't encourage them to pass it on to customers or to offer a discount for cash purchases.

— Atlantic Richfield Co. has done away with credit cards altogether and has slashed its prices as a result.

SO MUCH FOR unanimity. And every company is convinced that it's doing the right thing and, in some cases, has the numbers to prove it — even if they contradict those of a competitor. Arco, for instance, has seen its share of the nation's gasoline market soar from 3 1-2 percent at the end of 1981 to 5 1-4 percent currently, moving it into a strong fourth place among the nation's gasoline retailers. But Shell boasts that its policy of accepting any and all credit cards has gained it 2.5 million new credit-card customers.

"If you ask Arco, there's no question that you ought to go to cash only. If you ask Shell, there's no question that you ought to offer credit-card service at the same price," said John Adkins, retail service and advertising manager at Exxon USA, the marketing division of Exxon Corp. "If you ask me, you've got to give the customer a choice."

Adkins, echoing his competitors' attitudes about their differing strategies, added, "No question we've done the right thing."

About the only thing that the combatants in the great credit card vs. cash war can agree on is that it's far from decided. And it's providing a glimpse of the new competitiveness in gasoline marketing.

"School's still out," Ron Hall, senior vice president for marketing at Gulf Oil Corp., said of the controversy.

THE DEBATE turns on feelings toward credit-card customers. Those companies charging the same rate regardless of method of payment say they don't want to antagonize their credit-card customers by charging them more, even though it costs the companies more to process credit-card transactions.

"Our feeling is that the credit-card customer tends to resent paying more for his gasoline than a cash customer," said Richard R. Dickinson, senior vice president of marketing and transportation at Texaco Inc.'s gasoline marketing division, Texaco USA.

"If that's one of the strongest things we've got going for our marketing strategy, why debilitate it?" asked Hall, who added that Gulf's market research showed that its original strategy of charging differing prices was hurting its credit-card business.

But officials of Exxon and Amoco say that by offering a discount to cash customers, they've gained an edge in the price wars that have been raging at the gas pumps over the past year.

Nobody else in the business, however, has taken as radical a step as Arco; nobody else has had as striking results, and nobody else has anything too nice to say about Arco.

IT'S BEEN ABOUT a year since Arco announced plans to phase out credit cards and go solely to cash sales, and the results in increased market share seem to bear out the strategy.

But competitors gripe that Arco has slashed its prices far more than the savings from the dropping of credit cards — about 3 cents a gallon, by Arco's reckoning — would seem to justify. Competitors say that Arco is undercutting their prices by as much as 12 cents a gallon, and they're not sure how Arco is doing it.

"Arco has been super-competitive on pricing. They basically have bought large volume with very low pricing in the past year," said Dickinson. "The credit card was really a minor part."

"There's no way I can understand how they can reduce the price that much," said William J. Bittles Jr., vice president of retail sales at Shell Oil Co. "If we reduced the price 9 or 10 or 12 cents like Arco did, we'd be out of business tomorrow."

Arco, for its part, is cagey about how it's managed to undercut competitors by so much. Edward G. Reilly, the company's vice president of marketing, said that in addition to the 3-cent-a-gallon saving from termination of credit cards, the company also has passed on to dealers other price cuts he won't elaborate on.

BUT HIS competitors speculate that the company is wringing every possible price advantage out of its large supply of Alaskan crude oil, its comparatively limited marketing area (it's estimated that Arco does half its business in two states, Pennsylvania and California, leading to significant savings in transportation and marketing costs) and just plain aggressive marketing.

Arco can't stay away from plastic forever, though. As technology advances gasoline marketing, electronic pumps that read credit or debit cards to dispense gas to customers and then bill them probably will lead the company back into some sort of sales to card-holding customers, Reilly conceded.

Fifteen hundred of the company's stations already are equipped with "Arcomatic" gas pumps that can read credit or debit cards, installed before the company dropped credit cards, so a switch back to cards would not be difficult. Competitors think Arco's strategy could be to establish market share with the cash-only strategy, and then use the new card technology to exploit that market position.

"In the meantime, Big Oil is fragmented on the credit-card vs. cash question, increasing the choices for the motorist looking for a fill-up. "It's an accounting nightmare for the dealer," said Hall, "and I think it's confusing for the motorist."

Quit smoking with minimal effort

It is now possible to quit smoking and lose weight with an absolute minimun of effort. The key to modifying such behavior is very simple - you must learn to relax.

Frank McFarlin, registered hypnotherapist at The Behavioral Hypnosis Institute, explains that "both overeating and smoking habits are a result of stress."

To relieve stress, a person must begin by learning stress reduction techniques. "We have found that stress is always a key element in the retention of bad habits", explains Mr. McFarlin.

In all cases, the goal of stress reduction is to find the most effective way of reducing stress and eliminate the need to rely on such habits as smoking, overeating, bed wetting and fingernail biting.

This allows a client to realize there is little to no positive benefits attached with their respective habits. The subconscious mind must be persuaded that the habit causes only negative effects. Thus, the subconscious mind is able to give up the habit with a minimum of effort.

In essence, it is the suggestibility of the individual that makes it possible to modify poor behavior.

Frank McFarlin stresses that behavior modification can be achieved simply. Hypnosis is one means to achieve behavior motivation. McFarlin defines hypnosis simply as "effective communication with a person's subconscious or inner mind."

Although a deep hypnotic trance will bring forth a quicker response in desired results, McFarlin stresses that hypnosis is not an essential element to behavior modification. "We have found that a number of clients prefer that hypnosis is not used." Behavior motivation need not require formal hypnosis. The choice is up to you.

The Behavioral Hypnosis Institute offers as many behavioral modification programs as ther are needs for programs. Frank McFarlin has found a 94% success rate in modifying clients' overeating, smoking, nail biting, gambling, and work habits to name a few.

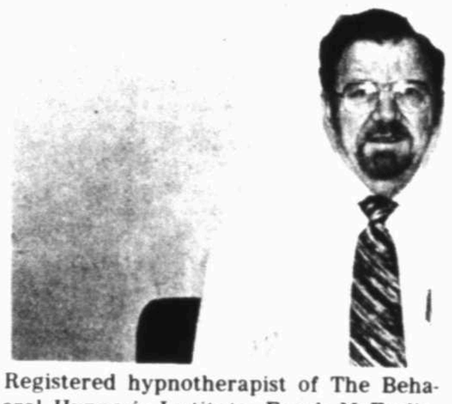

The smoking program is completed within four sessions. The client participates in a suggestibility questionnaire during the first session. This questionnaire determines either physical or emotional suggestibility. Deep breathing exercises and tapes teach the smoker to smoke less yet enjoy the smoking they do more.

Session two progresses to a thinking pattern of smoke less but not enjoy it as much. Step three brings the client to the realization that smoking no longer offers positive effects. The result - the smoking stops.

Session four, the final session, reinforces the modified behavior pattern. Once the habit is broken it is essential that the concepts that enabled a person to break the habit be locked-in.

Techniques such as "trigger desensitation" and "future pacing" are employed to prevent a reinitiating of the former bad habit.

Behavior modification is within the grasp of each and every individual. Hypnosis offers a simple, safe and effective solution to life crippling habits. For further information regarding behavioral motivation, call Frank McFarlin at The Behavior Hypnosis Institute at 694-5485. It can only change your life in a positve way.

Registered hypnotherapist of The Behavioral Hypnosis Institute, Frank McFarlin, defines hypnosis as simply "effective communication." Mr. McFarlin is located at 1031 Andrews Highway -The Western Building- in suite 110.

Pennyrich Bra Shop offers custom fitted bras

In 1950, Penny Rich designed the first pattented suspension basis bra. Today, 33 years later, the Pennyrich Bra and Lingerie Shop offers 300 different bra sizes in two suspension basis style bras. Sizes range from 26 jr.a to 46 ii. The Pennyrich custom-fitted bra allows comfort, support and a natural appearance.

Jo Smith, owner of Midland's Pennyrich shop, stresses the importance of a well fitting bra. She explains that certain breast diseases could be prevented if women learned to adequately support an protect their breasts. The custom-fitted Pennyrich bra provides good circulation, ample support and a comfortable fit.

The breast is composed of adipose tissue (fat), glandular epithelium, blood vessels, ducts, lymph vessels, supporting fibers and the covering skin. This is all superimposed upon the musculature of the chest wall. The breast, though, is on top of these muscles and is probably as soft and pliable as any tissue in the entire human body.

To protect this soft tissue, a women needs to wear a proper othopedic type bra that is custom fit to allow for proper support.

An ill-fitting bra displaces the breast tissue, often impeding circulation and even dividing the tissue of one breast into separate glandular masses.

The least a women should do if she values her health, is to give herself a monthly breast self-examination, checking for lumps and/or soreness. She should also wear an orthopedic type bra, such as Pennyrich's, to allow for proper support of delicate tissue. If proper nutrition and exercise are included, a women will have an adequate program.

Pennyrich Bra and Lingerie recognizes that breast size vary greatly due to heredity, age and diet. Jo Smith stocks 300 different bra sizes, serving women of all bust sizes. A size range of 26 jr.a to 46 ii serves the small busted woman as well as the woman with more than ample endowment of breast tissue.

Jobst prothesis and Camp masectomy bras are also available at Pennyrich. Appointments can be arranged for custom-fitting of these bras. All fittings are conducted to fufill your specific needs. Personal attention to each woman desiring a properly fitted bra strengthens the popularity of the Pennyrich Shop of Midland.

C.M. Cook, professor of physiology and anatomy, believes, "Every woman, from puberty on throughout life, should wear properly fitted, custom fitted bras, just as she should wear properly fitted shoes. This would help her not only look and feel her best, but to enjoy better health through a very vital step in proper breast care."

Visit Pennyrich Bra and Lingerie Shop to insure proper breast care and a healthier body. The Pennyrich Bra and Lingerie Shop is located at 311 Dodsun in Midland.

Jo Smith, owner of the Pennyrich Bra and Lingerie Shop in Midland, has proven to be one of the two top distributors of the Pennyrich bra in the United States. This recognition is due to her dedication and personal attention in fitting women of all sizes. Call Pennyrich today at 683-1045.

Here's Why At ClayDesta National Oil & Gas Is Our Business.

Ever since the discovery of gas and crude in the Permian Basin, Midland has attracted countless independent energy pioneers who came here with a hat full of dreams and a pocket full of leases.

And with the kind of hard work (and a little luck) that only oil and gas people can understand, these operators have made our city one of America's great energy centers.

But factors like the economy, government regulations, and imports have changed the face of the oil and gas industry forever. And as a result, the kind of financial backing an oil and gas man needs now is a lot different from what he needed just a few years ago.

Backing the oil and gas industry is a major part of ClayDesta National Bank's business. It makes up the biggest single component of our loans. And because our bank was built by oil and gas men, we know how to handle the special needs of independent operators.

Quick response. Sometimes you've got to have an answer now! Oil men who deal with ClayDesta National will tell you they can usually measure response time in days not months.

Personal attention. Any oil man's relationship should be one-on-one with his banker, not with a department. And frankly, our oil and gas customers tell us ClayDesta National is the friendliest bank they've ever been in.

Commitment. There aren't many things more important to an oil man than knowing his bank will stand by him. You get a commitment from ClayDesta National, and you've got a commitment.

Asset strength. We opened just a few months ago with the largest capital structure of any bank in West Texas history. Since then our deposit base has grown more than 300%, while our loan-to-deposit ratio is less than 40%. But most importantly, because of our sound relationships with other financial sources, truly no oil and gas deal is too big for ClayDesta National to handle.

Expertise. Not many things are worse than talking to a banker who doesn't understand your business. We're one of just a handful of Texas banks who have full-time oil and gas lenders on staff, ready to work with you.

Positive attitude. Let's be honest. A lot of people think energy loans are a dirty word these days. But those independent oil and gas operators who risked all they had to establish this great industry are still the backbone of it today. And we stand behind 'em. At ClayDesta National Bank, energy lending is OK!

The oil and gas industry has kept this part of Texas looking great for nearly a century.

And at ClayDesta National Bank, we think it's looking better all the time.

Millionaire made it building and saving many businesses

By The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

"There are really two Fred Adlers," says Fred Adler, "the one that builds companies and the one that turns them around."

The difference?

"Time, time, time," replies Adler, who is one of America's premier venture capitalists and turnaround artists.

"In a turnaround, you're coming into a situation that's desperate. You don't have time. You're trying to build a company fast; in a turnaround, you're doing it immediately. Cash flow in a turnaround is god.

"When you're building a business, allocation to product development and marketing is much more important. When you're building a company, you have the initial and continuing choice of people; you emphasize quality-you weed out anybody who's not top-of-the-ladder.

"In turnaround, you need to preserve your asset base. You keep productive people even if they aren't the sort of people you want in the long run."

AT 58, Adler is active manager-investor in more than 50 companies that span every aspect of high technology, from recombinant DNA to the software intricacies of computer-aided design.

In the process of building companies from scratch and performing surgery on others that were hemorrhaging, he has made millions.

Adler also has had his failures, but they've barely nicked his reputation.

"Fred is known very much as a hands-on guy," says Stanley Pratt of the Venture Capital Journal. "He's also one of the biggest egos in the business-and he probably deserves it."

He agrees that he's arrogant, impatient, and tough, but he's brilliant as well. "He likes to give the impression of flippant intuition," says Dr. Richard Axel, a highly regarded Columbia University biologist who is both friend and adviser to Adler, "but he is, in fact, a very learned man. He knows what he is investing in."

"From what he eats to what he says, I don't think the guy has done anything unstudied in the last five years," says Esther Dyson, an Adler friend and computer industry analyst.

A SMALLISH FELLOW with sharp, intense features, Adler is both senior partner of Reavis, McGrath, a Wall Street law firm, and the man who runs Adler & Co., his venture-capital outfit.

Adler & Co. supervises investment funds worth over $100 million. His first venture fund, which is five years old, has been appreciating at a compounded annual growth rate of 50 percent.

Adler himself, though he won't say, is probably worth well over $200 million. (His actual net worth defies assessment, however, because his capital is vested in so many high-risk-high reward ventures that have yet to pay out.)

A product of Brooklyn College and Harvard Law, Adler began as a hotshot litigator with a reputation for a sharp tongue and fell into his businessman's role by accident. A client's company was heading for bankruptcy so he wrote a memo outlining a plan to save it. "I did it because I had a big mouth," says Adler.

The plan ultimately worked, and that stint as hands-on operator propelled Adler on his path as entrepreneurial start-up and fix-it man.

ADLER HAS launched literally dozens of companies into the marketplace. With names like Monoclonal Antibodies Inc. and Daisy Systems, some of them may ride the high-technology wave to a place on Fortune's 500. Others may have simply served Adler's short-term needs for substantial return on investment.

That's what really sets Adler apart from his fellow venture capitalists: the uncanny knack for balancing the demands of his investors with the needs of his business charges.

"It's crazy," says Seymour Rubenstein, the head of MicroPro, a California software company that Adler helped turn around. "He likes to walk in and refer to himself as 'just a mechanic', and he's not: he's a brilliant manager and strategist."

The key to that is Adler's extraordinary quickness at assessing both the abilities and defects of his audience. "I use quickness as a means of obtaining intellectual supremacy," says Adler. From that supremacy, he maintains, comes the control he needs to oversee his investments and entrepreneurs.

Business is done out of Reavis, McGrath's 42nd floor office in midtown Manhattan. Adler never looks out the window to view the city. People shuttle in and out while his secretary pipes in a continuous stream of phone calls.

Adler's phone is a dual weapon. It transmits his presence anywhere in the world while simultaneously making the people sitting in his office squirm with mixed impatience and curiousity.

HE KNOWS his conversations are being overheard and appears to conduct them accordingly. He shifts from interrogator to interviewee to investor to manager to The Boss within the span of a few calls.

"When you pound a nail with your hand, you cut your hand," he tele-barks to one of his entrepreneurs. "Use a hammer. I'm the hammer. When you try to pull a nail out with your fingers, you rip your skin. Use pliers. I'm your pliers. I'm your tool. Use me."

By the time he returns to the visitors sitting in front of his desk, they've been totally psyched out. But he insists that his telephone pyrotechnics aren't an attempt to impress or intimidate, just his way of "being open."

Adler gets about five or six turnaround offers a year and takes maybe one. His last major turnaround was Bethesda Research Laboratories, based in Gaithersburg, Md., last year. The company had been losing $1 million a month. Today BRL is set to go public — and earn Adler a cool $10 million for a $250,000 investment.

But what Adler really likes are the start-ups. That's when he has the chance to be the teacher and father-figure.

"I look for the superstars," says Adler, "a high-energy person with a high degree of understanding of both the technology and the marketplace." To get them, he will raid the top companies in an industry for their best people, dangling equity and opportunity as lures. He also has the superstars coming to him.

IN 1980 Aryeh Feingold, an Intel expatriate, was trying to launch a computer-aided design company that would allow engineers to better design very large scale integrated circuits. He called it Daisy Systems.

"We had been spending two months explaining to run-of-the-mill venture capitalists what we were trying to do," says Feingold, "and then I meet Fred. We start talking and after 3 minutes he starts telling me my business plan.

"He then flies us out to New York, and we rush in like O.J. Simpson to give him our formal presentation. It's supposed to take one hour, and with the other venture capitalists it took five hours.

"We go through the foils, and he keeps saying, 'next, next' and in the two places where we have the b————, this very nice man turns into a monster and yells at us for trying to deceive him. We finish the presentation in 9 minutes. He then invites us to dinner.

"I vowed that we would do business with him, and at the end of the evening we shook hands."

Feingold, after occasionally stormy sessions with Adler for the past two years, says, "Fred's biggest mistake was not (always) insisting that we follow his advice."

DAISY SYSTEMS will soon go public and probably make Feingold a very wealthy man, and Adler and his investors still wealthier.

Adler's successes do not obscure the the fact that he has been guilty of some of the excesses he calls his entrepreneurs on — most notably, overextending himself. He concedes that he has resigned from dozens of boards in the last few months, because he had spread himself too thin to be effective. "I'm picking my spots more carefully now," he says.

He is very impatient, yet devotes attention to niggling details, a volatile mix that bewilders some of his entrepreneurs.

His critics say that Adler lacks the long-term sense of commitment needed to build a truly great company, even though he has spent more than a decade with several of his ventures.

According to one acquaintance, Adler "needs the excitement of a start-up or the danger of a turnaround to keep him going. Clearly, he has all the money he could need."

Adler agrees in part. In fact, he confesses extreme self-doubt about how well the companies he's helped launch will endure.

HE SAYS his business success, tempered by setbacks in his personal life, leave him uncertain as to what he really wants to do with himself.

Adler sees growth in medicine, electronics

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Though the bulk of his investments are in computer and electronics companies, it's very clear where Adler thinks the future is going.

"I think that medicine will grow as fast as digital electronics in this decade," Adler contends. Roughly 40 percent of Adler's companies are in health-related fields.

"To his credit," says Dr. Richard Axel, a Columbia University biologist who advises Adler on biotechnology matters, "he's moving from electronics to biology. But he's a bit impatient, because he's trying to transplant the innovation timetable in electronics to biology."

Some of the newer companies in which Adler has a major stake are:

—Bio Technology General Corp., based in Israel, a company Adler hopes will overtake Genentech as the world's leading genetic engineering company. Current research focuses on agricultural and animal health care.

—Elscint, also an Israeli company, a publicly traded medical-technology company specializing in diagnostic imagery, including CAT scan, nuclear magnetic resonance, ultrasound and X-ray.

—Ungermann-Bass, a Sunnyvale, Calif.-based company that has developed a local data-communications network system.

—Walker Interactive Products of San Diego, which develops financial-applications software for data-processing departments of major companies.

Western Co. stockholders OK change

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Western Co. of North America shareholders have approved a "fair-price" amendment designed to thwart certain types of takeovers.

Sixty-eight percent of the oilfield service company's stock was voted in favor of the proposal — a slim margin over the required two-thirds majority.

The proposal requires that a "two tier" takeover attempt, in which a buyer offers shareholders one price to gain control of a company, then another price to remaining shareholders, must be approved by 80 percent of the shareholders or the board.

At Western's annual meeting May 2, the amendment came within 1 percent of passage, with 24 percent of the eligible votes uncasts. The meeting was adjourned the meeting to allow more time to gather votes. By Thursday, 94 percent of the company's share had been voted.

Because the proposal involved a change in the company's by-laws, shareholders had to cast votes personally.

Company president John Fannin told shareholders at Thursday's meeting of "two items of interest" that bode well for Western's onshore and offshore well services.

"We believe we are seeting the bottom of the activity levels in the domestic rig count," he said. The number of active rigs, which bottomed at 1,806 five weeks ago, now stands at 1,946.

Fannin also mentioned Wednesday's record government lease sale where oil companies bid $3.5 billion for exploration rights in the Gulf of Mexico. That figure was about $1 billion higher than anticipated.

Western's board chairman is Eddie Chiles, majority owner of the Texas Rangers baseball club.

In the past 20 years, traditional weddings have gone through many changes. Couples choose to be married in anything from parks to gardens instead of churches. Some adventurous pairs have ceremonies performed while skydiving, skindiving, horseback riding or ballooning.

Now, after a generation of less conventional wedding ceremonies, traditional styles are making a comeback, says Carol Anderson, wedding consultant and owner of Formally Yours in Midland.

CHURCH WEDDINGS are becoming more and more popular, she said, and many of the old traditions and styles are being followed again.

New ideas are often included in these old traditions, giving a fresh twist to a familiar custom. One of these new ideas is color coordination. "We put the bride's best color on the bridesmaids," said Ms. Anderson, "in order to compliment the bride for the day. One of the biggest trends is white isn't used for the traditional symbol of purity anymore —candlelight colors (ivory tones) signify purity just as well, and blondes look better in candlelight colors than in white."

In the past, the mother of the bride was expected to wear a color that would blend with the bridesmaids' gowns, and the mother of the bridegroom wore some shade of brown. That's an old tradition not being practiced very often, said Ms. Anderson."Now the mothers can wear any color, including black," she said, pointing out that sometimes black is more comfortable and more practical.

TODAY'S COUPLES, though they may want a large, lavish wedding, may have to work within a budget. Some of the ways they can save on wedding expenses:

—Use silk flowers or lease plants
—Carry a single rose or other flower instead of a bouquet
—Brides are no longer expected to pay for the bridesmaids' dresses — instead each pays for her own
—Groomsmen each pay for their own suit or tuxedo rental and fowers.

"Most local florists don't buy locally; they have plants flown in from California, Iran, Holland, Ireland. That's why real flowers are so expensive. Silk flowers can be more expensive but normally aren't," said Ms.Anderson.

Another way to make a wedding more special and at the same time keep costs down is to decorate in season. "We find a topic for the season or the bride's personality and decorate accordingly," Ms. Anderson said. "Candles are being used a lot, especially unity candles, which symbolize oneness."

THE TRADITIONAL ROLE of the bridegroom has been expanded. In years past he was usually the "forgotten man" until the time of the wedding ceremony. He was expected to make all the arrangements for the honeymoon, but as far as the wedding itself, all he was expected to do was show up.

According to Ms. Anderson, prospective brides and bridegrooms both now participate in all phases of planning the wedding, from choosing the bridal gown to selecting the site of the honeymoon.

"The bridegroom has much more participation in the wedding," she said. "He should not be left out. He is an important part of the wedding — after all, he started it by asking, so why should he be pushed aside?"

One tradition that is gradually disappearing is the massive wedding veil. "Brides are getting away from the veil," said Ms. Anderson. "More are using head wreaths or clusters of flowers. A veil is hazardous when walking because it can block vision. When pictures are taken it covers the expression of the bride. Many brides are using mantillas, hats or wreaths."

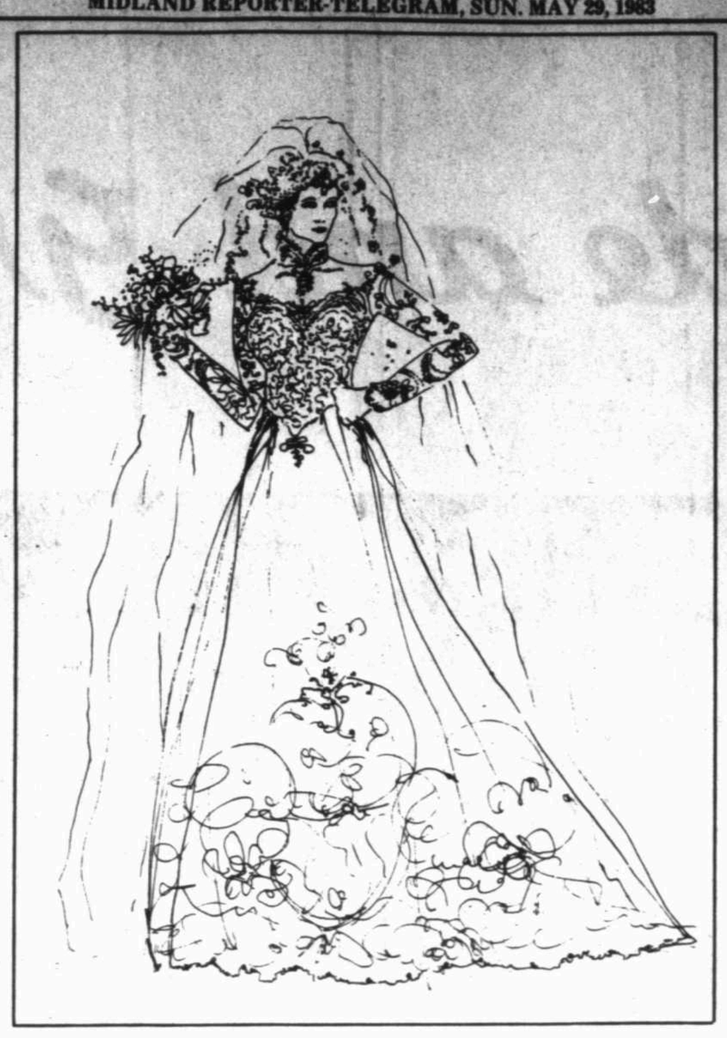

ANOTHER ITEM ELIMINATED from most weddings as a safety hazard is the long white runner laid on the aisle for the bride to walk down.

Like the traditional wedding, the traditional wedding reception is making a comeback. Ms. Anderson outlined traditional times and menus for receptions: For a basic reception, cake, punch, mints and nuts are served. For a reception following a morning wedding, a brunch with a milk punch is served. Afternoon wedding receptions feature cake, punch and small hors d'oeuvres. After-5 p.m. wedding receptions also have hors d'oeuvres, while after-7 p.m. receptions offer sit-down dinners.

"Basic cake-punch-etc. receptions are fine afternoons, but not before," she said. "Some are getting into patio receptions with poolside weddings — they can be very elegant."

One new trend, in spite of divorce rates, is for long-married couples to have another ceremony to reaffirm their committment to each other. Ms. Anderson said that often this ceremony is much larger and more elaborate than the couple's wedding ceremony "because now they can afford it."

CHANGES IN WEDDING styles come and go, Ms. Anderson said, "but as long as the Bible and God and witnesses to the effect are present, they are married. The marriage ceremony is like anything else — try something new, but always comeback to traditional things. Today's ceremonies are more open in that the bride and groom can put something of themselves into the ceremony — their own words. The bride and groom can participate and give their own feelings."

Church weddings toughen up

Copley News Service

Getting married in a church isn't as easy as it used to be.

A growing number of churches, in response to a divorce rate nearly triple what it was 20 years ago, have tightened their premarital counseling requirements.

Roman Catholics, who always required a waiting period of about a month, have extended that to three months, and even to six months in some cases.

In general, liberal and evangelical Protestant churches leave the matter of premarital counseling to individual pastors, but most clergymen say they spend more time than they used to on marriage preparation.

"I'm amazed at the change in, say, the last 10 years in this regard, with so many more evangelical churches going into premarital counseling and even post-marital counseling," said the Rev. Howard Hendricks of Dallas Theological Seminary.

Reports from various sources show that the divorce rate in 1980, the last year for which statistics have been compiled, is almost three times higher than it was in 1959.

"Many churches are doing post-marital checkups every six, 12 and even 18 months, trying to plug into the areas in which the greatest leakage, the greatest deterioration, occur in a marriage," Hendricks said.

Rabbi Eliezer Langer of San Diego said he has always counseled prospective brides and grooms and that he emphasizes the religious nature of marriage in the sessions.

"I don't know that I do any more premarital counseling than I ever did, but I usually try to meet with the couple at least two or three times before the wedding," he said. Langer added: "The spiraling divorce rate is a problem for everyone, however."

The Rev. Robert Kleinschmidt, a San Diego Baptist, says he doubts the increased counseling being done by evangelical churches does much good.

"They're really not all that interested," he said. "I don't think they listen very well to what you say. People think that getting married in a church by a priest or minister is a sort of good-luck charm, and I don't think they really respond well to the information you give them."

'Big Day' checklist

Copley News Service

"My feet are killing me," is not what a bride wants to murmur to her groom on the most important day of their lives. The last thing that should be on her mind is her aching feet. But standing and dancing for hours will surely take its toll.

But brides can wear sleek-fitting, luxurious hose that also help legs and feet feel livelier longer, say the hosiery experts at Du Pont. Manufacturers have been working with top designers for years to develop the perfect formula for sensuous, supportive pantyhose. There are special looks for every occasion, and weddings are no exception. A variety of hosiery-makers offer pantyhose in pure and off-white to match any wedding gown.

This year, brides can create a very striking look for The Big Day by choosing new lace pantyhose in white or ecru, sheers with a woven pattern or extravagant pantyhose made with silk — all containing a whisper of Lycra for the best fit and feel possible. And as bridesmaids and mothers-of-the-bride are on their feet almost as much as brides, they, too, can find a plethora of perfect-fit hose to coordinate with any wedding color scheme.

But before The Big Day arrives, every bride should ensure as carefree a wedding as possible. Fashion and wedding experts recommend planning for a formal wedding anywhere from six months to a year in advance. Worrying about details often detracts as much as aching feet from the romance of this important day. So get organized and check off the following items in your bridal organizer as they come up. Your checklist can be a fun way of counting down the months, weeks, days and moments before you say, "I do." Let's begin:

1 year - 6 months

— Avoid wedding trauma by talking about your budget and wedding style with everyone involved: your parents, his parents and your fiance.
— Pick a place for the ceremony and reception and make reservations immediately.
— Decide on the number of guests you can afford and accommodate and put together a guest list.
— Meet with the person who will officiate.
— Choose your dress and accessories. Remember that all the little things that you wear under it ar important. The right pantyhose, lin gerie and shoes can give you tha comfortable, easy feeling you'll s desperately need.
— Choose a color scheme and plan the reception.
— Register china, silver, etc.
— Select your wedding attendants.
— Start house-apartment hunting.
— Talk to your favorite travel agent about your honeymoon.

5 months - 2 months

— Order the announcements and invitations and address them as soon as they arrive. This way it's exciting instead of a chore.
— Shop for your trousseau, making sure you pay close attention to accessories. They'll give you your own personal style at comparatively low cost.
— Select a photographer, florist and musicians.
— Order attendants' dresses and suits.
— Meet with your caterer.
— Put everything in writing to avoid last-minute hassles.

7 weeks - 3 weeks

— Buy your fiance's wedding gift and gifts for the bridal party.
— Mail invitations.
— Have final dress-fitting and take formal portrait.
— Order rings.
— Reserve rooms for out-of-town guests.
— Plan rehearsal dinner.

2 weeks

— Get marriage license.
— Arrange transportation to ceremony.
— Organize luggage and do a last-minute confirmation on honeymoon reservations.

1 week

— Start packing and organize each day and evening outfit from top to bottom. Don't forget to pack undergarments like your sleek-fitting Lycra-enriched pantyhose in every color and style, as well as slips, bras, panties and shoes.
— Confirm number of guests for caterer.
— Arrange rehearsal.
— Keep up with thank-you notes as gifts arrive.

If you take care of all the little things, the big things have a way of taking care of themselves.

Flower symbolism from Victorian era

Flowers have always held a special meaning for lovers; during the ultra-romantic Victorian era, bouquets were an intrinsic part of the courtship ritual. What better way to express your sentiments on your wedding day than to carry flowers that symbolize your feelings? For example, brides traditionally carry or wear orange blossoms as a symbol of chastity. And the lily of the valley is an age-old symbol of true love.

Red roses — love, beauty
Yellow roses — joy
Tropicana roses — desire
Violets — steadfastness
Iris — hope
Tulip — ardent love
Sunflower — constancy
Daisy — innocence, also a sexual symbol. (—CNS)

Don't forget the children

Copley News Service

"Children should be included in the wedding because of the bride's and groom's desire to have them," says Millie Martini, associate editor of Bride's magazine. "A little girl or boy may be invited to participate in even the smallest wedding."

This provides the perfect opportunity to include a younger sibling, cousin, niece or nephew in the ceremony. If this is not the first marriage for either the bride or groom, including any children from a previous marriage as members of the wedding party can be a nice way to welcome them into the new family.

What's the right age for the littlest member of the wedding? The editors of Bride's recommend children 5 to 8 years old, but note that older girls can be included in the wedding as junior bridesmaids and some younger tots are mature enough to take part in the ceremony.

Should the flower girl wear a short or long dress? "Short dresses are often worn," says Martini, "but a long dress would be more appropriate for a formal wedding."

The flower girl's dress can be white to go with the bride's dress or in a color to match the bridesmaids' dresses. It does not have to be a miniature version of the adult styles, however.

"Children should be dressed in clothes in which they look and feel natural," advises Betty Adcock, vice president of design for Nannette. "Also, keep in mind that some shades may be too deep to flatter a child. It is both appropriate and pretty for the flower girl to wear a lighter hue of the color the other attendants are wearing — pale pink to go with a deep rose, for example."

The flower girl usually carries a tiny nosegay or a small basket filled with rose petals or flowers. Her headdress may be a coordinating wreath or halo of flowers, or perhaps only a single bloom pinned in her hair. Short white gloves would be a pretty touch for a formal wedding.

The ring bearer may wear either a white or dark party suit, often with short pants.

"You might want to choose a classic Eton suit in either velvet or flannel for winter, or in a linen for a spring or summer wedding," suggests Adcock. A tiny boutonniere can coordinate with the men of the wedding party.

What is the role of the flower girl and ring bearer during the ceremony? The ring bearer follows the maid-matron of honor. He carries a small white pillow to which the wedding ring (usually not the genuine one) is attached. The flower girl follows the ring bearer and immediately precedes the bride.

Flowers help make ceremony blossom

Copley News Service

Flowers may not be the stars of the ceremony, but they are certainly distinguished players, adding color and a sense of life to the occasion. Here are a few tips from the American Florists Marketing Council which might help your ceremony blossom.

FLOWERS AT THE CEREMONY

Nearly all churches and temples permit altar flowers. Simple is usually best here and two vases of white or light-colored flowers add a touch of beauty to any altar. If the altar is very wide, you may want to use a large glass bowl in the center, as long as the Bible is kept elsewhere. In the Catholic Church, an oversized glass bowl on the floor before the altar looks wonderful when the church is small and intimate. However, a pair of simple but expansive arrangements on wire stanchions, or on tables in front and to the side of the altar, are often far more visible.

If you plan to use pew ribbons, ornament the bows with flowers such as lilies of the valley. Also, if the wedding is after 5 o'clock in the winter or 6 in summer, you may want to use candles decorated with flowers. Many churches and temples own small stanchions which can be adorned with strings of greens to which flowers can be added.

FLOWERS FOR BRIDAL PARTY

Be sure that each flower is separately wired so that it can be moved to give the bouquet an open or tight look. The traditional flower is stephanotis, which is small and sweet-smelling, but the more mature bride of 25-years-plus may prefer a branch of orchids tied with a ribbon.

The groom and his groomsmen, including fathers, should wear a simple boutonniere of stephanotis, a single white rosebud or a white carnation.

Local florists share advice

By DIANE BOOTH
Lifestyle Writer

Small and simple or large and lavish, no wedding would be complete without the beauty of flowers.

Wedding flower selections vary according to each bride-to-be's taste and pocketbook. Many factors should be considered when selecting the right bouquets, boutonnieres and floral arrangements, say Midland florists.

"Every wedding is tailored to the individual bride," said Mildred Farris Riddle owner of Flowers by Mildred. But many wedding flowers right down to the bridesmaids' nosegays follow tradition.

This year arrangements and bouquets are very large and "exaggerated" the Midland florist said. Cascading bouquets are popular this year, and large arm bouquets are in demand for attendants.

Mrs. Farris said mauve and burgundy are this year's wedding flower shades.

Traditional flowers such as roses and stephanotis are always popular, she said, but flowers imported from Holland are big.

Choosing a competent florist is important, Farris said. "It is important for a bride and her mother to have peace of mind on that special day." Price should not be the only consideration, she said.

Once the flowers are ready for the big day, the floral designer goes along with the arrangements and bouquets to make sure they are worn or displayed properly.

"They have put their good money into the flowers and I put part of my life into them so I want to make sure they are what they want."

To determine what flowers will be ideal, floral designers look at everything from fabric swatches and pictures of gowns to tablecloths.

At Le Fleurs by Janelle, Owner Wynnie Branton said no two weddings she selects flowers for have the same color schemes.

"Brides are getting away from all-white weddings," she said. Colors such as peach, coral and pink are particularly popular for weddings this spring and summer.

She finds carnations, lilies and roses are so versatile, she said, because they can be dyed any color.

Prices of flowers for a small wedding start at about $500 according to Branton.

Cost depends on how elaborate the bouquets and arrangements and how many there are, said Bill Koegler, owner of Midland Floral Shop.

The florist sees a trend to smaller weddings but colors and flower selections do not follow any trends, he said. Styles, however, are favoring the European look — a light, airy arrangement with a few flowers and a lot of greenery.

At Flowerland, Fan Mowles, a designer, believes the wedding of England's Princess Diana had a big impact on wedding flower styles. "Everything is bigger, fuller and more lavish," she said. Styles are moving from dainty arrangements and bouquets of small flowers to large-scale designs with lots of flowers.

Exotic flowers such as gardenias and orchids are often used, said Mrs. Mowles and spring flowers from Holland are in demand. But the place to start when shopping for flowers is the wedding dress.

"It sets the atmosphere for the flowers — whether it is Victorian or southern belle style." But she added, flowers are not something to experiment with too much. "The bride is the star of the show. Flowers should be used as decoration to enhance her personality, they should not upstage her."

Flowers can be memorable and creatively presented, she said, without a lot of expense.

Dusty rose is a color many brides want this season, Mowles said, and several have chosen a color scheme of dusty rose and burgundy.

Fresh flowers can be combined with silk flowers for a different effect. According to Holly Farris of The Peppertree, the bouquet can be made into a centerpiece as a keepsake.

Traditionally most bouquets and arrangements were either all or predominantly white, Farris said. Now white is only used to complement the colors. With silk flowers, any type posie is possible in any color desired.

"Mother nature does not make a blue rose," she said, "but you can have one with silk."

Cascade and crescent-shaped bouquets are stylish this year, she said, to match the old-fashioned look of frills, lace and ruffles.

But the florist said she is happy to see many brides are coming up with their own ideas about flowers.

At a November wedding last year she designed the flowers around orange and brown. The bride wore a cream-colored gown and her attendants wore orange dresses. The groom, groomsmen and ushers wore brown tuxedos. The ceremony was decorated with orange flowers and brown eucapyptus.

Men's boutonnieres have evolved from one flower to a combination of two or three flowers, she said. "They have just gone wild. If you put a bow on it, it would be a corsage."

At Monterrey Flower Shop, Philip Marquez is busy working on wedding flowers in pastels for spring. When summer weddings begin he will switch to more brightly colored flowers.

Marquez works mostly on small weddings. The starting price for flowers for a small wedding is $300 but most of his customers pay $500-$600 for flowers.

No wedding should be without flowers, he said. "Flowers are important. You can't have a birthday party without a cake and you can't have a wedding without flowers.

"A wedding without any tradition has no class. You might as well go to a courthouse and get it over with."

Hints to avoid 'smudgy' face

Copley News Service

On her wedding day, a bride is involved in many activities that cause lipstick to smear and makeup to fade — she kisses, she eats, she sips (champagne), she cries. No-smear lipstick and waterproof makeup can help brides keep their fresh, beautiful looks for the wedding and photographs, say experts.

No-smear lipstick means the bride's lip prints won't be marking the faces and clothes of friends and relatives (and she can even give her old boyfriend one last kiss without anyone knowing!). And since it doesn't rub off, no-smear lipstick prevents a bride from getting chapped lips (the last thing she wants to take on a honeymoon).

Although a bride will want to give her face added color with a blush, the word to remember is moderation. What may look lovely in the bright lights of the dressing room may look entirely different at the altar. Always apply makeup in light similar to the light where you'll be spending your time.

Perhaps the most important cosmetic consideration for a bride is her eye makeup, since chances are very good that she'll be shedding a few tears of joy. To avoid looking like she has two black eyes, no-smear, waterproof mascara won't flake, smudge or rub off.

To minimize the "cryin'" eyes effect, avoid red shades in eyeshadows, advise the Hazel Bishop cosmeticians. Stick to blues, browns and maybe a light mauve. And powder eyeshadows will give more sparkling highlights than creams, generally speaking.

If there's a most important day for a woman to look her best, surely it's her wedding day. Brides are best advised to practice putting on the makeup they plan to wear on The Big Day. Hours before the ceremony is not the time for experimenting with new cosmetics and makeup techniques.

The final — and most effective — thing that a bride can put on her face is a smile. A smile does more to add extra sparkle and beauty than any makeup can.

Tricks dramatize natural glow

Copley News Service

On your wedding day you want your makeup to look especially good. There's nothing more beautiful than the glowing face of a bride in love. And with a few smart makeup tricks, that natural glow can be made even more dramatic.

To look your best, be sure to choose lip colors, eyeshadows, nail polish and shades of makeup that flatter your own skin color. If the latest fashion is red lipstick, but you look better in pink — go with your natural colors. The result will be romantic and lovely, instead of garish and painted.

The following beauty tips from Maybelline will help you choose the correct colors to bring out your special features.

PINK ROMANCE — for those with very pale complexions. Think pink for a natural rosy glow. Tender pink lips, a gentle pink shimmer of blush on the cheeks — and everywhere else you want to glow. If you wear a low-cut wedding gown, the lightest bit of blusher applied just above the neckline will add a rosy allure.

For eyes, stick to neutral tones of soft brown and pale gold. This will emphasize your eyes while keeping the spotlight on your beautiful complexion.

PLUM PINK — for the not-too-light, not-too-dark complexion. Deeper shades of pink intensify the colors, without overpowering your complexion.

A combination of violet pink and plum pink tones create a monochromatic makeup palette, giving you a sophisticated look that is very simple to achieve.

For eyes, use just one shade of shadow in a pink shade that flatters your face. And for an extra-special touch, try midnight blue mascara.

Plum wine or iced plum lip and nail color complete the deep-pink look perfectly.

PRETTY PEACH — shades of luscious peach and sunny orange complement the redhead and strawberry blonde woman. Peachy blush goes everywhere — cheeks, forehead, chin and down the center of the neck for an all-over, just-kissed glow.

After you've chosen just the right shade of foundation and blush, concentrate on dramatizing those eyes of yours. Smoky gray and pale peach are two eyeshadow colors that can't fail with your coloring.

CLASSIC RED — for the lovely lady with a dark complexion. The secret of wearing reds successfully is to tone down any rudiness or sallowness in your complexion with the right foundation shade.

Select professionals to photograph

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

Among the most precious keepsakes many married couples own are the pictures taken on the day they were wed.

Getting treasured photographs is not always easy, according to Midland's professional wedding photographers.

"Weddings are very hard to do well," said Sam Hollis of Sam Hollis Studio. "They're hard work."

Most wedding photographers have tales of unpredictable things happening while they were taking pictures.

"I've had some doozies," said Tony Corbell of Tony's Studio of Photography. One he remembers best was a wedding during which the maid of honor fainted halfway through the ceremony as he photographed her.

Hollis said he has also had bridesmaids and groomsmen pass out at weddings he was covering. Perhaps even more spectacular, he has seen a few weddings in which the bride's veil caught fire during the lighting of a unity candle.

"That's happened two or three times. They don't really burn, they just sort of melt," he said.

"I've had one where the minister didn't show. I had one where the bridesmaids' dresses weren't ready yet and had to be pinned on," Hollis said.

Not surprisingly, most of the professional photographers stressed the importance of hiring a professional to photograph a wedding. One argument they used to support this opinion is that a professional can handle the unexpected problems better.

"I think the biggest mistake made by the couple is not choosing a professional photographer," Corbell said. "Professionalism is very important to me."

"There's been just girl after girl who got an amateur and ended up with no remembrances at all," said Max Hutchins of Max's Wedding Photography and Studio.

"We know we seem expensive, but we've got the experience and equipment. When you're toting in equipment in three suitcases you have to expect to charge a little more," he said.

The cost of hiring a professional wedding photographer can vary.

Greg Hendershot of Hendershot Photography said it was hard to state an average price range "mainly because everybody wants something a little different. We 've done so many variations that there really isn't an average."

Corbell said it is "not out of line to spend $800 to $1,500."

Hutchins estimated that $400 to $650 was the average, with the full range covering $295 to $1,500.

Hollis said that the photographs for one recent wedding his studio covered cost a total of $5,000. In that case the families purchased all 300 preview shots taken.

"We're by far the most expensive one in town," he said, adding that he primarily does only the "big shindigs."

Couples are now looking for a traditional style in the wedding photography they purchase, according to most of the photographers.

"I think things are headed back toward traditional stuff," Hollis said. "The traditional ones have more meaning to them."

"I think double-exposures and 'mistys' were a fad," Corbell said.

However, Hutchins said the majority of his customers are looking for "something unique."

Of the 103 weddings he has done in the last year, Hutchins said, only about 10 did not involve using some special effect, such as double exposures, natural lighting, soft-focus 'misty' shots and starburst filters.

In most cases the photographers work closely with the couple.

"Everybody's a little different," Hendershot said. "Since they're paying for it we try to give them what they want."

"You've got to make the girls look the way they want to look, soft and romantic, or grinning like a schoolgirl," Hutchins said.

"We pretty well ad-lib on it," Hollis said. "We take lots of pictures."

Many couples, according to Corbell, "shop over the telephone, as a price-only thing, which they wouldn't do for a wedding dress."

"The best thing for them to do," Hollis said, "is to look at the work of several photographers. Most people shop by phone and shop on price alone. That's a bad way of doing it. They shouldn't judge on price alone. There's a lot of bad wedding photography."

Hollis also suggested checking with ministers for their recommendations on photographers.

"Ministers can tell you a lot about a photographer," he said. "Some photographers observe the church's rules while some don't. Some photographers will just desecrate the wedding by popping the flash all the time."

Finally, many of the photographers lamented the fact that wedding photographs are one of the last items a couple getting married considers.

After all, Corbell said, "When it's all over, what do you have left?"

Pick hairstyles before honeymoon

Copley News Service

All brides are beautiful on their wedding day. The trick is to stay beautiful throughout the hectic departure and on through the honeymoon, with a minimum of time and trouble.

It's much too romantic a time to fuss with your hair, yet you'll want to look especially nice. The solution: Along with something old, new, borrowed and blue, better pack some pretty easy-to-use hair accessories for your honeymoon trip.

Choose them well before your wedding day. You'll need to take some time to experiment with different looks that complement your trousseau and your own unique style.

The following tips from a major manufacturer of hair accessories, Goody Products, will help you look your best with the greatest of ease.

Start with the basics: Make sure your hair is in good condition and have it cut or shaped at least two weeks before the wedding. You'll need time to get used to handling it yourself, and to work out that one perfect down-the-aisle style, before the big day arrives.

You should make room for more than one hairbrush in your suitcase, to make styling and caring for your hair easier while you're away. A full round brush for curling, a vented brush for quick and easy blow-drying, two finishing brushes — regular and purse-size — for those last-minute touch-ups should do.

Choose the brush that's right for your hair type. Fine hair needs a gentle, natural-bristle brush. Coarse or heavy hair needs a stiff bristle brush with widely spaced bristles. don't despair. There is an attractive way to pin your hair up, with brightly colored barrettes which curve comfortably against your head. Some new ones even have delicate pearl-centered flowers in rich fashion colors.

When there's simply no time for setting or styling, choose a fabric-covered or tortoise-look headband. Medium hair can use a good nylon bristle brush.

After you've washed your hair, use a de-tangling brush with widely spaced, ball-tipped bristles so that you don't damage or pull your hair. Blow-drying brushes should have heat-resistant bristles.

And if you must set your hair, and let your hair hang loose. If your hair is long, you're in luck. Ponytails always look great, and there's a fun group of ponytail holders — colorful, braided elastic bands with bouncy pom-pom, tassel or satin bow accents. Try pulling your ponytail to one side for a flirty look. Or braid your hair with satiny ribbons for an ultra-feminine effect.

For a smooth French twist, brush all your hair over to one side of your head. Use bobby pins to fasten your hair at the back of your head, from nape to crown. Then brush all your loose hair back over the pins, roll it up and tuck in the ends, fastening with hairpins.

Bubbly tradition etiquette guide

Copley News Service

The one beverage that is always present at weddings is the "bubbly." Sparkling wines are sipped at the cocktail hours before and after the ceremony, during the wedding toast and at the party. After the festivities, the happy couple often sips a bubbly when they celebrate their first moments alone as husband and wife. And after the honeymoon there are many more occasions in which the newlyweds like to bring out a bottle of bubbly.

Long before your wedding, you must plan for the bubbly that you'll serve. Vintage champagnes start at $30 per bottle. Fine imported sparkling wines start at about $8 per bottle. So, on a single case of 12 bottles, you can save anywhere from $240 to $288 by using an imported sparkling wine instead of a high-priced champagne. There are many reasonably priced, yet still prestigious, "sparklers" to choose from.

Once you have determined how many bottles of sparkling wine you'll need, select the glasses. The saucer-shaped variety, so popular for drinking champagne in the romantic movies of the 1930s and 1940s, causes sparkling wines to lose their effervescence. These glasses expose much of the wine to the air, causing the bubbles to dissipate rapidly. "For the wedding, select flute or tulip-shaped glasses," suggests Richard Keller, president of Viceroy Imports, importers of Champs D'ore sparkling dry white wine.

You'll also want to be sure that the sparkling wine will be served properly. "Instruct your waiters to chill each bottle to 45 degrees F by placing them in ice buckets for about one-half hour before serving and turning each bottle occasionally," advises Keller. "Or place them in a refrigerator for two hours prior to serving." Opening each bottle of bubbly should not be done with a corkscrew but by hand: remove the foil and wire basket. Hold the base of the bottle with one hand and, pointing the bottle at a 45-degree angle, away from any individuals, use the other hand to hold the cork while slowly twisting the bottle. The cork should come out with a gentle but audible pop!

Switzerland: Romantic honeymoon setting

Copley News Service

Switzerland's spectacular beauty, easygoing ambience and radiantly clear atmosphere, cast a magical spell over people from all walks of life. And a Swiss honeymoon can be one of the most serendipitous sojourns imaginable, especially if you combine the urban pleasures of city-resorts, such as Zurich and Lucerne, with the zestful Alpine diversions of the Grisons, Switzerland's southeastern "holiday corner."

In both Zurich and Lucerne, you'll discover the glorious Grisons countryside edges in close so that a short drive brings you to picture-postcard villages and resorts where nature bedecked in panoramic enchantment, waits with arms outstretched and a happy, welcoming smile.

Three romantic hotels, at different price levels, in descending order, are:

1. Schweitzerhof. On the lakefront, yet in the heart of truly beautiful downtown Lucerne, this hotel epitomizes contemporary elegance. Restaurants, cafes and bars leave nothing to be desired, in any way.

2. Chateau Gutsch, like a private castle atop a mini-mountain — yet actually in midtown. It's easily reached by car or funicular. Food, service, comfort, hospitality are top-notch. There's an outdoor pool, too, that's nice to come home to. And what vistas. The greatest!

3. The restored Rebstock's a delightful landmark. More modest in scope, it's a gem. Ask for the top floor room with wraparound terrace that also affords splendid city views. Restaurants and cafes here seem to be among the most popular in town.

Contact the Swiss National Tourist Office, 608 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10020. Or write to Lenzerheide's dynamic director of tourism activities, Mr. Schimun Murk, at the Lenzerheide-Valbella Tourist Office, CH-7078 Lenzerheide, Switzerland, for information about specific places, sight-seeing and side trips, as well as tourist activities and sports.

Switzerland is a delightful honeymoon spot. Enjoy a beautiful Alpine lake, lovely surroundings, pure air and radiant sunshine...and, of course, each other.

AMSTERDAM

Forget about the boy with his finger in the dike. Forget about wooden shoes, silver skates. People love Amsterdam not because of storybook symbols but because Amsterdam has everything!

Amsterdam's old; it's young and brash. It's lively; it's relaxing. It's highbrow; it's earthy. It's sophisticated; it's folksy. It's fascinating. It's fun. It's unique.

If you're planning a honeymoon abroad, you'll discover it's the gateway to romantic and memorable pleasures.

From the moment you arrive in this delightful city, you feel comfortable. English is spoken everywhere. There's an aura of hospitality that reaches out and evelopes you instantly. You can't help but be captivated by the Dutch kaleidoscope of East-West influences, conviviality and festive spirit.

Now, what about Amsterdam as a honeymoon base?

HOTELS

Hotel Pulitzer, 315 Prinzengracht (a Golden Tulip Hotel). A most unusual contemporary hotel, the Pulitzer was created out of 19 historic canal houses, retaining the original facades and basic structure. Glassed-in walkways encircle a pretty courtyard garden to connect different parts of the hotel, decorated with an eye to stylish comfort. Recommended are the large, canal-side doubles. (Rooms are equipped with radio-TV, mini-bar and direct-dial phones.)

The Pulitzer's beautiful restaurant, the Goudsbloem (Marigold) is outstanding; its bar is one of the most sought out in Amsterdam. Ask for Gerr Kooyman, a legendary bar manager in his own time, and a man who epitomizes the warmth and empathy of the Dutch.

Grand Hotel Krasnapolsky, 9 Dam Square (Golden Tulip and Steingenberger Hotels affiliation). The Kras, as it's been affectionately nicknamed, has been a universal favorite in Amsterdam for over a century. A grand landmark hotel, too, it's right on the Dam, in the heart of the action. Today the brightly awninged Kras is a blend of modernized accommodations and amenities, with lofty, elegant, turn-of-the-century decorative touches. Many of the rooms face the square and the Royal Palace, directly opposite.

The Kurhaus Hotel, Scheveningen, 2508 GR Den Haag (a Steigenberger Hotel). Originally constructed as a hotel and concert hall a century ago, one which attracted royalty, world famous political figures and performers, the Kurhaus was recently renovated and restored to landmark grandeur. Opulent is the word for this beachfront hotel and casino. Public and private rooms leave nothing to be desired in the way of plushy comfort and service ... right down to luxurious breakfast in bed. Extraordinary.

The grand roster of facilities includes an indoor-outdoor pool with artificial waves, sauna, solarium volleyball; also bicycling and horseback riding, water skiing, parasailing ... name it. They have it.

Heart-shaped cake ideal for showers

Copley News Service

What could be more perfect for a wedding shower than this romantic "heart" cake? It doubles as centerpiece and dessert on your luncheon or buffet table — sure to impress guests. But wait till they taste it ... because underneath the pretty pink icing is a rich, chocolatey surprise! Chocolate is, after all, a favorite with just about everybody.

And while you're taking bows, they won't believe how easy it was to put together: simply combine ingredients in a large mixer bowl, blend, pour into heart-shaped pans and bake. The secret is starting with a base of unsweetened cocoa — chocolate in highly concentrated form so end-results will be extra-luscious and fudgy.

FUDGY VALENTINE CAKE

Two-thirds cup butter or margarine
1¾ cups unsifted all-purpose flour
1¾ cups sugar
¾ cup Hershey's Cocoa
1½ tsps. baking soda
1 tsp. salt
1½ cups dairy sour cream
2 eggs
1 tsp. vanilla
Pink Buttercream Frosting (recipe below)

Cream butter or margarine until softened in large mixer bowl. Combine flour, sugar, cocoa, baking soda and salt; add to butter. Add sour cream, eggs and vanilla and blend on low speed. Beat 3 minutes at medium speed. Pour batter into two greased and floured heart-shaped pans. Bake at 350 degrees F for 35 to 40 minutes or until cake tester comes out clean. Cool 10 minutes; remove from pans onto wire rack. Frost with Pink Buttercream Frosting. Garnish with candied hearts, cherries or chocolate curls.

PINK BUTTERCREAM FROSTING

One-third cup butter or margarine
3 cups confectioners' sugar
1½ tsps. vanilla
3 to 4 tbsps. milk
3 drops red food color

Beat butter or margarine in small mixer bowl until softened. Gradually add confectioners' sugar, vanilla and milk. Beat until smooth and of spreading consistency. Tint a delicate pink by adding food color.

Orange yogurt Vichyssoise simple

Copley News Service

Many new cooks panic at the thought of preparing their first meal. They feel intimidated by long, complicated recipes that may not result in a picture-perfect creation.

There's no need to put off preparing a meal for friends or relatives in your new apartment or house, or to run out for deli when you can create with ease and perfection this luscious and creamy Orange Yogurt Vichyssoise.

The classic French Vichyssoise does require some time to cook the potatoes and some culinary expertise to perfectly blend the potatoes, cream and other ingredients. In this simplified blender version from the Campbell Soup Co., a can of condensed cream of potato soup makes the blending and preparation a cinch. Here, vanilla yogurt, orange-flavored liqueur and mandarin orange segments replace the traditional leeks, cream and chives. Serve, as pictured, with a create-your-own salad bar and you've a sensational light supper that even novice cooks will excel at.

ORANGE YOGURT VICHYSSOISE

1 (10¾-oz.) can condensed cream of potato soup
1 (8-oz.) container vanilla yogurt
1 (11-oz.) can mandarin orange segments, drained
½ cup milk
2 tbsps. orange-flavored liqueur

In electric blender, combine soup, yogurt and orange sections; blend until mooth. Pour mixture into saucepan, gradually stir in milk and liqueur. Heat, stir occasionally. Makes about three cups, three servings.

Tools make cooking more fun

Copley News Service

A single rose, the unexpected note, a squeeze of the hand — it's the little things in life that make the difference. The same wisdom applies in the kitchen.

"Many new brides receive matched sets of cookware, a food processor or other costly appliances as wedding gifts," says Ann Winfield, home adviser to F.W. Woolworth. "Those are wonderful things to have, but for everyday cooking, it's the little, often inexpensive tools that make cooking more fun.

"Drying lettuce, chopping garlic, skimming the fat off a stew aren't a cook's favorite chores," says Winfield, "but, they can make a real difference in the quality of the finished product. Luckily, there are gadgets and helpers available for almost every dreary task."

The Woolworth adviser lists various kitchen tools that help new cooks get off to a delicious start.

— Vegetable steamer. Steaming is one of the simplest and quickest ways to prepare vegetables. It retains nutrients and produces vegetables that are crisp and bright in color.

— Salad dryer. Important because salad dressing will not adhere to wet lettuce leaves. There are many different styles of dryers, ranging from mesh baskets to plastic spinners — all vastly preferable to paper towels.

— Chopping board. Should be thick enough to withstand many washings and large enough to be useful. Something no cook should be without.

— Metal grater. The best are made of stainless steel. It's useful for making fresh bread crumbs, grating cheese, shredding vegetables.

— Sharpening steel. The quality and sharpness of kitchen knives is key. Sharpen knives often and never put kitchen knives in the dishwasher. They should be washed and dried by hand.

— Wire whisk. For creating soft peaks of beaten egg whites or whipped cream, the aerating efficiency of a whisk can't be topped. Round or flat, two or three different sizes are necessary for every kitchen.

— Garlic press. Neater than chopping, a press releases the full aromatic essence of garlic into the food (and not on your hands).

— Mortar and pestle. This age-old piece of kitchen equipment is considered indispensable. It has just the right surface for grinding nuts, herbs, seeds or peppercorns into the exact consistency a cook desires. Professional chefs still prefer them to food processors for this purpose.

"Once she's well-prepared with the basics, a new bride can afford an occasional splurge. She might want to add specialty items — a crepe pan, a wok or electric pasta-maker — for creating her and her husband's favorite dishes," says Winfield.

Mail order trousseau is practical

Copley News Service

You've opened most of your wedding gifts and are proud owners of three electric popcorn poppers, two miniaturized food processors, an electric air freshener that fills your home with the "scent of the week" and 42 fondue forks.

You've received plenty to set up housekeeping together, but still need some essentials, such as an iron, a digital alarm clock or a bath mat. What's the best way to get them? Many people save time and money by ordering them through the mail.

"More and more consumers who have little time for shopping are taking advantage of improved service and product quality to order merchandise they need for their homes through the mail," says Hank Johnson, president of Spiegel, a major catalog company. "We've seen a remarkable increase in the number of people ordering appliances, home furnishings, even designer fashions from our catalog," Johnson says.

The boom in mail-order shopping has been supported by — not surprisingly — a boom in the number of catalogs published. The Direct Mail Marketing Association's Great Catalogue Guide lists 630 consumer catalogs offering everything from auto accessories to crystal and hardware, and the association reports there are another 3,300 catalogs to choose from. Many of these specialty catalogs are published by retailers while others are published by the non-store catalog marketers seeking to take advantage of mail order's popularity.

"The variety of merchandise available through the mail makes catalog shopping a great alternative for newlyweds selecting complete bedroom ensembles, trousseaus, home furnishings or accessories. Gift-givers appreciate that they can have gifts shipped to the couple's home, also," Johnson notes.

Why are more people turning to catalog shopping now? Johnson explains: "In many cases, both husband and wife work and don't have much time to shop anymore. Mail-order shopping takes significantly less time than traditional shopping and lets people make selections from the comfort of their homes or offices.

"In other cases, ordering from catalogs is preferred because it's easy," he continues. "You simply pick up the phone and charge your purchases.

"Mail-order buying has gained a firm footing in today's time-conscious society," he concludes.

The Great Catalogue Guide can be ordered from the Direct Mail Marketing Association, 6 East 43rd St., New York, N.Y. 10017. Include $1 for postage and handling to addresses in the United States and Canada.

Arranging first kitchen may be difficult

Copley News Service

If you're like many young newlyweds, chances are that you'll be setting up a kitchen for the first time after your marriage. There are so many things to choose from in today's expanded housewares departments that you could easily overlook some of the essentials. And with the large variety of cookware available, you might find the selection confusing.

Here are a few guidelines on how to furnish your first kitchen, from the makers of "SilverStone" nonstick cookware:

— When it comes to cookware, there's more to saucepans and skillets than meets the eye. Appearance alone shouldn't be your reason for buying. Serious cooks know that performance and quality are every bit as important as looks.

— Most cookware is made of metal — stainless steel, copper, aluminum and cast iron — and the key to making your way through the multitude of products available is to understand the advantages of each.

— By far the most popular for top-of-the-range cooking is aluminum. It's a good conductor of heat, easy to clean, dishwasher safe and the material won't affect the taste of the food.

— The oldest cookware is of cast iron which has been around for centuries and with proper care, can last a lifetime. It is not a good conductor of heat but excellent for browning meat. It has no surface coating, it must be seasoned and cared for by giving it an occasional rubbing with oil or lard and drying it over a low heat.

— Copper is the least popular with today's cooks. While it is the best conductor of heat, it is inclined to stain and may affect the taste of certain foods. Copper has become so expensive that it's practically out of reach for all but the professional chef.

— Before you buy even a single pot, there are several things you should consider. Pick it up and see how it feels. Pots and pans have varying degrees of balance and you'll want to choose the one that feels most comfortable. The handles should be sturdy and easy to grip. Handles of brass or metal will get hot, while those made of wood can't be used in the oven or the dishwasher. Also check to see if the cookware you are selecting has tight-fitting lids.

— An important factor in selecting your first set of cookware is upkeep. Soaking and scouring interiors is a time-consuming and messy task. A great percentage of cookware sold today is made with nonstick surfaces that require only a quick wipe-out in hot sudsy water to come clean. In addition to its easy-to-clean qualities, this durable finish offers diet- and fitness-conscious young couples with another feature — the non-stick finish permits cooking with little or no fats.

The following is a list of the basic items that should equip your kitchen for even the most adventurous of culinary pursuits.

FIRST KITCHEN BASICS

1. Seven- or 8-inch fry pan — omelets or crepes.

2. Ten- or 12-inch fry pan — pan-frying chicken, beef, fish.

3. One- or one-and-a-half-quart saucepan, two- or two-and-a-half-quart saucepan — vegetables, canned soups, hard-boiled eggs, sauces.

4. Five- or six-quart pot or Dutch oven — stews, spaghetti.

5. Bake and roast pan — roasts, lasagna.

6. Electric fry pan — braised, fried, sauteed dishes.

7. Coffee pot — electric or top-of-range.

8. Teakettle — boiling water for tea, instant coffee, cocoa.

9. Knives — paring, slicing, carving.

10. Wooden spoons — stirring (metal can scratch cookware surfaces).

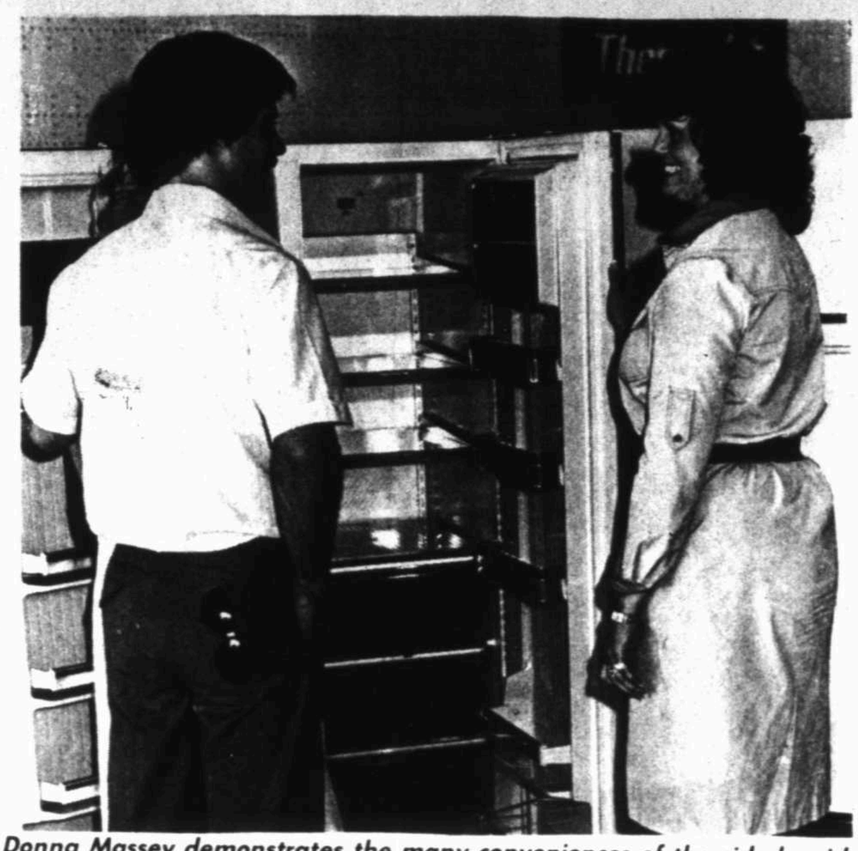

11. Plastic spatulas — turning, flipping (preserves non-stick cooking surfaces).

12. Pair of tongs — turning meat, chicken.

13. Vegetable peeler — carrots, potatoes.

14. Can opener — electric or manual.

Diamond symbolizes pledge to love

Copley News Service

A diamond sings with passion. It expresses true love's beauty and strength forever.

This is as true today as it was 500 years ago when Maximilian of Austria presented the first diamond engagement ring to Mary of Burgundy.

In 1477, pretty young Mary was being pressured by the king of France to marry his 11-year-old son, the dauphin, who was nine years her junior. This did not please Mary at all, who had been carrying on a letter romance with the dashing young heir to the Austrian throne, Maximilian.

To forestall the possibility of having his sweetheart marry the dauphin, young Maximilian immediately had a very ornate and expensive ring made of gold and diamonds with both his and Mary's initials on it as a "pledge of their love."

The ring was immediately accepted by Mary, and the young couple were married forthwith. The original Maximilian engagement ring can be seen today at the Museum of Fine Arts in Vienna, Austria.

With that romantic beginning, the diamond ring has become the symbol of intent to wed and engagement. While the design of the engagement ring has changed from the elaborate signet to the ring as we know it today, its intent is still the same.

The ring, which has no beginning or end, symbolizes a lasting love, and the diamond stands for that love's purity and eternalness. And that is why most engaged couples choose the diamond to plight their troth and more than 75 percent of first-time brides receive diamond engagement rings, says the Jewelry Industry Council.

Divorce -- leveling off?

The divorce rate has recently shown signs of leveling off. At the beginning of the century, the divorce rate was less than one per 1,000 Americans. By the end of the 70s, it was over five per 1,000. So far in the 80s it has not gone above the 70s rate, and in 1982, it dropped two-tenths of a percent.

Marriage still going strong

Copley News Service

Despite dire forecasts of doom in the 1970s, matrimony is far from becoming extinct. Today, more couples are exchanging bands of gold than ever before — those getting married for the first time and those repeating their vows, for better or for worse.

A renewed acceptance of marriage began occurring in 1980, with a return to more traditional values and lifestyles and the coming of age of the postwar baby boom generation, comprising many single persons who opted to postpone marriage in the '70s.

Today's rising marriage rate has had a positive impact on the sale of engagement and wedding rings. Double-ring ceremonies have become the norm, with 88 percent of the grooms and virtually all the new brides receiving wedding rings. Nearly nine in 10 of these rings are made of gold, reports the Gold Information Center.

The soaring number of second marriages is a by-product of the inflated divorce rate. Statistics tell us that three-fourths of all divorced persons retie the knot after about five years. Remarriage has generated substantial ring purchases, which are often marked by higher expenditures the second time around, i.e., more expensive rings than those chosen for the first marriage are frequently exchanged, with the bride tending to forego an engagement ring in favor of a heavier or higher-karat gold wedding band.

Another '80s phenomenon is the increasing number of second ceremonies by married couples wishing to reaffirm their love for one another. This many-years-later ceremony of reaffirmation is frequently held in the presence of close friends and relatives while the Mr. and Mrs. restate their vows and usually exchange new rings to commemorate the happy occasion.

Despite economic squeezes, a movement toward heavier, more substantial gold wedding ring styles has been noted by the Gold Information Center, in keeping with the renewed consumer emphasis on quality. Fourteen-karat-gold wedding bands are still the most frequently purchased, but more couples are choosing higher karats, particularly 18k. The higher the karat, the greater the proportion of pure gold. The ultimate symbols of preciousness and purity of love are gold wedding bands of pure (24k) gold, now offered by some trend-setting jewelry stores around the country.

If you're planning to purchase a gold wedding ring or reaffirmation ring, be sure to shop around for the style and price range you desire.

With this ring I thee wed ...

Tony Facemire and Connie Vance, the bride and groom featured in today's special bridal edition, have chosen to be united in marriage through a small, intimate wedding. The double-ring ceremony will be held at The Church of the Nazerene in Kingston, Missouri at 7:00 p.m. on July 1, 1983.

Connie and Tony have chosen a six member wedding party including family and close friends. Maid of honor is Kimberly Ackerman of Kansas City, Missouri. Connie's two sisters will participate as bridesmaids. Tony's elder brother will travel from a missionary in northern Japan to attend as the best man. Tony's other two brothers will act as the ceremony's ushers.

Wedding colors of powder blue and grey will be woven throughout bridesmaids' and mothers' dresses, reception decor and bouquets. The bride's dress is of long sleeve and floor length design. White lace pumps will compliment the chiffon and satin gown trimmed with seeded pearls. Her bridesmaids will wear off-the-shoulder floor length gowns of powder blue.

The groomsmen will wear grey suits with white wing-collared shirts. Powder blue carnation boutonnieres are added for a finishing touch.

Silk flowers for the wedding party will be arranged by Connie's aunt. The bouquets consist of daisies and other various summer flowers. Silk flowers will garnish the wedding cake. A family relative of Connie's will prepare the white wedding cake for the July 1st celebration.

The wedding reception guest list includes 125 friends and relatives. Both Tony and Connie look forward to the joining of their families whom have never met. Guests and family will travel from Northern Japan to New England to join in the wedding celebration.

Following the reception, the newlyweds will begin their married life in Midland. The bride and groom are employed by Dillards. Tony acts as the merchandising manager of Dillards; Connie is the head of sales in the junior department.

The bride and groom would like to extend their appreciation to the Midland/Odessa merchants who participated in today's special bridal edition. Best wishes to the bride and groom.
