Soviet Georgians leading protests

MOSCOW (AP) — Thousands of people defied Soviet tanks and soldiers Saturday and took to the streets of Tbilisi in a protest demanding independence for the southern republic of Georgia, residents said.

Tass said the republic's leaders met in emergency session during the demonstration and rejected the protesters' demand for Georgian secession.

At one point during the fifth day of demonstrations, tanks rumbled through the crowd along a main street of the republic's capital. "Death to the Russian occupiers!" several people shouted as they threw themselves at an approaching tank, activist Sergei Dandurov reported from the city.

Other demonstrators screamed, "Down with the rotting Russian empire!" and "Get off Georgian land!" as they stoned the tanks and broke windows on a military car, he said in a telephone interview.

"They went right through the crowd," Tamara Chiza, correspondent for the unofficial journal Express-Khronika, said of the tanks. She said she was on the city's main thoroughfare when the tanks moved through just after noon.

Dandurov said 10 tanks rumbled through and injured eight or nine people. However, Ms. Chiza, who also spoke from the city by telephone, said five or six tanks approached and that no one was hurt.

Alexander Ogorodnikov, a Moscow-based Christian activist in telephone contact with Tbilisi, said many businesses were closed by a general strike, which also idled city buses.

Durad Chavchavadze, a member of a nationalist group that organized the protest, said by telephone that the number of demonstrators swelled to more than 50,000 by sunset and that the crowd was listening to speeches by activists.

The Soviet news agency Tass said Tbilisi was "uneasy" but that workers at a majority of factories had rejected the strike call.

Inside a government building that looks out on streets that were filled with protesters, the Georgian leadership met in an emergency session and then issued an appeal for calm, said a journalist at the official republican news agency Gruzinform. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

Tass indicated the meeting rejected the protesters' demand for Georgian secession. "Georgia was, is and will be a socialist, sovereign republic in the brotherly family of peoples of the U.S.S.R.," Tass said.

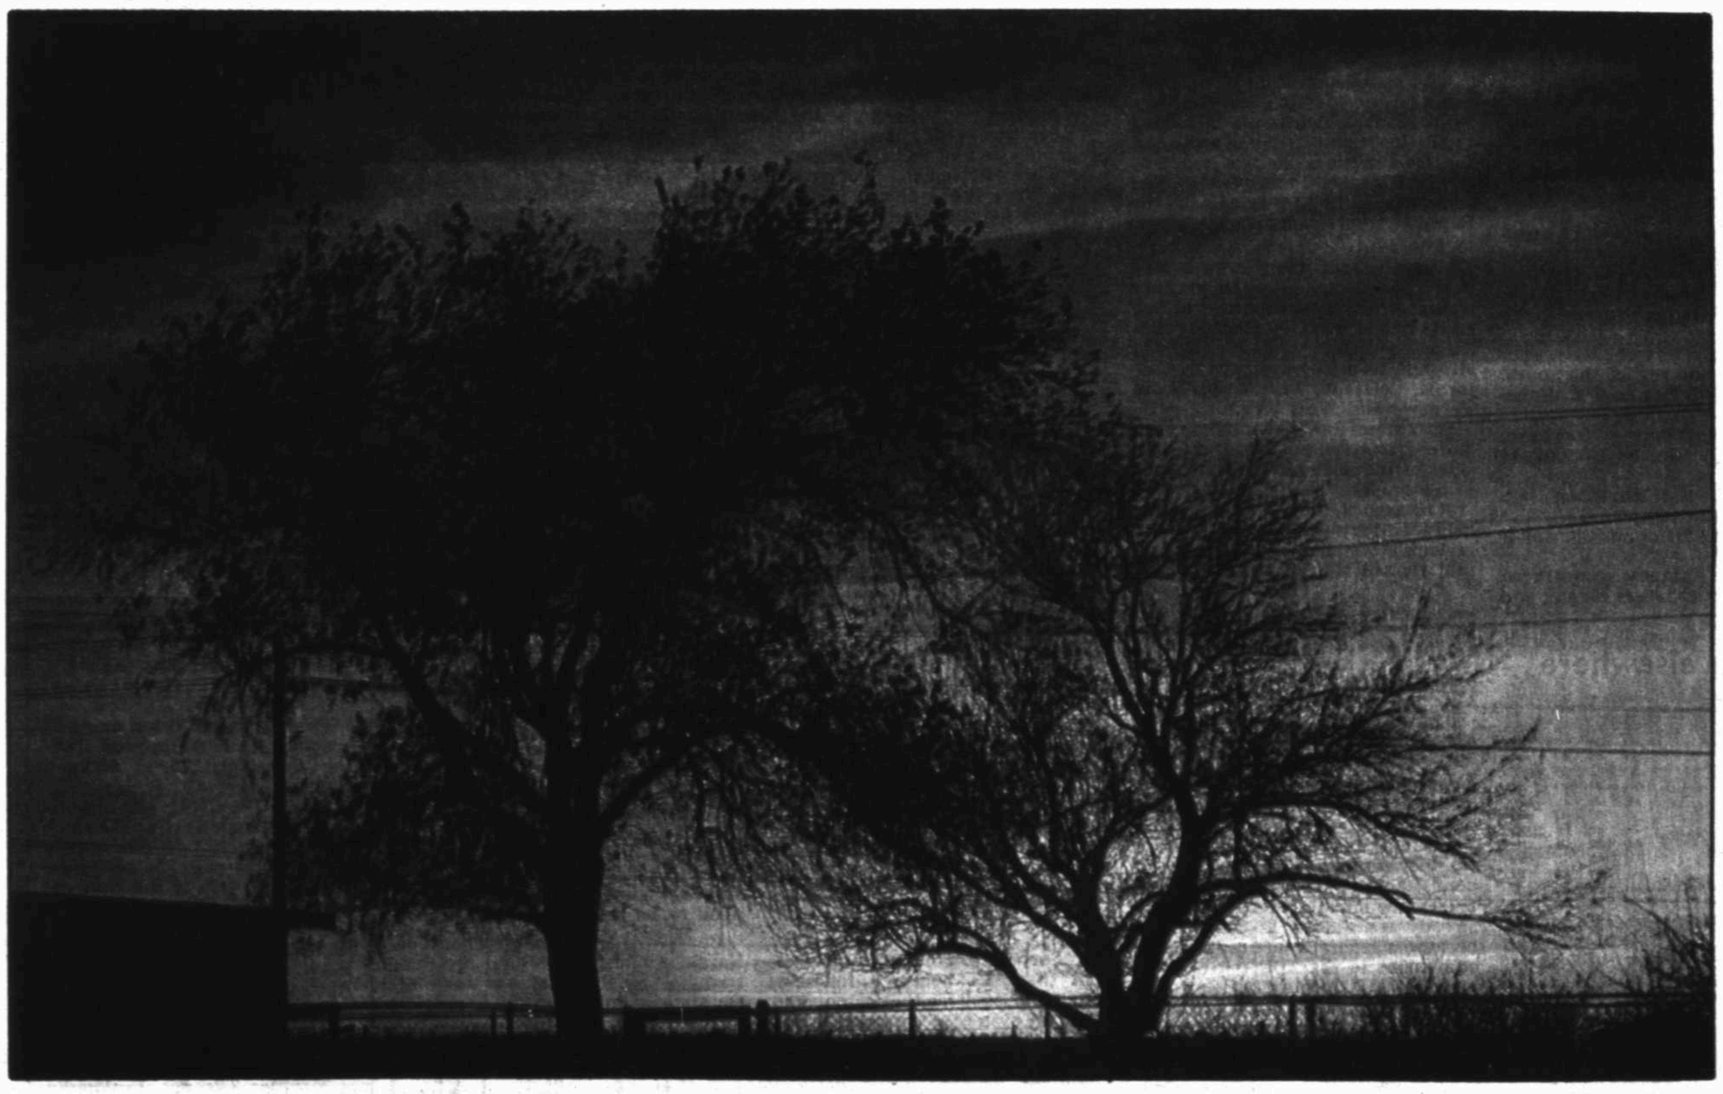

The protest organizers are demanding that Georgia, the home province of former Soviet leader Josef Stalin, secede from the Soviet Union. They also accuse the Kremlin of stirring up ethnic unrest in the autonomous region of Abkhazia located within Georgia on the Black Sea.

Georgian nationalists contend that under Moscow's central control, Russians have encroached on their indigenous culture, language, politics and economy.

The government daily Izvestia said "anti-Soviet, anti-socialist" slogans were seen at the demonstrations and that the main goal of the protest was to object to unspecified "unconstitutional actions" by Abkhazia residents.

Thirty fires in 13 months ruled arson

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

It is the most destructive crime on the books, but often no one is hurt. It is one of the hardest crimes to prove in court. It happens at least twice a month in Midland, though no one pays much attention.

Arson.

Thirty arson fires have been set in Midland in the last 13 months, according to department records, an average of slightly more than two a month. During that period, firefighters on the scene of several fires — most notably blazes at vacant houses — began noticing a man in his 30s who Dominguez declined to identify. After a string of fires were identified as arsons, the man, an ex-convict, was eventually caught and charged with arson.

"There are people out there, like this guy, who are pyromaniacs," Dominguez said, using the psychological description of the compulsion to set fires. "There are people who will set the fire, then go back and watch the firemen put the fire out. Some get sexual gratification from it."

But pyromaniacs are aberrations and not responsible for most arson fires, according to a prosecutor.

"They really arise out of two different situations," said Ralph Petty, Midland County Assistant District Attorney. "To collect insurance, where the victim actually is the insurance company; and where you have a situation where some person is setting a fire because of malice against another person."

Dominguez agreed.

"Fraud against an insurance company is a big reason, but revenge is the most common reason for someone to set an arson fire," he said. "The most common problem we have had is houses, where the house is set on fire for revenge purposes. Cars are also often arson fires set for revenge."

Only one percent of arson cases filed in the United States since 1963 have resulted in conviction, according to fire service experts.

"In most criminal cases, we don't have any problem proving a crime has been committed," Petty said. "But with arson, you have to prove that someone set a fire intentionally. You have to prove it was not a problem such as wiring or something along those lines, or an act of God" such as lightning. "It is one of the more difficult crimes to prosecute."

Said Dominguez: "It takes a lot of hard work, at the fire scene with shovels and a rake. You have to dig it out. Fires leave a trail, no matter how bad a house has been burned."

Midland's six fire investigators have solved seven of the 30 arson cases, for a conviction rate of 24 percent — much better than the one percent cited by experts.

McClures to meet movie counterparts

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

Fantasy meets reality twice this week.

First, Monday on a Los Angeles sound stage, when the McClure family whose ordeal is the basis for "Everybody's Baby: The Rescue of Jessica McClure," meet the cast members who will portray them in the made-for-TV movie.

Then on Wednesday, the production crew will arrive in Midland to capture real-life exterior images for the movie, expected to air on ABC May 21.

John Kander, co-executive producer of the project for Interscope Productions, said Friday by telephone from his Los Angeles office that a film crew will arrive in the Tall City Wednesday to "double check our locations" and begin filming on Thursday.

Outdoor shots of Midland Memorial Hospital and City Hall are expected to lend an air of West Texas authenticity to the movie.

Friday was scheduled to be the final day of shooting in the Bellflower, Calif., backyard which has been overhauled to take on the appearance of the Tanner Drive backyard where the world's attention was focused for the 58 hours the Midland toddler was wedged in an abandoned water well.

Monday and Tuesday have been set aside to shoot interior scenes recreating the appearance of the water well bore and the lateral tunnel workers chiseled through subsurface rock to make the nationally celebrated rescue.

The ominous, dark set has been constructed on sound stage No.6 inside Culver Studios in Culver City, Kander said.

"Closed set" conditions will be in place for the final two days of West Coast filming, according to Ellen Gonzalez, a spokesman for ABC-TV.

Kander said Chip, Cissy and Jessica McClure were expected to be on the set Monday, where they will meet their dramatic counterparts Will Oldham, Roxana Zal and twins Laura and Jennie Loeshe. Twins are used in television and movie productions to speed up shooting and comply with child labor laws, restricting the time youngsters can spend in front of the camera.

Other featured performers in "Everybody's Baby" will be: Patty Duke as victim's assistance worker Carolyn Henry; Beau Bridges as Midland Police Chief Richard Czech; Pat Hingle as Fire Chief James Roberts; and Sam Whipple as Paramedic Robert O'Donnell.

Other police personnel will be portrayed by: Walter Olkewicz as Sgt. Andy Glasscock; Rudy Ramos as Officer Manny Beltran; and Jack Rader as Cpl. Jim White.

New pretrial release plan sought

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The battle over pretrial release services in Midland is on again.

The fight was rekindled last week when Charlie Cox Harris, former head of the Pretrial Release Program in Midland County, recommended that county commissioners take another look at the service they dismantled two years ago.

Harris' proposal calls for the commissioners' court to reinstate the program, which supplemented bail-bonding with a personal recognizance bond system for persons charged with felony and misdemeanor offenses.

Resurrection of the controversial suggestion, which the county and district attorneys vehemently oppose, also has brought cries of anguish from the local anti-crime establishment.

"Criminals are being given an easier time of it all," said Kingdon Hughes, a spokesman for Neighbors Against Burglaries and Drugs which argues that the redemption of the Pretrial Release Program would open Pandora's Box and allow violent criminals to walk away from justice.

"It's just one more piece of the puzzle, meaning that the system is getting soft on crime," Hughes said.

Commissioner Win Brown doesn't object to taking "another look at the program" to determine whether the court's decision to cancel funding was based on misinformation presented at that time.

"I'm never opposed to looking at anything," he said.

Acknowledging concern about jail overcrowding, Harris argues that pretrial release programs serve a function vital to the continued smooth operation of the state's court system.

More than 150 prisoners were incarcerated last week in Midland County, according to Sheriff Gary Painter, who noted that at least 37 of those had to be transferred to jails in other counties.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will become cloudy and temperatures cooler by the first part of the week, according to National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport.

Today will be fair and cooler with a high in the low 70s, with winds expected from the east to southeast at 10 to 20 mph. Tonight increasing clouds are expected with a low near 40.

Monday will be cloudy and cooler with a high only near 60 and a less than 20 percent chance of light rain.

Saturday's high of 75 was 20 degrees cooler than the record high of 95, which was set in 1963. The low of 57 was nearly 30 degrees warmer than the record low of 28, which was set in 1938.

STATE

Gusts were reaching speeds in excess of 35 mph in North Texas and in Brownsville in South Texas wind gusts were clocked at up to 44 mph.

Lake wind advisories were posted for all but the southwest part of the state for this afternoon and small craft advisories were issued for the entire Texas Coast.

The front also brought cooler and drier air into North and West Texas, while warm moist air from the Gulf remained over much of the South and East Texas.

Winds were blowing from the north over much of the northern half of the state, while the rest of Texas had south to southwest winds. Wind speeds were generally in the 10 to 20 mile an hour range. However, gusty winds between 25 and 35 miles an hour swept across many locations around the state.

Temperatures were in the 50s over the Panhandle and in the 60s and 70s over most areas behind the cold front. Except for some readings in the low 100s in the Rio Grande Plains, the 80s and 90s were common over the rest of Texas. The late afternoon extremes ranged from 55 degrees at Dalhart to 104 degrees at Cotulla.

NATION

More than a foot of snow blanketed the North Carolina mountains Saturday while authorities in North Dakota rushed to complete a series of dikes to protect Fargo from the rising Red River.

Scorching temperatures continued in California, but the heat was expected to break Sunday with temperatures in most coastal districts back down to the 70s and 80s.

Across the continent, up to 14 inches of snow have accumulated in Macon County, N.C., and snow also was falling in Maine, New Hampshire, and in the Rockies.

Flood warnings were reported in Baton Rouge, La., where the Mississippi River was 4 feet below flood stage, and throughout the rest of the South. Flooding also threatened in New England, across North Dakota and Minnesota and in Indiana, Illinois and Ohio.

Along the Red River, residents of Fargo and neighboring Moorhead, Minn., readied for the flood-swollen river's predicted crest on Monday, 19 feet above flood stage.

Dean Peterson, a spokesman for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, said work on an extensive network of dikes was virtually completed.

"Right now, we're pretty much done ... if everything maintains the way it is," Peterson said Saturday.

There were scattered rainshowers from northern Arkansas to northern Illinois, from the central Gulf states to the lower Great Lakes region, and from Georgia to Virginia.

Legislators prepare for abortion battles

By LISA LEVITT RYCKMAN
AP National Writer

In statehouses across the country, lawmakers fear any significant alteration to Roe vs. Wade could trigger a political war that would make their years as reluctant soldiers in the abortion battles seem like a skirmish.

The landmark 1973 U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion ended most of the fierce struggling over the issue in state legislatures. But with the court reconsidering the issue, legislators are worrying about a return to the incessant emotional wrangling that preceded the ruling.

"If they overturn (Roe), it will be the most tragic thing to happen in a long time," said Rep. H.L. Jensen, a Democrat from Jackson, Wyo., who is the state House minority floor leader. "It will really be a nightmare."

The high court is scheduled to hear arguments April 26 on Missouri abortion regulations struck down last July by the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Groups on both sides of the issue believe the Supreme Court might use the case to modify, if not overturn, the Roe vs. Wade decision. Thirty-four states banned or severely restricted abortions in 1973, and 15 states still have anti-abortion laws on the books, although legal experts say it is not clear they could take effect if Roe vs. Wade was reversed.

"Gosh, I hope they don't stir that up again. (It) was one of the worst things I've been through as a legislator," said Republican Rep. Marvin Littlejohn, chairman of the Kansas House Public Health and Welfare Committee, recalling the pre-Roe days when strident, sign-carrying abortion foes jammed the statehouse to protest Kansas' liberal law.

The appeals court struck down key provisions of the Missouri law that banned use of public hospitals or public employees for abortions, prohibited use of taxpayer money for abortion counseling, required doctors to test a fetus older than 19 weeks for viability and declared that life begins at conception.

Most states stayed out of the case, but a few decided to enter the fray.

Louisiana, which boasts of having the nation's most stringent anti-abortion laws on the books, was joined by Arizona, Idaho, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin in filing a brief with the Supreme Court supporting Missouri's position.

Massachusetts, which won a 1988 court case blocking Reagan administration efforts to ban abortion at federally financed family planning clinics, filed a brief arguing against Missouri. Its brief was signed by California, Colorado, New York, Texas, Vermont and West Virginia.

Most states have adopted a wait-and-see attitude, but forces on both sides of the issue have begun mobilizing support.

"I'm sure if they overturned the decision, there will be at least a dozen legislators jumping in with bills," said Russell Maffei, legislative aide to New Jersey state Sen. Gerald Cardinale, a recently announced Republican candidate for governor. "It would be a knock-down, drag-out fight decided by half-dozen votes one way or the other."

The Supreme Court's decision in the Missouri case, expected in July, would come too late for the battles to begin this year; instead, most legislators see themselves starting the new decade under siege if Roe vs Wade is altered.

"That would tie up every legislature in the United States in a bitter debate," said Bradford Gorham, Rhode Island House minority leader.

For some, such as Maryland, that means the continuation of a no-win struggle that began in 1973 to whittle away at Roe vs. Wade on a local level. Last year, business stopped for several days in the Maryland Senate while anti-abortion lawmakers filibustered a budget bill amendment to ease restrictions on Medicaid financing of abortions.

Pro-choice legislators hold a one- or two-vote margin in the Maryland Senate — not enough to stop a filibuster but sufficient to block anti-abortion legislation. The result is a stalemate, a situation not likely to change.

"There is a gridlock with very, very strong, intense views that seem not to be able to get either position to move," Maryland Attorney General J. Joseph Curran said. "That's the reality of this state."

A reversal by the Supreme Court likely would trigger new legal fights over whether the anti-abortion laws still on the books in 15 states could take effect.

In Maryland, for example, the old law required all abortions to be approved by a hospital board and performed in a hospital. The old laws in Arizona, Idaho and Wisconsin made all abortions illegal except those to save a mother's life. In Oklahoma, the pre-Roe law provided for a prison term of up to five years for anyone convicted of performing an abortion.

Abortion opponents have kept the issue alive in many states as much as the courts have allowed. Two dozen states have passed laws that mandate parental consent for abortions for minor women, parental notification or both, and 10 or so are considering such bills this year.

All but a dozen states have cut off Medicaid financing of abortions for poor women; in many of those states, efforts to restrict that money come up year after year. In California, for example, the legislature has passed abortion-funding limits every year for the last decade, only to have them struck down by state courts.

Fights over such restrictions, while often heated and disruptive, would pale next to the battles that might ensue if the justices were to return abortion to state control, some observers say.

"Once it goes back to the states and people will be playing with real bullets, it's a whole different ballgame," said Michael Friedman, a Democrat from Miami Beach in the Florida House.

Many legislators predict a reversal of Roe vs. Wade would result in the issue dominating the legislative and electoral processes in many states.

"I've always said that if the court overturns on Tuesday, we'd introduce legislation on Wednesday to outlaw abortions," said Pennsylvania lawmaker Stephen Freind, leader of the anti-abortion forces in that state's General Assembly.

Louisiana, 14 other states have anti-abortion laws on books

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — The first battles following any major change in the U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 ruling legalizing abortion probably would erupt in Louisiana and 14 other states that still have anti-abortion laws on the books.

The laws now are unenforceable because of the Roe vs. Wade decision, but there is debate over whether they could take effect if the high court ever overturned the 1973 ruling. The issue would head immediately for the courts.

Louisiana's law says that if the high court ever reverses the 1973 decision, the state's anti-abortion rules go back into force. Idaho and Illinois have similar laws.

"Our law is broad and general and says the state can regulate abortions totally within limits of the U.S. Supreme Court decisions," said Jo Anne Lavert, a staff attorney for Attorney General William Guste.

However, Democratic state Rep. Woody Jenkins, who has written most of Louisiana's anti-abortion laws since 1973, said he doubted the laws could take effect again and predicted a new law would have to be passed.

Daniel Stier, an assistant attorney general in Wisconsin, which has an anti-abortion law on the books from before the 1973 ruling, said he was not sure what would happen.

"Until we get a decision, it's so speculative it would be a waste of time to guess what the effect would be on Wisconsin law," he said. "There are an infinite number of possibilities of what might happen to the laws on our books."

Stier said he would advise district attorneys not to begin prosecuting women for violating state law if the Supreme Court reversed Roe vs. Wade.

Walter Turner, an assistant state attorney general in Alabama, said his office could not speak specifically about the state's 1852 anti-abortion law unless the Supreme Court overturned Roe vs. Wade. But he said there had been previous cases in which old state laws went back into effect after the Supreme Court reversed itself.

The other states with anti-abortion laws pre-dating Roe vs. Wade are Arkansas, Arizona, Connectituct, Delaware, Michigan, Mississippi, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, South Dakota and West Virginia. An attempt to repeal New Hampshire's law has passed the House and is now before the Senate.

New York could become 'haven'

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — New York was the nation's abortion capital before the U.S. Supreme Court legalized abortions nationwide in 1973, and it likely would emerge again as a haven if the court ever reversed the Roe vs. Wade decision.

Women wanting to end their pregnancies would have more options than they did 16 years ago, when 34 states outlawed abortions, but New York still has very liberal rules on who may have an abortion.

Some states allow the procedure only because of Roe vs. Wade and would see renewed attempts to outlaw or restrict abortions. Fifteen states still have anti-abortion laws on the books, although there is debate whether they could take effect if Roe vs. Wade was reversed.

"New York would retain the abortion laws it has now and women from other states would come in here to get freely accessible abortions, which would be a burden" on health services, predicted Janet Benshoof, director of reproductive freedom for the American Civil Liberties Union.

Under New York's law, abortions are permitted up to the 24th week of pregnancy, as long as they are performed by a physician. Abortions after 24 weeks are allowed if a woman's life is in danger.

New York is one of just 12 states that still provide Medicaid money for abortions for poor women, and it was the only one of the 16 states permitting abortions before 1973 that did not restrict abortions to state residents.

In neighboring Pennsylvania, by contrast, women under age 18 are required to get their parents' consent for an abortion. The state also requires women to be hospitalized for the procedure and to report it to state authorities.

Things are even more restrictive in some parts of the Midwest, Benshoof said. She said she knows of women who have flown into New York for abortions from Minnesota, where abortions are prohibited after 20 weeks of pregnancy.

PRETRIAL

Painter added that 49 of the total number are awaiting transfer to the Texas Department of Corrections, which anticipates about 20,000 prison beds will be needed over the next two years.

Lawmakers are considering whether to issue $343 million in bonds to build new prisons to hold 11,000 new inmates. More than 7,000 already are waiting in county jails because a federal court order limits admissions to the TDC.

District Attorney Al Schorre doesn't expect that TDC's problems will do much to resurrect the Pretrial Release Program, which cost the county $25,000 to operate.

"As I recall, the program was put in to place because of our extreme jail overcrowding problems," he said. "Although we're continuing to ship prisoners out of county, there appears to be a light at the end of the tunnel with the construction of the new jail."

Harris' argument for reinstatement of the Pretrial Release Program is bolstered by figures which show that it was necessary to revoke only five of the total number of personal recognizance bonds issued during the program's six-month lifespan.

"And we only had one that we had to go out and chase," he said.

Harris, citing statistics that show more people are detained prior to trial than are confined following conviction, asserted that in too many cases the system — intended to provide for the release of defendants — results in arbitrary and unnecessary detention.

Bail-bonding is especially unfair to economically disadvantaged prisoners who often are unable to obtain money, equal to 10 percent of their bond, to pay bondsmen, he said.

Defense attorney Jeff Hinkley favors the resurrection of the Pretrial Release Program simply because "it's difficult enough to defend a person accused of committing a crime without him having to sit up there in jail," he said.

"Not all prisoners are guilty nor do they need to be maintained continuously in jail," said Hinkley. "I don't want my client in jail if he doesn't need to be there."

But NABD and other opponents of Harris' proposal reply that the Pretrial Release Program is a waste of county tax dollars.

County Attorney Mark Dettman observed that prisoners charged with nonviolent offenses already are being released on personal recognizance bonds as long as they don't pose a risk of fleeing from justice.

"Therefore, I'd be opposed to spending taxpayers' money on any program we don't need," he said.

GEORGIA

That appeared to be a reference to calls by Abkhazians to secede from Georgia and become a separate Soviet republic.

Many of the nations more than 100 ethnic groups have been taking advantage of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of glasnost, or openness, to demand greater autonomy from Moscow in their cultural, economic and political affairs.

Tempers have flared repeatedly in the neighboring Caucasus Mountains republics of Armenia and Azerbaijan, where more than 90 people have been killed in ethnic turmoil.

Soviet troops moved into Tbilisi on Friday after strikes and the rallies closed much of the city of 1.2 million, which is 1,650 miles southeast of Moscow.

Early Saturday, the soldiers were concentrated around government buildings and had not clashed with the demonstrators, said Vitaly Khudayans, a Russian resident of Tbilisi interviewed after flying to Moscow in the morning.

Several sources said the unrest began when Abkhazians, a tiny minority, gathered in the ancient settlement of Lichni two weeks ago to demand secession from Georgia and creation of a separate republic. Georgian activists and Abkhazians clashed last weekend in the resort city of Sukhumi, sources said.

"Physical evidence is very important, probably the most important thing we have to work with," he said. "And a lot of our cases are solved by talking to people, just interviews. A lot of people don't know we are certified peace officers. The citizens never see us working a case, but when we determine there is an arson, we keep working it just like law enforcement would."

Many recent fires in the Midland area have been started by carelessness and swept through dry thick brush by high winds. But they aren't classified as arson fires, which according to state law must be started "with intent to destroy or damage."

"We've had a lot of grass and fence fires set intentionally that have caused damage, but they aren't classified as arsons," Dominguez said.

Lawmakers take the crime seriously. Arson in Texas is a second-degree felony, punishable by a prison sentence of two to 20 years. But if a firefighter or another person is injured in an arson blaze, the law enhances the act to a first-degree felony, punishable by a sentence from five years to life in prison.

BEE SMART

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1989 Regional Spelling Bee April 15 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through April 14. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

phlegm — (noun) "Phlegm" is mucus secreted in abnormal quantities in the respiratory passages during illness. It has long been recognized as a sign of a problem. Ancient philosophers believed that a person's health depended on having the proper balance of four "humors," one of which was phlegm. Too much of a humor would affect the stability of the body and mind. While ancient cures were often worse than the illness, the philosophers were correct in the case of phlegm.

Are Bible classes unconstitutional?

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — An attorney for the Corpus Christi Independent School District told district trustees that a Bible course being taught currently is unconsitutional because of the way it is funded.

An assistant superintendent is scheduled Monday to make recommendations to the trustees based on the attorney J.W. Gary's opinion.

The high school class is taught by teachers hired and paid by Bible in the Schools, a Corpus Christi interdenominational group supported by donations from churches and individuals.

Gary said the district may teach a Bible course, but, to avoid the constitutional separation of church and state, it should be funded by the district rather than the outside group.

"The numerous contacts between the (Bible in the Schools) committee and CCISD, including the funding of the course, selecting the teachers for the course, and formulating the course's curriculum, constitute an excessive entanglement between church and state," and thus would be judged unconstitutional, according to a detailed legal memorandum prepared by L. Timothy Perrin, a member of Gary's Corpus Christi law firm.

Bible in the Schools has hired and paid Bible teachers for the school district since 1942.

Perrin's memo said the school may accept funding for Bible study from private organizations as long the district has supervision over the hiring of teachers and course curriculum.

District officials sought Gary's opinion on the Bible class after the Corpus Christi Caller-Times reported that similar arrangements at the university level were found in unconstitutional by Attorney General Jim Mattox.

About 90 students are currently enrolled in the district's Bible classes, which are taught by three teachers hired and paid by Bible in the Schools.

Anti-abortionists charged

AUSTIN (AP) — The Travis County attorney filed criminal trespass charges, with possible fines exceeding $150,000, against an anti-abortion group, a newspaper reported Saturday.

Three complaints allege a group called Austin Rescue trespassed "while conducting the affairs of the business, and by aiding, instructing and funding others to commit the offense," Travis County Attorney Ken Oden said in a story published by the Austin American-Statesman.

Austin Rescue leader Rex Moses said he knows of no precedent for this type of action against an anti-abortion group.

"We don't think we committed a crime," Moses said. "What we were doing is on behalf of the innocent little children being brutally killed in these buildings."

He said the charges were an "attempt to intimidate us by harassing us," and that Oden was jeopardizing the organization's chances for a fair trial by implying it is guilty.

Changes in SBC sought

ATLANTA (AP) — A leading Texas Baptist chose Georgia for the first state chapter of a movement to oust fundamentalists who control the Southern Baptist Convention.

"For the past 10 years, the presidents of the Southern Baptist Convention — and those associated with them — have misused the power of the presidency to turn the convention into something it never has been since it was organized in this state (in 1845)," said the Rev. Winfred Moore of Amarillo, a former vice president of the 14.7 million-member denomination.

Speaking to about 100 ministers and lay people at a Hapeville cafeteria Friday, Moore urged them to join the new organization, Baptists Committed to the Southern Baptist Convention.

The organization aims to win the convention's presidency from the fundamentalists who have held it since 1979, and to change the rules so that no group can win exclusive control of the denomination.

Rev. Moore said the group prefers to be called "centrists."

The organization was endorsed by the Rev. Monroe F. Swilley Jr., founder of Mercer University in Atlanta, and the Rev. Floyd Roebuck of Rome, a former state convention president.

Relic won't be returned

NEW YORK (AP) — The American Museum of Natural History has refused to give a more than 150-year-old relic to a Cree Indian who ran 2,700 miles in his quest to retrieve the sacred object for his people.

Museum spokesman Herbert Kurz said Friday that the museum sent a letter to Jim Thunder's home in Edmonton, Canada, notifying him of the museum's decision.

Thunder said he was a great-great-grandson, through adoption, of Chief Big Bear, the Cree leader who created the artifact — a sacred calico-wrapped bundle holding bear claws, sweet grass and a plug of tobacco. It was meant to give his people spiritual strength and guidance.

Thunder said Big Bear told him ten years ago, through dreams and visions, to retrieve the bundle and take it to his tribe in Western Canada where it would be used in prayers and sacred Indian ceremonies.

Told of the museum's refusal to give him the bundle, Thunder said: "I had been anticipating this."

He declined to say if he would continue efforts to retrieve the artifact.

Abortion rights activists ready for march

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scores of thousands of pro-choice activists, including a huge array of Hollywood superstars, have thronged into the capital for a march Sunday billed as the largest demonstration ever in favor of abortion rights.

"Tomorrow is only a beginning," declared Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women. "It is a statement to President Bush and to the Supreme Court that the women of this country are not going back."

At a news conference at which she and other march organizers were cheered by dozens of show business personalities, Ms. Yard added: "At last the majority of this country is going to stand up for our rights to control our reproductive lives."

She predicted a turnout that would "easily" more than double the size of a similar march in Washington three years ago. Police estimated that crowd at 90,000.

Kate Michelman, director of the National Abortion Rights League, declined to predict a number but said: "I'll tell you this. I think we're going to close Washington down."

The march launches an intensified campaign by the pro-choice community to cement public opinion in favor of a women's right to abortion as the Supreme Court nears a major challenge to its landmark 1973 decision, Roe vs. Wade, that legalized the procedure. The new case is scheduled for argument April 26.

Actress Morgan Fairchild, among 250 show business personalities participating in the march and related events, said: "We are here to support the majority in this country who believe that Americans can be trusted to make their own decisions about reproductive health care, without interference from government at any level. We believe that we, the people, rather than the politicians, should control our most intimate decisions.

"We recognize that we may have been to complacent," said Ms. Fairchild. "In 1973 ... we thought this issue had been put to rest. We thought that our years of risking infection, sterility, and death itself were finally over. We thought that American women would no longer die each year from botched, illegal abortions. We thought we and our daughters were safe."

But with the pending Missouri case before a more conservative court, "We are relearning what Thomas Jefferson taught this country more than 200 years ago: Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," she said.

Among those joining the Hollywood delegation were Karen Akers, Ellen Burstyn, Glenn Close, Jane Fonda, Bonnie Franklin, Lee Grant, Veronica Hamel, Mariel Hemingway, Margot Kidder, Michelle Lee, Melissa Manchester, Kelly McGillis, an 8-month-pregnant Susan Sarandon and Cybill Shepherd.

The pro-choice production includes footage of a woman undergoing an abortion to show the procedure is "safe and simple," and includes at look at the almost indiscernible remains taken from the uterus in a first-trimester abortion.

The videotape "puts it where it's at," said Eleanor Smeal, president of the Fund for the Feminist Majority. "It talks about abortion as a public health necessity and essential for the well-being of millions of American women.

"It features the central issue of this debate: What is abortion, why it's needed and why the public health and medical establishment of our society and worldwide is for keeping it legal."

"I'll tell you this. I think we're going to close Washington down."
— Kate Michelman, National Abortion Rights League

The tape is being distributed to government officials and members of Congress and state legislatures as well as on college campuses nationwide, she said.

March organizers said other parts of their campaign include applying pressure on government agencies and pharmaceutical companies to improve available contraception, and standing up to Operation Rescue's attempts to close down abortion clinics.

President Bush told anti-abortion activists a few days after he moved into the Oval Office that he wanted the Supreme Court's 1973 decision overturned.

March organizers said participants included tens of thousands of students from about 500 colleges, many of them in the Northeast, as well as delegations from churches, labor unions and other groups. The weather forecast called for sunny skies, moderate breezes, and temperatures in the 60s by the noon start.

A counterdemonstration "death march" by anti-abortion advocates was expected to draw about 300 people, according to Olivia Gans, director of American Victims of Abortion. "Our organization is here to support equal rights for unborn women — specifically the right to life," she said.

The march route of the pro-choice demonstrators will take them past a field of 4,400 white crosses erected by anti-abortion activists near the Capitol, symbolizing the number of abortions performed on an average day.

Proposed bills deal with oil's transport

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government and industry were caught unprepared when the Exxon Valdez spilled 10 million gallons of crude oil into Prince William Sound, and Congress is determined not to let it happen again.

In response to the worst oil spill in North American history, lawmakers are scrutinizing federal statutes related to oil transportation so no future spill is allowed to get so far out of control.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, has introduced legislation that would require the president to immediately initiate a cleanup of oil spills unless he is sure the owner or operator of the vessel is doing it.

President Bush announced Friday he was sending the military to Valdez to help clean up, but Mitchell was angry that he waited until two weeks after the March 24 accident to take any action.

"A federal takeover of the cleanup effort was warranted after it became clear on the day of the accident that Alyeska (the oil pipeline service company) and Exxon had not responded in the manner called for by the contingency plan and did not have sufficient equipment available to contain the spill," Mitchell said.

His proposal would set up a $500 million federal fund to pay for the spills when those responsible can't be found.

Both Mitchell's bill and one offered by Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., are amendments to the Clean Water Act.

Baucus is proposing that minimum penalties for spilling oil be increased from $5,000 to $50,000 and, in the case of big spills, to $50 per barrel. That would have slapped a multi-million dollar fine on Exxon for the Valdez accident.

House Republicans also are working on legislation to improve readiness for oil tanker accidents, but don't want the federal government to get stuck with the bill.

The measure being designed by the House Republican Research Committee would require industry to be more specific about emergency response plans and have more equipment ready, as well as to pay for all the costs of cleanup.

Legislation proposed by Rep. Walter Jones, D-N.C., would consolidate four federal laws on who gets blamed and billed for damage caused by spills.

His proposal also would increase liability, the categories for which compensation should be paid and the size of the fund for making compensation. Money for the fund would come from a 1.3-cent-per-barrel fee on crude oil sold in the United States.

Jones' subcommittee on the Coast Guard will be working on legislation reauthorizing that service and likely will make changes reflecting reaction to the Valdez disaster, said a staff member of the subcommittee.

Cornel Martin noted that the bill could be a vehicle for strengthening rules against alcohol consumption by tanker crews, or requiring more extensive background checks on those renewing their pilot's licenses.

The pilot of the Exxon Valdez, who was in his cabin when the tanker ran aground, admitted drinking before the accident and, as a motorist, had a history of driving while intoxicated arrests. He has been charged in the accident.

Both Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., and Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., have introduced bills that would give the Coast Guard access to the Federal National Driver Register to check on driving records of potential tanker pilots.

Recovered oil could end up as pavement

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — Thousands of gallons of crude oil glop scooped up from Prince William Sound are being loaded onto barges and could eventually be sold and even used to pave highways, Exxon said.

As operations enter their third week, workers have recovered more than 16,000 barrels of the 240,000 barrels spilled from the Exxon Valdez. The oil sits in barges along with thousands of gallons of seawater that have been sieved, sucked, sopped and strained. A barrel is 42 gallons.

"For every gallon of oil we recover, we get one or two gallons of water," said Henry Beathard, an Exxon spokesman.

Beathard said despite the waterlogged condition of the oil, it has some commercial potential.

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — Shifting wind set oil from the Exxon Valdez on a collision course for the nation's No. 1 fishing port, while the Pentagon Saturday sent a special team and equipment to help clean up the giant slick.

Wind from the southeast and northeast pushed oil toward Kodiak Island, 300 miles from the site of the nation's worst oil spill two weeks ago. The direction of the crude raised fears that the port town of Kodiak, which last year had $166 million worth of catches, could be polluted within days, officials said.

"Geographically, Kodiak is downwind of the (oil) area if there are east winds," National Weather Service meteorologist Dan Keeton said.

The stricken tanker, meanwhile, was sitting dead calm in a flat sea Saturday with a half-dozen smaller boats clustered around it, steam drifting from its stack, a radar arm rotating and a helicopter on its deck. The Exxon Valdez is in a protected cove for emergency repairs.

An orange boom designed to contain any leaking oil encircled the 987-foot tanker. In every direction beyond the boom, however, long streamers of congealed oil the color of chocolate milk drifted off for miles.

Friday, President Bush said he would send federal troops to help with the cleanup and put the federal government virtually in control of the effort. Bush insisted, however, that "We are not federalizing this operation."

The new federal authority was apparent Saturday as the Coast Guard began to move into a command center set up by Exxon in a Valdez office building.

"I think we had a problem with organization — that's what frustrated everybody," said Rear Adm. Edward Nelson Jr., the commander of the Coast Guard's Alaskan district. "We now see a clean line of what's going to go on."

A containment boom extends around the oil tanker Exxon Valdez Friday, while the punctured ship remains in anchorage off Naked Island, in Prince William Sound. The tanker, which spilled more than 10 million gallons of crude oil after hitting a reef in the sound two weeks ago, will be moved after holes in its hull are temporarily repaired.

AP Laserphoto

Some Defense Department equipment was already arriving, including Navy skimmers and oil containment booms.

A Pentagon "assessment team" made up of engineering, environmental, medical and logistical personnel from bases in Alaska, Hawaii and Washington, D.C., assembled at the Alaskan Air Command. It was scheduled to begin work today.

At Sawmill Bay, where workers have been struggling for a week to hold oil away from four salmon hatcheries, a shipment of containment booms from the U.S. Navy turned out to be only half of the 16,000 feet promised, and only 24 inches deep instead of 41 inches.

With favorable weather, however, 41-inch booms won't be necessary, Prince William Sound Aquaculture Corp. spokesman Bruce Suzumoto said.

Fishermen and merchants of the nearby fishing community of Cordova said Exxon has been slow to process claims, including compensation for cleanup expenses and the loss of the $12 million herring season.

"Cordova remains a forgotten town," said R.S. Kopchek, a local fisherman. "We are the people who are hurt the most."

The Department of Fish and Game said oil has been spotted about five miles from Esther Bay, site of world's largest salmon hatchery. Esther Bay is about 50 miles west of Valdez, and north of Sawmill Bay.

Fish and game officials also announced that autopsies on two deer originally said to have been killed by oil showed one death caused by old age and the other by stress.

In Kodiak, officials have begun daily meetings to make contingency plans and have expressed concern that there won't be enough oil containment supplies left for that part of Alaska. The state has transferred some managers of its cleanup at Valdez to Kodiak to begin making preparations for a cleanup there.

"We're going to try to get down there and break it up if possible," Nelson said.

Nelson said authorities were sending herring boats with nets and Coast Guard cutters with water cannons to try to break up the wind-driven oil before it reaches Kodiak.

The weather was better around Valdez. High pressure that has brought a week of favorable weather to the Prince William Sound area appears to be holding off encroaching fronts that threatened to blow oil into untainted shorelines and hatcheries.

The wind pattern created by the high-pressure ridge has pushed much of the oil away from land and into the Gulf of Alaska, where it is more likely to break up.

"This has been miracle weather," said Michelle Hahn O'Leary, a member of the Cordova District Fishermen United.

Oil has already traveled over a 3,000-square-mile area. So far, only an estimated 16,000 barrels, about 7 percent of the 240,000 barrels spilled, has been sopped and vacuumed up. A barrel is 42 gallons.

The disaster has killed thousands of birds and sea otters along the central Alaskan coast, cost fishermen millions of dollars in lost catch and continues to threaten valuable salmon fisheries.

Oil industry group to review safety measures

NEW ORLEANS (NYT) — In an effort to show the petroleum industry's concern over the disastrous effects of the oil spill in Alaska, the American Petroleum Institute said Friday that it would begin an immediate review of operating methods and safety measures.

Top executives from the major oil companies, including Exxon, whose tanker's grounding spilled the oil in Alaska, will conduct the review and make recommendations for improved policy.

The panel, which is to begin work this week, is expected to publish its findings within three months.

"We feel the need to reassure the public that we are doing everything we can," Charles J. DiBona, the group's president, told reporters at the hotel in New Orleans where the petroleum institute's committee on public policy met.

Richard Morrow, the chairman and chief executive of Amoco, who is also chairman of the trade association, said the petroleum industry would be prepared to adopt "whatever measures are necessary to avoid the repetition of such an accident" and to assure an effective response to any accident.

The safety study will focus primarily on issues relating to oil transportation, Morrow said.

Humor Project hopes to lighten up participants lives

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. (AP) — Homicide detectives rank high among the types of workers most in need of a sense of humor to help lighten a difficult profession. So someone concocted a slogan, slapped it on a button and Voila!: "Our day begins when yours ends."

That's the serious point behind humor — how it can relieve stress — for Joel Goodman, founder and director of the Humor Project.

The group is sponsoring its fourth annual national conference this weekend on "The Positive Power of Humor and Creativity." It drew hundreds of participants from as far away as Australia, Hawaii, Sweden and Singapore.

"One myth is that humor equals joke-telling," Goodman told an auditorium packed to capacity with educators and business people, health care workers, chaplains, consultants and administrators. "Humor is not always appropriate, but it's more appropriate than people realize."

But this is not some bunch of jokers brought together to have a laugh — even though consummate funnyman Jay Leno took a break from his "Tonight Show" guest duties and touring to perform for the group during the opening session Friday.

The conference aims to help folks deal with stress in the home and workplace, find ways to be creative and also "to take their jobs seriously but themselves lightly," Goodman said.

For the bankers, managers, engineers and tycoons, there also are workshops to help them use humor as a management tool, "as a way of improving the corporate culture," Goodman said.

"There's a lot of pressure in business to be more creative, to find better ways to increase productivity," said Jane Conner, who owns Centerpoint Associates, a management training and consulting firm in Austin, Texas.

She said she often runs across managers who are "challenged beyond the skills and techniques that they have to handle those challenges."

"If they can laugh a little bit, it's just another way to look at a problem and deal with stress," she said.

Goodman has several theories about the power of humor, and he says everyone has an innate sense of humor "that's often covered over by years of misuse."

"But even if we missed the boat when that quality was handed out, we can still develop it," Goodman told his audience of 1,000 Friday.

He offered examples of humor from everyday life, adding that "nothing is quite as funny as the unintended humor of reality."

Take, for instance, the notice that appeared on a church bulletin board alerting parishioners to the sermons for the day and evening services.

"9:30 a.m. Jesus Walks on Water. 5:30 p.m. Searching for Jesus."

Or how about the sign on a hospital bulletin board?

"Research Shows That The First 5 Minutes of Life Can Be Most Risky." Penciled underneath: "The Last 5 Minutes Ain't So Hot Either."

SPILL

Though Alaska officials had complained Exxon's handling of the cleanup was too bureaucratic and too slow, the oil company will continue to provide materials, manpower and money.

Fishermen in Prince William Sound, who have spent the past two weeks defending four salmon fisheries, hoped to use new skimmers and booms to attack oil trapped in dozens of bays and inlets in the sound.

"The plan is to boom in the oil in places like Snug Harbor and Herring Bay and then bring in the skimmers to collect the oil," said Rick Steiner, a state adviser to the Cordova fishermen's union.

Doug Mertz, an assistant state attorney general, said a review of state and federal law indicates Exxon and Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., the operator of the trans-Alaska oil-pipeline terminal, could face fines exceeding $700 million as a result of the accident in which the Exxon Valdez rammed a reef.

An environmental group in Alaska said Friday it had received the state's blessing to establish a fund to assist in the volunteer wildlife effort, and to monitor Exxon's cleanup progress.

State officials issued an emergency order Friday to Alyeska, directing it to correct problems with its oil-spill response program.

"Alaska won't tolerate any more excuses for not responding to an oil spill, no matter what the size," Gov. Steve Cowper said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Soviet flag causes flap

PINE BLUFF, Ark. (AP) — A Soviet flag fluttering over a paper factory made some employees see red, but organizers of a weekend visit to town by five Soviet women said Saturday the flag was a friendly greeting.

International Paper Co. always runs up foreign flags for overseas visitors, said spokesman Gary O'Rielly.

Valentina Matvienko, vice mayor of Leningrad and leader of the delegation, said the women appreciated the gesture and were "grateful to the citizens of Pine Bluff for their hospitality and friendliness toward our delegation."

Employees circulated a petition Friday questioning the flying of the flag, but did not get a response from the plant's management. O'Rielly said he never saw a petition.

Paper worker Albert Bolls said it was upsetting to see the flag when he ended his shift Friday night.

"I don't think there ought to be a Russian flag flying over an American plant. I'm a veteran and I don't like it. Russia is a communist country and we're not," Bolls said.

3 die in collision with train

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A pickup truck collided with a Burlington Northern freight train Saturday afternoon, killing three people in the truck and leaving a fourth in critical condition.

Authorities said one of the train cars involved was carrying an undetermined chemical and developed a slight leak in the accident. No one was exposed, said Edward Fowler, an employee of the Amcare ambulance service.

Fowler said the fourth person in the truck was taken in critical condition to an Oklahoma City hospital.

Plates funding trip to Mars

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Sales of Challenger license plates have already paid for a memorial to the shuttle's seven astronauts and are helping to fund future trips to Mars, state officials say.

The design on the license plate features the space shuttle rising on an orange-and-white cloud into a blue sky. It was conceived in the months following the 1986 shuttle explosion in which the seven lost their lives.

The plates, costing an extra $15, went on sale in January 1987. More than 500,000 people have bought or renewed the plates, bringing in $5 million in 1987 and about $4.5 million last year.

The state Legislature designated a quarter of the money for scholarships and another quarter for the Florida Technical Research and Development Authority to research manned missions to Mars.

Damage control could determine Wright's future

WASHINGTON (NYT) — All he ever wanted was to be speaker of the House, Rep. Jim Wright once said. Wright got what he wanted in 1987, after 32 years in Congress. Now the question is whether he can keep it.

After 10 months of investigation, the House Ethics Committee is about to release the findings of its inquiry into Wright's personal finances and activity in office.

But the speaker, his advisers and allies are engaged in a flurry of efforts aimed at controlling whatever damage the report inflicts.

They have used the time-honored Washington technique of meeting quietly with colleagues in Congress as well as reporters to mete out the bad news in measured doses in the hope that by the time it becomes official it will be less important as news.

Similar pre-emptive strikes were used during the Watergate scandal and at other times when a president or congressman faced unavoidable embarrassment.

In Wright's case, Democrats familiar with the case said the committee's deliberations have boiled down to two questions. Was there anything improper in Wright's complicated financial relationship with a Fort Worth developer? Did the speaker evade limits on honorariums by selling books to universities, lobbyists and businesses in lieu of accepting speaking fees from them?

While congressional Democrats were letting it be known that they expect the committee to find that Wright violated at least some House rules in these areas, the speaker and his staff were busy last week trying to gain control of the situation.

He said that if he had broken any rules, his transgressions were inadvertent and unintentional. His staff went further, saying that any violations were along the lines of a parking offense.

The whole effort was clearly aimed at taking the sting out of whatever action the committee does take.

Newspaper articles began appearing about the committee's deliberations, generally not revealing sources.

The Washington Post described what was happening as "a public relations counteroffensive" launched by Wright's staff.

The New York Times described how "supporters of Mr. Wright" were prepared to portray findings that he violated house rules as minor.

Given the way the game is played, a Wright ally said he was not unhappy with a story that said the Ethics Committee was headed toward a finding he had violated House rules.

"It sets up expectations we can meet," the ally said.

Reagan officials pressured nations for Contra aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even though the Reagan administration vowed it wasn't helping the Contras in defiance of Congress' wishes, the government now admits that President Reagan, George Shultz, William Casey and dozens of others were leaning on other countries to give the Nicaraguan rebels arms and money.

Using code names like "Tipped Kettle II," "Elephant Herd," and "Focal Point," U.S. officials praised, cajoled, warned and admonished other governments in the massive secret effort to keep the Contra movement alive.

Details of the effort were laid out in an extraordinary document read into the record Thursday in the trial of Oliver North, the fired National Security Council aide accused of breaking the law in efforts to help the Nicaraguan rebels. The government and North's attorneys agreed that the facts in the document are true.

The outlines of this arm-twisting effort had emerged in previous news reports and in the congressional investigation into the Iran-Contra case. But the extent of the government's efforts and the number of individuals who were aware of them are described for the first time in the summary of facts.

The document names at least 40 U.S. officials, including President Bush — then Reagan's vice president — who were aware of the clandestine efforts to get assistance for the Contras, including during the 1984-85 period when Congress blocked direct and indirect U.S. aid to the rebels, and into 1986 when only nonlethal aid was allowed.

North's defense hinges on the argument he orchestrated the efforts at the orders of White House superiors. That proposition is bolstered by the court document, in which 107 points of fact are asserted.

Those facts show the aid efforts took bizarre turns.

Longtime enemies Taiwan and the People's Republic of China were both approached to aid the Contras. Apparently the meeting with the representative of the Communist government was under FBI surveillance, because the document says the FBI was asked to keep its report on the meeting secret.

In another apparent case of the government watching itself, the document said the White House and the CIA "learned of reports" of a meeting between an Israeli government official and Michael Armacost, then undersecretary of state for political affairs, to discuss Israeli help for the Contras.

And North met with Panamanian strongman Manuel Noriega, who offered to kill Sandinista leaders if the United States would help him clean up his image. North rejected the assassination proposal, but said Noriega might help in sabotage in Nicaragua. The Reagan administration later indicted Noriega in connection with drug dealing.

The court document's 107 points center on Reagan administration efforts to enlist other countries in the Contra effort. In particular, major pressure was applied to get Nicaragua's four closest neighbors — El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica, and Guatemala — to provide arms, facilitate weapons deliveries and allow their territory to be used for support operations.

Quid pro quo arrangements abounded.

Reagan, depicted as taking an active role in third-country solicitation, was told in February 1985 that Honduras needed "some enticements ... so that it would maintain its aid to the resistance," said a memo from then-National Security adviser Robert McFarlane.

Subsequently "the president personally authorized the entire plan" in which the Hondurans were to receive expedited economic aid and military assistance in exchange for helping the Contras, the court summary says.

Bush is cited as an emissary from the White House to Honduras, carrying word in March 1985 to then-President Roberto Suazo that Reagan would speed U.S. aid to his country.

While Reagan was telephoning and sending messages to Suazo urging that he do all in his power to "support those who struggle for freedom and democracy," State Department officials publicly were sounding a different tone. They assured congressional hearings that the government view was that solicitation of third countries was illegal

Later in 1985, the Hondurans again were waffling.

They were upset that promised U.S. aid had not come through and were "particularly angry that the U.S. Embassy there had recently denied any connection with the resistance, referring inquiries to representatives of Honduras," the court summary said.

By early 1986, the importance of getting Honduran cooperation for the secret Contra air resupply network led to plans for Bush to play a major role in pressuring the new president, Jose Azcona.

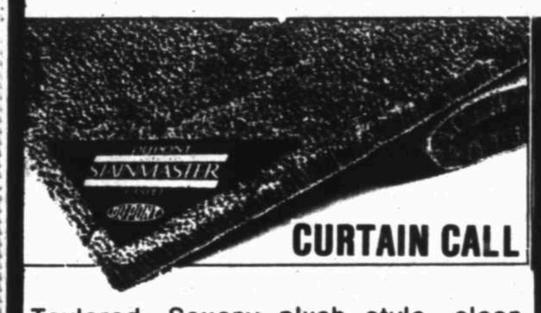

The document does not say whether Bush ultimately carried it out, but cites a State Department memo prepared for a Bush meeting with Azcona, with the Honduran expected to insist on getting "clear economic and social benefits."

HOW THEY VOTED

House adopts uniform poll-closing bill

Congressional Quarterly

KEY HOUSE VOTE

House adopts uniform poll-closing bill. In a move designed to raise voter turnout in presidential election years, the House April 5 approved 238-154 a bill that would create a uniform poll-closing time for presidential elections. The legislation would require polls to close at 9 p.m. Eastern Standard Time. In the West, daylight savings time would be extended, so polls in the Pacific time zone would close at 7 p.m.

The measure is designed to prevent the television disclosure of presidential election results from influencing voter turnout in states where the polls are still open. In 1980, network exit polls and an early concession by President Carter were blamed for lowering turnout in Western states and possibly affecting results in state and local contests.

Identical bills have passed the House on two previous occasions, but none have passed the Senate.

Supporters of the bill said early disclosure of the presidential race winner dissuades voters in states where the polls are still open from casting their ballots, and thus, compromises the integrity of an election. "We do not maximize participation when citizens feel that their votes do not count, and that an election has been decided without them," said Bill Thomas, R-Calif.

Opponents questioned whether the issue was a problem at all and warned that the bill would shorten polling hours in some states and possibly lower turnout in those states. They also said lengthening voting hours in Eastern states would raise election administration costs. "(W)e have a Rube Goldberg which will louse up the states, cost them extra money ... cause them a lower turnout, in order to attack a problem that does not exist," objected Bill Frenzel, R-Minn.

Voting against: Smith (R), Combest (R).

Not Voting: Stenholm (D).

KEY SENATE VOTE

Senate reaffirms 'whistleblower' reward provision. The Senate April 5 voted 55-43 to reject an amendment that would have eliminated the possibility of offering rewards to government "whistleblowers" — individuals who provide information about major fraud against the federal government.

The amendment was voted on in the course of debate over the Major Fraud Act Amendments of 1989, which would authorize rewards of up to $250,000 to government whistleblowers. The bill then overwhelmingly passed the Senate and moved to the House.

Those favoring the motion to keep the reward provision in the bill noted that paying a reward for information on fraud was nothing new or radical, and in fact, a similar incentive provision was included in the insider trading bill passed by the 100th Congress. "We live in a real world, and until contractor fraud is wiped out, we must use every tool available, including ... incentives to informants," said Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio.

Those opposing the motion argued that the prospect of a big reward could undermine the credibility of a whistleblower and encourage a proliferation of unfounded accusations. "I object to the bounty-hunter provision," said Dale Bumpers, D-Ark. "I find it repugnant, repulsive, extreme bribery to be a patriot ... to do your civic duty."

Voting to reaffirm the reward provision: Gramm (R).

Voting against: Bentsen (D).

MIT provides space for crackpot theories

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Would-be scientists who took a wrong turn on the road to enlightenment wound up in their own little corner at the mecca of knowledge known as MIT, enshrined in the Archives of Useless Research.

The archives, a compendium of crackpot theories also known as the "nut collection," preserve 200 books, drawings and pamphlets by brave laymen who sought to explain things like "Why Life Exists and Allied Subjects."

But archivist Kathy Marquis says the weird science doesn't entirely clash with the serious science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, since both stem from people's desire to explain their existence.

"We want to collect basically not only what worked but what didn't work," she said.

At least two of the theorists from the 1920s, '30s and '40s were borne out by later scientists, warning that cigarette smoking could be linked to cancer. But it's the really useless that dominates, not the musings of the ahead-of-their-time, misunderstood geniuses.

There is Cyrus Teed, who advanced the theory that people are living inside Earth. And there is Seabury Doane Brewer, who determined that the sun is actually 600 miles away from Earth, as opposed to the 93 million miles generally accepted by astronomers.

Titles of the mainly self-published works are ambitious.

"The Fact of All Life," "Beyond Einstein," "Why Life Exists and Allied Subjects," are among the sticky issues bravely tackled.

Explaining the meaning of life is a key theme of the authors, along with debunking scientific beliefs such as the existence of gravity, and finding proof for religious beliefs.

Early tests show no radiation near site of sub's sinking

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Preliminary laboratory tests showed nothing to indicate that a nuclear-powered Soviet submarine released radiation after it caught fire and sank, Norwegian scientists said today.

Early results of tests for radioactive contamination in air and surface water samples from the accident area showed no radiation from the sub, the government's Institute for Radiation Protection said in a statement.

"These tests checked to see if the Soviet sub released radiation on or near the surface of the ocean, but cannot exclude the possibility of such a leak deeper in the ocean," said researcher Per Strand of the institute.

He said the tests will continue. They involve examining scrapings from Norwegian Orion reconnaissance aircraft that flew in the region immediately after the accident Friday and seawater collected near the site.

A Norwegian research vessel today will take new samples from deeper waters to assess the possibility of the sub having emitted radiation as it sank towards the seabed, Strand said.

Norwegian military officers said the submarine caught fire and went down in international waters 120 miles southwest of Norway's Bear Island and about 310 miles west of Tromsoe, on Norway's northern coast. As many as 50 crew members may have died, officials said.

Defense Minister Johan Joergen Holst said he believed the risk of radiation contamination was slight.

Soviet officials said there was no danger of contamination. They confirmed there were deaths but did not provide casualty figures or details about the explosion, the third serious Soviet sub accident in 2½ years.

The vessel, one of the Soviets' most advanced, was capable of carrying more than a dozen long-range missiles, according to U.S. officials.

Vadime Rosanov, Soviet press attache in Oslo, told Norwegian television the sub was carrying only torpedoes, but he declined to say whether the vessel was equipped with any nuclear weapons.

The ship normally carries a crew of about 95. From observations by a Norwegian reconnaissance air crew, the Norwegian Defense Ministry estimated 40 to 50 men were picked up by Soviet vessels, and it was unclear if all survived.

"It's a matter of mathematics," said Maj. John Berg, a military spokesman. "You have a potential of 50 or more" who died.

The submarine reportedly caught fire while submerged. A Norwegian Defense Ministry statement said that after the ship surfaced the fire spread from one section to several others and set off an explosion. The ship then began to list and sink.

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev assured Norway the vessel's reactor was shut down before it sank and that there was no risk of radiation.

"According to the opinion of experts, the possibility of a nuclear explosion and radioactive pollution of the environment is excluded," Gorbachev wrote in a message to Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland. He sent similar messages to the United States and Britain.

The Soviet news agency Tass said the sub sank in water more than 4,500 feet deep. Tass quoted Defense Minister Dmitri T. Yazov as saying survivors were taken on board a Soviet warship that was bound for the Arctic port of Murmansk.

Gorbachev looks at home amid British splendor

An Analysis

By MICHAEL PUTZEL

LONDON (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev looked more at home in the splendor of London's ancient Guildhall than in shirt-sleeves in Cuba during the Soviet president's six-day trip abroad.

Gorbachev's gains, if any, from private talks with Cuban president Fidel Castro in Havana may not be apparent for some time, but he reaped positive news during his later stop in London.

Gorbachev got a ringing endorsement from Britain's staunchly anti-communist prime minister and a promise of a visit from Queen Elizabeth II. The queen would be the first British monarch to visit Russia since the Communists killed Czar Nicholas II and his family, who were cousins of the queen's forebears.

But U.S. officials said they were disappointed that Gorbachev's visit to Cuba produced no signal the Soviets were prepared to disengage from Central America, where the superpowers are pitted against each other by proxy.

Gorbachev and Castro stressed solidarity, though Cuba has shown no inclination toward liberalization policies being adopted in Moscow, Beijing and much of Eastern Europe.

But Gorbachev, who has shown more interest in wooing Western banks and business than in propping up Third World revolutionaries, made no move to ease Cuba's huge debt burden. Analysts had speculated some measure of debt forgiveness might be forthcoming as a goodwill gesture during the Soviet president's first visit to Cuba.

Instead, Gorbachev said the Cuban government should be more careful in spending Soviet aid.

"As in the past, the Soviet Union and Cuba have a common approach to the key problems of international affairs," Gorbachev told the Cuban National Assembly. "We are resolutely against any theories and doctrines justifying the export of revolution or counterrevolution and all forms of interference in the affairs of sovereign nations."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said he welcomed the statement but said it was not supported by action. The Bush administration, which just committed to end military aid to the Contra rebels in Soviet-backed Nicaragua, had hoped for a clearer signal that the Soviet government would reduce arms shipments to the Sandinista regime, he said.

But seasoned observers in Havana said even if that was Gorbachev's intention, he would not have said so in Cuba, Nicaragua's strongest ally.

Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov said people have come to expect too much from the Soviet leader.

"It's the rabbit-from-the-hat approach," Gerasimov said. "With other politicians, you don't expect so much, but when Gorbachev speaks, you expect him to pull out a rabbit every time."

But after leaving the island, a Gorbachev aide hinted the Soviet Communist Party chief may try to mediate the long-running feud between Cuba and the United States.

Although Castro's public remarks were peppered with anti-American slogans, Georgi Shakhnazarov, a foreign policy adviser to Gorbachev, said the Cuban leader indicated privately he wants to normalize relations with the United States.

Asked if Gorbachev could bring the two neighbors back together, Shakhnazarov said: "The general secretary tries not to miss any opportunity" to encourage better relations.

In London, the Soviet leader addressed magnificently robed British luminaries in Guildhall. He then received from Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher the endorsement he has sought from the West since launching his modernization campaign four years ago.

"We are building an open, democratic and free society which has learned the lessons of its past, a society based on law and responsibility, a society that keeps its citizens well informed," Gorbachev said. "We are building a society that rests on its citizens' initiative and enterprise, on Soviet socialist patriotism and dedication to human socialism aimed at elevating the human being."

Mrs. Thatcher called him "one of those rare people who has the vision, the boldness and the sheer power of personality to change the whole future of his country and to have a profound effect on the wider world as well."

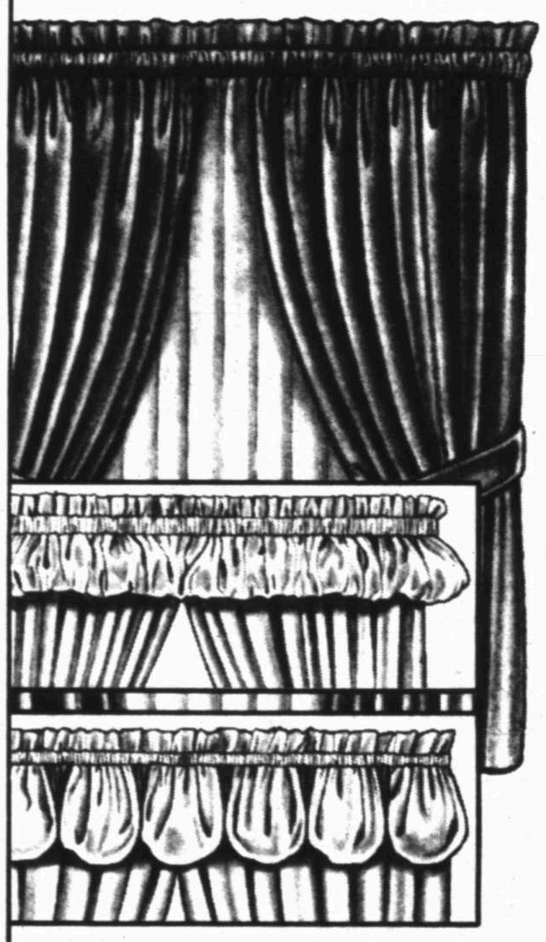

"We want you to succeed in your task," she told Gorbachev. "First because we believe that in your vision lies a better life for the Soviet people, but also because every step toward greater democracy, human rights and freedom of choice in your country brings us closer together."

South Africa rejects U.N. cease-fire plan

WINDHOEK, Namibia (AP) — South Africa said Saturday it has rejected a U.N. cease-fire plan designed to halt the hostilities in northern Namibia that threaten the territory's independence.

In a letter released Saturday, South African Foreign Minister Pik Botha dismissed an offer by U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar for amending a regional peace accord signed in December by South Africa, Angola and Cuba.

Officials from those three countries, as well as U.S. and Soviet observers, held emergency talks into Saturday night at Mount Etjo, a safari lodge about 120 miles north of Windhoek, Namibia's capital. There was no immediate comment from those officials.

The meeting was held in a bid to stop the fighting and preserve a U.N.-supervised independence plan agreed to in December. That plan took effect April 1.

De Cuellar's proposal suggested that SWAPO guerrillas, who reportedly have entered Namibia in violation of the peace accord, be given two choices, Botha said.

The guerrillas should be allowed to keep their arms and be escorted to SWAPO bases in neighboring Angola, or they could lay down their arms and stay in Namibia as civilians, he said.

Botha rejected the amendment, saying the guerrillas must surrender their weapons and be taken to bases in Angola.

South Africa says SWAPO has sent more than 1,900 guerrillas into northern Namibia since April 1 in violation of the peace accord, which requires the insurgents to remain at bases at least 100 miles inside Angola.

SWAPO maintains the insurgents were inside Namibia before April 1 and will not return to Angola.

Since then, at least 262 guerrillas of the South-West Africa People's Organization and 28 members of the South African-led security forces have been killed in the heaviest fighting of the territory's 23-year war, police said.

SWAPO officials outside Namibia have disputed the figures and say many civilians also have been killed. There were no reports of battles Saturday, and officials said they believed guerrillas were running low on supplies.

Friday, the U.N. Security Council said it was satisfied that South Africa still sought to grant independence to the territory it has ruled since World War I.

Some U.N. officials suggested SWAPO field commanders mistakenly thought their units could return to Namibia and set up bases there. Several captured guerrillas have said they returned to Namibia in search of U.N. personnel and expected no confrontations with security forces.

Sinking of Soviet sub just latest in series of incidents

MOSCOW (AP) — The sinking of a nuclear-powered submarine off the coast of Norway is at least the third serious incident in the Soviet nuclear fleet in 2½ years and comes amid growing Soviet public concern over nuclear safety.

The accident came five months after a reported near-meltdown in a nuclear reactor aboard a Soviet icebreaker in the port city of Murmansk.

That accident touched off a public outcry that prevented another nuclear-powered ship from docking in the Far East.

In October 1986, three sailors died in a fire and explosion aboard a Yankee-class nuclear-powered submarine in the Atlantic Ocean that was armed with ballistic missiles.

Since the April 26, 1986, explosion and fire at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Ukraine that killed at least 31 people and sent a cloud of radiation into the atmosphere, Soviet people have become wary of nuclear power, both on land and at sea.

In November, the nuclear powered icebreaker Rossiya pulled into Murmansk, near the border with Finland, for the routine changing of a filter in one of its two pressurized reactors.

A report in the newspaper Vodny Transport four months after the incident said the routine job almost turned into a disastrous nuclear meltdown.

According to the report, the chief physicist aboard the ship gave incorrect instructions to a reactor operator who in turn drained vital cooling water from the operating reactor rather than the one shut down for the repairs.

Had the water drained 30 minutes longer, a meltdown releasing radiation into the air over the city of 440,000 people would have occurred, the newspaper said. The "situation was liquidated" in four minutes, the newspaper's Murmansk correspondent said.

Three days later, the newspaper Sovietskaya Rossiya said two cities and a region in the Soviet Far East refused entry to a nuclear-powered merchant ship, Sevmorput,. which had reported fractures in its hull.

"A deficit of information, piled on top of the invisible shadow of the Chernobyl tragedy and the most complex ecological situation in the region, detonated a powerful explosion of public indignation," the newspaper said.

Officials claimed that the hull fractures presented no danger to the nuclear plant on the ship, but the public was not assured. At last report, the ship was still anchored off Vladivostok, its fate undecided.

Refusal of officials in the ports of Vladivostok and Nakhodka and the region of Magadan highlighted a groundswell of public opposition to nuclear power that began with the Chernobyl disaster.

3 nurses confess to killing patients

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Authorities Saturday said at least three nurses killed dozens of patients with overdoses of insulin and other medication.

Franz Priessnitz, a senior police official involved in the investigation, told Austrian Television the nurses killed the patients for "a kind of euthanasia." He said among those killed were patients they considered disagreeable.

"But the fact that they were most seriously ill always played a role," the official said, adding "we have so far 30 to 32 cases of killing" patients.

Initial reports said the killings took place over the past year, but police gave no specific time frame.

The three women were arrested for questioning Friday, and Guenter Boegl, the Vienna police chief, said Saturday that they had confessed. Boegl said more people could be apprehended.

No formal charges were filed by late Saturday.

Euthanasia, a method of causing painless death, is advocated by some as a way to deal with people suffering from incurable painful diseases.

Haitian government says mutiny finally crushed

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The government of Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril said Saturday loyal troops crushed a mutiny by soldiers of the Dessalines Barracks after two days of fighting, and that most of the rebels were taken prisoner.

Avril

"The soldiers of the Presidential Guard presently occupy the Dessalines Barracks," said a statement issued by the army adjutant, Gen. Andre Jean-Pierre, and read on state-run radio.

It said most of the rebels were captured, but that some fled and left behind their uniforms and weapons.

Earlier Saturday, Avril's troops had renewed the artillery bombardment of the Dessalines Barracks, which adjoin the National Palace in the center of Port-au-Prince.

The loyal forces had shelled the barracks Friday night and some of the rebels fled to a Roman Caholic church compound a mile away. From there, the rebels fired mortars at the National Palace early Saturday.

The government communique said the rebel prisoners implicated drug traffickers in the efforts to overthrow Avril that began April 2 with an attempted coup. It said an anti-government plot was organized by Haitian exiles formerly associated with the ousted regime of dictator Jean-Claude Duvalier.

The communique claimed the mastermind of the revolt was former Interior Minister Roger Lafontant, who is now living in the Dominican Republic, which shares the island of Hispaniola with Haiti.

The statement was issued at 5:15 p.m. EDT after several hours of heavy shelling of the barracks compound and firefights.

Shooting had died down shortly before the announcement.

The statement did not say how many rebels had been captured or had escaped. The normal force of the Dessalines Barracks is 750 soldiers.

U.S. officials said earlier that a hole was blown in the roof of the gleaming white palace, which serves as the presidential residence. It was believed the damage was caused by one of the mortar shells fired by rebels who had taken over a church compound.

Diplomats had said Friday night it appeared Avril's troops had gained the upper hand after shelling the barracks.

It was believed the shelling had driven all of the rebels from the military complex but fierce firefights broke out Saturday and loyalist soldiers resumed the artillery bombardment.

A source close to the Haitian government said 17 soldiers, all thought to be rebels, were killed in Friday's attack on the barracks.

Haitians monitoring military radio broadcasts said reports indicated the Presidential Guard suffered 15 casualties. There was no breakdown of dead and wounded.

The state hospital said at least one civilian was killed in the fighting and unconfirmed reports put the civilian death toll at least three.

A government communique had called on the Haitian Red Cross for urgent medical assistance and exhorted the rebels to surrender. Red Cross ambulances, sirens blaring, raced through the capital.

There has been intermittent fighting between loyal forces, led by the Presidential Guard, and rebels since April 2.

Small-arms fire mingled with the boom of heavy artillery Saturday before the government victory.

Late Friday, the rebels took over a Catholic church compound that includes a seminary, an elementary school and the church's Soleil radio station.

Dessalines soldiers briefly occupied the radio station Friday to repeat their demands for Avril's ouster.

One report Friday night said some shells the loyal troops in the Presidential Guard fired at the Dessalines Barracks may have overshot their mark and hit houses. But a diplomatic source said Saturday there was no evidence of extensive damage.

One diplomat said an inner wall linking the palace and the barracks was blown out, but the exterior of the barracks appeared undamaged.

WORLD IN BRIEF

New York Times News Service

Thousands of Angolan civilians have been killed by land mines, by indiscriminate attacks, and by starvation as both sides in their nation's civil war have violated international codes of war, the human rights organization Africa Watch has charged.

In a 153-page report based on interviews with 87 Angolans in refugee camps in Zaire and Zambia, Africa Watch deplored "the staggering human cost" of the war "in which violations of the international laws of war by both sides have resulted in serious and systematic abuses of human rights."

Aryeh Neier, the executive director of Human Rights Watch, the umbrella organization for Africa Watch, said the interviewers took testimony about abuses committed by forces of the Angolan government, which has been supported by Cuba, and by the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, or Unita, the rebel force supported by South Africa and the United States.

"Our information indicates that both sides have used land mines indiscriminately, killing or injuring at least 20,000 civilians," Neier said. "Very often these were placed in footpaths to the fields, which made it impossible for peasants to farm and forced them to flee to neighboring countries."

The report says that about 400,000 refugees live outside Angola and another 650,000 are displaced inside the country.

Raisa returns with treasures

LONDON (NYT) — Raisa Gorbachev, the Soviet leader's wife, took two cultural objects back to Moscow Friday.

One was the recently rediscovered working manuscript of Turgenev's 19th-century novel "Fathers and Sons," which Sotheby's had planned to auction May 18 for $850,000 or more.

The Soviet state cultural fund persuaded the unidentified British owner to sell it to Moscow instead, for an undisclosed sum.

Leonid M. Zamyatin, the Soviet ambassador, would not elaborate. "The Soviet cultural fund has settled the question with Sotheby," he said.

Sotheby's also presented Mrs. Gorbachev with a gift, a painting of Czar Peter III by the 18th-century court artist Alexander Rokotov that it had bought a year ago for $11,900 and restored.

Bus' hijacker charged

OTTAWA (AP) — Authorities Saturday charged a Montreal man who hijacked a New York-bound Greyhound bus and held its driver and 10 passengers hostage for eight hours outside Parliament.

Charles Jean Yacoub appeared briefly in court and was charged with hostage-taking, unlawful confinement, using a firearm in a criminal act and illegal possession of a firearm. The hostage-taking charge could bring a maximum sentence of life imprisonment.

Yacoub, 32, was ordered held in custody pending another hearing Monday.

Police said Yacoub hijacked the bus in Montreal, diverted it to Ottawa and held police at bay for eight hours, saying he had dynamite. The bus had veered and stopped on the lawn outside the center of Canadian government.

The hijacking ended peacefully and without injuries Friday evening, and Canadian police said the hostages were flown to New York at Greyhound expense.

Afghans weary of being pawns of superpowers

By EARLEEN FISHER

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The conversations begin tentatively, but the fears and frustrations of the past 11 years soon come tumbling out.

It is the weariness that is most striking: weariness of war, weariness of a police state, weariness of what is perceived as the world's indifference to the superpower game being played in Afghanistan.

"Other countries like to watch us Afghans, like we watch our dogfights, and think, 'Oh, the Afghans are killing each other again," said a Kabul university professor who has studied in Western Europe.

Kabul dogfights, which are a bit like canine wrestling matches, are seldom fatal. But the war between the Kabul government, backed until earlier this year by Soviet troops, and Western-backed Moslem guerrillas has claimed an estimated 1 million lives since the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan took power by coup and assassination in 1978.

The United Nations has estimated at least 5 million Afghans have fled the country since then, leaving a population of about 10 million.

"People are dying and suffering every day," the professor said, speaking on condition he not be identified further. "It is not human to just be an observer.

"The world is silent. We are silent. We have had to learn the science of being alive. I did not join the (communist) party. The politics of silence I was following."

The professor spoke of the frustration of not being able to find out what was happening in his own country, what Washington and Moscow might be contemplating, what fighting was going on in other parts of the country.

"We used to read the Far Eastern Economic Review, Le Monde. They come no more," he said. He said he distrusted the local government-controlled news media.

Across town, a silver merchant also criticized what he considered the superpowers' abandonment of responsibility.

"The Americans, the Russians think they are finished. In Geneva, they make writings on paper. They say they finish this problem," he said. "But this problem is not finished. It is worse, not better."

Under a U.N.-sponsored accord signed in Geneva April 14, 1988, the Soviet Union withdrew the last of its troops from Afghanistan on Feb. 15 of this year. But Moscow continues to arm its proteges, and the United States says it cannot abandon the guerrillas, who call themselves mujahedeen, or Islamic holy warriors.

"You give bombs to the mujahedeen," the silver merchant told an American reporter. "The Russians give bombs to the government. You don't die. Russians don't die. Only Afghan people die. Maybe it is time for us to say, 'OK, finished. President Najib is not so bad. Let us have a quick finish.'"

"The people are weary, especially in Kabul when they hear of Jalalabad," said a 41-year-old man. His niece and her three children were killed last week while trying to leave Jalalabad, about 40 miles from the Pakistan border, where the guerrillas have besieged government troops for the past month.

He said his relatives were traveling in an army-escorted convoy that was attacked by the mujahedeen. Others, too, were killed, he said, but he did not know the numbers.

"There are problems, because the main roads are going to be closed by the mujahedeen," he added.

Greenwood teacher draws artistic talent from students

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

GREENWOOD — Sandra Hodges' mission is instilling in her students enthusiasm for life and art.

"I tell my students: 'Behind every great artist, there is a teacher out there. So, remember me!' "

They aren't likely to forget her.

Her spirits outlast the high drama of a cheerleader's first homecoming. And when she was a teen-ager in Clovis, N.M., she did a bit of yelling, jumping and other antics befitting the wild enthusiasm of youth in the 1950s.

"I didn't take art in high school," Mrs. Hodges recalled amid her students' array of art works on display in the art classroom and hallways of Greenwood High School. "I was busy cheerleading and everything," which included singing in the choir, playing in the band, and making posters and run-throughs for football players' grand entry into the game. "I never dreamed of being an art teacher."

But she did dream of being a choreographer. "I started off teaching dancing."

Dream or no dream, Mrs. Hodges is artist and teacher. But as teacher, her devotion is to the students. "You can't teach and do your work. You get lost in it. You cannot do both. Your students suffer."

So, today she teaches.

"When you make a child shine, I feel so much better," she said, and declared that she wanted no more glory. She had enough of that in her schooling and teaching careers.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Greenwood High School art teacher Sandra Hodges is flanked by two of her award-winning students, Brent Arnett, 18, and Lisa McNew, 16.

Greenwood art student Rob Underwood, 17, won a $10,000 scholarship to Savannah College of Art and Design. "She (Mrs. Hodges) taught me how to paint and how to sculpt," Rob said.

"She's a real fun person to be around," added 18-year-old art student Brent Arnett, whose 1989 art work recently was selected for exhibit by the Texas Art Education Association. "She's different from other teachers," said Brent. "She's like a friend. You respect her and everything."

Others agree.

"She lets you talk and do whatever you want if you get your work done," said 16-year-old Lisa McNew, whose winning art work was selected for inclusion on the Texas Youth Art Month poster.

Mrs. Hodges teaches much of the art spectrum: sketching, drawing, painting, weaving, paper-making, sculpting. Concepts include realism, impressionism, expressionism, surrealism, the abstract — the classics to the contemporary. Students, for example, try to imitate the styles of realist Andy Warhol, abstract expressionist Jackson Pollack, and the searching style of Pablo Picasso.

Some student artists prefer the background of radio music to help set their mood for creating art.

"I do better work listening to music," said Brent. "It relaxes me. It helps me to concentrate and think."

Mrs. Hodges seems to seek a oneness with her students. Under her guidance, they seemed comfortably stressed for learning — minds that inquire and expand with knowledge and creativity.

"As a teacher," she said, "it is my job to make them thirsty (for knowledge)."

She encourages both levity and gravity in the educational process.

Mrs. Hodges noted, for example, that Brent's burr-like hair-style was really a "spike," which is "like a burr, only it's longer in the back."

And teaching does have its challenges.

"It's hard enough if you love them," said the teacher of the students. "It's like my husband (Maurice Hodges). I love them all of the time. Sometimes I don't like them," she smiled.

Mrs. Hodges, who is imbued with excitement and enthusiasm, said her husband, who coaches in Midland, is "more laid back" than she. "He's more reserved." But, she conceded, "He gets excited on the football field."

In college at Eastern New Mexico University in Portales, she led cheers and got involved in art, dance and music.

MISD offers unusual alternative to 'failure'

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

With all the time spent partying and running the streets, William Edwards had little time for his school work last year, even when he made it to classes at Lee Freshman High School.

"I wasn't paying attention to it," Edwards said. "I wasn't into it. I was hanging around the wrong crowd."

So, at 16 years old, he dropped out, but it didn't take long for him to find out that being a teen-aged failure reaped few benefits.

"I was tired of being out on the streets and having nothing to do," Edwards said.

On Friday, wearing a funky surfer hat and listening to rock 'n' roll through a set of headphones, Edwards sat before a computer screen and studied science. Edwards was back in school.

But in the casual academic atmosphere of Midland Independent School District's Alternative School, the 17-year-old doesn't have the pressures of assignments with impending due dates, a strict learning environment and drastic scholastic setbacks because of failing grades.

Self-motivated with goals of obtaining a General Equivalency Diploma, Edwards said he's bent on going on to college and eventually entering a technical or mechanical field.

"It's taught me how to respect people and showed me I could be someone," he said of the school, housed in an small office in Midland's Dellwood Mall. "It's given me a lot of confidence in myself and makes me want to do more good things."

The school, supported by state and Job Training Partnership Act funds, is overseen by Helen Lackey, the determined teacher, principal, director and sometimes counselor for the 50 students who have failed regular school and dropped out.

Storyteller to share his art with Friends of the Library

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Jay Stailey, a Texas educator whose passion is heightening story-telling into an art, will begin telling stories at 2 p.m. today in the downtown Midland County Public Library.

"Story-telling is a dying art that is being resurrected by the likes of Jay Stailey," said John Deats, librarian for the Midland County Public Library.

Stailey, who lives "within spittin' distance of Galveston Bay," bills himself as a specialist in "short tales, tall tales, and tales of medium stature."

He will be speaking at the Friends of the Library's annual meeting, which is open to the public.

"He will entertain you with amusing, scary, sly and traditional tales," noted Colleen Scury, a Friends board member. "Mr. Stailey has spun his tales, for both adults and children, in and around the Houston area."

In his story-telling, Stailey uses folk tales, legends, and stories based on recollections of his childhood in Dublin, Ohio.

"If you have never had ... a story-teller hold you spellbound," Mrs. Scury said, "you have missed a 'live pleasure' in this day of electronic entertainment."

In seeking out material for his story-telling, Stailey has traveled to South America, Mexico, Canada, Japan, China, Hong Kong, Korea, Iceland and Western Europe.

Stailey often uses his guitar-playing and singing skills in telling stories. In the Houston area, he has made story-telling appearances in museums, the Texas Tale Tellin' Festival, and the River Cafe.

Stailey is assistant principal for Pumphrey Elementary School in the Goose Creek Independent School District in Baytown and is on the board of directors of the Houston Storytellers Guild.

Stailey's visit to Midland is in highlighting the American Library Association's "Year of the Young Reader," noted Mrs. Scury. Stailey will return to Midland in June to give a story-telling seminar for "young readers."

School funds still subject to change

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The $500 million House budget writers approved this week to help give poorer school districts parity with richer ones likely will change as the state budget lumbers though the legislative process.

Representatives could increase the amount on the House floor after Public Education Committee members attempt to develop a long-range plan to fill the gap.

House Speaker Gib Lewis already has proposed a short-term, $600 million equity level, which could add fuel to a floor move.

In addition, a joint House-Senate conference committee could cut the amount to a number more in line with the $400 million that the Senate Finance Committee already has endorsed.

Standing above the fray so far is Comptroller Bob Bullock, who certifies the amount of money the Legislature has to spend. Budget writers already are making plans for an extra $2 billion they expect Bullock to certify, but he could go higher.

And within that additional amount could be money from a proposed cigarette tax that some lawmakers support. But Gov. Bill Clements says he wants no new taxes.

Whatever the outcome, the $500 million plan that House Appropriations Committee members approved Wednesday provides the first detailed legislative blueprint telling districts how much they could receive.

Based on an allocation formula developed when the Legislature approved wide-ranging school reforms in 1984, the proposal would add the money to about $1 billion already set aside for equalization.

Committee members when the equity question first arose Tuesday night didn't want to approve any amount that was just a lump sum. A proposal to allocate $675 million went down when a required two-thirds vote failed to materialize.

But after consulation with Lewis, Rep. Ric Williamson, D-Weatherford, came back Wednesday night with the $500 million proposal — and a computer print out detailing how individual districts would benefit.

Williamson Friday said that the additional detail should help school administrators and board members, who are beginning to develop their own budgets for the coming fiscal year.

To satisfy some committee members, "We had to know to the extent possible how that $500 million would filter out," he said.

For the Midland Independent School District, the committee's proposal would mean an additional $1.38 million over the next two fiscal years.

The district already had been set to receive about $1.4 million in both Fiscal Year 1990 and 1991. The additional money is 48.6 percent above previous equalization proposals.

The proposal also would give Greenwood ISD $319,063 over the next two budget cycles.

Andrews, McCamey and Rankin school districts would receive no equity funds over the next two years, either from the original $1 billion pool or the additional amount committee members endorsed this week.

However, the Ector County ISD would receive an additional $3.45 million under the proposal.

If the $500 million House budget approved last week becomes law, several area school districts could be looking at more state money. The numbers above, which are still subject to change, represent increases over a two-year period.

GARY OTT

There's much more than politics to life in our capital city

Ott

Last week in this space it was reluctantly acknowledged that we had just had lunch with the President of the United States.

It sounded, I'm sure, most pretentious, though, of course, that was never its intent.

Still, it was all quite true. George Bush and I are now best of friends and I'm sure I'll soon be spending fun-filled weekends at the family retreat in Maine.

But, that's neither here nor there.

What we didn't get a chance to discuss last week was the remainder of our intriguing stay in Washington, home of those madcap leaders we love to hate.

And, that oversight is most unfair. There is so much more to that city than just politics. Much more, indeed.

■ There are still plenty of crazies roaming the streets, even some who appear to be reasonably harmless. One gentleman, for example, while standing on a street corner and waving a sign of some sort, screamed Bible verses at the hurried yet bored pedestrians. No one gave him a second look. His behavior has apparently become the norm.

■ Tipping in a fancy hotel on Pennslyvania Avenue can be confusing for a small town visitor from West Texas. How much is the proper amount? When in a restaurant it is fairly predictable — 20 to 25 percent. Same thing in a bar. But how much do you give a man for carrying one suitcase to your room, via the elevator? $1? $5? I'm never sure. Don't get me wrong, I believe in tipping. People who don't should be flogged. I just wish I knew the proper amount. By the way, I gave the bellboy $5 to carry my one bag to the room. He smiled and said, "You must be from Texas." I think I did good.

■ What is it about hotel towels that make normally law-abiding citizens want to steal them? I didn't take them, of course, but the thought did cross my mind.

■ There are an incredibly large number of stretch limos in Washington. Big long ones with tinted windshields. The drivers, what little you see of them, invariably have serious expressions, as if their passenger is the most powerful force in the behind-the-scenes world of international espionage. What's chilling is that he just might be. Of course, he could be just another drunk lobbyist, too.

■ As a general rule, people dress rather conservatively in Washington. You don't see an inordinate number of freaks with three colors of hair. Even the street people dress in basic colors, such as grays and browns, and rarely mix plaids with stripes. They are to be commended for cautious taste.

■ What really goes on behind all those walls? For as far as the eye can see, there are government buildings. There must surely be tens of thousands of individual offices. It boggles the mind to think about what is — or, better yet, could — be going on in the name of "national security." Is the corruption as rampant as we sometimes are led to believe? Or, are we dealing with basically honest, hard-working civil servants who just do their job like anybody else? Surely, it is the latter. Of course, if that's true then future Robert Ludlum books are going to be a lot less intriguing.

■ Despite what we hear about the "cold big city," people are reasonably friendly. They might not grin and say "Howdy" when passing you on the street, but they generally don't stab you in the back, either. A few have even been known to give a stranger directions if they're lost. Of course, they are probably the wrong directions, but it's the thought that counts.

■ There is something exceedingly pleasing about sitting in an expensive restaurant within walking distance of the White House during the early morning hours drinking coffee and reading the Washington Post. It somehow makes you feel important. All around you, men and women dressed in business attire and looking alarmingly serious, are doing the exact same thing. A vague feeling of power creeps into your mind. Suddenly you begin to understand why people who initially go to Washington "to change the system and not become a part of it" so often never return home. The power is so intoxicating they become drunk on its fumes.

ALTERNATE

Designed to put a dent in MISD's roughly 10 percent annual dropout rate, the school takes those who, with some effort and a little determination, could get a GED or even return to regular classes, Ms. Lackey said. Since it opened in March 1987, about 400 students between the ages of 16 and 21 have come and gone.

The students, using either computers or material on paper, work at their own pace to strengthen their knowledge in their academically weak areas. Ms. Lackey, the school's only teacher, and two aides instruct the students when they need it and administer tests over the subject unit only when the students feel they're ready.

The youngsters can either work in a room with other students or seclude themselves in a quiet study carrel in another room.

The students represent an array of social attitudes and come from varying backgrounds. One student sports a Mohawk haircut and earrings, while another has hair down his back. Then there are others who wouldn't stand out at a Young Republicans meeting.

"Every student here has a story," Ms. Lackey said. "And every story is a great story."

About the only rules are to show up on time, work on something, don't distract others and don't do anything against the law.

If the students want to talk, they talk. If they want to listen to music on their headphones, that's fine, if it doesn't bother others.

But they can't leave until school hours expire, and if they're more than 15 minutes late to school, they miss the 15 minute break during the three-hour school day.

Ms. Lackey said that while the less-stressful atmosphere has its benefits for those who have grown tired of the relatively regimental environment of regular school, some don't prosper.

"Some students come in and can't handle the freedom," Ms. Lackey said. "They can't settle down and discipline themselves to do the work."

The problem youths get one warning from Ms. Lackey. If the problems continue, she suspends the student until he agrees to return with a better attitude. Some simply are sent back to make it or break it in regular classes.

One reason some students can't be saved is because they have so many problems outside of school, and the two counselors who come by once a week can only do so much for them, Ms. Lackey said. She added that she and her aides sometimes are spread equally as thin.

"It's hard to get around to all of them," she said. "It takes a lot of time with one student.

"They need to be independent enough to take minimal amount of instruction and progress through to where their work is either completed or they need additional direction."

But despite the occasional failure, the dropout rate among the former dropouts is substantially less compared to MISD overall, with only 3.64 percent leaving.

Ms. Lackey said her students seem to have the most trouble with English composition, which is also the most time consuming to learn and teach.

"It's really taking away from the student who is converting decimals to percents," Ms. Lackey said.

She said the school's instructors and counselors also attempt to get the student to look beyond the GED or high school graduation and choose a possible career route.

Edwards said he tries to encourage those who don't seem to take the school seriously.

"I would like other kids my age to look at me and hopefully do the same thing," he said, adding that all the students seem to get along and even have a little comaraderie.

Ms. Lackey said a student's average stay at the school is three months, with some needing a year of instruction and others staying as little as a week.

Roman Leyba, 19, has been at the school only a week and plans to take the GED test Tuesday.

"You got to have it nowadays to get anywhere," Leyba said.

Last year Leyba was in the liberal and highly casual environment of a California school. Then he moved to Midland with his father.

After two months in Lee High School, Leyba said he dropped out so he could work and buy a car.

Leyba, needing only to brush up on his social studies, said he realized that without high school credit he would never get to fix audio equipment professionally, which he plans to do after taking college classes.

Texaco gift first to fund industrial medical clinic

From Staff Reports

Alan McDaniel, Texaco's Midland vice president, has presented Midland Memorial Hospital with $10,000 to develop an industrial medicine clinic.

McDaniel

Housed in the new Abell-Hanger Medical Pavilion at the intersection of Andrews Highway and Texas Avenue, the clinic will cost $200,000 to build, said Ray Branson, hospital president.

"At this time, local businesses are being contacted for their support," Branson said. "Texaco is the first to contribute to this significant endeavor."

The clinic will include four main areas plus a locker room and showers. The largest area will be an exercise room, which will include weight machines and exercise equipment similar to those found in health spas.

The second area will include equipment and supplies designed to simulate tasks injured workers would perform after returning to their jobs. The third area will include ultrasound, a whirlpool and traction equipment.

The final area will include diagnostic and testing equipment used to evaluate patient injuries, probability of full recovery and determination of treatment regimen.

ART

For some reason, she sidestepped choreography and delved into teaching English and, mostly, art for the past 20-odd years.

"I am very attuned to music," said Mrs. Hodges, who is "never bored" at school or at home. "Instead of dancing (choreographically) with my feet," she explained, "I paint with my hand."

To hone up on her own art education, Mrs. Hodges recently entered graduate school at Sul Ross State University in Alpine. She did well there, too.

She scored Grade A in courses.

"Yeah," she admitted, "but let me tell you what, I had to work for it."

Teaching students to learn to draw art is Mrs. Hodges' bailiwick.

"In order to teach them to draw, I have to teach them to see. Their eyes are going to tell their hands what to do," Mrs. Hodges said. "Drawing is seeing."

And Mrs. Hodges revels in watching her students learn and advance in knowledge, skill, and confidence.

"I get more excited when they excel than when I do," she said.

Greenwood High School Principal Bob Pheil and Superintendent Tim Outlaw said they are delighted in Mrs. Hodges and in her teaching expertise.

"She wants them (students) first," Pheil said. "And I will guarantee you that she is the force behind the students that gets the work cranked out."

"She has done some great things, absolutely," said Outlaw. "She is very unselfish. When there is recognition of her program, she always wants recognition for the students rather than for herself."

SCHOOLS

Williamson said he knows full well that the method for allocation could be declared unconstitutional, but the Legislature currently has some breathing room before that possibility comes to pass.

Two years ago, Travis County District Judge Harley Clark declared the state's method of alloting public education money — and the formula used this week by the Appropiations Committee — discriminatory against students in poorer districts.

But Clark's decision was reversed late last year by the Third Court of Appeals in Austin and currently is under further appeal to the Texas Supreme Court.

According to Texas Education Agency Commissioner William Kirby, the formula allocates additional money to districts whose property valuations are below 110 percent of the state average.

But "the key" to solving the allocation dilemma lies in a six-year equity plan that should come before the House Public Education Committee within two weeks, Kirby said Friday.

The target of the plan is 95 percent equity by 1995.

Toward that end, the TEA is asking for a state committment over the period of $5 billion, with the Appropriations Committee's $500 million representing the first installment.

But Kirby hopes the Legislature's initial allocation will be even higher.

Should Bullock certify an additional pool of money, the commissioner estimates that 25 to 40 percent will go toward public education, bringing the $500 million into the realm of $800 million.

Given that committment, "I don't think that the Supreme Court can say anything other than the Legislature has moved in a responsible manner," Kirby said.

Volunteer emphasis to begin with lunch rally

From Staff Reports

National Volunteer Week kicks off Monday with a sack-lunch volunteer rally "To Catch A Star" at the Yucca Theatre in Downtown Midland. The rally is sponsored by United Way of Midland and the Volunteer Center.

Monday is also the day the Weather Watchers will be honored at the studios of KMID-TV, Channel 2, near Midland International Airport. The volunteers, including Tommy Blase, Guy Burchett, Connie and Dale Little, and Gary Smith of Midkiff, will be honored by the Big 2/Time To Care Campaign.

The Second Annual Volunteer Recognition Banquet will be held at noon Friday at the Holiday Inn Convention Center in Midland. Outstanding volunteers of the year will be honored at the fete.

Odessa will honor its volunteers Tuesday at the Holiday Inn Centre, when the W.D. "Bill" Noel Volunteer of the Year will be picked from among 40 nominees. Sponsors for the award include the Junior League of Odessa, the Odessa Chamber of Commerce, and United Way of Odessa.

Volunteers will also be honored as part of National Boys and Girls Club Week, which begins Sunday. The Boys and Girls Club of Midland will have a foosball doubles tournament and an eight-ball pool tournament. The tournaments begin at 3:30 p.m. Monday, and will consist of a six to nine-year-old division, 10 to 12-year-old division, and a category for 13 to 18-year-olds.

The club will hold a Volunteer Appreciation Dinner at 6 p.m. Friday, according to Nick Sanchez, the club's executive director.

"This gives an opportunity to show our appreciation to all the wonderful people who are so vital to the clubs' success," Sanchez said.

Career Fair to be presented

From Staff Reports

Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S. Inc. and the Texas Alliance for Minorities in Engineering are the lead sponsors of an all-day Career Fair Saturday at Midland Park Mall.

The second annual event is for junior and senior high school students in the Midland/Odessa area.

TAME utilizes volunteer resources throughout the community to increase student awareness and interest in engineering, science and computing careers. Last year, over 30 local businesses, organizations and educational institutions participated in the inaugural career fair.

Other sponsors of the 10 a.m.-9 p.m. event are the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, JTPA (Job Training Partnership Act), the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, the Society of Petroleum Engineers and KWES radio.

Last year, over 30 local businesses, organizations and educational institutions participated in the inaugural Career Fair. At least that many displays are expected again this year, according to MHCC executive director Elvia Hernandez.

Oil spill showed lack of preparation

No one wants an oil spill to occur, particularly one with the magnitude of the Exxon Valdez spill off the coast of Alaska March 24. With concern for the environment at a high point in the United States, there is understandable interest in how the spill occurred, the corporate response by Exxon and the efficiency of the cleanup operation now under way. All are valid points for public scrutiny.

One response was not realistic. The knee-jerk reaction of some environmental groups to the incident — that future exploration plans in parts of the Alaskan National Wildlife Refuge should not be permitted — are completely ludicrous. The nation's energy needs, coupled with the instability of importing from foreign countries, demands that Alaska drilling continue and that shipping of the oil to the lower 48 states continue. But as long as that is the need, it's crucial that the nation and the oil industry be prepared to deal with disasters.

Timing of the spill was lousy, of course. Even members of the Texas House, which last week approved a resolution supporting ANWR drilling, admitted that their own timing could not have been poorer.

Legislation to allow drilling in the refuge was gaining momentum in Congress and had been approved by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. Following the spill, other committee chairmen indicated the going would get much tougher. That's to be expected, but realities of the oil needs of the nation can't be overlooked.

This spill, the nation's worst, further intensifies the spotlight on corporate liability where the public can end up as "victim" in the event of an accident. Exxon has been correctly criticized for responding to the disaster too slowly and for failing to get the cleanup rolling quickly enough.

President George Bush late last week stepped in to make available the military forces to help with the cleanup, a commendable move which would have been more valuable had it come earlier, but he noted that the move should not be construed as relieving Exxon of its liability in the incident.

Already, steps being taken appear directed at avoiding a recurrence. The Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., which operates the 800-mile Alaska pipeline and the Valdez terminal, has said it will begin randomly conducting drug and alcohol tests aboard all vessels using the terminal. Joseph Hazelwood, captain of the tanker, was drinking and left a mate in charge of sailing the ship when the accident occurred.

Steps are already being taken to avoid a recurrence, but regrettably coming in hindsight they cannot relieve the damage sustained by the environment or the loss of the oil. The giant spill is graphic evidence of the need for preparation.

No one was prepared for a spill of this magnitude — not Exxon, Alaska or the federal government — and that is the greatest disaster of all. The delicate nature of ecological systems necessitate that industry and government be prepared to deal with the unexpected. Realizing the nation must have the Alaskan oil, the task is to take the necessary steps to get it to the lower states without endangering the environment. The Valdez spill was the result of poor human judgement, which may never be completely avoidable, but the aftermath could have been much better.

This time no one was ready and nature paid the price.

Tacky traveler test

Are tacky dressing habits and poor taste in travel enough to label you a drug dealer?

Well, says the U.S. Supreme Court, it's a start. Add to that "profile" a fist-sized wad of twenties, a nervous shift in the eyes and a penchant for paying big tabs with small bills and, says the court, your behavior is suspicious enough to warrant the concern of federal drug agents.

The court's 7-2 decision, issued earlier this week, validates a long-used practice of the federal Drug Enforcement Administration. Since the mid-1970s, the agency has compiled a "drug-courier profile" thought to be typical of criminals using commercial airlines to ferry illicit cargo.

The problem is that the profile includes behavior that also may have an innocent explanation. Fortunately, the court struck a wise balance between two important needs — individual liberty and effective law enforcement.

Over the years, the DEA noticed similarities in behavior by drug traffickers who use major airports. They pay for tickets with cash, use phony names, check no luggage and stay a short time in a distant city known as a hub of the drug trade. In the case before the court, a suspect paid $2,100 for tickets from a roll of twenties, made a round trip from Honolulu to Miami, stayed less than 48 hours, checked no luggage, used an alias and looked nervous. When stopped by drug agents, he was found to be carrying several pounds of cocaine in his shoulder bag.

Writing for the majority, Chief Justice William Rehnquist said the suspect's behavior was enough to warrant "reasonable suspicion" and justify his brief detention by drug agents. Rehnquist noted that the man was dressed in a black jumpsuit with gold jewelry and was flashing a wad of twenties that "appeared to contain a total of $4,000."

"While a trip from Honolulu to Miami, standing alone, is not a cause for any sort of suspicion," Rehnquist said, "here there was more: Surely few residents of Honolulu travel from that city for 20 hours to spend 48 hours in Miami during the month of July."

Not unless they have a penchant for perspiration.

Regardless, the preponderance of evidence here made it clear that the suspect was more than an oddball traveler. Nonetheless, we share the concern of the two dissenting justices, who worry that unusual but innocent behavior may now lead to police intervention.

The Supreme Court has authorized an important law-enforcement weapon in the battle against drugs. But this newly validated power should be used carefully. The justices did not intend for innocents — no matter how poorly dressed or traveled — to be subjected to sniffing dogs at the whim of suspicious drug agents.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, April 9, the 99th day of 1989. There are 266 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Fifty years ago, on April 9, 1939, some 75,000 people gathered at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington to hear black singer Marian Anderson perform after she was denied the use of Constitution Hall by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

On this date:

In 1942, during World War II, American and Philippine forces on Bataan were overwhelmed by the Japanese.

U.S. fraud fighters need watchdogs

WASHINGTON — There was trepidation in the federal trenches when George Bush took office. The inspectors general, the first line of defense against fraud, waste and abuse in government agencies, feared they would be sent packing by the new president.

Jack Anderson

Ronald Reagan had fired all of Jimmy Carter's inspectors general on inauguration day in 1981. And as outgoing president, Reagan had asked for resignations from all political appointees, including inspectors general, to clear the way for Bush's chosen few.

But Bush didn't clean house. He asked Reagan's inspectors general to stay on. In a meeting with them during his first week in office, Bush effectively elevated inspectors general above the whim of politics, a status they had sought since 1977 when the first statutory inspector general was appointed to be the watchdog over the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Since January, we have been reporting on the escapades of the inspectors general who are less than shining stars. We have heard complaints about many more. Last year, the 10th anniversary of the 1978 act that institutionalized inspectors general, Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, made a study of problems besetting the breed.

Independence from political meddling, in and out of their agencies, is critical for inspectors general. But the report of Brooks' Government Operations Committee chronicled several breakdowns in that independence. Our associate Stewart Harris has uncovered more.

Questions linger about the independence of former Veterans Administration Inspector General Frank Sato. He admitted to us that the reaction of a U.S. senator had figured in his 1986 decision not to issue one controversial audit report. Sato's auditors had determined that the $6.7 million the VA was planning to spend on a foot bridge at the Portland, Ore., VA hospital would be wasted. But Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., had personally earmarked the money for the project.

Sato told us his report would not have stopped the expenditure, but it would have inflamed Hatfield and distracted the inspector general from more important things. In that case, two government investigations found no "conclusive" evidence that Sato had been compromised.

But when an inspector general doesn't report potential waste because he fears the repercussions from a powerful senator, he is already counting costs that he shouldn't have to worry about.

Threats to the independence of the inspectors general more often come from inside the agencies they are assigned to monitor. The State Department, for example, often rotates career foreign service officers in and out of its inspector general's office. The seasoned diplomats know the ropes, but may not be eager to blow the whistle on their colleagues. One congressional investigation turned up evidence that many foreign service officers worry if they will get a good assignment after serving time with the inspector general. One even confessed, "The name of the game in the IG office is making contacts to get a good assignment after leaving that office." And these are the people who are supposed to police the State Department.

One inspector general in the Interior Department, Richard Mulberry, resigned in 1984 after it was learned that his office issued an incomplete investigation apparently due to pressure from then-Interior Secretary James Watt. Mulberry looked into the possibility that sensitive information about the sale of coal leases had been leaked to potential buyers. He reported that nothing had leaked. But a followup investigation by the General Accounting Office turned over some stones Mulberry had not. Watt admitted that he had probably put pressure on the inspector general.

RUSSELL BAKER

Oh no, another Friday and more millions!

NEW YORK — I like to see somebody have a big payday. That's why I was for the big congressional pay raise when all right thinkers from Ralph Nader to the impoverished philosophers who run radio talk shows were against it.

Russell Baker

Other baseball fans get furious when they hear Darryl Strawberry is sulky because the Mets will pay him only $1.4 million for playing baseball this summer.

Not me. I say, "Right on, Darryl. A million isn't what it used to be."

Neither is a billion, for that matter, since Ronald Reagan, in his tireless battle against government spending, persuaded the Pentagon to start using the trillion as the basic unit of currency.

That's why I'm puzzled when people say it's a shame somebody in a dirty T-shirt is making more money from his new movie than Thomas Jefferson paid for Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska and South Dakota combined, not to mention large chunks of Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico and Texas.

What a mean-spirited attitude. What's happened to the old habit of wishing your fellow American a little good luck?

Too many Americans now take a sour grapes attitude toward those who make good. We talk a lot about the joy and wonders of "the American dream," which, so far as I can make out, means hoping we'll someday hit a payday so big we can own Illinois, Michigan and a two-bedroom limousine.

But when somebody actually lucks into the American dream, we call him an undeserving bum.

Not me. Fridays, when I see somebody at the pay window getting an envelope so heavy he needs a crew of piano movers to get it home, I feel great all over. I don't feel bitter just because I personally don't happen to be making enough even to buy Staten Island.

Why should I? Once the fun of shopping for it wore off, what would I do with Staten Island?

Despite my generosity of spirit, however, I admit I was startled last week to read about Michael Milken's paydays. Milken is usually described as a "wizard," or a "genius." In the old days you would have said, "For a wizard or a genius no payday can be too excessive."

Nowadays, though, "wizard" and "genius" are such common currency of mindless flattery that if you never went out of the house you might suppose the country was up to its eyebrows in talent.

Never mind wizard and genius: what Milken really is — or was — is, or was, well paid. In 1987 his salary and bonus came to $550 million. That's over $10 million every Friday.

These beneficences came from Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., a Wall Street house on whose behalf Milken invented and ran the so-called "junk bond" business. It was so called, I suppose, because Milken's bonds enabled corporate raiders to turn big pieces of American business into junk.

Milken is now under criminal indictment on charges too complicated for anyone but a tax lawyer to understand. The burden of it seems to be that he was a finagler who connived with a lot of other finaglers to give themselves paydays beyond the wildest dreams of congressmen and baseball players.

Milken's $550 million payday will probably provoke the usual sour outcry from the same people who complain that congressmen are overpaid at $89,000 per annum and baseball players at a million or two, but you won't hear me booing.

I don't know the man and, being on the hip of the lawyers, he is not talking for publication, so I can't testify for a certainty, but surely he is more to be pitied than scorned. Imagine the horror of having a $10 million payday every Friday.

Week after week, month after month, up to the pay window you go, and every week, month in and month out, they lay another $10 million on you. Sure it would be nice the first week. You put aside, say, $5 million for taxes. You pay off the mortgage. Send the old car to the crusher and buy two or three new ones. Settle the gas, electric and phone bills. Buy a necktie.

Give maybe 10 or 20 percent to charities. But before you know it, another Friday rolls around. Another $10 million demands to be disposed of. Maybe you buy a bigger house. A new VCR. Hire gardeners, housekeepers, engineers to keep your electronic devices working. But what's this? Friday again? No, no, please! Not another $10 million!

What a nightmare. How lucky are those who will never face it. A noble spirit cannot have the slightest desire to own Staten Island, or even a bed-sitter in the Village.

GEORGE F. WILL

Social policy must confront family structure

WASHINGTON — One March morning some distinguished Washingtonians convened a meeting with a senior adviser to the President in the boardroom of Riggs Bank a block from the White House. Alarmed by violence sparked by the drug epidemic, they asked the presidential adviser if he would advise the President to bring in military forces to patrol Washington. The adviser emphatically said he would not because to do so would be to forsake a precious democratic principle: that the military should not be involved in keeping domestic peace.

George F. Will

That meeting occurred March 17, 1970.

Today the truly terrible ideas do not even have the virtue of originality. Garrisoning the city is again being proposed. There is a way to make conditions here even more acutely embarrassing to the nation: Flood the world with pictures of armed soldiers in open jeeps patrolling the city.

What, exactly, would the soldiers do? "Supplement" the police? How would that work? Would they arrest people? Would they summon the police when they saw something "suspicious"? Such policing judgments are not for amateurs. By what criteria would the occupation of the capital be declared a success and terminated?

The presidential adviser at the March, 1970, meeting is now a senator, Pat Moynihan. He says Washington's problems are worse than they were then. But even earlier, by 1965, the trends were visible that have produced many of the afflictions of Washington and other inner cities.

Robberies in Washington rose from 1,072 in 1960 to 12,236 at the end of that decade, largely as a result of heroin, primarily a male addiction that caused an increase in one-parent families. Crack may be producing "no-parent children."

Drugs are both cause and effect of something unprecedented. For most of two centuries, Americans believed in what came to be called "American exceptionalism." It was the belief that this nation is exempt from the grinding, persisting problems that have troubled older, class-riven societies. Actually, America got most of those problems, but got them later.

"For most of the 20th century," Moynihan says, "the social problems of the United States — always excluding that of race — had first appeared in Europe, as had the first responses." America eventually adopted such responses as workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance, Social Security and heavy government involvement in provision of medical care.

Now, says Moynihan, "We have a new set of problems and there's no European 'solution' at hand." The problem is social regression of a sort without precedent in urban history.

Industrialism and urbanization created many social problems, but also created economic growth and a social surplus for government to divert for the elimination of problems of material deprivation. However, what makes today's form of poverty-amidst-plenty so frustrating is that it cannot be solved or even appreciably dented by normal welfare-state transfer payments.

The intergenerational transmission of poverty is produced by the disintegration of family structure. In Washington, 68.3 percent of minority births are illegitimate (in Baltimore, 80 percent). In what is called a "typical elementary school" in Washington's Anacostia section, 90 percent of all pupils are from single-parent homes.

Twenty-five years ago, the Economic Opportunity Act, the core of the War on Poverty, was enacted. It was, Moynihan says, the beginning of the third phase of the American atttempt to eliminate particular kinds of poverty and distress associated with industrialism. The first phase was in the Progressive Era, from Teddy Roosevelt through Wilson. The second was from Franklin Delano Roosevelt through Truman. The third was under Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon.

It was a remarkably continuous project. And remarkably successful, Moynihan says, "where we simply transferred income and services to the elderly — a stable, settled population group." But the project had little success where "poverty had its origin in social behavior," meaning, primarily, family structure.

Today family disintegration is one of the principal correlates of poverty. In 1988, 24 percent of America's 63 million children lived with only one parent, double the 1970 percentage. Most single-parent households are headed by women, and such households have a poverty rate of 55 percent. The Bureau of the Census estimates that only 39 percent of children born in 1988 will live with both parents until their 18th birthday.

Family structure almost certainly now is, as Moynihan and many others suspect, "the principal conduit of class structure." That poses the most immense challenge ever to confront American social policy, a problem of unprecedented complexity, for which there is no "European solution" to emulate.

BILL MODISETT

Gorbachev's changes should shake our foundations

If Rip Van Winkle had gone to sleep a few years after the close of World War II when the United States of America was drunk with the confidence that liberty and industrial might had won and the Soviet Union was constructing an Iron Curtain between its totalitarian empire and the West, would he ever be in for a shock if he awoke today.

Bill Modisett

Under the artful leadership of Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet Union is loosing its traditional restrictions, holding elections with more than one candidate — the Communist Party's — per office, and generally, attempting to set a new course apart from the one that has failed miserably.

While few observers doubt Gorbachev's words when he says he is not moving away from the basic tenets of Communism, it's becoming increasingly obvious that Gorbachev and other top officials in the Soviet Union not only recognize they've been riding the wrong horse too long, but are taking positive strides to change their course in a way that will behoove their goals. Gorbachev's revolution appears to be working, at least as far as it has gone, and that should be a signal to Americans to examine the track record of our system of government. We may not like what we find, although it's vastly preferable to the authoritarian state in the Soviet Union.

Today it's not uncommon to hear the man on the street talk about how he can't seem to get ahead, how the American "dream" is fading for millions of people to find personal success, or how it does no good to talk to the folks in Washington — because they won't listen anyway. There's a feeling today of being unable to change events. That really isn't so, but we have to take the initiative to do it, just as Gorbachev has.

The government established by the founding fathers was one based on strong national government for the states, one that respected the liberties of those individual states and of the people. James Madison recognized that events in the future would necessitate changes in the Constitution, saying:

"In framing a system which we wish to last for ages, we should not lose sight of the changes which ages will produce."

More than 200 years later, some of those needed changes are obvious. The Constitution has been amended a number of times, of course. Ironically, many of the changes that appear to be needed now are the result of steps taken by descendants of the founding fathers, not the framers of the Constitution themselves. For example, consider:

■ Do you want to run for Congress? If you do, you'd better be wealthy, willing to sell your soul to every special interest group around, and Superman, if there happens to be an incumbent in place.

It's virtually unheard of for voters to vote out even a moderately ineffective congressman or senator, and if you do win, you're almost assured of keeping the job for 20 years or longer.

If we really want to start our own meaningful revolution in this country why don't we outlaw campaign contributions to remove the effect of special interest groups and limit the terms a congressman or senator can serve. Two terms, three terms; whatever the consensus says is best. We already limit presidents, so why not? Sure we'd lose some talented and dedicated public servants, but aren't we losing a hefty measure of fresh public input by allowing congressmen and senators to stay in office ad infinitum?

Speaking of financing political campaigns this way, why not also have the salaries for members of Congress paid by their constituents directly, with the amount controlled by the constituents. After all, these congressmen are supposed to be working for their constituents — and, of course, the interests of the nation.

■ Tired of seeing government soak up more of your dollars, while waging wars it doesn't win and placing restrictions on your ability to earn as much as you can, not to mention the rules that are just plain stupid? See answer above.

By turning over Congress every few years, we'd be assured of getting new ideas into Washington, D.C., and shaking up the status quo. That's not such a bad suggestion when you consider that Washington is a long way from Brownsville, Texas; Sacramento, Calif., or Anchorage, Alaska.

If these few ideas — and I have several more I could add — strike you as radical, then what the Soviet Union is doing should tell us that we, too, have been awfully lackadaisical about how we regard — and revere — our government. The American "dream" has lost its luster because we've let it happen. We've become too soft, too socialistic, too restrictive on individual liberty. Instead of letting personal initiative and entrepreneurship lead our nation, we try to put it into a convenient, vanilla package with exorbitant cost and shoddy workmanship.

We can rebuild that great dream, though, with our vision and hard work because the founding fathers gave "we, the people" the precious right to do that.

It's time for a long, hard look at where we are and where we're going.

City police officers deserve our respect

The first "Citizens Police Academy" is about to end. I feel honored to be one of the first 30 people selected to attend the 13-week course.

We have learned much of what it takes to operate an efficient police force from officers who volunteered their own time to give instructions. Graduation will be on April 11th.

Besides what we are learning in the classroom, I have also been out in the field riding with different officers, learning first-hand what they go through day after day.

I know that some officers don't wish to have civilians riding with them because of the responsibility of looking out for them in case they were to get into a high-risk situation and I respect their feelings.

We have never come upon a situation like that and I hope we never will. I trust the officers that I ride with and they are in control. I believe they would tell me what to do (stay in the unit or whatever) before we arrived at the call.

Would I be scared in a hostile situation? You'd better believe it! Do I think the officer would experience fear? Sure, because the primordial instinct of self-preservation causes extra amounts of adrenaline to flow, stimulating all the senses.

I know there is always a risk factor when on patrol, but I am mature and wise enough to not do anything to endanger me or the officer I am with.

Crimes against persons and property are getting pandemic in Midland and the public expects 98 officers — of which there are 17 mobile unit patrol officers per shift, three eight-hour shifts per day — to protect us from the criminal element.

The City Council in trying to save the city money, hired a consulting firm to do a study, at what price? I do not know. The study caused a loss of 37 police officers through early retirement or attrition, which meant that the line between us and the criminal element is a lot thinner.

If you are happy with the situation as it stands, sit back in your easy chair and watch TV (if it hasn't been stolen yet). If you are not happy, then it's time to make the City Council members know it!

I want to thank Police Chief Richard Czech, Sgt. Jeff Hale and the other officers for their time and effort developing the academy. Most of all I want to thank Tom, Arthur, Jessie, Jim, Bob, Dusty, Manny and the other patrol officers who befriended me while riding patrol. I hope I have been of some assistance.

God bless each and everyone of these officers and I pray that St. Michael (patron saint of police officers) always watches over them and protects them from all harm.

Sex education joined with values is best

For "education" sake, I feel that Raymond Norris' letter concerning Mark Mosely's supposed misinformation about comprehensive sexed increasing sexual activity, should not go unanswered.

I do not presently have the 1986 Harris Poll in front of me, but numerous other reliable sources do seem to back up Mosely's statement.

Because of rising pregnancy rates, Stan Weed, director of the independent Institute for Research and Evaluation, researched for two years data from Centers of Disease Control, the Guttmacher Institute (formed by Planned Parenthood), and the U.S. Census for all 50 states and the District of Columbia. The results were published in The Wall Street Journal on Oct. 14th under the headline, "Curbing Births, Not Pregnancies." Urbanization, mobility, race and poverty variables were taken into account.

The conclusions were that federally funded sex-ed programs (like Planned Parenthood) were more effective at convincing teens to avoid birth than to avoid pregnancy. Birth avoidance could be accomplished by abortion. Weed stated that the narrow-minded assumption that sexual activity was inevitable and irreversible and that contraception was the only answer, was false.

Jacqueline R. Kasum, Ph.D. professor of economics, stated in her paper "Teen-age Pregnancy: What Comparisons Among States and Countries Show" that although California spent more than three times as much as North Dakota on family planning, the rate of pregnancy in California was twice as high. This was not due to the lack of availability of contraceptives.

The reality of the situation is that valueless sex education and contraception alone are not the answer.

Value-related sex programs have shown not only a higher increase of self-esteem and self-control, but a lower rate of pregnancy.

Killing may be easy way, but others exist

Additional research to learn how man and animals can co-exist is not needed greatly in this not-so-perfect world. The easy way out, of course, is to kill. When is it going to stop? Not only are there birds being destroyed, but the same goes for dogs and cats. Thousands! What right do you have to destroy these animals? None.

Donald Trump built a $200 million high-rise. Soon the pigeons came. He used a $5 plastic owl purchased at K-mart and hung it in an air vent about the entrance. The building is pigeonless now. Five dollars versus the poison food and of course all of those dead birds.

Drunken drivers could serve alternative time

Recent discussions in these pages in regard to the problems of drunken drivers, and more specifically what to do with them, give me pause to reflect on my own, now unpopular view.

As we all know, our prisons are overcrowded. For each drunken driver we put in jail we must release a murderer, rapist, drug pusher or other criminal. That is not a pleasant thought. We could raise taxes to build prisons, but the public has voiced its reluctance to build these new prisons. Should we divert money from schools or defense or social services? Finding a consensus would be difficult at best.

It has been suggested that if more murderers were executed that would open more prison space for other criminals. But since the cost of executing capital criminals, with protracted legal proceedings far exceeds the cost of housing them for life, this would only be another tax increase.

This brings me back to the problem: What do we do with these drunken drivers that have been so irresponsible as to cause tragic consequences?

I think prison time should be reserved for only those that are repeat offenders of alternative sentences. These alternative sentences could range from community service and monetary fines to required education classes, revoked licenses for great periods of time or any combination of these. Other penalties could be used at a judge's discretion.

In a perfect world, the problems of drunken drivers could be settled by removing them from society. But given the limitations of our financial reality, I would rather see a drunken driver go free than the early release of a violent criminal.

Media have painted Exxon as the villain

I have grown a little tired of seeing the hypocritical news media (particularly TV) jumping all over Exxon for the Alaska oil spill. We are all very sorry that this unfortunate accident occurred, but Exxon has responded to it in a very responsible manner.

It is this same media group that cries out against the oil companies when gasoline prices go up; and who gloats when OPEC drives the prices down by flooding the market with crude.

Everyone wants a clean, safe environment, but we cannot always "have our cake and eat it, too." No special group (environmental or media) has a corner on mankind's desire for the best, but there are costs attached to everything. I don't suggest that we "let them eat cake." I suggest that we let them walk!

Parade of Homes benefits 4 agencies

By CATHIE BROTEN

Cathie Broten, a resident of Midland for 10 years, is president of the Midland Junior Woman's Club. The former special education teacher is now a homemaker.

Once again with the arrival of spring, Midland Junior Woman's Club is preparing for our annual Parade of Homes. This year marks the 20th anniversary of this event, with proceeds benefiting four Midland agencies. I would like to thank the community for its support over the years, for as we all know "nothing great was ever achieved without enthusiasm."

This year's Parade of Homes will take place Sunday, April 16, from 1:30-5:30 p.m. The agencies selected to benefit from the proceeds are Palmer Drug Abuse Program (PDAP), the Developmental Disabilities Center (DDC), Special Care Infants, and the Problem Pregnancy Center.

PDAP is a spiritually-based, 12-step recovery program, the goal of which is to help young people and parents whose lives have become unmanageable due to the effects of substance abuse. PDAP sponsors different activities to provide support, companionship and encouragement to the abuser. The Junior Woman's Club was one of the organizations that was instrumental in bringing PDAP to Midland in 1979. The monies from JWC are allocated for the younger group program (10-13 years old), which is a program stressing prevention.

The DDC is the only private facility in the Permian Basin that provides a daily center-based comprehensive program for developmentally disabled children. It adheres to the philosophy that every child deserves the opportunity to attain the highest quality of life. As it has grown over the years, the DDC has always maintained a low student/teacher ratio of four-to-one, and has upgraded its services to provide speech therapy, educational testing and evaluations, equestrian therapy, and occupational therapy consultation.

The Special Care Infants organization's main goal is to offer emotional support to parents who have an infant in the intensive care unit. Most members are parents who have had the experience themselves of a premature and/or high risk infant. They help to educate new parents through their lending library. A packet is also distributed to new parents that includes reading material, infant hat and gown, and premie-size diapers. Expenses of this group are mainly costs of printed materials, books for the lending library and volunteer training at a yearly conference.

The last recipient, the Problem Pregnancy Center, offers counseling and alternatives for problem pregnancies. Personnel can refer patients to doctors, give pregnancy tests, help with continuance of school, financial arrangements, legal aid, live-in accommodations, and adoption procedures. Maternity clothes and baby supplies can also be provided to expectant mothers.

All of these nonprofit groups rely on fund-raising and private donations, such as the proceeds provided by the Parade of Homes.

During the past 20 years, from snow-cone sales to paper drives, the community has continually supported JWC in its various endeavors. Currently, JWC sponsors not only Parade of Homes, but Story Hour for preschool children at Midland County Library.

On behalf of the members of JWC, the homeowners and the recipients, I would like to again say "thank you" for your continued support of the Parade of Homes.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 700 words or less.

Gorbachev failed to rein in Cuban troublemaker

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — There were good and bad aspects of the meeting in Havana this past week of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and Cuba's tyrannical Fidel Castro. Unfortunately, the bad heavily outweighed the good.

Hearst

Gorbachev failed to persuade the Cuban troublemaker that he should stop exporting revolution in Latin America as part of a Central American peace plan. He also failed to get Castro to share his conciliatory attitude toward the United States.

Responding to the Soviet leader's call for "zones of peace and cooperation" in Latin America and his offer to have the Soviet Union support an international conference to help create them, Castro warned there might be danger for Cuba in closer relations between Moscow and Washington and made it clear he still considers America an imperialist nation.

Some of Gorbachev's statements in Havana also give us reason to be wary of this shrewd Soviet politician who has given the world so much hope that he was ending the cold war.

While reiterating his support for the Central American peace plan to disband the Nicaraguan freedom fighters and move toward democratization in that country, Gorbachev denounced U.S. policy in Latin America, although both the Reagan and Bush administrations have supported the peace plan.

Gorbachev said congressional approval of $40 million nonmilitary aid for the Contras was "regrettable," but he said nothing about continued Soviet and Cuban military aid to the Nicaraguan communist regime except to call for "an end to military supplies to Central America from any quarter."

Maintenance of even the small force of freedom fighters that still exist, mostly in Honduran refugee camps, is the only leverage that might lead Daniel Ortega, the Nicaraguan Marxist dictator, to honor his commitment under the peace plan to restore the democratic political system in Nicaragua.

What was most disturbing to me about what the Soviet leader had to say in Havana was that while he called for an end to all foreign military supplies to Central America, he did not say anything about ending Soviet military supplies to Cuba.

Nor did he say anything about withdrawing Soviet military power from Cuba and the Caribbean, the only purpose of which is to threaten the United States.

Gorbachev said, "the Soviet Union does not plan to have nuclear missiles deployed (in Latin America) or any other means of mass extermination," and he invited other powers to make the same vow.

This was deceptive because the Soviets from time to time deploy a naval task force in the Caribbean which includes nuclear weapons. Such a task force has been deployed six times in the past decade. Soviet nuclear-weapon submarines are cruising almost constantly off the U.S. Atlantic coast and they as well as the Soviet surface nuclear warships stop at Cuban ports.

In addition, the Soviets maintain bases in Cuba for anti-submarine warfare and reconnaissance aircraft. The former are capable of carrying nuclear weapons.

According to a Pentagon report on Soviet military power, there have been — from 1981 through 1988 — more than 60 deployments of BEAR D naval reconnaissance aircraft and over 20 deployments of BEAR F anti-submarine warfare aircraft in Cuba.

Gorbachev did call for the creation of non-nuclear demilitarized zones in Latin America, and if such zones are established we should insist they include Cuba.

Despite the warm embraces they gave each other and the signing of a so-called "Treaty of Friendship," media reports on the meeting of Gorbachev and Castro indicate it was no love-feast.

There was speculation the Soviet leader would cancel, or reduce, the estimated $9 billion debt the Cuban government owes the Soviet Union for military and economic aid. Nothing was said about that, at least publicly.

Gorbachev would like Castro to normalize relations with the United States so that we would lift our economic embargo against Cuba, opening the American market to Cuban goods and thus make Cuba less dependent on economic aid from Russia.

The Bush administration, as did previous administrations, made clear to Castro the embargo will be lifted only if he agrees to stop exporting revolution in Latin America.

Although Gorbachev said publicly in Moscow that "we are against doctrines that endorse the export of revolution and counterrevolution," Castro bristled when a reporter asked if he was willing to stop supporting communist-oriented revolutionaries in Central America. "The Soviet Union and the United States have nothing to say about Cuba's foreign relations," he snapped, adding that Cuba is not a "colony."

Perhaps I have expected too much from Gorbachev. He has come a good way toward loosening up the old Stalinist form of communism in Russia.

I'm afraid I expected him to threaten Castro with a cutoff of aid if the Cuban dictator didn't stop supplying the Nicaraguan regime and the leftist rebels in El Salvador and Honduras with weapons and munitions.

Apparently, he's not ready to go that far to improve relations with the United States.

Of course, he is not an American representing our security and democratic interests, but I had hoped he would put a little more pressure on Castro to facilitate a peace settlement in Central America. So the Havana meeting was disappointing to me.

The 496 Midland ISD students involved in the testing program achieved an average score of 9.0; the national average was 8.53.

EDUCATION in brief

Hearing slated on dismissal

Midland school trustees Tuesday will conduct a hearing concerning a fired warehouse worker who contends that he was let go because he "knew too much" about warehouse improprieties.

David Marin, 40, an eight-year veteran of Midland Independent School District, was fired in December 1988 for alleged tardiness and misconduct.

However, Kay Walling, regional representative for the Texas State Teachers Association who is representing Marin, said the worker was terminated because he knew of theft of equipment and other activities at the warehouse conducted by fellow employees.

MISD Superintendent Joe Baressi in early March denied an appeal by Marin, saying his termination was justified.

MISD trustees are slated to conduct a hearing on the firing at 8 p.m. in the board room of the MISD Administration Building, 702 N. N St.

At 6 p.m., trustees will hold another hearing to consider a Greenwood resident's petition for his property to be detached from MISD so it can be annexed by Greenwood Independent School District.

Contending that he can't sell his 500 acres of land because buyers in that area don't want their children to attend MISD schools, which are farther away than GISD schools, Frank Pannell filed his petition in March.

Pannell at the time said school officials could face hundreds of parents wanting their children to attend GISD schools southeast of the city.

MISD administrators and trustees said they would not comment on the matter until after the hearing.

Baressi said allowing the detachment would mean a loss of approximately $1.2 million in taxable property.

Pannell said his detachment petition would not be the last from Greenwood residents.

Marilyn Bassinger will review "All I Really Need to Know I Learned in Kindergarten," the New York Times bestseller by Robert Fulghum, at an informal coffee at 10 a.m. Tuesday at Pages and Prints Bookstore, 40 Plaza Center.

Washington senator Don Evans was so impressed by Fulghum's simple credo that portions have been read into the Congressional Record.

Paul Harvey and Larry King have read it to millions on their radio shows. Both Dear Abby and Reader's Digest have printed selections and Southwestern Bell sold hundreds of copies as a poster.

"Fulghum writes with wit and insight about the small lives with big meanings," Ms. Bassinger said. "And, every essay in the book will affect you ... make you pause to reflect on your own life and leave you wise, gentler and feeling good."

Reservations for the coffee, which will be catered by Foods Fantastic, may be made at Pages and Prints from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. or call 687-5172 for additional information.

Palacios residents shocked, saddened by killing of JP

PALACIOS (AP) — Residents of this small fishing town tried to determine Saturday why a masked gunman entered a courthouse annex and opened fire, killing a popular justice of the peace and wounding an assistant police chief.

"We're looking at three motives right now, but we haven't narrowed it down," Police Chief Don Gullett said Saturday. He would not discuss the possible reasons for the shootings.

Justice of the Peace T.J. "Jack" Dooley, 79, was shot once in the heart, and Assistant Police Chief Emmitt Greene, 43, was shot in the upper chest in the attack at about 2:35 p.m. Friday.

Greene remained in serious condition in the intensive care unit of the Matagorda General Hospital in Bay City with a bullet lodged near his spine, Gullett said.

The bullet pierced Greene's liver. Gullett said doctors had decided to not remove the bullet because "it would cause more damage."

The slain gunman was identified by officials as Duc Nga Nguyen, 27, from Garden City, Kan. He had lived in Palacios previously and was arrested in 1987 for carrying a pistol.

Officials estimated Nguyen and Greene fired up to 20 shots during a gun battle that lasted only a few seconds.

Residents of Palacios, 100 miles southwest of Houston, are puzzled over the shooting, Gullett said.

"The city is in shock. The Vietnamese community is in shock," he said. "I want to say that this gunman could have been any race. It's unfortunate that it was Vietnamese.

"My phone was ringing off the wall at home last night. Many Vietnamese called my wife. Some called me at the office, others came to the office in person. They are apologizing that this took place. The community as a whole is remorse. They feel very bad about it."

Nguyen walked in the courthouse annex, which houses several county offices including the sheriff's office and police department, said Matagorda County Sheriff Sam Hurta. Nguyen's face was partly covered by a bandana and he held a Mauser automatic, which discharges bullets about the size of those from a .32-caliber pistol.

Nguyen also wore a backpack that, police later learned, contained adhesive tape, string and a device that could be used as a bomb detonator. The pack also contained three pairs of fake handcuffs.

Hurta said there was no bomb in the pack. Bomb experts from Houston combed through Nguyen's van parked beside the annex and Dooley's car, but no explosives were found, investigators said.

Nguyen had been at the annex earlier in the day inquiring about obtaining a driver's license and left when he was told they were only issued on Wednesday.

Pam Gullett, the police chief's wife who works for the county tax office and has a desk at the annex, said she knew there was something wrong as soon as Nguyen walked in.

"He yelled at me to stand up. I asked him what he said, and then the shooting started," she said. "I ducked into a corner, hoping that the bullets wouldn't go through the wood."

Dooley walked in as Nguyen grabbed Dwayne Koenig, 32, who was standing by the door, authorities said. Nguyen was instructing Koenig and Mrs. Gullett to lie on the floor when Dooley approached them and was fatally shot. Mrs. Gullett and Koenig were unhurt.

Greene entered the tax office and ordered Nguyen to drop the gun. The gunman fired at the 13-year police department veteran, hitting him in the upper chest. But Greene managed to reload his .45-caliber revolver and fire several times, striking the gunman in the head, arm and leg.

Dooley had been a justice of the peace for 12 years and was planning to travel to Rome, where he was to meet one of his two sons, Hurta said.

Service station owners sue Exxon

HOUSTON (AP) — An angry group of Texas Exxon service station owners filed suit against the oil giant, charging that Exxon's manipulative practices take profits from dealers and saddle consumers with high fuel prices.

Nineteen Exxon dealers, most from the Houston area, charged the nation's largest oil marketer in the lawsuit — filed Friday in state district court — with 15 counts of civil violations of Texas antitrust and deceptive trade practices laws.

The suit, among other things, seeks more than $5 million in actual damages and unspecified punitive damages.

An Exxon spokesman did not answer a telephone call from The Associated Press Saturday.

A dealer group spokesman said it was "merely coincidence" that the filing came in the wake of the Exxon Valdez oil disaster in Alaska.

Clyde Hall, a Pasadena Exxon dealer for 22 years, said, "we finally had enough of it, and we're fighing back."

Hall and his fellow dealers complain Exxon favors select franchises with "sweetheart" rents, interferes with dealers' ability to buy gasoline cheaper from wholesalers and has rigid rules for the inheritance of a dealer's station when he dies.

Exxon is the second oil company sued by its dealers in the last six months. Last September, Texaco was hit with a suit on a separate set of complaints by a band of dealer franchises in Houston federal court.

"Is this the last of this type of suit you're going to see? No," said Glenn Nilsson, executive director of the Lone Star Service Stations Association, a dealer lobby.

Lone Star lobbyist Wayne Konitshek, who helped the Exxon dealers coordinate their suit, said more than 80 suits for similar alleged franchise violations are pending in nine states.

Herb Fortson, attorney for the Exxon and Texaco dealers' suit, said it took more than nine months to gather evidence and prepare the Exxon suit.

"None of these dealers likes to fight their suppliers," he said. "But when the supplier is taking money out of their pockets and favoring (few) dealers, they have no choice."

Plaintiffs include nine Exxon dealers from Houston; three from San Antonio; and one each from Webster, Pasadena, League City, Conroe, Baytown, Lewisville and Porter.

The co-defendants also include Exxon district managers and sales representatives for the regions serving the dealers, and Royce Groff Oil Co., an Exxon wholesaler in Castroville, near San Antonio.

INS forced to install cellular phones for aliens

BAYVIEW (AP) — The immigration service is installing cellular telephones for aliens at its southern Texas detention center in a rush to comply with a federal judge reviewing the agency's treatment of Salvadorans.

U.S. District Judge David V. Kenyon of the Central District of California last year made permanent a 1982 injunction ordering the Immigration and Naturalization Service to guarantee Salvadorans access to legal materials and legal workers and inform them of their right to seek political asylum. The order stemmed from a case, Orantes-Hernandez v. United States, in which immigrant rights lawyers contended the INS denied Salvadorans various constitutional protections.

The judge last April specified that access to telephones is part of access to legal representation and ordered the INS to provide one telephone for every 25 detainees from El Salvador.

Kenyon is reviewing the INS' compliance in the case, and has set a hearing for Thursday and a contempt trial for May 30.

INS spokeswoman Virginia Kice said 61 mobile cellular telephones at a cost of $41,000 are being installed at the minimum-security Port Isabel Service Processing Center near Bayview, and should be working by Tuesday.

Monthly fees for the phones' air time will total $6,225, Ms. Kice said.

The agency had to opt for the costly cellular phones because there are not enough conventional telephone lines to the remote area 20 miles northeast of the border city of Brownsville, Ms. Kice added.

"The immigration service wants to be sure we are in complete compliance with the Orantes ruling," Ms. Kice said. "I know that the phones were one potential trouble spot and we are making every effort to be in compliance."

Ms. Kice said the INS will not pay for calls beyond the Lower Rio Grande Valley at the southern tip of the state.

An additional 15 pay telephones Southwestern Bell Telephone is adding to the 28 coin phones already at the center will bring to 104 the total number of telephones available to detainees. The INS, Ms. Kice said, will try to maintain a 1-to-25 telephone ratio for the total detainee population.

As of midnight Thursday, there were 2,041 men and women at the rural detention camp for aliens facing deportation proceedings, including 576 Salvadorans. There were 528 aliens from various countries sleeping in tents because of a lack of dormitory space, Ms. Kice said.

The detention camp's population multiplied five-fold after Feb. 21, when the INS began a policy of deciding asylum cases in one day and immediately detaining those denied refugee status. The Border Patrol since then also has added personnel in southern Texas and stopped releasing on their own recognizance the aliens it apprehends.

Thelma Garcia, a Harlingen immigration attorney, said detainees at the crowded center have told her that they must wait a week or longer to use telephones.

"It certainly will make it a lot easier for the detainees" when telephones are added, Ms. Garcia said.

Southwestern Bell spokeswoman Sonia Perez in McAllen said the increased demand at the INS detention center prompted the phone company to begin installing new optical fiber cables to serve the Bayview area.

STATE in brief

Lawyer seeks to have ex-detective charged

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas County grand jury heard an appeal from an attorney who represented former death row inmate Randall Dale Adams to consider misdemeanor perjury charges against a former police detective.

Lawyer George Preston claimed the former detective has given conflicting accounts of Adams' behavior immediately after his 1976 arrest. Preston Friday urged state District Judge Larry Baraka to appoint a special prosecutor to present a complaint of perjury to the grand jury.

Preston, in a letter addressed to the foreman of the grand jury that will consider the complaint, alleged that the lead investigator in the slaying of Dallas police officer Robert Wood lied in a hearing late last year.

The attorney said the investigator testified before Baraka that Adams did not proclaim his innocence when he was arrested and charged with the killing.

Another man has since virtually confessed to shooting Wood. Adams, after serving 12 years in prison for the crime, was freed March 21, and charges against him were dropped.

Judge questions jurors

AUSTIN (AP) — Responding to allegations of jury misconduct, U.S. District Judge James Nowlin privately interviewed four of 12 jurors who convicted a local psychologist of fraud and embezzlement, a newspaper reported Saturday.

Nowlin is expected to decide next week whether Lucy Marrero, whose February conviction carries up to $850,000 in fines and 285 years in prison, is entitled to a new trial because of jury impropriety, the Austin American-Statesman reported.

Marrero, 35, was found guilty of 37 of 42 charges alleging fraud and embezzlement from U.S. military medical insurance funds. Her sentencing is set for April 26.

Allegations of jury harassment and juror misconduct surfaced soon after the trial ended Feb. 17, the newspaper reported.

One juror has been accused of commenting the first day of the trial that Marrero was guilty, and two jurors say they were forced to vote for a guilty verdict despite believing Marrero was innocent, according to documents filed by Marrero's attorneys.

La Tuna warden moving

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. (AP) — A 23-year veteran with the U.S. Bureau of Prisons is expected to take over as warden at the federal penitentiary in Terre Haute in mid-May, officials announced.

Tom Kindt, 45, warden at the La Tuna, Texas, federal prison near El Paso, will replace Calvin Edwards.

Edwards, 43, will become a regional bureau director based in Belmont, Calif. He had been warden in Terre Haute since December 1987.

Remains identified as missing Stamford girl

ANSON (AP) — Human remains found by a hunter near Moran last month are those of a 7-year-old Stamford girl who disappeared in September, authorities said Saturday.

The remains of Cortney Lyn Clayton were positively identified by matching hair samples and through computer image technology, law enforcement officers and investigators said at a news conference at the Jones County courthouse.

"Her death has been ruled as a violent homicide," said Texas Ranger Calvin Cox.

The girl had been missing since Sept. 2, when she was last seen buying a soft drink at a store a block from her home.

Cox said the age of the remains indicate the girl died shortly after she disappeared. "We believe the skeletal remains found are consistent with the time she was missing," he said.

Cox and other law enforcement officials — including Stamford Police Chief Don Glasgow, Jones County District Attorney investigator Woodrow Simmons, Jones County Sheriff Mike Middleton and Shackelford County Sheriff Ben Jack Riley — said they have no suspects or motives in the girl's disappearance and death.

"We haven't gone to the courthouse with anybody yet," Cox said, adding authorities had questioned several hundred people in the case.

A skull and arm, leg and rib bones found about 10 miles west of Moran were examined at the Dallas Southwest Institute of Forensic Sciences and at the University of North Texas' anthropology department.

Cortney's parents, Stan and Candice Clayton, learned of the positive identification Friday. The Claytons viewed a videotape of the computer comparisons of Cortney's photograph.

"I had a feeling all along it was her. I just didn't want to believe it," said Mrs. Clayton.

Jones County is about 150 miles west of Fort Worth.

Judge claims demands for his dismissal are political

AUSTIN (AP) — A state district judge who criticized the homosexuality of two murder victims told the Texas Supreme Court that demands for his dismissal are politically motivated.

In documents filed with the state high court Friday, Judge Jack Hampton said a petition in which 17 lawyers ask for his dismissal "is politically motivated without basis or foundation" and comes from a group interested in "embarrassing the court."

Hampton faces moves on two fronts that could lead to his removal. Both the Supreme Court and the state Commission on Judicial Conduct have launched inquiries of the jurist.

Both were prompted by a December interview the 57-year-old judge gave to the Dallas Times Herald in which he criticized the homosexuality of two murder victims.

The judge said one reason he sentenced the man convicted of killing the two men to 30 years instead of life in prison was that he believed the victims were "queers cruising the streets for teen-age boys" and therefore were "asking for trouble."

Court records show the only evidence that the two men were soliciting sex came from the testimony of the defendant.

Gay and civil rights groups organized demonstrations against the judge, with some urging Hampton's removal. Critics said Hampton's remarks showed he was not fair and impartial.

However, in the response Friday, Hampton and his four attorneys denied that anything the judge did during or after the trial can be construed as evidence that he is biased.

The documents said that to remove Hampton from the bench "is to remove the judiciary from its normal processes and operation and subject the courts to manipulation and circumscription at the whim of media attention or political caprice."

Houston boy wins geography bee

FORT WORTH (AP) — A Houston native found his way to Washington, D.C., by winning a geography bee held Friday that pitted 100 young Texans against each other.

David Norman, 14, of George A. Thompson Intermediate School, won $100 and a plaque in the contest sponsored by the National Geographic Society to spark interest in geography among youngsters.

The national competition will be held May 18-19 with a $25,000 prize at stake.

Norman correctly identified a flood plain and explained why vegetation near water is distinctive. It is more fertile.

George W. Bush, the president's son, moderated the state competition that was held at Texas Christian University. The double-elimination state finals round included competitors in grades 4 to 8.

The Grandfather Election
Avoiding the 15% Penalty Tax on Large Qualified Plans
The IRS, with the help of Congress, has determined that future pension plans cannot be used to provide above average retirement benefits and has imposed a 15% penalty tax on large qualified plans.
In an effort to protect those nearing retirement, Congress is offering a grandfather election to individuals with existing plans. Taking advantage of this grandfather election puts your pension under a different set of tax rules that can potentially reduce (or increase) your penalty tax.
This seminar is designed to help you analyze the impact of this penalty tax and the grandfather election alternative. Solutions will be presented to avoid the 5% estate tax as well as the 28% income tax and 55% estate tax that can apply to your retirement assets.

Permian, Cowan steal show

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

While Odessa Permian was rolling up points faster than a Las Vegas slot machine spins lemons, Odessa High sophomore Dallas Cowan was stealing the show at Memorial Stadium's Tall City Relays Saturday.

Odessa Permian easily captured both the boys and girls team championship with the Panther boys, the defending champs, winning by a 150-128 margin over San Angelo, despite dropping the baton in the sprint relay. Old Mojo wiped out the girls field by a 175-92 margin over defending champion Lubbock Coronado.

But Cowan's 10.20 in the 100 meters and his 20.95 in the 200 brought the house down. Neither was a record since former Permian star Jason Leach owned marks of 10.10 and 20.69 in this meet. Leach, however, hit those marks as a senior and Cowan is only a sophomore.

BUT DON'T worry. Cowan has plans for Leach.

"I'll get his marks by the time I'm a senior," boldly said Cowan, who still has two years to make the run.

Cowan was taking some ribbing since both races came on a windy, blustery day. They call the times "wind-aided."

"I'm sure the wind had something to do with the times I had, but I wish had been a perfect day. I don't like running in the wind," said Cowan. "You would ideally like to run a time that was good without the wind, but I can't control that factor."

Cowan got a bad start in the 100 as Midland High's Albert Ray ran the race of his life for a blistering 10.38, and still lost. Ray's previous best was 10.59, but he now casts his name into the ring as a major contender next week in the District 4-5A meet to earn a region berth.

"I KNEW the only way for me to stay with Cowan was to get a good start. I did, but he still caught me," said Ray. "Still, this was a very good race for me. I've never run this fast."

But if you were looking for record performances, you had to look up the girls in this one. The boys got shutout of the record book.

Midland High's Tracy Parker scored a record toss of 40-feet, 4-inches to beat her own record of last year in the shot put. But it wasn't what she wanted after going 41-7 last week. Parker went to the state meet last year in the shot put.

"I wanted at least a 42 in this one," said Parker. "Now I'm shooting for a 42-5 at district next week."

CHRISTY Vasquez of Lubbock Coronado set a 3200 mark with an 11:58.97 that left one straight-away between her and the pursurers. Permian's Tracy Lawrence got the other mark with a 58.01 in the 400, more than a full second over her previous best.

Midland High's John Braun won for the third time this year in the discus with a 148-10. And Midland High's Annette Glover won the 200 with a 25.80 over Lee's Jamelia Lott after placing second in the 100.

"I was really mad about losing in the 100," said Glover, a junior. "I'm really not as fast this year as I want to be, but next year, I'm going to be Flo-Jo Jr."

In what will be remembered as a real oddity in this meet is the fact that Midland Lee didn't win an event from either the girls or boys. The Lee boys are an injured lot with David Whiteside, James Brown and Marcus Strambler not running to nurse injuries. Brown, however, did jump a fine 21-2½ in the long jump in his first time out this year. The Lee girls just came up with a passle of second place berths.

One of the big surprises in second place was the finish of Marsha del Llano in the 1600, who was running the event for only the second time.

"This is a tough race and I don't know if I have the strength to place in the top two of district," said del Llano. "I'm not on any other relay, so this is the only hope I have. I'll just give it a good try."

San Angelo's Joey Bonds was a double winner again in the hurdles to remain unbeaten, joining Cowan as the only individual two-event champion. Cowan also placed fifth in the long jump.

Lee's Bill Swearingen placed second to Permian's Darin Chase in the 800 in his quest to change events from the 400 to 800. But Swearingen ran a personal best 1:59.35 and gave Chase a chase. David Arehart's 6-4 in the high jump wasn't very good showing for the 6-8 Lee leaper, but he has a small back problem that isn't expected to bother him through another week.

Midland High finished second in the sprint relay with a 42.10, giving MHS coach Johnny Williams some hope for the district meet next week.

"This is by far the best we have done and we feel like we have a chance. Everything would have to go good, but we have a chance," said Williams.

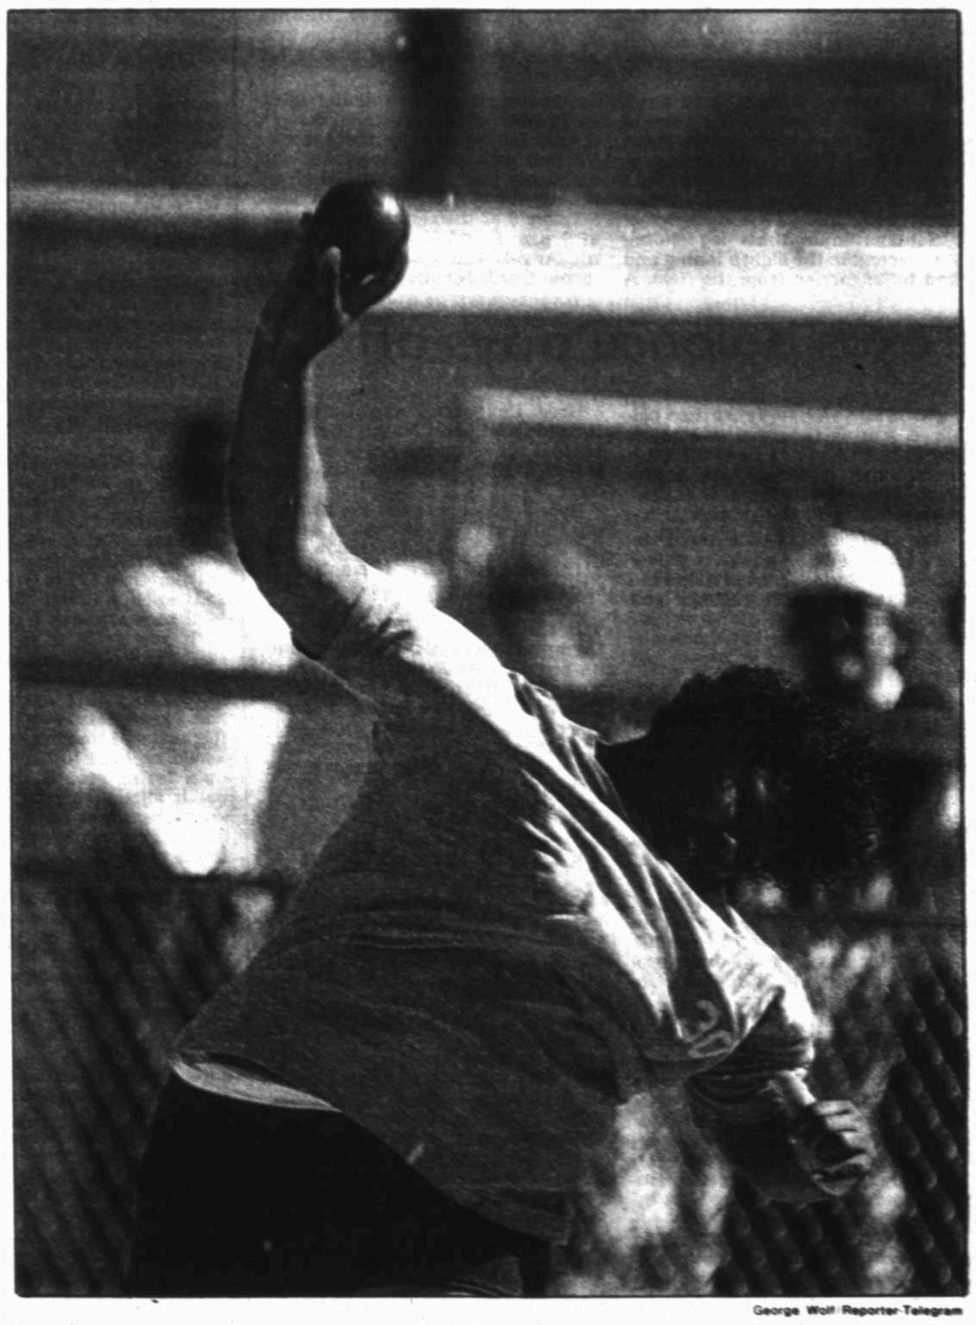

Lee's Mary Ann Isom had a second in the discus while Janice Samuels was second in the hurdles.

Lee got a setback in the girls 100 when Melody Miller, who is trying to regain form that led to two previous region berths, failed to get into her scheduled prelim heat and was scratched.

MIDLAND HIGH'S Myra Pina, a region qualifier last year, is running personal bests this year, but doesn't appear headed back to Lubbock. She finished sixth in the 800 and didn't place in the 1600. She will return to the 3200 for the district meet next week after giving the 800 a try.

Midland High's Dwane Roberts was a surprise region qualifier last year in the 100, but he finished sixth in both the 100 and 200. He will run in the 200 next week and go with a relay in an effort to get back to Lubbock.

Abbott shelled in debut

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — On a perfect Southern California evening, Jim Abbott — already an American success story — became the 10th pitcher since 1965 to make his pro debut in the big leagues; all of them eventually got sent to the minors.

A crowd of 46,847, about 10,000 than might normally attend the Seattle-California game, came out to see the Olympic star try to answer the two questions that have always followed him: how does he do it, and can he do it?

It didn't turn out that good. Abbott struggled, lasting just 4 2-3 innings and giving up six runs as Seattle beat the Angels 7-0.

Abbott gave up six hits and walked three, although not all of the Angels' problems were his. Two errors behind him led to three unearned runs.

Lee stuns MHS, 5-4

Rebels knock Bulldogs out of 1st

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

Just when it looked like things were becoming predictable in the District 4-5A baseball race, Midland Lee proceeded to cloud the issue at Angel Stadium Saturday.

The Rebels took the No. 7 Midland High Bulldogs by surprise, 5-4, dropping the 'Dogs from atop the league's top spot.

Pearson, 2-2, was the winning pitcher; Kevin Rychel, who came on in relief in the sixth, suffered his first loss of the district season.

Midland High had several hits, but again they were all singles. The Bulldogs left six stranded, five of which were left on either second or third.

"We got outplayed, and I got outcoached," MHS head coach Tim Whalen said. "We haven't set the world on fire bunting, but I feel like we could have bunted Kevin over."

Whalen was talking of his decision in the bottom of the seventh to give Rychel the steal sign after reaching on a single. Rychel was thrown out at second by Lee catcher Greg Garrett for the first out in the bottom of the seventh. Rychel's failed steal attempt effectively killed any hopes the Bulldogs had of regaining the lead a final time.

B.J. Parrish began Lee's hitting attack by sending the second pitch of the game deep to leftfield for a double. Parrish, whose shot was the only extra base hit of the day for either team, later stole home on a double theft to put the Rebs ahead 1-0.

The 'Dogs tied it in the bottom of the inning when Rychel singled and came home on an RBI single by Will Sowders.

The two teams went scoreless for the next two innings, highlighted when MHS starter Dorey Thompson sent down eight straight Rebels, including four strikeouts. Thompson fanned six in his 5⅓ innings.

Midland High took a 2-1 lead in the fourth when Melzer stole home on the second attempted double steal of the game. On the back end of the steal, courtesy-runner Keith Gilbreath was tossed out at second.

The Rebs went ahead, 3-2, in the fifth, scoring two when Garrett singled and coutesy runner Jason Sever stole second. Parrish reached first on an error and Vince Henderson walked to load the bases. Pearson then drove in Sever and Parrish came home — his second run of the game — when Greeley bounced out to second.

On four singles in the fifth, Midland High regained the lead, 4-3, when Brian Conaway and Gilbreath came home.

Lee scored single runs in the sixth and seventh to preserve the win.

"We didn't get one call our way today," Whalen said. "But that's just part of the dern game.

"We didn't have any clutch hitting when we had to have it. Nobody stepped up to do it. I think we had the attitude of 'Don't worry, it'll happen.' None of us performed so we didn't deserve to win."

Lee hosts Odessa High at 4 p.m. Tuesday at Rebel Field. MHS travels to first place Odessa Permian. The first pitch at Permian will be 4:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Herrera MVP as Texas beats U.S.A. in JC classic

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Odessa College basketball coach Dennis Helms probably put the Texas-USA NJCAA All-Star Basketball Game in perspective as well as anybody could.

"It's the first time I ever came in this building (the Chaparral Center) and wasn't nervous," Helms said after coaching the Texas team to a 110-90 romp over the national five Saturday.

If Saturday's game was a novel experience for Helms, it was more of the same for Texas stars Carl Herrera and Larry Johnson. Former Jacksonville Baptist post Herrera and former Odessa College great Johnson combined for 52 points, while the U.S.A. inside trio of Clifford Martin, David Harris and Billy Coles was held to a cumulative total of 20 points.

Herrera was named Most Valuable Player, an award that the University of Houston-bound Venezuelan probably locked up in the first seven minutes of the game by outscoring the entire U.S.A. squad 11-10.

The 6-foot-9 Herrera set the tone for the Texas stars with a three-point shot 34 seconds after the tip. Team U.S.A., comprised of 10 of the best junior college players from coast to coast, took brief leads of 5-3 and 10-9, but the Texans took charge with an 8-0 run that was keyed by two Herrera dunks.

Though Team U.S.A. kept it respectable for much of the first half, the Texas stars built an 18-point lead early in the second half before U.S.A. forward Jackie Jones keyed a rally that brought the nationals to within four on two separate occasions with about six minutes left (84-80 and 86-82).

But 5-5 point guard Arnold Bernard of San Jacinto College re-entered the game to spark a seven-point spurt for the Texans, and things just snowballed against Team U.S.A from that point.

National team coach Ken Rochlitz said rebounding was the key, much as he feared it would be with the presence of Johnson and Herrera.

"Those second, third and fourth shots killed us," Rochlitz said. "I've been involved with junior college basketball almost 20 years, and Larry Johnson is just head and shoulders above anybody I've seen on this level.

"Carl is an excellent player, but Larry just created so many problems for us tonight."

Helms said it was business as usual for his two main power men.

"I knew Carl and Larry would have great games, because I've never sen it any other way — and I knew I had the shooters to go with them."

Former Ranger J.C. star Ken Austin and Tyler J.C.-ex Robert Pack provided much of the outside scoring spark for the Texans, though former Midland College standout Charles McCovery added nine points.

Austin scored 10 points, including two three-pointers, while Pack drove the lanr for most of his 12 points.

Angels make it two straight

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

The Midland Angels exploded for six runs in the first inning to earn their second straight win of the Texas League season, downing the San Antonio Missions, 12-6, Saturday night.

The two teams combined for 28 hits as runners reached base safely in every half inning until the top of the ninth.

Left-fielder Danny Grunhard provided much of the offensive spark for the Angels with three hits in five at bats including a single, triple and homer. Grunhard's performance was especially sweet after his four strikeouts from Friday's season opener.

"(Danny) called me today," Angel manager Max Oliveras said after the game, "and said to me 'Hi, my name is Danny Grunhard and I'm a new player on the team. I wasn't here (Friday) night.'

Whatever it was Grunhard did to correct his swing worked like a charm.

"Tonight I was just staying back on the ball," Grunhard said. "(Friday) night I was too far out in front. I moved up a little at the plate."

Grunhard's defensive maneuvers almost matched his offense as he brought in two above average catches in left field to end a small San Antonio threat in the sixth inning.

Grunhard was not the only offensive success story. Shortstop Gary DiSarcina drove in four runs — three in the first — and finished the night with two hits in five at bats, and third baseman Bob Rose was 3-for-5 with two runs scored and two RBIs.

The Angels' six run outburst in the first was a lead the Missions could never overcome. Things might have turned out differently had it not been for two errors by San Antonio shortstop Luis Martinez. Of the six runs in the first, only Reed Peter's score — the first for Midland — was earned.

DiSarcina's double in the first drove in Hedi Vargas, John Orton and Rose for the final runs of the innings.

Grunhard's homer was a one-out shot in the second that increased the Angels' lead to 7-2.

The Missions scored their first run with less than two minutes gone in the game. Miguel Santana doubled on the first pitch and advanced to third and home on back-to-back wild pitches by Midland starter Mike Butcher.

Santana injured his leg sliding into second in the eighth inning and had to be carried from the field. A Mission official said it was believed he recieved only a slight twist.

Butcher received the win for the Angels, allowing five earned runs and nine hits.

San Antonio starter Dennis Springer, despite receiving the loss, allowed just two earned runs in his five innings.

Missions reliever Gordie Hershiser — brother of Los Angeles Dodger pitcher Orel — had the most successful performance on the mound for his team, pitching two-thirds of an inning, allowing one hit and no runs.

Game 3 of the series begins today at 6 p.m. David Martinez starts for the Angels while San Antonio will throw Chris Nichting.

Texas balance pays off

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas used balanced scoring Saturday to capture the 35th All-America Intercollegiate Invitational, capturing the Southwest Conference regular-season championship in the process.

The Longhorns, who entered the final round with a 6-stroke lead over Oklahoma State, shot a final-round 294 at the windy Bear Creek golf course and finished at 5-over par 869. Oklahoma State and Louisiana State tied for second at 20-over par 884.

Robert Gamez of Arizona coasted to an 8-shot victory in the individual competition. Gamez followed a 65 in Friday's second round with an even-par 72 on Saturday.

Greg Cox and Zoran Zorkic of Houston and Chad Magee of Arkansas tied for second at 1-over par 217. Magee's 71 was the low round of the day.

Kyle Jerome was the Longhorns' top finisher, tying for 10th at 4-over par 220. But Omar Uresti followed at 221, and Brad Agee, Brian Nelson and Taylor Tipton all shot 223.

The SWC used the event, along with the Harvey Penick and Border Olympics tournaments, to determine its regular-season champion. Texas won the Border Olympics and placed third at the Harvey Penick.

It was the Longhorns' first SWC championship since 1983 and their first All-America Intercollegiate victory since 1970.

IRS looks into Rose case

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Reds manager Pete Rose is being investigated by the Internal Revenue Service for tax evasion and gambling, according to a report published Saturday.

Federal investigators believe Rose may have owned part of a winning parimutuel ticket at Turfway Park that was cashed by a man who once lived with Rose's family and was indicted Thursday, a second newspaper reported Saturday. Rose has denied any connection with that ticket.

Johnny Bench, a former teammate, said baseball is being hurt by the series of allegations.

" All of a sudden we're trying to find ways for Pete to step down gracefully," said Bench, now a Reds broadcaster.

Rose, responding to stories in The Dayton Daily News and The Cincinnati Post, said he is cooperating with investigators.

"They've got my tax records," Rose said Saturday. "I pay a lot of taxes. I'm not trying to hide anything from the government."

Rose is under investigation by the basefall commissioner over "serious allegations," allegedly related to his gambling. He could be suspended for a year if he's found to have bet on baseball. A lifetime ban is possible if he bet on Reds' games.

Bench, the retired Cincinnati Reds catcher who will be inducted into baseball's Hall of Fame in July, stopped just short Friday night of calling for Rose's resignation as manager.

"Too many things are pointing toward Pete Rose and as a result, baseball is starting to suffer," Bench told WCPO-TV in Cincinnati.

"The evidence is so large right now and aiming toward Pete in so many ways. All of a sudden we're trying to find ways for Pete to step down gracefully. And that is really sad," Bench said.

Bench and Rose were teammates in 1975 and 1976 when the Reds won the World Series two years in a row.

The Post quoted anonymous sources as saying the IRS began investigating last year, after federal agents infiltrated a major gambling and drug trafficking ring operating out of southwest Ohio. Nine alleged members of the ring have been charged.

There's never been a suggestion that Rose is involved with drugs.

LSU ends Arkansas UT reign

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Louisiana State snapped Arkansas' seven-year victory streak in the 6,000-meter relay on Saturday with a Texas Relays' record clocking.

LSU's time of 15:09.54 shattered the meet mark of 15:13.17 set by the Razorbacks in 1987. Arkansas was timed in 15:10.89.

Texas Christian, as expected with Olympian Ray Stewart on the anchor, won its fourth consecutive 400-meter relay at this meet with a time of 39.08, best by a collegiate foursome this year. TCU had won 25 in a row in the event until the Frogs were upset by Florida in the Penn Relays last year.

LSU was unheralded coming into the men's 6,000-meter relay but led from start to finish. Arkansas anchor Joe Falcon made a valiant effort to catch the Bengal Tigers, trimming the final margin from 30 to 5 yards but LSU anchor Robin Van Helden held him off with a 3:43.5.

"It was great to beat Arkansas," Van Helden said. "Luckily I was far enough ahead of Falcon to beat him. He's a great athlete and closes very well. However, the heat was tough and I knew it would be hard for him to make up a lot of ground. We finally put it all together as a team."

Arkansas was upset by Arizona on Friday night in the distance medley relay, ending anchorman Falcon's string of never running on a losing relay team.

The Hogs' bad luck continued in the 3,200-meter relay when Lorenzo Brown dropped the baton. Arkansas finished third behind Prairie View and Texas Southern.

LSU's Lady Tigers also posted a Relays' record in the 400-meter relay, winning in 43.33. The old mark of 43.98 was set by Nebraska in 1983. Texas was second in 44.24.

The Lady Tigers also won the sprint medley relay in 1:36.81 to 1:37.06 for Texas.

Hollis Conway of Southwestern Louisiana won the collegiate high jump in a meet record of 7-7¼. The old record of 7-6 was set by Brian Tietjen of Iowa State in 1983.

Baylor's sprint medley relay won the men's division in a meet record 3:13.00, eclipsing Texas' mark of 3:13.31 established in 1986.

Baylor won the last event of the day, the 1,600-meter relay in 3:04.46 with Michael Johnson contributing a 45.1 on the anchor leg.

Not even the inevitable lineup shuffling characteristic of all-star game could stop Herrera, who looked at it all as a lark.

"I was just trying to have some fun," the Venezuelan said. "I know I could have scored some more points, but I was trying to help the other players do what they do best."

The University of Houston hasn't seen much basketball glory since the days of Phi Slamma Jamma, but Herrera still picked them over Oklahoma and Nevada-Las Vegas after the Cougars hired the son of Jacksonville coach Vernon Harton as a graduate assistant.

The 215-pounder is looking forward to his projected major college role as a power forward.

"I can move more (at forward) and can play my game a little better," Herrera said.

Rumors of Herrera declaring for the National Basketball Association draft have been rampant for months, but he denied all thought of going pro before his major college eligibility expires.

"I think the NBA will come in time," he said. "But I have to play Division I basketball right now and improve my game before I can think about that."

Flo Jo pays track debt

NEW YORK (AP) — Florence Griffith Joyner, who became a millionaire with the help of three Olympic gold medals and two world records, then retired from track and field this year, is putting some of her finances back into the sport.

The sensational sprinter has formed the Flo-Jo International Track Club, with the main purpose of "creating a winning U.S. Olympic team and developing more gold medalists," her financial adviser, Gordon Baskin, said Saturday by telephone from Nevada.

The members of the team are Andre Phillips, the 1988 Olympic 400-meter intermediate hurdles gold medalist; Alice Brown, a 400-meter relay gold medalist and 100-meter silver medalist at the 1984 Games; intermediate hurdlers Sandra Farmer-Patrick and David Farmer, and long jumper Gordon Laine.

Each of the five, "who has Olympic potential," was given $10,000 by Griffith Joyner, Baskin said, "so they can concentrate on Olympic training."

"It will supplement any other income they have," he said.

"All she asks is that they be helpful in coaching other athletes," Baskin said. "Eventually, there will be more athletes in the club, those who she thinks have potential as medalists.

"She also hopes to encourage and stimulate individuals who have similar resources to do the same, and corporations into setting up their own methods (for helping track and field)."

Also a member of the club is Al Joyner, Griffith Joyner's husband and the 1984 Olympic triple jump gold medalist.

NATIONAL GUN OWNERS ALERT:
STOP THE SEMI-AUTO GUN BAN!
America's anti-gun lobby is pressuring Congress and state legislators to ban semi-automatic firearms. Under the guise of the media-hyped label "assault weapons," they want to outlaw all semi-autos — rifles and pistols — with a detachable box magazine. Plus all shotguns with tube-feed magazines. Practically every semi-auto in America — well over 20 million hunting, target shooting and self-defense firearms. Guns that have been legal since the turn of the century.
Last year the anti-gunners said criminals use handguns. So they conspired to ban handguns. This year they say criminals use semi-autos. So they're conspiring to ban semi-autos. What they really want is a ban on all guns. Long guns. Handguns. Your guns. And if we don't act now, they'll have their way.
Anti-gunners say criminal acts by maniacs like Patrick Purdy are reason enough to take away your firearms. But they won't lift a finger to keep repeat offenders like Purdy in jail. They won't admit their waiting periods and background checks let Purdy purchase firearms with ease. Anti-gunners and lawmakers need to face the facts: It's time for a ban on criminals, not semi-autos. Outlaws behind bars don't commit crimes. 70 million law-abiding gun owners should say, "Enough is enough! Leave our rights alone!"

Grambling gridder receives a new heart

HOUSTON (AP) — A former Grambling State football player received a new heart after living 132 days with an assistance device that helped his ailing heart pump blood.

Finding a proper heart donor for Louis Wilson, 39, of Winnfield, La., was limited because of his large size and type B blood, doctors at Texas Heart Institute said. Hospital officials did not release information about the donor, other than to say the person was from the Houston area.

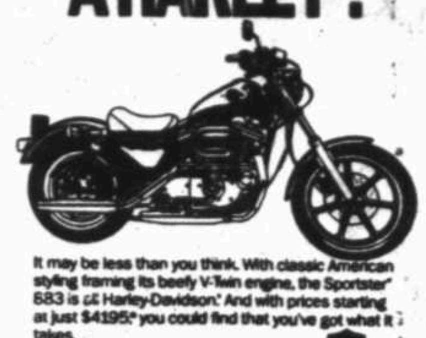

Dr. Bud Frazier, director of the institute's cardiac trasnplant program, said Wilson was "doing fine" following the Thursday transplant.

A patient at Presbyterian-University Hospital of Pittsburgh, Jack Fisher, 46, of Rumson, N.J., is the longest survivor on an electric blood pump manufactured by the Novacor division of Baxter Healthcare Corp. As of Saturday, he had been supported 121 days by the device.

1913 — Ebbets Field was opened in Brooklyn and the Philadelphia Phillies spoiled the inaugural by defeating the Dodgers 1-0 before a crowd of 10,000. The stadium which cost $750,000 to build was named after Charles Ebbets, the club's principal owner.

1965 — The Houston Astrodome was opened with an exhibition game between the New York Yankees and Astros. President Lyndon Johnson attended and Gov. John Connally threw out the first ball. Mickey Mantle hit the first home run but the Astros won 2-1 in 12 innings.

1969 — Billy Williams of Chicago hit four consecutive doubles to lead the Cubs to an 11-3 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Mets lose 3rd straight

From Wire Reports

The New York Mets have said they expect to win the pennant. They've lost three straight after a season-opening victory, but they're not worried.

"We were 2-3 last year after five games, so it isn't much different," Darryl Strawberry said Saturday after Montreal beat the Mets 3-2. "We just really haven't got out of the box, and we haven't put anything together since opening day. Hopefully, with Doc (Gooden) pitching tomorrow, things will change."

Spike Owen hit a seventh-inning sacrifice fly that snapped a 1-1 tie and Tim Wallach doubled in a run in the eighth. Montreal has won seven straight against the Mets this year, including five in spring training.

Rookie Gene Harris won in his first major-league decision with two innings of one-hit relief, although he allowed the tying run in the seventh.

"It's exciting, even though I had to give up a run to get it," Harris said. "I kept the ball, and I'll use it to try to start a trophy case."

David Cone, who was 20-3 last year, gave up six hits and two runs in 6 1-3 innings as he lost in his first appearance of the season.

NL

Cubs 5, Pirates 3

CHICAGO — Domingo Ramos hit a two-run homer and Ryne Sandberg drove in two runs with a single and a double.

Don Zimmer, the Cubs manager, won his 700th career game against 687 losses. Pittsburgh lost its third straight after a season-opening victory against Montreal.

Mike Bielecki, 1-0, allowed five hits and struck out five in 6 2-3 innings. He gave up two runs in the second on RBI singles by Rafael Belliard and Neal Heaton. Calvin Schiraldi pitched two perfect innings for the save.

Heaton, acquired from Montreal last month, lost in his Pirates debut, allowing five hits and four runs in five innings.

Phillies 5, Cardinals 4

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Schmidt doubled and scored on Ricky Jordan's 11th- inning single as Philadelphia won its home opener for the first time since 1984.

Tom Brunansky's two-run homer off Don Carman in the fifth had given the Cardinals a 4-2 lead. Philadelphia tied it in the eighth when Dickie Thon doubled to chase starter Scott Terry and Von Hayes homered off Ken Dayley.

Astros 6, Padres 2

HOUSTON — Jim Clancy allowed six hits over 8 1-3 innings and struck out eight to win in his first National League game.

Clancy, an 11-year veteran of the Toronto Blue Jays before signing with Houston as a new-look free agent for $3.45 million over three years, allowed a run in the fifth when Garry Templeton and Walt Terrell hit consecutive doubles and another in the ninth when Marvell Wynne homered.

Clancy, who walked four, gave up a single to Garry Templeton after Wynne's homer and Juan Agosto came in for the last two outs.

Terrell, 0-1, allowed nine hits and five runs in 4 1-3 innings in his first start for San Diego. He was acquired in the offseason in a trade from Detroit.

Fielder homers

TOKYO (AP) — Cecil Fielder, formerly of the Toronto Blue Jays, hit a three-run homer to cap a five-run, eighth-inning rally that gave the Hanshin Tigers a 5-4 Japanese baseball victory over the Hiroshima Toyo Carp Saturday.

Ben slips past fading Lee

14 players stranded on wet course

By BOB GREEN

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Lee Trevino's dreams of glory disappeared in a sea of bogeys and Ben Crenshaw slogged into the lead Saturday in the uncompleted third round of the 53rd Masters.

Crenshaw, seeking a second green jacket to go with the one he acquired in 1984, was 4 under par for the tournament — and four shots in front of the field — when play was halted for the day at 6:45 p.m., EDT.

The 14 players stranded on the rain-soaked Augusta National Golf Club course marked their positions and were scheduled to return Sunday morning to complete third-round play.

THE LEADERS had completed only seven holes when a thunderstorm forced a one hour, 35 minute suspension of play.

The squall line passed but a steady rain was falling when competition resumed, and eventually forced the overnight delay.

At that point, Crenshaw, who had five holes to play, was the only player under par in the tournament. Nick Faldo, Scott Hoch and Mike Reid were next at even-par. Faldo had completed 12 holes, one less than Hoch and Reid.

Greg Norman was the clubhouse leader at 1-over 217, with Ken Green and Tom Kite at 2-over through 13 holes and Tom Watson also 2-over after 15.

Trevino, who led or shared the lead through the first two days, plunged back into the pack after a string of four bogeys in five holes.

He came back after the first rain delay, missed the green and bogeyed the ninth hole to complete a front-side 41.

He bogeyed both the 11th and 12th and was 7-over for the day and 4-over for the tournament when play was halted.

"IT WAS not really the weather. I just had a bad day putting. I had 20 putts on the front nine and missed little ones on the 11th and 12th," said a soaking-wet Trevino on the dash to his van in the parking lot.

"I didn't play that bad. I just didn't make any putts," added Trevino, at 49 the oldest player ever to lead after any round of the Masters — the only Grand Slam event he has never won.

CRENSHAW birdied the second, fourth and seventh holes and was three in front of the field when he made the turn in 33.

A string of pars was good enough to extend that margin to four when Faldo three-putted the 11th for a bogey that left Crenshaw the only man in the tournament below par entering the final day.

"It was impossible to get into a rhythm with the wind, rain and delays," said Faldo, the former British Open champion who shared the second-round lead with Trevino.

Faldo drove into a bunker on the first hole, played out, then put his third over the green. His first chip did not reach the putting surface. His next did and he one-putted for a double-bogey 6.

On the second, a par-5, he drove against a tree, played his third shot one-handed and back-handed back to the fairway, put his third on the green and dropped an across-the-green putt of 60-70 feet for a birdie.

Those kind of putts didn't fall the rest of the way, however, and he was 3-over for the day when play was held up.

THERE WERE some other sorry sagas.

British Open champion Seve Ballesteros of Spain was within one stroke of the lead on the front side, but bogeyed three in a row just before darkness settled over the course and was 4-over for the day.

U.S. Open champ Curtis Strange played without a bogey in Friday's round and got within two strokes of the lead Saturday, then dropped back with four consecutive bogeys.

Norman, who had the green jacket snatched from his grasp by Larry Mize's playoff pitch-in two years ago, made a big move with a 68.

"I have a very positive attitude after this round," said Norman, the only one of the contenders who does not have to play Sunday morning.

"My confidence is up, I'm swinging good and I'm in position to re-set my goals for tomorrow," he said.

Soccer bus crash kills 13

PORTIMAO, Portugal (AP) — A bus carrying soccer fans crashed early today in the southern Algarve region, killing 13 people and injuring at least 28, police said.

A spokesman for the National Republican Guard, who spoke under the condition of anonymity, said the bus swerved off the road near the town of Bartolomeu de Messines some 180 miles south of Lisbon and landed upside down, trapping some passengers inside.

The Portuguese news agency Lusa reported two cranes had to right the bus, before the dead and injured could be extracted and transported to hospitals in Portimao and nearby Albufeira.

The bus was carrying supporters of the first division Algarve soccer team Portimao to an away match against the Boavista side of northern Oporto, the agency reported.

Rangers win, Moyer fans 13

From Wire Reports

Rangers 5, Blue Jays 4

ARLINGTON, Texas — Jamie Moyer struck out 13 and allowed four hits in eight-plus innings in his debut with Texas as the Rangers beat the Toronto Blue Jays 5-4 Saturday night.

Moyer, the son-in-law of Notre Dame basketball coach Digger Phelps, bettered his previous personal high of 12 strikeouts with the Chicago Cubs and beat the Texas record by a left-hander, which was 11 by Mike Mason.

AL

Jeff Kunkel's two-run double in the fifth off Jimmy Key, 1-1, broke a 2-2 tie.

Indians 11, Yankees 1

NEW YORK — Felix Fermin equaled his previous season high by driving in four runs with two singles as the Cleveland Indians defeated the struggling Yankees.

Fermin, who had four RBIs in 68 at-bats with Pittsburgh in 1987 and two more in 87 at-bats with the Pirates last year, singled home the game's first two runs in the fifth inning and capped a five-run sixth with another two-run single.

Twins 6, Orioles 5

MINNEAPOLIS — Dan Gladden doubled to snap a seventh-inning tie as Minnesota rallied from a four-run deficit for their fourth straight victory.

Baltimore scored five runs in the second to take a 5-1 lead. Gary Gaetti hit a solo homer in the bottom of the inning, his sixth consecutive hit, and Kent Hrbek tied it with a three-run homer in the third off Orioles start

White Sox 7, A's 4

In the sixth, Moore walked Ozzie Guillen and Dave Gallagher and reliever Rick Honeycutt walked Harold Baines. Calderon followed with his second homer of the season and the first grand slam of his career.

Eight of his 32 career homers and 25 of his 80 RBIs have been hit against the Athletics.

Brewers 5, Tigers 2

DETROIT — Dave Engle homered for the second time since 1985 and drove in three runs, and Don August allowed four hits in 6 2-3 innings.

Engle, who made the Brewers squad as a non-roster player in spring training, also had three hits.

Royals 2, Red Sox 1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jim Eisenreich singled in the winning run in the 10th inning as Kansas City won its fourth straight and Boston opened the season with four consecutive losses for the first time since 1977.

Luis Aquino, the third Royals' pitcher, pitched a one-hit 10th for Kansas City's fourth straight one-run victory.

Caps beat Flyers in OT

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Kelly Miller scored 51 seconds into overtime Saturday night, giving the Washington Capitals a 4-3 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers in Game 3 of the Patrick Division semifinals.

The victory gave the Capitals a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven series, which resumes Sunday night at the Spectrum.

Canadiens 5, Whalers 4

HARTFORD, Conn. — Stephane Richer scored at 5:01 of overtime to give the Montreal Canadiens a 3-0 lead in the Adams Division semifinals playoff series.

Bobby Smith, Russ Courtnall, Donald Dufresne and Guy Carbonneau also scored for Montreal which can wrap up the best of seven series Sunday in Game 4.

Bruins 4, Sabres 2

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Cam Neely's second goal of the game late in the third period snapped a tie and Boston beat the Buffalo Sabres, giving the Bruins a 2-1 lead in their Adams Division semifinal playoff.

Oilers 4, Kings 0

EDMONTON, Alberta — Grant Fuhr stopped 25 shots for his second career playoff shutout and Jari Kurri scored two goals in 71 seconds in the second period as the Edmonton Oilers blanked the Los Angeles Kings in Game 3 the Smythe Division semifinals.

The two-time defending Stanley Cup champion Oilers, who were beaten 5-2 in Game 2 Thursday night, took a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven series and host Game 4 Sunday night.

The goals were the first of this year's playoffs for Kurri. He has 81 career playoff goals, four behind the all-time leader, former New York Islanders star Mike Bossy.

Bulldog netters win tournament

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — The Midland High tennis team won its first tournament in 10 years here Saturday when the doubles team of Harper Essex and Luke Morrow won the doubles championship with a 4-6, 6-2, 9-7 win over Phillip Bogel and Mark Dameron of Lubbock Monterey in the finals.

That gave MHS 11 points while San Angelo and last fall's state team champion Tyler Lee tied for second with 10 points.

Essex and Morrow were the No. 1 seeds in the tournament while Bogel and Dameron were No. 2. The MHS duo had beaten the Monterey pair before in Austin and this victory insures Essex and Morrow of a good Region I seed if they can master the 4-5A field next week in the district tournament in Odessa.

MHS also got major help from Elizabeth Ameel in the singles and the doubles team of Krissy Hall and Susan Johnson.

Hall and Johnson entered the tournament unseeded, but advanced to the finals before losing to Abilene Cooper's No. 1 seeded team of Tracy Broyles and Sherry Gilreath, who are also ranked No. 1 in 16-under play in the state rankings.

Even in a loss, Hall and Johnson almost pulled the upset. They led the Cooper pair 5-2 in the second set and again at 6-5 before dropping the match and led 6-5 in the third set before dropping another tiebreaker.

"These two kids were just great in the tournament," said MHS coach Steve Hoover. "You couldn't ask more than what they gave, but they were so close to winning the title that you feel a little sad about it."

Ameel, the No. 2 singles seed, gained the finals Saturday with a 6-1, 6-1 win over San Angelo's Jennifer Winter, but lost in the finals to No. 1 seeded Nikki Conrad of Tyler Lee, 6-2, 6-1. Conrad isn't in Midland's region, so Ameel would not have to face her again until the state meet, if she is lucky enough to get there.

TED BATTLES

Fastballs, fastbreaks and fast-changing grid schedules

Battles

On your toes, now, the only Texas Ranger 20-game winner?....

Scott Lewis, winner in Friday's Midland Angels opener against San Antonio, broke into pro ball a year ago at Bend, Ore., in the A Rookie League where he was 5-2 in one month, then moved to Quad Cities, A Midwest League, for a 2-1 record before finishing at Palm Springs, A California.

Of his four years at UNLV, the Medford, Ore., native says he enjoyed it, but he wouldn't do it over again. "Too many distractions. But we had great cheerleaders. That was the best part of it. Stay home? The University of Oregon doesn't field a team and Oregon State wasn't interested."

Could be another Bryan Harvey in the making. Nobody was interested back in his North Carolina college days and now he's the ace of the California Angels' bullpen....

Want Hershiser's autograph? Easy, go to Angels Stadium, corner the Missions' No. 40 and if you ask politely Gordie might accommodate. He's Orel's brother, the next Perry brothers act budding?...

I caught Captain Dynamite blowing himself up after Friday's opener at Angel Stadium and wish I hadn't. I was 50 yards away and the explosion still scared me. How does the guy survive? He emerges dazed and bloody....at 72 years of age? Thank you, I'll stick to skiing....

Seton Hall may have let the NCAA basketball title it had won slip away in the final two minutes the other night in Seattle, but it doesn't make the Pirates heart yearn for the rivalries of the old days with Panzer, Upsala, Trenton Teachers, Montclair State, Moravian. Another year like this and the Hall mav revive football.....

Really though, the New Jersey college's performance against Michigan was pretty remarkable when it's considered the Pirates had sub par efforts out of Ramon Ramos and Andrew Gaze in the championship, yet it was still their game to win...

Jerry Tarkanian, in Midland for the Juco All-Star game at the Chap Center Saturday night, said of his team's NCAA elimination by the Hall, "We went as far as our ability let us. Larry Johnson? I'm hoping he can put us over the top next year."

On the decision to leave the three-point goal at 19-9, "I don't care whether its 19 feet or 22 feet, it's something we need in the game."

And Tarkanian on four non-champions winding up in the Final Four, "I don't like it either."....

The thing I like about Midland is that you can't get away with anything here, the population is so cosmopolitan. Take the trivia question the other day when the answer placed Coe and Ripon in Iowa. John Kirwan even forwarded a map showing Ripon was located in Wisconsin. Just checking to see if folks were reading the trivia item, John, actually it was supposed to be Coe and Cornell. Quick, somebody, check the Atlas for Cornell....

Texas Tech and Oklahoma State begin a four-game series in 1996. So far no games scheduled for Japan....

If you've got your University of Texas game plans mapped out for next season, better check 'em. The Longhorns aren't playing that schedule any more. Colorado has been moved from Sept. 23 to Labor Day (Sept. 4), Texas A&M is Dec. 2 instead of Thanksgiving Day and the SMU game has been moved from Oct.7 to Sept. 23 to avoid a four-week lapse between the first and second games of the season.

And if you haven't bought your tickets yet, the Penn State game at Austin Sept. 30 will cost $25, an increase of $10 over other home game tickets...And, and, but we don't want to spoil your day....

It's true. The real purpose of University of Oklahoma basketball coach Billy Tubbs' visit to Midland was to discuss those Chaparral colors with MC Coach Reggie Franklin. Tubbs' contention is that Sooner red instead of MC green would makes the transition so much easier....

Quickie Quiz Answer: Ferguson Jenkins is the only Texas Ranger ever to win 20 games in a season....

Aggies, UT sweep SWC doublebills

HOUSTON (AP) — John Byington had three hits in the opener and a three-run homer in the second game to lead top-ranked Texas A&M to a 4-1, 6-3 Southwest Conference sweep of Rice on Saturday.

Byington had two doubles and a single in the first game to help freshman Ronnie Allen, 7-0. In the nightcap, Byington hit a three-run homer in the first.

Texas A&M is 38-1, 9-0 in the SWC and tied with Arkansas in the conference race.

Rice dropped to 22-22, 2-10.

Rice's Rob Howard, 6-3, who threw shutouts against Texas Christian and Texas for the Owls' only two conference victories, lost his consecutive scoreless inning streak when he gave up a run with two outs in the first on Chuck Knoblauch's single and Byington's first double. His streak ended at 20 innings.

Texas 13-4, Texas Tech 3-1

The sweep keeps the Longhorns in the SWC race at 7-2 behind Texas A&M and Arkansas, both 9-0. Texas, 36-10, travels to A&M next weekend for a three-game series.

The Red Raiders dropped to 21-17, 0-9.

Tollison's second-inning home run opened the scoring in the second game, but Tech tied the score in the third on Donald Harris' run-scoring triple.

Butcher broke the tie with a fourth-inning single, and Texas added two insurance runs in the eighth.

Freshman Rodney Pedraza, 4-0, 1-0, scattered three hits, struck out three and walked two in his first conference start.

Jeff Beck, 3-4, 0-2, was the loser.

In the first game, Scott Bryant went 3-for-4 with a single, double and triple and four runs batted in. Bryant boosted his nation-leading RBI total to 74, the third-best total in Longhorns history. David Denny holds the school record with 99.

Shane Reynolds, 7-0, 1-0, pitched into the sixth inning and got the victory. Tech starter Rodney Steph, 4-6, 0-3, was the loser.

Baylor 7-1, Houston 2-2

WACO, Texas — Glenn Nevill pitched a four-hitter as Baylor defeated Houston and the Cougars won the second game on David Vasquez's run-scoring double in the seventh inning.

Baylor is 30-10 overall, 5-5 in the SWC. Houston, ranked 18th entering the weekend series, dropped two of three games and is 34-8, 4-5.

Arkansas-TCU

FORT WORTH, Texas — Troy Ecklund's two-run homer and a four-run fifth-inning rally led sixth-ranked Arkansas to an 8-6 victory over Texas Christian.

The Hogs completed the sweep with an 11-3 victory in the nightcap.

In the first game Arkansas, 32-4 overall and 9-0 in SWC, jumped ahead 2-0 on Ecklund's first-inning home run. Bubba Carpenter's single scored Greg D'Alexander with the third run.

TCU, 24-15 and 2-7, tied the game 3-3 after four innings. Tom Hardgrove homered in the second and followed in the fourth with his Southwest Conference-leading 19th home run, a two-run shot.

In the second game, Ecklund went 3-for-4 with 3 RBIs. He also hit his fourth home run.

Mark Swope, 4-0, 2-0, pitched the final 4 1/3 of shutout relief for the victory. TCU starter Britt Shoptaw, 3-4, 0-2, took the loss.

Sunday Silence's quiets Houston

ARCADIA, Calif. (AP) — A little over a year ago, Sunday Silence's principal owner tried to sell the colt for $50,000, but there were no takers.

On the other hand, Houston was purchased at a yearling sale for $2.9 million.

However, when the two met Saturday in the $500,000 Santa Anita Derby, Sunday Silence won by a record 11 lengths and Houston finished a badly beaten fifth, 16¾ lengths off the pace.

Sunday Silence, ridden by Patrick Valenzuela and trained by Charlie Whittingham, established himself as a solid contender in the Triple Crown series, which begins with the Kentucky Derby on May 6.

As for Houston, trainer D. Wayne Lukas said it just wasn't his colt's day.

Houston, the 9-10 favorite, got off to a slow start but surged into the lead entering the first turn and stayed on top until Sunday Silence blew past him entering the final turn to win the 52nd renewal of the race by the largest margin ever.

Derby Primers

The previous best was eight lengths by Majestic Prince in 1969 and Affirmed in 1978. Both horses went on to win the Kentucky Derby.

The winning time of 1:47 3-5 on a fast track was three-fifths of a second off the stakes record set by Lucky Debonair in 1965 and matched by Sham eight years later. Lucky Debonair also went on to win the Kentucky Derby.

"I'm excited about going to Kentucky, but I'm especially happy for Charlie (Whittingham). He's helped me a lot. Charlie's done a tremendous job with this horse. He improves every time he runs."

Houston, who had won his three previous starts but had never gone farther than seven furlongs, was finished after being passed by Sunday Silence.

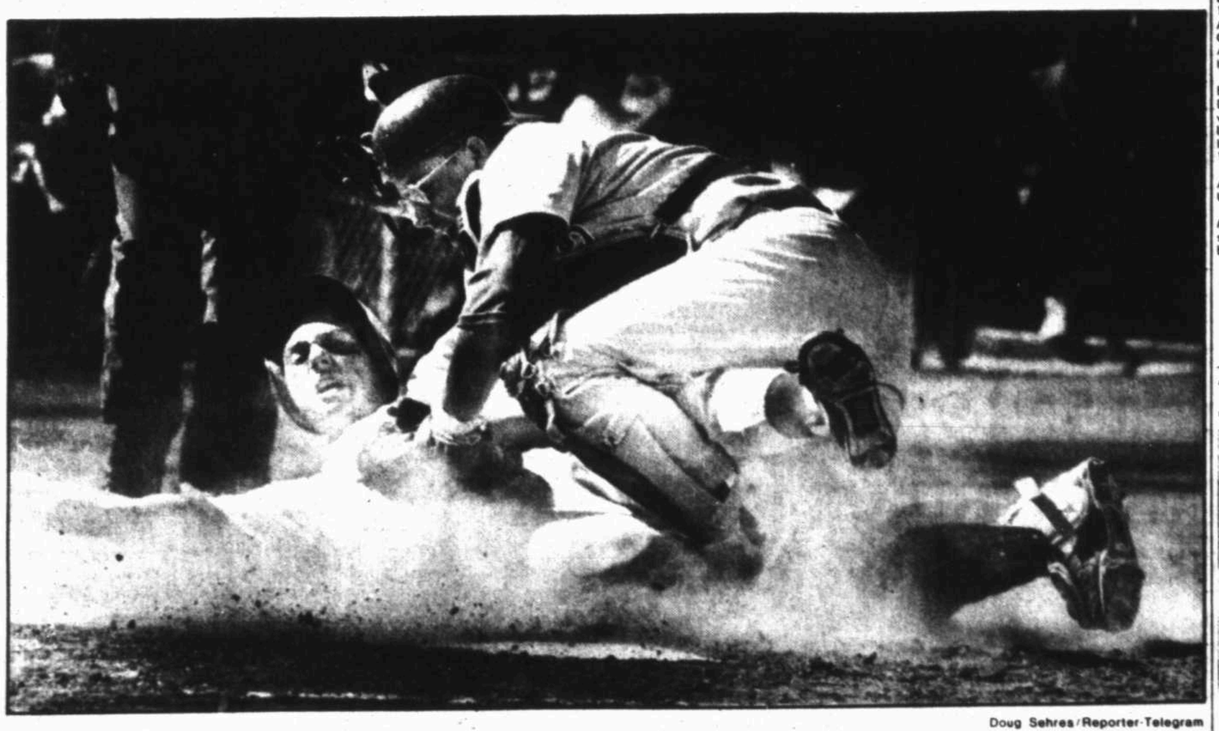

"He didn't run his race at all," said Lukas, who along with Bob French and Barry Beal, from Midland, Texas, paid $2.9 million for Houston at a yearling sale. "It wasn't his race. I don't have the answer. It just wasn't Houston."

Lukas said he might race Houston before the Kentucky Derby, but that no decision has been as to whether Houston will go in the Derby.

Easy Goer, the future-book favorite in the Kentucky Derby, won the Gotham Stakes at Aqueduct by 13 lengths earlier Saturday, setting a track record of 1:32 2-5 for one mile.

Easy Goer, the 2-year-old champion last year, has five wins in seven lifetime starts. Houston was the second future-book choice in the Kentucky Derby before Saturday.

The other major Kentucky Derby prep race Saturday, the 1⅛-mile Flamingo Stakes at Hialeah, was won by Awe Inspiring in 1:49 3-5.

Sonics beat Mavericks to end 7-game skid

From Wire Reports

DALLAS — Dale Ellis scored 34 points against his former teammates Saturday night as the Seattle SuperSonics broke a seven-game losing streak with a 114-90 rout of the Dallas Mavericks.

The SuperSonics' victory, combined with Houston's loss at Miami, moved them into a tie with the Rockets for the sixth Western Conference playoff spot.

Dallas, chasing Portland for the eighth and final Western Conference berth, fell 1½ games behind the idle Trail Blazers. The Mavericks have seven games remaining; the Blazers have eight.

Seattle, which had lost its previous nine on the road, opened the third period by hitting nine of 10 field-goal attempts, fueling a 17-3 run for a 77-46 advantage with 5:41 remaining in the quarter. Xavier McDaniel led the spurt with seven points.

Bucks 113, 76ers 103

MILWAUKEE — Sidney Moncrief's 10 points keyed an 18-3 fourth-quarter run that carried the Milwaukee Bucks.

The Bucks, 3-0 against the 76ers this season, were led by 28 points from Larry Krystkowiak, 20 from Ricky Pierce and 18 from Moncrief. The Bucks also moved 1½ games ahead of Chicago and Atlanta for the fourth playoff spot in the Eastern Conference, one that means a home-court advantage in the first round of the playoffs.

Charles Barkley led Philadelphia with 24 points. Hersey Hawkins added 18 and Mike Gminski 16. Hawkins scored 14 points in a 19-10 run that gave Philadelphia a 77-75 lead — its first since 2-0 — with 2:50 left in the third quarter.

Heat 107, Rockets 104 OT

MIAMI — Sylvester Gray's inside jumper with 26 seconds left in overtime Saturday night gave Miami a 107-104 victory over Houston, overshadowing a season-high 43-point performance by the Rockets' Akeem Olajuwon.

After Gray gave Miami a 105-104 lead, Olajuwon missed a short jumper and Billy Thompson ended a fast break with a dunk to give Miami its final margin.

Brown forges into first place

POWAY, Calif. (AP) — Nancy Brown shot a 2-under-par 69 Saturday to take a two-shot lead over Patti Rizzo after three rounds of the $300,000 LPGA Inamori Classic.

Brown, who began the day tied for the lead with Laura Davies, made four birdies and two bogeys on the 6,042-yard StoneRidge Country Club course for a 54-hole score of 7-under-par 206.

Rizzo, who began the round four shots off the lead, picked up three strokes on the front nine and matched par on the back nine for a 69 to finish with a three-day total of 208.

Martha Nause, who started the day one shot behind the co-leaders, missed a short par putt on the 18th for a 72 and was at 4-under 209 for the tournament.

Juli Inkster, an 11-time tour winner, birdied the first hole and moved to 5-under with a birdie at No. 11 before a double-bogey at the par-4 13th left her tied with Penny Hammel and Jane Crafter at 210.

Brown birdied the par-5 third to take sole possession of the lead.

Davies plunged out of contention when she bogeyed the first, fourth and fifth holes, then hit two tee shots out of bounds on No. 6 en route to a quadruple bogey.

A two-time winner in 18 months on the LPGA Tour, Davies parred the last four holes on the front side to make the turn 6-over for the day.

She birdied two of the par-5s on the back side but bogeyed the third one for a 76, leaving her at 1-under 212 for the tournament.

Gathering Place

In many of the homes which have been built during the last 10 years, the breakfast room has become a place where families gather not only for meals, but for a variety of reason — it is used as launching pad for families in the mornings and a place to wind-down together in the evenings.

This week's featured home has a very elegant breakfast room, as well as three living areas. Each of these areas provide a place to entertain friends or a private retreat for family members.

The formal living room is located to the right of the front entrance. A hardwood floor leads to the right into the formal living room. A marble fireplace with a carved mantle is the focal point in the living room. Paneled cream walls, and a large window, brighten this room where adults can entertain business associates or friends formally.

SOFT SHADES of teal, rose and tan adorn the walls of the formal dining room that is located to the left of the front entrance. A window seat is situated infront of a floor-to-ceiling windows that provides a view of the Green Tree Estates subdivision. This room can easily accommodate a china cabinet or server.

The entrance flows into the family room which has paneled walls and a raised ceiling with inlays that match the paneling. This spacious room has a brick fireplace and a concealed wet bar. A marble countertop, glass shelves and a Whirlpool ice maker make this wet bar well-equipped when entertaining friends.

FRENCH DOORS open into a private study where family members can escape for viewing of a favorite movie or Dad can watch a baseball game all by himself. This paneled room has a wall of built-in cabinets and enclosed bookshelves, along with a raised ceiling that is similar to the ceiling in the family room. A door from the study leads onto a tile patio and backyard.

The kitchen appliances include a Jenn-air ceramic cooktop, a Whirlpool microwave, a self-cleaning oven, dishwasher and compactor. A vertical window at one end of the kitchen views the front yard and a window above the kitchen sink overlooks the side yard.

A SHUTTERED bay window and octagon-shaped tiered ceiling highlight the breakfast room. A china cabinet is built-in along one wall in this room where families will enjoy catching up on each member's day-to-day activities in these homey surroundings.

A country wallpaper adorns the walls of the guest bath which is adjacent to the breakfast room. The bath has a marble vanity with a shell-shaped sink.

The utility room is also found at this end of the home. The utility room has a sink, storage cabinets and a built-in ironing board. A blue and white wallpaper decorate the walls of the utility room.

Access is also made from this area into a side entry, two car garage with automatic door openers. The garage has storage cabinets and a door which leads into the backyard.

GATHERING

Two halls off the family room lead to three bedrooms. The first hall is located to the right of the entrance. Two of the home's bedrooms and a hall bath are situated in this hall. The full bath has two marbles sink and a bathtub.

The first bedroom is well-suited for a boy with blue walls and built-in cabinet with drawers and shelves for displaying trophies. This room has a shuttered window and a spacious closet.

Access into the second bedroom is made through a door in the first hall, as well as a door in the second hall. A window in this room views the side yard and it also has a large closet.

The master bedroom is located in the second hall. Spacious enough for a sitting area, this room is highlighted by a country wallpaper in shades of blue, peach and taupe which adorns the wall above a cream wainscoting. A tiered ceiling and two windows which brighten the room are the other features in the master bedroom.

Two dressing areas leads into a circular marble jacuzzi tub which highlights the master bath. Each dressing area has a marble vanity and a large walk-in closet with built-in cabinets. The bath also has a separate built-in shower.

A sprinkler system, an intercom system and ceiling fans are the other amenities of this seven-year-old home.

Chaparral, Realtors is offering this approximately 2,600 square foot home for $159,000.

Located in Green Tree Estates, this family home has three spacious bedrooms and three baths.

Texas Rangers keep Realtor busy

The Texas Rangers once described as "Silver Stars and Sixguns" are a distinct part of the rich Texas history. The Texas Rangers of today are a division of the Texas Department of Public Safety. The force has 94 commissioned Rangers organized into six companies, "A" through "F" with headquarters in Austin. Today's Rangers spend much more time in patrol cars than on horseback. And fighting marauding Indians and Mexican Bandits is really a thing of the past.

However, today's Rangers still do occasionally mount their trusty steeds in pursuit of the bad guys. Their major duties still include investigating major crimes and apprehending fugitives, many of whom would rival yesterday's worst criminals such as Bonnie and Clyde, Sam Bass and the machine-gun totting bootleggers of the Prohibition era.

Company "E" of the Texas Rangers have made the life of Don Harvey, Realtors agent, Dorothy Moring, very busy. Dorothy first started working with the Rangers in 1985. At that time she assisted the Captain of Company "E", Gene Powell and his wife Sue, when they moved to Midland from Pleasanton, Texas and bought a home.

In May of 1987, Dorothy once again assisted a Texas Ranger, Joaquin Jackson and his wife Shirley. This was a very unusual transaction since it took Dorothy from Midland to Alpine. The Jackson's were moving from Uvalde, Texas, to Alpine and Joaquin called on his sister Dorothy to help them locate a home there. The Alpine transaction proved to be easier than was first expected. Joaquin wanted property on acreage, with privacy and in the city limits. Joaquins first words when he got in the car for his housing hunting trip were, "Sis, show me what kind of a real estate agent you really are." Luckily Dorothy was able to find that perfect home for them.

While in Uvalde in 1987 before moving to Alpine, Ranger Jackson became involved with the movie industry when he was asked to be a role model for actor Nick Nolte's character in the filming of "Extreme Prejudice." The movie portrays a Texas Ranger fighting a drug lord from Mexico.

In December of 1987 Clete and Rene Buckaloo moved from Alpine to Midland. They looked for several months with Dorothy and she was able to locate them a home in Greenwood which they purchased in July of 1988. Rene is currently a teacher for the Greenwood School District.

Bob Favor, Sergeant, of Texas Rangers Company "E" and his wife Beth listed their home with Dorothy and Don Harvey, Realtors in April of 1988 and it sold and closed in May of 1988. Bob and Beth are still residing in Midland. To Dorothy's great relief Sergeant Favor and Clete Buckaloo were not as demanding as big brother Jackson was.

As an outsider looking in, Dorothy tells of the camaraderie among the men of Company "E". Maybe it's just the type of man that the Texas Rangers Division attracts. It's almost like a brotherly companionship instead of a co-worker relationship. The Ranger story began when Stephen F. Austin realized the need for a body of men to protect his fledgling colony, the land settlement effort that marked the beginning of Texas' development. During the War with Mexico, the Rangers fought with such ferocity they came to be called "Los Diablos Trejanos"...the Texas Devils.

In his memoirs, one of the best known Rangers, John, S., "Rip" Ford, tells of the confrontation with Juan Nepomuceno Cortina when he tried to regain all the land below the Nueces River in the name of Mexico. He described the kind of men who served under him as Rangers: "A large proportion...were unmarried. A few of them drank intoxicating liquors. Still, it was a company of sober and brave men. They knew their duty and they did it. They had a species of moral discipline which developed moral courage. They did right because it was right."

During the oil boom days of the 20's and 30's, the Rangers aided in upholding the law when they traveled from Borger to Mexia trying to preserve what peace and dignity they could in the wild oil field boomtowns.

Even though the oil boom days of the 20's and 30's have long since passed into the pages of history, the color, excitement and daring deeds of the period care clearly recalled and cherished by its recent decendants. And the Texas Rangers are an important part of that history as it has past and even as it continues to unfold today.

Don Harvey, Realtors and Dorothy Moring are certainly proud to have the opportunity to work with the men who are part of that rich heritage as well as the present day organization of the Texas Rangers.

Good news for first-time homebuyers

Roy Proctor of First Realty of Midland/Better Homes and Gardens has good news for first-time homebuyer's in Midland — we have bond money.

"With the recent upward surge in mortgage interest rates, this comes as a breath of fresh air to the real estate community in Midland. With rates as low as 8 percent, this will not only benefit first-time buyers, but will be of benefit to the seller as well," said Proctor.

According to Proctor, "this is a State bond program sponsored by the Texas Housing Agency and $1,050,000 has been allocated to Midland. The bond money is being offered through two of our local lenders, ABC Mortgage and Sunbelt Mortgage. The availability of funds are limited and will be allotted on a 'first-come, first serve' basis. As with most bond programs, there are certain guidelines that must be followed.

The major guideline is that an applicant cannot have owned a home within the past three years. The last three years tax returns, including 1988, is needed to verify this. Income limitations on the program are such that singles or a family of two may not exceed a yearly gross income of $42,200 and larger families of three or more cannot exceed $48,530 per year. Loans are being limited to single family owner-occupied purchases only.

Roy Proctor

The bond program has been designed for FHA and VA loans with a term of 29 years and both new construction and existing homes may be eligible for the program. On purchases of $40,000 or less the interest rate will be 8 percent. For purchases from $40,000 to $74,610 on existing homes the rate will be 9.25 percent. Loans on new construction that are built to FHA/VA specifications are also eligible with a purchase price not exceeding $112,050.

"We are always excited when programs similar to this are made available to our customers and clients in Midland," stated Proctor. "With the recent increase in FHA loan limits to $101,250, we will always strive to keep Midland informed of the constant changes in the real estate market."

"My thanks go to Frieda Basham of ABC Mortgage Company and to Pam Fonte of Sunbelt National Mortgage Corp. for their assistance and input in preparing this article," concluded Proctor.

Further details may be obtained by contacting an agent with First Realty of Midland/Better Homes and Gardens regarding this program or to answer any real estate questions that you may have.

Roy Proctor GRI, is co-owner of First Realty of Midland/Better Homes and Gardens.

Insulation type very important

Insulation isn't new. The pioneers stuffed walls with everything from straw to corn husks.

According to Home Products Guide magazine, what is new is the amount experts recommend for keeping a home comfortable in all seasons.

The insulation homeowners choose depends on the R-value needed and the space to be insulated. R-values represent the ability of a material to resist heat flow. The higher the R-value, the better its resistance.

The U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) recently upgraded insulation recommendations. (They were last changed in 1975.)

"The new recommendations take into account the increased cost of heating and cooling homes over the past several years. Insulation is relatively inexpensive," says Dr. Dave McElroy of Oak Ridge National Laboratory, which helped develop the recommendations.

The DOE increased its minimum R-value recommendations. They are now specific to zip code areas and take into account climate, heating and cooling needs, forms of heating used and energy prices.

In an attic insulation study done by National Family Opinion, an independent research firm, it was found the average insulation level in attics is about R-20. But the DOE now recommends an average of R-40.

According to Wirth, field tests show wall insulation is one of the most effective energy savers. Average heating and cooling costs were reduced 24 percent by this measure.

Curb appeal necessary when selling home in today's market

Though experts might debate the actual amount that a nicely landscaped yard can add to the selling price of a home, everyone agrees that a well maintained yard will give you an edge in today's competitive market.

Prospective buyers begin to judge a home the moment they drive up, so first impressions are very important. If you're considering placing your home on the market soon or you just want to guarantee the best price if you do ever decide to move, start from the outside.

The top priority is — mow the grass. A lush green lawn is very appealing. Keep the yard watered and edged.

Add touches of color with flower beds or flowers in pots. Just a pot of geraniums or a hanging basket of ivy brightens the entire scene.

Keep hedges and climbing vines trimmed. Remove all dead limbs and debris. Be sure no tree limbs are touching the roof.

CADILLAC NATIONAL CADILLAC WEEK STYLE

Now through April 16, Cadillac dealers are celebrating the unrivaled success of the totally new De Ville and Fleetwood, which are pulling away in the marketplace and in independent tests. These distinctively designed Cadillacs are outselling the Lincoln Town Car and Continental combined, and outselling all models of Mercedes-Benz, BMW and Jaguar combined.* And in United States Auto Club tests, the V8-powered De Ville and Fleetwood also outperform the Town Car and Continental in 0-60 and 20-55 mph acceleration. See your Cadillac dealer and discover why there is so much cause for celebration.

We'll Pay You...

...Come in during National Cadillac Week, take a Test Drive in any New Cadillac and receive a Commemorative Susan B. Anthony Gold Plated Dollar!

Steps to Success

Blended families share strengths, concerns

And each year thousands more of these divorced parents find new lives for themselves in new marriages — bringing with them children who must form relationships with their new stepfamilies.

According to the Census Bureau, in 1987, the population of this country included more than 4 million stepfamilies, who were raising nearly 9 million minor children. Nearly 1,300 new stepfamilies were formed each day, the Bureau reported.

In fact, said Pattie Phillips, supervisor for Texas Department of Human Services and in charge of Wake Up Odessa, "the nuclear family (which consists of parents and their biological children) is probably less normal than the stepfamily." Wake Up Odessa is a coalition to work with groups to help prevent child abuse, she said.

BUT BLENDED families have some problems and issues to face that nuclear families don't.

Karen and Roy (not their real names) have been parents in a stepfamily for about seven years. One of the stepfamily issues they have had to face is "the other parent," said Karen, referring to her former spouse and biological parent of her children.

Children who live with one biological parent and only visit the other often are faced with two sets of rules, creating confusion for the child and frustration for all parents involved.

"If the discipline rules are set in the household (a child lives in and not in the household of the parent visited), that gives the kid an out," she said. In this situation, she added, the child can break the rules he is being raised by when he visits his non-custodial, biological parent's home without having to face his normal household consequences. Therefore, the child feels like he has gotten away with something.

ANOTHER PROBLEM, Karen said, is when a non-custodial, biological parent calls and tells the child, "I'm coming to get you," and then doesn't come. A child who is expecting to spend some time with his non-custodial parent, only to have that parent fail to pick him up, often feels disappointed and left out. Custodial parents and stepparents who are raising the child are left to deal with the child's hurt and confusion.

Because of the unique issues stepparents must face, Karen and Roy decided to attended a stepparent support group for help.

According to Ms. Phillips, stepfamilies are "one of the high risk groups for child abuse, (especially) in the broader sense, if you include mother's boyfriend or anyone who is acting as a parent who is not a biological parent. We (Department of Human Services) get so many complaints (about child abuse) involving non-biological parents or people in the parent role."

Wake Up Odessa is sponsoring a stepparenting workshop to "help people identify their strengths and weaknesses, and find support for each other," said Carole Burrow, coordinator of the event and the mother in a stepfamily for 16½ years.

THE TWO-DAY workshop will be 6-9 p.m. April 14 and 9 a.m.-noon April 15 at the YMCA in Odessa, University at Dawn Streets. The workshop is open to the public and will cost $10, payable at the door. Child care will be provided.

"It's (the workshop) an overview of step-parenting issues," Ms. Burrow said. Six weeks of weekly meetings will follow the workshop, she added. Free follow-up meetings are optional. "The groups that follow are designed to create a support network for the families that participate," she added.

Sometimes the relationship between a stepparent and a non-custodial, biological parent also is difficult. Roy told of an instance when a stepson's biological father was threatening the stepfather with a child abuse charge because the boy was disciplined for failing at school.

But life in a stepfamily isn't all a struggle. In fact, Karen said, it's "super. The way I feel about it is that my children's stepfather has more concern and care for my children than their biological father ever did."

Ms. Burrow agreed. "My husband was more objective about my children than I. A non-biological parent is much better able to deal with them (the children) than the parent."

When the non-biological parent deals with disciplining some characteristic in a child that the biological parent sees in herself, Ms. Burrow said, "He (her husband) didn't have the emotional tie to that personality trait that I did. He also was able to give them more freedom and responsibility than I as a mother ever could."

AT THE same time, she added, "I could be more objective with him about his (biological) child. That was a good trade-off for us."

With the stepfamily workshop and following meetings, Wake Up Odessa hopes to provide a peer support system for stepfamilies. "There are a lot of good things in a step-family," Karen said. "A stepfamily group's most beneficial thing is it gives peer support."

"Everybody has the same problems," her husband added.

"When my husband and I first married, people didn't talk about stepfamilies," Ms. Burrow said. "If we said something was wrong, it was a personal issue because we didn't know everybody else felt the same. The most difficult situation ... is to separate the stepfamily issues from any (typical) family issues. I would have given anything at that time for peer support."

"They (problems faced in stepfamilies) aren't unique," Roy agreed. "The first time I came to a meeting, everybody was in the exact same situation I was in."

MANY FACTORS are involved in the process of building a child's relationship with a stepparent.

"One thing I feel is important is the age of the child at the break up, and the time between the break up and the re-formation of another family. This makes a whole lot of difference," Ms. Phillips said. Birth order in the biological family is another important factor, she added.

"Another thing critical to the success of a stepfamily is the length of time between the divorce and remarriage," Ms. Burrow added. In successful remarriages, the "adults should be divorced at least two years. They need (time) to grieve (about the loss of) that (previous) relationship. Ties between former married people may be much stronger than is healthy (for the new relationship)."

When a couple enters a marriage, "the adults have to decide they are the team," she said. "If they don't, nothing will ever work. If they don't, the child will find the weak board in the fence of the marriage, and the marriage will break. Kids learn they are in control ... The child always has the hope that the original marriage will be restored."

STEPPARENTS "HAVE to provide a united and consistent front," Karen added.

Being involved in a stepfamily support group "helps you identify problems," she said.

Stepfamilies teach children subtle values, Ms. Burrow said. "Marriages fail and families don't stay together. It may be that people (willing to be) open about that failure teaches children it's OK to fail. It's a way to encourage people to pick up life and go on and not to live with a cloud over their heads. They can go on and live a healthy, happy life."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Turkish heartthrob and erstwhile movie actor Turhan Bey was honored in absentia on his 70th birthday March 30 by Dolores (Mrs. John E.) Davis.

Held in her home, the party was Dolores' third Big Birthday Bash for the actor, whom she admired as a girl, as was evidenced by the elaborate scrapbook she had made many years ago detailing his acting career and which was on display.

Moviegoers of the Forties will remember Mr. Bey from his desert pictures, among the "Arabian Nights," "Sudan," "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," and perhaps the highlight of his career when her performed with Katharine Hepburn in "Dragon Seed."

Guests were advised on their invitations that there would be camel parking in the rear, that scimitars would be checked at the door and that harem attire was optional. (Many did come in costume, Dolores reports).

A Middle Eastern theme prevailed in decorations and refreshments, which had such exotic names as Dolma, Humas, Kush Kush, Spanokopita and Baklava, and three of his films were shown on the teevee.

The guests rang a brass gong as they entered the Davis home through beaded curtains and a tent in the front entry way. Palm trees, baskets, brass accent pieces, scarves and veils, and as Dolores describes it, "belly dancing music," set the mood for the party.

Other decor included posters of the film star, enlarged photographs from the two previous parties, and a scarf send by Mr. Bey for the first party in 1972. Guests signed a birthday scroll to be sent to the honoree, who now resides in Vienna, Austria.

Dolores began holding the birthday bashes every 10 years, but decided not to wait until 1992 for the next one.

The "charter members," as Dolores describes those who have been attending the parties since their inception, are Gwen (Mrs. Jack) James, Barbara (Mrs. Earl) Bruno, Dolores (Mrs. Robert) Wynne, Charlotte (Mrs. John) Larson, Jean (Mrs. Ed) Berry, Lois (Mrs. Don) Bell, Ruth (Mrs. Joseph) Kefler, Betty (Mrs. Jack) Sappington, Betty (Mrs. William) Barnes, Mary (Mrs. John) Goodrich and Jean (Mrs. Joe) Stickney.

Hostesses were her daughters, LaMoyne Bass and Dephane Tabor of Scottsdale, Ariz., Agatha Culpepper of Midland and Von Dean Paholke of Andrews.

Frankie has been a member of First Baptist Church since 1943, when she and her family moved to Midland.

Approximately 150 friends shared reminiscences and birthday wishes with the honoree.

"SPRING FEVER" was the theme for the lovely fashion show presented by G. Bradford at the Green Tree Country Club Ladies Association's March luncheon meeting.

Spring knits, washable silks and other dresses in bright colors and beautifully accessorized were modeled by club members Barbara (Mrs. Howard L.) Cherry, Jan (Mrs. Jess) Moore, Mary Lou (Mrs. Mark) Wilson, Carolyn (Mrs. Larry) Seright, Jeanette (Mrs. W.T.) Probandt, Dolores (Mrs. John) Davis and Joy (Mrs. Ed) Stark. The shop's co-owner, Sharon Crouch, was the commentator.

Among those seen in the crown were Ellen (Mrs. Steve) Helbing, Sally (Mrs. John) Omernik, Heather (Mrs. John) Nichols, Peggy (Mrs. Phil) Barry, Wendy (Mrs. Steve) Power and Mary Frances (Mrs. Dave) Griffiths.

XANDRA COOK and Richard Minnix were honored at a series of parties prior to their wedding Saturday evening at First United Methodist Church.

Festivities began in December with a Christmas ornament shower hosted by Linda (Mrs. John) Borders and Eloise (Mrs. Bill) Elgin in the Borders home, and a cocktail buffet hosted by JoAnne and Don McClurg and Jackie and Vance Hendricks in the McClurg home.

Additional events included a cocktail party and dance at Venezia's hosted by Doris and Leroy Minnix; a kitchen display shower given by Rosemary (Mrs. Don) Cox, Sally Kelly, Carol Ann (Mrs. Lynn) Hunt and Sarah (Mrs. Russell) Neisig in the Neisig home, and a "Honey Do" party hosted by Ginger and Jimmy Floyd, Joan and Bill Henry, Sarah and Ron Holcomb, Wilma and Kem Merren, Dorothy and Jim Moring, Mary Lynn Parsley, Mary and Jim Rasmussen and Joy and Bill Seltzer in the Seltzer home.

Also, a rice bag party given by Mary Jo (Mrs. Tom) Sawyer and Sharon (Mrs. Wilson) Heidelberg in the Sawyer home, and an "Around the Clock" shower hosted by Noel Freeman, Connie Coleman, Margie Boswell and Gretchen Myers in College Station. They are Kappa Alpha Theta sorority sisters of the bride and her bridesmaids.

The groom's parents, Doris and Leroy Minnix and Beth and George Barton, hosted the rehearsal dinner Friday at the Plaza Club, while Barbara (Mrs. Keith) Robbins gave a bridesmaids luncheon Saturday at Odessa Country Club.

Suggestions for parents, teens

Copley News Service

Getting parents and teens to see eye-to-eye is about as easy as uniting the superpowers.

That's why a group of high school kids and their English teacher have written a book called "Raising Each Other," that includes rules that are "fair for everyone."

For instance, when it comes to the dreaded phone fight, the book says parents should let their kids use it. But, in turn, teens should keep their conversations under 15 minutes and pay for any long-distance calls.

Teen co-author Scott Coatsworth says none of the rules is set in stone, but they do give parents and teens a starting point for compromise and should help foster communication.

Dads rank fourth on teens' survey

Copley News Service

Teens would rather listen to music than spend time with their fathers, because when teens rank their most enjoyable experiences and relationships in their lives, dads come in fourth place.

A survey of more than 2,000 Canadian kids reveals that 93 percent consider friends their peak source of pleasure. Music is the second most enjoyable activity at 83 percent, and moms rate right around 70 percent. But dads run a dismal 58 percent in the pleasure category.

Youth counselor Daniel Posterski says fathers should work on strengthening their relationships with the teens, but he says enhancing dad's images to where they are more important to kids than their music may be difficult.

Questionnaire helps children cope

Copley News Service

A University of Colorado study says kids get stressed out just like adults. That's why professor of psychiatry Jeanne Dise-Lewis has developed a questionnaire to help kids, parents and health professionals discover if a kid is wigging out.

Dise-Lewis says she developed the questionnaire after interviewing about 1,000 kids between the ages of 12 and 14. She says that gave her 126 things that kids say stress them. It runs the gamut from everything like "one of your parents died" to something seemingly innocuous like "you had to take gym class."

Sibling rivalry problems worse in stepfamilies

New York Times News Service

Although some degree of rivalry between stepsiblings is to be expected, there are a few things parents can do to make the situation more tolerable for both generations.

"Share your history," advised Dr. Anne C. Bernstein, a clinical psychologist in Berkeley, Calif., and author of "Yours, Mine and Ours" (Charles Scribner's Sons, 1989).

"Watch home movies and go through photo albums together. Fill each other in on how you got to be where you are now."

If it's practical to move the two sides of a family into a new house, do so.

If not, be sure that each child has a private space that is inviolable.

Battles over who gets which bedroom can often be settled by having the children change bedrooms each year.

"When we first moved in together, the children fought over which of them would get the bedroom next to Mom and Dad," said Mary Lou Johnson, whose blended family then included an 8-year-old boy and 8-year-old girl.

"Now that they're 16, they each want to be in the bedroom that's off by itself."

Encourage and respect your children's differences.

Lumping them together as "the boys" or "the girls" is more likely to breed resentment than affection.

"Don't expect all the kids to love each other or be each other's best friends," Bernstein said.

"Don't insist that they do everything together. Give them a chance to connect in a way that's based on the real relationship as they perceive it."

Recognize that some aspects of stepsibling rivalry are healthy, for they allow children to practice new roles.

Some children, who had been the oldest, enjoy having an older stepsibling as a role model. And an only child may not be lonely any more.

"The first two years were the worst," Ms. Johnson said of her daughter and stepson.

"Now people think they're twins. They're very close. It was worth all the hard work we went through."

Plastics salvaged

Copley News Service

There is new hope for many formerly unsalvageable containers, such as detergent and ketchup bottles. New processes blend formerly incompatible plastics into everything from fenceposts to automobile barriers.

Soothing relations in blended families a challenge

By LAWRENCE KUTNER
New York Times News Service

At first, Christa and Shayne Johnson treated each other with the wariness of two hungry cats who suddenly have to share the same food bowl.

Each was 8 years old and used to being the only child of a single parent. When those parents were married eight years ago, Shayne and his father moved in with Christa and her mother.

"They were each used to getting all of the attention," said Christa's mother, Mary Lou Johnson, a nurse in suburban Minneapolis. "They weren't real happy about having to wait their turn. They had some very choice names for each other."

The Census Bureau estimates that there were 4.3 million stepfamilies containing 8.7 million minor children in the United States in 1987. Approximately 1,300 new stepfamilies are formed each day.

The Baltimore-based Stepfamily Association of America predicts that by the turn of the century, stepfamilies, including those with adult children, will be the most common form of family in this country.

For many children, having a new stepparent means gaining new brothers or sisters as well. Sharing with these other children may be the most difficult challenge of all.

Giving up the privacy of one's room or the status of being the oldest or youngest child in a family can be as stressful as coping with a new parent. Having stepsiblings forces children to re-evaluate themselves.

The teasing, tattling and tussles that routinely mark sibling rivalry can become a special problem for blended families. Cries of "Mom always liked you best!" have a sharp and bitter edge.

NEWLY MARRIED parents find themselves pulled in different directions by their feelings of love and protectiveness for their spouse and their children.

"It caused trouble between my husband and me," Ms. Johnson said. "We were defensive about our respective children when we argued. We never argued about anything except the children."

Such fights are common among stepparents and stepchildren. They reflect the large number of dramatic and subtle changes children must undergo when they enter a blended family.

Child psychologists say most parents underestimate the extent and importance of those changes.

"Children in blended families are asked to share, all of a sudden, their room, their toys, their clothes," said Dr. Emily B. Visher, a psychologist in Palo Alto, Calif., who has written extensively about such families. "It's a very dramatic transition, and it's very unsettling."

Parents wonder if the apparently rebellious adolescent who stays away from the house and who doesn't participate in planned family activities is trying to sabotage the new family.

Often, the problem is not the child's attitude but a conflict between the stage of development of the child and that of the new stepfamily.

Adolescent behaviors that would draw little attention in a traditional family — for example, not wanting to spend time at home — sometimes becomes a serious problem for a new stepfamily. When misunderstood or dealt with poorly, they can escalate into conflicts that last well into adulthood.

AMONG THE developmental tasks of adolescence are separating from family and developing an individual identity.

It is important that teen-agers place some distance between themselves and what they perceive as the dependent behavior of their childhood. Spending time with friends away from home and arguing over parental restrictions are ways of safely testing the turbid waters of adulthood.

The newly formed stepfamily, however, is at a developmental stage much closer to that of a younger child.

Parents strive for their new family to be surrounded by symbols of harmony and closeness. The adolescent perceives those same symbols as signs of the very dependence he is trying to escape.

The more the parents promote togetherness, the more the teen-agers strive for separation, both from their parents and from their new stepsiblings.

High-school seniors and other teen-agers who are about to leave home may have a very different reaction to a parent's remarriage than younger adolescents.

While a 15-year-old may rebel against the new family, an 18-year-old will often embrace it.

"A child who has one foot out the door may feel relieved that the parent is going to be taken care of," said Dr. Sheldon M. Frank, a psychiatrist in Westchester County and president of the New York Council on Child and Adolescent Psychiatry.

ARGUMENTS OVER who gets which bedroom or who has to share a bedroom can make some international political negotiations pale by comparison.

Researchers and family therapists generally agree that, although having one set of children move into the house or apartment lived in by the other set of children may be a financial and human necessity, it is likely to lead to bitter territorial squabbles.

The children who are already in the house may feel imposed upon and threatened. The entering children may feel out of place.

"When you move into a place where one family has lived, everyone has their own territory staked out," said Mala S. Burt, a social worker in Baltimore and president of the Stepfamily Association of America. "They have to give up some of it to make room for the new people."

Birth order becomes confused in blended families, causing additional friction.

Children view themselves, in large part, by their position within the family. After a remarriage, a girl who has been the oldest child for 10 years may suddenly have two older stepsisters. A boy who was the baby of the family suddenly loses the advantages of that position to a younger, and perhaps cuter, stepbrother.

Holidays and birthdays can develop an unpleasant edge.

Stepsiblings will sometimes divide a Christmas tree in half for decorating, especially on the first Christmas together. One side of the family puts their ornaments on one side of the tree; the other children decorate their half.

"Our children became very competitive during holidays," Ms. Burt said. She and her husband each brought two children to their family.

"At Christmas, for example, when they were very small, they would take all the presents out from under the tree and stack them up to make sure they each got the same number of presents," she said.

SOME PARENTS in blended families say holidays and birthdays pose special rivalry problems because of gifts from the non-custodial parents.

Dramatically unequal gifts or the lack of a gift from a parent who no longer lives with the child can spark nasty comments and feelings of superiority or inferiority.

"To this day, it's hard for us," said Ms. Johnson, recalling how her children would tease each other about the presents they would get from their non-custodial parents. As they became teen-agers, however, the tone changed.

"Now my son feels bad for my daughter because she hardly ever hears from her biological father," Ms. Johnson said.

Myths about china dispelled

Copley News Service

If you think putting a spoon into a china cup when pouring a hot liquid into it will prevent the cup from breaking, you can stop now. That's an old wives' tale.

In fact, to prove bone china is one of the strongest materials in the world, representatives of the Wedgwood company in England put 40 people into a motor coach, hoisted it into the air and set it back down on four bone china cups and saucers. Not one of them broke. But drop bone china and it will shatter.

And if you think tea tastes better in a bone china cup vs. everyday ware, you've been misled again. It's not better, only more genteel, so say the expert china manufacturers in England.

And, finally, many people think tea or coffee cools down faster in a wide cup. Nonsense. It's human error that creates the illusion; more milk is needed.

But even when myths are dispelled, the differences between china, bone china, porcelain, earthenware and stoneware can be confusing. How to care for and buy the different types of tableware is important.

Centuries ago, the Chinese were the first to take pure white clay and make items that turned white and translucent. They became known as porcelains.

Hundreds of years later, the English found the right ingredients to re-create the treasured porcelain and gave it the generic name of china since it originated with the Chinese.

Today, that generic name can lump together porcelain, china and bone china items.

But it's the china and bone china group that confuses most people. Actually, what is the difference?

China (or porcelain) is white and translucent. It has durability and, for reasonable cost, sets a fine table.

But it is the bone china that is the best and most expensive of the group. It is made from china stone, china clay and approximately 50 percent animal bone ash (usually the shin of the oxen). It is the bone that gives bone china its whiteness, translucency and considerable strength.

For those wanting to set a beautiful table, manufacturers advise choosing carefully to match a lifestyle. And it isn't necessary to buy all the pieces. A simple five-piece plate setting consisting of an 8-inch or 10-inch dinner plate, side or dessert plate, soup, cup and saucer will do.

CNS Graphic

The English refer to coffee cups as teacups; the English coffee cup is a demitasse cup used for espresso.

The expense of bone china is mostly in the handwork still done by skilled craftspeople. Some elaborate pieces require over 1,000 dots and strokes painted on with a squirrel-hair brush and need eight firings.

It's best to buy a name-brand china or bone china pattern from a reputable dealer. The store receives cancellation notices from manufacturers with enough time allowed for collectors to buy missing pieces.

And use your fine bone china regularly. It's extremely durable and will last a lifetime if cared for properly.

Be sure to stack bone china with a paper napkin between the dishes to prevent glazed surfaces from rubbing. Hang cups instead of stacking them in order to prevent the handles from weakening.

When washing, common salt will remove tea and coffee stains. Stay away from scouring powders. When using a dishwasher, load evenly with dishes not touching. Be sure to check the china manufacturer's instructions regarding recommended dishwashing detergents. In some cases, the soap could be so strong the design on the china would be removed.

Tableware of all types — porcelain, china and bone china — can be put in the microwave, except those decorated with precious metals such as gold, silver or platinum. The metal will soften. It is safe to warm bone china in an oven, but don't expose it to a flame.

Earthenware is usually red or white clay fired at a low temperature and thicker and heavier than china. In order to hold liquids, it must be glazed. Glazing is usually a very thin coating of glass that can be colorless or colored.

Stoneware is clay-fired at a high temperature, making it extremely strong and non-porous. Ironware is similar and does not contain iron. They are both oven-proof, freezer-proof and dishwasher safe.

This bridal gown, from the After Six Bridal Collection, features a high neckline and dropped basque bodice. The short, pleated pouff sleeves are trimmed with beaded Alencon lace.

Novel 'Loving Women' has 50s morals, values

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT
New York Times News Service

"A Novel of the Fifties," Pete Hamill has subtitled his new book, "Loving Women," about a young man's experiences in the Navy. What exactly is a novel of 50s? Why bother to apply such a label to a work of fiction?

Such questions distracted this reader, if only subliminally, as he made his way through Hamill's impassioned story about coming of age.

Obviously, "Loving Women" is set in the 1950s. As a middle-aged man driving through the South in 1987, Michael Devlin recalls his experiences at the Navy supply base in Pensacola, Fla., in 1953, just as the Korean War was ending: how he broke away from the values of his confined Roman Catholic upbringing in Brooklyn, how he discovered the violently different world of the American South, and how he fell in love.

It's a novel of 1950s values too, when the South seemed to have a monopoly on bigotry, small-mindedness and violence, when the shame of being homosexual was a matter of life and death, and when the entrance into self-assured manhood lay in having one's first woman.

And "Loving Women" is a novel of 1950s form. It's reminiscent of James Jones' "From Here to Eternity" in both its service-base setting and the trial of its hero by fisticuffs.

And it's suggestive of Norman Mailer's first novel, "The Naked and the Dead," in its use of flashbacks to introduce the various characters that Michael Devlin encounters.

IT IS by no means a bad thing to be "a Novel of the Fifties." Hamill, a columnist for The New York Post and the author of seven previous works of fiction, writes with passion and lyricism.

There are some moving nostalgic touches in his story, like a woman driving an old Ford in those pre-air-conditioned days, "her brow furrowed slightly in concentration, her hair blowing," her "lavender dress lifting and settling on her tan legs."

You somehow settle comfortably into a world that was — where sex is uninhibited and evil takes the form of lynch mobs and overbearing superiors, and you race through Hamill's pages at breakneck speed.

Still, labeling a novel "of the Fifties" is a little like making excuses. You test the results against a limited standard and you don't take them altogether seriously.

Although he is wise enough not to announce it, Peter Maas's new novel, "Father and Son," also takes a familiar form. In the tradition of John le Carre, it tells how decisions callously made for reasons of state can devastate the lives of individuals. Except that instead of the reasons of state involved in the Cold War, Maas writes about the centuries-old troubles between the Irish and the English.

It's a powerfully tragic story that Maas has tried to dramatize.

A GIFTED young American named Jamie McGuire falls in love with the cause of Irish independence and helps to ship an illegal cache of arms to the men of the Provisional Irish Republican Army. But his gesture backfires for reasons of state and his adoring but guilt-ridden father is forced to challenge the power of the states' bureaucracies in the hope of saving Jamie.

The difficulty is that Maas — the author of one previous novel, "Made in America," as well as such non-fiction books as "The Valachi Papers," "Serpico" and "Marie: A True Story" — cannot make up his mind whether to tell his story from the state's point of view or the individual's. He tries to do both at once, and the result is most confusing.

He begins with the heist of the arms from a Boston armory, introducing us to characters we couldn't care less about.

He jumps to Jamie McGuire's childhood, intriguing us with his treatment of a difficult father-son relationship, but just as we are settling in, he veers off to the IRA arms plot.

On and on the exposition goes, from the FBI's viewpoint, from the British secret service's viewpoint, from the viewpoint of the Boston underworld.

A third of the way through his novel, Maas introduces a new development by writing: "Far removed from these events, and indeed before any of them occurred. ... "

Far away and long before? No wonder the reader is confused. No wonder things develop slowly. No wonder Maas loses control once the excitement finally starts. It's as if having used up half of his plot to push us laboriously to the peak of some roller-coaster ride, he must then let us descend too quickly.

WHEN WE are not interested, he can't let us go. When we are finally moved, he rushes us away.

The frustrating thing is that Maas shows considerable novelistic ability in "Father and Son." He shows how to get vivid characters on and off stage. He knows how to set a scene quickly, whether public or intimate.

There are even hints that if he could give his characters the right time and space they might find ways to communicate and reveal their deeper selves.

But as things stand in "Father and Son," he has not. The vital connection between psychology and history is missing.

So on the one hand the state is inhumanly violent. And on the other, people lack the humanity to resist.

As a novelist, Maas reflects the problem. It remains for him to find the solution.

Associated Press

There's a fine line between being a help-mate and trying to force your mate into taking your advice — as many couples have found to their sorrow.

What begins as an attempt to help, said an article in Redbook, can degenerate into a power struggle.

"Part of demonstrating love to a spouse is giving our input and expressing our concern," said psychotherapist Jordan Paul. "But we cross a very fine line when we become invested in making the other person change."

Here are some pointers on how to offer help to your husband in a way that won't end in stalemate:

■ Examine your motives. Clinical psychologist Mary Maffia, of Englewood, N.J., said a woman who is unaware of her own deeper motives may offer her husband a "helpful" comment which is actually a criticism in disguise.

Paul added: "The key to being truly helpful is to encourage him to become what he wants to be rather than what you want him to be. You may genuinely believe that what you want for him is, indeed, in his best interest. If it's not what he wants, he's going to reject your advice, no matter how sensible it is."

■ Ask yourself what you can do. "One of the most important things a woman can do," therapist Margaret Paul said, "is ask herself why she is so heavily invested in wanting her husband to change?"

What does she fear will happen if he doesn't change or act on a situation? Perhaps there is something she can do to avert it.

■ Learn to speak your husband's tongue. Some men respond best to logical argument. Others are swayed by emotional appeal. Still others reject advice and become defensive.

Maffia said: "There's only one way to know whether you've communicated effectively, and that's to see how your husband responds to what you've said."

■ Empathize, don't criticize. You have a better chance of being heard if you put yourself in your partner's place and take his thoughts and feelings into consideration.

"Try assuming he has good and valid reasons for thinking and behaving as he does," Margaret Paul advised.

If you tell your husband you'd like to understand his reasons, he may be willing to talk about his conflicts and fears.

■ Don't take over. It's only natural for a person who is adept at a particular skill — whether technical, social or psychological — to want to come to the aid of someone who is less adept. But this can do more harm than good.

■ Recognize your own limits. "Do you really have the power to control somebody else, even for their own good?" Maffia asked.

"The answer, I'm afraid, is no. The unwillingness to accept this fact can make for constant stress in a marriage."

■ Keep the lines of communication open. Psychiatrist and analyst Dr. Stanley Stern of Phoenix, Ariz., said, "When a loving relationship is founded on listening and empathizing, there is greater trust between two people. Defenses are lowered. Then, in the warmth and light of an open relationship, the possibility of change becomes real."

■ Be willing to let go. Margaret Paul said, "One of the hardest things to do is to offer your insight, then let go and have faith the situation will somehow be resolved. It's normal to want to keep offering the same advice, hoping your husband will act on it. Instead, he starts tuning you out."

Child day care offered to attract nurses

ORADELL, N.J. (AP) — Nursing homes are beginning to offer on-site child day care programs as a benefit that attracts and retains nurses.

Today's Nursing Home magazine says 15 homes in Massachusetts are pioneering this concept as well as others from Junction City, Kan., to Angel, Ore. While employees reap the greatest benefits, residents and children find the arrangement an enjoyable experience.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I nearly went crazy when I read your advice to "Me," the woman who was dreading taking on the care of her elderly parents and severely handicapped sibling.

Why should this woman sacrifice what's left of her already damaged life because her parents failed to plan for the future? Abby, she told you that she was ready to fall apart! How dare you encourage her to take on such a gargantuan task? What about HER health, HER husband and HER marriage?

I have an 84-year-old father and a 19-year-old severely retarded son. Both are in nursing homes, so I know all about guilt, but I also know about exhaustion and trying to do the impossible.

The decision to place a family member in an institution is very painful, but it's often the best for all involved. You should have encouraged this woman to look beyond martyrdom and realize that she has other options.

Forgive me if I sound angry, but after 19 years, I am so tired of hearing, "The Lord never gives us a heavier burden than we can carry." It is just a religious platitude. It doesn't solve anything. The God I believe in doesn't pick out "special people" to send tragedies to.

I cringe every time you print "Heaven's Very Special Child." For years, someone would cut it out and send it to me. I would like to write a parody someday about how hard it is to get a baby sitter when "Heaven's Very Special Child" grows a beard!

I am signing my name, and I hope you use it. — ELLEN DONNELLY, ROCKY RIVER, OHIO

DEAR ELLEN: I'll forgive you for being angry, if you'll forgive me for my platitudinous non-answer. Thank you for your wise and gutsy letter. You humbled me, and I deserved it.

DEAR ABBY: This may sound silly to be bothering you with, but it's really getting to me. My son (I'll call him Greg) is nearly 12. His teacher told me he hasn't been going outside for recess lately. He finally admitted to me it's because two boys at school won't let him play with the group of boys in their class. Greg says it's because he isn't good at sports. He gets along fine with all the other boys, but they tend to go along with these two boys who are excluding him.

Greg is a little under the average height and weight for his age group. He is very smart — a straight-A student — all except in physical education. And the girls like him.

It hurts me probably more than it hurts Greg. Is there anything I can do to help him? Maybe if I called up the mothers of these two boys and explained the situation, it would help. Please advise me. — GREG'S MOM

DEAR MOM: If you want to help Greg, please don't help him too much. I know you are well-intentioned, but I urge you to resist calling the mothers of the two boys who are excluding your son.

Were you to call, the "excluders" would probably resent Greg's whining to his mother who, in turn, reported the unfair behavior to their mothers. And instead of including Greg, they would be more apt to taunt him and call him "Mama's boy."

DEAR ABBY: I am on the planning committee for my 10th high school reunion. Someone came up with the idea of sending flowers to the parents of those classmates who have passed away. She thought it would be nice to let those parents know that their deceased children have not been forgotten, and their classmates will be thinking of them on that special occasion.

A few members of the committee were opposed to that idea, saying it would make the parents sad to be reminded of their loss. How do you feel about this, Abby? — WAITING TO HEAR

DEAR WAITING: I vote to send the flowers. It would be a lovely, thoughtful gesture. Parents who have lost a child live with their loss daily, so you need not worry about "reminding" them.

Veterinarians practice specialized medicine

Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

The devastating news came by accident. A car accident left the young woman confined at home with a mild concussion. Sacha, a young cocker spaniel, jumped on the bed to offer his master a measure of comfort. A couple of hugs and a rub of the dog's tummy alarmed the owner.

The incident occurred five months ago and Sacha's owner looks back at that day as a blessing. If she hadn't been in an accident and confined, if she hadn't had the good sense to take Sacha to his vet ...

Sacha's owner recounts the first few days slowly and in broken sentences; her eyes well and empty a halting stream of tears.

The day after the lump in Sacha's stomach was found, he was examined by his vet, Dr. Ronald Ridgeway, and a biopsy was done immediately. Less than a week later, the diagnosis was made. Sacha's tumor was malignant — it was cancer in his lymph nodes.

Sacha was referred to a specialist.

Enter Dr. Andrew Loar, an oncologist with board certification from the American Veterinary Medical Association.

"Veterinary medicine has learned a lot from human medicine," said Gahring. "We are becoming specialized just as human physicians did, but we won't be making the same mistakes."

THE MISTAKE, Gahring said, was that human doctors became overspecialized and left patients short of general practitioners.

"Specialization is a natural progression. Veterinarians have so much more new information coming out every day that it's hard to keep up. The advances are overwhelming. It's important for the veterinarian with the general practice to keep up on what's new and to be able to refer their more difficult clients to one of these specialists."

Sacha's condition required an oncologist. That's where Loar entered the picture. Loar is among a growing number of veterinary specialists who spend an additional three to four years in internships and residencies learning a specialty.

"Cancer is a very emotional subject. Every person has his or her own way of dealing with this issue," Loar said. "In my practice, I see the pet owners who are most attached to their pets and are willing to deal with months of treatment, both emotionally and financially."

The treatment doesn't come cheap, but an animal diagnosed early enough can be helped, Loar said. "I can't promise another five days or another five years. I can only promise to do everything possible to treat the animal and get the disease into remission."

Loar spends two days a week in a Los Angeles research laboratory looking for newer and better treatments. He also keeps up on the latest treatments offered to humans suffering from cancer and borrows many of the medicines and technology for his four-legged clients.

DR. GUY Tarvin is board certified in surgery. He received his veterinary degree from Iowa State University and spent four years of surgery internship and residency at the Animal Medical Center in New York. Before coming to San Diego, Tarvin taught at the University of Illinois School of Veterinarian Medicine for four years.

Like Loar, Tarvin's patients are referred from veterinarians who don't have the time, facilities or expertise to perform extensive surgery.

"One of the newer techniques is in hip dysplasia," Tarvin said. "If it's caught early enough, we can operate and reconstruct the hip, preventing a lot of pain as the animal grows older. Sports-related knee ligament injury is another procedure that is being done more often."

Dr. Darien Nelson, a board-certified veterinary ophthalmologist, graduated from the University of California at Davis and did her internship and residency there. While eye injuries and infections are a part of her practice, she's seeing more pets with eye diseases such as cataracts and glaucoma. She says the two main reasons for treating the eyes is to prevent blindness and to relieve pain.

"Ophthalmology is one of the faster-growing specialties in terms of new information and techniques," Nelson said. "Much of what is being done for pets has been learned from eye treatments and surgeries on humans."

Nelson makes it a point to keep up with the latest advances on glaucoma surgery. New techniques have passed the laser stage and gone into phacoemulsification (a method of removing cataracts by ultrasound). The new procedure has proven to be very effective on humans; ditto for animals. Nelson has done a number of phacoemulsification procedures on her patients.

"IT THERE'S an advancement in the area of eye treatment for humans, I make a point to study the new information and watch these procedures on human patients," she said. "Most of it can be adapted for my patients, too."

Nelson spends three days practicing here and two days at her Orange County office.

If skin problems are troubling your pet, Dr. Patricia Gilbert is a veterinary dermatologist who has completed her internship and residency and will take her board finals this summer. Gilbert works with Dr. Craig Griffin, a board certified animal dermatologist.

There are more than 100 different skin diseases currently recognized in dogs and cats, according to Gilbert. And many of them look very much alike.

Animals with itching, biting, scratching and rolling problems are candidates for treatment. Most of the animals are referred to the dermatology clinic by their veterinarians; others go for treatment after being referred by friends.

"We offer special procedures such as intradermal skin testing for allergies and dermatohistopathology (reading and interpreting skin biopsies)," Gilbert said.

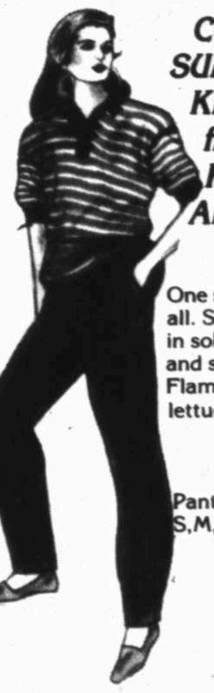

And the most common skin problem? No surprise, it's allergic reactions to flea bites.

"The biggest problem is that pet owners aren't educated about flea control," she said. "The biggest myth is that a flea bomb will rid the house of fleas. It doesn't. Fleas live in the environment — in the grass, on the furniture, under the carpeting — they just go to the animals to feed. It doesn't make sense to rid the dog of fleas using sprays and powders and then to let the environment go with a quick dusting.

"Animals are a lot like people. It's good to know that there is an allergy condition, but it's best when you can find out what specifically is causing the allergic reaction," Gilbert said. "And that's where the dermatologist comes in to save the animal a lot of pain and discomfort."

And Sacha? It's been four months and the dog is in remission, according to his vet. And Sacha's owner reports that her pet has gained back the four pounds he lost and "acts like a frisky little puppy again."

Alternative care offered

One-on-one assistance provided for elderly

By LEONARD SLOANE
New York Times News Service

As the number of Americans over age 65 increases, services to meet their needs are growing rapidly.

Most are provided by public and non-profit social agencies or hospitals. But there is another kind of service provider that more and more of the elderly are using: private care managers, also known as private case managers. For a fee, these advisers offer one-on-one assistance.

Many of these managers are social workers experienced in taking stock of a crisis and helping clients gain control of it. Though their services can be costly — typically $50 to $75 an hour — they can often be useful in coordinating care for the elderly.

Private care managers do many things that children or other relatives would do if they had the time or desire.

Among them: arranging for home health care, finding a nursing home and suggesting alternative living arrangements, perhaps with a younger person or with another elderly person who needs extra income.

In addition, they can help with applications for government assistance and provide information about agencies that serve the elderly.

Because of the potential for abuse in this relatively new category of health-care provider, experts emphasize the importance of selecting a care manager with proven ability and expertise.

At the very least, managers should be licensed by a state agency for independent practice in the field of human services delivery.

A RELIABLE private care manager can make things easier for both patient and family.

"The individual practitioner is not burdened by paperwork incumbent upon agency employees," said Ruth M. Schlossman, a social worker in New York City.

Another New York social worker, Sarah N. Cohen, said, "We're on 24-hour call, and we're very flexible."

Rona Bartlestone, a social worker in North Miami Beach, Fla., said: "We tailor our services to the individual family, and we're very available. And as the current generation of adult children have more experience with this, they will become the purchasers of such services for themselves."

Ms. Bartlestone is also the president of the National Association of Private Geriatric Care Managers, a group of specialists in private practice who meet its educational and experience requirements.

Furthermore, there are hundreds of other social workers, nurses, gerontologists and other professionals engaged in private practice services.

When can a private care manager be of assistance?

Specific situations include personal crises that require immediate help, occasions in which elderly parents' irrational behavior becomes intolerable and times when ordinary routines of daily living pose major obstacles to the elderly.

One of the most troublesome situations that adult children face is dealing with the needs of parents in a distant city. Aging Network Services in Bethesda, Md., is a company that links parents and children with qualified providers of services to the elderly.

"IF YOU live in New York and your parent in Florida begins to have problems, we can hook your parents into a care manager there," said the network's co-director, Grace Lebow. "We do the central intake and give the benefit of our thinking to the social worker."

Private care managers have normally worked directly with the elderly in social work agencies before going out on their own. They charge hourly fees ranging from $40 to $120. Some managers also charge $100 to $500 for an initial assessment.

When selecting a care manager, seek advice from someone who is aware of the specialists in the area.

"The social work staff of a hospital should know who in a community are reputable," said Dr. T. Frank Williams, the director of the National Institute on Aging, a federal agency. "A local welfare or health agency would probably know also."

"Older people and their families should make sure that the counselors they're paying are certified, qualified, well trained and knowledgeable," said Janet S. Sainer, the commissioner of the New York City Department for the Aging.

Mirca Liberti, a co-executive director of Children of Aging Parents in Levittown, Pa., finds that "There are a lot of people jumping on the bandwagon, and some are pricing themselves outside of the market."

Still another serious danger is the possibility of conflicts of interest.

"The consumer has to be wary," said Cynthia Polich, the president of Interstudy in Excelsior, Minn., a nonprofit health-care research organization. "The private case manager may have an incentive to direct you to a particular home health agency or a particular nursing home." And that agency or home may not be the best for the patient.

DON'T HESITATE to inquire about any matter of concern regarding the care manager's background, the techniques and strategy to be used or the contract being offered.

In most circumstances, private care-management services are not covered by either Medicare, Medicaid or private insurance. Make sure you can afford the services you are seeking.

Ask private care-givers questions

New York Times News Service

In evaluating private care managers for elderly people, be certain to ask these three questions:

What education and experience do you have? Which professional licenses do you hold? How do you establish your fees?

For further information, the booklet "What Is a Case Manager and How Do You Know If You Need One?" is available for $7.50 from Interstudy at 5715 Christmas Lake Rd., Excelsior, Minn. 55331.

Directories of care managers for the aged can be purchased from Children of Aging Parents ($10, 2761 Trenton Rd., Levittown, Pa. 19056) and the National Association of Private Geriatric Care Managers ($17.50, P.O. Box 6920, Yorkville Finance Station, New York, N.Y. 10128).

Researcher measures advertising dollars' effectiveness

Copley News Service

Imagine taking $25.8 billion and flushing it down the toilet.

Imagine no longer. According to a University of Iowa study, that's how much money was spent on television advertising that is mostly ineffective in selling products to consumers.

Business administration professor Gerard Tellis reports that he can pinpoint what consumers buy and where they hear about it: through television, newspapers or in-store displays and coupons.

He says TV is the least effective of the three mediums.

In fact, Tellis says his scientific study shows that television advertising isn't even effective in the long run.

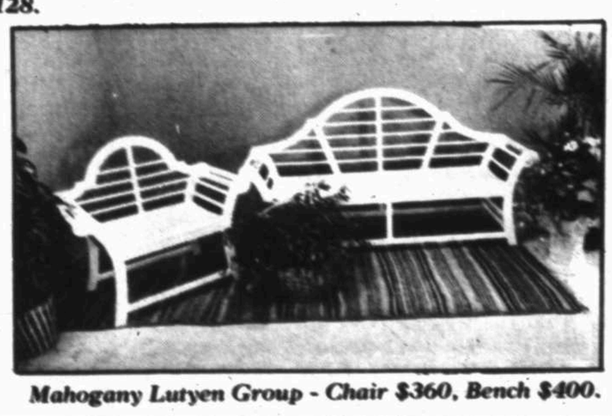

He says he hasn't measured radio's advertising effectiveness. But Tellis assumes it's about as ineffective as TV.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Retirees need positive attitude

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

The words to a popular song proclaim, "What I am is what I am." As retirement age approaches, the question is not so much "who" as it is "what I am." Retirees have a new role, based on past experiences and a myriad of future possibilities. Yet we can be one of our own staunchest enemies.

In adjusting to the later years, most older people experience an overcoming feeling of being stalled. Our distorted perspective of a shortened future can cause us to create our own inertia by believing that it's too late to start something new.

We must realize that we are going to have to make changes and adapt to new possibilites.

Retirement is a relatively new concept. Retirees are living longer and are healthier. This new lifestyle requires a positive attitude.

It's not aging, but our response to aging that causes problems. Young people do not comprehend the process of aging, yet adults approaching retirement not only see the aging process, but view it as a negative reality.

Although science is averting disease and prolonging life, many older people are avoiding seeking a fulfilling future.

In essence, aging must be equated with growing; growing with doing; and doing with accomplishment. Change is a growth process that includes anxiety and concern, response and decision, happiness, excitement and pleasant experiences.

In ancient Rome, Cicero believed that a country could not exist if it were not for the "old" men in whom intelligence, reflection and judgment resided. The problem is not physical aging — it's our response to aging.

Based upon thousands of interviews with pesons who have retired, the following basic concepts are qualities of a successful retirement:

■ Accept responsibility. Do not place blame on others for your problems. Accept help if and when it is needed.

■ Have definite interests. Happy retirees enjoy sharing their interests with others, and take pride in the things they are interested in.

■ Watch your health. Take notice of your aches and pains, they may be a sign that you need to take care of your body.

■ Be interested in others. Successful retirees enjoy the company of others, participating in activities and meeting new friends.

■ Face reality. Growth is not always easy. Change can be painful. Successful retirees learn how to make the best of their situation, whatever it is.

A major step to successful living is evaluation. Think through your possibilities and then move confidently into them.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Congratulations to the Winners of the "4-Way Test" ESSAY CONTEST

TESTING OURSELVES: The Challenge
by Erin Kelly

Challenge is as vital to life as breathing. Everyday we face new challenges, from choosing a college to learning new skills as a retiree. These situations which test our abilities and strength add spice to our lives. As we mature, the challenges often change; however, one challenge confronts us throughout life: to become the best person each of us can be. This goal is wonderfully unattainable. As we strive to reach it, we grow in positive ways and evaluate our progress honestly. The Four Way Test provides an excellent measure of the worth of our thoughts and actions.

First we must assess whether a thought or action is the truth. Although this task appears to be simple, it is difficult to discern the truth because it is usually gray, not black or white. Thus, we must consider the views of others and then carefully formulate our decision. This challenging process of ascertaining our own truth is necessary in the for becoming the best we can be.

We must next decide if an action is fair to all concerned. Does the action ignore or exploit the gifts and talents of those involved? If not, we are assured that it is fair. As Jesus commanded, we must love both our neighbors and ourselves; also, we must treat others and ourselves fairly. For example, when a person cheats in school, in a relationship, or on the job, he does not treat his peers fairly. Also, he does not fully utilize his own abilities and is not fair to himself. Insuring that our actions are fair to all concerned is an important challenge.

The third qualification is whether the actions build goodwill and better friendship. By strengthening bonds between people, we build a better community. Volunteering time to community efforts like Christmas-in-April is an excellent example. These challenging goals of goodwill and friendship must also be pursued on a larger scale between nations, races, and religious groups.

The final qualification requires that thoughts, words or activities be beneficial to all concerned. This challenge is often difficult to face in our materialistic society where an individual's gain often hinders another's progress. When we do fulfill this clause, though, we experience agape, the Greek word for unselfish love.

As a standard for our actions, the Four Way Test challenges us to be truthful, fair, friendly, and caring. This credo is extremely powerful. If we, as individuals and as a nation, could accomplish this, we could create a peaceful and just world. By striving for these goals, we valiantly confront the basic challenge of life.

WHAT THE FOUR WAY TEST MEANS TO ME
by Brian Dean

Because I attended Camp Ryla in July, the way I think, talk, and act have changed drastically. My experiences there, especially the "Four-Way Test", affect the way I look at and deal with my life and my responsibilities. I practice using the questions of the "Four-Way Test" in my work as student council president, as well as with my family and peers.

When faced with new student council advisors and advisor philosophies, I used the questions to guide my actions and to make adjustments brought about by this change. As student council president, anything I say or do, not only affects me, but the people I represent. It is important as a leader to set a good example and to ensure that the feelings and thoughts of the people around me are heard and understood. I must also ensure that the actions that I take will represent the best interest of the student council and Greenwood High School. The "Four-Way Test" serves as a guide for me in fulfilling this responsibility.

Many family decisions are also guided by the "Four-Way Test". My role as an independent decision-maker has improved because of my ability to make judgements according to a set of guidelines, instead of criteria for self satisfaction. Members of my family have noticed my words and actions are more tolerant and caring and that my opinions are more flexible as facts change.

My friends are affected by my new outlook because I'm a better friend. I make decisions on the basis of what is best for all concerned and stand by my decisions even in the face of criticism. They know I will support them when their words and actions promote other people and I will assist them in changing any negative attitudes.

Camp Ryla is the most memorable and educational camp I have had the priviledge to attend. I have used the leadership skills and understanding of our free enterprise system daily. The "Four-Way Test" has been most beneficial to me and will assist me in future endeavors. I will always be grateful to Rotary International and the Rotary Clubs of Midland for my learning experiences at Camp Ryla.

WHAT THE FOUR WAY TEST MEANS TO ME
by Symth Swanson

Everyone has a certain code of morals by which he lives. Often one's background and upbringing determine this moral code. As a result, each individual has his own idea of right and wrong. The Four Way Test is one example of a moral code that I believe is very appropriate to follow.

The most important aspect of one's moral code must be the truth. If one is not truthful in all events, then one has already violated one of the oldest morals of all cultures. All trusting relationships are based on the truth. Therefore, truth is a necessary beginning for all honorable moral codes.

When considering any action, one must also look at the possible consequences of such action. One should be sure that it is fair and beneficial to all concerned and not just act for one's own sake. Another aspect of a decent moral code is that one considers the well-being, not only of oneself, but also of other individuals involved. The best action is that which benefits the most people.

Finally, one's action should spread goodwill and build friendships. The desire to help other people is an important part of a moral code as is the desire to befriend individuals. Therefore, when taking action, one should determine whether it will aid or harm the community. Whether or not it will cause dissension within the community is also important to consider. A divided community cannot stand. Therefore, one must weigh the results of one's actions upon the community.

Since the Four Way Test incorporates the elements essential to a decent moral code, I consider it to be a respectable code by which to live. If one follows it faithfully, one should always take the proper action. How nice the world would be if everyone were to follow such a code.

Foul odors can adversely affect physical health, intelligence over time

Copley News Service

Bad odors are bad news for your body because they turning your tummy, decrease respiration, increase heart rate and raise blood pressure.

Putrid odors can even cause your intelligence level to decrease over time, according to a group of Turkish scientists who subjected volunteers to ordinary everyday smells like household waste.

According to professor Orhan Yilmaz of Ankara University, people subjected to foul smells on a regular basis run the highest risk of illness. A child raised in a village hut that's part home and part barn is likely to be of lower intelligence than a child brought up in a cleaner environment.

Archaeologists study evidence of cannibalism among Anasazi

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Human bones found in an Anasazi ceremonial chamber suggest the generally peaceful farmers may have turned to cannibalism, at least for rituals that likely included prisoners, an archaeologist says.

"My first reaction was, 'Oh my God. So much for our peaceful farmers,' " said John Cater, a graduate student at Colorado-Boulder. "They were so shattered that it was all very clear what was going on."

Archaeologists discovered the bones piled in neat patterns and some smashed to bits in a "kiva." Near the central firepit lay stone axes and knives still smeared with microscopic traces of ancient gore. The wooden ceiling of the kiva was collapsed when the carnage was completed, obscuring the evidence for nearly 1,000 years, near what is now the town of Yellow Jacket, Cater said.

He believes the victims may have been prisoners, and rules out hunger as a reason for the carnage. "We've seen too many examples of when times got rough, people just got up and left. That would be a better option than eating the next-door neighbor."

Frederick Lange, curator of anthropology at the university museum, endorses Cater's analysis. But he said evidence at other sites suggests some desperate Anasazi may have resorted to cannibalism to stave off starvation.

The Anasazi started a network of high-rise cliff dwellings in the Southwest about A.D. 400 and deserted them 900 years later, presumably after drought or invasion. Barely 10 percent of known Anasazi ruins in Colorado, Utah, Arizona and New Mexico have been excavated. Signs of cannibalism have been found in up to 20 digs.

Penny-elimination movement claims 'penny saved' earns nothing

Hearst News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — Pity the lowly penny.

In an era of $500,000 houses and $50,000 cars, the penny has become a cipher, an annoyance that most people don't bother to pick up off the ground. And many simply throw them away.

"Pennies are a pain," said Michael McGuire of Clifton Park, N.Y. "Every night I go home and empty them out of my pockets, but sure enough the next day there's more. I think they breed in my pockets."

Like most people, McGuire has a penny jar at home where he's amassed 1,500 of them. But he'd rather have the pesky little copper critters outlawed.

"I hate 'em," he said. "I'd love it if they'd stop making them."

Last year the U.S. Mint manufactured 11,346,550,443 pennies. But over 7 billion fall out of circulation each year because they ended up in someone's penny jar or were lost.

That's 29 pennies lost each year by every man, woman and child in the United States. Still, there's little chance of running out, because there are 129 billion on the little brown coins in circulation, according to Terry Abdoo, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Mint.

Increasingly, people are actually throwing them away.

"We find them all the time," said Mark DeCarlo, plant manager of a garbage shredding plant here. "I guess people who are sweeping up the floor don't bother to take them out before they throw out the sweepings."

In Dade County, Florida, however, where trash is sorted for recycling, about 100,000 pennies are found each week mixed in with household trash.

There are other signs of impending doom for the old copper:

- Rep. Jim Kolbe, R-Ariz., has introduced a bill asking the Treasury Department to study the feasibility of rounding cash purchases to the nearest, making pennies obsolete;
- It costs .6 cents to make a penny, so it would save the Treasury $66 million if it didn't have to make 12 billion of them each year;
- Convenience stores and vending machine companies have formed a lobby called Coin Coalition that wants to eliminate the penny by 1992;
- There is virtually nothing that you can buy for a penny, even in convenince stores and Woolworths. Gum machines use dimes and quarters. Bazooka bubble gum costs three cents.

Stepfathers struggle for acceptance

By ANDREE BROOKS
New York Times News Service

Six months after Tony Gorman, a retired social-studies teacher, married Louise Griffiths, who has three children, the youngest child asked her mother at dinner one night, "When is Tony going home?"

It is not easy to be a stepfather, as Gorman, who lives in Boulder, Colo., and other men have discovered. What makes the role even more vexing is that until recently there have been few role models and almost no research to help them do a better job.

Now this is changing.

With some 1,300 stepfamilies being formed every day, and the vast majority involving stepfathers rather than stepmothers, according to the Stepfamily Association of America, researchers are starting to acknowledge the complexities as well as the crucial nature of the stepfather's role in the family.

And they are discovering how difficult a position it can be.

"He is expected to master many roles in a hurry," said Dr. Emily Visher, a psychologist in Palo Alto, Calif., and a co-founder of the Stepfamily Association.

"He is expected to quickly win the respect and caring of the stepchildren. He must meet the needs and expectations of his new wife and himself as a loving husband. And he must come across as an effective parent to her children even though they may resent him."

STUDIES SUGGEST that it may take five years before a stepfather is fully accepted as a parent or at least an adult mentor.

He is likely to encounter more difficulty building a relationship with a stepdaughter than with a stepson. And many stepfathers falter by trying to assume the mantle of parent too quickly.

The long time it can take for a stepfather to build a bond with a stepchild has been confirmed through clinical work and academic research.

For example, Dr. James Bray, a psychologist at Texas Women's University in Denton, and Susan Gershenhorn, a graduate student at the University of Houston, conducted a study of 180 stepfamilies from 1983 to 1987. They found that after six months of remarriage, the stepfather was still a relatively remote figure to his stepchildren.

It took two years or so before the stepfather and stepchild had grown closer, although a bond with a stepson seemed to develop slightly more easily. After five to seven years the relationship had grown even closer, although girls were still likely to resist the stepfather's presence and any attempts at control.

Younger children accepted a stepfather as a parent far more quickly than did teen-agers, Ms. Gershenhorn said.

Stepfathers may have greater difficulty with girls than boys because girls often form a very close relationship with their mothers after divorce, said Dr. Laurence Steinberg, a professor of sociology at Temple University in Philadelphia.

STEINBERG IS studying 200 families in Madison, Wis., focusing on the transition of children into adolescence.

"When the mother remarries that girl feels displaced," he said. "We also know from past studies that fathers tend to be stricter with girls than boys. If the girl is an adolescent she will naturally resent that intrusion."

By contrast, boys seem eager to embrace a male role model. "They may even be looking forward to having a man around the house again," Steinberg said.

The most successful stepfathers are those willing to allow the mother to be in the lead role while supporting her actions, said Dr. Constance Ahrons, a professor of sociology at the University of Southern California at Los Angeles. Ahrons has been studying 98 divorced couples and how they adapt to remarriage.

The reason that a gentle transition often fails to occur is that a supportive role, even on a temporary basis, is contrary to traditional ideas of manly behavior, said Dr. John Visher, a psychiatrist who is married to Dr. Emily Visher. "He is expected to be in charge long before he has had time to form the bonding necessary to make it work," he said.

And when that stance backfires, the stepfather withdraws because he feels defeated.

"He then physically and emotionally leaves the family by working late at the office or not being there even when he is present," said Jeanette Lofas, executive director of the Stepfamily Foundation, a research and counseling group.

"Or he may become even more of a disciplinarian as he becomes desperate to take charge." That discipline, she said, can be harsh because it is untempered by the warmth a man naturally feels towards his biological child.

A STEPFATHER may inadvertently blunder, reported Dr. Ronald Levant, president of the Massachusetts Psychological Association, because he may also be struggling with the guilt he feels by giving far more time and money to his new stepfamily than to his own children.

Levant observed the behavior of more than 100 stepfathers from 1983 to 1988 while director of the Fatherhood Project at Boston University.

Too frequently, experts add, the stepfather fails to recognize that he may be resented for bringing a different type of parental behavior to the household, one that is alien to the stepchildren.

The children then begin to build an idolized version of their biological father, Gorman said, forcing the stepfather to compete with "a ghost," as Gorman put it.

His own struggles led him to write "Stepfather" (Gentle Touch Press, 1983), which tells the stories of 26 stepfathers.

Once the stepfather begins to learn why his stepchildren resent his intrusion, and how his own feelings may be impeding appropriate action, he can begin to heal the rift, Levant said.

Remarriage challenges children

By Dr. LAWRENCE KUTNER
New York Times News Service

One of every six American children under 18 years old lives in a stepfamily, according to a 1984 Census Bureau study. By 2000, that proportion will grow to about one in four, Government studies estimate. For many children, and parents, too, the transition to a new family is upsetting. Even the most psychologically astute parents often find that they are unprepared for the effects the new marriage may have on their children.

"We quickly learned that it wasn't going to be 'The Brady Bunch,'" said Dr. John S. Visher, a psychiatrist in Palo Alto, Calif. He and his wife, Dr. Emily B. Visher, a psychologist, each brought four children to their marriage. The frustrations they experienced led them to found the Stepfamily Association of America in 1979 and to write three books on stepfamilies.

"It didn't help that we were in the mental-health field," John Visher said. "We were as unrealistic as anyone else."

PARENTS CAN DO several things to help children cope with the stress of a remarriage. The first task, researchers generally agree, is to spend more time building the marriage and less time worrying about how your children feel about what is happening. That is not to say you should ignore your children's feelings. But several recent studies show that divorced and widowed parents tend to pay little attention to their own needs as couples and focus on the immediate needs and demands of their children. Many new couples with children postpone honeymoons or do not go out with adult friends for several months after the marriage.

"The remarried parent feels guilty and holds back from forming a solid relationship with the new spouse because she feels she's betraying her child if she does that," said Emily Visher. "But the opposite is true. The children get a couple that they can count on."

Children perceive the rights and privileges of stepparents as very different from those of biological parents. A stepparent who rushes into the role of equal parent by making rules and enforcing discipline often finds those efforts rejected or ignored by the new stepchildren. "Our research shows that the biological parent should maintain the primary parenting role and use the stepparent to back him or her up," said Dr. James H. Bray, a psychologist at Texas Woman's University in Houston who has been studying children in stepfamilies.

"The largest number of behavior problems, such as getting into trouble at school, and the largest amount of anxiety and depression in children occur when the stepparent moves in and tries to take over the primary parenting role," Bray said.

HIS RESEARCH showed that it can take four years or longer for a child to accept a stepparent as having an equal role to the biological parent. In general, the younger the child, the earlier he accepts the stepparent.

Parents should also expect girls and boys to react differently to the new marriage.

"Although divorce appears harder on elementary school-age boys, remarriage appears harder on girls," said Dr. Bray.

Two and a half years into the new marriage, girls have a more distant relationship with their stepfathers than boys, his research showed. Stepfathers need to recognize that there is nothing abnormal about that and that it is not a reflection of something they have done.

For both sexes, young children usually adapt to the stepfamily more quickly than older children. Children of divorced parents generally have more trouble adjusting to the new marriage than children of a widowed parent.

Teen-agers, who are trying to break free of their old roles within a family and to test their independence, often avoid emotional involvement with the new stepfamily. They may never view the stepparent as having the authority of the other parent. Younger children sometimes express their uneasiness over their changing family through anger at both the biological parent and the stepparent.

SOME CHILDREN have more pragmatic concerns. "They worry that when their mother remarries they will change their last name and get a new listing in the phone book, and that their friends will no longer be able to call them," said Jill Krementz, the author of "How It Feels When a Parent Dies" and "How It Feels When Parents Divorce" (both published by Knopf in 1988). Getting a second telephone listing or a separate phone line for the children can solve that problem.

Several children that Krementz interviewed for her book on divorce said that even though one or both parents remarried, it was very important to them to see both of their biological parents together from time to time, and not just at big events like a graduation.

Capturing vistas of Death Valley landscape on film a challenge

By RICHARD and DONNA CARROLL
Copley News Service

DEATH VALLEY, Calif. — The great land, heat waves shimmering surrealistically under a deep blue sky, is eerie and foreboding and brings out an exhilarating spirit of discovery and exploration.

Vast and empty, the landscape makes one feel far removed from the modern world. The essence of the area is that of immense distances, stark beauty and subtle earth colors abiding in arid splendor.

CAPTURING THE desert on film can be a challenge. What the naked eye sees in the broad panorama will appear smaller and sometimes disappointing on film. Let the early morning light make the scene come alive.

Photographing miles of sand dunes — sculptured neatly by the unhindered wind — from different viewpoints can make them change shape completely, as can the sun that continually sweeps new shadows over the sand.

Frame the image so that the horizon line is straight but not centered, dividing the picture in two. Looking through the viewfinder, you can decide how a composition would look with more or less sky, and add interest by positioning the horizon higher or lower.

The valley's horizon is marked on the east by the Grapevine, Funeral and Black mountains of the Amargosa range and on the west by the Panamint range. The mountains, which contain the rain, add a wonderful diversity with their attractive forested peaks and ancient Bristlecone pine.

BEYOND, IN the far distance, is the highest point in continental America, Mount Whitney. Part of the stunning High Sierra, its rugged crests glisten with snow and rise more than 14,000 feet into the sparkling sky.

In contrast, the lowest point in the Western Hemisphere is aptly named Badwater, a large pond in Death Valley where parched settlers had their hopes and dreams shattered when they tasted the rancid salt water gleaming in the sun.

Nearby, a wide-angle, 20-28mm lens will freeze the supernatural sweep of the Devil's Golf Course, a bewitching moonscape of salt and water-bearing gravels reaching into the earth more than 1,000 feet.

Take care to guard against designs of another kind on your film by using an adequate lens shade. The brilliant light combined with intense glare from the sand can make lens flare a serious problem.

A respite from the sun and a cool drink will be found in the north of the park at famed Scotty's Castle, an incredible Death Valley legend. The castle, designed like an 18th century Spanish hacienda and dating to 1922, was built by financier Albert Johnson and Walter E. Scott, a robust character bigger than life known as Death Valley Scotty.

UNFORTUNATELY, photography is not allowed in the wondrous home filled with imported handpainted tiles, crafted wrought iron, priceless furniture, a handmade brass chandelier and top craftsmanship within a 12,000-square-foot Western museum ambience.

The rangers, who conduct yearround tours, demonstrate a beautiful organ and make the estate come alive. Slides of the interior and its treasures can be purchased in the adjoining gift shop.

Another famed oasis and fine home base when visiting Death Valley is Furnace Creek Inn, a Spanish-style California landmark on 600 palm-laden acres. The inn, with its rock walls, thick beams and tile roof, is beautifully photogenic in the late afternoon when the sun is making its last-second appearance of hot pink. The inn, which opened in 1927, is open from October to May and has an inspiring view of the desert and mountains.

The attractions and vistas are almost endless. The land changes as the shadows deepen. At night, under a bright moon, it's a new world of nocturnal animals, startling shapes and images, and a mesmerizing sky filled with stars.

Death Valley is splendidly maintained by the National Park Service and the U.S. Department of the Interior, not commercialized and surprisingly clean.

The ideal months to visit are from October through April when there are warm sunny days and cool evenings. Temperature during summer months will average 110 degrees cooling to the 80s at night.

WHEN TRAVELING in hot weather, you may want to carry film in an insulated cooler, never in the glove compartment. Slow-speed, ISO/ASA 25-100 slide or print film is ideal for this location, and don't forget your polarizing filter and a few plastic baggies to protect equipment during a possible sand storm.

Death Valley is approximately 309 miles from Los Angeles off Highway U.S. 395 connecting with California 178 and 190. For information, write Superintendent, Death Valley, CA 92328.

Texas ranger fully equipped to enter 'badlands'

By ROY BRAGG
Hearst News Service

BEND NATIONAL PARK, Texas — To get an idea how rough and rugged this southwest corner of Texas is, glance into Texas Ranger Joaquin Jackson's Caprice Classic patrol car.

There's a pair of spurs hanging from the emergency brake lever in case a manhunt requires a horseback trip into the back country. In the trunk is a week's supply of C-rations and water. There are three handguns, two rifles, a shotgun and enough ammunition for a prolonged firefight. A rifle is under his seat, a pistol constantly at his side.

"This is rough country," he says. "If a situation comes up, you can't say 'King's X, I got to go back and get my equipment.' There's so much rough country, there's no telling what you'll find when you're out there."

But Jackson isn't complaining.

"This is probably the best part of Texas," says Jackson, who covers 15,000 square miles of territory. "I wouldn't live anywhere else."

Two recent shootings involving rafters on the Rio Grande — including a November incident in which a Texas man died — have focused national attention on this vast frontier, where hundreds of miles of mesquite brush languish in the shade of panoramic buttes and mountains.

The image of the West Texas badlands — where bandits have been replaced by drug smugglers and coyotes — may live on, but it doesn't appear to worry anyone here.

Tourists still flock to the park. Rafters continue to float down the muddy river through the same canyons where the shootings occurred. Raft rental companies, despite a run of cancellations after the shootings, are still in business.

And park rangers say they won't change the way they do things, despite concerns that fearful campers will arm themselves for protection.

Local residents — used to living in the state's most desolate and punishing region — take it in stride.

"Don't even think I have a key," she muses, rocking absently in the rear room of her general store.

"I feel safer on that river than I do walking down the streets of Houston," he says.

The 801,146-acre park sits in the southwest corner of the state, bordering 118 miles of the Rio Grande.

The nearest doctor and bank are 100 miles away. Two small towns, Lajitas and Study Butte, sit on the park's west side and provide limited tourist amenities.

The prevailing terrain is desert and mountain. Dry washes are marked by flood gauges, revealing that during a sudden rain, even the flatland can be treacherous. Black bear, panther, peregrine falcon, rattlesnakes, jack rabbits and coyotes inhabit the region.

"A lot of people have come to this country to disappear," says Stillwell, who grew up here on her family's ranch. "And they can do it here."

In a land this punishing, it's not surprising that violence is interwoven with day-to-day life.

Jackson and other lawmen say they do the best they can to cover the area, but all admit that a lot of criminal activity probably slips by.

"There's no telling what goes on in that back country. There are probably bodies out there we'll never find," Jackson says.

Local history is full of ranch massacres and shootings. There were raids by Mexican bandits until the early part of this century, prompting U.S. Army occupation of the area.

Stillwell — who packed a pistol in her job as a Presidio school teacher in 1916 — says shootings on the river aren't uncommon.

"We've always had shootings," she says. "Sometimes, shootings occurred for a reason — an argument, a grudge or a wrongdoing."

The most recent shooting occurred March 22 in San Vicente Canyon on the park's eastern side, said Phil Koep, chief park law enforcement ranger.

Details are sketchy, but three rafters were fired upon from the Mexican side of the river. They returned fire in a three-hour encounter. No one was hurt.

Authorities haven't determined a motive for the shooting, but Koepp said sometimes American rafters inadvertently offend Mexicans and prompt angry responses.

Fallout from the shootings has been sporadic.

Ivey, who runs the Lajitas Trading Post, says Easter weekend is usually his busiest time of the year. This year, two days after the shooting, every group that had booked equipment for Easter canceled.

Despite residents' claims that all is normal here, there have been some changes.

Raft guides — who had in the past ignored suspicious behavior on the river — now report such activities to deputies or park rangers.

"We need to develop a network of spies down there," says Jackson, the Texas Ranger.

Rangers say the shootings have prompted more rafters to carry guns — many illegally.

Still, they say the river is as safe as can be expected. Most of the illicit activity — drug and alien smuggling — occurs at night.

Ivey says he doesn't even discuss the shootings with customers unless they ask.

"It would be like me getting on a plane and announcing to everyone that planes crash," he says. "No one would appreciate that. It's not necessary to give customers something else to worry about."

AT YOUR LEISURE

If there is a fairy tale land, it has to be Switzerland. The people are neat, courteous, fair and clean (even the cows look like they've been scrubbed!) This beautiful country is full of glistening lakes, charming villages, fascinating shops and of course, the magnificent Alps.

Although the dollar has taken a beating, and Switzerland is expensive for tourists, year in and year out, it's still a good value.

Switzerland is postage-sized and action-packed with scenery. It's also noted for its food, banks, chocolate and clocks. I've visited Switzerland dozens oftimes and find it inspiring, tranquil and relaxing.

One of my favorite towns is Zermatt, reached only by train. There you take a sled or a carriage, or you walk to get around. Glacier skiing on the Matterhorn makes this town a place to remember.

Another of my favorites is St. Gallens, on the German border by the Boden Sea. The Rhine River starts here. It's dotted with beautiful, historic castles. St. Gallens is the home of a beautiful church noted for its blue green color. The church library has a unique inlaid wood floor and is the home of some of the oldest bibles in the world.

For something different, Gruyere is a walled city where cars are not allowed. Few people live there. There is a wonderful hotel. Le Chalet is my favorite restaurant. I love it for the food and the fascinating view of the countryside.

A specialty of the kitchen there is raclette, a dinner of steamed potatoes and cooked cheese. You eat it with small onions and pickles and then follow it with raspberries and cream for dessert. You look out the window and see the cows–it's a very quiet, tranquil, pastoral scene.

As you might have already guessed, eating is delightful in Switzerland. One of the most famous restaurants in the world is found in this country. It's located about 10 miles outside of Lausanne. Fredy Girardet, one of the world's top chefs, and a guest on 60 Minutes, usually comes out and greets his guests.

American Airlines offers a Fly Away Vacation escorted motorcoach tour Designed to give you the most value for your money, these escorted tours offer you first-class accommodations and a choice of iteneraries for three days, four days or an entire week.

Switzerland is also an ideal country for a fly/drive vacation. I know Switzerland like the back of my hand–it's easy to navigate. Roads are excellent and we will coach you all about driving before you leave.

We go over the map with you, show you the airport layout, transportation options and driving tips. Just bring a tape recorder and we will spend about an hour with you. There's really no change of driving habits in Switzerland and you don't even need an international drivers license.

When you fly on American Airlines, you can enter the country through Zurich or Geneva, rent a car, take a train or pick up on a tour out of the airport. We will make sure that you are comfortable traveling unescorted before you ever leave the United States.

Whether you choose a fly/drive or escorted trip, I know you will enjoy Switzerland. My staff and I will be happy to help arrange things for you. Please call us at Midland Travel or stop by soon. We are located at 319 N. Colorado, and the phone number is 684-7428 or 1-800-356-9435.

Travel is world of education

Students learn by visiting other countries

By RANDY MINK
Copley News Service

Most students today have neither a fear — nor basic knowledge — of geography. If geography is in the curriculum at all, it is usually lumped with social studies. Only 5 percent of high schools teach geography as a separate course, compared with 50 percent in 1915.

Sadly, many students have trouble reading a world map. In a recent survey of Baltimore high school students, 45 percent could not locate the United States on the globe. Many misidentified Brazil as the United States.

When North Carolina college students were asked to name three African countries between the Sahara and South Africa, 74 percent couldn't name even one.

"How this coming generation will make any sense of a world increasingly tied together by communications, transportation, trade and international relations, I cannot imagine," Gilbert M. Grosvenor, president of the National Geographic Society, wrote in the society's magazine.

One way to make geography and other cultures come alive is through foreign travel. Even a European tour that skips through five countries in 10 days can provide an invaluable (and fun) geography lesson if presented within an educational framework.

Said Henry C. Kahn, president of the American Institute for Foreign Study, "A trip abroad could prove to be the spark that ignites a student's desire to learn about the world around him.... The earlier a student travels, the more beneficial it is toward his personal growth and academic career."

MANY HIGH school students already are saving and planning for spring break and summer trips to Europe and beyond.

Summer programs at European universities offer language classes at all skill levels and a variety of other courses touching on history, geography, literature and the arts.

The most popular program for the neophyte globetrotter, however, is the multicountry tour that gives a broad-brush view of European life.

An AIFS session at Fitzwilliam College of Cambridge University features a Modern Britain course that covers recent history and such current topics as the British economy, Common Market and conflict in Northern Ireland. Other morning courses include English Art and Architecture and the Novels of Thomas Hardy.

Afternoon field trips and several days of London sightseeing round out the four-week Cambridge program, which costs $3,249 from California, most meals included.

AIFS's least-expensive four-week programs are in Spain, where fees start at $2,600 from California.

At Spain's University of Salamanca, students take classes in Spanish language and civilization. On the Costa Blanca, they attend University of Alicante classes and live with a family.

Elizabeth Cohen, a Salamanca student from Poughkeepsie, N.Y., said, "My summer in Spain helped me immensely in becoming fluent in the Spanish language and widening my horizons.... Whenever Spain is in the news, I am always interested and want to learn everything I can."

STUDENTS WHO cannot afford the time or money for a campus stay still can get a good sense of life overseas on short tours of Europe. These motor-coach journeys feature on-site lectures at museums and historical shrines.

A typical two-week hop is the London-Paris-Madrid program organized by American Educational Travel. The trip costs $1,499 from California. A one-week London tour is $1,199.

Longer high school tours cut a swath across seven or eight countries in three or four weeks, visiting cities such as Amsterdam, Heidelberg, Munich, Salzburg, Venice, Rome and Florence, plus London and Paris.

Summer homestay programs let American students (age 14 and up) become a "son" or "daughter" of a host family for three to eight weeks.

These total-immersion experiences revolve around the family's day-to-day life — visiting relatives, going shopping and attending community events. Thus, participants obtain an intercultural perspective not available on a classroom or touring program.

ALSO, HOMESTAYS are held in a greater variety of countries, often in small towns untrampled by tourism.

The Experiment in International Living, which pioneered the homestay concept in the 1930s, offers programs in Argentina, Brazil, Denmark, Greece, Ireland, India, Kenya, Korea, Martinique, Morocco, Turkey and many other lands.

Experiment students meet once a week with their American leader to share their observations and travel together a week or two before or after the homestay segment. Students are placed in households where at least one family member knows some English.

Most Experiment trips require no previous language study. A six-week program costs $3,000 to $4,000 from California.

For travelers, 1989 books are promising

By GEORGE L. ROSENBLATT
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — For travelers, one special rite of spring is the arrival of new travel books. Even for armchair voyagers, a good travel volume can be an adventure simply in the reading. Happily, 1989 promises some goodies.

Among the most promising are the new "Insight Cityguides," published by Prentice-Hall, who also brought us the legendary "Insight Guides."

What each volume of the preceding "Insight" generation does for its respective country or region, each cityguide seems to do for the city it covers. I say "seems" because I have seen only three of the 20 or so Prentice-Hall expects to publish this year. But those three — on London, Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro — fill me with confidence that the quality of the whole series is assured.

Among others Prentice-Hall targets for cityguides this year are Bangkok, Berlin, Dublin, Istanbul, Jerusalem, Lisbon, Paris, Rome, San Francisco, Venice and Vienna.

If a cruise is more to your liking, you will profit from consulting the new, fourth edition of Fielding's "Worldwide Cruises," by Antoinette DeLand.

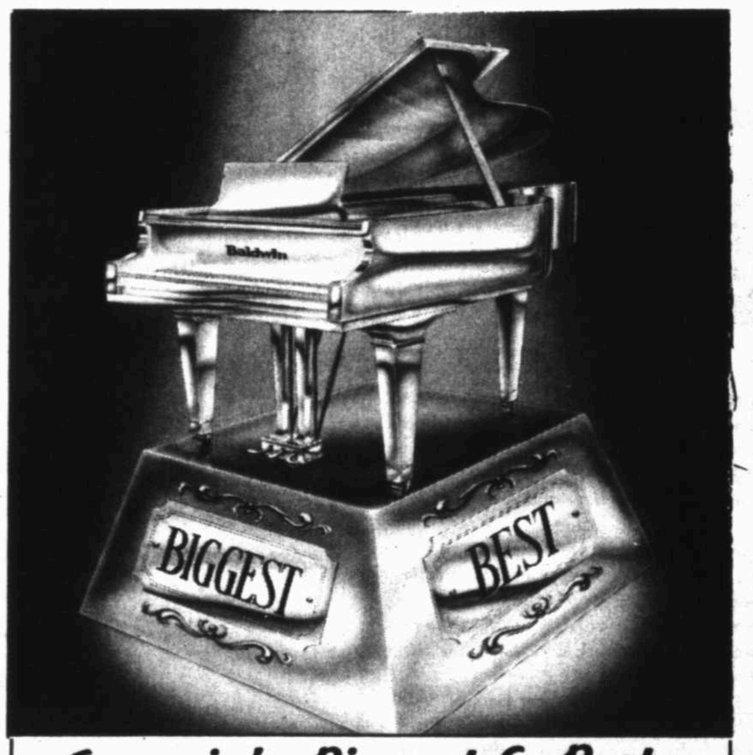

An expert in cruise travel, DeLand is an articulate and skilled writer on maritime matters that matter to consumers. In selecting a ship, eyeing an itinerary, getting ready to go, previewing ports of call, or knowing what to expect once on board, DeLand's book navigates you through waves of material and reefs of confusion with a practiced eye and a steady hand.

Published in soft cover by Fielding Travel Books at $13.95, the new edition of "Worldwide Cruises" is not only invaluable to prospective cruisers but also basic to any travel library.

Another worthwhile travel library addition is "They Have A Word For It," a delightful work by Howard Rheingold.

Published in soft cover by Jeremy P. Tarcher Inc. and distributed by St. Martin's Press at $7.95, it is aptly subtitled "A light-hearted lexicon of untranslatable words and phrases."

Some of these words and phrases, even some of the languages whence they come, are pretty obscure. But many offer a handy, inter-cultural enrichment of both vocabulary and perception.

AT WIT'S END

Some children not seen, heard

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

One of my favorite commercials is an advertisement for carpets. It's the one where a child drops a piece of chocolate cake. Before it hits the floor, his mother, across the room, leaps into the air and sails in under the plate like Wade Boggs sliding into home. As she makes the catch with one hand, there is wild applause.

The ultimate nightmare of mothers everywhere is entering a non-child home. I used to look upon these domiciles as war zones: celery green carpets mined with glass coffee tables, flocked wallpaper covering light switches, little soaps in the guest bath, and pianos that were never played. There was always a piano.

After instructions to "Don't touch anything we can't afford," I offered my own prayer as we approached the front door. "Please God, don't let there be a little Persian rug to roll up in, a collection of blown glass miniatures, three levels of stairs, and cookies that crumble. Could there once be a home without a dog to chase, a bathroom that can't be unlocked from the outside, or a hostess who doesn't fill the grape juice to the top of the glass? Forgive me, but is it too much to ask that the water be shut off? And perchance if my child naps in the guest room, please let him fall out of the bed before he wets."

On the other hand, people who live in non-children homes look upon visiting toddlers as demolition balls that slobber. They have their side, too. A woman who insists on remaining anonymous complains that people should watch their children more closely:

"In and out the screen door, gotta go potty, gotta get a drink. One little girl kept filling the flyswatter with seeds from the bird feeder. She dumped them in the garden. They threw rocks in the bird bath. I gave them suckers and had to wash the top of the bench and the end table and the lawn chairs. They broke the Venetian blind cord and the heater door. I surprised one of them in the bedroom, and he hurriedly jammed my lipstick back in the cover and broke it in half. They made the dog crazy, and I found the garden hose running the next day."

Somewhere there is a middle ground between parents who are shot full of Novocain and are out of it, and hosts and hostesses who believe children can sit for three hours with their feet on the floor while big people talk about fertilizing their trees and how the Cubs are doing this year.

The non-kids house is one to which we all aspire — where plastic turns to china and black towels turn to pastels. It's a magic world where keys are left on table tops, cookie jars are on lower shelves, and the doors under the sink aren't wired shut. Until then you just tell your kids, "Don't dribble, slobber, skate, talk, scratch, slam doors, twirl dials, flush, turn spigots, flip switches, open doors or giggle. Just sit there and enjoy yourselves."

Consumers resist higher prices, keep inflation low

New York Times News Service

Although wholesale prices are surging, inflation at the consumer level is not following suit, primarily because of buyers' resistance to higher prices.

Indeed, consumers are going out of their way to shop for bargains, helping perpetuate price discounting at thousands of stores.

It is a principal reason that profit margins are being squeezed for the nation's retailers and why the consumer inflation rate remains relatively moderate.

Beyond retailing, the price resistance is evident in surveys of consumer attitudes.

It is also reflected in how long people keep their cars: 7 years on average today, compared with 5.5 years in 1985.

And it shown up in a sudden drop in home sales in January and February, when mortgage interest rates began rising.

"I definitely think there is consumer resistance; people are more willing to postpone purchases, to shop around and to seek the best prices," said Richard T. Curtin, director of the University of Michigan's consumer survey program.

The important question is whether this trend will hold down the increase in the Consumer Price Index for March, resulting in one similar to the February rise of only 0.4 percent.

Many economists had expected a bigger rise. When it did not materialize, they cited consumer resistance as a major reason; retailers were simply unable to pass through the sharply higher costs for the finished goods they had purchased from manufacturers and middlemen.

Historically, these cost increases have appeared in the Consumer Price Index within a month, or two at most, economists say.

But so far this year, history has not been repeating itself.

What's more, many economists and executives believe that it might not in 1989 — because of consumer resistance — and, as a result, the consumer inflation rate might remain in the 4.5 to 5 percent range, as it did last year.

"This resistance is hard to measure, but it is clearly an inflation-delaying factor today," said Richard Rahn, chief economist of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

The Labor Department will announce the Consumer Price Index for March in mid-April.

"We'll probably see some of the overdue price pass-throughs in March, but some of it — no one knows how much — will never show up because of the resistance," said Lawrence Chimerine, head of the WEFA Group, an economic consulting and forecasting service in Bala-Cynwyd, Pa.

One reason the economists find the resistance hard to measure is that the nation's shoppers seem to have a dual mindset.

On the one hand, surveys of consumer attitudes show a high level of "confidence" — a belief among many people that inflation will not accelerate in the next 12 months and that the unemployment rate will remain low, so they will still have work.

But two major surveys, one by the University of Michigan and the other by the Conference Board, a business organization, also record some notable, and deepening, pessimism.

Although people are fairly secure about jobs, a growing percentage of those surveyed expect the economy to slow and household income to decline in the next 12 months.

In addition, more and more people are postponing big outlays for washing machines and driers, television sets, vacuum cleaners and other appliances.

"They're positive about many things, but when you ask them if they are going to buy a house or a car or a major appliance, the answers trail off," said Donald Ratajczak, a Georgia State University economist.

Indeed, people were out shopping in record numbers — shopping centers were visited by 170 million people last year, up from 163 million in 1987, according to the International Council of Shopping Centers.

But many of the purchases were small — neckties or shirts, not appliances.

The consumer price resistance has evolved slowly.

Basin built rig to see Yemen duty

To drill remote Shawba region

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A Permian Basin built rig will be put to work in an unusual part of the world on an unusual contract.

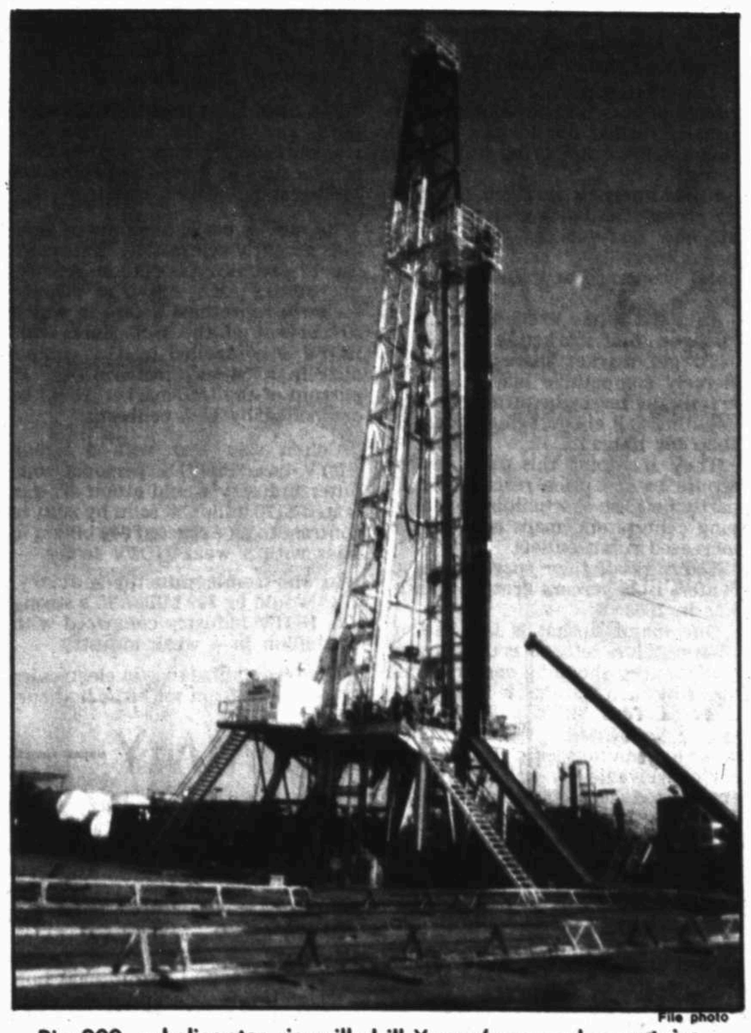

Parker Drilling Co. of Tulsa says its Rig 200, based in the company's Singapore operations will enter, for the first time, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen to drill a multi-well contract in a highly region of that country.

"The work will be unique," says Ronnie McKenzie, Parker vice president of operations, "because no roads exist to the remote drilling locations and all the drilling equipment and supplies will be transported in by helicopter."

The company will be using a heli-rig designed and built by Partech in Odessa. The rig will have hook load capacity of 8,000 lbs which allows heavy casing loads to be run in areas like South Yemen, says McKenzie.

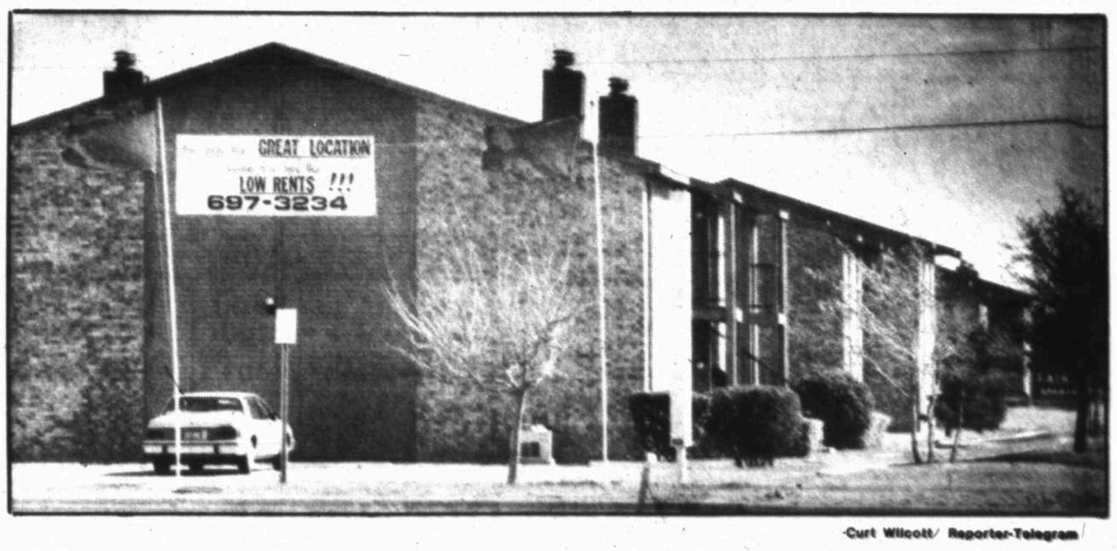

The pumps and were also engineered and manufactured by Partech (formerly OIME), and have a hydraulic capacity equivalent to to larger and heavier mud pumps used in conventional land equipment.

The well sites to be drilled are in a rugged, mountainous area which borders Saudi Arabia on the Gulf of Aden. The contract for the wells was awarded by Total Aden Exploration Production Co. for its East Shawba Drilling Campaign.

Despite a flight from apartments to single family residences occupancy rates in Midland are steady, say experts. Move-ins and bargain prices are reasons listed.

Apartment occupancy steady

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Despite improvement in Midland's housing market, assisted by apartment dwellers buying homes, occupancy rates have held steady say experts.

Kay Sutton, president of the Midland Board of Realtors, says she is seeing a number of first-time homebuyers coming out of apartments, because with the low interest rates, a monthly house payment can be about the same as a month's rent.

However, Melinda Mantell, president of the Midland Apartment Association, says the members of her group expect to see improvement in 1989 because of continued occupancy growth. She estimates that average occupancy so far this year is 88 percent, up 10 percent from the 1988 average of 78 percent.

She attributes this to a number of people transferring into Midland, and also a growing segment of older renters who no longer want the fuss of owning a home.

"I see occupancy steadying," Mantell says. "At the better complexes, occupancy will remain in the high 90s, and at the lower end of the scale, occupancy will be in the 60s."

She adds that as occupany rises and rents stabilize, Midlanders will see less incentives such as a free month's rent or trips to Las Vegas or special low move-in rates.

During 1989, Mantell, manager at Saddle Club Apartments, and her fellow complex managers are focusing on educating themselves about the recent fair housing act that virtually eliminates adult-only complexes and could affect occupancy rates.

Unlike some of the larger cities such as Dallas, Midland has very few adult-only complexes, and Mantell predicts those few will make the adjustment. Still, she says, "I do see the fair housing act as an infringement on the rights of those who don't want to live near children."

Despite steady occupancy rates for some apartments others have not fared so well. The repossession of Midland apartment complexes has

WOMEN IN BUSINESS

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — To the outrage of many women and the applause of much of the business world, the head of a group devoted to advancing women's careers has written in the Harvard Business Review that corporations ought to recognize two different groups of women managers.

The two groups: those who put career first, and those who need a flexible schedule to be with the children.

And in an assertion that one sympathetic columnist said should provoke a "collective gasp," the author, Felice N. Schwartz, declared flatly that women in management cost corporations more than men do.

Her article, "Management Women and the New Facts of Life," in the January-February issue of The Harvard Business Review, has prompted a flood of mail and a host of arguments.

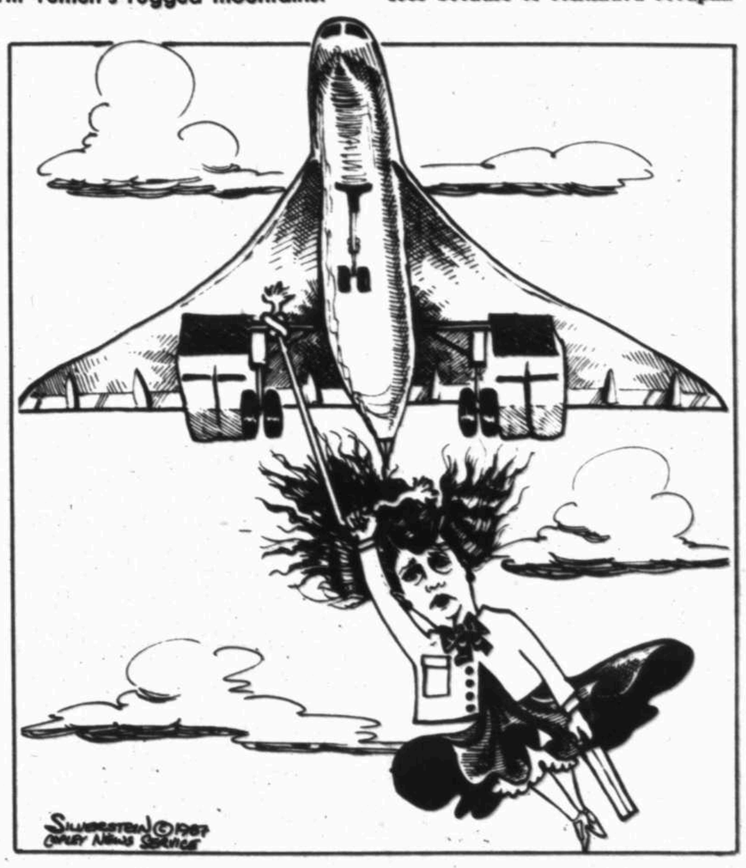

Many employers have welcomed it, calling it insightful and ground-breaking in its willingness to confront the differences between men and women.

But many women's advocates and experts on work and family say it is regressive and enormously damaging to women's advancement.

Some see a great danger in expanding the "mommy track," in which women with family responsibilities are shunted into dead-end, lower-paying jobs.

"It's tragic," said Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., "because it reinforces the idea, which is so strong in our country, that you can either have a family or a career, but not both, if you're a woman. Of course the business people love it, because it's what they don't feel free to say, and here's a woman saying it for them."

Lack of HDTV may cost $225 billion in trade

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States must move aggressively into the new high-definition television and flat-screen display industries or lose more than 2 million jobs annually and suffer a $225 billion trade deficit in electronics by the year 2010 says a private study.

If the United States does not compete effectively with the Japanese and other nations in the high-technology arena, the personal computer and semiconductor industries alone could have respective deficits of $114 billion and $76 billion early in the next century, the report from the Economic Policy Institute said.

Its author, Robert Cohen, said: "Our nation stands at a critical juncture. If we do not create a strong industrial base centered on development of HDTV and flat-display screen technology, it will not only weaken our industrial base, but also reduce the numbers of skilled jobs that are needed to make us more competitive."

The House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on telecommunications and finance scheduled two days of hearings on HDTV beginning today. Cohen was to testify before the panel Thursday.

Witnesses at the hearings were expected to discuss proposals for government support in developing HDTV technology. Proponents of HDTV claim it can provide motion picture-quality images on flat television or computer screens using digital components.

Japan expects to have an HDTV system in full operation by the mid-1990s, whereas the U.S. telecommunications industry has barely begun testing of HDTV technology.

The U.S. Defense Department is soliciting bids for companies to share in a $30 million HDTV research and development program.

Cohen said HDTV technology will improve the entire "food chain" in the electronics industry.

"HDTVs will be used in the home, as display screens for personal computers, and by the nation's businesses to improve controls over automated production in auto, steel and manufacturing plants, to integrate

While oil prices remain a prime consideration in the health of the domestic oil industry, there is a growing concern in the industry that, as foreign oil companies gain larger stakes in U.S. refining, U.S. producers soon may not be able to sell their oil at any price.

Pitts

Oil producer concerns first surfaced last year after Saudi Arabia acquired a 50 percent stake in Texaco's U.S. refining and marketing operations, a move which gave the OPEC producer a guaranteed outlet for its crude oil.

"The Permian Basin Petroleum Association is concerned about the effects on the domestic producer should foreign buyers continue to acquire U.S. refining capacity," said Harry Spannaus, executive vice president PBPA.

He is not the only one concerned. Attorney General Jim Mattox conducted a preliminary antitrust study to determine if an in-depth investigation of the Saudi-Texaco deal was needed but backed off after determining that nothing could be effectively pursued at the state level.

Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance launched a crusade against foreign ownership of U.S. refining and marketing and made it a part of his reelection campaign by proposing a law that would require the TRC to approve of future sales.

"We don't even allow our own government to become involved in the American oil business, so why should we allow a foreign government to come in and buy our energy industry?" asked Hance, who pointed out that energy companies in all parts of the world except the U.S. are nationalized.

The federal government, however, has been generally supportive of foreign investment in the U.S. energy industry, and has called concerns about foreign ownership unfounded.

But are they really unfounded? There is evidence to suggest concerns may not be so unfounded.

An independent survey conducted in November 1988 and published in the February issue of SIPES concludes that approximately 70 percent of the oil processed in Corpus Christi area refineries comes from foreign producers, while only about 30 percent is purchased from domestic producers.

One refinery, Champlin, no longer refines any domestic petroleum. "The message here," says Spannaus, "is that some refineries give preference to foreign producers, creating an unreasonable crude oil mix for independent producers trying to sell oil in South Texas."

According to Don McGregor of San Antonio, who researched Texas Railroad Commission records, three other refineries — Southwestern, Valero, and Coastal — also depend heavily on foreign crude. Records show Coastal buys 2.5 million barrels daily from foreign producers and only 125,000 from domestic producers. Southwestern buys 1.24 million foreign barrels and 600,873 domestic. Valero's mix is 1.4 million foreign and 150,000 domestic. Only Koch, which purchases 2.8 million domestic barrels and 250,000 foreign shows stronger preference for domestic crude.

Spannaus said the foreign crude refining preference and foreign ownership in domestic refining must be stopped or the U.S. oil industry would collapse to foreign control in every sector of the energy industry.

"Our politicians in Washington must wake up, take off their blinders, and recognize that our dependency on foreign energy supplies is gambling on the future of our children and the security of our nation," said Spannaus.

He praised a bill before the Texas Legislature that would put an end to the threat, at least in Texas. The bill (HB-250), introduced by Rep. Pete Patterson, would prohibit ownership of mineral interests in Texas by foreign governments.

Basin tally dips, U.S. climbs

From Staff Reports

According to Baker Hughes Inc., the U.S. total jumped 13 to 779. The count had risen 26 last week.

"We like to see three weeks in a row before we declare that it's up, but we've got two of the three already," Baker Hughes economist Ike Kerridge said.

Lea County, N.M. continues to be the most active in the Basin with 19 rigs at work. Eddy County, N.M. was second with 11.

Among major oil producing states, Texas had the biggest increase with 15 additional rigs, followed by New Mexico, eight; Pennsylvania, two; and Colorado, Kansas and North Dakota, one each.

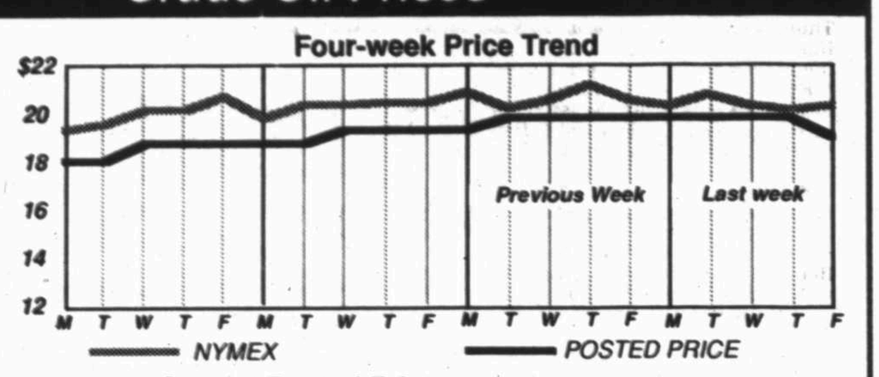

Oklahoma showed the sharpest decline with six fewer rigs, followed by California, five; Wyoming, three; Ohio, two; and Louisiana and Michigan, one each.

Less than a decade ago, during a period of very high inflation, people usually rushed out to buy, fearful that a delay would bring still higher prices.

"Now there is no such inflation psychology, and that tends to moderate how fast you can put through price increases," said Ira Silver, chief economist at the J.C. Penney Co.

To get market share in todays' fiercely competitive market, retailers are increasingly turning to discounting and encouraging people to shop for bargains.

They are doing this partly in response to the price resistance and partly because overbuilding of shopping centers and malls has sharply increased retail outlets.

One major upshot is the rise of what retailers refer to as the "power mall" — the shopping center dominated by such warehouse-like operations as Toys "R" Us, Burlington Coat, Crazy Eddie's, Marshall's and other huge outlets, each carrying every conceivable toy or coat or variety of products in their specialty, at discounted prices.

"Value has become more important than convenience shopping," said John Riordan, executive director of the Shopping Center Council.

"I don't know whether this is because of consumer price resistance or is simply the result of a brilliant retail strategy."

In the view of many economists and executives, consumer price resistance appears to be the more important factor at present, preventing retailers from raising their average prices by more than 3 to 3.5 percent a year in recent years.

That is less than costs have risen, so profit margins have been squeezed.

Pre-tax income for the nation's retailers — adjusted for inventory gains or losses — fell to $21.6 billin last year from $24.4 billin in 1986, the Commerce Department reports.

"I get the impression that the retailer is under so much cost pressure that he is going to have to raise his prices whatever the consumer resistance," said Joel Popkin, an economic consultant in Washington.

If so, then apparel is an obvious candidate. Clothing prices go up anyway in March, when spring and summer fashions are introduced.

Another candidate for a rise is gasoline.

The average wholesale price for all grades rose by 6¼ cents from mid-December to mid-March, but the retail price went up by not quite 1¼ cents, according to the Lundberg servay.

The squeeze reduced profit margins for gasoline stations to less than 12 centa a gallon, their lowest level since 1985.

"The stations are trying to keep up profits and market share by pumping more volume," said Trilby Lundberg, "but that makes price increases harder to get."

For the last six months of 1988, nationwide sales of both new and existing homes ran at a steady annual rate of 4.4 million units, said George Christie, chief economist at McGraw-Hill Information Systems, which collects data on home prices and sales.

But since the beginning of the year, long-term mortgage rates have risen to 10.75 percent, on average, from 10.5 percent, and home prices are up an average of 3 percent.

In response, the annual home sales rate suddenly dipped in January and February to 4.2 million units.

been prevalent in recent months, and Mantell expects the trend continue for approximately the next five years while Midland's economy gets fully back on its feet.

Still, she notes, "Companies are still a little leery of Midland." She adds that she doesn't foresee any new construction in the new future.

In the meantime, Mantell says, "I'm pleased with occupancy rates, and I think the association as a whole is pleased also. I think we're on an even keel."

video and print media in newspapers, and for the collection and transmission of important medical results such as X-rays and computer tomographs," Cohen said.

He said he based his study on findings recently released by the American Electronics Association. According to the AEA study, a "strong" scenario represents a case in which 50 percent of the U.S. market for HDTV is controlled by U.S. companies. In a "weak" scenario only 10 percent of the U.S. market would be controlled by U.S. concerns.

Cohen said that with a strong HDTV base the U.S. personal computer industry would attain an estimated $176 billion in sales by 2010, in contrast to an expected $44 billion in sales with a weak HDTV sector.

In the semiconductor industry, sales would be $99 billion in a strong U.S. HDTV industry compared with $25 billion in a weak industry.

The trade imbalance in electronics could range from an estimated surplus of $10 billion under a strong HDTV program to a $227 billion deficit with a weak HDTV program, Cohen said.

In the employment area, the personal computer industry could have 588,000 employees in 2010 under a strong HDTV scenario, or 147,000 employees under a weak HDTV program, he said.

In all related industries, including HDTV receivers and VCRs, automated manufacturing equipment, personal computers and semiconductors, there could be nearly 1.1 million jobs under a strong scenario and 274,000 jobs under a weak program.

Cohen said spinoff employment from a strong HDTV program could create another 1.1 million jobs — even more if flat-screen display technology is used extensively in retailing, education or in automobile assembly.

MOMMY

Schwartz is president of Catalyst, a nonprofit New York group she founded in 1962. It works closely with businesses on issues concerning women, like finding women to serve on corporate boards and developing guidelines for maternity leave.

In an interview, she said the point of her article was to create more flexibility for women.

"The fact is that at this point in time," she said, "women do take a larger part of the responsibility for child-rearing.

Unless we acknowledge those differences and costs, we won't address the problems women face.

While women were still on somewhat shaky ground in the work force 10 years ago, at this point we can afford to expose the cost of hiring women.

"At first, employers are going to be shocked and they're going to say, 'Let's not employ women,' but then they're going to realize that's ridiculous, that they absolutely depend on women."

Her article argues that employers can make the most of their women in management by identifying two groups early: the "career primary" woman, who can be worked long hours, promoted, relocated and generally treated like a man; and the "career and family" woman, who is valuable to the company for her willingness to accept lower pay and little advancement in return for a flexible schedule that allow her to accommodate family needs.

Ellen Goodman, the syndicated columnist, wrote that while Schwartz's assertion that women in management cost more than men may cause a "collective gasp," it could also encourage a coming of age for working women and a new flexibility among employers in dealing with maternity and child care.

But Schroeder and others said Schwartz supplied little evidence to support her thesis. Indeed, the article mentioned only two studies, both by companies Schwartz said she would not name because of confidentiality.

One study, by a multinational corporation, found that the rate of turnover among the best women managers is two and a half times greater than among male managers of similar abilities. The other, by a "large producer of consumer goods," found that half the women who take maternity leave return to the job later than they promised or not at all.

"If this is such hot stuff, where's the documentation?" asked Schroeder. A member of the House Armed Services Committee, she added that the military has "studied women to death, hoping for a reason to get rid of them," but keeps finding "that the women are motivated and productive, and that after they have babies they get right back to work."

Fran Rodgers, the president of Work-Family Directions, a research and referral group in Massachusetts, said the best available data showed that more than 80 percent of women who take maternity leave do return to the job.

"What's so disturbing about Felice Schwartz's article," she said, "is that it is devoted to fitting women into the existing culture, instead of finding ways to change that culture.

"And this idea of dividing women into two groups, but completely ignoring the diversity among men, is just horrifying."

Many business people expressed admiration for the article. In a letter to Harvard Business Review, Richard Lewis, chairman of Corporate Annual Reports Inc., called it "a historical turning point in the discussion of women in business."

One of the few corporations to take issue with the Schwartz article was E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., whose chairman, Richard Heckert, is also chairman of the board of Catalyst. Du Pont noted that men are beginning to be involved in child-rearing.

"The Felice Schwartz article seems to say that family is still a women's problem and the way to fix it is to find women not having children," Faith Wohl, author of Du Pont's letter to The Review, who is director of the company's Work Force Partnering Division, said in an interview.

"There are two things wrong with that.

"First, it would perpetuate the situation now, with women at the upper levels mostly not having children, while their male colleagues do. That's a choice some women may want to make, but it's not a price they should have to pay for promotion. And second, we have found dramatic evidence that the men's attitudes toward work-family questions is very quickly coming to resemble women's."

In her letter, Wohl cited Du Pont's own study on work and family, conducted in 1985 and again in 1988. In just those three years, the study found, male employees had become significantly more troubled by problems like relocation, finding child care at the last minute and synchronizing their own vacations with school vacations. In some categories, the men were just as concerned about such things as the women.

Schwartz said she will soon be speaking out on the business advantages of providing more flexibility to men, too.

Seeking change for women has been her concern for years, she said, and now it seems to be happening.

"I tell business leaders that if they're requiring women to come back to work six weeks after they have a baby, they're getting a disabled person," she said.

"I'm trying to get them to see that it's cost-effective to let women come back on flexible schedules. They're analyzing that and saying, 'Yeah, why should we pay for down time?'"

Minium wage not for everyone

RUSSELLVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Around the bend from a field of grazing livestock, a dozen fast food restaurants compete for business along a few hundred yards of North Arkansas Road.

The commercial strip looks virtually identical to hundreds like it across the country. But things are far different here in the Arkansas River valley than along the nation's booming coasts.

These restaurants don't have to compete for workers and they are willing to work for the minimum wage.

Stephanie McConnell knows that firsthand.

"I'm not irreplaceable. Especially not here," said the worker at a Kentucky Fried Chicken in this town 70 miles northwest of Little Rock.

So does Mark Golden, who started working at a Kroger supermarket for $3.10 an hour — just before the last increase in the minimum wage to $3.35 an hour in 1981.

"I don't understand why it's been so long," Golden said in an interview last week. "The cost of living has gone up quite a bit."

The Democratic leadership of Congress and President Bush both support an increase, although they're bickering over the numbers. The House has endorsed raising it to $4.55 an hour by October 1991; Bush has said he will go no higher than $4.25 in January 1992. Debate resumes this week in the Senate.

The decision in Washington will have a far greater impact in Russellville, across Arkansas and throughout the Midwest and South than it does in the nation's capital.

A sign hanging in a downtown Washington sandwich shop promises $5 an hour to new workers; a minimum wage job there wouldn't find many takers.

McConnell didn't have any choice but to take a minimum wage job. Not if she wanted to work in Russellville.

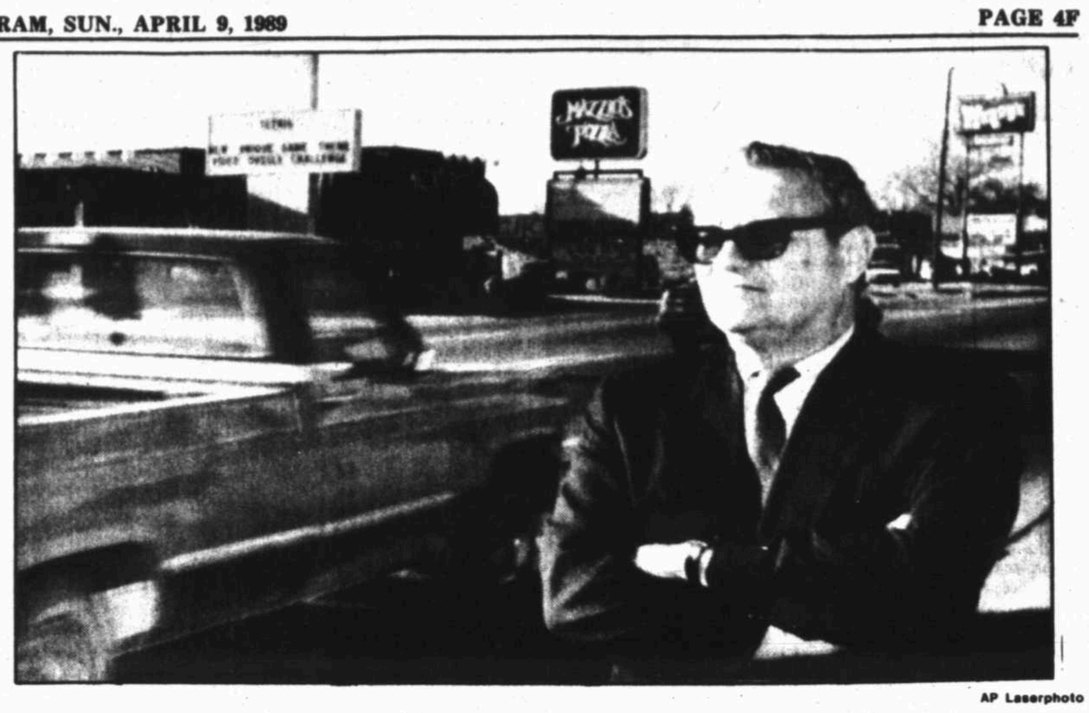

It's not that there aren't jobs in Russellville. Unemployment here is about 7 percent. It's higher throughout most of the state and 20 percent in one county. But most of the jobs here have low wages, increasing the impact of any change in the minimum wage.

McConnell started in November at Kentucky Fried Chicken. She's received two raises since and now makes $3.55. "It's so unfair" that new workers in other parts of the country are paid much more, McConnell says.

"It takes a little work, but we get by," she said.

Her husband's work for a pest control company generates about $250 a week in bring-home pay which she supplements with 21 hours a week at the restaurant while juggling classes at Arkansas Tech.

JOBLESS BENEFITS

American, union seek mediator

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A federal mediator will be appointed as early as next week to help negotiate a contract between American Airlines and its 21,000 union groundworkers, officials say.

Negotiators from American and the Transport Workers Union of America met in Fort Worth on Wednesday, but were unable to make progress in contract talks. The meeting was called following last week's overwhelming rejection by union members of the company's $610 million four-year contract offer.

American spokesman Jim Brown said after Wednesday's discussions the Fort Worth-based carrier determined "no purpose would be served by further meetings." Union officials then asked for federal mediation under the Railway Labor Act.

"We have requested the services of the National Mediation Board in order to fully comply with the provisions of the law," union officials said.

WAGES——

Down the street, the crew at the Burger King is paying close attention to the debate more than 800 miles away on Capitol Hill.

"They're all hoping it goes up and goes up soon," says Katherine Kastner, who has risen to assistant manager of the restaurant. "They talk about it constantly."

But she is worried. If they get their wish, some will get bigger checks; others might get fired.

"We'll probably have to go up a bit on prices and cut down on crew," Kastner said. Most of the workers are high school or college students; a handful are mothers who work part-time to bring in a little more money.

Bert Mullins shares Kastner's concern.

"We have a fairly large population of people who would be affected," said Mullins, president of the First National Bank of Russellville. "The minimum wage is very real here."

Indeed it is.

Mid-America, Land O'Lakes discuss consolidation

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Merging Mid-America Dairymen Inc. with the Minnesota-based Land O' Lakes cooperative would help achieve market security and long-term stability, according to Mid-America President Ivan Strickler.

"What both cooperatives need are ways to streamline our operations and reduce expenses so that we can maintain and improve returns to dairy producers," Strickler told Mid-America's annual delegate meeting Wednesday.

Strickler said a 22-member joint committee has met several times to work on consolidating the two cooperatives.

An opportunity to remember with The Lettermen

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The Filipino guards moved quickly. They grabbed the man running toward the entrance to the Marcoses' box at a theater in Manila, threw him up against the wall and pointed their rifles at his chin.

At that moment, the secured door they were guarding opened and Imelda Marcos waved them off their suspect, Lettermen member Tony Butala.

Durning the Lettermen's audience participation number, Butala jumped off the stage at the theater in the cultural center next to the Manila Hotel, and Mrs. Marcos' niece motioned for him to come up to the box.

"I went out the door, through the audience, went up the flight of stairs running with my cordless mike," he said in a telephone interview. "They just saw this man with a cordless mike which probably looked like a pistol. Most Filipinos understand English. These guys didn't understand anything."

"I was a little groggy, but I was honored — to feel the electricity, especially to be part of the adulation, not only for The Lettermen, but for her. These were the days she was revered as a saint. She did a lot of work, self sacrifice for that country.

Celebration of the Arts

"Creativity is so delicate a flower that praise tends to make it bloom, while discouragement often nips it in the bud. Any of us will put out more and better ideas, if our efforts are appreciated."

Arts Assembly of Midland is putting the final touches on this year's Celebration of the Arts. The annual event begins Tuesday and runs through May 14.

In celebration and appreciation of Midland's artistic community, Arts Assembly of Midland, for the sixth year, is sponsoring an annual Celebration of the Arts, which begins Tuesday and runs through May 14.

The Assembly is the local umbrella organization for the arts and acts as a clearinghouse for information related to the arts in terms of scheduling events and informing the community about the cultural scene.

Celebration of the Arts features performances and work by musical, visual and performing artists from the Permian Basin. Events during this time include those sponsored by the Assembly and those presented by member organizations and community-based groups.

This year's COA kicks off Tuesday at 8 p.m. with "An All Beethoven Evening" performed and presented by the Midland-Odessa Symphony at Lee High School, 3500 Neely Ave. The performance will be repeated Thursday at Odessa's Bonham Junior High.

Celebration season concludes May 14 with Ballet Midland's final performance of "Coppelia" at Theatre Midland and the Thouvenel String Quartet's fifth and final concert of the season at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

Other presenting organizations include Midland Community Theatre and ACT IX, Museum of the Southwest and Las Manos, Midland College and Casa de Amigos.

United Bank will sponsor the Preview Reception for COA's Festival Days in honor of Mary Griffith on May 5 from 6 to 8 p.m. at Midland Center. Food for the reception will be prepared by Chez Vous and entertainment will be provided by a mariachi group.

The Festival Days, organized by the Assembly as the primary focus of COA, are set for Saturday and Sunday, May 6-7.

"We're looking forward to enhancing a few of the areas this year," says Kathryn Baker Schorr, arts coordinator for the Assembly. "The visual arts areas traditionally have been open only to Midland artists. This year we've expanded that. We've invited artists from the Lubbock, Ruidoso and San Angelo areas, to name a few."

Of the 48 artists whose works are included in this year's Festival Days Exhibition at Midland Center, nine are from outside Midland. This marks the first time this exhibition has been open to non-local artists.

"We're always trying to make the celebration bigger and better," says Joanie Holt, chairman of COA and president of the Assembly's board of directors. "We wanted our citizens to be able to see and buy works by artists from different places as well as the fine art created by our Midland artists."

During festival weekend, a 5K "Run for the Arts" begins Saturday at 8:30 a.m. on Texas Avenue in front of the Midland Chamber of Commerce. A 5K walk will begin that same morning at 8:15 a.m., and, at 9:30 a.m., a one-mile children's run will start at the same location.

A Cinco de Mayo Parade will be held that morning beginning at 10 a.m.

In addition, COA's festival features continuous live entertainment, food booths and a children's activity area.

"We have a stronger lineup of performing artists than we have ever had," Mrs. Schorr says, citing as examples The Shades and a performance of "Alice in Wonderland" by the Pickwick Players, MCT's youth performing troupe.

The festival is held from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. May 6 and from noon to 5 p.m. May 7 at Midland Center, Centennial Plaza and the courthouse lawn. Admission will be $2 for adults, $1 for children 12 and older and free to those under 12.

"We're going to have so much more for children to do," Mrs. Schorr says. "We've having a student's art exhibit that's being coordinated by Grace Osadchuk, who is the arts coordinator for the school district. And so we hope to have children of every age level exhibiting work, and of those students, some will be selling their work, and some won't."

Shelton dreams of platinum records

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Shelton — the Country Music Association's 1988 Horizon Award winner, the Academy of Country Music's Best New Male Vocalist and a platinum-selling recording artist — works hard to make his life what he wants it to be.

"I got nominated for 18 awards this year," he said in a recent telephone interview. "I'm flattered to the first degree. It makes me feel real good; it makes anybody feel good be nominated. I don't dwell on whether I win or not. I have no control over it. If you're going to worry about something, you need to worry about how well you and your people do on the road."

Shelton's road leads to Midland Chaparral Center Friday to open for Reba McEntire at an 8 p.m. concert. The rate of ticket sales indicates the concert will be sold out. Tickets may be purchased at Endless Horizons and Chaparral Center.

Although Shelton's rise to stardom appears to be overnight, he's been singing and playing for 20 years. His style reflects the influence of not just one artist or one type of music, but all the great country music artists.

Shelton grew up in Grit, Va., a town of 500 to 1,000 residents, where he was singing gospel music in the local church by the time he was 3 years old.

"I grew up on gospel. When I got into grammar school, the other kids were listening to rock 'n' roll. I'm talking about real rock 'n' roll — late 50s, early 60s."

He might have been a rock 'n' roll singer, except his older brother, Ronnie, lured him into country music and his band with a bait that no 14-year-old boy can refuse.

"I'd been playing a guitar for about four or five years," Shelton recalls. "He said, if I'd go with them, he'd let me drive his car." He pauses and adds, "In 1964, I became interested in country music."

Ricky Van Shelton

Shelton considers his professional life began when he got a contract with CBS Records.

"I had played in clubs, but that don't make you a professional. I'd been playing all my life, but you're not a professional until you get on the radio and until you get a record contract. When you work at a job somewhere and play on the side, that's not professional."

He's had many jobs.

"You just pick one. Name anything, and I've done it. I was a jack of all trades. I did anything I could do to make a dollar."

His wife, Bettye, played a major role in his success story. She accepted a job in Nashville and offered to support him so he could devote his time to pursuing a career in country music.

Then she convinced one of her co-workers to play Ricky's tape for her husband, Nashville newspaper columnist Jerry Thompson. Thompson took the tape to a CBS Records executive. A showcase was arranged at a Nashville restaurant and producer Steve Buckingham attended. Within two weeks, Shelton was in a recording studio working on his debut album, "Wild-Eyed Dream," which was released in June 1987.

"All the money in the world can't buy" the position he finds himself in today, says Shelton, who has released his second album, "Loving Proof," and is working on his first Christmas album.

In addition to hard work, the cost includes gaining the interest of a record company.

"It takes a big record company that has a lot of power on radio stations," he says. "It takes a song radio stations like so they'll play it. Then, it takes the fans listening."

The uppermost thought in mind in choosing a song to record is "Will radio like this song? That's the golden rule. You really have to be aware of what radio likes and don't like. Forget what you like."

Shelton doesn't do "anything I'm not comfortable with doing. But, there are songs I would like to do, but I know radio don't like and I won't do them on the album."

A dream Shelton has is to someday record an album filled with the songs he wants to record. Some he has written himself. And he has recorded two songs he has co-written.

"One of these days when I'm completely established, I'll do an album of all my songs, and not for anybody but me. If CBS likes it that's fine. If radio likes it, that's wonderful. But if nobody likes it, that's fine. I'll satisfy my artistic drive. It means something to you to have it. It'll be just for me."

He advises young people wanting to break into this business that, "If you think you have the talent and you have the desire and you're willing to give up a lot of things and make the sacrifices, then go for it.

"You miss your home and your family and your friends, and you won't have time to go fishing and hunting .

LETTERMEN

When she and Ferdinand took that country, there were 19 or 20 different dialects — everyone wanted their group to rule the country. It took someone as strong as Marcos to unify the country as much as he did. It was too bad in latter years that there was some negativity attached to it.

"But, in those days, they almost adored her as if she were a superhuman being, a queen. I had goose bumps everywhere on my body. She hugged me. I hugged her. Some photographer jumped up on the stage and took a shot of her which appeared on the front page of all the newspapers in Philippines the next day."

The Lettermen's popularity and the group's first tour to the Philippines in the late 1960s was due to Butala meeting then-President Ferdinand and Mrs. Marcos earlier that year when the trio was performing at San Francisco's Fairmont Hotel.

As a child, Butala was a member of Bob Mitchell's boys choir, where he had learned to sing in 21 languages, one of them being Tagalog, the language of the people of the Manila area of the Philippines. On the "spur of the moment," Butala went into the crowd that night and sang in Tagalog "Da Hilsaiyo (Because of You)" to the Philippines first lady.

"She made me promise I would record 'Da Hilsaiyo' with The Lettermen, and also I would bring my group over to the Philippines," Butala says.

By the time The Lettermen arrived in the Philippines six months later, they had five records in the Top 10 and "Da Hilsaiyo" was No. 1.

The Lettermen's first hit was the 1961 release "The Way You Look Tonight." The group's other recordings include "When I Fall in Love," "Come Back Silly Girl," "Theme from a Summer Place," "Goin' Out of My Head," "Can't Take My Eyes Off of You," Put Your Head on My Shoulder," "Hurt So Bad" and "Shangri-La."

Midlanders willl have a chance to hear these songs and others when The Opportunity Center auxiliary present The Lettermen in "An Opportunity to Remember" at 7 p.m. Friday at Midland Center, 105 N. Main St.

The evening includes hors d'oeuvres, cocktails, dinner and a silent auction. Admission to the black-tie event is $100 per couple.

Proceeds from the local event will assist the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens in constructing the Chris Davidson Opportunity Park, a recreational area for the handicapped.

For more information or to receive an invitation call Sheri Brockett, 694-4452, or Ann Bates, 699-5868.

Butala has fond memories of the group's numerous tours of the Orient, recalling that The Lettermen were an even bigger act there than in the United States.

"We were like the Beatles in Hong Kong and Japan. It was a tremendous experience. We were more popular over there than we have been over here."

The success of The Lettermen in Japan was due to Kingii Ogino, an executive with Toshiba Records, which is owned by Capitol Records, the Lettermen's label for 20 years.

In 1967, Ogino heard a Lettermen recording of Brian Hyland's "Sealed with a Kiss" and released it in Japan. The record became "a monstrous hit." Then, Ogino chose The Lettermen's version of Bobby Vinton's "Mr. Lonely" to release and scored again.

"It was unbelievable," Butala recalls. "We started getting calls to come over to Japan because of these two tunes."

What Butala finds "amazing" is that between 1968 and 1978, all 25 hit records The Lettermen had in the United States between 1961 and 1974 became "smash hit records in Japan" in addition to seven or eight other records which were hits in Japan but not in the United States.

"That's a lot of hit records in 10 years," Butala says.

He attributes the success of The Lettermen in the Orient to the strength of oriental families and says The Lettermen's music was a "good alternative for the kids of the Orient to the Beatles."

He recalls "it was a very gentle time" in Japan during the group's tours there in the late 1960s and 1970s.

"Now, when we go over there, we see the American influence of rock music and bands. Lately, in the hotel lobbies, we've seen groupies, purple and green hair, the drug influences. But, that's just a generalization of my viewpoint. It seems a shame that that has crept into Japanese society. It was so pristine, so noble, when we first went over there."

The Lettermen, who are currently working on their 56th album, have had 25 hit single records, 14 gold albums and have sold over $20 million worth of records.

Butala, the only original member of The Lettermen still singing in the group, has no regrets — almost.

"Maybe to do more original songs in the '60s. But, we were kind of forced to stay with the standards by what the public seemed to want. I think it would have opened the market in the middle '70s a little more to the kids. Our albums sold great, but the singles dried up."

The group performs between 175 to 200 dates a year and has recently released a single, "All I Ask of You," from "Phantom of the Opera," and is in the process of doing the unheard of — recording an original tune.

"I think the AIDS virus and herpes have squelched the sex revolution," Butala says. "It's not just 'Hello, how are you, let's jump in the sack.' I have four children, and my son is 19 and in his second year of college. He and I have had a lot of talks. He's very concerned about diseases. In relationships, he's like I was — stressing the romantic things to do."

Born in a five-room house in Sharon, a coal mining town in western Pennsylvania, Butala was the eighth of 11 children.

"We didn't have plumbing in our house until I was 5 years old. I'm exactly the same age that Jack Benny was when he started telling everybody he was 39," Butala says.

"We were so poor. It was right around the wartime. We were born in our house, not born in a hospital. I slept in the same bed with three brothers until I was 10, in the same bedroom where Mother and Dad slept."

When Butala was 6-years-old, he began singing. He first sang for free, and then as the requests for his vocal expertise grew, his mother began charging, first $5, then $10 and then $15 for his services.

He auditioned for radio station KDKA in Pittsburgh, the "first radio station in the nation to do commercial broadcasting" and secured a place on "The Starlets on Parade" radio show broadcast on Saturday mornings.

By the time he was 10, he "had a pretty good reputation.

"My dad never made more than $60 a week working for Westinghouse Electric, in the big transformer division," Butala says. "I was making, in two or three gigs on a weekend, $40 or $50, singing. In a poor family, that comes in handy."

His mother, Mary, the eldest of 16 children, was a practical nurse. Her cousin, Mary Burke, was living at Hawthorne, Calif., outside of Los Angeles, with her six children while her husband was out of the country working for an oil company.

"If it weren't for Mary Burke, I wouldn't be where I am today," Butala says. "If she hadn't gotten pneumonia and was flat on her back with six kids and the oldest about 13 or 14 and sent a desperate telegram to my mother, saying 'Please come out and help me until I get on my feet,' I wouldn't have made it to California."

Butala and his mother packed a basket of deviled ham sandwiches and fruit and took the train to California. Within two weeks, Butala was accepted into the Mitchell Boys Choir.

"Thirty days from the time I left Sharon, Pa., and a five-room house, sleeping with my three brothers, I was on the sound stage of Warner Brothers studio making a motion picture called 'On Moonlight Bay' that stared Gordon McRae and Doris Day. That's how drastic my life changed in 30 days."

SHELTON

"It's a heartbreaking business and a whole lot more work than you dream about. It's something you have to experience to understand. There are not enough hours in the day to do what you have to do. You're gone constantly. You're not getting enough sleep. You're eating junk food all the time."

He pauses and adds, "I like to fish, but I don't have time to."

He knows that "miles" and "hours" go with the business.

"It aint' hard to deal with," Shelton says. "It's something, when you get into this business, you accept it or you're in the wrong business."

He feels fortunate to have a "real good crew" and "good people in the band" who "don't do drugs" and "drink very little."

He doesn't refer to his performances as shows.

"Actually, I don't have a show. We get up there, and we play the songs, and me and the band have a real good time playing the songs and singing and picking. We have a good time, the crowd has a good time, and they go home, and I hit the road."

He's never wanted to do anything else.

"I want people to realize that I'm not there to impress anybody. I'm there because I love country music. I love what I do. I've had a whole lot of hard jobs I didn't like. It's a wonderful, wonderful feeling to do what you like to do."

"If I have a wall full of platinum albums, it says everything. It'll mean I'm very, extremely successful. I'll be able to succeed in every way, shape and form. I'll be able to go anywhere I want to, do anything I want to — it means everything. It would take forever to describe it — use your imagination."

ARTS

During the last festival day, the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is hosting "Nouveau-/Deco" featuring the "Erte and His Contemporaries" exhibition and James Cramer and Friends Dance Co. Showtime is 3 p.m. on the museum grounds.

The Scartaglen Irish Touring Group — an American performing troupe — had a cancellation in a national tour, Mrs. Schorr says. "They heard about Celebration of the Arts, called and asked if we would be interested, and we said, 'Yes.'"

Then, a traditional COA event, Gourmet Midland, chaired this year by Lisa Wagner, is set for Thursday, May 11, from 6 to 9:30 p.m. at Midland Center. The food-tasting event will feature local restaurants serving their specialities in a carnival atmosphere.

REVIEWS

'Sing' seems like TV music video

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

When rock singer Bobby Brown was arrested for suggestive movements in his act in Columbus, Ga., he missed his calling. He should have saved his energy for the film "Sing."

Salcedo

A conglomeration of "Flashdance," "Dirty Dancing," "Fame" and "Saturday Night Fever," "Sing" is reminiscent of all the earlier films without having an identity of its own. In fact, it comes as a surprise that the film was named "Sing" instead of "Dance," since there are no stellar solo singing numbers.

The film focuses on "Sing," an annual talent event in a Brooklyn high school. The event is in danger of being cancelled because the school, which is located in a slum area, is about to be closed down. Surprisingly, the students fear losing their talent show more than losing their school.

It's up to a feisty teacher (Lorraine Bracco) and the student Sing leaders — preppy Hannah (Jessica Steen) and street-tough Dominic (Peter Dobson) — to see that the show goes on. It's the kind of thing you would expect from Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland ("Come on kids, let's put on a show!").

Many dancing numbers ensue in between a subplot involving the love-hate relationship between Dominic and Hannah. Unfortunately, wooden performances mar their moments together and slow the film to a snail's pace.

However, Rachael Sweet as Cecilia, a pushy Italian girl, manages to stand out in the crowd. She has a Minnie Mouse voice and pasty white skin. Cecilia appears to be one of the no-talents cast in "Sing" because of a manipulating stage mother and demanding boyfriend. Her boyfriend says, "I want a vehicle for Cecilia." One of the talent coordinators answers, "You want a vehicle, put her under a bus."

But in a cabaret-style number, Cecilia outshines the competition. Her supporting character becomes more interesting than that of the leading lady, who is in dire need of acting lessons. Another bright spot belongs to an unknown who does a delightfully bad rendition of Madonna's "Like a Virgin."

Louise "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" Lasser appears very tired as Hannah's mother. She has also ballooned up to a nearly unrecognizable weight and merely goes through the motions of her role.

Despite the occasional mis-casting, the dancing in "Sing" is fun to watch, thanks to choreographer Ottis Sallid, who also choreographed Spike Lee's "School Daze." Some of the suggestive movements, however, make the dance moves in "Dirty Dancing" seem as tame as the Hokey Pokey in comparison. (Though the movements in "Sing" still have nothing on Prince's gyrations.)

One of the most interesting elements is Cecilia's Italian family, shown in bits and pieces. Italian Americans are in, thanks to "Moonstruck," "Cousins" and "Married to the Mob." One wonders if the film would have been better if it had focused on Cecilia, and her ethnic family.

"Sing" was directed by Richard Baskin, who does a much better job with musical sequences than he does with anything else. At their best, though, these musical numbers offer little more music television videos. One serious dance number, shot in blue light, becomes laughable, because the number is totally unsuited for the teacher dancing it.

Even though Patti LaBelle whips the students into a frenzy with, "Let's get somethin' straight: we're either gonna make history or we're gonna be history," the film never attains the energy it should. And when one student says, "But at least we know — we'll always know — just how good it can be, because we've lived it!" it doesn't attain the jubilation of "Footloose."

"Sing" rates 2½ rigs.

"Sing," rated PG-13 for sexually suggestive dancing and strong language, is playing at the UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert Avenue.

'Dream Team' humor inconsistent

"The Dream Team," is not a team of dreamers, but rather a gang of "loonies." The first hint of the film's intent comes in the credits, where a patient in a mental hospital is seen playing "Dream a Little Dream of Me" on an accordion.

Soon pathological liar Michael Keaton wanders around the New Jersey psychiatric hospital rounding up the other members of his therapy group. They include Peter Boyle, a man with a messiah complex; the painfully fastidious control freak Christopher Lloyd; and schizoid Stephen Furst, who can't speak in anything but baseball lingo.

What follows is a sitcom version of "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest." The group's biggest problem is keeping together and keeping Boyle from stripping while in the throes of religious passion.

"We are all naked in the eyes of the Lord," Boyle explains while blessing fellow patients and spouting Biblical passages at every opportunity.

Keaton is always funny, but the only actor who exhibits the right amount of lunacy and restraint for the role is Lloyd. He is a patient who believes he is a doctor, a tired joke, that Lloyd transcends.

The members of "The Dream Team" do have their moments. When Keaton announces that they will operate under the buddy system, Lloyd says, "I don't fraternize with patients," and Boyle adds, "I didn't have any buddies when I was on the cross."

There is also a wonderfully spirited version of "Hit the Road, Jack" sung by the group. Keaton tells a great ghost story to the happy campers and Boyle interrupts a Baptist revival. But none of the scenes are taken far enough. Director Howard "Private Benjamin" Zeiff lacks the necessary lunacy to make "The Dream Team" a real farce. However, "The Dream Team" has plenty of laughs for your money and Keaton shines as the ringleader of the goon squad.

The film also has one of the best movie lines this year: "Stay out of my psychosis." It just would have been better if the humor would have been consistent.

"The Dream Team" rates 2½ rigs.

GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE

Sold out show breaks tots' hearts

Some tots were brokenhearted this week when "Sesame Street Live!" sold out Tuesday night at 6 p.m. and they were left on the outside looking in.

Temple

When I attended the production Wednesday afternoon, Mike Stevens, director of the center, told me, "We had crying kids, unhappy adults. We sold every possible seat we had. I felt sorry for them."

Some could not come to the next day's matinee. Others could not afford Wednesday night's ticket admission — $9 for adults and $7.50 for kids. Tuesday night the show cost $5 per person for those who had coupons from Dairy Queen.

This marks the fifth year Sesame Street Live! has come to Chaparral Center. When the show closed, more seats had been sold in three performances than in five shows the first years and four last year. Maximum house for Sesame Street is 4,000. In all, 9,000 seats sold.

Those attending the show when I was there didn't seem disappointed. The laughter of young people filled the center as Big Bird and his cohorts-in-comedy entertained them.

Laughter also accompanies Neil Simon productions. Certainly, once the cast relaxed, Midland Community Theatre's opening night audience, chuckled its way through "I Ought to be in Pictures."

Cast members Buster Tieman, Pam Lester and Flo Hughes, do justice to Simon's comedy about relationships.

Simon's work often reminds me of a souffle — light and airy, without much substance. That does not mean I don't find his one liners funny and the situations he creates humorous. Often, I do.

The living arrangement and family relations the characters in "Pictures" find themselves in when juxtaposed against the traditional ideas of family create a comedy in which most can find something with which they identify.

And, that is part of Simon's charm. He presents us with lines we wish we had said in situations which are somewhat familiar, while making us grateful we are not in that specific predicament.

Who would want to be Herb — a writer faced with writer's block who wakes up one morning to find his 19-year-old daughter, whom he hasn't seen in 16 years, on his doorstep? She's hitchhiked, hiked and ridden the bus from New York to his shabby abode in sunny California, a state which holds little appeal for him. Herb hates the sun.

Perhaps Herb needs to meet Parris Afton Bonds, co-founder of Romance Writers of America and a romance novelist who has published 25 books in 11 years. Ms. Bonds is conducting a romance novel workshop at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Blakemore Planetarium. Since Herb's not a member of Texas Press Women, he'd have to play $10 to attend, but that's a small price when a career is at stake.

Herb's daughter, Libby, has come to California to seek a career as a movie actress. Or has she?

For those living through the situations Simon creates onstage, he shows them how to laugh about them. Seldom does he go much further.

Opening night, the second act moved faster than the first. It took time for me to believe the characters. Once I did, I enjoyed the show. Dave Layman's splendid set, particularly the backdrop, has pizazz.

Final curtain for this production, which is directed by Don Bachmann, MCT's executive director, is Saturday. For reservations call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Opening night for Twin Cities Speedway found a capacity crowd watching local races and the Texas International Drivers Association's first race of the 1989 season.

Since the installation of additional barricades around the three-eighths mile asphalt oval track, most wrecks, and there were a number, occurred on the inside of the track.

During the season, the speedway features cars races — including spectator drags — on Friday nights as well as special shows on other nights. Coming up June 3 is a National Demolition Derby, sponsored by the Midland Suburban Lions Club.

'To Kill A Mockingbird' Peck's favorite role

By SUSAN PAYNTER
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — Gregory Peck typecast as a classic villain? Perish the thought.

"It came as no surprise...that I was no longer the bouncing, young romantic leading man..."
— Gregory Peck

Peck

But it might have been. Who knows how Peck would have matured had he been cast in a late 1940s movie as a cackling maniac who pushes an old wheelchair-bound lady down three flights of stairs?

But Richard Widmark got the part. And instead of winning early fame as a gangster in "Kiss of Death," Peck's gangling good looks, resonant voice and compassionate gaze aimed him almost unerringly toward a steady string of image-shaping good guys:

- A missionary priest in "Keys of the Kingdom" (Peck's first big film);
- A heroic yet human flight commander in "Twelve O'Clock High";
- An opponent of anti-Semitism in "Gentleman's Agreement" and of racist stupidity in "To Kill a Mockingbird" (his favorite role);
- A strong yet tender father in "The Yearling," and a man renouncing violence for the sake of his son in "The Gunfighter" (his favorite western).

Peck has been back in the news lately. His first film in some years, "The Old Gringo," will be released soon. And last month, the American Film Institute honored him with its "Lifetime Achievement Award." Of course, Peck didn't always wear a white hat. And he may have played things a little bawdy around the edges in "Duel in the Sun," which he likes to call "Lust in the Dust."

"It was an enormous hit but also kind of a joke," Peck said in a recent interview in Los Angeles. "(Director David O.) Selznick had a lot of mischief in his makeup," Peck said. "Jennifer Jones had played 'St. Bernadette' and I had played the idealistic young priest in 'The Keys of the Kingdom' and I think David got a charge out of putting these two saintly characters in a very raunchy western."

Still, Peck has always played probity with more ease than evil. He seemed to work against the grain as the revenge-maddened Capt. Ahab in "Moby Dick." Peck didn't attempt another villain until 1978's "The Boys From Brazil."

Goodness may have been thrust upon him along with the costumes. Or it have already been bobbing in Peck's gene pool. There were signs of a liberal social conscience as early as his 1930s college days at Berkeley. More recently, Peck worked for free to play a president turned against nuclear war by a child in the 1987 film "Amazing Grace and Chuck."

Today, Peck seems reassuringly like Atticus Finch, the kindly and principled lawyer he portrayed in the 1962 hit, "To Kill a Mockingbird," which won him an Academy Award. Even when cameras weren't rolling, Peck is said to have welcomed "Scout" and "Jem," his movie children, to come and sit in his lap for a story or a nap on the set.

Twenty-seven years later, Peck and Mary Badham, who played "Scout," still keep in touch at Christmas.

"Mockingbird" still brings Peck the most mail and the most satisfaction. Kids watch it in their junior high school civics classes and send him their essays.

"I've probably got a couple thousand of those tucked away," Peck said. "They're shocked that a black man falsely accused of rape had practically no chance of acquittal in that day and age and part of the South."

He hopes some of those kids grow up with a "slightly different slant on civil rights, racial intolerance, and the importance of trust and love between members of a family." A few of those kids tell Peck they became attorneys because of Atticus, hoping to bring a little decency to the practice of law.

The course of Peck's long career hasn't always run smoothly. After a series of late '60s westerns, Peck didn't work much until "The Omen" (1976), "MacArthur" (1977) and "The Boys From Brazil" (1978). He speaks philosophically of those years now.

"It came as no surprise to me that I was no longer the bouncing, young romantic leading man. I always knew it would happen," Peck said.

Soon the 72-year-old Peck will be back on the big screen in "The Old Gringo," co-starring Jane Fonda and Jimmy Smits.

"Things have been livelier the last year than they were for quite a while," Peck said. "I may have made my last picture. If I have, that's OK with me. On the other hand, I may wait a year or two, get even more mellow than I am now, and another good part may come along."

Meistersingers will do 'German Requiem'

The Permian Basin Meistersingers will present Brahms' masterpiece, "A German Requiem," at 8 p.m. April 18 at St. Ann's Cathloic Church, 204 N. M St.

Newsom

Priebe

Laney

This work was in Brahms' thoughts for 15 years, but it was the death of his mother in 1865 which set him to work in earnest. Completed and performed in 1868, this requiem has become a mainstay of choruses aroudn the world.

The PBM will be joined by members of the Midland-Odessa Symphony, directed by Dr. William Lucas. Soloists are sopranos Beverly Newsom and Pam Priebe and bass-baritone Tom Laney.

Ms. Newsom received a bachelor of music education degree from Texas Christian University where she studied with Ira Schantz and Ronald Shirey. More recently she has done masters work at Texas Tech University where she studied with Sue Arnold.

Ms. Newsom has sung leads in "The Sound of Music," "Bye Bye Birdie," "Lil' Abner," "Merry Widow" and "The Student Prince." She also has done solo work in Handel's "Messiah," Haydn's "Lord Nelson Mass," Mozart's "Missa Brevis," Bach's "Magnificat," Brahms' "Liebeslieder Waltzes" and Saint-Saens' "Christmas Oratorio."

Ms. Priebe moved to Midland over three years ago from Dallas, where she sang with the Dallas Symphony Chorus under the direction of Dr. Ron Shirey. Since coming to Midland, she has sung with the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale, performing several solos in Honegger's "King David," under guest director Robert Page.

In addition, Ms. Priebe had the lead role in Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas" during the 1987-88.

Ms. Priebe has performed with the University Singers and is a member of the PBM. She is a student of Lucas.

Laney began studying voice in 1971 while a student at Millikin University, Decatur, Ill. At Millikin, he sang leading roles in, among others, Rossini's "Barber of Seville," Puccini's "Gianni Schicchi" and Weill's "Street Scene." While pursuing his master's degree in music in Nashville, Laney was a featured soloist with the Nashville Symphony Chorus and the Scarritt College Chamber Singers.

Since 1983, he has been a frequent soloist with the MOSC and the UT Permian basin University Singers. He now serves both organizations as assistant conductor.

The performance is free. The public is invited to attend.

New Doctors Discovery
Weight Loss Pill Approved for U.S. Gov't. Patent
'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight Already Sweeping U.S.

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)— An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" you steady fat loss and calorie reduction by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

The U.S. government has just approved the doctors claims for a hard-to-get patent that confirms "there has never been anything like their fat-bonding pill process before." It is a totally new major scientific breakthrough and is revolutionizing the weight loss industry.

You Can "Eat Normally"

Best of all, "you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire without exercising".

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat

According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, "the new fat-bonding process is a "lazy way" to lose weight because the pills alone "automatically" reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public

If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W841, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date, and signature.) For fastest service for credit card orders ONLY call anytime 24 hours, toll free 1(800) 527-9700, ext. W841.

A project of the Midland Arts Assembly

Trinity church concert to dedicate organ

The second in a series of three dedicatory recitals for the new pipe organ console and trumpet pipes at the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity, 1412 W. Illinois Ave., will be held at 3 p.m. today.

Performing in the recital are Daryl Knapp, the church's organist and choirmaster, and flutist Cynthia Whitman.

Two works which were commissioned especially for this concert feature the flute and organ in a collection of hymn-preludes entitled "Lenten Prelude" and "Easter Prelude," the composer, Charles Callahan, is on the faculty of Middlebury College in Vermont.

A native of Minnesota, Miss Whitman began her flute studies at the Kansas City Conservatory. She returned to Minnesota and obtained a bachelor of arts degree, followed by graduate studies in Los Angeles with Roger Stevens, professor at the University of Southern California.

In 1982, Miss Whitman received a grant for study in Paris from the Harriet Hale Woolley Foundation and an invitation to study with Michel Debost, the world renowned flautist of the Paris Conservatory and the Orchestre de Paris. Debost has said of her, "Cynthia Whitman is a gifted flutist with a lively musical imagination."

In 1988, Miss Whitman won first prize and acclaim from Yehundi Menuhin and the Foundation Menuhin. Menuhin has said of her, "Miss Whitman has a captivating presence and a beautiful silvery sound."

Miss Whitman has premiered the music of today's leading composers while maintaining her devotion to the standard flute repertory. She has performed in Europe, North Africa and the United states.

Only 10 men can make grille for Rolls-Royce

Only 10 men in the world can make the Rolls-Royce radiator grille, which is crafted entirely by hand. In order to appear perfectly straight, each column is slightly bowed, using a pinciple called entasis, utilized also in the design of the Parthenon. Each grille bears the interlinked Rolls-Royce badge and, at the back, a second set of initials — the signature of the individual craftsman who made it.

'YOUNG READER' REVIEW

"Solomon Leviathan's Nine-Hundred-and-Thirty-First Trip Around the World" is a far-fetched tale of two animal friends — an intellectual giraffe and a boa constrictor. Both are philosophers and they set out to sea in search of the horizon. Soon, however, they are swallowed by a whale named Solomon Leviathan.

It's no surprise, is it, that this is the same ancient whale who swallowed Jonah and Pinocchio long, long, ago? The philosophers are more than dismayed when Solomon admits he has swum around the world 930 times and has never yet reached the horizon.

They meet an elephant in India which informs them that the horizon doesn't exist, but they decide to steam ahead just the same. As the story ends, the trio is still continuing its elusive pursuit, with the giraffe and boa constrictor reciting runes and odes and the whale telling tales of history.

Language in "Solomon" — written by Ursula K. Le Guin for children in grades one through five — is rich and metaphorical, but there are almost too many historical references to appeal to the really young.

South	West	North	East

3 ♡	Dbl	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣

One of the features that distinguishes duplicate from rubber bridge is you have to make a lot of close doubles at the former. Doubling is easy enough—beating the contract is not always that simple.

South's bid of three hearts was, perhaps, a little aggressive. However, the vulnerability was in his favor and, since he was not sure of defeating three clubs, going down one, doubled, in either major at the three-level rated to score better (by a minuscule margin of, perhaps, 10 points!) than allowing the opponents to play the contract.

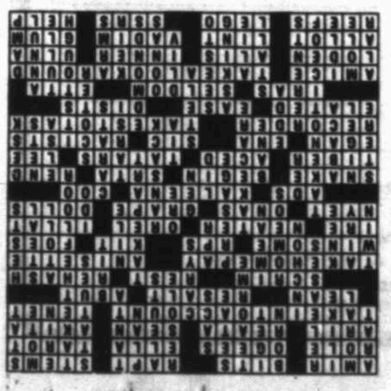

It might seem declarer was going to lose two club tricks and a trick in each other suit, but that's not how the play developed. West took the first two tricks with top clubs, then shifted to his singleton diamond, covered by the queen and king and won in the closed hand with the ace. Now declarer casually led his low trump and West, caught up in the rhythm of the play, routinely followed low. He received no second chance.

Dummy's ten won the trick, the queen of spades was led and, when East did not cover, declarer rose with the ace, cashed the ace of trumps and exited with a spade. West's king won, but he was snared in an endplay.

A club return would be ruffed in dummy while declarer discarded his losing diamond. And a trump return would give up the defense's trick in that suit. And all this travail could have been avoided by winning the queen of trumps at the first opportunity.
