Americans express mixed feelings about U.S.-financed Soviet bailout

■ Interviewees wonder whether the United States can afford a high-stakes gamble.

By Felicity Barringer
N.Y. Times News Service

GARY, Ind. — F. Brannan Jackson's face hangs heavy with doubt as he contemplates the prospect of American aid to the Soviet Union.

When he turns his thoughts into words, the pastor of the Calvary Institutional Baptist Church speaks like a Samaritan. "We've heard the stories of economic distress over there," he says. "I think we should help the Soviet Union."

He goes on: "We can do it. We have the kind of economic structure that we do the things we want to, when we want to, where we want to. It is a risk. But if we can achieve stability within Russia, there may be an opportunity to achieve a peaceful relationship with them."

Then the 67-year-old Jackson pauses, as if to consider the decaying city that lies beyond his own neat neighborhood, the deserted housing units along the dunes of Lake Michigan and the empty mall where the signs have crumbled and boards over store windows are weathered white.

"Where are we going to get the money from?" he asks. "I don't know."

In mid-July the Soviet president, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, is to meet with President Bush and the other leaders of the seven industrialized democracies in London, where he is expected

Pamplona's bulls

PAMPLONA, Spain — The first running of the bulls of the weeklong San Fermin festival made famous by Ernest Hemingway went off without a hitch Sunday, with only a few minor injuries. But while the bulls did little damage, officials said street disturbances and heavy partying left 124 people hospitalized the previous 24 hours. The six bulls and accompanying steers ran the half-mile stretch from their pens in the city's old quarter to the bullring in two minutes, 10 seconds, police said.

War vets plates

SAN ANGELO — Vietnam and Persian Gulf veterans are being recognized for their wartime service with special license plates approved by the Texas Legislature. State Rep. Robert Junell, D-San Angelo, led support for the legislation creating three new military-related specialized license plates — honoring Vietnam veterans, Desert Storm participants and Coast Guard Auxiliary members. The plates were unveiled Saturday./2B

A shy Miss Texas

FORT WORTH — On the night she was crowned Miss Texas, Ronda Renee Morrison delivered a version of "I Will Always Love You" that was a shade more emotional than the one country singer Dolly Parton made famous. Coaxing tears from the audience during Saturday night's final talent competition, Miss Morrison sang with sobs and catches in her voice, working up to belt out the final chorus of the love song. Miss Morrison's mother, Barbara Morrison, said she couldn't believe her eyes as she watched her once-painfully shy daughter entertain an audience of more than 3,000 people.

Yugoslavs forge pact, stem crisis

■ Agreement temporarily resolves issue of who should control Slovenia's frontiers.

N.Y. Times News Service

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Yugoslav leaders reached an agreement early today aimed at averting war with Slovenia, promising the independence-minded republic limited control over border posts.

The accord, mediated by three European Community ministers, calls for an immediate cease-fire, the return of all federal troops and local militias to their bases, and a full role for Yugoslavia's federal presidency, particularly in controlling the army. Dozens of people have been killed in clashes between the federal army and local militias in Slovenia, raising the fear of civil war.

As the agreement was signed on the Adriatic island of Brioni, off the northern coast, tensions were running high elsewhere in Yugoslavia. Fighting raged for more than eight hours on Sunday between armed Serb civilians and Croatian police officers in eastern Croatia, leaving several people dead.

The agreement, signed by representatives of all of Yugoslavia's six republics, temporarily resolves the issue of who should control Slovenia's frontiers with Italy, Austria and Hungary by allowing the republic's forces to staff the frontier crossing points on behalf of the federal authorities.

Report: States systematically underestimate Medicaid costs

By Robert Pear
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In a new study, the Bush administration charges that states have systematically underestimated the huge and rapid increase in Medicaid costs in the last few years, resulting in billions of dollars in unexpected medical bills for the federal government.

State officials say unanticipated economic trends, especially the recession, caused much of the rise in costs, by increasing the number of low-income people eligible for Medicaid.

But the study says the recession is responsible for "a relatively small percentage" of the cost increase. A confidential draft of the report, marked for "internal use only," says one-fourth to one-third of the unexpected increases were attributable to "technical problems" in the way

Desert Storm horrors only beginning for some vets

By Michael Whiteley and Tim Madigan
N.Y. Times News Service

The drumbeats are echoes. The marching bands have gone.

But the horrors of Desert Storm are only beginning for the small group of men and women who saw the face of death among the 100,000 Iraqi bodies stacked or still burning in the tanks and trucks blindsided by superior allied armored forces.

For them, the celebrations are over. Some say they should be.

"They ought to quit," U.S. Army Pfc. Joel Kindred said of the Fourth of July parades. "What did we do? We killed sheepherders who wanted to give up. We didn't do anything. They were sticking their rifles in the sand and walking away."

Kindred, of Fort Worth, is a member of the 17th Signal Battalion — a unit based in Frankfurt, Germany, that flew into Saudi Arabia to establish telecommunications systems and wound up burying bodies along a 30-mile stretch of bombed-out tanks and personnel carriers that came to be known as "Dead Man Alley."

It was "Ralph," a burned-up Iraqi soldier with a smiling skull for a face, who spawned two weeks of nightmares for Kindred. They named the Iraqi and snapped his picture before they buried him. Then they made him a symbol of the unknown foe whose defeat was swift and a bit too easy.

"He is the face of death," Kindred said.

Military doctors, psychiatrists, social workers and chaplains say those trapped in the heart of a televised war that spared the American public from the telling details will have psychological scars only now beginning to appear.

Fewer of the soldiers will face the full impact of post-traumatic stress disorder — a mixture of jitters, insomnia, nightmares and occasional violence — that may have troubled nearly 30 percent of the 3.1 million soldiers who fought in Vietnam.

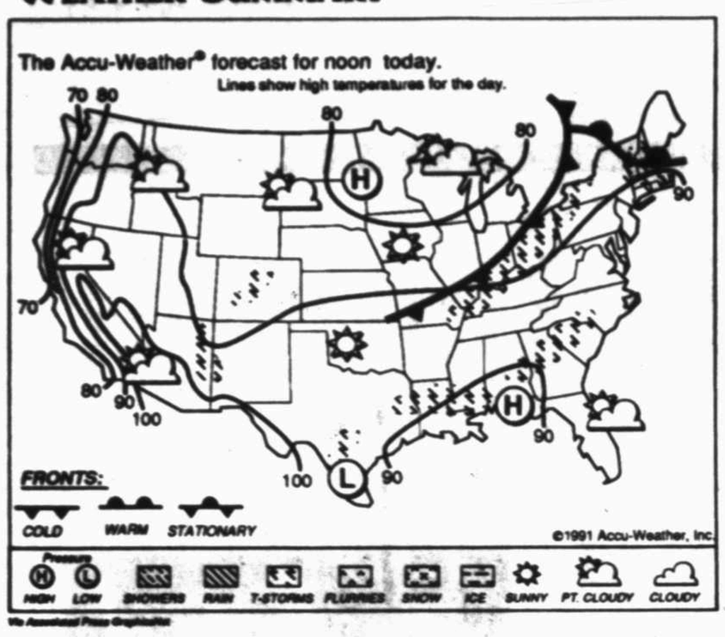
WEATHER SUMMARY



West Texas summer: 90s

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the upper 90s and south winds 10 to 20 mph, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a low in the lower 70.

Tuesday is expected to be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-90s.

After an overnight low of 69, Sunday's high was 96 compared with the record high for that date of 103 set in 1964. The record low for today's date was 56 set in 1952.

STATE

Hot and humid conditions triggered a large area of showers and thunderstorms along the Texas coast and offshore in the Gulf of Mexico Sunday afternoon.

Skies were mostly sunny across West Texas, with the early morning clouds over the Edwards Plateau yielding to bright sunshine by Sunday afternoon. However, rising afternoon temperatures brought small fair weather clouds into the region.

Temperatures around West Texas at 3 p.m. were in the 90s, except for the upper 80s reported in the mountains. Reese Air Force Base led all readings with 98 degrees. Winds were generally south at 10 to 20 mph.

NATION

Thunderstorms lashed the East and Midwest with heavy rain, high winds and hail Sunday. A tornado was reported in Minnesota.

Damaging winds and hail were reported in many Iowa towns. Hail measuring 3½ inches across fell at Lyon. Thunderstorm winds gusted to 65 mph in Spencer, where 1½-inch hail fell. Golf ball-size hail fell at Baltic.

PACT: Accord calls for immediate cease-fire

(From 1A)

If the accord sticks, it may offer enough breathing room for all sides in the crisis to develop a new federal structure for Yugoslavia with the help of West European experts.

Janez Drnovsek, the Slovenian deputy to Yugoslavia's federal presidency, said the republic would "in the meantime" revert to the "situation that existed before June 25," when Slovenia and Croatia proclaimed their independence from Yugoslavia.

The Yugoslav army intervened in Slovenia when the republic's parliament approved the proclamation and took control of northern border posts.

Drnovsek said there was "a clear commitment now from the federal side" that after a three-month cooling-off period, "the border should be transferred back to the Slovenian authorities."

The federal presidency had demanded on Thursday that Slovenia yield control of the border posts by noon Sunday, but the deadline passed without incident as the European-brokered negotiations continued.

The military, which met with fierce resistance when it tried again to retake the posts last week, had made it clear that it would not use force this time.

In eastern Croatia, the clashes between Serbs and Croats subsided when the army intervened and established a cease-fire. At least seven people, including an army officer, were reported killed in fighting in the farm town of Tenja, 200 miles east of Zagreb.

Armed Serbs had barricaded themselves in the town center to resist attacks launched early Sunday by a Croatian militia seeking to gain control.

Yugoslav army units interposed themselves between the two sides and established the informal truce in the afternoon, more than eight hours after the fighting broke out. Although the army's intervention prevented a full battle, tensions in the region were running high.

Eastern Croatia, which has a significant population of ethnic Serbs, has been the scene of scattered fighting in recent days. The clashes have been fueled by tensions between the Slovenian and Croatian republics and their main foe, Serbia, which is intent on keeping the Yugoslav federation intact.

The talks in Brioni marked the third mission by Western European foreign ministers to seek a solution to Yugoslavia's federal crisis. Ministers met in groups in a large, mostly empty hotel on the island, which was once a vacation spot for Tito, the founder of modern Yugoslavia.

On Friday, representatives of all 12 European Community nations met at The Hague and agreed to send foreign ministers of the Netherlands, Luxembourg, and Portugal back to Yugoslavia to seek a resolution of the crisis.

The major point of contention had been a Western European demand that as part of any cease-fire package, Croatia and Slovenia suspend steps toward implementing independence and revert to the state of affairs before June 25. Slovenia had previously refused to make such a compromise.

BAILOUT: Interviews reveal a deep ambivalence to seek commitments of Western aid to help transform the sclerotic Soviet economy from central control to a market system.

(From 1A)

Interviews with scores of Americans, from the union halls of Cleveland to the farms of Iowa, reveal a deep ambivalence about the idea of a Soviet bailout financed in part by the U.S. Treasury.

Many interviewed on a drive across the Midwest had thought little if at all about the subject, but many others in the Midwest and in corners of the nation from Florida to Tennessee to California tended to favor aid.

All, however, wondered whether America could afford a high-stakes gamble on Soviet reform. They wondered whether the gamble would pay off in terms of stability in the Soviet Union and, consequently, stable U.S.-Soviet relations that could enable the United States to reduce its military spending for years to come.

History has taught these Americans that their country can change the world, but their lives have taught them that change is costly. Most wondered whether the United States can afford a high-stakes gamble on Soviet reform, and whether such a bet would pay off.

"I have mixed emotions," said Clarence Davis, 54, president of District 54 of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers in Cleveland. "Certainly, I wouldn't want to see that country with their large military presence taken over by some of the right-wing generals that are standing in the background waiting for the revolution to fail.

"But I certainly wouldn't want to steal from this country the funds that are necessary for so many things we need to do. We can't afford a national health plan for this country. I don't know what we can do for some other folks."

Among the 60 or so people who were interviewed or who refused to be interviewed were those who made it clear that they were too consumed with their own financial constraints to worry about another country's troubles.

Many answered with variations on the theme most succinctly stated by Aaron K. Bilyeu, a 40-year-old Vietnam veteran from Auburn, Ind.: "It's a good idea — maybe."

RENEWAL: Nations commit to 'fresh thinking'

(From 1A)

from Third World nations said they were committed to such changes as allowing market forces to flourish free of government restraints, abandoning fiscal and monetary policies that were politically motivated but economically unsound and opening borders to foreign goods and investment.

"Everybody is convinced it is time for fresh thinking," India's Finance Minister Manmohan Singh said in an interview last week. And Sebastian Edwards, a Chilean economist at the University of California at Los Angeles, said, "For Chile, there is no turning back."

Argentina, for example, has caught tax-reform fever. Mexico is selling its government-owned businesses. Peru is cutting its budget deficit and lowering tariffs. Turkey has thrown off its decades-old protectionist blanket. Thailand kept its budget balanced and held inflation to a modest 3 percent. Ghana and a handful of other African nations no longer tax their farmers out of producing.

"The change in thinking is really remarkably pervasive," said Stanley Fischer, former chief economist at the World Bank and now a professor at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "Ten years ago, for example, Mexico insisted that their main job was to protect themselves from the imperialist U.S."

If the nascent economic changes take root and spread, the four billion people who live in the developing world could enjoy a better standard of living. The changes also could provide a wealth of opportunities to businesses and investors in the United States and other rich countries.

Morgan Stanley & Co. estimates U.S. exports to the Third World have lately grown at three times the rate of sales to other rich countries.

REPORT: Erroneous estimates cause problems

(From 1A)

the states estimated costs, including a failure to recognize foreseeable trends.

Alarmed at the increases, Budget Director Richard G. Darman announced April 30 that he was sending out what officials described as "SWAT teams" of federal budget and health officials to investigate.

Erroneous estimates by the states cause problems for the president and Congress because the federal government relies on state estimates in writing the budget for Medicaid, which finances health care for 27 million low-income Americans. The program last year cost $72 billion: $41 billion in federal money, $31 billion from the states.

Under law, the federal government reimburses each state for Medicaid, paying from 50 percent to 80 percent of the cost depending on the per capita income of the state.

There is no trust fund or other special source of money earmarked to pay for Medicaid. When costs increase, they contribute to the federal budget deficit. One objective of the report is to give the states guidelines and incentives to improve the accuracy of the estimates.

In November 1989, the report says, states estimated their Medicaid programs would cost the federal government $44.4 billion in the fiscal year that began Oct. 1, 1990. But this May they projected federal costs for the same period at $52.6 billion, an increase of 18 percent in just 18 months.

Estimates of 1991 hospital costs for Medicaid recipients quadrupled in Alabama, tripled in Massachusetts and doubled in Pennsylvania.

Steven M. Lieberman, assistant director of the Office of Management and Budget, who coordinated the Medicaid review, and Kimberly Gibson, a spokeswoman for the budget office, declined to discuss the report. John M. Gibbons, a spokesman for the Department of Health and Human Services, said no one would discuss it "on the record."

HORRORS: Vets face unique emotional hurdles

(From 1A)

tional hurdles forged by the highly technical defeat of an army once pegged as the fourth largest in the world, said Col. Don Breland, head chaplain for the 35,000 soldiers stationed at Fort Hood in Killeen.

"They're ready for all of the welcome home ceremonies and all of the hoopla to be over with," Breland said. "They recognize that the American public's perception of what they went over there and did is not exactly accurate."

Breland has put the 60 chaplains at the military installation on full alert. They roam the motor pools and barracks of Fort Hood searching for the early warning signs of combat stress.

There are signs, although some medical experts say it could be seven years before the hard cases begin to surface.

By early last week, Veterans Administration hospitals nationwide had treated 2,798 deactivated veterans of the Persian Gulf War and logged 240 of those cases as psychiatric. The nation's veteran counseling centers, first established to deal with the aftermath of Vietnam, have reported another 328 contacts from gulf troops, said VA regional spokeswoman Kathy Salazar. They have verified 10 cases of post-traumatic stress disorder.

Defense Department officials were unable to give totals of the number of soldiers who saw combat.

But Fort Hood mental health officials say stress-related problems will be eased because the war was short and because treatment began on the front lines of the gulf war. Soldiers who lost buddies or witnessed heavy casualties were quickly pulled aside, counseled, and returned to the battlefield.

"We did not have a great number of people who were doing a lot with Iraqi bodies over an extended period of time. It's like seeing a lot of major accidents along the interstate," said Capt. Spencer Campbell, division social worker for the 1st Cavalry.

"But those people who touch death have a different experience. They have a lot to deal with."

But they say unique among the problems from the Persian Gulf was the unexpected surrender of shoeless Iraqi soldiers whose most pervasive enemy was hunger. Combat veterans carry mental snapshots of Iraqi soldiers on the battlefield — some groups trying to surrender while others kept shooting.

Americans were torn, said Breland, between protecting their prisoners of war and guarding their buddies' lives.

"The guys who are talking to me ... are feeling that they were in such a state of confusion they could not tell what to do. They could not know," Breland said. "They couldn't have a sense of getting hold of the situation and being clear about what they should do. It was just mass confusion."

Kindred says he doubts the war will have a lasting effect on him or many of his buddies, despite the visions of Ralph that still haunt his dreams.

Spurred by the momentum of the final sweep, Kindred and others acknowledge that American fighters often did not have the opportunity to decide which Iraqis might be prime candidates for surrender. At times, said military officials, troops were forced to shoot first and move on.

"We made a cannonball run across the desert." If the Iraqis did not have time to get their hands up or wave something white "... we still shot 'em," he said. "Proud to be an American at that moment, I wasn't."

SEARCH: Film buff's quest unwinds its final 'Mad' reel probably accurate," he says) has yielded snippets of "Mad World" outtakes totaling nearly 24 minutes.

(From 1A)

A few good scenes, alas, probably are lost forever.

He's also learned something about Hollywood's own obsession with the bottom line, which probably means moviegoers will never see Kramer's comedy masterpiece fully restored and shown in all its wide-screen, six-speaker, 210-minute glory.

The movie, which premiered at the Cinerama Dome in Los Angeles on Nov. 7, 1963, was an Oscar-winning sensation.

Its star-studded cast of such comic heavyweights as Milton Berle, Sid Caesar, Phil Silvers, Ethel Merman, Mickey Rooney, Terry-Thomas, Buddy Hackett and Jonathan Winters careened through the film in a madcap race to find a $350,000 treasure buried by Jimmy Durante.

After the original 70mm print was shown in 14 cities, Kramer trimmed it here and there, but United Artists wanted more drastic cuts. A few months later, the studio had hacked the movie down to 154 minutes, short enough to permit multiple daily screenings.

Federing says the missing chunks of footage interrupted the movie's continuity, created plot holes and left some sight gags unexplained.

One of the unkindest cuts, he said, was an important, three-minute segment between Spencer Tracy and silent film comedian Buster Keaton. It revealed Tracy's abortive scheme as a deranged chief of detectives to flee to Mexico with the loot.

Federing found 2½ minutes of missing intermission footage and exit music in France. His biggest triumph came in 1985, when he learned that film collector Joshua Berman had rescued 21 minutes of "Mad World" outtakes from a Los Angeles warehouse before it was bulldozed.

Last week, MGM-UA Home Video issued a 183-minute version of the movie incorporating most of the Berman footage. It still lacks the Tracy-Keaton exchange but restores a hilarious Winters monologue about using his money to buy his landlady a motorized wheelchair.

Federing scoffs at the studio's claim that the video is a "restoration" of the movie.

"You don't go to the National Gallery and crop a Winslow Homer painting, and you don't tear pages out of an Edna Ferber novel, or pull the brass sections out of a Fletcher Henderson jazz arrangement and start calling them originals," he said.

Kramer said in a telephone interview the new video isn't a restoration but is "pretty well what I wanted it to be."

Federing, 31, a bachelor and press secretary to Rep. Norman Mineta, D-Calif., said he fell in love with "Mad World" at age 12, when he saw it for the first time on the TV set in his New York City home.

U.N. team visits two Iraqi nuclear sites

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — A U.N. team visited two previously examined nuclear sites Sunday in the first step of a study that could determine the allied response to charges Iraq is cheating on nuclear site disclosure.

Dimitri Perricos, an International Atomic Energy Agency official who heads the 37-person team, refused to comment on whether the experts had seen or asked to see an elusive cache of what the U.N. alleges is nuclear weapons-making equipment.

He said the team planned to issue a report at week's end.

In addition to searching for any undisclosed nuclear materials and equipment, the team also will assess how to safely remove enriched bomb-grade uranium that was inspected by another U.N. team in May.

On Sunday, the team toured the Tuwaitha research site 20 miles southwest of Baghdad and the Al Quaim site near the Syrian border in northwestern Iraq.

This week's inspection tours could resolve questions about Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's latest pledge of cooperation, which was delivered in a letter Friday to U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

In Washington, the White House has emphasized President Bush's belief that he has authority to launch a military strike if Iraq continues to block inspection of suspected nuclear weapons facilities.

In late June, another U.N. team was blocked by Iraqi soldiers from inspecting trucks loaded with equipment believed to be a crude device for enriching uranium to weapons-grade quality.

Japan, U.S. to continue mine hunt

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Japanese and U.S. vessels will stay longer in the Persian Gulf to remove mines in Iraqi waters that could endanger shipping lanes or underwater oil pipelines, military officials said.

The search for mines off Iraq's 25-mile gulf shoreline is the final phase of postwar minesweeping operations.

The nine-nation naval task force has cleared 1,239 tethered mines from the waters off Kuwait, about 200 more than Iraqis reported to coalition forces. The fleet is scheduled to disband July 20.

"We have a very tough job ahead in dealing with the Iraqi mines," said Japanese Lt. Cdmr. Osamu Doi. "There may be 100, 500, 700 or 1,000. Only the Iraqis know."

The Japanese, barred by their constitution from participation in combat, arrived in the gulf June 5, more than two months after the war ended. They have set no deadline on how long their six minesweepers will stay.

Meanwhile in Kuwait, the remaining 3,700 U.S. troops are scheduled to pull out Sept. 1. But Kuwait's defense minister, Sheik Ali Al-Salem Al-Sabah, has said they may be asked to stay longer.

KGB hosts visitors at its school

MOSCOW (AP) — Pimply cheeked youths gawk at spy gadgets and curious parents scrutinize job lists. Welcome to the KGB training school's first "open house," a kind of Career Day for aspiring spooks.

The Soviet secret police opened its Higher School in southeastern Moscow to the public Sunday for the first time.

It was the latest move in the KGB's campaign during the age of glasnost to shine up an image tarnished from its decades as the Communist Party's widely feared instrument for silencing dissident.

The KGB also catches spies as well as spies on the West, which KGB chief Vladimir Kryuchkov still considers a serious enemy. Not surprisingly, the open house focused on that role.

"Excellent people serve in the KGB, people who love their motherland, who love their land that's soaked with the blood of their ancestors," said Maya Vladimirova, the 52-year-old mother of a prospective student.

"I would be proud if my son enrolled in this school," she said.

Hundreds of families took advantage of the open house to pore over pictures of famous spies, look at exhibits of miniature cameras and listening devices, and read about victories over foreign subversion.

Instructors sat at tables explaining their courses. Sign up for "counterintelligence" and learn how to catch foreign spies. Choose "engineering" and get a crack at the best technology in the country.

Down a corridor, past portraits of the spy school's outstanding students, visitors packed an auditorium to watch a film about the nefarious techniques used by Westerners to spy on the Soviet people.

"I have always been interested in the activities of this organization, and now I decided to see it with my own eyes," said Dmitry Smirnov, 21.

KGB instructors show off their high-resolution cameras used for surveillance during an "open house" at the secret police's Higher School in Moscow Sunday.

Hundreds of families took advantage of the open house to pore over pictures of famous spies, look at exhibits of miniature cameras and listening devices, and read about victories over foreign subversion.

The eight-story brick building, two city blocks long, is the KGB's biggest education and training center, taking students from across the country and some foreign countries, said spokesman Alexander M. Gorbachev.

Enrollment in its five-year course ranges from 300 to 500 per class, with most applicants aged 17 to 25 years old, said Gorbachev, who is not related to the Soviet Union's president.

For decades the KGB school depended on students from the Soviet military. But open antipathy to the KGB in recent years has made recruiting difficult and prompted the once super-secret organization to shed its cloak and turn on the charm.

"We need this because we need people," Gorbachev said of the recruitment day. "The more they know about us, the more people will want to enroll. ... And the more people enroll, the better for us, because that gives us a choice and we can select the best people."

The school was founded in 1930 under dictator Josef Stalin to train members of the organization first called the Cheka, then GPU, NKVD and finally KGB. It teaches everything from radio engineering and computer science to political economics and philosophy.

"Before we let someone attach their name to the Chekists, it's very important to be convinced that the person wants to dedicate himself completely to the service of the people and the motherland," the school's director, Lt. Gen. Leonid Posnikov, told the potential recruits.

Today's KGB needs people who are honest, sincere and "capable of fulfilling huge intellectual and physical loads," Posnikov said.

Never mind that old image of skulking goons arresting anti-Communist dissidents at the command of Kremlin leaders, he said.

"To be or not to be a member of any party is the personal business of each person," Posnikov told the audience. "If you want to join a party that is going to fight the present constitutional system, then you should decide for yourself ... but outside our school."

Two-party plan best move now

Hidden in the long shadows of the Soviet Union's colossal economic failure is the massive breakup of the Communist Party.

About 3 million members have deserted the party in the past year and a half. The communists numbered 19.2 million members in January of 1990 and 16.2 million now. The exodus from Komsomol, the party's youth organization, is even greater — a nosedive from 42 million in 1988 to about 23 million today.

There is a new movement to limit communist cells. Party members complain that they are suffering psychologically because noncommunists are not well disposed toward them. Some communists even claim they are being persecuted for their beliefs.

This background indicates why former Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and other reformers are founding a new political party. They plan to launch a national challenge to the communists.

The party newspaper Pravda explains that the communists are in such disarray because of the shock of losing absolute power. It also complains that the party lacks new quality leaders. Current members are sharply divided into two groups — advocates of the old Stalinist hard line and those insisting the party must reform itself from within if it is to survive.

The breakup of the party, although not prominent in the debate about the country's future, is extremely important in view of the introduction of more and more local elections. The party will no longer rule the cities and towns of the republics. Vast changes are inevitable. The Soviet parliament — following the lead of legislatures in many of the republics — has moved to allow private ownership of industry.

A two-party system in the Soviet Union would be the surest manifestation that democracy and freedom are moving toward inexorable triumph. It would be a vast victory for the people.

Who sold the Iraqis all those arms?

WASHINGTON — The shine is off the victory in the Persian Gulf War as patriotism is eclipsed by the next inevitable phase — the questions about Washington's role in arming Saddam Hussein in the years leading up to the war.

Anderson

Congressional investigators are conducting an enormous probe into allegations that the pro-Iraqi tilt of the Reagan and Bush administrations allowed Iraq to buy technology that it later used in weapons turned against U.S. troops.

In one case we examined, it appears that the Bush administration not only winked at the export of sensitive technology to Iraq, but may have stopped legitimate law enforcement efforts to interdict the trade.

The case centers around an engineering consultant and petroleum expert, Bob Bickel, who worked for about 20 years as an undercover informant for the U.S. Customs Service. In the normal course of Bickel's engineering work, he would keep Customs informed about what he thought were suspicious orders filled for foreign buyers.

Bickel told our associate Dean Boyd that in 1989 he was hired by a now-defunct company in Houston to give advice to a foreign buyer on oil-related technology. The Houston company was acting as the broker. The buyer turned out to be an Iraqi, and the technology he was shopping for began to look less like it was made for the oil business and more like it was made for the war business.

Bickel was given a shopping list that the Iraqi wanted filled, including a phased-ray antenna system that could potentially be used in a missile tracking and guidance system. Bickel called the contact in Customs that he had always worked with and alerted him to what was going on. The San Antonio Customs office opened an investigation on the theory that the materials the Iraqi wanted were subject to strict export laws.

But the investigation didn't get very far. The Customs team sent inquiries to Washington and Bickel alerted the Houston broker who had hired him that an investigation was afoot into the Iraqi client. The response from the broker was unexpected. He allegedly told Bickel and the Customs investigators that he was connected to the U.S. intelligence community. Then he clammed up.

It wasn't long before Bickel got the word — Customs officials in Washington had told San Antonio to cancel the investigation. Bickel's contact in Customs called Washington and was told that the State and Commerce Departments were behind the decision. Some very important people didn't want anyone nosing around the technology deal.

Months later, the case was raised again in a meeting in May 1990 of Customs officials in Houston. Bickel and his Customs contact gave them a report and urged them to reopen the investigation. They reviewed the file and decided that the case would remain closed.

Today, congressional investigators believe the Iraqi buyer was working for Ishan Barbouti, an Iraqi arms dealer. Barbouti is suspected by U.S. intelligence agencies to have been a major player in the construction of a chemical weapons plant in Libya. And he bankrolled at least four businesses in the United States that were producing materials that may have been sent secretly to Iraq for use in weapons.

Barbouti died mysteriously in London last July — some say at the hands of Israeli agents who were angry about his success at arming Iraq. Customs is now investigating the business ventures of his son, Haidar Barbouti, who has a base of operations in Houston where he owns two shopping centers and a $1.4 million mansion. Customs is trying to pinpoint the source of the younger Barbouti's wealth to determine if it was gleaned from his father's arms deals.

COSTLY DELAYS — There are more than 1,400 known or suspected hazardous contamination sites on 1,500 U.S. military bases. At least 96 of them are on the Environmental Protection Agency's Superfund list of the most lethal dumping sites in America. But it isn't the fault of the military that they haven't been cleaned up. Budget Director Richard Darman exercises absolute control over which cleanup jobs will be funded, and which ones won't. Darman thinks he can save money by delaying even serious cleanup operations, so he orders his minions to sit on the regulations ordering those cleanups. His environmental stalemating is typical of the short-sighted Bush administration.

MINI-EDITORIAL — George Bush claims he gave equal weight to women when he was trying to come up with a new Supreme Court justice nominee, but he said that his nominee, Clarence Thomas, simply turned out to be the "best man for the job." In the press conference announcing the nomination of Thomas, Bush corrected himself by saying that he was really looking for the "best person" for the job. But then he again lapsed into his "best man" description. No wonder Bush couldn't find a woman for the job. She would not only have to be a recognized legal scholar of the appropriate political persuasion, but she would have had to be the best man for the job too.

Sununu's mistake is no laughing matter

White House Chief of Staff John Sununu has embarrassed his boss again, and this time he's not making a joke of it.

Caught violating travel rules for the second time in as many months, Sununu is contrite, and rightfully so. Though President Bush is brushing off critics' suggestions that Sununu resign, his frustration — and that of the American people — is clear.

Chastened just two months ago for political use of expensive, taxpayer-funded military aircraft for personal and political travel, Sununu was called down again last week for providing inaccurate information to White House Counsel Boyden Gray's office about who paid for a flight he made to Chicago. As it turns out, Sununu solicited the flight himself, which is against White House ethics rules.

To keep Sununu from making more mistakes, Bush has ordered Sununu to make all travel arrangements through the Office of Administration. That's on top of the requirement issued last month that he get approval from Gray's office.

As Bush says, the rules aren't that complicated.

It's almost as if Sununu thinks he's so busy with high-level political intrigue that he can't be bothered with the details of proper, ethical behavior, that the nagging questions of reporters and others are beneath his notice because he's so important.

He'd do well to remember that he's only so important because the American people had faith in his boss, and his boss has placed a high priority on ethics and propriety.

National energy policy remains worthwhile goal

Promoted with great fanfare almost two years ago, the idea of establishing a national energy strategy is dying a slow, agonizing death in Washington.

A proposed policy was put forth earlier this year by Energy Secretary James Watkins. It was an abysmal effort. It said the country should steer a steady-as-she-goes course and rely on fossil fuels and a rejuvenated nuclear power industry in the coming decades. Alternative and renewable sources of energy were given short shrift.

Now the proposal is in the clutches of Congress. Various versions are being debated. But it is becoming apparent that the infighting on this topic could doom a coherent national energy policy.

This cynical viewpoint isn't echoed, naturally enough, by some in the Bush administration and on Capitol Hill. They contend that something will emerge from Washington, if not this year, then next.

So what happens if a national energy strategy isn't forthcoming? The free market still will work. Energy still will be sold in the United States. It might not be as inexpensive as it could be, of course, or as plentiful. That's where a national policy might help.

CHARLEY REESE

Allow no immigration, without justification

In many of our cities, unemployment is in double digits. Many of our cities are scratching for funds to provide for infrastructure and public education. Everywhere we have large numbers of Americans living in poverty.

Reese

Then why in the name of reason does Congress admit nearly 900,000 immigrants every year — and is talking, even now, about admitting more under various categories? Nine hundred thousand souls is a new major metropolitan area per year.

It's time to shut the door, at least for a few years, until we have a chance to get our house in order financially, economically, and socially. We should shut it on a non-discriminatory basis — to everyone.

The United States in 1991 is not the United States of 1890. We have neither the need nor the ability to absorb large numbers of immigrants without aggravating really serious problems in our society. We need time, for one thing, to assimilate the millions of relatively recent immigrants already here. There are forces at work that would tend to Balkanize the United States and this challenge has to be met if we wish to leave our children and grandchildren a viable country in which to live.

No kidding, we are facing a problem of historic proportions and to allow the politicians in Washington to go on catering to special interest groups in a business-as-usual fashion can have disastrous results.

Nor are we under any moral obligation to accept any immigrants, either as immigrants or refugees. It's a tough world. There are an estimated 15 million refugees in various places and more millions of people who would, naturally enough, love to get into the United States in the hopes of building a better life for themselves.

Our first moral obligation, however, is to our own people, millions of whom are also desperate for a better life, and when I say our own people, I mean all of them — black, white, Anglo, Hispanic, Asian or whatever. Anybody who's here is a full-fledged American, and it is the welfare of all these Americans that must be made a priority of the government.

God knows I have sympathy for people suffering in foreign countries, but I'm tired of seeing Americans suffer while American largesse and American policy are diverted to non-American causes. Americans, since the end of World War II, have without too much exaggeration carried the rest of the world on its shoulders and it's time to shuck the burden.

Congress not long ago increased immigration by 35 percent and as I said earlier, several attempts are being made to further increase immigration. This isn't rational or kind. It's first of all catering to ethnic lobbyists. It's second of all catering to those who see immigration as means to push down America's living standards and to make significant political changes. And third, it's stupid.

Does anybody think New York City has lots of surplus resources? How about Grand Rapids, Michigan? Their unemployment rate is 17.2 percent. And, of course, the federal government has no deficit and no Himalayan-sized public debt, does it?

WILLIAM SAFIRE

There's no wearware to go but warewhere?

Let the speaker beware: The combining form -ware is everyware.

According to Howard Gardner, a professor of education at Harvard, a new use of the ubiquitous -ware popped up in connection with a recent meeting of the Cognitive Science Society that concentrated on artificial intelligence. Gary Lynch, a neurobiologist investigating the mysteries of memory, I forget at what school, recalled he felt completely out of place at the conference, "a student of wetware among the computer hackers."

Safire

Since the early 80s, wetware has meant "the human brain," presumably because it is moist when removed from the cranium. Other coinages were possible — skullware, grayware, even noodleware leap to the mindware — but wetware has been adopted by neuroscientists to differentiate the working of the human mind from the software that drives the hardware in a computer. Alan Stern of Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y., suggests that dryware may soon be used to denote the entire hardware-software spectrum in comparisons with human thinking.

The term ware for "manufactured thing" has been kicking around for the better part of the millennium after making its debut in the English abbot Aelfric's "Homilies" circa 1000. Robert K. Barnhart's dictionary of etymology makes a guess at the origin: perhaps the original meaning was "object of care," related to waer, "aware, cautious," akin to beware.

A peddler showed his wares, and in the 14th century decided to call the place he stored them a warehouse. By 1440, tools and parts of machines were hardware; that led to chinaware and earthenware (we're in the 17th century), kitchenware, glassware and tableware. In this century, every generation has its ware: first giftware, then in 1921 housewares, in 1943 spongeware — that's earthenware with color spattered or sponged on — and then, in 1950, the trademark Tupperware.

With the software explosion in our generation came courseware ("programs written to teach"), firmware ("programs implanted in a read-only-memory device," combining hardware and software for a specific task), shareware ("copyrighted software to be used and copied without charge, but not on a regular basis"), and freeware ("software in the public domain" to be used as freely as a good metaphor in a presidential speech).

What about the wear in men's wear, sportswear, swimwear, sleepwear and the new dancewear? No; that wear and the other ware are homophones, words that sound the same but are spelled differently and have different meanings. Until there is a special uniform chosen by the users of softwear, there is, as Gertrude Stein would say, no warewear.

Governor orders state employees back to work

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Gov. Lowell P. Weicker Jr. ordered public employees to report for work today, ending a weeklong partial shutdown of state government that closed most state parks over the holiday weekend.

But the state remained without a budget Sunday, going into the second week of a new fiscal year.

At a news conference Sunday, Weicker announced he would neither sign nor veto a special continuing resolution to restart state government and keep it running until July 14. The resolution will become law Tuesday without Weicker's signature.

The shutdown, which idled about 20,000 state workers whose jobs were not directly linked to public safety and welfare, was imposed by Weicker when the new budget year started July 1 without a spending plan in place.

Connecticut residents fumed as 25 of the state's 28 parks were closed. All 28 parks will be open today.

"People are fed up. They want to see some resolution," said Pat Hosey, a Hamden resident interviewed at an Irish festival in New Haven.

Connecticut was among several states without budgets Sunday. Maine also endured a partial shutdown of state services. And in Pennsylvania, thousands of state paychecks were not issued Friday.

In Connecticut, Weicker and legislative leaders met in private Sunday to discuss the budget, but they remained split on whether the state should impose an income tax as Weicker has proposed.

The governor, who won election last year as an independent, again rebuked the Legislature for failing to pass a budget and predicted the $942 million budget deficit carried over from last year will continue to mount.

"We're out of money," Weicker said. "What I will not do is cook the figures or disguise the solution. The hole is going to get bigger and bigger and bigger."

More talks between Weicker and legislators were scheduled for today.

Weicker had no estimate of how much money, if any, was saved by the shutdown. It remained unclear whether furloughed workers will be paid for the time off. Union leaders have threatened court action if the workers are not paid. The administration maintains it can furlough workers in an emergency.

Maine lawmakers in Augusta approved a tentative budget plan Saturday in the first step toward breaking a partisan impasse that shut down many government agencies last week. Budget negotiators struck a deal for filling the last $32 million hole in a two-year, $3.2 billion spending blueprint through mid-1993.

Both houses of the Democratic-controlled Legislature approved the measure and sent it to Republican Gov. John R. McKernan, who was expected to make a decision on the spending plan Sunday evening.

McKernan and his GOP allies have insisted on workers' compensation changes to curb business insurance costs as a condition for accepting nearly $300 million in income, sales and gasoline tax increases being counted on to finance the budget.

Two legislative committees wrestled Sunday with workers' compensation proposals.

Even if McKernan signs the budget, allowing more than 10,000 state employees to return to work, it would expire Wednesday unless a compromise is reached on workers' compensation.

The governor has demanded reforms in Maine's mandatory insurance system to cover on-the-job injuries that would reduce business costs, put at $400 million to $500 million, by about one-third.

In Pennsylvania, budget negotiators returned to the table Sunday after a three-day holiday break.

Last week, the Republican-controlled Senate passed two temporary spending plans to keep the state running for another month. But Gov. Robert P. Casey, a Democrat, said he would veto the stopgap measure if it made its way to his desk.

The impasse has stopped funding to schools, the elderly and 10,000 state employees. Several hundred payless state workers protested in the Capitol last week, urging lawmakers to approve a budget.

In Illinois, state services have been unaffected by budget negotiations that stalled Saturday when Democrats rejected a Republican compromise proposal aimed at easing a budget gap.

Gov. Jim Edgar, a Republican, has threatened to shut down some state services if the problem isn't solved, but has not set a deadline. Talks continued Sunday.

Ex-CIA officer may get plea bargain

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former CIA officer is negotiating a possible plea agreement with prosecutors investigating the Iran-Contra scandal, sources familiar with the probe said Sunday.

Alan Fiers may plead guilty to a misdemeanor in exchange for his testimony about higher-ups inside the agency, including Robert Gates, said the sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Fiers' lawyer, Stanley Arkin, hasn't returned phone calls to his office in New York over the past week. Reports of a possible plea agreement first appeared in Sunday's editions of The Washington Post.

For the past year, the office of independent counsel Lawrence Walsh has been delving into how much the CIA and the office of then-Vice President Bush knew about Oliver North's secret operation to resupply the Contras in 1985 and 1986.

CIA officials say they knew few details; aides in Bush's office said they knew nothing.

Mary Belcher, a spokeswoman for Walsh's office, declined to comment last week about a possible plea agreement involving Fiers.

Fiers, now retired from the CIA, was chief of the agency's Central American Task Force.

He had occasional contact during that period with Gates, President Bush's nominee to become CIA director. The Senate Intelligence Committee will consider the Gates' nomination later this month.

Fiers worked closely with North when the National Security Council aide was running the Contra network. Yet Fiers denied in sworn testimony to Congress late in 1986 that he knew anything about resupplying the Contras.

North's network circumvented a congressional ban that prohibited the CIA from supplying military aid to the rebels fighting the Nicaragua government.

Fiers later admitted he "could have been more forthcoming" with Congress.

He denied lying, but said: "I was a member of the administration team. I wasn't going to break ranks with the team. ... My frame of mind was to protect."

Retired officer wasn't 'Rambo-type'

■ Colleagues of former Denver police officer arrested for murder said he never had any on-the-job problems.

By Sandy Shore

DENVER (AP) — During 25 years with the Denver Police Department, James King was known as a quiet professional who got the job done. At home, the retired sergeant was a gentle father who built model trains and puttered in his garden.

King

"He wasn't a Rambo-type individual. He was just steady, easy, doing his job," said Detective Byrl Freeman, who attended the police academy with King.

But the placid life King and his family knew disintegrated Wednesday when he was arrested in connection with the slayings of four unarmed security guards during a Father's Day bank robbery.

King, 54, is being held without bond for investigation of four counts of first-degree murder and one count of aggravated robbery. Prosecutors plan to file charges Tuesday.

On June 16, a silver-haired gunman with a moustache maneuvered his way through the United Bank of Denver's complex electronic security equipment to a counting room where employees were tallying an estimated $1 million in weekend receipts, police said.

After ordering the employees into another room, the gunman took an undisclosed amount of cash and stripped the videocameras of tapes that might identify him.

The bodies of three guards were found in a security control room. The fourth guard, who investigators speculate was forced to help the gunman enter the secured area, was discovered hours later in a basement. All were unarmed and were shot to death.

During a manhunt by the FBI and Denver police, authorities interviewed more than 50 people, including King, who worked for about a year as a weekend security guard at the bank until he resigned last fall.

Denver police Detective Dave Neil would not comment on what led to King's arrest. "We want to make sure that everything is done by the book," Neil said.

King graduated first in his class from the Denver Police Academy in 1961. He was never involved in any shootings or on-the-job problems, said Freeman.

"He was one of those officers who put in their 25 years and never was in the spotlight, but did his job," Neil said.

King retired five years ago with a $20,000-a-year pension and worked odd jobs, including a stint as a private investigator.

Bank officials declined to discuss King.

Although acquaintances said King had no signs of financial problems, he filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy in 1987, according to a KCNC-TV news report. Bankruptcy documents cited in the broadcast said he owed more than $90,000, including $65,000 on his house, and only had $3,844 in assets.

After retirement, King and his wife, Carol, settled into a home with a tidy yard in a middle-class neighborhood. The couple have three grown sons, Jim, Greg and David.

Neighbors said King was a quiet man who kept to himself. He enjoyed playing chess and assembling model trains and cars, as well as working on his house and in his yard, said Spence Wood, a neighbor.

"He's just kind of a quiet, easy-going type individual," Wood said.

King's family has an unlisted telephone number and was unavailable for comment late last week.

In a KCNC-TV news telecast aired Thursday, Carol King said her husband was innocent and that his arrest was "a humiliating experience."

Jim King said his father was a great guy who "doesn't even speed on the highway."

Man gives fiancee gift of life

BRIDGETON, Mo. (AP) — No matter what Bill Mitts gives Karen Baker as a wedding present, it will not equal the gift he's already given her.

He donated one of his kidneys to her in a transplant operation performed June 20 in suburban St. Louis. Both are out of the hospital now and looking forward to being married in the fall.

None of Baker's brothers and sisters were compatible.

Meanwhile, Baker's diabetes was worsening. "Karen was desperately sick, especially for about a month leading up to the operation," Mitts said.

"I watched Karen's hopes for a kidney dwindle to almost nothing. I knew that I was her blood type, and I couldn't just sit and watch her suffer."

The 42-year-old Vietnam War veteran said he'd been through a lot in life, but was still a "little scared" when it came to giving up a kidney.

"When I saw her suffering, I had to quit being scared and help," he said. "Once I realized a person can live off one kidney, or even part of one kidney, that took the fear away."

DePaul Health Center's renal transplant director, Beth Dark, called the couple's genetic matchup unusual.

"It's quite something that he did," Dark said. "Karen would have had a wait of six months to a year, and she would have continued to be very sick on dialysis and unable to work."

"They prepared us for a rejection experience, but it hasn't happened," Mitts, 42, said. "My kidney never stopped working when they took it out of my body and put it in Karen's body."

"It was a very special gift — more special than a ring," Baker, 32, said. "I haven't been sick since. I feel I could do anything."

GOP worried about staffers at convention

HOUSTON (AP) — Before the national Republican Party convenes in the Astrodome next year, GOP leaders want the city to rid the area of prostitutes and traffic snarls and agree not to house delegates in six nearby "strip" motels.

GOP officials told The Houston Post they are concerned for the safety of the party's volunteer staff who might have to room near the Astrodome, near a somewhat seedy section of South Main Street known for prostitution and drug dealing.

If the six motels are not used, it would take 800 rooms out of circulation and create a tight housing market during the event.

The crunch would mean making alternative arrangements for about 5,000 workers. Houston already is hard-pressed to meet room demands for the expected 40,000 delegates, news media and visitors during the convention. Party officials said some workers may be assigned rooms in Galveston, some 60 miles southeast of Houston.

Motel and other business managers in the Main Street area said they, too, would like to see the area cleaned up.

"When (the prostitutes) are not walking the streets, the drug dealers are out," said the manager of one motel approved to receive GOP convention workers.

Mayor Kathy Whitmire, who said she was unaware of the GOP's concerns, said the Main Street area is "something that needs to be dealt with regardless of whether the Republican convention or any convention is coming to town."

NAACP could endorse Thomas nomination

HOUSTON (AP) — The executive director of the NAACP said Sunday the nation's largest civil rights organization will review writings and votes by U.S. Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas before deciding on an endorsement.

Benjamin Hooks said the endorsement is one of the major issues before the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which has gathered here for its 84th annual national convention.

Hooks said the organization's board of directors will discuss Thomas' possible appointment in a meeting Tuesday. But, he said, "the convention itself may decide to work with a resolution" on Thomas' appointment before then.

President Bush nominated Thomas, 43, last week to succeed Thurgood Marshall on the Supreme Court. Thomas, who is black, easily won Senate confirmation in 1989 to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

"We have disagreed with Judge Thomas in the past — vigorously," Hooks said. But he said he would not discount an NAACP endorsement of Thomas.

"The problem I have with the current nominee is really a two-fold approach," Hooks said. "First of all, we were sure that we wanted the president to appoint an African-American. On the other hand, we wanted him to appoint a nominee who embraced at least a part of the philosophy of Justice Marshall."

He said he was unsure whether Thomas shared enough of Marshall's views to aid the nation's black population. Marshall is the only black ever to have served on the high court.

"We're not going to let race blind us to the totality of the situation," Hooks said.

NAACP leaders did not expect Bush to nominate a liberal candidate who agreed with all of the organization's stands, he said.

Hooks said he did not think there would be a consensus on Thomas' appointment among liberal organizations that traditionally have been allies on issues. And, he said, he would not be surprised if there wasn't a consensus among NAACP members on the issue.

"I think NAACP, in some degree, is a microcosm of America as a whole," Hooks said. "I think there's a debate in the black community. However that will not be solved easily. I would suspect, but I haven't been told, there are some differences of opinion among the delegates" on Thomas' appointment.

As long as there are sunsets, open prairies, cattle to herd, and horses to ride, there will always be cowboys. There will be cowboys, cowgirls and all of those want-to-be cowpokes in their pickup trucks.

Most anybody, you would think, who has ever sniffed the dust of the American West and who has seen a real cowboy on horseback wants to experience the imagined freedom of riding the range.

Cowboys are romantics.

They love a life that isn't always easy. Sometimes it's lonely out on the range. But it's a sweet loneliness. There's always something going on even if the lone cowboy is the only ranch hand in sight.

The windmill is pulling the water of life from within the bowels of the Earth.

Coyotes, at least as hardy as mesquite, are yipping in the distance.

Police chief says he will examine baton policy

FORT WORTH (AP) — The baton a Fort Worth police officer used to repeatedly beat a handcuffed suspect was made mandatory equipment by Police Chief Thomas Windham after a teenager was struck with a metal flashlight.

However, last Wednesday's incident, videotaped by a witness and broadcast nationwide, has caused Windham to once again examine his department's policies and training practices, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Sunday.

Ernest Anderson, 21, was in Officer E.J. Parnell's patrol car en route to the Tarrant County Jail when he reportedly kicked out a rear window and tried to jump out onto Interstate 30.

Parnell stopped the car, removed Anderson and was videotaped striking him at least 28 times with a baton. A woman videotaped the beating from a home near the highway and gave the tape to a television station.

Anderson, released Friday on $2,500 bond for criminal mischief, theft, resisting and evading arrest, was expected to surrender to police today on an unrelated charge.

Anderson is a suspect in the June 26 attempted murder of a Fort Worth man, according to Lt. Alvin Allcon, a police spokesman.

Windham told the Star-Telegram that he would examine how Fort Worth police are trained in the use of the baton and in handling unruly suspects.

"We are going to do some review of some of the training we have done and look at some of the procedures we use in transporting individuals of this type," Windham said.

"It's way early for us to make a (policy) determination."

In a January memo to his nearly 1,000 police officers, Windham stated that all officers must wear the standard-issue 26-inch hardwood baton while they are in uniform.

The order was intended to prevent repeats of an incident last July, when police Officer Kevin Kleinert was accused of beating a 16-year-old boy with a metal flashlight, the newspaper reported.

"The reason we did that was to preclude officers from having to resort to the heavy-duty flashlight that most of them carry — we had complaints about that in the past," Windham explained.

Kleinert was fired and charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, although a grand jury declined to indict him. Kleinert is awaiting appeal of his dismissal before an arbitrator.

"Metallic flashlights shall be regarded as dangerous instruments," Windham wrote in the January memo. "... Properly utilized, the baton is an effective tool that can prevent the escalation of an incident to the point where deadly force may have otherwise been necessary."

Windham and police trainers agree that the double-handed over-the-head strikes that Parnell used on Anderson violated all sensible use of the baton.

Department guidelines specify that the "baton is used as a defensive weapon" and that an "officer must have a reasonable apprehension of injury to use the weapon."

Last month, the department instituted a mandatory two-day refresher course in baton use. Officials at the Police Training Center said Saturday that Parnell — like 60 percent of the police force — has not been through the 16-hour refresher course.

The Fort Worth Police Officers Association has opposed Windham's baton decree from the day it was issued, saying that officers should decide whether to wear batons.

As part of the baton refresher course that was scheduled to resume today, the police officers view another beating incident captured on videotape — the March 3 beating in Los Angeles of motorist Rodney King by a group of officers.

"It's an example of what can happen if you do what you're not authorized to do," said Training Sgt. J.D. Sullivan.

In another development, Anderson's attorney, Mark Daniel, told the Star-Telegram that he questioned the timing of new attempted murder charges against Anderson.

"The timing is suspect to me," Daniel said. "At the same time he's in jail and involved in a police beating, they put together this warrant. You figure it out. I'm just saying the timing is awfully suspect."

The June 26 shooting developed from a fight between two men dating the same woman, witnesses told police.

The victim, Tony Bradford, 21, got into an argument with a man at a house and they went out on a porch, according to a police report.

As Bradford turned to leave, the other man pulled out a .25-caliber automatic handgun and shot Bradford in the back of his left hip.

Bradford was taken from the scene in stable condition and treated at Harris Methodist Fort Worth.

Lawmaker unveils license plates that will honor Vietnam, gulf vets

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Vietnam and Persian Gulf veterans are being recognized for their wartime service with special license plates approved by the Texas Legislature.

State Rep. Robert Junell, D-San Angelo, led support for the legislation creating three new military-related specialized license plates — honoring Vietnam veterans, Desert Storm participants and Coast Guard Auxiliary members.

The plates were unveiled Saturday during a presentation attended by about 30 people on the lawn of the Tom Green County Courthouse.

"There are many preconceptions of how laws are passed," Junell said. "Many think it's the work of the big lobbyists. Well, that's partly right.

"In San Angelo, the Concho Valley Vietnam Veterans Association helped. They asked me about passing legislation for license plates to honor the vets. Well, we did it."

Armando Vasquez, president of the Concho Valley Vietnam Veterans Association Chapter 457, was presented a plate by Junell.

"It's great. I love it," Vasquez said. "I didn't waste my vote on you," he added, smiling at Junell.

"How about the veterans of World War I?" yelled an older man in the crowd.

These two special license plates, approved by the Legislature to honor Vietnam and gulf war veterans, were unveiled Saturday at the Tom Green County Courthouse in San Angelo. State Rep. Robert Junell, D-San Angelo, led support for the measure.

Smiling, Junell said, "I'll work on that next."

To receive the plates, the veterans must submit a proof of service to the motor vehicle registrar's office at the time of application. An additional $10 fee will be assessed to the regular fee. The plates will be available after Sept. 1.

Vasquez said the chapter's next project will be to push for an all-veteran memorial to be erected on the lawn of the Tom Green County Courthouse.

Firms lobby for space station

HOUSTON (AP) — Aerospace companies in Houston have banded together to lobby for the survival of Space Station Freedom.

In May, a U.S. House funding committee voted to scrap the $30 billion project at the Johnson Space Center, before the full House voted last month to restore nearly all of the $1.9 billion that was cut out of the project for the next fiscal year. A Senate funding panel takes up the issue this week.

The Clear Lake Economic Development Foundation is spearheading a drive to save the program, which could provide an estimated 13,000 jobs and a $1 billion boon.

Laura Van Ness, a foundation official, said contractors have prepared a list of benefits of the space station for Johnson Space Center tourists. The package includes instructions for writing their congressmen.

"We can't do any arm-twisting," she said. "But we've been trying to get everybody to write. We need to light a fire under their constituents."

The foundation also has printed thousands of bumper stickers for Johnson Center employees.

"We were going to start working with the schools," said Ms. Van Ness. "But since they're out of school, the kids are kind of hard to get a hold of."

A McDonnell-Douglas Corp. spokesman said its employees also are involved in the lobbying. The aerospace firm would build the space station's framework and parts of its operating system in Houston.

"We're involved in a variety of activities to make the vote favorable," said Mike Dennard of McDonnell-Douglas' customer support organization. "We're encouraging people to talk to groups and write their congressmen.

"This is going to be good for Houston," he said. "It's good for the state, too. And it's really not an either-or situation. We're a big enough, strong enough country to be able to do all of these things.'

Opponents of the station argue that federal dollars could be better spent on veterans and housing programs.

Once the Senate funding panels vote on their part of the budget, the program goes to the full Senate for debate. The House and Senate then will hash out a single budget with a final amount for the space station.

President Bush has vowed, however, to veto the budget if it doesn't have money for the program.

RODEO: Event celebration of cowboy's heritage

dusty, leathery-faced cowboy, hardened on the outside and tender at heart, becomes the dogie's loving caretaker.

He savors life, especially new life, on the range.

Pretty soon, he finds a mother cow to take on another nursing calf.

At roundup time, the rancher, the trail boss, and the cowpunchers get together to bring their cattle into the corral for calf branding.

For ranch hands, calf branding is a celebration. It's a get-together. It's work, but, mostly, it's fun.

There's bountiful camaraderie. There is the common love of the outdoors, the excitement of working cattle horseback, and the endearment of a sensitive, trusting, and sometimes skittish ol' horse.

There is the thrill of roping a young calf or an ol' steer, of cutting a head from a herd, of penning cattle, of milking out a wild cow that has lost her calf.

There is the quiet euphoria of a rousing sunrise and the solace of a warm, nurturing campfire about sundown.

And there is the pride of the camp cook, who is pretty much the camp boss at feeding time. He watches cowboys, young and old, gather around the chuck-wagon to eat whether the food is any count or not. Mostly, it's better than good.

Any ol' honest cowboy will tell you that there's nothing better, nothing more satisfying, than cowboy coffee early in the morning. It's good no matter what — even if the grounds are from yesterday's brew.

And that whole cowboy scene gives rise each year, just like it did last week at the Midland County Rodeo Arena, to rodeoing and cutting up at the neighborly Midland Ranch Rodeo.

Ranchers, cowboys, cowgirls, country folks and townspeople all come together.

It is a celebration of the West Texas ranching heritage.

Officers chase drag racers

DALLAS (AP) — The city's new drag racing task force designed to crack down on illegal racing has no problem finding offenders. The problem is catching up to them.

"They've got these fancy, high-performance cars that can really blow us away," said Sgt. Paul Fletcher Jr., who heads the task force. "If we had a dozen more officers out here, things might be different."

The task force is designed to clamp down on illegal drag racing and the gambling, drug and alcohol abuse usually linked to the activity. The group was formed shortly after a shooting rampage at a illegal drag race June 30 that left five people wounded.

"It's more than just racing," said Fletcher. "It's becoming increasingly more violent."

Racing fans — ranging from teen-agers to the middle-aged — gather along Northwest Highway in Dallas and other streets in the warehouse district to search for spots to race their high-performance cars and motorcycles. On many streets, dark skid marks have blackened the asphalt.

Oil prices rise

News of a disruption in production on the North Sea sent oil prices higher Friday. On the New York Mercantile Exchange, West Texas Intermediate for August delivery rose 22 cents to close at $20.89 per barrel. The move prompted local crude purchasers such as Permian Corp., Scurlock Oil and Texaco Trading and Transportation to raise the posted price 25 cents to $19.75.

Secretaries meet

The Permian chapter, Professional Secretaries International, are scheduled to meet Tuesday at the Midland Hilton beginning at noon. Guest speaker will be Sgt. Phil Maxwell of the Midland Police Department, who will speak on "Body Language." Reservations can be made by calling 688-0484.

HMH head to speak

Sam E. Hilburn, president of HMH Operators Inc., will be the guest speaker at Thursday's meeting of the Midland Desk and Derrick Club, at the Petroleum Club beginning at 6:30 p.m. Hilburn's topic will be "Early Petroleum Industry in the Middle East." He will discuss both the history and development of the use of petroleum in the Middle East.

Stock market slow

NEW YORK — Stock prices were mixed and activity dropped off to a six-month low on Wall Street Friday in a session sandwiched between the July 4 holiday and a weekend. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 2.23 to 2,932.47, reducing its gain for the week to 25.72 points.

Dollar takes hit

NEW YORK — The dollar fell against most major currencies in extremely thin trading Friday, responding to technical factors and a worse-than-expected jobless report. Gold prices rose in foreign trading. The dollar fell to 1.8265 marks in New York from late Thursday's 1.8348 marks in London and late Wednesday's 1.8286 marks in New York.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.17 yen to a closing 139.23 yen.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.6165 from $1.6030 late Thursday.

Other dollar rates in New York, compared with late Thursday prices in London and late Wednesday prices in New York, included: 1.5745 Swiss francs, down from 1.5830 in London and 1.5793 in New York; 6.1840 French francs, down from 6.2225 in London and 6.2015 in New York; 1,358.00 Italian lire, down from 1,365.50 in London.

Plans help airlines get fiscal mileage

■ Today, 27.1 million people are members of at least one frequent flyer program.

By Dan Reed
N.Y. Times News Service

Rolfe Shellenberger remembers thinking, "We've got a winner here."

As manager of marketing planning at American Airlines, he had been charged by his superiors "to come up with a way for someone who was a very heavy traveler to win a free trip to Hawaii."

Ten years ago, Shellenberger, two American colleagues and a Dallas-based direct-mail expert hired as a consultant put together what became known as American's AAdvantage Travel Awards Program. But even the members of the small group that gave birth to the first frequent flyer program didn't understand fully the implications of what they unleashed on the world May 1, 1981.

"I don't remember exactly what the number was, but our expectations for memberships (in AAdvantage) were low, something very achievable," said Shellenberger, now a senior consultant with Runzheimer International, a major travel research, management and consulting firm.

"I think we said we expected to have about 50,000 members that first year."

They weren't even close.

More than a million people joined AAdvantage before the end of that year. And nearly a million more joined the frequent flyer programs that quickly sprouted up in 1981 at most of the nation's other carriers in response to AAdvantage.

Today, 27.1 million people are members of at least one frequent flyer program. On average, those people hold memberships in 4.6 such programs at once, meaning that altogether, the nation's airlines have issued a total of 81 million memberships to their programs.

American's AAdvantage program averages signing up 150,000 to 200,000 new members each month and will top the 15 million member mark by year's end. United's Mileage Plus program is the second-largest frequent flyer program, with more than 13 million members.

Through Dec. 31, freqent flyers had racked up a total of 855 billion mileage points — typically at the rate of 1 point per mile flown.

Randy Peterson, editor and publisher of Frequent magazine in Colorado Springs, Colo., contends that such programs have become so enormously popular that they have transcended the business world to become a part of our popular culture.

"Frequent flyer programs really have become a part of Americana," Peterson said. "Whether it's Johnny Carson mentioning them in his monologues or the Monday Night Football announcers joking that such-and-such a player has been traded so many times he's got more frequent flyer points than he can ever use, they've become a part of everyday life.

"And other businesses are now imitating them. AMC Theaters has a frequent moviegoer program. CBS is thinking about starting a frequent viewers program. Amoco, 7-Eleven, Diamond Shamrock and other gas stations and convenience stores have frequent filler programs. Radio Shack has come out with a frequent customers program. Grocery stores are coming out now with frequent shopper programs. Even fast food outlets are doing it. Beef Steak Charlies, a chain in the New York-New Jersey area, now has a frequent eaters' program."

Frequent Flyer magazine's Executive Editor Joe Brancatelli said: "Simply put, they are the most effective marketing programs the airlines have ever created."

Banc One: best little U.S. bank?

By Steve Lohr
N.Y. Times News Service

COLUMBUS, Ohio — From the troubled landscape of American banking, burdened with bad loans and falling profits, a new elite is emerging. A group of surprisingly vigorous banks, little-known outside their multistate bailiwicks, these so-called superregional banks are seen as the likely winners in the Darwinian winnowing that is now underway in the industry. They could eclipse the money-center banks like Citicorp and Chase Manhattan as the new powers of American banking.

When industry experts look for the best-run bank among these regional powerhouses, and perhaps the best bank in America, they usually end up here in Columbus at the 24-story mirrored-glass headquarters of the Banc One Corp.

Banc One has combined conservative lending, innovative technology, remarkable customer service and an uncanny ability to smoothly absorb a steady stream of acquired banks. Today, it is the nation's 22nd-largest bank, but it ranks first in several key measures of financial performance like return on assets.

Banc One executives almost brag that they do little business with the nation's biggest 1,000 or so corporations, preferring higher-margin loans to smaller companies that their vast army of community bankers know so well.

Eighty percent of the bank's commercial loans are to companies with sales of $50 million a year or less. "Our corporate lending ends about where Citibank's starts," noted George Meiling, Banc One's treasurer. The conservatism even extends to a few odd rules at the head office. Employees, for instance, are not permitted to drink coffee at their desks.

Yet Banc One has also been a pioneer in introducing new products and services, from one of the first automated teller machines in 1970 to an ATM installed last week in a McDonald's restaurant in Mansfield, Ohio. Many of its branches are open on Saturdays and Sundays. "That's when most people do much of their purchasing — it only makes sense," explained John B. McCoy, Banc One's 48-year-old chairman.

"Anyone who doubts that you can make money in basic banking need look no further than Banc One," said Lowell Bryan, a director of McKinsey & Co. "It's a terrific bank."

Radio hosts Ken and Daria Dolan pose at the WOR studio in New York earlier this month.

Pooling resources becomes way of life

By Leslie Dreyfous
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — When one paycheck, or even two, doesn't stretch far enough, pragmatism dictates the rules. And these days, the rules are continually changing.

Ken and Daria Dolan hear it in the calls they get on their New York-based national radio advice program: Family finances are more than ever a sophisticated family affair in which cooperation and compromise are key.

"My parents put their money in a passbook savings account and that was that," Ken said. "In the 1990s, it's pretty much a survival mode. The money goes on the table and couples are doing the best they can with it together."

The notion of putting a wife on an allowance seems hopelessly outdated with 53 million women in the work force. The old stereotypes no longer apply.

"In some cases, it's the wife doling out the money to hubby for buying lunches and maybe a new shirt once in a while," Daria said.

That's pretty much how it's worked out for the Dolans. Ken turns his paycheck over to Daria and she handles the family finances.

But there are about as many ways to manage a household budget as there are homes in America. The idea is to find something that works — and that can be difficult.

"The roles are in flux," said Martin King Whyte, a University of Michigan sociologist and author of "Dating, Mating and Marriage." "It's much more ambiguous now that there are two incomes and more decisions about whether the money should all go into one place."

It used to be that Dad's paycheck was enough to keep most families going. He brought home the bacon, and she paid the bills with it.

It's not that partners didn't collaborate. But even when consulting each other before making big purchases, it was clear who usually did the advising on what: Mom investigated the new dining set, Dad shopped around for the new car.

As with so much in American family life several decades ago, the lines were more clearly drawn. Men and women knew better where to stand.

Today, more than 58 percent of married women have outside jobs, according to the U.S. Department of Labor. They're asserting themselves in the workplace, and expect equal say-so at home. Men, in the meantime, are participating more than ever in running the household.

"The focus is much more 'family' financial planning today, because so many families are indeed partnerships between the husband and wife, with equal contributions," said Tom Wallace, national director of personal finance planning for Ernst & Young.

The majority of couples questioned by the Roper Organizaton in a 1990 Virginia Slims Opinion Poll said they jointly handle all major financial decisions.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Chances of getting premium stock price slim

By Bill Doyle

Q. In recent years, the brokerage firm at which I left 16 shares of stock has charged a fee for holding customers' securities. That fee is about double the $22.40 dividend on the stock. So I had the brokerage sell my shares. The commission and other selling costs totaled $41.87.

Doyle

I am a retired employee of the company whose stock is involved and later learned from the company's house organ that it had a program to repurchase 12 million shares of its stock.

You have explained that companies sometimes buy back stock from small investors, at a premium slightly above the going market price, to reduce costs of servicing small accounts.

Am I correct in thinking I could have received the premium price and avoided the commission?

A. Perhaps, but the chances of you being able to accomplish that were slim.

Buy-back programs for small amounts of stock — "odd lots" of less than 100 shares — usually last only two or three weeks. That prevents swifties from constantly purchasing odd lots in the open market and then selling at premium prices to companies with buy-back programs.

You could have received a premium price for those 16 shares only if an odd-lot repurchase plan was in effect at the time you sold. The brokerage firm could — and probably would — have handled that for you and charged a service fee, which might or might not have been lower than the commission you paid."

The brokerage firm holding your stock should have informed you if an odd-lot buy-back was in progress. Chances are it never happened.

If the shares were registered in your name and you had possession stock certificate, you could have sent the certificate to the company or its agent, received a premium price and ducked selling costs.

The company's 12-million-share repurchase plan was a quite different story. Companies sometimes do that to greatly reduce the number of shares "outstanding" — owned by stockholders. Remember that each outstanding share represents a piece of corporate ownership. After a large buy-back, each of the remaining outstanding shares owns a larger chunk of the company.

A company might accomplish a buy-back of that magnitude by announcing it will repurchase the shares at a fixed price. More often, the company buys the shares in the open market or from big institutional investors in negotiated deals.

Q. In January, I sold a small amount of stock in the company for which I worked years ago. It had been purchased through payroll deduction. I will, of course, report this as a long-term capital gain on Part II, Schedule D, of my Form 1040 federal income tax return for 1991.

As I bought shares and fractions of shares at different times, must I use a different line for each? Or, in Column b, for "Date acquired," can I put "Payroll deduction plan in the 1960s?" I have no record of the purchase dates.

A. The correct way to do it is list the stock as being acquired from one date to another date, such as "3/60 — 7/69." However, your method should satisfy the Internal Revenue Service.

DEAR ABBY

Doctor's hasty diagnosis is prescription for trouble

DEAR ABBY: I have been happily and faithfully married to my husband for 14 years. The problem is with our family doctor. Recently, my husband thought he had a bladder infection, so he went to our doctor, who ran one urine test that turned out negative. Then the doctor informed my husband that he had a sexually transmitted disease!

Van Buren

My husband asked if it was possible to have had this "sexually transmitted disease" for 14 years — or was there some other way of getting it? Also, wouldn't it be wise to run another test just to make sure?

The doctor insisted that his diagnosis was correct, then with a smirk he added, "I'm not suggesting that you run home and beat your wife, but you obviously got it from her."

Abby, no wife could be more faithful than I. I never even looked at another man in more than 14 years. My husband says he believes me, yet he's been having bad dreams ever since. I know I'd be accused of "protesting too much" if I confronted the doctor. This is a small town, and it could make matters even worse. Besides, I hear that this doctor thinks all non-churchgoers (like my husband and myself) are pretty much "scum" anyway. What can I do? I'm not taking this lightly. — BRISTLING IN ARIZONA

DEAR BRISTLING: First, change doctors — even if it means getting your checkups in a nearby town.

According to Dr. Willard Cates Jr., director of the Sexually Transmitted Disease Division of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta: "No diagnostic test is 100 percent accurate. Your husband should be retested to confirm the original test result." (Some sexually transmitted diseases can lie dormant for long periods of time; also you failed to mention which one your husband allegedly has.)

The doctor who accused you unjustly is guilty of unprofessional behavior. He was also in error in refusing to perform more definitive tests. Report him to your county medical society.

DEAR ABBY: This letter is in response to the letter from "Illinois Victim," the girl who — while being beaten by her boyfriend at a trailer park — yelled loudly for help from her neighbors, to no avail.

A young man also living in a trailer park in Illinois heard a muffled cry for help. He went outside and saw a man on top of a woman with his hands around her neck. He yelled, and the assailant tried to escape on a bicycle. But the young man chased him for almost a mile over gravel terrain in his bare feet. The man who was caught was wanted by the police for previous rapes.

When the police asked the young man who caught the alleged rapist what his motivation was, he replied (with bruised and bloodied feet), "What if that girl had been my sister? I would hope someone else would do the same thing!"

So, have faith, Abby. Good people are still out there. He even returned to Illinois after moving to California to appear in court for the prosecution, and was awarded four plaques for heroism. His name is Tyler Smith. — HIS PROUD SISTER, JENNIFER, IN ALBANY, N.Y.

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Umpire shot

DALLAS (AP) — Major-league umpire Steve Palermo, shot with another man early Sunday while trying to help two waitresses being robbed in a restaurant parking lot, does not have life-threatening injuries, but could face some paralysis.

Palmero

Palermo, an American League umpire since 1977, was in serious condition with an abdomen wound after surgery, league spokeswoman Phyllis Merhige and hospital officials said. His wounds were not considered life-threatening, Merhige said.

But Rich Garcia, Palermo's crew chief who spoke with him after the 2-hour surgery, said, "There's a possibility of some paralysis, and that's our biggest concern.

"We've got a couple of days to wait. Hopefully, he'll come out of it. There's a lot of optimism."

A second victim, Terence Mann, suffered a gunshot wound to the neck and was listed in good condition at Presbyterian Hospital in Dallas, said hospital spokeswoman Karen Harris.

Harris would not confirm if the victim was the same Terence Mann who was a defensive lineman for the NFL's Miami Dolphins in 1987-88.

Stich stuns Becker in final

■ Three-time champion falls to "other German" in shocking straight-sets match on Centre Court.

Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Michael Stich, stalking Centre Court on legs like stilts, scraped the sky with his serve and brought down a raging, worn-out Boris Becker in a shocking Wimbledon upset.

Stich, the "other German," stepped out of Becker's huge shadow and into history Sunday with a 6-4, 7-6 (7-4), 6-4 final rout that had the three-time champion storming in frustration.

It was as startling and convincing a performance by the former soccer player and soldier as his semifinal victory over defending champion Stefan Edberg.

Becker, three times a runnerup, embraced his friend and countryman after the final point on the court he has long considered his own.

"That's how I treat people who beat me at home," said Becker, who couldn't even console himself with the No. 1 ranking he regained here. "At this stage, I'd rather be two and be the Wimbledon champion."

Stich, 6-foot-4, stretched his long, bandy arms and whipped serves at up to 126 mph to drive 15 aces past Becker — and a total of 97 in the tournament. At the net, Stich's wingspan provided a shield for nearly everything Becker returned.

The tallest Wimbledon champion since Stan Smith in 1972, Stich epitomizes a new wave of power players dominating tennis even on a surface that once favored the quick and agile.

"In Darwinian terms, success at Wimbledon is now survival of the tallest rather than the fittest," former champion Arthur Ashe said, adding that it might be appropriate to seed players by height rather than rankings.

A few extra inches, combined with the new generation of bigger, more powerful rackets, give players like Stich an advantage on serves and volleys — the two most important strokes on grass.

Michael Stich celebrates his straight-set victory over fellow German Boris Becker in Sunday's Wimbledon finale.

Stich, 22, and Becker, 23, engaged in few long rallies, but even in those Stich's slingshot backhand and patience paid off.

It took only a few minutes to see which way this match would go. Becker won the toss and chose to serve, hoping to put the pressure on Stich from the start. But the strategy backfired as Becker pushed his first approach volley long, fell behind 0-30 on a backhand pass and went on to lose the game on another backhand pass.

Stich doublefaulted to open his service in the second game, and had a break point against him at 30-40, but he calmly dug himself out of trouble as he would all day.

"He started very cool," Becker said. "He made the first break point he had. Then I had a break point in the next game and I didn't. I knew from then on it's not going to be an easy match at all."

Stich fell behind in every game he served in the first set, but lost only one when Becker broke him at love to tie it 3-3.

Becker produced some of his finest shots during a superb rally in that game as Stich smashed an overhead, Becker shot back with a swing-from-the-heels forehand, Stich responded with a backhand and Becker put it away with a charging backhand half-volley past Stich.

But there were few such moments of brilliance and excitement. Becker doublefaulted twice, bellowing "No" after the second one, as Stich broke him again to take back the lead at 4-3. Stich then served out the set, coming back from 0-30 in the final game.

Becker, who had 10 aces and a total of 99 in the tournament, blamed his poor play on his tired legs and mental fatigue after jamming in all his matches in just over a week because of the repeated rain delays.

"My legs wouldn't push out as much as they normally can. That's why there wasn't as much power on (my serve) or why I wasn't as fast at the net or in the back court," he said. "My mind was very tired and wasn't up to my normal standards. That's the reason I lost."

Nothing rattled Stich, an imperturbable performer against Becker as he was against Edberg. He looked unconcerned when a protester leaped up behind a scoreboard — across the court from Princess Diana in the Royal Box — as Stich went to serve the second game of the second set. Police grabbed the protester, and Stich served up an ace, a service winner, and another before slamming an overhead to take the game.

Becker already was wearing the look of a beaten man. Neither the high-pitched squeal of a female fan yelling "C'mon Boris" at every opportunity, nor Becker's own muttering and screaming and stomping could raise his game.

Portugal wins eighth as Astros drop Reds

■ Houston rounds out the first half with a 7-3 triumph over the defending world champions.

Associated Press

HOUSTON — If Mark Portugal can finish the season the way he usually does, he figures to have his best season ever.

"After the start I've had, I feel confident that if I can go out there and have a second half like I've had the last two years, I can win 15 or 18 games," said Portugal, who became the first Houston pitcher to win eight games this season, pitching the the Astros to a 7-3 victory over the Cincinnati Reds on Sunday.

The Astros took two of three games from the defending world champion Reds in the final series leading up the Tuesday's All-Star game.

Portugal pitched 6⅓ innings, allowing three runs on six hits in the rubber game. He struck out three and walked three as Houston won for the fifth time in six games. Mike Capel finished the seventh inning and Al Osuna pitched the final two innings.

Portugal (8-4) is traditionally a slow starter. He didn't win his eighth game until Aug. 29 last year. Portugal (8-4) finished 11-10 last season, a career-

Controversies liven up the All-Star scene

By Ben Walker

Franco

Alomar

TORONTO — A little controversy sure goes a long way in livening up the All-Star game.

First, there's the festering feud between Julio Franco and Roberto Alomar.

Alomar was elected by the fans to start at second base for the American League. Franco got less than half as many votes, but thinks he is, well, about twice as good.

"I don't know how he's on the team ahead of me, but if you can prove to me that I don't deserve to start, then I'll kiss my own behind," said Franco, added as a reserve.

Alomar says that if Franco wants to see who's better, he should watch Tuesday night's game at the SkyDome — from the bench.

"I have nothing to prove. I deserve to be there. I have the numbers," Alomar said. "He's doing all the talking, I'm not going to listen.

"He's just another ballplayer," Alomar said. "He doesn't sign my paycheck. He's going to have to wait five or six innings before he gets into the All-Star game."

For the record, Alomar is batting .284 with five home runs and 37 RBIs for Toronto. He's stolen 27 bases and, with greater range in the field, has made eight errors in his first season with the Blue Jays.

Franco is hitting .318 with nine homers and 40 RBIs for Texas. He has stolen 17 bases and made 11 errors.

At least both of them are going to the game. Jose Canseco, Dave Winfield, Chili Davis, Terry Pendleton will be absent, and, as usual, there's some griping about who's on the 28-man rosters and who's not. And, most likely, there will be more complaining later by those who don't actually get into the game.

"They should pick 30 guys and play just nine innings," Boston manager Joe Morgan said. "Then everybody should play with no holding out anyone because there wouldn't be any need to save anyone for extra innings.

"A tie game? So what? Another way of getting everybody into the game would be free substitution," Morgan said. "That would make things pretty interesting."

A few years ago, Canseco made the All-Star team as a substitute, but did not get to play. That led a lot of people to come up with the same idea — permanently adding the designated hitter.

After all, who wants to see the pitcher bat in the big game? Besides, wasn't it a travesty in 1981 when, with the National League leading 5-4 in the ninth inning, the Americans ran out of players and had to let pitcher Dave Stieb bat — and strike out miserably?

Former commissioner Peter Ueberroth pushed to make the DH a part of the All-Star game. But current commissioner Fay Vincent is trying to eliminate the DH from the major leagues, and isn't anxious to see it at all, even for one summer exhibition game.

In 61 All-Star games, pitchers are a combined 17-for-146 (.116).

Franco cleared for game

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Julio Franco was cleared of heart problems on Sunday and given the go-ahead to play in the All-Star Game on Tuesday.

Cardiac specialist Dr. Charles Cramer of Arlington said after performing two procedures that the Texas second baseman's chest pains were caused, as believed Friday, by a combination of heat and caffeine.

Franco checked into Arlington Memorial Hospital Sunday morning and was given an electrocardiogram, followed by a cardiac catheterization, which checks the blood vessels of the heart for blockages.

Franco began experiencing chest pains Friday. He played Friday night, after his first EKG was declared normal, but did not play Saturday.

Earlier this week, Texas pitcher Nolan Ryan drove himself to the hospital with what he believed to be heart attack pains. After undergoing tests Wednesday, including an electrocardiogram, it was determined Ryan had strained a muscle attached to the breastbone.

best for wins.

"This is a contrast for this to happen to me this early," Portugal said. "Last I didn't get my eighth win until nearly September. Luck has played a big part of this season, and I've had some runs scored for me."

Cincinnati's Bill Doran, a former teammate of Portugal at Houston, was impressed.

"I'm not surprised about his success. He's got good stuff, and he's a good pitcher. You don't win eight games in this league without having a lot going for you."

All-Star Tom Browning (10-5) allowed four runs on eight hits in just 2 1-3 innings.

"Browning got everything up," Cincinnati manager Lou Pinella said. "I only hope that maybe the Skydome will straighten him up. We needed a good pitched game, and we didn't get it."

Houston took a 2-0 lead in the first when Craig Biggio singled, moved to second on Bagwell's single and scored on a single by Luis Gonzalez. Ken Caminiti then singled in Bagwell.

The Astros scored twice more in the third.

Mets 8, Phillies 2

PHILADELPHIA — David Cone pitched a five-hitter over 8⅔ innings and Kevin McReynolds drove in three runs as New York won its seventh straight game.

The Mets have won 11 of their last 13. All seven wins during their current streak have come on the road. New York is 26-16 on the road, best in the National League.

Cone (8-5), who led the NL in strikeouts last year, struck out eight and now leads the league with 113. He walked three.

Cone struck out the side in the first inning. He has struck out the side in the first inning four times in his last 13 starts.

Pirates 6, Expos 1

PITTSBURGH — Doug Drabek allowed five hits over seven innings and keyed a three-run fifth with an RBI single as Pittsburgh snapped a three-game losing streak.

Drabek (8-8) struck out a season-high 10 while lowering his ERA to 2.94 as the division-leading Pirates avoided their first four-game losing streak of the season.

Drabek has reversed a 1-6 start by winning six of his last seven decisions to even his record for the first time this season.

Giants 3, Padres 0

SAN FRANCISCO — John Burkett pitched a five-hitter for his first major league shutout and Will Clark homered for the second straight day as San Francisco defeated San Diego.

Burkett (5-5) struck out nine and walked four in his second complete game of the season. The Padres totalled just seven hits in losses Saturday and Sunday.

Dodgers 5, Braves 3

LOS ANGELES — Brett Butler had three hits, extending his hitting streak to 21 games, and Ramon Martinez moved into a tie for the major-league lead in victories.

Butler drove in a run as he ran his streak to 21 games, tops in the majors this season. The Dodgers are a league-best 49-31 and are in first place at the All-Star break for the 10th time since moving west in 1958.

Cardinals 8, Cubs 7

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Tom Pagnozzi singled home Pedro Guerrero over a drawn-in oufield with no outs in the 12th inning as St. Louis came from behind twice to beat Chicago.

The Cardinals had lost three straight before registering their 20th come-from-behind victory this season. The loss snapped the Cubs' three-game winning streak.

Carter, Young top MCC Scramble

Staff Report

Pete Carter and John Young downed David Griffin and Ron King on the second hole of sudden death Sunday to capture the A Division title in Midland Country Club's annual Men's Scramble Championship.

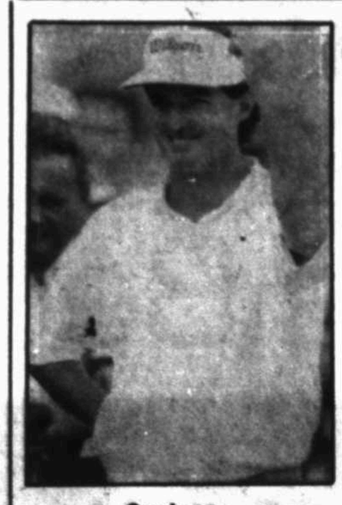
Both teams finished the two-day event tied at 115 in regulation.

John Bates and Mike Cunningham took the B Division title, also needing a sudden death hole to get by Larry Murphy and Richard Coates. Each team stood at 106 after regulation play.

Here are the final results from the Midland Country Club Men's Scramble Championship.

Division A: 1. (won playoff) Pete Carter-John Young, 115; 2. David Griffin-Ron King, 115; 3. Scott Ramsey-Hal Rasmussen, 116; 4. David Logan-Bill Kerr Jr., 117. Low Last Round: Bill Hightower-Jim Chase, 57.

Division B: 1. (won playoff) John Bates-Mike Cunningham, 106; 2. Larry Murphy-Richard Coates, 106; 3. Ed Jones-L.D. Sipes, 107; 4. Bill Bennett-Frank Agar Jr., 108. Low Last Round: Steve Harper-Vince Johnson, 54.



Cochran

Cochran runs down Norman

Associated Press

LEMONT, Ill. — Add the name of Russ Cochran, the Western Open winner, to the list of shark-shooters.

It was not the lightning-bolt single shot of Bob Tway or Larry Mize, or the last-hole heroics of Robert Gamez or David Frost, but Cochran's triumph over Greg Norman on this windy Sunday was equally dramatic and every bit as much of an upset.

Cochran, one of the few left-handers on the PGA Tour, made up seven shots on Norman over the last eight holes and scored the first victory of his 9-year career with a closing 69 and a 275 total.

"A Jekyll and Hyde round," said Norman, who has been swimming in troubled waters for more than a year now. "I stubbed my toe a bit coming home."

It was something of an understatement.

He played the first 10 holes six under par. At that point, had a five-shot lead and appeared to be on his way to an easy, slump-snapping victory, a triumph he could throw into the faces of a growing list of critics and detractors.

But it all came apart in the strong winds that raked the Dubsdread course at Cog Hill.

He bogeyed four consecutive holes and five of the last six. He twice got it deep into bushes.

Ryan toys with perfection

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Nolan Ryan took a no-hitter into the eighth inning and wound up allowing two hits in 8⅓ innings Sunday night as the Texas Rangers beat the California Angels 7-0.

Dave Winfield, who had been 1-for-22 lifetime against Ryan with 13 strikeouts, broke up Ryan's bid for an eighth no-hitter with a clean single to center leading off the eighth inning.

Gary Gaetti led off the ninth with a double to left-center field and Ryan was removed after Donnie Hill lined out to first.

The 44-year-old Ryan, who went to a hospital emergency room Wednesday when he thought pain from a pulled chest muscle might be a heart attack, had a perfect game until he walked Luis Polonia leading off the seventh. Polonia was erased when Wally Joyner hit into a double play.

Ryan (5-4) struck out 14 and walked one, the 211th double-digit strikeout game of his career and his fourth this season. At one point, he struck out seven consecutive batters, a Texas club record. Ryan, baseball's all-time strikeout leader, increased his total to 5,424.

He no-hit Toronto on May 1 and was attempting to become only the fifth pitcher in major league history to accomplish the feat twice in one season. The last one to do it — you guessed it — was Ryan in 1973.

Ryan is the only pitcher in baseball history to throw more than four no-hitters.

Ryan was dominating on a windy and humid 89-degree night in Texas. When he finally gave up a hit, he got a 2-minute ovation from the crowd of 37,307 and tipped his cap in thanks.

American

Royals 7, Athletics 5

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Danny Tartabull hit his fourth home run in two days and the Kansas City Royals beat Oakland to end an eight-game home losing streak.

Tartabull, who hit three homers Saturday, hit his 20th of the season in the seventh, chasing Stewart. He is 14-for-28 this season against Oakland with six home runs and 10 RBIs. Tartabull has homered in nine of his last 11 games.

Tigers 7, Red Sox 6

BOSTON — Bill Gullickson won for the sixth time in seven starts and Skeeter Barnes hit a three-run homer as Detroit beat Boston.

Wade Boggs had four hits for Boston, including three doubles. He doubled to lead off the ninth and was sacrificed to third. John Cerutti then got his first save, retiring Kevin Romine on a ground-out and striking out Mo Vaughn.

White Sox 4, Twins 3

CHICAGO — Dan Pasqua hit a tie-breaking home run in the eighth inning as the the Chicago White Sox beat Minnesota and sent the Twins to their ninth loss in 12 games.

With the score tied 3-3, Pasqua hit his eighth home run of the season off Mark Guthrie (5-5), who relieved to start the sixth.

Ken Patterson (3-0), the third Chicago pitcher, pitched 1⅓ innings and Bobby Thigpen finished for his 18th save in 23 chances.

Brewers 10, Indians 6

CLEVELAND — Dante Bichette drove in five runs with a single and a ninth-inning homer Milwaukee beat Cleveland.

The victory was the second in nine games for the Brewers. Cleveland, which had 18 hits, fell to 1-1 under new manager Mike Hargrove, who replaced fired John McNamara on Saturday. The Indians have lost 9 of 11 and 25 of their last 30.

Orioles 5, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Jeff Ballard pitched seven strong innings and Mike Devereaux hit a two-run homer as Baltimore beat New York, only the second loss in nine games for the Yankees.

Ballard (5-9) allowed four hits and two runs in seven innings. Mike Flanagan pitched the eighth and Gregg Olson finished the seven-hitter for his 17th save in 21 chances.

Blue Jays 5, M' 2

SEATTLE — Juan Guzman allowed three hits in eight innings and John Olerud hit his second home run in two games as Toronto beat Seattle.

Guzman (3-2) struck out out six and walked three as he won his third consecutive decision.

Family Reading Challenge 1991

Boys and Girls

Rex and Rita Saurus™ challenge you and your family to sign on for the Family Reading Challenge 1991.

The rules are simple: Read at least two books, two magazine articles and two newspaper articles between June 9 and Aug. 18 and discuss what you have read with a parent or guardian.

If you are between the ages of 5-12 and successfully complete the reading challenge, you will qualify for a nationwide drawing Sept. 6 for thousands of neat prizes. You could win an IBM Writing to Read Laboratory for your school and an IBM PC for your family, Rex and Rita Saurus hand puppets, bicycles, World Book encyclopedias and much more! Look for an official entry form in this newspaper throughout the summer.

Also watch this newspaper each week for enjoyable summer reading activities that will help you and your family read and use the newspaper together.

Rex and Rita Saurus, the "world's leading reading dinosaurs," hope that you will read MORE than just two books, two newspaper articles and two magazine articles this summer. Because Rex and Rita know that "Winners Read and Readers Win."

Don't forget to complete the entry form below as soon as you have met the requirements of the challenge.

Family Reading Challenge 1991

Rhyme Time

Choose a story from today's newspaper that interests you. Read it carefully to make sure you understand the information. Now use the information from the story to write a rap song. Then perform the rap for your family.

If "rapping" doesn't interest you, try a poem or limerick instead. If you are really feeling creative, try to set the words of your poem to a familiar tune, like "Happy Birthday."

We hope you enjoyed this. Don't forget to complete the entry form below as soon as you have met the requirements of the challenge.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, JULY 8, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Loving and optimistic, you tend to see new acquaintances through rose-colored glasses. Try to be more skeptical when others make extravagant promises. The projects you pursue in early winter can mean a lot to your future financial security. Choose your associates with special care. A hastily formed partnership could prove difficult to dissolve.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: TV executive Roone Arledge, actress Anjelica Huston, singer Steve Lawrence, ballerina Cynthia Gregory.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Now is the time to obtain approval for an important change in your business operations. Your ego receives a giant boost when others express admiration for your wit. Avoid going too far.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep any promises you have made to your loved ones. Financial matters demand your prompt attention. A special need will be fulfilled very soon. Dine out with an old and cherished friend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take all the time you need to think things through. Something you have recently made or done is the source of deep pride. Be careful to keep calm when discussing domestic problems.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Continue your creative efforts. Your intuition will play a major role in a project's success. A platonic relationship may be more valuable than a romantic encounter. Heed a warning. Go with the tide.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Stick to work projects already under way. Ignore distractions caused by your co-workers. Romance takes on a more glamorous glow. Check your wardrobe for items that need cleaning or mending.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Concentrate on doing one thing at a time. Progress is slow but certain. Get all available facts and figures before making an important presentation. Relaxing at home holds special appeal for you tonight.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Give an idea a new twist if you are hoping to recycle it. Scholastic affairs and travel matters require careful handling. Someone from your romantic past resurfaces. Take things nice and slow!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A new alliance involving friends or relatives could prove disappointing.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are highly artistic and imaginative. They love to draw pictures and play dress-up. Wise parents will let these youngsters decorate their rooms the way they like. Sympathetic listeners, these Cancerians will have lots of people confiding in them

Make certain partner knows where you stand on financial issues. Consult experts about tax matters. Romance deserves a second chance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A partnership may not be all you hoped. Count on your own initiative and intuition to pull you through. Compromise with a loved one who is in an argumentative mood. Offer alternative suggestions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): When tackling complex work assignments, be systematic. The emphasis today is on assuming greater responsibility without consulting others. Higher-ups will be impressed by your show of initiative.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not let a headstrong attitude cause trouble at home. A valuable business friendship can be cemented at a social gathering. Plan an evening on the town with that special person. Dress elegantly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You can strengthen an important relationship by straightening out your financial entanglements. Saying the right thing at the right time could rescue a languishing romance. Speak from the heart.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ107 ♡532 ♢AJ ♣K975
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
Pass	1 ♢	1 ♡	?

What action do you take?
A.—If you play negative doubles, that's the action we would take. If not, bid one spade. In a competitive auction, you do not promise more than a four-card suit.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ107 ♡532 ♢AJ ♣K975
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
Pass	1 ♢	1 ♡	1 ♠
3 ♡*	Pass	Pass	?

* — preemptive
What action do you take?
A.—With no clear-cut contract in sight, your best course is to make a strength-showing double. In light of the auction, partner should know you don't have a trump stack. If the double gets left in, lead a trump.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K9863 ♡A976 ♢K7 ♣A8
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a semi-unbalanced hand, and there is no reason to believe that three no trump is your best spot. A major-suit contract could play as well, if not better, if you have an eight-card fit. Probe for one by rebidding three hearts.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q52 ♡Q82 ♢AQ83 ♣K53
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—This is the companion hand to the one above. Just because your hand is perfectly balanced doesn't mean no trump is where the hand should be played. Partner is announcing an unbalanced hand, so for the moment you should simply take a preference to three spades to see what partner has in mind.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A95 ♡AJ63 ♢Q95 ♣1092
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♢	Dbl	?

What action do you take?
A.—With 11 excellent points, only one choice comes to mind—redouble. With rare exceptions, all good hands start off with a redouble so that partner is made aware that the hand belongs to your side.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J63 ♡KQ102 ♢AK1063 ♣K
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♢	Dbl	Rdbl	Pass
Pass	1 ♠	1 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Your first reaction might be that three no trump is automatic, but think for a moment. West's action suggests he might not have four hearts, so it costs nothing to check on whether your side has a 4-4 heart fit by bidding two hearts. Look at the hand in the previous question. The two probably generate 11 tricks at hearts, but three no trump can be beaten with a club lead.

Nancy Reagan's happy birthday: Her 'house' becomes movie set

Nancy Reagan turned 70 — or maybe it was 72 — on Saturday and celebrated the occasion in private, said Reagan spokesman Bill Garber. The former first lady has been out of the spotlight since the spring publication of the hard-hitting "Nancy Reagan: The Unauthorized Biography."

Last month, when George Bush and Barbara visited Southern California, Mrs. Reagan invited her successor to tea at the Reagan home in Bel-Air but the first lady declined, saying that her schedule was too crowded.

Meanwhile, the hospital building in Los Angeles that was once slated to become the Nancy Reagan Center for drug treatment — when neighbors complained and threatened to picket the Reagan manse, the former first lady decided not to support the project — has been put to good use, says People magazine.

The building, still vacant, was used to shoot scenes in a mental hospital in "Terminator 2: Judgment Day."

"We could have been helping 250 drug abusers by now," said a spokesman for Phoenix House, which was forced to abandon the project after Mrs. Reagan pulled out. "Instead, all that the building is being used for is as a set."

• • •

LOS ANGELES — Harrison Ford, who portrayed a lawyer suspected of murder in last year's "Presumed Innocent," says he wasn't looking to wind up back in court in his next screen role.

Ford

But he couldn't pass up the chance to play a ruthless criminal defense attorney who reevaluates his life after an accident in the upcoming "Regarding Henry."

"I was looking for something different that would challenge me and keep me interested," Ford said.

But in the new film, "there was such a different tone to the story and the character was so different than 'Presumed Innocent' that he could have been any profession. He just happened to be a lawyer."

Ford said he researched the role extensively, interviewing neurologists, physical therapists and speech therapists. He made index cards outlining recovery stages.

"We wanted to be very precise about this because we didn't want to send out any false hope to people and families in similar situations," he said.

Ford, star of the "Indiana Jones" and "Star Wars" films, turns 49 this week.

MERRILLVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Veteran comedian Red Skelton put on a two-hour performance one day after the 77-year-old entertainer left the stage while feeling dizzy.

Star Plaza Theatre officials said Skelton went on as scheduled Saturday before a sell-out crowd of 3,400.

Friday night, Skelton abruptly stopped his show and told the audience, "I'm feeling a little dizzy, and I'll have to leave the stage now."

He required no medical attention and after resting backstage for about 15 minutes, "was feeling better and went back to his room to lie down," said Star Plaza representative Monica Montello.

• • •

MANAMA, Bahrain — Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf is due to make a farewell call later this month on Persian Gulf heads of state and on U.S. soldiers in the region, diplomatic sources disclosed Sunday.

Schwarzkopf

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, expected the American general to arrive before July 20.

Some 540,000 U.S. troops were under Schwarzkopf's command during the conflict; now about 48,000 remain in Saudi Arabi and Kuwait and aboard some 30 ships in the Gulf.

The four-star general, who operated out of makeshift headquarters in the Saudi capital, Riyadh, left that city on April 19. He's set to retire in August after 35 years.

NEW YORK — Brad Pitt, the scene-stealing bad boy of "Thelma and Louise," says he doesn't understand all the critical fuss about the female buddy film.

"I don't think the movie has some big moral the way a lot of people are making out, and I don't find it controversial," Pitt said in Sunday's editions of The New York Times.

He said he sees the movie, in which he plays a drifter who charms Louise (Geena Davis) and then proceeds to rob and ditch her, as just a slap in the face "for us guys — and we deserve it."

Pitt, 27, got the role of J.D. when Billy Baldwin, the actor originally cast in the part, bowed out to star in "Backdraft."

Book warns against artificial sweeteners

■ Debate about sweeteners' alleged health risks rekindled as industry prepares to introduce new products.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Plans by industry to market new sugar substitutes to U.S. consumers during the next few years have rekindled a debate about the potential health risks of these artificial sweeteners.

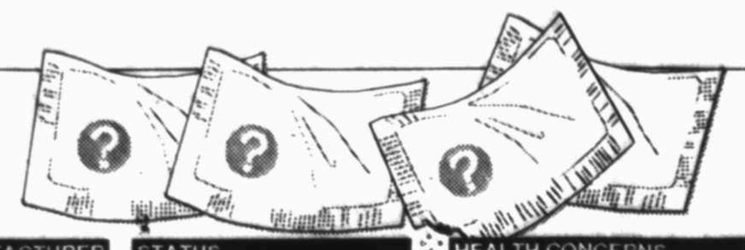
While heavy sugar consumption has been blamed for contributing to tooth decay and possibly obesity, critics warn that some of the alternatives are no bargain either.

The health question is intensifying as manufacturers scramble to take advantage of the upcoming expiration of Monsanto Co.'s exclusive right to market aspartame in the United States. Aspartame is the key ingredient in Monsanto's hugely popular NutraSweet brand sweetener.

Monsanto's 10-year patent for aspartame runs out in December 1992, and competitors are lining up to produce aspartame or alternative sweeteners that they claim are better tasting or more versatile than NutraSweet.

In addition, Monsanto is petitioning the Food and Drug Administration to market aspartame sweetener in heated products, an expansion beyond its use in tabletop sweeteners, soft drinks, whipped toppings and other cold foods.

Sugar Substitutes Not So Sweet



PRODUCT	MANUFACTURER	STATUS	HEALTH CONCERNS
Aspartame (NutraSweet)	Monsanto Co.	Approved for use in table-top sweeteners, soft drinks and a variety of foods.	Complaints of dizziness, headaches, insomnia; brain irregularities found in some test rats
Acesulfame-K	Hoechst Celanese	Used in table-top sweetener, Trident gum; seeking approval for other foods	Increase in tumors found in some test rats
Sucralose	Johnson & Johnson	May win FDA approval as early as this year for use in baked and other foods	May have effect on thymus gland, which is important to body's immune system
Cyclamate	Abbott Laboratories	Banned from U.S. in 1969; its maker is seeking to bring it back	Shown to promote cancer
Saccharine	Various makers	Used in Sweet 'n Low table-top sweetener, soft drinks, other foods. Warning label required since 1978	Shown to cause cancer in laboratory rats
Alitame	Pfizer Inc.	FDA approval not expected until mid 1990s at the earliest	No known problems

CENTER FOR Science in the Public Interest, a Washington-based consumer group, criticizes many of the sweetener entries in its new book, "Safe Food: Eating Wisely In A Risky World."

Monsanto vigorously defends the safety of aspartame and says it was sufficiently tested to the satisfaction of federal regulators. But critics question the thoroughness of some of the research.

Utah State University researchers, for example, have found that aspartame caused irregularities in some brain functions of laboratory mice, which they said could explain some of the complaints associated with NutraSweet. They said consumers of NutraSweet should not be alarmed by the test results, but called for more study.

Others have warned pregnant women to avoid aspartame because of unknown consequences to fetuses.

The FDA and the national Centers for Disease Control have received hundreds of consumer complaints of headaches, dizziness and insomnia in regard to aspartame, but have said tests reveal no problems with the sweetener.

"I tell people if you are having one of those reactions, just avoid the product," said Lisa Lefferts, staff scientist at CSPI and co-author of the consumer group's book.

IN ADDITION, one of 20,000 babies is born without the ability to metabolize phenylalanine, one of the two amino acids that make up aspartame. Toxic levels of this substance in their blood can result in mental retardation, and the FDA requires all packaged goods containing aspartame to bear a notice warning such people against their consumption of it.

One study found a somewhat increased risk of brain tumors among laboratory mice fed aspartame, but a subsequent test could not duplicate those findings, the CSPI book said. Critics say that because aspartame is so widely used the FDA should have required the manufacturer to conduct a more definitive study.

Consumer groups also expressed concern about acesulfame-K, approved by the FDA for limited use in 1988 and now mixed with several flavors of Trident sugarless gum. The sweetener goes by ACK and is manufactured by Hoechst Celanese, a German company with U.S. headquarters in Somerville, N.J.

Hoeschst Celanese said the company has conducted tests thoroughly demonstrating the product's safety.

But Lefferts said a test on laboratory mice found ACK caused an increase in the incidence of breast tumors and another study showed an increase in the incidence of lung tumors.

Some of the most formidable competition to NutraSweet may come from sucralose, an ingredient from Johnson & Johnson's McNeil Speciality Products division that may win FDA approval as early as this year.

"WE FEEL they are satisfied Sucralose is safe," said Nancy Walker, spokeswoman for the New Brunswick, N.J., unit of Johnson & Johnson.

"Sucralose doesn't seem to cause cancer, but it may cause other problems that would limit the number of foods in which it could be used," said the CSPI book.

Lefferts said more testing is needed to address concerns over the effect of sucralose on the thymus gland, which is important in the body's immune system.

Lefferts said no problems have been found with Alitame, a sweetener derived from protein for which Pfizer Inc. does not expect FDA approval until at least the mid-1990s.

Abbott Laboratories and the Calorie Control Council industry group are petitioning the FDA to bring back cyclamate. The sweetener was banned in 1969 after tests showed that when combined with other chemicals the substance could promote cancer.

Saccharin, the leading artificial sweetener before NutraSweet's debut, is still used in consumer products.

Chimpanzee makes references to past, researchers claim

ATLANTA (AP) — The chimpanzee who caused a stir when researchers said he understood and responded to the English language now is changing tenses.

Kanzi, a 10-year-old chimp at the Georgia State University Language Research Center, has made references to past events three times recently, said research director Sue Savage-Rumbaugh.

Scientists generally thought subhuman species deal only in the present.

But Ms. Savage-Rumbaugh said she and her husband, Duane Rumbaugh, have proved that Kanzi can "recall events and wonder about things that they cannot understand."

When Kanzi's mother, Matata, was moved from the research center, Kanzi, working with a keyboard on which symbols represent words, asked his handlers, "Matata hide?"

He searched several places, including a spot where he once found her hiding, and at each location repeated the question.

To allay Kanzi's anxiety, Ms. Savage-Rumbaugh made a videotape of Matata and showed it to him. He jumped and yelled, and demanded to see it again and again.

Finally, he seemed satisfied that his mother was OK and he calmed down.

In April, the Rumbaughs concluded a nine-month study in which they found that Kanzi, a bonobo chimp, understood and responded to the English language at the level of a 2-year-old child.

Duane Rumbaugh said the study was the "first time in science that there has been really strong data collected under controlled conditions" that indicates any animal can understand human language.

In the study, Kanzi correctly responded to specific requests on 79 percent of 660 test sentences that he had never heard before.

Some scientists lauded the work, while others said the chimp was merely responding to nonverbal signals from his handlers.

The Rumbaughs founded the Language Research Center in 1981. At the center, chimpanzees provided by Yerkes Center for Primate Research are studied with a view to defining processes that are basic to first-language skills.

The research results are being used to teach children with severe mental retardation to communicate symbolically.

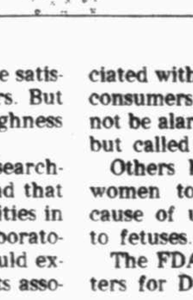
Divorce rate high after gulf war

■ Lawyers who practice near nation's largest installations express disbelief at the number of breakups.

By Robert Dvorchak

Associated Press

The guns were long silent when Army Spc. Peter Holmes returned home to find that his marriage was a casualty of the Persian Gulf War.



Holmes

Instead of a blissful May 1 reunion with his wife of 11 months, Holmes found her living with another soldier who didn't go to war. His 19-year-old wife, he said, had emptied his bank accounts and written 20 checks he had to cover.

"She took everything down to the dog," said Holmes, 22, a member of the 1st Infantry Division based at Fort Riley, Kan. "She never sent a letter. She just kind of disappeared."

Holmes' story is far from unique. While most families were reunited with a minimum of disruption after the briefest of wars, more marriages than service members died in the fighting to free Kuwait.

"They come back to a great hero's welcome, and some of them get served (divorce papers) right at the homecoming," said Kay Terrill, a Lawton, Okla., attorney whose divorce caseload has risen more than 30 percent in the past two months. "You've got the flags and the bands and the process servers. The divorce rate has just been unbelievable."

Although military marriages have historically been vulnerable, the numbers after Desert Storm are dismaying.

NEAR FORT Riley, 300 divorce cases were filed from Jan. 1 to May 15. There were 140 filed in the last two weeks of May when thousands of soldiers returned home. "It's the untold story. In one two-week period, 1 percent of the population of Fort Riley filed for divorce," said lawyer Susan Jacobson.

At Fort Bragg, N.C., home of the 82nd Airborne Division, divorce lawyer Renee Rothrock said her business tripled to 300 new cases in the two months since paratroopers came back.

"I've never seen anything like this. I expected it to go up; I didn't expect it to go up so much," she said.

Divorce rates skyrocketed around Fort Campbell, Ky., home of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault). There were 122 divorce petitions in April and an all-time high of 159 in May in nearby Clarksville, Tenn. That's a 60 percent increase over the same time last year.

Around Fort Hood, Texas, the nation's largest Army base, 229 divorce petitions were filed in April, the most in any of the preceding 15 months.

Divorces in the San Antonio, Texas, area, home to several military installations, jumped from 494 in December to 840 in April.

Breakups are blamed on everything from cheating spouses, depleted bank accounts, overextended credit cards, disputes about who's in charge, and the stresses and strains of recoupling after an extended absence.

AND SERVICE members weren't the only ones getting "Dear John" or "Dear Jane" letters.

Rosalinda Cron waited faithfully for her husband, James, 37, to return to Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma. But the sergeant used his first leave to visit a 19-year-old New Jersey woman who wrote to him in the desert.

"He wrote me all these letters — 'When I come back, we'll never be separated again,'" said a disconsolate Mrs. Cron.

Cron said the pen pal had nothing to do with the divorce he is seeking. "This really started years before now," he said.

Indeed, some attribute the divorces to marriages that were flawed before deployment and then disintegrated during separation.

"Desert Storm didn't break up any marriages. It may have magnified existing situations. Strong marriages will survive," said Geron Gambill of Contact, a 24-hour hotline in Fayetteville, N.C.

For others, the separation appeared to be the final straw.

"THERE IS a rebirthing process for families. Marriages come alive again when the spouse returns. There are also some that are going to be stillborn. They aren't going to make it," said Jim Johnson, minister of counseling at Snyder Memorial Baptist Church in Fayetteville and a former Army chaplain.

Marital woes contrast to the popular notion of Gulf War heroes who suffered relatively light casualties, had unflagging support on the homefront and may have toughed it out in the sand but can now live happily ever after.

"People living happily ever, that happens in fairy tales, not in real life," said Preston Garrison, executive director of the National Mental Health Association.

"What's needed beyond the parades is recognition that there are normal and natural emotional stresses any time people are removed from normal activities and absent for a time," he said.

The mental health group printed a guidebook for returning veterans called "After the Yellow Ribbons Come Down." Since its May 1 printing, all 25,000 copies have been gobbled up by military chaplains and the Red Cross.

The guidebook warns: "Research shows that reunion can cause more stress in people's lives than deployment. ... The stress comes from the changes that have taken place and concern about what life will be like after the separation."

SOME TIPS: Take time to get to know your partner again, strive for intimacy and not just sex, expect to feel strange at first, and go easy on the alcohol.

Nearly 60 percent of those in the service are married, up from 36 percent during the Vietnam period, according to the Department of Defense. Family support groups have quadrupled since Vietnam, and the military has a network of chaplains, social workers and counselors to address psychological strains.

"The military has learned a lot from Vietnam and intervening conflicts," said Maj. Mike Spradlin, chief of social work service at Fort Campbell's Lanchfield Army Community Hospital. "We have acknowledged to people up front there may be difficulties, that it may get a little rough. What we try to do is normalize the process for people."

During a 60-minute briefing to troops departing Saudi Arabia, the Marine Corps emphasized possible problems when they were reunited with their families.

"We were most concerned about putting families back together," said Lt. Col. George W. Ayers, a psychiatric social worker and a Marine reservist who put together the reunion package. "These guys were coming back to a world that was not the same as when they left."

These concerns were greater during the Vietnam War, of course — the war was longer and less popular, the stresses greater.

Paleontologists unearth trapped animal fossils

By Mike Comeaux

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Trudy Stubbs of suburban North Hollywood comes face to face with the terror of death as she softly brushes sticky asphalt from bones of Ice Age animals that perished in a Rancho La Brea tar pit.

With no scientific training, Stubbs volunteered in 1988 to help paleontologists excavate Pit 91 at Hancock Park in Los Angeles. She returns to the annual summer dig each year, and with on-the-job training and other experience under her belt, the 37-year-old woman is supervising the excavation this year for the first time.

"It's a special thing when you're unearthing and come across a skull, especially when it's facing you," Stubbs said. "You're peering into the past."

Paleontologists have been excavating Pit 91 since 1969, producing millions of fossils representing about 600 species of animals and plants.

For Stubbs and others who labor there, the 11-foot-deep pit on Wilshire Boulevard near the Los Angeles County Museum of Art is a remarkable place.

"It's truly fascinating," Stubbs said of the hundreds of fossils unearthed each summer. "Knowing they have not seen the light of day in 30,000 years, that's amazing."

Scientists and volunteers do the painstaking work elbow-to-elbow, at grids three feet square and 6 inches deep.

"Just uncovering the bones is a thrill for me," said 11-year volunteer Mike Morton, 29, of Monrovia, a suburban city east of Los Angeles.

"That's what keeps me here — those personal discoveries," said Morton, an oil company geologist. "It's really pretty thrilling to pull out a piece of tortoise shell or a lizard jaw or something that's not real common."

The animal-trapping pits were created about 38,000 years ago as crude oil rose to the earth's surface in natural fissures, evaporated and left sticky asphalt residue, scientists said.

Unwary animals were caught in the sticky mass, and larger animals tried to consume them — and sometimes were trapped, too, extending the cycle of doom.

The asphalt saturates bones and serves as a preservative by repelling water that normally would destroy bone matter.

Last summer, 582 fossils were recovered, including teeth of a saber-toothed cat and a partial skull of an extinct ancestor of the modern bison.

U.S. Postal Service vetoes too-short shorts and skirts

N.Y. Times News Service

The U.S. Postal Service, an unlikely arbiter of haute couture, has officially decreed the length of shorts, skirts and culottes worn by its employees.

A note from the labor relations department in the current issue of Postal Bulletin, a fortnightly magazine that is usually more concerned with fractional postal rates and stolen money orders, states, "Garments should not be more than three inches above mid-knee."

"However," the notice continues, injecting a bit of reality into its fashion note, "since everyone is not the perfect ratio of height to girth, some alterations might be necessary. Common sense must prevail in some situations.

"For example: If any individual stands 6 foot, 4 inches tall with a 34-inch waist, it is likely the hem of his/her garment will fall more than three inches above mid-knee even when unaltered."

One other thing: black socks, please. "Bright, fluorescent hose and socks are not permitted," the notice says.

Explosion cost hits $10 million

PERRYVILLE, Md. (AP) — The cost of a fiery explosion in a sandwich shop that destroyed two neighboring buildings and damaged several others in this tiny town rose Sunday to at least $10 million.

Three more buildings, including a historic church, were condemned after the fire Saturday that killed one woman and left about 100 homeless.

Thirty-four people went to hospitals for treatment of minor injuries, including 10 firefighters overcome by heat exhaustion. Temperatures had hovered around 95 degrees.

More than a dozen buildings were condemned, and others were possible, Deputy State Fire Marshal Bob Thomas said. The three new condemnations pushed the estimated damage to between $10 million and $15 million.

The explosion was blamed on a malfunctioning propane system in a sandwich shop that had been closed prior to reopening under new management. It leveled the shop, a building housing two businesses and two apartments, and a five-unit apartment building.

The exact cause of the malfunction remained under investigation.

Officials in the town of about 2,000 residents toured the devastated area Sunday to determine whether it should be rebuilt.

"I think its a real opportunity for our town to do some revitalization," said Town Commissioner Sarah H. Marley.

Among the newly condemned buildings was the Perryville United Methodist Church, a local landmark built in 1880.

The Rev. Robert Kelly moved to the nearby Principio United Methodist Church to conduct services Sunday. In his sermon, the minister talked about the meaning of patriotism and made no mention of Saturday's explosion.

But the blast he survived with his wife in their home next to the church was still on his mind.

"All you've got is today," he said. "It was a few moments like you never want to live through again."

Donald Perry, 43, lost his home but felt lucky his misfortune wasn't greater. His wife had a close call when a door and portions of their home's ceiling fell on her.

"Its just a shame one person had to lose her life; we are fortunate we are still here," said Perry, a mechanic.

As he sat in his Comfort Inn room, George Tucker, 37, lamented that nearly everything he and his family owned was destroyed by the blast that demolished his rent-subsidized apartment.

"We'll try to pick up the pieces," the unemployed man said. "When you see it on TV, you think it could never happen here, but it does doesn't it? You can never take anything for granted."
