LAST SERVICE HELD SUNDAY BY DELEGATES

Y. W. Conference Is Closed With Tea

The Texas-Oklahoma Girls' Y. W. C. A. conference closed a successful three-day session here Sunday afternoon with a tea at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Silk, 1700 Tenth street. The final event climaxed a busy day in which morning services at the First Methodist church, and Vesper services at the Episcopal church early in the afternoon were the other features.

Attend Church

In the morning, delegates were present in a body at the First Methodist church. South, and listened to a special sermon prepared for them by Dr. C. M. Simpson, pastor. Taking as his subject "The Open Door," Dr. Simpson sought to impress on the girls the necessity of leadership in religious activity as well as other walks of life. He declared that the opportunities for service offered by the church were unrivaled.

Attend Vesper Service

Following the Vesper services at 2:30 o'clock, all visitors at the conference attended the tea at the Silk home. The sessions were brought to a close there. Many of the girls left for their various homes Sunday afternoon and evening, while others remained in the city over night and will leave this morning. All were loud in their praise of Wichita Falls and of the treatment accorded them by the citizens of the town.

Local officials of the conference declared yesterday that every part of the scheduled program was put over on time and that they were more than pleased with the results attained.

Miss Kinsey Ill

The only regrettable part of the affair was the fact that Miss Juanita Kinsey, sponsor of the high school girls' club and one of the leaders in preparing the work, was unable to attend any of the sessions. On the eve of the first meeting, Miss Kinsey was taken ill and has been forced to remain at home since. Many of her suggestions and plans that she had laid prior to the opening of the meeting, were carried out through committees of local girls, however.

Ferguson To Seek Court Review Of Pardon Granted Him By Senate; Opponents Say He Arranged Fiasco

S. RAYMOND BROOKS.

AUSTIN, Feb. 11.—Before the resolution to pardon former Governor J. E. Ferguson was sprung upon the senate Friday afternoon, Ferguson wrote to members of the senate asking their support when it came up, it was learned from close friends of the former governor.

This fact was made the basis for declaration by senators who succeeded in having the resolution stricken from the senate records and returned to its authors, that the plan to secure its passage had been prearranged, and that Ferguson knew details of the arrangement to try to pass it.

Both friends and political foes of Ferguson paid a tribute to his remarkable personality in that after being removed from office six years ago, he is still a factor dominating the political alignment of the senate. He is the most talked-of-man in Texas.

It was admitted that whatever chances the resolution to pardon Ferguson may have had before the Friday afternoon explosion, it cannot now be passed in the senate.

Ferguson and his close personal friends, either in or out of the senate, will make an appeal to the courts to establish validity of the senate's action in adopting the resolution, it was reiterated here.

Autos With Legs Newest Wrinkle

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Invention of an automobile with 4 legs instead of wheels, is claimed by James Bryan, who has asked for patents. He has designed a 5-passenger clutchless, gearless and springless car of half the weight of wheel models which he says expert engineers have declared to be feasible.

Tests are now being made to determine possible weakness in construction.

Declaring he, and not the German inventor who recently announced invention of a "walking model" is the pioneer in the auto-with-legs field, Bryan says his machine is operated by two engines, developing 40 horse-power and capable of making 81 miles an hour. The legs have practically the same action of those of human beings, and the car can negotiate on one leg without moving from a horizontal position.

Burk Has It's Sunday Movies Despite Fine

Special to The Record News.

BURKBURNETT, Feb. 11.—Burkburnett has its Sunday movies and candy Sunday.

Likewise, it is expected to have its day in court this week.

Despite the fact that Manager Wilkie was hailed before the county judge last week and fined $100 for operating a place of amusement, in violation of the Sunday blue laws, the Liberty theatre was in operation Sunday afternoon and night.

But Wilkie did not manage the affair nor did the regular movie operator function. S. R. White acted as manager and R. E. White was the cinema artist, and thus, it is expected, the regular manager and his employes will escape contempt of court proceedings.

Half pound boxes of candy were sold for 40 cents—a drop of 10 cents from last week's price despite the $100 fine—and with the candy went free admission to the movie. It is said the cash register showed a neat sum.

By Associated Press.

DUESSELDORF, Feb. 11.—"Just one month ago today I gave orders to my troops to enter the Ruhr and never until Germany makes adequate settlement for the frightful wrongs and damages inflicted upon my country, will I order them to withdraw," said General DeGouette, French commander, to the Asociated Press today.

"Right and might are ours," he continued, "and we shall win," he compled the Ruhr without shedding a drop of blood; we have allowed the populace full liberty; we are not crushing the country, but we shall be paid."

TESTIMONY IN TRIAL BEGINS

Major Culberson To Face Jury

Testimony will be started at 9 o'clock this morning in the case of W. L. Culberson on trial in the Thirtieth District court, for the murder of M. C. Lamar. The jury box was filled late Saturday afternoon after two and a half days had been used in examining a special venire of 250 and two sets of talesmen, summoned when the original panel had been exhausted.

A self defense plea will be made by counsel for the accused man, this having been indicated by the line of questions put to each prospective juror during the examinations. The state has indicated that it will ask for the death penalty in Culberson's case.

The murder for which Major Culberson stands indicted took place on Jan. 8, in front of the Phonograph Shop, 803 Indiana avenue. Charges that the deceased had invaded the sanctity of the Culberson home were made by Major Culberson immediately after the shooting. Culberson has alleged that Lamar, who was employed as a salesman at the Phonograph Shop, had deported himself improperly with Mrs. Culberson, on occasions when he had visited the home on business affairs.

By Associated Press.

MAYFIELD TO HAVE BATTLE FOR HIS SEAT

Republicans Ready To Bring Contest In Senate

Special to The Record News.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—There is a well defined rumor in congressional circles that those who are engaged in gathering evidence in the Newberry-Peddy senatorial election contest intend to file the counts in the senate the latter part of this month.

Lawyers representing those who are determined if possible to prevent Senator-elect Earle B. Mayfield from taking his seat on the organization of the senate of the new congress, have been in this city for some time and are in constant communication with the forces opposed to Mayfield in Texas.

Will Take Seat

First, it was stated that Mayfield would be permitted to be sworn in and take his seat without a protest being filed and later the senate committee on elections would be asked to grant a hearing and order a full investigation of the senatorial contest in Texas both before and after the primary election held in 1922. This plan appears to have been now abandoned. According to gossip in newspaper and political circles, now the program of those who have the contest in hand is to place all the evidence they have gathered in the proper shape and in the hands of the committee of the senate before the passing of the month of February.

President Harding will be re-nominated by the republicans in 1924. Senator James R. Watson of Indiana has made this announcement. It did not create a political sensation for the reason that the expected happened. It has been known since the November elections of last year that the president would be nominated to succeed himsel. R. B. Creager of Texas and his lieutenants have been very active and have talked but little since the Mayfield-Peddy contest was settled at the polls. It is known that they have not abandoned the fight on Mayfield they threatened to make at the finish of the campaign.

Tables Now Turned

Newberryism is not longer an issue for the republicans to face. He was practically forced to resign by republican colleagues. Now the republican campaign managers are hopeful that a senate investigation of the Texas case will place the democrats on the defensive in the presidential campaign to come, and make it as ugly in the debatable states for the democrats as the Michigan senator made it for the republicans in the spectacular campaign of 1922, and which cost the republicans eight of their seats in the senate.

Probe of Foreign Oil Companies In U.S. Is Requested

By Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—While foreign corporations are among the largest engaged in exploiting the petroleum resources of the United States and are now engaged in efforts to extend their holdings in this country, American oil companies are subject to regulation which virtually prevents any activities on foreign soil, according to a report submitted to the federal trade commission resolutions calling for an investigation.

The report made public today, describes the organization and development of the Royal Dutch Shell Oil companies as to its holdings in the United States with special reference to its absorption of the United Oil company of Delaware.

It also touches on present ownership and control of the Union Oil company of California and discusses discriminations by foreign governments against citizens of the United States in the acquisition and development of oil lands.

Says Greeks And Turks Guilty Of Atrocities in War

Red, Red Runs the Trail of Booze

Four Murders in Oklahoma Laid to Doors of Rum Runners

By Robert James
International News Service Special Correspondent.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Feb. 11.—The "booze trails" through the southwest are running red—red with red whiskey and red with blood.

No fewer than five murders and countless woundings within the last three weeks have involved the peace officers of Oklahoma in investigations which lead to the definite—and yet indefinite—solution—the booze runner and the hijacker.

Lair of the Hi-Jacker

Oklahoma, the half way state between the cities of St. Louis and Kansas City, and the Mexican border, has been for a long time the lair of the hi-jecker and within its boundaries on the barren, howling plains, have occurred many a mysterious murder where the victims have died before "leaving any tales behind."

Peace officers, detectives, federal prohibition agents and executives of the smaller towns and cities today have reached the conclusion that competition between the home brewers and manufacturers of "white lightning" and the "red liquor" runners has been largely responsible. Sale for the home made variety of liquor, they point out, is diminished wherever appears the possibility of securing "red liquor." They take chances on the purity of the goods they can purchase at home. Numerous cases are known where death or blindness has resulted by drinking poisonous liquor handled by "Tom, Dick and Harry."

Youths Lured by Game

The desire to supply the trade with "genuine" red liquor, up to the standard of the pre-Volstead days has prompted enterprising youths to "try the game." They are met on the highways by the "hi-jackers" who hold them for their wares. "Hi-jacking" in its original term, means a sort of an agreement among illicit liquor dealers, authorities declare, whereby the price is kept high by confiscating the wares of one who sells cheaper or imports other kinds in competition—"more jack for the running of risk,"—to express it in their own vernacular.

At Blanchard, Okla., two weeks ago William H. Prewitt, an Oklahoma City shoe salesman, was murdered and left in a ravine for no other apparent purpose than to obtain his automobile. Seven persons—four men and three women—were arrested 10 days later in Breckenridge, Texas, and brought back to Oklahoma, via Wichita Falls, for investigation in the connection with the slaying. A series of confessions were secured from some of the prisoners, which made accessory to, the illicit liquor traffic. Efforts are being made to connect them with the mysterious disappearance of John Thomas, a Quay, Okla., merchant, about the same time. His automobile had also been stolen.

Prior to these two disappearances—one an actual murder—the father of Riviere Horner of Oklahoma City was awakened one morning to have his son's dead body dumped unceremoniously into his front yeard, the "messenger of death" hastily driving away after explaining that he was in a hurry to go and that "Riveere could not come in and talk to you because he is dead."

No evidence was at hand where young Horner had engaged in the liquor traffic, but it is stated by authorities that the companion who brought him home, alleged to have been Floyd Felts, had made frequent trips between old Mexico and St. Joseph, Mo.

Two other unidentified dead have been found on the highways, peace officers, ascribing their deaths to the definite and yet indifinite—"hi-jacker."

GIANTS HOLD MAJOR RECORD

Are Champs of All Time

Not only are the present New York Giants two times world's champions, but McGraw's powerful Manhattan club also is the lifetime champion of the National league. Despite years of second division ball during the Friedman regime, the Giants have the highest percentage of any team in the National league. Over a span of forty seasons, the Giants won 2,692 games and lost 2,089, while they hold a winning margin over every team in their league.

It was 40 years ago when the New York Nationals played their first championship game on Manhattan soil. This was on May 1, 1883, the strong Bostons being New York's opponents. It was fitting that the Giants should start off with a victory, as they won the game from the "Red Stockings" by a score of 7 to 5.

A crowd estimated at over 15,000 saw the game, among them being General U. S. Grant, who "pulled" continuously at a long black cigar and applauded generously whenever the occasion demanded. So great was the crowd that some of the players sold their stools to standees for 50c. There were no $15,000 a year players in those days.

As a result of the then record-smashing crowd it was necessary to lock the gates and the players were compelled to climb the fence to get into the grounds. Pat Gillespie tore the seat out of his trousers on a fence nail, but John Ward obligingly pinned them together.

Many of the foremost players of that early era took part in that first Giant game. William "Buck" Ewing, the famous catcher, led off for New York, followed by Roger Connor, the slugging first baseman. John Montgomery Ward, now practicing law in New York, batted third. "Smiling Mickey" Welch pitched New York to its first National league victory. Welch still is a frequent visitor at the Polo grounds and likes to chat about the old days.

The popular Buther Troy, Pat Gillespie, Mike Dorgan, Ed Caskins and Frank Hankinson were other Giant players in New York's first National league game.

In the Boston line-up were such celebrated names as Joe Hornung, John Morrill, Ezra Sutton, Sam Wise, John Burdock, Mike Hines, Charley Buffington and Paul Radford.

Skipping from the Mutrie era of the Giants to the present, we find that it is entirely due to the McGraw management that the Giants today lead the National league field in lifetime percentage. Before McGraw came to the Giants, the New York teams had won 842 games and lost 873 for a percentage of .491. Under McGraw's direction of the team, during a span of twenty and a half seasons, the Giants have won 1,850 games and lost 1,216 for a percentage of .603.

The New York team played its first game under McGraw's management on July 19, 1902. Philadelphia was New York's opponent and won by the score of 5 to 3. McGraw played shortstop for the Giants, handled three chances cleanly, and made one hit and scored a run. McGinnity and Bowerman were New York's battery, while "Ham" Iberg and Charley Dooin attended to Philadelphia's pitching and catching. Hughie Jennings, at present assistant manager of the Giants, played first base and captained the Phillies.

Beginning with 1913, the Giants turned strongly on their former tormenters—the Chicago Cubs—and won 9 out of their last 10 yearly series from the Windy City team. St. Louis and Cincinnati have yielded most often to the strength of the Giant arms. The Giants began picking on the Cardinals early, winning their first nine annual series from them. Beginning with 1899, St. Louis won four in a row, but the Giants then won 11 more until the Cards won the series in 1914.

It was during Mathewson's stay with the Giants that they levied most tribute from Cincinnati. Beginning with 1904, the Giants won the year's series from the Reds 13 seasons in succession. Brooklyn has been fairly successful against the Giants in recent years, but New York won 21 series from the Dodgers, lost only 8 and tied 4.

The greatest number of victories that the Giants have taken from any team in one season is 20, the Boston team in 1904 being the victim. Three teams have taken as many as 16 victories from the Giants in one season—the Pittsburgh team of 1901, the Boston team of 1902 and the Chicago team of 1907.

The composite record of the Giants in yearly series follows:

Club	Years	Series Won	Series Lost	Series Tied
St. Louis	33	25	6	2
Cincinnati	33	22	8	3
Brooklyn	33	21	8	4
Philadelphia	40	25	14	1
Boston	36	18	13	4
Pittsburg	36	18	13	5
Chicago	40	18	17	5
Total series		150	81	24

There's a Wide Path Worn From Red Sox Park to Yankee Bench In These Days of Gotham Flags

By NORMAN E. BROWN

There's a long, long trail awinding—from the Red Sox park in Bosting town to the Yankee's park in New York. And the sod is well trampled along that trail. For, since Harry Frazee obtained a lien on the Red Sox club and started selling it body and soul to the Yankees, 17 players have made the trip from Beantown to Gotham. Herb Pennock was the seventeenth man.

The Red Sox had won the world's series of 1918 and were sitting quite pretty for the 1919 campaign, when Frazee started wrecking the club. He let Duffy Lewis, veteran but sweet outfielder; Pitcher Ernie Shore and Pitcher Leonard, both then A-1 men, go to the Yanks for four mediocre players—Gilhooley, Catcher Walter, Pitchers Slim Love and Ray Caldwell.

Red Sox fans were still panning him for that move when the world was startled by the trading of Carl Mays, only underhand hurler in the game and a scintillating star, to New York for Pitchers Allen Russell and McGraw. Oh, what a stink.

Then Babe Ruth was sold for $125,000.

Del Pratt, Muddy Ruel, Vick and Thormahlen were swapped by Huggins for no less a squad than Wally Schang, Waite Hoyte, McNally and Harper. A pennant-winning battery, a crack infielder and a good pitcher obtained in one deal.

Last season, the famous Joe Bush-Sam Jones deal was put over, Huggins sending Peckinpaugh, Quinn, Collins and Piercy for them.

Not quite content with the ruin wrought, Frazee let Joe Dugan and Elmer Smith go for Fewster, Miller, O'Doul and Mitchell and then Al De Vormer was sent to the Sox for Pipgrass and Hendricks.

Huggins gave Murray, McMillan and Skinner for Pennock—the only fair trade pulled off in the list of deals between the two clubs.

Poker Parties For Women in Gotham Placed Under Ban

By Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—War has been declared on women's poker parties. After holding Mrs. Fannie Sprague in $500 bail on a charge of operating and maintaining a gambling game, Magistrate Oberwager declared:

"I am going to stamp out poker games among married women. Many homes are ruined as a result of married men stealing and robbing in order to satisfy their wives' demand for money to engage in these games."

Mrs. Sprague was arrested as a result of the complaints of husbands that their wives were losing money at her apartment.

Curing your Golf Troubles

By Jim Barnes

Dear Mr. Barnes:

I play a fairly good game of golf, but am not satisfied with my driving, because I don't get the distance that I feel I ought to. I have been told several times that I would greatly improve my game in this respect, if I only followed through, yet I think I am following through. I take a fairly full swing and know I apply enough power to get plenty of distance, but there is evidently something wrong in my methods. Can you suggest what the trouble may be?

Probably you are applying your power at the wrong time, or in other words, are mistiming the stroke. I shouldn't be surprised if you are really beginning to hit the ball in a mental way as soon as you start the club head down. If so, you doubtless do your hitting largely before the club-head meets the ball.

Remember that the club should come along on the downswing with a steady increase of speed, with the hitting process starting no more than a foot or eighteen inches before the club head reaches the ball and then going on through to a point well beyond where the ball was lying. Somebody has likened the stroke to swinging a weight on the end of a string.

This likeness in many respects is a good one. If you tried to swing a weight this way, you would have to gain speed with it gradually. If you tried to speed up your hand suddenly before the weight began to pick up speed, you would destroy the effect. That's exactly what you do when you make the mistake of trying to hit too soon with a golf club.

(Jim Barnes will suggest a remedy for your golf troubles. Write him in care of the Sports Editor, enclosing stamped envelope if you want a personal answer.)

Would Prevent Bird Killing

By Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Feb. 11.—A stronger movement to prevent the slaughter of birds has been launched by the Michigan Audubon Society with the organization of a crime prevention committee, it became known today. Attorney Joe Beatty Burtt, of Chicago, credited with being the original advocate of "sane" Fourth of July in Chicago, has accepted the chairmanship of the new committee as well as the chairmanship of the outdoor exhibit of bird houses to be established by the Michigan society on the west Michigan pike.

COYOTES OFF FOR ARCHER

Open Basket Tourney Monday

Coach Jones and his Red and Black high school basketball stable left Sunday afternoon for Archer City where they will open the district basketball tournament Monday. In competition with nine other teams from North Texas counties, the Coyotes will make an effort to bring to this city the honor of representing the district in the state finals to be held in Austin this spring.

Sport Snap Shots

That Miss Marion Hollins, former national golf champion, is determined to make a strong bid to regain her place at the top of women's golf world, is seen in the fact that she is now out on the Pacific coast, recuperating her health which undoubtedly affected her game to a great degree last year. With Hill Hollins is Mrs. F. C. Letts, Jr., of Chicago, who won undying fame for herself in the national at Hollywood year before last when she put out Miss Cecil Leitch, the British player, on the home green after one of the most sensational matches in history. Both Miss Hollins and Mrs. Letts expect to remain on the coast for a few weeks longer and then go to Pinehurst for the north and south championship. Word from the coast is to the effect that Miss Hollins is rapidly returning to the form which won her the national title in 1921. Her opponent in several matches in which Miss Mary K. Brown, the well known tennis woman. In a match played recently, Miss Hollins, paired with Mrs. Letts, went down in defeat before Miss Doreen Kavanaugh, the California woman champion and Miss Margaret Cameron, former northern and southern California champion. But they subsequently avenged themselves on one member of the duo when they defeated Miss Kavanaugh and Miss Brown, who holds the Del Monte championship.

There is every indication that this will be one of the biggest years trapshooting has ever known. With the amateurs in complete charge of the sport they are prosecuting the work of making this a banner season with promising energy. Whether the number of registered tournaments will be greater than heretofore is problematical, but it is almost certain that more shooters will compete than ever before.

It is argued in shooting circles that the new rule which provides that all gunners to take part in the Grand American Handicap tournament, must have shot at at least 1,000 registered targets, means that shooters who in the past have confined their practice to competition in obscure events or in private, will not enter the larger affairs.

If Miss Glenna Collet, national golf champion, does not do well in a competitive way during the forthcoming year, it will not be because of lack of preparation. The youthful Providence girl has a busy program mapped out for a few months ahead. She is at present at Belleair, Fla., under the tutelage of Alex Smith, the professional. After Bellair, Miss Collett will visit Miss Elizabeth Gordon at Palm Beach, and on February 12 she will compete in the Florida east coast championship at Pinehurst, which she won a year ago. It will be only a short time thereafter that Miss Collett will get ready for her trip abroad to play in the British championship, in the week of May 7.

Why does the public demand the downfall of a ring champion after it has lavished wealth and honors upon him? It is a question that is laways a puzzling one. When Dempsey enters the ring there will be many rooting against him because so many persons have said that he is invincible. It is human nature to resent perfection. It is the fact that so many boxing commissions and persons in authority have ruled that Dempsey is too good to be allowed to fight will make many of the fans hope that he loses so that the worthy commissioners will be shown to be all wrong.

Sarazen Tells How To Play Golf Uses Mashie Iron Shot in Wind

Champion Shows How to Address Ball For This Important Stroke on Links

"Getting Set" With the Mashie Iron

By GENE SARZEN
World's Champion Golfer.

In addressing the mashie iron shot I take the open stance with my feet firmly on the ground. The ball lies between both feet. I employ the interlocking grip for this shot.

The mashie iron shot is used for distance of 140 to 160 yards toward the green. It is a very effective shot into the wind.

Notice the dip of the right shoulder and that the right knee is inclined toward the ball. The left arm is in straight line with the club. The left hand is turned well over so that all four knuckles may be seen.

You will also notice that the weight of the body is perfectly balanced on both feet. Notice the position of the head in relation to the ball.

The mashie iron is one of the hardest shots in golf. It is used for a push shot mostly against the wind, and often in place of a mashie to keep the flight of the ball low.

If I make the trip to England I would have to depend a great deal on this shot in the British open championship, for the winds on those seaside courses are very strong, I have been told.

Texas Boy, Wounded in France and Held By Germans, Suffers Loss of Memory; "Wakes Up" Out in Queensland, N. S. W.

SIDNEY, N. S. W., Feb. 11.—A remarkable case of lapse of memory has come to light in Queensland.

Early in 1917, at the age of 19, Fergus E. Kemp presented himself at the recruiting office in his home town in Texas, U. S. A., and was accepted for service abroad. In July of the following year he took part in the operation that broke the resistance of the German army. In this action, Lieutenant Kemp was wounded in the head by a piece of shrapnel. When he recovered consciousness, as a prisoner in the German lines, his mind was an absolute blank. He could not remember who he was or how he came there.

A fortnight later he escaped in the uniform of a sentry whom he had hit on the head with his heavy service boot, and after three days reached the British lines. Other than that he was a soldier and had been captured by the Germans, he could give no account of himself. He did not even know his own nationality. Eventually the harassed officials told him he was an Australian, and that his name was Arnold Williams, and after being patched up he was sent "home to Australia."

Kemp had not lost his Texas plainsman's knowledge of horses and soon found work on a cattle station in northwest Queensland. There he stayed until a month or so ago, when his memory suddenly returned.

It took the young Texan three weeks to collect his check and reach Brisbane, whence he cabled his mother, telling her he was coming home after an absence of six years.

HI BASEBALL CALL IS MADE

Battery Men Soon To Report

The first call for high school baseball candidates will probably be issued by Coaches Jones and Henderson about the 15th of this month, according to word from the school offices. Battery men may be called to report on that date and if fair weather prevails the balance of the diamond candidates will be ordered out a few days later.

With a wealth of old material on which to build and with several promising rookies eligible, the Coyote prospects for the year loom bright at present. The Red and Black mentors, however, are anxious to begin the swing.

Suit was filed by "George Winsdor, king of England and Ireland and the British dominions beyond the seas." The case was brought against James C. Davis, who was director-general of railroads in 1918, when the corned beef was reported "lost."

Your Heart and Home Problems Solved By Elizabeth Thompsun

Dear Mrs. Thompsun: I wrote you over two years ago for advice, and would to God I had taken it. I had a good husband and a little boy, but I became in love with another man and he made me think my husband did not love me. I was simply crazy and I know it now to my sorrow. He used to come to see me as soon as my husband went to work and he would take me away and we would just live one long day of joy. I ran away with him and left my baby with one of the neighbors on pretense of going to the meat market.

We lived in hotels and I was in heaven for a month. Then he turned on me and said he would not trust me because I was not true to my husband, and so I would not be to him. He said my husband was far to good for me. He abused me and called me all the vile names he could think of. He simply made me crazy.

One night he did not come home. I went to a house of refuge and a baby came there. As soon as I could get around I got enough money to get back to my husband and asked forgiveness. He told me I was too late because he had a divorce, and had just been married again. I nearly fainted. He turned and left without a word.

Now when I see that woman out with my little boy and see the good home and clothes she has I could kill her or myself. My baby seems to love her and I can't understand it. It was not my fault; he made me do it. I met my husband and that woman Sunday. He passed me in their car and he never noticed me, but I know he saw me.

Is there any way I can get him back? I will do as you say this time. I signed before "UNHAPPIEST WIFE." Now I am the most miserable person in the world.

Could I make trouble in any waybetween them so he will come back to me? He belongs to me and I will have him yet.

TEARS AND SIGHS

My dear woman, your attitude in life is wrong. You want to cheat and dodge the suffering for it. The only thing for you to do now is to pay the price of your mistake with suffering. Don't think for one minute that bitter thoughts toward the woman who is making a good wife for your husband and a good mother for the child will bring you happiness. No matter what has happened keep a great courage and a sweet nature. Fill your heart full of love instead of bitterness and then good things of life will come your way again and you will know contentment.

Surely you must relize if you have a sense of justice that your husband no longer belongs to you. You threw away your right to him. Be a good sportsman and don't waste time in regret. The sooner you fill your heart with love and sympathy and make an effort to endear yourself to others because of your service to them the sooner you will be happy.

* * *

J. K. S.. Since you and the girl are not engaged she did nothing wrong by accepting the attentions of someone else. Probably they are good friends. From what you say I can see nothing that would indicate that she cares as much for him as she does for you.

Peasant Captures Eagle With Only His Bare Hands

By Associated Press.

REICHENHALL, BAVARIA, Feb. 10.—Capturing a full grown golden eagle alive in his arms has brought local fame to a 71-year-old peasant living in the Arlberg mountains on the Austrian side of the Bavarian frontier.

The old man was approaching his haystack when he spied the eagle devouring a roebuck which it apparently had just killed by severing the animal's jugular vein. When it noticed him coming, the eagle tried to fly away but snow on the ground impeded its rise. The peasant rushed forward, and gathering the huge bird's wings and claws in his arms, succeeded in carrying it away captive despite its vicious attempts to get free.

Fear Soviets May Occupy Harbin; Antis All Fleeing

HARBIN, Feb. 10.—The foreign population, estimated at more than 200,000, is perturbed over the possibility of soviet troops moving into Chinese eastern railway zone, which would mean the occupation of Harbin. During the months preceding the taking over of Vladivostok by Moscow troops the population of Harbin was considerably increased by the influx from the east. Today every Russian not an adherent of Bolshevik principles who can do so is getting out.

What Today Means To You

By Mary Blake.

Today is uncertain and variable. Postpone any important business transaction by all means. A hasty decision may mean great loss not only to you, but to your business associates. If you are of an impulsive nature put the brakes on your desires and give your better judgment a fair chance to assert itself. It will be better for you. Avoid any arguments and don't antagonize anyone if you can help it. It may prove disastrous for you. However, if you have anything vital to do, do it after seven this evening and before ten-thirty. You will find you will be more successful.

If this is your birthday, you were born under the Zodiacal sign of Aquarius. You are virtuous and loyal, but materialism is your besetting sin. Fight against it, as it is possible for you to overcome it.

You carve knowledge. Satisfy this craving however great the obstacles may be in your path. You can become a leader of men, so do not smother the possibility of a glowing future by lack of courage. Persevere and conquer. Some great people were born under this sign, and the stars gave you the same advantages they had. The sun was in Aquarius when Thomas was born, too. You know what he has done and is doing.

You should have a fine clear forehead, and a high one, which is another reason why you should succeed. An old Chinese proverb says:

"One part of the forehead shows our faculties, and the other part the use we make of them."

As you have plenty of forehead, find out how this applies to you and make use of it.

With the Women of Today

By EDITH MORIARTY

History repeats itself. Twenty-seven years ago a woman won the Nobel prize for the first time. Today a second woman will receive the Nobel peace prize if the official recommendation for the 1923 award is accepted. The first woman to win it was a Baroness von Sultner of Vienna, who was given it for her "Lay Down Your Arms" (Die Waffen Nieder).

Miss Elsa Brandstrom, a Swedish Red Cross nurse, is the nominee for the prize of $40,000 to be given this year by the Nobel Institute to the person selected by the Norwegian parliament. Miss Brandstrom is the daughter of the late General Edward Branstrom, who was for many years Swedish minister to Russia. At the outbreak of the war, this courageous woman led a small expedition to Siberia where she cared for prisoners and when they were freed helped them to get home. She won fame all over Europe because of her personal courage and generosity. Since the war she has been engaged in reconstruction work and last spring she raised money to buy a village in southern Germany and turned it into a vast hospital ad reconstruction camp.

America will soon see Miss Brandstrom for she is scheduled to lecture in this country in behalf of a recreation home for widows and children of German war prisoners who perished in Russia.

TODAY'S RECIPES

Cheese Rarebit—Melt a large tablespoon of butter in a saucepan, add a large tablespoon of flour and rub smooth gradually adding from a cupful to a pint of milk. Add half a cup of cheese that has been grated or cut very thin, and stir unail the cheese is melted. Season with salt, pepper or paprika and pour over crackers or toast. Or have macaroni or spaghetti and pour in salted water and drained and pour the rarebit over and serve. More cheese can be used if liked.

Roast Veal—A dressing of bread rdumbs seasoned with butter, onions, and sage is nice with roast veal. A few slices of bacon laid on top of the roast give it a nice flavor and supply the necessary fat for basting. Potatoes peeled and roasted with the veal are tasty.

Chocolate Pie—Two tablespoons of cocoa or two squares of chocolate melted, one large tablespoon cornstarch, yolks of two eggs, ½ cup sugar, small amount of salt, one large cup of milk, half teaspoon of vanilla or small lump butter. SUGGESTIONS

Strawberry Iice Cream in Heart-Shaped Molds—Sirup from canned strawberries (about one-third cup), three cups thin cream, one cup sugar, few grains salt, pink coloring. To the cream add the sirup drained from the canned strawberries, sugar and salt. A little more sugar may be added to the sirup if it is not sufficiently sweet. Color the mixture a delicate pink ,and freeze, using three parts ice to one part rock salt. Fill heartshaped moulds with the strawberry ice cream cover with buttered paper, adjust the covers of the moulds, pack in salt and let stand for three hours before serving.

To Open Cans—Did you every try to open a can of food? Did you punch a hole in the top of the can. wiggle the can opener around leaving a jagged edge. Did you ever cut your hand and lose your temper over the poor inoffensive can? If so, you will be interested to know that there is no need for all this extra effort and annoyance. Just remove the label from the side of the can, until yo ucan see the seam which was made in forming the body of the can. Lay the can on the side and puncture the can next to the seam with the point of the can opener. Then set the can in an upright position, insert the can opener in the hole already made in the side of the can working away from the seam until you have cut around the can. You will then be able to turn back the entire top (or bottom). If the can is held firmly any ordinary can opener will answer. Bythis method there is no risk of cutting the hand, and you will have a smooth edge, over whichthe entire contents will pass without being cut or broken.

Colquitt May Be Candidate Again His Friends Say

By Associated Press.

AUSTIN, Feb. 11.—Former Gov. O. B. Colquit, fresh from the oil fields of the mid-continent territory, is here to tell his lawmaking friends just what he thinks of taxation measures which have been introduced and are now pending in or out of the committee rooms.

He was railroad commissioner for two terms. he was governor for two terms, and before he was governor or commissioner he was an important member of the upper house of the Texas legislature. In addition to all these positions of trust, he was a state tax commissioner and the author of the Colquit tax law.

It may interest the politicians of Texas, as well as the people of the state, to be told that should an emergency arise the former governor may become a candidate for democratic nomination for governor as the successor of Hon. Pat M. Neff. Some of his close friends say that he is in a receptive mood.

Girls in Teens Have Big Income

By Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Two girls in their early teens had a combined income last year of nearly $500,000, according to an accounting filed in the New York sorrogate's court by their mother, who is their special guardian.

The girls are Adelaide Brevoort Close and her sister, Eleanor Post Close, grand daughters of Charles W. Post, cereal manufacturer of Battle Creek, Mich., who left them each approximately $1,000,000 in trust.

Post was well known in Texas and founded the town of Post City, in the Panhandle, which at the time of his death he was planning to build into a "tailor-made" city.

The girls' mother, Mrs. Edward F. Hutton, divorced their father, Edward B. Close, in Connecticut, in November, 1919, and was married to Edward F. Hutton the following July. She inherited half of her father's $20,000,000 estate.

The present value of the trust estimates of her two daughters, according to yesterday's accounting, are: Adelaide, $1,447,001, and Eleanor's, $1,453,270. Adelaide's income last year was $231,000 and Eleanor's was $241,544.

Fire Mountain

By Norman Springer

Author of "The Blood Ship"

"'Ere, now, sit still, and we'll figure out some plan," said the Bosun. "Ruth's all right. They let the lass take the Old Man into 'is room and stay there to nurse 'im. She'll be safe, Martin. Strike me, God will never let them 'arm, 'er, swigger me stiff if 'E will!"

There was a wealth of simple faith in the giant's voice, and some of it found lodgment in Martin's troubled breast. He composed himself, held himself in sure check, and told what had happened to him.

The boatswain then told of events in the cabin after Martin was hors de combat. Carew at once ordered Charley Bo Yip, the Chinese cook to prepare "slathers o' grub," the boatswain related. "Then they stowed us down here. Well within 15 minutes they was down 'ere again—breaking out stores. Charley Bo Yip was with 'em. As 'e goes aloft again 'e tips me a big wink. That means something Martin. They're deep uns, them chinks!"

The Bosun then told Martin that Carew's ship, the Dawn, had been wrecked and that only 15 of her 30 men had survived.

Some thin points of light, suddenly shooting into their dark prison, from around the edges of the trap-door over their heads, stopped the boatswain's talk. Some one was about to come down to them.

It was the Japanese, Ichi.

He spoke to Martin. "My dear Mr. Blake, we muchly desire your presence in the cabin. Can you travel there without assistance?"

Martin received a sharp, meaning glance from the boatswain.

"Yes—I can make it," he told Ichi.

He promptly scrambled to his feet and stumbled toward the ladder.

"Good-by, bos'n" he called. "Good luck!"

The big fellow's hoarse growl reached him:

"Good-by, lad. Good luck!"

* * * *

Daylight, dazzling to Martin's gloom-accustomed eyes, filled the Cohasset's cabin.

The table was littered with the debris of a meal, which Charley Bo Yip was phlegmatically and deftly clearing away, and Martin stared across the boards disarray at Wild Bob Carew's disdainful face. Martin was again surprised with the incongurity of Wild Bob's appearance contrasted with his activities. Was this splendid figure of a man the vicious outlaw of wide and evil repute? The renegade thief? The persecutor of women? The pitiless butcher of defenseless men?

Ichi't suave voice broke an uneasy silence.

"Mr. Blake, we have brought you up here for a little chat," said Ichi. "And before we commence, I beg please to inform you I am your very dear friend, and I think of you no ill. So—will you not be seated?"

Martin seated himself gingerly upon the edge of a chair. It was an uncomfortable position, and his arms ached keenly from being constrained in the unnatural position the handcuffs demanded, but he dare not slip out a hand.

"I am not mistaken in assuming you would with relishness accept refreshment? You would talk with more easiness?" Ichi went on.

"Water—coffee," said Martin briefly.

Yip filled a cup with black coffee and held it to Martin's lips.

Martin drank eagerly, titling back his head and staring upward into Yip's face. He half expected to see some sign of friendship there, a fleeting smile, or the flutter of an eyelid. But he was disappointed. There was not the hint of an emotion in Charley Bo Yip's moon-like face. When Yip turned away with the empty cup Martin heaved a satisfied sigh.

"This is better," he said to Ichi. "Fire away. I can talk now."

Ichi started off on a rambling and flowery appreciation of Martin's implied thanks.

Carew, breaking roughly into Ichi's speech, commanded his attention.

"Never mind all that, Ichi! By Jove! We can not afford to waste time listening to pretty courtesies!" He swung upon Martin with menacing eye and voice. "Here you! No—hedging now! What has become of the code writing that directed to the ambergris hidden ashore? Come—spit it out. Where is it?"

He wondered if Ruth had really answered their question, and if she had told them truly where the writing was. He decided he had best tell them the truth. It would not help them, and it could not harm Little Billy, for poor Billy was gone.

"Billy Corcoran has the code," he said. "I saw him place it in his pocket last night."

"Just as the young woman said!" exclaimed Ichi.

"Lille Billy, eh!" said Wild Bob. "Well, young fellow, can you tell us what became of that blasted hunchback?"

Martin almost leaped from his chair. What! Had Little Billy escaped?

"I don't know what has become of him," he told Carew. "You ought to know. He had the watch on deck when you come out of the fog, last night."

"—queer!" muttered Carew. "The hunchback must have been knifed and thrown over without being recognized."

"No, there were only three, and the hunchback was not of them," returned Ichi.

Not of them! Martin's heart was pounding joyfully. Then Little Billy was alive.

"Well, he isn't on the ship," asserted Carew. "Let us not waste any more time—we'll get the information the other way. Call in the minx. Perhaps it will tame some of that cursed spirit of hers to witness her pretty darling, here, being made uncomfortable!"

OLD MASSA SENDS THE RAIN.

Wherever there is sufficient moisture in the earth the crops are bountiful, the wealth of the world is increased, prosperity comes to those who till the soil and comparative happiness reigns.

Texas was dry from the Colorado foothills almost to the gulf. This was in the closing days of a dying year. There were spots where the surface of the earth was as dry as a bat's cave, and farmers and stockmen were apprehensive.

They know the disaster in a financial sense produced by a long period of drought. Now it is different.

Texas was first covered with a blanket of rain and then with a blanket of sleet. Then came a heavy freeze, and Texas was ice-covered almost to the boundary line of the Italy of America known as the Magic valley.

Then came the snowfall on top of the ice and now when the warm rays of a Texas sun has melted the snow and the ice and there is moisture in the earth, that means at its minimum $200,000 increase in the estimate of wealth that the farmers of the Lone Star State will take out of the earth in the harvest months of 1923.

Thus the rain sent by Old Massa makes all the people glad, it makes the banker optimistic, it makes the the merchant smile, it makes all the commercial classes and manufacturing classes realize that civilization begins and almost ends with the cloud.

There is moisture everywhere. All the creeks and tanks are full to overflowing and in the meat producing regions of the southwest, the stockmen say that the future is bright, and that bumper crops should be the reward of those who toil in Texas this year.

WHERE THEY ARE GOING

German emigrants are flocking to South America. Shipping lists from German ports register every month a larger number, not only of German emigrants going to South America, but of German salesmen anxious to resume and extend pre-war accommodations, and the report comes that there is a growing demand for tourist accommodations. A veritable paradise of undeveloped wealth is South America and the Germans are going there. There are six great ships plying between Hamburg and the South American ports, and their business is growing greater all the time.

HARDING IS WILLING.

Official Washington says that President Harding has decided to accede to the request of his friends and seek a vindication of the priciples of his administration in the coming presidential race.

Washington is a slow traveller. This intention of the president was known way down here in Texas months and months ago. If he lives, Warren G. Harding will be the standard bearer of his party in 1924, and unless the democrats make a wise choice, the buck eye statesman may be re-elected.

A HOLY LAND VACATION

Colonel Alfred E. Humphreys came to Texas not many years ago light in pocket and hopeful in a spiritual sense. He brought in the Mexia field, is said to have accumulated a fortune of $50,000,000 and on Feb. 7, he sailed from New York for a tour of Holy Land countries. He owns one well that produces $37,000 worth of oil every 24 hours. Really the Lord and the driller have been kind to the colonel, and he is richly entitled to a holy land vacation.

GRAND OLD NAME.

Now the scientists of the Rockefeller institute of medical research announce the discovery of the cause and isolation of the influenza germ, and the probability for the discovery of a cure or preventative in the very near future. This is one blessing that the Rockefeller money has conferred upon the family of men. Dr. Peter K. Olitsky is the man who made the discovery. Isn't that a grand old New England name?

And now the bar of Fort Worth demands an additional civil district court for Tarrant county and former State Senator R. A. Carlock has drafted the bill. And now the bar of Waco has voted unanimously in favor of the establishment of the Tenth court of civil appeals and for Waco as the location of that tribunal. Texas is a fast growing state.

Senator Heflin of Alabama, says he has been treated unfairly by the subsidized press and has threatened to take steps to prevent certain press representatives from sitting in the press gallery. Nature presented to the world an unfinished job, when it turned Heflin out of its workshop. It didn't build anything above the Heflin tongue. Poor chap, he isn't responsible for his tongue. Pity the man who is brainy from the tongue down.

UNCOMMON SENSE

YOUR STOCKHOLDERS.

Consider yourself as the manager of a corporation.

If you are alone in the world, you hold all the stock.

But as director of the concern it is your duty to make it pay.

If you have dependents—father, mother, wife or children, they are also stockholders.

And it is doubly important that you should so conduct the business that their stocq may be valuable to them.

You are the business.

Your brain and muscles are its assets.

Your faults and shortcomings are its liabilities.

The earning power of that business, present and future, is your chief concern.

Beside dividends in money, it must pay dividends in character and reputation.

In all these dividends the stockholders will share.

Careful and intelligent management, the prevention of waste of energy, and the wise use of ability will make it pay.

It may, in time, pay very handsomely.

And you, as the manager, will stand or fall by its success.

If you can establish that business—which is you—on a paying basis—if you can earn for it a high reputation for square dealing and excellence of products—your effort will not be in vain.

If you make a failure of it, thus disappointing those you have created shareholders, you will probably have yourself only to blame.

Each man and woman is an institution of high possibilities.

Each is capable, by employing all the intelligence and energies that are brought into the world with him, of earning more than a living.

Each has a chance to build up his own business.

Each has a chance to make it a credit to him, and a joy to those who share with him the ownership—even if they do not share the control.

If you will be as careful of your joint stock company as the progressive and intelligent manager is of the one he directs, you will leave it a solvent and a going concern.

ON THE SPUR OF THE MOMENT

EASY TO SAY

(By Hortense Hasenpfeffer Mudge.)

Three women were drinking tea together, and the first said:

"George and I have been married for 28 years, and in all that time there has never been an unkind word—no, not even an unkind thought—to mar our perfect happiness."

The second woman was tremendously impressed.

"My goodness, I wish I could say that!" she cried.

The third woman smiled, and said: "Well, why don't you? Jane did."

Princess Anastasia says she is glad to get back home after all those trying years in Europe. Well, gosh darn it, Annie, we're glad to see you back. It ain't been like the same old place.

SOME PEOPLE BELIEVE THAT—

Married couples don't enjoy themselves on top of a bus.

Any man who wears spats has something the matter with his head.

Nobody ever got a black eye in a legitimate way, through accident.

THE RETORT MATRIMONIAL

New York man's wife was visiting out West. He wrote her saying: "My Treasure, I send you my best love."

She replied, saying "My Treasurer: Please send your best check."

Young man who got married the other day made only $200 last year, but inasmuch as he will not have to pay any income tax, maybe he can worry along.

No man ever carried a fountain pen that had any ink in it.

Most golfers play the game because it is fashionable.

Nobody ever looks at a tall building except a hick.

No woman ever got her money's worth when buying a hat.

We have looked in vain through the society columns for a report of a society event in our neighborhood the other night. A couple threw a big party and invited a lot of friends, and after the guests arrived officers broke in and pinched the whole gang because there was a still in the house. They are all out on $500 bail each. And still some say there is nothing doing in society circles this winter.

WHO'S WHO

SENATOR REED SMOOT

REED SMOOT.

Senator Reed Smoot, who served as one of the members of the American debt funding commission which handled negotiations with the British commission, is leading the fight in the senate for ratification of the agreement finally reached between the countries concerned.

Smoot has been a prominent and even dominant figure in the senate for most of the 21 years he has been a member of that body. He is the first Mormon to play an important part in the nation's affairs.

Reed was born in Salt Lake City 61 years ago. His father was a Kentuckian and his mother a Norwegian. He was graduated from the Brigham Young academy and is an apostle of the Mormon church. He was a member of the republican national committee from 1912 to 1920. When he was first sent to the senate there was a cry in many parts of the country to unseat him because of his religion. The fight lasted three years, but in the end Smoot won and he has served as senator continuously since that time. He was made chairman of the republican senatorial campaign committee in 1919.

Smoot is known as a wizard at statistics and one of his hobbies is financial history.

He is married and his home is the little city of Provo, Utah.

POEMS THAT LIVE

TOO LATE.

Could ye come back to me Douglas, Douglas,
In the old likeness that I knew
I would be so faithful, so loving, Douglas,
Douglas, Douglas, tender and true.

Never a scornful word would grieve ye,
I'd smile on ye sweet as the angels do;
Sweet as your smile on me shone ever,
Douglas, Douglas, tender, and true.

Oh, to call back the days that are not!
My eyes were blinded your words were few;
Do you know the truth now up in heaven,
Douglas, Douglas, tender and true?

I never was worthy of you, Douglas;
Not half worthy the like of you.
Now all men besides seem to me like shadows—
love you, Douglas, tender and true.

Stretch out your hand to me, Douglas, Douglas,
Drop forgiveness from heaven like dew;
As I lay my heart on your dead heart, Douglas,
Douglas, Douglas, tender and true!

More Truth Than Poetry

—By James J. Montague—

NOT SO EASY

My father was certain that Lincoln became
As wise and great as he did,
And filled all the world with the sound of his fame
Because he split rails as a kid.
And so I was given a wedge and an axe
And told to go out and make good,
From dawn until darkness, by cleaving great stacks
Of tough-fibred hiskory wood.
The rails that I spit fenced a ten-acre lot;
But a set of lame muscles was all that I got.

That the law books the secrets of statecraft contained
My mother devoutly believed—
The secrets by which the Great President gained
The splendid success he achieved.
So I waded through Blackstone and Parsons on Torts,
I studied McShouter on Pleas,
I memorized all the Kentucky reports
And Justice O'Chesty's decrees,
But, a seventh rate lawyer, unknown to renown
I wore out my life in a seventh rate town.

I used to believe that by toiling all day
And reading all night by the fire,
To the goals of ambitious desire,
Our masterful statesmen were set on their way
I thought that we all, if our start was the same,
By wisely employing our time,
To the radiant heights of unperishing fame
Might swiftly and easily climb,
But I've labored through years that were many and long,
And I'm forced to admit these conclusions were wrong.

A Story of Romance and Mystery in India

"If he comes,—kill him! There, dicate and arranges the election of Utirupa in his place. Believing that the treasure is in the River Palace, Samson plans an exchange by which the Indian government will obtain the Palace and Utirupa the English fort which stood with the boundaries of Sialpore.

When he was notified that he was to occupy the throne, Utirupa readily signed the contract transferring the River Palace to the Indian government and receiving in exchange the "island" fort which had been occupied by the English.

Meanwhile Yasmini smoked a cigarette in the bedroom Tess had surrendered to her.

That evening Tom Tripe turned up, and his dog Trotters remaining outside the window with a succession of volcanic growls rumbling between flashed teeth.

"What's the matter with the dog, that he won't come in?" asked Tess.

"Nothing, ma'am. He's just encouraging himself. He stays here tonight."

"It's known all over Sialpore that the princess is staying here, and Gungadhura's at large somewhere."

"What have you in your hand?" Yasmini asked.

"Gungadhura' turban that he wore the night when Akbar chased him down the street," Tom replied.

Yasmini nodded, understanding instantly.

Five minutes later Tom took his leave. They heard his voice outside the window.

"Trotters."

The dog's tail beat three times on the veranda.

"Take a smell o' this!"

There was silence, followed by a growl.

"If he comes,—kill him! There there's the turban for you to lie on an' memorize the smell! Kill him! ye understand?"

A deep growl was the answer, and Tom Tripe marched off.

Great preparations were made for a royal wedding. And when Samson heard that Yasmini was to be Utirupa's bride he was sufficiently disgusted, even to satisfy Yasmini, who was no admirer of his.

He was feeling jumpy about the treasure too. A company of sappers had dug right up to the pipal trees without discovering anything so far, except a few old coins.

Samson decided the wisest way was to keep silent and continue digging, even if the operation did kill ancient trees.

And, of course, he could not refuse to recognize the wedding officially. Yasmini had contrived the novelty of welding weddding and coronation ceremony and festival in one. Instead of two successive outbursts of squandeting, there would be only one. It was economic progress! One could not withhold approval of it.

* * *

Soon after the wedding and coronation it began to be rumored that Utirupa had given Blaine another contract, and the news, of course, reached Samson's ears.

So Samson called on Utirupa and requested explanations. He was told that the new maharanee, it seemed, had a fancy to build a palace where the fort stood, and the matter was receiving shrewd investigation by Dick.

Samson could not go and investigate what Blaine was doing, because he was given plainly to understand that the new palace was the maharanee's business.

The efforts of quite a number of spies, too, were unavailing.

So Dick had his days pretty much to himself, except when Tess brought his lunch to him, or Yasmini herself in boots and turban rode up.

The guards on the bastions, and in the great deep in the center, knew nothing whatever of what was happening, because all Dick's activity was underground and Tom Tripe with a ferocious dog of his, kept guard over the ancient door that led to the lower passages.

Tom keeping strictly sober, slept in the fort and said nothing of importance to any one. He looked drawn and nervous, as if something had terrified him, but public opinion ascribed that to the "snakes" on the night of the coronation.

Then about sundown one evening Tom Tripe galloped in a great hurry to Utirupa's palace. That was nothing to excite comment, because in his official capacity he was always supposed to be galloping all over the place on some errand or another.

But after dark Utirupa and Yasmini rode out of the palace unattended, which ride caused comment. Yasmini in man's clothes, as usual when she went on some adventure.

Tess was up at the fort before them, waiting with Dick outside the locked door leading to the ancient passages below. They said nothing beyond the most perfunctory greetings, but, each taking a kerosene lantern, passed through the door in single file, Tom leading, and locked the door after them.

"I've not been in," said Dick's voice from behind them. "All I've done is force an entrance."

"And I wouldn't have liked your job, sir! It was bad enough to sit and guard the door. After you'd gone o' nights I'd sit for hours with my hair on end, listening; and the dog 'ud growl beside me as if he saw ghosts!"

"Maybe it was snakes," Yasmini answered.

"No, Your ladyship. This was the sound o' some one digging—digding all night long down in the bowels of the earth! Look out!"

They all jumped, but it proved to be only Tom's own shadow that had frightened him.

They passed down into a sort of cavern that had been used for ammunition room. At the far end one very heavy stone was lifted and laid back, disclosing a dark hole.

"I used cannon balls," said Dick, "to drop on the stones and listen for a hollow noise. Once I found that, the game was simple."

Leading down into the dark hole were twelve more steps, descending straight but turning sharply at the bottom. Dick led the way.

"The next sight's gruesome!" he announced.

The passage turned into a lofty chamber in the rock. In the shadows at one end an image of Jinendra smiled complacently.

"This is the 'grue,' said Dick, holding his lantern high.

Its light fell on a circle of skeletons, all perfect, each with its head toward a brass bowl in the center

"Those," said Yasmini, "are the bones of priests, who died when the secret of the place was taken from them! My father told me they were left to starve to death. This was Jinendra's temple."

"D'you suppose they pulled that cut stone from the walls, trying to force a way out?" Dick hazarded.

"I would have gone straight to the image of Jineudra," said Yasmini. "Jinendra smiles and keeps his secret so well that I should have suspected him at once!"

"I went to that last," Dick answered. "I pried it away from the wall at last with steel wedges, and there's just room to squeeze in behind it. Beyond that is another wall that I cut through with a chisel. Who goes in first?"

Yasmini would have led the way, but nobody would permit that.

"Let the dog go first!" Tom proposed. Trotters was sniffing at the dark gap behind Jinendra's image, with eyes glaring and a low rumbling growl issuing from between bared teeth. The passage was about ten feet long and a yard wide. They squeezed one at a time through the narrow break Dick had made in the end of it, into a high, pitch-dark cave that smelt unexplainably of wood-smoke.

The first glance was enough to show that they stood in the secret treasure-vault of Sialpore. There were ancient gold coins in heaps on the floor. But what made Dick exclaim were the bars of silver stacked at the rear and along one side in rows as high as a man.

"My contract reads gold!" he said. "A percentage of all gold. There's not a word in it of silver. Who'd ever have thought of finding silver, anyhow, in this old mountain?"

"Your percentage of the gold will make you rich," said Utirupa. "But you shall take silver too."

"Look out!" yelled Tom Tripe suddenly. But the warning came too late.

Out of the shadow rushed a man with a long dagger, stabbing frantically at Dick. Tom's revolver missed, filling the chamber with noise and smoke.

Down went Dick under his assailant, and the dagger rose and fell in spasmodic jerks. Dick had hold of the man's wrist, but the dagger-point dripped blood and the fury of the attack increased as Dick appeared to weaken.

Utirupa ran into drag the assailant off, but Trotters got there first—crose his neckhold like a wolf in battle—and in another second Dick was free with Tess kneeling beside him while a life-and-death fight between animal and man raged between the bars of silver.

"Gungadhura!" Yasmini shouted at sight of the man's face. He was lashing out savagely with the long knife, but the dog had him by the neck from behind and he only inflicted surface wounds.

"Hell's bells! He'll kill my dog!" roared Tom.

But the dog's long fangs closed on the victimm's jugular veins and tore it out. The long knife clattered on the stone floor, and then Tom got his dog by the jaws and hauled hi moff.

"You can't blame the dog," he grumbled. "He knew the smell of him. He'd been told to kill him if he got a chance."

"Gungadhura!" said Yasmini. "So Gungadhura was Tom Tripe's ghost!"

Dick's wounds were not serious. Tess staunched them with torn linen.

"How did Gungadhura get in here?" wondered Tess.

"Through the hole at the end of the mine-shaft, I suppose," said Dick. "I built up the lower one—he came one day and saw me doing it—but left a space at the top that looked too small for a man to crawl through. Then I blocked the mouth of the tunnel afterward, and shut him in, I suppose. He's had the workmen's rice and water-bottles, and they left a lot of faggots in the tunnel, too, I remember. That accounts for the smell of smoke."

"When did you first know you'd found the treasure, Dick?" asked Tess.

"Not until the day that Gungadhura found me closing up the fault, and asked me to dig at the other place. The princess told me I was on the trail of it that night that you went with her by camel; but I didn't know I'd found it till the day that Gungadhura came."

"How did you know where it was," Tess asked, and Yasmini laughed.

"A hundred guarded it. I looked for a hundred pipal trees, and found them—near the River Palace. But they were not changed once a month. I looked from there, and saw another hundred pipal trees—here below this fort—exactly a hundred. But neither were they changed once a month. Then I counted the garrison of the fort—exactly a hundred, all told. Then I knew!"

And that is the whole story.

Smoking a cigarette lazily on Utirupa's palace roof, Yasmini reached for Tess's hand.

"Come nearer." See—take this. It is the value, and more, of the percentage of the silver that your husband would not take."

She clasped a diamond necklace around Tess's neck, and watched it gleam and sparkle in the refracted sunlight.

"Don't you love it? Aren't they perfect? And now—you've a great big draft of money, so I suppose you're both off to America, and good-by to me forever?"

"For a long time."

"But why such a long time? You must come again soon. Come next year. You and I love each other. You teach me things I did not know, and you never irritate me. I love you. You must come back next year!"

Tess shook her head.

"But why?"

"They say the climate isn't good for them until they're eighteen at least—some say twenty."

"Oh! Oh, I envy you! What will you call him. It will be a boy—it is sure to be a boy!"

"Richard will be one name, after my husband."

"And the other? You must name him after me in some way. You can not call a boy Yasmini. Would Utirupa sound too strange in America?"

"Rupert would sound better."

"Good! He shall be Rupert, and I will send a gift to him!"

(That accounts for the initials R. R. B. on a certain young man's trunk at Yale, and for the imported pedigree horse he rides during vacation—the third one, by the way, of a succession he has received from India.)

And that is the whole story, as Yasmini told it to me in the wonderful old palace at Bubl, years afterward, when Utirupa was dead, and the English government had sent her into forced seclusion for a while—to repent of her manifold political sins, as they thought—and to start new enterprises as it happened. She had not seen Theresa Blaine again, she told me, although they always correspond; and she assured me over and over again, calling the painted figures of the old gods on the walls to witness, that but for Theresa Blaine's companionship and affection at the right moment, she would never have had the courage to do what she did, even though the guns of the gods were there to help her.

IRRIGATION ? ? ? ? ?

Asked—Answered

A "directory" of terms that are now unfamiliar, but that will come more and more into use as the irrigation project expands, is being furnished The Record News readers. All the names and expressions that will be in more general use over the project will be explained from time to time by A. M. McPherson, consulting engineer, of this city.

A list of common terms used in irrigation and their definitions. Rotation or rotating.

As we have explained before in this column it is most important that the farmer have a large head of water to irrigate with. Every well managed irrigation project attempts to do this. The way it is done is to give one farmer a large stream for a short time then the water is shut off and turned to his neighbor and so on around until finally the water is again delivered to the first farmer. This is called irrigation by rotation, or rotating or sometimes it is spoken of as irrigating by turns. The period of rotation is generally about two weeks, but this varies according to the kind of crops and the weather conditions.

Root System—The various plants grown by the farmer differ in the development of their roots. Different plants have different systems and the irrigation farmer should have a good knowledge of these differences. This term is somewhat similar to "feeding zone" which has already been defined and is often confused with it the same.

Measuring Device—A device used to determine how much water is delivered to the farmer. There are two general types; one which simply measures the amount of water flowing, viz. shows how many second feet are passing, and the other type shows the quantity of water that has passed, viz. shows the number of acre feet that has been used. The later type is the best, but also the most expensive.

Right-of-Way — This term when used in regard to an irrigation project has a somewhat different meaning than when used in regard to a railroad or highway. It is frequently necessary that a farmer build a ditch across anothers land to supply water to his own, or it may be necessary to dig a waste canal across his neighbors property to dispose of his waste water. In practically all irrigation projects this right is granted by all purchasers of land to all other purchasers. If this were not done great confusion and loss would result. It must be done here.

Church Needs Leaders As Well as Business World, Simpson Says

Pastor Speaks to Girl Delegates At M. E. Services Sunday.

At the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, Tenth and Lamar streets, a feature of the morning service was a special message by the pastor Rev. Simpson preached by request to the Girls' Reserve of the Y. M. C. A., which has been in session in the city for the last three days. The young ladies sat in a body in the middle section of the church. Dr. Simpson use as his text these words: "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it."And they that were ready went in with him, and the door was shut."

"A common statement of science is that'Nature abhors a vacuum.' The roar of the cannon is but the air rushing in to fill the vacuum made by the explosion. The peals of thunder that deafen the ear, announce the filling of space made by the fiery flashes of lightning. Nature, of which the human race forms so great a part as one has said, 'is but the drapery of the robe which the Invisible clothes Himself.' God has made no provision for an aching void, except that it be immediately filled.

Space to Be Filled.

So, my young friends, as we stand in the threshold of young womanhood, some older some younger, with life opening out before us, may we recognize it as a space to be filled, a page to be recorded a life to be lived. 'Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it.' This divinely granted privilege is none other than a voice that calls to action. As we today face life unrevealed and untried, there rush into our minds questions like these: How can I make life yield its fullest and best? How can I know the true secret of power? How can I attain to true greatness? How can I fill the whole life with a happiness, a peace, a joy, a satisfaction, that is ever rich and abiding, that ever increases, never diminishes? To answer these questions in a general way, is the purpose of your messenger today.

The Call for Preparation.

The position we hold and the privileges offered us constitute a call to prepare for life. In all the southern states there was a little while ago a total school population of more than 8,680,000; an enrollment of 5,210,000; an average daily attendance of 3,647,000. We, therefore, had more than 1,500,000 children who were irregular at school, and more than 3,400,000 of school age who had never been enrolled. In educational matters among the states, Texas ranks first in permanent school fund, fifth in income from state tax, twenty-second in local tax, thirty-seventh in length of school term and forty-first in scholastic enrollment. Within our state lines we have more than 51,000 white men of voting age who cannot sign their names; and more than 250,000 people ten years old and over who can neither read nor write. We have 10,000,000 children in the United States of America of school age not in any Sunday school.

The Call From the Commercial World

The call for efficient work comes from the commercial world. Grecian fame: 'I seek a man,' a prepared man. I had a socialist to tell me that the devil had so gotten hold of the commercial world that many honest men could not get bread to eat; that they are often forced to break a window or such like, which would take them to jail, where they could get something to eat. My observation has been that the man who goes to jail to get his dinner, has either been too indolent to use the power that he has, or has refused to prepare for any work in life. The man who is prepared for nothing more than to dig a ditch, under average conditions, has always found a place to dig. We want ready men and ready women. Some months ago a friend in another city told me he was changing positions, leaving open a responsible position in a large wholesale house. After months of searching, the superintendent of the firm placed a man on trial. He worked there faithfully but after a fair trial, was discharged on the ground of inefficiency. The superintendent was still in search of a man. What kind of a man? One who is prepared for the commercial world. During another few weeks a director of one of the large business firms in this state told me he had for months been in search for six young men for his business, but had failed to find them. Why? Because his firm demanded men strong physically, keen intellectually, and unswerving from Christian ethics in business life. 'And they were ready,' says the text, 'went in with him, and the door was shut.' The spirit of this twentieth century is not to ask to what club do you go? Who is his father? Who was his grandfather? But the question is this: What can you do? Are you ready?

The Call From the Professional World

The demand of the professional world for prepared men has been so great that we have come to the day of specialists. One lawyer is asked to take criminal cases alone, while another deals with the civil docket. One physician treats the lungs, another the throat, another the eye and the ear. One teacher is asked to teach Greek, another Latin, another English, another mathematics, another history. We demand the best that is to be had. The need of all the professions is illustrated by a familiar story that has gone the rounds. It is said that a certain physician was called in to minister to a little child. The child was crying morning noon and night. The doctor worked hard and with the greatest diligence, but gave no relief. The mother became alarmed, and after the physician ceased his efforts, she offered the child everything about the house that might amuse it. In her efforts to quiet the child, she held before the little fellow a little pasteboard jumping jack, which when the strings were pulled, sawed the air with the hands and feet. The child on seeing the capers of the toy hushed, and was soon well again. After this episode, it was suggested that the presence of some physician is not as good as that of a pasteboard jumping jack. This but illustrates the needs of every profession. The day has come when we demand the lawyer be well equipped, truthful and honorable; that the physician, who has access to the very holy of hollies of the home, be thoroughly conscientious and clean in his personal life; that the minister be above reproach, a man of business sense and whose heart and life are deeply pious; that the teacher be one whose heart and life shall be clean, thus equiping one for leadership in all that is true and right; that the editor be skilled in his art, and produce a clean sheet which shall mould public sentiment and establish truth and righteousness in the hearts of men. Thus it is in every profession; the call is loud and long for better service. Injustice, misery, evil, ignorance and falsehood are still at large in the land. What preparation have we made, what preparation shall we make for the profession towards which we have turned our faces?

The Call of the Religious World

There is a demand for preparation not only in the commercial world, not only in the professional world, but is even with a greater need in the religious realm. Let us not lose sight of the fact that when a man does his professional and his commercial work well, that that in itself is performing a religious duty. A secular task rightly done, becomes a religious work. But we speak of preparation for religious work here in the sense of the work of the church. You may take your own church, or any other church and you will find almost without an exception, that in every organization from the Junior League to the Official board with the preachers thrown in, that there is a poverty of leadership. Trained leadership is the church's greatest need today. We need it in the leagues, we need it in the Sunday schools, we need it in the mission societies, we need it in the official boards, we need it in the ministry. Lord open our eyes that we may see; give us leadership and the power to be led. My friends, do we hear this call today? I appeal to you young men and young women, what shall we do? The future welfare of the church is upon us; the progress of the State and the nation hangs on our shoulders. Let us remember this; the strength of weakness of the church of God in any community, city or nation, gives the standard of their civilization.

The Means of Preparation.

We have considered the call for preparation, the call from the commercial world, the call from the professional world, the call from the religious world. This call is vain, if it cannot be answered. But the means for preparation are sufficient and abundant. This work begins at home. Fathers, mothers, do you give the boys and girls of your home the best of your efforts? As the twig is bent, so shall the tree grow. It is yours to increase the school tax, demand the best teachers and the longest terms. When the home has started us right, there is the graded school and the high school to complete the foundation work. Added to these are the colleges and the universities to give the finished and the professional courses. For the boy who would be a scientific farmer or a progressive and successful mill man, there is the State Agricultural and Mechanical College; for the man or the woman who would enter the commercial life, after a good literary training, the Business College; for those who would teach, the university courses and then the normal School; for the lawyer, the minister, the physician, the dentist, the engineer, the electrician, and all others of professional work, the different departments of university work fitted for their several needs.

As the commercial and the professional needs have called out these various means of training workmen, so the church in like manner, arises in this hour of need and would train every willing heart for the service of our risen Lord. In answer to the call of the church, our young people have responded with their modern movements, giving every needed training, and throwing unprecedented opportunities at the feet of every willing life. The Brotherhood of Saint Andrew, the Christian Endeavor, the Baptist Young People's Union, the Epworth League and others, stand as denominational training schools for immediate service in the home church.

Added to the local and denominational organizations our young people are those interdenominational ties the Young Men's Christian Association, and the Young Women's Christian Association, the Student's Volunteer and the Young People's Missionary Movements. These enlarge the realm of our religious training, abolish the horizon of our spiritual vision, and cast at our feet innumerable opportunities for larger service.

'Almighty Lord, with the one accord we offer thee our youth.

And pray that the would'st give us now the warfare of the truth.'

The Results of Preparation.

One final thought, the result of this work. When we incorporate these external preparations into our lives, where the heart has already been made new, we begin to realize the divine will in our creation. Thus equipped by earthly training and guided by heavenly counsel under the leadership of Jesus Christ, we can be happy in service anywhere and everywhere. It may be that the call of duty may take some of us into distant lands to give our lives in service of God to neglected people. If that call should come God grant that we may go with a willing heart. But the most of us are to labor at the home base, and are to grapple with the problems of our local work. These are great difficulties, but at the same time great opportunities. To do the little things of life with the thought that this call is the will of God, makes secular life sacred and homely things great.

The place of beginning in the building of a great civilization is in the young life of a nation; and so our labors should early find a place in the sacred precincts of the home. This three-fold preparation shall mean that our homes will become places where every heart gets its truest impulse, and every life its greatest inspiration. In the development of life, the church reinforces, the school enlarges and intensifies, but the shaping of destiny in largely in the home. It is here that the body begins to develop, and gives to the world a dwarf or a robust physique; it is here that the mind receives its first training, when it is blinded by intellectual darkness of is given the light of truth, it is here that the spirit receives its first discipline, when life is made pessimistic and the world sad, or optimistic which causes the world to rejoice. The redemption of the home through our young life will mean far more than the liberation of genius. It will mean the checking of political corruption and the uplifting and the enolbing of every citizen who has a vote to caste. It will mean a free play of mind that will affect advantageously every industrial, educational and social interest. It will mean that the young life of our country will be consecrated to God in its youth, that from the cradle to the tomb Jesus Christ shall be Lord of all.

Jameson Still In Serious Condition

Reports from the general hospital last night stated that the condition of J. M. Jameson, 1711 Pearl street, was still serious and showed very little improvement. Mr. Jameson was injured last week near the Kemp hotel when he attempted to cross the street and was struck by a truck belonging to a local business firm.

During the time he has been in the hospital, Mr. Jameson has been conscious at intervals. An X-ray examination showed that he was suffering from a fractured skull.

KAY TALKS ON PRAYER SUNDAY

Says America Leads World

The power of prayer was the subject of Judge John C. Kay in his Bible class lecture at the Olympic theatre Sunday morning. One hundred and sixty-two members were present.

Judge Kay said in part:

"This lesson is about an unjust judge and about prayer, and the kind of prayer that man ought to make. I don't know whether you all ever thought about it as much as you might. Prayer is the highest act of religious worship. The Lord's Supper, baptism, none of these things, as an act of worship, begin to compare in dignity to prayer, because the man who kneels down to pray, says by that act, that he is in communication with the King of another world, as well as of this world. He says, by that act, that he is capable, and worthy to talk to his Maker. So that, to my mind, prayer is the highest religious act of which man is capable.

Why Do We Pray?

Now, what do we pray for? What do we want? If I could only draw that fine line which I want and that which I really need. There is wonderful difference in those two words. I think all of us, ask for too much.

I don't know that a bad man needs anything except forgiveness. I don't know that he should ask for any more than that, at first.

There's a lot of difference in man's ability and power to pray. Do you remember that old king, Hezekiah, when the angel came to him and said: "Set your house in order, for you are going to die and not live." And then, Hezekiah made a prayer. He said: "Lord, remember how that I have walked before you perfectly with an upright heart." That's what he said, and his life was lengthened. . .

Know What You Need

So, when you go to pray, know what you need, and ask that, and that only, and leave out your mere wants, is my idea of religion; and my idea of prayer, the highest act of religion.

Do you know what I think has made America great? I think it is these old puritan mothers that raised us. They prayed every night. Do you know, in this country, we never failed in anything ?We are a chosen people, set apart in the world, and I think it is because of prayer.

I was reading last night about this Panama canal. They said that it would break the government to build it, and that it wouldn't pay. You remember what was said about it. The ships are standing out there now, screaming and scrambling on both sides, waiting for an opportunity to pass through, and it is going to pay for itself before long, and, they calculate that in a little while, it is going to pay for another one.

No Other Answer

Why? Because it was built by a people that are blest. I don't think there is any other answer to it.

What do you pray for? Do you pray for the country? Do you pray for these judges that the lesson talks about? What does that story about that judge mean? What did this woman want when she said: "Avenge me from my adversary"? That sounds like a little bit strange thing to say, under the system of holding court, but what she meant by this, in our language was: "Get my case up and try it some time while I am living." And yet, we have got only three members of the supreme court in the state of Texas.

And I just tried a case down there after six or seven years and it cost you great, big, brave, hard-up, poor fellows six cents a year, just one street car fare in Wichita Falls, to keep up that court, but you wouldn't increase it. And here these litigants all over Texas cry: "Avenge me of my adversary!" "Try my law suit."

And you fellows talk about judges. I have heard you. Let me tell you something. This old Methodist discipline says that you have got to respect magistrates.

Let me tell you something else. In going up and down over Texas for 27 years, serving before all kinds of judges, I have never yet found one on the bench that I felt was corrupt. Do you hear me? We ought to give them more honor, treat them with more respect and more decency, and look up to them as our magistrates.

Now, to return a moment to the question of prayer. Do you believe in it? Do you do it? Do you pray in secret? Do you know why the Savior recommended secret prayer? He said to go in the closet and shut the door and pray. Why did he do that? Ah, he knew that no dishonest man was going to do that, when there was none to see, and none to hear, except God, and nobody to deceive or mislead. No man would ever go and lock the door, and lock himself up to pray from a dishonest or hypocritical motive. That's the reason that it was recommended. Not that that kind of a prayer would reach heaven quicker than any other kind, but it takes an honest heart to do it. It takes an honest soul to go off to itself, where none may hear except God.

That's the reason that He recommended that kind and if you do that kind of praying, if you believe in that kind of praying, you have the right idea about prayer.

Cleansing Power Christ, Crabtree's Sunday Sermon

The text for the Sunday evening sermon at the First Methodist Episcopal church was Zech. 13:9.—"I will refine them as silver is refined and try them as gold is tried." The minister, Rev. I. L. Crabtree said in part: "For God's afflicted children there is a very deep consolation in those frequently repeated emblems of suffering which liken it, to a great refiner's fire, in which he purifies his gold. "I will refine them as silver is refined, and try them as gold is tried."

Forget Some Work.

This a a some-times forgotten part of God's redeeming and restoring work. We often thing of Him so exclusively as a Saviour of the lost, that we forget another equally divine and equally necessary part of His mission—to be a sanctifier of the saved. He wants to bring us a thorough-going redemption, not a mere surface-plaster for the soul's disease. Loving enough to go seeking the lost however far they stray, and to lift them however low they lie, He is yet so holy that He will tolerate no sin in His rescued ones. He will be a refiner as well as a redeemer, burning all sin out of them that they may be "pure as He Himself is pure."

Fire Reveals and Destroys.

There is far more earthly dross in the hearts of the best Christians than they know till the fire reveals it. What impatience did the fire reveal even in so patient a man as Job! And what secret antheism it revealed even in so good a man as Asaph! But it is good to remember that the heat that reveals the dross removes it too, and it may also comfort some who are in the furnace and are becoming alarmed at what the fire is revealing to them, to remember that they see their evil only because God is in the act of taking it away, in order that He may bring them forth as gold so purified that they can be fashioned into vessels of honor to His eternal praise.

"I Thank God for Pain."

It is indeed a mortifying proof of what rebellious children we are, that He needs to put us through so sore a discipline before He can use us in the accomplishment of His glorious purpose. Still, to be sanctioned in any way is blessing to us as well as glory to Him: and many heart has welcomed the suffering that lead to a purer and worthier life; instead of praying for a mitigation of the heat has prayed that at any cost, by any fire the dross of sin might thoroughly purged away; and has said, like Thomas Arnold in his last hours of agony, "I thank God for pain."

Thermometer Hits 53 Degree Mark

With clouds hanging low over the city all day Sunday and a cold wind blowing, there were some indications of disagreeable weather this week. In the late afternoon the sun struggled from under the heavy blanket of clouds that had covered it almost the entire day. The lowest temperature recorded was 38 degrees at 8 a. m. while the highest was 53 degrees at 3 p. m.

Because Women Paid Their Bills Too Slow, This Mother Lost Son

(By International News Service.)

KANSAS CITY, Feb. 11.—This afternoon a little white-haired mother follows to his last resting place the body of her eighteen year old boy—slain as a bandit by the police—in the strong conviction that her "baby's" dip into the realm of crime was induced by his love for her.

Its a simple story as she told it today in the little home where Ray Bishop, her idol son, lay lifeless, the stigma of crime upon his name. Today she told it.

Slow in Paying Bills.

"Some good women were slow in paying their dressmaker bill" she said between her tears. "Ray was a good boy. He had a sweetheart and a paralyzed father and he knew that I was largely supporting the family and keeping him in school by my dressmaking.

He didn't have enough money to buy street car tickets to school but he was ambitious and he didn't want to stop. So—because kindly women could charge their dressmaking bills when they couldn't charge theatre tickets, my boy is dead.

Worried Over Money.

"Ray worried for several days" she went on. "He watched me struggling to support his father and keep him in school and it worried him. He thought he ought to help but he did not want to stop his education.

"The night he was killed he sat down to his books right after supper but he was restless and couldn't study. 'What's worrying you, Ray?' I asked him. I knew it was money and I knew I couldn't give him any but I could have talked with him and helped him. He wouldn't talk and said he was restless and was going out to find some of the boys for a while. I knew my boy and knew he would work out his problems alone.

"The next I knew the police were saying Ray had been killed."

Bishop was shot and killed in a battle with police who were seeking him for alleged holding up and robbing of two gasoline filling stations. In the fight he shot and seriously wounded one of the officers. Police claim they found $22 in money, the alleged fruits of his roobery in his pockets.

Nicks Improves

The condition of J. W. Nicks, injured in an auto accident on the Electra road early Saturday night, was reported to be entirely satisfactory Sunday. Nicks received a broken arm and severe bruises in the crash which cost the life of Jimmy Wharton, Texas company foreman.

Two others were slightly hurt when two roadsters collided near Fowlkes station, four miles from Iowa Park.

Burkburnett Fire Endangers Lives Of Family Sunday

BURKBURNETT, Feb. 11.—Explosion of gas from a leaking stove caused a fire that destroyed the home of E. S. Rowden, 116 College street, in Burkburnett Sunday afternoon Mrs. Rowden, who discovered the room filled with gas, made an effort to cut off the gas from the outside, but the explosion came so quickly that she was barely able to get her several children out of the house before it became a mass of flames.

Only a sewing machine out of the household goods, valued at $500, was saved, and the four room house, owned by M. G. Parson and valued at $1,000, was a total loss.
