Interest in city's recreational development booms

Investment groups rush in to pick up ball

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

As Midland experiences a boom in development, many residents have expressed excitement about particular restaurants or stores coming to town. Joining that bandwagon of development has been an increased interest in recreational facilities.

A golf driving range in west Midland opened in the spring and was followed by a practice golf center in north Midland this summer.

A group of investors has purchased the old Wild River Canyon property — 31 acres — in west Midland and has plans for an in-line skating track and hockey rink, simulated rock climbing walls and, possibly, a mountain bike trail and archery range.

Meanwhile, another group of investors has been scouting sites for a putt-putt golf course and batting cages, and possibly, bumper boats and race cars. The developers had targeted a location in northwest Midland but were unable to get the property rezoned after meeting resistance from residents.

In addition, an interest in non-commercial recreational facilities is on the increase. The city is constructing more parks to accommodate needs for soccer, baseball and softball associations. Plans are in the works for bike-hike trails and a new swimming pool. And a group of citizens has spearheaded an effort to add nine holes to Hogan Golf Course.

"It all ties in with what we see with the rest of the city" in terms of development, Mayor Bobby Burns said. "Midland wants that golf, that putt putt, those restaurants, that Best Buy."

Mezzo soprano great Marilyn Horne to bring recital arias into town

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Born in the small town of Bradford, Pa., Marilyn Horne first sang publicly at age 4. The occasion was a Franklin Delano Roosevelt rally.

"I'm one of those people who didn't have a choice; I was born with a voice," said the renowned mezzo soprano, who recalled what longtime friend, cellist Grego Piata Gorsky, said about being born with talent. At the time, they were talking about children, and Gorsky had one attending MIT and another at Harvard.

"They are so lucky. They can choose what they want to do. We poor fish, we were born with talent and perfect pitch, and we had no choice."

Americans storm militia thugs' nest

■ Raid seems part of a more aggressive effort to pave the way for the return of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — In the most dramatic strike yet at Haiti's ruling military, U.S. soldiers raided the headquarters of a hated pro-army militia Monday, seizing weapons and arresting more than three dozen people.

A joyous crowd of Haitians gathered to cheer the Americans. As the soldiers pulled away from the paramilitary headquarters, the Haitians surged forward in a jubilant mass and gleefully trashed the place, smashing everything they could lay hands on.

"We love you! We love you!" Haitians shouted at the soldiers who had raided the headquarters of the Front for the Advancement and Progress of Haiti, known as FRAPH.

The club-wielding demonstrators smashed furniture and beat on mattresses, water bottles, refrigerators, telephones — anything associated with FRAPH. One man even turned his anger on a stapler, repeatedly throwing it to the ground.

The raid came hours after Haitians in the southwestern town of Les Cayes shot and wounded a

Neighborhood watch groups block off get-acquainted time

By Gary Shanks

Midland residents came out in force late Monday as many of the city's Neighborhood Watch programs gathered socially to help neighbors get to know neighbors.

Called Neighborhood Watch Block Visits, the social gatherings help keep members of a neighborhood familiar with each other, provide a forum for neighborhood residents to present ideas to the group and let newcomers get acquainted with their neighbors, said Ray del Llano of the SIS Neighborhood Watch.

The citywide block visits began Sunday with a kickoff meeting at the Midland Park Mall for all Midland's Neighborhood Watch members.

State panel backs tougher laws to curb family violence

AUSTIN (AP) — A state Senate panel Monday recommended strengthening a new law against stalking and other changes aimed at curbing domestic violence.

The Interim Committee on Domestic Violence approved removing from the stalking law a requirement that there be at least one previous incident of harassing behavior before a stalking charge can be filed.

The current law has "been defined as one free stalk," said state Sen. Mike Moncrief, D-Fort Worth, and chairman of the five-member panel. "That's certainly not what the Legislature intended."

The stalking law was passed and went into effect last year. A first offense is a misdemeanor punishable by up to one year in jail and a $3,000

Oil group blasts Clinton on tax-break bid

Administration fails to deliver on promises, independents say

By Elizabeth Schwinn
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Independent oil producers said Monday the Clinton administration has failed to follow through on promises to create a tax break for marginal oil wells that would otherwise be unprofitable to operate.

George Alcorn, chairman of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, said the administration had "missed opportunities" to help the depressed industry by failing to push Congress to enact the tax breaks. He charged that Clinton's policies consist of "empty promises and government inaction."

Clinton told oil-state lawmakers in June that he might support a tax break for marginal oil wells that would otherwise be unprofitable to operate, and that he favored ending the export ban on oil from Alaska's North Slope under certain conditions.

But the administration did not submit tax-break legislation and, instead, warned lawmakers that federal budget rules would forbid any tax break that added to the budget deficit.

"In our view, there's been far too much talk and too little action on the issues facing America's oil and gas industry," Alcorn said.

HORNE: Renowned mezzo soprano schedules Tall City recital special in her voice when she was young.

"We're talking tender young years here," said Miss Horne, whose 2½-octave voice will be heard from the Lee High School Auditorium stage at 8 p.m. Saturday in a recital sponsored by Midland Opera Theater. "My mother says I started to sing simultaneously with talking."

Tickets, priced at $25 for preferred seating, $15 general admission and $10 student, may be purchased at Pages and Prints, 40 Plaza Oaks Center, Wadley Avenue at Garfield Street, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily. For more information about the concert, which is sponsored by Texaco Inc. and the Midland Reporter-Telegram, and partially supported by the Texas Commission on the Arts and the Arts Assembly of Midland, call 684-4101.

Miss Horne spent the first 12 years of her life in Bradford, where her father held an appointed position and her mother an elected one. Both were assessors. She took singing lessons and sang with her sister as the Horne Sisters for church, civic and local events.

"We were little children when World War II began so we also did a major dose of patriotic work, singing for bond rallies and drives," said Miss Horne, who spent time in recent years as an AIDS fund-raiser before it was fashionable, and is now raising money for the New York City-based Marilyn Horne Foundation, which she established earlier this year to "support encourage and preserve the art of the vocal recital."

When she was 12, her family moved to Long Beach, Calif. "Life was pretty much the same, except a much better climate," said Miss Horne, who had laughed as she mentioned that Bradford is often named on weather broadcasts as the "coldest place in the nation tonight."

She was 12 and her sister 14 when they began singing with the Roger Wagner Chorale.

"I also began doing lots of movie work at that time — background music in the movies," Miss Horne said. "It culminated at the age of 20 when I did the voice of Carmen for the movie 'Carmen Jones.'"

At 20, she also made her operatic debut in Los Angeles.

"I don't think it felt like anything," she said, when asked how it felt to make her operatic debut. "It just was another step that I was taking. At the time, I was so busy performing and singing, it seemed like a logical step."

When she was 26, she went to Europe where she studied and performed for four years. Her debut in 1960 with the San Francisco Opera in Women is a different story. She was really nervous then. I felt it to be on the stage that night.

"That was really spectacular," she said. "It turned out to be the hit of the season and they had to add extra performances. I myself had a really wonderful personal success. That was the beginning of my climb into the higher echelon of singers."

During her remarkable career, Miss Horne, who was among 12 named to receive the National Medal of Arts in 1992, has sung Bernstein with Bernstein conducting, Stravinsky with Stravinsky, and Handel and Rossini operas that were unheard for centuries.

After many years of performing Rossini operas and becoming the ranking Rossini interpreter, Miss Horne has retired from singing the composer's operas.

"Thirty-seven years I've been singing Rossini on stage, which is about the same amount of time the old boy was writing it," Miss Horne said in Vancouver, Canada, in May 1994. "That's enough."

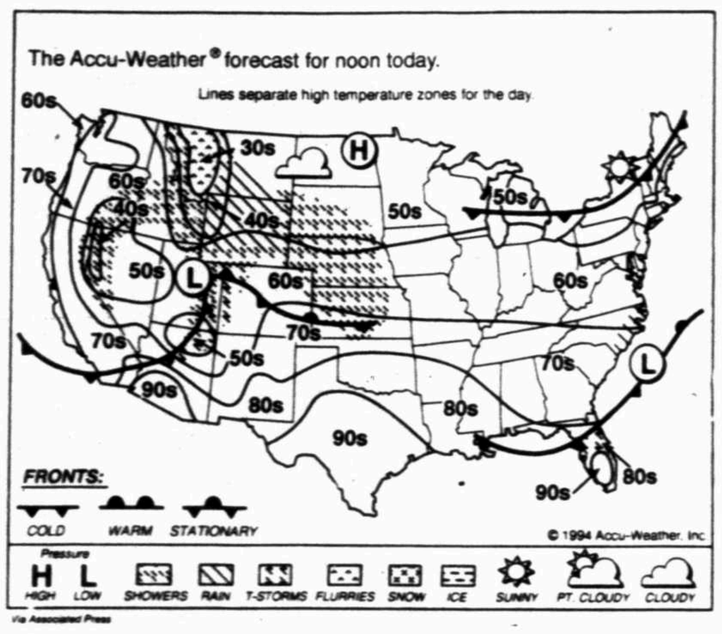

She has not given up operas completely, and will be heard at the Met in two roles during the 1994-95 season: a reprise of the Egyptian vamp Samira in John Corigliano and William A. Hoffman's "The Ghosts of Versailles," and Genevieve in the company's new "Pelleas et Melisande."

She now spends much of her time performing solo recitals, accompanied by pianist Martin Katz, who has been with her for more than a quarter of a century, and raising money for her foundation so that young singers will have the opportunity to perform recitals.

"I want to help secure vocal recitals so they don't die out like a dinosaur," Miss Horne said. "I don't think they are going to die out, but they are dwindling so greatly, we must be careful we don't lose them.

"Our foundation will be funding presenters to present young recital artists throughout the country. Three days before the recital, they will go into the schools and give small little recitals and speak to the students. We also have to educate a new audience. If we don't keep our audience coming, we won't have anybody to perform to anyway."

Clouds won't dampen upper 80s

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the upper 80s and southeast winds at 10-15 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy and a low between 60 and 65, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Wednesday should show increasing cloudiness with a high in the upper 80s.

After an overnight low of 59, Monday's high reached 91, compared to the record high for that date of 95 set in 1951. The record low is 41 set in 1932.

STATE

Most of the state had showers and thunderstorms Monday except for South Texas, where Houston's high of 95 degrees shattered a 26-year-old record.

The high at Houston's Intercontinental Airport broke the 1968 record for Oct. 3 by two degrees, according to the National Weather Service.

South Texas was mostly sunny, with temperatures in the 90s. Cotulla had the region's high of 99, while lows were in the upper 80s along the coast. Today should be fair with temperatures generally in the 80s.

NATION

Snow fell Monday in the northern Rockies and temperatures hit a record low in the Northeast as cold air pushed southward. Rain and high wind buffeted the Southeast.

Up to 5 inches of snow piled up Monday morning at Casper, Wyo., with 4 inches at Lander, Wyo.

Winter storm warnings were posted for the mountains and foothills of western Montana and for Wyoming's Big Horn Mountains, the National Weather Service said.

Snow advisories were in effect for the mountains of east-central Idaho, much of the rest of Wyoming, and the mountains of northern and central Utah.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

and includes about 70 homes in that part of the city, according to members of the group.

Neighborhood Watch has proved to be an asset in protecting members from random crime such as burglary and vandalism. Members of a specific group meet and decide how best to keep the neighborhood secure.

Members of the SIS group met Monday for grilled hotdogs, lemonade and socializing. Other regular meetings, however, are used to keep members abreast of law-enforcement activities and of any newcomers in the area. With the fast pace of modern society, there are regularly new neighbors in the SIS area, del Llano said.

Neighbors are informed of vacation plans and other changes in the watch area. In the SIS group, stickers are provided for neighborhood vehicles to let everyone know which cars belong there, del Llano said.

Familiarity is the key to a watch group's success, del Llano said. "We kind of become the eyes and ears of the Police Department," he said.

In the last year, the SIS group has toured the city jail and 911 office. They have scheduled ice cream parties along with tricycle and bicycle parades and visits by McGruff the Crime Dog to keep neighborhood children involved, del Llano said.

During their neighborhood watch meetings, area residents have seen presentations by the police canine units, Sheriff's Department officers and narcotics officers.

Neighborhood watch programs have grown dramatically over the last year, del Llano said. With about 47 groups last year growing into more than 200 groups citywide.

fine. A repeat offense is a felony with a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

The committee also voted to require that jail officials contact victims of stalking before release of a defendant on bail or bond.

Another recommendation by the committee would prohibit gun shop owners from selling guns to persons with an active protective order against them.

Officials could keep track of the protective orders through creation of a statewide central registry, the committee said. The information would be made available to gun shop owners when they request a criminal history background check under the Brady law.

The committee is expected to make its final recommendations Oct. 31. That report will be forwarded to the Legislature when it meets in regular session in January.

Moncrief said that as violence against spouses and children increases, a number of laws need to be toughened, and that Texas should earmark any extra revenues to shelter services.

He said in urban areas shelters for abused spouses and children are overflowing and understaffed. In rural areas, the shelters don't exist, he said. "There's not only no room at the inn, there is no inn," he said.

Domestic violence incidents have increased from 124,373 in 1991 to 155,767 in 1993, according to the Texas Council on Family Violence.

State Sen. Florence Shapiro, R-Plano, said she hoped the committee's recommendations would make a "bold statement" that "we will accept zero tolerance for violence."

But, she said, the recommendations should always try to preserve the family as much as possible.

State Sen. Royce West, D-Dallas, said judges and law officers need to be trained that family violence "is not something you put on the back burner."

BOOMS: Interest in recreational growth rises

(From 1A)

Midlanders' desire for more recreational facilities were echoed in the community needs survey Midland Introspective 1993.

One recreational facility developer said their planned venture was to capitalize on the findings of the survey.

According to the study, a lack of recreational facilities and programs topped the list of perceived problems affecting neighborhoods.

The need for such facilities seen as a real problem — opposed to perceived — also was a concern among respondents.

"It showed up differently, about No. 6 on the list was affordable recreation, kind of a different issue," said Douglas Heck, director of planning and funds distribution for the United Way of Midland.

Although the survey did not delve into specifics, some assumptions can be made about the finding, Heck said.

"It tells us at least, they would welcome more facilities . . . (But) it's hard to say whether they mean more softball parks or Disney," he said.

In addition, Heck said, he thought — through extrapolation from answers to other questions — that the perceived and real needs concerning recreational facilities were directed at youngsters.

Juvenile delinquency ranked eighth among perceived issues affecting neighborhoods, and social-service workers widely agree that if youngsters had more to do they would get in less trouble, Heck said.

Assistant City Manager Glen Hackler, who acknowledged a "definite" increased interest for recreational facilities by the public and building by developers, said part of the demand relates to the juvenile delinquency issue.

"I think it's a direct correlation of parents wanting to see activities for their kids and the crime problems we've had," Hackler said.

"I think the recreational activities are a response to a lot of idle time," he said. "The most common complaint in communities is there's just not enough for kids to do."

Hackler said commercial interests in recreational ventures also are due to low interest rates and zoning development in the city.

"I think it makes for a good quality of life in our community," he said.

Assistant City Manager Rick Menchaca said the city's development of parks has been in response to catching up with the needs and demands of the public as well as in anticipation of future needs.

One area in particular has been among soccer, baseball and softball associations.

"They've had steady growth over the last seven years," Menchaca said.

STORM: U.S. raids militia's headquarters

(From 1A)

U.S. Special Forces soldier — the second American casualty since U.S. troops arrived two weeks ago.

The wounded soldier was identified as Staff Sgt. Donald M. Holstead of Tampa, Fla., assigned to the 3rd Special Forces Group in Fort Bragg, N.C.

He was making good progress after surgery for a bullet wound in the abdomen, officials said. He is believed to have wounded two of his assailants, who fled and left a trail of blood.

"His prognosis is great," said Lt. Gen. Hugh Shelton, U.S. commander in Haiti.

There was no indication the raid was in response to the shooting.

Rather, it seemed part of a more aggressive effort by the United States to pave the way for the return of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. As recently as Friday, the Americans stood back while FRAPH members shot and killed pro-Aristide demonstrators.

U.S. forces also raided FRAPH headquarters Monday in Cap-Haitien, the nation's second largest city, and detained 75 people, a Pentagon official said in Washington on condition of anonymity.

Troops raided three other sites in Port-au-Prince, including two suspected weapons caches, where they found shotguns, grenades, rifles, pistols and explosives, the official said.

A total of 115 people were arrested in Monday's actions, during which U.S. troops encountered no resistance, he said.

Emmanuel Constant, the head of FRAPH, urged his followers to be calm.

He said the U.S. raids were alienating Aristide's political opponents as well as many in the private sector he needs if he is to pull the country together after he returns by Oct. 15.

If previous U.S. demonstration of reserve disappointed many Haitians, Monday's muscle-flexing went a long way toward repairing the damage.

Gally Droit, a student watching the joyous smashing of FRAPH headquarters in Port-au-Prince and the adjoining Normandie Bar, a FRAPH hangout, was anxious that the world viewed the scene for what it was.

"To get rid of something evil is good," he said. "But we don't want to loot these things. We Haitians are not thieves. This is spontaneous. It is not to steal this material, it is to destroy it."

After letting the people smash and break for an hour or so, a small military patrol returned and took up positions near the FRAPH headquarters.

The raid began in late morning when American troops surrounded the FRAPH headquarters with tanks and Humvees. About 100 Army soldiers were involved in the operation, according to Brig. Gen. George Close. Forty people from the scene remained in military custody later Monday, military spokesmen said.

"Everybody just stuck their hands up and basically just gave up," Close said.

The Americans seized several machine guns and Uzi automatic weapons, as well as machetes, clubs and other weapons. The detainees were searched outside the FRAPH headquarters. A female soldier searched four Haitian women and, in one case, pulled a pistol clip filled with bullets from a bra.

The crowd watched and cheered as 10 bound-and-gagged Haitian police officers were driven away in the back of a truck. The Americans later determined that the police "had no hostile intent" and they were taken to their barracks.

The civilian detainees were kept in custody, however. In a briefing earlier in the day, Shelton had said that Haitians who are detained will be held until they can be turned over to the legitimate government when it is restored.

That could be soon. Under a U.S. agreement with the military coup leaders, they have until Oct. 15 to step down.

BLASTS: Independent oil producers criticize Clinton

(From 1A)

America's oil industry has been in a slump since 1986, when the price of oil, which had hovered around $30 a barrel throughout the early 1980s, fell from $27 a barrel in November 1985 to $11 in July 1986.

The resulting cheap imports of oil caused the loss of an estimated half million jobs.

The association, which represents 5,300 American oil producers, also wrote Commerce Secretary Ron Brown Monday to ask him to rule that imported oil, which is half the nation's oil, threatens the nation's security. If Brown made such an official ruling, the Commerce Department would then be able to impose import fees.

"The IPAA believes that the domestic oil and natural gas industry was and continues to be injured by the high level of oil imports into the United States and that this high import dependence and the vulnerabilities it creates threaten to impair the the national security of the United States," wrote Roy Willis, the association's vice president for government relations.

Willis sent Brown a copy of a recently-published book that charges the Reagan administration engineered the 1986 price collapse in order to hasten the downfall of the Soviet Union, which relied on its oil exports for part of its hard currency needs.

To the extent that the policy "hastened the collapse of the Soviet Union, we can accept the argument that . . . such a result was the paramount national security interest," Willis wrote. But the alleged policy devastated the domestic industry, which now deserves recompense, he wrote.

The book, "Victory," by Peter Schweizer, presents circumstantial evidence and conversations with anonymous sources to support the author's contention that Reagan undertook the policy to damage the Soviets. However, many oil analysts question the theory and say it was more likely that the Reagan administration sought cheap oil to help the overall U.S. economy.

Alcorn's support for Schweizer's theory Monday was an abrupt contrast to remarks last month, when he told a reporter he doubted that undermining the Soviets had much to do with Reagan's oil policies. Alcorn said reading the book caused him to change his mind.

The World in brief

■ Moderate wins Brazilian presidency

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — The man who tamed Brazil's inflation won a lop-sided presidential race Monday, according to exit polls, in the country's biggest national election ever.

Former finance minister Fernando Henrique Cardoso received 45 percent of the vote, according to a poll by the Gallup Institute. His closest rival, socialist Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva, received 25 percent.

The other six candidates polled 17 percent, while 12 percent of voters cast blank or null ballots, according to the Estado de Sao Paulo newspaper, which commissioned the Gallup survey.

■ Prosecutors offer surplus of motives

MEXICO CITY — Lawmakers took the first steps Monday toward stripping the immunity of a fugitive congressman accused of masterminding the murder of the incoming congressional majority leader.

Prosecutors claim the Sept. 28 murder of Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu was plotted by members of his own party, the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI), which has held power in Mexico since 1929.

Ruiz Massieu, the party's the No. 2 man, was slated to head the PRI's congressional delegation in the upcoming session.

Prosecutors have posited a broad array of motives for the slaying, including opposition to political reforms, drugs and vengeance.

■ Monetary fund predicts strong growth

WASHINGTON — The world economy, after struggling through a painful recession and extremely sluggish recovery, is poised to enjoy the strongest growth since the late 1980s, the International Monetary Fund predicted. However, IMF officials warned that world leaders need to correct some of the mistakes of the last recovery period if they are to launch their economies onto a period of sustained growth. That was the assessment as the 179-nation IMF and the World Bank prepared for their annual meetings this week in Madrid, Spain.

■ Serbs choke Sarajevo, U.N. says

SARAJEVO — Sarajevo's main lifeline, its airport, has been closed for 11 days because Bosnian Serbs are refusing to guarantee its safety unless the principle of Serbian ownership of the airfield is established, United Nations officials said Monday.

The demand by the Serbs, who ceded the airport to United Nations control in June 1992, has posed a sharp new threat to Sarajevo and again confronted United Nations military commanders with the issue of how to respond to a Serbian squeeze of the city.

Up to now, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, the commander of United Nations forces in Bosnia, has generally opted for a tactic of patient negotiation with the Serbs. But NATO pressure on him to adopt a tougher stance is growing, the officials said.

■ Plague spread in check, India says

NEW DELHI — Hundreds of schools across this Indian capital are to reopen after Indian health officials announced Monday that the spread of plague across the country had been checked.

"We have reached the point of the curve when the cases will now start coming down," said M.S. Dayal, India's health secretary.

Dayal, who has been the national government's chief spokesman during the crisis, which erupted in western India last month, said that more than 4,500 suspected cases had been reported.

The official death toll is 51, including one death on Sunday in the southern city of Bangalore, a new area to be struck by the disease. Most of the deaths occured at the industrial city of Surat, in Gujarat state. Virtually all the deaths were attributed to a highly contagious form of the disease known as pneumonic plague.

A Delhi administration official said the schools here will reopen today before closing again later in the week for scheduled vacations coinciding with a series of Hindu festivals.

Locks failed, storm ripped ferry door, probe finds

TURKU, Finland (AP) — Banging thunderously in a violent storm, the huge front cargo door of the ferry Estonia was ripped off after its locks failed, letting in tons of water that sank the vessel, investigators said Monday.

The crew probably was helpless to save the ship and the more than 900 people who died in the tragedy last Wednesday, according to a preliminary conclusion based on video images sent up from the wreck by robots.

Eerie images of twisted metal, broken windows, unused lifeboats and even wafting newspapers flickered on a screen as investigators described their findings from the wreck lying 230 feet below the Baltic Sea's surface.

"There's really nothing the crew could've done," said Tuomo Karppinen, a member of the investigatory commission. "It would've been too late."

The nine-member commission still must determine why the locking devices on the 60-ton front cargo door failed. Karppinen speculated there likely was a problem before the ferry sailed out of harbor in Tallinn, Estonia, into the storm, headed for Stockholm, Sweden.

Finnish Maritime Investigator Tuomo Karppinen points to the first pictures from the wreck of the ferry.

Swedish police launched a criminal investigation Monday looking for possible negligence in the disaster, the Swedish news agency TT reported.

Within minutes of the announcement of Monday's findings, five major Scandinavian shipping companies, including the Estonia's owner Estline, said they would weld shut the bow doors of other ferries. The boats could still load vehicles through the stern.

The conclusions Monday confirmed reports by survivors and speculation by experts that the bow door — a visor that swings up to let vehicles disembark — had leaked or broken off from the ship.

"The bow visor has become detached from the vessel as a result of the failure of the bow visor locking devices," the commission said in a statement.

Speaking at a news conference, Karppinen speculated that during the storm, "the bow door opened, swung up and then banged down hard. This may have have happened several times."

The videotape, recorded from images sent up by the two Sea Owl robots, also showed a problem with the bow's inner door, which doubles as a ramp that is lowered to let in vehicles.

Program tries to keep refugee children out of orphanages

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

GOMA, Zaire — One by one, her five children died of cholera and dysentery after she fled with them to Zaire in July.

Suddenly, Illuminee Nyirabazikuyabara was no longer a mother.

Now, in her hut at Mugunga Refugee Camp, she is caring for a 15-year-old girl whose parents were killed in Rwanda. The two are part of a program to prevent abandonment of children, which the United Nations wants to expand.

"After my own children died, she came and sat beside me," said Mrs. Nyirabazikuyabara, a middle-age woman who uses a walking stick.

"When she asked whether she could live with me because her parents had been shot before crossing the border, I said yes. She can help me find water and wood for cooking."

The aim of the program, conceived by the U.S. relief agency Food For The Hungry, is to keep children out of orphanages and help them to stay with relatives, friends or in foster homes.

"It's very important to prevent abandonment ... and give children a family unit to grow up in," said Libby Grasse, a nurse who runs the program in a series of hillside tents.

According to the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, there are more than 10,100 youngsters in children's centers in the Goma area, set up after the biggest refugee exodus in history.

More than 850,000 Hutus fled Rwanda in July after the Hutu government was defeated by Tutsi-led rebels and overran Goma. Some children lost their parents, either through killings or disease, and some became separated from their families in the chaos.

Pope may have strong influence in cardinals' choice of successor

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Despite doubts about his health and his future as a global traveler, Pope John Paul II still has full control over the major decision that will shape the church of the future.

It is the naming of two dozen new Roman Catholic cardinals who will be among the men who will elect his successor. The issue has come into the forefront as the 74-year-old pontiff appears increasingly frail.

During his 16-year papacy, John Paul has named 79 of the 98 cardinals eligible to vote in a conclave to elect a pope. The pontiff has chosen many of those men in his image as a conservative interested in social justice.

It is impossible to predict how the cardinals might vote once locked in to the Sistine Chapel.

But Vatican insiders are certain that the pope will name yet another group of cardinals by the end of the year, a move that will heavily increase the odds that one of "his men" will be the next leader of the world's 950 million Roman Catholics.

The pope is likely to want a successor who would continue his conservative philosophy, holding back demands by some for women priests and any changes in church policy against contraception and abortion.

With death and old age reducing the number of eligible voters, John Paul can name up to 22 under rules set by Pope Paul VI excluding cardinals over 80 from the conclave and setting a limit of 120 on the number allowed to vote.

The once-vigorous John Paul has been beset by illness over the past two years and forced to cut back on his foreign tours, a hallmark of his papacy.

Harriet Nelson, best known as television mom, dies at 85

LAGUNA BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Harriet Nelson, who helped create TV's image of the prosperous postwar family as she raised her own children on "The Adventures of Ozzie & Harriet," is dead at 85.

Mrs. Nelson, who suffered from emphysema, died Sunday of congestive heart failure. She had been hospitalized for several weeks, but asked Friday to return to her home in Laguna Beach, family friend Joe Sutton said.

"I picture her dancing in heaven with Ozzie," Sutton said Monday. "She's wearing her silk gown and he's wearing his tux, and they're dancing up there."

Such elegance is far removed from the Nelsons' TV image. But real life was richer, and harsher, than the sitcom hijinks they played out year after year.

From 1952 to 1966, the real-life Nelson clan — mom, dad, sons David and Ricky — portrayed on TV their version of the simple, untainted middle-class life that reflected how audiences lived, or perhaps wished they could.

With Ozzie as chief producer, director and writer, the show featured gentle humor loosely based on the Nelsons' real life.

Their Hollywood home appeared in the opening credits, and the show's set was patterned after its interior. Viewers got to watch the boys grow up, and in later seasons, their real-life wives played their wives on the show.

"I'm lucky," Mrs. Nelson said in a 1961 Associated Press interview. "How many actresses get the chance to work with their family every day?"

Ozzie Nelson was a bandleader when he married his singer, Harriet Hilliard, in 1935. She had occasionally worked as an actress, notably in "Follow the Fleet" with Fred Astaire in 1936.

She gave birth to David in 1936 and Eric (Ricky) in 1940.

Espy resigns as scrutiny of conduct grows

■ Action comes after most recent accusation that poultry producer gave agriculture chief's girlfriend college scholarship.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy, whose ethical conduct has been under investigation for months, resigned under pressure Monday after it was disclosed that the nation's largest poultry producer gave his 37-year-old girlfriend a $1,200 college scholarship.

The latest accusation follows a swirl of questions that center on Espy's acceptance of transportation, lodging and free sports tickets from large agricultural companies like Tyson Foods, which provided financial support to Patricia Dempsey, Espy's girlfriend.

But other issues have also surfaced centering on whether he improperly charged the government for personal travel to Mississippi, his home state, and billed taxpayers for vehicles he used for personal transport.

The events surrounding Espy's resignation were described Monday afternoon by a senior White House official who was sent to brief reporters in the White House press room. But rather than put the best face on a difficult situation, as is usually the case, the official gave the details of the most recent disclosure concerning the scholarship as well the pressure put on Espy to resign.

President Clinton did not offer his departing agriculture secretary much support, saying Espy's decision was correct. "Although Secretary Espy has said he has done nothing wrong, I am troubled by the appearance of some of these incidents and believe his decision to leave is appropriate."

While White House aides publicly insisted that the agriculture secretary was not forced out, Espy's decision came at a moment when his support at the White House had collapsed. On Friday the chief of staff, Leon E. Panetta, summoned Espy to the White House and gave him little alternative but to leave.

At the meeting, Panetta and Abner Mikva, the White House counsel, described their concerns about Espy's conduct. His resignation was discussed along with the possibility that he might be reprimanded as a result of a White House ethics review to be completed soon.

In the end, Panetta advised Espy to "think about it" over the weekend — a seemingly unmistakable signal that Espy should step aside for the good of the president.

Monday morning, in another meeting with Panetta, Espy said he would resign. Panetta permitted the Agriculture Department chief to stay on to complete a reorganization and as a gesture that allowed Espy to save face because he was not dismissed outright. Espy talked with President Clinton by telephone this afternoon.

At a news conference Monday afternoon at the Agriculture Department, Espy said, "I must personally overcome the challenge to my good name that continues to distract me from my work in the U.S. Department of Agriculture." He said his resignation would take effect Dec. 31.

Sounding weary, he continued: "I have been fighting these charges since February of this year. It seemed as if I was just twisting in the wind. As these allegations continued, the twisting continued and the bough finally broke in my mind."

Espy, a former Democratic congressman from Mississippi, is the second member of the Clinton Cabinet to resign but the first to depart under an ethical cloud. In December 1993, Defense Secretary Les Aspin stepped aside after senior administration officials said Clinton had lost confidence in him.

Espy's standing at the White House plummeted last last week when his lawyer, Reid Weingarten, advised Clinton's aides of new details about the scholarship and Espy's relationship with Tyson Foods, a poultry producer based in Arkansas.

A senior White House official said that a company foundation had awarded Ms. Dempsey the scholarship in the fall of 1993 to allow her to continue her education at the University of Maryland.

"When we found out about it, it obviously raised a matter of serious concern," said a senior White House official

Supreme Court opens new term with high-stakes gambling case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court opened its 1994-95 term Monday by seeking the Clinton administration's views in a high-stakes battle over state attempts to regulate gambling on Indian reservations.

The court won't say until hearing from government lawyers whether it will resolve disputes from Florida and Alabama, two of the more than 20 states in which reservation gambling has become a $6 billion-a-year industry.

Justice Department lawyers, who might take months to respond, are being asked whether they think Indian tribes may sue states for failing to help pave the way for on-reservation casinos and other gaming operations.

The court's first day back from its three-month summer recess created the usual mountain of paper work — the justices issued orders in more than 1,600 cases.

But it was a flurry signifying little for the future of American law, because the court did not accept one new case for review.

The justices had granted review to eight cases last week on an expedited basis, but that's an extraordinarily small amount. In past years, two dozen or more cases had been granted review — setting the stage for future decisions — on a term's first day.

Justice Stephen G. Breyer took an active role in his first full day on the high court bench Monday. He asked detailed questions in two of the three cases in which arguments were heard.

But Breyer disqualified himself from 16 cases in which the court denied review. A court spokeswoman said the justice's action was sparked either by financial interests he has or had, or because he had participated in the cases as a member of the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. She declined to characterize this as either a large or small number of cases for a new justice to abstain from.

In other matters, the court:

■ Steered clear of a dispute from South Dakota over who owns a 65-million-year-old dinosaur's remains, the most complete Tyrannosaurus rex fossil ever found.

■ Refused to revive author Dan Moldea's $10 million lawsuit against The New York Times for a negative review his book received.

■ Rejected a challenge to a federal law that, according to a Virginia hospital and its doctors, requires "inappropriate and unethical" medical treatment in some cases.

Former minister charged in Florida abortion clinic slayings goes on trial

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — With abortion foes both denouncing and commending him, a former minister accused of killing a doctor and his bodyguard went on trial Monday in the first major test of a federal law guaranteeing access to abortion clinics.

Inside the court, the judge seated a jury and then agreed to reconsider his denial of a justifiable-homicide defense for Paul Hill.

Hill, 40, has openly advocated the killing of abortion providers.

The trial is being closely watched by abortion-rights supporters and by opponents who see the clinic access law as an effort to stifle their freedom of speech.

U.S. District Judge Roger Vinson last week refused to allow Hill to argue that the slayings were justified to prevent a greater evil. But on Monday, over the prosecutor's objections, Vinson agreed to give Hill's lawyers a chance to argue their case today before testimony begins.

Assistant U.S. Attorney David McGee argued that allowing such a defense would be an invitation to more violence.

"There are others out there like Paul Hill," McGee told the judge. "They are small in number but they are fanatics. . . . I fear more blood will be shed."

Hill is charged with violating the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances law, enacted earlier this year, in the shotgun slayings July 29 of Dr. John B. Britton and his volunteer escort, James H. Barrett. Barrett's wife was wounded.

AP Laserphoto

Federal marshals escort Paul Hill into U.S. District Court Monday in Pensacola, Fla., to go on trial for charges of violating federal clinic protection and firearms laws.

Hill, a former Presbyterian minister and a frequent demonstrator at the Pensacola clinic, could get life in prison if convicted.

The federal law was prompted by the 1993 slaying of another abortion doctor in Pensacola, Dr. David Gunn. Abortion foe Michael Griffin was convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison.

Hill is also awaiting trial in state court Jan. 30 on charges of murder and attempted murder and could get the death penalty if convicted.

"These children were to be torn limb from limb, then suctioned out of their mothers' wombs," a supporter, Donna Bray, director of Defenders of the Defenders of Life, said outside the courtroom. "Paul Hill's actions saved those babies from being murdered."

But the Rev. Flip Benham, director of the anti-abortion group Operation Rescue, said, "What he did was a sin and murder."

During jury selection, some of the 68 potential jurors said they had made up their minds.

"I am a firm believer in women's rights and I have fought in three wars for them," said Stanley McVea, an Air Force retiree. "I've also formed an opinion in this case."

Pregnant women who continue smoking may predispose daughters to smoke, study says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The daughters of women who smoke during pregnancy — but not the sons — may be biologically predisposed to smoke, a new study contends. It suggests prenatal nicotine "primes" a fetus' brain.

Animal studies have shown prenatal nicotine does affect certain brain activity once the animal is grown.

But scientists never pursued that link in humans because no one had ever found a relationship between children's tendency to smoke and prenatal exposure — until now.

"What this really shows is there may be subtle effects on brain function that won't become apparent until 13, 14, 15 years later," said Dr. Denise Kandel of Columbia University. "It's another reason women shouldn't smoke."

Teen-age girls were four times more likely to smoke if their mothers smoked while pregnant, a risk that remained even when researchers controlled for social influences, Kandel reported in Tuesday's American Journal of Public Health.

Kandel theorized that nicotine, which can cross the placenta barrier, stimulates a fetus' receptors for dopamine, the brain chemical involved with drug addiction. This "priming" may predispose girls to smoke, Kandel contended.

But prenatally exposed boys weren't at risk. Kandel isn't sure why, but suggested male hormones may protect the male fetus.

"It is a very interesting and provocative paper," said Dr. Nigel Paneth, an expert on pediatric epidemiology at Michigan State University. "If this really happens, from a biological point of view . . . that's very intriguing."

But he cautioned that, despite Kandel's controls, the results may mean daughters are simply copying their mothers.

Most research shows children suffer if either parent smokes. Another study in today's journal says even non-smoking mothers bear underweight babies if their husbands smoke 20 cigarettes a day during the pregnancy.

And children do imitate their smoking parents. But Kandel studied 192 New York children for 19 years and noticed children were more likely to imitate their mothers than their fathers.

Simpson judge sets hearing on media blackout

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Angry at the media and leery of sequestering jurors, the judge in the O.J. Simpson case on Monday set a hearing to consider a blackout on news coverage from the courtroom.

In setting the hearing for Nov. 7 — more than a month from now and very near opening statements — Superior Court Judge Lance Ito has put the media on probation, a legal analyst said.

"He is, at least secondarily, using the threat of withdrawal of electronic coverage as a means of keeping the press's feet to the fire and making sure coverage from this point on is, in his terms, responsible," said Douglas Mirell, a lawyer with the American Civil Liberties Union, which opposes removing the pool TV camera in Ito's court.

During pretrial hearings, the judge allowed one TV pool camera and three still cameras in the courtroom, as well as a live audio feed. He is threatening to ban them all.

Ito's statement announcing the hearing was brief, citing only an erroneous TV news report on DNA evidence on bloody socks. He also mentioned televised pictures of jurors in other cases that prompted him to order the removal of the courthouse hallway TV camera last week.

He did not refer to recent news leaks, including some media outlets that obtained copies of the questionnaire given to prospective jurors. The questionnaire was publicly released Friday, once the first pool of potential jurors had completed it.

Ito set a Wednesday hearing on a motion to explore the "source and purpose" of news leaks, which the defense contends are coming from police. The defense motion was filed under seal and no other details were available.

The defense last month called for an attorney general's investigation into the leaks.

News organizations and civil libertarians strongly object to removing cameras from the courtroom.

Poll put politicians on risky hot seat

Politicians had better watch out. Americans are mad, and they aren't going to take it anymore!

At least that's the idea we got from results of a new poll by the Times Mirror Center for the People and the Press. The poll essentially found:

■ Americans are more cynical and less compassionate than they were seven years ago.

■ Many feel strapped for money despite the improving economy.

■ Only 33 percent of the 3,800 adults questioned believe that most elected officials care what ordinary people think.

■ Only 42 percent of the 3,800 adults questioned believe that government is really run for the benefit of all the people.

■ Only 57 percent of the 3,800 adults questioned think it is the government's responsibility to take care of people who can't take care of themselves. That compares to 71 percent seven years ago.

■ A whopping 79 percent believe it's time for Washington politicians to step aside and make room for new leaders, compared to 62 percent seven years ago.

■ An even bigger 82 percent believe the United States should restrict and control people coming into our country more than we do now.

If those figures don't depict Americans in general as fed up with government excuses and politicians' inaction, what do they reflect?

Obviously many Americans are discouraged and disenchanted by a Washington establishment that only presents problems to them without ever seeming to make progress on supposed solutions that millions of tax dollars are spent on. Taxes, meanwhile, only get higher with each new approach to the problems.

Where does it all end?

There's no question that the Times Mirror poll is discouraging and ostensibly accurate. Of course, generalities can be dangerous, but the poll results still paint a vivid picture of an ugly mood out in America.

Pity the poor politicians. They're the ones on the hot seat with the November election just around the corner.

Whom to Write

Following is a list of the names and addresses of various state and federal officials Midlanders may wish to contact from time-to-time:

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

■ Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.

■ They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The shorter the letter, the better its chance of publication.

■ Only one letter per month per writer can be published.

■ Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis.

■ We do not publish 'open' letters or copies of letters sent to others.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702.

Books supply inside story on Clintons

As the electorate aims a swift kick at the pants seat of the Clinton Democrats, the man who started all the uproar finds himself under the literary microscope. Three new books deal with Bill Clinton, his family, and his doings. A thumbnail review:

1. Meredith Oakley's "On the Make: The Rise of Bill Clinton" (Regnery, $24.95) is long and imposing. Oakley, a columnist and editor at the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette, has covered Clinton for 13 years. This is a richly detailed account of his political career in Arkansas and of all that went before.

Murchison

Oakley, a reporter's reporter, plays it about as straight as it can be played. But her book is shrewd and knowing.

There is this tendency in anti-Clinton circles — which seem daily to enlarge — to dismiss the man in the White House as a buffoon; Li'l Abner with a Yale law degree. This is gravely to underestimate a man whom Oakley regards as a brilliant politician.

He wows people. Of his first gubernatorial campaign she writes: "Women adored his boyishness, and men responded to his firm handshake and respectful attitude. When Clinton worked a crowd, he really worked it, shaking each hand and speaking to each person in turn, always on the alert for clues indicating that he and the stranger before him had a person or a place in common." "Defeat," says Oakley, "is not in his lexicon." Her parting word of advice: "The smart money is always on the Clintons."

2. On the other hand, in Deborah J. Stone's and Christopher Manion's "'Slick Willie' II" (Annapolis-Washington Book Publishers, $9.95), we have one Arkansas trooper recounting to another: "You're not going to believe what that stupid S.O.B. has done now." What he'd done, supposedly, just before moving to Washington, D.C., was sneak a woman into the basement of the Arkansas governor's mansion at 4:45 a.m. and there . . . well, anyway.

Just as Clinton's strengths are great, so his failings are immense. These are the stuff of talk radio. And they remind us why virtually no one is neutral on the Clinton Question. Stone has gone around earnestly soliciting defenses of Clinton's performance as president. The responses, she says, rarely rise above the level of give-him-a-chance-won'tcha? Slickness can make the passageways of life easier to negotiate — and the footing harder to maintain.

3. Martin L. Gross, in "The Great Whitewater Fiasco" (Ballantine, $10), gives a thorough and concise account of "the most powerful tale in contemporary American democracy" — which isn't who shot Vincent Foster. It's money, money, money, and how, in Gross' view, it has come to corrupt American politics.

"Whitewater is significant," writes Gross, who is a respected commentator on American government unidentified with the Clinton-bashers, "because it represents American politics as usual — a case of corruption, or near corruption, or conflict of interest, or abuse of ethics by a large number of people in public life."

It's nice to see an intelligent book like this one, speaking to the political science, not just the sexual and criminological aspects, of our great national soap opera, starring the first couple.

A thought pops into mind: Life won't be nearly as interesting when the Clintons are gone. Though, as Martin Gross implies, it can be a whole lot cleaner.

CHARLEY REESE

American sage shares his wit, wisdom

As most of you know, Taoist sages like to remain obscure, if not invisible. But there are some, nevertheless, who live in America. One such is Po Piedmont.

He was born on Cobham Road between the Little River and Brier Creek in northeast Georgia. He has never left the place. He says it is harmonious because the land is neither too flat nor too steep, the weather neither too hot nor too cold, and the humidity neither too high nor too low.

Reese

Few people know him. In fact, I may be the only one, but he has authorized me to share his wit and wisdom for the edification of his fellow citizens. So here is the advice and observations of Po Piedmont, McDuffie County's only genuine Taoist sage:

— Women are like beautiful cats. It is better to enjoy their company than to try to understand them.

— A man who stays in hot water will never get cold feet.

— Never run in a circle or an ellipse. A wise person runs only after something or away from something.

— The most important thing for human beings to remember — and the most difficult — is that they are human beings.

— In an unfortunate shooting incident, the wise person will be considerate of the judge and thus, to avoid confusion and difficult decision-making, will ensure that there is only one survivor to tell what happened.

— At any age, you are old enough for your wants not to hurt you.

— Avoid people with no sense of humor. They have a bad head or a bad heart or both.

— Recent history has proved the truth of the axiom, that in America, anybody can be elected president.

— If you avoid tobacco, whiskey, wild women, dangerous activities, cholesterol, radiation and refined sugar, you will die anyway.

— Those who walk to the edge of Stone Mountain (a rounded mountain of solid granite near Atlanta) receive their final lesson in perspective.

— Many find senility before wisdom.

— The two things Americans handle least well are peace and prosperity.

— Most tools are really toys and most work is really play.

— If you don't know where you're going, at least you won't get lost.

— Wise persons eat when they are hungry, drink when they are thirsty and sleep when they are tired. The rest they do as the opportunity arises.

— The human toe cannot find the spaces between the molecules of a rock.

— Public figures should never believe their own press releases.

— A corrupt people will not see themselves as corrupt but will view the uncorrupt as abnormal and extremist.

— People who expect Congress to reform itself expect to find a leprechaun in their backyard.

— Relatively speaking, the theory of relativity is true.

— The big bang may have created the universe, but who built the bomb and lit the fuse?

— A house divided between those who believe Rush Limbaugh and those who believe Bill Clinton will not be quiet.

— Some people prefer the comfort of being a victim to the hard work of being a success.

— History should be a guidepost, not a hitching post.

— Remembering the past and imagining the future rob a person of life, which can only be lived in the present.

— Eat grits.

Po Piedmont does not claim to be original, as wisdom is one of the first things humans learn to recycle. He is also fond of remarking that the more people become less educated, the easier it is to be sage, though in McDuffie County the competition is still mighty keen in the sage department.

Bush should seize nuclear waste issue

It is to be hoped that when George W. Bush has finished with placating Bubba by pounding his breast on every network, calling for mass incarcerations and Herculean prison-building efforts, he will realize that another Bubba-pleasing issue lies within his grasp. His opponent, Gov. Richards is calling for a compact to import into Texas nuclear waste from Maine and Vermont, not a very popular concept when voters are reminded of it. As the salsa commercial might point out, This ain't no Texas waste; this here is Yankee waste. "Git a rope!" could be that rarest of rallying cries; one which unites "rednecks" and environmentalists in harmony.

Of course, Bush would have more credibility shouting it if he first dumped his adviser Mike Toomey, lobbyist for the state of Connecticut and its $100 million offer to join the compact.

How about it, George? The folks of tiny Sierra Blanca, already dumped on by New York sewer sludge that skated past what Texas laughingly calls environmental regulations, would really appreciate a champion in their fight to avoid becoming the nation's low-level nuclear waste dump as well. Imagine the promo photos you could shoot while assuring those poor, mostly-minority Sierra Blanca inhabitants that they should have a voice in whether or not they have to accept everyone else's toxic waste. On this one issue, you could be a hero AND please the masses.

That is, if you're not already in the pocket of the big nuclear utilities, as our governor seems to be.

Parents need to set limits for children

Parents, do you know where your children are and what they are doing?

At 4 o'clock this morning, I was awakened by our neighbor's dog's incessant barking and by what sounded like screams. After hauling my sleepy body out of bed to see if someone was hurt, I saw four teen-agers having what they considered to be fun. At first they were just talking and laughing in the park across the street. What I saw next horrified me.

Two girls sprawled out on top of a car while the driver and passenger got inside. Then the driver popped the clutch, jerking the car forward, and then sped off around the corner.

Although I was watching this happen, I was powerless to stop it. So I called 911 to report it and knew that the chances of the police catching them were very small.

To you teen-agers, I know you were just having fun and knew you wouldn't get hurt. After all, you trusted the driver. Well, you could have been killed very easily. Yes, even you! Many tragedies happen when people are just having a good time.

Well, parents, I thought you'd like to know what, perhaps, your teen-ager was doing at 4 a.m. I wonder why they weren't home asleep in their beds.

Most parents will say they care what their children do, but show themselves to be indifferent by not checking up on their kids and setting boundaries for them.

There has been much talk recently about mandatory curfews. May I say that there wouldn't be a need for a curfew if all parents enforced rules in their own homes.

Please, parents, warn your children of the possible consequences of such reckless behavior before it's too late. I'd hate to read "Johnny's" or "Susie's" names in the obituary column tomorrow over coffee.

Book is not the Bible for Christian Science

In an Associated Press article by John Marcus that appeared in the Reporter-Telegram on Sept. 19 under the headline "Christian Science Church seizes on upswing in sales of religious books to spread beliefs," the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, was referred to as the bible of Christian Science.

Although I realize that the generic form of "bible" was used, there was no accompanying reference to the Holy Bible in this article; therefore, the inference could be drawn by those unfamiliar with Christian Science usage that "Science and Health. . ." is "the Bible" of our religion. To dispel any confusion on this point, I would like to point out that Christian Scientists use both the Holy Bible (King James version) and "Science and Health. . ." as their textbooks in conducting religious services. The high regard in which this Bible is held within our religion is given in the first Tenet of our Church: "As adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal life." (Science and Health. . .: page 497).

Tired mom

One of 23 piglets delivered by this 600 pound sow snuggles up to its tired mother in Parker, S.D. The sow, who belongs to Gene Kaufman, had two litters 16 days apart, a rare but possible feat. The first litter was 12, the second was 11. The last of the pigs, who are three-weeks-old, were weened from their mother Thursday.

Scientists believe comet impact scars on Jupiter will eventually disappear

By Paul Recer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Dark scars left in the cloud tops of Jupiter by last summer's 21-boom pounding by comet Shoemaker-Levy 9 are slowly fading and scientists now believe all traces eventually will disappear.

"Within a year or two, all of the fallout will fade away and Jupiter will look the way it did before," astronomer Heidi B. Hammel said Thursday at a news conference called by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Twenty-one fragments of the comet smashed into Jupiter during one week in July. The larger pieces triggered immense explosions and send Earth-sized black plumes rising above the tops of clouds marking the edge of Jupiter's gaseous sphere.

Some scientists had speculated that the violence of the collisions was enough to leave permanent marks or cylone-like features in Jupiter's clouds. The planet has a giant red spot, thought to be a permanent storm, and some experts raised the possibility that the comet would create similar marks.

But a team of scientists studying the planet with the Hubble Space Telescope said Thursday that soon Shoemaker-Levy 9 will be but a memory.

"Jupiter is now relaxing back into a normal state," said Hammel, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology scientist who heads a Hubble telescope team. "We don't see anything like the giant red spot."

Hammel said some of the smaller comet pieces "were like poof balls" that disappeared into Jupiter's clouds with only a faint trace. At least one comet piece was so gentle that scientists never detected its impact, she said.

But others, speeding in at 130,000 miles an hour, hit with the force of thousands of megatons of TNT and set off fireballs more than 1,000 miles across. They left behind black marks, some forming a circular shape that resembled a black eye.

Instruments that probe the chemistry of the impact clouds surprised scientists by finding no evidence of water, thought to be a common component of comets, but did find traces of ammonia, sulphur, carbon disulfide and hydrogen sulfide.

Instruments on an Earth-orbiting satellite detected a burst of X-ray energy, thought to have been released when comet fragments sped through the powerful magnetic field of Jupiter.

Data gathered from a study of the impact have raised some doubts whether Shoemaker-Levy 9 was actually a comet.

Emperor penguins have many unexplained stategies for breeding in Antarctica's winter

By Malcolm W. Browne
N.Y. Times News Service

Ever since explorers at the turn of the century surmised that the emperor penguin must breed during the coldest part of Antarctica's deadly winter, this charming but peculiar species has inspired wonder and curiosity.

But after 83 years of penguin watching, scientists are still encountering surprises, including a recent discovery made with a night-vision device that revealed emperor penguins to be even hardier than had been supposed.

Knowledge of the winter behavior of emperor penguins has come slowly because it is hard for human beings to survive under such conditions, much less conduct scientific research.

High winds, temperatures around minus 60 degrees Fahrenheit, round-the-clock darkness and frequent sudden blizzards make the Antarctic habitat of the emperors, the Ross Sea and McMurdo Sound, dangerous places in winter.

In 1911 a trio of intrepid English explorers confirmed the theory that emperor penguins, unlike other birds, do indeed lay and incubate their eggs during the dead of the polar winter.

Two of these brave investigators, Dr. Edward A. Wilson and Henry Bowers, were doomed to die of starvation and exposure with Capt. Robert F. Scott a year later while returning from their ill-fated expedition to the South Pole.

Risking their lives in the darkness by climbing down a 200-foot cliff in a bitterly cold wind, Wilson, Bowers and Apsley Cherry-Garrard succeeded in reaching a midwinter emperor penguin rookery at Cape Crozier on Ross Island.

Collecting five penguin eggs with very young embryos for later studies of biological development, the explorers noticed that the big birds had chosen a spot offering substantial shelter from the wind.

Ever since then, scientists had assumed that all emperor penguin rookeries must be similarly placed, so a recent discovery by Dr. Gerald Kooyman of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography came as a surprise. During a nonstop jet flight last June from New Zealand to the South Pole and back, Kooyman scanned the darkened expanse of sea ice near Ross Island using an image intensifier of the kind supplied to American forces in the Vietnam and Persian Gulf wars.

For human beings, Antarctica is closed to the outer world during the winter months, from March through August, and only in dire emergencies do airplanes from New Zealand or Chile attempt to land on the continent's treacherous ice runways. But each winter the National Science Foundation arranges one flight from New Zealand to airdrop fresh vegetables and mail to the inhabitants of McMurdo and South Pole Stations. Kooyman took advantage of this winter's 13-hour flight to spy on the emperors.

From his perch aboard a KC-10 tanker aircraft 10,000 feet above the frozen sea, Kooyman spotted a cluster of about 7,000 emperor penguins huddled together on sea ice west of Ross Island, a considerable distance from the shelter of cliffs. It was instantly clear that emperor penguins can breed even in the absence of any kind of shelter.

"They were all males, of course," he said, "and each one was presumably incubating an egg."

Male emperor penguins are known to take over the incubation of eggs for nine weeks, going without food the whole time while their mates return to the open sea to fatten up on deep-dwelling fish.

The emperor penguins' strategy for keeping warm in winds of minus 60 degrees Fahrenheit, Kooyman said, is to keep shuffling around and jostling their neighbors, taking care to keep their big eggs wedged between the tops of their feet and their warm, overhanging bellies. The penguins at the exposed periphery of a cluster generally manage to work their way inside after a fairly brief period acting as community windshields.

Scientists do not know how long an emperor usually remains at the exposed edge of a community "huddle," or how rapidly the entire huddle moves. Weather conditions and the stability and thickness of the sea ice on which they stand are believed to be factors.

"So few of these birds have ever been tagged that we have little knowledge of their individual movements," Kooyman said.

"We suspect that movement is weather-dependent; in mild weather with low winds, the huddle probably loosens up, while high winds and low temperatures draw the birds together and increase the speed of their movements. There may also be a learning curve. It may take inexperienced birds a while to learn how to jockey for position."

Both male and female emperor penguins protect their eggs and newly hatched chicks by enveloping them under a fold of body skin. During the first part of the reproductive cycle the mothers must fast, but after eggs are laid, they leave to fatten up.

The males then take over, incubating the eggs and the newly hatched chicks for the nine midwinter weeks. The part of the bird's belly in contact with the egg is bare of feathers to facilitate the flow of heat from the father to his offspring. At the end of their baby-sitting stint, the fathers turn the chicks over to their returning mothers, and go back to sea.

If weather conditions become so severe that a parent's resources can no longer cope with the cold, it abandons the egg to save itself, as it may do under certain other circumstances. All penguin rookeries are littered with abandoned eggs and dead chicks.

In many other ways as well the emperor penguin differs from about 16 other penguin species, whose ranges extend from Antarctica to the equatorial Galapagos Islands. Standing more than 3 feet high and weighing some 90 pounds, the emperors are the largest of all penguins. Emperors and Adelie penguins are the only two penguin species inhabiting the Antarctic continent proper, although other species live among the northern islands of Antarctica.

Adelies breed in the Antarctic spring on densely populated rocky rookeries, and before the summer sun sets in March, at the beginning of the long winter night, the chicks are mature enough to look after themselves. But as early as 1911, investigators realized that emperor penguins had to contend with an unusual reproductive problem: their chicks mature too slowly to permit a normal avian breeding cycle.

Emperors have some other characteristics that intrigue scientists, including their ability to hunt for prey at great depths.

9 years later, divers finally cash in on sunken treasure

By Raymond Hernandez
N.Y. Times News Service

SCARSDALE, N.Y. — Meticulously scouring the ocean floor, James Sinclair and a band of divers found their fortune in a sunken Spanish galleon off the Florida Keys. But nine years later, many of them are still trying to cash in on that historic find.

"The question is what do you do with the treasure once you've found it?" Sinclair said. "You can't put a down payment on a house or buy anything else with pieces of eight."

So this week the adventurers brought some of the buried treasure to Scarsdale, an upscale village that seemed a good spot for selling some of the loot.

By the time the collection was unveiled at Wilson & Son Jewelers on Chase Road, the store resembled a museum gift shop as scores of people — from doctors and lawyers to history buffs and aspiring treasure hunters — arrived to see, touch and buy pieces from the trove of shimmering reales, gold doubloons, a 90-pound bar of silver and other antiquities.

The more than 700 pieces — from hand-carved coral beads to rings of emerald and a crucifix of gold — represent a small fraction of the estimated $400 million in treasure that was recovered July 20, 1985, from the wreckage of the Spanish galleon Nuestra Senora de Atocha.

The flagship of a Spanish treasure fleet that ran into a hurricane after leaving Havana, the Atocha foundered on Sept. 6, 1622, killing 143 passengers and crew members and plunging its cargo — 29 tons of silver and 3,500 ounces of gold — into an underwater grave.

The discovering of the Atocha and salvaging of her treasure were led by Melvin Fisher, a veteran Florida treasure hunter, and lasted nearly two decades.

The pieces at the jewelry store — some simply on display but most for sale — belong to about 50 people, most of them members of the salvage crew. The average share of the bounty that many of these employees got was about one-tenth of 1 percent, which averaged about $200,000. About a dozen longtime hands got a full 1 percent.

In many cases, these employees have tried to hold on to to some of the treasure as keepsakes. But a lot of it has been sold in similar showings across the country as the crew members needed to convert the treasure into cash to support themselves.

As Debbie Brandon, who spent more than two years with the Atocha salvage crew, put it: "We really don't like to sell too much of it because it's like our children; we spent so much time looking for it. We only sell when we have to, like when we have big bills coming up."

Ms. Brandon says that she herself has had to use some treasure to barter. One time, she said, she put up a gold bar as collateral for a loan on a house. On another occasion, Ms. Brandon used a gold coin to buy a sewing machine. "Very few people get filthy rich doing this," she said.

As for the shoppers, a lot more seemed to be looking than buying. By Thursday evening, 18 coins had been sold.

"It's magnificent jewelry with so much mystery behind it," said Stephanie Rusnack of Eastchester, weighing the question of whether she should spend some $2,000 on a 17th century silver coin. "There's an aura about the jewelry that makes you want to own one. But I'm going to think about it."

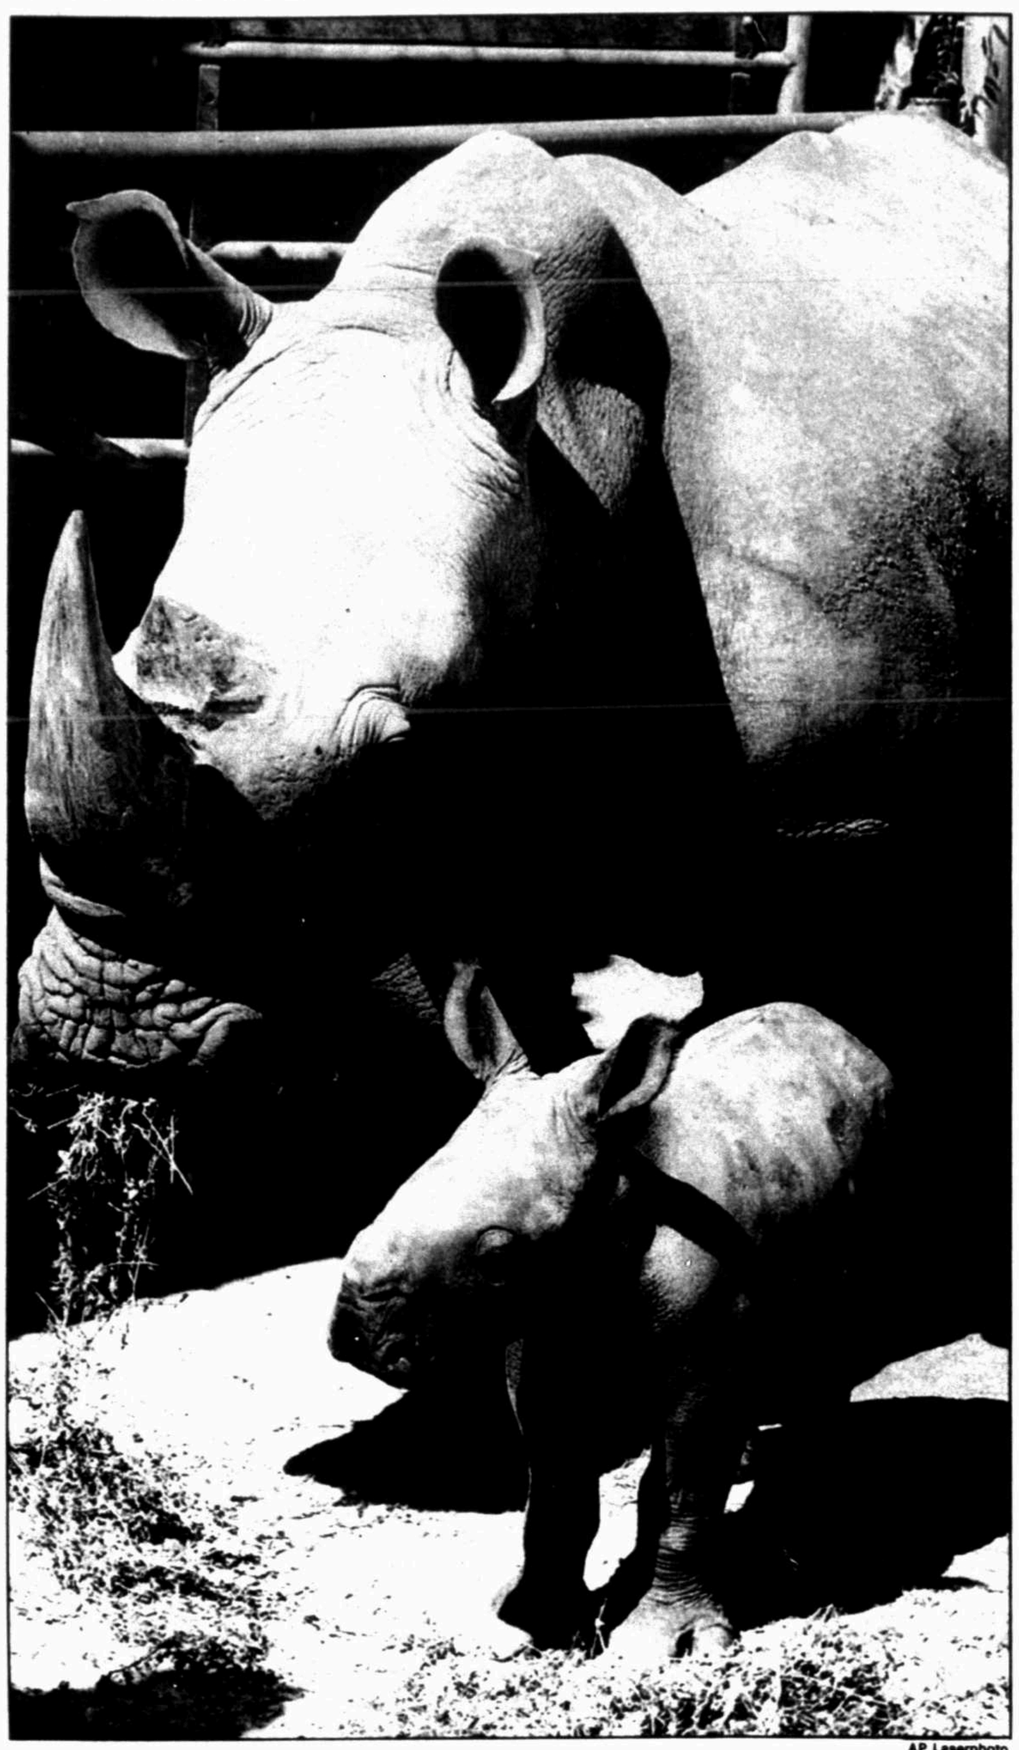

As the lilting sounds of a Spanish guitar were piped in by a speaker, George Tsokris of Bedford searched until he settled on a $720 coin that dated back to the reign of King Philip III of Spain. "I like the idea of owning a piece of history," said Tsokris, who manages a gasket manufacturing plant in the Bronx.

Bob Eggers, who said he had amassed a modest collection of old and rare coins by combing beaches and parks with a metal detector, was just happy to to meet some of the salvage crew.

"The way some people watch TV, I read and study about Spanish fleets," he said. "I've read about some of these guys who found the Atocha. So for me, it's a real treat to meet them. I really envy their life style."

But he said he had no interest in buying any of the coins or other treasures that were laid out under glass cases throughout the shop.

"There's a lot of things you can buy, but not something like this," said Eggers, a groundskeeper for a company in Tarrytown. "It feels too touristy to me. Treasure is something that has to be self-earned. To buy somebody else's treasure doesn't sit right with me."

Electronic age produces Monopoly game you don't have to clean up

For almost 60 years, Monopoly has been the king of board games, with more than 100 million sets sold worldwide.

Everybody knows how to play it. First, clear a space on the dining-room or kitchen table. Then, set up the board and count out the money, sort the houses and hotels and vow that this time you will arrange the title deed cards and the other paraphernalia neatly when you are finished.

Monopoly, from Macplay of Irvine, Calif., is a handsome computer version. You won't lose player markers or run out of hotels, but it is hard to imagine up to eight people gathering around the Macintosh. On the other hand, some of the players can be the computer itself, so you can start a game at 3 a.m. without waking up spouse or sibling.

On the left of the monitor's screen is a smallish representation of the familiar board — Go, Chance and Community Chest, Free Parking, Boardwalk and the rest — and on the right is a window displaying each player's amount of remaining cash, and a running description of the action: "Larry rolls a 9. Larry lands on Free Parking. Mac rolls a 6. Mac collects $200 salary." (In this game, Mac is winning.)

Five menus across the top allow familiar tasks, like opening or saving a game, and game-specific tasks, like arranging a trade or seeing how many deeds are still held by the bank. At the bottom of the right-hand window are a pair of dice on which you click to make the next roll. According to Macplay, 4,294,967,294 different sequences are possible.

The program plays by the standard board-game rules. But you can change the rules if you like, setting a double salary for landing on Go or eliminating auctions of unowned properties, for two examples.

There is an amusing little manual that is hardly needed, but it is full of such odds and ends as the rather astounding assertion that "each year Parker Brothers prints more than twice as much Monopoly money as the United States Mint prints real money."

The game requires a Macintosh, 256 colors or black and white, with 1,000 kilobytes of memory free and System 6.0.7 or later. The suggested retail price is $29.95; the handiest mail-order catalogue, from Macwarehouse, offers Monopoly for $19.95.

It's hard for people who were kids before computers to know whether the electronic version is more fun or less than all those game pieces we used to have.

Most of the business of playing Monopoly or another board game — setting up the stuff, cleaning up afterward — is a mixture of pleasure and pain. But hardly anything could be simpler than doing a crossword puzzle. All you need is a copy of the puzzle and a pencil, or, for the brave, a pen. You can do the puzzle anywhere without a $2,000 machine.

Crossword Wizard is a Microsoft Windows or Macintosh program from the Cogix Corp. of San Anselmo, Calif. There are a couple of puzzles built in, not particularly hard ones that are almost as easy to complete with mouse, cursor and buttons as a paper puzzle is to do with a pencil.

But if you can stand to wait from a few seconds to 10 minutes or so, depending on the size of the puzzle and the power of the computer, Crossword Wizard will juggle its database of words, clues and shapes until it produces a new puzzle for you. And since only nuts . . . that is, real enthusiasts . . . try to construct puzzles from scratch, the Wizard can introduce ordinary people to the distraction. You supply up to six words and clues and the program builds a puzzle that includes them. The final step, for those ambitious or foolhardy enough, is to create an entire puzzle. Good luck.

The Idea Wizard module of Crossword Wizard offers a variety of aids, including definitions and several ways to study word and idea relationships.

Schools rewarded

AUSTIN — Two Ector County elementary schools will share about $18,000 as rewards for student performance improvements in 1993-94, the Texas Education Agency announced Monday.

The Texas Successful Schools Award System provides monetary awards for student gains in the Academic Excellence Indicator System, commonly known as the state's school report card. Awards are based on performance on the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills test and for improvement in attendance and dropout rates.

Monetary awards totaling $5 million will go to 971 schools statewide. This past year, 507 schools shared $20 million in cash awards. Texas Education Commissioner Lionel "Skip" Meno said less money was available for the program this year because legislative appropriations were lower.

In Ector County, Lauro Cavazos Elementary will received $10,657 and Blanton Elementary will get $7,902. Both were recognized for significant gains in performance.

Also, Greenwood High School received a non-monetary award for increased student participation and performance on college admission tests. The increase in the number of schools eligible for awards is another indication that student academic performance in Texas continues to improve, Meno said.

War birds return for CAF AirSho

■ Three World War II aircraft land at Midland International Airport, ending five-month tour.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The heavenly rumblings that foreshadow the Confederate Air Force's AirSho'94 sailed through the azure West Texas sky on Monday when three war birds returned to CAF Headquarters at Midland International Airport, ending a five-month East Coast tour.

"We're happy to be home," said CAF pilot Tom Cloyd, who piloted the CAF's four-engine Boeing B-29 Superfortress, which was World War II's heaviest bomber. "Everybody is getting a little tired. The equipment is beginning to get a little tired."

Flying in formation with the B-29 were the Consolidated Vultee B-24 Liberator and the Curtiss-Wright C-46 Commando.

Just before the flight-of-three's noon arrival, the Grumman-designed torpedo bomber, the carrier-borne TBM Avenger, landed, taxied near the CAF hangar and gracefully folded its wings backward and parallel to the fuselage.

"We are especially glad to have them back safe and sound, both aircraft and crews," Bob Rice, the CAF's executive director, said of the touring threesome.

The aircraft are to be among the 167 vintage war birds at AirSho'94 on Saturday and Sunday at Midland International Airport.

Debbie Lindsay, parent-education manager for the Centers for Children & Families in Midland, advocates praising and encouraging children in helping shape healthy and wholesome individuals.

Midlander tries to prevent children's pain

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Sticks and stones can break my bones, but words will never hurt me.

That old taunting childhood jingle is terribly flawed.

Certainly sticks and stones, if struck with force, can break bones and draw blood.

As surely as an arrow to the heart, words can wound and kill the spirit, the hope, the self-worth, the ambition of a child. Fortunately, there can be healing. But it takes a lot of faith and work.

And one of Debbie Lindsay's jobs as parent-education manager at the Midland Centers for Children & Families is to prevent the pains and the spiritual void in the first place and somehow administer healing.

"A lot of children get their feelings of self-esteem from their parents," Ms. Lindsay said. "And sometimes, if children are called names, the children are going to live out that label. That's sad but true."

"Lazy."

"Stupid."

Fire Department to display safety house during its prevention week

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

The Midland Fire Department will have a chance to showcase its newest safety device during its annual Fire Prevention Week, Oct. 9-15.

The department will have an open house on Oct. 12 for its Fire Safety House, a 28-foot trailer equipped to simulate fire conditions and allow children to practice proper safety techniques in case of a fire.

"This trailer will just reenforce what the children have learned in the classroom," said Assistant Fire Marshal Lon Dominguez. "It will be a three to four hour process at a school, with a short safety speech, then a video, then the trailer."

The trailer has a small living room, fully equipped kitchen and bedroom. In addition, there is a phone to practice dialing 911 and a smoke machine that pumps non-toxic smoke into the bedroom.

The open house is one of several events the department has planned for the week, which is part of National

Police expect new equipment to aid DWI cases

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Those who drink and drive in Midland should take notice of new video equipment purchased for the Midland Police Department that is expected to boost conviction rates for driving-while-intoxicated offenses to near 100 percent.

"We hope this will be a deterrent to keep people from drinking and driving," said Police Chief Richard Czech at a Monday press conference at the Midland police headquarters.

Members of the Midland chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD), in association with the Abell-Hangar Foundation, purchased seven state-of-the-art surveillance cameras for the MPD, explained officer Brian Bogart.

The new cameras are very small and work off only a small fraction of the light needed for the department's five older cameras to work.

"It'll almost see in the dark," Bogart said. "It takes very little light to activate this camera," he said.

Forbes 400 list gives us chance to fantasize about all that money

More rambling thoughts . . .

Ott

— People who have never had children seem younger than those who are the same age but have had kids.

— Perhaps that shouldn't be surprising. Children will age a person.

— "Pastoral" is a pretty word.

— Barbed wire fences add to a rustic scene.

— I've never known anyone who has switched sides on the abortion issue, regardless how strong an argument another person might make.

— Once a person has determined his position, it's pretty much that for life.

— For that matter, I've known very few people who have changed their mind on ANY political issue as the result of an argument with another person.

— Usually they grow further and further apart.

— We all like to look at the Forbes list of 400 richest people in the world and fantasize ever so briefly about what it would be like to be that wealthy.

— Then we come back to reality and try to determine if we have enough money to go grocery shopping after work.

— The recipes on those TV cooking programs always look so simple, but when I attempt them, they invariably turn out to be disasters . . . and so does the kitchen.

— Although there are many bossy people in this world, very few of them make effective leaders.

— That's because there's more to leading than just telling others what to do.

— I like sweater weather.

— You know you're in for a bad day when you wake up at 4 a.m. and can't go back to sleep because you're worrying about everything that awaits you at the office later that morning.

— Is Jimmy Swaggert still doing his thing these days? In other words, is he still crying for the TV cameras?

— It must be quite a gift to be able to cry on cue.

— Sometimes we try too hard to figure out why a particular person is bad. Let's face it, some people are just plain rotten, and it doesn't matter what their upbringing was like. They're never going to change.

— Like most Americans, I'm terribly impressed with Colin Powell, but if, and when, he chooses to enter the political arena, every blemish — both personal and professional — will be made public, and his shining star, which is so bright right now, will be tarnished.

— It happens to everyone.

— You almost want your heroes to stay on the sidelines, so they can avoid the inevitable scrutiny.

— A sad note: Gary Larson, creator of the cartoon, "The Far Side," has announced he will retire at the end of the year.

— It's too bad that quaint little out-of-the way restaurants eventually become well-known by the general public and, as a result, are no longer quaint little out-of-the-way restaurants.

— And, today's final quote comes from former football great and legendary late-night carouser Bobby Layne, who, when asked how he could stay up so late at night and still rise so early in the morning, said, "I sleep fast."

RETURN: Three WWII aircraft end their five-month tour

(From 1B)

Gates to the show open at 7:30 a.m. and close at 5 p.m. both days. The flight line will be open for viewing aircraft from 7:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Flying routines and acts, including aerobatics and air-power demonstrations by World War II fighters, bombers, transports and trainers, will be held between 11:30 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Admission to AirSho'94 is $8 for adults and teen-agers and $4 for children between ages 6 and 12. Admission for children 5 and under is free.

Flights by high-tech military jet aircraft, including the ultra-sonic Lockheed F-117 Nighthawk, the Rockwell International B-1B bomber and the McDonnell-Douglas F-18 Hornet, are to be held between 3 p.m. and 4 p.m.

AirSho'94 will be the 31st annual rendition of the CAF's air-power demonstration since "the outfit" was founded in 1957 by a band of Texas pilots, including crop-duster Lloyd Nolen, who was a World War II aviator.

The CAF began with one aircraft, a North American P-51 Mustang, and today has grown to a fleet of 136 war birds.

The CAF's mission is to restore and fly those rare remnants of America's World War II aircraft, noted B-29 crew-member Scotty Alcorn of Midland.

"We don't promote war," Alcorn said. "We promote the history and the brave young men who flew these planes."

The CAF's two-hour air-power demonstration this Saturday and Sunday is to include scaled-down re-enactments of air battles and missions, including Claire Chennault's Flying Tigers in battle with the Japanese Zeros over China; the Dec. 7, 1941, Japanese attack of Pearl Harbor; the Battle of the Coral Sea; Battle of Midway; flying 'The Hump'; the Normandy Invasion; and B-29 raids over Tokyo.

Throughout this week, CAF war birds and privately-owned wartime aircraft will be flying into CAF headquarters for the weekend event.

And CAF mechanics will be fine-tuning the war birds, including the B-29 Superfortress, "Fifi," which apparently developed engine problems on its Monday noon landing in Midland.

The 18-cylinder, 2,200-horsepower No. 2 engine developed an oil leak, noted Cloyd.

"It just seems like every time we fly, something happens," Cloyd lamented.

The new No. 2 engine was put on before the 50-year-old bomber took off for its five-month tour in late April.

"We still had a few little problems, which we worked on along the way," Cloyd said. "We got most of them cured, but it's like any big airplane. This engine (No. 2) was running fine, but just on touchdown, something gave way" and oil started dripping and pouring from the engine.

"You think you've gotten everything taken care of and this thing (group of 'gremlins') just reaches up and bites you again."

During World War II, imaginary "gremlins" were blamed for mechanical failures in aircraft.

"And that's why we have our mechanics with us, keeping them with us all year," Cloyd said. "If we didn't have good maintenance, we wouldn't be flying these things."

B-29 mechanic Donald Davis said the Superfortress, for all of its power and might, was "basically built as a disposable airplane. The engineers didn't get time enough to work out (efficient) ways to work on the airplane. This one is a 'bear' to work on."

Bob Freemen, CAF tour director, who was a B-29 flight engineer in China-based raids over Japan in 1944 and 1945, said flying in peacetime is "a lot more fun" than wartime flying. "There's no one shooting at you."

Bill Wilson, who piloted the twin-engine C-46 on the tour, said the Commando "doesn't cut you any slack because of the tail-wheel back there and the big vertical stabilizer. You've got a lot of area for the wind to blow against. And it always wants to weather-vane into the wind on takeoffs and landings like any tail-wheel airplane, but more so. It's like a big sail up there."

The C-46 gained fame in flying "The Hump" — the Himalaya Mountains — in the war's China-Burma-India Theater of Operations.

Flying the B-24 Liberator on the tour was "a real thrill for me," said Dick Markgraf, a Colorado-based Boeing 747 jumbo-jet pilot for United Airlines.

As a heavy-bomber, the B-24, like the famed Boeing B-17 Flying Fortress, was a widely-used workhorse during much of the war in the European Theater and in other theaters of operation.

The B-29 was assigned to the Pacific Theater.

But the B-24, which, at 18,000 production copies was the highest-produced heavy bomber in the war, had notorious problems.

"It had a lot of fuel-leak problems in the airplane. A lot of them blew up in flight," Markgraf said. "The old-fashioned motors and generators put out sparks once in awhile, and the airplane would fill up with gasoline fumes, and everyonce in awhile, one of them would blow up in flight."

Still, the old B-24 Liberator, like the other war birds in the CAF, is part of America's aviation lore and history.

PREVENT: Lindsay also works with other parenting groups

(From 1B)

However, "If parents think their children are wonderful, they are going to act that way."

Parents ought to notice and encourage positive behavior.

If a child works diligently in school and earns a "C" grade, the child ought to be complimented and encouraged. The same goes for students whose work level is judged to be at the "B" or "A" level.

The student is not the grade. Rather, the grade only reflects the quality of work as judged by another — the teacher or mentor.

"Praise is important," Ms. Lindsay said, "but encouragement is more important. A child may work hard and only get a 'C'." But the child is "doing the best he can."

Ms. Lindsay, 43, a wife and parent herself, experienced a "good childhood" in her native Montana even though her parents were divorced. She had a "lot of support" and interaction with her family and "extended family."

"I love being a parent."

In encouraging children, it is good to be specific and to compliment a child's performance and talent.

For instance, a parent, teacher or friend may tell a child, "I like the way you keep trying at soccer practice even though you had a hard time kicking the ball (properly)."

Perseverance works wonders.

"If we praise the end product, that's OK," Ms. Lindsay said. "But they (children) need encouragement along the way.

In her career, Ms. Lindsay works in the Effective Parenting Information for Children (EPIC) school program in teaching children "at a young age about parenting."

Ms. Lindsay also heads up the Parent Partners program and Parents Anonymous.

"We are teaching them (in EPIC) about rules, rights, and responsibilities, in general, to be effective members of society. Those things are basic to being an effective parent."

But some children are burdened by their familial experiences.

"They only saw the way their parents raised them."

And those ways may have been abusive even if the parents loved their children.

"Some parents were raised in homes where they were punished for everything ("bad") they did," Ms. Lindsay said.

The children of those parents, when they become parents, may continue the cycle unless it is checked.

"You don't get a license to be a parent," Ms. Lindsay said. "All we know is the way our parents raised us. They were our parenting models."

In Parent Partners, Ms. Lindsay helps parents set up family rules and "family-nurturing" hours.

"The 'big thing' is communication and honest communication," Ms. Lindsay said. "Sometimes parents don't know how to listen."

For example, if a child declares, "I hate school," the parent ought to acknowledge: "'You are really feeling you hate school today. What happened?'"

Perhaps someone took the child's lunch money, Ms. Lindsay said, or perhaps the child was embarrassed because he or she "didn't know the answer" to a question in class.

What's worse, Ms. Lindsay noted, is when children somehow get their "feelings hurt" at school and then go home where they "get more of it (abuse)."

"What hope does he have?"

Regardless of a child's adverse situation, "I've felt like every problem can be solved someway."

And in encouraging children, Ms. Lindsay said there is "praise for being."

A parent will love a child "no matter what.

"No matter what a child does, we love him," Ms. Lindsay said. "Parents' love should be unconditional. No matter what they do, you still love that child."

DWI: Groups buy new video equipment for police department from the arrest scene boosts conviction rates considerably. At a recent MADD conference in Fort Worth, an attorney there said a videotape is worth more in a courtroom than all other possible evidence combined, said MADD member Bill Basil.

When a person is arrested for DWI, there are cameras at the police station that document the individual, but often these are not as conclusive as tests for intoxication done at the scene.

"We've got a significantly higher conviction ratio with DWI video in the streets," Bogart said. "A lot of times, after a person has been arrested and handcuffed ... and gets some adrenaline flowing, he does a lot better," he added.

Four of the seven new cameras will be permanently mounted in patrol cars, and three will be portable units, which can be set up in any cruiser in a short amount of time, Bogart said.

Local MADD members approached the Abell-Hanger Foundation with the idea of funding the camera purchases, Basil said. After looking at the MADD proposal, foundation administrators decided to fund the purchase of the $2,300 units for $25,000 total cost, said Bob Leibrock of the AHF.

"The trustees of the Abell-Hanger Foundation are pleased to be a part of this program," Leibrock said.

With this camera purchase, the total number of DWI cameras in Midland County increases to 21. Thirteen of these are in MPD vehicles, four are in Sheriff's Department vehicles, three are in Department of Public Safety cars and one now belongs to the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission office in Midland, Basil said.

The new cameras are extremely small and hang from the inside roof of police vehicles without causing vision problems like some of the older cameras did, Bogart said. The cameras are operated from a remote control, and video is viewed in the field through small LCD (liquid crystal display) screens.

Czech thanked the AHF representative and MADD members present, saying they have been an "immense" help to the department.

Marvin Moore of the Midland County Attorney's Office, where most of the county's DWI cases are prosecuted, echoed those sentiments.

Czech one day hopes to see all police cars equipped with such cameras, but admits that day is still in the future.

In other cities where the cameras are used, DWI conviction rates run almost 100 percent, and it is hoped Midland will soon fall in line, Bogart said.

How To End Drain And Septic Problems

When your pipes were new, they were clean inside like the pipes in Fig. 1. In time, gook can accumulate to make your pipes look like the ones in Fig. 2. This build up is the cause of slow running and clogging drains.

Well, now there is a product that is guaranteed to completely clean your pipes, and eliminate this build up, when used as directed. This product, call Bio-Clean, actually digests grease, hair, soap film, and food particles. It cleans your entire pipe - even the top and sides! And Bio-Clean will keep pipes open when used regularly.

SEPTIC SYSTEMS

The major cause of septic problems, in properly designed systems, is a lack of bacteria to break down the incoming waste. When undigested waste fills up your tank, it can flow into the drain field pipes; causing back ups, odors and standing water.

Bio-Clean puts an end to these problems once and for all. It contains a specially selected strain of bacteria. They break down waste much faster than the organisms found at random in septic systems. These bacteria will digest approximately 60 times their weight of waste each hour! As this waste is destroyed, so are the problems it causes - we guarantee it. But you don't have to have problems to use Bio-Clean. It works great as a septic starter, too.

SAFETY

Bio-Clean is 100% safe for people, pets and all types of plumbing - even garbage disposals and plastic pipes! It contains no acid, lye or solvents. It generates no heat or poisonous fumes.

Fund-raiser takes a fashionable turn

By Linda Anderson
Staff Writer

Hundreds of Midlanders discovered that you really can combine business with pleasure, as they filled the various rooms at Midland Country Club noon Monday to attend Children's Service League's benefit luncheon and fashion show.

The 14th bi-annual event, which alternates years with Beefeater's Ball, is a fund-raiser for Midland Cerebral Palsy Center.

According to information from Children's Service League, "The center, located at 802 Ventura Drive, receives no city, county, state or federal funds and is maintained and operated wholly through contributions received from interested individuals and groups. The Cerebral Palsy Center serves children with cerebral palsy and other related neurological disorders in Midland and surrounding West Texas counties. The center serves approximately 500 children each month for care and treatment at no charge."

In 1956, the CP Center "opened its doors as a non-profit organization serving cerebral palsied children in Midland and surrounding West Texas counties," CSL information states. Originally the center served 25 children and had a staff of one — a physical therapist. Today the center serves hundreds of children with many conditions. "The types of handicapping conditions served was enlarged to include those children, ages 0-21 years, having a neurological or orthopedically handicapping condition." The center, which moved to its present location in 1974, was enlarged in 1978 and 1982, and currently has 15,000 square feet under one roof.

The CP Center provides children with such services as evaluation by orthopedists, pediatricians, neurologists and dentists; arranging surgery if necessary; physical therapy; occupational therapy; speech therapy; aquatic therapy; hippotherapy; outdoor learning center; and educational programs.

Funding for these and other services are raised by events such as the fashion show — in even-numbered years — and Beefeater's Ball. "A support group, the Midland Cerebral Palsy Center Parents Association, provides equipment, reading material, the hippotherapy program and other needs for the Center," the information states.

This year, the CSL benefit luncheon and fashion show began with luncheon of chicken and pasta, mixed vegetables, fruit cup and layer cake.

The fashions, worn by male and female models who moved from room to room and table to table, were from Swartz.

Colors included muted earth tones to vivid jewel tones. Fabrics included silk, wool, cashmere and leather.

Formal wear was glittering with beading, rich with velvet and lace, or as classic as black tie.

CSL hopes to raise $15,000, said officers of the organization, from this year's benefit luncheon and fashion show.

Special sponsors were Jean Allen, Mrs. Larry Bell and Mrs. Mark Withrow; Mrs. Herbert Blankinship and Mrs. Carroll Grafa, Mrs. Jack Brown, Mrs. Leonard Busby, Mrs. David C. Cotner, Mrs. Allen Cowden, Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr., Mrs. Roy Davidson, Mrs. C. Clyde Hamblin, Mrs. James C. Henderson, Mrs. William W. Henry and Mrs. Paul L. Morris, Mrs. Thomas P. DEAR ABBY

Letter from Memphis loses something in the translation

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I appreciate your running my letter to you a few weeks ago, but my friends and I were quite surprised to learn I had moved from Memphis to Nashville. I have lived in Memphis for many years. All kidding aside, since both cities are so well known, it is probably easy for West Coast people to switch them, but I still live in Memphis.

Van Buren

There was, however, a more serious error in the column. I sent you a familiar quote from the author, David Elton Trueblood, not Fineblood, which pointed out that man is the only animal who laughs, weeps, etc. I'm wondering how "Trueblood" became "Fineblood." I'm sure many of your readers will correct you, but let me be the first. — ARTHUR H. PRINCE, MEMPHIS

DEAR ARTHUR: I know you live in Memphis; you and I have corresponded for many years, but how Memphis became Nashville is a mystery to me.

Even more mysterious is how "Trueblood" became "Fineblood." I still have my original letter which reads "Trueblood" ... so there's no blood on my hands. Obviously, somebody goofed, and until (and unless) the goofee 'fesses up, the buck stops here.

DEAR ABBY: A few months ago, you had a column showing how inexpensive everything was in the '20s and '30s.

My mother was a packrat — she saved everything. I took after her in that respect, as you can see. I am enclosing a bill from the Ohio General Hospital in Wheeling, W.Va. It is for Room, Board and Care from Jan. 24, 1918, until Feb. 7, 1918. The bill was for the use of the operating room, materials used in the operation and aesthesia. (The room cost $2.25 per day.)

As you can see, it is marked "Delivery Room" — so it was the bill for my delivery. The total bill came to $39.50. — WILL H. BARNHART, RANCHO CUCAMONGA, CALIF.

DEAR WILL BARNHART: Since you have celebrated 76 birthdays, I would say your parents got a bargain. Congratulations.

DEAR ABBY: I read your column every day. I often think to myself, "I should write Abby about that" ... but then I never get around to it.

The letter today about the difficulty some older people have in hearing the telephone ring, and getting to it while it is still ringing, inspired this letter.

Each year just before Christmas, you get letters saying, "I don't know what to get Grandma, or Uncle Bill, or Aunt Betty." How about a cordless telephone? They are reasonably priced, and most of them have volume controls for the handset, and some for the ringer. Some even have a pager/finder tone so the phone can be located if misplaced. — DAWN SCHRAMM, MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR DAWN: Just when I think I'm out of ideas for Christmas (or Hanukkah) gifts — comes the Dawn.

Thank you for an excellent gift idea.

DEAR ABBY: Whoa, Nellie! The people who are offended at "There you go" are missing the meaning. It is not a substitute for "Thank you," but rather a response to the unexpressed "Thank you"; the clerk or teller has just performed a service, and is saying "You're welcome," or, "I'm happy to serve you." It is comparable to the French "Je vous en prie," the Italian "Prego" and the German "Bitte." All carry the same meaning as "Here you go" and are used the same way.

"Thank you" would be inappropriate. It would be the proper response for the service just received. — THOMAS CALDWELL, S.J., MILWAUKEE

YOUR HOROSCOPE

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Look for ways to increase your income. Therapy may be the best answer to a parent-child problem. Speak from the heart. A family reunion could put you in touch with old friends. Extend an invitation. A special legacy will bring extra cash early in 1995. Romance gets another chance to blossom. A change of residence is possible by next July. Make sure an employee is discreet about your plans.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Charlton Heston, actress Susan Sarandon, singer Patti LaBelle, author Anne Rice.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Politics could be part of today's plan. Give someone a strong incentive to climb on your bandwagon. Make certain that you are up to speed on the issues. A thoughtless comment could hurt your image.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Bypass both bankers and creditors today. Borrowing money now could jeopardize joint assets. Where a difficult relationship is concerned, only the truth will set you free.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Complete current projects before taking on any new ones. A friend's reputation may be under attack. Do not waste a minute in coming to this ally's defense! Joint efforts will be richly rewarded today.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Align yourself with those who share your long-range goals. Accounts and budgets deserve close scrutiny. Your mate or business partner may be more optimistic than the situation warrants.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You would be wise to take a backseat to your partner now. A younger person will play a major role in a shared success. For peace of mind, curtail spending! Luxuries can wait.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Individual achievement is closely linked to a positive attitude. New trends make cooperation easier to obtain at your place of employment. You may need a respite from a relatives' questions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The emphasis now is on getting both the professional and personal aspects of your life better organized. A financial decision is made in your favor. You are in the driver's seat!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Have more faith in your intuition. Your judgment is sound. A new personal relationship gives you fresh hope for future success. Put your best foot forward at a community or club meeting. Welcome constructive suggestions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An atmosphere of understanding and cooperation is needed at home. Ask loved ones to help reduce the strain on a budget. Answering overdue letters brings a feeling of accomplishment. Review monthly bills for possible errors.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A good day for catching up on routine tasks and paperwork. An imaginative approach helps you solve a tricky problem. Financial matters are easier to handle than in the recent past. Heed your intuition.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Although life at the office may not be particularly rewarding now, your loved ones make your efforts seem very worthwhile! A romantic relationship may have a hidden weakness. Protect your reputation by being discreet.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You have a new sense of purpose and commitment following a period of restlessness. Be certain to lock your doors and protect your valuables when traveling. Learn more about classical literature and the arts to broaden your background.

Opening lead: Five of ♣

What was contract bridge like in its formative years? Recently we came across this deal, described by one Frank Walker under the title The Surprise Attack, published in 1934. We quote verbatim:

"A surprise attack of inspired conception was made by the West defender in a recent duplicate game. His reasoning was flawless and while the criticism might be advanced that such a hand comes up but once in the proverbial blue moon, when it does arise it spells the difference between victory and defeat.

"West decided that no normal opening lead would make a dent in the preponderance of honor-tricks and distributional values held by his opponents. If South's club values were solid, the grand slam would probably be a laydown. But, and the scheme began to formulate, if East held a club honor, the unimportant-looking knave in his own hand might attain some significance after all. Whereupon he led the five of clubs. East went up with the queen, and South won with the ace.

"Ensued five rounds of spades, two of hearts and three of diamonds, and South found himself in dummy after the 11th trick, with two clubs in dummy and the king and ten in his own hand.

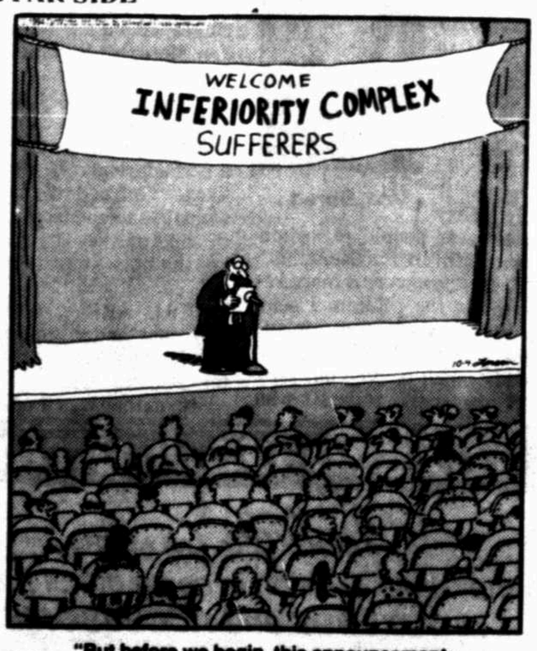

"The opening lead had plainly placed East with the queen, knave and the deuce of clubs (when East followed with the deuce to trick 12) and declarer finessed the ten with all confidence. West won with the knave and cashed a diamond for a set of two.

"It is interesting to speculate what would have happened had East thrown away that vital deuce of clubs while in the throes of discarding."

Book claims Princess Di, army officer had five-year love affair

LONDON — It's called "Princess in Love" and Britons snapped up 75,000 copies Monday, the first day of sale for the scandalous new book about Princess Diana.

Its claim that Diana pursued an affair with Army Maj. James Hewitt, her riding instructor, has brought new humiliation to Britain's royal family. There's talk that under a 14th century law, the major could face the gallows if he indeed had sex with the princess.

But Hewitt, who went into hiding Mohday, is far more likely to lose his friends and reputation within the British establishment than his head.

"One thing a gentleman does not do is mention in public the name of a woman he is having an affair with," said Dame Barbara Cartland, the popular romance novelist and a former step-grandmother of Diana.

"People only want to buy this book because it is nasty. . . . If we are not all careful we shall lose the royal family."

"Princess in Love," the subject of intense gossip when it hit the shelves Monday, alleges that Hewitt first made love to Diana in 1986 at a Kensington Palace dinner while Prince Charles was away.

The affair ended in tears five years later, the book said, after Hewitt returned from serving as a tank commander in the Persian Gulf War and found that Diana, wife of the heir to the British throne, was afraid to take "any more chances."

Diana, now 33, and Charles, now 45, formally separated in December 1992.

Buckingham Palace spokesmen dismissed the book by freelance journalist Anna Pasternak as "cheap and grubby." Londoners and gossip hounds lapped up the book at $23 a copy.

NEW YORK — Danny Glover, Shaquille O'Neal and Johnnie L. Cochran Jr. are putting their money where the Pepsi is.

The actor, the basketball star and the celebrity lawyer are among more than a dozen prominent blacks to invest a combined $15 million in Pepsi-Cola International's bottling venture in South Africa.

The announcement Monday came as President Nelson Mandela of South Africa made his first visit to the United States since taking office in May.

Glover, who portrayed Mandela in an HBO movie, said it's time "open up our checkbooks and put our money where our mouth is."

Pepsi announced in June that it planned to reenter the South African market. It left in 1985 in response to international sanctions over apartheid.

Pepsi will own 25 percent of the venture. A U.S. partnership owns the rest.

In addition to Glover and O'Neal, the investors include financier Calvin Grigsby and Motown Record executives Clarence Avant and Jheryl Busby.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The cartoonist who drew cows in singles bars and bacteria with family lives says he will retire from drawing "The Far Side."

Gary Larson says 15 years of drawing the offbeat cartoon is enough. He said he is tired and fears "that if I continue for many more years my work will begin to suffer or at the very least ease into the Graveyard of Mediocre Cartoons."

The comic, which is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate to nearly 1,900 newspapers, will appear for the last time Jan. 1.

Larson took an extended vacation from October 1988 to January 1990, but this time he's retiring for good, said Jake Morrissey, an associate editor at Universal Press. "He is going to wave goodbye and walk away."

Larson, 44, will continue to work with Universal Press on several projects, including "The Far Side" books, calendars and greeting cards.

In 1991, Larson received the Reuben Award for Outstanding Cartoonist of the Year from the National Cartoonists Society, which named "The Far Side" the best syndicated panel in 1985 and 1987.

NEW YORK — CNN correspondent Christiane Amanpour, with hot-spot reporting from Bosnia, Somalia and the Persian Gulf to her credit, will be honored for courage in journalism from her latest assignment, Haiti.

Agriculture commissioner candidate stops in Midland

Staff Report

Gregory

Democratic candidate for Texas agriculture commissioner, Marvin Gregory, said if elected he will be an advocate to farmers in addition to managing the regulatory aspects of the agency.

Gregory — on the campaign trail in Midland Monday — challenges Republican Rick Perry, who has held the office since January 1991.

'I understand the people issues. He (Perry) is backed by agribusiness and chemical companies.'

— Marvin Gregory
Democratic candidate

Gregory claims Perry is more interested in using the position as a political stepping stone rather than concern for Texas farmers and ranchers.

"I understand the people issues," he said. "He (Perry) is backed by agribusiness and chemical companies."

If elected, Gregory said, he'll reform the Texas Agriculture Finance Authority Board and loan process; restore the commission's district offices to better serve farmers; and be dedicated to being an advocate of family and rural farmers.

Gregory cited his experience as a farmer and his service on various agricultural-related and community-service boards as further qualifications to be agriculture commissioner.

Crime Prevention Month.

Fire Prevention Week was started by former President Warren Harding in memory of the Great Chicago Fire that started on Oct. 8, 1871. The fire, which burned for 24 hours, killed at least 300 people and caused extensive property damage.

The Fire Department will also conduct its annual Fire Prevention Poster contest for all students in Midland. This year's theme is "Test Your Detector For Life."

"We are trying to emphasize testing your smoke detectors and keeping them in working order," Dominguez said. "It is one of the biggest tools in fire safety."

The contest is held in all schools, with three winners in five divisions: special education, primary, intermediate, junior high and high school.

First place winners will get a $50 government savings bond and a trophy. Second place will receive $15 in cash and a ribbon. Third place will receive $10 and a ribbon.

Winners will be picked by five judges on Oct. 7, and an awards ceremony will be conducted on Oct. 12 at the department's central station, 1500 W. Wall St.

The awards ceremony will be conducted in conjunction with the safety trailer's open house.

The department will also set up its No. 2 fire engine in the Midland Park Mall during Fire Prevention Week and have a display with items retained from fires and items that have started fires.

RELEASE: Official street date for 'Jurassic Park' is today

(From 1B)

Park" against the wishes of the film's distributors, MCA/Universal.

"We set Oct. 4 as the street date for 'Jurassic Park,' " according to Maria LaMagra, vice president of publicity for MCA/Universal's home video entertainment division in Los Angeles. "It is very unfortunate as well as upsetting that retailers across the country have broken street dates for 'Jurassic Park.' "

When asked if retailers would in some way be reprimanded for breaking the embargo on the movie, Ms. LaMagra would only say, "We are evaluating the issue and how to address it for the future."

When asked why she thought so many retailers chose to break the embargoed release date, Ms. LaMagra said, "I guess the anticipation is just too much for some people to handle."

Although it is not known for certain who first broke the release date locally, a spokesperson for Musicland at Midland Park Mall said last Friday the local Albertson's grocery store chain began selling the movie last week. The Musicland spokesperson said once that chain learned of others selling the movie, all Musicland outlets locally were informed to begin selling the movie.

Ms. LaMagra said no retailers have been given the green light to sell the movie by MCA/Universal, despite widespread outbreaks of early sales. Ms. LaMagra would not speculate on how many markets the movie was prematurely for sale in, but did say during one 10-minute period late Monday she had taken 25 phone calls on the subject.

Local Albertson's officials declined to comment, but corporate spokesperson Keri Parks said late Monday that she had not yet been fully informed on the matter and was not prepared to make a statement. The chain, headquartered in Boise, Idaho, will begin looking into the matter today, Ms. Parks said.

According to box-office figures from the summer of 1993, "Jurassic Park" is the most popular movie of all time. Directed by Spielberg, the movie stars Sam Neill, Laura Dern, Jeff Goldblum and Richard Attenborough.

Female booted

DURHAM, N.C. — Better send that script of "Necessary Roughness II" back to the rewrite department.

Duke first-year student and would-be kicker Sue Mercer failed in her bid Monday to become the first female to play for a NCAA Division I football team, Blue Devils coach Fred Goldsmith said Monday.

Unlike the fictional character played by Kathy Ireland in the movie "Necessary Roughness," Mercer won't make the team as a walk-on. She will be offered a spot as a special teams manager, he said.

"She's not where she needs to be to kick at this level of football," Goldsmith said.

Steelers strike down Oilers

■ Pittsburgh hangs 20 points on Houston in first period as Oilers continue NFL slide.

By Alan Robinson
AP Sports Writer

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Steelers wish every day were Monday.

The Steelers reversed a season-long succession of bad starts, turning Barry Foster's 115 yards and the helpless Houston Oilers' numerous mistakes into points on their first four possessions for a 30-14 victory Monday night.

Foster had 100 yards by the first minute of the second half and Neil O'Donnell shrugged off his worst NFL start with a pair of big-play first-down passes as the Steelers (3-2) improved to 5-0 on Monday night under coach Bill Cowher.

Deion Sanders has the nickname, but the Steelers are the NFL's best prime time performers since Cowher took over in 1992. They're 4-0 on Mondays over the last two seasons and have allowed only 14 points in their last three Monday night home games.

The Steelers had been outscored 24-3 in the first quarter this season and trailed every game by at least 10 points, but this night Houston (1-4) never had a chance — especially quarterbacks Cody Carlson and Bucky Richardson.

The Steelers' defense, which seems to play off the emotional Cowher's rah-rah intensity on Monday nights, forced four first-half fumbles by the two quarterbacks, with Kevin Greene recovering two of them. Carlson left with an injured left shoulder after completing only 3-of-7 passes for 18 yards.

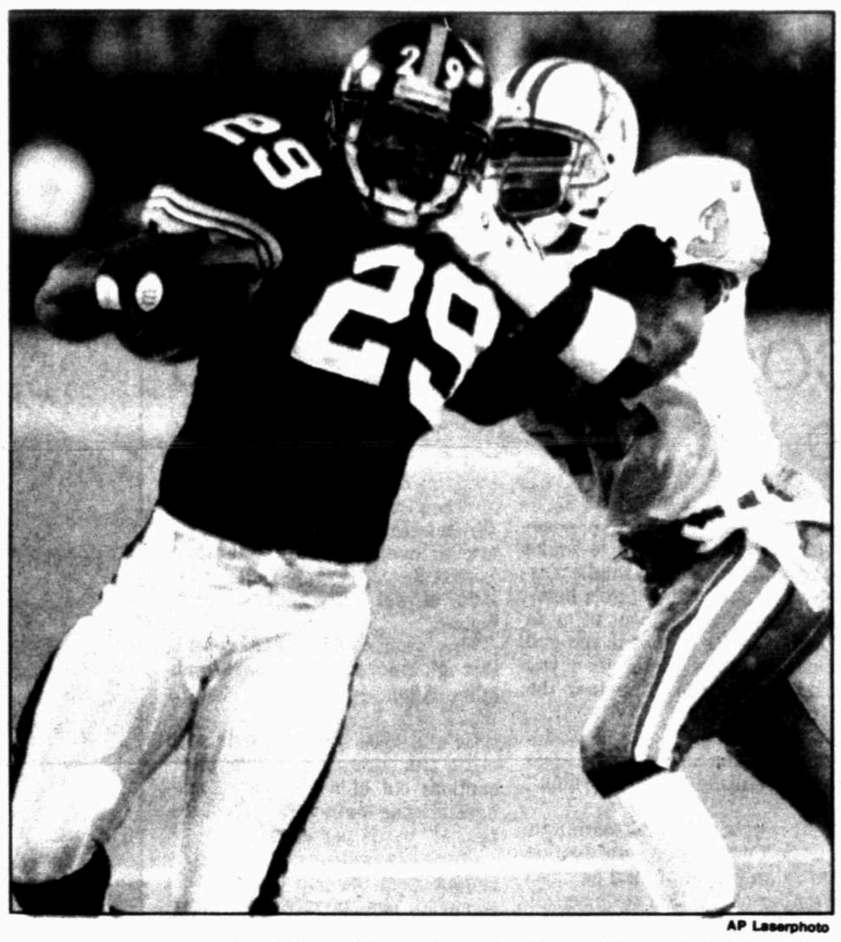

A rattled Richardson wasn't much better, fumbling two of his first three snaps, but it was already 20-0 by then and it hardly mattered. The Oilers didn't score until Richardson threw two touchdown passes in the final 9:11, a 76-yarder to Ernest Givins and a 2-yarder to Haywood Jeffires with five seconds left.

But the Oilers already trailed 30-0 after rookie Bam Morris' 1-yard TD run with 9:47 remaining.

The Oilers are 1-4 under coach Jack Pardee for the second straight year, but off Monday's effort it's not likely they'll duplicate 1993 by winning their next 11.

What saved the Steelers was that O'Donnell didn't replay his dreadful four-

Cougars now No. 1

Associated Press

DALLAS — Randy Allen came home to coach Abilene Cooper four years ago hoping to return a 1-9 program to its glory days in the late 1960s, when he was the starting halfback for the dominant "Big Blue Machine."

A key to Allen's rebuilding involved reviving the traditions of his playing days. He brought back the old uniforms, hired other former Cooper stars as assistant coaches and dusted off all the old stories and game films.

With a few X's and O's thrown in, Allen has succeeded. On Monday, the Cougars became the No. 1 team in The Associated Press high school football poll, culminating a season-long climb up the rankings.

"It's happened so quick, it's hard to get a perspective on it," Allen said. "We've gone from the bottom of 5A and scaled to the top. This year, we have a team and a schedule that's allowed us to develop early, get some maturity and we've been able to stay healthy."

The Cougars, who last were No. 1 in 1979, began the season ranked 10th and have slowly moved up each week.

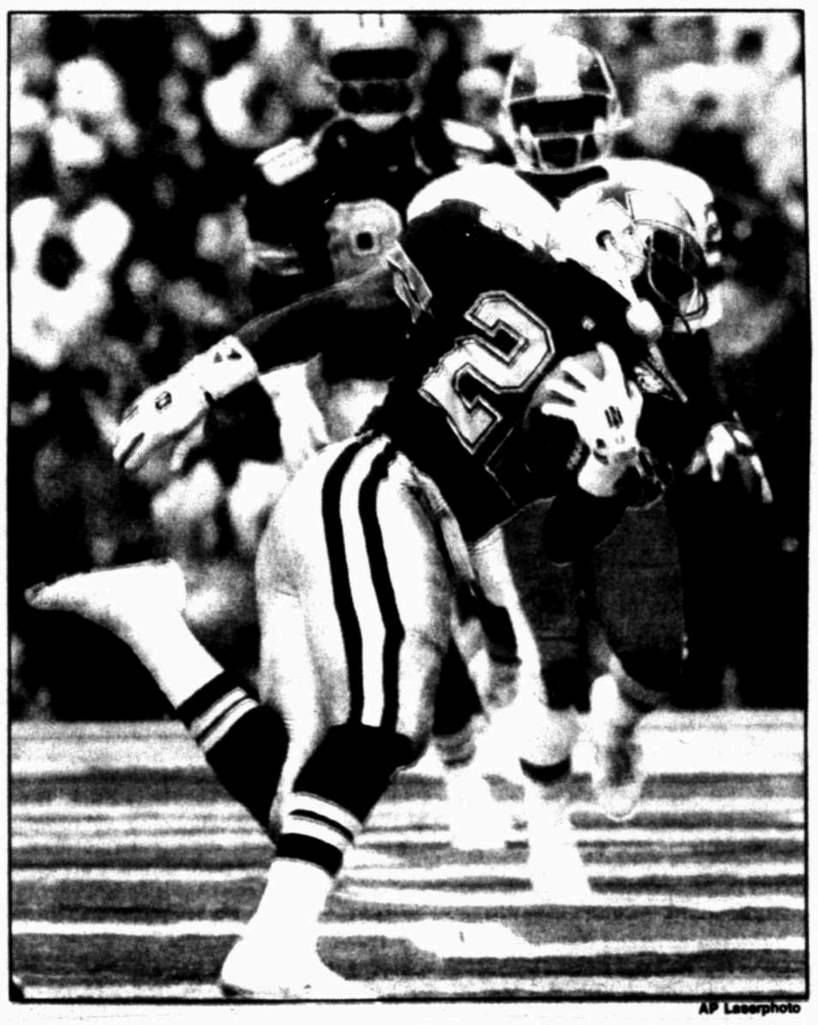

They were stalled at No. 2 until Aldine MacArthur, which has been first since the preseason, tied Humble 14-14 Friday night.

The Generals fell to No. 5 in the weekly poll based on votes by statewide sports writers and broadcasters. No other top-ranked teams changed this week, and only three teams entered the rankings.

For Cooper, the climb to the top began in 1991 when Allen decided to return after five years at Brownwood, where he had replaced legendary coach Gordon Wood.

Cowboys wait on Smith

Dallas running back Emmitt Smith (22) scoots into the end zone Sunday against Washington, but the Cowboys are worried over an injury.

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Concerned that Emmitt Smith's strained right hamstring might not be fully healed by this weekend, the Dallas Cowboys were close Monday to signing free agent running back Cleveland Gary.

Even more worrisome to Dallas, though, may be the health of starting left tackle Mark Tuinei. Tuinei was hospitalized Monday while receiving treatment for serious lower back pain and spasms.

Smith and Tuinei both were injured in the first half of the Cowboys' 34-7 victory Sunday over Washington.

"It's too early to tell on Tuinei. He's probably doubtful," Cowboys coach Barry Switzer said. "Talking to Emmitt, he thinks he'll be OK. That's more important than a doctor telling me that."

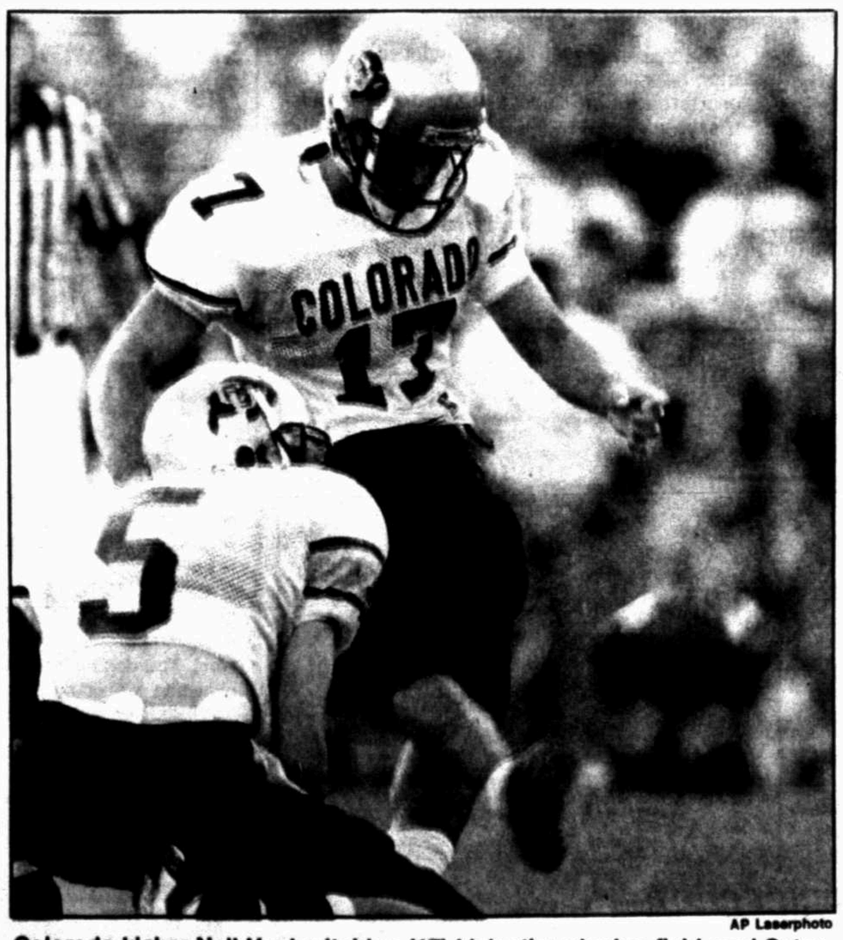

Smith — who said "I haven't felt anything like (his injury) in years" — was optimistic about his chances of returning in time for Sunday's home game against the Arizona Cardinals.

"It's not as bad as I originally thought," said Smith, who left after gaining only 48 yards on 16 carries. "I had a bad pull in high school and I couldn't even walk.

"With this, I can walk, but I can't extend and push off my right leg. But I've got six days to treat it so you can't tell what's going to happen," he said.

Conventional wisdom would be to keep Smith out of Sunday's game

Colorado kicker Neil Voskeritchian (17) kicks the winning field goal Saturday against Texas with Blake Anderson doing the holding.

If Morenz has his wish, he'll be at QB Saturday

By Chip Brown
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — Texas quarterback Shea Morenz, who hobbled around Monday with a knee brace and a crutch, said he hopes to play against Oklahoma this week after straining knee ligaments against Colorado.

Texas coach John Mackovic called Morenz questionable for Saturday's game. But the sophomore quarterback, who strained the medial collateral ligament in his left knee in the fourth quarter of the Longhorns' 34-31 loss to the Buffaloes, says, "If I can move, I'll play."

"I think I'll be able to start," said Morenz, whose knee twisted when two Colorado defenders sandwiched him as he was scrambling. "I don't know how much practice I'll get. The swelling still needs to go down some."

Despite the injury, Morenz continued to play against Colorado, helping Texas overcome a 31-21 deficit and tie the game at 31-all before the Buffaloes kicked a winning 24-yard field goal with one second left.

"It was scary," Morenz said of his injury. "I didn't know if I had blown it out or what. But once I got up, I wanted to get back in. I am kind of hard headed about coming out of games."

Mackovic said redshirt freshman James Brown will get most of the practice at quarterback this week. Brown, who has gotten spot duty against Texas Christian and came in for one play against Colorado, has yet to throw a pass in a college game.

Morenz is one of a list of injured players. Those who are out for this week's game include, linebacker Jason Reeves (knee); receiver Mike Adams (knee); and linebacker Jim Bob Evans (hepatitis).

Those who are questionable include, running back Priest Holmes (hip); receiver Curtis Jackson (hip); and defensive back Joey Ellis (ankle).

And put Mackovic on the list as probable. The third-year coach may have taken the hardest hit of the Colorado game when Texas defensive tackle Tony Brackens, chasing an opposing player out of bounds, inadvertently buried his helmet under Mackovic's chin, laying him out flat.

Mackovic, who sat on the Astroturf for several minutes after the hit, needed stitches in his chin and elbow.

"I'm feeling fine. I have some stitches. I didn't count how many. My health is not a subject," said Mackovic, a former quarterback at Wake Forest who

WAC leaders begin piecing complex puzzle

EL PASO (AP) — Western Athletic Conference leaders are ready to begin piecing together a complex puzzle.

League officials in April invited six schools to join the WAC's current 10 members. Now six months later, they are undertaking the task of actually putting together a 16-team league.

"We're facing a fairly large and encompassing list of things to do. We've definitely got our hands full," new league commissioner Karl Benson said Monday, a day before the beginning of the WAC's fall meetings.

The meetings mark the first time all 16 league members have come together, so they are to a certain extent a get-acquainted gathering, said WAC associate commissioner Jeff Hurd.

"In the larger picture, it's where we begin getting serious about the 16-team league and how it's going to be formatted," Hurd said.

Play in the expanded conference begins in September 1996 and league officials have already completed some preliminary six-year football and basketball schedules, which will be presented to officials at the meetings.

The lists includes the planned matchups, although actual dates have not yet been decided. Benson said he hopes the schedules can be finalized by the time the meetings end Wednesday.

For football, officials will also be discussing the logistics of a championship game and possible sites.

The WAC is considering El Paso for the game — an idea broached by the Sun Bowl Association, said Benson, who had breakfast Monday morning with the head of the association, Tom Starr.

Starr's group operates the annual John Hancock Bowl.

Benson said the WAC will also look at other sites, including San Diego and Denver.

Also on the agenda is the format for the 1996-97 basketball tournament and proposed sites. Dallas, Las Vegas, Salt Lake City and Albuquerque, this year's host, have all come up in site discussions.

"For other championship sports like track and field, we haven't even begun to look at those to see how they're going to be conducted," said Hurd.

This week's meetings are intended to lay the groundwork for making decisions in those areas.

WAC athletic directors, faculty representatives and senior women's administrators will hold section meetings beginning Tuesday morning at the El Paso Convention Center. Joint sessions will take place Wednesday. Monday was reserved primarily for social functions.

WAC officials said they aren't sure how many concrete plans the meetings will yield, but they are generally enthusiastic about the prospects.

"What I would like to accomplish is to develop the spirit of cooperation that will be needed as we look to the future of the WAC," Benson said.

WAC Members

EL PASO, Texas (AP) Here is a list of current and future members of the Western Athletic Conference, which will expand from 10 teams to 16 in 1996. Officials with all 16 teams are meeting here this week.

Current members:, Air Force, Brigham Young, Colorado State, Fresno State, Hawaii, New Mexico, San Diego State, Texas-El Paso, Utah and Wyoming.

New members:, Nevada-Las Vegas, Rice, San Jose State, Southern Methodist, Texas Christian and Tulsa.

COOPER: Coogs leap to top with open week

(From 1C)

Allen's first goal was to make the Cougars ready to handle District 4-5A, one of the state's best.

"The great thing about being in a tough district is that if you can compete against them, then you should be ready to compete in the playoffs," he said.

But to do that, Cooper needed a winning attitude, something Allen quickly realized his team didn't have.

He brought back a teammate from the 1967 Cooper state finalist team as an assistant, and he hired a member of the 1969 state semifinalist squad as defensive coordinator.

They shared tales of when Cooper was great and instilled pride and a winning spirit among the players. The community also has rallied around the team like they did before.

"It was there, it just needed to be jump-started," Allen said.

The program has improved in each of Allen's three previous seasons. From 1-9 the year before he arrived, the Cougars have gone 4-6, 7-4 and 10-3-1.

Following last weekend's 38-3 victory over Midland, they're 5-0.

"Every year we've made a little progress," Allen said. "Our second year, we had a winning season. It was the school's first in 13 years, but we lost in the first round of playoffs.

"Then last year we were able to advance in the playoffs, and we lost to eventual state champion Lewisville. So every year we've kind of set our goals a little higher."

This year's goals are coming through thanks in large part to another Allen — Zac, the coach's son.

He's 51-of-94 for 844 yards with eight touchdowns and two interceptions out of a no-huddle, one-back offense that averages a state-best 447 yards per game.

Cooper is almost guaranteed to remain atop the poll through this weekend. The Cougars have an off-week before getting into the thick of their district schedule beginning with Odessa.

Cooper was pretty easily ahead of No. 2 Austin Westlake. The Cougars had 21 of a possible 32 first-place votes.

Westlake, which got seven top votes, is followed by Deer Park and Plano East.

Rounding out the top 10 are No. 6 Houston Cypress Creek, No. 7 Grapevine, No. 8 Arlington Lamar, No. 9 North Mesquite and No. 10 A&M Consolidated.

North Mesquite moved in on the heels of a 42-25 victory over then-No. 6 Mesquite. Consolidated spent one week in the poll earlier this season.

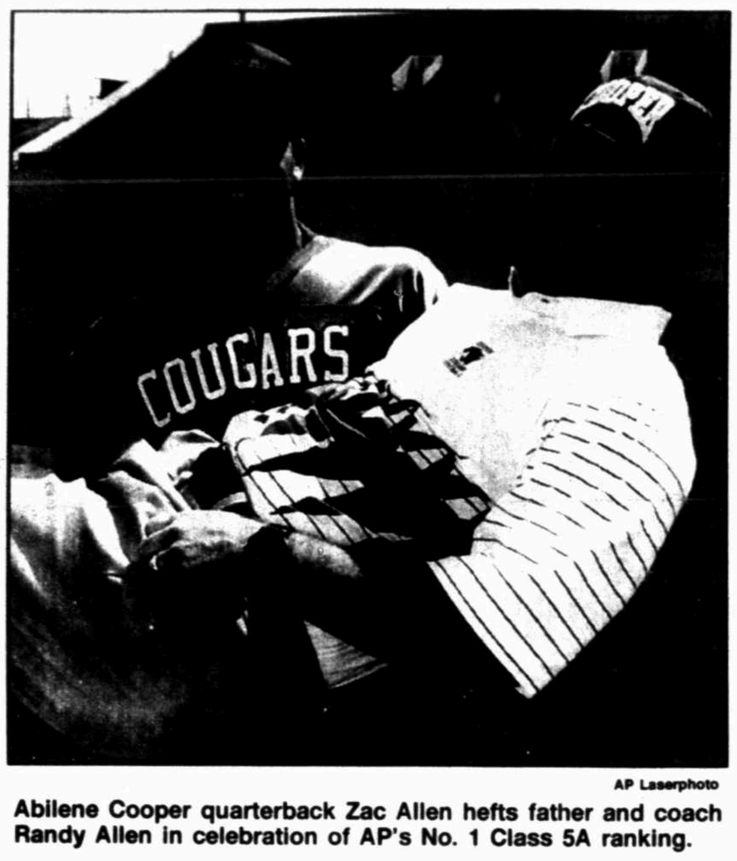

Joining Mesquite in a drop out of the poll was Converse Judson, which lost 32-31 to San Antonio MacArthur. It was the first regular-season loss for the two-time defending 5A Division I champion since the fourth week of the 1992 season.

The only other new team joining the poll was Denison, which enters the 4A poll at No. 9. The Yellowjackets forced out Lamar Consolidated, which fell 24-6 to Deer Park for its second loss of the year.

The top five in 4A remained intact with Stephenville first, followed by Waxahachie, La Marque, Sulphur Springs and Gregory-Portland.

A loss by Refugio was the only change in 2A. The Bobcats went from second to No. 10 as Schulenburg maintained a strong grip on No. 1.

Classes 3A and 1A remained exactly intact as all ranked teams won. Cuero still has a big lead in 3A and Thorndale is safely atop 1A.

SMITH: Coleman saves job with 74 yards, TD

against the Cardinals and their coach, known Cowboys hater Buddy Ryan.

It wasn't too long ago that Ryan was accused of having a "bounty" on Dallas players, so with someone as important as Smith already hobbled, Switzer could be taking a gamble by using him.

"We won't really know until Wednesday," Switzer said. "I can tell when I see him run. But Emmitt thinks he'll be ready."

Smith is trying to join Jim Brown as the only runners to lead the NFL in rushing four straight years. He has 452 yards on 103 carries this season, well behind the 627 yards by Detroit's Barry Sanders.

"It seems like it's been one thing or another all season," Smith said. "First, it was my (turf) toe and now this. You have peaks and valleys and this is one of my valleys. It's been one nagging injury after another."

Switzer said he's confident Gary can fill in immediately. Gary, who last played for the Los Angeles Rams, told Cowboys officials he's been working out and that he's fully recovered from a recent appendectomy.

"He's ready to go," Switzer said. "They said he was the type of player who could come in and in one week learn the offense. With one week of practice, he could play Sunday."

To make room for Gary on the roster, Dallas waived fullback Robert Wilson.

Gary was going to become a Cowboy this week even if Smith had not been injured, Switzer said. Negotiations have been going on for about a week and Gary was expected to sign for the league minimum. He took a physical Monday.

But instead of cutting Wilson, Dallas expected to dump running back Lincoln Coleman, who already was cut once this season then re-signed a few days later.

The former Arena League player saved his job Sunday by rushing 22 times for 74 yards and a touchdown, and catching two passes for 7 yards.

Switzer not only spared Coleman from the cut list, he even gave him a game ball.

"He's a cat with nine lives," Switzer said.

OILERS: Steelers' Foster rushes for 115 yards interception day in a 30-13 loss in Seattle last week. With Foster dragging Oilers defenders with him on a succession of big gains, O'Donnell had to pass only sparingly, and he was effective when he did.

(From 1C)

Picking apart the NFL's second-ranked passing defense, O'Donnell finished 9-for-17 for 154 yards, a touchdown and no interceptions.

After the opening kickoff, O'Donnell set up the first of Gary Anderson's three field goals with a 12-yard throw to Yancey Thigpen on third-and-6 after Foster ran off 25 yards on his first four carries.

On Pittsburgh's next possession, O'Donnell found Andre Hastings for 46 yards on first down, and Anderson later kicked a 25-yard field goal.

After finally learning how to score early, the Steelers couldn't quit. Carlson fumbled a snap on second-and-14 with Greene recovering at the Oilers' 3, and O'Donnell promptly found Eric Green for the touchdown and a 13-0 lead with 5:42 remaining in the first quarter.

Offensive coordinator Ron Erhardt must have listened to Green, who complained when the Steelers didn't go to him on a failed drive to the Seahawks' 2 last week.

Foster, the AFC's leading rusher, peeled off runs of 26 and 12 yards on Pittsburgh's next possession, leading to his 1-yard scoring run and a 20-0 lead with 1:49 left in the first quarter.

Tech's Red Raiders prepare for Rice wishbone

LUBBOCK (AP) — The wishbone offense Rice runs will present a challenge Texas Tech doesn't see very often, Red Raider coach Spike Dykes said Monday.

"... It's smash-mouth football," Dykes said.

Tech (2-3, 1-1 in the Southwest Conference) heads for a noon kickoff Saturday at Rice Stadium, where the Red Raiders haven't won since 1988.

The game opens the SWC season for the Owls (1-2), who are coming off an open date. Their last contest ended in victory, 28-18, over Iowa State on Sept. 24.

Dykes expressed pride that Tech led No. 10 Texas A&M in the fourth quarter last week before losing 23-17 when a desperation pass fell incomplete in the end zone. It was Tech's third loss in four weeks to a ranked opponent.

"You play good football teams, your chances of losing are a lot more magnified than they are if you're playing bad football teams," he said. "That still doesn't make it taste any better."

Tech emerged from the losses — to the Aggies, then-No. 1 Nebraska and No. 21 Oklahoma — with few injures and greater poise, Dykes said.

He compared his team's talent to that of Rice players. The Owl defense, he expects, will prove aggressive and speedy.

"Rice is a little bit more like we are," Dykes said. "They're a little bit more of a team-oriented situation — not a whole lot of people who are really great right now as reputations are concerned, but they are a good football team."

Tech beat Rice last year in Lubbock, 45-16. In 1992, the Owls cruised to a 34-3 victory over the Red Raiders.

Dykes said he was satisfied with his young team's progress.

"I think this team is bound and determined to do a lot of things that are excellent," he said. "I guess time will tell."

UT: Longhorns may get sick of OU fight song

(From 1C)

celebrated his 51st birthday on Saturday.

Linebacker Robert Reed joked that Brackens would be doing some extra laps in practice this week.

"Tony's in trouble. He will be running extra. I know he'll be in shape for this week's game," Reed said.

Texas players say they will have no trouble recovering from an emotional loss to Colorado while preparing for arch rival No. 16 Oklahoma (3-1). The Longhorns (3-1) appear to have gained some respect after the Colorado loss, jumping up one spot in this week's rankings to No. 15.

"In a way it's good we have Oklahoma this week," said linebacker Kevin Watler. "If it was any other team, we might have trouble getting up for the game after a loss like we had to Colorado. But because it's OU, we will be pumped."

The Sooners, who have abandoned a somewhat pass-heavy attack with the graduation of quarterback Cale Gundy, will try to drive their wishbone offense through Texas, which gave up 317 yards to Colorado's Rashaan Salaam.

Mackovic said injuries to linebackers that have forced younger players into action are a big reason the Longhorns have had trouble stopping the run. Texas also gave up 251 yards to Pittsburgh's Curtis Martin in the season opener.

UGSA magazine editor dies on job

PARIS (AP) — David Earl, the editor of the United States Golf Association's official magazine, has died while on assignment.

The 48-year-old Earl died Sunday of a heart attack at a hotel in Versailles, where he was on assignment for Golf Journal magazine, the USGA said.

He was in France with a USGA delegation covering the World Amateur Team Championships.

An avid golfer, Earl became editor of Golf Journal in January 1992. He had been managing editor of the publication since September 1990.

Earl, of Mountain Lake, N.J., held various editorial positions prior to his association with the USGA. He was senior editor at Golf Magazine and managing editor at Golf Illustrated.

Midland Bowling

By Karen Jordan

Midland Park Lanes produced the city's leaders last week. Eddie Pittman opened up the new season with a bang in the NFL League. After 11 perfect shots, Pittman's 12th ball yielded a solid "9" pin for a 299 game and 698 series.

Rebecca Seitz was high lady with a 233, 670 in the Ex-Boom Time Bowlers League.

At Cactus Lanes, the Keglers League hosted most of the high scorers last week. Eddie Graham had 248, 221, 661 and J.R. Tipton rolled a 279, 619. Karen Jordan led the ladies with 209, 226, 234, 669. Ann Bush shot 146 pins over her 136 average with games of 214 and 203.

Ty Bowling powered his way through several 700s shot at Midland Park Lanes, leading the pack with a 258, 760. Tammy Windham took top ladies honors with a 229, 226, 214, 669.

Congress keeps eye on baseball

NEW YORK (AP) — Congress will hold renewed hearings on the baseball strike by the end of January, the chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor said Monday.

Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont., said if the strike isn't settled by the time Congress reconvenes Jan. 3, he will recall officials from management and the players association for more testimony. Williams chaired a hearing of the labor-management subcommittee last week.

"I think it's likely the House will likely pass either or both antitrust legislation or binding arbitration legislation if we have seen no action by January," Williams said in a telephone interview.

The House Judiciary Committee last week passed legislation that would have partially removed the owners' antitrust exemption, but the effort to pass similar legislation in the Senate ended Friday. Congress is set to adjourn this Friday, but several legislators said both sides should interpret the debate as a "wake-up call."

"I believe the House absolutely will take action if nothing's changed by the time it returns," Williams said. "I've learned not to predict what the Senate will do."

No talks are scheduled to end the strike, which went through its 53rd day Monday. Owners negotiator Richard Ravitch was visiting his son in England and acting commissioner Bud Selig said he wasn't sure if Ravitch will return this week.

Union head Donald Fehr, who last week completed a seven-city tour to update his players, was back in his New York office. Fehr probably will visit Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic next week to give further updates to players.

Owners are expected to meet in Detroit during the week of Oct. 16 to discuss how they will proceed next season.

"I'm not sure we'll meet, but if we do it'll be in that time range," Selig said Monday.

The union expects owners to impose a salary cap, management's right under labor law.

"The probable result of that," Williams said, "is that the impasse will continue and there will be no serious negotiations or breakthoughs. That enchances the likelihood the Congress will act."

Garner is impressive in NFL debut

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Rookie Charlie Garner showed he can play in the NFL. Now he has to show he can stay in the NFL.

Garner made an electrifying pro debut Sunday, rushing for 111 yards and two touchdowns to key the Philadelphia Eagles' 40-8 upset of the San Francisco 49ers on Sunday.

He showed the kind of speed, vision and shiftiness Philadelphia hasn't had at running back since Wilbert Montgomery left town in 1984.

"He's just got something you can't coach, can't teach," center Dave Alexander said.

But just as Eagles fans were dreaming of a season filled with Garner's exciting style of running — and what it could do for Philadelphia's playoff chances — they were wondering why he wasn't on the field anymore.

Coach Rich Kotite removed Garner midway through the third quarter after the rookie complained of a sore back, the same pain that bothered him in training camp.

On Monday, Kotite confirmed Garner had aggravated the previous injury, a hairline fracture of the uppermost rib, under his right shoulder blade.

"The X-rays are as you would expect them to appear, negative for a fracture but they do show an irritation," team physician Dr. Joseph Torg said.

The good news for Kotite was that it appears the injury won't be serious enough to keep Garner out of the Eagles game Sunday night against the Washington Redskins. The Eagles (3-1) are tied with Dallas and the New York Giants for first in the NFC East.

"From what I understand, it's sore," Kotite said. "It's in the same area, but we'll be able to have him, hopefully, if nothing reverses itself from now and game time."

The bad news is that, given the pounding that an NFL running back's shoulders takes every week, it's unclear if Garner will hold up for the season.

The Eagles had Monday off after their early-morning return from San Francisco, and Garner was not available.

But after the game Sunday, Garner, who at 5-foot-9 and 181 pounds is among the NFL's smallest backs, said he's always had to answer questions about his size.

"Every small back has to prove their durability," he said. "In my case, it's even more so because I've already been hurt."

Most likely, the injury won't completely heal until the off-season, which means Garner will be playing in pain throughout the year. Kotite said he didn't know about the rookie's pain threshold.

"I'll let you know in a few weeks," Kotite said. "But I think he's a tough kid. He didn't want to come out."

Kotite said the Eagles will keep Garner out of contact drills during practice this week, and probably in future weeks, and hope Garner stays healthy.

"There will be no contact of any sort so we can let some of the soreness out of it," he said. "I don't think you can take a chance ... of anything happening in practice."

Murder suspect still plays football

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A football player charged with two counts of attempted murder never told his coaches at Cal State Northridge of his arrest a month ago and has continued to play on the team.

A spokesman for the American West Conference said it is unlikely the school will be sanctioned for allowing Jonathan Beauregard to play.

Beauregard, 22, was arrested Aug. 29 near his mother's home in San Bernardino shortly after his ex-girlfriend and her friend were shot outside the Arrowhead Elks' bar, San Bernardino police Lt. Jack Griggs said.

Hours after he was released on bail, Beauregard reported to practice but never mentioned the arrest to the coaching staff, coach Bob Burt said. Burt said he was informed of the arrest Saturday.

Prices slump

NEW YORK (AP) — Heating oil led most energy futures lower on Monday as last week's rally gave way to profit-taking.

The market struggled to move higher at the open, but had too little momentum to entice last week's investors to remain in the market.

Forecasts for slightly lower-than-normal temperatures in the Northeast through this week didn't give much support to the heating oil market Monday. The Northeast acounts for about three-quarters of U.S. heating oil consumption.

Oil and gasoline futures rallied at midday on rumors that Brazilian petroleum workers were not returning to work after a weekend settlement in their strike. Prices fell back, however, when those reports proved to be false.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in November settled at $18.19 per barrel, down 20 cents.

Local crude purchasers lowered their posted price 25 cents to $16.50 a barrel.

Natural gas prices were higher, with contracts for delivery in November settling at $1.683 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 2.6 cents.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK — The dollar ended with modest gains vs. most key currencies Monday as a rally from the weekend U.S.-Japan trade agreement was blunted by a bond market sell-off on data signaling higher domestic inflation.

Still, the U.S. currency rose to its highest level against the Japanese yen since Sept. 8.

Gold prices gained in domestic dealings after ending mixed overseas. On New York's Commodity Exchange, gold for current delivery rose 60 cents to $394.80 per troy ounce.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 99.58 Japanese yen, up from 99.15 late Friday.

The dollar also was changing hands late in New York at 1.5543 German marks, up from 1.5518.

Other late dollar rates in New York compared with late Friday: 1.2930 Swiss francs, up from 1.2880; 5.3035 French francs, up from 5.2935; 1,565 Italian lire, up from 1,560; and 1.3438 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3435.

The British pound was quoted at $1.5788, up from $1.5765.

On the Comex, silver for current delivery settled at $5.647 per troy ounce, up 3.8 cents.

Dow rises

NEW YORK — Stocks ended mostly lower on Monday as investors worried anew about inflation and interest rates following a better-than-expected report on the economy.

But blue-chip issues managed a slight recovery late in the session amid some optimism about third-quarter corporate earnings.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 3.70 points to 3,846.89.

Rates haven't fizzled economy

Manufacturing surges despite increases, survey finds

Associated Press

NEW YORK — American manufacturing surged in September to the highest level in more than six years, a widely followed industrial survey showed Monday.

The data suggest the economy has yet to feel acute pain from higher interest rates, which the Federal Reserve has raised five times this year to slow growth and thwart inflation.

The National Association of Purchasing Management said its index of manufacturing growth rose to 58.2 percent in September from 56.2 percent a month earlier. That's the highest it's been since July 1988. A reading above 50 percent reflects an expansion from the previous month.

Economists said the report was evidence that higher interest rates haven't put much of a dent in consumer spending, yet.

Financial markets weakened on the news, as investors assumed it meant the Fed can justify another rate increase by saying it will contain the inflationary threat posed by an expanding economy. Rising rates hurt the value of stocks and bonds.

Eventually, higher interest rates will start costing consumers: For one thing, banks will continue to raise borrowing rates. For another, manufacturers will begin passing higher production costs on to consumers in the form of higher prices for finished products. That will discourage consumer spending.

"Monetary policy works with a lag," said Sung Won Sohn, chief economist at Norwest Corp. in Minneapolis. "The primary effects of Fed tightening will not be felt until early next year."

The manufacturing surge was partly caused by seasonal factors, but the main reason is the ebullient economy, said Ralph G. Kauffman, chairman of the NAPM business survey committee.

Still, the report found some troubling signs of inflation. The price index, based on a survey of the prices manufacturers paid for materials, rose to 77.1 percent, the highest level since August 1988, from 74.5 percent.

Meanwhile, there was some evidence that higher rates are hurting the construction industry, which is among the most sensitive to changes in the cost of borrowing.

The Commerce Department reported the third straight decline in spending on single-family housing. August outlays for single-family homes, about one-third of total spending, fell 1.2 percent, the department said.

Southwestern Bell unveils new name, logo

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Southwestern Bell Corp. is changing its name to SBC Communications Inc.

The San Antonio-based corporation said it is making the change to reflect its expansion from the regional telephone business into the more diversified international communications field.

"In the past decade we have expanded into new telecommunications businesses such as wireless, grown our international operations and become less reliant on our core telephone business than any other Bell operating company," said Edward E. Whitacre Jr., chairman and chief executive officer.

Directors approved the name change Friday. It is effective immediately. Shareholder approval for a formal name change will be sought in 1995 at the next annual meeting, Whitacre said.

The name change applies only to the parent corporation. "Southwestern Bell" will remain in the names of some subsidiaries, such as Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

The initials SBC already are recognized in the marketplace because the letters are the company's stock ticker symbol, Whitacre said.

SBC, which had revenues of $10.7 billion in 1993, provides products and services over the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company's local telephone network.

Employers cap pressure, hold line on wages

By Louis Uchitelle
N.Y. Times News Service

Pressure is building on Corporate America to bid up wages to attract machinists, computer specialists and other skilled workers increasingly in short supply. But companies are resisting the pressure with numerous tactics, from turning away business to hiring the unskilled at low wages and then training them.

How long this effort can keep hourly wages from rising faster than inflation no one knows, especially if the economy continues to grow at a brisk pace. Already wages are breaking through in a few cities, most spectacularly in Phoenix. But in most regions, executives say, companies are holding the line — an assertion that is backed up by some Labor Department data and Federal Reserve surveys.

"There is a certain amount of stubborness, a determination not to pay more," said Tucker Hart Adams, chief economist of Colorado National Bank, who surveyed 60 companies in Denver, where labor shortages have appeared but not wage increases. "I tell them, 'At some wage, people will answer their help-wanted ads.' And they say they can't go up more than 25 cents an hour or their profits will disappear."

Rather than bid for people already skilled, companies are increasingly training the unskilled, at lower wages, interviews with executives suggest. This may mean that a company's work force is less productive for a while, but the Clinton administration hails the practice as a way to reopen good jobs to the unskilled.

In another tactic, immigrants are being recruited for jobs that were not open to them a year ago. In addition, many companies that once recruited only locally now cast their nets across the nation. Some push existing employees to work more hours. Some also agree among themselves not to hire away one another's skilled people.

And when fat raises are given to keep valued workers, the extra cost is increasingly offset by denying raises to others, according to a survey.

In Rochester, N.Y., Jasco Tools Inc. embraces several of the tactics. Jasco is not planning any increase for the time being in the $10 to $15 an hour base pay that most of its 250 machinists receive.

5 plants sit; GM tries to restore strike-idled parts flow

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. worked Monday to restore the flow of parts from a Flint factory complex that was closed four days by a strike, but five assembly plants were shut down by shortages.

Work has resumed at the Buick City complex, where 11,500 employees ended their strike Saturday by approving a deal that will have GM hire several hundred new workers.

But the interruption in shipments from Flint continued to hamstring some GM assembly operations.

Truck-building plants in Pontiac, Linden, N.J., Shreveport, La., and Moraine, Ohio, and a car assembly plant in Ste. Therese, Quebec, suspended production Monday. GM said the Michigan, Ohio and Quebec plants would reopen Wednesday.

A GM car assembly plant in Arlington remained closed this week by a parts shortage unrelated to the strike.

Startup times for the New Jersey and Louisiana plants haven't been set, but both will remain closed Tuesday, GM said.

The five plants have an hourly work force that totals about 14,000 people. They build some of GM's most popular vehicles, including Chevrolet Camaros, Blazers and S-10 pickup trucks.

Automotive analyst Ron Glantz of Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. in San Francisco estimated Monday that GM would lose production of about 18,000 cars and trucks as a result of the plant closings.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

More depositories adopt 'statement accounts'

By Bill Doyle

Q: I recently renewed an individual retirement account certificate of deposit. Strangely enough, they don't give out certificates on IRAs at this bank. When I asked for it, the teller said they don't do it.

Doyle

I will have nothing to show as proof, other than the statement the bank sends at the end of the year listing the interest on the CD. If I die before then, no one will know I have the CD.

Does the bank have the right to refuse to give me an IRA CD? What can I do about it?

A: Relax. Although you do not have a fancy piece of paper attesting to the fact that you have a certificate of deposit, surely you were given a receipt or some other kind of evidence that you left money with that bank for an agreed-upon period, thereby making a "time deposit," or "term deposit."

That's your proof. Actually, the words "certificate of deposit" did not come into general use until recent years. Think back. You probably can recall when such arrangements were generally referred to as "savings certificates." Let's hope I'm not giving away my age when I say I do.

Banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions and other depositories competing for the public's money can call them "CDs" or almost any other name. That's why you often see strange names used to describe CDs. Different depository institutions come up with unusual monikers as they fight to garner larger shares of the savings pie.

On the off chance you have absolutely no written proof of the money you put in that bank, you should march right back to that bank and get a receipt for the money you deposited.

It is clear that the bank, along with many other depositories, has adopted "statement accounts" for CDs, as well as for other types of savings. That's the wave of the future, as passbooks and such become things of the past.

Q: If my account at a bank or credit union has $100,000 on deposit, protected by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., and the bank or credit union folds up, do I get back the full $100,000 or just a percentage?

A: You get it all back. But note that deposits at all federal credit unions and many state-chartered credit unions are insured up to $100,000 per depositor per institution by the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund, which is administered by the National Credit Union Administration, a federal agency. The FDIC covers deposits at banks and S&Ls in a similar manner.

Q: My wife and I purchased several CDs from a local bank for our respective individual retirement accounts. The bank imposed no fees, but the IRA agreement reserved the right to charge an annual service fee. Subsequently, a different bank purchased the IRA accounts and imposed an exit fee on each CD.

I have protested this but have been stonewalled. Do you have any recommendation on recouping these fees? While an exit fee is not an annual fee, if it were considered such, only one fee would be imposed on each IRA. This bank applies the fee on each CD.

A: From the information you provide, the bank has every right to do that — if the exit fee arrangement and other potential fees were spelled out, or even mentioned, at the time you acquired a CD.

Banks are not allowed to spring surprise fees "out of the blue." They are required to let depositors know about charges in advance of the time those fees are levied. The trouble is that the wording of such warnings often is quite vague. As a result, the charges often come as a shock to bank customers.

Beautiful Reflections:

Raising awareness and promoting early detection

The month of October has been designated National Breast Cancer Awareness Month to help inform the public about the disease and Wanda Bargsley of Beautiful Reflections is gearing up to spread information as well as her services to breast cancer patients.

The statistics for breast cancer are overwhelming: one in nine women will develop breast cancer at some time and currently more than 2 million women are battling this disease.

Figures such as these, as well as watching family members and close friends fight cancer has made Wanda Bargsley want to do more to help mastectomy patients.

Bargsley has recently purchased a large mobile home to serve as the mobile base for her new company, Beautiful Reflections. She hopes to be able to travel around the state offering her services to patients who have recently had surgery.

Beautiful Reflections is a distributor of Amoena/Discrene brand breast prostheses (forms) and accessories.

In addition to providing breast forms and prostheses, she also stocks a complete line of hand-made sleep caps, radiation therapy garments, specially made lingerie and bras and the Jon Renau wig collection.

The idea to offer all of these services from a mobile unit came about because; "Often, the ladies are not well enough to drive to a one-hour fitting, and there are no shops in the area," she explained.

The luxury motor home serves as an office and training facility and offers a convenient, private, comfortable environment in which to fit breast forms. Her hours are flexible in order to meet the needs of patients

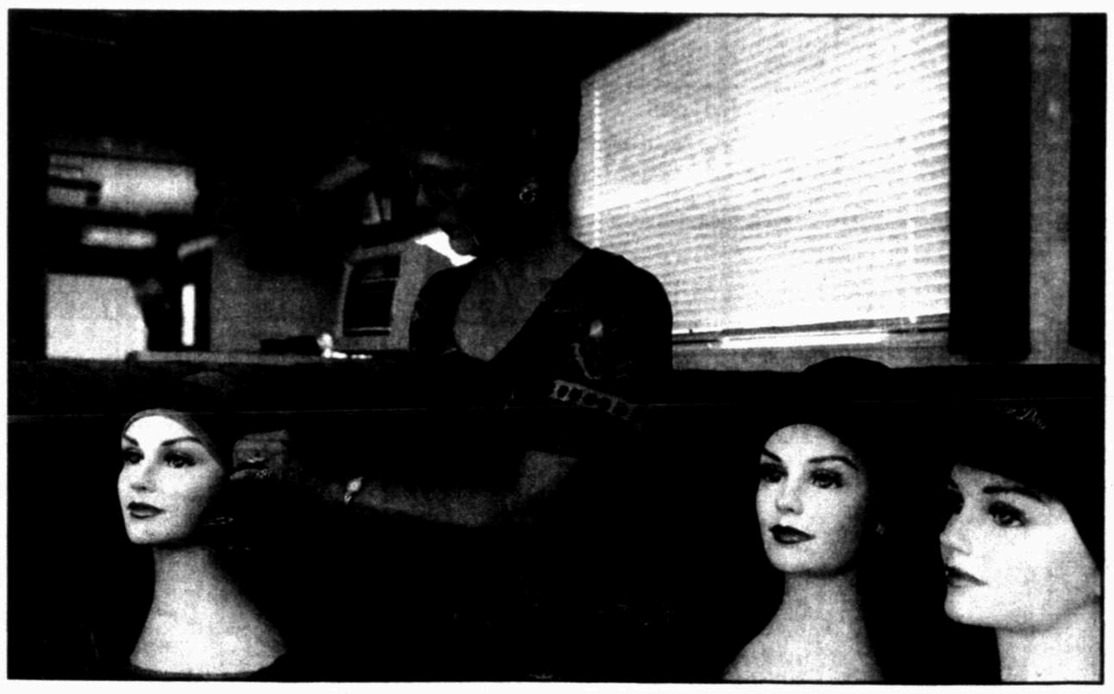

Through one-on-one explanations, videos and literature, Bargsley helps fit women with a breast form closest to their own natural shape and coloring. She stocks a wide variety in a number of shapes, styles and sizes and they range in price between approximately $100 and $400.

Bargsley, who has trained with Amoena in California, realizes that the needs of women fighting breast cancer don't just end with breast forms. In addition to offering the physical services and products, Bargsley is starting up a support group for breast cancer patients and their families.

She is also a strong advocate for early detection and stresses the need for regular breast exams and mammograms when required.

During the month of October, Bargsley, in collaboration with Amoena, is offering a special gift with every purchase of a Amoena silicone breast form.

Interested customers can call Bargsley at 1-800-967-6976 or locally at (915) 520-4830. Medicare, private insurance, private payment and most credit cards are accepted.

Wanda Bargsley, the owner of Beautiful Reflections, with some of her products for women with breast cancer. Operating from her motor home office, Bargsley travels around the West Texas area offering counselling and products for the cancer patient. For more information about breast forms and other relevant products, or to set up a private appointment, call her at 1-800-967-6976 or 520-4830.

Charles Hamilton, the son of the Upholstery Specialist's owners Rose and Floyd Hamilton, works on a chair in their Thomason street workshop. The Hamilton family collectively have nearly 100 years of experience in the field and believe that every job should be better than the last. For more information call 520-3204.

The Upholstery Specialist

Re-covering by craftsmen:

Having furniture re-covered, upholstered or repaired can sometimes be a risky or expensive business; furniture is valuable, which is why it is important to trust the people doing the work.

The Upholstery Specialists, who have recently moved to Midland from Amarillo, are craftsmen who believe that every single piece of work is an advertisement and that each piece should be better than the last.

Bringing with them nearly 100-years of experience in the business, Rose and Floyd Hamilton and their staff work on the basis that "if a customer can draw it or describe it, we can do it." This attitude towards their customers has brought them some very unusual commissions over the years: if your want a chair re-covered for a train, or a custom sofa built for a yacht, they can do it.

Fulfilling strange requests is only a small part of their family operation. Most of their work is in repairing and re-covering furniture for companies and home owners and it is with this service that they really shine.

Most upholsterers simply put a new cover over the existing cotton base, but the Hamiltons prefer to disassemble the piece, make any repairs that are necessary to the frame then re-pad the item and build up from there.

This results in a piece of furniture that can be passed down through the generations because the quality will stand the test of time.

The Hamiltons pride themselves on doing top quality work while offering competitive prices. To this end they offer a one year written guarantee on all of their work.

In addition to offering a wide range of fabrics which they hold in stock, the Upholstery Specialists have access to materials from around the world Research is often required to match period pieces and special items can be ordered to suit virtually any request.

Designing and building furniture to customer specifications is another aspect of the business, and the Hamiltons have experience in dealing with all types of fabrics and materials, from satins and silks to hides and leathers.

To help celebrate their opening, the Upholstery Specialists are offering up to 40 percent off selected fabrics in their showroom.

When quality and value count, call the Upholstery Specialist at 520-3204 or stop by their showroom at 3402 Thomason, Midland, they are open Monday through Saturday 9 a.m. to 6 p.m Evening appointments are available, as is the free pick-up and delivery service in the Midland Odessa area.

IN MEMORY
VEDA STAPP
Oct 4, 1903 - Sept 29, 1994

God looked around his garden and He found an empty place. He then looked down upon this earth & saw your tired face. He put his arms around you & lifted you to rest. God's garden must be beautiful He always takes the best. He knew that you were suffering. He knew you were in pain. He knew that you would never get well on earth again. So He closed your weary eyelids and whispered "Peace Be Thine." He then took you up to Heaven with hands gentle and so kind. It broke our hearts to lose you, But you did not go alone, for part of us went with you The day God called you home.

We will always love and miss you
