Ask Us

Q. — With the additional loss in values reported by the SDN last Sunday, how much are local taxes expected to go up because of this?

A. — How much taxes go up is a decision still to be made by taxing entity boards since tax rates are not set. The loss in value did equal an additional six cents on the combined "effective tax rate" for the four Snyder-based taxing entities. The effective tax rate is what the four would have to assess to raise the same amount of tax dollars as last year. It now totals $1.91.

In Brief

Gathering

LAKE TAWAKONI, Texas (AP) — Witches from across the United States gathered on the shores of Lake Tawakoni this weekend to celebrate the summer solstice and attend seminars on tarot card reading, healing with stones, reincarnation and sundry metaphysical subjects.

As many as 200 people, some from as far away as North Dakota, were expected at the private campground an hour's drive east of downtown Dallas, where several rituals were planned.

The gathering is one of good witches, also known as "white witches," and not of evil witches, who are known as "black witches" and who worship Satan.

'Surplus' may temper school tax rate

By DONNY BROWN
SDN Managing Editor

A "windfall" of state funding--primarily tied to the district's reclassification out of "budget balance" status--is expected to substantially hold down Snyder school taxes this coming year.

The information is a "glimmer of good news" in a tax year otherwise comprised of bad, school officials note.

The district experienced a decline in its tax value of some $52.7 million. This means that to raise the same amount of taxes as it did last year, the district would have to charge a tax rate of some $1.19.

The tax rate last year was 82 cents per $100 valuation, and the loss in value spells a potential raise in the rate of some 27 cents.

Due to a surplus of state monies from the current budget year, however, it is now hoped this increase can be limited to from 10 to 12 cents.

For comparison purposes, school tax payers last year, again due to declines in tax values, saw their tax rate rise 30 cents per $100 valuation.

Assistant superintendent for business Artie Butler is quick to point out that all figures are still preliminary, and final tallies can't be made until after the state legislature makes its final decisions on school funding.

Final decisions regarding the tax rate are in the hands of school board members, who plan to complete a week's worth of budget studies June 29-July 3.

The surplus in state income for the current year totals an estimated $1.5 million.

This past school year marked the first time that Snyder ISD had fallen from "budget balance" status--a category primarily granted the oil-rich districts of Texas.

The selection is a double-edge sword, however, since it means also fewer state dollars.

The dramatic decline in oil values which began last year insured that Snyder no longer qualified. Since it was the first year out of budget balance status, and because of the uncertain situation for state funds last year due to the projected state deficit, school officials were uncertain how much to expect from the Texas Education Agency.

In the end, they budgeted a conservative amount and the happy result was the estimated $1.5 million excess.

Based on current market values for Snyder ISD, every penny added to the tax rate equals ad valorem tax income of more than $94,000.

Worker benefit plan on county's agenda

County commissioners will open bids for a third party administrator to handle a "flexible benefits plan" when they meet in regular session Monday.

The program, also called a "cafeteria plan," was authorized this year by the Internal Revenue Service. The plan allows deductions for certain items, such as child care or medical benefits, from an employee's gross salary. Once qualified deductions are made, the individual's Socfal Security and income tax requirements are calculated on the remaining balance.

Bids are scheduled to be opened at 11 a.m.

Richard Halsmann, lake superintendent at Lake J.B. Thomas, also plans to discuss speed limits currently posted on lake roads.

Other items on the court's agenda include:

—Discussion on the possibility of collecting taxes on boats.

—Discussion on raising service fees charged for services made by the Sheriff's Office and constables.

—Accept bids to purchase a 1987 motorgrader for Precinct 2. Bids will be opened at 10 a.m.

—Consider a request by the county treasurer for permission to destroy old receipt books and cancelled checks dated from December of 1971 to December of 1977.

—Approve county bills.

The session is set to begin at 10 a.m. in the commissioners' courtroom.

In hospital budget...

Tax requirements trimmed

Cogdell Memorial Hospital--the county owned hospital-- will present a budget this week to the Scurry County commissoners court asking for $100,000 less in tax support.

Hospital board members, meeting in a special work session at noon Friday, tentatively approved the hospital's 1988 operating budget of $4.5 million. The proposed spending figure is $92,706 than the amount proposed for 1987.

Commissioners had asked all county departments to reduce budget requests by at least 20 percent. According to Hospital Administrator Cy Miller, the funding request is down 21.7 percent. In 1987 the hospital will receive $460,000 in county tax funds while in 1986 the hospital's tax revenue was $602,146.

The proposed budget for 1988 is very similar to the current spending document. In the revenue department, the hospital expects a decline of $100,000 in patient revenue.

The '88 budget asks the county for a transfer of some $360,000 to the hospital from the county ad valorem tax funds with the remainder of the needed revenue to come from anticipated earnings from hospital services.

That amount represents a reduction in tax monies put into the facility of $100,000 or 21.7 percent reduction from 1987.

Also projected for 1988 are reductions in revenue from other sources including patient receipts and transfers to the operating fund from the hospital's interest bearing depreciation fund account.

1988 patient receipts are now estimated at $3.5 million, down from $3.6 million estimated for 1987.

The planned '88 transfer of funds from the depreciation account is $457,894, down from $597,374 transferred in 1987.

Budget expense reductions anticipated in line with the revenue reductions include employee salaries, travel expense, retirement expense, insurance expense, and laundry.

The feller on Deep Creek says, "If some folks said what they thought, they'd be speechless."

Bill Atwood, owner of Atwood Construction, is in Houston this weekend taking part in the annual "old-timers" all-star game in the Astrodome.

Atwood spent most of his baseball career as a catcher with the Philadelphia Phillies and Cincinatti Reds. With Houston's humidity, Atwood said he was glad the game is being played inside the air conditioned dome.

Atwood's buddies--including Miller Robinson and M. L. Duke--have been giving advice on how to throw out a runner trying to steal second.

The game has been on Atwood's mind so much that Bill had a dream one night this week. He dreamed that he had died and arrived in Heaven.

St. Peter met Atwood at the Pearly Gates and asked his name and occupation. St. Peter didn't seemed impressed that his career as an oilfield contractor had been preceded by a stint in the major leagues.

St. Peter told him to wait while he checked the records. He returned to tell Atwood, "Because of your life on earth, we can't keep you here, but before you leave will you sign these baseballs?"

Atwood tells us that in the old days some of the players could barely write enough to autograph a baseball.

One such player was called into the manager's office to discuss his contract. Since the player couldn't read or write, the manager went over the contract line by line.

Finally the manager asked if the player was satsified with the terms, and the player nodded that he was. "All right," said the manager, "just sign your name right here." And he put an X on the line where the player was to sign.

The player looked at the X, looked at the manager and said, "Say, you done signed it for me."

We've received more than 10 entries in our giant mosquito contest. Shorty Byrom said his entry got away. He was just about to capture the big feller when it landed in one of his fruit trees and broke the limb.

Group in Odessa is to boycott vote

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Odessa members of the Garden City "Super Collider" Commission say they will boycott a vote this week on whether to keep the region in national competition for the $14.4 billion project.

State officials have sanctioned a site south of Amarillo and another in Ennis County south of Dallas as Texas' official entries in the national super collider sweepstakes.

Ralph McLaughlin of Big Spring, who has led efforts to land the project since 1986, has called a meeting for Wednesday to reconsider whether to continue Garden City's bid.

The group voted 13-10 in San Angelo June 8 against continuing the effort.

McLaughlin says some paid-up members of the commission complained to him that the June 8 meeting was illegal because they were not notified and didn't have a chance to vote.

He called another meeting after hearing the complaints, saying he believes the first vote was improper. But Odessa Mayor Don Carter said his group believes the June 8 meeting was legal and next week's meeting is not.

"There's not going to be any vote," Carter told the San Angelo Standard-Times. "It's not legal. It looks like from a general membership standpoint, we're just getting together to have coffee."

Carter said he was skeptical that some commission members couldn't vote June 8.

"I'd like to know who that was," Carter said. "I don't think there was anyone absent who had paid the $1,000," he said, referring to the commission's membership fee.

Owners face abuse; some pets are killed

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Owners of pit bulldogs are being advised to walk their pets late at night to avoid harassment from neighbors angry and fearful about recent attacks on humans, and some are having their animals put to death.

"There's a kind of mob psychology out there," Richard Avanzino, president of the San Francisco Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, said Friday. He said there have been reports of people abusing pit bull owners while they walk the dogs.

"There's just hysteria in the community right now," said Kathy Snow of the Santa Clara County Humane Society, where seven pit bulls were turned in to be put to death within three days of the latest attack, a fatal mauling June 13 of a 2½-year-old Morgan Hill boy.

Snow said usually no more than three dogs of all breeds are turned in for death by lethal injection each week, and those are usually strays. Several of the pit bulls had belonged to owners for years.

Three of the dogs, a fighting breed with powerful jaws, were dropped off at Marin County Humane Society this week to be put to death. One dog owner said he had kept his pit bull for eight years but it was too aggressive, officials said.

Another of the dogs had numerous scars, apparently from dogfights. The dog was left anonymously in a cage Monday night. Unless claimed, it will be killed Tuesday.

In Alameda, a woman whose pit bull has been the object of neighborhood complaints for a year turned it in this week to be put to death.

Five fatal attacks by pit bulls have been reported across the country this year, the Humane Society of the United States said. Spokesman Randall Lockwood said at least 35 cities have banned or restricted ownership of pit bulls.

Some owners who say their pit bulls are not vicious resent the backlash caused by highly publicized attacks.

In San Jose, 17-year-old Arthur Chacon said authorities took away his pit bull, Chopper, after a neighbor complained to his landlord.

"It was really just heartbreaking. It was just painful. I look at his dog house, and just because of what happened on the news it isn't right to have my dog taken away from me," Chacon said.

In 1654, Rhode Island forbade the sale of liquor to the Indian population.

Inspection of condoms leads to recall action

WASHINGTON (AP) — Manufacturers are recalling 100,000 condoms as a result of increased federal inspection since the devices have been promoted as a way to prevent AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases, says the Food and Drug Administration.

The agency announced Friday that three American condom makers have issued recalls of several lots of their contraceptive, anti-disease rubber products because they failed to meet industry quality standards.

Because of recently increased testing, most of the suspected lots that failed leak tests were intercepted before they reached the market, said FDA Commissioner Frank E. Young.

The recalls result from increased inspection and testing of condoms since the agency urged manufacturers to beef up quality control on April 7, Young said.

At that time, the FDA asked condom producers to inform consumers that the devices offer protection against sexually transmitted diseases, including acquired immune deficiency syndrome, and to improve instructions on their use.

Bill Grigg, an FDA spokesman, said about 100,000 condoms are involved in the domestic recall and that most of them have been recovered in transit or at distributors before they reached the public.

In addition, the agency has detained 19 shipments of foreign-made condoms at the border since April because they failed inspections, he said. Fifteen of these shipments came from Korea and 4 from Malaysia.

The FDA spot-tests condoms by putting 10 ounces of water into samples and checking for leaks. The standard says no more than 4 out of 1,000 in a lot can leak to pass inspection, Grigg said.

On June 8, the FDA informed Schmid Laboratories of Little Falls, N.J., that a lot of its Sheik Fetherlite lubricated condoms with reservoir tips had to be recalled.

The company said this lot, No. 040687, was shipped to 22 accounts around the country.

The Circle Rubber Corp., of Newark, N.J., was informed by the FDA on June 11 that a lot of its condoms distributed under two labels also had to be recalled.

Man dies in auto accident

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — The driver of a moving van that careened across Interstate 10 May 4 and hit a Trailways bus head-on, killing six passengers and injuring 19, has died in a wreck in Louisiana, police said.

Wayne Griffin Jr., a 45-year-old New Orleans truck driver who worked for Graebel Movers International Inc., died in a one-vehicle wreck on Interstate 55 near Ponchatoula, La., about 50 miles north of New Orleans, a Louisiana State Police report shows.

A passenger in the truck Griffin was driving — Ralph Burkett, 50, of New Orleans — also was killed in the June 2 wreck. Griffin was traveling toward New Orleans.

The report of the Louisiana wreck said the right front tire on Griffin's truck blew out, causing him to strike a guard rail.

The National Transportation Safety Board requested a copy of the June 2 accident report, a spokeswoman said. The board also is conducting an investigation into the Beaumont wreck and is expected to release findings in about six months.

A Beaumont police report on the May 4 wreck stated that speeding and faulty brakes on the Graebel truck may have contributed to the accident. A Jefferson County grand jury reviewed the case Thursday and decided not to return any indictments.

Battalions are ready to attack

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian combatants will soon be reinforced with 20,000 zealots prepared to carry out suicide attacks on U.S. ships in the Persian Gulf, according to an official of Iran's Revolutionary Guards.

Guards spokesman Ali Reza Afshar said on Tehran Radio on Friday that his forces have turned Iranian gulf islands into "huge battleships that can easily hunt all of the enemy's ships and naval apparatus."

Fifty battallions of the Iranian zealots, known as the "Defenders of the Persian Gulf," paraded Friday through Tehran, said Radio Tehran. The broadcast was monitored in Nicosia.

According to the radio, the parade "demonstrated Islam's power to defend the Persian Gulf ... and demonstrated (the battalions') readiness to carry out any kind of martyrdom-seeking operation."

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency reported that the Supreme Defense Council met in Tehran on Thursday night to discuss "the defensive plan for naval forces and the Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps in the Persian Gulf" following superpower intervention to protect Kuwaiti ships.

The council, which maps Iran's strategy in the 6½-year-old war with Iraq, made some decisions, IRNA reported, but it did not elaborate.

The news agency report also was monitored in Nicosia.

IRNA quoted Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's representative on the council, as saying: "We must be ready. The people, the armed forces and the government must all be prepared, although the possibility (of a confrontation with the United States) is small."

Tehran Radio quoted Afshar as saying during a religious service at Tehran University that 50 400-man battalions of "martyrdom-seekers" will be deployed June 28 "to defend the Persian Gulf and repulse the aggression of world arrogance," Iranian parlance for the United States.

He did not say how these forces would fight the Americans and where they would be deployed.

To date, the concern of U.S. defense officials has centered on Iran's deployment of Chinese-made Silkworm anti-ship missiles in the Strait of Hormuz, gateway to the gulf. Defense officials believe the missiles might threaten shipping and freedom of navigation in the waterway.

Gulf shipping officials also have reported that Revolutionary Guards naval units have been mining the approaches to Kuwait's al-Ahmadi oil terminal.

Afshar's warning was the latest in a daily series of threats made by Iranian leaders following U.S. and Soviet moves to help Kuwait protect its shipping from Iranian attack. Tehran charges Kuwait aids Iraq.

Officials sought to conceal Gov. Clements' involvement

DALLAS (AP) — High-ranking Southern Methodist University officials participated in an elaborate scheme to conceal the fact that Gov. Bill Clements approved illicit payments to student athletes while the school was under probation for similar activities, a bishops' committee reported.

The cover-up included misleading a university faculty member charged with investigating the SMU athletic program, lying to the NCAA and approving generous termination agreements with head football coach Bobby Collins and Athletic Director Bob Hitch to avoid lawsuits and publicity, the committee reported Friday.

Details were released in a 48-page report from the special committee of United Methodist Church bishops, who have spent the past three months investigating a $400,000-a-year slush fund provided by SMU boosters.

The play-for-pay scandal prompted the NCAA in February to suspend SMU's 1987 football season with the so-called "death penalty" in the harshest collegiate football penalty ever. A total of $61,000 was paid to 13 football players, the NCAA said.

The SMU Board of Governors was content to "win football games, trust the leadership and look the other way," the bishops' report said. The board of governors, which was abolished in March, previously served as an executive committee to the larger SMU Board of Trustees.

"Clements maintains that every member who knew of the payments prior to August 1985 must have known of the payments after," said Bishop Louis W. Schowengerdt. "That is his conclusion, and that is our conclusion."

Clements told reporters when he emerged from his office at the state capitol late Friday night that he feels the bishops' report will clear the air.

"I think it will put SMU into a new phase and on a new plateau to move forward, which is what they should do," the governor said.

Clements said he hadn't seen the report, but added, "I'm glad that they made the report, and I'm sure it's a good report."

Named as knowing of payments before August 1985 were Clements, Dallas banker Robert H. Stewart III, Dallas businessman Edwin L. Cox and former Dallas Mayor Robert Folsom, all former members of the board of governors; former SMU President L. Donald Shields, who resigned last November, and board of trustees member O. Paul Corley.

Besides confirming that several members of the SMU board had knowledge of the slush fund, the bishops' report detailed how Cox and Corley, working with William L. Hutchison, an oil company executive who succeeded Clements as chairman of the Board of Governors, set up and carried out the cover-up to protect Clements.

Clements was elected Texas governor last November and resigned from the Board of Governors in January.

San Antonio patrolman said he was 'ready for the worst'

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Farrell Tucker stood stiffly between his attorneys, steeling himself for the guilty verdict he feared in the slaying of a fellow officer accused of plotting to kill top law enforcement officials.

But then he dissolved into tears, slumped into his chair and covered his face as jurors acquitted him Friday of a murder charge in the shooting death of his best friend, Stephen R. Smith, on Aug. 18, 1986.

"The jury was able to bring my life back. The jury can never bring back Stephen Smith," Tucker said later. "I feel the Police Department has stood behind me. I hold no animosity toward anyone."

Tucker, 36, who has been on suspension without pay since his indictment Oct. 22, said he plans to report for duty Monday and ask to be reinstated.

Tucker claimed he shot Smith five times in self-defense, although prosecutors had labeled him a cold-blooded killer who was more interested in saving his job than helping his friend.

The jury that listened to nine days of testimony acquitted Tucker after deliberating about five hours.

"Farrell was more prepared for a guilty verdict than I was," said Terry McDonald, Tucker's attorney, said. "I'm very proud of that jury. They stood up to the community in the moment of history and pressure and they came up with the right verdict. Farrell Tucker is a man's life worth saving and I'm glad I was part of it."

Smith's slaying sparked reform in the police department, a federal investigation into the slaying and an $8 million lawsuit by 11 families who claimed they were victims of Smith's alleged vigilante acts.

Jurors declined to speak with reporters after the verdict, but McDonald said the state's key witness was not credible.

Dr. Vincent DiMaio, chief medical examiner for Bexar County, testified that Smith was not holding a gun on Tucker as Tucker claimed. Smith's right plam had gunshot residue on it, indicating Smith was trying to fend off an attack, DiMaio testified.

"I think the best defense witness I had was Dr. Vincent DiMaio because I don't think Dr. DiMaio was believed by the jury," McDonald said.

Jimmy Swaggart...

Tax lawsuits reveal finances

DALLAS (AP) — A Texas court battle is forcing Jimmy Swaggart Ministries to release tightly-held details of its phenomenal financial growth in the 1980s, and court documents accuse its founder of skimming cash from contributions.

The Rev. Jimmy Swaggart and his Louisiana-based ministry are also accused in court documents of ignoring court orders to produce information, the Texas Lawyer newspaper reported in a copyright story in its June 22 editions.

The allegations are contained in papers filed in a tax dispute between officials in South Texas' Montgomery County and Jimmy Swaggart Ministries, the Lawyer reported.

The ministry's lawyer denied withholding any relevant material and denounced the charge that Swaggart had skimmed profits from his ministry, saying such actions would be the "death penalty" for the church.

The Conroe Independent School District, the city of Shenandoah and Montgomery County claim that Swaggart-owned radio station KJOJ owes $157,000 in taxes on three pieces of property. KJOJ is one of the ministry's six Christian radio stations in Texas.

The Baton Rouge, La.-based ministry says the facilities are tax-exempt because they are places of worship.

A hearing is scheduled for July 17 on a motion for sanctions against the church for its alleged reluctance to obey discovery orders to provide information.

Nevertheless, some closely guarded secrets have already been released in court records of three related cases, providing the largest collection of the ministry's financial records available to the public.

Among them:

— The ministry collected $455.8 million in contributions and sales of religious materials from 1978-85. Financial statements show contributions have increased about 25 percent annually since 1979.

— The church's net worth increased $65.8 million in that six-year period, while total assets tripled between 1982 and 1984 to $112.8 million.

— The ministry contends it does not make a profit, but a 1982 financial statement showed $11.9 million classified as "excess revenues" after expenses. Between 1979-83, the ministry collected more than $37 million in "excess revenues."

— While the ministry seeks a protective order to prevent disclosure of individual salaries, a lawyer for the ministry revealed in a May 26 letter that the salaries of its highest-paid employees, including $216,000 for Swaggart family members in an unspecified year. The list, including salaries of 57 people paid more than $30,000, totaled nearly $2.3 million.

Swaggart's income — drawn from about $5.5 million in annual royalties from recordings and books — was $17,600 in salary and $34,000 in other compensation for an unspecified year, according to an interview and a letter from Swaggart's lawyers.

Russell R. Graham, an attorney for tax officials, said in a letter to State District Judge John C. Martin that his clients believe Swaggart retained funds from contributors for his personal use.

Hough hurls Texas past Athletics, 4-2

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) - Charlie Hough pitched six hitless innings and settled for a two-hitter over 7 1-3 innings Friday night, giving the Texas Rangers a 4-2 victory over the Oakland Athletics.

Dale Marhocic pitched hitless relief over the final 1 2-3 innings for his ninth save.

Hough, 7-2, who beat Oakland for the second time in a week, surrendered a leadoff double to Reggie Jackson in the seventh to end his no-hitter. Jackson moved to third on Cey's grounder and scored on Tony Phillips groundout to shortstop.

In 16 1-3 innings against the Athletics, Hough has allowed six hits and one earned run. The 39-year-old knuckleballer walked four Friday night, but did not strike out a batter.

Hough had been winless in his three previous starts before beating Oakland twice.

Larry Parrish hit an RBI double and a solo homer, his 16th of the season.

Parrish's double keyed a two-run fourth inning rally, giving the Rangers a 1-0 lead, while Oddibe McDowell's double scored Parrish for the second run.

Bob Brower walked to leadoff the fifth off Moose Haas, 2-2. Jerry Browne followed with a sacrifice bunt that catcher Mickey Tettleton threw into the dirt, allowing Browne to go to third. Scott Fletcher hit an RBI grounder to third to score Brower.

Parrish homered with one out in the eighth off Oakland left-hander Dave Ohlen, the third of four Oakland pitchers.

The Athletics scored for an unearned run in the eighth. Luis Polonia singled to left and Mike Davis walked before Mohorcic entered. Carney Lansford then grounded to short for a potential inning ending double play, but second baseman Jerry Browne threw the relay wildly past first allowing Polonia to score.

Astros trade Garner

HOUSTON (AP) - The Houston Astros traded third baseman Phil Garner to the Los Angeles Dodgers on Friday for a player to be named later, making room on the roster for utility man Davey Lopes.

It was a short trip for Garner to join his new club. He walked from the Astros locker room to the visitor's locker room at the Astrodome where he was greeted by his new teammates.

"Phil Garner's prayers have been answered," Dodger Manager Tommy Lasorda shouted as Garner fielded a telephone call. "All former Dodger haters become Dodger lovers after they get here."

Garner, who had anticipated being traded this season, said the move would be tougher on his family.

"The ball player will make the move but it's tough on my family," Garner said.

At U.S. Open...

Watson, Nicklaus lead field

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Tom Watson and Jack Nicklaus once again are battling for the lead in a major golf championship.

They have plenty of company, and at least 36 holes of play remain, but they were the undisputed headliners going into Saturday's third round of the 87th U.S. Open on the Olympic Club's Lake course.

"I'm excited. The juices start flowing when you play a golf course like this and in the U.S. Open," Watson said after a 5-under-par 65 Friday moved him past 33 players and into a tie for first place.

His 36-hole total of 137 was matched by Mark Wiebe, a 29-year-old pro with only three years of tour experience. Fifteen players were within three strokes of the co-leaders.

Wiebe posted a 66 with the help of an eagle at the 12th hole, where he made a wedge shot from 114 yards.

Nicklaus, with a 68, was a stroke off the tournament lead and tied with John Cook, Jim Thorpe, Japan's Tommy Nakajima and former Masters champ Bernhard Langer of West Germany.

"I expect to win," Nicklaus said. "I have to believe I can win. If I don't believe that, then I have no business being out here."

He has not won since last year's Masters. Watson was among his closest pursuers into the final round of that event.

Watson has gone almost three years without a tournament victory. He claimed his last major title in 1982 at Pebble Beach, 100 miles south of San Francisco, by beating Nicklaus in a dramatic Open finish.

"In the majors, the big names tend to creep up onto the leader board. It's nice to be up there with them," Cook said.

One big name dropped off the board Friday. Spain's Seve Ballesteros went without a birdie in a round of 75, after a 68 Thursday, for 143. Among well-known players failing to survive the cut for the last two rounds were Paul Azinger and Payne Stewart, the No. 1 and 2 money winners on this year's PGA tour, and seven former Open champions including Lee Trevino, Fuzzy Zoeller and Johnny Miller.

Ben Crenshaw, the first-round leader with a 67, was at 139 after a 72. Also at 139 were Bob Eastwood, Scott Simpson and Masters champ Larry Mize.

Astros 3, Dodgers 2

Kevin Bass' 11th-inning sacrifice fly enabled Houston to overcome Hershiser's 14 strikeouts. Bill Doran, who tied the score 2-2 with an inside-the-park homer in the sixth, opened the 11th with a single and went to third on a single by Craig Reynolds, the seventh hit off Hershiser.

Ken Howell relieved and struck out Glenn Davis but Bass' fly ball off Matt Young scored Doran. Jose Cruz homered for Houston's first run as the Astros climbed within 1½ games of first-place Cincinnati in the NL West.

Western enters finals of college nationals; trail but in contention

BOZEMAN, Mont. -- Western Texas College was to send four individuals to Saturday night's finals of the College National Finals Rodeo here, but they were going to have to perform exceptionally well for the school to expect another championship.

"We are long way behind. To win we would have to have a lot of good breaks," said Coach Bob Doty, whose team captured the 1986 national championship. "We can ride good and rope good and still not win it because Blue Mountain and Montana State have done so well in the go-rounds. And, they've got people coming back that are sure good hands."

Western Texas was seventh in the team standings with 150 points going into the finals. Blue Mountain led with a whopping 420, followed by Montana State with 330 and Dawson, Mont. with 270. Tarleton State University had 245 for fourth place.

Western's greatest chance to pick up points was in the calf roping, where defending champ Keith Hudson led in the average. He placed third in the second-go with a 9.0 and had an average total of 18.9. Second place was a close 19-flat.

Bareback contestant Mike Carrillo took third place in the second-go with his 75 and third in the average with a 146.

Troy Budvarson and Adam Brewster also returned for the finals, but could realistically only expect go-round points.

Budvarson was sitting ninth in the average of the saddle bronc event with a 132 on two head. Brewster came back tied for ninth place in the bull riding with a 74. He was one of three contestants in the event who made the finals despite taking a no-score on one of his two attempts. Only seven bull riders made successful first and second-go rides.

Points are obtained by placing first through fourth in each of the three goes, and-or in the average.

Meanwhile, WTC's Jessie Colburn led the average of the barrel race heading into the finals. She clocked a 29.49 on two head to edge McNeese State's Holly Foster, who timed a 29.50.

Colburn, a freshman, turned a 14.84 in the second go-round. It did not place, but her first-go time of 14.75 won the go.

In other action here, former WTC cowgirls Canita Cass and Shelly Tate reached the finals. Cass, a student at Texas Tech, was sixth overall in the breakaway while ENMU's Tate was 10th in the goat tying. Tech's Karen Cochran was third in the breakaway and ninth in the goat tying.

Also reaching the finals from the Southwest Region were ENMU's Marty Jones, fifth in the calf roping with a 20.70 time; Howard's R.D. Christenson, fourth in the bull riding with a 139; Odessa's Jim Sharp, fifth in the bull riding with a 130; and Tarleton's Pat Yancy, third in the bull riding with a 145.

Migrant workers' reactions are mixed to Gold Coast

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. (AP) — Hundreds of laid-off construction workers from Texas and other depressed areas have headed to Fairfield County, hoping to line their pockets in Connecticut's Gold Coast.

But even though the wages seem high and the work is steady, some still can't afford to live here and others have fallen prey to contracting scams.

Many say they'll stay here awhile and then head home because they believe boom times never last.

"Whatever booms eventually busts," said Ron Beel, who moved to Norwalk from Arkansas in April. "I've traveled to a lot of boom towns and I've seen it happen so many times it's like a song."

Steve Holman, 21, of Alabama, saw an ad in a Texas newspaper that said carpenters could make as much as $10 an hour if they relocated to Danbury. Holman, a newlywed with a 13-year-old stepson, had been laid off from his job as a bus mechanic in Austin, Texas. He made $8.75 an hour at that job.

He arrived in Danbury with $30 in his pockets. He worked for about five weeks building condominiums in New Milford, but said he wasn't paid more than a total of $20. The construction company contends the workers were working for a subcontractor who was supposed to pay his wages, but didn't, he said.

Holman, who said he is owed about $2,000 in back wages, has not taken any legal action because he can't afford a lawyer.

His wife, Sharon Warren, says that adjusting to life in Fairfield County has been tough.

"The people don't seem as friendly here as they did when I used to live in the South," Warren said.

Deliberations to resume on Monday

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — With the prospect of a mistrial still looming, jurors in the $16.5 million wrongful death trial of oil heir Cullen Davis are taking the weekend off and plan to resume deliberations Monday.

State District Judge Claude Williams overruled a defense motion for a mistrial Friday and ordered deadlocked jurors to resume their efforts to reach a verdict.

The split was 8-4 in favor of the plaintiffs, according to sources who asked not to be identified. Jurors, in a note to Williams asking for the weekend off, said they had considered some witnesses' testimony but there were others they wanted to discuss and consider further.

"I want to congratulate you on the diligent effort you've made here today," said Williams, granting the request to recess Friday afternoon and noting jurors faced a difficult task.

Jury foreman Kenneth Pool indicated moments before the noon recess that the jury was closer to breaking the impasse than earlier Friday.

"We are discussing it," Pool said in open court. "We're closer to making a decision."

The foremost issue facing the panel was whether Davis, 53, was the gunman who killed his 12-year-old stepdaughter during a 1976 shooting spree at his hilltop mansion.

Two people died and two were critically injured by an intruder dressed in black and wearing a crude black wig. Three survivors identified Davis as the gunman.

He was acquitted of murder in the case 10 years ago, but that has no bearing on the civil suit against him by his ex-wife, Priscilla Davis, and her second husband, Jack Wilborn, who are seeking damages for the slaying of their daughter, Andrea Wilborn, 12.

The first sign of problems with the jury came Thursday during the second day of deliberations when shouts could be heard from within the locked jury room.

At day's end, two members emerged in tears and a third was escorted by a bailiff through the judge's chambers and out a side entrance.

And for the second day in a row, the jury foreman huddled in chambers Friday with Williams and attorneys for both the defense and the plaintiffs.

Williams then summoned the 12 members of the panel back into open court and gave them a so-called "dynamite charge" designed as a last attempt to get a verdict in the four-week-old case.

That charge, formally known as the "Allen Charge," is a series of instructions by the judge encouraging and even imploring deadlocked jurors to continue their efforts to reach a conclusion on the issues.

" ... In the interest of justice, if you could end this litigation by your verdict, you should do so," the judge told the panel.

He said he did not believe the jury had "deliberated sufficiently" to warrant a hung jury ruling at this point.

"Accordingly, I ask you to return to the jury room and continue your deliberations."

Defense lawyer Steve Sumner vigorously opposed the dynamite charge and moved immediately for a mistrial. The judge overruled the motion.

After conferring with the jury foreman Thursday, the judge provided the panel additional instructions from the bench.

Admission to statue have been abolished

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lady Liberty is free again.

President Reagan, reversing a short but unpopular policy, signed legislation Friday ending admission fees at the 101-year-old Statue of Liberty.

The bill ends a 4-month-old $1 fee. A spokesman for the National Park Service said the fee would be dropped beginning today.

"Lady Liberty says at her base, 'Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses.' She doesn't say, 'Give me a dollar'," said Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., a sponsor of the bill.

"This important national symbol was never intended to be a money-raiser for the government," Bradley said.

Rep. Frank Guarini, D-N.J., who co-sponsored the legislation, added, "I'm very glad because this was a victory for the little people."

"The bill made sure Lady Liberty won't hold a dollar bill instead of a torch," Guarini said.

Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., said, "Now I can rest in peace knowing that Lady Liberty won't have a pricetag on her."

Reagan signed the bill without comment.

The bill was part of an effort to chip away at an administration plan to charge admission fees for the first time at 72 national parks, monuments and other public installations. The Park Service has been under criticism from lawmakers since it announced the fee plans last December.

Jews were exiled from England in 1290 by proclamation of King Edward I.

State budget...

Lawmakers to try again

AUSTIN (AP) — While introducing a Mexican official to reporters last week, Gov. Bill Clements let slip an indication of the continuing frustration over Texas' long-running money troubles.

As cameras flashed and tape recorders whirred, Clements directed questioners toward Tamaulipas Gov. Americo Villarreal and warned: "Don't ask him about our budget, now."

No one did.

But Villarreal was about the only visitor to Clements' office in recent weeks who hasn't been asked about the projected state government deficit, the need for higher taxes and the Legislature's failure to pass a budget during its 140-day regular session.

It was the first time since 1961 that lawmakers couldn't write a budget. In a special session that summer, they created the state sales tax.

Legislators return to Austin Monday to try again, and pressure is mounting because the state's fiscal year ends Aug. 31.

Treasurer Ann Richards says $1 billion to $1.5 billion in short-term notes must be sold to guarantee an adequate cash flow. A budget should be passed by Aug. 1 for the sale to proceed, she says.

The state's 1,100 public school districts, trying to figure out their own spending plans, are waiting on the Legislature to decide how much state money will go into public education.

Despite news at week's end of another idea for balancing the budget — diverting highway money to other uses and selling bonds for road-building — legislative leaders said a final answer to the budget dilemma hasn't been found.

"What we're looking at is proposals," House Speaker Gib Lewis said after his most recent meeting with Clements and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who presides over the Senate.

Lewis, frequently the most optimistic-sounding of the three, nonetheless refused to say lawmakers were near agreement.

"You're always a little closer. We've been working here in the last few days trying to get what we think is a realistic budget and trying to get together some type of proposal to pay for it," he said.

Clements, insisting that a "tax-and-spend mentality" threatened to take over Texas government, vowed throughout the regular session to veto a tax increase larger than $2.9 billion, and that helped deadlock the Legislature.

He said last week that $2.9 billion still is enough in new taxes.

"I think the $2.9 (billion) ... will cover the tax picture," he said. "The rest of it will have to do with adjustments of various kinds."

The Texas Association of Taxpayers, in a written analysis of the budget wrangling, said:

"The budget has become a battleground pitting Gov. Clements and the Legislature in a fight over the shape and role of state government in Texas. This battle is being waged in a thicket of numbers and statistics dense enough to daunt even some of those assumed to understand their complexity."

The problem: Comptroller Bob Bullock projects that state spending in 1988-89 will run about $5.5 billion higher than expected income. Add to that a $1 billion deficit left from the current budget year, and lawmakers face a deficit of $6.5 billion.

The budgets: Hobby and the Senate offered a $39.3 billion budget. Lewis and the House recommended a $38.4 billion plan. Clements has indicated support for a budget totaling $38.1 billion.

The governor said he believes there are many places in state government where savings can be found.

"There are numerous areas in the bureaucracy that cry out for examination. And that means scrutinizing every aspect of operations and spending. Anything less would be shameful. Indeed, it would be unjustifiable," Clements said.

Lewis said new revenue — between $5 billion and $6 billion — likely will be needed.

Unless some other option is found, Lewis said, "You're just going to have an increase in taxes — broaden the (sales tax) base, something like that."

Oil prices top $20 a barrel, but for how long will it stay?

NEW YORK (AP) — For the first time in a year and a half, oil futures prices moved solidly above the psychologically significant $20-per-barrel level this past week.

That was good news, of sorts, for the nation's devastated petroleum industry, which has slashed exploration budgets by 40 percent and more in the wake of steep declines in earnings since the price collapse that began in December 1985.

It was also good news to oil revenue-dependent states like Alaska and Texas, where once-booming economies continue wallowing in bankruptcies and joblessness.

On Tuesday, residents of Perryton, Texas, poured into the streets with noisemakers and non-alcoholic champagne to celebrate the first $20-plus close of contracts for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, since Jan. 28, 1986, when it settled at $20.17. That was when oil prices were on a slide that took them to around $10 a barrel in the summer of 1986.

This past Monday the price closed above $20 again, but this time on the way up. Contracts for July delivery of crude oil closed at $20.06 per 42-gallon barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange and continued to rise all week, closing at $20.66 Friday.

That is not bad compared with the worst days of the collapse — but nothing close to the most recent peak of about $32 per barrel in November 1985, just before the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries formally abandoned quotas to pursue what it called its "fair share" of the market.

As the 13 cartel members speeded up their pumps, world prices plunged, forcing OPEC to throw in the towel last summer and announce it was limiting its production to drive prices higher.

Because many of the cartel's members had been exceeding their quotas anyway, some market watchers doubted OPEC's new policy would stick.

But stick it did. Into the fall, another meeting in December and beyond, the cartel managed to control production enough to convince the world that it meant business this time.

For consumers, the price collapse marked a windfall of cheap heating oil and double-digit gasoline prices for the first time since the late 1970s.

But those prices have been slowly creeping back up, along with the market.

Despite the ballyhoo, it is unlikely the $20 breakthrough will show up in the form of appreciable changes at the retail level anytime soon.

One reason is that prices have been hovering in the upper $19-to-$20 range for several weeks anyway.

But more important, industry analysts say the current $20 levels are probably destined to fade pretty soon — probably after the conclusion of the OPEC ministerial meeting scheduled to begin Thursday in Vienna, Austria.

We would like to express our thanks and appreciation for the many acts of kindness shown to the family and especially our loved one during his illness. We want to thank Dr. Dillaha, our sitters and the dear friends that called and came by so faithfully. To the personnel from our Funeral Home, we appreciate all you did. To Bro. Miller Robinson and those that provided the music for the service, a beautiful tribute was graciously paid to a man that deserved the highest of praise.

Stark skipper, two others relieved of duties

WASHINGTON (AP) — The skipper of the USS Stark and two of his top officers have been relieved from duty, and Pentagon sources say the three may face courts-martial stemming from the deadly attack May 17 on the frigate.

The Defense Department, in a brief statement issued late Friday, said Adm. Carlisle A.H. Trost, the chief of naval operations, ordered Capt. Glenn R. Brindel, the Stark's captain, and Lt. Cmdr. Raymond J. Gajan and Lt. Basil E. Moncrief Jr. relieved of their duties immediately.

Gajan and Moncrief recently received the Navy and Marine Corps Medal for heroism for their roles in directing fire-fighting efforts that saved the Stark from sinking after the attack, in which 37 sailors died and 21 were injured.

The Pentagon said that Trost had acted on a request from Gen. George Crist, who commands all U.S. forces assigned to the Middle East. The Pentagon said Crist "requested that these officers be detached (from duty) based on his lack of confidence in their performance."

Trost's order followed the submission of an investigative report to him and Adm. William Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, assessing the ship's performance when it was attacked by the Iraqi warplane.

The attack, in which two Exocet missiles were fired, occurred while the Stark was on routine patrol in the Persian Gulf. One of the missiles detonated.

The Pentagon refused Friday to confirm that the military inquiry had recommended legal action.

Speaking on condition of anonymity, Defense Department sources said the investigative report did, in fact, recommend courts-martial for all three. A final decision has yet to be made on that recommendation, the sources said.

The Navy said Friday that Cmdr. John B. Noll, who had been selected well before the attack to relieve Brindel as the Stark's skipper in a routine change of command, was en route to Bahrain to relieve Brindel.

The Stark is currently tied up in Manama, Bahrain, where it is undergoing temporary repairs before sailing for home.

The Pentagon had said previously the attack occurred without the Stark taking any defensive action. That failure became a key focus of the military inquiry, the sources said.

Brindel, 43, of Pittsburgh, Pa., was promoted to the rank of captain last January. He had commanded the Stark since Jan. 23, 1985.

Gajan, 35, of Rockville, Md., served as the Stark's executive officer, or second-in-command. Moncrief, 32, of Corpus Christi, Texas, was the tactical action officer, responsible for directing the ship's weaponry and radar systems.

Both the United States and Iraq have characterized the attack as a case of mistaken identity.

Shortly after the incident, Crist ordered a military board of inquiry to conduct a thorough investigation of the incident. That board, headed by Rear Adm. Grant Sharp, presented its final report to Crist on June 13.

The Pentagon, in its statement, said the report was hand-carried to Washington on Friday by Crist, who subsequently met with Trost and Crowe. Crowe is now expected to review the matter and submit the investigation findings to Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, the Pentagon said.

The final decision on the recommendations for courts-martial, however, will not be made by Weinberger, according to Pentagon officials. That decision will probably be delegated by Trost to another ranking officer in the Navy's chain of command.

The Pentagon said Brindel had been ordered temporarily to report to the staff of the commander, Naval Surface Force, Atlantic Fleet, in Norfolk, Va.

Gajan and Moncrief have been ordered temporarily to the staff of the commander, Cruiser-Destroyer Group 12 in Mayport, Fla., the Stark's home port.

The second case was the June 11 attempted burglary of Ben Wilson Supply. A display window was broken, but the suspects were unable to gain entry.

Conrete Inc. was burglarized on June 15 and again on June 17. A small amount of cash was taken in those incidents.

Dollar TV was burglarized on June 18. A VCR and other equipment were taken.

Scurry County Crime Stoppers will pay up to $1,000 for information leading to the indictment of persons responsible for felony crimes.

11th day of street fighting

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Police fought Buddhist monks here and gas-masked security forces charged through clouds of the irritant to punch and kick demonstrators in Pusan today, the 11th straight day of violent anti-government protest.

Opposition leader Kim Young-sam sought a meeting with President Chun Doo-hwan, insisting that only through such contact can the violent demonstrations be brought to an end.

Chun's administration appeared to be debating whether to crack down harshly on the demonstrators or make concessions in an effort to quell the unrest.

In the southern port of Pusan, several thousand people gathered at a main traffic circle and hurled rocks at police, who replied with barrages from tear gas launchers.

Demonstrators attempted to enter the circle from the half dozen streets leading to it, and police units ran back and forth to head them off. Tear gas was fired from multi-barreled launchers and gas grenades were hurled freely in the effort to keep even small crowds from forming.

Plainclothes agents, trained in martial arts and wearing gas masks, charged into the crowds that did form to disperse them.

The Yonhap News Agency reported that groups of students also took to the streets in Chongju, 85 miles south of Seoul, and in the southwest provincial capital of Kwangju.

In Seoul, police and monks fought on a downtown street outside a Buddhist temple, where police also fired tear gas.

The temple is the headquarters for South Korea's main Buddhist sect, which has called a "Save the Nation" rally for this afternoon. The clash between the Buddhist monks and police lasted for about 20 minutes, and at least one injured monk was seen being assisted away by two fellow monks.

About 10 million of South Korea's slightly more than 40 million population are Buddhists, but the Buddhist clergy to date has not played a leading role in anti-government activities.

The fresh violence came amid mounting speculation that authorities were nearing a decision on tough measures to deal with the unabating protest.

Roh Tae-woo, Chun's designated successor and like Chun a former army general, met today with leaders of some minor political parties.

Roh's nomination June 10 by the ruling Democratic Justice Party to replace Chun when he steps down in February touched off the daily demonstrations.

Lee Man-sup, president of the small Korea National Party, told reporters after meeting with Roh that Roh "fully agreed that the current crisis should be resolved peacefully and politically, that violence or emergency or extraordinary measures should be avoided by all means and that the crisis should be resolved with patience and restraint."

But on Friday, Prime Minister Lee Han-key said in a nationally televised address that the government would not tolerate further unrest.

"Should it become impossible to restore law and order," he said, "it would be inevitable for the government to make an extraordinary decision."

Newspapers mentioned martial law or the reinforcement of riot police with soldiers as among the possibilities, but officials have declined public comment on such reports.

The protesters are trying to bring down Chun's government and force direct democratic elections.

In Washington, the Reagan administration on Friday urged South Korean authorities to pursue political compromise and exercise restraint in resolving the crisis.

Chun declared in April that his successor will be chosen by the current electoral college system. Opponents say that ensures victory for the ruling party.

Hospital budget outlined here decrease by $60,000 overall — from $2.5 million in 1987 to $2.4 million in 1988.

Also expected to decrease in connection with the reduction with the number employed at Cogdell are retirement expenses — down $9,000 from $159,000 to $150,000 — and insurance expense — down $1,000 from $120,000 to $119,000.

Travel expense allowances for 1988 have been reduced by $5,000 from the $25,000 budgeted in 1987 while laundry expense is expected to decline $7,000 from the $45,000 budgeted for this year.

Also anticipated for 1988 is a $3,000 reduction in expenses for office supplies.

In presenting his budget, Miller told the board that the anticipated acquisition of a CT scanner for the hospital as well as approval of pending agreements between the hospital, city, and Snyder Independent School District for inclusion of their employees in the hospital self-insurance plan could raise the 1988 revenues above those projected.

Board members attending Friday's session included Rex Robinson, Dan Cotton, Roy McQueen, Janet Hall, Leon Autry, and Jackie Smith.

Two purse thefts reported to police

Snyder police are investigating two purse thefts reported Friday night.

Karen Sharp of Snyder filed the first of those reports at 8:58 p.m.

She told officers that her purse had been taken from her car while the vehicle was parked at the Cinema Theatre between 8:30 and 8:50 p.m.

Paula Rodriquez of Rt. 2, Snyder filed the second report at 2:46 a.m. Saturday.

She told investigators that her purse had been taken from her 1983 Ford while the vehicle was parked at the Latin American Center on 13th St. earlier in the evening.

In other action, city officers logged three misdemeanor arrests including one subject on a traffic warrant, one charged with driving while intoxicated, and one charged wth public intoxication.

Largest creditor challenges plan

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Plans to reorganize the PTL ministry will be challenged in bankruptcy court by its largest creditor, who said Friday that only Jim Bakker "can make this ministry work."

Roe Messner, a Wichita, Kan., building contractor who claims he is owed $14 million by PTL, met in secret with Bakker on Thursday night for more than two hours at the $1.3 million PTL-owned parsonage in Tega Cay where Bakker and his wife, Tammy Faye, are staying, Cable News Network reported.

Messner told CNN that he and other creditors are planning their own reorganization plan to present in bankruptcy court, where PTL's management under the Rev. Jerry Falwell has filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code.

PTL's business managers were given 120 days in which to present their reorganization plan to the bankruptcy court in Columbia.

PTL leaders last week blamed the ministry's $72 million in debts on Bakker's "chaotic mismanagement." Bakker resigned in disgrace and turned the ministry over to Falwell in March amid a sex and money scandal, and Falwell repeatedly has said Bakker's return would destroy PTL.

After leaving PTL, Bakker was defrocked by his denomination, the Assemblies of God.

Court documents filed so far in the case say PTL is $72 million in debt, with Messner the largest creditor.

The reorganization plan must be accepted by a majority of the creditors, which in PTL's case includes building contractors and the television stations that carry the ministry's programs. PTL listed 1,400 creditors.

Electrospace deal is putting Chrysler back into defense

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. announced Friday that it is getting back into the defense business after six years, unveiling an agreement to buy Texas-based Electrospace Systems Inc. for $367 million.

The electronics company's board unanimously recommended that shareholders accept Chrysler's $27-a-share offer, and Electrospace's four founders gave Chrysler an option to buy their 38 percent stake. The company has about 4,000 stockholders, who own 13.5 million shares.

The offer is more than five times the company's book value, although the stock had been trading higher on the New York Stock Exchange. Electrospace fell $3.37½ a share to $26.75 on Friday, while Chrysler rose 50 cents to $36.12½.

Chrysler left the defense business when it sold Chrysler Defense Inc. in 1981 as the struggling automaker fought to stave off bankruptcy. It has rebounded on the strength of its cost-cutting efforts, acquiring the airplane maker Gulf Aerospace Corp. in 1985 and reaching an agreement to buy American Motors Corp. earlier this year.

Chrysler sees the defense electronics business as a growth area and a hedge against the ups and downs of the auto and private aircraft businesses, said Michael Lauer, auto analyst with Oppenheimer & Co. in New York.

Chrysler probably will continue to acquire small defense and technology related businesses rather than make one large, billion-dollar acquisition, Lauer said.

"Gulfstream and Electrospace are just pieces of a mosaic that Chrysler is trying to build," Lauer said.

Electrospace, founded in 1970, earned $10 million on sales of $191 million in its fiscal year that ended April 3. About 96 percent of its business is defense-related, either with the government or with other contractors, said Robert Carrel, an Electrospace vice president and one of its founders.

The company, which is based in Richardson, Texas, has 2,500 employees and operations in Waco, Texas, and Washington, D.C. Its largest shareholder is its chairman and president, James R. Lightner, another of the founders.

"Electrospace Systems is a quality, high-technology company with outstanding talent and know-how," said Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca.

When Barbara Perkins of 2603 34th St. bought an antique piano from the Edith McKanna estate, she didn't realize her purchase would lead her into a lengthy research of its background.

The search has proved rewarding, however, as she has discovered the instrument may be among the oldest Broadwood pianos--the instrument favored by such famous composers as Beethoven and Mozart--still in existence.

"At the time I bought it, I didn't even know what a Broadwood was. I just liked the instrument," she admitted. The choral director for Snyder Junior High purchased the piece because of her own interest as a musician.

"Broadwoods could be found almost all over the world, including India, at one time," Barbara discovered. "It was considered prestigious to own one and often British military officers or diplomats would have one on their posts in other countries."

Although the instrument bears an 1808 date on its front panel, a stated date doesn't always indicate the date the piano was actually constructed.

Events in the life of John Broadwood and changes made in pianos around the listed date have convinced Barbara that her purchase had to have been built during or before that year.

One clue to the instrument's date is in its construction. Her piano is handmade and constructed entirely of wood. She explained that in 1810, piano builders began using metal frames.

Also, the inscription on the front panel states "John Broadwood and Son." In 1808, the addition of another son to the business changed the firm's name to "John Broadwood and Sons."

Curiosity about the complete inscription — "John Broadwood and Son, Makers to His Majesty and the Princess, Great Poultney Street, Golden Square, London 1808" — led Barbara to discover that the Broadwoods were piano makers to King George of England.

"Supposedly, the company is still in existence. I tried writing, but my letter was returned. Then I found a listing in a London phone book at (Texas) Tech, but again my letter was returned," she said.

She has enlisted the aid of a friend who regularly schedules theatre tours to London, to find the firm's new location. "The people in London keep such good records, I'm hoping to learn more about the piano from them."

In her research, Barbara has discovered that the firm was highly regarded by the composers of that era, including Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, Franz Joseph Hyden, Ludwig van Beethoven and Frederic Chopin.

"I read that Mozart and his father would go to (the Broadwood) shop in London to practice on his pianos and harpsichords before playing for the king. That was in the early 1700s," she explained.

"Hyden visited London twice in the 1790s and rented a room in the shop in which to compose. He rented a room across the street in which to live."

Barbara also discovered that in 1818 the firm gave Beethoven a grand piano with six octaves. Until the instrument was created, pianos were generally made with only 5½ octaves. Regarded as his favorite piano, the instrument has been restored and placed in a museum.

An instrument dated 1766 is the oldest Broadwood piano still in existence. One piano, dated 1810, is also on display in a London museum.

PIANO RESEARCHER — Barbara Perkins has spent the last few months trying to discover the history of a Broadwood piano she purchased from the Edith McKanna estate. Built sometime around 1808, the piano features a separate wooden sound board which lifts out of the top. (SDN Staff Photo by Noble B. Young)

Although it has not been tuned in several years, the piano remains in excellent condition. The instrument's wooden soundboard lifts out of the frame in one section. "I've not been able to find that in any other piano," she added. "It has almost all its original strings, too. The strings are very loose, so it's not in tune."

A piano tuner in Abilene tried to make adjustments to the strings, but lacks the necessary tools. After trying to make a clay impression of one of the pins that hold the strings taut, he removed a pin and plans to create a tool to fit it.

Her search, Barbara explained, began in books about pianos and music found in libraries. However, many of her leads have come through magazines on Colonial style homes and antiques.

A picture of a piano similar to her Broadwood found in one such publication prompted her to write the University of Michigan. The magazine identified the piano as belonging to the school's Stevens Collection.

Although she has yet to receive an answer from the museum director, she hopes to learn more about the Broadwood's construction and history.

"I am also hoping I can trace the history of this particular piano," she said. "I have not been able to find out where Mrs. McKanna got it — maybe in New York. But since she lived in Japan awhile, she could have bought it there."

Barbara has been cataloging her information as she discovers facts. Now that she is free from school duties for the summer, she plans to devote more time to the search.

A 1974 graduate of Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene with a bachelor of music degree, Barbara earned a master of music degree from Texas Tech

Migraine headaches

NEW YORK (AP) — Recent research into migraine headaches indicates they are more a matter of body chemistry than of stress, tension and fatigue, says Health magazine.

Other facts about migraines: the typical migraine sufferer is not necessarily a hard-driving overachiever, two out of three sufferers are women and nearly three-quarters of the people who get migraines report a family history of them.

Accurate defense pays off

When freely bid contracts are doubled at a high level, the best approach for you, as a defender, is to establish and take quick tricks. If there is a trump trick coming, you sit and wait for it. Low-level doubled contracts are a different story. The doubler is saying one of two things: either "Hey, partner, they're playing in my long suit" or "Together we have so much strength that the only way they can take any tricks is by crossruffing." In either case, the best defense against a low-level doubled contract is to lead trumps.

West certainly had a minimum for his takeout double, but he respected his partner's business double of two diamonds. He led a trump. Declarer won dummy's king, played a heart back to his king and another heart. East took the 10 and played another diamond. Declarer won the ace, ruffed a heart and played a club to the king and ace. It would be a mistake now for West to play either another club or his last heart. But he correctly played a spade to his partner's ace. East now took the remaining trumps, led a spade back to West's king, discarded his remaining club on the queen of hearts, and won the last two spade tricks. South was unlucky to make only four tricks and lose 1100 in his doubled contract, but East and West were right on target with their unerring defense. Note that without the opening trump lead, declarer should escape for only a two-trick set — a good result since East-West can easily make four spades.

A new book by James Jacoby and his father, the late Oswald Jacoby, is now available at bookstores. It is "Jacoby on Card Games," published by Pharos Books.

COTTON INSECT SITUATION

Cotton ranges from just planted to the matchhead square stage. Thrip numbers have gone down with the increasing temperatures and the new leaves are showing very little disease or thrip damage. Cotton square borer larvae are dying in the first terminal in which they were feeding, and are not making it to the next terminal. Fleahoppers are beginning to be seen in cotton which is squaring or near the squaring stage.

Boll weevil pheromone trap catch numbers have increased with the increasing temperatures. Hopefully the week of June 15th was our peak emergence. As cotton begins to produce matchhead size squares, weevils will move into this cotton and begin laying eggs. A square can go from pinhead to one-third grown in seven days.

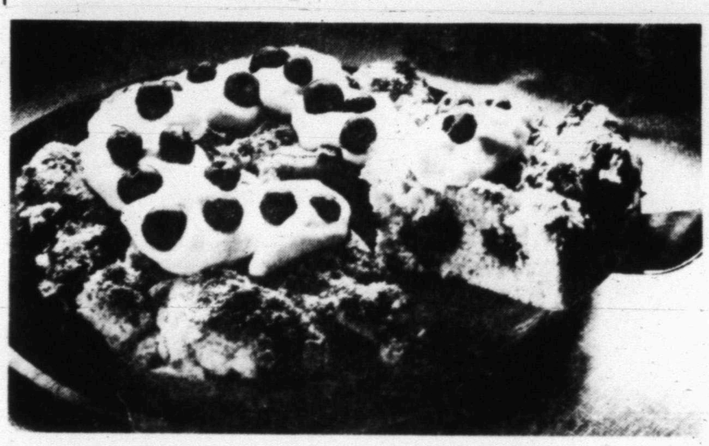
Blueberry shortcake bonanza



BAKED-IN BLUEBERRY SHORTCAKE — Bake fresh blueberries in shortcake. Serve warm, with more blueberries and dollops of whipped cream. (AP Photo)

By NANCY BYAL

Some folks prefer a rich biscuit as a shortcake base; others say sponge cake is better. I stand with the biscuit backers. This all-in-one blueberry shortcake has lots of the fresh fruit baked right into the biscuit. Cut it into wedges and serve it warm with whipped cream.

BLUEBERRY SHORTCAKE

2 cups all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons sugar
2½ teaspoons baking powder
½ cup margarine or butter
1 slightly beaten egg
½ cup milk
1 teaspoon finely shredded lemon peel
1 cup fresh blueberries
2 tablespoons sugar
Sweetened whipped cream
Fresh blueberries (optional)

In a large mixing bowl stir together the flour, 2 tablespoons sugar and baking powder. Cut in margarine until mixture resembles coarse crumbs. In a small mixing bowl stir together egg, milk and lemon peel. Stir egg mixture into flour mixture just until moistened. Spread half the dough evenly in a greased 8 by 1½-inch round baking pan. Top the dough with the blueberries. Sprinkle blueberries with 1 tablespoon of the sugar. Dot remaining dough over blueberries; sprinkle with remaining sugar.

Bake in a 400-degree oven for 25 to 30 minutes or until shortcake is light golden brown. While shortcake is still slightly warm, cut into 6 wedges. Serve warm topped with whipped cream. Sprinkle with additional fresh blueberries, if desired. Makes 6 servings.

PEANUT BUTTER BONANZA

For lunch, a snack, and even breakfast, a peanut butter sandwich is tops. One of our food editors, who claims that peanut butter was her first solid food, developed a dozen variations on the basic peanut butter sandwich. These five are our favorites.

Peanut butter sandwiches: Spread the filling of your choice on 4 slices of whole wheat bread. Top with 4 more slices of bread. Seal, label and freeze individually. Store the sandwiches up to 1 month in the freezer. In the morning, pack 1 frozen sandwich in a brown bag or lunch box. The sandwich will thaw in about 2 hours.

Spicy Apple Peanut Butter: Stir together ¾ cup peanut butter, ⅓ cup unsweetened applesauce, ¼ cup raisins and a dash ground cinnamon.

Banana Peanut Butter: Stir together ¾ cup peanut butter and 1 small banana, chopped.

Crunchy Peanut Butter; Stir together ¾ cup peanut butter and ½ cup finely chopped celery.

Tropical Peanut Butter: Stir together ⅔ cup peanut butter, one 8-ounce can drained crushed pineapple and ¼ cup coconut.

Apple Peanut Butter: Stir together ¾ cup peanut butter, 1 chopped apple and ½ cup shredded colby cheese.

Higher earnings for wives causing stress

CINCINNATI (AP) — Some married couples are finding a new challenge in the era of two-income marriages: coping with a situation where wives earn more money than their husbands.

For those who cannot adjust, the result could be divorce. In some cases, the women choose to quit their jobs or take lowerpaying jobs to remove the source of conflict, say sociologists who are studying the phenomenon.

Sociologists say couples are encountering new, and occasionally threatening, pressures in situations where women in professional careers earn more than their spouses.

"We have moved to a point now where men want women to work. Everybody wants a two-income marriage," says Dana Vannoy-Hiller, a University of Cincinnati sociologist. "But the men still want to make more."

The challenge is one of the latest during the 30 years in which American couples have had to adjust to the growing absorption of women into the work force, according to sociologists.

Marriages get into trouble when the spouses decide to become competitive about their salaries and careers, Ms. Vannoy-Hiller says.

"That gets you in trouble. That doesn't have a place in that kind of relationship. That's a downer," she says. "The real upper ... is for the male who is supportive and caring in the relationship."

The problem has become more acute in the era of widespread two-income marriages. More than one wife in five in two-earner households makes more money than her husband, Ms. Vannoy-Hiller found in a 1983 study she conducted with 489 couples in Hamilton County.

Those couples have to overcome traditional concepts of marital partners which generally hold that the man is the household's breadwinner and major supporter. Men aren't the only ones who can have trouble adjusting when their wives outearn them, Ms. Vannoy-Hiller says.

"It's not just the men. Women are part of the system. They've grown up in it," she says. "They expect the men to do better than them."

Wives who become the top earners in the family can face even greater pressures if they feel they should still be better parents and homemakers than their husbands. "Our concepts are tied to those traditional gender roles," Ms. Vannoy-Hiller says.

She conducted her 1983 study with sociologist William Philliber, formerly of the University of Cincinnati and now with the State University of New YorkNew Paltz. They are collaborating on a book, "Successful Women, Successful Marriages," that will be based on the results of the study, which was financed by the National Science Foundation.

Animal trainer turns pigs into stage stars

LAUDERDALE LAKES, Fla. (AP) — They may not be Lassie, Trigger or Flipper, but to Leslie Kimes his porkers are his pets, friends and show-biz partners.

The 21-year-old animal trainer is one of only a few people in this country who have performing pigs.

"They're a little more greedy than affectionate, but they make good pets," said the Neffs, Ohio, showman as he prepared for a recent performance at Boyd H. Anderson High School, part of a Lauderdale Lakes Lions Club charity program.

Kimes, billed as Cousin Grumpy and the Pork Chop Review, travels the country about 40 weeks a year, usually accompanied by a half dozen swine.

The star of Kimes' show and his favorite pig is Oink, 550 pounds of walking sausage meat. Oink sings, uses its snout to roll out an 18-foot red carpet at the start of each performance and nimbly rides down a five-foot slide.

At the age of 6, Oink, a thoroughbred Yorkshire, thrives on a diet of pig chow, apples and lettuce.

"Once in a while I'll give Oink a treat," said Kimes. "He likes watermelon and corn on the cob."

Like an obedient domestic canine, Oink responds immediately whenever Kimes calls him. And, like all pigs, he enjoys having his belly scratched.

"All the pigs perform on a reward system. When they are good they get dog biscuits," explained Kimes, who has spent a lifetime around pigs.

His father, the late Boyd Kimes, weighed 375 pounds and became well known as Uncle Heavy after he began his trained pig act in 1956. He died of a heart attack in 1979.

Kimes is currently concerned about Rosebud who retired a few weeks back but still travels in the truck that serves as home for the pigs. One of her stage tricks was barrell rolling.

"She's 12 years old and pigs don't live much longer than that," said Kimes sadly. He hopes to find a farm where the crossbred animal can spend her remaining years in leisure.

"I wouldn't butcher any of my pigs," Kimes said.

In training to take her place is Spud, a 1½-year-old red Duroc-Hampshire mixture.

"Pigs are not easy to train," said Kimes. "They have their moods and they are individuals."

Pigs, explained Kimes, are physically limited in what they can do. They are unable to roll over or stand unsupported on their hind legs, he said.

Petey is a strong animal and in fine condition from his hocks to his tenderloin. The 2-year-old Yorkshire is versatile on stage. He pushes a baby carriage while standing on his hind legs, jumps over hurdles, sits on cue and walks in and out of Kimes' legs on stage.

In reserve and the youngest of the lot is Petunia, a 3-month-old white Yorkshire with blue eyes.

"Petunia seems a little goofy. We'll see if she works out," said Kimes.

Trees are nature's dust and gas filters

SKIPPERS, Va. (AP) — An acre of lush, leafy trees can filter about 13 tons of dust and gases from the air around it each year, according to Georgia-Pacific Corp.

A deciduous tree with about 1,600 square yards of leaf surface can remove several pounds of dust throughout the summer, while evergreen trees can clean the air year-round, according to the forest products firm.

4-H is a youth program that helps young people learn how to do new and interesting things through learn-by-doing projects. Improving leadership and citizenship are two of the greatest benefits of 4-H club membership. Above all, 4-H is educational. 4-H has a definite meaning to each member. Janna Tate, senior member, has written what 4-H means to her.

WHAT 4-H MEANS TO ME

4-H means learning new skills from parents or friends. As a beginning 4-H'er, I chose to have a clothing, a food and a swine project. My interests soon developed, however, into the clothing project and I have gained most of my skills from this particular field.

4-H means getting along with the family and learning to appreciate their ideas. Cooperation in the family is vitally important when parents are teaching their youngsters how to effectively do a project. 4-H helps keep the family ties strong, and it emphasizes the importance of listening to and loving each other.

4-H means having the opportunity to teach younger folks skills I have learned through my own experiences. As a younger 4-H'er, it was a MUST to finish a project once I had started it, and that is probably the most important concept I could ever teach a beginning 4-H'er. There are many special project workshops in which older 4-H members teach junior members.

4-H means disciplining myself to the fact that I can't always win at every contest, but that I must look at my project and improve on my skills in the future. It is hard to get to state contest, especially for me in the district fashion show. District 2 is one of the most competitive districts in Texas in which to win, and if I ever get to state in the fashion show, I will have crossed one of my biggest mountains in my 4-H experience.

4-H means meeting new friends from the whole state of Texas. This is the best part about 4-H...making new friends. As a State 4-H Council member, I have had the opportunity to make friends with 4-H'ers from Kingsville all the way to Dumas and from El Paso to Ft. Worth. These people are just as interested in succeeding in life and in their future as I am, and that's why it is exciting to travel to new places and meet new friends. 4-H provides the opportunity to go to Austin to learn first-hand how a bill becomes a law. It provides the opportunity for me to give a speech in front of my peers as a project contest. Most of all, 4-H helps me to realize that other 4-H'ers want to make their life the most of what it can be, too.

4-H means looking into the future and seeing who tomorrow's leaders really are. The 4-H adult leaders thought has always been "4-H — The leaders of tomorrow," and I believe this is true. Through opportunity scholarships, 4-H allows members to look deeply into the future and to set their goals. I am very appreciative of my 4-H background, because I now have many skills that I can use for a lifetime, and I have friends whom I will have for a lifetime as well. Anyone who is in 4-H experiences all these adventures, plus, they grow a special love for the state of Texas. This, especially, I wouldn't trade for anything in the U.S.A.

Attorney in Texas receives subpoena

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Texas attorney is fighting a Nuclear Regulatory Commission subpoena because she wants an independent investigation into allegations of safety violations at the South Texas Nuclear Project.

On May 20, a subpoena was served by NRC Operations Director Victor Stello on Billie P. Garde, a Government Accountability Project attorney who represents a group of more than 35 workers at the plant.

The workers had come to her with concerns ranging from charges of harassment and intimidation to violation of federal and state laws by certain individuals and subcontractors at the plant near Bay City.

Ms. Garde states in her petition to quash the subpoena that her clients fear Stello would tell Houston Lighting & Power, the facility's owner, their identities and suggests an independent investigation would be more appropriate.

"Ms. Garde obtained from her clients their technical and expert opinions that formed the basis for their safety concerns" on the condition she not reveal their identities, according to her motion to quash the subpoena, filed with the NRC earlier this month.

"Allowing either Region IV or Victor Stello to be in charge of the investigation will severely compromise their safety concerns and substantially increase the risk that their identities will be disclosed to HL&P," she said.

She suggests that neither Stello nor any NRC Region IV officials are capable of conducting a competent inspection of worker allegations at the plant because the alleged safety violations might reflect on their professional conduct.

"It is Mr. Stello and Region IV whose past and present conduct ... have convinced Ms. Garde and her clients that only an independent investigation team can properly evaluate and act upon the concerns of these workers," her motion said.

4-H SCHOLARSHIP WINNER--Janna Tate, Scurry County 4-H'er, was awarded the Floyd D. Lynch 4-H Foundation Scholarship at the recent Texas 4-H Roundup. In order to qualify for the non-agricultural related scholarship, an application was sent to the state 4-H scholarship committee and Tate was selected to interview with the state committee at Texas A&M during Texas 4-H Roundup. The Floyd Lynch Scholarship is a $1,000 scholarship. Lynch is one of the founders of the Texas 4-H Council, the Texas 4-H Congress and Texas 4-H Roundup. Tate plans to use the scholarship toward a home economics major at Lubbock Christian University this fall. She is the daughter of J. B. and Kathryn Tate. (4-H Photo)

Teens Hunting for Summer Jobs Need Attitude Check

DEAR ABBY: Will you please reprint that letter you ran beginning "Dear Kid"? It was signed "The Boss" — explaining why he picked "the other kid" who had applied for a job. It appeared in your column several years ago, but with summer here it would be helpful if you ran it again. I am a businessman, and you wouldn't believe what comes in here applying for a job. Thank you.

PORTLAND, ORE., BUSINESSMAN

DEAR BUSINESSMAN: With pleasure. Here's the piece, and well worth the space. It appeared in The Cincinnati Enquirer, in William Raspberry's syndicated column. It was written by Karen Rak, who teaches English to students at Center Junior High School in Strongsville, Ohio.

Ms. Rak composed a letter (ostensibly from an employer) designed to let her youthful job seekers see themselves as they are seen. With so many young people looking for jobs now, I think this piece deserves all the exposure it can get:

"DEAR KID: Today you came to me for a job. From the look of your shoulders as you walked out, I suspect you've been turned down before, and maybe you believe by now that kids your age can't find jobs.

"But I hired a teen-ager today. You saw him. What was so special about him? Not experience; neither of you had any. Attitude, son. A-T-T-I-T-U-D-E. He did his best to impress me. That is where he edged you out.

"He wasn't dressed like Easter Sunday, but then that wasn't necessary. His clothes were clean, and he had gotten a haircut. He filled out the application form neatly and completely. He did not ask to borrow a pen. He carried his Social Security card, had basic identification and did not ask, 'What's a reference?'

"He didn't have two friends waiting for him by the pop machine. He didn't start to chew gum or smoke while being interviewed. He didn't keep looking at his watch, giving me the impression that he had something more important to do.

"He took the time to find out how we 'operate' here, and what his day-to-day tasks would be. I think he'll keep his eyes open and work for me like he'd work for himself.

"He was willing to start at that point where I could afford to pay. Someday, perhaps, he'll get to the point where he'll have more authority over others and a better paycheck.

"You know, kid, men have always had to get a job like you get a girl: case the situation, wear a clean shirt, and try to appear reasonably willing.

"Maybe jobs aren't as plentiful right now, but there are jobs. You may not believe it, but all around you employers are looking for young men and women smart enough to go after a job in the old-fashioned way.

"If you have even the vaguest idea of what I'm trying to say, let it show the next time you ask for a job. You will be head and shoulders above the rest.

"For both our sakes, get eager, will you?

THE BOSS"

DEAR READERS: I need your cooperation for an important survey.

Question: Have you ever cheated on your mate? How long have you been together?

You need not sign your name, but please state your age, and indicate whether you are male or female. Send letter or postcard to: Abby's Survey, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. Please let me hear from you.

DEAR ABBY: My mother passed away, and six weeks later my much-loved dog died. When friends would tell me that they were sorry to hear about my mother's death, it would remind me of my dog, and I have replied, "Thank you, but my wonderful dog also died, and I miss him very much." I would see their eyebrows rise, then silence. But the truth of the matter is, I really loved my dog more.

My husband tells me not to mention our dog at these times. "People will not understand," he says. "They probably will think that you are strange."

Abby, why should I not say exactly how I feel? People who know me well are aware that I am a fairly straightforward person. And I don't care what the others think.

In order to spare my husband embarrassment, what do you think I should say? My dog was 14 years old, and his death left a great emptiness in my life. My mother was sick and elderly, and her passing was a relief. I hope you will say that I have a right to my honest feelings.

STRAIGHTFORWARD

DEAR STRAIGHT: Everyone has a right to his "honest feelings," but when someone expresses sympathy on the death of your mother (as sick and elderly as she may have been), for you to bring up the death of your "wonderful" dog, and how much you miss him, is demeaning to the memory of your mother.

In order to spare your husband embarrassment, just say, "Thank you" and let it go at that.

DEAR ABBY: What's wrong with me? I am very much attracted to men who smoke cigars. It doesn't matter how old the man is, or whether he's good-looking or not; if he has the aroma of a cigar on him, I just can't resist wanting to get close to him.

I'm 28 years old and considered attractive. Ever since I was a little girl I have loved the smell of cigars. My father never even smoked cigarettes, but my grandfather smoked cigars constantly, so that's probably what turned me on to loving them. I can barely remember my grandfather. He died when I was 8 years old.

Now I'm going to tell you something you won't believe. Unless there is cigar smoke around, I can't get excited about the man. I had a boyfriend who smoked cigars just to please me, but cigars made him sick and that ended our romance.

Now I think I should try to overcome this cigar mania. Would hypnosis help? Or should I see a psychiatrist? With so many people complaining about pollution and the evils of smoking, it's hard to find a cigar smoker these days.

CIGAR LOVER

DEAR CIGAR LOVER: Hypnosis might help, but I think you should see a psychiatrist. Preferably one who doesn't smoke cigars.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I married a very wealthy man, and whenever he is angry with me, he says I married him only for his money. This isn't true and it hurts my feelings. Why does he do this, and how can I stop him?

N.T.

DEAR N.T.: You can't. He says you married him only for his money because he probably thinks that's all he has going for him.

Gonzalez confronts defense official before subcommittee

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Rep. Henry Gonzalez has accused a Defense Department official of illegally lobbying Congress against an amendment he authored dealing with the expansion of Brooke Army Medical Center.

The 13-term congressman contends that by telling reporters the Defense Department would halt all work on the Brooke project if the Gonzalez amendment was passed, David Newhall III, deputy assistant secretary of defense, was attempting to influence Congress illegally.

"The record will show that Mr. Newhall took it upon himself to carry out a campaign designed to prevent enactment of legislation he did not like," Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, said Thursday before a House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on the issue.

The Gonzalez amendment, which was attached to the 1988 House defense appropriations bill, sought to clarify cost estimates for alternative expansion plans and ban construction on the hospital before Congress appropriates funds.

A battle between Gonzalez and the military over the size of the Brooke expansion has been going on for years. In 1984, Congress authorized a 450-bed hospital capable of expanding to 695 beds and asked the Pentagon to draw up plans for the $14 million project.

Two years later, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs William Mayer decided that a 150-bed facility was better, but after negotiations, compromised with Congress on a 200-bed hospital that could expand to 450 beds.

Cost estimates of have ranged from $135 million to more than $300 million.

"In these circumstances, I suggested legislation that would require Mayer's office to submit reliable cost estimates for the alternatives available for this project," Gonzalez said.

"Newhall, however, reacted to this proposal by ordering, on April 29, a stop to all activity. He advised all concerned congressional offices except mine of his action. He made sure that San Antonio press representitives knew. He indicated that unless this legislation requiring his office to produce information was killed, he would kill the hospital project."

Newhall testified that he decided on the halt order after determining the Gonzalez measure repealed a portion of the 1987 National Defense Authorization Act that established the project size at 200 beds expandable to 450 beds.

"I took steps immediately within the Department of Defense to prevent the waste of funds which could have occurred if I had allowed work to proceed and the Gonzalez amendment were to be enacted subsequently into law," Newhall said.

"In response to reporters' questions, I was quoted in the San Antonio newspapers as saying design work would halt this summer if Congress passed the Gonzalez amendment," Newhall said.

Grand jury decides not to indict anyone

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — No indictments were issued by a grand jury investigating a collision between a Trailways bus and a moving van that claimed the lives of six people and injured 19 others.

A Jefferson County grand jury decided Thursday not to return any indictments in the May 4 crash on Interstate 10 in Beaumont.

Jefferson County prosecutors spent the past month reviewing a police report on the wreck before presenting it to the grand jury. Jefferson County District Attorney Tom Maness said the results of the review concurred with the grand jury's decision.

"At this time any litigation growing out of this would be in the civil courts," Maness said.

Five civil lawsuits are pending in Beaumont courts in connection with the fatal wreck.

Twenty-seven passengers were aboard the bus when the moving van, owned by Graebel Movers International Inc., crossed the median on the rain-slick highway and struck the bus head-on.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) For you to be as productive as you would like to be today, it may be necessary to link up with someone who is as ambitious and energetic as yourself.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You're not apt to mind working extra hard doing things around your home today as long as a willing co-worker pitches in.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) It will help put you in the proper frame of mind for the rest of the week if you participate in some form of vigorous social activity today. Be sure it's fun, however.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be both dedicated and persistent today in an involvement that is materially meaningful to you and your family. Make this the chief issue on your list of priorities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Don't wait for what you want to come to you today. If things aren't moving fast enough to please you, take immediate and direct action.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You'll do well in commercial arrangements today if you are firm but considerate. These tactics will fare better than those that are too assertive or demanding.

Throngs jam archaeology dig

PERRYTON, Texas (AP) — Archaeologists who descended on Ochiltree County by the hundreds have unearthed new insight into the largest — and perhaps oldest — prehistoric Indian community in Texas.

The Panhandle site is one of the most significant in the nation, but little was known about the lifestyle of the people who left the buried city 800 years ago, Oklahoma freelance archaeologist David Hughes says.

With 340 participants in the Texas Archaeological Society's annual field school working last week under the supervision of experts led by Hughes, the pieces of the puzzle have started to fit.

The students — ranging in age from 6 to 89 — crawled over, under and around dig sites to gain practical field experience.

"I was in shock when I heard how many people would be here," Hughes said. "I was expecting about 150 people at the most."

Keeping hundreds of men, women and children organized was no easy task, he said. But pandemonium has its payoffs.

"In the last eight days, we nearly matched what we accomplished in eight weeks last year," Hughes said.

"What we have here is an archaeological siting that's not duplicated in North America, with the possible exception of Chaco Canyon in New Mexico, a national monument," he said. "We estimate there were 30 village complexes on this site and all were little towns with 300 people each."

All the villages might not have been inhabited at exactly the same time, Hughes said, but he's fairly certain he knows what kept the Indians in residence from about 1150 A.D. to 1450 A.D.

"There's an important resource here that they looked for and it wasn't the abundant water and it wasn't the buffalo. It was the trees," he said, pointing to the still-plentiful cottonwoods lining what is now Wolf Creek State Park.

"It's a culture we've had no understanding of until now," said Bob Malouf, Texas' state architect. "It appears, because of their trading and migrating, that these people were influenced from the north to northeast, not the south like we had thought."

Artifacts found at the site came from the Pacific Ocean and Montana, which were major trade contacts for sedentary buffalo hunters who inhabited Ochiltree County, he told the Amarillo Globe-News.

Other finds include pottery with designs not seen before in this region — a bison skull, sea shells, fish bones, corn, beans, hunting and knapping tools and jewelry.

This was the third consecutive summer archaeologists have combed the banks of Wolf Creek searching for clues to unravel mysteries behind the artifacts owned by the ancient dwellers who inhabited the Texas Panhandle.

The sites were explored in 1907 and 1920, but five years ago, Harold Courson of Perryton bought most of the land and the digging became intense.

Courson, who owns an oil company, granted archaeological easements and financed previous digs on the property. This year he supplied wells, generators, pressure tanks, booster pumps, pipes, hoses and air conditioned trailers for the group.

"We're trying to apply a little oil field technology to the dig site," said Kirk Courson, Harold Courson's son.

The society field school will be held at the site again next year, and the Coursons hope to have constructed a museum on or near the site by then for people to view the findings.

"The Coursons are some of the strongest supporters in archaeology we have in the state," Malouf said. "They not only appreciate what they have but want others to enjoy it too, it's a very altruistic way of doing things."

APPRECIATION PLAQUES--Bob Clifton of KSNY and Shirley A. Gorman of the Snyder Daily News received plaques of appreciation last week from Barbara Burney, chairman of the Child Welfare Board. The two were recognized for their efforts in promoting the local organization. (SDN Staff Photo)

Tomatoes require sunshine to ripen, but too much of a good thing can cause sunscald, according to Better Homes and Gardens. This malady shows up as a white or yellow papery blister on the part of the tomato that is most exposed to the sun. Although natural foliage cover usually provides the necessary protection, plants damaged by disease or insects often have insufficient leaf cover. To correct this, let plants sprawl on the ground.

Experts predict hurricane deaths will decrease

HOUSTON (AP) — While the number of deaths from hurricanes is expected to drop in coming years, the amount of property damage is likely to rise, hurricane specialists have told a workshop.

Robert C. Sheets, acting director of the National Hurricane Center, said hurricanes now cause about $1 billion damage per year on average in the United States.

The number of lives lost each year, meanwhile, has been trending lower each year, he told a Houston-Galveston hurricane workshop.

"We're always going to have that 5 to 8 people, I suspect, that are going to lose their lives, and occasionally we may get in where we see another one of these spikes (increases)," he said.

Sheets attributed climbing property damage to the poor enforcement of building codes which he feels are already insufficient.

"I think there are problems with those codes, and the way you enforce them," he said.

A Dallas engineer who investigates storm damage disagreed with Sheets, however, contending most destruction is caused by the tidal surge and flying objects driven by the hurricane winds and is not directly attributable to building code violations.

Hurricane winds, which during the most severe storms can reach 180 mph for periods of six hours or more, can turn anything from a wood plank to a mobile home into a missile, Timothy P. Marshall, of Haag Engineering Co., said.

"If the wind blows and things aren't tied down ... they're going to blow away," he said. "I've seen too many cases where these things (mobile homes) roll and tumble" at 60 or 70 mph and roll into other buildings or whatever gets in their way, he said.

Both men agreed that protection can be enhanced by the use of anchoring devices known as hurricane straps, which secure structures to foundations. They also noted a house too close to the beach can get swept away in the destructive hurricane tidal surge, literally a wall of water pushed ashore by the force of the winds.

"If there's a weak point in that building, Mother Nature will take advantage of that," Marshall said.

In order to help reduce both the number of deaths as well as the damages caused by hurricanes and tropical storms, Sheets said the hurricane center must work on its forecasting and public warning techniques.

But he cited previous hurricanes, which showed the forecasting business is imprecise at best.

Last Sunday morning 'til past noon, a time better reserved for Sabbath worship, we nailed up sheetrock in a hot attic.

At this point, we'll note that no one gives a hoot what we or any other newspaper editor did last Sunday. Patience, however, will see the personal reference explained.

Because of the nature of the work, we opted to postpone a morning shower, knowing that later in the day considerable grit from sheetrock dust would have to be washed away.

As the morning approached noon and beyond, the attic temperature went from uncomfortable to stifling. And as it grew hotter, sweat started evacuating our overworked system like water from a squeezed sponge.

We found ourselves trying to hold a 4 by 8 ft. piece of sheetrock overhead, an effort which reminded us of Atlas balancing the world on his shoulders. It is a position which brings you uncomfortably close to your own underarms.

And at this point, we thought to ourselves, "Phew! I haven't smelled anything like that since..."

In our mind, we went back to the summer of 1962, when the folks, now long since retired, still operated their grocery store.

It was a business big enough to supply a month's worth of groceries and small enough to still deliver the brown sacks to your doorstep if you asked.

It must have been the summer of '62, because, as a newly turned 14-year-old, we'd just obtained a driver's license. As a result, the job of delivering groceries or fetching those customers who couldn't drive fell to us. Pop had a 1952 Ford pickup for this purpose.

That summer afternoon, as the sun blazed at its zenith, in walked a customer not entirely welcomed, a town character named "Never Sweat" Johnson. His nickname was self-inflicted, since he bragged that he once worked in a deodorant factory but had to take early retirement after falling into one of the large vats used to make the sweet-smelling stuff.

As a result, he said, his chemistry changed and he no longer sweated. He told this story every time someone asked him why he never seemed to take a bath.

Since his "retirement," and a rumored insurance settlement, he earned his living by cleaning out the chicken houses south of town.

His normal routine at our store was to buy approximately one sack of groceries--about $5 worth in those days--before asking Pop if he'd mind driving him to his home, located some 2 miles out in the country.

Five bucks was a sufficient amount to insure the answer would be yes. This particular day was different, though, since Dad had a new helper with a new driver's license.

Even though we were only 14, it didn't take us long to figure out the beginning and the end to this episode, and about this time we started drifting towards the stockroom.

"Don," Pop called, "Come up here and let's take Mr. Johnson home."

Before we could make it to the front of the store, Dad intercepted us and added, "You slip into the front seat and don't give up the passenger side for love nor money."

With me in place, Pop placed the single sack of groceries between us and climbed behind the wheel of the old Ford pickup. "Mr. Johnson, we're out of room up here. Would you mind climbing into the back?"

Thus loaded fore and aft, we headed for the town's outskirts at a significantly higher rate of speed than my father normally drove.

Nailing sheetrock offers you plenty of time to consider. And this past Sunday, some 25 years after the fact, we came to realize that of all the options offered Pop that day, he somehow made the right decision on every one.

Country Life

By Deanie Francis Mills

Last week I wrote about the Child-Full Years and how busy we get with lessons and rehearsals and practices and games. There is another aspect of the Child-Full Years I want to mention, and it has to do with being a woman and a mother.

When a woman has her babies in her twenties, by the time she is in her mid-thirties they are all in school. And that is the time for most women, nowadays, to "go back" to something. They "go back to work," or "go back to school," or "go back to teaching." Contrary to some redneck opinions, it has nothing to do with "women's lib"; it has everything to do with financial survival for the family. It is a rare family, in this day and time, which can thrive and provide for the future on a single income — in fact, many families only have one provider, anyway.

Many women who choose to stay home with pre-school children gave up established careers to do so, or broke off their studies. It's a culture shock, I can tell you, to suddenly find yourself with nowhere to go each morning, no particular purpose in life beyond surviving that day and the challenges wrought by colic and teething. You miss teacher's lounge rivalries or office intrigue, lunchtime laughter with a friend.

About five or six years ago, a group of us mamas who were all in the same boat gravitated together like steel shavings and magnets. We met at places like Mother's Day Out. We never organized into anything as cutesy as a coffeeklatsch or bridge club, but every couple of weeks or so we wound up at one of our houses. We'd pile the kids into a toy-filled room within hearing range of their shrieks and giggles and fights, and gather around a scarred old kitchen table with iced tea and munchies.

For the next few hours we'd disassemble and reconstruct various political systems, dissect religion, swap the latest good books, argue over each other's taste in movies, gossip, complain about men, moan over in-laws, and poke fun at our own children (where they couldn't hear us, of course). And laugh. Nothing was too reverent for a good ole belly-laugh.

Late in the afternoon we'd collect our young and drive home, warm and comforted and still smiling, thinking, "I'm glad I'm not the only one who yells at her kids," and "It's nice to know someone else can go a whole month without particularly liking her spouse," and "I thought MY in-laws were exasperating!" Through the years we gave each other enough support to shore up a whole flood of troubles. We might not agree with each other all the time or approve of one another's kids, but we developed a fierce loyalty — a sisterhood, if you will.

One by one, the children started school, became involved in sports and lessons. And we, their mothers, began to reach out to the community, giving each in her own special way. And, gradually, almost every one of our original group has "gone back to" something or other. I haven't gone back to anything; I've been working steadily at home all along, but the work I do now is much more demanding than it was when my children were small. It's one thing to do interesting little feature stories for the "Dallas Morning News" and "Towns West" magazine, quite another to research and write a full-length novel or attempt a screenplay adaptation.

So, with our Child-Full and busy lives, we run into each other at the supermarket and complain about it all as we pass in the aisles. At home, I push away from my desk and stretch the kinks out of my back, grab an I.B.C. Rootbeer from the fridge and go sit on the porch swing. The wind teases the chimes I got for Mother's Day from my daughter, and for just a moment, the sound of laughter echoes in the stillness.

And I wonder, just long enough for the thought to linger in the air, if my fellow mama friends miss me half as much as I miss them.

SDN Week in Review

SUNDAY
June 14

Two computer errors have forced officials with the Scurry County Appraisal District to recalculate certified values for the county's six taxing entities and to reissue some 20 to 30 reduced value notices for ag-related property.

Appraisal officials have now eliminated from their original value estimates some $50 million in oil and gas mineral values and about $12 million in agricultural values, it was reported Sunday.

The latest report for Snyder's sales tax return shows the month-to-month comparison down some 6.8 percent while the year-to-date figure continues to stay at or near minus 25 percent, it was reported Sunday.

The month-to-month figure, while still in the minus category, is an improvement over previously monthly comparisons in 1987.

For sales reported here during April, the 1 percent sales tax returned $45,435. For the same period last year, the return was $48,802.

MONDAY
June 15

Tony Mauldin, who has directed Morton High School to the Class 2A state tournament for the past six years, was named the new men's basketball coach at Western Texas College Monday.

Mauldin was the unanimous choice of a selection committee organized to make a recommendation to WTC president Dr. Harry Krenek, it was noted.

At Morton, he fashioned a record of 227 wins and 83 losses. His teams have not lost a district contest in six years.

Commissioners authorized seeking bids for a new employee payroll deduction plan during their regular weekly meeting Monday.

The court agreed to advertise for bids for a third party administrator to implement a "cafeteria plan" which will allow county employees to deduct qualifying items from their paychecks before federal income taxes and Social Security taxes are deducted.

A general overview of projected school district spending for instruction--a figure still minus such high dollar budget items as salaries--was offered to Snyder board members Monday.

The total considered Monday, even before trustees begin whittling away at funding proposals, was almost $26,000 below the final figure approved last year.

A student dress code recommendation eliminating shorts--even those "knee-length"--at the junior high and high school level was adopted Monday by the Snyder school board.

In its decision, the board backed away from including this ban at the elementary grades, however.

The recommendation from administrators was to stop the wearing of shorts as classroom attire at all grade levels.

Snyder ISD gained a new assistant superintendent in charge of administration and personnel Monday as Dalton Moseley, superintendent the past seven years at Pecos, was hired.

Moseley, age 49, brings some 27 years of teaching and administrative experience to Snyder ISD, serving as superintendent of Pecos-Barstow-Toyah ISD in Pecos since 1980.

TUESDAY
June 16

Due primarily to the continued decline of sales tax returns here--now running at a minus 25 percent--and an unexpected shortfall in water sales, the City of Snyder is now expecting to end its current budget year some $397,000 below its initial estimates for income.

This fact was presented to city council members at their first budget workshop Tuesday, and possible ways to offset this shortfall while planning for a new budget took up the majority of discussion time.

The new executive director for the Snyder Chamber of Commerce and the Board of County Development will be Bill Moss, currently serving in a similar position with the Monahans chamber.

WEDNESDAY
June 17

The Scurry County Board of Development agreed Wednesday to accept sponsorship of the annual July 4th celebration here, a change which will allow a $1,000-plus savings on costs tied to liability insurance.

The switch had been requested by the Snyder Chamber of Commerce, which will continue to organize and implement the annual celebration.

THURSDAY
June 18

Wayland G. Holt, who successively served Scurry County as its county attorney, district attorney and district judge, died during the night at his home, it was reported Thursday.

His death occurred at 12:25 a.m., two days after his 72nd birthday.

Services were set at 2 p.m. Saturday at Colonial Hill Baptist Church.

FRIDAY
June 19

Snyder school students, when compared nationwide in tests measuring language art and mathematic skills, have increased their performance levels some 25 percentage points since 1979, it was reported Friday.

The comparison was part of the Comprehensive Test of Basic Skills (CTBS) report.

At all ages, we're all aging

After analyzing data about human life expectancy, many knowledgeable medical gurus have become convinced that our bodies are programmed to give out at approximately the same time: 85 years of age. Actually, the wearing out begins in earnest right after our reproductive peak, at about age 35. Nature carries us through our maturation until the continuation of the species has been assured. Then, unkindly and unyieldingly, things begin to go wrong.

If you look at historical life expectancy, you'll be struck by the downward slope of the straight line that has represented the relation between age and death. Today, however, that line is not sloped; it extends outward along the horizontal and then drops precipitously. The message is clear: Modern medicine and an emphasis on healthy lifestyles permit more people to remain alive until their genes — or whatever chemicals decide these things — wear out. We don't yet have enough control over our biochemical workings to extend life beyond that limit.

I don't know about you, but I'm not thrilled by this news.

Gerontologists, specialists in the elderly, estimate that once a person reaches 65, he or she will have developed at least five serious diseases. These include arteriosclerosis, arthritis, cancer, hypertension, mental deterioration, prostate trouble and an awe-inspiring host of metabolic derangements. Experienced physicians accept, with discomfort, the fact that although many of these diseases can be treated and controlled during middle age, medical science has created painfully few methods for prolonging the useful lives of the elderly. We often find ourselves letting older patients fly on automatic pilot, at the same time taking care not to poison them with miraculous drugs in our naive enthusiasm to treat an aging process over which we have no real influence. Once a person reaches his mid-70s, he probably will live out his genetic life expectancy without interference by young doctors. In fact, he or she undoubtedly will fare better if physicians restrict their finaglings and leave the person alone.

Of course, people do live beyond 85. Current theory suggests that they may be medical rarities whose cellular chemical reactions have somehow been modified to place them out of the normal range. This area needs a lot more investigation; traditional medicine has been much more oriented toward fixing than toward discovering the reasons certain people achieve truly old age. For example, we don't understand how a 95-year-old woman in a nursing home can continue to play cutthroat bridge and argue intelligently about current events, while her 65-year-old son languishes in another institution across town with a baffling and severe dementia that prevents him from recognizing his own children. It's a frightening reality.

After age 35, Nature is not our friend; the natural progression is deterioration. Our enzymes follow a pattern that is built into our cells. All the wondrous chemicals that are available to treat and to heal may actually injure the elderly to one degree or another. Doctors must learn to be parsimonious in treating older patients, because poly-pharmacy — the overuse of multiple preparations — usually reacts differently, and badly, in the elderly.

It seems to me that our goal, as doctors, must be kept simple: to improve the quality of life in the elderly by encouraging mobility and independence. Obviously, we need to treat serious and acute conditions — antibiotics for pneumonia, pacemakers for a failing heart and drugs for immobilizing arthritis. But life-support systems, although a godsend for the young, may be just plain inappropriate for the older patient with multi-system failure, who has little — if any — hope for a relatively independent existence.

Since we're new at this game of prolonging life, we doctors need lots of advice or we will blunder. We need to know and understand our patients' wishes. Most important, we need to remember that science can only alter the shape of the life-expectancy curve, not its end. We must help people cram as much into their allotted life spans as they can. We would do well to remember that the old can do everything the young can do — it just takes longer.

Send your questions to Dr. Gott in care of this newspaper at P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Due to volume of mail, individual questions cannot be answered. Questions of general interest will be answered in future columns.

Jury still out on broiled meat

DEAR DR. GOTT — What, if any, are the cancer-causing effects of eating charcoal-broiled meat?

DEAR READER — A carcinogen is a compound that can cause cancer. These substances are present in infinitessimal quantities in many foods we eat; most of them are neutralized during digestion. Some studies have suggested that there are compounds in meat that, when heated, undergo chemical changes and become carcinogenic. For example, fried bacon and charcoal-broiled steaks have been found to contain more carcinogenic material after cooking than before.

To my knowledge, the evidence connecting charcoal-cooked meat to cancer is still too unsubstantiated to permit a recommendation against eating this food. A person is probably more at risk of developing high blood cholesterol from consuming charcoal-broiled steaks. However, charcoal-broiling appears to increase the number of carcinogens. The prudent and health-conscious consumer must take this fact into account when deciding how often to enjoy a juicy steak broiled on the barbecue.

Because of your interest in this topic, I'm sending you a free copy of my Health Report on VIRUSES AND CANCER, which tells about the latest discoveries in cancer research. Other readers who want a copy should send $1 and their name and address to P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I have an allergy to cane sugar. How can I tell if wine, bourbon, brandy and other alcohol are made with cane sugar?

DEAR READER — Simple sugar, made from cane or beets, is ubiquitous in our processed-food culture. It is added to many foods for flavor. However, most alcoholic beverages contain no cane sugar. Although some wines are sweeter than others, this is because of fruit sugar that remains after fermentation. Sweet liqueurs may contain sugar; it's hard to say, because the products are made with "secret" formulas that the manufacturers jealously guard. Spirits have no sugar added, except in one instance: Distillers in the Caribbean make their rum from sugar cane, and some sugar is added to flavor the product.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I've had Bell's palsy on one side of my face. What causes it?

DEAR READER — Bell's palsy is paralysis of the facial nerve. It can be caused by injury, a tumor that compresses the nerve, or — in most cases — an idiopathic (unknown) infection. Branches of the facial nerve supply many of the facial muscles, so Bell's palsy patients may not be able to close an eye, or the cheek muscles may droop, making closure of the mouth difficult.

The palsy may affect one side of the face or (less commonly) both; it may be permanent or temporary. There is no cure but, with time, most patients experience notable improvement.

Man claims to be son of LBJ

DALLAS (AP) — A man claiming to be the illegitimate son of former President Lyndon B. Johnson has filed suit against Lady Bird Johnson for $10.5 million, alleging she conspired to deny him part of the Johnson inheritance.

Steven Mark Brown of Dallas, in the suit filed Thursday, included an affidavit from his mother in which she claimed to have had an affair with Johnson from 1948 to 1969.

Calls placed by The Associated Press today to a spokeswoman for Mrs. Johnson for comments were not returned.

"My legal birthrights have been violated and a conspiracy was formed to deprive me of my legal heirship," Brown wrote in his lawsuit.

He also accused two friends of Johnson, Jess C. Kellam of Austin and Jerome T. Ragsdale of Dallas, of participating in the conspiracy.

Madeline Brown said in her affidavit that Ragsdale, a Dallas attorney who died in 1978, was assigned to handle the legal problems involved with her pregnancy.

Mrs. Brown said Ragsdale later claimed to have fathered the child himself.

"This was to shield Lyndon Baines Johnson from any adverse publicity," Mrs. Brown said.

Ragsdale kept records of Brown's birth in a safe-deposit box at the Mercantile Bank, according to papers filed in the suit. After Ragsdale's death in 1978, Mrs. Brown said, officials discovered that the box had been drilled open and contents removed.

Mrs. Brown claimed she met Johnson at a social function at a Dallas hotel in 1948. At that time, she said, Johnson invited her to his television station at the Driskill Hotel in Austin.

Arms control said troubled

WASHINGTON (AP) — The skies were blue, the air pollution-free on Maryland's Eastern Shore. Two dozen reporters tried to keep their minds focused on the future of arms control.

What they heard from a stream of senior Reagan administration officials who drove over from Washington in sleek limousines or were dropped in by helicopter for the two-day U.S.-sponsored seminar was mostly on the pessimistic side.

There are still a number of problems to resolve before an agreement is sealed in Geneva to rid Europe and Asia of hundreds of nuclear-tipped missiles. One official said it might take until March. Another said a treaty by year's end was possible, but he would not bet on it.

Where bigger and more dangerous weapons are concerned — the bombers, missiles and submarines that can span continents with nuclear devastation — the Soviets are not even willing to negotiate unless and until President Reagan restricts his search for an anti-missile defense in space.

And Reagan has ruled that out. "Star Wars" is going ahead.

A senior presidential adviser, Paul H. Nitze, is trying to persuade the president to authorize special U.S.-Soviet talks. The idea would be to take some of the steam out of the controversy over the Strategic Defense Initiative by figuring out which kinds of technology could be tested legally.

AP analysis

So far, Reagan is resisting.

An agreement on missiles in Europe and Asia seemed in the bag only last week when the North Atlantic Council, at the behest of Secretary of State George P. Shultz, gave its approval in Reykjavik, Iceland, to the terms Shultz had worked out with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev in April.

The strategic weapons accord, on the other hand, was never considered a cinch. But Reagan and Gorbachev had tentatively agreed last October at their Reykjavik summit meeting to slash U.S. and Soviet strategic arsenals by 50 percent. So hopes were raised at least a little bit.

It's been eight years since the two superpowers concluded their last major arms control agreement. That was SALT II, limiting various categories of long-range weapons. Reagan called it "fatally flawed" and decided last year it was not worth keeping alive.

But he joyously reported to the nation Monday night that the United States had a "historic opportunity" to sharply reduce and possibly eliminate Soviet intermediate-range missiles.

In Moscow, however, a senior Soviet official was telling a ranking American that Shultz may have "misunderstood" Gorbachev as saying the Soviets were willing to dismantle about 40 shorter-range rocket launchers in Asia.

U.S. negotiator Max M. Kampelman left Wednesday for Geneva determined to battle that out with Soviet negotiator Yuli Vorontsov.

And that's not the only problem.

U.S. negotiators are still trying to get the Soviets to remove 33 other medium-range missiles from their Asian territory while refusing to yield to Soviet demands that 33 matching U.S. rockets not be stored in Alaska.

Japan and China claim they are threatened by the Soviet missiles. The Soviets feel the same way about U.S. rockets in Alaska.

Whatever the outcome, verifying Soviet compliance with the treaty could be a headache. There is some question how many medium-range SS-20 rockets the Soviets now have. So it would be very hard to tell how many they'd have left after a treaty took effect.

EDITOR'S NOTE — Barry Schweid, who writes on arms control and U.S.-Soviet policy for The Associated Press, attended the arms control seminar in Queenstown, Md.

Acid rain problem in E. Texas

DALLAS (AP) — As Texas continues to build lignite coal plants, acid rain will become an increasingly serious problem, experts say.

Some scientists believe acid rain may be on the verge of killing trees and fish in parts of East Texas. On Saturday, they met with environmentalists from the United States and Canada in a day-long symposium on acid rain at Southern Methodist University.

"I think we have the components of a very significant problem in the not-too-distant future, especially if we continue building lignite-burning plants in East Texas," said Ken Kramer, the Austin lobbyist for the Sierra Club. Lignite is a soft coal mined in Texas.

Acid rain, usually associated with the industrial Northeast, has been falling on Texas for eight years, he said.

Rain about 10 times more acidic than normal has been falling in Tyler at least since 1979, when the Texas Air Control Board set up an acid rain monitoring station there.

"The party line has been that acid rain is not a Texas problem," said George Crawford, an SMU physicist who will speak at the symposium. "The truth of the matter is, it is a Texas problem."

Water vapor turns sulfur dioxide gases from industry — notably coal and lignite-burning power plants — or nitrogen oxide gases from motor vehicles into either sulfuric or nitric acid that contaminates rain or snow.

With Texas utilities shifting from natural gas to more economical coal and lignite, there is growing concern about the effects of acid rain on the state.

Texas has 16 active coal power plants and 13 active lignite units. All but four of those are in the eastern half of the state.

The state's restrictions on sulfur emissions are as stringent as those of any state, but Texas has more emissions sources.

Paul Henry, director of technical services for the Texas Air Control Board, estimates the number of sources to be in the tens of thousands.

"Texas far exceeds the other states in sulfur dioxide sources," he said.

King Louis XI of France died in 1483.

The Dutch and Indians concluded a peace treaty at New Amsterdam in 1645.

Willie Nelson calls for more aid to farmers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Country singer Willie Nelson says his farming skills can be summed up in the batch of hogs he bought years ago for a quarter each.

"I think I sold them for 17 cents apiece," the bearded and pony-tailed singer said Thursday following a Senate farm hearing at which he appealed for action to ease the economic plight of U.S. farmers.

Nelson's self-proclaimed lack of farming skills did not deter him from delivering a strong message to the lawmakers.

In his second appearance before the panel in a year, Nelson, who organized two Farm Aid concerts that raised $8 million, said the woes of rural America seem to be getting worse and that farmers must get more money for their crops.

That view was at variance with latest estimates showing land values bottoming out and crop prices on a slight upswing. Some lawmakers at the hearing noted the tentative improvement over last year.

But no one pressed Nelson or rock star John Cougar Mellencamp, who works with him on the Farm Aid concerts, to reconcile the conflicting views.

"Just keep on doing what you're doing," said Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., chairman of the Senate agricultural production and price stabilization subcommittee.

"The farmers in this country are dropping out — they're dropping like flies," Nelson told the panel.

Nelson conceded he is "not a farm policy expert" and stopped short of putting his stamp on any specific piece of farm legislation, including the mandatory production-control bill sponsored by Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, which was the nominal subject of the hearing.

"You are the smart guys — you tell me how we're going to do it," Nelson said. He stressed, though, that farmers are not getting enough money for their crops and that changes of some kind should be made.

"The people who have come up to me after the show, before the show have told me the farm crisis is getting worse, not better," Nelson said. "One hundred percent of the people have said this."

Mellencamp told lawmakers he thought "a lot of the problems are being approached from the rear end forward." He said it was obvious that wealthy, large-scale farmers are in good economic condition. But he said the story was far different for poor farmers in South Carolina where he is spending the summer.

"People don't know what poor people look like until they go down there," Mellencamp said. "Those black farmers don't have a chance."

Mellencamp told the lawmakers that it "just seems funny that after my show and Willie's shows they're coming to us" for help with individual farm problems.

"They have no one else to turn to," he said. He said some farmers had even telephoned his office seeking to borrow money.

"We voted for you guys to do what's morally right," Mellencamp said.

The two entertainers raised $8 million in recent months by organizing Farm Aid concerts in Champaign, Ill., and Austin, Texas.

Another Farm Aid concert is tentatively set for this fall in Nebraska.

AIDS concerns teens

WASHINGTON (AP) — Becky Adler is only 17, but she has talked to a teen-ager who is worried about contracting AIDS from her college boyfriend and a man who's afraid his sexual past may have led to his pregnant wife being infected.

Adler, a high school senior, spoke with those people while taking calls on the "Teen AIDS Hotline," which is staffed by teen-agers for teen-agers in the greater Washington, D.C., area. She said the line received 4,100 calls last month.

"If there is such a thing as a high-risk group, it is teen America. And we at the Teen AIDS Hotline are working to save our generation," Adler told the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families at a hearing Thursday on teen-agers and AIDS.

Adler said other AIDS efforts in her suburban Washington community, all financed by contributions and candy sales, include weekend teen and family conferences on AIDS sponsored by churches and synagogues; AIDS nights for parents, teachers and students; a video discussion guide for parents, teachers and clergy; and "The AIDS Movie," the first AIDS prevention film for adolescents.

"Teach your children the facts on AIDS and how they can protect themselves," Adler urged the committee. "Then help us show other teens throughout the country how they can stop the AIDS epidemic in their communities."

The hearing, chaired by Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., examined the AIDS risk to teen-agers. Many witnesses noted that teen-agers are particularly vulnerable because they are prone to experimentation with sex, drugs and alternative lifestyles.

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said younger children should be taught by their parents and teachers to abstain from sexual relations until they are ready for marriage. "It's entirely possible to raise a whole generation of adolescents who will be abstinent until monogamous," he told the committee.

But Koop said during questioning that youngsters who have reached puberty must be taught that condoms used correctly can help protect them from AIDS. He said 70 percent of teen-agers are sexually active and it is not realistic to expect their behavior to change.

"If you tell that 70 percent to just say no, they laugh. And if they try to say no, they find it very difficult," Koop said. "I was talking to some teen-agers about long-term monogamy and this one girl said, 'How long? A semester?'"

Contractor is fined over cave-in death

AUSTIN (AP) — A Houston construction company has agreed to pay a $20,000 fine after pleading no contest to a charge of criminally negligent homicide in connection with a 1985 cave-in that left one worker dead.

The case was resolved through a plea bargain arrangement worked out between Travis County Attorney Ken Oden and Peabody Southwest of Houston.

Judge Leslie Taylor set the fine Thursday.

Margarito Maldonado, 18, was buried alive when the sides of the 8-foot-deep trench he was working in at the Govalle Wastewater Treatment Plant collapsed July 17, 1985.

"The spirit and the purpose behind these kinds of prosecutions is to send a message to employers that they have a responsibility to take basic common-sense safety precautions to protect their employees in obviously dangerous situations," Oden said.

Crop less than half 1983 level

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) — The amount of Texas land devoted to grapefruit and orange production remains at half the level it was before a devastating 1983 freeze, according to a new survey.

Before the hard freeze hit the area in December 1983, there were about 69,000 total acres of citrus planted in the Rio Grande Valley, according to the Texas Agricultural Statistics Service. This year, there are 30,400 acres of citrus, primarily oranges and grapefruits, according to the service, a branch of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which performs the survey every two years.

The USDA's Agriculture Research Service, the Texas Department of Agriculture and Texas Valley Citrus Committee also cooperated in the survey. In 1985, there were 30,600 acres of citrus in the state's citrus region. "The acreage that's there looks good," said Dennis Findley, state statistician for the TASS.

This year's citrus acreage consists of 18,500 acres of grapefruit, 11,800 acres of orange, and 100 acres of assorted trees, including lemons, limes, tangeloes and tangerines, according to the survey.

Texas' citrus industry is concentrated in Hidalgo, Cameron and Willacy counties.

Along with the stunted citrus groves, evidence of the hard freeze that hit the subtropical Valley can still be seen in the thousands of tall, withered palm trunks with no leaves.

The freeze reduced the state citrus industry's value by more than half the pre-1983 total of $100 million, said Ray Prewett, executive vice president of the Texas Citrus Mutual trade association.

But he said prices have since improved for citrus producers, and oranges and grapefruits are bringing more income per acre.

This year's total crop was 18 percent the size of the pre-freeze crop, Prewett said, but producers benefitted from an increased demand for fresh fruit, rather than juice.

"It's worth more in the fresh fruit market than it is for juice," Prewett said.

While farmers were paid about $5 per 40-pound carton before the freeze, he said a carton went for as much as $15 this year with the increased fresh-fruit sales.

"We approach being 50 percent recovered in terms of the total value of the fruit crop prior to the freeze," Prewett said.

About 5,000 of the 18,500 acres of grapefruit are the product of re-planting after the freeze, and remain too young to produce, according to the survey.

Citrus is not considered productive if less than four years old.

Some 3,500 acres of orange trees are still too young to produce, the survey found.

Findley said 13,700 acres appear to have been left alone since the freeze.

"It's citrus acreage pretty much standing out there abandoned," Findley said.

Other former citrus groves, he said, have been converted into other crops, as well as subdivisions and trailer parks.

The total number of trees is estimated at 3.8 million.

Ritchey in 4-H contest

Tammy Ritchey, senior 4-H member, participated in the Texas 4-H Roundup held at College State June 9-11. She presented a demonstration on "How To Give A Demonstration" and placed fifth out of a class of 21 participants.

Ritchey's demonstration will be video taped so that other 4-H youth can learn how to do the same skills she has acquired during her 4-H career. She will attend Lubbock Christian University this fall.

Official says...

Two may have broken law

AUSTIN (AP) — A detailed opinion by the Texas secretary of state says Supreme Court Justice C.L. Ray may have violated state law if the allegations and findings of a judicial conduct panel are true, it was reported today.

The opinion by Secretary of State Jack Rains also found that Ray and Justice William Kilgarlin may have violated state civil statutes if they used campaign funds to finance a lawsuit against a legislative committee investigating alleged misconduct.

The opinion was sought by The Houston Post and the San Antonio Express-News.

Ray received a public reprimand last week from the State Commission on Judicial Conduct. Kilgarlin was given a less-severe public admonishment.

Austin lawyer Randall "Buck" Wood, who represents both justices, dismissed Rains' opinion as a "partisan effort to stir the pot." Rains is a Republican, appointed by Gov. Bill Clements who has called for the justices' resignations.

Rains' opinion was based on the judicial commission's report and not on an independent investigation.

It centered on Ray's failure to report in personal or campaign financial statements airplane trips provided the judge and his family by lawyers who practice before the Supreme Court.
