Texan speaks for administration on arms policy

By SARAH McCLENDON

From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The chief spokesman for the Reagan administration on national security and arms control policy is Texan Robert C. McFarlane, who served under five presidents and as White House aide to presidents Richard M. Nixon, Gerald R. Ford and now Ronald Reagan.

When one hears the reference, " a senior administration official," as the source of interpretations on the nuclear freeze or defense through space technology, chances are that the briefer was McFarlane, who is now deputy assistant to the president for National Security Affairs.

He served under Henry Kissinger and Alexander Haig during their tenures as White House officials and as secretaries of State. Before that, he was on the staff of the Senate Armed Services committee under two chairmen, senators John Stennis (D-Miss.) and John G. Tower (R-Texas).

"Bud" McFarlane, as he is widely known, grew up in public service. His father, the late Rep. William D. McFarlane of Wichita Falls and the 13th District (it has since been redistricted), served in the House of Representatives for three terms and was on the Naval Affairs and Appropriations committees.

McFarlane often ponders how it happened that he, coming from a Democratic, New Deal congressional background, ever came to work on the staffs of three Republican presidents.

"It is a worthwhile job," he explains. "The country needs people to serve. I guess you might call me a government junkie."

Describing his functions, which at times prevent his being forthright and candid, he said "The times require that the president can be assured of a disciplined decision process. Decision making must come from a balanced portrayal of all the conflicting interests and is based on a system of choices."

Now he applies the discipline that he learned as a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps, as he dodges incisive questions from doubting, probing reporters like sidestepping mines on a battlefield.

But when McFarlane makes a speech, he can be positive, especially when describing the dedication of his boss, President Reagan, to arms control and peace, which is different from the popular conception, he told a contentious audience at the Women's Institute on National Security.

"Reagan's goals when coming into office were to try to establish a new basis for a relationship with other countries," said McFarlane, describing how the president began basically by defining what has worked in the past and what has failed.

"We are not fundamentally hostile to the Soviets. But the president feels that unilateral cuts in arms simply do not work in terms of getting the Soviets to cut, too. But when there is an incentive, the Soviets do negotiate, and we get a treaty which sticks.... Reagan saw little incentive for the Soviets to cut when he came in.

"Before Reagan, we had a disparate North Atlantic Treaty Organization. European leaders were going to Moscow for talks — that's all right — but they would not inform us ahead of time of the subject matter. Reagan sought a new basis for us to enter into a relationship with other countries....

"We are now proposing a system that is not designed to attack Soviets or to blow up some other foreign country but instead to defend us. This is a anomalous situation. We are encountering resistance from the Left."

Bud was born in Washington, D.C., while his father was in Congress. His mother, Alma Carl, died shortly after he was born, and he was reared by a stepmother, Inez McFarlane, now living in Graham, Texas.

A graduate of the U.S.Naval Academy, Bud was taught by his father, a commander of the first Marine Corps artillery battalion in Viet Nam, that "the highest calling a human being can have is to serve his country and his God."

The son has kept close to this rule, having become a professional public servant, advancing from one job to another, each one adding greater responsibilities. This means he works 85 hours a week at his present job.

He warned his three children in college not to go for public service. But they appear to have followed his example rather than his advice. His daughter Laurin, 21, is studying government and philosophy at Wesleyan University in Connicticut, and one of his 18-year-old twins, Scott, is enrolled at the Naval Academy. The other twin, Melissa, is attending Northwestern University.

FNB chairman Fraser resigns

The chairman and chief executive at The First National Bank of Midland has resigned.

The board of directors Wednesday accepted the resignation of Charles D. Fraser, who since January 1981 has been First National's chairman, chief executive officer, president and director.

The bank's brief announcement did not give reasons for the resignation. Fraser was not available for comment.

The board assumed control of the bank and elected Midland rancher, oilman and banker Clarence Scharbauer Jr. chairman.

He has been a board member and stockholder in the bank for many years. The Scharbauer family settled in Midland in the 1880s and helped start First National Bank in 1890. Clarence Scharbauer Sr. was president of First National until his death in 1942.

Frank Cowden Jr. and John H. Hendrix were named vice chairmen of the financial institution, Midland's largest with $1.8 billion in assets.

Jno P. Butler will continue to serve as senior chairman of the board, according to the bank announcement.

Butler, Scharbauer, Cowden and Hendrix, together with Marshall S. McCrea Jr., and Richard S. Brooks, will constitute the bank's executive committee.

All officers and employees of First National were confirmed in their positions, the announcement said.

The board named Donald L. McCall, executive vice president, to serve as interim general manager. He will report to the board and executive committee and will have control and supervision over all bank personnel.

"Mr. Fraser's presence will be missed at the bank," McCall said. "He contributed a lot over his 16 years of service. But I want to stress that management continuity is in place. We will continue to serve our customers and the community of Midland as we have in the past."

Fraser joined First National in 1966 as a petroleum engineer in the bank's oil and gas division. He was named executive vice president in 1975 and became the bank's chief executive officer and president in 1980.

At the close of 1982, the bank had $1.8 billion in assets and $1.4 billion in deposits, making it the largest independent bank in Texas and placing it in the top 100 banks in the United States. It recorded a profit of $11.9 million for the year.

Nation's energy decisions 'belong in marketplace'

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

The United States still imports too much oil and gas from other countries. But if John J. McKetta has any influence in Washington and if the energy industry is left alone to develop American reserves, that will change.

"Why am I told there is an oil glut in the U.S. when there is a shortage? Last year we imported 4.8 million barrels of oil a day. The glut is in the world, not in the U.S," McKetta said.

"Let's let the marketplace decide what you are going to sell me. Let's go back to the free enterprise system that brought us to the number one spot in the world."

McKetta, who has been an energy and environmental adviser to Presidents Nixon, Ford and Reagan, spoke Wednesday at a joint meeting of Leadership Midland and Leadership Odessa in the Midland Holidome.

The University of Texas engineering professor recently was named to Reagan's newly-formed task force on acid rain.

"We recommend to Reagan that he reconsider priorities and turn energy exploration, production and distribution back to those who know what they are doing," McKetta said. "Ease up on the environmental demands and let the market place decide, rather than have a 'Fuel Act.'"

McKetta said the media have misled the public as to the oil glut. There is no American oil glut, he said. There is, however, a world oversupply.

"Nobody tells me there is a shortage in the U.S.A. Last year we spent $70 billion buying energy to satisfy my wants, even though we were in a recession," McKetta said. "This amount of money is more than the volume of gold in Fort Knox, Tenn., and equal to the net profits of all of the Fortune 500 companies combined.

"It's a damn poor glut when you have 160 million tons of excess coal lying on the surface of the United States that you can't use."

McKetta said "senseless, inflexible" governmental rules are impeding the oil and gas industry and damaging its market.

He cited the example of Texas gas wells being capped for lack of demand, while at the same time the state imports coal from Wyoming.

The public has only itself to blame because the people are responsible for electing congressmen who make those decisions, he said.

McKetta, who was chairman of the department of chemical engineering at the University of Texas at one time, predicted by 1985 the price of oil will rise to around $45 a barrel. "Our problem is going to be finding enough energy sources of our own so we don't have to buy it elsewhere," he said.

"Through 1990, and really, until 2020 or 2030, I see the predominant fuel being oil and gas, without a doubt."

McKetta said he is not confident alternative energy sources will be feasible in the near term, as certain media and national officials once were.

"Alternate fuels will be miniscule. Coal and nuclear power were two possibilities, but coal and nuclear are dead. It's going to be very sad 10 years from now when you find the rest of the world" has gone nuclear.

"I'm in favor of nuclear plants and other alternatives, but I am against politicians who lie to you when they tell you the alternate sources will save us in the next 20 years."

To illustrate his point about the practicality of alternate fuels, McKetta said that in 1982 the U.S imported 4.8 million barrels of oil daily.

"If we could save just one million barrels a day, think how that would be. But, do you know what one million barrels of oil is?

"If you here in the middle of the oil industry don't know, how do you expect an editor in New York to know?"

One million barrels of oil is the energy equivalent of 3,000 square miles of solar cells, or 300,000 square miles of grain to provide gasohol, or 600,000 windmills with 100-foot blades, McKetta said.

"It will take 60 Hoover Dams to provide the equivalent energy, so when people talk to you about alternate energy, don't laugh, just walk away," he said.

Winter keeps grip on area

From Staff and Wire Reports

King Winter is not only stubborn, but persistent in postponing spring.

At the time of year when Midlanders usually are concerned about thunderstorms and tornado watches while getting the house air conditioner in order, they instead are shivering in the throes of a late winter storm while flicking on the heater.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the northerly winter low pressure system is determined to dust Midland with a few flakes.

After showering Midland with snow sprinkles early this morning, Mother Nature is expected to continue pushing spring aside with a 70 percent chance of light snow tonight.

While the mercury is expected to nestle in the upper 30s tonight, northeasterly winds should whisk through the Tall City at 10-20 mph.

It should be cloudy and cold Friday with a 30 pereent chance for light snow in the early morning hours with temperatures struggling to reach the upper 40s.

Although area towns reported light snow this morning, the white powder wasn't sticking in most places. Lamesa reported to have about an inch of snow, "but it's melting pretty fast."

Wednesday's high of 48 was frosty compared with the record heat wave of 99 set in 1972, and there wasn't too much difference between the overnight low of 34 and the record low of 23 set in 1939.

In far West Texas, forecasters predict 1 to 3 inches of additional snow for El Paso, which normally has about eight inches of precipitation annually. Accumulations of eight to 12 inches were reported Wednesday.

Highway authorities also closed all roads into the Franklin Mountains. Swirling snows have made Guadalupe Pass on U.S. 62 nearly impassable, police said.

Flights into El Paso were canceled Wednesday afternoon after blowing snow and high winds made landings and takeoffs too hazardous. Airport officials said most commercial flights had resumed today into El Paso.

In neighboring Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, across the river from El Paso, some citizens waited in line for several hours to buy bottled gas.

Woman's body found at motel

ODESSA — An autopsy has been ordered in the death of a Midland woman whose body was found in an Odessa motel room early this morning.

Pronounced dead at the scene by Ector County Justice of the Peace Jimmy Harris was 23-year-old Kay Osborn Howell of 1400 S. Main St. She was found lying on the floor of Room 202 at the Rodeway Inn on East Second Street about 4 a.m.

Police said the woman and her husband, whose name was not available, left their children with Midland relatives and rented the room Wednesday. The husband went for a walk early this morning and said he returned to find his wife dead.

There was no sign of forced entry, according to police, who said they were routinely handling the case as a homicide pending the autopsy results. No knife or gunshot wounds were visible on the body, but a small abrasion was found on her chin. Police say it may have resulted when she fell to the floor, however.

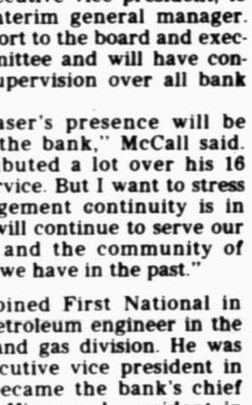

Family forum

"As an employer, I'd like to think people coming to work in the morning turn off the family and then turn off work when they return home. But it doesn't happen," Marie Oser tells conference participants.

Pittsburgh's unemployed march

PITTSBURGH (AP) — More than 3,500 people marched in a cold, steady rain Wednesday to protest the Reagan administration's economic policies, saying the president "doesn't have friends in Pittsburgh."

Several hundred protesters stormed one entrance to the Hilton Hotel, where President Reagan was speaking at a conference on the nation's jobless, hoping to confront him. They were kept back by city police, some with dogs.

"I'm here because I'm concerned about the future of our country. There's no hope for the youth of America," said retired steelworker Paul Piccirilli, 57, whose three children are laid-off steelworkers.

No arrests were reported, although two policemen carried a woman from the crowd and put her in a patrol van.

Reagan was taken inside the hotel through an underground parking area, cheating the crowd who screamed, "Reagan is a coward!"

"He doesn't have friends in Pittsburgh. The fact that we're here is why he's using basement garages," said Jim Benn, 34, of Munhall, a steelworker at U.S. Steel Corp.'s Duquesne Works.

Inside, Reagan said the crowd was "confused" and "frustrated."

"They're frustrated all right because they want jobs, but they're not confused. They know right where they're going," said Tony Rainaldi, a district director of the United Steelworkers union.

"The unemployed are not to blame for being jobless. Our jobs were stolen by the corporations that are in that hotel with Ronald Reagan," said Mel Packer, an demonstration organizer. "We will continue to organize until we force change to bring us jobs, peace and freedom for all."

The crowd, estimated at 3,500 by

Unemployed workers protesting President Ronald Reagan's economic policies gather outside a Pittsburgh hotel prior to his arrival for an evening address.

Deputy Police Superintendent Mayer DeRoy, carried umbrellas and wrapped themselves in plastic bags as rain wilted their signs and plastered their hair to their heads.

The demonstrators began arriving three hours before Reagan did, and became increasingly boisterous, booing the president's staff and guests as they left the hotel and shouting, "We want Reagan."

"I think he should have gone through the Monongahela River Valley and seen the mills," said Dick Grace, president of USW Local 1408 in McKeesport. "I don't think he wants to face the people."

"Based on the water it's been a fantastic turnout," Rainaldi said. "I had only hoped the sun would come out and brighten spirits."

Bill McHenry, president of the Mon Valley Unemployed Committee, blared anti-Reagan chants through a bullhorn in Point State Park, across the street from the hotel.

"I didn't really want to see him. We had a point to make, and if he wasn't able to see us, his aides carried the message back to Washington," McHenry said.

The "Not Quite Ready for Unemployment Players," performed "The Trial of Ronnie Reagan," a skit in which the president was tried for mass unemployment and sentenced to be a "displaced worker living in a tent city for the duration of the depression."

Expulsion of Soviets called 'master stroke'

An Analysis

By MICHAEL DOBBS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

PARIS — French commentators Wednesday interpreted the expulsion of 47 alleged Soviet spies as a political master stroke by President Francois Mitterrand that has discomfited his political rivals on both the left and the right and strengthened his reputation abroad.

The Socialist government has presented the mass expulsion as a response to growing Soviet espionage activities in France over the past decade. In the phrase of the government spokesman, Max Gallo, the decision to expel the Soviets was taken to show that France was not "a soft underbelly" for Europe for the theft of military and technological secrets.

"Even though espionage has become current practice, it is also a rule that he who is caught must be punished," Gallo told reporters following a regular weekly Cabinet meeting.

While few political analysts here doubt that the Soviet Embassy was engaged in extensive espionage operations, the fact remains that no hard evidence has yet been produced by the French authorities to explain why such spectacular measures had to be taken now. The conclusion drawn by many commentators is that the timing of the operation was dictated by a careful appraisal by Mitterrand of the political costs and benefits that were likely to flow from it.

An editorial in the independent leftist daily, Liberation, which broke the news of the expulsions Tuesday morning, said the risks included a further cooling in relations with Moscow. This could result in disruptive activity by pro-Moscow elements in the French Communist Party and Communist-dominated CGT trade union federation at a time when the country is bracing itself for economic hard times.

On the other side of the political equation, the paper cited the boost to Mitterrand's credentials as an "Atlanticist" just a few weeks before the summit of Western industrialized nations at Williamsburg, Va. It will now be that much easier for the French leader to brush aside American complaints about technology transfers to the Soviet Union or continued unease with the presence of Communists in the government.

To this can be added the domestic political benefits that flow from what the French public is likely to perceive as firm government and the forceful assertion of national interests. The most recent public opinion polls show a sharp drop in the popularity of Mitterrand and his prime minister, Pierre Mauroy, following a setback in municipal elections in March and the implementation of austerity measures.

Liberation pointed out that the spy affair could have favorable financial repercussions at a time when France was finding it difficult to get fresh capital.

U.S. officials Wednesday went out of their way to emphasize that the French government acted entirely on its own initiative and not as a result of any prodding by Washington. Informed sources have said that the U.S. Embassy here was told of the impending expulsions last Thursday through "routine channels" shortly after the Soviets learned of it.

The beauty of Mitterrand's move, from his point of view, is that it is very difficult for any of his political rivals to criticize it without appearing to be unpatriotic. The opposition parties on the right, including the Gaullists, have the delicate task of explaining why they did not take equally vigorous measures during their time in power, while the Communists do not want to be seen as apologists for Moscow.

The Communists have reacted to the dilemma by attempting to ignore it. The official party newspaper, L'Humanite, devoted only a brief news story to the expulsions — concentrating mainly on the Soviet protest.

Swanson: 'We had faces then!'

By KEVIN THOMAS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — One of the most memorable of the many memorable lines in "Sunset Boulevard" was forgotten silent movie queen Norma Desmond's proud, embittered remark, "We had faces then!"

They certainly did, back before the movies learned to talk, and perhaps the greatest face of them all belonged to the silent star who played Norma Desmond, Gloria Swanson, who died in her sleep early Monday after reportedly suffering a heart attack just before her 84th birthday on March 27.

To the end, Gloria Swanson kept that great face: large, piercing blue eyes, gleaming teeth, that famous mole on the left side of her chin and those bold, sculptured features that photographed so well for 70 years, starting back at Essanay Studios on the outskirts of her native Chicago.

After an apprenticeship with Mack Sennett — but not, as she was quick to point out, as one of his Bathing Beauties — she was cast in the 1918 "Don't Change Your Husband," the first of her six films with Cecil B. DeMille that were to establish her as a superstar of unsurpassed glamour. Yet at the height of her acclaim as a clotheshorse she dared a radical departure in Allan Dwan's "Manhandled" (1924), playing a subway-riding Macy's salesgirl, a film that was to remain one of her very best.

But then Gloria Swanson always was ready to take chances, both with men and with her career. She married six times, becoming one of the first Hollywood stars to land a titled European when she became the Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudray, and had important romances with silent director Marshall "Mickey" Neilan and another Irishman, Joseph P. Kennedy.

Turning her back on her lucrative Paramount association, she joined United Artists, and with Kennedy's backing, embarked upon Erich Von Stroheim's "Queen Kelly" (1928), which had her cast as an Irish convent girl, but which she and Kennedy called a halt to before she was to wind up running a brothel in Africa. Although Miss Swanson not only could talk but also sing, she never did enjoy the stature in the sound era she did as a silent star. Some unfortunate career choices in the early '30s didn't help, but the truth may have been that in the depths of the Depression she was too strongly identified with the barbaric grandeur of the Hollywood immediately past to maintain her stride in a profoundly straitened era.

Yet it was that identification that was to serve her supremely well by the time Billy Wilder was to make "Sunset Boulevard" in 1949. Wilder originally had in mind Mary Pickford for that ultimate tragicomic salute to Hollywood's past, but, according to Wilder, she did not grasp what he was trying to do.

AP Laserphoto

Gloria Swanson portrays aging silent movie queen Norma Desmond in the 1949 film "Sunset Boulevard."

For the rest of her life, Norma Desmond would be at once Gloria Swanson's glory and curse. On the mythic-movie-star level, Gloria Swanson perhaps was synonymous with Norma, but not in reality. Life was to deal Miss Swanson many blows both professional and personal, which she revealed with candor but without self-pity in her remarkably evocative and comprehensive 1980 autobiography, "Swanson on Swanson." (Friends said that her life actually was harder than she revealed.)

She faced life squarely, never retreating into Desmond-like fantasies of past glory, yet was forever at pains to make clear that she and Norma Desmond were not one and the same, which in its way was a compliment to what is one of the most dazzling and courageous of all screen performances.

"I don't know who I am," she remarked several years ago. "I'm not a glamour puss, and I'm not an old shoe. I'm somewhere in between. I'm like a parrot. My fifth...no, fourth...was it third?...husband — anyway, it was De la Falaise — who said, 'You know why people can't impersonate you? It's because you have no mannerisms of your own. You take on the atmosphere wherever you are. If you went to Mexico and were told you were an earthen floor, you'd be that floor.'

"That's why the world's greo impersonators have never been able to impersonate me. You can impersonate Norma Desmond, but not me."

Yet this tiny — barely 5 feet tall — dynamo of a woman, full of passion for life, never truly lost the public's imagination over decades of wrenching change — and throughout a career that at once limited her as well as immortalized her.

Other stars of the silent era survive her, including her great rival Pola Negri, but none has stayed so continuously and resourcefully in the public eye as Gloria Swanson. If there is more truth than usual in the cliche that her death marks the end of an era, her image is so indelible that she may succeed in making true Norma Desmond's proud assertion that "stars are forever."

Characteristically, though, Gloria Swanson had no such illusions of personal immortality for all her well-known concern with health and nutrition. In a chat over the phone in December 1981, at the time of the death at 96 of Allan Dwan, who had been her cherished friend and mentor for more than 55 years, Miss Swanson eschewed personal grief and said, "I'd like to think he's in a better place, up there laughing at all of us down here."

She expressed concern over the worsening state of the world and said, "I'm glad I'm going to be 83 on my next birthday instead of 38." Even so, this wise, witty and utterly irreplaceable woman signed off gallantly, wishing her listener "happy tomorrows."

About 300 Tanzanian 'economic saboteurs' arrested

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — The government has arrested about 300 people during the past two weeks — including some government officials — in a crackdown on "economic saboteurs," Prime Minister Edward Sokoine said Wednesday.

Sokoine disclosed the number of arrests in an interview with The Associated Press following a speech by President Julius Nyerere in which he said he would deal harshly with smugglers, racketeers, illegal currency dealers and hoarders of scarce goods.

He said some detainees were government officials or executives in state corporations who have been "collaborating with the economic saboteurs," or hoarders — such as a person found with 600 bags of salt and 2,000 tins of cooking oil.

In his speech Tuesday, Nyerere said the crackdown, launched March 25, has had "shocking results." The state-owned radio has given wide coverage to the president's speech and the police swoop, but so far has given no figures.

"The number arrested up to yesterday was about 300 people for the whole country," Sokoine said.

He said the majority were Tanzanians, but they included eight or nine Somalis and three people holding British passports.

All "are being held under the preventive detention act as a temporary measure," he said

Tanzania's Preventive Detention law of 1962, enacted the year after independence from Britain, empowers the president to detain indefinitely and without trial people "dangerous to peace and good order."

Legal sources said the law was originally intended to curb political instability but lately has been used against people suspected of corruption or engaged in what the socialist government calls "economic sabotage."

That is a catch-all term for a wide variety of activities, some of which may not be covered by the law. Hoarding scarce items, for example, is not technically illegal but it is frowned upon by the government.

"We have a problem of what to do with these people," Nyerere said in his speech to government and party officials. "The normal procedure would be to take them to court. However, we have not yet decided on the course of action."

Sokoine said that if nothing is found in the law to deal with some of those arrested, "then certainly we will request that the parliament give some powers to the president so that we can deal with this problem in a more swift manner."

The people arrested were said to be involved in such activities as smuggling foreign currency and goods out of the country. Items cited were cattle, medicines, agricultural tools, salt, sugar, clothing and cash crops, such as coffe, cotton and tea.

Among the commodities seized by police were coffee, cloves, cinnamon, cotton, cooking oil and tires. He said a total $1.8 million worth of currency was confiscated from black market exchange operations.

Sokoine said the government is considering such punishments for the "saboteurs" as seizure of their property and compulsory farm labor.

China gears foreign investments toward nation's growth

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

PEKING — Although short of capital itself, China is planning to invest in projects abroad to assure itself stable supplies of raw materials and to acquire advanced technology and management experience.

Jing Shuping, vice president of the China International Trust and Investment Corp., founded three years ago to attract foreign investment here, said Wednesday that Chinese interest in overseas projects ranged from timber and wood pulp in Canada and the United States, to iron ore and alumina in Australia.

Jing said that at this stage of its economic development, China wanted to begin exploiting those natural resources, whether at home or abroad, that would ensure long-term growth.

"No country, not even the United States, can avoid importing raw materials and be totally self-sufficient," Jing said in an interview.

Although China currently mines about 120 million tons of iron ore a year, it must still import 7 million to 9 million tons of higher-grade ore from Australia and North Korea, and that need will grow as the giant new Baoshan steel plant in Shanghai is put into opgration. The situation has led Chinese officials to consider investing in a new Australian mine to ensure a stable, produring a visit to Australia and New Zealand in April.

In addition to new iron mines, Zhao listed alumina, timber, paper pulp and fishing projects as possible areas for Chinese investment in the two countries. Jing added potassium and phosphate deposits, both needed here for chemical fertilizers, as another potential area for Chinese investment.

China would participate in those projects as the junior partner, Jing said, putting up perhaps 30 percent of the necessary capital and tying its investment to long-term supply contracts.

Peking currently has an estimated $12 billion in foreign-exchange reserves, the result of its export drive of the last two years and a sharp cutback on its purchases overseas. It might also use its extensive lines of credit — $13 billion with major international banks and $5.7 billion with international financial organizations — or allow the Bank of China, the central bank, to raise money to finance its participation in overseas projects.

"It is silly when we need something like high-grade iron ore to leave it to the vagaries of this or that company in another country when we have the funds that can help ensure its exploitation," another official from the China Internvestment abroad, Jing said, would be to acquire advanced technology, management experience and training for Chinese personnel from the foreign partner.

The China International Trust and Investment Corporation, one of the leading Chind indirect, in Hong Kong and the neighboring Portugese colony of Macao, but Peking regards both as Chinese territory under foreign occupation.

Jing also sketched China's plans to improve its own investment climate.

Texas women among 30 POWs to be honored

By SARAH McCLENDON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The White House and Defense Department on April 8 will honor 30 women, including eight from Texas, who were held as military prisoners by the Japanese during World War II.

Five of the women are from San Antonio and three other are from Kerrville, San Marcos and Jefferson.

This is the first time that the federal government has formally recognized the women and is part of the Defense Department's program to give more attention to prisoners of war and those missing in action.

There were about 80 women in the military captured during the war. Eight escaped with Gen. Douglas MacArthur on the USS Sunfish. They later had recognition in Washington arranged by Eleanor Roosevelt during her husband's presidency.

Recognition of all women prisoners of war had been scant until this year, when Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger asked the Veterans Administration to locate living WW II women prisoners.

The 30 women to be honored survived Japanese imprisonment in Corregidor and Bataan. Harry Walters, administrator of Veterans Affairs, found 55 women, but only 30 could accept the invitation. When his subordinates telephoned to the homes of the POW's, some of them cried, saying this was the first time anyone had given them any recognition.

On April 8, they will be greeted at the Pentagon in Secretary Weinberger's office, and he will give them a luncheon. They will be received at the White House and tendered a reception by the Disabled American Veterans at their national headquarters here.

Honored will be Mrs. Mary B. (Brown) Menzies, 104 Ridgemont Avenue, San Antonio; Mrs. Minnie L. (Breese) Stubbs, 1225 1-2 Flanders Road, San Antonio; Mrs. Gladys A. (Mealer) Giles, 424 Cloverleaf, Apt.5, San Antonio; Mrs. Verna V. Hively, 2930 Kaiser Drive, San Antonio; Mafor Adele Foreman, 123 Brackenridge, Apt. 322, San Antonio; Mrs. Edith R. (Shacklette) Haynes of 705 Overhill Drive, Kerville; Lt. Col. Hattie R. Brantley, 1005 Clearview, Jefferson; and Mrs. Inez M. (McDonald) Moore of 1321 Academy Street, San Marcos.

Senate rejects bid to elect PUC

AUSTIN (AP) — Senators rejected efforts Wednesday to replace appointed utility commissioners with those elected by the people despite a personal plea in writing from Gov. Mark White.

White wrote each senator on Tuesday stating that he understood the utility lobby had brought "considerable pressure" on senators.

"Obviously, the utilities fear a commission which answers to the people," White said. "I urge you to rise above these unfounded fears in making your decision."

The Senate, however, defeated attempts to take away the governor's authority to appoint all three utility commissioners and submit the issue to voters either in statewide or regional elections.

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, said White himself had shown that the "appointed process does work" by appointing "excellent people" to the commission.

White utility appointees Al Erwin and Peggy Rosson watched the Senate debate from the chamber. His third appointee is former chief hearing examiner Phil Ricketts.

Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, said the so-called utility reform bill before the Senate would provide "fairer rates, honest rates," but his proposal to elect six commissioners from districts fell 19-10.

The Senate rejected on 20-9 votes Sen. Kent Caperton's proposal for three commissioners elected statewide and Sen. Oscar Mauzy's amendment for nine commissioners from single-member districts.

AP Laserphoto

Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, huddles with PUC Chairman Al Erwin and Commission member Peggy Rosson.

Sen. Ted Lyon's amendment for six appointed members with five from different geographical areas was defeated 23-6.

Farabee and Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, who was absent, canceled each other's votes by pairing on each vote, with Farabee voting against the amendments.

Yet another amendment, to provide for appointed commissioners with citizen review, failed 16-14.

The Senate loosened a two-year prohibition against employees of the PUC going to work with utility companies after they leave the commission.

An amendment changed the restriction to one year, except for commissioners and other high-level commission employees.

"It's a step back," Caperton, D-Bryan, said of the amendment, but he added that it was necessary to get people to go to work for the PUC.

White made the PUC and high utility rates focal points of his campaign, and he followed up with a $193,000 television campaign to stir up public sentiment for an elected commission.

Farabee, a co-sponsor with Caperton and others, said the bill before the Senate "was worked out with a great deal of effort by consumer groups, the Texas Municipal League, light and telephone utilities and the PUC itself."

Caperton said, "This (Senate bill) is not ideal for ratepayers and it is not ideal for utilities, but it dictates some real reforms in the way to regulate utilities."

"The reforms are modest but this is progress," said Doggett, adding that he thought this was "a bottom line bill.

Texas military retirees fighting benefit cuts

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Texas military retirees who previously supported President Reagan's call for temporary cuts in costs-of-living increases for retirement benefits now are fighting hard against an attempt to make the cuts permanent.

A spokesman for retired persons said the Department of Defense is expected soon to present a bill to Congress making these cuts permanent in line with the president's budget recommendations. "We anticipate that the Defense Department will recommend what the president's budget proposed," he said.

Retired Air Force Col. George Hennrikus will testify in opposition to permanent cuts Thursday before the Senate Armed Services Committee. He will represent the 317,000 members of the Retired Officers Association. There were 116,359 retired military persons living in Texas as of September, 1981, nearly 30,000 of whom are members of the association.

Sen. John G. Tower (R-Texas) is chairman of the committee.

Hennrikus said retirees under age 62 will receive one-half of the cost-of-living increase each year, and the increase will be delayed one month each year. His association figures the plan would affect new military retirees by cutting 10 percent from what they would otherwise be entitled to receive.

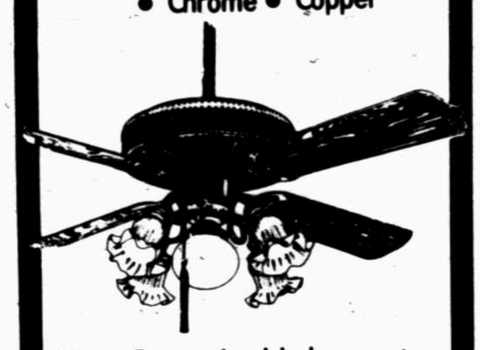

The cuts saved the federal government $2.7 billion out of $44 billion achieved overall in the two budget reconciliation bills considered by the 97th Congress. The cuts on top of an average of 5 percent inflation are "tough" on the retiree, Hennrikus said.

"This will surely discourage military personnel from making the military a career and will undoubtedly in the long run cost the government more by requiring the training of new men in leadership roles," he said.

Europeans influence U.S. arms policy

An Analysis

By DAVID MASON

LONDON (AP) — The new missile talks proposal announced by President Reagan last week underscores the great influence the European allies exercise on U.S. arms policy.

Almost forgotten in the current debate over existing Soviet nuclear weapons and planned U.S. missiles for Western Europe is that it was the NATO allies who asked originally for the new-generation American weapons.

Later, the Europeans pressed for an effective arms control stance, which led to Reagan's "zero option" proposal to cancel the NATO deployment in exchange for dismantling of the Soviet missiles. When that was rejected by Moscow, Western Europe's leaders called for a balanced reduction in missiles — the latest Reagan offer.

Washington never sought to impose on its European allies the 572 medium-range Tomahawk cruise and Pershing 2 missiles, due for deployment starting at the end of this year.

"Nobody seems to remember this, particularly the anti-nuclear movement," complained a NATO diplomat who asked not to be identified further.

Diplomats and arms specialists recalled that as early as 1977, Helmut Schmidt — then West Germany's chancellor — warned in a speech that Western Europeans had a stake in improving their security.

"Strategic arms limitations confined to the United States and the Soviet Union will inevitably impair the security of the West European members of the alliance vis a vis Soviet military superiority in Europe if we do not succeed in removing the disparities of military power in Europe," Schmidt said.

Schmidt and other European leaders were beginning to worry about the more than 300 sophisticated Soviet SS-20 missiles targeted on Western Europe. American-made Pershing 1 missiles stationed in Western Europe were no match for them.

On Dec. 12, 1979, The North Atlantic Treaty Organization decided "to meet the challenges to their security" by deploying, beginning in late 1983, 108 Pershing 2 and 464 cruise missiles, while at the same time calling on the Soviet Union to negotiate an arms control agreement limiting European missile arsenals.

The talks began in Geneva in late 1980 under then President Jimmy Carter. When he was defeated by Reagan, the talks went into limbo to be revived Nov. 30, 1981, some 10 months after Reagan's inauguration.

Western European leaders had become impatient for arms talks and began to wonder if Reagan had an effective arms control policy.

Just before the Geneva talks commenced, Reagan dramatically announced his "zero option," calling on the Soviets to dismantle their SS-20s and two older types of missiles. In return, NATO would scrap plans to deploy the Pershings and cruises.

Nuclear arms business booming

WASHINGTON (AP) — While the national unemployment rate hovers above 10 percent, Union Carbide is hiring at its secretive Y-12 plant in Oak Ridge, Tenn., and the unemployment rate in Los Alamos, N.M., is 2.3 percent.

The sites are two key components of the nuclear arms business, which is booming despite calls for an atomic weapons freeze.

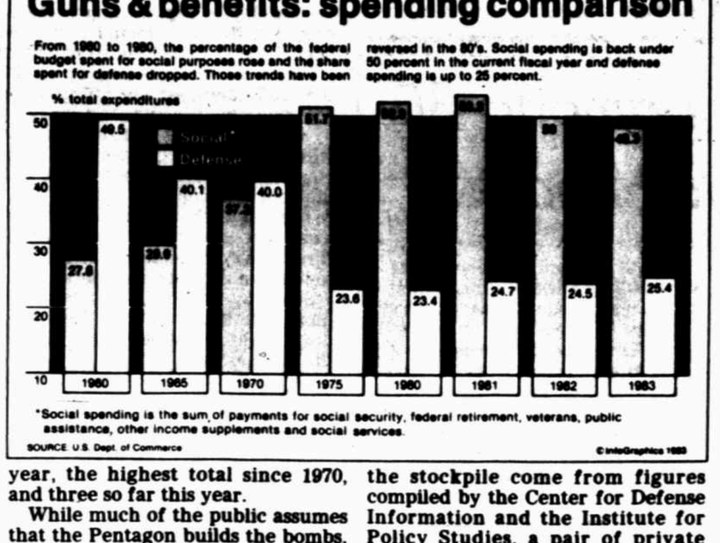

The U.S. government is building more nuclear weapons than it has at any time since the early 1960s.

The exact number of weapons in the U.S. arsenal is classified. But private experts say the current stockpile has about 26,000 weapons, and about 17,000 new weapons will be built in the next decade. About 11,500 will replace aging weapons that have been around since the early 1960s, but some will be new weapons that will raise the total stockpile to around 32,000, the experts say.

At least 15 types of warheads are now being produced, including the W-76 for the Navy's Trident missile, the W-78, an upgraded warhead for the Minuteman III missile, and the W-87, the bomb that will sit atop the MX missile should Congress approve deployment.

In addition, at least five more types of warheads are nearing production and will be added to the nation's stock of 24 different warheads.

The weapons are built by private industry at seven government-owned plants around the nation after research is done and checked by three laboratories. Then they're evaluated at the Nevada Test Site. There were 19 announced tests last year, the highest total since 1970, and three so far this year.

While much of the public assumes that the Pentagon builds the bombs, the entire program is actually run by the Energy Department, a holdover from post-World War II debates which were resolved by mandating civilian, not military, control of atomic weapons.

Officially, the Energy Department talks little about its weapons activities beyond saying that the fiscal 1984 budget for weapons will rise to $6.8 billion from $5.5 billion in the current fiscal year. That's 57 percent of the Energy Department's budget.

Employment at the 10 facilities where the weapons are researched and built from will rise from 33,388 in fiscal 1982 to 37,337 by fiscal 1984, the Energy Department estimates.

Estimates of the size and nature of the stockpile come from figures compiled by the Center for Defense Information and the Institute for Policy Studies, a pair of private organizations which have in the past been critical of Pentagon spending priorities.

The stockpiled weapons range from a small 58-pound Army mine that can blow up a small bridge to the huge B-53 bomb, a 9-megaton weapon whose 9 million pounds of explosive power could destroy a city.

The weapons are developed by researchers at the Los Alamos lab in New Mexico and the Lawrence Livermore lab in California, both of which are run for the government by the University of California. Their work is checked by Sandia National Laboratories, also in New Mexico, run for the government by Western Electric.

The two labs compete with each other, another holdover from the World War II Manhattan Project when differing research groups vied to come up with the best way to build the ultimate weapon.

Los Alamos designs won out in two recent competitions for the air- and submarine-launched cruise missiles and the Pershing II missiles. The warheads will sit atop the weapons starting later this year when they are deployed in Europe, a plan that has stirred controversy from anti-nuclear groups.

Components for the weapons are constructed at six plants, operated by private firms. They include Bendix, which runs the Kansas City, Kan., plant that produces non-nuclear components; DuPont, which operates the Savannah River, S.C., facility which makes tritium; General Electric, which runs the Pinellas, Fla., plant; Monsanto, which builds detonators at Miamisberg, Ohio; Rocky Flats, Colo., where Rockwell runs a plutonium-production plant; and Y-12, where Union Carbide makes uranium and metal components.

All the parts are eventually shipped to Amarillo, where they are put together at the Pantex plant. Another major job there is to disassemble old weapons — many of the components can be used again.

Pantex has been the subject of some anti-nuclear protests, as has the Livermore lab, but there has been little impact on the work.

Age, not protests, has been the biggest problem. Pinellas, built in 1958, is the youngest plant, and the Defense Department believes that the facilities need to be upgraded.

Cayman Islanders content with colonial status

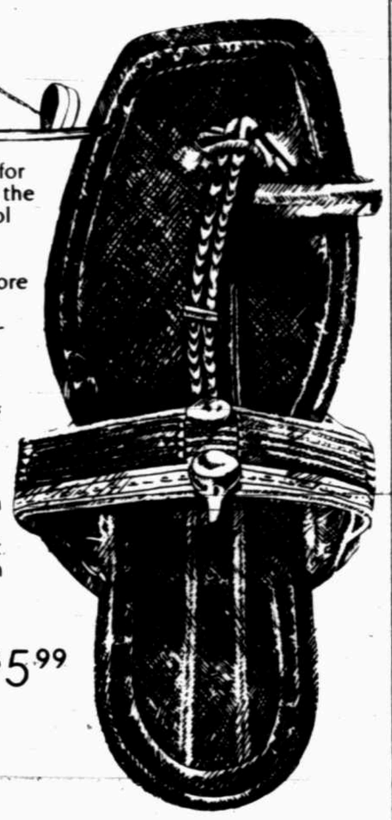

GEORGE TOWN, Grand Cayman (AP) — In an era of nationalism and independence in the Caribbean, the Cayman Islands are staying what they are — a British colony and a prospering offshore financial center that attracts a large international clientele.

"The people here are very happy to be a colony. The older people especially would fight to the death for it," said Michael William, a taxi driver on Grand Cayman, the largest of three populated islands.

The more than 17,000 islanders put on a dazzling show of British patriotism in February when Queen Elizabeth II became the first reigning monarch to visit. Union Jacks flapped from virtually every building and streetlight, and Caymanians lined up a dozen-deep along the queen's route around the island.

Reagan decision may mark shift in policy toward Israel

By BARRY SCHWEID

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's decision to stall delivery of 75 F-16 warplanes to Israel marks a further shift in his once-enthusiastic embrace of the Jewish state and may leave an imprint on the 1984 presidential race.

Reagan announced last week that he was postponing the $2.7 billion arms deal because of Israel's invasion of Lebanon last June. The United States has been trying, unsuccessfully so far, to bring about the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon.

Israeli officials, including Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir, reacted angrily to the president's F-16 decision, which also prompted debate in U.S. political circles.

Walter F. Mondale, the early Democratic presidential front-runner, accused Reagan of breaking a 1978 pledge to deliver the Fighting Falcons and reversing a policy of not using an arms embargo as an instrument of U.S. foreign policy.

While the Soviets are building up Syria with new SAM-5 missiles, Mondale said Friday, the United States "should be strengthening the bonds of strategic cooperation with our oldest and most reliable ally in the region."

For Reagan, who has not ruled out running for re-election, the blast from Mondale carries ironic echoes of his own fervent support of Israel and criticism of Jimmy Carter, the Democrat incumbent, in 1980.

"The cornerstone of our effort and of our interest is a secure Israel," Reagan said during his campaign to oust Carter from the White House.

Reagan said Carter had proven he was not a reliable friend of Israel. Reagan made a point of how the Democratic president had authorized sale of F-15 jet fighters to Saudi Arabia, tanks to Jordan and turbine engines to Iraq.

"To weaken Israel is to destabilize the Middle East and risk the peace of the world," Reagan said two months before the election. The speech helped him cut into the Democrats' normally heavy Jewish vote and set a course for a basically pro-Israel foreign policy.

Ironically, Carter had promised while he was president never to use American weapons sales as a pressure tactic against Israel. His Republican predecessor, Gerald R. Ford, had ordered a "reassessment" of arms deliveries when Israel balked at terms for a withdrawal from Sinai.

Twice in 1981 Reagan exacted mild punishment on Israel.

Delivery of jet fighters was suspended that summer over the bombing of Iraq's nuclear reactor. In December, a strategic cooperation agreement was shelved after Israel annexed the Golan Heights.

But, for the most part, Reagan took a friendly stance. Former President Richard M. Nixon remarked that Reagan was the best friend Israel had in the White House since Harry Truman.

Israel's drive into Lebanon in June to rout the Palestine Liberation Organization caused virtually no uproar within the administration. At the time, there was little sentiment for cutting off U.S. arms or halting economic aid. Conversely, there was evident sympathy for Israel's attempt to end cross-border attacks on its northern villages.

Poles search for ways to show dissent

By W. JOSEPH CAMPBELL

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa and other former Solidarity leaders are casting about in a tightly controlled society for ways to articulate the still widely popular aspirations of a movement that once counted 9.5 million Poles in its ranks.

Their task seems as risky as it is formidable.

Solidarity was dismantled as an independent trade union and ultimately outlawed in 1982, Poland's year of martial law. The government has imprisoned or jailed pending trial many of the local and national leaders who emerged after the strikes that gave birth to Solidarity in the summer of 1980.

Walesa himself was in government custody for 11 months. For weeks after his release last November, he avoided the public eye, saying he needed time to consider his strategy.

Only recently has Walesa begun the chancy undertaking of regaining some of the prominence he once commanded. His goal, he says, is Solidarity's legal restoration, and on more than one occasion he has declared the union eventually will prevail.

SOME OF Walesa's pronouncements and proposals, however, have disappointed a few supporters and drawn ridicule from the government.

Solidarity supporters, Walesa has said, "have to choose more effective and more visible means to demonstrate that we are still here and that we will not give up."

As examples of visible protest, Walesa said Poles could let their state licenses for television reception lapse — as a sort of boycott of the state-run broadcasting — and eschew state-produced and distributed alcoholic beverages in favor of homemade wine.

The government daily newspaper Rzeczpospolita called Walesa's idea a "farce."

"Every sober-thinking person will smile condescendingly upon hearing that the idol of yesteryear suggests drinking homemade wine as a way of protesting against the government," it said.

Government officials tend to characterize Walesa as an anachronistic phenomenon. One official news agency said he "finds it too difficult to come to terms with his loss of popularity."

Walesa, said one Western analyst in Warsaw, is no doubt uncomfortable in his present role as the most-visible exponent of a movement that must carry out most of its work clandestinely.

"THE GOVERNMENT knew he wouldn't be at his best. That's why they released him," said the source, who requested anonymity because of the nature of his post. "He's the leader of a movement, not an underground leader, and at the moment, there's no movement."

An Analysis

There is, however, an active — some even say thriving — underground of Solidarity activists and sympathizers who seldom seem far from the preoccupations of the regime of Poland's soldier-premier, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski.

Leaders of the union's underground Temporary Coordinating Commission — known by its Polish abbreviation TKK — periodically circulate clandestine position papers.

In a communique two months ago, TKK leaders urged consideration of a general strike as ultimately "the only way to break down the existing dictatorship and (create) conditions leading to democratic reforms...The time is coming when the strike weapon again becomes a realistic form of struggle."

The TKK statement urged Polish workers to boycott the new government-sanctioned unions, refuse to work overtime as a subtle form of protest, and challenge the authorities' "faulty economic decisions." The underground leaders, most senior of whom are Zbigniew Bujak of Warsaw and Bogdan Lis of Gdansk, have also encouraged distribution of literature about Polish history and culture to counter official propaganda.

WALESA ENDORSED most of the underground's suggestions, though he has vacillated about supporting a general strike. "Someday," he has said, "I may decide that such a method is needed."

The extent of Walesa's association with the organized underground can only be surmised. He has, perhaps deliberately, muddied any distinction.

Engineers plan to rescue $100 million satellite

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOUSTON — Teams of engineers made careful plans Wednesday to rescue the $100 million tracking-and-data-relay satellite from the egg-shaped orbit where it wound up Tuesday after a misfiring rocket sent it tumbling out of control for about three hours.

At the same time they chatted with Houston about efforts to save the satellite.

The scheme for saving the revolutionary TDRS vehicle called for using two of its 24 tiny control thrusters to lift it into a circular orbit at an altitude of 21,950 miles above the equator. That would raise the present orbit's low point by about 8,400 miles.

If that succeeds, an attempt would be made to nudge the vehicle on up to 22,300 miles, where it is supposed to remain stationary over Brazil's northeastern tip, relaying satellite communications for 10 years.

Word of the rescue plan was radioed to the four astronauts aboard the space shuttle as they passed over the South Pacific Wednesday afternoon.

Astronaut Roy Bridges in Mission Control told the Challenger crew that it would be 10 to 14 days before officials know whether the effort has been successful, but he said that they are confident they have sufficient fuel to save the satellite from the disaster that had been feared after the rocket misfired.

"The vehicle is in good shape," Bridges said, adding that "everybody is very encouraged."

"That sounds super," replied Challenger commander Paul J. Weitz. "That sounds fine."

Officials said Wednesday that a formal investigation of the incident would be conducted by the National Aeronautics and Space Adminstration and the Air Force.

Dean Carpenter, assistant TDRS project manager for TRW Inc., the builder of the satellite, expressed confidence Wednesday that the investigation will be able to find how and why the satellite was tumbled into the wrong orbit and was nearly lost.

At one time, the satellite was rolling through space at a rate of 30 revolutions per minute while still attached to the small solid rocket booster.

Officials were still unable to explain how and when the satellite separated from the rocket and stabilized itself.

During the three hours it was out of control, flight controllers sent rapidly repeated, high-power commands into space through huge antennas at Vandenberg Air Force Base and the Goldstone tracking station in the Mojave desert.

When the satellite unexpectedly responded, the time had already passed for the batteries aboard the rocket, necessary to fire explosive bolts and make the separation of rocket and satellite, to go dead.

This was an indication that contact had been re-established with only seconds to spare.

Carpenter recalled the three-hour struggle: "It was so sickening to think that we had lost the whole mission."

As engineers hammered out details of the plan to move the satellite into a usable orbit, the astronauts prepared for the three-hour space walk by Peterson and Musgrave into Challenger's open cargo bay.

Wednesday afternoon, there was an indication that "space sickness," the nausea that has afflicted astronauts on the last four flights of the shuttle Columbia, had stricken the Challenger crew.

Weitz asked Houston for a private medical conference, and flight surgeon T.E. Lefton shortly later contacted the spacecraft on a private line.

Station works to correct orbit

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — On a remote New Mexico mountainside far from Mission Control, more than 300 scientists and technicians are working to save a $100 million machine speeding in the wrong path thousands of miles in space.

They have to make do with a limited amount of fuel to get the Tracking and Data Relay Satellite to a particular spot over the equator 22,300 miles above Earth. The satellite now, instead of staying at the same altitude in its travels around the globe, is dipping up and down from 13,000 miles to 22,000 miles on each pass.

The engineers think they have found a way to move the satellite, but National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Robert O. Aller says, "It will take a long time to correct."

The satellite was launched late Monday from the payload bay of the Challenger and was heading for its circular orbit when a malfunction in a rocket stage caused it to tumble through space, losing touch with its keepers on the ground.

Proper deployment of the $100 million satellite is a necessity for future space missions. Without the satellite, the launch of a European Spacelab aboard the shuttle Columbia in September is virtually impossible.

At least 70 Haitians arrive in Florida Keys Wednesday

ISLAMORADA, Fla. (AP) — At least 70 Haitians packed aboard a wooden sailboat with ragged sails and a tree trunk for a mast arrived here Wednesday afternoon in the second boatload of refugees reaching the state in three days, officials said.

The boatload of 47 men, about four children and 21 women, all appeared healthy and well fed, although one of the Haitians told Coast Guard officials they had been at sea for 27 days. But officials were skeptical of that.

The boat, with an old tree trunk for a mast and sails that "look like rags sewn together," arrived at the Islamorada station at 5 p.m., said Chief Petty Officer W. Gene Hughes.

"It's the typical homemade Haitian boat that they've been coming over in the four years I've been here," he said. "We're in the process of doing a proper count. According to one of them who spoke English, they have 72 aboard."

Hughes said the English-speaking man, Nelson Thomas, about 40, said there were three pregnant women among the refugees.

Hughes said Capt. Roy Leonard of the Islamorada-based fishing boat Captain Winner II, saw the boat off Crocker Reef, about six miles east of Islamorada, at 3 p.m. A Coast Guard vessel met the boat a half hour later and escorted it to the Coast Guard station.

Gary Hatmaker, deputy chief patrol agent of the U.S. Border Patrol, said, the agency sent some of its illegal alien smuggling investigators to "see if there are any links into a smuggling operation."

Hughes said, "They all look healthy; they were all clean and fresh-shaven. They took off old clothes and put on new ones as we were towing them in — no salt buildup on their skins. All looked like they were well fed...

"When the gentleman (Thomas) told me he had been underway for 27 days, he had a smile, a real sly smile on his face. So you can kind of consider that tongue-and-cheek," Hughes said.

"They tell me they came direct from Haiti. Their story is that they stole the boat, got on it and left. No one is in charge, as usual," he added.

On Monday, 29 Haitians were seen off the coast of Hollywood, the first group of island refugees to arrive in South Florida in such a fashion in more than a year.

Subcommittee OKs immigration bill

By JAMES MCGREGOR

From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Illegal aliens who entered the United States before Jan. 1981 would be given permanent resident status under an immigration reform bill approved Wednesday by a House subcommittee.

The legislation, a revised version of a bill that failed to get House approval in December, also would levy criminal penalties of up to a year in jail against employers who hire illegal aliens.

In two days of deliberations, the House Immigration, Refugees and International Law subcommittee made several changes in last year's bill, including authorizing an additional $475 million in federal funds through 1986 for the hiring of 1,187 more Border Patrol officers and other efforts to increase border security.

The legislation, which would make the most sweeping changes in the nation's immigrations laws in 30 years, could result in some 3.5 million to 6 million illegal aliens becoming U.S. residents.

Subcommittee members say the outlook for House approval of the legislation is better than last year because changes have been made to satisfy the bill's most powerful opponent, Minority Leader James Wright, D-Texas, who effectively killed the bill during last year's lame-duck session.

"I do not have any fear that Jim Wright is going to stop it this year," said Rep. Dan Lungren, R-Calif., the subcommittee's ranking Republican. "I think at some point in time everybody is just going to say lets get this thing over with."

REP. SAM HALL, D-Texas, who unsucessfully tried to exempt employers with three or less workers, was the only subcommittee member to vote against the bill.

"This bill is not meant to go after the small employer, the one with a maid or a yard worker," Hall said.

The most significant change from last year's bill was offered by subcommittee chairman Rep. Romano Mazzoli, D-Ky., who successfully deleted a two-tiered legalization system and replaced it with a provision giving permanent resident status to all undocumented workers who entered the country before Jan. 1981.

Under last year's version, undocumented workers who entered the country before 1977 would be given permananent resident status, while aliens who entered before 1980 would become temporary residents who could apply for permanent residency in three years.

Lungren opposed the change, saying the two-tiered system was a good compromise between supporters of blanket amnesty and opponents of any form of legalization.

"I believe it goes against the idea of showing a commitment to the United States by the people who want to be legalized," Lungren said.

Mazzoli's amendment also contains a provision requiring the legalized residents to wait four years before collecting any form of public assistance from the federal government.

THE LEGISLATION authorizes the states to impose similar waiting periods for welfare and other public assistance programs, and ensures 100-percent federal reimbursement for costs incurred by local government agencies for emergency medical expenses, education and other services given to the newly legalized residents.

The subcommittee defeated an amendment that attempted to force the states to limit their generosity by replacing the 100-percent reimbursement provision with a Reagan administration-backed program of federal block grants that would limit the amount a state could receive.

The subcommittee did approve an amendment authored by Lungren to help growers adapt to the new law. The provision gives employers a three-year period in which to comply with the provision against hiring undocumented workers.

News once traveled slowly

When President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated in 1865 it took 12 days to get the news to London. A century later when President John F. Kennedy suffered the same fate, people all over the world got the word within minutes.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, April 8, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: "America's Sweetheart," actress-producer Mary Pickford, was born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: former First Lady Betty Ford, comedian Shecky Greene, basketball's John Havlicek and former actor-turned U.S. Ambassador to Mexico John Gavin. In the months ahead, you are able to catch up with your financial obligations. Take a firm stand with partners. It is time for them to do their full share or move on. Your artistic talents will never get the recognition they deserve until you find a way for more people to see your work. Consult the experts. Family members draw closer together as romance improves.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Tie up as many loose ends as possible today in order to enjoy a carefree weekend. Someone else's carelessness could harm you. Protect your interests. Obey all safety rules.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Organization is the key to success today. Keep financial details secret. Your lifestyle changes and you feel more comfortable. A phone call reports business progress. Romance influences your colors.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you have been putting on extra weight, do something about it. Retirees get benefits beyond what they anticipated. Meet deadlines on time or share in the financial losses that result.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A sense of humor is the key to your happiness right now. Do not give into temptation where school studies are involved. Only your own hard work will produce good grades.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Revenge is not so sweet as it seems. Take a more positive approach. Career gains come more swiftly once you learn to control your emotions. Keep love and business completely separate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You receive great news as the work week winds down. Celebrate with mate or a good friend. Business expansion is possible. Do not jump to conclusions. Make a thorough investigation before acting.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A stranger's presence gives rise to rumors at work and adds excitement to the social scene. Family members make demands that you may not have the resources to meet. Be candid.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You get some long overdue recognition for your contributions at work. Weigh the facts carefully before making a decision that involves another. Guard against mishaps. Observe all safety rules.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You could be in for a bumpy ride at place of employment. Tell the truth, no matter who it may hurt. You will probably find it difficult to concentrate. Do your best!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Good things happen today! You are delighted to run into an old friend. Catch up on each other's news over lunch. Save any extra cash that comes your way.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If you can, postpone a job decision until next week. Seek a better understanding with your co-workers or employees. Family member could be in a difficult mood. Tiptoe around him/her.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Talk to a business associate face-to-face. Greater personal effort is needed to meet a deadline. Set the record straight if you decide to break off a relationship.

Actor is sixth Hammer

Hearst Feature Service

HOLLYWOOD — "I'm playing the sixth Mike Hammer," says Stacy Keach, referring to his role in "Murder Me, Murder You," portraying Mickey Spillane's legendary detective Saturday on CBS-TV. "The first five were Ralph Meeker, Bill Elliott, Darren McGavin, Armand Assante and Kevin Dobson. I think we have something going that's new in this version of Spillane's work, and hope it will be a good spin-off for a TV series which I would like to do.

"Although other actors have played the role, I think we bring another conception to the part," Stacy continues. "We're going for some humor this time, in addition to the hard-boiled approach. It's something new — Mike Hammer goes for pop art, yet it's a classical American character, a literary legend."

Keach, whom critics seldom rap no matter what he does, admitted that "No matter what role I'm playing, I always work with a coach. At the moment, I am working on yet another script I'm considering with a very good coach and actor, Alejandro Rey. He also worked on 'Murder Me, Murder You,' and I coach him often to get him off his accent. It's a workable relationship because we understand each other, ask questions, read scenes, work on metaphors and similes. I think a lot of performers would benefit from a little coaching."

Keach's phone hasn't stopped ringing for the last few years. John Huston said of this fine actor, "The audience will go to see whatever character he projects. Each character is a star in itself. He, Stacy, is a constellation."

Keach's constellation of recent note includes his magnificent performance as the hero in "The Blue and the Gray," "The Long Riders," "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter," Brewster McCloud" and "The New Centurions."

With every type role he plays, which does he prefer?

"I like romance as well as action," he says. "You can be a good guy or a bad guy, so long as you end up a hero of some kind. Also I feel I should add some entertainment value to my performance. Which leads me to my getting steamed up when I read some of the stuff critics write about when they are reviewing. Critics, in my opinion, should assess whatever they are covering for what it is, not what they thought it could have been or how it should have been done.

"My wife Jill (daughter of director Jack Donahue) and I went to see several plays in New York, not because of the reviews, but for their respective roles. It was sad to see some stunning plays close because the critics blew it."

Opening lead: King of ♣.

Don't let a seemingly easy contract lull you into a false sense of security. It needs only one poor play to turn a large profit into a loss.

The auction was well conceived. Although he had a fair hand, North could do no more than bid two spades over West's intervention. South realized that game was a real possibility if he found partner with values in diamonds, so he made a trial bid in that suit. North was delighted to accept the invitation.

West led the king of clubs and continued with the ace. Declarer ruffed the second club, then cashed two high trumps to learn of the 4-1 break. Now declarer could not draw the rest of the trumps before driving out the ace of diamonds, because he would have to exhaust his trumps and the defenders would be able to cash club tricks.

So declarer abandoned trumps and started on diamonds. West ducked the first diamond, won the second and gave his partner a ruff. Since declarer could not avoid losing a heart trick, he went down one.

Declarer should have realized that the only danger to his contract was a bad trump break, which would cause him to lose control of the hand. But there was a simple way to retain control.

Instead of ruffing the second club, declarer should simply have discarded the heart that he would have to lose anyway. Now there was no way that his trump holding could be weakened. If West persisted with another club, declarer would ruff in dummy. If West shifted, declarer could win and draw trumps. Since declarer would still have a trump left after all the enemy trumps had been extracted, he could then knock out the ace of diamonds in peace and comfort to assure his contract.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. Winds of change

The old adage reminds us everyone complains about the weather, but no one does anything about it. That isn't true in Midland anymore, though.

Oh, Midland has a definite weather-related problem. Anyone in the Tall City during the past week recognizes that fact. The problem was blown back to the forefront of consciousness when April roared in like a lion last week, a characteristic supposedly reserved for March. The problem is two-fold: the carelessness of Midlanders in littering in the first place and the "movement" of that litter by the wind.

The problem touches us all. If you don't believe it, just step outside and look at the lawn you've been carefully grooming in recent weeks. If you do you're likely to find pieces of paper and other trash, tumbleweeds and other weeds blown into your property by those gusty winds. Your first thought may be "I didn't put that trash there and I'm not going to pick it up. It's not my problem." You're wrong. It is your problem and if you don't pick it up, it'll lie there until another gust of wind blows it elsewhere and makes it somebody else's problem.

Technology has not advanced to the level of giving mankind the capability of controlling the weather to any appreciable degree. Man can't keep the wind from blowing. What man can do is take away any litter for the wind to blow around.

Clean Midland is an organization formed in December and affiliated with Keep America Beautiful's Clean Community System. The organization is attempting to reduce Midland's litter problem by bringing about an attitudinal change to make it unacceptable to litter or to allow trash and refuse to accumulate inside the city. That means getting everyone involved in making Midland a cleaner, more attractive community in which to live.

If you live in Midland you have a responsibility to help the organization reach its goal. Yes, litter is your problem, even if you did not "create" the problem. Do something about the weather in Midland; pick up that litter.

Sharing the vision

Drowned out in the past few days by the din of the debate over the nation's defense program, as well as by anti-nuclear demonstrations here and abroad, were two of the most important words uttered by President Reagan in his recent series of messages. They are:

"Impotent and obsolete."

These are strong words particularly when they relate to adjectives our president would like to see used to describe atomic arms sometime in the future.

Although he was not precise about details in his recent speech, Reagan enunicated a goal that should excite all peace-loving Americans, and make demonstrators abroad appreciate a little more fully the principles for which he stands.

Mr. Reagan said: "... I call upon the scientific community in our country, those who gave us nuclear weapons, to turn their great talents now to the cause of mankind and world peace: to give us the means of rendering these nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete.

"... I am directing a comprehensive and intensive effort to define a long-term research and development program to begin to achieve our ultimate goal of eliminating the threat posed by strategic nuclear missiles."

At the risk of being called a visionary, President Reagan said this action could change the course of history. It can if enough people share this vision.

Another View:

It's not a new tax

To judge by the stacks of letters piling up on Capitol Hill, quite a number of Americans have been convinced that the law requiring banks to withhold 10 percent for taxes on dividends and interest is a new tax and a bad one.

Well, it's neither. People are supposed to pay taxes on income derived from dividends and interest. Most do. But some only pay taxes on part of the income, and some avoid them altogether. The Treasury estimates that taxes are not paid on about 10 percent of such income. That amounts to something over $3 billion a year. To paraphrase (and bring up to inflationary date) the observation of the late Sen. Everett Dirksen, $3 billion here and $3 billion there, and pretty soon you're talking about real money.

That's real money that taxpayers who faithfully (if not enthusiastically) pay their taxes have to pay in addition. The honest taxpayer is being gypped right now. Every wage-earner in the country has a portion of his or her wages withheld for federal income taxes, state income taxes in most states, not to mention Social Security taxes. Why shouldn't the withholding principle apply to dividends and interest, most of which goes to taxpayers (or tax-owers) who are comfortably off?

The banking lobby claims that withholding will be a terrible drain on savers and investors and a "tremendous harassment" added to bank-customer relations.

It's neither. As to the first, the elderly, the poor and those who expect to get no more than $150 a year in interest and dividends are exempt. Those covered will lose about 50 cents a year on $1,000. A little quick arithmetic shows that the citizen who has investments of $110,000 — and that's real money for most people — and is earning 9 percent will lose in the neighborhood of $5. Can they afford it?

As to the tremendous harassment, the banking lobby argues that the IRS could get more compliance merely by auditing more taxpayers. Yet audits also cost the IRS, which is to say, the taxpayers. Besides, which would you rather get — an invitation from the IRS to gather all your records and come in for a lengthy grilling or a notice from the bank that x-dollars had been automatically withheld from your account?

Responding to President Reagan's attack on "a selfish special interest" engaged in "a campaign of distortion," the American Bankers Association declared: "Our involvement has been greatly exaggerated by those who wish to create a tactical diversion to avoid the real issue."

The real issue is compliance, efficiency, fairness and more than $3 billion a year in revenues. On all those counts the Senate should reject the withholding repealer when the bill comes to the floor next week.

ART BUCHWALD

Wanted: Scientists who believe!

The biggest problem President Reagan faces in developing a "Star Wars" defense against nuclear weapons is finding the right thinking American scientists to work on it. In this administration a scientist not only has to have impeccable professional credentials, but he also has to be screened to make sure he or she has the same conservative ideology as the party.

Art Buchwald

For example, 50 scientists were removed from advisory boards of the EPA when their terms expired, because they were considered "politically unreliable" by Reagan loyalists.

Since the "Star Wars" concept will require a lot more brains to perfect the system, it may be very difficult to find enough pro-Reagan scientists to get the program off the ground.

I can just imagine the hustle and bustle now going on in the White House.

"Sir, here's the list of eminent scientists that could be contacted for our crash nuclear umbrella program."

"Any good people?"

"They're tops in their field. Professor Heinz Hemlock is a genius when it comes to laser beam research. He's just turned an enemy guidance system into oatmeal in his lab."

"Great. Let's sign him up."

"There is only one catch. He's against prayers in school."

"He doesn't sound like a team player. Who else have you got?"

"Dr. Anne Marie Sten. She has done extraordinary work in ultraviolet-infrared-telescopic locators. The space people say she's the best in the field."

"And she's a woman. That should help us with the female vote in '84. Bring her in for an interview."

"There's a problem, sir. Our security check revealed she voted for Jimmy Carter."

"Maybe she was duped."

"She's also on the Planned Parenthood Board at MIT."

"Forget her."

"I have a Nobel Prize winner in astro-physics who is working on spontaneous combustion of hydrogen and fluorine at the Livermore National Laboratory."

"What's wrong with him?"

"He signed a petition last month for a nuclear freeze."

"Dammit, can't we find any American scientists who aren't bleeding heart activists?"

"Edward Teller?"

"He's already on the team. In fact he's the leader of the team. Read me out some other names."

"Professor Nino Bertolinni, wrote the definitive paper on gamma rays — but unacceptable to Senator Jesse Helms because he's a member of Common Cause ... Dr. Albert Ruben, subatomic particle beam guru ... ardent supporter of handgun control and against death penalty ... Dr. Sarah Tilton, microwave physicist at University of Chicago ... son works for Tip O'Neil."

"That's enough! There isn't one person you've mentioned so far that could pass muster with the Republican National Committee. But we have to have some scientists for our 'Star Wars' program."

"I think I have one here at the bottom of the list. Professor Dalton Calhoun the Third. He teaches physical astronomy at the Oral Roberts University in Tulsa. He wrote a book knocking down the big bang theory of the creation of the earth, and proved scientifically it came about just as it says in the Bible. Jerry Falwell recommends him very highly."

"Find out when he can start."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Jurisdiction feud racks agencies

WASHINGTON — The Mafia dons must be chuckling with satisfaction. A jealous feud between two federal agencies over bureaucratic turf threatens to jeopardize the government's battle against labor racketeering. Here's the story:

Jack Anderson

The Justice Department is determinedly trying to keep the Labor Department's special agents from being given the law-enforcement powers FBI agents have. These include the right to carry firearms, make arrests and execute warrants.

Justice Department officials don't want to give the impression that they're engaged in an unseemly jurisdictional struggle. So they're arguing, essentially, that things have been working out fine. If the Labor Department crime fighters get in situations where they need guns and arrest authority, they say, all they have to do is call the FBI for help.

My associate Indy Badhwar has learned, meanwhile, that the General Accounting Office will recommend to Congress that Labor's agents be given full law-enforcement powers. But Justice is balking.

"Proposals to expand the Labor Department's existing criminal investigative responsibilities," a recent Justice Department memo states, "may jeopardize the primary principles which we think have contributed significantly to the successful investigation and prosecution of criminal elements in the (labor) fields."

To this ringing defense of "primary principles" the memo adds: "The FBI is already performing covert investigations with considerable success."

Senate investigators disagree. "These are specialized investigations," said a staffer on the Labor and Human Resources Committee. "Frankly, we're not happy with what the FBI has done in this field...They average less than seven investigations a year. They do not consider this a high-priority item. They have too much else to do."

An internal memo from the Labor Department inspector general's office to the committee cites some specific examples of this:

— A major sting operation in Detroit was aborted last August because Labor couldn't protect its undercover agents and the FBI had refused to participate.

— In New York and Cleveland, Labor agents referred at least four cases to the FBI because they lacked the necessary law-enforcement powers. The FBI has sat on the cases.

— In Cleveland, several potential witnesses refused to cooperate with Labor investigators because they could not offer the informants protection.

— Last January, Labor agents had to call off an investigation because they couldn't get the FBI to provide protection for a meeting between an undercover informant and a targeted suspect.

The Justice Department's dog-in-the-manger attitude toward Labor's investigators is surprising in light of a recent confidential survey it conducted of its 13 organized-crime strike forces. Strike force leaders were asked to evaluate the effectiveness of the Labor Department's agents in union racketeering work. The responses were overwhelmingly positive.

"The respondents were of the general opinion that the (Labor) agents...were performing their investigations promptly and effectively," a Justice Department memo noted, adding: "Some responses commented favorably on the increased motivation...and the presence of competition as an incentive to the FBI in labor cases."

The G-men in the street may welcome the friendly competition provided by the Labor Department's knowledgeable agents; their bosses behind the desks in Washington obviously don't.

NO FREE LUNCH: The flap over National Security Council adviser Thomas Reed, whose 1981 stock dealing is being investigated by a grand jury, was supposed to have been cooled by the announcement that Reed was leaving at the end of this month — and was working his final weeks without pay. But attorneys at the Office of Government Ethics think Reed may be breaking the law by continuing at the NSC, even for free. Here's why:

The law limits a government consultant to 130 days' work in a given one-year period. Reed reached that limit early this year and went off the payroll. But the OGE lawyers say the 130-day limit applies to unpaid as well as to paid consultants.

A spokesman for the NSC told my reporter Leslie Adler that an Office of Personnel Mangement official OK'd Reed's free consultation — but he couldn't name the official.

Meanwhile, congressional investigators are blocked in their attempts to look into Reed's financial background. As a consultant, he is not obliged to submit a financial disclosure statement.

DIPLOMATIC DIGEST: Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini evidently doesn't have enough on his hands with dissidence at home and a war with Iraq. Now he's suspected of exporting his particular brand of violent mischief to Lebanon. Recent attacks on Israeli and other troops have been traced to Shiite Moslems working with Iran.

— Does the heart of a Parris Island drill instructor beat within every Marine's breast? The corps' brass hats seem to think so. At any rate, they have tried to remedy the morale problem of boring duty in Lebanon by turning the Marines into DIs for the sad-sack Lebanese army. My sources say the results of this casual training have been minimally effective. But at least it has accomplished its main purpose: to keep bored U.S. Marines out of the fleshpots of Beirut.

GEORGE F. WILL

Life begins when March ends

WASHINGTON — Bill James, lives as a solitary genius in Winchester, Kansas. Well, not quite solitary. He has, he says, a wife to neglect. Does she, too, like baseball? "She does now," he says tersely. All James does — I'm not criticizing, he does enough — is compile, each year, "The Bill James Baseball Abstract," the most important scientific treatise since Newton's "Principia."

George F. Will

More than anyone since Pythagoras (who thought that the essence of everything could be expressed arithmetically), James believes in numbers. He also believes in looking at evidence.

For example, in 1981 careless persons said the Yankees had an "incredible" won-lost record, 51-3, in games in which they led going into the eighth inning. But James found that the average record for American League teams leading after seven innings was 49-5. The Cleveland Indians, part of baseball's Third World, were 42-3. And James found that the Yankees' remarkable won-lost record was 0-41 when they were behind after seven.

'Round the clock and through the calendar, James sees things no one else sees, and disproves things that "everyone" knows are true. Next time conversation flags at a cocktail party, say: "In 1982, the Indians made 61 fewer double plays than their opponents, and no other team in the league had a differential of more than 31. The Twins were the only team that had a losing record even in games when they scored a run in the eighth inning." If people do not burst into applause, you are at the wrong cocktail party.

Two moral imperatives are: Be as intelligent as you can be at whatever you are doing, and savor the sweetness of life. James does by marinating himself in the mathematics of baseball. Baseball statistics gave many of us our first sense of mastery, our first (and for some of us our last) sense of what it feels like to really understand something, and to know more about something than our parents do.

Baseball people are Pythagoreans, but there are limits in life to what can be quantified. I knew I was in the wrong profession when, as a graduate student in political science at Princeton, I opened a scholarly article on "The Judicial Philosophy of Justice Robert Jackson" and found a mass of equations and graphs. Part of baseball's charm is the illusion it offers that life can be completely reduced to numbers. But how would you like it, reader, if everyday from coast to coast newspapers printed a box score of your accomplishments and errors at work the previous day?

Mathematics now has proven what clear-thinking moralists always hoped would be true: The American League's designated hitter rule, America's worst mistake since electing President Buchanan, is a deserved affliction to its perpetrators. Sports Illustrated's Jim Kaplan, a prophet who will not be without honor in his country while I draw breath, notes that for the first time the National League has won four consecutive World Series with four different teams. Also, the National League has won 19 of the last 20 All-Star games. Some MIT mathematicians told Kaplan that the odds against such a result between equals is 23,800 to one, so Kaplan concludes the leagues are not equals.

Writing with a judgmental tone not heard since the Old Testament Prophets were cataloging the shortcomings of the Israelites, Kaplan says to the American League: Your failures are the wages of sin, and the DH is sin. True, Kaplan cites other factors, such as better farm systems, and fewer small parks that encourage mindless, swing-for-the-fences baseball. But the DH also has made managers dumber: "Because pitchers don't bat in the American League, managers have tended to leave them in the games when they are losing. As a result, there has been less thinking, less strategy, less managing." With the DH, teams lust incontinently for a big inning, so there is less aggressive scrambling for runs. Sloth. Sin.

I have warned Ronald Reagan: He will be judged by whether he rids the nation of the DH. He has not lifted a finger, preferring to squander his time on lesser matters, like arms control. I am remaining uncommitted for 1984 until I hear where Alan Cranston stands on the DH.

However, God gave us baseball so that we should not have to think about missiles or the money supply all the time. An old man once said that if he could get through March, he usually found he lived till the end of the year. Old man, wherever you are: We made it.

Reagan sought Soviet release of Pentecostals

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Foreign Affairs Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — The freeing Wednesday of Lidya Vaschenko, a member of the Soviet Pentecostalist family that took refuge in the basement of the U.S. Embassy five years ago, followed a top-secret appeal by President Reagan to Soviet leader Yuri Andropov.

The appeal was originally made in early December shortly after Andropov succeeded Leonid Brezhnev and repeated by Reagan personally to Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin at an unannounced White House meeting last month. The initial appeal was disclosed by Reagan to editors of the Hearst Newspapers when they met with the president on December 13, 1982.

Lidya Vaschenko

But Reagan later asked that the portion of his remarks dealing with the Pentecostal family be deleted from the transcript after he realized, as he told the editors, "I should not have said that in this gathering because to say it publicly...then makes it impossible for the other fellow to do it."

White House officials contacted today disclosed that Reagan had made the personal appeal to Andropov only days before William Randolph Hearst Jr. asked Reagan what conditions he was attaching to a summit meeting with the new Soviet leader.

"We are not silent or anything," Reagan replied, adding that he was in principle open to the idea of a summit. "But we would like some deeds rather than a continuation of words – some deed that shows" that the Russians genuinely are willing to accomodate U.S. concerns.

"You know, when you have got a group of people, a family, living in the basement of the United States Embassy for four years now because, if they go outside, they will be arrested and punished by the Soviets — and their only crime is they want to worship God in their own way," Reagan declared.

"You know, they could let those people come to America," he went on. "There are people who have offered them sanctuary, and said that they would accept them and take care of them." In fact, a private effort has been underway for years to obtain freedom for the religious dissidents.

Dr. Olin Robison, a former State Department official who is president of Middlebury College and has led numerous citizen exchange groups to the Soviet Union, has repeatedly discussed the problem with the family of five.

Arafat briefs Kuwaiti, PLO leaders on negotiations

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

KUWAIT — Palestinian guerrilla chief Yasser Arafat met here Wednesday with Kuwaiti leaders and officials of the Palestine Liberation Organization to brief them on the results of his talks earlier this week with King Hussein over Jordan's possible participation in U.S.-sponsored peace talks.

There was no further indication Wednesday whether Arafat and the king were closer to reaching an agreement or whether the two had come to an impasse that will have to be resolved at an extraordinary Arab summit now being planned for later this month, probably in Fez, Morocco.

Yasser Abd Rabbo, a PLO executive committee member and its official spokesman, said in an interview Wednesday with the Kuwaiti news agency that the organization still refused to accept "any amendments to the Arab peace formula endorsed by last year's Fez summit conference, if such modifications infringe on the basic rights of the Palestinian people."

He indicated that these rights include an independent Palestinian state and the involvement of the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people in any new Middle East peace negotiations.

"The forthcoming Arab summit," he said, "is requested to promote the Fez resolutions and not to relapse backward. ... We will urge the Arab leaders at the summit to agree on a common stand toward U.S. policy and not to compromise."

Arafat and King Hussein have been discussing a possible compromise between the Fez plan, which calls explicitly for an independent Palestinian state and recognition of the PLO as the Palestinians' sole representative, and the plan proposed by President Reagan, which rules out such a state and proposes instead a Palestinian entity associated with Jordan, while mentioning no role for the PLO in peace talks.

Despite Rabbo's repetition of the official PLO stand tending to rule out any compromise, the Palestinian news agency Wafa repeated Wednesday Arafat's statement upon arrival here Tuesday that "there are no obstacles which hinder reaching an accord with Jordan."

Arafat is reported to be planning to travel to Saudi Arabia Thursday before returning to Amman for further talks with King Hussein, possibly this weekend.

Hostility exists in tourist town 30 years after truce

Hearst Feature Service

PANMUNJOM, Korea — Panmunjom is one of the world's ominous places. Bitter hostility has existed for 30 years, before and after the Korean War armistice was signed there in 1953. It is a tense and unfriendly place dedicated to a state of armed truce.

Panmunjom puts United Nations and North Korean soldiers nose to nose in a formally hostile situation that rarely exists elsewhere in the world.

Panmunjom is part of the Joint Security Area, a small, circular, park-like location which is a neutral but divided section of the overall demilitarized zone, a 151-mile long, two-and-a-half miles-wide buffer that separates the armies. The military armistice commission meets in Panmunjom and administers the truce agreement in effect since July 27, 1953. Nowadays, the commission does little except for brief discussions of housekeeping chores. It also will discuss and attempt to settle truce agreement violations.

Inside the military armstice conference building, divided neatly by the military demarcation line that separates North and South Korea, the visitor is allowed to pass into North Korea and then step back into the Republic of (South) Korea. It is described as the only place in the world where a person can cross freely into a communist country and return without worrying about passports, visas and checkpoints.

Even though the joint security area and environs are tense and even dangerous, Panmunjom is a busy tourist attraction. About 50,000 people a year visit on the U.N. side, including South Koreans, Japanese and U.S. military personnel and civilians.

Years ago, Panmunjom was a farming hamlet, unknown until the truce talks were held there. Today, it is not a village but a collection of low buildings – tan if North Korean, blue if U.N. – some of them bisected neatly by the demarcation line. There is an impressive pagoda-like Freedom House on the U.N. side. The grounds are nicely landscaped.

No peace treaty was ever signed, and the truce has become the longest in modern history.

Before anyone can enter the truce village, the U.N. command, in the form of American military police, briefs the visitors and each must sign a paper which releases the U.N., the United States and the Republic of Korea from any obligation to guarantee personal safety.

Visitors are told that during the late 1960s, the North Koreans committed 160 hostile acts south of the demarcation line in the Panmunjom area. U.N. positions were attacked, roads were mined, passenger trains were blown up. No blue jeans or long, unkempt hair are allowed, in order to uphold "the dignity of the U.N. command" and to avoid offending the puritanical North Koreans. No one is allowed to speak to the North Koreans or to make any kind of gesture toward them.

Nothing inside the armistice conference building may be touched. It is emphasized that touching the green felt table top or the North Korean flag could lead to serious trouble. The truce line runs down the middle of the conference table, marked by black microphone cords. Anyone who strays from the cordon of U.N. guards or who disobeys instructions will be removed immediately from the area. Microphones hang from the conference building ceiling, monitored by both sides.

Outside the building, a greatcoat-clad North Korean guard with red badges and a sidearm stared implacably at the clutch of visitors. Another North Korean stood on the steps of the communists' pavilion building inside their zone of the Joint Security Area, looking through binoculars.

A half-dozen North Korean guards moved slowly toward the foot-wide concrete strip that marks the demarcation line, beyond which they are forbidden. In a kind of lazy, loitering way, they approached the strip. In a similar fashion, U.S. soldiers, hands near their pistols, wandered toward the concrete strip. The men, a few feet apart, glared at each other for a minute or two, then in slow motion faded apart – a small drama that probably is repeated several times a day.

Across 2,000 meters of demilitarized zone, the North Koreans have a similar post, manned by soldiers looking back at the U.N. post with binoculars. Carried on the wind is communist propaganda music, a high-pitched eerie sound. "It gets pretty monotonous, and sometimes they turn it way up to bug us," one soldier said.

Down by the one-lane Bridge of No Return stands what is left of the tree that a South Korean work party was trimming in 1976 when a dispute between American officers supervising the job and North Korean guards ended with the beating deaths of two Americans. This international incident resulted in Operation Paul Bunyan. U.S. forces in Korea went on alert, B-52s were called in, the aircraft carrier Midway entered local waters, and 50 soldiers marched to the tree and carved it into a stump.

After the tree trouble, it was agreed the opposing sides should no longer mingle in the Joint Security Area. Nowadays, they stay on their own side of the demarcation line.

Today, a bad mood still exists at the tree stump. It is on the guided tour, and is pointed to as an outrageous example of the "barbaric" tendencies of the North Koreans. A two-and-a-half ton U.S. Army truck – with engine idling, an armed soldier at the wheel, and always in reverse gear – is parked at the end of the Bridge of No Return whenever visitors are due. The driver has instructions, at the slightest hint the communists on the other side of the bridge are getting ready to do mischief, to back the truck onto the bridge, blocking it, while the U.N. riot squad is notified.

Panmunjon is a U.N. show, operated mostly by soldiers of the U.S. 2nd Infantry Division. Nearby is another show, the tunnel tour, this one run by the South Koreans and designed to demonstrate again "the incredible dedication" of the North Koreans to overrun South Korea and unify the country under communist rule.

Since 1974, three tunnels about the height of a man have been found that crossed the demilitarized zone into South Korea. All were capable of moving thousands of troops an hour. The third one, located only four kilometers from Panmunjom, could handle field guns and tanks.

Ever since the first tunnel discovery, the South Koreans have been sensitive to anything unusual occurring along the zone, and when water was seen spewing out of the ground in 1978, they realized it could be caused by an underground explosion related to tunnel boring. They built "an intercept" tunnel, and after 102 days of digging a 900-foot-long shaft through solid rock, they intersected a North Korean tunnel at a depth of about 225 feet. This tunnel especially concerned the South Koreans since it was only 25 miles from Seoul and was able to move 30,000 troops an hour. The North Koreans said the tunnel must be part of an old coal mine – a fanciful explanation.

The South Koreans are proud of their intercept tunnel near Panmunjom, and at times conduct guided tours. A little lecture on the danger is given, visitors either sign a release or don't go, steel helmets are issued and the long walk down the low intercept tunnel begins. The North Korean tunnel is more spacious, but since it has been walled off on the side toward North Korea, there is not much to see.

The South Koreans have set a machine gun at an opening in the first concrete barrier. Between the first barrier and the solid concrete and steel wall, they have placed landmines. As a precaution against gas poisoning, two caged canaries live next to the machine gun.

Last hurrah for Tall City Relays?

TERRY WILLIAMSON

Up to this point Memorial Stadium has been Midland's inside joke. The subject is always good for a giggle or two in passing.

But now things seem to be getting serious. There is a distinct possibility that Midland will be losing the Tall City Relays for good after Friday night's show.

"We may not be able to have the Tall City Relays anymore after this year," says Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director. "It's becoming increasingly hard to get teams to come here for a track meet because we still have the cinder track. No one wants to run here."

THE TRUTH of the matter is that it has been hard to get teams to come to a track meet in Midland for the past decade at least. The Tall City meet was defunct for a long period of time in the 70s and was revived only four years ago.

To even have the meet, such as it is, produces a situation where Bartosh and assistant AD Ed Nixon have had to call in all past favors to get teams to come here. Deals had to be made like sending our track teams to meets that we really didn't want to compete in.

"The only reason we compete in Midland is because of our AD," said one District 4-5A coach last week. "From the way I understand it, it's strictly a favor to Midland. Our kids don't want to run there and I sure don't. I would really hate to see a kid go down on the cinders this close to the district meet."

SAN ANGELO track coach Ken Fannon, however, says that he is through with the Tall City meet. "We're coming this year because Midland says we made a commitment to be there. I don't remember doing that, but if I did, we'll be there," Fannon said. "But I want it known right now that I will not be back next year or any other year that Midland offers the same facility to compete in. It's really a disgrace for a town like Midland to have a facility like Memorial Stadium."

The real shame is that Midland's track teams will be without any meet during the year in which to showcase their talent before the home crowd. They will always have their act out of town. In the long run, that could have a drastic effect on the track programs at Midland High and Midland Lee. Why not try another sport where you can have a home showcase?

Lee is currently one of the track powers of West Texas and the future looks bright for both schools down the road in the foreseeable future. But programs can be ruined faster than built.

BOTH SCHOOLS are currently working with one foot in a hole. It's truly amazing that Lee coach Sam Volpe and MHS coach Johnny Williams can be competitive with the rest of the 4-5A schools. Neither team has an all-weather track to practice on, yet all the meets, with the exception of the Tall City Relays, are run on all-weather surfaces. All other district schools have access to all-weather tracks, in three cases (Abilene, San Angelo and Odessa) several. Midland has nary a one.

For now we may just be losing a track meet that has little appeal to fans or the teams. But how long will it be before District 4-5A decides that Midland can never host the district meet in Memorial Stadium? League track coaches, to a man, think that move is already overdue.

Then how long will it be before District 4-5A decides that Memorial Stadium is not fit for a football game? Do we play all road games?

Go ahead and laugh Midland. You are due for another giggle spree. But how long can you laugh before the same old joke just isn't funny anymore?

M-Cubs victims of snow

EL PASO—With 10 inches of snow still on Dudley Field, Friday's Texas League opener between Midland and El Paso already has been scratched and, according to Diablos' General Manager Jim Paul, things look doubtful for Saturday's game.

The Cubs and Diablos were to open a five-game series here, but the weather forecast is so hostile that Manager Tom Harmon is keeping his club in Mesa, Ariz., until there is a break in the weather.

El Paso Manager Tony Muser brought his club to the Border City from the spring training quarters at Peoria, Ariz., and the Diablos have no place to work out.

Midland's home opener is scheduled for Wednesday against Beaumont and Midland GM Bill Schammel is hoping the unsettled weekend means good weather by midweek. "After last year's rainouts, we deserve a break in the weather."

The Cubs will be home for 10 games with San Antonio following the Exporters into Cubs Stadium.

El Paso is the defending TL West champion, but Muser, the only managerial returnee in the Texas League, has a new team. Cone are both of last year's standouts, third baseman Randy Ready and outfielder Dion James. Ready is at Milwaukee's PCL Triple A team and James is with the parent Milwaukee Brewers.

Harmon is in his first year as Midland manager, succeeding Brian Murphy, who guided Midland to a second half West title last year. Harmon, an off-season resident of Austin and former University of Texas catcher, last year was bullpen coach with the Chicago Cubs.

For the first time, Midland also will have a fulltime pitching coach, Glen Gregson, a former pitcher from Hamlet, N.C., who now lives Helena, Mont.

Rebels seeking record sixth straight track crown

Lee, Permian expected to battle it out for Tall City Relays title

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Midland Lee Rebels will hit the West Texas dirt of Memorial Stadium Friday seeking the school's record setting sixth straight track title against most of the teams the Rebs will have to face in two weeks when the District 4-5A teams meet in Odessa.

It's the annual bash known as the Tall City Relays, and although the dilapidated facilities at Memorial Stadium will take the brunt of most of the talk, several streaks will be on the line — good track or not.

This is the time of year when Midland takes a beating by visiting schools because no one likes to run here. The meet has now degenerated to a mere six-team field since only so much arm twisting can be done to get teams to compete on the only 5A dirt track in West Texas.

But the Rebels have to put all the negatives in the back pocket if they want to keep "The Streak" alive. Lee has run to team titles at Fort Stockton, Graham, Odessa, Andrews and San Angelo, showing off its most powerful team ever under Coach Sam Volpe.

Lee will begin its title run at 2:30 p.m. Friday when all field event finals and running preliminaries begin. Friday's running finals will be at what is expected to be a cool 7 p.m. start with the 3200 meters. The Tall City will also feature a junior varsity division this year.

AGAIN, ODESSA Permian is expected to be the thorn in the Lee side Friday as the two teams continue to battle head-to-head on a weekly basis. San Angelo is another strong unit while Odessa High, Midland High and Big Spring round out the field.

Lee's team streak isn't the only streak to watch, however. Lee's Damon Polk is unbeaten in the high hurdles this year, posting a best of 13.88 and has won three of five outings in the intermediate hurdles.

Midland High's Chuck St. Germain is another pair of legs to watch in the 800 meters, an event he has won three times this year without a loss. St. Germain owns the best district time of 1:57.6 in the event. He eluded the 800 last week in Monahans for the 400 to get some speed work in after a bout with flu slowed him.

Odessa High's Thomas Taylor, who has a 6-11 to his credit this year, is unbeaten in the high jump and Lee's Isaac Garnett has lost only once in five outings in the shot put where he is the defending district champion. He is up to around 57-feet this year and continues to improve.

Friday's sprints — the 200 and 100 meters — should also be a highlight where Permian's Randy Ensch dominates. Ensch has not lost in either event to a 4-5A runner, but it's always a good test.

Lee sophomore Walter Jones, coming off a disappointing showing at San Angelo two weeks ago, is strong in both sprints and teammate Carlton Johnson is coming on strong in the 200. Midland High sophomore Allen Foret has victories this year in both sprints, but seems to be coming hard in the 200 meters also. Odessa High's Reggie Jones is another 100 meter threat in a field that may erase the district record of 10.5 this year.

LEE WILL also seek victories in both relays, pole vault and long jump. Wayne Brandt has a 13-6 this year in the pole vault and Luther Johnson is over 22-feet in the long jump, but he is a darkhorse. Lee has busted the 42 second barrier in the 400 relay and that is a strong point. Lee is also down in the 3:17 range in the 1600 relay, but Permian has dominated that event this year despite the fact that the races have been competitive when Lee gets the baton around without any trouble.

San Angelo has strength in the distance races, but Lee's Carl Piccolo, a Region I qualifier last year, is beginning to return to last year's form in the 1600.

Midland High coach Johnny Williams has put a lot of emphasis on the relays this year, but the Bulldogs still are in the dark horse roll there. MHS hurdler Todd Crawford is another Bulldog coming strong, bidding for a victory last week in Monahans with a 41.49. He owns a 41.07 this year.

Midland High's Ross Petree and Lee's David Myers also hope to score in the 800.

Lee's Luther Johnson should also get points in the hurdles as will Eric Cooper in the shot put and Ricky Lozano in the discus.

With the 4-5A meet only two weeks away, the Tall City affair becomes an important outing for all the teams, but some wonder if running at Memorial Stadium does more harm than good. Tracksters take a beating competing in Midland.

Snead's dream 49 wins fourth Masters

By HANK WESCH
Copley News Service

AUGUSTA, Ga. — He has declared, in writing, that this will be his last Masters as a competitor, and Sam Snead has seen the way he would like to make his exit.

"I had a dream a couple weeks ago," said Snead. The golfing legend was seated at a dining table on the second floor of the Augusta National Golf Club clubhouse, occasionally sipping from a rum-and-Coke in a green paper cup. His trademark straw hat was solidly in place, his slate-blue eyes atwinkle as he related the dream.

"The first day out, I shoot 63, the course record, and Lloyd's of London has $50,000 to give to anyone who breaks the course record," said Snead. "So I go to the press tent for the presentation and, while I'm there, I ask, 'Do I get another $50,000 if I break it again tomorrow?'"

Assured that he would, Snead proceeded to shoot 62 and 60 for the second and third rounds of the dream.

"The last day, I birdie the first hole and eagle the second to start," said Snead, who provided a hole-by-hole description of a succession of birdies and eagles that left him 21-under-par through 17 holes.

"We come to 18 and the pin is down low on the green, and I hit my drive 325 yards," Snead continued. "So I walk up and look the green over to see where I've got to land my 9-iron to back it down the hill to the cup. From somewhere, Cary Middlecoff comes out and says, 'Oh my God, he's gonna try and make two.'"

Naturally, Snead's 9-iron shot lands softly and backs down the hill to nestle into the cup amid tumultuous cheers. Sam strides the hill for the last time and turns to look back out over the green and the fairway, ready to sign for a 49.

"I just wave and say, 'Well, that'll hold 'em for a while,'" said Snead. "'Goodbye, this is it.'"

A BEAUTIFUL dream and, some would contend, the only truly fitting way for Snead to leave the Masters Tournament he has won three times and participated in 44 times in its 47 editions.

But it was not a dream, rather a large dose of reality that prompted Snead to write in a bylined story in this month's Golf Digest:

"... I guess Old Man Time has finally caught up with me. This is going to be my last Masters. I'll be 71 in May and there's just no point in a man my age trying to compete with kids in their 20s, 30s and 40s. Call it pride or whatever you want, but if I can't go out there and post a good score, then I'm not going to take somebody's spot in the field."

As a champion in 1949, 1952 and 1954, there is a lifetime opening in the Masters field for Snead. Past champions are No. 1 on the priority list for Masters invitations. But it is clear the soft-drawling man from Hot Springs, Va., prefers to leave one of the bastions of his sport with a measure of dignity.

"The course is just too long for me," said Snead. "Every change that has been made has been made for the long hitters. They've moved the tee boxes back, widened the fairways. ...

Permian girls favored to claim 4-5A track title

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — Odessa Permian's high flying girls are expected to easily capture the District 4-5A track title here at Ratliff Stadium Friday night, but even more important results will come out of this one-day meet than just the team title.

This is where 4-5A girls can earn Region I berths and both Midland High and Midland Lee girls expect to cash in on those rewards, despite the fact that neither school is expected to make a charge for the team title.

The top two finishers in each event will earn Region I track berths for the all-important Lubbock meet at the Texas Tech oval in two weeks.

LEE AND MHS are both more competitive this year in girls' action than at any time in the past. That won't be good enough for a team title run, but there should be some names posted for the Region I competition.

Lee's Felicia Farias is the favorite to win the high jump after a season best of 5-4 this year, tops in the league. She is unbeaten in the high jump this year.

Midland High's Claire Hardy, the 4-5A cross country champion and state qualifier, may earn two berths in the 1600 and 3200 meter runs. Hardy has set three 3200 meter records this year and has been beaten only once. She owns a 11:45.05 best in the 3200 meters, tops in the district and a 5:33.12 in the 1600, an event that seems to favor Permian's Paula Baccus, who has a 5:41.49. Oddly enough, however, Hardy's only loss in the 3200 came at Ratliff in the West Texas Relays, the site of Friday's district meet.

Farias also could earn a Region I berth in the 100 hurdles, but she is a longshot in that event since Permian's Kay Redman (14.70) is the best in West Texas and Big Spring's Karen Fleckenstein owns a 15.78.

THE TRIPLE jump looks like a good event for the Tall City since Lee's Brenda Haven leads the district with a leap of 36-11½ this year and Sylvia Randle of Big Spring owns a 35-10¾. Lee's Diane White (35-5½) and Midland's Penny Griffin (35-0) and Tina Knight (34-6) will be waiting in the wings if those two slip.

Griffin may be the favorite in the long jump if she can match her best of 17-3 and Haven's 16-11 will be in the hunt. Midland's Shelia Christian has a 16-7½ this year in an event that has been good for the locals.

Midland High's Teresa Simmons appears to have a shot at a discus berth, but Permian's Melissa Harrison (124-5) and San Angelo's Peggy Keterson (121-8) are the favorites. Midland High's Rochelle Gill may have a shot at a region berth in the high jump if she can match her best of 5-1. Haven has an outside shot at the 200 meter berth with a 26.80 this year, but Big Spring's Shell Rutledge (25.91) is the big favorite while OHS' Kerry Evans owns a 26.1.

MHS' Christian could surprise in the 400 meters, but Rutledge is again a big favorite with her 59.17 this year and no one else in the league is under one minute in that event. Lee's Megan Pace is another outsider with a chance in the distance races.

Flyers will do better in NHL playoffs

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Flyers, losers of their first playoff game in the quest for hockey's Stanley Cup, will turn things around and do better tonight, Coach Bob McCammon says.

"We didn't get 106 points by accident," McCammon said after his team was defeated Tuesday night by the New York Rangers in the opener of the best-of-five National Hockey League first-round playoff series.

McCammon was referring to the Flyers' winning point total in the NHL's Patrick Division. The Rangers finished fourth, 26 points behind.

What made the 5-3 first-game loss even more bitter was that it came on home ice. It took the Flyers 80 regular season games to win the division and earn the home-ice advantage. Presto, they lost it in just one game.

"The long and short of it is that we didn't play well enough to win," McCammon said disgustedly.

"We'll do a lot of things different Thursday," he added, looking toward the second game of the series here. "What? I'm not going to say, but we'll play better."

The Rangers, who knocked the Flyers out of the playoffs last season, 3-1, after the Flyers had won the first game in New York, skated to a 3-0 lead in the first period Tuesday night.

Tall Town marathon April 23

The third annual Tall Town marathon will be held April 23 at the Midland Park Mall with registration the day of the race in the Food Court area of the Mall.

There will be three race distances—10 kilometers, two miles and one mile for youngsters under 12. The one-mile run begins at 7:45 a.m. The two-mile and 10-kilometer runs begin at 8 a.m.

Entry fee is $5. After April 9, it will be $6. The runs will start and finish at the Mall. Competition will be in 12-under, 13-19, 20-29, 30-39, 40-49 and 50-and-over divisions for women. For men, the divisions will range from 12-under to 60-over. There also will be competition for boys and girls 6-under, 7-9 and 10-12.

The top three finishers in each age division will receive awards.

Mail registration forms and entry fees to Tall Town, 10,000 P.O.Box 10483, Midland, 79702. Registration ends 7:15 a.m. April 23.

Cooper golfers still one-two

ODESSA — The two-stroke lead Abilene Cooper's A players held over their B squad jumped to 38 Wednesday after the Cougars fired a 289 for a 1,194 total at Odessa Country Club in round four of District 4-5A play.

Cooper B is in second at 1,232 for second place followed by San Angelo at 1,292, Odessa Permian in fourth at 1,321 and Midland High in fifth at 1,335.

The top two teams in the district will qualify for state along with the top two medalsits. Currently, Cooper's Kyle Coody leads the medalist race with a four-round total of 292, a 73-stroke average per round.

Burnout, strikes the best of 'em

By SCOTT OSTLER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Burnout. It's the malaise of the 80s, a real up-and-coming downer.

Not to be confused with cookout (a Boy Scout activity) and flareout (a short pass pattern), burnout is a condition where you are basically sick of your job and need a vacation.

Dick Vermeil quit his job as coach of the Philadelphia Eagles recently, claiming he was burned out. Other NFL coaches, Bill Walsh and Walt Michaels for two, showed definite symptoms of burnout. Bjorn Borg quit tennis because of a form of burnout that occurs when you run out of bureau drawers in which to stash your money.

It's really catching on. Even the president of the United States is aware of burnout, avoiding it by taking frequent vacations and wearing blue jeans.

THE TYPE of people most susceptible to burnout are creative types, people in positions of major responsibility and working under constant pressure. I wasn't aware of how widespread burnout was until the other day when I phoned my plumber, Bernie, over at "Pipes R Us."

Bernie takes his art very seriously. He specializes in creative solutions to emergency plumbing problems. He once unclogged my kitchen drain using the Heimlich Maneuver. We're talking brilliant.

"Bernie's not in," the receptionist told me. "He left last week to spend the spring at his condo in Majorca. Said he was just burned out."

"But he just got back from skiing at Aspen," I protested.

"The man's under a lot of pressure," the receptionist said.

"Give him my best," I said.

Hmmmm. If coaches can suffer burnout, and presidents and plumbers, what about sportswriters?

MAYBE THAT would account for recent daydreams where I spike my typewriter, in slo-mo, from the observation deck of the Empire State Building. I decided to talk it over with my shrink, Sigmund.

"Burnout?" said Sigmund. "Isn't that where you play catch with a baseball, seeing which player can throw it the hardest? Perhaps you should be consulting a bone-bruise specialist, not a bone-head specialist."

Sigmund is a great kidder. I pulled out my pocket dictionary and read him the definition of "burned out" — "Debilitated or excessively worn by excessive consumption of energy or physical resources."

I showed him a copy of an old "Tumblewees" cartoon strip, where undertaker Claude Clay is talking to his grave digger, Wimble.

"What's wrong, Wimble?" Clay asks.

"Monday, boss," Wimble says. "It's a grave digger's worst day. You sit staring at a blank piece of ground, waiting for the creative spark, wondering if you have another masterpiece in you..."

"That's how I've been feeling lately, boss-er, Sigmund," I told him. "It started when I read about Dick Vermeil and those other coaches. There's a lot of this burnout going around, and I think I might have caught it somewhere. Maybe from Andy Hassler, the Angel relief pitcher, in a postgame interview late last season. He had burnout, you know. He claims Gene Mauch gave it to him by making him warm up in the bullpen too many times. That's more of a physical burnout, but it probably took a toll on him mentally, too, never knowing whether it would be OK to sneak a hot dog in the fifth inning."

"How has this burnout manifested itself in your case?" Sig asked.

"LOTS OF ways, doc. Nightmares, for instance. Last night I dreamed I had lunch with Georgia Frontiere at her house and apologized for all the nasty things I'd written about her and her football team.

"This is getting to be a tough business, I tell ya. Just getting an interview with a star athlete can be draining. To talk to a player you have to go through three secretaries, a business manager and two agents. All that in order to set up a 10-minute interview with Lefty Smeed Inc. All the top jocks are corporations now, you know, actual conglomerates. It's depressing. I feel like asking 'em, 'Your board room or mine?'

Lewis catching flak for championship loss

By BILL FINLEY
Copley News Service

ALBUQUERQUE — Controversy continues to swirl around the University of Houston, in general, and Cougar coach Guy Lewis, in particular.

Houston, an eight-point favorite to subdue North Carolina State in the final of the NCAA Basketball Tournament Monday night, was beaten 54-52.

It was one of the more startling upsets in the history of the college game, and Lewis, it appears, will be receiving most of the blame for his team's stunning loss.

"I have a hunch Guy had some trouble getting to sleep last night," San Diego State coach Smokey Gaines said before leaving Albuquerque.

Lewis, 61, finished his 27th season at Houston Monday night. This would have been his first national championship. The Cougars fell short, however, and Lewis must now wonder if he was the reason why.

LEWIS' TEAM appeared flat and overconfident when it took the court. The Wolfpack stole the opening tip. State forward Thurl Bailey scored the first points of the game with a dunk, and before the game was two minutes old, the score was 6-0, State.

Lewis then made a series of decisions, most of which proved to be serious mistakes.

— Houston star Clyde Drexler received his third personal foul with 12:21 to play in the first half. Lewis left Drexler on the floor, and Drexler soon had his fourth personal foul. Drexler never fouled out, but he was tentative the rest of the way and finished with four points.

— Having outscored North Carolina State 17-2 in the first 10 minutes of the second half and leading 42-35, Houston suddenly went to a spread-court offense. This would have been a questionable strategy in any case. As a member of the Atlantic Coast Conference, State obviously knows how to defend four-corner sets. In this case, Houston's decision to slow the game down also stemmed its own considerable momentum.

— Finally, as State maneuvered for the last shot of the game with the score tied at 52, Houston might have realized it had only five fouls in the second half. With five seconds to play, then, Houston could have fouled State guard Dereck Whittenburg before he shot. The Wolfpack would then have been given the ball out of bounds and forced to start over. Instead, Whittenburg launched a 27-footer that traveled 25 feet, and Lorenzo Charles jammed the ball home for the game-winning points.

Such decisions may easily have cost Houston a game it lost by two scant points.

HOUSTON'S PLAYERS tried being diplomatic, but they, too, had questions, particularly regarding Lewis' decision to spread the court with 10 minutes to go.

Houston calls its delay game "Locomotion."

"I don't think we should have been in the Locomotion," forward Benny Anders said. "I think we should have stayed in our offense."

Forward Larry Micheaux agreed. "I thought we should have stayed with what we were doing," he said. "We had 'em on the run. When you've just outscored somebody 17-2, why do you change what you're doing?"

Interestingly, at a press conference Sunday, Lewis was asked about State's intention to slow the pace of the game.

"It takes two to tango," Lewis said. With 10 minutes to play Monday night, Lewis decided to dance with a slow-down team, and it cost him a national championship.

THOUSANDS OF coaches, fans and media representatives began heading home yesterday, and a majority seemed to believe Houston did more to lose the NCAA final than State did to win it.

"Houston played like they thought they'd already beaten the next-best team Saturday afternoon," Gaines said. "They didn't seem to have a whole lot of enthusiasm."

His point was illustrated by the fact Houston had no steals and one dunk. The Cougars induced North Carolina State to commit just six turnovers in the game.

Did the Wolfpack win it?

Whittenburg, a devastating shooter throughout the tournament, was 6 for 17 from the field. Charles had been 1 for 6 before his climactic last-second dunk. State shot just 39 percent from the field and was outrebounded 44-34.

In the last 3:20, however, North Carolina State outscored the top-ranked Cougars 8-0.

Houston's last field goal was a driving layup by Michael Young with 3:56 to go. Its final points came on free throws by Drexler at 3:21.

"You've got to be lucky to win an NCAA championship," North Carolina State coach Valvano said. "We weren't being lucky when we got back in the game, but obviously we were lucky to win it the way we did."

North Carolina State fans may also consider themselves lucky that Valvano, and not Guy Lewis, was seated at the end of State's bench.

Broncos' Kyle announces retirement

DENVER (AP) — Denver Broncos cornerback Aaron Kyle, a veteran of seven seasons in the National Football League, announced his retirement Wednesday, a Broncos spokesman said.

Kyle, a 1976 first-round draft choice of the Dallas Cowboys from the University of Wyoming, played three seasons in Denver after being signed as a free agent in 1980. He led Denver in turnovers in both 1981 and 1982.

Kyle, who turned 29 Wednesday, did not announce his future plans, but he has extensive investments in restaurants, oil, maintenance businesses and other ventures.

He had indicated at the end of the 1982 season, as he underwent minor knee surgery, that he doubted if he would play again. As the Broncos' player representative, Kyle was criticized by fans and by some of his own teammates for his role in the eight-week NFL players' strike in 1982.

The Broncos were among the most anti-union teams in the NFL.

Give baseball a big E on Doubleday legend

By BOB OATES
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

At dawn's early light on a warm April morning in 1861, a U.S. Army artillery captain named Abner Doubleday was asleep in a South Carolina military reservation known as Fort Sumter when the Confederates opened fire.

The first shot, Doubleday wrote later, "penetrated the masonry and burst very near my head," presumably waking him up.

The bloody American Civil War had begun. But Doubleday saw no reason to panic. "We took breakfast leisurely," he reported in what remains a commentary on an era that has passed, "before going to the guns."

There, he wrote, "I aimed the first gun on our side (the U.S.) in reply to the attack on Fort Sumter."

In the Aprils that have come and gone since 1861, Doubleday's story (as related in "Battles and Leaders of the Civil War," an 1880s classic) has not been challenged.

But one of his military friends did say that Doubleday started more than a war. The man testified in 1905 that Old Abner also started baseball when he handed down the rules and laid out the first diamond in 1839 at Cooperstown, N.Y.

And a lot of sports historians have laughed at that claim.

INDEED, AS another major league season begins, the consensus among modern researchers is that the Doubleday basefall story is entirely fictitious.

They call it a fable — reminiscent, in many respects, of the one about Santa Claus.

And they think organized baseball should fess up and get its house in order before the annual Hall of Fame game and induction ceremony at Cooperstown in August.

"Why should baseball go on living a lie?" one St. Louis journalist asked. "The game is bigger than that."

The village of Cooperstown, where the Hall of Fame was dedicated in 1939, need not suffer from a candid reordering of the facts.

For the one believable aspect of the Doubleday fable is that in or before 1839 — when baseball already was being quite widely played — it originated in its modern form at or near Cooperstown.

It certainly did not originate in the American West, where they were fighting Indians at the time, or the South, where an antebellum aristocracy spent its leisure moments riding to hounds like proper Englishmen.

CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE suggests that there were more baseball players in the Cooperstown area of New York state in 1839 than the other states combined.

If that was the delivery room, however, the doctor remains unknown. It could not have been Abner Doubleday on the evidence of the only document that has ever purported to link him to baseball's origins.

This is the nebulous and somewhat mystical letter written in 1905 by his old army buddy, Abner Graves, to the investigating (Mills) commission, in which Graves gives himself away in a rules interpretation.

In the Doubleday rules code, as Graves tells it, a baserunner was out when plugged (that is, when hit by a thrown ball). But plugging was only legal in the early games from which baseball descended. The dividing line between those games and the pastime Americans know today as baseball is whether baserunners are plugged or tagged out. In pure baseball, throwing at a baserunner is a rules violation, and poor etiquette besides.

The thrust of Graves' testimony, in which he recalls his youth from an old man's perspective after a lapse of 66 years, is that Doubleday invented the game in a sudden flash of inspiration, using a stick to lay out a four-base diamond with a pitcher's ring and even giving it its name, Base Ball.

No corroborating testimony has come from any source, although Doubleday was a nationally known figure for five decades after the 1839 invention, having risen in the Civil War to major general.

All the other evidence, as accumulated by historians, librarians, other researchers and a journalist or two — including Will Irwin, Harold Seymour, Robert W. Henderson, Frank Menke, Dr. Joseph T. Stukes, Lowell Reidenbaugh, Greg Glassner, Fred Heldman and others — points in other directions.

Here's some of it:

—Doubleday (1819-1893) made no mention of baseball in either of his autobiographical books or anything else he ever wrote, including letters.

NCAA adopts free throw rule, says no to clock, three-pointer

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Players fouled in the last two minutes of college basketball games during bonus situations would get two free throws in a change approved by the NCAA Rules Committee, but the group declined to adopt a shot clock or three-point basket for use nationally, a committee official announced Wednesday.

Players fouled in the bonus situation — when the opposing team has committed six fouls in the second half — currently get one free throw and an additional foul shot if they make the first one.

Houston, in losing Monday night's NCAA Championship game to North Carolina State 54-52, twice missed free throws in the last two minutes that would have given the Cougars an extra free throw each time.

The committee also passed a change limiting timeouts, allowing only three during games being covered by television, since extra official timeouts are allowed for commercials.

The timeouts would be cumulative — they could all be saved up until the end of the game. Current rules allow a total of five timeouts, cumulative.

IN REJECTING the shot clock and three-point basket for long-distance field goals, both of which were used by several conferences during the just-completed season, the committee decided to allow further experimentation with the ideas, said Ed Steitz, the group's secretary-editor.

The committee decided against adopting the rule changes since most NCAA coaches opposed the ideas, he said.

The rule changes, adopted Tuesday night but announced Wednesday by Steitz, will have to be approved by the NCAA, but that usually is a formality.

Of the change to two free throws, Steitz said, "We felt it would eliminate the tendency to foul at the end of the game."

The move regarding the timeouts is designed to cut down on long delays at the end of the game, Steitz said.

The committee will determine later this year exactly which conferences could experiment with the shot clock and three-point basket.

Steitz said experiments could include:

—A 45-second shot clock left on for the entire game with no time counts, except for the 3-second and 10-second counts.

—A 45-second clock turned off during the last four minutes of the game, with all present time counts still in effect.

—A three-point field goal from 19.9 feet, measured from the center of the basket.

—A "rear boundary arc" — a kind of foreshortened half-court line designed to prevent stalling the game.

JIM MURRAY

She may not look the part, but she can play it

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

RANCHO MIRAGE – The first look you get at Jan Stephenson carrying a golf club, you start looking around for the director and the camera. You're sure you've wandered onto a set, a sound stage. "Gidget Goes to the Open." A remake of "Heidi." Maybe one of Charlie's Angels. A one-woman jiggle show. You figure there'll be 80 guys yelling "Take it Off!" And a guy selling candy in the aisles with a prize in each and every box.

At the very least, you're sure they're shooting an eyebrow commercial. A perfume soft-sell. Or she'll tell you how you can stay 19 forever using this tin of yucca grease. Maybe she'll start hucksteringjeans with a pout.

There's no way they're going to waste all this by having her just play (ugh!) golf. That's like Bo Derek playing a nun. You're sure that, once Stephenson gets to the 18th green, she'll drop the charade, the hat will come off, the hair will fall down, the skirt will slit and she'll go into the production number.

You know how women's golf is. A whole bunch of 2's and 3's – plus or minus – where Jan Stephenson is, if not a perfect "10," no worse than a "9 12." (Some cad in Texas once wrote Jan was no better than a "7," but she hotly reminded him she'd like to see Bo Derek play in 110-degree heat in the Pecan Valley in birdie numbers, and look like something Tarzan would chase around for nine reels.)

WOMEN'S GOLF has shed its Tugboat Annie image to a large extent, but it still doesn't look like a chorus line. And Jan Stephenson would stop traffic in a bikini anywhere in the world, and probably cause accidents.

If she were just another pretty face, just a mass of dimples and a loop in her backswing like a Laura Baugh, the other women golfers could stand her. Jan Stephenson's trouble is, she can play. She's won 10 tournaments and is no worse than 3-1 to make it 11 this week in the $400,000 Nabisco-Dinah Shore Invitational at Mission Hills. If she missed three-foot putts, she could play naked for all anyone cared.

But when you win 10 tournaments, the competition starts not liking the way you fix your hair. And they definitely don't like it when you pose in a negligee on top of a rumpled bed looking for all the world, so to speak, like an ad for a Las Vegas dinner show.

If you don't make the cut, you can pose as Little Egypt. But Jan Stephenson makes cuts, 196 in a row at last count. When you start playing like that, you better start wearing long skirts, a felt hat and sensible shoes. But Jan posed for a poster with a wind machine blowing up the folds of her evening gown, a la Marilyn Monroe. You can imagine the gasp that went up in the ladies' locker room over that. The uproar caused her sponsor to withdraw the offending photo (in "poor taste," sniffed the tour, but observers thought it was not in as poor taste as her 198 in a 54-hole tournament in Texas in 1981). Jan distributed 5,000 of the posters herself (at $35 a copy), proceeds to go to scholarships for girls.

WHEN JAN Stephenson was growing up in New South Wales, Australia, she always knew she would be in a spotlight. she didn't know whether it would be as an opera singer, movie star, Olympic swimmer or diver, or international jewel thief, but she knew she wasn't going to spend her life shearing sheep and burping babies. At the exclusive girls' school she went to – on a course of study for the top two girls scholars from each state of Australia, she says -- she studied dance and drama. At the time she wanted to be Ophelia or Camille, not Patty Berg.

It was her father who put a golf club in her hands. When other girls were learning to neck, she was learing to putt. Dad had been a first-class athlete (rugby and cricket) and Mom had been a dancer till a motorcycle accident crippled a leg. Jan thought golf was so boring, and she pestered her father to let her give it up for surfing. He finally relented to the extent of promising her a new surfboard for Christmas if she got her handicap down to 13. She got her handicap down by dint of furious concentration but in the process, golf got to her. When her father agreed she could have the surfboard, Stephenson found herself saying, "Gee, Dad, what I really need is a new sand wedge."

The women's tour may wish she got her surfboard that year and the lead in "Beach Blanket Bingo." For that was thousands of birdies ago.

It was also several husbands ago. Jan Stephenson not only looks like a movie star, she acts like one. Her tumultuous love life would make a perfect Doris Day flick. One day, she's taking out a court order to prevent an ex-beau from bothering her and her current husband. The next day, she's divorcing that husband to marry the guy who was bothering her. There's a part for Rock Hudson in there somewhere.

There's a part for Jan Stephenson on the tour. She's the femme fatale, sort of The Other Woman. She makes the tour an afternoon soap. Anyway you look at it, it's good theater. It's good that she can play well. But it's not necessary. To tell you the truth, most guys don't even care if she can cook.

Age catching up on Snead

"If you can't carry the hills with your tee ball, you're dead, and I can't do it anymore. I can't reach the par-5s, and most of these young guys get to them all in two. You might say I'm spotting the field four shots a round. I've lost 40 yards on my drives. You give me 40 yards, though, and I could play with the boys.

"I know what to do, but the bleeping muscles just don't want to do it," Snead said. "My muscles used to be hard; now they're flabby. I can pump 'em up to where they feel pretty good, but it's like stretching an old rubber band. After awhile, the elasticity is gone."

SNEAD HAS experienced that most dreaded of golfing maladies, the "yips" or nervous shakes on the putting green. "I've cured 'em four different times, but they've always come back," he said.

But his biggest concern is for his failing eyesight.

"My depth perception is about half what it was," said Snead. "Fifty to 60-yard chips are my nemesis now. I might knock it way short or way past the flag and both times it would feel to me like I had hit a pretty good shot."

Snead's personal assessment of his game and physical condition aside, it seems unlikely that the last impression fans get of Snead at the Masters will carry anywhere near the pathos of a Willie Mays losing a World Series fly ball in the sun or an overweight Muhammad Ali in an ill-advised heavyweight title fight.

There is a hitch in Snead's stride, but none in his swing. And if his game is not up to the standards of a man who has 84 professional tour championships, 51 other victories and four Vardon Trophies to his credit, the swing remains remarkable considering his age.

Snead has kept it honed on the PGA Seniors (over 50) circuit, and he displayed considerable skill in a 1-over-par practice round over the front nine at Augusta National Tuesday.

"There's about five guys on the seniors tour I can't beat, but they're mostly between 50 and 53 years old," said Snead. "There's a hell of a lot of difference between 53 and 71."

SNEAD'S AGE—GROUP and Hall of Fame contemporaries, Ben Hogan and Byron Nelson, gave up competitive golf many years ago. Nelson, who had served as an "honorary starter" for the Masters for several years, will forgo that duty when the tournament commences Thursday, to be in Fort Worth, Texas, with his wife, Louise, who suffered a stroke Friday.

"Nelson retired too soon," said Snead, "but I can remember seeing him lose his breakfast and lunch right there on the golf course, and when it starts to affect you like that, maybe it's time to get out."

Sam Snead practices at the Augusta National Golf Club for the 1983 Masters Golf Tournament. It will be his 44th and, he says, last as he does not plan on playing next year.

Permian hasn't lost to 4-5A foe yet

Relay teams from both schools will have to improve rapidly to earn region status, but the possibility remains. The best hope for the locals comes in the 800 relay where Lee owns a 1:49.50 this year and Midland a 1:50.39. Permian's 1:44.70 is tops, however, and Big Spring has a 1:49.20. OHS has a 1:50.0 and this should be a good race.

Permian has not lost a team title to a 4-5A school this year and has the strongest girls squad in the history of the school.

Meet preliminaries will begin at 2:30 p.m. Friday at Ratliff along with all of the field event finals. Running finals will begin at 7 p.m. with the 3200 meters.

Expos beat Cubs, 3-0

CHICAGO (AP) — Al Oliver won the National League batting championship with a .331 average last season. Would he be shooting for 1.000 this year?

"I'll work on it but it won't be easy," laughed the 36-year-old first baseman who was off to a fast start Wednesday when he hammered a pair of home runs and a single to go 3-for-3 and lead the Montreal Expos to a season-opening 3-0 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Oliver smashed a two-run homer to break up a scoreless duel between Chicago's Fergie Jenkins and Montreal's Steve Rogers in the seventh inning and added his second homer off relieve Bill Campbell in the ninth.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, won quick committee approval Wednesday on a compromise plan to finance state college construction without the oil and gas tax increase proposed by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

Oil, gas industry could be hit with new taxes

AUSTIN (AP) — Senators have ready to debate a college construction bill that contains a loophole the author says could be used to provide any new source of state revenue, including new taxes on oil and gas.

The Senate Education Committee approved 9-0 Tuesday a compromise bill by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, that replaced the House-passed measure by Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin.

Parker said he did not know when he would ask for a full Senate debate.

Committee approval of the bill Wednesday followed an unusual closed session Tuesday night in Gov. Mark White attended by legislative leaders and 13 oil and gas industry leaderes.

White said he called the meeting to discuss a proposal by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby to finance a special fund for concstruction at 17 state colleges colleges outside the University of Texas and Texas A&M systems.

Afterwards, White said "this was an exploratory session. There was no final decisions on this or any other tax."

Industry spokesmen offered sympathy with the state's financial situation but volunteered no agreement for oil and gas tax increases.

Parker told the Senate Education Committee his substitute measure contained a special provision saying the $125 million to be taken from general revenue funds would be discontinued if the state found any other sourch of new revenue, such as a tax increase.

Parker pointed out his bill could be changed by amendment in floor debate or could be changed in the 10-member conference committee which likely will write the final version.

Parker said the substitute measure made a number of changes from the House-approved plan. The proposed state constitution change would provide ,$125 million aa year from general revenue, instead of the $75 million annually approved by the House.

There was no debate in the committee before the 8-0 vote.

Following a two hour talk in the governor's private office Tuesday night several spokesmen for the oil and gas industry said they thought the college construction fund should be financed by current taxes.

"It has been our hope the state government would live within its income," said Bill Abington, speaking for Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association, after an unusual closed door session Tuesday night in the governor's office.

"Our members remain unconvinced that Texas needs to expand expendtures at this time beyond anticipated revenue under current taxes," said Julian Martin for the Texas Indipendent Producers and Royalty Owners Association.

Martin said he told White and the others "we would do our share in any across the board tax efforts.

"But we believe for the state to rely on two specialized taxes is poor timing at the least."

White said there would be other closed door sessions in his office with other members of the oil and gas industry "and with other industries" concerning Texas money needs.

El Paso Products buys film firm

HOUSTON (SWN) — The El Paso Company announced today that its chemical subsidiary, El Paso Products Company, has acquired Golden West Plastics, a California-based manufacturer of polyethylene film.

The acquisition will increase the company's film manufacturing capacity in excess of 90 million pounds per year and will be operated by El Paso's Consolidated Thermoplastics Company headquartered in Arlington Heights, Ill.

Consolidated now has plants in Chippewa Falls, Wis.; Harrington, Del.; Santa Ana, Calif.; and with this acquisition, in Tustin, Calif., Consolidated will now have approximately 390 employees.

The Tustin plant will also serve as an added market for the polyolefin resins – the raw material used to make the plastic film – produced by El Paso in Odessa, Texas.

Grammer-Murphey doing well

Texas Business/ Industry Week
April 1-7

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

Since 1945, business has had its ups and downs at Midland's Grammer-Murphey specialty store, said second-generation company head John Murphey this week: "It pretty much moves parallel with the ups and downs of the oil business."

"As the oil business softens, so do retail sales," he said.

"Since the mid-'70s, though, we have had fairly nice growth. For the first part of 1983, we fared better than sales-tax collections for Midland as a whole (retail market). Business has levelled off — there was some softness in the last months of 1982 — but we've done well since 1983 began."

Murphey describes his store as a "specialty" retailer rather than a department store.

The distinction, he said, lies in the fact that G-M "is not a full-line department store — we don't offer hardware or appliances." Also, he said, G-M is different because "Our customer is looking at a higher price point and wants to buy a higher-quality item," than a department store's usual customer.

Murphey's office wall carries the motto uttered by Henry Ford — "Anyone who stops learning is old." In essence, learning is what Murphey said his buyers and other salespeople are doing when they wait on Grammer-Murphey customers.

"We rely on fashion rather than on the basics (white or blue shirts, dark suits), and we look for the newest and sharpest fashions," he said. "We might have the same items as a department store, but we purchase them in a way that we know our customers want to buy them."

Murphey said his store buyers work directly with his customers and it is easier for them to know what customers want than it is for a large department store's buyer to know what will fly at all the chain's locations.

Murphey has been head of the store since his father, Henry Murphey, left the operation. Henry Murphey and John Grammer were in the retail business together and decided to open Grammer-Murphey in 1945.

John Murphey took over in 1955. In 1956, the store moved to its present location in The Village, Midland's first shopping center, where Walgreen Drug was already open.

An example of his store's continued flexibility in the merchandise it carries, Murphey said, lies in the fact buyers from G-M have full authority to make final selections — within their budget — of fashion items. "A larger operation must buy for a wider market," he said.

"In color, style, and price point, our buyers can be specific and they know what they want to buy.

"It's a bit higher price because we're looking for fashion — we want to present that type of merchandise. Our buyers seek it out. There may be limited interest, so they will buy in limited quantities."

At a larger store or a chain store, Murphey said, "If it doesn't sell in Midland, they'll move it."

Basic items are still bought by his customers, Murphey said, along with a wide assortment of patterned goods: "Our customer is more interested in quality, fashion merchandise. There are good shirts at $20 and bad ones. It's the same if a shirt costs $40. But normally a $40 shirt is better.

"If not, it (the $40 shirt) won't sell for long. You can't fool the customer," Murphey said.

There are many ingredients in price, Murphey noted, and quality fabrics in an expensive garment may deserve and get better care.

Out of a staff of 60, the store has little turnover, Murphey said. At a peak period, G-M employs about 100 full- and part-time salespeople and support people. Ten current employees have 20 years or more of experience at the store.

"We try to instill enthusiasm about fashion and try to give our salespeople the fashion information they need," he said. Employee salaries are affected by sales volume, length of employment, attitude, and other contributions, according to Murphey.

G-M employees have had "lots of opportunities — I know they could have gone to work at any of the new stores in town," Murphey said.

"We have built a reliable, returning base of customers," he said. "Treated well, the customer could be our best advertising."

In ads, G-M tries to explain what the store is attempting to do with certain merchandise. "We want to be sure we project a truthful image of ourselves," Murphey said.

"Our major flexibility is being tipped to fashion trends faster, and we should be buying the items well ahead of the department stores, if all goes well.

"They all make several market trips a year, and averaging out that time, we probably have at least one buyer gone every day of the year," Murphey said.

MGF Oil reports $80 million loss for 1982

MGF Oil Corporation reported April 4 a net loss of more than $80 million for 1982. The company said negotiations are still underway to restructure its debts.

MGF said it lost $80,273,000 or $5.12 per share, on revenues of $104,838,000, for the year ending December 31, 1982.

This figure compares with net earnings of $9,930,000, or 73 cents per fully-diluted share, on revenues of $115,848,000 for the previous year, 1981.

R.O. "Jack" Major, president and chief executive officer, said MGF received a qualified auditors' report related to its 1982 consolidated financial statements — as a result of the company's financial condition.

Major said substantially all of the long-term debt of MGF may be subject to accelerated repayment demands and, accordingly, $228,129,000 has been reclassified as a current liability.

MGF is currently negotiating with its lenders to restructure its obligations. It announced in March that it had retained a national investment banking firm for that purpose.

A major portion of the loss for 1982 was due to a $55,099,000 additional provision for depreciation, depletion and amortization. This was done to reduce net capitalized costs of oil and gas properties to the estimated present value of future net revenues discounted at 10 percent. MGF said this is a non-cash provision.

Also included in the loss is a non-cash provision for a decrease of $7,547,000 in value of the company's inventory and a cash provision for $4.7 million in bad debts.

MGF also blamed the loss on depressed contract drilling markets. In March, Major announced the company planned to stack approximately 75 percent of its 46-rig fleet over the next two or three months. Now, MGF has seven rigs operating.

Contract drilling operations, reflecting a decreased use rate in 1982, resulted in revenues of $48.7 million compared to $70.5 million in 1981.

At year-end 1982, MGF's current liabilities exceeded current assets by $228.9 million – including the $228.1 million of reclassified long-term debt.

In its April 4 press release, the company said it missed payment on interest to MGF's secured lender and also missed a rental payment to a lessor, both due March 31, 1983.

However, Major said, both creditors have indicated they will not exercise any rights available to them for an interim period while negotiations continue.

Although no agreements have been signed with lenders, and there is no assurance any agreements could be reached with banks and other creditors, Major said he believes MGF can be successful in restructuring its debt.

This restructuring could allow the company to continue operations — at reduced levels of commitment and activity — for the next two years, meeting obligations pursuant to terms under which the debt is expected to be reshaped.

Working capital provided by operations for 1982 was $1.7 million as compared to $35.7 million during 1981. Oil and gas revenues were up 35 percent from 1981, however, with the 1982 revenues at $49,097,000 compared to the 1981 figure of $36,347,000.

MGF Oil Corporation has also reported its proven oil reserves decreased 6 percent in 1982, to 5,302,626 barrels of oil compared to 5,647,166 barrels of oil it had at the end of 1981. Proven gas reserves decreased 1 percent to 51.5 billion cubic feet compared to the 51.9 billion cubic feet it had in reserve at the end of 1981.

Also at year-end, MGF's undeveloped acreage was 566,804 net acres out of a total of 916,255 gross acres.

The average price received for a barrel of oil in 1982 was $31.92, and the average price for a million cubic feet (MCF) of gas was $2.99. These averages compare to a barrel price-average of $36.55 for oil produced in 1981 and an average of $2.33 per MCF of natural gas in '81.

Buildings going up faster, data shows

By LESLIE HAINES

New construction and building alteration activity in Midland has slowly increased since the first of the year, climbing its way up from a low point experienced late last fall, according to data supplied by the city's department of permits and inspections.

Several indicators are up. For the fourth consecutive month, the number of single family residential building permits issued here has increased, from 34 in November to 71 in March. For the third month in a row, the number of total permits issued, (including residential, commercial and alterations), has increased. The January total was 113; the March figure was 226.

The city issued 71 single-family residential permits in March, bringing the total for the quarter to 193, according to figures released by the city's Department of Inspections and Permits.

Compared to 1982 figures, however, Midland building activity is still slow. In last year's first quarter, builders received 990 permits, including 598 new residential permits. In the corresponding period this year, builders received 551, including 197 residential permits.

The city of Midland issued 33 building permits last week to close out March with 226 permits for the month. These represent a total valuation of $23,585,793, bringing the year-to-date figure to $42,925,795.

Included in the total are permits for 71 new single family residences, an apartment complex with 204 units, a 114-room motel, and a 16-story office building to be erected at the corner of Big Spring and Illinois Street.

Last year in March, the city issued 124 more permits than this year, when builders received 350 permits for construction and alterations worth $26.5 million.

Product liability bill getting close look

By Vic Ostrowidzki
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A Senate subcommittee is taking a close look at a product liability bill which opponents claim would make it virtually impossible for people injured by defective products to recover monetary damages for their injuries.

A hearing on the bill, sponsored by Sen. Robert Kasten, R.- Wisc., was held Wednesday before the Consumer Subcommitee of the Commerce, Science and Transportation panel. The subcommittee is headed by Kasten.

A second session is scheduled for April 27 to hear additional witnesses, including representatives from American Bar Association, the American Trial Lawyers Association, state legislatures, and business, consumer and academic communities.

Congress's interest in product liability comes at a time of mounting complaints from the public that the federal government has done nothing to insure that Americans can buy reliable, well-made, lasting products.

Several states have attempted to solve local product liability problems, but their statutes are not uniform. Manufacturers marketing products nationwide are forced to insure against lawsuits which may arise under widely varying state statutes.

The Congress Watch, a Ralph Nader watchdog group, insists that the Kasten bill is not the answer to this interstate confusion. The organization claims the measure would prohibit victims of defective products from recovering from the manufacturer unless they could prove the manufacturer knew the product was defective, a virtually impossible task.

The critics further note that people injured by products more than 25 years old would be barred from recovering and that if more than one defendant is liable, the injured person could not collect until the defendants apportioned the damages.

Another complaint is that the bill would hold manufacturers liable only if their products were used in ways that are "consistent with reasonable practice of users of the product," even if they know their products will be used in other ways. Under existing law, manufacturers are liable when their products are used in "foreseeable ways."

Congress Watch said in a report this week that business groups lobbying for the bill contributed $7.2 million to congressional and senatorial committees in 1982.

The Product Liability Alliance, a coalition of business and trade associations, is the main lobbyist for the bill. Other groups are the Coalition for Uniform Product Liability Law and the National Product Liability Council.

The organizations claim that the existing system — under which the plaintiff must prove the product defective but need not prove the defendant negligent — is unfair to defendants.

Second, manufacturers argue that differing state product liability laws have caused insurance rates to skyrocket over the past few years and should be standardized. This lack of uniformity has also deterred product development, they claim.

The American Bar Association agrees that there has been an increase in product litigation cases and that the law may be confusing. It plans to explore changes in product liability at a May 5 and 6 national insitutute in New York, entitled, "Product Liability in the 1980s: Litigation, Legislation and Practical Engineering."

PRIVATE INVOLVEMENT IN GOVERNMENT

The mayors of major cities across the country will be going to Carson, Calif. on April 26 for three days of meetings with corporate executives to discuss the need for private involvement in local government.

Sponsored jointly by the U.S.Conference of Mayors and the Atlantic Richfield Company, the meetings will assess ways the private sector can help meet the needs of cities which have been hit hard by increased demands on public services at a time of reduced federal aid.

PRIVATE CONTRACTOR SOUGHT

The General Services Administration (GSA) is seeking a private contractor to operate a pilot store in Washington, D.C. where representatives of federal agencies could become acquainted with, buy and be trained in the use of microcomputer equipment. Bids will be opened May 2.

The government has about 18,000 large, general purpose computers, but this equipment is not always a cost-effective way to handle the small, time- consuming chores which desk computers are designed to handle quickly.

The target date for opening the project is September. After evaluating the results of the Washington test, the GSA will consider the possibilityofopeningsimilar microcomputer stores in other sections ofth country.

A BANKING STUDY

The Congressional Joint Economic Committee suggests that Congress "needs to take another hard look" at efforts to reduce regulatory compliance costs on the home loan industry, "especially to see if smaller loan firms are paying more than their share." Thepanel said in a report that Congress may not have succeeded in reducing regulatory costs on the home loan industry when it reformd the Truth in Lending Act in 1980.

ENERGY DEMAND IN 1983

The Energy Department projects that despite increased economic activity and lower oil prices, 1983 U.S. petroleum demand will rise only .7 percent above the 1982 level. However, this would be the first increase in petroleum demand since 1978. Petroleum consumption is projected at 15.4 million barrels per day in 1983.

Net oil imports are projected at 4.7 million barrels, up 11.6 percent from 1982. Because of lower oil prices, total oil imports will cost $58 billion, 5.5 percent less than in 1982. Natural gas consumption is projected to increase by .3 percent between 1982 and 1983 and production will decline by 3 percent to 17 trillion cubic feet. Domestic coal consumption will rise by 4 percent and production will set a new record of 837 million tons. Electric utility generation will rise by 2.5 percent to 2.3 billion kilowatt-hours. A record level of electricity generated from nuclear power is expected to hit 300 billion kilowatt-hours.

PROMOTIONAL SPENDING

State spending on promotional campaigns aimed at attracting and keeping business is on the rise. The Council of State Governments claims its survey found 24 states planning increases in 1983, with spending ranging from a low $27,000 in Arizona to $6.9 billion in New York. Only six states report buying television time, but 42 place ads in magazines. In addition, 26 states produce their own publications. International trade development, usually thought of as a federal activity, is conducted by 24 states. Japan, Belgium and West Germany are the most popular sites for foreign state trade offices.

AROUND AND ABOUT

James E. Pechin, executive director of the Center for Community Economics, Santa Rosa, Cal., has been named National Small Business Veteran Advocate of the Year by the Small Business Administration ...The nation's farm population continues to decline in the 1980s; it comprised only 2.4 percent of the total population in 1982, according to the Commerce Department...The Census Bureau claims that more than half the revenues for the nation's public school systems was provided by federal and state governments. City costs are not as proportionately high as most people believe...Commerce says automobile imports rose 2.6 percent to 2,926,407 in 1982 because of an increase in Canadian imports, which jumped about 25 percent. We imported 607,907 passenger cars from Canada during the year. However, imports from Japan, the U.S. major supplier, dropped 5.7 percent for the year to 1,801,070 cars.

V-F hits two in one

V-F Petroleum Inc., Midland, announced Wednesday it has potentialed two discoveries in Winkler County which are being produced from the same well.

The company completed its No. 1 Estes as a dual discovery from the Devonian and Fusselman formations. The well has been dually completed from the two zones.

The discoveries represent new field pays for the V-F (Ellenburger) field area. The well is one-fifth of a mile northeast of V-F's No. 1 Damron, the discovery Ellenburger well in the field.

With the completion of the No. 1 Estes, the three pay zones (Devonian, Fusselman and Ellenburger) are now actively being produced in the field.

The No. 1 Estes flowed through Devonian perforations between 9,429-9,433 feet for 221 barrels of oil daily on a 12/64-inch choke. Gravity was 38.3 degrees, with flowing tubing pressure of 580 pounds per square inch. The gas/oil ratio was 725 to 1, with no water reported on the test.

The Fusselman formation was potentialed flowing 206 barrels of oil a day with a gravity of 42.1 degrees, no water, through a 12/64-inch choke. Flowing tubing pressure was 520 psi. The gas/oil ratio was 510 to 1, from perforations at 9,888-9,891 feet.

Nearest similar Devonian and Fusselman production is about four miles from the No. 1 Estes.

The dual discovery is on a 1,200-acre lease block held by V-F Petroleum and its industry partners, including Abraxas Petroleum Corp., Stringer Oil & Gas Company, V-F Ltd. 81, and Spectrum 7 Energy Corp.

V-F plans to develop the rest of the area in the future following further evaluations. The company will apply shortly for new field designation and discovery allowable.

"Kent Sloan and Texas American Bank... without them we couldn't have started our business."

Kent Sloan, Senior Vice President

Juanita Stigen, Co-Owner, The Boat House

The Boat House, at 2810 West Wall, has become a leading dealer for boats, motors, trailers, and accessories over the past ten years. Sales have significantly increased every year with the assistance of TAB/Midland.

Kent Sloan, Senior Vice President and Manager of Texas American's Instalment Lending Division, has arranged financing to provide inventory for The Boat House, and set up bank financing for their customers who qualify. Boat sales are seasonal, and Kent helped structure a credit line that helped smooth over the slack periods.

If you take drugs or drink booze you're out

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The rules are just plain simple at Northside Independent School District.

Mess with alcohol, drugs or weapons or assault someone while at school and a student automatically is out — for the rest of the year. That's it.

The district's disciplinary code mandates expulsion for the balance of the school year as the punishment for first-time — or any time — rule-breakers.

"I don't know of any other school with a policy as tough as ours, but it works," says Carl Wanke, the district's director of pupil personnel.

"We just have a courageous school board," said district spokeswoman Bonnie Ellison.

"In other schools, maybe students are expelled for those reasons," she said, "but it isn't spelled out like that."

Thirty-three students ranging in age from 11 to 18 have been expelled since the policy was instituted in August 1982, and the school board has backed each expulsion.

Only two cases have been appealed past the school board, and those currently are pending before the Texas Education Agency.

"One might think that there's a lot of flak being caught by us," said school board president Raoul Fernandez, "but there's a lot of support from the parents, teachers, community and students.

"The bottom line is that we have a better learning environment," he said. "You can't have an educational environment when students are spaced out on drugs and alcohol."

Parents and guardians must sign a "certificate of acceptance" acknowleding the policy when their children enroll in the district.

"That certificate marks one big difference between Northside and other districts in the state," Ms. Ellison said. "It shows they absolutely knew what the penalty was for these infractions."

Northside, a middle-class district with 35,000 students and four high schools, cuts through Bexar, Medina and Bandera counties.

"A lot of people think this is a silk-stocking district, affluent, but it's not," Ms. Ellison said. "We have 45 percent minority population."

The district falls in the lower third in taxable wealth behind each child when compared to the 1,075 other school districts in Texas.

Don Ready, an attorney on the Texas Education Commissioner's staff, said he doesn't like Northside's policy.

"It demonstrates a rather limited imagination on the approach," he said. "Each individual case should be looked at as an individual case. There are many remedies short of expulsion."

The Corpus Christi Independent School District instituted a similar policy in May 1981, but expulsions are for the balance of the semester, not school year, said spokeswoman Terry Cannon.

A high school in the Dallas suburb of Lewisville has drawn national attention for paying students who turn in fellow schoolgoers they suspect are using or selling drugs. That district's disciplinary code, however, does not specify expulsion.

"We don't know what another district should do," Ms. Ellison said. "We only know what has worked for us."

She said the policy has cut down on the number of assaults, both physical and verbal.

"Last year, there were 71 cases of verbal assault. This year, we have had nine. We think the policy discourages it," she said.

Critics cut up new Vanity Fair

NEW YORK (AP) — Vanity Fair, the exemplar of Jazz Age sophistication, returned last month as a slicked-up, ad-heavy journal of cocktail conversation for the soon-to-be-rich. Some critics thought it fell flat on its elegant face.

A watercolor on the cover showed Pan blowing geometric abstractions out of a pipe. Inside were Andy Warhol's paintings of Alfred Hitchcock, Richard Avedon's portraits of coal miners, a collage of scenes from Wagner operas.

Nora Ephron contributed a short story of a man whopreserved a dead pet hamster in the freezer next to the ice cubes, and Nobel laureate Gabriel Garcia Marquez was represented by his grim "Chronicle of a Death Foretold."

Ads offered apparel, Palm Beach townhouses, world cruises and financial services "for those who are getting rich."

Publisher Joseph E. Corr Jr. said it all gave him a headache, but he retains his faith that Vanity Fair will be the preferred reading matter of the "new elite."

Jonatgan Yardley wrote in the Washington Post that "...Not since the 1920s have the American rich been so ostentatious about their lack of ostentation, so smug in their mutual self-congratulation, so indifferent to the society upon which they feed. In Vanity Fair...that message comes through loud, clear and contemptible."

Henry Fairlie in The New Republic dismissed it as "so crude, so wasted, so trumpery an effort." Fairlie thought a 12-page section advertising the clothes of designer Ralph Lauren was "the most appealing thing" in the magazine. Others said it didn't live up to its predecessor's illustrious reputation.

A reader checks out an issue of the new Vanity Fair magazine. The reincarnation of the publication of 50 years ago fell flat on its face with the critics.

The old Vanity Fair, which introduced such writers as Dorothy Parker and Edna St. Vincent Millay and artists like Picasso and Matisse, was published by Conde Nast from 1914 to 1936 when it was incorporated into the fashion magazine Vogue.

Revived at a reported cost of $10 to $15 million, Vanity Fair is unabashedly wooing "the new elite." Not the old rich, but the new moneyed young Corr says are becoming the "emulated aristocracy of our society."

The magazine's targets are "upscale" professionals, average age 38-40, mean annual income, $40,000 and up. They came of age in the turbulent 1960s, perhaps dropped into a commune for a while but soon learned, Corr says, "you couldn't make much growing mushrooms."

"We will be high, low, beautiful, grotesque. We will be the cocktail conversation of the '80s that our illustrious forebear was to the '20s...

"These young folks fill their lives with an eclectic and rather deep interest in things cultural," Corr says. "If they're into music they have a record collection from Bach to the B-52s."

Apparently just the sort of people advertisers want.

Of the 700,000 people who bought the first issue on the newsstands or received it at home free, Corr said 100,000 have bought a year's subscription at $24. The newsstand price is $3 per copy.

Criticism that the magazine's writers don't rise to the level of those who graced the old Vanity Fair, he said, is "just outrageous."

"I think it's rather astounding for some of these people to go through 22 years of the old Vanity Fair, pick out the highs — the Benchleys, the Parkers, the Picassos, the Matisses," he said. "Not every issue of that old Vanity Fair knocked people on their tails."

Couple will try to break kissing record

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — A couple is looking ahead to April 15 when they intend to pay more than lip service to the idea of getting into the Guinness Book of World Records.

Bradley Spacy and Patricia Haugan are training hard to pucker up and smooch for nearly six straight days to eclipse the Guinness record for the longest continuous kiss. Their training has consisted primarily of learning how to get along on very little sleep, they say.

"We just thought it would be a fun thing to do," said Miss Haugan, 19, a former swim team member at Fullerton College.

"She says I kiss good," said Spacy, 20, a member of the Fullerton College track team. "We're sure going to find out."

The pair, who indicated they intend to start pecking away at the record on April 15, said they took their cue from Dino DeLorean and Barbara Kane of Hollywood, who tried to break the official kissing record of 132 hours around Valentine's Day at a Sherman Oaks boutique.

But a Guinness editor, David Boehm, indicated there were documentation problems in their 144-hour marathon. "That doesn't mean we don't believe them," he said, "but we have to have verification. As an editor at Guinness I see more fraud than the police department."

Boehm did not say specifically why DeLorean and Ms. Kane's effort might not qualify.

According to the current Guinness book, the marathon kiss record is 5 days and 12 hours which was set during a February 1980 "Big Kiss-Off" charity event in Florida.

At 144 hours, DeLorean and Ms. Kane thought they had easily set a new record for the 1984 edition of the book.

NOTICE OF NO SIGNIFICANT EFFECT ON THE ENVIRONMENT
City of Midland
300 N. Loraine P.O. Box 1152
Midland, Texas 79702

TO ALL INTERESTED AGENCIES, GROUPS AND PERSONS

The above-named City of Midland proposes to request the U.S. Department of Housing and Uban Department to release Federal funds under Title I of Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (PL 93-383) to be used for the following project:

Improvements to update Washington Park
(Project, Title or Name)

Provide sidewalk, picnic pavilion, basketball court & lighting
(Purpose or Nature of Projects)

Midland, Midland, Texas
(Location- City, County, State of Project)

$67,000
(Estimated Cost of Project)

It has been determined that such request for release of funds will not constitute an action significantly affecting the quality of the human environment and, accordingly, the above-named City Midland has decided not to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (PL 91-190).

The reason for such decision not to prepare such Statement are as follows: Although these improvements will enhance and make the Park more usable they are major construction projects. Therefore, they will create noise and air pollution and disrupt the normal flow around Washington Park. But these are short-term and minimal impacts. This area is potentially very viable and this project will be far more beneficial than adverse.

An Environmental Review Record respecting the within project has been made by the above-named City which documents the environmental review of the project and more fully sets forth the reasons why such Statement is not required. This Environmental Review Record is on file at the above address and is available for public examination and copying, upon request, at Room 204, between hours of 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

No further environmental review of such project is proposed to be conducted, prior to the request for release of Federal funds.

All interested agencies, groups and persons disagreeing with this decision are invited to submit written comments for consideration by the City to the office of the Mayor. Such written comments should be received at City of Midland P.O. Box 1152 on or before April 22, 1983. All such comments so received will be considered and the City not request the release of Federal funds or take any administrative action on the within project prior to the date specified in the preceding sentence.

(Estimated Cost of Project)

It has been determined that such request for release of funds will not constitute an action significantly affecting the quality of the human environment and, accordingly, the above-named City Midland has decided not to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (PL 91-190).

The reason for such decision not to prepare such Statement are as follows: The construction involved with paving and deepening the drainage channel will result in air and noise pollution for a relatively short term. Better access, easier maintenance and elimination of potential blight in the area in the long-term exceed minor inconveniences caused by construction.

An Environmental Review Record respecting the within project has been made by the above-named City which documents the environmental review of the project and more fully sets forth the reasons why such Statement is not required. This Environmental Review Record is on file at the above address and is available for public examination and copying, upon request, at Room 204, between the hours of 8:00a.m. and 5:00p.m.

No further environmental review Of such project is proposed to be conducted, prior to the request for release of Federal funds.

All interested agencies, groups and persons disagreeing with this decision are invited to submit written comments for consideration by the City to the office of the Mayor. Such written comments should be received at City of Midland P.O. Box 1152 on or before April 22, 1983. All such comments so received will be considered and the City will not request the release of Federal funds or take any administrative action on the within project prior to the date specified in the preceding sentence.

Businesses learn how to aid families in work place

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

When the head of the household of the 1950s went to work, Dad put in his eight hours at the factory or office while Mom took charge of the house and kids.

Then a transition — from the traditional to non-traditional family — began in the 1960s, intensified in the 1970s and has arrived in the 1980s.

Today, there are 23 million two-paycheck families, nine million working women who are single parents and heads of 20 percent of all American families and a growing number of single fathers who are custodial parents.

WORKING MEN and women of the 1980s are managing two distinctly different enterprises — home and work. And this leads to stress and health problems, lowered effectiveness and productivity and absenteeism and tardiness on the job, said Marie M. Oser, executive director of the Texas Institute for Families, Inc.

Ms. Oser was one of four speakers Wednesday who addressed the demands on today's working people and employers at a forum sponsored by the Midland Task Force for Private Sector Initiatives and the Texas Institute for Families.

About 50 Midland business men and women attended the hour-long presentation, "Families In The Workplace: A Forum On Private Sector Options" to learn what executives can do for their employees.

Introducing the program, Harrell Feldt, president of United Way of Midland, said the primary reason for the session was to "acquaint the business community with multiple ways they can support families in the work place."

According to Ms. Oser, more than 14 million children, ranging from 6 to 13 years, have working parents. One third of these children are stuck at home, or somewhere — unsupervised.

INFLATION, JOB dissatisfaction, inadequate and unaffordable childcare services have increased costs for employers through reduced productivity.

Family forum

Harrell Feldt, president of United Way of Midland, left, and Vic Arnold, researcher at the University of Texas-Austin, discuss today's family in the workplace at a forum for the business community held Wednesday.

Ms. Oser said the Texas Institute for Families provides business and industry with information, programs and consultations to increase productivity and profit by enabling employees to resolve or cope with work and family conflicts so they can concentrate their time and efforts on the job.

"I'm not just talking about women," said Ms. Oser, who is a working mother. "Many think it's just women, but 15 percent of the single parent families are headed by men.

"As an employer, I'd like to think people coming to work in the morning turn off the family and then turn off work when they return home. But it doesn't happen. The family has undergone incredible changes."

The changes include an increasing number of two paycheck and single parent familes, Ms. Oser said, explaining that business and industry can assist this type of family structure by sharing the responsibilty of quality childcare services.

"We want people to go to work, but there's no affordable childcare," she said.

Ms. Oser outlined several options for employers to assist in providing childcare, including voucher, vendor, subsidy and consortium programs.

"This would be suitable for Midland," she said, referring to the consortium program where several employers establish a jointly-operated child care program.

Ms. Oser said employers could determine the amount to charge their employees for the designated number of available childcare slots.

IN THE AREAS of health-related problems, Chris Lovato, an instructor in allied health sciences at The University of Texas-Houston, said employers are paying about half of the nation's $247 billion health costs.

Ms. Lovato said absenteeism alone cost businesses about $20 million a year. She explained that these costs could be cut by providing alcohol, nutrition, weight control, hypertension and stress management programs.

"For example, an alcohol program will drop the number of absenteeism and create productivity," she said. "Accidents, absenteeism, low morale and low productivity can all be caused by alcohol. Programs are working and they are paying for themselves."

Ms. Lovato said many health promotion programs exist in occupational settings throughout the country and their potential for reducing medical care costs is self-evident. She explained that the "challenge lies with the private sector to take the lead not only in establishing these programs, but also in providing careful surveillance of their effects on the health and well-being of every man and woman in the work place."

"As an employer, I'd like to think people coming to work in the morning turn off the family and then turn off work when they return home. But it doesn't happen."

—Marie Oser

Giving his views on the "Corporate Perspective On Private Sector Options," Deane H. Stoltz, chairman and chief executive officer of the Tipperary Corp. in Midland, said when he was introduced to the child and health care options, "they were good ideas; worthwhile, but it doesn't fit us."

Then, it was discovered that one of his top level management employees was absent because the man was home with a sick child. Stoltz said he changed his mind.

Boys' ranch head: 'I think I've done everything I can'

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

After 10 years of building a dream and a year of watching it come true, the Rev. Franklin L. Kiker Jr. has resigned from his position as director of the Permian Basin Boys' Ranch.

"I think I've done everything I can do at the ranch," Kiker said this morning. "It's time for a licensed administrator to come in with the proper credentials."

"His time here was worthwhile," said H.S. (Bill) Elliott, member of the boys' ranch board of directors. "He's done quite a lot for the ranch and we're thankful he did and had the push to get it going."

The state requires an administrator to be licensed in child care before he or she can direct a home where 13 children live, Kiker said, adding he is not certified. Although there were two boys living at the ranch in February, none is residing there now.

That should change as soon as a housing facility is completed, according to Elliott.

"I wouldn't be surprised if we had further groundbreaking as early as July 1983," he said.

Kiker, who moved to Midland in January 1982, initially worked with Teen Challenge to gain experience necessary for reaching his long-time goal. Establishment of a home on a ranch for troubled and dependent boys ages 7 through 17.

A similar plan had fallen through in Wichita Falls in 1977, he said. Last year, however, he was successful in obtaining land and support from various Midlanders.

A 50-year lease on 25 acres of land about 10 miles southeast of Midland was negotiated with Bruce Wilbanks, Midland independent oil and gas producer. An additional 240 acres was available to the ranch for livestock and crops.

According to Elliott, plans for the ranch remain the same. Terms of the lease are being re-negotiated at no cost by a Midland lawyer. The tentative terms are between Wilbanks and the ranch, named as a separate entity, for a 99-year lease at $1 a year on the original 25 acres. About 290 acres will be available to the ranch for agricultural purposes, Elliot said.

According to Lane Stryker, development coordinator, "the original property lease was not drawn with all of the safeguards of both parties that are necessary.

"There is no reason to assume the the Permian Basin Boys' Ranch will not build buildings and function debt free," Stryker said. "We're thankful to Frank Kiker for getting it as far as it has gone."

Kiker's resignation was effective Wednesday, according to Elliot. With the assistance of a Midland pastor, director of the High Sky Girl's Ranch and director of the Methodist Children Home in Waco, Elliott said the three-member board of directors hopes to fill the empty position soon.

"We are seeking a qualified head for the ranch," Elliott said. "It does not have to be a local person but it must be a man with heavy credentials."

Stryker said he will remain at the ranch through the transition period. His immediate goal is to complete formal acknowledgment of the many donations received from area residents.

"I'll kind of hold down the fort," he said. "The fund raising will go on and I feel the board of directors has everything under control."

The board, which at one time consisted of 10 members, now is made up of Elliott, Juanita Jennings and H.L. Cooper.

Kiker, who plans to continue his involvement with troubled youth, said he is considering a job in East Texas helping organize a youth camp. He also has been contacted about helping establish youth ranches in Washington and New Mexico.

Even if the steps he follows lead him across the nation, Kiker said he won't be walking away from his commitment in the Permian Basin.

"I'll follow (the progress of the ranch) because Midland is one of the areas I've got dreams in.

"I'd like to look back in a year and a half and see about 15 or 16 boys living out there."

MHA closes shutters on 1981-82 program

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Interest in the city's housing rehabilitation program continues to run high as the Midland Housing Authority closed the shutters on the 1981-82 program Wednesday and studied the foundation of its 1982-83 work.

During the authority's monthly meeting in City Hall Council Chambers, Horace Berry, rehabilitation inspector for the program, announced that 94 houses are either under repair or have been completed through the 1981-82 program.

Berry said the 89 homes already completed were finished at a cost of $488,276.86. All 94 houses are expected to cost $517,385.96, an average of $5,504.10 per house.

The city originally had appropriated $500,000 from a Community Development Block Grant for the 1981-82 program. The authority expected to finish about 45 houses with the grant, but has since more than doubled that prediction.

Berry said 12 houses are under repair in the 1982-83 program. He said the cost of refurbishing is running at a $5,466.03 average per house, or $65,592.31 for the program to date.

The city has appropriated $250,000 for this year's program. After hearing Berry's report, Gene Abbott, housing authority chairman, said that at the present rate about 45 homes could be finished with the 1982-83 money.

Gloria Ellis, executive director of the Human Relations Council, said her agency screened 97 applications for the 1982-83 program. Ms. Ellis said although the application process was closed March 25, additional applications continue to filter in.

Texas GOP to hold meeting in Midland

The Republican Party of Texas will hold its quarterly executive committee meeting in Midland on Saturday, according to Bob Monaghan, district committeeman for Senatorial District 25. This marks the first time the GOP has selected Midland as its meeting site.

A public question and answer session will kick off the meeting at 9 p.m. Friday in Midland Center. This will give participants and the public a chance to ask questions in an informal atmosphere.

Bill Shaner, county Republican chairman, and local party officials will host this event. Republican County chairmen and elected officials throughout West Texas have been invited, and the public is welcome.

The Executive Committee will start its session at 9 a.m. Saturday in Midland Center and should continue through most of the day. It will cover resolutions, budget and appointments to various committees in preparation for the 1984 presidential election, according to Monaghan.

Eddie Chiles, husband of National Committeewoman Fran Chiles, will be among the guest speakers.

Special tours for visiting members of the State Republican Executive Committee or other participants and guests at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum will be available Friday afternoon. Interested persons may call the Midland Chamber of Commerce, 683-3381, which is arranging buses for these tours. The Midland Hilton will serve as headquarters.

Midlander takes shot at 'the whole enchilada'

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

It's the dream of every amateur gambler who ever rolled a royal flush in a make-believe poker game; the fantasy of every kid who's sunk a backyard basket at the buzzer.

The big score...for all the marbles...the whole enchilada.

On Tuesday afternoon inside a Reno, Nev., hotel, Allan Stroker and 34 others took their respective shots at hitting a once-in-a-lifetime jackpot in the Hilton Hotel Million Dollar Super Pot-of-Gold Championship Slot Machine Tournament.

From his hotel room Wednesday, Stroker said that although he missed the brass ring, he lived like a king and expects to fly back to Midland tonight with a suitcase full of memories.

"It was a lot of fun," said Stroker, a 53-year-old sales manager for Drilco Industrial. "I couldn't have asked for a better experience or more fun. I was just not lucky enough."

With a 20-minute time limit and $300 each, the contestants plugged and tugged furiously during Tuesday's opening round, hoping to trigger the greatest cascade of coins and propel themselves into the tournament's next round.

Despite rabid support from 21 family members and friends, Stroker said his $299 in winnings were not enough to keep him in the tournament beyond the first round, which whittled the field to eight contestants. Later rounds cut the contest to four people, then two, until finally a 25-year-old, expectant mother from California grabbed the $1 million.

Agencies file suit against Midland-based helicopter

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A federal grand jury investigation into aerial shooting of wildlife — from coyotes to bears — in West Texas and Mexico has yet to result in indictments.

Instead, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Department and U.S. Department of Justice have filed a civil suit against a Midland-based orange and black 1976 Hiller helicopter allegedly flown in the illegal pursuit of wildlife.

Via federal court action in Midland and Pecos, the government is seeking forfeiture of the helicopter, which now is owned by K&S Land Co. of Midland. Partners in that enterprise are Charles Koonce, K&S president, and John Phillip Stroud.

The government is charging that the aircraft "was used in violation of the Airborne Hunting Act" in December 1981 and January 1982 — about a month before K&S purchased the aircraft for use in surveying land and showing large tracts to potential buyers. Supposedly scores of Midlanders and other West Texans hired the helicopter — before K&S ownership — to hunt game in the winter hunting season. Federal law prohibits what amounts to strafing — aerial hunting.

The federal law used to confiscate the aircraft is based on an "old medieval" principle that any property used in a crime may be "banished," according to a legal source. That law apparently overlooks ownership of the offending property, which in this case happens to be the helicopter.

The government is claiming that pilot James Clyde Short Jr. flew hunters on airborne hunts in the Fort Stockton-McCamey area in the winter of 1981-82. According to Federal Aviation Administration records, Short was the helicopter's registered owner in December 1981 and January 1982. The aircraft was transferred to K&S on Feb. 10, 1982, according to court records.

The government, which names the helicopter as the culprit, alleges the aircraft was used in violation of the Airborne Hunting Act on:

—Dec. 17, 1981, in Reeves County where coyotes were shot or shot at.

—Dec. 29, 1981, near McCamey, where coyotes again were shot.

Further, the government alleges that Short took individuals on airborne hunts to shoot or capture Barbado sheep, mule and black-tail deer, and coyotes.

Federal wildlife Special Agent James M. Stinebaugh of Fort Worth in an affidavit said he interviewed Midlander Wesley Michael Nickell who admitted "hunting wild animals with J.C. Short in Short's helicopter" in the winter of 1981-82. "...Nickell stated that he shot a Barbado sheep from J.C. Short's helicopter and Lee Bell, also of Midland, Texas, shot a mule deer with J.C. Short's shotgun while airborne in Short's orange and black helicopter."

In readying for the hunt, Nickell and Bell allegedly met Short in Fort Stockton and drove to a ranch, south of the Pecos County town, to the helicopter. A photogragh, taken by Short, depicts Nickell posing with a dead Barbado sheep and also shows a Benelli 12-gauge semi-automatic shotgun, according to the agent's statement.

Additionally, Stinebaugh says Ector County Deputy Sheriff Richard F. Rattan of Gardendale in November 1982 spotted an orange and black helicopter in farmer Norman Koonce's metal building near Gardendale, northwest of Midland. At the farm, Gary Koonce allegedly told Rattan that the helicopter belonged to "his uncle and that they were hiding it from the game wardens...because it (supposedly) had been used to hunt bears in Mexico."

On Nov. 16, federal wildlife agents seized the helicopter after obtaining a search warrant from U.S. Magistrate J.M. Preston of Pecos. The next day, K&S Land Co. filed a complaint against the U.S. government and asserted that "the helicopter was seized illegally and without due process of law," since K&S Land Co. did not use the helicopter to violate the federal law.

Later that month, Charles Koonce posted an $82,000 surety bond set in Pecos by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton to gain release of the helicopter.

The government contends the aircraft's seizure "was necessitated by the frequent use of the helicopter in violation of the Airborne Hunting Act...and possible violation of other federal statutes...

"Several witnesses have testified before, and certain materials have been presented to, the grand jury regarding these violations of federal law," states court records. "The helicopter was purchased by the K&S Land Co. from a target of the grand jury investigation — the pilot who operated the aircraft during the Airborne Hunting Act violations."

Woman still incarcerated in connection with stabbing

A 25-year-old woman remains jailed in lieu of $5,000 bond set in connection with a stabbing incident that hospitalized a southside man Tuesday night.

Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry set bond Wednesday on Joyce Ann Shaw, also known as Joyce Ann Wadley, of 1905 Sunset.

She is charged with aggravated assault in the stabbing of 31-year-old Roy Charles Ervin of 119 Gist during a domestic disturbance at 1906 Hudson about 10:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Ervin was in satisfactory condition today at Midland Memorial Hospital with a stab wound to the shoulder.

In other action, firemen stood by as the wreckage of a light plane was removed from a runway at Midland Regional Airport after its nosegear collapsed on takeoff Wednesday morning.

No injuries were reported in the accident, which occurred as a Cessna Golden Eagle attempted to take off shortly after 8 a.m. Pilot of the craft, which is owned by Bob Herall Inc., was identified as Chuck Featherston, no address available. The plane sustained extensive damage, according to firemen.

In a burglary complaint to city police, Bobby Harrison of 3701 Stanolind said $6,670 worth of guns, hunting knives and household goods were taken in a break-in at his residence. Entry was gained through a rear door.

In another burglary complaint, Doug Daniels of 3621 W. Wadley Ave. reported his house had been broken into sometime Wednesday. Taken were rare coins and camera equipment valued at $750. Entry was gained through an unlocked window, according to police.

Court of Criminal Appeals upholds murder conviction

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday upheld the murder conviction and 50-year sentence assessed Steven Paul Perrin by an Ector County Court.

In his appeal, Perrin argued that the evidence was insufficient to show that the victim had died "as the result of a criminal act," or that he was involved in any such act, and that the state had failed to prove the victim's identity.

The appeals court said the record showed that the victim, Raymond White, had been missing since June 22, 1977, and that on Jan. 4, 1979, Perrin was taken to the district attorney's office and warned of his rights, and "shortly thereafter admitted shooting the deceased with a .22-caliber pistol and burying his blanket-wrapped body."

Perrin "then directed the officers to the burial site where the body was recovered," the court said.

The court reported a pathologist testified that White had died from a bullet wound to the head, and that White's mother had testified that a watch and ring removed from the body belonged to White.

The court rejected Perrin's arguments, saying the evidence produced at trial "when coupled with the appellent's (Perrin's) confession," was sufficient to support the conviction.

Hospital escapee in custody

BIG SPRING — An escapee from the Veterans Administration Hospital's mental ward who told officers he wanted to barricade himself in a house and have a shootout is in custody today at Cowper Hospital here after being charged in connection with the Tuesday night robbery of Gibson's Discount Store.

He was identified as Eric Etnire, 30, of Alamogordo, N.M.

According to Lt. Alvis Jeffcoat of Big Spring Police Department, a man entered Gibson's about 8 p.m. and asked to see a shotgun. Upon loading the weapon, he made a female clerk give him a .45-caliber automatic pistol and .45-caliber ammunition, then forced her to accompany him outside.

In the parking lot, said Jeffcoat, the man commandeered a car from another woman and fled the scene alone.

Officers pursued the vehicle northwest on FM 700 and then west on the north service road of Interstate 20. The man was apprehended at the Stanton exit when the vehicle became stuck in the sand of the median.

Assisting Big Spring Police officers were deputies from Howard County and Martin County sheriff's offices.

Rudd to sponsor tax bill

AUSTIN — Rep. Jim Rudd of Brownfield will be the House sponsor of a Senate bill which accelerates county payment of motor vehicle taxes to the state, a measure which could provide $10.9 million over the next two years.

The Senate passed SB 713, which now goes to the House for consideration.

"The bill simply steps up the dates counties will pay their motor vehicle taxes, and earns the state money through interest revenues," said Sen. Hector Uribe of Brownsville, sponsor of the measure.

Depending on the volume of taxes collected, the measure requires daily, weekly or monthly remittance of the motor vehicle tax.

Counties with less than $2 million collected in such taxes would continue to remit every month, as required by current law, SB 713 states.

The amount of tax collected will not change, Uribe noted.

House votes for adoption registry

AUSTIN (AP) — The House voted Wednesday to set up a central registry of adoption records and allow adoptees, their biological parents and siblings to see the records.

Rep. Stan Schlueter's bill would ban adoptees from seeing the records until they are 21.

The bill was approved on voice vote and faces another reading in the House before going to the Senate.

Senators denounce chemical weapons

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON - Denouncing chemical weapons as "hateful and indiscriminate," a bipartisan group of senators is introducing today legislation to kill the administration's $157.2 million request for production of binary chemical munitions.

The Pentagon's request for new chemical weapons, the first that would be produced since 1969, is expected to meet a stiff challenge from Congress, which turned back a much smaller request for the controversial weapons last year.

Even as the bill to knock out the chemical munitions was being introduced in the Senate Appropriations Committee, Defense officials were arguing the administration's case this morning in closed hearings before the Senate Armed Services Committee.

President Nixon in 1969 unilaterally halted production of chemical weapons.

Sara Care Sitting Services

WHAT ARE YOU DOING WITH THE KNOWLEDGE LIFE HAS GIVEN YOU?

You like people. You've cared for a family. Raised children. Been involved with your community. You've run a household.

BUT WHAT ARE YOU DOING NOW?

Do something with life's knowledge. Become that special person who makes a Sara Care franchise successful.

Sara Care provides urgently needed sitting services for the elderly, children and vacationing homeowners. It has already proven successful in many parts of the country.

We provide a comprehensive, 80 hour training program covering all aspects of the business. And, your franchise can operate from your home.

If you're the special person we're looking for, call collect, 915/593-5071, for a free, no obligation interview on the Sara Care opportunities in your community. Mr. M.R. Hollenshead of the Sara Care Franchise Corporation will be at the Holiday Inn of Midland/Odessa on Saturday, April 9th to meet you.
Interviews will take place between the hours of 9 am and 5 pm. Call collect today for your personal appointment or further information.

Firms learn to aid families

"IT IS OUR problem," he said. "It does impede and impair productivity. There's a selfish motivation (for these programs) and it's productivity and profitability.

"The family used to take care of itself. Then public programs were introduced, but they became too costly. Now, they're calling upon the private sector. We must substitute action for words. It's our responsibility. It's our time in the barrel."

Addressing "Future Trends in Texas" that will affect the family in the workplace, Vic Arnold, director of the bureau of business research department at the University of Texas-Austin, said population growth, the economy and Texas' relationship with Mexico "will make a tremendous impact on businesses."

He said while Texas will continue to experience relatively high economic and population growth over the next 25 years, it will not match the high rates over the past decade.

Arnold explained that business and industry should be aware that 50 percent of Mexico's population is under the age of 16 and the population should double by the end of the century.

"This surplus of labor will be looking to the north to Texas," he said. "This will make a tremendous impact on services. Just think about health care alone. Texas' future is tied to Mexico's future."

Odessa woman charged in alleged murder-for-hire

ODESSA — A woman has been charged in an alleged murder-for-hire scheme in the Monday morning shooting of her elderly husband. The man's teen-age daughter also was arrested in the case.

In city jail today under $10,000 bond set by Municipal Court Judge Larry McMillion was the man's wife, 58-year-old Margarette Blackwell of 7213 W. University Ave. Also jailed and awaiting formal arraignment was the daughter, Roschelle Lynne Blackwell, 19, of 601 N. Dotsy.

They were arrested late Tuesday night on warrants charging them with the attempted murder of 70-year-old Joe Ray Blackwell of the University Avenue address. He was shot twice in the head with a small caliber weapon that has been taken into evidence, according to police.

Blackwell was listed in stable condition at Medical Center Hospital this morning.

Police say he was lured to an alley in the 2700 block of Deering Avenue about 10 a.m. Monday on the pretext of looking at a snow cone truck he was interested in buying. He was accompanied by his wife.

One of two other women he met with in the alley to discuss the deal allegedly pulled a .22-caliber pistol and shot him in the face and right temple. Police said Blackwell recognized the woman as a friend of his daughter.

The woman, 20-year-old Jo Beth Morgan of Odessa, was arrested later Monday and placed under $25,000 bond. No charges were filed against the second woman.

Police allege that Blackwell's wife and daughter conspired with Ms. Morgan to kill Blackwell for an undetermined amount of money. No motive has been established.

The 35 contestants — 18 women and 17 men — qualified for the tournament by hitting the jackpot on "Pot-of-Gold" slot machines in 1982. Stroker's place in the tournament was assured when an Oct. 12 tug on a Las Vegas machine netted him $250,000.

Stroker said contestants spent Monday amid a seven-hour "dress rehearsal," which included an explanation of the machines and tournament rules, along with a flurry of television interviews, photo sessions and plenty of entertainment.

Complimentary food and drinks, limousine service and front-row seats at an ice show spectacular were only some of the fringe benefits during his Reno stay, according to Stroker.

"I can't believe it, everything's complimentary," said Stroker, who added that this year's contestants will be invited back to cheer for next year's participants. "They sure do it up first class, believe me."

Crews from television's "That's Incredible" filmed much of the tournament hoopla for airing during September. Stroker said he did several interviews for Reno-area television stations and enjoyed the antics of comedy's master of malaprop, Norm Crosby, the tournament emcee.

Stroker said he lived in Las Vegas, Nev., for a few years in the late 1960s and often sat behind Crosby at minor-league football games. "He's just a lot of fun to be around," Stroker said.

Although Tuesday's dream didn't materialize for Stroker, he said part of his $250,000 prize is financing another personal fantasy — a five-day paddle wheel cruise with family and friends along the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers in September.

MHA closes 1982-83 program

She said a waiting list has been started for a 1983-84 program, should the city choose to appropriate money for next year if it applies for a grant. Seven applicants are on the waiting list, according to Ms. Ellis.

Ms. Ellis said many citizens don't realize that Midland has many people in need of assistance with house repairs. "Everybody just thinks Midland is just a rich old place, that we don't have any needy people here," she said.

Susan Howell, community development coordinator, said officials from the Department of Housing and Urban Development will visit Midland in two weeks to audit the city's housing program.

Abbott told Ms. Howell to make every effort to illustrate to HUD officials that Midland needs the housing program.

Midlander earns Dean's List honors at UT-Austin's School of Engineering

Patrick Hunt Hickey, son of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Hickey of 2 Hanover Drive, was named to the Dean's List of the School of Engineering for the fall semester at The University of Texas at Austin.

Hickey, a junior, is majoring in petroleum engineering.

Midlander wins speech award

Joey Gassie

Joey Gassie, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Gassie of Midland, was named a 1983 United States Achievement National Award winner in speech and drama by the United States Achievement Academy.

Gassie, who attends Lee High School, was nominated for the award by his debate coach, Zane Harwell.

TCU alumni to honor Midlander

Wayne Moore of Midland will be honored Friday at the eighth annual Texas Christian University alumni awards dinner in Fort Worth.

Seven persons will receive 1983 alumni associaton awards.

An independent oil operator, Moore will be named an honorary alumnus, an award recognizing service, loyalty or support of TCU. He is a director of the First City National Bank, Leamco Service and Trinity Towers. He also is a director of Trans-Pecos Oil of Fort Stockton.

A graduate of Ohio State University and the University of Oklahoma, Moore is chairman of the board of TCU's Brite Divinity School and headed the Investment in Ministry campaign for the graduate seminary from 1976 to 1980. He is chairman of the First Christian Church in Midland.

IRS sponsors self-help seminar

Outreach, a free, self-help seminar sponsored by the Internal Revenue Service, will be held from 1 to 3 p.m. Saturday at the Midland Center, 105 N. Main St.

Persons with questions concerning tax forms and those wishing to bring tax packets, dividend statements and W-2 forms may attend.

Instruction will guide persons line-by-line in filling out 1040 EZ, 1040 A and regular 1040 with schedules A and B forms.

Midlander named to Dean's List

Kirby Roland Tarry, of 1403 W. Illinois, was named to the Dean's List for the first semester at Indiana University in Bloomington, Ind.

Students must earn a 3.5 grade point average or better while carrying a minimum load of 12 hours.

AAUW taking scholarship requests

The Midland Branch of the American Association of University Women (AAUW) is taking applications for scholarships for the 1983-84 academic year at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The scholarship, $300 for a student taking between six and 11 credit hours per semester or $400 for a student taking more than 11 hours, is open to any Midland woman who plans to attend UTPB.

Scholarship recipients are chosen on the basis of financial need, academic standing, intended course load and previous education or need of retraining.

Deadline for submitting applications is April 15. Further information may be obtained from the UTPB Financial Aid Office or by contacting Sheri Laidley, 2308 Humble, Midland, Texas 79701, 682-2148.

UTPB graduate receives scholarship

ODESSA — Michael O'Hara, named The University of Texas of the Permian Basin's top engineering graduate in 1981, has received a $2,000 graduate scholarship from the Texas Engineering Foundation.

O'Hara is completing a doctorate in chemical engineering at Texas Tech University. He was chosen to represent Texas Tech from applicants in architecture, civil engineering, mechanical engineering, chemical engineering, industrial engineering and electrical engineering.

His doctoral dissertation deals with the gasification of cellulosic products such as woods or gin trash.

GMAT to be given at UTPB

ODESSA — The Graduate Management Admission Test (GMAT) will be given on The University of Texas of the Permian Basin campus June 18. Students planning to take the exam have until April 18 to apply at the UTPB College of Management office.

All students working toward a master of business administration degree must take either the GMAT or the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) before being accepted into graduate study.

UTPB is not a regular testing center for the GMAT; however, if 15 people or more sign up, the test will be offered on the campus each test date. Currently, the nearest test sites are Lubbock and Alpine.

Information and applications are available in the College of Management office on the fourth floor of UTPB's main building. Completed applications must be submitted, with a check for $30 made to the Educational Testing Service, to Jeannie Austin in the dean's office by April 18. The testing service will send each student an admission ticket to the testing center on the appropriate date.

UTPB offers New England tour

ODESSA — A week-long tour of New England will highlight a new travel course being offered at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin this summer.

The course, History 489 or 689, New England Heritage, may be taken for graduate or undergraduate credit in history or through the no-grade Encore program.

Persons with fewer than 60 college credits who do not qualify for regular registration in the upper-level university may enroll through a continuing education program.

Classes will meet from 5:30 to 8 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays from June 1-29. Instruction will include reading, lectures, discussions, movies and slide-tape presentations on Plymouth, Boston, Salem, Lexington and Concord, Mass.

Tours of those places will begin when students fly to Boston, Mass., July 9. Cost of the trip is $633, which includes round trip airfare, transportation, double occupancy in hotels, baggage handling and entrance fees. Cost of the trip does not include tuition and fees.

Those wishing to sign up for the class, limited to 35 students, may register during UTPB's summer registration May 27, in the UTPB student lounge.

House OKs two-sided testimony

AUSTIN (AP) — House members on Wednesday added their approval to a measure forcing the State Board of Education to allow two-sided testimony on textbooks being considered for use in Texas schools.

For 20 years, board rules allowed only testimony from people objecting to books under consideration by the state textbook committee. The bill by Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, requires new board rules to allow comments for or against a book.

Last year, for the first time, the textbook committee allowed written comments in support of books under consideration.

The House approved the measure on voice vote, but it faces another House vote before it goes to Gov. Mark White. Earlier this year, senators approved the bill in a 30-0 vote.

Michael Hudson, state coordinator of People for the American Way, praised the bill as opening the textbook selection process to "balanced citizen participation." People for the American Way is a national organization formed to counter efforts by groups such as the Moral Majority.

Farabee's bill also expands the textbook committee — selected by the board — from 15 to 27 members. Committee members would be paid a fee, set by the board. House sponsor Gerald Hill, D-Austin, said the fees would add up to about $60,000 a year.

Hill said the fees are necessary to attract teachers, who would have to forego a summer job, to work on the committee.

Students testify against raising drinking age

AUSTIN (AP) — Students opposed to raising the legal drinking age from 19 to 21 told a House committee Wednesday that they favor tougher DWI laws, but do not want teen-aged drinkers singled out.

University of Texas Students' Association President Paul Begala told the House Committee on Liquor Regulation that "a new Prohibition is not the answer."

"Capriciously changing the drinking age to try to keep young adults from drinking will be about as fair — and about as effective — as trying to make it illegal for state officials to drink simply because there have been a few who have not been able to drink responsibly," Begala said.

Despite warnings from Chairman Billy Hall, D-Laredo, not to demonstrate, the young people who packed the galleries applauded Begala when he complained that an 18-year-old can be called for jury duty, sign contracts, vote, be sent to war and marry, but would not be able to drink under the proposed law.

Penny Young of Corpus Christi testified in favor of raising the drinking age. She said her best friend was killed at 17 in a wreck in which the 20-year-old driver had been drinking.

"I feel like my life is just beginning," Miss Young testified tearfully. "I don't want to end up like Mary Helen."

Begala said he, too, had lost a friend in a drunken driving accident.

"But that drunk driver was 50 years old," he said. "I would not stand here and irresponsibly tell you that all 50-years-olds should not be allowed to drink.

"The students who have come here today are not radical or irresponsible and don't want to throw beer cans at you," Begala said. "They're here like me because they think it's fundamentally wrong to set up a separate class of citizens in this state."

Col. Jim Adams, director of the Texas Department of Public Safety, told the committee that there is a "disproportionate involvement of young people in DWI accidents."

He said 19 and 20-year-olds make up 4 percent of drivers but account for 13 percent of the traffic fatalities. Adams said the youngest DWI offender DPS has arrested was 10 years old.

"We can deal with the tip of the iceberg, we can scrape the bodies off the highway, but the only way to deal with the problem is to develop better attitudes toward responsible drinking," Adams said.

Rep. Gary Thompson, D-Abilene, sponsor of one of the bills that would raise the drinking age said it was lowered from 21 to 18 in 1973 because of "a national guilt trip" over sending young men to Vietnam.

"I submit it was demonstrably a mistake to lower the drinking age," he said. The Legislature upped the drinking age to 19 last session.

Hall said four bills before the committee reinstating 21 as the legal drinking age would be sent to subcommittee.

Krueger says he'll challenge Tower

DALLAS (AP) — Former U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger says he'll challenge U.S. Sen. John Tower again in 1984 — but he may have to beat an Austin Democrat first.

State Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, also indicated at a Tuesday meeting of Dallas County Democratic precinct chairmen that he intends to run against the Texas Republican.

Krueger, of New Braunfels, narrowly lost a 1978 race against Tower, who has served since 1960.

The two Democrats didn't mention each other by name, but used the meeting to take verbal shots at each other.

Krueger hinted that Doggett is too liberal to obtain the business support necessary to defeat Tower, currently the only Republican elected to statewide office.

"To replace John Tower, we need someone with a full range of support," Krueger said.

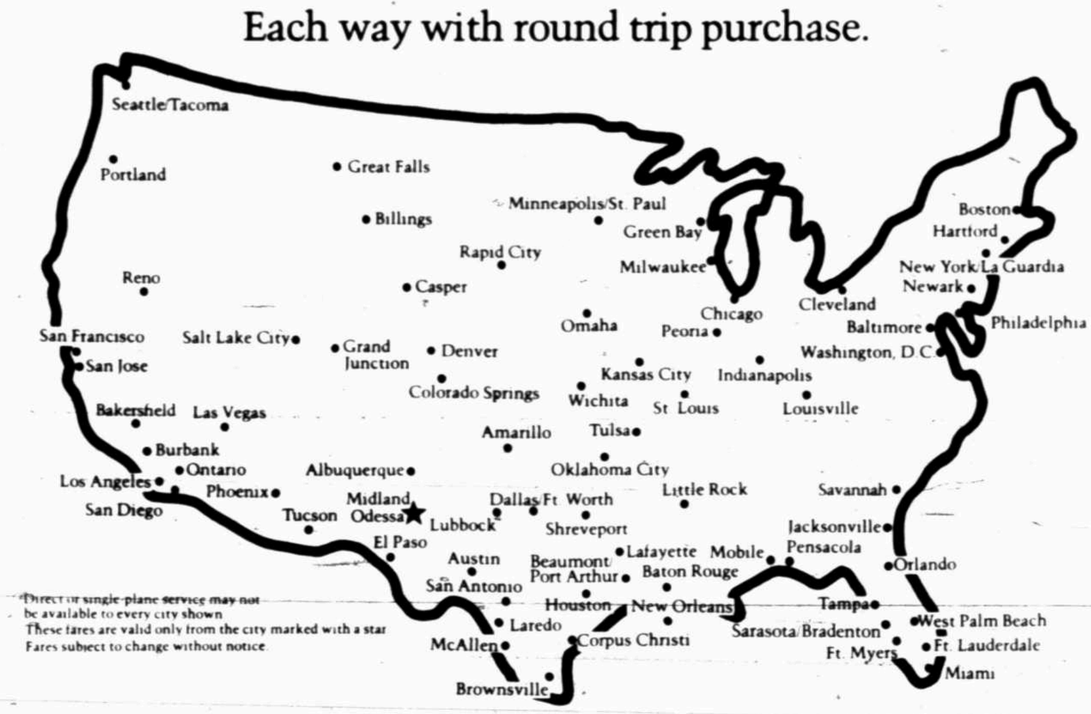

Doggett implied that Krueger is too close to Tower politically to give Democrats an alternative.

"You can't beat John Tower by being a warmed-over Republican," Doggett said.

Farmers fight land battle in air

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

IRVINE, Calif. — There is a never-ending war going on between California farmers and various species of birds, a multimillion-dollar war that the birds seem to be winning.

Not only are the farmers losing crops to the sharp beaks of the enemy, but they are spending money on an arsenal that includes guns, painted kites that look like hawks and, in one case, a radio-controlled model airplane to buzz the invaders.

The airplane caper was given up by one grower after its operator reportedly fell asleep and the $600 craft flew away and was never found.

Shotguns and other more effective weapons cannot be used because they would disturb or endanger people who live in urban developments that press closer and closer to agricultural fields.

And it has been noted that, while the hawk-kites are effective in frightening away some birds, occasionally they also attract real hawks that show an inclination to mate with them.

"There are no figures to show what all this is costing, neither the loss in damaged crops nor the amount of money being spent to stop that damage," said Dr. Terry Salmon, extension wildlife specialist at the University of California, Davis, "but there is no doubt it runs into many millions. The grape industry alone lost about $8 million to the birds in 1978, the only near estimate we have."

He said that some grape growers have resorted to spreading nets over broad acres of vines. During the years, traps, recorded distress calls, the so-called Zon guns that fire compressed propane gas, and different types of repellents have been used. But grapes are not the only fruit threatened by the birds.

LAT Photo

Jose "Pepe" Silva, pest control foreman at Irvine Ranch in Orange County, Calif., inspects one of the hawk kites being used to scare birds away. The birds cause million of damage to crops each year.

One of the most vulnerable crops is strawberries, and 70 percent of all the berries eaten in the United States are produced in Southern California.

In Orange County, where agriculture still is a $250 million-a-year industry, strawberries are a prime target for such birds as wild canaries, linnets and sparrows.

"These little birds have the fastest beaks in the West," said Victor Voth, one of the world's leading developers of various strains of strawberries at the University of California South Coast Field Station near El Toro.

"They take a tiny seed from a strawberry, husk it and eat the kernel in less time than it takes to tell it. They can eat all the seeds out of a berry in less than a minute. And when a flock of 200 of them gets into a field, you can imagine what happens."

Voth developed a berry known as the Tioga. Its principal quality was that the seeds were more deeply embedded in the sides of the berries, making it a little harder for the birds to get them.

"But the Tiogas are going out now," he said. "They were too expensive to grow and too hard to pick. We're coming out with a new berry, the Douglas. It's a better fruit, but it does have the protruding seeds. The birds will love us."

Orange County's Irvine Ranch, one of the largest single agricultural operators in Southern California, has a full-time crew of half a dozen men to fight against the birds and other pests. Their foreman is Jose "Pepe" Silva.

"The horned larks eat at our broccoli and tomatoes," he said. "Blackbirds and starlings go for our sweet corn, and, of course, the linnets and wild canaries are after our strawberries.

"I've been dealing with birds for quite some time, and we've tried the hawk-kites, the Zon cannons, tapes stretched across fields to flutter in the breeze and distrct them, and people walking through the rows making noise. But every year it's different. The birds are smart. They get used to all these things, so you have to keep changing around all the time, sometimes almost every day or so. You just have to stay on top of it all."

Micro-wave soup can be fun

Copley News Service

Soup is one food that seems to have been invented for the microwave.

Try your hand at making your own. With the microwave, soup never takes long to prepare, even when made from scratch. And the virtuous feeling you get from preparing homemade soup can be the perfect pick-me-up.

MANHATTAN CLAM CHOWDER

2 strips bacon
1 tbsp. butter or margarine
1 stalk celery,diced
1 small onion, finely chopped
1 medium carrot, finely diced
1 large potato, finely diced
3 tbsps. flour
1 can (1 lb.) tomatoes, chopped
4 ozs. bottled clam juice
1 can (8 oz.) minced clams
½ tsp. thyme
1 bay leaf
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste

Cook bacon in 2½-quart glass casserole for 2 minutes. Add butter or margarne, celery, onion, carrot and potato. Cook 5 minutes, stirring halfway through. Blend in flour. Add tomatoes with liquid, clam juice, minced clams and seasonings. Cook, covered, 12 minutes, stirring halfway through. Serves 6.

VEGETABLE BEEF SOUP

½ pound ground beef
1 onion, diced
4 cups hot beef broth
2 tbsps. fresh chopped parsley
1 stalk celery, sliced
2 large potatoes, peeled and diced
1 carrot, diced
2 tomatoes, peeled and chopped
1 cup shredded cabbage
½ tsp. marjoram
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

Crumble ground beef into 3-quart casserole. Add onion. Mix and cook, covere, for 10 minutes, stirring once halfway through. Stir in broth and parsley, cook 10 minutes. Stir well, then add remaining ingredients. Cook 25 minutes more, stirring halfway through cooking time. Serves 6.

Recipes are tested in 625- to 700-watt microwave ovens. Foods are cooked on HIGH (100 percent power) and uncovered unless otherwise specified.

Hazelnut cookies sinfully rich

By The Associated Press

TEATIME FARE
Hazelnut Cookies & Tea

HAZELNUT COOKIES

They're devastatingly rich old-fashioned "snowballs."

¼-pound stick (½ cup) butter, at room temperature
¼ cup confectioners' sugar
1 cup all-purpose flour
½ cup finely chopped skinned toasted hazelnuts

With a wooden spoon beat together butter and sugar until fluffy; gradually stir in flour until blended. Stir in hazelnuts. Chill, covered, until dough is firm enough to handle. Using a level measuring tablespoon for each, shape into balls. Place, a few inches apart, on an ungreased cookie sheet. Bake in a preheated 400-degree oven until beige color and bottoms of cookies are brown — 10 to 12 minutes. With a wide metal spatula, remove to a wire rack to cool completely. Store in a tightly covered container. Just before serving, roll cookies in extra confectioners' sugar. Makes 1½ dozen.

AT WIT'S END

Year-long football

By ERMA BOMBECK

Man has finally revealed his divine plan for life here on earth.

For six days of every week he will toil, putting together three football leagues with seasons running from the first of September through the last of August.

And on the seventh day, he will watch!

With the creation of the United States Football League, he has only one more league to go before the plan is complete.

I ask you, ladies, where were we when the new league was put together? We slept! I cannot remember when anything went together so fast. One minute, I remember old whatshisname sitting in front of the Super Bowl lamenting he had only one bowl to go before he was homeless, and the next thing you know 12 teams in three divisions calling themselves the United States Football League trotted out onto the field where they are going to play until the middle of July.

I can't believe it. Everything takes time. Creation of the earth: seven days; man on the moon: 200 years; full term of a baby on a soap opera: three weeks; creation of a football league: 15 minutes.

We've sat idly by and watched the sports week grow from Friday nights to Mondays, and the season extend from fall through midsummer.

If they can jam in another league at the start of the baseball season, then baseball will have to retaliate by putting in another league in the two weeks between NFL and the basketball season. Basketball spills over into the golf classics now, so they'll stick in another league that will wedge between the golf opens and the National Hockey League, which takes away the week and a half between tennis at Wimbledon and the Indy 500.

In my heart I know that out there somewhere in this country, even as I write, is a group of men in a smoke-filled room putting together another football league to fill the 27-day gap that would make the season continuous throughout the year.

After all, how can you reason with someone who will love the Green Bay Packers in November as he loves the Arizona Wranglers in July?

DEAR ABBY

Daughter's pitch for lover strikes out

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 30-year-old divorcee living with my boyfriend. We love each other, but neither one of us is ready for marriage yet. My parents liked "Alan" very much until we started living together. Now he is no longer welcome in their home.

When my parents invite me to family gatherings and holiday celebrations, I'm told to leave Alan home. Abby, we aren't asking to sleep together there. (We live in the same city.)

While my sisters bring their husbands, and the other relatives bring their mates, I'm not allowed to bring the man I love and share my life with. It makes no sense, Abby. Everyone in the family knows that Alan and I live together!

Alan's parents have welcomed me into their home with open arms, which hurts all the more to see Alan treated like an outcast.

Last Christmas I chose not to see my family at all rather than go without Alan. Why do my parents, who claim to "love" me, hurt me this way?

I am torn. Should I stay away until the man I love is welcome? Or go alone with a heavy heart? — HURTING

DEAR HURTING: Your experience is another example of the widespread "culture gap" that separates generations today. Your parents view your lifestyle as a violation of tradition, morality and the laws they live by. You view it as the right of a grown woman to make her own decisions.

Tell your parents that to stay away from family celebrations or to go without Alan breaks your heart. Be patient. They may decide (as have many parents in the same boat) that their adult children are free to live their own lives.

If they remain inflexible, then do whatever affords you the most pleasure — and the least pain.

DEAR ABBY: Sam and I have been married for seven months. This is the second marriage for both of us. He's a fine man and I'm lucky to have him, but here's the problem:

We both have grown children from our previous marriages. Mine are 28 and 31. Before we were married, Sam and I agreed that one week would be the limit for houseguests because Sam likes his privacy. He says anyone who wants to stay longer will have to go to a motel.

My children will be coming (separately) from a long distance and they would each like to stay for two weeks. I feel terrible putting a one-week time limit on my own children, and they can't afford a motel. Now what? — PALM BEACH NEWLYWED

DEAR NEWLYWED: Sam doesn't sound too flexible to me, so just explain his eccentricities to your children and treat them to an extra week at a motel.

DEAR ABBY: Is there an acceptable compromise when one partner wants another child and the other doesn't?

My friend is the mother of a 3-year-old child and she would love to have another baby, but her husband says one is enough! Mary is the stay-at-home type. She loves children, is an excellent mother and she herself came from a large family and feels very unfulfilled with only one child. She'd settle for two, but her husband won't budge.

I've never seen this problem in your column. How can this be settled to the satisfaction of both Mary and her husband? — MARY'S FRIEND

DEAR FRIEND: It can't.

Lion allegedly protected saint

In the year 382 Pope Damasus I commissioned St. Jerome to make a new Latin translation of the Bible from the original languages. For his task he had to first learn Greek and Hebrew. Legend has it that a tame lion protected the saint while he was working in his retreat in Bethlehem.

Bubbha Thomas, Lightmen to play at Midland Hilton

ENTERTAINMENT

Bubbha Thomas and The Lightmen will perform at the Midland Hilton Ballroom April 15 in a benefit concert for Casa de Amigos. Bubbha Thomas and The Lightmen are based in Houston.

Curtain time for the event is 8:30 p.m. Complimentary hors d'oeuvres and a cash bar service begins at 7:30 p.m.

Known as "The Johnny Appleseed of Jazz," Bubbha Thomas and The Lightmen have built a reputation on their ability to entertain audiences of all ages.

Their repertory is vast and their Midland concert will include such pieces as "Days of Wine and Roses," "All In Love is Fair," "Caravan" and "500 Miles High," as well as original compositions from their own recordings.

Since 1969, Thomas has led a one-man jazz crusade in Houston, sponsoring educational projects in schools and the community, writing jazz specials for television, hosting radio programs and organizing the Jazz Month Club. In addition, he and his group have recorded five albums.

Thomas and The Lightmen have the distinction of being the only jazz band on the Texas Commission on the Arts Touring Program. Funded through TCA, the touring program provides grants for up to half the cost of a group's tour. The program will assist 24 different groups this year including the Dallas Symphony, the Houston Ballet and the Texas Opera Theatre.

Thomas and The Lightmen are also working on their sixth album. The previous five have been independently recorded and distributed by Thomas, but the success of "The Best of the Lightmen" in 1979, which made Billboard Magazine's Top Album Pick, may change that.

Thomas has performed in major jazz showplaces including the Apollo Theatre in New York, the Howard Theatre in Washington, D.C., and the Regal Theatre in Chicago.

Other members of the group include Charles Rhinehart, keyboards; Terry Jenkins, bass guitar; Dwight Sills, guitar; and John Gordon, saxophone.

Tickets, priced at $12, $18 and $25, may be purchased by calling 697-5127 or by contacting Casa de Amigos, 1101 East Garden Lane.

Midlander receives superior rating for third year from music clubs

For the third successive year Darian Bennett received a superior rating in the Texas Federation of Music Clubs' annual auditions held in March.

The Midland Junior Music Clubs Festival was held at Midland College. Festival entrants do not compete against each other, but rather each is rated on his own merits as a student. Judges for the auditions were Elizabeth Horner of Kermit and Ruth Ardis and Pat Harris, both of Odessa.

Of the 120 students entered, 95 received superior ratings.

Midland Arts Association to hold annual tour of studios

Midland Arts Association is holding its annual Artist's Studio Tour Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m.

Last year's tour opened three local artists' studios and Midland College's art department to the public for a four-hour period one Sunday, complete with art demonstrations being conducted at each stop.

This year's tour will do the same, but...

It has a new twist.

"The change this year is our emphasis on participation," Ruth Hill Radcliffe, the organization's president, said. "We are going to offer opportunities to draw, experiment in clay, work in printmaking and with the weaving looms to those who are interested." These activities will be available at Midland College's art department.

A non-profit educational organization, MAA hopes to broaden the public's awareness. As Ms. Radcliffe said, "The purpose (of opening these studios) is to get the public acquainted with Midland artists and what's going on artistically within the local art community."

The studios include Ms. Radcliffe's at 3607 Neely Ave., Patricia Metts Netherland's at 2819 Maxwell Drive and Prudie Leibrock's at No. 17 Oaklawn Park. Each stop will include members of MAA working in their various mediums.

Tickets, priced at $3, are available from all MAA members, at MC's art department in the Allison Fine Arts Building and at the studios April 10. Those taking the tour may do so at their own pace, starting in any order they choose. Refreshments will be served at MC. For more information call MC's art department or 697-4995.

Proceeds from the tour will be used to present the organization's monthly educational programs, which are open to the public, and to sponsor the organization's Fall Art Show.

'Tribute' set for nine-performance run

Midland Community Theatre's production of Bernard Slade's "Tribute" opens Friday in Theatre I at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

A nine-performance run is scheduled through April 23.

"Tribute" opened on Broadway in June 1978, elevating Slade into the august company of Neil Simon as being one of the very few authors to have two shows running concurrently on Broadway. "Same Time Next Year" had opened in March of 1975 and was still running strong.

"Tribute" features Scotty Templeton, who, at a young looking 50, has never grown up. The play focuses on his attempts to win the affection of the one person who means the most to him, his son.

Unlike "Same Time Next Year," "Tribute" is not a two-character play. The audience is introduced to an assortment of Scottie's friends, both old and new.

MCT's cast includes Michael McLaren as Scottie, Arlene Jara as Scottie's ex-wife; Jess Kozman as their son Jud; John Phillips as Lou Daniels, Scottie's boss and best friend since childhood; Robin Stanton as Sally; Nancy Calhoun Gladys; and Billie Garland as Hilary.

This production is directed by Ted Strickland, MCT's assistant director. The set is designed by Terry Tittle, with lighting design by John Michael Warburton.

Reservations may be made by calling Theatre Midland's box office. The production is funded in part by a grant from Dresser Titan and Dresser Magcobar.

As supermarket prices go up, it makes more sense to... Head for Bonanza instead!

New York Pops set for debut on Friday

NEW YORK (AP) — When the New York Pops orchestra debuts at Carnegie Hall Friday, it will be the realization of a 10-year-old dream for band leader Skitch Henderson.

Henderson, best known as former music director of the "Tonight" show, said he first registered the title, "The New York Pops" with the Patent Office in 1973, but waited 10 years to start the orchestra "because the Boston Pops decided not to come (to New York) this year."

Henderson said the idea of a pops orchestra appealed to him because "there is a tremendous audience of middlebrows who are not catered to in any situation in the United States in depth except Boston. My God, if it is possible, it should be done in the best city."

Henderson said in an interview earlier this week that he did not want his new 100-member orchestra to compete with the famed Boston institution.

Hyman, jazz quintet to perform in concerts

Pianist Dick Hyman and the Perfect Jazz Repertory Quintet will appear with the Midland-Odessa Symphony in two special Cabaret Pops concerts Friday and Saturday.

Friday's performance will be held at Green Tree Country Club and Saturday's show will be at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin student lounge in Odessa.

The first half of the concert will feature Hyman's original composition "Concerto Electro" for piano, orchestra and jazz-rock rhythm section.

Hyman's full-time professional musical career began in the early 1950s. Since that time he has functioned as an organist, arranger, conductor and composer in addition to pianist.

In 1982, Hyman composed and arranged the score for the latest Woody Allen film. At the same time he completed a 30-minute ballet for piano solo, commissioned by the Cleveland Ballet. Hyman performed the work, "Piano Man," in its Cleveland premiere.

Hyman has recorded the music of, among others, Scott Joplin, Fats Waller, Jelly Roll Morton and James P. Johnson.

He formed the Perfect Jazz Repertory Quintet in 1976. The quintet consists of Hyman, pianist and arranger; Joe Wilder, trumpet; Phil Bodner, clarinet and saxophones; Milt Hinton, bass; and Ron Traxler, drums.

Cost for the Midland Cabaret Pops, which includes a light buffet, is $75 for the conductor's circle and $30 for reserved seating. A cash bar will be available. Cost for the Odessa Cabaret Pops is $25 and $18. All seats are reserved. For more information or to make reservations call the symphony office at 563-0921.

Midland sculptor to discuss contemporary art

A native Midlander, sculptor Nancy Chambers, will discuss trends in contemporary art and her own work in a free public lecture at 8 p.m. Friday at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Her visit and lecture is in conjunction with the reception and special viewing of the "Works by Women" exhibit in the Museum of the Southwest's newly renovated Stables Gallery. Her work, "The Chimney Sweep," is a part of this exhibit, circulated by the Gihon Foundation in Dallas.

Ms. Chambers received her bachelor of arts degree from Austin College, Sherman, and her masters of fine art from the University of Dallas. She has frequently exhibited her works at the Delahunty Gallery in Dallas and currently teaches at Richland College.

Her works are small geometric boxes, intriately divided into chambers filled with intimate relics.

The "Works by Women" exhibit is comprised of 15 art works selected by Bette C. Graham, inventor of Liquid Paper correction fluid. In its portrayal of the feminine attitude, the colletion reflects close to a century of development in American art from the Impressionist influence in the work of Mary Cassatt to the contemporary art of today.

Docented tours are available for this exhibit. Museum hours are Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. No admission is charged to view any exhibit at the museum.

'Casablanca' classy copy of popular cult film

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — Nearly everything in television is imitative, a spinoff, rip-off or dust-off of something else. Programs come from books, movies, or TV in other countries. But hardly anything is original.

So why the pious objections and fuss over NBC's "Casablanca" series, starring David Soul, which begins its spring trial Sunday night? Sure it's a popular cult film, its fans know lines by heart, and its star, Humphrey Bogart, personifies the moral man who can separate good from evil and romance from realism.

NBC's "Casblanca," at least, isn't cheap or campy. Its problem is that Sunday's opening episode just isn't tremendously exciting.

Dramatically, it has intrigue and mystery, but the story is slow and standard TV, sort of a "Gunsmoke Goes to Morocco." Still, it has potential because of those wonderful characters.

CORRECTION

An inadvertant error appeared in the Monday Colonial Food Store advertisement (4/4/83). The ad read Budweiser Light Beer - 12 pack for $2.79. The ad should have read 6 pack for $2.79. The Reporter - Telegram regrets the error and any inconvenience.

Hope to mark 80th birthday

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bob Hope will celebrate his 80th birthday with a three-hour special on NBC on Monday, May 23, featuring a special appearance by President Reagan.

The special will originate from the John F. Kennedy Center in Washington.

George Pritchard
Asst. State Director, Meadow Fresh
Oklahoma

AN OPEN LETTER:

Dear Midlanders,

WHAT HAVE YOU GOT GOING THIS FRIDAY EVENING...say about 7:00 p.m.? CANCEL IT!!

This could be the most important evening you'll spend this year or this decade! That is why you should do whatever you can to make it to the "MEADOW FRESH OPPORTUNITY NIGHT" at 7:00 p.m., Friday, April 8th at the Holiday Inn, 3904 West Wall Street, in the Frontier Room.

Believe me, this no joke. I became a distributor of Meadow Fresh products just 17 months ago and have made in excess of $42,000 this last year in the business. As the MEADOW FRESH Assistant State Director For Oklahoma, I know just how wide open the Midland area is.

I don't want everyone to come but I might want you. To be honest with you, I feel kind of like the Marines, "I want a few good men and women." If you would like to increase your income, have a few spare hours a week, and have had some success at some kind of sales in the past, the Meadow Fresh multi-level opportunity could be for you.

I will have samples of our fantastic products for you to taste and a full detailed explanation of our marketing program. Make sure you are one of the first few who come this Friday night.

All I'm asking you to do, is to decide for yourself.

As sincere as I can be,

George Pritchard

George Pritchard

P.S. You may never have heard of Meadow Fresh before now, few Midlanders have, but we're going to change all that...

THE BMW 533i RUNS ON AN IN EXHAUSTIBLE FUEL. IT'S CALLED TECHNOLOGY.

With advances like a microprocessor-governed engine a standard on-board computer, leather interior, and the new BMW Service Interval Indicator, the BMW 533i was designed for drivers who don't object to a fairly generous amount of luxury mixed in with their performance.

It can be experienced by contacting us for a test drive.

TODAY'S USED CARS ARE MORE USED!

People are keeping their cars far longer before trading them for a new model. That's one big reason why you should be even more careful when you buy a used car. At our place, we've become even more finicky about the trade-in cars we offer for sale. Only the best will do for our customers.

Now, more than ever...WHERE you buy a used car is as important as WHAT you buy. Our reputation for offering good value for the money is your best assurance...buying your used car.

Owning is better than renting.

If you're presently renting retail or office space, you already know the ever-increasing cost-of-living rent increases. Besides all the advantages, costly sales overrides on your rental space is control.

From a pure economic standpoint, ownership looks strong. Consider these advantages.

- Your mortgage payments are fixed and not subject to escalation as a landlord.
- You receive tax deductions for interest and tax payments.
- You get a tax deduction for depreciation over the term of your loan.
- You have control over your space, and as your needs change, you can buy enough space to meet your future growth needs. Even the remainder area could be leased.
- All maintenance and upkeep is furnished through the condominium association.
- Your real estate investment gains value.

In addition to all this, Mission Square is strategically located in one of the fastest growing areas, North Big Spring and Loop 250, just southeast of Midland Plaza.

Mission Square is an ideal location for professionals, service businesses, a variety of retails stores. Contact our office now, for a full color brochure with all their details.
