Official: Frontier did good local business

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

Though reports say Frontier Airlines will probably file for bankruptcy today unless an agreement is reached with disgruntled pilots, its business has been brisk since operations began at Midland Regional Airport three years ago, a city official said today.

"Ironically, the Frontier office here did exceptionally well," Victor White, City of Midland's director of airports said.

"They've (Frontier) only been here for three years and their passenger loads have increased steadily each month that they've been in operation," White said.

Frontier had four flights a day from Midland to Denver and Alburquerque, White said. Frontier's monthly passenger loads were 8,000 to 9,000 people a month, he added.

Associated Press reported talks that could save Frontier Airlines from bankruptcy broke off today without agreement to resume, a day after the airline halted operations, sending some 17,000 passengers nationwide scrambling for flights.

Frontier's parent company, People Express, announced early Sunday that Frontier was shutting down and would file for bankruptcy today if no agreement was reached between United Airlines and the Air Line Pilots Association.

Frontier ceasing operations strands passengers at Denver's Stapleton International Airport and Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport — 3,4A

Last month, United had offered $146 million for Frontier provided it could reach agreement with Frontier's five labor unions.

Talks with the pilot's union broke at 2 a.m. this morning without the pilot's seal of apporval of the buyout. Pilots are upset that their salaries would not immediately be on an equitable scale with United Airlines.

"Unless an agreement (with pilots) is reached, Frontier will file for bankruptcy (today)," said Marilyn Mishkin, chief Frontier spokeswoman. "It's that or nothing."

People Express spokesman Russell Marchetta said Frontier would not resume operations once it filed for bankruptcy.

"It's sad this had to happen because Frontier was doing so well here, but maybe this will attract another carrier once it saw how well Frontier did here," White said.

White said that Southwest Airlines has 40 flights a day from Midland and carries about 65 percent of the business while American Airlines holds 25 to 30 percent of the business and has 10 flights a day.

Although he said it is too soon to talk about a replacement carrier to take up the Frontier slack, he said "travel possibilities would be fabulous for Midlanders if United Airlines bought Frontier."

"We're really hoping the United buyout comes through.

"They (United) are the free world's largest airline — it would add prestige to Midland and give so many travel opportunities to cities in Europe as well," White said.

Though the shut-down would result in a 4,700 lay-offs nationwide, White said Frontier only employed about 10 to 15 people at its Midland office at the airport.

White said he heard Frontier Airlines had shut down operations Sunday morning just before Frontier's first flight was scheduled to leave.

The passengers began trickling into Midland Regional Airport around 5:30 a.m. Sunday morning to catch the flight to Denver, White said.

Fumes seeping from volcano kill at least 2,000

YAOUNDE, Cameroon (AP) — At least 2,000 people were killed by toxic gas seeping from a volcanic lake in northwest Cameroon, and the military moved into the remote area to evacuate survivors, the government said today.

There was no word on the number of injured.

A 17-member Israeli army medical team arrived in this West African nation today as part of international relief efforts that the Cameroon government said would also involve the United States, Britain and France.

"As far as we know, volcanic activity is still going on," medical team leader Dr. Michael Weiner told reporters on the plane from Israel, which was carrying Prime Minister Shimon Peres for a state visit. There has been no official government report of volcanic activity.

The Cameroon military took charge of rescue and relief operations in the disaster area.

Cameroon Information Minister Georges Ngango told reporters that military authorities filed a preliminary report of at least 2,000 dead.

But as of this afternoon, the government radio was still reporting that 40 people had died from the fumes. That was the figure provided by the government when it first reported the disaster on Sunday.

Joseph Mokassa, an aide to the provincial governor in Bamenda, capital of the stricken province, said by telephone he had seen many dead, but did not have precise figures.

"I went there on Saturday and it was such a frightful sight because so many people had lost their lives," Mokassa said.

A Western diplomatic source in Yaounde said of the government radio report: "The situation isn't clear. Rather than go with the higher figure, get people upset, clog the roads, they stay conservative." The source spoke on condition of anonymity.

Ngango said villagers from a wide area were being evacuated and others were fleeing, and that rescue workers were wearing gas masks.

The issue of hydrogen sulfide — a flammable, colorless gas which smells like rotten eggs — from Lake Nios near Wum, about 200 miles northwest of Yaounde, the capital, was a "geological castastrophe," a government communique said Sunday.

Gas kills by paralyzing respiration

NEW YORK (AP) — Hydrogen sulfide, the gas that reportedly has killed at least 2,000 people in Cameroon, can paralyze respiration if breathed in high enough concentrations.

The colorless, flammable gas, which smells like rotten eggs, depresses the functioning of the central nervous system.

Headache, dizziness, excitement, staggering, diarrhea and painful or difficult urination are symptoms of exposure to high concentrations, according to the "Rapid Guide to Hazardous Chemicals in the Workplace" by N. Irving Sax and Richard J. Lewis Sr.

The gas is very irritating to the eyes and mucous membranes. Low concentrations irritate the eyes, while slightly higher exposures can irritate the upper respiratory tract. Prolonged exposure can cause fluid to collect in the lungs.

The gas is also known as sulfureted hydrogen or sulfur hydride.

Jean Starnes, left, discusses plans for Adult Basic Education for the mentally and physically handicapped with volunteers David H. Brown and Janet Kirkpatrick.

Handicapped courses to be held at MARC

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Projected increases in enrollment at Midland College this fall may force officials to find a new location to house Adult Basic Education courses for the mentally and physically handicapped.

But teacher Jean Starnes said the courses will begin on schedule Sept. 3 regardless.

"Due to increases in enrollment, we are unsure whether Midland College will be able to provide room for us. We won't know until after late registration," Ms. Starnes said.

To compensate, courses will be housed temporarily in the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens Opportunity Center, 2701 N. A St.

Ms. Starnes — confined to a wheelchair herself — started teaching academic and functional skills courses to the mentally and physically handicapped in 1982.

Since then, she has tutored hundreds of adults in the practice of good health, basic conduct, government, sewing, cooking and simple repairs.

Last year 36 students enrolled in courses. Ms. Starnes said she expects at least that many to re-enroll this fall.

"Some have been coming since it (ABE) started in 1979," she said.

In many cases, the perceptual neurological disorders that accompany mental retardation, make it "too frustrating" for some to go to school," Ms. Starnes said.

"These courses are designed to make learning less frustrating," she said.

Ms. Starnes said she relies heavily on people in business to come in to the classroom and discuss their professions with students.

Among the speakers tentatively scheduled this fall are representatives of the National Weather Service, YMCA, a dentist, dietician and lawyer.

When community leaders are involved in the sessions, the students "learn to listen to other people and they get a wider scope of knowledge than they would get from just the teacher," Ms. Starnes said.

"It also helps spread the word that we do offer these courses," she added.

Ms. Starnes said "volunteers are desparately needed " to help teach cooking and sewing skills and work in the regular classroom.

Ms. Starnes said the average cost of Adult Basic Education courses is about $40 per semester. MARC will help pay the cost for those unable to afford it.

Students interested in enrolling, should meet at 7 p.m. Sept. 3 at the Opportunity Center.

Classes will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays.

Reagan may propose budget overhaul plan

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan, faulting the federal budget process as an inefficient, "Mickey Mouse system," says President Reagan is studying plans for a major overhaul of the nation's budget program.

Regan, in California with the vacationing president, said proposals to revamp the system put forward by top White House aides last week "definitely" caught the eye of the president.

The White House has found fault with the budget process for years, but has not put forward a specific reform package because of intense opposition in Congress, which jealously guards its budget-making authority.

The president would put his ideas before Congress in the next State of the Union address and make it one of his top priorities for his remaining two years in office, Regan told reporters during a weekend meeting.

"We have a crazy hodgepodge of a budget," Regan complained. "No state has a budget system, no other nation has a budget system like we do.

"We do many things in the federal level that would be considered dishonest and illegal if done in the private sector," the chief of staff said.

Regan, the former Secretary of the Treasury, was head of Merrill Lynch, the nation's largest investment firm.

"We say receipts coming into a trust fund are receipts to the federal government and count to the budget or budget deficit. That is not right by any budgeting sense," Regan said.

The chief of staff said concern on Capitol Hill, in the past wary of such proposals, may change because of the $200 billion-plus deficits and the pressures of the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law.

"I think the atmosphere might be changing where people are saying, 'This is a Mickey Mouse system,'" Regan said.

Two escaped convicts abduct women as they flee into Texas

HOUSTON (AP) — A convicted murderer and an armed robber who escaped from a Louisiana prison abducted two women as they fled west into Texas, authorities said.

Police continued their search today for the inmates, who were armed and considered dangerous. The men abducted a woman and forced her to drive to Houston, where they abandoned her and kidnapped another woman, officers said Sunday.

Karyn Laccheo, 29, was last seen late Sunday afternoon when the two men forced their way into her car outside a Houston supermarket and drove away, Houston police spokesman Al Baker said.

"Someone actually saw the abduction" and called police, Baker said.

Danny Weeks, 33, and James Colvin, 32, were discovered missing along with a third inmate during a count Saturday night at the Louisiana Penitentiary at Angola, said Warden Frank Blackburn.

"Both are career offenders with violent backgrounds," Houston homicide Sgt. W.O. Allen said.

Weeks has "a long history of abductions, but he hasn't harmed any of his hostages yet," said homicide Sgt. Brian Foster.

Baker said police were uncertain if the prisoners and their hostage remained in Houston or fled the area.

"We don't have any information," Baker said. "With these guys, given their history, they probably are not in Houston now."

The pair forced Linda Mayeax, 38, into her car at knifepoint as she sat in the parking lot of St. Frances Cabrini Hospital in Alexandria, La. at about 9:30 a.m. Sunday, Foster said.

Mrs. Mayeax, a housewife from Avondale, La., had been waiting for her husband and children, said Houston police Sgt. Bill Stephens.

He said the pair, armed with a .38-caliber gun, then forced her to drive to Houston, where they abandoned her unharmed just after 5 p.m. and kidnapped Ms. Laccheo at a westside shopping center as Mrs. Mayeax watched.

"Just how they (the inmates) got out, we don't know yet," said Blackburn.

Mrs. Mayeax will probably return to Angola today, Blackburn said.

Allen said the inmates were believed to still be in the Houston area.

After the escape, "tracks show that they got into the Mississippi River," Blackburn said. "They used a log to get out of the river in the area of Morganza. That's where the chase team tracked them."

Angola is near the river in West Feliciana Parish, about 40 miles northwest of Baton Rouge, near the Mississippi line. Morganza is about 15 miles downriver from the prison.

Colvin, of the Shreveport area, began serving 80 years for armed robbery in 1983. Weeks, of Monroe, La., was serving life plus 99 years for armed robbery. He was imprisoned in 1985.

Colvin was convicted in April 1983 of the July 12, 1982, armed robbery of a Shreveport delicatessen. Jurors, hearing a defense of insanity in Colvin's trial, deliberated only 13 minutes before discounting the plea and returning a unanimous verdict of guilty.

Falwell: Robertson can't escape identification as minister

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell says that despite Pat Robertson's effort to emphasize his experience in law and business, he cannot escape identification as a minister if he runs for president.

And Falwell, the Baptist minister who founded the Moral Majority, says he is concerned that a Robertson presidential campaign could be harmful to "the evangelical cause at large."

"Pat, we're not against you running," Falwell said he would advise Robertson, an evangelical Christian who has all but declared his candidacy for the Republican nomination. He said he would tell Robertson: "We like you, believe in you, but be very careful because just as Jerry Falwell can hurt us all, you can hurt us more now that you are running for president."

Falwell, a leader of the religious right who shares many of Robertson's political beliefs, discussed politics during an interview in a small, spare office at Liberty University, the institution he founded 15 years ago and which he said is now the fastest growing college in the nation.

In 1980, when Falwell welcomed candidate Ronald Reagan to the college, it had an enrollment of about 3,000. He said that this year, the figure will be 7,500.

Falwell has already declared his support of Vice President George Bush for the 1988 Republican presidential nomination.

He has a stock response when asked about a Robertson candidacy:

"I think Pat Robertson would make an excellent president. I just think George Bush would make a better one."

Falwell repeated that statement on this occasion, but later in the interview he expressed some misgivings about the political foray of his fellow evangelical minister.

He said he had talked for about an hour on the telephone to the Rev. Billy Graham.

"He thinks a great deal of Pat Robertson, as I do," Falwell said. "We were not talking just about the Pat issue, but in the wide range of subjects that came up, we were just sharing that hopefully his running for president will not hurt him or his ministry or the evangelical cause at large."

Falwell said that, with the exception of Robertson, "there is not one of us, anywhere, interested in running for dog catcher," and he had hoped it would stay that way.

"I hoped that none of our pastors, preachers, would run," he said. "But I have always said everyone has the right to run."

Falwell is not alone in his concern. Jimmy Swaggart, a television evangelist whose World Ministry is headquartered in Baton Rouge, La., said in a recent interview that he hopes Robertson does not run for president.

"I'm hoping I can talk him out of it," Swaggart said, adding that he doubts Robertson could draw support from beyond the fundamentalist Christian community.

Robertson concedes there is, what he calls "an antipathy against the involvement of the clergy in politics."

At a meeting with reporters recently, Robertson said he would deal with that issue by emphasizing that he has a law degree, attended the London School of Economics and runs the mutli-million-dollar Christian Broadcasting Network. "That isn't your typical parish priest," he said.

"In no way can he get away from being an ordained pastor, an ordained minister," said Falwell. "Just as Jesse (Jackson) is and both of them would like to be Mr. Jackson or Mr. Robertson.

"They can no more be that than Billy Graham or Jerry Falwell can be Mr. Graham or Mr. Falwell. It's reverend all the way."

Robertson has complained that during the contest for precinct delegates in the Michigan Republican primary, Bush supporters circulated a flyer headlined, "Help Keep Religion Out of Politics."

"I don't think George Bush had anything to do with that," said Falwell. "I would be very disappointed if George Bush had anything to do with approving the copy or distributing the material. That's not his style."

Falwell said supporters of the religious right also have been guilty of excesses and he pointed to the Michigan primary campaign of Rep. Mark Siljander.

The congressman, a strong supporter of the religious right, was defeated by a Republican challenger. Siljander attributed his defeat to backlash from a tape distributed to ministers in which he asked for their help to "break the back of Satan."

"He brought religion into it as a criteria for his elect and his opponent's rejection and I think he'll admit that's what beat him," said Falwell.

Public thinks drug use biggest problem in schools, poll shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — The public believes drug use is the biggest problem facing schools today, according to a new survey that shows a wide margin in favor of expelling students caught using drugs and allowing teachers to search lockers for drugs.

And by a narrow 49-44 margin, the public even approves of testing students for drug use by urinalysis, the Gallup Poll says.

It was the first time in the 18-year history of the annual Gallup Poll on education that the public has identified drugs as the biggest problem confronting the schools.

The public has singled out lack of discipline as the schools' major problem in 16 of the 17 previous Gallup surveys.

But in the poll released Saturday by Phi Delta Kappan magazine, 28 percent of those interviewed cited drugs as their top concern. Twenty-four percent mentioned lack of discipline, while lack of financial support for the schools ranked third with 11 percent.

"This confirms that the parents of America want to get drugs out of our schools," Secretary of Education William J. Bennett said in a statement. "I have no higher priority than helping make American schools drug-free."

Public concern over the drug issue has been heightened by the spread of new, cheaper forms of cocaine, and the recent drug-related deaths of basketball star Len Bias and football player Don Rogers.

By a margin of 78-16, the public favored expulsion of students found using drugs; and a 67-28 margin said it's OK to search lockers for suspected drugs.

On other subjects, the survey found that most parents — by a 67-24 margin — would allow their child to attend classes with a child who was suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The survey said only "6 percent of the public mistakenly believe that a person can contract AIDS merely by being in a public place with someone who has it."

Parents were somewhat less alarmed about drugs in schools attended by their own children. Only 16 percent listed drugs as the biggest problem facing the school their oldest child attends; 15 percent cited discipline.

Familiarity with a school generally elicited a higher rating. "Parents grade the public schools in their own community substantially higher than the public schools nationally, and they rate the public schools their own children attend even higher," said the survey, based on interviews of 1,552 adults at home last April 11-20.

For instance, while 41 percent gave their local schools an A or B grade, only 28 percent said public schools nationally rated that high. That was the highest national rating since Gallup asked for national grades in 1981; only 20 percent handed out an A or B then.

The survey found overwhelming support for tougher standards for grade promotion and graduation. Sixty-eight percent favored tougher high school graduation requirements even if that meant more dropouts; 23 percent said no.

Two out of three parents (68 percent) said they wanted the right to choose the local schools their children attend, the survey said. But it added that "relatively few — one in four — would take advantage of this right if it were available."

Only 27 percent believed the government should provide aid to private schools. But, asked if they would send their children to private or parochial schools if they had the means, 49 percent said yes and 46 percent no.

CAMEROON

Hydrogen sulfide is often found in volcanic gases. It is often formed during the decay of animal matter. Lake Nios lies in a volcanic crater.

At least three villages were affected by the fumes, which began to emanate Friday, according to a communique read Sunday over state television. President Paul Biya toured the region Sunday and declared it a disaster area, the communique said.

The Cameroon government called for international aid to cope with the disaster and said the United States and Britain agreed to supply logistical support for evacuation of villagers and "appropriate types of equipment." France offered unspecified help.

Foreign technicians and equipment were expected to "get into effective rescue operations" by today, Sunday's communique said.

Weiner said the Israeli team would try to set up a base outside the contaminated area and treat casualties as they were brought out.

Peres, interviewed during the nine-hour trip from Israel, said that when he offered to bring a medical team and supplies, Biya "was very excited and appreciative."

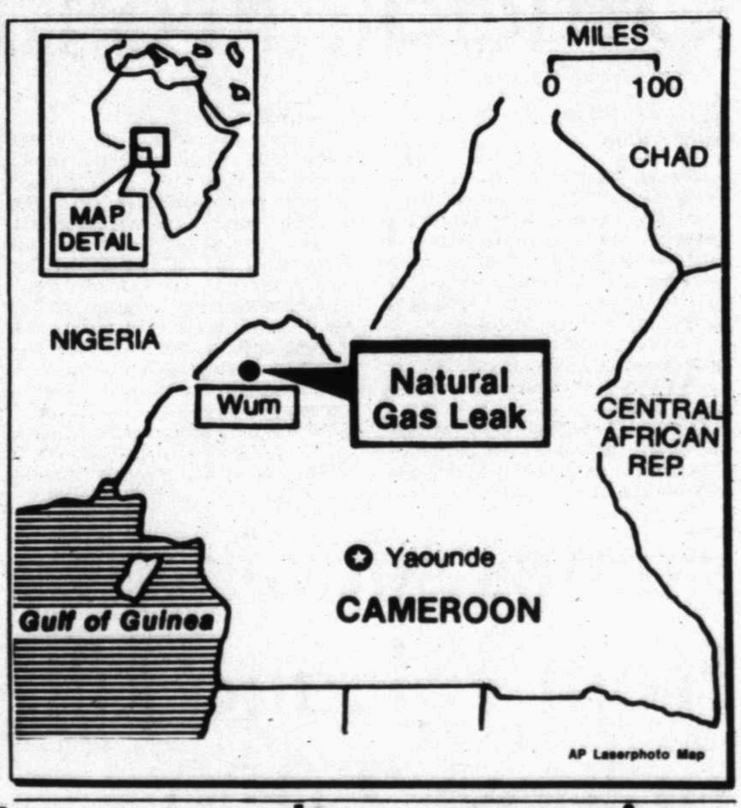

Peres was expected to announce a resumption of diplomatic relations between the two countries during his four-day state visit to this tropical country.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said Sunday, "We are prepared to provide assistance to the government of Cameroon based on what we've seen from press reports. The Cameroon government will be assessing the damage, and at that point we'll know what the needs are."

Cameroon is an oil-producing nation the size of California with natural gas reserves estimated at 3.5 trillion cubic feet. It has a population of 9.2 million, including the members of 24 tribes who predominately work in agriculture.

Biya visited Bamenda, 30 miles south of Wum, to oversee rescue operations, and returned to Yaounde late Sunday, the communique said. State-run radio said his trip was to show solidarity with the "disaster-stricken population."

The communique said government relief teams of doctors and specialists were rushed to the region, but a later report monitored in Ivory Coast said the teams had not been able to reach the site because they lacked proper equipment to deal with the fumes.

Reputed mob boss has media attention

John Gotti

NEW YORK (AP) — Reputed mob boss John Gotti made news on the first day of jury selection at his federal racketeering trial just by walking into the courtroom without a tie.

Gotti, who has been jailed since May as a potential threat to witnesses, attracted six courtroom artists and twice as many reporters who wanted to capture the moment the man newspapers dubbed "The Dapper Don" entered the room.

Authorities say Gotti, 45, heads the Gambino organized crime family, the nation's most powerful Mafia group. He and six co-defendants are charged with racketeering and conspiracy for an alleged 18-year series of crimes, including gambling, loan sharking, armored car robberies and murder.

But it is Gotti's singular style and strange events befalling some who cross his path that have kept him in the headlines since December.

His dapper reputation developed before his trial was interrupted last April and his $1 million bail revoked. The trial resumed a week ago and jury selection was scheduled to continue today.

Before his bail was revoked Gotti, usually wearing expensive double-breasted suits, arrived at court each day in a black Mercedes or stretch limousine accompanied by beefy bodyguards.

He didn't hide his face from waiting photographers.

Since January, two witnesses against Gotti have disappeared. His alleged second-in-command was killed in a car bombing. Federal officials say he rose to the Gambino leadership by plotting the murder of his predecessor, Paul Castellano, who was gunned down on a busy Manhattan street.

Gotti was little known when he was indicted in 1985. The lead defendant in the case was Aniello Dellacroce, the ailing alleged underboss of the Gambino group who informants said was Gotti's mentor.

On Dec. 2, Dellacroce died of natural causes at age 72.

Two weeks later, Castellano and an aide were shot dead.

At Gotti's bail hearing, an FBI agent testified that informants said Gotti had plotted Castellano's slaying to prevent him from killing one of Gotti's close friends, Angelo Ruggiero, who has been indicted on racketeering and drug trafficking charges in separate cases.

After Castellano's death, law enforcement sources said they believed Gotti was the new Gambino boss.

Soon, everything that could be learned about Gotti was reported.

He grew up in Brooklyn without finishing high school and had several encounters with the law. He served two years in prison for a 1975 attempted manslaughter conviction in connection with the fatal barroom shooting of a reputed hoodlum.

Gotti lived with his wife, Victoria, in a modest, two-story home in Queens near Kennedy Airport. The couple had five children: three boys and two girls.

In 1979, Gotti's 12-year-old son, Frank, was struck and killed by a neighbor's car. A few months later, witnesses told police they saw several men forcing the neighbor into a car. His whereabouts remain unknown.

In March, prosecutors revealed that William Battista, an FBI informant who was expected to testify against Gotti, disappeared. Prosecutors said he vanished from an FBI safehouse in January and remains missing.

That month, Gotti and another man went on trial for an alleged robbery-assault stemming from a parking dispute. The man who brought the charges vanished for several days. When he was brought to court, he said he couldn't identify his assailants. Charges were dismissed.

U.S. District Judge Eugene Nickerson, who is presiding at Gotti's trial, was forced to delay the case after three fruitless weeks of jury selection last April.

Jurors who had heard little or nothing of Gotti were hard to come by, especially after the April 13 car-bombing death of Frank DeCicco, Gotti's reputed underboss.

Lawyer not taking money made on Delta settlement

MIAMI (AP) — While some who brought suits in the Delta Air Lines crash in Dallas are paying up to 40 percent of their settlements to their lawyers, the survivors of a Broward County woman are among those keeping all of theirs.

Gene Steele, a former United Airlines pilot and litigation attorney for the Federal Aviation Administration, offered his services to crash victims' survivors because he was dismayed with lawyers who rushed to Dallas after the crash to solicit cases.

The Aug. 2, 1985 crash of Flight 191 claimed 137 lives.

"It was a disgrace and there didn't seem to be any way to stop it other than to offer free services," Steele said of lawyers who eagerly sought crash clients they charge stiff fees.

Steele said his clients have all been grateful.

"One fellow keeps telling me, 'I've got to give you something. I feel strange accepting your services.' "

So far, Steel has settled Delta crash settlements worth about $5 million in two cases, he said. He still has $10 million in claims outstanding in five cases.

The family of Kathleen Wright, who died from her crash injuries, will receive $1 million in an out-of-court settlement with Delta reached Friday, said Steele.

Mrs. Wright was a former Broward County School board member. Her husband, Broward County Court Judge Zebedee Wright, and their three children, will receive the money in about two weeks, according to the settlement.

"Judge Wright said when he was in the hospital, lawyers were coming over to him trying to sign him up," Steele said.

The National Transportation Safety Board has said the Delta crash was caused by the flight crew's decision to fly under a thunderstorm containing a powerful windshear and a lack of adequate pilot training and airport weather information to deal with it.

ESCAPEES

Weeks was already serving a 99-year sentence for armed robbery in the September 1982 robbery of a Bank of Commerce branch in Shreveport when, in April 1985, he pleaded guilty to second-degree murder in the Christmas 1981 contract slaying of Army Sgt. Maj. Hubert Ester.

Weeks escaped in June 1982 and again in August 1983 while in the custody of Ouachita Parish authorities in Monroe. After his second escape, he was captured in September 1983 in Austin, Texas, authorities said.

The third inmate, Robert Downs, 50, of Kansas City, was serving 198 years for armed robbery and being a habitual criminal. He was imprisoned in 1985.

Blackburn said he doesn't believe Downs made it across the river because only two sets of tracks were found on the opposite bank. Authorities had no information on his whereabouts.

FRONTIER

Though the plane was scheduled to leave at 6:40 a.m., those waiting to board saw pilots and other airplane personnel get on the plane early and leave without them — rendering the would-be flyers earthbound holders of voided tickets, White said.

He said Sunday morning's stranded passengers were assisted by Southwest and American personnel as best as could be expected.

"By the afternoon, most people who had Frontier tickets had heard about the shut down, but those people who'd come in the morning were mad and frustrated as they saw their plane take off without them only to find there were no Frontier personnel to help them.

"Southwest and American didn't honor Frontier tickets except in unique situations Sunday morning, but did try to book them on different flights providing customers could pay for the new tickets," White said.

BUDGET

He said the proposals included renewing a push for the balanced budget amendment, creating a separate capital budget for construction projects and eliminating trust fund receipts — such as for Social Security and unemployment benefits — from the general U.S. treasury.

Another possibility would be creating a two-year budget cycle instead of the current single-year system, Regan said.

Congress has consistently rejected Reagan's pressure for a line item veto — which would give the president authority to veto special items in spending bills. Under the Constitution the president is only allowed to veto entire bills.

Regan said the president's push for budget reform was expected to take second place, however, to his anti-drug effort.

"The analogy will be...drugs will be what tax reform was to the first two years. That will be the major item, with other important ones under it, including budget," Regan said.

The White House has been considering proposals for mandating drug testing of federal employees in sensitive positions, and encouraging other employees to undergo testing. But no proposals have been approved by the president's domestic policy council or gone to the president as yet.

Regan, on the subject of South Africa, said the administration "will be announcing an ambassador shortly, we hope."

Although he refused to comment further on a possible nominee, Regan said the administration had sought a black nominee in the past "because a black American who understands both sides of a terribly complex issue could build bridges better than someone who does not understand it."

The chief of staff argued that many prominent black American leaders have traveled to South Africa and gained an understanding of the problems there.

"A black American might be able to further the process better there than a white American," Regan said.

He said the administration's goal is to get both black and whites to enter negotiations to settle their disputes. The imposition of economic sanctions would not advance that process, he said.

Another Texas inmate faces death Tuesday

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Chester Lee Wicker, convicted of abducting a Beaumont woman, trying to rape her and then burying her alive on a beach, could be the third Texas inmate within a week to be executed if his appeals fail today.

Wicker, who turns 38 Thursday, faced lethal injection before dawn Tuesday for the August 1980 slaying of Suzanne Knuth.

The 22-year-old woman was abducted from a shopping center while walking home after her car had broken down. Eighteen days after her disappearance, she was found face down in a shallow grave on a Bolivar Peninsula beach near Galveston.

Wicker awoke today at 2:30 a.m. for a breakfast of creamed beef, eggs, cream of wheat and rolls, prison officials said. Later, he visited with a prison chaplain, his mother, grandfather and a friend. His mood was described as very calm.

"That fellow is guilty as hell," said James Hury, who prosecuted the case. "He went and knowingly and willingly took that woman out of Beaumont and did horrible things to her and buried her. You don't bury somebody who you think is still alive. You don't bury somebody if you hope somebody can find them and give them a decent burial."

Wicker's execution would come seven days after Randy Woolls was executed for killing a drive-in movie cashier and four days after Larry Smith was put to death for killing a Dallas convenience store worker.

He would be the eighth Texas inmate to die this year and the 18th, more than any other state, since Texas resumed the death penalty in 1982. Nationally, he would be the 65th to die since the Supreme Court allowed the death penalty to resume in 1976.

Wicker, whose record includes convictions for rape, aggravated assault on a female and auto theft, has won two previous stays of execution.

On Saturday, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans rejected his request for a reprieve, sending the case to the Supreme Court.

Bruce Griffiths, an American Civil Liberties Union attorney handling Wicker's case, said the appeal contends the death sentence in Texas is not applied equally on the basis of race.

Specifically, someone convicted of killing a white person is more likely to be sentenced to death, he said. Attorneys also are challenging the legality of confessions Wicker made to police.

State District Judge Larry Gist, who presided over Wicker's trial and set the Tuesday execution date, said the issue of the confession already was rejected on direct appeal. The question of race never was a factor in the case, he added. Wicker is white, as was Mrs. Knuth.

"In this case, Wicker had availed himself to every conceivable legal avenue to seek relief and was represented at all times by very competent lawyers," Gist said. "No court anywhere has ever found any merit in any of the contentions.

"I personally believe in making sure we've done the right thing. In this case, there comes a time when reviews have been so extensive there shouldn't be any more. The punishment should be carried out. It's appropriate in this instance."

Wicker, a Los Angeles native who had lived most of his life around Galveston, was arrested in Houston as he got off a bus from California. Family members who knew he was being sought tipped police to his arrival, Hury said.

"Police put him in a car, questioned him on the way down and he made all kinds of statements implicating himself," said Robert Coltzer, his court-appointed trial attorney.

Wicker, a ninth-grade dropout who served two years in the Marines in the mid-1960s, has refused repeated requests for interviews. Coltzer described him as a cooperative client, and Gist said Wicker was well-behaved in the courtroom.

A psychiatrist who interviewed him testified that Wicker had been involved with drugs for several years and had been collecting pornography since he was 13.

"He tended to spend a lot of time daydreaming and fantasizing about sexual activity," psychiatrist Edward Gripon testified.

Death row inmates described him as a loner.

"He's a real quiet type — real weird," inmate Wayne East said.

Frontier travelers stranded without warning

GRAPEVINE (AP) — William and Joyce Helland counted on being greeted by a smiling Frontier Airlines ticket agent when they reached Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport for a flight home.

But instead, they were met by a white posterboard sign that read, "Frontier Airlines has ceased operations. Contact other airlines for transportation."

Frontier, owned by People Express, shut down operations early Sunday morning because of financial difficulties. The only warning for many travelers were the signs at the airport.

The Helland family, of Minot, N.D., planned to take an 11:10 a.m. flight back home when they found the Frontier ticket counters closed.

"They stranded us," said Mrs. Helland, who was taking her first flight.

After scrambling around the airport trying to find other airlines to accommodate them, the Hellands discovered that only Republic Airlines and "what used to be Frontier" fly to their hometown.

The trip home would cost them $240 each, but they only had enough cash for one ticket.

"We have people on the other end trying to get money. As it is, if we get the other tickets bought up there, it will be 11 (p.m.) or so before we get there," Helland said.

"They told us it (the possibility of a shutdown) had been in the news, but I didn't think we missed the news that much. We always had the car radio on," Mrs. Helland said. "It's a helpless feeling."

Continental, United and Braniff airlines honored Frontier tickets on a stand-by basis, while American Airlines said it would accept Frontier-issued tickets if they were purchased before Sunday and included travel on American.

American also said it would honor tickets including travel on Frontier that were issued by other airlines.

Continental ticket agent Bob Bennett said at least 25 people had traded their tickets by late morning.

"They're irritated as well as we are," Bennett said.

People Express was not honoring the tickets, and ticket agents for the carrier would not comment.

For about two hours, three women on a jaunt to Las Vegas went from airline to airline trying to reschedule their flight.

"I'm glad we came to the airport early," said Melba Slack of Springfield, La. "We were planning on talking and drinking coffee. Instead we're doing this."

They had reservations with a tour group which uses Frontier gates for their charter flights. At 1 p.m., the tour group set up a makeshift ticket counter and continued its operation.

Bill Hale of Denver planned on catching a 10:30 a.m. Frontier flight to Kansas City where he was meeting a private plane.

"I don't have time to wait through lines," Hale said as he thumbed through the yellow pages at a pay telephone. "I don't have time even to ask if they'll honor the ticket.

"It's added an interesting dimension to a morning that wasn't."

Western Playland continues family tradition

By DOUG DesGEORGES

EL PASO (AP) — Robert and Alicia Hughes and their children stood in line outside Western Playland recently, waiting for the gates to open.

For Mrs. Hughes, the wait continued a pattern that started when she was young. Her parents brought her to the park.

To Western Playland owner Chris Hines, it's that family tradition that keeps Western Playland going 26 years after it opened and in the face of increased competition for El Paso's recreation dollars.

And that tradition brings people to Western Playland in spite of its Ascarate Park location. Over the years, the park has gained a bad reputation that wasn't helped when two men were killed in the park last April.

Hines said Ascarate's problems aren't Western Playland's.

"We know what's going on in our park," he said. "People who've been here for a long time know the difference. It's the newcomers who hear about Ascarate Park and don't come here."

Robert Hughes agreed.

"This is nice," he said of Western Playland. "It's clean and no one bothers you here."

Hines said that leads many parents to use Western Playland as a surrogate baby sitter Friday nights.

"Parents come here, drop their kids off and go out for supper," he said. "That's a big compliment to us. They know their kids will have fun and be safe."

Western Playland owner Chris Hines poses with the amusement park's merry-go-round in El Paso. Hines said no one has been seriously injured at Western Playland, but added that his insurance premium this year is "ridiculous."

Hines said Ascarate's problems are the same as those of other parks.

"Parks in general have a bad reputation," he said. "I don't know who decided that parks aren't important, but the (city and county) budgets show somebody did."

Not everything is going great. Hines said his revenues increase about 10 percent a year, but his liability insurance premiums are increasing dramatically as well. As part of a state law Hines helped pass, amusement parks have to carry $1 million in liability insurance.

Hines said no one has been injured seriously at Western Playland, but added his premiums this year are "ridiculous." Eventually, Hines said, insurance premiums will become a large factor in Western Playland's prices.

In the meantime, Western Playland has a year-round maintenance program that Hines said keeps his premiums lower than they would be otherwise. The maintenance pays off in other ways.

"See this carousel," he said. "It cost us $16,000 in 1960. Today, it goes for $125,000."

Hines then moved to the park's biggest attraction — a miniature train that circles the park.

"I don't know what it is about this train," he said. "But it's the most popular thing here. If I had a dollar for everyone who's ridden this train, I'd walk away from the park right now. I wouldn't need to work."

Designer drug Eve 'no different than cocaine,' doctor says

DALLAS (AP) — The designer drug Eve is becoming more popular in North Texas, with many users professional, full-time workers who should know better than to try the substance, officials said.

A growing of number of young adults and teen-agers are using Eve, a methamphetamine-based drug that quickly replaced its predecessor, Ecstasy, after that drug was outlawed in July 1985, said authorities.

"For the individual user, (Eve) is no different than cocaine," said Dr. Bradford Goff, a psychiatrist and medical director at Brookhaven Hospital. "It's potential dynamite."

Goff treats drug and alcohol abuse patients. He said Eve releases chemicals in the brain that produce euphoria and this alteration of the brain's natural chemicals can cause changes in the central nervous system.

He said those changes can lead to addiction or cause long-term brain damage.

"There is a potential to escalate use," he said.

Girl's killing apparently spur of moment, police say

WATAUGA (AP) — The slaying of a 5-year-old girl, whose strangled body was found next to a furniture store's Dumpster, apparently happened on the spur of the moment after something angered her killer, police say.

A 20-year-old neighbor, Vicki Lynn Kirkpatrick, was arrested early Sunday and held without bond on an investigative charge of murder in connection with the slaying of Renee Greer, police said.

"It's not something (the killer) planned for a long time," said Hurst police investi ator Steve Moore, who added that fo.mal charges are pending. "That's all I can say about it now."

Ms. Kirkpatrick was arrested after authorities questioned her for about 1½ hours at her home across the street from Renee's, police said.

Moore said he knew of no problems between Ms. Kirkpatrick and Renee's family. Although Ms. Kirkpatrick had babysat for other neighborhood children, she never kept Renee.

The arrest came about 11 hours after Renee's body was discovered among some discarded boxes near a Dumpster in Hurst, about 10 miles from her home in this Fort Worth suburban city.

The child was last seen shortly after 6 p.m. Friday at Ms. Kirkpatrick's home, where she had been playing with Ms. Kirkpatrick's nieces, neighbors and police said.

Tarrant County Medical Examiner Nizam Peerwani ruled Sunday after completing an autopsy that Renee died of strangulation.

An off-duty Hurst police officer reported Saturday that he saw a 1973 Buick believed to be Ms. Kirkpatrick's driving around the parking lot Friday night at the Hurst furniture store, Moore said.

The off-duty officer also saw the car back up to the Dumpster where Renee's body was found, Moore told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

The Greer family had no comment, said Karen Golder, a family friend who fielded reporters' questions Sunday at the home of Renee's parents, Michael and Cheryl Greer.

"They're leaving it to the police," Golder said.

A 22-hour search ended Saturday afternoon when Renee's body was found behind the trash bin.

Two women looking for boxes in a Dumpster discovered the girl's body about 1:45 p.m. Saturday. She was fully clothed — still wearing the purple shorts and flowered shirt she had on when she disappeared — with no visible marks on her body, police said.

Omega House will serve patients dying of AIDS

HOUSTON (AP) — The duplex features standard home fare — a floral couch, plants, whitewashed bookshelves, wooden tables and chairs.

Only the hospital beds and a wheelchair tip off visitors to what the grandmotherly founder says is the second hospice in the country to admit only dying AIDS patients.

"We want it to be homey, you see," explains Eleanor Munger, who turns 75 this week. She proudly gave a tour of the six-room home in a tree-lined residential Montrose neighborhood during an open house Sunday.

The hospice, called Omega House, will provide medical, spiritual and psychological care for homeless victims in the terminal stages of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, she says.

An average of 15 to 20 AIDS patients in the Houston area need hospice care but can't afford it because the illness has cost them their jobs and depleted their savings, administrator Ken Durham says.

Omega House will take in patients regardless of ability to pay, and will start with three beds and expand to 10 when she and others raise more money, Ms. Munger says.

"We have a religious instruction to care for the sick and castoffs," executive director Michael Shuff says. He calls AIDs patients "20th century lepers."

Omega House will get its first two patients within a week. One man will have a companion care for him in one bedroom, Ms. Munger says.

"The lover needs to work in the daytime but he wants to care for the patient at night," she says.

Dr. Robert Awe, who treats many AIDS patients as chief of pulmonary medicine at Jefferson Davis Hospital, will serve as Omega House's staff physician and will direct a volunteer staff that includes four other doctors.

About 16 volunteers will provide nursing and other patient care, Ms. Munger says, adding that she knows of only one other hospice caring solely for AIDS patients — the home Mother Theresa started in New York.

She says she decided to open the house when she visited AIDs patients at a hospital as a volunteer and heard many of them lament that they couldn't die at home.

"I felt called to do something instead of of sitting still and wringing my hands," she says.

The grandmother of two who taught at a Montessori preschool until she retired last year says she does not fear caring for AIDS patients.

"There's nothing to be afraid of," she says.

Frances Carnes, a volunteer, says the hepatitis she caught twice is more contagious.

Everyone involved is determined to make the hospice succeed.

FBI: Spy developed contact legally

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1983, a Soviet employee of the United Nations befriended a college student, but the relationship did not become illegal until three years later with an exchange of classified information, the FBI says.

The charges against Gennadiy Fedorovich Zakharov after his arrest on a subway platform Saturday night illustrate how the Soviets often maintain legal contacts with Americans before pumping them for secrets, the FBI says.

"The Soviets and their surrogates have an insatiable appetite for our scientific, technical defense information," Lane Bonner, spokesman for the FBI in Washington, said Sunday night. "Academic contacts are not unusual. Often, they are not outside the law."

The unidentified Queens College computer science student notified the FBI as soon as Zakharov approached him, authorities said.

Zakharov, who authorities said does not have diplomatic immunity, could be sentenced to life in prison if convicted on espionage charges. He's scheduled to be arraigned today in federal court.

Zakharov, assigned to the United Nations Center for Science and Technology for Development, told the student he needed assistance in obtaining material on robotics and computer technology and for two years paid him thousands of dollars for unclassified information stolen from libraries and other sources, the FBI said.

NATION

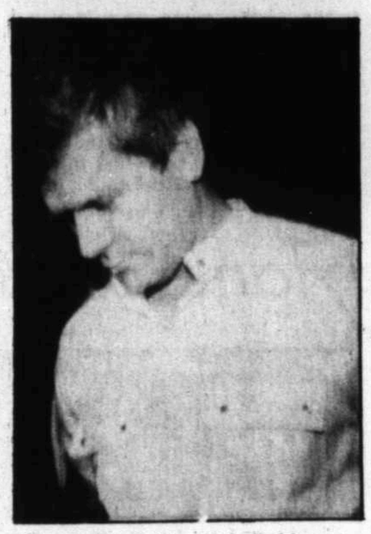

After the student, a U.S. permanent resident, graduated, he went to work in September 1985 for a New York firm that is a subcontractor for defense contractors Bendix and General Electric, something Zakharov allegedly had encouraged him to do.

The company manufactures unclassified precision components for military aircraft engines and radars.

On May 10, Zakharov offered his contact a 10-year contract that called for obtaining classified information that could not be obtained by a citizen of the Soviet Union, the FBI said. The informant signed the contract.

"Zakharov allegedly advised this individual that he should not be motivated solely by money but should feel rewarded when he and Zakharov were able to hurt the United States," FBI Director William Webster said in a statement.

Earlier this month, Zakharov asked for some classified material and gave his contact $1,000 for three documents, including material about an Air Force jet, the FBI said.

Gennadiy Fedorovich Zakharov

Before Zakharov could get a good look at the material, three special agents moved in.

"He had to be forcibly wrestled to the ground and handcuffed," FBI Assistant Director John L. Hogan said Saturday at a news conference in New York.

A man who identified himself Sunday as the officer on duty at the Soviet Embassy in Washington said no officials would be available to comment on the case until today.

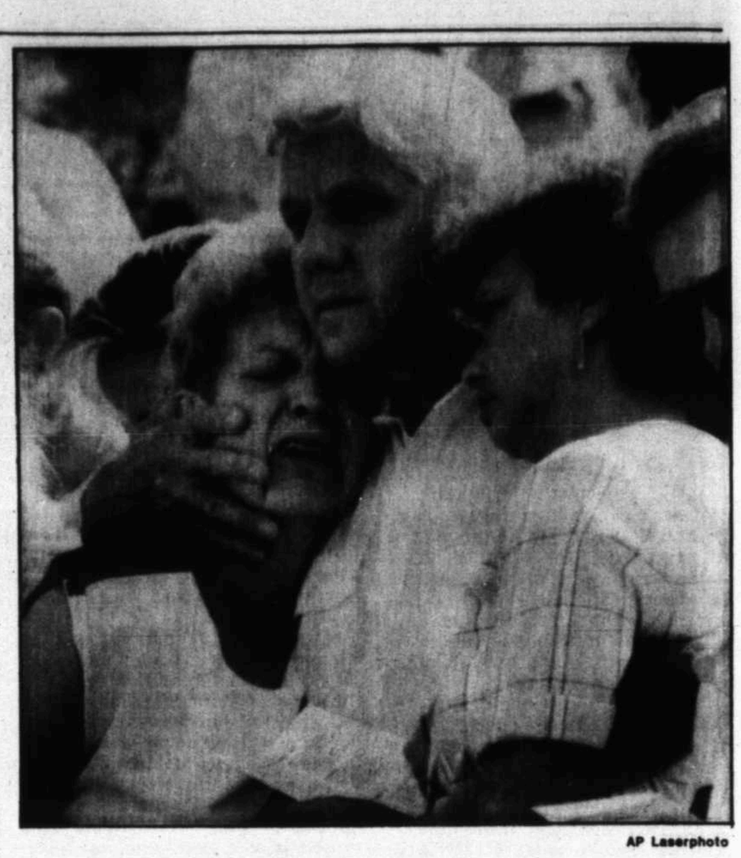

A man who answered the telephone Sunday at the Soviet Union's U.N. mission in New York and identified himself as a diplomat on duty said there was no one who could comment.

State Department spokesman Anita Stockman said Sunday the department would have no comment on the matter.

Because Zakharov worked for the United Nations, "He was not supposed to show any specific loyalty but here again he was spying for Mother Russia," Hogan said.

Last year, President Reagan called the Soviet delegation to the United Nations a "spy nest," and in March of this year, the United States ordered the Soviet Union to reduce the size of its missions at the United Nations from 279 to 170 by April 1988. The cuts are to begin Oct. 1.

Bonner estimated Sunday night that about one third of all Soviets in the United States "have intelligence-gathering reponsibilities."

What happened to summer doldrums?

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Whatever happened to the summer doldrums?

"It should be quiet, but it isn't," said Charlie McDoldrum, an expert on the lack of activity that overcomes the nation's capital every August.

This is the month when everybody in Washington is someplace else getting away from it all. The president is on his ranch exercising his cutting axe on dead trees; Congress, having temporarily run out of words, is out of town finding new ones; nothing is stirring, not even the House.

McDoldrum, an imaginary being who reappears Brigadoon-like every August when a journalist's mind turns to finding news in a vacuum, ticked off some of the activity that has disturbed the serenity. There was that tax revision frenzy that churned up half the month and still hasn't died off. There was that eerie groan coming from the big, marble monuments to bureaucracy all over town when the Gramm-Rudman budget cutting effects were calculated.

August should be the month in which government takes a breather from the rest of the year, when the bureaucratic pulse slows to comatose.

It's generally a time when no one gets into a sweat over the composite index of leading, coincident and lagging economic indicators, the gross national product, the consumer price index, or capacity utilization. It's a time when one is challenged by whether the surf is up, not the monthly deficit.

Instead, McDoldrum pointed out, "this year we have had to worry about South Africa and sanctions, drought, hurricane, Nicaragua, the space shuttle, the Rehnquist-Scalia nominations, Nancy's maid and the impeachment of Judge Harry Claiborne. Even politics didn't take the vacation it's supposed to. We had the Michigan mishmash and the Southern primary, for crying out loud.

"Then there are the baby strikes at the Baby Bell telephone companies and USX, which we wouldn't get upset about except that news accounts remind us that it was formerly U.S. Steel, the activity over getting another Reagan-Gorbachev summit, the fallout from the Chernobyl fallout, the grain sale to Russia."

McDoldrum blames the Republicans, although he conceded the activity-in-August might have something to do with cycles, perhaps like a seven-year itch.

There is an argument to be made for both theories on why the august August law of doldrums has been defiled.

Supporting the seven-year twitch theory, the record shows that in August 1979, a year of high doldrums, during the last Democratic presidency, there was so little doing in the capital that Jimmy Carter's train trip from Baltimore to Washington — to show support for the transportation system — made headlines.

Seven years earlier, Republican Richard Nixon did what every smart president does in August, he left Washington but took his office along, calling it the Western White House so he could make news elsewhere without disturbing the capital's somnolence. "The White House is where the president is," is how he explained his "working vacations."

McDoldrum, who works for a Virginia newspaper, glumly admitted that the only classic doldrum-type story coming out of Washington this August was the reopening of the venerable old Willard Hotel after eight years.

Every news account was obliged to mention that it had in the past been the temporary residence of opera singer Jenny Lind, circus midget Tom Thumb, Buffalo Bill Cody, Victor Herbert, Walt Whitman and presidents starting with Franklin Pierce in 1853. Abe Lincoln stayed there on inauguration eve when suites went for $4 a night and now the cheapest single is $160.

Memorial service held in Edmond stadium for slain postal workers

EDMOND, Okla. (AP) — Thousands of people tearfully said farewell to 14 post office employees gunned down by a co-worker before he committed suicide, and the community's mayor says it's time to get on with living.

"A new chapter starts tomorrow," Mayor Carl Reherman said Sunday night, after a ceremony attended by 3,500 residents at Central State University's football stadium.

"It's time to put everybody back in order," Reherman said. "We've just got to step forward, although there will always be people who never are able to cope" with the carnage Wednesday.

"The best support is to get back to a stable environment.That's not to say we have forgotten the victims, or ever will," he said.

Earlier Sunday, the cremated remains of Patrick Henry Sherrill, who police said killed 14 fellow employees and wounded six others before committing suicide, was buried in a family plot in his hometown of Watonga.

The private service was attended by 25 friends and relatives.

The final burial, for Betty Ann Jarred, 34, was scheduled today in Guthrie.

Gov. George Nigh joined Postmaster General Robert Preston Tisch and Reherman at the stadium for the 50-minute memorial service.

Fourteen rows of bleachers were left empty in memory of those killed.

"The empty seats behind the families represent the empty feelings we feel today in this community," Nigh said. "The fullness of the crowd represents the fullness of our love for you."

Nigh, who had declared Sunday a day of mourning, called Edmond "the heartland of America, because millions of people across America are trying to share their hearts with you this day."

Tisch announced that at 4 p.m. today a moment of silence would be observed at 40,000 post offices nationwide. Flags, which have been flying at half-staff since Wednesday, would then be raised.

At the memorial service, dozens of floral arrangements were placed on a grassy slope on one side of the football field, and a postal jeep was parked near the stage.

"I've cried for those I miss and for those I love," said Michael Bigler, who was among those wounded. "I love you. God loves you."

At a cemetery outside Watonga, the small urn containing Sherrill's ashes was draped with flowers. Included was one bouquet from letter carriers in Irving, Texas, with a card that read: "To those who understand what he went through as a carrier. No one will ever know how far he was pushed to do what he did."

That apparently referred to reports that supervisors had threatened Sherrill with dismissal if his work did not improve. Postal Service officials have denied supervisors threatened to fire Sherrill, who worked at the Edmond Post Office for about 1½ years.

Police have speculated that Sherrill, a 44-year-old marksman with the Oklahoma National Guard, was angry over a reprimand, which came the day before he entered the post office carrying a pistol in one hand, with two others in his mail bag.

A U.S. Air Force spokesman, meanwhile, said today that Sherrill was among more than 100 members of the National Guard who spent two weeks this summer training at a Royal Air Force Base in Britain. During that time, he trained soldiers to use the M-16 rifle, said public affairs officer Geoffrey Halik.

Kenneth Russworm, owner of the Russworm Funeral Home, which handled Sherrill's service, said relatives at the service included his sister, Jo Ann Buswell of Edmond, a niece and two nephews, one of whom read a brief eulogy. Reporters were kept at a distance.

Mrs. Buswell has refused to talk with reporters.

The service, which included no clergy, lasted only about two minutes. Relatives and friends stayed for about five minutes, exchanging hand shakes and hugs.

Lutheran conventions to vote on merger issue

MILWAUKEE (AP) — After years of exhaustive negotiations involving hundreds of participants, some still oppose the merger of three Lutheran bodies into the nation's fourth-largest Protestant denomination.

But even they say that the churches' conventions, meeting this week in Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Chicago, are almost certain to tie the knot and become a church of 5.3 million members in 11,000 congregations nationwide.

The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America would be smaller than only the Southern Baptists, United Methodists and the National Baptist Convention.

"I think it will go — I'm not doubting that," said the Rev. Duane Lindberg of Waterloo, Iowa, leader of the Committee for Lutheran Cooperation, which has criticized plans for the merger.

Lindberg added, however, that he expects some congregations will break away from the new body. But he said there was no way of knowing how many would leave.

The 2.3 million-member American Lutheran Church, of which Lindberg is a member, began its meeting in Minneapolis on Saturday.

The 2.9 million-member Lutheran Church in America, was to open its convention today in Milwaukee, and the Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches, with 110,000 members, meets Tuesday in Chicago.

Each plans to debate the merger later in the week, with a vote scheduled Thursday. Results will be announced Friday.

Polls have indicated enormous support for the proposal among congregants. After halting efforts at unification during the 1970s, a 70-member commission was appointed in 1982 to press ahead with the merger.

Some matters, including the size of contributions to ministers' pension funds and racial and ethnic quotas for the church's decision-making groups, remain controversial and are expected to fuel debate this week.

Among other things, Lindberg objects to rules that would make it tougher for some congregations to leave the church than for others, and rules regarding congregational control of property.

If these issues were resolved to his satisfaction, Lindberg said, he would probably favor merger. He does not expect that to happen and said he'll probably press his arguments against merger.

The approval of the conventions would not complete the merger. Two-thirds of American Lutheran Church congregations must approve the agreement along with a special convention of Lutheran Church in America.

Then, next spring, the denominations would hold their own closing conventions and a constituting convention for the new church, which would begin functioning on Jan. 1, 1988. It would be headquartered in Chicago.

Game requires players to face moral dilemmas

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Your wife has been spotted at local restaurants with another man. Will you confront her?

Your ill, elderly mother asks you to turn down an excellent job offer 500 miles away. Will you move anyway?

Your boyfriend has no religious faith, but you do. Will you marry him?

A Grand Rapids company is marketing a religious game that presents players with these and 257 other moral dilemmas. Will consumers buy it?

"Absolutely," says Randy Scott, president of Rainfall Toys Inc., a three-year-old company specializing in religious games and toys.

"There's much more of an awareness of ethics right now, and this game really creates the environment to pose the moral dilemmas that people struggle with," he said.

The $14.99 game, called "Choices," includes question-and-answer cards and requires players to support their answers with Biblical references. It also encourages them to debate the answers.

Players can thumb through a Bible or refer to a sheet that provides parts of Scriptures relevant to the situations outlined in the cards.

Joyce Farrell, who devised the game with fellow New Jersey resident Freda Oelbaum, said, "We knew there was a hue and cry to return to traditional values. We knew the climate was right for this," she said.

Questions deal with such weighty subjects as abortion, homosexuality and drugs. Mrs. Farrell says the game may make it easier for families to talk about sensitive topics.

Airline passengers formed long lines at the United and Continental ticket counters at Denver's Stapleton International Airport Sunday after it was announced Frontier Airlines had shut down operations. Frontier normally carries 17,000 passengers on 325 flights per day, about 6,000 of them out of Stapleton on 110 flights per day.

Passengers angered, surprised by Frontier ceasing operations

Associated Press

Hand-written signs appeared at airports throughout the West, reading, "Frontier Airlines has ceased operations. Please contact other airlines for alternate service."

The signs and vacant Frontier ticket counters were greeted with dismay, bewilderment, anger and sarcasm Sunday by thousands of passengers, who were forced to look for seats on other carriers after Frontier announced it had shut down.

Frontier normally carries 17,000 passengers on 325 flights per day, and on Sunday those travelers suddenly found themselves with no way to get where they were going.

Near-pandemonium reigned at Stapleton International Airport in Denver, Frontier's main hub. About 6,000 people flew Frontier out of Stapleton on 110 flights per day.

Short-tempered travelers milled in front of the empty Frontier ticket counter shouting questions at a People Express representative, who kept repeating that Frontier was closed for business.

Lines more than 100 people long quickly formed at Continental and United outlets. Those airlines, scrambling for the Frontier market, announced they would honor Frontier tickets on a standby basis.

Many passengers were surprised by Frontier's shutdown, despite warnings late last week that the airline was contemplating such a move.

Some said they were reassured by Frontier ticket agents on Saturday that the airline would be operating Sunday.

John Chisholm, who was going home to San Diego, said, "It's kind of crazy. I have a friend who works at Frontier and he said I was safe until Monday. I was supposed to leave at 8:30 a.m., but now we'll be lucky to leave at all today."

Donna Steiger, who was hoping to fly to Sioux Falls, S.D., said, "I'd like to find a Frontier employee — any Frontier employee — and strangle them."

Diokhane Bara of Dakar, Senegal, was caught at Stapleton trying to catch a Frontier connection to Vancouver, British Columbia. He had been in Denver only one day and had not formed a good impression. "I'm very surprised, very harassed. I purchased the ticket last night and they didn't say that I would have any problems."

Vita Willeke had planned to fly to Midland, Texas, on Sunday. She said relatives were waiting at the Midland airport to drive her home to Eldorado, Texas.

"I'm stunned, I guess. I called yesterday and the agent assured me the news media was wrong (about Frontier going out of business)," she said.

At the Kansas City International Airport, Theresa Miles, who purchased a ticket on Friday for a 4:26 p.m. Sunday flight to Denver, said, "It's been a real adventurous weekend." She, too, said she was given no indication that service would be disrupted when she bought her ticket.

"More than likely I'll have to wait until (Monday morning) to leave," Mrs. Miles said.

Journalist investigates KAL incident

Article says Soviets believed they were firing at U.S. spy plane

WASHINGTON (AP) — The downing of a South Korean airliner three years ago was a terrible mistake made by Soviet military officers who did not know they were firing at an unarmed civilian plane, journalist Seymour M. Hersh said today.

Nor was the intrusion into Soviet airspace by KAL Flight 007 a disguised U.S. spy mission or a deliberate provocation as the Soviets have suggested, Hersh said in a television interivew.

"They (the Russians) first spotted the plane and they shot it down always thinking it was an American military plane," Hersh said on NBC-TV's "Today" show.

Hersh said U.S. intelligence information backs the view that Soviet military officers believed they were firing at an American reconnaissance plane, possibly one which was operating in the area at the same time.

He said he gives U.S. officials "very, very poor marks" for rushing to judgment about the Soviet action on the basis of preliminary intelligence reports.

"They (U.S. officials) took incredible chances with very sensitive intelligence and I think they manipulated very much," he said.

In a magazine article, Hersh wrote that the president and other top officials "chose to look the other way when better information became available about the Soviet confusion with longstanding American reconnaissance missions."

"Those who ran the American government did not want to learn that the Soviets had been honestly confused and panic-stricken about the enemy intruder," he wrote.

The article, in the September issue of The Atlantic, will be part of Hersh's upcoming book on the incident in which 269 people died on Sept. 1, 1983.

State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said Sunday night the department would have no comment on Hersh's article. She said many of the points it raised had been addressed by U.S. officials in the past.

Hersh has been investigating the plane's downing for two years, and was invited to the Soviet Union in May 1984 to interview top Soviet military officials. Hersh received the Pulitzer Prize in 1970 for having exposed the My Lai massacre in Vietnam, and won a National Book Critics Circle award for his book on Henry Kissinger.

The story says the Korean Air Lines 747 was off course due to errors by the crew in programming the jetliner's computerized inertial navigation system, which controlled the automatic pilot.

In fact, the error that led eventually led to the plane's flight path over sensitive Soviet military installations occurred before the plane ever left the ground at Anchorage, Alaska, for its trip to Seoul. The flight engineer entered a single wrong digit into the computer, and the crew somehow failed to catch the error during the flight, according to Hersh.

The article notes that the plane was guided toward the flight path of an American RC-135 intelligence plane code-named Cobra Ball, which was in the air the night of Aug. 31 when Flight 007 left Alaska.

The spy plane operates out of a little-known Strategic Air Command base at Shemya, in the Aleutian archipelago of the North Pacific, and is used to monitor Soviet missile tests.

Hersh said the Soviets thought there were two U.S. planes flying together over that country's Kamchatka Peninsula.

"American technicians searched through thousands of feet of National Security Agency recordings and files to re-create, to the extent possible, the Soviet radar tracking of both Cobra Ball and Flight 007...and no such side-by-side flying was found," he wrote.

The author said the National Security Agency and the Electronic Security Command "have not been able to agree on whether the Soviet radio operators assumed that Flight 007 was the Cobra Ball re-entering radar coverage or a separate RC-135" flying another intelligence mission known as Rivet Joint.

"But neither disputes that the Soviet Air Defense Force was convinced that it was dealing with an American reconnaissance plane — one whose flight path, whether it was a Cobra Ball or a Rivet Joint mission, they knew all too well.

"The American reconnaissance plane, they assumed, would turn aside," Hersh wrote.

Instead, the aircraft continued to dart in and out of Soviet airspace toward even more sensitive military installations, the article said.

"The Sea of Okhotsk was not the place for a commercial passenger plane to have lost its way. The sea is the home waters of the Soviet Union's navy in the Far East...a refuge for ballistic-missile submarines capable of striking targets in the United States," Hersh wrote.

Governors don't take stand on tax overhaul plan

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — The nation's governors see the federal tax overhaul plan as a mixed bag, producing a windfall for most states while pressuring many states to lower their sales taxes.

At its meeting here, the National Governors' Association hasn't taken a position on the package, and may not do so, after hearing recommendations Sunday that it accept the bill rather than wage a fruitless fight against it.

"The vast majority of governors would like to keep the deduction (for sales taxes)," Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt said in an interview. "It's simply a recognition that every ox had to be gored, and that it's essentially over with now."

Fellow Democrat Gov. Richard Lamm of Colorado told the group's executive committee that he believed it should not oppose the legislation even though most goverors see the deduction change and restrictions on municipal bonds as unfair.

"I would say we should be very cautious and maybe simply go ahead and accept it, even though we know it's a mistake, because we may pay a heavier price for a vain attempt, a fruitless attempt, to stop this," he said.

He also said the bill achieves many of the tax-reform aims the governors have been supporting: lowered rates, reduced taxes for the poor, and a broader tax base.

The governors have opposed elimination of the sales-tax deduction, however, because they see it as reducing support for the levy and making it harder to increase local taxes. Sales taxes bring in one-third of state dollars, slightly more than the income tax.

Although House and Senate versions of the tax legislation would have kept part or all of the sales-tax deduction in the 45 states that levy such taxes, the final version that emerged last week from a conference committee would eliminate it.

An analysis by the governors' association said states could expect tax policy to shift in favor of taxes that are deductible, such as income and property taxes.

"Except for the five states that do not have a sales tax, all states lose," the report said. "Some states with a heavy reliance on sales taxes may have to enact or strengthen the income tax."

But because of other provisions, many states will get a windfall while their taxpayers face a tax increase.

The governors association said 35 states will receive a 2 percent to 5 percent increase in total state revenues. That comes because their income-tax laws are tied to the federal tax code. Broadening the federal tax base also will mean more money for those states to tax.

Eleven states — Alaska, Florida, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Washington and Wyoming — will see no change. Four — Nebraska, North Dakota, Rhode Island and Vermont — will see a net loss because of the way their taxes are based on federal tax liability.

U.S. archbishop defends Vatican's censure of Curran

WASHINGTON (AP) — A high Catholic official says the church must maintain a united front in its theological teachings, but a theologian who was censured for his views on sexual issues says the church must be aware of changing mores.

"In the matter of faith or morals, I would say that the individuals who profess to teach in the name of the church should adhere to the authentic teaching of the church," said Archbishop John P. Foley, president of the pontifical Commission on Social Communication. "They have a responsibilty to those whom they teach, to those who come to Catholic institutions seeking the authentic teaching of the church."

Foley, appearing Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," defended the censure of Charles Curran of Catholic University of America, saying that if commissioned Catholic theologians "publicly disagree and the church would do nothing...then individuals feel justified in doing in action what other individuals are free to teach."

But Curran, appearing on the same show, said church theology should not be written in stone. He said it was "very important for the church to have the role of theology as continually pushing, probing, asking questions, trying to relate the gospel of Jesus Christ to the world in which we live."

He said the Vatican decision to censure him for his views on sexual issues could scare talented teachers away from church schools.

"Unfortunately, the process might drive Catholic theologians out of Catholic institutions," the priest said.

The church revoked Curran's commission to teach at Catholic University, a Washington school with direct ties to the Vatican, because he had publicly dissented from its stand on abortion, artificial contraception and divorce.

NATION IN BRIEF

Poll shows Americans think taxes will either stay same or increase

NEW YORK (AP) — Washington politicians may be happy about passing the tax revision bill, but their constituents have told Newsweek pollsters they think their taxes either will stay the same or go up.

According to the Sept. 1 issue of the newsweekly, 29 percent believe their taxes will stay the same while 36 percent believe they will pay more.

Just 25 percent of those polled think the tax package will result in lower taxes for them, while 10 percent had no opinion.

The new tax bill itself, approved by a House-Senate conference committee last week, won the approval of 16 percent of those surveyed.

Of those asking if the new tax bill would make for a fairer distribution of the tax load, 33 percent said they thought the new taxes would be fairer. Those who thought it would not be much different accounted for 30 percent of those polled.

Twenty-seven percent thought the new measure would benefit the economy while 20 percent thought it would hurt.

The poll, taken by the Gallup Organization, surveyed 771 adults on Aug. 20 and 21. The margin of error is plus or minus four percentage points.

Ryan White allowed back in school

KOKOMO, Ind. (AP) — Ryan White, the 14-year-old AIDS victim who is entering high school after being barred from the classroom much of last year, will be treated like any other student, the principal said.

The organizer of a parents' group that fought to keep him out of class said no protests were planned for Ryan's return to school this morning.

"We're praying for a normal year. What the real outcome will be, I don't know," said Jeanne White, whose son enters eighth grade at the suburban Russiaville school. "I have a little fear, but I'm optimistic.

Western High School Principal Charles Wolf said White would be treated like his classmates. "He's going to be a regular student like everyone else," Wolf said. "We're trying to have school, and will have school as normal as possible."

Mitzi Johnson, organizer of Concerned Parents and Citizens of Western Middle School, where Ryan was enrolled last year, said, "We still don't agree he should be there. Obviously, there's nothing we can do."

Under-age driver hits pickup

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A car apparently driven by a 14-year-old boy and carrying five other younsters collided with a pickup truck and plunged into a water-filled hole, killing two boys and critically injuring two teenagers.

The legal age for driving in Nebraska is 16.

Killed in the crash were Jason Thune, 14, of Omaha, and Ryan W. Patzlaff, 12, of Alexandria, S.D. Authorities said Thune apparently was driving his parents' Honda Accord when he missed a stop sign and hit the pickup.

In critical condition Sunday night at St. Joseph Hospital were 15-year-old Shain Simonson and 14-year-old Patrick Umshler, both of Omaha.

The other two occupants of the car were Omaha residents Kristi Watts, 14, and Nelson Quick, 15. Miss Watts was in fair condition Sunday night at Methodist Hospital. Quick and the two 19-year-old occupants of the pickup were treated at Methodist and released.

Woman found dead in Hoffman tub

ROXBURY, Conn. (AP) — A 43-year-old woman was found dead in a hot tub at actor Dustin Hoffman's estate, state police said.

Sheila Fionda, a schoolteacher at the exclusive Wykeham Rise School in nearby Washington, was found lying face down in the hot tub Saturday, police said Sunday. She was a guest of the estate's caretaker, authorities said.

Hoffman was in Los Angeles during the weekend but volunteered to return to Connecticut, said Lt. Ed Dailey, adding that no foul play was suspected.

Cancer patient reunited with biological mother

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A woman reunited after 18 years with the daughter she gave up for adoption says she hopes the teen-ager stricken with terminal cancer will be well enough to have fun during their get-together.

Donna Hufnagel, of Meford, N.Y., said she and Janine Malone, 18, of St. Petersburg hope to visit the beach, Busch Gardens and Weeki Wachi Springs.

Sunday was the first time Mrs. Hufnagel had seen Ms. Malone since she briefly gazed at her red-haired infant through a hospital nursery window.

"I thought she would come to my house one day and knock on the door like on television," Mrs. Hufnagel said. "I always thought of her. I never denied her."

The women wept and hugged each other as they embraced at Tampa International Airport Sunday evening.

"My God, baby. Baby. OK. It's alright," Mrs. Hufnagel murmured tearfully as she embraced her wheelchair-bound daughter, whose doctors estimate may live just one more year because of an inoperable brain tumor.

"I'm still dreaming," said Ms. Malone, accompanied by her adoptive mother, Sarah Malone, 44.

Mrs. Hufnagel said she was hesitant when she was first contacted July 30 by a local chapter of A Child's Wish Come True, a charitable organization that had spent six weeks searching for her and which will pay for the trip.

But she said a 90-minute telephone conversation the next day with her daughter helped make up her decide to grant her daughter's wish.

"At first I wasn't going to go," she said of her original indecision. "I was upset with what she would think of me."

Mrs. Hufnagel, 39, later married Ms. Malone's father and had three more children, although the couple are now divorced. She brought Ms. Malone's siblings and a 22-month-old boy from her current marriage to the reunion.

Ms. Malone, visibly overcome with emotion, met the other children Sunday.

After her adoption, Ms. Malone lived for eight years in Brentwood, N.Y. Her adoptive parents eventually divorced and she and her adoptive mother moved to Florida.

Education's plus

Midland College's "problem" is one any institution of higher learning should be proud to experience: More students than anticipated.

In fact, through late last week the college was experiencing its largest ever pre-registration with students to register for credit courses this Tuesday and Wednesday. All signs point to this year's final registration figure topping even last year's all-time record of 3,513 students.

There are several reasons offered by Midland College officials for the heavy registration. One is the fact that when the economy goes flat and jobs are tough to obtain or to hang onto, a number of individuals typically head back to college to retrain for another occupation. Another is the simple reality for college-bound students of helping Mom and Dad with educational expenses by living at home rather than traveling away to college and living in a dormitory.

But there are other factors that have also figured in to Midland College's student boom. The outstanding Abell-Hanger Foundation gesture of offering scholarships covering cost of tuition, fees and books at Midland College to all graduates of Midland public high schools in 1986 no doubt has encouraged quite a number of young people to stay in Midland rather than to go away to college.

Whatever the reasons for the heavier enrollment this year, it's an encouraging sign for a community that places a premium on education and, specifically, on higher education. Midland's citizens boast a higher-than-average educational level and that fact no doubt causes Midlanders to encourage their youngsters to pursue educational goals.

That's important. This nation is the world leader in technological advancements and that means that future job requirements will be even more demanding.

Now more than ever a good education definitely can mean the difference between success and failure. Midland College's enrollment figures attest to the fact that a lot of Midlanders recognize that fact and are following the maxim with conviction.

Iran's final offensive

The shots fired in the forgotten war on the Persian Gulf are scarcely heard. The world long ago shrugged off this bloody conflict that, incredibly, is about to enter its seventh year. Autumn will bring a dry, temperate interlude before rains turn battlefields to mud. It is then that Iran threatens to launch a "final offensive" against Basra, Iraq's second largest city. If Basra falls, Baghdad might well follow, spreading the aging Ayatollah Khomeini's shadow over the Persian Gulf.

That's a grim prospect, given Iran's hostility to the West, fury against Israel and tolerance for terrorism. Those are reasons aplenty for hoping Iran fails, but not for hoping Iraq succeeds. What remains striking about this conflict is that both superpowers are reduced to hoping that neither side wins.

This war began in 1980, a year after the s'ah fell, when Iraq felt threatened by Iranian calls for an uprising against President Saddam Hussein. Iraq invaded after renouncing a 1975 agreement granting Iran sovereignty over half the Shatt Arab waterway separating the countries. But Saddam Hussein misjudged his enemies. The ayatollahs were able to rally their nation of 45 million against a historic rival a third as populous.

Iraq responded with its edge in advanced weaponry, including an indecent resort to chemical weapons. As the war turned to stalemate, Baghdad dropped its territorial demands while Tehran insisted on Hussein's downfall plus $50 billion in reparations. Then, early this year, to the dismay of Iraq's Arab allies, Iranian forces burst across the frontier, seizing the oil port of Fao and bringing 300,000 troops within striking distance of Basra.

Basra is well-defended. Iraq, equipped with Soviet and French planes, dominates the air. And Iran is near-broke. As petroleum prices have plunged, so has Iran's income, from $12 billion in 1985 to a probable $7 billion this year. In what looks like a limited victory for Tehran, OPEC has now agreed to cut output for 60 days, though Saudi Arabia saw to Iraq's exemption from the cut. But at best, this can only bring a respite to Iran: It needs a victory at Basra.

Whatever happens in September, the fate of Basra is in the hands of the belligerents, both ruthless police states, one claiming to be inspired by God, the other by socialism. Perhaps a million have died, most innocent civilians. Both sides routinely resort to torture. In Iraq, according to Amnesty International, even children of suspect families are strangled or maimed. The carnage is largely unreported because both sides bar independent witnesses.

For the most part, the United Nations has been irrelevant. Its peacemaking attempts are scorned by Iran, and its nonaligned members cannot bring themselves to denounce butchery among their own number. Washington and Moscow, the twin satans of Iranian demonology, are also on the sidelines. Indeed, they share concern about a fundamentalist fervor that neither really comprehends. It is a chastening reminder of the chaos at the gates, beyond reason or diplomacy.

Truth needed told in Roy Cohn case

WASHINGTON — A blizzard of mail has swept into our offices questioning our journalistic ethics. At the heart of the controversy is this question: If an accused public figure seeks sympathy from the public and clemency from the courts by claiming he is suffering from a specific disease, should the press have the right to use his medical records to determine whether he's telling the truth.

Jack Anderson

That, we confess, is what we did. We reported that an embattled Roy Cohn — who has since died — had AIDS. Quoting from his medical records, we proved that he had lied when he insisted repeatedly that he had "liver cancer," not AIDS.

Most readers conceded, as one put it, that "Roy Cohn is a hateful man and has been guilty of monstrous deeds." But they contended, in the words of a New York City reader, "this is no excuse for getting hold of and publishing data from highly confidential medical records." Was this, as the reader suggests, a media abuse that "threatens the rights of all of us?"

We agree that the media has no business obtaining or publishing confidential medical records of private individuals. But there are times, we think, when the medical ailments of a public figure need to be aired.

Roy Cohn was a superlawyer who spent most of his life in the public spotlight. In the 1950s, when Sen. Joseph McCarthy was rummaging through government closets in search of communists, Cohn was at his ear, whispering. He went on to become an attorney for the rich, the famous and the notorious, including mob figures.

A pattern of legal misconduct finally caught up with Cohn last October. A New York judicial disciplinary panel recommended he be disbarred for "dishonesty, fraud, deceit and misrepresentation." Court testimony alleged, for example, that Cohn had flown to the hospital bed of a dying multimillionaire and induced him to sign a document naming Cohn as trustee of his estate. According to the testimony, Cohn told this 84-year-old man — who was partly paralyzed, nearly blind, semicomatose and drugged — that the paper had to do with his divorce proceedings.

Cohn denied it all, offering a more benign version of events and blaming his accumulated enemies for hounding him on his sickbed. In a plea for clemency, he presented affidavits from doctors that he had a "life-threatening" disease.

Thus began a spate of stories and interviews with Cohn. As The Washington Post aptly reported last December: "Loathed or lionized, the legendary Roy Cohn is dying a very public death." He vociferously denied his ailment was AIDS and threatened to sue anyone who said so.

It was legally defensible to report "rumors" that Cohn had the dread disease. This is what "60 Minutes," for example, did. We decided to publish the story only if we could obtain incontrovertible proof. After weeks of effort, Dale Van Atta obtained confidential medical records that provided the proof we needed. So we reported that Cohn had engaged in a public fraud; contrary to his denials, he had AIDS.

But there was an even more important issue that troubled us. The National Institutes of Health are required to choose their patients for medical, not political reasons. We frankly were skeptical that Roy Cohn, who had powerful friends in the White House, just happened to be one of the 28 patients who would be admitted to the taxpayer-funded NIH program and be administered a promising experimental drug called azidothymidine.

Discover magazine in its current issue describes the efforts by desperate AIDS victims and their families to beg, borrow or steal this drug. Yet of an estimated 10,500 victims who were dying of AIDS, Cohn just happened to be one of 28 patients who were selected at NIH for this life-prolonging program. Now the Wall Street Journal has charged that the White House intervened to move Cohn ahead of other potential candidates.

Every expose means disgrace for some human being who is typically weak rather than evil. Most of the time we are convinced that the trade-off is necessary to maintain a free society. But there are seasons when it seems a close call. In the case of the late Roy Cohn, we believe the truth needed to be told.

EXECUTIVE MEMO: The Justice Department has embarked on an ambitious program to protect FBI, Drug Enforcement Administration and U.S. Marshals Service communications from being overheard. The problem is that as crime suspects have become more sophisticated, they have been tuning in to radio frequencies used by law enforcement agencies. Already, six FBI field offices are using complex "voice privacy" radio systems. By the end of the year, the bureau expects to have 36 field offices wired for secure communications.

White House planning soft-on-drugs assault

WASHINGTON — The White House is plotting a hot soft-on-drugs issue against Democratic Senate candidates based on heavy Democratic opposition to President Reagan's conservative judicial appointments, starting with the opposition of a majority of Judiciary Committee Democrats to Chief Justice-designate William Rehnquist.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The president will use that vote as the basis for an across-the-board charge that the Democratic Party is hurting tough judicial handling of the rising narcotics crisis, a major issue in the battle for control of the Senate. Reinforcing the Democratic vote against Rehnquist is the Senate vote in the Daniel Manion confirmation fight.

When Manion was confirmed by a single vote, all but two Democrats voted no. The soon-to-be-heard Reagan charge: In a Democratic Senate, Rehnquists and Manions and other conservatives would not stand a chance and the crackdown on drugs would suffer.

KEMP'S NO THANKS

Rep. Jack Kemp's presidential strategists were mortified to learn that former state representative Bernard Epton, the much-criticized 1983 Republican candidate for mayor of Chicago, on his own had opened a Kemp-for-president operation in Illinois.

Epton's campaign against Mayor Harold Washington gained national notoriety for its racist overtones. He is the last person Kemp would want as chairman in so important a state.

But to get Epton to shut down his briefly-opened operation, Kemp did not have to get personal. He merely repeated his familiar litany than he is not a candidate for president and the only office he seeks in 1986 is his congressional seat from Buffalo.

DRAFTING IACOCCA

A strategy session in Dearborn, Mich., last week took the next step toward drafting Chrysler chief Lee Iacocca for president by starting to raise money for the first time. Until now, the would-be drafters had held off soliciting funds in Iacocca's name for fear it would anger the hot-tempered auto executive. But the Dearborn charge: In a Democratic Senate, Rehnquists and Manions and other conservatives would not stand a chance and the crackdown on drugs would suffer.

The meeting was held in Iacocca's home state of Michigan because that's where about half the draft committee's members live (including ex-Democratic state chairman Morley Winograd and State Rep. Richard Fitzpatrick). Ironically, in view of Iacocca's feud with Henry Ford, they met in the Ford-owned Dearborn Hyatt Hotel.

'86 BEFORE '88

Concern is rising in Republican campaign quarters that the party's intense interest in the 1988 presidential race is superseding its interest in this year's congressional election campaign, costing some candidates money and others skilled political operatives.

Among the most concerned White House political aides is Haley Barbour, whose job is to see that the president will have a Republican Senate to work with during his last two years in office.

Barbour sports a lapel pin with the admonition: "'86 before '88." What worries Barbour and other White House aides is that too many political appointees in the administration are more concerned about getting themselves positioned for 1988 than in working for a Senate victory in 1986.

NO DOUGH FROM DUKE

A secret Republican strategy meeting in Los Angeles last week received the word that Gov. George Deukmejian, considered a cinch for re-election, will give not one cent to his financially hard-pressed running mates on the state GOP ticket.

Those candidates had hoped that Deukmejian would follow then Gov. Ronald Reagan's precedent in his 1970 re-election campaign, when he funnelled $100,000 each to other statewide candidates. In failing to do that, Deukmejian could be the only Republican elected statewide in California this year.

A footnote: The best shot for another GOP winner is State Sen. Bill Campbell, running for controller against Democratic state legislator Gray Davis, who was chief of staff for Gov. Jerry Brown. If elected, Campbell would become heir-apparent to Deukmejian four years hence.

CHARLEY REESE

Cussing taking movies down dead-end road

I shouldn't do it, but I cuss. Mostly, I cuss objects like lawn mowers and automobiles and computers. Last week, I cussed a closet door that fell off its track. I just don't get along very well with most inanimate objects.

Charley Reese

I confess this because I do not like hypocrites and I want to complain about cussing in movies. It's gone too far. It's become gratuitous. It's become offensive even to characters like me, who know how to turn the air blue and are not easily offended.

It could be just a reflection of the general vulgarization of what's left of American culture. Cussing, dope and unmarried sex were the in things in the 1960s. If so, like the in thing of not taking a bath in the '60s, it's time to shove the pendulum in the other direction.

On the other hand, it's just as likely that the entertainment business is vulgarizing the audience. Do you produce junk because the people demand it or do they patronize it because that's all you produce?

I watched a video of the movie, "The Jagged Edge," recently and it tipped the scales. Here was a story involving upper class, educated people and they used profanity like semi-literate soldiers in a barracks. I value artistic freedom enough to grant leeway to writers who are creating characters who, in life, liberally use profanity. But since when do district attorneys use it?

It's true that producers are so afraid of getting a G rating that even a kid's movie like "E.T." will have enough profanity to earn a PG. There was no danger of a G rating in "The Jagged Edge." The story could have been told, and a similar one has been told hundreds of times, without all the profanity.

Truly creative writers can create even tough characters without resorting to profanity. The great gangster films that starred Jimmy Cagney and Humphrey Bogart didn't suffer because the writers couldn't sprinkle the dialogue with profanity. Nobody ever thought of Cagney or Bogart as wimps.

As a matter of fact, the dialogue was better and this may be the crux of the problem. Just as profanity in conversation is often a mask for lack of wit or eloquence, profanity in written dialogue is also as much an indication of creative sterility as it is of cultural and moral barrenness.

Whatever the reason, as a consumer, I'm rebelling. There's something almost sinister in what seems to be a conscious effort to gutterize American culture, to reduce everything and everybody to the level of a street bum.

It may, of course, be nothing more than just the fact that people in the entertainment business are, for the most part, a group of low-life bums.

Every person engaged in creative work necessarily projects his own world view in his work. My contact with the movie industry has been limited but such as it has been would tend to verify that brainless, amoral, self-centered, greedy scum is not far off the mark as a starting point toward an accurate description of the current crop.

That's a pity because the motion picture has the potential of being the greatest of all art forms since it can employ music, visuals, and language in one creative package.

I'm not a Victorian. As I said, I cuss. I recognize that other people cuss. I recognize that some profanity can have a place in fictional dialogue. My objection is to excessive and gratuitous profanity that serves no artistic purpose other than to hide the writer's lack of talent.

It's an axiom of modern America that people who are making a lot of money don't give a hoot what people think of them, but at least, henceforth, they will not make any of their money from me.

We ought seriously to consider, however, that the world as shown from the motion picture and television screen does not offer much in the way of hope or inspiration to the children who are learning from them just as they learn from their peers, parents and teachers. Everything, including make-believe, has consequences.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 25, 1944, Allied forces liberated Paris, ending four years of German occupation. The surrender of Maj. Gen. Dietrich von Choltitz — who had defied Adolf Hitler's orders to level the French capital rather than give it up — set off wild celebrations in the streets.

On this date:

In 1718, hundreds of French colonists arrived in Louisiana, with some of them settling in present-day New Orleans.

In 1825, Uruguay declared its independence from Brazil.

In 1835, Ann Rutledge, said by some to have been the early true love of Abraham Lincoln, died in Illinois at age 22.

In 1900, German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche died.

In 1916, the National Park Service was established within the Department of the Interior.

In 1921, the United States signed a peace treaty with Germany.

In 1943, U.S. forces overran New Georgia in the Solomon Islands during World War II.

In 1960, President Harry S. Truman ordered the Army to seize control of the nation's railroads to avert a strike.

In 1960, the opening-night audience and cast of the Broadway musical "42nd Street" were stunned to learn during the curtain call that the show's director, Gower Champion, had died hours earlier.

In 1964, author Truman Capote died in Los Angeles at age 59, leaving behind the incomplete manuscript to a novel titled, "Answered Prayers."

Ten years ago: President Gerald R. Ford announced that his national campaign chairman, Rogers C.B. Morton, was being replaced by Houston lawyer James A. Baker III.

Five years ago: The U.S. spacecraft Voyager II came within 63,000 miles of Saturn's cloud cover, sending back pictures and data about the ringed planet.

One year ago: Samantha Smith, the schoolgirl whose letter to Soviet leader Yuri Andropov resulted in her famous 1983 peace tour of the Soviet Union, was killed with her father in the crash of an airliner in Maine. She was 13.

Today's birthdays: Actress Ruby Keeler is 77. Actor Van Johnson is 70. Actor-producer Mel Ferrer is 69. Actor Don DeFore is 69. Conductor-composer Leonard Bernstein is 68. Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace is 67. Actor Sean Connery is 56. Actor Tom Skerritt is 53.

Conditions forecast for 8 AM Tuesday

Mild weather will continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Mild temperatures will continue in the Midland area through Tuesday, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. Tuesday's high is expected to be in the middle to upper 80s with low clouds in the early morning, becoming partly cloudy around noon. Though the NWS does call for isolated late afternoon thunderstorms, the chance of rain is less than 20 percent.

Tonight, under mostly cloudy skies, there will be a 30 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms. Winds will be out of the southeast at five to 10 mph. Tuesday, winds will shift to the south at 10-15 mph.

Sunday's high of 84 was 16 degrees below the record high set for that date in 1936. This morning's low was six degrees above the record low of 58 set for this date in 1970.

STATE

An upper-level disturbance triggered scattered showers and isolated thundershowers across the Lone Star State early today and forecasters expected rainfall to continue through the beginning of this week.

Showers dampened Southwest Texas from the Big Bend to the Concho Valley and South Plains. Elsewhere, scattered thundershowers were detected in the central part of the state between Abilene and Austin.

High clouds were visible over the rest of Texas except for low clouds spreading northward from the Hill Country.

Scattered showers and thundershowers were expected tonight. Otherwise, skies should be partly to mostly cloudy through Tuesday.

Rainfall was expectded to be most numerous in west and northwest parts of North Texas. Lows tonight should be 70 to 74, with highs Tuesday 92 to 98.

NATION

A high pressure system lowered temperatures from the Midwest to Northeast today while rain was widely scattered from New England to the Rockies.

Rain fell in northern New England and the western Great Lakes region while showers and thunderstorms were scattered across eastern Mississippi, southwest Texas and the Rockies.

The high pressure, over northeast Ohio, dropped temperatures into the 50s to low 60s across the eastern Great Lakes region, the upper Ohio Valley and Northeast and into the 40s in northwest Pennsylvania and western New York.

GOLF

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Dan Pohl scrambled his way to a final round of 1-over-par 71, for a one-stroke victory Sunday in the NEC World Series of Golf.

Lanny Wadkins was unable to put any appreciable pressure on Pohl down the stretch and finished second at 278 after a 72.

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — David Feherty birdied the second hole of a sudden-death playoff Sunday, enabling him to beat Christy O'Connor and Ian Baker-Finch for the title in the $150,000 Bell's Scottish Open golf tournament.

JEREMY RANCH, Utah (AP) — Bobby Nichols and Curt Byrum charged to a final round 62 to capture the $450,000 Showdown Classic Senior PGA golf tournament here Sunday.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Juli Inkster broke open a close tournament with birdies on the 11th and 12th holes to beat Patti Rizzo by three shots in the inaugural $225,000 Atlantic City Classic on Sunday.

Inkster claimed the top prize of $33,750 in the LPGA event by carding a 54-hole total of 4-under-par 209, including par 71 in the final round at the 6,005-yard course at the Marriott's Seaview Country Club.

GENERAL

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Alabama defensive tackle Willie Ryles was declared dead by two University Hospital doctors at 3:55 p.m. Saturday after a test showed no blood flow in Ryles brain.

Ryles had been in a coma and listed in extremely critical condition since undergoing surgery Monday evening to relieve pressure caused by a ruptured vessel that created a blood clot on the side of the brain.

Doctors detected the clot after the 19-year-old sophomore from Phenix City collapsed during football practice in Tuscaloosa.

BALTIMORE (AP) — University of Maryland officials are considering a plan to suspend basketball Coach Charles G. "Lefty" Driesell if he is indicted in connection with the death of his former All-American Len Bias, according to published reports.

The job then would be given to an assistant coach, The Baltimore Sun reported sources as saying in its Sunday editions.

TENNIS

MAHWAH, N.J. (AP) — Top-seeded Steffi Graf survived a tough first set before breezing past Molly Van Nostrand 7-5, 6-1 Sunday to win the singles title in the $150,000 United Jersey Bank Classic women's tennis tournament.

Her fifth singles title of the year brought Graf $29,000 and increased her 1986 earnings to $333,650.

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Mats Wilander of Sweden, the world's No. 2-ranked player, recorded his third ATP Championship title in four years as he beat Jimmy Connors 6-4, 6-1 on Sunday.

JERICHO, N.Y. (AP) — Playing in strong gusty winds, Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, the world's No. 1-ranked tennis player, easily handled an ineffective John McEnroe 6-2, 6-4 Sunday to win the $150,000 Norstar Hamlet Challenge Cup invitational.

Oklahoma Sooners like top dog ranking

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — If experience is the best teacher, then the Oklahoma football team should be way ahead of the rest of the class.

The defending national champion Sooners begin the 1986 season as the preseason choice for No. 1, the same way they did last year.

Oklahoma received 44 of 60 first-place votes and 1,171 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters in results announced Saturday.

Michigan, which finished the season ranked No. 2, begins the 1986 season in the same place. The Wolverines had six first-place votes and 1,016 points.

"Because we finished last season as the No. 1 team and we return 18 starters, I think we should be No. 1," tight end Keith Jackson said. "Oklahoma is the kind of team that loves to be on top and stay on top."

Other Sooners felt the same way.

"We don't feel the pressure from being No. 1, but what it does mean is that every team we play will be playing harder to beat us," fullback Lydell Carr said.

"The thing that is on our side is that we were there last year. We know that we can't slack off if we want to stay there."

Center Travis Simpson said Oklahoma, which finished 11-1 last year, always expects to be successful.

"I think being ranked No. 1 will put more pressure on us not to make mistakes," Simpson said, "but on the other hand, if our opponents want to play us close, they will have to play flawless football."

The Sooners have been the top choice six times in the preseason poll; on four of those occasions — 1956, 1974, 1975 and 1985 — they won national championships.

Since the AP preseason poll began in 1950, the only teams besides Oklahoma to win national championships after being ranked No. 1 at the start of the season were Tennessee in 1951, Michigan State in 1952 and Alabama in 1978.

Miami of Florida, ninth last year after losing in the Sugar Bowl, is third in the preseason poll with one first-place vote and 976 points.

UCLA, which finished seventh a year ago, is fourth with three first-place votes and 972 points. The Bruins open the season at Oklahoma on Sept. 6.

Alabama, which opens the season Wednesday night against Ohio State in the Kickoff Clsssic, is fifth with 911 points. The Crimson Tide finished 13th in 1985.

Penn State, which ended the 1985 regular season No. 1 then slipped to third after losing to Oklahoma 25-10 in the Orange Bowl, starts 1986 in sixth place. The Nittany Lions received three first-place votes and 892 points.

Texas A&M, No. 6 last year, is seventh this time with one first-place vote and 871 points. Then comes Nebraska, 11th last year, in eighth place with one first-place vote and 826 points.

Rounding out the preseason Top Ten are Ohio State and Tennessee. The Buckeyes, who finished 14th a year ago, are ninth with 673 points and Tennessee, the No. 4 team in 1985, is 10th with 578.

The other first-place vote went to Pittsburgh but the Panthers were not mentioned on any other ballot and the lone vote was not nearly enough to get them into the Top Twenty.

The preseason Second Ten consists of Florida State, Baylor, Florida, Auburn, LSU, Georgia and Washington tied for 16th, Brigham Young, Arkansas and Michigan State. It marks Michigan State's first appearance in the Top Twenty since 1979.

El Paso trumps M-Angels twice

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — The Midland Angels have only six games left to play this year in the Texas League, but the season is getting longer by the minute after a doubleheader loss to the El Paso Diablos here Sunday.

The twin losses dropped the Angels to 19½ behind the Western Division champions and 23-39 for the second half of play, a lowly 13 games under the .500 mark.

Both losses Sunday were by one run, 4-3 and 2-1, and it took eight innings for the Diablos to beat the Angels in the opener.

An eighth-inning triple by El Paso catcher Charlie O'Brien off the center-field wall in the opener against Midland drove in Alan Cartwright to give the Diablos the win.

Steve Stanicek's home run in the fifth inning highlighted the Diablos' nightcap victory.

O'Brien, batting .329, said he hit a fastball thrown by Midland relief pitcher Julian Gonzalez.

The Diablos' sweep gives them a 43-20 record in the Texas League's second half. They clinched the title last week and automatically qualified for the championship series against East representative Shreveport or Jackson.

Diablos' pitchers Alan Sadler and Derek Diaz came through in the opener. Sadler allowed just three runs before being lifted in the eighth inning.

El Paso trailed 3-1 in the sixth inning but tied the score on a home run by Billy Jo Robidoux. The Diablo first-baseman slugged his 10th homer in three weeks and fifth in the series against the Angels.

Robidoux started El Paso's rally in the eighth inning with a walk. O'Brien was forced out at second on a grounder by Cartwright.

In the nightcap, Stanicek clubbed his 25th homer of the season to break up a fine pitchers' duel between El Paso's Dan Murphy and Midland's Randy Harvey.

Murphy, 8-2, grabbed the win, pitching six innings and allowing nine hits. Ace reliever Jay Aldrich pitched the seventh inning to take his 19th save of the season.

El Paso's only other run came in the second inning on a double by Jesus Alfaro and a single by O'Brien.

Harvey went the distance, giving up only six hits and two runs, but the Angels stranded 12 runners on base and wasted 10 hits.

In the other game in the West, San Antonio first baseman Chris Chapman hit a single, double and home run in scoring three times to boost the Dodgers to a 7-3 victory over the Beaumont Golden Gators.

The Dodgers registered 15 hits on Sunday at Vincent-Beck Stadium. San Antonio raced to a 5-0 lead before Beaumont could get on the scoreboard, although the Gators worked Dodgers' hurlers for 10 hits.

The Dodgers on Saturday amassed 13 hits but the Gators grabbed 14 themselves to tally an 8-7 win after blowing a 7-1 lead.

San Antonio's victory Sunday kept the Dodgers in second place in the Western Division with a 32-31 record. The loss dropped the Gators to 29-33.

Jesus Villa, making his first start for San Antonio after being called up from Class A, picked up the victory as he allowed five hits and three runs in 5 innings.

Shula, Ryan tossing darts

MIAMI (AP) — Don Shula, who seldom rips a fellow coach, took several shots Sunday at Buddy Ryan, the first-year Philadelphia Eagles head coach.

Ryan complained Saturday night that Shula's Miami Dolphins were flaunting the National Football League rules by keeping more than 11 offensive players in the huddle until the last second in an attempt to confuse the defense. Shula didn't take kindly to the accusation.

"It seems like Ryan's got something to say about everything," Shula said. "The only difference is going to be that at the end of this season, they're going to be looking at his won-loss record. They didn't do that when he was an assistant coach."

Ryan, a longtime NFL assistant coach, was credited with designing the "46" defense which helped the Chicago Bears to the Super Bowl title last season. The Philadelphia job is the first as a head coach for the outspoken Ryan.

The remark which drew Shula's ire was made after the Eagles lost to Miami 20-15 Saturday night in a preseason game.

"The rules in the National Football League are that you can huddle 11 guys," Ryan said. "He huddled 15. This is crazy what they let him get away with just because he's on the rules committee."

Shula and Pittsburgh Steelers Coach Chuck Noll are the only coaches on the committee which formulates the league's rules. The Dolphins annually are among the least-penalized teams in the league, which Shula attributes to coaching them to play within the rules.

"Anything that he (Ryan) would say wouldn't surprise me," Shula said. "From what he's said in the past about draft choices and the guy he worked for, I think it tells you a little bit about him."

Ryan criticized the Bears last year for using their No. 1 draft choice to take defensive lineman William Perry, who went on to attain cult-hero status in his rookie season. Ryan also has been critical of Bears Coach Mike Ditka since moving to Philadelphia.

Shula said he went over the game films after reading Ryan's comments and saw nothing out of the ordinary.

"I didn't know we were doing anything different than we've been doing in the past or anybody else has been doing," Shula said. "We're a team that uses substitutes on almost every play, and when you put substitutes into the ball game, the people already in the huddle don't know they're out until the play is called.

"There is a provision (in the rules) that if the referee thinks you're lingering or deliberately stay too long, he can warn you and then penalize you. We weren't warned or penalized."

Shula said he noticed two plays in particular where late substitution may have confused the Eagles.

The first came in the first period when the Dolphins, thinking they were facing a third-and-1 situation, sent in a short-yardage lineup. Just as the offense broke from the huddle, the referee signaled that the Dolphins had gained enough yardage on the previous play for a first down.

Four is trouble for shaky Dallas

IRVING (AP) — This is one ratio that could mean trouble for the NFL's Dallas Cowboys.

The club has lost four straight preseason games, and four key players have been sidelined because of injuries. The latest came during the 41-28 pummeling the Cowboys took from the Pittsburgh Steelers Friday night.

Reserve defensive tackle Don Smerek is expected to be out four to six weeks with a sprained right knee he suffered in the game; team spokesman Doug Todd said.

Smerek joined an expanding list of Cowboys who will be watching at least part of the regular season from the sidelines.

Defensive tackle Kevin Brooks may be out up to six more weeks after having arthroscopic surgery on his knee. Wide receiver Mike Renfro is expected to miss three more weeks because of a separated shoulder. And starting guard Kurt Petersen probably will be scratched for the season after a knee operation.

"It's a problem we'll have to tackle," said team President Tex Schramm.

Meanwhile, defensive back Dextor Clinkscale, who wants a new contract, still hasn't reported to the team.

"I really don't know what's going to happen," Clinkscale said. "Pretty soon, I'm going to have make a decision. I realize I might not play again. I might go to business school or take the test for law school. I don't know."

On Saturday, the Cowboys released three players and put wide receiver Jerry Parrish on the injured reserve list with a hamstring problem, a team official said.

Parrish, who formerly played with the USFL's Jacksonville Bulls, was hurt in practice, Todd said. Parrish also spent two years in the Canadian Football League after playing college ball at Eastern Kentucky.

Placed on waivers Saturday were second-year wide receiver Leon Gonzalez of Bethune Cookman; Troy Johnson, former wide receiver for the USFL's Denver Gold; and Scott Strasburger, a first-year linebacker from Nebraska.

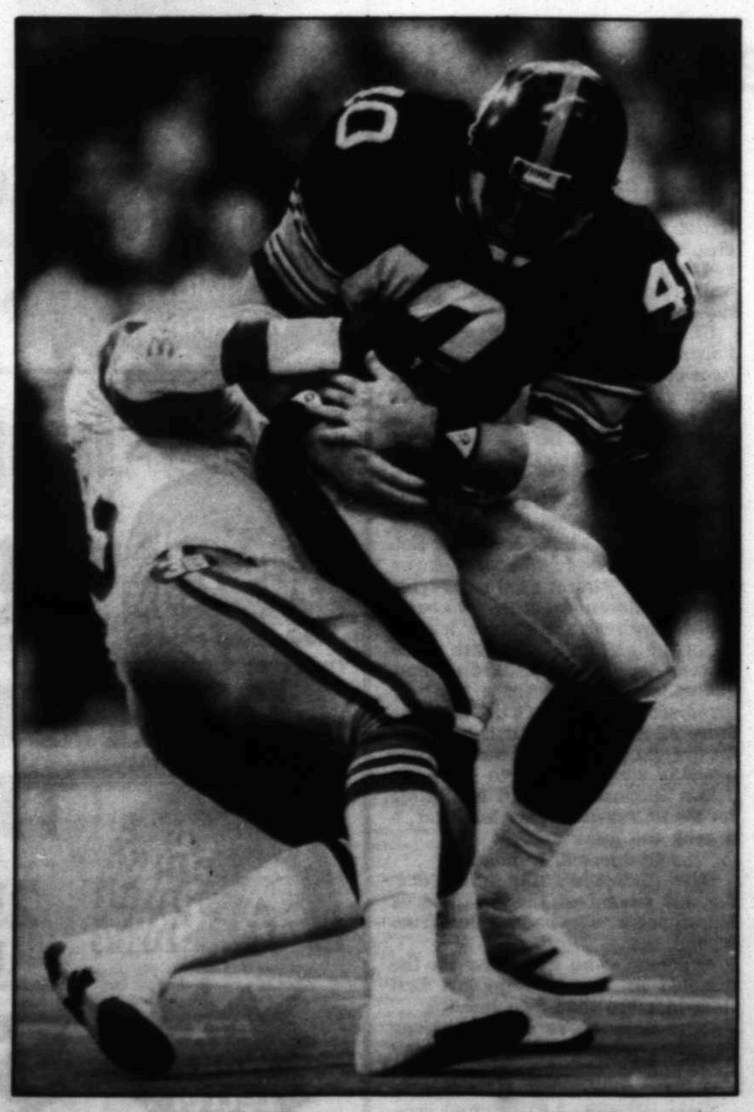

The Cowboys have trimmed their roster to 60, which is 10 over the limit that must be reached by Tuesday, Todd said.

Meanwhile, Dallas fans have been keeping their composure over all the losses as Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker has yet to make his debut.

Walker is expected to play against the Houston Oilers when those two teams meet Saturday night in the final exhibition game of the year for both teams.

The Oilers are unbeaten in exhibition action while the Cowboys have yet to win one, but with the prospect of Walker and Tony Dorsett, who still wants to be traded, in the same backfield, Dallas figures to eventually have more offensive punch.

Right now, Walker and Dorsett are both working out of Dallas' tailback position, meaning only one of them will be on the field at a time.

STAT

Since being recalled on July 19, Boston reliever Calvin Schiraldi is 1-0 with six saves with an 0.63 earnerd run average in 28⅔ innings.

STREAKS

The Toronto Blue Jays set a club record with eight straight hits in a six-run first inning against Minnesota Saturday night. The major-league record for consecutive hits is 12, by the St. Louis Cardinals (1920) and Brooklyn Dodgers (1930). Boston (1901) and Detroit (1983) share the AL record at 10.

SWINGS

Prior to the All-Star break, the Oakland A's bullpen had complied a 4-20 record with 18 saves, since then they have a 6-3 mark with 12 saves.

SPEAKING

"I was saying, 'This can't be a hit' ... That's the way you think when you're in the slump that I was in. I just couldn't believe it until it fell in." — Oakland's Jose Canseco, who broke an 0-for-40 streak Saturday night with an RBI double in the ninth inning against New York. During the hitless streak Canseco, who leads the AL in RBIs, struck out 13 times. In 1962 pitcher Bob Buhl went 0-for-70 for the Milwaukee Braves and Chicago Cubs.

SEASONS

Rangers sweep White Sox

Former M-Cub saves one for Angels

Associated Press

The Texas Rangers' ability to manhandle the Chicago White Sox is keeping them in the race for the American League West pennant with just over a month left in the season.

The much-maligned Texas pitching staff held the White Sox to a total of six runs in sweeping a three-game weekend series. Charlie Hough and Mitch Williams combined on a four-hit, 3-2 victory Sunday night that improved the Rangers' record against the White Sox this season to 9-0.

"I sure can't explain why we've done so well against them," Rangers Manager Bobby Valentine said after the Rangers maintained a three-game deficit behind first-place California in the AL West. "Maybe our pitching just matches up good against them. Maybe they've just caught us when we were hot."

Hough, 11-8, went 6⅔ innings and allowed both Chicago runs — only one of them earned — on four hits, with three walks and eight strikeouts. Williams earned his fifth save with 2⅓ innings of perfect relief.

"When things were going bad, I told you our pitching was going to turn around," Valentine said, referring to a recent four-game losing streak in which the Rangers allowed 36 runs. "I told you our guys were too good to stay in that kind of a streak. Now it appears a lot of the problems in our pitching staff are solving themselves."

Hough hit Ozzie Guillen with a pitch and when third baseman Steve Buechele threw Jose Cruz's grounder away, the Sox had runners on second and third with one out. Mike Karkovice then drove the runners home with a single to right.

But the Rangers tied it in their half of the second against Joe Cowley, who faced four batters in the inning and failed to retire any of them.

Larry Parrish led off with his 20th home run of the season and after Don Slaught walked and Buechele singled, Toby Harrah tied the game and chased Cowley with a single.

"That's the sign of a good team, bouncing right back after they've put numbers on the board," Valentine said. "It takes the wind out of their sails."

Reliever Dave Schmidt, 1-5, took over for Cowley and held the Rangers scoreless until the fifth. Pete Incaviglia walked, took second on Parrish's infield hit and scored the game-winner on Don Slaught's single.

Angels 4, Orioles 3

Kirk McCaskill allowed five hits in 8⅔ innings and California took advantage of Baltimore mistakes for two runs.

McCaskill, 14-7, who struck out eight batters and walked five, needed ninth-inning relief help from former Midland Cub Donnie Moore, who got the last out for his 16th save after giving up an RBI single to John Shelby.

RBI singles by Wally Joyner and Doug DeCinces gave the Angels a 2-0 lead against Storm Davis, 9-11, in the first and Bob Boone singled in their third run after Cal Ripken's error during a rundown in the second.

California's final run scored on a wild pitch in the seventh.

Eddie Murray doubled in a run for the Orioles in the first and Larry Sheets hit his 17th homer for Baltimore in the second.

American League

Indians 5, Red Sox 2

Phil Niekro, recovering from a sore elbow, held Boston to five hits for seven innings and Joe Carter and Julio Franco each hit two-run homers for Cleveland.

The Indians beat Boston for the second straight day after losing their first eight games against the Red Sox this year.

Carter hit his 21st homer in the first inning and Franco his seventh in the three-run fifth, both off Red Sox starter Al Nipper, 8-9. Tony Bernazard singled in Cleveland's third run.

A's 11, Yankees 4

Alfredo Griffin tripled with the bases loaded and Mickey Tettleton finished a five-RBI game with a three-run homer as Oakland scored four runs in both the eighth and ninth innings to beat New York.

Tettleton, who was 1-for-1, walked with the bases loaded twice, the second time to tie the score 4-4 in the eighth. Griffin followed with a triple down the left-field line off losing pitcher Rod Scurry, 1-2.

"I've never seen anybody hit one far enough to get a five-run homer," Tettleton said of his five RBI on one swing of the bat.

Mariners 3, Tigers 1

Detroit also failed to make up ground on the Red Sox as Seattle got a home run from Alvin Davis and a strong pitching performance from Mark Langston.

Langston, 11-10, struck out eight and allowed seven hits in seven innings. He left in the eighth after being hit in the left shoulder by a line drive off the bat of Larry Herndon.

Langston, who also was hit in the shin earlier in the game, beat the Yankees in his previous start while striking out 14.

"I've been getting ahead of hitters a lot more," he said. "I've had a good slider the last two games."

Blue Jays 7, Twins 5

Ernie Whitt broke a 4-4 tie in the 10th for Toronto with a run-scoring single and Garth Iorg added needed insurance with a two-run single later in the inning.

The Blue Jays took a 4-3 lead into the ninth, but Roy Smalley sent Minnesota into extra innings with a two-out RBI single off Tom Henke, 8-3.

Henke gave up another run in the bottom of the 10th on Mickey Hatcher's single, but because Twins Manager Ray Miller had used his designated hitter in the field and had no non-pitchers available, pitcher Ray Fontenot batted for himself and struck out on three pitches for the final out.

Brewers 3, Royals 2

Paul Molitor and Robin Yount doubled on consecutive pitches from Dan Quisenberry in the 11th inning, giving Milwaukee a victory over Kansas City.

Quisenberry, 1-5, also allowed the tying run in the eighth by allowing a walk and an RBI groundout by Jim Gantner.

Don't expect repeat titles

U.S. Open

NEW YORK (AP) — Who says there's never an upset winner at the U.S. Open anymore?

When Ivan Lendl and Hana Mandlikova stride onto the National Tennis Center court on Tuesday, they'll do so as defending champions. That, in itself, is surprising.

Anytime any woman except Martina Navratilova or Chris Evert Lloyd wins a Grand Slam event, it's a shock. That the erratic Mandlikova is the defender at Flushing Meadow is even more stunning because she beat both of them en route to the 1985 crown.

As for Lendl, the '85 triumph couldn't erase his failure in the previous three finals — twice to Jimmy Connors, once to John McEnroe. But it did catapult him to No. 1 in the world, a place he still stands.

A repeat by Mandlikova would not be totally unexpected, in view of her success last year. But even Hana admits "Martina and Chris are the favorites."

Should anybody else sneak to the title — even rising star Steffi Graf of West Germany, who won a tuneup tournament in New Jersey on Sunday — there will be a bunch of surprised people. Particularly Navratilova, Lloyd and Mandlikova.

As for the men, the focus will not be on Lendl, who previously won the French Open this year and lost to Boris Becker of West Germany in the finals at Wimbledon. Nor will it shine on Becker, the two-time Wimbledon champ who won his first significant hard court tournament two weeks ago at the Canadian Open — just as Lendl's 1985 victory here was his first big win on cement.

While Lendl, Becker and the quietly efficient Mats Wilander of Sweden are the top three seeds, the spotlight will be on America's brightest performers of the last dozen years, McEnroe and Connors.

McEnroe won the Open from 1979-81 and again in '84. Connors has taken the crown in 1974, '76, '78, '82 and '83.

"I feel better about my game," McEnroe said before being blitzed 6-2, 6-4 by Lendl in the finals of a warmup event on Long Island. "I know I have to be patient and that's been an adjustment for me. It hasn't come as quickly as I thought it would at first. But I'm doing better. I'm getting there."

He was singing a slightly altered tune after Sunday's loss in his third tournament since taking more than half the year off.

"Putting my priorities first is more important," McEnroe said. "I don't think at this stage I can win the Open. I think Lendl, who has earned his No. 1 spot, or Becker will win. After that it's a crapshoot."

Connors, who lost to Wilander 6-4, 6-1 in the ATP Championship on Sunday, is seeded sixth to McEnroe's ninth. He has not won a major title since the 1983 Open. He rarely gets to a Grand Slam final anymore.

Krukow solves Mets, 10-1

Associated Press

Mike Krukow, a former Midland Cub, used to beat the New York Mets a lot, which wasn't so extraordinary, but he still can do it, which is.

Krukow, 13-7, beat New York for the third time this season without a loss, throwing a four-hitter Sunday as San Francisco cruised to a 10-1 victory and ended the Mets' six-game winning streak.

Krukow, 16-6 versus the Mets lifetime, has apparently not been bothered by New York's resurgence in recent years. The right-hander pitched his ninth complete game of the season, striking out five batters and walking only one.

"Pitching against the Mets is no different," Krukow said. "It feels good to beat anybody, so there's nothing special about beating the Mets."

"When Krukow is in command like he was today, he can beat anybody," Mets Manager Dave Johnson said.

Krukow preferred to talk about Candy Maldonado, who drove in five runs Sunday with a homer, double and a single.

"Candy is absolutely intimidating," he said. "He's a money hitter. I'm sure glad to have him on my team. The big things today were his three-run homer and our scoring 10 runs."

The Giants, who won for the second time in eight games, scored three times in the bottom of the first against Rick Aguilera, 6-6, on Maldonado's 12th home run of the season.

Rob Thompson singled with two outs in the fifth, stole second, and scored on Maldonado's single for a 4-1 lead. Maldonado hit a run-scoring double in a four-run seventh.

Maldonado has 58 RBI for the season, exceeding his previous career totals in three years with Los Angeles. His homer gave him 10 game-winning RBI.

NL Roundup

Astros 5, Cardinals 1

Jim Pankovits tied a career best with four hits and Dickie Thon had two singles and drove in two runs as Houston snapped a three-game losing streak.

Jim Deshaies, 9-3, allowed four hits and four walks over five innings for the visitors and Aurelio Lopez gave up three hits over four innings for his fifth save to go with a 3-1 record and 2.79 earned run average in 30 appearances for Houston.

"I just threw my fastball, slider. That's how I pitch to everyone," Lopez said. "Just throw strikes. That's all you've got to do."

Tim Conroy, 3-8, made two errors in the Astros' three-run second.

The Cardinals may have lost their third baseman for an extended period as Terry Pendleton suffered a jammed left thumb in the fourth inning. "I think it's bad," Manager Whitey Herzog said.

The Cardinals became the first team since the 1915 Detroit Tigers to steal 200 bases for a fifth straight year. Sunday's crowd of 33,687 put St. Louis' attendance over the two-million mark for the fifth straight year — 2,013,419.

Phillies 6, Padres 5

Milt Thompson hit a two-run single in the ninth inning, scoring Steve Jeltz and Ron Roenicke, finishing a rally for the visitors from a 5-0 deficit.

Kent Tekulve, 7-3, pitched two innings for the victory and Steve Bedrosian recorded his 18th save.

Terry Kennedy hit a three-run homer as part of a four-run first inning off Philadelphia starter Charles Hudson. Juan Samuel hit a two-run homer in the Phillies' fourth.

Reds 7, Cubs 1

Cincinnati scored six runs in the top of the eighth inning on six singles, two of them by Eric Davis, Barry Larkin's tie-breaking double and a walk. Ron Davis, 0-2, gave up four of the runs.

Bill Gullickson, 11-8, won his fourth game in five decisions as the Reds captured their sixth victory in seven games. Gullickson allowed six hits over seven innings and he had a three-hit shutout before Gary Matthews led off the sixth with his 17th homer.

Pirates 4, Braves 3

Pittsburgh won its fourth straight as Joe Orsulak went 4-for-4 and Bob Walk scattered six hits over seven innings. The Pirates used two errors by Omar Moreno to score two runs.

Pittsburgh cut the Braves' lead to 2-1 in the bottom of the fifth when Moreno let Rafael Belliard's single get under his glove for a two-base error, scoring Junior Ortiz. With the score 2-2 in the sixth, Ortiz hit a single to right that skipped past Moreno allowing Jim Morrison to score.

Don Robinson pitched an inning for his 10th save. Doyle Alexander, 3-5, took the loss.

Dodgers 3, Expos 2

Dave Anderson's 10th-inning double, his second of the day, scored Mike Scioscia, who had singled, from second base.

Anderson, who had been on the disabled list, was making his first start in more than two months.

"Any time you're out for a long period of time, you want to go out there and do something positive," he said.

Brian Holton, 1-0, pitched one-third of an inning to get the victory for the home team. Loser Tim Burke, 8-6, entered the game in the 10th in relief of Andy McGaffigan.

Eddie Murray requests trade from Orioles

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eddie Murray, the cornerstone of Baltimore's offense for the past 10 years, has requested that the Orioles trade him.

The 30-year-old first baseman asked for a trade at a meeting with Orioles General Manager Hank Peters on Friday, The Washington Post reported in today's editions.

"There'll be no public statements on anything regarding Eddie," a surprised Peters told the Post. "He's still a member of the Baltimore Orioles."

Both Peters and Murray refused comment, but neither would deny that Murray had asked to be traded.

With a little more than a month to go in the season, the Orioles stand fifth in the American League East, eight games behind first-place Boston.

Murray, who has been plagued by injuries this season, his hitting .303 with 12 homers and 60 runs batted in.

A source high in the Orioles' front office told the Post Murray's five-year, $12.7 million contract, which begins next season, makes him almost impossible to trade.

Sources close to Murray have said he is upset with the way his medical problems have been handled this season.

"He heard some things like, 'How's your vacation?' a player told the Post. "You don't know how much that burns him up, and he believed it was coming from management," the player said.

A source close to Murray told the Baltimore Sun that Murray's agent Ron Shapiro was expected to speak with Murray today "to figure out what's going on." When reached by The Sun in New Jersey late Sunday, Shapiro declined to comment.

Murray was placed on the disabled list earlier this season for the first time in his 10-year career. He had pulled a hamstring, then reinjured it while testing the leg's strength on a Cybex machine.

When Murray was placed on the disabled list the Orioles recalled first baseman Jim Traber from Rochester and Traber went on a home run tear, becoming a favorite of the fans.

When Murray told the club he was ready to get back on the field, he was instructed to wait an additional 48 hours.

Murray, who before this season became the Orioles' first-ever captain, also has been booed at least twice at Memorial Stadium this season. According to his friends on the team, he's also upset by comments callers to nightly sports talk shows in Baltimore have made about whether he should be traded.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

By Jeane Dixon
Tuesday, August 26, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You should be able to command a larger share of a partnership's profits. Family influence grows. Do not let an older employee intimidate you. Go ahead with high-tech improvements. You should soon be able to spend more time on things you really enjoy.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Army General Maxwell Taylor, Washington Post editor Benjamin Bradlee, San Francisco catcher Alex Trevino, Prince Albert, Louisiana politician Earl Long, playwright Christopher Isherwood, medicine's Dr. Albert Sabin, "Dallas" actor Jim Davis, Congressman Guy Vander Jagt (R-Mich.) and former New York Congresswoman Geraldine Ferraro.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Someone may be testing you. Keep your wits about you! Handle your work responsibilities promptly. You need to plan any new purchases with special care. Devote evening hours to domestic matters. Consult mate.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Concentrate on updating work methods. A new friend may help you satisfy a secret desire. Get in touch with someone you have not seen recently. An older person shares exciting news.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Things do not happen by chance. Be open to new ideas and you can establish a sound financial foundation. Romance is exhilarating. Partner lives up to your expectations.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Forming a new partnership proves to be a giant step in advancing your career. Investigate a legal problem before signing documents or contracts. Curb a tendency to dominate your loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Choose a partner who shares your goals and mental gifts. Business events begin to work in your favor. The emphasis is on knowing when to make your move. Act in a responsible manner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be as open and honest as possible with your loved ones. Negotiate agreements with special care. A tense situation is resolved in your favor.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New career developments bring both greater personal satisfaction and higher profits. Events taking place at a distance play a significant role in a business decision. Postpone a romantic encounter.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Assistance comes your way from an unexpected quarter. Experts help you handle your finances more effectively. An old acquaintance could have romance in mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Get out and about more. Unconventional methods work best when trying to solve an unusual problem. Explore every option. You would be wise to consult experts before making major changes. Romance sizzles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): This slower-paced day enables you to catch up on any paperwork or bookkeeping. A phone call or chance meeting with an old friend boosts your spirits.

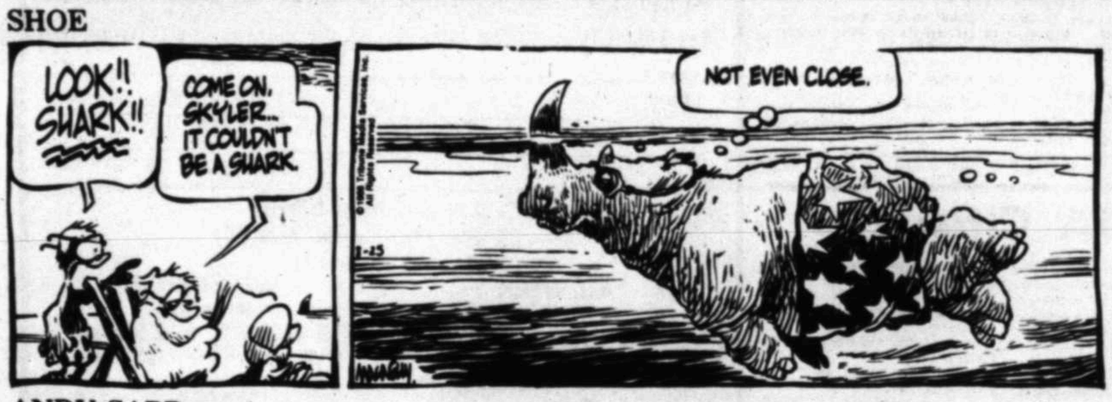

AQUARIUS (Feb. 19-March 20): The day gets better and better. Being around young people proves beneficial for business. Know your own mind before asking someone else for a commitment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Revamp today's schedule to give yourself extra time. You get the extra money you asked for. An emotional burden is suddenly lifted. Pay more attention to your personal appearance.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ10873 ♡5 ◇K72 ♣Q95
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with three hearts. What action do you take?
A.—You have a hand of limited strength and the quality of your six-card suit leaves something to be desired. Nevertheless, you should bid three spades. There is too great a danger that partner, with a fair hand but only two or three spades, will elect not to compete.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K7 ♡QJ9 ◇A8 ♣AKQ952
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with three hearts. What action do you take?
A.—The trouble with an overcall of four clubs is that you need to find partner with quite a good hand if you are going to make 11 tricks at a minor-suit game. Therefore, we would gamble on three no trump; the king of diamonds and nothing else in partner's hand would probably be enough.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K7 ♡AKQ952 ◇QJ9 ♣A8
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with three diamonds. What action do you take?
A.—This is much closer, for it could be right to go for 10 tricks at hearts by overcalling with four hearts and hoping that partner has the few values you need to make game. However, we would stick with trying for nine tricks with three no trump.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠98 ♡62 ◇872 ♣AQJ953
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—While your hand might produce two tricks for partner at diamonds, it will produce at least four tricks, perhaps more, at a club contract. Bid three clubs. You don't need support from partner and his high cards will be useful to you. Since you have already limited your hand, partner won't expect more.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K1076 ♡AQJ95 ◇93 ♣J6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Since partner bypassed spades, he cannot hold four of them; therefore, there is no point to introducing your spade suit now. You do not have quite enough to insist on game, so with your semi-balanced hand you should raise to two no trump to invite partner to go on if he has a maximum for his bidding so far. Don't worry about missing a 5-3 heart fit. If partner wants to accept and he has three hearts, he can support hearts next.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q954 ♡87 ◇K52 ♣A765
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East

What do you bid now?
A.—If you opted for three spades, we won't fault you greatly but we do feel that you are putting too much pressure on partner, who might think that you are simply competing. We prefer the more aggressive jump to four spades. Since you passed originally, partner won't expect much more from you.

Bob Geldof, wife have marriage blessed in English country church

FAVERSHAM, England (AP) — Rock singer Bob Geldof and his wife, Paula Yates, had their marriage blessed amid tight security with their daughter attending the service.

Geldof, 32, organizer of Band Aid concerts for international famine relief, and Miss Yates, 26, a television rock show host, reportedly were married in June in Las Vegas, Nev., after living together for eight years. They did not appear for the horde of fans or photographers after Sunday's 20-minute service.

"Frankly, there would be less of a problem with security if this was a presidential tour wrapped-up with a royal visit," said Police Chief Inspector Stuart Donaldson at the service performed by The Rev. Michael Anderson of the Church of England.

The couple's 3-year-old daughter, Fifi Trixiebelle, was among those in attendance at the church, which is attached to the couple's 12th-century country house near Faversham, 40 miles southeast of London.

PESARO, Italy (AP) — Opera tenor Luciano Pavarotti says he's sticking to a strict diet but still can have an occasional plate of pasta.

Pavarotti

"I have already lost 10 kilos (22 pounds)," the Rome newspaper La Repubblica quoted him as saying in an interview in his summer home in Pesaro, an Adriatic resort.

His diet, he said, allows "three tablespoons of oil a day, vegetables, a little fruit, a hectogram (little less than four ounces) of bread, three hectograms of meat, no alcohol, no sugar. All this adds up to about 2,000 calories a day."

"But if I feel like a plate of pasta, I can do it," he added. "I cook 150 grams of it, which makes 400 calories, I add two tablespoons of oil, and that's another 200 calories. Then a little wonderful parmesan and I'm at 800 calories. So it's all right for lunch. Certainly for supper, to balance it, I only touch fish."

TRUCHAS, N.M. (AP) — The bean field in Robert Redford's movie version of "The Milagro Beanfield War" will be more wire and cloth than the real thing.

Redford

Production crews say they are importing wire and cloth bean plants so they can have more control over the height of the plants. They say a few real plants will be mixed in with the others.

Joe Mondragon, the principal character in John Nichols' novel, defies the state water law by irrigating his bean field.

NEW YORK (AP) — An autograph of actress Greta Garbo on a tiny slip of paper sold at auction for $880, the auction's organizer said.

The signature, in ink on paper measuring 2½ inches by 1½ inches, was bought by a Florida collector, said Herman Darvick, president of Universal Autograph Collectors' Club, which sponsored the sale Sunday.

Signed photos of singers Michael Jackson and Madonna brought in $110 each, while a signed photo of President Reagan sold for $66 and a document signed by King George III brought in $200, he said.

Other items auctioned included a signed photograph, which brought $1,100, of former presidents Jimmy Carter, Gerald Ford and Richard Nixon at the Capitol prior to Sen. Hubert Humphrey's funeral.

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The millionaire, the professor and Mary Ann couldn't make it, but there was Gilligan and the Skipper, too.

Denver

Bob Denver and Alan Hale, stars of the old "Gilligan's Island" television show, were guests at WKTI Radio's annual beach party at Bradford Beach on Saturday.

"Look at that sea of faces out there. Aren't they marvelous?" said Hale, 68, in his booming voice.

While most in the crowd were too young to have seen the zany show when it first ran from 1964 to 1967, they apparently caught it in reruns.

"It's just one of those shows that has a universal appeal," said Denver, 51. "I guess people really like silliness and broad comedy."

The two played up to the crowd, signing autographs and posing for pictures. And the Skipper managed to get in a few whacks at Gilligan with his hat.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The rap music group Run-D.M.C. has been invited to perform at the Los Angeles Street Scene Festival next month despite a gang-initiated brawl at the group's last concert that left 40 people injured.

After the fracas in Long Beach this month, the group said it would not play in the Los Angeles area again unless police could protect fans from gang violence.

"The gangs stand for everything that rap is against," the band said in a statement.

The group has been asked to perform at the Los Angeles Street Scene festival next month.

Sylvia Cunliffe, general manager of the city's Department of General Services, which is coordinating next month's festival, agrees.

"The music doesn't attract the gangs," she said of the group known for its driving beat and rhyming, rapidly spoken lyrics. "They have focused against anti-social behavior, particularly drug abuse."

In addition, the group has been asked to play during the day.

"Gang kids like to come out at night," she said.

No agreement has been reached with the group, Ms. Cunliffe said.

LONGVIEW, Wash. (AP) — Sixteen-year-old Giles Thompson, who survived last May's Mount Hood climbing tragedy but lost both legs to frostbite, wants to walk into class when he returns to school next month.

Milo Collier, a prosthetist who fitted Thompson with artificial legs, said he could not predict when Thompson will walk, but called his progress "exceptional."

"He's a tough character," Collier said.

Thompson, a sturdy youth who loves football, golf and snow skiing, was hospitalized 55 days after being airlifted May 15 from a snow cave on Mount Hood. He and Brinton Clark, 16, of Portland, were the only survivors from the cave.

Nine members of the climbing party from the Oregon Episcopal School in Portland died after being trapped by a blizzard.

Thompson refuses to dwell on the accident, concentrating instead on his future.

These shoes are made for walking

The heel of a shoe, above, is easily removed with the use of a vise. Operating the equipment such as this sewing machine, below, takes years of experience.

Shoe repairman Rudy Ramirez concentrates as he stitches a running shoe.

Rudy Ramirez is his name and saving soles is his game.

Ramirez, owner and operator of Rudy's Boot and Shoe Repair, opened his first shop eight years ago at 1009 N. Midkiff confident that his venture into the world of small business would be a successful one.

He was right.

Today, Ramirez owns two shoe repair shops in northwest Midland — the original and the other, located at 3326 N. Midkiff.

Ramirez took up shoe repair as a child helping with his father's handmade boot business.

He repairs hundreds of shoes a week. When the workload is heavy, he calls upon his wife, Yolanda, to help out.

"She is a registered nurse by trade, but she's really become quite knowledgable in shoe repair. Sometimes I think she's the one who runs the business," says Ramirez.

On a typical morning, the third-generation shoe repairman will start and finish sewing tears in running shoes and replacing half-soles and heels.

But shoe repair "is more than just fixing soles and heels," Ramirez says.

"The rips and tears are the jobs that are time consuming and you have to be patient to do the job right."

Ramirez isn't sure just how many shoes he's repaired during his career.

"I was working for another man when I decided to go out on my own," says Ramirez, "but I've been in the business all my life and I enjoy it."

Ramirez is accustomed to hard work.

He often works from dawn to dusk to get the orders out to his customers.

Shoe repair "is not difficult if you know the basics," says Ramirez.

The trick "is a sharp knife."

His other equipment consists of large sewing machines fit to stitch entire soles, pliers and vises to repair heels, hammers and mallots.

Ramirez says he has never lost sight of his purpose in this business — customer convenience.

DEATHS

Mrs. Dalton H. Cobb

Mrs. Dalton H. Cobb, 57, of Midland, died Sunday morning at her home.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday at the First Baptist Church with Dr. Daniel Vestal, pastor, officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Cobb was born April 9, 1928, in Fort Worth. Her family, the M.L. Gards, moved to Midland in 1936. She graduated from Midland High School in 1946. She met and married Dalton H. Cobb in 1946 in Midland. The couple lived for a short while in Pampa, Amarillo and Abilene before returning to Midland.

She was a member of the First Baptist Church and a member of the Rake and Spade Garden Club.

Survivors include her husband; two sons, Dalton H. Cobb Jr. and Michael D. Cobb, both of Austin; and her mother, Mrs. Anita Gard of Midland.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland, Inc.

'Wink' Winkler

Services for "Wink" Winkler will be at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity with the Rev. Marshall L. Mason officiating. Burial will be at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Pallbearers will be Arnold Brown, Ted C. Witte, Charles Scott, J.J. Wagner, Mark Johnson and Bob Pritchett.

Honorary pallbearers will be Bill Oliver, Frank Key, Oddrey Nelson and Ray Jenkins.

Aileen B. Lockwood

Aileen Blanche Lockwood, 83, of Midland, died early Sunday morning at a local hospital.

Services will be at 1 p.m. Wednesday at the St. Andrews Presbyterian Church of Beaumont with the Rev. Sally Fauth officiating. Interment will follow at Forest Lawn Memorial Park under the direction of Kelley-Hixson Funeral Home. Local arrangements are being handled through Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Lockwood was born April 25, 1903, in Big Rapids, Mich. She was reared in Oklahoma and Texas. She met and married Carroll Joy Lockwood on June, 26, 1928, in Sherman. She lived in Beaumont most of her life. They moved to Scotch Plain, N.J., in 1955 when her husband became president of Socony Paint Co. They lived there for eight years before returning to Beaumont after his retirement.

She was preceded in death by her husband on Jan. 2, 1966. She moved to Midland in 1981 and was a member of the Trinity Presbyterian Church of Midland.

Survivors include two daughters, Mrs. Sarah A. Macina of Midland and Mrs. Carolyn Busch of Bloomington, Ind.; one brother, Gordon Cain of Beaumont; four grandchildren; one great-grandchild; and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the American Heart Association.

Julia Tarara Butler

MONAHANS — Services will be held Tuesday at 2 p.m. at the Wilson-Miller Chapel for Julia Tarara Butler, 89, who died Sunday at a Monahans nursing home.

The Rev. Don Harms will officiate and graveside services will follow at 4 p.m. at Resthaven Cemetery in Midland.

Ms. Butler was born Dec. 16, 1896 in Alto. She lived in Monahans the last five years where she was a housewife and a member of the Baptist church.

Survivors include two daughters, Mrs. Vivian Whitley, Monahans and Mrs. Darris Hagler Blackwell; one son, H. Dulyn Butler of Little Rock, Ark.; 14 grandchildren, 29 great grandchildren and 5 great great grandchildren.

Peggy Foster

Peggy Foster of Midland died Sunday evening at a local hospital.

Services are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

Wayne Sawyer

Services for Wayne Sawyer of Midland were to be today at 1:30 p.m. at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Jerry Thorpe, pastor of Temple Baptist Church of Odessa, officiating. Burial was to be at Odessa Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Pallbearers were to be Wayne Lee Sawyer, Travis D. Sawyer, Michael D. Sawyer, Billy A. Sawyer, Timothy D. Sawyer and Harold Ninimires.

James Williams, a 58-year-old retired truck driver, pauses recently to rest during one of his 10 to 15 mile daily rides. The Odessa resident decorated his only mode of transportation with whatever he could find, including two motorcycle helmets, two radios, plastic flowers, Christmas decorations and a seatbelt, which he uses. Williams has plenty of free time and likes to ride his bike in style.

Heavily minority districts score big gains in math, reading tests

HOUSTON (AP) — As minority children post rapid gains in math and reading scores, heavily minority school districts are closing the gap in statewide test results, according to a recent survey.

But although the study still shows those areas score lower than other districts statewide, "we're not frustrated. We're making progress. We're seeing results," said John Sawyer III, superintendent of the predominantly black North Forest school district in Harris County.

His district posted the biggest gain in math and reading scores among Texas' 63 largest districts surveyed by the Texas Education News, a weekly industry newsletter. But it ranked near the bottom among Houston-area schools.

"You can plot it on a map," said Klein Superintendent Donald Collins, who heads a more affluent district. "You take a poorer district that is heavily minority — they just won't do as well, but they may be doing a supremely better job teaching."

Nevertheless, the survey showed dramatic improvements: Only 13 percent of black fifth-graders statewide could distinguish between fact and opinion in reading tests in 1980. Today, 85 percent can.

"We need to increase our expectations for minority kids," said Joe Pitts, superintendent of the Port Arthur district, which is 70 percent minority. "We think all children can learn."

State officials say minority scores have shown the most improvement because the test helped instructors focus on rudimentary skills.

"The state didn't say learn these basic skills to the exclusion of all else, but we did think they should be given priority," said Dave Jones, a Texas Education Agency spokesman.

Eloise Brown, head of curriculum at North Forest, said her district has keyed in on the basics to improve scores, with pupils tested to assess weaknesses and remedial labs provided for those needing extra help.

A new pre-school program for the disadvantaged began last year, she said.

Other school districts with more than 50 percent minority enrollment have taken more novel approaches.

The Aldine district uses academic pep rallies to get students enthusiastic about learning, while the Hitchcock district plans to use a computerized van to introduce computers to poor parents who might not have access to them, officials said.

De la Madrid denies reports that Mexico will expel DEA agents

DALLAS (AP) — Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid denies reports that his government is considering kicking out the approximately 30 U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agents now operating in his country.

But in an interview with the Dallas Times Herald published Sunday, de la Madrid conceded that the DEA's status in Mexico could change following the controversial detention of DEA agent Victor Cortez Jr.

De la Madrid, speaking from his Los Pinos presidential compound in Mexico City, said he did not expect allegations that Cortez was tortured with electric shocks to harm relations between the two countries.

But he refused to say if Cortez had indeed been tortured, as U.S. officials claim.

The president reiterated that Mexican authorities were exhaustively investigating the Cortez case, but he argued that it had taken on exaggerated importance.

"The Cortez incident was very unfortunate, but I think you have to put it in perspective," de la Madrid said. "The bilateral relations with the United States cover a very broad area."

Cortez and a Mexican informant were arrested Aug. 13 in Guadalajara and taken to Jalisco State Judicial Police headquarters for questioning. Cortez said he and the informant were held for six hours and tortured before being freed through the intervention of another DEA agent.

The incident occurred on the same day that de la Madrid met with President Reagan in Washington in an effort to defuse tensions between the two countries over a number of issues, including drug trafficking.

He suggested that the cases of Cortez and Enrique Camarena Salazar — a DEA agent who was kidnapped, beaten and later killed by suspected narcotics smugglers in Guadalajara last year — pale in comparison to the number of Mexican illegal aliens who have been mistreated by authorities in the United States.

"They (cases of mistreatment) are more numerous in the United States," he said.

U.S. officials are particularly concerned about corruption in Mexico because in both the Cortez and Camarena case, members of the Jalisco state police have been implicated in actions against American drug agents.

The DEA believes that some members of the state police agency may be working directly for some of Mexico's largest cocaine, heroin and marijuana traffickers.

The president conceded that corruption exists in some Mexican police agencies, but dismissed it as an "international phenomenon."

"It seems to me that the phenomenon of corruption exists on both sides of the border," he said.

Lubbock native has no illusions about teaching in El Salvador

CORVALLIS, Ore. (AP) — A Corvallis woman leaving this week to teach reading in El Salvador says she harbors no illusions about the task she faces or the dangers of living in the war-torn Central American nation.

Noel Wiggins, a native of Lubbock, Texas, and a 24-year-old graduate of Yale University, plans to spend three years in the village of Gotera in eastern El Salvador.

She'll be teaching in an area where illiteracy is common and there are no schools — teaching instead "under trees, in houses or on the street."

"I'll be assessing the situation and finding out from the people what they want and what is the best way to do it," she said last week in an interview with the Corvallis Gazette-Times newspaper.

"I think I'm being realistic," she said. "The problems of El Salvador lie more with the U.S. Congress than with anything we can do while we are in the country."

Ms. Wiggins will be working through a program of the Mennonite Church. As a member of a local Catholic church, she has participated in the Corvallis interfaith sanctuary movement for Central American refugees.

She holds a bilingual teaching certificate from Western Oregon State College in Monmouth, which has a cooperative program with Oregon State University in Corvallis.

She said she was excited by the prospect of living in a culture far different from that of Lubbock, but also expressed some fear about moving to El Salvador.

"I'm afraid, but I know that I can't let the fear become my overriding feeling," Wiggins said.

"One thing I know about the area is that it's in one of the hotter parts of the country in terms of military action," she said. "I know I will be landing in a militarized country that is in the middle of a war.

"I can just imagine getting off the plane and seeing the national guard standing all around," she said. "But I don't know what to expect because I haven't been there before."

Ms. Wiggins is an accomplished guitarist and composer, and plans to take her guitar with her. But she said she probably won't be singing too many of the protest songs she sings at benefits in Corvallis — at least not openly.

She heard about the Mennonites' program from a friend at Yale, where she graduated in 1983 with a bachelor's degree in history.

Her friend went to Haiti through the program, she said, and "I just heard a lot of good things about it."

She had applied about two years ago, in hopes of going to Mexico, but there were no openings there.

Meanwhile, Wiggins wanted to teach Spanish, a language she has been speaking for about six years. She heard that Oregon State University had a strong bilingual education program, so she came to Corvallis and commuted daily to classes in the joint education program at Monmouth.

She'll earn $43 a month and hopes to learn a lot from the experience.

"It's important for people in North America to have the experience of living in a Third World country — to deal with the hunger and lack of material comforts," she said.

"Whatever I learn, I hope I can be much more useful at whatever I do when I get back," she said. "And maybe I can give people there a part of myself.

"I don't have any expectations that there will be a 90 percent literacy rate in El Salvador when I leave the country, or even in the area where I will be working. But maybe I can help someone."

Four Lebanese teens' vacation from strife ends

AUSTIN (AP) — A summer vacation from strife has ended for four teen-agers, two Christian and two Moslem.

"I'm going to miss peace," 18-year-old Gladiss Elias Tannoury said Saturday as she left Texas for her home in Beirut.

The four teen-agers came to Austin for six weeks under a program sponsored by the Children's Committee 10 of California. The program pairs teens of different faiths and arranges for them to stay together away from war to get to know each other in a way they could not at home.

Sixteen Lebanese teen-agers came to the United States this summer. The program also pairs Catholics and Protestants from Northern Ireland.

Gladiss, a Maronite Catholic, was paired with May Abou Alwan, a Druse Moslem. Ibrahim Fouad Zayat, a Maronite Catholic, was paired with Nizar Irani, a Shiite Moslem.

The four — who come from three of the warring factions in Lebanon — stayed with Sam and Sandy Moses in North Austin and became close friends. But they do not know how their friendships will fare after they get home.

"I will see Ibrahim because he's on my side (of town), but I don't know if I will see May and Nizar," Gladiss said.

Keeping in touch by writing is unlikely, Gladiss said, "because the mail is not good."

"We probably will be able to call each other," May said. "It's dangerous, though."

Staying in touch "is not always hard (but) sometimes it's more difficult," Nizar said. "Bombs flying get in the way. But we can talk."

Bondsman files suit over arrest

LAS CRUCES (AP) — An El Paso, Texas, bail bondsman convicted on felony charges has filed a lawsuit in federal court alleging his arrest was the result of conspiracy and extortion.

Alberto Lopez, 32, and another El Paso bondsman were convicted Dec. 11 in Silver City on charges of aggravated assault and attempted aggravated burglary.

The charges were from a May 27, 1985, incident in which they attempted to return a drunken-driving suspect to Texas. Lopez had posted $9,500 bond for Rudy Ojinaga's release from a Texas jail.

The bondsmen's attempt to return Ojinaga to El Paso turned into an armed confrontation with Grant County deputies in Central, N.M. The confrontation ended with their surrender to New Mexico State Police.

Cars destroyed in separate fires

From Staff Reports

Two cars were destroyed in two separate fires Sunday, the Midland fire department reports.

The first car fire occurred around 1:30 a.m. Sunday when an engine overheated and destroyed a 1977 Buick Riviera on South Midkiff Road. The car was owned by Elidia Salacer, 1408 N. Lincoln St.

Police Roundup

The second fire occurred at about 4:30 p.m. Sunday when a spark ignited from a gas leak at 702 Andrews Highway. The destroyed auto was owned by Patty Garner, 4311 Bedford Drive.

'Statement of the Season' benefit style show presented

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

A touch of humor opened the sixth annual Chi Omega "Statement of the Season" style show and brunch Saturday as models paraded down the runway wearing "tacky" outfits, or what were described as wardrobe disasters.

Then the real show began with a swirl of color as the latest fall and winter fashions were displayed. The style show, presented 11 a.m. Saturday at Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center, featured clothing from lingerie to evening gowns, from casual sweaters to materity wear. The show even included fur coats.

Judy Dunbar, co-chairman of the style show, estimated approximately 400 guests attended the event, which will benefit the Children's Scholarship Fund of the Developmental Disabilities Center.

Pat Paxton, president of Midland's Chi Omega alumnae organization, said the style show, which benefits a different cause each year, raised about $1700 last year for Hearthstone. This year's fund-raiser will probably bring in "a little less — hopefully around $1500. ... Everything is a little less" because of the economic situation.

Tickets chairman Allison Smith said the show brought in about $3500 gross. Once expenses are paid, she hopes as much as $2000 of that would go to the DDC.

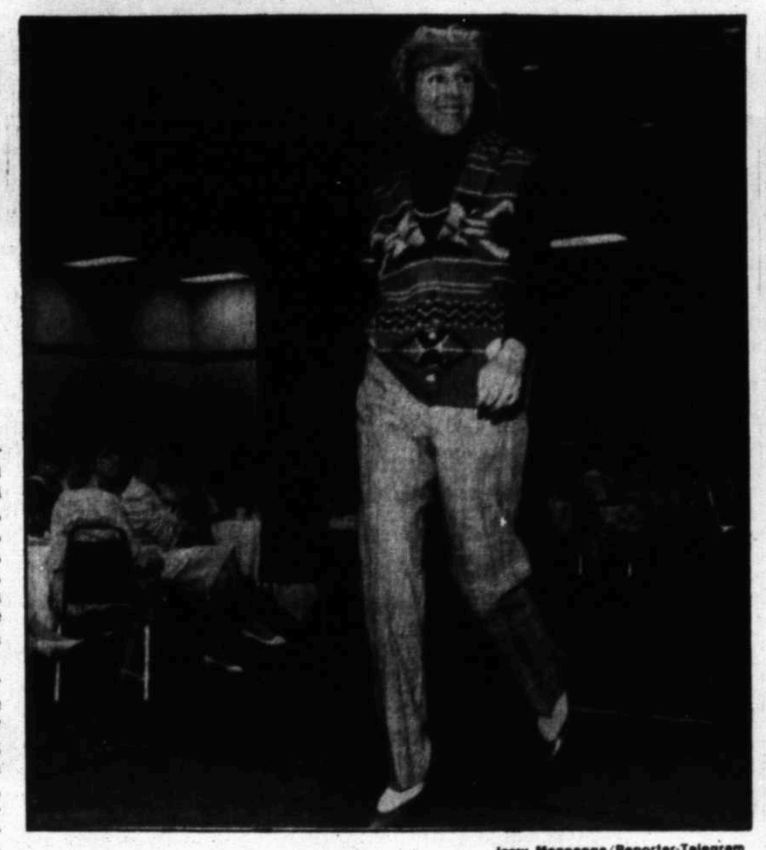

The DDC is "currently the only private facility in the Permian Basin that provides a daily center-based comprehensive program for developmentally disabled children," according to a DDC brochure.

Staff members at the center work with children, aged 18 months through 15 years, "in such areas as speech therapy, psychology, early childhood/special education, emotional disorders, learning disabilities, mental retardation and elementary education," the brochure continued, to help each child "to reach his or her own potential."

Fashions presented at the style show were from The Gazebo, Grigsby's Rag Doll, Intimate Fashions, La Mere, Pappagallo and Robbie Casey's. Also involved in the show were Aladdin House Furniture, Kittiwake Furniture, La Dulceria, Mildred's Flowers, Qualified Printers and Rainbow Press.

Models, all members of Chi Omega, were Susan Atchison, Elizabeth Baldridge, Dianne Bucy, Karen Campbell, Pat Epley, Prissie Hazen, Caroline Holmes, Jane Houghton, Debbie Holland, Margaret McCluney, Helen Peetz, Carol Pitts, Paige Pitts, Judy Rouse, Sally Steward, Karen Thompson, Debbie Tuffly, Julie Vaughn, Conni Wagner and Carolyn Welton.

Style show committee this year was Ms. Paxton, Chi Omega alumnae president; Natalie Lake, style show chairman; Ms. Dunbar, co-chairman; Stacey Owens, commentator; Allison Smith, tickets; Barbara Darlingron, publicity-posters; Paige Pitts, publicity-media; Raye Ann Embrey, luncheon; Elizabeth Mashburn, decorations; Carlene Ware, front desk; Ms. Atchison, program; Margaret Wade, artistic design; Ms. Steward, models; Ms. Holmes, backstage; Carol Ann Hunt, stores; and Ms. Thompson, telephone.

DEAR ABBY

Nursing home thievery national shame

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure my letter will not command as much attention as Kirk Douglas' because I'm not a movie star, but after reading his letter, I had to write because I also had a mother in a nursing home.

Mr. Douglas' mother was in a nice nursing home. He could afford the best. My mother was in a convalescent hospital that was little better than a pigsty, although it cost a considerable amount of money. The poor souls were kept medicated to keep their demands at a minimum.

My family visited our mother three or four times a week, and we observed that nighties, sweaters, toiletries and slippers kept disappearing.

We give billions of dollars to foreign countries to upgrade their standard of living; we send billions for ammunition so they can slaughter each other. And on the Fourth of July, millions were spent to honor the Statue of Liberty. But where is the money to honor our own fathers and mothers? Shame on all of us for allowing this to happen. — G.K., COSTA MESA, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: My husband spent the last three years of his life in a nursing home. During that time he experienced problems I never would have believed existed. It was shocking, frightening and sad.

When his condition was critical, an employee removed his wedding ring and wristwatch. His walker, hand-knit afghan and wallet also mysteriously disappeared, along with a basket of goodies he had just received for his birthday. My complaints to the administration were ignored. Only after I wrote to the state ombudsman and the editor of The Deseret News did all the missing articles mysteriously turn up! One week to the day, he was buried — with his ring on. — CLEO P. MOLLINET, SALT LAKE CITY

DEAR ABBY: Kirk Douglas advised people to go to their department of public health and demand to see the state inspection reports before deciding on a home. That is a joke.

I worked at a private nursing home that had a superior rating. Now let me tell you about the inspector. He used the side door because we locked up at 9 p.m., and he never arrived before 10 p.m. One night he arrived drunk (as usual) and fell over the nurses' station trying to hug his favorite nurse. He asked her to witness him signing the inspection form. She laughed and said, "Why, you devil, you haven't inspected anything," after which he picked up a wastepaper basket, peered into it, put it down and said, "There! I've made an inspection, and everything is fine!" He signed the form and left. So much for state inspectors.

Why did I work there? Because in this small town there aren't many jobs to be had. I'll sign my name to prove I didn't make this up, but please don't use it. I have relatives who work there. — EX-EMPLOYEE

DEAR ABBY: I could write a book about the thievery that goes on in nursing homes. Would you believe someone came into my mother's room and carried away her TV set? (Police report enclosed.) Her little refrigerator had been unplugged — apparently that had been targeted as well. I took the owner of the home to Small Claims Court and won. I moved my mother to another home where I had to sign a form stating that they were not responsible for anything that was "lost." The help in most homes are paid peanuts. The work is awful. I couldn't do it — not for a million dollars a day. — CATHERINE FAHRINGER, SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: I could write a book about my mother's experiences in a nursing home. Her diamond ring was stolen from her hand, and her antique family Bible disappeared from her nightstand. Once I visited her to find her wearing dentures far too big for her mouth. (They'd lost hers!) Another time I caught an orderly "bathing" her. He had seated her on slats, and turned the overhead shower on full force — no soap.

Her good wheelchair was stolen, and so was every nice piece of clothing I had brought her. They said her things got lost in the laundry. But, Abby, I always took her laundry home to do.

One Sunday she was physically well and mentally alert. In eight days she was dead. They said, "Pneumonia." How? Why? You may use my name. — MARI VEARRIER, TIGARD, ORE.

DEAR MARI: Tomorrow I'm giving equal time to those who write in defense of nursing homes.

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Clothing worn for social dances displayed

NEW YORK (AP) — An exhibition called "Dance," featuring the exotic clothing that men and women have worn to dance in at their grandest social occasions, will be the next costume exhibition of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

The exhibition, in the Metropolitan's Costume Institute galleries Dec. 19 through Sept. 6, 1987, will include 250 costumes ranging from gowns for 18th- and 19th-century court dancing to the great ballgowns of the House of Worth.

Laboratories report results of 'hard,' 'soft' water research

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (AP) — America's increasing attention toward health and fitness also has drawn attention to the value of good drinking water and use of the terms "hard" and "soft" water.

Researchers at Mountain Valley Spring Co. define "hard" water as water with 100 parts per million dissolved solids. "Soft" water is water with less than 100 p.p.m.

Dr. Henry A. Schroeder of the Dartmouth College trace element laboratories reports that people who habitually drink "soft" water are more likely to die of cardiovascular diseases than people who drink "hard" water.

Schroeder's work has been corroborated in Canada, England, Sweden and Japan.

Meeting on Chernobyl nuclear disaster begins

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Nuclear industry experts from more than 50 countries began a five-day meeting today to discuss a Soviet report that says human error caused the Chernobyl disaster.

More than 500 experts were going over the 382-page report on the April 26 accident at a conference sponsored by the International Atomic Energy Agency. The United Nations agency provides expertise and support for peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

"The accident is traced above all to human failures," said Austrian scientist Walter Binner, director of the Institute for Reactor Safety near Vienna.

"The service personnel in Chernobyl could turn off some safety systems manually and that apparently is what happened. So you naturally ask yourself what good are safety systems if they can be blocked by human misjudgment," said Binner, who received the report last week.

The conference is closed to the public, but some of the contents of the report have already been made public by the news media and the Soviets.

"More information will probably come out in dribs and drabs during the course of the week," said an agency official. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Soviets have said human error was almost exclusively to blame for the steam and chemical explosions that tore open Chernobyl's No. 4 reactor on April 26, setting off a fire and releasing radiation into the air.

A report in The New York Times last Friday citing the Soviet study said it raised the possibility that 6,500 people will die prematurely because of the accident at the Ukrainian power plant.

Fish, vegetation and buildings near the plant will remain contaminated, according to the newspaper, and topsoil scraped up in parts of the 1,000 square mile evacuation zone was buried elsewhere as contaminated waste.

The accident at the plant 80 miles north of Kiev killed at least 31 people, released radioactivity over much of the world, forced the evacuation of 135,000 people and caused $2.8 billion in damages.

The 28-member Soviet delegation is headed by Professor Valery Legasov, deputy director of the I.V. Kurchatov Institute of Atomic Energy, the nation's leading nuclear power authority.

Western diplomats, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Legasov would likely be asked to elaborate on the report, which was prepared in two parts. The first explains the accident's causes and the second is a supplement describing the reactor design, medical and environmental consequences of the accident and the decontamination project.

The agency official said East-West tensions are unlikely at the conference because it will deal mainly with technical issues.

Legasov told reporters Thursday at a news conference in Moscow that shortly before the accident, workers at Chernobyl were testing how long a turbine could be kept operating during a simulated power failure.

Japanese protest arrival of U.S. battleship

SASEBO, Japan (AP) — A flotilla of protesters swarmed around the U.S. battleship New Jersey as it cruised into this port city, and thousands massed on land to demonstrate against the nuclear weapons they claim are aboard.

Two other U.S. warships capable of firing Tomahawk missiles, the seaborne version of the cruise missile, arrived at other Japanese ports on Sunday, and were also met by demonstrators.

No major protests were scheduled for today, authorities said.

Japan bans the possession, production or introduction into the country of nuclear arms.

The United States refuses to say if its ships are nuclear-armed, but has pledged to consult beforehand with the Japanese government if it intends to bring nuclear weapons here.

Japan maintains that since no such talks have taken place, the United States must be abiding by Japanese principles.

More than 7,000 protesters held highly charged rallies Sunday at two Sasebo parks, according to police.

The Maritime Safety Agency sent 51 patrol boats to keep away dozens of small craft carrying people opposing the visit of the 45,000-ton New Jersey to the port city about 60 miles north of Nagasaki.

A maritime agency official said 42 vessels chartered by the Japan Socialist Party; the socialist-affiliated General Council of Labor Unions; the extremist Battle Flag Faction, and other groups circled the battleship, waving red banners denouncing the visit.

Leftist protesters swing their fists aboard red-banner-flying chartered fishing boats as they denounce Sunday's arrival of the U.S. warship New Jersey at Sasebo, in southern Japan.

The official, who refused to be further identified, said five other boats carried rightists who supported the battleship's call.

Police reported arresting five protesters, all members of the Battle Flag Faction, for assault during a protest march.

The New Jersey was welcomed by representatives of the U.S. Navy base at Sasebo, the local Chamber of Commerce and the Japan-American Society of Sasebo. A Japanese military band played "America the Beautiful" and "When the Saints Go Marching In."

The New Jersey, which saw combat during World War II and the Vietnam War, was recommissioned in 1982 after being mothballed for 13 years.

"We appreciate the sentiments of the Japanese people with regard to nuclear weapons," said Rear Adm. Raymond Taylor, commander of the New Jersey's battle group.

But he said: "We do not discuss the weapons loads, conventional or nuclear, that our ships have, and that is the right military thing to do."

He also refused to comment on a Japanese report that the New Jersey would take part in maneuvers off the Soviet Union next month.

The Yomiuri Shimbun newspaper said Sunday that 30 U.S. warships, including the New Jersey and two aircraft carriers, would participate in an exercise in the Sea of Okhotsk north of Japan.

About 5,700 demonstrators gathered at Sasebo's Matsuura Park and denounced the administration of Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, U.S.-Japan defense ties and the arms race.

"The visit of the New Jersey is to try to get Japanese accustomed to the idea of nuclear weapons, and increase the nuclear might of the United States," charged the Labor Unions Council vice Chairman, Toshio Kamezaki.

At Kibata Park, about 1,400 supporters of the Japan Communist Party demanded cancellation of the New Jersey's 10-day visit.

About 3,600 police were deployed throughout Sasebo to keep order, according to police spokesman Haneda.

Also on Sunday, the nuclear-powered cruiser Long Beach entered the U.S. Navy base at Yokosuka, south of Tokyo, and the frigate Merrill called on Kure port near Hiroshima, said Cmdr. Perry Bishop, public affairs officer for U.S. Navy Forces, Japan.

Salvadoran army has edge as peace talks begin

By BRYNA BRENNAN

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — As the government and leftist guerrillas prepare for peace talks set for Sept. 19, the Salvadoran army clearly holds an edge on the battlefield.

But the guerrillas, although fewer in number and lacking a military advantage, show no sign they will give up should the talks fail.

In the months before both sides agreed Saturday to hold new talks, Salvadoran soldiers had been conducting longer and bigger military operations, occupying isolated war-scarred villages and moving into traditional rebel bastions.

U.S.-trained soldiers with American-made weapons patrolled the rutted and winding Pan American Highway, once the scene of numerous clashes between the army and the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, composed of five guerrilla groups.

The army now controls scores of hamlets, where troops fashion barracks from abandoned adobe houses.

In seven years, the war has claimed an estimated 61,000 lives and been sustained by $670 million in U.S. military aid.

The army now numbers 53,000 personnel, 4½ times the 12,000 of 1980.

The guerrillas' numbers are said to have fallen from 10,000 in 1981 to 3,000 to 5,000. But they are described as still fiercely determined.

"Psychologically the terrorists are quite militant," Lt. Col. Mauricio Vargas said in a recent interview at his command in the war-torn northeastern province of Morazan.

"There exists a vulnerable people here. They can be used by the guerrillas."

The peace talks, arranged by delegations of both sides in Mexico City, are scheduled to be held in the eastern farming town of Sesori. There was no indication either side has changed its position since the first two rounds of peace talks ended in deadlock in October and November 1984.

President Jose Napoleon Duarte's government, which issued the call for the new talks June 1, insists the guerrillas lay down their arms and join the political process.

Rebel leaders want to be part of a new provisional government that would set elections. They also want guerrilla fighters to be part of the armed forces. Duarte has rejected those demands as unconstitutional.

Battlefield control is not the only factor in the background of the peace talks. El Salvador's military high command and knowledgeable Western sources say also to be considered are the unresolved economic, social and political roots of the struggle.

Wealth still remains in the hands of a few. About half of the country's 5.2 million people are unemployed or underemployed. Field workers earn little more than a dollar a day.

Duarte's 2-year-old Christian Democratic administration is fragile, lacking support from the right wing, various labor unions and even the armed forces.

The senior army command, greatly professionalized by U.S. training, remains basically unbridled. Officers, for example, are immune from prosecution in killings and kidnappings.

The guerrillas are chiefly concentrated along the northern Honduran border or the demilitarized zone between the two countries. They are not in permament control of any area and have made no recent attempt to carry the war to San Salvador or other urban centers, which they did before without success.

Their largest victory in several years came in June, with a surprise attack on a major eastern army garrison that left 57 soldiers dead.

For the most part, the rebels have carried out economic sabotage, blowing up bridges, downing power lines and felling telephone polls.

Their most deadly weapons now are handmade mines intended for soldiers but which often maim and kill civilians harvesting corn. The use of mines has been heavily criticized.

The bulk of the population, particularly in the countryside, has tired of the war and the interference in their lives by both the army and the guerrillas.

Vargas' troops recently occupied for the second time in two months the mountain hamlet of Perquin, 125 miles northeast of San Salvador and long considered the rebel capital.

Human rights groups bitterly protested what they said were random air bombings by the Salvador military forces using U.S.-supplied A-37 jet fighters and helicopters.

Perquin is typical of the war-affected towns, occupied at any given time by either the army or the rebels.

The red doors of the shellpocked, whitewashed Roman Catholic Church stay open, but there hasn't been a priest in years. The hamlet has also long been without running water or electricity.

Saliha Scheinhardt

Turkish guest-workers no longer welcome

By SUSAN J. SMITH

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Author Saliha Scheinhardt has lived in West Germany for 19 years, belongs to the country's prestigious PEN club, and has won a literary prize for her work.

But the Turkish-born woman says that when she applied to become a West German citizen, she was turned down.

"As a free-lance writer I don't have a steady income, so the law says I can't be a citizen," she said.

The 35-year-old writer was awarded a $22,000 prize by the southwestern city of Offenbach in October for her books about the problems facing foreigners who live in West Germany.

After a quarter-century in West Germany, the foreigners who came here as workers during the postwar economic boom are producing more success stories like Ms. Scheinhardt's.

But federal statistics indicate that, like Ms. Scheinhardt, most of the 4.4 million foreigners still encounter daily difficulties, whether they are looking for an apartment, trying to learn a trade, or applying for citizenship.

"You have to fight for whatever you get," said Mehmet Karacaoglu, 21, a native of Turkey who recently graduated from a high school near Bremen among the top of his class. "Nothing is given to you as a foreigner."

"The Turks have won a foothold, but a very small one," said Ozay Fecht, 32, star of "Forty Square Meters of Germany," a Turkish-directed film now playing in theaters in West Germany.

Most of the foreigners first came here in the 1950s and 1960s, when West Germany actively sought so-called "Gastarbeiter" (guest workers) from other countries because of a labor shortage.

But after unemployment shot up to between 8 and 9 percent in the 1980s, resentment toward the foreigners also rose. In 1983, Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government bean encouraging the "guest workers" to go home, even paying the way for 300,000 of them.

The 1.4 million Turks are the largest group of foreigners living in West Germany. Most clearly do not want to return home, since unemployment is even worse there.

A Labor Ministry study released this month said West Germany is making progress toward integrating foreigners who have remained. The children of foreigners are increasingly better educated, it said, and foreigners are gradually moving into more skilled jobs.

But the study also said about half the foreigners still live in their own neighborhoods, largely segregated from Germans. Only slightly more than half report having contact with Germans in their free time. Only about 25 percent of young foreigners obtain the apprenticeships necessary for entry to many skilled trades.

Some Turks have succeeded in the arts by portraying the problems of foreigners here.

Ms. Scheinhardt's book "Drei Zypressen" (Three Cypresses) describes the problems faced by traditional Turkish women in Western society. "Forty Square Meters of Germany," the film in which Fecht starred, tells the story of a Turkish woman whose guest-worker husband locks her in the house because he does not want her to be exposed to West German culture.

A Turkish painter in West Berlin, Hanefi Yeter, has sold 300,000 postcards with paintings of guest workers in the divided city.

But even successful Turks say foreigners continue to face discrimination.

Mexico's current slump worse than one in 1982

By SALLY JACOBSEN

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico, battered by soaring inflation and plunging oil prices, has fallen into an economic slump that business people and economists say is worse than the severe financial troubles of 1982.

"There's a lot more uncertainty," said Jonathan Heath, senior economist at the private Mexican forecasting project of CIEMEX-Wharton in Philadelphia.

"People are more pessimistic. They don't think things are going to improve. A lot of motors of growth have been been eroded.

"It's worse now (than in 1982), definitely," he said.

A survey of about 2,000 small, medium and large companies in the Mexico City metropolitan area found that 84 percent of the them believed the economic situation was worse than four years ago. Nearly 13 percent said it was the same and the rest thought it was better.

The annual survey by the Center for Economic Studies in the Private Sector, which is affiliated with the prominent Business Coordinating Council, found that 78 percent of the business executives said uncertainty about the economic situation was the key factor in limiting economic activity.

Also contributing to the weakness, they said, were low demand for their products and a scarcity of money for loans.

Slightly more than half expressed a lack of confidence in government measures to shore up the economy, according to the survey, which was conducted in July and made public last week.

The nation's economic crisis began in 1982. The inflation rate soared, the value of the peso currency deteriorated, and the economy contracted.

In August of that year, Mexico ran out of money to pay its foreign debt and triggered the Third World debt crisis.

Then-President Jose Lopez Portillo reluctantly accepted a bailout plan fashioned by the International Monetary Fund. It required the nation to take belt-tightening measures that have strapped its impoverished population of nearly 77 million.

The nation's latest financial troubles were sparked by the unexpected and sharp fall in oil prices on the world market. This year, the government probably will earn less than half the $13.3 billion posted in oil sales in 1985, analysts say.

Economist Rogelio Ramirez de la O, however, described the situation now as "deterioration with hope." In 1982, he said, there was "simply deterioration."

He said the latest financial crunch has forced the government to take long-needed steps to bolster the economy. "We should expect the Mexican government to move more quickly than in the last three years," he said.

The government recently moved to liberalize trade with other countries, signing an agreement to join the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, or GATT, an international trade arrangement.

It also has boosted prices of tortillas, subway and bus fares, and gasoline in an effort to pare the government's red-ink spending. Moreover, it has shut down one of its money-losing steel companies and plans to rid itself of other state firms to save money.

The nation's latest financial troubles were sparked by the unexpected and sharp fall in oil prices on the world market. This year, the government probably will earn less than half the $13.3 billion posted in oil sales in 1985, analysts say.

Mexico, the world's fourth largest crude producer, had in the past gained 70 percent of its foreign earnings from oil sales. The money was used to meet payments on the nearly $100 billion foreign debt, the second highest in the developing world after Brazil.

With falling oil revenues, the government of President Miguel de la Madrid was forced to seek outside financial help, recently agreeing to the outlines of a $12 billion rescue plan from the international financial community.

The help, though, will not arrive in time to change this year's prospects.

The economy already has slipped into a recession, the third downturn in five years, analysts say. They expect the economy to contract by an inflation-adjusted 3 percent to 4 percent for the year as a whole.

Moreover, consumer prices have skyrocketed, surging at an annual rate of 96 percent in the first half of the year. Analysts expect the inflation rate will top 100 percent by year's end, ahead of the 98.8 percent of 1982.

Treasury Secretary Gustavo Petricioli, in a report last week on the economy, said industrial production in the first five months of this year was off 2.1 percent from the same period a year ago. Hefty declines were posted in the capital goods, mining and construction industries.

The report said the value of the peso currency on the free market fell 38.1 percent against the U.S. dollar in the first half of the year, and the government-set rate plunged 53.2 percent. The controlled rate is used in about 80 percent of commercial transactions. The free-market rate is quoted for tourism and most border transactions.

The free-market peso traded at about 700 pesos to the dollar on Friday. The controlled rate was about 680.

Dollar stronger

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar began the week slightly stronger on European markets today in quiet trading, with dealers predicting little movement before Thursday's key meeting of West German central bank policymakers. Gold was down.

A public holiday in Britain shut London financial markets, contributing to the lull.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose to a closing 153.80 yen from Friday's 153.40. Later, in Europe, it was quoted at 153.70 yen.

Dealers in Tokyo attributed the rise to heavy dollar-buying by unidentified traders in Abu Dhabi.

Heads of the Bundesbank, Germany's central bank, are to discuss whether to react to last week's cut in the U.S. discount rate by half a percentage point. Dealers in Frankfurt said they did not expect the Bundesbank to cut any of the main interest rates, because they did not want to stimulate any growth in the money supply.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

—2.0430 West German marks, up from 2.0410

—1.6460 Swiss francs, up from 1.6450

—6.6945 French francs, up from 6.6800

—2.3058 Dutch guilders, up from 2.3025

—1,408.25 Italian lire, up from 1,408.00

—1.3918 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3915

In Europe, the British pound was quoted at $1.4820, compared with $1.4925 Friday.

London gold and silver bullion markets were closed. In Zurich, gold was fetching a bid price of $378.25, down from $384 late Friday.

Hong Kong markets also were closed for a holiday.

Texas moving quickly toward allowing interstate banking

DALLAS (AP) — Texas, the nation's largest state to ban interstate banking of any kind, is on the verge of opening its doors to outside banks for the first time in its 150-year history.

"It was just something whose time has come," said Texas Banking Commissioner James Sexton, who first proposed the change in a meeting with Gov. Mark White last month.

New laws adopted by 35 other states and the toppling price of oil, which threatens the health of many Texas banks, helped prompt a sudden change of heart by banking groups that previously opposed interstate banking.

"People are finally starting to realize that you can't bank in 1986 with laws written in 1904," said Frank Anderson, a banking analyst with Weber, Hall, Sale & Associates in Dallas.

The state Senate last week quickly approved proposed legislation allowing interstate banking, and political observers expect the House to follow suit this week.

With 15 bank closings in Texas this year — a record for any state — bankers are anxious to attract out-of-state money and suitors for institutions in trouble.

"The weakening financial condition and funding of several large banks and the rapid deterioration of the economy forces Texas to seek diversification, and to do that, you need new capital," said banking lobbyist F. Hagen McMahon Jr.

AP Laserphoto

James Sexton, Texas Banking Commissioner, says interstate banking is something "whose time has come."

McMahon's Independent Bankers Association of Texas had long opposed such changes in the law, as well as branch banking, which is common in most states across the country.

Moving through the Legislature hand-in-hand with the interstate banking proposal, and also winning Senate approval, is a bill allowing countywide branch banking.

The impetus for branch banking stems mainly from Attorney General Jim Mattox's ruling last spring that a law allowing drive-in banks located up to 20,000 feet from the main institution violated the state constitution.

"This is the only state in the nation with a constitution stating a bank can't do business in more than one place," said Sam Kimberlin Jr. of the Texas Bankers Association, which represents both large and small banks.

If the branch banking measure passes the House, the state's voters would have to approve it in November before it could go into effect.

Texas' law against branch banking often is a surprise to new residents of the state.

FDIC offers notes to sell failed banks

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — With the number of bank failures approaching the 100 mark this year, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. has been having a harder and harder time finding willing buyers for the insolvent institutions.

Prospective buyers have remained scarce, even though the FDIC assumes all the bad loans of the failed bank and almost always provides an infusion of several million dollars of new funds.

But such generous terms are often refused for sound business reasons. When a small agricultural bank fails in the Midwest, for example, an acquiring bank has few places to seek borrowers other than the already depressed agricultural sector, where good borrowers are hard to find.

"Banks got this big chunk of cash, but didn't have any place to lend the money," said the FDIC's chairman, L. William Seidman. "They were telling us it made no sense then to bid for the failed banks."

So, in June, the FDIC began a new approach to making the takeovers more attractive. In addition to offering cash, in some cases it began offering FDIC notes to the banks. Paying between 6.75 and 7.5 percent, the notes enable the acquiring bank to immediately begin earning interest on the government funds that otherwise might have taken several months to lend out to suitable borrowers.

The offer has apparently found willing candidates. The innovative transactions have been instrumental in attracting buyers in more than half of the 31 bank failures since the end of June, the agency said. So far, acquiring banks have received more than $200 million of the notes.

According to Alan Whitney, a spokesman for the FDIC, the interest rate paid on the notes is slightly above the average yield on the FDIC's own portfolio, and the banks can make a little more than if they had invested in Treasury securities.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Factory orders post 4.3 percent rise in July

WASHINGTON (AP) — Factory orders for durable goods rose 4.3 percent in July for the biggest one-month gain since 1984, the government said.

The report, released Friday by the Commerce Department, said overall orders climbed to $107.2 billion in July after a tiny 0.1 percent increase in June.

Last month's gain was the biggest since an 8.2 percent increase in November 1984.

But economists said the news wasn't as promising for the sluggish economy as it seemed, largely because the gains were concentrated in military hardware.

Railroad withdraws bid to purchase Conrail

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration's 18-month battle to sell Conrail to the Norfolk Southern Corp. has ended with the railroad's withdrawal of its bid to purchase the government-owned freight line.

The announcement, made on Friday, clears the way for Congress to move ahead on legislation that would sell Conrail through a public stock offering and maintain it as a single railroad.

Conrail serves 15 states from the Northeast to Missouri.

Federal Reserve plans to ease credit conditions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Policymakers at the Federal Reserve decided at their July meeting to loosen credit conditions in an effort to stimulate the sluggish economy, according to minutes of the meeting.

Members of the Federal Open Market Committee voted 10-1 to follow a strategy that would push interest rates lower despite objections from one member that such a course might threaten renewed inflation later, minutes released Friday said.

Since the meeting on July 8-9, the Fed has twice cut its discount rate, the fee it charges on loans to financial institutions. The rate now stands at 5.5 percent.

Pan Am, FAA agree on $2 million penalty

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pan American World Airways has agreed to pay nearly $2 million in penalties for safety violations uncovered by government inspectors earlier this year.

The Federal Aviation Administration said Friday that the agency and Pan Am settled on the fine after Pan Am reorganized and strengthened its maintenance operation, where most of the violations were concentrated.

FAA Administrator Donald Engen said Pan Am has taken prompt action to correct the deficiencies, including expanding its maintenance force by about 200 people.

Investor drops hostile bid for Freuehauf Corp.

NEW YORK (AP) — Asher B. Edelman's five-month battle to acquire Fruehauf Corp. ended abruptly when the investor agreed to drop his hostile offer and Fruehauf accepted a sweetened $49.50-a-share bid from a friendly merger partner.

The agreement reached by the three parties also calls for Fruehauf's friendly suitor, a group led by the investment firm Merrill Lynch & Co. and certain Fruehauf executives, to buy Edelman's 9.4 percent stake in Fruehauf, a Detroit-based maker of truck trailers and auto parts.

Edelman withdrew his offer on Friday.

Adobe Resources reports income

NEW YORK (SWN) — Adobe Resources Corp. reported second quarter revenues of $31.1 million resulting in $2.1 million of income from operations before full-cost ceiling impairment, equity in loss of affiliates and income taxes. During the second quarter, Adobe recorded a full-cost ceiling impairment of $20.5 million as a result of lower oil and gas prices and recorded its proportionate share of affiliates' losses totaling $3.1 million, resulting in a net loss for the period of $23.5 million. These results compare with first quarter revenues of $33.6 million which resulted in $697,000 income from operations before equity in earnings of affiliates and income taxes. Net income for the first quarter was $409,000. Adobe did not record a ceiling impairment in its first quarter.

After preferred dividend requirements of $4.9 million, the second quarter loss per common share was $1.37 compared with a loss of $.21 in the first quarter. Cash provided by operations for the second quarter was $11.8 million compared with $10.8 million for the first quarter.

Adobe Resources was formed Oct. 31, 1985 upon the consolidation of Madison Resources, Inc. and Adobe Oil & Gas Corp.

Auctions, sealed bids helping FDIC reduce realty holdings

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) is continuing to use the auction block as an easy means of liquidating its real estate holdings acquired from failed banks in the Southwest. Tuesday and Wednesday auctioneers will call down bids for 48 residential, commercial and vacant development properties in New Mexico.

Tuesday's auction at the Hobbs Country Club is expected to dispose of 26 properties throughout Lea and Eddy counties, including homes in Hobbs, Artesia, Carlsbad and Lovington. Commercial buildings, lots and larger land parcels will also be offered for bid.

On Wednesday, the bidding venue moves to the Sales Pavilion at Ruidoso Downs Racetrack, where properties primarily in Chaves and Lincoln counties will be auctioned, including a condominium, duplexes, single family homes and mobile homes in addition to commercial holdings. Also on the Ruidoso sale bill is a 320-acre parcel of farm land in Otero County, near Tularosa and an office, warehouse and storage complex in the northwestern New Mexico town of Aztec in San Juan County.

Further FDIC liquidation plans call for a sealed bid auction Sept. 22 at the Midland Consolidated Office of the FDIC which will cover 13 prime multifamily and commercial properties. Included are 11 townhomes plus undeveloped acreage at Lafayette Place in north Midland; 73 completed or partially completed condominiums and excess acreage at Las Colinas in northwest Midland; 40 condominiums at Willowtree in south Midland; and, 27 apartments at Casa Carrizo in the central business district.

Other properties offered at sealed bid include vacant lots in and near the central business district and in outlying areas, as well as office and industrial developed property. Minimum bid levels for each property are set independently and range from $97,500 to $2.8 million.

Another open public real estate auction is expected to be held in mid- to late-October, according to FDIC Real Estate department head John T. Fell. The first such public real estate auction held in late July yielded more than $1 million for the FDIC.

Family leads expansion of chemical business

PORT NECHES, Texas (AP) — Charles Cogliandro isn't much interested in trade protection barriers, nor does he have any particular sympathy for manufacturers who cry foul at regulations designed to protect the environment.

"A lot of U.S. companies talk about trade barriers. That's not the way to protect U.S. industry," says the vice president of operations at the Chemall plant in Port Neches. "As far as we're concerned, if you're inefficient you shouldn't be in business. We are going to knock the Japanese and the Taiwanese on their cans."

Strong words, and rather unusual for an American businessman these days.

Since 1980 Chemall has been a subsidiary of Calabrian Chemicals Corp., and Cogliandro is leading a $5 million expansion plan at the chemical plant.

Part of Calabrian's inheritance in the Chemall plant was an environmental problem that placed the site in the Top 10 polluters in the state. It is a label Calabrian has strenuously fought.

"The fact that we wound up on the top polluters list really upset us," Cogliandro says. "We choose to attack those problems and cooperate with state clean up, over $2 million strictly to clean up a problem we had nothing to do with."

"We treat our customers with a tremendous amount of respect. Why shouldn't there be that prevailing attitude with respect for the environment? We are going to have to live in this community — why destroy it?"

Calabrian, headquartered in Houston and New York, is a family business. Charles, along with his older brother Robert, two sisters, Helene and Jeanne Holman, immersed their youthful energy into the company more than 10 years ago to take a small import-export business into a multimillion-dollar chemical manufacturing business.

"Our father told us all to get jobs at big companies," says Helene Cogliandro, vice president of purchasing. "We all had the education. So of course we all came into the company. My father always had a hard time working for somebody else, and I guess that was ingrained in us."

The company, Calabrian, is now the largest importer of iodine to the United States, according to Charles. It pulled in revenues of $24 million in 1980, but by last year it had hit $40 million, and he confidently predicts they will reach $100 million in three years.

The Chemall purchase is the first move by the company to get into chemical manufacturing. It produces sodium thiosulfate, a product used for absorbing chlorine out of waste water and in the film developing process. Part of the expanded plant will produce phyhalocyanine blue, a dye used in ball point pen ink.

At a time when foreign companies seem to be taking U.S. technology home to begin their own production, the Cogliandros are reversing the trend.

"It was our longer-term plan, that once we had established markets for those products, to phase into our own production of the same products," Charles says. "What we did worked extremely well."

Under the supervision of plant manager Brian Davis, Chemall is on the verge of turning a profit for the first time in many years.

"I have to say this is the most exciting and enjoyable place that I have worked," said Davis, a chemical industry veteran. "It's largely because they are such a dynamic operation. In large companies you have to fight and scrap to get a decision. Here one telephone call often clears something."

One of the most refreshing ideals the Cogliandros have is their insistance that any chemicals be made without producing a waste product.

"The previous owners were not environmentally conscious, in fact, a lot of them were environmentally unconscious," Charles says. "We are choosing to make Chemall a model for the community, not an object of ridicule."

At 32, Charles Cogliandro is intense; get him started talking about the chemical business and he speaks passionately and hurriedly. He says he gets his business intuition and intensity from his family.

"We have it in our blood. We've all really got that same disease," he says. His sister, Helene, agrees.

"We're sort of born into the business. We were always exposed to a lot of international people, and I'm talking at the age of 10," she says. "My parents always had a lot of government people coming over. Even in high school, my mother used to come in and give talks about their business overseas."

Their mother was born in Germany and raised in Switzerland, and their father's parents immigrated from the Reggio di Calabria area of Italy near Sicily. They started an import-export business in 1946 and also worked in a barter system with the U.S. government. Calabrian was opened in 1970.

"He was going to keep it small, but when we came out (1975-76), and he had put ... all four kids through college ... we really owed him something," says Charles.

One trait passed on to the Cogliandro children apparently was a strong working ethic.

"I have lived with that plant, both day and night, for the last couple of years," says Charles, who beside the classes he took on his way to an MBA, has no chemical training. "I lived in that plant and learned a lot about chemistry. I love to cook, and chemistry and cooking to me are basically the same."

coincided with the report that the second-quarter gross national product grew at an annual rate of only six-tenths of 1 percent.

That fueled speculation that if the third quarter also showed growth of less than 1 percent, a sequester could be avoided. Under the law, the provision requiring the cuts would not be set off if there are two consecutive quarters in which growth was less than 1 percent. The idea: to avoid spending cuts at a time when the economy needs stimulation.

Though most prominent economists are not forecasting such a lagging economy, some do see a bleak third quarter.

Robert J. Eggert, who surveys 51 of the nation's leading economic forecasters each month, said that four of the group see third-quarter growth of less than 1 percent, while four others are predicting between 1 percent and 1.6 percent. While the Aug. 10 consensus forecast is for 2.2 percent growth in the third period, Eggert says that economists are now lowering their forecasts because of continued economic softness. In the next report, to appear around Sept. 10, the consensus forecast could drop below 2 percent, he said.

Curiously, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings "detriggering" only occurs if each of the two consecutive quarters has less than 1 percent growth, noted Paul Manchester, an economist with the Joint Economic Committee of Congress.

Thus, two quarters with growth rates of "six-tenths of 1 percent and 1 percent would not lead to a detriggering, but nine-tenths of 1 percent and nine-tenths of 1 percent would," he said, "even though the economics in terms of the level of real GNP would be weaker in the former case."

—T. Boone Pickens is coming to the nation's capital to rally support for the American shareholder. This week, the Texas oilman and corporate raider will begin his United Shareholders Association campaign, which plans to lobby Congress and the Securities and Exchange Commission for greater management accountability. The Pickens group has picked a convenient name: Its initials are USA.

—Robert Zoellick, deputy assistant secretary of the Treasury for Financial Institutions Policy, has become executive assistant to Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III. His replacement has not been named.

Soviet Union cuts oil exports

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union, apparently intent on making sweeping changes in its foreign trade system, announced Friday it will cut oil exports to the West by 100,000 barrels a day and seek to join the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Officials also said Moscow was studying the question of launching joint ventures with capitalist countries and a team of lawyers has been formed to study the unique problems of ventures between free world and communist countries.

The moves, which were announced outside the Soviet Union earlier this week, were among many signs in recent months that the Communist nation is making a major effort to increase trade and cooperation with the West.

The decision to cut oil exports to Western Europe was taken at the urging of Iranian Oil Minister Gholamreza Aqazadeh, who paid a three-day visit to Moscow earlier this week, Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said.

"The Iranian official informed the Soviet Union about the recent OPEC conference and about its decision (to cut oil production) and the reasons for it," he said.

BANKING—

"If you have an account at one bank and you're across town and want to cash a check at a (subsidiary) bank there, you can't do it," said Sandra Flannigan, an analyst with Paine, Webber in Houston. "Just about every state has branch banking."

She and other analysts say consumers stand only to gain from both the branch banking and interstate banking proposals.

"Consumers are going to benefit from both measures," Ms. Flannigan said. "Either way you look — if we are talking about banks acquiring Texas banks, this could offer more services to consumers."

But not everyone thinks interstate banking is a good thing.

Chuck Doyle, a Texas City banker who is president of the Independent Bankers of America, said the proposals are "too far-reaching. It's more than necessary."

"What they're doing ... is opening our marketplace at the most vulnerable time. We're selling for far less than book value. When you're in that kind of position, it's going to result in ownership of major banks outside the state," Doyle said.

Anderson, the Dallas analyst, said many bankers were hoping Texas would enter the interstate banking arena after working out some of the state's problems "so they could acquire rather than be acquired. Things have gotten much worse than anyone anticipated."

Increased refinery prices raise gas prices

LOS ANGELES (AP) — American oil refineries anxious to take advantage of cheap foreign crude raised their rates the past two weeks, causing gas pump prices to jump nearly 1½ cents a gallon, an oil industry analyst said.

Refineries have raised their gasoline prices to wholesalers by just under 4 cents a gallon since early August, analyst Jan Lundberg said Sunday. Wholesalers, who are replenishing their inventories with cheap overseas crude, have been able to raise pump prices because of the higher summer demand for gas, he said.

"The price increase has been rather moderate and is stabilizing," said Lundberg, editor of the Lundberg Letter, a weekly analysis of the world oil market. "That will continue for at least a little while."

The price of all grades of gasoline nationwide jumped 1.4 cents to 87.51 cents from Aug. 8 to Aug. 22, said Lundberg, whose survey of 16,000 gasoline stations nationwide found self-service regular unleaded costing an average of 79.9 cents a gallon, and full-service premium $1.193 nationwide.

Lundberg said refineries, now operating at 85 percent capacity to move as much of the cheap foreign crude as possible, eventually will have to reverse the trend of rising prices when consumer gas-buying drops in the fall.

Less driving will cause the wholesalers' storage facilities to reach capacity, meaning they won't buy as much fuel from the refineries, which in turn will lower prices, he said.

"The refiners will be forced to give cuts to keep moving the product through," Lundberg said.

Grain

CHICAGO (UPI) — A bearish weather forecast and widespread selling pressured grain and soybean futures at midmorning Monday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Corn was down 1 to 2 ¾, soybeans off 1 to 3 ¼ and wheat off 1 ¼ to 2 ¼ cents.

Friday's weakness carried over into the early trading. Professionals were featured sellers of soybeans while commercial and professional selling dominated the activity in the grain pits.

Several contract lows were established in corn and soybeans amid continued indications of a bumper harvest. The weather outlook calls for normal or near-normal conditions across the Midwest for most of the week.

Rumors that Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng will lower the soybean loan rate prompted additional selling. Lyng said Friday the rate probably would be announced by the end of this week.

The lack of export business continued to depress corn and wheat futures, however, there was fairly active commercial buying at the current price levels.

Interior and Gulf basis levels were steady and country movement was light.

The Agriculture Department said Friday it had offered to sell Tunisia 800,000 tons of wheat under the export bonus program. The government also said the subsidy of $13 per ton for the sale of wheat to the Soviet Union would not be changed.

Stock Market Loses

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices recovered somewhat from sharp early lows, but were still down after a morning of moderate trading.

At noon, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials stood at 1874.44, off by 13.36. Earlier, the closely watched index had been down by as much as 17 points.

Decliners outnumbered gainers by a 12-to-5 margin, while volume on the Big Board came to 47.9 million shares. Friday's noon volume was 59 million shares.

Among most active issues at noon, IBM stood at 138⅞, up ⅞.

ICN Pharmaceuticals was down 7½ at 20½, after reports questioned an earlier analysis based on a drug ICN is testing on patients with acquired immunitiy deficiency syndrome.

Sears and Roebuck was down ¾ at 46½; Beneficial Corp., was off ¼ at 72¾. On Friday Beneficial leaped 28½, after the finance company said it was for sale.

Mobil was up ⅛ at 35½; Exxon was up ⅛ at 65¾; and Schlumberger was up 1 at 33⅛.

UAL Inc. was up 1⅞ at 54⅞, following reports that People Express would put its Frontier Airlines subsidiary into bankruptcy protection — a move that dimmed prospects that UAL's United Airlines unit would acquire Frontier.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Indemnity bond protects issuer in case it's lost, in wrong hands

By BILL DOYLE

Q. It has been my custom to make a photocopy of every stock and bond certificate I buy. I then put the original certificate in my safe deposit box and keep the photocopy in my desk. But, after purchasing a registered $20,000 utility authority bond, I lost the certificate. It must have gone into my wastepaper basket.

I contacted my broker and the bank that is trustee for the bond issue. I received and filled out a lost security affidavit and was told I must obtain an indemnity bond. My insurance agent informs me the premium for such a bond would be $800 a year. Isn't that cost out of line?

A. Way out of line. Under the rules of the Surety Association of America, the normal cost of that type of indemnity bond is 3 percent of the lost security's value. And that's a one-time charge, not an annual premium. So, you should pay $600 just once. There's no reason to be hit for $800 a year until the bond reaches its maturity date or you sell the bond.

Doyle

The indemnity bond protects the issuer, just in case the lost certificate turns up in the hands of some other legitimate owner. This is not a rap at you. But such things have been known to happen. It may be that your insurance agent isn't familiar with this type of indemnity bond.

If that agent can't obtain such a bond at a reasonable cost, contact your brokerage firm and/or the bond trustee again. They will be able to steer you in the right direction. More investors should follow your excellent usual procedure of putting certificates into safe deposit boxes and keeping photocopies and/or other records handy. It's a shame you slipped up with that one bond.

* * *

Q. I purchased 100 shares of stock. After several weeks, I notified the brokerage firm that I had not received the certificate. They said it was the responsibility of a clearing house brokerage to ship the certificate. After several phone calls to that firm, I was told the certificate had been mailed and probably was lost.

They finally sent me a proof of loss form. I returned it, properly notarized, via Federal Express. I have the signed receipt. That was months ago. How long should it take to receive the new certificate? Is there any way I can expedite the process? I have stopped doing business with that brokerage firm.

A. In a case such as this, you should have had the replacement certificate within two weeks — three weeks, at the most. Even though the clearing house brokerage mails certificates and handles other details, that does not relieve the brokerage firm through which you bought the stock of "responsibility."

You were wise to stop doing business there. You can light a fire under both the brokerage through which you made that purchase and the clearing house brokerage by contacting the Securities and Exchange Commission, as should everyone who has a complaint against a brokerage firm.

* * *

Q. When I bought stock, I was informed it would take four to eight weeks for the certificate to reach me. I was not informed that, after 90 days, the brokerage firm could not be held liable for a certificate lost in the mail.

Five months after buying 100 shares of stock, I realized I had not received the certificate. I contacted the broker and was told the certificate had been mailed four weeks after my purchase. I also was told I would have to provide an indemnity bond to obtain a replacement certificate. Can this be true?

A. Yes, if the papers you signed when you opened an account at the brokerage specify that the firm's mail loss insurance policy covers 90 days and it is the customers' responsibility to notify the firm if a certificate is not received within that time.

Some brokerage firms limit their liability for certificates lost in delivery with such clauses in their account agreements. Some don't. This is the old story of "buyer beware." You should check the small print in every agreement you sign, just as you should with every contract.

Agreement on new tax bill gives notion that philosophical issues are laid to rest

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — After weeks of hassling, bargaining, negotiating, trading and arguing, the House-Senate agreement on a new tax bill gives the impression that the major philosophical issues have been laid to rest.

They haven't, and some of them inevitably will produce continued criticism, public debate, lobbying and, in the case of those who feel they have been adversely affected, attempts to change the bill even if it is enacted.

There is the matter of IRAs — individual retirement accounts.

Only a few years ago IRAs were promoted as a private-sector alternative to Social Security. Tax deductions and deferrals would be allowed to those who saved for their own retirement.

Many Democrats and Republicans felt at the time that Social Security could be bankrupted by a growing number of beneficiaries, and that IRAs were a sensible technique for relieving pressure on the system.

The same factors behind that thinking — among them the fear that a growing number of retirees would severely tax the ability of younger people to finance Social Security — still exist. But the tax bill would reduce IRA incentives.

Somewhat the same argument has been used again and again in the past decade in support of private charitable contributions.

In an effort to turn over more responsibility to the private sector, thus relieving government of some social obligations, the Reagan administration was a strong supporter of private sector charity and philanthropy.

Under the tax-overhaul bill, however, charitable institutions may be hurt. The bill would cut the charitable deduction for taxpayers who do not itemize. And, because it lowers tax rates, it reduces the tax advantage of giving.

It was also just a few years ago that both parties feared heavy industry in the United States was endangered, in part by foreign competition, and that tax incentives might be considered to spur plant and machinery investments.

Under the new bill, less generous depreciation schedules and elimination of an investment tax credit would appear to raise taxes of some manufacturers, and make them less competitive with foreign competitors.

In recent years, small business has appeared to state a strong case for special consideration in taxing policy, but that thinking isn't apparent in the new bill.

Partly because it learned to speak through stronger trade associations, small business offered a convincing argument for its importance. It was shown, for example, that small business was an important creator of new jobs.

President Reagan offered his endorsement to a White House conference on small business, and indicated that encouragement of such private initiative was in keeping with his philosophy of shrinking government and spurring business.

The new bill, however, has several facets that might be considered inimical to small-business interests. The investment-tax credit would be eliminated. Depreciation would be reduced. More onerous accounting would be imposed.

In addition, the elimination of favorable tax treatment for capital gains conceivably could reduce the incentive for investors to risk their capital in financing new or small ventures.

These changes were made by Congress in pursuit of a fairer federal income tax system, one that would eliminate some of the glaring favoritism written into the old law over many years.

But some of those adversely affected are puzzled today about some basic inconsistencies, and they wonder whatever happened over the past five years to the philosophical underpinnings of their supporters.

Federal Reserve trying to put 'wind in sails' of calm economy

NEW YORK (AP) — With its fourth cut in the discount rate this year, the Federal Reserve is attempting to put some wind into the sails of an economy becalmed.

It is a strange situation, and it has befuddled the economists and the stock market hucksters and the White House itself. Nobody seems to know why an economy they said was ready to roar has let out a tired sigh instead.

Few saw the doldrums coming, a point that can be easily documented by the newspapers of just two or three months ago, when the consensus was that better news lay ahead because, it was said:

— Consumer spending would benefit from a windfall of lower oil prices.

— Domestic manufacturing and exports would pick up as the exchange value of the dollar declined.

— The country had faced up to its budget deficit problem with passage of the Gramm-Rudman act.

— Falling mortgage rates would continue to spur home building.

— Capital spending plans would pick as companies sought to invest in 1986 before the investment tax credit was voided in the tax overhaul.

But almost nothing foreseen can now be seen. Consumers are buried to their chins in debt; the lower dollar hasn't yet spurred trade; the budget deficit grows; housing starts are off; and so is capital spending.

Suddenly, all those "independent" economic forecasters began looking over each other's shoulders. They hedged, just as the weatherman hedges when clouds barge into his fair weather forecast. And then, in unison, they lost faith.

The radically different forecasts now emanating from these readers of the future include a recovery — but the recovery is a lot weaker than they had been talking about and it has been pushed further back in time.

Just short of four years old, the recovery is adrift, and futilely seeking a breeze to give direction. According to those who say they know, there is no great danger of a recession, but the mere use of word gives the thought away.

The White House, which once could be relied upon to help with fiscal policy — spending — has it pockets sewn. Already it has overspent, and to overspend greatly is now a violation of the law according to Gramm-Rudman.

That leaves the Federal Reserve to find some wind, but it too is learning that its once potent cuts in the discount rate — the loan rate charged banks — meet the same torpid response as earlier incentives to activity.

Immediately following the one-half of 1 percent cut to 5.5 percent Aug. 20, critics were quick to comment that it wasn't enough, that it was already discounted by those who saw it coming, and that another cut was needed.

After one of the longest economic advances ever, the economy and the people and institutions who make it up seem to be very tired, uncertain and even wary. A psychoanalyst isn't required to see why.

To begin with, nobody — individuals, businesses, the White House — knows the full impact of the tax overhaul bill now before Congress. And that the vast uncertainty of that is matched by several other concerns.

Can Congress pare the budget deficits? Can banks resolve their loan problems? Can consumers handle their huge debts if interest is disqualified as a tax deduction? Will oil prices rise again? Will foreigners continue to invest heavily in the United States if interest rates continue to fall?

With such questions before them, it seems that many Americans, individually and through institutions, are willing to stay becalmed, where the seas aren't rough and the dangers aren't great of running into unseen, submerged hazards.

Eventually, they know, the breezes will come and stir things up. But first they want to see in what direction they blow.

Escalating revolt in south Sudan worsens economic, social crises

By ROBERT H. REID

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The escalating rebellion in southern Sudan is adding to the deep economic and social crisis facing an African nation struggling to build democracy after more than a decade and a half of iron-fisted rule.

The 3-year-old revolt has intensified since early last year, especially in the provinces of Bahr el-Ghazal and Upper Nile, where the Sudan Peoples Liberation Army operates in the scrub bush plains and vast Sudd swamp — larger than all of Ireland.

Westerners familiar with the south say high schools in those areas, homeland of the 2 million-strong Dinka tribe, are largely depleted of young men. They've "gone to the bush" with the rebels.

The rebellion has intensified despite the April 1985 military coup against President Gaafar Nimeiri, who ruled Sudan for 16 years, and the election a year later of a civilian government.

SPLA chief John Garang, a U.S.-educated former army colonel, denounced those elections, which produced a government dominated by the Moslem-oriented Umma and Democratic Unionist parties, which controlled political life in Sudan before Nimeiri's 1969 coup.

Southern rebels, most of them animists or Christians, say they consider those parties part of the "corrupt, racist, backward, pseudo-Arab bourgeois system" they vow to destroy.

During the last 18 months, the SPLA has slowly isolated major southern cities such as Malakal, Wau and Bentiu. Foreign relief agencies estimate at least 2 million people face starvation as food supplies there dwindle.

In Wau, a provincial capital of dust-choked streets and thatched mud huts, SPLA gunners hide in the mango groves and fire on anyone who ventures out to harvest crops.

Last week, a foreign relief worker, speaking on condition of anonymity, said people in Wau were surviving by eating leaves from trees.

Emergency food flights by the International Committee of the Red Cross were suspended last week after the SPLA shot down a civilian plane in Malakal on Aug. 16, killing 60 Sudanese.

Analysts believe the SPLA, which is backed by Marxist Ethiopia, wants to force civilians to flee the cities and then starve out army garrisons.

In the best of times, much of the south is a harsh, disease-ridden land, where tall Nilotic tribesmen wander in search of grazing lands for their cattle.

Origins of the rebellion lie in the ethnic and cultural rivalries of Sudan, an impoverished country of 20 million people, 19 major ethnic groups and 115 languages.

Southerners claim the northern-dominated government discriminates against them economically and seeks to impose Moslem Arab culture.

The government estimates 70 percent of Sudanese are Moslem.

So great is the challenge of nation-building in such a harsh, diverse land — Africa's largest at 967,000 square miles — that the Sudanese have a saying: "When Allah made Sudan, Allah laughed."

The rebellion, the second major insurrection in the south since independence 30 years ago, broke out in 1983 after Nimeiri divided the region into three districts and began moving more northern troops there.

His moves angered many southerners, who saw them as a threat to their political power and an autonomy agreement that ended the first rebellion in 1972.

The rebellion spread after Nimeiri imposed strict Islamic law in 1983.

Effects of the rebellion are now felt nationwide. Many Western and Arab analysts believe a solution is the key to Sudan's economic and political stability.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Dissident, kin reunited

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The mother of Anatoly Shcharansky, his brother and three other family members flew from Moscow to Vienna today and were reunited with the freed Soviet dissident, who was waiting to escort them to Israel.

Shcharansky's brother, Leonid; Leonid's wife Raya, their two sons, Alexander, 14, and Boris, 1, and the Shcharanskys' 78-year-old mother, Ida Milgrom, were escorted by airport personnel and officials of Israel's El Al airline past a throng of reporters.

They were ushered into a private lounge at Schwechat Airport, where Scharansky was thought to be waiting. The family was to take a connecting flight to Israel.

"I am not a big movie star, thank you," Leonid Shcharansky told reporters.

Anatoly Shcharansky flew to Vienna from Israel shortly before his relatives' arrival.

Police accused of torture

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A court affidavit says a black priest detained for 10 weeks was forced to stand blindfolded for 20 hours during interrogation and later had trouble walking, a newspaper reported.

The priest was identified in the Sunday account in the City Press newspaper as the Rev. Smangoliso Mkhatshwa, general secretary of the Southern African Catholic Bishops Conference.

He has been in detention since June 12, when a nationwide state of emergency was decreed.

City Press, a newspaper for Johannesburg's black community, said the priest's lawyers have asked a court to restrain police from what the lawyers said would be further assaulting or torturing of their client.

A Pretoria Supreme Court was scheduled to hear testimony today from two doctors who examined Mkhatshwa on Friday.

Oxfam, a British humanitarian agency, said it had received reports from church contacts in South Africa that Mkhatshwa had been tortured, and sent a telex Saturday to British Ambassador Dennis Worrall, asking him to intervene.

Five die in French fires

NICE, France (AP) — Wind-fanned fires on the parched hills above the Cote d'Azur killed five people, injured hundreds and continued to blaze out of control today despite the efforts of 5,000 firefighters and rescue workers, authorities said.

Five hundred soldiers and two military helicopters were added to the ranks of firefighters and rescue personnel, bringing the total force to 5,000, according to civil security officials in Paris.

The fires began Saturday and were fueled by the "mistral" seasonal Mediterranean wind.

A 20-year-old firefighter died today of asphyxiation while battling the largest remaining blaze, located east of Aix-en-Provence, officials said. A 74-year-old man, burned over 50 percent of his body, died today at a Toulon military hospital. His wife died Sunday as their home in Luceram, north of Nice, was consumed by flames.

Vietnamese malnourished

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Surveys indicate that more than half of Vietnam's children do not grow up normally because of malnutrition, the official Vietnamese news agency today quoted a specialist as saying.

The Vietnam News Agency, monitored in Bangkok, quoted Dr. Tu Giay, director of the Institute of Nutrition in Hanoi, as saying that institute surveys over the past five years concluded that "by international standards, only 48.5 percent of the Vietnamese children have grown up normally."

About 1.5 percent are severely malnourished due to lack of breast-feeding, bad quality of baby food, acute respiratory infections or diarrhea, he was quoted as saying.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC SALE

Notice is hereby given that Walter R. Davis ("Secured Party"), intends to sell at public sale in accordance with the provisions of the Texas Uniform Commercial Code to the highest bidder or bidders for cash the following described property:

The shares (the "Shares") of common stock, constituting all of the outstanding capital stock of the Companies set forth below (the "Companies"), having the Certificate Nos. set forth opposite the names of the Companies, in which property Secured Party holds a security interest granted by JOC Oil Exploration Company, Inc. ("Debtor") pursuant to the terms of the Security Agreements dated as indicated below between Debtor and the Secured Party:

Company	Cert No	Dt of Sec Agreement
Seminole Oil Company	1	August 30, 1979
Williamson-Patterson, Inc.	30	January 31, 1981
JOC Realty, Inc.	1	March 14, 1985

The public sale will take place at the office of Walter R. Davis, 3101 North Pecos, Midland, Texas 79705 on August 28, 1986 at 10:00 a.m., Midland, Texas time. The certificates evidencing the Shares are on display and available for inspection at the office of Walter R. Davis at the address shown above, telephone no. 915/682-9418.

Secured Party reserves the right to bid for and purchase the Shares and to credit the purchase price against the expenses of sale and principal, interest and any and all other amounts due and payable to Secured Party pursuant to the terms of any and all indebtedness secured by the security intertest in the Shares.

Prospective bidders are advised that (i) the Shares will be sold only in single blocks for each of the Companies and will not be split up or broken down; (ii) the certificate evidencing the Shares to be received by the purchaser at the sale will bear a legend to the effect that the Shares have not be registered under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended the ("Act"), or any state securities laws and that no transfer of the Shares may be made unless the Shares are registered under the Act and any applicable state secrities laws or an exemption from such registration is available; and (iii) the purchaser will be required to provide written representations stating that: (a) purchaser either alone or with such purchaser's attorneys, accountants or other advisors possesses the requisite business and investment knowledge and experience to effectively evaluate the potential risks and merits of the investment in the Shares; (b) purchaser has sufficient financial ability and net worth to bear the economic risk of the investment for an indefinite period of time and to withstand a total loss of purchaser's investment in the Shares; (c) purchaser is acquiring the Shares for investment, solely for purchaser's own account, and not with a view to distribution or resale of the Shares; and (d) purchaser will not resell the Shares, except pursuant to an effective registration statement under the Act and any applicable state securities laws or pursuant to an available exemption therefrom.

Prospective purchasers will furnished, upon request, with such financial information about the Companies as is in the possession of the Secured Party. The Shares will be sold without representation or warranty, express or implied, of any kind.

AUTOMOTIVE REPORT

2-Seater War Heats Up

By Tom Cooper

CADILLAC will introduce the Allante' in 1987. This 2-seater is said to be indicative of the direction of future Cadillacs. Industry sources say that Cadillac will become more Mercedes like in price as well as flavor. Buick's products are expected to move upscale to fill the vacuum left in the high-end GM market. The Saturn nameplate is then expected to take its place somewhere in the hierarchy above Chevrolet.

Cadillac was given its charter for the new car in 1982. It was called a luxury 2 seater at the time, and would prove to be a radical project for GM. It is partly so because primary styling and manufacturing responsibility for the car's coachwork was given to the premier Italian design house of Pininfarina. The coachwork is assembled in Italy and shipped to detroit via air for completion.

BUICK will also introduce a 2-seater in 1987. Rumor has it that years ago the division took an idea for a vehicle of this nature to GM only to have the auto given to Cadillac. That car is said to have become the Allante', and Buick, so the story goes, went back to the proverbial "drawing board."

Buick's 2-seater has yet to receive a firm name. Sources say that it will either be called Wildcat or Rea'tta. It will be a front wheel drive model with a 3.8 liter V-6 and a 4-speed automatic overdrive transmission.

GM will produce yet another 2-seater in '87, but this one under the name of Lotus. This will be the first new model from the company since the General Motors takeover of the famous British company in January. GM originally bought 58% of Lotus. But soon after Toyota, who owned 21% of Lotus, sold out. Since then GM's share is reported to have increased to 95% with plans to acquire the rest.

Changes are also in store for GM's oldest 2-seater nameplate. Corvette will reportedly be taken away from Chevrolet in 1988. It seems that GM doesn't feel Corvette's high priced nature is compatable with the divisions cost-effective philosophy. If this actually does occur Corvette may become a seperate division that may be picked up and sold by any of General Motor's dealers.

This feature appears each Monday as a reader service of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.
