Iraq says troops leaving

■ President Bush says Iraq is lying when it claims the invasion force has begun to withdraw from Kuwait.

Associated Press

KUWAIT — Iraq said it had started withdrawing part of its invasion force from Kuwait on Sunday, and the Kuwaiti government installed by Baghdad threatened to retaliate against any nation that challenges its legitimacy.

In Washington, President Bush said Iraq had "lied once again" in claiming that it was withdrawing its invasion force. The president said he wanted to see Arab countries join in condemning the Iraqi invasion.

Dozens of tanks, armored personnel carriers and trucks carrying hundreds of soldiers were seen crossing the border back into Iraq at the Safwan checkpoint, about 30 miles south of the Iraqi port city of Basra.

However, thousands of Iraqi soldiers remained behind, tightening their grip on the oil-rich desert country.

At his impromptu news conference, Bush said the United States would not recognize the Kuwaiti "puppet government" set up by Iraq. He refused to discuss any military action the United States might be planning, and he said his goal was to isolate Iraq internationally.

U.S. officials said there was no indication Iraqi troops in southern Kuwait were preparing to invade Saudi Arabia. But Bush dispatched Defense Secretary Dick Cheney to Saudi Arabia to confer with leaders of the desert kingdom, administration sources said Sunday.

Diplomats in the Persian Gulf, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said that up to 80,000 soldiers of the new, largely Iraqi-staffed "popular army" of the provisional Kuwaiti government were fanning out across Kuwait.

The television of the Iraqi-installed government in Kuwait, monitored in Bahrain, showed 30 minutes of continuous footage with military vehicles rolling back into Iraq, starting at 8 a.m.

Twelve Arab reporters based in Baghdad were taken into Kuwait on Sunday by Iraq's Ministry of Information to observe the first Iraqi troops returning home.

A senior Iraqi officer, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said, "The first phase of pulling out the Iraqi troops from the dusty desert state began, and we will continue as long as the security of the troops and situation in Kuwait allows."

He refused to give details on how many Iraqi troops remained in Kuwait, saying there "are enough to defend the Children found

Staff Report

A man looking for a car to steal got more than he bargained for when he took a Midland woman's car — and found her two children in the back seat.

A Midland Police Department spokesman said the woman left her car idling in front of her house on South Colorado Street at 6 p.m. Sunday while she ran inside to get something.

A California man wandering around the neighborhood apparently jumped in the car and drove it down the street before noticing that the woman's baby and 5-year-old were in the back seat, said MPD Sgt. Philip Maxwell.

Within 30 minutes the man drove to the police station and turned himself, the car and the two children in, the officer said.

"The mother called in in a real panic right after it happened," Maxwell said. "At first we thought it was a kidnapping, but it seems to be something else."

The man has been charged with auto theft, the officer said. Other charges are could be filed after an investigation by detectives.

Maxwell said names of the parties involved would be released later today.

Americans evacuated from Liberia

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Marines plucked 62 Americans and 12 others from war-torn Liberia in a precision helicopter rescue Sunday and shored up U.S. Embassy defenses with 200 sharpshooters.

time, lifting an initial 59 Americans to safety aboard U.S. warships off the coast of the west African nation, the Pentagon said. The military action drew no fire.

Another three Americans and 12 citizens of other countries were flown out later, and more departures were expected, the Pentagon said.

President Bush ordered the evacuation after one of the rebel leaders trying to oust President Samuel Doe ordered the arrest of all foreigners in an attempt to provoke outside intervention in the bloody civil war, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said. The United States has steadfastly refused to intervene in the increasingly violent dispute.

"The U.S. Marine Corps reinforced rifle company is in place providing protection for U.S. citizens," Fitzwater said. "The initial operation went well and we are unaware of any shots being fired or resistance encountered."

The Pentagon said the operation was "conducted smoothly and without incident."

Centers cope with insurance problems

■ Negotiating with insurance companies has become a daily struggle for Clearview, as well as the treatment centers in Lubbock, San Angelo and Big Spring.

EDITOR'S NOTE: During the last year and a half, Clearview Hospital has seen the number of its patients dwindle, a high number of staff resignations and more than half of its board resign. In the second part of this three-part series, the Midland Reporter-Telegram examines how stricter insurance regulations have affected Clearview's bottom line.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Perhaps an insurance dependency program is what Clearview Hospital and similar facilities need to ensure financial stability in the substance abuse treatment business.

Midland, Lubbock, San Angelo and Big Spring chemical dependency treatment centers have reported occupancy and revenue drops as insurance companies constrict the flow of dollars to that type of patient care.

The cutting of insurance dollars started around mid-1989, shortly after the Texas Legislature approved including drug dependency in an existing law requiring coverage of alcoholism treatment.

Clearview averaged 43 percent occupancy and had $1.2 million in revenues over expenses from January to September of 1989, statistics show. There were about $3.1 million in revenues and $1.9 million in expenses for the center, which Midland Memorial Hospital has owned since December 1988.

But Clearview brought in only $12,088 in revenues over expenses after the first nine months of the 1989-90 fiscal year. Revenues for the period were about $1.7 million.

OCCUPANCY SINCE September 1989, when Clearview room rates were reduced from $600 to $400, has declined rapidly and hit 29 percent in May of this year. Eighteen of 49 beds were taken out of circulation in June.

Bob Rabidoux, Clearview administrator, said patient numbers have dropped off as insurance companies have become more frugal with their coverage of treatment center stays.

Negotiating with insurance companies has become a daily struggle, Rabidoux said.

"It depends on who we get on the telephone," he said. "Generally, we have to call and convince them that a person needs to stay as an inpatient. They wonder how long we should keep somebody."

The companies have put a tighter grip on chemical dependency treatment coverage primarily because they have seen it as a growing financial drain, he said.

"A great deal of our business is with insurance companies," Rabidoux said. "But insurance companies are not in the business of losing money."

INSURANCE COMPANIES used to pay for 30 days of treatment for adults and 45 for adolescents, he said. The lengths of stay for which some insurance companies will now pay have dropped to between 14 and 20 days for adults and 25 to 35 days for adolescents.

Ann Rogers, spokesperson for the Texas Hospital Association in Austin, said two 1985 legislative acts boosted the treatment industry in the state.

The most effective of the two was Senate Bill 544, which required group health insurance policies to carry alcoholism treatment coverage, Ms. Rogers said.

The Legislature also pulled the plug on the Texas Health Facilities Commission. The commission reviewed applications for "certificates of need," which treatment centers needed before they could open.

Although the certificates were not difficult to get, the application process was time-consuming, Ms. Rogers said. "You had to show a need for what you wanted to do," she said.

The two pieces of legislation were passed during a period when the number of chemical dependency centers was growing and attitudes toward treatment were changing, she said.

"IT'S WELL documented that our country has a growing drug problem," Ms. Rogers said. "But people are also more willing to seek help."

But then the Legislature in 1989 passed Senate Bill 911, which amended SB 544 to include all forms of chemical dependency.

SB 911 also required the Texas Board of Insurance and the Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse to set standards to control inpatient and outpatient chemical dependency treatment costs. They also were asked to formulate guidelines for treatment periods.

Ms. Rogers said the result was insurance companies conducting "utilization review" of the length and appropriateness of patient treatment. The review involved the same type of scrutiny as was applied to other forms of medical treatment, she said.

Treatment center officials said soon afterward insurance companies began clamping off the flow of dollars.

Dr. Wilton Jones, medical director and chief of staff of the Rivercrest treatment facility in San Angelo, said his chemical dependency program averages about 50 percent occupancy. Rivercrest has 40 beds for chemical dependency patients and another 40 for psychiatric cases, Jones said.

Until the insurance crunch, the facility often had seen 90 percent total occupancy since its 1988 opening, he said.

"I THINK everyone in the climate of health care has suffered some census problems," said Jones, whose hospital is owned by Universal Health Services Corp. of Pennsylvania.

Like Clearview, the Crossroads substance abuse treatment program in Big Spring has had a general hospital as its monetary security blanket since the center opened in 1984.

Crossroads Director Dan Wise said occupancy has slipped to 40 percent for both the 20-bed dependency treatment program and the 18-bed psychiatric program. "We're a little lower than we like to be," he said.

But the program, which operates under the umbrella of Scenic Mountain Medical Center, has remained profitable, he said.

"We're holding our own," Wise said. "Because we're hospital-based, we're able to do some things that the free-standing programs can't. Our overhead is not near what it would be if we were free-standing."

Wise said insurance companies also have created an administrative hassle by forcing the program to submit weekly and sometimes daily progress reports on patients.

Insurance monitors from the companies want patients to be discharged at the first sign of readiness, he

Rain, mugginess to decrease

Staff Report

Today's forecast promises a decreased possibility of rain and mugginess in the Permian Basin as a high pressure front begins to stabilize weather patterns, said forecasters at the National Weather Service in Midland.

Greenwood unofficially recorded 3 inches of rain Sunday, while weather watchers recorded 1.9 inches of precipitation outside of Lamesa and Rankin. Unofficially Lomax had 1.47 inches of rain and Buckeye had 1.25 inches of rain.

Official measurements taken at the Midland International Airport recorded 0.28 inches of precipitation Sunday, NWS said.

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies, with a high in the mid-80s, 5 to 15 mph east winds and a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms, NWS said.

Tonight is expected to be mostly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low in the mid-60s, forecasters said.

Tuesday's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies, with a high in the mid-80s and a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms, forecasters said.

The record high for Sunday's date was 103 set in 1964. The record low of 61 for today's date was set in 1975, NWS said.

STATE

Thunderstorms dumped 2 to 4 inches of rain on parts of North and South Texas on Sunday, triggering a flash flood warning for Tarrant County.

Up to 4 feet of water reportedly had accumulated on some Fort Worth streets by 4 p.m. Sunday. Creeks and lakes in the area rose quickly, some up to 10 feet high, but quickly receded.

Lightning set fire to several homes on the north side of town, the National Weather Service said. No injuries were reported.

There also were reports of 3 inches of rain in less than an hour in Waxahachie, just south of Dallas, along with 40 mph winds.

NATION

Rain extended from New Mexico to New England on Sunday, with locally heavy rain flooding some streets and underpasses in Texas.

Showers and thunderstorms extended over eastern Colorado, across the Nebraska Panhandle and southwestern Nebraska, western Kansas and the Oklahoma Panhandle into the northern Texas Panhandle.

Showers and thunderstorms also reached from southeastern New Mexico and southwestern Texas across north-central Texas and across northern Louisiana, southern Alabama and the Florida Panhandle.

Several small rivers in eastern Iowa were at or over flood stage. The Wapsipinicon River was near its crest at Dewitt and less than a foot above flood stage. The Skunk River was receding below below flood stage at Brighton; the Cedar was almost 3 feet over flood stage at Conesville but receding; the Kickapoo was cresting about a foot over flood stage at Gays Mills, the weather service said.

The Associated Press also contributed to this report.

sisterly Arab countries against any foreign aggression."

About 100,000 Iraqi troops were estimated to have taken part in the initial invasion.

The reporters could not locate any of the nine members of the new Kuwaiti provisional military government nor anyone who spoke for them.

Roads connecting the Iraqi border with Kuwait city, about 60 miles away, were littered with cars hastily abandoned during the first hours of the invasion. Many had been smashed by tanks to clear a path.

In Kuwait city, at least 30 burned and destroyed vehicles remained outside the defense ministry, where eyewitnesses said a battle raged for hours after Thursday's invasion.

Hospital officials said many soldiers from both sides were killed during the first day of the invasion. They were unable to give exact figures, but said at least 300 died.

Residents said the city was quiet during the daytime, but gunfire could be heard at night. Most residents remained behind closed doors, but some people ventured into the streets to search for food and stared at the Iraqi troops.

In other developments Sunday:

■ In New York, the United States urged other U.N. members at talks to impose broad economic and military sanctions on Iraq. Western diplomats said the world body is expected to adopt the measures Monday.

■ The emir of Kuwait, Sheik Jaber Al-Ahmed Al-Sabah, made his first public statements since fleeing to Saudi Arabia on Thursday. In a speech broadcast on Bahrain and Saudi television, the emir pledged that Kuwait would restore its territorial integrity, independence and sovereignty. He said, "What makes our hearts filled with sadness is that the source of this unjustified agression was not an enemy, but a brother and a close neighbor. ..."

■ Arab nations remained divided over how to react to the Iraqi invasion, and there was no indication that Saudi Arabia and Turkey were prepared to close the pipelines in their countries that carry the oil exported by Iraq.

In Ankara, the Turkish capital, Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Taha Yassin Ramadan warned that shutting down the pipeline "would create mistrust" between Iraq and Turkey.

Prime Minister Mudar Badran of Jordan, a U.S. and Iraqi ally, said Sunday his nation would not recognize the provisional government in Kuwait because that would hinder Arab efforts to settle the crisis through negotiation.

In Syria, Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati met with President Hafez Assad to discuss ways of ensuring an Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait, according to official reports. Syria was Persian Iran's main Arab backer during its 1980-88 war with Iraq.

■ Britain said that 35 servicemen taken from their homes in Kuwait Saturday were being held in a Baghdad hotel and not allowed to leave the country.

Iraq invaded Kuwait on Thursday in a dispute over oil and territory, quickly deposed the monarchy, and seized control of Kuwait's vast oil reserves.

The official Iraqi News Agency said the U.N. Security Council had been notified of the pullout, which it said was in line with an agreement between Baghdad and Kuwait's provisional government.

The provisional government, in a statement carried by the Iraqi News Agency, told other countries to refrain from taking "punishing measures" against it or Iraq. The government said these countries "have to remember they have interests and citizens in Kuwait" and said it was prepared to close embassies and cut diplomatic relations with offending nations.

The United States, which remains concerned about the 3,000 Americans still living in Kuwait, has already banned oil imports from Kuwait and Iraq and frozen both countries' assets in the United States.

Baghdad TV has said the new Kuwaiti provisional government is headed by Col. Ala Hussein Ali. The other eight members were lieutenant colonels and majors.

But Kuwait's embassy in Amman, Jordan, on Sunday called the new government as "a list of fake names" and said Ali is Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's son-in-law. The Kuwaiti Embassy in Tunis said Ali works for the Saddam administration.

The Iraqi News Agency carried a Kuwait-datelined statement it said was issued by the provisional government, denying that any of its members were Iraqis.

LIBERIA: Americans rescued by Marines

warships that have been stationed in international waters off the coast of Liberia since early June. The goal was to secure the seaside U.S. Embassy compound and to retrieve 21 Americans posted at two transmitter sites just outside the capital.

By Sunday night, 62 Americans were reported to be safe aboard the USS Saipan, a helicopter assault ship. The 62 — most of whom were reported to be U.S. government employees — were awaiting transfer to neighboring Sierra Leone, the Pentagon said.

The 12 non-U.S. citizens airlifted out on Sunday included two Italians, a Canadian, a Frenchman and eight Liberian dependents, the Pentagon said.

Fitzwater said a "skeleton size" staff will remain at the embassy, along with U.S. Ambassador Peter de Vos.

About 70 U.S. officials and 300 other Americans remained in Liberia when the operation started, Fitzwater said.

"We'll take out as many as want to get out," he said. The Pentagon said the Marines would airlift other foreigners if they asked.

Fitzwater stressed that the Marine presence "does not indicate or constitute any intention on the part of the U.S. government to intervene militarily in the Liberian conflict."

"The purpose of this operation is to safeguard lives, to draw down the number of Americans at the Embassy to minimum staff and to provide additional security for those who remain," Fitzwater said.

Pentagon sources said some 237 Marines — traditionally the protectors of diplomatic sites — will shore up the defenses at the seaside compound.

Fitzwater said Doe had been informed of the operation in advance. The United States has a standing offer to evacuate Doe, who has holed up in the presidential mansion. Fitzwater said attempts were made to contact rebel leaders as well, but he could not confirm that contact had been made.

U.S. officials notified Americans on Saturday that the evacuation could take place, and military officials expected that many of the 300 Americans would decline to leave.

The two transmitter sites were closed down, said a U.S. official. A CIA spokesman declined to comment on reports that the giant antennas, used to relay communications to and from U.S. embassies throughout Africa, were also used by the agency to gather intelligence in Africa.

The embassy was trying to get word out to any other U.S. citizens remaining in Liberia, said the official. "But they'll have to reach the embassy compound for the Marines to pick them up, and that may be hard for most of them because of the fighting," said the official.

Many of the 300 U.S. citizens also hold Liberian citizenship. They have been living in Liberia for years and have extensive families that they do not wish to leave behind.

Most of the other Americans are missionaries posted in various parts of the country. All American employees of the Voice of America station near Monrovia were evacuated in May.

The evacuation drew praise from some congressmen.

"The president's action is a proper one, and I support his decision," Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., said through a spokesman. Simon is chairman of the African affairs subcommittee.

"It sounds like a sensible operation and an appropriate response," said Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., who is chairman of the Foreign Relations subcommittee on East Asian and Pacific Affairs and a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

The U.S. ships involved in the operation include the amphibious assault helicopter carrier USS Saipan; the USS Ponce, an amphibious transport dock ship; the USS Sumter, a tank landing ship; and the destroyer USS Peterson.

The 2,200 Marines aboard the ships are based at Camp LeJeune, N.C.

"The Marines will remain in Liberia as long as necessary to insure the safety of U.S. citizens in that country," Fitzwater said.

CLEARVIEW: Facilities coping with insurance problems said. Some patients have had to leave Crossroads prematurely because the insurance well ran dry, he said.

A RECENT survey conducted by Medstat Systems Inc. of Ann Arbor, Mich., shows that first-time inpatients whose treatment lasts 15 to 24 days have a 15.5 percent readmission rate. The rate for patients who stay longer than 24 days is about half that figure.

Rabidoux said Clearview negotiations with insurance companies have gone well, despite the recent changes.

"We've been lucky in getting them to extend periods (of coverage)," Rabidoux said. "We've gotten pretty close to what we've needed in most cases."

Occupancy at Midland's Glenwood Hospital, a psychiatric facility which has a drug dependency program, has been about 40 percent in recent months, said Lois Barry, assistant administrator.

"It fluctuates from day to day," Ms. Barry said. "It goes up and down."

Charter Plains Hospital of Lubbock appears to have fared well under the circumstances.

Dana Rains, Charter Plains marketing director, said patients go to the facility partly because of its full spectrum of treatment.

THE 28-BED substance abuse program averages about 70 percent occupancy, while the 52-bed psychiatric program is usually 80 percent full, Ms. Rains said.

Meanwhile, both the psychiatric and substance abuse outpatient programs serve between five and 10 patients, she said.

"What we've seen is slowed growth instead of decreases," Ms. Rains said. "We're providing more care for free on the backside. We can't irresponsibly discharge a patient because his insurance runs out."

A facility relatively unaffected by insurance changes is the inpatient Serenity House of Abilene, a non-profit detoxification and substance abuse treatment facility open since 1984.

Dick Spalding, Serenity House president, said there is a 60- to 90-day waiting list to enter the treatment program, which lasts 30 days and has 100 percent occupancy all year.

The program, which treats 20 patients at a time, is similar to that of Clearview and other facilities using the 12-step Alcoholics Anonymous treatment approach, Spalding said.

However, the non-profit facility treats mostly indigent or low-income patients and receives money from the Abilene United Way, fund-raising events, donations and other income sources, he said. Non-indigents are charged only $175 a day, less than half of what most programs charge, he said.

"VERY FEW of our clients have insurance," Spalding said, adding that clients usually are discharged only when they're ready.

Dixie Evatt, director of information services for the Texas Board of Insurance, said insurance companies tightened treatment coverage guidelines in an effort to control runaway costs.

But chemical dependency programs are not the only services going under insurance company microscopes, Ms. Evatt said.

The companies are taking a closer look at medical coverage in Texas as a whole, she said. Medical professionals have been required to be more thorough in justifying treatment methods and length of stays, she said.

"They're all doing more paperwork than they used to," Ms. Evatt said.

GULF CONFLICT

Japan imposes tough sanctions against Iraq

TOKYO (AP) — Japan on Sunday imposed tough sanctions against Iraq for its invasion of Kuwait, including a ban on oil imports and Japanese exports to the two countries.

The unprecedented Japanese move, which significantly broadened a U.S.-supported campaign to isolate Iraq for its invasion, followed an announcement by China that it would not sell arms to Iraq.

Italy and Spain — two European Community countries most dependent on foreign crude oil — also announced Sunday they would follow EC guidelines and impose sanctions.

In Kuwait, the Iraqi-installed provisional government, in a statement carried by the Iraqi News Agency, told other countries to refrain from taking "punishing measures" against it or Iraq. The provisional government said countries "have to remember they have interests and citizens in Kuwait" and said it was prepared to close embassies and cut diplomatic relations with offending nations.

The United States already has banned oil imports from Kuwait and Iraq and frozen both countries' assets in the United States.

JAPAN SAID it will suspend loans and ban Japanese investment and financing in both Iraq and Kuwait, and freeze Iraqi assets in Japan, chief government spokesman Misoji Sakamoto said.

Iraq became eligible in February for $2.67 billion in Japanese government credits, which it had not yet received.

"International conflicts must be settled peacefully. From this standpoint, we strongly denounce the Iraqi military invasion of Kuwait," Sakamoto said. "The government will fully support international efforts to settle the dispute through negotiations."

In Washington, the White House hailed Japan's decision. It said Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu called President Bush on Sunday to inform him of the sanctions.

"These unprecedented measures undertaken by Japan are in step with those that the United States and other countries have put in place against Iraq for its blatant aggression against Kuwait," White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said.

"The president welcomed Prime Minister Kaifu's and the Japanese Cabinet's decision and expressed confidence that such measures will help intensify international pressures aimed at achieving the immediate, complete and unconditional withdrawal of Iraq from Kuwait," Fitzwater said.

ON SATURDAY, Bush telephoned Kaifu to ask for Japan's support in sanctions against Iraq, and all 100 members of the U.S. Senate signed a letter urging Tokyo to join other nations that have imposed sanctions.

The sanctions, which exceeded those imposed Saturday by the European Community, are the toughest that postwar Japan has ever imposed, the Japan Broadcasting Corp. reported.

News reports said the decision had been delayed because of differences of views within the government. The Foreign Ministry reportedly urged the government to join its Western allies in imposing sanctions, while the trade ministry warned of resulting damage to Japan's economy.

Japanese newspapers said some trade ministry officials had expressed concern that sanctions on Iraq would push up oil prices in Japan and worsen chances for Baghdad's repayment of $4.6 billion in outstanding debts with Japan. Much of that is held by the private sector.

Japan depends on foreign sources for 99 percent of its oil needs, and imported an average of 260,000 barrels a day, or 6.2 percent of its total consumption, from Iraq in the first quarter of this year. It obtained 5 percent of its oil from Kuwait, or 210,000 barrels a day, according to the trade ministry.

On Friday, the Japanese government instructed banks and other financial institutions to block Iraqi access to the estimated $20 billion in Kuwaiti assets held in Japan.

FOLLOWING THAT decision, officials initially said they would wait to decide on further measures until the U.N. Security Council takes action on a resolution calling for sanctions. The council may discuss the resolution on Monday.

In Beijing, the official Xinhua news agency quoted an unidentified Foreign Ministry spokesman as saying China supported the U.N. Security Council resolution condemning Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, and would therefore not sell arms to Iraq.

Spain's foreign ministry issued a communique Sunday saying Spain would require government approval for any foreign transfer of Kuwaiti assets in Spain and would soon freeze Iraqi assets.

The communique said the measures were in line with the EC sanctions, which included an oil embargo on Iraq and Iraqi-occupied Kuwait, a halt on arms sales to Iraq and the suspension of cooperation with Iraq in the military, technical and scientific fields.

Nearly 11 percent of the EC's oil imports last year were from Iraq and Kuwait.

In Italy, Justice Minister Giuliano Vassalli said Italy agreed to freeze Iraqi assets.

The Soviet Union, Iraq's main arms supplier, announced Thursday it was ending arms sales to Iraq.

Families unable to reach workers

Associated Press

Family members of five Texas refinery workers stationed in Kuwait said their efforts to reach the men at a Baghdad hotel Sunday were frustrating and unsuccessful.

At least four other Texans in Kuwait remain unaccounted for, relatives and officials said.

The Texans accounted for were Charles Amos, 59, a Santa Fe Drilling Co. employee whose family resides in Gilmer; Rainard L. Walterscheid of Dallas; Gary Carr of North Richland Hills; Edward Hale, 52, an oil rig supervisor from Spring, and Bobby Gene Parker of Vidor, near Beaumont.

A San Antonio couple, Jim and Phyllis Calvin, still have not been heard from, their relatives said Sunday afternoon.

Also unaccounted for is John Henry Cole, 50, who works for OGE Drilling Inc. of Houston, as does Hale and Carr.

Calvin is a former basketball coach at Amarillo College. Two years ago he began coaching Kuwait's national team.

The State Department also said it had not been able to contact Steve Betts, 35, of Houston. He coaches the Kuwaiti national swimming team.

U.S. authorities, who are skeptical of Iraq's claims that it was withdrawing its troops Sunday, were told that eight additional Americans among a group of 24 Westerners also have been taken to the Iraqi capital.

Donnita B. Cole of Odessa said she has been calling her husband's telephone number in Kuwait every half hour.

"We still have had no word about Johnny," Mrs. Cole said.

Cole is a drilling supervisor for OGE Drilling and was among OGE employees working overseas under contract with Kuwait Oil.

Parker's family said they were notified late Saturday night that he and 10 others had turned up some 300 miles from Kuwait at the Sheraton Hotel in Baghdad, the Iraqi capital.

The 48-year-old Parker's son, Clifton, said State Department officials were vague about the status of the Americans, who were taken by Iraqi troops during Thursday's invasion.

"So it still hinges on old ding-dong (Iraqi President Saddam Hussein) over there — it's still whenever he wants to do something," said the younger Parker. "We're not going to feel good until (my father is) on safe soil."

"We've all just been sitting here on pins and needles and we just don't know what's going to happen," said Donna Steinbommer, Parker's sister-in-law.

"My sister's birthday is tomorrow and it would be great if he called her by then."

An American woman who fled to Saudi Arabia from Kuwait had confirmed that Amos was taken into custody by Iraqi troops.

Family members said Amos, unharmed and in "good spirits," was at the American Consulate in Baghdad.

For several days, the family has anxiously awaited more news, which came Saturday evening from the U.S. State Department.

"They said he is fine and in good spirits," said Amos' daughter, Karen. "We don't know when he will be home. We understand the Iraq airport is closed, but the U.S. State Department is doing everything it can to get him out."

Officials told the Amos family that he would stay in the consulate until the Baghdad airport reopened.

Amos' friends tied yellow ribbons around trees and car and truck antennas as a show of support.

Margie Walterscheid's 15th wedding anniversary is Tuesday. But she said she was celebrating early after news that her husband was safe.

"I'll just celebrate without him," said Mrs. Walterscheid.

Hale's wife said she was thrilled to learn of her husband's safety.

"They just told me my husband was well and that he had not been harmed, that he was in Baghdad and that he's waiting for a way home," said Patricia Hale.

Betts had returned to Kuwait, after an extensive training program in Germany, only two days before the Iraqi invasion.

Saudi tanks on border, American says

NEW YORK (AP) — Saudi Arabia has deployed 200 to 300 tanks toward its border with Kuwait, where Iraqi armored forces were reported to have moved into position, said an American technician who returned Sunday from Saudi Arabia.

In addition, he said, the families of American civilian employees at a Saudi military base in the northern desert had been moved to Riyadh, the Saudi capital, and "all others are on notice to evacuate."

The American, who left Saudi Arabia on Saturday, spoke with The Associated Press, after arriving at Kennedy International Airport, on condition that he not be identified.

He said he saw the tanks moving out of King Khalid Military City, a large Saudi military complex in the desert about 80 miles southwest of the point where the borders of Iraq, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia come together.

A former U.S. commander in the Persian Gulf said the deployed tanks probably were drawn from a "rapid deployment force" maintained at the Saudi base, known as KKMC, by the six member countries of the Gulf Cooperation Council.

George B. Crist, a retired Marine Corps general who formerly headed U.S. Central Command, the overall headquarters for American forces in the region, said it was "a safe bet" that the council force was ordered into the field. "That's just what it was up there for," he said in a telephone interview.

The unit includes two brigades, each with about 5,000 men and 100 or more U.S.-built M-1 and M-48 tanks. One brigade is all-Saudi and the other consists of single battalions from Kuwait, Bahrain, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates and the Sultanate of Oman, under Saudi command.

The Gulf Cooperation Council set up the rapid deployment force several years ago as part of a mutual assistance agreement, but this apparently would be its first use in a battlefield situation.

The American technician, who works at the base, said the deployment apparently occurred Friday, a day after the Iraqis invaded Kuwait and deposed its government, forcing the emir, Sheik Jaber al-Ahmed al-Sabah, to flee to Saudi Arabia.

The Iraqis on Friday advanced some troops and tanks to within a few miles of the Saudi border, according to U.S. officials in Washington.

The American said there had been no reports on how far apart the two forces were.

The Saudi military complex, which does not appear on maps, lies off a main north-south road. It is about 35 miles in circumference and has a population of several thousand people, mostly Saudi military.

The source said there had been about 80 American civilian technicians at the Saudi base, and 30 to 40 U.S. military personnel training Saudi pilots to fly UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters.

Iraq warns Turkey not to cut pipelines

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — A top Iraqi official warned Turkey on Sunday not to cut two pipelines in Turkey that carry more than half of Iraq's total oil exports.

President Bush had suggested Friday that Turkey could close the pipelines to protest Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Taha Yassin Ramadan told reporters that "a "a Turkish decision to shut down the pipeline would create mistrust" between the two countries.

"In the case of an economic embargo or a military intervention, those who take these actions would be the losing party," he added.

Ramadan met with President Turgut Ozal during his four-hour visit to the capital of Ankara.

A spokesman for Ozal, Kaya Toperi, said Ramadan delivered a message from Iraqi President Saddam Hussein explaining why Iraq invaded. There was no further information on the message.

The Turkish presidential office said Ozal, in his meeting with Ramadan, called on Iraq to adopt "a realistic and constructive attitude urgently."

President Bush said Friday it was "certainly an option" for Turkey to cut the Iraqi pipelines. Bush spoke by telephone to Ozal on Friday and Saturday.

On Saturday, Ozal told reporters: "There have been no demands from the United States for the closure of the pipeline. Such a demand is out of question."

Liberians hope Marines end war

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) — Liberians have long hoped that the hundreds of U.S. Marines who swooped into Monrovia on Sunday to rescue Americans and shore up Embassy defenses would also help end their civil war.

Besieged President Samuel Doe, Liberia's Council of Churches and rebel leader Prince Johnson all have called on the United States to use force to help end the conflict. A total of 5,000 people, mostly civilians, have been killed.

Johnson's threat Saturday to start detaining foreigners in the hope of provoking foreign intervention brought the order to dispatch the Marines to Monrovia.

The Marines returned to their ships with 62 Americans and 12 people from other countries, leaving behind a group of soldiers to shore up Embassy defenses.

The United States has insisted it will not intervene to end the 7-month-long war, but many Liberians have hoped for more.

When the warships carrying the Marines first arrived off the Liberian coast two months ago, people danced in the streets of the capital singing of how the soldiers would save them.

But the Marines remained offshore and last week Johnson asked reporters, "Why does the United States not come to the aid of Liberia, which looks on America as its motherland?" His puzzlement is shared by many people in this West African nation that was founded by freed American slaves in 1847.

Johnson said he appealed last week to the U.S. Embassy for American help to stop the killing of civilians but was told that the crisis was an "internal conflict."

"As though the United States had never interfered in the affairs of other people like those of Grenada, the Philippines or Panama?" Johnson argued.

Appeals for U.S. intervention mounted after early hopes that the men of rival rebel leader Charles Taylor would quickly take Monrovia were dashed.

Doe remains inside his presidential mansion, protected by loyalist troops, while Johnson and Taylor's forces, once united, have clashed with each other as the siege of Monrovia continues.

In June, thousands of peace marchers led by Christian and Moslem leaders ignored death threats from Doe and demanded U.S. intervention.

"We are appealing to the Congress, to the government and to the people of the United States of America to come to our aid. This is an SOS call. Save our souls," appealed one of the leaders, Bishop W. Nah Dixon, when marchers stopped outside the U.S. Embassy.

Hundreds of the protesters, waving banners reading "Stop the Killings," came from a refugee center set up at St. Peter's Lutheran Church. On July 30, Doe's soldiers massacred more than 600 people who sought refuge at that church.

Many Liberians blame the United States in part for the present conflict, pointing to the $500 million Washington pumped into the country to support Doe after he seized power in a bloody 1980 coup.

U.S. aid continued to pour in, despite reports that Doe rigged the 1985 elections.

Lethal military aid was suspended in 1986 after Doe's soldiers massacred more than 2,000 civilians to put down a rebellion. But U.S. military advisers remained until last month, when Doe accused them of supporting the rebels and ordered them out of the country.

German party may urge quicker reunification

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Signs were mounting Sunday that Social Democrats in the two Germanys — the second-largest party in both countries — may push for a unified Germany as early as this week.

Horst Ehmke, deputy chairman of the West German Social Democrats, reportedly suggested the East German Social Democrats may propose instant unity during a special parliamentary session this week.

Asked by the newspaper Bild whether the East German Social Democrats might make such a move during the Wednesday session in East Berlin, Ehmke reportedly replied: "I don't know. I don't exclude it."

The Social Democratic parties in both Germanys are in close consultation with one another.

The East German Social Democrats are part of Prime Minister Lothar de Maiziere's broad coalition government. The West German Social Democrats are the main opposition to Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

On Saturday, the head of the West German Social Democrats, Hans-Jochen Vogel, said West Germany would have to "respect" a decision by East Germany's Parliament for an "early joining" to the west before all-German elections.

Other West German Social Democrats have echoed that view in the past two days. The move is most likely an effort to improve the party's chances of winning the leadership of a united Germany when all-German elections take place.

The Social Democrats' apparent maneuvering comes as Kohl presses to have all-German elections moved up from Dec. 2 to Oct. 14. Under that scheme, formal unity would occur immediately before the vote.

Kohl's Christian Democrats want all-German elections to take place quickly to avoid a potential loss of voter support if the East German economy collapses.

Joblessness in East Germany has climbed to more than 240,000 after the July 2 economic merger of the two Germanys and is expected to move much higher.

Social Democrats are fighting to keep the elections from being moved up to Oct. 14.

But the Social Democrats now say they would accept actual unification much sooner because of East Germany's economic problems.

That would allow them to be perceived as embracing a process they have tried to slow, while still pushing for elections in December, when the economic woes are expected to be much worse.

Whether all-German elections occur on Dec. 2 or Oct. 14 hinges on Kohl's ability to persuade the West German Parliament to make a constitutional change necessary for the earlier date.

For that, Kohl needs a two-thirds majority vote he can't manage without the Social Democrats.

ANC expected to call cease-fire

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The African National Congress is expected to announce a cease-fire with the white-minority government after the two sides meet Monday for talks, news reports said Sunday.

All leading newspapers carried reports from ANC and government sources that the two sides expect the breakthrough Monday at a meeting to try to clear the way for constitutional talks on ending white rule.

The Sunday Star said the ANC may even announce the end of its policy of armed struggle against the government if all its demands are realized at the talks in Pretoria. An agreement would clear the way for full constitutional talks, probably early next year, according to political sources.

President F.W. de Klerk and ANC leader Nelson Mandela are to head the two five-member delegations during the one-day summit. The talks Monday will be the second formal round of talks, following an initial meeting in May.

Senior ANC official Alfred Nzo, who will take part in the talks, said the black opposition group was optimistic about a cease-fire. "I should foresee no difficulties, especially as I say, if the issue of the removal of obstacles has been finally arrived at and concluded," he said in a radio interview.

The news reports said the two sides expect to reach agreement on releasing political prisoners and allowing the return of political exiles to South Africa. The government is also expected to meet ANC demands for a review of security laws that have been used to suppress political activity.

"The government would like to see immediate progress on the negotiations. It would like to see negotiations take off. But negotiations cannot take place if there is no climate of stability," the Sunday Star quoted an unidentified government official as saying.

The Sunday Times reported that up to 1,300 political prisoners could be released and about 22,000 political exiles could return to South Africa.

A special committee will consider the cases of prisoners the ANC says are political prisoners, but the government claims are criminals, it said.

The release of political prisoners and return of exiles have been major stumbling blocks to clearing the way for full-scale talks. The ANC has said it will not take part in full talks until those issues are resolved.

De Klerk has countered by demanding the ANC end its 30-year-old armed struggle.

The ANC's armed struggle virtually collapsed because of internal problems, the drying up of support following the fall of Communist regimes in East Europe and the superiority of the South African military.

...ANC may even announce the end of its concept of armed struggle against the government if all its demands are realized.

But Mandela has refused to formally renounce the armed struggle despite intense pressure from the government and many Western nations eager for a peaceful settlement in South Africa. He has said the government must make equal concessions before the ANC declares a cease-fire.

The two sides are also likely to seek a greater effort to end the growing wave of violence that has hit South Africa in recent months, mainly between rival black groups.

About 5,000 people have died in violence between black groups over the past five years.

De Klerk legalized the ANC and other black opposition groups Feb. 2. He freed Mandela Feb. 11 after 27 years in jail for fighting apartheid.

Grandchildren can't escape Churchill's shadow

EDITOR'S NOTE: They are living in the shadow of one of the 20th century's most dominant figures, 10 men and women of no little accomplishment themselves. None as yet threatens to match their grandfather's eminence as a statesman, orator and historian. But their grandfather was named Sir Winston Churchill, a tough act to follow.

By Robert Barr

LONDON (AP) — Hurrying back to London after a weekend in the country, Winston Churchill ignored the pleas of his grandchildren.

"Don't go, grandpa," begged Edwina Sandys and young Winston Churchill, who were staying at Chequers, the prime minister's official country residence.

It was July 1944, a month after the D-day invasion, the early days of the German V-1 "buzz bomb" assault on London.

As the car drew away, his secretary, Marion Spicer, recorded in his diary that the war and the youngsters both weighed on Churchill's mind.

"What a world," the prime minister said, "to bring children into!"

THE WORLD has proven hospitable for the 10 grandchildren of Sir Winston Leonard Spencer Churchill (1874-1965). It's a place where they can make their marks, but they can't escape his long shadow.

Three have made it into "Who's Who," including two who have followed their grandfather and their fathers into Parliament.

Winston S. Churchill and Nicholas Soames are Conservative Party back-benchers — legislative spear carriers — in the House of Commons where 50 years ago their grandfather summoned Britain to a sacrifice of "blood, toil, tears and sweat."

In a studio on Long Island, Edwina Sandys is hacking away at pieces of the Berlin Wall to create a sculpture for Westminster College in Fulton, Mo., where Churchill warned the West in 1946 that "an iron curtain has descended across the continent."

The third generation also includes businessmen, a barrister, and a society journalist. None, as yet, threatens to match their grandfather's eminence as a statesman, orator, historian and artist.

"I don't have his ability, and I know it," says Nicholas Soames, who was elected to the House of Commons in 1983.

"I'm 42. When he was that age, he had already been Chancellor of the Exchequer. I haven't yet gotten off the back benches."

SOAMES, A pal of Prince Charles, has his grandfather's round face and monumental physique — "portly, flamboyant, fun," in the words of Matthew Parris, political satirist for The Times.

With some affection, the opposition lawmaker Tony Banks has said that "anyone who sees the honorable member for Crawley here on a Friday in his weekend clothes cannot but think instantly of Mr. Toad."

The grandfather, too, spent long years as just another member of parliament between 1929 and 1940 — a lonely voice urging Britain to face up to the monstrousness of Adolf Hitler's Germany.

"People glibly talk of his finest hour, and most people would have in mind 1940 and the ensuing wartime years," says the younger Winston Churchill.

"...I think the real trial for him had been the 1930s, when he could count his political friends on the fingers of one hand, when he was being reviled in the press, on the radio, in parliament."

The grandson is not friendless, but has been a back-bench exile since 1978 when he defied Conservative Party head Margaret Thatcher, then the opposition leader, by voting to end sanctions against the white-minority government of Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe).

"I WOULDN'T see it as wilderness years, because unlike my grandfather I'm actually supportive of the government that's in power, my own party. He was not," Churchill said recently.

Churchill, 49, has made his way quietly and surely, unlike his combative father, Randolph, the only son among the five children of Winston and Clementine Churchill. Randolph Churchill, who died in 1968, was elected to the House of Commons only because he once ran unopposed, and he was once dismissed by a newspaper columnist as "the pale satellite of another's fame."

Randolph Churchill was married and divorced twice. Arabella Churchill McLeod, the child of his second marriage, lives in western England and directs "Children's World," a theater project for handicapped children.

His sister, Diana Churchill, who committed suicide in 1965, had three children by her marriage to the late Duncan Sandys (pronounced "sands") — Julian Sandys, a barrister; Celia Sandys Perkins, an interior decorator who lives in Devon, and Edwina, who lives in New York with her husband Richard Kaplan.

Another sister, Mary Churchill, now Lady Soames and the only surviving child of Sir Winston, had five children by her marriage to the late Christopher Soames — Nicholas; Emma Soames, former editor of "The Tatler;" Charlotte, now Lady Peel by virtue of her marriage to Earl Peel; Jeremy Soames, an executive with the banking house of N.M. Rothschild; and Rupert Soames, chairman of GPTelecom in Paris.

Sir Winston's actress-daughter, Sarah, died in 1983, leaving no survivors. A fifth child, Marigold, died in childhood.

THE STRESSES reflected in the lives of Churchill's children have been less severe for the grandchildren, says Emma Soames.

"The fact that we're a generation on does make it a lot easier," she says.

Her brother says family connections are resented by a newer breed of Tory, cut in the mold of Margaret Thatcher, the grocer's daughter. "Contrary to what Americans think," Soames says, "this isn't a country that is run as a hereditary democracy.'

Young Winston Churchill found the name could be a burden. In "Memories and Adventures," published last year, he told of being thrashed by bullies at Eton, who would taunt him, "Take this for being a —! Take this for being a —! And take this for being Winston-bloody-Churchill!"

Born at Chequers, Churchill has most closely followed his grandfather's footsteps. Both toured Africa, and wrote books about it. Both were war correspondents, the grandfather in the Boer War and the grandson in Vietnam and the Middle East. Sir Winston entered Parliament at age 26, his grandson at 30.

Emma Soames also took up journalism, and at one time had Randolph Churchill's old job of writing a column for the Evening Standard. She giggles, proudly, about being the first woman journalist labeled a "hackette" by Private Eye, London's bitingly satirical magazine.

EIGHTEEN MONTHS ago she was appointed editor of Tatler magazine. From its bare and utilitarian offices she chronicled the world of "power, money, glamour, style, wit, success. You know — up!"

Though born into that world, she says that being Winston Churchill's grandchild counts for little in today's equation of power and success.

"I'm sure it opened a few doors," she said. "But the doors get slammed in your face again if you don't deliver the goods..."

Two weeks after the interview with The Associated Press, Miss Soames was fired and the Conde Nast firm appointed a new editor to attempt to revive the magazine's flagging circulation.

As a child, Emma Soames lived at Chartwell Farm, near Churchill's personal country home, Chartwell, in the woodlands of Kent, and often saw her grandfather.

"I suppose I must have been 4 or 5, so it's a bit hazy. But I remember him using words that I didn't understand, and I used to go to my nanny and say, 'What does inappropriate mean?' "

Edwina Sandys says the Berlin Wall work is her first directly inspired by her grandfather.

"IT'S SILLY to be too purist about it," she said in a telephone interview. "But he was such a famous man. You don't want always to do something connected with him, you want your own thing."

However, she and her sister prepared an exhibition of her grandfather's watercolors in Washington in 1983, a tribute to happy days at Churchill's country home.

"He would be painting, and sometimes we would show our drawings," she said. "He was doing more painting than we were.

"He loved color, he loved landscape and was very, very sensitive. Some of the landscapes he did show enormous sensitivity to light, light on trees and light on water and clouds, which perhaps some people wouldn't realize he had."

Edwina Sandys got a taste of fame from "Christa," a statue of a crucified woman that was condemned by an Episcopal bishop when it was displayed at New York's Cathedral of St. John the Divine in 1984.

"People write to me all the time about Christa, and they want photographs and posters and things," she said. The image is now on loan in California.

"SHE'S SORT of out on her own, you know, like a child that's grown up," said Ms. Sandys, who has two grown sons. "She goes out and gets invited to places."

Young Winston Churchill says he was influenced a lot by his father and his grandfather, "particularly in the causes I've inherited."

He campaigned for a memorial to victims of the Katyn Forest massacre in Poland, carried out by Soviet dictator Stalin, and cofounded Radio Free Kabul on behalf of the mujaheddin fighting the Communist government and the Soviet army in Afghanistan.

And, a few months short of his 50th birthday, Churchill says he is still in the younger half of the House of Commons.

During the turbulent 1960s and '70s, his Churchillian views on defense and foreign policy, expounded in his book "Defending the West," found an opponent in his half-sister, Arabella. She supported disarmament, he says, and was very much "opting for the alternative lifestyle."

"The U.S. Navy once made the mistake of inviting her to be the Azalea Queen at the rendezvous of the NATO navies at Norfolk, Va., and made the mistake of sending her a reply-paid telegram," Churchill says.

"They got back about six pages of diatribe against this iniquitous warmongering organization called NATO, even though it was her grandfather who was largely responsible for creating it."

Now, at least, he laughs heartily at the story.

Radar detectors adding to tragedy

The only thing wrong with the petition calling for a ban on radar detectors in interstate trucks and buses is that it's too limited. The detectors, which warn motorists when their speeds are being clocked by police radar, have only one purpose: to enable their users to break the law and get away with it. They should be banned in all motor vehicles — including private automobiles.

But if a ban has to start somewhere, let it be, as the petition requests, with action by the Federal Highway Administration to prohibit their use in trucks and buses involved in interstate commerce. That's where radar detectors are most commonly found, and that's where driving at dangerous speeds can do the most damage. As Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner put it: "When a big truck or bus crashes, the results are disastrous, usually affecting other motorists."

Statistics back him up. According to the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety — which drafted the petition — big tractor-trailer rigs were involved in 9 percent of all fatal crashes on America's roads during the 1980s. Last year alone, 4,242 people died in crashes involving tractor-trailers. But only 15 percent of the dead were truck occupants; most of the rest were riding in passenger cars. In a two-vehicle crash involving an automobile and a tractor-trailer, occupants of the car were 49 times as likely to be killed as occupants of the truck.

All the more reason that automobile drivers might feel intimidated when they see a big truck looming behind them in the rear-view mirror. All the more reason, as well, for truckers to operate their equipment with as much concern for safety as possible — including due respect for the speed limit. Yet a recent Insurance Institute survey found that 47 percent of all trucks and 37 percent of all tractor-trailers in a seven-state area were using radar detectors. Clearly, the trucking industry has work to do.

That's why the American Trucking Association, representing 4,500 truck companies, was such a welcome addition to the list of petition signers. Such leadership by the nation's biggest trucking organization suggests that the proposed ban can work, and that America's highways can be made that much safer for everyone to use.

Family says journalist not suicide type

WASHINGTON — Last March, a British journalist was found hanged in his hotel room in the Chilean capital of Santiago. Initially, his death was labeled a suicide, but today there is talk in Santiago that Jonathan Moyle uncovered something so sensitive that someone killed him.

Anderson

Latin America's biggest air show brought Moyle to Chile. He was the editor of the international specialty magazine "Defense Helicopter World," and an expert on helicopters. The Chilean Air Force hosted his visit.

Moyle's father, Anthony Moyle, told us that before Moyle left his home in London, he was anxious to investigate rumors in the helicopter industry that Cardoen Industries, a Chilean arms supplier, was building a fleet of advanced attack helicopters to sell to Iraq for $500 million.

Carlos Cardoen is the biggest private arms maker in Latin America. His business is based in Santiago with explosives factories all over the world. Cardoen is indeed retrofitting an old Bell 206 helicopter (called a LongRanger) originally built in the United States. As we reported earlier, Cardoen is billing the redesigned LongRanger as a civilian helicopter. But we have obtained Cardoen documents that describe its capabilities as an attack helicopter.

Iraq is a regular customer for Cardoen. But Jorge Ochoa, vice president of Cardoen Industries, denied reports that Iraq has placed an order for 50 of the helicopters, and he said, "It's a civilian multipurpose helicopter that could possibly be adapted to other uses."

The Chilean press is full of speculation about Moyle's death, including the possibility that Iraqi agents murdered him rather than let him make an issue out of the helicopters and endanger their chances of buying them from Cardoen. If Iraqi agents killed Moyle, they didn't do Cardoen any favors. The last thing the company needed was a dead journalist to complicate the already controversial helicopter project, especially at a time when Cardoen is seeking certification for the helicopter from the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration. The United States has an arms embargo against Iraq.

Cardoen Industries appears to have been congenial with Moyle in Santiago. Ochoa told us that he never met Moyle, although Cardoen Industries had invited Moyle to a cocktail party. Ochoa said Moyle did not show up.

A week after Moyle's arrival in Santiago, a hotel maid found him dead in a closet — hanging by his shirt from a clothes rack with a pillow case over his head. There were tranquilizers found in his blood. He left no note.

With no sign of a struggle, British and Chilean authorities wrote Moyle off as a suicide. But his family and friends are not convinced. He was engaged to be married. He had been talking eagerly about getting a house. He was excited about his work.

"Suicide was not part of his character," said his father, who spoke to Moyle half an hour before his death. "He was an outgoing, gregarious chap, financially secure, held a job that was taking him places, and was due to be married in June. He spoke of his plans to go to La Paz to cover a Bolivian air force anti-drug expedition. He also talked about taking his future father-in-law flying. ..."

Moyle's father told our associate Melinda Maas that when the family started asking questions, they bumped up against a conspiracy of silence. The British Embassy in Santiago said the death was a police problem. The Foreign Office in London told British diplomats not to talk publicly about Moyle.

Santiago Judge Alejandro Solis Munoz, reviewing the findings of the police, is suspicious of the "suicide" conclusion. "He talked to his family minutes before his death and everything seemed fine," the judge told us. "We have received letters from his girlfriend and friends claiming that he was clearly not the suicide type."

ANOTHER VIEW

Joy in Mudville! George struck out

The New York Yankees are 39-61, the worst team in baseball. The once indomitable Bronx Bombers haven't finished in first place in almost a decade. Babe Ruth's ghost must be inconsolable.

But, hey, there's joy in Mudville tonight. Mighty George Steinbrenner has struck out. And when the fans heard about it, they stood and cheered at the downfall of the most hated man in baseball.

Yankee fans have good reason to celebrate Steinbrenner's fall. A team that once embodied all that was exciting about baseball was laid low by Steinbrenner's bad management and arrogance.

But things are looking up at Yankee Stadium since Baseball Commissioner Fay Vincent barred Steinbrenner from day-to-day operations of the team. The ruling followed an investigation into allegations that Steinbrenner paid a gambler $40,000 to dig up dirt on outfielder Dave Winfield, a former Padre and Yankee whom "the Boss" hated.

It's that kind of arrogance that was Steinbrenner's worst trait. Just last week, he claimed he would win his struggle with the baseball commissioner. And he claimed — this is really laughable — that New Yorkers loved him.

"Construction workers, cops, cabbies, doormen — they all come up and tell me they're behind me," he said. They might be behind him if he was standing at the edge of a cliff.

He has been resented throughout the 1980s for his big ego and biting remarks — but mostly for bad management.

Steinbrenner traded away enough great players to fill an All-Star roster. He paid multimillion-dollar salaries to players who didn't deserve them. He destroyed morale. He hired, trashed and fired manager after manager. And he made enemies of players the fans loved.

Some say this might not be the end of George Steinbrenner, that as a limited partner he will somehow still infect the Yankees. We hope not.

In his own words: "Winning means everything. You show me a good loser and I'll show you a loser."

You lost, George. Stay lost.

CHARLEY REESE

Government should leave people alone

It's just as well I'm long past the age when men are driven in pursuit of romance or seduced by the lure of politics and popularity. In this era, I'm — as the saying goes — totally out of it.

Reese

For one thing, my only drug of choice is an occasional and moderate amount of Tennessee sour mash whiskey. I don't care to attend parties, I despise loud bands, and making small talk at cocktail parties is about as difficult and about as high a priority, for me, as mastering Chinese.

Worse, from the modern point of view, I'm not sensitive, either about my own feelings or other people's. I have long struggled to keep emotions and thinking processes separate and, as a result, it rarely, if ever, occurs to me to wonder or notice how someone feels during a discussion. Feelings are irrelevant to thinking or ought to be. Moderate kindness and courtesy ought to be sufficient for any relationship.

In my part of the country, stoicism is still considered a virtue. Neither males nor females are well thought of if they go about blubbering and complaining and dumping their personal problems into other people's laps. Letting it all hang out is considered infantile.

I do not believe in the group-therapy form of relationships in which it is alleged to be a virtue just to vomit out your thoughts or to wander about hugging strangers. My inner thoughts are nobody else's business nor am I interested in theirs. I'm particular about who I hug. The best relationships can be maintained by people who reserve some areas of privacy.

After all, pain and death are givens in the human condition, and it does no good to complain about either one of them. One ought to learn to bear them with courage and dignity. Only in how you face them is it possible for a human being to triumph. The Japanese have a much more sensible attitude toward death — and therefore, toward life — than most Westerners.

Another of my out-of-date eccentricities is that I like to segregate activities. I don't mix business and play or friendship and work much less romance and work. I learned the folly of the latter at about age 20.

My distaste for government is genuine. The government really ought to guard the coast and tote the mail and not otherwise stick its nose into people's private affairs.

For example, if we were a really sensible country, we would never send police to investigate the murder of a drug dealer — just a garbage truck to clean up the street. There should be no law against one slime killing another slime so long as they can shoot straight enough to avoid hitting innocent bystanders.

When well-educated and affluent people are dumb enough to be fleeced out of their money by a con artist, the government should stay out of it. If they want their money back, let them sue or hire their own private leg-breaker. The taxpayers should not be burdened with trying to ameliorate the consequences of people's greed and bad judgment.

The government should certainly stay out of religious affairs. If Americans wish to finance condominiums with gold faucets for TV preachers, help a poor but ambitious Hindu become a millionaire guru, or otherwise voluntarily hand over their money to someone they think deserves it, who should care? The government should only protect people from violence and force, not from their own choices.

What amazes me most these days is how few educated Americans value freedom and how eager most of them are to destroy it under the guise of do-goodism.

Do-gooders have worse morals than the Mafia. Do-gooders will not leave you alone, or at least not keep their hands out of your pockets now that they've learned to finance their do-goodism with government programs.

Let us leave each other alone. Let each adult suffer the consequences of his or her own choices. That's my recipe for a good society.

Charley Reese's column is distributed by King Features Syndicate.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Aug. 6, the 218th day of 1990. There are 147 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

One hundred years ago, on Aug. 6, 1890, the electric chair was used for the first time to execute a condemned criminal. The electrocution of convicted murderer William Kemmler at Auburn State Prison in New York required two tries and took several minutes to accomplish. It raised a storm of controversy over whether the method was humane.

On this date:

In 1787, the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia began to debate the articles contained in a draft of the United States Constitution.

In 1806, the Holy Roman Empire went out of existence as Emperor Francis I abdicated.

In 1825, Bolivia declared its independence from Peru.

In 1890, 100 years ago, Cy Young gained the first of his 511 major league victories as he pitched Cleveland to a 6-1 win over Chicago.

In 1914, Austria-Hungary declared war against Russia and Serbia declared war against Germany.

In 1926, Warner Brothers premiered its "Vitaphone" sound-on-disc movie system in New York.

In 1945, the United States dropped an atomic bomb on Hiroshima, Japan, killing an estimated 140,000 people in the first use of a nuclear weapon in warfare.

In 1948, Bob Mathias won the decathlon at the London Olympics.

In 1962, Jamaica became an independent dominion within the British Commonwealth.

In 1965, 25 years ago, President Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act into law.

In 1978, Pope Paul VI died of a heart attack in his summer residence at Castel Gandolfo at age 80.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Atlanta golf club even names its holes

I am a member of Ansley Golf Club (founded in 1912), located a mere wedge shot from downtown Atlanta.

It is a nine-hole course. What you do is keep your eyes closed during your first nine holes of play, so that when you go around again for your back nine you won't notice you're playing the same nine holes again.

Grizzard

Ansley has no black members. But I checked with the powers-that-be and they assured me we have no discriminatory policies whatsoever.

Women have joined Ansley. Blacks may join Ansley. A goat may join Ansley.

All you need to do to join is come up with a check for a few K, and you're in. I'm being serious here.

This is 1990. To discriminate is taboo in our society. It is also cruel and stupid.

What I am getting around to here is I talked to a few other Ansley members and we have all agreed to invite the Professional Golfers Association to bring their annual PGA championship tournament to Ansley in August.

No doubt you have heard that the PGA is scheduled at Shoal Creek in Birmingham, but that plan is buried in a bunker.

Shoal Creek doesn't have any black members and the founder of the club said admitting blacks to all white clubs, "Just isn't done in Birmingham," and he has been portrayed ever since as the Bull Connor of golf.

Sponsors are retreating from tournament television plans, picket signs are being drawn and the Rev. Al Sharpton and Jesse Jackson and maybe even Nelson Mandela will get into all this soon.

So the easy answer here is to move the tournament somewhere else, and why not to Ansley Golf Club, where there are plenty of places to park and we even have a member who is a thespian.

I will run over the course so the pros will have an idea of what to expect. (We even have names for our holes at Ansley like they do in Scotland.):

■ Hole 1 — State Farm. It takes its name from the fact if you hit your ball to the far right, it will not only be out of bounds, but it might also strike a car, traveling on Montgomery Ferry Avenue and the golfer is liable for any damages.

■ Hole 2 — AIDS: You can hit your ball into a beautiful clear creek on 2, which has been declared a health hazard by the city. They even put up signs.

■ Hole 3 — Wino: Near the tee is a railroad overpass. Winos sleep there and steal beer that is put out on the course for golfers.

■ Hole 4 — Seaboard Coastline: I made a par there once when my ball hit a fruit grower's express box car sitting on the railroad tracks and bounced onto the green.

■ Hole 5 — The Road Hole: You tee off in the middle of I-85.

■ Hole 6 — Greg Norman: If you hit your ball to the right side of the fairway, it can hit the cart path and roll all the way to the hole, 400 yards away.

■ Hole 7 — Damn It All to Hell: What you say when your ball goes into Damn It All to Hell Pond.

■ Hole 8 — Halter Top: I can't go into it here. Just trust me.

■ Hole 9 — Pool Hole: Hit it too far left and you're in the club pool or in somebody's Pina Colada.

Welcome to Ansley, Greg, Payne, Tom, Jack, etc. Non-discriminatory urban golf at its very best.

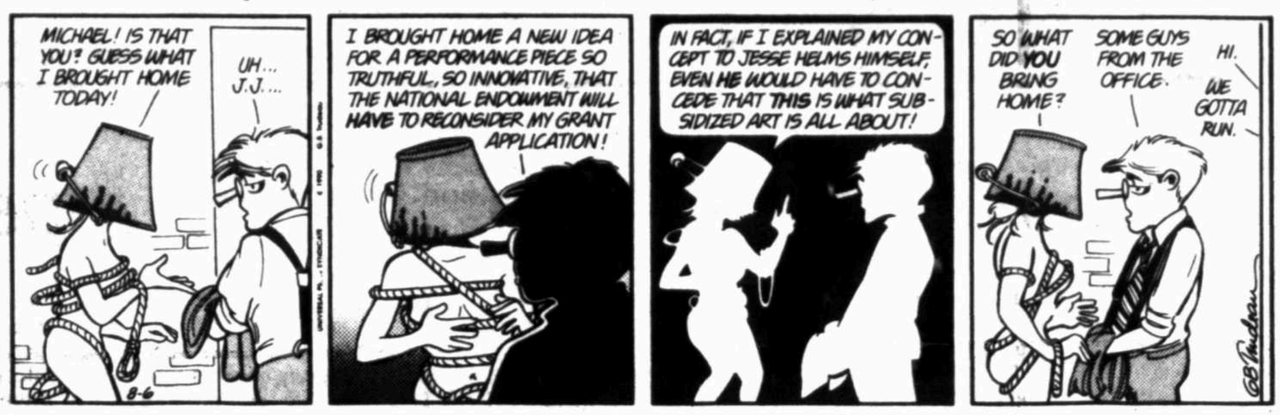
Doonesbury BY GARRY TRUDEAU



Cavalry does it by the book

KILLEEN (AP) — John Wayne may lead the cavalry in Hollywood's Sunday afternoon movies, but the 32 men of Fort Hood's 1st Cavalry's horse detachment live the role everyday.

And unlike Hollywood, everything must be genuine — from the long hours of commitment to the brass saddle fittings.

The average day includes caring for the mounts, training and performing.

Twelve-hour days are usual, with 14- to 16-hour days not uncommon, for the assortment of men in the detachment.

"We have guys from Arkansas, California, North Dakota and even Detroit," Lt. John Roper, detachment commander said.

Not everyone was raised on horseback.

"Actually, it's easier to train a rider who's never been on a horse, because we use the old military riding style, so a novice is easier to train than a rodeo star," Roper said.

Part of the difference between Western riding and cavalry riding is the McClellan saddle.

"It was designed by Gen. George B. McClellan. I hope he was a better general than he was a saddle designer," Roper said, adding that the saddle is designed for the horse's comfort, not the rider's.

The seat is wood covered with rawhide, no padding, no saddlehorn. To keep the horse cool and to add to the rider's discomfort, there are two large ventilation openings in the seat.

All the equipment is either original or a near-perfect replica.

Their 1873 Springfield carbines, short-barrel rifles, are single-action trapdoor 45-70s, which means they take a .45-caliber shot and 70 grains of powder.

Sidearms are the 1873 Colt single-action .45-caliber pistol, the original six-shooter, and the sabers are 1861 light cavalry sabers.

"Three years ago, our civilian trainer located the original Civil War contractor," Roper said.

"He somehow convinced them to go back in their company records and find the original dies and specifications. So our sabers are made under the same contract by the same company, just 100 years later," he said.

Even the detachment's 44 horses must meet cavalry standards.

The specifications for cavalry horses during the 1868-1888 era include a minimum height of 15.2 hands. The color must be dark brown or bay with black or dark brown mane and tail, Roper said.

There are two sets of equipment for each horse. One set for show, which includes the original saddle with all the polish-demanding brass. The other set substitutes an easier-to-maintain English jumping saddle for training.

Another modern-day difference is the terrain. Horses did not have to negotiate asphalt and concrete 100 years ago. So the detachment horses have slightly modified shoes to handle such surfaces.

Red Pandas beep when they're too hot

DALLAS (AP) — Officials at the Dallas Zoo know exactly when to bring their Red Pandas in from the extreme Texas heat — when it's too beeping hot.

The zoo's two Red Pandas, named Tarzan and Pasha, are surgically outfitted with thermal telemetry sensors that monitor their body temperatures. The Red Pandas, which resemble foxes, have heavy fur coats.

Only a handful of zoos across the nation are using the devices to protect valuable animals considered at risk from heat stress.

The inch-long sensors, which have been inserted surgically into the animals' abdomens, send a radio signal of periodic beeps that represent the animals' temperatures. The higher the temperature, the faster the beeps become.

"With these, we're able to monitor in a very non-intrusive manner ... how the animal is regulating its own temperature," said mammal zoologist Cynthia Bennett. "The biggest stress on our animals is our climate."

The Red Pandas are native to temperate regions in China, but they are getting adjusted to hot Texas summers, where temperatures in the 100's are not uncommon. The zoo has outfitted their enclosure with misting devices to keep the animals cool.

The Dallas Zoo first inserted such sensors into a small breed of antelope called dik dik 3 years ago, but the Red Pandas are the only Dallas zoo animals outfitted with them now.

Zoo officials say several species of heat-sensitive antelopes may be hooked up for heat monitoring in the future.

Family will get tired of clearing land

CLEBURNE (AP) — The only things standing between the Mosley family of Cleburne and their dream home is about 250,000 tires.

But Willie Mosley Jr. and his family figure the 2.47 acres of land they bought at a constable's auction last month is a bargain at $313, despite the mountain of work they now face in the form of discarded radials.

The remodeling contractor's wife, Carol, said they held a long family discussion before deciding to bid on the land. They realize it will take a lot of work to get the tires out of the old dump site and restore the property to resemble the pastoral setting that surrounds it. But this has become their dream, she said.

"We're just working people," Mrs. Mosley said. "Where else are we going to be able to buy a piece of land for $313, and all you have to do is clear some tires off of it."

Johnson County officials had foreclosed on the property because previous landowners owned $3,084.47 in back taxes. After the land was in the county's possession, officials discovered the tires that litter the landscape, piled up to 10 feet high in some areas.

Health officials notified the county that it had until Oct. 1 to remove the tires or risk fines of $25,000 a day. The tires have become a home for small animals, snakes and mosquitoes "as big as a quarter," said Constable Steve Curlee.

The Mosleys were aware of the health department's threatened fines, but said they believe no one else bothered to find that a 2-year extension to clean up the land was available.

No one else bid on the property and Mosley got it for the $313 opening bid.

Mrs. Mosley said her family has purchased "a humongous truck" and have found a saw that can be used to cut the tires.

"Landfills will take them as long as they are cut into quarters, but they won't take them whole," said Mrs. Mosley.

The family plans to move out of its rental home in Cleburne as soon as possible and put a mobile home on the property just east of Cleburne and about 30 miles southwest of Dallas.

Mrs. Mosley said she also hopes to find a bunch of people looking to build tree swings.

Restaurants keeping Little Italy alive

By Rick Hampson

NEW YORK (AP) — Little Italy is getting smaller.

Squeezed by gentrification from Soho to the north and by immigration from Chinatown to the south, the nation's most famous Italian-American enclave is turning into a Mediterranean version of Colonial Williamsburg.

Little Italy, says urban folklorist Joseph Sciorra, is "a Disneyland for suburbanites who want to recharge their ethnic batteries."

Buildings on Mulberry Street still are filled with Italian restaurants, cafes and food stores, but the names on the mailboxes for the apartments upstairs — and the deeds — are Chinese.

"It just isn't an Italian-American community," says sociologist Donald Tricarico. "There's an ethnic economy with nothing underneath. Young Italians have been leaving for years."

"THIS IS really Little China," says restaurateur Anthony Luna. "I don't know why they call it Little Italy."

Little Italy, once a 50-block area stretching from Broadway to the Bowery and from Houston to Canal streets, is now less than half its original size. There are only a few thousand Italians left, many of them elderly.

Of the 4,200 legal immigrants who moved into the 10013 ZIP code between 1983 and 1987, 3,727 came from China, Taiwan or Hong Kong. Just 11 came from Italy.

Even the Mafia is not the same, certainly not since Little Italy's most famous mob restaurant, Umberto's Clam Bar, was seized by the government.

"The tough guys are still around, but they don't live in the neighborhood," says Tricarico. "They commute."

That includes John Gotti, reputed boss of the Gambino crime family, who crosses the bridge from Queens every day in his Mercedes.

ITALIANS BEGAN moving into lower Manhattan in the 1880s, and between 1890 and 1924, they displaced their Irish predecessors on the blocks along Mulberry Street. By 1932, 98 percent of the residents were of Italian birth or parentage, and as late as the 1950s, many young people stayed to raise families.

But the tenements got older and even more crowded, and confidence in the neighborhood was undercut by plans — since abandoned — to build an expressway through it. Italians fled to the suburbs in vast numbers; today, neighboring Westchester has more Italian-Americans than any county in the nation.

Meanwhile, neighboring Chinatown's population was rising from 11,000 in 1941 to more than 70,000 now. For years, Canal Street had divided the two communities, but in the 1970s the Chinese began to spill across that cultural moat.

There was some resistance — graffiti was scrawled on some of the new Chinese signs — but the newcomers paid top dollar. In 1980, a real estate man named John Zaccaro — the husband of former vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro — was quoted as saying that 70 percent of the district's buildings were owned by Chinese.

Today, buildings with Italian names carved into the masonry bear signs with Chinese characters, and the floors above the Italian restaurants are occupied by Chinese workshops. Lendy's on Grand Street, for years a popular Italian hardware store, is now a popular Chinese hardware store.

BUT LITTLE Italy is sustained by its two enduring assets: its food and its mobsters, a combination that seems to appeal to tourists.

The Chamber of Commerce says Little Italy gets about 100,000 visitors a month, and a seven-story tourist hotel — the neighborhood's first — is scheduled to break ground later this year.

Although the Mafia's influence has shrunk along with the neighborhood, "the publicity about the Mafia is good for the restaurants," Tricarico says. "People come in to drink cappuccino and see the mobsters."

The chief attraction is Gotti, who eats lunch at restaurants like Forlini's and Giambone's, where he frequently shares the dining room with prosecutors and judges from the court buildings nearby. Sated, he repairs to the Ravenite Social Club for meetings with associates.

A walk past the Ravenite, a modest brick storefront at 247 Mulberry, has become part of the Little Italy experience, along with pasta at Angelo's and cannoli at Ferrara's.

Other stops include Umberto's, where "Crazy Joe" Gallo was shot in the back while dining on the seafood combination; Benito II, outside which Salvatore "Sally Bugs" Brigulio was gunned down; and Ruggero, where former Gambino consiglieri Joseph N. Gallo — no known relation to Crazy Joe — often sat at a table in front of the bar.

SOMETIMES THE neighborhood seems like a movie set, and sometimes it really is. Earlier this spring, a make-believe street fair with sausage vendors and "Kiss Me I'm Italian" buttons was staged by the makers of "The Godfather, Part III."

After a big shootout scene, one elderly onlooker said she was thrilled — she'd never seen anything like that in the real Little Italy.

In fact, as the Mafia's schemes have grown larger and more sophisticated, the old neighborhood rackets — numbers, extortion, small-time loan sharking — have become less important. "They have bigger fish to fry now," says Tricarico. "There's no need to control their old neighborhoods."

At least, there's still plenty to eat. Little Italy boasts 56 restaurants, 16 cafes and several dozen food stores. The latter include Alleva, founded in 1892 and reputedly the nation's oldest mozzarella maker, and Piemonte, which makes 20 different kinds of pasta daily.

"We serve real Italian food," says Anne Compoccia, a leading neighborhood booster. "Not fettuccine with strawberries on it."

Ms. Compoccia insists that Little Italy's Old World charm, and its residents' determination to stay put, will ensure the survival of this neighborhood-turned-tourist attraction.

"We're stemming the tide," she says. "Even if it's down to just 10 blocks, we're going to preserve it."

'The tough guys (mobsters) are still around, but they don't live in the neighborhood. They commute.'

How the West Was WINE

ST. LAWRENCE — Jerome Hoelscher, the West Texas cotton farmer who took up winemaking for the glamor of it, sounds like an old Saturday-night guitar picker. He's moaning the blues.

"It was a dream to have your own winery," he said. "It sounded glamorous."

In his boyhood, Hoelscher's father made wine in the home cellar. Before that, generations of the Hoelscher clan were winemakers. He was inspired to plant grapevines, set up a winery and take wine to market.

But for Hoelscher, glamor has turned into a costly disappointment. For the record, he won't say how much. But had he gone to the bank to borrow the money to put in the 27-acre vineyard of 15,000 vines of vitis vinifera grape varieties and to install the 35,000-gallon capacity winery, the bank would have "long foreclosed." Instead, he invested his cotton profits and savings.

His problem is not growing and nurturing the grapevines and their fruit or even making the wine and bottling it.

It's in getting rid of the wine, taking it to market, which has become his nemesis.

"The most difficult part once you get the wine made is selling the wine," he said.

The 53-year-old farmer, who has raised cotton here since the 1950s, can't say he wasn't forewarned about getting into the grape-and-wine business.

Other farmers in this German settlement "never really have said all that much about it," Hoelscher recalled. "One of them said, 'Well, I hope you know what you are doing.' I haven't forgot that one."

When Hoelscher put in the vineyard in 1985 about 45 miles southeast of Midland, he "figured back then I really knew what I was doing."

Today, he's not so sure.

"If I had done my homework good enough, I wouldn't be in it," he lamented.

"There are big players in this game — big wineries and distributors like a syndicate. They've got all this stuff organized. They don't want you in there."

Hoelscher has contracted with a distributor out of Midland to take his wines — which are in the $5- to $10-range per 750-milliliter corked bottle — to West Texas stores.

The farmer-winemaker is in a fiercely competitive market, not just from the California, New York, Washington and European wineries but from his own home state. In Texas, there are 26

Midlander says 'father killed JFK'

AUSTIN (AP) — An unemployed Midland oil equipment salesman claims that his late father, a former Dallas police officer, was one of three men who assassinated President John F. Kennedy in 1963.

Ricky White scheduled a meeting with reporters Monday in Dallas to offer evidence he said implicates his father, Roscoe White, in the assassination, the Austin American-Statesman reported Sunday.

The Warren Commission concluded that Lee Harvey Oswald, acting alone, fired the shots that killed Kennedy and wounded Texas Gov. John Connally.

White, 29, said he "had no conception of ever, ever giving this story out," but decided to do so after the FBI began questioning him in May 1988 in relation to his claims.

White said he can prove that his father fired two of the three bullets that struck the president and that his father, not Oswald, also killed Dallas police officer J.D. Tippit less than an hour after the assassination.

White said Oswald was involved in the plot, but did not fire any shots. The two other shooters were referred to in his father's diary only by code names, White said.

Roscoe White died in a fire in 1971.

The evidence White reportedly will provide includes a rifle with telescopic sight that uses ammunition he said is similar to that used in Oswald's gun; records showing Oswald and White served together in the Marines; and three faded messages he believes were sent by U.S. intelligence officials ordering Kennedy's assassination in Dallas in November 1963.

Bobby Inman, the former deputy CIA director, viewed the messages and told the American-Statesman they were not genuine.

White, an unemployed equipment salesman in Midland, said that he and his mother read his father's diary, which detailed the assassination. His mother, Geneva White, is seriously ill and unable to be interviewed, family members told the newspaper.

The diary disappeared from his home after it was inspected by the FBI, White said.

White said his mother worked briefly at Jack Ruby's Carousel Club in Dallas. Ruby fatally shot Oswald two days after Kennedy was assassinated.

Clues found among his father's effects and available government records show that Roscoe White and Oswald served together in the U.S. Marine Corps in the late 1950s, Ricky White said. He said his father claimed to have become acquainted with Oswald in Japan and the Philippines.

He said his father's possessions also included a photograph, taken by Marina Oswald of her husband, Lee Harvey Oswald, holding a rifle in the back yard of their Dallas home in 1963.

Oswald was discharged in 1959 and defected to the Soviet Union. He returned to the United States in 1962, settling first in Fort Worth before moving to Dallas.

The elder White was discharged in late 1962 and joined his wife and two sons in Paris, Texas. Ricky White says his family later moved to Dallas where his father sold insurance.

Dallas police records show that on Oct. 7, 1963, Roscoe White joined the department as a photographer and clerk, and that he became a patrol officer in 1964.

White says his father shot from behind a fence atop the grassy knoll that was to the right and front of Kennedy's limousine when he was shot. He says the other two gunmen were behind the limousine in the Texas School Book Depository, where Oswald also was, and in a second building.

As the incriminating evidence began to mount against his father, Ricky White asked the JFK Assassination Information Center in Dallas to verify or disprove his father's involvement, center director Larry Howard told The Associated Press. The information center is a private group that has pursued the idea of a conspiracy and coverup in Kennedy's death.

"He's actually very courageous to follow this thing through," Howard said Sunday. "The amount of documentation we have to back his story up is just incredible."

Howard said he has been working with White for 1½ years, and hopes White's story will lead to a new investigation of the assassination.

"I've never been so convinced of anything in my life," Howard said.

"We're not saying that we've solved the John F. Kennedy assassination case but this sure opens the doors to another investigation."

Howard said Americans are fascinated by JFK's assassination. "I think they know that it was a massive coverup in the very beginning and they want to know the truth," he said.

WINE: Vintner may set up small winery in Midland for tourists wineries, including the Ste. Genevieve Winery near Fort Stockton, the La Escarbada XIT Winery at Amarillo, the Llano Estacado and Teysha Cellars wineries at Lubbock, and the state's oldest, the 100-plus-year-old Val Verde Winery at Del Rio.

So far, Hoelscher has shipped out a few hundred 12-bottle cases. He is not encouraged but is hopeful.

In his warehouse-winery are 3,000 cases of 1987 and 1988 vintage wines — a Texas Blush, Cabernet Sauvignon, Chenin Blanc, Sauvignon Blanc, Chardonnay and Johannisberg Riesling. In his stainless steel tanks are 10,000 gallons of refrigerated 1989 vintage wines to be bottled.

And out in the field are the remnants of his 1990 grapes, which were severely cut back by a freeze and then by hail.

"That part doesn't hurt my feelings," Hoelscher said, "because there's plenty in here already. In fact, it's kind of a relief that there's none out there. God was merciful."

Even so, the problem remains: how to market wines from his 1987, 1988, and 1989 harvests.

Hoelscher is pondering the notion of putting in a smaller winery, set up for tourists, just off a main thoroughfare in Midland and selling his wines from there.

"I would only sell my wine. I'll guarantee you that," Hoelscher said. Anyway, in Texas, it's not legal, he said, for a winemaker to sell any wine other than his own.

But setting up shop in town to sell his own wine has drawbacks: the high-dollar price of prime commercial land, installing the winery and store, paying taxes, hiring workers, and paying workers' compensation.

"And I know now why so many places are going broke and why so many places are having to charge for what they do because they've got all this overhead," Hoelscher lamented.

And Hoelscher still is somewhat grieved over the money he lost in an investment in a busted Ballinger winery. "I still got it (stock in the defunct winery). It's worth about as much as those rocks" scattered about in his cotton field, which, unlike his vineyard, has been good to him.

"We harvest this cotton, haul it to the cotton gin, process it there, and compress it." Cotton buyers are lined up. "And you don't worry about this stuff no more," Hoelscher said in gratitude. "They send you a check for it."

Grapes haven't been so kind.

And he has had a setback in his sunflower crop, which he put in to attract birds for dove hunting. It worked — too successfully, apparently. "I don't know if that's the reason, but there's not many doves anymore. This may be the last year I'll plant sunflowers."

And 10 years ago, he planted hundreds of acres of sunflowers and sold them for the oil.

"It did (well) for awhile, while the price was high," he recalled. "When the price was nothing, that was the end of that story."

His winery story is continuing.

Though he has invested heavily in the winery, Hoelscher said that were he to sell out, he might get 30, 20 or 10 cents on the dollar.

And while he doesn't want to give up on his enterprise, neither does he want to end up penniless by investing more and more funds into a business that, due to glitch in a distribution network, isn't profitable.

"It's kind of a shame — taking hard-earned cotton money and spending it on these grapes and winery and losing it on that," he said. "It's like digging ditches and going to Vegas and gambling it away. It's been that-a-way."

And, Hoelscher reasoned, "You know, you ain't going to live forever. You put up with it so long and no longer. I ain't going to fight it the rest of my life. Even a good army has to retreat sometimes."

But, in reflection, Hoelscher's wine days haven't been all dreary. "It's like winemakers all say: 'It takes a lot of beer to make wine.' "

Drug crackdowns create 'friction,' police say

HARLINGEN (AP) — Stronger efforts to enforce drug laws may have prompted an increase in the Rio Grande Valley's murder rate, authorities said.

Ironically, stricter enforcement of drug laws may be causing criminals to crack, said Cameron County Sheriff Alex Perez.

"Crooks don't trust themselves ... families are getting together and fighting among each other," he said.

Authorities reported 46 homicides in the area through July, compared with 57 for all of 1989. Many of the killings have been linked to the drug trade, they said.

"We're generating friction among them and with friction you start a fire. Consequently you have a lot of violent acts taking place," said Rene Torres, public information officer for the Hidalgo County Sheriff's Department.

"When you're dealing in something that's against the law to begin with, killing somebody is no problem," he said.

Reporting the most slayings this year, the Hidalgo County Sheriff's Department said 12 occurred within its jurisdiction through July. The Cameron County Sheriff's Department is investigating 11 homicides.

Among South Texas cities, Brownsville had six homicides, with four in Weslaco; three each in Harlingen and San Benito; and San Juan, two. Donna, Edinburg, McAllen and Roma had one homicide each.

Vines' assistant claims chief coached testimony

DALLAS (AP) — The assistant to the embattled police chief here said that his boss urged him to downplay some aspects of an officer's firing before a panel investigating the dismissal, a Dallas newspaper reported.

Sources familiar with the case told The Dallas Morning News in a copyright story Sunday that Police Chief Mack Vines, on indefinite leave, has denied the allegation which threatens his future with the city.

Vines was placed on indefinite leave last week after the accusation. Prosecutors are examining allegations of witness tampering and perjury during an investigation into a police officer's firing.

Sources told the newspaper that Assistant Police Chief Greg Holliday, who also was placed on indefinite leave, told the special panel that Vines suggested he de-emphasize the speed with which the department decided to fire officer Patrick LeMaire.

The three-member panel concluded that the department's haste "created a frenzied atmosphere conducive to mistakes," one that cast suspicion on the officer's dismissal.

City Manager Jan Hart announced the leaves Friday and said the Dallas County district attorney's office was looking into the allegations of witness tampering and perjury.

The police chief fired LeMaire on July 14, 1989, 17 days after the officer shot and killed an unarmed Mexican man. Later, officers learned that a report used to justify the dismissal was altered without the knowledge of its author.

The panel appointed to investigate the matter concluded Friday that neither Vines nor his staff improperly influenced the investigation of LeMaire.

However, panel members then notified Ms. Hart of the accusations that Holliday made against Vines. Sources said Vines has denied talking to Holliday about Holliday's testimony before the panel.

The newspaper reported that Vines said he only notified Holliday to show up for the hearing as he had been asked to do.

Vines has an unpublished telephone number and could not be contacted Sunday by The Associated Press for comment.

Sources close to the latest investigation said Saturday that if witness tampering occurred, it would concern what, if anything, Vines told Holliday about his testimony.

The newspaper said perjury charges could involve either Vines or Holliday, who gave conflicting testimony to the LeMaire panel about their conversation.

Panel member Ronald Kirk declined comment on the accusations against Vines. He said witnesses who testified before the panel were under oath and had sworn not to discuss their testimony with others.

Some City Council members said the allegations have placed Vines' job in jeopardy, but that they want to reserve final judgment until the district attorney's office completes its investigation.

"I think the Vines administration may be in serious jeopardy," said Jerry Bartos, a City Council member.

Dallas Police Association president Monica Smith said that the rank-and-file has lost confidence in Vines.

Avian invasion ruffling a few feathers in Waco

WACO (AP) — Like a scene out of the movie thriller "The Birds," thousands of unwelcome visitors have invaded a quiet neighborhood here, but a wildlife expert said the birds shouldn't be dismissed as pests.

About 12,000 egrets that arrived three months ago could stay until October, a biologist said Saturday. A mobile home park manager in the neighborhood said she ran out of patience several weeks ago.

The birds have died in the pool, on the roads and in the yards of her tenants, said Mackie Curton, manager of the Alta Vista Mobile Home Park.

"Now, I just run over those little suckers if they don't move," she said. She said the city has collected dead birds at the park at least once.

Most of the birds are cattle egrets, protected by state and federal law, said Jose C. Cano Jr., a wildlife biologist with the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department. He said once they begin nesting, no one can disturb them.

"There's thousands of acres in the county. I don't know why they come in the city," said Cano.

But he said residents should remember that the birds were here first and have probably been flying to Waco for ages.

"We just kind of get in their way," he said.

Residents say the birds' droppings smell bad, corrode the paint off cars and can cause histoplasmosis, a pulmonary disease.

Cano said the egrets could stay as late as October, but there are signs the colony is dissolving.

"I'm seeing them around the countryside, which means they're breaking up," he said.

Linda Shumake, a hair salon operator, said she found eight baby bird carcasses behind her business last week. She said city workers have helped by removing dead birds from her property.

"Nobody wants to touch them," said Ms. Shumake.

The colony has moved around the Waco area for the past 10 years, said Cano. He said colonies return to the same nesting place until their habitat is disturbed and Waco is part of the birds' migratory path from South America.

Ms. Curton said she has seen some improvement.

"It's getting better. We're not finding as many dead ones. I'm not finding any around the swimming pool," she said.

Naked truth kept under wraps

HOUSTON (AP) — Two streakers and one frustrated artist shed their clothes to make a point about censorship, but most of those attending the first annual "Nude-in" at Memorial Park kept their expressions under wraps.

Six demonstrators — all of them clothed — spoke to an audience of about 50 journalists and curious park-goers at the rally Saturday in one of Houston's largest parks.

"Nobody would have come today if we hadn't called it a 'nude-in,'" said Marisa Bozza, a performer in the local band Naked Apes of Reason, which sponsored the event. "The issue is artists' rights. There's a lot of censorship going on, a wave of paranoia taking over the government."

Demonstrators protested the 1990 appropriations bill for the National Endowment for the Arts, which prohibits grant recipients from using the money for works that may be considered obscene.

But as journalists pressed for the undressed, one demonstrator invited a reporter to strip. When he declined, demonstrator Carolyn Cremona took her clothes off.

"If I have to limit myself not to be able to speak obscenities or (to undress) in front of my audience, there's no use in my even doing my artwork," Ms. Cremona said.

"All this censorship is a new breed of McCarthyism," Ms. Cremona said. "We're turning into a communistic society."

Arthur Gaddy, right, unloads his homemade oil skimmer with the help of his grandchildren Tina, left, and John, at Houston Point in northern Galveston Bay, where, on Sunday, more oil-eating microbes were sprayed into the water to help dissipate an estimated 700,000-gallon spill.

Oil oozes into marshlands; Microbe spraying continues

BEACH CITY (AP) — Outbound ships were allowed to leave the Houston Ship Channel Sunday night for the first time since the July 28 ship-barge collision that spilled up to 700,000 gallons of oil into the busy Galveston Bay, Coast Guard officials said.

"Traffic is moving, just not freely," said Scott Inbody, chief warrant officer of the Coast Guard's vessel traffic service in Houston. "We're making sure no vessels meet or overtake each other in the waters near the accident."

The ship channel was opened to inbound towboat traffic Friday. It had been closed since the accident while the Coast Guard worked to free the barge that had partially sunk in the collision.

The Coast Guard wanted to open the channel to unrestricted two-way traffic Monday, Inbody said.

"We have outbound ships and inbound towboats, pulling or pushing barges, moving right now," he said.

Inbody said about 40 vessels were waiting to get into the channel.

Contractors sprayed oil-eating bacteria on marshes Sunday while crews vacuumed up heavy sludge that drifted northward from the spill.

U.S. Coast Guard Capt. Thomas Greene said wind currents pushed a slick of oil surrounding Houston Point back into Galveston Bay Sunday. Some of the oil washed ashore, while streamers of up to 100 yards in length moved northeast toward Trinity Bay, a sensitive marine area.

Approximately 315,000 gallons of the "catfeed" refinery oil from the barge-tanker collision was collected by Sunday afternoon, Greene said. Sunday's cleanup involved numerous skimmers, booms and 18 vacuum trucks.

'We've got oil about 30 feet into the marshlands. We're trying to do as much of (the bioremediation) as we can today.'

— B.J. "Buck" Wynne, chairman, Texas Water Commission

About 150 contract workers and 90 Coast Guardsmen were working Sunday afternoon to clean up sludge around the bay, Greene said.

The Coast Guard is estimating the cleanup will cost $5 million before beaches and waterways are clear of the oil, Greene said.

The oil was spilled July 28 when the Greek tanker Shinoussa collided with two of three barges under tow by the tugboat Chandy N in the Houston Ship Channel as it passes through Galveston Bay.

An engineer aboard the Chandy N told a federal panel at Ellington Field in Houston on Sunday that he searched for a place to jump overboard after he saw the Shinoussa swing around and bear down on the front barges of the tow. The engineer testified he ran to the back of the tug as the collision occurred, but returned to the front deck to assess damages once he determined the barges had remained upright and abandoning ship was unnecessary.

The hearing, conducted jointly by Coast Guard investigators and a representative of the National Transportation Safety Board, was in its fifth day and expected to conclude Sunday.

Greene said northerly winds were expected to blow through the bay Sunday night, causing a repeat of Sunday's oil movements.

Dead crabs, mussels and other small marine animals have been found on the shore around Houston Point, said Larry McKinney, director of the resource protection division of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

State officials began a supervised bioremediation application about 10:30 a.m. Sunday at Houston Point. Officials expected to use about 150 pounds of the oil-eating microbes before the application was complete Sunday night.

In bioremediation, bacteria mixed with water are sprayed onto the oil. The naturally occurring microbes reduce the oil to a fatty substance that sinks and is eaten by fish. When the oil is gone, the microbes die.

"We've got oil about 30 feet into the marshlands," Texas Water Commission chairman B.J. "Buck" Wynne said Sunday. "We're trying to do as much of (the bioremediation) as we can today."

Wynne said bioremediation used on Pelican Island last week seems to have been beneficial, but tests have not been completed. Crews will conduct 12- and 24-hour testing of the Houston Point area once the microbes have been sprayed, he said.

"This is different from oil on rocks or oil in open waters," Wynne said. "This is on a living, organic system and it's absolutely the most sensitive place it can be."

Williams' image conflicts with his business records

DALLAS (AP) — Oilman Clayton Williams, who made business savvy the cornerstone of his Republican gubernatorial campaign, has weathered millions of dollars in losses in some enterprises, according to a published report.

The Dallas Morning News said in a copyright story Sunday its examination of Williams' finances shows the Midland entrepreneur's net worth declined greatly in the last decade, while he exaggerated some achievements.

Although Williams brags about his telecommunications company, he lost $15 million from ClayDesta Communications Inc., which suffered from cost overruns, management woes and staff turnover, according to records and former executives.

But Williams, who sold the company in March 1989, said the decline in oil prices crippled his ability to revive ClayDesta. He defended his other business ventures.

"I have accurately portrayed my business record," Williams told the newspaper Friday. "Anybody who repays $500 million in Texas oil and gas debt has a pretty good record."

Williams, who claims his business skills give him an advantage over Democratic challenger and state Treasurer Ann Richards, has watched his net worth fall by almost two-thirds since 1982, when he estimated it at about $300 million, the newspaper said.

The Morning News' four-month examination of Williams' personal and business finances shows he has a net worth of about $116 million, concentrated in oil and gas properties.

The newspaper said the oilman has been forced to scale back his empire, selling off enough assets to repay $500 million in bank loans. But even in an economic slump, he has managed to remain wealthy, which friends credit to his salesmanship.

"The guy could literally sell ice to Eskimos," Joe Milam, vice president of Admarc, said.

The Midland advertising agency produced ClayDesta commercials and is handling Williams' gubernatorial campaign ads.

"I think a lot of people say he's been lucky," John L. Cox, an independent oilman in Midland, said. "If he's out of debt and is a wealthy man, then he is lucky."

The report said Williams holds millions of dollars in depressed Midland real estate as a result of investments he made in the early 1980s.

The Dallas Morning News said in its Sunday edition that Midland oilman Clayton Williams' net worth has declined greatly in the last decade.

Two insurance companies, Equitable Life Assurance Society and Prudential Insurance Co. of America, agreed in 1988 and 1989 to restructure his loans so rents on the money-losing properties would cover Williams' loan payments, officials said.

Analysts said Williams escaped financial disaster by selling one of his most successful companies, Clajon Gas Co., in a $230 million junk-bond-financed leveraged buyout. They said without the Clajon sale, Williams would have been strapped for cash to repay his huge bank debt.

The Houston Chronicle reported in a copyright story Sunday that the Clajon leveraged buyout was financed primarily with $130 million in risky, high-yield subordinated debentures — so-called junk bonds — issued by Wesray Capital Corp., a New York investment firm.

Clajon Gas owns and operates six natural gas pipeline systems and two natural gas processing plants in Texas.

As a result of the 1987 transaction, Williams received $195 million in cash and $35 million in bonds, which he used to pay off part of his $500 million debt and avoid the financial collapse of his other businesses, the Chronicle reported.

The majority of Williams' wealth, about $75 million, is concentrated in oil and gas, the Morning News reported.

Longtime employees say that Williams' knack for self-promotion sometimes outshines his professional achievements.

Williams disagreed. "I am not backing up one bit on my business record," he told the Morning News.

Records show that many of Williams' companies are holding companies or investment partnerships that are only marginally active.

The bulk of Williams' income derives from his oil company, Clayton W. Williams Jr. Inc. in Midland.

Sakowitz closes doors in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Family vans parked beside Jaguars and Mercedes as customers took advantage of sales at 80 to 90 percent off on the final day of shopping at Sakowitz, which closed its doors this weekend after 88 years.

Paul Buxbaum, whose firm is handling the liquidation sale, said shoppers cleared 12 of 22 racks of merchandise left when the doors opened Saturday. He estimated the sale already had brought in $6.7 million.

It was a sad day for long-time employees, including Margaret Beavers, a 40-year employee who has made hundreds of veils for Houston brides as part of her millinery work at the store.

"Garage sales are mild compared to this," she said. "People do not realize this is not old, damaged merchandise. It hurts us to see the way they treat things."

Although Saturday was the final day for the sale of merchandise, the store will remain open until Aug. 11 to complete the sale of fixtures. On Aug. 14, the lease for the Post Oak store will be auctioned in a New York City bankruptcy court.

That will end the 88-year history of the business started by two brothers who opened a men's clothing store in Galveston.

In the 1950s, Sakowitz was a leader in establishing suburban locations and by the 1980s had a chain of 18 stores in three states under the leadership of Robert T. Sakowitz, grandson of one of the founders.

Sakowitz became a victim of the downturn in the oil industry.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, AUGUST 6, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Adventure and discovery mark the months just ahead! Business progress depends on your ability to come up with original ideas. Stay on your toes in November and December. Although money remains tight in January 1991, you find ingenious ways to cut costs and build up investment capital. Romance will enjoy highly favorable influences as winter ends. Marital conflict should subside by April. Forget old grievances.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: poet Alfred Lord Tennyson, actress Catherine Hicks, actor Robert Mitchum, actress Stepfanie Kramer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work is excellent therapy for those who feel down in the dumps. Avoid seeking oversimplified solutions and you will find the right answers. Your sense of humor is a valuable asset.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A cooperative attitude counts big with higher-ups. Put your ego aside and join others in getting the job done quickly. Ignore any gossip about a romance that may have gone sour.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Hard work and a desire to be of service are the main ingredients for success. The time is right for an artistic debut. Engaged couples may have second thoughts. Put your plans on hold.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A romantic interlude starts the week on a happy note. Do not let ambition interfere with progress. Your practical, hard-working ways pay off handsomely. A raise or promotion is in the offing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Recycling old ideas could boost your earnings. Everything should go smoothly at work. Seek the cooperation of someone who has been opposing you. Travel can be highly beneficial.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your income will rise soon. Perform services for close kin without attaching any strings. The comforts of home will be more relaxing than an expensive night on the town.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tend to routine work before getting involved in complex negotiations. Good communication is the key. Keep in touch with overseas contacts. A dialogue resolves serious issues.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Curb a tendency to fly off the handle. Hostile people are best avoided. Change your work schedule to reflect your new priorities. Lighten up with your loved ones.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your motives are hard to pin down, even to yourself. Be prepared to put in some overtime this evening. Get in touch with your mate and explain the necessity of working extra hours.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get ready to try something different. If you stick with your dreams, one might come true! Original ideas open new doors. Seek the cooperation of your associates.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Overlooking important details can lead to aggravation. Be certain to tie up loose ends before announcing any changes. Feelings run high at work. Be careful not to jump to conclusions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): If you speak without knowing the facts, you could end up with egg on your face! Do not let obstacles discourage you. You have the power to overcome. A personal relationship needs nurturing.

TODAY'S CHILDREN have a high opinion of themselves and let others know it! They are sure that they always know best. Lay down the law kindly but firmly when these youngsters start to throw their weight around.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡542 ◇A10 ♣A986542
As dealer, what action do you take?

A.—You have too much defense and not enough offense to consider a three-level preempt. Change the ace of diamonds to the king of clubs, and the hand would be perfect for a non-vulnerable three-club opening. Pass. You can always get into the act later.

Q.2—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡542 ◇A10 ♣A986542
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—With two aces and a seven-card suit, as a passed hand you have too much playing strength to respond one no trump. Bid two clubs to see how the auction develops.

Q.3—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡542 ◇A10 ♣A986542
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Your hand is suitable for play in clubs, and nothing else. Clue partner in on your seven-card suit by rebidding three clubs.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ9 ♡Q10943 ◇J52 ♣108
Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?

A.—There are those who believe that any time you have five-card support for partner's major, and a limited hand, you should leap to game. Include us out. We insist on a singleton somewhere. This hand is too balanced for a jump to game, so we would settle for a raise to two hearts.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Void ♡KJ43 ◇KQ7 ♣KQJ964
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	?

What action do you take?

A.—Normally, when the opponents have bid one major and you hold the other, you should enter the auction with a takeout double if you are strong enough to compete. Here, however, there is too great a disparity in the suits. We would opt for a three-club overcall.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A952 ♡AJ ◇KQ63 ♣K43
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	2 ♡	Pass	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—A very close decision. We would not blame you if you passed. However, our four-card holding in the other major prompts us to double. In the pass-out seat, under the overcaller, that action is primarily for takeout.

Barr comments on backlash that followed shrill anthem

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Roseanne Barr told a friendly audience over the weekend that she must be the "world's greatest singer."

And why does she think that?

"Because my voice can stop a (bleeping) nation," Barr said Saturday in her first public stage performance since singing a shrill rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" in San Diego.

Barr

No hecklers or protesters were in the crowd of about 5,000 at the Riverfest outdoor stage at Harriet Island.

One fan carried a sign that read, "We love you Roseanne."

Barr's rendition of the national anthem at a Padres baseball game drew boos from the crowd. She capped the performance by grabbing her crotch and spitting on the ground in what she said was a parody of a baseball pitcher.

Commenting on the public backlash from her act in San Diego, Barr joked that she was "recently released from the Betty Ford drug clinic."

"I didn't want to be on drugs," she said, "but my publicist said it would help my comeback."

Barr's 45-minute, profanity-laced act preceded a performance by 1950s rock 'n' roller Chuck Berry.

ANDERSON, S.C. (AP) — Actress Julia Roberts, who outraged many upstate South Carolinians by saying the region was racist, now says she was referring to just one incident.

"I was born in the South, so in no way am I trying to create a stereotype," Ms. Roberts said in a statement given to the Anderson Independent-Mail on Friday.

Ms. Roberts, who is from Smyrna, Ga., said she was referring to an incident in which a black friend who entered an Abbeville restaurant with her was refused service. She added:

"I was shocked that this type of treatment still exists in America in the '90s — in the South or anywhere else."

In an interview in the Aug. 9 issue of Rolling Stone magazine, Ms. Roberts said Abbeville was "horribly racist" and a "living hell."

Ms. Roberts was in Abbeville in May filming "Sleeping With the Enemy." She recently starred with Richard Gere in the box-office hit "Pretty Woman."

More than 100 upstate South Carolina residents last week contributed money for a $467 ad that appeared in Wednesday's issue of Variety. The ad appeared under the heading "Pretty Woman? Pretty Low."

"Are there racists here?" the ad said. "Perhaps some, as there are throughout the world. But they do not define us."

AMES, Iowa (AP) — The Janet Jackson concert scheduled for Sunday evening at Iowa State University was postponed because the pop singer is ill, officials said.

Ms. Jackson, a sister of pop superstar Michael Jackson, was being treated for an inner-ear infection. A spokesman at ISU's Hilton Coliseum said the singer also postponed a concert scheduled for Saturday night in St. Louis.

Ms. Jackson is on a national tour to promote "Rhythm Nation 1814," her second album.

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Even though Kathy Swanson is suing Andrew Dice Clay for $6 million, she wants people to know the comedian who once was her husband used to be sweet.

Ms. Swanson, who left her family's rural Iowa farm to seek success in Hollywood, said she and Clay met in 1980. Their first date included buying a bottle of wine at a convenience store and sitting in front of a fake log in his fireplace.

They spent a chaste night together on the sofa, sleeping, she said.

"It was like he tied me to a pedestal. He was very protective of me, and that was fine at the time," Ms. Swanson said in an interview with The Des Moines Sunday Register.

They lived together for four years, married in 1984 and were divorced two years later.

Although her ex-husband — whose act has been criticized as misogynist, homophobic and otherwise bigoted — always tended to view women "as barefoot, pregnant and walking 10 feet behind you," his barbs grew more vehement, she said.

Ms. Swanson said Clay manipulated her and that she did not get her own lawyer when they divorced. Her lawyer now, Marvin Mitchelson, said the divorce decree paid off $4,000 in debts and paid Ms. Swanson $1,000 a month for 18 months.

Her suit seeks $3 million in shared property and an equal amount in punitive damages.

Clay's lawyers have declined to comment.

Ms. Swanson, who played Mel Gibson's wife in the movie "Lethal Weapon" and had the lead in a music video for the group .38 Special, said Clay became angry when she considered a movie role when they were married.

But despite the court battle, she said she wants people to know "that I had a wonderful time with Andrew and that I am sorry that things had to end so bitterly when they were so sweet for so long."

Nostalgia never goes out of style

By Kathy Hogan Trocheck
N.Y. Times News Service

They're cheap, disposable even, yet you couldn't get through the summer without 'em. They're classic summer products, the stuff your parents, even your grandparents, loaded up on every year, and now — 20, 40, 60, even 70 years later — you're buying the same stuff.

And not just out of nostalgia, either. The classics — stuff like Kool-Aid, flip-flops, Popsicles and those funky metal lawn chairs your grandma had under the big oak tree — appeal because their design is simple, yet pleasing; functional, yet fun.

Sure, you could slip a silver spoon into a bowl of Haagen-Dazs. But sometimes, cheaper is better. And isn't there more sensory joy in slurping a Popsicle on a hot August day or listening to the sound of rain squishing through those 50-cent rubber flip-flops you bought at the beach?

Some classics have a clear written history; neither the many mergers nor the acquisitions of the company that makes Kool-Aid (now a product of the merged Kraft-General Foods family), for example, can obliterate the memory of a Nebraska man named Edwin Perkins, who 60 years ago stirred up a batch of something he first called Flavor Smack.

THE ORIGINS of other products, like flip-flops, which seem to have sprung spontaneously from a factory in the Far East sometime in the early 1950s, are lost in time.

Unfortunately, some greatly beloved products seem destined for the endangered-species list.

"I think manufacturers make it hard on you to stay loyal to the classics," observes Jane Stern, who travels the country with husband Michael Stern writing about regional foods and American pop culture. "For some reason, they're always looking to fix some unbusted thing. They don't seem to have a great grasp about how iconic their products are. Coke had to learn that the hard way."

Here are some details on summer product classics: flip-flops, Kool-Aid, Popsicles, swim rings, and stamped metal chairs.

"Blew out my flip-flop. Stepped on a pop-top. Cut my heel, had to cruise on back home." — "Margaritaville" by Jimmy Buffett

Talk about household penetration. Who has not donned a cheap pair of rubber flip-flops in the summer? But who knows where they came from?

Sandals, of course, have been worn since biblical times. In the 20th century, their popularity waxed and waned. Before the 1930s, sandals were frowned on, because nudity of the foot was considered unchaste, according to Mary Trasko's "Heavenly Soles: Extraordinary 20th-Century Shoes" (Abbeville Press, $29.95).

After World War II, when leather and rubber became available again, open styles regained popularity. It's possible that soldiers returning from the Far East remembered some of the thong-type sandals worn by people there and adapted the style to rubber.

Bill Keenan, a wholesale importer from Phoenix, estimates that a billion pairs of flip-flops are brought into this country every year, either from Taiwan or Korea. They cost about 3½ cents a pair to manufacture, but even with extra duties tacked on, most wholesale for only 28 to 30 cents a pair, a price American manufacturers can't compete with.

Keenan buys his flip-flops by the container-load off a California dock. This month, a pair of his flip-flops sold at a store near me for 50 cents.

"JUST ABOUT everybody drinks Kool-Aid," boasts Andrew Whitman, a spokesman for General Foods, the company that makes the beverage.

"Our household penetration rate is astounding, and 80 percent — the vast majority of U.S. households — today have consumed Kool-Aid sometime in the past five years."

Jane Stern, an expert on food folklore, remembers that she had to go to summer camp to taste the powdered drink mix that was banned in her mother's house.

"It was the classic bug juice," she recalls fondly. "It was really just red water. But when you think of Kool-Aid, you have this platonic image of a cold, refreshing drink."

Kool-Aid got its start in 1927, when a guy named Edwin Perkins stirred up a summertime drink for his family. By 1931, Mr. Perkins had a Chicago factory, and in 1953, General Foods acquired the business.

There are now 15 flavors of Kool-Aid. The most popular is Lemonade, followed by Tropical Punch, Cherry and Grape. Two new flavors, Sharkle Berry Fin and Purplesaurus Rex, have been introduced since 1988, Whitman said.

And let the record reflect: The company is adamant that the poisoned, grape-flavored powdered drink used to kill more than 900 people in Jones town, Guyana, in 1978 was not Kool-Aid.

POPSICLE LORE has it that an 11-year-old boy by the name of Frank Epperson left a glass of fruit drink on his front porch one cold night back in 1905 and the next day found his drink frozen solid, with a wooden stirring stick firmly in place. "Zowie!" (or something) said young Frank.

As is common with name-brand food products, the Popsicle name (which is a registered trademark), has changed hands many times through the years. In the past decade, for instance, Sara Lee Co. sold Popsicle to a company in Green Bay, Wis., called Gold Bond Ice Cream. At company headquarters, employees get free Popsicles, spokesman Edward Stackman said.

The company declines to reveal yearly sales or the ingredients of its ice pops.

Food folklorist Jane Stern says it doesn't matter. "I'm convinced people eat them in the summertime because they're less interested in the taste than the temperature," she said. "People eat them just to numb their tongues."

Today, there are 12 Popsicle flavors: Cherry is the hands-down favorite. Popsicle season gets under way around Memorial Day and lasts until Labor Day, he said.

During the Depression, the company started making Popsicles with two sticks so the treat could be broken in half and shared, Stackman said.

"The frozen novelty industry went to one stick back in 1980 so the product wouldn't have to be split apart," he said.

Did you really know that your neighborhood 9-year-old has never seen a Popsicle with two sticks?

THE FIRST, and most endearing, swim ring was an old innertube, discarded from use on the family Ford, patched by a caring parent and made perfect for the swimming hole.

Today, that basic black innertube comes in hundreds of styles: from sea horses to Mickey Mouse to Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles. Like other cheap seasonal staples, most vinyl inflatable swim toys are made in Taiwan or China, said Dave Fisher, director of design for Intex Recreation Corp. of Long Beach, Calif., which manufactures overseas and claims 75 percent of the domestic inflatable toy market.

"There are no domestic manufacturers," he said. "This type thing doesn't demand a very high price. We sell at retail for as little as 98 cents, all the way up to $4.50 for something that resembles the old-time tire tube. The average ring that's out there sells for $1.50. It's important that it be inexpensive because these are a big impulse item. We sell in the millions of swim rings."

Fisher's company makes more than 200 designs of inflatables. This year's hot trend is fluorescent colors, especially for rings featuring licensed likenesses of Peanuts, Disney and Hanna-Barbera cartoon characters. The big money to be made in inflatables, though, is in ride-on toys, Fisher said.

IF YOUR GRANNY hasn't moved to a condo in Florida, chances are she still has one of these out back.

"Everybody remembers one of our chairs from somewhere," said Dudley Flanders, president of Flanders Industries, the maker of what's now called the Americana chair. The Flanders factory in Fort Smith, Ark., has been turning out this same chair, continuously, since the 1940s. The original owners of the factory, the Warmack Stove Co., began making the stamped-steel Resto chair after World War II with metal presses used for the war effort.

"We've made millions of these chairs," Flanders said. The same machinery is also used to turn out that other back-porch staple, the double or triple glider.

The old Resto turned retro about five years ago, he said, when an editor at the Metropolitan Home magazine urged him to restyle the chair slightly, playing up the curved back and adding a big bend in the arm for an Art Deco look. Then it was a simple matter of adopting some hot contemporary colors.

DEAR ABBY

Woman can't do a thing with her excessive hair

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Here's a new one for you: I am HAIRY! And I don't mean just a moustache. I am a woman in my mid-30s and single. I date occasionally, and I have more chest hair than the last man I went out with. I do not wear necklines cut to the navel, but it would be nice if I didn't have to wear turtlenecks and blouses buttoned up to the last button.

Van Buren

I've asked my doctor, and all he can say is, "Some people have more hair than others." Abby, there must be a solution to this. What do bodybuilders and transvestites do?

I've tried shaving my neck and chin, and get a 5 o'clock shadow by noon, plus the hair comes back darker and thicker. Plucking is a never-ending chore; I get sores, and the hair still comes back. I've considered electrolysis, and I'm sure it would be possible for some areas, but not all over my body! Besides, I understand it's expensive.

Abby, please help me. Do other women suffer with this? Could there be a medical solution? — HAIRY BUT NOT HARRY

DEAR HAIRY: Yes. Other women also suffer from this. You need to see: (a) an endocrinologist (a physician whose specialty is glands), and (b) a dermatologist (a physician dealing with the skin). The gland specialist will be able to tell you if your problem is a hormone imbalance, in which case some kind of medication may be in order to control it. The dermatologist can recommend a qualified electrologist. Hair removal by electrolysis is the preferred method for permanent hair removal. It is not inexpensive, but superfluous hair on women is such a curse, it's worth it. My heart goes out to you. Please write again and let me know how you're doing.

DEAR ABBY: Thank heavens the "graduation season" is over. I am personally very tired of all these graduations — and worse yet, all those "announcements," which suggest that a gift is expected.

I am all for high school and college graduations, but graduation ceremonies for preschoolers, kindergarten, grammar school and the eighth grade try my patience.

My nephew graduated from college last June, and his parents had to beg him to go through with the ceremony. He said he didn't see any sense in renting a cap and gown and sitting under a broiling sun a whole afternoon just to get his diploma, when he could have it mailed to him!

Please comment. — AUNT FLORENCE

DEAR AUNT FLORENCE: I agree with you, and I see your nephew's point. High school and college graduation ceremonies, "Si"; all the others, "No"!

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Grandma's" letter regarding blood-typing: Forty years ago, in southern Idaho, the town doctor decided it would be a good idea to have everyone's blood type tattooed on their rib cage. Well, this doctor was a better doctor than a tattoo artist, so the "O+" tattooed on my rib cage under my left arm came out looking more like "OX."

However, I have derived some benefit from the tattoo. When I was in the service, the tattoo on this farm boy from Idaho gave me something in common with my fellow soldiers from the big cities with their self-inflicted tattoos — earning me the nickname "Ox."

For the record, Abby, I suggest that blood types be noted on one's driver's license along with the organ donor information. — KIM R. WILSON, SALT LAKE CITY

Johnson ticked

AUSTIN — The Dallas Cowboys looked ragged offensively in Sunday afternoon's intrasquad scrimmage, which concluded with unscheduled wind sprints ordered by a displeased coach Jimmy Johnson.

The Cowboys scrimmaged for more than two hours in oppressive 96 degree heat and later Johnson said his players aren't in the shape he desires.

"I think it's obvious to the coaching staff that we're not in the kind conditioning that I want," Johnson said.

"This was the first real hot day that we've had. We're going to have a lot of hot days in Texas Stadium. When I saw the walking around on the field, I decided to pick up the conditioning work."

Johnson said he will extend the length of two-a-day workouts this week before the team breaks camp Friday and heads to San Diego for Saturday night's exhibition opener against the Chargers.

Dallas' first-unit offense had problems against the Cowboys first-team defense, managing only a 44-yard field goal from Luis Zendejas.

Steve Walsh guided the second-string offense to two touchdowns. Walsh hit tight end Steve Folsom on a 13-yard scoring pass and later snuck over from the three for another touchdown.

Bryan runs away with title at HPGC

■ Larry Bryan sets a new standard for three rounds in the Midland Men's City Golf Championship by shooting a 12-under 200 to win the tournament.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

All Larry Bryan had to do was keep from getting smug.

After finishing Saturday play with a four stroke lead in the Midland Men's City Championship golf tournament at Hogan Park, Bryan attacked the rain-soaked course Sunday to finish with a 12-under 200 for 54 holes to win the tourney by 12 strokes over defending champion Bobby Gee.

The 12-under par effort was the lowest score in the five years since the tournament expanded 18 holes to become a three-round event, according to HPGC professional Price Courter. The old record was 11-under, set by Gee a year ago.

And as Bryan — who was fairly confident he had the title wrapped up with four holes to play and an 11-stroke lead — walked up to the final green of Sunday's 18 holes, he was faced with a 25-foot putt to set the record.

"We had been talking about the record and all I wanted was to give it a chance. It was a good roll," said Bryan, whose touch was perfect for the birdie putt on the par-3 No. 9 hole.

And even though the tournament had battled rain all weekend, forcing contestants to play the 54 holes in two day, the moisture had a softening effect on the usually teflon fast Hogan greens. After play resumed following about 1½ hours of rain delay, the leader group was able to stick approach shots right and left.

"This course is in the best shape for playing that I can ever remember," said Bryan, a senior-to-be and Division II All-American at Abilene Christian.

And by the time Bryan had finished the first nine Sunday holes, he was 7-under with a nine stroke lead over playing partners Gee, Steve Whiteside and Benton Spradlin. He played the last 18, holes 19-27 and 1-9, in 34-32. In that spree Bryan sank six birdies and bogied but one hole, the par-4 No. 4.

"I was feeling a little bit of pressure when the day began. But on the last four or five holes, I was getting closer to home. I was just trying to keep out of trouble and make them come get me," Bryan said.

But Gee, Whiteside, and Spradlin were unable to gain ground on Bryan. Not that they did not make an effort. Whiteside holed three birdies on holes 19-27, but scored as many bogeys and failed to score under par on the par-5 20th hole, which his three play-

Speed kills. Just ask any drug abuse counselor or highway patrolman.

It also kills on the baseball field, if one's opponent has it and knows how to use it.

The speed and bunting ability of San Antonio's Tom Goodwin forced a wild throw by Midland Angel catcher Doug Davis and provided the impetus for a three-run surge in the eighth inning of a 6-3 Mission win in Texas League action at Angels Stadium Sunday.

San Antonio's first win in three tried during the current five-game series snapped a four-game winning streak for Midland.

After Luis Martinez led off the eighth inning with a bloop single by Midland reliever David Martinez, Goodwin laid down a bunt halfway between the mound and the plate. Doug Davis grabbed the ball, but his hurried throw sailed past second baseman Scott Cerny into the right field corner. Martinez scored easily to break a 3-3 tie, while Goodwin took third.

Goodwin admitted that he was only trying to sacrifice Luis Martinez to second. But he said he had thoughts of beating it out after bat met ball.

Rain spoils baseball ceremonies

Associated Press

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. — Jim Palmer and Joe Morgan weren't quite ready for this rainout.

Only minutes before they were set to give their induction speeches on Sunday, a heavy rain fell and forced the postponement of the Hall of Fame ceremonies for the first time in almost 30 years.

The induction ceremonies were rescheduled for 9a.m. EDT on Monday, with an exhibition game to follow at 1 p.m. between Baltimore and Montreal at Doubleday Field.

"I'm kind of disappointed, but I'll give my speech tomorrow," Palmer said. "My arm didn't bother me when I got up this morning."

The rainout continued Commissioner Fay Vincent's run of bad luck when it comes to baseball's big events.

Vincent guided baseball through an 11-day delay during the World Series last year because of the Bay area earthquake and sat in the dugout at Wrigley Field while it rained during the All-Star game last month.

After the postponement, Palmer and Morgan held a news conference inside the Hall of Fame, reflecting on some of the things they might have said during their induction speeches.

"I was ready emotionally to give my speech," Morgan said. "I'm not that disappointed. I'll be back tomorrow, and the next day and the next."

In the event of rain on Monday, Hall of Fame officials said the ceremonies would be held at the high school gym.

"When I got out to the podium I noticed there were a lot of people from Baltimore sitting in the crowd," Palmer said. "They were prepared, too. They all had their Orioles umbrellas."

Southwest Conference must revive tradition, unity

By WHIT CANNING
N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — There was optimism in the air at the Southwest Conference kickoff luncheon, as there usually is on such occasions.

Predictably, there also was a certain amount of Arkansas-bashing at the Friday gathering. Fortunately, it stopped short of anyone trying to tar and feather Razorbacks coach Jack Crowe, who protested that he walked into this thing wide-eyed and innocent and got whammied along with everyone else.

Encouragingly, a fighting spirit was on display. Baylor coach Grant Teaff instantly became the league's resident Joan of Arc with his Iraq quip, and there was an empassioned call to arms from Rice coach Fred Goldsmith.

Analysis

There were private indications from others — Texas Tech coach Spike Dykes, Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum and Houston athletic director Rudy Davalos — that if this conference dies, it will do so with a bloody sword in its hand.

This is all well and good, but dying isn't the object here — survival is. And the best way for the SWC to do that probably has little to do with "expansion" or "alliances" or painting the courthouse green.

It involves a concerted effort on the part of those now bemoaning the loss of "tradition" in the Arkansas move to the Southeastern Conference to try to recreate the real tradition that, long ago, made the SWC one of the strongest leagues in America.

The twin problems here are that it may be too late and that some of those involved in the attempt may Seattle Mariners' starting pitcher Bill Swift lies on the mound after being struck in the head by a line drive off the bat of Minnesota's Gary Gaetti. Swift remained on the ground for almost four minutes but was able to get up and walk off on his own. He was taken to a Seattle hospital for X-rays and overnight observation. After the ball hit Swift, it bounced once and went directly into the stands.

Rangers' streak ends at six

Another sellout crowd at Arlington Stadium watches Ryan take a pounding

Nolan Ryan was tagged for 12 hits, equaling the second highest of his career, and failed in his bid for career win No. 301 when John Olerud's tie-breaking double in the sixth inning helped the Toronto Blue Jays to a 6-4 victory over the Texas Rangers.

Ryan (11-5), who became the 20th pitcher to win 300 games last Tuesday night in Milwaukee, had a personal six-game victory streak snapped. He walked two, struck out five and threw two run-scoring wild pitches in hurling his third complete game of the season.

When Ryan pitched for the California Angels, he yielded a career-high 13 hits against Minnesota on Sept. 23, 1975, in a 15-7 victory. The Baltimore Orioles reached him for 12 hits on June 6, 1978.

Winner (8-7) John Cerutti yielded three runs and eight hits in 6 2-3 innings. John Candelaria pitched two-thirds of an inning and Tom Henke went 1 2-3 for his 23rd save in 25 opportunities as the Blue Jays ended the Rangers' six-game winning streak. He struck out Pete Incaviglia with runners at first and third to end the game.

Olerud's hit following Fred McGriff's single gave Toronto a 4-3 lead. The Blue Jays added a run in the seventh on a single, an error and George Bell's sacrifice fly and made it 6-3 in the eighth on singles by McGriff and Olerud and Ryan's wild pitch.

AL Roundup

Mariners 4, Twins 0

Minnesota's Brian Harper had his 25-game hitting streak, longest in the major leagues this season, broken as three Seattle pitchers combined to shut out the Twins on three hits.

Starter Bill Swift was hit on the right side of his forehead by Gary Gaetti's line drive in the fourth inning. But he did not lose consciousness and was able to walk off the field assisted by two trainers. He was taken to a hospital where he was held overnight for X-rays.

Yankees 5, Indians 3

Roberto Kelly hit a two-run homer off Steve Olin in the ninth inning Sunday to give the New York Yankees a over the Cleveland Indians.

Wayne Tolleson beat out a grounder to second for a single and Kelly followed with his ninth home run this season.

Tigers 7, Red Sox 2

Shortstop Tim Naehring made two fourth-inning errors that led to three unearned runs as the Detroit Tigers beat the Red Sox and ended Boston's six-game winning streak.

Dan Petry (7-7) allowed six hits in 7 2-3 innings, struck out five and walked one. Jerry Don Gleaton pitched 1 1-3 innings for his fifth save.

White Sox 6, Brewers 1

Jack McDowell pitched a five-hitter and Lance Johnson drove in three runs to lead the Chicago White Sox past the Milwaukee Brewers for a sweep of their five-game series.

Milwaukee has lost eight consecutive games, all at home. It is the Brewers longest losing streak since they dropped 12 straight from May 3-19, 1987.

Athletics 4, Angels 1

Dave Stewart won his fourth consecutive decision and Rickey Henderson hit his 44th leadoff home run as the Oakland Athletics beat the California Angels.

Darwin leads 'Stros to sweep

Associated Press

Astros 6, Braves 2

Danny Darwin, who has never lost to Atlanta, also remained unbeaten as a starter this year as the Houston Astros beat the Braves 6-2 to complete a four-game sweep.

NL

Darwin (7-1) is 5-0 with a 1.30 earned run average since moving into the starting rotation on July 1. He gave up two runs on seven hits in five innings, struck out four and walked one.

Darwin is 6-0 with a 1.65 ERA in 20 career games against Atlanta. He hit an RBI double and scored a run as Houston chased Steve Avery (1-6) with four runs in 3 1-3 innings.

Bill Doran got three hits for Houston, the third straight game in which he's gottent three hits.

An error by first baseman Tommy Gregg set up Ken Caminiti's RBI double in the first against Avery. Rafael Ramirez and Darwin hit consecutive doubles with one out in the second and Bill Doran's two-out single made it 3-0.

Darwin led off the fourth with a walk and later scored on Glenn Wilson's RBI grounder. Ron Gant hit a two-run double in the Atlanta fifth, marking the first start this season Darwin had given up more than one run.

Reds 6, Padres 2

Hal Morris hit a two-run homer and the stumbling Cincinnati Reds overcame a costly fielding mistake, beating the San Diego Padres and ending a three-game losing streak.

Jose Rijo pitched a five-hitter as the Reds averted a four-game sweep and won for just the third time in 14 games. Their lead over San Francisco in the National League West slipped from 11 games to 3½ during the two-week skid.

Rijo (8-4) walked three and struck out six in his second complete game of the season. He is 3-1 since being disabled because of a sore shoulder.

Cubs 3, Expos 1

Mark Grace doubled home the tying run in the sixth inning and scored on Andre Dawson's triple, leading Greg Maddux and the Chicago Cubs to a victory over the Montreal Expos and a three-game sweep.

Montreal lost its fifth straight game. The Cubs won for the 15th time in 20 games.

Maddux (9-9) won his fifth consecutive decision. He struck out six and walked three.

Phillies 8, Phillies 6

Von Hayes' two-run homer broke a sixth-inning tie and sent the Philadelphia Phillies over Pittsburgh, ending the Pirates' three-game winning streak.

Philadelphia twice overcame three-run deficits and stopped a three-game losing skid. Reliever Don Carman (5-0) got the victory and Joe Boever pitched two innings for his 11th save.

Cardinals 8, Mets 3

Ozzie Smith got four hits, drove in two runs and scored twice as John Tudor and the St. Louis Cardinals beat the mistake-prone New York Mets.

The Cardinals have won two of three against the Mets in the four-game series. St. Louis is 3-1 under new manager Joe Torre.

Tudor (11-3) doubled and scored on Smith's single in the eighth for an 8-0 lead. He took a four-hitter into the ninth, but left after leadoff singles by Howard Johnson and Gregg Jefferies. Frank DiPino gave up Darryl Strawberry's sacrifice fly and Tim Teufel's two-run homer.

Dodgers 12, Giants 6

Eddie Murray hit a pair of three-run homers and Kirk Gibson homered twice and drove in four runs, powering the Los Angeles Dodgers past the San Francisco Giants.

Murray and Gibson hit home runs in the same game for the first time this season. The loss dropped the Giants 4½ games behind Cincinnati.

Goodwill Games close

Associated Press

SEATTLE — The Goodwill Games came to an end Sunday, perhaps for all time. It was only the beginning, though, for four gold-medal American fighters, and just another championship for a U.S. women's basketball team that may go on forever.

Two more American boxers — world champion Eric Griffin and 17-year-old Oscar de la Hoya — won gold medals Sunday.

"It's not that I'm bragging or trying to show off, but I am unbeatable," Griffin said.

And the U.S. women beat the Soviets for the second time in the games, 82-70, stretching their winning streak in major international tournaments to 41 games. They haven't lost a basketball game at a meet like this since they beat the Soviets for the gold in the first Goodwill Games in 1986 at Moscow.

It could well be their last Goodwill gold. With the games in financial trouble and their major sponsor, Ted Turner's TBS cable network, mulling its future affiliation, the Goodwill Games could become just another white elephant of sports like the United States Football League or World Team Tennis.

Turner has predicted the games would "grow in stature and at some point break even."

ing mates all birdied.

Spradlin made some spectacular shots, including a near double-eagle on the 515-yard par-5 24th, where he wound up holing a three-foot putt for an eagle on the hole. But he also was erratic off the tee box and was often in tall grass if not mesquite.

And even though there was little hope by the time the group hit the final nine, Gee was mounting a charge until he was undone at the par-5 No. 2, where his tee shot went behind a mesquite bush left of the fairway, forcing Gee to take a drop, penalty stroke and eventually a bogey.

"Larry was great today. I don't know if anybody could've beaten him. Maybe me if I had been on my game, but I don't know," Gee said.

"Bobby possibly could've been there, but his putts just didn't drop early," Bryan said. "But the win feels great. It's the first individual title I've won since I was a high school junior (at Midland Lee) four years ago."

ANGELS: Goodwin's fleet feet to much for Midland

From 1C

fornian said. "It was in no-man's land."

Davis said Goodwin's speed made a quick release imperative.

"Usually you have time to make a good throw, but with a runner that fast, you have to get the ball and get it to first base (quickly)," said the veteran catcher.

As a result of Goodwin's 3.5 speed from home to first, Davis felt obliged to throw without setting up and the throw sailed between first baseman Mark Howie, who was charging on the play, and Cerny, who was trying to cover the bag.

After the smoke cleared, David Martinez struck out Eddie Pye and intentionally walked Henry Rodriguez, a move that backfired when TL batting leader Eric Karros and designated hitter Jerry Brooks stroked consecutive RBI singles. Brooks' single came off Angel newcomer Randy Bockus, who was making his first TL appearance since 1985.

San Antonio manager John Shoemaker calls Goodwin "one of the three fastest players in the league.

"My first thought when he put it down was that it was in a perfect spot," Shoemaker added. "Anytime a player that fast puts the ball in play, he has a chance to reach base."

Midland manager Eddie Rodriguez said the key bunt wasn't the play that lost it for the last-place Angels. "Physical errors are going to happen.

"We just didn't catch a break," Rodriguez said.

The Angels again showed an inability to hit in the clutch, stranding 15 baserunners, including two in each of the final five innings. But the Halos did manage to tie the game at 1-all by touching San Antonio starter Mike James for a run in the fourth on singles by Howard Nichols, Luis Aguayo and Davis sandwiched with two wild pitches.

The Missions took the lead again on Henry Rodriguez' 23rd home run of the season in the fifth, but the Angels took the lead in the fifth with a two-run spurt that was punctuated with Aguayo's RBI double and a run-scoring single by Johnny Monell.

That gave Midland starter Mike Erb a 3-2 lead going into the sixth, but Erb was lifted with one out and runners on first and third. Martinez promptly allowed an RBI single to Pye, but retired the side without further incident and hung in there until the fateful eighth inning.

James Wray, 7-2, threw 1⅔ scoreless innings in relief of James for the win. Wray got out of a jam in the seventh after James allowed Nichols and Aguayo to reach base.

Nichols was thrown out at third in what was either a botched hit-and-run play or a double steal with unlikely participants. Mark Doran then walked, but Wray fanned pinch-hitter Mark Howie on a 2-2 pitch to end the threat.

Jim Poole picked up his 10th save with 1⅓ scoreless innings.

Veteran reliever Tim Meeks, 6-3, will get his first start of the season tonight for Midland. Meeks was one of the league's top stoppers early in the season, but has seen little action since returning from a stint at Class AAA Edmonton. San Antonio will start knuckleballer Dennis Springer, 7-4, in today's 7 p.m. start.

Watson third at TIDA Twin Cities

Staff Report

Season points leader John Kelly took the lead in the 28th lap and cruised to victory in a Texas International Drivers Association Late Model Stock Car series race Saturday at Twin Cities Speedway.

Kelly, of LaVernia, widened his points lead over Midland's Jay Watson with Saturday's win, leading Watson 7,195 to 5,365. Watson finished third Saturday.

Mike Denman of Corpus Christi seized the lead on the first lap, and hung on through six caution flags until a freak three-car accident knocked him out of the race on Lap 28.

Veteran driver J.D. Hughes and Amarillo's Barry Weaver collided on the second turn and spun into the flooded infield, causing a spray of water that obscured Denman's vision and caused him to ram into the other drivers, knocking all three cars out of the race.

Kelly fought off Houston driver Larry Schild for the checkered flag. Pole sitter Bobby Blake of Odessa was fourth. Six drivers finished on the lead lap, while six other cars in the 22-car field were running at the finish

Dallas headed to Arena Bowl in inaugural year

DALLAS (AP) — Their names were Bennett and Moore, not Roger Staubach and Drew Pearson, but the results were the same Sunday afternoon as the Dallas Texans defeated the Denver Dynamite 28-25 at Reunion Arena.

With six seconds left in the game, Ben Bennett hit Sam Moore with a 32-yard pass to cap Dallas' comeback and propel the Texans into next Sunday's Arena Bowl at Joe Louis Arena in Detroit.

The Texans will take on the Detroit Drive, which defeated the Pittsburgh Gladiators 61-30 Friday night.

With Dallas trailing 25-13 with 33 seconds left, most of the 9,245 in attendance headed for the exits. But Bryan Brock, playing for the injured Bennett at quarterback, scored on a 5-yard run, making it a 25-20 game.

The Texans recovered the ensuing on-side kick, and Bennett returned to action. Twice the Texans were unsuccessful as Denver knocked away Bennett's deep passes before he connected with Moore for the game winner.

"It's outstanding what these guys have done," Texans head coach Ernie Stautner said. "All year they've shown me they are the type of team that won't give up."

In a hard-fought defensive game, Dallas and Denver combined for 22 points in the first half. Dallas took a 3-0 lead in the first quarter on a 34-yard field goal by Marco Morales.

Denver kicker Tracy Bennett tied the score with a 24-yard field goal.

SWC: Many see Arkansas exit as plus for Texas recruiting not understand which "tradition" they need to preserve.

Right about here we should inject the perfunctory notice that if Texas and Texas A&M leave — a real possibility — the SWC will cease to exist as a major entity on the collegiate athletic scene, no matter what happens at the next committee meeting.

But if they stay, the SWC — as an eight-team, all-Texas conference — might actually be able to strengthen itself through Arkansas' departure. Ironically, the key to this has been provided by the man most Texans forever will blame for the league's current troubles — Frank Broyles.

Everyone has his own view about why Arkansas really left — most of them having to do with some nefarious plot hatched by Broyles. The simple fact is Arkansas left because — in Broyles' view — the SWC's problems had become unsolvable.

What should alarm most of the remaining members is that he might be right.

Broyles isn't the only person who noticed this during the past three decades, but he clearly enunciated it during the Hogs' last days as a full-fledged conference member: The empty stadiums, the competitive imbalance, the loss of prestige were all the result of the inexorable march of progress.

"When the SWC was at its strongest," he said, more than once, "there were seven teams — six in Texas — and no competition from professional sports. The SWC got all the news coverage, everyone recruited pretty evenly, and it was a very exciting league because you never knew who was going to win until the last game.

"Now, there are nine schools, seven pro teams, declining coverage, declining fan interest. The pie has shrunk."

But if Arkansas has — as many hope — severely damaged its recruiting position with the move, it means the pie is suddenly larger again.

And if, finally freed from the debilitating probation problems of the 1980s, the eight remaining schools can persuade more of the state's top athletes to start staying home again, the pie grows larger.

Throw in a crucial factor that was not present in the 1960s and '70s — the academic guidelines and scholarship limits imposed by the National Collegiate Athletic Association during the past few years — and a situation emerges in which there would be enough quality athletes to strengthen every team in the league.

More than anything else, Broyles' belief that it was time for Arkansas to go was based on the conviction that the SWC's problems were endemic and never would be resolved.

And there are certainly problems — many and all too familiar.

There are four private schools in the league that suffer, in varying degrees, from an "image" problem.

Some schools are cut off from a certain number of recruits each year because of their academic guidelines (which they steadfastly should maintain). Some in major population centers are buried by competition from professional sports.

There is considerable disparity in athletic budgets and alumni base, as well as stadium capacity.

But, with the exception of the pro sports angle, most of those disparities exist ed during the 40-year period when the championship was liberally passed around and the last-place team was apt to play Notre Dame off its feet.

And that is the tradition this league needs to resurrect — not the "tradition" of the last 20 years, in which a few "big boys," as Teaff calls them, regularly bashed their near-helpless brethren as legions of fans went into a dee p doze.

Dykes also has alluded to it with his oft-repeated remark that, "When I was a s enior in high school, the three best teams in the conference were TCU, SMU and Rice — and I don't recall any of them threatening to leave just because they were winning."

Dykes' main point is that there seemed to be more honor in the land then, but the real point is that there was a year when the three strongest teams in the league were private schools.

This is not to say that the league couldn't be helped by some sort of merger or alliance, but the scenarios presented thus far seem either highly unlikely (anne xing Oklahoma) or something short of a magic cure.

The point here is that they might be unnecessary. Football teams that win normally attract larger crowds — and television dollars.

Houston has a plethora of available quarterbacking talent at their San Marcos camp this year. Reggie Slack (10) is one of five who looks to win the job as backup quarterback to starter Warren Moon.

Rosenbach having impressive camp

Associated Press

Timm Rosenbach is elated, Stump Mitchell is angry and Phoenix Cardinals coach Joe Bugel is undecided.

Rosenbach took a giant step toward becoming the Cardinals' starting quarterback by throwing for 143 yards and two touchdowns in Saturday's controlled scrimmage against the San Diego Chargers.

The second-year pro completed eight of 10 passes and threw for two touchdowns.

"I had a lot of confidence out there," Rosenbach said. "I was able to make quick reads and make some good decisions. It's a good building step for me."

Rosenbach, a first-round pick in the 1989 supplemental draft, missed all of training camp last season before signing a five-year, $5.3 million contract.

He played in only two regular-season games, completing nine of 22 passes for 95 yards with no touchdowns and one interception.

"I'm a different player than last year," Rosenbach said. "It's a whole different story when you know what you're doing."

Bugel said Rosenbach's performance "proved he belongs in the National Football League," but hesitated to name a starter for Saturday night's exhibition opener at Tempe, Ariz., against the Seattle Seahawks.

Mitchell left the stadium during the scrimmage after Bugel told him he wouldn't be playing.

Mitchell, the Cardinals's No. 2 career rusher, had reconstructive surgery on his left knee last September and is trying to make a comeback.

"Stump is upset. He wants to play football. I'd be disappointed if he wasn't upset," Bugel said. "But we decided to wait another week. We'll use him in the Seattle game. We owe him that opportunity."

OILERS

Defensive tackle Jeff Alm is starting his newest cycle with the Houston Oilers.

"It seems every four years, you begin a cycle of starting over again," said Alm, the Oilers second-round draft pick from Notre Dame.

"Going into high school was hard. Going to college was extremely difficult; it took me a couple of years to get acclimated there. But I don't think you can make it in the game if you can't accept that and deal with it."

Alm started in pro football as a contract holdout, but reported in time to play Thursday in a scrimmage against the Dallas Cowboys. A groin injury during that scrimmage has kept him from practicing.

"If they need me, I'm there, no matter what," Alm said. "Had this been a game week, I would have practiced. Injuries are never planned and they're never fun. It's a part of the game.

"As long as everyone understands it's not a reflection on me, that it's just a question of bad luck."

COWBOYS

Time may be running out on the Cowboys' holdout draft picks, Emmitt Smith and Alexander Wright, but not the opportunity to play.

Smith, a running back from Florida and the club's No. 1 draft pick, and Wright, a wide receiver from Auburn and the No. 2 pick, entered the 19th day of their holdouts Sunday.

They have missed 24 practice sessions, two intrasquad scrimmages and two scrimmages with the Houston Oilers.

"They are both high picks, and high picks should have an impact on your team," Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson said. "We're obviously a better football team when our more talented players are in the lineup."

Had Smith and Wright been drafted by teams with better records, their chances of becoming starters would have lessened with each day missed. But the Cowboys, 1-15 last season, had the worst record in the NFL.

REDSKINS

Washington Redskins coach Joe Gibbs wasn't pleased that one of his quarterbacks was knocked out of a controlled scrimmage with the Buffalo Bills.

"Maybe it shouldn't have happened," Gibbs said of the hit that sidelined Jeff Rutledge, the former New York Giants quarterback vying for a backup job with the Redskins. "We were out there all day and didn't hit any of them (Bills quarterbacks)."

Quarterbacks weren't supposed be hit during Saturday's scrimmage, which the Redskins won 27-16. Rutledge was driven into the turf and injured his right shoulder when eighth-round draft choice Marvcus Patton came through the Washington offensive line on a pass play.

NFL Camps

Football returns ... to England, at least

Associated Press

WEMBLEY, England — Jim Mora reminded everyone that a win was a win, no matter how early in the year or how far from home.

Art Shell reminded everyone that, under the same conditions, a loss hurts just the same, maybe more so when you feel the officials may have blown it on a key play.

Mora's New Orleans Saints beat Shell's Los Angeles Raiders 17-10 Sunday in the fifth edition of the American Bowl at Wembley Stadium, an NFL preseason showpiece of the league's efforts to expand its image and marketing power overseas.

The game wasn't pretty, but it kept a near-capacity crowd at England's national soccer stadium happy and sent the Saints home with a shining silver-helmet trophy.

"We've had a good time, spent a fantastic week," Mora said. "But we're ready to get back to a regular training camp routine. It's always nice to win, and the whole purpose of our coming over here was to play this game."

The Raiders, like the Saints playing on foreign soil for the first time, were burned by a second-quarter touchdown by running back Rueben Mayes. Shell said the Saints had 12 players on the field when Mayes scored from three yards out to give the Saints a lead they never relinquished.

Mora and game officials were gone by the time Shell made his claims in post-game interviews.

But Shell also acknowledged that the Raiders helped to beat themselves, turning the ball over on three interceptions — including two that ended drives deep in New Orleans territory.

"We had a lot of opportunities and we didn't put the ball in the end zone," Shell said. "We stopped ourselves, but that's to be expected early in training camp."

The first four NFL-sponsored exhibition games have featured such British touches as streakers, bagpipe bands and rain. Aside from the Union Jack flying over the stadium and a rendition of "God Save the Queen" before kickoff, this one was all football, American-style.

It could just as well have been in Louisville as London's suburbs, and that may say a good deal about how the sport is perceived here.

Britain is catching on to pro football and Sunday's game gave local fans a chance to feast on the best — and worst — of the sport.

John Fourcade and Dave Wilson, competing for the Saints' starting quarterback job, each directed long touchdown drives.

Kim Phillips intercepted a Raiders pass in the end zone in the third quarter and Gene Atkins picked off another to end a fourth-quarter drive, while Elvis Patterson got LA's only touchdown on a blocked punt.

It was the fourth time in five American Bowls at Wembley Stadium that the margin of victory was seven points or less.

The Raiders controlled the game early, but trailed 17-3 as the Saints scored on touchdown runs of three yards by Rueben Mayes and one yard by Gill Fenerty, and a 27-yard field by Morten Andersen.

Los Angeles came back to make it close at the end on one of those spectacular plays only football can produce, the kind that has won the sport growing popularity in Europe.

The cornerback stormed in untouched from the left side on a punt, smothered the kick by the Saints' Kevin Brown in the end zone and fell on the loose ball for a touchdown with 10:14 remaining.

Following Andersen's miss of a 37-yard field goal with 1:08 left, Evans tried once more for the tying TD, ending on an incomplete pass off a scramble from the Saints 44 as time expired.

New Orleans, 9-7 last season, and the Raiders arrived Monday in the midst of a heatwave. They practiced all week in 90-degree temperatures, but the sweatbox broke Saturday night and game day was perfect for football — clear skies and temperatures in the low-70s.

The 63,106 fans who showed up at the 76,000-seat stadium — the Raiders' contingent in black and silver, the Saints' supporters carrying gold-and-black parasols — saw Fourcade and Jay Schroeder, the Raiders' starting quarterback, each play the first half.

Kite's 15-foot birdie assures St. Jude win

Associated Press

PGA

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Tom Kite rolled in a 15-foot birdie putt on the first playoff hole Sunday to defeat John Cook in the St. Jude Classic and become the PGA Tour's first $6 million man.

Kite hit a fairway iron to the green on the 13th hole, the first of sudden death, while Cook's approach landed in a leftside bunker. Kite needed one putt for his first tour win of the year and the 14th of his career.

The first prize of $180,000 pushed Kite's career earnings over $6 million, while Cook won $108,000.

The pair was tied for the lead at when the round began at the 7,006-yard, par-71 TPC course at Southwind. However, Cook ran off four straight birdies starting at the 12th hole to pick up five strokes on Kite and lead by one.

Kite birdied the par-3 17th to tie Cook, who missed from 10 feet on the hole, at 15 under.

On the 18th, both men made par, Cook from 18 feet, to finish with identical 67s for the round and 269s for the tournament.

Kite, who had a course record 9-under 62 Saturday, struggled on the back nine until his birdie at 17.

Cook, who had not won a PGA event since The International in 1987, stroked home a 30-foot birdie at the 15th to go ahead by one. This followed Cook's 30-footer for birdie at the par-3 14th, as Kite took a bogey.

Both men missed short birdie putts at the par-5 16th.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Bruce Crampton shot a final-round 68 to win the Paine Webber Invitational Sunday in just his third tournament since returning from a lengthy layoff.

Crampton, who missed 11 weeks this season for a stress-related illness, pulled away from a pack of 21 golfers within one-stroke of the lead when the day began.

Tom Shaw, who surged into contention with a second round 65, finished one shot back with a 69.

"It's totally unexpected," Crampton of the victory at the TPC at Piper Glen. "I didn't think I was even close to being ready."

Crampton trailed Bob Charles, the leader after each of the first two days, by one stroke, but birdied the first hole with an eight-foot putt.

The Australian birdied the 14th and held on to the lead for the victory. He won $67,500.

While Charles faltered en route to a final round of 1-under 71, Shaw threatened on the par-5 16th hole when he pitched within three feet and made birdie.

Course designer Arnold Palmer shot his 15th career hole-in-one on the 186-yard 12th hole.

Meeting set

The National Association of Accountants and KPMG Peat Marwick are co-sponsoring an eight hour tax and auditing update Friday at Ranchland Hills Country Club from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Gary Choate will cover "Federal Income Tax Update"; Michael D. Cropper will discuss "Dealing With the IRS"; Gay V. Craig will cover "Accounting and Auditing Update"; and "Uniform Capitalization Rules" will be covered by Laura Buckner.

Cost of the session is $25 for NAA members, $75 for non-members. Reservations can be made by calling 563-1170.

Dollar climbs

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar climbed against most major currencies Friday in volatile trading as dealers divided their attention between news on the Persian Gulf crisis and evidence the U.S. economy may be on the verge of recession.

Gold prices posted minor gains and losses in worldwide trading.

Investors unloaded dollars early in the U.S. trading day, reacting to the latest economic statistics from Washington. A Labor Department report showing the nation's unemployment rate shot up to 5.5 percent in July from 5.2 percent in June sparked the selloff.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose to close at 149.35 Japanese yen from 148.90 yen at Thursday's close.

Sterling's value against the dollar dipped in the United States. One British pound fetched $1.85375 late in New York, compared to $1.8545 late Thursday. In London, the pound rose to $1.8570 from $1.8495 late Thursday.

Selected late dollar rates in New York, compared with Thursday's late quotes, included: 1.5935 German marks, up from 1.5910; 1.3505 Swiss francs, down from 1.3530; 5.3415 French francs, up from 5.3320; 1,166.00 Italian lire, up from 1,164.50; and 1.15125 Canadian dollars, unchanged.

In London, gold rose to a late bid of $379.25 a troy ounce from $378.75 late Thursday. In Zurich, the metal fell to a closing bid of $378 an ounce from $379 late Thursday. Earlier in Hong Kong, gold closed at $375.75 an ounce, down from $379.39 on Thursday.

Silver prices changed little. On New York's Comex, silver for current delivery settled at $4.842 a troy ounce, up from $4.835 Thursday.

Gramm hearing

WASHINGTON — The Senate Agriculture Committee, in a voice vote, Friday approved the nomination of Wendy Lee Gramm to a second term as the head of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

Mrs. Gramm's confirmation now moves to the full Senate, where a favorable vote is expected.

Mrs. Gramm, 46, holds a Ph.D. in economics from Northwestern University. She is married to Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and was first selected to head the commission, the primary regulator of futures trading, by President Reagan in December 1987.

U.S. headed for energy dependence

Energy consultant Frank M. Burke, Jr. advocates tax code changes to inspire domestic oil exploration.

■ Financial experts say tax code changes are needed or the U.S. is on the verge of a crisis.

By John A. Bolt

DALLAS (AP) — The United States is headed for certain energy dependence, and a lower standard of living unless the government changes the rules governing oil investment, two industry financial experts say.

"We are on the verge of a crisis, and nobody in Washington is paying attention to it," said Frank M. Burke Jr., a longtime energy industry consultant and member of the Department of Energy's National Petroleum Council.

Iraq's invasion of Kuwait last week only "highlights the condition we've let our own industry get into," Burke said.

"There's a lot at risk here," said Richard D. Dole, chairman of the national energy practice of Coopers & Lybrand accounting firm.

"The next war's an economic war, it's not a military war," and losing that war will lead to "higher taxes, higher unemployment and a lower standard of living," Dole said.

"And a lot of mad consumers," Burke interjected.

"Our children and our children's children are going to inherit a far less viable and comfortable country than we inherited," Dole added.

"We can't wait until the race is over," Burke said.

A recent report by the American Petroleum Institute said the United States imported 49.9 percent of its oil in the first half of the year as demand increased and domestic supplies continued to slide.

The report caused hardly a ripple, either among the public or in the financial community.

"The only thing that convinces people there's a problem is gas lines," Burke said.

And gas lines have been missing since the Arab oil embargo of the mid-'70s.

But the problem has not disappeared, the two said. Oilfield activity spurred by high prices of the '70s and early '80s has waned as the price dropped and worldwide supply grew.

"The problems we've got today aren't any different than we had in 1973," Burke said.

Iraq's invasion of Kuwait is only the latest example of turmoil in the region threatening the U.S. economy.

"It was inevitable that something like this was going to happen. We've just sat back and kind of hoped it wouldn't happen," he said.

Burke and Dole claimed the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has worked to avoid a dramatic increase in U.S. dependence on imports. But once the level of imports creeps to 60 percent, Businesses could gain with Souter in Court?

■ It is difficult to determine whether businesses will benefit if David Souter were elevated to the Supreme Court.

By Barnaby J. Feder
N.Y. Times News Service

CONCORD, N.H. — What kind of businesses are likely to be happy if David H. Souter is confirmed by the Senate to succeed William J. Brennan Jr. on the Supreme Court?

Probably the ones that are just like the reclusive workaholic jurist: straitlaced, attentive to detail and respectful of both tradition and the restrictions placed on it by government.

There is little in Souter's record as a lawyer and judge to suggest that companies, workers, investors or customers could look to him to undo the impact of damaging laws or create advantages that have not been specified in statutes.

Nor does the record give the impression of a judge quick to use the Constitution to save people or companies from the consequences of contracts they freely signed.

In truth, though, it is nearly as hard to be confident about what Souter's elevation to the court might mean for business as it is to determine his views on abortion and other bitterly contested social issues that have dominated headlines since President Bush nominated the judge two weeks ago.

To understand why, one need only visit the New Hampshire Supreme Court, where Souter served for seven years until his appointment earlier this year to the federal appeals court in Boston.

The state court lies across the Merrimack River from the modest bustle of this snug town's business district, hidden in a wooded glen on a ridge behind a state office building.

The court's remoteness from the marketplace is matched by its case load, which rarely includes business disputes likely to be noticed in boardrooms or courtrooms outside New Hampshire's borders.

"We deal with nearly every aspect of corporate law up here as lawyers, but the laws incorporated in contracts tend to be those of Delaware or other business-oriented states and not much ends up in our courts when there's a problem," said William Green, a corporate lawyer in Manchester, the state's banking center and largest city.

No wonder then that Souter's nomination raised far more questions than it answered among corporate lawyers and business law experts.

What is Souter likely to do if asked whether a company can bar women from taking jobs that expose them to substances that could cause birth defects if they became pregnant?

Does the due process clause of the Constitution imply any limits that juries must consider in imposing punitive damages on companies?

To what extent does the Employment Retirement Income Security Act preempt state laws?

How much leeway do states have in taxing companies if their policies result in heavier-than-average burdens on companies based in other states?

These are among the most important items for business on the Supreme Court's docket for the coming year, according to groups like the National Association of Manufacturers and the National Chamber Litigation Center, the legal arm of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

But Souter's judicial track record provides meager support for any firm predictions as to how he might decide such questions.

Although he is regarded here as the closest thing to a local judicial expert on banking, public utilities and the interaction between business and regulators, only a handful of the 200 opinions he authored in his seven years as a leading member of the five-judge state Supreme Court dealt directly with commercial problems of any sort.

And lawyers who argued these cases before Souter caution against reading any ideological bent into the results.

"The only common thread is the man's intelligence and his ability to master complex business and accounting concepts to decide a case," said Martin Gross, a local attorney who represented the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire in the utility's ill-fated battle to stay out of bankruptcy while completing the Seabrook nuclear power plant.

"I've never known him to fail to under-

Old times for oil stocks

By Chet Currier

NEW YORK (AP) — Thanks to rising oil prices and the flareup of trouble in the Middle East, some old stars of the stock market are back for a much-delayed encore.

Even before Iraq's invasion of Kuwait on Thursday, the skimpy list of New York Stock Exchange issues making new 52-week highs gave prominent places to names like Schlumberger and Halliburton from the oil service industry.

And as the hostilities set off an explosive reaction in markets around the world, oil-service issues racked up further gains.

Until about a year ago, it had been a long dry spell for investors in oil service companies, which specialize in providing equipment and services such as construction and testing for oil and gas producers.

The collapse in oil prices of the mid-1980s, while helping the rest of the economy and the overall stock market to prosper, drove the oil-service industry into the red in 1986 and 1987. A subsequent recovery was slow and tortuous.

Oil-service stocks lagged through most of the 1980s while the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials kept soaring to new heights.

Schlumberger, for example, had become a glamour name in the portfolios of investing institutions by the time it hit a record high of $87.25 a share, adjusted for splits, in late 1980.

Then it lapsed into a long decline that drove it as low as $27.37 in 1986 and $26 in the October 1987 crash. From its ticker symbol SLB, some Wall Street traders took to calling it "Slob."

Since early 1989, however, the shares have more than doubled, from $32 to the neighborhood of $67.

Similarly, Halliburton, after falling from $87 in 1980 to $17.50 in 1986, has rallied back above $55.

Baker Hughes, the product of a 1987 merger between the oil-service companies Baker International and Hughes Tool Co., has since jumped from $11.12 to around $33.

The Token Ring network, standard topology

By Dennis Sever

Q. Can you explain the difference between a Token Ring network and an Ethernet network?

Sever

A. Token Ring is a standard topology for networks. Ethernet is a brandname network of the Bus topology, also standard.

The topology of the network refers to the physical layout of the network. And, of course, the physical layout of the network determines the working characteristics of the network.

As you might guess the Token Ring topology requires that the stations and the connecting cables form a closed circuit.

The Bus topology on the other hand is simply a single cable that is grounded on one end, has a special device called a signal terminator on the other end and has stations attached in the middle.

In either case, broadcasting is done on the network by a single station at a time. On the Bus type network there must be some method that the stations use to determine if the line is clear for broadcasting. This requirement is called collision detection.

Another feature of this topology is that the signal that any one station can broadcast is limited to a specific time length. This insures that no one station can monopolize the network. As with the token ring each station on the network hears each broadcast. Usually, however, a station will only pay attention to a broadcast that is addressed to it.

The Token Ring requires that the station that wants to broadcast be in possession of the "token", a specially-coded electrical signal. Each broadcast goes all the way through the circuit and returns to the sender, who must then stop the signal and surrender the token to the next station.

Both of these topologies are quite popular now and both have distinct advantages and disadvantages. Developments in recent years by major computer and communications companies have made these two topologies very fast and very reliable.

Q. Have you heard anything about a super high density diskette drive?

A. About a year ago Sony Corp. announced that some of their design engineers were working on a Three or Four Megabyte floppy. These guys at Sony have also developed a 2.5 inch micro floppy that was installed in some new systems a few months ago but has not been heard from since.

More recently, IBM has announced that the soon forthcoming Models 90 and 95 will possess a 2.8 Megabyte, 3.5 inch diskette drive. We are assured that these drives are compatible with the 1.44 Megabyte High Density drives that we are using now.

A friend of mine at an electronics firm in Phoenix tells me that super high density diskettes are really pretty easy to build, they are just very expensive.

Q. I have two printers on my computer. One is a parallel printer and the other is a serial printer. I would like to make use of the MS-DOS PRINT command and print files to these printers in the background, but I can't use but one printer this way. Whichever one I select first is the only one that I'll be able to access. What can I do?

A. The difficulty is that the PRINT command establishes a channel that stays resident in memory after the first invocation.

I know of no utility that allows the channel address to be changed. The most obvious solution is to send all the jobs for one printer at a time, then reboot the computer when it is time to change printers.

Another solution may be to purchase print spooler software that is designed for exactly this situation.

Still a third alternative is to search the local bulletin boards for spooler software.

This kind of software is common and inexpensive (even free in some cases).

American protests to DOT

N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH, Texas — American Airlines officials say they intend to lodge a formal objection to a decision made Thursday by a Department of Transportation administrative law judge that would give United Air Lines new authority to fly from Chicago to Tokyo.

In a document that it plans to file with the Transportation Department early next week, the Fort Worth-based carrier will argue that the agency should disregard the recommendation of John Mathias, chief administrative law judge.

Mathias recommended that United should receive the potentially lucrative Chicago-Tokyo route rights.

The Transportation Department's public counsel previously had recommended that the route rights be awarded to American.

Patrick Murphy, deputy assistant secretary for policy and the highest ranking career official in the Transportation Department, is expected to issue his final ruling on the matter by Nov. 1.

SOUTER: Conservatism could displease businesses

(From 5C)

stand the important points in any business case."

To be sure, there is no doubt that Bush is on safe ground describing Souter as both personally and judicially conservative.

A speech he gave in 1976, for example, points to his support for the current Supreme Court majority that has whittled away at the legal underpinnings for affirmative action programs.

In the speech, given to the graduating class at the New England Aeronautical Institute, Souter criticized affirmative action programs as a form of discrimination that the government should avoid.

But lawyers here say Souter's judicial conservatism might also lead him to numerous decisions that could displease the business community.

"He'll have no sympathy for business if the legislation governing the case goes the other way," said Paul McEachern, a Portsmouth lawyer, citing two crucial cases affecting the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire.

Those cases involved the state legislature's ban against charging utility customers for the costs of building nuclear power stations before they begin supplying electricity.

Souter's opinions bluntly blocked the company's attempts to circumvent the ban.

Similarly, Souter has been loath to second-guess regulators as long as he thinks they stuck to their statutory tasks, however burdensome the result may be for a business.

In a 1986 case, for example, Souter declared that a tax board could sharply increase the valuation on a shopping center — provided it had rational reasons for doing so — even though the shopping center's owner had persuaded a state court just one year earlier to establish a far lower value.

Lawyers here also note that Souter, after two years at a corporate law firm, spent most of his early legal years in the state attorney general's office.

Eventually rising to the top job in 1976, he joined his counterparts in other states in several national antitrust actions.

These included an unsuccessful attempt to get the United States Supreme Court to allow consumers to sue manufacturers who indirectly raise retail prices by fixing prices to middlemen, according to Thomas Rath, a longtime friend who succeeded him as the state's attorney general.

"I don't have much to go on but I suspect he would be tough on business in enforcing antitrust decisions," said Frederic Upton, an attorney who has argued a number of business cases before Souter.

"I think he would come down hard on anything that smacked of restraint of trade or monopoly."

Souter's opinions suggest that while he is reluctant to reverse any earlier court decisions, he is especially inclined to support precedents in the commercial context.

That was the message of a dissent he wrote to a ruling that upset a proposed savings bank merger in 1987.

"Although it is a familiar observation that the strength of a precedent's claim will vary with its context," he said in the dissent, "the claim is certainly powerful in a case like the one before us in which, presumably, individuals may have arranged their affairs in reliance on the expected stability of decision."

The lawyers who argued that case before Souter and his colleagues disagree to this day about whether Souter was overly deferential in his dissent to the trustees of the Portsmouth Savings Bank.

The trustees had proposed to convert their bank from a mutual bank owned by depositors into a bank owned by shareholders and then to sell it through a stock swap to Amoskeag Bank Shares Inc., the holding company for one of the state's largest savings institutions.

"He didn't understand that the trustees were giving the bank away," said McEachern, who represented depositors arguing that they, not Amoskeag, were entitled to the surplus profits built up since the Portsmouth bank had been founded in 1823.

Upton, his opponent in the case, said the key was Souter's conclusion that, according to precedent, the surplus did not belong to the depositors.

The two men agree, however, that the case can also be seen as one of many in which Souter has expressed doubts about how far judges should go in trying to sort out disputes.

One rationale for Souter's dissent was his belief that the majority decision would lead to claims by depositors in other mutual banks for payments, producing further litigation.

The majority view, he said, assumed that "the judiciary will be up to the task of deciding how much of a bank's net worth it would be reasonable to distribute on demand. I do not share such optimism about the judiciary's commercial wisdom."

A similar reluctance by Souter to expand the court's role may have played a key part in the litigation involving the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire. "What may look like judicial deference is actually simply a tendency to say it's not the role of the courts to decide every issue," said Gross, one of the attorneys who represented the utility.

"He starts out with the presumption that the courts are not all powerful and are not necessarily there to solve issues where society is deadlocked."

While the pressures to take a more activist view are greater on the Supreme Court, so are the opportunities for sidestepping controversial issues.

The court routinely declines to hear most of the appeals it receives without specifying why.

In New Hampshire, thanks to the slower pace of legal life, the state Supreme Court hears virtually every case appealed to it.

One clear implication in the New Hampshire cases is that Souter would be skeptical of any companies, employees or consumers relying on the Constitution to provide them with rights that are not clearly written into contracts.

He was a leader in pulling the state back toward conservative interpretations of the extent of coverage in insurance contracts after a period in the late 1970s when the court had made a number of decisions in which the plaintiffs' expectations had been given considerable weight.

Last year, he ruled that the Centronics Corp. could not expect more than the Genicom Corp.'s initial payment of $71.5 million for Centronics' assets until the final value of the assets was determined by arbitration, as specified in the contract.

Centronics had argued that it was immediately entitled to $5.6 million from the $15.9 million escrow account set aside pending completion of the arbitration because Genicom conceded that Centronics would end up with at least that amount.

But Souter found no provision in the contract for such an interim payment.

A similar result came in a dispute between a distributor of liquid natural gas and his former supplier.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Warrants don't usually split when stocks split

By Bill Doyle

Q. After owning 200 warrants for a long time, I am now contemplating selling them. Each warrant entitles me to buy one share of stock in the company that issued the warrants at a set price.

I think I was made aware that the company's stock was split in 1989. Would the warrants be part of the split?

Doyle

Doyle

A. It's most doubtful the warrants were split, making you the owner of a larger number of warrants. It's more likely that, as a result of the split, each warrant now entitles you to buy a larger number of shares of that company's stock at a lower price.

If each of your warrants originally entitled you to buy one share of company stock at, say, $30 and the stock was split two for one, chances are each warrant now entitles you to buy two shares of stock from the company for $30, or $15 per share.

In this example, if you "exercise" your 200 warrants by returning them to the company along with a $6,000 check, you will receive 400 shares. The results will be the same as if you had exercised your warrants before the two-for-one split by ponying up $6,000 and receiving 200 shares.

Remember that a two-for-one split cuts each share of stock in half and does just about the same thing to the market value of the stock.

The change in number of shares each warrant permits you to buy as a result of the stock split is known as "protection against dilution" — a provision included in virtually all warrants. Each share of stock represents a piece of ownership in a corporation. Without protection against dilution, stock splits would reduce warrants' values.

Q. Just what is a warrant, in stock market terms?

A warrant is a certificate giving its owner the right to purchase some other security, such as a stock or bond issued by the same company, at a stipulated price.

Some warrants expire after a specified time and, if not exercised by their expiration dates, become worthless. Others are perpetual and can be exercised forever.

Q. As you have pointed out, I must pay my broker for stock I buy by the "settlement date," the fifth business day after the "trade date" on which the purchase was made. And he is supposed to pay me for stock I sell according to the same settlement date rule.

Inasmuch as my broker mails his payments to me on the settlement dates, is there any reason I should not treat him the same way by mailing my check for purchased stock on the settlement date, in spite of his demand that he receive payment on the settlement date?

A. You could try that ploy and you might get away with it, if you are a very good customer. Brokerage firms have been known to bend regulations for favored accounts.

However, you would be in violation of the five-day settlement rule. At that point, the brokerage would have the right to sell the stock you purchased and charge you another commission. If that happens, you would no longer own the stock and you would be stuck for both buying and selling commissions.

Q. Can anyone obtain the list of stockholders of a company?

A. Generally, no. And when a stockholder list is made available, it is only after great difficulty. A stockholder list is privileged information.

Corporations are understandably wary about passing out stockholder lists to any Tom, Dick or Harry who asks. After all, it's doubtful you would want you your ownership of stock bandied about.

Attempts to obtain stockholder lists usually end up in the courts. That typically happens when there is a "proxy fight" in which a group of investors attempt to take control of a corporation. The "outs" want the list to solicit votes for the board of directors at a stockholder meeting. The "ins" fight tooth and nail to retain power.

ENERGY: Drilling dollars for investment see decline

(From 5C)

they said, OPEC's control will be complete.

Burke, who recently joined Coopers as a consultant, and Dole said the current tax law provides little incentive for investors to sink their money into further domestic exploration.

"There's a substantial decline in the availability of outside capital for domestic drilling," Burke said.

The reason? "We've dismantled everything that worked," said Dole.

What worked, according to the consultants, was oil depletion allowances and deductions for intangible drilling costs. Although the two incentives remain on the books, other rules almost eliminate their effect, Burke said.

"It's like giving it to you with one hand and taking it away with the other," he said.

Burke is rummaging around Capitol Hill, advocating changes in the tax code to spur domestic oil exploration, most of which is done by independents and not the major oil companies.

Burke's immediate goal is to get Congress to allow energy companies to pay no tax on gains from the sale of reserves as long as the money is plowed back into domestic exploration.

"That would encourage them to sell and develop more funds to drill for new reserves," he said.

The Senate Finance Committee is considering some changes in the tax code affecting energy companies, including broadening eligibility for some tax credits and changes in the alternative minimum tax structure.

"Actually, we need an entirely new petroleum tax system to really encourage domestic capital formation," he said. "Until that is in place, however, we at least need some creative thinking in the present system, or drilling money will continue to be diverted away from the U.S. and into foreign countries."

Burke said some of his longtime clients already are turning their attention overseas after years spent exploring the United States.

Burke and Dole also called for more government-industry cooperation, mirroring efforts in other countries.

Increasing domestic exploration is only part of an overall energy program, the pair said.

OIL: Exploration increases with rising crude oil prices

(From 5C)

Some of that dramatic revival has stemmed from an improvement in conditions that has already shown up on the industry's bottom line. Few analysts dispute that further profit recovery is in store.

"With worldwide oil and gas exploration activity on the upswing as a result of rising crude prices, companies that provide equipment and services to the international oil industry are likely to prosper in coming years," says Standard & Poor's weekly publication The Outlook in a current report on the group.

At the same time, however, some analysts question whether the real-live fundamentals are strong enough to justify the degree of enthusiasm traders have shown lately for the stocks.

Advertising giant holds cards

■ Japanese advertising giant, Dentsu, is king with philosophy of "manipulate those around you."

Janice Fuhrman

TOKYO (AP) — In the world of advertising, Dentsu is king. In Japan, it's also a kingmaker.

Dentsu, which grew out of Japan's wartime propaganda machine, controls most government public relations and the largest chunk of all domestic advertising.

But critics charge Dentsu also controls people's minds, an accusation that isn't exactly refuted by the company's own corporate credo: "Manipulate those around you. In the end, the manipulative rise way above the manipulated."

"I can't think of any other institution in the world that has the kind of molding power in society that Dentsu does," said Karel van Wolferen, author of "The Enigma of Japanese Power."

The way in which the firm uses its power underscores the role of big coporations in general in postwar Japan.

"Large Japanese corporations ... have a certain interest in social control. There's a strong sense of responsibility to maintain the social order," said Wolferen, a Dutch journalist who has lived in Japan for 25 years.

One recent example of Dentsu's powers came last year when the nation was preparing for its first sales tax. Although the loudest protests against the levy came from housewives, Dentsu Eye, a Dentsu subsidiary that focuses on the woman's point of view, promoted the tax.

"This was because a group of Dentsu Eye executives came to a personal decision that the consumption tax was necessary," said Naoe Wakita, Dentsu Eye president.

Her company designed a newspaper campaign that featured Finance Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto — because he is considered handsome — soliciting women's opinions on the tax.

The once vigorous movement to revise the tax has all but died.

Dentsu, with an army of 6,000 employees and earnings last year of $1.31 billion, bills itself as a total communications company involved in market research, product testing, sales promotion, public relations, mega-event planning and media brokering.

What the company's slick brochures don't say is that Dentsu dominates the mass media in Japan through its interlocking web of subsidiaries and contractors which, among other things, produce television programs and the ratings for those programs.

"To an American, that sounds like having your hand in the cookie jar, but it's common for large Japanese companies to be affiliated with many other companies," said Caroline Yamashita, an American who worked at Dentsu's Tokyo headquarters for two years.

Dentsu spokesman Ken Kusuhara said, "Dentsu grew up in the postwar period with today's large corporations so it's natural that there's a close connection between us. We're like children who grew up together."

The Tokyo head office of Dentsu, Japan's advertising giant, stands tall over the Metro Expressway. Through its interlocking web of subsidiaries and sub-contractors, Dentsue dominates the Japanese media and the people.

Dentsu's influence with the media is striking. Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens recently tried to place ads in major Japanese newspapers accusing Toyota Motor Corp. and other automakers of forcing high prices on consumers through collusive business practices.

Pickens claimed that Dentsu, on client Toyota's behalf, used its clout with the media to block the ads. His lawyer, Kanji Ishizumi, said Dentsu told one of the newspapers that members of the Japan Automobile Manufacturers Association were "very concerned" about the ad appearing in newspapers.

The ads, as originally submitted by Pickens, named Toyota, Nissan Motor Co. Ltd., and Honda Motor Co. Ltd. as the collusive culprits. But when they were published a week after Pickens went public with his charges, the carmakers' names were missing.

Dentsu executive director Teruyoshi Kastsurada dismisses Pickens' charges. "Dentsu does not have that kind of power. And Japanese newspapers are not so weak in their editorial positions that they would accept whatever Dentsu tells them to do," he said.

But Japanese magazines have also accused Dentsu of strictly controlling news reports of milk contaminated by a major client and reports of deaths linked to a cold medicine made by a client.

A Dentsu executive boasted in a 1971 speech that Japan's largest newspaper, the Yomiuri Shimbun, after having invited consumer advocate Ralph Nader to Japan, heeded a warning from Dentsu by toning down coverage of the visit. That executive, Shohei Kogure, is now Dentsu's president.

Dentsu handles close to 25 percent of all advertising budgets in Japan, placing more than 20 percent of ads in major newspapers, and major chunks of advertising in magazines and on prime time television.

Dentsu's influence also extends to TV and the big screen. The company and its affiliates produce a number of high-profile TV programs and movies. It often uses the stars to offer clients advertising tie-ins, merchandise sales and other promotional opportunities.

Phone companies ring in service

Lori Dodge

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The boss needs you to contact a client in another part of the country right away, but you don't have the phone number at your finger tips. Relax. Directory assistance can dial it for you.

You're expecting an important call at home? You can tell whether a call is for you instead of your spouse — listen for your personalized telephone ring.

These are just some of the newer services the nation's six regional telephone companies are offering or plan to offer. Many more are on the way due to changing lifestyles and the so-called Baby Bells' hunt for more revenue amid heightened competition in the deregulated phone markets.

"It is a major new source of revenue," said Marianne Bye, an industry analyst with Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. "It's also a high-margin area for the company, meaning that it costs them very little to provide."

Bell Atlantic Corp. in Philadelphia has been a leader in providing these services, including the controversial "Caller ID" feature, industry analysts say. But similar services can be found anywhere; the Baby Bells use basically the same technology and get the computer software from the same vendors, they say.

Clayton Brown, an analyst with A.G. Edwards & Sons, said telephone companies are only limited by the sophistication of their network.

"Little by little, as they improve their network, they can offer more and more services, which will enhance their revenue a bit more," Brown said.

For St. Louis-based Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. — which serves 9.5 million homes and businesses in Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas — add-on services make up about 13 percent of billed revenue. More than half of its customers choose to have at least one of the custom features, according to the company.

"It's a significant revenue stream," said David Martin, a Southwestern Bell spokesman. "They cover their costs many times over."

BellSouth Corp., based in Atlanta, anticipates about $65 million in revenue this year from its add-on services. Spokesman Terry Johnson said the company expects that amount to more than triple in two years and increase sixfold by 1994 as technology improves and regulatory matters are resolved.

Other companies weren't able to provide a revenue breakdown.

The most popular feature, the Baby Bells say, is "Call Waiting," which tells customers using a phone that there's another incoming call and allows them to answer it. This feature is available throughout most of the country. "Call Forwarding," "Three-way Calling," and "Speed Calling" also are gaining in popularilty and availability, experts say. At Southwestern Bell, for instance, they're available in about 90 percent of the company's territory.

Costs usually range from $2 to $10 a month, according to the companies.

The most controversial feature is "Caller ID," which displays incoming numbers on a small video device as a way to thwart unwanted callers. Promoted by Bell Atlantic, the feature costs around $6.50 a month, plus another $60 to $80 for a small viewing device that flashes an incoming number before the phone is answered.

Businesses love this service, but it has come under fire from privacy advocates and some states. A Pennsylvania court has outlawed it as a violation of wiretap laws.

So far, six areas of the country have this service, and as many as 22 states are debating whether to allow it.

Some of the more unusual services in the early stages of availability include:

— A personalized telephone ring. Distinctive rings allow three phone numbers to be combined on one phone line and let everyone know who is being called — "ring RIIINNNGG rings" for Dad or "ring ring RIIINNNGGGs" for his oldest daughter. The feature already is available on some office phone systems.

— The "lazy person's phone book." When a customer calls directory assistance, a recorded voice provides the phone number and, for a fee of about 30 cents, offers to dial the number.

— The distinctive phone book listing. If your name is John Smith and you want to stand out in a sea of John Smiths in the telephone book, you can have your listing appear in "sophisticated script" or "bold contemporary." The cost is around $6 initially, plus $3 a month.

FmHA criticized for lack of expertise

WASHINGTON (AP) — A dearth of federal dollars and good program management means rural and small-town Americans continue to suffer needlessly from poverty and pollution, a year-long study concludes.

The report by the Center for Community Change, criticized the Farmers Home Administration for being run by people lacking backgrounds in "finance, civil engineering and organizing," and blamed the Reagan administration for serious funding cutbacks.

The FmHA, an Agriculture Department Agency that has its roots in the Great Depression of the 1930s, handles a variety of farm, housing and community programs.

"Federal support for rural development was cut by nearly 70 percent during the Reagan administration," said Robert Rapoza, who directed the study. "Yet the majority of the remaining funds failed to reach the neediest rural communities. The federal response to these communities has been plainly inadequate."

The report — "Searching for the Way That Works" — said rural problems include:

- Unemployment, adjusted to include underemployment, is one-third higher than in the cities.
- Rural Americans are more likely to be poor. One-third more rural people than urban residents are below the poverty line.
- Ninety-seven percent of the nation's rural residents rely on ground water for drinking. Yet, a 1984 survey by the Environmental Protection Administration found two-thirds of the wells were contaminated.
- Almost two million rural residents live in substandard housing, usually lacking adequate plumbing.
- Maternal and infant mortality rates are substantially higher than in urban areas and are rising at faster rates.

"Rural residents are, as a group, less educated, less healthy and less skilled than their urban counterparts," the report said." They operate in a comparatively static, more conservative business environment, and they receive less help from Washington."

'We're always pleased to get these kinds of studies ... and they can be very useful.'

— Joe O'Neill, FmHA spokesman

The center, a non-profit advocacy group for low-income rural people, conducted the study with a grant from the Ford Foundation.

Joe O'Neill, a spokesman for the FmHA, said the agency had not had the opportunity to study the report. But he said, "We're always pleased to get these kinds of studies ... and they can be very useful."

The report criticized the FmHA for not targeting more of its resources to poor communities to help build water and sewer systems, health centers, fire houses and businesses.

According to the report, poverty-level communities got only 2 percent to 3 percent of total FmHA loans and grants for water and sewer facilities between 1985 and 1988.

The report said one reason for not targeting on the poorest communities is the way FmHA uses poverty data.

While the agency adjusts the poverty line upward each year, it uses 1980 census numbers to determine the average income of individual communities, it said. Thus, some communities whose average income exceeded the poverty level in 1980 now fall under today's higher poverty line.

The effect, according to the report, is that those communities qualify for FmHA assistance, even though others are much poorer.

The report hedged on recommending a vast reorganization of federal rural development programs, such as blending them all into one super agency. But it did propose some administrative changes within USDA's hierarchy.

Also, it said many communities lack the know-how for getting access to federal programs that might help them develop.

Dukakis considering '92 bid

By John Diamond

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats, get out your checkbooks and dig out those 1988 buttons, the Duke thinks he might want to give it another try.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, he of the plummeting poll ratings and slumping state budget, hasn't ruled anything out for '92.

In a television interview broadcast Sunday, the 1988 Democratic nominee sounded like a man ready to get up off the canvas and go another round.

"Can you ever see yourself running for President again?" the governor was asked on C-SPAN, a cable TV public affairs network.

"Maybe. Maybe," Dukakis said.

"I don't think you rule it out, I don't think you rule it in," he said. "Kitty and I are still relatively young, we've still got our health, we've got a lot of energy, it's an exciting and wondrous world out there these days, as we read about the cataclysmic changes every day internationally and otherwise."

The comments were only a slight advance from what Dukakis has been saying all along since his crushing defeat at the hands of George Bush two years ago. "Never say never," has been the consistent Dukakis line.

"I want to keep my hand in public life," he said in response to the latest queries. "What form that takes I don't know."

Marty Linsky, a political analyst at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government and a longtime acquaintance of Dukakis, found a dry way of depicting the governor's chances.

"There certainly doesn't seem to be much external data for it," Linsky said.

Dukakis is retiring from the governor's office in January after three terms. Polling data, editorials and political commentary seem to hold that up as a wise decision.

Since losing to Bush, Dukakis has come home to a state beset by budget shortfalls, the specter of tax increases and an electorate angry with his administration.

Thatcher calls for EC rights rebirth

■ In a keynote speech in Aspen, Colo., the British prime minister voices support for a United Nations embargo against Iraq for its invasion of Kuwait.

ASPEN, Colo. (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on Sunday called for a new Magna Carta that would establish basic rights for all Europeans, including the Soviets.

Mrs. Thatcher also renewed her call for the United Nations to apply a total economic embargo against Iraq unless it withdraws without delay from its occupation of Kuwait. She said the embargo only would be fully effective if it were supported by all members of the United Nations.

"Iraq's invasion of Kuwait defies every principle for which the UN stands. If we let it succeed, no small country can ever feel safe again. The law of the jungle takes over," she said.

The prime minister devoted most of her remarks to more than 3,000 people at the Aspen Institute to her vision of the new Europe.

"The European community has reconciled antagonisms within Western Europe; it should now help to overcome divisions between East and West in Europe," she said at the closing session of the institute's 40th anniversary.

"We don't see this new Soviet Union as an enemy, but as a country groping its way towards freedom. We no longer have to view the world through the prism of East-West relations. The Cold War is over."

At the end of her half-hour speech inside the big blue-and-white Aspen Music Festival tent, the crowd gave Thatcher a standing ovation.

About 1,700 people were seated inside the big top. The rest were scattered about the lawn outside in the warm, summer air.

After delivering a speech in Aspen, Colo., Sunday, British prime minister Margaret Thatcher is applauded by, from left, David McLaughlin, president of the Aspen Institute, and Colo. Gov. Roy Romer. Thatcher heads to Washington for a Monday meeting with President Bush, and then it's back to London Tuesday.

Thatcher traveled to the institute to address its annual symposium and receive its Statesman Award, which recognized the prime minister's long reign and her commitment to democracy and peace.

Thatcher met with President Bush in Aspen on Thursday before his opening address at the institute. She is scheduled to travel to Washington, D.C., Monday for an afternoon meeting with Bush, then return to London early Tuesday.

During her speech, Thatcher said Western nations need to help nations struggling to establish democracy, but at the same time maintain a secure defense, including NATO and U.S. forces in Europe.

King John of England was forced by English barons to grant the original Magna Carta at Runnymede, England, June 15, 1215. It traditionally has been interpreted as guaranteeing certain civil and political liberties.

The prime minister said her proposed European Magna Carta would "entrench for every European citizen, including those of the Soviet Union, the basic rights we in the West take for granted."

Among those rights: freedom of speech, worship, access to law and the marketplace, and the freedom to hold democratic elections, own property, maintain nationhood and remain free of "fear of an over-mighty state."

She also suggested that the European Community be poised to accept all Eastern European nations as members "when democracy has taken root and their economies are capable of sustaining membership."

"We can't say in one breath that they are part of Europe, and in the next our European Community Club is so exclusive that we won't admit them," she said.

Air Force has tony tastes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force has spent hundreds of millions of dollars on gold-plated chandeliers, golf course projects and other luxuries to boost morale, internal Pentagon documents showed Sunday.

Back in 1985, the Air Force decided to refurbish its officers' club at the Mildenhall base in Britain at a cost of $75,000. The service's champagne taste, however, hardly matched the appropriated amount.

Gold-plated chandeliers valued at $145,000 were installed, solid oak paneling lined the walls and fireplaces with marble fixtures completed the decor. The final tally was more than $2 million with U.S. taxpayers picking up the tab.

The internal Air Force audits, conducted in April and May of this year, reveal widespread waste and abuse in the Air Force management of its Morale, Welfare and Recreation Activities.

In a letter to Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., called for leadership from the highest levels of the Pentagon to crack down on these abuses.

The documents reveal "a mindset among some senior Air Force officials that the bases they command are their own personal fiefdoms, with appropriated funds to be used at their discretion regardless of law and regulation," Boxer said in the letter.

Projects valued at more than $500,000 must be reported to Congress. In some instances, however, major projects were split into smaller projects to avoid seeking congressional approval.

Chicago in dark again

CHICAGO (AP) — An explosion and fire Sunday at an electrical substation caused the second power outage in a week on the city's West Side, cutting off electricity to about 25,000 customers, officials said.

The fire was reported just after 9 a.m. at a substation that Commonwealth Edison had used to supply electricity to customers hit by last weekend's outage, an Edison spokeswoman said. The previous outage lasted up to two days and led to sporadic looting on the West Side.

"It was a powerful and serious explosion," said Edison spokesman Steve Solomon.

The cause of the fire is under investigation. Winters at first said sabotage was possible, but later said it was unlikely.

About 25,000 customers in a 30-block-square area were affected, plus some customers on the eastern edge of the suburb of Oak Park, Winters said.

Two die in plane crash

DONNYBROOK, N.D. (AP) — A light aircraft slammed into a hillside shortly after taking off from a rural road Saturday night, killing a 32-year-old man and his 10-year-old niece, police said.

The two-seat, single-engine Cessna took off shortly before 8 p.m., flew over a gulch and crashed into a hillside about 4 miles north of Donnybrook, said Highway Patrol Officer Gary Burgett.

The pilot, from Moreno Valley, Calif., had rented the plane in Minot, 25 miles away, and picked up his niece on a rural road. Their identities were not immediately released.

"As to what happened, I don't know," Burgett said. "We have to wait for the people to get up there and make a determination. There was still fuel in the plane, so I don't know."

Federal Aviation Administration officials were expected to visit the crash site Sunday, he said.

Quake shakes mountains

SAN JUAN BAUTISTA, Calif. (AP) — A moderate earthquake shook the Santa Cruz Mountains on Saturday night, but no injuries were reported.

The U.S. Geological Survey reported the 11:52 p.m. temblor measured 4.3 on the Richter scale and was centered near the town of San Juan Bautista, about 75 miles southeast of San Francisco.

"It was just enough to rattle things and make the pots swing. But it seemed very small," said Linda Parker, a clerk with the Salinas police department.

The temblor served as another reminder for Northern California residents of the deadly Oct. 17, 1989, earthquake in the San Francisco Bay area that measured 7.1 on the Richter scale, killed 67 people and caused billions of dollars in damage.

Quakes of magnitude 4 to 5 are considered moderate and could cause some minor damage such as broken china and cracks in poorly built structures.

Apartment fire kills 5

SCHENECTADY, N.Y. (AP) — A fire roared through a four-story apartment building where half the residents are elderly, killing five people, police said Sunday.

Deputy Fire Chief Steve Spink said three people who escaped the fire Saturday evening suffered minor injuries. Two firefighters were treated for shoulder injuries, he said. The building housed 20 residents.

The cause of the fire was not known, Spink said.

Three Baltic republics continue to unravel their ties to Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Their independence declarations may be technically on hold, but the three Baltic republics continue to whittle away at the ties that bind them to the Kremlin.

In the past week, Lithuania and Estonia have begun work on draft trade treaties with the Soviet Union's largest republic, bypassing the national government.

Estonia may recruit its own police force to replace the Soviet militia. Latvia plans to start privatizing its economy by Oct. 1, regardless of what the rest of the country does.

And all three republics have said they will not take part in negotiations to revise the treaty which binds the Soviet Union's 15 diverse republics together.

Lithuanian Prime Minister Kazimiera Prunskiene, meanwhile, meets regularly with Soviet Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov to work out details for negotiations on Lithuanian independence.

Steadily, the Baltic leaders have been taking matters into their own hands. They have been aided by the president of the Russian republic, Boris Yeltsin, who seized the initiative on economic reform and pushed Gorbachev into accepting his "500 Days" program for the entire country. The Russian Federation is by far the largest of the Soviet Union's 15 republics and is home to more than half of the nation's population.

While Gorbachev vacationed in the Crimea, Yeltsin took his holiday on the Baltic Sea in Latvia. He did not spend much time on the beach, news reports indicate.

Instead, he met with Baltic leaders and offered to negotiate republic-to-republic treaties on political, economic, cultural, and other issues, bypassing the national government.

Already, Russian Prime Minister Ivan Silayev and Mrs. Prunskiene have agreed on "all the key issues that interest our republics" and have asked their officials to prepare a draft economic treaty for as early as mid-August, the official Tass news agency reported.

Eduardas Vilkas, a member of the Lithuanian negotiating commission, says the economic treaties envisage "a free common market."

Mrs. Prunskiene was quoted Saturday as telling the Interfax news service of Radio Moscow that some hitches remain, such as whether the Russian republic can guarantee to sell oil to Lithuania when the national government claims ownership of the energy industry.

On Sunday, representatives of Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia, Byelorussia, Moldavia, the Russian Federation, the cities of Moscow and Leningrad, and the district of Leningrad met in the Estonian capital of Tallinn to begin "economic cooperation based on treaties as a first step toward the ideas of a common market," the Estonian News Agency reported.

The meeting was convened by the Estonian leadership to counter what the news agency called "economic pressure from central authorities in Moscow."

Estonia last week won an unprecedented concession from the national government when Soviet Interior Minister Vadim Bakatin agreed to give up his control of the republic's Interior Ministry and let Estonia create its own police force.

Estonian Prime Minister Edgar Savisaar told the Izvestia newspaper that "the Estonian government is now fully responsible before the population for ensuring public order, protection of citizens' rights and freedoms on the republic's territory."

Latvian Prime Minister Ivar Godmanis, who recently returned from the United States, said economic experts from the Indianapolis-based Hudson Institute have agreed to come advise his government, and Latvian students will be sent to American business schools.

"Latvian private sector and not only farmers need the investments. If we are to overcome the present crisis, we should embark on privatization of the Latvian economy by Oct. 1 at the latest," he told the Postfactum news agency.

Lithuania declared independence on March 11, and Latvia and Estonia both have declared their intention to follow at the end of unspecified transition periods.

Philippine soldiers put on alert

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Officials ordered troops to their barracks Sunday after intelligence reports said dissident soldiers would make another attempt to topple President Corazon Aquino, a military spokesman said.

The spokesman, Lt. Col. Cresencio Maralit did not give details on the reported coup attempt, nor its duration. Mrs. Aquino has survived at least six coup attepts during her four-year term.

"Unconfirmed reports about another coup attempt by rebel elements prompted the Philippine Constabulary to raise alert status," Maralit told reporters.

The red alert was ordered in the headquarters of the army, air force, constabulary and the Capital Command, said Brig. Gen. Lisandro Abadia, operations chief of the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

In a red alert, soldiers are ordered to barracks. Mobile patrols were stepped up in the capital, said Capital Command chief Brig. Gen. Marino Filart.

Since last year's failed coup, renegades have been threatening to strike. But a devastating earthquake that rocked Luzon island last month prompted dissidents to offer a cease-fire to help rebuild the nation.

Mrs. Aquino rejected the proposal.

Spain grants asylum to top Cuban ballerina

MADRID, Spain (AP) — A top ballerina with the Cuban National Ballet and her husband were granted political asylum in Spain, a police spokesman said Sunday.

It was the latest strain in relations between Spain and its former Caribbean colony, already tense over 18 Cubans being sheltered at Spain's embassy in the Cuban capital of Havana.

'It's a no-way-out situation there, no objectives or possibilities. That's why we escaped ... we didn't see a future for ourselves or the children we desire.'

— Ballerina Dagmar Moradillo

The police spokesman at Madrid's Barajas Airport, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed that dancer Dagmar Moradillo and her husband, Alfredo Rodriguez, sought and received provisional political asylum Saturday at the police station. Rodriguez is a ballet lighting designer with the company.

The conservative Madrid newspaper ABC also reported the defections. It said the dancer and her husband had arrived Saturday from the Spanish Mediterranean isle of Majorca, where the ballet company performed Friday.

In an interview with ABC, the 29-year-old dancer said she was concerned authorities may fire her mother from her job at a Havana hospital.

"Now begins the future, something that didn't exist in Cuba," she told the paper. "It's a no-way-out situation there, no objectives or possibilities.

"That's why we escaped ... we didn't see a future for ourselves or the children we desire," she said.

The dancer and her husband told the paper they wanted to live in the United States. They have family in Miami, and the dancer believes she can continue her career.

The Spanish-Cuban diplomatic conflict began early last month when disgruntled Cubans began seeking refuge in foreign embassies in Havana.

The conflict is at a standstill, and Cuba continues to refuse to permit the asylum-seekers to leave the country, said a Spanish government spokesman
