He Is Risen!

Pope John Paul II, celebrating the resurrection of Jesus Christ, shed his purple robes of mourning for joyful white Saturday night and lit a candle of "new fire" at an Easter vigil and midnight Mass. More than 30,000 people filled Rome's St. Peter's Basilica, the largest church in Christendom, for the three-hour ceremony ushering in Easter Sunday, the holiest day of the Christian year.

Gregorian chants echoed as the spiritual leader of the world's nearly 800 million Roman Catholics led a procession of cardinals and bishops through the darkened basilica. After he blessed and set aflame a large white candle symbolizing "the new fire" of divine grace, the faithful lit tiny candles and flood lights illuminated the nave.

As the Sistine Chapel Choir sang the joyful strains of the "Gloria," St. Peter's 10-ton bell and church bells throughout Rome began to ring, proclaiming Christ's resurrection. As part of the services, John Paul baptized 10 men and 16 women: six Japanese, six South Koreans, two each from China, Italy, Kenya, Senegal and Vietnam and one each from Morocco, Taiwan, West Germany and the pope's native Poland.

The ceremony symbolizes the new life of grace stemming from Christ's sacrifice on the cross. Addressing the newly baptized, John Paul said in Italian: "You are a sign of how Christ called his disciples from all the peoples and nations of the earth. You demonstrate the universality of the evangelical message."

Today, the pope will celebrate an open-air Mass in St. Peter's Square, deliver his Easter message and give his blessing, Urbi et Orbi, to the city of Rome and the world.

Earlier, the 65-year-old pontiff urged Lebanese Christians to mend their differences and work together to end violences "for the salvation of the country." The Vatican said the message was in a letter to the Maronite patriarch, Cardinal Antoine Pierre Khoraiche. "God does not want the split between Christians to contribute to the endangering of the salvation of Lebanon," the pontiff said. "It makes me worry and suffer to know that the Lebanese people live with tension and opposition that foster fears and discouragement."

Corrales elected to Council's District 2 position

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Oralia "Lilly" Corrales walked off as winner of the District 2 City Council race with more votes than her four opponents combined when the results were totaled Saturday evening.

This places her as the first Hispanic to serve on the council, and she will be serving with another woman — Katie Heck. The only other woman to serve on the council in its history was Doris Howbert, who ended two terms fours years ago.

Looking at that support, Mrs. Corrales said it reflects the cohesiveness of that district, which covers the minority areas of south and east Midland. "There was no voting shown on racial lines. It shows the blacks and Mexican-Americans came together. This is what makes me so happy."

Mrs. Corrales garnered 473 votes in comparison to the 320 given her opponents: Jimenez Salazar, 40; Tony Carrillo, 94; Patrick Aleman, 70; and Clarence Meekins, 116.

THE SINGLE-MEMBER district plan was instituted this year after a lawsuit was filed in May 1984 on behalf of the Midland League of United Latin American Citizens and the Black Advisory Council. The suit was settled in December and the U.S. Justice Department approved the plan in February.

Mrs. Corrales, who owns an insurance agency and is a native Midlander, said her priority will be getting to know the other council members. "I need their support to work effectively. I just want to be effective and to work together. I'm going to take it one day at a time to gain their (council members) confidence and respect."

She has been studying the budgets from the past two years, she said, to prepare for when she takes the oath in May.

"It's a learning process," she said of the council position. "How can it best serve the total community," will be one question she will be asking herself when making decisions.

Her campaign plan to communicate better with the people in District 2 by sending out a newsletter already is in the works. Mrs. Corrales said she has a word processor, which will speed up the time it takes to get out a newsletter. "I will send it out to all the organizations and churches in District 2 so they can feel we really are communicating."

She also wants to bring together the other candidates for their assistance and to help unify the district, and most of the candidates agreed. "I hope we can get these people who ran to use their energies to make Midland a better place to live."

Meekins, who works for ARCO, said, "The people made their choice and I wish her the best of luck." Although he lost the council race, Meekins said he plans to stay on the Planning and Zoning Commission, but that he might try the council race in another two years.

"I LEARNED A LOT about how to run a successful campaign, that you need to start early and get a good organization," he said. And of Mrs. Corrales' call for assistance, he said, "I wouldn't hesitate to help her in any way I can."

Carrillo, a salesman for Ingersoll Rand, offered his assistance to the District 2 winner. "We need now to get together and do what we can for this district," he said.

The 740 voters for the three polling places in District 2 were disappointingly low, according to all candidates. Mrs. Corrales attributed part of the lack of voter interest to the Easter holiday, noting that most people in that area are concerned only with the religious observance. Others went out of town and forgot to vote absentee, she said.

"There were not enough people in our area who came out to vote," she said. "We did all we could to get them out but it is considered a holy time for us and that had an effect."

Carrillo said he had almost expected the low numbers. "It's still a question of people in this district believing there is something for them to participate in. Once they see a minority working in the council, maybe in two years they may decide to get involved.

Marcum, Heck elected to at-large Council seats

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

The two incumbents who sought re-election to Midland City Council were given another two years to serve, and joining them will be a new face: Katie Heck.

With the change to single-member districts this year, the city election was conducted in a different manner with two of the four districts selecting a representative and the entire city electing two at-large members.

Gordon Marcum II will begin his fifth two-year term, but this time he will be an at-large member. Previously, he had served in Place 2. The other at-large member elected was Katie Heck. And David Godfrey was re-elected, but as the representative from District 1. Marcum and Heck won out over three other candidates; Godfrey had no opponent.

The totals were: At-large race, Manuel Carrasco, 2,163; Marcum, 2,615; A.A. Thomas Jr., 954; Mrs. Heck, 2,592; and Terry Lowry, 444. In District 1, Godfrey received 1,541 votes.

Heck Marcum

The new system for electing council members was brought on by a lawsuit filed in May 1984 calling for single-member districts. The suit was settled in December, but two weeks ago a controversy arose over the wording on the ballots for the at-large race. Representatives of League of United Latin American Citizens and Black Advisory Council wanted the ballots to read: "Vote for one or two:" the city followed the Secretary of State's ruling and placed, "Vote for Two."

Three federal judges heard the complaints and ruled that starting the following day all ballots must be worded: "Vote for one or two."

LULAC and BAC had contended they were doing this to help Carrasco; Carrasco had said he didn't want the wording changed.

Saturday evening after the votes showed he came in third in the at-large race, he said, "I'm disappointed. My spirits are still high for things to be done in Midland. It's been an interesting campaign and a learning one. I'm disappointed with the total turnout."

The controversy over the ballot wording could have hindered Carrasco's campaign, suggested one candidate. "There's no doubt the controversy over single-shooting hurt him," said Oralia Corrales, winner of the council's District 2 race. "But he did very well by coming in third."

Marcum said the at-large race was one contest he couldn't call before the votes were tallied. "It didn't seem like there was much excitement in the election. We worked real hard just to get out the votes that we did."

Starting on the council eight years ago, Marcum said he had considered not running again. But he promised this will be his last two years. "I felt they needed someone with some background for this transition. The next couple of years will be critical in planning and in getting this plan (single-member districts) off the ground."

At the same time, Marcum said he was excited about the potential of the district plan. "I'm hopeful people will do what they said they would and participate in what's going on in their community," he said.

Cemetery workers' strike delays funerals

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Bodies awaiting burial have piled up by the dozens at mortuaries in the San Francisco area as a week-old strike by cemetery workers continues with both sides saying a settlement is still far off.

Caught in the middle are bereaved families who find themselves holding funerals, then waiting to say their final graveside farewells.

"The public, except for the odd one, they seem to be very understanding," said Con Dennehy, a striking worker at the Mountain View Cemetery in Oakland.

Still, funeral directors say the walkout at 19 cemeteries is making a difficult situation worse.

"It's hard, it's difficult, not to complete a funeral," said Jim Sullivan of the Sullivan and Co. Mortuary in San Francisco.

The 180 gravediggers, gardeners and other workers represented by Cemetery Workers and Greens Attendants Union Local 265 walked off the job March 28, almost a month after their contract expired on March 1.

Mortuaries handling funeral arrangements for people whose families want them buried at the cemeteries in San Mateo, Santa Clara, Alameda and Contra Costa counties said they are embalming the bodies and storing them on their premises. Some report they have collected a dozen or more but no firm figures were available. In 1971, 1,800 bodies went unburied until the end of a four-month strike.

Military coup deposes president of Sudan

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — The military deposed President Gaafar Nimeiri Saturday as he was en route home from a visit to Washington, and thousands of Sudanese rushed into the streets, singing and tearing down Nimeiri's portraits.

In an early morning communique, the new armed forces government declared a state of emergency, but it also promised to relinquish power to civilians within six months.

There were reports in Khartoum of two people being killed in a brief gun battle as troops arrived at the state security headquarters. The reports, which could not be immediately confirmed, said there were bursts of machine-gun fire before the soldiers gained control of the headquarters and detained some of the security officers.

Nimeiri, who had weathered more than a dozen previous coup and assassination attempts, was ousted by a longtime top aide, Gen. Abdul-Rahman Mohamed Hassan Swareddahab.

News of the takeover was announced hours before Nimeiri, 55, arrived in Cairo, the capital of Egypt, on his way back from the United States.

Swareddahab had been appointed defense minister and commander-in-chief of the armed forces before Nimeiri left for his nine-day U.S. visit.

In a communique broadcast Saturday night over the official Omdurman Radio, Swareddahab pledged political, economic and social reforms and said he would guaran-

Judge may force state to improve hospitals

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — A federal judge may be considering a court order that would force the state of Texas to provide funding for compliance with his orders to improve state mental hospitals.

In a letter written to attorneys for representing state hospital patients, U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders of Dallas said, "Prospects are at best uncertain for obtaining (legislative) appropriations sufficient for compliance" with the judge's orders.

Sanders asked the lawyers to file a motion promptly to bring state agencies or officials into the 11-year-old court case against the eight state mental hospitals, according to the letter, which was obtained by the Austin American-Statesman.

Sanders said he needs the names "of those who should be before the court in the event the court...finds it necessary to require the expenditure of state funds sufficient to obtain compliance with the state's obligations."

The letter, dated March 21, reflects a suggestion made last May by the Texas State Employees Union, which asked Sanders to make State Comptroller Bob Bullock and State Treasurer Ann Richards parties in the case.

The union brief asked Sanders to require Bullock and Richards to find state money to pay for improvements in the staff-patient ratios in state mental hospitals and to order that the money be used for that purpose.

Laura Smith, an attorney for the mental patients, could not be reached for comment Friday. Sarah Desrochers, the judge's law clerk, said she expects Ms. Smith to file a motion soon.

Sanders has been overseeing conditions in state mental hospitals since a class-action suit was filed against the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation in 1974. The suit claimed that patients were exposed to dangerous conditions, misuse of psychotic drugs and lack of treatment.

The state settled the suit in 1981, and the settlement agreement became a court order.

Sanders has since issued several orders, including one that requires new staff-patient ratios by August and one requiring that patients be discharged only to adequately staffed community services.

Officials test fish from Austin lake

AUSTIN (AP) — Health officials are taking up nets and trotlines from Town Lake to determine if pollution is endangering those who eat fish from the lake.

State health department officials in February caught two dozen fish — including bass, carp, sunfish and bluegills — that are being tested for toxic chemicals in their edible tissues.

Dr. Phil Zbylot, of the Austin-Travis County Health Department, said Friday the sample was not representative of the types of fish caught in Town Lake.

Speakers: Rights threatened by fundamentalism

AUSTIN (AP) — The First Amendment rights of all Americans are deteriorating as religion plays a larger role in American political circles, two speakers at an atheist convention said Saturday.

Political satirist and First Amendment advocate John Henry Faulk told the 300 in attendance at the 15th Annual American Atheist Convention that this country's forefathers meant for there to be a strict separation of church and state.

"Benjamin Franklin, James Madison and Thomas Jefferson knew that there would be people like yourself that would hold the beliefs that were unpopular," Faulk said.

The atheist convention in South Austin coincided with a "God and Country" rally being held in North Austin.

Faulk related his experiences in fighting for his First Amendment rights during the McCarthyism era.

"We were wrapped up in a frenzy of fear," he said. "It was carefully orchestrated in the form of conspiracy."

Faulk was one of hundreds of Americans who he said were blacklisted by a vigilante group trying to rid the country of communism conspiracy in radio and television. At the time Faulk was host of a CBS talk show in New York.

Faulk was fired by CBS and then brought suit against the vigilante group that he said was trying to ruin his career. After a six-year battle, Faulk won the case and was awarded $3.5 million.

"I did not receive the $3.5 million but I hold the reputation for having it," he said.

Jon G. Murray, son of atheist leader Madalyn Murray O'Hair, said, "I feel that I have to give an obituary of the First Amendment. It's something worth fighting for but I think the First Amendment is dead."

Murray, director of the American Atheist Center in Austin, said, "During Reagan's State of the Union address, he invoked the aid of God five times. He urged Congress to return religion to public schools."

Murray's brother, William, now an evangelist, was plaintiff in the 1963 Supreme Court decision that banned organized prayers in public schools.

Jon Murray said the media and the entertainment industry are being flooded with religious education.

"Gospel music is at a boom raising $210 million in annual record sales since Reagan took office," he said. "Fourteen thousand radio stations play purely gospel music."

He also said there are 76 religious television stations in the country and that the religious cable system ranks third nationally.

Agents stymied in probe of fire at abortion clinic

MESQUITE (AP) — Federal agents say their investigation into a fire that destroyed an abortion clinic and a dozen other businesses "has slowed to a snail's pace" with few leads and no suspects.

"We don't have anyone we are ready to name as a suspect," Cummins Beaty, who heads the Dallas office of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, said Friday.

The Women's Clinic of Mesquite and 12 other businesses were destroyed by the fire Feb. 22. More than $1.5 million damage was caused by the blaze, which was ignited by gasoline poured through a broken clinic window, authorities said.

ATF agents have questioned more than 300 people in their investigation, including anti-abortion protesters, tenants of the complex and neighboring homeowners, Beaty said.

"We looked at some people earlier, and we looked at them pretty hard, but there was not enough, so we quit looking at them," Beatty said. "We have gotten a lot done and we still have some things to do. But it has slowed to a snail's pace. We just don't have enough to rule anyone out or in."

The clinic had been threatened at least twice in the weeks before the fire, authorities said. Anti-abortionists who regularly picketed outside the clinic denied any involvement in the blaze.

No other attacks have occurred at Dallas-area abortion clinics; but some facilities have received telephone threats, authorities said.

"I would say it's still quite tense," said Charlotte Taft, director of the Routh Street Clinic in Dallas and a board member of the National Abortion Rights Action League.

LLoyd Bentsen Sr. built financial empire for 'Dolly'

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

MISSION — He grew up thrashing wheat and busting wild horses in the South Dakota Badlands. He raced motorcycles and broke bones and yearned to become a World War I pilot.

He liked drinking and fighting and discovered early on that the two often traveled hand-in-hand along his turbulent walk on the wild side.

His was not a death wish, though it came camouflaged as such.

In business, he preferred oranges to oil and cotton to cattle, though in time Lloyd Millard Bentsen Sr. would build a financial dynasty that embraced them all.

His mustangs and motorcycles led him in and out of hospitals while his dream of becoming a pilot took him in 1917 on a wartime assignment to San Antonio and a weekend of revelry in the Texas Rio Grande Valley.

His first trip to Mission was with an Army buddy named Ray Landry, neither knowing they would eventually settle to father sons famous on the football field and in the U.S. Senate.

There would be in the years to come Lloyd Bentsen Jr., who beat an incumbent senator in 1970, never to be seriously challenged afterward, and there would be Tom Landry, who played defensive back for the New York football Giants before molding the Dallas Cowboys into "America's Team."

THERE WOULD also be wealth, measured in the millions, for the elder Bentsen. There would be a ranching, farming, oil and banking empire personifying the land he chose for home.

First, however, there would be in this drowsy Valley town of 1917 a shy, beautiful young woman with whom he fell instantly and irreversibly in love.

She ignored him, but not for long.

In 1920, Bentsen returned from the war and persuaded Edna Ruth Colbath, his Dolly, to marry him. He had $1.50 in his pocket.

With guts and grit and a novel financing scheme, he began acquiring land, influenced by the missed opportunities of his Danish parents. He wrenched prosperity from the raw terrain, faced death at the hands of his laborers and sired, besides his namesake U.S. senator, two other sons and a daughter.

He abandoned his rakish lifestyle.

But not before the night he quaffed a bunch of booze, slugged a politician and insisted that one of his drunken cronies shoot a whiskey bottle off his head, which he did.

"I quit drinking the next day," he said.

A SLOW, steady drizzle and billowing fog caressed the big Buick one recent morning as Lloyd Bentsen Sr. guided a visitor along palm-studded highways and backroads of the semi-tropical Rio Grande Valley.

Tall and courtly with snow white hair and a small, matching moustache, Bentsen, a widower since 1977, is up at daybreak and on the road to his real estate office or one of several farms and ranches in Hidalgo and Starr counties.

At 91, he shows no evidence of his mustang and motorcycle mishaps nor any physical reminders of two more recent episodes in which he was trampled by stampeding cattle.

His mood is jovial.

"This kind of weather is the greatest thing in the world for a rancher or farmer," said Bentsen as the car rolled through the misty haze and past the lush orchards and farmlands and the grazing cattle and pumping oil rigs.

The early spring rainfall extended throughout the Valley, across the Rio Grande into Mexico and northeastward to South Padre Island on the sparkling Gulf Coast.

"All this moisture is going into the ground. There's no runoff...This is the prettiest spring we've seen in a long time."

The visitor had come to discuss the sweep of social, economic and political changes in this historic, once secluded slice of South Texas. Instead, Bentsen spoke of an abiding love.

"SHE WAS SO beautiful, I suspect the Lord took her because he didn't want to see her grow old."

How old was she?

"Seventy-eight," he replied.

Bentsen recalled the 1917 trip to Mission with Ray Landry in which he spotted Dolly for the first time. She wore the silver bars and uniform of a Red Cross volunteer.

"She was the prettiest woman I'd ever seen in my life," he said. "I saluted her, but she blushed and ducked her head and went on by."

Smitten, he turned to Landry and inquired, "Who the hell is that girl?"

His friend told him she was the orphaned offspring of an ill-fated marriage but that she lived quite handsomely from a family inheritance.

"How do I meet her?"

"You gotta go to church," Landry chuckled.

"Well, it's been awhile," he said.

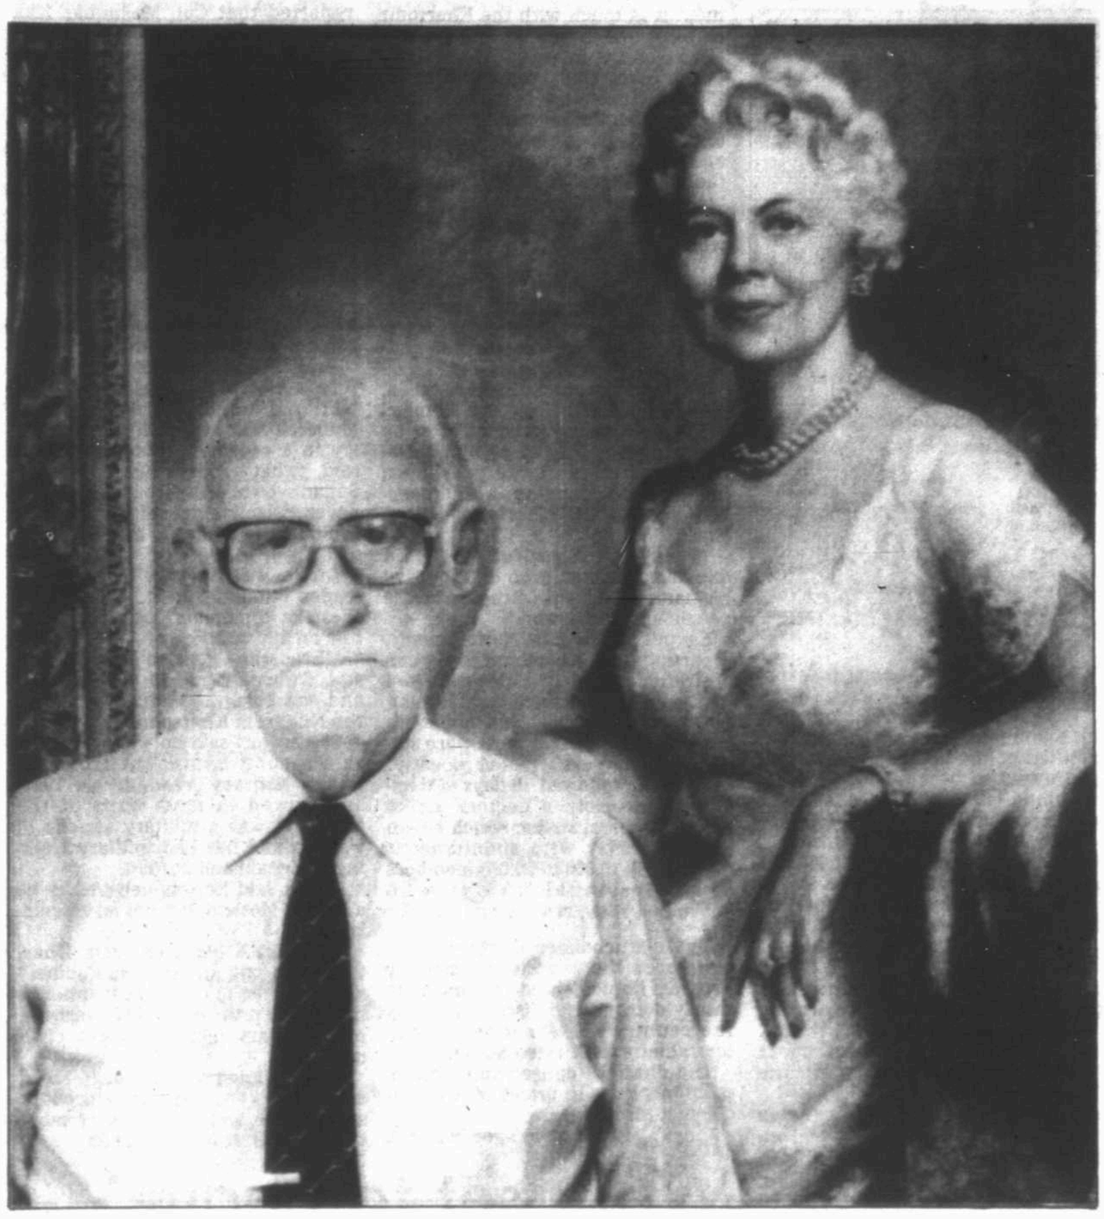
Bentsen invited a girl he'd met previously to take him to the Baptist church on Sunday night and afterward asked her to introduce him to the pretty blonde singing in the choir.

"You snake," snapped his companion, in mock anger, as Bentsen remembers it. "You didn't want a date with me..."

But the scheme worked.

AFTER MEETING Dolly, Bentsen told Landry: "I've made up my mind that if there's any way to get this girl, I'm going to get her."

Unknown to Bentsen until years later, Dolly returned home that night and told friends, "Believe it or not, I've met the man I'm going to marry."



AP Laserphoto

The church rendezvous led to a date, an erratic courtship and in time to a storybook marriage spanning six decades. Friends say they were inseparable. The land baron and erstwhile bad boy of the Badlands wrote her poetry.

When he proposed, Dolly's grandmother had just died and a guardian had squandered her inheritance in cotton futures on the Board of Trade.

"I told her she was out of money and out of family and had no choice but to marry me," he laughed.

"Everything I ever did, I did for Dolly. I lived to make her happy. She changed my life completely."

As he spoke, the car passed through a gate of the scenic family estate, "Acres de la Primevera." It means "acres of springtime."

The ranchstyle home overlooks a small island surrounded by a 26-acre manmade lake. This morning it is overflowing with wild Canadian geese and honkers, Mexican ducks and black and white American swans.

"I feed 'em and they know they're safe here."

BENTSEN PAID $50 an acre for the 1,400-acre tract on the Mission side of McAllen and carved out his lake and built his home on what once was a swampy dumpground.

When Dolly first got a glimpse of the raw land, she said: "Lloyd, have you lost your mind?"

The home now is filled with photographs and paintings of the Bentsen clan, a smiling Dolly, her four children, Lloyd Jr., the senator; Kenneth, a Houston architect; Don, a McAllen businessman; and Betty, the wife of Valley businessman Dan Winn.

"It's like something out of a movie," suggests nearby Harlingen broadcast executive Mal Kasanoff, who compares the Bentsens of Texas to the Kennedys of Massachusetts.

"Money and style and socialite wives and beautiful kids and the father in the background. The Bentsens are good, good people."

Valley newspaper publisher Jim Mathis, whose Edinburg Review endorsed Sen. Ralph Yarborough over Lloyd Bentsen Jr. in 1970, will call the elder Bentsen a "mean old rascal" but adds:

"I admire the old man. I really do. He's done a lot for the Valley."

THE SENIOR Bentsen was one of six children of Danish parents who settled before the turn of the century on a small farm in South Dakota.

He had little time as a child for school and none at all after age 13, when he followed the grain harvest across Iowa, Nebraska and the Dakotas.

For fun and profit, he and his pals bought and tamed wild mustangs trapped in the canyons of the Dakotas, paying $3 a head for the animals and selling them for a $9 markup.

The incidental injuries in breaking wild horses were nothing compared to a motorcycle accident in 1915 in which he broke several bones and almost lost his life.

After months of treatment, he fled the hospital and, following several rejections, eventually tricked a drunken recruiting officer into enlisting him into the Army.

He bluffed his way into a 16-week ground training school at Princeton and wound up in the aviation section of the Signal Corps. Fate took him then to Texas and the meeting with Dolly in 1917.

After the wedding in 1920, Bentsen borrowed $500 and he and his petite young bride moved into a small house on the Edinburg Canal.

Not long after the wedding, Bentsen joined some 2,000 young ex-servicemen in a night-long Armistice Day celebration at a baseball diamond in Mission.

FORTIFIED with whiskey and uninspired by a political speech, Bentsen climbed atop the platform and knocked the politician to the ground.

It was great fun.

Impressed by a colleague's accuracy with a rifle, Bentsen insisted that his buddy shoot a whiskey bottle out of his hand. The marksman missed. Undaunted, Bentsen placed the bottle atop his head and ordered him to try again from about 200 feet.

"I saw the bore of the rifle and it appeared it was aimed at my forehead. At the last moment, he raised the rifle and I heard the shot and shards of glass broke around my head."

At daybreak, friends loaded their hero into a car and hauled him home. Dolly greeted him with a hug and a kiss and said, "I heard you had a good time."

tee freedom for the press, political organizations and religions.

He also promised to open a "direct dialogue" with rebels in the south and achieve national unity "within the framework of equality in rights and duties."

The rebels, many of whom are Christians or animists, claimed Nimeiri's development programs favored the predominantly Moslem north.

They were enraged when Nimeiri imposed Islamic law throughout Sudan 18 months ago, and interpreted it harshly in its early months with amputation of thieves' hands and the flogging of drinkers and adulterers.

In another broadcast, Omdurman Radio said Swareddahab met with the undersecretaries and directors of government ministries and told them he had taken control "for the safety of the homeland and the citizens," and that was achieved "without shedding any blood."

The radio station also broadcast a message attributed to the unions that began a general strike Wednesday calling on all of their members "to end the strike immediately and return to work (today)."

Nimeiri, who himself came to power in a 1969 coup, met with Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak and then left the Cairo airport by helicopter. Sources said that Nimeiri, who has been one of America's firmest African allies, was quartered in an Egyptian presidential palaces.

The coup came after demonstrations and strikes that paralyzed the Sudanese capital for three days and severed air and communications links with the outside world.

The Reagan administration said the military takeover posed no immediate threat to the safety of Americans living in Sudan.

"It was a bloodless takeover and Americans do not appear in danger, and none have been injured," said

White House spokesman Larry Speakes.

President Reagan, vacationing at his Santa Barbara, Calif., ranch, was notified of the coup at 10 a.m. EST and asked to be kept informed of developments, said Speakes, who accompanied Reagan to California.

Last Monday, Reagan met Nimeiri in Washington and released $67 million in U.S. aid that had been frozen until the North African country took steps to curtail economic chaos.

U.S. officials "are assesseing our steps," said Speakes. "The U.S. policy toward the Sudan has not changed and we will be assessing the government as we go forward."

In Washington, State Department spokesman Tom Krageski said the "diplomatic relationship with the government of Sudan continues without interruptions." The department is in touch with the Khartoum embassy and is "monitoring the situation closely," he said.

The State Department estimates 750 U.S. citizens are in Sudan.

In a communique made public Saturday by Sudan's official news agency SUNA, Swareddahab said the military had to move because of "the worsening situation in the country and the political crisis which grows worse continuously."

News of the army takeover was read over Omdurman Radio, which was under heavy guard by soldiers.

After the broadcast, demonstrators sang, danced, and shouted anti-Nimeiri slogans in the streets.

They pulled down the red, green, white and black flags that Nimeiri made the national standard after he took power on May 25, 1969, and destroyed pictures of the president, including one hanging in the reception area of the Khartoum Hilton Hotel.

"Today is a beautiful day," said one demonstrator, who did not give his name. "The will of the Sudanese people has finally won."

Egypt's Middle East News Agency, reporting from Khartoum, said demonstrators broke into Cober Prison in Khartoum North, a suburb, and "set free all political and nonpolitical detainees." It said most were students and lawyers arrested recently.

The coup followed 10 days of demonstrations, riots, a doctors' strike and the general strike, which began on Wednesday with simultaneous marches by 15,000 to 20,000 members of professional unions who demanded Nimeiri's ouster.

The disturbances began as protests over the economic austerity program implemented by Nimeiri to satisfy demands for fiscal reform by the country's international creditors, chiefly the United States.

The changes caused immediate, steep increases in prices of essential commodities.

Libya's official news agency JANA reported that Col. Moammar Khadafy's government, a bitter enemy of Nimeiri, had recognized the new military government. Nimeiri's overthrow was also welcomed by Damascus Radio, an official organ of Syria, a Libyan ally.

The Saudi Arabian government issued a statement saying the coup was "an internal affair" and "wished success" to the new leadership.

Nimeiri had said the trouble on Khartoum's streets was being orchestrated by Libya.

Egypt, Nimeiri's closest ally and an equally bitter foe of Libya, indicated it planned a hands-off policy.

Prime Minister Kamal Hassan Aly told a Cairo rally of the ruling National Democratic party that Mubarak had expressed Egypt's policy in a recent interview when he said, "what happens inside Sudan is Sudan's own affair, but Egypt will never permit external intervention in Sudanese domestic affairs, either directly or indirectly."

Little was known of the new leader outside Sudan, except that Western diplomats had considered him an ally of Nimeiri.

MENA, the Egyptian news agency, said Swareddahab is 51 years old and was born in Omdurman, across the Nile from Khartoum.

The agency said he was graduated as a second lieutenant from the Sudan Military Academy in 1958, and served in most units of the army. He was a military attache in Uganda and has had military training in Britain and Jordan.

MENA said he was believed to be a devout Moslem, but not an extremist.

The MENA dispatch from Khartoum also said an "interim Cabinet" was expected to be formed within 24 hours, and probably would consist of nine military men and three civilians.

Under Nimeiri's rule, Sudan faced crisis after crisis, including drought and famine and an influx of more than 1 million refugees.

FAIR officials want to start local group

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

After seeing the mental demise of a close friend, Sarah Boering did the only thing she could think of at the time.

"I cried a lot," she said.

Today, however, the exhuberant former Alpine resident is doing more than just crying. She's helping form a Midland-Odessa chapter of Family and Individual Relaince (FAIR), an Austin-based support group for families and friends of the mentally ill.

The group will hold their first meeting Monday evening, when two FAIR officials, Dian Cox Leighton and Hal Harollson arrive in Midland to share their story of how they recovered from mental illness.

Ms. Boering recalled how she first heard of FAIR.

"I was in Louisville at a hotel because a close friend who had been fighting a running battle with mental illness for 20 years was in a hospital," she said. "I walked out on the patio because I couldn't stand the babbling any more and thought, 'I really need to talk to someone.'"

While at the hotel, Ms. Boering found someone.

"I met Hal Harrolson's in-laws," she said. "They asked me where I was from and I told them. Then they told me that their granddaughter also lived in Alpine and was suffering from mental problems," she said. "I just put my head on her shoulder and cried."

"That was my first FAIR experience."

Ms. Boering met Harrolson for the first time in Alpine in August 1983, when he came to visit his daughter. At the time, she was interested in starting a FAIR group in Alpine.

"We tried to get a group started but it just died," said Ms. Boering.

Nothing happened until September 1984, when Ms. Boering received a letter from Dian Cox Leighton, a former mental patient, who currently is the project director for FAIR.

"She asked if I was still interested in forming a FAIR group," said Ms. Boering.

After accepting the challenge, Ms. Boering attended a FAIR retreat in Kerrville where she got encouragement and warning from others.

"They told me that Midland was a hard nut to crack due to the conservative nature of the town," she said. "But I came back with the resolve that if we only had two people in the county, we would start a group."

Indeed, so far, two people is all that the group will be starting with.

"We've had a limited response," said Boering. "One person sat on it for three weeks after reading about it. It's still a very closeted thing."

Ministers in local churches have expressed the need for such a group, she stated.

"One minister said that he had a family in his congregation who needed help," she said.

"I think there are enough people here. It's just a matter of whether they come out of the woodwork or not," said Ms. Boering. "It will be a process of education."

Currently the fledgling group is searching for a "home" to hold their meetings in.

"We are looking for a church, meeting room — whatever — to meet in," said Ms. Boering.

Persons wanting to help may contact Ms. Boering at 563-9051.

FAIR's first meeting will be 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Flame Room at 2402 W. Wall St. Dian Cox Leighton and Hal Harrolson will share their personal stories of their own struggles with mental illness.

EASTER

John Paul did not elaborate, but he apparently was referring to a rebellion by a Christian "Lebanese Forces" militia commander against the Phalange Party of President Amin Gemayel, a Maronite Christian.

Elsewhere, thousands of faithful in Warsaw, Poland, carried baskets of eggs and other food for their Easter meals to Catholic churches to have them blessed by priests.

People then waited in hour-long lines that stretched across plazas in the old part of Warsaw to file past religious displays, some with political overtones, at dozens of churches.

At St. Stanislaw Kostka Church in Warsaw, thousands of people filed past the flower-covered grave of the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko, a pro-Solidarity priest murdered by three secret police officers last October.

Banners supporting the banned Solidarity labor movement covered the fence surrounding the church, and many of the Easter baskets carried by worshipers were decorated with Solidarity pins. Yellow Easter chicks which peeked over the rims of some baskets wore tiny home-made hats with "Solidarnose" enscribed on them.

Italian officials said nearly 1.5 million foreign tourists had streamed into Rome and other Italian cities for the Easter holiday. Italy's major airports all but abandoned customs checks in an effort to cope with "human waves." Tens of thousands of German, Austrian and Swiss tourists streamed across the border.

"There's no doubt we are breaking the Easter record," said Luigi Vedovato of the Center for Student Tourism. He estimated that more than half a million young foreign tourists were spending Easter in Rome, up from about 300,000 in previous years.

National police said at least 18 people were killed and 465 injured in 592 traffic accidents in Italy since Thursday evening.

In Florence, a strike closed major museums Saturday, touching off protests from tourists, restaurateurs, hotel and shop owners and others. Similar strikes threatened to close museums and galleries in Rome, Naples and Turin.

Work set to begin on several local streets

From Staff Reports

Midkiff Road between Illinois Avenue and Golf Course Road will be going "under the knife" Monday morning. But that doesn't mean the street will be ripped up, stopping all traffic.

However, Ohio Avenue between Big Spring Street and Pecos Street will be closed to traffic beginning Monday morning for reconstruction. Access will be provided to the parking garage west of Big Spring Street. Construction should be completed in July.

In addition, Garfield Street will have one lane open in each direction through the Wadley Avenue intersection beginning Monday morning after the rush hour. This is a continuation of the storm sewer construction project on Wadley Avenue. Left turns will be prohibited at this intersection.

Public Works Director Fred Baker said that section of Midkiff Road, which was rebuilt in 1981, is being replaned because the asphalt mix had "one-half of 1 percent too much asphalt. It stayed liquid and the street rutted," he said of the road's washboard effect.

The street is being replaned, he said, and there will be no unpaved sections. Motorists can drive on it after the sections have been scraped. When the asphalt is poured, travel will be restricted to one lane each way.

This project is expected to be completed within 30 to 60 days, according to Baker.

Cost of the repaving is being paid by the engineering firm of Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, Inc., and Southwestern Testing Lab — the companies involved in the original paving — because the asphalt mix was wrong.

Baker said the city waited until now "so all the excess asphalt would float to the top so we don't have to do it again."

Midkiff Road north of Golf Course also is under construction, according to Baker. He warned drivers to avoid these sections of Midkiff as much as possible.

Clean Midland campaign under way

From Staff Reports

Clean Midland is ready for spring. A campaign to clean-up the community has started and citizens are being asked to bundle up their dead tree limbs, discard the junk and clean out their garages.

Midland Chamber of Commerce and the city have joined forces with Clean Midland to get this project under way.

Residents wanting to have their trash picked up during the campaign April 29 through May 17 may call 682-2821 starting Monday through April 19. Or they may fill out a special request form available in this edition of the Reporter-Telegram. Forms will be distributed to all Midland public elementary schools and will be available at Albertson's, Safeway, Furr's, M System, Sundown Market, Community National Bank and Casa de Amigos.

The chamber of Commerce and Clean Midland, 109 N. Main St., and the City Hall lobby, customer service and cashier areas will have forms available.

The city will pick up large trash items, such as tree limbs, old furniture and appliances, April 29-May 17.

Scientist to give astronomy lecture

ODESSA — Dr. George F. Benedict, research scientist at the University of Texas' McDonald Observatory, will give a free public lecture April 15 in the student lounge at UT-Permian Basin.

The subject of Benedict's lecture will be "Space Telescope: The Coming Revolution in Astronomy," which will begin at 8 p.m.

Beginning at 2 p.m April 16 in the UTPB student lounge, Benedict will discuss "Computers in Astronomy."

The McDonald Observatory has the most sophisticated computerized system in the world for astronomical observation and interpretation. Dr. Benedict was instrumental in establishing and fine-tuning the system.

CEMETERY

"It would be impossible to give an exact figure on the number of unburied bodies since the strike started," said Arch Monson, president of Halstead & Co., one of the metropolitan area's largest funeral homes. "I think certainly no more than 100," he said Saturday.

Area morticians have been through similar situations in the last 14 years as cemetery workers have struck three times, with the 1971 strike requiring funeral homes to finally rent warehouses for the backlog of bodies.

"We have ample space to wait for however long it takes," said Richard O'Hara, manager of San Francisco's Evergreen funeral home, adding that about 30 percent of his customers are finding non-union cemeteries for burials.

Sullivan said most families are understanding. "I think people know that these things go on," he said.

But the walkout has angered some, and for Jews, whose religious tradition dictates that burial be held within 24 hours of death, it is a particular problem.

"It's a tragic matter," said Rabbi Michael Samuel. "Some people wanted to dig a plot on their own, but the union leaders indicated a threat of violence."

"What can you do except say we're extremely sorry," Joan Toomey, a union spokeswoman, said of angry calls to the union office.

A key concern of workers is a two-tier wage system allowing management to pay new workers $75 a day for 18 months before giving them top scale of $100. The union also has demanded pay hikes of 5 percent to 10 percent, while management has offered a 40-cent-an-hour increase.

"We're not heartless people. We're out there to make a living like everyone else," said union member Mike Gerrans.

He and others in the union want to improve their image, and be seen instead as gardeners, plumbers, carpenters, painters and machinery operators performing very skilled jobs for low wages and lower prestige.

John Cantwell, attorney for the property owners, said they are ready to resume contract talks as soon as the mediator sets a date.

Federal mediator Reginald Bravo reported Friday that neither side has asked for his help, but he was trying to get them both together over the weekend or on Monday.

However, union business agent Fred Kotler said he doubted bargaining would resume that quickly. "They're (management) still asking for concessions we're not willing to make," he said.

The first hurdle the council will tackle is the budget for 1985-86, according to Marcum. "We've got to look at streets and parks and MidTran and try to balance the budget," he said.

Mrs. Heck will push passage of a pet project — the Master Plan. Chairman of the Planning and Zoning Commission, she said the council contracted with a Dallas planning firm to draw the plan. "We're two-thirds of the way through the first draft. I want to get as much community input as possible and not let it lapse like so many things in the past."

She has studied the charter, she said, and discovered "the council doesn't have as much power as I thought it might."

Mrs. Heck said the next two years "will be interesting with the different mix on the council with different personalities." She remarked that her husband, Bill, "still thinks I'm crazy. Why do I want to put up with the hassle? But I'm one of these people who likes to get things decided."

Thomas, who served on the council about 10 years ago, said it had been a good election. "I'm not at all disappointed. We gave the people a choice. There was a pathetic voter turnout and I had talked to so many people. But I still hate to see taxes the way they are in Midland," he said in referring to one of his campaign platforms to lower taxes.

Godfrey and Lowry couldn't be reached Saturday night for comment. Godfrey will be starting his second term. Lowry had campaigned on the philosophy the City Council should be looking at the world financial crisis and how it could impact Midland.

CORRALES

"My fondest hope, or wish, is to give them something to motivate them," Carrillo said. "I hope this is the beginning of that."

Aleman looked at the results from a different aspect, saying that the people with the most education did the worst. He's not sure if he wants to get involved in city government in the future, whether it be serving on a commission or seeking another elective office.

Salazar called himself the "progressive" candidate and, after running for City Council for several consecutive years, has decided to give up the political life.

"I RAN TO give the people a choice and they didn't want it. I'm completely dropping out of politics. It will take 30 to 35 years for a progressive to be accepted in this retarded community," he said.

"This town will not be ready for change for progressive things for that many years."

But he wasn't too disappointed in the results, and said he never believed he would come out in the top three. "One consolation is the three conservative candidates suffered the same fate. Only the conservative middle class are the ones registered to vote.

"I appreciate all the opportunities I've had in this society, to do the things I otherwise couldn't," Salazar said.

Carrillo, however, isn't giving up hope. Of campaigns, "I learned a lot. It was worth more than the time I spent on it. I gained a world of experience. It's something all of us need to be aware of on this side of town."

BENTSEN

"Yes," he groaned, "too good a time."

Overcome with remorse and certain the hangover would be terminal, Bentsen vowed an end to such shenanigans.

His ban on liquor delighted Dolly and remains in force 65 years later.

A SOBER Bentsen invested $384 in a new Ford and headed off on a wagon trail to San Antonio for a belated honeymoon and the announced intention of buying Dolly a new dress.

"In those days, you could buy a lovely dress for $4 or $5," he said.

"I told her to buy what she wanted and to pay for it with a check. We didn't have any money in the bank but I'd get back in time to make it good."

Dolly surprised him with a stunning baby blue dress, plus a pair of slippers and a mink-trimmed hat, all of which came to nearly $200.

"Dolly," he said afterward, "I told you I didn't have any money in the bank."

"Lloyd," she said with a smile, "it shows the confidence I have in you, and you want me to have confidence in you, don't you?"

Bentsen cut short his honeymoon and drove what in those days was a 17-hour trip back to Mission, covering the worthless check with borrowed money.

YEARS LATER, a friend asked him his secret to success. My wife, he said. How trite, clucked his friend. You don't understand, explained Bentsen. "I was just trying to make an income my wife could live on."

In the 1970s, Bentsen's holdings ranged from farm, cattle, oil, gas and nursey operations to control of six Valley banks, stock in other banks and land sales estimated at $1 million a month.

Though he since sold off his bank holdings, Bentsen said he still is farming 41,000 acres, running 5,000 head of cattle, operating the nursery, counting oil and gas revenues and managing a "very good real estate business."

He said a wealthy friend once told him the secret to making money was three little words: "Back your judgment."

Good advice, that.

"It's not the smart guys that have the money, it's the guys who have the guts to back their judgment," Bentsen asserted.

"Then they hire the smart guys."

IN THE EARLY days, laborers used axes and grubbing hoes to clear the land of brush, cactus, mesquite and rattlesnakes so it could be put under irrigation for planting cotton, maize, fruit and vegetables.

Landowners paid clearing contractors $15 an acre, half of which went to the laborers, who in turn spent almost every cent at the general store.

Bentsen devised a plan in which his laborers got no cash but received the full $15 in buying power. He did this by converting his barn into a commissary, marking up his wholesale goods 25 percent and issuing his laborers "credit cards" with which they could redeem their $15 in merchandise.

"They tried it and it worked," he said.

The result was that his laborers got about twice as much for their money and he all but cornered the land-clearing business.

There was little law and less order in those days and Bentsen was drawn into disputes with or between his workers. One employee pulled a crude knife on him in the commissary and another stalked him with a shotgun.

ONE DAY Bentsen, Dolly and their young son Lloyd Jr. were driving on a country road.

"A guy had said he was going to kill me...and suddenly a bullet came in the window," Bentsen said. "It went in front of Dolly's face and behind my head and shattered the glass."

Lloyd Jr. suffered a minor cut on his head from the flying glass, but his mother thought he'd been hit by the bullet and became hysterical.

"I saw the guy lying out there in a cotton field with a rifle," Bentsen said. "I reached under the seat for my gun but I'd left it in the house."

He drove his wife and son to safety and returned to confront the assailant. He refused to say how the issue was resolved but indicated the gunman was not killed.

"He and I worked out our differences," Bentsen said with a tiny grin.

BENTSEN traces his breakthrough to a proposal by an oil wildcatter named Tom Slick to sell him a large tract of land with no money down and 5 percent interest.

They struck a deal for 40,000 acres at $7 an acre, with Slick retaining all mineral rights. Some scoffed at the price tag, maintaining the land never would be worth more than $3 an acre. Bentsen argued that it would one day bring $100 an acre.

And today?

"I would imagine it'd bring $1,000 or more," said Bentsen.

He recalled that his father once could have bought 640 acres in South Dakota for less than 10 cents an acre but didn't have the money.

"I was determined to buy all the land I possibly could," he said.

"I borrowed money from anywhere I could get it, and I paid up to 40 percent interest. But I'm not complaining. I didn't have to pay it."

Wags in the Valley would say later that Bentsen was buying up all the banks to get his interest money back.

As Bentsen reminisced for his guest, the car knifed through the mist across the great Arrowhead and Rincon ranches and onto the 12,000-acre LaComa, which surrounds a 2,000-acre private game preserve Bentsen calls his "sanctuary."

A FLOCK OF wild turkeys greeted his arrival. In and out of the thickets came native and imported deer, elk, North African and Corsican sheep, Indian antelope and a pair of fat, black, ugly javelinas.

Bentsen said his wilderness wonderland also housed wild pigs up to 500 pounds, ducks, geese, dove, quail, bobcats, coyotes, raccoons and a mountain lion that drifts down occasionally from the fabled King Ranch.

"This is fabulous country," he said, "and it is on the verge of its greatest growth and prosperity."

"Everything is perfect," he said, his bright old eyes glistening, "except when I lost Dolly I lost the key to it all.

"The price you pay for such love is unimaginable."

Man recovering from heart-lung transplant

HOUSTON (AP) — An Alabama man was recovering satisfactorily Saturday after undergoing a heart and lung transplant at Methodist Hospital, officials said.

Bobby Evans, 43, of Tuscaloosa, was in critical condition after the two-hour operation that began about 4 a.m. Saturday, said hospital spokesman David Blackshear.

Critical condition is normal for a patient who has just undergone a transplant, Blackshear said.

Evans received the heart and lungs of a 15-year-old Omaha, Neb., boy who died in an accident Friday, Blackshear said. Hosptial officials declined to discuss the nature of the accident.

The patient, who underwent the first heart-lung transplant in the hospital, was in an intensive care unit, Blackshear said.

Dr. Michael DeBakey, who headed a four-member team of surgeons, said Evans had been waiting several months for the two organs, and physicians were not sure how much longer he would have lived without them.

"He almost died about a week ago," DeBakey said. "We pulled him through, but he's really very critically ill."

Cisneros wins with landslide; Taylor squeaks by in Dallas

Associated Press

Henry Cisneros, the first Hispanic mayor of San Antonio, defeated five challengers to overwhelmingly win a third term Saturday, while Dallas Mayor Starke A. Taylor narrowly won a second term.

Elsewhere in Texas, incumbent Austin Mayor Ron Mullen and attorney Frank Cooksey were nearly tied in early mayoral returns, and incumbent McAllen mayor Othal Brand took a strong lead in his re-election bid.

With 232 of San Antonio's 233 precincts, or 99 percent, reporting, Cisneros had 93,484 votes, or 73 percent. His leading challenger, Phil Pyndus, 63, a conservative businessman and former city councilman, had 32,962 votes, or 26 percent. Four candidates split the remaining vote.

Cisneros, 37, gained national attention last year when he was interviewed as a possible Democratic vice presidential candidate. He was considered almost a sure winner of Saturday's election, having garnered 94 percent of the vote two years ago.

San Antonio voters approved by a wide margin a $100 million public works bond issue that would raise property taxes 14 percent. The bond would pay for street and drainage improvements, new police and fire stations and new library facilities.

San Antonio Councilman Joe Alderete, indicted in March on felony theft charges, lost his seat, with Pamela Karam and Yolanda Vera going into a runoff. With all the vote in, Ms. Karam had 3,406 votes, or 38.4 percent, Ms. Vera 2,956, or 33.3 percent, and Alderete 2,519, or 28.4 percent.

Ms. Karam and Ms. Vera were among 10 challengers to Alderete, who is accused of soliciting a $5,000 donation for the San Antonio Youth Organization, then pocketing half of it.

With all the votes counted in Dallas, Taylor had 38,998 votes, or 50.6 percent, while City Councilman Max Goldblatt, whose pet project is a monorail to unjam traffic, had 35,081 votes, or 45.5 percent. Two other candidates split the remaining vote.

Goldblatt, 73, a hardware store owner, refused to concede, and said he would demand a recount. Taylor, a 63-year-old retired millionaire cotton broker, claimed victory. He had raised more than $500,000 for his campaign, compared with $25,000 for Goldblatt.

With 62 of Austin's 116 districts, or 53 percent, reporting, Cooksey had 11,601 votes, or 38 percent, compared with Mullen's 12,008 votes, or 38.9 percent. Four candidates split the remaining vote; a runoff will be held May 4 if no candidate gained 50 percent of the vote.

The Austin race has been dominated since January by ethical questions over Mullen's business dealings, particularly ownership of some tracts of land near road projects he has supported. Mullen has put his land in a blind trust.

With 60 percent of the McAllen vote counted, Brand, in his eighth year as mayor, had 5,051 votes, or 61 percent, to City Commissioner Richard Salinas' 3,201 votes, or 39 percent. Salinas hoped to become the border city's first Hispanic mayor.

Artificial heart patient Schroeder moves into apartment near hospital

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Artificial heart patient William J. Schroeder moved into an apartment Saturday, 133 days after his natural heart was removed, making him the first person with a manmade heart to be discharged from a hospital.

The 53-year-old federal retiree had been confined to Humana Hospital Audubon since Nov. 11, 14 days before he received the plastic-and-metal heart. His specially renovated apartment is just a quarter-mile away.

The first person to receive a Jarvik-7 heart, Seattle dentist Dr. Barney Clark, died 112 days after receiving his implant in December 1982. Murray Haydon of Louisville is recovering at Audubon from Feb. 17 implant surgery.

About 75 people, including reporters, television crews and hospital personnel, were on hand as Schroeder's wife, Margaret, pushed his wheelchair through the hospital's main lobby door and down a sidewalk to a waiting van. There was applause from spectators, but Schroeder displayed no emotion other than to slightly wave his right hand and clench his fist for the group.

Mrs. Schroeder told him to "hold on" and "put your head down" as a hydraulic lift raised the wheelchair into the van.

His son Mel, 30, drove the van to the apartment, where relatives were waiting his arrival, and pushed the wheelchair into the apartment.

"He went out to the front porch and everyone started applauding, then he started applauding," said Bob Irvine, Humana Inc. public relations director. "He was pleased. He was very animated."

Schroeder, who suffered setbacks with a stroke in mid-December and an unexplained fever and flu-like illness in February, viewed the move "as a first step to going home," implant surgeon Dr. William C. DeVries said earlier Saturday at a news conference.

Schroeder's strength, spirits and appetite had improved markedly in recent weeks, DeVries said.

"Sir Isaac Newton once said that we see so far because we stand on the shoulders of giants. And I think it's appropriate that a giant leaves the hospital and enters into a new phase of his life...today," DeVries said.

"We're very excited. I think everybody here who dealt with Bill Schroeder realized that on Nov. 25, he had very little life left," DeVries said.

Mrs. Schroeder said her husband would take life "one day at a time" after the move.

"Give Bill and the family and myself a chance to really put things together, then we'll come out and meet with you. Hopefully, Bill's going to be able to talk with you, too," she said.

The family is accustomed to good days and bad, Mel Schroeder said.

"Either you're laughing or you're crying, there's no in between, and a lot of time it seems like that," he said.

DeVries said Schroeder is susceptible to mild seizures that affect his control of his arms and legs or cause him to stare blankly. But he hasn't suffered one in a long time.

Schroeder continues to receive blood-thinning, anti-seizure and anti-depressant medicines.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

White's image somewhat tarnished in recent months

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Julius Caesar understood the importance of image for a politician, insisting that even his wife be above reproach.

Whether Caesar himself stood that test is another question — but many politicians since Caesar have understood that image is greatly important to political success.

Gov. Mark White has generally maintained a positive image during his career, but it appears that image has been a bit marred in recent months — and White's political foes are hoping to make use of White's problems.

It is, some have said, a question of trust — and some critics are saying White is giving too much of the appearance of a "politician," and not enough of a "statesman."

White's office added to those problems with the handling of the governor's proposed trip to Honduras — at least as far as a number of reporters were concerned.

Reporters, it should be noted, aren't necessarily any more lovable, rational or easy to deal with than politicians.

Politicians and reporters generally co-exist with no more friction than that of the average United Nations session or Texas-Oklahoma football game.

But efforts to set up press coverage for White's planned trip to Central America seemed to bring out some of the worst of the press-politician relationship, and if White's intent was to secure favorable coverage (and what politician tries to get unfavorable coverage?), it was, at best, a mistake.

White's plans for going to Honduras were an open secret around the Capitol pressroom, despite a formal embargo by the governor's office on the story, at least as far as reporters who were invited to a briefing on the trip were concerned.

At that briefing, reporters were told there would be places on the governor's plane for six television representatives, one place for each of the wire services, one place for radio, and three for newspapers, with two places reserved for Dallas and Houston.

There was a scramble for the newspaper slot that was rather remarkable, with at least one state senator being pressed (so to speak) into service.

That, when it was learned by other reporters, led to screams—literally — from some who felt this was unfair, and the senator returned from his meeting with the governor's office declaiming, "I have been cursed; I have been reviled; I have been spat upon..."

It wasn't clear whether his attackers were the press or the governor's staff.

The matter got further out of hand when radio reporters, who had been told to designate one of their number to go with White, were told their choice (then on his way to Houston to obtain a passport) wasn't acceptable because he wasn't bilingual.

The governor's office then proceeded to pick another reporter from a station owned by a political supporter and recent appointee of White.

By then, some reporters were threatening to break the embargo on the story — which ended up being published that day by a reporter who hadn't agreed to the embargo.

The upshot of the flap was that reporters were irritated, White's staff (and presumably White) were irritated, and at least some other politicians were irritated.

For reporters, there was a feeling that White's office wasn't sticking with the rules it had set out — and regardless of whether that impression is right or wrong, that is a problem of trust.

That scuffling followed on White's tiff with Texas A&M University regents ex-chairman H.R. (Bum) Bright, who claimed he was being ousted from his chairmanship because he hadn't agreed to White's demand for his support if White runs for re-election.

White said he hadn't made any such demand; Bright contended White had asked for a "deal," and proceeded to show that he wasn't interested in supporting White by accusing White of saying the Public Utility Commission had been stacked against White appointee and consumer advocate Peggy Rosson.

White came in for attack earlier by Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, for allegedly breaking a promise on an appointment to the A&M board.

White's also been attacked by West Texans for not adding a West Texan to the Highways & Public Transportation Commission (with unhappiness over that situation resulting in legislation to expand the commission, to assure geographical representation).

White also has come in for criticism over the operations of the Office of State-Federal Relations, his handling of appointments, the purchase of a new airplane, the notorious playroom at the Governor's Mansion, and changing his position on taxes.

All of that is being duly noted by the GOP, with Republican leaders gleefully citing polls to the effect that White's negative ratings are increasing.

And lack of trust can be made into a lethal weapon by an opponent.

TO ALL THE PEOPLE IN DISTRICT 2

The past two months have been a very real and learning experience for me. It is very comforting to know that we have so many people in our city who are interested in making our area of the community a good and beautiful place for all citizens to live. The motivation which you have shown is comendable.

If I am elected to serve you, I will strive to serve you with all the dignity and respect that you deserve. Your assistance will be needed by all the Council members if we are to make a viable contribution to our community.

To all the wonderful people who came and worked in the campaign everyday for the past month, may the Lord bless your efforts as there is no way that I could ever repay you for so much.

God bless each one of you, Midland is so lucky to have the type of people that we have in our beautiful community.

Jurors again will decide Claus von Bulow's fate

By CHRISTOPHER CALLAHAN

Claus von Bulow

Martha von Bulow

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — There are questions about the charmed life and lingering death of Sunny von Bulow that perhaps only she could answer, questions at the heart of her husband's second trial for attempted murder.

Did suave socialite Claus von Bulow try to kill her with insulin injections? Or did the heiress, accidentally or intentionally, give herself the overdose that has left her in a coma for more than four years?

Jury selection for the second trial is scheduled to begin Monday. Von Bulow was found guilty on two counts of attempted murder on March 16, 1982, following a nine-week trial. The conviction was reversed by the Rhode Island Supreme Court on April 27, 1984.

For the second trial, the scene has shifted to Providence from Newport, where the von Bulows lived on Millionaires Row, and the cast of potential witnesses has grown, but the issues remain the same.

FOR MARTHA Crawford von Auersperg von Bulow, nothing has changed since she lapsed into a coma four days before Christmas 1980. She remains in a New York hospital, apparently a hopeless case, while her husband lives in her Fifth Avenue apartment and is seen around town with Andrea Reynolds, a Hungarian aristocrat.

A new prosecution team will try to prove that the 58-year-old Danish-born von Bulow — driven by greed for a piece of his wife's $75 million fortune and love of another woman — twice injected her with insulin, hoping to lower her blood sugar to fatal levels.

A black bag filled with hypodermic needles and drugs, which was found in a locked closet at Clarendon Court, the couple's home in Newport, again figures as a key to the prosecution case.

In reversing the earlier verdict, the Rhode Island Supreme Court ruled out state police tests on drugs found in the bag. Private laboratory tests done on much of that evidence — including an insulin-encrusted needle — remain admissible, however.

The defense team, which includes Abscam prosecutor Thomas Puccio and Harvard law professor Alan Dershowitz, is expected to argue that von Bulow's wife, known as Sunny because of her personality, abused alcohol, drugs and sweets, aggravating a chronic low blood-sugar condition.

VON BULOW, in an interview shortly after the first trial, said his wife could clear him if she ever awoke. He described her as "a deeply unhappy person" and theorized that she gave herself the insulin injection that triggered the coma.

Defense attorneys are expected to introduce affidavits — including one from the late author Truman Capote, who spoke up after the first trial — bolstering their contention that Mrs. von Bulow had a drinking problem and knew how to give herself injections. The defense raised the same arguments in the first trial.

This time, von Bulow may tell his own story. He did not testify in his first trial and said last year: "I am convinced it was a mistake that I didn't."

A former top assistant to oil tycoon J. Paul Getty, von Bulow now declines to comment on the case, and defense attorneys refuse to say whom they will call.

The state's case against von Bulow starts with Maria Schrallhammer, Mrs. von Bulow's personal maid for 23 years, who became suspicious of von Bulow after his wife's first coma over the Christmas holidays of 1979.

The German-born maid kept an eye on von Bulow and the black bag — a zippered, 4-inch by 7-inch cover for a calculator — and eventually confided her suspicions to Mrs. von Bulow's children from an earlier marriage, Prince Alexander von Auersperg and Princess Annie-Laurie "Ala" von Auersperg Kneissl, both in their early 20s.

AFTER THE second coma, the children hired former Manhattan District Attorney Richard H. Kuh to investigate. Kuh's work led to the July 1981 indictment of the man called "Uncle Claus" by his stepchildren.

While the step-children are convinced of von Bulow's guilt, the couple's teen-age daughter Cosima has remained loyal to her father. Because of that, she was cut out of her maternal grandmother's $50 million estate and was forbidden to attend her funeral last year.

The state contends that von Bulow wanted his wife dead so he could inherit $14 million and be free to marry Alexandra Isles, a Manhattan socialite and former soap opera actress. Mrs. Isles and von Bulow parted company after his indictment.

The defense wants Mrs. Isles barred from the second trial, saying her testimony is irrelevant and would prejudice the jury against von Bulow. Superior Court Judge Corinne P. Grande deferred a ruling on that motion, but indicated last Thursday that Mrs. Isles' testimony probably would be admitted.

Only 12 defense witnesses were called in the first trial, compared to the prosecution's 50, but von Bulow may call more witnesses this time.

In addition to the new affidavits on his wife's behavior, von Bulow's lawyers will present experts to rebut the prosecution's voluminous medical testimony on what could have caused Mrs. von Bulow's condition.

IN THE first trial, Superior Court Judge Thomas Needham denied the defense access to Kuh's material, a ruling that figured prominently in the Supreme Court reversal of the conviction.

Students protest South African investments

NEW YORK (AP) — About 100 students used chains and a sit-in Saturday to barricade a Columbia University building, continuing for the third day a protest of the school's investments in companies doing business in South Africa.

The protesters included seven students in the 11th day of a hunger strike, an organizer said.

The demonstration at the main entrance of an administration building would continue until trustees agreed to sell investments in South Africa, which discriminates against its black majority, said Joshua Nessen, a spokesman for the protesters.

Nessen identified himself as a Columbia graduate and national student coordinator of the American Committee on Africa, a group opposing apartheid, the South African government's policy of racial separation.

The seven hunger-strikers have taken only liquids since March 25, said Nessen. They were demanding a meeting with Columbia's president, Michael Sovern, he said.

University spokesman Fred Knubel said the school's investments in South Africa comprise about $30 million of the school's $864 million endowment. He said Columbia's student-faculy Senate asked for a freeze on those investments in May, and the trustees agreed to a cap of $39 million, the level at that time.

Columbia's trustee chairman, Samuel L. Higginbottom, said Friday that divesting "has very little impact" because the school holds relatively few shares in any one company. He also said there is "an honest issue" of whether U.S. companies in South Africa provide a service by employing blacks there.

Nessen argued that any divestiture creates political pressure on U.S. firms to leave South Africa, and that the importance of the jobs for blacks is far outweighed by the support the companies lend the apartheid system.

The number of students and their supporters participating in the protest fluctuated between 100 and about 400. Sitting on the Hamilton Hall's steps Saturday morning, they took shelter under tarpaulins during a brief but heavy downpour.

Knubel noted that other entrances to the Hall remained open, and said the protest had not seriously disrupted Columbia's operations.

Reagan ignores critics, paints rosy picture

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan, ignoring criticism of his budget compromise plan and a new strategy to aid Nicaraguan rebels, asked Congress on Saturday to rally behind the two, controversial proposals.

"This week is ending on a very hopeful note," the vacationing president said in a radio address beamed from his mountaintop ranch, where the weather was foggy and overcast.

"We've received encouraging reaction to our peace proposal for Nicaragua and we've reached an immensely important budget agreement that can help keep America's economic engines running full speed ahead for years to come."

As Reagan settled in for the first full day of a 10-day ranch stay, the administration was buffeted by attacks on both the budget plan and the rebel-aid package.

Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto said Reagan "has said nothing new and he certainly has presented no peace proposal. In fact, what President Reagan has said to Nicaragua (is), 'You drop dead or else I'l kill you.'"

Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn., chairman of the Intelligence Committee, said, "It's an apple with a razor blade in it."

Seeking $14 million in aid for the anti-government forces in Nicaragua, Reagan pledged last Thursday that the money would not be used for arms if the ruling Sandinista regime agreed to reconciliation talks with the opposition and consented to a settlement within 60 days.

The president, in his radio address, said the federal government spends $14 million "every few minutes. So we're asking Congress for just a few minutes worth of help for the democratic forces of Nicaragua. Fourteen million dollars means verry little to us, but it's a whole world to them."

Reagan added that "More than a dozen countries, including Nicaragua's neighbors, have already expressed their support...And around the world, those who support democracy are rallying to support our proposal.

"I ask only that the members of our own Congress do the same," he added. The administration concedes it will be a tough fight and that it lacks sufficient votes now.

"There is congressional opposition to a number of things we are trying to do, but it doesn't deter us from doing what's right," said presidential spokesman Larry Speakes.

Reagan described his compromise with Senate Republicans on the budget as "the most far-reaching spending reduction plan in post-war history."

Noting that it would eliminate 17 domestic programs, such as Amtrak subsidies, the Job Corps and the Small Business Administration, Reagan said, "What the Senate Republicans have done is bite the bullet on spending, and I believe they deserve your support and that of the other members of Congress."

The president said the plan would cut $300 billion from expected deficits.

Real Estate today

SELL AND STAY

Techniques that work in commercial/investment real estate are being used today in residential real estate. One of them is the sales-leaseback method. Here's how it would work to the advantage of all parties.

Say you own your own home or condominum. You have a large equity built up, perhaps it is paid for in-full with no mortgage. You plan to move in a couple of years, but would like to sell now, have the sale out of the way and the money in the bank. You also want to remain in the same residence until you move at a later date.

You tell your story to a good, local Realtor (like us) and he or she will find an investor who would like to purchase such a unit for the investment (future appreciation and tax benefits) and one with a built-in tenant. You, as the tenant would pay the rent plus all the expenses to run the residence, such as taxes, utilities, maintenance, and insurance. No different than before, except your money is now in the bank or in another investment and your new owner has, hopefully, in essence, a management-free, money-making investment.

Easter story captures Farm Life

FARM LIFE, N.C. (AP) — The story of Jesus' crucifixion comes alive for 11 days each year amid cornfields and pine woods in an Easter play that is attracting thousands of visitors to this rural community.

"The Message of Easter" began in 1980 as a special holiday service for Piney Grove Baptist Church, featuring an amateur cast and plywood backdrops to depict Roman Jerusalem. It relied on word of mouth to draw an audience.

The performers are still amateurs and the advertising is still word-of-mouth, but the production has gotten more sophisticated in other ways and last year drew an estimated 10,000 people.

"We put it on the first night (in 1980) and had, oh, maybe 200 people," said E.T. Taylor, a church member who wrote and produces the drama. "The next night we had maybe a few more. We had decided not to do it on Easter night because we figured everybody would be with their families.

"But it rained one of the nights we had scheduled, so we went ahead with it on Sunday night," he said. "All the seats were filled and people were just pouring out everywhere — sitting on blankets and lawn chairs, crowding in anywhere they could find room. We figured about 3,200 people saw it that first year."

The inaugural season showed church members that people would turn out for the drama, even if it was a half-dozen turns down country roads from the nearest major highway. And they set out to make the production worth the search.

Carpenters and electricians from the congregation pitched in to build Taylor's vision of a Jerusalem street. The 400-foot-wide set now includes three-dimensional versions of the Temple, Pilate's court, Caiaphas' court, the upper room, the tomb and the Garden of Gethsemane — complete with spring flowers. Theatrical lighting and a sound system were added, along with a control tower and bleacher seating for 1,700 people.

More than 1 million could carry AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — A scientist who helped discover the suspected cause of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, estimated Saturday that more than 1 million Americans are infected with the AIDS virus.

Dr. Robert C. Gallo, chief of the tumor cell biology laboratory at the National Cancer Institute, also said in a telephone interview, that as many as 10 percent to 20 percent of the infected Americans might contract AIDS or some other disease.

"Whether all will die is unclear," he said. "Some might simply have an enlargement of the lymph nodes and go no further."

Gallo predicted that AIDS could reach epidemic proportions in Europe in a couple of years and that a second epidemic, involving a related virus transmitted in the same ways as the AIDS virus, may be imminent.

He said the related virus, discovered in 1979, causes forms of leukemia or blood cancer and already is established in the Caribbean, Sicily and Japan.

"It is my strong suspicion that something like that may happen," Gallo said. "It is not a cause for alarm, but it is a cause for watching."

In 1984, Gallo helped identify the virus, called HTLV-III or LAV, which is believed either to cause or play a significant role in acquired immune deficiency syndrome, a disease that destroys the body's natural immune system.

U.S. health researchers report that 4,300 Americans had died of AIDS, out of a total of 8,853 reported cases, as of March 18.

Gallo, summarizing remarks he made last week before the Imperial Cancer Research Fund Laboratories in London, said his "best estimate" is that more than 1 million Americans probably are infected with AIDS.

Gallo said his estimate was conservative, based on "limited data" including estimates of the number of most susceptible people in the United States and the percentage believed to come forward for medical testing.

Because European countries generally parallel the progress of diseases in the United States, but lag behind for a few years, Gallo said AIDS probably will develop in similar proportions in Europe in about two years.

Heavy rains quench fires in Southeast

Associated Press

Heavy rain helped suppress wildfires that blackened 70,000 acres of brush and woodlands across eight Southeastern states, but gusty winds fanned the embers Saturday and weary firefighters stood by "just...to be prepared" for new outbreaks.

Volunteers, National Guardsmen and prison inmates joined the fight against the blazes, which were blamed for one firefighter's death, more than 30 injuries, mostly among firefighters, and millions of dollars of damage to forests and homes.

Two North Carolina residents suffered mild heart attacks, apparently as they evacuated their homes as flames approached, officials said.

In South Carolina, Gov. Dick Riley activated 60 National Guardsmen to aid weary firefighters who have battled 560 fires that have burned 17,894 acres the past three days. For the week, South Carolina has lost about 20,000 acres to the flames, leading Riley to declare a state of emergency.

In Tennessee, more than 200 people including prison inmates from brushy Mountain Penitentiary and the Southeastern Tennessee Regional Correctional Facility, battled the blazes.

The Tennessee fires that ravaged 11,000 acres of woodlands were squelched under a blanket of thunderstorms, but officials said Saturday the blazes could start anew.

Damage to timberland was extensive. "The smaller trees are killed and most of the pines are killed," said Roger Deal, ranger aide in North Carolina's Roane County. "Regeneration of a pine takes 20 to 25 years."

Forestry officials said several blazes were the work of arsonists but most were accidental.

In North Carolina, fires ravaged 8,000 acres, forcing hundreds from their homes in the western part of the state.

Eastern North Carolina "is still a tinderbox. What we need is a good soaking," said Mark Van Sciver, a spokesman for the state Division of Emergency Management.

The welcome showers Friday night and Saturday morning fell on western North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee, dampening or drowning wind-fanned blazes that had raged in some places since Wednesday.

"This rain will give us a brief respite, give us a chance to rest up and start over," said Jim Winter, Pineville, Ky., district forester. "I was hoping the wind would die when the rain finally went through, but we're still getting some pretty good winds here, about 20 mph at times.

"If this keeps up, we could be back in a serious situation again in two or three days."

In eastern North and South Carolina, where little or no rain fell, flareups could come sooner, officials said. The National Weather Service in Charleston, S.C., reported the tinder-box conditions before the rain were the worst in 134 years, with only 23.85 inches of rain from June through March.

"Everybody is on standby, ready to pounce," said Don Robbins, an assistant ranger with the North Carolina forestry service, as fires continued in the 10-county Cape Fear region surrounding Fayetteville.

A fire that destroyed 150 to 175 acres of trees forced the evacuation of hundreds of students and staff Friday at a school for delinquents near Eagle Springs, N.C., officials said.

While thunderstorms that roared through Georgia quelled all of the fires that had scorched 7,000 acres in that state, David Westmoreland, a spokesman for the Georgia Forestry Commission, said crews were being kept on alert in Cedartown in the northwest, one of the hardest-hit areas.

Most of the fires that burned more than 11,634 acres in Alabama were doused by rain but a few kept burning in the northeast Saturday, said Don Burdette, a spokesman for the state Forestry Commission.

Fire alerts for 21 counties remained in force. "We want to wait and see if we've had enough rain for a long-term dampening," he said.

Thunderstorms drenched Kentucky, which had 500 firefighters on the job Friday battling 107 blazes that charred 10,000 acres.

Gov. Martha Layne Collins on Saturday lifted a state of emergency that had closed woodlands in 35 eastern counties.

Several states were investigating reports of arson in some of the fires, and a man was jailed on charges of setting a brush fire in Kentucky.

Chemical Bank defends bid for Home State

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — A co-president of Chemical Bank of New York has defended the bank holding company's bid to buy the closed Home State Savings Bank as "an extremely positive one for Home State's customers and for banking."

But Robert I. Lipp, Chemical's chief negotiator in talks aimed at buying the Cincinnati-based savings and loan, declined Friday to respond directly to a state legislator's suggestion that the state consider taking over Home State as an alternative to selling it to the banking giant.

Senate President Paul E. Gillmor said that, under the Chemical Bank proposal, the state would put up a major share of the money but would enjoy none of the benefits of ownership.

Chemical Bank announced Friday that it had signed a letter of intent toward the purchase of the savings and loan.

"We intend to be very aggressive in the rates we offer consumers and businesses on loans, and in our other efforts to attract customers. We're going to bring more competition to the banking industry in Ohio, and that can only benefit the general public," Lipp told The New York Times.

Home State's closing March 8 triggered depositor runs on several of the other 69 privately insured S&Ls in Ohio and prompted Gov. Richard F. Celeste to order a temporary holiday for those thrifts. As of Friday, 34 of the S&Ls had been allowed to reopen for full service because they had federal insurance or would soon qualify for it.

On Saturday, Celeste signed into law a measure appropriating $60 million in non-tax state revenues — $35 million in excess liquor profits and $25 million in unclaimed bank deposits — to help the 35 smaller thrifts still operating under withdrawal limits to qualify for federal insurance.

The law creates a Savings and Loan Assurance Corp. which would allocate the money to the S&Ls to meet capitalization requirements of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. It allows people to withdraw up to $1,000 a month from their accounts, up from the $750 limit set by a state law enacted March 20.

Celeste and legislative leaders say it could be mid-April before legislation can be prepared to allow the Home State sale and give the thrift's 49,000 depositors access to their money.

Meanwhile, representatives of Chemical Bank, the nation's sixth-largest bank holding company, plan to start reviewing Home State's books.

Raymond Sawyer, chief of staff for the Democratic governor, shrugged off Gillmor's proposal for the state to buy Home State and then try to find an Ohio bank to take it over.

"We have a very solid and positive proposal to consider right now," Sawyer said.

The Republican Senate president stressed that he hasn't decided whether to pursue his idea with legislation, and the Senate Republican Caucus hasn't endorsed it.

Robert B. McAlister, state superintendent of savings and loans, has refused to provide numbers on the proposed deal with Chemical Bank. Gillmor said it calls for $90 million remaining from the private Ohio Deposit Guarantee Fund and $80 million in tax funds, while Chemical Bank would put in $21 million as a premium for entering Ohio's markets.

In addition, Sawyer said, Chemical Bank will have to recapitalize Home State, which has liabilities in excess of $500 million. He said the deal also could require a buyer to repay at least some of the tax funds from future profits.

Mexico's U.N. ambassador attacks car in parking spot

NEW YORK (AP) — Mexico's United Nations ambassador became so enraged when he saw a civilian car extending into a parking spot reserved for diplomats that he took a handgun and smashed one of the car's windows, police said.

However, police said they did not file any charges against Mexican Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary H.E. Porfirio Munoz-Ledo, 45, because he has diplomatic immunity.

A spokesman for the Mexican Mission to the U.N., who refused to give his name, said the ambassador was out of town for the weekend and not available for comment. The spokesman said the mission was investigating the matter.

Police Sgt. Ed LeSchack said Munoz-Ledo, 45, pulled up in front of his five-story Manhattan townhouse Thursday in his chauffeur-driven Mercedes-Benz and found Steve Goldstein's car sticking about 18 inches into a parking space reserved for diplomats.

Goldstein, 24, who lives in suburban Scarsdale, said he was parked for about five minutes.

Goldstein said Munoz-Ledo's car pulled up with its front bumper touching the rear fender of his car, preventing him from leaving.

"He got out of the car and started screaming at me that I was in his spot," Goldstein said. "I told him, 'I'm going away, let me out. I'm not looking for trouble.'"

Man hosts Vietnam vets for weekend of fun

HULL, Ga. (AP) — A travel agent who spent two years working with orphans in Southeast Asia hosted about 150 Vietnam veterans this weekend, hoping to "break the scab they've been going around with for 15 years."

John Snyder also planned today to dedicate a 2-ton pink granite monument at the edge of his property. Veterans helped raise the $1,700 for the monument, which bears the inscription: "Vietnam, 1945-75, Lest We Forget."

Snyder, 36, said he expected the weekend's activities would draw veterans from as far as Madison, Wis., to this northeastern Georgia community.

He described it as a "non-partisan, non-political celebration where chopper pilots, jet jockeys, tunnel rats and nurses" can get together to play volleyball, drink beer, swap stories about the war and meet each other's families as they camp out on his rural land.

"We see this as a chance for us to have fun, share common experiences and dedicate something in memory of the war that will always be here," said Snyder.

Protein attacks tumor cells

EMERYVILLE, Calif. (AP) — Researchers say they have cloned the human gene for a protein that attacks and destroys some types of tumor cells, a development that could lead to applications for cancer patients.

"This is very preliminary, because we have not tried it in enough animals or shown that it works in humans yet," said David Marks, a biochemist on the research team at Cetus Corporation.

"But we hope that eventually there will be an application for it in treating cancer patients, and there's a possibility of using it against parasitic diseases as well," he said Friday.

The scientists' findings, which are detailed in a report to be published in the journal Science, show that the tumor-attacking protein — called tumor necrosis factor, or TNF — killed malignant cells in five of 11 types of human tumors grown in laboratory batches of tissue cells.

The substance halted the rapid growth of three other human tumors, the scientists said. The protein had no effect on three other types of tumor cells.

Boy repossessed with car

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Marion Hall left her 2-year-old boy in her car for a few minutes as she put away some groceries, but that was long enough for the automobile to be repossessed with the toddler still in it.

Ms. Hall had parked in the garage of her country home Wednesday afternoon, taking the groceries and her 4-year-old daughter Shannon into the house while Jesse slept on the front seat.

When Ms. Hall returned outside, she discovered that the car and her child were gone.

The car, which had been put up for collateral on a loan for an acquaintance of Ms. Hall, had been repossessed after the borrower defaulted on payments.

Ms. Hall first thought her car had been stolen and she ran down the driveway screaming.

Two men outside a house next door jumped in their truck to try to find Ms. Hall's car and child. They chased down the tow truck and returned home with Jesse.

The owner of the towing company, whose home telephone number was unlisted, could not be reached for comment.

Mine blast injures seven

CLARINGTON, Ohio (AP) — An explosion in a coal mine Saturday injured seven miners, one seriously, officials said.

About 160 other people working in the Quarto Co.'s No. 4 mine were evacuated, and all miners were accounted for, said superintendent Phil Wright. He said an acetylene tank may have caused the blast.

The explosion occurred before noon in the southeast Ohio mine, Wright said.

One of the six miners was hospitalized in serious condition, another was in surgery late Saturday afternoon, and four were hospitalized in stable condition, according to officials at area hospitals.

Iraq steps up 'war of the cities' with Iran

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq stepped up the "war of the cities" Saturday, raiding Tehran by air and firing missiles at three Iranian cities in attacks which Iran said left scores dead and injured.

In Tehran, Iran's capital, the Iranian armed forces said in a statement that their planes raided the northeastern border town of Ranya, inflicting "heavy losses," and that Iranian guns shelled Basra, Mandali and eight other towns along the warfront. There was no confirmation from Iraq.

An Iraqi military spokesman said Iraqi jets raided Tehran before dawn Saturday in retaliation for an explosion the previous day in Baghdad. Iran claimed Friday's blast was caused by one of its missiles.

The attacks on residential areas began March 5 after a nine-month, U.N.-brokered moratorium on such raids. Baghdad residents call the newest phase in the 4½-year-old war the "war of the cities."

The Iraqi spokesman reported troops fired surface-to-surface missiles at the Iranian border cities of Dezful, Nahawand and Ram Hormuz as part of a campaign to force the Iranians to the conference table.

Iran confirmed the Iraqi strikes. Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said in dispatches monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, that at least 40 people were killed or injured in Dezful, 24 killed or wounded in Ram Hormuz, and 10 killed and an undetermined number wounded in Nahawand.

IRNA listed the Tehran raid toll at one dead and four injured and said the raid was carried out by a single Iraqi jet.

The agency said dozens of homes, shops and cars were destroyed in the missile attacks, which took place at the start of the Iranian work week.

Lebanese army tries to curb factional strife

By SAMIR F. GHATTAS

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Fourteen months after it fell apart in Lebanon's sectarian struggle, the Lebanese army is deployed on seven fronts, trying to curb factional strife and to face up to a far superior Israeli force.

It also has to battle against equipment shortages, lack of discipline, and sometimes contradictory — or impossible — orders arising from Lebanon's political tangle.

A senior Lebanese military source, asked why the army failed to implement various "security plans" intended to quiet factional battles, said that the soldiers often are confused about what to do.

The soldiers know full well that their orders are often intended more to calm public fear than to be vigorously carried out, explained the source, who spoke on condition he was not identified.

One example of the army's problems came this week with the announcement that the government was sending 1,200 soldiers to the southern port of Sidon to help quell fighting by Christian militiamen against Moslem and Palestinian irregulars.

Thirty brand new armored personnel carriers, shipped from the United States at the end of a year-long suspension on deliveries of such equipment, rolled south along the coast to cheers from the populace. But they got only as far as Beirut Airport, where they were to be fitted out with machine guns.

Then, before the vehicles could proceed south to Sidon, Lebanese newspapers were reporting that arguments had arisen among various factions as to where the troops would be deployed around Sidon.

The same thing happened when the army first moved south along Lebanon's coastal road in preparation for taking over Sidon when Israeli troops withdrew on Feb. 16.

Several announcements of deployments preceded the actual move, while Moslems, Christians and the Lebanese government negotiated where the army would take positions.

An army major who took part in the deployment said, "It is a political agreement that allows us here."

The major — who like most of the soldiers interviewed would not allow use of his name — added: "We can't move too quickly. We can't take big steps. We have to move little by little."

The last big step the army took was in February 1984 when President Amin Gemayel's government ordered an artillery bombardment of Beirut's southern suburbs to try to put down Shiite Moslem militiamen.

The army split into factions mirroring Lebanon's political tangle of Moslems, Christians and Druse.

An even more drastic split occurred during the 1975-76 round of Lebanon's civil war when an attempt was made to use the army to settle fights between different religious factions.

The army's strength is now put at 35,000, with perhaps half that number adequately trained under a U.S.-sponsored program that was sharply curtailed after the February 1984 battles.

The army is now deployed in seven locations:

— In the mountain town of Souk el-Gharb facing Druse militiamen.

— On the "green line" in central Beirut to separate Christian and Moslem fighters.

— In the northern port of Tripoli to end warfare among rival Moslem factions.

— In east Beirut to help settle a revolt by pro-Israeli forces in President Amin Gemayel's Christian Phalange Party.

— In Sidon to quell battles between Christian forces and allied Moslem and Palestinian fighters.

— In the Kharroub region to calm Moslem and Christian forces who fought for much of last year.

— On the front line with Israel's occupation force, where it has several times wound up in exchanges with a far stronger army. Four Lebanese and one Israeli soldier have been killed in such confrontations.

Lebanon's political, military leaders try to halt fighting

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Political and military leaders met under the chairmanship of President Amin Gemayel on Saturday in an effort to halt fighting that has killed 48 people in the southern port city of Sidon.

There was a ninth straight day of fighting between Christian militiamen and Moslem and Palestinian fighters Saturday in Sidon, 25 miles south of Beirut. They exchanged sporadic rifle fire and hurled grenades through much of the day.

The fighting stepped up in the afternoon to mortar, tank and artillery exchanges, reporters in the area said.

Sidon is the provincial capital of southern Lebanon.

Hospital sources said four people were injured Saturday, raising the overall casualty toll to 48 people killed and at least 198 wounded.

South African police lob tear gas at thousands of black mourners

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police fired tear gas Saturday to disperse thousands of black mourners marching from a funeral for riot victims to a cemetery in the eastern Cape Province, witnesses said.

A black reporter who said he witnessed the incident in Zwide township, outside the auto-making city of Port Elizabeth, said about half the estimated 15,000 mourners could not proceed to the cemetery for the burial service.

The reporter, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said police later fired rubber bullets in clashes with mourners after the burials.

A police spokesman at headquarters in Pretoria said he had no information on unrest in the eastern Cape Province since daybreak.

Earlier, the spokesman said police shot dead a 19-year-old black man and wounded two blacks in one clash and that rioting broke out Friday night and early Saturday in a half-dozen eastern Cape townships.

The violence occurred during a funeral for four men killed in riots in Port Elizabeth's townships, witnesses said.

Police did not interrupt a funeral in Zwide for Xolile Kani, 26, youngest brother of international actor John Kani. About 2,000 mourners attended the funeral for Xolile Kani, killed during a clash with police 10 days ago.

John Kani won acclaim for his performance in Johannesburg of the anti-apartheid play, "Master Harold...and the Boys," which later ran on Broadway.

The police and army presence was heavy at the funeral for the four, black reporters said, unlike a funeral for six riot victims the previous weekend in Kwanobuhle, a black township near Uitenhage. That funeral ended without major incidents.

The funeral for the four men was attended mainly by followers of the United Democratic Front, South Africa's largest coalition opposing apartheid, the nation's racial segregation system. The Front invites support from all races in its campaign for black rights.

Xolile Kani was a member of the Azanian People's Organization, a rival organization that emphasizes black consciousness. The movement has far fewer followers than the Front, especially in the eastern Cape, and the funeral was less political than that of the four men at the nearby Roman Catholic church in Zwide. John Kani said his brother was killed while walking home from a doctor's appointment when a crowd of youths overtook him and were fired on by police.

The four victims at the larger funeral were Lawrence Faltein, Mnyamezeli Mlondobi, Stokes Voyi and Mzmasi Zandanta, from different Port Elizabeth townships. They were killed in separate clashes with police.

Since March 21, when 19 black marchers were shot dead by police outside nearby Uitenhage, more than 40 blacks have perished in confrontations.

Several blacks regarded as collaborators with the white government have been killed by mobs. Among the victims were black members of government-backed township councils.

Gunman kills Libyan exile, wounds two passersby in Bonn

BONN, West Germany (AP) — A gunman shot and killed a Libyan exile and wounded two passersby on a busy street Saturday before he was wrestled to the ground by an off-duty policeman who was shopping in the area.

Police said the victim was Gebrel el Denali, 30, an opponent of Libyan leader Moammer Khadafy.

"It appears to be a political killing," said Bonn police spokesman Hans-Georg Classen.

Classen identified the gunman only as Fatahi T., and said he was a 29-year-old Libyan. He said police were questioning him, but had learned little because of translation difficulties.

"As far as I understand, he does not speak German or English."

Squatters' leaders accept offer

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Leaders of about half of some 100,000 black squatters in the Crossroads shanty city have accepted a revised government offer to move to a new township, it was reported Saturday.

The South African Press Association said the agreement came after the white-minority government promised that those who accepted the offer would not be forced to move back to tribal homelands for at least 18 months. That represented a major break from the previous policy that squatters illegally in the Cape Town area would have to go back to the homelands.

Crossroads, a vast city of shacks 12 miles east of Cape Town, was the site of bloody rioting in February when rumors started that the government was about to move residents by force to the new township. At least 18 blacks were killed at the camp, which has become a symbol of resistance to forced population removals by the government.

The government had insisted that Crossroads families move to Khayelitsha, a township being built six miles farther from Cape Town. Residents refused to go, claiming the government had said it would allow them to rebuild on the present Crossroads site.

Officials: U.S. revised rebel aid plan last week

WASHINGTON (AP) — The administration revised its aid plan for Nicaraguan rebels at a high-level meeting last week after President Reagan learned his original proposal faced almost certain House defeat, U.S. officials say.

The plan was drawn up Tuesday when the administration sensed that it could not overcome an estimated 28-vote deficit in the Democrat-controlled House to release $14 million in military aid for the rebels, said the officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified.

Under the revised initiative, which was almost immediately rejected by Nicaragua, Reagan would spend the assistance for nonlethal equipment only for at least two months if the Sandinista government engages in good-faith talks on national reconciliation with an opposition coalition.

If the negotiations do not bear fruit, Reagan would reserve the right to begin shippping arms to the insurgents.

The broad outlines of the revised aid plan began to emerge about a month ago and were put into final form at the Tuesday meeting attended by Reagan, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane, according to the officials.

The sources said Reagan had intended to make the proposal public this week but decided to announce it last Thursday after becoming concerned about possible press leaks.

Because of congressional opposition, the rebels have received no U.S. aid for almost a year. A five-month congressional ban on aid to the contras expired Feb. 28, and since then the administration has given high priority to persuading Congress to approve more aid.

Last fall, Congress gave the green light to a $14 million appropriation for the rebels but said the funds could not be released without the approval of both houses of Congress after the Feb. 28 deadline.

The political intelligence that prompted Reagan's decision on Tuesday, was underscored on Wednesday when House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel, R-Ill., told the president the original program was "dead in the water" without changes.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Evidence grows that rebel leader killed, wounded

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — There is increasing evidence that the leftist guerrillas' top commander in the eastern part of the country has been killed or badly wounded, a U.S. military official said Saturday.

If true, the loss of Joaquin Villalobos, 33-year-old head of the People's Revolutionary Army, would be a major blow to the rebels.

The Peoples' Revolutionary Army is the largest of the five guerrilla groups that have been battling the U.S.-backed government for 5½ years.

Rebel sources in Mexico City and San Jose, Costa Rica, denied the reports that Villalobos' may have been slain.

But Maj. Carlos Aviles, head of the Armed Forces Press Committee, said Friday night "we are almost 100 percent sure" that Villalobos was killed or seriously wounded March 31 in a battle in northern San Miguel province.

Aviles said the report came from an army reservist who was pressed into service by the guerrillas as a stretcher bearer to evacuate rebels wounded in fighting on that day.

Cambodia talks suggested

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone will suggest that leaders of the industrialized nations meeting at their annual economic summit next month hold discussions on Cambodia, the Kyodo News Service reported Saturday.

Nakasone has told the Foreign Ministry to begin conferring on the subject with the other six nations taking part in the May 2-4 summit in Bonn — host West Germany, the United States, Canada, France, Britain and Italy.

Vietnam invaded Cambodia at the end of 1978, ousted the radical communist regime of the Khmer Rouge in early 1979 and installed a pro-Vietnamese and pro-Soviet government. Cambodian rebels are fighting to drive out that government.

Indian female tiger killed

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Wildlife officials have shot a female tiger that killed six people in a national park in northern India, the United News of India reported Saturday.

The news agency said the tigress was killed Thursday in the Dudwa wildlife sanctuary in Uttar Pradesh state, about 185 miles east of New Delhi.

The animal killed four villagers in January and struck again Wednesday night, mauling to death a young park ranger and a laborer riding on a motorcycle, the report said.

India's famed Bengal tigers, once on the verge of extinction, have thrived under Project Tiger, a program launched 11 years ago to protect the animals in 15 government reserves. They now number about 40,000 nationwide.

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Crane, Upton, Reagan, Glasscock, Howard, Martin, Borden, Dawson, Andrews and Gaines: Today...clear and warm. High in lower 70s. East wind 10 to 20 mph. Today night and Monday...clear. Low in mid 40s and high near 70.

Sterling, Tom Green, Irion and Coke: Today...sunny and cooler. High in the lower 70s. East wind 10 to 15 mph. Tonight and Monday...clear. Low in upper 40s and high near 70.

Easter bonnet conditions expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders will find weather conditions ideal for donning Easter bonnets as sunny skies and warm temperatures are forecast for today, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Today will be clear and warm with the high in the low 70s. Winds will be easterly at 10-20 mph. Tonight will be clear with the low expected near 40. Monday will be clear with the high near 70.

Saturday's high of 84 was 15 degrees below the record set in 1972. The low of 45 was 22 degrees above the record set in 1923.

STATE

Blue skies covered most of the Texas landscape Saturday but clouds were expected to begin rolling in as moist tropical air moved up from the Gulf of Mexico and a cold front moved down from the nation's midsection.

A weak surface trough extended from near Wichita Falls southward into the lower Pecos Valley late in the day and patchy clouds began appearing along the coastal plains.

The forecast for Easter called for clouds to increase in the moist air over South Texas, pushing northward into Central Texas. The rest of the state was expected to enjoy fair, but cooler weather.

Cold air poised in the center of the country was expected to charge into Texas by morning, dropping temperatures as much as 40 degrees in the mountains and Panhandle of Northwest Texas. The low clouds will mean temperatures in the 50s and 60s over most of the state, the weather service said.

NATION

Strong winds buffeted the Great Lakes and the Northeast on Saturday, damaging roofs, overturning mobile homes and knocking down power lines, while snow showers fell across Michigan and the Plains.

A traveler's advisory for snow and blowing snow was posted for the northern part of Michigan's Lower Peninsula as well as parts of the state's Upper Peninsula. Up to 2 inches of snow was expected along with considerable blowing and drifting, and some roads were closed Saturday morning due to blowing and drifting snow.

Snowshowers were scattered over the northern and central Plains. Snowfall during the six hours ending at 1 p.m. EST included 2 inches at Marquette, Mich., and an inch at Casper, Wyo., Houghton Lake, Mich., and Sault Ste Marie, Mich.

Only time will tell if minority councilman successful

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

With its somber shades of green and brown, the color scheme in the Midland City Council chambers suits that body's conservative image, with one glaring exception: the audience seats, which come in a garish assortment of pinks, blues and yellows.

Until Saturday's election, however, the council itself had always been lily white.

When Oralia "Lillie" Corrales beat out four other minority candidates to win the District 2 council seat, it marked the first time in Midland's history a non-Anglo was elected to the city's governing body. Not coincidentally, it was also the first time Midland councilmen were elected from single-member districts.

The council did not give up its at-large system voluntarily; it was forced to make the change by the League of United Latin American Citizens and the Black Advisory Council, which had sued the city in federal court to increase the chances of electing minority councilmen.

Because Hispanics (17 percent) and blacks (10 percent) together comprise more than a quarter of the city's population but none of its elected officials, the Voting Rights Act of 1965 would almost certainly have been invoked to mandate single-member districts, as in other Texas cities. Recognizing this, the city finally capitulated in December, settling the suit out of court and agreeing to replace the five at-large seats with four single-member-district and two at-large seats.

The council also agreed to draw the districts in such a way that the minority-dominated east and south sides would have their own councilman. A minority-group strategy to help elect a second minority candidate to one of the two at-large seats later led to a dispute over ballot language which threatened to delay the election before a panel of federal judges "suggested" a solution which gave the minority groups the wording they wanted and allowed the election to go forward.

Jerry Mennega/Reporter-Telegram

Oralia Corrales exhibits her joy at winning the District 2 race for the Midland City Council in Saturday's elections. This marked the first year the single-member district plan went into effect on the council.

And so, 20 years after Midland's schools were desegregated, the City Council has been integrated. But it remains to be seen how well the council's old guard will accept the change, and how the minority communities will react if "their" councilman doesn't get immediate results in improving conditions on the south and east sides.

"Minorities are finally beginning to wake up," says Charlie Jackson, president of the BAC. "They're finally realizing that nothing is going to be given to us."

The council "has done some good things, but they haven't done enough," says Jackson, who claims the councilmen elected at-large haven't represented the south and east sides.

"They've always taken us for granted. We have needs, we have feelings and we just want to be considered."

"We may not see a change the first few years (on the council), but eventually there will be," says LULAC President Edia Hernandez. And Jackson agrees the minorities' emerging political power will eventually mean better conditions for the south and east sides: "We just have to hold our ground, and eventually we'll come out on top."

But Mayor G. Thane Akins doesn't see what a black or Hispanic councilman could do that the all-Anglo council hasn't already done.

"I believe the council has been responsive to every corner of the city," he says.

Minority leaders complain about unpaved streets on the south and east sides, but Akins says the city can't pave streets with its own money; only federal community-development grants can be used for that purpose. "And virtually all those funds have been spent on the south and east sides. Whatever funds have been available for paving streets, that's where they've been spent."

Jackson isn't impressed: "They throw that (the CD funds) in our faces — well, we're supposed to get it."

He mentions other minority complaints, such as fewer police patrols, fewer garbage pickups and fewer street-cleaning sweeps on the south and east sides, and the lack of commercial development which forces minority shoppers to drive miles to buy groceries and other items, and says the city doesn't force landowners to clean up their lots.

But Akins denies that more city services are provided to the northwest side, and claims a lack of neighborhood pride contributes to the shabby conditions in much of the south and east sides.

"It doesn't take a lot of money to keep your yard clean and neat," he says. "That's an attitude we're attempting to change all over town."

The city has tried to encourage development on the south and east sides, he adds, "But it's been real difficult — it's a matter of economic choice on the part of these institutions. Some of that is changing, and it's got to be changed to get something going in that part of town."

Akins said minority candidates have failed in citywide elections because those best qualified to run haven't come forward, or haven't made a serious effort to campaign outside of the minority neighborhoods.

"There's no question in my mind that the qualified people are there, but it takes a broad-based campaign, it takes money and it takes organization (to win), especially when you're already outnumbered."

Akins concedes there is "some built-in resistance" to minority candidates among Anglo voters, "and you've got to overcome that. It's not easy."

Incumbents return to MMH board

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Two incumbent directors were re-elected and a former chairman of the board of trustees of Midland County Hospital District returned to the board in Saturday's pre-Easter citywide election.

A fourth contender, Jacqueline Walton Allen, the daughter of an early Midland Memorial physician, was undaunted by the defeat in her first try for the director's seat.

"I was thrilled to receive as many votes as I did," said Ms. Allen, a Midland attorney. "I can't believe that I did so well, considering I didn't even have a committee."

The hospital board race was won by current directors Dr. Walter Parks and Frank Cahoon and former chairman of the board Eugene Abbott.

The four contenders vied for two seats opened when terms expired for Parks and Cahoon and a third seat vacated by Wanda Mohr, who chose not to run again.

The MMH board election clearly belonged to Parks, who at 4,009 votes outdistanced the other three candidates by almost 1,000 votes.

Cahoon, a former state representative and city councilman, placed second with 3,097, Abbott pulled 3,026 and Ms. Allen received 2,815 votes in an election plagued by low voter turnout.

Those figures include votes by Greenwood residents.

"I think the low number of voters could be attributed to the Easter holiday," said Abbott, a long-time Midland builder.

Ms. Allen indicated she would be running again in the future.

"Oh, I intend to pursue the matter," she said. "There is always next year."

Two seats held by board members Pat Estes and Tevis Herd will be up for election next spring.

Both Cahoon and Parks could not be reached following the final vote tally at the election administrator's office.

The three top vote-getters will be facing continuing challenges placed upon MCHD by new changes in Medicare and the way it reimburses hospitals for patient treatment.

Diagnosis related groups (DRGs) — 468 categories of patient treatment which are reimbursed by the federal organization — are causing headaches for physicians and hospital administrators with newer complicated forms and restrictive reimbursement policies.

All the candidates listed Medicare changes as a number one priority item for the MCHD.

"It's critical that we keep up with changing government regulations in health care in order to create the best possible health care at the best possible cost," said Cahoon recently.

"Adjusting to the new federal regulations involving DRGs is one of the main issues," echoed Parks.

Abbott indicated that the Medicare problem will be solved.

"We really don't know how all of this will impact us," he said in an earlier interview. "But it's not a problem that can't be coped with. It is being coped with."

Barnett, Robinson will meet in MISD run-off

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A run-off election pitting Geoffrey Barnett against Betsy Robinson for Place 7 on the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees is slated for April 27 after neither candidate could score 50.1 percent of the votes cast Saturday.

A breakdown of the total showed Barnett with 2,111 votes or 45.6 percent, while Mrs. Robinson received 1,515 votes or 32.7 percent. Mike Butler, assistant director of Public Works, received 1,001 of the total or 21.6 percent in a losing effort.

Barnett, who is a certified public accountant with Arthur Andersen and Associates, said "I'm tickled to death to be a candidate in the run-off. I just hope the people will get out and vote."

A product of MISD, Barnett is a 1970 graduate of Midland High School and received a bachelor of business administration degree in accounting from the University of Texas at Austin.

"The education system plays one of the most important roles in society, that of educating our children. Public schools have been of special interest to me since my wife taught for four years and now I have a child in public school," he said.

Mrs. Robinson reacted to the run-off by noting, "I would really love to win and I'd really love to serve on the school board. I'm gonna go for it."

A former educator, Mrs. Robinson taught junior high school and high school students in Michigan, adult education to Air Force personnel in Texas, and served as a substitute teacher in Midland for several years.

In addition to her teaching experience, Mrs. Robinson was involved in PTA's and as a classroom volunteer. She played an active role in promoting change in the high school grading system.

"I can't believe only 8.4 percent of the voters turned out in this election. I'm just amazed at that apathy. The people that heard us were very responsive to our ideas. We need a real representative government on this board," she said.

When asked what her plans are for the next three weeks, Mrs. Robinson said "I'm going to meet as many wonderful people in Midland as I can."

Also elected to seats in unopposed races were K. Michael Conaway, Place 5, with 3,375 votes and incumbent Joe Golding, Place 6, with 3,501 votes.

Donnell, Morgan, Blackwell on GISD board

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Challengers James Donnell and Don Morgan defeated incumbent opponents Patsy Herrington and J.D. Hanson for Place 6 and Place 7 respectively on the Greenwood Independent School District Board of Trustees. Candidate Archie Blackwell also was victorious over opponent Kenneth Ellis in his bid Saturday for election to Place 2 (a one-year expired term).

"I feel pretty good," said Morgan after learning of his narrow defeat over Hanson. "I'm really concerned about the school situation out here."

The final count including absentee votes was 191 for Morgan and 152 for Hanson, a one-term member of the board.

Morgan, a Greenwood native, is a pumper with Tamarack Petroleum Corp. He and his wife Linda have three children. The couple are members of the GISD Booster Club and the Greenwood Baptist Church.

Donnell, who defeated Jeff Fair and Ms. Herrington, a two-term incumbent, said of his victory, "I'm real pleased. You work and you try to convince the voters that you're the man (or woman) for the job. I guess I showed them who's a little more concerned about education out here."

Donnell, an employee with Texaco, has resided in the Greenwood area for nine years. He and his wife Sandra have four children.

The final count for Place 6 was 178 votes for Donnell, 132 votes for Ms. Herrington and 40 votes for Fair.

Neither Ms. Herrington nor Hanson could be reached for comment concerning their defeats.

In the race for Place 2, Blackwell said "I feel we've got lots to do to get back to the quality education we had in the past."

Blackwell received 183 and Ellis 168 of the total votes cast.

An investigator with the Texas Department of Public Safety auto theft division, Blackwell said, "There's lots of areas we need to improve upon." Among them, are "making sure our kids are as thoroughly prepared for college as they have been in the past," he said.

The board — also consisting of John Underwood, Charles Gardner, Ted Benton and James Brooks — plans to canvass the votes at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Odessa City Council incumbents soundly defeat challengers

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — City council incumbents in Saturday's municipal elections defeated challengers by significant margins and voters also approved 11 proposed Charter revisions by significant to overwhelming margins.

At-large Councilman Sherman Cox swamped challenger Gary Rowe by a margin of 65.3 percent to Rowe's 34.7 percent.

Out of 5,117 votes cast in the at-large race, Cox garnered 3,341 against Rowe's 1,776.

Council member Melissa Hirsch soundly turned back challenges from Dan Jamierson and Cathalene Martell.

Ms. Hirsch emerged with 55.8 percent of the 1,515 votes cast in the District 4 race. Jamierson received 37.7 percent, with 571 votes, and Ms. Martell got 6.5 percent, with only 98 votes.

After all the votes were counted Saturday night and it was evident Cox had won the second at-large council term he sought, he was asked why he believed voters returned him by an overwhelming vote.

"I believe voters have said they are not ready for one-issue candidates with an axe to grind," Cox said. He went on to say he believes Odessa voters want people on the city council who will represent all of the city, which is what he intends to continue doing.

Cox noted Rowe had raised the question about the responsiveness of council members to the needs and wishes of Odessans. He said he believes the result Saturday indicates voters feel he has been doing a good job and has been available to listen to their comments.

Asked what her reaction was to the Saturday election results, Ms. Hirsch said she felt "a lot of people are satisfied and that's why they didn't get out and vote."

Saying she was real pleased with the margin of her win, she said, "I hope what Odessa voters are saying is that they are happy with the way the council is working now."

Noting Cox was given a second term by a large majority, Ms. Hirsch said she hopes voters are saying they're pleased and wants the council to continue doing what we've been doing.

Marcy expedition opens door for settlers to move into Texas

By Homer T. Fort

A frail and wiry military man named Captain Randolph B. Marcy organized and led an expedition in 1849 that, for the first time, gathered reliable information on the Permian Basin. As a result of his careful observations, Americans learned for the first time what a virtually unknown wilderness in the new state of Texas was like.

People now moving to Midland or elsewhere in the Basin from the eastern states can appreciate how raw and new the region is. At the time Marcy led his party from Fort Smith, Ark., to Santa Fe and returned, only a few Spanish explorers had crossed any part of the area. Their accounts were fragmentary. The Comanche and Kiowa Indians roamed back and forth among the few but large water holes. There were no towns or ranches. Maps were scarce and inaccurate.

Homer Fort served as director of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame for 15 years. Now projects director for the museum, he holds degrees in journalism and history from University of Texas-Austin. He was public information officer for Mobil Oil before coming to the Petroleum Museum.

A native of Massachusetts, Randolph B. Marcy was born in 1812. He was about six feet tall, weighed some 160 pounds, and was often plagued by attacks of asthma and dysentery.

HE WAS graduated from West Point's military academy in 1832. Marcy set no records for scholarship; he was in the lower third of his class.

Over a long military career, this unlikely Easterner made himself an expert on the western lands. He mapped rivers, built roads, sought out water supplies, and subjected himself to danger and chronic ill health. He was invited to speak before the American Geological Society and other learned groups. Yet the U.S. Army was slow to promote him and gave him little recognition.

Marcy was a 36-year-old captain and stationed at Fort Smith when he was selected to head a military party whose mission was, in part, to explore much of the Southwest for the first time.

Its other purposes grew out of the stampede of Americans to the new gold fields in California. One was to survey a new route from Fort Smith to Santa Fe from which migrants could take the southern and easier route to California. Another was to escort and guard nearly 500 gold seekers gathered at Fort Smith for an overland move to Santa Fe and beyond.

ONE OF Marcy's orders was to "keep a correct journal of each day's march." He was to do this faithfully in spare but imaginative language.

With an appropriation of $50,000, Marcy assembled a party that included five young officers and 72 enlisted men. He had 18 supply wagons, cattle and mules, a cannon, a forge, and a surveying chain, plus a "viameter." The latter seems to have been a device for measuring distances through wagon-wheel revolutions.

Beginning April 4, 1849, the Marcy expedition moved across the Arkansas River and in a southwesterly direction through the timbers of Oklahoma. Its members found for the first time that the Red River had two streams as sources rather than one. Crossing the Red River into Texas and encountering the northern flank of the Llano Estacado, Marcy wrote of "this high table land where no man, either savage or civilized, permanently abides...(a land) which always has been and must continue uninhabited forever."

(Marcy seems to have changed his mind. After the expedition ended, he commented that the entire face of the prairie was covered with gramma grass "affording the most nutritious sustenance for grazing large flocks and herds.")

DEATHS

Laura Campbell

Services for Laura Campbell will be at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Wagner Stark Moore Funeral Home in Ypsilanti, Mich. Burial will follow at Highland Cemetery in Ypsilanti. Handling local arrangements is Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Campbell died Friday at a Midland hospital following a brief illness.

She was born Nov. 27, 1896, in Glasgow, Scotland, and then moved to the United States. She had lived in Michigan all her life before moving to Midland 18 months ago. She was a member of the Episcopal Church.

Survivors include two sons, Ronald Gardner Cambell of Lackeland, Mich., and Harold G. Campbell of Farmington Hills, Mich.; and two daughters, Betty Goyette of Davison, Mich., and Laura Manulik of Midland.

Mary Hale

Services for Mary Hale, 85, will be at 11 a.m. Monday in Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Ross Payne of Cottonflat Baptist Church officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Mrs. Hale died Friday at a Midland hospital. She had been in failing health for several years.

She was born April 1, 1900, in Wolf City and was reared in Sulfer Springs. She moved to Colorado City and later married William Oscar Hale, who died in 1952. She moved to Midland in 1961.

Survivors include three sons, L.T. Hale of Quemado, Cecil Hale of Midland and Charles Hale of Denver City; two daughters, Ruby Lee Helton of Irving and Maudie Ruth Terrett of Midland; two brothers, Willie Stephens of Clovis, N.M., and Sammy Stephens of Eureka, Calif.; a sister, Martha Gilliland of Clovis, N.M., 24 grandchildren; 21 great-grandchildren; and one great-great-granchild.

Sarah Jane Palmer

WALTERS, Okla. — Sarah Jane Palmer, 92, of Walters, died Friday in a local nursing home after a lengthy illness. She was the mother of JoAnne Daugherty of Midland and the sister of Chuck Phillips of Midland.

Services are scheduled for 2 p.m. Monday in the Hart-Wyatt Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Bob Styers officiating. Burial is to be in Walters Cemetery.

Mrs. Palmer was born Oct. 16, 1892, in Indian Territory near Ardmore, Okla. She moved near Walters with her parents in 1907, and married Jim Stevenson in December 1912. After that marriage ended, she married D.O. Palmer in July 1940 in El Reno, Okla. He later preceded her in death. She was a member of the Baptist Church.

Other survivors include a son, Bill Stevenson of Walters; another daughter, Fern Stone of Lawton, Okla.; another brother, Val Phillips of Santa Rosa, Calif.; five grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren.

Addie Fleckenstein

Services for Addie Hunt Fleckenstein, 84, will be at 2 p.m. Monday in the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Dr. Ray Riddle, pastor of Hospice, officiating.

Mrs. Fleckentsein died Friday at her home following a lengthy illness.

She was born Oct. 24, 1900, in Perry, Iowa, and was reared in Denver, Colo. She graduated from Denver General Hospital and was a registered nurse for more than 50 years. In 1935, she moved to Galveston and worked for John Sealy Hospital, then to Houston where she worked at Herman and Methodist hospitals. She moved to Midland in 1978 from Dallas.

Survivors include a son, Edmund G. Peterson of Dallas; a daughter, Zella P. Martin of Midland; eight grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Results of area towns' elections listed

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

After taking over as mayor protem when Rankin Mayor Allen Moore resigned in January, Roger Stafford was elected to the office Saturday during city and school board elections.

Stafford, who served as a city alderman until filling Moore's shoes, received 161 votes. Chosen to fill the other three vacancies on the city council were incumbents Jack D. Garner and Nancy P. Poage, who both received 145 votes; and Elsworth Greer, who received 175 votes.

A fourth candidate in the city council race was James Kelley, who received 125 votes from Rankin voters.

In Rankin school elections, Eddie J. Hyatt and Joe Loftin won out over four other candidates vying for the two open seats. Hyatt garnered 169 votes and Loftin received 135 votes.

Other candidates in the school board race included Rocklan A. King with 133 votes, Dean Nicholson with 130, Leslie C. Clifton with 34, and C.E. Winn with 31.

In Stanton city council elections, incumbents William "Bill" Wheeler and Thomas C. Miller won out over two challengers, Albert H. Baker and Kenneth "Butch" Haggard. Results indicated Wheeler and Miller both received 104 votes while Baker had 98 and Haggard had 41.

In Stanton school elections, unopposed candidates Mike Hall and Terry Franklin pulled positions on the board for Place 3 and Place 4, respectively. In Place 5, Robert Adkins won with 263 votes over Clemente Villa Jr. and Aurora Sanchez. Villa received 73 votes, while Sanchez, a write-in candidate, received two.

Twelve candidates entered the race for three at-large seats on the Big Spring City Council. Elected were Johnny Rutherford with 1,818 votes, Gary Don Carey with 1,387 and incumbent Russ McEwen with 1,155. Incumbent Jack Y. Smith received 1,013 votes.

In the school board race for District 2, incumbent Jerry Foresyth was defeated by challenger Ford Farris. Farris pulled in 380 votes to Foresyth's 222.

Incumbent Jimmy Anderson retained his seat in District 4 with 719 votes to challenger Wayne Henry's 314.

Big Spring voters also approved a binding referendum adopting Civil Service rules for the Big Spring Fire Department. The measure passed by a 2,031-1,575 margin.

Lamesa Mayor Don Bethel, the only incumbent in city council races, was re-elected with 946 votes. Also elected to the council was Steve Wilks with 935 votes.

Other candidates in the city council race included Pepe Lucio with 522 votes and Jackie Kelly with 405 votes.

In a landslide victory, Albert Martinez garnered 269 votes to claim the vacant seat in District 1 of the Lamesa school district. Other candidates vying for the position were Lyle Roberts with 75, Craig Trim with 66 and Doug Spurlock 26.

A runoff is expected to be held in District 2 between Jaime Sorala and Grant Lee Hollady. Sorala received 210 votes to Hollady's 139. Other candidates were Robert Anderson with 86 votes and Gabriel Estrada with 70 votes.

By more than a 2-1 margin, incumbent Don Bryant beat out challenger Nan Chaplain in the race for District 3. Bryant garnered 601 votes while Chaplain had 266.

Mayor Jack Atkinson, who was unopposed in the Crane mayoral race, retained his position with 316 votes. Incumbents in the two open seats on the city council also were re-elected. Thurston Rip Eggleston received 216 votes and John Paul Loyless received 221. Challenger Danny Hooper pulled in 134 votes.

In Crane school board elections, three candidates were in the race for the open seat in Place 1, vacated by an unexpired term. Winning the position was Louis Stone with 480 votes. Also running in the race were Dennis R. Dohlman with 133 votes and Curt Pidmore with 108.

In Place 3, Doyle Rogers unseated incumbent Patty McHorse with 457 votes compared to her 133. Also running in the race were Dennis Hambrick with 73 votes and Dean M. Schickedanz with 61.

Manuel Cadena Sr., also had an upset victory over incumbent Jerry Smith in the race in Place 4. Cadena pulled in 376 votes, Smith had 200 and Freddy Ward received 145.

The Place 5 race drew seven candidates with incumbent Ray North taking a victory with 223 votes. Running for the seat were Sammy Hooper with 137, Ricky C. Heredia with 57, Sherian McFadden with 80, Charles A. Draper with 108, Charley Hyche with 101 and Robert B. Velasquez with 16.

With no city elections Saturday, Garden City voters turned full attention to the school board race, which had two vacant seats. Winning were incumbent Barbara Halfman with 148 and Dennis Fuchs with 145. Glenda Blalock received 135 votes.

Voters casting their ballots in the Klondike Independent School District election re-elected two incumbents. Daniel Cave received 161 votes and Jerry Webb received 171. Challengers were Joe Cozart, who pulled in 40 votes, and Blas Arismendez with 18.

MINORITY

One minority candidate who overcame that resistance was James Ramsoure, who was elected to the Midland Independent School District board in 1974 and re-elected without opposition three years later. But Ramsoure subsequently lost two elections, and he thinks his losses were more significant than his victories.

"I was in pretty good shape until the west and northwest sides came in, and I got slaughtered," he says. "When you look at the realities of the thing, you just don't have a chance" without single-member districts.

Things used to be worse for Midland's minorities, says Ramsoure, who notes that when he moved here in 1958, the schools were segregated and the Reporter-Telegram ignored the black community, refusing to run black obituaries or wedding announcements.

"It shows how things have changed," says W.H. "Bill" Collyns, the Reporter-Telegram's editor from 1946 to 1980. Collyns thinks the move to single-member districts is "a step in the right direction. I understand their feelings, because it's been difficult to get them elected."

Ramsoure and Manuel Carrasco cite a number of minority candidates they say were well-qualified for office but lost citywide races, including Ciro Sanchez, Roger Robles and the Rev. Woodrow Bailey.

"It's kind of discouraging — all these people are qualified people, and they didn't make it," says Carrasco, a former school administrator who was himself defeated Saturday in the citywide race for the two at-large council seats. "People begin to wonder, 'why vote?' "

Carrasco says the switch to single-member districts "is a turning point — it has activated these communities to want to get involved."

"It's not that the council hasn't tried, but people drive through that part of town and say, 'What happened?' People feel they've been forgotten."

Having a minority councilman visibly participating in the city government will help change that feeling, Carrasco says, and Jackson agrees that the most important benefit of Ms. Corrales' election may be the psychological impact on Midland's blacks and Hispanics.

"To have one of our own, whether black or Hispanic (on the council) would give our children a sense of encouragement that minorities don't just have to sit back and let someone else make all the decisions," he says. "We can have a sense of belonging. We're all working toward the same goal, and that's making the city better."

"It gives them a voice that they perceive they didn't have before," agrees Akins. The mayor is still concerned that single-member districts will politicize the council and make it less efficient — "You get comfortable with a system that works, and there's always the fear of the unknown" — but is hopeful the council will overcome problems he says have plagued other cities which have made the switch.

"Midland is unique in lots of ways, and we may figure out a way to make it work better than other cities," he says.

"It will take a while to blend in," says Jackson, but once the Anglo councilmen get used to the idea of minority councilmen, "We'll work real well together. We are ready to accept the responsibility — we just want the city council to accept us."

Ms. Hirsch took six of the seven District 4 boxes, with Jamierson winning only the Precinct 303 box at Alamo Elementary School. At that polling place, Jamierson got 53 to Ms. Hirsch's 46 votes. Ms. Martell got only five votes in that precinct.

The District 4 council representative garnered 58.3 percent of the 345 votes cast absentee in her district. At-large representative Cox received 68.8 percent of the 1,228 votes cast absentee.

Of 21 precinct boxes in the at-large race, Cox took 17, while Rowe took the four boxes at Pease, Lamar, Hood and Floyd Gwin elementary schools.

The 11 proposed Charter revision amendments were approved by voters by margins ranging from 61.5 to 81.6 percent.

The most significant Charter changes involve the absences of council members and the mayor, recall procedures, initiatives and referendums, filling council vacancies and runoff election procedures.

Proposition 6, as approved, stipulates that if the mayor or any council members misses 50 percent of council meetings during a six month period the office shall be declared forfeit and a successor named as soon as possible.

Proposition 5 revises procedures for the recall of elected city officials. Under the previous Charter amendment, as was found last year when an effort was launched to recall Mayor John Minor, recall was virtually impossible because of the number of names required on petitions.

Proposition 11 will require that in future elections any candidate must win by a clear majority of votes or face a runoff with the nearest challenger.

Conaway, vice president of finance and administration, and director of Spectrum 7 Energy Corp., is a certified public accountant with more than 13 years experience in business. He also serves as chairman of the Community Services Branch of the Midland YMCA, nation chief and nation treasurer of the Indian Guides program, sponsored by the YMCA, vice commissioner of the Midland Soccer Association-Senior Division and is a member of the current Leadership Midland class.

Conaway and his wife, Julie, have two sons attending Goddard Junior High and Henderson Elementary school. The couple are members of the Goddard, Henderson and Emerson Parent-Teacher Associations. The family also is active in the First Baptist Church.

Golding, owner of Golding's and Upstairs Downstairs, has served as chairman of the 1981 Christmas Parade, as a member of the Midland Downtown Lions Club and has coached in Little League soccer and basketball programs. He and his wife Patricia have three children.

The board will have a special meeting at 4 p.m. Monday to canvass results of the election and the new members will be sworn in at Tuesday's 1:30 p.m. board meeting.

CHRONICLES

On his journey toward Santa Fe, Marcy, the stiff-backed West Pointer, let his whiskers grow untamed. This may have been due to water shortages, but it offers a precedent for 1965's beard-growing centennial celebrants.

He and his men rolled into Santa Fe in early summer, 1849. Their cavalcade of gold hunters had escaped attack. The party had covered 819 miles in 85 days though only 65 of these were used for actual travel.

MARCY RESTED his men, his mules, and himself for six weeks, then on Aug. 14 swung his diminished group southeast toward the small frontier settlement of Dona Ana, N.M., about two miles from present-day Las Cruces. The tiny village provided some supplies and rest before Marcy began his trip through the almost unknown reaches of the Permian Basin.

The soldiers labored up and over the San Augustin Pass through the Organ Mountains, then shoved on toward the Guadalupe Mountains to the east. Marcy wrote of seeing numerous bears, bighorn sheep, and black-tail deer in the Guadalupes.

The expedition sighted the Pecos River on Sept. 17.

Modern Texans who think the Pecos is 10 feet wide and 10 inches deep should know that Marcy described it as "about 30 yards wide, rapid and deep, with high clay banks." The Pecos hadn't yet been dammed in New Mexico.

Marcy decided to cross the Pecos, which begins to take a generally east-west direction in that area. He wedged six empty barrels into a detached wagon bed for a raft. One of his men swam the rough waters with teeth clinched on a rope. Thereafter the buoyant wagon bed seved as a raft. Suffering terribly from dysentery, the captain had to be tugged across lying flat on his back. The entire train crossed the Pecos, however, in only one day.

The loneliness of the uninhabited land must have pressed down on the soldiers. Campfires helped push back the night, and they sometimes sang to keep spirits up. Only the familiar stars, shining brilliantly in a sky untouched by lights, brought any reminder of home.

NOW MOVING northeast in Texas, Marcy flanked the tremendous white dunes near what is now Monahans. He was unable to get heavy wagons through the worst of the sand, but did determine that fresh water could be found near the bases of the big dunes.

Whether Marcy pushed his party into present-day Midland County can't be determined from his somewhat vague descriptions. If he did, the date was Oct. 1, 1849. He wrote that day of covering 17 miles and of camping near "Mustang Pond," a site only about 10 miles northeast of Midland.

West Texans know what Marcy meant when he scribbled, "There is much sameness in the aspects of the prairies upon the Llano Estacado." Lacking landmarks, he had a tough time describing his route.

"Mustang Pond," which later became "Mustang Springs," was thought to be a permanent water hole fed by springs. Marcy's note on it took many later parties to the site; most found it dry since it exists only after rains.

(The site of Mustang Springs has since been marked, but the monument is now about a half-mile from the place Marcy saw. It has been relocated to make it more accessible.)

On Oct. 3 a Comanche guide led the explorers to a large spring that flowed from "a deep chasm in the limestone rocks into an immense reservoir of some fifty feet in depth."

This was the first account of what Marcy called the "Big Spring" in the town of the same name.

The only real tragedy for the party occurred Oct. 7 when the group reached a campsite near modern Snyder. A young lieutenant, Montgomery Harrison, left to explore the area around the camp and did not return. The next morning searchers found the mutilated body where Indians had left it.

Perhaps because of the young lieutenant's distinguished family — he was the grandson of President William Henry Harrison and brother to the man who became President Benjamin Harrison — Marcy decided against prairie burial. Instead, he had his men build a coffin and pack charcoal around the body. It was later delivered at Fort Smith, was buried there, and was later removed for re-burial at South Bend, Ind.

MARCY REACHED Fort Smith Nov. 20, 1849, after covering 2,023 miles. His report on the trip earned him much credit, a reputation enhanced later by other trips into the West.

Unhappily, Marcy became entangled in Army politics, especially after his daughter married General George B. McClellan, one of the many Union commanders who failed to beat Robert E. Lee in the early days of the Civil War. Promotions for him were scarce, and his career rocky. Only the intervention of Ulysses S. Grant finally got him the brigadier general's rank he deserved.

But Randolph Marcy served his country devotedly and well over 49 years of service. He died Jan. 22, 1887, and is buried at West Orange, N.J.

Marcy's 1849 journey tore down the ignorance that veiled our geography and flung open the door for later arrivals. Midland's centennial in part owes its beginning to Marcy and the mostly unnamed but valiant men who followed him.

Much in this account is from Joe Pickle's "Gettin' Started", a history of Howard County, and from "Marcy and the Gold Seekers" by Grant Foreman. The latter contains much of Marcy's journal. A copy is in the Midland County Public Library ad is recommended for futher reading.

Centennial Chronicles will appear on this page each Sunday through July 7 in observance of Midland's Centennial. The columns were contributed by local writers in cooperation with the Midland Centennial Commission.

Ed Darnell

It was 1920 when East Texas boy Ed Darnell moved to Sweetwater and just two years later when the friendly bread peddler moved on to Midland. "I was just coming West," says former Sheriff Ed Darnell, fondly known as "Big Ed."

In 1933 Big Ed's Sandwich Shop opened up across from the Wilco Building. "I was Hamburger King," proclaims Mr. Darnell.

However, hamburgers weren't all that he made at the sandwich shop, Ed was busy making friends. He reports that crowds would come in after football games and truck drivers frequented his shop. When mothers brought their children into Big Ed's, he wouldn't let the "kiddos" leave without a little cup of ice cream. This natural born politician just made friends with everyone.

Mr. Darnell developed a friendship with then Midland County Sheriff Audie Francis. The "Hamburger King" confided in the lawman, "As a young boy, I wanted to be a sheriff... I usta go to town with my grandad and we'd visit the sheriff... then I'd go home and play sheriff with the other kids." Sheriff Francis appreciated the young man's dreams and began calling Mr. Darnell "Sheriff."

In 1941, Mr. Darnell officially assumed the title of sheriff, a title he would hold for 36 years. The sheriff and his two deputies had a big job. At that time, says Mr. Darnell, there was no police department, just a night watchman and city marshal. "We (the Sheriff's Deparment) had a lot of business." This sheriff was proud of his town, "We had the cleanest town in the State of Texas."

As the department grew and more deputies were added, Sheriff Darnell looked for men that weren't "high tempered" individuals or "drunks." "I had a bunch of good ol' boys," he recalls. By the time he retired in 1977, the department had 36 deputies.

"I always figure a man with a badge on is my brother." So Mr. Darnell was glad that the Midland Police Department had grown.

The long time Midland sheriff enjoyed working with his "brothers" as third vice president, second vice president, president, and chairman of the board of the Texas Sheriff's Association in the late '40's and early 50's. In 1952 he was appointed to a 5 year stint on the legislative committee. Then in 1958 it was no surprise to Midland citizens when their sheriff was chosen as Outstanding Sheriff of Texas.

This lawman developed other interests along the way and today he is a 32nd degree Mason, a 45 year member of the Downtown Lions Club, and an honorary Girl Scout. It seems that while Mr. Darnell was sheriff, he'd sell Girl Scout cookies to lawyers when they would drop by the jail to see their clients.

The Young Lawyers Association awarded the former sheriff the Liberty Bell Award in 1962.

Friendliness, integrity, and determination are why Ed Darnell makes a difference in Midland.

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

Commissioners to OK ballots

Midland County Commissioners on Monday are to approve ballots for the May 11 referendum on the Midland County Jail issue.

In addition, they are to discuss with Sheriff Gary Painter repairs to the county jail to bring it into compliance with regulations enforced by the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

The Commissioners' Court will convene at 9 a.m. in the Midland County Courthouse.

In a 3-1-1 vote last week, commissioners decided to test the electorate's preferences on the jail issue in a three-point referendum:

—Repair and upgrade the existing jail to meet Jail Commission Standards, expand Culver Youth Home and commission a study for a $25 million-to-$50 million county complex to include a new courthouse, jail, library and other facilities. Cost: $3 million, including $1½ million for stopgap repairs to the jail.

—Construct a jail and sheriff's offices east of town, expand Culver Youth Home, gradually renovate the courthouse and convert the fifth-floor courthouse jail area and the basement for use by the judiciary. Cost: $11 million, including $9.9 million for the jail and Culver Youth Home. The proposed jail initially would house 225 inmates and could be equipped to accommodate an additional 75 bunks.

—Transfer inmates to other county jails should the Jail Commission shut down the Midland County Jail. Cost per year of farming out inmates: $2 million.

In other business, the commissioners are to:

—Consider a request by Bobby Trimble for the use of county dump trucks in the annual Christmas-in-April housing rehabilition program.

—Consider the signing of a resolution to declare Fridays Midland Centennial Western Days.

—Consider the recommendations of Industrial Foundation of Midland to appoint two new directors to the Midland Industrial Development Corp.

—Discuss scheduling of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) facility here.

—Award bids on road material.

—Award bid on an electronic file unit.

—Consider a request by Roger Robles of the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce for the commissioners' cooperation to study the economic development of Midland's east side.

—Discuss a resolution to authorize the Midland County District Attorney's Office to participate with the Texas Criminal Justice Council in the forming of a victim-witness program in the DA's Office.

—Discuss with Constable Tom McGinnis personnel matters and the transfer of funds in the 1985 budget.

—Discuss with County Librarian John Deats the proposed Centennial Branch Library in Midland Park Mall.

—Consider signing a resolution to allow the Midland Central Appraisal District to accept sealed bids on properties that have gone through the foreclosure process.

—Discuss Senate Bill No. 331 to raise court costs in civil district court cases.

City Council

Temporary land use permits for carnivals will constitute much of the Midland City Council's considerations when it meets in a regular session at 10 a.m. Tuesday at City Hall Council Chambers.

Great Southwest Shows is asking for permits for a seven-day carnival at the intersection of California Avenue and Jefferson Street, a 10-day carnival at the southwest corner of Lamesa Road and Nobles Avenue and a five-day carnival at the intersection of Scharbauer Drive and Main Street.

Southside Lions Club will ask for a permit for a carnival from April 11 through April 21 in Wilshire Shopping Center. And Anthony's Department Store wants a permit for a three-day outside sale at its store in Western Park Plaza.

The council also will consider awarding a contract to a long distance telephone carrier and appointing an associate municipal court judge.

A public hearing will be held at 1:35 p.m. on a request by Lucila Morgan for a special temporary permit for a mobile home on Butternut Lane, about 114 feet south of Hemlock Avenue.

A 1:45 p.m. public hearing will consider a request by Gifford, Linebarger, Radford and Webb for a zone change from 1F-1, single family district, to PD, planned district, for an office development on the south side of Andrews Highway between Tarleton and Alpine streets.

MISD Board

The Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees will meet for a regularly scheduled session at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the board room located in the MISD Administration Office, 702 N. N St. Trustees are scheduled to:

— Administer the oath of office to newly elected trustees.

— Introduce the 1985 valedictorian and salutatorian for Midland and Lee High schools.

— Appoint administrators to the Career Ladder Assignment Committee.

— Authorize district participation on the Close-Up Foundation Program.

— Consider companies for the district's Matching Annuity Program.

— Adopt a resolution for Appraisal District and accept bids on properties.

— Approve a request by First Baptist Church to use the Midland High School practice field.

Vandalism costly, dangerous, DPS says

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Highway vandalism has become one of Texas' most costly and potentially dangerous problems, according to spokesmen with the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

More than $695,000 was spent last year replacing and repairing vandalized signs across the state, and the potential for severe and often tragic accidents increases greatly as a result of a defaced or damaged sign, the spokesmen said.

In the 12-county area of District 6, headquartered in Odessa, about $50,000 was spent to replace signs stolen or damaged. District Engineer W.A. Lancaster noted that less than 10 percent of the cost to replace damaged signs can be attributed to accidents, but some 70 percent are the result of thefts, defacement or other vandalism. The remaining 20 percent are worn out in service.

"Thousands of signs are being replaced because of vandalism long before their normal life expectancy is reached," said Milton Dietert, chief engineer of the State Highway Department's safety and maintenance operations division.

"Sign vandalism has been a major problem, not only because of the costs of replacing these signs but, more important, because a defaced or missing sign creates a very real traffic hazzard," he said.

In addition to the signs, the department spent more than $129,000 last year to replace vandalized lighting, Dietert said.

Sign vandalism occurs throughout the year, but the problem usually reaches its peak during the summer months, hunting season and election time, when political posters and stickers are often plastered on the signs' faces or posts.

Monetary costs, which are borne by Texas taxpayers, are only one side of the story. There is another, more serious, side that needs to be told.

Recently in East Texas, a multiple fatality occurred when two cars met at a highway intersection. One of the cars didn't stop for a stop sign — because the sign had been stolen only a short time before. The missing signs cost several human lives.

Texas law makes sign vandalism a crime, and persons apprehended can be fined up to $1,000 or imprisoned for up to two years, or both. But thieves and vandals operate clandestinely and are difficult to catch.

"There is another side to the story," said Lancaster. "Every time a sign or light is stolen or damanged, it means the cost of replacement will have to be taken from money that otherwise would be used for highway repair. Obviously, for safety reasons replacement of such signs and devices must take priority.

"The vandal is first cousin to the litterbug," said Lancaster. "But while the litterbug may be merely careless and irresponsible, the vandal is wantonly destructive."

Board repeals ruling

The Texas Board of Education on April 14, 1984, repealed a ruling requiring that public school textbooks describe evolution as "one of several" competing theories about the origin of life.

PROPER STORAGE

Believe it or not, a medicine cabinet may well be the worst place in the house to store some medications. The high humidity of a bathroom can play havoc with capsules that are not tightly capped. Pills and capsules should be stored in a cool, dry place out of direct, bright light or sunlight. Pills that are exposed to moisture have a tendency to disintergrate and lose their potency. Most liquid antibiotics should be stored in the refrigerator to preserve the bacteria-fighting effectiveness of the medicine. Refrigeration, however, does not mean freezing. Freezing can change the molecular structure of the medicine and undermine its healing properties.

If you've got any questions about where or how to store your medications, feel free to ask us about it at SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND, A & Scharbauer (682-2519). We care about the people who come into our store enough to take the time to give them this sort of information, beyond simply selling a product. We're also here to consult on diabetic problems, and to do free blood pressure checks. We're open Mon.-Sat. 8-7. Mastercard/Visa. Have a happy Easter holiday.

HINT:
Chips, cracks and splits in pills and tablets are a sign of decay.

Closet Case or Closet Space

Avalanchephobia (av'a-lanch'a-fo-be-a): n. An acute fear of getting something into or out of the closet, caused by families who've outgrown their living space.

It's not an unusual disorder but it's easy to cure. The prescription is a Home Improvement loan from Petroplex Savings.

With a Petroplex Savings Home Improvement loan you can add more closets, an extra room or even convert existing space to something more usable. It can dramatically increase the value and versatility of your home, and prevent your closet space from turning you into a "closet case."

For understanding and expert guidance, call or come by the Personal Loan Department of Petroplex Savings.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC, mall to sponsor 'A Week for Women

By H.A. Tuck

Tuck

Midland College is co-sponsoring "A Week for Women" Monday through Saturday in conjunction with Midland Park Mall. Wanda Phillips, coordinator of Midland College's "Women's Kaleidoscope", has helped arrange a most interesting series of talks, demonstrations, and events that are going to be held at the mall.

There'll be talks each evening Monday through Friday, plus a full day of events and talks on Saturday.

Details may be obtained at the mall or by calling Ms. Phillips at 684-7851, extension 264.

• • •

All college offices will be closed on Monday, final day of the Easter holiday. When students and faculty return, there will be just four weeks of classes left, plus a week of final exams, as the spring semester rapidly nears an end.

• • •

There are a number of musical events scheduled during the coming week. On Friday at 8 p.m., three members of the music faculty are presenting their spring recital. Included are Don Grant, Betty Morris, and Walter Osadchuk performing in the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium. It's free, of course.

Next Sunday, you can have your choice of two free concerts. Unfortunately, both are at 3 p.m. One is a concert by the Midland College Community Band in Dennis the Menace Park. That group is directed by Walter Osadchuk.

The other is a concert by several of the MC Commercial Music performing groups. It is going to be held in the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium.

• • •

While you are in the Allison Fine Arts Building, you should take the time to view a pair of exhibits in the McCormick Gallery. One is the Texas Fine Arts Association's National Traveling Exhibition, which includes works by a number of artists from throughout the United States.

The other show is the bi-annual Faculty Exhibition. Included are ceramics by John Harmon, watercolors by Charles Stewart, drawings and oils by Warren Taylor, fiber works by Julie Rogers, and photographs by Ken Foster and Sherri Bassett Miles.

These two shows may be seen on Sunday from 1-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m., Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m., and Saturday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m.

Closing date for this pair of exhibitions is Friday, April 19, so don't wait too long or they will be gone.

• • •

Chaparrals tennis teams see more action this week. On Tuesday, both teams go to Levelland for conference matches with South Plains College. Friday and Saturday, the Chap women are hosting a triangular meet on the MC courts with Cooke County Community College and South Plains.

• • •

And the Chap men's team has another conference golf tournament on Friday. They'll be playing at Hobbs in a tourney hosted by New Mexico Junior College.

• • •

Tuesday evening the Thouvenel String Quartet is slated to perform in the Allison auditorium. This is to be the group's first recital since returning from an extended concert tour of mainland China.

• • •

The college's Associate Degree Nursing program is co-sponsoring an all-day seminar for Registered Nurses Friday on "Legal Aspects of Nursing". The program is being presented by the University of Texas at El Paso School of Nursing.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

Seminar scheduled

A seminar on time management will be conducted Tuesday at 7 p.m. by Grant Billingsley, executive vice president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

The meeting will be held at the chamber office, 109 N. Main St. Sponsored by the Midland Jaycee Women, the seminar is open to the public and is free.

ARE YOU LOOKING FOR A GOOD DEAL ON YOUR HOMEOWNERS INSURANCE?

Effective March 15, 1985, the State Board of Insurance reduced Homeowners Insurance rates 11.7%. In response to the reduction in rates, most insurance companies are reducing the discounts they have been giving for preferred homeowners risks from 10% to 20%. For a limited time, we can offer you homeowners coverage through a national insurance company with a Best's rating of A+ XV with a 35% discount off the new reduced homeowners rates. To qualify, your home must be:

1. Insured for full replacement value (minimum $65,000)
2. Loss free for three (3) years (excluding storm losses)
3. Less than twenty-five (25) years old or major remodeling within fifteen (15) years.
4. Located inside city limits.

Don't miss this 35% savings; give us a call for a quotation for your homeowners insurance.

THE STUDENTS OF UTPB WANT TO BE HEARD!

*If you would like factual answers to any of the following please call 367-2170, and ask for Gregg Abel.

 Do you think it costs too much to educate us?
 Do you think we are wasting your tax dollars?
 Do you think we are rich West Texans who can afford to go to any university we desire?
 Do you think West Texans should be denied the same benefits from their tax dollars that other parts of Texas receive?
 Do you think that other parts of Texas should be the sole beneficiaries of West Texas oil revenue?

Did you know the following facts?

*That West Texas oil lands contribute approximately $146 million dollars per year to other institutions of higher education. All we ask is that the Texas legislature let us have approximately $7 million dollars to allow West Texans an opportunity of higher education here at UTPB.

*That if they close UTPB approximately 91% of us would be forced to give up our dream of a college degree.
*That over 70% of our student body works full time jobs.
*That our student body has an average age of 30.5 years.
*That nearly 85% of the student body supports themselves.

*That one of the first and most important questions asked by companies thinking of locating here is "Do you have a university?" What a neat way for THEM to keep West Texas from reviving it's economy.

*That we receive an excellent education at UTPB from a very talented and dedicated faculty.

*That we believe that West Texans are as entitled to try to earn a college degree as any other Texan.

*That 95% of the graduates of UTPB remain in the Permian Basin after graduation. We are your neighbors, your children, your friends, very likely you might be a student, or might become one in the future. This university is our university, all of ours. We the citizens of the entire Permian Basin owe it to ourselves to do our part in saving something so vital to the prosperity of our communities and ourselves.

New day dawning

Each Easter, Christians the world over gather in places of worship to rejoice in the fulfillment of a promise: That there is life even after death, that the grave does not mark and end but a beginning. It is the promise of Easter. The promise of Jesus Christ. The promise that from the grave, new life springs.

Symbols abound at this time. Children scurry over lawns of freshly sprouting grass in search of Easter eggs, left behind, according to legend, by the mysterious Easter bunny. Feed stores and pet shops stock and sell Easter chicks and bunnies. That's appropriate for at this time of the year the focus of the world is on the new, the fresh, the cuddly. Life, not death, is in the spotlight.

On this Easter morning, as on countless Easter mornings in the past, families will make their way to church wearing clothing appropriately chosen for this one day of the year.

Along the city streets in Midland — and along the highways leading to points beyond — springtime flowers are blossoming. Trees are putting on their leaves. Animals and birds are bringing forth their young into the warm spring days. The world, awash in green, is again alive with activity.

This is a celebration in the Christian community. It's a celebration of life and the realization that life does not end with death but is reborn. There is a tomorrow, a bright, fresh tomorrow we are told and retold each year. And we are shown vividly through the seasonal cycles of the Earth that life is, indeed, everlasting and stronger than death.

That is the story of Easter, the story of Jesus Christ's gift to mankind, the gift of everlasting life. Coming at the end of Holy Week, Easter brings this message: That evil can not win the struggle of this Earth. That battle has already been waged.

Today is a new day. Rejoice!

A national disgrace

Congressional hearings called by Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr. (R-Conn.) have given the nation an appalling picture of conditions prevailing in a number of state-operated mental hospitals.

A procession of witnesses to the hearings testified that beatings of patients of all ages are common in the institutions surveyed. Sexual advances and rape by hospital staff members on patients take place routinely as well as intimidation and threats. Several witnesses charged that inmates wallow in indescribable filth and the only treatment they receive is medication to keep them quiet.

As Sen. Weicker put it, the situation constitutes "the shame of America." No time should be lost in adopting the proposals put forward by Mr. Weicker and his committee colleagues for revising the procedures under which these institutions are accredited and for providing strict supervision of the patient's welfare.

Meanwhile, the states operating these hospitals must step up the qualifications of their personnel, screening out all applicants who conceivably could be a menace to patients. Only uniquely qualified, caring individuals can minister to the needs of mental patients. People of this character are available and it is the responsibility of the hospitals to recruit them and adequately compensate them for the special services they can offer.

It's essential to bring this national disgrace to a quick end and remove the shame from America where its treatment of mental patients is concerned.

Another View:

Action on acid rain

Environmentalists are understandably disappointed by the outcome of the St. Patrick's Day meeting between President Reagan and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. Many had hoped that the summit would settle the long spat over the acid rain that the United States dumps on Canada. Instead, the two leaders agreed to ignore the problem by appointing envoys to study it for another year. That feeble plan should dismay Americans as much as it does Canadians.

In the early 1980s, President Reagan's persistent claim that more study was needed before acid rain could be relieved was at least plausible. But dozens of studies have since shown a direct link between sulfur-dioxide emissions from coal-fired boilers and the death of North American lakes. All reached the same general conclusions: Without quick curtailment of sulfur emissions, much of the North American wilderness may soon be damaged beyond repair. Reducing the pollution would reduce the damage. Cutting emissions in half would bring the problem under control.

The need for speedy action on acid rain is especially pressing in Canada, which receives five times more sulfur dioxide from U.S. smokestacks than it sends back. The damage suffered by Canada's lakes and forests has spurred Mulroney's conservative government to devise a new nine-year program to reduce by half sulfur emissions in eastern Canada.

That courageous plan deserves a serious U.S. response, which only President Reagan can assure. Instead of stalling, Reagan should heed the urgings of scientists and citizens on both sides of the U.S.-Canadian border for federal action to curb acid rain. He should support one of the proposes slated for consideration in Congress — a House bill soon to be introduced by Minnesota's Gerry Sikorski or a Senate plan sponsored by Vermont's Robert Stafford — that would attack acid rain at the source by reducing sulfur emissions.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Easter Sunday, April 7, the 97th day of 1985. There are 268 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 7, 1927, an audience in New York saw an image of Commerce Secretary Herbert Hoover in the first successful long-distance demonstration of television.

On this date:

In 1788, the first permanent settlement in Ohio — at Marietta — was founded.

In 1947, auto pioneer Henry Ford died in Dearborn, Mich., at the age of 83.

In 1949, the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical "South Pacific" opened on Broadway.

In 1953, the United Nations General Assembly elected Dag Hammarskjold of Sweden secretary-general.

Thought for today: "History is more or less bunk." — Henry Ford (1863-1947).

GEORGE F. WILL

Surprise! Japan does much well

WASHINGTON — On the whole, William Manchester enjoyed his 63rd birthday more than his 23rd, during which he thought, reasonably: How unlikely I am to have a 24th. He was born April 1, 1922, and on April 1, 1945, he was among the Marines who began the last great battle of the war, on Okinawa. One of his memories of that experience is relevant to something occurring in Washington today.

George F. Will

The Marines were amazed by the extraordinary proficiency of Japanese artillery on southern Okinawa. Every road and other vital point was brilliantly targeted. So amazed were the Marines that a surmise became widespread: The Japanese must have German artillery advisers. Similarly, the brilliance of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor had caused some American officials to suspect that the planes had been piloted by Germans. There were other explanations.

Prior to the war, Japan had an artillery school on Okinawa. A standard exercise for fledgling officers was to answer this question: How would you defend the school against attack? A generation of officers had thought hard about fighting on Okinawa. And beginning in 1931, every graduate of Japan's naval academy had been required to answer one question: How would you execute a surprise attack on Pearl Harbor?

In the 1940s, many Americans had a racist impulse to assume that the "yellow peril" could not be such a peril without Caucasian assistance. However, the Japanese were good warriors because they were what they still are: a great disciplined people, tenacious in pursuit of their interests as they saw them.

In his marvelous history, "The Glory and the Dream," Manchester recalls the complacent, condescending American attitude immediately after Pearl Harbor, as jukeboxes blared "Goodbye Mama, I'm off to Yokohama." Scoffers said that a Japanese soldier on parade "resembled a poorly wrapped parcel of brown paper — soiled, crumpled, and threatening to come apart." But Japanese sharpshooters were accurate at 1,000 yards, infantrymen carried 400 rounds of ammunition (twice what U.S. infantrymen carried) and five days' rations of fish and rice. In 1941 their ships were faster, their guns bigger, their torpedoes better and they had more and better aircraft than the United States.

It has been asked: Who in 1945 would have believed that, a generation later, Japan and a Jewish state would be considered a great trading nation and a great warrior nation, respectively? But great nations do what they must do. In 1985 it can not be said too frequently that Japan, a densely populated nation dependent on imports, would be a formidable commercial competitor even if it respected the rules of free trade.

Free trade ranks just below Christianity and just above jogging on the list of things constantly praised but only sporadically practiced. As a cause of the U.S. trade deficit, Japan's protectionism, although significant, is less so than the U.S. deficit, which drives up the value of the dollar and the price of U.S. exports. Another factor is U.S. restrictions on such exports as oil and lumber.

Today, Japan is seen not merely as commercially aggressive or candidly protectionist. Rather, it is considered disingenuous, and contemptuous about U.S. readiness to retaliate. Well, Japan is disingenuous: It uses dilatory negotiations as distractions, and keeps its markets closed with maddening regulations, such as until recently the stipulation that American cigarettes can not be advertised in Japanese.

But Japan's disdain for U.S. resolve is not unreasonable, given the years of U.S. tolerance of Japan's tactics. Besides, a nation that has no response when its soldiers are hacked to death with axes (Korean DMZ, 1976) or shot and allowed to bleed to death (East Germany, 1985) should expect tougher nations to doubt its determination.

If Japan wonders why retaliation may at last occur, Japan should listen to Horace Busby, a Washington consultant. He notes that as long as the focus of contention was automobiles, U.S. resentment was regionally concentrated, primarily in the Great Lakes states. Now attention is focused on electronics, telecommunications, pharmaceuticals, forest products and other goods, so the base of congressional resentment is correspondingly wider.

Congress can in good conscience prod the administration to push Japan toward a more open market. But Americans should not make the mistake of assuming, as was done 40 and 45 years ago, that Japanese successes are to be explained — explained away, really — without reference to this fact: The Japanese do many things very well. Someday they, and we, may be amazed to learn how little they needed the commercial trickiness that has become a big problem.

JACK ANDERSON

Alfonsin Latin democracy's best hope

WASHINGTON — The key to democratic revival in Latin America may be held by Raul Alfonsin, the civilian president of Argentina, who has been able to stand up to the army and yet stay in office without a military coup.

Jack Anderson

The ouster of the Argentine military dictatorship in 1983 was followed by a return to democratic rule in neighboring Brazil and Uruguay. But unfortunately, Argentina's status as a democratic trend-setter is endangered by its precarious finances. Alfonsin inherited an economy on the edge of ruin; he is now forced to build his career on the multiplication of debts.

He has mastered the practical art of politics and has become the embodiment of the general will in Argentina. The people see in him a leader who can bring about the regeneration of their country.

Yet he is hobbled by vulnerabilities inherited from past military rulers. With a treasury barely kept afloat by alms cadged from other nations and an army unaccustomed to taking orders from a civilian, he has to lead not from strength but by political sleight-of-hand, crowd-enrapturing orations and alliances with irreconciliable interests.

Somehow he has to keep going a momentum of hope — an atmosphere of business booming, of workers working, of opportunity stirring. He cannot make it economically without massive aid. This will require sacrifices, in return, from the people. Yet he cannot make it politically unless he improves their standard of living. This leaves him on a tightrope, simultaneously needing the applause of the populace and the approval of Argentina's creditors.

We had a private meeting with Alfonsin during his recent visit to Washington and found him affable, articulate and unafraid of tough questions. He is a hulking, big-shouldered man, with a caring face, sensitive eyes, contagious smile and outreaching good humor.

Asked about the new wave of democracy that started in Argentina, Alfonsin disclaimed credit. "We do not attribute it to ourselves," he said. "What has happened is that the experience of the totalitarian governments has been tragic, and the people have reacted against that. It is a great hope for Latin America."

What about the danger of a military coup during this period of rampant inflation and general economic turmoil in Argentina? "There is no such danger," Alfonsin said firmly. "I'm convinced that we have inaugurated a democratic epoch for Argentina."

For the record, of course, the Argentine president cannot admit any doubts. But privately, we were told, he is concerned about a military command that hasn't hesitated in the past to overthrow the government at gunpoint. "There are sectors that are interested in returning to military regimes," acknowledged a senior member of the president's delegation.

Other civilians have been elected to power in Argentina, but few have been allowed to stay for long. "The next four months," said this senior official, "are going to be the hardest."

As a civil-rights lawyer who embarrassed the military juntas for years, Alfonsin promised to bring to justice those responsible for the "dirty war" against suspected leftists. That's exactly what is about to happen. Top members of the last three military juntas will soon come to trial for their part in the "dirty war."

The big question is: Will the army stand for this? According to our intelligence sources, Alfonsin may actually have prevented a military coup by his determination to prosecute the alleged criminals.

"Most military officers are willing to accept the top echelon being punished," one U.S. analyst told our associate Michael Binstein. But he added this caveat: "They're more worried that Alfonsin might go down into the ranks" in the search for war criminals.

If the Argentine courts were to pursue the small fry who were following orders, it would decimate the armed services as an institution. And before that process got very far, the military would unite in self-defense and seize power again, the intelligence analyst predicted.

The military's strongest political weapon against Alfonsin, meanwhile, is Argentina's $45 billion debt and the economic problems that prevent paying it. Never mind that the debt was run up by the military juntas.

"(The military) takes advantage of the problem of the debt, the problem of agriculture and the falling of salaries," explained the senior Argentine official.

The only way Argentina can pay off the debt, Alfonsin told us, is through increased exports. But the country's chief export is agricultural products, and these markets are being closed all over the world.

As Alfonsin remarked, "If you ask any banker in the world if his debtor can pay him back if you don't let him work, he will say no."

The United States has not hesitated to support military dictatorships, oil monarchies, even radical, anti-Western regimes when it has seemed in the national interest to do so.

It will be interesting to see how far the great thinkers and planners in Washington will go to support a fragile democracy that could set an example for all Latin America.

Private prisons: Locked up market!

I always depend on Simon Wallin for inside information on the stock market.

Art Buchwald

The other day I got a call from him. "I have only one word to say to you," he whispered.

"I'm listening," I told him.

"Prisons."

"Prisons? What the hell kind of stock market tip is that?"

"Private prisons are soon going to be bigger than private hospitals. Incarceration is a growth industry, and I want you to get in on the ground floor. There's a new company just starting up called Big House Inc."

"Come on. How are people going to make money on prisons?"

"Good management and tax breaks," Simon said. "There's an unbelievable demand for new prisons in every state in the union. The public wants criminals locked up, but they refuse to pay for the jailhouses. So they are giving out franchises to private entrepreneurs who have figured out a way of making money on the penal system."

"I don't get it. If the government is running in the red putting people away, how can the private sector get the system in the black?"

"It's the way prisons are financed. When the government builds a prison complex it has to borrow money from the public. If a private company builds it, then it becomes a tax shelter."

"They're going to lock up prisoners in tax shelters?"

"We're not going to put prisoners in tax shelters, we're putting investors in them."

"Okay, so I'm in a prison tax shelter. Now what happens?"

"Big House Inc. leases it back to the government and gets a management contract to run it. We receive the depreciation on the prison as well as a daily fee for each prisoner we take care of."

"I'm not sure I want to make money on people who are locked up."

"You'll be doing the inmates a service because Big House Inc. will treat the prison population much better than the bureaucrats treat them now. After all, they have a vested interest in the convicts' happiness. In order to make money they have to count on word-of-mouth. If former inmates start bad-mouthing Big House in the underworld, offenders will ask to be sent to the competition's prisons after they're caught."

"What about conflict of interest? Suppose a person is up for parole, and Big House doesn't want to give it to him because they'll be stuck with an empty bed. I would hate to deprive a man of his freedom just because I'm afraid of losing his business."

"You have nothing to worry about on that score. There's a waiting list for every prison in America. Most states are guaranteeing private prison corporations 105 percent occupancy for the next 20 years."

"Won't prisoners be resentful that people are trying to make money on them?"

"Not when they realize private companies have a lot more to offer than public institutions. Big House is putting in the best security equipment money can buy, so no one can break into a prison that doesn't belong there. We're also installing the latest athletic facilities, cable TV, workshops and leisure activities. Their guards have been instructed to wish every prisoner a nice day. They have put 'How Did We Do?' questionnaires in all the cells asking inmates to compare them with other prisons they've been in. Our business is to make the consumer, in this case the inmate, consider Big House a home away from home. That's the only way you get repeat business."

"It sounds awfully good on paper, but I still don't understand how, if they're going to provide all these services, Big House will still make a big profit on running a prison institution."

"It's quite simple," Simon said. "They're going to serve all the inmates airline food."

BILL MODISETT

Easter fulfilling because of rebirth of human spirit

Bill Modisett

Easter's one of my favorite times of the year.

Not because of its religious connotation, although that is a part of it. Religion can't be separated from Easter — or its meaning — anymore than it can from Christmas, the other major Christian holiday of the year. One is a beginning; the other is a realization — not an ending. It is the fulfillment of a promise and as such, the start of a Kingdom.

And it isn't the fact that on Easter Sunday, most people get dolled up in new clothes to go to church and parade around for all to see. There's certainly nothing wrong with that, even though it strikes me as a little bit pretentious. At least it gets people to church and, after all, should we humans ignore our physical appearance on Easter when the world is awakening in its "Sunday best?"

It isn't even the children that hold fascination for me on Easter, as they scamper around wide-eyed hunting Easter eggs and anticipating that, at any moment, some magical giant bunny, heavy laden with chocolate, will hop up to present them with an armload of the colorful eggs and goodies. Kids are great to watch at Easter because until you've seen that kind of magic, you haven't really lived.

But that still isn't the reason Easter fulfills me. It's a part of the whole, but only a part.

I think it can only be described as a rebirth of the human spirit. It's a reawakening not only of the Earth, but of the spirit in each of us. A spirit of goodness. A spirit of completeness. It's a cleansing of our souls, a time when we start over fresh.

I can remember as a child going to Sunday services at a rural, white clapboard church in a community so small that if you blinked while driving through, you honestly would miss it. It was a community of farm people who toiled hard, played hard and prayed hard.

In that environment, conflicts would arise from time to time. Differences would be apparent and, sometimes, arguments would erupt. Hard feelings resulted on occasion.

But Easter was a time of peace. A time for new beginnings. A time for putting hard feelings aside. A time of love. It blossomed at Easter. It flowed through the community, bathing everything and everyone in the warm oneness of the season.

Men and women put differences aside at Easter. They forgave. They looked to the future with hope and a new outlook.

After moving away from that farming community and to larger communities, I've seen that spirit many times over. It's an eternal spirit. It's the spirit to be kind to one another, to put animosities aside and to recognize that we are one on the same road of life together. It's a time to grasp hands as more than neighbors — as friends, brothers and sisters.

None of us is separate in this life. None of us is alone. We all share the same tomorrow.

That, to me, is the message of Easter. It's a beautiful message.

Jesus' crucifixion 'message of love'

Today, the Easter message will be proclaimed throughout our city, our land, and many places around the world. On this day we celebrate the resurrection of our Lord.

The story is old, but ever new, even though some 57 generations separate us from that group of people that stood on the green hillside on that first Good Friday demanding the death of Jesus Christ. Why did so many seek the death of Jesus? Well, consider who they were. This crowd included:

— The teachers who hated Him,
— The priests who bought Him,
— The traitor who sold Him,
— The crowd who cried "Crucify Him!"
— The judge who sentenced Him,
— The thieves who died with Him.

Could it be that the same deadly nature of common sins such as bigotry, indifference, loss of humility and lack of faith in God existed then as well as now? After all, the desire for the death of Jesus was the only common bond these people had.

There was another group of people present also; those who loved Him and ministered to Him. So the good and the bad were there; they met at Calvary.

The Roman soldiers who nailed Jesus to the Cross did not for one minute think that this was in any way different from the many crucifixions they had carried out. They could not know that this, a common event to them, was the focus of all history.

Jesus had steadfastly proceeded toward this hour knowing exactly what it would mean, so it was no triumph for His enemies; no disaster to His cause. The cruel Cross was the deliberate goal of His life.

We need to look on the Cross as a battlefield — there was not anything that God would not give; the Cross was a throne, and Jesus ruled from it at the very beginning and all the way, when a dying thief heard the gracious lifegiving words "Today thou shalt be with me in Paradise."The Cross was a gallows. Our Lord went home by the death alloted the lowest of criminals, and to save you and me, drank from the cup of human disgrace to the dregs.

But wait! The Cross was a pulpit and from it came a message of love! They nailed Him to a Cross — He suffered, He bled, He died. He was buried in a sealed tomb, with Roman soldiers guarding it, but they could not stop the resurrection of our Lord Jesus! He arose from the grave; Our God is not dead!

Easter says to you and me "You can put truth in a grave, but you can't keep it there!" The truth is simple yet so precious:

"Yesterday I died for you,
Today I live for you,
Tomorrow I come for you."

Consensus may not promote public good

Non-binding referendums bother me. The best thing about them is that they are non-binding. The worst thing is that elected officials may be tempted to base their decisions on what the electorate wants, rather than on what will best benefit the community as a whole.

Most of us are subjective in our opinions and decision-making. We tend to decide according to what we think best for us, for our family, or for our segment of the workforce. Not to say that this is bad. Rather, it is to be expected. I am suggesting that the general public may not express a consensus which promotes the common good.

To our elected officials, I hope your decisions will be guided by what you believe is best for your constituents, whether they like it or not. It doesn't require an outstanding official to merely vote the wishes of the people. Anyone with an efficient staff and an adding machine can do that.

I vote for people whom I believe will represent my best interests, not necessarily what I want. I may get upset with you, I may write you letters, I may even call you and gripe at you, but if you continue to represent me beyond my limited perspective, I will always vote for you.

To the county commissioners — sorry, I won't be voting in your referendum on May 11. I just don't know enough about the situation to make a decision. And, frankly, I don't think I am supposed to. But you are. You are supposed to know the facts of the matter, and make the best decision you can to best benefit the community, and promote the common good.

That's why you were elected. That's your job.

Child support laws should be enforced

I was reading the case of the 24-year-old woman who was convicted of beating her 8-year-old boy. I know right is right and wrong is wrong, and there should be no excuse for abusing your children, but why wasn't there any mention of why the father was not forced to pay child support or even keep the children while she was under such stress and heavy burdens during the trial.

If he would have been paying her child support she probably would not have lost her temper and spanked her child that hard in the first place. So who is guilty him or her?

I say him for not taking care of his own children. There is a great deal of this in Midland, not enforcing child support laws. They just seem to not care. Every time you call them they pass the buck. No child support, no bills paid; no bills paid things don't get fixed, or are taken away from you. End up on food stamps and the taxpayers have to pay, all because the men are not forced by law to pay their part — child support.

Newspaper no place for 'X-rated' stories

I hope I'm not the only reader who was disgusted to read Hallye Jordan's explicit description of Mr. Craft's perversions in Friday's paper.

I think her coverage was a little too "X-rated" for a family newspaper.

What am I supposed to tell my elementary age children who want to read the front page news for current events discussions in school?

Shall I censor each evening's paper? Are we going to continue to be subjected to this kind of pornographic detail?

I'm interested in what happens in Midland. I'm pleased when criminals and perverts are weeded out of our community. But please give us a more generalized account in a situation like this.

Caution, criminals: Jails not up to par

Proposed seat belt law invasion of rights

I am against a law that would require everyone to use seat belts.

I noticed the Senate has passed such a requirement and it now goes to the House of Representatives. In my estimation I would say that only one person in 10, uses seat belts. It is another way to invade the rights of the individual.

The only benefits from such a law would be the fines imposed by the city and states, which would work a hardship on the people who are burdened with about all the expense they can handle.

I am in the insurance business and if such a law is allowed to pass, the insurance companies will find a way to penalize you on your premiums.

The people who enjoy a low rate of premium will likely find themselves changed to an uprated company and may be paying an excessive amount all because the people have allowed the state to pass such a law.

Your reprsentatives and senators should be contacted to not pass this unfair law.

Gratitude expressed for kind cards, letters

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, Jr.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — In deference to the holiest of holy days in Christianity, I am refraining on this Easter Sunday from burdening you with views about a troubled world.

Our thoughts should be on that mystical man who has inspired so much love and given so much hope and comfort to so many millions and millions of people for nearly two thousand years. In celebrating this day the resurrection of Jesus after his crucifixion, we should be grateful that he sacrificed his life for our salvation.

We could show our gratitude by devoting a little more time to our religion than most of us do, and a little more compassion for and understanding of our fellow humans.

In this spirit, I take this opportunity of thanking all those who wrote to me or sent messages for a speedy recovery during my recent illness. Believe me, those letters and cards helped a lot when I was feeling miserable and depressed.

Now I am happy to report that I am well on the road back to feeling myself again, and I thank all of you for helping cheer me along that road.

Happy Easter.

Angels: Speed at top, punch in middle

BY TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland Angels Manager Joe Maddon exudes guarded optimism as his Texas League club nears the end of the Cactus League trail in Mesa, Ariz., and prepares for its season's opener in El Paso Tuesday night.

If he only had a little better line on his starting pitching, you could remove the "guarded" disclaimer. "But we won't know about some of the pitchers until after the Angels and Dodgers conclude their weekend Freeway Series. So it may be Monday," says Maddon, who has never been to West Texas, but has heard stories about the baseball played on the lonesome prairie where the wind blows free.

"We were playing over in Tempe the other day and rattling the fences with some shots," said Maddon. "The umpire working behind the plate had worked the Texas League and commented, 'Your team should hit well in Midland.'"

SUMMING up, Maddon, a native of Hazleton, Pa., who went to college at nearby Lafayette (Easton), thumbnails, "We are getting a lot of players who have been to Instructional League out here the last couple of years. We will have a lot of speed at the top of the lineup and punch in the middle. So we'll be a team with speed and power.

Maddon is comfortable with the Angels' up-the-middle, where a team must be good to be a winner.

One of the dugout pluses for this Midland team is that Maddon had most of these players at Redwood, A California League, last year where the team posted the best record in the league.

A couple of players he didn't have last year are his catchers...Dave Heath, who batted .185 with nine homers and 42 rbi at Waterbury Eastern League, and Doug Davis, .220-2-14 at Peoria of the A Midwest League. Heath is one of the few players with AA experience on the team. Davis was a No. 9 draft pick out of North Carolina State last spring. He hit .355 with 10 homers and 76 rbi in 34 games for the Wolfpack before going pro.

"Both are quality catchers with good arms," advises Maddon.

SECOND BASEMAN Mark McLemore (.296-0-45) represents some of that speed. He stole 59 bases for Redwood and teams up with shortstop Kevin Davis (.238-1-47 and 15 stolen bases at Redwood).

Centerfielder Greg Key was a disappointment at Waterbury last year with a .235 average, four homers and 44 rbis to go with his 26 steals. "He had an off year, but has played well this spring," says Maddon.

On the hill, the Angels aren't bad for starters with Don Timberlake, 15-5 at Redwood, scheduled to open the season in El Paso Tuesday and again in Midland next Sunday against Beaumont. Others starters are lefthander Bryan Price and Ken Angualo. Price is a No. 8 draft choice out of the University of California. He started his pro career at Salem, Northwest League, 0-2 and finished the season 2-2 with a 2.28 in 51 innings at Redwood.

As for the others in the five-man rotation, the situtation is on hold.

FOR MADDON, the bullpen is another story entirely, "We have good arms and good righty-lefty balance."

"Julian Gonzalez is the Dan Quisenberry type, he comes at you from down under, while T.R. Bryden comes side arm but throws extremely hard for someone who uses that style."

For Midland, Texas League is whole new game

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

The Texas League plunges into its 97th season Tuesday and for Midland, it's a whole new ball game.

After 13 campaigns as a farm club of the National League Chicago Cubs, Midland dons a halo and comes to the Class AA league's barn dance as farmhands of the American League California Angels.

That's about the only significant change as Carl Sawatski's circuit begins a new year. In the West, it's Beaumont's Gators (San Diego), El Paso's Brewers (Milwaukee) and San Antonio (Dodgers) with the defending West champion Gators again the team to beat.

In the East, the four lodge members are Arkansas' Travelers (Cardinals), Texas League champion Jackson Mets (NY Mets), Tulsa Drillers (Texas Rangers) and Shreveport Captains (San Francisco Giants).

AFTER LAST season, for Midland fans, anything will be better than last year when the Cubs finished with an 52-84 record, worst in the Texas League and seven games behind the next worst record.

The team California will field here gives promise of being more than the just "anything" mentioned above. Most of the talent will come from Redwood, A California League, which finished 91-48 overall, eight games better than the runner up Modesto A's. The Cubs' Lodi farm finished 33½ games back and the Cubs other A farm, Quad Cities finishe at the bottom of the 12-team Midwest League with a 50-88 record. The .362 was worse than Midland's percentage.

Midland opens its season in El Paso Tuesday night, the first of a five game series, and plays Beaumont in its home opener next Sunday in a 2 p.m. game.

Manager Joe Maddon brings his team directly from its Mesa, Ariz., Cactus League base of operations to El Paso.

THE PARENT club isn't, however, all that's new at the Hogan Park ball park. For one thing, it's Angels Stadium now and in the front office Bill Davidson came aboard as assistant general manager during the off season and Matt Perry was named director of operations.

"All of the fence advertising is gone," reports Davidson as the final week of hurry-up preparations begin, "and only 88 box seats remain for sale. We had an 80 per cent renewal rate. And we have passed last year's revenues in scorecard advertising."

THE SCORECARD is another area of change fans will see. "This year it will be a basic scorecard providing the lineups and a place to keep score," says Davidons.

Also it will have 21 lucky numbers worth about $10 each for each game and it will cost 50 cents.

For fans who want something more, the Angels' yearbook, in two colors, will provide it. "Profiles and pictures of players and members of the Angels organization plus profiles on other teams and their parks as well as articles on the Baseball Hall of Fame and Texas League history will provide plenty of reading material."

Pizza and barbecue sandwiches will be hot new items in the concession stand. Ice cream will be sold in what was last year's novelty stand. "We hope to improve the service for the fans by rearranging a few things," said Davidson.

"As for the start of the season, we are 95 per cent ready." says Davidson, "And Lee Velarde got an early start on the field and it is in excellent shape for this time of the year," Davidson said.

Taylor shows punch expected of Breland

Captures crowd's fancy

SAN ANGELO — While one pupil learned a lesson, the other may have graduated to a new class in Saturday's showcasing of "Supergold" boxing.

Both welterweight Mark Breland and lightweight Meldrick Taylor, each a gold medal winner at the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles and in the professional boxing stable of Lou Duva, earned victories Saturday as the co-main events at the San Angelo Coliseum.

But it was Taylor that had the crowd, ringside observers and manager Duva buzzing about his future after a fifth-round TKO of Elias Martinez. Breland, the celebrated heir to greatness in the welterweight division, earned a unanimous decision over Steve Little of Reading, Pa. But not until the journeyman added another selection to Breland's reading list as he studies to become a contender.

Taylor came out juking to the tune of Bruce Springsteen's Born in the U.S.A. and had Martinez, a late replacement for the injured Victor Flores, swinging around in circles in the first round. Taylor, showing the lighting-quick punching style that took him to the top of the 125-pound division as a 17-year-old in the Olympics, doubled and even tripled up on the punches Martinez threw.

After falling prey to a low blow by Martinez in the fourth round, Taylor rebounded with a renewed ferocity that nearly put Martinez down before the fourth had ended. But when the fifth round bell struck, Taylor jumped quickly on the ex-Puerto Rican lightweight champ, and at 2:09 of the fifth, referee Don Cole stepped in to the aid of the defenseless Martinez. It was Taylor's fourth win without a loss.

Welcome back Mickey, Willie

Major league baseball is back and so are Willie Mays and Mickey Mantle, welcomed with open arms by Commissioner Peter Ueberroth and the fans.

The popular Hall of Famers had been banned from the game by the previous administration, because of their positions as goodwill ambassadors for gambling casinos.

Even at the time the Bowie Kuhn barred Willie and Mickey from baseball, the decision was archiac; a vestigal appendage of a bygone era.

YOU'LL remember the office of commissioner was established for the sole purpose of keeping the game's good name clean by keeping any suspicion of gambling and/or association therewith from baseball. It's reputation had to be as a Ceasar's wife.

As a result of the 1919 Black Sox scandal involving a fixed World Series, Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis was given autonomous authority to see to it that it never happened again. Pure and simple, Landis was a dictator. He spoke and club owners quaked in their shoes.

For years, Bing Crosby was kept out of baseball because he was rumored to have played golf with someone who had gone to Nassau, or maybe it was because Bing owned a race horse.

In fact, at one time baseball broadcasts sponsored by beer barons were verboten, although Old Golds, Lucky Strike, White Owl, and Chesterfield were perfectly okay. Now, it's just the opposite. Talk about running on a treadmill.

TIMES have changed and baseball no longer feels uncomfortable with gambling or "drug dependency". They are dayd-to-day problems that are lived with and accepted as "part of it."

And the commissioner's office has changed along with the times. It's more of a public relations position. The commissioner does things that are popular with the owners, and perhaps public, or there's a new commissioner.

Some owners today have backgrounds more suspect than Crosby ever had and they are the ones running the ship.

Baseball is big business and it's okay to do whatever it takes to fatten the coffers of the ball clubs, as Wrigley Field fans have discovered. And considering the TV stakes and salaries, that's understandable.

But back to Mays and Mantle and their return to baseball. In the changed climate of today and in their positions as employees of casinos, either is far less of a risk to baseball's reputation than some of those running loose on the field.

M-and-M would be the last ones a score-tinkering gambler would seek out to get the doctored result he wanted. There are others in the game far more susceptible to the blandishments of under-the-table rewards.

With free agency, the player today sells his services to the highest bidder. Fair enough. There is little to bind him to one club and that is the consequence of years of short-sightedness on the part of the owners. Can you imagine Dizzy Dean getting only $17,000 after winning 30 games, I don't care when it was.

So if a ball player will sell his services to the bidder offering life-time security for modest achievements on the field, why wouldn't he submit to something tax-free in which he isn't by contract compelled to share with an agent?

And, then there's the common everyday use of drugs. It is not all that uncommon for a set-for-life ball player to discover that his agent has skimmed off the top, bottom and "made some bad investments" that have left his bank account empty.

Where's that next fix coming from? For a gambler seeking to make the big kill, this is what is known as the "sitting duck." Just ask Tulane.

Welcome back Willie and Mickey. You might not have been welcome with the crusty old judge as the game's czar, but today you guys are a breath of fresh air.

Season opens with Rose pursuing Cobb

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

AL East: "Detroit ran away with it last year. That happens once in a blue moon ... this year, it'll be a dog fight."

The 1985 major league baseball season begins Monday with the spotlight on Cincinnati, traditional site of the National League opener for the past century. The spotlight surely will return as Pete Rose nears a record that has stood for more than half that time.

Rose, player-manager of the Reds, is poised to break the all-time record of 4,191 hits by Ty Cobb, who ended his career in 1928. With 107 hits last year, Rose now has 4,097, needing 95 to break the record.

Rose, who turns 44 on April 14, has a dual role, however, and he says he aspires first to the same goal as his 25 other managerial counterparts — to win a pennant.

"As far as I'm concerned, the record will fall," he says. "It's just a matter of at-bats. If I hit, I play. I've always been able to put the team ahead of the individual."

THE REDS, opening the National League season at home for the 99th time, play the Montreal Expos. Four games — Cleveland at Detroit, New York at Boston, Texas at Baltimore and Toronto at Kansas City — open the American League season Monday. By April 19, all 26 clubs will have opened at home.

Cobb's record is one of several milestones that could fall during the season. Tom Seaver is within 12 victories of the 300 career mark; Rod Carew needs 71 hits to reach 3,000, and Nolan Ryan and Steve Carlton continue their duel for the all-time strikeout lead. Ryan has 3,874 strikeouts, Carlton 3,872, and both pitchers could pass the 4,000 mark this year.

Duels of a less-individual nature are developing in baseball's four divisions, especially in the American League East. The Detroit Tigers won 35 of their first 40 games last season to run away with the division, then captured the World Series in five games over the San Diego Padres, winners from NL West.

Considered the strongest division in baseball, the AL East will be tough to defend. According to different accounts, as many as five teams — Detroit, Toronto, Baltimore, Boston and New York — could compete for the title. In fact, recent precedent indicates the Tigers will fail in their defense, along with the Padres and the other two division winners, Kansas City in the AL West and Chicago in the NL East. In the past three years, no division winner has repeated.

OFF THE field and in the conference rooms, another battle looms. Baseball's four-year Basic Agreement with the players' union, which was negotiated out of the 1981 strike, expired on Dec. 31, and an owners' contention that the game faces "severe economic problems" has slowed talks.

"It's a little frustrating," says Don Fehr, acting executive director of the Major League Players Association, "but there's not much we can do but keep at it. The only other thing we could do is set a strike deadline, and the players are not ready to do that yet."

The players are asking for changes in free agency and the contribution to their benefit plan, while owners would like a new look in salary arbitration.

Other new looks are more apparent in some of the teams and their players.

Reliever Bruce Sutter left St. Louis as a free agent to go to Atlanta; Montreal traded catcher Gary Carter to the New York Mets; Oakland sent outfielder Rickey Henderson to the New York Yankees; San Diego traded with the Chicago White Sox for pitcher LaMarr Hoyt; Toronto got relievers Bill Caudill from Oakland and Gary Lavelle from San Francisco; the Giants sent outfielder Jack Clark to St. Louis, and Kansas City took catcher Jim Sundberg from Milwaukee.

Even the organization-oriented Orioles signed three free agents — Fred Lynn, Lee Lacy and Don Aase. In the previous nine years of the reentry draft, Baltimore had signed only five free agents, the most prestigious being Steve Stone — a nobody when he came to the Orioles in 1978 from the White Sox, a Cy Young winner in 1980.

"There comes a time when you have to veer off course until you can get back to your original program," Baltimore Manager Joe Altobelli says. "These three free agents give us time to groom three more players on the Triple A level and three more on the Double A level."

Montreal, St. Louis and Pittsburgh in the National League, and Oakland, Texas and Milwaukee in the American League are among one-time contenders who have embarked upon major rebuilding efforts.

"When there is an apparent problem, the only way to solve it is by making deals — by getting some new faces," Expos General Manager Murray Cook says. "When you're a contender, you don't want to do anything real dramatic. When you finish fifth, and it doesn't look like you have the personnel, you have to try to do something dramatic to pull out of it."

Many clubs found answers to poor seasons in the manager's office. Ten clubs have new managers to start the season.

THREE new managers — Rose, Jackie Moore at Oakland and Chuck Cottier at Seattle — were named during last season. Two managers — Gene Mauch at California and George Bamberger at Milwaukee — returned after previous terms with their clubs. John Felske at Philadelphia, Eddie Haas at Atlanta and Jim Daveport at San Francisco are rookie managers, while John McNamara at Boston and Buck Rodgers at Montreal have managed other teams.

Another office job also has changed as baseball begins its first full season under Commissioner Peter Ueberroth, the man who made $215 million for the Los Angeles Olympics as president of its organizing committee. Now, he'll try to make some money for major league baseball.

In a major public relations move last month, the commissioner reinstated Hall of Famers Willie Mays and Mickey Mantle, who had been banned from baseball by Ueberroth's predecessor, Bowie Kuhn, for their involvement with Atlantic City gambling casinos.

Mays and Mantle were not the only ones who were beginning the road back in baseball.

Perhaps the most dramatic comeback bid will be made by Houston shortstop Dickie Thon, who played in only five games last year before he was struck in the head by a pitch on April 8. He missed the rest of the season and, although he still has some vision impairment, Thon is supposed to start for the Astros.

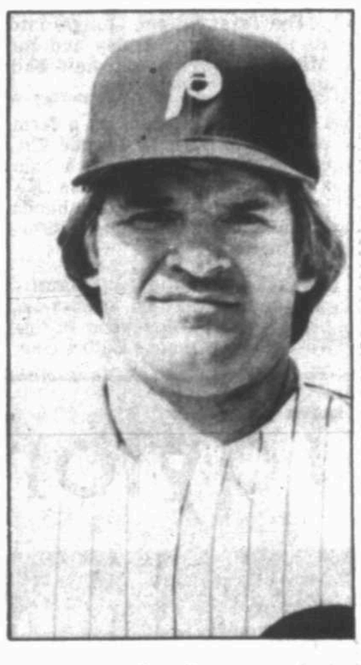
Bob Horner, who has broken his right wrist twice in the past two years, also appears ready to start the season for Atlanta after being told by doctors he'd probably miss all of 1985. He hasn't played since last May 30 and only last week played in his first exhibition game.

THE BREWERS probably have been most severely hit by injuries. They have four players trying to come back from major surgery, including Cy Young winners Pete Vuckovich and Rollie Fingers. Vuckovich, with a torn rotator cuff, has pitched only three games since his 1982 Cy Young season. Fingers, who won the Cy Young in 1981, missed all of 1983 and was sidelined July 23 last year with a herniated disc. Also trying to return are Paul Molitor, who missed all but 13 games last year with an elbow problem, and Robin Yount, who underwent shoulder surgery after the season.

Still, it's a time of optimism for most teams. After all, until Monday, none will have lost a game. And their refrains, no matter the league or division, have a similar sound.

The Yankees' Henderson, on the AL East: "Detroit ran away with it last year. That happens once in a blue moon ... this year, it'll be a dog fight."

Kansas City Manager Dick Howser, on the AL West: "There's not a dominant club in the West. People have a tendency to run us down because of the East, but when we were playing well last year, we were beating teams in the East."



Pete Rose
...it's a matter of at bats

Montreal Manager Rodgers, on the NL East: "I don't think anyone will run away with it. There are too many good, improved teams in this division."

And Atlanta's Dale Murphy, on the NL West: "We felt we were a contending team before, and now we've improved. But San Diego was pretty tough last year, too, and they've improved."

ANGELS

Gonzalez' figures at Redwood last year were 8-6 2.72 earned-run-average with eight saves. His innings-hits-walks-strikeout ratio were 73-57-45-54. Bryden was 1-3 with a 2.97 era and six saves and 30-26-10-34.

The lefthanders are Spiro Psaltis and Eddie Delzer. Pitching at Peoria and Redwood Psaltis was 10-3 with six saves. In 90 innings, he allowed 70 hits, walked 43 and fanned 63.

After Delzer finished pitching Cal State-Fullerton to the College World Series championship, he compiled an 5-1 record with a 1.34 era and nine saves at Peoria. He was a No. 21 draft choice, probably because of his physical statistics, not his pitching stats.

The 5-8 150 pounder beat Texas in the Series finals, giving up two first inning hits and then no-hitting the Longhorns for the next 6 1/3 innings. Last time Midland had a pitcher who won the College World Series, it was Craig Lefferts, also a left-hander, who turned the trick for Arizona. Craig is now with San Diego.

In college, Delzer was 8-2 with a 2.09 in 94 innings for Fullerton.

THAT takes care of the Angels up-the-middle. Things don't look so bad on the fringes, where a team looks for its power.

Mark Bonner and Doug Reibel will share first base as they did last year at Redwood where they combined for 35 homers and 140 rbi. Of course, one functioned as a DH when the other was in the field and since California is an American League club, Midland will be using the DH this year. Bonner hit .273 with 20 homers and 92 rbi. Reibil hit .277 and belted out 14 with 48 rbis.

At third base is Bill Merrifield, .272-29-97 at Peoria and in the outfield, Reggie Montgomery (.291-14-79 with 10 SBs) is in right and Danny Murphy, who played in the Texas League for Tulsa where he hit .228 last year, is in left.

"The Rangers released Murphy, but he attended the University of Nevada-Las Vegas and his hitting coach brought him to spring camp and he has looked good," says Maddon.

Juan Cruz is the backup infielder, short or second, "And he is typical of our back up people. Thoroughly capable. Fd have no qualms about starting any of them."

The Angels leave Mesa Monday for El Paso. "We'll check in and have a free evening Monday and then open the season." It will be the last free evening, barring rainouts, until May 2.

Penn State gridders die

NEWPORT, Pa. (AP) — Two members of the 1984 Penn State football team were killed in a fiery one-car crash near this south-central Pennsylvania town, police said Saturday.

Police and a Penn State spokeswoman identified the victims of the Friday afternoon crash as Gene Lyons, 21, of Deptford, N.J., and Billy Chris James, 18, of McKeesport.

Penn State spokeswoman Mary Jo Haverbeck said Lyons was a junior reserve defensive end.

Head football Coach Joe Paterno said Lyons came to the team as a walk-on and played last season on a scholarship.

"He was a good solid student and very well-liked. He was an extremely hard-working kid," Paterno said.

James, a freshman walk-on player last season who came to the team from Serra High School, didn't join the Nittany Lions squad for spring drills, Paterno said. Haverbeck said she didn't know what position he played.

State Police Cpl. Brady Williams said the accident happened about 2:45 p.m. Friday on U.S. Route 22-322, about one mile east of the Midway exit in Watts Township, about five miles east of Newport.

Perry County Coroner Michael Shalonis pronounced Lyons and James dead at the scene after they were pinned in the wreckage of the car, Williams said.

According to state police at Newport, Lyons was the driver of the car, a 1977 sports car traveling east on the highway "at an apparent high rate of speed."

Police said Lyons lost control of the car while rounding a curve. The car struck an embankment and continued east, striking a concrete drain culvert, which caused it to flip and burst into flames, according to police. The car came to rest on its roof after an undetermined number of flips, they said.

The vehicle continued to burn, causing the median strip to catch on fire, police said. The fire was extinguished by the Newport Fire Company.

OSU Cowboys ride to title

AUSTIN (AP) — Oklahoma State rode the steady play of Brian Watts to move into first place Saturday after two rounds of the Morris Williams Intercollegiate golf tournament.

Watts, a freshman from Carrolton, Texas, shot a 68 Saturday and held first place with a 135 two-day total. Arkansas' Tim Crockett was three strokes back after shooting his second straight 69, and Oklahoma State's Mike Bradley, who fired a 71, was third at 139.

The Cowboys held a two-shot lead over first-round leader Lamar, 558 to 560. Texas was in third with 563, followed by Arkansas with 574. Oklahoma entered Sunday's play well off the pace in fifth place. The Sooners had a two-day total of 581.

40-footer gives lead to Miller

By KEN PETERS

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Alice Miller, who's been knocking on the victory door all year but hasn't broken into the winner's circle, rolled in a 40-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole Saturday to take the lead after three rounds of the LPGA's $400,000 Nabisco Dinah Shore.

Miller, 28, winner of three tournaments over the past two years, shot a 2-under-par 70 for an 8-under-par total of 208 through 54 holes at Mission Hills Country Club.

SHE'LL TAKE a one-stroke lead over Patty Sheehan and Judy Clark into today's nationally televised final round.

Sheehan, who began the day one shot back of the lead shared by Clark and Muffin Spencer-Devlin, carded a third-round 71, while Clark matched par with 72.

Spencer-Devlin struggled to a 77 that left her six strokes off the pace at 214.

Also within striking distance of the lead heading into the final round were Jan Stephenson, Denise Strebig and Lauri Peterson, all at 212.

Stephenson and Strebig each had 73s, and Peterson shot a third-round 69.

Miller, a former Arizona State golfing star from Marysville, Calif., has managed to finish second, third, fourth and fifth in the eight women's tournaments this year, coming closest to victory with a runner-up spot at the LPGA's Costa Mesa, Calif. tournament in early March.

Dinah Shore LPGA

She won twice last year, the Sarasota Classic and West Virginia Classic — the latter which had provided her with her initial LPGA triumph the previous year.

Miller, who joined the tour in 1978, has won slightly more than $70,000 each of the past three years on the circuit, and would collect $55,000 for a victory in the prestigious Dinah Shore, the richest of four LPGA major tournaments.

AT 213 are last year's LPGA Player of the Year, Betsy King, Pat Bradley, Beth Solomon, and Jane Geddes.

Juli Inkster, who won the tournament in 1984 and could have collected a $1 million bonus with a repeat victory this year, shot a third-round 72 and, at 219, is out of the running.

Miller and Clark both bogeyed No. 17, a 170-yard par-3, to drop to 7-under. It was the first bogey of the round for Clark, and the second for Miller.

Sheehan, the tour's winningest player over the past two years, had birdied the 13th hole to go 7-under, then had pars the rest of the way.

Myra Blackwelder, who held the first day's lead with a 68, bounced back from a second-round 76 with a 71 that put her at 216. Also at 216 was Nancy Lopez, who had an opening 76, then carded a 69 the second day and a 71 the third.

Blackmar, Floyd share first place

By BOB GREEN

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Rookie Phil Blackmar, tied for the lead with veteran Ray Floyd going into Sunday's final round of the $400,000 Greater Greensboro Open, says he's in a no-lose situation.

"The worst that can happen is that I win a lot of money," said Blackmar, a hulking, 6-foot-7, 260-pounder who reeled off four consecutive birdies on the way to a third-round 68 Saturday.

"Everybody expects me to fold. If I do, it doesn't matter," Blackmar said."But I know that if I play to my capabilities, I can play with anybody. It's a matter of me beating myself."

There's also the matter of beating Floyd, who came from nine shots back with a spectacular, six-under-par 66.

"I've definitely got a chance to win," Floyd said after collecting nine birdies, including seven on the front nine, where he carded a sizzling 30.

"But I don't know how I'll handle it. I haven't been there in a while," said Floyd, a non-winner since 1982.

"If I can keep myself under control, play well, handle the situation, I'll be rewarded whether I win or lose," he said.

Floyd and Blackmar completed three rounds over the windswept Forest Oaks Country Club course with scores of 212, four under par.

They were the survivors of a mass scramble in which eight men led or shared the lead at one point or another during the windy round, which ended with 21 men locked within four shots of the lead going into the final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize.

Greensboro Open

One shot off the pace were Peter Jacobsen, Bobby Clampett and Dan Pohl. Jacobsen, a two-time winner last season and a two-time runner-up this year, had a third-round 70. Pohl shot 71. Clampett was tied for the lead until he bogeyed the 18th hole to complete a 75.

Floyd, twice the winner of the PGA and the 1976 Masters champion, had an off-season last year and has, generally, been unproductive this year.

"I've been telling people that I've been playing well and not getting anything out of it," he said. "I hate to keep saying that. After a while, people look at you like you're crazy. But that's what's been happening."

He started the day with a bogey after driving into the left rough.

And on the par-five second, he pull-hooked his drive, with the ball hitting a cart path and slashing into a woman's face.

"I don't know who she is. I didn't get her name. But the ball ripped her face pretty badly," Floyd said.

But he played two more shots to the green, then holed a 25-foot putt.

It touched off a string of seven birdies in eight holes.

Chaparrals revise record book

From Staff Reports

Midland College concluded its 10th year of basketball competition with several players entering the Chap record book.

Sophomore Teviin Binns, 6-9½, of the Bronx, New York, rewrote his own record for blocked shots, rejecting 127 of them in 35 games. He set the team record last year with 95. Binns also placed himself second for most points in a game (42); second for most field goals in a game (19); second for consecutive free throws (10); second for most rebounds in a game (21); and second for total points in a season (724).

Binns led the team in scoring and scoring average at 20.7; rebounding, 8.8 average; and dunks, 40 for the season.

The only other Chaparral to crack the record list was sophomore point guard Zeak Williams, 6-1, who placed second for total steals with 111. Williams ranked second on the team on field goal percentage with 58.6 percent and first on the team for free throw accuracy, hitting 75.9 percent.

Williams also led the team in assists with 181.

Freshman Eddie Frazier, 6-6, of Dorchester, Massachusetts, who became eligible in January, was tops on the team for field goal accuracy, hitting 59.2 percent.

Sophomore Vernon Coleman, 6-2, of Fort Worth was the team's utility man, as he played both guard and forward. Coleman tied for second in scoring, averaging 9.7 points. He hit 54.6 percent from the field and 75 percent from the free throw line, was second in steals with 80, second in assists with 166, second in total rebounds with 159 and led the team in taking defensive charges with 23.

The Chaparrals took their fourth Western Junior College Athelete Association and third regional title this season and finished fourth in the NJCAA national tourney. It also was the fourth year the Chaps had finished the season with 30 wins or more. They ended the year 31-6. For the past 10 years, they've never had a losing season and have a 75.2 winning percentage overall and 71.6 winning percentage in conference play. They've been coached the past eight years by Jerry Stone.

Four Chaparrals played in all 36 games this season (the Chaps took one win by forfeit). They were Williams, Coleman, sophomore Chuckie Graves of Dallas, and Tony Wright of New York City. Wright, a 6-4 freshman, started the last 11 games of the season after sophomore forward Lawrence Chumbley went out with a knee injury. Binns missed one early-season game with a sprained ankle.

Freshman Ricky Grace, 6-1 freshman from Dallas, started slowly this year and then missed several games in January after receiving a fractured wrist in a motorcycle mishap. But he came on strong late in the year.

Binns, one of Midland College's most highly-recruited players, was conference MVP, regional MVP, All-Regional Tournament, All-NJCAA Tournament, and a likely NJCAA All-American pick.

Coleman was Regional Tournament MVP and All-Conference.

Gamblers' Kelly almost benched

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

USFL

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Gamblers quarterback Jim Kelly was almost benched last season before he finally learned which buttons to push in the run-and-shoot offense and guided the Gamblers to the USFL playoffs.

Kelly remembers the problems he had as a rookie and says he notices similarities in Doug Flutie, who will be quarterbacking the New Jersey Generals against the Gamblers Sunday in Giants Stadium.

"Doug is getting a little nervous back there in the pocket," Kelly said. "He has to learn to stay in the pocket just like I did last year. One thing I did was run around too much and get off my reads a little too quick.

Kelly, who surged to set two USFL records and earn the league's most valuable player award last season, now sees the same frustrating developmental process in Flutie.

"By watching film of him against team's we've played, I can see what he's going through is what I was going through last year," Kelly said. "He gets a little excited in wanting to make the big play all the time and trying to run around and make it on his own.

"That's what I did and I think he'll come around after awhile. I got better at reading coverages and picking out second and third receivers as the season went on."

Sunday's game is a glamour matchup against a pair of glamour quarterbacks but Flutie and Kelly won't go along with the story line.

"I'm playing against the New Jersey Generals' defense," Kelly said. "It's our defense that has to worry about Doug Flutie. He's a good athlete and he's been scrambling a lot and they'll probably do the same thing against us."

Flutie says it will be a challenge playing against Kelly simply because it means the Generals, 3-3, must match the Gamblers' prolific scoring production.

"I don't look at it as a personal battle," Flutie said. "Kelly is the best quarterback in the league, no doubt about it. It's a situation where you go out into the game knowing that you'll have to score a lot of points to win."

Both quarterbacks played in losing efforts week. Kelly completed 33 of 51 passes for 393 yards and two touchdowns but he threw three interceptions in a 27-14 loss to Baltimore. Flutie hit 16 of 28 passes for 243 yards but tossed four interceptions in a 31-13 loss to Arizona.

Kelly doesn't see Sunday's game as a quarterback showdown.

"Up to today, I guess I am the better quarterback," Kelly said. "I'm not bragging, but just looking at it statistically, and we're 5-1.

"I'm going into this game as Jim Kelly and try to win this one for the team. It's not Jim Kelly against Doug Flutie, quarterback against quarterback. It's Generals against Gamblers."

Anderson leads Bandits to 31-17 win over Bulls

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Gary Anderson, the United States Football League's scoring leader with 13 touchdowns, ran for one TD and caught passes from John Reaves for two more Saturday to lead the Tampa Bay Bandits to a 31-17 victory over the Jacksonville Bulls.

The triumph was Tampa Bay's fourth in its last five games and moved the 5-2 Bandits to within one-half game of the Eastern Conference-leading Birmingham Stallions.

Jacksonville, loser of five of its last six contests, dropped to 2-5.

Reaves, who completed 22 of 38 passes for 292 yards, teamed with Larry Brodsky on a 24-yard scoring play early in the second quarter. He broke the game open with touchdown passes of 13 and 7 yards to Anderson — a third-year running back — within a three-minute span of the fourth period.

Slingers seek repeat

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Last week's shutout victory came as a surprise to the San Antonio Gunslingers, and this week they are hoping for a repeat performance.

It won't be easy. The Gunslingers, 2-4, clash Sunday at 1:30 p.m. with the powerful Birmingham Stallions, 5-1.

Birmingham isn't looking past the previously punchless San Antonio team.

"I fully expect a tough game from them," Birmingham coach Rollie Dotsch said.

San Antonio is tied for fifth place in the Western Conference of the United States Football League, while the Stallions lead the Eastern Conference.

San Antonio Coach Jim Bates said he expects Sunday's game to be a real test for his team.

The Gunslingers, he said, "were all surprised we won the game (against Portland) as easily as we did. That's really a boost for us."

"This week, we will see where we are because we play one of the better teams in the league. It will be a great challenge," he said.

Once the Guns settle on a quarterback, Dotsch said he expects the team "to be real consistent. I just hope they don't do it this week."

Wright's three rbi spark Texas

From Wire Reports

Baseball Exhibitions

Rangers 8, Expos 3

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. — George Wright drove in three runs with a double, single and home run for Texas and reserve outfielder Bobby Jones slugged his fourth homer of the spring in the eighth inning for Texas.

Montreal's Dave Hostetler hit a two-run homer off Dickie Noles and U.L. Washington had a solo shot off Greg Harris to account for the Expos' runs.

The Rangers finished the spring with a 10-14 record. Montreal is 11-16.

Cubs 8, Mariners 5

DENVER — The Chicago Cubs scored four runs in the seventh inning and added two in the eighth to beat Seattle.

The Cubs got a run in the first and scored again in the fourth to build a 2-0 edge.

The Mariners tied the score in the top of the fifth on Jim Presley's home run over the 360-foot sign at Mile High Stadium with a teammate on base.

Seattle added three runs in the top of the sixth to go up 5-2. But, Jody Davis and Shawnon Dunston hit back-to-back solo homers in the bottom of the seventh to spark a four-run rally. The Cubs added two runs in the bottom of the eighth to seal the win.

With one on and one out in the Mariners' half of the ninth, Presley hit a ball that looked like it might clear the left-center field fence. But Cubs left fielder Brian Dayett made a leaping catch and threw the ball into the infield to double the runner off first base and end the inning.

Expos 2, Braves 0

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Andre Dawson drove in runs with a sacrifice fly and a double — and cut down one runner at the plate — to boost the Montreal Expos over Atlanta.

The loss ended a nine-game winning streak by the Braves.

Montreal moved ahead 1-0 against starter Rick Mahler in the first. Tim Raines singled, stole second and advanced to third on a sacrifice bunt by Herm Winningham before Dawson delivered a sacrifice fly.

In the third, Raines again scored after drawing a walk and racing home on Dawson's double.

Joe Hesketh, the Montreal starter allowed six hits in six innings for the victory. Bert Roberge, Dan Schatzeder and Jeff Reardon completed the shutout.

With one out and the bases loaded in the eighth, Chris Chambliss hit a fly ball to Dawson, playing in center field after Winningham left with a slightly sprained wrist. After making the catch, Dawson made a perfect throw to the plate to nail Rafael Ramirez.

The Expos got to the 25-man player limit following the game by placing infielder Mike Ramsey on waivers.

A's 8, Giants 5

SAN FRANCISCO — First baseman Bruce Bochte and center fielder Dwayne Murphy hit back-to-back home runs off losing pitcher Jim Gott to lead the Oakland A's.

But the Giants struck back as center fielder Chili Davis, second baseman Manny Trillo and left fielder Jeff Leonard hit home runs before a crowd of 14,308 at Candlestick Park.

A's left fielder Dusty Baker, who wore a Giants uniform last season, added two insurance runs as he drove in one run on a sacrifice fly in the seventh and another on a single to center in the ninth.

The A's turned over three double plays on the Giants, ending potential rallies in the fifth, sixth and ninth innings.

Reliever Jay Howell earned the save for the A's by shutting down the Giants in the bottom of the ninth. The teams will play Sunday in Oakland to end preseason play.

Royals 6, Chicks 2

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Designated hitter Jorge Orta drove in three runs to lead the Kansas City Royals over their Southern League farm-club, the Memphis Chicks.

Orta opened scoring in the first inning with an RBI fielder's choice. Catcher Jim Sundberg lofted a sacrifice fly to drive in a run in the second inning and designated hitter Hal McRae added a two-out RBI single to give the Royals a 3-0 lead.

Kansas City, which opens its American League season Monday at home against the Toronto Blue Jays, added two runs in the fifth — one on a sacrifice fly by Orta that scored Starting pitcher Charlie Liebrandt got the win for Kansas City, allowing only one run in six innings and striking out five. Starter Larry Gura posted the loss for Memphis.

Left fielder Jeff Schulz paced Memphis with three singles and catcher Hal Hatcher added two.

Memphis begins league action Friday against the Greenville Braves in South Carolina.

Reds 3, Tigers 1

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Jay Tibbs scattered four hits in seven innings, helping the Cincinnati Reds beat Detroit.

Cincinnati, is 14-12 in exhibition play. Detroit is 17-13.

The Reds scored twice in the first inning as Detroit starter Milt Wilcox walked in two runs. Wilcox walked four batters in the game, all in the first inning. He also allowed four hits and struck out two.

The Reds got their final run off Wilcox in the sixth inning when, with two out, Duane Walker doubled and scored on Nick Esasky's single.

Detroit got its only run in the second inning off Tibbs when Larry Herndon scored on a throwing error by Reds' second baseman Ron Oester.

White Sox 10, Bisons 0

SARASOTA, Fla.- Tom Paciorek collected three hits, scored two runs and drove in another for the Chicago White Sox against the Buffalo Bisons, Chicago's Triple A farm club.

Rich Dotson, who was placed on the supplemental disabled list after the game, started for the White Sox and allowed one hit in six innings. Dotson developed sore forearm muscles at the beginning of spring training and will be sidelined for two weeks.

Juan Agosto finished and allowed only one hit in the final three innings. Daryl Boston and Luis Salazar each had two hits in Chicago's 16-hit attack.

Yankees 10, Orioles 5

MIAMI — Scott Bradley's bases-loaded triple highlighted a six-run ninth inning, boosting the New York Yankees over the Baltimore Orioles.

New York ended its spring season with a 15-12 record, while the Orioles are 14-14.

Bradley, who entered the game in the seventh inning, was 2-2 with five RBI. Omar Moreno, Willie Randolph, Henry Cotto and Mike Pagliarulo each had two hits for the Yankees, while Don Baylor hit his fourth home run of the spring.

The Orioles took a 5-1 lead in the fifth inning with the help of a bases-loaded double by Dan Ford and an RBI double by Cal Ripken.

The Yankees scored in the seventh on Baylor's solo homer and twice in the eighth on a two-run single by Bradley, making it 5-4.

The Yankees loaded the bases with one out in the ninth off reliever Don Aase. Singles by Moreno and Randolph put New York ahead 6-5 before Bradley ripped his triple off Tippy Martinez.

Pirates-Mets

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — The New York Mets built up a 6-0 lead over the Pittsburgh Pirates Saturday before their exhibition game was rained out after three innings. George Foster had a run-scoring double and a three-run homer.

Mariners 5, Indians 4

TUCSON, Ariz. — Former Beaumont Gators first baseman Pat Casey homered and singled, driving in two runs, and Danny Tartabull singled in two more Saturday to lead the Seattle Mariners.

Seattle, 12-15, jumped on Cleveland starter Vern Ruhle, 2-3, for three first-inning runs on Tartabull's two-run single and Casey's RBI single.

Casey homered and Paul Serna scored on a groundout to make it 5-0 in the fourth.

Cleveland, which closed its exhibition season at 12-16, came back with single runs in the fourth, fifth, seventh and eighth innings, including a solo homer by Pat Tabler in the fifth off Seattle starter Frank Wills, 1-0.

Tabler was 3-for-3 on the day, and three Indians' relievers closed the day with five perfect innings. Dave Von Ohlen and Tom Waddell each threw two perfect innings, and Ernie Camacho hurled a flawless ninth.

Seattle was represented by a split squad. The bulk of the Mariners' team was in Denver for an exhibition game against the Chicago Cubs.

Ranger chicken thieves reform

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

ARLINGTON (AP) — The Texas Rangers lost the hearts and stomachs of their fans in 1984.

They finished dead last in the American League West, 69-92 in a year that management was optimistic of a pennant contender. The miscalculation cost General Manager Joe Klein his job.

And they made their fans mad at the start of the season by not allowing them to take food into the Arlington Stadium.

This unpopular policy by Larry Schmittou, vice president of marketing and administration, was rescinded by no less than the chairman of the board, Eddie Chiles.

FANS were being turned off by horror stories of guards confiscating fried chicken at the gates, then having their own picnic.

Now, the 1985 theme is "Catch the Good Times!"

Cynical Ranger fans could be forgiven if they reserve judgment, particularly on the "catch" angle since the Rangers were last in the league in fielding last year.

But there are signs of a new broom at Arlington.

There's a new general manager — Tom Grieve, a former Ranger player who was director of player development. He's a down-to-earth realist.

"Our goal right now is .500," Grieve says.

Gaylord Broadcasting bought a large percentage of the team and pumped in some badly needed cash flow.

The Rangers have been in the red ink throughout the 1980s.

There are new executive suites that will provide more revenue.

There's a new public relations man in John Blake, who replaced the retired Burt Hawkins.

There's a new attitude from Ranger Manager Doug Rader, who stubbed his toe on several trades including the Ned Yost for catcher Jim Sundberg deal.

"I'VE MADE some mistakes," Rader admitted shortly before he cut Yost from the team in spring training.

When the Rangers take the field for their home opener Friday night against Milwaukee (plenty of seats are still available), there will be plenty of new faces.

Toby Harrah, the old Ranger who still holds the club's home run leadership, was obtained in a trade for Billy Sample and will be starting at second base.

Cliff Johnson, a slugger deluxe, will be the new designated hitter and classy catcher Don Slaught, obtained from Kansas City, will be behind the plate.

The Ranger lineup averaged almost six runs a game in the spring and could be a potent run producer during the regular season.

NEW PITCHERS counted on to help include Dave Rozema and former Los Angeles Dodger Burt Hooten, whose earned run average hovered around 10.00 in the spring.

Dave Stewart is being tried as a reliever but had a tough Grapefruit League.

The Rangers are trying hard to do away with their bad guy image.

Tickets range all the way from $1.25 for a child's general admission (adult $2.00) to $8.50 for a box seat.

Two-team markets headed for history books

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — High player salaries and declining fan support have created an economic crisis for baseball that could mean the end of the few remaining two-team markets, the owners of the Bay Area clubs said Saturday.

In a radio interview before an exhibition game between their teams at Candlestick Park, San Francisco Giants' owner Bob Lurie and Oakland A's owner Roy Eisenhardt agreed that supporting two teams in the Bay Area was becoming increasingly difficult.

"It's our figure that there are three million baseball fans in the Bay Area, and I don't know if there are enough people for two teams to economically survive," Lurie said. "We have to get off to a very good start and we have to continue the pace to get the fans out."

Eisenhardt said baseball's economic troubles went beyond lack of fan support.

"The question we have to ask is whether the Bay Area is going to be the victim of a larger problem, which is the economic disorientation of baseball itself. And the way things are going, I think the answer has to be yes," he said.

"There are two lines that are starting to approach a crossing point in baseball, and they are the rising salaries and the ability of markets to support that kind of a payroll structure," Eisenhardt said.

He added, "Now I think the majority of owners and the commissioner recognize that problem has to be dealt with. There is, for the first time a sense that there is some crisis involving these issues, and that sense is essential to starting to come up with a solution."

Baseball doesn't have Washington's full attention

MIAMI (AP) — Claudell Washington admits his mind isn't totally on baseball as the Atlanta Braves prepare to open the 1985 season.

The Braves' starting right fielder is facing a misdemeanor drug possession charge in California that could threaten his career.

The timing couldn't be worse. The season that opens Tuesday for the Braves in Philadelphia is the last of his contract. And Braves officials, already concerned about the health of his shoulders, told Washington's agent last week they would not discuss a new contract with the drug charge still outstanding.

"I don't have total concentration on baseball right now," Washington said after the Braves' victory over Baltimore in an exhibition game Friday.

"This (legal matter) is a thorn in my side," the 30-year-old added. "I think it'll all work out, but right now I wish inside that I didn't have this to deal with. I know I'm not concentrating like I should. I try to keep concentrating on playing and hoping it'll all fall in place. I just have to see what will happen.

"I guess you could say this is a real important year for me. I want to put together a good year and stay here. I'm tired of traveling," said Washington.

You wouldn't believe what Sax can do with ball

VERO BEACH, Fla. — Stephen Louis Sax, the ballplayer, has handled 2,528 moving baseballs for the Los Angeles Dodgers in his lifetime. Some he picked up, some he caught, some he threw, some he fumbled and some he did things with you wouldn't believe.

The point is, with 2,454 of those 2,528, he did exactly what he was supposed to do. He threw them through the air to the fellow he was aiming at. But, for the lousy 74 or so he didn't, he may be remembered for the rest of his life.

It's like Lincoln being remembered for spitting on the sidewalk. Saxie had this one teeny-tiny fault: he tended to dribble the ball to first base when he caught it. He just couldn't seem to get it there except on a hop. Maybe two. He bowled it there, like a guy trying to make a spare out of a railroad. Andy Varipapa never rolled any better.

NOW, A lot of guys have trouble adjusting to the major leagues. Some find the curveball unsolvable. Others have trouble with the outfield carom, getting the jump. Infielders sometimes can't make the pivot.

But nobody — nobody — ever had trouble with the 20-foot throw before Steve Sax. He turned it into high adventure. No Hitchcock movie ever had more suspense in it than a Steve Sax throw. Charlie Chaplin would have paid a fortune for the routine. Sax hit tarpaulins, customers, dugouts, everything but passing planes — but he couldn't seem to target the first baseman.

These were not tough chances he was manhandling. These were schoolgirl lobs, the kind of nothing-on-them tosses politicians make on opening days.

The manager, Tom Lasorda, in his book "The Artful Dodger," relives the frustration. "I had coaches Monty Basgall and Joey Amalfitano hitting him 50 grounders a day in practice. But he made no errors before the game began. But, as soon as the game began, he'd start throwing it to a customer sitting behind first base.

"Finally, I told Sax, 'Stevie, how many people do you think are walking the streets of the United States who can hit .280 in the big leagues?'

"'Not many,' he said.

"'That's right,' I agreed. 'Now, how many people are there walking the streets of the United States who could steal 50 bases in one year in the National League?'

"He shook his head. 'Very few,' he said.

"'That's right,' I said. 'But, let me ask you one more thing: How many people are there walking the streets of the United States who can throw the ball from second to first on the fly?!'

"I didn't wait for an answer. 'MILLIONS!' I screamed. 'There are MILLIONS of them! There are 10 million women who can do it and you're a big-league ballplayer and you can't do it and I don't understand!'"

IT WAS a sizable mystery. Worse than that, it became part of the warp and woof of baseball. An equation: Sax equals comic error. To Sax it meant to throw an easy lob anywhere but where it was intended, a symbol for the ultimate ineptitude.

Steve Sax scored 267 runs for the Dodgers in three years. He hit .270, stole 144 bases, disposed of about 97 percent of the balls hit or thrown to him flawlessly.

But that didn't matter. It was what he did with the other 3 percent that solidified his reputation.

It was almost as if the fans paid to come and see him throw it in the seats. They brought their gloves. They didn't want him to succeed. They didn't want Chaplin doing Hamlet. They wanted Laurel and Hardy. They wanted to laugh.

"Hey, Saxie! Throw the next one up here!" they yelled from the upper deck.

"Hey, Sax! How do you get food to your mouth?!" they asked him. "Through your ears?" And they guffawed.

"Hey, Sax, why don't you autograph them balls before you throw them up here? Just address them to whom it may concern."

When Sax went on the road, interviewers didn't want to know about his rookie-of-the-year award, his 180 hits or 20 game-winning hits, they wanted to talk about the ones that got away. The wittier ones wanted to know how he gripped his knuckleball and wondered whether, since he couldn't get runners out with it, he could get batters out with it.

BASEBALL had never seen anything like it. Fans sent in suggestions, everything from rabbit's feet to suggestions that he rub his arm with garlic. Some suggested that second-to-first just wasn't his distance, that they move him to third, where he could take a full windup.

Others suggested that he run over and hand it to the first baseman and, that way, save one base. Still others proposed that the pregame disclaimer by the public-address announcer before the game: "The Dodgers are happy to have you keep any ball hit into the stands" be expanded to include: "Or thrown into the stands by Sax." The Sax legend was on its way.

Sax, of course, hates it. He wishes it would go away. "It's all anyone wants to talk about," he complains. He has cut his errors from a league-leading 30 in 1983 to a respectable 21 last year. Players in the visiting dugout have stopped wearing masks.

It's not likely to help. The rap is secure.

The manager also tells a story of querying Pedro Guerrero, his transformed third baseman, as to what Pedro would be thinking in the ninth inning of a World Series game with an enemy batter up and the bases loaded and two out.

"I'd be thinking, 'Don't let him hit it to me,'" admitted Guerrero.

"Anything else?" persisted Lasorda.

"Yeah," said Guerrero, "I'd be thinking, 'Don't let him hit it to Saxie, neither.'"

Prep 1600-meter relay mark falls

AUSTIN (AP) — Henry Thomas anchored Hawthorne (Calif.) High School to a national schoolboy record 3:07.40 in the 1600-meter relay and Odessa bested the national junior college mark in the 1600 on Saturday in the 58th Texas Relays.

Thomas clocked a time of 44.5 seconds on his leg as Hawthorne eclipsed the old record of 3:08.94 by Berkeley, Calif., in 1981.

Dallas Roosevelt was second in 3:10.49 with sensational Roy Martin running a 44.8 anchor.

Midland Lee took fourth in 3:15.69.

The Texas Relays mark of 3:09.09 was held by Dallas Roosevelt.

Odessa College, anchored by Harold Madox, posted a 3:04.09 to shatter the previous record of 3:07.07 (yards) by Long Beach in 1979. That made the Odessa effort even more impressive.

In the collegiate 1600-meter relay, Baylor ran 3:00.88 to best its meet mark of 3:01.98.

Texas Relays

Earlier, Martin came from 15 meters off the pace to anchor the Mustangs to a 400-meter relay victory.

Martin posted a Texas Relays record and the second best all-time United States high school 100-meter mark of 10.18 seconds on Friday night.

Martin took the baton from brother Rod Martin in the 400-meter relay and blazed to the finish line ahead of Dallas Carter and Hawthorne (Calif.) High School and their ace anchor man, Thomas. Roosevelt's time was 41.01 to 41.39 for Dallas Carter and 41.41 for the Californians. The time was off the meet mark of 40.65 set by Roosevelt last year.

Martin's 100-meter time Friday night was just .02 seconds off the all-time best by Houston McTear of Baker (Fla.), who set the top standard in 1976.

The duel between the two high school teams overshadowed Arkansas' performance in the university division. The Razorbacks won three events on Saturday and a total of four for the three-day meet.

Maria Usifo, the Nigerian Olympian who runs for Texas Southern, upset Olympic gold medalist Benita Fitzgerald-Brown in the 100-meter hurdles in a time of 13.31 to 13.34.

Also, on Saturday, Dale Jenkins of Abilene Christian University set a new collegiate pole vault record of 18-4½, beating by one-half an inch his old mark set in 1984.

Jackson State established a university 3,200-meter relay standard of 7:16.21, eclipsing the old mark of 7:16.63 by Arkansas in 1983.

Wayne Roby of Wisconsin-Madison set a meet record of 13.50 in the college 110-meter hurdles, breaking the old mark of 13.54 by Cletus Clark, Houston, 1984.

Arkansas, the NCAA Indoor champions, won the college 4X1500-meter relay in 15:23.22, took the distance medley relay in 9:54.4 and the 400-meter relay in 39.0.

Arkansas set a meet record of 1:20.93 Friday night in the collegiate 800-meter relay. The old mark of 1:21.1 was set by Arizona in 1984.

Lloyd, Mandlikova advance to finals

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. (AP) — Chris Evert Lloyd and Hana Mandlikova defeated their opponents Saturday to advance to the finals of the $275,000 Ford Challenge Cup at the PGA National Resort.

Lloyd of Fort Lauderdale scored seven service breaks to defeat Carling Bassett 6-2, 6-1 in the semifinals. Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia won a pair of tiebreakers from Pam Shriver of Lutherville, Md., to score a 7-6, 7-6 victory Saturday night.

Mandlikova won the first set tiebreaker 7-5 after breaking Shriver's service in the 12th game. She then won the last seven points of a 7-1 tiebreaker in the second set after rallying 15-30 in the 12th game to reach the 6-6 tie.

"It was too close," said Mandlikova after stopping Shriver. "I never expected Pam to play to tough, especially on clay. But I usually win tiebreakers. I like the pressure."

Shriver, who spent most of the match on the net, said she hadn't played on clayu since the 1983 French Open.

After wrapping up the 75-minute match, Lloyd said, "I never felt threatened."

Bassett, a wild card entry ranked No. 10 in the world, was kept on the run by a smart-playing Lloyd, who has lost only seven matches on clay in the last 12 years and now holds a 6-0 margin over the 17-year-old Canadian.

Six of the eight games in the first set resulted in service breaks with Lloyd holding service in a 16-point second game and again in the eighth game. Lloyd took a 4-0 lead in the second set, losing her service in the fifth, the only game Bassett won in the set.

Skywalker wins at Santa Anita

ARCADIA, Calif. (AP) — Heavily favored Skywalker lost the lead in mid-stretch but came on again in the final yards to narrowly win the $354,-500 Santa Anita Derby for 3-year-olds Saturday at Santa Anita.

Skywalker's second effort under Laffit Pincay Jr. pushed him across the wire a nose in front of Fast Account, ridden by Gary Stevens, in Southern California's final prep race before the Kentucky Derby.

Ron Reed released by Chicago Sox

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Chicago White Sox relief pitcher Ron Reed was given his unconditional release and right-handed pitcher Richard Dotson was placed on the 15-day supplemental disabled list, the club said Saturday.

Dotson, who's been bothered by sore forearm muscles in his throwing arm this spring, said he felt fatigued Saturday after throwing 60 pitches against the Buffalo Bisons, Chicago's Triple A farm team.

Paul takes IBF title

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Jimmy Paul made the most of his unexpected shot at the International Boxing Federation lightweight title, scoring four knockdowns against defending champion Harry Arroyo en route to a lopsided 15-round unanimous decision Saturday.

Paul, who displayed brilliant patience and counter-punching, decked Arroyo in the third, 10th and 13th rounds with rights hands. A fourth knockdown was credited in the 13th when Referee Larry Hazzard issued as standing eight count to the dazed Arroyo, who suffered his first loss as a pro after 26 victories.

Judges Tim Figley, 147-138, and Tom Kaczmarek, 146-138, had Paul winning by a wide margin, while judge Frank Cappuccino had it 142-141 for Paul.

The victory was the 22nd in 23 fights for the Detroit fighter and came in a bout he was not even scheduled to fight a month ago. However, Paul got the shot at the title when Robin Blake, the original opponent, withdrew because of a hand injury suffered in a February victory over Adolfo Medel.

"I knew Arroyo had a really good right hand and I was watching for it," said Paul, 25. "Once I got ahead I really didn't want to give him a chance to hurt me so I was really cautious in the late rounds."

Boating safety begins in your own driveway

Safety Tips

By BILL SCHULZ

ATLANTA (AP) -- Boating safety begins in the driveway.

Thousands of Americans will haul the old boat out from the side yard or the garage and dump it in the lake without the few safety checks which can prevent inconvenience or death.

Here are some safety tips from America's boating manufacturers and safety experts.

If you didn't set your boat trailer up on blocks last fall, the tires sat in one spot all winter. That encourages rot in the rubber and rust in the wheel bearings. Check trailer tires carefully and inflate them to the proper pressure. Clean, inspect and repack wheel bearings with high-temperature bearing grease.

Check the battery. Even if stored properly, off the ground all winter, it probably needs a charge.

Make sure all the boat's lights and electrical systems are working, then do the same with your trailer's lighting harness. Make sure flares, fire extinguishers and other safety equipment are working.

Inspect your personal floatation devices for wear and rot, particularly if they've been stowed in the boat all winter.

Start and run your motor. Immerse the lower unit in a garbage can full of water or use one of the garden hose attachments to get cooling water into the motor. If the motor starts and runs well during this test, it probably will do so 10 yards off the launching ramp.

Inspect all ropes and tie-downs. Use an extra tie-down rope to hold the boat's bow to the trailer. Don't just rely on the winch rope to hold the bow. It's also a good idea to replace that winch rope.

Check the outboard motor to make sure it is tightly locked in place with plenty of road clearance.

You might also take a minute to call your auto dealer and be sure that new compact car you bought has enough muscle to haul your boat. In many cases, it's wise to install new transmission fluid cooler.

Finally, stow warm clothing in the boat for all passengers. This is particularly vital during the spring, before water and air heat up to summer temperatures. Exposure to cool air can cause deadly hypothermia.

Even if your body temperature doesn't drop low enough for the hypothermia to be fatal, a drop of just a few degrees in the body's core temperature can lead to disorientation, loss of balance and loss of your ability to use your arms and legs. That means it would be easy to fall overboard and drown.

Finally, when you get to the launch ramp, run through your boat safety equipment checklist again — and be sure you jam the transom drain plug home and lock it tight before launching.

Cajun delicacy a Wisconsin pest

By DAVE SKIDMORE

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Crayfish, the tasty Cajun delicacy, have become a pest in Wisconsin, where they gobble the eggs and destroy the habitat of northern Wisconsin's prime tourist lure — the walleye.

Lake Metonga is one of the hardest-hit lakes in the state, according to Arthur R. Ensign, fisheries supervisor in the Rhinelander office of the Department of Natural Resources.

"There are hundreds of them per square meter. I've skindived in that lake and the bottom is almost alive with them," he said. The clear water and rocky shore provide an ideal home for crayfish.

Ensign said he became aware of the crayfish problem at Metonga about eight years ago. Department fish experts noticed the walleye reproduction rate in Metonga, once a prodigious natural producer of the game fish, had dropped dramatically.

ENSIGN said the rusty crayfish eat walleye eggs and the rooted waterplants where walleye hatchlings hide.

So, for the past four years, the DNR has been forced to spend about $3,000 per year to stock walleye fingerlings in Metonga.

"We're providing a fishery there, but not as good as Mother Nature and not as cheap," he said.

John Magnunson, director of the Center for Limnology at the University of Wisconsin, said the rusty crayfish hails from the Ohio Valley, where natural predators keep it in check.

But fishermen using it for bait have spread it.

"It's an exotic animal in this region. Like the English sparrow, it's a species that came from elsewhere and just multiplied," said Magnuson, whose department studies freshwater lakes and rivers. "The same thing's happening in northern Michigan, northern Minnesota and southern Ontario."

SINCE 1963, Wisconin has tried to stop the rusty's spread by banning the use of live crayfish as bait. Fishermen caught with live crayfish risk fines of up to $200, confiscation of their equipment and suspension of their fishing licenses.

"It's too bad we didn't know about this 15 years ago. By not moving them around, at least the spread of the critter is slowed down somewhat and that gives us time to find some answers," Magnunson said.

Hunters set white-tail mark

AUSTIN (AP) — Hunters in Texas killed 373,262 deer during the recent white-tail season, which is a record, the Parks and Wildlife Department reported.

The department said it had been keeping statewide deer figures since 1972.

The 1984-85 deer harvest included 108,000 antlerless deer, which also is a record, the department said.

Hunters had a 54 percent "success rate," which is another record, the department said.

Water fatalities declined in '84

BY RODNEY RIEHLE

Water fatalities decreased in Texas in 1984 from 572 drownings and water-related deaths in 1983 to 424, according to the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept.

Boating deaths were down 74, a decrease of 30 percent. Swimming accounted for 121 deaths, fishing 63, wading 21 and falls 77.

The TPWD attributed the decline to an extensive education and information campaign against drinking alcohol while boating. Drought also caused low lake levels, especially in the western part of Texas.

There were 144 deaths in lakes, 61 in rivers, 47 in the Gulf, 47 in tanks, ponds and pits, 40 in creeks, streams and bayous. More than 50 per cent of the victims were under 26 years of age...

CANOEISTS and other river-oriented recreationists can learn more about this June's American Rivers Month activities by obtaining a schedule of events from the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept.

The observance is intended to increase public awareness and appreciation of rivers, promote alliance between river enthusiasts, landowners and public officials and encourage support for public and private programs to protect and maintain free-flowing rivers...

LAKE MONTICELLO may be renowned for trophy black bass, but recent surveys by the TPWD indicate largemouths are not the only fish in the pond.

"Catfishing at Monticello has been somewhat overshadowed by the bass fishery," said biologist Mike Ryan of Marshall. "but fishermen going after catfish have had excellent success, too."

A creel survey in late Feb. revealed a one-day harvest of 177 catfish weighing 476 pounds for a 2.7 average.

Springtime fishing for catfish at Monticello is enhanced by warm-water outflows from the electric generating plant. Good catches have been reported below the discharge channel. Drift fishing with shrimp and blood bait seems to be the most popular technique...

A field of 160 top Bass'n Gal (Texas Women's National championship) anglers will be sweating it out April 25-26 at Lake Bob Sandlin in the big bass country near Mount Pleasant. Points toward angler-of-the-year title and $35,000 in prize money will be at stake.

IN THE WILD

If you can't tell black from striped bass...

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

The black bass is among the most widely distributed gamefish in North America.

Anglers and fisheries managers have transplanted them from their native ranges to every state except Alaska — and many lakes have several species of bass.

Many species look alike, but a six-pound fish could be either a true lunker spotted bass or only a barely bragging size largemouth.

Here are a few bass identification tips.

LARGEMOUTH BASS — Also called black bass, Florida bass or green trout, is the largest of the black basses. It also is the country's most popular gamefish.

Much of its popularity is due to its willingness to strike a bait or lure with tremendous force. It also is considered to be the most intelligent of fish, able to spot and avoid a particular lure after tangling with it one time.

The world record is 22 pounds, 4 ounces, caught June 12, 1932, by George Perry in Georgia's Montgomery Lake.

Although its native range is the eastern United States, this largest member of the sunfish family now is found as far west as Hawaii.

The largemouth's jaw extends to, and often behind, the back of the eye. It is green and has a line of blotches down its side. Its spiney front dorsal fin and softer rear dorsal fin are barely connected.

SPOTTED BASS — Also called Kentucky bass, it includes three recognized subspecies. It looks like its largemouth cousin. But it has a rough, oblong patch of tiny teeth not found in the largemouth.

The spot, like all black basses except the largemouth, has scales on the base portion of its dorsal fin. Its jaw doesn't extend as far back as the largemouth. The lower side of the spot has horizontal rows of dark spots, below the line of dark blotches.

It frequents deeper, colder water than the largemouth, and a six-or seven-pounder is a real bragging fish.

SMALLMOUTH BASS — Also known as a brownie or bronzeback, the smallmouth also has been transplanted to nearly every state, but it is not as widespread as the largemouth.

The second largest member of the sunfish family, the smallmouth will grow to more than 10 pounds. It has clearly connected dorsal fins and its jawbone extends to only the middle of the eye.

The smallmouth also has vertical bars on its body, prominent in the young but faded as the fish grows older.

It likes cool streams and spawns in deeper, rockier water than the largemouth.

REDEYE BASS — Also known as the shoal bass, its native territory includes only a few river basins in Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee, but it has been introduced in other areas. It has red eyes, or considerable red in its eyes, and its fins are redder than those of other basses. In other ways it is similar to the largemouth, but a really big redeye is only six or seven pounds.

Duva accepts mission 'possible'

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Fight manager Lou Duva screams instructions to his fighter.

The mission was written right there on Lou Duva's back for all to see.

Breland. Taylor. Biggs. Whitaker. Holyfield.

Olympians all. Gold medalists all, except for Holyfield whose gold was denied when he was disqualified for a late punch in the semifinals in Los Angeles.

They're all Lou Duva's now. It is he who is entrusted with nurturing, coddling, coaxing and transforming this quintuplet of amateur Olympians into professonal challengers for world titles. He just might do it.

Two of Duva's brightest stars were at the San Angelo Coliseum Saturday for the latest installment of ABC's promotion of America's finest young boxing talent.

Mark Breland was there. So was Meldrick Taylor, the little fireball of a lightweight who may pose the next threat to champions like Duva's own Livingstone Bramble.

And they were there under the imposing shadow presented by Duva, the renowned manager/trainer for some of the fight world's greatest.

"It's styles that beat good fighters and that's what I'm doing with these guys, teaching them styles," Duva explained. "It's a transformation process thst some amateurs never adjust to. These guys are all great fighters, some it will just take longer to make that adjustment."

THAT IS something painfully obvious in Saturday's events.

One of Duva's charges, the scatquick lightweight Meldrick Taylor, displayed what Duva calls the "professional" style. The other, the more heralded Mark Breland, is still struggling to make the amateur-professional transition.

Taylor, at just 18-years-old, is farther down the transition trail than any other boxer Duva has seen in 40 years in the fight game — "a throw back to the old style of fighter". For Taylor, a championship fight is conceivably within his grasp by the time he is 20.

For Breland, a five-time world champion as an amateur, the transition has been slower. At 22 and with a 110-1 amateur record, Duva has found the amateur style more ingrained and harder to drum out of Breland.

"I can only bring these fellows along on what they show me in the gym," Duva said earlier this week. "It's an art in itself making the changeover from amateur to pro. You just have to keep hitting 'em with different styles and see how they adjust. So far It's gone quite well."

The next stop for Duva is April 20 in Corpus Christi. There, the other trio of Duva's fighters, flyweight Pernell Whitaker, heavyweight Tyrell Biggs and light-heavyweight Evander Holyfield hope to remain in the ranks of the unbeaten, as Taylor and Breland did Saturday.

The stops in Texas are part of what Duva calls getting back to the root of boxing.

"I was impressed with everything about the show here," Duva said. "I was impresed with the crowd, the media and the people. We've been doing a lot of casino work, and to be honest, you can't get what we got today at a casino. The boo's, the roars, the hollering, the popcorn...this is what it's all about. For longevity, this is where boxing has got to be. We'd come back to San Angelo in a minute. We'd come to 20 places like San Angelo in a minute."

For Taylor and Breland, the next stop will be in Lake Tahoe, Calif., on May 17 to face opponents unknown, and perhaps a move up to eight rounds. From there, more fights, more towns and perhaps more championships.

For Duva, the "mission" never ends, and is never impossible.

BRELAND

"MOST AMATEURS have to be taught the ABC's of professional boxing," Duva said, "but not Meldrick. He already has the style of a pro. I'm amazed at the changeover. We hope to have him in contendership after the first year. In all my 40 years in this business, I've never seen a talent like this turn it on at his age. It's incredible."

Unlike Taylor, Breland did little to enhance his reputation in the pro ranks with a decision that was unpopular with many of the fans in attendance.

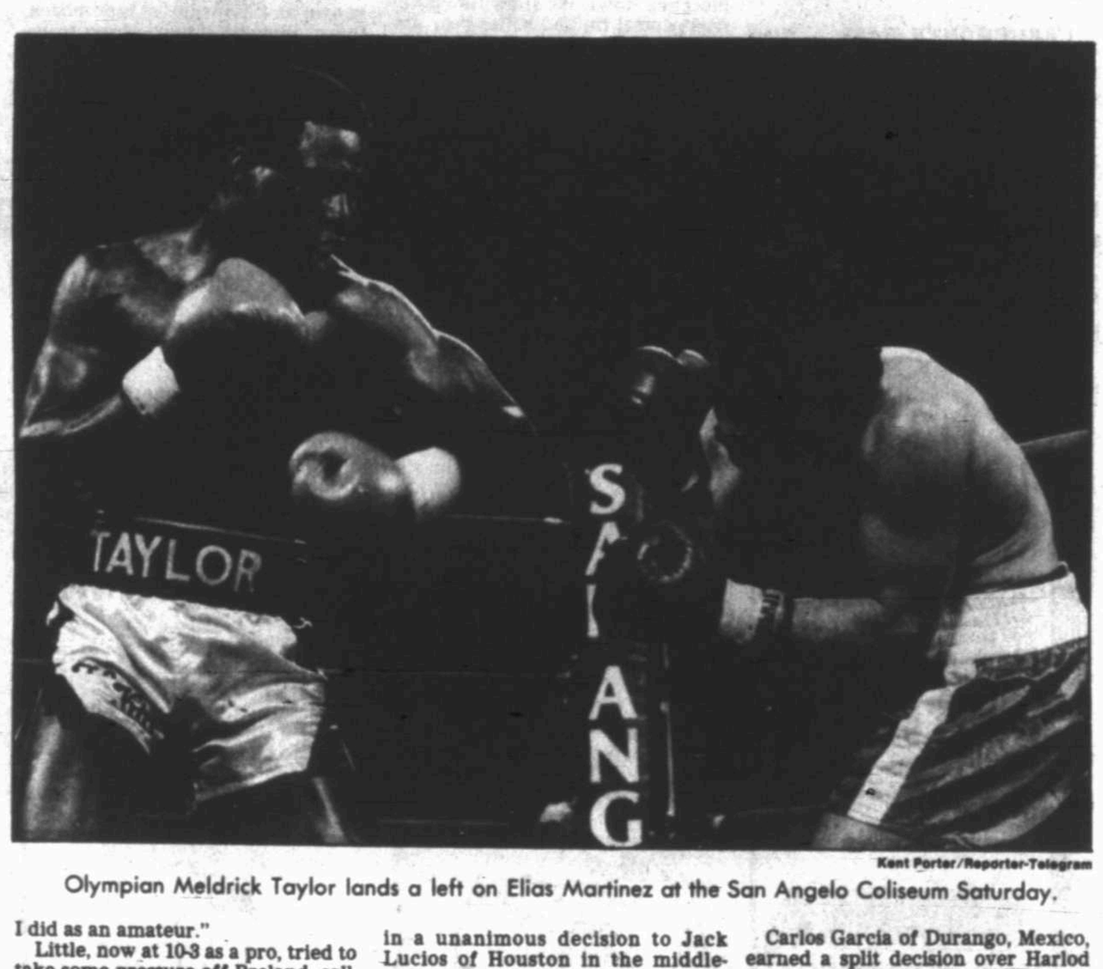
Breland, now 3-0 as a pro, although not as impressive as Taylor, won the bout clearly, taking every round on most cards. But sentiment was with the underdog Little who refused to back down or give in to his heralded opponent and some boo's were heard when the decision was announced.

"I can't worry about the crowd, they weren't in the ring, they don't know how tough (Little) was," Breland said. "They're not in there taking any punches. I am in the process of learning to fight more like a pro than an amateur right now."

It was a victory that has resembled many of Breland's latest triumphs. A shorter, stronger man trying to muscle inside while the tall, lanky Breland attempts to keep his distance and take advantage of a longer reach. Little had success tying up Breland inside, but each time, Little paid dearly for it with jolts from Breland's stinging left. By the end of the six-round bout, Little's nose was bleeding heavily and Breland was in control.

"Mark is still in school right now," Duva said. "I prepare my guys to win, not to go for a knockout. As far as I'm concerned, Mark won the fight and he won it decisively. That's all we care about."

"Three-and-oh, that's no problem with me," Breland said. "Performance-wise, I'm not where I'd like to be. I'm still learning not to slap my punches or move around as much as I did as an amateur."



Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Little, now at 10-3 as a pro, tried to take some pressure off Breland, calling him "a great fighter."

"I don't think anyone should look down on him. Coming out for the sixth round, I was looking for a tired Mark Breland, but I didn't find it. It caught me unexpected. I'm disappointed with the loss, but I came down here and did the job. I proved myself worthy."

IN OTHER bouts on the five-event card, Odessan David Bates fell in a unanimous decision to Jack Lucios of Houston in the middleweight division. Bates' record now stands at 4-3-1, while Lucios upped his mark to 3-1.

It was a wild-swinging affair that saw little real action. Both fighters spent most of the six rounds lunging and grabbing each other, Lucios with his wild "over the top" punches, and Bates trying to move inside. Bates ended the fight with his left eye badly bloodied and ready for stitches.

Carlos Garcia of Durango, Mexico, earned a split decision over Harlod Romero of Santa Fe, N.M., in a junior lightweight bout. It was Garcia's sixth win against no losses. Romero is 2-2-1.

In the opening event, Sam Huston of Hobbs, N.M., scored a second-round KO over Barry Boatwright of Houston in another middleweight fight. Huston's strong right hand dropped Boatwright for the second time in Round 2 to up his record to 5-0-1 with four KO's. Boatwright is 0-4 as a pro.

Baylor sweeps Texas 10-3, 8-6

From Wire Reports

WACO (AP) — Tony Huey slammed two home runs and Steve Jarvie hit a three-run triple as Baylor downed 10th-ranked Texas 10-3 Saturday in the second game securing a sweep of a Southwest Conference doubleheader

In the first game, Don Dumas struck out two batters with the tying run on second in the seventh inning to preserve an 8-6 Baylor victory.

Baylor's record improved to 34-6 overall and 10-2 in the SWC. Texas is now 36-10 and 4-5.

Kenneth Patterson, 4-0, went the distance for the Bears in the nightcap, allowing 10 hits and seven walks but striking out 11 Longhorns. Bruce Ruffin, the first of five Texas pitchers, dropped a notch to 6-1.

In the opener, the Bears were sparked by a four-run third inning off Texas starter Daniel Pena, 6-3, and reliever Kevin Garner.

Blaine Beatty, 9-1, had a 7-0 lead going into the fifth inning but home runs by Bud Ray, Dennis Cook and Davis Wrzesinski closed the gap until Dumas held back the rally.

TCU 5-7, Rice 1-3

FORT WORTH, — Texas Christian's Mike Ramsey went five-for-seven at the plate Saturday to lead the Horned Frogs to a 5-1, 7-3 sweep over Rice.

With the victories, TCU is 26-8 overall and 4-5 in the conference, while Rice fell to 23-13 and 3-8 in the SWC.

In the opener, the Frogs scored five unearned runs in the second inning on five hits and one costly error.

Brian Ohnoutka (5-3) picked up his first conference victory against two losses. Ed Holub (5-3, 0-3) absorbed the loss.

The Owls scored two runs on three doubles off TCU reliever Chris Cauley (4-0, 1-0) in the fourth inning. They added one more in the fifth before Kight Higgins came in to pick up the save.

With the score 5-3, TCU added runs in the seventh and eighth.

Todd Ogden (2-3, 2-2) took the loss.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Ralph Kraus' single in the bottom of the eighth gave Arkansas a 5-4 win over Houston in the first game and the Cougars jumped ahead 7-0 in the top of the third and led Arkansas throughout the nightcap, 10-9.

Runs by Mike Basso and Joe Simms put the Cougars ahead 2-0 after the fifth inning in the opener. Arkansas trailed 4-2 until runs by Mark Jackson and Mike Loggins set up Kraus' game-winning hit.

Tim Dietz, 1-0, got the win after relieving starter Fred Farwell in the seventh. Starter Mike Walker, 8-3, took the loss.

The Cougars' seven-run streak in the second game was capped by a triple by Simms, who knocked in Damon Baldwin and Mark Grimes.

Ed Clark, 5-0, relieved David Kmiecik in the third and took the win. Starter Kevin Campbell, 4-4, was tagged with the loss.

Houston, 30-6 on the year and 6-3 in the conference, is second in the league behind Baylor, 10-2. Arkansas is third with a 26-9 record for the season and 7-4 in the SWC.

Stand pat Astros will need Thon's bat to win

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros have moved in the fences and brought back Dickie Thon at shortstop, but they may have trouble raising the roof of the Astrodome with a pennant chase this season.

While others in the National League's Western Division benefitted from off-season trades, the Astros lineup remains virtually unchanged from last season with the exception of the comeback by Thon, who missed last season after being struck in the head by a pitched ball.

The Astros' biggest move of the off-season involved the Astrodome, where the cavernous playing field was reduced by moving in the fences 10 feet down the left field and right field lines.

The Astros hope the new dimensions will translate into more than last year's 79 team home runs. Astros hitters praised the move and the pitching staff could see little good in it.

Astros General Manager Al Rosen hopes shortening the fences will compensate for the lack of a power-hitting right-hander that has been lacking for so many years.

The Astros have a solid 1-2-3 punch to start off their pitching rotation in Nolan Ryan, Joe Niekro and Bob Knepper. Mike Scott, trying to erase bad memories of a poor 1984 performance, is the fourth pitcher and the No. 5 position is still questionable.

Analysis

Frank DiPino, Bill Dawley and Dave Smith will again have to carry the load from the bullpen. Joe Sambito, an All-Star relief pitcher before elbow surgery in July 1982, struggled in spring training.

MANAGER BOB Lillis will be trying to avoid the slow starts over the past two seasons that have doomed the Astros to starting the season with an uphill struggle.

Thon, who slumped early in spring, rallied toward the end and likely will start at shortstop, returning Craig Reynolds to part-time duty. Enos Cabell returns to first base with Bill Doran at second, Phil Garner at third and Alan Ashby catching.

In the outfield, the Astros' strongest area, Jose Cruz will be in left field and Jerry Mumphrey will return to center field and Puhl will remain in right field. An early spring training experiment of flip-flopping Mumphrey and Puhl was discarded.

The Astros open the season Tuesday night in the Astrodome against the Los Angeles Dodgers with a celebration of the Astrodome's 20th birthday.

The chances are less likely, however, they'll be celebrating a pennant in October.

Rockets chill Maverick's hopes in 2OT, 139-127

Associated Press

DALLAS — John Lucas and Lewis Lloyd each scored 28 points to lead the Houston Rockets to a 139-127 double overtime victory Saturday night in a National Basketball Association game.

The game, which included the ejection of both Mavericks' Coach Dick Motta and forward Mark Aguirre, gave Houston a 3½-game lead over Dallas for second place in the NBA's Midwest Division.

With the score tied at 121-121 early in the second overtime, the Rockets blew open the game with 13 unanswered points for the victory, breaking a two-game losing streak.

Aguirre had been called for his first technical four minutes into the game. Motta was also tossed by Strom after back-to-back technicals in the fourth period.

Pacers 121, 76ers 117

INDIANAPOLIS — Vern Fleming sank two free throws in the final eight seconds as Indiana snapped a 12-game losing streak and upset Philadelphia.

The loss dropped Philadelphia to 56-22 and gave the Boston Celtics the Atlantic Division title.

Bullets 109, Cavs 101

LANDOVER, Md. — Jeff Malone scored 36 points, 15 in the third quarter, as Washington delayed Cleveland's bid to clinch an NBA playoff spot.

Despite having a six-game winning streak snapped, the Cavaliers reduced to two their magic number for clinching the eighth and final playoff berth in the Eastern Conference. The Cavs are in a battle with Atlanta for the final playoff spot in the East

Washington, already in the playoffs with a 38-40 record, sank its first 31 free throws before Cliff Robinson missed with 29 seconds remaining. Cleveland missed 13 of 38 foul shots.

NBA Roundup

Jazz 105, Suns 94

SALT LAKE CITY — Jeff Wilkins and Mark Eaton combined for 17 fourth-quarter points as Utah broke open a tight game and went on to defeat Phoenix.

The Jazz led most of the way but Phoenix, led by Alvan Adams and Charles Jones, came back to tie the score at 73-73 going into the final period.

Utah is now 38-40 in the Midwest Division as the team continues its quest for an improved playoff position.

Nets 108, Bucks 104

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Buck Williams scored 22 points and grabbed 13 rebounds and Micheal Ray Richardson added 22 points as New Jersey snapped the Milwaukee Bucks' eight-game winning streak.

Richardson, who added 12 assists, sparked an eight-point spurt during a span overlapping the third and fourth quarters that boosted the Nets into an 86-79 lead. The play-making guard scored one basket in the run and handed out assists on the other three.

Bulls 117, Hawks 114

ATLANTA — Michael Jordan scored 33 points, including a dunk with 58 seconds left to give Chicago the lead.

Jordan's dunk put the Bulls ahead 114-113. He added a free throw with 35 seconds left when Atlanta's Dominique Wilkins was assessed a technical foul for throwing a ball in the air to protest an official's call.

Wilkins, who had 30 points, hit one of two free throws to bring Atlanta to within 115-114, but Chicago's Dave Corzine iced the game with two free throws with two seconds to go.

The Hawks missed a chance to gain ground on Cleveland, which lost to Washington, for the eighth and final playoff spot in the Eastern Conference. Cleveland leads Atlanta by three games with four contests left in the season.

Fans march on home of Tulane president

Seek to save basketball, but stench of scandal worsens

By ED McHALE

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — More than 100 people marched to Tulane President Eamon Kelly's campus residence Saturday, asking him to reconsider an "unwise and hasty" decision to drop men's basketball because of a team scandal.

Kelly was out of town, but the demonstrators presented his wife with a petition saying his plan to eliminate the sport was an "overreaction."

A New Orleans newspaper, meanwhile, reported Saturday that three Tulane students indicted in a point-shaving scheme may have bet at least $34,000 on the Feb. 20 game against Memphis State, which the Green Wave lost 60-49.

Five others, including three Tulane players, were indicted by a grand jury Thursday on sports bribery and conspiracy charges. A second indictment charged one of the eight, a student, with selling cocaine to team members.

Hours before the indictments were returned, Kelly said he was eliminating basketball from the school's program because Coach Ned Fowler had admitted paying several players, an NCAA violation. Fowler and two assistants have resigned.

The demonstrators, some of whom dribbled basketballs, rallied at the school's quadrangle before marching to Kelly's white-columned home. They carried signs saying, "First Basketball, Next The Law School," "Kill the Cancer — Save the Patient," and "Two, Four, Six, Eight — We Don't Want to Terminate."

The petition said Kelly's plan to drop the sport "is an unwise and hasty overreaction to an unfortunate and distasteful situation."

"This misjudgment will have a far-reaching adverse effect" on the university and its supporters, the petition said. "The total scope and depth of such a decision will also impact the Greater New Orleans community, both socially and economically."

Kelly's wife, Margaret, said she didn't think her husband would change his mind.

"I don't think he made a hasty decision. I think he made a considered decision," she said.

Kelly was in Washington for a scheduled appearance Sunday on the CBS-TV news program, "Face the Nation."

"Kelly is the best president Tulane has ever had. We're not anti-Dr. Kelly. That's not our purpose. We're pro-basketball," said Tony Ruda, president of the Greenbackers, the booster club that organized the demonstration.

Members of the Tulane Booster Club and the Ray Hester Club — a group based on New Orleans' west bank — also participated.

"Everybody identifies with basketball; everybody enjoys it. There's electricity in there," said Chuck Brink, a senior English student from Chicago.

Kelly "wants to eventually knock out athletics altogether to prove this is a good university. But the best way to prove Tulane is a good university is through sports, not celibacy," Brink said.

The Times-Picayune, The States-Item, citing sources close to the investigation, said the huge bet on the Memphis State game was placed at various locations, including Las Vegas, Nev., New Orleans and Birmingham, Ala.

The sources said prosecutors believe the bets were made by or for three indicted students: Gary Krantz, 21, of New Rochelle, N.Y.; Mark Olensky, 21, of Fair Lawn, N.J., and David Rothenberg, 22, of Wilton, Conn.

The $34,000 betting figure also was reported in this week's issue of Sports Illustrated magazine.

The newspaper quoted its unidentified sources as saying prosecutors were trying to learn where the students got the money. They allegedly paid five Tulane basketball players $13,500 to shave points in the Memphis State game. Tulane was a four-point underdog.

The indicted players include star center John "Hot Rod" Williams, guard Bobby Thompson and swingman David Dominique. Two players, Jon Johnson and Clyde Eads, were given immunity in exchange for their grand jury testimony.

Convicted bookmaker Roland Ruiz, 48, and Craig Bourgeois, 23, both of New Orleans, are accused in the indictment of bribing the five players with $2,500 to shave points against Memphis State.

The sources said prosecutors believe they acted independently of the three indicted students, and that neither group knew the other also was paying the players.

A Feb. 2 game against Southern Mississippi and Feb. 16 Virginia Tech also figure in the investigation.

Shaving points involves winning by fewer points or losing by more than the betting line that bookmakers establish on a game.

Presidents' group marshalls forces

By IRVIN MOLOTSKY
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The chairman of a commission of college presidents said that steps had to be taken to "eliminate corruption" in collegiate athletics.

The chairman, Dr. John W. Ryan, president of Indiana University, made the remark during a news conference called to announce the results of a survey of college presidents and chancellors on the integrity and financing of college athletics.

The survey and issuance of the results were scheduled long before the unfolding of the scandal involving the basketball program at Tulane University, but the events in New Orleans added a sense of urgency to the presidents' resolve.

Ryan said that the organization he heads, the National Collegiate Athletic Association Presidents Commission, had voted in Chicago on Wednesday and Thursday to urge changes in regulations governing athletics.

One change would require that financing of athletics be controlled by the institution's president, rather than by the athletic department, and that it be subject to periodic outside audit.

At the press conference and in an interview, Ryan commented on how the situation had advanced to the point where college heads thought they had to reclaim control of their institutions and on how widespread corruption might be.

"We decided to start with a survey because Walter Byers came to us and said he had concluded conversations with athletic directors and coaches he had known for 40 years and was appalled by the concatenation of corruption in athletics," Ryan said, referring to the executive director of the NCAA. "The only way to attack it is by presidential involvement."

Ryan was asked whether the college presidents commission had discussed the assertion made in 1982 by Digger Phelps, the Notre Dame basketball coach, that a number of schools were paying a standard rate of $10,000 a year to outstanding basketball players in violation of intercollegiate rules.

That specific charge was not discussed, Ryan said, but he added: "I am sure that you would get no argument from presidents that it does not go on. We must stamp it out. Auditing is intended to do that."

Ryan added, however, "The slush fund money is not going to show up in the athletic budget or the audit," and that, therefore, some steps had to be taken to prevent improper payments to college athletics by overzealous alumni and boosters.

Ryan noted that other basketball coaches, including Bobby Knight at his own university, had supported Phelps's assertion on the $10,000 payments. Sources in New Orleans said that one of the Tulane players indicted in the point-shaving case has told prosecutors that he had received $10,000 as an inducement to enroll in the school four years ago.

Ryan was asked whether the colleges had lost control and whether the problem was widespread..

"We don't think it is a rampant problem," he said, "but wherever it occurs it is wrong."

Regarding the survey, Ryan said that 60 percent of the 791 college presidents or chancellors had participated.

Of those who responded, he said, 99 percent said they were concerned about the problem of integrity and 96 percent said they were concerned about the degree of institutional control over athletic programs.

Specific problems of integrity that drew concern included inducements made to prospective student athletes (75 percent), rules violations by alumni and boosters (71 percent), athletes' academic performance (62 percent), and violations by coaches (59 percent).

The survey was conducted for the commission by the American Institutes for Research in the Behavioral Sciences, first in questionnaires mailed to the college heads last Dec. 14 and later with follow-up letters and phone calls to those who did not respond within a month.

The margin of error was not stated in the report, but the institutes said that the response rate was "extraordinarily high" and "surely reflects intense concern" by college heads with the issues.

Angels blank Huntsville, 5-0

MESA, Ariz.—Midland's Angels defeated Oakland's Class AA Southern League Huntsville club, 5-0, Saturday to up their Cactus League record to 8-2.

Steve Finch, Spiro Psaltis and T.R. Bryden combined for the eight-hit shutout while centerfielder Greg Key led the attack with three hits and a stolen base. Doug Reibel had two hits in three trips and knocked in a run.

Finch went four innings and gave up two hits, a walk and struck out one. Psaltis gave up four hits and fanned one in a three inning sting while Bryden had two strikeouts and surrendered two hits in two innings.

Shortstop Kevin Davis was presented with the Dick Wantz Memorial Award as most improved and dedicated player in the California Angels minor league this spring.

Midland plays Waterbury in its final exhibition today.

Masters has new look

By BOB GREEN

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Calvin Peete and Curtis Strange lead a cadre of new contenders against the more familiar favorites in the 48th Masters, which opens Thursday.

Jack Nicklaus, Tom Watson and Seve Ballesteros are, of course, among the more popular candidates for the green jacket that goes to the winner of the first of the year's four major tests of golfing greatness.

There are others — defending titleholder Ben Crenshaw and Tom Kite among them — who can influence the outcome of the event that has become golf's annual rite of spring.

Generally speaking, however, the recognized leaders of the game have been less than totally effective, producing little but self-frustration, in the three months of play this season.

Ballesteros, the Spaniard who holds two Masters titles and last season beat Watson in the British Open, did win at New Orleans. But he did little before and nothing since.

Crenshaw has had nothing but troubles since fulfilling his dream of glory in this tournament a year ago. "I went from the absolutely highest emotional level of my life, to the lowest," he said.

Kite, who has finished sixth or better in eight of the past nine Masters, has been nowhere near his usual level of play.

Nicklaus, holder of a record 17 major pro titles, challenged for the title at Doral but hasn't finished higher than 17th since then. And Watson, the five-time British Open champion who tied for 55th in his last start on the PGA Tour, describes his season as "not quite consistent vet."

With those stars unable to get untracked this season, their roles have been filled by Peete and Strange, Mark O'Meara and Lanny Wadkins. Each is a double winner this year, and their performances insist they must be considered when the select field of about 70 pros and seven amateurs tee off in the first round on the flowered, rolling hills of the Augusta National Golf Club.

Yet two of those front-runners have had up-and-down years, too.

O'Meara went into a deep slump after scoring consecutive triumphs in the Crosby and Hawaii tournaments.

Islanders tie Jersey Devils

From Wire Reports

UNIONDALE,N.J.— John Tonelli reached the 100-point mark for the first time in his NHL career Saturday by tipping in Mike Bossy's pass with 28 seconds left in the third period to give the New York Islanders a tie with the New Jersey Devils.

The Islanders, who will meet Washington in the first round of the Stanley Cup playoffs next week, wound up the regular season with a 40-34-6 record, their poorest since the 1973-74 season, the last time they failed to make the playoffs.

NHL

Capitals 7, Penguins 4

PITTSBURGH — Bob Carpenter scored his 52nd goal to cap a four-goal first period as the Washington Capitals beat Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh's Mario Lemieux had one assist for a total of 99 points on the season. Lemieux has one game left in his quest to become the third rookie in NHL history to score 100 points.

Jets 6, Oilers 5

EDMONTON, Alberta — The Winnipeg Jets got goals from six different players to defeat the Edmonton Oilers and clinch second place in the Smythe Division.

Whalers 2, Nordiques 1

HARTFORD, Conn. — Rookie center Ray Ferraro had a goal and an assist as Hartford downed Quebec. Ferraro, who has eight goals and 16 points over his last 11 games, scored his third game-winner at 8:34 of the third period.

Red Wings 2, Black Hawks 2, tie

DETROIT — Ron Duguay scored his 38th goal of the season, with 11 seconds remaining in regulation as Detroit tied Chicago.

Bruins 4, Canadiens 4

MONTREAL — Mike McPhee and Alfie Turcotte scored less than three minutes apart late in the second period, rallying Montreal to a tie with the Boston Bruins, enabling the Canadiens to clinch first place in the Adams Division.

Blues 4, North Stars 3

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. — Dave Barr scored two goals, including the game-winner with 3:48 to play, as the St. Louis Blues came back from a 3-0 deficit to clinch first place in the Norris Division.

Sabres 5, Maple Leafs 2

TORONTO — Gates Orlando and Sean McKenna each had a goal and an assist for Buffalo.

Lindy Ruff, Ric Seiling, and Gilbert Perreault also scored for the Sabres, who complete their schedule at home Sunday night against the division-leading Montreal Canadiens.

Sooners pound Miami in college tournament

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Sophomore righthander Bobby Witt checked No. 1 Miami on three hits and the second-ranked Sooners pounded 13 hits to down the Hurricanes, 7-1, Saturday in the Sooner Shootout college baseball tournament.

Witt, a member of last year's Olympic squad and considered one of the top prospects nationally, struck out 12 Miami batters in a strong rebound from his last outing, an 11-1 loss to arch-rival Oklahoma State. Witt, 4-1, entered the game with a 3.92 earned run average.

Miami starter Bob O'Brien, whose record fell to 8-2 with the loss, held Oklahoma to two hits during the first four innings, while Miami took a 1-0 lead when Rick Richardi doubled and then scored.

But the Sooners tagged O'Brien and two relievers for five runs in the sixth, including a home run by John Toal and RBI hits by Rusty McGinnis, Billy Paul Carver and Kevin Pearson.

Oklahoma also scored two runs in the eighth.

Toal, who entered the game with a .314 average, and Jim Richardson each had three hits for the Sooners.

Oklahoma upped its record to 26-4. Miami fell to 38-8.

Wayne Gretzky solidifies spot as NHL's superstar

Edmonton star again makes farce of scoring race

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

In a season full of surprises, there was one constant in the National Hockey League. Wayne Gretzky.

While teams that were supposed to be contenders flopped, and other clubs soared in the standings when they were expected to nosedive, Gretzky polished his position as a superstar.

For the fifth straight year, Gretzky ran away with the scoring title, surging over 200 points for the third time in his six-year NHL career. He passed the 1,000-point plateau and helped the Stanley Cup champion Edmonton Oilers clinch the Smythe Division title with more than a month remaining in the season.

"It's been a mostly satisfying year," said Gretzky, who figures to pick up his sixth Most Valuable Player award. "We had some problems the last month but we've grown as a team. And we remember how much it took to win last year."

Edmonton's domination of its division was predictable. But the races in the other three divisions provided some shockers.

In the Norris, preseason pick Minnesota fell so far that, were it not for the pitiful state of the Toronto Maple Leafs, the North Stars might not have made the playoffs. After winning the division last season, the North Stars dropped to the bottom third of the league and Bill Mahoney was fired as coach.

NHL Season

In their stead, the St. Louis Blues and Chicago Black Hawks staged a spirited battle for the title. The Blues, who appeared headed for extinction two summers ago before being purchased by Harry Ornest, have made a miraculous recovery. They didn't even take part in the 1983 draft, yet they are a winning team and on the verge of turning a profit this year.

Chicago began its turnaround when Orval Tessier was fired as coach on Feb. 4. General Manager Bob Pulford took over a floundering team that steadily moved up.

The Patrick race figured to involve three teams — Washington and the two New York franchises. The Capitals led the division for much of the year, while the injury-racked Islanders and Rangers played mediocre hockey — or worse.

BUT THE Caps tired down the stretch, with key players such as defensemen Rod Langway and Scott Stevens, forwards Mike Gartner and Bob Carpenter unable to carry the heavy burden every night, and the surprising Philadelphia Flyers caught fire. The hottest team in the league over the final month, the Flyers have reversed a trend that saw them sliding behind opponents who were faster, more versatile and deeper.

The Rangers' flop cost Coach Herb Brooks his job in mid-January. GM Craig Patrick replaced him.

A similar change occurred in Boston, where the Bruins were a .500 team and Coach Gerry Cheevers was canned, with GM Harry Sinden taking his place. The Bruins' work ethic was questioned and goalie Pete Peeters, coming off a starring role in the Canada Cup, faltered.

Montreal, Quebec and Buffalo staged a wild race for first place in the Adams. The Sabres had the NHL's leading goalie in Tom Barrasso, who held that status last season as well. Barrasso was demoted to the minors in the first month of the season, but returned with a vengeance.

THE CANADIENS showed that their fine playoff showing last spring was no fluke. Under the steady guidance of Coach Jacques Lemaire, they began to resemble the stingy, hard-working Canadiens who won the Cup from 1976-79.

And they did it without "The Flower," Guy Lafleur, who retired a month into the season. Lafleur realized he no longer could carry on in the grand style that made him the class of the game in the 1970s.

A fifth coach was fired. Actually, Bill LaForge was the first one dismissed when his Vancouver Canucks broke to a 4-14-2 record.

PENDULUM WALL CLOCK

Put your leisure time to good use by building this decorator wall clock. Ours is made of sugar pine, but even plywood can be used. Just trace the full-size pattern onto wood, saw out with a coping saw and assemble. Then paint or stain. The clock features a battery-powered movement purchased at building centers or clock shops. Adjusting the nut on the pendulum assures accurate time.

Many of the jeweled eggs designed by Margaret Savage, shown at her work desk in the bottom photo, open to display interiors as beautiful and elegant as their exteriors, such as the gem-encrusted ostrich egg in the far left photo. A small cherub is enfolded in an egg shell, left, which was laced with individually set pearls. Many of the eggs she creates are designed to open as flower petals to display Cupids, as shown in the photo below.

Incredible Inedible Eggs

Royalty throughout the Victorian world treasured Carl Faberge's famous jeweled eggs which he fashioned with precious stones.

Margaret Savage of Midland is an artist of jeweled eggs, but rather than creating eggs from precious stones as Faberge did, she creates precious jewels from eggs.

She has been designing egg shells since 1968, and with her imagination, skill and patience, she has created hundreds of keepsakes, many of which she has given as gifts to her family and friends.

Self-taught in her craft, Mrs. Savage began decorating egg shells "strictly by accident," after an acquaintance told her about the craft, she said.

Mrs. Savage has turned ordinary hen eggs into something special, but she also works with more elaborate eggs, such as mockingbird and ostrich eggs. Some of the egg jewel boxes open to reveal tiny ballerinas, some hide miniature Buddhas, some are designed to be graceful flower petals. Many of the shells are hinged to be opened, revealing interiors as lovingly designed as their exteriors.

Some of her egg gems are elaborately painted and glitteringly encrusted, but Mrs. Savage said she "prefers more of the egg showing, and the true color of the egg. I used to cover too much of them." Leaving them more natural "shows the beauty of what you started with a lot better."

Even though the medium with which she works is fragile, the finished jewel boxes are stronger than they look. Each finished egg is coated with several layers of lacquer or other finish, the jeweled design and the interior finish. "They are about as fragile as a piece of porcelain."

Mrs. Savage said popularity of the craft has spawned national egg shows attended by hundreds of exhibitors and "eggers" — people who design and create jeweled eggs.

Jeweled eggs are an expression of their creators' individuality, she said. "Everybody does their eggs differently." At one show, "one lady had a fish bowl made from an ostrich egg, with real water and real goldfish in it — and with a window yet."

INCREDIBLE

The fine craft is challenging for Mrs. Savage, not only because of the intricate work but also because she has been diagnosed as having degeneraton of the macula, a gradual but incurable eye disease.

She described the disorder as "blind spots. I can look at something and I don't see all of it. I miss a lot of things going on and things are distorted."

But her disease hasn't stopped her creativity. Working with strong, thick magnifying lenses, she is able to create beauty from the eggs' simple shape.

"As long as I can, I'm going to stay with my eggs," she said.

With several years and several thousands of dollars tied up in her craft, Mrs. Savage said, "after I spent all this money on all these eggs, I have to do something with them!"

She also teaches egg designing courses in her home. Classes for beginning, intermediate or advanced students meet once a week for about three weeks.

Mrs. Savage's own opinion is that her egg shell boxes are not prize quality, but many people who see her art disagree. One woman compared Mrs. Savage's work favorably to a display of Faberge eggs she saw recently in a Soviet Union museum.

Mrs. Savage was flattered. "I don't think I could get a higher compliment than that."

Guidelines for storing, consuming Easter eggs given

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Agriculture reports that is regularly receives questions about the safety of storing and eating gaily decorated Easter eggs.

The government agency advises it is safe to eat dyed eggs after the Easter egg hunt, but hard-cooked eggs are perishable so they must be handled carefully. Bacteria can enter through pores in the eggshell and multiply rapidly if the eggs are left at room temperature for long periods.

So, immediately after cooking, run cold water over the eggs and refrigerate promptly. Hard-cooked eggs should not be left out of the refrigerator for more than two hours. Contamination by bacteria can be a particular problem for eggs with cracks in the shell.

Hard-cooked eggs can be stored in the refrigerator for one week. Cracked eggs, however, may dry out. For cracked eggs, it may help to remove the shell and cover them with plastic wrap.

To determine whether an egg is hard cooked or raw, try spinning the egg. Cooked eggs will spin easily, raw eggs will not.

MIDLAND PARK M·A·L·L

WEEK FOR Women

Being a Woman in the 80's

Monday, April 8 - Saturday, April 13

It's not always easy to balance family, career, community service and self fulfillment. So to help women meet the increasing demands upon their time, money, energy and sanity, Midland Park Mall and Midland College are sponsoring a week of seminars, demonstrations and panel discussions especially for women.

Monday, 7-8 p.m.
Your Personal Image and Self Esteem, with Marti Vermillion, M.A., Family Counselor. Learn the techniques for improving your self image, taking responsibility for your personal behavior and developing a sense of freedom and personal power.

8-9 p.m.
Self Defense and Physical Fitness, with Lee Yoo Sun, 8th Degree Black Belt, Korean Institute. Through the martial art of Tae Kwan Do, find out how you can increase strength and fitness, lose weight and defend yourself without violence.

Tuesday, 7-8 p.m.
Women and Law, with Carmen Elaine Eiker, Attorney. As women's roles have changed, so have laws. Understand the changes in child support, property, credit, pre-marital agreements and wills for women.

8-9 p.m.
Temporary - The Way to Work - The Way to Live, with Amy Stewart, owner of Olsten Temporary Services and Energy Plus, Inc. Discover the new opportunities for women in the present hi-tech job market and how temporary work could be your avenue for entering or re-entering the work force in today's most promising fields.

Wednesday, 7-8 p.m.
The History of Women's Changing Roles, with Cathy Clayton, M.A., M.L.S., Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission. One of the most significant social transformations in American history has been the change in women's roles. How did we get where we are? Have we really come a long way?

8-9 p.m.
Handling Stress. . .A Survival Skill for the '80's, with Sam Guyton, R.N., M.A. Learn how to identify your stressors, measure stress factors, combat tension and develop balance and harmony in your life. Find out how to eliminate stress or how to put it to effective use.

Thursday, 6-7 p.m.
Fashion is Confidence, with Ruth McCracken, Fashion Consultant. Spring '85 Accessories. Discover new ways to get more mileage out of your fashion dollars.

7-9 p.m.
Your I.R.A., with Gay Price, Administrative Assistant for Bass Enterprises. "A census bureau report shows 87 percent of Americans over 65 are living on less than $10,000 a year. It's obvious that most of us need help in planning our retirement." Get the details on IRA's, one of the best methods of saving for retirement.

Friday, 6-8 p.m.
Fashion is Confidence, with Ruth McCracken, Fashion Consultant. Special 2-hour session covering three topics: Developing a Basic Wardrobe - Lifestyle evaluation, wardrobe planning and effective shopping. The Total Look - Hairstyle and make-up techniques, tips for the career woman. Making the transition from a day look to a striking evening look. Accessorizing with Flair - Using scarves, belts and jewelry to get a great total look. Models will be used to illustrate.

8-9 p.m.
The Juggling Act, with Kay LaBoid. Are you juggling the roles of wife, mother, homemaker, career woman, civic worker and student? Learn an innovative approach that will help you strike that delicate balance between perfection and organized chaos.

Saturday, 7:30 a.m.
Spring Benefit Run for the Midland Rape Crisis Center. Join us for a 10-kilometer or 2-mile run. Race forms and information available at co-sponsor, Foot Locker, or Mall Office.

Noon - 1 p.m.
Accessorizing Your Home, with Ruth McCracken, Fashion Consultant. Discover exciting, innovative and inexpensive ways to bring new life to your home's interior.

1 - 1:30 p.m.
Book Review. Mary Lou Cassidy discusses the book: Life Is What Happens When You're Planning Other Things, by Teresa Bloomingdale.

1:30 - 2:30 p.m.
Panel Discussion: The Changing Roles of Women in the '80's. How to balance career, family, community service and still get personal fulfillment.

2:30 - 3:30 p.m.
Great Wardrobe Looks for Women on the Go, with Ruth McCracken, Fashion Consultant. Local media celebrities model the latest styles for professional women.

3:30 - 4:30 p.m.
The Total Look, with Ruth McCracken. Hairstyle and make-up techniques, tips for the career woman (repeat).

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

The Great Hall of the Midland Woman's Club was the setting recently for a Spring Extravaganza, which featured beautiful fashions, charming Easter decor and delicious food. Approximately 200 club members and guests enjoyed a luncheon and style show by jw Charde of Big Spring.

Shop owner Joyce Wash was on hand to oversee the presentation, which featured a lovely collection of exciting new spring and summer styles, superb fabrics and vibrant colors. All well suited to the Midland lifestyle, there were cool crisp dresses and suits, soft knit separates, colorful sportswear and smashing after five fashions.

Local models, Allis (Mrs. W. Earl) Chapman, Virginia (Mrs. Billie) Gilbert, Angie (Mrs. Carroll) Grafa, Dorothy Perkins and Polly (Mrs. Bill) Tharp, were joined by several women from Big Spring in presenting the show. Rose Thomas of Big Spring was the commentator, and Carol (Mrs. Gray) Hall provided background piano music.

Tables were decorated with pastel colored crepe paper streamers and Easter rabbits pulling carts filled with Easter eggs.

Among those enjoying the afternoon's events club president Lydia (Mrs. J.P.) Wilkinson, Louise (Mrs. E.H.) Barron, Mrs. Kathy Peters, Wilma (Mrs. Yale) Key, Kay (Mrs. Steve) Holder, Mrs. Artie Fry, Sara (Mrs. Norman) Fry, Judy (Mrs. Bill) Jackson, Ann (Mrs. Jess) Lindsey, Annie Fay (Mrs. Ernest) Neill and Mrs. Dollye Ballenger. Ways and Means chairman Hazel (Mrs. W.W.) Smith was in charge of arrangements.

HOME ON SPRING BREAK, Patsy Elaine Hinchey was guest of honor at a dinner party recently in the home of Donna and John Yuronka. The daughter of Mrs. Patsy Hinchey, she will graduate in June from Miss Porter's School in Farmington, Conn.

Prior to her visit home, Patsy Elaine enjoyed a school-sponsored trip to Italy.

AN ENGAGEMENT PARTY last weekend at the Racquet Club honored Kate Sloan and Mike Cherryhomes, who are planning a May 11 wedding.

Hosting were Kate's parents, Mary Ann and Tom Sloan, and her brother, Tom Sloan Jr., and his wife, Laura Ann.

Guests enjoyed a cocktail buffet in a setting featuring Kate's wedding colors of red and white.

Special guests were Mike's parents, Donna and Terry Cherryhomes, and the bride-elect's grandparents, Adrian and Hamilton McRae and Tany (Mrs. T.N.) Sloan.

MIDLAND HIGH graduating senior Mab Fitz-Gerald was honored recently at a "Sundae Party" in Midland Country Club's Garden Room.

Co-hostesses for the fun affair were Lou (Mrs. Jim) Butler, Mrs. Patsy Hinchey and daughter, Patsy Elaine, and Donna (Mrs. John) Yuronka and daughter, Sarah.

Mab is the daughter of Carolyn and Jim Fitz-Gerald.

TWENTY-THREE LOCAL GIRLS enjoyed a recent trip to Dallas under the auspices of Ballet Midland. Staying at the Hyatt Regency Hotel, the young ballerinas had a fast-paced weekend, which was highlighted by a Dallas Ballet performance of "La Sylphide" at the Majestic Theater, and a master class at the Dallas Ballet Academy with Vivi Flindt, chairman of the faculty, teaching. They also took a docented tour of the new Dallas Museum of Art, with lunch in its Gallery Buffet, and enjoyed a view of Big D at night while dining in the Lookout Room of Reunion Tower.

The group was accompanied by Ballet Midland director Anthony Ferro and his wife, Susan Clark, who is a guest teacher/artist with the ballet; Susan's mother, Jo Ann (Mrs. George) Clark; Mrs. Susan Huff, Susie (Mrs. Charles) Seltzer, Cathy (Mrs. James) Leonard and Mary (Mrs. Tom) Sharrick.

WHEN THE MIDLAND Junior Woman's Club was organized 16 years ago as a federated study club for young women of the community, several fund-raising projects were tried before the members came up with the idea of a Parade of Homes. The suggestion caught on, and the first Parade, offering private homes for public viewing, was held in December of 1969. Members were happy to replace snow cone sales at softball games, paper drives and bake sales, with a larger, once-a-year project.

As a charter member of the club, I can remember the trepidation with which we approached the new project, but how well it was received by the public. Looking back, we can see how the Parade has brought enjoyment to countless numbers of residents while benefiting the community, with proceeds earmarked for many worthy organiztions.

This year the club will present its 16th annual Parade of Homes on April 21 between the hours of 1:30 and 5:30 p.m. Four very beautiful homes, offering a variety of moods, decorating schemes and architectural designs, will be featured. The homeowners are Mrs. Lola Graham, who resides in Melody Acres; Paula and Jim Henry and Lee and Will Tally, whose homes are located in Saddle Club North, and Ann and Jim Walton in Trinity Estates.

Recipients of ticket proceeds will be the Palmer Drug Abuse Program and the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

Over the years the club has enjoyed much growth and success, and today it is one of the most visible organizations in the community.

The organization has participated in many service projects and has worked to bring outstanding public speakers to Midland on topics dealing with current interests and issues. Since 1978, the club has sponsored Story Hour at the Midland County Public Library each Tuesday morning during the school year.

The club's organizational meeting was held in February of 1969 at the home of the late Mrs. Stella Walker. Jean (Mrs. Wes) Pittman was elected the first president, an the carter membership consisted of 45 concerned and active young women, between the ages of 21 and 40. Today the memership stands at 65.

Cheri (Mrs. Bill J.) Hill is the current president. The 1985 Parade of Homes chairmen are Nicole (Mrs. Dave) Willcox, Jennie (Mrs. Tom) McIlvain and Melissa (Mrs. Mike) Henthorn.

Manic-depression causes dramatic mood swings for many

Associated Press

We all have emotional ups and downs, but for the 4 million Americans who suffer from manic-depression, these mood swings veer from frenzied excitement and Napoleonic ambition to lethargy and feelings of utter worthlessness.

Author Virginia Woolf, King George III of England, and President Teddy Roosevelt were among the artistic and historical figures known to have been afflicted. Their lives may have been dramatic, but their personalities had bleak, potentially lethal sides: about one in seven manic depressives commit suicide.

An article in the April issue of Cosmopolitan magazine explains that mood swings of manic-depressives differ in severity and duration from normal everyday ups and downs. Joy or misery prompted, say, by a career triumph or setback, normally last a few hours or days. But life for a manic-depressive can be like a blindfolded ride through a steep mountain range. Remissions and relapses may be spontaneous, with dips into depression and climbs to manic peaks lasting months, even years.

Just as depression ranges from ordinary "blues" to the depths of melancholia, mania extends from mild exhilaration, or "hypomania," to psychosis requiring hospitalization.

Survey: Dress codes liked

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP) — Despite the restrictions involved, most workers whose companies have dress codes are solidly behind the policy, a recent survey shows.

Current dress codes should be kept as they are, according to 74 percent of the employees who took part in the survey conducted by Padgett-Thompson, a business seminar company.

Eighteen percent of those employees surveyed felt their companies' dress codes should be more demanding.

Only 7 percent of those surveyed said dress codes should be less restrictive, while 1 percent said the dress code should be abolished at their company.

RECOGNIZING A GOOD THING

Are you able to recognize quality in furniture? If so, you could make an investment that could turn out to be tomorrow's antique. The appearance and durability of upholstery fabric is related to its fiber content, weave and finish. A closely woven fabric will generally wear the longest. Patterns and medium or dark colors will show the least soil. Look for fabrics that have been treated to resist soil. When shopping for sofas and chairs, be certain that cushions are properly sized and shaped to fit snugly and evenly. Unzip the cushion cover. If it has a sturdy cotton ticking and feels substantial, it is more likely to be of good quality. Better furniture is built with coil springs that add comfort and durability. The higher the number of coil rows, the better the piece usually is.

Look to WINDOW DECOR for help in selecting sherical furniture, window and wall coverings. We can come to your home or office to work with your ideas and put them into a design for living. You'll find us located at 30 West Industrial Loop or give us a call at 685-0875. Installation service available. Hours: 8am-4:30pm Mon. thru Fri. and by appointment.

Lone Star Brass will perform at Planned Parenthood fundraiser

Lone Star Brass and Midland's historic Hill House will be the star attractions at a concert to benefit Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin, scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Hill House, located south of Midland.

Tickets are $30 a person and must be purchased in advance. For invitations call the Planned Parenthood office, 563-2530.

Lone Star Brass Quintet is composed of members of the Midland-Odessa Symphony who teach at area schools or provide private lessons through the school systems.

They received a grant from the Atlantic Richfield Foundation in 1981.

Members are Thomas Fairlie, trumpet; Michael J. Santorelli, trumpet; John R. Chapman, horn; Robb Belcher, trombone; and Pat Crumpley, tuba.

Hill House, the setting for the gathering, was built in 1902 by "Doc" Cowden.

A few years ago it was moved south of Midland by Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Viney, who, along with Lee and Bill Hurd, the home's current residents, have undertaken Hill House's restoration, keeping it as historically accurate as possible.

A wine reception will follow the concert. The benefit is open to the public, paid advance reservations, but seating is limited.

PPPB is a non-profit agency serving 17 counties of West Texas. Clinics are in Midland, Odessa, Big Spring, Fort Stockton, Monahans, Seminole, Pecos and Lamesa.

Most services are provided on a sliding-scale according to income, and no one is turned away because of inability to pay. PPPB is in its 20th year of operation.

Gift guidelines given for presents to pope

Associated Press

Pope John Paul II turns 65 May 18, and many of the world's 747 million Roman Catholics are wondering what to get for the Holy Father. If uou want to give something, according to an article in the April issue of Connoisseur magazine, here are some points to keep in mind:

— Keep it white. If it's a book — the pope reads widely — you will have to have it bound in white leather.

— Emblazon all gifts with the papal crest. A copy of the tiara and the keys of Saint Peter may be obtained from the Holy See mission to the United Nations.

— Be original. The pope loves to ski and kayak, but he already is overstocked with parkas lined in albino mink, blessed bindings, and papal paddles.

However, even if you follow these rules, there is no guarantee your gift will find its way to the pontiff.

Perishables go straight to the apostolic pantry. Other gifts go to a secret clearinghoue: the little-known "magazzino privato" ("private storehouse"), on the ground floor of the Apostolic Palace.

Lifestyle policies

The policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons within Midland. Pictures must be obtained in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Photos should be black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Quality reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Cats pose risk to pregnant women

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've often heard of warnings that pregnant women should not handle cats because they may get a disease from the cats that could harm the baby. But there must be millions of women who have cats, and yet very few ever get the disease. Is it possible that cats are not as dangerous for pregnant women to handle as we have been led to believe? — Mrs. J.L., Canton, Ohio.

Dear Mrs. L.: Cats pose a risk for congenital toxoplasmosis. Therefore, pregnant women should keep cats out of the kitchen and should not change the kitty litter boxes. However, there are also other causes of congenital toxoplasmosis and, according to Dr. Michael G. Gravett, of the University of Washington School of Medicine in Seattle, the main source is infected meat. Pregnant women who use pork or mutton, in particular, should make certain to cook the meats properly or to freeze them for an adequate length of time.

Of course, women who own many cats or who are veterinarians are at increased risk, and it may be a good idea for those women to be screened.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Some children seem to have one illness after another, while other children never seem to be sick. I could understand this if children who did not have a proper diet or who lived in unsanitary conditions were the ones who got sick, but even some children who get all the proper care seem to be affected in this way. If this is true, how do you account for it? — Mrs. S.Z., Eugene, Oregon.

Dear Mrs. Z.: As you note in your letter, some children do seem to have more than their share of illness. To some extent, this may be due to an increased vulnerability to illness because of hereditary factors. In addition, some children may be subject to emotional stresses and strains that predispose them to illness. It is also possible that a child who contracts one illness may have his or her defenses weakened so that they become more susceptible to additional illnesses.

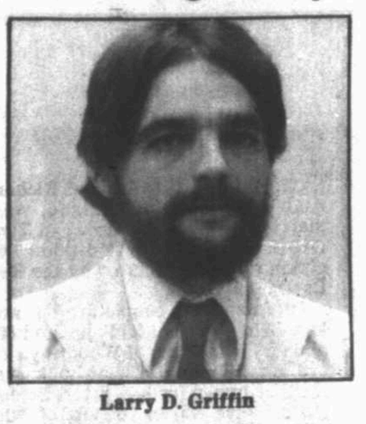
Dear Dr. Solomon: I find your column extremely informative and I am particularly interested in how certain diseases seem to affect different populations. For example, you have written about how stomach cancer or heart disease affects some groups more than it does other groups, and often this can be traced to the foods they eat. Are there any groups that are particularly prone to diabetes? — Lester, San Francisco, Ca.

Dear Lester: The Scandinavian region is believed to have the highest incidence of juvenile-onset diabetes in the world. In addition, Dr. George F. Cahill Jr., of Harvard Medical School in Boston, notes that the incidence of the disease increased very markedly in Lebanon between 1940 and 1975. This suggests that the environment plays a role in its development.

For Mr. C.Z., Springfield, Ill.: Peptic ulcers occur twice as frequently in men as they do in women. They also occur more often in patients with type O blood.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Griffin to address group



Larry D. Griffin

Larry D. Griffin, instructor of English, tehnical writing and poetry writing at Midland College, will be guest speaker at the 7 p.m. Thursday meeting of the American Association of University Women World Affairs Group. The group will meet at RepublicBank First National Midland.

His topic will be "The Wrath of the Classical and Christian Epic Hero."

Griffin earned a bachelors degree in English from Northeastern State University in Oklahoma, a masters degree in English from the University of Oklahoma, and is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Oklahoma.

He is co-sponsor of the MC Creative Writing Club and co-coordinator of the MC Creative Writing Contest.

A former associate editor of Territory of Oklahoma: Literature and the Arts, a publication of individual artists of Oklahoma, he owns and operates his own Red Rampan Press in Midland.

Griffin is the published author of non-fiction, fiction and poetry in several magazines, newspapers and journals. He has more than 30 poems in print, and his two chapbooks are "New Fires" and "The Blue Water Tower." The third, "Airspace," is at the publisher.

A regular participant at readings throughout the midwestern United States, Griffin will read at a Midland Centennial Poetry Reading on April 18 at MC with colleague Greg Glazner. Griffin will also be featured reader April 21 at the Maple Leaf in New Orleans, La.

Hosting the social hour will be Jane Hynd and Mrs. Raymond Monkress.

ABWA meeting scheduled

Petroplex Chapter, American Business Women's Association, will have its annual Business Associate Event at 7 p.m Monday at the Midland Hilton. The event is designed to honor business associates and employers of ABWA members and to provide an opportunity to learn about other fields, industries and positions.

Guest speaker Terry Smith, manager for Lindsey and Newsom Insurance Adjusters, will talk on assertiveness. Smith, a Midland resident for 29 years, has been an active member of Toastmasters for 17 years. Mistress of ceremonies will be Mary Beth Hughes, teacher at Lee High School.

ABWA has more than 105,000 members nationally. Awarding scholarships is one of its key programs — Petroplex Chapter gives two scholarships annually. Members may apply for grants or interest-free loans to further their educations. For more information about ABWA call 694-4633 or 685-9700.

Sometimes hospitals may be hazardous to your health

Associated Press

Hospitals can be hazardous to your health and each year 2 million Americans get sick in the hospital instead of getting well.

The incidence of hospital-acquired infections has been on the rise since the early 1950s, according to an article in the May issue of Science Digest, and one estimate holds that they cause 50,000 deaths a year. That would make them the sixth highest cause of death in the country.

As many as 5 percent of American patients get infections during their hospital stay, according to a study directed by Robert Haley at the Centers for Disease Control.

"Most hospitals have tried to control infections, but the majority of their programs haven't worked," said Haley, who now is an epidemiologist at Southwestern Medical School in Dallas.

"They spend thousands of dollars culturing the walls of hospital rooms to identify germs. But this is useless because the germs on the walls — mostly staph — don't cause the main problem."

The danger comes from "intrusive medicine" — equipment such as catheters that enter the body, and new treatments, such as cancer chemotherapy, that temporarily weaken the immune system.

Most infections occurred in the urinary tracts of patients with catheters.

Replacing doctor difficult

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — A lot of people fire their doctors.

And when they do, says writer Joan Klein in American Health magazine, they may feel the way President Truman felt when he fired General MacArthur.

"I just fired God," Truman said.

A recently retired government official, less in awe of physicians, tells how "I changed my doctor about five years ago. I went to him for a physical. It was a factory!

"I went from technician to technician, and each time I'd wait, sitting on cold porcelain on my bare end, while the doctor was going from one cubicle to another seeing four or five people at one time. I felt I was being treated like a hunk of meat.

"So when he finally got to me, I said, 'I think I'm going to switch doctors, because everything is for your convenience, not mine.' He said he had a big patient load. I said, 'Why can't you control it?' He said, 'I get calls. I can't really say no.' I said, 'If you don't say no, then you leave me sitting on my cold behind on your enamel furniture.' "

Probably too many people stay with their doctors, however, because they're afraid or don't know how to switch.

"I want to change doctors," a young professional woman said. "But I'm almost afraid she'll find me and want to know why I've changed. I feel guilty and embarrassed about it. I don't know why."

The "whys" are several. Among them, according to Dr. Eugene Robin at Stanford University:

— The idea that you have the right and ability to judge your doctor has not yet completely permeated the doctor-patient relationship. "I think people do have guilt feelings, particularly if they see the doctor as a highly trained, superior person. How can you be disloyal to that kind of person?"

— "People get comfortable" with even a far from perfect relationship, and may feel, "Better your own devil than some other devil."

— When you're well, changing doctors may be easier. But "when you're sick, you often feel insecure and unable to make decisions. It's usually then that you consult doctors. It's not an easy time to change." But it is always your right.

"I tell patients it's fine, it's all right, you don't have to prove your doctor has done you wrong, you don't have to give a reason to change doctors," Dr. Harry Kuykendall, a Virginia family physician says.

"That's part of what we value in our medical care system. You can see anyone you want and don't owe anyone an explanation."

Anniversary celebrated

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin McBee of Midland celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary March 31 at their home with a reaffirmation of their wedding vows, followed by an open house. The couple was attended at the ceremony by their children, Marvin D. McBee of Midland and Mary Brand of Tomball, and by Mrs. McBee's sister Mary Chenault of Canyon, who was in their wedding party 60 years ago. The reaffirmation ceremony was conducted by Don Mitchell. Hosts at the gathering were Marvin and Dorothy McBee of Midland, Bill and Mary Brand of Tomball, Ron and Sherry Brookshire and Randy and Diana Reynolds of Midland, and Ted and Teresa Lake of Houston, children and grandchildren of the couple, and their spouses.

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin McBee

McBee and the former Emma Lee Boyce were married April 4, 1925 at Leila Lake. In addition to their two children and three grandchildren, they have five great-grandchildren. They are members of Westside Church of Christ.

DENTAL HEALTH UPDATE
Philip O. Warlick D.D.S.
TOO OLD FOR GOOD TEETH?
QUESTION: Now that I'm well into middle-age my teeth are beginning to show the toll of the years. Am I too old to have good looking teeth?
ANSWER: If you think you're too old for good-looking teeth, take another look at the many television and movie actors who've achieved their first half-century and still have beautiful looking teeth. It's not unusual for some teeth to become chipped and damaged over a period of time. Other teeth may become crooked because the gaps from missing teeth haven't been filled. This not only affects the shape of your mouth but the shape of your face. It can also add wrinkle lines and sags to the skin that are really not necessary at all, not with good dental treatment.

Public art reaches 'an unprecedented all-time high'

Associated Press

Recently, a large outdoor sculpture installed in the plaza of the Jacob Javits Federal Building in downtown New York made headlines when some protested its presence.

They raised such an outcry that a special hearing was convened to consider removing the work, although it had originally been installed only after a lengthy review.

The debate should not come as a surprise since art has often outraged public sensibilities. One authority says this debate and others like it cannot, however, disguise the fact that the use of art in public buildings is "at an unprecedented all-time high" in the United States.

Elena Canavier, executive director of the Public Art Trust, a Washington-based nonprofit organization, told an audience at the Parsons School of Design in New York recently that "percent for art" programs are partly responsible for the inclusion of art in buildings all over the country. Such programs mandate that a certain percentage of a building's cost — usually from a ½ to 1½ percent — be used to purchase art for the building.

A number of private developers, corporations, banks, artists and local groups are also involved in placing art outside where it can be seen by the public.

"We are getting calls from all over the country from towns seeking information on how to set up a public art program," she said.

The reason for the increase is, first of all, that "in every city around the country there is public support for art in public buildings. People can see what their tax money has bought." Private developers feel art is generally conducive to good public relations.

homes parade

The home of Mrs. Lola Graham is featured in the third of a four-part series about the Midland Junior Woman's Club's 16th Annual Parade of Homes benefit for the Palmer Drug Abuse Program and the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women. The Parade will be presented from 1:30-5:30 p.m. on April 21. Tickets are $7.50 and are available from club members or by calling 697-1814 or 684-9641. Children younger than 12 years of age will not be admitted and tickets will not be sold at the door.

THE GRAHAM HOME

Mrs. Lola Graham's home at 4501 Robin Lane was built in 1959 but two years ago she had it remodeled. The house is a traditional style, but it is graced with a country flair.

Mrs. Graham has decorated her home with treasures found in her domestic and international travels. Countries represented include Belgium, Norway, the British Isles, Switzerland and China. A sheepskin rug from New Zealand is in the master bathroom. "I have a daughter-in-law who is a native of New Zealand," Mrs. Graham said.

After her adventure on an African safari in 1981, Mrs. Graham returned home with a reed basket from the Okavanga Delta area in Botswana, a carved ivory elephant tusk and a "baboon club" used by safari guides.

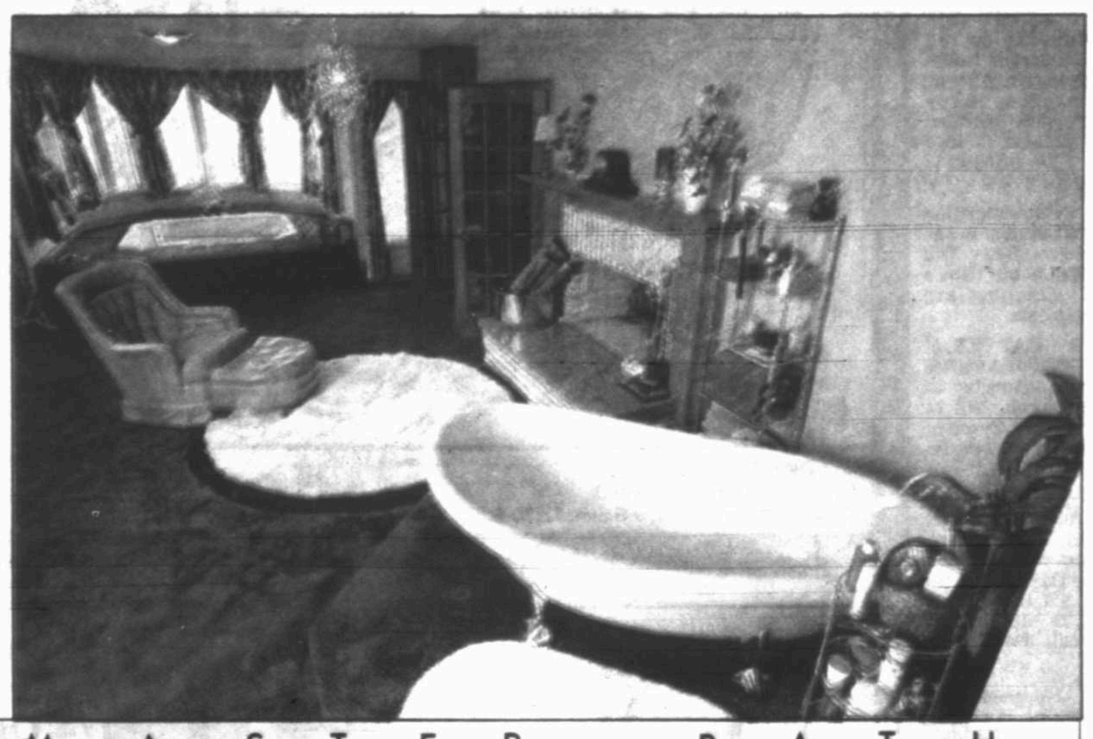
The home has several fireplaces which give a warm, inviting touch. Above the dining room fireplace is an antique cherrywood mantel from Tennessee which Mrs. Graham purchased in 1982. After encountering difficulty with shipping companies, she said she borrowed a pickup, returned to Tennessee and brought the mantel to Midland herself. A fireplace in the living room and a double-opening fireplace between the master bedroom and master bath are topped by mantels designed to Mrs. Graham's specifications.

Three of Mrs. Graham's four children — and five Graham grandchildren — live in Midland. "That's why I have a grandchildren's bedroom off my bedroom and a children's playroom," she said.

The 6000-square-foot home's architect was Jimmy Leath. Architect of the remodeling was James E. White and Associates of Lubbock was the architect of the remodeling project. The home was decorated by Russell L. Freeman and Associates and Sally Seymore of Concord House, Lubbock.

DINING ROOM

The fireplace in the Graham dining room is topped with an antique cherrywood mantel, circa 1800, which Mrs. Graham purchased in Nashville, Tenn., and moved to Midland herself.



MASTER BATH

The elaborate master bath in the Graham home features a sheepskin rug from New Zealand, a spa and a double-opening fireplace which is shared with the master bedroom.

LIVING ROOM

The Graham living room has a home-like atmosphere, with its fireplace and comfortable chairs. The chairs to the left of the fireplace are swivel rockers.

BEDROOM

Mrs. Graham's master bedroom is graced by a four-post bed. A grandchildren's bedroom to the side of the room was designed to accommodate her grandchildren on their visits.

Concern blooming over proper use of lawn pesticides

WAUCONDA, Ill. (AP) — The people who keep your lawn thick and green, and collect more than $2 billion a year doing it, are fighting more than crabgrass this spring. They also face a groundswell of concern over how they use pesticides.

From Eugene, Ore., to Dairyland, Wis., and Montgomery County, Md., communities are proposing ordinances based on the assumption that lawn care can be hazardous to your health.

They are watching this town of 5,700 people 40 miles northwest of Chicago, where a year-old law forbids companies like ChemLawn and Lawn Doctor to spray pesticides unless they post signs warning people to keep pets and children off the grass for 72 hours. The lawn care industry is challenging the ordinance in court, contending local governments have no right to regulate it.

A federal judge has promised a decision by June 21.

The lawn care industry, less than two decades old, says the concern about pesticides is unwarranted. ChemLawn and Lawn Doctor, the nation's two largest lawn care firms, assert the diluted mixtures applied to lawns are less toxic than aspirin, caffeine or cola drinks.

BUT DR. SAMUEL EPSTEIN, author of the book, "The Politics of Cancer," says the industry would not be fighting local ordinances so strongly if the chemicals were as safe as they say.

The companies argue that it would be too costly to comply with a host of local ordinances that might make varied demands about signs and how to word them and where to put them. In addition, the companies say, some places would ban chemicals, some would permit them.

The suit against Wauconda contends such ordinances are an illegal intrusion, harmful to business, and a violation of the commerce clause of the U.S. Constitution.

"It's really a question of whether or not local governments have the right to regulate an industry that's more than adequately covered by state laws and regulations," said David Dietz, director of the Pesticide Public Policy Foundation, a lobbying group that filed the Wauconda suit last year.

Proponents of the ordinance say they just want to know where chemicals are sprayed so they can avoid those areas.

Lawn companies usually treat customers' grass with fertilizers, weed killers and insecticides four to six times a year. Cmmonly used chemicals include dicamba, 2,4-D and mecoprop, all undeniably toxic in concentrated form and all approved for use by the federal Environmental Protection Agency. State laws require professional applicators to be trained to use them.

ALL THIS MAY BAFFLE homeowners who are readying lawn spreaders or contacting lawn care companies to treat their yards. They can buy the same pesticides and herbicides the big companies use in their local hardware stores and gardening centers. Why the hubbub?

There is "indiscriminate and promiscuous use of a wide range of toxic material," said Epstein, professor of occupational and environmental medicine at the University of Illinois Medical Center.

Laboratory research indicates that the chemicals in question can cause cancer and birth defects in test animals, but no studies have examined the effects on humans when the chemicals are diluted and applied to lawns.

Nevertheless, he said, "In the deadly battle against the fierce dandelion, is it worth spreading around these toxic chemicals?"

June Larson spearheaded passage of the Wauconda ordinance after her daughter, Kathleen, developed severe allergies to pesticides years ago. Recently, she said, she was angered by the sloppy work of a lawn care worker. "He turned on the hose before he got to the lawn," she said. "The wind was blowing and the stuff was flying everywhere except the lawn where it was supposed to go."

SUCH INCIDENTS occur "in an extremely small percentage of cases," said Dr. Edward Calabrese, a professor of toxicology at the University of Massachusetts.

"I think the ordinance, generally speaking, is an overreaction by the general public stemming from an exaggeration of the perceived risks," he said. Because of the disagreement among scientists, "those people who feel the toxicologists who are warning of the danger are correct have a right to get out of the way," said Mary O'Brien, spokeswoman for the Northwest Coalition for Alternatives to Pesticides, in Eugene, Ore.

The lawn care industry is less than two decades old, but already boasts annual sales of $2 billion. Last year ChemLawn, a 16-year-old firm based in Columbus, Ohio, had $290 million in sales and Lawn Doctor, based in Mattawan, N.J., reported $30 million.

"One of the things we do is urge people to alter their expectations of what is attractive," Ms. O'Brien said. "Clover and even dandelions in some cases may not be unattractive."

AT WIT'S END

Some trends becoming obsolete

By ERMA BOMBECK

This week marks the 20th year this column has been in existence.

During that time marriage has gone out and come back in again. Technology has invaded our homes, cars and lives. Women have staged a major revolution. "The Wizard of Oz" has been shown 27 times. I still have the same cookie sheet.

Thumbing through two decades of columns, I cannot help but note the demise of trends that were a part of our lives but are no more. Somewhere along the line they became obsolete and we got tired of kicking them into the next year like a piece of heavy luggage at the airport.

In May, 1970, one of the last girdle factories in America shut down and no one cared. It was to give new meaning to the phrase of the '70s, "Let it all hang out."

The last mother-in-law joke was reported in 1969. "You know what mixed emotion is. It's watching your mother-in-law go over a cliff in your new Cadillac." (And not a moment too soon, I might add.)

A 200-year-tradition ended in 1974, when women refused to dance backward anymore. As one woman said, "If God had meant for us to dance backward, he would never have invented the open-toed shoe."

In 1974, three-fourths of all the children in the country sent Mother's Day cards to Sara Lee. Within days, an announcement was made that kitchens had become obsolete and would never be the same again. Mothers had to decide whether to eat out or have a child prop their mouths open with a fork and yell into it, "Three malteds and three Whammyburgers to go!"

Available men began to disappear in 1983. At one time the ratio of eligible mates to single women was 282,000 to one. And he didn't even know his sign.

Within the last several years, grandmothers have joined the endangered species who may not be able to feed themselves by the time they are given grandchildren to hold.

What does 1985 hold? This just came over my desk. A woman set up her ironing board and was about to plug in the iron when a visiting 5-year-old said, "When you turn that thing on could you turn it down low so I can still hear the cartoons?"

Add ironing to the list of things facing extinction. And try to control your grief.

Security field booming business

By ADELE SCHEELE

Company theft is on the increase. Because of this, protecting corporations has become a big business. It now ranks third among the nation's industries, just behind government and hospital workers. And, I imagine, it must be growing as I write this, directly proportional to the insidious crime rate.

If you are in the market for a career or a career change, and fall well within the wide range of little formal education to a lot, you might want to investigate the security field.

According to the Department of Labor's statistics, there are, in this country, about 1/6 more security guards than police officers, by 607,000 to 512,000. And the number of security guards is likely to increase significantly. That increase enriches an entire industry — entry level at minimum hourly wage, guards earning around $300 and more a week, directors of security in small companies earning about $26,000; $32,000 in medium-sized companies, and $42,000 or more in large companies.

Some security companies offer training programs and most require that managers train by first being guards themselves. Corporate security officers, similarly, train as guards also. One leading company, Guardsmark, prides itself on training its guards before each new assignment, providing them with tapes and books to help them deal with any situation, and then promoting from within. It has a strict policy for hiring prospective employees, conducting extensive background checks and psychological testing to screen candidates.

Besides the job of being a guard and managing guards comes the whole security business. That could include the start-up of a small security business that is specifically geared to any one industry — and every industry faces the crime of theft. The security business includes manufacturing and selling guard uniforms and paraphernalia. Increasingly, more communication devices are being developed, marketed and sold — monitors, beepers. Just watch any James Bond movie for gadget ideas.

Special Children's League auxiliary organized

Special Children's League, auxiliary to the Developmental Disabilities Center, is being formed to help with fund raising for the DDC. Prospective members met at a coffee in the home of Lorraine Bynum.

The DDC, organized to help developmentally disabled children achieve their full potential, began its services in January, 1984 under the direction of Kay Bynum. Enrollment has grown from three to 14, and a waiting list has been established. Funding is through tuition, grants and donations.

For more information about DDC call 697-3502.

Devine to be guest speaker for ladies association

DEAR ABBY

Boss feels trapped in affair

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a married man, 43 years old. I have a good wife and an 11-year-old son who mean the world to me.

My problem started four years ago when an attractive divorced woman (she's now 36) came to work for me. I own a prosperous business. I'm not without blame, but she did tempt me, and we had an affair. I told her from the beginning that I had no intentions of leaving my wife, but she thought she could win me over. She insists that she loves me, and things are now in a terrible state.

She gets jealous if I smile at another woman, and my customers are starting to notice, as well as the employees. I bought her a car to keep her quiet and I give her money on the side. I finally suggested she find another job. She refuses to leave.

I'm sorry I got involved with her, but it's too late now. I can't fire her or she'll tell my wife everything. I can't go on this way. Am I trapped? I don't want to hurt my family. Please help me. — NO WAY OUT

DEAR NO WAY: Tell your wife that you HAD an affair with this woman, but it's over. Ask her (beg her, if necessary) to forgive you, and promise to be the world's best husband if she will give you the chance.

Then tell your ladyfriend that you've confessed everything to your wife. This will render her powerless to blackmail you. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: I was not a virgin when I married. I fell in love more than once, but I never was promiscuous.

Luckily, I had the advice of a realistic and loving mother, and thus avoided VD and pregnancies. It was simple.

To every boyfriend who wanted to have sex with me I would say, "Either you use protection, or no go!" It's always worked.

The media, and you, too, Abby, preach daily the awful consequences of VD and unplanned pregnancies, but you say very little about prevention. If you print this, I'm sure you will get thousands of indignant letters, but you might save a million girls a lot of grief and shame for life. — SMUG IN VICTORIA, B.C.

DEAR SMUG: I'll risk it. I can preach self-control from now until my typewriter falls apart, but there will always be people who will continue to do what comes naturally and take their chances, so to them I say, "Take precautions. We don't need any more VD or unplanned pregnancies."

DEAR ABBY: I am a 23-year-old male student nurse. Recently I met representatives from several hospitals and learned that my chances for employment are excellent — but my chances for the jobs of my choice range from poor to non-existent. Why? Because I am a man.

Some hospitals will not hire a male R.N. for general medical-surgical duty because male nurses are not allowed to perform routine care of female patients without a female nurse present. Obviously this is not cost-effective if two nurses must be in the room while only one is necessary.

On an obstetrics-gynecology service, the male R.N. is simply not allowed in most hospitals because "intimate care" is required. At least that's how it was explained to me.

Abby, female nurses take care of male patients (even on urological services), and no chaperones are required.

Is this discrimination practiced all over the country? Or is New England behind the times? I would also be interested in knowing how your female readers feel about having a male R.N. care for them in the hospital. — M.B.E.

DEAR M.B.E.: Discrimination against male nurses is news to me, and I have no way of knowing how widespread it is until I hear from readers.

I personally feel the sex of a nurse is unimportant as long as that nurse is competent. Readers?

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about drugs, sex and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, also available in Spanish, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Tina Sanders

Sanders to be in pageant

Tina Sanders, 17, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Steve Sanders of Midland, will compete in the West Texas Miss T.E.E.N. pageant Saturday at Midland College Fine Arts Ausidorium. The pageant is the official city-wide preliminary for the Texas Miss T.E.E.N. pageant to be in September in Dallas.

Contestants must be 14-18 years of age, must have maintained a "B" average in school and must participate in the pageant's volunteer service program, contributing at least 12 hours of time to some worthwhile charity or civic work.

Winner's prizes will include a $750 cash scholarship and an expense-paid trip to compete in the Texas Miss T.E.E.N. state pageant.

The contest is not a beauty pageant, no points are given for beauty and there is no swimsuit competition. Contestants will be judged on scholastic achievement, volunteer service, appearance, poise, personality, speech or talent and formal presentation.

Miss Sanders is sponsored by C.A. Gray Plumbing and Air Conditioning.

GAME RULES

1) The Midland Reporter-Telegram A.M. 1510 KMND Trivia game is based on skill in answering 10 Trivia questions each week. There will be 14 weekly Trivia Games beginning Monday March 18th and ending Saturday June 22nd, 1985. A total of $2,800.00 will be awarded to first place winners over the 14 weeks. Additionally, 2nd and 3rd prizes will be awarded weekly.

2) Questions for each weekly Trivia Game will be broadcast over AM 1510 KMND at least 4 times per day on the half-hour Monday through Friday, between the hours of 6:00 AM and 6:00 PM. Each question will be read at least two times during the week. The entire set of ten (10) questions each week will have been broadcast over AM 1510 KMND Radio by 6:00 PM Thursday.

3) Questions for each week's game will be numbered from 1 (one) to 10 (ten). The answer to each numbered question must be PRINTED or TYPED on the correspondingly numbered answer line in the official Midland Reporter-Telegram AM 1510 KMND Radio Trivia Game entry form for that week. Each weeks official entry form will be published Monday, Tuesday and Thursday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Hand drawn facsimilies of the entire official entry form also will be acceptable, but machine duplicated copies are prohibited.

4) Contestants may submit multiple entry forms each week. However, each entry form must be mailed postage paid to the designated address in a separate envelope with the number of the weekly game marked in the lower left hand corner of the envelope on the address side. Envelopes must be postmarked by midnight Friday of each week, and be received at the contest address by 2:00 PM of the following Tuesday to be eligible for the weekly drawing.

5) The $200.00 first prize will be awarded to the entrant with all 10 questions answered correctly each week. In the case of more than one entry with all 10 answers correct, a drawing will be held. 2nd and 3rd prizes will be awarded to the next 2 entrants with the most correct answers respectively. Again, in the case of more than one entry form with all 10 correct answers, drawings will be held to determine the 2nd and 3rd prize winners. In the case of no entrants with all 10 correct answers, the prizes will be awarded to those with the most correct answers respectively.

6) Correct answers to each weeks Trivia Game Questions will be broadcast twice on AM 1510 KMND Radio Saturday morning between 6:00 AM and Noon. Trivia Game questions and answers will also be published in the Midland Reporter-Telegram each Sunday. Weekly winners will be announced by both AM 1510 KMND Radio and the Midland Reporter-Telegram each Wednesday.

7) It is not necessary to purchase the Midland Reporter-Telegram to play the Trivia Game. Copies of the MRT are available for free examination at the Midland Reporter-Telegram 201 East Illinois and the Midland County Public Library.

8) All winners must sign a release form acknowledging that both the Midland Reporter-Telegram and AM 1510 KMND shall have the right to publish, publicize, and broadcast his/her name, picture, voice and the fact that he/she won the cash or prize. If a winner is a minor, a parent or guardian must sign a minor's release form prior to the prize being awarded. Winners are responsible for all taxes incurred on prize.

9) NO POSTAGE MACHINE CANCELLED ENVELOPES WILL BE ACCEPTED. Only entries bearing the correct postage and cancelled by the U.S. Postal service or entries hand delivered to the contest address by 6 a.m. Saturday will be accepted.

10) Judges decisions will be final in any interpretation of the rules of his game. Employees of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Backcor broadcasting and members of their immediate families are ineligible.

11) The Grand prize, a 4 night cruise on the Mississippi River on the Delta Queen or Mississippi Queen departing and returning to New orleans including round trip air travel to New Orleans. The winner will be chosen in a drawing at the conclusion of the 14 week trivia game. All weekly 1st, 2nd and 3rd prize winners will be entered in the grand prize drawing.

See tomorrow's MRT for week #4's official entry form and listen to KMND, AM1510 tomorrow morning for questions.

Repainting walls may increase infant blood poisonings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Proud parents who spruce up the home by refinishing and repainting after the birth of a child may be increasing their baby's chances of lead poisoning, according to a group of Boston researchers.

The research team, which ran periodic blood checks on some 249 infants over a two-year period, said children whose parents refinished or repainted interior rooms after the child was born had a 69 percent higher lead level in their blood on average.

The difference is important because lead poisoning has been shown in numerous studies to impair the mental development of children.

The conclusion was based on research by a team headed by Michael Rabinowitz of the Mental Retardation Center at Boston's Children's Hospital, along with researchers from the hospital's department of neurology and Harvard University's school of medicine.

The research was based on blood tests of 249 infants at ages 1, 6, 18 and 24 months.

Suntan lotion, camera, caution useful in Jamaica

By JOSEPH B. TREASTER
New York Times News Service

KINGSTON — Street protests in Jamaica earlier this year, with roadblocks and bonfires, raised the question of whether the Caribbean island is a safe place for a vacation. The answer, with perhaps the kind of mild qualifications that a New Yorker might offer a friend visiting the city, is "yes" — a visitor who exercises reasonable caution is not likely to have trouble.

There are parts of Jamaica that are remarkably beautiful, and other parts that can be harsh and sometimes frightening.

The country's hot spot is its sprawling, slum-ridden capital of Kingston, a city heavily frequented by international businessmen but usually given a wide berth by tourists. Bitter poverty, crime and gang warfare are endemic. If there is trouble in Jamaica it usually starts in Kingston. Often it goes no farther. Outside the capital the atmosphere is rural and small-town. There is generally less crime and, with a few exceptions, political protests are less strident.

A hundred miles away from Kingston, across a rugged mountain range, there is a world of long creamy beaches, resort hotels, tennis courts, golf courses and sunburned tourists, the lush north coast with such well-known vacation towns as Negril, Montego Bay, Ocho Rios and Port Antonio.

MONTEGO BAY AND Negril are the livelier towns, Ocho Rios a bit subdued and Port Antonio quiet and expensive. There are a few hotels sprinkled between the main towns along the winding north coast highway and there are hundreds of houses and apartments for rent by the week and month. Both Montego Bay and Negril have an assortment of moderately priced hotels and sidewalks dotted with souvenir stands and food carts. The handful of elegant, expensive resorts in Montego Bay sit off by themselves on big pieces of property, self-contained in almost every way and with wealthier and more sedate guests.

The heart of Montego Bay's tourist section is a boulevard lined with hotels and restaurants that follows the undulating coastline toward a small business district with a palm-shaded square bounded by banks, clothing stores and restaurants with Victorian and Georgian facades. Late into the night couples and groups stroll the boulevard. Taxi drivers gather in front of some of the hotels, sometimes calling out offers of rides. Most nights there is a truck selling pizza near the Casa Montego Hotel and at least once a week, in season, the hotel holds a nighttime beach party and barbecue on its beach with loud calypso and reggae music that spills along the waterfront. Sometimes purse snatchers mingle with the boulevard strollers. But, mostly, the boulevard is pleasant and peaceful. Generally, the level of crime in the main resort towns seems to be no higher than other popular tourist spots around the world.

TOURISTS WHO STAY at hotels without beaches often gather at Doctor's Cave Beach, which is fenced in with lockers, showers, a sandwich counter and bar and security guards.

In Negril, which is much smaller, the beach is for strolling. It is also something of a tropical midway, with vendors offering fresh fruit, orange juice, meat pies, banana bread, suntan lotion, T-shirts, straw hats and, only slightly more discreetly, marijuana and cocaine. Some tourists enjoy the colorful scene and often gather their breakfasts and lunches on the beach, picking a drink from one seller, a piece of fruit from another. Some Jamaican street vendors press their goods — straw hats, T-shirts and the like — relentlessly and some tourists say they find this extremely annoying. But others just shrug them off.

There are a few small, rough bars in Montego Bay that would immediately be recognized anywhere in the world as places tourists ought to avoid. But there are also plenty of other bars and discos designed specifically with tourists in mind and often frequented by local people.

Perhaps because it counts its tourists in the hundreds rather than thousands, Port Antonio seems to have very little beyond its hotels that is especially designed for foreign visitors. The barbecue pits and fruit stands seem to be of and for the people. But visitors are politely welcomed. The best hotels in Port Antonio are a few miles outside of town so a car is handy, although some find taxis are convenient and less expensive.

IN THE PROTESTS earlier this year, in mid-January, against sharp increases in fuel prices, Kingston was paralyzed for two days by hastily thrown up roadblocks of derelict cars and burning tires and debris. People could not get across town. It was difficult to get to the international airport and many flights were canceled. About a half-dozen people were killed in the protests, all in Kingston except for one in a farming community west of the capital. There were no reports of any tourists being harmed.

The roadblocks went up across the island also, including on the main road along the north coast. But on the north coast, those manning the roadblocks were less determined. The roads were blocked for only parts of the two days and tourists were apparently given special treatment.

At the resort hotels along the coast, some managers suggested that guests not venture out during the protests. Other managers said nothing about what was going on outside the visitors' compounds and some guests said it was days before they realized there had been a demonstration.

A FEW FLIGHTS into the international airport at Montego Bay were canceled and some were delayed. But hotel managers said they were able to get arriving and departing passengers through the roadblocks on the airport road by talking with the protesters and sometimes paying a small "tip." One cruise ship captain said he was told that the start of the protests in Ocho Rios was postponed until his ship and its several hundred tourists had completed their visit of about half a day and gone on their way. In any event, no one on the ship reported seeing any sign of a protest.

Jamaica's tourist business suffered mightily. Many government officials said that news reports gave the impression that all of Jamaica was in flames. Actually, many news accounts specifically pointed out that Kingston, again, had been the trouble spot and that disruptions in the tourist areas were few. Altogether, many Jamaicans said they believed the demonstrations had received far too much international attention. By their standards, the protests were nothing to get excited about. They had experienced years of violence and disorder during the 1970s, and in the election year of 1980 alone about 800 people were killed in politically related violence.

Two weeks after the demonstrations, government officials said hundreds of hotel reservations had been canceled. Prime Minister Edward Seaga said all the corporate meetings scheduled for hotels in Jamaica had been canceled and the island was losing about $1 million a day in anticipated income from tourists.

TOURISM HAD BEEN in decline in Jamaica for most of the 1970s. But since Seaga took office in 1980 the violence had tapered off and tourists had been returning to Jamaica in great numbers. In 1984, the island had a record of about 850,000 visitors and was expecting a million in 1985.

To try to overcome the damage the demonstrations had done, government officials and many hotel owners flew to the United States, their main market, and took travel agents to dinners and cocktail parties. They showed slides of the island and argued that it was still a great vacation place. Some guests, encouraged by hotel managements, wrote letters saying that they had had a wonderful time in Jamaica despite the protests, and wondered what all the shouting was about. Many tourists in Montego Bay said the same in interviews a few days after the demonstrations.

In one interview, a New York couple said they had spent a week at a hotel on the beach at Negril immediately after the demonstrations and saw "no sign whatsoever of anything political."

Another couple arrived in Montego Bay from Ocho Rios on the day former Prime Minister Michael Manley was holding a rally with thousands of participants in the heart of Montego Bay, a few miles from the beaches. They said they were only aware of the rally because others had told them about it.

IN THE DAYS following the demonstrations, many tourists on the north coast said they had considered canceling their vacations. Some said they kept to their plans only because cancellation would have been costly. But relaxing on the beaches or in restaurants and bars, all of those interviewed said they were glad they had not been frightened away.

"There's no reason not to come here," an Ohio man said one evening at a beach party in Montego Bay. "My wife and I rented a motorcycle and rode all the way to Ocho Rios and back one day. People waved to us along the way and we stopped in a little roadside place for a drink. The people went out of their way to be nice to us."

One New York woman who worked in Jamaica in the late 1970s and early 1980s recently spent two weeks in a three-bedroom house about 20 miles west of Montego Bay with her small child and her parents.

"I had the best vacation of my life," she said. "I had a terrific time."

But the vacation had not been entirely trouble-free. She found some foods in short supply and was warned that there had been robberies on the main road at night and that she should not drive alone. One night she tried it, she said, and a motorcyclist tried to force her off the road.

IN MANY OF THE resort hotels, everything from food to entertainment to sports is provided in one location and many tourists make only a few trips outside to have a look at the downtown stores and markets or to try a different restaurant. Renting a house, as the New York woman did, is a far more independent kind of experience and security can be more questionable.

Even though the woman remained enthusiastic about Jamaica after her vacation, she said, "My impression is that if you're not in Montego Bay or one of those resorts, I don't think I'd recommend going there."

Caverns discovered century ago now tourist attraction

HELLERTOWN, Pa. (AP) — They call it the Lost River because they know where it comes from and they don't know where it goes.

What they do know is that it formed a series of caverns under which it now still flows.

These caverns, discovered in 1883, are a present-day tourist attraction, the Lost River Caverns. The Gilman family has operated the caverns as a commercial enterprise since 1930.

Visitors, about 10,000 of them a year according to Bob Gilman, grandson of the founder, enter the cave through its original opening. There was no natural opening. This one was man-made.

When the cave was discovered in 1883, it was part of a limestone quarry. Limestone was being removed for a local iron company. Purely by accident, quarrymen found the cave when they were blasting. Up until that time, no man had seen the inside.

Since it was part of a rock quarry, the cave and the limestone hill protecting it would have been removed piece by piece. It would not have taken long for man and his machines to chip away at the cave formations that took thousands of years for nature to build.

But the iron company went out of business soon after discovery of the cave. Then commercial use of the site began. The main cavern was used as a dance hall around 1888. It was also used by geology students who climbed down to study the various mineral deposits and formations.

Today visitors see the stalactites, stalagmites, helectites, flow stone, and drip stone in forms limited only by their imaginations. Some people see animals in the mineral deposits.

Oscar the Giant sea turtle is the first formation pointed out on the tour. He rests on the floor of the chapel, which used to be the dance hall. Occasionally weddings and baptisms are held in this underground chapel.

An open Bible and a likeness of Christ are other formations found in the chapel.

Along the route, visitors are introduced to a group of cave parakeets and their nest above. Hungry visitors easily see an ear of corn, a fried egg and a strip of bacon.

As the half-hour tour progresses, guides talk of the history of the cave, how it was formed by the underground river and what types of geological formations are found here.

Up above, near the entrance to the building, is a small museum featuring antique firearms and rocks.

Future of tourism in Mexico shaky

Copley News Service

A recent wave of crime in Mexico against U.S. citizens — including the widely publicized kidnaping and slaying of a U.S. narcotics agent — may prove costly to that country's tourism industry, which is second only to petroleum in bringing in needed dollars.

Although travel and tourist organizations in the United States and Mexico say the number of Americans traveling to Mexico has not diminished, and in some cases has even increased, there are signs that point to the contrary.

Antonio Enriquez Savignac, head of Mexico's Tourism Ministry, said last week there had been a 15 percent decrease in American tourists arriving in Mexico by road during January and February. He blamed the drop on the car-by-car checks recently conducted at the border by U.S. authorities and "exaggerated" reports of alleged insecurity on Mexican highways.

Some American air travelers were also staying away. Although Aeromexico reported no drop in American patronage on its flights from Tijuana and Los Angeles to Mexico, Mexicana de Aviacion said there had been a drop in bookings for the same routes.

About 4 million U.S. citizens visited Mexico in 1984, said Vincent Hodges, director of tourism for North America. He said 45 percent of those did it by road.

Tourism in Baja California, and specifically Tijuana, was significantly hurt by the searches, conducted in a desperate effort to find Enrique Camarena, the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent kidnaped in Guadalajara and beaten to death by suspected Mexican drug traffickers.

Oscar Garcia Vila, manager of Tijuana's Tourism and Convention Bureau, said:

"The Camarena case was the straw that broke the camel's back. It affected tourism in a big way. We have experienced a considerable drop in business because of it and this is a big concern to us because it comes at a time when we're renovating our efforts to bring more tourism to Tijuana."

However, other Mexican tourism officials and spokesmen for several travel agencies in both countries disagree with Garcia.

Said Jose Luis Rendon, head of Baja California's state tourism office:

"All these reports about crime in Mexico and the Camarena case have been somewhat damaging, but at the moment there has been no noticeable drop in the number of tourists that visit us. The reason is that most of the people that come to Baja California are repeat visitors who know us and are aware that those reports are exaggerated.

"I'll bet anything the crime rate in California is much higher than in Baja California. Compared to Los Angeles, Baja California is Disneyland," he said.

Gary Brankle, vice president and general manager of the Los Angeles-based Mexico Travel Advisors, one of the largest wholesale travel agencies in the United States, said the agency had seen no drop in bookings to Mexico.

Brankle said most U.S. residents who travel to Mexico are aware of crime in that country, "but they are not being scared away by what they read or hear."

"The current state of affairs in the world — muggings, terrorism — is not just particular to Mexico," Brankle said. "There are muggings and killings in Los Angeles, in Hawaii. Many of those who travel regularly to Mexico say they feel safer in Mexico than in their own hometowns."

The Sheraton Hotel chain with hotels in most of Mexico's resort cities, is experiencing almost no drop in business, said spokesman Marge Abrams.

"There have been a few cancellations, but the number is insignificant really," Abrams said from her Chicago office. "I don't think people are letting the news of some violence bother them."

The chain reported 100 percent occupancy for 12 straight nights in February at the Cancun hotel.

Fisherman troll into western dude ranches

Associated Press

A man can take his wife along on a fishing trip without making her rough it by making reservations at a dude ranch in trout country.

It's called dude fishing, according to an article in the April issue of Sports Afield that sums up the field after inspecting some western ranches.

Dude fishing not only offers accommodations and facilities for a nonfishing wife, it also offers better and more varied fishing than the sportsman could get on his own, ranging from guided fishing on a private spring creek to solitary prospecting of an alpine lake.

Accommodations vary from rustic to luxurious. Some offer basics — a pleasant room, shared bath, restaurant, bar, fishing and horseback riding and possibly packtrips to a tent camp.

At the other end of the spectrum, there are dude fishing ranches with individual cabins, swimming pool, sauna, game room and nearby rodeos and tourist attractions.

At some dude fishing establishments, the food is simple and hearty. At others, guests dine in high style.

"Our chef doesn't have a budget," said Vern Bressler, manager of the Crescent H, a dude ranch dedicated to fishing. "We don't want to inhibit him. People remember the food long after they forget the fish, and we want our guests to remember us for a long time."

Another dude ranch offered both a horsemanship course and a fishing school, which could be the means of converting a nonfishing wife into a fishing companion.

Sometimes it is the wife who enjoys fishing.

Not all dude ranches offer good fishing, and accommodations, rates and facilities vary.

Rates varied in the ranches inspected from $329 to $850 per person per week.

Guadalajara safe for prudent

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

GUADALAJARA, Mexico — When I announced my impending trip to Guadalajara, the reactions were predictible.

— My mother cried.

— My mother-in-law cried.

— My wife phoned our life insurance agent.

— An old friend in Beirut called with advice and recommended a flak jacket.

Such is the response of people when they learn you are planning a trip to Guadalajara, a city much in the news lately as the center of the Mexican drug trade.

It has not been a happy time recently for Guadalajara, nor for the rest of Mexico. Tourism, an industry which stands behind only petrochemicals as the largest earner of foreign currency for Mexico, has been dealt a heavy blow by news reports spotlighting the troubling drug trade, the murders, and the robberies plaguing many of Mexico's cities. And none has been more affected than Guadalajara, Mexico's second largest city.

THE RECENT murder of American drug enforcement agent Enrique Camarena Salazar, along with the disappearance of six other Americans since December, have helped paint an increasingly grim picture of Guadalajara.

According to the respected American travel publication "Travel Weekly," in 1984 there were 18,000 crimes — ranging from purse snatchings to murder — committed upon Americans visiting Mexico. Although Mexican officials claim only 51 major crimes (i.e. rape, murder and physical assaults) have claimed American tourists as victims since 1980, there is an increasing sense of unease among many who are considering a trip south of the border.

That concern is shared by the State Department, which has issued a travel advisory about driving on certain roads in Mexico, and has seriously considered issuing an advisory about traveling to Guadalajara. Such advisories can have a devastating affect upon tourism.

"WE ARE NOT recommending against travel to Mexico — nor to Guadalajara — at this time," said Georgia Rogers, deputy director of the Citizens Emergency Center of the U.S. Department of State, the section responsible for the safety of Americans abroad. "But we are watching the situation closely and want assurances from local authorities that they will take appropriate action to guarantee the safety of American citizens."

And that, according to Vince Hodgins, director general of the Mexican Ministry of Tourism for the United States and Canada, is precisely what the government has done.

"Even one case of violence against an American is enough to cause a panic," he said recently. "So, we have instituted a number of programs to assist Americans while they are in Mexico." The programs include:

— The formation of a new tourism police force to help visitors in trouble.

— A strengthening of the "Green Angels," a highway patrol which repairs tourists' automobiles.

— The formation of a special cabinet-level commission to assure quick action when any tourist is harmed or threatened.

— The creation of a 24-hour hotline (905-250-0151) tourists can call for assistance.

AND SO IT was — with Hodgins' assurances and Rogers' warnings — that I flew last week to Guadalajara. Was it still the gentle city of roses I remembered so fondly from previous visits, or was it now a city where drug czars casually machine-gunned innocent tourists as they ate tamales in a sidewalk cafe?

Happily, at least for this tourist, not much has changed in Guadalajara. It has grown some (to about 3.6 million citizens) in the past couple of years, but the traffic is still reasonable, the air still relatively clean, and the climate still about the best in the world.

I traveled extensively about the city, usually alone and often at night, and not once did I feel threatened. Not once did someone sidle up to me and offer to sell me cocaine or marijuana or heroin. Not once did I see a kidnapping, a murder, or even a panhandler. For this tourist the stay in guadalajara was delightful, as peaceful as any I've had recently. Only the nagging doubts in the back of my mind marred the stay — doubts now alleviated.

A LOT OF Americans — at least 27,000 at last count — live in Guadalajara, making it one of the largest expatriate communities of Americans in the world. And they, too, apparently feel safe here.

"In any large city you have problems of general security," said Frank Bolex, president of the Guadalajara American Society. "But if you behave yourself and don't take unnecessary risks, you should be all right."

Taking no unnecessary risks (other than drinking the water), I found Bolex to be correct.

I did the usual touristy things:

I visited the massive Liberty Market where a cornucopia of goods — sombreros, cowboys hats, shoes, boots, silver belt buckles, watermelons, fresh fish, cabrito — is displayed over more than four square blocks of two-tiered buildings. It is reputed to be the largest market in the world; it is certainly one of the most entertaining — and a good place to get a genuine bargain.

I WALKED around the Hospicio Cabanas, the old orphanage, and admired the 23 courtyards tucked away inside. Mexican muralist Jose Clemente Orozco's finest work, "Man of Fire" is here, as are examples of the master's work which appear elsewhere in the world.

I took pictures of the huge Mexican flag fluttering in the plaza fronting the massive Cathedral, and visited the old (begun in 1561) church, which is now undergoing a major refurbishing.

I walked up the marble steps of the Governor's Palace to see more of Orozco's work, particularly his portrayal of Miguel Hidalgo, the leader of Mexico's first fight for freedom.

I entered the gothic splendor of the small Templo Expiatorio, where rose-colored sunbursts glittered through stained-glass windows.

I strolled along the small streets of nearby Tlaquepaque, where some of Mexico's finest artisans, including the sensational (and expensive) Sergio Bustamante, ply their trade.

I also went to a bullfight (alas, the bull lost), listened to a half dozen mariachi bands (the mariachis originated in Guadalajara), ate tons of refried beans and drank even more good Mexican beer, and bribed a cop (thank goodness some things never change in Mexico) who had given me a traffic ticket.

BUT MOSTLY, I talked with people — Mexicans and Americans alike — about Guadalajara. Their conclusion was unanimous: Guadalajara is safe, beautiful (especially with the lavender-shaded jacarandas in bloom), the perfect location for a big city holiday.

After a few days in Guadalajara, I must agree. Anyone can, of course, get into trouble in this or any other city if he is careless. If you flaunt your money, or if you try to buy illegal drugs, or if you visit the slums, or if you leave your valuables in your hotel room, or if you proposition a hooker, or if you try to proselytize religion (four of the missing Americans are Jehovah's Witnesses who did just that), you may be in for trouble.

But if you use common sense, you will be as safe in Guadalajara as most any place in the world. If you are still concerned about a trip there, you can borrow my flack jacket.

IF YOU GO:

Getting There: Several airlines, including American, Western, Mexicana and Aero Mexico, serve the Guadalajara airport.

Where To Stay: Guadalajara is blessed with a number of first rate hotels, including the Hyatt Regency, Fiesta Americana, Sheraton, Camino Real, and El Tapatio. Figure on spending between $40 to $70 a night for a deluxe room.

Norway among tour locations

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Here are some upcoming tours and cruises:

Lillehammer, Norway, will host a "Norwegian Roots" festival between June 28 and July 7, designed to acquaint Norwegian-Americans with their heritage. Festivities will include folkloric music, dancing, handicrafts, exhibits and visits to local homes. Individual and group travelers may include the festival in packages arranged by Passage Tours, 1022 Nicollet Mall, Minneapolis, Minn. 55403, phone (800) 328-7110. A nine-day "Fiord Ballad" tour departs from New York June 21, June 28 and July 5. Land costs start at $568. A 15-day Scandinavian itinerary starts at $998 plus airfare. Included are deluxe or first-class hotel accommodations, breakfast daily, most dinners, escort and motor-coach transportation.

A "London Season" tour, with attendance at the opening days of both the Royal Ascot and Wimbledon, is offered by Country Homes & Castles, 615 S. Flower St., Suite 1115, Los Angeles 90017, phone (213) 629-4861. Participants will watch the races from a private box and tennis from the famed Centre Court. They'll ride the luxurious Orient Express from Victoria Station to Canterbury while being served lunch and tea, stay in some of England's finest country houses, dine with the Earl and Countess Spencer and meet other peers of the realm. The land cost is 2,670 (about $2,884). Other offerings are "England and the Chelsea Flower Show" and "Scotland and the Edinburgh Festival."

A musical festival at sea is planned for the Alaska cruise, June 2 to 13, aboard Cunard-NAC's Sagafjord. Passengers on the cruise from Vancouver to Anchorage, "Route of the Glaciers," will be joined by Martin Bernheimer, Los Angeles Times music critic and Pulitzer Prize winner; pianists Michel Block and Jerome Lowenthal; cellist Yehuda Hanani; violinist Ruggiero Ricci; soprano Elinor Ross, and members of the Sitka Festival Ensemble. Included in the program will be seminars, lectures and concert programs, and a special concert in Sitka. Prices range from $9,120 for a luxury suite to $2,210 for an inside cabin, per person double occupancy, plus an add-on of $150 (from Los Angeles) for air fare. Travel agents have details.

Club Universe has several escorted tours to Canada. Nine-day trips to Ontario and Quebec, including air fare from Los Angeles, are priced from $1,079 to $1,205. An eight-day vacation in the Canadian Rockies, from Calgary to Victoria, costs $1,187 to $1,304 from Los Angeles.

Skip Coyner of Santa Fe Minerals helped design record-setting program.

Drilling program improves Bradford Ranch economics

Saves $500,000, sets field records

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

PETROLEUM TECHNOLOGY

Balancing static drilling costs against diminishing productivity has long been a problem in field development. In the face of unforgiving economics, some fields have actually been halted short of full development, and had to wait sometimes years for a new economic ballgame.

That was an apparent problem in the development of the Bradford Ranch (Atoka) field of Midland County, as operators encountered prohibitive costs in extension wells near the reservoir boundries.

Santa Fe Minerals Inc., however, one of the developers of the field appears to have designed a drilling program, that will make continued development of the field economically feasible.

Not only did the drilling plan utilized by Santa Fe reduce completed well cost by 25 percent, but two drilling records for fewest rotating hours and fewest bits used in the field.

"Extension wells near the reservoir boundries were yielding lower per well ultimate recoveries, while current oil prices were increasing payout time and causing investment risk to sky-rocket," said V.M. "Skip" Coyner, drilling superintendent for Santa Fe Minerals. "Therefore a change was needed to enhance the economics of further development drilling."

The change that Coyner proposed was a new drilling program that would involve some risk, but could save the firm as much as $500,000 per well.

Discovered by Texaco in 1979, the 20-square mile field, 10 miles south of Midland has essentially been drilled with one program — the one used by Texaco to drill its AB Fee No.1 discovery, a Fusselman test which was eventually completed in the Atoka AB after the Fusselman proved unproductive.

The well was completed to flow 263 bopd and 12.3 Mmcfd on a 11/64 in. choke with a 700 psi tubing pressure, from perforations in the Atoka "AB" zone which is a sandy, lime with a net thickness of 10-16 ft. at a depth of 11,100-11,400 ft., and since that completion 34 wells have been drilled and completed in the field, with four wells drilling or in the completion stage. According to Coyner in an outline of the project, Texaco's well design conformed to safe drilling practices and was typical for deep wells in the Midland Basin.

The design with a second intermediate casing string from 4,400 ft. to 9,800 ft. was used on each of Texaco's 29 producers in the field and by other operators in the field prior to 1984. However, the well design cost in excess of $1 million per well was was proving itself uneconomical on the fringes of the field.

"It was Pioneer Production Corp. and Drilling Manager, W.D. Smeltzer, who departed from the norm and took a new approach," said Coyner. "Pioneer's plan called for the elimination of the second intermediate string which was set to prevent lost circulation of higher weight muds which were being used to control shale movement and well pressure."

Coyner said the Pioneer design was possible, because reservoir pressure in the Atoka had declined to 4,565 psig, requiring only 7.7 ppg mud to control it and only 8.1 ppg to drill safely.

According to Coyner, three risks were still involved: possible lost circulation in a yet undetected zone in the Strawn or Atoka; lost circulation could also induce a kick from a higher pressured zone below, and sloughing shale in the Strawn and Atoka caused by fresh water could present a problem.

Pioneer determined from drilling records, however, that the first two risks were minimal and that the third could be dealt with routinely. Thus Pioneer made the decision to go without the intermediate string in its No.2-24 Bradford Estate.

While the well was a mechanical success for Pioneer, considerable lost circulation was incurred.

Building on the Pioneer success, Santa Fe minerals designed its own drilling program, which also called for elimination of the second intermediate string as well. The major change in the program called for an oil based mud at 9,700 ft. to TD.

"The benefits of this program were numerous," said Coyner. "By drilling to the Wolfcamp with fresh water, lost circulation was avoided and cost was negligible. Also a leak off mud weight of 8.6 ppg was confirmed. Therefore by drilling with 8.2 ppg Carbo-Fast mud no losses were expected and none occurred."

He said the mud filtrate of diesel oil and calcium chloride brine also demonstrated excellent inhibitive characteristics in the Strawn and Atoka shale, insuring minimum damage in the water-sensitive Atoka "AB" Zone.

Horse breeding turns into big business

SAXONBURG, Pa. (AP) — Mary Garfield is proud of her American-bred horses, but she's adding rarer, foreign breeds to her line because wealthy investors in search of a handsome steed and big profits have turned up the heat in the horse business.

American Thoroughbreds are still the equestrian Rolls-Royce, attracting buyers from around the world, but the money being poured into the U.S. arena has made the importing of foreign horses a lucrative line.

It is "the hottest thing going," said Bobbie Lieberman, editor of Modern Horsebreeding and Professional Horseman.

"People invest in horses in the same way that they invest in gold," said Michael Nolan, administrative director for the American Horse Council. "Horses are an international commodity that is increasing in value. And they're a little more exciting than a pile of gold sitting in a bank vault."

Mrs. Garfield, who for most of her 40 years has raised a standard mix of Thoroughbreds, Arabians and quarterhorses, recently began investing in warmbloods — horses bred almost exclusively in Europe for Olympic-style competition.

"It's not that I think it's the only good horse. But I thought warmbloods were a good thing to get into," she said. "I think there's a market in this country for well-bred, healthy young performance stock."

Mary Garfield

Big-boned and well-muscled, warmbloods are bred mainly for jumping and dressage, a type of exhibition riding in which horses perform difficult steps and gaits. They include such breeds as Hanoverians, Trakehners and Holsteiners.

OIME gets contract for space age generator

By MELLA McEWEN
Business-Oil Writer

A piece of President Reagan's Star Wars defense plan is being built in the Permian Basin.

OIME, a local subsidiary of Parker Drilling, has been awarded a $3.3 million contract to build six homopolar generators for the University of Texas at Austin.

The generators will be used at the Balcones Research Center, the Center for Electromechanic Research, which is the primary research center for the space-age generators. Technology for the generators has been developed with funds from the Department of Defense.

OIME was awarded the contract in January, and the company expects to complete the six by the end of the year.

According to Jim Weldon , project engineer with OIME's sister company, Parker Kinetic Designs of Austin, the homopolar generator stores energy in a flywheel revolving at 6,000 rpms, then releases the energy in a high-current electrical pulse of up to 9 million amperes.

OIME has built a similar generator for a major defense contractor, according to David Holland, president of the firm.

Is it too late to rebuild UTPB in the right spot

Everyone agrees, oil and gas cannot remain forever the mainstay of the Permian Basin economy. Diversification of industry is desperately needed, desired and sought.

It is also agreed that high tech industry is replacing smoke stack industry at an alarming rate and that the probable outlook for additional industry in West Texas would be in high technology to a large degree.

But to attract high tech, an inplace, institution of higher learning, for the purpose of training and educational enhancement of a high tech workforce is virtually a necessity. That's where the rub comes in.

While the Permian Basin does have an institution of higher learning, a framework for the development of upper level courses in management, technology, and fundamental skills, it is faltering and failing, with its very existence being threatened. We speak, of course, of the University of Texas Permian Basin (UTPB).

The threat to UTPB may well pass, with funds restored and politicians spouting rhetorical assurance about its future, but no amount of rhetoric can make it a viable, successful university. That will take some serious study and some hard decisions.

Why UTPB is not a successful school could involve some heavy duty finger-pointing at personalities, policies and politics. And while many factors could enter into the unsuccessness of UTPB, the prevailing concensus is that its location remains its single largest negative factor.

It is a sad tale to say the least, because UTPB should have been — could have been — an enviable university in Texas today, instead of the wounded institution it is.

Located midway between Midland-Odessa, in relationship with the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, with the full support of Midland money, entrepreneurship, political savvy and pride behind it, UTPB could have been one of the finest colleges in the state.

Of course that is a topic that has been hashed and rehashed over the years. Today, in light of what has transpired, it is not difficult to look back and agree that the college was, indeed, built at the wrong location. But other than recognizing that hind sight is wonderful, that does not address the problem.

Some might say that topic would be better put to rest, that to address it again only opens up old wounds. I don't think so. I think the record would show that it is a wound that has never healed. Moreover, it is a gapping, festering sore that continues to threaten the well-being of UTPB and the Permian Basin as a whole.

Despite all the good intentions of friends of UTPB, efforts at reconciliation, and the new and positive program for cooperation between Midland and Odessa, when it comes to UTPB, the grudge lives on. Lingering bitterness continues to isolate the college from vital support, but bitterness is not the sole problem. If all concerned were to kiss and make-up tomorrow, UTPB would still be in the wrong spot, from a practical stand-point — for the same reason that it would have been wrong to put DFW Airport in Weatherford.

Is it too late to put UTPB in the right location — between Midland and Odessa? That is a question that more than a few have asked, including a number of UTPB faculty members.

Debating whether or not to rebuild the university at another site, at a time when the debate is over whether or not to keep the doors open, may seem like bad timing. But it's a question that must be asked.

Texas Tech is planning to build a medical facility in Odessa. Could UTPB be sold to Tech for such a facility and be rebuilt between the two cities? For that matter could it be sold to some other private, federal, state or local governmental entity at a price that would allow it to be rebuilt?

Whatever the answer, one thing is certain, at whatever cost, the Permian Basin must have an institution of higher learning. The continued business and industrial growth of the area demands it.

John Paul Pitts is business-oil editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

He said the generator is used as a power source for railguns, one of three phases of the Star Wars scenario. Railguns are very high velocity guns that will shoot projectiles as much as ten times faster than conventional guns, firing in very quick bursts. "We're talking about putting these guns in space," he said.

Weldon, who rides herd on the high-tech project, illustrated by saying that a high-powered rifle has a velocity of 1,000 meters a second. The homopolar generator can fire at ten times that speed, or 10,000 meters a second.

"With that launching ability," Weldon noted, "we can research the behavior of materials under high pressures." This use was aimed directly at the defense industry.

He added that there are a number of industrial uses for the generator as well. In the area of pulsed welding, he said the generator would be able to weld a 36 inch pipeline with one-inch thick walls in five seconds.

Weldon said that the generator could heat a 100 lb. block of steel from room temperature to 2,500 degrees in five seconds. This heating, he noted, can be done with out forming scales, making the process cleaner and more efficient, leading to fewer impurities. The very high pulse of current, almost the equivalent of a lightning bolt, can also be used to create an intense magnetic field for use in shaping various types of metal. Another use is in setting off seismic explosions.

Weldon said each generator was a 10 megajoule generator, which he compared to a 60,000 lb. tractor going at 60 miles per hour. He said the pulse is like bringing that tractor to a complete stop in 1/4 second.

The generators can generate a pulse every four minutes. The 20,000 lbs. machine is approximately 48 inches in diameter and 72 inches in length. The flywheel is 22 inches in diameter and 24 inches long, made of solid steel and spins at 6,000 RPM.

The generator is powered by a 400 horse-power hydraulic motor that can reach 6,000 RPM in two minutes. Weldon said the pulse is is triggered by stopping the motor in about 1/4 second.

A larger 15 megajoule generator is also being developed for industrial use, which would be designed for more frequent and rugged duty. It would also have a more frequent discharge rate.

The company was the successful bidder for the contract, and Holland said the company has bid and is bidding on contracts. The degree of success, he said, depends on what funds get released for Star Wars research.

Said Coyner: "Penetration rates were an additional benefit. The shales drilled 14-20 ft. per hour and limes drilled in 9-16 ft. per hour, due to drilling with an unbalanced system."

He added, "If a drilling kick had been encountered we would have had to fight it, but it was a risk we were willing to take to save a half-million dollars. Hopefully any corrective measures would have been less than that."

HORSE

They appeal to people who would rather see their horse make it to the Olympics than stand in the winner's circle at the racetrack.

In 1984, almost 5,000 horses were imported from overseas, about 25 percent more than the 3,923 horses brought over in 1981, the U.S. Department of Agriculture says.

The numbers are relatively small compared with the rest of this country's horse population, estimated at 8 million by the American Horse Council, but imported horses are commanding high prices.

"This is strictly for the wealthy," said Ms. Lieberman. "We're talking investments of $200,000 and up. ... At the international level, it's a pretty elite group of people."

The total dollar value of the imports is unknown. The government does not keep figures because there is no duty on horses, Nolan said. But he noted that U.S. horse exports, which numbered about 2,800 in 1984 or a little more than half the number imported, were valued at more than $200 million.

"There's status involved with importing horses," said Ms. Lieberman. "I've been told that having an asterisk before a horse's name — which means a horse is imported — will add $10,000 to $15,000 to its value."

Nolan warned, however, that importing "is not for everyone," especially "not for someone who is new to the business."

"I'm either going to have a little gold mine or just an awful lot of pretty horses," he said.

Saxon Oil Co. announces gain

DALLAS (SWN) — Saxon Oil Co. has announced its results for the three months and year ended Dec. 31, 1984.

In the fourth quarter of 1984, Saxon completed a Plan of Financial Restructuring which resulted in the recognition of an extraordinary gain of $65.2 million.

Revenues for the fourth quarter of 1984 were $4,036,072 up from $3,528,843 for the same period in 198. Revenues for 1984 were $15,188,290, compared to $17,984,439 for 1983.

The Company recorded net income after extraordinary items of $55,447,931 for the fourth quarter of 1984, versus a net loss of $5,743,453 for the same period in 1983. Net income was $47,765,832 for 1984, compared to $7,111,279 for 1983.

The 1984 earnings were charged with $8.1 million of write-downs in oil and gas property. Net income for 1983 included $5.6 million of write-downs of which $2.5 million occurred in the fourth quarter consisting largely of reductions in the carrying value of oil and gas properties and nonproducing leasehold costs.

UTPB offering pumping class

The University of Texas at Austin's Petroleum Extension Service, located in the Founders Building on the campus of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin (UTPB), is offering a one week Beam Pumping Course beginning April 22.

The course will meet from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 7:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. on Friday. Fee for the course is $300 with all books and materials furnished.

Production, maintenance, and engineering personnel can benefit from instructions on sucker rod pump systems. Major topics in the course include equipment selection, system reaction to stress exerted by the rod string and prime mover, functional efficiency, and system design.

For more information or to register, call the Odessa Training Center at (915) 367-2303.

The Main Bank. Wall at Andrews Highway.

Texas American Bank is committed to Midland's economic vitality. That's why we've opened a second banking facility right in the heart of downtown at Texas and Colorado.

It's our new old-time "Banking Parlor." With furnishings and fixtures that hark back to the turn of the century.

It's where you'll find a special kind of service we call "Parlor Banking." Service that combines today's most modern banking skills and resources with the warm hospitality and personal service of an earlier era.

For many of you, Texas American's most convenient location will still be our main bank at Wall and Andrews Highway. There, and at more than 30 locations across Texas, the Texas American name stands for "home town" banking backed by combined assets of more than $6 billion.

But be sure you pay us a visit downtown. You'll enjoy complimentary refreshments in our special coffee room. You can take advantage of our old-time shoeshine stand. And you'll see what it's like to do business in West Texas' most beautiful banking facility.

Raleigh, N.C. seems to be booming with full employment

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

RALEIGH, N.C. — Welcome to the land of full employment.

This booming capital city in the heart of North Carolina's high-tech belt is awash in jobs. Local stores are buying television time to advertise openings. Hotel and restaurant jobs go begging. Construction projects are stalled for lack of carpenters. The jobless rate is a scant 3.4 percent, well below what most economists define as full employment.

"Normally when we run an ad in the local newspaper, 1,200 to 1,400 people respond," said Larry Greene, who recently opened a supermarket here. "This time we had virtually no response at all."

If the nation's economic recovery has an uneven topography, Raleigh is nicely perched atop one of the peaks. So are Phoenix, Dallas-Fort Worth, Austin, Manchester, N.H., and Portland, Maine, each of which has an unemployment rate below 4 percent.

At the same time, Cleveland's economy "still stinks," according to its mayor, and double-digit unemployment prevails there and in Detroit, Buffalo, Newark, Birmingham, Rockford, Ill., and Gary, Ind., where it is 21.7 percent.

HOW CAN SOME CITIES and suburbs be papered with want ads while the pickings are so slim elsewhere? Why don't more people go where the jobs are?

"Some of these groups that have high unemployment are not terribly mobile," said Brookings Institution economist Anthony Downs. He pointed to "younger people still attached to their families, people who are held by a welfare system and homeowners who have trouble selling their homes."

At the same time, many laid-off industrial workers are hard-pressed to transfer their highly paid skills to other fields. Other workers are reluctant to leave their native regions or are dissuaded by the lower wages and jobless benefits in southern communities such as the Raleigh-Durham area.

Still, there is considerable migration to the new boom towns such as Phoenix, where construction is breaking all records. Phoenix has been getting so many inquiries from out-of-state job-seekers that officials printed a booklet on wages, housing and other helpful hints.

"We go through a couple of hundred a week," said Arizona labor official Dan Anderson.

IN FRAMINGHAM, MASS., a suburban retail center where unemployment is 2.9 percent, fast-food chains cannot find enough locals to sell hamburgers, even at $4.50 an hour. So they are paying for vans to ferry two dozen workers from Athol, a depressed mill town 1 1-2 hours away.

"If you drive around here, you see help-wanted signs everywhere — Now Training, Flex Time, Mothers' Hours Available," said Michelle Cunha of Framingham's Chamber of Commerce. "I don't think there are many jobs in this area that are paying minimum wage."

But most jobless workers in nearby Boston cannot afford to move to the high-priced suburbs, and there is little public transportation to Framingham.

By the same token, unemployment is more than 11 percent in Franklin County, N.C., an hour's drive from the shiny office buildings going up in downtown Raleigh.

The signs of Raleigh's growth are everywhere. Traffic congestion is rising, apartment vacancies are rare, and it is getting harder to find a house for under $100,000. It is little wonder that some folks do not want this city of 180,000 to turn into a magnet for the jobless.

"If the news were to go out to the Ohio Valley that we need workers, I'm sure we'd have people packing in their cars and driving in," said Raleigh Mayor Avery C. Upchurch. "Some people have told me, 'Mayor, be quiet, let's not spoil a good thing.'"

On the other hand, Upchurch said he wishes there had been more tradesmen around when a contractor had to delay the new parking garage next to city hall. "Carpenters and people like that can name their price," he said.

Smedes York, a former mayor who runs a construction company here, said some of his projects were stalled while he looked for subcontractors from as far away as West Virginia. "We've got about all the business we can handle," he said.

AT KIMBRELL'S Furniture Store, manager John Long said he cannot compete with the high-tech firms that are multiplying like rabbits. "We just can't hire anyone," Long said. He said delivery workers "can get much better pay without having to work Saturdays or evenings. You hire them at $4 an hour, and the next thing you know they're working for the state or the telephone company."

Secretaries are in great demand. "We have a tough time filling our orders," said Henry Turlington of Manpower Temporary Services, which offers free word-processing courses. "The companies are producing the hardware faster than we're producing the workers who can handle it."

The engine for this employment machine lies outside the city at Research Triangle Park, 6,200 wooded acres of high-tech haven surrounded by the University of North Carolina, North Carolina State and Duke University.

WHILE OTHER AREAS compete to offer business the greatest tax breaks, dozens of firms — Citicorp, IBM, ITT, DuPont, Ciba-Geigy, GTE, Hewlett-Packard, Mitsubishi Semiconductor, and others with names like Teletec and Compucolor — are moving divisions here without a dime's worth of public subsidy.

But all the jobs are not for those who can take apart a silicon chip. Raleigh's technical college is finding jobs for 600 students a year in such fields as industrial engineering and robotics, and officials say they could place twice that number.

The secret to urban success in the 1980s seems to be diversification. The more a city's fortunes rest on an older industrial base, economists say, the higher its unemployment is likely to be.

Even during the recession, this area's jobless rate never rose above 5 percent because its universities, state bureaucracy and tobacco industry remained strong employers. Light manufacturing, trade, real estate and services all have been generating new jobs.

THESE FACTORS HAVE combined with a larger demographic trend — the shrinking teen-age labor force — to put the squeeze on businesses that once had a ready supply of cheap labor. Many younger people now have their pick of more lucrative jobs.

"There's a labor shortage at the low end of the scale — cooks, maids, dishwashers," said Douglas Bryant, who runs two hotels here. "You used to be able to depend on a lot of moonlighters, people with other jobs. I guess maybe they're making more money. ... The part-time market we rely on so heavily is drying up."

Greene said he found out the hard way when he tried to hire 400 people for Farm Fresh, a supermarket-pharmacy-clothing store. A small classified ad had brought 1,400 applicants for a new Richmond, Va., store, so he took out a half-page ad in the Raleigh News and Observer and reserved a high school gymnasium for the crowd. Twenty-three people showed up, although some jobs were paying up to $40,000.

Greene said he also tried putting up signs at the North Carolina State campus, "but we didn't get a single response."

Kimbark announces 1984 earnings

DENVER (SWN) — Kimbark Oil & Gas Co. has announced 1984 earnings of $364,000, or eight cents per share, on revenues of $7,667,000, compared with $843,000, or 18 cents per share, earned on revenues of $6,425,000 in 1983.

During the fourth quarter, the company earned $62,000 or one cent per share on revenues of $2,136,000, compared with $267,000 or six cents per share, earned on revenues of $1,792,000 during the last quarter of 1983.

Working capital provided from operations amounted to $2,276,000 during 1984, compared with $2,499,000 during 1983, and $383,000 during the fourth quarter of 1984, compared with $748,000 during the fourth quarter of 1983.

The earnings declines were due principally to increased depletion, depreciation, amortization and interest costs associated with Kimbark's 1984 petroleum exploration and development program, which resulted in increased petroleum reserves and record production.

Oil production decreases slightly

Texas crude oil production averaged 2,232,654 barrels daily in January, according to Railroad Commission Chairman Buddy Temple.

This figure compares with December production of 2,303,071 barrels daily and January 1984 production of 2,353,059 barrels daily.

Texas oil production in January 1985 totaled 69,212,827 barrels, down from 71,395,206 barrels in December and down from 72,944,827 barrels in January 1984.

The state's top producing counties, rank ordered by January production, were: Pecos, 4,143,747 barrels; Ector, 3,506,797 barrels; Gaines, 3,409,211 barrels; Andrews, 3,382,888 barrels; Yoakum, 3,144,317 barrels; Hockley, 3,076,076 barrels.

Technology could smarten house designs of the future

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Don't look now — or worry about it — but your present "new" house could become obsolete when and if the so-called Smart House is unveiled in 1987 — and then, hopefully, perfected for production before the end of this decade.

The Smart House, a priority project of the research arm of the National Association of Home Builders, is being planned to control and adapt the increasing residential technology that already seems poised to overwhelm some American who wonder if they will be ready to cope with the 21st century.

"Insofar as the Smart House technology is concerned, the primary objective will be to produce houses that will be, regardless of technical background or orientation, easy to use by the young, the aged and the infirm," project director David MacFadyen said.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology-trained engineer noted that the Smart House effort is geared toward overhauling the traditional wiring systems now used in American homes. "We have the varied technologies," he said, "but now we must develop a wiring system that will permit all this emerging technology to function as a team and allow all appliances, devices and controllers in the home to work together."

New homes that will be built in the early part of the next century are likely to look much like those now being built, he said, in terms of architectural styling. "However, the ease and comfort of living in the new Smart Houses will be unlike anything you can find now," MacFadyen said.

To accomplish the Smart House mission undertaken by NAHB's Research Foundation, a new National Research Test Park has been approved for 50 residential acres in nearby Bowie, Md., where new types of insulation, plumbing, wiring, energy-saving devices and totally new products will be tested over the next 20 years.

Already, 25 businesses with home building products have funded the test project designed to achieve a new home-wiring system that will provide power and signal distribution that is safer, less costly and more functional than the 120-volt alternating-current system common in both the U.S. and Canada.

This new wiring system is expected to reduce or eliminate electrical shock and fire hazards, while also providing full flexibility for consumer control and automation of all household appliances, devices and utilities. The National Electrical Code Committee's code-making panel recently agreed to accept, in principle, the Smart House system for formal consideration for inclusion in the 1987 code revision. The NEC even voted to recommend the establishment of a subcommittee to work with the Smart House Venture Inc., as it is called.

SPACE

He said the generator is used as a power source for railguns, one of three phases of the Star Wars scenario. Railguns are very high velocity guns that will shoot projectiles as much as ten times faster than conventional guns, firing in very quick bursts. "We're talking about putting these guns in space," he said.

Weldon, who rides herd on the high-tech project, illustrated by saying that a high-powered rifle has a velocity of 1,000 meters a second. The homopolar generator can fire at ten times that speed, or 10,000 meters a second.

"With that launching ability," Weldon noted, "we can research the behavior of materials under high pressures." This use was aimed directly at the defense industry.

He added that there are a number of industrial uses for the generator as well. In the area of pulsed welding, he said the generator would be able to weld a 36 inch pipeline with one-inch thick walls in five seconds.

Weldon said that the generator could heat a 100 lb. block of steel from room temperature to 2,500 degrees in five seconds. This heating, he noted, can be done with out forming scales, making the process cleaner and more efficient, leading to fewer impurities. The very high pulse of current, almost the equivalent of a lightning bolt, can also be used to create an intense magnetic field for use in shaping various types of metal. Another use is in setting off seismic explosions.

Weldon said each generator was a 10 megajoule generator, which he compared to a 60,000 lb. tractor going at 60 miles per hour. He said the pulse is like bringing that tractor to a complete stop in 1/4 second.

The generators can generate a pulse every four minutes. The 20,000 lbs. machine is approximately 48 inches in diameter and 72 inches in length. The flywheel is 22 inches in diameter and 24 inches long, made of solid steel and spins at 6,000 RPM.

The generator is powered by a 400 horse-power hydraulic motor that can reach 6,000 RPM in two minutes. Weldon said the pulse is is triggered by stopping the motor in about 1/4 second.

A larger 15 megajoule generator is also being developed for industrial use, which would be designed for more frequent and rugged duty. It would also have a more frequent discharge rate.

The company was the successful bidder for the contract, and Holland said the company has bid and is bidding on contracts. The degree of success, he said, depends on what funds get released for Star Wars research.

He added, "If a drilling kick had been encountered we would have had to fight it, but it was a risk we were willing to take to save a half-million dollars. Hopefully any corrective measures would have been less than that."

HORSE

They appeal to people who would rather see their horse make it to the Olympics than stand in the winner's circle at the racetrack.

In 1984, almost 5,000 horses were imported from overseas, about 25 percent more than the 3,923 horses brought over in 1981, the U.S. Department of Agriculture says.

The numbers are relatively small compared with the rest of this country's horse population, estimated at 8 million by the American Horse Council, but imported horses are commanding high prices.

"This is strictly for the wealthy," said Ms. Lieberman. "We're talking investments of $200,000 and up. ... At the international level, it's a pretty elite group of people."

The total dollar value of the imports is unknown. The government does not keep figures because there is no duty on horses, Nolan said. But he noted that U.S. horse exports, which numbered about 2,800 in 1984 or a little more than half the number imported, were valued at more than $200 million.

"There's status involved with importing horses," said Ms. Lieberman. "I've been told that having an asterisk before a horse's name — which means a horse is imported — will add $10,000 to $15,000 to its value."

Nolan warned, however, that importing "is not for everyone," especially "not for someone who is new to the business."

"I'm either going to have a little gold mine or just an awful lot of pretty horses," he said.

Saxon Oil Co. announces gain

DALLAS (SWN) — Saxon Oil Co. has announced its results for the three months and year ended Dec. 31, 1984.

In the fourth quarter of 1984, Saxon completed a Plan of Financial Restructuring which resulted in the recognition of an extraordinary gain of $65.2 million.

Revenues for the fourth quarter of 1984 were $4,036,072 up from $3,528,843 for the same period in 198. Revenues for 1984 were $15,188,290, compared to $17,984,439 for 1983.

The Company recorded net income after extraordinary items of $55,447,931 for the fourth quarter of 1984, versus a net loss of $5,743,453 for the same period in 1983. Net income was $47,765,832 for 1984, compared to $7,111,279 for 1983.

The 1984 earnings were charged with $8.1 million of write-downs in oil and gas property. Net income for 1983 included $5.6 million of write-downs of which $2.5 million occurred in the fourth quarter consisting largely of reductions in the carrying value of oil and gas properties and nonproducing leasehold costs.

UTPB offering pumping class

The University of Texas at Austin's Petroleum Extension Service, located in the Founders Building on the campus of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin (UTPB), is offering a one week Beam Pumping Course beginning April 22.

The course will meet from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 7:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. on Friday. Fee for the course is $300 with all books and materials furnished.

Production, maintenance, and engineering personnel can benefit from instructions on sucker rod pump systems. Major topics in the course include equipment selection, system reaction to stress exerted by the rod string and prime mover, functional efficiency, and system design.

Raleigh, N.C. seems to be booming with full employment

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

RALEIGH, N.C. — Welcome to the land of full employment.

This booming capital city in the heart of North Carolina's high-tech belt is awash in jobs. Local stores are buying television time to advertise openings. Hotel and restaurant jobs go begging. Construction projects are stalled for lack of carpenters. The jobless rate is a scant 3.4 percent, well below what most economists define as full employment.

"Normally when we run an ad in the local newspaper, 1,200 to 1,400 people respond," said Larry Greene, who recently opened a supermarket here. "This time we had virtually no response at all."

If the nation's economic recovery has an uneven topography, Raleigh is nicely perched atop one of the peaks. So are Phoenix, Dallas-Fort Worth, Austin, Manchester, N.H., and Portland, Maine, each of which has an unemployment rate below 4 percent.

At the same time, Cleveland's economy "still stinks," according to its mayor, and double-digit unemployment prevails there and in Detroit, Buffalo, Newark, Birmingham, Rockford, Ill., and Gary, Ind., where it is 21.7 percent.

HOW CAN SOME CITIES and suburbs be papered with want ads while the pickings are so slim elsewhere? Why don't more people go where the jobs are?

"Some of these groups that have high unemployment are not terribly mobile," said Brookings Institution economist Anthony Downs. He pointed to "younger people still attached to their families, people who are held by a welfare system and homeowners who have trouble selling their homes."

At the same time, many laid-off industrial workers are hard-pressed to transfer their highly paid skills to other fields. Other workers are reluctant to leave their native regions or are dissuaded by the lower wages and jobless benefits in southern communities such as the Raleigh-Durham area.

Kimbark announces 1984 earnings

DENVER (SWN) — Kimbark Oil & Gas Co. has announced 1984 earnings of $364,000, or eight cents per share, on revenues of $7,667,000, compared with $843,000, or 18 cents per share, earned on revenues of $6,425,000 in 1983.

During the fourth quarter, the company earned $62,000 or one cent per share on revenues of $2,136,000, compared with $267,000 or six cents per share, earned on revenues of $1,792,000 during the last quarter of 1983.

The earnings declines were due principally to increased depletion, depreciation, amortization and interest costs associated with Kimbark's 1984 petroleum exploration and development program, which resulted in increased petroleum reserves and record production.

Oil production decreases slightly

Texas crude oil production averaged 2,232,654 barrels daily in January, according to Railroad Commission Chairman Buddy Temple.

This figure compares with December production of 2,303,071 barrels daily and January 1984 production of 2,353,059 barrels daily.

Texas oil production in January 1985 totaled 69,212,827 barrels, down from 71,395,206 barrels in December and down from 72,944,827 barrels in January 1984.

The state's top producing counties, rank ordered by January production, were: Pecos, 4,143,747 barrels; Ector, 3,506,797 barrels; Gaines, 3,409,211 barrels; Andrews, 3,382,888 barrels; Yoakum, 3,144,317 barrels; Hockley, 3,076,076 barrels.

Technology could smarten house designs of the future

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Don't look now — or worry about it — but your present "new" house could become obsolete when and if the so-called Smart House is unveiled in 1987 — and then, hopefully, perfected for production before the end of this decade.

The Smart House, a priority project of the research arm of the National Association of Home Builders, is being planned to control and adapt the increasing residential technology that already seems poised to overwhelm some American who wonder if they will be ready to cope with the 21st century.

"Insofar as the Smart House technology is concerned, the primary objective will be to produce houses that will be, regardless of technical background or orientation, easy to use by the young, the aged and the infirm," project director David MacFadyen said.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology-trained engineer noted that the Smart House effort is geared toward overhauling the traditional wiring systems now used in American homes. "We have the varied technologies," he said, "but now we must develop a wiring system that will permit all this emerging technology to function as a team and allow all appliances, devices and controllers in the home to work together."

New homes that will be built in the early part of the next century are likely to look much like those now being built, he said, in terms of architectural styling. "However, the ease and comfort of living in the new Smart Houses will be unlike anything you can find now," MacFadyen said.

To accomplish the Smart House mission undertaken by NAHB's Research Foundation, a new National Research Test Park has been approved for 50 residential acres in nearby Bowie, Md., where new types of insulation, plumbing, wiring, energy-saving devices and totally new products will be tested over the next 20 years.

Already, 25 businesses with home building products have funded the test project designed to achieve a new home-wiring system that will provide power and signal distribution that is safer, less costly and more functional than the 120-volt alternating-current system common in both the U.S. and Canada.

This new wiring system is expected to reduce or eliminate electrical shock and fire hazards, while also providing full flexibility for consumer control and automation of all household appliances, devices and utilities. The National Electrical Code Committee's code-making panel recently agreed to accept, in principle, the Smart House system for formal consideration for inclusion in the 1987 code revision. The NEC even voted to recommend the establishment of a subcommittee to work with the Smart House Venture Inc., as it is called.

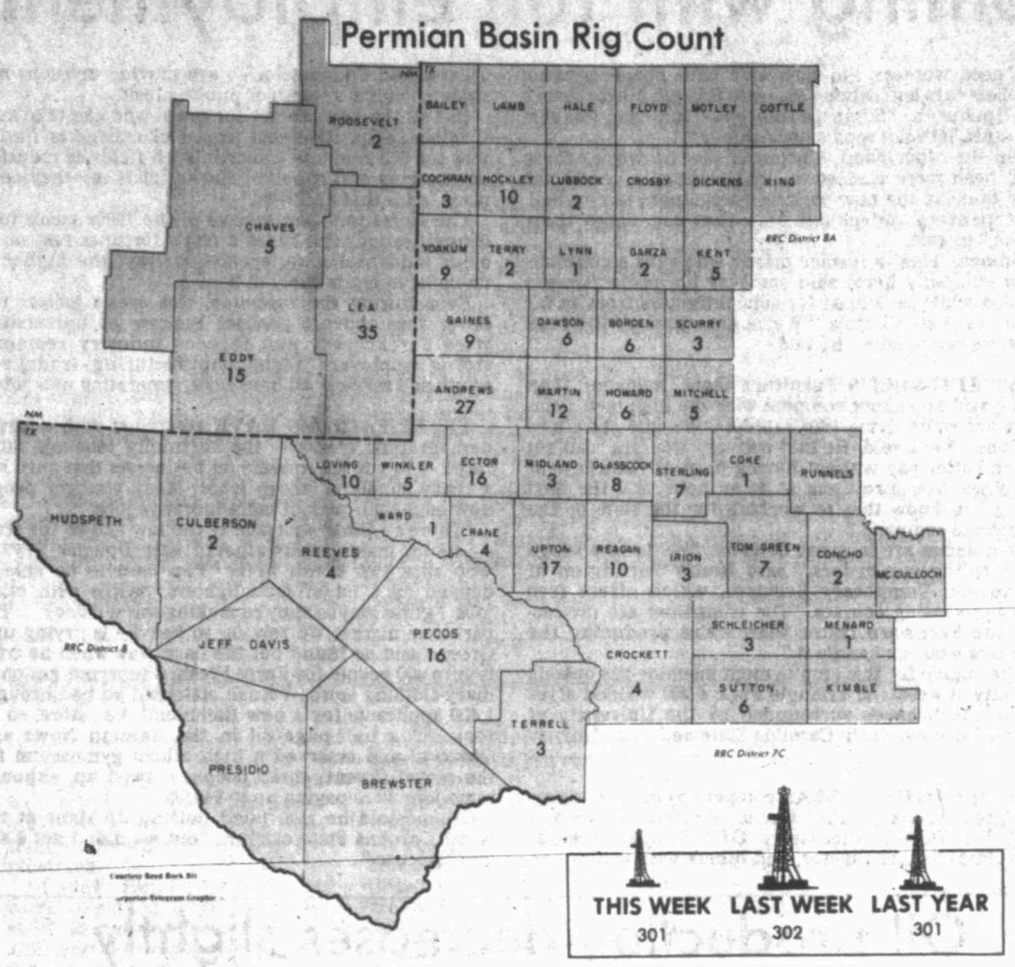
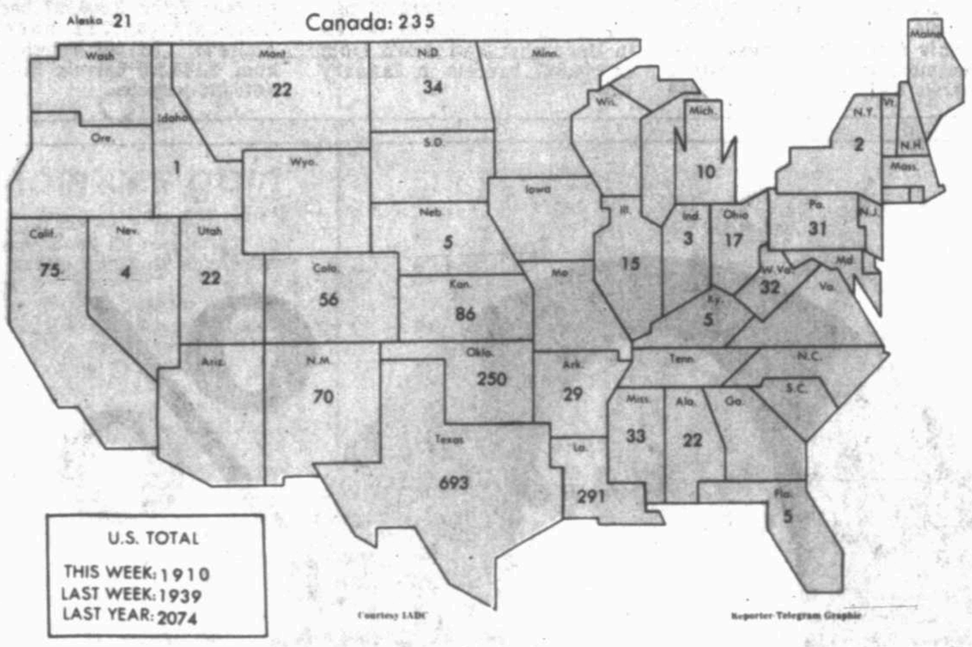
Permian Basin Rig Count



U.S. Rig Count



Permian Basin, U.S. counts slip lower

Both the Permian Basin and the U.S rig counts slipped lower this week.

Locally, Midland County held stead at three rigs. Ector County lost six rigs, lowering the total to 16. Martin County held stead y at two rigs this week. Glasscock County added a rig, putting eight to work this week.

Four rigs moved out of Andrews County, leaving 27 working within county lines. Lea County, once again the most active county in the Basin, added seven rigs, raising the total to 35. Concho County, after two weeks of no activity, added two rigs this week.

For the week, the rig count is 301. A week ago the count was 302. A year ago the count was 301.

The state of Texas continued to lose rigs as 21 rigs moved out of the state this week, leaving 693 at work. New Mexico added seven rigs, raising the total to 70 for that state. Oklahoma lost nine rigs, leaving 250 at work. Louisiana added 11 rigs, putting 291 to work.

Alaska held steady at 21 rigs this week. California held steady at 75. New York, after a week of no activity, added two rigs. Kansas dropped 13 rigs, lowering the count to 86. In Canada, 111 rigs stopped working, lowering the count to 235.

For the week, the count is 1,910. A week ago the count was 1,939. A year ago the count was 2,074.

Cities' chambers, airline conduct historic trade mission to Europe

DALLAS (SWN) — The Dallas and Fort Worth Chambers of Commerce and American Airlines will conduct an historic trade mission to Europe April 11-19 to commemorate the airline's new service to Paris and Frankfurt, the participants announced.

The trip will be the first joint trade mission ever conducted by the two cities. The mission will visit Paris, although some members will first go to Frankfurt.

"We have a major commitment in the Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport and in this entire area," said Thomas G. Plaskett, American's senior vice president for marketing. "We feel that any growth by American Airlines – any extension of its route system through this hub – benefits the overall community by adding jobs and making it more attractive for corporate expansion or relocation. It was also an opportunity to promote international trade through the airport.

"And so it followed that we should reach out to the chambers of commerce in Fort Worth and Dallas to help us inaugurate our new European service."

The 54-member delegation will be led by Mayors Starke Taylor of Dallas and Bob Bolen of Fort Worth. Speaker of the Texas House Gib Lewis, a Fort Worth businessman, and DFW Airport Board Chairman Bill Weatherford, a Dallas insurance executive, also will be mission participants.

American Airlines Chairman, President and Chief Executive Officer Robert L. Crandall and Plaskett will host the trip, which will leave Thursday, April 11, on the inaugural flight.

Eight members of the trade delegation will be on the April 11 flight from DFW to Frankfurt to represent Dallas and Fort Worth during inaugural ceremonies in that city. They will then fly to Paris and join the others.

The mission members will meet with businessmen in banking and industry to discuss trade matters in all fields.

Rowland to discuss Santa Rita

Ed Rowland, director and executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, will speak at the Desk & Derrick meeting at 6:30 p.m. Thursday in the Petroleum Club.

He will speak about the Santa Rita No. 1. His speach is entitled "A Rose Blooms in the Desert — The Santa Rita No. 1."

Rowland, an Abilene native, has served as director and executive vice president of the museum for the past 18 months. He has also served as assistant director for over five years.

He has a BS degree in zoology and a MA in museum science, both from Texas Tech University. Rowland began working for museums while an Army officer, when he created a museum at Fort Jackson, S.C. for the nation's bicentennial celebration.

Rowland's knowledge of the petroleum industry began while roughnecking his way through college.

He has also served as director of the Big Thicket Museum in southeast Texas and worked at the Arizona-Sonora Desert Museum in Tucson.

He serves on the boards of the Texas Association of Museums and the Midland Arts Assembly. He is a past president of the Permian Basin Museums Institute and is a member of the Midland Dowtown Lion's Club and the Chamber of Commerce's M-Squad.

Retailers find private label credit cards boost retail sales

Cox News Service

ATLANTA — Nowadays it seems that almost every retailer, large and small, is offering a credit card for exclusive use in its store.

Larger retailers have long realized that private label credit cards are a tremendous vehicle for boosting sales. But more important, they realize that holders of the private label credit cards are more likely to return to the store again and again.

Using private label credit cards was once the sole turf of the larger, well- financed companies like Sears, Roebuck & Co. and large chain department stores. Smaller retailers with limited capital and administrative support could not establish their own credit cards.

But now there are third party vendors of credit for the smaller retailers, enabling them to offer exclusive credit cards. One such credit vendor is Connecticut-based General Electric Credit Corp.

Through GECC, retailers are providing private label credit cards to purchase Apple computers, Circuit City stereos, Snapper lawnmowers, Lowe's furniture and just about anything else.

In fact, GECC has some 7 million private label credit cards in circulation. But not one of those credit cards has the name General Electric Credit Corp. printed on it, even though it supplies the credit.

GECC is the money and manpower behind the credit cards of more than 15,000 small retailers, enabling them to offer private label credit cards to their customers, said Art Bastianello, Southeastern territory sales manager in the retailer financing division at GECC's Atlanta service center.

Essentially, GECC is the credit department for its client retailers. "We process credit card applications, bill customers, fund the transaction and handle the collections," said Bastianello. However, retailers set credit terms and policies.

Often, the credit cardholder is unaware that the card in his wallet is financed by GECC.

"We promote the business of our clients (the retailers)," said Raymond L. Smith, regional business center manager of the retailer financing division at GECC's Atlanta office.

Everything associated with the credit process - monthly statements, customer correspondence, the card itself - has the retailer's name on it, Smith said. "We try at every point to reinforce the name of the retail client."

Bastianello said GECC will provide a private credit card for any retailer, although most clients have minimum annual revenues of $2 million to $4 million.

Costs of the GECC credit vending service to the retailers vary greatly depending on the services rendered, Bastianello said. "But the average costs to a retailer whose customers maintain a $600-$700 on-going balance ... is around 2 to 3 percent of credit sales."

Small retailers take advantage of the high-speed credit reporting and monitoring technology at a fraction of what establishing an independent credit department would cost.

"Operating a credit system comparable to ours would cost many of our clients more than their annual sales," said Bastianello.

Letting GECC handle the credit operations not only frees up capital for the smaller retailers, but the use of the credit cards helps give them a needed edge in the highly competitive retail trade.

The concept of using exclusive credit to help bolster customer loyalty is known as credit merchandising.

True, private label credit cards are offered as customer convenience, but retailers now have an added competitive edge when they extend credit, Bastianello said.

"Smaller companies seek the same benefits that the retailing superpowers derive from their private credit cards: differentiation from competitors, direct billing from the company, the ability to advertise specialty payment terms and use credit as a merchandising tool," Bastianello said.

This whole concept of private label credit cards is not just to boost sales, but helps to build customer base and to build customer loyalty, he said.

"A credit card is like a billboard in your wallet," said Smith.

Not only that, credit cardholders are reminded once a month of a retailer by the billing statement, he said. "Billing statements are merchandising tools. We can put up to a three-line message announcing a sale or special offering."

Unlike Mastercard and Visa credit cards, which do not foster product loyalty, private label credit cards keep customers coming back, he said.

Having established a division for the private label credit cards within the company some 20 years ago, Bastianello said that he has seen the use of them explode in the past few years. Consumers postponed their purchases during the recession and the needs for credit was lessened. With the recovery, consumer interest in credit rose, he said.

Bankers say interstate banking may soon be common

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Supporters of regional banking are admitting the concept appears to be in trouble for the current legislative session, despite their continuing arguments that it's only a matter of time before interstate banking is common.

Independent Bankers Association of Texas is opposing legislation which has received support from some large holding company banks.

Ben Love, chairman, Texas Commerce Banchshares, Inc., Houston, argues that large banks in Texasnot competing with the smallerbanks, but rather are in competition with the money market banks in New York, Chicago and the West Coast. Unless Texas' large banks are allowed to expand into a regional banking system, they will simply be swallowed up by the giant money banks, Love argues — saying that while Texas has five of the 25 largest banks in the nation, the largest bank in Texas is still only one-fifth the size of the largest New York, West Coast and Chicago institutions.

Bureau of Solid Waste Management, Texas Dept. of Health, is reviewing comments on its proposed "small quantity generator" regulations on hazardous wastes.

Those regulations would bring establishments — including auto dealers, dry cleaners, printers, etc. under reporting, record-keeping and disposal requirements, if the facilities produce or accumulate 100 kilograms or more of hazardous wastes monthly.

Current requirements, which track those of Federal law, apply to establishments producing 1,000 kilograms or more per month.

U. S. Environmental Protection Agency officials say it may be necessary to revise the Federal law to allow exemption of small quantity generators, but some hazardous waste industry officials say doing that will require time — and they are not confident the change will be made.

House Financial Institutions Committee approved legislation by Rep. Bill Messer, D-Belton, for a change in bond procedures to allow interest rates on some government bonds to be set after issuance.

Messer says such a technique is used now by corporations, andwuld allow insurance of "long-term bonds at short-term interest rates."

Danny Burger, Municipal Advisory Council for Texas, says the proposal could cause some problems for districts in seting tax rates to raise sufficient funds to cover the cost of bonds, if the rates change more frequently than annually.

Austin attorney Rayford Price says the bill would allow issuers to get better rates — noting that short-term rates are, at present, better than long-term rates.

Legislation relating to payment of items by banks "without human intervention or sight review" has been introduced by Rep. Gordon Arnold, D-Terrell.

HB 1131 would amend the Banking Code to allow payment of items without such examination "if the payment is made according to established procedures for handling the instrument."

PBGC to offer three courses

The Permian Basin Graduate Center has scheduled three classes dealing with acquisitions, reading and time management in the PBGC Building, 105 W. Illinois.

"Acquisitions of producing properties" will meet from 7-9:30 p.m. Thursdays, April 11-May 2. This course will discuss how to select, evaluate, and purchase producing oil and gas properties. T. Scott Hickman, president of T. Scott Hickman & Associates, Inc.; and Robert C. Bledsoe, partner of Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe & Dawson; and Alan E. Byars, senior vice president of Home Savings and Loan will instruct the course. Fee is $95.

"Efficient reading" will be offered from 7-9:30 p.m. April 15-May 20. This course is intended to increase a person's reading index, which includes reading rates and comprehension scores. Joyce Sherrod will instruct the course. Fee is $175.

"Time management" scheduled to start April 16 has been changed to April 23-May 7. This course is designed to provide an understanding and application of a process to aid in more effective and efficient use of one's time. Dr. Vernon Stokes, assistant director for instruction, Region 18 Education Service Center, will instruct the course. Fee is $80.

Music In The Air

Music will fill the air when Midland Community Concerts Association opens its 1985-86 season at Midland High School this fall. Memberships to the upcoming season go on sale April 18.

Helen Codington, co-chairman of the membership committee, has been associated with MCC for the past 20 of its 38-year history, and in that time she has seen the organization more than double in size.

"We used to feel that we had done a good job when we had obtained 1,000 memberships," Mrs. Codington says. All concerts are held at Midland High School Auditorium where the capacity is 2,250. One of the provisions of the contract between MHS and MCC is that the auditorium cannot be oversold.

"We had one good season when checks wanting memberships had to be returned because we were already sold out. That's what we're hoping for this season because we have such an outstanding lineup of artists coming to town."

PETER NERO, the world renowned pianist and conductor, composer and arranger, opens the new season. A piano prodigy as a child in New York, Nero was giving concerts at places like the Brooklyn Academy of Music when he was 11. At 14, he was studying at Juilliard School of Music on scholarship and making guest appearances with symphony orchestras.

During his career, he has captivated his audiences with performances of pop, jazz and classical music. Today, he is the music director and conductor of the Philly Pops Orchestra, as well as pops music director and pops conductor of the Tulsa Philharmonic and Edmonton Symphony Orchestra, Canada.

"We feel that all the artists are good but when we say Peter Nero, people take notice," Mrs. Codington says.

Next will be the "Jury's Irish Cabaret of Dublin," a group which has entertained audiences all over the world with its traditional dances, lilting songs and haunting music.

Then, tenor Abram Morales and baritone Robert McFarland in "Gentlemen of the Opera" will bring a taste of opera to MCC's season.

Following them will be the William Hall Chorale. During the summer of 1984, the Chorale and the Bella Lewitzky Dancers were chosen to open the Olympic Arts Festival with Stravinsky's "Symphony of Song," and the performance will be repeated at the University of Southern California at Los Angeles in May.

THE 1985-86 season marks the Chorale's 30th anniversary and includes an extensive tour of the United States. This season, the Chorale is presenting a multi-media review of American musical comedy involving the use of kaleidoscopic visual projections, innovative use of film and slides, with a fully staged choral production.

Finally, as its fifth concert, MCC will present duo-harpists John Escosa and Michael Rado, who perform as featured harpists at the San Francisco Hyatt Hotel.

Escosa studied composition and choral conducting at the Juilliard School of Music and trained in harp under Carlos Salzedo. He gives master classes in jazz theory and performs at schools around the country, including the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., the Manhattan School of Music, New York City, and for the annual conferences of the American Harp Society.

Rado studied at the New England Conservatory, Boston Conservatory of Music and San Francisco Conservatory, receiving a master of arts degree from the latter. He has performed with, among others, the Boston Opera Theatre and Boston Concert Opera, as well as appearing on stage with Johnny Mathis, Melissa Manchester and Tony Bennet. In addition, he performed with the 1981 national company of "Hello Dolly."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. I think Robert Preston is the greatest actor in the country. I would like to know more about his life and career.

M.W.
East Windsor, N.J.

A. Robert Preston Meservy was born in Newton Highlands, Mass., 66 years ago, but moved with his family to Los Angeles when he was 2. As a boy, he learned to play the piano, drums, trumpet and harmonica and became interested in acting while he was in high school.

At 15, he left school to join an acting touring company headed by the mother of the late Tyrone Power. However, after six months (of earning $8 a week) he returned to L.A. and was working parking cars at Santa Anita Racetrack when he met a few students from the Pasadena Community Playhouse.

He decided to join the playhouse, and during the next two years he performed in 42 plays. (He also met his wife of 44 years, Catherine Craig, there.) A talent scout from Paramount saw him, and at 19 he was signed to a contract.

His film debut, in 1938, was in "King of Alcatraz," followed over the next 13 years by such films as "Union Pacific," "Beau Geste" and "Whispering Smith." Or as he explained it: "I played the lead in all the B pictures and the villain in all the A's."

Robert Preston

In 1951, he decided to move back East and try his luck on Broadway, and in 1957 scored a major hit in "The Music Man." Later Broadway hits include "The Lion in Winter," "Nobody Loves an Albatross," "Ben Franklin in Paris" and "I Do, I Do," which alternated with stints in Hollywood to film the movie version of "The Music Man," "The Dark at the Top of the Stairs," "All the Way Home," and "Semi-Tough," as well as TV series such as "The Chisholms."

In 1981, though, he and Catherine decided they'd had enough Eastern winters and moved to Montecito, Calif., near Santa Barbara. Around the same time, he joined forces with director Blake Edwards, resulting in a more flamboyant screen image in the movies "S.O.B." and "Victor/Victoria."

Now, although he had been mentioned as part of the "Victor/Victoria" adaptation being proposed for Broadway, he has no plans to go with it. "It would take something truly fantastic to get him back to Broadway," explains an associate. He was in the recent HBO TV movie, "Finnegan, Begin Again" with Mary Tyler Moore, but at this writing, has no immediate TV or movie plans.

Q. I've heard that John Taylor and Andy Taylor of Duran Duran are doing an album together. Is that true? Also, will Duran Duran be coming to Canada?

Michelle Buchanan
St. Martins, N. B., Canada

A. They did make an album together, along with singer Robert Palmer and drummer Tony Thompson. The group and album are called "Power Station" and the project has been in the works for three years, ever since John Taylor met Palmer at the Rum Runner Club in Brimingham and they decided that they should, at some point, work together.

That time came earlier this year, the album was released in the U.S. in mid-March, they made an appearance on "Saturday Night Live" and shot a video, which you should be seeing now.

You don't have to worry that this means the Taylors' departure from Duran Duran, however. Both insist that this was a one-time-only effort and both are now back in the studio working on the group's next album. A tour is shaping up for later this year in North America, but the cities haven't been finalized yet.

Q. My family and I greatly admire General Chuck Yeager, the first man to break the sound barrier. Is he still active in the Air Force, does he have a family and is he currently working on anything?

Mrs. M. Wheeler
Davenport, Iowa

A. We spoke to his wife of 40 years, "The Glamorous Glennis," on the phone to their home in California recently. She explained that he is retired from the Air Force, but not from flying, and has been busy with his corporate affiliations and his autobiography, which is due out in July.

He's also been in discussion with one of the networks to narrate a series on the history of aviation and was to have appeared on "The Fall Guy," but the timing didn't jive with his schedule.

Regarding his family: He said, at the time of the release of "The Right Stuff," that the actress who played Glennis, Barbara Hershey, looked just like her at that time, and that Glennis has always been a much tougher character than he, so he was always a little afraid of her. The real Glennis agrees without hestitation to both, adding only that she and Barbara Hershey have different color eyes. She and the General have four grown children; one son followed his father into the Air Force.

Q. I think Michael Keaton is fantastic. Can you tell me if he's married, where he's from, how he got his start in show business and what his plans are?

K.
South Bend, Ind.
M.O.
Orland Park, Ill.

A. He's from Pittsburgh, he's the youngest of seven children, and he got his show business start 10 years ago when he dropped out of Kent State University, moved to L.A. (where he slept in his car) and angled his way onstage at The Comedy Store. That led to a stretch on the ill-fated Mary Tyler Moore variety show, his film debut in "Night Shift" and a multi-picture deal with 20th Century Fox.

Through the studio arrangement, you should be seeing him in a variety of projects. His first, "Touch and Go," a drama about a professional hockey player who becomes involved with a young street tough and his mother, is due for release in September.

He's married to actress Caroline MacWilliams.

Q. Alan Ladd was my favorite actor. When did he die, was he married at the time of his death, how many children did he have and are Cheryl or David Ladd any relation?

Darlene Schocker
Austin, Minn.

A. He died in 1964 at the age of 50 from a heart attack, as first reported; it was later changed, after an autopsy, to the combined effects of alcohol, Seconal, Librium and Sparine but was officially ruled accidental.

He was married to his agent, Sue Carol, at the time of his death and they had two children, Alana and David (Cheryl Ladd's ex-husband). He also had a son, Alan Ladd, Jr., now a studio executive, from his first marriage.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Spanish dance company to perform

BIG SPRING — The Maria Benitez Spanish Dance Company will perform a concert of flamenco and classical Spanish dance at 8 p.m. April 20 in the Big Spring Municipal Auditorium.

Maria Benitez has been hailed in Spain as among the finest of flamenco dancers. She has been referred to as "A Baryshnikov of Spanish dance."

Ms. Benitez and her husband, Cecilio, funded the company in 1972. In addition to the annual season in Santa Fe, N.M., where they are based, they perform in New York yearly and tour nationally and internationally.

Ms. Benitez has taught at the Boston Conservatory of Music, the Verde Valley School, Arizona, the University of Utah and the Institute of American Indian Arts, Santa Fe, N.M. She is a performer and choreographer for opera, including "La Vida Breve" with the Opera of Santa Fe and Sara Cauldwell's Boston Opera; and "La Traviata" with the Opera of Santa Fe and the St. Louis Opera.

She is the recipient of the New Mexico governor's Award for Excellence in the Field of Dance and the Classical Spanish Dance Award from the Cultural Institute of Puerto Rico, New York City.

For four years, she served as a panelist for the National Endowment for the Arts Dance Program and serves as a consultant.

Others in the company include dancers Rosa Mercedes, Susana Aranda, Manolo de Cordoba, singer Luis Vargas and guitarists Guillermo Rios and Rafael Rosas.

Tickets, priced at $10 reserved and $8 general admission, may be purchased at the Big Spring Chamber of Commerce, Third and Gregg streets. There is a $2 discount for senior citizens, students and groups of 15 or more.

This performance is made possible under the sponsorship of the Cultural Arts Council, Big Spring, in cooperation with Advance Performances, an Austin-based arts organization.

Snavely to give clarinet recital

ODESSA — Odessa College and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin will present Jack Snavely in a clarinet recital at 8 p.m. April 16 in the Founders' Building at UTPB.

Snavely is a professor of music at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee where he teaches clarinet, saxaphone and jazz improvisation. He is also a former director of the University Symphonic Band.

In addition, Snavely is active nationally and internationally as a soloist, conductor, clinician, recitalist, adjudicator and clarinetist in the Woodwind Arts Quintet. He has recorded two clarinet recital albums for Golden Crest Records and had articles published in leading music magazines.

During his career in music, Snavely has played with such artists as Tony Bennett, Nat Adderly, Claude Thornhill, Vic Damone, Sammy Davis, Jr., Glen Campbell, Lou Rawls and others.

While he is in Odessa, Snavely will conduct a free woodwind clinic at 8 p.m. April 15, in the Jack Rodgers Fine Arts Recital Hall at OC.

For his performance at UTPB, which is free, Snavely will be accompanied on the piano by Shari Weiner. His selections will include V Bagatelles by Gerald Finzi, Concerto in F Minor by Bernhard Crusell and others.

Snavely has a bachelor's degree in music education from Lebanon Valley College, Annville, Pa., and a master's of music degree in woodwind instruments from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.

He has studied with Joe Allard of New York Philharmonic, Jules Serpentini of Philadelphia Symphony, William Stubbins of University of Michigan and Frank Stachow of Lebanon Valley College.

Big Spring art show scheduled

BIG SPRING — The Big Spring Art Association is sponsoring an area art show Friday through April 14 at Highland Shopping Center. The show and sale is open to the public noon to 8 p.m. Saturday and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. April 14.

Juror for the annual event will be Delmos Hickmott, professor of art at Odessa College.

Categories are graphics, pastels, mixed media, watercolor, acrylic, oil, three-dimensional, photography and novice. Cash and purchase awards will be made, including a $100 cash award for Best of Show. BSAA will take 20 percent commission on all sales.

Entry fee is $5 for non-menbers and $4 for BSAA members per work. Entries are to be hand-delivered to the shopping center between 4 and 7 p.m. Friday. Entries are to be picked up between 4 and 4:30 p.m. April 14.

For more information call the show chairman, Becky Smiley, 1-263-3848.

Film to use Laurel, Hardy clips

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Stan and Ollie are still going strong a generation after their Laurel & Hardy film series.

Hal Roach Studios, which owns 105 of their film classics, has sold the rights to "The Music Box," which won an Academy Award in 1932 as the best short film of the year, to Columbia Pictures for incorporation in a Blake Edwards' film called "A Fine Mess."

Collins to play Maria Callas

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joan Collins will star as the late opera singer Maria Callas in a film to be made in 1986 when ABC's "Dynasty" ends production for the season.

Miss Collins and her partner, Peter Holm, have purchased the rights to the biography of Miss Callas written by Arianna Stassinopoulos.

A major star is being sought to play the role of Aristotle Onassis.

It will be the second production for Collins-Holm Productions. The company will begin filming in Paris in mid-April on "Sins," a six-hour miniseries for CBS in association with New World Television.

MCC

"One of the purposes of the organization is to have a variety of entertainment that will appeal to the entire community," Mrs. Codington says. "We are also dedicated to offering quality attractions at reasonable prices."

COST THIS season is $20 per adult and $10 per-student, which applies to those in school through high school. Memberships will be available through April 27 by writing Midland Community Concerts Association, P.O. Box 10836, Midland, Texas 79702.

Admission to the concerts is by membership only because, as Mrs. Codington says, "We are not able to sell single admission tickets because of our contract with Columbia Artists."

MCC is the only totally volunteer cultural organization in town.

"There is no one in our local organization who is a paid employee. "We are a group of dedicated volunteers."

Mrs. Codington has special feelings about her association with MCC.

"The 20 years I've been involved with MCC have given me so much. Being a member of this volunteer force and knowing I've had a part in bringing the type of high caliber, quality attractions to town that Midland Community Concerts has built its reputation on, has given me such a sense of accomplishment and satisfaction."

Headquarters for the membership campaign, being conducted April 18-27, will be in the lobby of the Lexington Motor Inn, 1003 S. Midkiff St., 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Phone number during the campaign is 699-7216 or 684-4557. Co-chairing the membership committee with Mrs. Codington is Dorothy Perkins. Heidi Goebel is publicity chairman.

"Our track record speaks for itself," says Mrs. Codington. "Our membership list includes people who have bought subscription tickets every season for the past 37 years."

REVIEW

Richard Gere credible as 'King David'

By DAVID LEE FORREST

David Forrest

At first, the idea of Richard Gere playing the Biblical King David is more than a little disconcerting.

One visualizes the worst; Gere perhaps playing David as a sort of "Jewish Gigolo" who is left "Breathless" by Bathsheba and then stops being "An Officer and a Gentleman."

In fact, Gere is really not bad at all. He's no Charlton Heston, to be sure, and his acting does waver shakily a few times during "King David," but his performance is surprisingly credible in a rather difficult role.

Australian director Bruce Beresford also faced a difficult task, since anyone making a Biblical epic these days is haunted by the spectre of the king of epics, Cecil B. De Mille.

In many ways, Beresford may even have out-De Milled De Mille. The legendary Hollywood director had few qualms about admitting that he used Biblical stories so often because they gave him a respectable way to make movies that were full of sex and violence.

Beresford shows much more flesh than De Mille would have ever dreamed of exhibiting, and the graphic killings — including not one, but two decapitations — is startling.

The battle scenes are probably the most brutally bloody and violently realistic ever seen in a film of this type.

At other times, "King David" moves at too dignified a pace for its own good, but for the most part, Beresford shows almost as deft a touch as in his two previous films, "Breaker Morant" and "Tender Mercies."

Despite the familiarity of the story, Beresford even manages to make the obligatory battle with Goliath weirdly suspenseful. One actually has some momentary doubts about whether David will win that showdown.

Beresford is clearly as interested in the politics of "King David" as in the theology.

He seems to hint that both Saul and David were great kings who opposed the political power exercised by the prophets and who viewed the prophets as roadblocks to political unity.

This seems like a recurrent theme, but the penultimate scene, which says that David obeyed the prophets wholeheartedly, abruptly undercuts that idea. Then, at the very end, David tells young Solomon to follow his heart instead of the prophets, which spins the theme around 180 degrees yet again.

If Beresford had made up his mind, "King David" probably would have been a much more intriguing — and much more controversial — film. As it is, Beresford's intentions seem very confused.

While many could, and no doubt will, differ with the film's theology, Beresford gives the distinct impression of having done a great deal of historical research. The southern Italian settings, which are both harsh and beautiful, look very authentic.

"King David" is not the classic, straightforward Biblical spectacle that we fondly remember from the Golden Years of Hollywood, but it is a bold — if flawed — effort to resurrect and modernize an almost extinct genre.

"King David," rated R for considerable violence and some nudity, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'The Slugger's Wife' major league flop

Neil Simon's "The Slugger's Wife" is an error, a foul ball, a strike-out and a major league flop.

This film's plot is slightly similar to last year's baseball movie, "The Natural." The story is about a professional baseball player, played by Michael O'Keefe, who falls in love with a singer, played by Rebecca DeMornay, and then can only bat well when she is either in the stands or watching the game on television.

"The Slugger's Wife" could, however, be retitled "The UnNatural" because of the flagrantly fake way it tells this story.

The dialogue is ludicrous, none of the story comes even close to ringing true and if the characters were any flimiser they'd be transparent.

Miss DeMornay's role is especially demoralizing since she showed such tremendous promise in "Risky Business." She still looks good in the title role of "The Slugger's Wife," but her character is so shallowly written that she can't even use her natural sex appeal effectively. Instead, she seems to be doing a lousy imitation of Shelley Duvall for some reason.

It's also unfortunate that she plays a singer since this means the audience has to listen to her excruciatingly bad version of "Little Red Corvette" (there are a few other tunes she fares better on, though).

O'Keefe is much, much worse. His character isn't just a stereotypical dumb jock; the slugger we see in this movie must be seriously brain-damaged. He has almost no personality to speak of, and what little he has is overwhelmingly obnoxious.

O'Keefe seems to be trying to wrest the title of "Most Annoying Actor In A Neil Simon Movie" away from Richard Dreyfuss. He consistently stresses all the weakest flaws in Simon's screenplay.

Simon's screenplay has to take the blame for most of this. Not even the best actor could pull off material like the awful scene in which O'Keefe uses oral sex — under the bed covers, of course — to explain baseball pitches to his wife.

The only bright spots in this whole dreary mess are Randy Quaid, Cleavant Derricks and Martin Ritt in genuinely funny supporting roles as O'Keefe's teammates.

As far as humor, intelligence, taste, romance and entertainment go, though, the rest of "The Slugger's Wife" isn't even in the ballpark.

"The Slugger's Wife," rated PG-13 for strong language and some sexual innuendo, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Not much plot to 'Friday 13th — Part V'

Forget about "Amadeus," "The Killing Fields," "A Passage to India" or any of the other films that figured so prominently in the recent Oscar ceremonies.

The biggest grossing movie in the United States during Academy Awards week was actually "Friday the 13th, Part V — A New Beginning," which made more than $8 million its first weekend.

The "Friday the 13th" series has, for some darkly obscure reason, become a successful pop culture phenomenon in this country.

The original 1980 "Friday the 13th" was merely a cheap, poor quality rip-off of a much better — but still low-budget — thriller, 1978's "Halloween."

"Halloween," one of the first feature films directed by John Carpenter, wasn't exactly an art film, to be sure, but it was taut, stylish and clever.

In retrospect, the amazing thing about "Halloween" was that it got so much excitement from so little gore. Carpenter used sleight-of-hand film editing to make viewers believe they saw much more violence than they really did.

It was only when carefully watching the film for a second time that one could realize that there was very little blood in "Halloween." Carpenter, like Hitchcock, relied on intense psychological suspense to send chills down the spine instead of using graphically depicted gore to turn the stomach.

"Halloween" earned a tremendous amount of money for such an inexpensively made film, which inevitably inspired the innumerable teen-age slasher clones that have followed in the last half-decade.

Unfortunately, "Halloween's" successors — including both the "Friday the 13th" series and "Halloween's" own sequels — have been utterly dependent on grossing out the audience rather than thrilling it.

But people, particularly teens, keep going to see them. As film critic Leonard Maltin wrote of the original "Friday the 13th," "Young folks unexpectedly made this gory, cardboard thriller a box-office smash — one more clue to why SAT scores continue to decline."

"Part V" focuses on a survivor of the previous film, "Friday the 13th — The Final Chapter," who still seems to be pursued by Jason, the series' murderous anti-hero, despite the fact that Jason was (to our considerable relief) presumably finished off in "The Final Chapter."

There really isn't any plot beyond that. "Part V" is just a monotonously repetitive series of unimaginative killings. Worst of all, the ending leaves the door open for still more awful sequels.

No doubt as long as moviegoers are willing to waste their money on this grisly trash, the filmmakers will keep cynically shoveling out their "Friday the 13th" garbage.

"Friday the 13th, Part V — A New Beginning," rated R for rampant violence and boundless bad taste, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Soundtrack best thing about 'Porky's'

If one is determined and looks hard enough, it is possible to find a redeeming virtue in "Porky's Revenge" — the music soundtrack isn't bad at all.

The rock'n'roll and R&B soundtrack features good music by Jeff Beck, Clarence Clemons, George Harrison, Willie Nelson, Dave Edmunds and a very sharp rendition of "Stagger Lee" by Texas' own Fabulous Thunderbirds.

That's the best thing one can say about "Porky's Revenge." Everything else in this movie is so absolutely awful and resolutely unfunny that it almost manages to make the original lousy 1981 "Porky's" seem amusing.

Even the terribly dumb first sequel, 1983's "Porky's II: The Next Day," was better than this.

The story revolves around a beloved basketball coach at Angel Beach High School in the 1950's who is in trouble because of gambling debts he owes to the infamous Porky, a fat local redneck and would-be gangster.

This situation leads to a seemingly endless series of mean-spirited pranks by his students (these pseudo-teens have to be the oldest bunch of high schoolers since Annette Funicello and Frankie Avalon) including extortion, sexual harrassment, vandalism, voyeurism and breaking and entering.

It is easy to get the feeling that these vicious kids could rape someone, then gun them down in cold blood and chuckle heartily about it.

The grotesque film really has less to do with high school life in the '50s — or even now — than, say, Rod Serling's "Twilight Zone."

The only way to derive any real enjoyment from "Porky's Revenge" is to just listen to the soundtrack album at home. That way you don't have to endure this cynical sexploitation film's horrible dialogue, stupid plot, insipid acting and crudely cruel humor.

"Porky's Revenge," rated R for strong language, considerable sexual innuendo, nudity and mild violence, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

There's no big laugh in 'Police Academy 2'

Last year's "Police Academy" was a modestly funny one-joke movie that really did not deserve a sequel.

This sequel-filled season, however, has already inflicted "Porky's Revenge" and "Friday the 13th, Part V — A New Beginning" upon us and, in comparison, "Police Academy 2: Their First Assignment" feels almost refreshing.

Howard Hesseman plays a police captain in charge of a big city precinct that is being taken over by a tough youth gang. To help bolster his force, he's sent the six singularly unskilled police cadets who graduated last year from the "Police Academy."

Meanwhile, Art Metrano does a bad job of playing a boring villain who is out to steal Hesseman's job out from underneath him.

This weak story provides the excuse to string together a disjointed variety of pretty sophomoric and slightly raunchy jokes.

About half of the adolescent jokes work and the other half fall clumsily on their face. The one thing that saves "Academy 2" is that the funny 50 percent of the jokes are distributed evenly enough throughout the movie that it never becomes too intensely dull.

There are even fewer memorable gags in "Academy 2" than in its predecessor.

Tim Kazurinsky from "Saturday Night Live" has a small but nicely played role as a shopkeeper whose store is blown away by more than 1,200 bullets fired in less than five minutes by the overzealous rookies.

There is also a short Bruce Lee fight parody — complete with hilarious out-of-synch dubbing — that may even be funnier than the similar scenes in "The Last Dragon."

There are also some occasionally nice flashes of visual humor, but most of the jokes are far from subtle.

"Police Academy 2: Their First Assignment" is essentially a harmless — if tasteless — comedy that will probably provide a few mild chuckles, but no big laughs.

"Police Academy 2: Their First Assignment," rated PG-13 for strong language, brief nudity and mild violence, is now showing at North Park Cinema.

Cast has been named for OC's 'Oliver'

ODESSA — Odessa College Theatre Director Paula Thompson has announced the cast for "Oliver," which opens at 8 p.m. April 18, in the Globe Theatre.

"Oliver" is based on Charles Dickens' "Oliver Twist" with book, music and lyrics by Lionel Bart. It will be presented by OC Theatre at 8 p.m. April 18, 19 and 20, and 2 p.m. April 21.

Music for "Oliver" will be directed by Heidi Hofmann and choreography will be done by Nancy Fradd.

Noel Vandergriff, a seventh grader from Sherwood Christian School and a newcomer to OC Theatre, will portray Oliver. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Vandergriff, Noel has taken part in plays at Sherwood Christian School and Austin Elementary.

Keith Pearson, a Diversitech General engineer, will play Fagin. He has performed in more than 30 Odessa and Midland productions, including "Carnival," "Inherit the Wind," and "Silver Whistle."

Mark Gard, a veteran on the OC stage, will portray Artful Dodger. Gard is an OC theatre student who had the lead in this season's opener, "Pippin." He is a member of Odessa College's "Drop of a Hat Players" and has acted in several local productions, including "A Christmas Carol," "The Fantasticks," "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," and others.

Sherie Harding will portray Nancy. She has participated in Permian Playhouse and Permian High School productions.

Other cast members include Phillip Riegel as Mr. Sowerberry, Pat Hodges as Mrs. Sowerberry, Sally Mogford as Mrs. Corney, Oza Whitten as Mr. Bumble, Rodney Hurt as Bill Sykes, Jennifer Richardson as Bet, David Weaver as Mr. Brownlow, Kristin Collinworth as Mrs. Bedwin, Dennis Anderson as Dr. Grimwig, Amy Green as Charlotte.

Members of the adult chorus include Kenon King, Laura Gilbreath, James Tice, Kevin Parrish, Dennis Anderson, David Thomas, Keren Weaver, Amy Green, John Bartleson and Susan Schulz.

Children in the cast include Russel Hurt, Melissa Hurt, Jamie Ferrini, Steven Madero, Nancy Richardson, Shannon Guinn, Marissa Wallace, David Robertson, Nancy Schafer, Wade Green, Karen King, Bret King, Denice King, Mary Gilbreath, Carla Collinsworth, Neil Collinsworth, Delano Lopez and Lita Lopez.

Admission is $2 for adults, $1.50 for students and 50 cents for senior citizens. Tickets will be available in advance at the Globe Theatre box office or at the door. Odessa College students and staff are admitted free with a valid I.D. card.

Liberace tops himself

NEW YORK (AP) — Liberace, that sequined king of show biz, has outdone himself.

He has topped his own ticket selling record at Radio City Music Hall by grossing over $2 million for his upcoming engagement at the art deco concert hall, April 4-21.

His previous record was in April 1984 with $1.6 million in sales. That record was topped by Diana Ross, who grossed $1.7 million last September, and Barry Manilow, who grossed $1.8 million last October.

It's not chic anymore to eat desserts

By CAROL COTT GROSS
King Features Syndicate

Is everybody really on a diet these days, or have all the dessert eaters gone underground? Think about it. When was the last time you went out to eat with anyone who ordered a hot fudge sundae?

If your friends are like mine, they order a dry toasted muffin or a pale melon slice to go with a cup of coffee. Nobody orders exciting desserts anymore. The last time I did was months ago, and I still cringe with shame at the memory.

My husband and I had met some friends at a chic Italian restaurant. As is my habit, I carefully studied the dessert listings before glancing at anything else on the menu. After promising myself a fantastic finale, I ordered a sensible main course and told the waiter to hold the spaghetti.

"If madame doesn't want pasta," said the waiter, "perhaps a nice light salad with arugula?"

"Perfect," said I, while wondering what arugula was.

Arugula turned out to be a spicy salad vegetable which whetted my appetite; but since my main dish of veal with lemon was meager, I was ready for dessert when the waiter wheeled the dessert cart to our table. On the top shelf, I spied a mountain of cream puffs and announced my choice.

"Excellent," said the waiter. "And what can I serve the rest of the party for dessert?" No one spoke.

"We're famous for our cheesecake," prompted the waiter.

"I never eat sweets," said my friend who is a perfect size six. "My motto is: 'One moment on your lips, and five years on your hips.'"

"I've eliminated all refined sugars," said her husband with the zeal of a reformed alcoholic. "Carol, don't you know that white sugar is poison?"

My cheeks were burning. Was I, a tight size 12, going to be the only one to order dessert? My last hope was my husband. He had never passed up a dessert. But with a sinking stomach, I saw him look longingly at the cart and heard him say, "Just coffee for me."

Too embarrassed to cancel my order, and not courageous enough to eat it alone, I tried a ploy: "Maybe the waiter can bring extra forks and everybody can share my dessert?"

"Not I," said the size six.

"Nor I," said her husband. "I drink eight ounces of water before every meal and it kills my appetite."

What was killing me was the pair of cream puffs staring up at me. With feigned boredom, I pushed the plate away and mumbled something about my eyes being bigger than my stomach.

"I'm shocked," said an acquaintance when I related the story. "You're always asserting yourself and you didn't have the guts to eat dessert?"

"I'm not the only one," I protested. "I'm sure there are plenty of people who don't order dessert because of peer pressure."

And I set out to prove it.

"You're right," agreed my friend Susan when I asked her about my dessert theory. "Everybody I know is on a diet, or 'watching' themselves, when we're in a restaurant. But the weird thing is, they don't lose weight. I bet they pig out on Yodels and Cheese Doodles at home."

"Well, what about you?" I asked. "Do you order dessert?"

"When I want lemon meringue pie, I order it," Susan bragged. "And I don't make excuses like, 'I'll starve tomorrow' or beg someone to split it with me."

Feeling depressed, I drove to the nearest bakery and ordered a cream puff. "Just baked 'em fresh," said the clerk.

Since she had a friendly face, I ventured to ask, "Are people buying much cake lately?"

"Sure, but with all the chatter about diets, we don't sell many layer cakes. The big business is miniatures." And she pointed to a cabinet crammed with bite-sized pastries of all kinds.

"Take a regular slice of cake on your plate," she explained, "and you look like you've got no will power. But if you pop some minis in your mouth, you don't need a dessert plate and nobody makes you feel guilty about 'cheating.'"

My next diet discussion was at the hairdresser's.

"I diet all week," I overheard a woman say. "So when I go out for dinner on a Saturday night, I deserve dessert."

"You've got guts," I said.

"Thanks for the compliment," said the woman. "But I'm really not brave. I use a diversionary tactic."

"Like what?" I asked.

"Well, when the waiter asks about dessert," she confided, "and everybody self-righteously orders a plain cup of coffee, I order something outrageous, like a souffle, and ask, 'Haven't you people heard about caffeine?' While they're explaining, 'One cup won't kill me,' I eat my dessert in peace."

"And what if they order decaffeinated coffee?"

"No problem. The process used to decaffeinate coffee is worse than caffeine."

Potatoes hot food again

By PHILOMENA CORRADENO
King Features Syndicate

Trendy — that's the current word in the lexicon of fashion, furniture and food. Potatoes are hot again. You need only read the fast-foods ads and hear their commercials to know that potatoes have come into the spotlight. Fast-food establishments feature baked potatoes with toppings for a full entree; others offer chicken with mashed potatoes.

The hearty vegetable, a staple in homes around the world, had a rather shaky beginning. According to the "Encyclopedia of Food and Nutrition," the potato grew as wild food in the Andes and was finally cultivated 4,000 to 7,000 years ago. Spanish explorers brought it to Europe from Peru. But it took some time for this odd-looking tuber to be accepted.

In Italy in the 1850s, it was regarded not as food but as a decorative vine. In France it was shunned until Antoine-Auguste Parmentier, a botanist who recognized its value, took a drastic step in his efforts to popularize the potato. He had armed soldiers guarding the royal potato farms during the day and had the guards removed at night. Naturally, this lured the scorners. Feeling it had to be valuable, they stole the potatoes.

There are several varieties. In North America, crops include round reds, round whites, long whites and Russet Burbanks.

The Russet Burbanks, which include the Idaho, are oval in shape. Their skin is thicker than the reds and whites, a darker brown with light netting and a mininum of shallow eyes. The flesh is mealier and fluffier, with a lower moisture and a high-solids content, making them excellent for baking.

Long and round whites and the reds have a waxier flesh, a thinner and lighter skin and higher moisture.

For a while, a few years ago, potatoes suffered an ill-deserved reputation as being off limits for dieters. Don't believe it. A medium potato weighing about one-third of a pound has only about 110 calories.

It's what you add that makes the calories soar. For example:

One strip of bacon adds about 50 calories.

One tablespoon of butter adds about 100 calories.

Two tablespoons of sour cream add about 50 calories.

One-third cup yogurt adds about 50.

One-quarter cup low-fat cottage cheese and chives adds about 50.

If you're watching calories, forget those dressings — simply add a sprinkle of salt and pepper and a generous squeeze of lemon juice.

The latest in potato service is the topped baked potato — the meal in a shell. In this recipe, the famed Reuben ingredients are mixed into the baked pulp, returned to the shells and popped into the oven for a while. The flavorful mixture is then topped with a tangy mustard sauce.

STUFFED POTATOES REUBE
6 large Russet potatoes
Oil
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup milk
1 (8-ounce) can sauerkraut
1½ cups diced cooked corned beef
¼ teaspoon pepper
Salt
Mustard Cheese Sauce

Scrub potatoes; rub lightly with oil. Pierce several times with fork. Bake at 400F 50 to 60 minutes or until tender. Cut lengthwise slice from top of each potato. Scoop out pulp and mash with butter and milk. Add sauerkraut, corned beef, pepper and salt to taste. Spoon mixture into shells. Return to oven and bake 15 to 20 minutes. Serve with Mustard Cheese Sauce (recipe follows).

Mustard Cheese Sauce: Melt 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in saucepan. Blend in 3 tablespoons flour, 1 tablespoon prepared mustard, ½ teaspoon salt and dash each pepper and Worcestershire sauce. Add 1½ cups milk; cook and stir until thickened. Stir in 1 cup shredded Swiss cheese and heat until melted. Makes about 2 cups.

Mexican Potato Pancakes

Potato pancakes assume a Mexican flavor in this delicious accompaniment for meat entreeor scrambled eggs. The potatoes may darken as you grate them. Don't be concerned about that. Prepare the cheese-egg mixture first, then measure each cup of potatoes and immediately add it to the egg mixture.

MEXICAN POTATO PANCAKES
3 to 4 Russet potatoes
¼ cup shredded sharp cheddar cheese
2 eggs, beaten
2 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons diced green chilies
1 teaspoon grated onion
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup butter or margarine

Pare and finely grate enough potatoes to measure 3 cups. Combine potatoes, cheese, eggs, flour, chilies, onion and salt in large bowl. Heat butter in skillet. Drop one heaping tablespoon of potato mixture for each cake into hot butter; pan-fry until golden on both sides. Keep warm in oven until ready to use.

That other great potato, the Idaho, is renowned for its excellent baking quality. But its fluffy, dry texture makes it ideal for any use. In this dish it's stir-fried with pork. If you are using a wok, heat it for at least 15 seconds before adding the oil. Coat the sides of the wok with oil by carefully swirling the oil around the pan.

CHINESE POTATOES AND PORK
2 medium-size Idaho potatoes
3 medium-size pork chops
5 tablespoons peanut oil
2 tablespoons sesame seeds
4 scallions, cut into 1-inch lengths
3 tablespoons soy sauce
2 teaspoons cornstarch
1 sweet red pepper, seeded and cut into strips
1 cup fresh or frozen snow peas
1 clove garlic, minced
1 teaspoon vinegar
½ teaspoon salt

Peel potatoes; slice into matchstick strips 2 inches by ⅛ inch. Cover with cold water. Trim fat and bone from pork chops. Cut pork into strips 2 inches by ⅛ inch. Heat wok or large skillet over high heat; add 1 tablespoon oil. Tip pan to coat entire cooking surface with oil. When oil is hot, add sesame seeds; stir-fry vigorously 1 minute until seeds are golden but not brown. Remove seeds from pan.

In bowl combine pork, sesame seeds, scallions, soy sauce and cornstarch. Drain potatoes; pat dry. In same wok or skillet heat 2 tablespoons oil; stir-fry potato strips vigorously 2 minutes or until crisp-tender; remove, reserve.

Heat 1 tablespoon oil; stir-fry red pepper, snow peas and garlic 1 minute. Remove, reserve. Heat remaining 1 tablespoon oil; stir-fry pork vigorously 2 minutes. Add potatoes, vegetable mixture, vinegar and salt. Cook 2 to 3 minutes longer.

We naturally associate rice with a curried dish. Not in this meal-in-a-shell. Baked Idaho potato is topped with curried lamb.

BAKED POTATO WITH CURRIED LAMB
4 Idaho potatoes
1 pound lamb, cubed
2 tablespoons peanut oil
1 cup chopped onion
1 clove garlic, mashed
1 tablespoon curry powder
1 (13¾-ounce) can chicken broth
1 apple, sliced
½ teaspoon salt
1½ tablespoons cornstarch
¼ cup cold water

Scrub potatoes well. Dry thoroughly and prick with a fork. Bake at 425F for 55 to 60 minutes, or at 350F for 1½ hours, until soft.

Meanwhile, in saucepan, brown lamb on all sides in heated oil. Turn off heat for a few minutes to allow oil to cool. Add onion, garlic and curry powder. Cook 5 minutes over medium heat, stirring to prevent burning onion.

Stir in chicken broth, apple and salt. Simmer 1 hour or until lamb is tender. Stir together cornstarch and water; add to pan. Stirring constantly, bring to a boil; boil 1 minute.

With a fork, split baked potatoes in half and top each half with curried lamb.

This dish has a pizza flavor that makes it a fine accompaniment for roast chicken or roast pork.

OREGANOED POTATO BAKE
1 (1-pound) can Italian-type tomatoes
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
1 small clove garlic, minced
½ teaspoon oregano
½ teaspoon basil
¼ teaspoon dried red pepper flakes (optional)
3 medium potatoes, cut in ½-inch-thick slices
3 tablespoons grated Romano cheese
¼ pound mozzarella, diced

In baking pan, combine tomatoes, 1 tablespoon parsley, garlic, oregano, basil, pepper flakes. Stir in potatoes, coating them thoroughly. Then spread potatoes in a single layer. Sprinkle with Romano cheese, mozzarella and remaining parsley. Cover pan with aluminum foil. Bake at 375F about 45 minutes or until potatoes are fork-tender.

Here is a good way to use left-over mashed potatoes, but if they are not available, this dish is worth cooking up a batch of spuds. The potatoes have a secret filling of cheese.

LLAPINGACHOS
(Ecuadorian Potato Cakes)
1½ cups chopped onions
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
3 tablespoons vegetable oil
3 cups unseasoned mashed potatoes (about 1½ pounds)
¼ cup flour
3 tablespoons chopped parsley
1 teaspoon paprika
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
½ cup shredded Muenster or Monterey Jack cheese

In large skillet over medium heat saute onions in 1 tablespoon of the butter and 1 tablespoon of the oil until transparent and tender, about 10 minutes. Drain onions with slotted spoon and add to potatoes in large bowl. Mix to blend.

Sprinkle flour, parsley, paprika, salt and pepper over potato mixture. Knead into 8 equal balls. Make a deep impression in each and fill with 1 tablespoon of the cheese. Mold potato mixture over cheese to enclose completely. Gently flatten each ball into a patty 1 inch thick.

In large skillet bring half the remaining butter and oil to sizzling over medium heat. Add 4 of the patties to skillet. Saute about 3 minutes on each side until browned. Remove and keep warm. Repeat with the remaining butter, oil and potato patties.

A mixture of vegetables makes cooking, serving and clean-up a cinch. The potatoes make the green veggies more palatable for those little ones who try to shun them.

POTATO VEGETABLE QUILT
¼ cup butter or margarine
¼ cup sliced green onion
1 clove garlic, crushed
½ teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
½ cup chicken broth
3 or 4 medium potatoes, cubed
¼ pound mushrooms, sliced
1 quart mixed fresh vegetables (broccoli and cauliflowerettes, sliced zucchini)
Paprika

Melt butter in large skillet with onion, garlic, salt and pepper. Add potatoes and vegetables, tossing to coat. Stir in chicken broth. Cover; simmer until vegetables are tender, about 20 minutes. Turn into serving dish. Sprinkle with paprika.

All moms super to their children

By RACHEL COPE GOLDFARB
King Features Syndicate

There's one in every crowd, smiling contentedly through a gaze fixed on her children who are engaged in educationally sound playtime activity. She doesn't scream, hassle or rattle. She is a Mom of the Year.

I'm fascinated by these individuals, usually dressed in neatly pressed coordinates with appliques of ducks or strawberries on their blouses and wraparound skirts.

Personally, I don't buy two-piece outfits because one piece or the other is always in the dirty clothes pile or the kids are using it for their "funky fashion show."

When the children pile onto the bus in the morning, she is standing on the corner waving them off with backpacks buckled and in place to the start off another good day.

My children often barely make the bus, trailing lunch money, homework papers and yesterday's PTA notices as they run. And I certainly can't walk (or run) them to the corner in my coffee-stained nightgown with the rip on the shoulder.

As the bus rounds the corner in the afternoon, our heroine is squeezing fresh lemons for lemonade and taking a freshly baked apple pie out of the oven so she can revive her children after a taxing day of learning.

My children have resorted to preparing their own stale white bread and chocolate-flavored water snacks when I have forgotten that their arrival was pending and was tied up on the phone.

Our special Mom supervises her children's homework with the trained eye of a lace inspector. Not one misplaced comma nor misspelled word gets past her without correction.

Assignments are placed in the proper notebook folder and replaced in a pristine bookbag which is then perched upon a specially built shelf near the front door.

Homework, in our house, has an air of mystery about it. My kids exert their independence through home assignments only they can understand. They like to do it by themselves, when they choose, and on any paper they deem appropriate.

I have decided that as long as it is done, this self-reliance is healthy. But I have intercepted a mathematics drill written on the back of our bank statement as it was about to be stuffed into a backpack that smelled like rotten banana peel. Sometimes, I just have to exert parental control over their independence.

Super Mom really shows her stuff when it comes to bath and bedtime. She sings cheerily as she attacks every stubborn magic marker stain and mud smear in assembly-line fashion.

Scrubbing teeth, nails, hair and feet is second nature to her.

Her cherubs line up for final nighttime approval in ceremonially pure nighties. They scamper into their turned-down beds and await good-night kisses.

Getting clean in our house is a serendipitous occurrence. Modesty is the excuse my children give for not allowing me in the bathroom as they soak their dirt away.

An assortment of 23 small plastic toys bobble about in the tepid water, distracting the children from the task of removing clay from under fingernails and scraping bubblegum debris from their cheeks.

But I am always at least sure my children are cleaner after than before their bath. They struggle into their too-small pajamas (I hate to spend $18.50 for articles of clothing that will look like they slept in them by morning) and begin to think of reasons they can't go to bed.

Stomach aches, insomnia and the "little balls that get on the sheets" keep them from closing their sleepy eyes and drifting off.

After her children are restfully snoozing, Mom of the Year sets about preparing her children's lunches for the next day.

Freshly baked bread is blanketed around turkey breast roasted especially for sandwich purposes. Apples, homemade oatmeal cookies and hot soup in a thermos round out the lunchbox fare for her kiddies.

I've spent a lot of time worrying abut how I measure up to this paragon of motherhood. I've decided that I never will.

But on different scales, I get top marks. I laugh at my kids' jokes, even after the tenth telling. I tell them about what I'm thinking and listen when they tell me. I teach them to respect themselves and other people. And I give good hugs.

I may not ever be Mother of the Year, but I'm my kids' mom, forever.

Novel romanticizes, justifies crime

"If Tomorrow Comes," by Sidney Sheldon. Morrow. 416 Pages. $17.95.

By CAROL DEEGAN
Associated Press

In Sidney Sheldon's new novel, "If Tomorrow Comes," a young woman is framed on phony charges, is tricked by her lawyer, abandoned by her fiance, and thrown into prison.

But Tracy Whitney doesn't let all this ruin her life. Instead, she turns adversity to her advantage, and when she gets out of jail she goes after all those who have done her wrong.

Tracy feels no remorse when she puts into action events that bring to Tracy's 15-year prison sentence.

Next, Tracy goes to Philadelphia, where she has lived and worked, to take care of her former husband-to-an end the careers of several unscrupulous New Orleans characters. After all, they were the ones responsible for her family's ruined business, her mother's suicide, and be. Charles Stanhope III has married someone else, and after seeing the unhappy couple together, Tracy decides that Charles' boring, lifeless marriage, will be punishment enough for him.

Tracy tries to return to her job as a computer operator at a Philadelphia bank, but when that doesn't work, she moves to New York City, where her efforts to obtain legitimate employment are unsuccessful.

Discouraged and disgusted, Tracy turns to a life of crime, but with this twist: She will never hurt innocent people. The people who will jump at her swindles will be the greedy or the immoral or both.

She becomes a highly successful con artist, traveling throughout Europe in various disguises. She steals jewels and paintings in the most clever ways imaginable — and even though she amasses a large fortune, she has no intention of quitting.

In these days of vigilante justice and anti-heroes, a character such as that of Tracy Whitney is probably not as unusual as it once may have been. There may be those who question the appropriateness of a book that romanticizes and justifies crime, but nevertheless this is a smooth-flowing and exciting novel.

'Rabbi' witty, suspenseful book

A Review

"Someday the Rabbi Will Leave, by Harry Kemelman. Morrow. 264 Pages. $15.95.

ELIZABETH CAPPON
Associated Press

The machinations of sleazy politicians menace his town. His teen-age neighbor is accused of murder in a hit-and-run case. The new president of his temple insists he officiate at an intermarriage or they'll find a rabbi who will.

What's a rabbi to do? If he's Rabbi David Small he applies logic, wit and Judaic wisdom to solve the murder, subsequently saving the town and his job.

"Someday the Rabbi Will Leave" is Harry Kemelman's eighth Rabbi Small novel. He creates an often witty, suspenseful mystery centering on small town politics.

An eclectic cast of characters is headed by:

The new temple president, a retired millionaire go-getter who runs his temple like a corporation.

His strong-willed daughter, determined to make her mark as a political power.

A shy, incompetent lawyer running for office because lawyering doesn't seem to be his forte.

A shady wheeler-dealer not above a little blackmail in manipulating office-seekers.

The accused teen-ager who proclaims an alibi.

At the heart of the several swirling plots and subplots Rabbi Small manages to outthink everybody, police included, producing some surprising twists.

At times some of the characters seem close to cardboard figures and there's an occasional off-key note (the teen-ager refers to his car as a "jalopy," a term now passe). Still, his many fans will hope the rabbi sticks around for a while longer to solve a few more mysteries with his special blend of sleuthing and chutzpah.

Book chronicles English's change

"The English Language"; by Robert W. Burchfield; Oxford, $19.95, 194 pp.

By JEFFRY S. UNGER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

A Review

The occasion was a news conference about eight years ago.

Robert W. Burchfield, the chief editor of the "Oxford English Dictionary," was going to make a startling announcement.

At least that's what the gushing publicist who called United Press International in Chicago told my editor.

"Unger, how'd you like to go out and do a story about a guy who edits dictionaries?" my editor asked, pretending to give me a choice.

I must have said sure, pretending to be interested, because I ended up listening to Burchfield's prepared remarks. What he said, in essence, was that 200 years from now, the American language will be so different from that of England that the peoples of the two nations won't be able to understand each other.

That was startling.

What was even more startling, however, was what happened after Burchfield, dressed in a conservative gray suit — I remember this because my editor insisted on reporters including details about clothing in stories — finished his talk and fielded the last of our ignorant questions.

A television news crew, consisting of a reporter and a cameraman, rushed through the door as the news conference was breaking up.

"Are you Robert Burchfield?" the newswoman asked breathlessly.

"Yes, I am."

"Did you just have a news conference?"

"Yes, we did."

"Well, would you mind repeating it?"

Burchfield appeared momentarily bewildered, but then, perhaps as befits a mild-mannered lexicographer in a conservative gray suit, he agreed.

And for the next 20 minutes, the television news team and I listened to him calmly go through his whole spiel again.

This scene kept coming to mind while I was reading Burchfield's latest book, "The English Language," because Burchfield's calm, thoughtful approach is so evident in his writing.

Although Burchfield writes in a direct and understated style, the cumulative effect of the presentation of his wealth of knowledge about the English language is dazzling. Anyone with at least a passing interest in the development of words, punctuation, grammar, spelling and pronunciation will find his book fascinating.

A historical survey rather than a definitive text, "The English Language" was designed for the general reader, Burchfield says. Scholars seeking the quirks and quarks of English would do best to look elsewhere.

Burchfield begins his informal lecture with a discussion of events of the fifth century, when English was spoken by a few thousand people who immigrated to England from Schleswig and Holstein. Britons, who spoke the Celtic language, retreated before the invading Germanic tribes.

Soon after St. Augustine arrived in Canterbury in A.D. 597, Christianity spread throughout the nation, thus introducing many Latin words into English. Some already had found their way into the language thanks to the Germanic tribes: "mint" (Old English "mynet"); "pound" (O.E. "pund"); "sack" (O.E. "sacc"). Beginning in the late eighth century, Scandinavian warriors began raiding English coastal settlements. Inevitably, Scandinavian words were adopted by the English, including the forerunners of our modern-day words for husband, fellow and law.

The Norman conquest in 1066 had a strong influence on phonetic changes — numerous dipthong words were introduced into English (choice, cloister, employ, etc.) — and a revolutionary effect on vocabulary, Burchfield says.

"The radical nature of the change is underlined by the fact that whereas the words king and queen are English, advise, command, commons, country, court, govern, parliament, peer, people, Privy Council, realm, reign, royalty, rule, and sovereign are all French," Burchfield says.

Burchfield also traces the effect of printing presses on English and examines why the English ridiculed the speech of the upstart colonists. He looks, too, at the evolution of grammars and dictionaries — dictionaries, of course, being his specialty.

Among the scholars whose work Burchfield mentions is Sir James A.H. Murray, the legendary lexicographer who compiled the first edition of the OED. Murray was the subject of an excellent biography, "Caught in the Web of Words," published eight years ago.

Burchfield clearly has been ensnared by the same spider that caught his predecessor.

Children today don't accept stories way they did in past

By BONNIE ROBISON
King Features Syndicate

While visiting my 3-year-old granddaughter, Arica, I sit down with a stack of children's books to read to her. Right on top is "Little Red Riding Hood," an international classic and a good book to start with.

After all, reading to a child is important to her development and introduces her to the wonderful stories that have endured through the years. Everybody knows that. Being a devoted grandmother, I vow not to let this opportunity slip away.

The first paragraph of this classic tells about a grandmother who makes a fetching red-velvet cloak for her granddaughter. The little girl is so crazy about the cloak that she wears it all the time, and people take to calling her "Little Red Riding Hood." Makes sense to me, but Arica says, "What was her name before that?" Details, details.

"Um, it doesn't say, honey," I hedge. "Maybe she didn't like her name, anyway." A clever explanation, I think, but Arica only gives me an unimpressed stare.

As Little Red Riding Hood skips through the woods to Grandma's house with her basket of goodies, she meets a wolf, and they have a chatty conversation. I sense Arica getting ready to ask why Little Red Riding Hood's mother lets her go alone into the wolf-infested woods, so I hurry on with the story.

This particular wolf is hardly one of your everyday variety. Just Little Red Riding Hood's luck to run into a conniving type who can plot the ingestion of both the girl and the old woman. So, instead of eating Little Red Riding Hood on the spot, he tells her to take plenty of nice wildflowers to her grandmother.

The kid is not a bit suspicious and obviously has not been warned about the perils of making friends with wolves, so she starts picking. Our furry friend runs ahead to Grandma's house and knocks at the door. I glance at Arica, whose furrowed brow warns me that the critique is still on.

"Who is there?" calls Grandma weakly from her bed. Now, wouldn't you think Grandma would be savvy enough to know it isn't Little Red Riding Hood that answers? But no, she invites him in, and, of course, the wily wolf goes straight to the bed and swallows the old lady whole.

"Can wolves really eat people?" Arica wants to know.

"Well, I think they would have to be very, very hungry," I say, squirming out of that one. But I find myself reading the story as if for the first time.

Then comes the part about the wolf getting into Grandma's nightgown and cap. What's the matter with kids today? Instead of being properly terrified, Arica giggles. Well, come to think of it, maybe the picture of the wolf struggling with buttons could provoke a chuckle or two.

When Little Red Riding Hood finally gets to the cottage, she has a funny feeling something is wrong. Grandma doesn't look right to her. Instead of leaving while she has a chance, she carries on a dialogue with the unshaven Grandma about the size and merits of her ears, eyes and teeth. We all know how that ends — Little Red Riding Hood gets gobbled up, too. Nice place, Grandma's house.

Arica gives me that glassy look that says she isn't buying all of this. Before she can ask any more difficult questions, I plunge ahead.

Enter the hunter, who hears loud snores coming from Grandma's cottage and stops to check on the old woman. But he is not fooled for one minute by a wolf in a ruffled nightgown and decides to shoot him on the spot.

But wait — our woodsy hero hesitates, thinking maybe Grandma is inside. He uses his handy knife to open the sleeping wolf. Sure enough, out climbs Little Red Riding Hood, followed by Grandma — in her underwear, we presume. The wolf sleeps soundly through the whole operation.

This caper is too much for Arica. "How could they breathe inside a wolf?"

I admit to being stumped, so I offer a brief explanation of fantasy, telling her she has to imagine some things and, after all, stories don't have to be true.

"Oh," she says, with that expression children reserve for adults who give them lame excuses. Maybe I would be better off reading her the newspaper.

Then, of all things, Little Red Riding Hood and Grandma and the hunter gather rocks, stuff the wolf with them, and Grandma sews him up. This wakens the wolf immediately, and he tries to escape, but the rocks drag him down and he falls dead at their feet. Not a word of explanation as to why major surgery fails to rouse our villain but being stuffed full of rocks is fatal.

"Did they put him in the trash or what?" asks Arica. Good question. What does our society do with dead wolves?

" Probably the hunter buried him or skinned him or something," I say, my voice trailing off.

"Oh," she says again. And just when I begin to think she is convinced, Arica announces, "Grandma, that's a dumb story."

This makes me wonder. Whatever happened to the mystery and awe that used to be inspired by storytelling? With the way kids are today, I can't suppress my fear for the future of fairy tales. Why, my generation grew up on these tales; it's the American way of life.

Or is it? The more I think about it, the more I realize Arica is probably right: "Little Red Riding Hood" is a silly story. Matter of fact, I'm surprised that the people who worry about violence haven't pulled the book off the market.

And why haven't the nutrition experts protested over the fact that Little Red Riding Hood brings Grandma cake and wine and expects her to get well?

I shuffle through the pile of books to find something more suitable. I reject "Hansel and Gretel" because I don't want to cope with a stepmother mean enough to send kids into the woods to starve and a witch who is willing to bake them in the oven for dinner. Pretty radical, even for fantasy.

"Three Little Pigs" isn't so bad, except for a wolf with the lung capacity of a hurricane. "The Gingerbread Man" seems harmless on the surface, until you think about a cookie outrunning everybody in town. And in "Chicken Little," a fox eats a whole barnyard bunch who are on the praiseworthy mission of telling the king the sky is falling.

THE TALE OF THE THREE OF HEARTS

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

Neither vulnerable, South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ◇.

The Three of Hearts was rather overwhelmed by the occasion. Almost all the cards in the pack had had their moment in the limelight, and he could recall no single incident in his career worthy of note.

Peer pressure had finally gotten to him, and he had appealed to a noted composer of problems for assistance. He was now ready to reveal the results to the bridge world.

"Ladies and gentlemen of the press," he began haltingly. "As you know, for several months now you have been besieged by wondrous plays performed by my fellow members of the pack, none of which I could equal. However, on the table in front of you is a problem. You have to make four spades after the lead of the queen of diamonds.

"As you can see, all you have to do to make your contract is to avoid losing three heart tricks and a trump. Suppose that you win the ace of diamonds and lead a heart to the king. East wins the ace and returns a trump. Whether you finesse or rise with the ace, West will get in to cash the king of trumps, and you will have to lose three heart tricks.

"As the cards lie, you can make the contract by leading a heart and ducking at trick two. When East returns a trump, win the ace and lead another heart. Since East has the ace of hearts and not the king of spades, you will be able to ruff your third heart on the board. But that would fail if West had the ace of hearts.

"The solution is most elegant. After winning the ace of diamonds, cross to the ace of clubs and lead me from dummy! If West wins this trick, whether with the queen or ace, he cannot return a trump without sacrificing his trump trick, so you will always be able to ruff a heart. If East wins the heart to return a trump, you you will always be able to hold your heart losers to two. As long as trumps are 2-1, this line will work against any distribution of the heart honors!"

Send any questions for this column to Charles H. Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Complete Bridge," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged to be the best received.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, April 8, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You are able to settle a long-running dispute now and get to the heart of something that has caused problems for years. Devote more attention to your family and friends. As your popularity grows, be careful to keep in touch with those you have known for a long time. Pull out all the stops at work and you will soon savor a sweet victory. Be generous with those you have defeated. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: "Knight Rider's" Edward Mulhare, all-star catcher Gary Carter, actor turned U.S. Ambassador to Mexico John Gavin, former First Lady Betty Ford, John Schneider, Carmen McRae.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Steer clear of speculative ventures and risky propositions. Creative and artistic projects will repay the effort you put into them. Maintain a low profile when around someone who is argumentative.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not take chances with jointly-owned funds. New financial or business propositions should be temporarily shelved. Mate or neighbor plans an entertaining evening. You have fun talking with older people.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The morning brings a pleasant surprise concerning your job. Making special arrangements will require careful groundwork. Be prepared to put in some overtime. Higher-ups reward those who show initiative.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A secret meeting with the object of your affections will brighten your day. Avoid taking risks with your money. A domestic situation shows improvement following a candid talk. Make intelligent compromises.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A promise may not be fulfilled. You rise to the occasion, impressing someone very influential. Listen to your friends' advice, but follow your own intuition. Your instincts are excellent.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept 22): Your co-workers could be ornery today. All business transactions require careful handling. Attention to detail will build your reputation and bring you new clients. Give work top priority.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Business trends are mixed. Postpone making a major decision until more information is available. A younger person shows a romantic interest in you. Know your own heart. Flirting could cause complications.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Continue to work hard and your paycheck will grow fatter. Family matters are still somewhat sensitive. A true reconciliation is possible after everyone cools down.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Enlist family members' cooperation in reducing household expenses. It is easier to reach agreements now than in the past. Enjoy small pleasures with those closest to your heart.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A creative or artistic project could be source of extra income. A newcomer would like to spend more time with you. You may not feel the same! Be kind but firm.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The creative ideas flow freely now. Jot them down before you forget them. Salespeople earn nice bonuses. Seize an opportunity to travel. Romance is more exciting than in the past.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You could get an important phone call today. Stay close to home base. Someone at a distance offers excellent advice. Follow it! New financial gains are possible for those who think big.

Creature comforts make facility seem like home

By LILLIAN S. MURPHY
King Features Syndicate

My widowed mother was 82 when the deterioration of her general health, coupled with the affliction of Parkinson's disease, made the family consider the necessity of nursing home care.

My sister, who lived a short distance away from Mother, admitted that she was finding it increasingly difficult to take care of her own family and to include Mom's shopping, cooking and general household chores in her schedule.

Mother confided, too, about the same time, that she was aware that it would be in her own best interest to relocate to more convenient facilities. In fact, several members of her local choral group had moved to a retirement home.

Giving up her cherished independence and accepting round-the-clock nursing care was an enormous step, but we vowed to keep in constant contact and to help make her life as cheerful and as pleasant as possible.

Ten years later we're still doing just that. However, with time, we have all become much more experienced in her care and treatment. Possibly, some of our methods of coping with this situation may assist others in similar circumstances, particularly seniors, since I, too, with the passing years have become a senior myself.

When an elderly person enters a retirement home, or similar establishment, instant comforts, such as having one's own television and telephone, are usually the first essential requirements. Artificial flowers, a radio, clock, a calendar and pictures are also helpful additions.

IN OUR case, since my sister lives nearest to my mother's place of residence, she telephones her at precisely the same time each day, and has me do it if she has a change of plans.

When I was working and living a good distance away, I'd go to the office half an hour early each day in order to write her a letter before starting my work.

Knowing Mother's arthritic hands had lost much of their former dexterity, I would make a point of sealing the envelope only at the center-glued portion, so that she was able to open the letter easily.

I would also typewrite, using capital letters and double spacing for ease in reading. There was never any difficulty in finding things to say, because in her confinement she'd find practically everything interesting, such as any baking I had done, what went on at the office, the latest dress fashions, what new items and services were available in the stores, any purchases we had made, and news from people we had spoken to. In the letters, I would always ask her if there was anything special she'd like us to bring on the weekend.

In the early days when she first entered the home and was more or less ambulatory, she was often driven to my sister's house, and we all enjoyed seeing her once again at the family table.

When my husband and I eventually relinquished our own automobile, it did not deter us from taking her out for short walks, or even getting a taxi and taking her out to tea. She was able to look forward to an entertaining and often eventful visit from a family member each weekend. As the years advanced and her health declined, car rides became impossible, but we were still able to wheel her around the grounds outside the home.

ALL HER life Mother has been meticulously neat, and while strict rules of cleanliness are established in her building, there are times when the busy nurses are unable to straighten things immediately to her liking. For this reason, whenever a family member visits, anything considered out of place is corrected.

We also keep her favorite colognes and talcum powder well supplied, and her special brands of cosmetics (at 94) are always at hand for the nurses to apply before visiting time. We are very glad that Mother still likes to keep well-groomed.

She's always been passionately fond of color and delights in the gifts of jewelry that we bring — bracelets, necklaces, brooches and earrings in different shades.

In fact, my husband once bought her an inexpensive adjustable ring with her birthstone, and she admires it so much she refuses to have it removed under any circumstances. Whenever we go on vacation, we always send her cards and bring her back a souvenir.

Her favorite cookies and candies are a must, and, because Mother can no longer stand unaided and help herself to her personal supplies, a dish with a rubber suction cup underneath is secured at the end of her bed table. The dish is always filled with a few ready-to-eat snacks.

On my visiting day I make a point of lunching with her and if she fancies the sandwich I have brought along for myself, she feels very mischievous when we trade.

Since I have traveled four hours by public transportation, especially when the weather's cold, I am only too grateful for the hot lunch. In Mother's case, she rarely gets anything as mundane as a cheese or salmon sandwich and is glad for the chance to exchange.

AS SOON as it became obvious that Mother was getting hard-of-hearing, we proceeded to get her an amplified telephone. The device is provided by the telphone company and conveniently adjusts the volume. When age caught up with her vision, we bought a large marked disc from a drug store. This simple gadget is attached to the dialing instruments of the telphone and is especially designed to enlarge the numbers and figures on the rotating disc.

Because she is now unable to write for herself, we correspond on her behalf with old neighbors, friends and family overseas. We regularly mail any greeting cards she'd like sent, first showing her the cards we have purchased and then entering the message she dictates.

We make certain her avid interest in world affairs is not neglected, should she have missed any television information, and we make a point of keeping her up to date on all family news that we know will interest and please her.

Although she is now dependent upon continual and complete assistance, she is still our mother, the head of our family, and thus we try to include her in almost everything that is going on. She knows we find her advice invaluable, and we often ask her opinion. We also know that this helps to preserve her authority and her sense of being needed.

Because her motion is so very limited, there's obviously very little opportunity for any clothing wear and tear. However, we know that she appreciates pretty garments and see to it that she has a variety of stout, supporting colorful slippers, sunny smocks (preferably with frontal openings), hose, warm attractive cardigans, soft robes and loose lap covers (baby blankets are perfect for this purpose). A straw hat with a large brim is a must for those sunny days when she's wheeled outdoors, and at those times she likes to carry a small purse.

When making several of the above-mentioned purchases, we frequently need to take along a currently worn item to compare length and width, and we always remember to take into consideration that any footwear must allow for her foot-swelling problems.

TO EASE THE difficulty of having to be in a sitting position daily, we have found an inflatable rubber ring, designed for such a purpose, covered with a cushion cover, that makes her more comfortable. Sometimes she has a square of lambswool placed between her and the cushion for added padding.

The home provides many diversions for ambulatory residents, but in Mother's case, an occasional bingo game or birthday party punctuates her weekly routine. Mother has her own special volunteer two or three times a week who not only wheels her around, but gives her little gifts and surprises.

We all keep in mind that even though the years have flown and old age has claimed her, we are determined that her remaining time will not be empty or dismal. Anyway, we enjoy doing everything we can to bring as much happiness as possible into her life.

Elderly people delight in past recollections, especially of their children's early years. So with this in mind, for one birthday gift I prepared a large photo album in dramatic "this is your life" sequence.

I went back as early as available photographs permitted — starting with Mother and Father surrounded by the four of us, progressing through our growing-up years, then including additional family members and, as time passed, the subsequent grandchildren.

This is now one of Mother's most treasured possessions, and during many a visit, we chat cosily and enjoy leafing through the album and "remembering when."

ON TOP of the chest of drawers in Mother's room are an assortment of pictures of family weddings, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, all happy family reminders.

I frequently take my camera on visits, particularly on holidays and other special occasions. Not only does Mother enjoy seeing the photos, but relatives and friends also look forward to recent pictures of Mother, particularly her "baby brother" who lives in Europe.

I take candid snaps of Mother with the nurses and any other family members or visitors who happen to be in the room at the time. I take shots of her unwrapping her gifts, sampling her birthday cake and even enjoying a small spot of sherry.

We sometimes encourage off-duty nurses to celebrate with us. In fact, the nurses say they always anticipate her birthdays and other special occasions, because they have such a good time!

We all love life, and unless we're in continual pain, most of us wish we had more of it. We cannot prevent age from slowing life down, but we can insure a continual flow of love and affection to elderly relatives.
