Aspiring citizens honored

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A graduation ceremony for about 450 foreigners eligible to become permanent U.S. residents took top billing at Midland College's Chaparral Center Wednesday night.

Cindy Turland, director of the college's Adult Learning Center, said the ceremony was to acknowledge the accomplishments of those eligible legalized aliens who have satisfied the requirements of the U.S. Immigration Reform and Control Act, which was passed by Congress in 1986.

In becoming permanent legal residents, the graduates are but a step away from becoming U.S. citizens, Ms. Turland said.

The purpose of the ceremony itself is to present each student with a certificate of satisfactory pursuit, which is required by the federal government.

"This is our first class, and we've had such a great turnout and success. We've had a tremendous group of people, and we felt that this should be something that would acknowledge their accomplishments," Ms. Turland said.

$10.7 million in hospital bonds to be issued

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The hospital district will issue $10.7 million in revenue bonds to fund its purchase of Clearview Hospital and make capital improvements in other existing facilities, officials announced Wednesday.

A spending breakdown was illustrated on a Midland County Hospital District preliminary financing plan:

- $5.1 million — purchase of Clearview, an alcohol and drug abuse treatment facility;
- $2 million — renovation of the Midland Memorial Hospital Education Annex building;
- $2.4 million — purchase of new equipment for the hospital;
- $951,600 — reserve fund;
- $215,300 — costs of issuing the bonds;
- $109,100 — costs of insuring the bonds.

The district plans to pay for the bonds with revenue generated from Clearview and Midland Memorial over the next 20 years, officials said.

Tax revenues will not be spent on financing the bonds, officials stressed. The bonds will carry an average interest rate of 7.5 percent.

Dale Henderson, a Rauscher Pierce Refsnes representative, explained Wednesday the district likely would pay only interest through 1999 and pay off the principal prior to 2009.

The bonds will be limited for distribution to a small number of institutional investors only, he added.

Henderson did not have a commitment for bond insurance as of Wednesday. According to the district's preliminary financing plan, if insurance is unavailable, Rauscher Pierce will request letters of credit security from banking institutions.

"It's not a burden the hospital can't live with," said Gene Abbott, president of the hospital district board of directors. "It's well within its budget."

The hospital district bought Clearview on Dec. 30, 1988. Financing for the purchase was arranged on an interim basis with First City National Bank. That balance is to be paid off with funds from the revenue bond issuance.

The hospital will house in the renovated education annex a magnetic resonance imaging machine, a piece of equipment which takes highly specific pictures of the human body. Other medical programs will be headquartered in the new building, as well, officials have said.

In other hospital district business Wednesday, directors explained how Clearview would fit into the operations of the MCHD.

Clearview will be classified as a free-standing department of Midland Memorial, but will have its own 12-member board of directors.

The board will consist of four people to be appointed by the Midland Memorial Foundation, one board member will be appointed by the hospital district and seven members will be comprised of community leaders.

The chairman and vice chairman of the Clearview Board of Directors will by appointed by the Midland Memorial Foundation and any other officers will be appointed by the Clearview board members.

Panel delays vote on Tower

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee said today the panel has postponed an expected vote on the nomination of Defense Secretary-designate John Tower, and another senator said additional meetings with the FBI were planned.

Tower, a onetime chairman of the committee, had appeared headed for confirmation after telling his former colleagues on Wednesday that he had no alcohol problem and would not be swayed by past business ties with defense contractors.

But Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., while chairing a hearing on the Savannah River nuclear reactor, announced that the committee will not vote today on Tower's nomination. He did not indicate when the panel might be polled.

The committee's ranking Republican, Sen. John Warner of Virginia, said additional meetings with the FBI were planned.

It was not learned immediately what the discussions involved.

Nunn had said Wednesday he expected the panel to vote today to recommend that the Senate confirm Tower's nomination. Although the hearings for Tower have lasted longer than those of other nominees to President Bush's Cabinet, the senators have treated him politely.

Williams 'studying' political run

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Midland oilman Clayton W. Williams Jr. says he is still "studying hard" whether or not to run for governor of Texas in 1990, but will make up his mind soon.

Williams

"Anyone who knows me, knows I will not let this drag on too long," said Williams.

Speaking to the Midland Downtown Lions Club Wednesday, Williams said there were a number of personal and business questions to be answered before he could address the political ramifications of running or not running.

"First, I have to answer if I want the job, and if I will like the job," said Williams. "Then, we have to decide if my wife and children want me to have the job and are willing to leave their friends in Midland to move to Austin."

Williams said he would also have to decide whether or not he wanted to leave his business interests for that period of time.

"After we address those questions, we will address some of the political aspects of running for governor," he said.

Williams said he had talked to Gov. Bill Clements for an hour and a half on Tuesday and the governor had assured him that he would not be a candidate for re-election. "The governor also said that he didn't think everyone who has been named as a possible candidate for governor would run," added Williams.

Alaskan front blasts West, chills Midwest

Associated Press

A blast of cold air out of Alaska brought snowstorms and plunging temperatures to the West and Midwest, triggering hundreds of traffic accidents and closing schools, and threatened to end the East's record warm spell today.

"Today was it. It will get seasonal," National Weather Service meteorologist Bill Scura said at Atlantic City Airport in Pomona, N.J., where a balmy reading of 69 degrees was one of 51 high-temperature records broken or tied in the East and South on Wednesday.

At least two people died in weather-related traffic accidents in Idaho and Oregon on Wednesday. Authorities in Coleraine, Minn., blamed minus 20-degree temperatures for the hypothermia death of a 31-year-old woman whose frozen body was found on a sidewalk.

Snow continued falling today from the Pacific Northwest to the northern Rockies, northern Plains, and upper Mississippi Valley, and was expected to spread to the Great Lakes. Freezing drizzle slickened roads from Missouri to Indiana.

The foul weather was accompanied by equally foul temperatures in many places. In the Dakotas and Montana, where Gov. Stan Stephens declared a state of emergency, winds up to 40 mph produced wind chills as low as minus 90 degrees Wednesday.

Low-temperature records for the date were set this morning in Casper, Wyo., where it was 23 below zero; Great Falls, Mont., 33 below; and Sheridan, Wyo., whose 28-below reading beat the old record by 8 degrees.

The storms caused traffic accidents in Washington state, Oregon, California and Utah, and knocked out power to thousands of people in Washington, Montana and Utah.

Snow closed schools in Washington, Oregon and Idaho on Wednesday, and dangerously low temperatures shut them in Montana today and in North Dakota through Friday. Farther east, some schools in Indiana and Michigan were closed because of freezing rain tthat made travel hazardous.

Pupils at Richholt Elementary School in Bismarck, N.D., were "running down the halls and shouting, 'Sinner for president! Sinner for president!'" Principal Rick Buresh said Wednesday after Gov. George Sinner ordered schools shut. Officials said it was the first time in memory that schools were closed statewide in North Dakota because of cold.

Near Truckee, Calif., in the Sierra Nevada 75 miles northeast of Sacramento, a tour bus overturned on icy, wind-swept Interstate 80, sending 23 people to the hospital, authorities said. Six were admitted.

In Washington, icy roads caused a 100-car string of accidents on Interstate 5 just north of Seattle, said State Patrol spokesman Bill Burkett. More than 200 accidents were reported in the Puget Sound area.

Winds gusted over 100 mph, knocking out power to up to 15,000 customers in the Bellingham area, and 1,500 others in the western part of the state. Snow caved in the roof of Everett's soccer center, doing $250,000 damage.

Snowy runways caused delays at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport, ferries were kept at their docks in Seattle, pipes froze and auto parts stores reported runs on antifreeze and tire chains.

"I've already run out of several sizes of chains," said John McCall, assistant manager of the McCall Les Schwab Tire Center in Astoria, Ore.

In Utah, rain cut power to 4,000 people in Salt Lake City and hundreds more in communities as far north as Ogden about 40 miles away.

The cold weather predicted for Midland never arrived.

Instead, local residents this morning were greeted by partly cloudy skies and mild temperatures.

And that trend should continue through Friday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low tonight will be only in the lower 30s, with winds out of the south at 5-10 mph, shifting to northeast 10-20 mph by morning.

Friday will be partly cloudy and cool with the high expected to reach into the middle 40s. Northeast winds will blow at 10-20 mph.

Wednesday's high of 77 was three degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 80 set for that date in 1963. The overnight low of 47 was 58 degrees warmer than the record low temperature of -11 set for this date in 1985.

Groundhog has his shadowy say

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. (AP) — Punxsutawney Phil, that plump, pampered groundhog long touted as America's best mammalian meteorological prognosticator, saw his shadow today, predicting six more weeks of a "kinder, gentler" winter.

Phil's promoters, declaring today the 102nd Groundhog Day, rousted the brown, bewhiskered forecaster out of his lighted, heated burrow at dawn.

"In honor of America's new president, George Bush, the groundhog stood tall and proud. He spotted a thin, short shadow," Punxsutawney Groundhog Club President James H. Means told spectators gathered at Gobbler's Knob, a wooded knoll about three miles south of Punxsutawney.

"The king of all groundhogs is returning to his burrow with a promise of a kinder and gentler winter," Means said.

Tradition has it if the weather-wise woodchuck sees his shadow, six more weeks of winter will follow. But if he doesn't, they say spring is just around the corner.

Two still in custody in second gun incident

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Two of the three teen-agers arrested Tuesday for allegedly bringing a loaded gun to Midland Freshman High School remained in custody this morning at Culver Youth Home following a hearing in juvenile court.

The 14- and 15-year-old boys were ordered to be detained for up to 10 days, while the 14-year-old girl was released into the custody of her parents.

The gun-toting incident is the second to have occurred at a Midland school campus in the past two weeks.

The two boys and one girl were arrested about 1:45 p.m. Tuesday after juvenile officers confiscated a nine-shot, .22-caliber pistol from a school locker, according to Ted Miller, a Midland Independent School District spokesman.

County Attorney Mark Dettman, who is studying the case, said charges of unlawful possession of a weapon on school grounds — a third-degree felony — may be filed against the trio Friday.

Since the students are under 18 years of age, police and Midland Independent School District officials were refusing to release their names.

Miller, coordinator of communications for the MISD, said the school district has recommended that the students be placed on "home-based instruction."

He added that the students are subject to further disciplinary actions once the adjudication process is complete.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Front stalls in North Texas

Associated Press

The strong cold front backed up by very cold Arctic air was nearly stationary across North Texas early today, but forecasters said it should resume moving southward by tonight.

The combination of moist air moving across the cold air prompted the National Weather Service to issue a freezing rain advisory through tonight for northwest and north central portions of North Texas.

The freezing rain advisory covers the portion of North Texas north and west of a line from Haskell to Denton to Sulphur Springs to Paris.

Included in the advisory are Gainesville, Denton, Sherman, Paris, Sulphur Springs and Wichita Falls, the weather service said.

Some freezing rain was reported early today in the Wichita Falls area and southern Oklahoma, while light rain and drizzle was reported across areas of North Texas.

The cold front was located early today along a line from near Texarkana to Waco to near Lubbock and westward to a low pressure center in southeast New Mexico.

Forecasts called for possible freezing rain through tonight over northwest and north central portions of North Texas and for scattered showers or thunderstorms over the rest of the state.

Lows tonight will range from near 12 in the Panhandle to the 60s in the Valley with readings in the 30s and 40s expected over most of the state.

Highs Friday will be in the 20s in the Panhandle and South Plains and in the 40s in the Permian Basin and Concho Valley and in the 60s in the Big Bend area, in the highs in the 20s, 30s and 40s across North Texas and in the 40s and 50s in northern portions of South Texas and in the 70s in extreme South Texas.

Early morning temperatures were in the 20s and 30s north of the front and in the 60s and 70s south of the front. Extremes ranged from 27 at both Childress and Amarillo to 72 at Beeville.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 29 at Wichita Falls, 37 at Fort Worth, 49 at Waco, 69 at Austin, 71 at San Antonio, 72 at Houston, 71 at Corpus Christi and Brownsville, 59 at San Angelo, 42 at Lubbock, 54 at Midland and 46 at El Paso.

NATION

A blast of arctic air kept things cold and wet today throughout the western two-thirds of the nation, where schools and highways were closed after hundreds of traffic accidents on rain- and snow-slickened roads.

Snow fell from the Pacific Northwest to the Rockies, the northern Plains and the upper Mississippi Valley.

Subzero temperatures and winds up to 40 mph produced wind chills in Montana and the Dakotas as low as 90 below zero. Missoula, Mont., had one of the coldest wind chill readings: 78 degrees below zero.

The strong winds caused blowing snow over the Dakotas and much of Minnesota, reducing visibilities to less than a mile. Winter storm warnings were in effect.

Snow spread across portions of central Wisconsin, and advisories were posted for portions of Michigan. Freezing drizzle fell from Missouri to Indiana.

Further west, a band of heavy snow developed Wednesday night over the northern mountains of Utah, where a winter storm warning remained in effect. Heavy snow also fell in Wyoming and Idaho.

Salt Lake City received 8.3 inches of snow Wednesday, breaking the record snowfall for the date of 4.1 inches in 1969.

Winter weather advisories were in effect for much of Wyoming through today, and a snow and blowing snow advisory was posted for the northern and central mountains of Colorado. A blizzard warning was posted for the Idaho Panhandle.

California also had wintry weather, with snow and blowing snow over the Sierra Nevada and winds gusting to 71 mph.

In six hours overnight, 5 inches of snow fell at Winnemucca, Nev.; 4 inches at Casper, Wyo., and 2 inches at Salem, Ore.

Much of the Southeast remained mild this morning with readings in the 50s and 60s.

Today's forecast called for snow from the Pacific Coast to the upper Mississippi Valley and the Great Lakes; rain over the Ohio Valley; and showers and thunderstorms from the southeast third of Texas to the lower Mississippi Valley.

Humor consultant coaches nurses

Solomon, a registered nurse from Berkeley, Calif., is a humor consultant whose mission is to rid the world of boredom and help employees lighten up and enjoy their work.

"Inside the crankiest, grumpiest, grouchiest person you know is a child who's dying to get out and enjoy himself," Solomon said Wednesday at a seminar for nurses at a nursing home in this Pittsburgh suburb.

"We're not proposing people tell jokes at work or create a circus," she said. "But we are proposing that people have an opportunity to express all that they are — from tears to laughters, the whole spectrum of feeling."

Solomon spreads her gospel of humor in lectures, conferences and workshops, and has looked for the funny bone in such unlikely places as the Army and AT&T.

Acting more like a stand-up comic than a consultant Wednesday, Solomon prodded her audience of 100 nurses and other health-care professionals into acting silly. She encouraged them to seek support by asking for a standing ovation or express boredom by making a sign that looked a lot like someone picking their nose.

Solomon said she knows many people may feel "this overwhelming urge to bolt for the door" when she requests particularly unusual behavior, so she doesn't require a response. Few people, however, just sat back and watched.

"I set up ground rules for people where they only do what feels safe to them," she said.

As she bounced from one routine to the next, trading one goofy mask for another, Solomon cited research that indicates humor can help in the healing process while stress can delay recovery.

"The prediction is that by the year 2,000, 80 percent of workmen's compensation claims will be stress related," she said.

"We need to find a new way of doing business in this country that supports people being whole, healthy, happy, satisfied, so that they come to work and find they really have an opportunity to express themselves, to impact the world, to make a difference. And humor is a part of that."

Research supports the theory that laughter is important for good health. Laughter releases endorphins, which are natural painkillers and help the body deal with stress.

Recent studies show that people who can laugh it up under pressure seem to have greater resistance to stress-related ailments, and that humor therapy helps relieve painful muscle-bone disorders and depression.

Solomon suggested nurses try a little humor on the job. Taking vital signs while wearing a clown nose or writing with a pen shaped like an eggplant can bring a smile to most people's faces, she said.

"Patients love it. Walk into a patient's room and tell a joke and everyone in all the beds will be paying attention, even the person who is hearing impaired," she said with a laugh. "Everyone wants to get into the act."

"I'm not ready to walk into a patient's room with a clown nose, but I think she reminded us that we need to lighten up," said Connie McCormick, a nurse from suburban Dormont.

Cold kills 13 in western Canada, drops foot of snow on Edmonton

TORONTO (AP) — The Arctic air mass that created havoc in Alaska before moving to the lower 48 froze fountains in usually mild Vancouver as Edmonton residents tried to dig out from under a foot of snow.

Officials attributed at least 13 deaths to the cold and driving winds that have paralyzed much of Western Canada since Monday.

Cold and blowing snow was blamed for eight deaths in Alberta, three in Saskatchewan and two in British Columbia. Among the dead were six Edmonton men who suffered heart attacks after shoveling or pushing vehicles.

The snow that fell Monday and Tuesday in the Edmonton area was the heaviest January storm recorded there since Jan. 31, 1885.

Most roads and highways in Alberta were open on Wednesday, although about 20,000 residents in British Columbia's Fraser Valley were without power due to high winds that blew trees and branches onto the lines.

In Victoria, the fountain in front of the British Columbia legislature was frozen solid as the mercury dipped to 10 degrees on the West Coast.

Temperatures remained around minus 22 on Wednesday throughout Saskatchewan and Alberta, where the wind-chill factor made it cold enough to freeze exposed flesh in less than a minute.

"What has happened the last couple days is quite spectacular," said Andy Radomski of the federal Atmospheric Environment Service.

He said the air had a chance to cool longer than usual in the north because it was trapped by westerly circulation that kept most of Canada warm much of the winter. The upper level winds then shifted and forced the cold air south at last.

"It has affected all of Western Canada and in fact is going to the states and will affect them as well," Radomski said in a telephone interview.

Radomski said the weather pattern generally was heading south and southeast from Western Canada and was expected to hit hardest the Plains, the Lower Great Lakes and New England.

The cold air that lingered over Alaska for a week broke temperature records and resulted in at least one death.

On Monday, it was 51 below zero in Fairbanks, Alaska, and the National Weather Service said there were unofficial reports of temperatures of minus 75 in the state.

About 80 percent of the participants in Wednesday's graduation ceremony hail from Mexico, while others represented the countries of El Salvador, China, Nicaragua, Vietnam and Venezuela.

Amnesty classes provided by Midland College have been running continuously since September at a variety of locations within the institution's Adult Basic Education service area.

Federal law requires that eligible legalized aliens complete at least 40 hours of course work in U.S. history, U.S. government and English if they are to establish permanent residency in this country.

Dr. Deana Lusk, dean of Community Services at Midland College, said the amnesty curriculum, which is recognized by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, was put together rather hurriedly because of ever-changing federal regulations.

"To have this kind of response is really very exciting," she said.

Mrs. Lusk credited the students for coming up with the idea for the graduation ceremony.

"They were so excited about receiving these certificates. It was very important to them, so they started talking among themselves about a celebration," she said.

Current Clearview board members will remain intact, but there are a few vacancies that will be filled, officials said.

The hospital district also voted Wednesday to change its bidding process. Formerly, items that cost less than $3,000 were not sent out for bids. As of Wednesday, items with a price tag of less than $10,000 will not be sent out for bids.

Money given to the dead

It was announced on Feb. 8, 1983, that hundreds of millions of dollars in Social Security benefits were being paid to people who were deceased.

TOWER

In his testimony on the fourth and final day of hearings, Tower rebutted allegations made Tuesday by conservative activist Paul Weyrich that he had "on a number of occasions" seen Tower publicly inebriated and in the company of women other than his wife.

Asked by Nunn if he had a drinking problem, Tower replied: "I have none. I am a man of some discipline."

The 63-year-old former senator told the committee: "It is essential that the secretary of defense be at all times capable of exercising the duties and responsibilities of his office, some of which are even more sensitive and more critical than the general public realizes.

"Therefore I think there should be zero toleration of anyone as secretary of defense or any other sensitive job in the Defense Department who has an alcohol problem."

Weyrich, who will be out of town until Tuesday, was unavailable for comment on Tower's remarks, said a spokesman at the conservative's Coalitions for America office.

After the hearings, Tower said little to reporters, describing himself as "embargoed" until after confirmation.

"I feel like I am glad it is the end of the hearings," he said as he left the hall.

On the subject of women, Nunn asked Tower whether he would tolerate any sexual harassment in the Defense Department.

"I will answer again with the term 'zero tolerance' for discrimination against women, the sexual harassment of women," Tower responded.

"I believe that professional women should be afforded the respect and the deference that they deserve," he said.

In addition to Williams, others mentioned as possible Republican candidates include: Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance; former Midlander George W. Bush, the eldest son of President Bush and Amarillo oilman T. Boone Pickens.

Williams said he had been approached as a candidate for governor by a group of prominent Republicans who thought he could inspire and lead Texas.

The former Fort Stockton resident told the Downtown Lions that he had learned some painful lessons in boom and crash of Texas oil since 1981.

"When oil was $40 a barrel, I was six-foot-four. Now, I'm four-foot-six," he joked. "There was even a fleeting time — when my income was increasing every month, and I had 29 rigs drilling in one field — that I thought it all had to do with my intelligence."

He said $40 oil and $9 gas was like a narcotic to him and others in the industry, and it caused him to borrow too much money. "I just got too big for my britches...I thought I could build ClayDesta Plaza from pocket money."

Williams, who is involved in oil, ranching, farming, banking, real estate and telecommunications, said he acquired a debt of $500 million but was able to survive the huge debt load during the the oil price crash of 1982 and 1986 because he had been willing to do the painful things it takes to survive.

Those painful things, according to Williams, included: selling some of his operations, seven layoffs and two pay cuts and letting some real estate, including two sections north of Midland and a ranch near San Antonio, go back to the seller.

Said Williams: "We kept hearing all those rumors about me going broke, because I was doing those distasteful things that are bad for the ego, but necessary for survival."

Williams said nobody could see the wreck of Texas' economy coming, but he suspected something was wrong on Aug. 7, 1981.

"I was on a horse in Alaska when it suddenly occurred to me, that I couldn't get the pipe for my wells, the contractor couldn't drill the wells, interest rates were 22 percent, I had grown from 100 to 1,200 employees, 16 were stealing from me and I was having to pay bonuses to retain employees."

The guest professor of free enterprise at Texas A&M University said his companies were now 10-20 percent of what they were during the boom, but they were all making money. He noted that his most profitable operation was alfalfa farming which had a 36 percent return on investment.

"I like high tech. We all like high tech, but there is still money to be made in the basics," he added.

GUN

MFHS Principal Ricardo Torres credited several students for notifying administrators about the gun-toting incident when they witnessed the suspects passing the weapon among themselves.

Torres said he then notified juvenile police officers who arrived on campus and confiscated the gun from a bag located inside a school locker.

Late last month, two Crockett Elementary School sixth graders were suspended for allegedly bringing a loaded .25-caliber chrome-plated automatic pistol to that school campus.

One of the boys was charged with carrying a firearm on school property and reckless conduct; and the other was charged with unlawfully carrying a weapon.

As the result of that episode, MISD officials announced their intent to review the district's disciplinary procedures.

According to MISD Superintendent, the study will address punishments students face for misbehaving at school and on the bus.

A cross-section of principals, teachers and parents will review the plan this spring and suggest changes that may be needed.

Correction

In Sunday's Reporter-Telegram, a graph illustrating spending levels among public elementary schools in 1987-88 incorrectly identified Bonham, Bowie and Burnet elementaries among the top five spenders and Santa Rita, South, Travis and Washington elementaries as the lowest five spenders. The top five listing should have included Rusk, Crockett and Milam elementaries. The lowest five listing should have included Lamar, Fannin, Long and Henderson elementaries.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

Judge expects to start picking jury for North trial Monday

WASHINGTON (AP) — The judge in Oliver North's Iran-Contra trial says he wants to start picking a jury Monday after rounding up a pool of 50 prospective panelists before the weekend.

So far, 16 people have been identified who remained largely unexposed to North's nationally televised congressional testimony in 1987. In that testimony, the fired White House aide discussed many activities for which he now faces criminal charges.

Gesell

North was granted immunity from prosecution for that testimony.

North's lawyers say any exposure whatsoever to that testimony would violate their client's Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination. The office of independent counsel Lawrence Walsh was required to gather information for the criminal charges independently of any congressionally immunized testimony.

On Wednesday, U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell sent nine people into the pool of prospective jurors, saying "I think it has gone very well so far." Seven prospective jurors were identified on Tuesday after the trial opened.

Gesell said he hopes to pick a pool of 50 by Friday, have the prosecution and defense prepare for in-depth questioning and "move for jury selection Monday."

Gesell has been calling into court for initial questioning only those people who say they didn't see, read or listen to North's congressional testimony in 1987.

Even with those restrictions, North's lawyers objected to almost all the 16 who were sent into the jury pool, on the grounds that they had been exposed to news accounts of North's 1987 testimony.

The judge disqualified one woman who said she didn't recall the aggressive performance of North's attorney Brendan Sullivan at the 1987 congressional hearings, but did recall North, who she said looked "like a little kid."

At that, North jokingly pointed his thumb at Sullivan sitting next to him, as if to say that the prospective juror must have been referring to Sullivan.

The woman said she recalled from the 1987 congressional hearings "something about the secretary," North's secretary Fawn Hall, and instructions in which "Mr. North asked her to remove some records."

One of those selected for the pool of prospective jurors was a woman who has been a Pentagon mail clerk for 16 years who when asked what she knew about North said: "Really nothing. The only thing I saw was he was going to trial."

When Sullivan suggested that North's testimony "was not on your screen," she replied that "It was on my screen, but I was probably watching tape or HBO."

The process in the North trial seems likely to screen out educated jurors. Of eight who were rejected for consideration as potential jurors on Tuesday, the first day, six had attended at least a year of college. Of seven seated as potential jurors, only two said they had completed high school.

North faces 12 criminal charges.

He is accused of lying to Congress in 1985 and 1986 about his efforts on behalf of the Nicaraguan Contras and of lying to the attorney general the about the National Security Council's role in diverting money from the Iran arms sales to the Contras.

He also is accused of illegally accepting a $13,800 security system at his home from co-defendant Richard Secord, converting to his own use at least $4,300 in traveler's checks from Contra leader Adolfo Calero and conspiring to defraud the Treasury of tax revenue by using a tax-exempt foundation to funnel money to the Contras.

Wright proposing vote to reduce Congress' pay hike to 30 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Jim Wright is moving to limit political damage from an imminent 50 percent congressional pay raise by offering a follow-up vote to roll the increase back to 30 percent.

Wright floated the idea of a follow-up vote on Wednesday, as House members nervous about the reaction back home to the 50 percent raise told news media and public interest groups that they wanted a chance to reject it.

Wright's office said results of a private survey of lawmakers could be released today, including whether members demanded a vote on the 50 percent raise that will become law next Wednesday unless both houses vote to stop it.

Senators are virtually certain to vote today or Friday to turn down the proposal to raise congressional pay from $89,500 to $135,000. House leaders initially planned not to hold any vote, letting the increase become law, but there were signs that resolve was wavering on Wednesday.

Wright's new plan, as described by a congressional source who spoke on condition of anonymity, was to let the pay raise take effect but then follow it with a vote to scale it down to 30 percent.

A 30 percent raise would hike the current congressional salary by $26,850, to a total of $116,350.

An Associated Press informal survey of nearly a third of the 435-member Hous showed about 88 percent of those responding wanted a vote on the larger package.

Groups opposed to the increase said their own survey showed that slightly more than 60 percent would vote "no."

Meanwhile, House and Senate negotiators moved ahead Wednesday with separate but similar proposals to bar speaking fees and restrict other outside income should the raise become law.

A bipartisan draft document, given to senators and obtained by The Associated Press, compared the latest House and Senate proposals on outside income.

Both packages would ban honoraria, including fees for speeches, appearances and articles, upon enactment of the raise.

Leaders in both houses have made clear that honoraria would continue if the pay raise is defeated because members don't want to suffer a loss of income. House members currently can retain $26,850 and Senate members $35,800 in honoraria.

The Senate plan includes a contingency that would permit retention of some honoraria if the raise is partially scaled back later.

The plans under discussion in both houses would permit such fees to be donated to charity on a member's behalf. The Senate plan would limit the donation to $2,000 per appearance and require members to list on financial disclosure forms the amount, the payer and the recipient of the donation.

Wright, D-Texas, did not get full cooperation from his colleagues in his survey. House Republican Whip Dick Cheney, R-Wyo., told his hometown paper, the Casper Star-Tribune: "I didn't return the form. I don't do polls."

The Associated Press contacted 143 congressional offices and found 92 members publicly supporting a recorded vote on the pay raise. Only six said they were against it and seven were undecided. There was no response from 38 offices.

The survey released Wednesday by raise opponents, indicating 62 percent of House members opposed to the increase, was conducted by Public Citizen, a consumer advocacy group founded by Ralph Nader, and two conservative groups: the National Taxpayers Union and Coalitions for America.

The proposed honoraria plans would allow groups that invite members to an event to continue paying for travel. The Senate would direct its ethics committee to issue rules and regulations defining acceptable limits.

By LEE SIEGEL

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Love is in the air at two zoos where scientists hope the world's last 28 California condors will mate themselves away from the brink of extinction, a biologist says.

Meanwhile, one of seven Andean condors freed into the wilderness chickened out of a dogfight with two golden eagles half her size.

"We've got all sorts of great things happening with the Andeans and some equally exciting things happening with the captive California condors. We're very encouraged," Joseph Dowhan, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service condor recovery coordinator, said Wednesday.

Only 28 endangered California condors remain, 14 in captivity at the Los Angeles Zoo and 14 others at the San Diego Wild Animal Park in Escondido. Scientists hope the vulture-like creatures, which are North America's largest land birds with 9½-foot wingspans, will reproduce enough so that some can be returned to the wild in five to 10 years.

Courtship started in early January among four pairs of the birds at Escondido and two pairs in Los Angeles, Dowhan said during a phone interview from his office in Ventura.

One of the courting pairs in Escondido, male condor AC-4 and female UN-1, started mating early in January, he added. Last April, the same pair produced a female chick named Molloko, the first California condor conceived and hatched in captivity.

Scientists believe condors lay eggs 30 to 35 days after fertilization, but mating doesn't necessarily result in fertilization, Dowhan said.

The seven Andean condors, donated by zoos across the nation, were freed into rugged mountains 50 miles northwest of Los Angeles in an experiment meant to help biologists learn the best way to handle, release and monitor California condors once they reproduce in adequate numbers. About 1,000 to 2,000 of the wild Andean birds remain in South America.

The most recent release was Jan. 21, when biologists removed netting from a roost box and feeding platform that housed four Andean condors in the Sespe Condor Sanctuary.

On the same day, a hostile encounter occurred between two golden eagles and one of three other Andeans, which had been freed Dec. 17 from the nearby Hopper Mountain National Wildlife Refuge, Dowhan said.

The 10-month-old Andean, condor Y1, flew from Hopper Mountain onto the eagles' turf, where "the eagles made several 'stoops,' or aggressive drives, toward the condor and forced it to the ground," said a Fish and Wildlife Service news release.

Dowhan said the condor soon returned to the air and "made a beeline to the security of its home (roost box). It was intimidated by the eagles," which have 5-foot wingspans.

The Andean condors, which will be recaptured and re-released in South America when the experiment ends next year, will encounter a number of other birds in California's mountains and "recognize some will be territorial and others may serve as pilots to where food is present," he said.

Dowhan said it will be months before the biologists place food for the carrion-eating condors away from their roost boxes in an effort to teach them to forage.

Two of the three Andeans freed from Hopper Mountain in December flew about three miles on Tuesday and passed over the Sespe roost box, but the four condors there "didn't notice them. They were sleeping," Dowhan said.

Back at the zoos, the six males court the females by arching their necks, looking at the ground, and trying to encircle the females with their outstretched wings. Dowhan said each female "will try to come up under the male and nibble at his beak. That's a positive reaction."

Dowhan said the breeding season runs from January to April.

Bush, Japanese leader meet to smooth differences

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's meeting today with Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita is designed to bolster their personal relationship and smooth irritations involving trade and defense issues.

Takeshita, the first foreign leader to be welcomed to the White House by the new president, was slated to meet with Bush and Secretary of State James A. Baker III before participating in a working lunch.

"The leaders are not competing to reach any new agreements or to achieve miracles," said a senior administration official, who discussed the visit with reporters on condition his name not be used.

"They are here to get to know each other better, to set a tone and direction of cooperation for the future," the official said.

"It's very important for the two leaders to meet early on to establish a personal rapport and a broad-brush agenda."

— Senior administration official speaking anonymously

Bush is scheduled to travel to Japan later this month for the funeral of Emperor Hirohito, but the official said today's meeting was timely because talks on such matters as defense, the international economy and Japan's trade surplus will be difficult amid ceremonies for the late emperor.

"It's very important for the two leaders to meet early on to establish a personal rapport and a broad-brush agenda," the official said.

One irritant arose recently when Secretary of Defense-designate John Tower suggested during his confirmation hearings that Japan's contributions to its own defense are inadequate. Tower criticized the nation's constitution as a "lousy idea."

The 1946 constitution, adopted during the post-World War II U.S. occupation, limits Japan's military.

Tower's comments brought a sharp rebuke from the Japanese, who pointed to a new budget that calls for a 5.9 percent increase in military spending.

The senior administration official pointed out that Japan is spending $2.5 billion to support U.S. troops stationed there. He acknowledged that the United States "would like to see a lot of these things increased," but said the administration was pleased Japan "is moving in the right direction."

Takeshita also was expected to highlight the efforts his government has made to open his country's markets — particularly in light of the $57 billion U.S. trade deficit with Japan, which is the world's largest imbalance.

The official said that while the trade shortfall has eased slightly in recent months, "it is still very enormous, and we still have to work on it."

News reports in Japan suggested that Takeshita would propose setting up a U.S.-Japanese panel to oversee trade disputes between the world's two largest economies.

The U.S. official said the administration generally is content with existing trade arrangements and laws, but it is "willing to look at any new suggestions the prime minister may bring with him."

Kemp to give up $55,000 in excess fees

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Rep. Jack Kemp has agreed to return or give up more than $55,000 in speaking fees after being told by a Senate committee he had apparently violated federal limits on outside income for members of Congress.

Kemp's nomination by President Bush to become secretary of Housing and Urban Development was before the Senate Banking Committee today, where it was expected to be approved and sent to the Senate floor for confirmation.

Kemp filed financial disclosure forms last week with the committee and the federal Office of Government Ethics reporting honoraria amounting to $67,350 above what House rules allow.

The Associated Press learned Wednesday that the staff director of the Democratic-controlled committee, Kevin Gottlieb, confronted Kemp personally last week with the apparent violation.

The former congressman from Buffalo, N.Y., agreed to return $16,000 in speaking fees and to forgo another $39,400 in fees not yet received.

He also deferred receipt of an additional $12,500 in fees earned in 1988 until 1989 to avoid violating the limits on honoraria congressmen can receive in any one year. The actions brought Kemp $550 below his 1988 limit.

Gottlieb said the former congressman mistakenly believed that money received after leaving Congress was not covered by the House limits, even though it was for appearances made while a member of Congress.

Kemp filed an amended financial report with the Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee and the U.S. Office of Government Ethics on Monday to reflect the changes. The changes were made without public disclosure by either Kemp or the Senate committee.

Kemp was subject to the House rules limiting all outside income, including honoraria, to 30 percent of his $89,500 congressional salary — or $26,850. In addition, a less restrictive federal statute limits honoraria to 40 percent of congressional salary, or $35,800.

In his original filing, Kemp reported receiving $119,000 in honoraria for 1988. He also reported giving $24,800 of the money to charity, which under House rules is not counted against the limit.

House rules also limit honoraria — fees for speeches or similar appearances — to no more than $2,000 per event. In his original filing, Kemp reported several well in excess of that $2,000 limit.

He reported receiving $30,000 for two appearances on the television show "Firing Line" in September and October, and $10,000 each for speeches to Hartford University, A.B. Laffer and Associates, and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. He also reported receiving $5,000 from World Trade Assoc., and $2,400 from Crosby Assoc.

BEE SMART

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through April 14. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

talent — (noun) Greg Louganis, the U.S. diver who won several medals in the 1988 Summer Olympics, is a very "talented" and hardworking individual. "Talent," as used here, refers to aptitude or ability. "Talent" is based on the ancient Greek word "talanton," which originally referred to a unit of weight or money. According to a biblical parable, a man left certain amounts of money or "talents" to three servants he wished to test. The amount was allocated based on the servant's abilities. Theologians in the Middle Ages gave "talent" a more figurative meaning because of the parable and today the original definition of "weight" has been forgotten.

Congress should debate pay raise

President Ronald Reagan's recommendation that members of Congress get a pay increase, made only two months before his term ended, was stimulating public debate on whether the raise was justified and reasonable — but that was before lawmakers blurred the issue in trying to avoid accountability by letting the raise take effect without voting on it.

Now there's a move in the House of Representatives to put the question of a raise to a vote. That needs to happen if for no other reason than that the public has not been convinced the raise is needed and it's incredulous that lawmakers would attempt to legislate their pay raise without accepting responsibility for their actions.

In November a presidential commission recommended the 51% pay increase, saying members of Congress and federal judges are quitting their positions because of the pay, and that higher salaries are needed to attract "the most capable and conscientious citizens" to government service.

No doubt many of those outside the government would gladly accept the $89,500 annual salary Congressmen currently receive. They certainly would accept the $135,000 salary the presidential commission is recommending.

There's no argument that members of Congress deserve a good salary or that it's expensive to maintain a household in the nation's capital and another in the home district. But even the current salary is five times more than the average American worker receives, according to consumer advocate Ralph Nader who is opposed to the salary recommended. Congress hasn't felt obliged to increase the minimum wage in the past eight years. It still stands at $3.35 an hour or $6,700 a year.

Nader further notes that if congressional salaries today are compared to 1964 levels, current inflation-adjusted wages in 1987 dollars would be about $82,000. Furthermore, Congressmen have received $28,838 in salary increases since 1981 along with their other numerous benefits and privileges, Nader says. So there is validity to the question of whether an increase is justified.

On top of what they receive in salary now, representatives can earn an additional $26,850 in speaking fees each year while senators can earn $35,800. Those figures mean representatives can earn a yearly total of $116,350 and senators $123,300.

Those "extra" funds are the issue in a proposal whereby the commission's recommendation would be approved only if the lawmakers gave up their speaking fees, which opponents say can tie the officials to special interests.

The rub for many Americans comes in the fact that under the 1985 Salary Act, initiated by Sen. Ted Stevens (R-Alaska), the salary increase becomes effective on Feb. 8th unless both houses pass a law overturning the increase. Even if passed, President George Bush, who has indicated he favors the increase, would have to sign the law rejecting the increase. Under that law, lawmakers can avoid voting for an increase they receive and then tell the voters back home they didn't support the measure.

House Speaker Jim Wright, who earlier had said he would not bring the increase to a vote in the House prior to it becoming law, was conducting a survey of Congressmen earlier this week to determine the issue's standing. He was asking how they felt about the pay increase and whether they would accept a 30% hike instead of the proposed 51% jump. What wasn't clear was whether Wright would make the results of his survey known since he favors the proposed increase.

He should let the issue come to a vote. What's more, if he truly cares about the integrity of the body he presides over Wright should open the entire matter up to public debate. The senators also should make their feelings known to the voters who elected them to serve with dignity and respect.

A pay increase may be justified, particularly if lawmakers would relinquish the practice of accepting speaking fees. Taking the smaller 30% increase also would be more in line with the budgetary needs of the government.

But members of Congress should never forget that their first obligation is to the people they represent. They must be open, honest and straight-forward with those individuals. They have not been operating in that manner on the proposed pay raise to this point.

Another View:

Big brother again?

When it comes to diversity, today's broadcast media offer a real smorgasbord. With more than 1,300 TV stations and a variety of cable choices competing with commercial networks, plus 10,000 radio stations, there is no shortage of diverse programming and opinion.

But despite this historic proliferation of choices, the federal government is again trying to resurrect its discredited role as every broadcaster's Big Brother.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., wants to roll back the clock to the 1950s. Congressman Dingell has introduced a bill to restore the old "fairness doctrine" in broadcasting.

The fairness doctrine required broadcasters to provide equal time for any and all opposing views to programs of opinion. Not only did it threaten broadcasters with economic ruin, it was counterproductive to the serious coverage of matters of public importance and an intrusion by the federal government into the First Amendment rights of all.

The Federal Communications Commission wisely repealed the "fairness doctrine" and during the 16 months since its elimination, the broadcast industry has demonstrated its ability to once again wade into controversial topics to the benefit of the public.

Broadcasters are not perfect any more than the publishers of the nation's 1,600 newspapers, but like print journalists, they share the obligation to fairly report the truth as they see it. In practice, the "fairness doctrine" operated to deter the exercise of that responsibility.

That is reason enough to put the "fairness doctrine" to rest for all time. The government has no business telling the news media what is and what is not "fair" comment.

So in this case where the government finally got it right, now is no time to bring Big Brother back again.

Japan plans shipment without escorts

WASHINGTON — Japan is secretly planning to ship tons of weapons-grade plutonium halfway around the world guarded only by Japanese coast guard vessels. The plan is an engraved invitation to piracy for any number of terrorist groups or militaristic Third World despots itching for the makings of the bomb.

Jack Anderson

Japanese government officials want to begin the regular shipments of plutonium as early as 1992 to feed their burgeoning nuclear power industry. The suppliers are Great Britain and France, half a world away from Japan.

Japanese officials considered flying the cargo from Europe, but that would have meant flying over populated areas, and refueling in Alaska. Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, convinced the Reagan administration to ban the flights over the United States unless the plutonium was sealed in casks that would survive a crash. No such containers exist.

That leaves transport by sea. Instead of sending a fleet of destroyers to guard the Armageddon cargo, the Japanese have tentatively designated the Maritime Safety Agency as the escort. That's the Japanese equivalent of the coast guard.

Its best ships are smaller than destroyers and equipped with nothing more than a mix of 20mm, 35mm and 40mm guns. The ships have rarely ventured more than 1,000 miles from the Japanese coast and would require extensive refueling stops, making the plutonium a sitting duck for terrorists.

The shortest routes from Europe to Japan are through two volatile choke points infested with regional terrorists — the Panama and Suez canals. Longer routes around the tips of South America or Africa might require more port stops.

An internal Defense Department report advised that at a minimum Japan should send "a dedicated surface combatant to escort the vessel throughout the trip." The Pentagon had more than coast guard cutters in mind.

After suggesting several seagoing alternatives, the Pentagon report concluded that "even if the most careful precautions are observed, no one could guarantee the safety of the cargo from a security incident, such as an attack on the vessel by small, fast craft, especially if armed with modern anti-ship missiles."

That report didn't specify what country might have such a craft, but other highly classified Pentagon reports were more to the point, and the point is Iran. The Ayatollah Khomeini is aching for plutonium to develop a nuclear weapon.

Iran would have to take a number, because the Japanese escort ships would attract other suitors — Libya, Syria, the Japanese Red Army terrorists and the Abu Nidal organization to name a few. Even pirates with no interest in plutonium themselves would like to capture the bounty to sell it.

Ironically, it is Japan's militaristic history that has resulted in the toy boat escort. Japan has a navy that it euphemistically calls the Maritime Self-Defense Force, but Japanese citizens would be opposed to any deployment of that navy too far afield. It is for defense of Japan's coasts and nothing more. In fact, the Japanese constitution would forbid long-ranging escort duty. That leaves the coast guard.

The United States has some say in the matter because the plutonium in France and Great Britain is derived from U.S. uranium. An agreement rushed through Congress last fall says the United States must be satisfied with the shiping arrangements. But that same agreement, good for 30 years, says the Japanese don't even have to provide an armed escort.

DEFICIT STRATEGY — George Bush has reached an understanding with Republican congressional leaders that they must form a solid bloc to control spending and tackle the deficit. The Republicans are quietly organizing down to the staff level. Any staff member who is considered to be soft on spending will be transferred and replaced by a fiscal conservative. The president's party is in the minority so he can't afford any weak spots in the unified party front.

MINI-EDITORIAL — We're as pleased as the next person that serial killer Ted Bundy will never kill again. But his execution was nothing to cheer about. Some called it a triumph of the system. In reality, execution is the last resort when everything else fails — when society spawns a sick member, when the threat of capital punishment can't stop a murderer, when nothing will bring back the dead victims. When all else fails, we kill the killer. Spectators cheered when Bundy was pronounced dead. A moment of silence would have been more appropriate, to contemplate the Ted Bundys of tomorrow.

Nobody rushes in to bail out Mom and Pop!

Those of you who have been wondering if the Bush administration has a sense of humor should be delighted to find out that it does. Recently, Secretary of the Treasury Nicholas Brady suggested that savings and loan depositors be taxed with a levy of 25 or 30 cents per hundred dollars. When Brady sent up the trial balloon, everyone in America laughed all the way to the bank.

Art Buchwald

How on earth did the S&Ls get into such a mess? Here is a typical case of what happened:

Mom and Pop Parker ran a delicatessen in Hillside Park. When business got slow, the Parkers decided to sell all of their cold cuts and potato salad and open an S&L instead. It was called The First Bonnie and Clyde Savings & Loan.

Pop Parker had no sooner opened the door when he received a call from his brother-in-law, Walter. "I need 30 seeded rolls, two pounds of corned beef, a dozen pickles and a boat-load of sauerkraut."

"Wait, Walter. I'm no longer in the delicatessen business. I'm in savings and loans."

"Why didn't you say so? I'll have a $10,000 note, $100,000 for a mortgage and line of credit from here to Oklahoma."

"Walter, your credit stinks. Why should I give you any money?"

"Because you're married to my sister, and when it comes to getting loans from an S&L, your family should come first."

Pop Parker had no choice but to extend all sorts of services to Walter.

Mom was behind the teller cage when her bridge partner, Mildred, walked in. Mildred said that she would like to take out a $50,000 loan to redo her bedroom.

"What kind of collateral do you have?" Mom wanted to know.

"Listen to Mrs. J.P. Morgan. When people go into banking they immediately forget their friends. You never asked me what collateral I had when I was holding the ace, king, queen and jack of hearts. If I had collateral, I would have gone to the Chase National where at least the pens don't smell of pickles."

"I'm making an exception for you," Mom said, "but don't go blabbing all over the neighborhood that the First Bonnie and Clyde S&L is a patsy when it comes to making loans."

Pop was wrapping the deposits in wax paper when Freddy Moonblatt walked in. Freddy and Pop were Masons and also played on the same softball team.

"Have you heard about the string of condos I'm building in Watershed?" Freddy asked.

"No, I haven't," Pop answered. "When did you go into building condos?"

"I just decided to when I saw who owned this S&L. I want to call it 'Parker Palace' after you and your lovely wife. I need $25 million in small bills."

"That could wipe the S&L out," Pop protested.

"You don't make money in this business by putting it in wax paper. I'll pay 25 percent interest on the loan."

"That's a lot."

"I'd rather owe it to you than to strangers."

The upshot of this was that Mom and Pop Parker had taken care of their family, friends and acquaintances and wound up in the red to the tune of $40 million.

The Parkers weren't as disturbed as one might think. As Pop told the press when they were going under, "If we still had the delicatessen business, nobody would have bailed us out at all."

GEORGE F. WILL

Wilson recognizes jest of life's repetition

WASHINGTON — Pete Wilson, California's Republican senator, suddenly understands the jest that life is what happens to us when we are making other plans. Having just survived the rigors of a 20-month reelection campaign, his face should be wreathed with what senators call "a six-year smile": the certainty of six years before another rendezvous with the voters.

George F. Will

But Wilson's boyish brow is furrowed. He is under intense pressure to pack his bags, hit the road and run for governor of California in 1990.

The pressure on Wilson illustrates three things about contemporary politics. They are the seamlessness of the political seasons, the special importance of election years that end in "2" (1982, 1992) and the importance at all times of money.

The Republican incumbent, George Deukmejian, easily won reelection in 1986, but he does not want a third term. However, Wilson's achievement in winning a second term is not something to be lightly laid aside. Not since 1952 has anyone won a second term in the seat he holds. (It has been occupied by William Knowland, Clair Engle, Pierre Salinger, George Murphy, John Tunney and S.I. Hayakawa.)

But California's governorship is second only to the presidency among America's glittering political prizes. And possession of it is especially coveted by the national parties in the two years after each census.

In the 1980s, California, like New York in the 1940s, has been allotted 45 House seats. Its 47 electoral votes have been one-sixth of the total needed to win the White House. In 1992, California will have 53 electoral votes. Its projected six-seat gain in the House is part of the Sun Belt's gain — Texas and Florida three each, Georgia 2, and Arizona one. California Republicans know that many more than six seats can be gained if they can influence redistricting.

The Supreme Court's one-man, one-vote redistricting decisions require strict mathematical equality of population among districts. But that requirement leaves lots of room for gerrymandering. Politicians armed with computers have brought modern proficiency to the ancient art of drawing district lines to maximize the strength of the party doing the drawing.

In 1982, California gained two House seats, but Democrats enlarged their majority from 22-21 to 28-17. Granted, the party not controlling the White House usually gains in off-year elections, and the 1982 elections coincided with a severe recession. Still, artful redistricting helped Democrats, who controlled California's legislature and governorship.

To understand why do so many Republicans want to rely on Wilson so soon after his last race, begin with the basic fact (California is big) and the crucial variable (money).

The people pressuring Wilson want him to plunge in immediately because of his fund-raising experience and California's law about campaign giving. With more than one-tenth of the nation's population (nearly 29 million by 1990), California is a media state where a campaign eats money ravenously. Deukmejian spent $15 million in 1986.

Most candidates must spend huge sums just to buy "name recognition." Wilson has that, having run twice statewide for Senate and once unsuccessfully for the Republican gubernatorial nomination, and having been mayor of San Diego for a decade. In this he has an advantage over even Peter Ueberroth, who might be conscripted to run if Wilson declines.

California candidates can collect $1,000 from individuals each fiscal year. California's fiscal years end in June. Thus, for fund-raising purposes, there are three fiscal-year cycles in the 22 months between now and November, 1990. If Wilson declares his candidacy now, he can raise money for five months in this fiscal year.

Republicans thinking ahead to George Bush's re-election campaign want a Republican governor in Sacramento. Even with a large last-minute assist from Ronald Reagan, Bush carried the state by less than three percentage points. That margin seems especially slight considering that California, which got a disproportionate share of defense spending during the Reagan buildup, stands to suffer disproportionately when Bush's austerity produces deep cuts in defense.

In 1990, California, Texas and Florida will elect governors. In 1992, those states will have 53, 32 and 24 electoral votes respectively. Their total — 109 — will almost equal the total (116) of Ohio, New York, Michigan, Illinois and Pennsylvania, which will lose a total of 11 House seats in 1992.

At the center of all this calculation and speculation stands a weary Wilson who, contemplating yet another campaign in the California nation, understands the jest that life is not one damn thing after another, it is one damn thing over and over.

Origin of dophin-killing 'red tide' puzzles experts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists say they are certain that a natural poison caused the massive die-off of bottlenose dolphins in 1987 and 1988, but they still are puzzled by the persistence of the deadly "red tide" that arose in the Gulf of Mexico and moved up the East Coast.

"We have never found this before in history," said Joseph Geraci, a wildlife specialist who headed a team of federal researchers.

Speaking at a news conference Wednesday, Geraci said laboratory findings confirm that the dolphins that died had eaten fish contaminated with a powerful poison, called brevertoxin, originating from the persistent bloom of red tide algae.

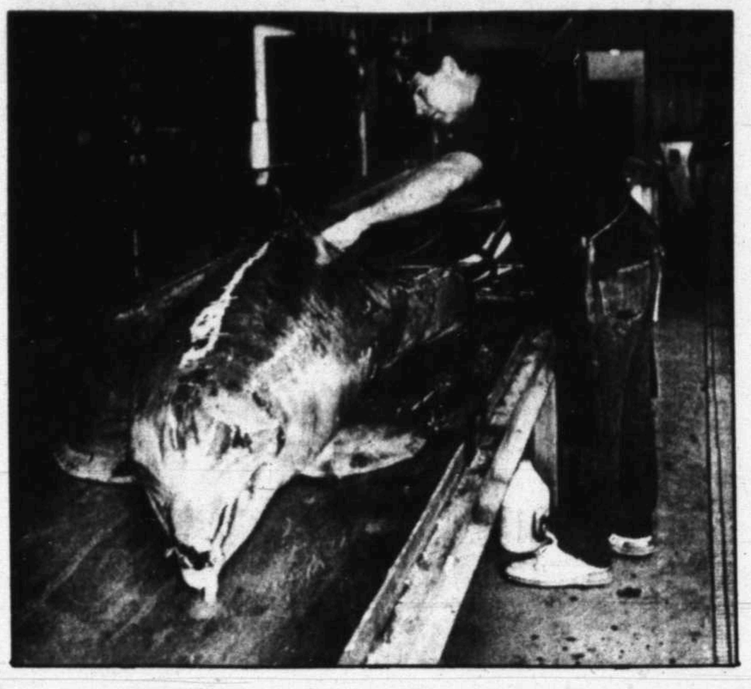

Gerald Scott, a federal fisheries expert, estimated that 50 percent of the dolphins living off the coast were killed, and said it could take 100 years for their numbers to recover.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration officials said laboratory findings "are unequivocal" about the cause of death, but just why the red tide made its rare and lethal invasion of the East Coast is not known.

Fisheries expert Ford Cross said red tides occur naturally, but are normally confined to the Gulf of Mexico where they arise and decline swiftly. But the 1987 red tide persisted for months, moved with the gulf current from the west coast of Florida and then was driven northward along the East Coast.

Cross said satellite photographs show that eddies of warm water lingered for long periods off the coast of North Carolina and neighboring states and that this may have enabled the algae to continue blooming. Occasionally, he said, the eddies would be shoved into coastal bays, bringing toxin-contaminated fish into dolphin feeding grounds.

A red tide is considered dangerous for oyster fishing in the gulf if the count of cells reaches 5,000 per liter of water, Cross said. During the time the dolphins were dying, he said, some tests along the North Carolina coast found cell counts of more than 20 million per liter.

Dr. Donald Luchsinger works on the carcass of a dead dolphin in Virginia Beach in this August 1987 file phone. Scientists said thousands of dolphins died on the East Coast in 1987 from eating fish tainted with a toxin found in a 'red tide.'

Reagan's budget estimated to cause $120 billion deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Congressional Budget Office says former President Reagan's last budget would produce a deficit far larger than the law allows and would not produce a surplus by 1993 as the White House has claimed.

Using gloomier economic projections than those employed by the administration, the nonpartisan CBO said Wednesday that Reagan's spending plan would create a $120 billion shortfall in fiscal 1990, which begins Oct. 1, and leave $80 billion in red ink by 1993.

Reagan projected a $92.5 billion imbalance for next year and a $2 billion surplus in 1993, the year the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law requires a balanced budget.

Gramm-Rudman sets a $100 billion deficit limit for 1990. If Congress and the president fail to whittle the deficit to within $10 billion of that amount, automatic spending cuts occur that reduce the imbalance to $100 billion.

President Bush has said he will submit his budget plan a week from today, and his blueprint — not Reagan's — will dominate this year's budget battles between the White House and Congress.

But Reagan's proposal — and CBO's examination of it — retains some significance for two reasons.

First of all, Bush aides have said they are likely to use the economic forecasts used by Reagan, projections that many private economists and congressional fiscal experts say are too optimistic. CBO's report shows just how far apart Bush and his congressional foes are likely to be when the debate begins over needed savings.

Secondly, Bush will incorporate large chunks of Reagan's proposal in his own plan.

CBO also said that:

■ This year's budget deficit will be $159 billion, about $2 billion lower than the administration projects. CBO had projected the 1989 deficit at $155 billion just last month, but increased that figure based on expectations of higher spending for agriculture, housing and the savings and loan crisis.

■ If none of Reagan's proposals is adopted, next year's deficit would be $146 billion, $5 billion more than the office projected last month, and would shrink only slightly to $135 billion by 1993. The administration has said the deficit, without Reagan's proposed savings, would be $127 billion next year and $37 billion in 1993.

■ The government would spend $1.19 trillion next year under Reagan's plan, $38 billion more than the administration estimated.

■ The government will collect $11 billion more in revenues than the $1.059 trillion estimated by the White House.

■ The cost of bailing out the nation's financially ailing savings and loan associations will cost $11 billion more next year than the administration estimated.

The CBO figures are often used by members of Congress to argue that the administration deficit forecast is too optimistic and that more savings are needed. Nonetheless, the Gramm-Rudman law requires the use of the administration's figures when calculating the deficit. Congress in recent years has ultimately accepted the administration's figures, thus making it easier to create savings.

Princess Di visits Big Apple, wows designers

By CATHERINE CROCKER

NEW YORK (AP) — Britain's Princess Diana, arriving for a whirlwind tour, wowed the city's fashion elite before turning her attention to those at the other end of the social spectrum.

Awed fashion designers and retailers proclaimed Diana radiant and divine when she appeared at a party in her honor Wednesday night.

The 27-year-old princess, who had just arrived on her first official visit to New York, sounded equally impressed by her host city.

"It was marvelous, quite dramatic," she said when asked her first impressions of the city.

Diana's explorations were to continue today with a visit to the Henry Street Settlement, a 96-year-old community center that helps immigrants, homeless people and the elderly.

"She's a real-life person, not someone with a wand," day care director Karen Leslie explained to a dozen excited pre-schoolers Wednesday as they prepared for the princess' visit.

Diane was to visit the day care center and a homeless shelter at the settlement, which has served generations of poor people on Manhattan's lower East Side.

Tonight she was to attend the American debut of the Welsh National Opera, which will perform Verdi's "Falstaff" at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. As the Princess of Wales, she is patron of the opera company.

Irish-American activists opposed to British rule in Northern Ireland planned to demonstrate outside the opera performance. But Diana's first evening in the city was devoid of controversy.

The princess arrived on a British Airways supersonic Concorde flight at Kennedy International Airport at 5:49 p.m. Wednesday for her three-day visit. Her first public appearance was on the 50th floor of the Equitable Tower, where she attended a gala reception and buffet dinner hosted by Dawson International, producers of Scottish cashmere.

Before she arrived, guests received some last minute instructions from British Consul George Finlayson. "For British subjects it's protocol for the men to nod and the women can curtsy," he said. "For Americans, ever since the War of Independence, you can do what you want."

Many of the guests opted to shake hands.

Designer Oscar de la Renta went further. "She has extraordinary looks and when you have extraordinary looks you can wear anything," he said. "With time, she will be one of the great well-dressed ladies of the world."

Princess Diana

For Schultz, the gathering was bittersweet. His son, Thomas Schultz, was among a group of Syracuse University students who died in the December crash of a Pan Am jet in Scotland.

When it came his turn to greet Diana, Schultz pulled out a picture of his son and showed the princess.

She was "very sympathetic," said Irwin Joffe, president of Dawson International USA, who observed the exchange. "She said, 'I'm very sorry. He would not have felt anything.' She dealt with it extremely well."

This week's tour is the first lone official visit abroad by Diana since October 1985, when she went to the Royal Hampshire Regiment's base in Berlin.

The princess visited the White House during a U.S. tour in 1985 with her husband, Prince Charles, who remained in Britain this week. He will arrive in the United States on Feb. 16 for a four-day visit to Washington and Palm Beach, Fla.

Fire officials find peppers hot stuff

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Heaps of chili peppers went up in flames Wednesday when they got too hot for their own good, and fire officials said it was a case of spontaneous combustion.

The 3:29 a.m. fire at the Westspice plant in San Fernando was extinguished 19 minutes later, but more than $70,000 worth of peppers, seasonings and spices were destroyed, said Los Angeles Fire Department spokesman Jim Williamson.

There were no injuries reported.

Spontaneous combustion caused the fire that charred close to 50,000 pounds of peppers and spices, he said.

"Spontaneous combustion is a chemical reaction. Almost any product can develop its own heat," Williamson said. "It's like a compost pile. While the product is rotting away, it forms heat inside.

"If it bursts into flames, that's spontaneous combustion.

"What I'm saying is these were hot peppers. They (investigators) figure the peppers, being in large piles or buckets, formed this chemical reaction, which caused heat, which caused spontaneous combustion, which caused the fire," Williamson said.

NATION IN BRIEF

CBS claims Libya, Syria responsible for 103 bomb

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III said he could not confirm a CBS News report that Syria and Libya were responsible for the bombing of a Pam An jumbo jetliner that crashed in Scotland on Dec. 21, killing 270 people.

"I don't know that any responsibility has been determined," Baker said Wednesday night at a White House reception.

The destruction of Flight 103 was in retaliation for the U.S. bombing of Libya in 1986 and was spurred as well by the U.S. decision in December to talk with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the network said, quoting sources "deep within the terrorist movement."

The principal architect of the bombing was Ahmed Jibril, head of the extreme Palestinian Terror Group, a front for the Liberation of the Palestine-General Command, according to CBS.

Jibril, based in Syria, was working for Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi, although he was also required to clear the operation with Syrian intelligence officials, the network reported.

Swaggart reveals plan

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, who has threatened a libel suit for a stripper's story of an alleged sexual liasion with him, says another effort is being planned to discredit him.

Speaking to about 600 people Wednesday night at his Family Worship Center, Swaggart again accused Penthouse magazine of scheming to destroy his ministry with a story in which Catherine Mary Kampen said she performed sex acts for him while he watched.

Without revealing any details, Swaggart said his ministry had uncovered another move against him, this time involving different people.

"There's another effort afoot, as preposterous as this one...If you have enough money you can get anyone to say anything," Swaggart said.

Later in his low-key talk, Swaggart said a preacher had told him that religious leaders were accusing him of practicing child pornography.

Abortion may save woman

MINEOLA, N.Y. (AP) — A man whose pregnant wife has been in a coma for seven weeks urged asked a judge Wednesday to appoint him her legal guardian so he can authorize an abortion that he says will save her life.

Martin Klein's 32-year-old wife, Nancy, was critically injured in a car collision on Dec. 13 and is in a coma at north Shore University Hospital in Manhasset.

Klein, 34, a self-employed accountant who lives in Upper Brookville on Long Island, told the court that physicians have advised him that an abortion is necessary to save his wife's life and assist in her recovery.

His petition is opposed by anti-abortion activists John Short and John Broderick, who have asked the court to be appointed legal guardians of the fetus, which is about 16 to 18 weeks old.

Doctors: Suck out bugs

BOSTON (AP) — The patient with the bug in her ear screamed, "Get that sucker!" That rang a bell for her doctors who failed to nab the critter with had been considered the best roach approach.

The doctors were excited when the woman came to the hospital with a cockroach in her ear. It was their long-awaited chance to try out a squirt of the anesthetic lidocaine, which a report four years ago said was the best way to remove a bug from an ear.

"With hurried anticipation, we sprayed the drug briskly into the ear canal and quickly jumped back, fully expecting the beast to come hurtling forth at first contact with the noxious substance," they told their colleagues in a letter in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Alas. Nothing happened. They tried again, this time dousing the intruder with a bigger dose. Still nothing.

"Get that sucker outa my ear!" the patient screamed.

"What a brilliant idea," the doctors agreed.

They hooked up a wall suction device and gently slipped the tip into the young women's ear. With a satisfying "schloop!" they nabbed the roach.

Two convicted in scheme

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — An independent travel agent and her father face up to 130 years in prison and millions of dollars in fines from their conviction on charges of intentionally manipulating an airline bonus mileage plan.

The case, believed to be the first of its kind in the nation, will be appealed, defense attorney Patrick A. Williams said.

A federal jury deliberated two hours Wednesday before convicting Irwin and Gayle Schreier on 26 counts of conspiracy to commit wire fraud.

Plan outlined for care of indigent patients

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

A relief plan was outlined Wednesday for Midland Memorial Hospital physicians who may be finding as much as 40 percent of their time consumed by a burgeoning — and mandatory — indigent patient load.

Staff physicians are required to treat indigent patients on a rotating basis and don't receive payment for doing so.

Physicians who treat indigent patients do receive a $2,000-a-year stipend from hospital district tax revenues that goes toward their liability insurance premiums.

A staff obstetrician must be on call to deliver babies and give follow-up treatment to its indigent mother.

A staff pediatrician must treat the indigent newborns and other children who come into the emergency room.

Orthopedic physicians on the hospital's staff must be present to treat the trauma patients who come into the emergency room and conduct later periodic checkups.

Physicians of these three disciplines especially are finding anywhere from 30 to 40 percent of their time spent on the ever-growing indigent patient population in Midland County, explained Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, a Midland County Hospital District director.

Estimates show that at least 20 percent of all babies born in Midland County — roughly 40 a month — are indigent cases.

In-hospital nursery duties for which the on-call pediatrician is responsible can consume an entire week of his or her time, Wiesenfeld said.

Obstetricians face a huge liability risk when delivering indigent babies, Weisenfeld explained. The first medical care an indigent mother may receive is when she appears at the emergency room ready to deliver her baby, experts agree. The lack of prenatal care can negatively influence the newborn's life, and some indigent mothers have placed the blame — and lawsuit — on the obstetrician who delivered the child.

Wiesenfeld said this increases the stress on those physicians who worry about a possible malpractice suit when delivering the baby of an indigent mother.

The county employs two midwives who also deliver babies, but the responsibility still rests with the obstetrician on call.

Dr. James Humphreys, MMH vice president of medical affairs, was given authority Wednesday to recruit one obstetrician and two pediatricians whose primary patient load would be the indigents of Midland County.

Hospital district tax revenues would pick up the tab in the future, MCHD Board President Gene Abbott said, because the expense wasn't anticipated in this year's tax revenue budget.

Salaries for the pediatricians would be about $80,000 a year each and $120,000 for the obstetrician, officials estimated.

Humphreys and others present at the board meeting Wednesday agreed there may be a need to open an auxiliary clinic where the indigent pregnant women and children of indigents may be treated by the new physicians the hospital district wants to hire.

Currently, indigent prenatal care is given to pregnant mothers at the Midland City-County Health Department on Andrews Highway.

Hospital district directors allowed the hospital to spend a maximum of $100,000 over the next year if a new clinic needs to be installed. That money would cover start-up costs, support staff salaries and any other materials.

Until that time, however, officials predicted the district's staff obstetrician and pediatricians would operate out of the hospital.

Midland orthopedic physicians will band together independently and hire a resident who would be responsible for initial diagnoses of trauma patients who come into the emergency room on the weekend, as well as more simple follow-up appointments.

The orthopedic physician, however, will be responsible for the patients' welfare, Humphreys stressed.

An indigent orthopedic clinic for follow-up patients began last Saturday at the hospital's Testing and Diagnostic Center. One patient was treated, Humphreys said, though it had only been open since the prior Wednesday.

For the long run, hospital officials are exploring a plan whereby Midland Memorial would be a satellite teaching facility for the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center.

Resident physicians would train at MMH and their salaries would be split by the hospital or hospital district and the university.

Midlander held on truck bombing, cocaine charges

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A Midland motel owner is in federal custody on truck bombing and cocaine distribution charges which allegedly occurred in Michigan before he moved to Midland in 1987, an assistant U.S. Attorney said Wednesday.

The alleged crimes also took place before Todd Herbert Stephens, 25, was arrested, tried and acquitted of a Sept. 6, 1987 murder at the Sandpiper Inn, 3838 W. Wall Ave., the motel he owns and operates.

Stephens appeared Wednesday before U.S. Magistrate Robert Sykes, who appointed Midland attorney Tom Morgan to represent him, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery.

A detention hearing is scheduled today in magistrate court, and Stephens is expected to be held for transfer to Michigan, Beery said.

"I have filed a motion to detain, since he has been charged with a crime of violence and a drug offense," Beery said. "We feel he is also a flight risk and a danger to the community."

Stephens was indicted January 27 by a federal grand jury in Flint, Mich., on charges of bombing a vehicle and conspiracy to distribute cocaine, Beery said. He was arrested about 3:30 a.m. Wednesday by agents of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Beery said.

According to the indictment, Stephens and at least two other men participated in the Feb. 17, 1987 bombing of a truck in Michigan. He conspired to traffic in cocaine from April 1986 to March 1987, according to the indictment.

Both crimes allegedly occurred before Stephens, a Michigan native, moved to Midland to operate the Sandpiper.

District Attorney Al Schorre, who unsuccessfully prosecuted Stephens for the murder of Bernard Balero of Brownfield, said he was aware of the arrest but had no comment.

Amarillo attorney Jeff Blackburn, who designed the successful defense that resulted in Stephens' acquittal on the murder charge, said he was surprised by the arrest. He said his former client gave him no indication he was being investigated by federal authorities.

"Todd seems to be chronically misunderstood by law enforcement authorities everywhere," Blackburn said. "I certainly hope he can see his way to get free from these charges."

According to testimony in the two-day trial, the 25-year-old Balero was drunk and angry when he threatened to blackmail Stephens for "running a whorehouse," then returned later to a small party in the motel office with his hand stuffed in his shirt.

Balero was unarmed and a rolled-up tube sock was found near his body, witnesses said.

Stephens admitted he shot Balero three times with a .38-caliber handgun, but he told jurors he fired in self-defense.

The bombing charge is punishable by up to 10 years in federal prison, while the cocaine distribution charge carries a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison, Beery said.

Lawmen seize drugs, money

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Search warrant-armed police and members of the Permian Basin Drug Task Force late Wednesday night raided a northeast Odessa residence, arrested two men and seized drugs, cash, chemicals and equipment used in the manufacture of methamphetamine.

Cpl. John McAhon said "initial entry" of the residence at 2408 Beechwood was made by members of the Odessa Police Department's SWAT team with narcotics service detectives, patrol officers and drug task force agents standing by to assist in the raid.

Officers seized methamphetamine with an estimated street value of $1,000, as well as chemicals and laboratory glass associated with the manufacture of methamphetamine.

According to OPD Narcotics Service head Sgt. Darrell Gillis, officers confiscated $822 in cash in the possession of one of the men at the time of his arrest.

The two suspects, 27 and 28 years old, were to be arraigned before Municipal Court Judge J.E. Weatherly this morning on charges of possession of a controlled substance.

Murderer gets 20-year sentence

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 70th District Court jury Wednesday sentenced a 19-year-old man to 20 years in prison for the April 12, 1988 stabbing death of Noe Urias.

The jury of nine men and three women deliberated slightly more than two hours Tuesday to find Gabrino Sanchez guilty of the murder of Urias and about four hours Wednesday to set his punishment term at 20 years.

Sanchez faced the possibility of life in prison. Jurors apparently ignored defense attorney John Smith's plea for a probated 5-to-10 year probated sentence and Assistant District Attorney Dennis Cadra's urging that a "lengthy term" be imposed, if not the maximum sentence.

According to testimony during the trial by Sanchez, he pulled a knife after Urias grabbed him around the neck and was choking him. He said he wasn't aware he had stabbed Urias until later.

The incident reportedly began with gestures exchanged between the two men. This escalated to angry words and the physical confrontation.

Statues of rock 'n' roll singers to be unveiled

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — For rock 'n' roll fans, J.P. Richardson is immortal as the Big Bopper of the late 1950s, booming out "HELLO BAYYYYYYY-BEE!" at the start of his classic "Chantilly Lace."

And now on the 30th anniversary of the Bopper's death in a plane crash that also killed rock legend Buddy Holly and Ritchie Valens of "La Bamba" fame, their life-size likenesses are being preserved together for posterity in bronze.

"It looks good," J.P. Richardson III, the Bopper's son, said of photos he's seen of the sculpture by Port Arthur artist Doug Clark. "I guess if you had 10 sculptors in there you'd get 10 different things. You can look at it one way and it's just a dead ringer. I'm happy with it overall."

Richardson, 29, who now lives in Houston, and other members of the Holly and Valens families were invited to a reception tonight to get their first look at the sculpture of the Bopper and a companion bronze triumvirate of Richardson with his arms around Holly and Valens.

Clark said he worked from videos of Richardson and Holly and from photos of Valens. His pose of the three is intended to show the trio as they were standing for a picture just before boarding the fateful flight to Fargo, N.D.

"I don't know that there really is such a picture," Clark said. "But I could just imagine someone getting one last shot before they got on the airplane."

The Richardson sculpture shows the wide-eyed grinning singer with a guitar at his waist and his arms wide open.

"I was watching a video and at the end of 'Chantilly Lace' he held out his hands and I thought, 'That's it!' " Clark said.

On Friday, the Port Arthur Historical Society will hold a concert in Beaumont to unveil the sculptures before the public and mark the Feb. 3, 1959 crash near Clear Lake, Iowa.

Proceeds from the affair are intended to bolster the fund for purchasing a $50,000 building for a Port Arthur museum that would include local rock 'n' roll memorabilia.

The Port Arthur-Beaumont area is rich in music history and garnered much publicity a year ago with the unveiling of a Clark sculpture of late 1960s rock queen Janis Joplin, a Port Arthur native who died in 1970.

"Everybody said we should do something but nobody did," said John Palmer, a Port Arthur businessman credited with being the force behind the memorials.

Texas Tech students being immunized against measles

LUBBOCK (AP) — Hoping to avoid a red measles epidemic, Texas Tech University officials set up three emergency immunization locations on campus and said they were prepared to give free shots today to up to 1,000 students.

Fifteen cases had been reported among the student body by Wednesday noon, but by the end of the day the number of students infected with the highly contagious disease had risen to 50.

Dr. Scott Fry, director of student health services at the 24,000-student university, said approximately 1,400 students were immunized Wednesday. The shots will be provided again today and Friday, Fry said.

Students lined up in dormitories Wednesday to receive the vaccinations, and phone lines into the student health center were jammed all day as students sought information on how to avoid the illness.

Tech ordered 1,400 doses of vaccine for Wednesday's immunizations, and another 1,000 doses were on order. Officials rushed to get enough vaccine, because measles immunization must occur within three days of exposure to be effective.

City and campus health officials expressed fear the outbreak could spread among the 6,000 students who live or eat in university dormitories.

"Cases have been documented in residents of at least four different dorms," city health administrator Dr. Anthony Way said.

Health officials recommended that dormitory residents get the shot if they are under 33 or haven't been immunized against measles since before 1980.

"We have no way of knowing where the outbreak began," said Way. "But measles are extraordinarily contagious. One person can infect a very large number of other people in a very short amount of time."

The said no reports of measles cases have come from the Lubbock community outside Tech.

The Texas Department of Health said Texas Tech's measles outbreak is part of a recent statewide rise in occurrence of measles. As of Jan. 19, there were 344 confirmed cases of measles in Texas. Officials said they believe the outbreak began in the Houston area.

About 35 percent of the statewide cases were among school-age children.

Measles symptoms include a red rash, high fever and sore throat and eyes. Complications are rare, but the disease will "make the person very sick for a couple of weeks."

Some expressions, like overused cliches, better left unsaid

Todd

Some expressions, like cliches, are better not said. But they just emerge like lanky Johnson-grass in the cotton field and cockroaches in the pantry.

"Great." That's one. Ask somebody how he's dojng, give him something he wants, or pick up his tab, and the reply often is, "Great."

If folks such as you and I cease to search for preciseness in saying or writing what we mean, we might as well mutter indiscernible grunts and ughs in the spirit of a drunk not wanting to be awakened to the reality of his state of affairs.

In a frenzied moment, you bum a cigarette or borrow a stamp, say "Thanks," and the obliging person may say, "No problem."

If you are pleasantly surprised in getting your way, you happily may utter, "Wonderful." Was it really? Or was it just relief from anxiety?

A wonder might be the euphoric effects of a friendly caress or a hearty handshake or a kind word on a day marked by dismal moods.

Now, if you show a smidgen of interest in accomplishing something, a booster may exhort, "Go for it." And now emerging from the advertising ranks is "Just do it."

Just?
It?

The use of words is fascinating in formulating a language — in conveying ideas, emotions, thoughts.

But oftentimes mankind is prone to toss around words as if they were disposable coffee cups, non-returnable bottles, and throw-away diapers, clothes, cameras, and, sadly, innocent people, very young people, ideas and morals.

Indeed, there may be a correlation between society's habit of "tossing things" without regard of the consequences and without considering the symbolism and society's seeming disregard for specifics, preciseness, "keeping the faith" and abiding by the Good Commandments for living and letting live.

The words "viable" and "fantastic" were so indiscriminately bantered about that they seemed to have lost their attention-getting powers, as did the "wolf" cry in the old moralistic tale.

What's the purpose in all of this preaching? In part, it is to say that the use of words is a blessing in the enjoyment of life and in fulfilling noble causes and aspirations. Words, as in the unbridled tongue, can be quite ignoble.

Words can be full of sense and nonsense, such as those demonstrated by limerick-writer Edward Lear and marathoner Tim Baker, who, in a passing moment, observed: "Of all the places I've been, this is one of them."

STATUES

"I think we're really doing something here not only to honor the artists but to help other people appreciate the artists. These guys need to be recognized."

"We're certainly not celebrating his death, we're celebrating his life," Richardson's son said. "Of course, the death is always a sad time. But it's going to be a happy-sad time."

Richardson III was born three months after the death of his 33-year-old father, Jiles Perry Richardson Jr., who had gained fame in Southeast Texas as a disc jockey at KTRM in Beaumont and as a club performer in the area. His Big Bopper character was started in 1953.

As a writer, the elder Richardson already had made a name for himself in music circles for penning "Running Bear," a chart-topper sung by friend Johnny Preston of Port Arthur.

In 1958, he struck gold with "Chantilly Lace," which enabled him to hit the road in a big way. Richardson, a big man who often complained about being unable to get comfortable in bus seats, got a seat on the ill-fated flight with Holly when Holly's bass player, Waylon Jennings, gave up his spot on the plane headed for Fargo.

"He was my hero," said Palmer, who used to listen to the Bopper on the radio. "These guys were budding stars and then they were gone — whammo! It's frightening and it can happen to anybody. To think the only memorial to these guys is here, it shakes me. I'm so happy."

"Things went in different directions when dad was killed," Richardson's son said. "Mother being pregnant and having a daughter 5 at the time."

Richardson's wife remarried a year and a half later.

"The only dad I knew was my stepfather," he said. "I'm fortunate I guess. I had two dads."

Although his stepfather taught him the flooring business, for the past 14 months J.P. Richardson III has been collecting remembrances of his father and doing research for a movie to be made about the Big Bopper.

A limited edition book of photographs about Richardson's life was released this week and a compact disc rereleasing his recordings came out recently.

"I have two notebooks of songs written by my father that he never had a chance to record or have music — just lyrics," Richardson said.

"We have a lot to be thankful for. What we got out of it are friendships that will last a lifetime and love for one another. So it wasn't all bad."

6 sets of twins attend school's kindergarten

RICHWOOD (AP) — The words "double vision" have taken on a whole new meaning for three kindergarten teachers this school year.

With six sets of twins making up almost 10 percent of the kindergarten class at Gladys F. Polk Elementary School, matching names with the right faces has become more of a challenge than usual for teachers.

In 20 years of teaching, Kathy Ward said she has never seen such a high percentage of twins in one grade.

"We usually have one or two sets in a grade, but never have I seen six sets," said Ward, who is one of the kindergarten teachers.

To avoid special conflicts and behavioral problems, and because four sets of the twins are identical, each twin set was split into different classrooms. Ward says this helps deter potential discipline problems and aids in the development of individual personalities.

Teacher Jill Gates agreed, saying it is a challenge for the twins to develop their own personalities and individual traits.

Ms. Gates added that while individuality is stressed, it also is important to be conscious of what the other twin is doing in another class because one will say the other is "doing something we didn't do."

Being a twin has its ups and downs, say the 5- and 6-year-olds.

Looking alike doesn't necessarily mean thinking alike, said identical sisters Kelly and Julie Smith of Clute.

"Sometimes I call my sister Julie just to be funny, and I like it when we dress in the same clothes," 5-year-old Julie said.

Her blonde-haired, blue-eyed mirror image disagrees, saying she dislikes being mistaken for her sister and that always dressing the same isn't to her liking.

Brandie and Candie Pate, 5-year-olds from Richwood, say they like playing together and being mistaken for the other can have its benefits.

These twins should not have this problem too often right now, however, because Candie is missing her two front teeth, which gives her a slightly different look.

Estelle Soliz, a mother of twins who was surprised by her double blessing, gives an inside view to how home life can be with two girls who share the same birthday.

Since they have gotten older, it is getting easier to raise the 6-year-old fraternal twins. Just easier, not easy she said.

Rachel and Rebecca have different personalities, their mother says, with Rebecca being a loner and more independent, while Rachel likes to have someone around her most of the time.

Rebecca dominates her shorter twin, and "if Rebecca doesn't want to go to school, then Rachel suddenly doesn't feel so well either," their mother said.

While teaching one twin from each of the six sets could pose problems at times, teacher Jackie Brawner said there really is no difference between teaching a twin and someone who is not a twin.

"Each student is different anyway," the kindergarten teacher said. "I don't compare them, whether they are a twin or not."

It sometimes is difficult to keep their names straight, however, Ms. Brawner said.

"Even when I know who I'm talking to, I sometimes call one of the twins the other's name."

Tips given on how to safely jump-start dead battery

From Staff Reports

The Midland chapter of the Texas Society to Prevent Blindness has some tips for those attempting to jump-start a dead battery in these cold winter months.

Car batteries are capable of producing highly explosive gases, said Jeannette Bryant, executive director of the Midland TSPB chapter. Incorrect jump-starting procedures can cause sparks to ignite the gases, sending battery acid and casing fragments flying in every direction, she said.

- Check owner's manual for instruction. Don't jump-start a battery if the battery fluid is frozen. Wear chemical splash goggles. Keep sparks, flames and cigarettes away from batteries.
- Before attaching the cables, be sure the vehicles are not touching, are in the neutral or park gears, that the ignitions are both are off and that the emergency brakes are set. Be sure the electrical systems of both vehicles are the same voltage. If the battery has vent caps, make sure they are tight and level. If available, place a damp cloth over the vent caps of the dead batteries.
- When attaching the cables, clamp the positive cable to the positive terminal of the dead battery. Don't allow positive cable clamps to touch any metal other than the battery terminal. Connect the other end of positive cable to the positive terminal of the live battery. Connect one end of the negative cable to the negative terminal of the live battery. Make the final connection on the engine block of the disabled car (not to negative battery post). The connection should be as far away as possible from the battery, the carburetor, fuel line and any tubing or moving posts.
- Keep bystanders far back from both vehicles. Start the car with the live battery, then start the disabled car.
- Remove the cables in reverse order of connections, beginning by first removing cable from the engine block.

Should an accident occur and battery acid get into the eyes, immediately flush them with water for at least 15 minutes. Seek emergency medical assistance.

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas police and federal authorities have arrested a Carrollton man after he attempted to hire a hit man to kill a U.S. Customs special agent.

Chandrasekha "Shaker" Ivatury, 25, was being held in the Lew Sterrett Justice Center without bond on a state charge of soliciting capital murder.

Ivatury was arrested at a north Dallas hotel Wednesday when he allegedly went to the hotel to meet with an undercover agent posing as a hit man, federal officers said.

The former LTV Corp. employee had met with the undercover agent several times and had agreed to pay him $10,000 to kill the Customs Service agent.

Customs officials said Ivatury, a naturalized citizen originally from India, was an associate of two Dallas-area men who were indicted in December on money-laundering charges after an 18-month federal sting operation based in Philadelphia.

Other officers elected are, Jerri Fielding Sullivan of Odessa, vice president; Becky Brewster of Van Horn, secretary/treasurer; and Aurora Gutierrez of Fort Stockton, reporter/historian.

The West Texas Chapter parallels the Texas Municipal League Region IV, which covers 25 counties and is bounded by the cities of Andrews, Colorado City, Presidio and El Paso.

Witness says Air Force tanker 'backfired' before crashing

ABILENE (AP) — Witnesses say a fuel-laden Air Force tanker plane was "popping" or "backfiring" before it crashed on takeoff, but the investigation may be hampered by the lack of a flight data recorder and the apparent loss of maintenance records aboard the plane.

All 19 people aboard the KC-135A Stratotanker died when it crashed upon takeoff about a half-mile south of a Dyess Air Force Base runway shortly after noon Tuesday.

Skeet Jackson, who saw the crash from his back yard, said the plane never got more than about 60 feet off the ground.

"That left wing hit the ground and (crashed) just like these pictures of atomic bombs you've seen," Jackson said. "The engines were backfiring or popping. He (the pilot) made a sharp turn...and crashed."

Maj. Suzanne Randle, spokeswoman at Strategic Air Command headquarters in Omaha, Neb., said the KC-135A could fly if one of its engines was out. Its ability to fly with even less power would depend on a number of factors including weight, temperature, pressure and altitude, Ms. Randle said.

The Air Force said the plane that crashed had been in service since 1963 and was still carrying its original four Pratt & Whitney engines.

The tanker, based at K.I. Sawyer Air Force Base in Michigan, stopped at Dyess en route for a training mission. It was scheduled to refuel some F-16s in the air before flying to Hawaii and then Guam.

The plane was carrying military members and their dependents and carrying 30,000 gallons of jet fuel, officials said.

Their investigation could be hampered by the fact that no flight data recorder was aboard the modified Boeing 707, said 1st Lt. John Ames, deputy chief of public affairs at Dyess. Ames said he didn't know if a cockpit voice recorder was aboard.

Sawyer officials said the plane's maintenance files were aboard, which also could handicap the investigation.

"It's fairly common to carry maintenance records on the aircraft when it's going to be deployed for an extensive period of time, in this case, approximately six weeks. Some of those are duplicated, but not all," Sawyer spokesman Capt. Paul Bicking said.

Air Force personnel on Wednesday used stakes and red flags to map out about 2 square miles of scorched grassland and woods around the crash site, said Master Sgt. Al Dostal, a Dyess spokesman.

"Once it's staked out, it can snow and these flags have numbers, they can still see where things are," Dostal said.

Sam Matta, an Abilene justice of the peace who spent Tuesday at the site to record deaths, said the plane was in many pieces, the largest of them the tail section.

The flight manifest showed 17 passengers from Sawyer, and two from Dyess, Dostal said. Seven were crew members, four were active duty military members, four were retired military, and four were dependents, including a boy between the age of 6 and 8, he said.

One of the passengers, James A. Phillips, 58, a retired technical sergeant, was from Abilene, officials said.

His wife, Norma, said he was taking advantage of the military's "space-available" flight option for the first time since he retired in 1973.

She said her husband, a 23-year veteran of the Air Force, was going to Guam to visit his son, who is in the Navy and was married recently.

Three crew members were maintenance workers who accompany the craft during long flights.

Michigan base 'sad place' now, says psychologist

GWINN, Mich. (AP) — The luck ran out this week at K.I. Sawyer Air Force Base, whose personnel had miraculously survived two aviation accidents in the past four months.

"It's a fairly sad place right now," Marquette University psychologist Travis Martin said Wednesday as the people at Sawyer grieved for 19 colleagues and relatives killed when a KC-135A air tanker crashed in Texas.

Flags around the base, 10 miles from the Lake Superior shoreline in Michigan's Upper Peninsula, stood at half-staff, shivering in a bitter wind.

"That's eerie, to see that flag," said one airman. "It's even worse to see the families (of victims) coming in."

A military refueling plane from Sawyer crashed and exploded in a mesquite field Tuesday as it tried to take off from Dyess Air Force Base near Abilene, Texas, on a training flight to Hawaii.

In addition to the seven-member crew, the aircraft carried at least three active-duty personnel and seven military retirees and their relatives. The identities of two other victims were not released.

At Sawyer, 350 miles northwest of Detroit, members of the close-knit base community reacted with silence and sadness Wednesday. Routine operations were carried on, but participation in a national prayer breakfast today was canceled.

"Our family is going through the process of mourning. We're caring for our people," the base wing commander, Col. Eldon Joersz, said in a terse meeting with reporters.

Memorial services at the base chapel are planned for Friday. Joersz said the base community would remain closed to the news media until after the service. About 1,900 families live at Sawyer.

The somber mood at the base contrasted with an atmosphere of relief at Sawyer following the Dec. 6 explosion of a B-52 bomber going through touch-and-go landings on the base's main runway. All eight crew members survived in what base personnel called a miracle.

Just three months earlier, 10 Sawyer personnel had leaped out of an exploding KC-135 in a crash that killed six people at a sister Michigan base.

"When you narrowly escape disaster, you feel like there was divine intervention...," said Dr. Robert Moore, a Marquette psychologist.

With this third crash, Sawyer personnel must cope with the feelings they had ignored, he said.

"Now the ultimate has happened. This will stimulate all sorts of reaction," Moore said.

Victims' names listed

ABILENE (AP) — Here is a list of 17 of the 19 victims of Tuesday's KC-135 crash at Dyess Air Force Base as provided by the Air Force.

The name of one victim was withheld pending notification of next of kin. The name of a second victim was withheld at the request of the family.

3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♡

Looking at all four hands, the play at four spades is simple. However, after a heart lead can you guarantee your contract, assuming trumps are no worse than 3–1, if all you could see is your side's assets?

North's jump to three spades showed a hand worth almost an opening bid and four-card support. South had more than enough to continue on to game.

West led the top of his heart sequence and, since there was no point to a holdup play, declarer took the ace. If trumps were 2–2, declarer could claim the contract regardless of the club situation, so he cashed the king–ace only to learn that he had a loser in that suit. The club suit now became crucial.

Looking at all four hands, it is obvious that declarer can pick up the clubs with two finesses. But that would be a foolish line to adopt since a 3–2 break with split honors is far more likely than than the precise 4–1 distribution that actually existed. But declarer found a way to neutralize any distribution of the club suit.

He cashed the ace of diamonds and ruffed a diamond, then cashed the king of clubs. With his groundwork completed, he exited with a heart. The defenders did as well as they could by taking their two heart tricks, ending in the East hand. East cashed his high trump but, since a red-suit lead would give declarer a ruff-sluff, he was forced to exit with a club; he chose the ten.

Declarer let that ride round to dummy's ace. Had West followed, declarer would have cashed the queen and claimed. But when West showed out, the finesse for the jack was marked and the contract was safe. Note that, had declarer not cashed the king of clubs early, he would have been faced with a guess in the club suit. South's line would have proved equally effective had clubs split 5–0, or if West held four clubs. Try it, if you don't believe us.

HONOLULU (AP) — Ferdinand Marcos has been placed back on a respirator and has taken a "definite turn for the worse," and his wife is recovering after fainting while accompanying him to the operating room, officials say.

Imelda Marcos

Ferdinand Marcos

The 71-year-old ousted Philippine president was listed in critical condition and under intensive care after emergency surgery Wednesday at St. Francis Medical Center, said hospital spokeswoman Norma Kop.

"He's basically very, very weak and depending completely on the respirator to regulate his breathing," she said. "He had been doing better, so this is a definite turn for the worse."

Joe Lazo, a friend who visited the couple Wednesday, said Marcos "looks the worst I've ever seen him."

Early Wednesday, Marcos underwent an emergency tracheotomy because of fluids building up in his lungs, nursing supervisor Cindy Miller said.

During the 40-minute operation, a tube was inserted into Marcos' throat to make it easier for him to breathe and to clear his lungs. He was hooked to a respirator and had a slight fever, she said.

Marcos' 59-year-old wife, Imelda, fainted while accompanying her husband as he was being wheeled to surgery, and fell and hit her head, Miller said.

"She was exhausted, she's gone several days without sleep, and then knowing what they were doing to the president, she just passed out," said Marcos spokesman Gemmo Trinidad, adding that he expected Mrs. Marcos to be hospitalized for one or two days.

No one caught Mrs. Marcos as she fell face forward onto the floor because everyone was walking behind her as Marcos was being wheeled to surgery, Trinidad said.

"I was so shocked," Trinidad said. "All of this is just starting to get to her. ... I hope it's nothing serious. The doctors said she needs a lot of rest."

Mrs. Marcos' head injury was not serious, but she was admitted into the room that had been used by her husband and was listed in satisfactory condition, Miller said.

An aide who answered the phone in her hospital room said Mrs. Marcos was resting comfortably but unable to take calls.

Marcos was admitted to the hospital on Jan. 15 for treatment of pneumonia and bronchial asthma. In December, he was hospitalized twice for treatment of congestive heart failure.

A federal judge in New York is to decide this month whether Marcos is healthy enough to stand trial on criminal racketeering charges accusing him of plundering his homeland and stashing much of the money in the United States.

Mrs. Marcos pleaded innocent to the charges and is free on $5 million bail.

The Marcoses have lived in Hawaii since fleeing the Philippines during a civilian-military uprising that brought Corazon Aquino to power in February 1986.

In Manila today, Mrs. Aquino said she believed that Marcos' condition "is neither critical nor serious."

NEW YORK (AP) — It's official — it'll be the Sam and Diane show.

ABC News scored a major coup Wednesday by signing CBS "60 Minutes" correspondent Diane Sawyer to be co-anchor with Sam Donaldson on a new prime-time ABC News program scheduled to go on the air later this year.

Sawyer

"I think it's a great thing for us, and I think it's going to be a wonderful thing for her," said ABC News President Roone Arledge.

ABC also recently hired Chris Wallace away from NBC to be chief correspondent on the as-yet-untitled program that sounds something like a prime-time version of "Nightline," but with more time outside the studio.

Donaldson said he was "delighted" by the signing of Sawyer.

"From the very first time that I discussed this program with Roone Arledge months ago, we all understood if Diane would come to work at ABC it would be a tremendous asset," said Donaldson. "I always wanted Diane."

Sawyer said she was "grateful for every moment at CBS, but ABC is also a formidable news organization and this is a great creative adventure."

Arledge said he had approached Sawyer a few years ago when her contract was up at CBS, where she has been since 1978, but did not have an appropriate job to offer her. She turned down an offer from NBC and stayed with CBS, where she is reported to make $1.2 million a year.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Actress-singer Madonna and actor Sean Penn apparently have reached an amicable agreement to end their stormy three-year marriage and divide their property, court records show.

A divorce petition filed in Los Angeles County Superior Court cited irreconcilable differences and seeks restoration of the pop singer's former name, Madonna Ciccone.

It also said community property and financial obligations shared by the couple "have been disposed of by written agreement." No details were disclosed in the two-page petition filed Jan. 25.

Madonna publicist Liz Rosenberg said last week Penn would get the couple's Malibu home and the singer would keep their New York apartment. Madonna recently bought a $2.9 million Hollywood Hills home.

The divorce action follows a Dec. 28 incident in which Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department deputies were called to the couple's Malibu home after the hot-tempered Penn allegedly beat Madonna. No charges were filed.

HILLSBORO, Ohio (AP) — An attorney for Johnny Paycheck has asked for a delay in the country singer's resentencing for the 1985 tavern shooting of another man.

Paycheck, 50, was convicted May 17, 1986, of aggravated assault and tampering with evidence in the Dec. 19, 1985, shooting of Larry Wise in a Hillsboro tavern. Wise was grazed in the forehead, recovered and testified against Paycheck.

The singer, best known for his song, "Take this Job and Shove It," has remained free while appealing his conviction and has been doing concerts, lawyer Ralph Buss said Wednesday.

Bomb on Flight 103 in CIA case, station reports

LONDON (AP) — The bomb that blew up Pan Am Flight 103 over Scotland was planted by Palestinian terrorists in the luggage of a CIA agent, a radio station said today.

David Johnson, head of the news department at Radio Forth in Edinburgh, reported the CIA officer was returning from Beirut with five colleagues after a mission to negotiate release of the nine American hostages in Lebanon.

Investigators In Lockerbie, Scotland, where the investigation into the Dec. 21 disaster is headquartered, refused comment on the report, which cited information from unidentified Scottish police sources.

In December, U.S. officials in Washington, speaking on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press the CIA's chief in Beirut was among the jet's passengers. They did not give the agent's name.

At that time, the FBI's executive assistant director, Oliver Revell, denied the agent was on the jet.

Radio Forth did not name the agent it said was on the jet. It said investigators believe a three-pound charge of Semtex explosive and a timing device were slipped into the agent's luggage by Palestinian terrorists who infiltrated the secret Beirut mission.

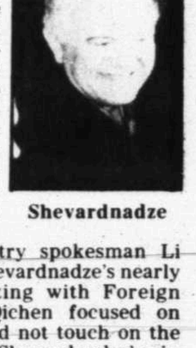

It speculated the perpetrators belonged to Ahmed Jibril's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command. Jibril has been accused in the past of involvement in the bombing and has denied it.

Wednesday night, CBS News said Jibril was the principal architect of the bombing. It said Jibril, based in Syria, was working for Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi but was required to clear the operation with Syrian intelligence officials.

Chinese, Soviets agree Cambodian peace nears

BEIJING (AP) — The foreign ministers of China and the Soviet Union agreed today that progress is being made in resolving the Cambodia conflict, which has hampered Sino-Soviet efforts to end a generation of strained relations.

Shevardnadze

The Soviet, Eduard Shevardnadze, also concurred with the Chinese position that international supervision will be needed to ensure peace in Cambodia after Vietnam ends its 10-year occupation of the Southeast Asian country.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Li Zhaoxing said Shevardnadze's nearly three-hour meeting with Foreign Minister Qian Qichen focused on Cambodia and did not touch on the main purpose of Shevardnadze's visit — setting a date for the first Sino-Soviet summit since 1959.

The meeting between Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and Chinese senior leader Deng Xiaoping, expected this spring, is likely to be discussed when the foreign ministers meet again Friday.

Li quoted Shevardnadze as saying the process of settling the Cambodian question is "speeding up." Qian agreed, saying "the situation concerning the Kampuchean (Cambodian) question has been developing."

Qian said the three Chinese-backed resistance factions and the Vietnam-backed government should be allowed to solve the question of Cambodia's future free from outside interference.

Asked by reporters if Cambodia has ceased to be an obstacle to better Sino-Soviet relations, Li said: "Both China and the Soviet Union maintain that Vietnam should pull out all its troops from Kampuchea as early as possible. The two sides hold that the Kampuchean question should be given a fair and reasonable solution and for this purpose the two countries have been making much effort."

Differences reportedly remain on the structure of a transitional government and the nature of the "international supervision" to be introduced after Vietnam's pullout. Vietnam has promised to withdraw its troops by September.

China has said Moscow's financial support for Vietnam is the most serious of "three obstacles" to normalizing political relations strained for the past three decades.

The other two were the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan — which Moscow says will end this month — and Soviet troop strength on the Sino-Soviet border. Gorbachev last month pledged to reduce Soviet troops in Asia, many of whom are along the Chinese border, by 200,000.

Soviets explore formal ties with Saudis

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union, which has had no formal diplomatic ties to Saudi Arabia in 50 years, has offered to resume full relations with the Moslem nation, a Soviet official here disclosed Wednesday.

The Saudis, longtime anti-communists, have not yet replied to the offer but are expected to agree to it in the next several months, according to a representative of the Saudi government.

Renewed relations with the Saudis would significantly boost Soviet influence in the Middle East and increase its role in the peace process. In recent weeks, the Soviet Union has upgraded its ties with Israel.

Oleg Derkovsky, first secretary at the Soviet embassy, said Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Yuli Vorontsov offered to restore relations last month when he met with King Fahd, the Saudi monarch, in Riyadh. During the meeting, they discussed the Soviet troop withdrawal from Afghanistan, an action that Fahd has strongly urged.

"Our Saudi friends know we would be happy to resume diplomatic exchanges, to restore the missions that we had in each other's countries in the 1920s and 1930s," Derkovsky said.

The Saudi representative, who asked not to be identified, acknowledged that Saudi leaders are considering the offer and added: "The Soviets don't realize how long it takes the Saudis to shift gears."

A senior State Department official, who also spoke on condition of anonymity, said the Saudi leaders are meeting "opposition from the nation's clerics, who are fundamentally anti-communist and anti-atheist."

Saudi Arabia established diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union in 1928 but withdrew its mission to Moscow in 1939 at the start of the World War II in Europe.

The Saudis broke off relations because they were "afraid of the influence of the infidels, the communists," Derkovsky said.

In recent months, he added, Soviet-Saudi relations have warmed considerably: "We meet in third countries."

Praise for TV heroine sends men to Iranian jail

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A Japanese soap opera is so much the rage in fundamentalist Iran that sacrilegious praise of its heroine during a live radio call-in program led to the brief imprisonment of four Tehran Radio executives.

An unidentified female caller had contended the series' persevering protagonist is a better role model for Iranian women than the daughter of Mohammed, the founder of Islam.

Those remarks in this predominantly Shiite Moslem land of 50 million people triggered an outcry similar to John Lennon's remark during a 1960s news conference that the Beatles were "more popular than Jesus Christ."

Khomeini

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini angrily demanded the radio executives be punished for offending Islam and his wish was heeded.

Theology aside, the television show "Oshin," which depicts a girl's travails in devastated postwar Japan, is wildly popular among Iranians as they recover from their eight-year war with Iraq.

Traffic stops and blackouts are postponed during broadcasts of the serial, whose heroine, Oshin, suffers every imaginable hardship and setback.

The four executives were sentenced to prison terms by a Tehran court Tuesday for broadcasting the phone-in program.

Broadcast Director Mohammad Arab Mazar-Yazdi got five years and each of the three others — Mahmoud Abulqasemi, director of Islamic ideology; Hamid Khunmeri, head of supervision; and Mohammad Raseki, editor of ideological programs — received a four-year sentence and 50 lashes.

But the official Islamic Republic News Agency today quoted the daily newspaper Jomhuri Islami as saying Khomeini agreed to pardon the broadcasters Wednesday after receiving an appeal on their behalf from Chief Justice Abdolkarim Musavi Ardebili.

The news agency, monitored in Nicosia, said Khomeini had stressed in a letter to the state-run radio's director that "if proven there was a deliberate insult" the caller should "receive the death sentence."

The revolutionary patriarch's fierce reaction to the call underlined the religious passions that flow through Iran. But those passions have not kept the soap opera from captivating Iranian television viewers.

The drama, whose broadcasts began last year in Iran, was chosen by officials who thought Oshin an exemplary role model for Iranians suffering hardships that included Iraqi rocket attacks on Tehran and the loss of, by some estimates, a million of their countrymen.

It became an instant hit.

Week after week, Oshin, struggles on despite food shortages and cruel relatives, loses her house in a fire, and faces trial after trial.

After Oshin's father died in one episode, an Iranian newspaper published a full-page obituary. Letters of condolence and telegrams poured in from all over the country.

An Iranian schoolboy who recently traveled to Cyprus brought with him a prized possession: a pocket-sized poster of Oshin, which he said he bought outside his school for about $2.50.

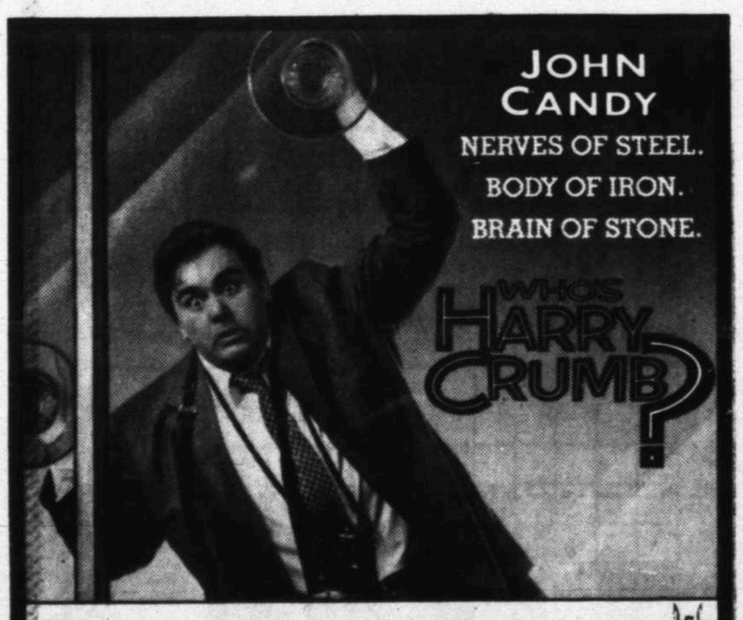

Oshin has become a popular brand name for everything from shoes to electrical appliances. According to travelers from Tehran, it's also a favorite name for newborn baby girls.

Daily power outages, which last up to six hours in the larger cities, are never scheduled for Saturday nights, when Oshin is broadcast.

Just before the hour-long episodes, TV announcers ask viewers to switch off all unnecessary electric lights and appliances so the power supply will not be overloaded while the show is running.

One Tehran woman who experienced an unexpected blackout on Saturday recently while Oshin was showing, called a taxi to take her to another part of the city where the power was still on so she could see the show.

The driver raced her to a cafe, where both sat down to see the program over a cup of tea.

Herpes virus becomes resistant to common anti-viral drug

BOSTON (AP) — The appearance of viruses that can escape the herpes drug may be an early sign that a new class of medicines designed to wipe out viruses will be outwitted by its foes, just as bacteria-killing drugs have been, researchers say.

Disease-causing herpes viruses that are resistant to the widely used drug acyclovir have been seen in AIDS patients, who have little natural ability to ward off microbes.

Resistant viruses have not been found in otherwise healthy people who take the drug for ordinary outbreaks of genital herpes sores. Researchers disagree over whether the resistant viruses will spread into the general population.

"We see no lack of efficacy of acyclovir in normal patients. I don't think it should be a concern at all," said Dr. Nick Ellis, a senior scientist at Burroughs Wellcome Co., which produces the drug.

However, Dr. Martin S. Hirsch of Massachusetts General Hospital said the current situation may parallel the development of penicillin in the 1940s.

"For the last 40 years, it's been a battle between the organism and the drug to see which can outwit the other, and it's been a series of new drugs to try to overcome bacterial resistance," Hirsch said in an interview. "Viruses have never presented that problem up until now, but it wouldn't surprise me that during the next 40 years we see the same kind of phenomenon developing in virology."

Two reports on drug-resistant viruses are being published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

In one of the studies, doctors described the cases of 12 AIDS patients who developed severe herpes infections that did not respond to acyclovir. One co-author, Dr. John Mills of San Francisco General Hospital, estimates that one in 1,000 AIDS patients has acyclovir-resistant herpes.

In the other study, doctors reported two AIDS victims and one leukemia patient who had overwhelming cytomegalovirus, or CMV, infection that could not be treated with ganciclovir, a still-experimental antiviral drug.

Researchers believe that resistance occurs through natural genetic mutation. A strain of the virus emerges that has genes making it impervious to a drug. Then the resistant strain multiplies and spreads through the victim's body while all the other forms of the virus are killed off by the medicine.

An estimated 30 million Americans are infected with the genital herpes virus, known as herpes simplex virus type 2. Most of them never develop any symptoms. But for the minority with recurring genital sores, acyclovir is the only treatment, although others are being tested.

Cytomegalovirus infects an estimated 60 percent to 90 percent of Americans and rarely causes illness in otherwise healthy people. However, in those whose disease defenses are weak, the virus can attack organs through the body, resulting in blindness or death.

Ever since acyclovir's introduction seven years ago as the first widely available antiviral drug, some virus researchers have worried that the herpes virus would evolve into forms that could elude the medicine and still cause disease.

"What we had feared for many years would happen now appears to be happening, at least in the AIDS population," said Hirsch.

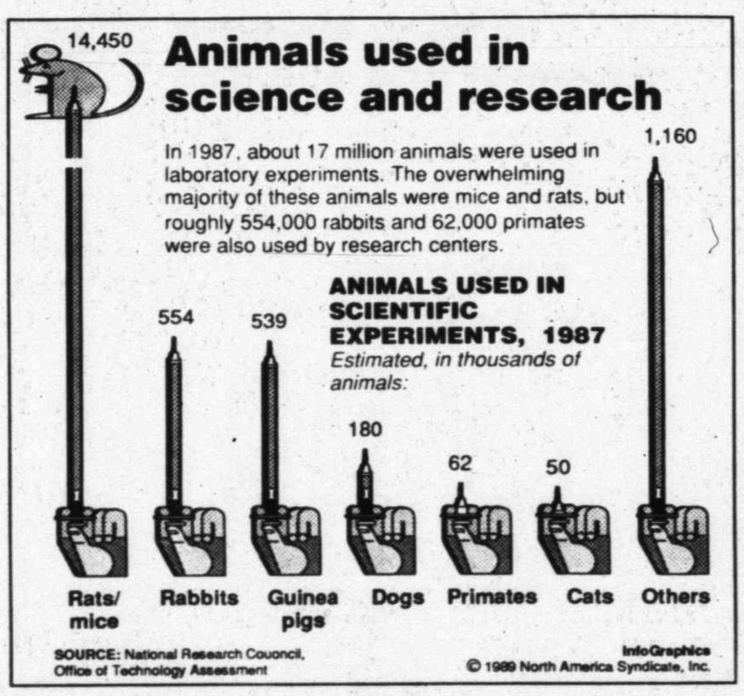

Dr. M. Colin Jordan of the University of Minnesota, a co-author of one of the studies, said he expects drug-resistant viruses to complicate treatment of organ transplant patients. They must take immunity-lowering drugs to keep their bodies from rejecting their new organs.

Since the drug-resistant viruses have not been seen in healthy people, doctors cannot be sure whether the viruses will become a problem for the general population.

"One concern is that someone with AIDS could give one of these resistant viruses to someone else, and then it could become established in the normal population," said Jordan.

Dr. Clyde S. Crumpacker of Boston's Beth Israel Hospital, another co-author of the research, said he doubts this will happen.

"I have been aware of most of the cases of resistance that have occurred, and it is an unlikely event," he said. "It is not occurring in the normal population that we have been watching."

Computers may explain how brain functions

New York Times News Service

SAN DIEGO — Scientists have hopes that computers known as neural networks might give important clues about how the brain works, but such excitement is premature, says Francis Crick, a scientist at the Salk Institute in La Jolla.

In fact, neural networks are not accurate models of how the brain works, Crick, a Nobel laureate and unraveler of the genetic code of human inheritance, wrote in a commentary for today's issue of the British science journal Nature. Neural networks and the function of the human brain are different in many fundamental respects, wrote Crick, who could not be reached for comment yesterday (January 11).

Surveying progress of neural networks, Crick urged those interested in understanding brain function: "Why not look inside the brain, both to get new ideas and to test existing ones?"

These days, the brain is a fascination of Crick, who, with James Watson in the 1950s, described the double helix structure of deoxyribonucleic acid, or DNA, the substance present in all cells that gives rise to a person's inherited characteristics.

In Nature, Crick noted that neural networks have shown promise, such as the ability to "learn" by example rather than by programmed rules. Neural networks take in information, process it and transmit it in ways similar to neurons in the human brain. There is much interest in their ability to recognize some patterns.

But the differences are significant, Crick wrote. A computer is faster than a brain. A computer has relatively few connections to carry information, but a brain has many connections among neurons.

Study reveals Hispanics least often cancer victims

By FAY FIORE
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — Researchers have learned that Hispanics here are least often the victims of cancer, black men most ofen die from it and affluent white women have breast cancer more often than do women of color.

The study by University of California scientists not only suggests that cancer rates are ethnically diverse, but seems to show that lifestyles play a role in determining who develops the disease and who survives.

The report, a first-ever assessment of cancer in a major urban area, concludes that the cancer rate among Hispanic men and women is 25 percent lower than whites because they smoke fewer cigarettes.

Hormone imbalances, high-fat diets and poor access to health care appear to contribute to more lung and prostate cancer in black men, the researchers said.

And white women, particularly those in higher income brackets, are probably more susceptible to breast cancer because, on average, they bear their first babies five years later than black and Hispanic women.

"The (white) community could benefit by considering the various factors responsible for the more favorable cancer experience of...Hispanics," the authors wrote.

The study was done by the Jonsson Comprehensive Cancer Center at the University of California at Los Ageles and the Kenneth Norris Jr. Comprehensive Cancer Center at the University of Southern California.

The researchers, who published their findings in a book, "Cancer in Los Angeles," also reported that:

White women develop breast cancer 41 percent more often than Hispanic women and 25 percent more often than blacks. Weight gain, consumption of fats and the age at which a woman starts menstruating are believed to be factors.

White women are more likely to develop some form of cancer than are black and Hispanic women. But women of color more often are victims of cervical cancer.

The researchers said they now have the tools to cut cancer deaths in half by the year 2000.

But the odds may be against them as funds dwindle, cultural barriers endure and Hispanic immigrants pick up unhealthy habits of an affluent society.

Even if medical science simply holds the line on cancer among Hispanics, the death rate in the county would continue to fall by the turn of the century.

But while physicians celebrate the Hispanic community's relative success against cancer, the tobacco industry has targeted them in marketing cigarettes. Smoking is already increasingly popular among Hispanic men and women. And Los Angeles Unified School District figures show that Hispanic adolescents are taking up cigarettes almost as much as their white counterparts, the doctors said.

"That certainly does not bode well for the future," said Dr. Ron Ross, associate director for cancer cause and prevention at USC and co-author of the study.

Physicians say they are winning the war against cancer, but lack of money is keeping them from sharing the spoils.

Childhood tumors and leukemia that were uniformly fatal a decade ago are now fully treatable. Cigarette smoking and diet are each known to contribute to one-third of all cancer deaths, making prevention a formidable weapon. And early detection is common with breast examinations, Pap smears and routine checkups.

EXPRESSIONS OF CONCERN

A patient who has excessive sagging in his brows, to the extent that they overhang the eyes, may want to consider a procedure known as a "coronal lift." This raising of the forehead is also helpful for patients with etched-in frowns, prominent horizontal "worry" lines, pleats at the root of the nose, and/or a sagging nose. Those with hyperactive forehead muscles often appear to be perpetually frowning, scowling or perplexed. A forehead lift seeks to alleviate these unintended expressions by removing or weakening the muscles of the forehead. This is done through an incision just above the highest worry line. If necessary, excessive skin is also removed. This procedure may not be widely known by the public, but it is usually met with a high degree of satisfaction once performed.

It is not unusual for patients to have a forehead/brow lift at the same time as eyelid surgery or a facelift. If you have considered any or all of these procedures, consult a board certified plastic surgeon for an evaluation. PERMIAN SURGICAL CENTER is located at 848 Central in Odessa. Cosmetic facial surgery is performed. Computer imaging is available so that you may visualize results. Office hours: M-F 8-5. Tel. 335-8711 or 563-3110. Member ASPRS.

P.S.
Nearly 25 percent of older people have hooded eyelids because the forehead sags excessively downward.

Rebels suspend attacks

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas say the favorable U.S. response to their proposal to take part in elections has moved them to suspend attacks on U.S. institutions and personnel.

Wednesday's announcement reverses a rebel stand that held U.S. personnel or property as legitimate targets because Washington has given President Jose Napoleon Duarte's government about a million dollars a day economic and military aid.

The insurgents last week offered to take part in presidential elections if the vote were postponed from March 19 to September and their security concerns were met. It was a major turnabout for the rebels, who had condemned all previous elections this decade as shams.

The government has reacted negatively to the proposal, which it terms unconstitutional.

Leakey back at museum

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Anthropologist Richard Leakey, who resigned as director of the National Museums of Kenya nearly two weeks ago, was back at work today, but he refused to explain why he had changed his mind.

The scientist declined to discuss the circumstances that led him to return Wednesday as director and chief executive of the museum.

His secretary told The Associated Press that Leakey was back in his office today, but "says he doesn't want to talk to the press."

Leakey, 45, son of the late anthropologist Louis Leakey, had headed the National Museums of Kenya for 20 years when he resigned Jan. 20.

At that time, Leakey said the Ministry of Home Affairs had appointed a new board of trustees for the museum without consultations, and that he was helping carry out the ministry's "reorganization."

Botha out as party leader

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha, recovering from a stroke he suffered two weeks ago, resigned today as the leader of the governing National Party but said he will stay on as the nation's president.

Botha, 73, told party officials in a letter that he was resigning the party post to concentrate on his presidential duties and to distance the presidency from partisan politics, state radio reported.

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle today embarked on a second day of high-level meetings as he sandwiched get-acquainted sessions with heads of state around the inaugural ceremony for Venezuela's new president.

Quayle met this morning with Spain's prime minister, Felipe Gonzalez, and then with Brazilian President Jose Sarney.

Vice President Dan Quayle and Cecilia Durand

The meeting with Sarney centered almost entirely on the Latin debt crisis and the one with Gonzalez on a range of U.S.-European political and security issues, said Quayle's press secretary, David Beckwith.

There was no opportunity to question the vice president before he headed over to the morning's inauguration of Carlos Andres Perez following the meetings in a hotel suite.

U.S. Ambassador Otto Reich said Quayle seems to be developing a good rapport and handling himself confidently in the meetings. He said the foreign leaders mostly want to ask questions about the Bush administration policies on the Third World debt situation and Central American conflicts.

"They like him. There is very good rapport. They think he's very open, obviously very interested in listening," Reich said.

Quayle has explained that the new administration's policies are still developing, the ambassador said. "He's explaining ... that the administration is less than two weeks old."

While Quayle held bilateral meetings upstairs in the Caracas Hilton Hotel, Cuba's President Fidel Castro met briefly with Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega in the downstairs lobby.

Quayle and the U.S. delegation are trying to learn more about a peace proposal that Ortega brought with him to Caracas, according to a U.S. official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Quayle will not meet with Ortega, Reich said, but the Nicaraguan shared his proposal in a meeting Wednesday with former President Carter and Perez. Carter decliined to discuss details.

Reich said Quayle had no plans to meet with Carter, although the two did speak briefly Wednesday night at a reception held at the ambasssador's residence.

U.S. experts head for Antarctic spill

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Tons of equipment that left the United States on an Air Force transport with a team of clean-up experts headed for Antarctica today to tackle an oil spill that poses a major environmental threat.

The huge C-5 plane was bound for the southern city of Punta Arenas, where its cargo and the 15-member team will be transferred to a U.S. research vessel, the Polar Duke, the U.S. Embassy in Santiago said.

In the Antarctic, U.S. scientists were trying to catch floating oil barrels and propane containers near the spill, which was four miles in diameter and moving to the southwest, the National Science Foundation said.

The agency said in Washington that the Argentine supply vessel that released the oil after it ran aground and sank had carried 250,000 gallons of diesel fuel. It said an "incurable disaster" would result if all the fuel leaks into the pristine region's unspoiled waters.

In Buenos Aires, an Argentine navy spokesman insisted that the spill was not posing a serious ecological threat.

The Bahia Paraiso (Paradise Bay) ran aground Saturday in the Bismarck Strait, about 600 miles south of the southern tip of South America and 1½ miles from the U.S. Palmer Research Station on the Antarctic Peninsula.

All passengers and crew were rescued, but the ship floated free in heavy seas and sank Tuesday.

District coaches agree on 18 point system

At 4-3, vote close on new method

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

BIG SPRING — District 4-5A coaches agreed Wednesday to submit an 18 positive-point system for deciding multiple ties as their proposal to the District 4-5A Executive Committee.

The Executive Committee decided last week that multiple ties would no longer be decided by the flip of coins as happened this past football season in a three-way tie for first place, involving Midland Lee, Midland High and Odessa Permian.

The committee asked the coaches to meet to see if they could come to an agreement on a tie-breaker system. In effect, the committee said they would approve any system that was decided on the field of play if the coaches could agree.

Even though the vote on the 18 positive point system was approved by the coaches, it was by a narrow 4-3 margin with Midland High's Doug McCutchen, Abilene High's Larry Pullin, Abilene Cooper's Larry Peel and San Angelo's assistant athletic director Bob Beavers voting for the proposal. Midland Lee's Earl Miller, Odessa Permian's Gary Gaines and Odessa High's Jerry Taylor voted against the proposal.

It is interesting to note that Beavers' vote broke the deadlock. San Angelo is currently seeking a replacement for Jimmie Keeling, who resigned from the San Angelo coaching job last month. In effect, a non-coach broke the tie, but it was felt that San Angelo is a league member and should have a vote like every other school.

"I was told that San Angelo would be agreeable to any proposal the coaches wanted, but if it came down to our vote, we wanted an 18-point cap or less and this proposal fits those guidelines," said Beavers.

The 18 positive point system basically says that in ties between three or more teams for first or second place where no team has defeated all the others involved in the tie, playoff teams will be determined by using scores among the games involving all the tied teams and no team may gain more than 18 positive points advantage in any one game.

"I'm very pleased," said MHS' McCutchen, who was for the positive point system even before the coin flip occurred last fall. "Anytime you have a tie situation, there is no 100 percent way to make everyone happy. But I feel we now have the best possible alternative we could come up with. It sure beats a coin flip."

Lee's Miller, who was against the 18-point ceiling, said he would accept the proposal.

"I would have preferred a 21-point cap, but 18 points is better than 10," said Miller. "However, this is the way the district wanted to decide ties and we will go on and accept that. It's not as bad as it could be and, I guess, some of us have to compromise a little."

The proposal was adopted in less than one hour, but it took a total of 2½ hours to iron out all the details. The proposal was the same one presented to the Executive Committee last week. It is basically the same system that was used in District 28-3A when Pullin was head coach at Cuero. Pullin has been for the positive point system since arriving in District 4-5A three years ago.

Peel said he once gained the state playoffs under a positive point system that had a 10-point cap and he likes the system.

Gaines said he would have preferred a 10-point positive and a 10-point negative system. In other words, the winning team would gain 10 positive points and the losing team 10 negative points in games under consideration. Gaines also said he preferred a 21-point positive cap over the 18 that was approved by the coaches.

Taylor wanted the cap lowered to 11 or 12 points.

But all six coaches said they could live with this system and it is expected to be passed by the Executive Committee by conference call Feb. 25. Some minor changes in the system could be made by the committee. The 18 positive point system will first be reviewed by the league's athletic directors before Feb. 25 for any more minor changes.

Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director, presided over the meeting of coaches. Bartosh was appointed by the Executive Committee to head a committee of athletic directors and coaches to discuss a favorable system.

"I really appreciate the attitude of the coaches in this situation," said Bartosh. "It is a very emotional time for coaches when you start talking about rules that have a bearing on how you play the game.

"There was a lot of good give and take and I think everyone is agreeable to using this system."

The overall tie-breaker system is quite complex. The 18 positive point breaker will only be used in the event of multiple ties of three or more teams, and only then if no team has beaten all the others involved in the tie.

Two-way ties will be decided on head-to-head competition between the two teams involved during regular season play and ties between those teams will be decided on penetrations first, followed by first downs and then total yardage minus penalities.

If positive points come into play in multiple ties and all teams own the same number of positive points, the team or teams that have not been in the playoffs for the longest period of time will gain playoff entrance.

In a multiple tie for first place, if one team wins on positive points, that team will go as the first place team. If others are tied in positive points, the system reverts back to head-to-head competition if only two teams are left. If three or more teams remain tied, the team that hasn't been to the playoffs in the longest period of time will advance.

The Executive Committee asked that a playoff tie-breaker system be one that is determined on the field of play. This system does that for the most part. Only in extremely unique circumstances would a team be able to advance because it happened to be a team that hadn't been in the playoffs longer than the others. The only time that could happen is if the 18 positive point system fails to produce a break in multiple ties.

However, no matter how extreme the circumstances, there will be no more coin flips in District 4-5A.

From Staff Reports

Midland College's top tennis doubles team heads for Minneapolis, Minn., this week to compete in the Rolex Small College Championships. Amine Boustani and Tonny van de Pieterman are the second ranked junior college duo in the country. They'll be competing in a select field which includes only one team each from NJCAA, NAIA, NCAA Division II and Division III schools.

"This is the first time we've had a doubles team compete, but Amine and Tonny have a good chance to win the title," said MC coach Joe Williams. "Although they are ranked second, the number one team has been dissolved, so the new rankings should place them first."

Play is scheduled Saturday and Sunday at the 98th Street Racquet Club. Last week at the ITCA National Junior College Indoor Championships, the Midland team took that national title by defeating two teams from Tyler Junior College and two from McLennan (Texas) Community College in Waco.

In Minneapolis, they'll be going against Per Asklund and Michael Malvebo of Flagler College, St. Augustine, Florida, the NAIA champions; Barry Pelts and Dan Sellick, Rollins College, Winter Park, Florida, the No. 4 team in Division II, and Scott Flippin-Read and Larry Gewer, Washington College, Chestertown, Maryland, the No. 1 team from Division III.

Boustani and Pieterman have a doubles record of 17-1 this season. Their only loss was to Lingg-Banducci from Texas Christian, one of the nation's top tennis programs. Eric Lingg is himself a former Chaparral tennis star. The Chap team won four matches at the Rolex ITCA Small College Southwest Regional Tournament in Abilene last fall to qualify for this week's event. In that tourney, they took out teams from Abilene Christian, Odessa, and West Texas State in straight sets but had their most trouble in a three-set semifinal match (6-4 3-6 6-4) with their own MC teammates Tommy Heiting and Robert Antoun.

They also have three-set victories over teams from Southern Methodist and the University of Texas.

"I put Amine and Tonny together this fall and they clicked immediately," Williams noted. "They don't look very pretty on the court, but they get the job done. Both are lefthanded and normally you don't put two lefthanders together. Amine is small and cat-quick, while Tonny is tall and almost as quick."

Kareem's star dimmed in vote

By SAM GOLDAPER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — In packed arenas across the country, the teams and the fans have been saying their goodbyes to Kareem Abdul-Jabbar with gifts and tributes.

With All-Star Games considered more symbolic than competitive, the Western Conference coaches could have paid the 41-year-old, 7-foot-2 Los Angeles Laker center an even greater honor had they selected him for the National Basketball Association All-Star Game.

They did not. Instead, the conference coaches, who vote for the backups to the fans' choices for the starting team, chose Kevin Duckworth of the Portland Trail Blazers and Mark Eaton of the Utah Jazz as the reserve centers behind Akeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets.

Each conference coach was required to select two centers, two forwards, two guards and one player regardless of position for the game Feb. 12 at the Houston Astrodome. A coach was not permitted to vote for any of his own players.

Six reserves were then chosen from the highest total of vote-getters.

"If I make the All-Star team, something is wrong," said Abdul-Jabbar, the highest scorer in NBA history. "I haven't played well enough to make it. I don't deserve to be on the All-Star team."

Pokes leave 22 unprotected in league's free agent draft

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys' list of 22 unprotected players to be released by the NFL office Thursday will be loaded with veterans including quarterback Danny White and defensive tackle Randy White.

The placement of the Whites on the list was no surprise since the non-starters are unlikely to attract any interest because of their large salaries and ages. Danny White is 37, while Randy White is 36.

Dallas coach Tom Landry said the placement of the two stars on the list wouldn't necessarily serve as a signal their careers were at an end.

"They may still be invited to training camp, but no decision has been made," Landry said.

Other prominent Cowboys expected to be on the list include safety Victor Scott, who finished the season on NFL suspension for substance abuse; center Tom Rafferty, 35, quarterback Kevin Sweeney, who started two games last year, tight end Doug Cosbie, who underwent foot surgery recently, and wide receiver Mike Sherrard, who hasn't played in two seasons because of a broken leg.

The Cowboys will protect 37 players, among them young quarterback Scott Secules, who will be given a good look in training camp.

The Cowboys have three free agent players — defensive end Jim Jeffcoat, quarterback Steve Pelluer and guard Crawford Ker — and made qualifying orders to them on Wednesday.

Meanwhile, club president Tex Schramm said the Cowboys will be aggressive in signing free agents.

Mavs are as good as gone; 'Durham' is just bad

Patterson

The 1988-89 NBA season will linger in memory for quite a long time. Unfortunately, it will not be fondly remembered.

This season will be remembered for the apparent fall of the LA Lakers and the certain fall of the Boston Celtics. It will be remembered for the paltry play of the expansion Miami Heat and expansion look-a-like LA Clippers.

And in Texas, it will be remembered for the demise of the Dallas Mavericks.

Basketball fans in Dallas will recall for a long time the injuries, dope and discontent that played a part in the doing-in of the Mavericks.

A scant eight months ago, the Mavs reached the seventh game of the Western Conference finals against the Lakers. Now, Dallas is struggling to keep its head above .500.

Injuries have claimed Rolando Blackman and Detlef Shrempf. The injury alibi has again claimed Mark Aguirre, as it so often does.

The Mavericks are a bad basketball team now, losing to Utah and scoring just 84 points Tuesday night. Their Tuesday show came two days after the Lakers handed the Mavs their worst home defeat ever, 118-83.

But there appears to be relief in sight. Rumors of a Mark Aguirre-for-Adrian Dantley trade with the Detroit Pistons were confirmed by Carter, and apparently the wheels are in motion to dump the former All-Star.

The Mavericks need to forever end their relationship with Aguirre. Get rid of the guy without any further hesitation.

Aguirre was booed out of Reunion Arena Tuesday night after the public address announcer informed the angry 17,007 that Aguirre would not participate because of soreness in his legs.

Truth is Dallas fans are sick of Aguirre and he doesn't have what it takes to even suit-up in front of them anymore. He's as good as gone: When Maverick backers begin booing their alltime leading scorer, there's no use in even showing up anymore.

Just a month ago, Aguirre pointed the wrong finger at either press row and/or McLeod during a home game.

News for you buddy: You don't point "the" finger at a media that's already on your bad side or they'll never give you a chance again.

Oh sure, if the gesture was meant for McLeod, it can slide. Because to this day, Aguirre's action has gone unpunished. Turn the other cheek, McLeod style.

And as bad as all this seems, Aguirre's problems don't hold a candle to Roy Tarpley's misdeeds.

Tarpley is trying again to dry out in an Arizona drug rehab center. Can Tarpley keep his nose clean this time? Or is it just a matter of time before his once bright future goes "phfft" in a cloud of white powder?

Tarpley's is a sad story. He was last year's winner of the NBA's Sixth Man Award, given to the league's best reserve. This year, like pulling a rug from underneath his feet, he's gone.

And for your reading consumption, a brief opinion on that oh-so wonderful movie (!!), "Bull Durham."

By no means am I a movie critic, but I will say that "Bull Durham" has to rank somewhere near "Revenge of the Nerds" in terms of humor, "Porky's" in terms of class, and "Nightmare on Elm Street" in terms of quality entertainment.

"Bull Durham" is not a baseball movie by any stretch of the imagination. Maybe the movie is realistic, maybe it's not. But don't give the viewing public nymphomaniacs and tell them they're about to watch a baseball movie.

"The Natural," with Robert Redford, wasn't realistic, but it was a baseball movie. "Bull Durham" is a sex movie, and the last time I conferred with Roget, "sex" was not listed as an appropriate synonym for baseball.

(An aside ... sure proof that America's movie critics are aging: To read these guys, you'd think Susan Sarandon was the second-coming of Marilyn Monroe. She is not.)

How do I say this ... I enjoy off-color movies, if they're good off-color movies (I liked "Animal House" and think John Belushi was physically a comic genius).

I just don't like being misled. This movie misled me.

Clemson leads series of upsets

Associated Press

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Kirkland Howling made a 3-point shot and two free throws in the final minute as Clemson stunned No. 3 North Carolina.

The victory was the just the second for the Tigers over the Tar Heels in the last 20 meetings and the first since 1985.

North Carolina led 82-80 on a pair of free throws by J.R. Reid with 1:21 left but Howling's 3-pointer with 53 seconds remaining gave the Tigers a one-point lead. After a North Carolina miss, Howling was fouled and hit both ends of a one-and-one with 24 seconds left.

The game marked the return of five of the six players suspended for one game by Coach Cliff Ellis for violating study hall rules. Among those suspended were two starters, center Eldon Campbell and guard Marion Cash.

Clemson is 13-5 overall, 4-3 in the ACC. North Carolina is 18-4 and 5-2 but remained tied for the ACC lead because Virginia upset No. 13 North Carolina State 91-71.

Memphis St. 99, No. 8 Florida St. 82

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Sophomore Elliott Perry scored a career-high 33 points and no-miss Rodney Douglas had 17 points and 15 rebounds to lead Memphis State past No. 8 Florida State.

The Tigers, 14-7 and 3-2, jumped to a 9-0 lead and were never threatened as the Seminoles shot just 35 percent and saw an eight-game winning streak end. Tony Dawson scored 22 points for Florida State, 16-2 and 4-1.

Memphis State led by as many as 19 points in the first half and by 87-58 late in the game.

The 6-foot, 155-pound Perry made 15 of 16 free throws and eight of 20 field goals. Douglas didn't miss a shot, hitting all seven field goals and three free throws.

Virginia 91, No. 13 N. Carolina St. 71

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Richard Morgan and Curtis Williams scored six points apiece as Virginia roared to a 25-4 lead midway through the first half and overpowered No. 13 North Carolina State.

Morgan, who led all scorers with 20 points, also made two free throws to cap an 11-1 burst at the start of the second half that gave the Cavaliers their biggest lead of the game 64-34 en route to their fifth straight victory. Virginia is 12-6 overall, 4-2 in the ACC.

N.C. State, which began play tied for first place with North Carolina, is 14-3, 5-2.

Minnesota 76, No. 15 Ohio St. 73

MINNEAPOLIS — Melvin Newbern, who missed a key 1-and-1 free throw with 59 seconds to play, made a driving layup with eight seconds left, lifting Minnesota over No. 15 Ohio State.

Willie Burton scored 13 of his career-high 30 points in the last eight minutes for the Gophers, who posted their third upset of a Top Twenty team in 19 days. Minnesota, 12-6 overall and 4-4 in the Big Ten, beat No. 5 Iowa on Jan. 14 and No. 1 Illinois last Thursday.

No. 1 Oklahoma 90, Kansas St. 82

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Stacey King scored 20 of his 27 points in the second half as Oklahoma held off Kansas State in its first game ever as the nation's No. 1 college basketball team.

Oklahoma held Kansas State to just two points in the final 3:23 after

Fred McCoy's hook shot tied it for the Wildcats at 80-80. The Sooners' Terrence Mullins canned a 3-pointer for an 83-80 lead and Tyrone Jones followed with a basket and a key defensive rebound a few seconds later.

No. 5 Missouri 91, Kansas 66

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Byron Irvin scored 22 points and Lee Coward added 19 and ignited scoring bursts in each half as fifth-ranked Missouri beat Kansas, the Tigers' first victory on the Jayhawks' court in six years.

No. 6 Georgetown 74, Seton Hall 66

LANDOVER, Md. — Freshman Alonzo Mourning scored 17 points and ignited a second-half surge that enabled sixth-ranked Georgetown to solidify its hold on first place in the Big East Conference with a victory over No. 10 Seton Hall.

No. 7 Louisville 108, Virginia Tech 95

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Tony Kimbro and Keith Williams scored career highs of 21 and 19 points, respectively, pacing a balanced attack as No. 7 Louisville pulled away in the second half to beat Virginia Tech.

No. 14 Syracuse 90, Villanova 57

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Derrick Coleman scored 20 points and 14th-ranked Syracuse dominated Villanova with its inside game by scoring 17 straight points in the first half and defeated the Wildcats.

No. 19 LSU 105, Mississippi 75

BATON ROUGE, La. — Rickey Blanton hit a pair of 3-point shots to start a 26-14 run that closed out the first half as 19th-ranked LSU took control of its Southeastern Conference basketball game and beat Mississippi.

O.J. charged in beating of wife

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former football star O.J. Simpson has been charged with beating his wife during a New Year's Day argument in which he hit and kicked her as he yelled, "I'll kill you," authorities said.

Simpson, 41, allegedly struck his 29-year-old wife, Nicole, with open and closed fists and pulled her hair during the incident at 3:30 a.m. Jan. 1 at the couple's Brentwood home, according to police records.

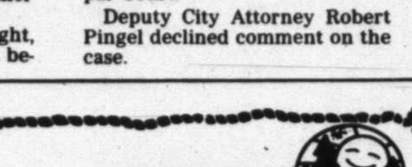

Simpson down-played the incident Wednesday.

"My wife and I had a fight, that's it," he said. "We put it behind us."

Simpson is scheduled to answer the charges, filed Monday by the city attorney's office, Feb. 17 in West Los Angeles Municipal Court.

Deputy City Attorney Robert Pingel declined comment on the case.

Herzeg quits as Oiler boss

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Houston Oilers General Manager Ladd Herzeg resigned Wednesday from the post he has held since 1981, saying he is ready to try something new.

"I feel I've accomplished my goals in Houston and at this point in my life, I'm ready for a new challenge. I know there is another mountain out there that needs to be conquered," Herzeg said in a statement.

"I want to thank (Oilers owner) Bud (Adams) for having confidence in me and for supplying me with sufficient time to get the job done. I want to wish everyone associated with the Houston Oilers the very best for the future," the statement said.

Herzeg did not say what he planned to do next.

In his statement, Herzeg said it had been a "a tremendous challenge to rebuild the Oilers into one of the elite teams in the National Football League. The fact that we have gone to the playoffs the last two years and won proves that the team has arrived. The fact that the so-called experts said we could not do it makes it especially gratifying for me.

"We fell short of our goal this year, but the Oilers were the youngest team in the playoffs, which indicates this team has a very bright future. This team is a definite Super Bowl contender."

The Oilers scheduled an 11:30 a.m. news conference Thursday, saying it related to Herzeg. They would not confirm Herzeg's resignation or specify the reason for the conference.

Herzeg has had a stormy career as the Oilers general manager.

In 1987, he was involved in an altercation in Buffalo where he allegedly mooned a wedding reception that was being held at the same hotel where the Oilers were staying.

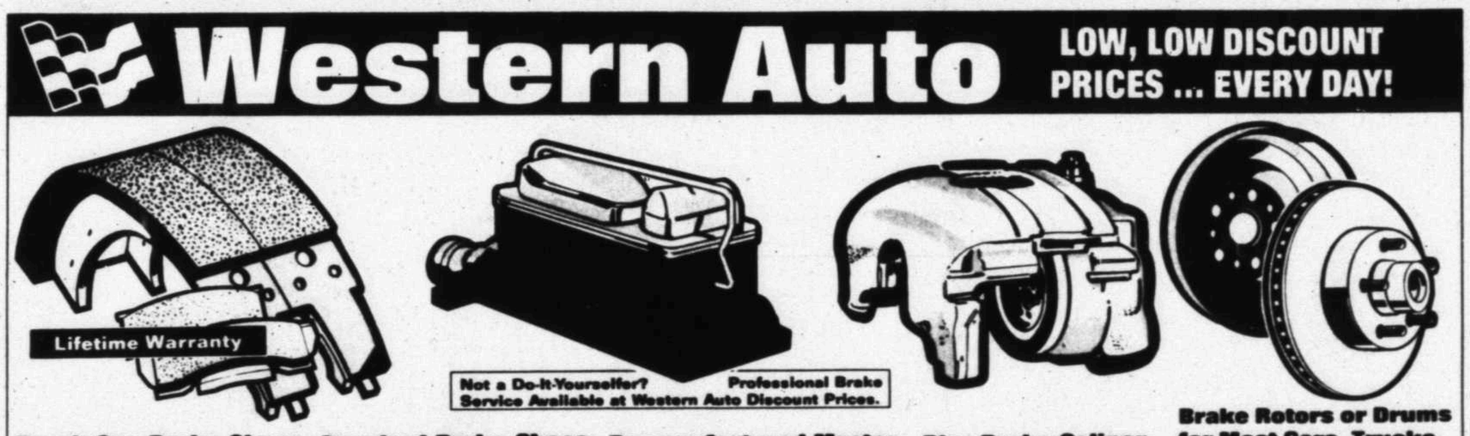

This past season, he was the subject of a paternity suit and he was recently involved in a slapping incident involving a Houston Chronicle reporter at an exclusive Houston restaurant.

After the September paternity suit incident, Herzeg resigned although his resignation was rejected by Oilers owner Bud Adams. At the time, Herzeg's attorney said the Oilers general manager had attempted to resign because he didn't want to embarrass the team.

His tenure also has been marked by bitter negotiations with players while general manager. Earlier this season, Herzeg said he would no longer negotiate players' contracts, and he had intended to hire someone to fill that role.

Already serving as executive vice-president with the Oilers, Herzeg was named general manager in 1981.

Greenwood's Marvin makes verbal commitment to UT-El Paso

From Staff Reports

GREENWOOD — Former Greenwood High School two-way standout Tom Marvin recently gave a verbal commitment to attend the University of Texas-El Paso.

Marvin, 6-foot-4 and 210 pounds, played both tight and defensive end for Coach Bob Purser's Rangers after starting both ways at Snyder during his sophomore year. He also received a serious offer from the University of North Texas, but opted for the Division I school.

Purser said the new coaching staff at UTEP may give Marvin an opportunity for success.

"It should be an exciting time for him to go there," Purser said. "With the new coaching staff, it should be a good time for a freshman to break in."

Former Arkansas assistant David Lee recently took the helm at UTEP, replacing Missouri-bound Bob Stull.

Marvin joins Andrews senior Ronnie Seals as the only area recruits to commit at NCAA Division I schools. Seals committed to the University of Oklahoma earlier this week.

Greenwood seniors Randy Donnell and Sean Holcomb plan to visit Texas A&I this weekend, Purser said. The duo has already visited North Texas and Eastern New Mexico.

Gay leads Tech over Baylor

Associated Press

WACO — Sean Gay scored 24 points and Texas Tech hit 22 of 24 free throws in the final four minutes of play to hold off Baylor, 74-66, in a Southwest Conference game.

Gay, an All-Southwest Conference pick last year, hit all eight of his free throws down the stretch for the Red Raiders.

The Bears remain in the conference cellar, dropping to 1-7 and 5-14 overall. The Red Raiders evened their SWC mark at 4-4 and improved to 9-10 overall.

Center J.D. Sanders added 14 points and nine rebounds and guard Jerry Mason chipped in 12 for Texas Tech.

Julius Denton paced Baylor with 15 points and eight rebounds. Donnell Hayden added 14 points and Ivan Jones had 10 for the Bears.

Texas Tech led 56-42 with 3:32 remaining in the game, but Baylor's 2-2-1 full court pressure caused a rash of Red Raider turnovers.

The Bears closed to within seven, 63-56, with 1:41 left. They couldn't get any closer, however, as Texas Tech made 11 of 13 free throws in the last 90 seconds to win the game.

Players from both teams appeared unaffected by pre-game innoculations for measles. An outbreak of the illness on the Texas Tech campus prompted the move by Baylor officials, who feared the same might happen in Waco.

SWC

Arkansas 88, Houston 87

HOUSTON — Arkansas' Keith Wilson hit the front end of a one-and-one free throw with no time remaining to give the Razorbacks a win over the Houston Cougars.

Wilson was fouled by Houston's Roger Fernandes after a missed shot by Craig Upchurch with two seconds left.

Razorbacks Todd Day and Lenzie Howell each hit career highs of 29 and 26 points respectively as Arkansas increased its record to 14-4 and 7-1 in conference play. Houston fell to 12-8 and 4-4.

Going into the second half, Howell hit 12 straight points for Arkansas, which pulled even at 55-55 with Day's steal and dunk at 13:26.

SMU 68, TCU 57

DALLAS — Todd Alexander scored 21 points including a vital six points in the final two minutes to lift the Southern Methodist Mustangs to a victory over the Texas Christian Horned Frogs.

SMU's victory knocked the Horned Frogs out of a first place tie with Texas and Arkansas, both of whom won their games Wednesday night.

The Mustangs increased their record to 8-10 overall and 4-4 in league play while TCU dropped to 13-7 and 6-2. SMU led all the way before 4,690 fans in Moody Coliseum but had some unsettling moments toward the end of the game.

Texas 85, Texas A&M 80

AUSTIN — Junior forward Lance Blanks hit 23 points as the Texas Longhorns fought off Texas A&M to remain tied for No. 1 in the SWC.

The game was played before a noisy sellout crowd of 16,231 fans, Texas' first full house since February of 1986 against this same Aggie team.

The victory propels the Longhorns to a 16-4 season record and 7-1 in conference, tied with Arkansas for the top spot. The Aggies, losers of five straight, dip to 8-12 and 1-7.

Although they experienced early foul trouble and turned the ball over 12 times, Texas A&M kept it close by outmuscling the Longhorns inside and scoring on easy layups.

Rice 90, E. New Mexico 83

HOUSTON — Greg Price scored 22 points and Andy Gilchrist had 21 to lead the Rice Owls to a 90-83 win over the Eastern New Mexico Greyhounds.

Dana Hardy added 15 points for the Owls as they increased their season record to 8-11.

Eastern New Mexico, 13-6, was led by Darwin Pauley with 22 points followed by Rick Pickren and Troy Inmann with 14 each.

Phoenix upsets LA

Associated Press

PHOENIX — Eddie Johnson scored 10 of his 32 points during a decisive 18-0 Phoenix run and Los Angeles went scoreless for nearly seven minutes in the second quarter as the Suns beat the Lakers.

The game was tied 10 times — the last at 44-44 — before Phoenix started the crucial 18-0 spurt 7:10 before halftime.

Johnson, the Suns' sixth man, sank three jumpers, including a 3-point goal, and then capped the run with a free throw with 2:25 left for a 62-44 lead.

The Lakers, who made just three of their 15 field goal tries and had seven turnovers during the spurt, went scoreless for a 6:57 stretch. Their 11 second-period points came within three of tying an arena record for fewest in a quarter.

Johnson, who had 15 second-period points, sank his third 3-pointer of the quarter and a jumper in the final two minutes for a 70-49 halftime bulge.

Los Angeles, trailing 95-79 at the end of three periods after nine more points by Johnson, opened the fourth quarter with a 7-0 run and then closed to 103-94 as Magic Johnson's free throw capped a 7-2 spurt with 4:20 remaining.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, James Worthy and Orlando Woolridge all finished with 15 points for Los Angeles, which lost for the 10th time in its last 14 road games.

NBA

Boston stretched the lead to 75-59 after a basket by Jim Paxson at 5:21 of the third period and another field goal by Paxson with 4:36 left gave the Celtics their biggest lead at 96-79.

McHale had 21 points and Paxson finished with 17 for Boston. Michael Holton scored 21 points and Tripucka had 16 for Charlotte.

76ers 114, Bullets 110, OT

A pair of backups-turned-starters, Shelton Jones and Scott Brooks, also keyed the victory for the 76ers. Jones had 20 points and Brooks 18, career highs for both.

King scored the final 10 points of regulation for the Bullets, helping them rally from a 103-96 deficit to a 106-106 tie with 40 seconds remaining. King's two free throws sent the game into overtime.

Hawks 94, Jazz 93

SALT LAKE CITY — Reggie Theus converted a pair of free throws with six seconds remaining, giving the Atlanta Hawks a victory over the Utah Jazz.

Eric Leckner gave Utah a one-point lead with eight second remaining with a layup after a pass to All-Star Karl Malone was tipped away. After a timeout, Malone fouled Theus, who was driving to the basket, and he made both for a 94-93 score.

Cliff Levingston led Atlanta with 21 points and Moses Malone had 13. All-Star starter Dominique Wilkins was held to 12 on 6-for-19 shooting.

Thurl Bailey had 24 points and Malone 20 for the Jazz, but only four in the second half. John Stockton, named to the Western Conference All-Star team earlier Wednesday, was limited to 10 points and six assists.

Celtics 107, Hornets 94

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Robert Parish scored 24 points and grabbed 13 of his season-high 24 rebounds in the first quarter, leading the Boston Celtics over the Charlotte Hornets Wednesday night.

Parish's inside dominance helped the Celtics open a 31-18 lead in the first quarter, but Charlotte rallied to within three points in the second period. That rally faltered, however, and Boston pulled away with a third-quarter run and coasted to the victory.

Trail Blazers 108, Clippers 107

LOS ANGELES — Kiki Vandeweghe scored a season-high 28 points, including three long-range jumpers in the final two minutes, as the Portland Trail Blazers handed the Los Angeles Clippers their 16th straight defeat.

Clyde Drexler added 24 points for the Blazers, who have beaten the Clippers 16 consecutive times. Los Angeles was led by Benoit Benjamin with 23 points and Charles Smith with 22.

CHAPS

Just 5-6, Boustani hits with surprising power. He relies, though, on his speed and quickness to chase down lots of shots other players cannot return. Pieterman is 6-2 with a powerful serve and great volleys.

Odessa College, also in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference with MC, will have players in three divisions at the Rolex event.

By DINA KYRIAKIDOU

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Greeks are packing theaters to laugh at satirical shows that mock Premier Andreas Papandreou for flaunting his love affair with Dimitra Liani, a former airline stewardess.

Politics and sex have been favorite topics for Greek comedians ever since the playwright Aristophanes made the combination a smash hit in the 5th century B.C.

Papandreou's heart operation in London last September inspired the title of a sellout revue, "Post-Aorta Greece," written and directed by Lakis Lazopoulos, Greece's top satirist.

Outside the Vembo Theater a giant poster of Papandreou and Liani embracing advertises "Little Dimitra's Sweetheart," a take-off of a classic Greek folklore play, "The Little Shepherdess' Sweetheart."

In the show, an Athenian housewife is asked whether the premier's pre-election pledges of political and social change have been fulfilled.

"Andreas has made one change OK. He changed his American woman for a Greek," she answers as the audience breaks into enthusiastic applause.

Three months ago, Papandreou said he will divorce his 66-year-old Amercan-born wife, Margaret, but no proceedings have yet been started. Liani has been twice divorced.

Six political revues recently played in Athens. According to box-office figures, they grossed up to $37,500 a week, twice as much as the most successful straight play in Athens.

The socialists banned censorship when they came to power in 1981, and the satirists say they're not afraid of libel prosecution, even for the bawdiest jokes about Papandreou and Liani.

"I feel really free. If I couldn't say the things I say I would suffocate," said Lazopoulos, 31, who was acquitted in 1987 on charges of slandering Greece's head of state, President Christos Sartzetakis, in one of his shows.

According to theater critic Eleni Varopoulou, the Greek revues' mix of satirical sketches, monologues, songs and dance, is styled after French revue and German cabaret.

Lazopoulos also mocks the premier's sick-bed television address to the Greek people from London, in which he appealed for sympathy, saying, "I am fighting my own battle."

At the Kalouta theater, where the "The Last PASOKrats" is playing, actress Anna Vayena explains how the system really works.

"In Greece we only diagnose. For therapy we have to go abroad," she says.

Then she adds: "Andreas went to London because he didn't want to kick a dozen Greek patients out of one hospital bed."

'Little Foxes' on stage

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Permian Playhouse opens its production of Lillian Hellman's "The Little Foxes" at 8 p.m. Friday. The play runs Friday and Saturday through Feb. 11.

"Little Foxes" is a virulent drama about the rascalities of a clan of Southerners at the turn of the century when aggressive grabbing for riches could still pay off at the expense of the vanishing old plantation aristocracy.

"Little Foxes" was first a major hit in late 1939, and it ran a full year on Broadway with Tallula Bankhead in its central role of Regina, a coldly ambitious woman who, according to some, was in the same league with Lady Macbeth. In the New York revival, Anne Bancroft had this role; during the subsequent tour it was played by Margaret Leighton.

Now at Permian Playhouse, Barbara Inglehart will be seen in this role. As Regina, she out-maneuvers her two scheming brothers and contributes to the death of her husband.

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Energy industry spokesmen joined with environmentalists Wednesday to support bills that would require government and commercial fleets to switch to compressed natural gas to cut down on air pollution.

Mauro

At a news conference with Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro in the Capitol, Sen. Don Henderson, D-Houston, Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, and Rep. David Crain, D-Dallas, announced they would file a bill that would require conversion of state vehicles, city fleets, school buses, private fleets and city buses to compressed natural gas or other alternative fuels over a 10-year period.

The bill would affect city fleets with more than 15 vehicles, school districts with more than 50 buses, private fleets with more than 25 vehicles and all city buses in metropolitan areas of more than 350,000 population, including Beaumont-Port Arthur-Orange, that fail to meet federal minimum air quality standards.

The three legislators also plan to file a bill to prohibit the use of fuel oil between April 15 and Oct. 15 in utility and industrial boilers that are capable of using natural gas.

Oil and gas executives see the legislation as a chance to promote natural gas as a clean fuel in the face of federal action to cut down air pollution, particularly in metropolitan areas of Texas. Environmentalists note that they share interests with the state's largest industry on this issue.

"Mutual interests and shared concerns have brought these one-time antagonists together today," said Mauro, who has converted 11 state vehicles in his agency to use of natural gas. He noted that Texas leads the nation in pollution created by burning gas and diesel and carbon gas released into the atmosphere.

"Let's face it, in the past our state has not been on the cutting edge of environmental concern and responsiveness," he said. But 21 counties, including Beaumont-Port Arthur, Dallas-Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio and El Paso metropolitan areas, fail to meet minimum air quality standards set by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. If they do not reduce ozone levels, they face possible sanctions, including a ban on construction of new industry and a cutoff in federal highway funding.

Air pollution is not just an urban problem, Mauro said, noting that haze from windblown air pollution now shrouds Big Bend mountains all but 35 days of the year. "Air pollution is a fact of life in Big Bend National Park," he said.

Use of compressed natural gas to fuel vehicles not only will sharply reduce the amount of carbon monoxide and other compounds from vehicle exhaust, he said. It also will reduce long-term fuel and maintenance costs.

Henderson noted that there are expenses involved in converting the vehicles, but he was confident private financing would be available, with the cost savings offsetting the expense. He also said the Texas Air Control Board would have flexibility to implement the program if financing is not available.

Henderson also noted that Garland and Pampa school districts have had good experience with natural gas-fueled school buses.

"We need to take positive steps to avoid a more radical solution that

Fund proposed to clean underground fuel tanks

By ROBERT CULLICK
Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — Legislation is being drafted that would create a $110 million-a-year state fund to clean up leaky underground fuel storage tanks.

The money for the fund would come from a fee paid by fuel transporters who would be free to try to pass the cost on to retail outlets and consumers at the pumps.

The Texas cleanup fund is backed by the Texan Oil Marketers Association, whose spokesman said Wednesday that it is needed to head off an insurance crisis that would force 3,000 to 4,000 independent gasoline station owners out of business.

Most of those would be in small towns, where the locally owned businesses are the center of retail trade.

At the heart of the new legislation is an effort by the federal government to force users and retailers of petroleum products to become more responsible for replacing leaky underground tanks that could cause ground water pollution.

Harris County, which relies on ground water for about half its drinking water, has 15,000 tanks in about 5,000 locations. Throughout the state, the Texas Water Commission has about 140,000 tanks registered in 45,000 locations.

The tanks are most often used to store fuel at gasoline stations, but are also used by companies and government bodies that have fleets of trucks or buses.

A nationwide petroleum marketing group has estimated that the federal legislation would close an estimated 26,500 stations in the United States.

New rules of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency require large concerns to purchase $1 million in insurance for spills, leaks and other incidents of pollution. Smaller fuel companies have until October 1990 to comply with the law.

But Scott Fisher, spokesman for the oil marketers, said that insurance is usually not available and when it is, costs so much that continued operation of small retailers are no longer profitable.

"The problem is there is literally no insurance available for the vast majority of tank owners. Small businesses and other entities do not have the financial wherewithal to react to this kind of program overnight," Fisher said.

Fisher said he knows of a marketer who paid $16,000 last year for $500,000 insurance on 30 storage tanks. This year, he said, the same coverage for a six-month policy will cost $47,000.

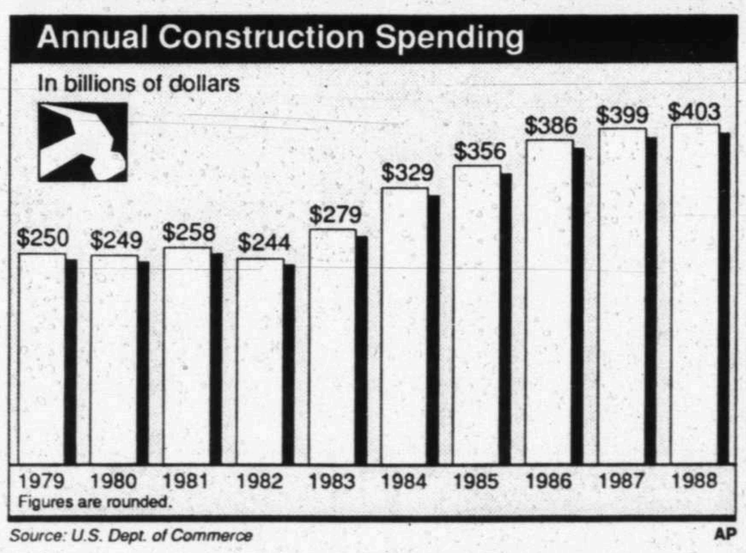

"We're talking about more than doubling the cost for half the time and half the amount of coverage," Fisher said.

The plan backed by the oil marketers would impose a .6-cent-per-gallon fee on fuel storage, to be paid initially by the transporters and distributors. They, of course, would seek to raise their prices to retailers for the fuel.

If the average consumer, who used 530 gallons of fuel annually, paid the whole cost, the increase would amount to little more than $3, Fisher said.

The state fund would pay for clean up of leaks and spills and damages to other property. The owners of the tank still would be responsible for purchasing a $1 million bodily injury

Construction spending ends 1988 on high note

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction spending shot up 2.5 percent in December, ending a year in which building activity registered its weakest showing since the recession year of 1982, the government said Wednesday.

The Commerce Department reported that construction spending for all of 1988 totaled $403.4 billion, up a meager 1.1 percent from 1987. But after taking into account inflation, spending actually was down 0.4 percent in 1988 from the previous year.

Construction spending had been down 5.2 percent in the 1982 recession, or 8.1 percent after adjusting for inflation.

Construction spending last year was depressed by slow activity on apartments, a category suffering from high vacancy rates and still feeling the after-effects of the 1986 tax overhaul that curtailed tax breaks for construction investments.

In inflation-adjusted dollars, apartment construction was down 13.9 percent to $19.3 billion last year, while work on single-family homes rose 2.9 percent to $103.6 billion. Non-residential construction spending was down a slight 0.1 percent to $78.1 billion, while spending on government projects was down 0.4 percent to $65.8 billion after adjusting for inflation.

Rexene, Sunshine end talks

DALLAS (AP) — Two Dallas-based mining companies have broken off discussions for the acquistion of Rexene Corp. by Sunshine Mining Co because a definitive agreement couldn't be reached, spokesmen for both companies say.

Sunshine had agreed in a letter of intent Dec. 27 to purchase Rexene for $865 million or $28 per share in cash and securities.

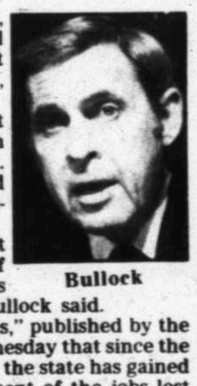

Spokesmen for both companies declined to comment on reasons for the end of the discussions.

It was reported that completing the merger was contingent on an agreement specifying a combination of cash and securities acceptable to the two companies, as well as shareholder and regulatory approvals and appropriate financing.

In 1988, Sunshine had tried to improve its financial situation by reaching a new labor agreement that tied wages to the price of silver, thus reducing costs.

Sunshine wanted to acquire Rexene in an attempt to diversify into a third line of business related to natural resources but countercyclical to oil and precious metals, Michael Bosweel, chairman and chief executive officer of Sunshine, said earlier.

Bullock: Economy still rebounding

Bullock

AUSTIN (AP) — Still rebounding, the overall Texas economy will grow by 2.4 percent in 1989, about the same as the nation's economy, the comptroller's office reports.

A measure of the recovery is that 90,000 new jobs should be created in 1989, Comptroller Bob Bullock said. Such a jobs gain would set a record of 6.7 million Texans gainfully employed by year's end.

"Texas has weathered the oil-bust years well. We've regained most of the ground we lost, and the state's outlook continues to improve," Bullock said.

The latest edition of "Fiscal Notes," published by the comptroller's office, reported Wednesday that since the recession's low point in spring 1987, the state has gained 176,000 jobs and recovered 80 percent of the jobs lost during the bleak 1986-87 period.

Unemployment has fallen nearly three percentage points, to about 7 percent by the end of 1988.

"Assuming the U.S. economy remains healthy and oil prices are relatively stable in the current range, Texas' economic growth will continue through 1989," the publication said.

"By the end of the year, recovery will turn into expansion as statewide employment surpasses its late-1985 peak."

The major force driving the recovery will continue to be manufacturing, which benefits from the lower dollar and increasing competitiveness of American exports, the comptroller's report said.

Most of the new jobs, however, will be in trade and service industries. Oil and gas are expected to remain relatively stable, while real estate and construction should hit bottom in mid-year.

The state itself also is projected to grow. The report said Texas will gain almost 200,000 in population and more people will move to Texas than move away.

"In 1988, 24,000 more people left Texas than moved in, but the state's population continued to grow due to a relatively high birth rate," the report said. "Early in 1989, however, newcomers will outnumber those who leave and the state's population will increase by 188,000, or 1.1 percent, during the year."

GAO suggests seizing failing thrifts

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The General Accounting Office recommends the government battle the savings and loan crisis by seizing control of about 350 failing thrifts, a newspaper reported today.

The GAO also says that S&Ls under government control should be banned from continuing the business practices that the GAO alleges got thrifts into trouble in the first place, the Los Angeles Times reported.

These practices include offering savers overly high interest rates and making risky real estate investments, according to prepared testimony Comptroller General Charles A. Bowsher planned to offer today before the Senate Banking Committee in Washington.

The GAO, the investigative arm of Congress, was asked to study the S&L crisis by committee Chairman Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., who has been highly critical of the government's response to the problem.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which regulates the thrift industry, arranged the closure or sale of more than 200 failing S&Ls last year by enticing buyers with promissory notes, tax credits and guarantees against losses.

Bowsher, in his prepared testimony obtained by the Times, is highly critical of the December deals, which the board arranged up until the last minute to take advantage of 1988 tax laws.

Bowsher says investors contributed "minimal" capital and that nothing would stop the new S&L operators from continuing to "engage in unsafe and unsound management practices."

Instead, the GAO recommends, the ailing S&Ls "must be effectively isolated" from the healthy segment of the industry and be forbidden to invest their money in potentially dangerous ventures.

Southwest Airlines says 1988 earnings set record

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Airlines said Wednesday 1988 was a record year for the carrier and reported fourth-quarter earnings rose 81 percent, in part from gains in sales of financial assets and aircraft.

For the quarter ending Dec. 31, Southwest's after-tax profit totaled $16.1 million, or 51 cents per share, compared with $8.9 million or 28 cents in per-share earnings in the same 1987 period.

Southwest said 1987 earnings included $10.2 million of income from the disposal of TranStar assets, excluding shutdown expenses. Company officials said both 1987 and 1988 had gains from financial assets' sales of $4.3 million and $3.6 million, respectively.

The company also reported gains from aircraft sales of $5.5 million, last year, officials said.

Profits for all of 1988 were $58 million, or $1.84 per share, compared with $20.2 million or 63 cents a share, in 1987, Southwest officials said.

"For the year 1988, we earned $58 million, which not only exceeded our 1987 earnings of $20.2 million by 187 percent, but also eclipsed our all-time record annual profit of $50 million, established in 1986," said Herbert D. Kelleher, Southwest board chairman and president.

Fourth-quarter revenues rose 16 percent to $225.8 million, compared with $193.9 million in the same period one year ago. Officials said the revenue increase resulted from a 19 percent increase in revenue passenger miles.

Excluding TranStar in 1987, revenues rose 23 percent to $860.4 million in 1988, up from $698.7 million the previous year, the company said.

"Our principal disappointment was our weak performance during first quarter 1988 in which our operating income was only $1.5 million and our net income was approximately break-even," said Kelleher.

"Based upon our traffic and bookings to date, it would appear that our 1989 first quarter will, in terms of both operating income and net profit figures, be considerably more rewarding than first quarter 1988," he said.

Prices retreat after small gain

From Staff and Wire Reports

Energy futures prices dropped back this morning after rising in moderate trade Wednesday, buoyed by technical factors and growing investor confidence in OPEC, market watchers said.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the March contract for West Texas Intermediate was trading at $17.43 at midmorning, 8 cents lower than Wednesday's close. The near-month contract settled 48 cents higher at $17.51 Wednesday after falling 26 cents in the previous session.

Among refined products, the March contract for unleaded gasoline rose 1.34 cents to close the day at 49.63 cents a gallon, while heating oil increased 1.04 cents to 50.44 cents a gallon.

Analysts said that after a weak start prices rose despite the lack of new news to spur prices.

"There was no real fundamental change in the market," said Richard Redoglia, a trader with Merrill Lynch Energy Futures. "The market is going through a consolidation phase."

The American Petroleum Institute's weekly report on oil supplies was neutral to bearish for prices, traders said. The report, released after the close of trading on Tuesday, showed crude stocks were down slightly while gasoline supplies rose and heating oil was mostly unchanged.

Analysts said prices got some strength from continued investor confidence that OPEC will follow through on its pledge to lower production.

"There was nothing fundamentally new today other than growing confidence that OPEC is serious about what it wanted to do," said Bob Baker, analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Oxy agrees to $205 million DOE settlement

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — The Occidental Petroleum Co. said Wednesday it had agreed to pay $205 million in the next eight years to settle charges by the U.S. Department of Energy that the company had violated oil-price controls from 1979 until 1981.

Occidental said the settlement would reduce its earnings for the fourth quarter by $45 million after taxes.

The company said that after providing for the settlement, its fourth-quarter net income was $7 million, or 2 cents a share, on revenues of $5.3 billion.

The company said the dispute with the Energy Department stemmed from the pricing policies used by the former Cities Service oil company during a period in which the federal government had imposed complex restrictions on oil pricing.

Texas Eastern refuses Coastal litigation deal

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Eastern Corp. officials said Wednesday they rejected an offer to postpone all litigation stemming from Coastal Corp.'s $2.6 billion takeover bid because Coastal was "demanding an advantage" over other possible buyers.

Coastal officials said they offered not to purchase any Texas Eastern securities before March 15 in exchange for a guarantee that they would be treated fairly in the bidding process, and that Texas Eastern would erect no new obstacles to a tender offer after that date.

"We are disappointed that Texas Eastern refused to agree to treat Coastal fairly and not to enact any new poison pill," Coastal President James R. Paul said.

GM to close Massachusetts assembly plant

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (AP) — General Motors Corp. will shut down its Framingham auto assembly plant in August in a move that could cost as many as 2,000 people their jobs.

A company spokesman said Wednesday GM decided to close the plant because it had not set on a new car to manufacture in Framingham. The factory makes the Buick Century and the Oldsmobile Cutlass Ciera, with daily production of about 300 vehicles.

Mediators start clock on Eastern, union

MIAMI (AP) — The National Mediation Board has notified money-losing Eastern Airlines and its militant Machinists union a 30-day clock is about to start ticking on their stalled contract talks.

Eastern Airlines formally rejected binding arbitration Wednesday to resolve the 16-month impasse, but the union was willing to submit the dispute to an arbitrator, mediation board Chairman Walter Wallace announced in a news release from Washington.

Japanese may propose trade mediation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Japanese Prime Minister Noboro Takeshita may bring to the United States a new proposal for handling U.S.-Japanese trade disputes, the Bush administration said.

A senior administration official said Wednesday that exact contents of such a plan were not known, but that the administration generally was content with existing trade arrangements and laws.

the federal government may impose upon us," he said.

Mauro said studies have shown a 1 trillion cubic feet increase in the use of natural gas could create between 50,000 and 100,000 jobs in Texas over five years.

Ken Kramer, state director for the Lone Star Chapter of the Sierra Club, said the legislation "not only will aid the ailing gas industry, but also the ailing air in the state."

Mauro said conversion is commercially available at a cost of $1,800 to $2,500 for gasoline vehicles and as much as $4,000 for diesel buses, but he said a savings of as much as 60 percent on fuel cost would pay for the conversion.

Also endorsing the "Clean Air" bills Wednesday were representatives of the AFL-CIO, the American Lung Association, the National Audubon Society, the Texas Consumer Association and Public Citizen.

policy, but its cost would be expected to be far less because of the state fund coverage.

"The state does have a major contamination problem. Thirty percent of underground storage tanks leak or will leak in the near future," Fisher said surveys have shown.

With an average cleanup cost of $80,000, Texas has a billion-dollar problem, he said, caused by years of use of underground storage tanks.

New laws require the tanks to be corrosion proof and for leak-detection systems to be installed.

Gov. Bill Clements has called the fund an "emergency item" for the Legislature's consideration. Staff members of Sen. Bob McFarlane, R-Arlington, and Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, said Wednesday the legislators were considering sponsoring the bill.

High mortgage interest rates have restrained construction activity in most sectors. Fixed-rate home mortgages averaged 10.60 percent last week, up from 10.16 percent a year earlier, according to the Federal National Mortgage Association.

Building activity rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $422.7 billion in December, the fourth straight monthly rise. The 2.5 percent increase was the best since a 2.8 percent rise last March.

For the month, residential construction rose 0.3 percent to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $220.9 billion, reflecting a 1.1 percent gain in single family home building. Apartment construction dropped 2.3 percent.

Non-residential construction rose 3.4 percent to an annual rate of 96.4 billion. Spending on government projects was up 7.8 percent to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $86.8 billion.

Feds asked to suspend offshore exploration plan

By EMMET PIERCE
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — Manuel Lujan, President Bush's choice to direct the Department of the Interior, has called on federal officials to suspend action on a sweeping offshore oil exploration plan for Southern California.

The Interior Department's Minerals Management Service yesterday complied, placing the area known as Lease Sale No. 95 indefinitely on hold, said Jeff Arnold, chief of the agency's office of congressional and legislative affairs.

Lujan, who is expected to be confirmed this week by the Senate, could not be reached for comment on the sale, which is scheduled for mid-1990. According to Arnold, it is too early to tell how the delay will alter the offshore program's timing or scope.

Lease Sale No. 95 includes 1,317 submerged tracts between Mexico and the Monterey County line, encompassing millions of acres. In November, the management service jolted the San Diego region with a proposal to add 17 North County parcels to the sale.

The tracts, which cover 76,735 seabottom acres north of Encinitas, had been excluded from the sale in 1987 after the military complained that drilling could disrupt amphibious training off Camp Pendleton. According to the management service, the Department of Defense has relaxed its opposition to drilling.

Arnold said Lujan's request to delay lease sale No. 95 will not affect other pending offshore operations — including lease sale No. 91, which is planned for Northern California, and lease sale No. 119, which is to take place along the state's central coast.

Pleading eyes get Granola bars

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

OK, I admit it — I'm a sucker for two little pairs of brown eyes looking pleadingly at me while their two little owners are begging for a new kind of treat. I just don't like to give in to their pleas when they are with me — I usually wait and buy what they ask me to when the aren't at the supermarket with me.

That's how I ended up with a box of Quaker Chewy Granola Bars the other day when I was grocery shopping without children. They had been asking me to buy some, so I finally did. I mean, I've long since given up the idea that granola is a "healthy" snack, but granola bars are quite tasty if you think of them as just another form of oatmeal cookie.

Anyway, we checked out these chewy granola bars (I like my oatmeal cookies soft) for taste, price and advertising accuracy. Because I bought the variety pack box, we got to sample chocolate chip, peanut butter and chocolate chip, chunky nut and raisin, strawberry and apple granola bars.

Our box cost $1.99 for eight 1-ounce bars, but I think it was on sale that particular day. (Price listed is from a local supermarket. Price at other locations may vary.)

Nutrition information on the label listed each one-bar serving to have 130 calories (except strawberry and apple, which had 120 calories each). They all contained different amounts of nutrients, but the highest amount of protein was 3g in a peanut butter and chocolate chip bar; strawberry and apple bars had the highest amount of carbohydrates at 21g; and the 6g of fat in the chunky nut and raisin bar was the highest amount listed.

Peanut butter and chocolate chip bar had 4 percent of the protein and niacin, and chocolate chip bar had 4 perceant of the thiamine suggested in the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowance, — all the other nutrients listed for all the other bars were 2 percent or less. Not very nourishing, but then you don't really expect great amounts of vitamins from cookies.

The label was too full of ingredients lists to have much room left over for advertising — the only label advertising we found claimed the bars were "moist & chewy," which they were. However, in looking at the lists of ingredients, I found it very interesting that — according to the lists printed right on the box — there are more apples in the strawberry granola bars than there are strawberries.

In the taste, everyone seemed to like either the chocolate chip or the peanut butter and chocolate chip bars best. The strawberry bar was OK, the apple bar was described as "not very good, and if I'd known you wanted a bite, I would have saved you one." And no one liked the raisin and nut bars at all.

At $1.99 for eight, the bars cost about 25 cents each, which is about what you'd pay for an oatmeal cookie at a bakery. But my question is — if they look like cookies and they taste like cookies, what are they doing in the supermarket's breakfast food section?

Phoning unborn baby possible

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

A march that has taken communication to the friendly skies, to hotel bathrooms, cars and hot tubs, has now closed the distance between an expectant mother and her unborn child.

That's right. You can now call abdomen-to-womb with an instrument called the Prega-phone, with no time limit and no installation charges. The only catch to it is that you never know when your party is on the line.

The phone is a bright yellow, three-part device with a mouthpiece and a funnel. The funnel is placed on the mother's abdomen and her voice is amplified.

Does it work? Ten thousand phone owners say it does. One mother said she recently underwent ultrasound treatment and was able to watch her unborn baby's reaction. When the baby heard her mother's voice, she made sucking motions and her heart rate increased. When her mother didn't speak, the baby didn't react.

With hindsight there is 20-20 vision, but knowing what I know now about my kids, I can imagine the way our conversation might have gone had I called them on the Prega-phone.

"Hello, Baby Heartburn? This is your mother. You busy? What do you mean you're putting me on hold? You do NOT have a call coming in on your other line. You don't HAVE another line. And don't even think of turning on that stupid answering machine. It's the worst impersonation of Annette Funicello I've ever heard.

"You eating good? You should be. I gained another six pounds this month. If you don't make your move pretty soon, I'm going to start buying my clothes at an upholstery shop.

"So, is there any reason why you're three days late? I am not trying to interfere with your life. I'm just asking. If someone told you you had to have a full set of teeth to come into the world, that someone is wrong. Don't worry your little head that people set drinks on my stomach at parties. That's Mommy's problem.

"I got your room all ready for you. We expect you to be staying about 20 years. We'll talk about it when you get here. Incidentally, where wer you last Wednesday when I called? Out where?"

I've suspected for a long time that the umbilical cord is actually a cable hooked up to Ma Bell and MCI. That's why it's only a matter of time before a Prega-phone rings at 2 a.m. and the mother tells her unborn child, "It's for you."

DEAR ABBY

Spare room not a storage room

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I rented my spare room to a college student in the fall of '87. Last May she gave me one day's notice and moved out, leaving behind some clothing, books, a bookshelf and her washer and dryer. (She also left her dog with me, but that's another story.)

Anyway, I wanted to rent the room to someone else, so I told her to get her stuff out by August. She came and took the stuff out of the room, but she left her washer and dryer in my basement. She said she was moving to an apartment, but she didn't give me an address or telephone number.

It is now January and I have no way of reaching this girl. Abby, I am not a storage company! Can I sell her washer and dryer? Or are they mine to keep? I want to make an office in my basement, but her washer and dryer are taking up space. I have no use for them as I have my own.

I should not have to place an ad in the paper to locate this girl. What are my legal rights? Going to a lawyer will cost me, and since she already owes me money, which I will probably never get, I don't want to spend any more. Although she paid me for keeping her dog, she still owes me for back rent. Her checks always bounce, and she is very irresponsible. What should I do? — STUCK IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR STUCK: Call your state or county local bar association. Somehow they should be able to tell you what your "rights" are. You may also be referred to a low-cost attorney.

If the girl is still a student, you can locate her through the college. Then send her a registered letter advising her that if she doesn't remove her property from your basement within 30 days, you will dispose of it. That may jar her into action. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: My husband drinks too much. I love this man, and hate to see him drink because I know what it's doing to him and I don't want to lose him. So, of course, I nag him.

He hates for me to nag him, so he tells me that he drinks because I am such a terrible nag.

Is there any hope for us? — NORTH DAKOTA NAGGER

DEAR NAGGER: Yes. Alcoholics Anonymous for him. And Al-Anon for you. If he refuses to go to A.A., you go to Al-Anon and learn how to deal with a man who refuses to go to A.A.

Your predicament reminds me of this Ogden Nash ditty:

"He drinks because she scolds, he thinks.

"She thinks she scolds because he drinks.

"But neither will admit what's true,

"That he's a sot and she's a shrew."

The facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage is included.

Rigs create challenges for motorists

Associated Press

Although most big-truck drivers are pros, the size and mechanics of their rigs create driving challenges a motorist may not think about as a car driver.

These tips from Better Homes and Gardens magazine will help drivers anticipate and avoid problems:

■ Most cars traveling 60 mph on a dry road can stop in 140 to 150 feet. A tractor-trailer may take twice that distance or more.

TIP: Once a big rig has been passed don't cut in sharply. Leave a large margin of safety.

TIP: Stay out of those blind spots, particularly on high-speed highways.

TIP: On inclines, there's a risk of a backward roll. Motorists should leave at least 20 or 30 feet between their car and any truck that is going very slowly or is stopped on a two-lane road.

■ Lots of dents, dirt or other signs of neglect on a truck could mean hidden problems as well, like worn tires or brakes.

TIP: Allow plenty of space when following or passing.

■ Although dump-truck loads are quite stable, liquid tankers and livestock carriers can sway sideways considerably as their loads shift even on moderate turns. Top-heavy rigs are susceptible to crosswinds. A listing truck either has a broken spring or a shifted load, making extra swaying and weaving inevitable. An empty truck or light load means less stability or traction.

TIP: Adjust driving to the potential risks. Also watch out for erratic moves from travel-trailers, rental trucks, motor homes and pickup-campers. Their drivers may be amateurs.

Value videos teach children

By PEGGY FIKAC

CNS Graphic

AUSTIN (AP) — As a parent who returned to work six weeks after her daughter's birth, Karen Huybrechts saw the need for a different way to teach values to children who spend more time at daycare than on their mothers' laps.

So Huybrechts and her husband developed a video — with original music and animated characters — to instill the values of cooperation, self-worth, politeness, self-control, dependability, loyalty and perseverance.

The videos, distributed nationally, have sold more than 50,000 copies for use in classrooms, daycare centers and homes so far, Huybrechts says. A pilot television program also has been broadcast on cable.

The Huybrechts say they are launching a video curriculum with Scholastic Inc., with editions for preschool and for kindergarten through third grade.

"The parents traditionally in our country have instilled in children their value system," Huybrechts says. "They provide the emotional support and teach them the social skills they need."

But 10 million children under age 6 now are in single-parent homes or in homes where both parents work, she says. Teachers have told her they are expected to teach morals and ethics but have few tools to help them.

The video curriculum kit — including the music video, audio cassette, story cards and teachers' guide — relates to lessons normally taught in preschool and the early grades, Huybrechts says.

For example, teachers can assign third-graders to write a news story about one cartoon segment showing a group of ants putting out a fire. The same segment — which features the "Antrew Sisters" trio singing about cooperation — can be used to teach fire safety.

"It crosses over into everything from social studies to language arts, dramatic play, music and movement and arts and crafts activities," Huybrechts says. The curriculum is unusual because it specifically "deals with behavior development, social skills and emotional development," she says.

The Huybrechts established their production company, UMA Mirage Productions of Austin, in 1984. Karen Huybrechts is president and producer. Her husband, Francois, a symphony orchestra conductor, is music director.

More than $1 million was invested in the 24-minute "Watchkins" video, Karen says. By comparison, a regular half-hour Saturday morning cartoon may cost up to $300,000 to produce, she says.

The difference is quality, she says. The animation, aimed at children aged 2 to 8, used 16 to 20 drawings per second, compared with as few as six in many Saturday morning cartoons.

The pilot TV program featured Winnie and Wally Watchkins — round, fuzzy-looking animated creatures who live inside a book. It also included sunflower puppets named Sol and Flora, and child actors.

The musical segments of the video include a variety of animated characters. Among them — besides the Antrew Sisters — are a gluttonous billy goat who learns self-control after eating too many green apples and a frog who admonishes a rude upstart of his species in a Leon Redbone-like song.

Francois Huybrechts wrote the music, each song with a different style, including big band, salsa, bluegrass, country and rock-and-roll. Of seven musical vignettes on the video, five are from the pilot TV program.

"I wanted each one (song) to be quite distinct and different," he says. "I wanted to make sure the music was sophisticated enough for an adult listener to get something out of it."

Huybrechts' wife developed the Watchkins concept, and she worked on the story and lyrics with six staff members. The company hires freelancers, including musicians and animators, for its large projects.

The company is developing a 13-week pilot Watchkins television series, which is being prepared for release in fall 1989.

Reaction from parents and teachers about the project has been positive, Karen Huybrechts says. She says no one has questioned the concept of teaching values through a video.

"The values we're teaching — I don't see how they could be controversial," she says. "What is controversial about self-worth, or cooperation, or being polite? Who is going to say, 'I don't want my child to be polite'?"

Avoiding four dreaded words not easy for video rental stores

By PAUL TAUBLIEB
Copley News Service

You missed it in the theaters. Or maybe it was such a great movie you're simply dying to see it again. No matter. It's coming soon to a video store near you.

The wait seems long. Finally, though, arrival date. You head to the store, smug in the satisfaction that modern technology in the form of the VCR is making your life slightly more pleasurable.

Not having enough copies of hit films is all too familiar a problem for most videophiles. It's enough to shake our belief in the wonder of the future.

Why, you ask yourself, doesn't this video store order enough copies? Clearly, the demand for a major hit movie is going to be huge!

Why? Because it costs lots of money. As you may know, to buy a freshly released movie usually costs $89.95 retail. Heck, that means the guy who owns the store is buying that tape at approximately $64 wholesale.

And that means that a store can buy only so many copies of a certain title — almost always not enough to satisfy the initial rental demand. It's a question of economics, and a particularly harsh one for small, independent stores.

But imagine this, say some suppliers of home video products: How about if we charge the video store less to buy the tape initially, and then we share the money you get from renting? See, this way you get to buy tons more copies, and those fateful words — "Sorry, we're all out" — never have to be spoken again.

This is something that is being tested in the industry right now, with retailers able to purchase videos for as little as $10, as long as they share the rental revenues. It's a system called Pay-per-transaction.

TO SOME, it's the greatest new idea since the wireless remote. Others see it as the electronic devil incarnate.

On the plus side, stores using PPT are almost certainly going to have more copies to rent. Good news. Moreover, with more cash on hand, plus cheaper prices, the stores will be able to buy a wider variety of tapes, along with great quantities of particularly hot titles.

"PPT is a typical case of a solution in search of a problem," he says, citing a study by the prestigious Fairfield Group that indicates that consumers are willing to go back to a store three times in order to get the movie they want.

THERE'S MORE. Even fervent proponents admit there's a knobby administration problem. It's called honesty. Or the lack of it in the world.

You see, the retailer has to tell the studio how many tapes he has rented, and then dutifully send him a check. So understandably, there's this sort of temptation for the retailer to, shall we say, forget to report each and every transaction.

So the studio's have to install a computer system, which is feasible, but expensive — and they have to basically trust the retailer. Plus, the retailer has to trust the studio. That's right. Under PPT and sharing of rental revenues, the studio and the retailer are in business together — two hands in the same cookie jar. And retailers are wary. They fear that once the studios get into their cash registers in this way, they'll go for control and eventually run the whole business.

A major obstacle to the implementation of PPT is the entrepreneurial spirit of most video retailers. As one store owner who's opposed to the program explained, "I opened my store with my savings. It's mine. When I walk into the store, and humble as it may be, I get this great feeling because everything in that store belongs to me. I own it. PPT means that'll change. In effect, PPT means I'll be renting tapes from the studios. It'll still be my store, but it won't be all mine."

Funny, though, after we talked for a while, even this store owner kind of warmed to the idea. "I have to admit, having all those copies so all my customers could get every movie they wanted, it's mighty intriguing."

In the coming months, the viability of PPT will be thoroughly tested. A number of businesses have sprung up recently to run these efforts.

And that means, hopefully, one day we can each walk into a video store without the fear of those dreaded four words.

Videos have international boundaries

By MARTIN PORTER
Copley News Service

You have just received a videotape from a friend in Europe and as you sashay over to your VCR and pop it in you're thinking how wonderful the global miracle of video is. Then you hit play and witness a gruesome display of fuzz and static. You are a victim of incompatibile video standards.

Videophiles with friends or family on the opposite side of the Atlantic or Pacific are hard pressed to find machinery that will play video tapes from the various broadcast systems used around the world — from our own NTSC variety, to Europe's PAL and Eastern Europe's SECAM. It seems that machines from a company called Instant Replay are virtually the only multi-standard VCRs intended for distribution in the United States.

Instant Replay, which is located in Coconut Grove, Fla., makes several multi-standard VCRs, including the 615 and 618 IT4 Image Translators. Unlike many other multi-standard machines, you don't need a multi-standard television to go along with them. They play and record in nearly every standard and substandard in color — and they're also hi-fi machines. Instant Replay is your best multi-standard bet without delving into the gray market.

Gray goods — products you can find in discount locations that were never designed to be sold in the United States — are another multi-standard option and are certainly worth investigating. But if you call U.S. product representatives at any of a number of large video manufacturers you'll be told in no uncertain terms that the company simply doesn't supply multi-standard equipment to consumers on this side of the lake.

Yet the equipment does exist, and if you look hard enough you probably can rent or buy a variety of multi-standard VCRs and televisions from any of the few specialty stores located in major metropolitan areas like New York.

Gray market does mean, on the other hand, that you can't expect your gear to come with a manufacturer's warranty, and that you might not be able to turn to your local repair store or factory in the event of a video meltdown. However, some dealers provide 30-day store warranties on their gear. A select few even have a repairman on hand.

Some of the multi-standard (NTSC, PAL, SECAM) mono VCRs that are available include a Sharp VC799, Hitachi VT498EM, Toshiba V87MS and Panasonic NVG50. You can bring one of these VCRs home, along with a multi-standard television, for around $1,000. Multi-standard gear also is available from National, JVC, Grundig, Philips, Sony, NEC and others — but not directly through the manufacturer.

Dealers often will rent gear at rates ranging from $45 per day for a multi-standard VHS deck to $75 per day for a 19-inch PAL compatible television. Others will quote a price of about $210 a week for a TV/VCR combination compatible with the U.S. 110-volt system. Camcorder buffs also can take heart: while it is difficult to find them, several importers do offer standard-dedicated PAL and SECAM camcorders.

Vietnamese man arrested in 2 killings

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Homicide detectives Wednesday arrested a 27-year-old Vietnamese immigrant suspected in the killing of two Vietnamese men and wounding of three others in the area known as "Little Saigon" near downtown Houston.

When police arrested the man in southwest Houston, they recovered a white Oldsmobile with California license plates that was used as a getaway car after the Monday shootings, said homicide Lt. Richard Holland.

Police were questioning the suspect late Wednesday and might file charges today, Holland said. The man was scheduled to be in a lineup early today, he said.

Holland would not say what led to the arrest.

He also declined to comment on whether the suspect was cooperating, whether more arrests would be made soon or where the man was arrested.

The shoot-out in Little Saigon stemmed from an early January argument of uncertain origins, homicide Sgt. George Alderete said. Nine or 10 people were involved in a disturbance that led to the shootings, and police recovered dozens of spent shells at the scene.

The three wounded people, two men and a teen-ager, remained hospitalized in stable condition Wednesday. Police refused to reveal their identities.

Alderete said the man who was released "hasn't denied being there" when the shootings occurred. He said the man was "cooperative" but did not reveal the motive behind the shootings or explain the sequence of events that led up to them.

STATE IN BRIEF

Father arrested in abductions

KILLEEN (AP) — Two children taken from a day-care center at gunpoint were found unharmed and officials arrested their father in connection with the abductions.

Severo Antonio Zarate, 25, was being held Wednesday by Killeen police in lieu of $30,000 bail on charges of aggravated assault, interfering with child custody and being a fugitive.

Police said Zarate took his daughters, Chelsea Ann Zarate, 4, and Natilie Marie Zarate, 2, on Jan. 19 from the Kandy Kane Ranch Child Care center in North Richland Hills after pointing a semiautomatic pistol at an employee.

Another employee and about 20 children were in the room when Zarate abducted the children, said officers.

The father and his daughters apparently had been staying at the mobile home since Friday. Police had not determined where else they had been since Jan. 19, Shiflet said.

Zarate and his wife, Deborah, 32, are separated, and Mrs. Zarate had been granted temporary custody of the children.

Ex-lawmen charged in drug case

LAREDO (AP) — Two former law officers have been charged in a federal undercover drug case in which they are accused of trying to buy 200 pounds of marijuana for resale, an official said.

Juan Suarez, 37, and Agustin Garcia, 52, were arrested in the parking lot of a Laredo restaurant Tuesday night, said Omar Tijerina with the U.S. Marshal's office in Laredo.

The two are former officers with the police department in the South Texas city of Alice. Garcia also was at one time a juvenile probation officer with Jim Wells County.

"According to the complaint, between the 26th and the 31st of January (they) negotiated with an undercover agent to buy the marijuana," said William Bish, resident agent-in-charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration office in Laredo.

"They came to finalize the negotiations when they were arrested," Bish added.

The drug agent said the two were arraigned Wednesday on charges of conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute 200 pounds of marijuana.

They each remained in the Webb County Jail Wednesday in lieu of $50,000 bond.

Medal urged for black seaman

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate on Wednesday adopted a resolution urging Congress to award a posthumous Medal of Honor to a black war hero from Texas who risked his life at Pearl Harbor to drag an injured officer to safety and downed two Japanese aircraft with a machine gun.

Seaman Doris "Dorrie" Miller, a Waco native, was a mess steward on the U.S.S. West Virginia when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941.

The House co-sponsor of the resolution, Rep. Jerald Larry, D-Dallas, said of the 529 Medals of Honor awarded during World Wars I and II, not one of 1.5 million black servicemen received the medal.

On Wednesday, Senate sponsor Eddie Bernice Johnson, D-Dallas, said as an infant in Waco she had known Miller.

The resolution said the "racial climate of the era" had prevented Miller's heroism "from being fully recognized."

Miller in 1943 died along with 700 of his crewmen when a Japanese torpedo sank the light aircraft carrier on which he was serving, the resolution said. In 1971, the Navy named a Knox-class frigate after him.

TDC warehouse damaged in fire

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A fire that erupted outside the Texas Department of Corrections' Walls Unit heavily damaged a warehouse used to store construction materials, but no injuries were reported, authorities said.

"I think it's going to be a total loss," TDC spokesman Charles Brown said Wednesday.

Exact damage to the structure, which stored paint, lumber and other materials, was not immediately know, Brown said. Some materials, including oxygen and acetylene storage tanks, were removed from the building before it was consumed by fire, he said.

The blaze, for which no cause has yet been determined, was described as the first large fire at a TDC unit since flames last year caused more than $1 million in damage at the Ellis Unit.

Funds soon available for shelters

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas will get $1.22 million in the coming weeks for emergency shelters for the homeless, Gov. Bill Clements announced.

Willie L. Scott, executive director of the Texas Department of Community Affairs, said funds from the federal Emergency Shelter Grants Program would be made available to cities, counties and private non-profit organizations in the state on a competitive basis.

The funds are to be used to help improve the quality of existing emergency shelters for the homeless; provide additional emergency shelters; provide for essential services to homeless people; and pay for the operation and maintenance of emergency shelters.

Legislator quitting to become JP

AUSTIN (AP) — Less than a month into the regular session, the 71st Legislature is losing a lawmaker: Rep. David Patronella is returning to Houston to become a justice of the peace.

On Wednesday, the departing Democrat won House approval for a resolution honoring the man he's replacing, Laurence Wayne. Wayne is leaving to become president of the World Class Resorts Travel and Vacation Corp. in Lake Tahoe, Nev., according to the resolution.

As a justice of the peace, he said, his salary will be about $60,000 a year. That's a step up from the $7,200 Patronella earned annually as a lawmaker.

Mothers, lobbyist agree school should teach abstinence

By T. GREGORY GILLAN
Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — Mothers worried about their daughters getting pregnant and a gay rights activist worried about teen-agers getting AIDS agreed Wednesday that sexual abstinence should be taught in Texas public schools.

Armbrister

Those views were expressed before the Senate Education Committee Wednesday, where two sex-education proposals by Sen. Ken Armbrister, D-Victoria, are pending. Armbrister's legislation is designed to improve Texas' ranking of second behind California in the number of teen-age pregnancies.

The proposals would either require or recommend that the State Board of Education develop courses to teach abstinence as being the only protection that is 100 percent effective against "unwanted teen-age pregnancy, sexually transmitted diseases and AIDS or HIV, when transmitted sexually."

Texas Education Commissioner William Kirby said course material designed to prevent teen-age pregnancy and substance abuse is taught in the public schools through the education agency's Education for Self-Responsibility program.

That program was developed by the agency's staff and includes material relating to abstinence, he said.

"I am concerned as a father about what is being instructed in public schools," said Armbrister, who said he has a daughter, 13, and a son, 16. "I know what we instruct in our home and I know the training they get in our church.

"I just want to ensure that the information they're receiving in school also includes that abstinence is a desirable condition of their age group," Armbrister said.

But Janet Simmons of Austin, the mother of a seventh-grade student who attended a meeting of her child's sex education course, told members of the Senate committee that legislation is needed because teachers associate sexual abstinence with religion and are afraid they may be breaking the law by teaching it.

"What I found was, they associated abstinence with religion and therefore, they refused to teach it," Simmons said. "I find that totally unacceptable."

Suzie Carter of Austin, the mother of a fifth-grade student, said she prefers that her child be taught abstinence instead of methods of contraception.

"I don't think they need to pull out the condoms and demonstrate what to do with them," Carter said. "I don't think the children really want that."

"When I was in high school...they showed us a film of a woman delivering a baby, and not very many of us got pregnant in that school, I can tell you."

Dell Garcia, director of community services for Planned Parenthood of Austin, told the senators that detailed education about how to use contraceptives should be taught as well as abstinence.

"Just say know — K-N-O-W," Garcia said.

Glen Maxey, director of the Gay-Lesbian Lobby of Texas, told committee members that the state should teach abstinence in its schools, but also should continue to educate students about contraceptives, and not just to prevent pregnancy.

Maxey said he disagreed with a section of Armbrister's bill that calls for teaching of traditional family values.
