Korean dissident under house arrest

By EDWIN Q. WHITE
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea — Dissident leader Kim Dae-jung said police used "violence" to separate him from his American supporters upon arrival from two years of self-imposed exile today, and said he had been placed under house arrest.

Americans accompanying Kim said he and his wife were forcibly separated from them upon arrival at Kimpo International Airport outside Seoul. The Americans said they also were roughed up by security forces.

"Police used violence against me. They pushed me. I felt as if I was beaten," Kim, 59, said at a news conference at his home in Seoul.

Patricia Derian, former assistant secretary of state for human rights in the Carter administration, said earlier that Kim was "battered and beaten up. It was thuggery at its height."

"The conduct of officials of the South Korean government today was inexcusable and unnecessary," said Rep. Ed Feighan, D-Ohio, also among those who escorted Kim home.

He said he and Rep. Thomas Foglietta, D-Penn., were "demanding that the U.S. Embassy in Seoul lodge a formal complaint against the South Korean government."

Kim has said he was returning to support a newly formed opposition party vying for seats in the National Assembly elections Tuesday.

President Chun Doo-hwan's government said it would not return Kim to prison to finish the remaining 17½ years of a 20-year sentence on a sedition conviction, but it added that he would be banned from participating in politics.

Kim said he and his wife left the plane with the two congressmen, Ms. Derian, former U.S. Ambassador to El Salvador Robert White and William Butler, International Commission of Jurists president.

Kim said that when he refused to enter an elevator with police, saying he wanted to go through regular entrance procedures, "they forcibly pushed me very violently. I felt beaten, but I'm not sure if I was beaten. The situation was so confused."

Kim said his outrage was not as great as that of the Americans because "I'm familiar with the Korean government."

U.S. Embassy spokesman David Fitzgerald said in a statement: "If the allegations are true it is a matter of serious concern. . .. We have sent a stern note to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs requesting a full explanation."

Seoul Metropolitan Police issued a statement saying they "merely separated Mr. Kim and his family from those accompanying them and escorted them to an elevator in order to ensure his safety. No beating of Mr. Kim or any of the people accompanying him took place."

In Washington, White House spokesman Mark Weinberg said: "We have reports, which although they indicate heavy security, do not indicate any violence."

Kim's wife, Lee Hee-ho, said earlier in a telephone interview that "there was no beating." She said the couple was "shoved" into the elevator and later into a bus, and taken on a "strange route" home.

Kim said that upon his return home a local police official "told me that I couldn't go out. ... I asked him if this was house arrest and he didn't deny it."

Barbara Webber, a spokeswoman in Washington for the Center for Development Policy which sponsored the return trip, said Kim was under house arrest, but government officials would not confirm the report.

Kim said only relatives would be allowed to visit him, but members of his delegation and foreign reporters were allowed into the home.

Police barricaded the entrance to the road leading to Kim's home and pushed back several people who tried to enter.

Jessye Johnson, left, Bertha Starks and Kitty Joiner this week surveyed the land chosen for a housing project to revitalize southeast Midland. Covered with weeds today, the area will be developed with streets paved, curbing and gutters installed and houses constructed on the 17 lots.

Women push 'dream' houses

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

A joint venture between a savings and loan institution and a non-profit housing board will provide new home mortgages for an area in southeast Midland previously ignored by builders and lenders.

The announcement was made this morning during a news conference at the Midland Chamber of Commerce. Revitalizing that area of Midland was the primary objective established by a chamber-sponsored group in 1980.

Although Steve Davidson and Doug Henson — representing Midland Housing Finance Corporation — obtained the land and worked out a plan with Petroplex Savings for the lower interest loans, it was three women in that southeast neighborhood who started a year ago to put their dreams into concrete forms.

Under the plan, MHFC has 17 lots bounded by Kentucky, Washington, Lincoln and Adams streets. It was selected for its proximity to Washington Park, Carver Cultural Center and Bunche Elementary School.

A PERSON INTERESTED in a house will talk to a builder, decide on house plans and arrange financing with Petroplex Savings. That lending institution is obtaining $500,000 from the Federal National Mortgage Association, according to Jana Porterfield, a vice president at Petroplex.

"I've worked with them (Fannie Mae) to get a lower interest rate for those borrowers," she said.

If the applicant can qualify for the monthly payments but has no down payment, MHFC can assist. Its money is coming from a 1½ percent commitment fee charged developers who obtained low interest loans through MHFC to build apartment complexes.

Ultimate goal of all parties involved is to see that three block area develop into a clean attractive neighborhood that meets all city codes, according to Bertha Starkes, one of the women involved. A secondary goal is for the area to serve as a magnet to attract the young working couples who grew up there but left to find housing in apartment complexes along Loop 250.

The three women — Mrs. Starks, Kitty Joiner and Jessye Johnson — have lived a total of 83 years in that neighborhood. Mrs. Starks and Mrs. Johnson each have lived there 24 years and Mrs. Joiner 35 years, hers within a three block area.

It was Mrs. Joiner who discovered someone had proposed to put mobile homes in that empty tract, located behind her house. She pulled in the other two women and they looked at mobile homes proposed for the lots ("They were awful," she said). A canvass of the neighorhood revealed residents were opposed to the mobile home plan.

"I'M THE ONE who called Steve to give me advice," said Mrs. Joiner.

The women organized into the Washington Park Neighborhood Committee and began meeting once a month. They called on MHFC, builders and lenders for ideas and help.

With its money, MHFC slowly acquired the tracts that had been selected by the women. The City Council, using Community Development funds, will pave, curb and gutter the streets along that tract and put in sidewalks, according to Davidson.

"The key is having a neighborhood group," he said. "They had the property picked out long before we got involved. It took longer than we had hoped to get it worked out. It was just a matter of plowing through all the traps."

Henson located two pre-fabricated houses at Manor Park that will be put on two lots and sold. Davidson said the houses are three-bedroom, two bath with 1,500 square feet.

"People in Washington Park said they wanted a first class development with all the proper setbacks," he said.

Some builders who attended the meetings have expressed interest in building houses on those tracts, and only one lender — Petroplex Savings — submitted a financing package, according to Davidson.

Ms. Porterfield said Petroplex became interested in the project because the citizens were involved in wanting to upgrade the area.

Banker waives arraignment

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

A waiver of arraignment for former Metro Bank president John Edward "Eddie" Thomas Jr., presented to the U.S. District Court Clerk's office this week, resulted in "an official plea of not guilty," according to Larry Beck, the district court clerk.

"I received the waiver Wednesday and sent it on to the magistrate's office," said Beck. "It's awaiting approval right now."

If the waiver is approved, Thomas will not have to make an appearance at the arraignment.

"You have the right to have charges read or you can waive it," said John Smith, Thomas' attorney. "It's a waste of time to go over to the courtroom and stand there for 15 minutes while they read the charges. The waiver is simply a formality," he said.

Thomas, 42, was arrested Jan. 22 in the alleged embezzling of more than $750,000 from the now-defunct MetroBank. He was president of the bank from its inception in 1978 until he resigned July 14, 1983 — about two weeks before the bank failed.

The bank, at Midland Regional Air Terminal, was closed by the Texas State Banking Commission. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was named receiver of the bank.

Thomas was arrested by FBI agents in Arlington, where he had been job-hunting.

He was indicted by a federal grand jury in Midland and was released on personal recognizance two weeks ago. The trial date is set for March 18.

Construction of pipeline to begin

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

The Midland and West Texas economies will get a strong boost this summer when the start-up of the 1,030 mile Long Beach to Midland pipeline begins, according to Cecil Owen, president and chairman of Pacific Texas Pipeline Co.

At a press conference at the Midland Hilton, today, Owen said the $1.66 billion project, which will carry oil from California to Midland, should get under way by September.

Midland will become one of the main operation centers for the project and offices here will employ 75 to 100 people, both at start-up and permanently. As many as 1,000 construction workers may be initially employed in the area.

Two men killed in fire at window plant

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The bodies of a 27-year-old Midland man and a 31-year-old Odessa man were discovered early this morning in a burning building early this morning West U.S. Highway 80.

The men apparently were living in an upstairs section of the Midland Window Co., located near the OIME Inc. plant. Their bodies were found on the floor near a bed and a bed-like couch, according to Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry, who pronounced them dead.

According to Sgt. Monnie Weddell of the Midland County Sheriff's Office criminal investigation division, the men appeared to have died from smoke inhalation.

The bodies were taken to Thomas Funeral Home and names will not be released until the families are notified, Weddell said.

Midland firemen were dispatched to the scene at 7:37 a.m., according to Cheryl Kellogg, Central Fire Department dispatcher.

The building was locked and Capt. Jerry Doyle said he used an axe to chop through the metal garage door to gain access to the lock.

"We raised it a foot and you couldn't see anything" Doyle said, describing the thick smoke.

"You gotta be real careful the door doesn't shut behind you," he said, explaining firemen placed a trash can under the door to prevent it from rolling shut.

Fire investigators on the scene speculated the fire had been smouldering for "quite awhile" before it broke into flames because of the extensive damage to the corrugated walls of the metal building.

According to Sprayberry, "there was a bunch of personal-looking items up there" in the living quarters, including a television set and record albums.

The man found in the large room was fully dressed and wearing boots, while the other man, found in "a little room to the side," was clad only in shorts, Sprayberry said. "It's quite a mess up there."

Fire Marshall Jerry Petree said it was too early to determine the cause of the fire but firemen said it appeared to have started near the stairwell behind the front office.

"We're just assisting the fire department right now," said investigator Bret Grove of the Midland County Sheriff's Office. "If it looks like it's criminal, then we'll take over."

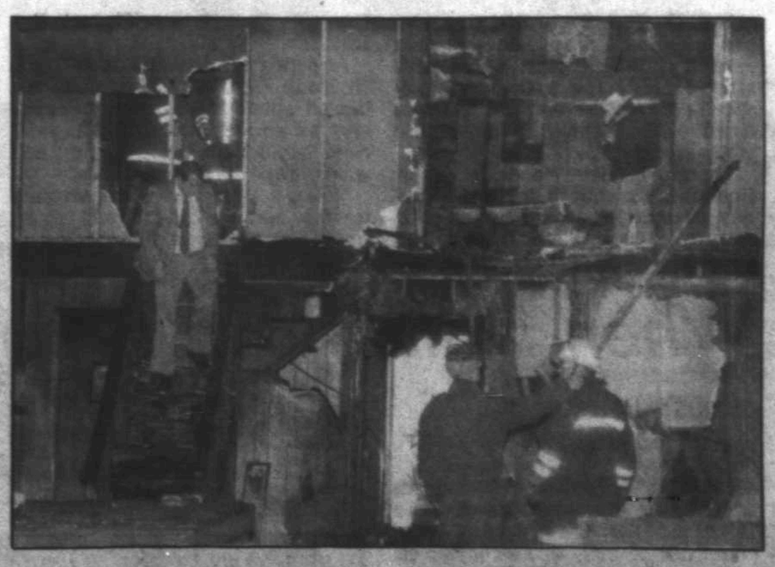

Blood tests on the two victims were ordered, Grove said.

Midland firemen also were called at 7:39 a.m. today to a fire at a mobile home off of U.S. Interstate 20 between County Roads 1260 and 1270. The fire, which completely destroyed the trailer house, was believed to have started when a pan of grease on a stove ignited, according to Ms. Kellogg.

Connie McDaniel was listed as the occupant of the trailer, which is owned by Tusha Buildings, 7800 W. Highway 80, according to fire department reports. Ms. McDaniel and an unidentified man and woman who also lived in the trailer were taken to a friend's house, according to a spokeswoman from the Midland Chapter of the American Red Cross.

A one-car rollover at FM 1788 and State Highway 158 at 9:30 a.m. today resulted in injuries to two persons.

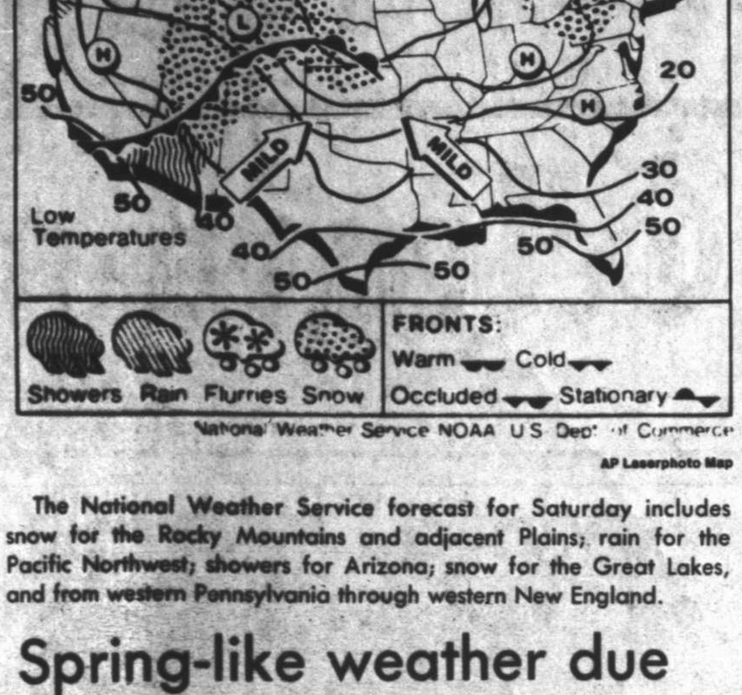

Lawrence Hill, 34, of 3210 Lockheed and Mike Mitcham, 23, of Odessa, were undergoing treatment at the Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room, a MMH spokeswoman said at 11 a.m. No further details were available.

Church, school react to shootings

By RICHARD EGGLESTON
Associated Press Writer

ONALASKA, Wis. — A church leader called for forgiveness after a man identifying himself after a Biblical prophet who fought the worship of false gods went into a church and killed three men, including a priest who allowed girls to read scripture during Mass.

"This is a day I'll never forget, to have somebody walk into a church like that and shoot randomly at innocent people," said Sister Rose Frances Phalin, principal of St. Patrick's School, after the Rev. John Rossiter, lay minister Ferdinand L. Roth Sr. and custodian William G. Hammes were felled.

The bodies of Rossiter, 64, and Roth, 55, were found in the St. Patrick's Catholic Church sanctuary shortly after a morning Mass attended by children from the parish school next door.

Police said a man who called himself Elijah and objected to girls reading scripture during Mass blasted the three with a shotgun.

Rossiter was shot just after he had hugged some of the children and they had returned to the school. Sister Phalin said that after Rossiter and Roth were shot, the gunman went to the church basement where Hammes, 66, was slain.

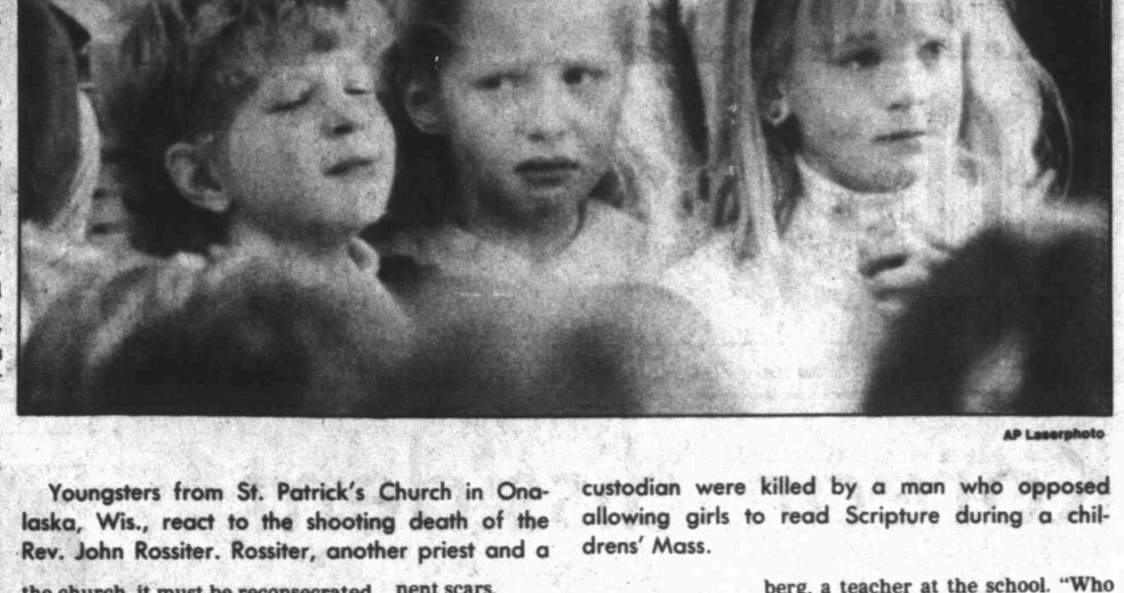

Funeral services are scheduled Monday for Rossiter, Roth and Hammes. A morning Mass was scheduled today at the parish school. Because a violent death occurred in the church, it must be reconsecrated next week before religious functions can be held there, officials said.

In coming weeks, Sister Phalin said, the school will have to turn its attention to emotional effects the slaying had on the children and try to make sure they leave no permanent scars.

"How do you deal with such a tragedy?" asked the Rev. Bernard McGarty, diocese communications director. "I think we deal with it with faith, with forgiveness, with hope."

"It's awful," said Loren Kannenberg, a teacher at the school. "Who knows why? People trigger off for the weirdest reasons."

The gunman identified himself as Elijah after he was arrested a few blocks away carrying a shotgun, said police Chief John Diouhy and La Crosse District Attorney Scott Horne.

Walesa calls convictions 'starting point'

Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa said today the convictions of four secret police officers in the murder of a Roman Catholic priest should be a starting point for a new dialogue between the Communist government and the people. But he said he continued to fear "for the future."

After the verdicts were announced Thursday, another Roman Catholic priest, the Rev. Antoni Lewek, urged worshipers gathered at the church where the slain priest had preached to prepare for an "ideological battle."

The Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko was abducted on a highway near Torun, in northern Poland, on Oct. 19, and his body was found bound, gagged and severely beaten, in a reservoir of the Vistula River 11 days later.

After a six-week trial, the five trial judges sentenced two of the defendants to 25 years in prison — the most severe penalty in Poland short of execution by hanging.

Walesa's statement, read over the telephone by assistant Henryka Kinaszewska from the southern skiing resort of Zakopane where Walesa was vacationing, was the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize winner's first public reaction to the verdicts.

"We would like to recognize this trial as a sign of the good will of the authorities toward accord, of the advantage of the force of law over the right of force," Walesa said. "But new facts occurred that make us doubt it."

He cited the government's decision not to allow prominent Solidarity activist Seweryn Blumsztajn to return to Poland on Tuesday from three years exile in France. Police stopped Blumsztajn at Warsaw airport and put him on a return flight to Paris on the grounds that he carried an improper passport.

"There is a need for forgiveness, but there is also a need for results in the struggle against evil," Walesa said. "If this doesn't happen, the chance created by the trial will be missed."

"In the end the trial didn't alleviate our fears for the future," Walesa said. "Let's not forget that a Polish priest was killed by the functionaries of the state authorities."

Chief Judge Artur Kujawa told the court Thursday that the defendants "soiled the good name of the Polish People's Republic. They put in shame the state's political system."

Kujawa's remarks were broadcast in full by state radio and television.

Col. Adam Pietruszka, the highest-ranking Interior Ministry official charged in the killing, received a 25-year prison sentence for aiding and abetting his three subordinates.

"Pietruszka's aid was a necessary condition for the success of the whole operation," Kujawa said.

The court convicted Capt. Grzegorz Piotrowski of kidnapping and murdering the priest and sentenced him to 25 years in jail, rejecting a prosecution request for the death sentence.

Piotrowski's two subordinates, Lts. Leszek Pekala and Waldemar Chmielewski, were found guilty of murder but received lighter prison terms because they were the "victims of actions by their superiors," in the words of the court. Pekala was sentenced to 15 years; Chmielewski, 14.

More than 1,500 people gathered for a Mass Thursday evening at St. Stanislaw Kostka Church in Warsaw where Popieluszko's monthly sermons used to draw thousands of Solidarity sympathizers.

Lewek told the faithful that the trial was a "painful and emotional" experience for all Polish Catholics because of the attacks against Popieluszko made by the government prosecutor.

"We must be ready for an ideological battle," Lewek said. "Not a battle with the use of sticks but with words and truth."

Poland's population of 33 million is predominantly Roman Catholic.

During the trial, the prosecutor had depicted Popieluszko as an extremist whose anti-government activities angered and frustrated Interior Ministry officers.

Moderate quake shakes ground near Bakersfield

BAKERSFIELD, Calif. (AP) — A moderate earthquake rattled the southern San Joaquin Valley, sending things "moving around quite a bit" and prompting a flood of calls from shaky residents.

The earthquake struck 11 miles northeast of here at 10:58 p.m. Thursday and measured 4.7 on the Richter scale at the seismology laboratory of the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena, spokesman Dennis Meredith said.

The California Office of Emergency Services measured the quake at 3.7, according to Charles O'Neal of the OES in Sacramento.

The area of the quake is 115 miles north of Los Angeles in the southern San Joaquin Valley.

Calls from shaky residents lit up the switchboard at the Kern County sheriff's station here 'like I don't know what," said dispatcher Betty Beenders.

"We felt it like a sonic-boom type," she said. None of the calls were to report damage to structures.

Karl Schweitzer of local television station KERO said he was on the second floor of his home when the quake hit. Schweitzer said the temblor lasted about 12 seconds and "had a nice roll" before it stopped. He added that "things (were) moving around quite a bit."

The Richter scale is a gauge of energy released by an earthquake as measured by ground motion on a seismograph.

Every increase in one number, from 2.5 to 3.5, for example, represents a tenfold increase in ground motion.

A quake of magnitude 2 is the smallest normally felt by people. A magnitude 4 quake can cause moderate damage and a magnitude 8 quake is capable of causing tremendous damage.

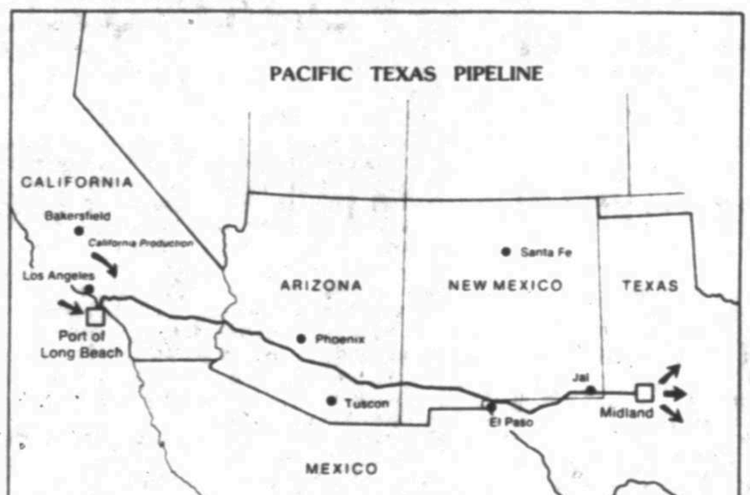

Authorities still searching roadsides for explosives

SHERMAN (AP) — Search crews are combing the roadsides to find several pounds of plastic explosives strewn along the path of a high-speed police chase that left one man dead and slightly injured one woman, authorities said.

Thomas Francis Woods Jr., 40, of Roanoke, was shot to death Wednesday after he led authorities on a 45-minute, 100-mph chase through Grayson County north of Dallas, said Grayson County Sheriff Jack Driscoll.

As police pursued him down Texas Highway 82, Woods fired shots and hurled about 15 bags of the explosive at police cars, Driscoll said. None exploded because they weren't wired properly, Driscoll said.

"We gave him every opportunity to stop, and we didn't even return fire when he threw those devices," Driscoll said.

PIPELINE

The pipeline will be constructed in eight different stretchs. Midland to El Paso will be one leg of the pipeline. As many as 3,000 workers will be employed on the project, which will require the spending of about $55 million a day and the purchase of 400 vehicles.

According to Owen, about one-half the pipe for the 42-inch pipeline will be purchased from U.S. Steel and will result in the re-opening of that firm's factory at Baytown. The remaining one-half of the pipe will be purchased from other domestic steel mills.

Sterns Catalytic of Denver will handle engineering and construction management of the pipeline. Morse-Knudsen will be the contractor.

Six major components of the pipeline include: two tanker berths in the outer harbor of Los Angeles; a terminal facility for the storage of 6 million barrels of oil, twin 48-inch pipelines from the berths to the terminal facility, 1,030 miles of 42-inch pipeline and a terminal facility at Midland which will store up to 4 million barrels.

Texas Pacific Pipeline Co. became involved in the pipeline project in 1979 after Sohio abandoned efforts to build the line because of severe environmental requirements in California. It will be solely a common carrier for most of the 1.8 million barrels of crude which flows out of Valdez, Alaska each day as well as a portion of the 500,000 barrels produced offshore and onshore in the Channel Islands of California, but will be financed with through put agreements from the major users Arco, Shell, Chevron and Texaco. The users will also share in the profits of the through put agreements.

"We have 21 major banks worldwide that will provide the financing at below U.S. prime," said Owen, a former resident of Sherman, who began his career as a roustabout in the East Texas oilfields, and later went on to develop and own 17 major shopping centers, and other numerous office and real estate holdings.

"We have until 1987 to get the pipeline operational," said Owen, "because that's when the pipeline across Panama, reverts to the Panaminian government."

He said America needed the pipeline for national security. After arriving in Midland the oil will be distributed through 14 pipelines to various points on the East Coast, and will be the only east-west oil pipeline west of Midland.

U.S., Australia hoping to regain New Zealand

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — With New Zealand on the sidelines, the membership of the the ANZUS alliance is now effectively reduced to the United States and Australia, but both countries say they hope New Zealand will reconsider its anti-nuclear policies.

Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke, winding up a three-day visit here Thursday, said, "We can only hope that on further consideration of this matter, the government of New Zealand may see some wisdom in adopting a new position."

Expressing a similar view, President Reagan said he still considers New Zealand a friend, adding that "it is our deepest hope that New Zealand will restore the traditional cooperation that has existed between our two countries."

The Australia-New Zealand-United States alliance once seemed the most stable of the Western military alliances, but that perception changed with New Zealand's decision earlier this week to deny port access to U.S. warships.

The action by New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange stemmed from U.S. refusal to declare publicly whether a U.S. warship scheduled to make a port call next month would carry nuclear weapons. The United States traditionally has refused to divulge such information.

Both Reagan and Hawke insisted that the alliance remains solid, but a senior official who briefed reporters after the two leaders met Thursday said, "It obviously isn't sound and solid with New Zealand, but it is the framework under which we work with Australia."

Hawke said Australia did not intend any punitive action against New Zealand, asserting that the Lange government was acting within its sovereign prerogatives.

On Capitol Hill, Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., said his Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs will open hearings later this month to consider legislation that would suspend U.S. defense obligations to New Zealand because of its decision.

HOUSES

IN THE TRI-PARTY loan participation, 5 percent of the payment will go to Petroplex, 50 percent to Fannie Mae and 45 percent to MHFC, according to Davidson. Interest rates might be as low as 8 percent.

With MHFC's involvement in subsidizing loans, Davidson said the organization can stay viable and keep the fund replenished as people repay their loans.

This effort is the first by any major institution to loan money for that area of Midland, according to Mrs. Starks.

"For so long, we've tried to get the lending institutions and builders interested on this side of town. During the boom, they told people to go across town," she said. "A number of young adults were born here, but they couldn't build here."

"I could see the falling away from the churches," added Mrs. Joiner. "The youngsters were moving out to the Loop and they wouldn't get up on Sunday morning and come back here for church."

When she moved to 500 S. Jackson 35 years ago, that tract was covered with trees. To the east were cotton fields. "There have never been any houses on these tracts," she said.

Today, the land is still deserted, but covered by weeds and mesquite.

"We dream a lot about this area," said Mrs. Starkes. Located close to East Highway 80, she and the others are concerned about the impression it gives people of Midland.

"We want to do something to improve Midland's image," she said.

When Dallas can't stand the cackles, it tackles grackles

By SUSANA HAYWARD
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — Swarms of blackbirds are leaving city parks smelly and full of cackling. But instead of using chemicals or high-tech sonic waves, park workers in rubber raincoats are tackling the grackles by sneaking up behind them, banging boards and yelling.

Often, the birds yell back.

Every sunset since Tuesday, hundreds of thousands of grackles have flapped into the downtown area. They loom over City Hall, Dealey Plaza and the Texas Schoolbook Depository.

"At 6:15 they'll be here. Thousands of 'em. You wait," said James Trollinger, a park worker who wound up spending a good part of Thursday evening trying to keep the birds from landing on the rows of live oak trees lining the sidewalks.

So did Felix Thomas and Ramiro Tiliano. Together, the trio watched the sky above Dealey Plaza, waiting for the grackles' prompt arrival.

When the sky blackened and the cawing became deafening, the three workers, armed with 12-inch wooden boards strapped and taped to their wrists, split up.

Thomas took the book depository. Trollinger manned Dealey Plaza and Ramiro headed for the Old County Courthouse. Another crew defended Ferris Plaza, while a third team fought for City Hall.

The workers clapped their boards together, ran back and forth and yelled. It became a contest of wills.

The birds yelled back. Sometimes they landed. But not for long.

"They'll never land as long as there's a racket," said Trollinger, ready for anything in his yellow rubber rain suit and matching boots. "Sometimes they get you."

"What we're trying to do is upset their roosting patterns, just like starving them," he explained. "Eventually, they get the message."

The grackle attack draws raised eyebrows from tourists and passersby.

"A lot of people think we're a bunch of nuts," said Trollinger. "They must think Dallas is strange."

But Trollinger can take it. He'd rather live with that for a couple of hours a night than scrape two inches of bird droppings off the sidewalk in the morning.

"Can you imagine people eating lunch with that around them?" asked Trollinger. "I'd rather do this."

It's not clear where the blackbirds are coming from.

"We think it's the Trinity River bottom," said Richard Zavala, general supervisor of the city Parks and Recreation Department.

Grackles live together most of the year. But at nesting time, they separate into smaller groups and nest in colonies in trees.

Tony types wonder: Will breakfast at Tiffany's soon be Egg McMuffin?

By ROBERT BARR

NEW YORK (AP) — The roast beef sandwiches have pushed up Fifth Avenue, three blocks away from Saks. Six blocks — can you believe it? — from Cartier. How long before breakfast at Tiffany's is an Egg McMuffin?

For the chic retailers of midtown Fifth Avenue, the orange and red sign of the Roy Rogers restaurant was about as welcome as fleas when it arrived three months ago. Genteel cries of alarm were heard at City Hall, where the possibility of banning food on the avenue is being examined.

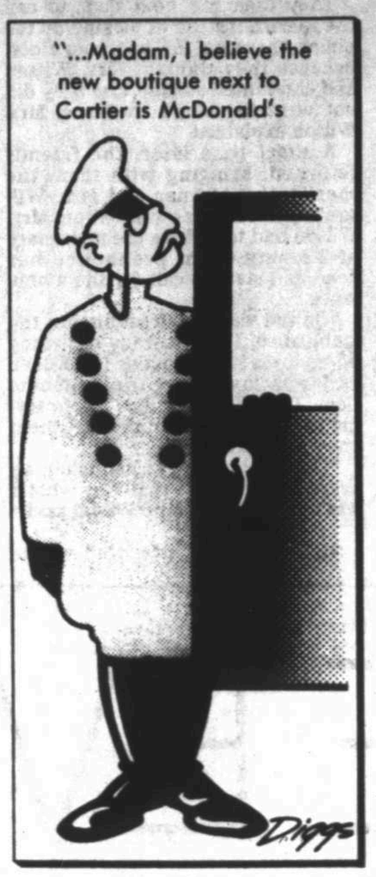

"If one comes, you sort of grit your teeth. But when you see the second, and the third, and the fourth, you become very much concerned," said Michael B. Grosso, executive vice president of the Fifth Avenue Association.

Many New Yorkers, said architect Robert A.M. Stern, are "culturally, socially and architecturally" offended by such changes.

Kent Barwick, president of the Municipal Arts Society, complained that the quicky food outlets "depend on loud, garish, inappropriate signage. It creates an area of chaos out of one of the great ceremonial streets in the world."

At the Riese Organization, which holds the Roy Rogers franchise, Murray Riese said no one has complained to him, except what he's heard from two reporters.

'If somebody was to come to me, who was in power, and could demonstrate there was a proper cause for concern...I'm sure that we would be cooperative," he said.

Roy Rogers was the last straw for Grosso, who had fretted as McDonald's moved in across from the Empire State Building at 34th Street, Burger King staked out a spot on 37th and Godfather's Pizza — another Riese project — popped up across from the New York Public Library at 42nd Street.

At 46th Street, Roy Rogers is within sight of the avenue's charge-card heaven: Saks, Gucci, Cartier, Aquascutum, Steuben, Tiffany, Bergdorf-Goodman, Bonwit-Teller.

The Fifth Avenue Association has petitioned the Department of City Planning to ban all street-level food sales between 32nd and 59th streets. The issue is "very sensitive," said Lauren F. Otis, deputy director of the Manhattan office.

"It's a very active use that many people feel is attractive," he said.

One problem is that the city can't ban just fast food — the law makes no distinction between four-star and four-stool restaurants.

Riese doubted that he has started a stampede of franchisers.

"I have a lot of confidence that they are not part of a group of lemmings about to commit suicide," he said. "None of us wants to saturate the neighborhood with restaurants."

"If they don't prosper, we don't prosper," Riese said of the big stores up the street. "It would be silly for us to want to hurt them."

Time was when Fifth Avenue was a gracious residential avenue, home to the Vanderbilts and their peers. A few of those houses survive as stores, such as Cartier.

Small Kentucky city home for Scouting museum

MURRAY, Ky. (AP) — This western Kentucky city of 14,000 may be an unlikely place for a national Boy Scout museum, but what's inside will be even more surprising to the 150,000 visitors the showcase is expected to draw annually.

Using robots and computer terminals, the museum will be designed to show how Scouting has matured during its 75-year history in America, said Darwin Kelsey, the museum's director.

Scouting is no longer fancy knots and wood carvings.

"Many people have the idea that Scouting involves just quaint skills that have no relation to the present day," Kelsey said in a recent interview. "In fact, Scout skills now get into electronics, computers and engineering."

Kelsey has spent the last two years planning the museum on the campus of Murray State University.

Directors of the Boy Scouts of America meet today in Washington, D.C., to complete those plans, he said, and the museum will open in the spring of 1986.

"It surprises a lot of people that we chose Murray," said Kelsey, who received bids from several large cities including Dallas, Philadelphia, Cincinnati and Detroit.

"Few people had ever heard of Murray, but the facilities and general resources they offered were superior to the other proposals we received, so here we came."

The deal required a committee of local residents and politicians to raise $2.5 million for the renovation of the museum's building.

Murray State contributed the building and about $300,000, and will continue to fund part of the museum's operating costs, said Don Kelly, a university administrator.

Kelly said the museum would provide educational and promotional opportunities for the school, and will probably become self-supporting in time.

The attraction is expected to bring about $3 million annually to the state, Kelsey said.

A highlight of the exhibits will be 54 paintings by Norman Rockwell, who gained his first large audience by illustrating the Scouts' monthly magazine, Boys' Life.

It also will house the papers of Sir Robert Baden-Powell, who founded the Scouts in Britain in 1908, and some of his paintings. Baden-Powell was "quite a competent artist in his own right," Kelsey said.

Robots will talk about Scouting, and visitors will be encouraged to engage in question-and-answer sessions with computer terminals to explore the program's values, Kelsey said.

"For example, visitors can use the terminals and pick an idea like trustworthiness and explore what that means to us in our own day," he said.

The Scouts maintained a museum at their former headquarters in North Brunswick, N.J., from 1959 until 1979.

Woman remembers night she was taken for dead

By TAMMYE NASH

HENDERSON, Texas (AP) — Yvonne Wilson vividly remembers the night she was taken for dead.

"I lay there on the floor and listened as the coroner pronounced me dead of a probable overdose. I lay there, unable to move, praying to God to please make something happen to let them know I was alive," she recalls.

"Then as the coroner was stepping over my body to pick up the phone to call the mortuary — he said it was too late to bother with calling an ambulance by then — just as he stepped over me, my arm raised up. It was probably the last convulsion in my body, and it let them know that I was alive and that they needed to call the ambulance and get help for me as soon as possible."

That is what Mrs. Wilson remembers about the night she was suddenly paralyzed by a mysterious nerve disorder known as Guillain-Barre Syndrome.

Alone in her house, her husband away on a business trip and both her son and daughter away at school, Mrs. Wilson awoke about 11 one night in May of 1971 to find that her throat seemed to be closing in. Her face and neck were numb.

In the few minutes after she woke up, Mrs. Wilson lay there helplessly as her arms and legs also became numb and useless. She began to have uncontrollable spasms. As she began to realize that something was desperately wrong, she struggled to pick up the telephone receiver beside her bed to call for help.

But her arms and fingers refused to respond to her brain's signals to dial the number. Even if she had managed to dial the operator, her tongue had become so thick and was rolling so in her mouth that she would have been unable to form the words that would have brought her aid.

AS SHE fought to pick up and dial the phone, convulsions in her limbs threw her from the bed, and she crashed to the floor, knocking the telephone receiver off the hook as she thrashed. She lay there on the floor for 10 and a half hours, nearly drowning in her own saliva because her paralyzed throat muscles were unable to swallow, before a concerned friend came to check on her.

"I lay there on the floor all that time, praying that someone would find me. I asked God to please not let me die, and there, as I lay on the floor surrounded by the quiet on the empty house, I heard Him answer that I would not die. I had His assurance that I would not die," Mrs. Wilson said.

"When I heard the clock strike 8:30 the next morning, I thought that at last people would be up and stirring, and that my friend would come to check on me. I had been feeling ill the day before, and she had gone to the doctor's office with me. She had been a little worried about me, so I thought she would surely come by.

"She told me later that she had tried to call, but kept getting a busy signal. That was because I had knocked the phone off the hook. She said that she told herself "Yvonne is already up and talking on the phone, so she's doing better this morning."

Between 8:30 and 9:00, Mrs. Wilson heard a car pull into the driveway. The doorbell rang several times, and her hopes soared. But then the doorbell stopped, and she heard the car pull away. Once again, she lay in despair.

BUT SHORTLY afterward, Mrs. Wilson again heard the reassuring sounds of a car pulling into the driveway, and this time the voices of her friend and her friend's husband and the sounds of their determined efforts to get inside the house let her know that help had finally arrived.

When the friend and her husband found Mrs. Wilson, lying inert on her bedroom floor, they panicked. Mrs. Wilson's face had turned blue, and her eyes had rolled back into her head. The extensive paralyis of her body hid all signs of her heartbeat and breathing, and her friends believed she was dead.

They then ran next door to call the sheriff, instead of picking up the phone there on the bedroom floor, because they thought Mrs. Wilson had committed suicide, and they did not want to disturb evidence, Mrs. Wilson explained.

A short time later, the friends returned, bringing with them the sheriff, the coroner and Mrs. Wilson's pastor. That was when Mrs. Wilson had to endure the nightmare of hearing them pronounce her dead and start to call for the ambulance.

"On the way to the hospital in the ambulance, I was literally drowning on my own saliva, just as I had been as I was laying on the bedroom floor. I couldn't talk, but I kept trying to point to my mouth to let them know I was drowning.

"They still thought I had taken an overdose, and that that was what I was telling them," Mrs. Wilson said.

SHE WAS was admitted to the hospital and immediately put on a respirator, with at least two people standing watch at her bedside 24 hours a day. Her husband and children were notified and rushed to be with her.

But it wasn't until six days later that the doctors discoverd that Mrs. Wilson suffered from myeloradiculoneuritis, or Guillain-Barre Syndrome, a rare disease with no known cause or cure.

Doctors do not know what causes it, but a variety of events seem to trigger the onset of the disease. Many cases occur a few weeks after a viral infection, including the common cold, sore throat and stomach and intestinal viruses. Some cases have been associated with specific viral infection, such as infectious mononucleosis and viral hepatitus, and others have occurred with a rare disease of red blood cells called porphyria.

Still other cases have occurred after such seemingly unrelated events as surgery, insect stings and various injections.

Herpes can be transmitted nonsexually

Solomon

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have had a close relationship with one woman, and with only one woman, for the past two years. Now I find myself with a case of genital herpes and I feel I might as well have been playing the field for all the good it did me. The woman swears that she hasn't had sexual relations with anyone but me during these past two years, but I don't see how this is possible. What is your answer to this? — Stanley, Bridgeport, Conn.

Dear Stanley: I can't tell you your friend hasn't had sexual relations with anyone but you during the past two years, but I can tell you that genital herpes can be transmitted in a nonsexual fashion.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Until a short time ago, I worked with a man who complained about being tired. In fact, he had a reputation of being somewhat lazy. Then we found out that he had multiple sclerosis. Do all these patients complain of being tired? — Jack, Scrannna.

Dear Jack: According to Dr. Randolph B. Schiffer, of Strong Memorial Hospital in Buffalo, N.Y., fatigue is one of the psychological manifestations of multiple sclerosis. As you note in your letter, some people may misinterpret the fatigue as an indication of laziness.

A modification in schedule for these patients may be advisable to provide them with rest at appropriate times during the day.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am pregnant and my husband wants me to ask my obstetrician to use ultrasound so that we would know the sex of the baby. I don't like the idea but I don't have any good arguments against it. Do you think I should do what my husband suggests? — Mrs. W.L., Milton, Penna.

Dear Mrs. L.: I doubt that your obstetrician would consent to the use of ultrasound simply to determine the sex of the fetus. A panel of experts has recommended against the use of ultrasound for such purposes.

Ultrasound is a valuable tool, but its effects, if any, are not completely known, and its routine use is not recommended.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there a vaccine that can keep a person from getting pneumonia? If so, who should get it? — Mrs. G.L., St. Petersburg, Fla.

Dear Mrs. L.: There is a vaccine against most strains of pneumonia. It lasts for five to 10 years and is recommended only for people in high-risk groups, such as the elderly and those with chronic respiratory disorders.

According to Dr. Denise J. Washburne, of Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, the vaccine can be administered at any time of the year and takes about two weeks before immunity is provided.

For Alexis, Gaithersburg, Md.: Potatoes provide more than carbohydrates. They also furnish vitamin C, thiamine, potassium and iron, among other nutrients. Consuming the entire potato, including the skin, enhances its nutritional value.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

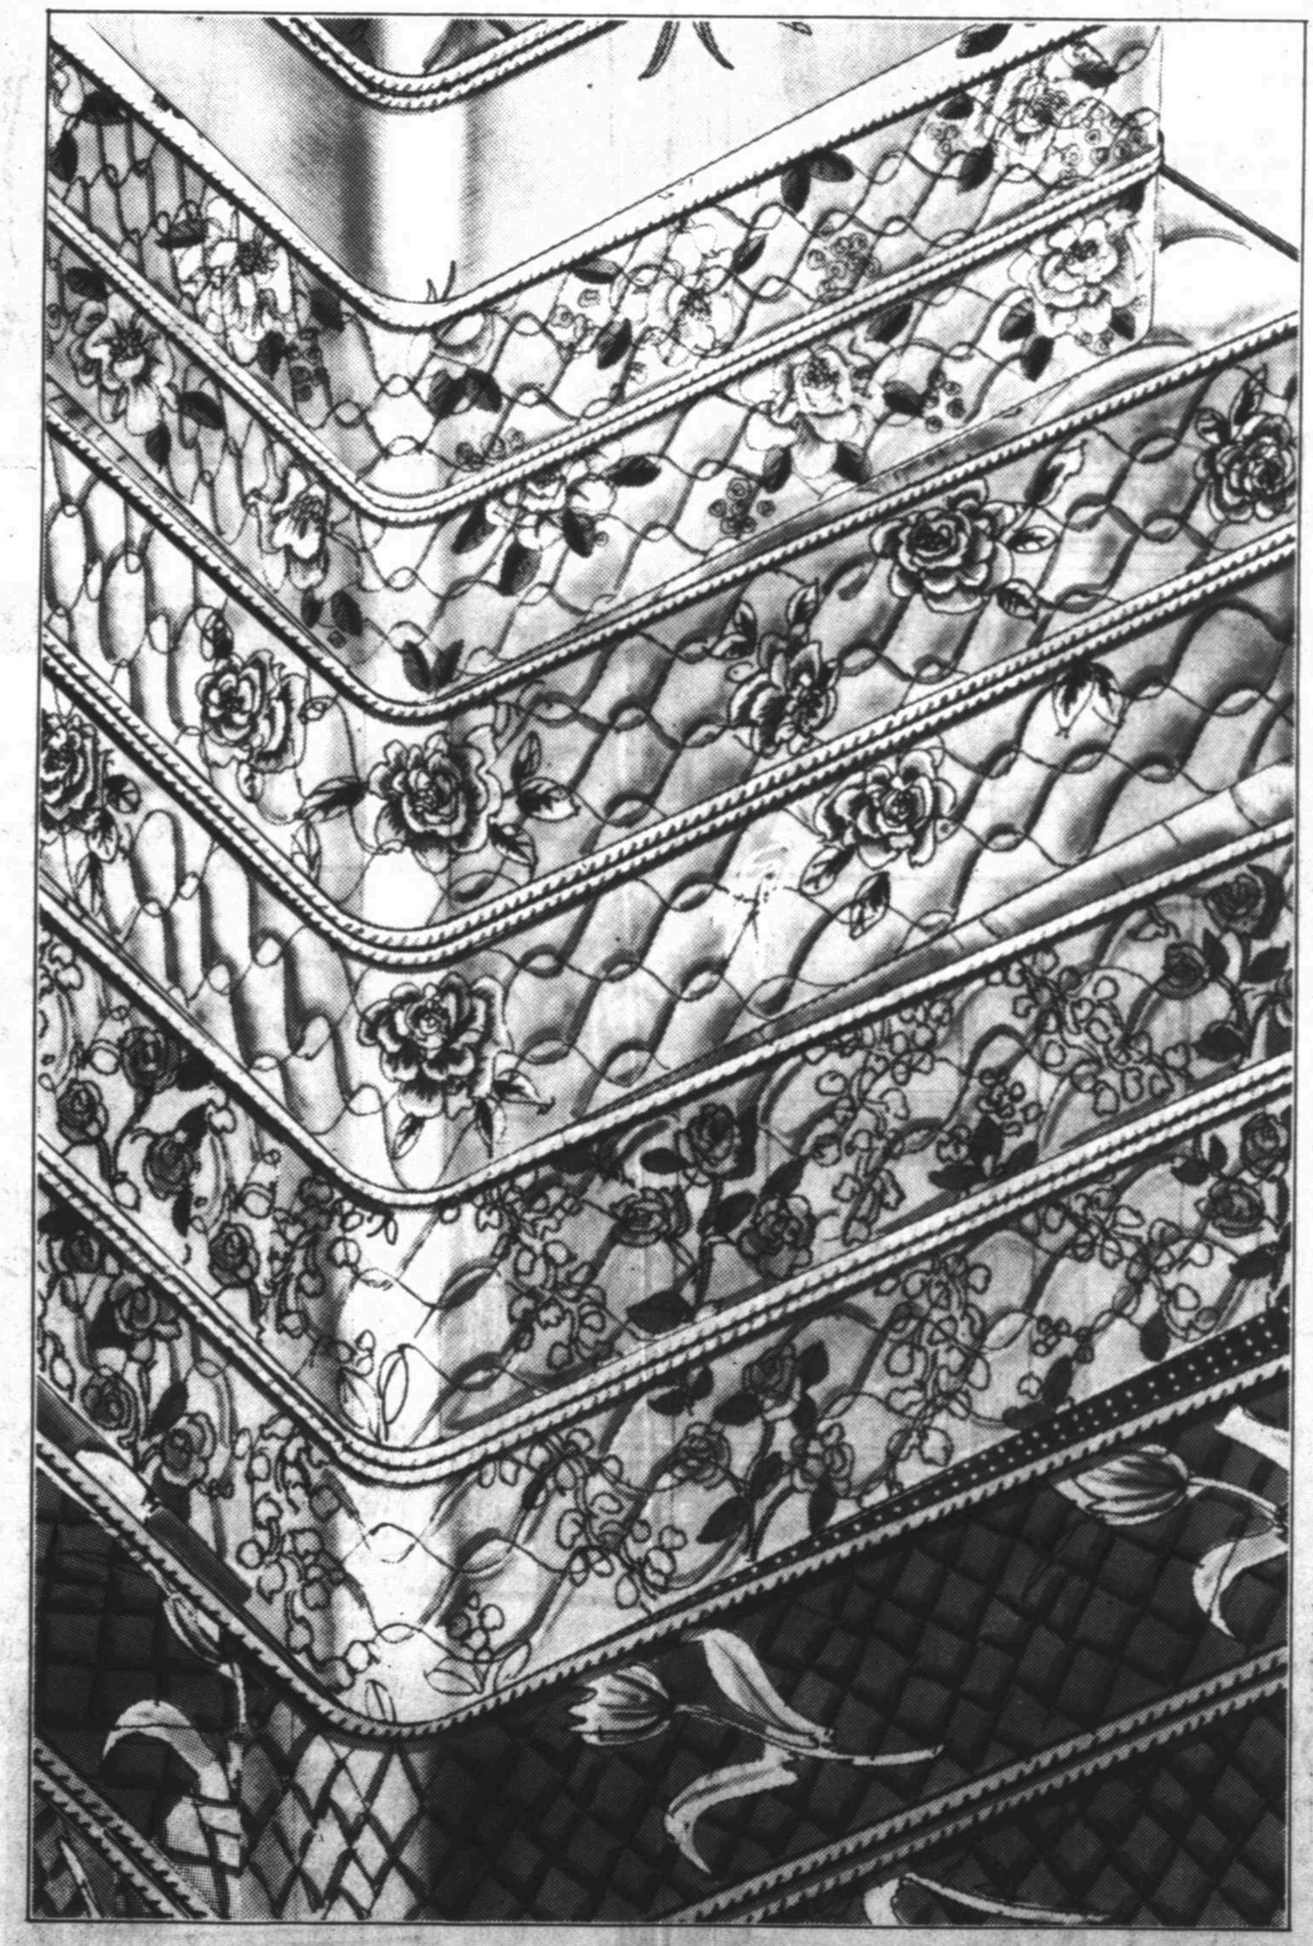

Who'll drive on wrong side of Channel tunnel?

LONDON (AP) — Since the British drive on the left and the Continent drives on the right, if the English Channel is bridged or tunneled, who'll drive on the wrong side of the road?

Teddy Taylor, a Conservative member of Parliament, said he asked whether there would be a changeover in the middle when he put the question to Transport Minister David Mitchell.

"I will answer this question shortly," was Mitchell's written reply to Parliament.

Denison supper club fulfills man's dream

DENISON, Texas (AP) — If you had the time of your life dancing to the strains of Glenn Miller's Orchestra; if you fondly remember dancing at an up-town supper club; if the kind of trivia question you can answer is who sang the original version of "Across the Alley from the Alamo" — then an evening at the Stardust Ballroom and Supper Club on Main Street should be right up your alley.

Owning and operating a supper club like the Stardust Ballroom has been Howard Mahoney's dream since he was a child. Mahoney's father owned half-interest in the Hollywood Paladium, where the young boy would sneak in and hide under tables "listening to the greats (musicians) of the day."

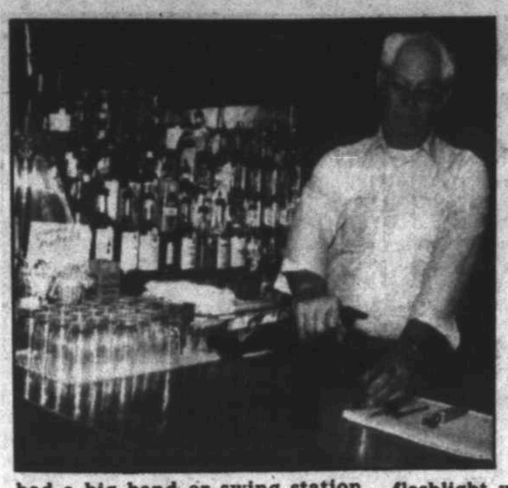

This interest was rekindled in 1962 when Mahoney bought a reel-to-reel tape recorder and began transferring his old 78 rpm records to tape. At the same time he was planning on what he would do with his retirement years.

The answer to his retirement dilemma came when his interest in swing era music flamed into a dream that grew and eventually involved the other seven members of his family. This happened four years ago on when a radio station from Fort Worth put on a Glenn Miller show in Dallas.

"My wife and I went to that show and we've been talking about swing music ever since. On our way home from Dallas I told her and our friends who were with us that I was going to bring Big Band to Denison," Mahoney said.

At the time of the Glenn Miller nostalgia show, Mahoney was working as a trucker, delivering mobile home units from a factory in Bonham to cities in Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas. Mahoney had plenty of time by himself to think and plan how to make his dream come true.

"Whenever I'd drive to a new area I'd search the dial and see if they had a big band or swing station. Most larger cities had one. I thought about having a ballroom or a supper club all the time. Whenever I was driving around the Sherman-Denison area I would look for locations for a ballroom," Mahoney said.

Mahoney and his wife looked for just the right place for their business. They tried to get leases on several places, such as the building where the Brass Rail is now located and a larger place which is now Electric Company Phase II. Four different buildings went to those who got the money down sooner.

"I was getting pretty depressed by then," Mahoney said. "I had quit driving and I didn't have a paycheck coming in. I looked at several other places like the Denison Hotel Ballroom but none of them seemed right. Then Lewis Pollaro said, 'Why don't you take a look at the old Star Theater?"

Mahoney took Pollaro's advice, and looked at the building, which was built in 1913 and had housed both the State and Star theaters. The building had no electricity and Mahoney and his friend looked at the old building by the dim light of a flashlight with "nearly-dead" batteries.

"Somehow I knew it was the right place for the ballroom-supper club I wanted to build. It had survived past the era of swing music and it had survived being a video arcade and pool hall. I could just envision it — everything — where it would go, how it would look. It even had a stage big enough to hold a full orchestra," Mahoney said with enthusiasm that leaves no doubt how that junk-filled old ghost of a movie theater was transformed into a 1984 Texas version of the Paladium.

The exterior of the building captures the mood of the period that gave birth to swing music. Denison artist Bobby Brown designed the "Stardust" logo. He created the life-sized, cut-out figures, displayed above the marquee, which depict musicians playing various instruments and dancers in the 1930s dress "swinging" to the music.

To add a truly authentic touch, Mahoney commissioned Brown to paint some posters of the "greats" of the swing era. These "one sheet" posters are exhibited in the glass display cases on the exterior of the building.

Mahoney opened his ballroom Nov. 17, but he's waiting until later to hold a grand opening.

"I'll have a grand opening after I've gotten the kitchen set up and the dance floor enlarged. Right now it's only about two-thirds of a dream. I've already invested over $75,000, so I went ahead and opened up. I want to turn some of that outgo into income so I can finish the place."

Finished or not, the Stardust Ballroom and Supper Club with its sparkling silver and "wisp" blue walls, glitter-sprayed ceiling and four-foot diameter mirror ball offers those who visit a step back in time, even before the music begins. When Mahoney and family complete Phase 1 of his dream, the 1930s effect will be even more dramatic.

"We'll have a hat and coat-check service, a cigarette girl with a short skirt, fancy bloomers and flash camera. We'll have a menu offering international cuisine and maybe even valet parking," Mahoney plans out loud.

Those who like the sound but don't know the steps can take ballroom dancing lessons at Stardust from George McKinney, a sort of "independent contractor" at Stardust, according to Mahoney.

The charm of the atmosphere seems to be working on some of the customers, who were overheard to say, "This could bring back snuggling on the dance floor."

The Stardust Ballroom offers a variety of entertainment. On Tuesday night the jazz enthusiasts will hear their favorite tunes. Wednesday night is amateur night, and patrons are encouraged to bring their own fiddles or jokes. Conservative country and western music a la Bob Wills is the Thursday night fare. Friday night brings a potpourri of early rock'n'roll.

Wright confident he will be next speaker

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Hearst News Service

Jim Wright

WASHINGTON — House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, said Thursday he has more than enough pledges from Democratic members to make him the next speaker of the House in January, 1987.

Wright, 62, has been considered as the heir apparent to House Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., but rumbling about a possible challenge has been heard recently on Capitol Hill.

"Several of my friends suggested there was a certain amount of intrigue and speculation and thought it would be good to clear the air and find out how many friends I have," Wright said.

He claimed 184 commitments from the 250 Democrats who plan to seek re- election in 1984. He was unable to contact a few, and others, who did not make a firm pledge, indicated they would vote for him, Wright said.

Asked if reporters could see the list of supporters, Wright said, "No, they're in my pocket, and I hope they stay there."

Grumbling about the Democratic leadership this year is coming from "disaffected members...who feel there ought to be changes of some kind or another," Wright said.

With the question settled of who will succeed O'Neill, Democrats can "concentrate on other things, such as the legislative program," he said.

Demonstrating his strength, Wright was surrounded at the press conference by more than a dozen members from both liberal and conservative wings of the party.

Majority Whip Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., and Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., two frequently-mentioned potential challengers to Wright, said they are among those committed to him.

In turn, Foley, who will be in the running to succeed Wright, received an endorsment from Wright when a reporter asked after the news conference who will win the majority leader's job.

"Honest to God, I don't know," Wright said, adding: "I think Tom Foley would be a great majority leader. I don't know of anybody I would prefer to Tom Foley at all..."

Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, chairman of the Conservative Democratic Forum, the self-styled "boll weevils," said they are all supporting Wright.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, another possible contender for the speaker's post, was absent from Wright's list of supporters. "He said he would think it over and get back to me," Wright explained.

Democratic Rep. Jack Brooks, dean of the Texas delegation, was a key organizer of the early groundswell for Wright. He said the breadth of support was "almost unbelievable."

A reporter asked Wright after the press conference if he had forgiven Brooks for voting against him for majority leader in 1976. "I forgive easy," Wright laughed. "I have no enemies' lists, but I do have friends' lists."

In that year, Brooks had made an early commitment to now-retired Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., for majority leader and kept his promise after the fellow Texan jumped in the race, perhaps learning a lesson about the value of early pledges.

Authorities seize more than $5 million

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Three men arrested while allegedly trying to leave the country with more than $5 million cash were held without bond today pending a federal court hearing.

The three — Gus Maestrales, 38, Oscar Rodriguez-Feo, 48, and Francisco Guirola-Beeche, 34 — made an initial appearance Thursday before U.S. Magistrate Eduardo de Ases who ordered them held until a bond hearing Monday morning.

A federal complaint said the three last month took the same plane to El Salvador after filing a flight plan from Texas to Florida.

A fourth man, Arturo Guerra, 50, was released after being questioned Thursday by federal officials, U.S. Customs spokesman Charles Conroy of Houston said.

"We determined he had no knowledge of the situation and was just hired as a co-pilot," said Ernest Allison of Brownsville, resident district agent in charge of criminal investigation for the U. S. Customs Service.

Maestrales gave his residence as Boca Raton, Fla. Rodriguez-Feo is a native of Cuba, but now lives in Miami. Francisco Guirola-Beeche, gave addresses in Albuquerque, N.M., and Costa Rica, a clerk in the magistrate's office said.

The three are in the Nueces County Jail.

They were arrested by U.S. Customs and Immigration and Naturalization Service agents about midnight Wednesday at Kleberg County Airport as they boarded a T-39 Sabreliner.

Agents of the U.S. Customs Service Ernest Allison, left, and Ed Mercado Jr., examine suitcases containing more than $5 million which were confiscated from four men trying to leave the country. Two Americans, a Cuban and a Costa Rican were arrested late Wednesday at the Kleberg County Airport in Kingsville.

They were charged with violating the Currency and Foreign Transaction Reporting Act, which requires anyone taking more than $10,000 in or out of the country to report it to customs agents, Conroy said.

He said customs agents, acting on a tip as well as on information from an on-going investigation of drug smuggling and currency violations, arrested the men.

Department of Public Safety agents and Kleberg County Sheriff's deputies also participated in the arrests.

In addition to the cash, government officials also seized the aircraft, worth an estimated $3 million.

Reports on the exact amount carried by the four differ. DPS records show $5,818,000 was seized, while McAllen Border Patrol headquarters chief Silvestre Reyes said the amount was $5,625,000.

The money displayed at the Customs Service office in Corpus Christi Thursday was packed in seven large suitcases.

Each suitcase contained a number of brown paper packages with $10 and $100 bills.

Maestrales was identified as the owner of the Commercial Aviation Enterprises in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and is believed to be the owner of the confiscated T-39 Saberliner twin-engine jet.

A section of the complaint form filed by the U.S., Customs Service said that in January one or more of the defendants transported about $1 million in unreported money from the U.S. to Panama using the same jet plane.

On Jan. 22, Maestrales, Guirola-Beeche and Rodriguez-Feo left Alice, Texas, in the same aircraft with a flight plan filed for Fort Lauderdale, Fla. In the air, they changed their flight for San Salvador, El Salvador, the complaint said.

On Wednesday, the complaint said, the three men filed a flight plan from the John Wayne Airport, Santa Ana, Calif., to Alice. As the plane decended on its approach to Alice, the plane diverted to the Kleberg County Airport about 35 miles to the southwest.

Democratic judges expected to switch parties

AUSTIN (AP) — U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm's Republicanization of Texas was expected to continue today at a Dallas news conference where an announcement was to be made that several Democratic judges would switch parties.

Democratic Gov. Mark White tried to dissuade the judges Thursday in a 90-minute closed-door session during which he spoke of loyalty and his plans to seek re-election next year.

Gramm, himself a former Democrat, scheduled an afternoon news conference in Dallas.

White said he failed to draw a commitment from any of the five Dallas County judges. After the meeting, State District Judge Don Koons said he had not made up his mind. But Koons indicated that political survival might dictate a switch.

"I think as a Republican there's probably a better chance for re-election in a countywide race in Dallas County," he said.

Ten of Dallas County's 68 judges are Democrats.

"I would be comfortable as a conservative in either party," Koons said, adding, however, "I'm interested in continuing some of the programs I've started. I'd like to stay on board if I can."

The judge said White was "optimistic" that the Democrats could make a strong comeback next year.

"He said he expected to be" a candidate for re-election, Koons said of White. "He indicated he probably would expect to file and if he did that would help the ticket."

White said he told the judges, "I've always said loyalty had a high priority with me. We talked about that at some length."

Also at the meeting were State District Judges Ron Chapman and Thomas Thorpe and County Judges Bill Coker and Mike Schwille. Those four could not be located for comment after the meeting.

Earlier this week, Schwille said the Democratic Party had "gotten too liberal for old rock-bottom conservatives to tolerate."

"That's as far as I'm going to go. You'll know Friday (today)," he said.

White said the judges were concerned about "whimsical change in the top of the ballot having a whiplash at the bottom of the ballot and turning altogether very capable judges out of office and not necessarily putting capable ones into office."

Koons and White said changes are needed in the judicial selection process.

"It's pretty difficult to ask a voter to sort through a list of 120 to 130 people and pick the 68 you think are best qualified," the judge said.

Also at his weekly news conference, White offered cautious endorsement to the recent selection of Paul Kirk as national chairman of the Democratic Party.

Hightower says Reagan, Stockman don't understand farmers' problems

AUSTIN (AP) — President Reagan and his budget director don't understand farmers or their problems, and the administration's new farm proposals prove it, the Texas agriculture commissioner says.

"It isn't just a matter of budget and numbers and statistics and (budget director) David Stockman's madness. It's a deliberate policy of economic genocide," Agriculture Commission Jim Hightower said Thursday.

"It's a killer. At least a third of the commercial operators in this state and across the country will be bankrupt within a year under that program. It's going to destroy the family farm sector," he said in an interview.

Reagan's plans, presented this week to Congress, aim to cut, limit or eliminate price supports, income and loan subsidies, federal farm loans, soil and water conservation, cost-sharing funds, acreage set-asides and many other farm programs.

If adopted, farm state legislators say the Reagan plan would reduce federal outlays to agriculture by 37 percent.

In addition, Stockman made a stinging attack on farm loan aid, saying he can't understand why the government should "refinance bad debt that was willingly incurred by consenting adults." He said farm state congressmen "blackmailed" the administration into action on farm credit problems.

Hightower said Stockman's criticism and the Reagan program demonstrate that they don't understand farm economics.

The agriculture commissioner noted that grain embargos and other federal policies made the federal government a key player in the farm economy.

Stockman's criticism, Hightower said, "is a typical pointy headed bureaucratic sort of view. It's, 'Well, damn the farmers.' It's typical."

The federal government "establishes an economic policy that drives them out of business" and then government officials "point the finger of blame at them," Hightower said. "That's been done before. That's what (President Herbert) Hoover did during the Depression."

Hightower, who was a close adviser to Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale on farm policy, also criticized the Reagan administration's plan to expand federal aid to financially strapped farmers.

The plan would allow bankers to offer farmers lower interest rates on loans backed by federal guarantees. About $625 million of the $650 million in loan guarantees unveiled by Reagan last autumn have gone unused as many lenders refused to accept the requirement that they write off 10 percent of the value of the troubled loans.

Under the new plan, a lender can lower the restructured loan's interest rate, or use a combination of interest reduction and loan capital write off. But the lender's loss must still equal the value of forgiving 10 percent of the loan's value.

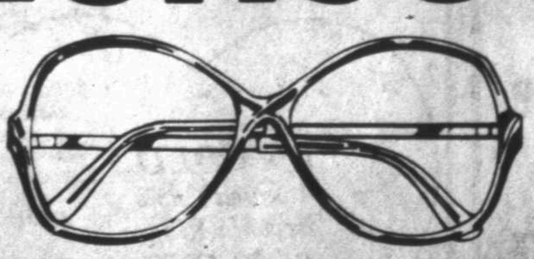

Hightower called the plan "a joke" because banks won't do it and farmers still aren't getting high enough prices for crops to make money to repay loans.

"You go ask any banker. Bankers aren't going to do that. And even if they do, you can't just do a sort of restructuring of loans if you don't deal with the need to get prices up for farmers," Hightower said.

"No matter how stretched out your loan payment is, you still have to be able to make an income to pay that loan off. You've got to couple the two."

Admiral 'cautioned' about taking Soviet guns from Grenada

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Vice Adm. Joseph Metcalf III, returning from command of the U.S. invasion of Grenada in October 1983, tried to bring back more than a dozen captured Soviet-made automatic rifles despite military and federal prohibitions, Defense Department sources said Thursday.

At least seven lower-ranking Marines and soldiers, including an Army captain, were court-martialed and ordered jailed for as long as three years for similar actions. Some also tried to sell the weapons, military spokesmen said. A Navy spokesman said Metcalf was "cautioned" but not punished.

According to the sources, Metcalf told investigators that he brought back the AK-47 rifles as souvenirs and was not aware of prohibitions.

Navy officials issued a statement that the Navy "considers the matter closed" and declined to elaborate. Metcalf, deputy chief of naval operations for surface warfare, could not be reached for comment.

The officials said the court-martialed Marines, who also fall under the Navy's jurisdiction, had been warned specifically not to keep captured weapons, which was not the case for at least the convicted Army officer.

Metcalf, 56, was returning to Atlantic Fleet headquarters in Norfolk with senior aides Nov. 3, 1983, when U.S. Customs Services officials boarded their aircraft after receiving what Pentagon sources said was an anonymous tip. Metcalf was commander of the Second Fleet at the time.

METCALF'S PLANE, according to Customs Service spokesman Christine Frazer, contained 24 AK-47s of the type supplied to Grenada's leftist government and to Cuban troops on the island. The shipment also included 24 empty ammunition magazines, she said.

Pentagon sources said 16 of the weapons were labeled for Metcalf and his staff.

According to military regulations, U.S. servicemen returning from combat duty are allowed to bring certain "war trophies" and firearms. The code, drafted in 1969 when U.S. involvement in Vietnam was near its peak, notes certain exceptions, however, including automatic weapons.

The National Firearms Act also prohibits importing automatic weapons without proper authorization or license. Jack Killorin, spokesman for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, said the prohibition includes AK-47s.

Ms. Frazer said Metcalf's case had been turned over to the Naval Investigative Service. Pentagon sources said the in-house investigation was completed within a month of Metcalf's return.

In Thursday's statement, Navy spokesman Capt. Brent Baker acknowledged the incident. "Vice Adm. Metcalf has been cautioned regarding the capture and disposition of enemy weapons following battle," Baker said. "He has been apprised of the existing regulations governing the disposal of such weapons and the rules prohibiting their retention as souvenirs. He is now in compliance with those regulations. The Navy considers the matter closed."

Admiral Joseph Metcalf

Five soldiers from the Army's 82nd Airborne Division were court-martialed, fined, imprisoned and dismissed from the service for related offenses after serving in Grenada, according to Army spokesman Lt. Col. Craig McNab.

CAPT. JOHN E. Dorsz, 28, was convicted of larceny, conspiracy to commit larceny and conduct unbecoming an officer and sentenced to a year in prison. He said at his court-martial that he brought five AK-47s from Grenada, intending to keep one as a souvenir, give two to his alma mater, the Valley Forge Military Academy, and two to lower-ranking soldiers in his unit.

According to testimony, Dorsz turned in the guns after realizing that he should not have them and after hearing about a federal amnesty program. But Army prosecutors said they should not be bound by federal amnesty promises since they had conducted an independent investigation, according to news accounts.

Dorsz, released last year before serving his full sentence, also was dismissed from the Army and fined $500 a month for one year.

Four noncommissioned Army officers were fined, sentenced to hard labor for terms ranging from nine months to two years, demoted to private and given bad-conduct discharges.

Marine spokesman Capt. Mark Hough said at least two Marines have been court-martialed for offenses related to arms captured in Grenada, while a third faces trial.

Sons wait for divers to find mom's body

FAIRMONT, W.Va. (AP) — Two sons of a woman who leaped from a bridge into the ice-covered Monongahela River ended a riverside vigil Thursday night, even though they had vowed not to leave until divers found her body.

John Yereb and his brother, Dan, had erected a plastic lean-to along the river's east bank, vowing to stay their until officials made a second attempt to find the body of their mother, Laura Yereb. Two firefighters in a rubber raft had made one unsuccessful attempt, and authorities said the freezing temperatures had made rescue efforts too dangerous.

The Yerebs ended the vigil Thursday night after being assured that a barge would be used to break up the ice and look for the body.

"One of the coal companies volunteered to bring a barge down and break the ice," said Fairmont city police Lt. Edward DeVito. "It's going to be down in a few days."

"Their line is they don't want to risk a life for one that's already been lost. That's a comfortable cop out for them," the 31-year-old John Yereb had said, staring at the river.

Mrs. Yereb plunged between 80 and 100 feet from the Third Street Bridge into the river Saturday night, just 5½ hours after she was released from a hospital where she had been treated for depression.

John Yereb returned home Sunday from his job at Andrews Air Force Base in Alexandria, Va., to await the retrieval of his mother's body only to learn that nothing was being done.

AP Laserphoto

John Yareb, center, his brother Dan, left, and their cousin, Bill Bland, have ended their vigil on the banks of the Monongahela River while authorities searched for the body of Yarebs' mother. John Yareb says the wait has been frustrating because Fairmont, W.Va., officials have called off the search until the ice cover has disappeared.

On Wednesday he and his brother erected a plastic lean-to along the river's east bank, vowing to stay there until officials make another attempt to find his mother's body.

"We're just sitting here until they take our mother from the river so we can put her to rest. No one deserves to lie down there, not a wino from under the bridge, and not our mother," Yereb said.

State police have decided against sending divers into the river because of the ice. Sgt. P.L. Ferguson said the water's temperature doesn't matter because of the thermal wet suits the divers use. Land temperatures Thursday were in the teens.

"You can't dive unless you want to take a chance on losing your divers," he said. "They've got to come out the same hole they go in."

The river bottom is a debris-strewn bed in which divers can become entangled, Ferguson added.

Fairmont Fire Chief David Wimer said waiting several days for the ice to break up probably wouldn't hinder the search.

"The chances that she is in that area are probably good. The current is swift directly under the ice, but she probably hit the ice at 50 to 70 mph in a vertical position and probably went directly to the bottom," he said.

Yereb had called Gov. Arch Moore and Rep. Alan Mollohan to have the search renewed. The family has even considered hiring a tugboat to push a barge through the river to break up the ice so divers could enter the water, he said.

"I don't know how much that would cost, or where we'd get the money for that," Yereb said.

Some capital residents seeing red over proposed arch

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayor Marion Barry's acceptance of China's offer to help build an ornate, $1 million archway in the capital's Chinatown distrct has some residents seeing red over the prospect of "communist" monument in their neighborhood.

"It's regrettable the mayor went to Peking and accepted the arch," Bosco Lee, chairman of the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association, a group of 21 civic groups with an interest in Chinatown, said Thursday. "I do not want a communist arch in our capital."

"If we have the archway, Americans will say, 'You Chinese are all commies,'" said Lawrence Locke, a member of Lee's group. "Our interests are at stake. It's our territory."

The National Capital Planning Commission, which approved the project, has advised the city to continue to meet with the Chinese community on plans for the arch.

The archway is expected to cost between $800,000 and $1 million, half of which will be paid for by the Chinese government in Peking, sister city of Washington.

The arch, which will span more than 63 feet and be 47 feet tall, is being billed as the largest and most ornate Chinatown archway in North America.

Charles Donnenfeld, an attorney for the group, said, "The people in Chinatown have no problem with the arch as such. We just don't want Chinatown as the focus of it."

He suggested it could be built on the outskirts of the neighborhood or in another part of the city.

Fred Greene, director of the city's Office of Planning, said city officials have discussed the arch with the dissenting group over the past year and "so we don't see a need to start another citizen input process."

Greene noted that representatives of the dissenting group were members of the Chinatown Steering Committee, which originally approved the project in July, and said, "their opinions and voices were heard."

Greene said if the opposing members of the community have "additional input they can call or meet with us. But for the time being we are going ahead with our plans and will be looking at their proposals."

CDC says 10 states report flu outbreak

ATLANTA (AP) — Federal health officials say 10 states were hit by widespread flu outbreaks last week.

The national Centers for Disease Control said 39 states have now reported the flu strain which researchers call A-H3N2, or the Philippines flu. Ten states — New Hampshire, Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, Wyoming, Nebraska and South Dakota — reported outbreaks of "flu-like illness" in areas involving more than half the state's population last week.

The CDC, in its weekly report Thursday, said six states have now reported type B influenza, or the Russian flu.

Senate panel questions defense budget request

Weinberger

WASHINGTON — A bipartisan barrage of skepticism and criticism was levelled at the Pentagon budget Thursday when Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger defended the military buildup that has more than doubled its growth since Reagan took office.

Senate Budget Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., was explicit in his view that the defense budget would be cut sharply from Weinberger's request for $314 billion in spending authority, partly because "the deficits are of such magnitude that they threaten our economic stability." The deficits problem, Domenici added, will remain as serious for the rest of the 1980's as restoration of defense growth was during the first half of this decade.

The skepticism among committee members was pervasive as Weinberger defended every last cent in his budget.

After Weinberger spent a half-hour exlaining why the defense budget must be protected from any reductions, he warned that a budget freeze would mean a three to four year delay on the B-1 Bomber, a 38 percent cut in tactical aircraft, a slippage of three years in the C-5 program, a scuttling of the mobile launcher and a two-ship reduction in the Trident submarine program.

Domenici said, in effect, he didn't believe it.

He grilled Weinberger on what weapons systems were scrapped in the last four years when Congress gave the Defense Department only 96 percent rather than 100 percent of Reagan's budget requests, which was a $60 billion dollar reduction from the initial request.

Weinberger said that there were many programs that were reduced, but he could not name a single system that had been scrapped.

"You were able to get 96 percent of everything you wanted with a decrease of $60 billion, and yet you are telling us you would have to reduce weapons systems on a list so long you can't even give it to us (and that's) with a budget authority freeze of $29 billion (for 1986)," Domenici said.

Weinberger said the other damaging assumption in a freeze was that it would make uncertain the resumption of the buildup of a defense system he said is needed to meet the steadily increasing Soviet threat.

But Weinberger said that even before the fiscal 1986 budget was presented to Congress many cutbacks had been made, such as construction of 12 F-15's, 10 F-16's, 3,000 Stinger missiles, 4,500 Mavericks and $2 billion worth of ammunition.

The ranking Democrat, Florida Sen. Lawton Chiles, suggested that the only way to control defense cost escalation would be to set a five-year budget rather than a year-by-year budget. Only a three-year budget succeeded in controlling the Social-welfare entitlements starting in 1981, he said, and the same medicine should be good for defense.

Chiles also contested Weinberger's statement that weapons purchases have been reined in to prevent massive cost overruns of the past. Instead, he said, there has been a 46 percent cost growth in M-1 tanks, a 59 percent escalation in F-18 aircraft and 29 percent growth in the MX missile program.

A dozen major defense contracts are "awash in money," Chiles said, and he said they will therefore "sell us a weapon at whatever price we're willing to pay."

Greater calling

After witnessing the grueling, at times cruel, confirmation process Attorney General-designate Edwin Meese has been subjected to, any reasonable individual will be forgiven for hesitancy to serve in public office. Recent years have shown time and again that public servitude is no cake-walk.

The understandable question that arises, therefore, is why people offer themselves for public office when they've seen countless others perform the largely thankless, difficult tasks. Why do they give up their privacy; what is the motivation for public service?

Why do they submit themselves to the heat of public scrutiny and criticism, even though that criticism may be offered in the interest of improving the quality of public servitude?

Without a doubt the motivation varies with the individual. For some it may the fulfillment of doing a job for others better than anyone else. For others it may be a form of repayment for what society has done in their stead. For still others, it simply may be a calling to serve their fellow man in whatever way possible.

Our form of government requires by its very nature that individuals participate in some manner — either by public service or voting or participation in the "mechanics" of the system — to keep government productive, fresh and vital.

All governmental entities in Midland have been fortunate in recent years to experience considerable support for the political process. That's good because, as the saying goes, it's a difficult job but somebody has to do it. We're thankful to those who have served in the past, those who are offering themselves for further service and the ones new to the public service arena.

The filing period is now under way for those interested in serving their fellow Midlanders on either the City Council, Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees, and Midland County Hospital District board. We encourage all interested persons to participate in this great political process.

It's through public service that we all make our lives better. No service can be greater.

Another View: Reagan's budget

President Reagan's budget for 1986 is a deliberate invitation to a fight, not only with Congress but with most of the organized forces in American politics. He is calling for another crusade against federal spending — with the conspicuous exceptions of spending on defense and Social Security — and he is calling for it in terms that guarantee much strife within his own party. The danger in this kind of brawl is the prospect that it can settle into paralysis not only on the budget but on all economic decisions generally.

Mr. Reagan's attitude toward spending is more complex than it looks at first sight. Under his presidency, federal spending has risen higher, not only in dollars but as a proportion of GNP, than at any time since World War II. He is not a low-budget president. In 1983, federal spending took the highest share of GNP since 1946 — but 1983 began at the trough of a severe recession that was a defensible reason for high expenditure. In 1984, spending dropped a little in relation to GNP. This year, the third of a strong recovery, both spending and deficit are rising rapidly again and, by the administration's figures, will be only slightly below the record levels of two years ago. That's an important signal of a loss of fiscal control. It's not only defense spending that's going up, incidentally, but non-defense spending as well.

The new budget calls for another great shift next year in favor of defense. The defense figures seem to have taken on a life of their own within the administration, and it's now the number of dollars spent that is supposed to indicate strength and purpose to the Soviets rather than the things that those dollars buy — or fail to buy. If this budget were enacted, the losers would include, in roughly the following order, farmers, local governments, civil servants, hospitals and college students. Some of these cuts are justifiable, like the abolition of revenue sharing; some are plausible, but not necessarily the same ones. Some will have to be made merely to keep the deficit from rising. Interest on the federal debt is going to compound faster than the budget suggests.

The great budget experiment of Mr. Reagan's first term was whether accelerating defense spending and tax cuts could lead to a balanced budget. With the deficit now running $222 billion a year, that issue has been pretty clearly settled. The great budget experiment of Mr. Reagan's second term will be to see whether deficits matter. He evidently has decided that spending matters, because it sets the scale of government. Taxes matter, and there's still no mention of an increase. But to him, deficits remain very secondary. He has abandoned even the modest deficit-reduction targets he embraced two months ago.

This budget, Mr. Reagan's fifth, continues in precisely the same direction as all its predecessors. The only change is that the imbalances, in both policy and dollars, are getting bigger.

CHARLEY REESE
Legislators should read Constitution

Deficits, unfair tax codes, and swollen bureaucracies are effects of a cause: the refusal of a majority of the members of the U.S. House and Senate to attend to their Constitutional duties.

Charley Reese

It is not the duty of congressmen to trek about the world getting their pictures taken with starving babies in Ethiopia, stuffing their faces in Paris, and abusing their livers in Bangkok.

The duty of conducting foreign policy resides with the executive, not the legislative, branch of government. Nor is there aything in the Constitution which says the United States shall be the world's number one philanthropic organization.

It is not the job of federal legislators to end apartheid in South Africa, impose democracy on Central America, resolve the Arab-Israeli feud, investigate chemical plants, regulate the amount of salt in our diet, make sure we wear our seat belts or decide which military bases the Army needs or doesn't need.

In short, it is not the duty of the Congress to micro-manage all aspects of life in the universe.

Senators and representatives, no matter how exalted an opinion they may have of themselves, are but ordinary mortals. They have only the same 24-hour day the rest of us have in which to manage not only affairs of state but also their personal affairs and the needs of nature.

If they overburden themselves with things they should not be doing, they will not have the time to do the things they should be doing. Worse, they will by default as many already have, delegate too many decisions to staff people who are neither elected nor answerable to the people.

We should require all congressional and senatorial candidates to memorize those parts of the Constitution which spell out their duties. If they were to read that document they would discover they have but one primary responsibility: to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Nowhere does it say they are to end hunger in the world, impose democracy on it, improve the economic life of foreigners, concern themselves with disarmament, or seek global peace.

It is not isolationism for Americans to insist that their government obey the Constitution and attend to America's business. Not only does our Constitution not authorize the American government to run other people's countries, we have neither the moral right nor the capability to do so.

The politicians have already stretched the Constitution paper thin to justify foreign aid, but if it is justified at all, it is only insofar as it serves to benefit the United States, not the recipient. Since we grant aid for purely selfish reasons, it is inexcusable to use that aid as an excuse to meddle in the internal affairs of another sovereign nation.

It is one thing to provide guns and bullets to another government so that it may kill people we consider our enemies. It is another to demand of that government all sorts of conditions for the privilege of killing our enemies.

The Constitution gives the Congress a full plate. It is mandated to provide a fair tax system and it has not done that. It is mandated to establish a sound currency and to regulate its value and it has not done that. It is mandated to provide for the common defense and it has been very careless in doing that.

Enacting sound legislation which should be based on moral and philosophical principles is a hard and honorable task. Busybodying, junketing, playing charades for publicity's sake, putting partisan gain ahead of the nation's welfare, not to mention selling the public trust are dishonorable and despicable acts.

In 1986, citizens should see to it that those who abuse their trust are removed.

JACK ANDERSON
Federal loan becomes nightmare

WASHINGTON — For Virginia Isaacs, the low-interest federal loan she got to fix up her modest home seemed like a gift from heaven. Instead, it plunged the 57-year-old Oklahoma City woman into that special section of hell reserved for those who put their trust in the federal bureaucracy.

Jack Anderson

She filled out all the necessary forms, submitted to all the routine red tape and selected an officially approved contractor. But the remodeling left her hearth and health in equal states of disrepair. The house was a shambles, and her doctors believe that a heart attack two years ago was brought on by stress.

Since the heart attack, Mrs. Isaacs has been unable to work full time. But this hasn't stopped the Housing and Urban Development Department from demanding that she repay every penny of her $31,000 loan. Nor has the fact that HUD's own auditors determined that she had been overcharged for the repair work by as much as $10,000 and that the supposedly rehabilitated house was a safety hazard.

Although the Scrooges at HUD pressed remorselessly for full payment, they were less dedicated about overseeing the repair work. They failed to enforce their own guidelines governing reconstruction contracts under the so-called "312" loan program.

HUD documents seen by my associate Corky Johnson show that the guidelines designed to assure proper work were not followed. The federal agency seems to have abdicated its responsibilities to the city urban renewal authority, which failed to follow the guidelines that might have spared Mrs. Isaacs her grief.

When she got her HUD loan in 1980, Mrs. Isaacs followed instructions and asked the local urban renewal office for a list of approved contractors. In hindsight, she probably should have been suspicious when several of the numbers she dialed had been disconnected. But she persevered and finally found a contractor who was still in business.

Here's what Mrs. Isaacs did — and didn't — get for her $31,000:

— She paid for new gutters and downspouts. HUD inspectors found the old ones still in place, leaking.

— Though she was charged $200 for replacement of rotted studs, HUD reported that "there was no evidence any replacement occurred."

— An old circuit breaker, frayed electric wiring and leaky sewage pipes were not replaced.

— Mrs. Isaacs couldn't use her kitchen for seven weeks while the contractor tried to repair it.

— The contractor tried to persuade Mrs. Isaacs to buy a refrigerator twice as expensive as the one she wanted. When she refused, the contractor put her old refrigerator out on the porch, where the motor burned out in two days.

— The house was left with gouged and rotted ceiling beams, a garage door completely off its hinges, and unconnected ducts and drainpipes.

Mrs. Isaacs wasn't the only one who saw her dream of government help turn sour. In Oklahoma City alone, at least a dozen families were the victims of shoddy work by contractors and sloppy supervision by officials. For example:

— One couple with a newborn baby had to use a kiddie pool for baths and dish washing for a month because the contractor had disconnected the bathtub and sink. They had to live in one room for months because the repair crew had knocked unnecessary holes in the walls of the other rooms.

— One eight-room house had electricity in only three rooms when the rehabilitation work was finished.

— One man learned that the contractor had been double-billing him for many items so the contractor could furnish another house he was building.

— Dozens of fire and safety hazards were reported by HUD inspectors, including additions in danger of collapsing because of faulty construction and furnace vent pipes that were removed and not replaced.

The HUD inspectors suspected that the dilapidated housing was the result of something more than bad workmanship. "Strong indicators were discerned that the possibilities of fraud, waste and mismanagement exist," one internal memo said.

Footnote: A HUD official declined comment beyond saying, "Some programs go better than others." A spokesman for Oklahoma City admitted to problems with some local contractors. Meanwhile, Virginia Isaacs has filed suit against HUD and Oklahoma City officials.

MORE ASBESTOS — The Pentagon isn't the only government building in town that has asbestos fibers in the air its employees breathe. Since I reported on the asbestos problem at the Pentagon, I have learned that asbestos has been detected in the air inhaled by Voice of America employees.

The impurity is minute — only 0.002 to 0.011 fibers per cubic centimeter of air, which officially is not enough to worry about. The Occupational Safety and Health Administration uses 2.0 fibers per cubic centimeter as its safety threshold.

But the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health uses a stricter standard of 0.1 fibers per cubic centimeter and informed VOA employees that it actually prefers a standard of 0.01 for office workers.

The asbestos fibers come from deteriorating insulation around steam and hot-water pipes, boilers and ventilation ducts in the office building VOA occupies near the U.S. Capitol. Agency officials have called in experts to assess the extent of the problem and recommend corrective action. They say they are taking every precaution the experts recommend for interim protection of employees.

Perot bill wasn't start

On a technical level, state-by-state comparisons of educational results are problematical for a variety of reasons, the most important being characteristics of population, level of resources and curriculum taught. Yet John Savage in his letter of Jan. 16, using only one source, USA Today, takes education in Texas to task and praises Ross Perot as the "White Knight" for his efforts to turn educational results around by the passage of House Bill 72 in the special session last summer by the Texas Legislature.

Strong educational reforms were initiated in 1981 by the 67th Legislature with the passage of House Bill 246, a bill calling for a new statewide curriculum. Over the next three years, input was gathered from many sources by the Texas Education Agency, and this data was then presented to the elected State Board of Education for further refinement. Many long hours were spent by board members holding public hearings across the state and working in committees, the final version becoming law in February 1984 with the passage of a law encompassing a new state academic curriculum and new graduation requirements.

To the best of my knowledge, Texas is the only state in the last 50 years to have developed and implemented a totally new curriculum.

I only mention the above timesequence events because I was honored and privileged to serve on the State Board of Education that was responsible for this historic legislation. I deeply resent the innuendo that nothing was done in the area of educational reform until Ross Perot came along. For descriptive purposes, the Perot bill was assimilated and passed in 30 days. It is common knowledge that many legislators never saw the complete bill before voting for passage. I do not believe thoughtful, solid reform can come from such haste, but only time will be the final judge.

If "superfluous frills of questionable educational value" means extra-curricular activity, then, Mr. Savage, you are denying the very things you seek: Leadership, discipline, fair play, sacrifice and teamwork — all characteristics needed for a well-rounded education and certainly disciplines needed for a competitive world — unless you prefer a collective, passive society.

Knowing Mr. Savage to be a thoughtful, intelligent man, I cannot help but wonder at his indifference to losing his right to vote for his representative on the State Board of Education as the board is now appointed (courtesy of Ross Perot and Mark White).

This should make all thoughtful citizens pause and reflect as to who controls education in Texas: The people and local school boards, or the state?

Thanks for caring people

First let me say how well I like your city. We're newcomers to this area, since late October 1984.

I had a heart attack Jan. 9 this year. I called 911 and within minutes they were here. It was early morning and a policeman dressed my son, age 6, in his robe and houseshoes. He rode in the front of the ambulance. The paramedics went right to work on me and had me at the hospital in record time.

The nurses, patients and relatives at Midland Memorial tended our son until around 6:30 a.m. when my husband arrived from his job. There are not enough words to say in praise and thanks for the attention I received from the paramedics, nurses, doctors, emergency room personnel and police. All were nameless to me, but very efficient and caring.

Thank you, Midland, for your caring people. They saved my life.

Caring made a difference

There are still many wonderful people left in this world. All you ever hear about anymore is the terrible news of people who have lost sight of goodness, kindness and God.

Recently, my 3-week-old nephew passed away. He was born a healthy little boy. Somehow things changed.

Our family was so touched by the wonderful people with whom we came in contact during our family tragedy. Doctors here in Midland did everything in their power to help our little guy. We truly appreciate them. Johnny was flown to Fort Worth to Cook's Children's Hospital for further treatment. A special thank you to the people of the Ronald McDonald House. The kindness, love and dedication shown by the doctors, nurses and others was something to behold.

The entire family was blessed by all of these people and we are proud knowing there are still many wonderful people around.

Soviet prison population diverse

MOSCOW — Writing home from a labor camp recently, a young man convicted of draft evasion sent his parents a recipe for preserved tomatoes given him by the manager of one of Moscow's leading restaurants. The secret, he wrote, is in the vegetable oil.

He did not say what the restaurant manager was doing in a labor camp alongside draft dodgers and common criminals. But there was no question in the minds of the parents. The man was evidently another victim of the anti-corruption campaign that continues to sweep through the ranks of Russia's middle-level officials.

According to news accounts, bank managers, collective farm chairmen, doctors, union officials, deputy ministers, a circus manager, and even some party officials are continuing to be sentenced, along with corrupt taxi drivers and checkroom and filling station attendants.

To the surprise of Western diplomats, the anti-corruption campaign begun with a flourish two years ago by Yuri V. Andropov seems to be continuing under his more conservative successor, Konstantin U. Chernenko.

Under Andropov, the campaign was part of a drive for law and order directed against the Soviet Union's black-market economy.

Andropov aimed directly for the top, arresting nationally known figures associated with his predecessor, Leonid I. Brezhnev. Prosecutors, set loose to chase down corrupt officials, made their arrests with a theatrical swagger that drew colorful news coverage. As the police raided bathhouses and movie theaters to trap shirkers, no one felt quite safe from the crackdown.

"It was like watching our own gangster movie," one Russian recalls.

Some of the swagger is now gone, and people are no longer looking over their shoulders. Higher officials appear to have regained their immunity.

But the machinery that Andropov set in motion seems to be grinding ahead. Visible cases that were begun under his rule and that some people thought would be allowed to die quietly have been brought to fruition. And news coverage, which declined for a time after Andropov's death in early 1984, was revived in the fall.

In a speech in October that echoed Andropov's policies, Chernenko called for labor discipline, a watchword of the Andropov period.

"An end must be put to bribe taking, profiteering, squandering, and embezzlement of socialist property, and abuse of power," Chernenko said.

This position by a man who is generally associated with the old — and often corrupt — way of doing things is seen as a reflection of a new political reality.

In a nation hungering for strong, effective leadership, Andropov's campaign was popular, even as people suffered from its severity. It was evidently impossible for Chernenko to turn back the clock.

Some people believe that Mikhail S. Gorbachev, now the second-ranking Soviet leader, who was close to Andropov, has been exerting increasing influence within the ruling Politburo, and that the continuing moves against corruption are a sign of his hand at work. Tough professionals appointed by Andropov still head the regular police and the KGB, the internal security agency.

Although nothing that has happened strikes at the very heart of a system in which bribery and black marketeering flourish beneath the surface of an inefficient, centrally planned economy, people feel the effect of the drive against corruption.

Drivers of trucks and taxis, for example, complain of tighter controls on their purchases of gasoline and diesel fuel, such as the use of numbered coupons instead of cash, making it more difficult to syphon off part of the fuel on the black market.

Russians also say that direct contact between customers and repairmen is being hindered by middlemen, making it harder to pay a few rubles extra for quick repair of a television set or a car. Both the repairmen, whose income is now cut, and the customer, who must put up with a long wait and endure poor service, are unhappy.

China reports capture of 'wild man'

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

PEKING — A legendary Chinese "wild man," a little over three feet tall and covered with hair, has been captured in the mountains of Hunan province, according to a Chinese newspaper. But others suspect it's a short-tailed monkey.

The creature is being kept in a heated apartment in the city of Wuhan and "drinks water with a dipper, eats food like a man and produces sounds like an old man," according to the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone Daily.

The paper quoted the Chinese Society of Wild Man Research in Wuhan, which has been wrong before in claiming to have found the Chinese version of the Abominable Snowman.

The society's last find was in October but that turned out to be a short-tailed monkey, the official China Daily said in Peking today, casting doubt on the latest report's credibility.

China Daily, an English-language newspaper, quoted leading anthropologists as saying they had been informed of the "discovery" but won't believe it until they examine the creature.

The official Xinhua news agency said it had obtained a picture of the beast but a photo editor told The Associated Press, "we suspect it's a short-tailed monkey so we're not going to release it unless it's verified as a wild man by scientists."

The Shenzhen paper quoted Li Guangyu of the Wild Man society as saying "the captured male wild man is 1.1 meters (3-feet, 3½-inches) tall, weighs 25 kilograms (58 pounds), has hair all over its body and a face that looks a lot like a modern man."

Attempts to reach the society by telephone from Peking were unsuccessful. The operator said the society apparently has no telephone.

Apemen stories abound in Chinese history, including poet Chu Yuan's third century B.C. description of "mountain ogres," and a 7th-century historian's tales of a tribe of "hairy men" in central China. Later accounts say the monkey-like creatures may be an evolutionary link between apes and humans.

Like Scotland's Loch Ness monster and America's "big foot," no evidence of a "wild man" — the Chinese call it "ye ren" — has been verified.

The Wild Man Institute in Wuhan called a national conference last August and announced a $3,570 reward to anyone who captures the beast alive — half of that for a wild man's corpse.

The China Daily said reported eyewitness accounts paint a picture of a creature that walks upright, is covered with brown or gray hair, is omnivorous but reeks of garlic and is "liable to fend off attackers with a volley of well-aimed stones."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Chernenko appears

MOSCOW (AP) — Hours after Soviet officials confirmed Soviet leader Konstantin U. Chernenko was ailing, the official news agency Tass reported he addressed the nation's ruling Politburo.

The 73-year-old Chernenko has not been seen in public or photographed since a televised awards ceremony Dec. 27, leading to speculation that he might be seriously ill.

The mystery of his health deepened Thursday when a Soviet journalist told NBC News that Chernenko was ill but in stable condition.

Also, French television reported a source with the Soviet delegation to the French Communist Party Congress said Chernenko had "an accident of health" on Jan. 14 and lost the use of his speech. In Soviet parlance, an accident of health implies a stroke or heart attack.

Ambushes predicted

MAARAKE, Lebanon (AP) — As the Israeli Army withdraws from southern Lebanon under pressure of daily attack, it can expect a fresh storm of bombs and ambushes behind a new defense line that its guerrilla attackers say is indefensible.

Khalil Jeradi, a Shiite Moslem militia leader, says the new Israeli line "will be in the interest of the resistance," and even a Christian leader allied with Israel says the occupation army will face "many more operations."

"It's an illusion to think that a withdrawal will help," said Nizar Najarian, head of the Christian Lebanese Forces militia in South Lebanon. "The people, their morale will be up, they will think they can drive the Israelis out."

That, in fact, is just what South Lebanon's Shiites think, according to clerics and militia and political leaders throughout the predominantly Shiite south.

Priest not discouraged

LIMA, Peru (LAT) — The Rev. Gustavo Gutierrez, considered the first theologian to write about the controversial doctrine of liberation theology, affirmed here Thursday that Pope John Paul II's frequent criticisms of extremist activism during a tour of Latin America will not slow church organization of the poor.

In a rare meeting with a group of reporters, Gutierrez, author of the 1971 book "A Theology of Liberation," said he agreed with John Paul and other Vatican authorities that some liberation theologians had developed theories that were "dangerous."

He said, however, that such extremist trends of liberation theology, which generally advocates the mobilization of the poor against social injustice, were "insignificant." He declared that he "cannot accept the premise" that his own work and that of other well-known Latin American theologians are contrary to church teachings.

Salvadoran talks stalled

MEXICO CITY (LAT) — A Salvadoran rebel leader said Thursday that peace talks with the government of El Salvador are frozen indefinitely, but he stopped short of saying the negotiations are dead.

Guillermo Ungo, president of the Revolutionary Democratic Front, the political arm of the left-wing insurgents, also made public the contents of a letter to Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte, dated Jan. 30, that rejected Duarte's demand that the rebels renounce violence if they want the talks to proceed.

Rape-murder reported

KLERKSDORP, South Africa (LAT) — What began as an ordinary weekend date for Ginny Goigzeone last Friday ended in a rape-murder so brutal that it shocked even the most calloused consciences here.

Ginny Goigzeone was black. The four men accused of her murder are white.

The 24-four-year-old Goigzeone was sitting with her boyfriend, Jacob Wessie, 27, a professional soccer player, in his car near her home here Friday night when two white men, identifying themselves as police officers, got in and ordered the couple to drive down the highway while two more whites followed in another car.

After 10 miles, Wessie was told to stop and was pulled from the car by three of the men. They allegedly beat him, hitting him repeatedly with a four-pound hammer, robbed him of about $30 and his watch and stripped him of his clothes. The other man dragged Goigzeone across the road into heavy brush and raped her.

China replaces U.S. as North Vietnam's No. 1 enemy

By GEORGE ESPER
AP Special Correspondent

HANOI, Vietnam — Communist China has replaced the United States as communist Vietnam's No. 1 public enemy.

The United States no longer leads the newscasts of Radio Hanoi, Vietnam's propaganda arm. War museums containing collections of captured American weapons and other memorabilia have added wings for displays of Chinese wrongdoing.

Schoolgirls who were toddlers when America was at war with North Vietnam march in formation, a 23-year-old drill sergeant at their side. In Hanoi's parks, young men are trained in using weapons.

"These are simple military lessons to cope with the threats of the Chinese aggressors," says drill Sgt. Nguyen Duc Trung.

Ten years after communist North Vietnam took over South Vietnam and ordered the U.S. Embassy out of Saigon, Vietnam has come full cycle, jilting the Chinese who gave it $20 billion in aid to fight the Americans.

Radio Hanoi criticizes the Chinese as aggressive land-grabbers, and Vietnam says it wants to talk about bringing back the U.S. embassy.

Hanoi is also suggesting that the United States be a peacemaker in Southeast Asia.

The United States says it won't consider normalization of relations until Vietnam withdraws its troops from Cambodia, which it invaded six years ago, and gives a full accounting of the nearly 2,500 Americans listed as missing in action in Indochina.

Other outstanding issues are the fate of some 10,000 people reportedly held by Vietnam as political prisoners and the future of thousands of Amerasians. Many of the political prisoners once fought and worked for the Americans; the Amerasians are children of Vietnamese mothers and American fathers.

Hanoi has announced it would free the prisoners; the United States has agreed to accept them. But negotiations have stalled because Hanoi reportedly wants the United States to guarantee they would not participate in anti-Vietnam activities. Amerasians have been allowed to leave Vietnam, but many still wait for exit permits.

"We are prepared to normalize relations with the United States without pre-conditions," said Vo Dong Giang, first deputy foreign minister. "We would not agree to the supposition that Vietnam should withdraw troops from Cambodia before any negotiations on normalization of relations. We want to separate the two issues."

AP Laserphoto

A soldier drills teen-agers in marching and rifle handling in a Hanoi park. North Vietnam has jilted the Chinese, who had once helped them fight the United States.

Giang said one possibility is that Vietnam would withdraw all of its troops under a political settlement that would eliminate the threat of the communist Khmer Rouge forces of Pol Pot, whom the Vietnamese ousted when they invaded Cambodia in December 1978.

"The United States should play a role in that," said Giang. "We sincerely want to see the United States take an active part here."

A second possibility, said Giang, is that in five or 10 years the Vietnamese-backed Cambodian armed forces of President Heng Samrin will be able to defend the country and most of the Vietnamese troops will be withdrawn.

"By then it might be too late for the United States to play an active role," said Giang.

"Vietnam and the United States fought a war," said Giang. "And it is Vietnam and the United States who ended the war. So it means Vietnam and the United States are in a position to determine the outcome of the war here."

Twelve years ago, on Jan. 27, 1973, the United States and North Vietnam signed a peace agreement in Paris, ending America's longest war.

Only a month earlier, in December 1972, President Nixon had ordered massive air strikes against military targets in the heartland of North Vietnam in an effort to pressure Hanoi into signing the peace agreement.

Although much of the damage has been repaired, there are still reminders of the biggest aerial blitz of the war, which left wide areas of the Hanoi-Haiphong industrial complex in rubble.

A memorial including a statue of a woman holding the body of a child in her arms marks one spot in Hanoi where Vietnam claims B-52 bombs destroyed a shelter killing civilians the day after Christmas 1972.

Other than the monuments, the museums and the Amerasian children, there are few reminders that the United States once had 550,000 troops in Vietnam, all in the south.

Cam Ranh Bay, the big air and naval base the United States built along the central coast, has been taken over by the Russians.

Negotiations to normalize relations between the United States and Vietnam began in 1977; by late 1978 the two sides were close to an agreement but the talks dragged on, Western diplomats say.

Hanoi dropped its demands but its timing was bad, in the middle of the term of President Jimmy Carter. Diplomats say Carter was concerned about antagonizing veterans and losing Democratic seats in the congressional elections because the climate for recognizing Vietnam was not right.

It's playoff payoff time for cage teams

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The District 4-5A basketball bank may have to stay open late tonight to cash playoff checks for three Midland teams.

The girls of Midland High and Midland Lee and the boys of Lee could be demanding playoff payment if the balls fall in the right hoops.

The 4-5A girls end regular season play tonight on four fronts and three of the games have playoff potential. If Midland High and Lee win tonight against Abilene Cooper and Abilene High respectively, the two local teams will earn a district playoff berth.

Both Lee and MHS are tied for second place in the loop race heading into tonight's games with 10-3 marks while Odessa Permian's 11-2 standard leads the league. But there are two playoff berths available and any ties will have to be determined on a district playoff court.

MEANWHILE, the Lee boys, who travel to Abilene High tonight, can insure themselves of at least a district playoff with a victory over the Eagles. Lee is 9-2 on the year while Abilene High is 8-3 with three loop outings left. A Rebel win would throw AHS to an 8-4 mark and Lee could do no worse than tie the Eagles for second place even if they lost their last two outings.

The Lady Bulldogs of MHS travel to 4-9 Cooper tonight while Lee hosts 5-8 Abilene High at 8 p.m. in the Lee gym. If season form holds true, both should win, forcing at least a second place playoff game between the two.

However, the fly in the ointment here is that league leading Permian faces a tough outing against 9-4 San Angelo on the road. If Permian loses while the two Midland teams win, the race would end in a three-way tie for first and a three-way playoff will be held to determine the two playoff teams.

Prep Basketball

MIDLAND ATHLETIC director Gil Bartosh said, "If Permian wins and our two teams win, then Midland High and Lee will meet in the playoff for second place at 8 p.m. Monday at Chaparral Center. If our two teams win and Permian loses, we plan to meet with Permian at Air Terminal Saturday morning to decide on a three-way playoff.

"If it is a three-way playoff, one team will earn a bye by a flip of the coin while the other two will play in the first elimination game. The team with the bye will automatically be in the state playoffs, but will have to play the winner of the elimination game to determine if the team enters as a first place team or a second place team."

Lee boys coach Paul Steuckler isn't placing any particular emphasis on the Abilene High game tonight in Abilene, despite the ramifications. "All you can say right now is that we have a one game lead with three games to play. Every game is important at this stage of the season."

San Angelo's boys, tied with Abilene High for second place, travels to Permian tonight in another key 4-5A outing.

MIDLAND High hosts Cooper at 8 p.m. today at Chaparral Center and the 6-5 Bulldogs may have seen their last hopes of a playoff berth dashed last Tuesday in a loss to San Angelo.

The Bulldogs will be eliminated outright with a loss to Cooper, a team MHS lost to in the first half. The Bulldogs will still have a slim shot at second place with a victory if Abilene High and San Angelo both lose tonight. That could keep the MHS ship afloat for another night of action.

There won't be any champagne in any of the high school lockerrooms tonight, buta few tops on soft drink bottles may be popped before the night is over.

Leonard sees kayo

Biorythyms hold key, says Sugar

ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Fight day is surely upon us when the bright lights and shining smiles of network TV arrive, bringing all the hoopla and commotion that surround a world class event such as Saturday's lightweight boxing match between "Rockin'" Robin Blake and Adolfo "Chile" Medel at the Chapparal Center.

Blake and his West Texas entourage — manager David Gorman, trainer Joe Barrientes, World Boxing Association Junior Welterweight champion Gene Hatcher of Fort Worth, and other hangers-on collided with the Medel crowd at a press conference here Thursday for some of the usual pre-fight hype and chest beating.

And the hype is not undeserved.

Not only is this the first professional fight in Midland in several years, but it will be carried by CBS to a live nationwide audience (excluding Midland, Odessa, Lubbock and West Texas). It is billed as a championship elimination fight with the winner to face International Boxing Federation Lightweight champion Harry Arroyo and features two of the classier fighters in the division.

BUT A funny thing happened at the Holiday T-Room Thursday afternoon. The low-key, respectful comments recited by the principals in Saturday's match were upstaged by the mere presence of an "aging" ex-champion.

Yes, with all respects to the admirable qualities of the Blake-Medel slate, Sugar Ray Leonard, an analyst with the CBS-TV crew here to televise Saturday's fisticuffs, parried more questions from the curious media than Blake and Medel combined.

Blake-Medel Saturday

Despite feeling the usual distaste after sampling the local water supply, Leonard, looking healthy and fit, stood on the podium and announced that Saturday's main event would end in a knockout.

But being the objective fight analyst that Sugar Ray has become, he refused to pick a winner.

"Because both fighters carry explosion in their gloves, I think it's going to be an exciting fight and I think it's going to be a knockout," Sugar Ray said. "But I believe in biorythyms — a lot depends on who gets up on the right side of bed that morning. Some people think that's corny, but I think there's a lot of truth to it."

FOR BLAKE and Medel then, there's quite a bit at stake when their feet hit the ground Saturday morning.

For Blake, the Levelland native and favorite son of West Texas, a win over the Chilean upstart would rejuvenate a once-blossoming career that has been frozen at challenger since a pair of losses a little more than a year ago.

Blake dropped consecutive fights to Tyrone Crawley and Arroyo letting a possible chance at the lightweight title slip through his hands.

Four straight victories later, Blake does not want to let another title chance slip away. In fact, a win this time around is almost a necessity. And the possibility of a knockout doesn't scare Blake, who counts 17 KO's among his 26 professional wins and just those two losses.

"Probably so," Blake said of the chance of a KO finish. "But I'll be the one standing at the end. I plan to go 10 rounds, but if a knockout comes it'll come. I let this opportunity slip by the first time, and I'm very, very fortunate to have a second time. This body — from head to toe — will do everything it can to win this fight."

But the little-known Medel poses a formidable challenge for Blake.

At 22-1, Chile's first world champion threat has a 21-bout winning streak on the line at Chapperal Center.

"We're both ready so I think it'll be more of a decision than a knockout," Medel, who trains out of Sunrise, Fla.,said. "I'm not stronger, but I think I'm quicker. We both have power, and I have a little bit of an advantage on speed so I think that'll work into my favor."

So in its own quiet way, the championship style tension of the Blake—Medel fight is building to a climax.

One thing's for sure, with a fight like this one headlining the card, the only way Sugar Ray Leonard will steal the show is with another comeback.

Chap men top NJCAA rankings

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

The Midland College men's tennis team is ranked No. 1 in the National Junior College Athletic Association's first poll of the season and the Chaparral women are ranked No. 5.

"I was a little surprised that they put us over Abraham Baldwin Agricultural College in Georgia," said MC Coach Joe Williams. "AbeAg last year tied Tyler JC of Texas for the national title. I knew we'd be in the top five, but No. 1, well, that's unexpected."

Williams said MC's victory over Tyler in the fall assured MC of a high ranking. "We defaulted two positions and still beat them, and they returned five players from their national championship team."

MC IS EVEN stronger now than last semester. Robert Vrij, who sat out the fall semester, is back on the courts and it makes a difference, according to Williams, now in his second year as Chaparral coach.

Individually, Brad Bailey and John McCauley are ranked No. 1 in doubles with a 17-1 record. The lone defeat came at the hands of a Division I NCAA team.

JuCo Tennis Poll

Sean Strickling and Emile Bijleveld rank 15th, but they are no longer playing together. Emile moved to No. 3 with Vrij taking his place.

In singles rankings, Bailey is No. 13, McCauley No. 41 and Stickling No. 45. The oddity about that is that Strickling is playing No. 1. "Last year he played No. 3."

THE POLL was conducted by the Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association (ITCA) and while MC is No. 1 in the NJCAA, the Chaps are ranked behind a California team in the overall poll. Since California junior colleges do not face opposition outside of the state, there will be no face-to-face confrontation. "We are taking a spring trip to California," said Williams, "And wanted to schedule one of the strong junior college teams out there, but they are locked into a limited number of matches and we couldn't arrange it."

As a result, the community sponsored spring swing to San Diego March 4-8 will feature matches with San Diego State University, California State-Fullerton, and U.S. International at San Diego.

THE NO. 1 team in the overall ITCA ratings is Foothills, Calif., but Williams feels that MC is in a position to overcome that ranking, thanks to the NJCAA nationals and a scheduled liberally sprinkled with NCAADivision I opposition. MC's next meet is at Lubbock against Texas Tech Feb. 15.

"It's obviously just a poll," says Williams, "but we had to do something to earn that kind of recognition."

He goes on, "One of the benefits is that the top five teams in the poll receive equipment (racquets, travel bags, t-shirts etc.)."

Midlanders raised the funds need for the March trip to California, a sojourn that Williams feels not only will enable the Chaps to play strong opposition, but will give his players exposure to colleges in that area.

Chaps win, 78-75

From Staff Reports

HOBBS, N.M.—For Midland College, New Mexico wasn't exactly a Land of Enchantment, but the Chaparrals did escape with a 78-75 victory over the New Mexico Junior College Thunderbirds Thursday night.

The win keeps the Chaps atop the Western Junior College Athletic Conference standings with an 11-1 record, one game in front of Odessa College, idle Thursday. Overall MC is 20-3.

By converting four Teviin Binns free throws, on two one-and-one situations, in the final 30 seconds, the Chaparrals cooled off the red hot Thunderbirds, who had won five in a row, including a victory over Odessa College, ranked No. 6 in the land.

However, NMJC remains in the hunt for a Region V playoff berth with a 16-10 and 6-6 record.

The 6-9 Binns slammed the coffin lid shut on NMJC with his final two free throws with two seconds left.

With 30 seconds left, and MC leading 74-73, Binns was knocked to the court as he went high for an alley-oop pass, but struggled to his feet to make both ends of the one-and-one.

NMJC wasn't through, however. Derrick Hill brought the Thunderbirds within one again after Midland's Ricky Grace missed the front end of a one-and-one with 18 seconds to play.

MC took an early 14-4 lead, but NMJC rallied to tie it four times and finally took a 39-37 halftime edge.

THINGS really looked bad in the second half when NMJC jumped out to a 49-41 lead, but the Chaps rallied to tie it at 51 with 6:30 gone of the half, employing speed and quickness to turn the tide by forcing costly turnovers.

The Chaps led by as many as five before NMJC closed to within one and two points in the frantic final minutes.

Binns scored 15 points to lead MC, but Lawrence Chumbley had a big night with 14, going four of seven from the field and six-for-six at the line. Grace again came off the bench to score in double figures with 11.

For NMJC, Hill, a 6-8, 238-pounder from Philadelphia, made life miserable for the Chaps. In the first half, he was six-of-seven from the field and then four-of-seven in the second half to post 22 points. However, even that wasn't high for the Thunderbirds. Eddie Newell took scoring honors for the night with 23.

The Chaps return to New Mexico Monday to face New Mexico Military Institute at Roswell and then come home for Amarillo College and homecoming next Thursday.

Forget Abner Doubleday, court rules Cartwright invented game

By JACK SCHREIBMAN

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Declaring Alexander Cartwright "shall have his due," a judge decided that the New York sportsman — and not the legendary Abner Doubleday — invented baseball some 140 years ago.

Following an hour of chaotic testimony in which nobody swore to tell the truth, the judge entered his verdict Thursday on the nation's pastime.

Presiding over the 34th session of San Francisco's mock Court of Historical Review and Appeals, Superior Court Judge Roy L. Wonder ordered gravely, "The weight of the evidence comes down on the side of Alexander Cartwright ... he shall have his due."

Some historians say Cartwright, who came to San Francisco in 1849 to look for gold, drew up the first baseball diamond in 1845. The first game using his rules was played on a cricket field in Hoboken, N.J., on June 19, 1346.

A lengthy story in Sports Illustrated in 1969 made it clear that the Doubleday legend had to be taken with a grain of salt, concluding that Doubleday as baseball's inventor was a myth.

The judge ordered copies of his ruling filed with the San Francisco Main Library and at the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y. But it wasn't the first time Doubleday struck out as the legendary inventor of baseball.

The judge made it clear that he gave great weight to the testimony of surprise anti-Doubleday witness Sam Bercovich, a local baseball fan for more than 50 years. San Francisco Supervisor Louise Renne, who represented Cartwright's interests, beamed at discovering that Bercovich planned to support her team.

Bercovich was called by the pro-Doubleday forces, but quickly made it clear that he was a Cartwright man. San Francisco Public Defender Jeff Brown, counsel for the ghost of Abner Doubleday, scowled. Judge Wonder yawned.

It's baseball, Oriental style

By BILL CENTER
Copley News Service

It's baseball, but ...

The strike zone varies from hitter to hitter and the texture of the balls from pitch to pitch. The players work shifts much the same as office workers, and no one questions managerial authority. The pregame meal consists of rice, shrimp, salad and a soup.

It's baseball Japanese style — and not exactly what Steve Ontiveros thought it would be five years ago, when he decided to jump the Chicago Cubs in favor of playing for the Seibu Lions of Japan's Pacific Coast League.

"I thought the baseball would be the easy constant," Ontiveros said recently. "I thought the hardest part would be setting up a home life with the family.

"It's turned out just the opposite. The day-to-day living has been a relatively smooth adjustment ... it's the baseball that's so much different ... totally different."

IN JAPAN, Ontiveros found, the baseball player is not the pampered, high-priced capital investment he has become on this side of the Pacific Ocean.

"He's a well-paid employee but, just the same, he's an employee," Ontiveros said. As such, the baseball player is expected to give a full day's work for a day's wage.

"The typical working day for a baseball player in Japan is 12 hours," Ontiveros said. "You don't go home if there is a rainout, you go to the hitting cages or go inside to watch videos of the other pitchers in the league.

"The strangest thing for the American player going to Japan, though, is the difference in attitude between the club management and the player. In the U.S., you're encouraged to take charge and push to get better. In Japan, the management takes away a lot of the initiative."

ATTITUDE is not the only adjustment Ontiveros had to make.

There's the strike zone that floats to fit the moods of various umpires and typically gets larger when an American is hitting. Or the travel. Or the food. Or the Japanese fans' attitude toward the game.

"They are very knowledgeable about the game, but they don't enjoy the same things the American fans enjoy," Ontiveros said. "They don't appreciate hard play. They don't like any slide that might hint of injury.

"Overall, I guess the biggest thing is that you're playing in a foreign land and the game of baseball is quite a bit different. You're the visitor. As an American in Japan, I am not going to get into their culture and I'm not going to be accepted as a sports hero. But once you prove yourself, they accept you as a friend."

He was not, however, an overnight sensation, although he is among the few American players to sign with a Japanese club at the peak of his career. Only three active Americans have played in Japan longer than Ontiveros.

A career .274 hitter with 600 hits in seven seasons with the Giants and the Cubs, Ontiveros has a .312 career mark in Japan. Last season he was Japan's third-leading hitter with a career-high .338, 20 home runs and 101 runs batted in. For the second straight season, he also led Japan in on-base percentage (.443).

THE FIRST thing Ontiveros noticed about the difference between Japanese and American baseball is that the Japanese pitchers he faced were throwing the ball clear of the plate ... and getting strikes.

"It is a very interesting matchup, the Japanese umpire and the American player," Ontiveros said. "By and large, they call the (correct) calls ... but 99 percent of anything questionable goes against the American player and we expect it. They don't give the Japanese players advantages with direct help, but they give them extra opportunities."

Ontiveros said the toughest thing for an American player to condition himself to is the schedule.

"Seven or eight-hour workouts are common," he said. "On the day of a road game, you might travel four or five hours. You leave the park at 8 a.m. After you arrive you have lunch and a 1½-hour meeting followed by videotapes of the other team, warm-ups, batting practice, dinner and the game. At home you have to be at the park by 2 in the afternoon for a night game.

"You never want to see a game rained out because you have to report no matter what. It won't be called until after the workouts end. If it is called, you either go back for more workouts or go watch videos. And all rainouts are made up at the end of the season, not as doubleheaders.

"THE SEASON starts Feb. 1 with a month of training," Ontiveros said. "After that is a month of exhibition games followed by the season, a month of rainout makeups and the Japan Series, which ended on Nov. 11 when we won it (for a second straight year) in 1983.

BASEBALL

Brown earned a hail of hisses and boos after a disparaging remark about the local nine's skills, so the judge held everyone in contempt, even though the San Francisco Giants were the worst team in the major leagues last season.

Berkovich's testimony was especially damaging to the Doubleday forces.

"After research many years ago I was convinced that Alexander Cartwright was the founder of baseball. I was also convinced that Doubleday stole the (baseball) diamond from Mr. Cartwright and used it during the Civil War ... (Doubleday) was a cadet at West Point during the period 1838-1840," in which baseball is said to have been invented, he said.

Bercovich contended that the first recorded game of baseball was played on the site of New York City's Madison Square Garden in 1842 and that Doubleday does not mention the game he supposedly created in any of the dozens of diaries he left following his death in 1893.

Somewhat inconclusive testimony came from E. Wyman Spalding, great grand-nephew of A.G. Spalding, a founder of the sporting goods empire and a early promoter of baseball. Spalding, who entered books and other memorabilia into evidence, was dressed in an old-time baseball uniform.

Baseball reps set Feb. 19 as target

CHICAGO (AP) — Negotiators representing major league baseball's owners and players have set Feb. 19 as a target date to put detailed proposals on the table toward a new contract for the 1985 season, a spokesman for the owners' committee said Thursday.

Bob Fishel, executive vice president of the American League who is acting as labor spokesman during the negotiations, said the two sides met for about 2½ hours in Chicago to discuss proposals relating to the free agent re-entry draft and benefit plan portions of a new agreement.

None of the players' association representatives could be reached at the O'Hare Hilton Hotel, where talks took place Thursday and were set to continue Friday.

The last contract between the Major League Players Association and the Players Relations Committee, which represents management, expired Dec. 31.

"Everything is on a friendly basis so far," Fishel said of the meetings, "but there are a lot of problems remaining. Of course we'd like to have an agreement before we go to spring training, but it's more likely the bargaining will go on all the way through training camp."

Thursday's session was the most recent of "15 or so" meetings between the two sides. Two more session were scheduled in New York, the first coming Monday and another set Feb. 19 "for more detailed proposals," said Fishel.

"That's when most of the bigger items — minimum salary, arbitration procedures and the like — are going to be on the table," said Fishel.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, February 9, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You find new success when old conflicts are resolved at place of employment. Keep informed of the latest developments in your field. Potential clients are interested in staying up-to-date. Substantial financial gains are seen in April and May. Review investments. A romantic relationship stabilizes. Be more affectionate with family members. Someone you love may not realize the depth of your feelings. Roger Mudd, former Secretary of State Dean Rusk, baseball's Bill Veeck, singer Carole King, the Texas Rangers' Pete O'Brien and actress Mia Farrow celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: poet Amy Lowell and actor Ronald Colman.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Someone you thought was an opponent turns out to be a friend. An older person offers valuable advice. Follow it and you benefit both financially and emotionally. Romance perks you up.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A neighbor can be a nuisance. Gently let this person know that you have other people in your life. A well-balanced diet helps you look and feel better.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An argument could arise over a family pet. Be both polite and conciliatory. An understanding attitude helps you win over a potential enemy. Shop for youthful, up-to-date clothes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A red-letter day lies ahead! Entertaining at home can be more fun than going out. You and your mate are wonderful hosts. Make up the guest list together.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may have to put your foot down where mate's spending habits are concerned. Set up a budget you both think reasonable. Jealousy can kill romance. Curb your suspicions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although a secret romance hold a certain appeal, your moral values prevail! An amusing incident has far-reaching ramifications. Family members are unusually supportive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A day trip may be more practical than going away for the weekend. Rely on public transportation whenever possible. Romance holds a pleasant surprise. Be more attentive to loved one.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not take offense at what an old friend says—he or she is probably kidding! Curb a tendency to make too many demands on others. Not everyone has your energy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good day to follow your desires. Take a break following a tough work week and buy some new clothes. Mate or friend shares a wonderful secret. Group activities hold special appeal.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could learn the hard way that a friend or relative is a tightwad. Think twice the next time this person seeks your financial involvement! Find new outlets for your creativity.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid rushing. Too much haste could lead to a mistake or accident. A research project yields information that could boost your earning power. Put income tax materials in one place.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not rely solely on your intuition when making a financial decision. Ask questions. A weekend job could be the best answer to a temporary cash shortage. Consult mate. Romance enjoys favorable influences.

Trump Coup Tommy had been on a business trip to London, a fact that was appreciated by all the members of those bridge clubs he visited, except the few who had the misfortune to be his partner. As you remember, Tommy is a walking bridge disaster except on those rare occasions when trumps break badly. Then he turns into a master of technique to land even the most difficult contracts.

In deference to his hosts, Tommy adopted the British style of bidding. North's jump to four diamonds agreed spades as trumps, and in the pocess showed a very good diamond suit. For once, Tommy was not interested in slam.

West led the top of his doubleton in partner's suit, and Tommy went to work with a will. It was more than likely that trumps were breaking badly since East was marked with long hearts for his intermediate jump overcall. To protect against the opponents drawing dummy's trumps too quickly, declarer ruffed the opening lead in dummy and led a low club. East pounced with the ace and Tommy cleverly unblocked the king.

East continued with the king of hearts, won by the ace. Tommy crossed to the ace of diamonds, and led the queen of diamonds for a ruffing finesse. East covered and Tommy ruffed. He returned to the table with a club and cashed a club and the jack of diamonds, sluffing two hearts from hand.

Reading the hand perfectly, Tommy continued with a high club. East ruffed with the ten and Tommy overruffed with the queen. When he now led a heart, West, down to nothing but trumps, was forced to ruff low — to ruff with the ace would concede the contract. Tommy overruffed in dummy and exited with the king of spades.

West was a dead duck. Tommy had nine tricks in the bag, so West had to win the ace. But now he was end played and forced to lead from his 9-7 of trumps. Tommy, who still had the 8-6, could not be stopped from scoring the fulfilling trick.

Stars to mark Tubb's birthday

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Roy Acuff and Bill Monroe head a group of country music stars scheduled to gather Saturday night to commemorate the birthday of the late legend Ernest Tubb.

The stars are to perform on a special version of the "Midnight Jamboree" radio show, which Tubb started in 1947 to follow the Grand Ole Opry broadcast.

The event is being held to raise money for the Ernest Tubb Memorial Fund, set up to help research emphysema treatment.

Tubb, who died of emphysema last Sept. 6, would have turned 71 Saturday. Known as the Texas Troubador, Tubb pioneered the "honky-tonk" sound of country music. His most famous hits include "I'm Walking the Floor Over You" and "Waltz Across Texas."

Tubb's son, Justin, is to be host of the show, aired live on AM radio station WSM from one of the late singer's record shops.

Others scheduled to be on hand for the show include Hank Snow, Porter Wagoner, Stonewall Jackson, Connie Smith, Jean Shepard and Bill Anderson.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Soon you'll be able to see the bumbling antics of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy in color.

That's the promise of Hal Roach Studios Inc., which owns 105 Laurel and Hardy comedies dating back to the silent era. Says Victor White, Roach president: "We have already converted three films to color — 'Help Mates,' 'Sons of the Desert' and 'Way Out West.' The potential is tremendous."

Hal Roach Studios, as well as Color Systems Technology, are engaged in the new and potentially rich field of converting old black-and-white movies to color.

Judge denies NBC's request to dismiss Newton libel suit

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Singer Wayne Newton, as a public figure, has a greater burden of proof in his $6 million libel suit against NBC, says the judge who upheld the litigation.

Wayne Newton

Magistrate Philip Pro on Wednesday denied the television network's request to dismiss the suit, which Newton filed after broadcasts in 1980 and 1981 that said Newton had financial backing from organized crime figures when he bought the Aladdin Hotel in 1980.

Pro said because Newton is a "public figure," however, he not only must prove the network made false statements, but made them maliciously or with reckless disregard for the truth.

The case is expected to go to trial later this year.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Oscar-winning actress Loretta Young will return from a 20-year retirement to star in "Dark Mansions," a television movie to be produced by Aaron Spelling Productions.

Loretta Young

Miss Young, 72, will portray the matriarch of a Seattle shipping family in the two-hour "contemporary Gothic drama," Spelling publicist David Gerrie said Thursday.

The movie, to begin filming in April, is expected to become a television series for ABC, said Spelling and Miss Young's agent, Norman Brokaw.

Miss Young, who debuted at age 15 opposite Lon Chaney in 1928, starred in 94 motion pictures and produced and starred in her own television series.

She won an Academy Award as best actress for her role in "The Farmer's Daughter."

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Lady Bird Johnson, marking the 20th anniversary of the Older Americans' Act, said the legislation signed by her husband, President Lyndon B. Johnson, affirmed the nation's commitment to its elderly.

Johnson

Mrs. Johnson told a forum on aging, "1965 marked a milestone in our nation's commitment to its older citizens. Perhaps the most significant since 1935 when the Social Security Act was established."

After giving the opening remarks at the forum, the former first lady and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby blew out 20 candles on an anniversary cake.

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Rock stars Prince, Linda Ronstadt and Pat Benatar will contribute songs to the forthcoming "USA For Africa" album, dedicated to alleviating starvation in Africa, producers say.

None of the three pop stars participated in a recording session with Bruce Springsteen, Michael Jackson, Cyndi Lauper and 42 other musicians that was held after the American Music Awards show last week. The session produced a single, "We Are The World," written by Jackson and Lionel Richie.

Producer Ken Kragen said Prince's song "Tears in Your Eyes" was written especially for the "USA For Africa" album. Miss Ronstadt's song is titled "Keeping Out of Mischief." Details on contributions by Miss Benatar and other artists were unavailable.

The record will follow a similar effort by British rock stars, whose "Do They Know It's Christmas" single has sold an estimated 7 million copies worldwide.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The rock band Night Ranger has offered to donate $5,000 toward the medical expenses of a 15-year-old girl who might lose her leg to a rare form of cancer.

Jack Blades, bass player and lead singer, said the band was taking a break Wednesday from studio work on its third album when he saw a TV news report about Lora Boynton of Belmont.

"They were talking about this beautiful little girl they might have to amputate," he said Thursday. "It got to me so much that I went into the band and said, 'Let's do something about it.'"

Lora suffers from Ewing's sarcoma. Doctors at first said her right leg would have to be amputated, but have since said she probably can be treated with radiation and chemotherapy, said her mother, Carolyn Boynton.

"It (the Night Ranger offer) makes me feel great," said Lora, who described herself as a fan of the group, although she has never been to one of its shows.

The band's latest album, the double-platinum "Midnight Madness," has been on the charts for 70 weeks with three top-20 singles, including "Sister Christian."

LEAMINGTON SPA, England (AP) — Sir William Lyons, who began his career making motorcycle sidecars and went on to found the Jaguar car company, died today, the company announced. He was 83.

Sir Lyons

Lyons died at his home, Wappenbury Hall, near this town in Warwickshire, the central England county which is the heart of Britain's auto industry.

Lyons, Jaguar's honorary president for life, died just six months after the prestigious auto firm was sold back to private enterprise, ending nearly a decade as part of the state-owned British Leyland group.

In 1922, Lyons and a partner started making motorcycle sidecars in a workshop in the north England town of Blackpool, where the entrepreneur was born.

In 1928 he moved his company to Coventry, in Warwickshire, the current site of Jaguar's main plant. Lyons' first car, the SS-Swallow Sports, was produced in 1931 and the first Jaguar came four years later.

After World War II, Lyons added a racing department to the company's operations and in the early 1950s his sleek D-type Jaguars dominated international circuits, winning four times at the Grand Prix at Le Mans, France.

In recent years, sales of Jaguar's distinctive sedans and sports cars have risen to a record 33,424 vehicles exported worldwide in 1984.

Lyons, who was knighted in 1956, is survived by his wife, Greta, and two daughters.

Laggard Twins showing new life

New York Times News Service

For years, the Minnesota Twins have been scorned as an anachronism in the world of big-business baseball. They were the last team in the big leagues owned and operated by one family without fortune or outside means of support. A team that developed young stars, but could not keep them from leaving as free agents. A team on the verge of collapsing or moving.

But, in the last few months, the Twins have revived mightily. Calvin Griffith and his family sold them to Carl Pohlad, a Minneapolis businessman who will keep them there. The Twins, fifth in the American League West in 1983, rose to second place in 1984, contending for the division title until the final week. Then they sold 4,500 season tickets for 1985, breaking the club record set 17 years ago. And now, the surest sign of success, they have hired an advertising agency.

"We haven't had an agency in six years," Don Shields, the team's vice president for marketing, said in a telephone interview. "But we are a young, aggressive, exciting baseball team, and we want everything to reflect that fact.

"Do we need a new logo? New stationery? New brochures? We haven't developed an overall corporate strategy or decided on an advertising budget yet. But I wanted an ad agency to take a look at everything we have been doing in- house. So, we signed Campbell-Mithun, the largest agency headquartered in Minneapolis."

"The fans understand the problems Calvin had," Shields said. "He built a great farm system, but the family couldn't afford to keep the players who came from it. Now, there are new resources and new life, and the fans are tremendously excited."

IF ADOLFO Medel seems fearless in a boxing ring, his background helps explain it. From the age of 6 until he was 10, Medel flew through the air 50 feet above the ground as part of his parents' aerial act.

Now 20 years old, Medel has been fighting professionally for a little more than three years, winning 22 of 23 fights, 14 of them by knockout. Saturday, he will take a 21-bout winning streak against Robin Blake in Midland, Texas, in a fight to be televised nationally by CBS.

Larry Kent, who trained such ring champions as Sugar Ray Robinson and George Price in the 1940s and 1950s, came out of a 24-year retirement at age 72 to handle Medel.

Medel, who was born in Managua, Nicaragua, became part of his parents' aerial act, the Flying Medels, when he was 6 and toured with them through Central and South America. The act broke up when his father, Raul, the catcher, developed back problems.

"When you are that young, nothing scares you and, besides, I didn't know anything else," Medel said from his home in Sunrise, Fla. "I would probably be terrified if I tried it today. But there's not much chance I'li ever go up into the air again."

"He'd better not," said Kent. "If he ever starts climbing a ladder, I'll break his head."

IT's MORE than a subway ride from the Lower East Side to Down East Maine. But for Derek Counts, a 17-year-old New York City youth who has been attending boarding school in Maine for the last three years, it has been well worth the trip.

"I like it here," he said in a telephone interview recently, noting that the Oak Grove-Coburn School with its 120 students had a much more intimate atmosphere than his old school, the Corlears Junior High on Henry Street, with 4,000 students.

Counts, an honor-roll student, seems to have thrived in the atmosphere, and not just in the classroom. Last Wednesday night, in a basketball game against Gould Academy, he scored the 2,000th point of his high school career, equaling a mark reached by only two other Maine high school players.

Dallas gets celebrity golf

DALLAS (AP) — Former child star George McFarland, who played Spanky on the television series "The Little Rascals," said Thursday he would move his celebrity golf tournament to the Dallas area this year.

The Spanky McFarland Celebrity Golf Classic has been played in Indiana for the past 15 years, but it will be played in Texas this fall to take advantage of better weather, McFarland said.

Still developing are the selection of a location and the naming of celebrities to play in the classic, which he said is the longest-running celebrity benefit tournament in the nation.

Last year, the event raised thousands of dollars for several charities, and although this year's charities have been chosen, the names will not be released until next month, said McFarland, who lives in nearby Fort Worth.

Al Arbour will take what's left

An AP Sports Analysis
By BARRY WILNER

Al Arbour can keep his Prince of Wales Conference All-Star team.

Glen Sather can have his Clarence Campbell Conference squad.

Next Tuesday's National Hockey League All-Star Game at Calgary will feature some — but not all — of the league's best players. The rule requiring every team to be represented means players such as Mats Naslund of Montreal and Denis Savard of Chicago won't be on hand.

In goal, how about Pat Riggin of Washington and Steve Penney of Montreal? Riggin is second in goals-against average (2.76) and Penney has shown his playoff miracles of last spring were no fluke.

Anchoring the defense will be Mike Ramsey of Buffalo, Charlie Huddy of Edmonton, Brad McCrimmon of Philadelphia, Montreal's Larry Robinson, Minnesota's Curt Giles and Mario Marois of Quebec. Since McCrimmon probably would have been picked by Arbour until the Flyers' defeseman hurt a wrist, we might not be entitled to him. So give us Chicago's Bob Murray.

Our strongest position would be right wing, with Chicago's Steve Larmer, Rick Middleton of Boston, Dave Taylor and Jim Fox of Los Angeles and Joey Mullen of St. Louis. And we're ignoring Toronto's Rick Vaive, Detroit's Ron Duguay, Mike Foligno and Dave Andreychuk of Buffalo, Pittsburgh's Doug Shedden and Tony Tanti of Vancouver.

Naslund would head the left wing corps, with Philadelphia's Brian Propp, Anton Stastny of Quebec and Kent Nilsson of Calgary, who also plays center. That leaves out Boston's Charlie Simmer, Hartford's Sylvain Turgeon (who probably would have been an All-Star if he had been healthy all season), Brian MacLellan of the Kings and Pittsburgh's Warren Young.

At center would be Savard, Steve Yzerman of Detroit, Peter Stastny of Quebec and St. Louis' Bernie Federko. Which leaves no room for Vancouver's Patrik Sundstrom, Thomas Steen of Winnipeg, Washington's Dave Christian, Bernie Nicholls of Los Angeles, Hartford's Mark Johnson, Tom Fergus of Boston and Buffalo's Gil Perreault.

Sandberg home at last

Cubs' star no longer feels like rookie

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Ryne Sandberg, who has done almost everything in his three major league seasons except win a World Series ring, says he finally feels like a veteran.

"I started feeling that last year, and that's just a fact of having a couple of years under my belt," the Chicago Cubs' second baseman and National League Most Valuable Player said. "I'm no longer a rookie or a second-year player, and they don't have a name for a third-year player."

Sandberg returned to his home town recently for the first time since leading the Cubs to the National League East title.After the season the 25-year-old father of two had in 1984, he says it's time to play baseball again.

"I'm ready to get back to it," he said. "I've had a lot of time to get away from it. When March comes around, it's just that time of year to get going again."

Sandberg graduated in 1978 from Spokane's North Central High School, where he was a three-sport star and a prep All-America in football. On his recent visit, he attended "Ryne Sandberg Day" at North Central, where the athletic field was renamed for him.

"One good thing was seeing my high school friends," he said. "I haven't really gotten to be with them since I left, and it's been seven years."

Sandberg was signed out of high school by the Philadelphia Phillies, scrubbing plans to attend Washington State on a football scholarship. He was traded to the Cubs along with shortstop Larry Bowa in early 1982.

Sandberg's parents now live in Brewster in Central Washington, while Ryne and his wife, Cindy, and their two young children live in Tempe, Ariz. Sandberg's older brother, Del, is baseball coach at Capital High in Olympia.

In only his third major league season, and just his second year at his position, Sandberg started in the All-Star game, wonlhis second consecutive Gold Glove and gained widespread respect.

Consistency was Sandberg's strong point last year. He hit .314, fourth best in the league. He had 200 hits, 36 doubles, 19 home runs, 84 runs batted in and 32 stolen bases. He led the league in triples (19) and runs scored (114).

If 1984 was surprising, 1985 looks promising.

"I think that I've got a lot more going for me going into the season this year," Sandberg said. "I have more confidence and I now have kind of a style to go by, a way of thinking when I hit."

Having re-signed their three free-agent starting pitchers — Cy Young winner Rick Sutcliffe, Dennis Eckersley and Steve Trout — the Cubs are intact going into spring training and should be favored to win the pennant, Sandberg said.

"It can definitely be done, I mean we almost did it last year and we were supposed to finish fifth or sixth," he said."Anybody can win it and things have to look good for us because of the team that we have.

"I can't think of any weaknesses we have right now. That's a good sign going into spring training, because if you do have to make some adjustments, you make them, but I don't see us making many.

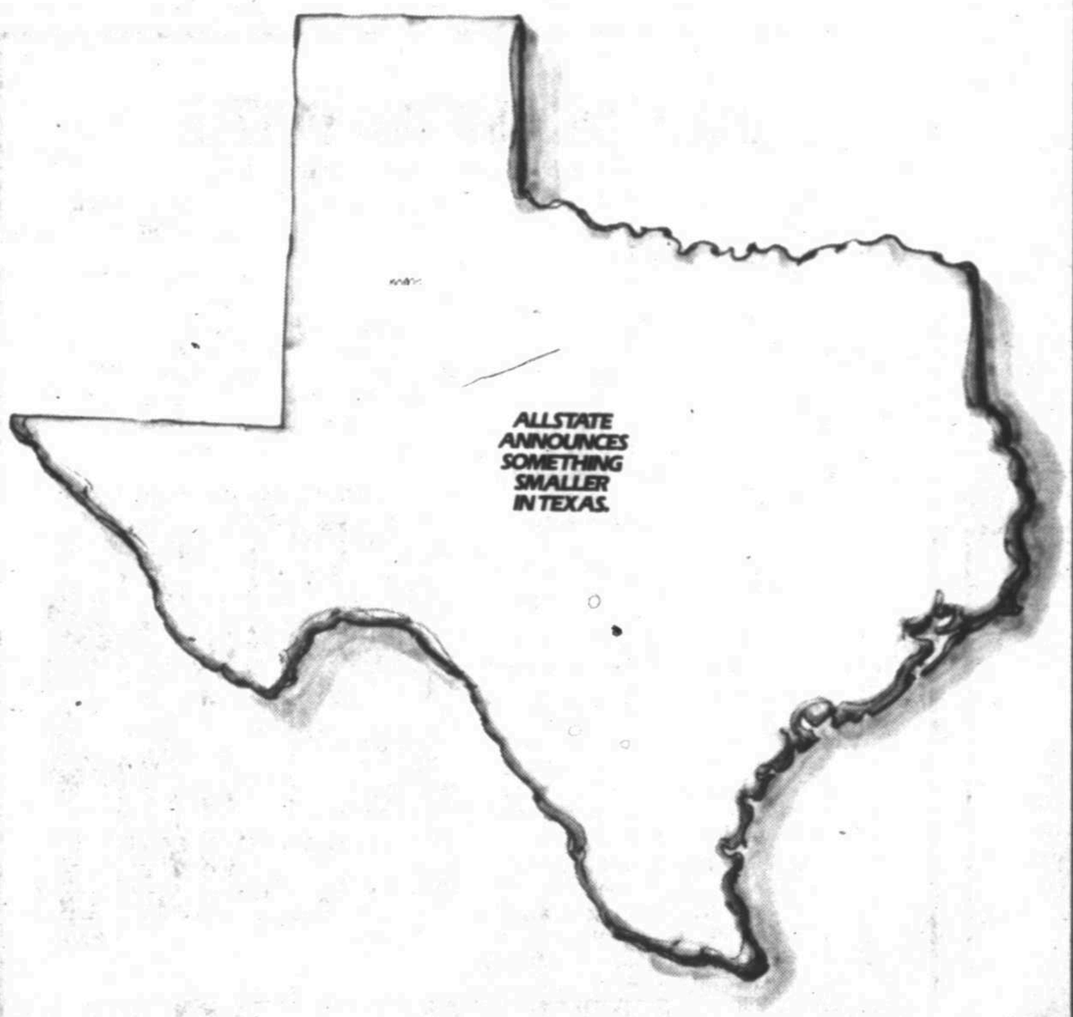

"We're going to have the same lineup, the same good, strong offense, good pitching. Just the fact that we're going to have all these guys at the start of spring training will definitely help us."

Hey, dad, this is life for you

Who or what would you guess a Livingstone Bramble is?

A character out of Dickens? A trust officer at the local bank? A village in New Hampshire? A stretch of gorse and heather on the high road in Scotland? A coxswain for the Harvard eight? A railroad depot in the Cotswolds in England?

There's no doubt what a Boom Boom Mancini is. It's a second-generation pug out of Youngstown, Ohio, something the tabloid press would tab a left-hook artist. You roll that name around your tongue and you can almost smell the cauliflower.

Livingstone Bramble is a pug, too, almost as elegant as his name. He fights out of a stand-up style like those old Police Gazette tintypes. He's almost couth. But his punches come in blizzards. It's like fighting a sleet storm.

Guys usually become fighters because it beats driving a truck or shining shoes or sorting mail, but Ray Mancini became a fighter for the most medieval of reasons: He wanted to right an old injustice to the family name. For him, it was an affair of honor. The boxing game owed the Mancini family one.

YOU SEE, there had already been a Boom Boom Mancini. Ray's father, Lenny.

Lenny was a good, tough lightweight in the days before World War II. In the immortal words of Marlon Brando, Boom Boom was good enough so he "coulda been a contendah."

He got his shot at Sammy Angott in the days just before Sammy got to be champion. Lenny beat him seven out of the 10 rounds in the eyes of the referee. But Angott got the decision – and the title shot. Lenny Mancini got to fight the German army.

They met in a 10-rounder at Metz. As usual, Lenny was taking the fight to his opponent. As usual, he could take it. They had to take 14 pieces of shrapnel out of him when the fight was over. Metz didn't come cheap.

Ray Mancini grew up on stories of the glory that might have been. The title shot, the fame, the notoriety that "coulda been."

Boom Boom II loved his father. He yearned for it all to have been different. It became an obsession with him. He watched his father struggle through life in industrial Ohio – the factories, the layoffs, the recessions, the aches from old war injuries when the weather changed.

AS KIDS will do, he dreamed of making it all up, of riding up to the front door in Youngstown in the big limousine some day and stepping out with the jewel-encrusted lightweight championship belt and laying it at his father's feet and saying, "Here, Dad, it's finally yours."

Some kids outgrow these Walter Mitty dreams of glory. Mancini never did. The little kid in Ray Mancini dies hard.

He was a plucky little kid. Like his father, he was no world beater but you had to be ready to fight when you took on a Mancini. It was never pretty, stylish. It was kind of like the battle of Metz. No one ever called him Sugar Ray. The old family name, Boom Boom, served fine.

It was not that Boom Boom II was such a great fighter. No one ever mixed him up with Ray Robinson. But he was no Jake LaMotta, either. Clean living, polite, he spoke in full sentences. He was not your adenoidal music-hall pug. He had no more time for the bright lights than his father had.

Television loved him. There was never a dull minute in a Mancini fight. All the Boom Booms fought you three minutes of every round. It was wholesome family entertainment, rated PG, the simple story of a boy and his pop. Lenny Mancini knew where his kid was at night. In a ring.

THEN, SOMETHING happened that wasn't in the script. Boom Boom Mancini, of all people, killed a man in the ring. A plot twist no one foresaw. All of a sudden, the Disney movie was a horror show, something by Kafka.

Ray Mancini was stunned, confused. This was not a part of the boyhood fantasies, not programmed into the fairy tale. This was a part of the game not included in the romance of the prize ring as handed down in the Mancini household.

Some of the verve went out of the sweet science for Ray. He seemed at a loss to understand how it all went from flowers in the ring to a wreath on the door. He appeared tentative in the ring, tortured by questions he squirmed to answer.

He took a bad beating from the Hon. Livingstone Bramble, Esq., and it seemed prudent to retire. The networks were going to do a documentary on the glory years and it seemed not out of the question that Ray Mancini would star in the part of Ray Mancini.

Instead, he's going to star as Ray Mancini in the part as lightweight contender, against Master Livingstone Bramble in Reno Feb. 16. After all, it's a title shot, another chance to make it all up to Dad.

Has the dream all turned to ashes? Does he have any second thoughts about his fulfilled dream to make good on the career of his father?

Mancini the younger shakes his head. He is still sure he did the right thing, took the right course. "Sometimes, I can't believe the things I've done, the people I've met through boxing," he said. "Look at the security. The biggest purse my father ever got was $5,000. He worked over 30 years in hard times and good, and I can make myself secure for life in just two or three fights.

Right skier, wrong anthem

BORMIO, Italy (AP) — As West Germany's Markus Wasmaier proudly stood on the winner's platform after his world championship giant slalom victory, the East German national anthem blared over the loudspeaker.

The mistake Thursday prompted a loud chorus of boos and whistles from West Germans in the audience in a downtown square of this far northern Italian resort.

Organization members blamed an employee in charge of picking out the phonograph records for the awards ceremonies at the World Alpine Skiing Championships.

The record was quickly stopped and a band played the proper anthem.

East German skiers are not taking part in the championships.

UTEP spills Utah, 68-56

EL PASO (AP) — Texas-El Paso got 18 points from senior guard Luster Goodwin to snare a 68-56 Western Athletic Conference basketball victory over Utah Thursday night.

The win improved the Miners' record to 17-6 overall, 9-2 in the WAC and kept them in the No. 1 position in the race for the conference title. The Utes dropped to 9-14 and 4-7.

Texas-El Paso led through the first twelve minutes of the first period, stretching its advantage to nine, 26-17, with 7:56 remaining.

But after running off eight consecutive points, the Miners became cold and allowed Utah to get 10 unanswered points and take the lead, 27-26.

The two teams went in at the half tied at 30 and played the first 10 minutes of the second period closely.

But with 10:23 left, Goodwin and senior forward Donnell Allen went on a scoring blitz, together pouring in 14 points compared to the Utes' three during the next five minutes.

Utah, which shot 44 percent from the field, never came back.

Also scoring in double-figures for the Miners, who hit 47 from the field for the game, were junior center Dave Feitl with 14 and Allen with 13. Allen led the Miners on the boards with seven rebounds.

Junior guard Manuel Hendrix led Utah with a game-high 20 points. Sophomore guard Gregg Dodd led the Utes in rebounding, pulling down nine.

Hardin-Simmons 59, Centenary 57

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Craig Sladek slipped in a layup with 3 seconds to go to push Hardin-Simmons to a 59-57 victory over Centenary in a Trans America Athletic Conference game Thursday.

The Cowboys, improved to 9-12 overall and 5-4 in the league, prevailed despite a second-half surge by Centenary, which sunk to 6-16 and 2-8.

Going into the second stanza, Hardin-Simmons led 37-28, with its fattest margin, 43-22, at 17:30. Centenary knotted the game at 53 at the 7-minute mark on an Albert Thomas tip-in.

Although the Centenary Gentlemen outrebounded Hardin-Simmons 32-25, the Texas team outshot Centenary from the field and from the foul line, 60 percent and 50 percent compared to Centenary's 48 percent and 44 percent.

Hardin-Simmons' Lenard Brooks hit 19 points and Sledek added 16.

For the Gentlemen, Randall Davis poured in 21 and Albert Thomas added 18.

Controversial Stadium Golf now game's hot trend

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

HONOLULU (AP) - The Stadium Golf concept, born in controversy a few years ago, now represents the most easily discernable trend in the game.

There remain, of course, some grumblings and growlings. In a sport whose leading practioners place such heavy emphasis on history and tradition, such mumbles and mutterings are, perhaps, inevitable.

The phonomena, the brainchild of PGA Tour Commissioner Deane Beman, is growing by leaps and bounds, however.

Within a couple of years, something like 20 percent of PGA Tour events will be played on Stadium Golf facilities, or Tournament Players Clubs. By the end of the decade, it could reach 33 percent, possibly more.

Three Stadium Golf courses will be played on the regular tour this year. Six more — which are targeted as tour sites — are under construction or in the planning stages.

"Within 5-10 years," Beman said, "as many as 15-17 Stadium Golf courses could be on the tour."

Which raises the obvious question: At what point are there too many?

Putting Green

"I don't think there is that point," Beman said. "It's like asking football or baseball, when do you have too many, new, modern facilities, facilities that give the spectator a better view of the action than he's ever had before."

It is that factor — providing the spectator with a view of the action — that makes the Stadium Golf courses unusual.

Generally, golf developed as a participant rather than spectator sport. With the growth in the popularity of the game, more and more spectators are flocking to courses around the country where Tour events are held.

There is a limit to the number of them that can crowd around a green on a conventional course. And only those in the first couple of rows have a chance to see.

Stadium Golf solves that problem. Spectator mounds, with tiers of seats built into them, are constructed around greens, tees and other key viewing areas, providing seating with clear viewing areas for thousands of spectators.

The prototype is the Tournament Players Club at Sawgrass at Ponte Vedra, Fla., the home course for the tour and, since 1980, the site of the annual Tournament Players Championship.

The Tournament Players Club at Eagle Trace, Coral Springs, Fla., and the TPC of Connecticut, Cromwell, Conn., also are on the Tour schedule this year.

Others are under construction or planned at Palm Springs, Calif., Potomac, Md., Houston, San Antonio, Tucson and Scottsdale, Ariz., and near Dallas.

The Tournament Players Clubs, Beman said, "are developed only in places where such courses will substantially improve tournament sites.

"In short, they are built with the guidance and expertise of the PGA Tour and financed by local real estate developers, to provide fans with the best possible atmosphere in which to enjoy tournament golf...

"Only in cases where local tournament sponsoring organizations whole-heartedly endorse such deals are Tournament Player Clubs practical or prudent."

Beman said the courses, produced by a number of architects, are of varying design and conform to local terrain and climates.

"There is no sameness to them. They are positive factors for the Tour, for golf, for spectators, for the tournament sponsors, for the developers.

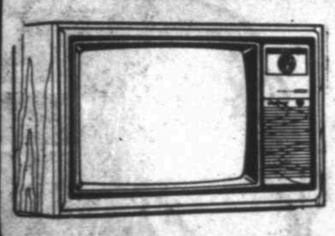

"I simply do not see a down side to them."

Home health agency created for people with low income

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

A new home health agency, geared to low-income individuals will open its doors Monday, announced a spokeswoman for Visiting Nurses Service of Midland.

"Above all, 'need' is what determines who gets assistance," said Connie Glover, executive assistant for Community and Senior Services of Midland Inc., the parent organization. "If one person is chronically ill, but doesn't have any money and another doesn't have a great need (such as a dressing change) but has the money, the greater need will win out."

Visiting Nurses Service is available to any homebound person in Midland County who is in need of health care services, regardless of age or income, said the CSS.

"The nurses will be making home visits where they will change dressings, catheters and colostomy bags, counsel family members on diabetes and work with pregnant women and the chronically sick," said Ms. Glover.

"They will also make assessments. For instance, if they notice child abuse in the home, then they may contact a social worker that we have on contract," she said.

"We already have individuals who need help," she said. "Hospice of Midland has three cases that no longer fit their criteria. They are either not terminal or in remission."

Hospice is a local non-profit organization that works with the terminally ill.

"Dr. David Mallams (a Midland orthopedist) has a referral and we are pretty sure that the Health Department will have some patients," she said. "And we are working with St. Andrews Children's Clinic."

Concern over the low-income homebound, was raised two years ago by Clara Usrey and Betty Jackson, members of the Task Force Committee, which formed the agency.

"They saw that there was a great need and they brought it to Dr. Eileen Piwetz," said Ms. Glover. Ms. Piwetz is also on the committee. "They approached us in July 1984 and the committee was formed."

According to the Rev. Steve Edwards, executive director of CSS, the new agency is the only one of its kind in Midland.

"We're the only non-profit home health care agency in Midland," he said. "There is Hospice, but it's for the terminally ill."

"The 'for-profit' agencies don't much like it, but we're not after their business," he said. "We're after those with low income."

The advent of Diagnosis Related Groups, a system now used by Medicare to cut back on health costs, has created a boom for home health agencies, said Edwards.

More than 468 illnesses (DRGs) have been classified by Medicare. The organization pays pre-established amounts for each illness. If treatment costs are less than the allowed payment, the hospital can keep the remainder. If it runs over the Medicare allowance, the hospital must absorb the cost.

"Everyone has seen cases where people have been sent home too early," said Ms. Glover. "I'm not saying that local hospitals do that though."

Still, DRGs figure heavily in the growing home health industry.

"That's why home health has boomed," said Edwards.

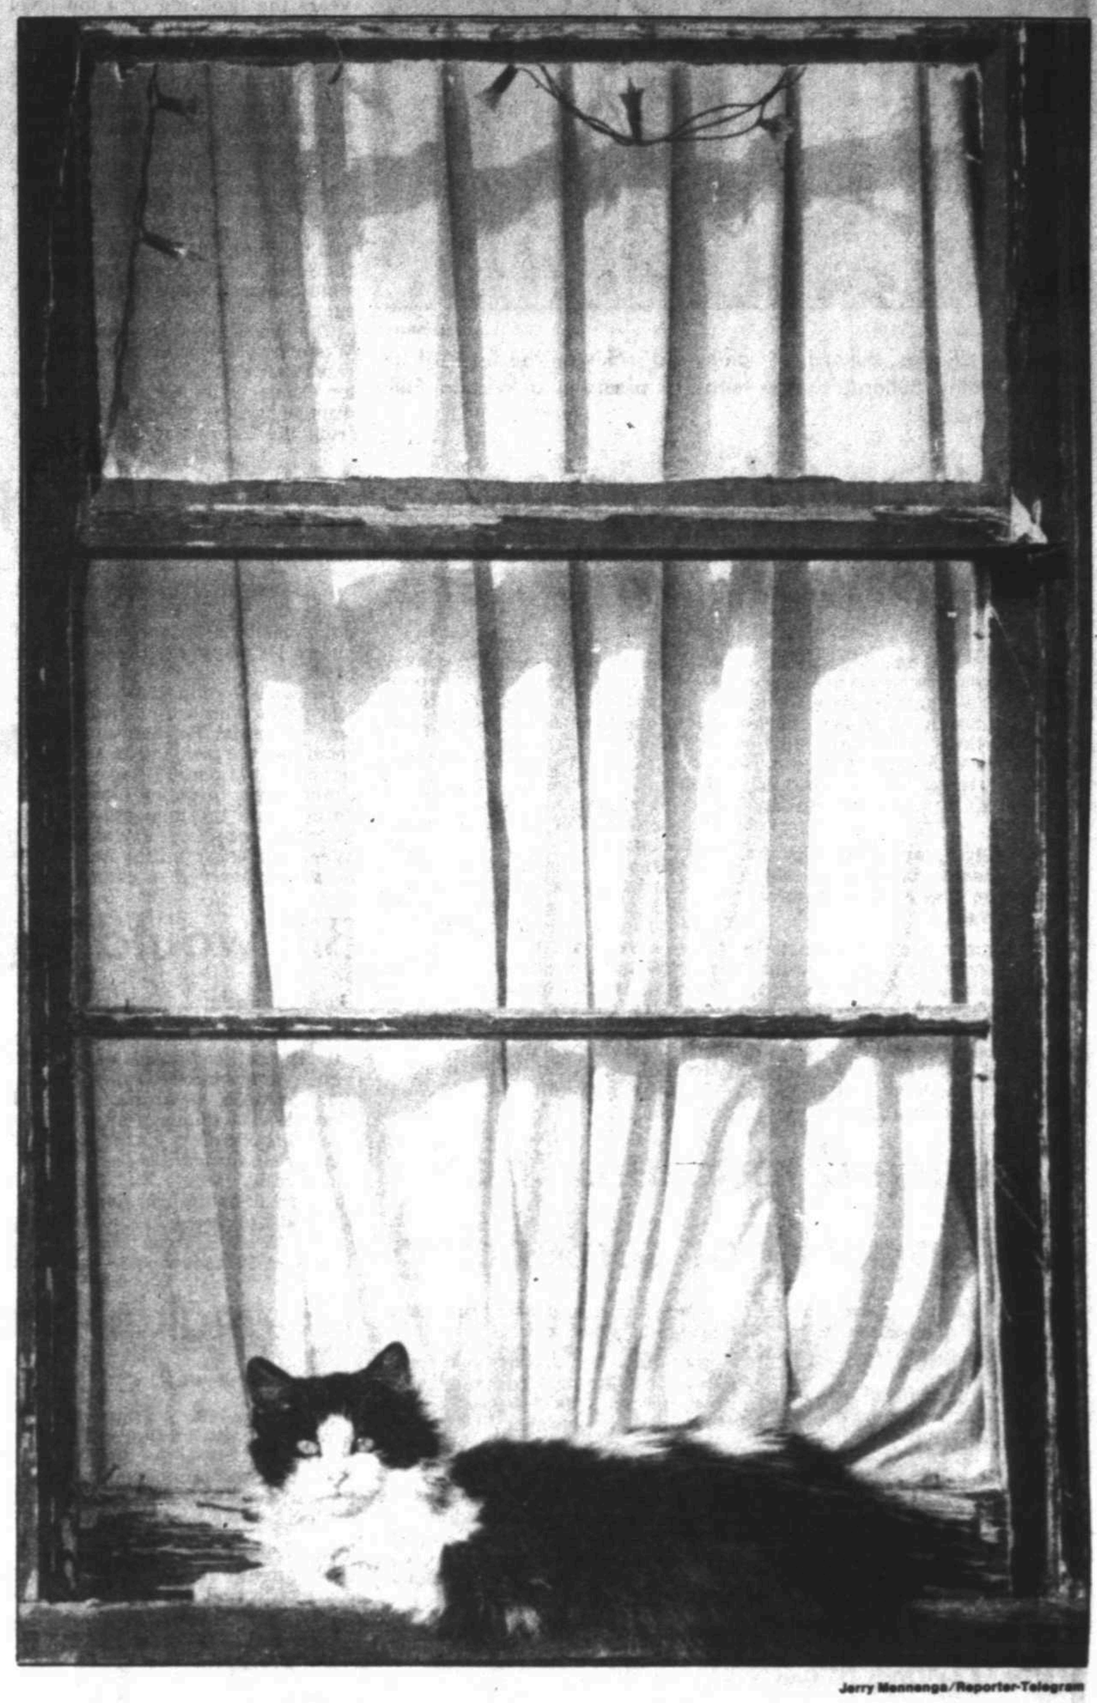

Visiting Nurses does accept Medicare and Medicade patients, however.

"We didn't want to at first because of all the red tape involved," said Ms. Glover. "But it's just not realistic today not to accept Medicare."

Medicare will pay $60 per visit, she said. "Medicade then pays a percentage of what Medicare paid."

Funding for the new group will also be supplied by monies from the CSS (60 percent) grants from foundations, individual donations and from patient fees.

The sliding scale used by the new organization is based on a point system. Income, number of household dependents, length and severity of illness and any "additional factors" assessed by the visiting nurse are considered and given point values. A higher total point value results in less cost to the patient.

Lab tests confirm water in well in west Midland tainted with chromium

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A second test of water samples taken from a well near the Industrial Loop in Midland has confirmed chromium contamination in the wellwater.

Tests done at an Odessa lab of samples taken in November confirmed the suspicions of Texas Department of Water Resources officials — that the water was contaminated by chromium. But results from the TDWR state lab showed no chromium contamination in the November samples.

A second sample was sent to the state lab. This one determined the water contained 1.66 milligrams per liter — above the minimum standard of .05 milligrams per liter set by the Environmental Protection Agency for safe drinking.

Joan Middleton, a geologist with the district TDWR office in Odessa, blamed the variation in results on a error at the state lab.

"There was chromium contamination in that well," she said.

The tests were taken after the Texas Department of Health received a tip. The water at the site had a green tint, which is consistent with chromium contamination, according to District Supervisor Bill Lockey.

More sampling is scheduled to establish the extent of the contamination. Samples taken from wells north and northwest of the contamination have not shown levels of chromium exceeding the EPA standards, according to Ms. Middleton.

"It looks like it's going to be isolated to that one well," she said.

Once the extent of the contamination has been established, an effort will be made to trace it back to the origin.

Lockey has said finding the origin by tracing groundwater migration can be difficult, particularly if contamination has spanned many years.

If efforts to find the origin fail, Lockey said application may be made to include the site for clean-up through the EPA Superfund.

Two sites in Odessa with chromium contamination have qualified for chromium contamination under this federal fund.

Contamination occurs near businesses doing plating operations or where cooling systems are employed using chromium — a rust inhibitor. Lockey said many businesses are switching to less hazardous rust inhibitors.

Chromium can percolate through soil to a level it cannot penetrate, then move laterally until it finds a hole (such as a water well). A leak in a septic tank system could cause its release into the groundwater, he said.

Since the business is closed and the property fenced off, it is unlikely people have been drinking the water. The business, which apparently has been taken over by the FDIC, is located at the end of one extension of the Industrial Loop (south of the railroad tracks on the south side of U.S. 80).

Using the water for drinking could cause liver damage. Skin irritation can result from bathing in the contaminated water, according to the literature from the local TDH office.

The city drinking water supply should not be affected since it is stored in a facility north of Midland, according to Jed Barker of the Water Hygiene division of the Midland TDH office.

Barker suggested that people in this area use bottled or city water until the contamination has been fully investigated by the TDWR.

Barbara Bush agrees to speak at Need to Read program luncheon

from Staff Reports

Barbara Bush, wife of Vice President George H.W. Bush, has agreed tentatively to speak at a box luncheon promoting the Need to Read program Feb. 28 at Midland Center.

Janice Langdale, project coordinator, said Mrs. Bush is promoting adult literacy nationwide and the Need to Read program falls into that category.

The vice president will be in Midland that day to kick off Midland's Centennial celebration.

"We're sending invitations to groups interested in hearing her," said Ms. Langdale.

The luncheon is part of Need to Read's efforts to gain public awareness from the aspects of tutors, students and funding.

Texas Education Agency is funding the project this year but that will be eliminated June 30, according to Ms. Langdale. By that time, "we will have to be a self-sustaining program. We're inviting Barbara Bush to make our program more visible."

Public awareness is coming in the form of people asking for assistance and others volunteering to teach, said Ms. Langdale. Twenty persons have signed up as tutors and they will undergo a training session the next two Saturdays. With three Junior League members already assisting, Need to Read has 11 tutors and 15 students.

"We've had more people express an interest in being a tutor than in being a student. We need to get the word out to get more students. For an adult who doesn't read, it's a tremendous step to admit the problem," she said.

Further information may be obtained by contacting Ms. Langdale or Barbara Gideon at Midland College, 683-7851.

Bill requiring financial report doesn't affect local schools

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Permian Basin educators today delighted over the word from Austin that a proposed bill requiring state agencies to report cost saving measures to the legislature in two-year intervals would exclude Midland and Odessa community colleges and public schools.

House Bill 442, proposed by Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, would mandate state agencies — including public universities — to submit to the governor, comptroller and Legislative Budget Board a report which would include the amount of legislative appropriations the agency receives, cost-cutting measures taken by the agency, estimated expenditures for the remainder of the fiscal year, any appropriations to be returned by the end of the fiscal year and "any other information" required by the comptroller, governor or LBB.

The bill also would require the report — prescribed by the comptroller — be submitted no later than March 15 of odd-numbered years. It would apply to any agency to which the Legislature appropriates funds and is proposed to take effect after passage.

Midland College President Jess Parrish said today, "I don't think we're affected because we receive appropriations according to a different system. Community colleges are funded in a lump sum where the four-year institutions are appropriated by line item."

In other words, "Texas Tech is budgeted so much for instruction, building or personnel while we ask for total appropriations and disperse them accordingly. We're pleased to hear that we're not affected though. It eliminates a whole lot of extra paperwork."

Similarly, the Midland Independent School District would not be affected by the proposed bill although its parent organization would be accountable to the legislature, according to Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi.

"My understanding is that we would not be directly affected by the bill since we're not classified as a state agency. The TEA (Texas Education Agency) receives all appropriations from the state, therefore they would be affected," he said.

Baressi added that a section of HB 72 requires the TEA to report "accountable costs" to the legislature and "in years to come, group rates will be recorded so the individual boards of education may determine whether expenditures are in line with those of other districts," he noted.

University of Texas of the Permian Basin, the only area educational institution to be affected, would experience an influx of increased paperwork if the bill were passed, according to its President Duane Leach. He said, however, "We don't look at this as being an offensive piece of legislation. It's a bill designed to provide more information to lawmakers and that's important considering this year's financial climate."

Craddick proposes new court

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Creation of a new county court at law for Midland County is being proposed by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, in House Bill 710.

The bill provides that the County Court at Law No. 2 be created on Jan. 1, 1986 "or on an earlier date determined by the Commissioners Court."

The court would have concurrent jurisdiction with the district court in cases in which the amount in controversy exceeds $500 but doesn't exceed $50,000 in appeal of decisions by the Industrial Accident Board, eminent domain cases and matters involving family and juvenile matters.

Salary for the judge of the court would be at least 90 percent of the amount paid by the state to a district judge in Midland County.

The judge would have to have resided and practiced law in Midland County for at least two years prior to his or her appointment or election and to have practiced law in Texas for at least four years.

Other provisions of the bill deal with court personnel and operations.

The bill also amends current law on the Midland County Court at Law, to provide for jurisdiction as set out for the No. 2 court.

Current law provides for jurisdiction in civil cases of $500 to $5,000 and eminent domain matters.

Other changes would provide for the same qualifications for the judge of the existing court as for the new court.

NASA wants to protect secrets

HOUSTON (AP) — Now that NASA is conducting classified shuttle missions, space agency researchers are looking for ways to ensure unwanted eavesdroppers aren't let in on the secret.

Specialists with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration believe the answer may lie in a communication system that transmits signals by invisible infrared light, a professor said.

Harold Killen, a technology professor at the University of Houston, is helping NASA develop the infrared system, which allows astronauts to speak to each other onboard without being overheard.

Space-to-ground converstion was completely blacked out last month when NASA staged its first mission dedicated solely to work for the Department of Defense. Fifteen similar missions are planned.

Currently, astronauts use headphones and a microphone to speak to ground controllers in a system using radio waves that are uncoded. The astronauts use the same system to talk to each other, but NASA officials are concerned because onboard discussions are not encoded.

"They are worried about a nearby satellite picking up what they're saying onboard the shuttle," Killen, 49, said in a recent interview.

Killen said the infrared system uses transmitters that blink and pick up blinks to communicate.

"The entire room will be flooded with infrared energy," Killen said.

Infrared energy already is used to transmit commands to robots used in factories with a high level of radio background "noise," and Killen said he foresees other uses.

"It's useful in picking up missiles with satellites," he said. "With an infrared system, you can pick up the energy from a match 1,000 miles away."

Killen helped develop the Saturn V rocket, which took men to the moon and was project engineer for Rice University's Aurora I satellite, which studied the northern lights.

He says is he currently working on a shuttle project to develop in which a laser is used to make docking easier.

Two senators stall nuclear waste dump bill

AUSTIN (AP) — A clash of legislative wills between two state senators has stalled, and perhaps killed, a bill that would delay for at least 2½ years the licensing of a low-level nuclear waste dump in Texas.

Sen. John Traeger asked the Senate for permission Thursday to bring up his low-level bill but said he would oppose an amendent by Sen. Carlos Truan, which was approved in committee 4-3.

Truan, D-Corpus Christi, said without his amendment, which also would delay for 2½ years the purchase of a disposal site, Traeger's bill was "nothing but window dressing" for South Texans worried about possible contamination of their water supply.

The Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority has indicated that a 365-acres site in McMullen County is its No. 1 choice for a disposal facility. The site is 12 miles from the Choke Canyon reservoir, which supplies water for 21 communities and 500,000 people.

Truan said if the Senate should vote to suspend its rules and debate Traeger's bill, Truan would filibuster for hours.

Traeger needed 25 votes, and was far short at 14.

"Folks will vote any way to keep from listening to a Truan filibuster," Traeger quipped afterward.

Traeger was asked if he might try to bring the bill up again, and he replied, "Not unless Sen. Truan gets up and says he will not try to put his amendment on and works the floor to change votes. I'm not going to push it any further."

"Right now, I'd say it's dead — and any other bill, which means the site will probably go on," Traeger said.

He said without a bill the low-level authority "will immediately purchase (land) and start construction on a disposal site."

Asked why he couldn't go along with Truan's amendment, Traeger said, "Because it won't pass, that's why. His amendment demolishes" the low-level authority. "It puts them completely out of business. It doesn't even allow them to go out and explore."

Truan told reporters, "If my amendment is not on, Traeger's bill is nothing more than a toothless tiger...If Sen. Traeger's concerned about contamination, he ought to support my amendment."

Traeger was asked, "Do you have a gentleman's agreement if your bill passed without Truan's amendment that they (the low-level authority) would not ahead and purchase land?"

He responded: "Well, I can't say there was a binding agreement, but they had indicated to me that they would certainly take a long time before they purchased in the face of a legislative mandate."

Truan said, "I will do everything to prevent the authority from purchasing that land in McMullen County."

He said even if the authority's board votes to buy the McMullen County land, the mayor of Corpus Christi "has already served notice" that the city "is ready to file suit" to stop the purchase.

In other action Thursday, the Senate approved and sent to the House bills that would:

— Change the day for observing the Memorial Day holiday from the last Monday in May to May 30. Congress shortly after the Civil War set May 30 as the date to honor the dead of American wars. But in 1971, the day was changed to the last Monday in May.

Sen. Lindon Williams, D-Houston and the bill sponsor, said 16 states had passed similar measures and after a majority do so, Congress would change the date.

Mother takes infant son to work with her

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Riding piggyback while his mother tends to the plants in Sikes Senter Mall, four-month-old Wesley Charles Bullard likely will be a better adjusted child because of the experience. At least that's what his mother, Kathy Howard Bullard, believes.

"He really enjoys going with me. So many people come up and talk to him and he likes all that attention," said Mrs. Bullard.

Last summer she sold the majority of her plant maintenance business, known as the Growing Business, which she started in 1981. "I decided to keep the mall and only a few small accounts so that I could devote more time to my son, as well as take him to work with me," she said.

"Fortunately, they haven't objected to my bringing Wesley to work as long as the work gets done. He is just such a good baby that it allows me the freedom to go ahead and do everything."

She carries Wesley in a backpack and then lets him nap in an infant carrier attached to the work cart that holds all her garden hoses and water buckets.

"Most of the time I will carry him on the backpack because he likes moving around and looking at different things," said Mrs. Bullard. "It must agree with him. The doctor says he has grown four-and-a-half inches in the last six weeks."

Wesley has tagged along on his mother's job since he was 5 weeks old. "Most kids will quit school," said Mrs. Bullard. But in Wesley's case, "I think he will quit work to go to school."

Woman reports assault by man she knew

From Staff Reports

A 25-year-old Midland woman told police she was assaulted late Thursday night by a man whom she had known 1½ years who broke into her house.

Demita J. Jordon, 1501 S. Marshall, told police who were called to Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room that the man had kicked down her door at 11 p.m. Thursday.

According to police reports, Ms. Jordon said the man entered her bedroom where she was almost asleep and began hitting her before he struck her with a chair on the right side of the face.

The woman said she was unable to leave because she was afraid he would hurt her more.

The man, no age or address available, left her house at 2 a.m., reports said. Ms. Jordon was able to go to a store and call her parents, who took her to the emergency room.

Police reports said the woman may have suffered a broken shoulder and serious injury to her right eye, which was swollen and bleeding. A hospital spokeswoman said Ms. Jordon was treated and released.

In other complaints filed with city police, Droa Doyle, 1906 N. Main, said her home was burglarized between 4 p.m. and 6:15 p.m. Thursday.

According to reports, the house was entered by kicking down a door. Taken was an unknown amount of jewelry, $800 color television set and three packages of toilet paper and paper towels, valued at $4.40.

Robert J. Wilson, 723 W. Dengar No. 2E told police a 1984 Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme owned by TRW Brandt was burglarized between Wednesday and 7:30 p.m. Thursday while it was parked in a lot south of his apartment. According to reports, a window was broken and a $270 radar detector was stolen.

In reports filed at the county sheriff's office, Elaine Hughes of Route 5 Box 863-A reported an AM/FM cassette stereo and speakers valued at $350 were stolen from her automobile between 10:30 p.m. Wednesday and 6:15 p.m. Thursday. About $200 worth of damage was done to the car.

James Humphreys, 1701 W. Kansas, told deputies a four-month-old Alaskan Malamute was stolen from his residence. The puppy, valued at at $250, was described as gray with a white belly.

Bill would regulate price of natural gas for farmers

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bill regulating natural gas used by farmers to fuel irrigation pumps has been filed by Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Canyon, who said Thursday the time has come to stop charging farmers "unreasonably high prices for natural gas."

Sarpalius' Senate Bill 400 places the price of natural gas sold for agricultural use under the jurisdiction of the Texas Railroad Commission. The West Texas lawmaker said such regulation is long overdue.

"All other natural gas sales are regulated by the railroad commission," Sarpalius said at a news conference. "Since their gas isn't regulated, some unscrupulous producers are charging farmers three or four extra dollars per thousand cubic feet, and giving the farmers bad natural gas to boot."

The measure has received support from the Texas Corn Growers Association, the Texas-New Mexico Sugar Beet Growers Association, and the recently formed Texas Agricultural Energy Users Association.

Former House Speaker Billy Clayton, a lobbyist for the Texas Agricultural Energy Users Association, said it has not been uncommon for some farmers' gas bills to increase dramatically without warning.

"We're not asking the Legislature to give farmers 'a deal'," said Sarpalius. "We're asking the Legislature to be fair." He added the bill is intended to give farmers the same protection enjoyed by other natural gas users.

"Government regulation is something nobody really cares for, but in this case, there isn't another option," Sarpalius said. "Industry-wide deregulation would be nice, but that's got to come at the federal level, and it just isn't coming yet. The only real choice is to put farmers in the same category with everyone else."

Clayton said regulation would let farmers know that when they buy gas, they're going to get a quality product.

Convicted murderer does not appear for sentencing

AUSTIN (AP) — An ironworker convicted of the ambush slaying of an Austin man apparently decided that life as a fugitive was better than life in prison and failed to appear in court for the punishment phase of his trial, authorities said.

The jury this week convicted Franklin Theodore "Ted" Roberts of the Aug. 8, 1984, murder of J.C. Wilkerson, 39, who was shot as he sat in his pickup at an Austin intersection.

But Roberts failed to show up Thursday when the jurors were to decide punishment. The jury then decided he should spend the rest of his life in prison.

Minutes after the jury had found Roberts guilty on Wednesday, assistant district attorney Brian Bishop asked State District Judge Jon Wisser to increase Roberts' bail and to order Roberts into custody.

But state law says a judge has the option to allow people who have posted bail to remain free after their convictions until their sentence is decided, and Wisser denied Bishop's request.

Lawmaker introduces bills concerning law enforcement

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, has introduced two bills concerning law enforcement and a bill about the annexation of territory without the consent of land owners.

House Bill 624 proposes increasing the punishment for assaults on peace officers. The bill provides that the person committing such an assault "is presumed to have known that the person assaulted was a peace officer if the peace officer was wearing a distinctive uniform indicating his employment as a peace officer" at the time.

The offense of assault in such cases would be upgraded from a Class C to a Class B misdemeanor. It also would cover cases where an officer is discharging an official duty, or cases of retaliation "for or on account of an exercise of official power or performance of an official duty."

Legislation to permit probation officers to carry weapons also has been introduced by Rudd.

House Bill 483 would allow probation officers to carry weapons while "in the actual discharge of...official duties."

The bill is proposed to take effect Sept. 1.

The state representative also has introduced House Bill 590, which provides that "any city may annex territory in accordance with this act without the consent of any of the residents of the territory and without the consent of any of the owners of land in the territory."

The bill, which amends the Municipal Annexation Act, is proposed to become effective upon its passage.

Next shuttle launch to be delayed 11 days

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The next flight of the space shuttle, originally scheduled for Feb. 20, will be launched 11 days late, NASA officials announced.

"The reason for the delay is additional work to be done with the heat protection tiles," National Aeronautics and Space Administration spokesman Steve Nesbitt said Thursday.

The planned four-day mission of the shuttle Challenger, which includes U.S. Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, among the seven-member crew, would be launched no earlier than March 3 from Cape Kennedy at 7:31 a.m. EST, Nesbitt said.

The shuttle would return to Florida on March 7 at about 8:32 a.m.

The Challenger, attached to its launch rocket, is slated to begin moving from its processing facility to the Vehicle Assembly Building at the Kennedy Space Center at 12:01 a.m. Sunday.

Sharon Johnson

Woman loves horse training

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Wild horses couldn't drag Sharon Johnson away from her hobby.

That's because wild horses (and their haltered cousins) are her hobby.

Mrs. Johnson has 17 years banking experience, but she's a horse trainer to boot.

Her amber eyes light up like a sun-drenched western sky when she talks of the many stallions and geldings and mares she has trained. "If I had my life to live over, I would now be a professional horse trainer," said Mrs. Johnson.

Mrs. Johnson lives on the fringes of Wichita Falls on a 65-acre spread. Thirty acres are in wheat and 35 acres in pasture. Right now, she and her husband, Jimmy J. Johnson (known as "3J"), own five horses, but they used to own 25 horses.

Mrs. Johnson has been training horses the past 15 years. Once, during a three-year period of those 15 years, she broke and trained horses for a living.

"One time, a rancher brought me five unbroken and unhaltered horses. In order to get a halter on the horses I had to run them (one at a time) up in a cattle chute. They will try to bite you, paw you," she said. "One was 8 years old and had never had a halter on."

But she loves horses — all horses — and that makes the difference. She said, "Horses have good attitudes. They seem eager to learn and to work. Horses have the mentality of a 3-year-old child and that's why you have to repeat and repeat" the steps in training. Patience pays off, though. She said she succeeded in training the five horses and "they were taken back to be used as working ranch horses."

Mrs. Johnson's fondness for horses began a long time ago when she was 8. "I lived out in the country. I was born in Eureka, Kan., and my little girlfriend had two horses. We rode together across the open country." She said she rode bareback "because I was too little to put a saddle on the horse."

Training horses is not without its pitfalls and pratfalls, as Mrs. Johnson will tell you.

"Between my husband and me, we've had 11 broken bones," said Mrs. Johnson. "Once, I broke my leg in three places. The horse reared up and fell over backwards on me."

Mrs. Johnson trains all kinds of horses: those that work cattle, run the barrels, and western pleasure horses. She rides in parades and participates in barrel futurities. She said for the futurities a horse must be 4 years old or younger and must not have won money in any other aspect previously. She said, "A good age for a horse is 6 to 7 years old, if he has been ridden and broken properly."

She said a horse may live to be 25, and she once knew one "that was 25 and pregnant." She said foaling takes 11 months and 21 days. "You must make sure the mare has the right nutrition for both the mare and the foal. It's just like a mother and child. And they must have good shelter."

A 1-week-old colt can be trained, said Mrs. Johnson. "You can teach a 1-week-old baby to lead," she said.

"What Jim and I do is sack a horse out. We hobble or tie one leg up, then rub them all over with a saddle blanket or gunny sack so they will know we aren't going to hurt them. They get used to it," said Mrs. Johnson, and then it isn't hard to halter break them.

Mrs. Johnson said she talks to her horses every day, especially to a favorite mare.

The Johnsons hold horse shows, play days, barrel racing and roping each Sunday in the arena on their property. "The weather must be 45 degrees or above," Mrs. Johnson said.

The horsewoman said she recently was named vice chairman of a newly organized sub-committee of the Wichita County Horse Committee. It is called Texhoma All Breed Horse Show Association, and Mrs. Johnson is on the rules committee. The organization is made up of 10 to 20 horse clubs that want to put on horse shows. The shows will be held in Johnsons' arena, starting in March, she said.

On the day of the 1979 Wichita Falls tornado, "All the horses were in the barn. And April is breeding season. The tornado went around the barn and didn't hit it at all. It tore down three miles of fence, cut the water off."

"Out of the goodness of his heart, horse breeder Coy Smith of Kamay took all the horses and fed them and took care of them," Mrs. Johnson said.

Entomologist names rare beetle after his wife Barbara Anne

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Some men name yachts or race horses for their wives to show their esteem.

W.D. Sumlin III honored his wife by naming a rare — and possibly valuable — El Paso beetle after her.

"It was a very pretty beetle, so I thought I'd name it for her. From my standpoint, it's a kind of immortality," Sumlin said.

Since first discovering the beetle 10 years ago, Sumlin has begun the process of having the Barbara Anne's Tiger Beetle (Cicindela politula barbaraannae) placed on the U.S. endangered species list.

Sumlin, a beetle taxonomist and entomology teacher in San Antonio, first stumbled across the half-inch, bright-red beetle in 1975 in the Hueco Mountains near El Paso.

Sumlin was coming back empty-handed from an entomological expedition in the mountains of Durango, Mexico, in search of the brilliant purple laetipennis subspecies of the tiger beetle. His group made a final hike into the Hueco Mountains near El Paso, where Sumlin discovered several of the future barbaraannaein limestone deposits.

"That's what makes it so unusual. They're the only beetles in the U.S. that are only found in limestone deposits," Sumlin said.

After publishing an article on the barbaraanae in a scientific entomology journal, Sumlin had the beetle subspecies entered in The International Code of Zoological Nomenclature, a listing of new species in the world.

Sumlin and a friend in San Antonio have discovered several other new subspecies of tiger beetles in the Hueco and Guadalupe mountains in West Texas that have not yet been listed.

Last year, Sumlin filed a petition with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Washington, D.C., to have the barbaraannae and another unnamed blue-green tiger beetle placed on the endangered species list.

The request passed the first hurdle in December, when the department included the two West Texas beetles on its list of 54 species that would be subjects of more researched in 1985.

David Klinger, a public affairs officer with the Fish and Wildlife Service, said it will study Sumlin's material and decide within a year whether or not to do its own study.

"It's quite a lengthy process," Klinger said. Currently, 828 species are on the U.S. endangered species list.

Surprisingly, Sumlin said, a large market exists for unusual tiger beetles.

"A bunch of these beetles are worth a great deal of money on the open market," he said. He said several U.S. firms and many foreign firms deal in insect specimens.

Markets peak

NEW YORK (AP) — The Dow Jones industrial average fell short of a record high Thursday while other market gauges did reach new peaks, including the composite indexes of the New York Stock Exchange and Standard & Poor's Corp.

Auto and airline stocks, rebounding from sharp losses in the previous session, paced the gainers. Steel, aerospace, computer and financial stocks also rose, but several retail issues fell.

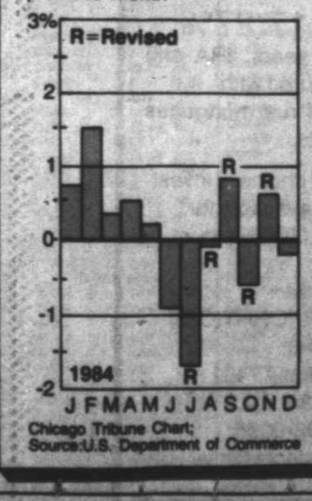

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up nearly 11 points at midsession, closed with a 9.49-point gain at 1,290.08 — exactly offsetting its loss over the two previous sessions. The advance left the average less than three points shy of its record high 1,292.62 reached Jan. 29.

Advances led declines 2 to 1 on the NYSE, whose 65-stock composite index rose 0.78 to a record 105.18.

Big Board volume swelled to 151.73 million shares from 140.98 million Wednesday.

Bankruptcy petitions filed against Murchison

DALLAS (AP) — Three creditors have filed a petition for involuntary bankruptcy against Clint Murchison Jr., a lawyer for the millionaire financier and former owner of the Dallas Cowboys says.

Lawyer Phillip Palmer told the Dallas Times Herald Thursday that Murchison will sidestep the petition by voluntarily filing for bankruptcy within two weeks.

The creditors who filed the involuntary bankruptcy petition were identified as Toronto-Dominion Bank, Kona-Post and Citicorp Real Estate.

Palmer said the action did not surprise him. "I would say it has been in the mill for several days," he said.

"The creditors seem to feel the affairs of Clint Murchison are too complex to be handled informally and outside bankruptcy court," he added.

The lawyer said he believed that the filing was prompted by Murchison's recent attempt to sell three Texas banks: First National Bank of Weatherford, Citizens State Bank of Ganado and Irving National Bank. Such sales would be prohibited under involuntary bankruptcy.

"The creditors were concerned about the continuing activity to sell the banks and liquidate some other property," Palmer said.

The voluntary bankruptcy filing under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act would allow Murchison to devise a plan of reorganization to satisfy claims by about 30 creditors amounting to as much as $175 million, Palmer said. If the involuntary bankruptcy action were allowed to proceed, Palmer said, it would result in the forced liquidation of his assets.

Asked if he could give a dollar value on Murchison's assets, Palmer said, "Murchison's assets are very difficult to value." He did estimate that Murchison has only $20 million in assets that are unencumbered by debt.

The Murchison empire has been steadily declining since last spring when he sold his most visible asset, the Dallas Cowboys National Football League team.

Since that time, creditors have filed an almost steady string of suits and have won judgements from Murchison.

UPS' new intrastate service could boost area economy

By SUSAN LINDSAY
Business-Oil Writer

The Texas Railroad Commission's recent approval of United Parcel Service's application for authority to transport packages from point to point within Texas could mean a boost in the area economy.

Larry Cummins, manager for the UPS office in Midland, said his office would probably hire an additional 15 to 20 employees before the intrastate service begins in early November.

He said the firm's rate schedule must be approved by the commission before the service may begin. Also to be approved are the company's plans to form a sorting hub in Midland, he said.

If approved, the facility possibly could be constructed in about two years near the Midland Regional Air Terminal and house both the Midland and Odessa UPS offices, he said.

"We do not have a location picked out if the hub is approved. It would be easier to serve both cities in this location," he said, adding that although the Midland and Odessa offices could be located in the same building, they would remain separate centers.

The hub would employ about 200 workers, he said, adding that both offices now have about 45 employees each.

The Midland office now routes about 6,500 packages a day. Cummins said he expects the office's load to double within a year after the additional service begins.

Intrastate rates would probably be slightly lower than the present rates because the distances are closer, Cummins said.

He said the additional service is widely supported by the public. "The only other state-wide delivery service is the post office which often does not go to rural homes. They just leave packages at mailboxes on the county roads."

"We would be able to serve every address. Now we only can serve every address in Texas as long as packages are from out of state," he said.

Although many people back the intrastate service, the UPS' battle to acquire the authority to transport packages from point to point within Texas was a long time coming.

"Texas is the last state in the nation to approve intrastate service," said Cummins of the company founded in 1907.

The UPS filed its application with the Railroad Commission in August 1978. After lengthy consideration in state courts concerning the question of whether the commission had jurisdiction to consider the application, hearings were conducted by the Commission's Transportation Division in 1982 and 1983.

In August of last year, the hearings examiner recommended the application be denied, saying state law requires applicants to provide specific route maps and service schedules and that the UPS application did not meet those requirements.

Commissioners Mack Wallace and Chairman Buddy Temple overruled that recommendation and directed the examiner to prepare a new recommendation based on the question of need for the proposed service in Texas.

The examiner later granted a recommendation that the UPS application be approved.

Texans hold 24.5 percent of New Mexico Finance

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — A Texas investor group now holds 24.5 percent of United New Mexico Financial Corp., and it may acquire more, says lead investor Gerald J. Ford.

But Ford says his group is not interested in takeover.

"That's not our strategy whatsoever," he said.

Ford said his interest is investment in one-bank, not multibank holding companies.

Ford is chairman of the board of First National Bank of Lubbock, Texas, and owner of a string of one-bank holding companies in West Texas. In 1984, he bought the First Interstate Bancorp in Gallup for $5 million.

United New Mexico announced earlier this week that Ford's investor group now has acquired 838,174 shares, or 24.5 percent, of the company's outstanding common stock.

This surpasses the holdings by the Robert O. Anderson family, which 13D Research Services, a private New York investment research firm, said owns 24.04 percent.

United New Mexico also reported that the group is negotiating to obtain financing to purchase an additional 7.5 percent of its stock on the open market.

Ford said his group merely has consummated agreements made earlier.

Last October, Ford's group owned 9.9 percent and had agreements to acquire an additional 14.6 percent.

"We're fairly explicit in our 13D (a Securities and Exchange filing) that we may purchase additional stock," he said.

The SEC filing states the group could, "at some future time, dispose of the shares of common stock that they own or take other action with respect to such common stock that could result in a change in the corporate structure of" United New Mexico.

Ford now is chairman of United New Mexico's executive committee, and another investor in the group, Thomas C. Nichols, recently was appointed a director.

Nichols is chairman and chief executive officer of Conley, Lott & Nichols Machinery Co., a heavy-equipment distributor in Dallas.

SEC 13D filings and research reports show other members of the group are Craig Hall, a Dallas real estate entrepreneur and owner of two savings and loans; Anne Sowell, of Fort Worth, Texas, who was on the 1984 Forbes list of the 400 wealthiest people in the United States with a net worth of more than $190 million;

James R. Sowell, independent oil operator and husband of Anne Sowell; B.M. Rankin Jr., an independent oil operator in Dallas; Roger C. Chapman, chairman of the board of Chapman Drilling Co. in Houston and president of Chapman Energy Inc. of Dallas; James H. Stone, chairman and chief executive officer of Stone Oil Corp. in New Orleans;

S.E. Cone Jr., an independent oil operator in Lubbock; Ben Stribling, a real estate developer in Lubbock; and Nu-Way Energy Corp., an oil and gas exploration and development firm in Fort Worth.

United New Mexico earned $1.8 million in 1983 after losses of $1.37 million in 1982. A 1984 report is expected to be issued soon.

Tucker Drilling sells half its interest in K.W.B. field

Tucker Drilling Co. has sold one-half its interest in the K.W.B. (Strawn oil, Canyon gas field) in Tom Green County to United Oil Producers of Los Angeles, according to Larry J. Tucker, president Tucker Drilling Co., Inc.

Under the terms of the sale, Tucker Drilling will receive $3.53 million in cash and a production payment of $525,000 for its 30 percent interest in the gas plant and 22 percent interest in the wells.

The field, discovered in 1981, the field has 81 Strawn oil wells and seven Canyon gas wells. Tucker Drilling will continue to operate the field.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 256 taxable money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT(R) of Holliston, Mass. 01746 decreased $1.4 billion to $203.0 billion during the week ended Feb. 5, 1985. The taxable funds' 7-day average yield decreased to 7.79 percent from 7.85 percent. The taxable funds' 30-day average yield decreased to 7.92 percent from 8.04 percent. The taxable funds' average maturity decreased two days to 47.

William E. Donoghue says, "Despite heavy activity in the stock market, the wait-and-see attitude of individual money fund investors prevailed again this week as the assets of consumer money funds increased slightly. Institutional investors, however, continued to remove cash from the money funds. This week's asset decrease of $1.6 billion brought the two-week asset outflow from the institutional money funds to $4.2 billion. The taxable money funds' 7-day average yield of 7.79 percent (8.10 percent compounded) is the lowest 7-day average yield since June 1, 1983. Tax-free money fund assets grew $1.1 billion and reached a new high of $29.2 billion. Nearly $8 billion has poured into these 80 funds since the start of 1985." Garza well produces 50 barrels

Staff Reports

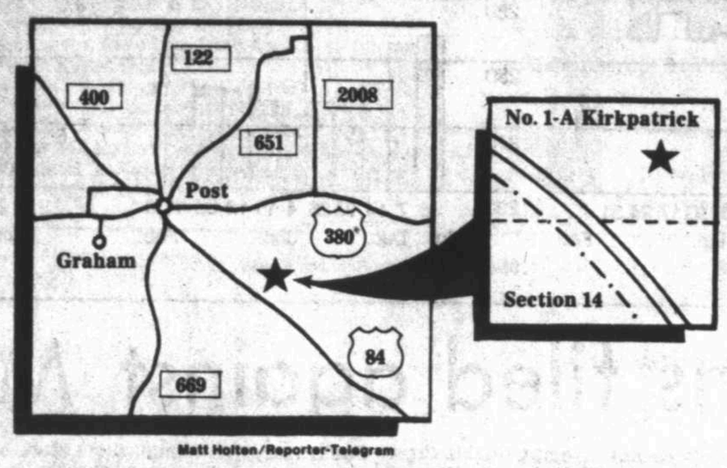

An exploratory well has resulted in a completion in the Greg-John (Strawn) zone of Garza County.

MARALO, INC. tested the No. 1-A Kirkpatrick to pump 50 barrels of 39 gravity crude, 17 Mcfpd and 198 barrels of water daily. Gas-oil ratio is 340:1. The Strawn was perforated from 7,695 to 7,698 ft. and acidized with 300 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid.

Planned as an 8,200 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 8,226 ft. and plugged back to 7,940 ft. Final casing set was 5 1/2 inches at 7,806 ft.

On a ground elevation of 2,433.8 ft., formation tops are the Rustler at 722 ft., Yates at 1,140 ft., Grayburg at 2,244 ft., Glorieta at 3,290 ft., Strawn at 7,625 ft., and the Ellenburger at 8,194 ft.

Stock market mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks were mixed at midsession today as trading volume slowed from its recent heavy pace.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 9.49 on Thursday, lost 2.98 to 1,287.10 after two hours today. The measure hit a record high 1,292.62 on Jan. 29.

Advances held a 6-5 lead over declines on the New York Stock Exchange, whose composite index slipped 0.03 to 105.15.

Big Board volume totaled 54.23 million shares at noon EST, down from 69.29 million at that hour Thursday.

The market should be helped by the conclusion of the Treasury's heavy borrowing this week, which was completed Thursday with the sale of $5.75 billion in 30-year bonds, analysts said.

Meanwhile, President Reagan indicated in an interview with the Wall Street Journal that he has not been convinced of the need to raise taxes on corporations.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Reagan advocates 'hands-off' policy

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — The federal government, said President Reagan in his annual economic report to Congress, "has only a few important economic responsibilities."

It was hardly the type of statement that would have been made by Presidents Carter, Ford, Nixon, Johnson, Kennedy, Eisenhower, Truman or Roosevelt, but coming from Reagan it seemed to have a triumphant pitch.

The reason, perhaps, is that Reagan's hands-off economic policies have coincided with a track record that includes, among other things, a return to productivity, the suppression of inflation and the creation of millions of new jobs.

Reagan's philosophy is precisely opposite to the ideology of involvement, which in one form or another has been advocated to some degree by almost all presidents and presidential candidates for more than half a century.

While the few roles that government does play in the economy should not be treated lightly, the president suggests, "additional federal intervention is more often a part of the problem than a part of the solution."

And yet, in one of the most profound ironies of any administration, the potential exists for the federal government to intrude mightily into the private sector and trample on the creative energies the president admires.

The plot involves the huge federal budget deficits, which seem to defy the surgical skills of the White House, Congress, department heads, academics and, of course, recipients of federal aid in its various forms.

So far, according to the economic consensus, the deficits haven't hurt as much as they can. But the consensus also states that the day of reckoning is approaching, and that it might even occur this year.

The problem is that budget deficits must be financed out of the same capital pool that supports consumer spending, business expansion, and other enterprises of the private sector on which Reagan depends so much.

And if the past is a criteria, the federal government can be like an elephant in the watering hole during the dry season. The elephant gets served first; all other borrowers left waiting in line.

With the pool inadequate to service all callers, interest rates could shoot higher, as they have done in the past. There is no limit on what Uncle Sam will pay to finance his debt, a freedom denied to households and businesses.

The plot, if played out, would leave the private sector parched for funds and with no other course but postponement or abandonment of plans, with a resultant shrinkage of its share of the total economy.

So far, the direct conflict has been avoided, in part because corporations have been able to generate funds from profits, thereby escaping the need to dip into the credit pool. As a result, interest rates have dropped.

Everyone knows, however, that rates could rise just as easily, a lesson that was demonstrated as recently as three years ago.

According to the folks in universities, corporations and government who have studied the matter, a destructive cycle could then ensue, with the private sector so dear to Reagan being the big loser.

It would, in only the barest disguise, be the very federal intervention the president blames for having created so many of yesterday's and today's problems — and which he had sought so hard to end.

John Cunniff is business analyst for the Associated Press.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Early withdrawal carries penalties

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I was all set to put a large amount of money into a 10-year certificate of deposit at a bank advertising a high interest rate. Then, I found out that the bank charges 12 months' loss of interest for premature redemption of CDs. Is this allowed?

Doyle

A. Sure. The regulatory authorities set the minimum CD early withdrawal penalties for federally insured banks and S&Ls. But each institution can set higher penalties.

Every CD ad I have ever seen has a line about "Substantial penalty for early withdrawal." It's wise to find out exactly how substantial the penalty will be — especially in long-term CDs.

Q. My son opened a $1,000 certificate of deposit account at a local savings and loan association in July, 1978. It was an 8 percent certificate for a term of eight years.

He closed the account about two months ago. He received all the interest he had coming. But his original $1,000 principal was reduced to $737 by a $263 penalty charge. He was told he had to pay the penalty "under the old rules." Wasn't that an excessive charge?

A. That hard-nosed S&L was not required to slap on that large penalty. But it had the right to do so.

On CDs issued before June 2, 1980, the minimum penalty for early withdrawal at a federally insured S&L or bank was the loss of three months' interest, plus a reduction of interest for the balance of the time the certificates were in force to the lower passbook savings account rate.

That's the penalty your son was charged.

The minimum penalty on CDs with maturities of more than one year was reduced to the loss of six months' interest, with no reduction in the rest of the interest, on June 2, 1980, and to three months' interest on Oct. 1, 1983.

When the rules were changed in 1980, S&Ls and banks were given the option of charging either the old penalty or the new penalty — "with the consent of the depositor."

Naturally, your son would have consented to the new penalty if he had been given the opportunity. The loss of six months' interest on a $1,000 CD paying 8 percent interest would have cost him only $40.

Different designs compete for tomorrow's hearts

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Thump-thump-thump-thump-thump-thump-thump. ...

A bank of artificial hearts sits in a laboratory in Salt Lake City, beating 70 times a minutes, 4,200 times an hour, 37 million times a year — for up to five years so far.

The devices are Jarvik-7 hearts, the same model as the externally powered, two-chambered unit that is keeping William C. Schroeder alive in Louisville. Scientists at Symbion Inc., the company that makes the Jarvik heart, think these devices will one day support as many patients as the more than 60,000 whose lives are now prolonged by the artificial kidney.

Yet, despite the initial success of the world's second artificial heart, other researchers think the future of mechanical hearts lies in another direction — toward a less complex unit called the ventricular assist device (VAD).

A VAD is a single-chambered unit, really a half-heart pump, which has been used, for short periods, in more than 200 implants. It takes over the workload of the left ventricle, the heart's main pumping chamber that sends blood to the body. Key points distinguishing the VAD from the total artificial heart are:

— The VAD's motor is implanted along with its pump so patients are not tethered to a bulky unit.

— The device is installed piggyback alongside the patient's failing natural heart.

THE VAD concept seems to be gaining support. While the artificial heart has won worldwide publicity, VAD has won the lion's share of federal government funds.

"It (the artificial heart implant) is exciting for Schroeder and his family, but it is not the only activity," says John T. Watson, chief of the devices and technology branch of the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute. "... The institute's program is focused on ventricular assist devices. They are more simple to apply because you don't have to remove the natural heart."

Officials of the institute, which hands out federal money for heart research, believe there will be a need for both devices. But for the present the bulk of the organization's $12.5 million research fund for mechanical hearts is going to VAD. Watson declined to break down the figures. Industry sources say about $11 million is going to VAD, compared to less than $1 million for the artificial heart.

Quietly and without much publicity, more than 200 VADs have been implanted in humans — although only for short periods ranging from hours to days. Doctors use the devices to give tired, sick hearts a rest or to provide a "bridge" to a transplant when no donated heart is immediately available.

BUT SEVEN companies, four with partial support from the government, are working on VAD confident that it will become the dominant device for permanent mechanical-heart implants. It is critical, VAD proponents say, to have a totally implantable mechanical heart so patients can be mobile.

"Jarvik-7 will be an antique one day," says Thomas M. Loarie, president of Novacor Medical Corp. of Oakland, Calif., manufacturer of a VAD called the Pulsemaker. "Fully implantable systems are the future. They are going to be the system that will gain the acceptance of the patient and the medical community."

So far, VADs for long-term use have been implanted only in animals. Most run on miniaturized electric-powered motors, eliminating air lines that tie the artificial-heart patient to a large air compressor. That means VAD patients would be free to move about without attachment to a bulky drive system. VAD proponents think quality of life would be greatly improved.

That remains to be seen. For the moment, the only mechanical heart the Food and Drug Administration has approved for permanent implantation in humans is the Jarvik-7, one of which beat for 112 days in the chest of Barney Clark. Another has kept Schroeder alive since Nov. 25. Installation involved removing the natural heart's lower pumping chambers and hooking up the Jarvik-7 polyurethane and aluminum device to the heart's remaing atria, or upper receiving chambers.

SIX-FOOT-LONG air lines from the Jarvik-7 tunnel out from the patient's abdomen and link him to a 323-pound refrigerator-size air compressor. For three hours a day, the patient can walk short distances after switching to a portable driver. The 11-pound unit, named for Peter Heimes, its West German designer, is worn on a shoulder strap like a camera case.

This system is probably the one that patients will be getting in the near future. "It would take five to six years before you could start trials (with a VAD)," says Dr. Robert K, Jarvik, the artificial heart's designer and Symbion's president. "So I foresee the Heimes system applied to a larger number of patients for a period of 10 years. I would be surprised if within the front end of that time we have an electric, permanently implanted VAD that is more reliable or safer or could give a better quality of life than the Heimes."

On line at Symbion are five more Jarvik-7 hearts that surgeon William DeVries has federal clearance to implant in five more patients at Humana Heart Institute International in Louisville. Beyond these is the next generation of artificial hearts, the Jarvik-8. It will come in three sizes — large, medium, and small (the last for patients lighter than 150 pounds) — and be capable of being used in a woman. It will also be made to be mass-produced, rather than handmade, and so should be cheaper.

STILL, JARVIK is aware that his air-driven heart is going against the bureaucratic grain. The chief drawback is that he cannot make the compressed-air drive unit small enough to go inside the body. Patients will always have tubes leading from their bodies. They will always run the risk of infection.

Meanwhile, proponents of VAD say theirs is a versatile system. In addition to its use as a left-ventricle-assist device, it can also be installed on the other side of the heart for cases of right-ventricle failure. If both ventricles are bad, two VAD units could even be put in at the same time.

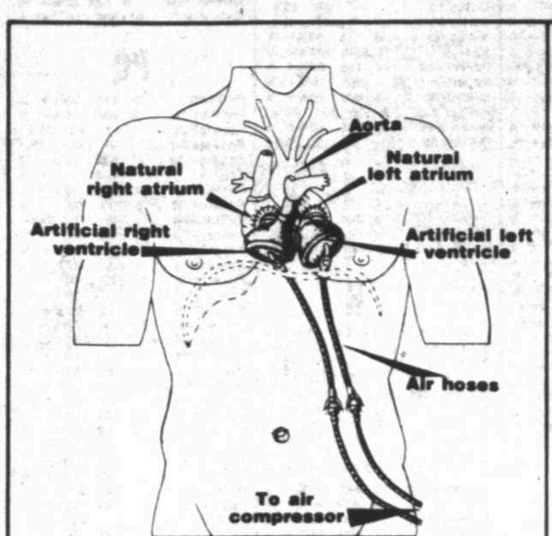

The federal government has supported the development of the device not ony because it is potentially versatile, but because it seems suitable for use in patients whose hearts are still partially functioning, a category that includes most advanced heart patients. "The majority are suffering left-ventricular failure," says Dr. Yuki Nose, director of the artificial-organs department at the Cleveland Clinic. "If the natural heart remains a viable reservoir, then the VAD system should work."

DR. J. DONALD Hill of Pacific Medical Center in San Francisco recently told the medical journal Cardio that at least 60 to 70 percent of end-stage heart-disease patients will be candidates for VADs. "The remaining 40 percent of patients," Hill said, "those who, like Barney Clark, have both left and right side failure, will need total artificial hearts."

Though efforts to develop a permanent VAD are relatively new, the use of VADs goes back more than a decade. In the 1960s, Dr. Michael DeBakey used an early VAD device to rest a patient's weak heart until it could recover enough to work on its own. Since then, doctors have installed VADs in more than 200 patients for various temporary and emergency uses — such as weaning unresponsive open-heart-surgery patients off a heart-lung machine.

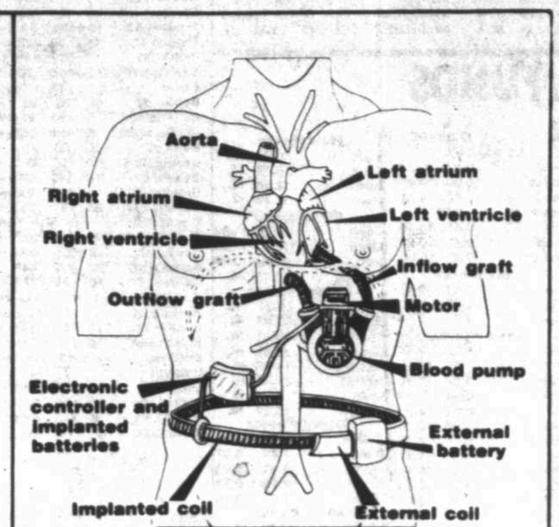

Earlier this year, physicians at both Stanford University Medical Center and the Pacific Medical Center used VADs as a holding device for terminal heart patients until a transplant was available. In the Stanford case, a VAD sustained a patient for eight days. "We had the leeway to wait for the optimal donor," says Dr. Philip Oyer.

Some open-heart surgeons feel that VAD's main use will be as a temporary device pending a transplant. But a growing body of researchers think many VADs will be permanently installed. "There is no question VADs have an important place for temporary use," says Dr. Peer Portner, chief executive officer and founder of Novacor. "But their primary purpose is long-term or permanent support."

Optometrists urge snow skiers to remember sunglasses

WASHINGTON (AP) — While regular skiers know the importance of goggles to protect their eyes, occasional visitors to the slopes may not have this equipment. Nonetheless, the nation's eye doctors stress the importance of protecting vision while skiing.

Glare from the snow can be even more blinding than summer sunshine, and can pose serious problems for the eyes, the American Optometric Association warns.

Speed and light combine to place extra stress on the vision while skiing, the eye doctors report. Rapid movement places great demands on the ability to judge distances.

Shadows and flat light conditions reduce distance vision and make it hard to read the terrain correctly, the eye doctors say, while too much bright light can irritate the eyes and lead to tension and fatigue.

In addition, too much light can result in reduced night vision temporarily, and prolonged exposure to ultraviolet radiation may contribute to the development of cataracts.

The optometrists say the best eye protection for skiers is a set of good goggles with tinted, impact-resistant lenses. They prefer gray lenses for the best protection without distorting natural colors.

Good choices for the occasional skier are standard sunglasses.

And special caution should be used at dusk when light begins to dim. Older skiers may want to head for the lodge at this time, the optometrists say, and younger folks should keep their eyes moving to help compensate for lack of adequate light.

DEAR ABBY

Boy's mouth X-rated

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Several of us mothers have a common problem. It concerns a boy (I'll call him Billy) who is a bad influence on our children. They are all in the third grade, but this Billy is wise beyond his years.

He gets his information (about sex) from hanging around his older brother, then spreads around what he has heard to the boys in his class. He tells them things about sex that most adults have never experienced, and his language is pure filth!

Our sons want to invite Billy to stay overnight, but we're afraid of what Billy might teach them. Besides, most of us have younger children at home, and we don't want Billy here talking about Lord knows what.

I understand Billy's parents are very liberal-minded, so don't suggest we talk to them. Maybe if they read this, they will understand why their son is shunned by his peers. — STUMPED

DEAR STUMPED: If your son and his classmates want Billy to stay overnight, then obviously Billy isn't "shunned by his peers" — it's their parents who don't want him around.

Liberal-minded parents love their children as much as you love yours, so please share your concerns with Billy's parents.

It's not unusual for a child to entertain his peers with X-rated information in a bid for popularity. Don't panic; it's neither contagious nor fatal.

DEAR ABBY: I am the owner of a profitable retail hardware store with a good number of employees. There's one woman who has been with me for 22 years. I have to admit she's loyal, honest and efficient. She started as a bookkeeper, but now she's a self-appointed "office manager." She used to call me "Mr." but now she calls me by my first name. She's very bossy, acts like she owns the place and, to tell you the truth, she's beginning to get on my nerves.

We don't have a retirement age around here, but I wish she'd retire (she's old enough) so I could replace her with a younger woman who isn't so bossy. They say a new broom sweeps clean. What do you say? — THE BOSS

DEAR BOSS: A new broom may sweep clean, but the old broom knows where the dirt is.

DEAR ABBY: Last June, I lent my girlfriend my jacket, and she lost it at the restaurant where she was working. In September she gave me $50 to replace the jacket, but I spent the $50 on something else.

Well, just before Christmas there was a fire at that restaurant, and while they were cleaning up, my jacket was found in the basement. My girlfriend had it cleaned and monogrammed with my initials and gave it to me as a surprise Christmas present.

The problem: My girlfriend says now that I got the jacket back, I should return her $50. I feel that she was irresponsible in the first place, and it shouldn't matter that the jacket was found six months later.

A friend of mine suggested I give her the jacket back instead of the money, but now that it's monogrammed, I want to keep it.

I told my girlfriend that I will do anything Abigail Van Buren thinks is right. — JACKET BACK

DEAR JACKET BACK: She lost your jacket, and you accepted $50 restitution. Fair enough. Six months later, she GAVE you the jacket, monogrammed as a gift; she didn't SELL it to you. You are not obligated to pay for a gift.

Abigail Van Buren is a columnist for Universal Press Syndicate.

PTA takes aim at drugs

CHICAGO (AP) — Children as young as 9 already know about drugs and alcohol, so parents must start abuse prevention tactics as early as possible, warns the National PTA.

The 5.4 million-member volunteer organization considers drug and alcohol abuse prevention its top priority, and its program is targeting parents who tend to shy away from this sensitive and difficult-to-discuss topic.

A PTA publication, "Young Children and Drugs: What Parents Can Do," provides practical advice for adults who want to prevent children from becoming involved with alcohol and other health-threatening, addictive drugs.

The brochure urges parents to begin talking to their children now, whether they're 5, 7 or 10 years old. Among the suggestions offered is to teach children to express their feelings, and teach them to take responsibility for their actions at an early age, thus building a strong self-image.

"Young Children and Drugs: What Parents Can Do," was produced in cooperation with the Wisconsin Clearinghouse, a national drug abuse prevention materials clearinghouse, and is available in English and Spanish.

Flu deaths on rise

ATLANTA (AP) — Reported deaths from influenza and pneumonia have reached the highest rate in four years and the flu outbreak is continuing across the country, federal health officials said.

By mid-January, deaths reported from 121 U.S. cities included 5.5 percent to 5.7 percent attributed to influenza and pneumonia, the national Centers for Disease Control reported.

That compares with a range of 4.8 percent to 5 percent in December.

Widespread outbreaks of influenza were reported last week by Wyoming and regional outbreaks were reported for the week from eight states: California, Illinois, Kentucky, Nebraska, New Mexico, Oregon, Pennsylvania and Utah.

"Ratios in excess of 5 percent rarely occur in the absence of influenza epidemics, and the last time the percentage of deaths attributed to P&I (pneumonia and influenza) exceeded 5.5 percent was in 1980-81," the CDC said.

In the 1980-81 epidemic, the rate peaked at 7 percent.

For the week ending Jan. 19, the most recent period for which figures are available, 14,176 deaths from all causes were reported by 121 U.S. cities. A total of 778, or 5.5 percent, were attributed to pneumonia and influenza.

By Jan. 22, flu virus isolates had been reported from 27 states, compared with nine states at the end of December, the CDC said.

Family physicians who report weekly to the CDC reported an average of eight patients with flu-like illnesses — about twice the average reported before flu activity began but only about half of the average 14 cases weekly reported at the peak of the 1983-84 flu epidemic.

Gum theory controversial

Copley News Service

Want to watch a periodontist's blood boil?

Tell him you've recently been introduced to the microscopic spirochetes and amoebas that live in the gunky crevices of your gums. Then say you were so disgusted by these creatures that you've bought hydrogen peroxide, baking soda and salt for your bathroom medicine cabinet.

Or just say: "Paul Keyes."

The traditional periodontal community — dentists specially trained to treat gum disease — now have an enemy more threatening than plaque. Hydrogen peroxide, baking soda, salt, microscopic viewing of bacteria — these are the hallmarks of a highly controversial non-surgical treatment for gum disease.

Many periodontists are convinced that the Keyes treatment — a simple oral hygiene program which is less expensive and less painful than surgery — is not in the least effective. And they fear that long-term problems will arise because Keyes' patients believe they are cured, when in fact bacteria are having their gums for lunch.

CREATOR OF the technique, dentist Paul D. Keyes, not one to mince words, counters that the periodontists are only interested in maintaining their lucrative surgical practices.

The war began in the late '70s when Keyes, following a successful career researching tooth decay at the National Institute of Dental Research, began advocating a non-surgical, conservative approach to periodontitis.

Periodontitis is the true Yuppie disease. More common than herpes, it strikes nine out of 10 adults in this country, just as they are installing Jacuzzis and thinking they have it made.

Yuppies brush their teeth; they see the dentist as often as their dental insurance allows; they haven't had cavities in years. Nonetheless, the Yuppie who reaches old age without gum trouble will be the exception in his class.

Periodontitis is responsible for more lost teeth than all other causes put together. It starts when bacterial plaque attacks the healthy gums and the bones that support the teeth. The gums swell and bleed — the first symptoms of gum disease. (Pain usually occurs only in late-stage disease.)

Eventually the bacteria undermines the structure of the mouth, and teeth fall out. An estimated 35 million Americans are in imminent danger of losing some teeth to gum disease.

BEFORE WORLD War II, dentists treated periodontitis by pulling teeth and installing a new set. Contemporary periodontists have learned to do surgery. By cutting back the gums, surgeons manage to remove the pockets underneath the gums where bacteria fester and grow. Although the newly shaped gums make it easier for the patient to keep the area clean according to surgeons, surgery does not cure gum disease, nor does it always prevent recurrence.

Keyes has a different philosophy. Reached in Reston, Va., at the International Dental Health Foundation, Keyes explained that he treats the disease as a bacterial infection.

As do other periodontists, he cleans away hardened plaque (called calculus) using sharp curettes slipped under the gum. But his program also involves motivating patients to keep their teeth clean; microscopic monitoring for the presence of bacteria, and in some cases, prescribing antibiotics to control the infection.

"We treat the disease as a wound. We teach the patient how to dress the wound and how to control it."

He does not rule out surgery, although he says that even in advanced cases he has not found it necessary. "I have saved hundreds of teeth that the periodontists doomed to extraction."

KEYES HAS an assortment of home-care techniques that he teaches to patients. Here's a common one: Mix a thick paste of baking soda and diluted hydrogen peroxide. Insert the paste into the areas between teeth and gum with the rubber-tipped end of a toothbrush or with a regular or electric toothbrush for a few minutes. Rinse with a saltwater solution squirted from a Water Pik or irrigating syringe, or just slosh the solution around in your mouth.

Keyes says this maintenance program works because germs die when they're deprived of water and bloated with oxygen. The sodium in baking soda and salt shrivel the bacteria; hydrogen peroxide generates the oxygen.

"These treatments have been described for at least 100 years. These agents will kill many disease-associated bacteria on contact. They will work very well if the patient is instructed in proper use of them."

To this, many periodontists, including the American Academy of Periodontology, say hogwash.

Explains periodontist Robert Hymes, paraphrasing a position paper from the AAP, "There are no studies to show that using baking soda or hydrogen peroxide is any more effective than using any other reasonable program of oral hygiene. It doesn't really matter whether you use toothpaste or baking soda. Soda and hydrogen peroxide are very old-fashioned techniques. If it didn't work 30 years ago, why would anyone think it should work today?"

Ether dissolves gallstones

BOSTON (AP) — Thousands of people might someday be spared gallbladder surgery by a form of ether that quickly dissolves painful gallstones lodged inside the body, according to a recent study.

About 500,000 people now undergo operations each year to have their gallbladders removed because of the stones.

The new technique uses a catheter to squirt ether directly into the gallbladder, where it breaks down the stones. The therapy has been tried on only six people and researchers stress that they will need far more experience before they can judge its long-term safety and effectiveness.

However, Dr. Johnson L. Thistle, who is in charge of the study at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., said, "I am optimistic that we'll be able to dissolve most gallstones completely with this technique."

Another doctor familiar with the work said he is concerned about the potentially damaging effect the ether may have on the gallbladder.

"It's exciting," said Dr. Martin C. Carey of Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. "But it has to be viewed with a great deal of caution. I'm skeptical."

Job can trouble female heart

Copley News Service

Jobs that make harsh demands and allow little personal control seem to sharply increase the risk of heart disease among women, a new study concludes.

And when computer terminals are added to the mix, says another, the rate of recurrent chest pain hits an astronomical 19 percent or more.

Similar effects weren't found among male workers, said Dr. Suzanne Haynes, chief of the medical statistics branch at the National Center for Health Statistics in Hyattsville, Md.

The reason, she said, may be that traditional women's jobs — nurse, clerk, telephone operator — fit that grim description.

"If you ask which sex is most likely to be in jobs with very low control, it's women," she said. "That's why this seems to be an important risk factor for women."

AFTER DESCRIBING the research she conducted with Dr. Andrea Lacroix of Johns Hopkins University, Haynes added, "We were obviously surprised by these results."

And she cautioned at an American Heart Association Science Writers Forum that the study "does not prove cause and effect. ... We've identified a potential problem and we're saying much more research needs to be done."

A likely villain found in the population studies, she said, is the supervisor who's unclear about the employee's status and responsibilities.

Haynes said the study's strong link between VDTs — the video display terminals of today's computerized offices — and the chest pain called angina seems mostly a problem with the way computers are often used.

The mailed survey last year of 518 female telephone operators and service representatives working for several companies in North Carolina represents "the worst-case situation," she said.

Such workers spend all day at VDTs in close quarters with little human contact, few breaks, and computerized monitoring of their performances.

Among women who spent at least four hours a day at VDTs, 19.1 percent reported angina symptoms, compared with 10.1 percent who used them less frequently. Both numbers are far above the national rate of perhaps 2 percent to 3 percent, she said.

HAYNES SAID she didn't know how many of the women had angina that was medically diagnosed or were taking medication.

And although chest pain is often associated with heart disease, she said the study found no correlations between VDT use and heart attacks or high blood pressure.

She also said, "We found a dose-response curve" in which the risk of angina increased in direct proportion to the amount of time spent at VDTs. Something about the computerized office is clearly having an impact, she said, "but we don't know what it is."

Several recent government studies have found no serious health effects associated with VDTs, but Haynes said most reported, as she did, increased complaints of headache, eyestrain, insomnia, back and neck pain, fatigue and tension. The issue, she argues, is whether those are serious problems.

Haynes said the VDT-linked effects are separate from and in addition to problems tied to basic job stresses.

Angina was reported by 6.4 percent of non-VDT users who felt they had control in their jobs. The rate jumped to 16.5 percent among in-control workers with VDTs. That's about the same as for women with little control but no computer. The rate hit 21 percent when VDT workers felt they had no control.

SEPARATE HEART-disease findings were drawn from a re-analysis of 10 years of information on nearly 1,000 working men and women in Framingham, Mass., where decades of continuous medical surveys have produced mountains of data that are tapped by many researchers.

"Psychosocial interviews" in 1965-67 asked 580 working men and 389 working women, all free of heart disease, to rate their jobs based on overtime, rigid deadlines and night work. The immediate supervisors of those interviewed were assessed to determine clarity of supervision and degree of personal control.

All were followed for 10 years to determine heart disease, and no statistically significant links were found among the men.

Abuse can cause psychological woes

From Staff Reports

Not all abused children are hurt physically. Some bruises don't show — scars in the mind that haunt a child into adulthood. There are no statistics on children who are victims of emotional abuse, but the problem is widespread.

According to an article in Reader's Digest, emotional abusers are prompted not by children's misbehavior, but by their own psychological problems. The magazine defines emotional abuse as the "systematic destruction of a child's self-esteem."

Dr. Jay Lefer, New York psychiatrist, said the four "Ds" of emotional abuse are deprivation, distancing, depreciation and domination. Abusive parents may use one, all or a combination to play out their own conflicts and avoid facing the real demands of child-rearing.

Deprivation of love and distancing of parental concern in an infant will block development of a secure attachment to his or her parents. "Unavailability is shattering because a child doesn't get any of the usual rewards for curiosity, growth and accomplishment," said Byron Egeland, University of Minnesota psychologist.

Depreciation means discounting any childhood achievement and exaggerating any fault or failure. Words such as 'always' and 'never' — meaning a child cannot live up to a parent's expectations — can be used to distinquishing an abusive parent from one who, from anger or frustration, criticizes occasionally.

Lefer said all parents will try to dominate their children in terms of setting standards and values. "But there's a big difference between domination through education and example and domination through cruelty. The abusive parent gets his or her way by terrifying the child into following his or her wishes."

Outsiders are aften reluctant to interfere, but their silence reinforces the child's impression that the criticism is deserved. "People shouldn't mind their own business when a child's life is in danger," the article stated.

Shot protects cats from leukemia

NEW YORK (AP) — A new vaccine to protect cats from leukemia could not only save the lives of many of the nation's 50 million cats but could also point the way to a vaccine for a closely related human illness: AIDS.

The vaccine is the first ever developed to prevent infection with retroviruses, an unusual class of viruses only recently found to be important in human disease.

A variety of animal cancers, including feline leukemia, are caused by retroviruses, but until last year only two rare forms of human leukemia had been linked to retroviruses.

Last year, researchers identified yet another human retrovirus that appears to cause AIDS, which stands for acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The cat vaccine was developed three years ago by Richard Olsen of Ohio State University. At a press conference this week, officials of Norden Laboratories of Lincoln, Neb., the producers of the vaccine, announced that it is now commercially available in the United States and Canada.

In tests with 3,000 cats, Norden has shown that the vaccine will prevent leukemia in 80 percent of the cats that receive it.

Feline leukemia is the leading cause of death in cats, afflicting about 1.5 million cats in the United States, Norden officials said.

The vaccine "is an important step forward," said Dr. William Hardy, a veterinarian and expert on feline leukemia.

"If you can do it for this virus, you should be able to do it for other retroviruses as long as they don't change in any great degree," said Hardy, head of the laboratory of veterinary oncology at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York.

The problem with AIDS, however, is that the virus appears to change as it infects, possibly confounding the development of a vaccine, Hardy said.

In addition, Hardy said, no one understands exactly how the cat vaccine is able to induce immunity without actually causing the abnormalities seen in feline leukemia.

Olsen, the vaccine's developer, said he believes it accomplishes that trick because it is made not of killed or weakened viruses, as conventional vaccines are, but rather of chemicals extracted from the leukemia virus.

These substances, referred to as the virus's "antigens," induce the cat to strengethen its defenses against the virus but do not cause the disease, Olsen said.

The vaccine only protects cats not yet infected with leukemia virus. "Like any vaccine, it doesn't reverse the disease," Olsen said.

He said he has been working on the vaccine for 10 years with financial support from the National Cancer Institute.

Norden officials said an initial series of three vaccinations to prevent feline leukemia would probably cost about $50, although prices will vary depending on the veterinarian.

An annual booster vaccine will also be required, they said.

They would not say what they will charge veterinarians for the vaccine, given the trade name Leukocell. But they did say that Biotechnology News, a trade publication, had estimated the company would sell somewhere $10 million to $75 million worth of the vaccine each year.

The vaccine produced no adverse reaction in 85 percent of the cats that received it, said Richard Sharpee, a Norden senior research scientist. Ten percent of the cats had some pain at the site of the injection, and less than 5 percent developed fever, vomiting or diarrhea, Sharpee said.

Paper sacks big business

SCARSDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Paper shipping sacks are big business.

There are 22 companies, forming 95 percent of the $1 billion United States paper shipping sack industry, that are members of the industry trade group called PSSMA.

The sacks these companies make are used for such products as dog and cat food, sugar, cement and mortar mix, and fertilizer.

Fireproof plastic becomes ceramic when hot

Copley News Service

A Norwegian firm has developed a new fireproof plastic called Favus that reacts differently than any other known material to extreme heat — between 1,000 and 1,500 degrees Celsius.

Instead of carbonizing, the plastic turns into a ceramic, a bad heat conductor.

Up to about 200 degrees Celsius, however, it's a good heat conductor; the material therefore can be used to protect against overheating during the normal operation of engines and anything else that generates heat.

Favus was discovered while researchers were hunting for a safer insulation material for electric cables, particularly as used in the oil industry.

Deaf actress: It's more realistic for deaf person to play deaf role

ENTERTAINMENT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Phyllis Frelich, a Tony award-winning deaf actress who makes a guest appearance on NBC's "Gimme a Break," makes the point that nobody is more realistic in a deaf role in movies and television than a deaf performer.

"We should at least be allowed to audition for the roles," she said. "Nobody has to promise that we will win them, just let us try. There have been projects where we weren't even allowed to audition, and the roles went to non-deaf actors. ...

"People are afraid to work with us. As a result, deaf people have been portrayed wrongly most of the time when non-deaf people play the parts. Anytime I turn on the TV and see someone who's supposed to be deaf I can instantly tell whether the person is actually deaf, just by the way they move their hands."

Miss Frelich, a fierce advocate of the rights of deaf people, communicated in an interview using sign language translated by her husband, Bob Steinberg, an actor and scenic designer. She does not speak, although she said she sometimes yells at her children.

'We've come a long way," said Miss Frelich, who helped found the National Theater of the Deaf. "People are learning, but it's very slow.

"We are limited to non-speaking roles. Like 'The Fantasticks.' I played the role of the mute. But we've seen black 'Hamlets,' so why not a deaf 'Hedda Gabbler?'"

Miss Frelich won a Tony as best actress in 1980 for "Children of a Lesser God," which was written for her by playwright Mark Medoff. He also wrote "In the Hands of Its Enemy" for her. She just completed a highly acclaimed run of the play in Los Angeles, starring with Richard Dreyfuss. It is expected to move to London later this year.

She will make her first television appearance in an episode of "Gimme a Break" that NBC will broadcast Saturday.

In the show, she and series star Nell Carter are temporarily trapped in a library basement during an earthquake. The story is about how they learn to communicate. Miss Carter does not read signs and Miss Frelich plays a Hispanic who does not speak English.

Gospel star signs songs for deaf

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Gospel music star Sandi Patti has cultivated such a following that even deaf people are showing up at her concerts to see her "sing" to them in sign language.

"I saw a song being 'signed' on TV and it came alive for me," the 28-year-old singer recalled. She was so moved she learned the language from friends.

She uses sign languauage to illustrate the song, "We Shall Behold Him," and feels it has added an unusual dimension to her concerts, and helped to make music meaningful for those who can not hear its beauty.

"So now I do it for the deaf and for those who hear too. It makes it more visual," she said.

As word spread, deaf people began showing up at her concerts. On occasion, she'll hear a commotion in the audience and notice that sections of deaf people are standing and "signing" the song back to her.

"It's been one of my biggest thrills," she said about a glittering career that few can match in the fast-growing gospel field.

She has been voted female vocalist of the year every year since 1982 by the Gospel Music Association — the equivalent of winning an Academy Award for best actress. She and Larnelle Harris won a Grammy award last year for their single, "More Than Wonderful."

She also was chosen gospel artist of the year in 1982 and 1984. She has performed in concert throughout the United States and in Singapore, Hong Kong, Indonesia, the Philippines, the Netherlands, Australia, Canada, Jamaica and the Cayman Islands.

Her career has grown to require a booking agent, an executive assistant, a publicist and a secretary. Husband John Helvering, who studied accounting in college, is her manager. Occasionally, she coaxes him onstage for a duet.

Also joining her on stage these days is her child, Anna Elizabeth, who was born last spring.

"The audience gets the biggest kick out of seeing her," Miss Patti said. "She used to just listen to me sing; now she grabs the microphone and she's very much the wiggleworm."

She's been able to take Anna Elizabeth on her concert tours, but the baby likely will stay in Anderson, Ind., with her grandparents while Miss Patti takes an upcoming two-week trip to Israel.

How will Miss Patti handle the separation?

"Probably not very well," she admits.

But if Miss Patti is as resourceful as she has been, chances are it will work out.

As a studio backup singer, she financed her last two years of college by singing jingles for Juicy Fruit gum and other products.

She used the insurance settlement from a traffic accident to pay for a custom album. This was heard by a record company executive and she eventually was signed to a recording contract in 1979.

The family name "Patty" was misspelled on the record jacket, and she decided to keep the spelling "Patti."

Shortly after that, she was offered the chance to sing with the famed Bill Gaither Trio, a legendary gospel act. When she was asked, she recalled, "I hesitated for about one second."

This exposed her to the loyal gospel audience, and she now has a remarkable solo career. She drew audiences of between 3,000 and 7,000 during a 50-city concert tour last fall.

GE researcher says inventors like missing links

By RANDOLPH PICHT
Associated Press Writer

SCHENECTADY, N.Y. — History books frequently picture a scholar toiling in a laboratory year after year until — eureka! — a sudden idea or an unexpected explosion produces a revolutionary invention.

But it rarely happens that way.

The act of invention is closer to the process of evolution and an inventor is more like a missing-link specialist than an overnight genius, according to Charles Eichelberger, an inventor following in the footsteps of Thomas Alva Edison at the General Electric Research and Development Center.

Eichelberger has his name on 52 patents ranging from a television camera the size of a wristwatch to a process that allows electronic circuits to be printed on glass, paper, steel and other materials. Someday he could be portrayed as a man, like Edison, who shook the world with his inventions.

Or it could be one of his 1,200 colleagues at the center, or his grandfather, William E. Paul, who also worked as a GE inventor and retired with 34 patents, including a circuit breaker used in power plants to help prevent blackouts in cities.

The Research and Development Center, started in 1900 in a barn, now produces roughly a third of the 600 or so patents GE obtains annually.

It is the workshop of a broad-based collection of researchers and inventors dabbling in virtually every scientific discipline, from biology to physics. In addition to inventions concerning appliances and lighting, the facility has created man-made diamonds, bullet-proof plastic and X-ray equipment.

It's from places like this that consumers and industry get their new and improved products. It's ideas from people like Eichelberger that make the products possible.

"It's always my aim to have the results of my work become a commercially viable product," he says. "That's the key to invention."

Edison, the founder of GE and the most prolific inventor in U.S. history, had more than 1,000 patents. He developed, among other things, the phonograph and the motion picture camera, but he's best remembered for the creation of the light bulb. But who remembers John Howell or William Coolidge, inventors who helped turn the innovation into a profitable product?

"Edison deservedly got all his names on the patents, but many of his ideas were either from someone else to begin with and he improved them or they were his idea but they really wouldn't have been workable and someone else improved them," Eichelberger says.

He says Edison managed to fill in "an awful big missing link," but he also had a team of scientists working with him.

Alexander Graham Bell more that 100 years ago uttered, "Watson, come here; I want you," and earned credit for the discovery of the telephone. It's not as widely known that Bell combined the existing technology of the telegraph and the musical telegraph for his invention, or that Edison improved upon Bell's original creation.

"I get a lot of inspiration from Edison and Bell...and other well-known inventors," Eichelberger says. "It's great to think of inventing that way, but I think that in this day and age the problems are almost always so complex that the invention requires a team."

Eichelberger, 39, says he gets many of his initial ideas "during long showers" and he hones the ideas by talking with other scientists or inventors in the center's cafeteria.

Over a coffee and a danish, he can sometimes accomplish more than spending weeks at his laboratory table.

"I really think the idea of the solitary inventor has pretty much gone by the wayside," he says. "Anything that is significant in this day and age is going to require a team of people to really bring it to market."

An example is his wristwatch-sized TV camera, which is used to give factory robots sight and also is mounted on telescopes to track the movement of distant stars.

While eating lunch, Eichelberger, who was working on ways to expand computer memory, sat down with two scientists who were working with radar. Listening to what they had done gave Eichelberger the missing link that led to the tiny camera which was then refined by other scientists at the center.

"There are also times when I know of someone doing work in a particular field and can call them up or just walk down to their office, and very often from those meetings and discussions will come a new idea," he says.

The discussions sometimes involve absurd solutions to problems or the "Rube Goldberg approach" — a roomful of electronics to power a thumbnail-sized radio or appliances that might require X-ray equipment in the basement or perhaps a neutron accelerator.

"We joke about the absurd solutions, but you boil them down and sometimes can find a few elements of worth," says Eichelberger, who joined GE in 1968 after graduating from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in nearby Troy, N.Y., with a master's degree in electrical engineering.

His father, who died when Eichelberger was 5, was a GE accountant, and his mother was a computer programmer for the company.

But his grandfather, who helped raise him, was the man responsible for nurturing Eichelberger's talent.

Today Eichelberger is helping create new products and sometimes a whole new business for one of the largest companies in the country.

That was the case with a chemical process that allows electronic circuits to be printed on various materials. GE plans to sell special inks and instructions on the process.

Eichelberger's latest creation probably will have the biggest visible impact on the nation. He has devised an electronic converter that will allow cable television companies to broadcast on twice the number of channels without having to lay new cables or change existing equipment.

In addition to doubling the number of channels, the converter lets a cable company filter individual channels for individual customers on a daily, even hourly basis.

So in a building with three apartments, each with the same cable service, one could pay to watch a boxing match on a particular day, while the apartment below could pay to watch a movie at the same time and the third apartment could receive a ballet.

The "addressable converter" box is expected to be put on the market some time next year, for sale to cable television companies, Eichelberger says.

With 16 years of experience as an inventor, Eichelberger says, "I always used to think...'How could that guy have ever thought of that?' But then you find out that he was working in the field, he knew what everybody else was doing and what he found was the missing link."

Man tries to pay lawyer in pennies

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Angered by six weeks of haggling in a divorce settlement, a Clinton man says he was left literally holding the bag when he tried to pay off a lawyer with 180,000 pennies.

Lamar Goff, 47, said he paid $35 for an armored truck delivery of 35 bags of pennies to lawyer Roy Powell, after the attorney haggled for six weeks before accepting the $1,800 settlement in a divorce involving Goff's son.

After the armored truck arrived at the attorney's office, Goff said, "I just asked him, are you or are you not going to accept this money?"

"He said, 'No, I'm not going to accept it, and y'all are trespassing, y'all will have to leave,' " Goff said.

Powell has declined comment on the incident.

ARVADA, Colo. (AP) — A 16-year-old Eagle Scout became only the 13th Boy Scout in history to obtain all 119 merit badges when he received his patches for rabbit raising and communications during a troop ceremony.

Kent P. "Skip" Downing, a junior at Arvada West High School, was awarded the merit badges earlier this week. said John Groman, public relations director for the Boy Scouts' Denver-Area Council.

"Out of 100 million Scouts, this has only been done 12 times up to now. It's really amazing," Groman said.

Kent came up through the ranks of Cub Scouting and has interests outside of Scouting. He is on the high school swimming team and is in the marching band.

Gleason's 'Honeymooners' returning to TV

By RICK Du BROW
Hearst News Service

How sweet it is. Fueled by growing appreciation for the currently syndicated 39 reruns of Jackie Gleason's classic comedy series, "The Honeymooners," 75 additional episodes of the show, not seen since the 1950s, will be back on televison this fall.

"Suddenly, there was interest," said Gleason. "People in New York and Florida and Chicago are going crazy over 'The Honeymooners.' "

The reasons are TV's need for attractive rerun material and genuine public demand for the Gleason-Art Carney vehicle, which has developed a cult-like audience.

The New York Museum of Broadcasting last summer found itself with a surprising smash hit when it showed four of the added episodes that it discovered in storage.

"There were lines around the block," said Gleason. "It was amazing."

How sweet it is.

"The Honeymooners," arguably the best comedy in TV history, starred Gleason as bus driver Ralph Kramden, a big-talking, blustering dreamer who was one of life's losers. He lived in a crummy apartment with his sardonic wife, Alice (Audrey Meadows). And upstairs lived his best pal, Ed Norton (Carney), a sewer worker who drove Ralph crazy with his well-meaning foul-ups.

"We had cans of film of the old shows in a specially air-conditioned room," said Gleason, "and people found out. I told my agent to see if there was any real interest because of all the inquiries that were being made. And there was."

The estimated 75 shows, plus several two-hour "Honeymooners" specials, will be distributed by Viacom Enterprises.

"There's been fantastic response from stations," said Viacom spokesman George Faber. "They're calling us."

Faber said the newly edited programs will be syndicated to the network TV stations and also presented on pay cable, with Showtime already set to offer one of the specials.

The 39 reruns now in syndication were broadcast as a series on CBS during the 1955-56 season. The added 75 broadcasts will come from "Honeymooners" segments that were incorporated into Gleason's CBS variety show between 1952 and 1957. According to Viacom, none of the segments to be reissued has been seen on TV since its original live broadcast.

The reissued "Honeymooners" marks a welcome major return to TV of one of the medium's true giants and pioneers. Gleason shows up on the home tube occasionally. CBS' "60 Minutes" recently profiled him. And in 1983, he co-starred with Laurence Olivier in an original drama for Home Box Office, "Mr. Halperin and Mr. Johnson," about two men who discuss a deceased woman they both once loved. Although the drama was slight, Gleason showed his ability to trade acting punches with the best in the business.

Gleason said he'll now work only on projects "that interest me a great deal," one of them being a possible sequel to "The Hustler," a gritty tale about pool hustlers in which Paul Newman and Gleason starred. Gleason portrayed the great pool-playing legend Minnesota Fats, and Newman enacted the role of a young, ambitious hustler. If the sequel works out, he said, both stars will again appear in it.

Was "The Honeymooners" his favorite work?

"Well," he said, "it was the most effortless thing I ever did. We had one rehearsal for each show; not even that, just a walk-through. I never even looked at the script until the day of the show. I have a good memory. The rest of the people — Art, Audrey and Joyce Randolph (who played Carney's wife) — were so great that we didn't need any more. We did two shows a week like that."

According to Gleason, Showtime wants him for two films — one in which he'd play showman P.T. Barnum, and an undetermined project in which he'd re-team with Carney but not in their roles as Ralph and Ed.

"TV executives are after me all the time, but I can't see much that's worthwhile," Gleason said. "You can't get the best writers to write sketches. They're all out in California doing sitcoms, which requires very little real writing. I don't blame them. If there's an easy way to make a living, I don't see anything wrong with them taking it."

What does he watch on TV?

"Mostly sports, the news, documentaries and PBS; their shows seem to be better thought out and better produced, like 'The Jewel in the Crown.' "

Ralph Kramden watching "The Jewel in the Crown"? They ought to bring back "The Honeymooners" live just to make that episode.

Conley says his songs like family

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music singer Earl Thomas Conley was driving through Arkansas about three years ago when he heard his song, "Heavenly Bodies," playing on the car radio.

After a minute or so, he pulled into a truck stop and called recording officials in Nashville.

"I called to have it redone," said the lanky, bearded Conley. "It didn't sound right."

The record was remixed (the tape was electronically reblended), costing at least $5,000, and the new version of the song was distributed.

It's that kind of care that has made Conley's career one of the most successful in the entire music profession. He's had seven straight No. 1 country music hits and had four No. 1 hits off his 1984 album, "Don't Make It Easy for Me."

Music industry officials who have researched the record charts believe no one — pop, country or rock — has ever had four chart-toppers on one album (excluding 'Greatest Hits' and reissues). This includes Elvis Presley, the Beatles and Michael Jackson.

The 43-year-old Conley, whose style rests somewhere between country-rock and traditional country, says his songs are like family.

"They are like your children. You want them to do well and be cared for," he said.

His string of No. 1 country hits began with "Somewhere Between Right and Wrong" and "I Have Loved You Girl," both in 1982. His latest, in December, was "Chance of Loving You."

From the LP, "Don't Make It Easy for Me," the four singles were the title cut, "Angel in Disguise," "Holding Her and Loving You" and "Your Love's on the Line."

Conley, who first attracted attention as a songwriter 10 years ago, says he expects the streak to last for a while.

"I've got at least five or six on this 'Treading Water' album," he said. "I think I can do this as long as I maintain an intense focus on my career. When I lose that intensity, so will the people in me."

Conley grew up in Portsmouth, Ohio, in a family of eight children. The family was poor and he wore hand-me-downs. Some 10 years ago, he began recording country music, but success didn't come immediately. In face, he recorded eight hitless singles.

"It was total desperation," he recalled. "I wrote with all the desperation I could. Some of my best work was back then; I was ahead of my time."

And now that his career is a success, he's not sure why it's soaring. "There's not a formula. It's intensity."

But he says co-writer Randy Scruggs, son of banjo player Earl Scruggs, and co-producer Nelson Larkin deserve credit.

"Randy Scruggs...covers me; we fill in the gaps," Conley said. "Nelson Larkin 'finds' me in the studio; he's helped me create musical space for myself."

Conley said he's learned a lot and discovered that a successful career triggers more pressure, not less.

"I thought you could come here and sing a hit song and that was it," he said. "I've learned to be in front of people and talk on TV. And there are lots of people involved in every hit record you have. You have to wear many different hats in the course of just one day, let alone a span of years. The whole industry becomes an art form.

"The higher you get, the more pressure you run into," he continued. "You get busy and you don't have the same amount of time you used to. It used to be the pressure was finding someone to cut my songs. Now, you have to keep your energy up and have quality and keep up with the deadlines. It's almost impossible to get done. But pressure is good for all of us. It causes perfection to come out in all of us."

Despite his drive for perfection, Conley was snubbed by the Country Music Association last fall which failed to vote him even as a finalist for No. 1 male vocalist or album of the year.

"Sometimes I think you gain more by losing," he said. "I've never made a big issue out of awards. But I discovered some people take them seriously, so now I am debating whether to too. But I believe you shouldn't let it get in the way of your music. I won't let it."

"I thought you could come here and sing a hit song and that was it. I've learned to be in front of people and talk on TV... The higher you get, the more pressure you run into. You get busy and you don't have the same amount of time you used to... You have to keep your energy up and have quality and keep up with the deadlines."

— Earl Conley

Navy officer's paper details Soviet mutiny

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON — In the pre-dawn darkness of Nov. 8, 1975, the Soviet missile frigate Storozhevoy quietly slipped its lines and headed out to sea from the Russian port of Riga. For hours, according to an unclassified summary, no one in the Russian navy knew the ship was gone.

So began one of the most extraordinary, although ultimately unsuccessful, mutinies in the history of modern sailing — new details of which have just been published. Before the incident was over, this account states, the Storozhevoy would move well out into the Baltic Sea on a mad dash toward Sweden and freedom in the West, only to be turned back by attacking Soviet planes and other ships.

At least a dozen sailors were killed during the incident, the summary adds, and the leader of the mutiny was later tried and shot. After a final cruise in the Baltic, the Storozhevoy was transferred to the Soviet Pacific Fleet.

THE ATTEMPTED FLIGHT of the Storozhevoy has been reported in the past by U.S. and European newspapers, but never acknowledged by the Soviet Union. Now, however, thanks to the investigative work of a U.S. Navy officer, a much more complete account of the incident has emerged.

It paints a picture of harsh living conditions on board the ship; of a young, trusted political officer and an unusual series of events that allowed the officer to take charge of a front-line warship — with most of its crew ashore — in a port close to international waters and the West.

The detective work was performed by Lt. Cmdr. Gregory D. Young, who earned a master's degree from the Naval Postgraduate School in 1982 by devoting his thesis to the Storozhevoy incident. His findings attracted little interest, however, until they were summarized this month in the magazine Sea Power.

THE NAVY REFUSES to comment formally on Young's research, although sources say it has been accepted as the most definitive account available. The Navy also was willing to put a reporter in contact with Young after determining his work had not been classified. Now an instructor with the Navy ROTC program at the University of Colorado, Young said recently he had received access to some classified materials on the mutiny.

"But frankly, they weren't much help," Young said, adding he pieced together most of the information from other sources, including Russian immigrants who were in Riga and intercepted radio messages.

"There is no doubt the incident occurred," Young said. "There are still questions about the details and about what prompted it. But it definitely happened and there is no other incident like this that I can find in the Soviet navy."

According to Young, the mutiny on board the Storozhevoy was led by the ship's zampolit, or political deputy, an officer placed aboard every Soviet ship to maintain the ideological purity of the crew. The zampolit on the Storozehvoy, a modern 3,800-ton warship that was only three years old in 1975, was Capt. Valery Mikhaylovich Sablin.

YOUNG DESCRIBES Sablin as an unusual political officer, willing to listen to crew complaints during his lectures on Marxist thought without spouting the standard party line. Young says Sablin had been criticized by name in 1974 in the Soviet defense newspaper Red Star for not running his political education meetings properly.

Sablin delivered his last such lecture on the afternoon of Nov. 7, 1975, when many of the ship's officers and crew were on leave in Riga commemorating the Great October Revolution.

That night, according to Young's research, Sablin, another officer named Markov, and a dozen or so loyal petty officers locked the ship's captain in his cabin, tied up some other officers and ordered "a skeleon crew of unwary 18- and 19-year-old conscripted sailors" to take the Storozhevoy to sea.

As the ship moved out of port, one sailor jumped over the side, apparently unknown to Sablin, and managed to reach shore, Young said, citing secondhand accounts from a bus driver. It took the exhausted sailor more than two hours to reach naval headquarters in Riga and convince a duty officer that something was wrong on the Storozhevoy.

Even then, it was only after one of the officers on board the ship managed to untie himself and reach a radio to broadcast an emergency message that Soviet authorities realized what was happening. By then, the ship was through the Gulf of Riga, steaming across the Baltic for the Swedish island of Gotland.

The entire 200-mile voyage from Riga to Gotland would have taken less than seven hours, Young added. But the commander of the Soviet Navy ordered the Storozhevoy stopped at all costs.

THE REMAINDER OF THE STORY was pieced together primarily through accounts provided Swedish journalists by Swedish military officials, Young said. Astonished radio operators in Sweden found themselves listening to open transmissions between the mutineers and Soviet bombers sent to stop the ship.

The Storozhevoy refused the pleas of the pilots to heave to, Young said, and the planes eventually opened fire.

"Evidence of the utter chaos and disarray is clear," Young wrote in his thesis, saying the Soviet bombers caused more extensive damage to a pursuing ship than to the Storozhevoy.

The Storozhevoy took evasive maneuvers, but never returned fire on its pursuers, Young said. "The Swedish intercepts indicate that the ship was finally recaptured around 8 a.m." on Nov. 8, 1975, only about 30 miles from Gotland, he said. The incident lasted about six hours; the mutineers apparently surrendered without resistance.

SABLIN AND A NUMBER of enlisted members of the crew were eventually executed, Young concluded, Sablin after a three-day trial before the Military Division of the Supreme Court of the Soviet Union.

"What is so fascinating, and what I spent a lot of time focusing on, were the possible causes," Young added. "And what I found were a lot of different things that all probably contributed — a lot of discontent on board, bad living and working conditions, ethnic frictions, alcoholism.

"And there were also the unusual circumstances of a trusted political officer on board a ship, without much of its crew, and located close to the West," Young said. "I think it all contributed to this occurring this one time."
