'Butcher of Lyon' to be tried for war deaths

LYON, France (AP) — Klaus Barbie, the Nazi "Butcher of Lyon," was expelled from Bolivia and flown to France under military guard Saturday to be tried for torturing and killing thousands of Jews and resistance fighters during World War II.

The French military DC-8 jet that picked up Barbie in La Paz, Bolivia, landed at 8:15 p.m. — 2:15 p.m. EST — at the Caritat military base in Orange, about 60 miles northeast of the Mediterranean port city of Marseille.

Court officials said the 69-year-old Barbie was immediately transferred to a helicopter and flown to the Fort de Montluc military prison here in Lyon where he was indicted for "crimes against humanity" involving more than 11,000 deaths. No trial date was announced.

Officials said Barbie had killed many of his victims in the Fort de Montluc prison four decades ago.

Barbie was guarded during the transfer by agents of the special weapons and tactics force.

The DC-8 apparently had been scheduled to land at the Satolas military base at Lyon, with those plans changed for security reasons.

There had been reports that Barbie would be flown to Lyon, and a middle-aged woman was found at the Lyon airport with a 22-caliber rifle concealed in a white sheet. She was detained for questioning and police reported she told them that her parents had been sent to a Nazi detention camp in France during World War II.

Police had searched the Lyon airport following a bomb alert, and dozens of people had gathered outside the terminal. One of them, Tina Godet, said her mother had died in a Nazi concentration camp. "We have come to show that we are still here," she said. "We want Barbie to be put on the stand so our children can hear of his crimes from his own mouth. We can forgive, but we will never forget."

Barbie, a balding, 5-foot-5-inch man with steel blue eyes, had been described by Bolivian friends as a doting grandfather, accomplished pianist and lover of Nietzsche, the 19th-century German philosopher who argued that might makes right.

The Interior Ministry said Barbie would be prosecuted on charges of crimes against humanity for his actions as the Gestapo chief of Lyon from 1942-44 during the Nazi occupation of France.

He faces life imprisonment if convicted.

It would be the first trial of a ranking Nazi official since SS Col. Adolf Eichmann was kidnapped by Israeli agents in Argentina in 1960 and hanged after a lengthy trial in Tel Aviv. During his trial, Eichmann was kept in a glass cage to protect him from former victims who packed the courtroom.

Barbie was expelley Friday night from Bolivia, where he had lived since 1951 under the alias of Klaus Altmann. He was granted Bolivian citizenship under his assumed name in 1957.

Barbie had been in a La Paz jail since Jan. 25 on charges of fraud in connection with a $10,000 debt to the state mining company.

His presence in the South American nation was first made public 11 years ago by Serge and Beate Klarsfeld, French Nazi hunters. Since then, French and West German officials have sought his extradition.

In France, Barbie is accused of ordering 7,591 Jews deported to Nazi concentration camps, torturing to death France's most famous resistance leader Jean Moulin and executing 4,000 other French Jews and anti-Nazis.

In the early 1950s, the German-born Barbie was twice sentenced to death in absentia by military courts in Lyon. France abolished the death penalty in 1981.

There was no immediate indication when his new trial would begin in France.

"Death would be too mild a punishment for him," Lise Lesevre, a French resistance messenger who is one of Barbie's surviving victims, said Saturday.

Declining oil prices could affect drilling

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Midlanders are not happy to see the price of oil going down, but unless prices fall by more than $5 a barrel, they say they aren't too worried.

Still, many don't want to think about what will happen to the economy here if the price drops below $20 or $25 a barrel.

One oilman said he frankly didn't see how drilling and exploration activity could be curtailed much more, although some of the big independents like MGF Oil and Tom Brown Inc. continued to cut back on staff last week.

"I don't think that a matter of a few dollars will make all that much difference," said independent geologist Keith Somerville. "But if the price were dropped by $5 or $10, it would result in quite a bit more plugging of stripper wells and scare away more investors."

A spokesman for Atlantic Richfield in Dallas said the company was not prepared to speculate about how low prices may go, or what effect that would have on ARCO.

"IF OIL PRICES as set by OPEC decline, historically U.S. prices also decline," said Buddy Beck. The affect on ARCO's exploration and production would depend on how much the price changed, he said.

At least 20 killed in Beirut bombing

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A car-bomb explosion turned the Palestine Research Center and the Libyan Embassy into roaring infernos Saturday, killing 20 people, wounding 136 and forcing others to leap from balconies or clamber down drainpipes and knotted curtains.

Police said the death toll could rise from the tremendous explosion that burned the two buildings, shook the central Hamra shopping district of the city's Moslem sector and sent a cloud of brown smoke and debris skyward.

A shadowy group called the Front for the Liberation of Lebanon from Foreigners claimed responsibility, and the Palestine Liberation Organization and Soviet news agency Tass blamed the Israelis and their agents. But there was no confirmation the Lebanese group or Israel were behind the remote-controlled blast in west Beirut.

Panicked and screaming occupants of the seven-story research center jumped from the lower floors. Others scrambled down drainpipes on the side of the building. Some tore curtains from office windows and used them as ropes to escape.

Among the dead were three Lebanese police guards and among the wounded were 17 plainclothesmen who apparently had been keeping the offices under surveillance, police said.

The force of the blast stripped the facade from the fifth-floor offices of the Libyan news agency JANA, revealing book-lined shelves and lamps. The Libyan news agency and the temporary quarters of the Libyan Embassy are in the same building.

"I was on the first floor when the whole world went black around me," said a young Palestinian cleaning woman who works in the research center. She identified herself only by the name Hilweh.

"I ran to the elevator but the fallen ceiling blocked the way, so I raced to the balcony...and jumped," she said.

Associated Press photographer Zuhair Saade was driving near the area when the bomb exploded.

"The blast hurled my car onto the sidewalk," he said. "I saw tongues of flames shooting out of the two buildings and scores of panicked women shrieked."

The explosion hurled shattered glass and masonry for 100 yards and showered papers and debris on the American University of Beirut campus several blocks away.

Police Sgt. Youssef Bitar said the blast was caused by an estimated 132 pounds of hexogene, a liquefied gas, placed in a car and detonated by remote control. He said the force of the blast was equivalent to 528 pounds of TNT.

The car, described by one Lebanese radio station as a blue, American-made model, was parked in front of the research center, where remaining PLO officials remained headquartered after most left the capital five months ago. It is across Karicas Street from the temporary Libyan Embassy and its news agency.

Bathed in blood

A victim of Saturday's car-bomb explosion at the Palestine Research Center and Libyan Embassy reaches out in a plea for aid. About 20 were killed, with another 136 wounded.

The clandestine, rightist Front for the Liberation of Lebanon from Foreigners claimed responsibility for the bombing in a call to the Christian Voice of Lebanon.

"The Front warns all Lebanese everywhere in Lebanon that any block or neighborhood would have the same fate if it houses any foreign organization," the broadcast quoted an anonymous caller as saying.

Dead paid about $6 million in benefits

WASHINGTON (AP) — A check of records from 11 states, New York City and the Veterans Administration has uncovered 1,411 cases in which Social Security paid more than $6 million to dead people.

That may be just the tip of the iceberg, according to Social Security Commissioner John Svahn, who suspects that the agency may have paid a total of $100 million to the deceased.

There is one confirmed case in which the beneficiary had been dead since 1965 and another, still under investigation, where the person may have died in 1962, said John Trollinger, an agency spokesman.

The average case involves an overpayment of about $5,600, but in one case $50,000 was paid over the years to a dead beneficiary, Trollinger said.

The agency began a computer check of state death records last year after it found more than 5,000 cases of people listed as dead on Medicare records who were had received $30 million in Social Security benefits.

Some people listed as dead by Medicare or the state were discovered to be actually alive. During the Medicare match, investigators found more than 3,200 mistaken death reports.

In one case in Dallas, Svahn said, a Social Security official went to the home of a man shown as deceased on Texas records, spotted smoke, banged on the door and roused the "dead" man and his wife, who escaped the fire.

In another case in Indiana, he said, an amputee said the mix-up probably stemmed from a report filed to the state when his missing limb was buried.

Svahn said some of the cases appeared to involve fraud and some were foul-ups.

"In some instances, people have tried to notify us of a death and because of our (computer) systems problems...we just don't get that recorded. And the checks keep coming, and pretty soon they get tired of trying to notify us," he said in a telephone interview Friday from Social Security's headquarters outside Baltimore.

Some "people have been just taking the check and putting it in a drawer and when our employee shows up and says, 'We're looking for so-and-so,' they say, 'Well, we told you four years ago'," Svahn said.

"I think we came up at one point with 90 checks that an individual had been saving," he added.

But of the 1,411 cases, he said, "we've got a tentative number of 500 where the checks have been cashed, probably by relatives, after the person died."

Prosecutors request 'special offender' status for Wilson

HOUSTON (AP) — Former CIA agent Edwin Wilson was convicted Saturday of smuggling explosives to Libya, and prosecutors moved to have him declared "a dangerous special offender" because of alleged efforts to hire a hit man to kill nine people.

The document alleged that Wilson, already convicted of smuggling guns to Libya, solicited a fellow prisoner in November to help him hire an assassin to kill prosecutors and possible witnesses.

In January, the document said, "Wilson caused his son to pay some $10,000 in cash to the hit man," an undercover FBI agent.

If the motion is approved by U.S. District Judge Ross Sterling, it would add eight years to Wilson's possible sentence of 17 years in prison and $145,000 fine. He already was given a 15-year sentence and a fine of $200,000 for the gun-smuggling conviction.

The jury deliberated 6½ hours over two days and convicted Wilson of conspiring to transport explosives, filing false custom documents, exporting without a license and transporting hazardous materials illegally.

Wilson, 54, accused of shipping more than 20 tons of a plastic explosives from Houston to Libya in October 1977, showed no reaction when the verdict was read.

The motion filed a few minutes later by prosecutors said Wilson "offered about $1 million in cash" for the slayings of nine people.

He allegedly planned to pay $250,000 each to kill Larry Barcella and Carol Bruce, assistant U.S. attorneys in the District of Columbia, and $50,000 each for the assassination of the witnesses, the document said.

Windblown waste

Midland's Cole Park is losing its popularity with Tall City residents, both because of wind-tossed trash scattered among the trees and the odor of a nearby sanitary landfill. Despite such problems, the city's Parks and Recreation Department has plans for the wooded "wonderland."

Residents desert Tent City, fearing possible arrest

HOUSTON (AP) — A pile of charred rubble stands as a monument on the spot where James "Scotty" Bolland burned to death last week, trying to keep warm inside his tent.

Across the way, only scattered trash remains where Bill Collins kept the dilapidated mobile home he used as the "city hall" to operate this once bustling roadside community of about 200 known as Tent City.

Collins' constituents disbanded Friday, fearing arrest if they did not obey an order from the fire marshal to leave the picnic and camping site located about 30 miles northeast of here.

Harris County Fire Marshal J.J. Pruitt backed off evicting the final two residents, however, pending a hearing Monday before State District Judge William Blanton on the makeshift community's future.

Pruitt's decision meant that Greg Lincavage, his two German shepherds and Mike Kovalcik could remain camped at least through the weekend.

Lincavage said it was Bolland's death that finally gave authorities the excuse they needed to force the closing of Tent City.

"There should have been a fire watch set up to avoid what happened," said Lincavage, who said he had worked as a cook and motorcycle mechanic. "We could have had that fire out in no time.

"They just used this as an excuse to close this place. I could comply with all of the fire marshal's orders but I couldn't come up with a pumper truck. But I do have a two-gallon can of water and a shovel."

Bolland, 41, a native of Scotland, burned to death in his tent Wednesday after lighting a fire to keep warm. He suffered burns over 95 percent of his body in the blaze.

Kovalcik, who said he came here from Tucson, Ariz. looking for work, proudly showed visitors the fence he had built to encircle one side of his van. He said he was in compliance with the fire marshal's safety orders.

Pruitt, however, said no one in the park was in compliance.

"There has been no compliance, they just all left," Pruitt said after a hasty inspection of the park Friday. "We're just trying to do our jobs to protect them from a fire hazard."

Pruitt had been prepared to evict the residents Friday until he received word of a suit that had been filed on behalf of the residents to postpone their removal.

Greg Lincavage, a Tent City resident, was packing up to leave Friday when he received word that the camp had won a reprieve. The Harris County Fire Marshal backed off evicting the final two residents, pending a hearing Monday. Lincavage decided to stay through the weekend.

Informant admits taking money from arms dealer

DALLAS (AP) — A government informant says he placed some of the $1.2 million from international arms dealer Ian Smalley into his own accounts even though the money was given to him to finance a weapons sale.

Gary Howard testified Friday that he placed some of the money advanced to him by Smalley into businesses he and other partners controlled in Hong Kong, Liechtenstein and Texas, and into a Swiss bank account.

Smalley, a 42-year-old British citizen, is on trial here on charges he conspired to ship tanks from the United States to Iran and anti-tank missiles to Iraq while the two countries were at war. The indictment also contends Smalley acted as an unregistered foreign agent.

If convicted, Smalley could be sentenced to a maximum 70 years in prison and fines totaling $61,000.

Smalley also has been charged in Britain with illegally selling 60 tank engines to Iran.

Defense attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes said in his opening argument that he would seek to show that Howard and his partner, Ronald Tucker, "swallowed up" Smalley's money.

During earlier questioning by prosecutors, Howard testified about how he worked with government agents to record conversations with Smalley about arms sales to Persian Gulf nations.

Howard, also a former international arms dealer, has testified that Smalley said he knew of a cache of nuclear weapons-grade plutonium that he would offer to the highest bidder.

Howard testified that Smalley planned to provide false documents to the U.S. State Department indicating that weapons actually bound for Iran were headed for more friendly nations.

Haynes contends that Howard and Tucker duped his client into believing he was participating in a White House plot to secretly ship arms to Iran during the hostage crisis.

The government is seeking to prove Smalley offered to provide fraudulent paperwork that would have allowed the shipment of 100 M-48 tanks to Iran and 8,300 anti-tank missiles called to Iraq in 1981 and 1982.

Court records show most of the government's case against Smalley is built around 80 to 85 hours of tape recordings made during a 15-month investigation by U.S. Customs agents.

Contractor indicted for killing three at Kerrville restaurant

KERRVILLE (AP) — A 39-year-old contractor has been indicted on charges of murdering his ex-wife, her boyfriend and her boyfriend's father, who were gunned down as they ate in a crowded restaurant.

Grand jurors on Friday also charged Robert Ronald Young, of Kerrville, with aggravated assault in the shooting of Robert Smith, 40, of Mesa, Ariz. Smith was hit in the side by a ricocheting shot and was hospitalized in stable condition.

Bond for Young, who was hospitalized in critical condition with a self-inflicted wound in the abdomen, was set at $100,000 by State District Judge V. Murray Jordan.

Restaurant manager Joe Hernandez said Young went to the Acapulco Restaurant on Wednesday night looking for his ex-wife, Phyllis Young, 39. She was eating dinner with her 8-year-old daughter, another girl, Ernest Robert Hneidy Jr., 42, and Ernest Robert Hneidy, 78.

Mrs. Young and the Hneidys were killed.

White wants to call immigration summit

By PHILLIP SWANN

From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Texas Gov. Mark White said Saturday that he will call a meeting of "representatives from every group in society" to search for a "compromise" solution to the nation's immigration problem.

White, who was in Washington to address the Democratic National Committee, did not say exactly when the immigration summit would be held. But he said it would be "as soon as possible."

"We (Texas) can do a better job...The immigration problem in Wyoming is a little different than in Texas," White said at a Saturday morning press conference at the State of Texas Washington office.

The governor was referring to Wyoming GOP Sen. Alan Simpson whose immigration bill was killed in the 97th Congress. Simpson reportedly plans this year to reintroduce the bill, which includes several provisions that White opposes.

White conceded that participants in the immigration meeting may fail to reach a consensus.

"I don't have in my mind what the answer is, but we must look for a compromise approach," White said. "(An immigration bill) has to have support from every segment of society."

White, who was making his first visit to Washington since defeating former governor Bill Clements last November, delivered a ringing attack on the Reagan administration before the Democratic National Committee.

Gov. Mark White

"We've stayed the course long enough," White said. "Watching 'Death Valley Days' on television is one thing but living through them is another."

As governor of Texas, White's support could be crucial to 1984 Democratic presidential campaign plans — a fact that he made clear to his fellow Democrats.

"You don't need me to tell you that the hopes of the Democratic Party and any candidate for the presidency in 1984 rest heavily on our ability to carry Texas," White told the DNC.

But the governor implied that Texas will not come easy. He urged party leaders to moderate their views.

"We've got to stop flirting with the left and flirting with the right and get back to the center of the political spectrum," White said. "Two years ago when the American public veered to the right, it was but a detour. Many voters made a U-turn three months ago and got back on the main road.

"And if the leadership of the Democratic Party will get on that road — and stay on that road — there is no way that Ronald Reagan or any other Republican presidential hopeful can survive the next national election."

White said at the press conference that former vice-president Walter Mondale, and Ohio Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, are the leading candidates to take the 1984 Texas Democratic primary.

"Mondale has the lead by virtue of the fact that he's been around the state and he has many friends there," the governor said. "But Glenn was in Houston (as an astronaut with NASA) for many years and he has a great following."

In other matters, White said:

— Congress should pass legislation to provide more funds for job training. The governor noted that Texas, which was once considered recession-proof, now has approximately 600,000 people unemployed.

"When you're out of work in Texas, where do you go?" White said.

— Congress should approve reductions in President Reagan's proposed $34 billion increase in defense spending.

"The strongest defense we can build is a strong economy," White said. "They talk about waste in other programs but probably there is more waste in the military than any other program."

— He was not sure if he opposed the president's proposed freeze on military pay. But he added: "Once again, they're hitting the working man. I haven't had a chance to study it, but there must be better areas to cut."

— He still opposes a guest worker program, which permits Mexicans to enter the United States and work for a fixed period of time.

"We've got enough guest workers. We've got guest workers from the South and guest workers from the North," the governor said, referring to the migration of the unemployed to Texas.

DHPT says all interstates in Texas to get some repairs

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Interstate highway repairs in the Midland County area are included in $196.6 million worth of work approved by the State Highways and Public Transportation Commission.

The Department of Highways and Public Transportation says that "portions of all interstates in Texas will receive some rehabilitation work," with over 40 separate projects involved.

Work ranges from reconditioning of surfaces to adjusting guard fences and culverts.

DHPT reports 90 percent of the work is funded by federal monies, with most of the funding from the 1982 Surface Transportation Act — with its increased gasoline tax — signed by President Reagan.

Among the projects is $7,570,000 worth of repair and surfacing work along 8.2 miles of IH 10 between FM 34 and Lasca in Hudspeth County; $2,624,000 worth of surfacing along 16.3 miles of IH 20 from the Reeves County line to a point 1/2 mile west of Pyote in Ward County; $2,062,000 worth of surfacing along 10.5 miles of IH 20 from a point 1/10 mile west of Salt Draw to a point 1 1/2 miles west of Pecos in Reeves County; and $1,733,000 worth of surfacing along 19.4 miles of the westbound land of IH 10 in Pecos and Reeves counties.

Odessa principal to continue devotional programs

ODESSA (AP) — A junior high principal ordered to stop broadcasting prayers over the school's loudspeaker says he still plans to have a devotional program but it will be more carefully structured and more closely monitored.

"I really believe the kids enjoy it," said Jerald McClary, adding that many of them enjoy the chance to talk over the public address system.

Bill Holm, superintendent of the Ector County Independent School District, told McClary that prayer cannot be part of broadcasts over the school's public address system and he will make sure the no-prayer policy is followed at other district schools.

The school district adopted a policy in 1980 prohibiting religious ceremonies or religious exercises, Holm said.

The policy states: "Students of the district will not be required to read or recite verses of the Bible for religious purposes or prayers. Time will not be set aside during the school day for such activities."

Many of Odessa's schools broadcast a "thought for the day," he said. Holm said he planned to check to make sure that such broadcasts are not religiously oriented.

"Of course, the school has to uphold the law," Holm said. The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that the use of prayer in the classroom violates constitutional rights.

McClary told The Odessa American that he asks a different teacher at the junior high school to prepare each week's devotionals. The devotionals, presented by students, usually include a short story, poem or saying and often end with a short prayer, McClary said.

"The major emphasis that we try to place is on an inspirational thought for the day," McClary said.

But Diane L. Butler, whose daughter attends Hood, claims the children were asked to bow their heads while the prayer was read.

Mrs. Butler said she became concerned about the situation last year when her daughter brought home a devotional she had been asked to read that bothered her because of its religious content.

The issue has continued to bother the family, Mrs. Butler said, and although the family discussed it with school officials last year, they were not satisfied that the situation had been dealt with properly.

WEATHER SUMMARY

The National Weather Service forecasts snow for an area ranging from the Great Lakes to Missouri and rain from Florida to the Ohio Valley.

Temperatures reach 50s in Permian Basin

A moderate weekend greeted Permian Basin residents Saturday as temperatures reached the upper 50s for the first time in several days.

Midland recorded an official high of 59, but that figure was still well off the all-time record for the date of 78 in 1951. The low of 35, meanwhile, was mild in comparison to the 11 degrees of 1982.

Partly cloudy conditions are expected to reign today with the mercury again reaching the 50 mark. Winds should be northeasterly at 5-15 miles per hour.

Monday, skies should be partly cloudy once more as the temperature should reach an afternoon high in the mid-50s.

A trace of precipitation was recorded in the 24-hour period ending at 6 p.m. Saturday, bringing the monthly total to 0.03 inch and the 1983 amount to 1.17 inches.

Law enforcement increases during strike

By The Associated Press

National Guard helicopters hovered over North Carolina highways and off-duty Oklahoma prison guards patroled overpasses Saturday to halt escalating violence in the sixth day of the independent truckers' strike.

In Florida, the Indian River citrus industry has come "to a screeching halt" with most packing houses closed, a trade association leader says. But in New York, food kept flowing into major distribution centers with few disruptions, officials said.

In several states, highway patrols beefed up forces, especially at night, as violent acts increased. In Missouri, night patrols were increased 20 percent for as long as the strike lasts.

The strike was called last Monday by the Independent Truckers Association to protest scheduled increases in fuel taxes and highway use taxes. Since then, more than 1,000 acts of violence have been reported in 37 states, resulting in one death, more than 50 injuries and at least 67 arrests.

The association claims to represent 30,000 of the nation's 100,000 independent truckers. Independents own and operate their own rigs and haul most of the nation's produce and much of its steel. The strike is opposed by the Teamsters union and corporate haulers.

Meanwhile, Michael Parkhurst, president of the Independent Truckers Association, admitted that the "full effects have not been felt," and renewed the call Saturday to keep the strike going.

Parkhurst, at a gathering of 50 truckers at a hotel conference room in Idaho Falls, Idaho, declared: "We're saying stay out until we've made significant progress. The instant you go back to work, the attention is gone because the pressure is gone. The full effects have not been felt."

Parkhurst has claimed that 70,000 truckers were staying off the roads but the Department of Transportation puts the number at 20,000.

Parkhurst was rebuffed last week when the American Trucking Associations, which represents most of the industry, refused to take up his offer to call off the strike in return for a one-hour strike by all truckers.

His audience in Idaho Falls voiced more questions than support. Local trucker Brian Love said he thinks the strike "is going to last a long time and be useless. I'd like to see these taxes lowered, but I don't think any of us can afford to shut down."

In Washington, Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and husband of Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, said "Congress will simply not be intimidated" by the violence.

Dole's committee helped draft the legislation, which would raise fuel taxes from 4 cents to 9 cents a gallon.

Dole said he was asking the General Accounting Office, an accounting and investigative arm of Congress, to study the economic impact of increased taxes on independent truckers. The new laws would raise truckers' fees from $240 a year to $1,900 by 1989.

Few shortages of food were reported Saturday, but some prices were beginning to rise and wholesalers and retailers nationwide expected problems by mid-week if the strike continues.

"If things don't change by Wednesday or so, we'll be laying off by Friday," George Pile, president of Colonial Provision Co., a Boston food company, said Friday.

"No, it hasn't affected us, but I can't speak for tomorrow," said Marilyn Anthony, co-owner of Anthony's Market in Racine, Wis.

Railroads reported no increase yet in their haulings.

"We're not seeing any results of the strike so far, but we're ready," Jim Hagle, spokesman for the Minneapolis-based Burlington Northern Railroad, said Saturday. "We said at the outset that if it lasted more than six days, we might see a slight volume increase."

In New York, state police added extra patrols to interstate highways and made helicopter patrols, said a spokeswoman for Gov. Mario Cuomo.

In Oklahoma's Pittsburg County, off-duty guards from the Oklahoma State Penitentiary voluntarily patroled overpasses.

"It was rough the first night, but after beefing up police coverage at night, we haven't had an incident," said Mayor Bill James of Somerset, Pa., a hotbed of violence against rigs early last week.

Pennsylvania roads, a corridor for trucks heading for the Northeast, were the site of much of the nation's violence last week. More than 300 violent incidents were reported, with 24 people arrested. The violence continued with 14 incidents of gunshots and rock-throwing late Friday night and early Saturday.

Nationwide, more than 360 trucks have been hit by gunfire. Hundreds of others were hit by rocks, firebombs and other objects.

An independent trucker arrested for dumping roofing nails on a road in North Charleston, S.C., was sentenced to 30 days in jail Saturday, the maximum penalty.

In North Carolina, National Guard helicopters flew over highways Saturday to prevent violence and they'll keep it up "indefinitely," said Lt. H.B. McKee of the Highway Patrol.

In Utah, state trooper Ronald Kirby at the Echo Point port of entry said daytime truck traffic was down 50 percent and "there's practically no traffic at night." But in St. George, state police said traffic was heavier than usual for a Saturday morning.

Steve Hull, a spokesman for Florida Gov. Bob Graham, said Saturday that the number of big rigs on the state's main roads had increased 60 percent over the previous 24 hours and "it looks like truckers are going back to work."

On Friday, President Reagan said he would not bargain with the independent haulers, and the Justice Department said it might prosecute acts of violence connected to the strike.

Florida's Indian River citrus fruit wasn't in danger of spoiling, but "most have virtually shut down," said Doug Bornique, executive director of the Indian River Citrus League.

But Florida Gov. Bob Graham said Saturday he thinks the strike is ending, saying he was "extremely pleased that truck traffic is returning to normal, and that at the same time, there is a decline in the incidents of violence."

A Graham spokesman said only three attacks on truckers or trucks were reported in the s were reported Friday.

Graham said the National Guard would be called out if there were "some serious incidents of disruptions" but "that's not the case today." Graham called out the Guard in 1979 to protect non-striking drivers during a month-long independents' strike.

More produce is moving than during the 1979 strike, said John Stiles, marketing director for the Florida Department of Agriculture, but there could be spoilage this week if the strike continues.

Stan Lindholm says he's worried about violence as he drives a truck loaded with asbestos siding from British Columbia to California during the nationwide independent truckers' strike.

De la Garza wants National Guard out during strike

PHARR, Texas (AP) — A firebombing at a Rio Grande Valley truck stop and nails scattered on a highway prompted a South Texas congressman to urge Saturday that the National Guard be called up in an effort to prevent further violence.

Democratic Rep. Kiki de la Garza of Mission urged President Reagan to ask the nation's governors to call the extra forces up because of the nationwide truckers' strike.

"As chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, I am concerned about the economic impact of the strike on farmers, shippers and distributers of agricultural commodities," de la Garza said.

"My area is a vast agriculture producing area which is being brought to its knees because fresh fruit and vegetables can't move in interstate commerce. I commend this to your attention," de la Garza said in a telegram to President Reagan, Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis and Attorney Gen. William French Smith.

A Molotov cocktail was blamed for a fire that broke out Friday night in a truck brokerage firm in a truck stop on U.S. 281 at Pharr, which is 50 miles west of Brownsville. The blaze and the discovery of nails on a highway were preceded by three threats of violence.

A fire department spokesman said Saturday afternoon that arson is suspected in the blaze. The alarm call was received at the fire department at 11:19 p.m., with four units and 17 men responding. Although building damage was heavy, a spokesman said the blaze took only five minutes to extinguish, and there were no injuries.

The Pharr fire department bomb squad was summoned once on Thursday to a false bomb scare, and twice Friday to check out threats that explosives had been placed in two Pharr truck stops.

Shortly before 10 a.m., a call was received by a dispatcher at Valley Brokers, located at the Petro Truckstop on U.S. 281 just north of the expressway.

According to police reports, a man said, "You've got 15 minutes before the ...place is blown off the face of the map." The police report indicated the call was not believed to originate locally.

Pharr Fire Chief Burgess Cook said the area was evacuated, but no explosive device was found, and the truckstop was allowed to resume normal activity.

Also on Friday morning, large nails were found scattered on the road from the expressway to Owassa Road, and from Sioux Road just north of Petro, west to the back of the truckstop. A road sweeper was dispatched to remove the nails from the area.

Economic forecast may be pessimistic, aides say

By OWEN ULLMANN

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — After two years of overly optimistic economic forecasts, President Reagan has issued cautious 1983 predictions that already are being discounted by the economic advisers who produced them. They think the new economic projections may err on the low side.

One week after producing a slow-growth, high-unemployment and high-deficit forecast, Reagan's chief economic aides acknowledge that they may have overcompensated this time for past optimism.

Statistics bear that out.

Reagan's new proposed budget contained a prediction of 10.4 percent unemployment by the fourth quarter of this year. The president learned Friday that the jobless rate already declined to that level in January.

The president's 1984 budget plan concedes that "large forecasting errors" made in the rosy 1982 projections had compounded current budget troubles and accounted for $26 billion in unexpected deficits.

The budget statement adds: "During the past 10 years, longer-term economic assumptions made by government have uniformly and systematically been excessive and unrealistically optimistic..."

It says that "excessive forecasting optimism" has undermined public confidence in the government's ability to manage the budget.

Hence the caution that marked the fresh projections for 1983 and beyond.

One Cabinet officer, who discussed the forecasts on the condition that he not be identified by name, said Reagan administration officials decided it would be better to err by being too conservative than too optimistic.

The fiscal 1984 budget that Reagan sent to Congress last week predicts the slowest recovery from a recession since World War II. It forecast unemployment persisting above 10 percent of the labor force into 1984 and deficits growing to $300 billion by 1988 without spending cuts or tax increases.

The forecast envisions the recovery getting under way this spring and picking up by midyear. It predicts that, after adjusting for inflation, the economy will grow 3.1 percent between the fall of 1982 and the fall of 1984, an anemic growth rate compared to other recoveries since World War II.

The administration is a little more upbeat about 1984 and beyond. It calls for moderate economic growth of 4 percent a year, with inflation running just above 4 percent and unemployment receding very gradually until it reaches a "full employment" level of 6.2 percent by the end of 1988.

The outlook for economic growth can make a big difference in estimating future budget deficits. Stronger growth means more wealth is created and the government takes in more money from taxes to help offset spending. According to the 1984 budget plan, an increase of one percentage point in annual economic growth reduces next year's deficit by $13.5 billion.

The Congressional Budget Office, in a reversal, also is more optimistic than the administration, forecasting growth of 4 percent this year and 4.7 percent in 1984. Past CBO forecasts have been more pessimistic than those of the administration.

Feelings mixed on declining crude oil prices

ARCO announced Feb. 2 it would lower its posted price for all grades of California and Mid-Continent crude oil by $1 a barrel; south Alaskan crude was lowered by $1.25. The Mid-Continent area includes the Permian Basin.

The posted average price refiners will pay for sweet crude here is now $31; for sour it is $30.

Last week, major U.S. refiners lowered their posted prices by $1 a barrel, following Gulf Oil's lead Jan. 31, amid rumors Kuwait and other OPEC nations may lower their prices by as much as $4 a barrel.

Lower oil prices are not necessarily a foregone conclusion, however, according to First National Bank of Midland President Charles Fraser.

"IF WE DON'T continue to invest in production, domestic production will go down, and that plays into OPEC's ability to raise their prices," he said in the Jan. 27 issue of American Banker magazine.

To be sure, lower prices would affect different size companies in varying degrees, pointed out Midland petroleum consultant Foy Boyd, depending on their amount of bank debt.

"Any reduction in cash flow is a problem," he said.

"You see it around town now, with companies that have gas wells shut in, or with curtailed production." Gas producers are not able to get the price they counted on when they first began their wells, especially for deep gas which is more expensive to produce.

"There is a domino effect that takes place," Boyd added, when a company has less money and can't meet its obligations. "Many times that's critical to the people they're not paying, who have obligations of their own."

There is no cut-and-dried rule for predicting how the price of oil affects a company, or Midland as a whole, cautioned Walter Ashby, assistant vice president-marketing and research, First National Bank of Midland.

"The price of oil is a very complicated indicator. The price in the ground (of reserves) is one question. If interest rates go down, the value of reserves is higher. That's just one illustration," of the issue's complexity.

INDUSTRY SOURCES say the break-even point is around $10 or $14 a barrel but,again, that varies depending on a company's size and overhead.

"We're not worried about it (lower prices), but we are prepared," said B.J. Pevehouse, chief executive officer of Adobe Oil Corp.

"If it goes below $30, we'll just cut back on expenditures, and the oil industry will continue to go down."

He joined other local oilmen who said state and federal taxes are factors just as important as the price per barrel.

Pevehouse said his break-even point varies because of taxes on old and new oil, but in any event, "the windfall profits tax soaks up 60 cents a barrel. Every time the price of oil goes down a dollar, the company loses 40 cents a barrel and the government loses 60 cents."

This formula holds true until the price falls to about $26 a barrel, he added. Below that, the government would collect little or no windfall profit tax, he said.

"I don't think the price will go much below $30 a barrel because the world spot market price varies now (for intermediate quality crude like the Spraberry) between $28 and $30," Pevehouse said.

"That's the minimum little countries will sell for — the cut-raters like Libya."

Friday, Japanese crude buyers announced they had made a deal with Kuwait to buy oil at up to $4 below that country's benchmark price of $32.50.

The Iraqi news agency said last week, in unconfirmed reports, that OPEC members would meet in Vienna, Austria, this week to attempt to settle the cartel's dispute over prices and production limits.

Barbie's expulsion 'good news,' Israeli says

Klaus Barbie

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The man who organized the capture of Adolf Eichmann and the man who prosecuted him said Saturday they hoped Bolivia's expulsion of Klaus Barbie would encourage South American governments to turn over Nazi war criminals.

"I think it's good news," said Gideon Hausner of Barbie's expulsion and return to France. Hausner, as Israel's attorney general, led the prosecution of Nazi S.S. Col. Eichmann in 1960.

"I believe that Nazi criminals should not enjoy respite," Hausner said. "And no distance, neither in time nor the place of hiding, should provide them with shelter."

Barbie, expelled Friday night from Bolivia where he had lived since 1951, was returned to France to face trial for the torture and killings of thousands of Jews and Resistance fighters in World War II.

Israel's Foreign Ministry said it had no comment on the Barbie case.

Hausner, now chairman of the Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial in Jerusalem, said he hoped that other South American countries would learn from Bolivia's example.

"For them (South American governments) asylum is important, but this may affect the extradition of others," he said. "They don't like to extradite any criminals. But whatever their application to this policy, it should not apply to Nazi war criminals."

"My only reaction is that I am very happy that it happened," said Isser Harel, a former head of the Mossad intelligence service and the man who commanded the team that apprehended Eichmann in Argentina.

state in brief

Are Dallas Cowboys worth state of New Mexico, minus Lea County?

SANTA FE (AP) — Trading eastern New Mexico to Texas for El Paso could be one way to help New Mexico's financial woes, says state Sen. Alfred Nelson.

"Nobody goes to Clovis to spend money, but everybody goes to Juarez," said Nelson, who introduced a joke memorial Friday calling for the trade.

"The state, in its current fiscal pickle, could use the extra revenue El Paso generates," he said.

The Las Vegas Democrat also said the oil and gas industry representatives from eastern New Mexico would no longer "have to walk the halls of government with those martyred looks which say, 'We pay for everything.'"

Mike Downing, of KLEA radio in the southeast community of Lovington, conducted an informal poll Saturday to see what some of his listeners thought of the idea.

Downing said he received 14 votes in favor of the measure, and nine against.

Four people wanted to secede the eastern plains and make a new state, said Downing. "And one joker wanted to trade all of New Mexico except Lea County for the Dallas Cowboys."

Downing said a Texas resident called and said the state couldn't have El Paso, but he would give us Amarillo gift-wrapped.

Chagra jury out for second day

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A federal jury deliberated a second day Saturday in the murder trial of Jamiel A. "Jimmy" Chagra, accused of hiring a hit man to kill U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr.

The panel of 10 women and two men deliberated about 4½ hours Friday. The jury and two alternates have been sequestered since they took the case.

The panel on Saturday was to rehearing more than an hour of conversations among Chagra, his brother and wife and informant Jerry Ray James. The conversations were recorded by the FBI in November 1980 while Chagra was in Leavenworth Penitentiary.

U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions has barred the news media from the replaying of the tapes in court, despite protests of reporters from three Texas newspapers.

More than $2 million in goods seized

DALLAS (AP) — Police who had been monitoring a junk yard for several weeks seized a cornucopia of stolen property ranging from construction equipment to a large photographic portrait of the late actor John Wayne.

The goods were valued at more than $2 million and may have been stolen in more than 500 robberies, officers said.

Three men were arrested Friday night in connection with the investigation into what officers say was one of the largest fencing operations in the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Some rooms of the one-story house on the 4½-acre lot were crammed to the ceiling with stolen goods, said Sgt. Gary Vineyard. The living room had nearly 200 items alone, officials said.

"You're probably looking at the results of a couple hundred robberies right here," Vineyard said. "They had 12 cars and trucks here. They've got stuff from all over the Dallas-Fort Worth area."

Two killed in unrelated accidents

HOUSTON (AP) — Two people, including a 2-year-old girl, were killed and four others seriously injured in separate auto accidents, police said Saturday.

Killed were Kelsey Paul Virgous and Amber Dubbs, police said.

Virgous, 32, was dead at the scene. Two passengers, Debbie Harris, and Ottie Haner, were reported in critical condition at Hermann Hospital.

Involuntary manslaughter charges were pending against the driver of a second car that police claim ran a red light early Saturday and collided with Virgous' vehicle, police said.

The 2-year-old girl died at Hermann Hospital. Her mother and 8-year-old brother were in serious condition with broken limbs at Hermann Hospital, police said. Their car collided with a wrecker, police said.

Panhandle experiences weather more common to northern climes

By MIKE COCHRAN

AMARILLO (AP) — When Old Man Winter and Mother Nature rendezvous on the Texas High Plains strange things happen. Not the least of which is the current snow storm.

Make that storms.

"Snows of this nature are few and far between," said Bob Stewart, a weather specialist at the National Weather Service.

"This only happens once every 10 or 11 years."

How about three times in two weeks?

Past history is of meager consolation for motorists, mailmen, cowboys and thousands of other working stiffs confronted by a foot of snow, ice, near-blizzard winds and fog.

The weather closed schools and businesses, stranded motorists, collapsed roofs, caused power outages and created the normal miseries associated with major wintry blasts.

The first storm, Jan. 20-21, dumped up to 18 inches of snow on the Panhandle and the second, 10 days later, was almost as ferocious. A knockout punch was brewing at week's end.

"YOU NO SOONER get a space cleared than the wind blows the snow all back over the place," said Laurence Smith, a meterologist with the National Weather Service in Amarillo.

At the NWS Severe Storm Center in Kansas City, forecaster Ryan Tilley said Friday a "distinct possibility" exists that the Panhandle could get another foot of snow from his storm.

"I hope our forecast is wrong," said Stewart as the storm approached. "We're kinda damned if we do and damned if we don't."

Nowhere in Texas but the Panhandle can non-Texans expect to see winter storms like they came to know and loathe in the Midwest and elsewhere.

Other parts of Texas may see it but they don't expect it, such as Lubbock, buried under a 16-inch snowfall two weeks ago.

Residents of The Golden Spread, as the Panhandle is called, insist their weather could and should be the envy of the state and maybe the world.

Last February, a convention and tourist group tossed a party here featuring a sound-slide show proclaiming that the sun shines 348 days of the year.

Blowing snow canceled the party.

PEOPLE IN HEREFORD, 50 miles southwest of here, still talk about the tumbleweed blizzard of 1981, which arrived on winter's eve with accumulations up to eight feet and drifts up to 10 feet.

Tumbleweeds covered homes and blocked streets on the city's west side and posed an unusual fire threat.

"It covered the garage," said Ann Zevely. "It piled up and you couldn't see in between the houses. It was real weird."

Gaylene Hill said the tumbleweeds "barricaded" her home, stacking up to the eves.

"It was the pits," she said.

Someone said a farmer plowed up a field of the dry, brittle weeds and that a strong wind swept them into town. City firemen worked two days hauling them off.

"That may have been a once in a lifetime deal," recalled Speedie Nieman, publisher of the Hereford Brand. His wife agreed, contending the weather in Hereford is ideal.

"Take out about four weeks of the year and that's right," said Nieman. "I wouldn't trade it for anything else in the world."

CHANCES ARE GOOD that some folks in Dimmitt, 20 miles south of Hereford, would trade it for most anything.

At least during the first storm.

They counted 18 inches of snow and learned the folly of that most revered of quotations: "Neither rain, nor sleet, nor snow, nor dark of night..."

Dimmitt went two days without mail service.

Edwin "Goose" Ramey, longtime weather observer, said the 18-inch snowfall was the heaviest since 1906, when 20 inches fell during a "72-hour spell."

Three years ago this month, lightning accompanied a snowfall and knocked out a television tower that burned down an outlying motel.

But the last real blizzard occurred in 1971, when 60 mile an hour winds whipped up a 22-inch snow at Pampa and 25 inches across the Oklahoma border.

At Dumas, Gary Adams awoke to find that 36 head of cattle had wandered over his snow-covered fence to take refuge in his yard.

Ruben Garcia, a deputy sheriff at Claude, east of here, rescued 20 stranded motorists despite a flat tire, broken chains and a dislodged bumper. But the problem didn't end there.

SNOWDRIFTS VIRTUALLY sealed off the motel where they took refuge and they could not leave to find food.

"So my little boy and I were bringing food to them and passing it through windows," Mrs. Garcia said. "When the drifts got higher than my son, I had to do it all myself."

CRIME STOPPERS

Kids from age twelve to seventeen victims of Texas' drug traffickers

Drug traffickers are robbing our kids of their future. Over 17,000 Texas high school seniors are daily drug users, an alarming statistic which illustrates the severity of the problem.

Kids from age twelve to seventeen are the victims. Their innocence earns these criminals easy money. Now is the time to shut down this business in Texas. It won't be easy. Dealers are just the bottom of the drug dealing pyramid. These pushers get their drugs from the kingpins, those at the top of the network, the drug traffickers.

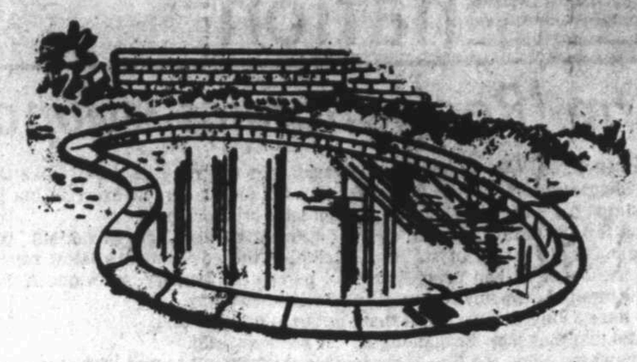

Drug dealing to minors is a hideous crime and these criminals must be stopped. A joint effort by law enforcement and concerned citizens is necessary in declaring war on drug traffickers.

There are no absolute answers but a major step has been taken. A statewide anticrime hotline is answered 24 hours a day. This hotline is designed to aid law enforcement in a crackdown on drug traffickers.

For the month of February, the Crime Stoppers Advisory Council is focusing its statewide "Crime of the Month" on drug trafficking. Any citizen having information about major drug trafficking is asked to call Texas Crime Stoppers at 1-800-252-TIPS. Cash rewards are available for information leading to the arrest and indictment of criminals. Citizens do not have to reveal their names, just their information, and they will be given a unique code number for identification purposes.

Call 1-800-252-TIPS today with any information on major drug trafficking in Texas. Help stop this growing menace to the young people of our state.

Term 'Reaganomics' sounds like fad diet, Reagan says

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Saturday he doesn't like the word "Reaganomics" because it sounds like a fad diet or aerobic exercise, but he insisted that his economic policies with that label are working.

In his regular Saturday radio address, broadcast from Camp David, Md., the president cited a string of statistics, including the government's latest report that unemployment had dropped to 10.4 percent in January, as evidence that the long-awaited economy recovery was finally under way.

"We have a long way to go, but that's a start at last," he said.

Mentioning the term "Reaganomics," the president said:

"Somewhere along the line our economic program got tagged with that label. To tell you the truth, it isn't a name I would have chosen.

"It sounds like a fad diet or an aerobic exercise, but we seem to be stuck with it."

He wouldn't mind it so much, Reagan said, "except that it's used as a term for something that's supposed to have failed." He challenged his critics to continue to use the term after he has proved that his policies work.

Reagan said that in the 16 months since his package of income tax and budget cuts went into effect, "inflation has dropped to only 3.9 percent for all of 1982, the lowest it's been in 10 years.

"Interest rates are about half what they were. The effect of that is a 40 percent increase in housing starts. Automobile sales are up, as are all retail sales. Factory orders have begun to increase...Real wages are up for the first time in three years. The rate of personal savings is up, meaning more capital for investment."

Reagan said the last "lagging indicatory," unemployment, has finally turned around as well, with the Labor Department's announcement Friday that the jobless rate dropped last month from 10.8 percent to 10.4 percent, the first such decline since the recession began a year and a half ago.

The president acknowledged there will be a political battle in coming weeks over whether to keep his economic program in place or return to the policies of the past. He urged the public to pressure Congress not to abandon his policies.

"All of the good things I've mentioned didn't begin until after our program, Reaganomics, if you will, was put in place," he said. "Prior to that, everything had been a mess for three years or more."

"I wonder if they'll still use that name when they've found out it works," he added.

In the Democratic Party's response, Sen. Carl Levin of Michigan told a national radio audience that Congress must immediately pass a jobs bill, provide food and shelter for the poor, include defense in any federal spending freeze and give up the next installment of the Reagan tax cut to help reduce the federal deficit.

Body of airman killed in WWII returned home

HOLYOKE, Mass. (AP) — The remains of one of 22 Americans killed in a World War II plane crash in New Guinea were returned Saturday to the parish where he was an altar boy and to the soil he defended a half a world away.

"It has been very emotional for us, but we are all glad he is back with us," Victoria Wilder said of her half-brother, Army Air Corps Staff Sgt. John J. Stasiowski.

Stasiowski, 27, a bachelor, was among Holyoke's first World War II draftees. He and 21 other soldiers were listed as missing after their B-24 Liberator disappeared on March 22, 1944.

Exactly 36 years later, on March 22, 1980, New Guinea jungle natives found the wreckage on a mountaintop. It took two years for news of the find to reach the U.S. military and several more months before the bodies were identified through dental records, bits of bone and a few rusty dog tags.

Stasiowski's mother died without knowing his fate. After the funeral at Mater Dolorosa Catholic church, he was buried alongside her grave.

"There are certain things about John that only God knows," the Rev. Syril Augustyn said in his eulogy. "Known only to God are the agony and heartaches of a grieving family waiting for years for word about him."

"John has come home to rest in peace with his mother and father and loved ones," the priest said.

Back at American Legion Post 325 where many of the 70 family members gathered after the burial, Mrs. Wilder said, her mother was "devastated" at the loss of her son. "I don't know how she would take it today," she said.

Veronica Rybski bore Stasiowski and two daughters by her first husband and Mrs. Wilder, three other girls and two boys by her second husband. Mrs. Rybski died in 1980. The airman's brothers and sisters are all living.

Several soldiers from B Company, 139th Engineering Division of Fort Devens in Ayer, were pall bearers and fired a 21 gun salute at the cemetery. Low-flying Air Force cargo jets passed overhead as reserve pilots drilled at Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee.

Stasiowski's sister, Carol Opalenik of South Hadley, received the American flag that draped his casket. The flag had two more stars than the Stars and Stripes that Stasiowski defended.

"I last saw him two days before he joined the Air Corps," Ted Tomaszewski, 70, of South Hadley said, recalling a night at a off-base bar. "I didn't know what happened to him until two weeks ago when I heard of his body being found."

On Thursday, a funeral will be held in Kimball, Neb., for hometown airman 2nd Lt. Keith Holm.

Holm's sister, Shirley Criss of Denver, was 15 when he was killed aboard the plane.

"You even give up all hope of learning how or where he died," she said. "But now, knowing, it becomes hard for us again. It brings back a lot of old memories."

Body found

GRAND ISLE, La. (AP) — A woman fishing from a canal pier snagged the body of a man sought on drug charges, police said.

Paul E. Carpientier, 24, of Florala, Ala., apparently tripped in the darkness and broke his neck as he and two companions ran from police,said Police Chief Ernest LaFont.

His body was pulled from the canal after the unidentified woman realized what had happened and called police.

LaFont said Carpientier's identification and a .38-caliber revolver were found on the body.

World's Fair organizers plan for worst

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — World's Fair planners hope to produce one of the best by planning for the worst that might happen at the 1984 Louisiana Exposition.

So, at the request of planners, a task force of United Way agencies put together a list of the most worrisome social problems that might result when 11 million visitors descend next year upon The City That Care Forgot.

The list was compiled with the help of comparisons with the 1974 World's Fair in Spokane, the Lake Placid Winter Olympics and the 1982 World's Fair in Knoxville — cities about a third the size of New Orleans.

"One broad generalization can be drawn from the experiences of previous major events and can be expected to be true for the 1984 World Exposition — a large influx of visitors to a city places stress on a variety of human services," the task force concluded.

"This increased stress aggravates problems already present in the system."

Crime heads the list of likely problems for New Orleans, a city that recently was rated 6th among the nation's 277 most dangerous places to live.

The task force said previous world's fairs brought more crime to Spokane and Knoxville, safer places than New Orleans, and there was no reason to expect prostitutes and pickpockets would boycott the 1984 fair here.

Next came the problem of finding affordable accommodations in New Orleans, a city where hotel and motel rates are structured for the free-spending conventioneer.

Also considered critical was the problem of coordinating medical services.

Considered somewhat less critical were the problems of finding jobs for the unemployed, helping visitors with money problems, dealing with runaways, moving people about, and raising enough money to help people who will need it.

Considered least critical were the problems of caring for visitors' children (since few visitors are expected to seek child care) and for the handicapped (since accessibility already is a major planning factor).

"In predicting the areas of greatest concren," the task force said, "one should look first at our present weaknsss and see this major event as an opportunity to seek permanent solutions to ongoing problems."

Under the heading of "Crime," for example, the task force suggested "prventive planning" designed to check New Orleans' most frequent sort of criminal activity, crimes by people against other people.

"Efforts should be made by city departments to identify and counteract environmental factors such as street lighting, security in parking lots, etc., that are conducive to murder and rape," it suggested.

It noted that New Orleans' Charity Hospital alone "sees an average of 40 rape victims per month."

"Agencies that provide rape crisis services...should develop plans to disseminate information that addresses the problem of rape and reinforces the personal strengths needed by women in both resisting and avoiding attacks by rapists.

"A system of emergency assistance to victims should be developed," the task force suggested.

It was briefer in suggesting how to cope with an already "severe shortage of low-cost housing and shelter in the New Orleans area." Use schools and church property, establish youth hostels and "perhaps the Navy could be presuaded to take a ship out of 'mothballs' and dock it at the site for low-cost housing for young people," it said.

The hospital problem mainly involved logistics since the prestigious Ochsner Foundation Hospital, designated as the primary World's Fair hospital, is located miles from the downtown fair site.

The task force suggested a closer liaison among all metropolitan health care providers, developing a backup emergency care system and some method of providing health care for people who can't afford it.

Worst blizzard recalled

BOSTON (AP) — Five years ago today, the blizzard of 1978 started with a gentle snowfall during Boston's early morning rush hour.

By the time the storm ended two days later, 27 inches of snow paralyzed Boston, 29 people were dead, 339 houses were destroyed and 6,500 were damaged by a combination of heavy snow, hurricane-force winds and pounding waves on the Atlantic coast. Property damage reached $300 million.

The storm was the worst of the century in New England. For those who endured it, the memory is still fresh.

"The drifts were so high the ordinary equipment wouldn't handle it," said William Pizzano, a Massachusetts Department of Public Works spokesman who helped answer telephones during the storm. "We called in equipment from all over New England.

"They had forecast a storm, but not of the intensity or the snow amount we received. It was not predicted to be the 100-year type storm we got," he said.

Weather forecasters predicted about a foot of snow would fall, starting that Monday morning five years ago. By midday the snow worsened. Businesses began sending employees home.

Some of them didn't make it for days.

Two tractor-trailer trucks jackknifed on the southbound side of Route 128 in Canton and the plows could not get through.

As many as 3,000 vehicles were stranded. The north lane remained open so the stranded motorists could be rescued.

Monday night, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis declared a state of emergency and banned non-emergency driving. Most businesses closed, but food and drug stores were urged to remain open.

The emergency lasted through Friday and many people could not get to work for a week.

Even after the snow stopped falling, the cleanup was difficult. Winds had reached 100 mph at the height of the storm. Drifts were huge.

Dukakis called out the National Guard and federal troops came in to help with the cleanup.

Hastings' criticisms of FBI could hurt him, legal authorities say

MIAMI (AP) — U.S. District Judge Alcee Hastings' bitter criticism of the Justice Department and the FBI during his trial for bribery and conspiracy could hurt him when he resumes his duties on the bench, Florida legal authorities say.

Hastings was acquitted late Friday on charges stemming from an alleged bribe payment. He was the first federal judge to be accused of committing crimes while on the bench.

Hastings' comments on the Justice Department and the FBI while he was a criminal defendant in the 2½-week trial could cause him problems because both government agencies are involved in the vast majority of cases before a federal trial judge.

"It obviously creates a dilemma," said Talbot D'Alemberte, a member of the Florida Bar's board of governors, "but I expect it's one he can solve."

"I can rule against the Justice Department or for the Justice Department," said Hastings, 46. "But one thing the Justice Department will not be able to do any more is pull the wool over my eyes."

Questions also were raised during the trial about lax security in Hastings' chambers and his admission under oath that he didn't know what he was going to rule in at least one case until one of his law clerks had written the order.

Ironically, Hastings and his constitutional advisers say the government's refusal to impeach the judge before the trial can now be used to keep him on the bench.

The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and the judge who presided over Hastings' trial both ruled in the government's favor that being a criminal defendant did not automatically affect Hastings' ability to be fair to the government.

University of Miami law professor Bruce Winick said Hastings' demand to be impeached was intended all along to block post-acquittal efforts to disqualify the judge from hearing any cases to which the government is a party.

Winick said it would be "an interesting twist of irony" if the government now tries to change tactics and keep Hastings off cases by claiming that he is now prejudiced against his former accusers.

"The courts have implicitly ruled that this isn't going to be a problem," added Terence Anderson, another Miami law professor and constitutional adviser to Hastings.

Hastings himself insisted his 15 months as a criminal defendant will make him a better judge: "I will be fairer than ever because I understand the process better."

Hastings voluntarily stopped hearing cases but continued to collect his $73,100 salary after attorney friend William A. Borders Jr. was arrested on Oct. 9, 1981.

Borders, convicted last year and sentenced to five years in prison, was collecting the last $125,000 of a bribe from an undercover agent who posed as a racketeer convicted in Hastings' court.

Prosecutors failed to convince the 12-member jury that Hastings had agreed to reduce the racketeers' sentences and return money seized from them in exchange for $150,000 collected by Borders, of Washington.

U.S. Disrtrict Judge Alcee Hastings, 46, is all smiles Friday after a federal jury found him innocent on charges of conspiring to take a $150,000 bribe while on the bench.

American Bar Association debates rules of ethics

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Policy makers for the nation's legal profession assembled here Saturday to seek agreement on controversial new rules of ethics that have been nearly six years in the making.

The American Bar Association, representing about half of the nation's 600,000 lawyers, is attempting to adopt a 121-page document that makes major changes in the code in effect since 1970.

The ABA's policy-making House of Delegates abandoned its effort to adopt the new rules last August in San Francisco. The members were snarled in disagreement over a proposal to allow lawyers to breach their bond of confidentiality with clients more often.

ABA President Morris Harrell of Dallas said he hopes the delegates will resolve their differences before the mid-winter convention ends Wednesday.

"The relationships that we are talking about here and how we define those is of extreme importance," he said.

Opposing forces in the debate set the stage Saturday for Monday's delegates' meeting.

Robert W. Meserve, a Boston lawyer, said the proposed revision on confidentiality would not be a fundamental change in the relationship between lawyer and client.

"A radical assault on tradition?" he asked. "Never."

Meserve was appointed to run the commission that drafted the revised rules after the death of Robert J. Kutak of Omaha, Neb., who was stricken by a heart attack in his firm's Minneapolis office on Jan. 23.

Meserve told a forum on the ethics code that "the shield of confidentiality cannot become a sword" for dishonest clients to use lawyers to further fraudulent schemes.

But John Elam of Columbus, Ohio, representing the American College of Trial Lawyers, said the new rules would "transform the role of the lawyer into an ombudsman, a watchdog" rather than an advocate for a client's interests.

"It strikes at the very heart of our notion at what should be the attorney-client privilege that secrets should be held in confidence," he said. "The role of the lawyer is not to be the conscience of the corporation. It flies in the face of common sense."

Louisiana senator convicted

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — State Senate President Michael O'Keefe was convicted Saturday of mail fraud by a federal jury that one day earlier found him guilty on two counts of obstructing justice.

O'Keefe, 52, said he would take "an indefinite leave of absence as president of the Senate" but continue to serve as a representative of New Orleans until his appeals have been exhausted.

The U.S. District Court jury on Friday found him guilty of hiding $900,000 in the sale of an apartment complex by trying to influence a grand jury witness to change his testimony and by showing the panel a fake promissory note.

He was convicted Saturday of causing false reports of the purchase price to be mailed to his partners in the $10.3 million sale.

THE MAIL fraud conviction carries a maximum penalty of five years in prison and a $1,000 fine. The other two charges carry a total maximum penalty of $10,000 and 10 years.

It was his second trial on the charges. In the first one, last summer, O'Keefe was convicted but a judge overturned the verdict, saying the prosecutor overstepped legal bounds in his closing arguments.

O'Keefe, one of the owners of the 179-unit Metairie Towers, was accused of cheating five limited partners by arranging a $900,000 payment in the sale of the complex. U.S. Attorney John Volz said the payment, not reflected in the official purchase price, enabled the senator to avoid having to share the money.

O'Keefe said the money was a loan which he is still obligated to repay. He said he requested it during the negotiations and was surprised when, at the closing of the deal on Sept. 14, 1981, the buyers gave him the $900,000 check without requiring loan papers.

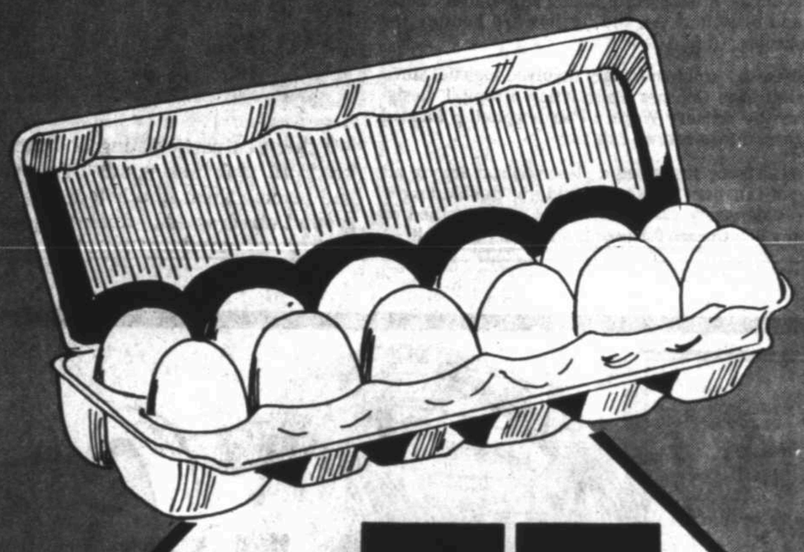

Defense lawyer Camille Gravel said he would file motions within two weeks asking that the guilty verdicts be overturned.

"IN VIEW of the verdicts this morning, I think it would be in the best interest of the Senate of Louisiana that I take an indefinite leave of absence as president of the senate," O'Keefe said.

He said it would mean that Sammy Nunez, the Senate president pro tem from Chalmette, would preside over Louisiana's 39-member Senate when it convenes April 18 for the 1983 regular session

Volz said he might not prosecute O'Keefe on a charge that he lied on the stand during the first trial, but would go ahead with his prosecution of the Senate leader on a bank fraud charge. That charge alleges that O'Keefe and others made false statements in order to obtain $6 million in business loans.

Arkansas Legislature to tackle issue of songs' hidden messages

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — The Arkansas Legislature, a 135-member group that has tackled such profound moral questions as who created the universe and whether it is right to gamble on a bingo game, is expanding into the sublime.

The question this session: Does the mind subconsciously interpret hidden messages on records and tapes — messages that can be consciously heard only when a recording is played backward?

An Assembly of God preacher backing a bill requiring warning labels on records and tapes containing backward masking says yes.

The Legislature says maybe.

A psychiatrist and a psychologist say probably not.

"Anything's possible, but it's not very probable," said Dr. David McCray, an assistant professor of psychiatry at the University of Arkansas Medical School. "To my knowledge, it can't be done, but I have not done research."

Agreeing with McCray during an interview Friday was Dr. Charles Wood. He works with neuropsychology and is a staff psychologist at the Adolescent Stress Center at Arkansas Children's Hospital. Even if the mind could interpret the messages subconsciously, Wood said, what harm would there be?

"I'm not sure that the brain could even process the information," he said, "and No. 2, if it could, I'm not sure it would even lead to a change in values...We hear cursing on the screen all the time, and that doesn't necessarily mean we're going to curse."

The preacher behind the bill, the Rev. Don Hutchings of Hot Springs, believes some of the hidden messages deify Satan. The Legislature apparently shares Hutchings' concern. The House and the Senate passed the bill, but the House must concur in a Senate amendment before the proposal goes to Gov. Bill Clinton. The governor wouldn't say Friday if he would sign the bill into law.

Wood said it's about all the brain can do to process sound going in one direction — forward, for instance. "I don't see how we could process two pieces of information; I could see it being mixed up very easily. Personally, I don't think that's very possible — to hear a word like 'natas' and turn around and get 'Satan' out of it simultaneously. But...some person might be born to decode information that fast."

When something is suggested to a person subliminally, McCray said, "You begin to first accept it."

For backward masking to be interpreted subconsciously, McCray said, the brain would require neurological mechanisms that could interpret backward verbal messages. He said he didn't know that any such mechanisms existed and referred questions on that subject to Wood.

Rather than worry about what's on the back of a record, McCray said, people should be concerned "when their young people listen to the forward messages" on some hard rock music.

"I think that there are other subliminal messages that come through rock music that are far more blatant and powerful than backward masking," McCray said. "Some are direct, and some are indirect."

Kennedy outlines program he feels is superior to Reagan's policies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, warning fellow Democrats that their 1982 election victories were not "a mandate but a challenge," outlined an economic program Saturday that he claimed would reduce deficits and unemployment faster than President Reagan's policies.

Edward Kennedy

In a speech to the Democratic National Committee, Kennedy urged Democrats to "move toward a balanced budget in a manner that tips the balance toward social justice."

Of Reagan's domestic proposals, the Massachusetts Democrat said:

"They have made a desert of our dreams — and called it a recovery program."

Kennedy's proposals included creation of a National Development Corp. that would by financed partly by public sale of bonds and tax-exempt stocks, a $5.7 billion jobs bill and legislation that would force the Federal Reserve Board to reduce interest rates.

Kennedy, who has bowed out of contention for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination, also proposed restricting the growth in defense spending to 5 percent, capping the third year of the Reagan tax cut and repealing the law that would index tax rates for inflation.

In a fact sheet distributed with his speech, Kennedy estimated his proposals would reduce the federal budget deficit to $94 billion by 1988, the target year when the president predicted last week that his budget deficit would drop to $117 billion.

In the budget he sent to Congress last week, the president also predicted that the unemployment rate would be down to 6.2 percent by 1988. Kennedy said his plan would reduce unemployment to 5 percent of the labor force by then.

Among the budget savings listed by Kennedy were $83 billion from a 1 percent higher growth rate due to lower interest rates and a Democratic jobs bill, $56 billion less than Reagan would spend for defense, $40 billion from repealing indexing and $8 billion from applying the 10 percent tax rate cut due next July 1 only to people with incomes below $50,000 a year.

Kennedy was one of several speakers at a party conference at which Democrats celebrated their 1982 election victories, emphasized their alternatives to Reagan programs and disposed of other business.

To his fellow partisans, Kennedy said: "We dare not misread the results of the last election — or we will risk losing the next one...We cannot prevail by depending on the other party to fail."

He said that even if the economy improves, "if we refuse to do more, no recovery will truly last. The best the administration has in store is a recovery with years more of 8 or 9 or 10 percent unemployment."

As for Reagan's threat to veto a major jobs bill, Kennedy said congressional Democrats "will pass that bill again and again — and again, until Mr. Reagan has to sign our bill and eat his own words."

Zhao to visit U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House belatedly announced Saturday that Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang would visit the United States this year to meet with President Reagan, but made no mention of Zhao's public invitation for a reciprocal visit by the U.S. president.

Zhao will be the first Chinese official of his rank to visit the United States.

In a brief written statement that followed by more than 24 hours Zhao's own announcement of the impending visit, the White House said, "The president has invited Premier Zhao Ziyang of the Peoples' Republic of China to make an official visit to the United States.The premier has accepted the invitation and will meet with the president on a date to be mutually agreed upon."

Zhao's trip is expected to be in June or September.

One administration official, speaking on condition he not be named, said he doubted Reagan would pay a return visit to China in this term.

The president, the official noted, "has had a personal and public view that we have an important relationship with the people of Taiwan," the island off the Chinese coast which the United States recognized until a decade ago as the legitimate seat of government for all of China.

"I think he would have to consider the impact on Taiwan" if Reagan were to visit the mainland, the official said. "And he'd have political difficulty here."

"1983 is just out of the question I would think," the official said. "Then you get into the campaign. I just don't see it in the first Reagan term."

The conservatives who formed the backbone of Reagan's support through most of his political career are the strongest U.S. supporters of Taiwan. And although Reagan has moderated his own position to pursue improved relations with Peking, he maintained as recently as the 1980 campaign that Taiwan should have the same diplomatic status enjoyed by the Peoples' Republic.

The administration official said, "A visit (by Reagan) would be symbolic of a real change in Reagan's attitude."

There have been reports that Reagan would travel to the Far East this year, most likely to Japan, South Korea and possibly the Philippines, Australia or New Zealand, and the official confirmed that there have been discussions of such a trip.

"The lure of a China visit is always there," the official added, "but I don't think it's on the front burner right now."

Deputy White House press secretary Lyndon K. Allin, when asked if Reagan would accept Zhao's invitation, said there are no plans at this time for him to do so.

People with overdue books may face jail

PAGE, Ariz. (AP) — The punishment usually meted out for petty theft or speeding in a car will now be given to those who ignore warnings of overdue books from the Page Public Library.

Flagrant violators of notices to return books could face a fine of $300 and 30 days in jail under a new ordinance. The new law has brought the return of about 20 long-overdue books, city officials said Friday, one day after it took effect.

City Manager Jack Reinhold said the ordinance only affects chronic offenders who haven't responded to letters or phone calls. Reinhold said some books have been overdue two or three years.

Schools, cities seek Nixon library

IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — The University of California at Irvine has been asked to enter the competition among schools and cities seeking to be the site of the Richard M. Nixon presidential library.

Vice Chancellor Ramon Curiel said there was strong interest for the library. The campus in suburban Orange County is near Nixon's birthplace in Yorba Linda.

Curiel said that Gavin Herbert, a friend of the former president who also is active in university affairs, recently asked Chancellor Daniel Aldrich if the campus would be interested in the project.

The library, wherever it is located, will house millions of documents, photographs and tapes, including recorded White House conversations from the Watergate era, said National Archives spokeswoman Jill Merrill.

Third fuel company employee dies

DANBURY, Conn. (AP) — A third man who had been overcome by fumes while checking a valve at the Norbert E. Mitchell Fuel Co. died Saturday morning.

David Sharpe, 19, of Bethel, had been in a coma since he collapsed at the plant Thursday morning, Danbury Hospital spokeswoman Karen Inglis said. She said she couldn't release the cause of death.

Sharpe had collapsed after entering an underground room to check a valve monitoring the flow of the oil company's diesel fuel.

Two fellow employees followed Sharpe into the room and died shortly afterward after being overcome with fumes.

The federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration has started an investigation into the deaths of the three men.

Polite bandit gives two store clerks $20

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — A polite bandit armed with a handgun and wearing a ski mask robbed a shoe store, then gave each of the two clerks a $20 bill.

"I wouldn't be doing this, but my kids are starving," police officer Ralph Roth quoted the robber as saying during the Friday night holdup.

"He wasn't rough-spoken and didn't make any verbal threats," Roth noted. "But that gun was a big enough threat for anybody."

Roth said as the gunman backed out of the store with the revolver pointed at the clerks, he told them, "You can call the police now."

Judge declares mistrial in murder case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A mistrial was declared after jurors deliberating for five weeks said they couldn't reach a verdict on five murder charges in the trial of an admitted drug dealer.

Deputy District Attorney Elden S. Fox said he will try to get a new trial on the charges against Eddie M. Brewer, 38.

The Superior Court jury said it had voted 10-2 for conviction. Judge Jerry Fields declared a mistrial Friday.

All five of the slaying victims had been shot in the head. Prosecutors said two were killed in retaliation for a drug theft and the other three were shot during a robbery.

Reagan's top aides run into Congressional criticism

WASHINGTON (AP) — For President Reagan's emissaries to Capitol Hill last week, it was a little like walking into a buzz saw. Clearly, the honeymoon is over.

"I believe that you are damaging our national security," Sen. Donald M. Riegle, D-Mich., told Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger.

"How do we get off the dime we're on?" Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., asked Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders in a hearing on El Salvador.

Other lawmakers questioned Reagan's sincerity in saying he wants arms control and a bipartisan budget.

That was the way it went last week. Some of the president's top lieutenants ran into unusually harsh criticism from Congress on both domestic and foreign issues.

It was a far cry from the administration's honeymoon days of two years ago, and not all the strong words came from Democrats.

Weinberger aroused Riegle's ire when he appeared before the Senate Budget Committee to defend Reagan's fiscal 1984 budget request for $238.6 billion in defense outlays, an increase of 10 percent after inflation.

"You give every appearance of being an inflexible ideologue when it comes to assessing the defense needs of our country," Riegle said. "By your truly fanatical insistence on defense increases that are larger than needed, larger than we can afford, I believe that you are damaging our national security."

Mrs. Kassebaum went after Enders at a hearing on the administration's policy of military aid to the Salvadoran government in its battle against leftist guerrillas.

Some of the lawmakers' targets gave as good as they got. Weinberger, for instance, told Riegle, "Everything you have said is both insulting and wrong."

It was the members of Congress, though, who had the initiative.

At a hearing on Reagan's nomination of Kenneth L. Adelman, now at the United Nations, to be arms control chief, Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., did not mince words.

"Some of us, like me, just don't believe that he (Reagan) believes in arms control," Biden said. "I do not think there is serious negotiation under way."

At a Senate Budget Committee hearing at which budget director David Stockman testified, Democrats questioned the president's sincerity in wanting a bipartisan spending plan.

"Now that we're coming in for a crash, we're being invited into the cockpit," said Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn.

And that was nothing to the going-over that the chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, Martin Feldstein, got from Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., over a 13.7 percent increase in the council's budget.

"Where's this (spending) freeze we've heard so much about?" asked Sarbanes. "People are being told they've got to sacrifice and go through the wringer for the good of the country.

"What turns out is the people who are telling us to go through the wringer are not going through the wringer themselves."

Shultz's visit to South Korea serves to reiterate commitment of U.S.

By EDWIN Q. WHITE

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who arrives in Seoul today, will find South Korean-U.S. relations much improved since the days of the Carter administration.

The emphasis of the largely ceremonial stay is expected to be reiteration of the U.S. commitment to this country by another member of the Reagan Cabinet, an expression always welcomed here.

"There are no major problems or outstanding issues to take up," said a government source involved in the planning of the two-day visit who declined to be identified. "But since he was making a tour of the area, he could hardly not stop to see us."

Shultz comes here after visits to Japan and China while on a two-week tour of Asia.

His schedule in South Korea will include meeting with President Chun Doo-hwan, talks with other government officials and business leaders, and the ritual trip to the demilitarized zone that divides South Korea from the Communist North.

After periods of strain during the tenure of former President Jimmy Carter, the Seoul-Washington relationship warmed with the move of Ronald Reagan into the White House. Chun was the first foreign government head to call on the then new American president early in 1981, and Vice President George Bush and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger visited Seoul last year.

The United States still has about 39,000 military personnel in South Korea, and Reagan and other administration officials have said the troops will remain.

Carter's plan for a phased withdrawal of U.S. ground forces was one factor that brought a deterioration of relations between the two longtime friends and allies. Carter later halted the pullout plan, but the relationship did not flower again until Reagan took office.

Another cause of friction was Carter's human rights effort which irritated ranking politicians in South Korea. Under Reagan, the word has been that the concern is still there, but so-called quiet diplomacy is practiced as a more effective way to deal with such issues.

The Chun government last December took a major step toward blunting some human rights criticism when it freed leading dissident Kim Dae-jung from prison and allowed him to go to the United States.

Kim was included in an amnesty that also saw other dissident figures freed, and rumors have circulated that a number of students jailed on charges of anti-government activities may be released soon.

Despite these moves, controls remain firm. The government still guides the press and generally silences dissident voices. A blacklist still bars more than 500 people from political activity, though Chun said in a policy statement last month that action will be taken this year toward lifting that ban.

One of those on the blacklist, and under house arrest, is Kim Young-sam, former leader of the now defunct opposition New Democratic Party and one-time presidential hopeful. He repeatedly has called for restoration of democratic institutions.

When Shultz left Washington, an official traveling with him was quoted as saying the secretary will express U.S. pleasure at efforts to improve the human rights atmosphere in South Korea, while emphasizing that "we welcome further progress."

While long on form, the secretary's visit is considered important here as a demonstration of close ties between two countries that last year celebrated 100 years of diplomatic relations.

U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz tours the imperial Forbidden City in Peking Saturday after he ended four days of talks with Chinese leaders. Shultz leaves China today to fly to South Korea.

An Analysis

Shultz reveals Weinberger will visit China

PEKING (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, completing a four-day effort to improve Chinese-U.S. relations, said Saturday that Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger may visit Peking soon.

Shultz flies to South Korea today after intensive meetings here with seven principal Chinese Communist officials, including top leader Deng Xiaoping.

His visit here marked the renewal, at least on a tentative and limited basis, of a military dialogue between China and the United States.

Shultz made clear that Weinberger is interested in meeting Chinese leaders, but added no specific arrangements have been made and it "remains to be seen" what develops.

The secretary of state said the Chinese did not raise the question of buying weapons from the United States. Before his arrival here, Shultz said he was not coming "as an arms merchant."

At the talks, U.S. and Chinese delegations agreed to set up a group to discuss low-level military cooperation in such fields as professional military education.

It was not clear if the U.S.-Chinese team might provide a framework for expanding military cooperation at a higher level in later months or years.

So far, China has not taken significant advantage of the offer made here in the summer of 1981 by then-Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. to permit China to buy U.S. weapons systems.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said pointedly just before he met with Shultz earlier in the week that "China has no military relationship with the United States."

When Haig was secretary of state in the first 18 months of the Reagan administration, he often spoke of U.S.-Chinese ties in terms of a "strategic relationship" aimed at thwarting Soviet expansionism.

Shultz said at his news conference that the "strategic relationship" description might fit, but only in that Soviet behavior affected both nations.

"So I suppose that if you want to call that a strategic relationship, you can," he said.

Opposition leads Gandhi's party in New Delhi's municipal elections

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The opposition Bharatiya Janata Party took a 2-1 lead over Prime Minister Gandhi's Congress Party in first results from New Dehli's municipal elections Saturday.

Only three of 156 seats were decided, however, and these were determined by electric voting machines introduced on an experimental basis. All other races used old-fashioned ballot boxes and they will be counted on Sunday.

Voters were electing 56 members of the Delhi Metropolitan Council, the capital's legislative body, and 100 members of the Delhi Municipal Corporation, its administrative body.

Officials estimated that about 60 percent of this capital city's 3.3 million eligible voters turned out for the voting.

Mrs. Gandhi's party has not won outright any of the eight state elections since she returned to power three years ago. Its defeat here would follow upset election victories by Janata Party candidates last month over Congress Party incumbents in Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh states.

Thirteen killed in Brazilian smashup

ALAGOINHAS, Brazil (AP) — A speeding pickup truck carrying 20 weekend soccer players and their friends smashed head-on into another truck, killing 13 men and seriously injuring the others, police said Saturday.

The pickup careened around a dangerous curve at 70 mph, crossed the centerline and collided with an oncoming truck, killing 10 men instantly in the Friday smashup, police said. Three others died later in a local hospital.

A police spokesman said the men were an informal group of weekend soccer players en route to a neighboring city to play their traditional friendly rivals.

Alagoinhas is a city of 100,000 located about 60 miles from the Bahia state capital of Salvador and 900 miles north of Rio de Janeiro.

Pilot killed in British helicopter crash

LONDON (AP) — A Sea King helicopter from the British aircraft carrier Invincible crashed into the sea off the coast of Portugal last week, killing the pilot, the Defense Ministry said.

Queen Elizabeth II's son Prince Andrew, who also flies Sea Kings from the ship, was not involved in the accident, the ministry said in a Friday announcement.

A ministry spokesman said the helicopter had been engaged in deck landing practice at midday Wednesday when it ditched six miles from the carrier, which is on its way to the Caribbean for exercises with the U.S. Navy. The spokesman did not explain the delay in announcing the accident.

"Three of the four-man crew escaped, but the fourth, the pilot, is missing, presumed dead," the spokesman said.

Contraband silver seized in Pakistan

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — Pakistani customs agents swarmed onto an Arabian Sea island beach at low-tide and unearthed 1,320 pounds of contraband silver after informers tipped them off, the government said Saturday.

The Customs Office said in an official announcement that its agents found the silver slabs in 25 sacks at a dumping ground on Khahi Island, about 30 miles east of here.

It was the second seizure of contraband silver in the area in less than two weeks. On Jan. 26, customs agents seized 2,200 pounds of silver at Korangi Crek, about 5 miles east of of Karachi Port, the Customs Office said.

Smokers need not apply for loans

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Cigarette smokers will be disqualified from receiving interest-free small-business loans, the Minister of National and Rural Development said Saturday.

The reason: If they can afford to buy cigarettes and smoke their money away, they do not need the government loans, said the minister, Sanusi Junid.

He said all applicants for the loans would be given medical tests to determine if they are smokers. Each loan is equivalent to $875.

Late last year Malaysia launched an anti-smoking campaign that banned smoking in government offices.

U.N. medical team to study malaria

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Four medical experts from the U.N. World Health Organization arrived here Saturday for two weeks of research into malaria and nutritional problems among population at the Thai-Cambodian border.

Mission leader Dr. William Gunn, in charge of U.N. worldwide emergency relief operations, said there was increasing concern over malarial mosquitos which had developed a new pattern of resistance to available drugs in the region.

The shifting population along the Thai-Cambodian border makes a controlled study difficult, Gunn said. There are about 200,000 Cambodian civilians in encampments on the border or just inside Cambodia in areas controlled by guerrillas battling the Vietnam-backed government. Vietnamese troops invaded Cambodia in late 1978.

Former president returns to Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Former President Miguel Aleman has returned home after three weeks of medical treatment in Houston, the newspaper Excelsior reported Saturday.

It quoted his private secretary, Javier Baz Manero, as saying that Aleman "will recuperate at his home and surely will renew his work at the National Tourism Council in a few weeks more."

The 82-year-old former president was hospitalized at Houston's Methodist Hospital, where spokesmen had refused to disclose his condition at the patient's request.

Javier Rivas, a spokesman for the tourism council that Aleman heads here, had said he was in Houston for a checkup and denied rumors that he was seriously ill.

Aleman was president of Mexico from 1946 to 1952.

Forest fire near Mexico City doused

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Firefighters successfully doused the blaze that burned for three days in the Dinamos Forest outside of Mexico City, authorities report.

An Agriculture Department spokesman said the fire damaged close to 150 acres (60 hectares), 90 percent of it pasture, in the forest located in the mountains that surround Mexico City.

"Fortunately, there were no personal damages," he said.

The spokesman, who did not give his name, said the fire was put out Friday. Strong winds had made it difficult to control the blaze.

Vice President George Bush, left, on a seven-nation tour of Europe, stands in the turret of an American M 60 A3 tank and waves to U.S. troops at Camp Gates, located in West Germany near the Czechoslovakian border. He is accompanied by West German Defense Minister Manfred Woerner.

Speculation continues about future of Pinochet's military rule of Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The collapse of two major banks and state takeovers of five others has produced a rash of speculation about the future of President Augusto Pinochet's military regime.

For the first time since the 1973 coup that felled elected Marxist President Salvador Allende, there is serious conjecture that the 67-year-old army general may be losing his iron-fisted grip on this South American country.

A 3-week-old financial crisis has twice forced Pinochet to interrupt his vacation — once to disprove rumors that he was either dead or under house arrest in a coup of fellow military men.

Though such stories have lost currency in recent days, the extent to which they were believed and repeated among Chileans is a sign of the widespread anger over Pinochet's handling of an economic slump.

"They have been saying for months that the recession has hit bottom, but I don't think so," said Rafael Cumsille, president of the Retail Merchants Confederation. "I say we are plunging downhill at fantastic speed."

For Pinochet, the turn of fortune has been dramatic. In September 1980, when Chile's free-market economy boomed, 70 percent of the voters backed a constitutional referendum giving him nine more years in power.

But his position has been undermined by a 14 percent decline in the gross national product that, in 1982, put 25 percent of the labor force out of work and bankrupted a record 810 companies.

To limit damage to the financial system, the government on Jan. 13 took over seven banks burdened by uncollectable debts, liquidated two of the banks and began investigating shaky conglomerates linked to the other five.

Finance Minister Rolf Luders, who also guaranteed bank deposits in the Chilean peso currency for the rest of 1983, said this detour from free-market principles would restore confidence in the banking system. But an atmostphere of fear and uncertainty lingers.

Long lines of angry savers have withdrawn $292 million of the $400 million they had kept in peso mutual funds, most of which were controlled by two conglomerates under investigation. Unlike those in banks, their deposits were not guaranteed, and some savers lost up to 60 percent of their money.

A cartoon in the prestigious newspaper Mercurio said the safest depository in town was Cic, a brand of locally made mattresses. Business leaders have railed against what some call the "creeping socialization" of Chile.

Similar public reaction preceded Pinochet's overthrow of Allende in 1973.

Even foreign private bankers who once held up Chile's economy as a model are worried. Last month Luders won a reprieve on $264 million in foreign loan repayments falling due in the next 90 days. But the bankers halted new credits until they can set conditions for long-term refinancing of Chile's $17 billion foreign debt.

Bush flies to Rome for talks with officials

ROME (AP) — Vice President George Bush flew to Rome Saturday for talks with Italian officials and Pope John Paul II after offering to extend nuclear arms talks with the Kremlin "for as long as it takes."

Bush began the day in Geneva, Switzerland, where he said the United States was willing to extend nuclear arms talks with the Soviets indefinitely, even if new NATO missiles are deployed in Western Europe.

He said the United States is prepared to negotiate "this year, next year, any time on the weapons" and added that "what goes in can come out."

Bush was met at Rome's Ciampino military airport by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, and the two quickly left by motorcade for a meeting with Christian Democrat Premier Amintore Fanfani.

Bush's jet was delayed four hours by snow in West Germany, where he lunched with American troops and inspected Moedlareuth, a border hamlet divided by a "little Berlin Wall."

The vice president was forced to catch a train from nearby Bayreuth to Nurenberg and his awaiting jet.

Italy is the fifth country on a seven-nation European tour on which Bush hopes to assure allies the United States is serious about negotiations with the Soviet Union to eliminate or reduce the number of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

Italy was the first of five nations to agree to a plan to base in Europe 572 U.S.-built Pershing 2 and cruise nuclear missiles as part of a North Atlantic Treaty Organization plan to counter Soviet medium-range rockets in Eastern Europe.

NATO is scheduled to start deployment of 112 cruise missiles in Comiso, Sicily, by the end of the year as well as missiles in Britain and West Germany. The Netherlands and Belgium have agreed to take the missiles but have yet to announce deployment sites.

Italy has also been one of the staunchest supporters of President Reagan's "zero option," which calls for the elimination of Soviet SS-20 missiles aimed at Europe in return for a NATO decision to forego deployment of the new U.S. missiles.

Moscow has rejected the "zero option" and offered instead a limited cut in its medium-range missiles force, which Washington and Italy rejected.

Bush is scheduled to meet Monday at the Vatican with Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, the Vatican's secretary of state, and John Paul, a strong critic of the arms race and the threat to mankind posed by nuclear arms.

U.S. officers, sergeant relieved of duties because of advisor's 'operational' flight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two U.S. warrant officers and a sergeant have been relieved of their duties in El Salvador because of an incident in which another American military adviser was wounded during a helicopter mission, a Pentagon spokesman said Saturday.

A statement initially released Saturday morning by the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador also disclosed that another American military trainer went on a separate "operational" flight which took ground fire at about the same time. U.S. military advisers have standing orders not to participate in such operations.

Lt. Col. Richard Rapp provided the text of the embassy statement dealing with Wednesday's incident, in which Staff Sgt. Jay Thomas Stanley, 25, of Towson, Md., suffered a leg wound from ground fire.

Stanley was the first American soldier wounded in El Salvador since U.S. military advisers were sent to the Central American nation in 1981. The force is limited to 55 personnel, but there were 37 advisers in the country Thursday.

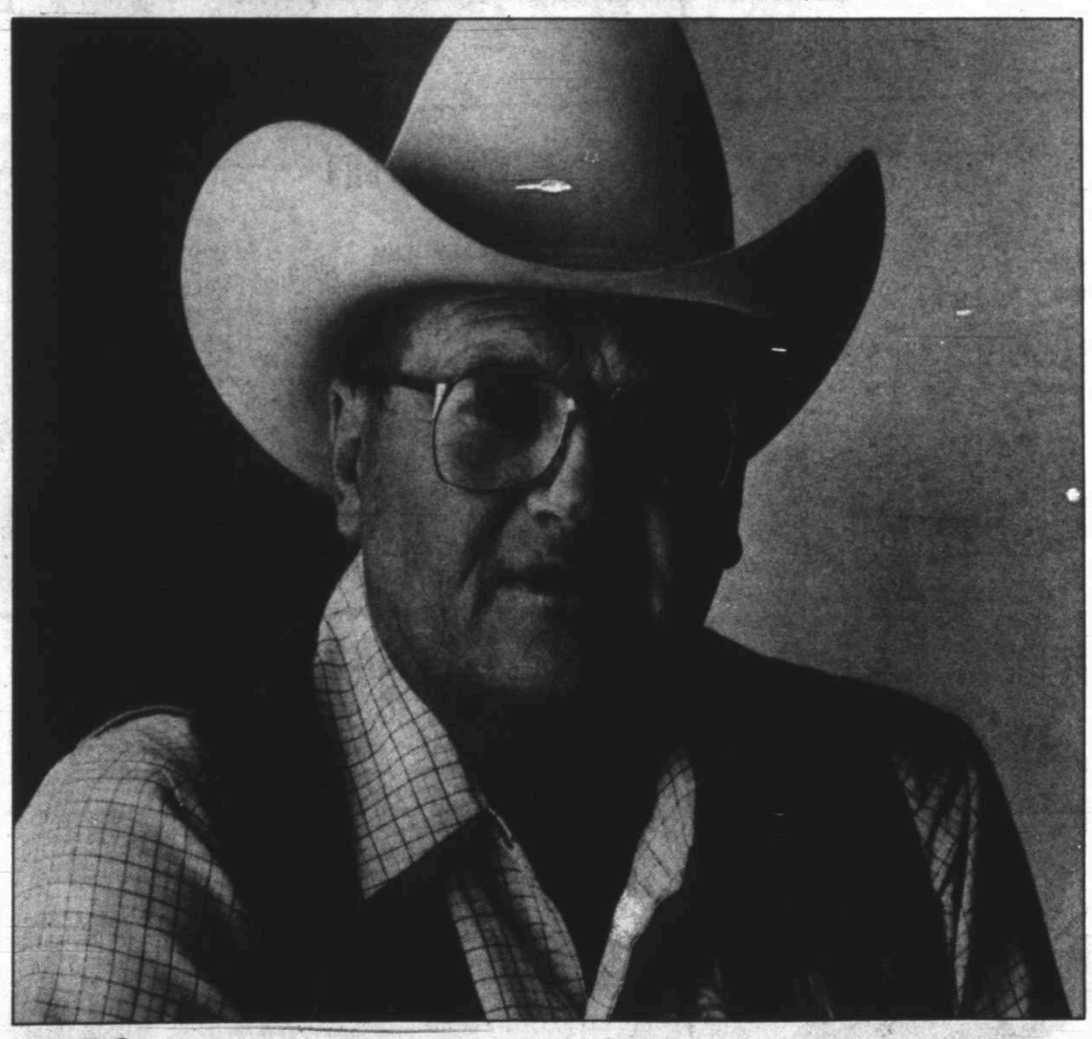

"As a result of a careful evaluation of all available information, we have determined that the primary purpose of the flight on which Staff Sgt. Stanley was wounded was to establish direct contact with a Salvadoran army unit on a tactical operation," the statement said.

It said that this made the flight "operational," adding that "in accordance with standing instructions, American trainers should not have participated in such an operation."

"Further investigation also revealed that at about the same time and in the same area, another trainer went on a different operational flight, also in violation of standing instructions. This flight also took ground fire, although fortunately no one was wounded," the statement said.

The embassy said that "as a result of our findings, two warrant officers and one master sergeant have been relieved of their duties by the USMILGROUP (U.S. military advisory group in El Salvador) commander and will leave the country on the next available military aircraft."

Jans Peter Larsen, an internationally known expert in Joseph Haydn, holds a musical score discovered in the basement of the town hall of Odense, Denmark, and believed to be a symphony written by Amadeus Wolfgang Mozart when he was 12 years old. Journalists, military policy makers to discuss impact of Vietnam War

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pulitzer Prize-winning journalists, former CIA agents and military policy makers such as Nguyen Cao Ky gather this week for a conference called "Vietnam Reconsidered: Lessons From a War."

A.J. "Jack" Langguth, a former war correspondent and journalism professor who organized the four-day gathering at the University of Southern California, says he doesn't want the significance of the war to be lost on a new generation — or on the older one.

"The idea was to see if out of one lengthy conference could come some lessons for the world and for journalism," said Langguth. "It's important to say that Vietnam has not been forgotten, but it's also important to say that we are learning from it.

"It's 20 years since Vietnam began appearing on our front pages," he added. "In that time, we should be able to distill from all of this anguish some sort of guide for the future."

Many panelists, including writers and leaders of the anti-war movement, are preparing scholarly papers that will be the basis of a book to be published by Harper & Row with book proceeds to be donated to Vietnam Refugee Relief, according to Ed Cray, public relations director of the conference.

Big names at the gathering include Ky, the former vice president of South Vietnam, Daniel Ellsberg of Pentagon Papers fame and Frank Snepp, a former CIA agent who incurred agency wrath with his book on the war, "Indecent Interval."

The roster also includes 12 Pulitzer Prize winners, among them war photographers Eddie Adams and Nick Ut, whose pictures will be on display.

There will be speeches by top journalism and literary figures such as David Halberstam, Keyes Beech, Harrison Salisbury, Frances Fitzgerald, Gloria Emerson and Arthur Miller.

Military men, a prisoner of war, Vietnam veterans and war protester David Dellinger, who was one of the Chicago Seven, are also among the 85 panelists.

"The panelists fall into two categories," said Langguth, "those who have assimilated the Vietnam experience and gone on to other things and those who have continued to express their opinions on the war."

Langguth, who was New York Times bureau chief in Saigon in 1965, says the idea for "Vietnam Reconsidered" was spurred by his students at USC Journalism School who knew little about the war.

"To them, Vietnam was a word," he says. "They didn't understand about the controversy. They didn't know of the war's impact on journalism. Most of them were 10 or 12 years old when the war ended."

Students from USC and surrounding universities are among the 1,000 participants expected to attend 20 different panel sessions Sunday through Wednesday, with topics including "Roots of U.S. Involvement in Vietnam," "The War and U. S. Culture," "Role of the CIA in Vietnam," and "Did Vietnam Change Journalism?"

Although Langguth anticipates a calm, dispassionate examination of issues, the conference already has stirred controversy with word that the U.S. government refused a visa for a representative of Vietnam to attend.

Instead, Nguyen Ngoc Dung, in New York, will participate through an electronic hookup arranged by California Public Radio and National Public Radio.

Mrs. Dung, permanent United Nations representative of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, is part of a panel titled "The Aftermath in Indochina" on Wednesday.

A spokesman for the State Department in Washington said travel by representatives of nations with whom the United States does not have diplomatic relations is restricted to a 25-mile radius of the United Nations building in New York except when diplomatic business requires travel.

"The greatest emotional impact of the conference will be for the Vietnamese community and the veterans," said Langguth, noting that veterans are being given a reduced admission fee of $10. Others will pay $50 to attend.

Pemex director says Mexico won't increase oil output

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The director of the state Pemex oil monopoly says Mexico will not increase production or take other steps that would further distort the international energy market, the official El Nacional newspaper reported Saturday.

"Mexico is not an island. What takes place in the world markets where it operates affects it and it has to adjust its conduct accordingly," Pemex Director-General Mario Ramon Beteta told reporters.

"Our platform for production as well as for exports will be maintained at the levels that have been fixed, until there are other elements of judgment. For now, we have not taken any decision regarding an increase in our production of crude oil for export," Beteta said.

He also reiterated that Mexico, a major exporter, is not interested in joining the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

El Nacional said Beteta spoke to reporters Friday on a tour of the Cadereyta refinery outside of the northern industrial center of Monterrey.

"Faced with what is happening in the world markets, when we have all the elements we will determine our conduct, as much for our foreign commerce as our domestic," he said.

Beteta also said that he does not foresee any increase in natural gas sales to the United States to increase revenue if oil prices go down. Mexico currently exports 300 million cubic feet daily to the United States.

The Energy Department denied Friday that its oil exports have "provoked" a crisis within OPEC.

In a written statement, it noted that Mexico's exports represent only 3 percent of the oil sold on the world market. It said Mexico "will not initiate a decrease in prices."

Industry sources say Mexico is under pressure to reduce its prices because of the drops in oil prices on the international market. They say regular monthly talks between foreign buyers and Pemex have been stalemated for more than a week.

Mexico has maintained its prices of $32.50 a barrel for its lights Isthmus crude and $25 for its heavier Maya crude since last March.

Borne by the wind, papers swirl to lodge against a tree, right, or rise on updrafts to be caught in the branches. In landfill-bordered Cole Park, refuse is often seen "blowing in the wind," making the site something less esthetically pleasing than a "forest preserve park."

City not ready to 'trash' refuse-studded Cole Park

Plans include attractions for young

Cole Park long has been unique among the recreational spots of Midland: A place where a family might retreat from the city, take in deep breaths of fresh air, grill wieners and look at the stars.

Today, such activities are things of the past, as Midlanders avoid this 15-acre wooded parcel just off Greenwood Highway like the plague.

The reason?

Drive out on a windy day and glance at its once-grassy expanses and the answer reaches out and shakes you like an angry dockworker.

Newspapers, litter and refuse hug every tree, flutter in the currents and carpet the ground to fill the burrows of prairie dogs.

Roll down a window and it's like sticking your head in a slaughterhouse. Foul odors singe nostrils, spawn gasps, send those who have dared this unpark-like park retreating to the gasoline fumes and pavement of Midland's concrete jungle. It is unpleasantness at its utmost, a spot to view only through the imagery of reminiscences and one reeking of disappointment.

THE REASON behind the reason?

A city of Midland landfill area, so close that it actually has infringed upon park boundaries.

Midlanders, of necessity, are turning up their noses at Cole Park, but Parks and Recreation Director Wayne Kohout is determined that it will not always be so.

"Realistically, there's no sense trying to promote use of that park as long as the landfill area is there," he said. "It's so objectionable at certain times of year. They're right up to the border of the park and that's caused us some consternation. They really got closer than we wanted them to.... The flies are coming down in such numbers it just drives you nuts."

Kohout admitted it's not a pretty sight either.

"Granted, it does look terrible the first day or so after the wind," he said, "but we do get out there and pick it up the first chance we get. It's especially bad in spring."

Cole Park long has been of paramount importance to the plans and programs of Midland Parks and Recreation Department. For several years it was the site of an exotic zoo, and more recently has been regarded by Kohout as "the closest thing we have to a forest preserve park, where people feel like they have removed themselves somewhat from the city."

It's a never-ending job for Reinaldo Bautista and other Parks and Recreation employees — cleaning the trash from the grassy expanses, only to have it hauled to the landfill area where the wind initiates the process all over again.

ALTHOUGH OCCASIONALLY it is still used for rock band concerts, overnight campouts by Boy Scouts and as a picnic area, Kohout is well aware the proximity of the landfill has removed much of its attraction, though it is a situation which must be endured — at least for a while.

"We were told three years ago that the landfill area would be filled in 18 months," he explained. Legal difficulties, however, hampered the city public works department in securing additional landfill areas, leaving the brunt of the burden on that adjacent to Cole Park.

That matter since has been resolved, but Mike Butler of the city of Midland says, "We're looking at another 12 to 18 months on that landfill, probably."

Kohout is anxious for it to be abandoned so that firm plans for the park's future can be established. "Once they do that, we have plans to gain control of some of that land out there and establish an area for use of radio-controlled model airplanes," he explained. "We've earmarked that for the last couple of years."

On a larger scale, Kohout forsees Cole Park as becoming an attraction for multitudes.

"IDEALLY, WHAT we'd like to find — and we might look to Cole Park for this — is a truly large picnic area," he noted. "Hogan Park seats a maximum of 500, and we have a lot of requests for more than 500. There is an odor from the sewage processing plant, but with the prevailing winds it misses the park. Cole Park and the processing plant are on an east-west line, and the plant is far enough west to where there's not a pervading odor."

The director also would like to attract the younger generation to the site.

"We want to get some theme-related play equipment...and (create) a novelty-type play area," he explained. "We would like to beef up the area for kids."

Additionally, a hoped-for automatic sprinkler system at a cost estimated at more than $65,000 would alleviate manpower difficulties and allow the prairie dog population to be better controlled.

The rodents, he explained, have exceeded their boundaries because of over-population and the fact that better grass grows among the trees. "We want to irrigate that portion where the prairie dogs are to make the grass grow," he said. "We have plans to remove the majority of them from the park area because their holes are a hazard, but we would still like to keep some as an attraction, wall them in."

But Kohout admits that plans always are subject to change and further scrutinization.

"Our own department has been faring quite well the past two years with budget requests," he said, "but the City Council, because of a downswing in sales tax revenue, may have to tighten the Parks and Recreation budget next year."

Regardless, if the anticipated relocation of the current landfill becomes reality by the summer of 1984, then Kohout hopes Midlanders again will discover their "forest retreat."

Smoker rolls his own with 'own' blend

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

N.J. Bell is a smoker's smoker. He's particular and savors just one brand of tobacco, which is no longer on the market.

"This tobacco is keeping me young," claims Bell, who is probably smoking his 300,000th or so roll-your-own Duke's Mixture cigarette, is suppressing a cough and drinking coffee while he's wearing his shop-made boots and admiring his fiddle collection. "This smoking keeps me contented.... It tastes real good."

But Duke's is no longer sacked. It's been phased out and has been replaced by ready-rolls and those low-tar filtered cigarettes. Bell called on his perseverance and straight-talk and wound up with a seven-pound batch of custom-made Duke's tobacco.

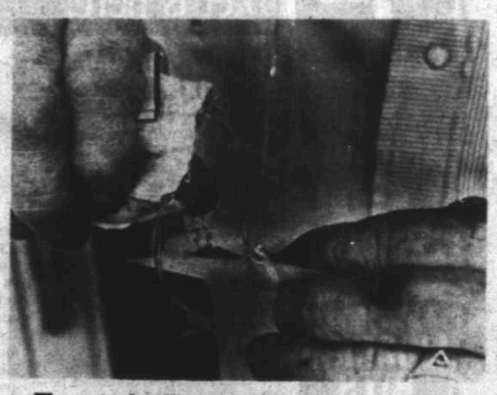

Instead of getting his tobacco from a five-eighth ounce cheese-cloth sack, Bell now pinches Duke's from the seven-pound batch which he stashes in his "cold closet."

Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. quit making Duke's in the 1970s. After an exhausive search in 1976, Bell rounded up the last sacks of Duke's. He was just about to run out of Duke's last year when he and his wife, Jo Nell, drove to L&M's cigarette plant at Durham, N.C., in November.

There, tobacco officials were so impressed with Bell's product loyalty that they made him a special formula of Duke's tobacco and shipped it to him. He was aglow.

While in North Carolina, he dropped in on an L&M competitor, R.J. Reynolds, at Winston-Salem, N.C., and made arrangements to get a 10-year supply — 20 cartons — of OCB wheat-straw cigarette paper leaves. They're slow burning.

The seven pounds of Duke's will last Bell about 120 days, he figures.

The art of rolling a "real" cigarette is demonstrated by Bell.

Bell, a retired Midland farmer who smokes 30 cigarettes a day, has a fixation like no other: Unless he's out of Duke's, which he almost was, he won't inhale the smoke from another tobacco. He smokes Duke's, and so did his father.

For more than 30 of his 66 years, Bell has rolled, with wheat-straw paper, Duke's Mixture from the cloth sack. Before that, he had smoked off and on since he was a 16-year-old lad in Stanton.

When he cowboyed, he smoked Bull Durham, for that was the cowboys' choice. But he really preferred Duke's, which the cowpokes said was fit only for sheepherders. Rather than be called a sissy, he rolled Bull Durham and rode along with the rest.

After cowboying, he smoked ready-rolls, preferably Chesterfields, but returned to his favorite — roll-your-own Duke's. He was never much of a fan of Camel, Lucky Strike, Old Gold or Philip Morris cigarettes.

A month after the trip to North Carolina, L&M's C.C. Gurganus wrote Bell an encouraging letter: The company's Product Development group would mix up a Duke's sample for him.

"I am sure we can rescue you from the position of being between an empty sack and a real craving," the tobacco executive wrote.

By mid-January, Bell had the tobacco and another letter from Gurganus.

"We hope this mixture suits your taste," the L&M man wrote Nell. "We wish you good health and good smoking."

Bell responded in kind. The tobacco, after all, was free.

"I opened and smoked some of this tobacco, and I am just carried away with it. The aroma and taste is wonderful."

Bell, who said most of his farmer friends smoke and could smell the aroma of Duke's "from over here," said Texas cotton farmers support the tobacco growers.

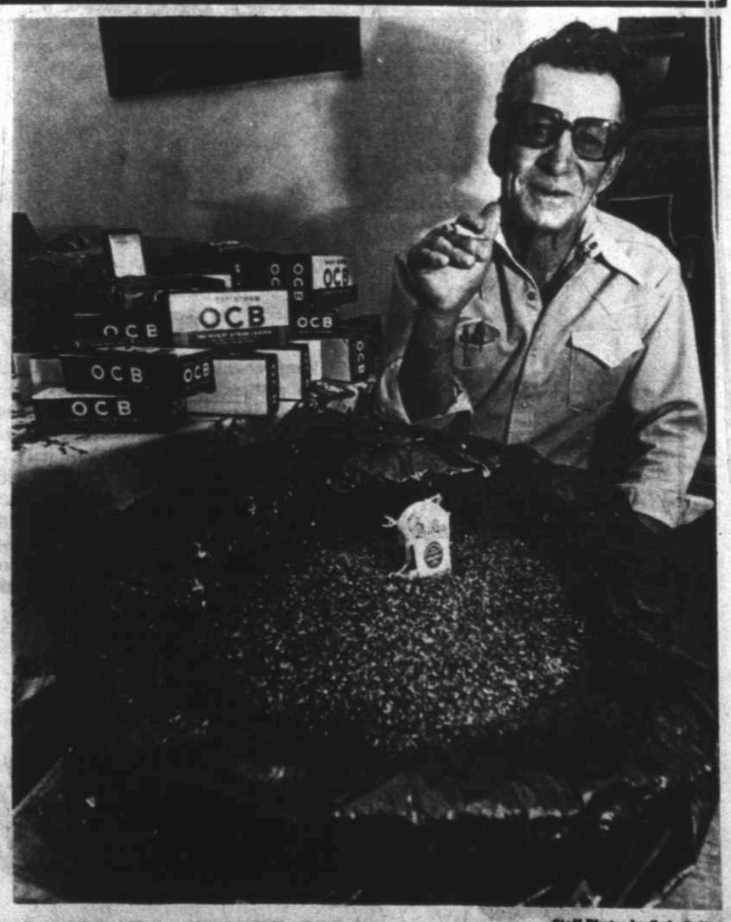

"All of our farmers are for the tobacco farmers and tobacco companies and speak of the multi-billion dollar business.... The (government) subsidies the tobacco farmers receive aren't 'a pinch in the pouch' as compared to what the economy gets back."

Bell is considering going national via magazines and the television program "Eyes of Texas," but surmises that "they might not take it if they thought it was a plug for smoking."

Notwithstanding, Bell figures that he'll be smoking as long as he can breathe.

"I'm still the only person on the planet that has Duke's tobacco," he says proudly, "and they (L&M) said they would make Duke's tobacco indefinitely (for him) as long as I need it."

"I'm in perfect health as far as I know," he says. "I won't say smoking does anybody any good, but I will say that I'm content enough that it does me a lot of good."

N.J. Bell smokes, smokes and smokes those cigarettes and wouldn't trade one sack of roll-your-own Duke's Mixture for a carton of filtered cigarettes.

Agriculture students at Texas A&M soon must join computer revolution

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Agriculture students at Texas A&M University soon will be forced to join the computer revolution or forfeit the opportunity to earn a degree.

Associate Dean Dwayne Suter says students in the College of Agricultures eventually will be required to learn how to work with computers before they graduate.

Students will be trained to use computers for agricultural production, processing and distribution, Suter said. Some farmers and ranchers are using computers to purchase or lease land and to help the dairy industry store and analyze milk production records.

"We're developing computer-aided instructional materials. Students who want to develop their computer skills can do so without having to take a course. But one way or another, they must be able to pass the competency test before they graduate," he said.

Out-snobbing the snob: Who corners the market?

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

Who's the snob: The guy sporting the emblem of an alligator on his shirt or the fellow wearing a conservative Brooks Brothers garment.

Both pieces of clothing may be made of equally fine fabric. The styles of either may be in vogue.

But you can be sure that the fellow with the green lizard patch on his shirt probably went out of his way to get the reptile image to adorn his proud chest. You can be certain that he paid extra for the patch.

He probably has designer blue jeans to give a puff of class to his denim "threads." His spectacles likely bear the Christian Dior name, his ties carry the "CM" mark, his watch is a Rolex and his luggage is endorsed by Cartier.

So, why is the fellow with the Brooks Brothers clothing so discreet and persnickety? He may dress for himself or dress up to impress his peers or those whom he wishes were his peers.

He certainly didn't wander into Sears & Roebuck or J.C. Penney department stores to select his wardrobe.

Chances are he put forth more effort to get un-emblemed apparel than did the fellow wearing the alligator, fox, polo player or whale patch on his clothing. Of course, the fellow who paid to have his initials sewn on his shirt collars or pockets also is in the running for the Snob of the Year Award.

But who is the greater snob? All are snobs of sort. But the fellow who works at getting those clothes without the conspicious emblems may outsnob the others. His cloths are esoteric. He knows that only others who appreciate his taste in quality can identify his wearing apparel. He's the quiet snob.

He wins the greater-than-thou award.

Then, you'll find the insecure sophisticate. When this snob takes off her coat, she drapes it so that the Neiman-Marcus, Saks Fifth Avenue, Marshall Field or Sakowitz label will show. Then, passersby will know who's got wealth and clout and an air of class, culture, taste and sophistication. How many display their Apex labels?

The snob outdoorsman wears L.L. Bean boots, jackets, hats and caps and carries a Bean walking stick. There's a reason: Bean makes and markets substantial merchandise. And folks will go out of their way, even drive up to Freeport, Maine, to live up to the images of themselves.

But there's nothing immoral about it, unless you consider pride in appearance to be a deadly sin.

Now, which is the greater snob: the fellow who drives a Rolls-Royce, Mercedes-Benz or BMW or the dandy guy sporting around in a classic MG, a 1956 Thunderbird or a Route 66 Corvette, or the collector driving a Model T or Maxwell?

Is the fellow a snob just because he wears a camel-hair coat or a cashmere sweater or is the lady high stepping when she wears her Ultra Suede dress and fur stole?

Not necessarily.

But don't confuse snobbery with comfort, good appearance, durability and practicality. Given the choice, would you opt for a plastic or leather wallet, a copper or gold coin, a straw or feather mattress, a wool suit or a double-knit polyester outfit, bourbon whiskey or rot-gut, spring or well water, diamonds or rhinestones?

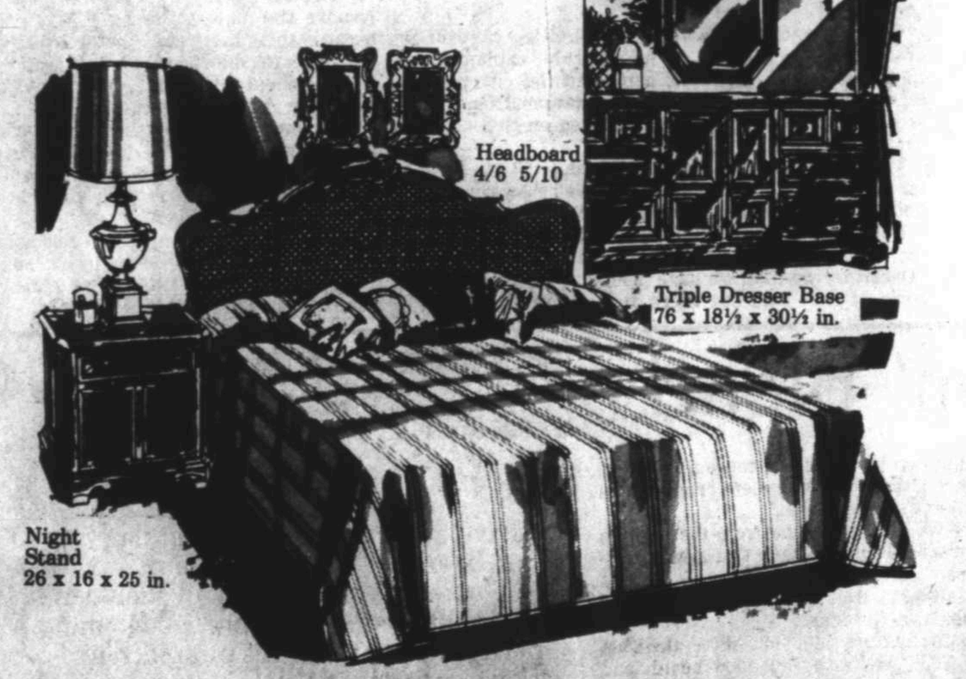

There's a bit of the snob in us all.

Midlander returns as surgeon

Dream included hometown practice

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

As a boy, Shelton Viney was mystified by the FBI. But reality shook the lad's visions of a G-man's action-packed life when he pondered a potential investigation by the government agency — "would my boyhood pranks keep me out?"

While growing up, Viney watched his petroleum engineer father work many hours. Viney tried the oil fields, and enjoyed the hard, physical labor during his high school years.

"But, the oil field wasn't the place for me. One day riding to the rig, I observed I was the only one without fingers or parts of my fingers missing."

Later, his boyhood dreams became more practical. He wanted a challenge, a dedicated profession and money. He didn't want to work those long, competetive hours he saw his father work. Viney thought he'd become a doctor. His high school teachers were shocked.

"When I was a senior I told one teacher I'd like to be a doctor and the teacher said 'What!' My grades didn't reflect that I was serious."

BUT VINEY continued to dream. Because he always enjoyed puttering around the golf course, he could imagnine himself practicing medicine and playing golf on Wednesday afternoons.

"I saw a lot of doctors play golf, but since then, my game has suffered," he quipped.

Young Viney left Midland after high school, and his boyhood dreams became a reality when he returned this year as Dr. Shelton Viney — surgeon.

Although Viney jests that his chosen profession isn't the "life of leisure" he expected, the young doctor said, "I'm a professional. I give 100 percent, work hard and give a lot to my patients."

In a serious tone, Viney said his boyhood physician probably had the most influence on him.

"Dr. Mickle was our family physician," he said. "When I knew I wanted to become a doctor, I talked to him. He said three things make a good doctor — affability, availability and ability. And I took his advice."

Viney's family moved to Midland from Houston when he was 10 years old. He attended school at Sam Houston, San Jacinto and Midland High School, "somewhere in the bottom of the class."

While his classmates were "looking at Midland in their rearview mirrors," he was "truly a West Texan and always wanted to come back."

LAID BACK AND easy going, Viney relaxed in his office waiting room reminiscing his college days.

"I graduated, just barely, from high school in 1970," he laughed. "and was determined to become a doctor."

The good-natured Viney continued joking until office calls interrupted his conversation. As he converses in medical jargon, it's hard to believe that Viney, who earned a bachelor's degree in 3½ years and a master's degree in eight months, accepted as a sophomore in medical school and became "a real doctor," wasn't a model student through high school.

"I had fun in high school," Viney recalled. "I had fun in college too, but I never cut a class. I wanted to be a doctor."

Viney left the parched plains of West Texas for the green rolling hills of Temple, where he attended Scott & White Hospital.

Recalling those days, Viney said "that TV show, 'St. Elsewhere' is a very realistic depiction of a training hospital."

While in Temple that first year of his residency, Viney burned the candle at both ends, pulling "on call" duty every third night from July to Christmas. He remembered pulling duty that Christmas Eve. The hours were long, but Viney knew the next day would begin a three-day ski holiday. His nerves were frazzled when an intoxicated patient staggered through the emergency room. The man had been cut. Viney said he was treating his patient, when, all of sudden, "he vomited on me."

AS HE REPRIMANDED the patient, a woman who worked in the hospital lab watched. She approached Viney and questioned him about his bedside manner.

"I yelled at her," Viney said. "Then I left to shower. I started feeling bad and when I saw her I apologized."

Viney said he asked the woman to go skiing with him.

"She said yes, but was hesitant," he remembered. "She said she didn't really know me, so I shook her hand and said 'Hi. I'm Shelton Viney and this is our first date.'"

JoAnn married Viney in 1978. Last week the Viney's had a boy, their second child. The first child, Reagan, was due on election day.

"If she had been a boy, and it would have been the other guy that won, he might have been named Jimmy," Viney chuckled.

Meanwhile, JoAnn, whose background includes a master's degree in medical economics, mananges not only the Viney home, but also the "doctor's" office.

Following his general and vascular surgery residency at Scott and White, Viney began mulling over where he'd like to practice medicine.

"The big question is where you're going to open an office," Viney said. "Go where you like to live and if you're sincere, conscientious, you'll have a good practice."

Viney and JoAnn scanned the state and "felt Midland was the place to go.

"IN MIDLAND there are highly trained specialists," he said. "I didn't want to go where my ability would not be used. Here there are other highly trained medical specialists who would complement my practice."

Besides devoting time to his practice and family, Viney finds pleasure in hunting.

"Before I was married, I hunted female homo sapiens. Now its deer, turkey, dove and rattlesnakes."

Texas is a haven for pit vipers, rattle-, copperhead and coral snakes. Viney's "prize" trophy is a 6-foot western diamond-back rattlesnake.

"I skinned this snake, froze it and had a friend tan it, and I knew where I was going to hang it," he said, referring to the glass-enclosed skin that hangs in his office.

"I knew I would come back to Midland. My parents, my family are all here. This is where I want to practice medicine and raise my family."

Head-on collision kills three

BUFFALO GAP, Texas (AP) — Three women from Louisiana and one from Arkansas were killed Saturday in a head-on collision involving their car and another on Farm to Market 89 here, about 12 miles south of Abilene, the Department of Public Safety said.

The dead were identified as Laura J. Cochran, 58, of Bradley, Ark.; Sharlotte B. Jaynes, 58, of Bossier City, La.; Mary Isabel McKnight, 78, of Shreveport, La.; and Lena M. Sumner, 80, of Bossier City.

Two men in the other car were injured, but not seriously, the DPS said.

Ms. Sumner was pronounced dead on arrival at an Abilene hospital. A justice of the peace pronounced the three other women dead at the accident site.

"All of them had head injuries, but I'm sure there were multiple injuries," said Frank Lockman, the justice of the peace.

DPS Trooper Derrick Pocock said the accident occurred about 11:20 a.m. in the northbound lane.

Is your heating/ cooling system gobbling up too much money?

If electric bills are taking too big a bite out of your budget, consider equipment with a higher energy-efficiency rating. The higher the rating, the less electricity it takes to heat and cool your home. And using less electricity will help hold down your bill.

High-efficiency equipment costs more, but when the equipment qualifies, Texas Electric will give you a bonus check to help pay the difference. So if you're planning to install a room unit, or replace central air conditioning or a year-round heat pump, ask your dealer about equipment that qualifies for a bonus check from Texas Electric.

And put money back in your pocket.

Plans for schools securely founded

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

When Craig "Kip" Kipena made a trip to visit an old buddy from the service in Stanton, he didn't know what kind of job he could find in Midland. He did know he wanted to move to the area.

When he was offered the newly formed position of school security supervisor for the Midland Independent School District late last fall, the former instructor at the U.S. Air Force Security Police Academy at Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio flew at the chance.

Sitting at his desk in front of the empty bookshelves in the old Midland High School library, soon to be renovated into offices, Kipena outlined several ideas that, with the approval of the MISD board of trustees, could be utilized in his fight against drug abuse and vandalism in the Midland schools.

"I think we're facing the same problems now that Houston (Independent School District) had maybe 10 to 15 years ago," Kipena said, adding that he has been studying methods Houston and other school districts used in handling difficult situations. "I don't think we'll have the problems that Houston had but we'll borrow some bits of information from them and do the rest ourselves.

"ALTHOUGH I think our city is very unique, I don't know what we'll be facing in the future," he continued. "But I think we can have a very effective program and not have the costs they've had."

His main goal, he said, is to provide secure schools. However, saving money is another.

"We can have safety and security, but we don't have to spend a lot of money. We can keep the costs down and become an effective program."

As a beginning, lighting systems at every school are being updated, he pointed out. "We're minimizing them where necessary and making sure they're effective. I believe through our lighting system we will realize savings of hundreds of dollars in the future."

Also being updated is the electronic surveillance at each school. According to Kipena, the district is working closely with a local burglary alarm company in checking the alarms' effectiveness and adding new ones where needed. Infra-red sensing devices which detect body heat are scattered throughout buildings on each campus. The main alarm features a push-button control, operated by combinations which can be changed.

A NEW ALARM was installed at Carver Cultural Center at the beginning of January. According to Kipena, police apprehended intruders twice within a month. Police responded to the first break-in because the alarm went off; however, on the second incident, alert policemen caught the suspects before they activated the alarm.

"Their response time is unbelievable," the former employee of the Fresno, Calif., County Sheriff's Department said admiringly.

"We're making the initial security analysis of all the schools now but it's a continual program," he said. "We'll have to update it all the time because circumstances change, neighborhoods change."

Although programs and responsibilities, excluding maintenance of the light and alarm systems, are still being planned by administrators before presenting them to trustees, several possible programs mentioned by Kipena were outlined in the position's posted duties, approved by the board during a final reading Sept. 28.

ONE OF THE responsibilities listed on the job description calls for training, assignment, supervision and evaluation of full-time security personnel that possibly could be hired to take the place of off-duty officers from Midland Police Department and Midland County Sheriff's Department.

According to Garland Chapman, MISD assistant superintendent of administration who is Kipena's direct supervisor, four part-time officers patrol both high school campuses during the day and special events after school hours.

High school principals are responsible for the two officers at each campus, whose salaries are included in the high school budgets. Kipena's salary, however, comes under the central administrative office's budget.

While the four officers patroling the schools are armed, Kipena said "(future) security officers (will) in no way (be) disciplinarians." He added they would be unarmed during patrols and would report directly to the principal on campus, who in turn would contact police if necessary.

Acting mainly as deterrents, security personnel would watch for and alert police to vandalism and illegal drug activity. As with the present patrolmen, it is hoped the presence of a uniform also will reduce the number of "outsiders coming on campus," he added.

AS A "ROVING patrol," security personnel may travel from one school to another as needed whereas now only the high school campuses are patroled, Chapman pointed out.

"Vandalism hasn't been all that big a problem here in Midland," Chapman said. "In fact, we had less loss this year than last. But we continue doing the best job we can."

Chapman pointed out, however, there is a major problem with people coming off the streets and loitering around the students on campus.

Kipena emphasized that security personnel, who would receive training in detection and control of illegal drugs, will work in conjunction with police andwith community agencies including Midland County Families-in-Action, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Teen Challenge and Young Life. Kipena said he also plans to work with the parent-teacher associations at each school.

"The police are really professional in this city," Kipena said. "They are highly motivated, well-trained and we're lucky to have them."

AN ADDITION TO teacher inservice might be education and awareness classes on symptoms, detection and control of chemical abuse, to be taught by Kipena.

"The administrators here are deeply concerned with safety and security," Kipena said. "It's a high priority and they've been very supportive. The principals are wonderful — they are very conscientious and professional people concerned with the safety of the schools."

Kipena received his degree in criminology from Fresno State University in Fresno, Calif., and his master's degree in management from Webster College in St. Louis, Mo.

He served nine years in the Air Force and was an honor graduate from intelligence school at Lowrey Air Force Base in Denver, Colo. He served as a flight chief for the explosive detection and narcotics detection dogs in the Phillipines. He later became an instructor and technical writer of curriculum, tests and lesson plans for the education of patrol, narcotics, bomb and contraband detection dogs at Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio.

Tape specialist to discuss program for blind

Bill West, a blind electronics expert and a recording specialist for the National Library of Congress' Service Program for the Blind and Physically Handicapped, will present a public seminar on "Reading By Listening" at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday in Theatre II of Theatre Midland at 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

The session will be hosted by Midland's Tape Lending Library, according to Jan D. O'Neill, a library volunteer worker.

While still assigned to the Library of Congress, West helped a congressional committee in unraveling some of the mysteries of the Watergate tapes.

In the seminar with West will be Carolyn Randall, volunteer recording manager for the Texas State Library's Division of the Blind and Physically Handicapped (DBPH), and Marta Wolf, who is in charge of the DBPH's collection development program.

EDUCATION

A luncheon will be held Wednesday in Theatre Midland. Reservations may be made by telephoning the Tape Lending Library at 682-2731.

Following his talk at Theatre Midland, West at 2 p.m. Wednesday will lead a "hands-on" session for current and potential recording and critiquing volunteers at the Tape Lending Library at 202 N. C St.

The Midland library, which is a United Way agency, records books, magazines, church lessons, recipes and other material for blind people.

Betty Flora is library director.

First published in the early 1930s, the series was reissued in 1953 with new illustrations by Garth Williams, an artist of children's books. That same year, the Children's Services Division of the American Library Association established the Laura Ingalls Wilder Award and honored Mrs. Wilder as the first recipient. The award is presented every five years to an author or illustrator whose books, published in the United States, have made a substantial and lasting contribution to literature for children.

As part of the Wilder celebration, the Hillander youngsters will study the works of recipients of the award, including Clara Ingram Judson, Ruth Sawyer, E.B. White, Beverly Cleary and Theodor Seuss Geisel.

West Texas Kennel Club sponsoring eye clinic, tattooing

Cataracts and blindness in a dog aren't uncommon. And when it happens it's a sad affair for both the animal and it's owner. But the situation is multiplied when the dog is bred and the often inherited trait spread to future generations.

To detect eye problems in dogs, particularly those which are full-blooded, the West Texas Kennel Club is presenting an eye clinic and tattooing session for local dogs on Feb. 19.

One of the state's two veterinary ophthalmologists, Dr. M.K. Hermann of Houston, is coming that day to check dogs and to hold a seminar on eye problems that night.

Registration for the eye clinic, tattooing or seminar isn't limited to kennel club members, said Dottie Slattery. But they must receive the registration by Wednesday. Checks should be payable to West Texas Kennel Club, 3302 Lanham, Midland, 79701. Call 683-4458 or 381-1936 for further information.

The WTKC has prepared a list of dominant eye problems and the types of dogs they infect.

Eye problems include cataracts, corneal disease, progressive retinal atrophy (PRA), retinal folds/dysplasia, central PRA, collie eye anomaly, sheltie eye anomaly and hemerolopia (day blindness).

The following breeds are affected by one or more of the eye problems: Afghan hound, Alaskan malamute, Australian shepherd, beagle, Bedlington terrier, border collie, borzoi, cardigan Welsh corgi, cairn terriers, American and English cockers, collie, all varieties of dachhunds, Chesapeake Bay retrievers, golden retrievers.

Also, Gordon setter, Irish setter, Irish terrier, Labrador retriever, miniature schnauzer, Norwegian elkhound, old English sheepdog, all three sizes of poodles, rottweiler, saluki, samoyed, sealyham terrier, sheltie, Siberian husky, springer spaniel, Staffordshire terrier and Tibetian terrier.

Fees, which must be paid in advance, are for each dog per owner: one, $15; two, $14; three, $13; four, $12; five, $11; and six or more, $10.

Tattooing is $5 per dog.

When the kennel club receives the registration fee, time and location of the eye clinic will be mailed to the owner, according to Ms. Slattery.

Of the need for such a clinic, she explained that miniature schnauzers have a strong tendency to inherit juvenile cataracts. Siberian huskies also carry a genetic tendency to develop cataracts, but a type that is different from the schnauzers.

And with PRA, as the retina dies, dogs develop tunnel vision.

"You don't want to breed a dog that has a problem. It's better to find it out. It's not fair to the dogs to breed them" with the strong possibility puppies will be born with the same traits.

She encountered the problem with her Siberian husky. At six months, it was already winning awards in shows. But soon afterward, it was discovered to have an eye problem, and the female can't be bred.

Tattooing involves permanently writing a number on the dog that will identify it as belonging to its owner. Ms. Slattery suggested a driver's license number or Social Security number.

"No lab or research facility will touch a dog that has a number tattooed on it," she said of the situation where dogs are stolen and then sold to such places. "They will try to find the owner."

Where the dog is tattooed depends on the amount of hair it has. For a sheltie, she said as an example, it might be tattooed on its stomach which has less hair.

The seminar will start at 7 p.m. that day at the Rodeway Inn's Colonial Room. Cost is $6 per person for dinner. She said Hermann will bring slides and discuss various eye problems, and local veterinarians are invited.

ASARCO back on its feet

EL PASO (AP) — ASARCO officials say the smelter giant is raring to go again after weathering steep drops in precious metal prices and a nettlesome wrongful death lawsuit.

Last week, the New York-based conglomerate ended a $1.85 million lawsuit over the alleged lead-poisoning death of a 7-year-old Mexican girl, settling out of court for $15,700 on the advice of the presiding judge.

With the settlement of the three-year suit — U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton ruled no company negligence — and with an apparent bull-market in precious metals, company officials are seeing a light at the end of the tunnel.

"Things are looking up," ASARCO's El Paso plant spokesman Bob Reid said. "We're not out of the dark yet, but there's a brightness."

Optimism is a change for ASARCO, one of the world's major custom smelters of copper, lead and zinc. As a byproduct of the Fortune 500 company's mining operations in Mexico, England, Australia, Peru and Canada, ASARCO also produces silver and gold.

Importantly, the easing of U.S. interest rates the past six months has turned around the precious metals market. Gold prices this week hit a 22-month high at $510 an ounce, up about 25 percent from last fall. Silver, too, has jumped from $4.81 last June to $14 an ounce.

Copper prices also have risen, ending a three-year tailspin. Copper now sells for 77 cents a pound.

In October, copper sold for 60 cents a pound. ASARCO's break-even point in the production of copper is in "the mid-90s (cents per pound)," Reid said.

But the multinational repeatedly is attacked on charges that the smelter pollutes air downwind from ASARCO's El Paso plant.

New Mexico air quality officials this spring reported ASARCO was the cause of abnormally high lead readings in Anapra, six miles from El Paso.

Since then, ASARCO has plowed $85 million worth of environmental controls into the plant, Reid said.

New sulfur dioxide controls and electrostatic precipitators that "capture fugitive emissions" substantially have reduced area pollution, former ASARCO El Paso plant manager W.R. Kelly said.

Still, the Environmental Protection Agency this week listed El Paso and El Paso County as two of 144 sites across the nation that have unacceptably high pollution rates.

But El Paso officials blame Juarez, saying the neighboring Mexican city of one million has so many aged cars that lack emission control devices, and so many residents who burn their trash or drive on dirt streets that that's the cause of the pollution.

In 1972, Smeltertown — a shanty settlement where about 200 families lived for decades in the shadow of the processing plant — was closed down.

Most Smeltertown residents worked at ASARCO, but about 138 children and their families were relocated by the company when the structures were razed. Three feet of Smeltertown topsoil contaminated with lead also was carted off, Reid said.

ASARCO first started El Paso operations in 1887, and still has the highest structure — an 828-foot-tall smokestack — in this West Texas city of 450,000.

What are my chances for a successful career selling life insurance? — Mrs. D.W.

ANSWER: Depending on your own capabilities and efforts, your chances are excellent, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

It is estimated that about a quarter million men and women earn half or more of their income from selling life insurance, and according to Mary Fort, CLU, a trustee of the National Association of Life Underwriters, about 20 percent of new recruits to this field are women.

That percentage will rise, she feels, as more women learn about the opportunities available in the life insurance business. For further information, you may write to Linda Turner, executive director, Women Life Underwriters Conference, 1922 F St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

What is olla podrida? — E.L.

ANSWER: Olla podrida is one of the national dishes of Spain. It is a rich stew made of meat, sausages, chicken and peas. Because of the varied character of the mixture, its name is often used to describe any jumble of words or ideas.

I have a very old newspaper and would like to preserve it in some way to prevent it from being destroyed. Do you have any suggestions? — G.C.

ANSWER: Reynolds Brothers Reproduction at 315 N. Colorado St. does a lamination process on papers. A spokesman for the company says there is a charge by the square foot for the lamination. You may call them at 682-7393.

What is dry farming? — J.S.

ANSWER: Dry farming is a scientific farming of land where there is a limited or unfavorable distribution of rainfall. Irrigation is not practiced. The fertility and moisture of the soil are managed by a system of deep cultivation, rotation of crops and the plowing in of green crops.

Thefts probed

Criminal activity led Midland Police to investigate two major thefts and two burglaries Saturday.

A man was taken into custody late Saturday in connection with the 6:30 p.m. theft of an undisclosed amount of money from B&B Liquor Store at 612 N. Big Spring.

Originally reported as an armed robbery, the incident also resulted in the apprehension of a man whom a witness said was seen running down Cuthbert Street east of Big Spring Street shortly afterward. Police detectives Saturday night did not believe the man was connected with the theft.

According to a detectives division spokesman, a clerk at B&B originally told officers a black male wearing a ski mask took him in the back of the store, shoved him over some boxes, then obtained money from the cash register and fled.

All the money had not been accounted for by late Saturday, said the spokesman.

Approximately $6,500 in kitchen cabinet sets and toilets was reported missing at 9:10 a.m. Saturday after the burglaries of five homes. Ray Johnson of 400 Sinclair told investigators the items were missing from houses at 403, 405 and 308 Estes; 1208 E. Cedar; and 121 E. Jackson.

A 16-foot trailer valued at $900 was discovered stolen Saturday from the private driveway of a residence undergoing remodeling at 708 W. Storey. Owner Kevin Peters of Dallas told officers the job foreman had noticed it missing Wednesday but had assumed the owner had removed it.

A Cobra bicycle, silver with black seat and valued at $130, was reported missing after the burglary of a home at 1200 Parker. Owner Jaime Madrid told police he left his residence at 1 p.m. and when he returned at 5 p.m. an eastside window had been broken and the bicycle removed.

In Midland Fire Department activity, firemen unsuccessfully fought a blaze at 1600 S. Fort Worth which claimed a trailer house tenanted by Paula Culp. Six trucks responded to the 6:13 a.m. call, with one truck pumping 30 minutes and spraying the fire with 400 gallons of water.

Both the trailer and its contents were termed total losses.

Need for dental care outlives tooth fairy

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

For most parents, an event beyond comparison is the thrill of watching a child's first tooth erupting through soft pink gums.

They go through paramount rituals from the first time their youngster begins wiggling and twisting his first loose tooth to tucking the small enammel chip carefully under a pillow for the magical tooth fairy. Then, the excitement and the thrill becomes blase.

Although a toothless grin is one that no mother can resist, teeth at this point often become a burden to the parents who constantly remind their children to "brush your teeth, no candy and make sure you floss."

The average American school child has five decayed or filled teeth. Half of all 18-year-olds have early symptoms of gum disease.

The American Dental Association is responding to these statistics by sponsoring National Children's Dental Health Month each February. The association hopes to increase knowledge and interest in proper dental health.

And well-informed parents are the foundation of their children's lifetime dental health.

From the first eruption, parents should begin a regimen of daily care, according to Linda Brown, a registered dental hygienist and dental health chairman for the Permian Basin Dental Hygienists' Society.

"A cotton swab or wash cloth should be used to gently rub the decay-causing film of plaque from the child's tooth," Ms. Brown said.

In later years, as more teeth pop through the child's gums, "a small, soft bristle toothbrush can be used," Ms. Brown said, adding that parents "need to continue to care for their child's teeth until the age of 6 or 7 because children are not physically able to do an acceptable job."

Ms. Brown urges parents to include routine dental examinations, beginning when a child is between 2 and 3.

"Do not wait until the child has a toothache," she said. "Making a child's first visit to the dentist a pleasant experience is very important, as later behavior depends largely upon early impressions."

The Permian Basin Dental Health Hygienists Society kicked off Dental Health Day Jan. 28, at Discovery Day Care Center. Children's mouths were inspected and they were taught proper brushing techniques.

A Dental Health Round-Up is scheduled Saturday at Midland Park Mall, where hygienists and dentists will give preventive health examinations for children. Mayor G. Thane Akins has proclaimed February as Children's Dental Health Month.

CRMWD's January water deliveries 2.77 percent lower than prior year

BIG SPRING — A cold, wet January is reflected in deliveries of the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

Municipal deliveries dropped off 102,561,000 gallons from January 1982, or 2.77 percent. Mining deliveries dropped by 18,708,000 gallons, or 0.88 of 1 percent. Total deliveries of 1,133,306,890 gallons were down 1.13 percent.

Revenues of $842,763 from sale of water were up by about $38,000, but this was due principally because Midland's rate came up to Odessa's 1982 level under terms of the contract. Thus, the district received some $54,000 more from Midland than in January of last year.

But in the process, Midland also received some 32 million gallons more water during the month. Big Spring was down 2.68 percent at 188,045,600 gallons; Midland was up by 1.23 percent at 287,070,000 gallons; Odessa down 1.85 percent at 382,217,000 gallons; Snyder down 6.11 percent at 65,369,000 gallons; Stanton up 11.20 percent at 11,453,600 gallons.

The goal is to serve more than 8,500 persons. Special entertainment, featuring top-caliber entertainers from Midland and vicinity, will be presented throughout the day.

The Jamboree will be held from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m., according to Bill Malone, co-chairman. All chores in connection with the event will be handled by club members.

Keith Somerville, ticket sale chairman, has announced the names of his team captains, as follows: Charlie Sprayberry, John Daugherty, Ab Ellis, Carl O. Hyde, Henry Brooks, Jim Goldman, Garland Chapman, Clarence Laidley, Jimmie Kelly, Joel Blankenship, Bill Lea, Norman Henry, Don Combs, Phil Scott, Ray Vaden, Tom Probasco, Jim Jones, Morris Hulsey, Herman Dancy and Steve Scott.

The Jamboree is the club's one big fund-raising event of the year. All proceeds go toward financing the club's many and varied civic, youth, welfare, sight conservation, camp for crippled children, aid to the elderly and charitable projects.

Thousands of tickets are sold in advance by club members each year, with special awards going to the top salesman.

Organizations to promote trade

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — The Chambers of Commerce of Costa Rica and Dallas agreed here Saturday to promote the formation of companies jointly owned by Costa Rican and Texas businessmen.

Terry Fritz, president of the Dallas Chamber of Commerce, and Edwin Mendez Mata, president of the Costa Rican Chamber of Commerce, told reporters that the companies would export furniture and clothing to the United States.

A Costa Rican trade mission will travel to Dallas in the near future to establish contacts with sales representatives.

'Maltese Falcon' stands among the classics

By DON FREEMAN
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — "The best private-eye melodrama ever made," wrote James Agee, the most respected film critic of his time, when "The Maltese Falcon" first hit the screen in 1941. And now, with a bow to television, "The Maltese Falcon" stands among the classics, cherished by the populace and smiled on by the whimsical gods of nostalgia and lore.

The other night, I had a great time watching "The Maltese Falon" on TV, and I was quite transported by this movie which holds firm to a special place in our affections. This was John Huston's first venture as a director and he chose an adaptation of a crackerjack book of the same title written by the master storyteller, Dashiell Hammett.

And so I tracked down Hammett's book, written in the wake of his own San Francisco days as a hard-driving private eye. This is how it begins:

"Samuel Spade's jaw was long and bony, his chin a jutting v under the more flexible v of his mouth. His nostrils curved back to make another, smaller v. His yellow-gray eyes were horizontal. The v motif was picked up again by thickish brows rising outward from a twin crease above a hooked nose, and his pale brown hair grew down — from high flat temples — in a point on his forehead. He looked rather pleasantly like a blond satan."

A what? A blond satan? That sure isn't Humphrey Bogart. Satan he may have been, but definitely not blond. Small matter. The cast could not have been chosen more felicitously: Bogie is the definitive, steely eyed Sam Spade, and there is the beautiful and shadowy Mary Astor and the sniveling Peter Lorre (oh boy, does he snivel!) and the ultimate weak-faced gunsel played by Elisha Cook Jr.

And by all means there is Sydney Greenstreet, as massive as he is cunning, playing the evil Gutman and attaining a niche in the misty corridors of trivia with such lines as "Gad, sir, you are a character, that you are."

I guess I had forgotten that "The Maltese Falcon," both the book and the movie, is a drama with precious little action but an awful lot of talk. Why did I ever think of Sam Spade as a laconic gumshoe? He certainly isn't.

ENTERTAINMENT

In one memorable scene, Gutman inquires of Sam Spade in a characteristic rumble: "You're a closemouthed man?"

"No," says Spade. "I like to talk."

"Good!" Gutman bellows. "I dislike a closemouthed man. He generally picks the wrong time to talk and he says the wrong thing... I'm a man who likes to talk to a man who likes talking."

Beautiful. And the talk — taut and muscular big-city talk, corner-of-the-mouth talk, San Francisco-of-the-'40s talk — unfailingly advances the story. Here, for example, is Sam Spade on the phone to headquarters. It is quintessential Spade:

"Hello...Is Sergeant Polhaus there?...Yeah. This is Sam Spade. (He stares into space, waiting.) Hello, Tom. Now, listen. I've got something for you. Here it is: Thursby and Jacobi were killed by a man named Wilmer Cook...Yeah. He's about 20 years old, five feet six. In gray woolen suit, gray single-breasted overcoat and hat, shirt with soft attached collar and a light crepe silk tie.

"He's working for a man named Kasper Gutman. You can't miss him. He must weigh 300 pounds...That fellow Cairo is in with them, too...Right. They just left here for the Alexandria Hotel but they're blowing town so you'll have to move fast...I don't think they're expecting a pinch. Watch yourself when you go up against the kid...That's right. Very! Well, good luck, Tom."

Always with Sam Spade you get the specifics as you do with Dashiell Hammett. Business is done not in some indeterminate locale but at the corner of Geary and Leavenworth. Miles Archer, who is Spade's partner, is murdered on Bush Street. "I guess he must have had his good points," someone says about Archer. "I guess so," says Spade, putting yards of meaning in those three words, uttered with prosaic languor.

And it ends, this marvelously intricate yarn about treachery and greed and good guys and bad, with Ward Bond, a plainclothes cop, lifting the treasured Maltese Falcon itself. "It's heavy," he says. "What is it?"

"The, er, stuff that dreams are made of," says Spade.

'Without a Trace' portrays parents' agony

A Review

Every parent's nightmare is enacted in graphic and sometimes ponderous detail in the film "Without a Trace," starring Kate Nelligan as Dr. Susan Selky.

The story begins with a seemingly typical day in the lives of Susan and her 6-year-old son, Alex. Only this day Alex doesn't come home from school and we find out later that he never got there. A search begins and so does the terror.

There are phone calls from "crazies," television crews invade Susan's home, police set up a base of operations in her living room and friends organize local search groups. But these constant companions are fickle and when two weeks go by and Alex isn't found, interest in continuing the search begins to wane. That is, the interest of everyone except the parents (Susan's estranged husband played convincingly by David Dukes, is sort of an adult version of "little boy lost") who hang on tenaciously to the hope Alex will return.

"Without a Trace," is predominately a one-woman show. Miss Nelligan is in virtually every scene and watching her pain is painful. Yes, she does give a moving and sensitive, if decidedly tearless performance, but enough is enough.

The almost two hour movie seemed more like three hours and the audience was restless — many people stepping out several times. At such times, it crossed my mind that "Without a Trace" belongs on television, on a smaller screen with commercials interspersed. At least that way the intensity is bearable and Miss Nelligan's larger than life portrayal would become as manageable as that of Lt. Mennetti, played flawlessly by Judd Hirsch (TV's "Taxi".)

Mennetti is a heart-of-gold cop who is assigned the case of missing Alex Selky. It is one of many cases for Mennetti, but it is because he has a son Alex's age that he can't let go — even three months later.

"Without a Trace," directed by Stanley R. Jaffe, spares no detail in describing the agony of this kind of misfortune — the kind that leaves no one untouched. Susan is required to take a lie detector test, Alex's playmates at school become fearful of going outside to play, Alex's dad gets badly beaten when he tries to answer a bogus ransom call and even the Selky's babysitter-handyman is accused of Alex's murder because of previous homosexual contacts.

Rated PG, "Without a Trace" was based on the novel "Still Missing," with the screenplay by the novel's author, Beth Gutcheon. Without giving away the ending, there is a resolution. In fact, the resolution is so obvious a play on the emotions that it defeats its own intent.

A movie of strong performances (notable too, is Stockard Channing as Jocelyn, Susan's "through thick and thin" friend), "Without a Trace" presents a plausible if manipulative plot and straightforward accounting of a despicable crime against the defenseless — child kidnapping.

Pianist will conduct master class, workshop for teachers, students

Friends of Music and the Midland School of Piano will present William Westney in a workshop and master class for piano teachers and students Feb. 19 at First Christian Church, 1301 W. Louisiana Ave.

Westney will conduct an informal meeting with students in grades 1-6 from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. At 10:30 a.m. there will be a lecture for teachers and advanced students on "Inner Tennis and the Art of Piano Playing." A master class for teachers and advanced students will be held 2 to 4 p.m.

Westney first gained international recognition as a pianist when he was a winner of the Geneva International Competition. This led to a successful European tour as a soloist with several orchestras. He was then selected to make the first recording of music by Leo Ornstein. The recording was cited by Newsweek as one of the "10 Best American Music Recordings."

Westney has recently written and performed "Music for a While," a series of television shows for PBS. He is presently affiliated with Texas Tech University as the Browning artist-in-residence.

Sky Masterson (Mike Wilson) begs "Luck be a Lady" as he rolls for the highest stakes of his life.

MCT's 'Guys and Dolls' delightful production

A Review

"Guys and Dolls" won an evening of laughter and merriment for its audience with the cast walking off with well-earned accolades at Theatre Midland Friday night.

In short, MCT's come-out roll came up a seven.

Since its 1950 Broadway opening, Damon Runyon's "Guys and Dolls" has become a classic of the contemporary musical stage, receiving popular applause every time it has been revived.

Although the story line is the typical girl-and-boy love saga, it isn't the typical story. It is packed with delightful, slightly seedy characters.

The songs are up-beat, humorous and memorable.

With all of that going for it, how can it miss?

If it isn't properly done, that's how. Such is not the case with Midland Community Theatre's production onstage in Theatre I through March 5.

MCT's 47-member cast represents a balanced display of properly directed talent.

In most instances, cast members conveyed to the audience the feeling that they were having a good time. Only a few times during the evening did the dancers seem as if they were counting out their steps, but much of that can be attributed to opening-night jitters. It will pass with time onstage.

The four leading roles are portrayed by Mike Wilson as Sky Masterson, Linda Kester as Sarah Brown, Joe Craig as Nathan Detroit and Mona Gale Gibson as Adelaide.

Craig was uptight in the beginning scenes, but relaxed into his role as the evening wore on.

What Wilson lacked in creating the suave, successful gambler stereotype, he made up for in bringing humor to the role. Although his facial expressions verged on the overdone, he made them work. Wilson pulled it all together by having such a good time.

Miss Kester's role required the greatest changes. She handled them well most of the time, however, she has not yet internalized Sister Sarah. She was the most convincing in the play's final scene when she was firmly in charge.

The stellar performance among the leads was turned in by Miss Gibson. She is Adelaide. After captivating the audience when she sang "Adelaide's Lament," she never let it go.

Also of note among the supporting cast were the performances of Madalyn Stokes, when she danced across the stage followed by an ardent admirer; Paul Cristiani in his portrayal of the emcee at the Hot Box; Martin Graham as Big Julie, the man of few words but many implications; David Willis as the pompous Harry the Horse, who is always looking for action; and Michael Trost as the drunk, who could and most likely should receive an award for the most effective use of hands in the production.

At numerous times during the play, the costumes and staging were executed in a manner which created charming visual pictures. The set, which was simple in design, was quite workable. The eye-catching billboards were creatively used.

Director and designer for the production is MCT's assistant director Ted Strickland, with musical direction for the 22-piece orchestra and cast by Tom Roberts and choreography by Cherry Jones.

When a production of this quality is presented at MCT, it becomes obvious that some of the productions staged there have not been as well suited to the talents of MCT. This one is. It takes full advantage of those talents and capitalizes on them.

MCT's current production is definitely a guys and dolls' delight.

Carpenter both elegant, innocent, Williams says

DOWNEY, Calif. (AP) — In 1970, the year four Kent State University students died in an anti-war protest and rock star Janis Joplin died a casualty of drugs, Karen and Richard Carpenter won a huge audience with a song of tenderness.

The popularity that began with the mellow harmony of "Close to You" would endure, despite a lengthy hiatus from performing, until Miss Carpenter's death Friday at the age of 32 of congestive heart failure.

The dark-haired singer collapsed at the home she and brother Richard bought for their parents in this community 10 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles.

An autopsy didn't immediately show what caused her death. But friends said she had been through a year-long battle with anorexia nervosa, an inability to eat that some psychologists link to America's adulation of slimness.

At her death, Miss Carpenter carried 108 pounds on her 5-foot-4 frame.

Karen Carpenter

"I KNOW SHE'S been ill. She had a weight problem. She couldn't hold food down," said Henry Will, Miss Carpenter's former piano teacher in Connecticut who once was married to her aunt.

Will recalled her as "a happy kid, a chubby kid."

She was born March 2, 1950, in New Haven, where her father, Harold, was a printer. Her mother, Agnes, described Karen as a tomboy in demand for sandlot softball and feistier than her older brother.

"When they were little kids, she always defended him. She'd take on all the roughnecks and make them leave Richard alone," she said.

By the early 1960s, friends recalled, it was Richard issuing the orders, demanding that she leave music sessions. But she took up drums when the family moved to Downey in 1962 and Richard began playing piano for the high school dance band.

"There was big solo drummer in the band and Karen immediately got turned on to drums," Carpenter once explained. "She came home and got out some chopsticks and arranged some barstools we had and she was playing time synchronizations, Brubeck, anything. Dad bought her a drum set, a good one, and immediately she could play it."

BROTHER, SISTER and bassist Wes Jacobs formed the Carpenter Trio in 1965. A victory in a battle of the bands at the Hollywood Bowl brought them a contract with RCA, but no records were released and the trio disbanded.

The Carpenters and four others formed Spectrum and spent 1968 practicing or performing Monday nights at Los Angeles' Troubadour Club. One of their tapes reached A&M Records' founder Herb Alpert in 1969 and he signed them. But they were far from star status when Burt Bacharach suggested they experiment with his "Close To You."

"On the day that you were born the angels got together and decided to create a dream come true, so they sprinkled moon dust in your hair of gold and starlight in your eyes of blue..." went the words of the Carpenters' first hit.

"And then everything turned to gold. All our albums and every single from then on," Miss Carpenter said in a 1972 interview. The hits included "We've Only Just Begun" "Top of the World," "For All We Know," "Rainy Days and Mondays" and "Solitaire."

While folk singer Joni Mitchell extolled the joys of cohabitation in "My Old Man," the Carpenters — at sold-out concerts — crooned of weddings: "We've only just begin to live, white lace and promises, a kiss for luck and we're on our way..."

"Karen had the rare gift of being able to touch all ages with her artistry," said composer Paul Williams. "She was both elegant and innocent."

MISS CARPENTER occasionally objected to the image, once telling an interviewer, "The image we have, it would be impossible for Mickey Mouse to maintain. We're just normal people."

Her special-order Mercedes contrasted with a bedroom filled with stuffed animals.

Professional demands caught up in 1975, when the Carpenters canceled a 38-concert European tour while she was bedridden from exhaustion. The Carpenters had no hit singles from 1976 until 1981, when they came back from a self-imposed hiatus with "Touch Me When We're Dancing."

During the break, Miss Carpenter married industrial real estate developer Thomas Burris, 36. They had no children, and her agent, Paul Bloch, said the Sept. 2, 1980 marriage was in divorce court at the time of her death.

But all signs were that the singer had rebounded from difficulties. A friend said she looked happy at a dinner last week. Bloch said Miss Carpenter had completed treatment for anorexia nervosa and was planning a new album and a summer tour of the United States.

Bacharach described her as "up and enthusiastic" about the album when they talked three weeks ago. "I think she had a lot more to sing," he said.

Glenn recalls Indianapolis mishap

John Glenn

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, has been in lots of dangerous situations. But he says his closest brush with death wasn't as a fighter pilot, a test pilot or an astronaut.

It was as a car passenger in Indianapolis.

"I hate to say this, but my most vivid memory of Indianapolis isn't a pleasant one," Glenn told the Indianapolis Star in an interview last week.

"I rode in the pace car at the 1971 (Indianapolis) 500-Mile Race, and that was the year the pace car driver panicked and drove the car into a stand of photographers, putting about 20 of them in the hospital.

"I was sitting in the front seat, and I thought we were gone. I dove for the floor when we hit the stand, and I ended up stuffed up under the glove compartment. As it turned out, I had bruises all over but nothing broken. I still don't know how we kept from getting killed."

Glenn flew 122 combat missions as a Marine Corps fighter pilot during World War II and the Korean War. He flew several dozen types of experimental aircraft as a test pilot, and he was the first American to orbit the Earth in a space capsule in 1962.

Glenn is one of several Democrats who have said they will run for the Democrat nomination for president in 1984.

James Dozier

FORT LEWIS, Wash. (AP) — Brig. Gen. James Dozier says "far more good than bad" resulted from the 42 days he was held captive by the Red Brigades in Italy last year.

Dozier said his abduction helped ignite a campaign against the Red Brigades, a terrorist group which kidnaps and sometimes kills its enemies.

"The important part of this was to see Italy demonstrate to the world that it can control a large, well-organized element, and can destroy it without infringing on the rights of individuals," he said Thursday.

Dozier and his wife Judith were at Fort Lewis, near Tacoma, for a prayer meeting and to speak with Army wives. Dozier was freed from his captors Jan. 28, 1982, by Italian commandoes.

Jim Ameche

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Jim Ameche, who played "Jack Armstrong, the All American Boy" for five years on radio in the 1930s, has died of cancer at the age of 68.

Ameche, a younger brother of actor Don Ameche, died Friday night at Tucson Medical Center. He had battled lung cancer for two years, said his family.

Ameche was the original "Jack Armstrong," portraying the adventurer, globetrotter and do-gooder from 1933 until 1938. He then went on to more serious radio performances, including the Woodbury Hollywood Playhouse and the Lux Theater.

Ameche also was the announcer on the radio show, "Amos and Andy."

He performed "for more than 40 years in many, many vocal roles with the best known talent of the times, everything from Orson Wells to Charles Boyer, and the announcer on a number of famous (radio) soap operas," said Sheldon Engel, Ameche's agent and friend for 25 years.

Ameche eventually became a disc jockey. He moved to Tucson in 1975 and took a job announcing for radio stations KCEE-AM and KCEE-FM, as well as continuing his work as an announcer for commercials that were broadcast across the country.

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho (AP) — When LaVell Pack lost his left leg nearly eight years ago, a high school wrestling coach told the 8-year-old: "This may end your wrestling career, but you can be my manager."

Next week, Pack will attempt to improve on last year's fourth-place finish for defending A-1 champion in the state high school wrestling tournament.

Pack learned the sport from Skyline High School Coach Floyd Young as a first-grader. When he lost his left leg above the knee in a farm machinery accident, Young was there.

Herman Wouk may be America's Tolstoy

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — "The theme of both 'The Winds of War' and 'War and Remembrance' is single," says Herman Wouk. "The last words of my hero Victor Henry's commentary on the Battle of Leyte Gulf give it plainly enough: 'Either war is finished, or we are.' "

In these words from his foreword to "War and Remembrance," Wouk summarizes not only the theme of the ABC-TV adaptation of "The Winds of War," which will be serialized over seven nights beginning tonight, but also the theme of his lifetime fascination with World War II.

At 67, Wouk may be presenting the most compelling argument for nuclear disarmament ever made on television, if the presentation truly dramatizes his theme.

Wouk was born in the Bronx in 1915. At Columbia University, he wrote varsity musical comedies and was editor of the undergraduate humor magazine, the Jester, which led to his first job as a gag-writer for radio comedians.

But once he got this idea of "trying to write books," Wouk never quit.

One of the high points in his career arrived when he won the Pulitzer Prize for fiction for his best-selling novel, "The Caine Mutiny," which was quickly recycled as a Broadway play with Henry Fonda, "The Caine Mutiny Court Martial," and as a movie that featured Humphrey Bogart's extraordinary performance as Capt. Queeg.

Bible exhibitions close today at MC

Closing today at Midland College is the exhibition featuring the Gutenberg Bible and the Marc Chagall Bible etchings.

The Gutenberg Bible, owned by The University of Texas at Austin, was printed around 1460 in Mainz, Germany. Its publication represents a turning point in the history of printing.

Chagall's etchings, loaned to MC by Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University, are representative of the 105 he executed as part of a 25-year project. Forty are on display at MC.

Hours today at the Allison Fine Arts Building are 1 to 4 p.m.

The next exhibit in the McCormick Gallery will be "Contemporary Artists of Midland." This show begins Tuesday with a public reception from 7 to 9 p.m.

Both shows are free and open to the public.

Ceramic artist will conduct workshop

Ceramic artist Robert Fromme will conduct a two-day workshop Saturday and Feb. 13 at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Building.

Fromme's work has been included in both national and international exhibitions. He has represented the United States in the International Contemporary Ceramic Art Exhibition in Faenza, Italy.

Cost for the workshop is $20. Schedule for the workshop is the same both days, 9:30 a.m. to noon and 1 to 4 p.m.

In addition, Fromme will speak at the Midland Arts Association 2:30 p.m. meeting Feb. 13. The public is invited.

For more information call John Harmon at MC.

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

Bond issue projects should dominate council meeting

Projects approved in a bond issue last spring should dominate action by the Midland City Council when it starts the regular meeting at 10 a.m. Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

Plans and specifications for remodeling the Public Safety Building on East Texas Avenue will be studied by the council before advertising the job for bids. The remodeling should make use of space vacated a few years ago when the Central Fire Station was moved to Crier Park and when Municipal Court moved to its new building across the street a few months ago.

In addition, the council will consider a change order on the City Hall two-story expansion, an extension of time on rebuilding Michigan Avenue and accepting the emergency radio tower as part of the Emergency Operating Center.

The council also will consider declaring an area as blighted. This will enable a developer to receive industrial development bond financing as authorized by the Development Corporation Act of 1979. The council earlier declared part of the block west of The First National Bank as blighted to allow such a financing program. A multi-story parking garage is being constructed there.

A storm water drainage project for northeast Midland will be eyed by the council.

Two zone change requests want permits to allow sale of alcoholic beverages. One is for a restaurant on the southeast corner of Loop 250 North and North Midkiff Road. Another is for a nightclub on the southwest corner of Loop 250 and North Garfield Street.

At 3 p.m. a public hearing will be held on the request by L.H. Hahn for a zone change from 1F-1 and 1F-2, single family district, to NS, neighborhood service district on a five-acre tract about 2,300 feet west of Garfield and the south side of Bluebird Lane.

The council will study a proposal to hold joint elections with the county.

And Bennigan's restaurant is asking for a temporary beer permit for a St. Patrick's Day celebration.

MISD Board of Trustees

A presentation by the Teachers' Salary Committee will be made following a regular meeting of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees at 1:30 p.m. in the administration building, 702 N. N St.

The presentation pertaining to teacher salaries for the 1983-84 school year will be at 4 p.m. at Sam Houston Elementary School, 2000 W. Louisiana.

Preliminary architectural drawings for an addition to Rusk Elementary School are expected to be approved during the regular meeting. Other items on the agenda expected to see action include a proposed revision of the student transfer policy, adoption of the 1983-84 school calendar, a proposed revision of 1983-84 high school course offerings, a request by the Midland Arts Assembly for commitment of support for an annual Celebration of the Arts, a proposed revision of the district wide standardized testing program and a resolution authorizing agreement for a joint election.

Trustees are expected to meet in an executive session to discuss real estate matters.

Housing Authority

An update on the housing rehabilitation program and plans for starting the second phase will be discussed Wednesday when the Housing Authority of the City of Midland meets at 2 p.m. in City Hall Council Chambers.

The housing rehabilitation program is being funded by the Community Development Block Grant fund of 1981-82. Waiting in the wings is money for 1982-83.

Reporting on progress of the program is Susan Howell, CD coordinator; and Horace Berry, rehabilitation inspector for the Housing Authority.

The board will consider dates for taking new applications from families wanting their homes rehabilitated under this program. And the Human Relations Council will be considered to handle the applications.

The board also will look at receipts and expenditures for December and the statement for the past six months ending Dec. 31.

Black History Week theme includes look at role models

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Doris Richardson

An ad in a popular black publication illustrates a small teary-eyed black child, holding a doll at her side. Under the picture a question asks the reader: "What's wrong with this picture?"

The doll is white. Apparently, the child is crying because her parents bought her a black doll, instead of a "popular" one. The ad's text suggests that black children do not have proper role models.

Black Americans are becoming more aware of their children's needs of role models. And that's part of the local theme chosen for Black History Week Feb. 6 through 12 in Midland, according to Doris Richardson, a member of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, which along with local clubs, organizations and churches are sponsoring Midland's Black History Week's observance day.

Saturday's "Black Optimism: Then and Now," will kick off with a career-oriented style show at 10 a.m. at Carver Center. Costumed-children will model a variety of career clothing, while a narrator examines occupations of blacks — then and now.

"We want the children, the black community, all of Midland to know the accomplishments of black people," Mrs. Richardson said. "Not showing only the black athlete, but the doctors, lawyers, teachers and other professionals that black people have been and are."

Mrs. Richardson said the "true facts of the contributions of Afro-Americans to the development and continuance of America have not properly and adequately been presented in the textbooks, media and other communication devices in this country."

Mrs. Richardson is not alone. Carter G. Woodson, a Harvard Ph.D., regarded as the leading writer on black history of his time, devoted his life to bring the achievements of his race to the world's attention. Black History Week, called Negro History Week when it began in 1926, originated from Woodson. The week is sponsored by the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History (ASNLH) which Woodson founded in 1915.

From the time of the ancient African empire Ghana in 700 A.D. to today's black awareness movement, the blacks have developed racial pride in their culture.

Mrs. Richardson explained that black organizations bowed to the pressure of 1970's youth who began to recognize their African heritage. Organizations and most blacks ceased using the word Negro, and began focusing their thinking as black or Afro-Americans.

In 1977, Texas legislated the second week in February as Black History Week. During this time, organizations, churches and community groups observe the week as an informative, educational celebration. In 1976, the ASNLH extended the week's celebration to a month.

"The message stressed during the observance of Black History Week is extremely necessary," Mrs. Richardson said. "Some people may feel there is no need, but those who feel strongly that while we have overcome many of the struggles and conditions of servitude thrust upon our forefathers, there is an effort to preserve the positive memory of the black experience."

While this year's national theme is "The U.S. Constitution and the Black American," the local theme was chosen to educate not only black Midlanders, but also to inform all Midlanders.

Although two guest speakers — Bob Ray Sanders, program director for KERA-TV in Dallas and Dr. Charles Sueing, dean at Shelby Community College in Memphis, Tenn. — will be on hand for the observance day, a "Soul Food Tastin'" will highlight the day-long event.

Mrs. Richardson said a sampling of pigs' ears, tails and feet, along with chitterlings, greens and a variety of beans will be available for $1.50 at the Black Federated Women's Club, 1703 E. Wall Ave. Other scheduled events include local soloist Betty Latham and the Goodwill Baptist Church Choir in the afternoon and a program by the Lubbock Community Radio Choir in the evening.

Local businesses, American Music Center and Baldwin Piano & Organ Center are lending a piano and organ for the entertainment, and plant and flower decorations are compliments of Plants by Evergreen and Buddy's Florist.

Soil samples key to correct fertilization of crops

By EARNEST C. KIKER
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Farming is enough of a gamble, so don't add to your problems by gambling on fertilizer needs for this year's crops. Instead, collect soil samples and have them tested so you'll have a game plan for fertilizing your 1983 crops.

The best time for collecting and testing soil samples is right now, before the spring rush. That way you can determine your fertilizer needs and order supplies early before the busy spring season.

A soil test provides information about the nutrient status of soil as well as lime requirements in areas of acid soil. With fertilizer costs on the upswing, this means that the value of soil nutrients also increases. Thus efficient and profitable fertilization depends on a good evaluation of the nutrient-supplying capacity of soil. This is where soil tests come in.

The first step to a good soil test is to take a good sample. Get a composite sample from each field by collecting a slice or core of soil from 15 to 20 different spots. Then mix them all together and send two-thirds to three-fourths of a pint to the soil testing lab for testing.

It's equally important to complete an information sheet with each soil sample. Include information about past cropping and fertilization practices and the next crop to be planted. Information sheets, cartons fom mailing soil samples, and additional information on soil testing is available at the County Extension Office.

Anyone who's been in the cattle business for more than a few years, knows there are certain seasonal price patterns. These are variations in prices that follow a more or less uniform pattern tied to certain periods or seasons of the year.

Price patterns are quite similar for most classes of cattle. Slaughter steers prices, for example, usually move higher in the spring and summer months from lows in the previous fall and winter. The degree of rise and price drop, however, is some more drastic for cows.

Cattlemen can take advantage of this seasonal price change by adjusting their marketing decisions. Selling cows or calves in the spring months usually will yield a far greater return than those sold in the fall. Of course, maintenance costs will also be different, so producers have to do a good job of keeping records and spend some time with a pencil and paper before a final economic deicison can be made.

But remember, you are the manager. Your good or bad marketing decisions affect your pocketbook. Take time to study the alternatives — it will pay off.

Several Midland County pecan producers entered the International Pecan Show recently held in Las Cruces, N.M., with very good results. Jon Whisler had a first place Choctaw, which was also judged the Grand Champion and his first place Wichita was the Reserve Champion. Other first place winners were Bill Barret, Gra-King; Wonda Bonnor, Gra-Bolhi; Morris and Lura Davis Orchard, San Saba and Chickashaw. Whisler had a second place Shoshoni and M.A. Cappaddona received honorable mention with his Gra-Bolhi.

AGRICULTURE

Farmers, ranchers and others who made payments last year in excess of $600 for services to individuals (other than employees) and partnerships (but not corporations) must file certain information forms. Failure to do so will result in increased penalties of $50 per incident. The information returns are the Form 1099 series and relate to the payment of interest, rents, royalties, prizes, awards, fees, commissions and other compensations.

Ronald and Russell Beamsley of Hidalgo County captured both the grand and reserve championship honors in the recent Texas State Hay Show in Waco. Ronald's sample of common bermuda-grass hay won top honors while Russell's sample of mixed grasses took the reserve championship. The state show featured 232 entries from 49 counties. 67 percent of the entries were awarded blue ribbons, signifying their high quality.

The time is at hand for planting shade trees. Root systems of winter-planted trees develop and become well established before top growth starts in the spring. Choose from bare-root, container-grown or balled-and burlapped trees and make sure they are adapted to this area. Avoid "fast growing trees" because they are brittle and short-lived.

County Agriculture Extension Agents Willie Stumberg and Earnest Kiker will be writing a horticulture newsletter for Midland County beginning this month. If you would like to receive this information please call our office, 682-9481, ext. 433, and we will place you on the mailing list.

The first step to a good soil test is to take a good sample. Get a composite sample from each field by collecting a slice or core of soil from 20 to 15 different spots.

Planting time around corner

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — With Texas farmers in a quandary over the recently announced PIK (payment-in-kind) program, Mr. Groundhog's prediction on Feb. 2 of an early spring will put even more pressure on farmers for quick decisions regarding program participation.

Actually, planting time for corn and grain sorghum is just around the corner for farmers in South Texas, the Coastal Bend and Winter Garden, so they have little time left to decide on participation in the new farm program, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System. Many farmers have already sunk considerable costs into their land and may find participation difficult.

In other areas of the state wet fields and cold weather kept land preparation at a standstill. Rains added to already surplus moisture levels along the Upper Coast while some snow continued to boost soil moisture in the plains. However, the snow and continued cold weather also kept farmes from completing cotton harvesting. Some 5 to 15 percent of the crop still remained in the field in the Rolling Plains and in a few counties in the South Plains and Far West Texas, Carpenter said.

Good weather in the Rio Grande Valley allowed the sugarcane harvest to continue, with some 22,400 acres harvested to date. Harvesting of winter vegetables and citrus also remained actve, said Carpenter.

Gardeners and truck crop farmers in central and eastern areas have started making preparations for early spring vegetable planting. Some have set out onions and cabbage plants and will be planting potatoes soon.

Livestock feeding remained heavy over the state the past week, and hay supplies are running short in some areas, Carpenter noted. Recent cold weather has caused some decline in livestock conditions although most are holding up well. The cold weather has limited small grain growth, so livestock have had little green grazing.

Reports from district Extension directors showed these conditions.

PANHANDLE: Cold weather with snow continued to keep field work at a standstill. About 10 percent of the cotton crop still remains to be harvested in a few counties. Wheat is generally dormant due to the cold weather. Cattlefeeding is heavy due to lack of grazing.

SOUTH PLAINS: Field work remains at a standstill due to the cold weather an wet conditions. A small amount of cotton remains to be harvested in a few southwestern counties. Good misture conditions should boost wheat growth once warmer weather returns. Cattle generally are in good condition, with heavy supplemental feeding.

ROLLING PLAINS: Wet fields ket cotton farmers from completing harvest operations. From 5 to 15 percent of the cotton crop is still in the field. Small grains are making limited growth due to the cold weather, so livestock have little green grazing. Supplemental feeding remains heavy. Moisture conditions look good for the coming crop year.

NORTH CENTRAL: Wheat and oats are making some growth but need more open weather. Greenbugs are damaging some fields; some farmers spraying. Early vegetable gardening activities are under way, with onions, collards, beets and greens being planted.

FAR WEST: A small amount of cotton still remains to be harvested. Wheat and oats are making good growth and are providing some grazing for livestock. Livestock feeding is heavy throughout the area. Lambing is active.

WEST CENTRAL: Moisture conditions are improved for the coming crop season. Small grains are making good growth and are offering some grazing for livestock. Most livestock are in fair to good condition, with supplemental feeding active. Gardeners are getting their land in shape and some are planting onions.

A&M hosting soil survey workshop

COLLEGE STATION — Approximately 120 officials from various agencies and organizations will gather at Texas A&M University this Thursday and Friday for the 1983 Soil Survey and Land Resource Workshop.

The workshop is to help soil specialists to effect better use of soil-survey information.

Featured speaker will be Billy Griffin, Texas state conservationist with the U.S. Soil Conservation Service.

Workshops will deal with types of soils, soil erosion, soil productivity, grape production and agricultural and non-agricultural uses of soil.

The workshop will open at 8:15 a.m. Thursday in Texas A&M's Rudder Center.

Jailed farmers meet

LONDON, Ohio (AP) — A Missouri farmer who spent 37 days behind bars for defying a judge visited an Ohio farmer jailed for contempt and said Saturday that both men were forced to act out of desperation.

"We've lost the independent family farm. They've taken away our ability to make a profit. Everyone is going broke," said Wayne Cryts of Puxico, Mo.

Cryts visited Doug Dailey, 37, whose 191 acres of farm land were sold at a sheriff's auction last month.

Cryts said operating costs for the farmer are too high and market prices are too low.

"We've got to convince the man in the soup line that he's there because agriculture prices are too cheap," he said.

Cryts, a member of the American Agricultural Movement, was jailed for more than a month and said he has run up a $200,000 legal bill since February 1981, when he took 33,000 bushels of soybeans from a grain elevator.

The elevator's owners had filed for bankruptcy and the soybeans, which Cryts had stored there, were to be used to pay off creditors. Cryts was jailed when he refused to tell a bankruptcy judge who helped him remove the soybeans.

Dailey was jailed Jan. 28 when Common Pleas Judge Robert Nichols charged him with contempt for refusing to provide financial records at a debtor's hearing. He owes the Production Credit Assocation $400,000, according to his brother, Richard.

Richard Dailey, Cryts and about 20 members of the Family Farm Movement crowded into the lobby of the Madison County Jail, where Sheriff Stephen V. Saltsman said Doug Dailey was allowed 30 minutes for visitors, one at a time, the same as other prisoners.

Doug Dailey's wife and brother visited him, and Cryts said he spent about 10 minutes with him.

"I told him there's a lot of people out there who understand and offered encouragement," he said. "Doug is in good spirits. I know what it's like" to be in jail.

He pulled a tattered newspaper picture of Doug Dailey from his wallet.

"Just look at that desperation," Cryts said. "It's all across the country. It's a tragedy."

Monahans horse show scheduled

MONAHANS — The Monahans Quarter Horse Show, which in three years has developed into one of the top horse shows in the Southwest, will hold its 44-class show July 23 and 24 in the Ward County Coliseum here.

Judges will be Harold Myerscough of Illinois and Don Douglas of Indiana, according to Linda Sue O'Dell, show secretary.

Ward County Agent Mark Guelker will be show manager, and handling the announcing chores will be Monahans Mayor Dick Hoyer.

The show's classes will include halter, English and Western pleasure, youth, amateur and professional. Foremost horse trainers and exhibitors in the Southwest are to attend.

Block wants milk supports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Secretary John Block says he's not giving up on the dairy price support assessment plan aimed at curbing excessive milk production even though it's been blocked by a federal judge for the last few weeks.

Although Block says he doesn't like that plan that effectively cuts support prices by 50 cents a hundred pounds, he acknowledged Friday that "we don't have anything better right now."

Workmen's compensation law could be extended

AUSTIN — Legislation which would place farm and ranch workers under the Texas Workmen's Compensation law has been introduced by Texas Rep. Juan Hinojosa of McAllen.

House Bill 521 is needed "because farm work has become the most hazardous type of work in the nation," Hinojosa, a Democrat, contends.

"This bill will help both the farmer and the farm worker," he says. "Farmers are not judgment proof. If an employee gets hurt on the job, the farmer faces a potentially unlimited liability, especially if the farm worker is killed."

Hinojosa says that he plans to amend the bill to exempt small family farms and ranches.

Counseling number provided

COLLEGE STATION — Farmers who need immediate counseling with agricultural agents who are certified advisers on U.S. Department of Agriculture insurance programs may dial the toll-free telephone number 1-800-447-4700 to get assistance, according to F.W. "Ted" Crouch Jr. of the Federal Crop Insurance Corp. (FCIC).

The referral service will offer the farmer three names of qualified agents in the farmer's area.

"Farmers can be assured that all agents listed will be either certified by FCIC or authorized by a reinsured company," Crouch said.

Bankers to address farm ills

COLLEGE STATION — Bankers are becoming increasingly concerned over survival of the agricultural community even while high production and low prices are plaguing agriculture in the 1980s.

And the 1983 Texas Farm and Ranch Credit Conference for Commercial Bankers at Texas A&M University Feb. 27-March 1 will address agricultural economics and will afford bankers an insight into the risks of making loans in times of economic uncertainty.

Headliners at the conference will include:

—Phil Gramm, former U.S. Congressman and A&M economist, who will discuss "Economic Outlook."

—U.S. Congressman Charles Stenholm of Stamford, who will talk about "Washington's Role in Farm Survival."

—Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, who will talk on Texas' agricultural economy.

Other discussion topics will include evaluting crop insurance, row crops, cattle and dairy loans.

Following the Bankers' Conference in the J. Earl Rudder Conference Center will be an Agricultural Credit Analysis Workshop March 2 and 3.

Low farm prices continue

AUSTIN — Texas farmers and ranchers are beginning 1983 the same way they ended 1982 — with low farm prices. But cotton prices, though still low, are up by a nickel.

Generally, the advent of the New Year changed nothing but the date on the loan and tax return.

Prices received by Texas Farmers and Ranchers reached 136 percent of the 1977 base and was 3 percent below 1982, according to the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Services.

However, Upland cotton prices increased to 50.1 cents per pound and was 5.4 cents better than 1982 prices.

The All Crop Index, at 105, dropped 6 percent from 1982. Prices were lower for wheat, sorghum, soybeans, peanuts, grapefruit, oranges and yams. Wheat farmers average $3.51 per bushel in January 1983; a year ago, they were getting $3.77.

Sorghum averaged $4.41 per hundredweight and was down by three cents.

At $58.58 per hundredweight, beef cattle prices were 20 cents off from a last year. Sheep prices in January averaged $25, which was down $4.50. Hog prices increased from $41.40 to $53.40.

Show to include 'chores'

SAN ANTONIO — Pure downhome chores such as goat milking and sauerkraut making will be demonstrated here in conjunction with the San Antonio Stock Show & Rodeo Friday through Feb. 20 in the Joe and Harry Freeman Coliseum.

Special activities are scheduled during the show.

Evening entertainment will include performances by The Nashville Sound on Friday; The Metheny Brothers, Saturday; Danny Jenkins & Sagebrush, Feb. 13; Western Union, Feb. 14; Bubba Littrell, Feb. 15; George Chambers, Feb. 16; Frenchie Burke, Feb. 17; The Metheny Brothers, Feb. 18; Cripple Creek, Feb. 19, and Jeff Thompson Band, Feb. 20.

Kite scorches soggy Pebble Beach for record 62

'Best round of life' good for Bing Crosby Pro-Am lead

AP LAserphoto

Green Tree Country Club touring pro Tom Kite is all smiles during Saturday's record-breaking round in the Big Crosby Pro-Am at Pebble Beach, Calif.

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) - Tom Kite, sloshing and slogging over rain-soaked fairways, rode the best round of his life, a 10-under-par 62 at the fabled Pebble Beach Golf Links, into a two-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am Golf Tournament.

"This is the best," Kite said when asked to compare this effort to other outstanding rounds of his career.

"To have as much fun as I did, well, you want to stretch it into an eight-hour round," said Kite, who has won the Vardon Trophy for the low scoring average on the PGA Tour for the last two seasons.

"This is a good as it gets.

"This is what it's all about. The gallery out there yelling, urging you on, the Adrenalin flowing.

"Golly, this was fun; tremendous fun."

IT WAS also a course record—breaking by two shots the standard set by Ron Funseth in 1972 — on one of the nations most respected courses, the 6,799 yard layout that stretches through the dripting eucalyptus and pine of Del Monte Forest and along the cliffs and crags of Carmel Bay.

"This is the best designed and most beautiful course in the country," said Kite, who now has played Pebble Beach, Cypress Point and Spyglass Hill in 203, 13 shots under par.

Kite shrugged off the possibility that the score may be tainted a bit by the so-called "winter rules" that allowed players to lift, clean and place balls in the fairways, which were saturated by a series of storms.

"There's no question about it, that makes the round a lot easier," Kite said. "But if we hadn't been playing it up, I don't think we could have finished the tournament. About one-tenth of the shots you hit plug into the fairway.

"Besides," he said, with a twinkle in his eye, "in five years nobody will remember we were getting our hands on it. In five years, I might not remember."

While he may have derived a benefit from the lift, clean and place rules, he was hampered by continuing cold drizzle which misted his eye-glasses and sent him climbing into foul-weather gear from time to time.

"More a bother than anything else," he said.

KEN GREEN, the second-round leader and now in his second year on the Tour, and rookie Donnie Hammond were Kite's closest pursurers at 205, 11 under par. Hammond had a solid 67 at Spyglass Hill, generally regarded as the toughest of the three courses used for the first three rounds of this event, and Green, facing the pressure of the first lead of his career, had a 71 at Cypress Point.

"Kind of a basic round," Green said. "I didn't kill anyone, but I didn't thrill anyone either.

"This may sound stupid, but for me, the position I'm in, I'm much better. I know I have to make up ground to win, but if I don't, I won't be accused of blowing a big lead."

It was another two shots back to Gary McCord at 207. He had a third-round 70 at Pebble Beach.

Jack Nicklaus shot a 66 at Pebble Beach and, at 208, was five strokes back going into Sunday's final round. He was tied with Danny Edwards and Cal Peete. Edwards had a 69 at Spyglass and Peete 70 at Pebble Beach.

TOM WATSON, playing his first round at Pebble Beach since beating Nicklaus for the U.S. Open title on that course six months ago, could do no better than match par 72 and, at 212, was nine shots off the pace.

Kite's record-breaking effort was, he said, aided by luck.

"I used up a whole year's worth of good breaks," he said. "I made all the putts I should have made, some I shouldn't have made, chipped in. I was lucky, but that's what you have to do to shoot 62 at Pebble Beach."

He needed only 21 putts, only eight on the back nine.

"That's obscene," he said.

He did not make a bogey. He holed an 8-footer for par. He holed another 10-footer for par. And, on the 15th, he flirted with the out-of-bounds marker on the right, punched his second short and left of the green, then pitched in for birdie from about 40 yards.

That was his 10th birdie of the day and his fifth in a row.

The string of five in a row began with a 6-footer n the 11th. It was followed by a long putt, maybe 35 feet, on the 12th, a 12-footer on the 13th and a wedge to 18 inches on the 14th.

He birdied the first two from about six feet. The next three holes went to routine pars. He wedged to three feet and birdied the sixth, scored from about 25 feet on the seventh and dropped a 6-footer after a 6-iron shot on the eighth.

Then he capped it with the pitch through the misting rain that found the cup on the 15th.

Lewis breaks record

DALLAS (AP) - Carl Lewis, running in the event for the first time this year, overcame a false start Saturday night then blazed to a world record 6.02 seconds in the 60-yard dash at the Dallas Times Herald Invitational Meet.

Lewis, the world indoor long jump record holder, eclipsed the 60-yard standard of 6.04 which was set by Stanley Floyd in this meet in 1981.

Running for the Santa Monica Track Club although he is enrolled in the University of Houston, Lewis outlasted Georgia All-American tailback Herschel Walker, who finised second in 6.12.

Baylor's Bruce Davis was third in 6.12 while Floyd was fourth in 6.15.

"It's my second world record and it's the one I always wanted," said Lewis. "I always felt it was possible."

"It was the first time I had run the 60 this year and I was very jittery. That's why I false started," he said. "Herschel is good and strong and any of those other guys in the race can break the world record anytime."

"To be truthful I didn't know what to expect. I hadn't won a race this year and I hadn't run good in the 60 in two years," Lewis said.

Lewis' previous best was 6.06 seconds.

LEWIS' WORLD indoor long jump mark is 28-feet, 1-inch.

Floyd came over to Lewis after the race and gave him a big hug.

"I'm glad to see you get it (the record)," Floyd said.

Lewis was overjoyed at the recor$, circling the track while the huge crowd of some 10,000 fans gave him a standing ovation.

"It was a great feeling," he said. "The world record holder in two events. That's great."

Billy Olson, fresh off a world indoor record of 19-1/4 inches at Toronto Friday night, failed in three attempts at one-half an inch higher.

A TIRED Olson soared 18-4 1/2 on his third try and made 18-8 1/2 also on his third attempt.

Olson, former star at Abilene Christian, came close to extending his world indoor record on his second attempt.

He just brushed the bar with his shirt and the standard wobbled before trickling off the upright.

Kevin Akins of the Ohio Track Club set a meet record in the shot put with an effort of 69-9 1/2.

It shattered the old standard of 65-2 by Michael Carter of SMU.

Carter threw the shot 66-11 1/4 to finish second.

In the women's mile run, Mary Decker Tabb won easily in 4:26.58, some six seconds off her world indoor record.

Appearances can be deceiving in Pro Bowl

HONOLULU (AP) — Appearances, says Dallas Cowboys Coach Tom Landry, can be deceiving. Sunday's Pro Bowl game is a case in point.

"It's great to see the cream of the crop," said Landry, who'll guide the NFC squad in the National Football League's annual all-star game."I realize these players look like the rest, but the talent is a little bit different."

Walt Michaels of the New York Jets, the AFC coach, agreed.

"These are the talented ones, both physically and mentally," he said. "They were chosen by a vote of their peers, so they're the best."

Kickoff for the nationally televised game at Aloha Stadium is 3 p.m.

THE SOLID NFC offense includes quarterback Joe Theismann, one of the heroes in Washington's Super Bowl victory over Miami last Sunday; running backs Tony Dorsett of Dallas and William Andrews of Atlanta, and wide receivers James Lofton of Green Bay and Dwight Clark of San Francisco.

The NFC's defensive unit includes Randy White and Ed Jones of the Cowboys, Lee Roy Selmon and Hugh Green of Tampa Bay, the New York Giants' Lawrence Taylor, Washington's Tony Peters and Nolan Cromwell of the Los Angeles Rams.

The explosive AFC offense features San Diego quarterback Dan Fouts and his Charger teammates, wide receiver Wes Chandler and tight end Kellen Winslow; running backs Freeman McNeil of the Jets and rookie Marcus Allen of the Los Angeles Raiders, and wide receiver Chris Collinsworth of Cincinnati.

Among the AFC defenders are Mark Gastineau of the Jets, the Raiders' Ted Hendricks and Lester Hayes, Pittsburgh's Jack Lambert and Donnie Shell, and Houston's Robert Brazile.

Michaels and Landry agree that a minumum of coaching is required for the all-stars.

"We'll have a few meetings, practice a few days and then I'll let them go to work," said Michaels, making his debut as a Pro Bowl coach after appearing in four of the games as a player some 20 years ago.

LANDRY, THE dean of NFL All-Star coaches with six appearances, said, "Although we'll stick pretty much to basics, we will throw in a few trick plays.

"This is a game where the other team has no weaknesses," continued Landry, who has a 2-3 record as Pro Bowl coach. "One of the biggest things offensively is how well and how quickly the quarterbacks can adjust to new receivers.

"And specialty teams' play is very important in this game; some of the players who must be on the specialty teams haven't been on them since their rookie years."

The 40 players on the winning squad will receive $10,000 each, with the losers getting $5,000.

Surprising Chevrolet has early Daytona race lead

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A surprising Chevrolet-powered March 83G prototype, co-driven by Randy Lanier, Terry Wolters and Ken Murray, held tenaciously to the lead one-third of the way through the 24-Hour Pepsi Challenge sports car endurance race as Saturday night turned into Sunday morning.

The powerful and dominant Porsche Turbo 935s, the cars that have won six straight Daytona 24-hour events, were falling by the wayside with mechanical problems throughout the first eight hours.

Among the cars that held seemingly commanding leads only to suffer early retirements were 935s driven by the teams of John Paul Jr., Rene Rodriguez and Joe Castellano — who had led the March by more than a lap — and four-time 24-hour winner Hurley Haywood, Al Holbert and Bruce Leven.

Paul's car went out after blowing a tire in the infield and having to be driven all the way around the rest of the 3.84-mile Daytona International Speedway road course dragging its rear end on the ground. The damage to the engine and exhaust system was extensive.

Haywood's racing machine suffered gearbox problems and then a turbocharger burnout.

The March took over the lead about 8 p.m. EST, 4½ hours into the grueling race, moments after Rodriguez limped into the pits with Paul's blue Porsche.

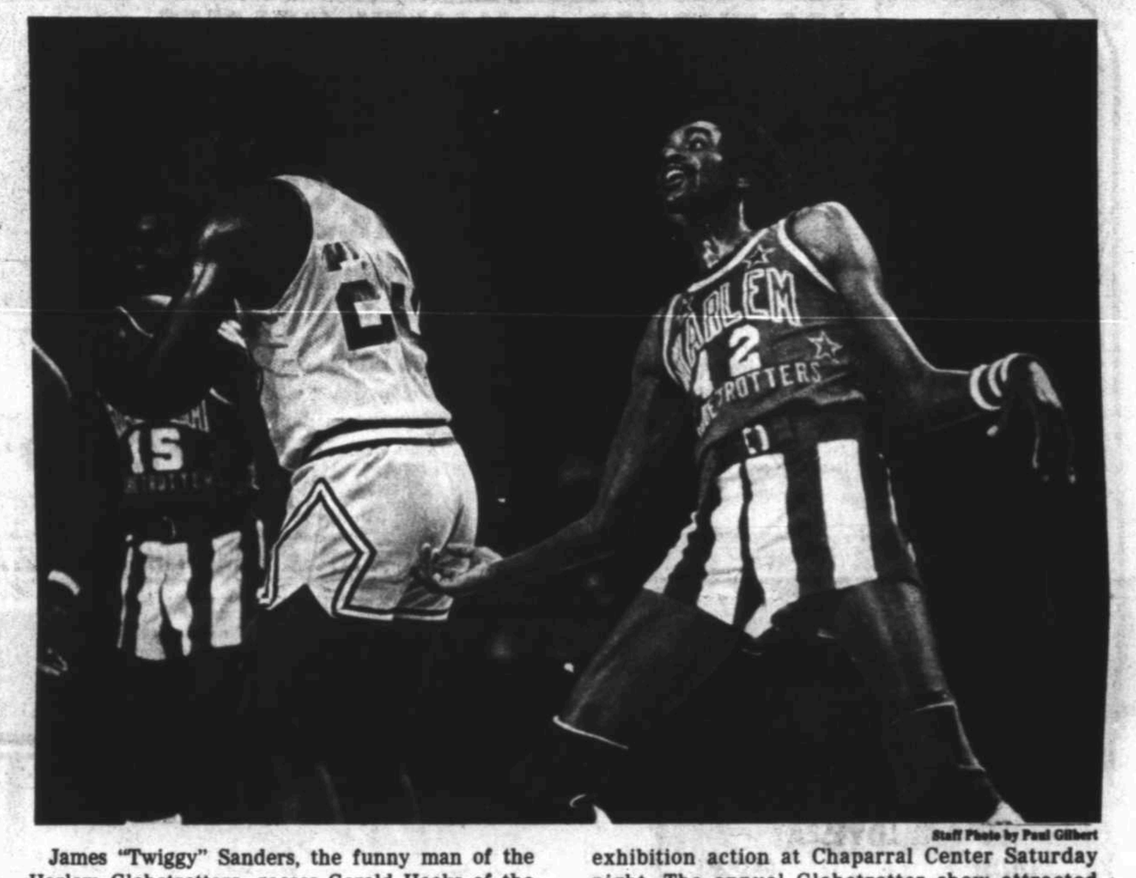

Meanwhile, the 935 started from the pole by Frenchman Bob Wollek overcame long stays in the pits to change a pair of broken turbochargers, weaving back through the heavy traffic to regain second place, five laps behind.

That car was being co-driven by owner Preston Henn and Frenchman Claude Ballot-Lena. But four-time Indianapolis 500 winner A.J. Foyt was signed on to replace Henn after the car that Foyt was co-driving with stock car champion Darrell Waltrip and Argentinian driver Guillermo Maldonado went out with engine problems.

Foyt and Waltrip had combined to move their own Aston-Martin prototype racer from 13th place at the start to seventh place before the oil pressure dropped and the engine seized up as Maldonado attempted to get out of the pits after taking over for his first driving chore.

"We were doing great," said Waltrip, who was making his first sports car start. "But that traffic out there was really something. These cars have everything ... headlights, windshield wipers and turn signals, everything they need except a horn."

Foyt, who was in a sports car race for the first time since combining with Dan Gurney to win the 1967 24 Hours of LeMans, France, was obviously enjoying the experience.

Chaps shouldn't look ahead

MC still dreaming of escape in Hobbs

When every game is crucial, the Midland College Chaparrals shouldn't be looking ahead. But Monday, they may be looking ahead to Thursday...of such distractions upsets are made.

The Chaps return to New Mexico Monday to play New Mexico Military Institute, one of the tailend teams, at Roswell. Thursday MC returns to Langford Chaparral Center against Amarillo College, the only team to beat the Chaparrals in Western Junior College Conference competition this season...or last season, for that matter.

The Chaps still are having fall-off-the-cliff dreams of last Thursday's narrow escape at Hobbs, N.M., where MC defeated New Mexico Junior College, 104-99, as Nate Bufford (30) and Chester Smith (35) produced 65 points between them. In the Dec. 6 meeting, MC won 114-91 and NMJC coach Ron Black felt it was a fluke and predicted the WJCC champion would probably be a four-time loser.

NMJC has suffered three losses and is tied for third place and in a pitched battle for one of four Region V tournament berths. Midland College, meanwhile, is 11-1 in conference and 22-3 for the season with a third straight WJCC title and a regional tournament spot within reach.

COACH JERRY Stone's immediate task is to focus attention the Institute. Some 900 cadets will be on hand to lend vocal support against the defending national champions, in hopes of the kind of upset that could make a season. MC won 81-51 in Midland the first time around.

"The Institute hasn't been very strong this year, and that makes them even more dangerous," Stone pointed out. "They are lightly regarded and it's sometimes tough to get teams movtivated against teams like that. But I can remember too many times when we had to fight for our lives in games against the Institute over there and I'll try to impress that on our players"

For MC assistant coach Reggie Franklin, it will be a homecoming trip. Reggie starred for NMMI for two years before going on two all-SWC honors at SMU and two years with the Harlem Globetrotters.

Hamilton wins third straight skating gold

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Scott Hamilton continued his reign over U.S. figure skating by winning his thrid straight gold medal at the week-long national championships which concluded Saturday night.

Brian Boitano, 19, of Sunnyvale, Calif., was second and Mark Cockerell, 20, of Burbank, Calif., was third.

Hamilton's winning performance, skated to big band music, won near-perfect marks for style from all nine judges. But Boitano and Cockerell both skated program that were technically more difficult. Boitano, for example, attempted the only triple Axle at this competition but he used two feet on the landing.

He incorporated six other triples in his program and Cockerell tried eight, landing seven and falling on the other.

The two-time defending world champion will try to add a third world gold medal next month when he represents the United States in Helsinki, Finland. He led from the outset of the competition, with Boitano second and Cockerell third throughout.

Did You Know?...

Hall of Fame pitcher Bob Gibson struck out 10 or more batters in a World Series game on five occasions.

The Quotebook...

"Lynn Swann's retirement is a ploy. He'll unretire late next summer in time to rejoin the Steelers in camp. How would it have looked if he had taken a job to broadcast USFL games while still an active player in the NFL?" Dick Young, New York sportswriter.

Cliff Harris, above, and Bobby Layne will be at the Midland Sports Banquet Tuesday...See Page 2C.

Layne, Harris added to Sports Banquet rostrum

Two former pro football greats, Bobby Layne and Cliff Harris, have been added to the Midland Sports Banquet honored guest list at Green Tree Country Club Tuesday.

They called him Captain Crash. When he was in the vicinity even his own teammates heard footsteps. When they came to, they'd complain, "Hey, Cliff, I'm on your side."

When Harris played free safety for the Dallas Cowboys from 1970-79, many claimed he was the best in the NFL. No less an authority than former St. Louis Cardinal Larry Wilson, already in the Hall of Fame, labeled Cliff as the best in the business.

"He's changed the way the position is played. You see other teams modeling their free safeties around the way Harris plays, strong as can be against the run, able to go back and cover against the pass, and striking fear in everyone on the field because he hits so hard."

Overlooked in the 1970 NFL draft after playing for Ouchita, Ark., College, Harris signed as a free agent. The Cowboys never regretted it. He went to five straight Pro Bowls and was All Pro four straight years.

While with the Cowboys, Cliff played in five Super Bowl games.

Harris' addition to the MSB rostrum should keep everyone one on his toes...and apprehensive.

Layne is part of the Texas football legend. He came out of Dallas' Highland Park High to make all-SWC at Texas four years and was an All-America in 1947.

He threw two touchdown passes in the 1946 Cotton Bowl game and in 1948 was named the MVP in the Sugar Bowl game against Alabama.

Drafted by the the Chicago Bears, still in their heyday as Monsters of the Midway, Layne found himself competing with T-versed quarterbacks Sid Luckman and Johnny Lujack. Bobby was at a disadvantage since he had spent most of his career as a single wing tailback. He didn't dabble with the T until his senior year at Texas.

Bobby Layne...ex-Longhorn, Lions great.

Traded to the New York Bulldogs in 1949, Layne eventually wound up with the Detroit Lions, where he pitched the Lions to world championships in 1952-53-57 and a divisional title in 1954. He finished his career with the Pittsburgh Steelers and was inducted into the Hall of Fame, virtually all of them—the state of Texas; the University of Texas; the National Collegiate Hall in New York; the Pro Hall in Canton, Ohio; the Michigan Hall, the Pennsylvania Hall.

Harris and Layne will join a star-studded group that includes Chicago Cubs General Manager Dallas Green, Cubs Farms Director Gordon Goldsberry, former Washington Redskin Coach Jack Pardee and Cactus Pryor, master of ceremonies.

Tickets for the Sports Banquet are the same price as last year, $35, and may be purchased by contacing the Midland Cubs office at Cubs Stadium. The banquet will get underway at 6:30 p.m. with a social hour and an opportunity to meet the celebrities and the meal will be served at 7:30 p.m.

All Jeanette Bolden ever hankered to be was a '10'

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

All Jeanette Bolden ever hankered to be was a "10." She had a nice start on it — long, exciting legs, big brown eyes, a nice smile. Plus, she looked great in shorts. And, she was already an "11."

You see, Jeanette didn't want to drive all men wild with enthusiasm. Just those at the IOC, the TAC, Track & Field News, Sports Illustrated, The Sporting News. Jeanette never wanted diamonds. Just a gold medal.

Jeanette is a world class sprinter. For a lot of people who are world class sprinters, that's not saying that much. I mean, most of them, they just rolled out of bed one morning with the ability to run 100 meters in 10-flat. They didn't have to do much about it except say "Thanks, God." If that occurred to them, that is. They ran the 100 in 10-and-change for the same reason fish swim, sharks eat. It came with the package.

JEANETTE BOLDEN came damaged. For one thing, her feet faced each other at birth. If you tracked them in the snow, you would have been scared to catch up with what you were following. For another, they were clubbed. On top of that, Jeanette had asthma.

Her first pair of shoes had so many straps and buckles and things they looked like something they'd removed the skates from first. The first thing the doctors had to figure out was whether she could stand on them, let alone run on them.

The asthma was a big break. It got her sent to a camp for ailing children where the counselors didn't think the treatment for asthma necessarily included standing around waiting for the next attack. Jeanette found out she could swim, run, jump, and, above all, run fast.

A 100-meter dash is a punishing flash event which would seem to call for a breathing apparatus in perfect working order. It would seem to be no place for a person who must periodically gasp for air like a guy buried in a mine cave-in or a person for whom a hidden allergy may suddenly constrict the air passages to the diameter of a straw. Over 9 million Americans have this affliction. Many of them have trouble running for a bus, never mind a medal.

JEANETTE, WHOSE parents ran a 27th Street bakery shop specializing in sweet potato pies (they taste like pumpkin), was like any other asthmatic spending her life in a welter of steam kettles, nostrums, dashes to an open window, or ambulances on the way to the hospital. Life was a kind of a nightmare where you waited for nature to clap a gag over your mouth and clutch your windpipe with bony hands and strangle you. If you've ever got a piece of meat stuck in your windpipe, you know what an asthmatic feels like. It's like drowning on dry land.

So, it took courage and determination to take up athletics with an affliction where even reading a book might be perilous, but Jeanette was so fast, once her feet were pointed in the same direction, that she came under the care of a nationally-famous allergist, Roger Katz, from Los Angeles' Cedars-Sinai hospital, and a crack women's track coach, Bob Kersee. The asthma didn't go away, but the fear of it did.

Jeanette found out that her asthmatic attacks were triggered by allergies, perhaps fish cooking, feathers in her pillows, pollen. Or simple stress. Now she takes medicine to prevent attacks.

And she ran faster and faster, once setting world records in both the 50- and 60-yard dashes.

JEANETTE RUNS the 60 in the 24th Times Indoor Games this week at the Forum in Los Angeles, where she'll confront her long-time tormentor, Evelyn Ashford, and a contingent of East Germans. Like Ashford and the frauleins, Jeanette has her sights set on the '84 Olympics.

"To win there, I have to get under 10 seconds," she says. "My best time for the 100 is 11.16. I have run a wind-aided 11.12. So I know I can be a 10. Once I get in the '10's' who knows? I could get to be the best in the world."

For a person who sometimes gets air to her lungs at sea level about the way a mountain climber does a thousand feet from the summit of Everest, Jeanette's 11's may be more historic than anyone else's 10s.

To the nation's 9 million asthmatics, she's already a perfect 10.

Super Bowl pre-game still causing nightmares

By HOWARD ROSENBERG
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

I've had this recurring nightmare since Sunday.

It's 2 a.m. and I'm in front of my TV set still watching the Super Bowl pregame-a-thon on NBC, now in its 13th hour and threatening to overlap Jerry and his Kids.

Suddenly, Mike Adamle's interview with the stadium beekeeper is aborted by a solemn voice saying, "We interrupt our regular programming for this important announcement." Next on the screen is NBC Chairman Grant Tinker declaring that, due to the length of the pregame blabbering, NBC will be unable to bring us the Super Bowl. Tinker apologizes, then quickly adds the good news.

NBC will still present "The A Team," its new series starring George Peppard and a brick named Mr. T.

Tinker fades out to be replaced by the scowling face of Mr. T, who thrusts his finger at me and demands, "You will watch!"

This is the point at which I waken in a cold sweat, as if in a scene from a cheap Hollywood movie.

All right. Enough of dreams. Sunday's Super Bowl game itself was a real sweetheart, as we all know by now, splendidly covered by NBC's cameras and announced with customary skill and intelligence by Dick Enberg and Merlin Olsen. Hail to the Peacock!

The droning ooze that preceded it, however, was a Super Bore.

I can still hear NBC's Len Berman: "Coming up, how about the man who takes care of the field?" Yes, of course. And how about the woman who takes care of the man who takes care of the field?

Maybe it was different for you, but by the time the Miami Dolphins and Washington Redskins appeared, I was already exhausted and nearly football out from the manufactured hoopla. Overcoverage? I haven't seen anything as garish and overdone since my cousin's wedding, when the waiters saluted the newlyweds with flaming shish kebabs.

Think NBC had enough pregame analysts? There were American Football Conference analysts and National Football Conference analysts. There was even a "special teams" analyst, Jim Turner. I was waiting for someone to analyze the analysts.

NBC even managed to make the coin toss pretentious. The coin toss! "Gentlemen, Elroy Hirsch is going to toss the coin." Yes, gentlemen, and this round object in my hand is the coin. Be thankful they didn't show us clips of past coin tosses.

"There's no Super Bowl frenzy here," NBC's Bob Costas declared Sunday about Los Angeles. He sounded surprised. We were informed that Los Angeles was already all frenzied out from continual exposure to stars and show biz. Who is John Riggins when you've already got Erik Estrada? Oh, bosh! Interest and excitement, sure. But where was there a Super Bowl frenzy except in the home cities of the two Super Bowl teams — and in the press?

The popular notion that the innocent media were somehow manipulated by conniving Super Bowl hucksters into pumping this event into a world-class helium ball is preposterous. No manipulation needed. It was love by the media at first swoon, evidenced by sportscast after sportscast and newspaper story after newspaper story devoted to the Super Bowl and its accompanying trivia and hype.

Then, as the highlight of the post-game show, came the president of the United States, phoning the winning and losing coaches on national TV, putting the Oval Office seal on this as a National Event. You WILL love it.

There is no industry in the United States that gets the free promotion from the media that professional sports gets. A jock belches and it gets a headline.

And there is no industry that promotes itself as TV does.

How valuable was the Super Bowl to NBC? Well, of course, there was the up-front benefit of getting $400,000 per 30-second commercial. And there is the potential down-the-road benefit of all the promotion. (Was it a coincidence that Riggins and Joe Theismann wore NBC-insignia caps when they were interviewed on TV after the game?)

At times, it seemed that the purpose of the pre-Super Bowl was to advertise NBC's prime-time schedule. There was Costas with the stars of "Remington Steele," and with Danny DeVito of "Taxi" and Rhea Perlman of "Cheers." And there was the cast of "Cheers" with special material about the Super Bowl. And there was Joe Piscopo of "Saturday Night Live." And there was Costas with Mr. T.

"What team are you rooting for?" Costas asked. "'The A Team,'" Mr. T growled on cue. Whereupon Costas informed America what time the series would be on that night.

By the way, I did watch "The A Team" Sunday night. It was bad and so was Mr. T. But who is going to tell him?

Norway's Fleckenstein wins giant slalom

HUNTER MOUNTAIN, N.Y. (AP) — Toril Forland of Norway defeated Viki Fleckenstein of Syracuse, N.Y., in the final Saturday of the $20,000 Vandermint Dutch Coffee Cup giant slalom.

Forland, 28, won the first heat by .672 seconds and was .148 seconds behind in the second heat for the overall victory. Forland won $2,000 for her 36th career victory, while Fleckenstein won $1,300.

Jocelyne Perrillat, 27, of France, defeated Jamie Kurlander, 25, of McAfee, N.J., for third. Perrillat collected $1,000, and Kurlander won $800.

Men's competition over Hunter's Eisenhower trail will be held Sunday.

Troup claims sixth career PBA title with rally over Hannahs

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas (AP) — Guppy Troup won his sixth career victory Saturday by coming from 30 pins behind to beat Ted Hannahs, 237-221, in the finals of the $125,000 Quaker State Open on the pro bowlers tour.

Troup, a 38-year-old righthander from Jacksonville, Fla., captured first prize money of $20,000, and Hannahs, from Zanesville, Ohio, settled for $11,000 second-place money.

Starting the day seeded third of the five finalists, he disposed of defending champion Art Trask of Fresno, Calif., 222-183, and then edged Tom Baker of Buffalo, N.Y., 258-236 after Baker was victimized in the ninth frame by a "perfect" ball that failed to drop the eight-pin.

Rick Vittone of Salem, Ore., was fifth. He rolled a gutter ball on his first attempt in the ninth frame and lost to Trask, 195-184.

Hannahs, the top seed, took an early lead in the championship match by striking on his first six shots. But he missed a 6-9-10 spare in the eighth and then blew a four-pin in the 10th to allow Troup to come from behind. Troup struck on his first ball in the 10th frame to seal his 16-pin victory.

In less than two years the Texas Bass Association president Coy Milam recently announced the first annual National Big Bass Roadrunner Open tournament, offering $136,000 in cash and merchandise, will permit anglers to fish their choice of 36 lakes in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana April 30. Weighin in 7:30 p.m.

First prize is $50,000 cash with $15,000 for second and $8,000 for third. Cash purses will be supplemented by $36,000 in boats, trailers and merchandise drawings. Pay out will be to 25 places.

Entry fee is $100 before April 22 and $125 there after. The tournament will headquarter at the main pavilion of the Tyler Farirgrounds Loop 323, within three hours of all 36 lakes. All 25 cawh winners will be administered polygraph tests by a team of bonded, licensed examiners.

Lakes to be fished include Palestine, Murvaul, Conroe, Livingston, Houston County, Sam Rayburn, Toledo Bend, Lake O' the Pines, Wright Patman, Texoma, Tawakoni, Cedar Creek, Cypress Springs, Pat Mayes, Caddo, Travis, Buchanan, Millwood, Ar., Winnsboro, Quitman, Bob Sandlin, Whitney, Houston, Pinkston, Hugo, Okla., Inks, Lyndon B. Johnson, Marble Falls, Hubbard Creek, Brownwood, Belton, Granbury, Lavon, Mexia, Ray Hubbard, Proctor.

FEDERAL JUDGE June Green vacated an injunction against international export of bobcat pelts, making it legal to export pelts taken and tagged in Texas and other states since Jan. 1, 1980. Also dismissed was the suit brought by Defenders of Wildlife, Inc., against the federal Endangered Species Scientific Authority, which had resulted in the two-year export ban.

The December ruling has considerable impact on Texas trappers and fur dealers, since the state produces more bobcat pelts than any other. Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept. officials contend that bobcat populations are stable in the state, and the controlled harvest of pelts poses no threat.

Bobcat pelts may be taken for sale in Texas only from Nov. 15 of one year through Feb. 15 of the following year, and pelts must be affixed with a special tag obtained from registered bobcat pelt dealers before being eligible for export.

Prices for pelts have fluctuated dramatically in recent years and the current average is around $40....

A RECENT Cameron County court ruling at Brownsville may have closed a loophole in laws regulating the taking and sale of redfish on the Texas Gulf Coast, TPWD officials said.

A Port Mansfield fisherman was fined $400 after being found guilty of selling illegally caught redfish and speckled trout. The man claimed he caught the fish from federal waters, nine nautical miles, or farther, from the coast.

Gary Matlock, director of coastal fisheries, said officials of the National Marine Fisheries Service testified that redfish and trout of the size he caught would not have been present in the Fisheries Conservation Zone, as he claimed.

COASTAL BAY fishermen may have been surprised at catching what appears to be a red snapper whose colors have faded. TPWD biologist James. A. Dailey said the shallow water fish is the mangrove snapper, a close relative to the popular red snapper, which lives in deep Gulf waters. "Mangrove snappers are sometimes called grey or black snappers, and they can range from grey green to reddish brown in color," Dailey said.

Mangrove snappers get their name from the habit of hiding around mangrove tree roots in Florida. In Texas, however, they congregate around bridge pilings, sunkn wrecks and rock riprap areas in bays. Although they seldom exceed two pounds, they are hearty fighters.

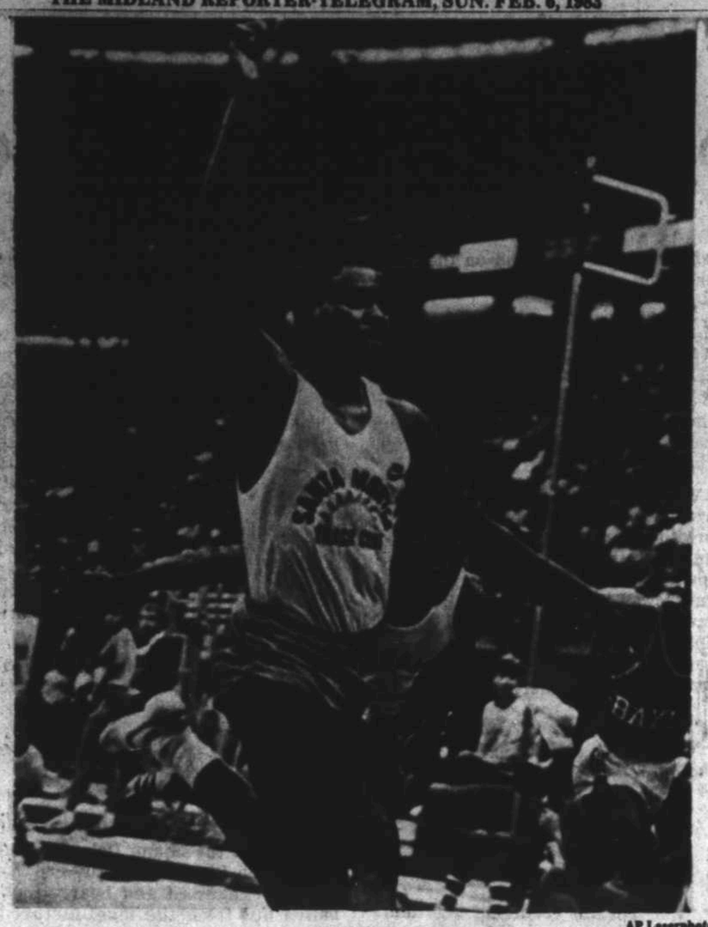

Blackledge wins O'Brien Award

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Todd Blackledge, who quarterbacked Penn State to its first national championship, was named Saturday the 1982-83 recipient of the Davey O'Brien National Quarterback Award.

The trophy was established in memory of the late Davey O'Brien, who quarterbacked Texas Christian University to the 1938 national championship and who won the Heisman, Walter Camp and Maxwell trophies.

Runner-up in the balloting was John Elway of Stanford, followed by Dan Marino of Pittsburgh, Lance McIlhenny of Southern Methodist, Tony Eason of Illinois, Tom Ramsey of UCLA and Reggie Collier of Southern Mississippi.

Blackledge will be honored Feb. 15 at a reception and dinner in Fort Worth. Roger Staubach, former quarterback of Navy and the Dallas Cowboys, will give the keynote address.

Eagles sweep Midland Christian's tournament

The Lubbock Christian Eagles swept the varsity division of the first annual Midland Christian Invitational Basketball tournament by defeating the host school in both the girls and boys finals Sauturday.

The Eagles won the girl's championship with a 53-40 win over Midland. Then boys took the court, crushing the Mustangs 82-46.

In the lop-sided boy's final, Lubbock jumped out to a 28-8 first quarter lead and were never threatened. Barry Sikes lead five Eagles in double figures with 14 points. Mark Carnes and Johnny Bekcher hit 13 each for Midland.

Dallas Oak Cliff won the consolation bracket with a 62-54 win over Brady.

Belcher and Joe Gould, also of Midland Christian, were selected to the all-tournament team. They were joined by Tye Rogers of Lubbock, Oak Cliff's Derrick Duncan and Grady's Bret Bedwell on the team.

The Eagle girls used a strong third quarter in their come-from-behind victory. Lubbock trailed 22-19 at the half but shutdown the Mustang offense, outscoring Midland 14-4 in the telling period.

Kara Akins led the Eagles with 13 points while Kristy Logan and Rhonda Thomason had 12 each for the Mustangs. All three girls made the all-tournament team along with Linda Rodriguez of Grady and Jackie Jackson of Oak Cliff.

In the consolation contest Grady beat Oak Cliff 63-19.

Amanda Hendrickson hit a shot at the buzzer to give the Midland Christian girls the championship of the freshman bracket over Lubbock Christian, 46-44.

Hendrickson scored 24 points for the Mustangs and was named to the all-tournament team. The Eagles' Shellie Smith, who also made the all-star squad, was the game's leading scorer with 25 points.

In the consolation game, Midland Trinity beat St. Clements of El Paso 37-23.

Midland Christian beat Trinity 57-42 in the consolation game.

The Mustangs placed two, Barry Fender and Randy Rix, on the all-tournament team along with Watts, Lynch and Trinity's Lance Wood.

New York Knick Len Robinson (23) sets to make a pass under the leg of Houston Rocket Caldwell Jones (27) during Saturday's NBA game in Houston.

Westpahl's layup gives Knicks win over Rockets

THE NBA

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Paul Westpahl's driving layup with 57 seconds remaining lifted the New York Knicks to a 102-101 victory over the Houston Rockets in National Basketball Association action at the Summit Saturday.

New York carried an 85-78 advantage into the final period, but a string of 10 unanswered Rocket points got Houston back in the game. The Rockets took a 95-94 lead on Calvin Murphy's 29th consecutive free throw with 3:52 left but Westpahl's drive put New York back on top.

Rookie Trent Tucker paced the Knicks with a career high 27 points, hitting 12 of 16 shots from the field. Len "Truck" Robinson added 22 points for New York, which won its fourth straight to climb to 21-27.

Tucker hit eight of 11 shots in the first half, but New York still trailed by a 55-53 count at intermission. Robinson's 13 points in the third quarter helped the Knicks go in front.

Houston's Wally Walker equaled his season high with 23 points. Allen Leavell added 20 for 9-39 Houston, which lost its first home game in its last four.

Pistons 111, Nets 101

PONTIAC, Mich. — Kelly Tripucka hit for 31 points and Isiah Thomas 21 Saturday night as the Detroit Pistons cooled off the New Jersey Nets 111-101.

It was only the second victory in the last six outtings for Detroit while New Jersey saw a threegme victory string ended. The defeat also was only the fifth the Nets' last 23 games.

With a revised starting lineup, the Pistons never trailed after New Jersey made the game's first basket. They built a 54-46 halftime lead with Thomas' nine points leading the way and then went on a rampage as Tripucka connected for nine more to build an 86-64 advantage with three minutes remaining in the third quarter.

Bulls 117, Cavaliers 113

CHICAGO — Quintin Dailey came off the bench to score 17 second-half points and rally the Chicago Bulls to a 117-113 victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Dailey, who had only two points at halftime, teamed up with Reggie Theus to spark the comeback late in the third quarter.

In the final 3:43 of the period, Theus scored seven of his 29 points and Dailey added six to lift the Bulls out of a 10-point deficit and to an 84-83 lead at the start of the final quarter.

Cleveland's World B. Free, who led all scorers with 36 points, hit a three-pointer with five seconds left to make it 115-113. But the Cavaliers called a time out then, thinking they were out of their allotment.

Free had 16 points in the first half, when the Cavaliers raced to a 22-9 lead and widened it to 14 several times before settling for a 56-46 halftime edge.

The loss was the Cavaliers' fourth straight.

Ronnie Lester scored 18 points, all in the second half for the Bulls. Dave Corzine added 20.

Cleveland's Cliff Robinson scored 24 points, while former Bull Larry Kenon had 13 and Geoff Huston had 14.

Nuggets 143, Jazz 136

DENVER — Denver's All-Star forward tandem of Alex English and Kiki Vandeweghe teamed up for 71 points as the Nuggets handed the Utah Jazz their seventh straight loss, 143-136.

English scored 36 points and Vandeweghe had 35 as the Nuggets moved to within two games of the .500 mark at 24-26.

Entering the second half ahead 76-73, the Nuggets got a bucket by English and two free throws by Vandeweghe to go up by seven. Then, Ben Poquette canned two free throws for the Jazz.

But English, Vandeweghe, and center Dan Issel pumped in consecutive baskets to put the Nuggets up 86-75 with 8:24 left in the third period.

John Drew led Utah with 30 points. The Jazz fell to 18-32, and are fifth in the NBA's Midwest Division, behind Denver, which is tied for third with Dallas.

Anderson, three others join Packer Hall of Fame

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Former Green Bay Packer running back Donny Anderson recalled the excitement of playing for the late Coach Vince Lombardi, as Anderson and three others were inducted Saturday into the Packer Hall of Fame.

Anderson, a first-round draft choice of the Packers out of Texas Tech, played for the National Football League team from 1966-71 and was inducted into the Hall of Fame along with Fred Carr, a Packer linebacker from 1968-77.

Also inducted were Carl Mulleneiux, known as the "other end" when he played opposite the great Don Hutson from 1939-41 and 1945-46, and the late Fred Leicht, a member of the club's executive committee for 25 years and instrumental in building Lambeau Field in the 1950s.

"There was one thing I didn't do that I wanted to do: rush for 1,000 yards (in a season)," Anderson said of his playing career.

"I came close a couple of times," added Anderson, whose best total for a season was 853 yards, "but I wasn't the type of individual that was overly gifted as a runner.

"I had speed, I could run, I was durable. But if you took that and the pass catching, I would say I was probably a better pass catcher than I was basically a runner."

Anderson, now an insurance and real estate agent in Dallas, recalled meeting with Lombardi at the end of the "ice bowl" game in 1967, when the Packers edged Dallas 21-17 for their third consecutive NFL title. The temperature was at 13 below zero at Lambeau Field.

Rent It or Own It

by Bob Howle

Prices are high today for everything from furniture to tools and appliances. Consider when shopping for such items, that almost anything that can be bought can also be rented. Before buying, consider that if an expensive item is to be used only two or three times a year, it should probably be rented. Consider as well whether the item will require regular maintenance. If so, it would be best to rent it and let the rental company maintain it. If a piece of equipment breaks down due to normal wear and tear, the rental company will usually replace it at no additional charge. It takes the headache out of usage.

Have you often thought about that expensive machine or tool that, used for a half hour, could save you hours of work on a seasonal project. The cost to buy it is prohibitive. The solution, though, is simple and just around the corner. Come on around that corner to BOB'S RENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy. 685-1271 & 2909, N. Big Spring, 684-8294 and discover the economical and logical alternative of renting. If you need it, rent it and save time, money and energy. We rent a better way of life. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

Los Angeles Kings goalie Markus Mattsson blocks a goal despite efforts by Philadelphia Flyers Ray Allison (19) and Lindsay Carson during Saturday's game in Los Angeles.

Coles holds on to one-stroke lead in LPGA Elizabeth Arden Classic

NORTH MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Janet Coles, seeking her second professional victory, stumbled with a triple bogey Saturday but managed to hold on to a one-stroke lead over Nancy Lopez after three rounds of the LPGA Elizabeth Arden Golf Classic.

Coles shot a 1-over-par 73 over the 6,211-yard Turnberry Isle Country Club course despite the triple bogey on the par 4, 335-yard 17th hole. Her three-day total stood at 5-under 211.

Lopez, who fired a 2-under 70, was alone at 212, followed by Stephanie Farwig at 213 and Sandra Spuzich at 214. Farwig, who finished in a tie for 26th in last week's Mazda Classic of Deer Creek, carded a 6-under 66 for the low round of the day.

Coles, who began the day with a two-stroke lead over Alice Ritzman and first-round leader Lauri Peterson, hit her tee shot on No. 17 to the right and behind a tree. She was 124 yards from the pin and 116 yards from the front of the green.

The leader hit a three-iron that rolled just short of the green, but into a bunker. On Coles' next shot, she sent the ball over the green into the water.

Coles recovered from the triple bogey, however, with a birdie on No. 18 as she dropped a 45-foot putt. Earlier, she had birdies at No. 11 and No. 14.

Lopez' round included six birdies and four bogeys. "I putted much better today. But I didn't stay in the fairway enough," she said.

"The first two days I hit the ball well, but didn't putt," Lopez added. "Today, I putted well but didn't hit the ball well. Maybe tomorrow I'll get it all together."

The 66 was Farwig's best round since earning her LPGA Tour card in July 1982.

"I just play one hole and one shot at a time," said Farwig. "The more times I get into the pressure situations, the better I will handle it. I'm still in a learning situation."

Seven players, including Ritzman and Peterson, were bunched at 215, four strokes behind Coles. Peterson faltered with a triple bogey at No. 8.

Buffalo, Quebec play to rare scoreless tie

By The Associated Press

QUEBEC — Flawless goaltending and fierce forechecking combined to produce a rare scoreless tie between the Buffalo Sabres and the Quebec Nordiques in a National Hockey League game Saturday.

The contest also produced another rarity — an afternoon game at the Colisee before a crowd of 15,247. It was played in the daytime to accommodate fans wishing to attend the parade at the winter carnival here Saturday night.

Robert Sauve stopped 22 shots for the Sabres to post his first shutout, while Dan Bouchard also notched his first for Quebec. He faced 22 shots from the Sabres.

Flyers 2, Kings 0

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Rookie goalie Pelle Lindbergh, unbeaten in his last eight games, helped Philadelphia stretch its unbeaten streak against Los Angeles to 32 games Saturday as the Flyers blanked the Kings 2-0.

The Flyers, who have lost only once in their last 21 games, have not been beaten by the Kings since Oct. 22, 1974. Philadelphia now has a 27-0-5 record against Los Angeles since that time.

THE NHL

The Flyers, who are now 35-13-7, got the only goal they would need when Brian Propp scored on a power play at 14:09 of the first period. Propp banged in a rebound after Los Angeles goalie Markus Mattson had made two stops on drives by Darryl Sittler.

Boston 7, Hartford 4

BOSTON — Defenseman Ray Bourque scored his 13th and 14th goals of the season as the Boston Bruins extended their unbeaten streak to 14 games with a 7-4 victory over the Hartford Whalers.

Defenseman Mike O'Connell ignited Boston to a 3-0 lead in the first period with a goal at just 39 seconds after the opening faceoff, and the Bruins went on to extend their unbeaten home streak to 20 games, their longest since 1976.

Boston outshot Hartford by a whopping 41-18 margin.

Stars 4, Islanders 2

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Dino Ciccarelli's goal with 5:06 remaining in the game Saturday night boosted the Minnesota North Stars to a 4-2 National Hockey league victory over the New York Islanders.

Ciccarelli, who will celebrate his 23rd birthday next Tuesday, when the NHL All-Star Game is held here, flicked a 15-foot shot past Islanders goalie Billy Smith's glove to give Minnesota the victory. It was his team-leading 29th goal.

Hawks 4, Red Wings 3

DETROIT — Al Secord scored his 40th goal of the season and Dennis Savard collected two assists to lift the Chicago Black Hawks to their fourth straight victory, a 4-3 triumph over Detroit.

Secord, who entered the game as the NHL's third-highest goal-scorer, gave the Black Hawks a 2-1 lead at the 10-minute mark of the second period with a back-hand shot past Detroit netminder Gilles Gilbert.

Savard, second behind Wayne Gretzky of Edmonton in assists, set up Secord's goal and another by defenseman Bob Murray with four seconds remaining in the second period. Murray's goal was his sixth of the season and fourth against Detroit.

The Norris Division-leading Black Hawks improved their record to 34-14-7 while Detroit, which suffered its fourth straight defeat, fell to 12-29-12.

Capitals 5, Devils 4

LANDOVER, Md. — Greg Theberge and Bobby Carpenter scored power-play goals late in the third period Saturday night to give the Washington Capitals a come-from-behind 5-4 victory over the New Jersey Devils.

The victory extended Washington's unbeaten streak to seven games and tied the club's record of 27 triumphs in a single season set three years ago.

Theberge's seventh goal of the season at 15:56 of the third period put the Caps ahead for good after Carpenter tied the score 4-4 at 13:32.

The Devils, 11-33-11, appeared on their way to their first road victory since Dec. 19 when Hector Marini scored at 5:54 of the third period. But the Capitals responded by taking advantage of the only two power plays of the final period.

Maple Leafs 6, Canucks 4

TORONTO — Rick Vaive and Walt Poddubny each scored two goals and Toronto's penalty killers took the sting out of Vancouver's power play as the Maple Leafs defeated the Canucks 6-4 in a National Hockey League game Saturday night.

Danny Daoust and Jim Korn also scored for the Leafs, while Stan Smyl, Doug Halward, Thomas Gradin and Tony Tanti scored for the Canucks.

The win lifted the Leafs, who improved their record to 14-28-10, two points ahead of Detroit into sole possession — for the first time in more than two months — of fourth place in the Norris Division.

Toronto 4-3 after two periods and assumed a three-goal lead when Poddubny and Korn scored in the opening five minutes of the final period.

The Leafs took 10 of 17 minor penalties but, with Greg Terrion and Terry Martin leading the way, were able to thwart the Canucks' power-play unit during five of Vancouver's six manpower advantages.

Toronto outshot Vancouver 33-29, with Mike Palmateer picking up his fourth triumph in a row.

Vancouver goaltender Richard Brodeur played all but the final 2:21, when he was felled by a rising slapshot off Daoust's stick. Brodeur, cut on the side of the head and groggy, was helped to the Canucks' dressing room. John Garrett, obtained Friday from Quebec, finished up.

The Canucks also lost defenseman Lars Lindgren, who suffered ligament damage to his right knee when checked by Vaive early in the second period.

Flames 7, Penguins 4

CALGARY, Alberta — Kent Nilsson and Lanny McDonald scored three goals each Saturday night as the Calgary Flames defeated Pittsburgh Penguins 7-4.

The loss extended Pittsburgh's losing streak to a club-record nine games. The Penguins are 0-15-1 in their last 16 games.

It was Nilsson's second three-goal night in a row and increased his goal total to 27 for the season. The three-goal performance by McDonald enabled him to tie his career high for goals. He scored 47 with Toronto in 1977-78.

Starling preserves ranking

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Welterweight Marlon Starling of Hartford, Conn., preserved his World Boxing Council rating with a fourth-round knockout over Jose Baret of New York Saturday.

Starling, 27-1 with 18 knockouts and ranked sixth by the WBC, knocked Baret down with a flurry of punches capped by two overhand rights to the jaw. Baret was kneeling when referee Arthur Mercante reached the 10-count ending the scheduled 10-round bout at the Sands Hotel & Casino.

Baret, ranked 14th by the WBC, suffered his first loss after a 16-0 start with 15 knockouts.

Starling, 24, who absorbed several body shots in the first two rounds, cut Baret under the right eye with three second-round left hooks.

"That's when I knew I had him," said Starling, who weighed 145½. "When he saw the blood, he started to panic. He started backing up and I don't think he can fight backing up."

Starling pinned Baret, 146, on the ropes on the third round wearing him down with body punches and another flurry of three left hooks.

In the fourth round, when it appeared Baret's punches had lost their power, Starling began the knockout sequence with an overhand right and two left uppercuts that drove Baret toward the ropes. Starling landed body punches while Baret tried to tie him up in clinches before he landed the two overhand rights that finished the fight.

Starling survived a first-round knockdown that came when he slipped and was hit on the way down. Mercante said it accounted for a knockdown. Starling was not hurt.

Steinbrenner's remarks taken out of context

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner said Saturday that remarks he made earlier in the week about outfielder Dave Winfield were taken out of context and that he "didn't criticize Dave."

Steinbrenner was quoted last week as saying that Winfield, who hit .280 with 37 home runs and 107 runs batted in last season, was not a winner and never had played with a winner. The Yankees' owner has made similar statements in the past.

In a prepared statement, however, Steinbrenner said Saturday, "I didn't criticize Dave. He's a supreme athlete. He gave us a great effort last year. It is a shame that a young writer would take my statements out of context just to get a sensational story."

Steinbrenner said Winfield "was probably the finest athlete in the (American) League last season ... but that all those great statistics don't mean too much unless you win, unless you can show the championship ring on your finger."

"I said that Dave Winfield and several of the other players on our club had never played with winners on their former clubs or so far with us. I said there is a difference and that sometimes it took a player time to become a winner."

Perkins signs with Indians for one year

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Indians signed first baseman-outfielder Broderick Perkins to a one-year contract following an arbitrator's ruling in the Indians' favor, the American League team said Saturday night.

Perkins, obtained by Cleveland along with Juan Eichelberger from San Diego in exchange for pitcher Ed Whitson in an offseason trade, was the National League's top pinch hitter with a .379 average in that role last season.

Not One Red Cent!

United States tax dollars are being used to subsidize Communist regimes and deadbeat nations everywhere. A cessation of this aid will not only save the U.S. taxpayers billions but will also curtail the ability of America's enemies to wage war.

In 1982 Senator Jesse Helms of North Carolina asked the Library of Congress this question: "How much, including interest on the money borrowed by the U.S. Government to finance the program, has our foreign aid program cost the American taxpayers?" The Senator learned that actual federal outlays for foreign assistance from 1946 through fiscal 1981 totaled $286 billion. (This includes economic-military assistance as well as loans made by multilateral development banks and the Export-Import Bank.) By comparison, the total budget of the United States Government in 1974 was $267.9 billion.

But this is only the tip of the iceberg! In effect, the federal government had to borrow the billions it gave away because it almost always operated in the red. Taking into account the compounding interest on these borrowed funds, the Library of Congress calculated total foreign aid costs at 2 trillion, 304 billion dollars. This sum represents the net cost of foreign aid in 1982 dollars. It is twice the size of our national debt and three times larger than the fiscal 1982 federal budget. True, some countries have repaid part of their debts to the United States, but this has amounted to only about $30 billion since 1946.

America's taxpayers have suffered as a result of their government's "generosity." Who has benefited? Much of this assitance has gone to totalitarian regimes - including Communist China, Communist Czechoslovakia, Communist Poland, and Communist Russia.

In addition to direct foreign assistance, the U.S. government has also guaranteed payment on many of the loans that foreign governments have received from private sources. Because of these guarantees, maj r U.S. banks have been more than willing to lend billions to deadbeat nations. For instance, the U.S. taxpayers bailed out Poland when it failed to honor its debts to American banks.

As of the end of 1981, the Soviet bloc alone owed the West $80 billion. Much of the amount that came from private lending institutions was backed by governments such as the United States. Instead of attempting to negotiate arms control agreements with tyrants sworn to world domination, would it not make more sense to stop supporting our enemies? ● ●

3. H.R. 4559, FOREIGN AID APPROPRIATIONS (CONFERENCE REPORT). This legislation was sent to a "conference committee" where the differences between the Senate and House bills were reconciled. The conference report appropriated $7.5 billion. It also gave Representatives a second opportunity to register their position. If a Representative was inconsistent on votes two and three, does this mean he can tell his constituents whatever they want to hear? This bill was rejected. Six weeks later, the House was able to vote on a revised bill (S. 1193) that authorized less money. Who says federal spending can't be controlled? A Lesson From The Past

UNDER THE JUNE 11, 1942 lend-lease agreement, the U.S. government supplied the Soviet Union with billions of dollars worth of equipment. So massive was this assistance that it helped immeasurably in building the U.S.S.R. into a military-industrial power.

The pipeline of equipment to the Soviets included over 400 combat vessels. We also supplied numerous non-combatant ships, including 90 dry-cargo vessels and 10 oceangoing tankers. The lend-lease master agreement required that all vessels be returned; yet, the Soviets kept most of them in violation of the agreement.

We also shipped the U.S.S.R. 14,018 aircraft; 466,968 vehicles (including 6,196 tanks and 182,938 2½-ton trucks); 325,784 tons of explosives; 1,966 train locomotives; and over 4,200,00 tons of foodstuffs.

The total price tag for these and other lend-lease supplies was set at $11.1 billion. (Remember, too, that this was four decades ago when dollars had much greater purchasing power!) The Soviets never made good on this debt. They did pay $36 million (0.3 percent) of the total amount, but in 1975 they refused to make any additional payments whatsoever. In short: the U.S. taxpayers got stuck with the tab.

Furthermore, lend-lease is just one example of Western assistance to the Communists. If all assistance from the Bolshevik Revolution in 1917 to the present is taken into account, it is no exaggeration to state that the Soviet Union was built by the West — especially by the United States.

The 1940s is a long time ago, but there is a lesson in lend-lease worth remembering. With the Communists' credit record, how can anyone honestly claim that they will honor their present-day debts to the United States? Is it not reasonable to ask if the U.S. taxpayers will, once again, be caught holding the bag? ■ ■

. . . And, For Today!

On August 30, 1982 President Ronald Reagan signed Presidential Determination No. 82-19. In this document, the President declared that "it is in the national interest for the Export-Import Bank of the United States to extend a credit and guarantee in the aggregate amount of $68,425,000 to the People's Republic of China in connection with its purchase of steel making equipment and related services."

Will the American taxpayers, once again, be caught holding the bag?

This government subsidy of the Red Chinese slave masters includes a $60.4 million loan from the Ex-Im Bank at 11 percent interest. The first of ten semi-annual payments on this loan is scheduled for November 1986. The remaining $8 million involves private funds that our government has promised to repay if the Reds fail to do so. Of course, the U.S. taxpayers will pay — if the Communist Chinese prove to be as honorable as the Soviets were with lend-lease or Poland was with its recent obligations to major banks.

* * *

HOW DOES IT BENEFIT the American worker to sell American goods to the Communists if he is paying the purchase price with his tax dollars? It doesn't! ★ ★

About The Votes In This Bulletin

THE 97TH CONGRESS of the United States began in January, 1981 and ended in December, 1982. During this two-year Congressional term, there has been no notable interruption in the flow of U.S. technological know-how, U.S. loans and loan guarantees, and U.S. tax dollars to Communist and deadbeat nations.

The shameful policy of subsidizing America's enemies has spanned both Republican and Democratic Administrations. It has continued unchanged over many decades — regardless of whether or not the lawmakers in power were Republicans or Democrats, conservatives or liberals. There have been legislators on both sides of the aisle who have worked diligently to halt foreign aid giveaways, but so far there have not been enough of them.

The American people have a right to know how their Representatives voted on these tax-funded programs. As a public service, therefore, this Bulletin includes a description of seven key votes in the House of Representatives over the previous Congressional term. Every one of these votes is related to the aid and trade issue.

We will report on the legislation of the new Congress once it has begun compiling some roll call votes. In the meantime, however, study the votes presented here. If your Representative is a freshman, inform him of your views. If he served in the previous Congress, let him know if you agree or disagree with his voting pattern. After all, he is in Washington to serve you.

Let your Representative know if you agree or disagree with his voting pattern, and also inform him of your views!

This kind of involvement on the part of grass-roots Americans who care can determine the future direction of our nation. Furthermore, your tax dollars are being used to prop up totalitarian regimes everywhere. ■ ■

U.S. Taxpayers Shouldering TWO Defense Budgets

On April 13, 1982 Senator Michael Armstrong of Colorado rose on the Senate floor to decry the transfer of U.S. technology to the Soviet Union. He bluntly stated, ". . . America's budgetary woes would not be nearly so severe if our economy were not groaning under the strain of financing two military budgets: Our own, and a significant portion of the Soviet Union's . . . .

"The great irony for Americans who will be asked to tighten their belts in order to pay for our defense needs is that much of the additional money that must be spent on defense is required to offset Soviet weapons that probably could not have been built without our assistance."

SOME U.S. LAWMAKERS who are "anti-defense" support aid and trade with Communists. If your Representative is one of them, you should ask why. ■ ■

A TRIM "New Look"

This TRIM Bulletin focuses on how the U.S. government has used tax money to support foreign governments — even the Communist ones! Future issues of the Bulletin will deal with many other matters of vital importance to taxpayers.

Cougars blast A&M, 86-66

Houston now 9-0 in conference play

By The Associated Press

COLLEGE STATION, Texas - Michael Young and Clyde Drexler each scored 20 points to lead Houston's arsenal of sharpshooters as the eighth ranked Cougars blasted Texas A&M 86-66 Saturday to extend their winning streak to 13 in a Southwest Conference basketball game.

It was Houston's first victory at College Station since 1978 and extended Houston's SWC record to 9-0 and they are 18-2 for the season, losing only to Virginia and Syracuse. The Aggies dropped to 11-11 on the season and 5-4 in SWC games.

Drexler and Young got plenty of scoring and rebounding help from 7-foot Akeem Olajuwon, who scored 16 points despite playing most of the second half with four fouls. Olajuwon finished with nine rebounds and five blocked shots.

The Aggies, whose only lead in the game was a game-opening basket by Roy Jones, were led by Claude Riley with 20 points.

Riley hit 14 points in the first half as the Cougars rolled to a 36-29 lead. Riley then didn't score again until the final minutes of the game.

"I've been coaching against Houston since I've been at A&M and that was the best I've ever seen them play," A&M Coach Shelby Metcalf said. "If they play like that they are a final four ball club. They have a class act."

Olajuwon drew his fourth foul with 14:25 to play in the game but returned a short time later when Larry Micheaux drew his fourth foul at 9:01.

Texas Tech 65, Southern Methodist 61

LUBBOCK, Texas — Bubba Jennings and David Reynolds paced a second-half Texas Tech attack as the Red Raiders moved into a tie for fifth place with Southern Methodist in the SWC by beating the Mustangs 65-61 Saturday night.

Jennings hit 11 of his game-high 17 points in the second half while Reynolds scored 10 of his 14. Between them, they took Tech from a 27-26 halftime lead into an 11-point bulge, 60-49, with 4:06 left to play.

The Ponies were down by 10, 65-55, with 50 seconds left, and rallied briefly to cut the margin.

Tech climbed to 7-15 for the season and 4-5 in league action, while SMU dropped to 12-8 and 4-5.

Each team had four scorers in double figures. SMU's Jon Koncak had 16 and Larry Davis 15 to lead the losers. Reynolds hit 14 and Quentin Anderson 12 for Tech.

Jennings, in addition to his scoring, set a conference record for consecutive free throws. He hit his first two to give him 30 in a row in SWC play, erasing the previous mark set by Arkansas' Ricky Medlock in the 1975 season. Jennings then missed on his next attempt to end the streak.

SMU jumped into an early lead and the game see-sawed back and forth until the Mustangs scored on a dunk by Dave Piehler with 4:42 in the first half for a 24-16 advantage.

THE SWC

Anderson brought the Raiders back and Reynolds added two field goals to give Tech its one-point lead at intermission.

Freshman Ray Irvin hit a 10-foot jumper 3½ minutes into the second half for a 35-34 Tech lead, and the Red Raiders never trailed thereafter.

The Red Raiders shot 59.1 percent from the field in the second half to finish up the game with a 46.3 percent mean. SMU hit 50 percent the first half but tapered off, averaging 43.3 percent for the contest.

The Raiders, leading the conference in free throws, won the game at the charity line although hitting only 53.3 percent. Tech converted 15 of 28 compared to 9 of 18 for SMU.

Texas Christian 82, Texas 48

FORT WORTH, Texas — Texas Christian guard Darrell Browder pumped in 22 points and handed out nine assists as the Horned Frogs routed Texas 82-48 in a Southwest Cnnference basketball game Saturday night.

The win was TCU's biggest ever over Texas.

The third-place Frogs raised their records to 16-4 on the season and 7-2 in SWC play. The cellar-dwelling Longhorns dropped to 7-14 and 1-8.

TCU jumped to a 38-22 halftime lead and Frog Coach Jim Killingsworth emptied his bench early in the second stanza.

Carlton Coo'er scored 13 points to lead the Longhorns, who hit only 37 percent of their shots. David Seitzadded 11 points and Bill Wendlandt had 10.

Joe Stephen added 10 points for TCU, which hit 54 percent of its shots.

The Longhorns, whose ranks have been decimated by injuries and defections this year, were hurt by turnovers, Killingsworth said.

"I think the biggest thing that hurt them (the Longhorns) was their guard play," he said. "They couldn't get the ball inside without throwing it away every other time down the court."

Browder said the Frogs played very patiently in the first half because of Cooper and Wendlandt, Two of the few Longhorns on scholarships.

"In the beginning of the game we came out slow and patient because we were mainly concerned with Cooper and Wendlandt getting inside on us," Browder said.

"They are the reason it stayed so close in the beginning of the game."

TCU travels to Lubbock Wednesday to play Texas Tech, which upset Southern Methodist 65-61 Saturday night.

"We are really going to have to bear down and be ready to play Tech this time because they always play tough in Lubboci," Browder said.

"The first time we played them they had a better ball club phan we thought they did and we really had a tough time with them ... this time, believe me, we will be taking them seriously."

Rice 54, Baylor 48

HOUSTON — Renaldo O'Neal controlled the outside shots to lead the Rice Owls to their first SWC victory of the season Saturday night in a 54-48 victory over the Baylor Bears.

The 6-4 senior hit 7 of 13 shots from outside, and the Owls led all the way for their first victory in six weeks.

The Owls, behind sophomore forward Tony Barnett's 13 rebounds, also controlled the backboards.

Rice jumped out to an early lead and never relinquished it, although Baylor garnered two ties. Rice led 25-22 at the half. The Owls' largest margin was nine points at 45-36 with 4:15 remaining.

A Baylor full-court press frustated the Owls midway through the second half, but two quick time-outs by Rice coach Tommy Suitts in the final three minutes settled down the Rice players. The Owls hit eight free throws in the final minute to settle the issue.

Baylor guard James Stern led all scorers with 15 points before fouling out with 18 seconds to play. O'Neal finished with 14 points for Rice.

The victory raised Rice to 7-12 for the season and 1-8 in conference play. Baylor fell to 10-10 and 2-7.

Suitts said the first SWC win of the season made it all worthwhile.

"I felt like before the game that we had to win this one to have a real season and not just a token win or so," Suitts said. "this one meant a lot to all the coaches and players. Our young men did a good job of keeping some good shooters from baylor from getting their kind of shots."

He said three factors contributed to the win.

First was "the courage and character of these young men after all the adversity we have been through so far this season," he said. "Second, we whipped Baylor on the boards, and they are one of the best rebounding teams around. And strong defensive play" was third.

He called Donald Bennett the "team leader."

"He has been just unbelievable for us all year," Suitts said. "I can't say enough for our senior leadership, and especially Bennett, who has held us together."

POSITIVE THINKING

Picture yourself as you want to be in order to be successful in business

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

How may a seemingly unemployable person become successful in business? How can a repeated failure find himself, get completely reorganized and go on to constructive achievement?

Rather than undertake to answer the foregoing by time-tested truisms, I would like to tell about one man who did just that. This is a true story about a real person but I'll call him by the good old solid name of Jim Smith. Jim was a disorganized personality. He just had no focusing ability at all and was totally lacking in a goal. In school his scattered mind could not get a grip on his studies and his flunking record was spectacular.

This failure pattern followed him in every job. Jim had an ingratiating manner and was a likeable fellow who made a terrific first impression. He would start out a job like a real winner but soon his failure tendency would show up. So he went from job to job, never succeeding and inevitably being let go.

Then he was hired by a big American company doing business in Australia where Jim lived. Again he started the job with a bang but it wasn't long before the old failure tendency began to appear. At this point a man came out from the home office of the company in the United States and addressed a meeting of the employees in Sydney, Australia. He told them about the importance of self-image, that no person should see himself as failing but as succeeding.

The speaker pointed out that there is a deep tendency in human nature for an individual to become precisely like that which over a period of time he habitually imagined or imaged himself as being. "Picture yourself as you want to be," he said, "hold that picture tenaciously in the conscious mind until by a process of mental osmosis it sinks into the subconscious. Then you will have it because it will totally have you."

Jim was impressed. He saw himself as he was over against what he could be. He began the practice of imaging himself as an effective man. As a result, his work improved. The company official who had inspired him took a liking to the young fellow. Then he did a strange thing. He took Jim to a place where he could look into the office of the company manager for the state of New South Wales. Pointing to the manager seated in his chair he said, "Jim, Mr.——— is scheduled to reach retirement age in about four years. I suggest that you form a picture of yourself as succeeding him. Image yourself as sitting in that chair. Hold that mental picture intensely in mind. Then go to work. Give this job all you've got and," he added, "you have plenty to give."

Jim was electrified. He became a new man. Potential he nor anyone knew he had began to grow. Enthusiasm motivated him. The mental image lured him on. He studied, worked hard and constantly applied himself. Upon the manager's retirement Jim was appointed to succeed to the position. But that is not all of the story. He did so well as manager of the state organization that ultimately he became manager for all of Australia. Nor is that the end of the story. Jim became a very active citizen, a leading churchman, a leader among the people to the extent that he was knighted by the queen. This is a little narrative of the romance of personality. A reminder of what anyone can become who will get in there and give it all he's got and image his way to success. Oh yes, a footnote. Jim always carries in his pocket a plastic ball containing one mustard seed reminding him that "if you have faith as a grain of mustard seed...nothing shall be impossible unto you."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Skin rash not only symptom of allergies

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been feeling very tired lately and have been getting headaches a lot more often than I usually do. So I did what I know you would tell me to do. I went to my doctor for a checkup. He told me he couldn't find anything wrong with me, but he wants me to go for allergy testing. Is this a good idea? I'm not breaking out or anything like that. — Sonny, Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dear Sonny: After treating allergic patients for a number of years, I can tell you that allergic manifestations are not limited to breaking out; fatigue, headaches, muscle aches, and irritability are only a few of many other symptoms that can indicate an allergic reaction to food.

The allergist to whom you are referred may find nothing wrong, but your symptoms do not exlude the possibility of food allergy.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My older brother has been told he has cancer of the prostate, and he is going for treatment. I think he may have to have an operation. Does the fact that he has this problem mean that I'm more likely to get it later on? — Thurston, Buffalo, N.Y.

Dear Thurston: According to the results of a study by Drs. A. Wayne Meikle and William M. Standish, of the University of Utah College of Medicine in Salt Lake City, familial factors do appear to play a part in the development of prostatic cancer. The brothers of 150 men who developed prostatic cancer before age 62 were found to have four times the risk of developing the disease before age 85 than did men in the general population.

Regular physical examinations to insure early detection and treatment would be advisable.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Winter and summer, my husband keeps our thermostat turned way down. He says it helps him sleep better. Sometimes I wake up at night and I'm so cold I can't fall asleep again. We sleep in the same bed and are compatible in other ways but not when it comes to temperature. Is there something wrong with him or me? — Mrs. V.O., St. Paul, Minn.

Dear Mrs. O.: I wouldn't put it in terms of there being anything wrong with either of you. In general, however, it appears that the warmer a person is, the longer he or she will sleep. According to one study, people who fell asleep when their body temperatures were at their highest point averaged more than 14 hours.

Have you ever thought of getting an electric blanket with dual controls?

Dear Dr. Solomon: Why do doctors put drops in the eyes of a baby that has just been born? I assume it is to protect the baby from some kind of infection, but I don't know what. —Diane, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Diane: The drops given to newborn infants are designed to prevent infection, particularly gonococcal infection. The agent most often used is silver nitrate but other drops are also available and may be used.

Undercover agents testify under cover

HOUSTON (AP) — The cops were on the canvas and the defense was sketchy. So prosecutors put the case in the bag.

Irked by an artist sketching vice squad officers as they testified at an obscenity trial, prosecutors fashioned masks from paper sacks to protect their witnesses' identities.

"You can change your name but you can't change your face. This could present all kinds of problems. There are a lot of fruitcakes who don't like police officers," said vice officer Doug Elder.

The seven undercover officers, already unhappy they were subpoenaed, claimed artist John M. Simpson was trying to blow their covers by recording their faces on his sketch pad.

Simpson, a 32-year-old free-lance artist, was hired by attorney Michael Maness, who is defending Danny A. Drummon, 24, and Gary Rogalski, 45.

The defendants are charged with selling obscene magazines to undercover officers at an adult bookstore.

Introducing...
Mission Plaza Square
Retail and Office Condominium

Owning is better than renting.

If you're presently renting retail or office space, you already know some of the disadvantages-frequent cost-of-living rent increases, leases that give the landlord all the advantages, costly sales overrides on your retail sales. In short, you're not in control.

From a pure economic standpoint, ownership beats renting. Consider these advantages:

* Your mortgage payments are fixed and not subject to escalation or overrides to a landlord.
* You receive tax deductions for interest and tax payments.
* You get a tax deduction for depreciation over the next 15 years.
* You have control over your space, and no one can cancel your lease.
* You can buy enough space to meet your future growth plans and lease the expansion area until it's needed.
* All maintenance and upkeep is furnished through the Owner's Association.
* Your real estate investment gains value.

In addition to all this, Mission Square is strategically located in one of the city's fastest growing areas, North Big Spring and Loop 250, just northeast of Cloverleaf Plaza.

Mission Square is an ideal location for professionals, service businesses, and a variety of retail stores. Contact our office now, for a full color brochure and further details.

Honor Roll Report

MIDLAND IS NOW 98 YEARS OLD. A few years prior to 1880, Lum Medlin, a hunter who was traveling alone, made what was later to become Midland his home. Local history tells us that Lum was one of the first white men to settle in the area. Early in 1880, R. N. Garrett arrived here with a herd of sheep destined for market. Like so many of those who followed, Garrett took an immediate liking to the surroundings and settled here permanently. Soon, thereafter, his California family joined him.

In those early days the railroad people dropped off a box car to serve the growing community as a depot, post office and general store. On February 2, 1885 Midland County was established; 26 days later the City of Midland became a reality.

The old, middle-aged and young enterprises of Midland have contributed immeasurably to the progress, pride and prosperity of our city. You will be interested in reading this list of leading firms and organizations whose names have been arranged by the number of years they have served Midlanders and other West Texas residents.

Auction '83

Among the many items available for bidding at Auction '83 is an evening on the town, including choice of dinners and custom clothing from Golding's Tux, Tom James Custom Tux and James Braddock. Shown above at Lionel Daury's restaurant, demonstrating this item are Gordan Knox, left, and Mary Alice Knox, watched over by Benoit Pouchelon, center.

Also included in Auction '83 are a trip to New York to view fashion shows of Oscar de la Renta and Bill Blass and a fashion package from Grace Jones of Salado, shown right by Mrs. Jack B. Wilkinson Jr., and tickets for four to the March liftoff of the space shuttle and a trip on the Goodyear blimp, shown left by Rufe Bynum.

Auction '83, the major fund-raising event for Midland's Museum of the Southwest, will take place this year on Feb. 9 at Midland Center. This tri-yearly event is a benefit auction to raise funds for the operations, acquisitions and endowments of the Museum.

The black tie affair will present 100 items, donated by concerns throughout the state, that may be purchased through sealed, posted or live bids. Some of the items up for auction include a weekend getaway for the Texas-OU weekend, donated by the Plaza of the Americas Hotel; and weekend stays donated by the Mandalay Four Seasons Hotel and the Mansion of Turtle Creek, all in Dallas. Other auction items include a Northern Sung Dynasty plate from Neiman-Marcus, a trip to the March launching of the space shuttle at Cape Canaveral, Fla., box seats at the Kentucky Derby, a trip to New York City for the Oscar de la Renta and Bill Blass fashion shows, a Barry Kielstein-Cord belt and a stay for one week at The Greenhouse spa.

Along with the auction, the Museum sponsors dinner and music. This year, the dinner is to be catered by internationally-known Glorious Food of New York City.

Lon Sulkowski, senior associate of Glorious Food, said, "Our food philosophy is very simple — we elegantly make use of the best food available. Taste and look is all-important.

"In this business there are no dress rehearsals. You have to get it right the first time," he added.

Music will be provided by "J.P. and the Boys," a jazz combo.

The live auction will begin at 9 p.m., with items being auctioned from the block until all are sold.

The first of these fund-raising auctions was held in 1969 and raised $35,000 for the Museum. Since then the auction has been held every three years with the last auction in 1980 grossing $275,000, which is also the goal for this year.

The Museum of the Southwest exists to conserve, interpret and exhibit objects of educational and cultural value. The stated, primary purpose of the Museum is to provide a distinctive educational and cultural resource for the people of Midland and the surrounding region, broadening understanding and appreciation of the art, archeology and cultural anthropology unique to the American Southwest.

Chairman for Auction '83 is Mrs. Sid Curle, with Mrs. Bucky Bates, secretary; Mrs. Doug Scharbauer, treasurer; Mrs. Greg Gunter, in-town gifts; Mrs. Jack Wilkinson, out-of-town gifts; Mrs. Bob Koziol and Mrs. Jim Salners, invitiations; Mrs. Frank Cahoon and Mrs. Mike Wisenbaker, sponsors; and Mrs. Frank Tirey and Mrs. Mott Williamson, assistants to the sponsors.

Invitations for Auction '83 are $150 per couple and are available from the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri, or be calling 683-2882.

Community Day Nursery now has new service available

Community Day Nursery, a non-profit organization, began in 1949. The Center's operational expenses are received from program fees and allocations from the United Way of Midland. Community Day Nursery is licensed by the Texas Department of Human Resources for 120 children.

Effective Jan. 1, 1983, Community Day Nursery went into a new program with the United Way called "Day Care Subsidy," through which parents of various incomes will receive subsidies from United Way. Children in this program must be in regular attendance at Community Day Nursery. Fees will run according to the family's income; therefore, all proof of income must be shown. The program is based on a first come, first served basis. If interested, each family must set up an appointment to discuss the application with Mrs. Norma Lewis, executive director, at 684-8392.

Another new addition to the Center is the Infant Department. Community Day Nursery bases its activities on the understanding that every activity is a growing experience and provides the following components as part of its program: developmental activities, social activities, health and nutrition. These opportunities are divided into the various programs and departments.

The Nursery is open Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. — 5:30 p.m., serving a nutritious breakfast, lunch and afternoon snack, in which the Center is refunded by the Department of Human Resources Food Program.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Entertaining as always, Ruth Sharp of Dallas made her second appearance before the Midland Country Club Ladies Association at a recent luncheon. Her talk was liberally sprinkled with anecdotes concerning the celebrities she has come to know through her travels, her social life in Big D and her philanthropic work. She shared insights into such notables as President Reagan, Lord Mountbatten, Helen Keller, movie director George Cukor, Lee Radziwill, Yul Brynner, Pearl Bailey and Gene Kelly.

Among those we spotted in the luncheon crownd of over 160 or were Betty (Mrs. Don) Ewan, Kay (Mrs. Don) Bishop, Sally (Mrs. Harrell) Feldt, Diana (Mrs. Charles) Younger, Harriet (Mrs. Harvey) Herd, Midge (Mrs. Dillard) Anderson, Victoria (Mrs. James) Chapple, Dorothy (Mrs. James T.) Smith, Betty Lloyd (Mrs. Don) Ross, Marta (Mrs. Henry) Baumgartner and Patsy (Mrs. Arthur) Yeager.

Ruth has been in Midland on several recent occasions, the last time in the fall when she was campaigning for her brother, Congressman Jim Collins, in his bid for the U.S. Senate. Ruth is a close friend of actress Dorothy Malone, who has returned to Dallas after many years in Hollywood, and the two hit the campaign trail together for Jim.

We enjoyed meeting Miss Malone when she pinch-hit for Ruth last spring at a meeting of Midland's Pi Beta Phi alumnae. A sudden illness forced Ruth to bow out at the last minute, and Dorothy delighted the alums and their guests with her first-hand account of Hollywood's star system, the movie studios in their heyday and stories of her leading en.

Prior to her talk at the country club, Ruth was entertained at a gathering of friends in the home of Betsy (Mrs. Edwin) Dwyer. Ruth and Betsy have been friends since girlhood, growing up together in the Park Cities.

JOANIE AND BOBBY HOLT recently returned from the prestigious invitational Senators' Cup Tennis Tournament at John Gardiner's Tennis Ranch in Scottsdale, Ariz. An annual event, the tournament brings together 20 senators, ten from each party, and 20 businessmen, not only for some topnotch tennis, but as a forum for discussion of problems facing the country today.

Although the Democrats walked away with the Senators' Cup this year, the Holts did not come home empty-handed. Joanie received a trophy as runner-up in women's events, and Bobby and his partner won the consolation prize. This is the Holts' third consecutive year to participate. In addition to Senator and Mrs. Lloyd Bentsen, they were the only other Texans present.

Joanie enjoyed further visiting with Ann (Mrs. Eliot) Richardson of Washington, D.C., wife of the former United States attorney general. They had just visited the previous day in Midland at a luncheon at which Barbara Bush appeared and then crossed paths again at the tournament.

Midlanders Barbara and Roger Allen, who were visting friends in Scottsdale at the time, come by to watch the matches.

NANCY AND DAN MORIARTY entertained with a delightful Super Bowl Watching Party last Sunday evening in their beautiful home in Odessa's Country Club Estates. Guests were invited for a cocktail buffet, with the festivities beginning 30 minutes prior to kickoff.

Attending from Midland were Rosalind and John Redfern Jr., Betty and Glen Barb, Jane and Frank Vitrano, Becky and Jerry Walker, Susie and John Sheffield, Opal and Pete Matthews, Maggie and Conrad Coffield, Sophia and G.W. Brock, Barbara and Joe Gourlay and yours truly and spouse, Harry.

WHEN MARY FISHER BUTCHER becmae the bride of Brent Berry at a family wedding on Jan. 28, it was a double celebration for her parents, Bebe and Bud Fisher, for it marked their 42 wedding anniversary. Among the family members present for the wedding, held in the Fisher home, were the groom's daughter, Leea Berry of Lubbock, and his mother, Deanie Wood of Smyre, and the bride's son, George Butcher of Midland. The Berrys will make their home in Midland, where Mary is employed by HNG Oil Company, and Brent is with HBF Constructin.

Bebe and Bud were married Jan. 28, 1941, in the bride's hometown of Refugio, where all four of their children were born. The Fishers have been residents of Midland since 1953. Bud was employed with The Ray Company until his retirement, and Bebe is a mainstay of Midland Community Theatre, having been secretary there since 1957.

FAYE McADAMS and her children, Glen McAdams of Corsicana, Penne (McAdams) Rapp and husband Neil of Denton, and Mindy McAdams, a student at Midland Freshman High School, recently vacationed in Hawaii, including Kauai, the "Big Island" Hawaii, Maui and Oahu.

The family enjoyed snorkeling, scuba diving and sightseeing, and Faye found her classes in lei making and hula dancing much fun. But she said the most exciting part of their trip occurred while they were on the Big Island, witnessing a volcanic eruption and then having to spend the night there, not knowing the extent of the damage or the danger.

CORN PUDDING

Adapted from a Venezuelan recipe.

2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons minced onion
2 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons light brown sugar
1 cup milk
2 large eggs
½ teaspoon salt
¼ to ½ teaspoon white pepper
⅛ to ¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg
16 or 17-ounce can whole kernel corn, well drained

In a medium saucepan melt butter; add onion and cook gently, stirring often, until yellowed; stir in flour and sugar until smooth; off heat, gradually stir in milk, keeping smooth. Cook, stirring consantly, over moderately low heat until thickened and boiling. Remove from heat. In a small bowl beat eggs with salt, pepper and nutmeg until foamy. Vigorously stir in about ¼ cup of the sauce; stir back into saucepan. Stir in corn. Turn into a buttered round 1-quart casserole (6½ by 2½ inches); place in a pan of hot tap water that comes up as high as the corn mixture. Bake in a preheated 325-degree oven until a metal knife inserted in center comes out clean — 50 to 60 minutes. Makes 6 servings.

For 'real men,' quiche may be out, but furs are definitely in

By GWEN JONES
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Real men may or may not eat quiche, but they sure wear fur. For proof, take a gander at Ozzie Smith, shortstop for the world champion St. Louis Cardinals. Snazzy Ozzie flaunts his pecan-dyed Norwegian blue fox coat designed by Ralph Lauren. And then there's actor Robert Foxworth of the CBS-TV prime-time soap, "Falcon Crest," who sports rugged raccoon.

Sales to men snared 20 percent of the $1.027 billion fur retail volume in 1981, according to the most recent figures provided by the New York-based trade organization, American Fur Industry.

The industry also has grown because public opinion isn't so negative about the wearing of furs as it was in the 1970s, when the ecology movement spearheaded efforts to preserve such rare species as the leopard, jaguar, ocelot and cheetah, as well as to prevent the inhumane killing of more plentiful animals. Today, according to American Fur Industry, no endangered species are used in fur merchandise.

Still, furs aren't adorning the majority of men, not with prices ranging from $7,500 to $10,500 for a mink coat (about half that figure for a mink jacket), $2,500 to $5,000 for raccoon, $6,500 to $8,500 for fox (red, Norwegian blue or silver), $5,000 to $6,000 for coyote and $24,000 to $30,000 for a fisher top coat. However, for the well-heeled, fur is both functional and fashionable.

"Fox has magnetism — it's eye-catching," said Ozzie Smith, who bought his full-length coat for two more reasons: to ward off the cold in St. Louis and to coordinate with his wife's fox coat.

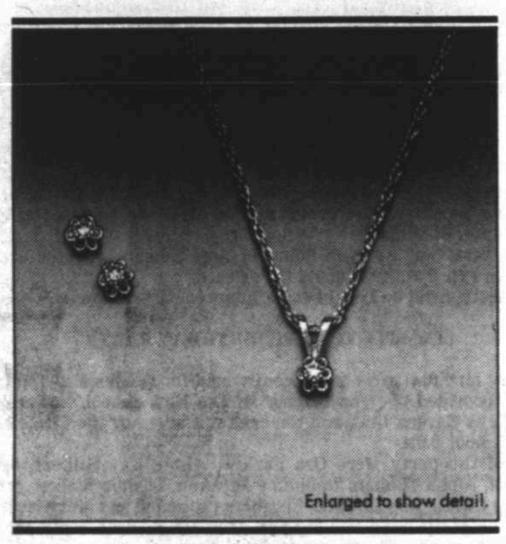

Salt used in its pure form and in the many chemicals derived from it, directly affects almost all major industries. There's salt in shoe leather, in the dye of a hat and tons go into the production of paper.

Coordinated separates combined for a fashion right slim suit look.

Creativity shown in designs of several new homes

By JAMES M. WOODARD
Copley News Service

Designing an unusual home to meet personal desires and needs is one of man's most creative pursuits. Examples are surfacing throughout the country that show just how far creative imagination can go in providing a very special home for people with unconventional ideas.

In Texas, a man and his wife sat down at the kitchen table to plan a basic design for a new home they would construct during the following year. The resulting home was definitely not a "cookie-cutter" type of home found in many new home developments.

The home initially planned out on that table satisfied the basic needs of the family. But it also responded to the favorite recreational activity of the owners.

The home was positioned adjacent to one of the best fishing streams in the area. One section of the home actually straddled the stream. The family room was directly over the flowing water.

A portion of the floor in the family room was movable. At the touch of a button, the floor section would slowly move to one side exposing the babbling stream below.

When the fishing urge was felt, the owners could sit comfortably in their family room, perhaps watching TV, while fishing in their stream. They could usually provide enough fish for breakfast while watching the morning news on TV.

When they had enough fishing, another button would bring the floor section back into place and the room would again become a normal family room.

In Colorado, a somewhat similar feature was built into a luxury home in the mountains just above Denver. But in this case, a push of a button rotates the entire house.

When a change of view is desired from the large picture windows, the house can be rotated whatever number of degrees will deliver the most desirable view. Or if the sun is shining in at a bothersome angle, the house is rotated to correct the situation.

In California, a custom-designed home was built from doors salvaged from a historic old hotel that had been virtually destroyed by an earthquake. In Oregon, a couple designed and built a home from old railroad ties.

Creative possibilities for planning and constructing a highly personalized home are endless. Innovative new ideas are surfacing in all regions of the country.

If you have or know of a particularly interesting and unusual home, we would like to hear about — and pass it along to other readers.

New 'guidebook' slights Fort Worth

By R.H. GROWALD
Copley News Service

Four persons named Polly, Sandy, Debbie and Jeannie have produced a guidebook for Dallas and Fort Worth, Texas. Writers with names such as Betty Jean, Billy Bob, Joe Bob or at least an Amon, a Billie Belle or a T.J would have been better.

First, "The Business Traveler's Survival Guide to Dallas and Fort Worth," ($6.95, paperback; Business Travelers Inc.; New York, N.Y.) has 228 pages on Dallas and only 28 on Fort Worth. This will not aid survival in Fort Worth.

Second, the book's thrust on eateries tends toward the most expensive and non-native menus, places of tablecloths and tuxedoed waiters serving quenelles and veal Oscar and beef Wellington. It barely mentions the Texas cuisine of barbecue and Tex-Mex and not a word about chicken fried steak in cream gravy, that flower of Lone Star tummies.

WITH ALL THE big-heartedness of a San Franciscan discussing life in Sacramento, the authors — pronounced "arthurs" in Fort Worth — sniff and cough and say businessmen should not expect New York and Philadelphia restaurant quality in Dallas.

Philadelphia? That city has not been hailed as a gourmet's mecca since long before W.C. Fields and Legionnaires' disease left town. Oh, it has Bookbinder's restaurant, but it also remains victim to several jokes about the undesirability of spending any time there.

And Fort Worth's restaurant listing makes bare mention of Angelo's, a white cement block barbecue palace on White Settlement Road, surely the capital of Western good eats.

Perhaps Polly, Sandy, Debbie and Jeannie were put off by the mangy stuffed bear inside the front door. But the barbecue was good enough for the White House to have Angelo's cater meals to Air Force One.

And there is not one mention of Fort Worth's Massey's, celebrated in such Dan Jenkins books as "Semi-Tough" and "Baja Oklahoma." Massey's is a home of chicken fried steaks. It's the Dallas Cowboys of paper-napkin restaurants.

OH, FORT WORTH'S millionaires (the Bass family, for one pride of such, not only possibly outbanks Dallas' Hunt and Murchison families but makes the Rockefellers, by comparison, po' folks, according to Big Money watchers) have examples of America's pseudo-French restaurants with which to entertain visiting Pollys, Sandys, Debbies and Jeannies.

But, not needing to cater to visitors unaccustomed to eateries where the ketchup bottle is tabled next to the chrome paper napkin dispenser, seven wealthier Fort Worthians will head for Massey's and other bastions of barbecue and chicken fried steak.

The chicken fried steak is a cheap piece of beef pounded raw into tenderness. A purist will do the pounding with the bottom of a Coke bottle. Then it is dipped into milk and flour and fried. Although north of Oklahoma, where the cowboy civilization thins out, they use a brown gravy sort of slop, the Texan purist will pour cream gravy (milk and flour and stuff) over the steak.

Knowing all this will help even a businessman survive in Fort Worth and Dallas, where, despite their Neiman-Marcus ways, the natives appreciate a chicken fried steak.

DALLAS, AS A MATTER of fact, has pioneered involving a mixture of chili (no Texan would ever put a bean into chili) and rice. For years, downtown Dallas businessmen favored a steaming hole-in-the-wall called The Chili Rice Bowl. The owner had gaudy dreams.

Without telling his customers, he closed the bowl and moved to the suburbs and opened a roller-skating rink under a tent. It had a happy ending, though. Downtown millionaires brought him back and bankrolled The Chili Rice Bowl into life.

But, perhaps, Polly, Sandy, Debbie and Jeannie want cloth napkins.

Also, the ladies ignored history, which is important for an outsider to know when visiting what the local chambers of commerce call the Metroplex, but which the wildly tribal natives call Fort Worth and, separately, Dallas.

Fort Worth still grumbles that in 1936 Dallas pressured the Legislature into giving Dallas the state fair. Fort Worth replied; it hired Paul Whiteman and Billy Rose, put on a gaudy stage show circus and rodeo and filled Dallas with billboards saying "Dallas for Culture, Fort Worth for Fun."

There was a time Fort Worth hired a rainmaker during a drought. He dry-iced the clouds. But the clouds shifted from Fort Worth to Dallas.

Dallas got the rain. And Fort Worth sent Dallas the rainmaker's bill. And Dallas returned it unpaid and asked Fort Worth to pay for the rain damage to Dallas trees.

Polly, Sandy, Debbie and Jeannie give a line or two, amazingly, to the fact that Fort Worth has museums not only superior to Dallas' art houses but perhaps, among the best in the world. There is the Kimball Museum of Art, one of the world's richest and, according to architects, the world's most beautiful museum.

Fort Worth also has several other museums, including the Amon Carter Museum of Western Art. Polly, Sandy, Debbie and Jeannie, in their thin line on this museum, boast only of its collection of Frederick Remington and Charles Russell paintings of cowboys, Indians and other John Wayne things.

They do not mention that the Remingtons and Russells owned by the Bass family, have been pulled from the Carter Museum and displayed in one of the downtown skyscrapers the Basses have been building.

THE LADIES ALSO NEGLECTED to mention that every Saturday there is an indoor rodeo in Fort Worth, on the North Side where no businessman had better venture without knowing that Bonnie and Clyde of yesteryear and fellows in boots nowadays do a powerful lot of shooting when the sun goes down and the liquor comes up.

And where, O' America, is mention of how a visiting businessman might ask for a ticket to see the Dallas Cowboys and yet survive? Where is there mention of the first movie and television production complex built outside of Hollywood in half a century?

Where are details of how to visit the street and slope where President John F. Kennedy was assassinated?

Come on, Betty Jean, Billy Bob, Joe Bob, Amon, Billie Belle, T.J. Where are you when a visiting businessman would like to be a survivor in Fort Worth and Dallas?

NCR: Cloisonne jewelry safe

AUSTIN (AP) — Cloisonne jewelry — deemed a possible health hazard by the Texas Department of Health — is not a significant health threat, according to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

A health department release on Wednesday said NRC tests showed the low-level radiation from uranium used to color the jewelry is within NRC limits.

David Lacker, chief of the health department's radiation control bureau, said, "Even though short-term exposure to the cloisonne jewelry does not pose a serious health hazard, we encourage people to minimize unnecessary radiation exposure."

The health department is testing cloisonne jewelry at its 10 regional offices and in Austin.

Compulsive runners may have anorexic's personality

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Men obsessed with long-distance running are usually thought of as dedicated athletes, but may suffer from the same personality disorder as women who starve themselves to be thin, a team of psychiatrists reported today.

Researchers have found many similarities between such runners and women with anorexia nervosa, a obsession to be thin to the point of barely eating.

"The two groups may represent a single mode of behavior," the doctors wrote in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

The researchers based their conclusions on interviews with 60 long-distance runners, some of whom push themselves to cover 100 miles or more a week.

These people, whom they called "obligatory runners," are different from men and women who exercise for health. For them, running is a mania. They run even in spite of injuries such as fractures, or illness such as heart disease, knowing exercise may be bad for them. If they miss their exercise, they worry about the deterioration of their bodies.

A woman with anorexia becomes dangerously thin as she compulsively diets in pursuit of physical beauty.

"She is the elite among dieters, often receiving compliments for her waspish waist and translucent skin," the doctors wrote. "External appearance becomes an all-consuming interest; dieting is her life."

No matter how much she loses, it is never enough, and "she may eventually die in the service of her impossible dream."

The comparison of runners and dieters was made by Drs. Alayne Yates, Kevin Leehey and Catherine M. Shisslak, all runners who are members of the psychiatry department at the University of Arizona Health Sciences Center in Tucson, Ariz.

The doctors found significant similarities between the two groups.

"The typical obligatory runner is a diet-conscious man, whereas the typical anorexic is an exercise-conscious woman," they wrote.

Both are hard-working, high achievers from affluent families, and both appear introverted and depressed on psychological exams.

Anorexics and obsessive runners both seem "to be compliant, self-effacing and uncomfortable with the direct expression of anger," according to the study.

The doctors said both kinds of behavior may result from similar identity crises.

Former 'King of the Private Eyes' still tough guy

By AL MARTINEZ
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Fred Otash was becoming impatient with the man. You could tell by the way he kept slipping the $3,000 pinkie ring on and off his finger and the way he would suddenly bring a big fist slamming down on his desk to emphasize a point that did not need emphasizing.

"Christ," he was saying to the guy, "a buffet's a buffet! You know what a buffet is? Turkey, ham, potato salad, roast beef! You want goose liver, you pay extra."

They were sitting in Otash's second-floor office in the elegant old Hollywood Palladium, which he has managed for the past five years.

Otash was being as polite as he could because the man was talking about renting the Palladium for a $30,000 party. Even so, there was no firm deal yet and Otash was clearly tired of discussing fruit cups and bread rolls.

"Look," he finally said, "you go down with Hank (an assistant) and look the place over then tell me what you want, okay?"

Otash was staring at the man out of hard, dark eyes emphasized by heavy brows. The ring slipped off and on his finger. Before the customer could answer, the telephone rang.

THE PALLADIUM MANAGER listened for a moment then said into the phone, his voice rising, "I'm telling you, the air conditioning was all the way up!" Pause. "How the hell do I know why it was hot in the balcony? Maybe your people were jumping up and down or smoking dope, for Christ's sake!"

He hung up angrily then turned back to his potential customer, still glaring.

"I'll go with Hank," the man said quickly, "and look things over."

When he was gone, Otash leaned back and put his feet on his desk.

"Sometimes," he said, not finishing the sentence, "sometimes..."

Being managing director of the Hollywood Palladium is not a bad job. It pays well, allows Otash to come and go pretty much as he pleases and keeps him in the mainstream of activity around Sunset and Vine. But it is hardly life in the fast lane, and Otash cannot get over that. Legend has its price.

For here was once the king of Hollywood private eyes, the free-wheeling, hard-drinking Mr. O, doing the night side of town in a chauffered Caddie full of adoring women, knocking down $150,000 a year when that fluttered on the edge of fortune.

For 20 years his clients were the reigning powers of the strange, funny kingdom they helped create: Errol Flynn, Frank Sinatra, Lana Turner, Howard Hughes, Edward G. Robinson, Marie McDonald, Bette Davis, Judy Garland . . .

"I'LL WORK FOR ANYONE but Communists," Otash used to say, "and I'll do anything short of murder."

Six-one and 190 pounds, he became his own legend, larger than life, the quintessential private eye of the '50s. Raymond Chandler could have created him. Handsome, tough, street-smart. A quart of scotch and four packs of cigarettes a day. Quick trips with "little sweeties" to far-away places. A panel truck jammed with electronic eavesdropping equipment so sophisticated the cops borrowed it.

Then suddenly, shockingly, it was over.

In 1960, Otash was convicted of doping a race horse. He never went to jail but the state lifted his license and the legend of Mr. O came to a quiet end. He closed shop and moved to New York.

"The rap was expunged from my record in '73 and I could've gotten the license back," Otash said, "but what the hell, it was gone, the whole thing was over." A wry smile. "Why beat a dead horse?"

At 61, Otash is still handsome, though 30 pounds overweight. There is gray at his temples and he has slowed down since the old days. High blood pressure and emphysema have put an end to high living.

He still dates the kind of women most men only fantasize about, taking them to private clubs like Pips and Touch, but he tries to keep it light and uncomplicated. Married to a starlet once, he does not want marriage again.

"I'm the kind of guy," he likes to say, "that doesn't have to go to bed on the first date. Just a good dinner will do it."

SOME OF THE OLD elements of his style remain. The pinky ring. A Cadillac. A half-million dollar house in the Hollywood Hills.

"But you know what the big difference is?" he asked, swinging his feet off the desk. He was wearing shiny black loafers with gold buckles. "I got nothing to prove anymore. That's the nice part about getting old."

Massachusetts-born, the sixth child of an impoverished Lebanese couple, Otash was thrown out of high school for fighting. He joined the Marine Corps when he was old enough and became an expert in hand-to-hand combat, a skill he carried through the bloody campaigns of the South Pacific during World War II.

Discharged in 1945, he came to Los Angeles and, with nothing better to do, signed up for the Police Department. It was during his 10 years as a cop — half of it working undercover — that the legend of Mr. O began to grow.

He was an outspoken hell-raiser who delighted in nettling the department's top brass by, among other outrages, being chauffered to work in a limousine owned by a girl friend.

Suspended once for gambling, Otash was warned to avoid associating with gangsters and prostitutes. "I'm a vice cop," he fumed. "Where the hell am I supposed to get my information, from priests and rabbis?"

JOURNALISTS LOVED the flambouyant private eye, and he has still got the clippings to prove it. They would write about how he used to stick two fingers up a hood's nose to get him to come along and how he prowled in drag trying to trap the old red light bandit, Caryl Chessman, who later died in San Quentin's gas chamber.

"I was an honest cop," Otash says, "but I was a young turk — 'to hell with the establishment!' — and (Chief) Bill Parker couldn't take that. I was getting more publicity than him."

He was put on what the men called the "merry-go-round." They transferred him every 30 days from one precinct to the other, until Otash got tired of the game and resigned. That is when he became a private eye.

It was not long before Mr. O was riding high again, this time without pressure from above to keep him subdued. He began working for attorneys like Jerry Geisler, Melvin Belli and F. Lee Bailey, dating starlets like Anita Ekberg (whom he later followed for another client) and hanging around with Sinatra and his celebrity "rat pack."

Confidential magazine, an often vicious gossip sheet, hired him as chief investigator to prove or disprove scandal on film stars it was targeting for sensational articles. In retrospect, Otash wishes he had never taken the job, but it added to his growing reputation as self-styled "King of the Snoops."

He delighted in the moments that added to the Otash legend, like bursting in on a naked Errol Flynn to serve a supboena or hiring a helicopter to drop down on a movie producer he had been tailing for a week.

MIKE WALLACE'S OLD INTERVIEW show had its highest ratings when Otash was a guest, and even then the private eye could not resist taking the upper hand. He dated Wallace's secretary, found out what questions Wallace was going to ask him the next day and, armed with that, easily defused the startled journalist's hard-driving interview style.

"There's a buzzing, what the hell's that buzzing?" he shouted suddenly to an electrician on the other side of the Palladium's huge auditorium.

"A neon light, that's all," the man shouted back.

"That's all, hell! Fix it!"

His manner is abrupt bordering on rage, but the mock fury fades like a summer storm and nothing seems to linger.

"Did I tell you about the one guy who took me good? He was a businessman, see, and he hires me to tap a competitor's phone, claiming the guy is stealing his secrets. So I tap the line, turn over the information and figure that's that. Later I see my ex-client and he says, 'Otash, you made me $14 million.' 'He was stealing that much?' I ask. 'He wasn't stealing at all,' the businessman says. 'I was stealing from him — thanks to your bug!'"

OTASH LAUGHED LOUDLY at the memory. The laugh, like the man, was aggressive, demanding. "You can't help liking a guy like that . . ."

Fred Otash, the legendary Mr. O, was once the king of private eyes, with Hollywood and other celebrities as clients. He is now the manager of the Hollywood Palladium, looking forward to dumping the past and getting away from what he calls a once-ugly way of life.

He stood, pacing. "Am I out of it? Naw. You're never out of it. I'm like a godfather, you know? Young private detectives come to me asking advice. Lawyers. They use me as a resource. That's why I get hung up on the past. I keep flashing back . . ."

But he could never return to what he was, Otash says. The juice is gone. "I used to be able to swim 10 miles, wrestle alligators and beat the crap out a men a lot tougher than me. No more. Now I just wanna wake up happy in the morning. Hell, I just wanna wake up!"

His house in the Hollywood Hills — the gold-plated fixtures, the pool, the memories — is up for sale. He has had a firm offer of $450,000, Otash says, and it is just a question of working out the details.

If it sells? Otash stopped dead still in the center of his office. "Whoosh," he said, gesturing with an arm that swept upward and away, "I'm gone."

He will retire, buy a car in Germany and follow the sun.

"Hey look, man, for 20 years I was involved in an ugly way of life! I have a lot of unpleasant memories to live with. It's time to get away!"

THE PHONE RANG. Otash settled behind his desk and picked up the receiver. It was a friend. "For Christ's sake," he said, throwing his feet up, "I've been trying to get you for a week and the damned phone's been busy! What're you running over there, a whore house?"

He swiveled his chair toward a window to watch the rain fall. For a moment, it seemed like yesterday.

"I was number one," Otash said. "I was the best."

He said it in a tone that was a wistful glance to the past.

Belize keys feature 'near perfection' for skin divers

By ALMA GUILLERMOPRIETO
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

The rich Canadian couple registering at the desk of Belize City's staunchly pukka sahib Fort George Hotel were perfect. From her blond hair pulled into a shining knot at the nape, to his long legs offset by khaki shorts, to their eight pieces of glove leather luggage, nothing was flawed. I was intrigued. Few people visit the steaming Caribbean-side city without an overriding need, and for good reason: a list of the ways in which the capital of the former British protectorate is awful would fill a small notebook. I was there to cover the final talks for Belize's independence from Great Britain, granted last year, but the beautiful man and woman in their fifties did not look like reporters.

"What are you doing here?" I asked. "We've come to dive at the keys," she answered. "Some people say it's the best diving in the world."

A week later they were back in the sweaty mud streets of Belize City. I came up as they were lowering their golden bodies into a chauffered car and asked them how the diving had gone. "You know, it's really a shame we went to the South Pacific first," he said. "If we hadn't, we would have thought this was perfection."

THE BELIZE KEYS are part of the second largest coral reef chain in the world, second only to the South Pacific's. From the air, flying in from Honduras, Mexico or Miami, they shimmer like chunks of mother-of-pearl. The gleaming waters are white around each island's edge, turquoise where the sand plunges into the ocean, and an iridescent biting green at the depths. I had flown over them many times and never felt the urge to visit before, convinced that such magic must surely dissipate at close hand.

The Vancouver couple changed my thinking. A friend and I inquired of the stern receptionist at the Fort George how to get to a key. She listed the multiple hotels of Key Ambergris and the sole hotel in Key Chapel. Maya Airways flew out to the keys daily, but, we explained, the $30 fare was beyond our means. She softened. "Go to Key Caulker. Get one of the market motorboats to take you out there."

The market sits on the edge of Belize City's largest canal and reeks of the sewage that floats in it. The canals are the city's garbage dump and sewer system, and from the oceanfront windows of the Fort George one can see the brown band of water licking the city's edges where the refuse spews into the ocean.

A dreadlocked Rastafarian sitting on the docks near the market bargained at length with us, finally settling on a price of $40 for the day trip out and back. We did not know we were paying for what felt like a gallop over the ocean on a wild careening horse. For endless minutes we held on desperately to a rope tied to the motorboat's prow as it slapped up and down over the rolling turquoise sea, catching our breath and rubbing our coccyges every time the ornery motor gasped and shuddered to a halt. My friend grew bright pink under the Caribbean sun. My mouth was dry. Our guide was steadfastly silent.

THE WAVES STOPPED as abruptly as a cliff's edge. For the next half hour we glided over smooth glassy waters, slipping between this and that tiny mangrove-covered islet. Key Caulker appeared on the horizon when the islands gave way to what is virtually a lagoon formed by the coral reefs. I kept dipping my hand into the ocean, trying to catch its emerald green shimmer in my palm, incredulous when I brought up only transparent sparkling water. The silent tranquility in the air was breathtaking. The guide, previously sullen, smiled and relaxed as he docked on the beach.

Key Caulker is a flat stretch of white sand inhabited by palm trees, Maya fishermen from the Yucatan who have come here to fish for lobster, and a small semi-permanent population of leftover hippies caught in a '60s time warp. Watching them and the fishermen ambulate between the palm-thatched houses and pensions and the nearest cold-beer-and-lobster bar I felt years of fatigue catching up with me, an overwhelming urge to be in the shade of a palm tree and think about nothing. My friend and I stumbled to two motorboats beached in a coconut grove, lay down in them and fell instantly asleep.

A BREEZE WOKE ME. I looked up and saw the blue sky, circling pelicans and kites, the rustling tops of the palm trees, and a wrinkled brown face a few feet above mine. "We are guarding your sleep," the small man draped across the bow of the boat said in Maya-accented Spanish. "Me and my little brother." His little brother — a large brown man in faded jeans and rubber-soled sandals — was similarly draped across my friend's berth. We surfaced to full wakefulness as the two chatted softly to each other about yesterday's catch of lobster and today's stalled motor, referring to everyone as this or that "little brother."

Lobster. The dancing red vision of it drove us to the shady slat-board bar recommended by the fishermen and kept us salivating through the eternity it took to get the only item on the menu: fried lobster sandwiches and french fries, preceded by several bottles of icy beer. The jukebox alternately played reggae and syrupy Mexican boleros, reflecting the mix in Belize's population: the black migrants from the Caribbean islands and the Maya peasants from the north. When the reggae played, the restaurant's owner bopped with his friends. When the boleros played, two Mexicans drinking beer in a corner looked mournful, then played the song again. The fragrance of seafood drifted in from the kitchen, followed at last by two heaped plates.

THE LOBSTER was delicious. The french fries were delicious. The beer was delicious. The second nap of the day, on hammocks swinging on the beach, was delicious. The endless swim in the smooth water was delicious. Life, suddenly, after months of tension and rush, was nothing but delight. For the rest of our far-too-short stay on the key we swam and sunned and strolled and loafed more easily than I can remember doing on any other beach.

Boutiques and cafe's and other places to be seen, to spend money and otherwise get distracted are non-existent in both Key Caulker and Key Chapel, where we later stopped briefly. There's not even the traditional magazine, aspirin and cigarette hotel stand where most of us waste an entire morning on the third or fourth day of a vacation in search of that consumer fix. When we left the key that afternoon for the Fort George, I promised myself I would return at least once in my life for a week at Key Caulker.

THERE ARE VACATIONS for the enterprising and vacations for the lazy. The coral reefs of Belize are places where you can dream and be slothful and dress for dinner in a T-shirt and shorts. If you must, there is always the diving, repeatedly reported as among the best in the Caribbean. If you can afford it, there are the hotels in Key Ambergris or San Pedro, which provide comfortable lodgings and an imitation of resort activity (dancing, pretentious cooking) for about $80 a night.

If you can't afford that, there is Key Caulker, with cots lined up in palm-thatched two story "hotels" (bring plenty of mosquito repellent), and fried lobster sandwiches with Tabasco sauce and cold beer for lunch. Bring along a friend. Do nothing. Observe your toes and trickle sand over them. Start a novel. Dance to the jukebox music in one of the two bars. Do not think about returning to your high-powered job on the fast track. Do not think.

Iron Market in Port-au-Prince, Haiti's capital and major city, is a mass of humanity, with natives selling and haggling for everything from mangoes to chickens.

Haiti ideal for travelers, not tourists

Editor's Note: This, the first of two articles on Haiti, introduces you to the people.

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

Haiti is not for tourists, Haiti is for travelers.

Tourists want high-rise hotels, steak and potatoes, neat and tidy streets, a price tag on everything and Americanized natives.

Travelers are content to stay in a beachfront bungalow or old colonial hotel, eat fritters malanga and apricot pie, mingle in the crowded and confused streets, haggle with a craftsman for his primitive painting and accept the natives as they are — people of a completely different culture.

Haiti, lying just south of Cuba and the Bahamas, is a land of contrasts. There are mountains and deserts, jungles and beaches. It is a mixture of French and African, native and foreign. It is a land of cockfights and voodoo, crude wooden huts and finely carved mahogany.

HAITI IS NOT for vacationers who want everything just like home when they are away from home. It is for the traveler who relishes new experiences, different cultures and fascinating people, and who isn't afraid of a few minor inconveniences.

A visit to Haiti is like watching a National Geographic special on television, except that the people and places are real. And that is one of the best parts of a visit to the country.

A drive through the countryside takes travelers past thatched huts, their wicker walls plastered with mud, a construction technique hundreds of years old. Native boys bounce atop burros laden with saddlebags filled with rice or corn.

Slender black women walk nonchalantly along the roadside, each with a huge basket of mangoes or a bunch of bananas balanced precariously on her head. Down by the stream other women wash laundry in the rushing water.

Stop by the roadside and a bevy of little boys may magically appear, offering to sell bananas, a chicken or anything else they have. "Money, money, money," they chant with a smile, as you drive away.

NOWHERE ELSE in Haiti is the stark reality of the country and its people brought home more vividly than in the Iron Market in the center of Port au Prince, the country's capital and main city. This huge metal structure brought here a century ago houses the largest native market in the country.

Many people are intimidated by the mass of humanity which crowds together and spills into the adjoining streets. There are always plenty of willing guides available to show you around.

"My name Joe. You need guide? I show you around."

It's a good idea to take him up on his offer. He keeps the other "guides," hawkers and beggars at bay and will even carry your packages for you.

"Joe take care of you. Don't forget, I Joe. You give Joe big tip, OK?"

The Iron Market is divided into two parts. The largest is strictly native. Huge wicker baskets, overflowing with rice, bread or oranges, lie next to collections of aluminum pans, Freshen-up toothpaste and cages of chickens. Everywhere is the din of haggling, as buyers and sellers loudly try to settle on prices. No one pays what is asked for anything.

"You want to buy machete? I get you one cheap."

THE OTHER SECTION contains native handicrafts; not the "Made in Taiwan" variety, but those carved by craftsmen right on the island. There are finely carved statues and highly polished wall plaques. Straw baskets, mats and hats that cost only a dollar or two.

Their primitive paintings, too, are something special. There are half a dozen art galleries around Port au Prince, housed in old mansions and stores, which specialize in the revered art form. Bright colors are a trademark of the art.

The wood carvings are, for the most part, excellent. An intricately carved native sculpture may take a peasant artist four days to complete.

For those willing to take Haiti on its own terms, the country can be a fascinating and totally different destination. — for travelers and tourists alike.

THAT'S LOVE!

In ancient Greece, women counted their age from the date on which they were married, not the day they were born. They were saying, in effect, that real life does not begin until marriage.

Although wedding anniversaries these days may not signify the beginning of life, they're still important romantic milestones.

It's a time when lovers remember each other with special gifts. Many may find the words of a lovely song on their lips as they shop for that special gift this holiday season. It's George Gershwin's "Embraceable You," the theme song that's synonymous with a favorite of romantics everywhere.

A love affair that might have changed the course of history...that's what happened in the winter of 1777-78 when the British could have attacked George Washington's depleted army at Valley Forge. The British commander, General William Howe, was distracted by his romance with a lady in Philadelphia and delayed his attack until too late.

Travel information for visiting Belize

By ALMA GUILLERMOPRIETO
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Belize, formerly known as British Honduras, was granted independence from the United Kingdom last year. The lush Caribbean country is the only part of Central America where English is one of the official language (along with Spanish). Roughly half the population is black, and speaks English or Garifona (a native creole). The other half speaks Spanish and is comprised of native Maya (there are pyramids to visit at Altun Xa) and recent migrants from the Mexican south. The land ranges from the idyllic keys to the central swamps and jungle to the spectacular Maya mountains in the south, where wild boar can be hunted and the quetzal bird is reportedly still found.

Visa: None required. Valid passport only, no tourist card.

Airlines: The Honduran national airline, TAN-Sahsa, offers daily flights from Miami departing at 2:10 p.m. and arriving at Belize International Airport at 3:10 p.m. Their three-day minimum, 30-day-maximum stay excursion fare is $210 round trip from Miami (plus $3 U.S. departure tax). Air Florida offers a round-trip excursion fare from Washington twice a week with the same restrictions for $591 (plus tax).

Hotels: Belize City has few charms to beguile the traveler, and the briefest of stays are generally the happiest. When you are there, head for the Fort George Hotel, a comfortable old place on the water's edge that feels and looks rather like a steamship. British officers from the local regiment stationed here to protect Belize against Guatemala's expansionist threats regularly gather in the wood-paneled bar to toss back gin and tonics. Prices are $99.50 a day for two, two meals and taxes included. Phone is 7242, telex 220Fortel.

Transport to the keys: Maya Airways flies to San Pedro on Key Ambergris every day at 7 a.m., 11 a.m., and 3 p.m. (Sundays two flights only). Round-trip fare is U.S. $30. Phone 3015.

Key Chapel: The comfortable Key Chapel Hotel is the only hotel, but the island has no phone.

Key Caulker: There are "hotels" which will put you in a large, clean, shared room for a few dollars a night — prices vary with the season — and homes which will arrange to let you have a room and meals. The only way to find out is by going there. Something can always be worked out. Take plenty of everything you think you'll need. There won't be any there.

Key Ambergris: San Pedro has many beachside hotels, several serviceable restaurants and one discotheque. Two of the better hotels are the Ambergris Lodge, which charges $80 for a double room with all meals and taxes included, and the Paradise House, whose rates are about the same. Phones are 2057 for the Ambergris, 2083 for the Paradise.

Travel on Orient Express is filled with history, tradition

By EVELYN KIERAN
Copley News Service

Sleep eluded. The steel wheels measured the steel track with the time-honored rhythms of a metronome. The bed was certainly comfortable enough — and the excellent dinner with pleasant companions had been topped off with some superb armagnac. Sleep should have come easily, deeply.

It did not.

Somehow there was just so much excitement in the air — such a sense of great adventure about to take place — nay, even now taking place, that sleep seemed merely a waste of time.

I slipped from the berth, reached for a robe and opened the door to the long passage. Where were we? Somewhere in the Balkans, those mysterious mountains which had almost spelled defeat for the original Orient Express, but where?

Suddenly, the train lurched, veered off to the left to a side track and shuddered to a halt, hissing, spitting steam and protesting in every joint, every coupling, every brake. Steam and fog eddied about, making it impossible to read the station signs. I stood at the window, trying desperately to give this place its name.

A BURLY WORKMAN with rich, full mustache, all huddled into scarves, sweaters and cap, strode across the tracks, swinging his lantern, muttering to himself. He looked up as he approached the now stationary car. His mouth fell open. His whole body registered surprise, shock. He raised the lantern to have a better look at the apparition which floated across his horizon.

I stood for a moment looking at him, then suddenly realized I was wearing a long white robe and must surely have seemed a ghost to the startled man!

I laughed, waved a hand, smiled to assure him I was real. Holding the lantern high, he recognized a fellow human being — a woman at that. A big grin broke across his well-lined face.

Gallantly, he pulled off his cap, made a sweeping bow, looked up twinkling and blew a kiss. Then turning, he walked back across the tracks to wherever he had come from, his lantern echoing halos in the misty night.

Bulgaria. Land of roses, of revolutions. Fought over, coveted by, tramped across by more armies, this vast mountainous reach between Europe and the Near East was the setting for more battles, the sight of more intrigue and treachery than almost any other single place on the continent.

And here we were, barreling through the Balkans in the dead of night, en route from Istanbul to Paris — first stop, Sofia. The air reeked, not just of roses, but of adventure, excitement, fun and laughter. Slowly, I turned back to bed and settled to sleep.

SOCIETY EXPEDITIONS, a relatively young Seattle firm under the direction of T.C. Swartz, organized these trips. They use the beautifully restored cars of the original Orient Express, travel the same route as the famed train from Paris to Istanbul and back.

But then they add such extraordinary treats as a personal concert by the Vienna Boys Choir, a ball at the Vienna Opera, dinner at a palace in Istanbul, a day's voyage on the Bosphorus, a picnic with some Hungarian Gypsies, a gondola ride in Venice, a steam train up the Jungfrau.

Every day some incredible new experience is added to the pages of the diary. And every day you can't believe they can top yesterday for fun and excitement. But they do.

You can board the train in either Paris or Istanbul for a 10-day trip, or you can book the entire circle. If you start in Paris, you'll headquarter for three nights at the Trianon Palace Hotel adjacent to the Petit Trianon of Marie Antoinette at Versailles and the park where she loved to play shepherdess.

It was fun to walk in the early morning mists, thinking of that long-ago court. Several of the group recalled the days when the hotel was headquarters for Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and his staff. What stories these rooms could tell!

THE DAYS IN PARIS include visits to Versailles, to Giverny, Monet's lovely garden home and a private dinner at the Chateau de Breteuil. All destined to put you in the mood for the opulence of the Orient Express, the "King of Trains, the Train of Kings."

And opulence is only a word to begin to describe the exquisite workmanship and the superb service in these cars. Built for the royal and the rich, for romance and retreat, the Orient Express in its heyday hosted kings and queens, emperors and merchants, spies, smugglers and star-crossed lovers in the 19th century.

It was the dream of a persistent Belgian, Georges Nagelmackers, who conceived a railroad that would span a continent for more than 1,500 miles, providing, for the first time since Roman days, a viable connecting link among the nations of Europe and to the Near East.

The trials, tribulations and adventures inherent on the establishment of that network are colorfully detailed in E.H. Cookridge's book, "Orient Express, The Life and Times of the World's Most Famous Train."

(The book, incidentally is on a list of recommended reading compiled by Society Expeditions for passengers. They also supply such niceties as a velour robe for walking to the showers, a tote and a garment bag for easy packing. In addition, each passenger receives a "black book" — a large, loose-leaf binder filled with advice and helpful information and giving detailed history and notes about each country and city visited — much in the manner of the white books prepared for diplomats. A most useful format for any trip!)

FROM PARIS, the train goes to Reims, for lunch at Mumm's and a tour of the champagne caves as well as the great cathedral. Then on through the night, across the Rhine, through Germany to Austria.

A morning walk in Salzburg sharpens the appetite for some strudel and coffee, then back on the train for yet another marvelous lunch.

(Places at table are rotated so you have an opportunity to meet and get to know your fellow travelers, a welcome change from the permanent seat assignments of cruise ships.)

It doesn't seem possible that anything could top the thrill of dinner and a traditional ball at the Pallavicini Palace in Vienna, but when a cadre of the Vienna Boys Choir appeared for a small personal concert, it was almost more than a romantic heart could handle.

The old city of Budapest next morning was echoing to Viennese waltzes as passengers walked around the ancient town which was once upon a time two cities — Buda and Pest.

But the highlight of the visit to Hungary was the mad "kidnapping" by Gypsies for an excursion into the countryside that afternoon.

During the night, another border to cross — this time into Romania, and later in the morning, a coach and walking trip to Dracula's birthplace and Bran Castle.

ON THROUGH THE NIGHT and the next day, through Bulgaria, the Orient Express rushes its passengers to Istanbul.

Three days in Istanbul was time out of a fairy tale, with headquarters at the magnificent Hilton, an old favorite. Tours of the city, the mosques, the markets, Topkapi; cruising on the Bosphorus; dinner at a sultan's hunting lodge, lunch at the great museum, honored guests of the curator; hours exploring the old town — one could spend weeks in Turkey without repeating a day's adventure.

From Istanbul we boarded the Express for Paris, with different stops on the way north. Edirne, the former imperial capital and its masterpiece of Ottoman art, the Selimye mosques; Sofia, with its shining yellow-brick road and great cathedrals; too briefly at Trieste, then Venice, everyone's favorite city for an exquisite dinner. At Interlaken, we were treated to a steam engine huff-and-puff trip up the Jungfrau and a carriage tour of the lovely city with its crystal air and poster-pretty streets.

The Orient Express affords a nostalgic trip into the luxurious past of European countries.

Cuna Indians' mola desired craft

By JANETTE MITCHELL
Copley News Service

The dugout canoe, chock full of brightly clad Cuna Indian women, nudges alongside the Great Rivers Explorer.

"Mola, mola, mola," the women cackle, waving their crafts above their heads, trying for a last-minute sale before the cruise ship pulls away from their San Blas Islands off the northeast shore of Panama.

Bartering cruise line passengers hang over the ship's rails to strike the deal they may have missed on the islands.

The women, with sharp marketplace skills, are peddling a craft that is a part of their wardrobe and a mark of their culture. Today the mola is gaining worldwide attention as a unique folk art.

To the Cuna woman, a mola is a blouse with a front and back inset of intricately hand-stitched panels of reverse applique. It's the centerpiece of her wardrobe, which also includes a print wraparound skirt, beaded wrist and ankle bands, many necklaces and a gold nose ring.

The mola — made by basting together several thicknesses of cotton fabric and cutting through layers to create multicolored designs that are neatly hand-stitched on the outside — has been growing in popularity as tourists take armloads of them home for wall hangings, pillows or to incorporate into their own wardrobes.

At the same time, the short, stocky Cuna women, generally thought of as warm and friendly, can get cold and shrill if they become unhappy with bartering. While they enjoy a lively exchange with tourists over the issue of price, in the end they will rarely accept less for their work than they think it's worth and will become insulted with too much haggling. They may tease, but the price doesn't usually come down.

Although only a few years ago molas could be bought for 50 or 75 cents, today they generally sell for $5 to $15. But prices can go much higher for the most intricate work or for certain kinds of panels that have become collectors' items.

Molas can be bought in just about any tourist-oriented shop on the mainland and frequently are already framed or stitched into elegant $100 dresses, purses or place mats. Shop prices generally are higher than on the islands, but "used" molas that have been worn by Cuna women and washed hundreds of times can still be picked up for practically nothing.

Buying a mola from Flory Saltzman in the gift shop at the El Panama Hilton in Panama City is almost as much of an education and introduction to the art as an island visit. For no extra charge, Saltzman, who's been dealing with the Cunas for 30 years, will talk for half-a-day to any customer, giving a history of the Cuna culture and a course in how to select a quality mola.

But actually going to the islands of the San Blas Archipelago to buy the panels puts you in a different world — a world where women dominate, even to the point of choosing their husbands.

The molas, some in geometric patterns and others decorated with animals or done in "copycat" themes, are strung out on clotheslines in front of thatched-roof huts. Proud Indian women loudly hawk their wares as island children are offered up as photo subjects — for 25 cents a shot.

While some believe the Cuna culture is being lost as contact with the outside world increases, many seek out molas that reflect that step into modern civilization.

The copycat molas — those with designs women copied from magazines, product labels and advertisements — are among the most sought-after by some collectors, including those featuring a likeness of U.S. President John Kennedy, variations on the RCA Victrola dog, space exploration themes and today's popular cartoon characters.

Winter perfect time for taking cruise to South Pacific

By PATRICIA GONZALES
Copley News Service

Now you can visit ALL the islands in French Polynesia while enjoying the comfort and convenience of your own stateroom.

UTA French Airlines and Exploration Cruise Lines have put together several new package tours: five-day, four-night or six-day, five-night cruises to every island in French Polynesia if you want to see everything on your first visit, or you can cruise awhile and stay over on a favorite island if you have been before.

In the winter months of November through April the cruise ship Majestic Tahiti Explorer sails the islands just as Capt. Cook did a hundred years ago. In the summer the ship becomes the Majestic Alaska Explorer and cruises the Alaskan coast.

With an 8-foot draft, the Explorer is able to navigate the reefs into the beautiful inlets and natural harbors of the islands. Because of the ship's unique ability to make a bow landing onshore, passengers are deposited easily on land.

The ship has 44 staterooms, a large, comfortable lounge with seating in the bow for a dolphin's view of the ocean as you cruise. The dining room is spacious and features large picture windows, and meals are served family style by a cheerful American crew. The ship is large enough to be exceptionally comfortable, yet small enough to create a cozy atmosphere.

The entire cruise is permeated with acareful pla constant festivity because of the consideration and careful planning by the captain and owners of the Majestic Explorer, who have gone out of their way to include the dignitaries and people of each island you visit.

The ship's hostess is beautiful Mahimitte, Miss Tahiti 1981, and she is the perfect liaison between native and visitor. (She speaks both French and English, as does the cruise director if you want to practice your French.) Because everyone is involved, you are a welcome guest on each island, not a tourist.

As you dock at each port of call, the entire population turns out to greet you with leis, music, dances and the friendliness that is the way of the Tahitians. Everyone is invited aboard to get acquainted and for a drink of rum punch.

And as you sail away from each island, you will be carrying some of the island's talented dancers and singers who will entertain during the evening cocktail party on the fantail. The melodious native music and the graceful beauty of the dancers weave a spell over everyone.

One thing I must warn you about: If you do not like flowers, please stay away. Everyone wears and gives the fragrant woven flower crowns and leis and everyone looks beautiful as they go native.

AT WORK

Job-burnout syndrome

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Burn-out. It might begin with a bad taste in your mouth, or a knot in your stomach, or that mysterious hesitation in your feet. Your body and soul are rebelling against the foreverness of Mondays through Fridays in that job which used to sustain you. Now it's all you can do just to go through the motions of being there. What happened? And what can you do about it?

As human beings who need to work we must first feel comfortable with a job and then expand what we do. Yet there are jobs — whole careers — where expansion doesn't fit the classification. The modern syndrome called "burn-out" hits us when we feel typecast, when our actions and routines are set in cement. And "us" includes anyone who gets caught in routine — accountants, hygenists, lawyers, clerks, nurses, maybe even you.

Take teachers, for example. For some, the repetition of prescribed lesson plans and unchanging class assignments is relentless. True, a teacher can try to make the move to administration, like the technician or scientist who finds that the real financial rewards and opportunities come in the switch to top management. But those administration positions, even if desirable, are limited in number. Another choice is leaving — somewhat or completely.

Let's take a case in point. Jane has been an elementary school teacher for 14 years. She has also started and runs the school's newspaper, bringing in the community, parents and business owners. She felt deadened in teaching and didn't want to switch to administration.

Shake free you must. But don't run to other professions to do it for you, because burn-out is different from the successful exemplary cycle of setting a goal, meeting it, and then moving on to the next. Burn-out is the refusal to think of the possibility of "next."

Jane, as she stands, with hat in desperate hand, is virtually unemployable. She needs renewal — a purpose to fire her up. Sometimes the way out is to look back. What she had originally loved was enticing her students to want something — to learn. She had started the school newspaper from an ever-present love of print.

She should think seriously of the idea of newspapers — children's or adult, editorial (the education or feature beat) or sales, starting anywhere in a great or lowly paper. And if nothing, absolutely nothing turns up, then Jane has a few more choices. She could take out her teacher's retirement fund and risk buying a little newspaper franchise, say the advertisement-backed television guides that supermarkets give out free. Two years of producing that and she'll have earned her right to enter any part of the publishing world.

Or she could freelance and try getting articles published while she continued teaching. Or she could try to land an editor's job with a trade magazine in any related area — education, toys, publishing.

The point is that change is the antidote to the poison of burn-out. Change is what keeps us alive!

FABRIC SECRETS

BETTY MARTIN

Hooks and eyes stand up to strain better than snap fasteners. However, because they are not flat, they must be set back far enough so that they will not show. First, sew the hook on to the inside of the overlapping portion of fabric. When looking at the garment's inside, the hook goes to the right. Place the hook so that its edge is 1/8 inch from the garment's edge. Using a blanket stitch around the hole, make a few stitches up each neck and anchor the hook's head with a few stitches at the neck. Press the opening closed and mark the place for the eye with a pin. Sew in place.

At LEGGETTS FABRICS, 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and No. 9 Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley in Midland, 683-3101 you will find just about everthing you need to complete your next sewing project.. from the pattern and materials to thread and notions. We have been in the fabric business for 11 years and enjoy an outstanding reputation among beginning sewers as well as professional seamstresses. Let us give you some of the personal service and attention we are know for "Quality, Your Only Real Bargain". Open

FABRIC TIP

Use snap fasteners to hold a garment opening together when there will not be much strain.

Singer Celia Cruz lights up stage performance

By ALMA GUILLERMOPRIETO
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

She shimmers onto the stage, every sequin sparkling, smile blazing, as the impatient audience cheers and surges toward her, chanting, "Celia Cruz!" "Celia!" "Celia!" "Celia Cruz!" This is it: ladies and gentlemen, damas y caballeros; the real thing, the queen of tropical music, la rumbera de America Latina has hit the stage. A thousand hands reach toward the tiny platform as if asking for a blessing.

An older woman with thick glasses and a kindly smile, looking worn and tired, makes her way across the hotel's long lobby. She walks painfully, on a pair of spindly high heels. The tight fuchsia dress she wears under a white mink jacket is too bright against her dulled skin, too glaring for a winter afternoon. Fatigue blurs her features.

"Chica, I sang in the La Romana Hotel last night until midnight, then we got up at 4 a.m. to drive to the airport. We got to Miami and the airline misplaced the suitcase with my stage shoes. We had to stop on the way in so I could buy a new pair. But they're too low ... look!" She pulls a pair of 4-inch silver spike heels out of a bag and shrugs, sighs and eases into a cushioned chair in the lobby with the exhaustion of someone used to very hard work.

This is Celia Cruz?

THIS IS CELIA CRUZ, the embodiment of what some call salsa, some call Latin music, and others call Afro-Antillean rhythm. Loosely, it is the blending of the Spanish colonizers' lyrical musical tradition with the rhythms, harmonies and chants of the African slaves who made the Caribbean prosper. From the sugar cane fields the music migrated with the workers to the cities, where it became funky, sly, orchestrated and eminently danceable. The lyrics are about sex, but just as frequently about the neighborhood ragpicker, a fellow musician's big mouth or the funeral of an old woman who asked "not for a wake but for a rumba."

For the last 30 years Cruz and her rich metallic voice have represented everything Latins prize in the great Afro-Caribbean musical tradition. Her career, which began in the late '40s on Cuban radio, has survived 20 years of exile in the United States. Her electrifying energy, intricate rhythms and sheer vocal generosity have sold dozens of "discos de oro."

Her appeal may not be universal, for in 20 years here she has yet to conquer a permanent Anglo audience, but beyond the United States she is revered from Africa to Finland. She has played the Olympia in Paris and toured South America more times than she cares to remember. Last fall, and not for the first time, Latins converged on Madison Square Garden by the tens of thousands to hear her sing.

IT IS 9: 30 P.M. at Madison Square Garden and Cruz is midway through a "tribute to Celia Cruz" that lets her offstage only long enough to change costumes. As she reappears, sheathed in a shiny red jumpsuit some might consider unflattering to her full figure, the audience renews its cheers. "Mamacita!" yells an adoring teen-ager. "Mami!" he shouts, Coke aloft, slapping his feet on the floor in delight. "Now you really are looking good!"

Her voice pours out over the strong rhythmic brass background of salsa orchestras like one more joyous metallic instrument. Her style has changed remarkably little over the years; it so thoroughly embodies a musical tradition that any evolution or development might strike her fans as a betrayal. Her singing is often humorous, never sentimental and rarely sad. "It doesn't sell," she explains, but it also doesn't suit her temperament.

Her authenticity has made her emotionally and professionally hardy. Whereas some female singers might croon a man's fantasy of what a woan shld sound like — Donna Summer and Olivia Newton-John come to mind — Celia Cruz, like Edith Piaf before her and Aretha Franklin after, sings like what a woman knows she feels like. That stomping, unrarefied womanly energy has propelled her career.

THE SAME UNMELODRAMATIC, unsentimental spirit that shapes her singing informs her view of the world. As an exile from Castro's Cuba, she has not, like other musical exiles, made anti-Castro politics a part of her presentations or of her interviews. She is bitter about the Cuban government's refusal to let her attend her father's funeral a few years ago, refers to herself as "homelandless," but otherwise has little time for nostalgia. Dignity is important. "I left Cuba permanently in 1961," she says, and quickly adds, "but I left because I wanted to, of my own free will. Nobody threw me out, do you understand?"

There is only one more thing she wants out of life, she says. "You know, for some reason I have never been able to appear on an English-speaking television station. At one Madison Square Garden concert they came and filmed the backup act. It's not that I'm ungrateful to the Latins, my audience, but American television is very important. I need that. It's my dream."

There was a time in her career when her audience wasn't so large, a decade-long slump that began when she immigrated to the United States. As Cruz explains it, most Cuban musicians remained behind, the record industry in the United States was not geared up for Latin music production, and those musicians from the Afro-Caribbean tradition who did go into exile floundered out of their element.

CRUZ, WHO BEGAN her career as a singer with the most popular band in Cuba, the Sonora Matancera, survived the dead calm by rowing hard. She toured Latin America constantly, and even as the rock explosion and the invasion of Latin airwaves by U.S.-recorded commercial music reduced her audience, she gave as many as six performances a day.

"In Mexico, we would do the first show at the Teatro Blanquita," recalls her husband and personal manager, Pedro Knight, tall and courtly as his name implies. "After the theater came an afternoon shopping center or a housing development promotion, one or two of them, then a talk show with a song or two, then the two evening shows at the Blanquita, and then a private party. It was deadly."

Cruz and Knight, a former trumpeter for the Sonora Matancera, followed their errant life from their marriage in 1962 on through the decade, oblivious to a sociopolitical phenomenon that was altering the profile of the United States; the massive migration to the Eastern Seaboard of people from the Caribbean nations, coupled with the explosion — both in Puerto Rico and within the Puerto Rican immigrant community in New York — of a fervent nationalist movement.

IS ANYBODY here not ready to dance? Is anybody here an Anglo?

The Dominican dishwashers and electricians, the Cuban shop owners and the Colombian dentists, the sociology students and bank tellers and maids are all here in their spangled glory, some in sequins from head to toe, others in let-down chinos and a polyester jacket. From the very first song, the dance floor has been crowded, and by now the air is thick with the vapor of perspiration. Each couple executes its steps carefully and joyously. Steps worked out over the years, each family with a dancing tradition, each son and daughter with a special twist or spin. Sex and flirtation and sheer joy of life arc from couple to couple as they work this dancing out, obliterating the cold Anglo winter outside, saying, "This is my chance to live, don't nobody take it away from me."

In the early '70s Latin culture was suddenly everywhere; in the makeup and fashions of New York City, where women walked into Henri Bendel wearing mock-Latin bright red lipstick and pencil-drawn curved eyebrows; in the explosive rage of the Young Lords and the Puerto Rican nationalist movements.

"Whites had rock, blacks had soul, and now we had salsa," impresario Ricardo Mercado recalls. "It was born in New York from Puerto Rican and Dominican roots. We took Cuban music and modernized it, made the arrangements hipper ... made the whole thing tastier." Taste, sabor, is what salsa is all about. What any rumbero displays.

FEW RUMBEROS have more salsa than Johnny Pacheco — a silver-haired, Dominican rumba band leader and flutist — who started recording with Cruz in the mid-'70s.

"Her career really turned around then," Mercado says. "Johnny had had this dream for a long time, of singing with her, and when her contract ran out with Chico records in 1975, Celia and Johnny recorded together. It was fantastic."

Madison Square Garden is full to the ceiling when Cruz makes her entrance in the white ruffled and red polka-dotted dress inherited by Cuban rumberas from the Spanish gypsies. She sings a perennial favorite — "El Yerberito" — taken from the traditional Cuban herbal medicine man's chant, perhaps unaware that the scent of marijuana — yerba — is uncoiling its languorous shadow, stretching its cat's claws into the dark void of the auditorium.

The audience has purchased small plastic roses that glow in the dark, thousands of them, waving them across the isles in time to Cruz's rhythms. By the last song, "Bemba Color'a," with Pacheco and salsa bandleader Willie Colo'n and the Sonora onstage, the lights are half on and the audience and Cruz, in full view of each other, are chanting back and forth, hitting the counterpoint refrain in unison. She makes the sign of the cross, throws a kiss to the audience and falls on her knees. "You are the joy of Celia," she says, and is gone.

THE MASSIVE TURNOUT at the Garden could prove to be a final hurrah for the salsa movement and Cruz's revival. At the end of a meal at the hotel restaurant, she acknowledges that radio play lists and record sales have plummeted. "There is a great deal of tape piracy and young people are all plugged in to their Atari games," she says. "Who knows what will happen? Perhaps I shall end up as an old lady living off Social Security. I've certainly paid enough. ...

"Chica, it's not that bad!" She grins from ear to ear, her eyes mischievous behind the thick lenses. "Even now ... tired, and my shoes flying off to somewhere, and knowing I'm going to trip in my dress because the new shoes are too low. ... I laugh, because it's all fun." She says good night, ever courteous, and heads toward her room for a pre-performance nap, walking as if her feet hurt.

Energy efficiency often causes health problems

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Very often, when we make an advance in a field of human endeavor, we pay a price for it in some other way. This seems to be especially true in the area of technology.

Take the matter of making a home airtight, which we all have done to some degree in the name of energy savings. No doubt about it. We save energy and money when we insulate and weatherstrip and caulk and do other things to keep air from passing through the structures in which we live. But what we also do is to trap large amounts of moisture inside, causing windows, walls, pipes toilet tanks and other cool objects to sweat. In some cases and locations, that condensation turns to frost and ice.

In the constant battle against in-the-house moisture, we sometimes lose sight of another harmful result of airtight houses — indoor air pollution. Energy-tight construction of new dwellings may trap chemical, biological and radiological contamination. Without adequate ventilation, harmful vapors, dust, gases and mold can be sealed in. One indicator of inadequate ventilation is, besides the moisture previously mentioned, lingering odors from cooking, cleaning and other processes. Other signs are health symptoms of the occupants, such as sneezing, coughing, itchy skin, burning eyes and ailments of the nose and throat.

Some advice on how to minimize the dangers comes from the American Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air Conditioning Engineers. Its members include consulting engineers, mechanical contractors, architects and employes of manufacturers, colleges, universities, research organizations and government agencies. Many states and cities incorporate the society's standards in their building codes.

In reply to a query, the society sent along the following information:

"Among the most dangerous indoor air pollutants are gases produced by improperly vented or maintained furnaces and space heaters. Combustion gases can kill. They are odorless and tasteless. Health symptoms which may indicate their presence include the rapid onset of sleepiness, tiredness or lack of energy. Should these symptoms appear, immediately open doors and windows and leave the building. To prevent trouble, keep some windows partially open to assure good ventilation around furnaces and heaters or provide an adequate source of outdoor air.

"Other indoor air pollutants are harmful if you are exposed to them over long periods of time. These include tobacco smoke and gases, such as formaldehyde, which may come out of construction materials. Dust, shower mold and mildew are examples of biological air contaminants which present health problems. Another source of indoor air pollution is the earth itself. Radon gas is one of several contaminants which may be present in the soil and may seep into buildings. It is a byproduct of natural radioactive decay which occurs constantly."

The American Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air Conditioning Engineers adds this caution to those who handle house cleaning:

"Adequate ventilation dilutes and disperses airborne indoor health hazards before harm is produced. Thorough house cleaning also helps. Be sure to remove all cleaning residues.

Steak with Wine Sauce especially for your Valentine

Hearty pioneer fare still enjoyed in New England

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

Of all the regions in America, New England, the smallest such area, probably boasts the widest variety of food.

For the most part it is hearty fare, dating back to the days when our forefathers worked long, hard hours, wresting a livelihood from the bleak, inhospitable soil.

They needed rib-sticking dishes to see them through the long, bitter New England winters when they spent hours tracking deer through the woods, splitting kindling or placing lobster pots in the icy waters along the coast.

New England cooks go in for hearty meat and fish stews and chowders, as well as the baked beans and boiled dinners for which the region has long been famous.

But, now that the cost of fish is rivaling that of meat even in the coastal areas, inhabitants of the region are falling back on other old favorites like corn chowder and parsnip stew.

When the weather turns warm, country dwellers go out into the fields and pick dandelions, marsh marigolds and other greens. Later in the year, they fill baskets with wild strawberries, raspberries and blueberries for pies, puddings and preserves.

To economize, New Englanders often substitute molasses for sugar and even salt pork for butter in making sauces.

Breakfast is a hearty meal in New England, with the accent on substantial dishes like this recipe for pork and apple pie.

6 large cooking apples, peeled, cored and thinly sliced
1/2 cup raisins
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1 cup soft maple sugar
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
Dash ground ginger
Pastry for 2-crust, 9-inch pie, unbaked
1/2 pound salt pork, diced

Mix apples, raisins and lemon juice with maple sugar and spices. Line 9-inch pie pan with pastry. Arrange apples over pastry and sprinkle with salt pork. Top with remaining pastry, seal edges and cut vents. Bake in preheated 450-degree oven for 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 325 degrees and bake for 1¼ hours longer. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Chili peppers long-time mainstay of Mexican cuisine

By SOLL SUSSMAN
AP Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Chili peppers, the palate-burning mainstay of Mexican cuisine for centuries, are the stuff legends are made of.

Mexicans put them in sauce, take them for hangovers, feed them to their pets and write songs about them. Young boys have been known to take eating a particularly hot type as a sign of manhood.

Eating chilies is serious business.

Any Mexican cook worth his salt can manipulate the bewildering variety of fresh and fried chilies available here as easily as an American takes to a pepper shaker.

"Each chili has its distinctive flavor," said Ramon Beltran, whose lifelong business has been grinding chili peppers.

Beltran can tell how to vary the spiciness of a dish by blending chilies with their different degrees of flavor, fire and aroma.

Chilies are increasingly available in the United States, particularly in the Southwest and in major cities, as the popularity of Mexican restaurants and Mexican cooking grows.

But it's a rare U.S. outlet that can offer the extensive selection available in Mexico, where more than 100 varieties grow.

At La Merced, a major downtown marketplace, fresh produce stands offer heaps of gleaming green chilies serranos, mid-sized and hot; yellow chilies gueros, long and mild; and big green chilies poblanos, used for stuffed peppers among other things.

Stalls for dried chilies line an entire wall, where stacks of black, brown and red pods reach the ceiling.

"We Mexicans are used to hot things," said vendor Isidoro Cervantes.

Supermarkets offer large sections of bottled chili sauces and canned and pickled chilies.

Cooking teacher Chepina Peralta says there's much more to Mexican cuisine than chilies, even though they are a very important ingredient from breakfast dishes to midnight snacks. "But there is a great number of Mexican dishes that don't use chili," she said.

Mrs. Peralta ranks Mexican cooking third in complexity in the world, behind Chinese and French. It is not the limited range of enchiladas, tamales and tacos that so many Mexican restaurants in the United States feature.

Chilies are native to Mexico and formed a part of the Mexican diet from before the time of the Spanish conquistadores in the 16th century.

Lime Chiffon Pie for lovely dessert

Lime Pie & Coffee
MARY R. GREENE'S LIME CHIFFON PIE

Our chief recipe tester has been making this delicious dessert since she was very young.

1 envelope unflavored gelatin
4 large eggs, separated
Grated lime rind to taste
1-3rd cup fresh lime juice
1 cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
Baked 9-inch pie shell
1 cup heavy cream

In a medium bowl, sprinkle gelatin evenly over ⅓ cup cold water to soften. In the top of a double boiler, beat egg yolks slightly; stir in lime rind, lime juice, 2 tablespoons warm water and ½ cup of the sugar. Cook over boiling water (that does not touch double-boiler top) until mixture thickens and coats a metal spoon; pour over gelatin mixture and stir until gelatin dissolves; chill, stirring often, until slightly thickened. Beat egg whites with salt until soft peaks form; gradually beat in remaining ½ cup sugar until stiff peaks form; fold into lime mixture. Turn into pie shell and chill to set. Before serving, beat cream (sweetening to taste and flavoring with vanilla) until stiff; spread over pie filling.

Design for Today

In spite of the fact that many furniture stores tend to group their woods and other similar finishes together, they need not be matched in your home. A look at a historic restoration will show that our ancestors added various woods and finishes to their rooms as time went by. It is quite unusual for anyone to buy all matching furniture at once. In fact, a mixture of woods and other finishes tends to enhance the interest and personality of a home. It is the subtle difference and/or contrasts that spark life into a room. A decorator or designer will often build on many ideas rather than applying a single idea uniformly throughout the home.

When decorating your home be sure to incorporate ideas and furnishings that blend with your way of life. Help in finding these items, coordinating furnishings and placing them in rooms are a part of our compete interior design service at BEVERLY HILLS INTERIORS INC., P3 Oakridge Square, 686-9607. AT WIT'S END

Using public property

By ERMA BOMBECK

When you think about it, the morality of the nation has really gone downhill during the last decade.

There isn't anything used by the public that isn't nailed to the ground or sunk in cement. That can mean one of two things: there are more sticky fingers around or sticky fingers are getting stronger.

It used to be just little things were secured, like pens in the bank or the post office that we all know were put there for show. You can't tell me anyone wants to steal a pen on a three-inch chain that didn't just run out of ink — it never had ink in it in the first place.

Now the items are bigger, but for whatever reason they still carry a warning.

Take picnic tables. Just try. They are set in two feet of cement, have never seen paint, weigh 3,000 pounds and are permanently stained with bird doo. On a nearby tree, some optimist has posted a warning, "PICNIC TABLES ARE PROVIDED FOR PUBLIC ENJOYMENT. THOSE STEALING A TABLE WILL FACE PROSECUTION." The prosecution comes right after the hernia repair. I'd rather steal two California redwoods and make my own.

Another source of amazement to me is what's made secure in a hotel room. The picture over the bed is always bolted to the wall. Why? We're not talking Sistine Chapel art here, we're talking about the same picture that has been over the bed of every room I have ever stayed in: a Chinese junk ship in shades of black silhouetted in a red and orange sunset that glows in the dark.

As for the hangers that are welded over the rod, you can have them. They're always made out of wood and accommodate a very large man's topcoat — never women's apparel.

The genuis who came up with the idea of putting a link chain on an L.A. phone book does not know travelers. I have never had a burning desire to stuff a five-pound L.A. phone book in my carry-on which already does not fit under my seat. No one ever figured out that if you live in L.A. you have your own phone book and if you don't, you don't know anyone in it anyway.

As for shopping carts with signs warning violators that theft will be punishable by fines and imprisonment, I won't even dignify it with a comment except to say that I was trying to get four independent wheels to go in the same direction one day in a parking lot and when a man asked, "Where are you taking that cart?" I said, "I'm stealing it." His laughter still rings in my ears.

Maybe things are worse than I realize. A sign on the inside of a Chicago restroom booth carried a warning, "DON'T PUT PURSE ON HOOK." For that cheap shot, someone should get life!

'Vive la difference' expressed by designers in Paris fashion shows

By CAROLYN LESH
AP Writer

PARIS (AP) — Paris high fashion designers had one collective theme in their collections for spring and summer: vive la difference.

Curves were revealed at every turn in the just concluded week of haute couture fashion shows that focused on the feminine form.

The deans of the Paris fashions trade accented shoulders, plunged necklines, tightened belts, rounded hips, bared the knee and spiked heels in their ritual act of outdating the clothes in women's closets.

But most styles were wearable and the overall reaction was enthusiastic. The loudest applause, especially by men in the audience, generally came for styles that exposed the most skin.

More than 2,000 new creations were trotted out by 23 high fashion houses dedicated to the belief that what was chic and comely last year is now dull and dowdy.

Disappearing from the fashion scene this season were those low-waisted flapper dresses and romantic full-skirted evening gowns that were kind to women with a few extra pounds to hide.

Haute couture styles are certainly not for everyone. Only about 3,000 women around the world regularly buy the custom-made Paris clothes that have price tags starting at about $1,500 for a casual outfit and climbing higher than $10,000 for an evening gown.

But the high fashion trends help influence the lines of lesser houses and thus the clothes most women can afford. Here are the major trends seen this time around.

HEMLINES

It was pick-your-own-hemline at most of the top houses. Lanvin featured the widest range from roomy layered skirts ending a few inches above the ankle to tight mini styles that climbed as high as mid-thigh. Many designers were fond of daytime styles right at the knee or an inch or two below it. But cocktail dresses almost universally liberated the kneecap.

SUITS

The most popular silhouette featured broad shoulders, wide lapels that sometimes almost reached to the sleeve, nipped-in waists and pencil-thin skirts often slit or left unbuttoned.

COCKTAIL DRESSES

The little black cocktail dress was the rule of thumb for the twilight hours, seen this season with lots of lace, big bows, ruffles, asymmetrical hems, revealing necklines and "v" backs cut down deep.

EVENING GOWNS

Slinky, sexy, glimmering Hollywood gowns and flamenco styles that accented the hip were a common theme with plenty of strapless or one-shouldered looks in brocade silks and lush satins.

SLACKS

These were a rarity, but when seen they were often wide-legged "sailor" styles that ended above the ankle. Yves Saint Laurent favored a narrower look that covered the ankle, but he showed fewer than 10 slacks in his 134-outfit show. Maverick Norwegian-designer Per Spook, however, hung about 35 percent of his collection on slacks.

SHOES

Three-inch spike heels were a favorite and Yves Saint Laurent made rhinestone ankle bracelets de rigeuer with his. Those pinky heels so popular in recent years seem to be on their way out.

COLORS

Designers went collectively overboard for that traditional Parisian spring color combination of black and white. Even the bride wore black and white at Lanvin. Some of the best black and white numbers were at Dior, where white crepe dresses were set off with op-art-like splashes of black. Other favorite combinations were navy-and-white, grey-and-white and red-and-black. Turquoise, pink, yellow and green were common in flowered prints.

The most talked about shows were those at Chanel, Christian Dior, and Yves Saint Laurent.

At Chanel, avant-garde designer Karl Lagerfeld made his debut as the stately house's chief consultant. The German-born Lagerfeld, who built his reputation at the ready-to-wear house of Chloe, gave an updated look to the mannish tailored suits made famous decades ago by the late Gabrielle "Coco" Chanel.

The braid trim, gold buttons, gold chains and two-tone shoes were still there. But Lagerfeld gave the suits a fresh look with wide white lapels, sporty walking pleats, soft sculptured shoulders and blouses with artistic designs.

At Dior, designer Marc Bohan celebrated his 25th anniversary with the house by bringing out a collection many critics called his best in years. Bohan on Thursday was presented the "Gold Thimble" award that is given out to the haute couture house judged to have the best collection by a jury of 21 fashion writers.

DEAR ABBY

Couple's plea for money strikes reader as funny

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am enclosing something that was enclosed in a wedding invitation we received:

"What to give, what to give????
"That is the question ...
"We have the answer
"To set your mind free ...
"For an envelope is enclosed
"For our money tree!"

Abby, do you think it's practical, or in terrible taste? We are interested in your reaction as well as that of your readers. — CURIOUS

DEAR CURIOUS:

A money tree is OK for the needy,
But for the greedy,
I think it's seedy.
Readers?

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I differ on what constitutes "an affair." She says, "'An affair' is when two persons have an intimate relationship in which sex is involved."

I disagree, saying, "As long as two people are corresponding with each other in an intimate manner, either by telephone or mail, they are in fact having 'an affair.'"

I do not think that sex has to be involved or that they have to see each other in person. Who is right? — V.

DEAR V.: According to my dictionary, an affair is "a romantic or passionate attachment typically of limited duration." There is no mention of sexual involvement, so you're right as far as the definition goes, but there's no telling to what extent an affair will go.

DEAR ABBY: Like everyone else who writes to you, I have a hang-up. I can't make myself go to funerals.

I'm a 44-year-old man, and this hang-up has been an embarrassment. The only funeral I've ever been to was my brother's. I was 7 at the time and I'll never forget it. My brother was 12. He was struck by a car while riding his bicycle and was killed instantly. The memories of that funeral — seeing my brother in the casket and all that screaming and moaning as they lowered the casket into the ground — are as vivid today as they were then.

I've tried to force myself to go to funerals since, but I can't make myself do it. I've been all dressed and practically out the door, but something stops me. I've tried therapy but it didn't work for me.

If there's anyone else out there with this hang-up, I'd like to know how he or she deals with it. — INCURABLE

DEAR INCURABLE: I'm sure you're not alone. However, if you really want to overcome your funeral phobia, give therapy another try. And if you're incurable, don't sweat it. The only funeral you really have to go to is your own.

DEAR ABBY: "Disillusioned" asked, "How long is always?" Your reply: "Just a little short of forever."

I must take issue with your answer. Always is twice. Once, it's, "You forgot to take out the garbage." Twice, it's, "You ALWAYS forget to take out the garbage." — THE DESERT PENGUIN

Purification of the Temple

Spain gave Grecian artistic happiness

Throughout his life, El Greco often produced varying compositions of the same theme. Painted between 1570 and 1576, "Purification of the Temple," the second rendering of the same theme, reflects the impact of El Greco's Roman stay, whereas his first clearly demonstrated the influence of Venetian art. Of note in the second working of this painting is the appearance in the painting's lower right-hand section of four quite realistic portraits of the artists authorities feel El Greco regarded as his source of inspiration: from the left, Titian, Michelangelo, Giulio Clovio and (possibly) Raphael.

As is true in all lives, El Greco's art was definitely influenced by his training and experiences throughout his life, whether in Crete or in Italy, but it was not until he settled in Toledo in 1577 that his singular genius florished.

In Spain El Greco's style underwent profound changes.

He found in Toledo a citizenry that shared a strong sense of civic identity. Although the capital had been moved by that time, the citizens there considered Toledo the only legitimate capital of the Spanish monarchy. Toledo's archbishop was the highest ranking ecclesiatic in Spain, the church's official spokesman who commanded vast financial resources. Toledo was considered the religious capital of a nation which was steeped in catholicism.

> In Toledo...El Greco abandoned the naturalistic character of Italian art, with its human solidity, in favor of a very personal and non-realistic manner (with) elongated figures, compressed spatial compositions and...very distinct dissonant colors and a dramatic light. The aim...was to make the themes...emotionally and aesthetically affecting.

EL GRECO'S career in Toledo coincided with the bitter religious strife that placed Europe in a turmoil in the late 16th century. His paintings cannot be separated from the Counter-Reformation, mother church's answer to the Reformation instigated by Martin Luther, John Calvin and other Protestant leaders. Today he is remembered as the artist whose works reflect the spiritual and intellectual climate of the Counter-Reformation.

It was in Toledo that El Greco abandoned the naturalistic character of Italian art, with its human solidity, in favor of a very personal and non-realistic manner. He elongated his figures, compressed his spatial compositions and began to use very distinct dissonant colors and a dramatic light. The aim of his art was to make the themes of Catholic art emotionally and aesthetically affecting.

Recently discovered fragmentary writings in El Greco's own handwriting reveal his adherence to manneristic tenets and explain many characteristics of his style from about 1587 onward.

His goal was perfect beauty. He strove for a certain ideal of beauty that sprang from the imagination rather than from an imitation of nature. He felt that the art which contains the greatest difficulty will be the most agreeable and therefore the most intellectual. He was striving, in the final analysis, for an intellectual art of the spirit.

Perhaps his life was best summed up by a friend of his, a poet, who said of El Greco: "Crete gave him his life and the painter's craft. Toledo, a better homeland, where through death he began to achieve eternal life."

Hotel for dogs is the cat's meow

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — The Count was getting restless.

He paced about his hotel room, glanced at the television set and peered out the door.

As room service arrived with his midday snack, he jumped up in excitement — and barked.

That sound is music to Gary Olson's ears, and the stuff of which his business is made.

"It's the old, 'We pamper the pets,'" said Olson, founder and owner of the Scottsdale Pet Hotel, where Count, a white Maltese with a blue bow in his hair, was lodging recently."We hope that when they go home, they will find it a little hard to leave here."

Just in case that departure is a bit traumatic, Olson has a Cadillac limousine service to whisk his clients to and from the hotel.

"We'll pick them up in style and take them home in style," said Olson, who doubles as chauffeur.

The limo service is just one of the parallels this Doggie Hilton has with other local resorts.

There also are individual, color-coordinated rooms.

There are 10-foot-long exercise areas for the aerobic-minded animal.

There is a mirror-lined grooming area that strongly resembles a well-known Italian restaurant down the street because of its border of white Roman pillars and plaster Roman statues.

There's a 12-item menu — "just like in a restaurant," Olson said with pride.

And then there's the canine creme-de-la-creme — the Imperial Suite — which for $11 a day offers all the comforts of home: a sofa, TV set, wall hangings, carpet and even a room-service bell.

Olson is serious about his business. He didn't land in Scottsdale by accident. Nor were the 1,800-square-foot hotel's accoutrements anything but deliberate.

"This has been a baby of mine for four or five years," said Olson, owner of two dogs that became flea-infested every time he dropped them off at a kennel.

He researched the pet-hotel idea during his travels for his former job with a business in California's Silicon Valley.

Middle-aged to elderly people are his target clients.

"Their kids have grown up, and now their dog becomes the object of their attention," he said.

That attention is reflected in the hotel.

The cats and dogs who stay at the hotel are lodged in individual cages that Olson calls "primaries."

"If you say 'cage' people conjure up the image of a medieval...cage," he said.

The "rooms" are outfitted with colorful floorboards and feature foam-mattress beds complete with form-fitted sheets.

"We pull these off and throw them in the wash and put new ones on, just like at home," Olson said, pointing out the colorful pattern on the sheets. "I added the colors, even though they (dogs) can't see colors. It gives a brighter appearance."

Adding to the hotel ambience is music, which is piped constantly through the hotel to keep the pets' stress levels low.

The hotel menu offers 12 selections. If the "Rin Tin Tin" — liver and beef — or "The TLC" — hamburger and dog chow — don't tickle the pooch's palate, Olson and Patricia Farrell, his groomer, will feed the dog whatever its owner prescribes.

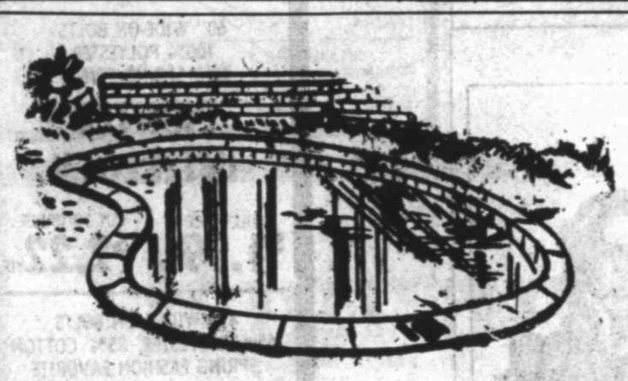

Although the hotel was designed primarily for dogs — there's enough room for 44 of them — it accepts cats as well.

"You'd be surprised how many people with birds want us to board birds," Olson said. "Maybe that's a service we'll add later."

Better to be safe than sorry

The Coast Guard, and common sense, requires every boat owner to carry fire extinguishers aboard his craft — with the number and size of extinguishers determined by the vessel's classification.

But Coast Guard requirements merely specify the minimum level of protection, Motor Boating & Sailing points out in the February issue in an article on choosing and using fire extinguishers. More often than not, the article stresses, most boats would be better off in an emergency with more extinguishers than required by law.

Sauces excellent way of perking up vegetables

By DIANE SAVAGE
Copley News Service

My non-vegetarian friends sometimes express wonder at my ability to get along without meat. I suppose they imagine my diet to consist of meager helpings of unleavened bread and raw celery.

Many vegetarians must explain to such friends that a diet without meat can be even more varied and interesting than one including meat. (And certainly more so than that all-too-often-encountered "meat-and-potatoes" regimen to which many Americans, to the detriment of their health, adhere.)

Vegetables are anything but boring fare — especially when served with one of the numerous sauces to which they are so well-suited. Raw celery might frighten off your typical "meat-and-potatoes" man, but offer him Asparagus with Sesame Seed Sauce and he'll soon see your point — that vegetables are delicious. The making of the sauce is described below. You will need 12 to 16 asparagus spears, which are cooked as follows:

Slice off the tough lower end of the asparagus and rinse well with water. Place spears flat in a large frying pan; sprinkle with salt and add enough water to cover bottom of pan to about one-quarter inch. Bring to a boil and cook, turning once, 5 to 10 minutes, or until asparagus is tender. Drain well and serve hot with sauce.

Avgolemono Sauce is an excellent accompaniment to a dish of hot broccoli, while Mushroom Sauce seems made to spoon over cooked zucchini. The No-Cook Cheese Sauce can be made in minutes and goes as well with scrambled eggs as it does with cooked vegetables. (Try some on a freshly baked potato too.)

Next time one of your carnivorous friends scoffs at your "dull" vegetarian diet, just take out your pots and pans and get saucy with him!

SESAME SEED SAUCE

1 tbsp. olive oil
2 tbsps. butter
2 tbsps. buttered, toasted bread crumbs
2 tsps. toasted sesame seeds
Juice of 1 lemon
Salt and pepper to taste

Heat the oil and butter in a small skillet. Add the bread crumbs and the seame seeds. Stir well and cook slowly 2 to 3 minutes. Add the lemon juice and seasonings, stir and pour over hot asparagus.

AVGOLEMONO SAUCE

2 tbsps. lemon juice
2 tbsps. flour
¼ tsp. salt
Dash white pepper
2 cups vegetable broth
2 egg yolks, well beaten

Mix the lemon juice, flour, salt, pepper and enough water to thin the mixture. Bring the broth to a boil and add to the lemon mixture. Bring to a boil again and cook, stirring, until slightly thickened. Stir the hot broth slowly into the egg yolks. Return to the heat and cook, stirring, over low heat until thickened. Pour over hot vegetables.

MUSHROOM SAUCE

4 tbsps. butter
¼ cup minced onion
½ lb. mushrooms, washed and sliced
2 tbsps. flour
1½ cups vegetable broth
¼ tsp. freshly ground black pepper
¼ tsp. crumbled leaf oregano

Melt the butter in a saucepan; saute the onion and mushrooms 5 minutes. Blend in the flour until browned. Add the broth, stirring constantly to the boiling point. Add the pepper; cook over low heat for 10 minutes. Makes about 2 cups.

NO-COOK CHEESE SAUCE

1 lb. Gruyere cheese, finely grated
2 tbsps. lemon juice
¾ cup sour cream
½ tsp. dill weed
Salt and pepper to taste

Mix cheese and sour cream together. Add lemon juice and seasonings and stir well. Pack in a tightly covered container and refrigerate until ready to use.

Army to require strength tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army says it is moving to bar most women from certain jobs by applying physical strength tests to all recruits.

"We discovered we needed to make a lot of changes," Lt. Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, the deputy Army chief of staff for personnel, said.

Field commanders have been complaining that women, and some men, are not strong enough for jobs they have been assigned, he explained.

"We aren't turning away from women," said Lawrence Korb, assistant secretary of defense for manpower.

Korb reiterated the basic results of the study — that the number of enlisted women in the Army will be limited to 70,000, or 10.5 percent of the total force, over the next five years. Currently, there is a cap of 65,000 women and the new total is far under the 100,000 enlisted women the Carter administration wanted.

The Army also will raise from 38 to 61 the number of its 350 jobs from which it will bar women. The changes come from the Army's policy of excluding women from combat and because the review of Army jobs has shown that some jobs previously held by women would expose them to combat.

One of the things the study found was that 64 percent of the jobs held by enlisted personnel required the occasional lifting of more than 100 pounds and the frequent lifting of more than 50 pounds, Thurman said. Of the women in the Army, 42 percent had jobs in that category.

Previously, Thurman and Korb said, the Army has tested for mental aptitude, but it had never made any overall effort to coordinate physical strength needs with soldiers' capabilities. All recruits will now be tested for physical strength, and soldiers must be able to lift 100 pounds or more to perform jobs ranging from truck driving to nuclear weapons assembly.

The study arose after field commanders complained that the large numbers of women entering the Army in the late 1970s hurt combat readiness. In 1973, there were only 12,000 Army women, but that figure rose steeply as the Pentagon discovered that more women were needed to meet quotas for the all-volunteer Army.

Insurance company's 'ideal weight' chart revised

By ANN HEROLD
Hearst Feature Service

Although Metropolitan Life's new "ideal weight" chart is about a month away from going public, it already has set off a round of scale-tilting among weight watchers, both amateur and professional.

This is the first time the chart has been revised since 1959, and as the only one of its kind, it's been the last word in weight for more than two decades. And, apparently, the revised "last word" is that the figures on the chart will go up - anywhere from 5 to 15 percent.

How is it that Americans today can weigh more than Americans of yesterday? And where is that extra weight going?

"I don't know," conceded Fred Seltzer, assistant actuary for Metropolitan Life. "Nutritional and public health standards have changed; lifestyles have changed. I do know that average weight has gone up."

The chart is based on mortality studies contributed by 25 insurance companies, and tracks policy-holders over a two-decade period. The tremendous expense and length of study — 20 years — has discouraged others from compiling a similar chart, says Seltzer, and it'll be the last time in this century that Metropolitan will issue its measurements.

THE CHART is divided into three categories — small, medium and large frame — and allows for indoor clothing and shoes. According to the 1959 chart, a woman 5 feet, 8 inches tall with a medium frame should weigh 128 to 143 pounds, but most in that category cringe when the scale crawls past 135. Model Cheryl Tiegs, who checks in at those measurements, reports her weight to be 124.

Physicians and researchers in health fields have expressed concern that not enough scientific data were considered, Seltzer reported. "A lot of people in the field would like us to have taken all kinds of measurements, such as skinfold and water displacement tests," he said, "but we're making do with what we have."

That may not be enough, say critics, who argue that the chart fails to take into consideration individual characteristics such as age, weight distribution and genetic background.

"Ridiculous," exclaimed Dr. Nathan Pritikin, whose Longevity Center in Santa Monica, Calif., treats heart patients with a no-salt, low-fat diet. "That chart is based on the wrong assumption that people 10 percent below average weight had higher death rates," he said, referring to figures released by the Framingham Heart Study, which tracked the health of residents of the Massachusetts town for 26 years. That conclusion was later retracted when it was determined that those who were underweight and died young were smokers, Pritikin reported.

NEVERTHELESS, the National Institutes of Health used the Framingham study to raise its average weight standards, and that's one of the reasons Metropolitan is comfortable with its plumper chart.

Dr. Virgil Jennings, director of the Institute of Research and Preventative Medicine in Fort Worth, Texas, doesn't think the new figures will be too high. "It's been proven that rats on starvation diets last longer than obese rats — there's less metabolic stress," he said. The new figures may be in keeping with an "image change toward a few extra pounds. There's a greater reserve of energy, as long as they don't get obese."

A specialist in the treating of weight problems, Jennings sees the chart as a means of estimating weight, but that "ideal weight is hard to pin down" and requires a look at the unique physiological characteristics of the individual.

Will the higher figures lead America to bacchanalian gorging, as its detractors fear?

"The majority will still have to reduce, but they may not have to reduce as much," Seltzer said. "Those who fall outside the limits of the chart may have to worry about their looks, but not about their ability to get insurance," said Seltzer, who claims that even the most obese can get life insurance, although they'll pay more.

Seltzer said that no occupational data were consulted in compiling the chart. "Our chart is based on longevity and weight; it has nothing to do with morbidity or job performance," he said.

Oil companies' water use could dry up Ogallala

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Seminole businessman Rex Dunn is fond of telling the following story about the oil industry's use of fresh water in secondary recovery operations.

Dunn says he was approached about 15 years ago by an oil company seeking a pipeline easement across some property he owns near Welch.

The ensuing negotiations bogged down when Dunn insisted the company agree in writing that the pipeline would never be used to carry fresh water for secondary recovery.

Toward suppertime, Dunn told the company representative: "What are you gonna do when you leave here, go down to the cafe and get a steak and baked potato?"

WHEN THE MAN said that's exactly what he had in mind, Dunn retorted: "Go ahead and order it. But when they bring it out, push it back and don't eat anything. Because, just remember, the potato didn't grow 'cause it didn't have fresh water. And the cow died 'cause she drank salt water."

"That's damn serious when you look at it that way," the man replied. "You're talkin' about my meal."

With that, he signed on the dotted line — marking, to Dunn's knowledge, the first time in state history that an oil company ever agreed to such a contract stipulation.

Just south of Dunn's agriculture research lab and cotton seed plant along U.S. Highway 180, some 13 miles west of Seminole, lies a Union-76 production field.

Concerned about company use of fresh water in a secondary recovery operation, a group of some 100 ranchers and farmers in the region banded together four years ago and formed the Southwest Soil and Water Protection Association, of which Dunn is the current president.

"I'M NOT against the oil companies," he said, noting financial interests in five or six wells and his participation in several drilling operations. "I need their fuel. But I also need water. If I don't get water, I won't need their fuel 'cause I won't be around. Nothing can live without water. We used to get it at 70 feet here 20 years ago. Now it's about 140 feet."

Through Austin attorney Rick Lowerre, the association last year asked the Texas Railroad Commission to deny Union Oil a permit to expand the recovery operation — which draws heavily on the underlying Ogallala Aquifer — and require instead that the company use brackish water.

The RRC declined to do so on grounds it lacks authority to control the extraction of fresh water, according to Lowerre, who then filed a lawsuit asking that the courts order the agency to comply with the association's request, or that Union-76 be required to justify its use of the aquifer because the company had not done so at the RRC hearing.

While no ruling has been made in the case yet, Texas' dwindling water supply is of such concern that a recent report to the 68th Legislature by the House Natural Resources Committee tweaks the nose of the state's most prominent industry by saying:

"MANY OIL companies have not been careful about protecting fresh water supplies."

Chaired by Midland Rep. Tom Craddick, the committee recommended, among other things, that:

"Legislation should be enacted prohibiting the use of fresh water for enhanced recovery purposes, unless the Railroad Commission determines that it is the only fluid practicably available for injection."

Lowerre, however, apparently feels that allowing the RRC to decide fresh water issues is roughly akin to putting the crow in charge of the corn.

In an address to the state's Sunset Commission last November, Lowerre said:

"The underlying problem with having pollution control authority (vested) in the Railroad Commission is that this authority creates a conflict with the major purposes of the commission — (which are) to promote oil, gas and coal development and to prevent the waste of these resources.

"WHEN A DECISION must be made between promoting mineral development or protecting water, there is neither the ability nor interest at the RRC to do a fair balancing of the state's needs. Oil, gas and coal always win out."

A subsequent Sunset Commission report to the legislature also urges that some control be applied to the use of fresh water in enhanced recovery operations, according to a commission spokesman, who said:

"We recommended that the RRC either approve or disapprove the types of fluids that can be used, based on whether or not other fluids are available. At this point, there apparently is no state agency exercising authority to tell oil operators they can't use fresh water for secondary recovery."

Lowerre would like to see that authority — coupled with additional revenue and manpower — granted instead to the Texas Department of Water Resources, " (because) the TDWR has the expertise and data on fresh and salt water resources in the state.

"Along with this authority, the TDWR should be directed to encourage programs for the piping and supplying of salt water to areas of the state where shortages (of brackish water) could result in the use of fresh water for injection."

While no formal bill to control water usage is known to be afoot in the 68th Legislature, State Sen. Bill Sims (D-San Angelo), who represents Midland, said he and Rep. Gerald Geistwiedt of Mason have been discussing one.

"YES, WE'RE talking about it," said Sims in commenting on the use of fresh water for secondary oil recovery. "We must use other drive forces where possible. While it's not our desire to place any undue burdens on the oil industry, we recognize that fresh water must be protected."

Midland Rep. Tom Craddick agrees: "With the water shortage, we certainly have to look at alternatives other than fresh water."

Sixty-six pumps like this one dot the Higginbotham Ranch near Seminole. The pumps are used to pull water from the underlying Ogallala Aquifer for use in secondary oil recovery operations. To date, Shell Oil Company has pumped 114 billion gallons of fresh water from the rapidly diminishing water table located in Gaines County.

Immediately northwest of Dunn's seed plant sits the sprawling Higginbotham Ranch.

Like the Union-76 production field, the ranch is perched atop the giant Ogallala Aquifer, from which the Shell Oil Co. has been drawing fresh water for the past 17 years.

During that time, according to Shell spokeswoman Mary Brown, the company has pumped 114 billion gallons of water from the aquifer for the secondary recovery needs of Shell and several other working-interest owners and operators in the Denver Unit of the Wasson production field in northern Gaines County.

That amount of water would supply Midland's present needs for the next 19 years, according city water department figures. It would also cover the entire 900-square-mile area of Midland County to a depth of seven inches.

SHELL CURRENTLY pumps from 66 wells on the ranch and estimates that a total of 526 million barrels of oil will have been gleaned from the Denver Unit by secondary recovery methods before the field goes into tertiary production, which employs the more expensive process of using CO-2 gas as the major "drive fluid."

All told — combining primary, secondary and tertiary production — Shell says the Wasson Field will yield 1.1 billion barrels of domestic crude before its oil-bearing formations are finally exhausted.

Statewide during 1981 — the latest year for which the RRC has statistics — the oil industry consumed about 25 billion gallons of fresh water for secondary recovery. By comparison, the Colorado River Municipal Water District in 1982 sold approximately 16 billion gallons of water to the 12 or so cities and towns it serves in the Midland area.

In a word, cost, according to Ms. Brown, is the main reason oil companies use fresh instead of brackish water to recover oil that otherwise would remain locked away forever.

Water well drillers like Neil Hickerson of Hickerson Drilling & Pump Inc. of Odessa say the cost of drilling a brackish well is many times that of drilling a fresh one.

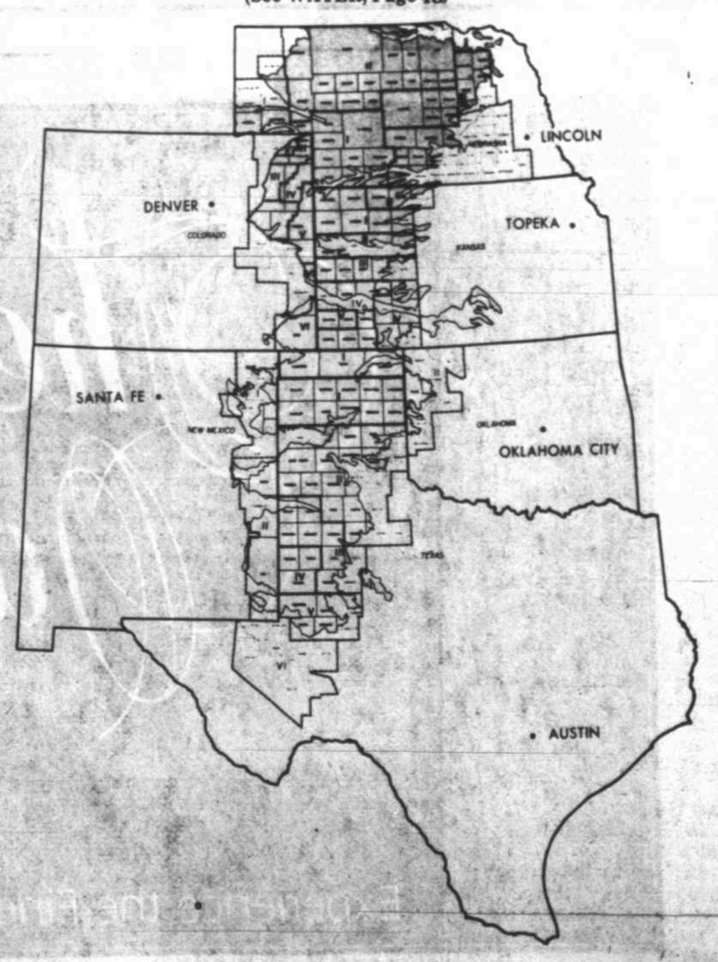

IN THE SEMINOLE area, for instance, Hickerson said fresh water generally lies about 200 feet below the surface and drilling a well to that depth costs about $6,000.

On the other hand, obtaining brackish water near Seminole requires that wells be sunk approximately 1,500 feet at a cost of $75,000 each.

Then, too, brackish water is more corrosive than fresh water and leads to higher maintenance costs. Also, according to RRC officials and petroleum engineers, including J.P. "Bill" Christensen of Alpine, brackish water sometimes can't be used because of the potential for adverse chemical reactions in certain types of oil-bearing formations.

Growing apprehension about rapidly dimminishing fresh water supplies in arrid West Texas has spurred state officials like former Gov. Bill Clements to conclude that "water (is) the most serious long-term problem facing Texas."

Leasing new office a complex game

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

"I called several developers. I think I was being screened," said Sue Johnston. Sue works as secretary, computer operator and accountant for her boss, who runs a Midland actuarial office for a Lubbock firm.

Sue and her boss use an office that is too big for the two of them. They considered moving, and Sue conducted the study.

She found many big, new buildings were full up, but some medium and smaller buildings are offering good rates and specials to lure small clients, especially.

Essential areas to consider in leasing an office, Johnston told The Reporter-Telegram, are threefold:

First, that every business has different space and "environment" needs. Clients will be treated differently: Bigger clients can make bigger demands.

Second, market conditions dictate the actual lease rates (many are discounted). Now, when 1.035 million square feet of office space is just finished, and much more space is scheduled to be completed, is an excellent time to look for new company quarters.

Third, keep in mind even the best discounts and free-rent offers available — and one can "shop" offices by price — will not help to lower the all-important second-year cost figures.

An office that is really too large or small, or eventually becomes too high-priced, will only be a temporary "bargain."

Johnston chronicled her trips though the mud and cement-mixers last week, noting that various proposals came in from leasing agents who found they could fit the 2-person office into their buildings.

Buildings Johnston inspected included four office spaces analyzed in the chart on this page:

511 W. Ohio; $15 a square foot covered electric, 1/2 of parking, janitorial, and building tax/insurance.

La Villita Plaza; $16.50 a square foot for two years' leasing, gives client four months free rent for the first year. Included are building tax/insurance, utility costs, cleaning service, and parking.

Mission Square; $14.88 per square foot, including cleanup, parking, electric.

The second year cost was significantly more than the first year at La Villita. Agent Helen Moise told The Reporter-Telegram four free rent months in a $16.50-per-square-foot lease range is an incentive.

"It helps a business get on its feet. It's something I learned to do in Austin and Houston."

Moving expenses were lower at the N. Big Spring office because furniture and equipment could be hand-carried a few feet to the nearby building. The design process would not be as important at La Villita or the N. Big Spring office. It might make a lot of difference, though, at 511 W. Ohio or Mission Square because they are new developments with much uncomplete square footage.

"Mainly in new buildings, you walk in on planks, get your feet covered with mud, and you look at a blank concrete floor to try to design your office," Ms Johnston said.

"You really have to know exactly what your needs are. It's similar to shopping for a house, because if you don't have a clear concept of what you want, they will sell you something you don't like at all," she said. "With no walls in there, it's really hard to get any idea.

"I learned that when a manager says 'We might be able to work something out' for a 500 square foot office, it usually means using movable partitions to divide our office (two people, one sofa, three desks, one computer, and one typing station) into its various parts," Johnston said. "It also sometimes meant subleasing space another company didn't need."

Johnston did get agents to draw rough plans for her, showing proposed office layouts, and she said leasing agents were on the whole cordial, cooperative, and very helpful.

"Joe Bill Pierce (Pierce and Pace) was especially good, running plans out here to us. And with all the agents, you get the feeling they really want very much for you to come and see what they have open," she said.

Two-year and three-year leases are the standard offering for small offices. In Dallas, a leasing agent said, a year's free rent may be the reward for signing a four year lease in that city's uncertain office-space market. Midland developers and agents cut special deals of their own when they want to — or need to.

The individual buildings will have lease rates anywhere from $12 a square foot in older structures to $17 a square foot and up, for premium office space — including custom carpet and wall vinyl and/or paint.

The market is soft now, so special deals cut for a few clients — even during their lease period — might be for free rent, lowered rent, a receptionist at a central desk (suite setups), and any other extras that can be dreamed up.

Larger clients than Johnston and her boss, of course, are in a better position for bargain-hunting.

"It's very competitive, and we'll do almost anything a client wants," said one leasing agent in an anticipatory tone.

What did Ms. Johnston and her boss decide? The study prompted negotiations with the current landlord on a new lease rate. They decided to stay put, in a bigger office than they now need.

Home office can be deduction

Seventh in a series of "tax tip" articles provided by the Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants.

Q. I am employed as an accountant by a retail store. In my spare time I sell a product which I store and sell at my home. I use my den for meeting customers and also for personal use. May I take a business deduction for the use of the selling activity? If so, how do I determine the amount of the deduction?

A. A taxpayer is not entitled to deduct any expenses attributable to the use of his home for business purposes unless that portion of the home (or separate structure) is used exclusively and on a regular basis (1) for any trade or business of the taxpayer or (2) as a place of business that is used by patients, clients or customers in meeting or dealing with the taxpayer in the normal course of business.

In the case in question, it appears that the den is not used exclusively for a trade or business of the taxpayer. While a taxpayer may have more than one trade or business, that portion of his residence must be used exclusively, on a regular basis, to qualify as a business deduction.

If the den does qualify as your principal place of business, you should see if you meet the other requirements. You do use your den to meet customers; however, you do not use it exclusively for that purpose.

An important exception to this exclusive rule is provided for a retail seller whose dwelling unit is the sole fixed location of his trade or business. In such case, the ordinary and necessary expenses allocable to space within the dwelling unit that is used as a storage unit for inventory are deductible provided that such space is used on a regular basis and is separately identifiable space suitable for storage.

Therefore, if you are in the retail sales business and store an inventory in an area used exclusively for that purpose you may qualify for a "home office deduction." In this situation the expenses would be based upon the expenses attributable to storing the inventory. For example, if the product required cooling and you stored it in a part of your air-conditioned house, you could take a deduction for your cooling bill. The deduction would be based upon the amount of space provided for inventory in relation to the total space of your home which is air-conditioned. However, if the inventory was stored in an area which was not air-conditioned, you would not be entitled to a deduction for the cooling bill.

For more information on this and other income tax questions, attend the "You and Your Income Tax" class sponsored by the Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants. The class, scheduled for Tuesday, February 8th, from 7:00 to 10:00 p.m. is presented as a public service.

Classes will be held at Midland College in the Allison Fine Arts Building. To register send $2.00 with your name and address to Taxpayer Education, P.O. Box 151, Midland, Texas 79702. Pre-registration is encouraged, but walk-in registration will be accepted.

Why OPEC continues to squabble over production

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

GENEVA, Switzerland — OPEC has been paralyzed by the oil glut, despite a seemingly simple remedy: pump less oil until the excess supply in pipelines and storage tanks goes away.

The 13 ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries know this would help them keep oil prices high. So they have met three times in the past six months, each time saying they would adopt a plan to limit each member's production. Each time they failed.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain why OPEC cannot agree on a solution to a problem that is costing it billions of dollars:

Q. Why does OPEC need to cut its oil production?

A. Because the excess supplies are forcing prices lower. Although OPEC sells about 35 percent of the non-communist world's oil, it does not have total control of prices. Big oil sellers such as Mexico and Great Britain set their prices independently.

Q. What good would it do, then, for OPEC to cut back its production?

A. The price that oil buyers are willing to pay goes up or down depending on how badly they need it and how hard it is to get it. If OPEC reduced the amount of oil available on the world market, the demand for oil eventually would catch up with the supply, and oil's value in the marketplace would rise.

Q. What's stopping them from doing that?

A. The very makeup of OPEC complicates any decision it must make. Each of the 13 members speaks publicly of its loyalty to OPEC, but when hard decisions must be made, many of the members act to protect their national interests rather than the interests of the group.

Q. Why is that?

A. In part it is because of the vast differences among the 13 members in political, economic and religious ideas. Two of OPEC's members — Iran and Iraq — have been at war for 2½ years. Because of the war's drain on Iran's finances, it has more than doubled its oil output and has violated OPEC's price rules by offering discounts in order to attract buyers.

Q. What about economic reasons? Don't they all have the same interests?

A. Only in the sense that they want to get as much revenue as possible. Some members, such as Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, have close ties to the Western industrial economy and do not want to do anything that would damage that economy. Others, Iran and Libya, for instance, are less concerned with Western interests.

Q. What does religion have to do with oil prices?

A. The governments of Saudi Arabia and Iran, for example, are influenced by vastly different factions of the Islamic faith. That makes them longstanding enemies and complicates OPEC's efforts to agree on anything. In recent months Iran and Saudi Arabia have been at loggerheads over the question of how much oil each should be allowed to produce. Iran, the second largest producer, wants to replace the Saudis as No. 1 in order to advance its Islamic fundamentalist influence in the Persian Gulf region.

Q. Doesn't OPEC have a common interest, though, in keeping prices high?

A. Yes. But with the market already overloaded with oil, the members do not agree at what price they will be able to sell their crude. The latest OPEC meeting that ended in failure fell apart mainly because of a dispute between Saudi Arabia and the African members. The Saudis want the Africans — Nigeria, Libya, Algeria and Gabon — to raise their prices in order to make Saudi oil more attractive. The Africans are resisting, saying they would lose so many customers their economy would suffer.

Making Midland A Better Hometown
SOME HOUSEHUNTING TIPS
A house is the most important purchase most families ever make. Yet, many people go househunting in a remarkably casual way-and sometimes end up making costly mistakes. Here are a few pointers:
Shop the market. Look at old houses and new ones in a wide range of prices-not just in the price you expect to spend. Background information will be valuable when you narrow your search.
Make sure you choose the best location your dollar can buy. This is most important when it comes time to resell. You can change a house but not a location.
Don't fall in love with one eye-catching feature and buy the wrong house. Bear in mind that these same alluring features can usually be added to another house at a very small cost.
By all means, avail yourself of the services of a Realtor. Househunting by searching out classified ads and for-sale signs is a waste of valuable time. This is just the tip of the iceberg. Your Realtor will have most of the listings in town at his or her fingertips.

WPT refund statute of limitations

By ED CUMMER

The recent decision by the United States District Court for the State of Wyoming declaring the windfall profit tax (WPT) unconstitutional (currently on appeal to the United States Supreme Court) has raised questions as to the appropriateness and timing of filing protective claims for refund of WPT paid during calendar year 1980 and later years.

There appears to be no direct authority to provide that a timely filed claim is not necessary to obtain a refund of a tax held to be unconstitutional. There are ambiguities in the law as to exactly when a protective claim must be filed. One statute provides that a claim for credit, or refund of an overpayment, of any tax in respect of which the taxpayer is required to file a return, is to be filed by the taxpayer within three years from the time the return was filed or two years from the time the tax was paid, whichever of such periods expires the later.

Under this provision, a taxpayer who has not previously reported his windfall profit tax liability on Form 720 may be required to file a claim within two years from the time the WPT was paid. WPT withheld by a purchaser for oil removed during 1980 is treated as having been paid on February 28, 1981.

Filing a protective refund claim before February 28, 1983 for WPT on oil removed during 1980 would be the most cautious approach, thereby avoiding the risk of ultimately losing the right to a WPT refund.

Such a claim can be filed with relative ease. A claim may be filed on form 843 or may be included with the filing of an amended income tax return. A completed Form 6249 with Form(s) 6248 should be included with the claim. The amount of the refund should coincide with the amount of WPT withheld or paid for the 1980 production, reduced by any claim for refund resulting from overpayments or applicaton of the net income limitation. The claim should be filed with the Internal Revenue Service Center where you file your income tax return.

Rig count lowers

The Permian Basin rig count fell again last week, hitting 272 rigs in the area. Reed Rock Bit Co. surveyed the Permian and found eight less rigs than last week, when the total was 280.

The rig count peaked at 360 in the last week of 1982, but has fallen steadily since. Exactly a month ago, the rig count had fallen to 336. A month later it's down by more than 50 rigs.

Total rigs drilling in the State of Texas last week were 853, including 59 offshore rigs, says the International Association of Drilling Contractors. This is down extremely from the year-ago figure of 1,326 rigs.

The international rig count by the IADC says the count is only one off from last year's total. In Decemberthere were 1,447 rotary rigs operating worldwide — one more rig than the year-earlier total of 1,446.

Water and oil don't mix

A brief look at the Ogallala Aquifer through the eyes of the High Plains Underground Water Conservation District of Lubbock shows why.

About the size of California, the Odallala is believed to be the largest fresh water aquifer by volume on earth. It stretches through portions of eight states: South Dakota, Wyoming, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas.

DESPITE ITS immensity, the aquifer is being drained to the point that a study put out by the Lubbock water district concluded that by the year 2000, the Texas Ogallala Formation "will have been reduced to about 198 million acre-feet."

(An acre-foot of water equals the amount of water it takes to immerse an acre of land one foot deep.)

The Texas formation originally had approxiamtely 500 acre-feet in storage, according to the study, which goes on to say:

"By 1974, the aquifer contained about 340 acre-feet. Four to six million acre-feet are being pumped out of the formation annually, and only about 185,000 acre-feet per year are being replaced by natural recharge."

Although High Plains agriculture consumes enormous amounts of that water — an estimated 95 percent, according to conservation district Assistant Manager Don Smith — critics of the oil industry's use of fresh water contend that a lot of what farmers take is returned to the eco-system largely cleansed by the natural processes of evaporation and percolation.

Water used for injection, however, becomes contaminated with hydrocarbons, chemicals and salt. The water can be reclaimed only after first drawing it from thousands of feet below the surface, then treating it at a cost that would likely put reclamation out of the question, according to Texas A&M engineering Professor Steve Esmond.

"It's a matter of economics," said Esmond. "How valuable is water compared to oil? Unless the price of water comes up to the price of oil, there'll be no incentive to conserve it."

Until that time — which may not be far off, considering that a gallon of bottled water already costs almost as much as a gallon of gasoline — voluntary conservation by industry, agriculture and private citizen alike could ward off the looming spectre of legislating what officials feel is really far more necessary than another law in Texas: an environmental ethic.

Boating industry comes about

From Hearst Feature Service

In this mixed economy of ours, things are looking a lot better, say the folks who finance the sale of yachts. Recovery, possibly mirroring activity on the stock market, seems to be on its way, and the boat-buyer at long last has a choice on what sort of money deal he wants to make.

"It's not going to be a quick bounce back, but we're seeing a reverse of the decline," Motor Boating & Sailing quotes David Drescher, assistant vice president of Horizon CreditCorp, in the February issue.

The sharp drop in interest rates is credited with the brighter picture. In December 1980, the prime rate hit a high of 21.5 percent. This past December, the rate was 12 percent.

Steps being taken to improve state treasury operations

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Treasurer Ann Richards has notified banks throughout Texas that she is "taking immediate steps to improve the operations of the Treasury Department," and will be appointing an "asset management advisory committee" to assist in future efforts.

The committee, she says, will be composed of representatives of the banking community, "as well as private and public sector institutions "to assist the Treasury to modernize its operations and to institute sound management practices and state of the art technology."

Among the changes Richards plans, according to a letter sent to the banks, is "phasing in the conversion and/or consolidation of our $5,000 demand accounts into time accounts.

"The Treasury practice of placing $5,000 demand accounts in many banks across the state generated quite a bit of discussion during the year-long State Treasurer's campaign," she notes.

Richards says some $7 million has been placed in those demand accounts, and she feels "the state must begin earning interest on these funds as soon as possible."

The Treasury also "will varify that depository banks are fully collateralized at 100 percent of market value ... The State Depository Board acted last December to reinforce this legal requirement."

Richards says her office will advise banks if they are over or under-collateralized "when State Treasury interest-bearing accounts ... come up for renewal."

She also says work has begun "on an asset management plan whereby state deposits will be paced with banks in a more systematic manner."

"It is in the best interest of the Treasury, as well as the banking community, to remove any suggestion of favoritism from his important sensitive process," she says.

The Texas Savings and Loan Department has opened an office in Dallas, to handle matters involving state-chartered savings and loan associations.

Approval for the office was given by the Savings and Loan Section of the State Finance Commission, which also approved a change in regulations to allow associations to invest up to 10 percent of their total assets in subsidiary corporations.

The current limit on such investments is five percent.

The section also approved proceeding with a recommendaton to the full Finance Commission for construction of an additional level at the Department of Banking's office to accomodate the Savings and Loan Department, which now is housed separately.

Rep. Ed Watson, D-Deer Park, has introduced legislation dealing with siting of hazardous waste facilities, which he describes as a matter "causing increased concern to Texas residents throughout the state."

HB 487 would require the Department of Water Resources and the Texas Department of Health, which currently share responsibility for regulating solid waste, including hazardous wastes, to:

—Make use of "technical expertise" of other State agencies, such as the State Soil and Water Conservation Board, in developing rules governing management of hazardous waste.

—Condition the issuance of a permit for a hazardous waste facility "on selection of a site where natural conditions minimize the risk of contamination of water supplies."

—Define characteristics which make an area unsuitable for such facilities (for example, areas subject to flooding, where acquifers are recharged, areas with permeable soils, etc.).

—Refuse permits to hazardous waste facilities proposed for location in areas "determined to be unsuitable."DWR recently held a hearing on proposed industrial solid waste rules which are being modified to conform to federal changes published last July.

Texas Chemical Council supported the rules — and indicated it prefers the state's existing requirement on use of packed clay to line sites to the "synethic membrane" requirements proposed by the U. S. Environmental Protection Agency.

In a report to the Water Development Board, DWR says Texas "is ahead of the other states in initiating clean-up actions" at abandoned hazardous waste sites, and because of its early start, received 100 percent Federal funding on the first three sites to be treated.

The state has several sites which may not be eligible for Federal assistance under the so-called "superfund," but several other sites that have been located are expected to receive federal funding, the report says.

EPA is in the process of allocating funds to states to conduct "in-depth assessments and inspection" of sites which may be elibible for Federal assistance for clean-up, and Texas is expected to receive $624,000 in funds, the report says.

Meeting the needs

Our hats are off to the board of directors of the Human Relations Council. Those directors exhibited true foresight in rejecting a resigning executive director's contention the agency had outlived its usefulness.

The resigning director's point was well taken in one respect: This country's mushrooming governmental bureaucracy has entirely too many agencies which are neither wanted nor needed. They constitute a drain on tax revenue and, for all practical purposes, only prolong employment for a contingent of bureaucrats who could be vastly more productive in other areas.

Taxpayers have a right to oppose such wasteful expenditures of public funds. But should an agency in such a situation be disbanded or its efforts redirected to other areas of need? Obviously in some instances the former course is far preferable. When no useful purpose can be found for an agency, it should be disbanded. That has been one of President Ronald Reagan's announced intentions on the federal level, however successful — or unsuccessful — he has been.

But HRC directors and some former and current members of the staff believe there still exists a need for a visible and active council. In fact some say — and we agree, wholeheartedly — that in a growing community like Midland in which ethnic populations are expanding, the need for an agency to smooth understanding among races and to offer assistance where needed will increase rather than diminish.

The trend in this nation toward leaner, more efficient, more cost-effective agencies increases the need for agencies like Midland's Human Relations Council because the cutbacks may permit some individuals to fall through "the safety net."

It will be the responsibility of the agency's newly appointed executive director, Gloria Ellis, and her staff to determine the current and future needs of Midland's special groups and to see those needs are met. We've seen in recent weeks that the support for the HRC remains alive and well in Midland and we're glad. There are still people here to help.

An allied face-off

That an American Marine officer had to draw a gun to prevent three Israeli tanks from entering the U.S. peacekeeping sector in Beirut is an unconscionable thing, an altogether avoidable confrontation between close allies.

One face-off between Israeli troops and the Marines could be dismissed as accidental. But, when Marine Capt. Charles B. Johnson courageously risked his life this week to prevent three Israeli tanks from entering the U.S. sector in Beirut, it was at least the sixth such episode.

Israel's lame explanation is that its troops have been pursuing Palestinian terrorists who escape behind American lines. Although attempts by Israelis to capture terrorists who attack them are understandable, American officials have no knowledge of terrorists taking refuge behind the Marines.

In any event, Israeli troops have no right to enter Marine-patrolled territory, under the agreement which brought peacekeeping U.S., French, and Italian troops to Lebanon.

The Israeli troop incursions at the Marine checkpoints must be blamed on irresponsible Israeli officers directly involved, or on the highest government officials in Jerusalem. One or the other.

Trumped-up explanations about indistinct U.S. lines won't wash. Such repeated Israeli provocations against friendly U.S. forces on peacekeeping station are inexcusable.

Inasmuch as Israel's intransigent policies are perceived by many in the United States to be an obstacle to Middle East peace, such arrogant behavior can only hurt Israel's cause throughout the world, and particularly in this country.

Instead of making unbelievable explanations, Israel's only answer should be an announcement that henceforth it will ensure absolutely that its troops stay clear of all peacekeeping forces, not Americans alone. Otherwise, it takes no prophet to predict gunfire, bloodshed, and a disaster between friends.

Another View:

A new way to tax

"Consumption tax" probably is not a familiar concept to most people. It may become one, however, as the federal government looks for ways to raise revenue without discouraging investment. Martin Feldstein, the chief White House economist, has been pushing the idea.

It is a fascinating notion that deserves a serious look. Whether it deserves adoption is a question that should be decided only after extensive study and debate. In its purest form, a consumption tax is a tax on all consumed income. Here is how it would work:

You would compute your adjusted gross income, just as you do now for income-tax purposes. Then you would ascertain your net savings and investment by (1) listing all additions made to savings and investments during the year and (2) subtracting all withdrawals. Net savings and investment would be tax free, but you would have to pay a graduated tax on the remainder of your income.

As a way of stimulating investment, and thrift, the consumption of tax would seem to be unbeatable. But there are serious questions that need to be explored. For example:

— How would the consumer economy be affected if taxpayers had an overwhelming incentive to invest their income rather than spend it? At the moment, the economy's prospect for recovery rests primarily on the hope that consumers will start spending more freely.

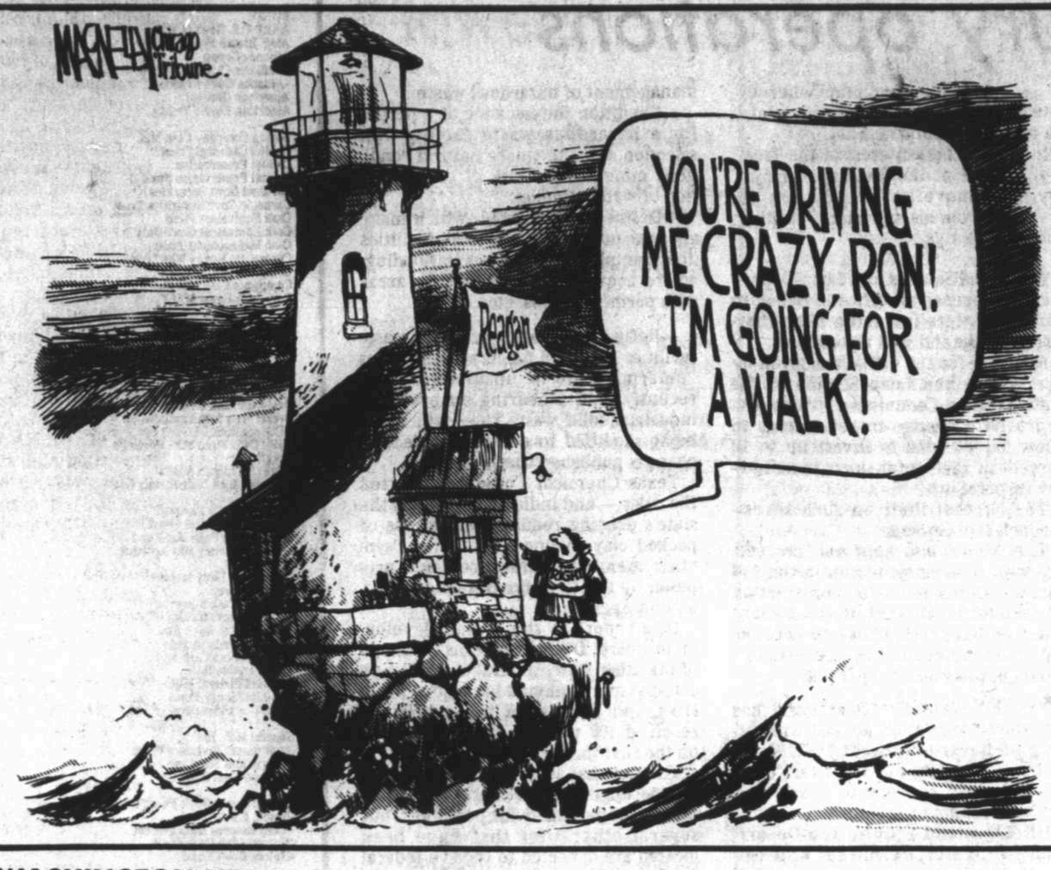

— What about federal revenues? Might they not fall precipitously — aggravating today's fearful deficit problem — if people took full advantage of the new incentive to save and invest? Presumably, some of the shortfall would be prevented by the cancellation of certain deductions that are inconsistent with a consumption tax. The present deduction for consumer interest is an obvious example.

— What sorts of investments would qualify for tax exemption? The government should not use the tax laws to encourage non-productive speculation in art objects, land or second homes, but it might be hard to write a consumption tax law that rewarded only the socially useful sorts of investment.

— Would the consumption tax be fair to people who have to spend all of their income, and perhaps some savings, for necessities? Obviously not, in its purest form. The inequity could be eased somewhat if everyone were permitted to exclude a certain amount of spending from taxation.

Within the constraints of fairness, we favor using the tax laws to stimulate investment in a productive economy. The consumption tax definitely holds some promise in that regard — if it is designed carefully and implemented in a timely way. Congress should start examining the merits of the case.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Pentagon lets manufacturers test weapons

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon's arsenals bulge with futuristic, billion-dollar weapons. Unlike the technological marvels in "Star Wars," though, many of the military's super-sophisticated weapons systems don't work the way they're supposed to. In fact, some experts doubt whether they'll work at all if they're ever used in actual combat.

Jack Anderson

The reason is simple but appalling: The weapons are never tested under realistic battlefield conditions.

Instead, Pentagon officials and defense contractors run perfunctory tests and assure Congress at appropriations hearings that the super-weapons are the best that money can buy. This is not surprising. The contractors make no money if the weapons aren't approved; and some military officers have their eyes on lucrative jobs in industry when they retire. They are inclined, therefore, to go easy on their potential future bosses.

So the weapons are tested in close cooperation with the manufacturers. This is a little like letting a high school senior, whose rich uncle has promised him a new car on graduation, score his own final exams.

Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., a former member of the Governmental Affairs Committee, has studied the way the Pentagon tests its fancy new weapons. He's understandably alarmed.

"I find generally an incestuous relationship when it comes to testing the weapons that our soldiers are supposed to use," Pryor told my associates Donald Goldberg and Indy Badhwar. "Generally, they're tested by the people who manufacture them. They're basically tested under non-battlefield conditions. And they're given every advantage in the testing procedure to make certain that they work, so the military can come back to Congress and seek the funding for them."

The senator continued: "Look at the M-1 tank. That's a perfect example. A tank that was scheduled to cost several hundred thousand dollars is now $2.8 million apiece. And as we've also seen, the testing procedure was faulty; the tank breaks down, and it is a tank that won't work properly under battlefield circumstances."

Pryor's criticism goes beyond specific examples. "The system itself is conducive to us supplying inferior military weapons and equipment to our fighting people," he said bluntly.

"The problem is that the Pentagon today is accepting what the contractors tell them," said Pryor. "As a result, we end each session of Congress by appropriating billions and billions of dollars to try to solve defense problems or weaknesses, when in fact we're not solving them. We're creating additional problems. We're weakening our ordinary (forces), our standby forces, our standby reserves and the basic necessities for our military in the field today."

Military insiders say the decision to go ahead with a particular weapon is often made before all the tests are completed and will be unaffected by test failures. For example, a Rand Corporation review of weapons purchased during the 1970s showed that they were approved even though they achieved only 20 to 75 percent of their performance goals.

A recent report by the conservative Heritage Foundation recommends major changes in the Pentagon's testing process. "Test conditions too often are unrealistic and benign," the foundation study concluded. "The result is a failure to learn actual performance levels until the equipment reaches the troops or, worse, until the troops go into combat."

The Heritage Foundation report cites the Navy's Aegis air-defense system, which costs $1.3 billion each. Intended to handle large-scale attacks by many incoming missiles, Aegis has been subjected to such conditions only in computer simulations. In actual field tests, only two simultaneous missile attacks have been attempted against Aegis, which, as the report observes, "represent a relatively low-threat environment."

Another example is the Army's Divad anti-aircraft missile launcher. Rather than risk flunking its tests, Divad's performance requirements were simply lowered. It is now considered successful if it can knock down a helicopter hovering well above the treetops, instead of low-flying attack aircraft maneuvering among tree cover.

Perhaps the most flagrant example of impractical testing involved the Air Force's Maverick anti-tank missile. Pilots who tested the missile were thoroughly briefed on the terrain and even given the exact location of the targets — an advantage they would be unlikely to have in actual combat.

"The evidence is lacking that the Maverick can be used effectively by U.S. military personnel in combat," a General Accounting Office report stated flatly. The GAO added: "The Maverick had limited success when operating under relatively benign test conditions. On the other hand, we find that it is not known whether the Maverick can work well under less-than-favorable test conditions, as may happen in combat."

GEORGE F. WILL

Cranston's tirade rivaled Joe McCarthy

WASHINGTON — Sen. Alan Cranston (D-Calif.), a presidential candidate, came to the confirmation hearings for Dr. Kenneth Adelman, the president's nominee as director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, announcing that he would not give Adelman a hearing. Patting himself on the back for being "frank," Cranston proclaimed that nothing Adelman could say "would convince me to support his nomination." Then, saying "the issue before us is too serious for any partisan posturing," Cranston put on a cynical performance more recklessly dishonest than anything the Senate has seen since Joe McCarthy.

George F. Will

Cranston charged that Adelman believes "it would be helpful to the United States...if South Africa were to use nuclear weapons against their own blacks or against neighboring blacks."

Cranston's smear is even sleazier when given in full: "You seem to suggest that it would be helpful to the United States, at least this is inferred from what you have written, if South Africa were to use nuclear weapons against their own blacks or against neighboring blacks." "Seems"? "Suggest"? "This is inferred" by whom? Cranston? Nonsense: His aggressive misreading of Adelman's writing was willful, not just an ignorant "inference."

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, looking decorously down into the gutter, told Cranston that his charge was "rather sensational." That was a rather mild rebuke.

Adelman, whose early career was in the poverty program, has lived and worked in black Africa, and currently handles African affairs for the U.S. mission to the United Nations. Cranston was misrepresenting an Adelman study published in June, 1981, by the Stanford Research Institute and titled "Impact Upon U.S. Security of a South African Nuclear Weapons Capability."

Commissioned by the U.S. Government, the study had two purposes: to assess whether South Africa's acquisition of nuclear weapons would be good or bad for the United States, and to speculate about how conditions would change if South Africa did acquire them. Adelman concluded, emphatically, that South Africa's acquisition of such weapons would be adverse to U.S. interests, and that U.S. policy should energetically resist such proliferation.

But, pursuant to his assignment, Adelman considered what conditions would be if South Africa got such weapons. He said South Africa could conceivably be helpful if its nuclear capability were put to anti-submarine uses, protecting the Cape route from Soviet control during a moment of global tension. Adelman also noted that a South African nuclear capability — which, remember, he passionately opposes — could, as a matter of plain fact, be regarded by South Africa as "a deterrent capability with respect to threats it perceives looming from ground assaults in the region."

So: Adelman says that if the disaster of proliferation occurs in South Africa, there could conceivably be one helpful aspect — if South Africa used its capability for anti-submarine purposes. But, Adelman says, South Africa could regard the capability as a deterrent for other purposes. And that is why, Cranston says Adelman believes it would be helpful if South Africa would use nuclear weapons against blacks.

Adelman responded with more courtesy than Cranston deserved and more clarity than Cranston desired. He was rewarded by Cranston's slinging another handful of slime, ascribing to Adelman the view that South African nuclear weapons would be "this nice capability."

Extremists often lose all sense of how they sound to moderate persons. Cranston recently quoted, as proof of Soviet longing for peace, a particularly vapid exchange he had with Marshall Ogarkov, Soviet chief of staff. Ogarkov and Cranston agreed that the current arms race is America's fault. Cranston says we have never made — never — an arms control effort that is sufficiently creative, constructive, determined and — note this — "fair" to the Soviet Union. In the same speech Cranston called $1.6 trillion (the president's defense request for five years) "an incomprehensible figure." Perhaps he can comprehend it if he thinks of it as 40 percent less — $1.1 trillion less — than projected domestic spending (not counting interest payments) over the next five years.

In 1972, when the Senate was debating ratifying language for SALT I, Cranston proposed a puzzling amendment. He wanted to add the words "under present world conditions" after the word "maintenance" in the section that said Congress favors "the maintenance of research and development and modernization programs." When he actually called up the amendment (Sept. 14, 1972) with a cosponsor who did not speak about it, Cranston said it was to indicate hope that we will not always live in an "anarchic and brutal world." The Senate accepted the amendment.

But when he first mentioned the amendment, a mystified fellow senator sent a staff member to ask what it meant. That person vividly remembers Cranston saying: I am a World Federalist and we look forward to the disappearance of sovereign states.

Cranston says Adelman flunks his, Cranston's, test of sophistication. I should hope so.

ART BUCHWALD

Book's good, but wait for movie!

The most important book published in Washington this year is titled, "The Budget of the United States Government Fiscal Year 1984."

Art Buchwald

I haven't had time to read it myself, though I've browsed through it to see if my name was mentioned. But I asked a friend who reviews fiction and nonfiction for The Washington Post what he thought of it.

"It's the best book I've read this year," he said. "Frankly, I think it's going to be another 'Winds of War.'"

"That good, huh?"

"I couldn't put it down. I kept turning the pages to see what government program would be cut next. It's more frightening than 'Rosemary's Baby.'"

"You mean it's a thriller?"

"More of a whodunnit. Or, specifically, who's doing it to whom. It's about money and power, the struggle for survival, death and taxes and man's fate in a world he never made."

"Any sex?"

"The military chapters are very sexy, particularly the love scenes between the president of the United States and the new weapons that the Pentagon has seduced him into buying."

"You mean the president of the United States is in bed with the military-industrial complex?"

"All through the book. Some of the scenes between them are so hot, that Tip O'Neill has threatened to ban the book in Boston."

"Does the president's wife know he's in love with the new weapons?"

"Everybody knows. But the president says he has to do it in the name of national security."

"Is that the main plot?"

"No, it's just one of the subplots. The main plot is about a rich uncle, who has lost so much of his money that he is down and out and in debt up to his ears."

"How did he fall on such bad times?"

"He was caught up in a recession and couldn't pay his bills. Finally he got so sick that the president's doctors had to operate to save his life. They cut everything down to the bone, and froze everything they couldn't cut."

"Does he live?"

"In the book he does. The president's doctors maintain they just removed the fat, and although the patient will have to suffer pain, it's the only way he can get well. The White House doctors admit the medicine they've prescribed is a bitter pill to swallow, but the uncle is now on the mend."

"That makes sense to me."

"The only problem is that Democratic doctors who have read the book claim the president's surgeons have cut out the uncle's vital organs to save his life. In its present form they find the plot not very believable, and they're calling for changes in the next edition before they buy it."

"Everybody's a critic. What book would you compare this work with?"

"The first one that comes to mind is 'The Grapes of Wrath,' though of course it's not written as well. The poor, the sick and the old ones are the ones who get hurt the most."

"It sounds depressing. I'm not sure I want to read it."

"You have to because that's all people will be talking about this spring."

"Well tell me this. Does it have an upbeat ending?"

"All budget books written by a president have an upbeat ending. This one predicts in 1986 the uncle will be fully recovered and regain his fortune again. And everyone will live happily ever after."

"Will it make a good movie?"

"It's been optioned by all three TV networks. They don't know yet if they'll make it into a soap opera, a docudrama or a situation comedy."

"If the book is as good as you say it is, I hope they don't ruin it when it comes to the screen."

"The networks usually do."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Feb. 6, the 37th day of 1983. There are 328 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 6, 1952, Britain's King George VI died and was succeeded by his daughter, Elizabeth.

On this date:

In 1778, France recognized the independence of the United States.

In 1788, Massachusetts became the sixth state to ratify the U.S. Constitution.

In 1943, U.S. Gen. Dwight Eisenhower was named Commander-In-Chief of Allied Forces in North Africa during World War II.

In 1964, Cuba cut off the normal water supply to the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay.

Ten years ago: The United States and North Vietnam announced that a post-war Paris conference would begin Feb. 26 to monitor the cease-fire ending the Vietnam War.

Andropov's 'nyet' puts Soviets on defensive

By WILLIAM RANDOPLH HEARST, JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — The U.S.-Soviet debate to influence minds and actions of multi-millions has spread worldwide today and promises to become sharper in the days ahead. President Reagan proposed a meeting with Russian leader Yuri V. Andropov to ban intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Western Europe. The Soviet leader rejected it outright.

Hearst

His "nyet," only hours after it was announced by Vice President George Bush in Berlin, doesn't close the dialogue or negotiations. It places, I believe, the U.S.S.R. on the defensive in their expensive and carefully-mounted propaganda campaign to prove they are the only peace-lovers and we, the warmongers. It was a sound and sensible offer by our president as negotiations for reduction of nuclear weapons resumed in Geneva.

Sure, President Reagan wasn't about to unravel our negotiating position in advance. He wants to do it, if possible, on the highest level in a jaw-to-jaw encounter with Party Secretary Andropov who ascended to power after years of running the dreaded KGB. This kind of summit meeting must be well prepared by specialists on both sides if it is to have a chance of success. And as President Reagan emphasized in his State of the Union address, any agreement must be verifiable.

That's a real sticking point for the Soviets and their closed society. They persistently spurned American offers, based on verification, from the days of Bernard Baruch in 1946 to Presidents Eisenhower and Kennedy. We simply cannot trust them to police themselves.

It always has baffled me that the media in our country largely professes to see a case for Russian reluctance in life-and-death nuclear matters. While we fell steadily behind in building nuclear arms as early as 15 years ago, and still try to play a form of catch-up, the adminisration is belabored for spending too much on these weapons. But when Soviet Foreign Commissar Andrei Gromyko openly intervenes in the West German elections as he did recently and then threatened Japan with nuclear arms before the arrival of Secretary of State Shultz, the U.S. media ignored him.

I might remind you that the residents of the Kremlin don't for a moment permit a "freeze" movement or protest demonstration against nuclear weapons in Russia. Their propaganda agencies pretend that what the Soviets build for U.S.S.R. nuclear armories is "defensive;" but what the West attempts to counteract is vicious and threatening.

They also spread their anti-freeze tactics throughout all the Soviet bloc. Russian big-wigs travel in the satellites ceaselessly telling them to emulate Moscow-time by jailing protesters who dare speak against Soviet nukes. These propagandists hail the Russian regime for imprisoning thousands of critics in "gulags." The worst offenders in the U.S.S.R. are lodged in hospitals where they are subjected constantly to mind-bending drugs.

Of course, the world knows all about the plight of dissident academician Andrei Sakharov, father of the Russian H-bomb. In the last 20 years this eminent scientist, awarded the Nobel Prize which he was not permitted to pick up, has also been exiled to a tiny apartment far from Moscow, separated from family and friends and in poor physical condition, suffering from a heart ailment.

Despite the "gulag" or prison mentality of the Andropov regime, the proposals by President Reagan to hold a summit with him went down pretty well in most of Europe. In the Federal Republic, where elections will be held next month, conservative Chancellor Helmut Kohl praised the idea warmly. It was enthusiastically received in West Berlin when Vice President Bush made the surprise announcement. There have been mixed reactions from predictably left-wing groups within Britain and on the continent where the vice president continues to visit NATO friends and allies. But Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher eloquently welcomed the president's initiative and she is paramount in the British political picture.

To date the most damaging anti-Soviet remarks from an American ally surfaced from a totally unexpected source — France. As Bernard D. Kaplan, Hearst European Correspondent, reported from Paris: "With one ringing speech, France's Socialist President Francois Mitterrand turned himself into a towering, essential pillar of U.S. nuclear and foreign policy in Europe."

The Russians had counted on France and its inherent radicalism to spring into lockstep with their ideas on a freeze. Soviet belief has rested on spreading pacifism as anti-nuclear momentum. But the Russians were simply stunned when President Mitterrand warned West Germany and pacifist-minded fellow French Socialists that the U.S. built-cruise and Pershing II intermediate missiles had to be installed on their territory to retaliate against weapons aimed at them. For the present, anyway, it would appear that Mitterrand-led France is trying to become the No. 1 continental ally of the U.S. instead of West Germany which has enjoyed the spot for 20 years.

It was a direct challenge to the socialist line, with the notable exclusion of former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who bucked his own West German Socialists in favor of new U.S. missiles while waiting for the U.S. and the Russians to come to an agreement.

Editor's Report

On the other side of the world, the other George, Secretary of State Shultz, went to great lengths to reassure Japan that it remains under the American protective umbrella should Andropov agree ultimately to confer with President Reagan. In his low-key manner, he said that the People's Republic of China had nothing to fear from any negotiations we have with Russia. In short, we won't sell anyone out. Secretary Shultz underscored that theme in his visit to South Korea.

It seems to me that President Reagan didn't dispatch his two foremost assistants on these back-breaking journeys for cosmetic reasons. They conveyed his messages, which were reassuring. I do wish that critics back here could take as much comfort from what the vice president and the secretary of state said.

People abroad took them at their word. Why can't we?

SPEAKING OUT

There's a price for freedom of the press

By RALPH SELLMEYER

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. (First Amendment of the Constitution of the United States)

Ralph Sellmeyer has been the Allison Professor of Journalism since August 1981.

The exhibit of the magnificent Gutenberg Bible at Midland College last week brings to mind the advent of the invention of movable type (which opened the door to disseminating knowledge to the world) by the German printer, Johann Gutenberg, who was the first to free printing from the laborious process of engraved blocks from which printing of the time was mostly done. (It is true that the Chinese and Koreans had learned to cast symbols from lead in about the 11th century, but it remained to Gutenberg to bring the technique into an integrated system, with many improvements, around 1400). The earliest known material produced by Gutenberg's press is a poem, but the Gutenberg Bible came a short time later.

Within 20 years from the time Gutenberg set that first poem in type his method of printing was being used throughout Europe. However, it was almost 200 years later before a printing press found its way to the American Colonies, arriving at Harvard College in 1638, its founding year.

The king's governors in the Colonies permitted very few presses to operate. An explanation of this control is evident in the words of Sir William Berkeley, governor of Virginia, in 1671:

But I thank God, there are no free schools nor printing;...for learning has brought disobedience, and heresy, and sects into the world, and printing has divulged them, and libels against the best government. God keep us from both.

My, haven't things changed in the last 300 years, despite what Sir William might have wished to the contrary.

Now, nothing, some would feel, is sacred to the press. Those scandal mongers will print anything, wreck reputations, look through the keyholes, and, a la National Enquirer, are responsible to no one.

A fair criticism of the press today? Not likely. And probably few would agree with so harsh an assessment of the American press' performance, on a whole, though some could rightfully say, "remember the Dr. Sam Shepard case?" (the murder trial of the Ohio doctor accused of killing his wife) which turned out to be a press fiasco and is generally held up as such.

But what disturbs me is sometimes to hear those around me say, "if only the press would stay out of things, we would all be better off," or some such similar comment. It happened of course, during the turbulent and traumatic day of Watergate. The press was blamed by some for causing the woes of then-President Nixon. "If the press had left it alone, Nixon could have finished out his term, but they had to stick their noses into it" so that mentality goes.

It reminds one of the Greeks and their "kill the messenger syndrome." (The bearer of bad tidings on the outcome of Greek battles was sometimes killed.)

I shall always remember, with a slight shudder, the university professor, and a colleague, who, though he was in a large department of mass communication (journalism) asked one day, in all seriousness, why newspapers didn't submit stories about government matters to the government authorities first, before publishing them? (This person's background was in radio production, not radio news, and as regards the handling of news, he was completely naive.)

True, any time you have a freedom, in this case press freedom, there is going to be an abuse of that freedom. And certainly the "yellow journalism" of the last quarter of the 19th century, as practiced by Joseph Pulitzer and William Randolph Hearst in New York gave a label to the type of sensationalistic stories they loved to play in their New York World (Pulitzer) and New York Evening Journal (Hearst), but those kinds of excesses are no longer, even though there are times the press does get out of line, takes liberties, invades privacy, and commits breaches of ethics, all in the name of freedom of the press but, taken in the whole, these departures are small compared to the responsible role the U.S. press plays most of the time.

In January of 1978 the Times of London was briefly shut down because one of the printer's unions within the plant refused to permit publication of one issue containing an article highly critical of the union. In a magnificent editorial, the Times of London had this to say:

Those who wish to maintain the freedom of a nation must stand behind the editorial freedom of the press, even though they know that it will sometimes be abused and often be wrong in its judgments. Those in the press who want to maintain its freedom must also try to raise the standard of its news reporting, its sense of responsibility, its willingness to report all sides and its essential fairness. Only a fair press will retain the public confidence that is needed by a free press.

There is a price to the first amendment. There is nothing to stop journalists from doing anything that could be an affront to common decency, short of violating the law. The First Amendment makes it impossible for Congress or any other legislative or regulatory body in the land to pass a law licensing journalists, binding them to an acceptable code of conduct and devising suitble punishments — such as loss of a license — for infractions large or small.

Unlike physicians, lawyers, or even plumbers, journalists cannot be regulated by any outside body, and the codes of conduct that professional societies adopt cannot be enforced. If journalists cannot act responsibly themselves, or if their news organizations cannot force them to do so under pain of dismissal, nobody else can do anything about it, unless they commit a crime or become involved in a civil court action in connection with their work.

It follows that self-control, responsibility and a decent sense of restraint ought to be stressed as important elements in the practice of journalism and, quite generally, they are. Most journalists of character and experience do profess to practice a certain amount of responsibility in dealing with the news.

It's certainly not a perfect system, and I don't suppose our Founding Fathers figured it would be, but then if we had governmental authorities deciding what would be printed, or not printed, and in what form, you can readily see what would happen.

Totalitarian states have no problem with the excesses of press freedom.

Heck, there isn't any.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Proxmire's award

To The Editor:

Inasmuch as you have seen fit to endorse the Wall Street Journal's award of the Golden Fleece to Senator William Proxmire, it is only fair that you print Proxmire's answer in an equally conspicuous place.

For your convenience, I am enclosing his answer as printed in the Wall Street Journal.

Barbara H. Bolden
Midland

I can understand why you felt compelled to award me the Golden Fleece for preventing the Reagan administration from killing the Institute for Research on Poverty at the University of Wisconsin. Most of the "information" cited in your editorial of Jan. 20 seems to have been supplied by Department of Health and Human Services bureaucrats upset because the Congress has presumed to tell them how to spend the taxpayers' money. Here is what the bureaucrats didn't tell you:

1. My amendment did not increase the budget by a single penny. It simply earmarked existing funds;

2. The institute did win a competition held by HHS in 1980 to determine which center should receive funding for poverty research;

3. Both the Republican Senate and the Democratic House affirmed this competitive result by directing that HHS award funding to the winner of the competition;

4. Despite this clear mandate from the Congress, HHS decided to kill funding for any center and to spend the money instead on a series of much smaller contracts at separate institutions;

5. The technique of concentrating a portion of research funds at multi-disciplinary centers is a well established practice that has increased the effectiveness of our research dollars. It has been particularly effective at the National Institutes of Health. Why does the department want to retain the center approach at NIH while abolishing it for poverty research?

6. Even with the $1.5 million earmarked for the Institute for Research on Poverty, the department will still be able to spend 90 percent of its policy research budget on smaller individual contracts.

The institute is the only research organization focusing exclusively on issues affecting the poor. It has been able to draw upon scholars from many disciplines and focus their efforts on how best to deal with the problems of poverty which, unfortunately, show no signs of disappearing. Given the sharp budget cuts in programs serving the poor, this is no time to cut ourselves off from this important source of information.

Tax proposal

To The Editor:

Since there has been such an uproar about fairness in the taxing process, I have a proposition for Congress that is imminently fair.

The new budget is in the neighborhood of $840 billion and the deficit is estimated at between $100 to $200 billion, or say about 20 percent. We, the taxpayers are due by law a 10 percent reduction in taxes.

My proposal is that we, the people, forego the tax relief of 10 percent, if the Federal government will reduce, across the board without exception, all expenditures in the amount of 10 percent. That would balance the budget, which would so greatly please Senators Proxmire, Kennedy, Dole and others that have become so terrified of budget deficits.

In addition, it would keep inflation under control and keep interest rates down. This would keep — business rolling, reduce unemployment (more jobs — less compensation for not working) and, in short, solve so many of the problems that keep bureaucrats awake at night. Who could object to such an excellent proposal?

Amazing play

To The Editor:

This past weekend, four performances of Midland High School's production "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" were staged. For those who missed the production, you indeed missed it! Not only was the infamous "dreamcoat" amazing, the actors were amazing also.

The show had quite a pleasing opening as Penny Holleman greeted the audience with an ear-catching song. Her well-trained voice captured the audience's attention and never lost it even as she handed the stage over to the 12 men portraying the sons of Jacob. This happy dozen kept the crowd in stitches throughout the evening. One exceptional brother, Levi, played by J.J. Baskin, was definitely the crowd favorite. J.J. stole the scene every time he walked on stage. He appealed to the audience because of his size, or lack of it, and the great amount of fun he appeared to be having. This combined with an exceptional job done by the beautiful dancing girls made the musical quite lighthearted and enjoyable.

Joseph, well played by Gary Lyons, provided the audience with the serious storyline and the importance of the play. Also credited with this is J.K. Homer who played Joseph's father, Jacob. J.K. was able to make the audience feel the grief that Jacob felt at the loss of his favorite son. These two men caused much excitement among the audience as they were reunited in the end. With this, the audience left the auditorium quite satisfied.

The orchestra, made up of Midland High band members, was superior. Clyde Wilson conducted the orchestra with such ease and poise that it was difficult at times to believe that the orchestra was made up of high school musicians. Equal credit goes to Don McCartney for his excellent work in the vocal area of the production.

But perhaps the most credit is due to Bob Fennell who directed the production. It was a difficult job well done and one that can be overlooked in no way.

This letter is not intended to be a review or critique, but a note to those who missed the show to be sure and attend the next production put on by either Lee or Midland High. It will be well worth the time spent.

Although I am a Senior member of the Lee drama squad, and a dedicated Rebel, I feel that congratulations are in order to our cross-town rivals on a job well done!

Teens are people

To The Editor:

We are sick and tired of people treating teen-agers like the low life of our country. A lot of people say "teen-agers" as if it were a dirty four letter word.

We are very proud of our teen-ager, as we are of the majority of those we meet. Some businesses have told me they don't want any teen-agers in their place of business. Good or bad! Let's please accomodate these firms by keeping our teens, ourselves and anyone else who realizes our teen-agers are the future of this country, away from their establishments. There is no way anyone can bypass seven years of being maligned as a teen-ager. Teen-agers are people too!!

Airport drive

To The Editor:

Several letters have appeared recently regarding the closing of the airport during the recent snow. This is to support the drive to get an airport operation that can keep the facility open when the temperature drops below 65 degrees. You will recall that in the most recent closing the roads were clear for several days before the runways were clear.

To say that we cannot afford equipment to handle light snow removal because such equipment is seldom needed is to ignore the facts of the past three years, at least. I would ask the directors to consider three questions:

1. How much money was lost on landing fees during the four- or five-day shutdown this last time? How much in the past five years?

2. How much money would be required in public relations expense just to counteract the ill-will created by the closing of an airport for several days after the snow (when the sun was shining and the temperature was well above freezing)? Can you afford that?

3. How often does this have to happen before we stop hearing that it does not happen often enough to bother with?

Let's decide whether we are going to have an airport which operates year around or if we really think air transporation is just for big city folks and we want to be a little one-horse town that isn't bothered by such modern inventions.

Fainter admits to break with tradition

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

AUSTIN — Secretary of State John W. Fainter, Jr., admits to making one small break with tradition in the operation of his office: He hasn't covered up the wood floors which were left exposed by his predecessor.

"I think the carpet was supposed to go back during this cycle," Fainter jokes, when asked about his decision to stay with the wood floors, which have been covered, uncovered and recovered during recent administrations.

But Fainter, 44, doesn't expect his work as secretary of state to be greatly different from that of recent holders of that post — although some of the emphases of the office may be different.

As in the case of his predecessors, Fainter has a close relationship with the governor, who chooses the secretary of state.

"Most secretaries of state have had pretty close relationships," Fainter agrees, and his with Mark White began in 1966, when both men were working as assistant attorneys general for Waggoner Carr.

Both also went to Houston at the same time, with Fainter going into the investments business (having worked also as an investigator for the State Securities Board) and White practicing law.

Fainter worked for the gubernatorial effort of Dolph Briscoe, which resulted in his continued contact with White.

Briscoe, when governor, named White as secretary of state, and White moved from that office to attorney general — with Fainter active in White's election effort.

After White became attorney general, Fainter was named first assistant attorney general.

"We've had," Fainter says, "a long, close personal and professional relationship."

At the moment, Fainter is settling into his new role, and is awaiting a study on the operations of his office which is being prepared by Arthur Andersen & Co.

"We want to look over that before we make any drastic changes," he says.

But Fainter already knows the manner in which he wants the office to operate.

"Basically," he says, "we are a service-oriented type office...I want to do everything that I can to see that we give people reasonable, prompt, courteous service."

And, he says, "I want to take a good hard look at the elections area," particularly the services provided to local election officials.

Officials in major urban areas have the resources to keep up with election laws and law changes, but smaller areas, and entities such as school boards, have more of a problem doing so, Fainter says.

Another emphasis will be voter registration, and voter participation.

"There was strong participation in 1982," Fainter says.

"That reversed what had been the trend...we want to get people registered, and voting."

Along with that, Fainter says, his office anticipates continuing the "Election Central" operation for tabulating and distributing election results.

Legislation is expected to provide for that operation, Fainter reports.

His office also is studying the question of funding primary elections, he says, adding that "we want to make sure that primaries are...adequately funded."

Fainter has kind words for the staff of the secretary of state's office.

"The staff," he says, "seems to be very professional...I want to be sure that they get the support that they need."

That is likely to mean a revised budget request for his office, Fainter says.

"I feel we need some more funds than those requested by Secretary (David) Dean," he reports.

Fainter says he has "no other special projects" in mind at present, but will be undertaking whatever assignments White may have for him.

And, he notes, White "has a little more insight into this office than some governors have had."

Fainter also expects to be working with the special legislative committee studying changes in Texas' ethics laws, but says he hasn't had time to examine the committee's work in any depth.

And he indicates that his feeing is to move cautiously on any overall changes in the state's election laws — noting that wholesale revisions could create many unanticipated problems (as resulted, he comments, with changes in the Property Tax Code).

And in answer to the inevitable question, Fainter says he doesn't have any political ambitions of his own — although his office has been the spring board for a number of politicians.

"You never say never," Fainter comments, "but I don't envision a set of circumstances that would lead to that...I want to develop the responsibilities of this office, and support the governor's office in whatever way I can."

Midland Building Specialties saves you a bundle of money

It's finally here! The winter that everyone has been talking about for months has finally arrived. How does your home stack up against old man winter so far? Do you find your furnace constantly running, with your fuel bill being totally beyond belief? If you do, then you need to take a long look around your house and see where the heat is escaping. Most of it will leak from your windows, and even from your doors. It's not too late to solve that small problem.

Properly installed, energy-efficient storm doors and windows will save you money like you wouldn't believe in the long run. You will notice the difference right away. Energy-efficient windows create a pocket of air between themselves and the regular window. This pocket of air acts as a "dead" space, remaining at a fairly constant temperature year round. This will solve the problem of air leaking into your house, as well as the air leaking out. Therefore, during those long, hard winter months still to come, your furnace works less to keep your house at a comfortable temperature, saving you money on not only fuel bills, but costly repair bills as well. Likewise, during those scorching West Texas summer days, your air conditioner works less, saving you money there also.

And plain old wooden doors just don't compare to Stanley steel replacement doors, available at Midland Building Specialties. These doors also eliminate drafts and heat loss through your doors, again saving you money on costly fuel and maintainence bills. These doors are five times more efficient than wooden doors, and qualify for energy tax credits. They have many styles to choose from, and they will do all of the work for you.

You will be extremely pleased with the results you get when you call Midland Building Specialties and have them install energy-efficient windows and/or doors. The professionalism speaks for itself, with first rate service and the most reliable job in town. Why don't you call Ken Van Hoozer and begin saving yourself a bundle of money. Midland Building Specialties is located right behind Mid-West Glass at 904 W. Front in Midland, and their number is 563-3013. Make your move towards saving money today.

Frank McFarlin, registered and certified hypnotherapist, would like to help you become a happier you by learning to make full use of your own natural resources to control your emotions and habits. If you need to "kick the habit" call him at 694-5485.

Making full use of your natural resources

There is something in each and every person that he/she does not really like about himself; something that he would really like to change. But most of us , even though we really want to change this little something, just don't take any action. We just leave the problem there, always thinking, "I'll take care of it later." Therefore, it just never gets done. Others just don't know how to go about changing our bad habit. Still others may try, but just can't seem to get it done on their own. Well, now you can change that bad habit you have. No matter who you are or what you do, behavioral hypnosis could be the answer for you.

What is hypnosis? It may be simply defined as "effective communication." The sub-concious mind is considered to be about 90% of the human mind. It is the seat of all actions, emotions, memory, and anything that you do. Hypnosis is simply helping you to use your natural resources to effectively com municate" with your sub-concious mind. When you learn to do this, then you can alter, control, or substitute for many of the things that your sub-concious mind is responsible for. Some of the most common uses of behavioral hypnosis include weight control, stop smoking, nail biting, bed wetting, memory recall, and controlling pain and emotions such as anger and depression.

Everyone that is capable of learning may be hypnotized. There are a number of things that may make it difficult for a person to be hypnotized, such as fear, or a short attention span, but if the individual is capable of learning, he may be hypnotized. Motivation is important in a clients' ability to accept and retain a suggestion. In other words, you must really want to control your habit before hypnosis may be totally effective. You may reject any suggestion by the htpnotherapist that is unacceptable to you. He can not make you do anything you do not want to do.

When in a hypnotic "trance," the client feels a very pleasant state of relaxation. He will usually feel a heaviness in his limbs and a sensation of warmth, and/or perhaps a tingling sensation. It varies with the individual. Every one of us goes through several hypnotic trances each and every day, it is the state when you first start to wake up or are just drifting off to sleep. If you have ever driven a car somewhere and then couldn't remember anything about the drive, you were in a hypnotic trance while driving the car. Hypnosis is a very natural state.

When in a hypnotic trance, the client has full control over his own actions. You are not in the power of the hypnotist. The sub-concious mind is merely brought out, but you still make your own decisions, and you may accept or reject any suggestions the hypnotist gives you. He can not make you do anything you do not want to do.

There is absolutely no danger of being "stuck" in a trance. There are occasions, especially in severe depression, when a client has ignored the suggestion to come out of a trance because it is so relaxing. In these cases, though, the client will either drift into a sleep and wake normally, or he will wake when he gets hungry or other bodily functions become urgent.

When in a hypnotic trance, you are not unconcious. You are fully aware of what is going on around you. In fact, you will be surprised at the acuteness of your senses. A person may have his eyes open, carry on a conversation, do his work, or do anything else just as he normally would. Even someone very close to you may not realize when you are in a hypnotic trance. It is a very natural state.

If you would like to learn to make full use of your own natural resources in order to control your emotions or habits, consider hypnosis as a possibility. It is one of the safest and most effective methods available. Frank McFarlin is a registered hypnotherapist, certified by the American Coucil of Hypnotherapist Examiners. He would like to help you to become a better, happier you. You will be much happier with yourself once you get rid of that nasty little habit you have had. For more information, or for an appointment, call Frank McFarlin at 694-5485. His office is located at 1016 Andrews Hwy. P106.

You deserve the treat at Cattleman's Steak House

Everyone deserves a treat now and then! No matter who you are or what you do, you owe it to yourself to give yourself a treat. If you enjoy eating, it sometimes seems a hopeless case to find a place that you really consider a treat without feeling as if it is treating itself to your pocketbook. Good food at a reasonable price is just impossible to find anymore! Or is it? If you can't find the right place to eat, with good food at a reasonable price, you just haven't looked in the right places. Tonight, treat your family, as well as yourself, to a pleasant evening at Cattleman's Steak House.

One trip to Cattleman's Steak House and you'll love what owners Bill and Pat Henkle have done to make your dining the best there is to offer. The pleasant, relaxed atmosphere and the friendly, efficient staff will show you what a treat eating can really be! Once you have eaten there, you will want to go back time and time again. But, for as good as the service is, and as friendly as the staff is, nothing quite compares with the delicious food!

Appetizers at Cattleman's range from an extra large or regular size plate of onion rings, to shrimp cocktail, fried zucchini, or fried mushrooms. Maybe a hot bowl of homemade soup or steaming chili would warm your bones during these cold winter months. If frito pie sounds good to you, Cattleman's is the place! The salad bar is truly a work of art.

To complement your dining, Bill and Pat have included a good selection of wines, champagnes, and sherry, ranging from inexpensive to exquisite. They serve only the premium beers, those generally considered to be the best.

Now comes the steak, cooked to perfection, just the way you like it. Dinner steak, club steak, or ribeye would be the perfect way to satisfy your hunger. Sirloins range in size from a single serving all the way up to sirloin for eight. T-Bone steak is an old favorite at Cattleman's, and comes in three sizes to satisfy even the hungriest appetite.

Steak is not the only delicious treat available at Cattleman's, seafood is quite popular, too. Delicious fried shrimp, oysters, scallops, catfish, and even froglegs are available at Cattleman's. And although every item on the menu at Cattleman's may be considered special, you owe it to yourself to try their super specialty: chicken fried steak. Other menu items include chicken strips, hamburger steak, and Virginia ham steak. All entrees include a hearty baked potato and a trip to the wonderful salad bar. For those of you who are just slightly hungry, Cattleman's provides the all-American favorite hamburger or cheeseburger, each available in two sizes. If you really want to spice it up, try their jalapeno burger. Grilled cheese, ham and cheese, steak sandwiches, and a delightful turkey, ham and cheese sandwich are waiting for you at Cattleman's. A trip to the salad bar could be made into a meal in itself.

Kids are welcome at Cattleman's, too. Special child's plates are available for the little ones. Beverages include tea, milk, soft drinks, and coffee. And should you have room left after the delicious steak, the deseet at Cattleman's is heavenly. Top it all off with scrumptious cherry or bluberry cheesecake or delicious pecan pie. Hours at Cattleman's Steak House are from 10:00 to 2:00 and 5:00 to 9:30, Monday through Friday, and 5:00 to 10:00 on Saturdays. Cattleman's is closed on Sundays. If the parking lot is full when you get there, stop anyway! It almost always is, and you rarely have to wait more than five minutes to be seated.

Cattleman's Steak House, at 3300 N. Big Spring in Midland, is the perfect way to treat yourself and your family to a delicious meal at a reasonable price. Treat yourself this evening and see why everyone is talking about Cattleman's Steak House.

President's Message

I am proud to announce the 4th quarter of 1982 reflects the continuing success of Petroplex Savings Association. As a new S&L, we have produced a record six-month growth in deposits and revenues despite a serious recession, over-burdened credit markets and justifiable fears of continued failures within the banking community.

The primary contributor to our success is an aggressive survivor's approach of adjusting to and accepting the harsh reality of volatile interest rates and generally unstable economic conditions. This survival approach has afforded us the opportunity to seek and acquire a solid portfolio of loans and investments which either reduce or eliminate the risks of fluctuating interest rates. Our asset management philosophy has positioned us in 1983 to attract investment capital, lendable funds and quality real estate lending opportunities which will enable us to pass along ever-increasing benefits to our investors, customers and stockholders.

All of us at The Petroplex Savings Banking Centers appreciate your support and loyalty and stand ready to assist you with all of your financial needs at any time.

Chief Executive Officer
