Accidental shooting takes life of Snyder 12-year-old

A 12-year-old Snyder seventh grader died Monday afternoon at Cogdell Hospital after being shot in the chest in an apparent accidental shooting involving a neighborhood friend.

Michael Fennell was pronounced dead at Cogdell Hospital at 3:47 p.m. despite recusitation efforts that began as soon as Snyder EMS personnel arrived at the scene in the 3900 block of Eastridge.

Fennell was struck in the chest by a single shot fired from a .380 caliber handgun around 3 p.m., said Sgt. Jerry Parker of the Snyder Police Department.

Michael Fennell

Parker said Fennell, the son of Tommy and Judy Fennell, was visiting a 12-year-old friend and his 13-year-old sister in their house when the shooting occurred. The friend was holding his father's pistol when it discharged, said Parker.

"There is nothing to indicate that this tragic shooting was anything but accidental," said Parker.

Parker said the findings of the police investigation would be forwarded to District Attorney Dana Cooley as is routine in a shooting.

Justice of the Peace Charlie Reynolds ordered an autopsy which was performed this morning in Lubbock.

"I'm fairly certain the shooting will be ruled accidental," said Reynolds. "All indications point to that."

Snyder Junior High School Principal Kellye Starnes said this morning that Fennell was very active in all sports at the school, including playing on the basketball team which recently concluded its season.

Starnes said counselors and

THE SDN COLUMN

By Roy McQueen

The feller on Deep Creek says, "What's so hot about being 'fit and fiddle?' Nobody wants to be highstrung and whiny."

We once visited an art museum in Santa Fe. Fortunately, SHS art teacher Ned Moore was part of the group. Ned had to tell the rest of us whether it was art or a mistake.

We thought about that adventure after reading about another incident in New Mexico. It proves that art — like beauty — is in the eye of the beholder.

We got a chuckle out of a municipal miscue in Albuquerque. A clean-up crew for the city painted over a work of art, mistaking it for graffiti.

The city had earlier commissioned some artist to do the piece for $15,000. But city workers were insufficiently appreciative of the city's attempt to promote culture among the masses. They obliterated the thing with brushes of their own.

It calls to mind what happened in New York a few years back. A juried art exhibit was thrown into chaos when a subversive abstract painting was awarded a prize. It was then revealed that the heralded work had been produced by an orangutan.

Misinterpretation of art is a good argument that taxpayer support of art is fatally flawed.

Let the artist be rewarded by those who can see and properly appreciate it. Government and most of its taxpayers just aren't up to it.

Somebody left us a copy of a Fort Worth Star-Telegram from the 1930s. There were some interesting stories:

--It was predicted that salaries of Hollywood actors would be drastically slashed. Movie actors were said to be averaging $3,298 a year. Movie executives averaged $53,326 and directors made, on an average, $20,135.

--Will Rogers was the top earner in the entertainment industry, making $315,000. Two dozen or more were making more money than the President of the U.S. (Times haven't changed much.)

--There was economic development going on then, as well. Governor-elect W. Lee "Pappy" O'Daniel visited in the home of Russell D. Firestone, the rubber magnate in Arkon, Ohio.

But some things do change:

--In 1934, women were not eligible to serve on a jury in Texas. That prohibition was upheld by the Fifth Court of Civil Appeals, denying Miss Stella Glover, a florist shop owner, from having her name placed in the jury wheel.

Mayor Holt files for another term

Calling the job a "privilege," David Holt filed Monday to serve a second term as mayor of the City of Snyder.

"I appreciate the citizens of Snyder for allowing me to serve the last two years as their mayor and if they so choose, I would appreciate serving another two years," said the self-employed businessman. "I'm looking forward to Lorber coming and other projects that are before the city at this time. I have an enjoyable city council and city staff to work with. It's a privilege to do this."

A former city councilman, Holt was elected to the mayor's post in 1995, giving up seats on the Development Corporation of Snyder board and the Colorado River Municipal Water District board to do so.

In addition to mayor, there are three city council places up for election in May. Two are at-large, currently held by Ron Shaw and Dayton Robertson. Shaw announced Monday that he will seek re-election.

Also on the ballot will be an unexpired term in District 3, vacated last year by former councilman Kenny Gambrell.

The filing period runs through April 2. Early voting in the May 3 elections is April 14-29.

Holt is a 1966 graduate of Snyder High School and received his bachelor's of business administration degree from Texas Christian University in 1970.

He and his wife, Donna, returned to Snyder in 1971 and joined Fluid Transports, a company which he later owned and has recently sold.

He served on the Snyder City Council from 1979 to 1983, is a 32nd Degree Scottish Rite Mason and past president of Snyder Little League. He is a member of the First United Methodist Church.

Holt and his wife have two sons, Kevin, who is married to Tana, and Alan, married to Cindy. They have two grandchildren, Haleigh and Hanna.

Dacus files for trustee's seat on Hermleigh board

Tim Dacus, elected last year to fill out an unexpired term on the Hermleigh school district board of trustees, has filed for a full term.

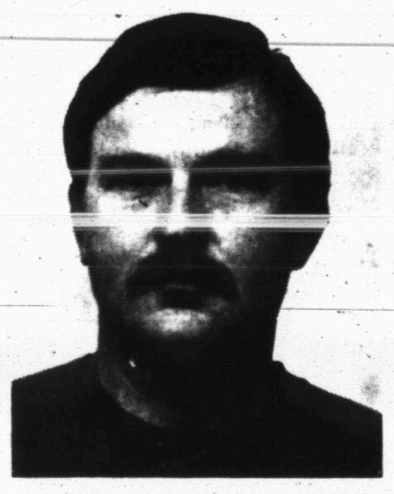

Dacus has filed to fill one of four terms on the board which are up for election in May. Also on the ballot will be terms held by John Williamson and Chip Roemisch, and a term by Jimmy Hudgins, who recently resigned from the board.

Dacus, a 37-year-old technician specialist for Sun Pipeline, has resided in the Hermleigh area all his life. He is a graduate of Hermleigh High School.

There are eight trustee positions up for election on the three public school boards in Scurry County. Last Thursday, Geraldine Parker announced she will not seek a third term as the Place 2 trustee on the Snyder ISD board. Richard Chambers, the only other SISD trustee whose term comes up for election in May, indicated he likely will file for another Place 3 term.

At Ira, Place 4, held by Bo Robinson, and Place 5, held by Dirk Dunn, are up for election. All seats on the Ira ISD board are at-large, but candidates must designate which place they are seeking.

Persons wishing to file as a candidate should do so in the respective business office of the entity which they wish to represent. The filing period runs through April 2.

Hospital study group grows

A group formed to look into the possibility of leasing Cogdell Memorial Hospital decided this morning to increase its numbers.

To better balance the group, committee members today appointed Cogdell employee Laurie Stark, RN, and agreed to ask a family physician to serve. The physician had not been contacted as of noon today, however.

Other committee members are Judge Ricky Fritz, Commissioner Jerry Gannaway, hospital board members E.D. Walton and Stanley Martin, Cogdell employee Lisa Cross, RN, and hospital auxiliary president Lynn Heard.

The committee was named after a called meeting of the Scurry County Commissioners Court on Jan. 28 in which a representative of Community Health Services (CHS) proposed a 30-year lease of the hospital with upfront payments totalling nearly $10 million and $250,000 per year beginning in the sixth year of the lease.

Calling the group an "information finding group, and information distrbution group," Judge Fritz said this morning that the committee will mail letters to other entities that may be interested in leasing the hospital.

"Our primary focus is on this one (Community Health Services) right now because they have made an offer, but we're also going to also going to look at others," said Fritz.

The judge said the committee will be studying Community Health Services to "see how this group handles hospitals, employees and patients," and will be visiting several healthcare facilities owned and managed by the firm in the coming weeks.

Museum needing volunteers

Scurry County Museum is looking for volunteers to attend an oral history program and use the knowledge they learn to help with a project to preserve history.

Dr. Louis Marchiafava, oral historian from Houston, will conduct the workshop, which will be held at 9 a.m. Friday and Saturday at the museum. Those attending are asked to bring a sack lunch. Refreshments will be provided.

Marchiafava will address the ethics of oral history, equipment usage, legal issues and the interview process during the first day. On Saturday, he will demonstrate techniques to use in interviewing.

Individuals who wish to attend should call the museum at 573-6107.

The trained volunteers will interview people who lived during the boom years. The taped interviews will be utilized to prepare a booklet and future museum displays.

The major goal of the project is to perserve the memories of people who lived during a significant time in Scurry County history. Anyone interested in participating as an interviewer, interviewee, transcriber or editor is encouraged to contact the museum.

Hermleigh bee next up

Scurry County spelling bees continue Wednesday with Hermleigh seventh and eighth graders vying for top honors at 12:20 p.m.

Hermleigh was also to kick off the campus bees today with fourth through sixth graders at 12:20 p.m.

Two spell-offs are slated Thursday. West begins at 9 a.m. and Northeast starts at 2:15 p.m.

Two bees are also set for Friday. East will begin at 8:45 a.m. and Snyder Junior High School will begin at 2:15 p.m.

Ira School will complete the campus bees with a spell-off on Thursday, Feb. 27.

Zoning dispute heading for high court ruling

BOERNE (AP) — Old-timers can remember carrying rocks up a hill nearly 75 years ago to build a Roman Catholic church in what is now a historic district in this southern Texas town.

They and others don't want to see the Spanish-style stone building expanded to accommodate newcomers who have doubled the parish over the past six years. But the church wants to knock down some of its stone walls and enlarge its 230-seat sanctuary.

"If we wanted to continue holding Mass here we would have to exclude people from our worship," said the Rev. Tony Cummins of St. Peter the Apostle Catholic Church, which has held its Sunday services since 1995 in a senior citizens center to make room for the 1,000 families now in the parish.

The U.S. Supreme Court will hear arguments Wednesday in a religious freedom case that pits church leaders against Boerne (pronounced Bernie), which refused in 1994 to grant construction permits on grounds that the church is in a historic district.

At issue is the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993, a law intended to make it harder for government to prevail when a regulation or policy interferes with religion.

St. Peter's claims the law protects it from the town's historic preservation ordinance in this quiet Hill Country town of about 4,000 people, settled by German immigrants in 1849 some 30 miles northwest of San Antonio.

Mayor Patrick Heath, a retired Methodist minister, said the town isn't trying to suppress religion.

"This is and has been for many years a community that values its heritage, its cultural heritage," Heath said. "Churches are not the only institutions in our community that make it a significant and valuable place."

The town claims St. Peter's is an example of mission revival architecture while others liken it to a poor imitation of a San Antonio church.

The court battle began when U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton sided with the town in a lawsuit filed by the Catholic Archdiocese of San Antonio, declaring the Religious Freedom Restoration Act unconstitutional.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed Bunton's ruling. Then the town appealed, setting the stage for the Supreme Court showdown.

"It affects every single religious organization and individual in the United States, no matter their belief," said the Rev. Oliver Thomas of the National Council of Churches of Christ.

St. Peter's $1.3 million plan for a new 750-seat sanctuary calls for keeping intact the front facade with its twin bell towers, but tearing down the rest of the church and more than tripling the floor space.

Opponents of the church expansion agree a larger sanctuary is needed, but favor building elsewhere on the church's 6-acre campus or on another piece of property. They oppose destroying any of the old sanctuary, built on a Boerne hilltop in 1923.

"The building is of historical value," said Bertie Sciaraffa, who attended St. Peter's until the zoning dispute heated up. "Even more importantly, it is of emotional value to the people who built it. There still are people around who remember carrying the rocks up the hill."

As the court fight rages on, the legal costs mount. Heath said the town's legal expenses total about $230,000. Cummins would not disclose the church's legal fees.

Cummins says most of St. Peter's parishioners agree with the church but want the battle to end.

"They would all like it to be over," Cummins said. "They would like to have a permanent place of worship."

Water bill said good start, but flawed

AUSTIN (AP) — Water management legislation filed on the heels of last year's withering drought is a good step, but falls short by not curbing Texans' virtually unfettered right to pump water from beneath their property, the Sierra Club says.

The so-called "right of capture" basically allows property owners to pump as much water as they like from under their land, regardless of how it affects adjacent landowners.

Those who oppose changing the principle say it's a basic property right. But Ken Kramer of the Lone Star Chapter of the Sierra Club environmental group said Monday that argument is flawed.

"There is no protection to a property right in groundwater if your neighbor can put in a bigger pump and a bigger well and pump out more water than you can, and potentially ... deplete the aquifer to the point where you can no longer draw water from it through your own well," Kramer said.

The bill's author, Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, has said it will be up to local governments to decide whether to impose water use limits.

"If water districts coordinate and work together in coming up with a plan, we will avoid a competition to see who can build the biggest water pump on their property," Brown, R-Lake Jackson, said when he introduced the measure.

On Monday, Brown said he has discussed the water legislation with the Sierra Club and other groups and would continue to do so.

"I hope these groups are interested in continuing to work with us as we move forward in our attempt to create the best solution for the water needs of this state," he said.

Kramer said the legislation doesn't assure regulation of groundwater withdrawal if a local groundwater district fails to act. He said regulation by groundwater districts could be workable if there were a strong state backup in case local districts didn't take action.

Changing the right of capture could be done through separate legislation, Kramer said. If unable to enact a change in this legislative session, Kramer said he'd support a study in time for the 1999 Legislature.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, who presides over the Senate and supports the water bill, said he doesn't favor changing the rule of capture at this point.

"I think that there's a great deal that we can do without that," he said. "Rather than getting in that kind of a controversy ... let's take it one step at a time, make some accomplishments."

Brown's bill, which Kramer called "a good starting point," would encourage local water districts, river authorities and municipalities to enact drought management plans by tying state funding and permits to enactment of such plans. It also would increase penalties on those who pump water that doesn't rightfully belong to them.

Tax Update

By The Associated Press

Divorce can complicate taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — D-I-V-O-R-C-E can spell T-A-X M-E-S-S.

The tax complications that go along with divorce can make a bad experience worse. And, just when cooperation between spouses seems impossible, it can be required to minimize their tax bills.

Divorced and separated people should review the rules in IRS Publication 504 before making such decisions as the timing of their divorce, custody and support arrangements and — for women — whether to resume using their maiden name.

For instance, alimony is deductible for the payer and taxable for the recipient. Child support isn't deductible and it isn't taxable. So, it's better to pay alimony, and better to receive child support.

Also, women who want to resume using their maiden name should get a new Social Security card. They should use their married name on tax documents until then.

Another consideration is filing status. A married couple usually pays more tax than they would if each spouse were single. So, if you have a choice of whether to get divorced in December or January, you may want to choose December.

If you were divorced or legally separated under a court-approved decree of separate maintenance on the last day of the year, you're considered unmarried for the whole year.

As a divorced or legally separated person, your filing status will be either single or — if you qualify — head of household. Head of household status is for people providing a home for children or other qualifying person. You get a bigger standard deduction and move into higher tax brackets more slowly.

If you're planning a divorce but still living together, or living apart without a court-approved decree of separate maintenance, then you're married for tax purposes.

Your filing status choices generally are married or married filing separately. However, you may be able to claim head of household status if you lived apart from your spouse for the last six months of the year.

Married-joint status usually, but not always, is preferable to married-filing-separately status, which limits many tax breaks. In a few cases — if one spouse has high medical bills, for instance — it may make sense to file separately.

But the danger with married status is that each person who signs the return is responsible for the entire tax liability. If there's a problem later, and you're audited, the IRS can come after you for back taxes your spouse should have paid. With married filing separately, you're responsible only for your own tax.

Under the Taxpayer Bill of Rights II, enacted last summer, the IRS at least promises to keep each spouse informed of its efforts to collect jointly owed taxes from the other spouse.

If you and your spouse use the married-filing-separately status, you can change your mind later and file jointly using an amended return, Form 1040X. But it doesn't work in reverse. If you file jointly, you can't file separately later.

Custody of children affects a range of tax benefits: the dependent exemption, the earned income tax credit, the child and dependent care credit. Only the custodial parent gets to claim the benefit — regardless of which parent provides the most support.

There's an exception for the exemption. The custodial parent can permit the non-custodial parent to claim the exemption for one or more years by signing Form 8332. To ensure receipt of support payments, some custodial parents sign a Form 8332 good for only one year at a time.

In cases of joint custody, the parent who has custody for the greater part of the year — even if for only one day longer than the other parent — is considered the custodial parent for tax purposes.

A child can qualify only one parent for head-of-household status. The parent with custody gets to claim the status. If each divorced spouse has custody of a child, then both can claim head of household status.

Divorce also can complicate home sales. Generally, people who are 55 or older are entitled to a $125,000 exclusion for capital gains on the sale of their home.

But it's one to a customer. In a second marriage, if one of the spouses used the exclusion previously, then the other spouse can't take the exclusion.

So if you're divorced, intend to sell your home, haven't used your exclusion yet and intend to marry someone who's already used their exclusion, you probably will want to sell your home before the marriage. If each remarrying spouse has a house to sell, and both are eligible for exclusions, both homes should be sold before the marriage. After the marriage, only one of the homes will be eligible for exclusion.

Rea Adams and Charlene Akers

Museum program at DAR

Scurry County Museum director Charlene Akers spoke to members of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Martin Preuitt Jr. Chapter. She was introduced by president Rea Adams at the February meeting held at the country club.

Ms. Akers related several trends in museums throughout the world and discussed the county museum within this context. "Museums are significant places to learn about the past through interpretive means. Signs, docents and even technology help people discover 'what that old thing is,'" she said. "As a result of becoming a service oriented business, museums must be run in a businesslike manner. Like any business, new customers must be found. To do this, museums have developed multicultural themes, exhibitions, and programs to appeal to many individuals," she added.

Ms. Akers commented on the kite exhibit at the museum and throughout Western Texas College. This display will be removed from the museum on March 24, and from WTC at the end of the semester. On March 21 a lecture is set for 5 to 7 p.m. and on March 22 a lesson on how to make a kite will be held.

She concluded with information of a grant from the Texas Council of Humanities that will finance work featuring the oil boom of 1948-50.

The museum is open during regular business hours Monday through Friday. Weekend appointments may be made by calling 573-8511, ext. 210.

DAR will meet again on May 13 with the place to be announced. The program will be the 20th Anniversary Celebration of Martin Preuitt Jr. Chapter, honoring charter members. In addition, installation of officers will be held.

Tech museum open

The Museum of Texas Tech University in Lubbock is featuring "Introduction to Hall of Giants" during February.

Gallery Four will featre "Chernobyl," beginning March 9, and "Buffalo Soldiers: African American Soldier," on March 23.

It's Never Too Late to Tell For Victims of Sexual Abuse

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing about a recent letter signed "No Justice Served in California." I am a police lieutenant who has been involved in the investigation of child molesters for the past 10 years, and I want you and your readers to know the following about child molesters:

Research, literature in the field and my personal experience have shown that child molesters usually commit many sex crimes involving many victims. Unlike other crimes, delayed disclosure of sexual abuse is the rule — not the exception. It is common for victims to wait weeks, months or even years before disclosing their abuse. Many states provide for this in their laws that cover statutes of limitations (how long after the crime is committed the offender can be prosecuted).

In Texas, offenders can usually be prosecuted for child sexual abuse for a period of 10 years after the crime is committed, unless they leave the state during that 10-year period. In that instance, the time the offender is absent from the state does not count against the 10-year limit. A few years ago, I was involved in the successful prosecution of a father who molested his daughter when she was a teen-ager. She was married and a law student when she finally disclosed the abuse, 12 years after it happened.

Please tell victims of sexual abuse that it is never too late to tell. The criminal justice system must make every attempt to bring these offenders to justice, no matter how much time has passed.

LT. BILL WALSH,
DALLAS POLICE DEPARTMENT

DEAR LT. WALSH: Thank you for an important letter. All too often victims of sexual abuse are reluctant to speak up because they are frightened or blame themselves for what happened. They are unable to acknowledge that an adult would willfully hurt them, and assume the responsibility for their abuse, which leaves them afraid, ashamed and psychologically isolated. Disclosing the abuse and identifying the perpetrator can be a critical step in the healing process of the victim.

DEAR ABBY: I am a person with a handicap and have recently noticed a trend in theaters that pleases me. Two seats are provided in the back of the theater so that people in wheelchairs and their loved one or friend can attend the movies and sit together.

Unfortunately, sometimes these seats are occupied by able-bodied people. When I have asked someone to give up the seat so my wife and I could sit together, I was refused. This has probably happened to other people, too.

Abby, please advise your readers that these seats are meant to accommodate people in wheelchairs, and able-bodied people should not occupy them. And while you're at it, please thank those theater owners who thoughtfully provide seating for people with disabilities.

MIKE A. BURK,
TERRE HAUTE, IND.

DEAR MIKE: If the seats are clearly marked so that patrons know the purpose of the short row, able-bodied people should sit elsewhere. If the area is not marked, speak with the theater manager about marking them as "Reserved for people with disabilities."

Should you have trouble with a patron refusing to move, talk to the usher.

Justin Hayward and Ray Thomas, of The Moody Blues, wrote a song called "Watching and Waiting" that included the line "Watching and waiting, for someone to understand me." This is applicable to bridge. Cards are waiting for partner or an opponent to be watching and understanding their significance.

In this deal from the World Team Olympiad, the Canadian Fred Gitelman landed his thin five diamonds.

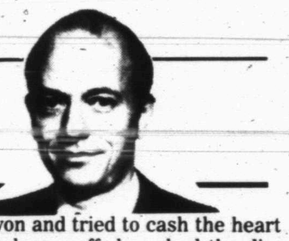

After Gitelman's light opening bid, North, George Mittelman, made what is called an inverted raise. Two diamonds showed at least a limit raise in diamonds: a good 10 points or more with four-plus trumps. (A jump to three diamonds is pre-emptive: a weak hand with long diamonds.) This is a popular method in expert circles.

After winning the first trick with the heart ace, Gitelman immediately led his lowest spade to dummy's queen. Perhaps East should have ducked this, but he won and tried to cash the heart king. Declarer ruffed, cashed the diamond king, and played a trump to dummy's jack. Now came a spade to the king, West dropping the 10. Back to dummy with a trump, Gitelman called for the spade eight and underplayed his six when East contributed the five. Success!

Gitelman ruffed dummy's last heart, and cashed the spade jack, discarding dummy's club two. Finally he tried the club finesse in an abortive shot at an overtrick.

True, Gitelman was given a bump in the right direction by East's debatable double, but he still listened, watched, and understood, leaving his opponents moody and blue.

Teens demonstrate hunger

DALLAS — Nearly 21,000 Texas teens will help the world's hungry by going without food on Feb. 21 and Feb. 22. Supported by pledges from families and friends, the Texas teens will have more than 500,000 teens across the country in the World Vision 30 Hour Famine and will raise $7.5 million for hunger-fighting prgrams.

From 1 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 21 to 7 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 22, the participants will drink only water and fruit juices. While they are fasting, many of the teens will spend part of the 30 hours in community service — operating canned food drives, assisting in homeless shelters and cleaning up their neighborhoods. Others will spend time in educational activities and games to learn more about the issues of hunger and poverty around the world.

In Dallas, there are more than 1,700 teens representing public schools, churches, youth groups and civic organizations. For example, members of the First Assembly Church of God youth group are going door-to-door collecting food, clothing and diapers for a local homeless center.

Groups wanting more information on the World Vision 30 Hour Famine can call 1-800-7-FAMINE or visit the website at www.30hourfamine.org.

Editors note: Interviews with local groups can be arranged by calling the above contact.

World Vision, the largest privately funded humanitarian agency in the U.S., is an international Christian relief and development organization working in 101 countries through more than 4,800 projects.

The Enquirer article disturbs Don Johnson

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Don Johnson is suing the National Enquirer for libel, upset over the tabloid's claims that his drunkenness on the set of "Nash Bridges" disrupted production.

The Enquirer recklessly disregarded the truth by reporting the false claims in January and February, according to the lawsuit filed Friday in Los Angeles County Superior Court. It seeks unspecified damages.

Enquirer Editor Steve Coz said the paper stands by the story.

Central rocks Snyder, 11-1

The SHS varsity baseball team could not match the the San Angelo scoring Monday night as the Tigers fell, 11-1, to the San Angelo Central Bobcats.

The Tigers managed only three hits in the season opener, while Central belted 11.

Eric Lang scored Snyder's only run of the game in the first inning on a Patrick Cumbie RBI. Snyder did not put another runner on base for the rest of the game.

Clay Berryman pitched 4⅓ innings, facing 27 batters, giving up 11 hits, and fanning two.

San Angelo Central's Guerrero went four for four with an RBI and a double to lead the Central scoring barrage.

The JV baseball team travelled to Odessa High Monday and fell 7-5 to the Bronchos.

Cory Trujillo went three for three with a double and -two singles for the Tigers. Clint Hook was the losing pitcher, going 3⅓ innings in the loss.

The Tigers will continue their season Thursday when they travel to the San Angelo Tournament. The JV will travel to San Angelo Central on March 1.

JV Lady Tigers take second place Monday

The SHS JV girls golf team took second place in the Snyder Tournament Monday.

The girls finished second out of seven teams with a team total of 405.

Stephanie Alderette was the third place medalist overall, firing a 97 on the par 72 Snyder Country Club course. Janette Allen shot a 102 and Adrienne McJimsey and Amber Rich each fired a 103. Lori Marshall rounded out the Lady Tiger score with a 110.

The Andrews Lady Mustangs finished in first place with a team total of 397. Rachael Robb fired the low round for Andrews with a 94, which also gave her the second place medal.

The Midland Lee Lady Rebels took home third place, firing a team total of 408. Amber Myers shot a 100 to pace the Lady Rebels.

Lubbock Coronado's Lara Sowers was the first place medalist with an 88.

The boys team did not place due to a lack of players.

The Tigers fielded only three golfers, Reid Johnson, Andrew Vinson and Kaleb Herrley.

Johnson fired a 94 to pace the Tigers while Herrley shot a 116. Vinson finished with a 122.

San Angelo Central was the first place team with a 351. Fort Stockton also fired a 351, but Central's lowest ranked player fired a better score than Fort Stockton's lowest ranked player.

Andy Barnes of Central was the difference, shooting a 93 to Fort Stockton's Jim Zapata's 102.

San Angelo also had the second place medalist, Johnny Perez, who shot a 78.

Fort Stockton's Francisco Rivera was the first place medalist with a 74.

Midland High took home third place, firing a team total of 357. Justin Scott shot an 84 to pace Midland. Scott also received the third place medal.

The girls team will continue their season on Feb. 22 when they travel to Lubbock. Next up for the boys is the San Angelo Tournament on March 4.

Mavericks and Nets trade nine players in mid-season

DALLAS (AP) — If there was ever any doubt, it's gone now. Don Nelson means business as front-office boss of the Dallas Mavericks.

Nelson dumped overweight center Oliver Miller promptly after his arrival 11 days ago, then traded Jamal Mashburn to Miami for three players. Nelson finished the purge Monday night with a staggering nine-player trade that sent Jim Jackson to the New Jersey Nets along with All-Star Chris Gatling and three others.

In return, the Mavericks got 7-foot-6 center Shawn Bradley, forward Ed O'Bannon and point guards Robert Pack and Khalid Reeves. The Nets also received guards Sam Cassell and George McCloud and center Eric Montross.

The trade is believed to be the largest between two NBA teams in the last 25 years, league spokesman Chris Brienza said. In 1964, there was an eight-player deal between Detroit and Baltimore involving Bailey Howell, Bob Ferry and Rod Thorn, now an NBA vice president.

For the Mavericks, the blockbuster swap followed Friday's trade of Mashburn to the Heat for three players and the December deal that sent Jason Kidd to Phoenix for Cassell, A.C. Green and Michael Finley.

Now the Three J's — Jackson, Mashburn and Kidd — are all gone, along with most every other player who started the season with the Mavericks.

Though he didn't name players, Nelson said bad attitudes in the Mavericks' locker room prompted his swift and sweeping moves.

"There were just so many negative things about this ball club," he said. "This locker room shocked me. It's not acceptable and will not be acceptable from this point on. I observed it, watched it and basically got sick about it."

Coach Jim Cleamons, whose team is 16-31 in his first season, looked and sounded stunned by Monday's move.

"Obviously, Nellie thought there were things that had to be done, and he came in and made some changes," Cleamons said. "Hopefully, this will come to a point in time where we can get settled for the rest of the year. We're going to sit down and evaluate them and see what we have."

With this deal, Dallas has no players remaining from last season's roster. Rookie forward Samaki Walker has been on the Mavericks' roster the longest, having been drafted last June.

Veteran guard Derek Harper was signed in July.

"From the beginning of the season to now, we have traded away our top seven players," said McCloud, who watched from the stands as Dallas beat Vancouver 100-95 despite suiting up only eight players. "I don't know if that's ever been done in this league before, but Don has done it."

The Nets, meanwhile, freed up $14 million under the salary cap in the next two years, allowing first-year coach John Calipari to pursue top free agents.

"This is a trade for the future," Calipari said.

Both teams are struggling — New Jersey is 15-36 — and the trade is not likely to make either a playoff contender this season.

"This was a hard decision based on the fact of what we're giving up, but Dallas was really active and wanting to make this happen," Calipari said. "They made it really tough for us to say no. The players are players I know very well and can help us get where we want to be."

Calipari made his comments as the Nets flew home on a team charter from Cleveland after a 108-101 loss. At the time, Bradley and Reeves had not been told of the trade. Pack and O'Bannon, the Nets' No. 1 draft choice two years ago, were injured and not with the team.

The four were expected to join Dallas in time for Thursday's home game against Milwaukee. All the players must pass physicals before the deal is finalized.

Bradley was averaging 12.1 points, 8.3 rebounds and almost four blocks to lead the NBA. Pack is averaging 15.9 points and 9.6 assists, but he has not played since the middle of January because of a sprained ankle.

Reeves is averaging 8.4 points, while O'Bannon has struggled as a Net and is averaging 4.2 points.

Jayhawks avenge loss to Missouri, 79-67

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — No. 1 Kansas was relieved just to get a split from the Missouri Tigers, who have struggled to a .500 record.

The only team to beat the Jayhawks this season, the Tigers never did act like the 22-point underdogs they were supposed to be.

Not until Raef LaFrentz hit a pair of free throws with 2:00 left for a 10-point lead was the capacity crowd assured of seeing the Jayhawks (26-1 overall, 12-1 Big 12) notch their 43rd straight home victory, the longest current streak in Division I.

"Missouri presents some real match-up problems for us," Kansas coach Roy Williams said after the 79-67 victory. "I'm sure their staff wishes they'd play against some other teams the way they play against us.

"Of course, that old sucker down on the other bench knows how to make the most of those match-ups."

That old sucker — Missouri coach Norm Stewart — kept finding a way for Tyronn Lee or Derek Grimm to thwart every run the Jayhawks tried to make. Lee wound up with a career-best 20 points for the Tigers (13-13, 5-8), who beat Kansas 96-94 in double overtime on Feb. 4.

"It was another outstanding ballgame," said Stewart, winding down his 30th year as Missouri's coach. "The last one was a little better."

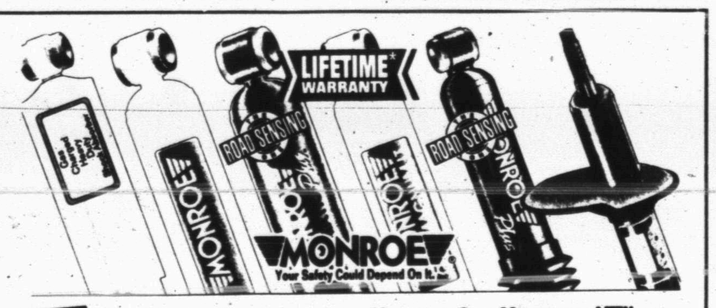

Hard-fought all the way, the game nearly turned into a brawl. With 31 seconds left, Grimm hit LaFrentz with a forearm, knocking the 6-foot-11 junior to the floor. No punches were thrown, but players from both sides rushed toward each other as officials and coaches pulled them away.

Grimm and Missouri guard Jason Sutherland both drew fouls on the play.

"It was a very physical game, and that's the kind of game you expect from Missouri," said LaFrentz, who matched his career high with 31 points, topping 20 for the eighth game in a row.

Clinton talks of better car seat attachments

By Walter R. Mears
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — In President Clinton's Saturday morning radio serial, the episodes feature miniature proposals with worthy goals, low costs and topics that sometimes seem improbable for White House microphones.

All of the above apply to his latest broadcast, a presidential pledge to help make children's car safety seats easier to hook up properly. Under federal regulations he proposes, the seats would come with standard buckles and new automobiles would have latches to fit them, effective in 1999.

"As the president has said, the era of big government is over," Clinton's $1.69 trillion, five-volume 1998 budget notes, in outlining broad federal roles, which don't get to the car seat level.

That is not to suggest that new federal standards aren't a good idea.

"We're moving closer to the day when safe, well-attached car seats will be the rule of the road," Clinton said Saturday. Safer for children, simpler for parents often frustrated by the mechanics of widely varying car seats, which now are required in every state.

"Anyone who's ever wrestled with a car seat knows what I'm talking about," said Clinton, the first president to wrestle with the topic in a nationally broadcast address.

In a way, his proposals for limited federal programs, persuasion and sometimes advice on topics from education to crime control to safe driving are attuned to his era of smaller government. In another way, they're attuned to a broadened Washington reach.

Clinton has said, repeatedly, that there is not a program for every problem, that government doesn't have all the answers. His mini-menu offers some, but with limits, especially on costs. He is, after all, pledged to a balanced budget in five years. But even low-priced proposals require rules, standards and the regulators to enforce them.

The strain between the two sometimes is evident, as when

AP news analysis

Clinton pushed the idea of requiring uniforms for public school pupils as a step to instill discipline and to reduce jealousy and friction that can stir violence.

"Let me be clear: Washington will not tell our schools what to do," he said in that Saturday radio talk, just about a year ago. He said parents, teachers and local school officials will have to make the decision, and the federal government can only advise.

So he told the Education Department to distribute a manual to each of the nation's 16,000 school districts on the advantages of making uniforms mandatory.

The five-minute weekly radio talk, usually live, at 10:06 Saturday mornings, has become Clinton's forum for offering and often repeating such ideas.

It is a presidential format dating from Richard Nixon's time, although only Ronald Reagan and now Clinton made it a weekly fixture. Reagan delivered 331 of them; most were presidential sermons for his programs and philosophy.

"Believe me, Saturdays will never seem the same," he said in the last of his weekly talks.

George Bush used the medium sporadically. Clinton not only revived it, he made it into a production, usually broadcasting live from the Oval Office with an invited audience, sometimes featuring people affected by the measures he is discussing.

For his push to expand the family leave law to permit working people up to 24 hours, unpaid, a year, for things like school conferences and children's medical appointments, he invited three families who got emergency time off under the existing law, the first he signed as president.

Early in his presidency, Clinton concentrated his talks on his major proposals to Congress, particularly on economic matters. He still does so some Saturdays. But more often, he adds to the catalogue of cautious proposals that have been his style since the Republicans took over Congress in the 1994 elections.

The Republicans get broadcast time for a Saturday radio talk of their own. But with different voices and without the White House pulpit, it is an unequal match.

It always has been difficult to calculate the size of the listening audience, but replays, clips and news accounts magnify the impact, especially on quiet weekends.

Just the thing for modest proposals, among them:

—Clinton's announcement of a $14.3 million first installment for school equipment and training to link classrooms to the Internet.

—Word of an administration handbook for police on dealing with witness intimidation by street gangs.

—His directions to federal agencies to save surplus food from their cafeterias for distribution to the hungry.

—His preview of changes in automobile air bag rules to reduce the risk of harming children.

And, of course, easy to install car seats.

One of these Saturdays, perhaps, there'll be instructions on how to program a VCR.

EDITOR'S NOTE — Walter R. Mears, AP columnist, has reported on Washington & national politics for 30 plus years.

Connally sharing memories of assassination

DALLAS (AP) — Nellie Connally spent about two weeks replaying the events in her head.

Back home in Austin at the Governor's Mansion, she sat down with a yellow legal pad and record[illegible] her memories of the day her husband, then-Gov. John Connally, was shot and President John F. Kennedy was assassinated.

Only recently has Mrs. Connally begun reading her notes to a public still fascinated by the details of that fateful day.

"I awakened early on Friday morning, Nov. 22, 1963," the 77-year-old Mrs. Connally read Sunday. "The day was gray and somber. Rain was falling."

The gloominess of the morning had broken by the time the Connallys and Kennedys arrived in Dallas. Mrs. Connally recalled that the president epitomized "youth, charm, vitality and poise" and first lady Jacqueline Kennedy was resplendent in her now-famous pink suit.

Under brightening skies, the couples rode together in the back of a convertible limousine through waving, cheering crowds.

"We were indeed a happy foursome that beautiful morning. I did so hope Dallas would give the Kennedys a warm and very cordial welcome," Mrs. Connally said.

Her silver hair bright under the stage lights, Mrs. Connally read how she couldn't resist bragging as the motorcade drove toward Dealey Plaza.

"I said, 'Mr. President, you certainly cannot say that Dallas doesn't love you,' " Mrs. Connally read. "And then I heard a loud terrifying noise. It came from the back.

"I turned and looked toward the president just in time to see his hands fly up to his neck."

After a second shot, the one that struck the governor, "John said, 'My God, they're going to kill us all!' I reached over and pulled him to me and tried to get us down in the car.

"My eyes saw bloody matter in tiny bits all over the car. Mrs. Kennedy was saying, 'Jack! Jack! They have killed my husband! I have his brains in my hand.' "

Mrs. Connally saw her husband's bloody chest wound and thought he was dead. Then he moved slightly and she knew he was still alive.

"Be still. It's all right," she told him as the car sped to Parkland Memorial Hospital.

Mrs. Connally's notes were meant to be a chapter of family history for her three children and grandchildren. But after coming across them in a file a few years ago, the only remaining member of the foursome seated in the back of the limousine began reading them to small groups in Houston.

Requests have multiplied as word spread. Before her latest reading, sponsored by the Dallas Historical Society, she acknowledged a book deal is "something that might be in the works."

What came through during her 30-minute presentation Sunday was the sense that whatever that historic day meant to the world, Mrs. Connally experienced it as the wife of a suffering husband.

Kennedy and Connally were in Parkland Memorial Hospital trauma rooms on opposite sides of a hall; the wives sat outside. As only a wife could, Mrs. Connally wondered: "Did they have adequate and good doctors tending John (Connally) or were they all across the hall with President Kennedy?"

The bullet had entered Connally's right shoulder, pierced a lung, exited through his chest, proceeded through his right wrist and lodged in his left leg.

Connally recovered and served as governor until 1968. He died at age 75 of pneumonia in 1993.

When Mrs. Connally finished speaking, the crowd of about 400 rose and applauded — a respectful tribute, no whoops or whistles.

"She's an eyewitness to history, and you always want an eyewitness," said Kenny McCullough, a junior college teacher of history and government who was a year old in 1963. "She was right there in the car. She's the only living one, and you've got to get her testimony."

Government to pay New York hospitals not to train doctors

NEW YORK (AP) — The federal government will pay New York's hospitals $400 million to train fewer doctors for the next six years, The New York Times reported today.

The payment is an unconventional effort to control a surplus of doctors, the newspaper said.

The government's offer to the state's 41 teaching hospitals aims to stem the growing number of doctors in parts of the country, which health economists say drive up medical costs, and save money.

"It's an amazing treatment of health care as a commodity — like grain or milk or meat," said Dr. Alan Hillman, a professor of health policy at the University of Pennsylvania.

"I've never heard anything like this before. But I really can't find any fault with it. Maybe this is one of the first rational collaborations between hospitals and the government."

The plan was proposed by state hospitals and politicians and approved by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, the Times reported.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Give total attention to significant matters today. If you allow yourself to have little lapses, opportunities could slip through your fingers.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Guard against tendencies today to treat significant involvements with indifference. Neglect now could spell trouble later.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) In your [illegible] to complete situations today, you [illegible]reate more complications than a[illegible]y exist. Slow down and don't add to your woes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) If you're unduly concerned about impressing others today, it might cause you to boast unbecomingly and thereby defeat the very charisma you hope to exude.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Favorable financial conditions continue for you today; but if you fail to manage your resources more prudently, gains could be diminished.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) In order to expedite a matter with someone today, you could take to heart large promises made to you by another. Unfortunately, it may be just insecure sales talk.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You will be disappointed today if you expect things to come too easily. Only work and consistency will generate rewards.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Enjoy yourself today, but try to do so as inexpensively as possible. You have strong wasteful urges that must be subdued.

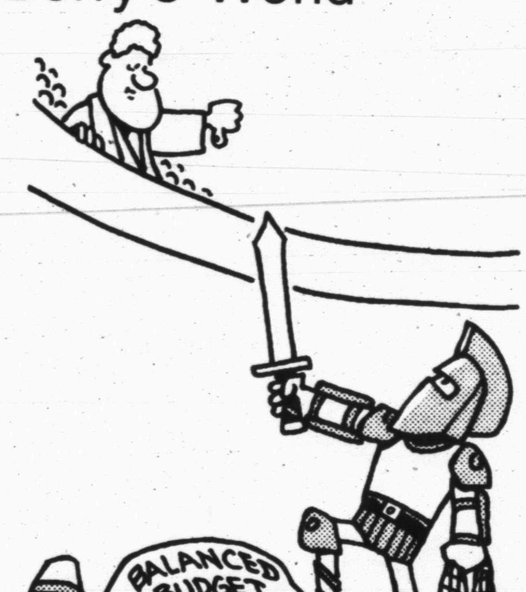

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) It is essential today that you do not take credit for things others have achieved. If you do, it could be exposed in an embarrassing manner.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You are usually the kind of person who thinks things through before going into action. Today, however, you may try to get airborne without a propeller.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Commercial arrangements which have been running smoothly thus far might take a slight downward turn today. Watch that this does not become unmanageable.

American pilots standing alone in pay battle

DALLAS (AP) — American Airlines pilots will be flying solo in their quest for a bigger paycheck and job security. They're pitted against management, many of their coworkers, the traveling public and President Clinton.

The aviators, who already are among the highest-paid workers in the nation, say they expect no sympathy and know they'll be isolated in pressing their contract demands.

"They're going into this with their eyes wide open," said union president Jim Sovich.

The pilots have been negotiating with American since 1994. This past week, talks dissolved and the pilots declared a strike.

The potentially crippling walkout, which could have affected one of every five U.S. air passengers, lasted mere minutes before President Clinton intervened to stop it.

The White House action merely postponed the showdown between management and the Allied Pilots Association, which represents about 9,300 American pilots.

Now, a Presidential Emergency Board will consider the two sides' arguments.

In addition to wages, the dispute revolves around who will fly small jets that American plans to buy to replace turboprobs now used on commuter-length flights.

The three-member board has 30 days to recommend a settlement. If either side rejects the deal, the pilots can again strike after another 30 days and only Congress can stop them.

The pilots' decision to take the contract fight this far has left other American workers stuck in the middle. The flight attendant union, which had its own strike in 1993, is officially supporting the better-paid pilots, who make an average of about $120,000 a year.

On the other hand, many members of the Transport Workers Union of America, which represents about 27,000 mechanics, simulator pilots, ground instructors, dispatchers and meteorologists, have been vocally opposed.

The Air Line Pilots Association, which represents turboprop pilots at American Eagle, who average about $35,000 a year, is trying its best to stay neutral.

Since ALPA represents the 1,900 pilots at American Eagle, as well as jet pilots from several other major carriers, its membership is seeing both sides of the dispute over who should fly the small commuter jets.

APA wants its pilots to fly the 70-100 seat jet, while American parent company, AMR Corp., wants its cheaper American Eagle subsidiary to move into jet cockpits.

Capt. Homer Pugh, chairman of the American Eagle union's Executive Council said he recognizes the jet pilots' right to pursue a fair labor contract, but is concerned about rhetoric that may lead some people to question Eagle pilots' qualifications to fly jets.

APA officials say the two groups speak informally on a regular basis.

Clinton's call for a Presidential Emergency Board is the first made since the Johnson administration.

It could change the balance of power in airline labor negotiations.

In the past, pilots have had the edge because extensive training and Federal Aviation Administration requirements make it difficult to immediately replace them.

That training and the demands of passenger safety are why they earn their salaries, pilots say.

"A surgeon can only kill one patient at a time and nobody quibbles with their salaries" said one pilot, who asked that his name not be used.

Other major carriers' pilots have been quietly offering their support to American's pilots. Relations between pilots and management throughout the industry have been strained as business booms, since most pilot groups gave concessions during the down years of the early 1990s and now are trying to make up some of the difference.

Pilots at United Airlines, Trans World Airlines, Continental Airlines, Northwest Airlines, and USAir are all currently involved in contract talks of some form. They will all have to combat their airlines' attempts to match costs with low-cost carriers in today's deregulated environment.

Pilot groups also are watching as commuter operations associated with Alaska Airlines, Continental, Delta, Northwest and United all order small jet aircraft.

Wally Pitts, a spokesman for the union, said if American gets its way, the company will probably channel its growth into the smaller jets.

AFL-CIO stems membership decline

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The AFL-CIO stemmed the decline in membership last year, according to federation officials who on Monday outlined a broad organizing strategy to bolster labor's ranks.

Recruiting new union members on a large scale is essential to reviving labor as a social and political force. With steadily declining numbers over the last few decades, its strength has waned.

"America needs a raise, and one of the most effective solutions is a bigger and stronger labor movement, one capable of acting as a counterweight to the corporate forces now dominating our economy," said AFL-CIO President John Sweeney.

As the federation's executive council met this week, there was widespread support for Sweeney's call to energize the labor movement.

While claiming some victories in regaining members during Sweeney's first year as president, there also have been stinging setbacks such as labor's offer to unconditionally end the Detroit newspaper strike.

An irate unionist took Sweeney to task during a news conference Monday, accusing him of failing to do enough to support the Detroit strikers. Sweeney denied it was a surrender and portrayed the unions' unilateral back-to-work offer as a strategic decision that forces the company to "now decide whether to rehire the workers or to risk ... backpay liability."

Sweeney said membership in affiliated unions increased by about 12,000 members in 1996, to slightly more than 12.9 million. With the AFL-CIO's help, the labor movement over the past year has notched up organizing victories among state workers in Maryland and hotel workers in Las Vegas.

Yet, labor's strength is a far cry from when unions represented nearly 35 percent of the nonfarm workforce three decades ago. Unions overall showed a decline in membership in 1996, from 14.9 percent of the labor force in 1995 to 14.5 percent in 1996, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

In the past, the federation left organizing to its affiliates. But Sweeney's insurgent campaign was based on a promise to commit resources and staff to recruitment.

The federation announced a three-pronged campaign to draw more women into unions and promised to intensify efforts to organize 20,000 California strawberry pickers.

Karen Nussbaum, director of the AFL-CIO Working Women's Department, said the federation would survey working women and meet with hundreds of them directly to get a better picture on how unions might help them in the workplace. A national agenda to help working women is expected to be developed in the fall.

By bringing other unions in to support the United Farm Workers in their efforts on behalf of strawberry pickers, the federation hopes to convince growers that a nickel increase in the cost of a pint of strawberries could be used to pay workers a living wage.

Doug Dority, president of the United Food and Commercial Worker, pledged to support the strawberry campaign after visiting the fields and the homes of low-wage farm workers.

No consumer boycott has been organized, but Dority said he would ask company executives at the more than 100 grocery stores to not stock California strawberries.

"What we want to do is to get the word back to the strawberry growers that they have to improve the conditions in the field," he said.

Deadly 'Green Dragon' to be destroyed

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Inside a barbed-wire fence and behind thick concrete walls sits a legacy of the Cold War: the nation's second-largest stockpile of a chemical so deadly that one drop on exposed skin can kill.

The bunker at the Army's Redstone Arsenal holds the chemical, pentaborane, which was rejected long ago as a possible rocket fuel because it was too corrosive and volatile. The substance, which explodes when exposed to air, burns with a green flame, and scientists call it the "green dragon."

Now, nearly 4½ years after the cache was discovered, experts are preparing to destroy it. In a few months, workers will enter the dirt-covered bunker a few miles outside Huntsville and use remote-controlled machinery to neutralize the chemical by mixing it with water.

Redstone project officials insist the $1.5 million cleanup will be safe, although some residents are skeptical.

"They always say that, don't they?" said Marty Boyd, an aerospace engineer who lives just outside a gate at Redstone.

Low doses of pentaborane vapor can cause nausea, tremors, insomnia and irritability. Christopher Militscher, an Environmental Protection Agency scientist working on pentaborane cleanups, said he would not be surprised if some of those symptoms are reported in Huntsville even if there are no releases of the chemical.

A much larger stockpile of about 200,000 pounds of pentaborane is to be destroyed by detonation at Edwards Air Force Base in the California desert. But here, state officials banned the Army from burning the chemical so near the city and its 160,000 residents.

Redstone was the workshop of German scientists who developed America's first rockets in the late 1950s and '60s. Test materials often were brought to Redstone and NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center, which is on the base, during the Cold War.

Four 800-pound cylinders of pentaborane manufactured in 1961 were stored in the bunker with several smaller containers. They were forgotten until 1992, when state and federal inspectors found them.

The Department of Defense and the EPA have formed a national task force to study options for disposing of pentaborane, which has killed at least seven people since the 1950s.

Others have been injured while handling the chemical, including a man who nearly died during a 1994 cleanup in Columbia, S.C. Pentaborane fumes leaked into a safety suit, leaving the man in a coma for days.

'Star Wars' holds on to No. 1 box office spot for third week

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The revamped "Star Wars" earned $21.3 million to remain No. 1 at the box office for a third consecutive weekend, easily topping Clint Eastwood's new thriller, "Absolute Power."

"Absolute Power," which stars Eastwood as a burglar who witnesses a killing involving the president, debuted in second place with $16.8 million.

"Dante's Peak" fell to third with $14.3 million following a record February opening last week.

The weekend take would push the re-release of "Star Wars" near the $100 million mark. Last week, the second debut helped it become the first movie to break the $400 million domestic-gross mark.

The second part of the George Lucas space trilogy, "The Empire Strikes Back," comes out Friday.

Chevy Chase's "Vegas Vacation" opened in fourth place with $13.1 million, followed by "Fools Rush In," another film seeking to capitalize on the popularity of NBC's "Friends." The sitcom's Matthew Perry co-stars with Salma Hayek in the romantic comedy.

"That Darn Cat," Disney's remake of a 1965 comedy, was sixth with $6.5 million.

"Dangerous Ground," a drama set in South Africa that stars rapper Ice Cube and actress Elizabeth Hurley, opened outside of the top 10 with $2.7 million.

Final weekend box office figures were to be released today.

The top 10 films at the box office from Friday through Monday:

1. "Star Wars," $21.3 million.
2. "Absolute Power," $16.8 million.
3. "Dante's Peak," $14.3 million.
4. "Vegas Vacation," $13.1 million.
5. "Fools Rush In," $10 million.
6. "That Darn Cat," $6.5 million.
7. "Jerry Maguire," $5.3 million.
8. "The English Patient," $5 million.
9. "Scream," $3.6 million.
10. "Shine," $3.5 million.

Dr. Gott

Is heart condition serious?

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT: During a routine exam, I was quite surprised when my doctor told me that I have "atrial fibrillation." What is this? At age 76, do I have to worry about it or the consequences of the Coumadin he prescribed for it?

DEAR READER: Atrial fibrillation means that the heart is beating unevenly and irregularly. While usually a consequence of age-related arteriosclerotic heart disease, AF can also be associated with hyperthyroidism, disorders of one of the cardiac valves (the mitral valve) and other disorders.

Therefore, anyone who is discovered (on a cardiogram) to have AF should have blood tests for thyroid disease and, probably, a cardiac ultrasound to evaluate valvular efficiency.

In many people with AF, blood clots tend to form within the heart chambers. When pieces of such clots break off and are carried to the brain, stroke can result. Consequently, it is now accepted medical practice to prescribe anti-coagulant drugs, such as Coumadin, to patients with AF. Such medicine will help guard against stroke.

Of course, anti-coagulants carry some risk — primarily, that the blood may be over-anticoagulated, leading to life-threatening hemorrhage. Thus, you must undergo a periodic blood test ("prothrombin time") to make sure that you are receiving the proper dose of medicine and that it's doing its job. Obviously, any causes of AF must also be treated (with anti-thyroid drugs, for example, or surgery to repair a diseased valve.)

I believe that your doctor is following approved medical protocol; heed his advice for follow-up.

To give you more information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Understanding Heart Disease." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2017, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10156. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I was diagnosed with rheumatoid arthritis, now in remission. Formerly, I was in great pain; all my joints ached. Now, suddenly, without treatment, I am fine. Should I have therapy?

DEAR READER: I don't believe that you need treatment for rheumatoid arthritis that is in remission. As you know, "in remission" is the miracle phrase of chronic diseases.

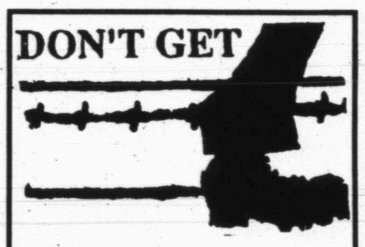

Patients with cancer, arthritis or almost any disease can, without warning, become symptom-free; the disorder can disappear or regress, and no one knows the reason why this occurs.

It is precisely because of "spontaneous remissions" that strict scientific testing is invaluable in assessing treatment plans, whether they use a conventional medical approach or rely on alternative therapy. For example, here you are, stuck with arthritis or cancer. You undergo unproven therapy — with herbs or whatever — and improve. Is it the treatment or merely spontaneous remission?

No matter. You are better. Count your blessings. There is no reason for you to have therapy unless your disease reactivates.

Justices rule on lawsuits by ex-workers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Companies can be sued by former employees who say they suffered retaliation — such as a bad job reference — for accusing the employer of discrimination, the Supreme Court ruled today.

Voting unanimously in a Maryland case, the justices said a federal job-bias law gives former employees the same protection against retaliation as current employees and job applicants.

Justice Clarence Thomas wrote for the court that the Clinton administration argued persuasively that barring such protection to former employees "would provide a perverse incentive for employers to fire employees who might bring ... claims" under the law.

It also would allow "the threat of post-employment retaliation to deter victims of discrimination from complaining" to the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, wrote Thomas, who once chaired that agency.

In other action, the high court:

—Ruled unanimously in a California case that states may enforce their own prevailing-wage laws, which set trade-by-trade minimum compensation for workers on state construction projects.

—Rejected an appeal by two men who sought legal recognition as coauthors of the enduring teen anthem "Why Do Fools Fall in Love."

—Turned away Labatt Brewing Co.'s claim that it owns a trademark on the phrase "ice brewed."

—Rejected a lumber company's challenge to limits on Pacific Northwest logging to protect a threatened species of bird, the marbled murrelet.

—Ruled, 8-1, states can tax natural gas sold by independent producers that operate mostly out-of-state while exempting sales by in-state public utilities.

—Refused to revive a libel suit by TV evangelist Robert Tilton, who says an ABC News program wrongly portrayed him as a callous, insensitive fraud.

Today's ruling in the job retaliation case reinstated a lawsuit filed by Charles T. Robinson Sr. against his former employer, Shell Oil Co.

Robinson had been a Shell sales representative for more than 11 years when he was fired in October 1991. He sued Shell, saying he was fired because he is black, but a federal judge ruled that his firing was not the result of discrimination.

Robinson applied for a job at another company, and Shell gave that company a negative reference. Robinson then filed a second lawsuit against Shell, saying it gave the poor reference in retaliation for his race-bias lawsuit.

Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act bars employers from retaliating against employees for asserting their right to be free from discrimination.

A federal judge in Baltimore dismissed Robinson's retaliation lawsuit, saying the federal law did not cover retaliation claims by former employees. A three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reinstated his claim, but the full 4th Circuit court dismissed it again.

The Clinton administration supported Robinson's appeal to the Supreme Court. Justice Department lawyers said the federal law bars employers from retaliating against workers who file discrimination claims, even if the employee has left the company by the time the retaliation occurs.

Otherwise, people who think a discrimination claim could lead to retaliation by their former employer may be intimidated into keeping silent, government lawyers said.

Today, the Supreme Court agreed.

Thomas wrote that the law, as written, does not make clear whether it includes former employees.

Traffic stop leads to arrest

During a routine traffic stop this morning, officers discovered a Snyder man was wanted on outstanding local DPS warrants.

Arrested at 1:14 a.m. in the 3300 block of Avenue E was an 18-year-old male.

Activity was light, otherwise, as no other arrests were made.

John McRoberts reported that an answering machine was missing from his residence in the 3900 block of Avenue O. He stated he did not wish to file a theft report at this time.

Alexander Torunce requested to speak to an officer at 2:07 p.m. in reference to someone kicking in a door at a residence in the 300 block of 32nd Street.

Officers were called to the Wal-Mart parking lot at 2:47 p.m. in reference to a minor accident. Involved were a 1994 Cadillac driven by Lois Ballard of 1209 E. Coliseum Drive and a 1988 Oldsmobile driven by Carolyn Welch of 209 33rd St.

At 6:13 p.m., the fire department was notified of grass fires 17 miles north of Snyder on Highway 208. The fires were of suspicious origin since they were in a span of some 1,000 feet of each other.

Officers investigated a report of a possible prowler at 8:59 p.m. in the 2800 block of Avenue X.

Officers were called to the Eastridge Apartments at 9:34 p.m. in reference to a noise disturbance.

teachers were available to all students at the junior high who wish to talk to them.

"Unfortunatley, we went through this about three years ago with the death of an eighth grader," Starnes said. In 1994, a female student died when struck in the face by a bullet fired from a gun held by a friend. That incident, too, occurred at a friend's home, and was ruled an accident.

Funeral service for Fennell have been set for 3 p.m. Thursday in the Bell-Cypert-Seale Chapel.

What's Up?

'Making College More Accessible'

A satellite town meeting designed to help communities improve their local schools will air on Channel 32 at 7 tonight. The topic is "Making College More Accessible." Viewers can ask questions during the live telecast by calling a toll-free number. Guest on the show will be U.S. Secretary of Education Richard W. Riley.

Possible bombs removed from home

BALCH SPRINGS (AP) — Investigators this morning removed possible bombs in the house of a man arrested for fatally shooting one neighbor and wounding two others during a dispute.

After Robert Jacobson was taken into custody, bomb squad teams from the Dallas police the Dallas office of the U.S. Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agency detonated a one-pound coffee can filled with explosives from his home, Mayor David Haas said.

Haas said several other possible bombs — mostly small cans and a gasoline can filled with powder — also were removed.

"Right now we've them separated into real small explosive devices, so there's not going to be any major explosions," he said.
