Treatment of juvenile offenders debated

■ Congressman calls prison "a graduate school of crime for children." Others claim it's unsafe.

By Corolyn Skorneck
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Rodney Hulin haltingly read the letter from his 17-year-old son, imprisoned as an adult for arson: "Dad, I'm really scared, scared that I will die in here."

After repeated beatings and sexual abuse by older inmates, Rodney Hulin Jr. hanged himself in his Texas cell. The teenager died after four months in a coma, his father told a Capitol news conference.

Even as the nation's crime rate subsides, the Clinton administration and Congress are preparing to confront juvenile "predators" with tougher sanctions.

Minors were responsible for 14 percent of the nation's violent crimes two years ago, up from 10 percent in 1980. That includes 9 percent of murders, 15 percent of forcible rapes, 13 percent of aggravated assaults and 20 percent of robberies. And the number of juveniles is growing.

Despite the congressional consensus to get tough with the violent youth, some lawmakers say treating young perpetrators as adults — and even housing them within earshot of adult criminals — should be avoided.

"It's dangerous and potentially life-threatening" to incarcerate juveniles in adult facilities, said Rep. William Delahunt, D-Mass. He called adult prisons "a graduate school of crime for children."

Proponents of adult treatment say the most violent of America's young forfeit their right to be treated as children by the heinousness of their crimes.

The Clinton administration opposes a Republican plan to overturn longstanding federal policy requiring states receiving certain federal funds to separate incarcerated juveniles from adults.

It's not a strict philosophical position. Juveniles tried by states as adults are treated as adults without federal interference. The administration itself wants to ease the transfer

Rain soaks West Texas

Kes Gilhome / Reporter-Telegram

Midland officers inspect an eight-foot-wide crater that caved in along Golf Course Road just west of the intersection of Midkiff Road during the heavy rains Sunday. The driver of the green pickup truck (right) suffered minor injuries when his vehicle struck the depression. Sunday's rains dumped almost two inches onto the Midland area.

Midland streets were flowing with water and strewn with stalled vehicles while emergency crews worked overtime in the aftermath of Sunday's downpours.

All counties in West Texas were listed as flood-watch areas during the storm and throughout the night, Sunday, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

More than an inch of rain fell over a few hours time in Midland, with rainfall totals at 1.75 inches by 7 p.m.

In perhaps the most obvious damage caused by the rains, torrents of water are believed to have undermined Golf Course Road just west of the intersection of Midkiff Road.

This resulted in an eight-foot crater that one unfortunate motorist was the first and only driver to find, according to local emergency crews.

A single occupant of an older-model pickup nosed into the void as the unsuspecting driver piloted the receding waters of Golf Course Road.

The impact left the driver with a lacerated right hand and a bloody nose from a blow to the face, but apparently without serious injury, according to emergency personnel at the scene.

A resident of the area said a similar (but less severe) collapse of the same section of roadway happened about two years earlier.

A storm drain runs beneath the area where the sinkhole-like crater appeared, according to police officers at the scene.

Other minor traffic accidents, believed to be weather related, were reported in various parts of the city.

Lightning struck a tank battery in nearby Martin County, with reports of flames sending Midland Fire Department vehicles to the scene before it was realized that the tank battery was not in Midland County. The calls began coming in at about 3:20 p.m., according to MFD officials.

MFD crews brought the blaze quickly under control and notified Martin County Sheriff's Deputies of their efforts.

Calls believed to have resulted from lightning striking an electrical transformer again brought firefighters out — this time to the area of County Road 144, but no fire was found.

The storm system was somewhat unusual in its mechanism, according to an NWS spokesman.

Stormy weather doesn't stop Sunday assembly

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

About 125 people braved gloomy skies for the annual "Preaching on the Porch Dinner on the Ground" Sunday affair to benefit the Brown-Dorsey Medallion Home — the first event in association with the Midland Ranch Rodeo and Western Heritage Week.

Main events of the Ranch Rodeo begin Friday at the Midland County Arena near the Midland County Exhibit Building.

The Sunday gathering will help pay for the ongoing maintenance of Midland's oldest house, explained Ranch Rodeo coordinator J.P. "Pat" McDaniel. "It's an old home and it requires constant maintenance," McDaniel said.

Not a lot of money is raised at this event, but exposure of the house as a symbol of Midland s history is a main focus, said Nancy McKinley, president of the Midland County Historical Society.

Several thousand dollars, each year, are needed to keep the home in good repair, including regular roofing and painting to protect the underlying structure, McDaniel explained.

This year, members of the Midland County Historical Society, which own the home, are trying to raise enough funds to construct an old-style picket fence for the old landmark, trying to recreate the original appearance of the dwelling, McDaniel said.

Minister Leonard Cotten and his Country Chapel Worship Team provided gospel singing for the event, and Cotten provided a brief sermon for the gathered crowd.

Following the service, fried chicken dinners were dished out. The home is located at 213 N. Weatherford St.

Rodeo events are scheduled throughout the week and will include wild-cow milking, steer doctoring, team sorting, calf-branding, and double mugging. Ranch teams that have signed up for the Ranch Rodeo include those from the Lone X Ranch, Reynolds Ranch, the NT Ranch, the Y Bar O Ranch, Hooper's

Fallout from separatist's standoff still evident in Fort Davis

By Eduardo Montes
Associated Press

FORT DAVIS — This isn't the life Joe and M.A. Rowe wanted when they chose the isolation of the Davis Mountains: Always keeping guns within reach, glancing warily over their shoulders and dreading the day some armed radical might come up their gravel driveway and open fire in the name of the Republic of Texas.

"I didn't come here to lock myself in," said Joe Rowe. "It's ridiculous to have to live like that because of some ragtag militia."

But peace of mind was the first casualty when Republic separatists stormed the Rowes' home in late April and took the couple hostage, touching off a weeklong standoff with hundreds of state troopers.

The siege that ended May 3 with the surrender of group leader Richard McLaren and three followers shattered the tranquility of the Davis Mountains Resort, a remote and rugged community 175 miles southeast of El Paso.

Residents are particularly concerned with keeping the Republic from trying to reestablish itself in the area and preventing similar groups from moving in.

The Rowes worry that someone seeking revenge on McLaren's behalf will try to hurt them. Rowe said that early this year, McLaren sent a message via the Internet and by fax identifying Rowe as a government informant and suggesting he be dealt with.

Also, one of the Rowes' accused abductors, Richard F. Keyes III, remains at large after escaping during the standoff. McLaren and four others are held in the Presidio County Jail in Marfa. Their cases were scheduled for presentation to a grand jury Monday.

Although most residents express relief that McLaren's group is gone, some lament that they now live with two new neighbors: suspicion and fear.

"When we first moved here, it was kind of the Old West mentality of live and let live," said Michele Behrent, a resident for five years. "You can't do that (anymore). You have to be aware when you see a strange face. You need to know who they are, why they are here and where are they going.

"That's really sad. I enjoyed the trust that we had for our fellow man and it's not there anymore."

Residents are particularly concerned with keeping the Republic from trying to reestablish itself in the area and preventing similar groups from moving in.

Unsafe streets, curfew block U.S. efforts to aid more Americans

BRAZZAVILLE, Republic of Congo (AP) — Dozens of Americans fled a night of fighting between government soldiers and militiamen Saturday, escaping Brazzaville aboard private planes to nearby Kinshasa.

Forty-four Americans, most of them missionaries, arrived in Kinshasa, capital of neighboring Congo, on Saturday evening and described a night of street clashes.

"When we took off there were shots being fired at the plane," said Kevin McCabe, director of the Pennsylvania-based Christian Missionary Alliance. He said U.S. officials had hoped to assist more people to leave Saturday but were blocked by unsafe streets and a dusk-to-dawn curfew.

Five of the American who fled were dependents of U.S. Embassy personnel in Brazzaville, State Department spokesman Christopher Bush said in Washington.

The French Defense Ministry said one French soldier was killed and five were wounded Saturday night in Brazzaville during a clash with "uncontrolled elements." One Congolese officer was also killed, according to a ministry statement.

French and Congolese forces were gathering up French nationals, some of whom were stranded in unsafe parts of the city. However, no evacuation was planned yet for the 2,500 French nationals, the French Foreign Ministry said.

Bush said U.S. officials helped Americans get to airports for the five-minute flight across the Congo River to Kinshasa, but that the assistance was not part of any formal evacuation.

Late Saturday, the State Department urged U.S. citizens to defer travel to Republic of Congo "due to the deteriorating security situation."

Violence erupted in the riverside capital when government troops, fearing attempts to disrupt next month's presidential elections, attempted to disarm members of a 5,000-strong militia loyal to former leader Gen. Denis Sassou-Nguesso.

The current president, Pascal Lissouba, ended Sassou-Nguesso's 13-year dictatorship in 1992.

McCabe said the situation had been relatively calm Friday but deteriorated overnight.

"There was no warning any of this would happen," he said. "Shops were closed, businesses were closed, everything is closed. There is no news given on the radio. Telephone lines have been cut."

Another missionary, Stan Hotalen, said heavy artillery and mortar fire could be heard during the night and that the houses of some foreigners were looted.

Attempts to contact U.S. officials in Brazzaville were unsuccessful.

U.S. Embassy officials in Kinshasa met the evacuees at the airport, where they arrived in private planes after the five-minute flight.

McCabe said he and the other evacuees were escorted to the airport in Brazzaville by Congolese soldiers after the U.S. Embassy contacted Americans in the afternoon.

As many as 150 U.S. citizens live in Brazzaville, which ironically, was the staging area for preparations in April and May to evacuate Americans and other foreigners from what was then Zaire — and is now Congo — had it become necessary.

Hundreds of American, French, Belgian, British and Portuguese soldiers were deployed in Brazzaville and were prepared to pluck foreign nationals from Kinshasha if fighting broke out.

But Laurent Kabila's rebel army took the city with relative ease May 17, driving out Mobutu Sese Seko's government. Foreign troops began leaving Brazzaville shortly afterward.

One million turn out to greet pope in his home town

KRAKOW, Poland (AP) — Finally home in "my beloved city," Pope John Paul II slept in his former house, stopped in at his university and rejoiced in the cheers of more than 1 million of his compatriots Sunday.

The crowd, the largest in his 11-day pilgrimage to Poland, began arriving shortly after dawn for Mass, nearly filling the vast 120-acre Blonia meadow in the heart of the city.

The pope proclaimed Poland's 14th-century Queen Hedwig a saint, holding up her generosity and defense of the common good as examples for today's political leaders. His message was part of his effort to keep Poles from losing their identity and values in the transition from a communist to a free-market economy.

While many Poles have expressed concern that this could be the last trip home for John Paul, now 77 and slowed by infirmity, church officials suggested he may return next year, possibly for the 1,000th anniversary of the city of Gdansk.

John Paul held up his staff to acknowledge the chants of "Long live the pope" that rolled across the meadow on the overcast morning. He walked slowly and his voice was weak, but papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said John Paul was "holding up terrifically."

Large crowds have poured out for the pope at all his stops since he arrived in Poland eight days ago, but the turnout in Krakow, where he spent most of his life as student, priest and archbishop before his election to the papacy in 1978, was by far the largest.

It was in line with the massive crowds that showed up for the pope's weeklong visit in 1983, when he kept the spirit of the Solidarity labor movement alive after it had been outlawed by the communist government.

Krakow is brimming with memories for the former Karol Wojtyla. He spent the night in the 17th-century archbishop's residence where he lived for 14 years. But to assure his sleep, he was given a room other than his former bedroom, which is directly above the street where crowds have been gathering to salute him.

In the afternoon, he visited Jagiellonian University, where he studied theology in secret after it was closed by Poland's Nazi occupiers during World War II. On Monday, he will pray at the tomb of his parents.

Navarro-Valls said John Paul, making his seventh trip home, wasn't surprised by the vast crowds. "I'm sure the pope knows Poland very well."

Asked if the itinerary wasn't too demanding, the papal spokesman said it was less tiring than "spending 16 hours a day cooped up" in Vatican offices.

During the Mass, John Paul paid tribute to Queen Hedwig, or Jadwiga in Polish, daughter of the King of Hungary. By marrying a Lithuanian prince in 1386, at age 10, she was credited with bringing Christianity to that country. She died at 25.

The queen was beatified in 1979, and the pope's blessing on Sunday completed her canonization.

Prime Minister Brunton concedes narrow defeat in Ireland election

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Prime Minister John Bruton, who led Ireland through a period of unprecedented economic prosperity, conceded narrow defeat Sunday in national elections.

The election is a bittersweet end for Prime Minister John Bruton, whose term coincided with the strongest economic growth in the 75-year history of independent Ireland.

His loss means that opposition leader Bertie Ahern, a 45-year-old populist Dubliner who has vowed to bring peace to Northern Ireland, will likely be tapped to head a new coalition government.

Though they have different styles, Bruton and Ahern concur on the big issues of the day — cutting crime, taxes and unemployment — and the country's overall course is not expected to change markedly under the new leadership.

With all but one seat decided from Friday's election, Ahern's Fianna Fail, traditionally the largest party, won at least 77 seats in the 166-seat Dail, the lawmaking chamber of parliament.

That gave him four seats more than Bruton's three-party coalition, which has governed since December 1994. The reversal fit a trend dating to 1969 in Ireland: No administration, regardless of record, has been re-elected.

Fianna Fail, however, will not on its own be able to reach the 84-seat plateau needed to govern. It will require support from its campaign partners, the small Progressive Democrats, who fared badly with just four seats, and a few loose-cannon independents with Fianna Fail sympathies.

Bruton's conservative Fine Gael party won more than 50 seats, but support for his principal ally, the Labor Party, collapsed. He wished Ahern "the best of luck."

"It looks as if the Fianna Fail-Progressive Democrat combination has a better chance of getting the majority when the Dail meets," Bruton said on national radio.

The election is a bittersweet end for Bruton, whose term coincided with the strongest economic growth in the 75-year history of independent Ireland. Ahern, minister of finance in previous Fianna Fail-led administrations, claimed credit for the boom.

Bruton, whose party did worse than expected in 1992 elections, was considered an improbable choice for prime minister. But in 1994 when a Fianna Fail-Labor coalition collapsed in acrimony, he found himself thrust into the job.

His administration wasn't around long enough to get any real credit for the booming economy, dubbed the "Celtic Tiger," which in the past year grew by 5.5 percent — tops in the European Union. Despite the progress, unemployment remains at 12 percent.

Ahern will spend the next two weeks building support behind the scenes to ensure that he wins the Dail's June 26 vote for "taoiseach" — the formal Gaelic title for prime minister, which translates as "chief."

He also plans to meet soon with Gerry Adams, leader of the IRA-allied Sinn Fein party, which won its first-ever seat in the Dail with 2.5 percent of the national vote.

While the plain-spoken Ahern will have to work to create the sort of solid coalition that Bruton boasted, some analysts say he may have more success than his predecessor in reviving Northern Ireland peace talks. Ahern is seen as more likely to be able to sway the outlawed IRA to agree to a new cease-fire. The IRA last year broke a truce that had been in place since 1994.

Sinn Fein has complained that Bruton was too sympathetic to Northern Ireland's pro-British Protestant majority, and it hopes Ahern will put more pressure on the British government in negotiations on the province's future, which resumed last week in Belfast. Nine Northern Ireland parties are taking part, but Sinn Fein is barred because of the IRA's resumed hostilities against British rule.

Ahern has been the only southern Irish party leader to maintain direct contact with Adams since June 1996, when the IRA killed an Irish detective during a bungled robbery.

Ahern said Sunday that Sinn Fein's recent electoral successes — it won two seats in British Parliament and took a record number of places on the Northern Ireland council — were "based on a peace strategy."

"I think now they have to prove that's what they were talking about, the peace strategy. We need the unequivocal restoration of a cease-fire — on a permanent basis," he said.

Russians raise roof over plans to raise rent

TVER, Russia (AP) — Nina Ladiyena doesn't complain about much. She doesn't mind sharing her two-room apartment with another family, and she's used to struggling up four flights of stairs with her lame left leg.

But a government plan that could triple her rent has the 73-year-old widow furious. "I'll refuse to pay," she says.

As it is, she gets by on a pension equivalent to $48 a month, content to make needlepoint pillows and visit the bathhouse once a week. But 110 miles away in Moscow, the Kremlin's liberal economic reformers are pushing a program that would force her — and nearly all Russians — to pay more rent.

On average, Russians pay only a third of what it really costs to maintain, heat and light their homes. In Tver, an industrial city on the banks of the Volga River northwest of Moscow, families spend less than 6 percent of their income on housing and utilities.

The policy is a legacy of the social guarantees of the Soviet system, in which free housing was seen as a right the state had to provide.

After the collapse of the Soviet Union, the Russian government left housing costs more or less alone, using low rents as a shock absorber for soaring inflation and other economic blows.

"It gave some stability to families. Whatever else happened, at least they were secure in their homes," said Raymond Struyk, director of the Moscow branch of the Urban Institute, a U.S.-based housing think tank.

In fact, Russians now pay less for housing as a proportion of income than they did under the communists.

What residents pay in Russia is not "rent" in the Western sense. It's a fee that goes for upkeep and repairs, paid to a local maintenance organization. Everyone pays the fees, whether they are tenants of the state or became homeowners under the government's privatization program.

The government has been raising the fees slowly since 1994. But increases have been outpaced by inflation, and the government eased up last year before the presidential election, in which Boris Yeltsin faced a stiff challenge from communists promising a return to the Soviet safety net.

Now safely back in office for a five-year term, Yeltsin has restarted his program to create a market economy. In late April, he signed a decree ordering an end to government subsidies for housing and utilities by 2003.

Russia's economy has declined for six years, and housing is perhaps the biggest drain on state coffers, taking 30 percent to 40 percent of local budgets.

Yeltsin's plan calls for Russians eventually to pay 100 percent of their housing costs — and since they now pay less than one-third, most can expect rents to triple.

Government officials don't talk about raising rents; they talk about improving efficiency. For years, economic studies have cited housing as the least efficient sector of the Russian economy.

And everyone agrees most of that money is wasted: Garbage goes uncollected; heat seeps out of underground pipes. In Ladiyena's building, the hot water is off half the time, and residents have to clean the hallways themselves.

The housing maintenance organizations — known as "zheks" — work largely outside the market economy, getting most of their revenue from the state. Since they have little incentive to take care of buildings, most are dirty and in disrepair.

What the government wants to do is take the zheks off the government payroll and make them respond to market forces. Residents will pay them directly and hold them responsible for providing the services.

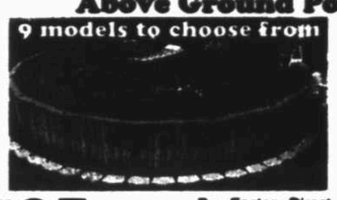

Many residents doubt the zheks can change.

"I know what will happen," said a pensioner who gave her name as Lida. "They will raise the prices and not make any repairs."

Tver's deputy housing director, Igor Smirnov, says raising rents is absolutely necessary — and absolutely impossible when most residents can't afford the basics.

Tver wants to develop a real housing market, where people get what they pay for, he said, but that means changing attitudes.

"We have a Soviet mentality and a market economy," Smirnov said. "We need reform, but our old sins stop us from going forward."

FLOOD: Year's total rainfall rises to 6.71 inches

(From 1A)

Mexico has been building atmospheric moisture in the West Texas and surrounding area for the past five to seven days, the spokesman said.

"We've had high dew points for at least that long," he said.

This provided the moisture necessary for the widespread storms of Sunday.

"We were kind of a loaded gun, just waiting for some upper level disturbance," the forecaster said.

The upper level disturbance, however, was actually located over northwestern New Mexico and southwestern Colorado, but circulating upper-level air currents from these intense disturbances flowed into the area, he explained.

These currents moving through the area forked over West Texas, which creates a condition referred to as a "divergent wind pattern," he said.

When the upper-level currents fork like this, it tends to cause low-level air to be drawn upward to replace the divergent air — and in this case, the lower-level air was loaded with moisture.

Storms associated with this pattern dumped moisture across West Texas, even leading to the blockade of Texas Highway 350 and other roads in Scurry County.

These roads remained closed throughout the evening, Sunday.

Storm cells resulting from the widespread upper level disturbances reached from Colorado to East Texas and down to Del Rio on the southern border, he said.

Triple Seven (777) Ranch, the Scharbauer Ranches, Cedar Mountain Ranch, the Munsell Ranch, and the Dean Ranch.

Events on the June 14 Ranch Rodeo day will include cooking at the chuck wagon, singing of cowboy songs, telling of tales, and the showing of cowboy equipment and wear in the Bit, Spur, & Collectibles Show.

A dramatization of the 1907 "Wedding of Sarah Brown" will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at the Brown-Dorsey Medallion Home.

On Friday, ranchers and their hands will be moving in their chuck wagons to the Ranch Rodeo grounds, and horse-traders and other dealers will be setting up the Bit, Spur, & Collectibles Show.

There will be singing of cowboy Western songs around the campfire at 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday, by Trudy Fair of Weatherford, R.W. Hampton of Stead, N.M., and Jeff Gore of Austin.

A team of Percheron draft horses will be carrying spectators to the Ranch Rodeo grounds.

Times for Ranch Rodeo events include:

■ Friday: 9 p.m. Cowboy Singing at the campfire.

■ Saturday: 9 a.m., opening of the Bit & Spur Show; noon to 2 p.m., Chuckwagon Feed; 3 p.m., Ugly Truck Contest; 6 p.m., Ranch Rodeo events; 6:15 p.m., presentation of chuck wagon awards; 7 p.m., Cowboy Singing at the campfires, and 9 p.m., Ranch Rodeo Dance featuring Craig Carter & Spur of the Moment Band.

■ Sunday: 9 a.m., Bit & Spur Show; 9-10:15 a.m., 4-H Club Omelette Breakfast; 10:30 a.m., Cowboy Church Service, and 11:30 a.m., Youth Playday.

FALLOUT: Residents fear group's retribution

(From 1A)

Some locals are floating the idea of creating an urban-style neighborhood watch or sealing off the resort entrance with an electronic security gate.

"I don't think the majority of us have unloaded the guns yet," said Ms. Behrent.

All this in a community where folks once felt secure leaving their doors and cars unlocked.

"I think we're extremely defensive right now," said Sandra Holzheuser, another resident. "We're not happy campers yet and I don't know how long it will take to get over that. The atmosphere is not the same at all."

Complaints range from the more obvious fears to irritation over the Postal Service's decision not to resume mail delivery inside the resort. The service was discontinued in December because of the Republic's activities. Now residents have to drive four miles or more to reach mailboxes outside the community entrance.

The Rowes' situation may best illustrates the emotional and physical consequences of the Republic siege.

Rowe, a vocal critic of McLaren's activities, and his wife were held hostage for 12 hours by three McLaren followers after the local sheriff had arrested another faction member on a weapons charge.

Rowe was also injured by flying debris when one Republic member fired three rounds from a semiautomatic rifle through the back storm door.

Rowe's wounds have healed and he is waiting for a glass panel to repair the door. Another round pierced the metal door frame and tore a ragged hole in an interior wall.

The couple has yet to find a remedy for the mental wounds.

Mrs. Rowe remains uneasy and said she doesn't know whether she wants to stay in her home, a soaring adobe house designed by the Rowes with a panoramic view of the forested slopes rising around it.

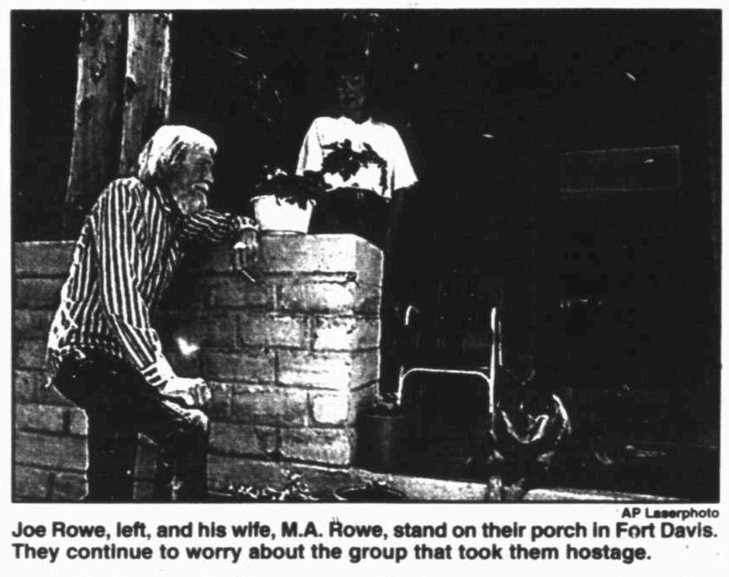

"I want to get everything back to normal," she said, pausing pensively, "and see how I feel about it over a period of time."

Joe Rowe said he carries a gun even when he goes to the garage.

Mrs. Rowe said she is concerned about Keyes because he seemed determined to kill her while she was a Republic captive. "I don't have a clue why," she said.

Like most people here, though, the Rowes seem more inclined to stick it out.

"If M.A. can stay here, there isn't any way I'm leaving," said Rowe. "I'm not going to run away and I'm not going to crawl, not because of Rick McLaren."

YOUTH: Adult prisons too dangerous, some say

of violent youths to adult federal courts.

But the question of housing less-dangerous youth in closer proximity to adult criminals is one of the issues separating the administration and the GOP-led Congress on pending juvenile crime legislation.

Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala., a sponsor of the evolving Senate bill, said he objects to juveniles sharing cells with adults. But he wants federal requirements eased to prevent release of young offenders when juvenile cells are not available.

"It creates the impression in a young mind that you can commit a crime, and there won't be a price to be paid for it," Sessions said.

Kent Markus, a top aide to Attorney General Janet Reno, said rule changes last December alleviated many of the problems rural jurisdictions had finding space for young offenders.

A House-passed bill would automatically transfer most youths 14 and older to adult court for federal violent crimes and serious drug offenses. The administration wants greater flexibility for federal prosecutors.

To persuade states to try more juveniles 15 and older as adults, the bill offers $1.5 billion in incentive grants over three years. To get the money, states would have to increase penalties gradually on young repeat offenders and keep juvenile records, potentially making them public and ending the practice of expunging juvenile records on adulthood.

High among administration demands are provisions requiring that safety locks be sold with every firearm — opposed by the National Rifle Association — and barring people with juvenile felony convictions from buying or possessing guns.

The administration also wants some of the $1.5 billion in new money earmarked for courts, prosecutors and crime prevention.

Sessions said the Senate bill will include prevention funding and some administration-sought gun provisions but not safety locks.

Delahunt, campaigning to keep incarcerated juveniles and adults apart, said youths in adult facilities are "five times more likely to be sexually assaulted, two times more likely to be beaten by staff, 50 percent more likely to be attacked with a weapon and eight times more likely to have attempted suicide" than those in juvenile housing.

Sessions said suicides cannot be blamed on incarceration.

"You arrest 10,000 young people, many of them are troubled, they are emotionally distraught, some of them have suffered from depression," he said.

Youngsters in juvenile-only facilities also succumb.

Twelve-year-old Mariel Cheatham hanged herself last month in a Milwaukee juvenile detention center cell. At least six others had attempted suicide in the center since it opened in April 1996.

Animal-to-human transplants raise questions

By Malcolm Ritter
Associated Press

In 1993, an official with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention called a few employees into her office. Then she asked a question at least one of those employees viewed as silly:

What was the CDC doing about the risk that animal-to-people transplants would introduce new germs into the human population, infecting first the transplant recipient and then spreading to other people?

"My first reaction was — nothing," recalled Louisa Chapman, an expert on animal viruses that infect humans. "Why should we waste taxpayer time and money on that?"

Transplants from animals were so rare and recipients lived so briefly that it didn't seem a threat to public health, Chapman thought.

But as she looked into the situation, she changed her mind: Interest in such "xenotransplants" was heating up. Animals could not only ease the shortage of kidneys, hearts and livers for transplantation, but also supply brain tissue for treating diseases like Parkinson's and pancreatic tissue to treat diabetes.

These days, Chapman spends most of her time on xenotransplantation issues.

She's not alone. Drug and biotech companies have poured more than $100 million into xenotransplant research. Scientists report progress in overcoming rejection of animal organs, and industry analysts expect a new round of organ experiments in people within three to five years.

The heavy betting nowadays is on organs and tissue from pigs, rather than chimps and baboons as in the past.

But the concern Chapman heard in that 1993 meeting has not gone away: Would xenotransplants be a form of Trojan horse, giving new germs a sneaky entree into the human population?

In March, scientists at the Institute of Cancer Research in London reported that a virus — one that might be found even in healthy pigs - sprang out of pig tissue and infected human cells in a lab experiment. Then it re-emerged from human cells in a form that apparently would slip by the body's defenses.

That shows the idea of such infection in a pig-to-human transplant "is more plausible than a fanciful scare story," the researchers said.

Two months earlier, the British government had slapped a moratorium on xenotransplants, chiefly because too little is known about the risk of infection.

And federal regulators in the United States now are refining draft guidelines to minimize the risk to public health. The guidelines discuss such things as keeping specialized colonies or herds of animals and screening them for germs.

People who get animal organs, cells or tissue should be followed for life for any sign of animal germs, and they should tell their "close contacts" about the possibility such germs could be passed on, the guidelines say.

Close contacts could include sexual partners, health care workers and breast-fed children, Chapman said. "We're not talking about people who sit on the school bus with you or work in your office," she said.

At this point, the concern over public peril is theoretical — a pile of what-ifs, a mound of maybes. It reminds Chapman of how NASA quarantined the astronauts from the first three moon-landing missions in case they brought back weird germs.

"What we are saying is there's some level of risk," she said. The task now, she said, is to figure out how big it is and what to do about it.

Here's why Chapman and others say there's reason to worry:

—Animals do have germs that can infect people and then spread person-to-person. The AIDS virus apparently came from monkeys long ago, for example, and the flu virus that killed more than 20 million people worldwide in 1918-19 emerged from pigs.

Negotiators face hard sell with coming tobacco agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's make-or-break time for a tobacco settlement, and it comes with a note of desperation.

The lead peacemakers are telling Congress to expect a deal with tobacco companies this week. But they're admitting they will have to get their own side to compromise and offer cigarette makers controversial last-minute protections against legal liability.

And Mississippi Attorney General Michael Moore, leading the anti-tobacco side, is pushing ahead without the crucial support of the public health establishment. The states suing tobacco companies are so fractured that Moore postponed plans to show them a final deal on Tuesday.

"Much more work to do and unforeseen circumstances cause this postponement," Moore said late Friday, after tobacco companies rejected his latest offer.

Colorado became last week the 34th state to sue the tobacco industry to recover billions of Medicaid dollars spent treating sick smokers. Moore is trying to settle the lawsuits by crafting a megadeal that, if accepted by Congress, would set national tobacco policy.

Tobacco firms would pay $10 billion up front, then pay yearly fees escalating gradually from $6 billion-$8 billion to as high as $15 billion — not just for 25 years, as originally planned, but in perpetuity.

The money would not merely reimburse the states but would fund smoking education and cessation plus health care for uninsured children. Firms also would submit to numerous advertising and youth smoking curbs.

In return, they gave Moore a demand Friday of no more class-action lawsuits and no punitive damages paid to any smoker who happens to win an individual lawsuit.

They also balked at paying beyond 25 years, a source told The Associated Press.

Moore already accepted the class-action demand, although he has yet to sell it to all 34 states, and told Congress the final compromise may be a cap on punitive damages of $1 million a person.

He may pitch that compromise in phone calls to the 34 states early this week, although there is no guarantee the tobacco camp would accept it.

Tobacco firms would finance the settlement by charging between 60 and 80 cents more for every pack of cigarettes.

While Moore says the expense alone could cut smoking 14 percent, tobacco analysts predict a settlement will ultimately be hugely profitable. Tobacco stocks have risen some 19 percent since the negotiations began.

But Moore doesn't yet have backing from the White House or Congress, and time is short. Top Republicans warned last week they may be too busy to consider tobacco, and Moore needs time to prepare his opening arguments for his lawsuit beginning July 7.

"There's a threshold below which they can't dip in terms of support," a congressional source said, on condition of anonymity, after meeting with Moore last week. "They admit they're not there yet."

Skeptical public health groups won a pledge that they will have a vote before any deal is final.

The negotiators are lobbying the American Cancer Society and American Heart Association to break ranks and support the deal now, however, because of warnings that the Clinton administration won't fight public health opposition. And if President Clinton isn't on board, some Republicans quietly say they won't stick out their necks.

Even hard-line attorneys general are acknowledging the benefits of a deal may ultimately supersede liability concerns.

"We have taken a very firm position against compromising basic individual rights, and we are adhering to that position," said Connecticut Attorney General Richard Blumenthal. Still, "we also have to recognize the need to assess the package as a whole."

Nominee for top military position returns to U.S. amid fading hopes of promotion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gen. Joseph Ralston cut short a trip to Asia and returned to Washington to meet Pentagon officials as his chances of becoming the nation's top military officer faded further because of past sexual infidelity.

Many Pentagon officials say they expect the Air Force general to withdraw his name as early as Monday as a possible candidate to succeed Gen. John Shalikashvili as the next chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Ralston reports to Defense Secretary William Cohen to discuss the matter Monday.

"I think he is going to voluntarily withdraw his name for the good of the country," Rep. Jane Harman, D-Calif., a member of the House National Security Committee, said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon indicated it is Cohen's intention to discuss the matter directly with Ralston before making any decisions. "We don't have any statement or action planned as of this time," he said.

A senior Pentagon official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that to the best of his knowledge Ralston had not communicated any decision as to his candidacy for the chairmanship. "My sense is he wants to get back and find out what's happening," the senior official said.

Sen. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, which must approve whomever is nominated to head the Joint Chiefs, said Ralston would "face a rocky road" if nominated.

The question, she said on ABC's "This Week," is "whether or not we are creating a double standard, and that ultimately can erode morale in the military and the public's confidence in the military."

Cohen originally defended Ralston and said his adulterous affair in the 1980s should not disqualify him as a leading candidate for the job.

Women's groups and some members of Congress quickly tore into that view. They charged that, coming right after the case of Lt. Kelly Flinn, an unmarried officer discharged from the Air Force as a consequence of an affair with a married man, there was the appearance of a double standard.

In an essay written for the Newsweek magazine on newsstands Monday, Flinn agreed that a double standard was at play. Ralston "got plenty of support and guidance," not least from the secretary of defense. "No one in my chain of command took the time to pull me aside and find out what was going on."

The Air Force said Flinn's seemingly harsher treatment was more because of lying and disobeying an order than about her sexual liaisons.

"There has been such a cloud created in this climate as we are looking into the issues of sexual misconduct that it would be very difficult for him to be confirmed before the United States Senate," said Rep. Stephen Buyer, R-Ind., a member of the House Veterans Committee.

Others said Ralston's old affair with a civilian should not disqualify him from consideration. They said the Flinn case was different, because she lied about her affair and directly disobeyed an order to stop it.

"We employ these people to fight and win wars for us. We don't employ them to lead celibate lives," Caspar Weinberger, former President Reagan's defense secretary, said on ABC.

Cohen announced plans Saturday to establish an independent commission on how military law applies to consensual sexual relations.

Survey: Web users unprotected from privacy invasions

NEW YORK (AP) — A survey released on the eve of important government hearings on Web privacy suggests computer users are extremely vulnerable to cyberspace spying and other personal intrusions by Internet businesses.

The results could help frame one of the most fundamental debates in the evolution of the Internet as a commercial marketplace: whether the industry can police itself or the government must step in to protect millions of personal-computer users.

Starting Tuesday, the Federal Trade Commission will hold unusually broad hearings in response to complaints by privacy advocates that personal information is gathered and used by online operators without user consent or knowledge.

The Electronic Privacy Information Center, a nonprofit consumer group participating in the talks, released its survey in a preemptive volley ahead of the Washington hearings. The group provided the results to The Associated Press Sunday in advance of a planned release Monday.

The survey found that of the Internet's 100 most popular Web sites, about half collect personal information from users who click on their sites or through mailing lists and other means.

Only 17 sites even mention the privacy issue, and most of those fell far short of what the group considered adequate disclosure — explaining why information is collected, how it will be used, and what steps will be taken to limit improper use.

"The industry is urging self-policing, but there is no indication that Web sites today are doing anything toward that," said David Sobel, the center's legal counsel.

Some of the surveyed sites explain privacy policies in ambiguous language. For example, Amazon.com, a major online seller of books, tells users it does not rent or sell its mailing list.

Of the 100 sites, only eight gave users some control over whether the Web site could share the personal information with others.

On the positive side, the surveyors noted that some sites, such as CNN's online service, don't collect any information about Web users. This type of anonymity was touted by the group as a main way for the Internet to retain the privacy of surfers.

At Last! How to buy a new Central Air System for less than $18/week with lower electric bills ... and best of all, you choose no payment, no interest for one full year or 9.9% interest or $500 rebate.
But you must act now while the special circumstances that created this unique offer are still available.

CLAIRE'S
Air Conditioning, Refrigeration & Plumbing
7900 WEST HIGHWAY 80 • MIDLAND, TEXAS 79706-2825 • (915) 561-9440

Dear Friend,
Right now I have created a new program that will allow homeowners to buy a new central air system with no money down and less than $18 per week. Actually with this program, homeowners will probably be able to buy a new system without taking any money out of their pocket. I'll explain later. You may be thinking ...

"Why Would He Make This Incredible Offer?"
The answer is simple. Summer is almost here. At this time of year, my calls start to slow down because it is so early in the season. Most people, whether they are having problems with their air conditioner, or it's just an old inefficient unit, are not thinking of replacement. They would be miserable now and wait until next year to change out their system. And right now, it is still too cool out for them to think about replacement of their system. This creates a problem for me and ...

My Problem Is Your Opportunity
Every year I have to guess how many air conditioners and furnaces to buy to meet the "Emergency Demand." Of course I'm never exactly right. These systems are brand new 1997 models. They are NOT seconds, or "blems" or standard "builder" models. They are factory fresh Amana air conditioners and furnaces and have a full factory warranty.

Here's How You Benefit From My Problem
In order to create a demand for these systems, I negotiated a plan to give me a financial program with a low interest rate and low monthly payments that would be irresistible to those who would normally wait until next year to install a new system. Right now, you can buy a new central air conditioner and furnace with NO money down and less that $18 a week.
No other company in the Permian Basin is willing to give you such an incredible offer and ...

There Is Another Remarkable Advantage.
If your central system is over 10 years old, the money you save on utility costs could be enough to offset the monthly payment on your new system. Image that ... buy a new central heating and cooling system without taking any money out of your pocket! It's like having the electric company buy you a new air conditioner and furnace. Here's the best part ...

Ironclad Guarantee
I'm so confident that you will save at least 25% off your utility bills (I'm projecting more like 40% to 50%) that I will pay you Double the Difference if you don't the first year. There is no way you can lose. If these Amana systems were not among the best on the market, I couldn't afford to make such a promise ...

Here's How
Just call Carol at 561-9440 anytime and she will set up an appointment for your FREE survey. A design consultant will come and measure your home (and determine the availability of the proper size) and explain this new, fantastic financing plan that I have created. Don't forget, I only have match systems. When they are gone this remarkable offer ends.

No obligation
Even after we come out and explain the installation and the finance plan, there is no obligation. If you decide you don't want to take advantage of the spectacular offer - that's okay. I will give you a surprise gift worth $50 because you are kind enough to read this letter and give me a chance to solve my problem. I want you to think good of Claire's Services even if you don't buy.
Please call us now at 561-9440. Thank you for reading this rather long letter. I hope you will profit greatly because of it.

For Greater Comfort,
Tim Claire, President

PS. Six months from now, this will probably be the most appreciated opportunity ever extended to homeowners in the Permian Basin. Every one of the proud owners will have an unfair advantage over the utility company.

PPS. Don't forget ... if your air conditioner and furnace is over 10 years old, a rewarding $50 surprise gift awaits you. And there is no obligation.

Bullock departure is Texans' loss

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock's announcement that he will retire from state government next year and will not seek another office did not come as a surprise. It was a sad day, however, because Bullock has served this state and its citizenry well for four decades.

As a state representative, an assistant attorney general, aide to Gov. Preston Smith, state comptroller and, eventually, as lieutenant governor, Bullock served the people of Texas admirably.

He possesses the rare quality — for a politician — to not tell voters or the news media what they necessarily want to hear but rather what he really is thinking about the most important issues facing the state.

In meetings with editorial boards around the state, Bullock cut through the government gobbledygook to tell those listening what the situation really was concerning a wide range of issues — whether it was the state's financial condition or the economic outlook or whether horseracing or the lottery would be good for Texas and Texans.

Bob Bullock laid it on the line, regardless of the political fallout, and that is rare in state or national politics.

We supported Bullock for re-election numerous times in editorial endorsements and were proud to see him re-elected many times. The political plum he sought — the governorship of Texas — was not to be his. His health failed and he eased himself out of the limelight even while serving as what most all Texans recognized is the most powerful politician in the state of Texas — lieutenant governor.

After George W. Bush was elected governor, Bullock worked with Bush to make a better Texas for the people of the state — and together they have accomplished that feat in a spirit of bipartisanship although coming from different political parties.

Bob Bullock has always expressed the best in the interest of Texas and Texans, and we — like all of the state's residents — will miss his candor, statesmanship and integrity.

McVeigh case upheld our bedrock values

Timothy McVeigh stands convicted of detonating the bomb that killed 168 persons, injured hundreds more, and brought agony to a nation that never suffered such wanton terrorist destruction. McVeigh, 29, was convicted last Monday of 11 counts of murder and conspiracy.

Of course, McVeigh's conviction will not bring one victim back to life. But it will start the process of relinquishing this tragedy to history, to allowing the grief to recede. ...

As the awful reality of the massive explosion reverberated across the country, Americans came together in a unity of angry reaction and resolve to apprehend and punish those responsible. If McVeigh really intended to spark a new American revolution with his murderous act, he instead showed Americans how much we still think alike on the bedrock values of respect for innocent life and reliance on our system of government as the proper instrument for change.

Officials prepare for worst: nuclear terror attack

If recently convicted mass murderer Timothy McVeigh had had access to nuclear material instead of fertilizer, the world would be a different place. And that's the overwhelming concern of FBI, CIA and nuclear experts at both the Los Alamos and Lawrence Livermore nuclear laboratories.

Anderson

They've already determined that it is inevitable that domestic or foreign terrorists with the know-how to make a crude nuclear bomb will eventually obtain the material to do so. So they're preparing for the worst.

The brightest hope, according to top experts who have spoken with our associate Dale Van Atta, is that there will be some warning or claim by the individual or group setting off a nuclear device in some American city.

"If it is an 'unattributed' nuclear explosion," one top CIA official told us, "it will be the worst nightmare we can imagine in America. Martial law would be declared, civil rights would probably be trampled on. We would be suspicious of neighbors and rousting everyone for fear of a second nuclear device."

What makes a nuclear terror attack in the United States more likely today than in years past is the potential leak of ill-guarded nuclear material in the former Soviet Union — combined with the will of madmen. It doesn't matter whether it's domestic madmen who hate the federal government or international lunatics who see the United States as a corrupted font of evil — the result will be the same.

America remains the top terrorist target in the world, according to the State Department's recent annual terrorism report. There were more incidents aimed at American interests than any other country in 1996. The most lethal event was the June 1996 truck bombing at an American military base near Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, which killed 19 Americans.

Iran is a suspect in that attack and remains the chief sponsor of international terrorism. "Since 1990, we estimate — and indeed, we have solid information — that Iran was responsible for over 50 murders of political dissidents and others overseas," reported Phillip C. Wilcox Jr., the State Department's coordinator for counter-terrorism, in a recent briefing.

He added that "the decision-making process in Iran is a collective one in which the most senior members of the government participate. These acts of Iranian-supported terrorism abroad are not the result of rogue elements within the Iranian bureaucracy; they are sanctioned at the very highest levels."

Iran's penchant for exporting terrorism makes that nation's covert nuclear weapons development program more alarming. Among Iranian government officials, the project for domestic nuclear bomb production is labeled "the great secret plan." Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani has been speeding this Teheran-style Manhattan Project along.

We have reported earlier on a highly classified CIA report delivered to President Clinton which adds that there is a high probability that Iran has already acquired two nuclear warheads from a former Central Asian republic of the Soviet Union.

The report noted, however, that it was unclear whether Iran yet had a "delivery system" capable of carrying these warheads to a target. Each of these bombs has a destructive capacity several times greater than the bomb dropped on Hiroshima in World War II.

In addition, we have learned that Iran has already paid for four other warheads from the former Soviet republic of Kazakhstan. The deal began with an April 1992 visit to Teheran by Kazakhstan's minister of transportation. The following August, senior Iranian officials met with top Kazakh officials and consummated the plan.

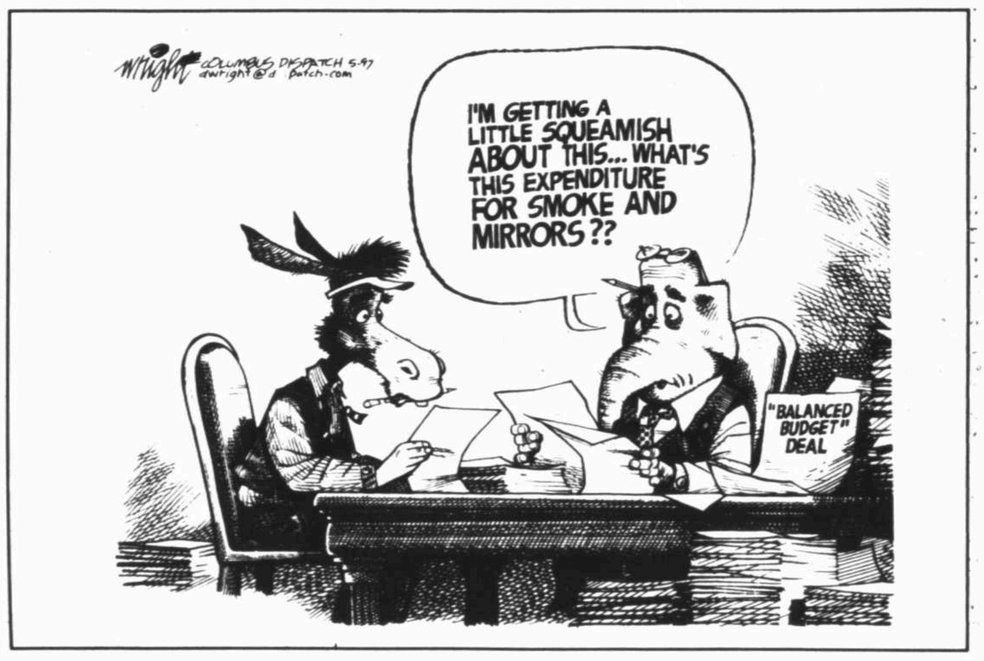

The CIA has been unable to determine whether Kazakh officials delivered the warheads or not — but they believe there is a possibility they reneged on the deal and instead sold the nuclear material to the United States, which paid a better price than the Iranians.

Rafsanjani's plan for developing nuclear bombs involves setting up competing centers for nuclear weapons production among different government agencies. One of those agencies is the Revolutionary Guards, the military outfit that is more fanatical and political than the regular Iranian military.

The Iranian government has already spent more than $1 billion on the nuclear program, and has tapped the expertise of at least 54 nuclear experts from abroad — though none from the United States. Dozens of Chinese and Russian experts have traveled to Iran, where they have engaged in nuclear research, trained nuclear specialists, and supervised the construction of facilities, including nuclear reactors.

Rafsanjani's personal instructions regarding the whole effort are detailed in a confidential memorandum we obtained that was written following a high-level meeting in early 1990. It was essential, Rafsanjani decreed, that security for the great plan be maintained by sponsoring "several parallel but independent and self-sufficient systems, including the necessary laboratories, workshops and factories, to be built in different parts of Iran."

Sex tales pack punch of budget-deficit stories

Reading the news these days is a lot like hearing the gossip back in high school. Today's headlines are all about the girls who will, the girls who won't and the boys who ask.

Johnson

At Robert E. Lee High we stood in a restroom's fog of smoke and hair spray, making the most of the few minutes between classes to swap juicy tidbits. At least they were juicy by '60s standards.

We knew which cheerleaders were pregnant. (A pregnancy's hard to hide while turning cartwheels.) And by whom.

Now all we have to do to hear such titillating news is to turn on "Dateline," or even public radio.

Just when most of us are sick to death of the Lt. Kelly Flinn case, Paula Jones' mug and her motel story are back on Page One. Commentary will follow, raising such searing questions as: Do women with Big Hair rate feminist support?

(Paula says she deserves $700,000 for fending off an unwanted advance, something we did for free in high school. But then we're not here to argue the merits of her case. I'm dead certain that will be covered elsewhere.)

I just wish all sex tales would stay between the bedsheets. They have become so routine they pack all the punch of budget-deficit stories.

Silly scandals dominate the news, tabloid and broadsheet. Right now I know more about Marla Maples Trump's pre-nup agreement — not to mention her former publicist's shoe fetish — than I do about the state of that other union, America.

Most sex stories have brief shelf lives, thank goodness. We have the short attention spans of sophomoric gossip mongers.

You don't hear anything anymore about those molestation accusations against Michael Jackson, for instance. Not so long ago that story dominated TV news.

These days Michael's a Proud Papa. Tomorrow, who knows? If you miss a week of news, you're bound to miss a subplot or two.

But I fear this is only the beginning of both Flinn's and Jones' public sagas. Why? Because both women seem amazingly willing to talk.

And both women — the one who did wrong, the one who says she was wronged — will end up making megabucks off of miniseries, tell-all autobiographies and possibly photo spreads in Playboy. There's also the lucrative lecture circuit and those ads for hussy-hipped blue-jeans.

To say our culture makes too much of sex is to state the obvious. We should have learned from the American Indians, some of whom considered sex another commodity, like food and water. Squaws offered sex to explorers Lewis and Clark all along their journey. (The Air Force would have had a hissy.)

Maybe that's taking it too far — sex as a provision — especially considering our Puritan stock. A little repression can be a good thing.

But at least the lives of most Indians didn't revolve around the sexual peccadilloes of total strangers. They weren't obsessed and ruled by sex and its rituals.

Today's culture, on the other hand, will stop the presses for the promise of a description of the president's privates — or those of some clod mechanic named Joey.

If these are matters of world import, I'm Liza Minnelli.

The British have long been absorbed with toe-sucking tales and the like, and the British press has encouraged and catered to prurience. I always figured that was because Great Britain was no longer so great.

Now I know for sure my theory was right.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, June 9, the 160th day of 1997. There are 205 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 9, 1954, Army counsel Joseph N. Welch confronted Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy during the Senate-Army Hearings over McCarthy's attack on a member of Welch's law firm, Frederick G. Fisher. Said Welch: "Have you no sense of decency, sir? At long last, have you left no sense of decency?"

On this date:

In A.D. 68, the Roman Emperor Nero committed suicide.

In 1870, author Charles Dickens died in Godshill, England.

In 1940, Norway surrendered to the Nazis during World War II.

In 1953, about 100 people died when a tornado struck Worcester, Mass.

In 1969, the U.S. Senate confirmed Warren Burger to be the new chief justice of the United States, succeeding Earl Warren.

In 1973, Secretariat became horse racing's first Triple Crown winner in 25 years by winning the Belmont Stakes.

In 1978, leaders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints struck down a 148-year-old policy of excluding black men from the Mormon priesthood.

In 1980, comedian Richard Pryor suffered almost fatal burns at his San Fernando Valley, Calif., home when a mixture of "free-base" cocaine exploded.

In 1985, American educator Thomas Sutherland was kidnapped in Lebanon — he was released in November 1991 along with fellow hostage Terry Waite.

Ten years ago: In a second day of testimony before the Iran-Contra congressional committees, secretary Fawn Hall said she had spirited secret documents from the White House because she feared they would fall into the wrong hands. Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware announced his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Five years ago: Secretary of State James A. Baker III concluded two days of arms talks with Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev without an agreement on deep cuts in long-range missiles.

One year ago: White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta, appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," said it was wrong for an investigator to have obtained secret FBI files n 341 people, including prominent Republicans, and President Clinton agreed with Panetta that an apology was called for.

WILLIAM MURCHISION

Congress is more loyal to Israel than U.S. armed forces

To know what is right and not do it is the worst cowardice, according to Confucius. That says it all about the Congress and the USS Liberty, the intelligence ship attacked by Israeli jets and torpedo boats while in international waters in 1967. Thirty-four Americans were killed, 171 wounded and the ship so badly damaged it had to be sold for scrap.

Reese

This month the survivors gathered in Washington for the 30th anniversary reunion.

For 30 years, they have asked the government they served for only one simple thing: the truth. Hold a congressional hearing. Take testimony. Declassify all the records. Nothing more.

For 30 years, the Congress, which is Zionist-occupied territory, has refused to do for the men of the USS Liberty what Congress has always done throughout American history whenever an American ship was attacked or suffered an accident while at sea: conduct a congressional inquiry.

Why this cruel betrayal of American sailors? The answer is simple. Your congressmen and your senators are more loyal to the Israeli lobby than they are to your sons and daughters serving in the armed forces of the United States. You should never forget or forgive that.

It is nothing short of treason of the heart.

Israel has claimed the attack was a mistake, though it took place in bright sunlight after hours of reconnaissance. The ship was flying a large American flag. It bore no resemblance to an Egyptian rust bucket that Israel, in one of its several versions of what happened, claimed it thought it was.

The U.S. government, by the way, rushed out with an acceptance of the Israeli account even before the survivors had stopped bleeding, much less been interviewed. For 30 years, no one in the U.S. government has been willing to say why U.S. planes on a carrier, which had been launched to defend the Liberty, were instantly recalled, leaving the Liberty and her dying and wounded unprotected.

Now the survivors, who have doggedly pursued declassification of documents, have uncovered a new twist. Apparently a U.S. submarine was also present and photographed the attack

Survivors located four members of the crew of the USS Amberjack SS522, who have confirmed that they were present and submerged during the attack. According to Jim Ennes, a USS Liberty officer and author, one of the senior enlist d men told the Liberty guys that the sound of gunfire, missiles and torpedo explosion was so loud that some of the crew thought the Amberjack was under depth-charge attack.

Two other clues: first, a declassified memo of a briefing of the "303 Committee" (high-ranking U.S. officials) about a sensitive Department of Defense project known as FRONTLET 615. A notation mentions a submarine in United Arab Republic waters. At the time, that's what Egypt and Syria were called.

Second, the official ship's history shows the Amberjack was in the area during the 1967 war. The Amberjack's former skipper denies it, but remember, both the Amberjack and the Liberty were on highly classified missions.

Liberty survivors are hoping that other enlisted men or officers who served on that mission of the Amberjack will come forward. If indeed periscope photographs were taken, then those pictures would prove that the survivors' account of the attack is the truth.

To the everlasting shame of some Americans, these USS Liberty survivors have been vilified as anti-Semites and drunks because they refuse to stop their search for t. truth. The low-down, yellow-dog cowards in Co..gress have allowed these men to be called liars while refusing to do their duty and produce the evidence — which certainly exists — that would verify their accounts.

Decision on whether to execute McVeigh to reach jury this week

DENVER (AP) — Teachers will describe him as a silly, good-natured boy. Friends will say he was loyal and deeply concerned about the world around him. His father will speak, too. And then a jury will decide whether Timothy McVeigh should die.

The sentencing phase in the Oklahoma City bombing trial ends this week, after the defense calls dozens of witnesses to try to humanize a convicted mass murderer and provide some explanation for unspeakable horror.

The witnesses will paint a starkly different picture of McVeigh than the prosecution's portrait of an angry bomber with a twisted sense of patriotism. To the defense witnesses, he was a model soldier, a friendly neighbor and a hard worker. He was shy around women, socially awkward — but politically devout.

Among those to be called are three of McVeigh's former teachers from upstate New York, friend James Nichols from Michigan, experts on the Waco siege and white supremacists, and McVeigh's father, according to sources and the defense opening statement.

By week's end, the final decision of his trial — whether he should be sentenced to die or to life in prison without parole — will go to the same jury that convicted him on murder and conspiracy charges in the April 19, 1995, blast that killed 168 people.

"The defense will clearly focus on McVeigh's absence of criminal history and his military record and they'll hope that his family can speak as eloquently as the many victims of the blast," said Denver defense lawyer Scott Robinson. "But one doubts that."

The defense will be seeking to counter 2 1/2 emotional days of prosecution testimony by bombing survivors, rescuers and victims' relatives. They brought jurors to tears speaking about the loss of their loved ones and the lingering pain and nightmares since the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building was bombed.

> 'The defense will clearly focus on McVeigh's absence of criminal history and his military record and they'll hope that his family can speak as eloquently as the many victims of the blast.'
> — Scott Robinson
> defense lawyer

To help the jury connect with McVeigh, the defense has promised to put jurors in McVeigh's boots, to read to them from the pages of his favorite magazine, Soldier of Fortune, and show them videotapes that validated his fears that something terrible happened at Waco.

The jury will be brought into the home of Nichols, a friend of McVeigh's and brother of McVeigh's accused conspirator, Terry Nichols, on the day the fires raced through the Branch Davidian compound, fires that McVeigh blamed on the federal government.

The defense signaled it would present the Waco evidence not to retry the Branch Davidian case, but to provide a framework for understanding the mind of McVeigh. Waco expert Joel Dyer, who's on the defense list to testify, plans to show that McVeigh was just one of many people deeply disturbed by that siege in which about 80 people died.

Though McVeigh's attorneys are proposing no diminished capacity defense, they likely will introduce subtle evidence of emotional scars — how, as lawyer Richard Burr said, "he was affected like everybody else was" after the Gulf War, in which McVeigh fought as a gunner.

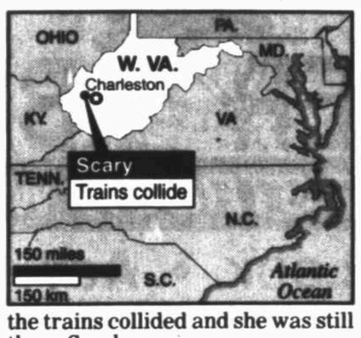

Army buddies will be called to describe McVeigh as more than just an excellent soldier, but a good friend who would pick up pals at bars because they had too much to drink and he didn't drink at all.

The defense intends to call McVeigh's father, William McVeigh, to discuss how his son always thought of himself as an underachiever. He also will narrate a 15-minute videotape depicting his son's childhood in Locport, N.Y., a Buffalo suburb, Newsweek and Time magazines reported. The issues hit newsstands Monday.

But McVeigh's teachers, including Anthony Miller, who taught McVeigh's 11th-grade class at Starpoint Central School in Pendleton, N.Y., will speak well of him.

"He was kind of boyish, silly and laughing," Miller told The Buffalo News. "He had a good disposition. Always kind of tongue-in-cheek and kind of witty. He wasn't the loner or a scowling dark face or someone with a chip on his shoulder."

Burning train wreck forces many indoors

SCARY, W.Va. (AP) — Hundreds of people shut themselves in their homes Sunday and others stayed in emergency shelters after a train carrying hazardous chemicals slammed into a coal train and exploded into flames.

Some people fled by crawling underneath a layer of thick smoke.

One chemical tank car continued burning Sunday and rail cars blocked the only road leading into a residential area in a hollow about 10 miles west of Charleston.

Residents probably would not be allowed to return until Monday, a railroad spokesman said.

One train worker was killed and two others were injured late Saturday when the eastbound CSX Transportation freight train rammed the eastbound CSX coal train. Thirteen cars derailed.

"We were just sitting there watching TV and there was a big boom, like thunder," said Lisa Cash, 18.

Many residents of the area fled as flames, smoke and fumes filled Vintroux Hollow, and some went to hospital emergency rooms complaining of headaches and chest pains.

"We were waiting for a ball of fire to come in and get us," said Beverly Post, comparing the explosion to scenes from the alien invasion movie "Independence Day."

Others escaped from the hollow by crawling below thick smoke and then under rail cars to reach school buses that took about 60 people to a shelter.

Those who went to the emergency room later arrived at the shelter wearing hospital gowns, and said they were told to discard their clothes because they might have been contaminated. Some still complained of headaches and dizziness more than 12 hours after the wreck.

Some of those at the shelter were outraged at not being allowed to return home.

"You're making me homeless," shouted William McCormick, 49.

Ms. Post, who was stranded in her home overnight, said worried emergency workers screamed at one pregnant woman to run to a bus and ordered an 87-year-old grandmother to crawl under the train.

She decided to stay inside with her windows closed and ventilation system shut off, following a "shelter in place" order. That advisory also was extended during the night across the Kanawha River into the town of Nitro, but was lifted there at about noon.

Beverly Lovejoy was visiting friends in Vintroux Hollow when the trains collided and she was still there Sunday.

"We have no way to get out of here," she said. "You can see the flames and the smoke, and our throats are burnt. Everybody's panicked because it was chemicals."

Authorities at first said the freight train's engines and several box cars burned. The train was made up of more than 90 cars.

But only the single tanker containing acetaldehyde was burning freely Sunday morning, said railroad spokesman Rob Gould.

That fire was to be allowed to burn itself out at least until Monday, and residents in the immediate area would not be allowed to return home before then, Gould said.

Firefighters did not try dousing the fire with water for fear that would wash the chemical into a creek and the nearby Kanawha River, which empties into the Ohio.

Authorities were concerned about the contents of the train's next two cars; one, which was charred and dented, contained sulfuric acid, and the other held hydrogen peroxide.

Acetaldehyde, used in the manufacture of acetic acid, perfumes and synthetic rubber, can substantially weaken the central nervous system when inhaled, according to chemical reference books.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board were on the scene.

Both trains were headed eastbound from Russell, Ky., to Richmond, Va., said CSX spokesman Tim Hensley.

Report: Churches remain under arson attack, but not conspiracy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government reported increasing arrest and conviction rates in attacks on mostly black churches. But a report released Sunday admitted houses of worship remain under attack and repeated earlier denials that a national conspiracy exists.

The report by the National Church Arson Task Force said federal and state authorities have arrested 199 suspects in 150 arsons, bombings or attempted bombings of churches between Jan. 1, 1995, and May 27 of this year.

Of those, 110 suspects were convicted in 77 fires. Overall, 429 fires have been investigated, with no arrests in 279 of them. Among the fires were blazes at 11 synagogues and four mosques.

"Arsons are extremely difficult to solve. Evidence burns. It's destroyed. So it's remarkable that we have achieved these results," said James E. Johnson, task force co-chairman.

As investigators sought out suspects, volunteers and others rallied to rebuild churches, the report said. As a result, it said, 25 churches have been rebuilt, and 65 are under construction.

As the task force discussed the report Sunday, a collection of ministers whose churches were burned gathered in Washington for a three-day conference on the recovery effort.

The ministers said they feel the government is careful in investigating the fires and that the arrests are serving as a deterrent.

"Although I can't say I'm completely satisfied, I have seen an improvement from last year," said the Rev. David Upton, pastor of Inner City Church in Knoxville, Tenn.

President Clinton is preparing a June 14 speech on race in which he will announce a major initiative to encourage Americans to talk frankly about their sentiments in town hall meetings around the country.

In an interview with Newsweek magazine, distributed Sunday, Clinton said he wants to urge Americans to "keep our eyes on what I think the real prize is, which is, what could America be like a generation from now?"

"I think the American people are ready for this," he said.

As part of his initiative, the president will appoint a seven-member advisory board to spend the next year gathering information that he will compile into an action plan.

Sunday's report came one year after Clinton formed the task force to coordinate investigations into a rash of fires that seemed to strike a large number of black churches and appeared, to many, associated with a racist plot.

Federal officials, however, said that black churches were not the majority of those set afire and that only a few were linked to the same set of suspects.

Conspiracy charges were filed in "a limited number of cases," the report said, and those conspiracies "tended to be confined to the small geographic area" where the fires they involved were set.

"Investigators continue to pursue the question of whether broader conspiracies were responsible for some of the fires, but to date the evidence has not established the existence of a national conspiracy," the report concluded.

Some of the pastors disagreed.

"This is racial," said the Rev. Robert Jeffrey, pastor of New Hope Baptist Church in Seattle. "It is terror perpetrated against people of color who have no defense."

DEAR ABBY

Little ingenuity can help students, parents beat high cost of prom

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Penniless for the Prom": I am a junior in high school and am on the prom commission. Our school budgets for this kind of problem. "Penniless" should talk to the prom adviser (usually one of the teachers) because a reduced ticket price is available for those who cannot afford it. The money saved on tickets can then be spent on other necessities — like a tux. Also, get your group to go to someone's house and prepare dinner instead of eating out, and car-pool instead of using expensive transportation. — READY FOR THE PROM, SANTA ANA, CALIF.

Van Buren

DEAR READY FOR THE PROM: I'm sure that "Penniless" will appreciate your helpful hints — as will other high school students in the same boat. Many other generous readers took the time to send their suggestions. Read on for more:

DEAR ABBY: I thought you'd enjoy knowing how we spent prom night at our home:

Our daughter, a junior, wanted to attend the prom this year. She didn't want a date, but preferred to go with a group of friends. Seven of them got together and paid for their own tickets, which were a reasonable $10 each. They each contributed another $10, which paid for their dinner and flowers.

That morning a friend taught us how to make corsages and they turned out beautifully. We took the extra flowers and made three beautiful floral arrangements for the dining table. Other mothers helped in different ways to make the evening special. A close friend who's a college senior served as the waiter for the evening. We made a wonderful Italian meal, and tried to stay out of the kids' way.

It was a fantastic night for everyone. They are already planning to do the same thing next year. What great memories we have, and no one went broke in the process! — JUDY AND ALAN PANNELL, FERNLEY, NEV.

DEAR ABBY: If a high school boy wants to take a girl to the prom and needs money, please tell him to earn it. He could knock on neighbors' doors and offer to do yard work, clean windows, wash cars, walk or groom dogs, etc. I did this with a friend in 1974, and I earned enough in one weekend. — GARY NAJARIAN, SCITUATE, MASS.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 17-year-old girl who just attended my first prom at another school. I was appalled by the fact that tickets cost $95. (At my school they cost $10 a couple and seniors go free.)

My advice to "Penniless" is: If you need extra money, call some local business and explain your dilemma. Many plant nurseries are very busy during the spring and could probably use an extra hand for a couple of Saturdays before the prom.

I would also advise making some adjustments to prom night: Instead of renting a limousine, clean up your — or your parents' — car for the big night. Call restaurants around town and ask if they have a set menu. (They usually give you a choice of two dishes and everyone makes their selection in advance.) The set menu is usually much cheaper, and you are spared the embarrassment of not having enough money to pay the bill. To save gas money, ask another couple to ride with you and split the cost of the fuel.

If you still can't afford it, ask the girl and explain your dilemma. I'm sure she'll be excited and willing to share the cost — but still as "more than friends." (I know I would.)

I hope this is helpful. Don't skip your senior prom. It's something you will never forget. — GINNY SMITH, LAKE CHARLES, LA.

DEAR GINNY AND THE MANY READERS WHO OFFERED THEIR PROM NIGHT SUGGESTIONS: Prom night has evolved into an end-of-the-year bash for many high school students and their parents, and it's not unheard-of for kids to drop hundreds of dollars on limousines, hotel rooms for all-night after-prom parties, and other expensive items. It's refreshing to see that with a little ingenuity and cooperation among friends, it's still possible to have a memorable night without breaking the bank.

Laws requiring open government survive legislative proposals

AUSTIN (AP) — State laws requiring most government meetings and records to be open to the public survived a battery of legislative proposals aimed at reducing or restricting Texans' access to such information, according to open government advocates.

During the 1997 legislative session, which wrapped up its 140-day stint last week, more bills that would have limited or cut off public access to government records and meetings were filed than in previous legislative sessions, according to M.J. Nicchio, a spokesman for the Texas Daily Newspaper Association.

Among them were proposals to:

■ Expunge from insurance companies' records violations of state rules or laws if they did not violate other rules or laws for six years.

■ Allow a governmental body to conduct a closed meeting to discuss personnel matters of members of advisory boards.

■ Create permanent personnel files and private personnel files for police and firefighters. Information from private files would not be public.

■ Make information developed in nursing home investigations confidential.

■ Exempt from the Public Information Act some information about prison inmates.

While those bills died, Nicchio said open records-open meetings advocates will have to work hard before the 1999 Legislature to prevent another onslaught of negative proposals.

"The Public Information Act and the Open Meetings Act are the only way the public has any accountability as to what a governmental body does," Nicchio said. "Without those two tools, anything can be done behind closed doors and you have no right to know what it is that's going on."

Paul Watler, president of the Texas Freedom of Information Foundation, called the session disappointing.

"There was some modest progress made and some real disappointments," he said.

Watler and Nicchio cited the reopening of information in some closed criminal cases as a small gain for open government proponents.

Under a 1996 Texas Supreme Court decision, the public was denied access to criminal cases in which court action had been completed.

Open records advocates backed a bill to fully reopen those files, but won only a half-victory.

"Rather than returning full public access, the Legislature now will allow public access only on cases where there has been either a conviction or deferred adjudication," Watler said. "It's scant progress."

Watler said while most people think of open government laws as news media concerns, all citizens should support them.

"Whether the public believes it or not, the media is the arm of the public that informs them," Nicchio added. "The Public Information Act and the Open Meetings Act aren't for the media, they are for the public."

Both men said a major defeat for open records law was the passage of a bill to close all information from traffic wrecks to people who did not know the name of at least one person involved and either the location or date of the wreck.

"Ultimately what passed we feel pretty good about," Nicchio said.

He prefers boxers

TRENTON, Neb. (AP) — No one has to wonder whether Brian Ledford prefers boxers or briefs.

That's because police say the South Carolina man stripped down to a pair of green boxer shorts after escaping from the Hitchcock County Jail in southwest Nebraska.

Ledford apparently didn't want to be seen around the county in jail-house orange. Too conspicuous.

The 22-year-old's brief stint with freedom ended after he was spotted by two employees with the McCook Public Power District.

Ledford is wanted in Anderson County, S.C., on two counts of burglary and is awaiting extradition.

A real stink

MARION, Ill. (AP) — When Tom Zeller couldn't persuade residents of a subdivision to drop their opposition to his plan to build apartments behind them, he raised a stink.

With real pigs.

After months of wrangling over his proposal to build a six-apartment complex, Zeller trucked in five hogs over the weekend and set them up in a pen within sight of the neighbors who had opposed his plan to rezone the land from agricultural to residential.

Some neighbors took the pigs in stride. Others, including new subdivision resident Lisa Gibson, were alarmed.

"I was prepared for apartments back there, but I was not prepared for pigs," she said. "I'm just afraid my kids are going to get bit."

Gordon Philip, a spokesman for residents opposed to the apartments, said he was quick to catch on to what Zeller was up to.

"I heard a tractor fire up, and I said, 'Oh, no,'" he said. "I'm from western Kansas; I'm from agriculture. I knew exactly what it was."

Zeller said he brought the hogs in to make a point about land use. He plans to remove them by Monday.

Young evangelist enjoys preaching & performing

Cody Leger, born blind and premature, is an 11-year-old evangelist

By Marla Pierson
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO — Cody Leger's voice washes over the full pews of New Hope Baptist Church and the folding chairs set in the aisle.

He asks that God empty him like a teapot. He asks that angels come down. He asks that God bless this service "real good."

Cody is an evangelist, preaching at several churches locally and in Lousiana. He is also 11 years old.

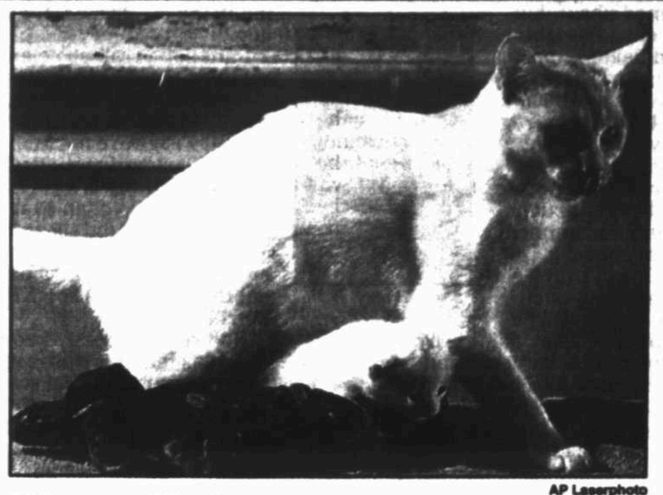

Born premature and blind, the Hallsburg boy spends hours listening to tapes of preaching and gospel music. He studies a Braille Bible and practices sermons in his room.

On Sunday morning, his words flow in quick torrents of praise, verse and warning, punctuated by the occasional "Thank you Jesus."

He talks about God plowing up the hardness of lives, how what is sown in sorrow will be reaped in joy.

On the front row, his adoptive parents wipe tears from their eyes, listening to their son's phrases and reliving what they call a miracle.

'GWTW' roots extend to Midland

Midland woman's uncle built house where Margaret Mitchell wrote 'Gone with the Wind'

Margaret Mitchell published only one novel in her short lifetime, but that novel, "Gone With The Wind" is second only to The Bible in worldwide sales.

The Atlanta, Ga., native's family roots extend to Midland, home of her third cousin, Rosalind Kress Haley, widow of local historian J. Evetts Haley.

Not only is Mrs. Haley a cousin, but her uncle, Cornelius J. Sheehan, built the home where Mitchell wrote her novel.

She traveled to Atlanta recently to attend the dedication of the house, known as the Margaret Mitchell House or Gone With The Wind House. Twice damaged by arson, the house is being restored to its original state, with Mitchell's apartment being preserved as she had lived in it. She has donated several family items for the home and one room will have a tribute to the family on display.

Mrs. Haley's genteel southern accent disguises the fact she was born in New York City but illustrates the fact that she was raised in South Carolina where her father acquired enough land

Player-piano mechanic Bill Elliott.

Mechanic strikes nostalgic chord

By Carol Sowers
Associated Press

PHOENIX — Rows of heirloom player pianos stand in the half-light of Bill Elliott's crowded backyard workshop.

Nearly 100 years ago, they pumped out tunes for sing-alongs in lantern-lit farmhouses or bawdy saloons. But now, these players are past their prime, their bellows cracked, the wood splitting.

They have been brought to Elliott because he is probably the only player-piano mechanic in Arizona.

"If there is another one, I would have heard of him, and I could sure use his help," he said, threading his way between pianos and their parts awaiting attention.

Trucks with players loaded on the back frequently pull up unannounced to his spacious Scottsdale home, and he says he has no idea where they came from until he uncrates them.

"I don't advertise, but people find me," says Elliott, who would have remained a rocket scientist if it hadn't

Some rules of dress only dads can teach

It dawned on me quite by accident the other morning as I was dressing The Boy. I stood him up, looked him over and decided he looked great. Hair looked good. Winnie the Pooh shirt was ironed and looked sharp. Shorts were the appropriate length should we choose to enroll him in school a few years early.

Patterson

Then I realized I had forgotten to zip his fly. I blushed slightly, feeling embarrassed for him.

The Boy simply can't leave the house with his fly down. It would be unseemly for a 3-year-old. Not to mention, if dad is walking around with his boy, it would be a reflection on the father, namely me, that he forgot to zip his little guy's fly.

All of a sudden, I'm thinkin', there are certain rules of dress that a dad must hand down to his boy that a mother cannot.

Zipping his trousers would be at the top of that list.

Zipping your fly is not all that necessary when you're still in Kermit the Frog diapers, or even when you get called up to the bigs and graduate to Batman underwear. But you do have to train them early about fly-zipping, or they'll undoubtedly forget when they get older. Unzipped flies are such a social faux pas nowadays that people will rudely point and snicker. Or so I've heard.

There are other important rules of dress that must be left for dads to teach their sons. Such as:

✔ The incompleteness a man experiences when he forgets to wear a belt. Forget your belt for the day, and you walk around hikin'-up all day. (It's not entirely necessary to stress the importance of remembering your belt at 3 since a diaper does a pretty good job of holding up a pair of pants. But it will be something to remember as your boy grows. On that same note, the importance of hitting every belt loop must be stressed at some point in your son's life. But again, this is a difficult lesson to teach since The Boy is still wearing elastic-band pants.)

✔ While we're on the subject of belt loops, it's pretty important to teach your boy early on about that really cool trick you can pull on nerdy kids where you put your middle finger in their belt loop, then jerk quickly to the side to leave the impression you have just ripped off their loop. It's a Three Stooges-type trick, so moms can't possibly comprehend the humor in it, or the necessity of teaching it at an early age.

✔ Matching socks. This is not nearly as important as moms claim it is, as long as your son grows up to wears pants that are much longer than the ones you wore when you were in school. If he does somehow inherit the high-water gene, make sure you go with black socks. White socks and high-waters are as socially unacceptable as the open fly thing. Not to mention it can be blinding to innocent bystanders.

✔ Boys must also be taught how a day can be ruined by spilling hot coffee on their Dockers. But since few tricycles actually come equipped with cup holders or dashboards, this lesson can also be

Levitating frog could have real-world applications

Get ready to dance naked in the streets, because scientists have finally done something that humanity has long dreamed about, but most of us thought would never happen within our lifetimes.

That's right: They have levitated a frog.

Barry

I swear I am not making this up. According to an Associated Press article sent in by a number of alert readers, British and Dutch scientists "have succeeded in floating a frog in air." They did this by using magnetism, which, as you recall from physics class, is a powerful force that causes certain items to be attracted to refrigerators. Magnetism is one of the Six Fundamental Forces of the Universe, with the other five being Gravity, Duct Tape, Whining, Remote Control and The Force That Pulls Dogs Toward The Groins Of Strangers.

The AP article states that the scientists levitated the frog by subjecting it to "a magnetic field a million times stronger than that of the Earth." According to scientists, the frog "showed no signs of distress after floating in the air inside a magnetic cylinder."

I am not a trained scientist, but my reaction to that last statement is — and I quote — "Duh." I mean, of course the frog "showed no signs of distress": It's a frog. Frogs are not known for their ability to show emotions; they are limited to essentially one facial expression, very much like Jean-Claude Van Damme. What did these scientists expect the frog to do? Cry? Hop around on their computer keyboard and spell out the words "I AM EXPERIENCING DISTRESS"?

No, we don't really know what the frog was feeling; this is why we should be skeptical about the scientists' claim, as reported in the AP story, that "there is no reason" why this same magnetic technique could not be used on "larger creatures, even humans." Before we start exposing human beings to extremely powerful magnetic fields, we should conduct extensive laboratory tests on Richard Simmons. But if magnetic levitation really turns out to be safe, I think it could have some important "real world" applications:

1. GETTING CHILDREN OUT OF BED ON SCHOOL MORNINGS. Scientists calculate that the attraction between a child and his or her bed on a school morning can be up to 75 times as strong as mere gravity. Most parents try to overcome this attraction by pounding on the door and shouting ineffective threats, the most popular one being: "YOU'RE GOING TO BE LATE FOR SCHOOL!" The problem with this threat is that it's based on the idiotic premise that the child wants to be in school and be forced to sit on a hard chair and figure out how many times 7 goes into 56; naturally, the child prefers the bed.

Think, parents, how much easier it would be if, at 6:30 a.m. on school mornings, you could simply press a button, thereby activating gigantic magnets under your child's bed that would cause the child to float upward, along with any frogs that happened to be in bed with the child. Then, instead of wasting your time yelling, "YOU'RE GOING TO BE LATE FOR SCHOOL!" you could waste your time yelling, "STOP DRAWING WITH THAT MARKING PEN ON THE CEILING!" So perhaps this is not such a good use for magnetic levitation after all. Perhaps a better one would be:

2. COPING WITH PEOPLE WHO "SAVE" SEATS. I don't know about you, but it makes me nuts when I enter a self-service restaurant, airport gate area, movie theater, etc., and there are people "saving" seats — sometimes lots of seats — for people who are not there, and who sometimes do not ever actually show up, which does not stop the savers from vigilantly guarding their seats, often by placing items such as shopping bags on them. My feeling is, if an actual person was physically there and had to go to the bathroom or something, fine, you can "save" that person's seat until he or she returns; but if you're "saving" a seat for a hypothetical person who is not there, then the seat should go to real people who ARE there. The concept of "saving" seats should be restricted to junior high school, where "frontsy-backsy" is still considered a legal technique for butting into line.

So my idea is that public seating areas would be monitored via cameras; if a "seat-saver" was observed denying seats to real people, the appropriate magnets would be activated, and the seat-saver, along with the shopping bags, would vacate the "saved" seats, very much the way a Poseidon missile vacates a submarine. Granted, the magnetic field would also prevent everybody else from using the seats, but I think the overall effect would be worth it.

3. IMPROVING THE QUALITY OF MEDICAL CARE. I recently had my annual physical examination, which I get once every seven years, and when the nurse weighed me, I was shocked to discover how much stronger the Earth's gravitational pull has become since 1990. There should be magnets — very powerful magnets — under doctors' scales to compensate for the gravitational increase, much the way economists adjust dollar amounts for inflation.

I'm sure I could come up with other practical uses for magnetic human levitation, but I have to go. It's been an hour since lunch, and, as a resident of the Earth's magnetic field, I find myself powerfully attracted to the refrigerator.

HALEY: Philanthropist honored to be associated with 'Gone With the Wind' to build a plantation called Buckfield Plantation. At one time, she recalled, they had 1,000 acres of narcissus bulbs.

She said she was proud to represent her family, along with a cousin, at the dedication of the house.

"It was a wonderful feeling to have the home restored," she said, and she expressed gratitude to the German automaker Daimler-Benz for underwriting the costs of the restoration after both fires.

"I was presented a Daimler-Benz pin which I have proudly worn on a number of outfits," she said.

And she is proud to have her uncle's home associated with the novel and with Mitchell.

Mrs. Haley said that, regrettably, she never met Mitchell or her husband, John Marsh. But she recalled one of her uncles talking about Mitchell and how shaken he was when she died six days after being hit by a taxi cab while crossing a street.

Now surrounded by skyscrapers, the house at 809 Peachtree Street was the first of its scale in Atlanta when it was built in 1899, according to Ms. Haley. Her mother, Agatha Sheehan — Sheehan's sister — lived in the house for two years when she wrote for the Atlanta Journal prior to marrying Ms. Haley's father, Claude Kress.

Ms. Haley describes her uncle as an aggressive businessman who bought and began publishing the World Almanac and invested in real estate.

"He and his family invested in real estate in Atlanta in an area called Five Points, which is now the very center of the city," she said. "So they did very well."

The house, she said, symbolized the family's appreciation for culture.

After Sheehan sold it, there was a third story added to the structure, it was moved to the back of its lot and divided into 10 apartment units. Mitchell and her husband, journalist John Marsh, held their wedding reception in their tiny unit on the ground floor of the building on July 4, 1925.

Mitchell left her job at the Atlanta Journal to recuperate from a series of injuries and her husband encouraged her to write a novel. During the seven years Mitchell wrote the book, Mrs. Haley said, he would come home at night and ask to see what she had written, critiquing the new pages.

When she first read the book, she said, "I was tremendously impressed and I wondered how she could have written it. The reason is that from the time she was two or three years old, she sat on the knee of uncles,

"Every nation ... has at one time been involved in total war and collapsed and the people have wondered if they could ever pull themselves together ... They could see this woman, Scarlett O'Hara, pull herself together and all the people around her and start rebuilding, and they could identify with that effort."

— Rosalind Haley

aunts, cousins, generals, admirals, and all she heard was stories of The War Between The States. And this will blow your mind, she was 11 before she learned the South had lost!"

Mitchell took mental notes of the stories she was told and weaved some of them together, along with the people who told them, into her book.

In fact, the character of Melanie is based on a woman, also named Melanie, who fell in love with a first cousin nicknamed "Doc" because he came from a family of dentists. Being from a strict Catholic family, the couple was forbidden to marry. Melanie joined a convent and became Sister Melanie and the young man went west and became "Doc" Holliday. Mitchell got permission from Sister Melanie to characterize her in the book.

There is a reason Mitchell's book is so popular, according to Mrs. Haley.

"Every nation, regardless of which nation it is, has at one time been involved in total war and collapsed and the people have wondered if they could ever pull themselves together, get back on their feet and be independent again. They could see this woman, Scarlett O'Hara, pull herself together and all the people around her and start rebuilding, and they could identify with that effort."

EVANGELIST: Fifth grader witnesses during lunch

(From 1B)

Lynn and Danny were living in Jasper, trying to adopt, when they got a call about Cody, then 9 months old.

Born premature and blind, he had problems with his lungs. He had been abused. There was a broken leg, broken arm, damaged ribs and double hernias. He had nine eye surgeries, four blood transfusions. He was on oxygen.

"We had a such a struggle with him," she said. "They said he wouldn't live. I've seen God bring him through so much."

His parents sent pictures of Cody to Oral Roberts and others asking them to pray for his health.

"We were just every day reading the word to him and praying over him," said Danny, who has preached in churches as well.

Cody recovered his health but not his sight, and at 3 or 4 years old he told his parents he wanted to be a preacher.

"I've been listening to preaching tapes ever since I was a little boy," Cody said.

He gets his messages from those tapes or his Braille Bible. He practiced Sunday's sermon in his room in Hallsburg. That's where he preaches to himself too.

"He preaches to the walls. He preaches to the dog," his father said.

Is it OK to tape those private sermons, he asks New Hope's youth minister Sunday after the service, while other children in the church play outside.

His parents are used to hearing this sort of talk.

"We go into a restaurant to eat, the first thing he's going to do is introduce himself to the waitress and ask if she knows Jesus," Danny said.

Cody, who will be a fifth grader this fall at Hallsburg Elementary, tells of witnessing to the school crowd during lunch, an effort that didn't go over that well.

"They're like mocking me, and it's the same thing they did to Jesus," he said.

A member of Church of the Open Door in Waco, Cody has preached at several local churches, including Cornerstone Baptist Church and Bible-Way Church, and some in Louisiana, where the Legers are from originally.

He enjoys performing, whether singing, playing drums or speaking. Cody appears comfortable before the New Hope congregation, easily brushing over missteps or catching his breath.

Afterward, the 11-year-old disappears into the center of a crowd that has come forward to pray with him.

Worshippers speak to him of cancer and bad backs, family relationships. The boy's voice rises above the crowd, blessing the people, cursing Satan, asking for cures and thanking God.

His family doesn't ask that Cody's blindness be healed, though they believe God in his time will take care of that. For now it, too, may be part of God's plan.

"If Cody could see, Cody wouldn't be where he is today," his mother said. "He'd be too carried away with the things of the world."

Cody holds his mother's hand during an interview. She straightens his shirt and tips his chin up. He sits between his parents through the beginning of the Sunday service.

"He's a man of God, but he's still an 11-year-old boy," his mother, Lynn, said, mulling over parental concerns.

"I just pray he doesn't lose his love for the Lord. You know sometimes you get burned out on stuff. I hope he doesn't get burned out on his love for the Lord," she said.

PIANO: Mechanic owns just two players

been for a stray dog.

Elliott is a member of a fast-dwindling fraternity.

Ed Keefer, president of the Story & Clark Piano Co. in Seneca, Pa., says there may be only 200 people like Elliott in the country.

Player pianos have never gone completely out of style. Story & Clark and other companies produce modern versions for about $1,200.

Owners of new players can choose from thousands of new titles punched out on piano rolls that sell for $6 to $13, about the price of a compact disc.

The song's lyrics are printed down the side of the rolls for impromptu sing-alongs.

"It's the most fun you can have with your clothes on," Keefer said.

Keefer's company concentrates on turning out about 200 modern player pianos a year and isn't looking back.

When antique players falter, "We don't fix 'em," Keefer said.

That's left to Elliott, who revives old players with his drills and files and meticulous attention to detail.

Repairing antique players is a complicated business. They are a whirring marvel of motors and vacuum pumps and air-puffing bellows that stir piano keys into action in 1/50th of a second.

The conductor for this mechanical symphony is the piano roll, sturdy paper punched with thousands of holes that determine which keys are struck.

Elliott, 64, offers this digested version of the player's innards as he lifts the lid of a 67-year-old, $40,000 Steinway at the back of his workshop. It took him three months to rebuild the graceful old grand. He repaired the fist-sized bellows with rubberized cloth and rebuilt the motor and vacuum pump.

And now the gleaming black Steinway plays with the confidence it had when it was new.

Elliott flipped a switch with his thick fingers, the roll moved, the bellows puffed and the playerless keys danced to the rhythms of George Gershwin's American in Paris.

The piano man smiled. Is it the music or the mechanics he loves?

"I don't know one note from another," he said. "I have a tin ear.

Elliott never expected to be a full-time piano mechanic.

In 1957, he was working at the California Institute of Technology's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Los Angeles.

"We were experimenting with rockets, and no one knew what they were doing at that time," he said.

One day, he took a stray dog to a pound and noticed a company across the street making piano rolls.

He'd never seen a player piano. But before he walked out of the company that day, the jet-propulsion engineer had agreed to figure out a better way to punch holes in piano rolls.

Cal Tech was a nice enough place to work, he said, but in his work there he was concentrating on theory and research.

"I wanted to work on machinery that made something," he said.

Five years after joining the piano-roll company, Elliott's improved system for making the rolls had caught the attention of a player-piano company in Oregon, Ill. The company bought his method, and in 1963 Elliott moved to Phoenix to return to engineering.

He didn't put his phone number in the book, but somehow owners with crippled player pianos discovered him.

George Wrigley, of Apache Junction, is one of Elliott's newest customers. He found Elliott by calling piano dealers in search of someone to repair his turn-of-the-century Bennett Bretz upright. The family heirloom had deteriorated in a cellar in New Hampshire, so Wrigley had it trucked to Apache Junction last year. It will soon be in Elliott's backed-up workshop.

"Everybody I talked to told me to take it to Elliott," Wrigley said. "They said he's slow, but he's good."

Elliott's been doctoring player pianos and old-time organs full-time since 1972. A luxurious motorhome sits in his driveway, but he doesn't get to use it as much as he'd like.

He's a year behind on his work, and it keeps rolling in.

For $250, he installs electric motors for owners who want them as an option to a pump. A total overhaul costs about $1,800.

Elliott can't be called a collector of player pianos. He has only two in a den.

One is a 1917 Coinola, a coin-operated upright that he rescued from an abandoned saloon and movie theater in Humboldt.

"When I got it, all of the player mechanism was gone," he said.

But now, when Elliott drops a quarter into the slot, the piano-roll turns and strikes up a Sousa-size band: the piano, an accordion, three drums, a triangle, a tambourine, wood blocks, and a xylophone.

The music is a plinky-tink version of The Rose, and as it plays, Elliott picks up a screwdriver.

He can't help himself. He has to tinker a bit.

PATTERSON: Underwear should be out of sight

deferred a few years.

✔ Unless playing cowboys and Indians, make sure and teach your son that it is pretty much always necessary to pull his shirt down all the way over his nose before going to work.

✔ Forget how some goofy looking would-be trend-setters look, the underwear band is supposed to be under the waistband of the pants. Covered. Out of sight. That's why they call it *under*wear.

✔ And most importantly: Stress to your boy that a man is never fully dressed until he is wearing his baseball cap. Make sure he knows it need be taken off on only two occasions: at church and at the dinner table. (If you have a visiting minister and sit on the back row, or mom is away for the evening and you're cooking dinner for the kids yourself, look the other way and let him be daring. He'll appreciate you for it when he gets older.)

A Time To Celebrate - BILL MAYNE
Please join us for a celebration of the power of Jesus, as we express appreciation to BILL MAYNE for his impact on the community of Midland.

Tuesday, June 10, 1997 • 7:00 p.m.
Holiday Inn Country Villa, Convention Center
Midland, Texas

A special celebration of thanksgiving is planned as we acknowledge the work of the Lord and His faithfulness through Bill and Annette Mayne. There will be a short program to recognize the goodness of God through one who is "a watchman on the walls" and who has blessed and enriched our lives by example, while steadfastly pointing the way to Jesus.

Refreshments will be served as we join in fellowship on this special occasion.

Prosecutor drops charges in exchange for drug task force donation, report says

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A South Texas district attorney gives people who get caught with Mexican prescription drugs the option of making the felony charge disappear with a donation to a drug task force, the San Antonio Express-News reported Sunday.

"It just goes to show justice is for sale in South Texas," said attorney John Bull, a criminal defense lawyer who represents several clients charged with illegal possession of prescription drugs.

Hundreds of people go to Mexico to buy their prescription medicine cheaply, with at least some unaware that Texas law prohibits possession of the drugs. Most arrests result from routine traffic stops by sheriff's deputies or the Department of Public Safety.

Possession of a controlled substance is a second-degree felony punishable by up to 10 years in prison.

District court records indicate 200 to 300 people have been arrested on charges of possession of Mexican prescription drugs over the past two years in the counties of Frio, La Salle and Chambers.

Most defendants end up with a felony conviction, probation and a fine between $2,500 and $10,000.

In some cases handled by District Attorney Lynn Ellison, however, prescription-drug defendants have had charges dismissed for donating up to $2,500 to the 81st Judicial District Drug Task Force.

Ellison personally decides when to dismiss charges.

"If we think there is insufficient evidence (to prosecute a case), we will ask them if they will make a charitable contribution," he said.

The request is not part of a plea agreement, he said.

"If they don't want to do it, we just go ahead and prosecute. There is no hard sell (on making the contribution)," Ellison said.

Ellison's jurisdiction includes Frio, La Salle, Karnes, Wilson and Atascosa counties. The task force covers all those counties except for La Salle.

Attorney Bull said not all defendants are treated equally.

"Most defendants charged with having Mexican prescription drugs are Anglo," Bull said. "No one is making these deals to my poor Hispanic clients charged with other kinds of drugs."

Ellison estimated that his office has collected about $10,000 in drug task donations from prescription drug cases over the last couple of years.

The donation must be paid up front, Ellison said, unlike fines, which can be paid out over the course of a probated sentence.

An attorney for a Louisiana casino owner who contributed thousands of dollars to the task force after his arrest in Frio County told the newspaper his client had yet to be indicted when his client was offered a deal.

"He owned a casino and had a gaming license," said the lawyer, who did not want to be identified. "He was afraid if anything showed up in his record he'd lose the license. I conveyed this to the prosecutor and they allowed him to make a contribution. He was never indicted."

Some criminal justice experts question the ethics of exchanging donations for dropped charges.

Bexar County Senior District Judge Peter Michael Curry said the practice is unethical and probably illegal.

"He either enforces the law or forgets about it," Curry said.

It sounds like bribery, said Dawn Miller, first assistant to the general counsel of the State Bar of Texas. Lawyers who cooperate could lose their law licenses, she said.

Lawyer and legal ethics expert John Pickney, former chairman of the local bar association grievance committee, doesn't think the practice is illegal.

"Prosecutors have so much discretion on whether charges are instituted or not," Pickney said.

Three dead after rodeo shooting

CHILTON, Texas (AP) — A man with a rifle opened fire on a crowd gathered at an outdoor rodeo arena Saturday, killing three men and wounding three others.

Four men were in custody Sunday, Falls County Sheriff John Trousdale said.

He declined to release the identities of the victims and the suspects until his reports were completed.

The motive in the shooting apparently was revenge.

"They've been having a feud for a while," Trousdale said, adding he did not believe organized gangs were involved.

Several dozen people had gathered to ride horses Saturday at the arena on FM 434, about 20 miles south of Waco.

Witness Marcos Rueda said the gunman asked one victim a question.

"Do you remember me? You thought I was going to forget," Rueda quoted the shooter as saying.

"Then he started shooting," Rueda told the Waco Tribune-Herald. "Everybody just kind of scattered out."

The wounded were taken to Hillcrest Baptist Medical Center in Waco.

OBITUARIES

Dale McReynolds Sr.

Dale Marvin McReynolds Sr., 76, died in Chesapeake, Va., Friday, June 6.

McReynolds was born on May 30, 1921 in Martin County, son of Howard and Lucille McReynolds. He enlisted in the U.S. Army in 1941 and served in the 44 Infantry Division, which was sent overseas in 1944. Dale received the Bronze Star Medal for heroism while fighting in Germany.

Inmate's death sparks lawsuits, investigations

ABILENE (AP) — The family of a 31-year-old inmate who died in custody has sued five officers and the prison's ex-warden, claiming his death was caused by a "brutal" and "sadistic" beating by guards at the Robertson Unit.

In a lawsuit filed Friday, Gary Lee Crenshaw's family seeks unspecified damages for his death. He was serving a 45-year sentence out of Tarrant County for possession of a controlled substance, his third conviction.

The Texas Department of Criminal Justice has not received the lawsuit, spokesman Larry Todd said. He declined to comment.

Crenshaw died Jan. 26, about 30 hours after he lost consciousness during a scuffle with two of the unit's guards. He had been at Robertson for seven years.

Taylor County Justice of the Peace Sam Matta ruled that Crenshaw died by asphyxiation, a homicide. Matta said the death was unprovoked and resulted from an excessive use of force.

An administrative review at the prison found that excessive force was not used, and internal affairs investigation has so far found that evidence is "inconclusive."

Officials at the Robertson Unit maintain Crenshaw became violent during a routine search of his cell. They say they restrained Crenshaw in response to his violence.

A 40-page lawsuit filed on behalf of Crenshaw's three children, his mother, and his common-law wife, Lisa Ann Courtney, claims Crenshaw was unnecessarily beaten and denied immediate, adequate medical attention.

The lawsuit filed in federal district court in Abilene also claims the prison system has conspired to cover up evidence in the case.

Todd said the Department of Criminal Justice is continuing its own investigation into Crenshaw's death, as is Jones County District Attorney Gary Brown. Brown expects to present the evidence he gathers to grand jurors by the end of this month.

Officer Mike Helms is accused in the lawsuit of forcing Crenshaw's head down as he lifted his arms up and backward. Officer Bradley Johnson is accused of helping beat the inmate. The lawsuit claims officers David Templeton and Callen Benavides never intervened.

Sgt. Monte Baker and former warden Ron Drewry also are listed in the lawsuit.

In July 1996, a 22-year-old Robertson inmate died after he was shot during what officials said was his attempted escape from a work detail.

HEALTH BRIEFING

Cause of asthma

Frequent exposure to cockroach debris may be the most common cause of asthma among inner-city children, who have much higher rates of the wheezing disease than kids in the suburbs, according to a recent study.

Dust that contains proteins from cockroaches and their droppings was found to be the leading cause of asthmatic symptoms among 476 asthmatic inner-city children ages 4 to 8 who were studied in eight different cities. Other allergic causes were dust mites and cat dander. The report in the New England Journal of Medicine says that children allergic to cockroach allergen who were exposed to high levels of it had higher rates of hospitalization for their asthma, made more unscheduled visits to doctors, and had more wheezing, lost sleep and school absences than other asthmatic children.

The research, carried out by the National Cooperative Inner-City Asthma study group headed by scientists at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in the Bronx, was part of a large collaborative effort aimed at finding out why black children living in urban areas are three times as likely to be hospitalized or die from asthma as kids in the suburbs.

In an editorial accompanying the report, two physicians from the University of Virginia and Emory University said the findings explain part, but not all, of the high prevalence of asthma in the inner city and its increase over the past 30 years.

Cream helps

A new antiviral cream has been shown to shorten outbreaks of recurrent cold sores and to ease the pain the stubborn sores cause.

The drug, penciclovir, is the first treatment for cold sores around the mouth (known as recurrent herpes labialis) that definitely speeds healing of the lesions, say University of Utah researchers.

Cold sores, caused by the herpes simplex virus, affect about 20 percent of adults and usually last seven or eight days.

The Utah investigators compared the effectiveness of penciclovir, sold as Denavir, and an inactive placebo cream in a total of 1,573 patients. The sores treated with penciclovir healed nearly a day faster, pain went away sooner, and the virus disappeared from their blood more quickly.

Researchers said it wasn't necessary to apply the cream in the earliest stages of the cold sore for the treatment to work. Denavir, approved earlier this year, requires a prescription.

Therapy early

Infants born infected with the AIDS virus need quick, aggressive therapy with combinations of drugs in order to control the deadly virus, suggest two studies reported recently.

Researchers from Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore and the National Institutes of Health found that infected newborns have very high levels of HIV in their blood.

In their study of 106 HIV-positive infants, the scientists discovered that those with especially high levels of the virus in the first few months of life were at higher risk of the disease progressing rapidly. "Early antiviral treatment should be of some use in this subgroup of children," wrote the scientists in the New England Journal of Medicine.

In a second study, Dr. John L. Sullivan and colleagues at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center, along with other researchers, showed that a combination of three antiviral drugs controlled HIV infection in two infants who began the treatment within 2-1/2 months of birth, with no harmful side effects.

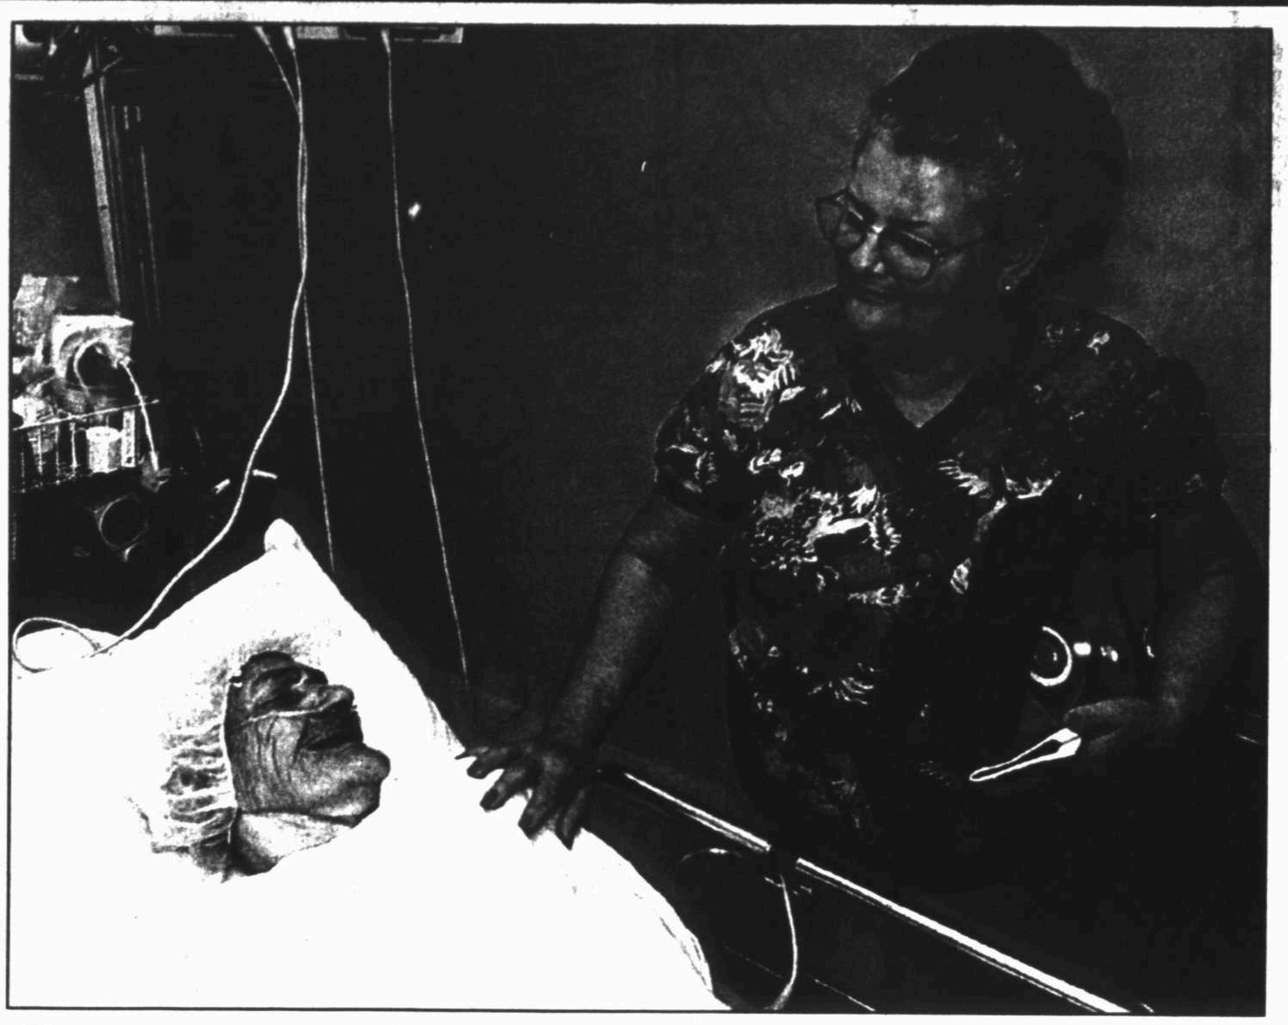

The findings "suggest that therapy with potent combinations of antiretroviral drugs should be started as early as possible" — probably within the first two to four weeks, the authors wrote.

Lives saved

In only five years, the rate of Sudden Infant Death Syndrome, or SIDS, in infants has declined 31 percent as a result of awareness that babies should be put to sleep on their backs, researchers reported.

Scientists from Thomas Jefferson University Hospital in Philadelphia said the SIDS decline began in 1992 when the American Academy of Pediatrics recommended that infants be placed on their backs, in light of findings that the face-down position was associated with more deaths.

Juan Ramos, 116, laughs with his friend, Maria Mora, just before his cataract surgery on May 17 at St. Joseph's Hospital. Cataract surgery opens eyes of 116-year-old

By Lisa Holewa

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — At 116, Juan Ramos had lived in the dark for nearly 30 years, able to see blurry images only if he was within a few inches of his television screen.

After cataract surgery — which some doctors said he was too old to have — a world Ramos hadn't seen clearly since the 1960s opened up to him. And with his 117th birthday later this month, Ramos has a lot to look forward to.

"The stars, the sky, my brothers, my friends ... everything there is to see," he said.

Ramos, who emigrated from Cuba just three years ago, lost one eye in an accident and the other was so badly clouded by a cataract that he was considered legally blind.

Doctors performed surgery last month and removed his eye patch the day after the operation.

Ramos, who previously could barely perceive light, gazed around his doctor's office and recognized Maria Mora, the woman he considers his granddaughter. She burst into tears.

His eye was swollen and tender because his cataract was so thick that Dr. Ben Perez and his brother, Dr. Don Perez, had to cut and stitch the eye. But he could see faces, colors and shapes.

"Hopefully, in the next few days things will turn around and he'll start seeing clearly," Ben Perez said. "For him, this is a big jump. And it's only going to get better."

Ramos was born June 24, 1880, in San Juan, Puerto Rico. He moved to Cuba with his parents when he was 8. He took jobs cutting sugar cane and growing coffee.

Ramos came to the United States three years ago, and lives with Ms. Mora, 54. Ramos was married to Ms. Mora's grandmother and raised his wife's children after she died.

The thin, wizened man has written poetry since childhood and speaks in rhyming Spanish. His conversation is punctuated with impromptu love songs.

But his age, poverty and language barrier kept him largely confined to home, where he spent his days standing inches in front of the TV screen.

"He would say, 'If I only had better vision, if I only had eyesight,' " Ben Perez said.

Ramos considered having the surgery when he first arrived in America, but doctors discouraged him because of his age. Then a neighbor took him to see the Perez brothers.

When they first considered doing the cataract surgery, Ben Perez asked how old Ramos was: "He said, 'I stopped counting when I reached 100.' "

Perez checked the medical records and learned his new patient was 116.

"His eyes have seen so much, so many things in life," he said. "It's a force, an experience just to be around him."

Before his surgery, Ramos had been in the hospital only one other time — when he lost his eye.

He clearly enjoyed the attention he received, holding court as television news crews hovered around his bed at St. Joseph's Hospital, waiting for the dramatic moment the patch was removed.

"Everyone is always telling me I need to rest at my age," he told the Tampa Tribune. "Forget the rest. I don't need it. If I did, I wouldn't be this age."

Protect young eyes against damaging summer sunshine

By Dr. Robert Cykiert
Associated Press

You're aware of the need to protect your child's skin from the damaging rays of the sun, but what about shielding their eyes? Adults commonly wear sunglasses to protect their eyes against the sun. But while children's eyes are more sensitive to exposure, a child is far less likely to wear sunglasses.

Young eyes that are left unprotected can be damaged by sun exposure. The main culprits are UVA and UVB rays, the same ultraviolet lights that cause sunburned skin. UVB waves mainly produce redness and superficial burning, but UVA can cause deep damage.

Eyes can also suffer the same kind of skin damage as skin. This is most commonly seen on the white part of the eyes, which are not shielded by the eyelids. Sun injury may appear as a horizontal red stripe with mild yellow discoloration over the middle part of the eye when the eyelids are held apart.

The cornea — the clear bubble that covers the center of the eye and pupil — does not normally contain blood vessels and so does not have this kind of burn reaction. However, sun-injury to the cornea and its underlying structures may result in a growth over the cornea, which may cause mild, chronic irritation, that may require surgical removal.

Some doctors believe that sun exposure may also cause problems down the line in adulthood. For example, there is confirmation that exposure to large amounts of UV light, especially penetrating UVA waves, can increase the chance of cataracts, a clouding of the clear part of the lens at the center of the iris.

A good pair of sunglasses can protect children's eyes, but be careful when selecting the glasses since many lenses do not provide sufficient UV blocking capacity. Look for a label that says the glasses block 99 percent or 100 percent of ultraviolet rays, or have a UV absorption of up to 400 nm.

There is no connection between the darkness of the sunglass lenses and the UV protection they provide. Eyes are protected from UV rays by a special chemical that is added to the lens when it is made. Dark, polarized or mirrored lenses without UV protection may cause more damage than not wearing sunglasses at all by causing the pupil to become larger and permitting more UV light to get into the eye.

Sunglasses do not protect against short-term high intensity exposures; so it's important to teach children not to look directly at the sun.

In addition to ensuring that children wear proper sunglasses, following the rules used to protect the skin will likewise protect the eyes. For example, try to avoid direct sunlight during peak intensity, between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. And have youngsters wear hats with brims that shade their eyes.

Sunscreen terminology explained

By Patricia Wen
N.Y. Times News Service

Here are some of the terms you'll find on sunscreen labels this summer, plus safety tips on how to enjoy the sun:

- SPF: Sun Protection Factor indicates how long you can stay in the sun without skin redness. If you usually turn red after 30 minutes in the sun, an SPF 15 product, used properly, should protect you for 7-1/2 hours. Measures protection against UVB rays only.
- UVB: Ultraviolet B rays are the chief cause of sunburn, as well as premature wrinkling and skin cancer.
- UVA: This form of ultraviolet light, with wavelengths longer than UVBs, was thought to be less damaging, but research shows UVA causes wrinkling and perhaps skin cancer.
- UVA screens: There are many kinds of UVA protectors. Common ingredients include titanium dioxide; zinc oxide; dioxybenzone; oxybenzone; octyl (ethylhexyl) methoxycinnamate; sulisobenzone; avobenzone.
- PABA-free: PABA, or para-aminobenzoic acid, is a highly effective sunscreen, once commonly used. Some people had allergic reactions to it, and many manufacturers have stopped using it. Some dermatologists say such allergies are rare and still recommend PABA.
- Waterproof: Indicates that a sunscreen's effectiveness remains after 80 minutes in the water.
- Water-resistant: Means the product remains fully effective after 40 minutes in the water.
- Sunscreen: A term for products that absorb or block UV rays, with chemicals or minerals.
- Sunblock: A product that works by physically blocking the ultraviolet rays. Sunblocks also should have at least an SPF 12. The most common block is titanium dioxide, a mineral.
- Expiration dates: Not all sunscreens carry expiration dates. If a manufacturer can show the product's effectiveness is stable for three years, it can omit an expiration date.

TIPS FOR SUN SAFETY

- Minimize exposure to sun between 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.
- Do not use sunscreen on babies under 6 months old; keep them in the shade. After 6 months of age, children and adults are advised to use a sunscreen with at least an SPF 15. Researchers say regular use of sunscreen in childhood can reduce common skin cancers by almost 80 percent.
- Wear protective clothing.
- Reapply sunscreen every two hours, more often if you go into the water or sweat a lot.
- The average adult should use 1 ounce of sunscreen per total body application.
- Dermatologists urge parents to start children early in good sun protection habits. Children should assume sunscreen goes on anytime they go in the sun, much as they brush their teeth at bedtime.

Institute focuses on women's health, gender differences

By Beth J. Harpaz
Associated Press

NEW YORK — When Bonadel Enloe collapsed in a store and found she couldn't use her arms and legs, doctors said the 66-year-old woman was depressed.

Her daughter called Dr. Marianne Legato, an internist who has written several books on women's health, and described her mother's symptoms. "Your mother has a brain aneurysm," she said.

The diagnosis proved correct.

Legato uses the story to illustrate the problems women often face when physicians dismiss their symptoms as hormonal, emotional or imagined.

Now she has formed an organization she hopes will help change the way women are diagnosed and treated: The Partnership for Women's Health, sponsored by Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons with financial support from Procter & Gamble.

The partnership will study "the science of how normal human biology differs between men and women, and of how the manifestations, mechanisms and treatment of disease vary as a function of gender," Legato said at a news conference earlier this year.

The partnership has already set up a Web site answering common questions about women's health. It is also started a database called Genspec featuring the latest medical studies involving women or emphasizing differences in how men and women manifest disease and respond to treatment.

Legato calls the field of study "gender-based medicine."

Dr. Vivian Pinn, director of the National Institutes of Health's Office of Research on Women's Health, said the partnership's goal of establishing a clearinghouse for information was greatly needed.

"We can do all the research in the world we want, but if it doesn't reach the practicing health care provider and the consumer, we're not going to make a difference," Pinn said.

Legato said the partnership will also identify areas where more research is needed and try to match corporate funding with capable scientists. Procter & Gamble is starting the research off with $1 million for two studies, one on how gender differences in heart cell membranes may affect cardiac rhythm, and the second on how sex hormones in men and women affect bone metabolism and osteoporosis.

The partnership will also try to collect data and spur research on why women live longer than men; why women are more likely to develop autoimmune diseases like lupus; differences in how men and women metabolize certain drugs like valium; differences in saliva flow rates, which may have implications for tooth and gum disease; and differences in brain tissue, which may influence mood, behavior and a variety of disorders.

For years, many clinical trials for drugs and other treatments were carried out on men without consideration that women might respond differently. Federally funded clinical studies must now include women, and the American Medical Association's policies state that "results of medical testing done solely on males should not be generalized to females without evidence that results apply equally to both genders."

"How do you know there is a difference?" asked Pinn. "In some cases we don't know. The whole scientific approach here is to give us more knowledge."

Legato would also like to see the average woman's health concerns taken more seriously by practicing physicians.

For women like Bonadel Enloe, whose aneurysm was misdiagnosed as depression, that will make a tremendous difference.

"If that had been a man who collapsed and couldn't move," she said, recalling her ordeal, "I'm sure they would have moved heaven and earth to find out what was wrong with him."

The website for Partnership for Women's Health is http://www.pg.com/womenhealth.

RAPID CITY, S.D. — UNLV's Preston Williams won the men's all-around title in the College National Finals Rodeo on Sunday, combining with Scottsdale's Cody Willson to take the team roping crown.

Williams finished with 182.5 points, 17.5 more than runner-up Rusty Allen of Weber State. Weber State's Kelli Fowers, the goat tying champion, took the women's all-around title with 375 points.

Panhandle State took the men's team title with 703.33 points, followed by Southwestern Oklahoma State at 622.5 and Dickinson State at 565. Weber State topped the women's standings with 747.5, followed by Montana with 490.

Brian Duggar of Odessa College was the only rider to score Sunday in bull riding, recording a 77 for a four-ride total of 289 points.

In other events, National College's Erick Blanton took the bareback title, teammate Jeff Decker won the saddle bronc championship, Murray State's Jerome Schneeberger took the calf roping competition, Southeastern Oklahoma State's Caryn Snyder and West Hills' Toni Arave tied in breakaway roping, McNeese State's Gus Ledoux took the steer wrestling title, and Montana's Rachael Myllymaki topped the barrel racing competition.

Player arrested

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Julian Pittman, projected to be Florida State's starting noseguard this season, faces burglary and credit card theft charges after a weekend break-in at a woman's apartment.

The 21-year-old senior was Seminoles' top backup noseguard last season and was seventh on the team in total tackles.

Pittman is accused of breaking into a woman's apartment with another man about 4:20 a.m. Saturday, taking the woman's credit cards from her purse and leaving in a sport utility vehicle, Tallahassee Police Lt. David Brand said.

Brand said when the woman heard someone come in through a window, she locked herself in a closet and called police. Witnesses described the men and their vehicle to police and the woman's roommate told officers Pittman fit the description of one of the men.

When police went to Pittman's apartment they found the woman's credit cards and receipts from a convenience store where they were used to buy food, Brand said.

Bailey loses

MOSCOW — Donovan Bailey lost a soggy 100-meter run to Nigeria's Davidson Ezinwa on Sunday.

The Canadian sprinter and world record-holder, who won a showdown with Michael Johnson of the United States a week ago, finished at 10.28 seconds to Ezinwa's 10.20.

The race, in the IAFF Znamesky Memorial Grand Prix meet, began moments after a torrential thunderstorm abated.

Igor Kovac of Slovakia took the 110 meters in a photo finish with Tony Jarrett of Great Britain. Both were clocked at 13:45.

In another tight finish, Kenya's David Kiptoo won the men's 800 meters in 1:44.57, just 500th of a second ahead of Hendrik Moganyetsi of South Africa.

Former Odessan wins first Amateur

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

It might be considered fitting that a one-time West Texan walked away with the 88th Annual Texas Golf Association Men's Amateur Championship.

Fitting because for four days, Midland Country Club — and West Texas in general — gave many challenges to the field in its return to MCC after a 26-year hiatus. Fitting because former Odessa resident Ed Brooks has seen it before, and after a final round 67 on Sunday, he can say he conquered it to win his first Amateur title.

University of Texas golfer Brad Elder, who placed second at the NCAA Championships last week, missed a 12-foot putt on the final hole that could have forced a playoff with eventual champion Ed Brooks.
Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram

"I have won a lot but nothing as big as the Texas State Amateur," said Brooks, a former West Texas Amateur champion. "There is nothing as big as this in Texas amateur golf."

Brooks shot a four-round total of 281 (7-under-par) to defeat Plano's Brad Elder by one stroke. Dallas' Chip Stewart and Dean Overturf finished third and fourth respectively, while John Grace and Ryan Palmer tied for fifth, five shots back.

Winning in West Texas was a rush, especially at MCC. This year's Amateur had five different leaders after four rounds, which gave a field loaded with past champions many different looks. Having seen what it did over the four days, that made it very special for the Georgetown resident.

"That is the icing on the cake," said Brooks, whose son Jason played for Midland College. "I have never seen an Amateur with 20 players (who had a shot to win the title at the beginning of the last day). That is a tribute to this fine championship golf course. It kept the golfers bunched up in a wad."

West Texas' biggest challenge to Brooks and the rest of the field were the torrential rains that fell over the area, drenching the course and turning the par-72 layout into a swamp, not a 7,354-yard challenge. For five hours and 15 minutes,

'Guga' ga-ga over French title

■ Brazilian Gustavo Kuerten, nicknamed "Guga," becomes the lowest-ranked player to ever win a Grand Slam title.

By Robin Finn
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — He grew up on a subtropical island, so it is no wonder that he moonlights as a beach bum. But Brazil's Gustavo Kuerten also loves his day job as a globe-trotting tennis professional, and Sunday, just 49 matches into his adult career, he became the lowest-ranked player to capture the coveted French Open championship and the first man from his country to win a Grand Slam event.

A less than stellar surfer, Kuerten is used to craving the big waves only to have them crunch him. But here at Roland Garros, the shaggy-haired string bean, nicknamed "Guga," caught a wave that took off.

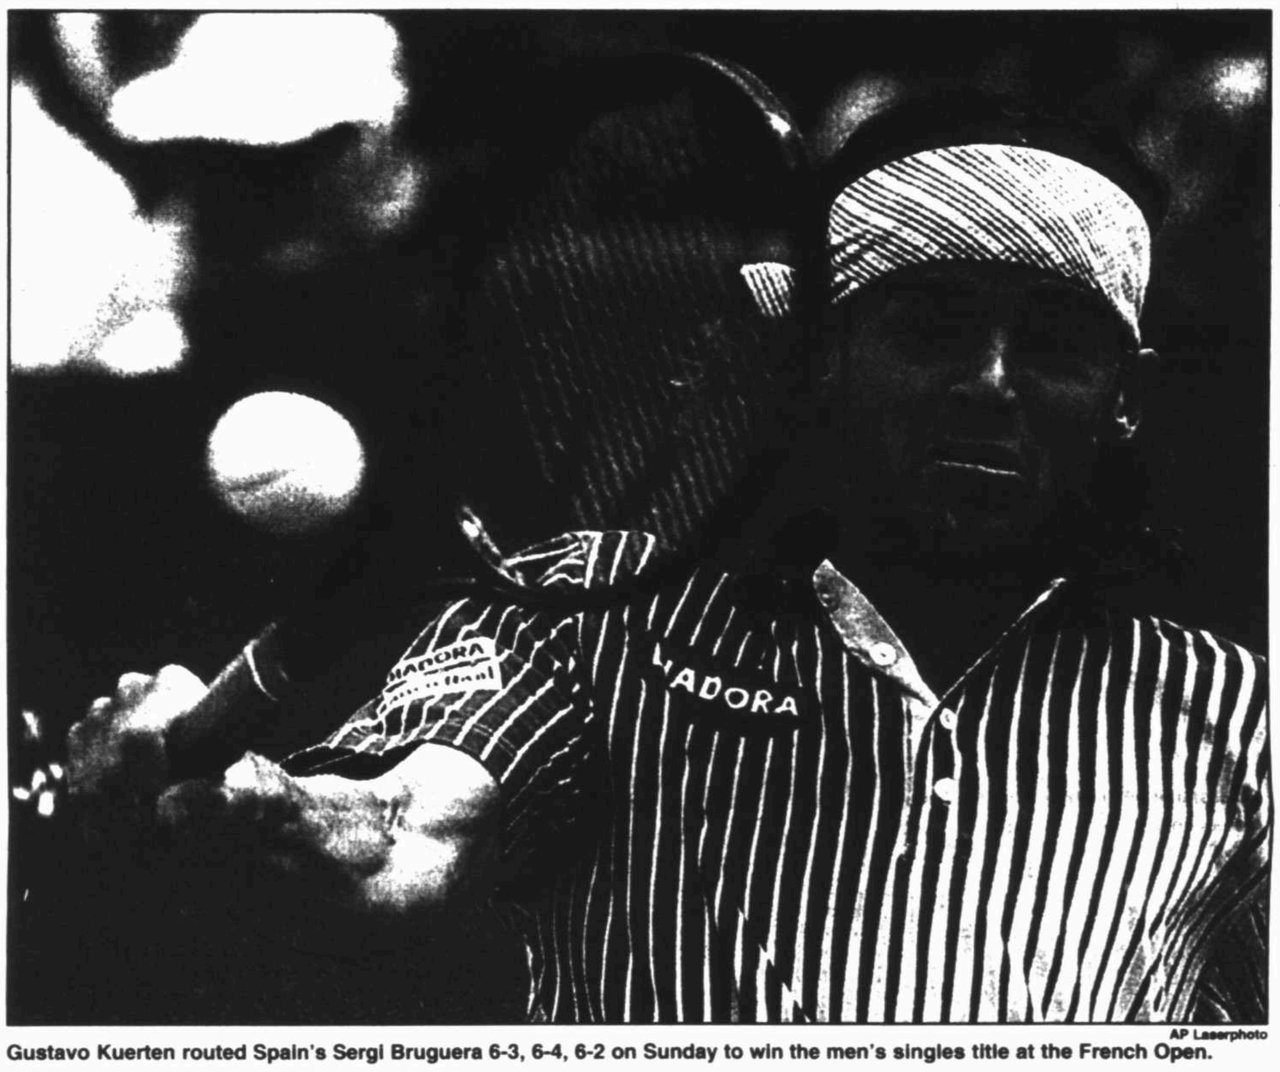

Within a two-week span, he dunked three former French Open champions, with the third victim, two-time champion Sergi Bruguera, succumbing Sunday, 6-3, 6-4, 6-2.

Just like that, the 66th-ranked beachcomber had become only the second man in tennis history to make his first significant title a Grand Slam triumph.

"I was just trying to hit the ball harder and harder and harder, and everything was doing well, so I didn't think, 'Wow, this is a final,' " Kuerten, 20, said of his free-spirited, free-swinging upset victory. "Before the match, I really think that I could have won, but I didn't think I could win like that."

The Brazilian, having never won a major tournament before, had to be instructed in the art of shaking a celebratory bottle of Champagne after his Mother of all battles

For several women, WWTGA could put family ties to test

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

Depending on your point of view, the golf course is a good place to either help bind or seriously fray family ties.

For nine pairs of women, the next five days at Green Tree Country Club will test that canard about blood being thicker than water.

The Women's West Texas Golf Association 63rd Annual Championship, with qualifying rounds starting today at 8 a.m., will feature five pairs of mothers and daughters along with three mother and daughter-in-law pairs and even a grandmother and granddaughter who will be competing for individual supremacy in the match play format.

In at least two cases, daughters have made the most of the golfing genes they inherited. Snyder's Penny Perry, who won the tournament in 1982 and '92, is playing with her mother Sharon Hughes of Farwell. And defending champion Robin Madison of Amarillo (who also won in 1987) will be playing with her mother Thurlene Madison.

As far as Perry is concerned, it all started with her mother.

"I learned everything," said Perry, of the extent to which her mother helped shape her game. "I went to some pros but Mom was always there every time because she knows my swing so well."

Perry used those early lessons from her mother to make the varsity team at Farwell High and eventually play at Texas A&M in 1981 and '82. In those days she was still Penny Hughes and she won her first WWTGA title under that name. Twice, in fact, she had to play a familiar opponent in the championship flight to advance — Sharon Hughes.

Both times Penny won, but not without her mom showing her how she got that far to begin with. Penny needed the full 18 holes to win one time and the pair needed a 19th hole to decide it another.

Malone, Stockton come through; Jazz rebound

■ NBA Finals: Game 4

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

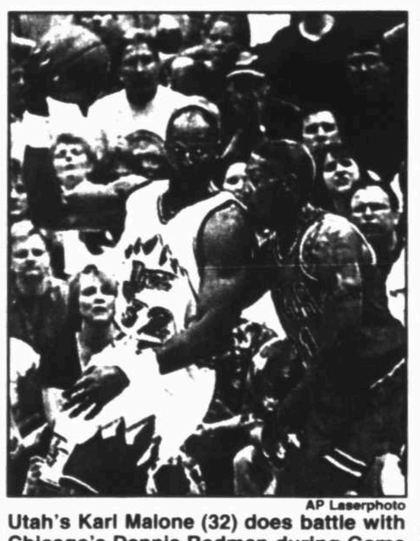

SALT LAKE CITY — Talk about special deliveries.

Karl Malone finally came through from the foul line — the same spot where he had failed so miserably a week before — and John Stockton airmailed an incredible full-court pass to Malone for a layup that gave the Utah Jazz the lead for good in a 78-73 victory over the Chicago Bulls on Sunday night.

It evened the NBA Finals at two games apiece and gave the Jazz a chance to go for a 3-2 lead on their home court in Game 5 Wednesday night.

And in a way, it all came down to two foul shots by Malone — just like Game 1 did the previous Sunday when Malone went to the line in the closing seconds with a chance to break a tie game and put Utah in position for an upset.

But after Pippen walked over and told him "The Mailman doesn't deliver on Sunday," Malone missed both shots and Jordan won the game on a buzzer-beating 21-footer.

AP Laserphoto
Utah's Karl Malone (32) does battle with Chicago's Dennis Rodman during Game 4 in the NBA Finals on Sunday.

The circumstances weren't exactly the same this time — Utah led by one and the fans were quiet rather than screaming — but Pippen tried to do what he could to make history repeat itself.

"I knew what he was doing, trying to talk to me," Malone said. "He still talked to me the whole time I was shooting."

With Malone stepping to the line with 17 seconds left to take the first shot, Pippen tried to walk over and say something but had his path blocked by Utah's Jeff Hornacek. Pippen went into rebounding position and yelled "Karl!, Karl!" at Malone, but the MVP didn't respond.

"Usually I think about faraway places, but this time I thought about 650 million people watching all over the world," Malone said. "I won't lie to you. That's what I thought about the whole time."

The ball went to Michael Jordan, of course, outside the 3-point line. He dribbled right, left his feet and tried to square himself in the air, and the 23-footer looked good while it was in the air.

But it bounced in and out, Malone rebounded and Bryon Russell went in for an uncontested dunk that finished things.

"Sometimes in life you wish for a similar opportunity. As a player, when things don't go well you wish you had another chance. I was able to get that chance, so it was sort of neat," Malone said.

The series will resume with the Jazz looking to become the first team ever to take a 3-2 lead over Chicago in the final round. As it is, they are the first team since Portland in 1992 to be tied with the Bulls after four games.

And their latest victory might just convince them that they have a legitimate chance at the championship, even though they'll need to win at least one game in Chicago.

It was the second-lowest scoring game in NBA Finals history, and the Jazz won it in part by holding the Bulls without a point over the final two minutes and scoring the game's last nine points.

When it was over, Malone ran over and hugged coach Jerry Sloan for several seconds in an emotional display of the vindication Malone obviously felt after making his final two foul shots.

"It was one of those things I'll always remember and will never repeat," Malone said of what was spoken between him and Sloan during their embrace.

Malone ended up with 23 points, 10 rebounds and six assists, but he might not have been the MVP of this game despite his two late free throws and eight fourth-quarter points.

Kile wins 6th straight, Astros romp

Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

SAN DIEGO — Darryl Kile is still in his May mode.

Kile pitched a five-hit shutout to win his sixth straight decision and the Houston Astros had three homers off Fernando Valenzuela as they beat the San Diego Padres 9-0 Sunday.

Kile (7-2) beat the Padres at Houston on May 29 to complete a 5-0 month. After getting a no-decision in Houston's 4-3, 10-inning win against Los Angeles on Tuesday, he returned to the win column.

"It wasn't the game where I had my best stuff, but I had my best command," Kile said. "I had a clear idea of what I wanted to do. Fortunately, my game plan was right and things worked out."

The thing that impressed manager Larry Dierker was that Kile was still throwing 93-94 mph in the ninth inning.

"If it's not a game like this, you don't have to worry about whether he was getting tired," Dierker said. "If he's pitching great, leave him in. It's nice to have a guy like that in your rotation."

Valenzuela, meanwhile, was throwing 84 mph in the sixth inning, when he gave up consecutive homers to Tony Eusebio and James Mouton.

Kile said he threw fastballs and sinkers away in beating the Padres in Houston.

"Today I threw changeups away and tried to keep them off balance and threw fastballs in. Next time I face them, I'll have to make another adjustment. It was just one of those days where I had command of the pitches I needed to make and we scored a lot of runs."

The right-hander allowed four singles and a double in pitching his second shutout and complete game this season. He threw a four-hitter in beating Florida 1-0 on May 4 to start his winning streak.

Cardinals 9, Dodgers 3

LOS ANGELES — Tom Lampkin, Royce Clayton and Delino DeShields homered as St. Louis beat Los Angeles, sending the feuding Dodgers to their ninth loss in 12 games.

For the second time in four days, a Dodger starting pitcher got into a confrontation with manager Bill Russell in the dugout. This time, it was Pedro Astacio, who lost his fifth straight decision in a span of six starts.

After Lampkin led off the fourth with his third homer, giving St. Louis a 5-0 cushion, Russell went to the mound and had an animated conversation with Astacio (3-5).

The right-hander retired the next three batters, then sprinted into the dugout and slammed his glove against the bench. Moments later, Astacio got into a heated exchange with Russell and had to be physically restrained by third-base coach Joe Amalfitano.

Phillies 3, Pirates 2

PITTSBURGH — Philadelphia earned a rare road victory the way it usually does, with Curt Schilling pitching, and Ruben Amaro's RBI single finished off a three-run seventh.

Schilling (8-5) shook off Mark Johnson's second home run in six weeks, a two-run drive in the second, to allow five hits in eight innings. He struck out 11 and improved to 6-1 with a 2.21 ERA in seven road starts.

Expos 5, Cubs 4

MONTREAL — Mike Lansing's one-out double capped a two-run rally in the ninth inning for Montreal.

The Expos, who have won three straight, trailed 4-3 when rookie Ryan McGuire hit an infield single off Terry Adams (0-3). One out later, F.P. Santangelo hit an RBI double and Lansing followed with a double — his third hit — just inside the third-base bag.

Anthony Teleford (2-0) pitched two perfect innings of relief.

Rockies 7, Marlins 2
Marlins 9, Rockies 1

DENVER — Alex Fernandez pitched six shutout innings and struck out 10 Colorado batters, and Moises Alou had four RBIs to lead Florida to a rain-shortened victory and a split of the doubleheader.

Threatening weather plagued the three-game series for the third straight day. The nightcap was delayed by rain for 1 hour, 17 minutes after seven innings before it was called.

Fernandez, who allowed just one hit in the first five innings, gave up two singles in the sixth. But Walt Weiss was erased when Eric Young lined into a double play.

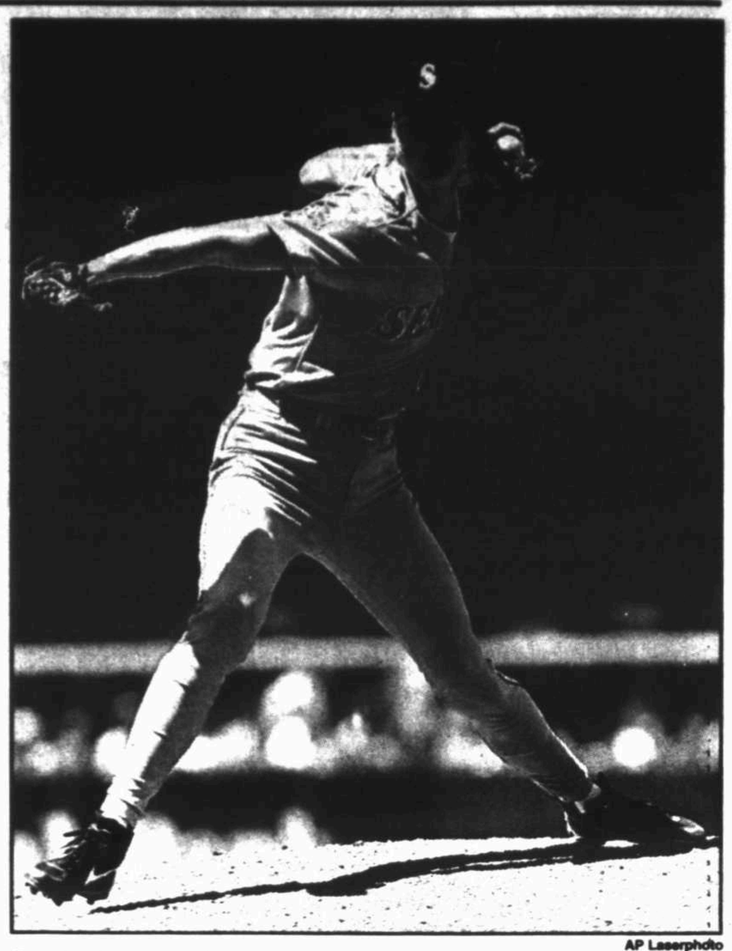

Andres Galarraga drove in three runs and John Burke pitched six shutout innings as Colorado won the first game of a day-night doubleheader. The game was delayed 54 minutes by rain and a tornado warning at the end of the fifth inning.

Giants 5, Braves 3

SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Bonds broke out of a slump by homering twice and Jeff Kent homered and hit a tiebreaking single in the eighth.

John Smoltz (6-5), last year's NL Cy Young Award winner, was tagged by the Giants for five runs and eight hits, including three homers in seven-plus innings. The loss snapped Atlanta's four-game winning streak.

Bonds, batting just .188 in his previous eight games, twice pulled the Giants into ties with his first two-homer game of the season. His two-out solo shot in the sixth made it 3-all. It was his 10th homer of the season and hit the scoreboard hanging from the upper deck.

Seattle pitcher Randy Johnson pitched a one-hitter through eight innings, striking out 15, in the Mariners 2-0 win over the Detroit Tigers Sunday.

Johnson dominates Tigers in near no-no

Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

DETROIT — Randy Johnson, dominating hitters like he'd never had a back problem, took a no-hitter into the eighth inning and struck out 15 Sunday as the Seattle Mariners defeated the Detroit Tigers 2-0.

Johnson (9-1) gave up a leadoff single to Phil Nevin in the eighth — the only hit he allowed in eight innings — and extended his scoreless streak to 29 innings.

Johnson won the 1995 AL Cy Young Award, but was limited to only eight starts last year because of back problems. He underwent offseason surgery, wasn't the Johnson of old during spring training.

But in going 5-0 in his last six starts, the 6-foot-10 left-hander has never looked better. In his previous outing, he took a no-hitter into the sixth inning against Toronto and finished with a two-hit shutout; before that, he struck out 15 in eight innings against Texas.

Red Sox 12, Indians 6

BOSTON — Boston scored nine runs in the fourth, their most productive inning in nearly three years, and overcame Cleveland's base-stealing flurry.

Cleveland built a 5-0 lead after three innings with the help of six stolen bases, including three by Matt Williams. The slugger had a total of five the past four years before running wild against the Red Sox.

But Boston ripped Chad Ogea (5-5) and took the lead in the fourth on seven hits, two walks and an error. It was their biggest inning since they scored 10 against Toronto on June 21, 1994.

Joe Hudson (1-0), called up from the minors earlier Sunday, pitched three shutout innings in relief of Jeff Suppan.

Athletics 7, Blue Jays 5

TORONTO — Mark McGwire hit his 24th home run and Geronimo Berroa had a three-run shot for Oakland.

McGwire hit a two-run homer in the third off Luis Andujar (0-2) that caromed off the third-level windows in SkyDome, an estimated 436 feet. It was McGwire's 20th career homer against the Blue Jays, his fewest against any club.

Don Wengert (3-3) didn't allow the Blue Jays a hit until the sixth inning and benefited from Oakland's early runs.

Trailing 7-0 in the fourth, the Blue Jays closed within two runs in the ninth before Billy Taylor struck out Alex Gonzalez with the bases loaded.

Yankees 3, Brewers 1

NEW YORK — Paul O'Neill hit a two-run homer and Tino Martinez had a solo shot leading David Cone and New York to a three-game sweep.

The Yankees have won six of eight. The Brewers have lost four straight overall and seven in a row at Yankees Stadium.

Cone (7-3) struck out nine in seven innings and allowed seven hits. He fanned eight in the first four innings.

Angels 8, Twins 6

MINNEAPOLIS — Tim Salmon homered in the sixth inning, then doubled during a five-run rally in the seventh.

Salmon's solo homer brought the Angels within 6-3. Anaheim loaded the bases with two outs in the seventh and Salmon blooped a two-run double off Mike Trombley (1-1).

Garret Anderson followed with a two-run single, giving the Angels a 7-6 lead, and Eddie Murray hit an RBI double.

Anaheim beat the Twins for just the third time in in nine games this season.

Dennis Springer (4-2) was the winner despite giving up six runs and six hits in six innings.

Orioles 2, White Sox 1

CHICAGO — Jimmy Key won his 10th game with seven strong inning as Baltimore avoided its first three-game losing streak this season.

Key (10-1) gave up six hits and struck out a season-high nine, including Albert Belle twice looking. The left-hander lowered his ERA to 2.56 and is second in the AL in wins to Toronto's Roger Clemens, who has 11.

Armando Benitez was perfect in 1 1-3 innings of relief, and Randy Myers got two outs for his 19th save in 20 opportunities.

Danny Darwin (2-3) gave up eight hits in 7 1-3 innings.

Frank Thomas, the American League's leading hitter, was sidelined for the second straight game by a strained stomach muscle.

Royals 4, Rangers 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jose Offerman had his eighth multi-hit game in nine starts and doubled during a four-run second inning for Kansas City.

The Rangers' third straight loss matched their longest skid this season. Texas, which had either held or been shared first place in the AL West since May 16, fell one game behind Seattle.

The Royals won their third in a row, tying the best streak of the year.

Tim Belcher (7-6) got his second straight victory, going six innings and allowing six hits and two runs.

Ken Hill (4-4) gave up seven hits and four runs in five innings.

TGA: Brooks, 48, claims first Amateur title

weather updates, not the golf tournaments, were the focal point of those choosing to stay and those having to think about leaving early. When play resumed at 5 p.m., 17 golfers had to leave the tournament, but most of the names returned to do battle, making this the closest TGA Amateur in recent memory.

Brooks, who was on the top of his game going in to the rain delay, did not want to leave as he was two shots back of then leader and playing partner, Elder.

"How fate makes a funny twist?" Brooks said. "Someone said if they canceled it you would be tied for third. At 48 (years of age), I wouldn't have too many more times, so I stayed."

Brooks said his play on holes 2-6 had him feeling that his game was on, and despite not having that same feeling when he came back, it was still good enough.

He birdied No. 8, to complete a front nine of 34, but his stretch of four birdies on No. 11-14 gave him what he needed. That started with a chip in from off the green on 11. Then, he made putts of 20, 25 and two feet on the next three holes to move to 8-under par.

"I hit a good chip and it went into the hole. That was uplifting," Brooks said. "I tried to make every putt and hit aggressive shots. I told my caddie (Odessa's Larry Hensley) at the beginning of the round 'With 20 golfers, all good and all close, I can't play conservative. I've got to be aggressive.' There was no holding back."

With a three-shot lead over Elder, the 1995 champion, it looked as though the Amateur trophy was his. But as Brooks said, "Ol' momentum has no allegiance" and when he bogeyed 17 and Elder birdied it, Brooks' lead was down to one shot with one hole to go.

Brooks again had a challenge with a long iron, but that challenge was answered as his second shot landed just before the green and trickled on. That put the pressure on Elder, who responded with a pitch shot to 12 feet. Brooks, who was 45 feet from the hole, two putted. Elder, who lost a playoff to place second in the NCAA tournament last week, also two putted, preventing any playoff redemption.

"I played good solid golf," said Elder. "Ed just played better. He made birdies on the back and I didn't. A 67 in these conditions is a good round of golf."

But Brooks' second shot on 18 was important and maybe a signal that the day was his. The ball came within a foot of landing in a puddle that would certainly have kept his ball 20 yards from the green. It didn't.

"I was lucky to hold him off," Brooks said. "Momentum was on his side. The lie I had (on the second shot at 18) was just not fun and I probably hit my best shot of the day. At age 48, I don't have many chances left. There was pressure on the backside."

Elder said after the tournament that this would probably be his last Amateur, because the senior-to-be at the University of Texas will likely turn pro before next year's tournament.

One person who will be in at the 89th edition of the Amateur is Midland's Trey Womack. The first-round leader, finished tied for eighth to guarantee him a spot in next year's field at Lufkin's Crown Colony Country Club, rated the best course in Texas. The top 10 and any tied get automatic exemptions.

Womack, whose first round 66 is the tournament's best single-round score, said the tournament was a good experience for him. Ending with a even-par 72 didn't hurt, even though he thought could have been better.

"I played pretty good today except for the two lost balls," Womack said. "That was four penalty shots. It is hard for a golfer like me to recover from four penalty shots."

Womack, who honed his game on the "Little Barbecue Circuit" of West Texas, learned from the week: what to do and not to do. Now he is ready for some time off.

"I don't want to play golf for a while," an exhausted Womack said. "That was good playing for me and I played with good golfers. I found out a lot about my game and gaged it against the best players. It was a fun week and tiring week."

Final scores Sunday in the 88th Annual Texas Golf Association's Amateur Championship, played on the par-72, 7,354-yard course at the Midland Country Club:

FAMILY: WWTGA holds qualifying round today

(From 1C)

"She'd better beat me," Sharon Hughes said of her daughter. "She's a better golfer than I am."

That's the inevitable rite of passage for an offspring reaching her athletic peak while the abilities of the parent begin to plateau. The only thing a parent can do at that point is root for the child.

"When I finally did pass (Hughes) she was real encouraging," Perry said.

That hardly means that all of Hughes' best golfing days are behind her. Last year at Amarillo's Tascosa Country Club, she shot well enough to qualify for the championship flight of the WWTGA.

Hughes isn't the only mother who has been able to keep up with her daughter in recent years. Snyder's Anita Talbott won the second flight of the WWTGA last year, and one year her daughter, Lisa Beck of Midland, made the semifinals of the championship flight.

Talbott and Beck found themselves in a similar situation to Perry and Hughes several years ago at the WWTGA in Wichita Falls. They were scheduled to face each other in the first flight, but Beck had to scratch because her mother-in-law became ill.

"I don't remember feeling too badly about (not playing against her mother)," said Beck, immediately laughing as if to make light of the missed opportunity.

Despite her success in the WWTGA, Talbott still feels as if her daughter has surpassed her.

"She's a much better golfer," Talbott said of Beck. "She has only about a one handicap and I have a 10. When she was about a sophomore in high school she could probably beat me after that."

Beck, who says she learned the game from her stepfather, played at Snyder then went on to play at Texas Tech. She is now a member of Ranchland Hills Country Club.

The point of playing against her mother is enjoyment, not bragging rights, according to Beck.

"When I play (Talbott) it's just all fun," Beck said. "We're not very competitive against each other to tell the truth."

Hughes, though, likes to keep up with her daughter and makes no secret of it on the golf course.

"We're both so competitive and when we play, I try to hit every shot the way (Perry) does," Hughes said.

The other mother and daughter combos competing are Sue and Venus Lau of San Angelo and Donna Malcolm of Tulia and D'Lynn Killham of Amarillo. The mother and daughter-in-laws competing are Billie and Judy Bates of Odessa, Suzy and Stacy Reed of Snyder and LaNell Guelker of Andrews and Cindy Guelker of Amarillo. Grandmother Claudia Nunley and granddaughter Courtney Nickles of Amarillo are also competing.

JAZZ: Utah evens series behind Malone, Stockton

(From 1C)

That distinction would belong to Stockton, who made big play after big play over the final 2 1/2 minutes to lead Utah back from a five-point deficit.

Things looked bleak for the Jazz after Jordan went in for an uncontested fast-break dunk with 2:38 left to make it 71-66.

But Stockton calmly came downcourt, waited for a screen at the 3-point line and hit a 25-footer that re-energized the Jazz. Jordan scored on a 16-footer and Hornacek missed a runner, giving the ball back to Chicago.

Everyone knew where it was going, including Stockton. And when Jordan ended up with the ball at the top of the key, Stockton sneaked in and stripped it.

Stockton had a two-step head start, but Jordan caught him by the time he reached the basket and seemed to make a great block. But the officials called a foul and Stockton made one of two to pull Utah within three.

"I thought it was clean. They said I got him with the body," Jordan said.

Pippen then missed a corner jumper, Stockton was fouled and made both with 1:03 left to make the deficit one.

Then came one of the greatest plays ever made in crunch time of an NBA Finals game. Stockton rebounded a missed jumper by Jordan and fired a baseball pass all the way downcourt to Malone, who had kept running after trying to block Jordan's shot. The long pass caught Malone in stride and he converted the layup that put Utah ahead to stay, 74-73.

FRENCH: Kuerten gets past three former champions straight-set manifesto against a player generally acknowledged to possess some of the finest clay-court instincts in the game.

"I never won a title, that's why I don't know how to open Champagne," said the winner, who does know how to samba, and did one with his mother, Alice, and grandmother, Olga, after receiving his trophy from Bjorn Borg, a six-time French Open champion.

When the garrulous Kuerten, suddenly shy for the first time in two weeks, stumbled up to the podium for the presentation ceremony, he raised his arms above his head and then dipped toward the ground, kowtowing to Borg before accepting his congratulations.

"That was one big idol in tennis, much better than me," gushed the new champion, who prepared for this tournament by running home to Brazil and curing a disturbing slump on the regular tour by winning a small-scale satellite event at Curitiba. That tiny dose of confidence proved sufficient to inspire Kuerten, who, until now, had never passed the quarterfinal round of a Tour event anywhere in the world and who lost in the first round here last year.

This time, though, he knocked off fifth-seeded Thomas Muster in a riveting five-setter, dethroned defending champion Yevgeny Kafelnikov in another five-setter and then took care of Bruguera in just three sets.

"Muster is a great player, and I really had a little luck because he was leading in the fifth set," said Kuerten, who came back from a 3-0 deficit in the final set of that third-round marathon. "Kafelnikov was two sets to one against me, but he lost his concentration a little bit, and now, Bruguera, I just play so good, and I think he was maybe a little nervous."

Kuerten is believed to be the first Grand Slam event winner to upset three former champions en route to the title.

And in addition to receiving a paycheck of $660,000, roughly half a million more than he had won to date as a professional, Kuerten learned his ranking would jump some 50 spots and land him in the top 20.

"I win a very important tournament, a tournament that I really dream to win," said Kuerten, who dedicated his coup to his late father, Aldo, who died while umpiring a tennis event when Kuerten was 8.

Yankees claim Jr. League title

The Yankees won the City Championship of Midland's Junior League by defeating the Indians 14-3 in the title game. Scott Young and Madison Edwards combined to throw a three-hitter for the Yankees while Matt Morgan and Tony Madrid had three hits apiece. The Yankees, who finished the season 18-2, defeated the White Sox 20-3 and the Dodgers 7-5 to reach the championship game.

GTCC ace

Chris Johnson of Fort Worth scored a hole-in-one on the No. 6 hole on the West course at Green Tree Country Club. Johnson used a nine-iron for his ace on the 112-yard hole. The hole-in-one was witnessed by Jack Conner, Greg Conner and Bill Ward.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
HHHH You are thrown off by what goes on with partners and children. It is as if TNT went off somewhere, and you are catching the fragments. You could reverse a decision involving goals and a friendship. New information forces re-evaluation. Tonight: Have a good time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
HHH It is apparent that certain personal matters must take a higher priority. Deal with work. Somehow you feel that all is out of control. For the moment, you have your hands full. If you can slow the pace, it will help you make stronger decisions. Tonight: Make up for lost time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
HHHH Enlist your sense of humor to even out a difficult issue. Float with changes. Laugh at the unexpected, and be direct. Your ability to negotiate and understand comes into play. News that has been delayed finally arrives. Tonight: Hang out.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
HHH Carefully handle financial matters; there is an element of craziness. Get feedback on how to deal with money. An unexpected expense throws you off. A partner might make different choices, and lets you know it! Tonight: Negotiate a midpoint.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
HHHH You are personality-plus. Others act in an unforeseen manner, not certain of their boundaries. You feel like you received an extra jolt of caffeine this morning. Carefully consider a relationship. Be sure it is what you want. Tonight: Do whatever makes you happy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
HH The unexpected occurs when you least expect it. Nerves are frayed; you have had enough. Take time off from the hectic pace. Downtime may be just what the doctor ordered. Eliminate the red tape in your life. Tonight: Catch up on unopened mail.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
HHHH Challenges come from loved ones. What you have taken for granted becomes an issue. You shake your head, but you need to take a stronger stand. A friend gives you several brainy ideas that stimulate solutions. Think about what you want. Tonight: Head off with friends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
HH Once more, a family member causes an uproar. How you see what is happening and the choices you make are key to your future ease. Someone could be taking advantage of you. Listen carefully to someone in charge. Tonight: Mull over a persistent problem.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
HHHH You are stunned by what you hear. Work with the unexpected, and be direct with others. If you don't like something, let another know. Establishing limits is a must. You could be feeling iffy, and need to rethink a decision. Tonight: Be a listener, not a talker.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
HHHH One-to-one relating is key to making a decision. You don't see eye-to-eye with a business associate, and decide to pull out of your agreement. Do what is best for yourself. Security and self-confidence are linked. A friend means well. Tonight: Let another treat.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
HHHH You have a way of shaking up other people. Your perspective might not be unique; however, the way you carry out an idea is. You are more in control than you realize. Awareness brings opportunities. Be kind to a loved one who isn't feeling so good. Tonight: Say yes.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
HHH Focus on work. Tie up all those loose ends. What you thought was a brilliant project backfires on you. Carefully rethink your decisions. The unexpected makes you more aware, even if it shakes you up. Tonight: Get plenty of R&R.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q. 1 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠7 4 ♡6 ◇A K J 5 4 ♣A 10 7 6 2

Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?

A - Your hand has so much playing strength that a response of one diamond followed by a jump in clubs does not do it justice. Therefore, we suggest an immediate jump shift of two diamonds, followed by a club raise next.

Q. 2 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠A 6 5 ♡J 7 2 ◇J 9 3 ♣A 10 9 2

Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?

A - We dislike a single raise of partner's suit with a hand containing two aces and a couple of jacks for good measure, but the balanced nature of this hand is unattractive. We would bid two spades, regardless of methods.

Q. 3 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠5 ♡A K 10 ◇A Q 7 6 ♣K Q 9 8 3

The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♠	Pass	1♠	Pass
2◇	Pass	2♡	Pass

What do you bid now?

A - Two no trump would be our second choice. We opt for completing a picture of the hand by raising to three hearts. Since you did not reverse into hearts, partner will read you for only three-card support.

Q. 4 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠6 3 ♡A K 6 ◇A J 10 3 ♣Q J 5 2

Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What action do you take?

A - The only bid that comes into consideration is one no trump. However, you have no good source of tricks and a dead minimum for this action, hence no margin of safety should West now double for penalties. We think a pass is clear cut.

Q. 5 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠Q 9 4 ♡A 9 7 6 2 ◇A 10 5 2 ♣6

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♠	Pass	2♡	Pass
2♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A - Regardless of whether you play a two-over-one response as game-forcing, we would now bid four spades. If it was a game force, the Principle of Fast Arrival denies slam interest. If it was not a game force, we think there are too many opening bids partner could have where a dead minimum will produce game, so the risk that partner might pass a mere raise to three spades is not worth taking.

Q. 6 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠K 8 6 ♡8 7 3 ◇6 2 ♣J 7 6 4 3

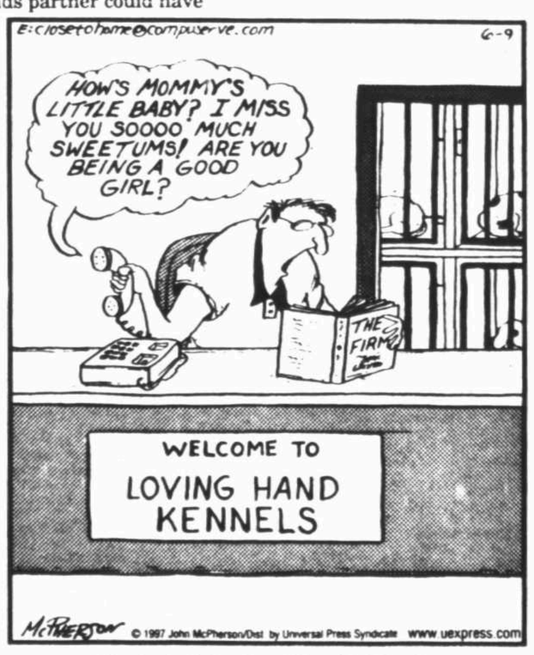

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♠	Pass	Pass	Dbl
2◇	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A - You don't have much of a hand, but it could easily be worth two playing tricks because of your top trump honor and ruffing value in diamonds. With partner marked for a six-card spade suit or better, we think a raise to three spades is clear — partner won't expect more from you because of your initial pass.

George Clooney says getting around in his Batman outfit is no easy chore

NEW YORK — The pointy ears, the flowing cape and the rubber bat-suit may look tough. What's really tough, according to George Clooney, is getting around in that get-up.

George Clooney makes his debut as Batman this summer.

"You feel like you're in 'Gone with the Wind,'" the star of "Batman and Robin" told US magazine for its July issue. "Mammy is behind you, lacing you up, and you're holding the bedpost and you're going 'Tighter!'"

Clooney follows Michael Keaton and Val Kilmer in donning the bat-suit for the Batman films.

The outfit weighs 45 pounds and is, to put it mildly, a little tight. "An 8-year-old could kick the ... out of him," the 36-year-old Clooney said. "Batman would be like, 'I'd smack you back if only I could lift my arms.'"

LOS ANGELES — He did not speak in English but his words enraptured several thousand followers, from shaven-headed Buddhist monks to movie stars Steven Seagal and Richard Gere.

The Dalai Lama, Tibet's exiled religious leader, offered his teachings Friday to an audience hanging on every word.

"It was just an amazing teaching and I think everyone that attended it is still blown away," Gere said after the Dalai Lama, dressed in a gold and maroon robe, lectured through an interpreter. "You won't find anyone with more humility than His Holiness."

The audience took notes, prayed and reflected on his words as the religious leader talked about "Precious Garland," a book by an ancient Indian Buddhist master, Nagarjuna, that stresses the religion's tenets of forgiveness, compassion and inner tranquility.

Seagal, sporting a Chinese-style shirt of gold silk, said that he admires the Dalai Lama for his "Buddhachitta," meaning the embodiment of compassion and selflessness.

"He's my teacher, you know and he's a great teacher and I'm here because I always want to be here to receive his teachings," Seagal said.

PORTLAND, Maine — Want to be happy? Help others, George Bush told a crowd of medical school graduates.

The former president spoke Saturday at commencement exercises for Maine's only medical school, the University of New England's College of Osteopathic Medicine. He has a summer home in nearby Kennebunkport.

"I believe that any definition of a successful life must include service to others," he told 81 graduates and their families and friends. "It's just that simple."

Bush, a World War II aviator, also joked about why the ceremony was held in Portland instead of at the college's campus, alluding to his recent activities in the air.

"Had it been on the campus right there at the Saco River, I would have come in by parachute," he said.

NEW YORK — Sandra Bullock is still making big money as a movie star. Still, she's second-guessing herself over the last couple of movies she made, both box-office bombs blistered by critics.

Sandra Bullock fired her top advisors last year.

"I look back on certain choices that I made, and I wonder if I did it out of the working actor's desperation to just take anything that comes along. I allowed myself, several times, to be mediocre," Bullock said about the comedy "Two if By Sea" and the World War I drama "In Love and War."

"It's halfway out of trying to be pleasing to everybody. You find mediocrity that way," she said in the July Rolling Stone, which hits newsstands Tuesday. "I'm not going to allow myself to be mediocre or anything that I am involved with to be mediocre."

So the 31-year-old actress fired her top advisers last year.

She stars next in the action sequel "Speed 2," for which she's making a reported $12.5 million. She will make an estimated $11 million for her next film, "Hope Floats."

"I've been trying to find the word that says what I need to be in life: Brave is that word," Bullock said. "It's the only thing I ask myself to be. Not accomplished or whatever.

"Brave is the thing I don't ever want to lose. Because no matter how many times I get knocked or I get blessed, it means that I'll always be able to do it again. And if I couldn't go again, that would kill me."

Foyt wins fight, loses IRL battle

■ Upon further review, True Value 500K title awarded to Luyendyk.

Associated Press

FORT WORTH— Arie Luyendyk was right after all. He did deserve to be in the True Value 500K winner's circle instead of A.J. Foyt.

On Sunday, Luyendyk was declared the winner of the Indy Racing League event following an all-night review of a wild race that ended with Foyt punching the Dutch driver in the head.

"I have to commend them for stepping up to the plate and admitting, 'OK, we were wrong. We've corrected it now,' " Luyendyk said Sunday.

When the race ended Saturday night, Foyt drivers Billy Boat and Davey Hamilton were listed as finishing 1-2 with Luyendyk, the winner of last month's Indianapolis 500, third.

Luyendyk was so convinced he won that he charged into victory lane. He began walking away when Foyt came up from behind and twice hit Luyendyk in the back of the head. The 62-year-old Foyt then wrapped his hands around Luyendyk's head, took two steps and shoved him to the ground.

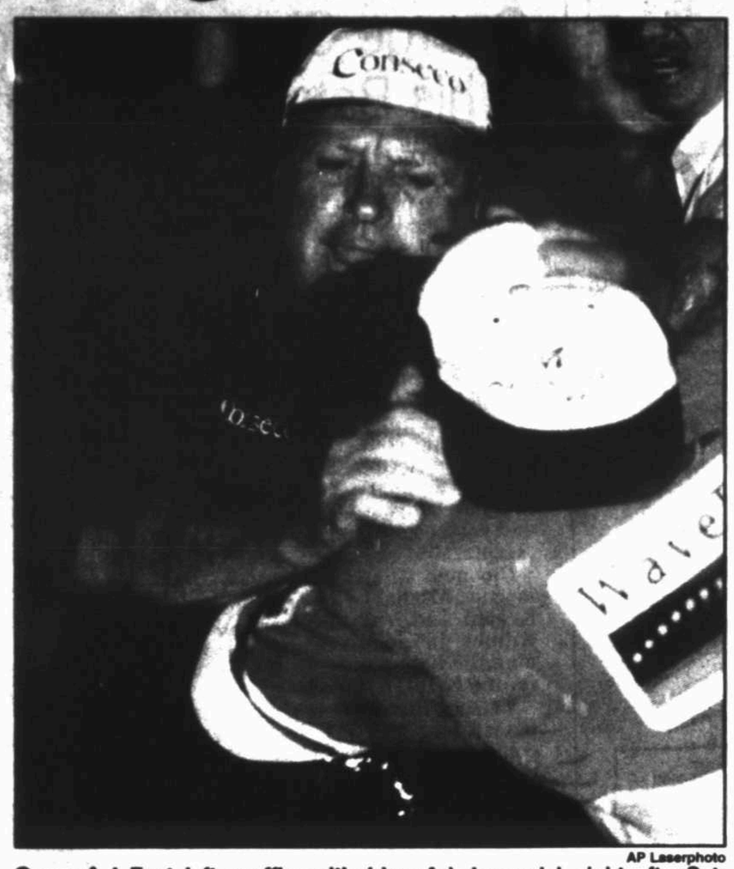

"All I know is I got hit from behind and almost choked by somebody and it turned out to be A.J. Foyt," Luyendyk told KTVT of Fort Worth on Sunday. "I never did talk to him at all. And I don't have to talk to him."

Luyendyk's Treadway Racing team protested the results about an hour after they were posted. That kept U.S. Auto Club officials working through the night trying to figure out what happened.

They discovered a huge mess caused when electronic transmitters used to register laps didn't always count cars crossing the start-finish line in the pit area. Five of the 26 cars were affected, including Luyendyk's.

"We feel very badly," said USAC chief steward Keith Ward, the organization's top rules arbiter and head of enforcing competition standards. "We've never had a problem of this nature. Certainly, this is a magnitude we have never seen. We're embarrassed by it."

USAC said it would allow protests to be filed through noon Thursday.

Owner A.J. Foyt, left, scuffles with driver Arie Luyendyk, right, after Saturday night's True Value 500K. Foyt's drivers had finished 1-2 in the race but United States Auto Club officials reviewed a tape of the wild race later Saturday night and declared Luyendyk the winner.

"We are going through the protest process," Foyt said in a statement. "They (USAC) feel they are right and we feel we are right. We'll let this play out."

Luyendyk's lap count was thrown off during each of his first two pit stops, which led to him actually going 210 laps — two more than necessary. A new top 10 emerged based on where drivers were when Luyendyk finished lap No. 208.

The reversal gave Luyendyk consecutive victories, although both have been a bit confusing. The last lap of the Indy 500 came with the starter surprisingly waving a green flag while lights on the track wall remained yellow.

The new results show Luyendyk leading for the last 19 laps, meaning Tony Stewart's blowout after starting his 207th lap while apparently in the lead did not cost him the victory. Luyendyk actually had passed Stewart on lap 190.

Other cars incorrectly scored were Scott Goodyear, also with Treadway Racing, Eddie Cheever Jr., Greg Ray and Boat.

The revised top 10 dropped Boat and Hamilton to second and third. Goodyear moved from ninth to fourth, Stewart dropped one place to fifth, Cheever remained sixth, Eliseo Salazar fell two places to seventh, Ray moved up two to eighth, Vincenzo Sospiri slid two to ninth and Johnny Unser dropped two to 10th.

Treadway Racing had complained to USAC several times during the race that they believed the leaderboard was wrong. Although USAC knew there could be a problem, officials said they were confident enough about the results to declare Boat the winner without first going back over the data.

"We felt if there was difficulty, it wasn't with winner — and we were wrong," said Art Graham, USAC's director of timing and scoring.

USAC has been using this scoring system since 1990. Graham said there has never been a problem this serious before.

However, there were some glitches in Wednesday night's qualifying. Two drivers who had been disqualified were later reinstated after USAC discovered its error.

Graham said extra testing was done on the system Friday to make sure the equipment — which is owned, operated and installed by USAC — was running smoothly.

"We had literally no problems," he said. "When the race began under yellow for 18 laps and we experienced no problems, it confirmed our expectations that (the system) would not be a problem."

Texas Motor Speedway general manager Eddie Gossage was so furious about the confusion that he made a brief statement during Sunday's news conference then rushed off the stage, slamming a door behind him.

"This is not acceptable for our fans or competitors," Gossage said. "We've had only two problems in an otherwise perfect week. USAC's performance is totally unacceptable."

USAC has three weeks before the next IRL race, June 29, at Pike's Peak International Raceway.

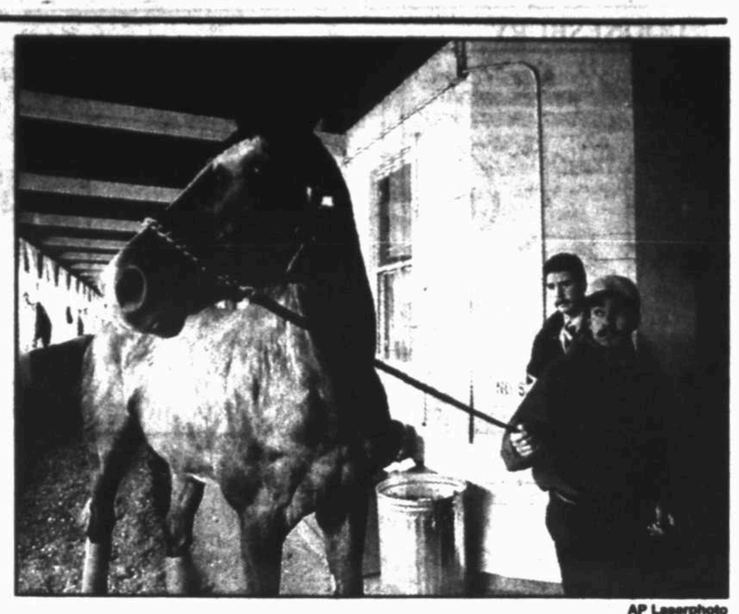

"We're going to go back home and get into a lot of things," Ward said. "We're going to look at every detail we can to figure out what happened, why it happened and try to make the necessary corrections."

While the technical part may be solved, IRL will probably have a tougher time salvaging its image.

The second-year league has been slammed for turning the Indy 500 into a second-tier race because of its split with CART. Two days of rain delays and a controversial finish last month didn't help their cause.

Now, instead of building momentum from the first night race in modern Indy car history — an event that drew about 100,000 people and seemingly had a fantastic finish — the circuit is again forced into damage control.

"A lot of people look at this series and try to find everything negative they can," Ward said. "I guess we've certainly provided an opportunity for them to do that here."

Silver Charm, with groom Giovanni Herrera, returned to Churchill Downs in Louisville, Ky. Sunday after losing the Triple Crown Saturday.

Silver Charm trainer: No Belmont regrets

NEW YORK (AP) — There was no gloom around Barn 11 at Belmont Park Sunday in the wake of Silver Charm's narrow defeat in the Belmont Stakes that meant racing will go at least 20 years without a Triple Crown winner.

"If the horse hadn't fired at all, it would have been a disappointment, but my horse ran his race," trainer Bob Baffert said.

Someone mentioned that Touch Gold was the sixth Belmont winner to be stabled in Barn 5, which housed trainer Woody Stephens five consecutive winners in 1982-86.

"You hear that, Bob," shouted brother Bill Baffert. "It was the barn (that beat Silver Charm). We got hosed."

When it was pointed out the Barn 11 was once the barn of trainer Nick Zito, who has not a won Belmont but has had four second-place finishers, Bill said, "We really got hosed."

Jokes aside, Silver Charm's defeat by Touch Gold underscored why there have been only 11 3-year-olds able to win the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont Stakes, the last being Affirmed in 1978.

"I feel a horse has to prove himself to be a Triple Crown champion," said David Hofmans, Touch Gold's trainer. "It's the most difficult thing to do in racing. A horse has to be great."

Hofmans, obviously, was not knocking Silver Charm.

"That was a great race he ran yesterday," Hofmans said. "I've got to give Bob Baffert and Paco Gonzalez (trainer of third-place Free House) credit for keeping their horses running. That's a feat. I don't know if I could have done it."

Silver Charm and Free House are the only two horses to run all three races this year.

"My sister says they've got to change these rules," Bob Baffert jokes. "You've got to run all three races."

Touch Gold did not race in the Kentucky Derby. Hofmans decided the 1 1/4-mile Derby might be too much for the colt, who actually didn't become 3 years old until May 26, 23 days after the Derby and six days after the 1 3-16-mile Preakness, the race he was pointed for from the beginning of the year.

While Touch Gold might have been fresher than Silver Charm or Free House, he also had a quarter crack in his left front foot from going to his knees at the start of the Preakness. He recovered under jockey Chris McCarron and ran a big race to finish fourth, only 1 1/2 lengths behind Silver Charm! More than a few people thought the stumble cost him a victory.

When Hofmans called off a workout Wednesday, saying his colt was ready, some wondered if the foot problem wasn't the reason.

Touch Gold ran with a patch on the crack, and Hofmans said the colt will race with the patch for the rest of the year. He said the foot looked fine Sunday.

"David's horse is a real-looking horse," said Dick Mandella, trainer of Wild Rush, who ran as part of Frank Stronach-owned entry with Touch Gold and finished sixth in the seven-horse field. "He's a late foal and David's done a real good job of bringing him along."

"I think he's one of the best 3-year-olds running now," Hofmans said. "He's one of the three best, with those other two right now. They're pretty equal."

The three certainly helped make it one of most entertaining Triple Crown series ever, and they almost certainly will be facing each again and, hopefully, again and again. Silver Charm scored head victories over Captain Bodgit, retired because of injury, in the Derby and over Free House in the Preakness. That means the three races were decided by a total of one length.

Cut tire no worry for Gordon

■ Pocono 500

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — No matter how often he wins at Pocono International Raceway, Jeff Gordon has trouble forgetting some of the losses.

"I've lost by missing a shift. I've spun out and I've been stuck in the mud," he said Sunday after winning the Pocono 500.

So, it was a wary Gordon who began to back off when a tire problem nearly left him a lap down.

"I knew something was wrong, and I would have come in sooner," he said. "I thought maybe I got up high and got something on the tires.

It was more than that, but not fatal to his chances.

The victory came a week after the 25-year-old Hoosier crashed late in the race while pursuing a record third straight win at Dover Downs.

This time, however, a cut tire on his Chevrolet came after just 20 of 200 laps. Gordon was forced to pit under green, and regained race speed with Ward Burton just a few car-lengths shy of lapping him.

"I thought the day was over," Gordon said. "At least we were at Pocono, where there's a lot of race track to work with."

Gordon, who had five top-10 finishes in his first eight starts at Pocono, got the break he needed when caution came out because Bobby Labonte spun in the first turn on lap 59. Gordon was able to close up on the leaders.

Burton dominated until the 120th lap when his brother, Jeff, and Gordon closed what had been a two-second lead to a few car-lengths. The third caution of the race came out on lap 131, and all the leaders pitted.

But the slow pit stops that had checked Burton over the first half of the event bit him again, and Gordon got out first.

"The pit crew was awesome today," Gordon said. "That's what did it, getting me out in front."

The work of Ray Evernham's crew enabled Gordon to extend his series lead in victories this year. Gordon beat the Ford of Jeff Burton by 1.415 seconds to win for the 25th time in 4 1/2 seasons on the Winston Cup circuit.

"We didn't have a great race car, but we stayed after them all day," Evernham said.

Gordon said he was fearful that Burton might close on him late in the race.

"We had a piece of rubber that fell down on the track bar, but we just didn't get the opportunity to adjust it," Burton said.

The victory also gave Gordon a tie in the series standings with Hendrick Motorsports teammate Terry Labonte and an $80,000 payoff for gaining it with a win.

The bonus was part of a $166,080 payoff from a purse totaling $1.3 million. It gave Gordon earnings of $1,682,844 for the season and $12,009,648 for his career. He is eighth in NASCAR career earnings.

Gordon paced all but 10 of the last 68 laps, and 59 overall in a race that featured 25 lead changes among a season-high 15 drivers.

The winner's average speed was slowed to 139.828 mph by four cautions spread over 22 laps.

Fords took the next five positions behind Gordon, with Dale Jarrett finishing third ahead of Mark Martin, Jeremy Mayfield and Ted Musgrave. Darrell Waltrip was seventh in a Chevy, followed by Geoff Bodine's Ford and Terry Labonte's Chevy.

Seven-time Winston Cup champion Dale Earnhardt was 10th in a Chevy, extending his winless streak to 40 races. A loss next Sunday at Michigan would make it the worst run of his career.

Burton, who eventually blew an engine in his Pontiac, led the most laps with 60.

Gordon remained the only Chevy driver to have won this year. Fords have taken the other seven races. Gordon also joined Bobby Allison and the late Tim Richmond as the only repeat winners of the event. The victory tied Gordon for with Jim Paschal for 19th on the NASCAR career list.

Moore preserves 2nd straight CART victory

■ Detroit Grand Prix

DETROIT (AP) — Greg Moore was ready to settle for third-place points. A minute later, he was celebrating his second straight victory.

Moore won Sunday's ITT Automotive Detroit Grand Prix when PacWest teammates Mauricio Gugelmin and Mark Blundell both ran out of fuel on the last lap.

"I'm glad the race didn't end one lap sooner,' the Canadian youngster said.

At Milwaukee, a week ago, the 22-year-old Moore became the youngest winner in the history of the PPG CART World Series when he conserved his fuel just enough to beat Michael Andretti on the Milwaukee Mile oval.

On the tight, demanding 2.1-mile, 14-turn Belle Isle road circuit in the middle of the Detroit River, Moore lost the lead when he pitted during a caution period on lap 51, the last of his two scheduled stops.

Moore kept his worn Firestone tires and took on only a full load of fuel, coming back onto the track fourth. He trailed Gugelmin, Blundell and rookie Patrick Carpentier, all of whom hoped to stretch their fuel enough to make the entire 77-lap, 161.7-mile race on one stop.

Carpentier gave up on lap 67, pitting for fuel and falling off the pace, but it appeared the gamble might pay off for the PacWest teammates even without a yellow flag in the final 34 laps.

Less than halfway through the final lap, Gugelmin slowed on the long back straightaway as the rest of the leaders charged past. Then, just two turns from the finish, Blundell slowed and Moore darted around and dashed to the checkered flag.

"My engineer, Steve Challis, told me, 'If you see a good chance to pass, you'd better take it. We think they're going to make it,'" Moore said. "I thought, 'Well, I'd better not do anything stupid. I'll take third-place points.'

"Then Mauricio stopped and I said, 'Wow, I've got second-place points.' Then Mark stopped and I couldn't believe it."

Andretti finished second again. The final margin was 1.818 seconds — about 10 car-lengths — as Moore averaged 86.047 mph.

"The team was the difference in this one," Moore said. "They left the Firestones on for more than half the race and I think that's what won it for us. We got 100 miles on those tires. It's unbelievable."

Blundell, a former Formula One driver, said, "When Mauricio ran out of fuel, I thought, 'Oh, I've got it in the bag.' Then I ran out."

Leonard claims Kemper Open

Associated Press

POTOMAC, Md. — In the gentlemen's game of golf, no one wants to win just because the other guy fell apart. So forgive Justin Leonard for not jumping for joy after his gift victory at the Kemper Open.

Leonard notched his second career PGA Tour win by one stroke Sunday after Mark Wiebe — a journeyman who hasn't won in 11 years — blew a four-stroke lead and missed 2-foot par putts on the last two holes.

"I'm happy with the outcome," said Leonard, whose $270,000 paycheck is his biggest on the tour. "If it would have happened differently, I might have been a little happier. ... I really would have rather seen him make that putt (on No. 18) and us go into a playoff."

Wiebe missed four putts from three feet or closer over the final 11 holes, a startling collapse by one of the few people who had mastered the TPC at Avenel's bumpy, uneven greens with bogey-free rounds both Friday and Saturday. He badly misread the break on a 20-foot birdie putt that would have won the tournament at No. 18, then pulled his par putt to the left.

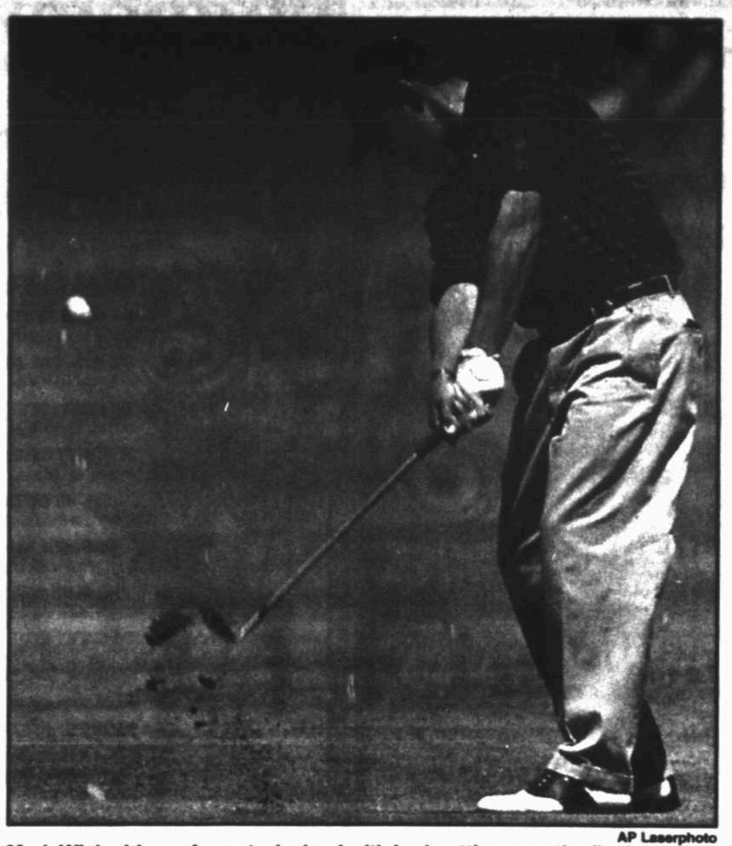

"I'm speechless," a stunned Wiebe said before gathering his thoughts at the post-tournament news conference. "I'm very disappointed. I felt like it was my tournament to win or lose, and I lost. ... When you hit putts like that, it's probably not to be, I guess."

Wiebe had been a surprise story in a field full of big names preparing for this week's U.S. Open at nearby Congressional Country Club. During the tournament, he revealed that he had been diagnosed with an allergy to certain types of grass and trees — not the best news for a golfer — and that the shots he received once a week sometimes left him with a buzz. Still, he was the third-round leader by three strokes.

"I've been a little bit shaky on my smaller putts all week long," said Wiebe, who finished with a 2-over-par 73 for a 9-under 275 total. "Even the ones I made, my hands felt a little quivery. And today maybe it caught up with me a little bit."

Leonard's winning round was a 67 for a 10-under 274 total, but his charge for the lead appeared to fall apart when his tee shot landed next to a cart path on 16. He bogeyed that hole, then parred the last two and waited and watched as Wiebe fell apart.

"At 18, I thought (my birdie) putt was to win the tournament," said Leonard, who was in the tent signing his scorecard when Wiebe bogeyed No. 17. Leonard then went to get a sleeve of balls in case there was a playoff, but he said he still didn't think he would have a chance after Wiebe hit a strong drive on 18.

Mark Wiebe blew a four-stroke lead with bad putting over the final 11 holes Sunday, handing Justin Leonard (above) a one-stroke Kemper Open win.

Leonard's other tour victory came at last year's Buick Open. The 24-year-old Texan's best finish this year — and his only top 10 placing — had been a tie for seventh at the Masters. Though Sunday's win was gifted, he emphasized that it wasn't tainted.

"You've got to take every victory you can get," Leonard said. "I'm not going to put an asterisk on the tournament because of what happened on the last hole."

Both golfers survived a late run by Nick Faldo, who moved within two strokes of the lead before bogeying the last two holes for a 71 and 277 total. Greg Norman and Nick Price also looked in good shape with 67s in their final rounds before the U.S. Open. Faldo, Norman and Price tied for third with Mike Springer, who had a 72.

European Grand Prix

HEXHAM, England — Colin Montgomerie, his game primed for the U.S. Open, captured the European Grand Prix with a 7-under-par 65 for his first victory of the year.

"There will be a few players going to the U.S. Open next week with confidence but none with more than me. I cannot wait until next Thursday morning," said Montgomerie, often called the best player never to have won one of golf's four majors.

The 33-year-old Scotsman finished with a four-round total of 18-under-par 270, five shots ahead of defending champion Retief Goosen of South Africa. Goosen closed with a 69.

BellSouth Senior Classic

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Gil Morgan shot a 5-under 67 and won his second straight tournament with a two-stroke victory at the $1.3 million BellSouth Senior Classic.

Morgan turned in four birdies with no bogeys and totaled 14-under 202 for 54 holes, holding off John Bland (68-204) for his third victory this year and fourth since joining the tour last fall.

Larry Gilbert shot a 68-206, while Hale Irwin (68) and Tom Wargo (68) finished tied at 207.

Several players tried to catch Morgan led early by Irwin, who finished second to him by a stroke at last week's Ameritech Senior Open. But Morgan stretched his lead to two strokes with birdies on two of his first three holes and never led by less than that the rest of the way.

"I was able to stay out there far enough away," Morgan said. "I never let them catch up to some degree."

Irwin had two birdies and an eagle through the first seven holes, birdied No. 13 and pulled within two strokes only to cool down with a bogey.

Gilbert also tried to catch Morgan, and his five birdies pulled him within two before he bogeyed No. 18.

Bland, playing with Morgan in the last group, birdied Nos. 16 and 17 and thought he had a chance to grab a share of the lead on the par-4, 431-yard 18th. He hit his second shot into a bunker right of the green, while Morgan saved par with a pitch from below the elevated green within 2 feet of the hole.

"Gil played fantastically," Bland said.

"I was always behind. I always that shot or two behind."

Morgan made only one of his birdies on the back nine as he played keep away with the winner's $195,000 check. When Bland threatened to cut Morgan's lead to one by dumping his third shot on the par-4 No. 17 two feet from the hole, Morgan responded by sinking a 5-footer for birdie first.

Three players withdrew from the final round. Bobby Nichols and Gene Littler pulled out Saturday night and Kermit Zarley, who was just three strokes off the lead, withdrew at the first tee because of an aching back.

LPGA Olds Classic

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Pat Hurst made a 20-foot birdie putt on the final hole to win the LPGA Oldsmobile Classic, beating Juli Inkster by one stroke.

In her third season on the LPGA tour, the 28-year-old Hurst shot a 2-under-par 70 for a 9-under 279 total and her first victory. She collected the $90,000 winner's share of the $600,000 purse and Inkster, a 14-year tour veteran who has not won since 1992, earned $55,855.

"When I was walking up to 18 I thought that it would be nice to make that putt," Hurst said. "It fell and it was the best feeling in the world.

"I saw the line real well, and when you see the line well the hole seems so big sometimes. I hit it right on line and it seemed like it wasn't taking the break. But then right at the end, it did."

Finishing two strokes behind Hurst were Susie Redman, who four-putted the par-5 14th on the way to a 71, and Kim Saiki, who shot a final-round 69 at the Walnut Hills Country Club.

Nike Knoxville Open

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.— Dave Rummells, playing his first tournament since injuring his back at Pebble Beach in February, shot a 6-under-par 66 for a two-stroke victory in the Nike Knoxville Open.

Rummells, 39, who earned $36,000 for his second career Nike Tour victory, had a 17-under 271 total on the Three Ridges Golf Club course. Matt Gogel (66) and Australia's Terry Price (70) tied for second.

Unique Opportunity For Sales Consultants With College Or Equivalent Backgrounds

One of Midland's top automotive retailers is dramatically changing the way people buy cars and trucks. This unique approach utilizes consultants to professionally match the consumers' needs to the appropriate purchase. Although there is an exciting compensation plan to reward performance, the concept of stabilized income for sales consultants working sensible hours makes the car buying experience fun for both employees and customers.

We require no sales experience. Instead, we seek clean cut, career-minded men and women with college or equivalent backgrounds. After receiving professional training and working in this unique environment, you will be proud that you replied to this announcement and are part of this exciting change.
