More than 50 die as British jet burns

MANCHESTER, England (AP) — A British Airtours Boeing 737 carrying 137 people bound for a holiday in Greece caught fire during take-off from the Manchester airport today, and authorities said 54 people were killed.

Passengers among the 83 survivors reported a panic in the crowded aisle of the twin-jet aircraft as people tried to escape down emergency chutes when the flaming plane stopped at the end of the runway at Manchester in northwest England.

Four hours after the aborted 7 a.m. takeoff, airport authorities said the last of the 54 bodies had been removed from the smoldering wreckage, which was surrounded by a dozen fire engines.

Hospital authorities said 83 survivors had been admitted to hospitals in Manchester, and 15 of them were suffering from burns. Some were suffering only from shock, and others had various minor injuries resulting from the escape.

"There were people inside that plane who had no chance of getting out, many didn't stand a chance at all," said Mike Mather, 21, a Briton still trembling from an ordeal which he said started with "a loud bang" during the takeoff run.

It was unclear if any Americans or other foreigners were on board the flight, but Airtours usually handles package tours for Britons.

The Department of Transport said it had sent a team from its Accident Investigations Branch to investigate the crash.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, informed of the disaster while on holiday in Austria, said she was "horrified" by news of the accident and promised "the most rigorous inquiry into the causes of this terrible accident," her office in London reported.

Queen Elizabeth II said she was "most distressed" and sent a message of sympathy to the injured and to the relatives of the dead.

Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, spiritual head of the Anglican church, offered his "prayers for all casualties and emergency and hospital services."

"After the bang the stewards told us to keep down until the plane stopped, but there was mass panic. Everybody was bunched up in the aisles," Mather said in Wythenshawe Hospital, where many survivors were taken.

"Smoke was coming down the roof and flames were coming in over the wing. I could hardly breath, and anyone who was left after me would be dead," said Mather, who was not seriously hurt.

Gil Thompson, the airport manager, estimated the plane had reached a speed of 100 mph when the left engine caught fire and the pilot aborted the take-off.

Said Thompson: "It was attempting to (take off), and the engine went on fire. It was quite some distance from take-off when the incident occurred, and the captain obviously took immediate action to control the aircraft."

The jet came to a stop just off the runway's edge, only 300 yards from the firestation at the airport, which is eight miles south of the center of the city.

Next step in school reform involves teacher testing

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — Education reforms in Texas are hitting both sides of the classroom.

Last March, the state went after every school athlete, band member, debater and any other student who failed a course while participating in extracurricular activities, banning them from such participation until they brought their grades up to passing.

Next March, the state is going after the teachers.

At its monthly meeting June 8, the State Board of Education approved three dates in March 1986 on which approximately 212,000 Texas educators will be asked to demonstrate their competency in reading and writing on a standardized examination. The exam is the first phase of the teacher competency test mandated by House Bill 72 and also will be administered to principals, superintendents, and any certified Texas educator — even the commissioner of education himself.

Known as the Texas Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers, the exam will test teachers' reading and writing ability in 10 different areas, six in reading and four in writing. It is estimated to cost taxpayers $6.6 million.

On the reading skills test, teachers will be asked to identify a main idea; identify details; distinguish fact from opinion; draw inferences; use and select reference sources; and comprehend job-related vocabulary.

On the writing test, teachers will be asked to identify proper mechanics of writing, including capitalization, punctuation and spelling; recognize proper English usage; identify errors in sentence formation; and produce a written composition.

Education Commissioner Dr. W.N. Kirby, one of the Texas educators who must take the test, has assured teachers that the competency exam is not devious and will have few surprises.

In a prepared statement released minutes after the SBOE decision to approve testing dates, Kirby said "The TECAT is not intended to trick or surprise anyone, but it is aimed at doing exactly what the Legislature intended when it passed the education reforms last summer. We want to ensure that every teacher has the basic skills to see that every child in Texas gets the best education possible."

Still, leaders of several Texas teacher organizations who gathered in Austin Wednesday, said they are a little leery of the exam. They claim the literacy and subject area tests mandated by the bill do not measure a teacher's teaching ability.

U.S. fighting Soviet use of 'spy dust'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration charged Wednesday that Moscow is using a chemical spy dust that has cancer-causing potential to monitor contact between U.S. diplomats and Soviet citizens, including dissidents.

"We have protested the practice in strongest terms and demanded that it be terminated immediately," State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman declared.

The announcement that the Soviets have stepped up their use of chemical powders unfolded against a backdrop of propaganda war being waged by the United States and the Soviet Union in advance of a summit between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in November.

■ Are health risks involved? Related stories — 11D

However, Redman insisted the U.S. announcement was made now because the administration has only become aware of the nature of the problem in the past several weeks.

In Los Angeles, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan had approved the protest, which was lodged Monday. He said the issue could arise at the summit but denied that the announcement was part of any advance U.S. public relations effort.

Vladimir Shustov, deputy Soviet representative to the United Nations, called the U.S. allegation "an invention, a falsehood from the beginning to the end." Interviewed on ABC's "Nightline" program, Shustov added, "I hope that it will not worsen the prospects for the future summit meetings."

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., said that if the chemicals are shown to cause cancer, which is being investigated, "We should close the embassy entirely if necessary. It's inhuman; it's barbarous, ... a step Americans cannot accept under any circumstances."

Thurmond promised to personally raise the issue with Gorbachev when he visits Moscow with a Senate delegation next week.

In Moscow, embassy officials said the powder was detected in billionths-of-a-gram weights. Charge d'affaires Richard Combs said that "there is certainly no immediate cause for alarm."

There were no estimates available of the number of Americans who may have come into contact with the chemical traking agents, which leave deposits on the body or possessions of people with whom contact is made.

Dee Dee Dyer talks of her experiences in Africa during seven weeks with Operation Crossroads.

Midland student gets close look at Africa

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

It was the five-mile walk to a health clinic, carrying a village woman's sick 5-year-old child that spelled out the attitudes of Africans for Dee Dee Dyer.

The village woman didn't seem to care if the child — her first-born, suffering from pneumonia and malaria — lived or died. "The baby was about to die and I kept checking for a heartbeat, but the mother was apathetic about it."

It taught Miss Dyer that in Africa if "half your children die you don't form deep emotional ties with them."

But Africans don't form emotional ties with anyone, she learned. Miss Dyer spent seven weeks in Gambia on an Operation Crossroads program and arrived home Sunday evening. She had to scrap her initial goal of forming personal relationships in the village where she lived and focused her time on studying the African culture.

Miss Dyer, who graduated in May from Madeira School in Greenway, Va., will be attending Boston College this fall where she is considering a double major, one of them being African studies. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Essman of Midland and granddaughter of Irby Dyer of Midland and Joni Dyer of La Jolla, Calif.

At 19, Miss Dyer was the youngest participant selected for Operation Crossroads. The program was started in 1958 by James G. Robinson to give young Americans "intimate personal contact with traditional and modern Africa life. Crossroaders go to Africa to seek comprehension of African values," according to a brochure.

Miss Dyer today understands those values practiced in everyday life: bribery, lack of deep love, no initiative, tribalism instead of nationalism. The hardships of daily living — no modern conveniences — were expected.

Abilene boy's death used to deter drug use

ABILENE (AP) — His friends laughed when 15-year-old Joe Arrazola tried to warn them about the dangers of drugs, but at least one has stopped since Arrazola died from sniffing gasoline, his mother says.

Arrazola's mother said her son's drug use was a habit he didn't want, but it was one that killed him last month — he was found dead in the driveway of his parents' home.

An autopsy report attributed the death to sniffing gasoline one time too many. And although the boy's friends laughed when he warned them about drugs, at least one has stopped taking drugs since his death, Mrs. Arrazola said.

And she hopes others will follow that youth's expample.

"I think Joe's death is a message," she said at a news conference Tuesday. "He would have wanted that."

Joe was found dead shortly after midnight on July 23.

"By the time he found out, he was in too deep," Mrs. Arrazola said of her son's drug habit.

"He knew where he was at, he knew he was in trouble," said Taylor County Justice of the Peace Samuel Matta, who ordered an autopsy on Arrazola after pronouncing him dead. "His desire was to quit."

Abilene Police Youth Officer Lee Reed said inhaling gasoline seals air sacks in the lungs, suffocating a person. That is apparently what happened to Arrazola, Matta said.

Tuesday's news conference was put together by Matta, to allow Mrs. Arrazola to tell Abilene parents that her son wasn't the only chemically dependent child in the city, and that something needs to be done.

Mrs. Arrazola said she found her son was on drugs when some of his friends were arrested. She said she asked him if he took drugs, and he replied, "Yes, ma'am."

"He said, 'It's tough out there,'" she said. "He said, 'You have to do it, you have to belong.'"

He wrote of his drug problems in letters, from which excerpts were read at the news conference.

"I wish my friends would understand that pot ain't no good," he wrote. "I can feel myself changing. I'm hurt inside, but I can't put it into clear words."

Loeffler officially takes his place in governor's race

From Staff and Wire Reports

SAN ANTONIO — Congressman Tom Loeffler, saying he had finalized plans to "saddle up a new horse," announced today he is a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor of Texas.

He will hold a news conference at 1:45 p.m. Friday at Memphis Aero, Midland Regional Air Terminal, on the second day of his announcement, according to Win Brown, who will be assisting Loeffler in the campaign.

In a 15-minute speech critical of Gov. Mark White's "politization of the office," Loeffler said the issue in the election is simple.

Violence noted in South Africa's Cape province

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Racial violence flared up today in eastern Cape province, where police said they killed a black rioter, and a mob stoned a black man's house and then abducted his 16-year-old daughter.

Police also reported that a black man who was arrested on drug charges Aug. 14 was found dead in his jail cell two days later. He was at least the 11th black to die in police custoy in the past two years.

Meanwhile, South Africa's major black miners' union postponed a planned strike against 29 gold and coal mines, defusing a threat that almost certainly would have fueled anti-government violence.

The new surge of violence followed a three-day lull in rioting against apartheid, the system of racial segregation under which 5 million whites rule 24 million blacks.

■Related stories — Page 9A

More than 600 blacks have been slain in rioting in the past year.

A spokesman for the national police department in Pretoria said police used handguns and shotguns against black mobs, killing a black man near the white town of Aliwal North in eastern Cape Province.

The black man's house was stoned and his daughter abducted in the same series of disturbances, police said. Authorities said mobs threw stones at cars and government offices, and erected barricades in roads.

Police said 24-year-old Sonny Boy Mokoena, arrested Aug. 14 at his great-grandmother's home in the eastern Transvaal, was found hanged in his cell two days later.

Mokoena's mother, Hilda, in a telephone interview from her Johannesburg home, accused the arresting officers of killing her son.

A police spokesman at the East Tranavaal headquarters, who identified himself as Maj. Janeke, said Mokoena was being held on drug charges and was found hanged in his cell by his blanket on the morning of Aug. 16.

Janeke said Moekena had not been charged. Asked about the family's allegations that he was beaten, Janeke said, "I know nothing about that."

Residents of Soweto, the black township outside of Johannesburg, said soldiers aboard armored vehicles swept through the rutted streets today arresting students who appeared to be boycotting classes.

One resident told The Associated Press he saw 45 youngsters forced into armored-personnel carriers and driven to the Orlando West police station, then to the Protea station.

Firefighters search the wreckage of a British Airtours Boeing 737 which burst into flames while attempting to take off from a Manchester, England, airport.

Flight KT328 was bound for the Greek resort island of Corfu with 131 passengers, including two children less than 2 years old, and a crew of six, said British Airways. British Airtours is the charter subsidiary of British Airways.

At nearby Withington Hospital, which has one of Britain's top burn centers, emergency staff were called in to treat the most seriously burned victims.

British Broadcasting Corp. said the pilot and first officer survived.

An eyewitness, airport cargo secretary Linda Swann, told Independent Radio News in an interview: "The tail came away from the end, and it's a terrible mess."

The only part of the plane left intact after the fire was "just the front bit, the nose end," she said. The fire department and ambulances arrived on the scene quickly, she said.

An airport worker who did not give his name said many people rushed to help as the burning plane came to a stop just off the edge of the runway near the airport fire brigade, and the fire burst out of control.

"We all went to help," he said. "As soon as it stopped, the emergency doors came down, and people started coming out. The plane was on fire but people were coming out quickly. We do not think everyone got out in time."

AFRICA

SHE ALWAYS HAD wanted to go to Africa, she said, and heard about the program last March. She and nine others were assigned to Gambia and the village of Penyem, a town of about 300 people with one-third of them children. The others Crossroaders ranged in age from 21 to 28 and came from such universities as West Point, Yale, University of Pennsylvania, a medical school in Ohio and Harvard.

Their assignment was to build a health clinic. They got it three-fourths completed, ran out of cement and, although promised more, never got it. "It's known that things don't go the way they should in Africa," she said.

"Their values are so far off from ours. We don't understand them at all. Everything about Africa is not comparable to the United States. They are set in their ways; there is no evolution in any way, including technologically."

The market is operated in the same manner it has for generations. Miss Dyer had to walk or ride a bicycle five miles to the nearest market and barter for the goods she wanted. The items were placed on mats on the ground; there was no sanitation. "The meat, you couldn't even see it, it was covered with flies. It smelled horrible. You understand why they have so many health problems."

Their diet reflects their environment: rice cooked in palm oil ("It was very greasy and it smells awful"), fish and mangoes.

Life for Africans is a day-to-day existence. Their lifestyle is meager and they are consumed with the efforts of getting up in the morning, working in the fields, cooking over a fire. "Life revolves around getting through the daily necessities. Washing the clothes is a social event. They don't sit around reading books." Unlike the western working world where people plan out their days, the Africans lead an unorganized life, doing what they want when they feel like it. Time means nothing.

"Everything is so lethargic, so unscheduled. Kids in the day care center would sit around or read the same thing over and over. Men sit out under a tree and stare blankly out."

BUT THE VILLAGE came alive one day when Crossroaders held an Olympics for the children. Not only were the youngsters excited, but even some adults got involved, she recalled.

Educated people are in the minority, with only 2 percent of the children completing high school. But they are not given incentives to better their lives, she said. Those who are educated and go to the cities to teach are visited constantly by rural family members asking for money. "It's a problem for all the young people. There is no incentive. If you make money you know you have to give it to the family."

If there is any affection among Africans, it is reserved for the family. But that affection is limited to how much — in money, food or other commodities — is given to the one asking for it, according to Miss Dyer.

"The Africans are absolute opportunists in every way. People would come up to you and say 'Take me to America, you give me money.' Their concept of love and friendship is very different from ours."

For example, she couldn't take a walk by herself; the people would think she was mad at them. She saw 5-year-olds carrying their 2-year-old siblings on their backs — it was their job to take care of the younger brother or sister. She also saw no concept of justice or self-respect.

There were taxis that ran between villages, she said of the trucks which packed as many people as possible into the back. But there was no definite schedule. And because the driver wanted to fill up the back, he often waited hours at the market before he had enough people to go back to the villages. Even when Miss Dyer offered to pay for the unused seats so they could leave earlier, the driver would take the money and then wait for passengers.

"People are always asking for favors, but it's a fake love," she said.

Nepotism is only a way of life. If someone gets elected to an office, then it's only expected that all his family will receive the job appointments, she said.

JUST AS ACCEPTED as a way of life is bribery, according to Miss Dyer. "We even had to bribe to get through customs. Dash is what it's called...getting through the bribery system. Companies allow money in their budget for dash."

If a western nation gives $1 million for a highway to be built, she said, it might be 10 years before that highway is completed. In the meantime, only $200,000 may have gone toward it; the rest went into the pockets of the officials.

Africa's tribal society is best reflected in the language, she said. The official language of Gambia is English, but no one speaks it. Each village has a separate language. Penyem had one language, the village two miles away had another, and neither could understand each other.

Nationalism will never come to the continent, she surmised, because of the unchanging tribalism. "It's imcomprehensible to me how you could live two miles away and not know the other village's language. Without a common language, you don't have anything."

With no common bonds, the people do not unite. That's why, Miss Dyer said, a country can go from militarism to socialism to capitalism in one year as the leadership changes hands.

PEOPLE SUCH as Idi Amin are no novelty, she said. "In a country with 250 different tribes, you kill your opposition. You have your Swiss bank accounts and live high until someone kills you."

From what she has seen, Miss Dyer views foreign aid in a different manner than many people. It's common for a government to sell its grain to another, then turn to the west and beg for food. The western nations should continue to give money, she said, but not directly to the governments. "They need people to study where the money should go."

Miss Dyer returned with a better understanding of the African people and if she studies the topic it won't be to "go out and save the world." She now comprehends what can happen when one culture tries to force another to conform to a different way of life.

"It's very dangerous to go out and tinker with other people's lives when you don't know anything about them," she said. "I have a lot more respect for other people's lives."

SCHOOL

Sue McGarvey, president of the Association of Texas Professional Educators, said her organization sought to limit the competency test by administering it to only those teachers who were deemed deficient in either basic literacy or subject area knowledge during the appraisal process.

"Our efforts failed, however, but instead of going to court to try to block the test, we plan to prepare our members for the exam through special workshops and seminars," she said. "We still do not support the test, but we will take it because it is required by law."

According to Charles Beard, president of the Texas State Teachers Association, "no other single issue has generated more grievances by our members." He estimated the number of grievances by members would reach 10,000 by the end of the year.

TSTA, a member of the National Education Association, is opposed to the testing of experienced teachers who are already practicing in the classroom, but is not opposed to testing applicants to the teaching profession, Beard said.

Instead, the organization advocates the active assessment of all teachers through regular and comprehensive evaluation procedures.

"Giving a written test to a practicing teacher as the single means of determining competency is absurd," he said. "No other profession tests practioners after they have been hired."

Jeri Stone, executive director of the Texas Classroom Teachers Association, said her organization neither supported House Bill 72 nor the competency test, noting it "reeked more havoc than was necessary because the implementation was so rapid."

Ms. Stone added, however, that TCTA members will not challenge the test. "Our members are tired of the controversy," she said.

Instead, TCTA will take steps to help its members prepare for the reading and writing skills exam.

According to Kirby, the Texas Education Agency will develop preparatory materials, including an official competency test study guide which will be sent to every certified Texas teacher in November. Included in the study guide will be a pretest and the skill areas ehich will be tested on the exam.

Once the guides have been distributed, TCTA state office staff members will work with local unit presidents to schedule meetings to prepare for the exam, according to Ms. Stone.

Teachers who fail the March administration of the test will be allowed to re-take the test the fourth week of June.

Kirby, for one, believes that few teachers will have to worry about retaking the test.

"We have many excellent teachers in Texas and we are confident the vast majority of them will pass the basic skills exam with flying colors," he said.

"We can not and must not stand by and let Mark White preside over the erosion of the bedrock values and rich traditions of this state with an administration of politics as usual during this changing era," Loeffler said.

Loeffler, 39, has represented the 21st Congressional District, which includes Midland, for seven years. He had announced earlier he did not intend to run for re-election in 1986.

Last month, former Gov. Bill Clements also announced he would run for governor on the Republican ticket.

Loeffler formed an exploratory committee in May to consider the possibility of seeking the governorship.

"I said at that time that I may saddle up a new horse by late summer if the grass roots support and financial base were evident for a successful campaign," Loeffler said.

"I am here today to tell you that the exploratory effort is completed. As of today I am on that new horse...and I am a candidate for governor of the great state of Texas," Loeffler said.

He will carry the announcement Friday to West Texas cities, including Amarillo, Lubbock, Abilene, San Angelo, Harlingen and El Paso. Brown said Loeffler had intended to make his official announcement for governor at the end of August, even after Clements announced he also would be in the running.

"Tom's never diverted from his plans. He's on track," said Brown. He contended that some of Clements' good friends will be supporting Loeffler in the Republican primary. And Clements' hometown area — the Metroplex (Dallas-Fort Worth) — "is a stronghold for Loeffler. He's got his workers already lined up."

Lucas says he confessed because of addiction

Lucas

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Henry Lee Lucas says he confessed to three Lubbock murders because he was addicted to tranquilizers and unable to resist questioning by authorities.

"I didn't have any resistance. They could ask me to do anything and I would do it," Lucas said Wednesday in an interview on Death Row.

Last year he was indicted on capital murder charges for the 1975 slaying of Deborah Sue Williamson, 18, and with the 1976 stabbing death of Elizabeth Ann Price, 44. He also was charged with murder in the 1971 stabbing death of Naomi Miller Martin, 54. All three women were living in Lubbock.

But last week, Lubbock County District Attorney Jim Bob Darnell said that after a five-month investigation, he would seek dismissals of the three murder charges because of insufficient evidence.

Lucas insisted he confessed to the crimes only after being repeatedly questioned about the cases, adding his addiction to the tranquilizer Thorazine made it difficult for him to resist the interrogation.

"I couldn't even give them details of the cases," he said. "At first I told them I didn't do them. Then they kept on about it and finally these Rangers took me out there and I confessed to them. I took them after I was questioned about five times."

STATE

Lucas, now on Death Row for the slaying of an unidentified female hitchhiker near Georgetown, confessed to hundreds of murders across the nation but later recanted most of them.

Darnell said information indicated Lucas was in Maryland the day before Miss Williamson was killed. He said doubt too was cast on another of Lucas' confessions, meaning detectives also doubted the credibility of the accused killer in the third case.

Lucas, however, would remain a suspect in the slayings, Darnell said.

Lucas said one of the families of the victims spent thousands of dollars to investigate the slaying and came up with evidence that he did not commit the killing, but authorities would not believe it.

"I hate to see the family going through what they had to," he said.

'Most wanted' extends reach

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox wants to extend his child support collection efforts across state lines.

Satisfied with the success of his "most wanted list" program for tracking delinquent child support payments within Texas, Mattox said Wednesday he wants to improve interstate efforts.

"We're hoping that Texas and these other states will be better able to deal with these difficult interstate cases with better coordination," Mattox said.

The attorney general said Texas and several other states will try to trade information.

Battles over no-pass not over says UIL

AUSTIN (AP) — Court battles over the controversial no-pass, no-play law have not ended, the director of the University Interscholastic League says.

The Texas Supreme Court recently upheld the rule that bars failing students from participating in extracurricular activities. But UIL Director Bailey Marshall said Wednesday that would not deter further lawsuits.

"I would not think we would be past having a lawsuit. We had the lawsuit back in the spring and the Supreme Court upheld the law and all, but there are other means. You can attack different phases of the law," said Marshall.

"I don't think we have eliminated lawsuits. It would be nice if we had," Marshall told a Texas Daily Newspaper Association seminar on the 1984 education reform bill.

That reform legislation included the no-pass, no-play provision that the parents of Houston-area high school baseball players challenged in court this spring. A trial court judge agreed with the parents, but the Supreme Court overruled that decision.

Marshall said the next challenge might attack the rule's lack of exceptions for special cases. He mentioned students who receive failing grades because of illness.

"There is no exception clause in there if he legitimately had a reason for not passing his work," said Marshall.

The UIL director said he foresees no major retreat from no-pass, no-play, but he predicted a possible shortening of the ineligibility period.

Under the current rule, a failing student remains ineligible for the entire six-week grading period following the six weeks in which the failing grade was received.

"I think possibly within a year's time, after some evaluation, they will shorten the length of period of ineligibility and allow a student to get back eligible in three weeks," said Marshall.

"The law was developed to motivate a youngster through their work. I think it will be more motivational to them if they have a shorter length of time," he said.

Union has petition to recall mayor

BEAUMONT (AP) — A nursing home workers union handed city officials signed petitions to recall Mayor Bill Neild after he refused to intervene in an eight-week-old strike involving the group.

Service Employees International Union Local 706 said Wednesday it had collected more than 2,400 signatures on the petitions, more than enough to force a mayoral recall election.

"He's the mayor and he should show concern for the citizens of Beaumont," said Doris Smith, a member of the workers group that began the petition drive last Friday.

The striking workers claim Neild has not been responsive to the needs of the city's working people and has ignored their pleas to settle a strike against the Schlesinger Geriatric Center.

The union struck against the nursing home July 1 after rejecting management's contract proposal to decrease wages and benefits.

The local said it would not deliver the recall petitions to the city clerk if Neild offered to start up stalled negotiations in the strike by 4 p.m. Wednesday.

But Neild told the union he could not intervene in the strike until the National Labor Relations Board in Houston decides on a decertification petition that could force an election to disband the union.

Schlesinger officials ended strike negotiations three weeks ago after learning of the petition, saying such negotiations could be illegal. The NLRB is also investigating three charges of unfair labor practices that the union filed against the nursing home.

At least 960 voters' signatures — equal to at least 30 percent of the ballots cast in the city's April mayoral election — are needed to force a recall vote.

The city clerk's office has 10 days to determine the signatures belong to registered voters. If the signatures are certified, the mayor then has five days to resign or the city may schedule an election.

The striking workers — all of whom are female and most of whom are black — say the nursing home's proposed wage cuts are racially motivated.

STATE IN BRIEF

Teens escape from school

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Authorities were searching today for four teenaged boys, possibly armed with rifles, who have escaped from the Brownwood State School.

Five youths ran from a group that was walking to the gym from a dormitory for youths who exhibit aggressive behavior, said Linda Steen, superintendent of the Statewide Reception Center, said. The center is a temporary holding facility for juveniles.

Authorities apprehended one youth immediately, but four others escaped.

The four may have been responsible for an 11 a.m. Wednesday burglary in south Brownwood where several rifles and shotguns were taken, Brown County deputies said.

Mrs. Steen said three of the runaways are 16 years old and the fourth is 17. She said they are from the Austin and Fort Worth areas.

The escaped quartet were committed to the state school for nonviolent offenses, Mrs. Steen said. She compared the offenses to theft but would not say exactly what they were.

Police officer indicted

HOUSTON (AP) — Grand jurors have indicted a police officer on charges that he shoved and struck a prisoner, stole money from another inmate and lied on an offense report, prosecutors said.

Officer Rodney Lehman, 29, was indicted Tuesday by a Harris County grand jury. He was accused of striking and choking a prisoner in the city jail on May 7, prosecutor Don Smyth said.

Lehman, a four-year veteran, is accused of committing the offenses against a prisoner who refused to sign an envelope listing his possessions because he claimed that "a couple of hundred" dollars of his money was missing, Smyth said.

Lehman also was accused of tampering with a government record by lying on an offense report in order to make a drug case against a male suspect on Oct. 23, 1984.

Smyth said Lehman claimed 125 grams of marijuana was in plain view in the man's office when it actually was stashed in a vacuum cleaner. The marijuana was discovered by Lehman in an illegal search, the prosecutor said.

Rancher indicted for threat

WACO (AP) — A Killeen rancher in jail on charges of running a methamphetamine lab also has been indicted on a charge he threatened someone who had supplied authorities with information against him.

A federal grand jury indicted Larry Delano Renick on the charge Wednesday. Renick is being held without bond until his trial on the drug charges.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jan Patterson had asked U.S. Magistrate Dennis Green to deny bond to Renick during a July 2 bond hearing, saying that Renick had told an unidentified witness at McLennan County Jail he would inflict "bodily harm" on anyone who intended to testify against him.

Man found hanged in cell

GREENVILLE (AP) — A 22-year-old man was found in his jail cell hanging by his shirt Wednesday night after being arrested on a disorderly conduct charge, police said.

Stevie Lynn Rust was found dead in the city jail cell at 8 p.m., said police Lt. Barry Paris, who said Rust was arrested for allegedly using obscene language in a public place.

Disorderly conduct is a class C misdemeanor.

Ex-officer sues for Army's 'retaliation'

Cole

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Army Capt. Peter Cole, who wants his silver bars back, says the Army "retaliated" by relieving him of duty after he submitted reports critical of Army units in Texas and Germany.

"I would call it being blindsided," Cole said Wednesday in his first day as a witness in the lawsuit he filed against the U.S. Army seeking reinstatement and back pay.

Cole, who returns to the stand today, said he was informed by his battalion commander, Lt. Col. Raymond Tomlinson, that he was being relieved as the battalion's supply officer on June 14, 1976, while on duty in Germany.

"I realized my career had been ended," Cole said. "Being relieved meant I would never be promoted again in the Army."

Cole turned in his resignation the next day because he said he wanted to "protest what I considered retaliation by the Army. I did it to protest in an authorized manner. I had no intention of getting out of the Army."

Cole spent much of Wednesday detailing how he was assigned as supply officer in a 50th Infantry Brigade battalion at Fort Hood and continued to serve when the battalion went to Germany.

He frequently reported the battalion's equipment was not combat-ready.

"I believed I had a right to express myself on problems I encountered in mismanagement and maladministration," Cole said. "However, the result was initially I was relieved of my duties as a battalion S-4 (supply officer), coerced into submitting a resignation and other retaliations."

U.S. Justice Department attorney Alvin Schall protested frequently that Cole testified in broad terms, without exact details and dates.

"We need to know two facts," Schall told the U.S. Court of Claims. "First, was the resignation made voluntarily, and second did the Army act improperly in not letting him (Cole) withdraw his resignation."

Cole, 38, now a civilian Army employee, was hired as a research analyst at Fort Hood near Killeen. His trial, with sessions in Austin and Washington, is expected to take two weeks.

Cole said that in November 1975, he attracted the attention of the division assistant commander and began getting directions directly from division.

He said Tomlinson, his battalion commander, "let me know he did not like the idea of me going to the top."

Cole, a West Point graduate and the son and grandson of Army officers, was honorably discharged in 1977 but says he was pushed out by Army brass because he had gone public with complaints — including statements to Congress — that U.S. NATO troops in Europe were not combat-ready.

The Army said Cole resigned his commission once, then tried to take the resignation back. His superiors refused and went ahead with the discharge.

In 1982, a U.S. Court of Claims in Washington refused to give the Army an immediate judgment and said Cole deserved a trial. This is the first court action since then.

Women awaiting Dalkon settlement challenge Robins Co. bankruptcy

Claiborne Robins

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Lawyers for some of the thousands of women who have sued A.H. Robins Co. over injuries caused by its Dalkon Shield contraceptive say they will challenge the company's request for protection under federal bankruptcy statutes.

Aaron M. Levine, representing 100 former Dalkon Shield users suing Robins, said he would petition the court today to dismiss Robins' petition for protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. Other lawyers were expected to follow suit.

"We believe Robins is still solvent," said Sybil Shainwald of the Women's National Health Network. She said the bankruptcy proceedings were an insult to women awaiting settlement.

Robins on Wednesday announced its Chapter 11 filing, which it said means that all pending and future Dalkon Shield lawsuits will be stopped. Robins will continue business operations under the court's supervision.

As of June 30, Robins and its insurer had paid Dalkon Shield awards and settlements of $378.3 million to 9,230 women, the company said. Legal fees and other expenses have amounted to $107.3 million. About 5,100 cases are pending, and as many as 8,000 more are expected, it said.

Robins manufactured the Dalkon Shield, an intrauterine device, from 1972 through 1974.

The lawsuits say women who used the device suffered pelvic infections, spontaneous abortions and sterility. The suits say bacteria traveled into the uteruses of users by way of a hollow string attached to the device.

By 1980, 17 deaths had been linked to the Dalkon Shield, whose sales had totaled 2.8 million in the United States. Another 1.7 million were sold in 80 other countries. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration, although it eventually ordered Robins to stop selling the product, never required its recall.

Joseph Friedberg, a Minneapolis lawyer representing 80 plaintiffs, said the bankruptcy would prevent the company from being slowly bled by huge claims until it failed and surrendered all responsibility for future claims.

"The bankruptcy proceedings to me are preferable to the ongoing ad hoc litigation," he said. "Anyone with more than a 100 IQ can see that Robins indeed has a limited ability to pay claims."

Lawyers' fees have made up about 60 percent of the settlements. Under the bankruptcy proceedings, more of the money will go to women, Friedberg said.

But Shainwald disagreed.

"For the entire period of the proceedings, the women who were injured will not get compensation," she said "Some of these women have already been waiting five years."

Park service gives Beach Boys the boot

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The annual July 4 celebration on the Washington Mall next year will not feature the Beach Boys but will focus on a more traditional patriotic and "family-oriented" program, the National Park Service announced Wednesday.

"Our decision is to return to a more patriotic program for 1986," said Sandra Alley, a Park Service spokeswoman who is a member of the planning committee for next year's celebration.

The committee, which made the decision late last week after several weeks of deliberation, considered the Park Service's ability to handle the crowds, which this year totaled 550,000 in the downtown park areas, the damage connected with the celebration — including an overload on the Metro subway system and the leaving of 206 tons of garbage — and the program's tone.

"Is that the kind of situation — and the situation it creates in terms of injuries, garbage, impact on people — that is appropriate for the Park Service to be sponsoring for an Independence Day celebration in the nation's capital?" asked Alley. "We just felt the impact of a show of that magnitude exceeded our ability to handle it."

The 1986 program has not been formulated. "We didn't put a ban on rock. The program could include rock...if they sing 'God Bless America.' We want a family-oriented program where children of all ages could come down," she said.

The Beach Boys performed on the Mall for four July 4 concerts. Their contract with the Park Service calls for the group to pay "up to $100,000," according to Alley, for construction of security fencing, rental of comfort stations and the cleanup. The group also assumed the costs of travel, backstage security, and construction of the stage and sound system. Those expenses, which totaled $98,200, have not been paid.

Lucky day?

New Yorkers buy (lotto) tickets from a vendor on 6th Avenue Wednesday, hoping to win the $41 million jackpot, largest ever in North America, which was drawn Wednesday night.

Lottery draws winners for $41 million

NEW YORK (AP) — Lottery officials sorting through millions of bets announced today that more than one person had beaten 6.1-million-to-1 odds to win a $41 million jackpot, the largest ever in North America.

However, officials said they did not yet know exactly how many people would have a share in the prize.

"The computers are humming. We know we have first prize winners," said state Lottery Director John D. Quinn, but "because of the volume of sales it will take several hours to complete the processing and verification."

There were a record 36.1 million $1 bets on the jackpot. The winning numbers were 14, 17, 22, 23, 30, and 47, with the supplementary number 33.

If no one had guessed the six numbers out of 48 possibilities, Quinn had said he would cap Saturday's drawing at $50 million, "more than enough money for somebody spending a buck to take a chance winning."

"I'm saying my prayers that there is a winner," Quinn said after the televised drawing Wednesday night. "I want somebody out there to win it. I'd say, looking at these numbers, if I had to make a projection, we're going to hear from at least one winner."

Quinn offered any overnight millionaires some advice and a nationally known psychologist warned of pitfalls.

Quinn advised winners to sign the lucky ticket, hire a lawyer and an accountant, order an unlisted telephone number and show up at the World Trade Center, where he hoped to introduce at least one winner today.

Dr. Joyce Brothers, writing in the New York Post, said winners could expect "enormous family quarrels" or succumb to boredom, cynicism and drink.

Lou Eisenberg of New York City, who previously won $5 million in the lottery and who bought $15 worth of tickets for Wednesday's drawing, laughingly said that his luck had brought him a big belly and numerous relatives.

Other states claiming benefits of New York lotto betting frenzy

Associated Press

New York's lottery fever has spread to Connecticut and Iowa officials said it would help as their state lottery begins today and an impatient California teacher appealed in court for a start-up of that state's money games.

Elsewhere, Ohio lottery officials planned a mega-prize game on the order of the one in New York that caused a betting frenzy Wednesday.

The New York lottery offered a chance at $41 million, North America's biggest lottery jackpot, and drew 21,000 bets a minute.

The head of Connecticut's lottery said New York's recording-breaking sales helped offset a summer slump.

"Usually in August you experience the summer doldrums" because of vacations, said Blaine Lewis. But he said Wednesday that sales are running 40 percent higher than the last time Connecticut had a $5 million lottery, in May.

Iowa officials were giving away thousands of free tickets as part of a promotion criticized by church leaders. The first 5,000 people at the state fair were due free tickets, as were takers at seven other sites around the state, said lottery spokeswoman Carol Custer.

She said officials were delighted about New York's record lottery prize. "I think it's interesting that all this is happening at once," she said.

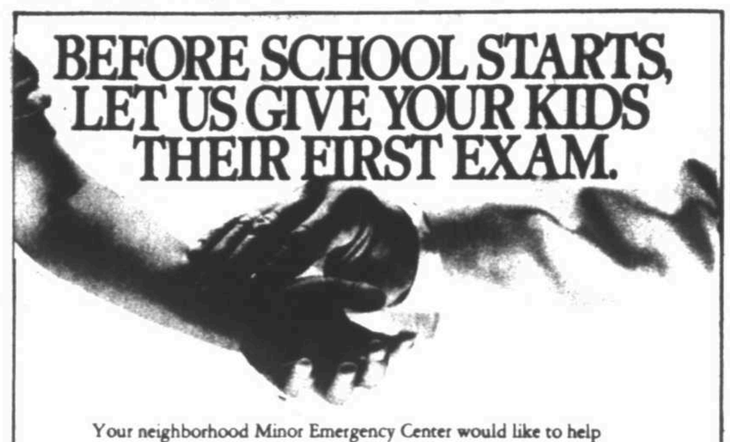

A spokesman for the Iowa Interchurch Forum, Paul Stanfield, said his group wants equal time on radio and television to reply to lottery ads, which he said imply a "patriotic duty" to play.

In California, Nancy Avoy, 46, a substitute English teacher, said delays in a state lottery cost schools more than $1 million daily and asked the 1st District Court of Appeal in San Francisco to order a start-up date.

The lottery was approved in voting last November.

San Francisco Superior Court Judge Roy Wonder ruled Aug. 5 that the state is acting properly in organizing a lottery even though one portion of a voter-approved initiative ordered opening of the games by March 22.

Illinois winner glad the novelty has worn off

CHICAGO (AP) — Nearly a year after winning $40 million in the Illinois lottery, Michael Wittkowski says he's the same as he was before in spite of a new house and truck, trips to Hawaii and a bigger waistline.

Wittkowski, a 29-year-old former print-shop worker, won what was then North America's biggest lottery jackpot, $40 million, by picking six correct numbers out of 40 last Labor Day weekend.

New Yorkers lined up in droves Wednesday for a record $41 million jackpot in that state.

Wittkowski said Wednesday that he has bought a five-bedroom English Tudor house in suburban Palatine, a new truck for himself and a car for fiancee Fran Pappas. There have been two vacations to Hawaii, and Wittkowski has gained 20 pounds from indulging a love of cheeseburgers.

But the novelty has worn off a little, he says.

"Nobody bothers me. It's great," he said, explaining that he now is able to perform such mundane tasks as his banking without being dogged by reporters and TV crews.

Wittkowksi said he and his family, who share $2 million a year from the lottery proceeds keep alive the memory of his mother, Edna Mae Wittkowski, who died of cancer in 1975.

"She taught us individual values and how to treat other people," Wittkowski said. "I couldn't stick my nose up at other people because I wouldn't want that done to me."

New Yorkers dies of botulism from salted fish

NEW YORK (AP) — An elderly Russian couple has died after eating a type of salted fish, and the city's Health Department warned consumers Wednesday not to eat the fish because it might be tainted with botulism.

The fish, a large whitefish usually caught in the Great Lakes, is called Kapchonka by the Russian community, which is the largest consumer of the product, according to Health Commissioner David Sencer.

It was the first fish-related case of botulism in the nation since the mid-1960s, when officials in Tennessee detected botulism in fish that had been smoked in Michigan, Sencer said.

Sara and Skhil Khules, ages unknown, bought the tainted fish at a store in their Queens neighborhood, he said.

"We don't know how many people eat it or how much of it," Sencer said of the fish.

The commissioner said the sale of the fish at the two stores where the fish may have been purchased has been banned, and Health Department inspectors are surveying Russian neighborhoods to find other fish stores that sell the salted fish. He said there was no reason to suspect any problems with other types of salted fish.

Khules died Aug. 14 and his wife died the following day at St. John's Episcopal Hospital. A doctor thought the deaths unusual and notified the Health Department, Sencer said.

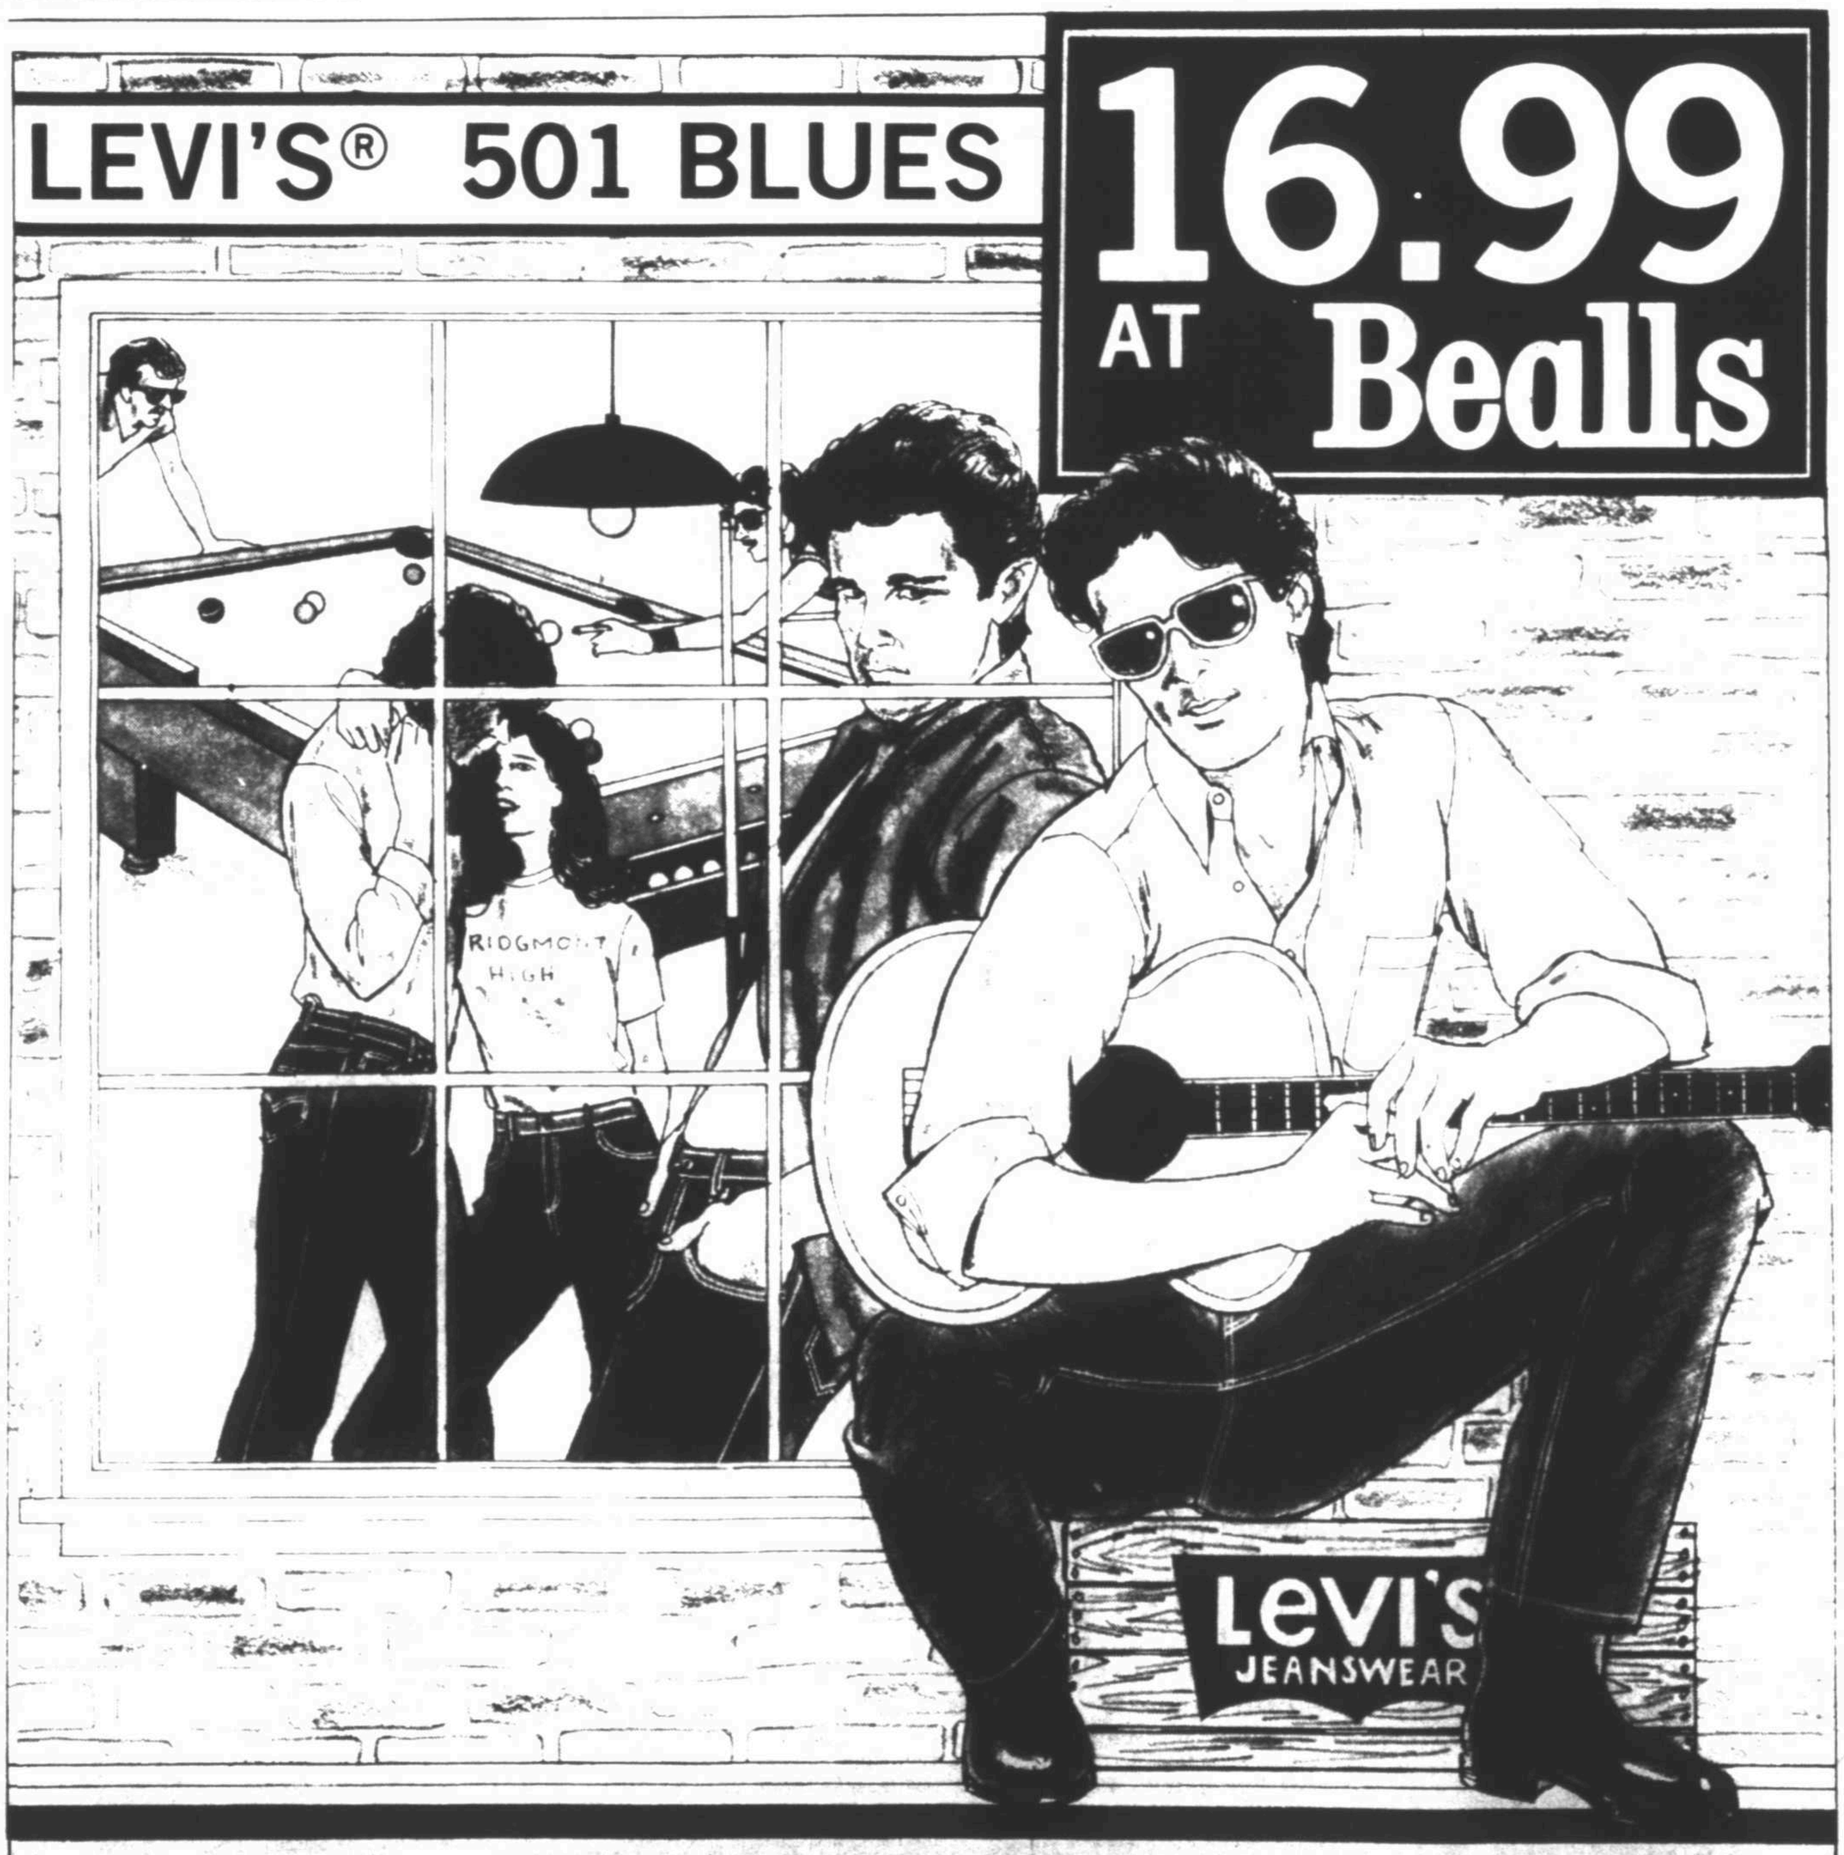

The couple's grown children were asked to bring all food in the house to the Health Department, and botulism was found in the intestines of the left-over salted fish, Sencer said.

The botulism bacteria is usually ingested by fish swimming at the bottom of lakes, and it usually lodges in the fish's intestines, Sencer said.

Kapchonka is soaked in brine and salted whole, leaving the tainted intestines in the fish, Sencer said.

County yanks AIDS pamphlets on how to inject drugs 'safely'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A pamphlet aimed at halting the spread of AIDS among drug abusers has been yanked from distribution after officials discovered it contains advice on how to safely inject drugs and keep needles clean.

"If one student uses this as a guide, this whole pamphlet will be a failure and a flop," Supervisor Kenneth Hahn said Wednesday. "It's like a drunk driving campaign where you say, 'If you do drink and drive, use the side streets.'"

Publication of "Shooting Up and Your Health" was partly financed by federal and Los Angeles county funds, but Hahn said, "The entire pamphlet implies government approval of the use of drugs."

Hahn, a liberal, was joined Wednesday by conservative supervisors Michael Antonovich and Pete Schabarum in calling for an investigation of how the county provided funds for, and helped distribute, the pamphlet.

Antonovich said the pamphlet was "another example of radical liberals using taxpayers' dollars to subsidize deviant behavior and another example of bureaucrats going crazy."

"I am shocked that this publication was put out with the blessings and the sanction of the county," Hahn said.

Irv Cohen, acting director of the county Department of Health Services, said that distribution of the pamphlets was halted as of Wednesday. He said he did not know how many had been distributed.

The county provided about $1,600 for the pamphlet, a joint venture with the AIDS Project L.A., a nonprofit group that raises funds for the battle against acquired immune deficiency syndrome, said Andy Weisser, a spokesman for the AIDS Project.

The AIDS Project is funded in part with federal money funneled through Los Angeles city government.

The pamphlet, which Weisser said was prepared by the Haight-Ashbury Free Clinic in San Francisco, advises intravenous drug users to avoid sharing needles. It also gives advice on maintaining drug paraphernalia.

"It was not intended to promote drug use," Weisser said. "It was intended to protect people from the potential of acquiring AIDS."

Sally Jue, director of psycho-social services for the AIDS Project, said the pamphlet emphasized the dangers of drugs and pointed out that instructions on using needles made up only about one-sixth of the copy.

She said the intended message was: "If you can't stop shooting up — at least don't spread AIDS."

AIDS, which breaks down the body's disease-fighting mechanism, most often strikes male homosexuals, intravenous drug users and hemophiliacs.

The three-page publication says: "There are always health risks associated with any use of drugs by injection. The only way to avoid these risks is not to use needles. If you continue to inject drugs, the following measures will reduce your risk..."

"Clean your 'works,'" the publication advises, referring to the needle kits of drug users. "Wash them with alcohol after each use, then leave them to soak in alcohol until the next use."

The pamphlet then advises drug users to clean their skin with alcohol before injecting.

"A drug addict won't even read this pamphlet," Hahn said. "He'll get his fix any place he can. I fear the danger that this pamphlet may reach a student.

Despite ACLU protests, Colorado will list people who carry AIDS

DENVER (AP) — Over objections from the American Civil Liberties Union, the Colorado Board of Health has tentatively agreed to begin keeping a list of people who carry the virus that can lead to AIDS.

Doctors and laboratories would be required to report to the state health department the names and addresses of anyone carrying the virus, as shown on a test licensed in April by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

The rule becomes effective Oct. 30 if given final approval by the board on Sept. 18.

Health department director Tom Vernon said Wednesday the list will be kept confidential and will be used to ensure that anyone carrying the virus receives proper counseling.

However, Carolyn Lease, chairwoman of the Colorado ACLU's board of directors, said anyone on the list could be subject to discrimination in the event of a leak.

Those most at risk from acquired immune deficiency syndrome, which destroys the body's ability to fight disease, are homosexual men, intravenous drug users, and hemophiliacs.

"The concern isn't that the state has some ominous plan to trap gays," Ms. Lease said. "The reason this is such a big deal is that having AIDS means you're gay in the public mind and gays have no resources against discrimination."

The health department already keeps a list of people diagnosed as having AIDS. The list contains 114 names.

The new list is different, Ms. Lease said, since not everyone who carries the virus will get AIDS. Only 5 percent to 20 percent of those carrying the virus get the disease, according to research cited by her and Vernon.

"My fear is people who come up positive will be treated differently on no scientific basis," Ms. Lease said.

Vernon said the state has kept lists of venereal disease victims for 15 years without a leak. The list of AIDS victims is seen by only a half-dozen people.

"I don't have access to it," he said. "My secretary doesn't have access."

He said the department plans to call doctors who report the AIDS virus to be sure they know how to counsel their patients.

If the doctor can't be reached, the department will "discreetly" call the victim, Vernon said, adding that no information will be disclosed to relatives.

The list of those carrying the virus could become lengthy quickly, Vernon said. About 200 carriers have been identified in just two months by testing.

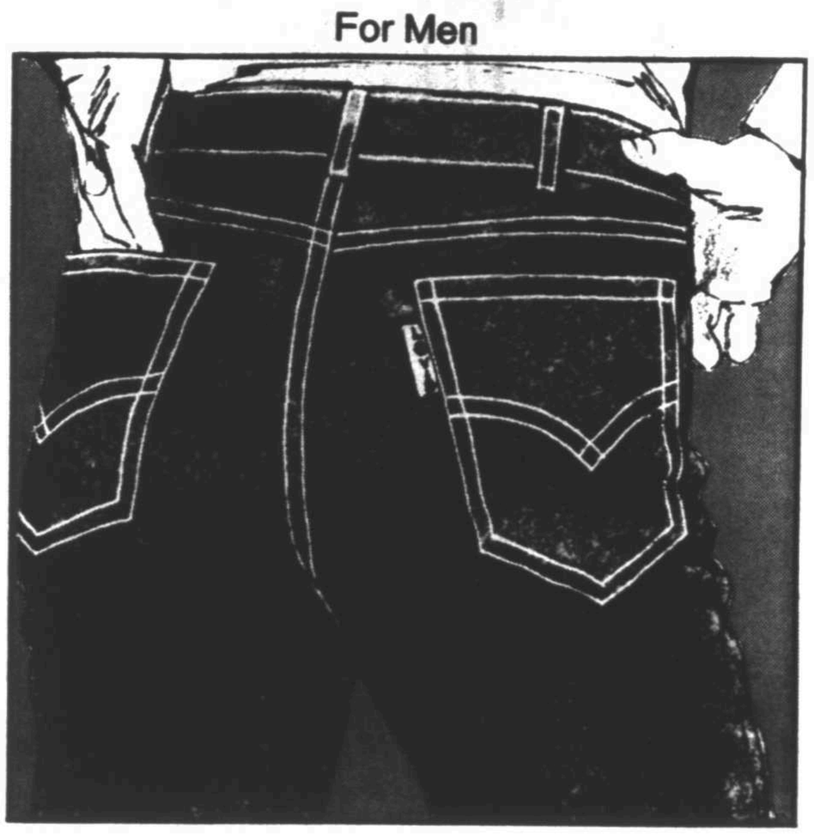

Kubler-Ross may open AIDS home

MONTEREY, Va. (AP) — News is filtering through sparsely inhabited Highland County in western Virginia that psychiatrist Elisabeth Kubler-Ross plans to open a home for children with AIDS, but so far residents are unconcerned.

"I wouldn't know if it's a good idea or a bad idea," said Lois Varner, who lives near the tiny unincorporated community of Headwaters, where the home would be located.

Ms. Kubler-Ross, known for her work helping people cope with death, plans to convert a center she's building into the home, to house up to 40 children with acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

'Block' in the saddle

U.S. Secretary of Agriculture John Block meets Duain Madsen of Harrison, Idaho, prior to the Farmer's Day Parade at the Indiana State Fair in Indianapolis Wednesday.

Governor may free 76-year-old serving life term for mercy killing

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A 76-year-old man serving a life sentence for the "mercy killing" of his seriously ill wife could go free if Gov. Bob Graham recommends clemency, but the governor has not indicated which way he is leaning.

Not even Cabinet members, who will have the final say in the matter, were told before the news conference scheduled for today what Graham had decided in the case of Roswell Gilbert, said Steve Hull, a spokesman for the governor.

Roswell, a retired engineer, was convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced May 9 to life in prison for shooting to death his wife of 51 years.

Emily Gilbert, 73, suffered from Alzheimer's disease and osteoporosis, a painful degenerative bone illness. Gilbert's attorney, Harry Gulkin, said his client loved his wife and shot her to end her suffering.

The prosecution had contended that Mrs. Gilbert was an expensive burden to her husband and her death was not a mercy killing.

"It's a very complicated case," Graham said Tuesday. "It raises some moral and fundamental issues....I have sympathy for the man. I have sympathy for his wife."

Gilbert, of Fort Lauderdale, will not be eligible for parole for 25 years, a term Gulkin says amounts to a death sentence. He has been held in the Avon Park Correctional Institution since he was convicted.

"It's a very complicated case. It raises some moral and fundamental issues....I have sympathy for the man. I have sympathy for his wife."

—Florida Gov. Bob Graham

Any recommendation for clemency would have to come first from Graham. It could be granted only with the approval of at least three of the six members of the Cabinet, which sits as the Board of Executive Clemency. The board held a hearing into the case two weeks ago.

Hull said Graham "has spent a great deal of time thinking about this decision and having his staff study the law in this area. He feels it would not be appropriate to try and poll the Cabinet prior to an announcement."

Graham had a range of clemency options from which to choose — a pardon forgiving Gilbert, commutation of his sentence, which would allow him to leave prison, or a reprieve. That would allow Gilbert to delay serving his sentence. The governor also could decide not to recommend clemency.

Only one of the independently elected Cabinet members, Education Commissioner Ralph Turlington, voiced strong criticism of Gilbert's sentence at the clemency hearing.

Gulkin told the Cabinet at that hearing that Gilbert has lost 40 pounds and undergone surgery for a urinary tract problem since he entered prison. He asked that Gilbert not be forced to die in prison with people who are a threat to society.

The state Parole and Probation Commission has urged the governor and Cabinet not to commute Gilbert's sentence.

Prosecutor Kelly Hancock has said that if Gilbert is freed, the Cabinet would be condoning the murder of the seriously ill.

Graham has received about 1,500 letters, most of them favoring clemency. But a group of Gilbert's neighbors have written Hancock to oppose clemency.

Neon 'cuss word' angers Japanese

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP) — A Japanese-American coalition is upset about a "cuss word in neon lights" advertising the hair salon called "j.a.p.s.s." but the owners, two of whom are Japanese, say it's a good name.

The Japanese American Citizens League has complained to the salon's owners, and a coalition of Japanese-American organizations is pressing a petition drive urging a name change. The word Jap evokes memories of discrimination and World War II internment, as well as fears of a new surge of sentiment against the Japanese because of trade disputes.

"You look up at the sky and you see a cuss word in neon lights," Ellen Endo-Dizon, a columnist for the Los Angeles-based Japanese-American newspaper Rafu Shimpo, said Wednesday in an interview. "I couldn't imagine someone in 1985 being insensitive enough to do something like that."

The five owners of the salon have been surprised by the furor, which has escalated since the business opened last year.

"We didn't realize that many people would start making so much noise," said Shuji Kida, who immigrated from Japan 11 years ago. "We all felt it was a pretty good name, and we didn't realize it was hurting Japanese-American people that much."

Kida said the owners chose the name as an acronym of the initials of their first names but that they knew it also played on the word Japs. Kida sees nothing wrong with the word.

"It sounds strong," he said, "and to me it's nice."

The coalition's concern over the name has been heightened because six other businesses registered in Los Angeles County also use names incorporating JAP or JAPS.

David Monkawa, the coalition's Southern California regional co-chairman, said the organization opposes use of the term by any companies but that, rather than "lash out in all directions at one time," it is focusing its efforts on getting the hair salon's name changed.

Burglar retreats when bank balance shown

WEYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — A widow confronted by a knife-wielding burglar who demanded her money from an automatic teller says the man apologized and fled after she displayed her $56 account balance on the screen.

"I said to him, 'I don't have any money and that I just lost my husband and that I was young,'" Mary L. Hall, 48, said Wednesday.

A thin man in his early 20s followed Mrs. Hall on Tuesday into a small building housing the teller and she saw he had a knife, she said. "He just said, 'Push the screen display.'" Up came the $56 figure.

"I don't know why I didn't get stabbed," she told The Patriot Ledger of Quincy. "He either changed his mind or had some compassion. I didn't cry or plead or get hysterical. I was really in a state of shock."

Grape growers crushed

NAPA, Calif. (AP) — The "chemistry is just great" for the 1985 California wine harvest and crush, but grape growers will be disappointed with prices, industry insiders say.

An almost perfect season of warm, dry weather has produced high-quality wine grapes on the north coast, according to vintners.

"We are very excited about this one," said Bob Dwyer, executive director of the Napa Valley Grape Growers Association.

The California Crop and Livestock Reporting Service predicts a statewide grape harvest of 5.1 million tons. Prices are expected to be the same, or lower, than last year.

The price paid for French Colombard grapes, a common valley-grown variety, has fallen from $175 a ton in 1980 to a current $85 per ton.

Slippery thief sought

SLIDELL, La. (AP) — A 14-year-old boy and a 20-year-old man have been arrested and police are seeking a third person in a snake-farm burglary that netted three pythons and three albino skunks, authorities say.

Robert Sluss and the boy, both of Picayune, Miss., were charged Wednesday with the Aug. 4 break-in at Gulf Coast Serpentarium, said St. Tammany Parish Sheriff's Lt. Clark Thomas.

Detectives, acting on a tip, found a 9-foot-long Burnese python and one of the skunks at Sluss' house, Thomas said.

Another Burnese python, an Australian python and another skunk at the home of the suspect who hasn't been caught, he said. The third skunk reportedly had been sold.

Citizenship of black majority center of South African turmoil

By JAMES F. SMITH

An Analysis

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — For 52 of his 59 years, Dr. Nthato Motlana has lived in Johannesburg's Soweto township. But he speaks Tswana, and that makes him a citizen of Bophuthatswana.

When that tribal homeland accepted independence from South Africa in 1977, Motlana lost his South African citizenship.

Now if the physician and anti-apartheid activist bequeaths his Soweto house to his grandchildren, they can own it but not live in it. Like other children born after Bophuthatswana's independence, they are foreigners, ineligible for rights to live or work permanently in "white" South Africa.

The citizenship status of the black majority lies at the heart of the current political turmoil in this white-ruled nation.

There have been recent hints of change in policies, dating back to the 1950s, that declare blacks in South Africa to be citizens of tribal homelands, not South Africans.

But, to the frustration of black leaders, President P.W. Botha, in a long-awaited speech Aug. 15, offered nothing firm on the question. And he made clear that even if blacks become citizens, that does not mean they will get the vote, a right most Westerners assume comes with citizenship.

Under the homeland policy, the cornerstone of South Africa's apartheid system of racial separation, blacks have been "denationalized," made citizens of 10 tribal homelands with varying degrees of self-rule. The nation's 24 million blacks are denied the vote and other political rights in South Africa on the theory that they have rights in the homelands.

For many blacks, not having the vote is less important than the web of laws that limit their ability to leave the barren homelands, seek work in white areas and live in the black townships that surround white cities.

To settle legally in Soweto or other townships, a black must hold a one-year job contract. Eventually, if he works for 10 years as a migrant laborer, he can acquire the coveted right to reside permanently in urban areas.

The government says more than 160,000 blacks were arrested last year for violating these "influx controls," trying to illicitly settle and work away from the homelands. But many more among the estimated 11 million blacks in the townships are there illegally, having become over the generations the vital manpower of South African industry.

The homeland system is scorned by blacks here and rejected abroad.

No foreign government recognizes Transkei, Ciskei, Bophuthatswana or Venda, the four homelands that have accepted independence since 1976. The other six homelands thus far have declined independence, but have self-governing status.

Though supposedly the homelands of three-quarters of South Africa's population, the black territories cover just 13 percent of the land area. The rest is reserved for the 5 million whites.

Blacks from the four "national states," numbering about 8 million, lost their South African citizenship upon independence, beginning with Transkei in 1976. Blacks from the other six homelands — Kwa-Zulu, Lebowa, KaNgwane, QwaQwa, Gazankulu and KwaNdebele — have dual citizenship, meaning they are eligible for South African passports and able to pass on to their children any rights they gain to reside in white urban areas.

Urban-born children of blacks from independent homelands, on the other hand, supposedly lose residence rights on reaching adulthood.

Botha, in his speech, again acknowledged that some form of national representation must be devised both for urban blacks and for citizens of homelands rejecting independence. But he made no specific proposals. Contrary to some predictions, he did not suggest the homelands be reintegrated into one South Africa.

Reintegration would represent a major retreat for the ruling National Party, which since winning power in 1948 has devised the homelands policy as a way to achieve pure apartheid — no black citizens in South Africa.

That was the theory, but in recent years the white leadership has had to deal with the reality — millions of township blacks living on the doorstep of white cities and powering the national economy.

The government, admitting its influx controls do not work, has tried since 1977 to create councils giving blacks who live far from the homelands some voice in running the townships. But apartheid foes have waged successful boycotts, rejecting local bodies imposed by a national government that excludes them.

Mineworkers' union postpones strike

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The black National Union of Mineworkers on Thursday postponed a threatened strike of 29 gold and coal mines and put the mine owners' new offers before its members.

The union and the Chamber of Mines, the association of mine companies, met until 3 a.m. in a six-hour bargaining session to come up with the revised package, both sides said in statements.

A strike was scheduled to begin Sunday. It would have affected as many as 230,000 out of 550,000 black miners in South Africa's largest industry at a time of widespread anti-apartheid unrest in black townships.

Mine strikes often have spread illegally to non-union pits.

The union neither endorsed nor rejected the new offers, but said it would put the various plans to its members for a decision and report back to the Chamber of Mines by next Wednesday.

It set a revised strike date of Sept. 1 if the membership rejects the offers.

General's warning

Speaking the other day in Dallas, Gen. John W. Vessey made a strong statement in favor of the Reagan administration's military buildup as a means of maintaining world peace.

In one way, of course, that's to be expected. Gen. Vessey will retire in October as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and, as such, it's his job to see that the nation is adequately defended.

But the general's speech was more than a career military man's defense of military spending. It was common sense and cut to the heart of military preparedness. And he used quotes from the late journalist, H.L. Mencken, to solidify his point: "There is no record in history of a nation that ever gained anything valuable by being unprepared to defend itself."

There's always a threat to freedom, but staying prepared to respond to any assault against freedom is, without a doubt, one of the most difficult tasks of a free society. That's so because the threat — while being constant — is not always readily apparent or of great concern.

Gen. Vessey touched on that point when he told Veterans of Foreign Wars conventioneers in Dallas: "If the Soviets see that the free nations of the world are willing to limit their weapons through their own democratic processes, there is not much incentive for them to negotiate with us."

The general is absolutely correct, of course. It's confounding that free nations must continually battle to maintain their freedoms, but there is little question that we must. Look at the world stage: Vietnam, Cambodia, Afghanistan, Central America. In each of those locations, the battle has pitted defenders attempting to protect whatever degree of freedom they possess and aggressors who seek to force their will on those people.

Then look at the history of this nation: Weapons are not stockpiled for attacking other societies; they're stockpiled against the threat of attack, in some manner, by other governments.

Now, as in years past, the United States is stockpiling weapons not against an open threat but against a subtle, behind-the-scenes assault. Now, as the general noted, is not the time to let down the guard. Now is the time to stay aware of the threat.

Free societies stay that way only if they're willing to fight to remain free. Why give up something so precious simply because it's so much of an aggravation to stay prepared to defend liberty?

Gen. Vessey's words are must reading for everyone who cherishes freedom.

Hance fooling Texans

Former Congressman Kent Hance, a possible candidate for governor of Texas, is trying to fool the people of Texas into believing that he is a conservative.

The recently released ratings by two conservative and two liberal organizations showing Kent Hance's 1984 voting record and his cumulative voting record is nothing less than outrageous. There was not a conservative rated who had less than an 80% voting record for the two conservative organizations. Kent Hance had 39% for one and 56% for the other. The only organization that Kent Hance rated highly with — 75% — was organized labor, COPE.

On the other hand, Congressman Tom Loeffler, who is also considering that office, received a cumulative 95% and 91%, respectively, from the conservative organizations, while receiving a 5% and 9% from the liberal organizations. These rating results should make it clear that Kent Hance is trying to fool people into thinking that he is a conservative; yet his voting history shows that he voted with Tip O'Neill 61% of the time and with organized labor 75% of the time. Congressman Loeffler voted against Tip O'Neill 87% of the time and with organized labor 5% of the time.

We don't need a governor of Texas that thinks and acts like Tip O'Neill. We need someone that fights the actions of Tip O'Neill. It has become apparent over the many years that Tip O'Neill and Jim Wright conspire routinely to undermine the conservative base that exists in Texas. The records speak for themselves. You should write Kent Hance and let him explain why he has such an outrageous voting record.

Think of elderly

Though they seethe at the graft and corruption at all levels of government, most citizens do pay their taxes. Those at the top and at the bottom of the economic ladder manage, for obvious reasons, to escape much of the burden. The onus of supporting the ridiculous and often criminal expenditures of government falls to those of us in the middle.

This missive is an attempt to call attention of local taxing bodies to a specific block of taxpayers, the retired residents.

They represent a steady amount of spendable monies for local businesses. However, when you thumb your noses at the mandated results of referendum elections and proceed to look for ways to construct a multimillion dollar facility for law-breakers, build more schools, when it is only a matter of time with businesses and oil companies folding until the existing schools will be more than sufficient, you are in danger of eliminating Midland as a choice for maintaining a retirement residence.

One of these days, no matter where we live in these United States, we might have had enough and shout, "We're mad as hell and we aren't going to take it anymore." Then you will see a taxpayers' revolution to rival the one that built this country.

Then again, left to their own devices, administrators will create a debt so devastating, it will bury us as surely as any bomb.

Solons visit glamor 'hot spots'

WASHINGTON — It's an annual rite in Washington: Every summer, the members of various committees on Capitol Hill play spin-the-globe to determine which of the world's hot spots need their personal attention during the recess.

Jack Anderson

The locations tend toward the pleasure spots. Indeed, the uninitiated might be amazed to learn how many problems are screaming for solutions in such places as Paris, London and Rome.

Tentative plans are drawn up, and staffers are dispatched to make arrangements. Air transportation has to be requisitioned from the Defense Department. Surface transportation, hotel reservations and luggage carriers have to be lined up by the State Department.

The woebegone diplomats also have to dredge up some officials of the host governments who are willing to give up a few days of their summer vacations to "confer" with the visiting dignitaries. Can't have an "official business" trip without some official business, you see.

We have been following globe-trotting lawmakers for 38 years as they clamor across the ruins of Machupicchu and float down the Nile. We reported the amusing antics of a Louisiana senator trying out his Cajun French on bewildered natives in Timbuktu. We caught a Midwestern senator taking elephant rides in Sri Lanka.

It's a story without an ending. There is no final chapter, only the next one. An estimated 14 congressional delegations, for example, trekked this month to Central America, Europe, Africa and the Far East.

Members of the House Armed Services Committee, to name but one, recently returned to the United States after a two-week "fact-finding" trip to several Mediterranean countries. An Air Force C-137 was required to haul the party of 10 lawmakers, five wives, nine aides and bureaucrats, a Navy doctor and three Air Force "escort" officers across the Atlantic. The seven-hour flights to and fro set the taxpayers back $102,000 in fuel and maintenance costs alone.

The congressional party used an Air Force C-9 jet to hop from country to country. The taxpayers' bill for the short-hop flights came to another $88,000.

A State Department official solemnly pronounced the trip "serious." The delegation's chairman, Melvin Price, D-Ill., added with deep gravity: "The delegation's trip underscores the importance of the region to the continued stability of southern NATO, the Middle East and North Africa."

Our reporter Stewart Harris has obtained their itinerary, stamped "confidential," which was prepared by the State Department. Here is the laborious schedule the diplomats set up for the official travelers at each of their stops:

— Yugoslavia: The delegation was to set down in the resort town of Dubrovnik on the Adriatic Sea in time for a late lunch, hosted by the mayor in the Hotel Belvedere. The Dubrovnik leg was necessary, said a State Department official, because Yugoslav officials are vacationing on the Adriatic in August.

Free time was scheduled that evening and the next day, but tours of the nearby village of Chilipi were available so the delegation could view the "native handicrafts and folk dancing."

Official talks were scheduled for the morning of Aug. 5 in Sarajevo with representatives of the local province and later with defense officials.

— Tunisia: Meetings with Tunisian officials were still shaky at departure time, so the State Department prepared contingency plans to tour the Barbo Museum and eat lunch at a beach restaurant. Optional trips to Carthage and the seaside resort of Sidi Bou Said were also available.

— Morocco: On their arrival in Rabat on Aug. 8, the party had a free afternoon to be followed by a dinner and reception. A meeting was set up next morning with Prime Minister Mohammad Karim-Lamrani, after which the group was offered a tour to Marrakech.

— Algeria: This was perhaps the busiest leg of the trip. Meetings were scheduled with Algerian officials on Aug. 10 and 11, but those who didn't want to attend the meetings were offered tours of the Casbah and nearby Phoenician and Roman sites.

— Spain: Here the representatives toured U.S. Air Force bases in Rota and Torrejon and met with Spanish officials. A trip to historic Toledo was available for those who wanted to take it.

All in all, it sounds like a pleasant way to spend a few weeks at the taxpayers' expense.

MINI-EDITORIAL: The controversy over car phones has us a little confused. Some critics are saying they are unsafe because they take a driver's attention off the road. Others, including AT&T, say they're no more distracting than cigarette lighters or windshield wipers. All we can say is that after hearing that infernal necessity ring 16 hours a day, we yearn for the serenity of a phoneless sedan. And our windshield wipers don't hang up on us.

GEORGE F. WILL

South Africans just 'one people'

WASHINGTON — Just (yes, "just") 125 years ago the United States began solving a racial problem significantly less difficult than the one afflicting South Africa. The process began with four years of civil war and was followed by a century of intermittent litigation and legislation. All this was needed to open American society to a racial minority that was regionally concentrated.

George F. Will

Writing in The Public Interest, Glenn C. Loury notes that "in little more than a generation we have advanced from a circumstance in which the great majority of Americans were indifferent or actively hostile to blacks' quest for full citizenship rights, to one in which racial equality of opportunity is a value staunchly upheld by the law and universally embraced in our politics." Now, what of the prospects for change in South Africa?

John Buchan, in his magnificent autobiography "Pilgrim's Way," published in 1940, recalled serving as an aide to Lord Milner in South Africa in the first decade of the century. When read today, this passage leaps off the page: "The hope of breaking down the racial barrier between town and country was always very near to Milner's heart. He wanted to see the Dutch share in the urban industries and men of British stock farming beside the Boers in the veldt." South Africa's blacks were invisible then.

Today they are omnipresent in the global circuitry of journalism. A crucial fact about South Africa's turmoil is its presence in American living rooms.

South Africa is far from being an open society but so, too, is it far from being as closed as any communist society, or many African despotisms. Bishop Tutu holds press conferences; he regales white students with witty and withering ridicule of government policy. South Africa is an opening society. Changes in laws touching matters as varied and vital as trade unions, interracial sex and marriage can not be dismissed as cosmetic.

There are two certainties about South African change: It is coming; it will occur behind a fusillade of bluster designed to deny foreign critics the satisfaction of thinking they are forcing any change.

On a planet where narrow creeks can create canyons and even the continents drift, nothing lasts, least of all social arrangements. But it is said there are three lost tribes in today's world — the Protestants in Ulster, the Israelis in the Middle East and the white (especially Dutch) South Africans. These three groups are not going to go home. They are home. As Chief Buthelezi, leader of the Zulus, says, South Africa may avoid the calamity that has befallen so much of postcolonial Africa (one man, one vote — once) because blacks and whites are "a community of Africans....The whites have become indigenous and the interdependence between blacks and whites doesn't exist anywhere else in Africa."

South Africa's foreign minister says, tendentiously, "There is no clear-cut majority" in South Africa because there is no "homogeneous" black majority. There are, he says, "differences of opinion" among blacks. Well, do tell. Imagine: Blacks do not all think alike. Next thing you know, they won't all look alike. There certainly is a clear-cut minority: It is white and it, too, is not homogeneous.

Buthelezi says the minimal demand is for the government to acknowledge "that we are one people in one country." The government is closer to doing that than even it may realize. Its ambassador in Washington says the government is committed to a process of change that should end in a federal structure with whites not in a privileged position in the central government.

Whether or not the people in Pretoria actually feel so committed, the crucial point in President Botha's otherwise barren speech last week was the offer to negotiate with blacks. Negotiation presupposes human beings on both sides of the table. It is too late for a South African "Dred Scott decision." In America, that 1857 decision lit the short fuse to war by declaring a constitutional principle that blacks could not be complete citizens, and hence, inferentially, were not completely human.

To pass from authoritarianism to popular government without falling into anarchy and more authoritarianism is difficult. King Juan Carlos of Spain deserves the Nobel Peace Prize for his indispensable role in making Spain the only European nation to move from fascism to democracy without being conquered. The problem in Spain — a relatively homogeneous nation with a majority in favor of the change — was less demanding than South Africa's problem.

Foreign critics are demanding that South Africa's regime dismount from a tiger. Perhaps the regime is to blame for being on the tiger. Perhaps the tiger is only angry because it has been ridden so long, so recklessly. Perhaps. But critics should consider this: Telling a rider of a tiger that he deserves to be devoured is no way to persuade him to dismount.

ART BUCHWALD

Hit-and-run driver hard to corner!

EDITOR'S NOTE: While Art Buchwald is on vacation we reprint some columns from the past.

One of the most dastardly criminals in America today is the "hit-and-run parker." Almost everyone has been a victim of a hit-and-run parker. You go into a shopping mall or an underground self-parking garage and do your errands. When you return you discover the side of your car has been bashed in, or there is a large gash in the radiator grille, or the bumper in the rear has been pushed three feet into the trunk.

Art Buchwald

You look around desperately to see if the guilty car is still in the parking lot. Obviously it isn't. The mad hit-and-run parker has struck again!

I went to see Chief Inspector Renfrew at the police department, who is in charge of the Hit-and-Run Parking Division.

He showed me a chart and said proudly, "Hit-and-run parking is the largest growth crime in the country. It's risen 400 percent in the past three years. There was a time when someone who had smashed into someone else's car in a parking lot or on the street would leave a note on the windshield with his or her name, address and telephone number. But I haven't seen that happen in ages. Now it's smash, bang and 'Let's get the hell out of here.'"

"Have you ever caught a hit-and-run parker?" I asked Inspector Renfrew.

"No, but we've been close a few times," he said. "Once we had a man staked out in the basement of the Kennedy Center who saw a Chrysler smash into a new Buick. The Chrysler took off and my man followed in hot pursuit. Unfortunately, he smashed into a Chevy as he was backing out and had to leave by another exit so no one would know he had done it."

"If you haven't made any progress in solving hit-and-run parking accidents," I asked, "why are you still in business?"

"Because we're getting close all the time," he said. "For example, we now have a profile of the average hit-and-run parker. She's either a man or a woman, middle-class, respectable and usually votes for the law-and-order candidate. Her weakness is getting into a parking space without going over the yellow lines. She has trouble backing up and panics easily when she sees anything moving in front or behind her. When she wants to go forward, she will put her car into reverse; when she wants to go backward, she'll put it in drive. When the car is perfectly positioned, she'll put her foot on the gas pedal."

"You keep saying 'she.' Does this mean the hit-and run parker is usually a woman?"

"I wouldn't say that, but a recent survey of automobile body shops around the country indicates that more women than men are sneaking in to have their cars repaired."

"Maybe they have more time."

"Possibly, but we find a majority of them tell the body shop owner they'll pay in cash on condition that their husbands never find out about it."

"That's good sleuthing," I told Renfrew.

"The thing that really has us confused," the inspector said, "is that nobody wants to admit that they were in a moving accident any more. Therefore, when someone in the family comes home with a dented fender, that person always says it happened in the parking lot."

"What should a person do if he actually catches a hit-and-run parker in the act of smashing into his car?"

"Look around for a witness. Otherwise, it will be his word against hers."

"But aren't people reluctant to get involved in someone else's hit-and-run parking accident?"

"Most are, unless you promise to give them your parking space in exchange for testifying in court on your behalf."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

Five hundred years ago, on Aug. 22, 1485, England's King Richard III was killed in the Battle of Bosworth Field, ending the War of the Roses between the rival royal houses of Lancaster and York. He was succeeded on the throne by Henry VII.

On this date:

In 1762, Ann Franklin became the first female editor for an American newspaper, the Mercury, in Newport, R.I.

In 1775, England's King George III proclaimed the American colonies to be in a state of open rebellion.

In 1846, the United States annexed New Mexico.

Thought for today: "The trouble with our times is that the future is not what it used to be." — Paul Valery, French poet and critic (1871-1945).

Syria tries to quell battles in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syria stepped in today to halt fierce artillery battles and a car bomb war between Moslems and Christians that police say have killed 300 people and wounded 922 in 12 days.

Police said 20 civilians were killed and 45 wounded in overnight and daybreak shelling of Beirut's Christian and Moslem sectors.

The fighting continued as a four-party security committee representing the main militias and the Lebanese Army met under Syrian sponsorship in a bid to arrange a lasting ceasefire.

Seven people were killed and 18 wounded when a rocket barrage hit the Christian suburb of Sinn el-Fil, police said. The Christian Voice of Lebanon radio reported that infant twins were among the wounded.

Moslem militias fired scores of rocket barrages from truck-mounted multi-barreled launchers into Christian residential districts of the capital as well as the Christian heartland to the north and northeast, police said.

Christian militia gunners retaliated with 130mm artillery and howitzers. Lebanese army units loyal to President Amin Gemayel, a Christian, also fired 155mm artillery, 120mm mortars and 90mm rounds from U.S.-built M-48 tanks.

Thousands of Beirutis cowered in basements and bomb shelters for the fourth straight night. Others fled during the very few brief lulls. Towns and villages in the Druse-populated mountains northeast and southeast of Beirut also were hit.

Security committee delegates from the Lebanese army, Druse, Christian and Shiite Moslem militias arrived in Chtaura in East Lebanon's Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley at mid-morning.

The meeting was headed by Col. Ghazi Kenaan, the Syrian Army's intelligence chief in Lebanon at his headquarters on the Beirut-Damascus highway.

At the same time, six of Prime Minister Rashid Karami's nine-member cabinet met at Gemayel's summer residence in Bikfaya northeast of Beirut for the first time in four months.

The State radio said Gemayel, a Maronite Christian, presided over the meeting at the mountain resort in the Christian heartland. Three of four Christian cabinet members attended the meeting.

Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt, who serves as Transport and Tourism Minister, and Shiite militia leader Nabih Berri, the Justice Minister, did not attend. They have refused to meet with Christian ministers for four months.

A total of 144 people have been killed and 300 injured in five car bomb explosions that rocked Christian east Beirut, the Moslem west side, and the Sunni Moslem northern port city of Tripoli.

Marines didn't anticipate suicide attack

By TIM AHERN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even though Marines in Lebanon were worried about terrorist attacks, they didn't anticipate the suicide truck bombing in October 1983 that destroyed their barracks and killed 241 servicemen, according to newly released congressional testimony.

And although U.S. military officials agreed to station Marines at the Beirut airport, the commander of the Marine force didn't think the area could be protected from attack, the testimony indicated.

The 654-page report, much of which had remained classified during eight days of hearings in November and December 1983, was released publicly Wednesday. Some still-secret portions were deleted, however.

The testimony formed the basis of conclusions reached in December 1983 by the House Armed Services investigations subcommittee, which strongly criticized the military chain of command for lapses in security.

A separate Pentagon investigation also faulted security and recommended disciplinary action for unnamed officers, but President Reagan rejected that call because he said the men had suffered enough.

At 6:22 a.m. on Oct. 23, 1983, a suicidal terrorist drove a five-ton truck loaded with six tons of explosives through the open front gate of the Marine compound, past two guard posts where Marines carried unloaded weapons and through the front door of the barracks.

The explosion collapsed the building, killing 241 servicemen and leading to calls for withdrawal of the 1,800 Marines stationed in Lebanon as part of a multi-national peacekeeping force to support the shaky Lebanese government. Four months later, Reagan withdrew the Marines.

AP Laserphoto

Rescuers carry a U.S. Marine to safety after he was trapped in the wreckage of the Marine command post in Beirut, Lebanon, which was blown up by terrorists in October of 1983, in this Associated Press file photo.

The testimony released Wednesday provided new details about the security lapses and offered the first public comments by Marine Col. Timothy J. Geraghty, commander of the barracks.

Geraghty, now commander of the Marine Corps barracks at the Norfolk, Va., Naval Station, has not responded publicly to criticism that his security measures were lax. He did not return a reporter's call to his office Wednesday.

Geraghty told the House subcommittee that military officials looked at a wide variety of threats and received hundreds of warnings about possible attacks of one type of another.

But no one predicted that a truck driven by a terrorist bent on suicide would attack the barracks, he said.

The Marines worried about "car bombs and truck bombs," Geraghty admitted, but "we never got up to the large buses or into large trucks, and I guess in retrospect, we probably should have."

"But it just wasn't something that — that in itself, with the suicidal side of it, that type of exposure, it just wasn't in any of the threat traffic that we were looking at," he said.

In all the intelligence the Marines received, he said, "We had no indication that we would have a threat of this magnitude, both in delivery and in explosive force of this size..."

Philip Habib, Reagan's special envoy to the Middle East, said he approved the airport location for the U.S. contingent "with full consultation and understanding of the military authorities."

However, Geraghty said locating the Marines at the airport caused "considerable vulnerabilities" because they were next to a busy road carrying thousands of airport-bound cars and trucks.

The traffic volume and the flatness of the site made security impossible, Geraghty said.

"Tactically, it is a terrible situation to be in," he said. "Because of the routine operation of an international airport, you don't have control, and where you don't have security."

No earth works or "tank traps" which could have stopped a large truck were put up because the Marines didn't want to give the appearance of permanence or of sealing off the airport, he told the panel.

Geraghty said a number of top U.S. officials, including military officers, visited the site, but none made specific recommendations about improving security.

"I have second-guessed a lot," he said. Still, "I can state in all honesty," he said, "we were taking just about every precaution that I thought was prudent to address the threat as we knew it."

But some members of the Armed Services panel apparently warned of security problems following a visit to the barracks in late September 1983, about a month before the bombing.

Police: Woman linked to bombing is French army captain

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP) — Police said today that a woman charged with murder in the bombing of the Greenpeace environmental organization's flagship is a captain in the French army.

New Zealand police working in France have determined that the French-speaking woman charged under the name of Sophie Claire Turenge is actually Capt. Dominique Prieur, said Detective Inspector Allan Galbraith.

French newspapers earlier alleged the woman worked for the General Directorate for External Security — the French espionage agency called DGSE, and said that a man arrested with her is a major in the French army.

The woman and the man are charged with murder, arson and conspiracy in connection with the bombing of the Greenpeace flagship Rainbow Warrior on July 10. The boat sank in Auckland harbor after the bombing.

One crewman, 36-year-old Portugese photographer Fernando Pereira, was killed in the blast.

The man has appeared in court under the name of Alain Jacques Turenge, but Galbraith said police have not been able to confirm his identity.

French news reports today identified another French woman who was involved in Greenpeace activities in New Zealand this spring as a lieutenant in the French espionage agency.

The newsmagazine L'Express and the news agency Agence France-Press said the woman known as Frederique Bonlieu, who is wanted for questioning by New Zealand police, is actually Lt. Christine Huguette Cabon.

The news agency, citing sources close to the French spy agency, said her mission was "observation and surveillance." It said she was 34 years old and had been a lieutenant since 1977.

The two who gave their name as Turenge are also charged under New Zealand law with carrying false Swiss passports. They remain in police custody awaiting a preliminary hearing scheduled for Nov. 4.

The two appeared in court briefly today under a law that no one can be held for more than eight days without appearing before a judge.

Steve Sawyer, international director for Greenpeace, said it would not surprise him if the French government was involved in sinking the ship.

When it was blown up, the Greenpeace boat was preparing to sail for French Polynesia and the French nuclear testing site at Mururoa Atoll, near Tahiti, to monitor and protest underground nuclear explosions.

Sawyer said the Rainbow Warrior was raised from the harbor bed Wednesday and towed to dry dock Thursday, but that it did not appear to be salvageable.

New Zealand's prime minister, David Lange, said today that if the couple that has been charged with the bombing is found to have been acting under French government order, "then certain consequences will follow under international law."

Lange said Tuesday that New Zealand would sue France if it was proven the bombing was carried out under government orders.

Temperatures hover near record high

From Staff and Wire Reports

Near record-breaking weather will continue through Friday as temperatures are expected to reach the 100 degree mark, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Tonight will be fair and mild with low temperatures expected in the mid 70s and winds out of the south at five to 10 mph.

Friday will be sunny and hot with isolated afternoon thunderstorms, high temperatures near 100 degrees, southerly winds at 10 to 20 mph and less than a 20 percent chance of rain.

The highest temperature ever recorded for Wednesday's date was 102 degrees in 1964. A low of 52 degrees was set in 1947 for today's date.

STATE

Another day of scorching heat was in store for most of Texas today as skies remained mostly clear.

The only relief from the heat was expected in the northern Panhandle, the immediate upper Texas coast and the Trans-Pecos mountains, forecasters said. Readings there were to be in the 80s and lower 90s. Readings were to be near or slightly above the 100-degree mark over the rest of the state.

A few thunderstorms were expected over the mountains, northwest Texas and north central portions of the state.

Skies were mostly clear over the state at dawn as an upper level high pressure system continued to dominate the state's weather. Only a few patchy clouds were reported along the coast. Skies were clear elsewhere. Some light fog cut visibility to about five miles at Port Arthur.

Early morning temperatures were in the 70s and 80s. Extremes ranged from 60 at Marfa to 84 at Fort Worth.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 73 at Amarillo, 82 at Wichita Falls, 81 at Dallas, 79 at Waco, 78 at Austin, 79 at San Antonio, 76 at Corpus Christi and Brownsville, 77 at San Angelo, 78 at Lubbock, 74 at Midland and 73 at El Paso.

NATION

Winds shattered car windows in one North Dakota town as heavy rains, hail and twisters tore through other parts of the state. Thunderstorms also continued through the early morning in Iowa, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri and parts of Illinois and Minnesota.

In the East, more storms were scattered over eastern North Carolina and eastern Georgia.

MICHAEL SPICER:

Spicing up life at Midland College, Midland Community Theatre

in the Spotlight

A high energy act, director Michael Spicer, center, and the Pickwick Players, Midland Community Theatre's youth performing troupe, are still long enough to capture the group on film prior to a rehearsal for "Gollywhoppers."

BRIEFLY

MCT auditions slated

Auditions are set for Midland Community Theatre's upcoming production of "They're Playing Our Song," which will be onstage at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., Oct. 4-9.

Roles are available for four men and four women ranging in age from 20 to 35. Singing and some dancing are required in each part.

The auditions will be held Sunday and Monday in the Redfern Room at Theatre Midland. For more information call 682-2544.

Art entries invited

AUSTIN — The Texas Fine Arts Association announces a call for entries to its first "Texas Realism" exhibition. Artists working in realist styles ranging from traditional to contemporary are invited to enter this two and three-dimensional all-media juried competition.

The exhibition is designed to showcase the work of new and current members, although artists may join TFAA at the time of entry. Juror Tom Livesay, assistant director of administration at Dallas Museum of Art and former director of the Amarillo Art Center, will jury the competition from 35mm slides, then view accepted works in person to award prizes of at least $1,000 and select works for a traveling show.

The exhibition will be on view in the Atrium Gallery, Moody Hall, St. Edwards University in Austin, from December 14 to January 19. Following its opening in Austin, selections from the exhibition will tour statewide.

The deadline for receipt of slides is September 23. To request a call for entries and information on membership benefits, call the TFAA state office in Austin at 512/453-5312, or write P.O. Box 5023, Austin, 78763.

The TFAA is a statewide visual arts organization composed of working artists and supporters of the arts. Benefits include members-only exhibitions; reduced entry fees on exhibitions including New American Talent and The Texas Annual; written critiques from slides; group rates for health and life insurance; discounts on art magazines; credit union membership; newsletters and reduced registration fees for its Annual Artists Conference.

Blue Note goes video

NEW YORK (AP) — The historic "One Night With Blue Note" concert, which united some of the jazz world's greatest last Feb. 22, has been made into videocassettes for the new Blue Note Home Video.

The two hourlong videos feature keyboardist Herbie Hancock, Bobby Hutcherson on vibes, Art Blakey on drums and guitarist Stanley Jordan. There's also a piano solo by McCoy Tyner; Charles Lloyd's brisk "Tone Poem" and a ballad by alto sax player Lou Donaldson.

"It was a magical evening," said Bruce Lundvall, Manhattan/Blue Note president. "We assembled many of the artists who started with Blue Note, or spent many years there and added new people we've signed."

Cooke albums due

NEW YORK (AP) — In what has become a veritable Sam Cooke revival, RCA records plans to release a second package of material by the late crooner this fall.

The new double LP, "The Man and His Music," will feature Cooke's performances of his own compositions. Last spring, RCA released "Sam Cooke Live at the Harlem Square Club, 1963."

Cooke died at the age of 33 in December 1964. He influenced a legion of pop, rock and soul singers, and his music has been revived by such artists as the Manhattans, Rod Stewart, Otis Redding, Cat Stevens and Aretha Franklin.

Scampering for trivia

LOS ANGELES (AP) — What famous mouse is collaborating on a new Trivial Pursuit game?

The answer is Mickey Mouse. A writing team is now at work on the new game.

"It's the Walt Disney family edition," said Scott Abbott, one of the originators of the game. "Trivial Pursuit ties up with Mickey Mouse."

Abbott said in a telephone interview from Toronto that the game was made possible by an agreement with Walt Disney Productions. A prototype should be ready in time for a game trade show next February.

Petrie name famous

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Petries are following in the footsteps of other famous Hollywood families such as the Fondas, Douglases, Bridges and Carradines.

But the show business Petrie family may outnumber them all.

Dan Petrie, winner of three Directors Guild awards and a Peabody award, is a director for movies, television and the stage. His works include "Fort Apache: The Bronx," "Lifeguard," "Eleanor and Franklin," "Eleanor and Franklin: The White House Years" and "Sybil."

His wife, Dorothea Petrie, a former model, actress, literary agent and casting director, is now a television producer ("Orphan Train," "Angel Dusted" and the upcoming "Picking Up the Pieces").

Dan Petrie Jr., 33, was nominated for an Academy Award last year for his first produced screenplay, "Beverly Hills Cop."

Donald Petrie, 31, makes his directorial debut with an episode of Steven Spielberg's "Amazing Stories" for NBC. He is also directing an episode of ABC's "McGyver."

June Petrie, 26, is director of creative affairs for MGM-UA Studios.

Mary Petrie, 26, her twin, is an actress, with appearances in the movie "Power," the soap opera "One Life to Live" and several Off-Broadway plays.

The Platters spin their tunes at Odessa's Champoux Club

The Platters

ODESSA — The Platters are performing at The Champoux Club, 601 N. Grandview St., at 9 p.m. and 11 p.m. through Saturday.

Since the beginning of the rock'n'roll era in the early '50s, Paul Robi and The Platters have attained world-wide recognition through million selling hits such hits as "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," "The Great Pretender," "The Magic Touch," "Harbor Lights," "Red Sails in the Sunset," "Bewitched, Bothered and Bewildered" and "Twilight Time."

After years of hard work performing throughout California, the Platters recorded "Only You" for Mercury records. Vocally arranged and conducted by Robi, "Only You" sold five million records and was recorded in more than 20 foreign languages.

The Platters came to prominence during the rock era when Elvis Presley was king. In sharing the charts with rock artists, singing rock and appearing in such films as "Rock Around the Clock," the group got the label of being a rock'n'roll group.

In fact, The Platters group was not a reactionary one like many rock groups, but rather represented a logical development of the pre-rock vocal music of such groups as the Ink Spots. The group proved it was not confined to an particular labeling by turning to the standard pop repertoire and showing in recordings that it could handle any kind of material in a distinctive and original style and still keep its mass following.

The show the group does in the '80s is designed to take the listener through a tour of the days of rock'n'roll combined with today's sounds.

Advance tickets for today's performance are priced at $5, with tickets for Friday and Saturday at $7.50. Tickets may be purchased in Midland at Music Den, 4706 N. Midkiff St.; and Endless Horizons, 11-B Meta Drive; and in Odessa, at Music Stores of Texas, 801 N. Grant St.; Flowerama, Permian Mall; and Kats House of Music, 8913 W. University. Tickets may be purchased at the door for $10.

Seating is limited.

Jewelry glitters in museum exhibit

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Museum of Art was selected as one of ten art museums in the United States to host "Objects of Adornment: Five Thousand Years of Jewelry From the Walters Art Gallery, Baltimore." The show runs through Sept. 15.

This exhibition includes more than 200 of the Walters Art Gallery's finest pieces of jewelry from the renowned historical collection, which is one of the largest and most comprehensive jewelry collections in the world. It was assembled by Henry Walters, a railroad magnate and an avid collector. Between 1893 and 1931, he purchased hundreds of examples of historical jewelry from around the world.

The objects in the traveling show range from simple stone amulets of the ancient Near East to Lalique's and Tiffany's dramatic 20th century creations. The exhibition includes many of the Walters Art Gallery's masterpieces, such as a magnificent bracelet from the Olbia Treasure, the Great Esterhazy Marriage Collar, the Tiffany Sapphire Iris and Rene Lalique's Tiger Necklace. Tiffany's "Iris Corsage" brooch contains 120 sapphires.

Works from Egyptian, Etruscan, Greek, Roman, Byzantine and Medieval periods also are included, as well as pieces from the Renaissance through the early 20th Century. The exhibition will be augmented by a selection of pieces on loan from local private collectors.

The San Antonio Museum of Art is located at 200 W. Jones Avenue, San Antonio. The museum is open Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday, noon to 6 p.m., with a late night opening on Thursdays until 9 p.m.

Admission is $3 for adults, $1.50 for senior citizens, students and military personnel, $1 for children six through 12 years and is free for children five years and under.

Live Theater

"Gollywhoppers," tales of American folk legend, will be performed by the Pickwick Players at 1:30 p.m. tonight through Saturday at Midland Community Theatre. Tickets are $3 at the box office. Adults accompanying children under 12 are admitted free.

"Catawamped Among the Cacti" or They Could Lead Their Horses to Midland Water — But Only A Jackass Would Drink It," the 37th Annual Summer Mummers production, includes movieola sequences liberally sprinkled with jabs at local people, institutions, situations and whatever else author Randall J. Hicks was able to dream up. An olio, a series of short sketches and acts which add up to nonsense, will be staged immediately following the melodrama. Curtain time is 7:30 p.m. tonight and 8 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays at Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave. Reservations may be made by calling 682-4111. The production closes Aug. 31.

"You have to know how to cut things apart and get what you feel the meaning or the passion or the emotion of what the piece is. A pianist does the same thing. He takes the Bach or any piano piece, and he cuts it apart to see what the emotionality is behind it, not just the technique or the time and the beat and the rhythm, but the spine behind it.

"That's the difference between a creative artist who creates the piece and an interpretive artist who performs the piece.

"That's not to say that there's no creativity in creating a role or playing a piano piece because the creativity you bring to it is your interpretation of it, your emotional feeling about it; you create that. But the basic piece comes from somebody who is the creative artist."

He uses ballet as an example and says, "Most ballet is a redoing of an original piece. There are interpretive and creative moments within it, but basically 'Swan Lake' is 'Swan Lake.'"

Spicer feels that enrollment in classes at MC certainly indicates the interest is there.

"When there have been declining numbers in some areas of Midland College, fine arts and drama have been holding their own which is really kind of exciting."

When he looks over the educational programs available for those interested in drama, Spicer feels that "one of the most viable opportunities we have is for young people to be part of the Pickwick Players who are 7th through 12th graders who perform four shows a year, two for the Midland Independent School District and two in the summer. The Pickwicks are one of only two groups of children performing for children in West Texas.

Those interested in finding out about that type of opportunity at MCT can call Spicer at 682-2544. Registration for existing Pickwicks and those in grades one through 12 who want to take theater classes at MCT is Sept. 3-6. Classes begin the following week and auditions for Pickwicks will be held at 4:30 p.m. Sept. 12.

In the fall, 7th and 8th-graders get to see a Pickwick production through MISD and, in the spring, 4th and 5th graders are brought into Theatre Midland through the same vehicle. Often summer productions have been aimed at the same age group.

This July, the Pickwicks had a very successful run of an old favorite, "Cinderella." This particular play, the way it was broadly staged and the fact that it included audience participation, accessed a group, kindergarten through third grade, that had not been explored before by MCT, Spicer says.

"I originally scheduled three performances and sold them out and had to add a fourth performance. It was really gratifying to see that. We had people hanging from the rafters. It was wonderful."

As much as those who become Pickwicks enjoy the experience, Spicer says his students at MC who are interested in drama as a profession are not likely to come from this group even with a drama scholarship available at the current time at MCT.

"These are the most level headed kids that I have encountered anywhere.

"I have four girls right now who are probably the most committed kids I've had in any program anywhere. You ask them what they're going to study and they say, 'Oh, I love Pickwicks. Pickwicks have been my life for four or five years, but I'm going to study real estate,' or 'I'm going to study psychology.'"

Spicer doesn't discourage his students from choosing other careers because he knows how "tough it is to make it in this business." He also feels relatively certain that wherever his former students live, they'll get involved in drama somehow.

"If they don't really have the calling, then I don't try to encourage them very much to do it (drama). I think it's great that I've had the time I've had with them and that they've given me the talents that they've been able to give me. Now, they're going to go on and live a real life. That's great."

Georgia Temple

There's a cure in view if your voice isn't 'you'

Temple

Shocked best describes how I felt the first time I heard my voice on tape. I insisted it wasn't me.

Unfortunately, it was.

Once that was proved to me, the only thing I was left with was the knowledge that the voice coming from the tape recorder didn't sound like I thought I sounded.

Since that time, I have heard many people say, "I can't stand to hear what I sound like." I have heard others say, usually in an attempt to make someone who has just heard his voice feel better, "The way tape distorts your voice."

Michael Spicer disagrees. To the statement, "That doesn't sound like me," he replies, "Well it does. That is what you sound like."

Spicer's official title at Midland Community Theatre is educational theater director. He is known to the students at Midland College as "that drama guy." His job involves teaching theater school at MCT, being in charge of the Pickwick Players, MCT's youth performing troupe, and teaching six drama classes at MC, the total number of drama classes being offered this fall. He also directs 10 shows a year.

In the Spotlight focuses on Spicer's involvement with teaching at MC and MCT. It does not, however, spend much time explaining voice and diction, a course I took under Spicer during the summer of 1982 at MCT, which helped me gain confidence when speaking into a mike or talking in front of groups.

"Good diction, just like good vocal action and control, is a learned activity, like hitting a good forehand or playing golf," Spicer says. "It's a physical activity which can be learned and repeated over and over again to make you better at it."

Training the voice is vital for those who perform onstage. It can make the difference between being understood or misunderstood. It is not always essential for those who do not perform, but rather an asset which can be utilized in the individual's work and private life.

"It's becoming a very popular industry right now," Spicer says of vocal training. " In Atlanta, they have several corporations which don't teach you what to say in front of a group, but how to speak correctly. They're not trying to eliminate your accent, and, in no way can these courses eliminate an accent. There're simply there to help you have more confidence in speaking. That's apparently a coming industry in the corporate market on the East Coast right now."

Two predominant philosophies of teaching voice and diction for the stage in the United States right now are Linklater and Lessac. Both are basically the same.

"They say the reason it's hard to correct any diction problems which you have is because you don't hear yourself from the mouth through the ear. You hear yourself through bone conduction in the head, and, therefore, you get a distorted sound.

"The natural corollary of that thought is how can you correct anything, if you really don't hear yourself. The answer is, you have to learn to physically reproduce the sound with facial structure and breath control and do it consistently everytime."

The summer after Spicer first took the Lessac course, he played a 3,000-seat outdoor theater. "I didn't have any trouble being heard without a mike all summer."

The plays presented were all Shakespearean, which means proper enunciation, vocal control and tonal action, as in the Y-buzz and The Call used by conductors, street vendors, barkers and newsboys, were obligatory.

By the time most individuals have become adults, they have developed lazy speech patterns which may range from dropping consonants, such as saying "exat" for "exact," missing what Lessac refers to as the BD double drumbeat in "stabbed" by saying instead "stabed," to rigid and tight rather than rounded and vibratory use of the vocal sounds.

To learn proper diction and voice control, it is necessary in the beginning to use exaggerated facial movements. As the correct mouth and facial movements begin to replace the lazy ones, the action required to reproduce them becomes natural and relaxed. The process of getting there is a most interesting one and I well remember looking like a fish, doing chants with my lips roundly extended as far forward as possible. The good news is that everyone in the class looks the same.

Another positive element of taking voice and diction is the physical warm-ups required at the beginning of each class period. These exercises are designed to relax the throat and vocal muscles, thus easing the body's tension and making it easier to achieve the desired results. In fact, the body becomes so relaxed, it is impossible not to yawn.

MIDLAND COMMUNITY Theatre has decided what shows it will stage next season, with the exception of its opening production which is the major musical for the season. The offerings will include "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Gin Game," "Fox Fire," "Elephant Man," "Fools," "'night Mother" and "Noises Off."

Although "Elephant Man" was staged two years ago at Odessa's Permian Playhouse, MCT is not concerned that that will take from its audience.

"Although it's a few years old now, it's still an exciting dramatic piece, and it's much more exciting to see it in performance than it is to see it on film because there's no makeup," Spicer said. "It's just carried by the actor using his body and his voice.

"We've found there really isn't that much crossover between the audience from here going to Odessa. We're doing 'Fools' and they're doing 'Fools' next year. I don't really think that's going to hurt either audience."

Still to be staged during MCT's 1985 season are productions of "Greater Tuna," Sept. 6-21; "They're Playing Our Song," Oct. 4-19; "School for Wives," Nov. 8-23; and "Harvey," Dec. 6-21. MCT's 1986 season begins in January-February.

Art exhibit opens Septemberfest

Opening to the public at the Museum of the Southwest, Aug. 29, is a major showing of works by Karl Bodmer.

This exhibit, which will include Bodmer prints recently acquired by the museum as well as Plains Indian artifacts, will be on public view during the museum's annual Septemberfest, set for Sept. 7 and 8. This year's Septemberfest will include booths holding works by 70 juried artists from throughout the United States. Food booths and Kinderfest, booths, rides and attractions for children, round out the activities at the two-day event.

In addition, the fifth annual Septemberfest Lite Run, sponsored by J.E. Borron Clothing, Miller Lite and the Midland Jaycees, will be held beginning at 8 a.m., Sept. 7. The run will begin and end in downtown Midland and will feature a 2-mile and a 10 kilometer all-weather course.

Entry blanks are available at J.E. Borron, Alamo YMCA and Central YMCA. Fees are $8 in advance and $10 the day of the race. Late registration and check-in will be held from 6 to 7:45 a.m. at Centennial Plaza the day fo the race. The first 500 registrants will receive an all-cotton polo-style shirt and the first 600 registrants will receive a Miller Lite painter's cap.

There are six divisions for men's and women's races and awards for the top three finishers in each division. For registration forms or more information contact Danny Norwood, 685-5345 or 682-5544 or write the Midland Jaycees, P.O. Box 135, Midland, Texas 79702.

Hours Sept. 7 are 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. and Sept. 8, noon to 5 p.m. Cost of admission is $2 for adults, and children under 12 are admitted free. Septemberfest is a family event, sponsored by Las Manos, a service organization of the museum. Proceeds from Septemberfest go to the museum.

'Grammy' headache finds relief

ATLANTA (AP) — Construction of a Museum of Recording Arts and Sciences is almost ready to begin, a decade after plans were abandoned to build the facility in Burbank, Calif., and almost three years after Atlanta beat out Memphis, Tenn., for the potential tourist attraction.

"This project has had its moments of extreme pleasure," said Mike Greene, an Atlanta recording studio executive and president of the National Academy of Recording Arts and Science. "But it has been a headache."

Greene persuaded Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young in 1982 to bid for the museum by dangling the carrot of national publicity on the academy's popular annual Grammy awards show.

Young persuaded the City Council to approve the project, emphasizing that the free publicity would aid the city's growing convention industry.

Plans call for at least part of the 1987 Grammy Awards show to be broadcast live from the museum, which is scheduled to open shortly before the spring show.

However, negotiations between the organization and the city of Atlanta, which has promised to build the $5.6 million museum with city-backed bonds and lease the facility to NARAS to operate, have been tedious and fraught with delays.

"We've got it down to four points of contention. I do enough contract work that I know nothing is going to stop this train from coming," said Greene.

The NARAS Foundation, the educational arm of the Burbank-based professional organization for the music industry, began looking in the mid-1970s for a city that would back a museum financially.

A plan to build it in Burbank fell apart when a taxpayer revolt resulted in Proposition 13 and forced local governments to cut back drastically on spending.

Winners survive crash-'em-up Midland derby

Vance Camper of Odessa won $1,000 and a 6-foot trophy when he placed first out of 50-plus cars entered in Saturday's demolition derby, sponsored by the Midland Suburban Lions Club. Camper was driving Car No. 225, a Mercury Marquis.

Other winners included Odessan Tommy Wallace, $400 for second place, driving Car No. 1117, a Dodge; Odessan Dan Nastansky, $300 for third place, Car No. 26, a Crysler Imperial; Midlander Willie Curtis, $200 for fourth place, driving Car No. 000, a Pontiac; and Odessan Jeff Laughlin, $100 for fifth place, driving Car No. 09, a Dodge wagon.

In addition, Sewell Ford of Odessa received a 6-foot trophy for the team with the most cars entered in the derby. Two-foot trophies for driver participation awards went to J.J. McClain, KNFM Radio, and Mark Allen, KWES Radio.

A spectator drag was held in addition to the derby. Winner of that event was Midlander Ed Whitey driving a blue Trans-Am. Whitey received $300 and a 6-foot trophy.

The derby was the second in a series of three being sponsored by the Midland Suburban Lions Club. The next derby is set for 2:30 p.m., Oct. 6, at Twin Cities Speedway, located 15 miles west of Midland on Highway 80.

Entry fee for a car in the derby is $25 per car. Team entries are accepted. No experience is necessary. The derby is open to anyone who wants to test his or her skill in wiping out the competition. Pre-entry deadline is Oct. 5.

Once again, a spectator drag will be held. In this event, those spectators who want to participate enter the car they drove to the track.

Cost of admission is $6.50 for adults, $2 for children six to 11, and children under six are admitted free.

For more information, call J.A. "Monty" Coldwell, a member of the Midland Suburban Lions Club, 683-8541.

Spicer's life

Michael Spicer, right, director of MCT's Pickwick Players, takes the long view of what the group can do for Midland's youth — no matter what role life casts members in. At left, Spicer climbs a ladder to make a point about staging. Blaine McKinney is in the foreground. Stan Williams, center, reacts to Spicer's direction of his part in "Gollywhoppers' " Golden Goose segment.

"In an interpretive art form such as theater, you have to grow intellectually to be better the next time," says Michael Spicer, educational coordinator for Midland Community Theatre and Midland College.

Due to the cooperation between MCT and MC, Midlanders now can take acting classes from the time they are in the first grade through two years of college. MCT offers theater school classes to children in grades one through 12 as well as the opportunity to be part of a performing troupe, The Pickwick Players, and MC offers an associate degree in drama. All of the classes are taught by Spicer, who also directs four Pickwick Players productions, two MC productions and four of the main season productions for MCT. All productions are staged at Theatre Midland.

"If the interest is there, I want to teach the class," Spicer says. "I enjoy teaching."

When registration begins Aug. 27, MC will be offering six classes for the fall, two in acting and one each in voice and diction, technical theater, introduction to theater and introduction to cinema. Class limit is 15 in the practicum courses and around 25 in the two lecture/discussion courses. Those who have participated in the MC program since its rebirth three years ago have included students interested in a professional career in acting who receive their associate degree from MC and then attend a performing arts institution as well as adults who want to act in amateur theater or are interested in building their confidence.

"It's a fun outlet; it's enjoyable. It's something that everybody has observed and had some experience with (through watching television or going to plays or movies). But to learn about it, to examine it, is exciting."

It is also very gratifying to Spicer as a teacher to see those nervous about getting up in front of a group replace their jitters with self control.

"One of the greatest fears that people have is getting up in front of a group of people and speaking," he says. "I think as opposed to some courses that can deal with the same kind of fear, a performance course like acting or voice and diction is better tuned to overcome that kind of anxiety because it teaches you how to control yourself physically, rhythmically and how to deal with different situations as they occur onstage."

Spicer finds the Lessac voice and diction course invaluable. "When you sound good, you feel good about yourself; it's just a part of confidence."

It isn't easy for a director to find the time to teach as well as direct, especially when he is responsible for 10 productions a year.

"Aren't there 27 hours in every day? Eight days in every week? Sixty weeks in every year?" Spicer's inquiry is followed by a laugh. "That's how I do it," he says.

"I've always believed that a big portion of directing is teaching, even when I was working as a professional director in South Dakota," says Spicer, who acts as well as directs. "If you don't teach, then there's no learning process, there's no growth and, if there's no growth, then there's no growth as an actor or an artist. It's not a creative art form; it's an interpretive art form so you have to be intellectually on top of it as well as inspirationally."

Spicer talks about the difference between an intrepretive art form and a creative one, a subject often discussed in his lecture/discussion courses on theater and film.

"A playwright is a creative artist, he takes an idea and creates a story. A writer, a novelist is a creative artist. A composer is a creative artist.

"This is going to rankle a lot of artists, I realize that, but an actor or a pianist is not a creative artist but an interpretive artist."

Each takes an existing piece, much as a director will take an existing play and direct it, Spicer says.

Fall/Winter 1985

Fashion rhyme and reason

1 for the money...

At Texas American Bank's downtown office, Bill Malone, left, assistant to the CEO; Barbara Randolph, center, assistant cashier; and Donald Lee, executive vice president, prove that business wear for fall has a more colorful flair. Fashions from J.E. Borron, Career Girl and S&Q Clothiers.

2 for the show...

For special evenings on the town, the newest designs in formal wear reflect fall '85's accent on color. Bobby and Beverley Alexander, wearing formal wear from Mr. Penguin and Janee's Evening Wear, stroll through the terrace at Midland Community Theatre.

3 to get ready...

Winter ski-wear this year is designed in bright, crisp colors. From left, Martha Jo Reed, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Lassetter; Megan McClellan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J.T. McClellan; and Johnny Clements, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Clements, are ready to hit the slopes. All they need is snow.

4 to go!

Bright colors and plaids are going back to school this fall. From left, Chris Flores, son of Mr. and Mrs. Pete Flores; Heather Ferguson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rick Ferguson; and Jennifer Bishop, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Ferguson, model back-to-school fashions from Kid's Kountry.

For fall 1985 the fashion emphasis is on color.

Men's classic charcoal gray suits are being brightened with a hint of color in yellow or red neckties, said Tim O'Connor, manager of S&Q Clothiers. White collars on colored shirts also add color to the businessman's style.

Two-piece suits are popular, and may be worn with more colorful accessories. "Paisley ties are real strong right now," O'Connor said.

James Borron, buyer for J.E. Borron agreed: "The main thrust in men's suits is still two-piece. ... Styles have not basically changed that much."

Classic suits in two-color or three-color combinations are being shown, and men are wearing more colorful accessories with their business suits. Borron said teal is a popular accent color for men this season.

Men's accessories are showing a relaxation of the "unwritten dress code," Borron said, with shirts available in "almost every color of the rainbow."

Business women are turning to traditional office wear, he said, as seen in a "resurgence of ladies' suit business. Dresses are still very strong. There are a few more options available for women executives as far as what is acceptable at the office."

This season, women in business are wearing more color, more softness. "It's acceptable to wear a linen blouse with a touch of lace under a business suit ... There's a wider range of what is accepted ..."

Business women are usually busy in all aspects of their lives and need clothing "which will take them to quite a lot (of activities) without looking out of place," said Dorothy Rountree, manager of Career Girl. "It has to be versatile without being obnoxious."

Practical but beautiful are the styles for women executives, she said. Blazers this year are being shown in vivid colors, such as teal, purple, black, taupe and a new green.

Though business wear this season is more flexible in color and accessories, wearing a more casual style in the office "depends on individual attitudes as to how you want to conduct business and where you want to go. There are certain standards of dress, even in Midland. If you have aspirations to improve your standard of living in a certain company, you have to look the part," said Borron.

But even business people aren't always in the office. Sportswear and leisure wear for men this season feature sweaters and pleated trousers, he said.

Women also will be wearing more sweaters this season, said Ms. Rountree. Available in novelty knits and several colors, many are made from cotton knit which is "so wearable in this part of the country. It has really become a 12-month fabric."

Skirts — to go with all the lovely sweaters — are designed in different lengths this fall, she said. Denim skirts in boot length, paisley skirts in longer lengths and other styles of long skirts mean boots will probably be popular footwear this fall.

Slacks also are available in a variety of lengths, to suit the desires of the customer.

Please see FALL, Page 2B

FALL

"I think from now on we will see a wardrobe of lengths" as consumers select the skirt lengths that are becoming to them as individuals, "not what some designer dreamed up," Ms. Rountree said.

Athletic wear this season also is sporting more color. Cynthia Brown, buyer for Ski Skeller Sports, said ski clothing is showing more European styling this fall. "Jackets are dropping in length to between waist and hip length. ... Jackets are going to have a lot of different coloration, a lot of muted colors. ... That's the European look."

American styles "still are very bright, but the colors are going deep," she said. Popular colors this season include teal, yellow teamed with gray, royal blue with black and new color combinations.

Women's ski wear has revived an old favorite. Tight-leg pants with stirrups, such as those popular in the early 1960s, will be worn with "big blousy shirts," many made of knit fabric and with dolman sleeves.

Bright, clear colors are important in women's sports clothing, but the colors will be deeper than in previous seasons.

In aerobic wear, the style is "blousy tops with stirrup tights, shimmery, shiny" fabrics such as Antron. Popular colors are gray with purple and light pink. "Probably the most exciting thing" in this season's aerobic wear "is colors and lots of layers," Ms. Brown said.

Accessories will be an important fashion statement in active wear for fall. Clothing from past seasons can be dressed up with accessories from this season to achieve a whole new look. Basic black items "can be dressed up with different colored turtle necks, bandeaus, gloves, sunglasses, sweaters — there are all kinds of things you can do" with the basic pieces.

"YOU CAN really change an outfit up as long as it's a basic color," she said.

Sweaters are a popular style in active wear. "Heavy wool sweaters have gone down in price the last few years," she said.

One new trend for skiers is silk underwear. "It's light-weight pure silk. It's the warmest, lightest-weight thing going," Ms. Brown said. Made of European or Chinese silk, these items can be expensive, selling for about $60 for a set.

New ski gloves are made with a "very thin, light-weight, waterproof" insulating material called Thinsulate, Ms. Brown said, as are some new parkas. "Down parkas are still popular, but Thinsulate parkas are becoming more popular."

For more formal occasions, "people tend to think more festive," said Borron, and are becoming adventurous. "We sell a lot of plaid cummerbund and tie sets ... and occasionally a double-breasted jacket. ... There's a little more room for individual expression." Tuxedo shirts come in several styles, he said.

Men who are interested in purchasing a tuxedo will probably buy black, Borron said, which can easily be given a new look with the addition of accessories. "Occasionally as a second piece he might add a plaid dinner jacket."

Dori Rhodes, former manager of Mr. Penguin Tuxedo Rental and Sales Inc., said tuxedos are available in new styles and different cuts, including one from "Dynasty."

"The colors are basically the same," she said. "A lot of people are doing a lot of mix and match."

Black is a popular color, but now that the fall season is underway, Ms. Rhodes said she expects burgundy and brown to be more in demand.

FORMAL WEAR for women this fall features combinations of bright colors — such as hot pink, royal blue and yellow — with black, said Janee Hargrove of Janee's Evening Wear.

"Emerald green is an excellent color this year," she said.

Popular fabrics for this season include charmuese — similar to a heavier satin — taffeta and lame. Ms. Hargrove described the lame as "so light you can hold a ball gown with your little finger." In addition to the classic gold, silver and bronze lame, the fabric is available in different colors including emerald green, hot pink and aquas.

Velvet is a traditional fabric for fall and winter evening wear, but "West Texas doesn't sell it that well," she said. "It's not cold enough long enough here."

Beading and sequins on silk, and "cracked ice" — tiny beading with a glass-like look, usually used on georgette — are popular designs on formal gowns for fall.

"Ruffles are not as important this season," Ms. Hargrove said. "I find things are now more tailored than in the past."

Shirring is popular, however, and usually emphasises the hips, waist and bodice.

Length varies: "There has always been a need for long dresses, but I am seeing more of the tea-length (mid-calf) than in the past," Ms. Hargrove said.

Ask any parent what fall fashion means, and chances are the answer will be "school clothes" instead of "ball gowns."

Bonnie Goodrich, manager of Kids Kountry, said school clothes might not show tremendous changes from season to season, but "each season draws something big."

This year "plaids are real strong" in girls' fashions, she said, and vests for girls are being shown. Colors are bright, with most of the plaids based on red.

BOYS' FASHION hasn't changed much — "so many boys just like jeans and shirts."

Ester Paredes of Kiddly Winks agreed. "For boys, it's just jeans and tops."

Girls' fall fashions are showing a more adventurous look, she said, in colors of sea green with black and bright yellows, pinks and blues. A patchwork shirt in bright colors is also a favorite this season.

The big shirt so popular in women's clothing is echoed in a big shirt for girls. Stirrup pants and jumpers complete the look. Stirrup pants can also be teamed with matching satin jackets in pink or purple, Ms. Paredes said, and dresses with dropped-waistlines are selling well this fall.

For dressier occasions, girls clothing is often tailored, instead of the ruffled styles girls wore in the past. Boys' dressy wear includes three-piece suits, said Ms. Goodrich.

"Most parents would like a traditional look for their children," she said, but "children all have different tastes." A lot of young girls like the Madonna look, a style made popular by rock star Madonna which features lace mitts, bare midriffs and underwear worn as outerwear, she noted, but "sometimes parents just say no."

However, sometimes the parents say yes. "Mothers are buying what the kids are going to wear," Ms. Paredes said, because children don't wear what they don't like.

In general, children's clothing is "beginning to look more like adult clothing all the time," Ms. Goodrich said.

Furs fashionable this fall

Copley News Service

Undeniably, fur is fashion — style and elegance wrapped up warmly for fall winter.

But that wasn't always the case. Up until the early 1800s, fur was still a rather shapeless garment, more of a robe or a cape than a coat. The beautiful shimmering effect of precision-sewn pelts came about only after pelts were cut and draped as if they were cloth.

Now there are fur styles catering to every taste.

Designer Fernando Sanchez, long known for his "street" looks, presents large shapes and generously cut silhouettes. Wide sleeves and deep armholes are present throughout his collection for Revillon, a renowned, worldwide fur company.

Sanchez furs also make a major statement with very square shoulders, longer lengths and attached hoods. Trims, toggles and ties add special courturier touches to the collection.

In addition to the classic minks, Sanchez has chosen many fox, lynx and other long-hair furs for daytime chic.

Sanchez furs also are spectacular by night. The sexy black evening coats and jackets are jeweled, embroidered or trimmed with mink. The glamorous white group of fox and mink are oversize and luxurious.

Hubert de Givenchy also lends his internationally renowned design genius to a Revillon collection.

With an eye for classicism and elegance, Givenchy respects proportion and detail. Wide sleeves and shoulders lend a generous oversize feeling to the entire collection and new collar shapes, particularly the dropped-notch, are introduced. This season Givenchy also has developed new techniques of working with patterned furs and knits.

Rich, lush looks are manifested in a two-toned mink peacoat and a sensational fox-edged mink jacket. Additional trims such as sable and white and black fox adorn Russian broadtail, white mink and Alaska seal to present as refined, sophisticated daytime look.

Givenchy also sees the return of the hooded coat and jacket for both day and evening. Dramatic impact is made with an oversize hooded coat and a striking black poncho with silver trim.

Lingerie remains sensuous

Copley News Service

Sensuous, seductive, scintillating. Underpinnings for today's woman allow her to feel feminine, no matter how tailored or businesslike the external appearance. Teddies, chemises, tap pants and camisoles may run from demure to femme fatale, but always in sensuous fabrics that feel marvelous against the skin.

Traditionally, luxurious feel has been associated with expensive price tags and special laundering. But fiber producers have developed yarns that enable textile mills to produce lush fabrics with soft drape and texture that still retain the practical advantages of nylon, according to a spokeswomen for Allied Fibers.

In addition to providing the feel of luxury, lingerie creates a look of romance and nostalgia when lavished with ribbons, laces, designer signatures and richly detailed trims. The color range — available from delicate pales to rich jewel tones — offers something for any taste.

Sleep and loungewear also are designed for romantic appeal with detailing such as ruffles, ribbons, lace, embroidery, appliques and quilting.

Lounging pajamas that are as appropriate for at-home hostessing as for sleeping feature blouson jackets or button-down, lace-trimmed blouses. A lacy bed jacket teamed with a pajama bottom in a matching color becomes a seductive at-home ensemble.

Gowns are in ankle or nightshirt lengths, softly draped with shirring, gathering or drawstring ties.

Copley News Service

It has been said that the hit TV series "Dynasty" brought glamour out of the closet. Nolan Miller's luxurious designs, seen by millions of viewers who tune in each week, have subtly influenced the way America dresses. Assuredly, his costumes for Joan Collins and Linda Evans helped to kill off the once rampant preppy fad — could you see Alexis or Krystle in oxford cotton shirtdresses?

Other designers also have recognized their customers' need to dress up more for everyday life. One example is Morton Myles' "Compris" collection of elegant, refined, distinctly feminine suits — actually, one- and two-piece dresses with related jackets. Bob Mackie and Carolina Herrera echo that sentiment with fluidly cut exquisite suits and related separates in brightly colored cashmere, flannel, tweed and gabardine. These suits are beautifully shaped and darted with strong shoulders and nipped-in waists.

To underscore the dress-up-for-day message for fall, accessories provide the punctuation — long, chunky ropes of pearls, stones and clanging gold-tone coins. Hats or hoods to crown sleek, short or pulled-back hairdos. Dark sunglasses. Belts, wide or skinny — an interesting buckle is a must. (Robin Kahn has some of the best.) Gloves to complete the look — long, short or gauntlet-style in stretchy wool jersey or leather. La Crasia, the official glover for musician Prince, has pioneered the return of the glove to the American mainstream with whimsical, theatrical, brightly colored designs that appeal to every woman's taste and pocketbook.

CNS Photo

This luxurious silk and angora knit dress from Royal Silk drifts from daytime into night with just a change of accessories.

As women are dressing up for day, they will be dressing down for evening. Assuredly, sequins and bugle beads are here to stay, but several prominent designers are subtly turning down the volume. Gone are the ruffles of earlier years. Gone are big, puffy skirts and sleeves. Instead, there are simple, beautiful dresses that are simply beautiful.

Carolyne Roehm, former assistant to Oscar de la Renta, has a spectacular 80-piece collection composed mostly of evening wear. Granted, many of her spectacular designs are paved with beads, but her best designs are the simplest — long, soigne slivers of black velvet or midnight wool crepe draped on the bias with narrow rhinestone shoulder straps.

Mary McFadden's signature dresses — pristine, elongated, mushroom-pleated columns — returned this season enriched with intricate, embroidered borders and opulent details borrowed from ancient ecclesiastical church vestments.

Michael Katz, a young painter who has turned to fashion design, paints broad strokes and splatters of color on silk crepe de chine dresses for what he calls "classic statements of celestial beauty." His designs are futuristic yet opulent, curvacious and boldly, exuberantly colorful. Paisleys, plaids and blocks of color were all fair game for his talented paintbrush.

Giorgio Sant'Angelo presented a group of diaphanous evening separates that can be worn in a multitude of ways. They also can be stuffed in an overnight duffel bag and emerge looking fresh.

Watches in time for fall

Copley News Service

The common wristwatch, once an instrument solely for telling time, today reflects everything from monetary status to a personal sense of style.

In short, watches have become high fashion for women. Each season new lines are introduced with the same ceremony as the clothing lines of popular designers. In fact, current fashion trends have a particularly strong influence on watch design and color.

According to John L. Davis, president of Longines-Wittnauer Watch Co., the focus in watch fashion this season is on the bracelet and band.

According to Walter Lehmann, president of Omega Watch Corp., "This season, bracelet watches are the perfect complement to feminine, gently-tailored clothes."

A watch with a gold dial in a gently curving bracelet is the best way to balance the wider, more rounded shoulders and nipped-in waists designed for this fall. Soft fabrics that skim the body and shorter hemlines are a far cry from the androgynous look, so a "borrowed-from-the-boys" or sports watch won't keep time with the new look.

This year's watches feature an array of linked bracelets with intricate designs and hand engravings. These designs are being incorporated onto the dial of many of the fine jewelry watches, enhancing their style.

Currently sweeping Europe is the use of enamel on watch cases and bracelets, a fashion trend expected to be popular in the United States, as well. Leather straps also are "in" for the coming season, and companies are using exotic leather in different colors as alternatives to metal bracelets for many of their watches. Other watches have bands of luxurious fabrics in plaids and paisleys.

What about updating last year's tailored timepiece? Add an elegant alligator strap, said Lehmann. It will look more formal and will combine easily with ornate and baroque jewelry.

Pearl jewelry returns to glow again

Copley News Service

After two decades of being relegated to fashion's back drawer, pearls making a comeback.

Says Norman Lowenstein, president of Marvella Inc., which has been making simulated pearls for 75 years: "Just a few years ago I remember women coming into my showroom saying, 'Who needs pearls? My grandmother wears pearls.' Now I see those very same people coming in bedecked in pearls."

Helen Fortunoff, head of the Fortunoff chain and its chief jewelry merchandiser, commented: "When designers returned to — shall we use the word elegance? — in clothes, they found that the one thing that's never wrong is pearls. When Ralph Lauren, for example, did a little blouse and featured it with pearls, all of a sudden young women realized that pearls were for them."

Old outfits rejuvenated for new year

By KIM MARCUM
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — There is plenty of good news for consumers tired of starting their wardrobes from scratch season after season. More than any other time in recent memory, fall is a season of items. The total looks are important, but they are built against a background of basics that many of us already have invested in. By adding a few fresh pieces, the classics take on new class.

Some items to look forward to this fall — a tapestry jacket, a Navajo-patterned sweater, a sleek pair of stretchy, stirrup pants. Even some of those specialty touches from a few years back have gained new vitality. With all the hoopla over faux furs and pony prints, the animal patterns from three years ago are worth pulling out of the closet once again.

For more of the fine points that define fall '85, read on:

— SPECIAL FABRICS: The passel of prints that started cropping up during the summer takes an elegant turn for fall. This time around, the ones to watch for are Victorian paisleys, antique English tapestries and Raj-inspired brocades. Deep jewel tones lend extra plushness to their rich textures and Old World edge. Those special fabrics are a key ingredient to the ruffle-throated, Amadeus spinoffs and aristocratic dandies.

— FORM-FITTING SHAPES: The volume has been toned down on fall's silhouettes. They are no longer big and mannish, but rather slim and curvy. Daytime suits reflect that shapeliness with cinched belts and narrow skirts tapering down from broader-than-ever shoulders.

— UNDER WRAPS: Coats and jackets claim more attention this season than ever before. With bold colors and catchy details (such as oversized, asymmetrical lapels and low-slung waistlines), they add extra polish and pizazz to the fall outlook.

— FOREIGN FLAIR: The latest foreign accents around are spoken subtly — with a little detail here, a little detail there. They lend new twists to simple approaches. There is Cossack-inspired garb with bright layers and an ethnic ruggedness; India spinoffs as well as dressed-up princely splendors; even high-necked Mao jackets from China.

— LEATHERS AND SUEDES: In the past, leathers and suedes have been merely tokens — a handful of tanned skins to break up the parade of woolens. This season they gain new respect. The tailored Italians glitz them up with slick, patent finishes and artfully embossed curlicues. Along Seventh Avenue, the emphasis has been on a new range of shapes for skins. The latest hides are cut into everything from circle skirts to shirtdresses as well as the more predictable outerwear pieces such as high-necked jackets.

— FAKE FURS: For once, faux furs are in for both the environmentalists and the fashion hounds. Fakes have lost their cheap tackiness and gained prestige this season. Countless designers from Claude Montana to Norma Kamali have hunted down just the right spots and stripes to accent collars, cuffs and accessories.

Paisley: Prince of patterns

Copley News Service

Paisley truly might be called the prince of patterns. It was the pride of maharanis in ancient India and the rage of rich and royal 19th century Europe. But never in all its centuries of history has the mysteriously alluring seed pod — an ancient symbol of fertility — enjoyed such a powerful reign as this fall.

One of the most exciting aspects of paisley is its appropriateness in all areas of fashion. The little pod is the ideal for the trend in sparkling jewels — real or fake. And there's paisley on umbrellas, neckties, scarves, embossed belts and even delicately flocked hosiery.

But nowhere is there more creative expression than in fall ready-to-wear clothing. Designer Diane Von Furstenberg, for example, does a long, oversize jacket in a light, rustic wool tweed splashed with dark floral paisley. A coordinated paisley silk jacquard skirt swirls out in pleats below. Von Furstenberg also likes paisley silk jacquard for dinner dressing.

"Paisley is the perfect background for glamour," she said. "It's exotic all by itself." And indeed, she does it sexy and side-draped with deep velvet edges or in a smock dress of light beige with big purple paisleys joined to form hearts.

In daytime dressing, designer Alfred Sung has turned not only traditional wool challis prints in blouses and skirts, but also to innovative intarsia paisley sweaters and subtleties such as solid cream or burgundy blouses with paisley gleaming in raised jacquard.

Kenzo, one of the first designers this spring to pick up on paisley with his men's vests and abstract paisley ties from Paris, continues with paisley for fall in women's jacket linings and shirts in his Album collection.

For evening, one of the most splendid paisleys comes from fashion designer Akira. With characteristic drama, he covers black silk gowns with a large pod print patterned after an antique tapestry. Clasped at waist or shoulder is one big pod of gold or silver embroidery. Akira's paisley silk jacquard dinner dresses also are stunning.

No one does paisley more elegantly than the house of Christian Dior. A wool challis blouse with a generous shawl to fling over the shoulder is done in a traditional pattern of rich burgundies and can be belted with a golden buckle of two sculpted pods. And paisley is a distinctive accent throughout Dior menswear, particularly in ties, scarves and belts.

The place where it all began, Kashmir, was the center of Eastern trade routes in the 14th and 15th centuries. One of the most prized articles of trade was the local handmade shawl. It took several years to design and weave, using the soft hair of the "tus" goat, which we now call cashmere.

CNS Photo

Paisley swirls inspired by an antique tapestry look dramatically new on a cocktail dress by Akira.

The typical design was a slender floral with a heavier base of roots or a vase climbing to a point that leaned over slightly at the top. When filled in with flourishes or outlined, it became a seed pod.

After centuries of being quietly admired, the Kashmir shawl became the sensation of Napoleonic Europe.

'Dynasty' star leads return to heady sophistication of hats

By DOROTHEA T. APGAR
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Joan Collins, the luminous Alexis of TV's "Dynasty" fame, made a spectacular, if brief, appearance here to introduce the new Joan Collins line of hats, in the first public presentation of the millinery collection that bears her name, created by Ralph Rucci for the Baltimore-based firm Design 22, Ltd.

The collection grew out of a deal engineered by Design 22 Ltd. president Lynn Deutschman, who flew to Los Angeles last spring with Baltimore attorney George Pappas to work out details with the dark-eyed sex symbol.

Joan, who always wears a hat at least once in each "Dynasty," episode, seemed quite taken with the styling of the hats which emphasize wide, flattering brims on shiny white or black straw, often slashed with a bold color insert.

"I love seeing my litte hats," she said at the end of a well-produced, leisurely fashion show at the posh Pierre Hotel.

"I've always been interested in hats. I do a little television show," pause, as everyone tittered, "and I wear a few hats on that. So when Design 22 came to me I was delighted to be creatively involved with hats. Hats, you know, cover a multitude of sins, like when you have to have your hair done."

President Lynn Deutschman, who was not wearing a hat, concurred. "She (Collins) really does have input. We try to have a different approach to millinery," she said. "We were trying to create very dramatic, but very wearable hats.

"Our hats are not rigid, they are flexible in shaping, the kind of hat Joan Collins would wear, and yet the kind an ordinary American woman would wear. We do not want to design rigid hats."

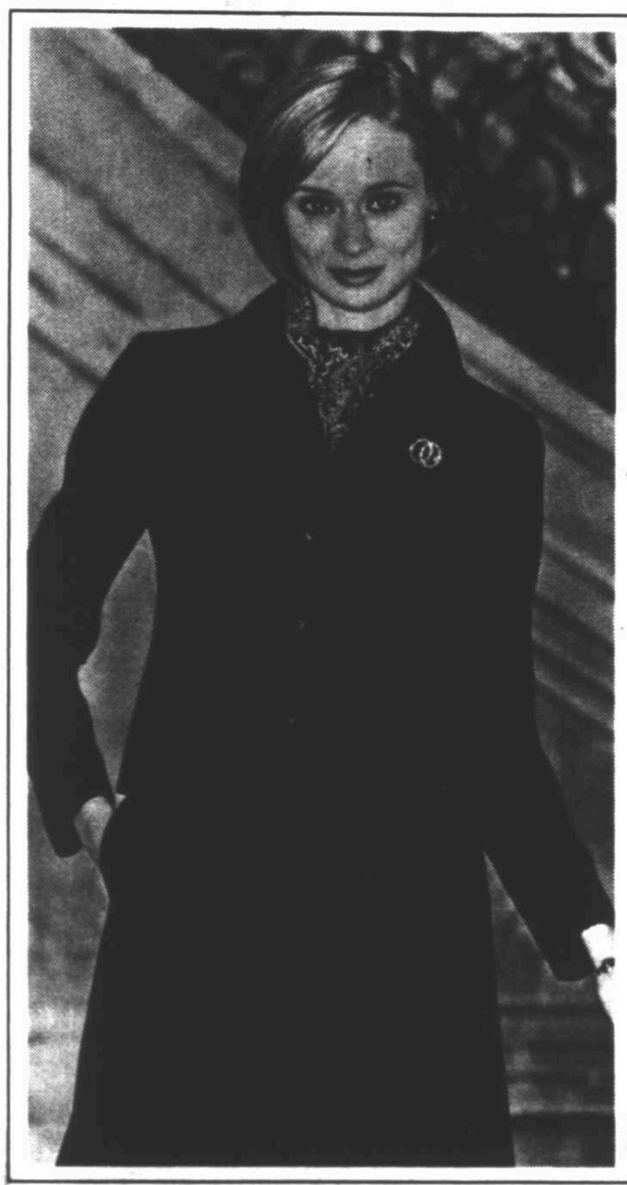

The decidedly glamorous audience that crowded into the beautiful Cotillion Room at The Pierre, applauded the hats as they enjoyed a luncheon of thin strips of prosciutto ham, cold poached salmon, and fresh asparagus tips with white wine. At least half the women got the message and opted to wear hats.

Among those who watched and took notes were Arlene Dahl, resplendent in navy and white polka dots with an oversize navy straw with red ribbon band, Gladys Solomon, wearing one of her "at least 300, my dear," Adolfo suits, in ivory with a small matching hat, Monique Van Vooren in yellow silk with a black hat sporting a yellow cabbage rose.

Among the outstanding hats in the Joan Collins collection were a shiny black straw that resembled a Gaucho hat, with touches of taupe suede on the crown, a marvelous 1920's style straw hat with large brim turned up in front and down in back, rimmed with a wide band of palest blue gauze, and a superior black straw pillbox touched with bronze inserts on the crown.

The hats are feminine and sophisticated, epitomizing the glamour of Alexis, the ultimate "Sophisticated Lady."

"SHE'S WEARING MY FAVORITE CORBIN AGAIN."

You have a way of knowing what's appropriate, and every bit you. There's an assuredness to your choice of Corbin clothes. And an underlying personality to what you wear that's hard not to like. Your style says a lot about you, yet not so much to tell the whole story. And the honesty of it all he finds disarming, and very appealing.

Jewelry becomes bigger, bolder

By CAROL ROBERTS
Copley News Service

Seventh Avenue is returning to classic silhouettes and tailored dressing for fall. As clothing pares down, accessories are rising to the occasion with bigger, bolder excitement.

One of the most popular of these accessories? Costume jewelry.

In a national survey, Monet Jewelers, a leading costume jewelry manufacturer, found that nearly 50 percent of American women aged 18 to 59 purchase costume jewelry for themselves.

Women prefer costume jewelry to the real thing because it is affordable and innovatively designed, updating basic wardrobes inexpensively.

With the accessory spotlight on costume jewelry, Monet notes the most visible trends for fall:

— Polished and dull-finish metals in gold and silver tones team up with brightly colored stones to create earrings, necklaces and bracelets.

— Earrings in unique geometric shapes, multi-link chains and gold-coin motifs reflect the still visible menswear influence.

— Pearls, always a classic accessory, take new direction for fall when combined with silver, gold and gemstones. Innovative color trends include soft tones of champagne, mauve and light gray. Color gains further impact with bright beads in bold shapes touched with accents of silver and gold.

— For evening, the allure of the '20s and '30s returns. Fabrics such as silk, crushed velvet, embroideries and tapestries are highlighted by jewelry in rich enamels, opulent pearls, bold metallics and art deco shapes.

This fall, fashion makes a simple statement punctuated with classic styles from the past. And costume jewelry can put the exclamation point on the season's silhouettes.

Bakelite jewelry hotly sought by collectors

Associated Press

The latest Depression-era item to turn "collectible" is Bakelite jewelry, which may be worth 100 times what it cost in the 1930s.

Bakelite costume jewelry that sold for from a few cents to a few dollars during the Depression, according to an article in the July issue of Connoisseur, last year went for $35 to $200 an item at a Philadelphia art gallery.

Bakelite, the first entirely man-made material, was named in 1908 by chemist Dr. Leo Baekeland, who converted aviscous resin made from carbolic acid (phenol) and formaldehyde into a permanently hard, heat- and moisture-resistant solid.

The material, which cannot be remelted, was the first permanently molded plastic. It was intended for electrical insulation, but Baekeland recognized its potential and called it "the material of a thousand uses."

By the early 1920s, Bakelite Corp. was advertising that its phenolic moldings could be used for steering wheels, shaving brush handles, light plugs, teething rings, pipe stems, overcoat buttons, billiard balls and jewelry novelties.

A catalogue said Bakelite jewelry was available in "colors that equal clear amber, jade, ruby, amethyst or emerald."

Jewelry was made by professionals and by amateurs who got their instructions from publications such as Popular Science Monthly.

American phenolic jewelry was bold, colorful and often playful. Much of it was designed with realistic themes — such as miniature edibles like red peppers, pineapples, even pickles; leaves and flowers; animals that ranged from often-used dogs and horses to rare kangaroos and dragons.

The exuberant designs were not aimed at the youth market — Jean Schlumberger, Salvador Dali, Jean Cocteu and other artists in the 1930s and 1940s designed jewelry for couturier Elsa Schiaparelli in shapes from insects to lobsters.

Most plastic jewelry was intended for dime-store shoppers, but by the late 1930s fine department stores were offering wellmade items.

Sportswear gets winning workout

Copley News Service

Sportswear has grown from the glorified sweat suit of the '70s to a more fashion-conscious definition of playing for sport. Clothes that a few years ago were considered strictly for the gymnasium now are considered true fashion, and how we dress may well determine how we play the game.

Although fleece sweatshirts and running shoes still may comprise the acceptable basics of workout apparel, the clothes we wear for spectator sports have taken on a new significance. A renewed interest in golf, tennis, polo and sailing have exerted a sense of "quiet elegance" into the mainstream of fashion, where the all-American quest for excellence in physical performance now is paralleled by a desire to look and feel one's best. This new emphasis on fashion in sports can help determine the attitude brought to the game — playing it seriously, playing it for keeps, is today's sports style.

"Dressing for sports today is taken as seriously as dressing for work," said Dr. Maurizio Gucci, chairman of the renowned Italian firm. "The way you look and feel can well determine how you compete — the standards you set for yourself. And how you see yourself as a competitor can well determine the outcome of the game. If you dress like a winner, you feel like a winner. That's the biggest part of winning."

For a winning look, sports style dressing harkens the spirit of excellence by emphasizing silhouette, tailoring, color and fabrics in ensemble dressing, according to Gucci.

Ensembles, like these Caprolan nylon running suits, win the season.

Copley News Service

Running never has been more glamorous, thanks to the new emphasis on fashion in the latest collections of active sportswear.

Prints with panache. Stripes with sizzle. Color, color, color. Today's running wear is setting new records in fashion excitement, breaking away from its staid past in designs styled in nylon tricot knits for the ultimate in performance as well as appearance.

Action-oriented fashions for the serious runner must meet certain basic performance requirements, according to Kevin McGrath, a marketing manager for Allied Fibers, makers of Caprolan nylon. Garments must fit comfortably without binding and be flexible enough to accommodate stretching and running without splitting seams. They also should be lightweight, durable, machine washable and quick drying.

Nylon, which has an excellent strength-to-weight ratio, is one of the most popular fabrics used for running gear, especially knitted constructions. Thanks to modern technology, nylon also offers a complete range of styling and dyeing versatility so that high fashion goes hand-in-hand with function.

New styles take their cues from ready-to-wear fashion, ranging in design from romantic to disco.

Glamour stems from daring to be different, Ewing says

By RHODA AMON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — With her white satin pajamas flowing from enormous Joan Crawford shoulders, Jean Harlow hair dyed to match, and round, red Rita Hayworth lips, diamonds twinkling on her ears, designer Gene Ewing is right out of a 1930s Hollywood glamour magazine. Modern Screen, perhaps. Or the old Vanity Fair before it was absorbed into Vogue in 1936.

But behind the art deco facade lurks a with-it personality of the '80s. Her white satin pajamas? They are a cotton-backed rayon that can be tossed into the washing machine. Her big shoulders? They're removable pads attached by Velcro.

Her message: You don't have to be rich to be glamorous. You do have to dare to be different.

"I came upon some old issues of Vanity Fair, and, oh, how wonderful that old Hollywood was," said the Los Angeles-based designer. "We need more of that casual elegance today, that beauty and glamor. It's so boring the way everyone dresses alike today."

Even amid the dressed-to-kill celebrities and near celebrities at a spring celebration in the Abraham & Straus Brooklyn store, it was easy to spot Ewing, who had come to accept a "Spirit of LA" award. She was the woman behind the white point d'esprit lace veil that connected to the frames of her granny glasses. "I have to wear glasses, and I want to be glamorous, so why not combine them with a '30s-style veil?" she said. "Clothes should be fun. If I were the president of a bank, I would dress seriously during the day, say in a nice, two-peice linen suit, like Katharine Hepburn dressed in those '30s movies about career women. But at night the hair would come down and the glamor would come on."

LAT Photo

Designer Gene Ewing, center, wearing a pajama outfit of white, washable rayon satin, is surrounded by models after her fall show in New York City.

EWING, A former model, returned to New York a few weeks later for the showing of her fall-winter collection, which, even blase observers had to agree, was like no other. There were whimsical hybrids such as her "jupe" pants (half skirt, half pant) and half-straight, half-pleated skirts. And there was an eye-boggling kaleidoscope of patterns, textures and colors: pink, emerald, orange, burgundy, violet and miles of gleaming Hollywood white.

It's not easy being different. Her husband, her design associates, her California therapist all agree that Ewing is a free spirit, an artist who must be given free rein. Hard-nosed fabric manufacturers are sometimes harder to convince. "If you can't buy 100,000 yards of fabric, they won't even talk to you," Ewing said. She found a small mill in Deauville on France's Normandy coast where "they are dying to work with someone original." The mill produced the angora yarn that, combined with cotton in an American mill, formed a jacquard knit patterned with her designs of skiers, skaters, spindles and graphics.

The fabric, which resembles wool, is the workhorse of her fall collection. She fashions it into coat sweaters, riding coats, long skirts and her favorite, pantsuits. "Pantsuits are this century's major fashion classic," she said. She combines it with fragile lace blouses for her "sexy secretary" look. The jackquard also lends itself to snug robes and apres-ski pants with enclosed feet like baby's sleepers.

Though she has been in the rag trade on and off since the '50s, it is only in the past nine years, she said, that she has been completely free to do her own thing. That's when she and her husband, Bert Sunkin, launched their own company called Bis.

"I DIDN'T want to wind up like some designers who are owned by other people. We're not owned by anyone," Ewing said, "and we don't knock off anyone. We can afford to be original. Once you have enough to eat, there's no need to make a lot of money."

But Ewing and Sunkin are not likely to run out of caviar and Champagne in their Malibu beach house. Bis has grown into a $30-million-a-year enterprise that Sunkin, a Brooklyn-born clothing manufacturer, guides with an experienced hand. He supervises the production in 46 plants, while Ewing flits around to their three showrooms in New York, Dallas and Los Angeles, and to fabric and knitting mills where her designs are carried out. Besides the Bis sportswear line, she introduced a Gene Ewing label three years ago. This includes more sophisticated day and evening dresses.

Both Ewing and Sunkin grew up in the clothing business. His father and uncle started the Sun-Rose and Phil-Rose sportswear companies. Her family founded the Z.V. Pate and the W. & H. clothing stores in her native North Carolina. Her English-born mother, Inez Hooker, was a hat designer.

After majoring in art at William and Mary College in Virginia, she came to New York in 1954 to design box covers for the Procter & Gamble soap product Duz. Soap boxes were not to be her destiny. A job with the Ford Model Agency brought her back into fashion, and she headed for Paris to study designing, then on to Madrid to apprentice with famed designer Balenciaga.

Back in New York, and later in Los Angeles in the '70s, she doubled as a designer and saleswoman for fashion houses. She was importing "hot jeans," she said, when she met Sunkin, who asked her to market his Barnaby line.

"I LOOKED at it and said I couldn't rep anything so terrible — no style, no originality. Before I knew it, I was redesigning his line. He asked me to rep it for 7 percent. I said 10 percent or nothing."

She got her 10 percent and Sunkin in the bargain. He dissolved Barnaby after their marriage in 1978. "I'm still amazed at what comes out of her brain," he said with a smile, "but in all my years of manufacturing, I never met anyone so professional."

Among Ewing's recent creations is her patented California Sun-Washed Wrinkled Rich Denim, a lightweight four-ounce denim (denim is described by weight per square yard) which she dyes into 24 colors. Also in the stores are oversized linen blazers at $100 to $150, loose, swinging linen duster coats ($250) and long trumpet-shaped skirts ($76) that fit snugly to the knee, then flare dramatically. Godets, an old dressmaker device, create the circular effect.

She still fits her designs on her own size 8 figure. "I know my own shortcomings — my hips are narrower than most people's," she said. To accommodate the woman with bigger hips, however, she also cuts skirts, pants and jackets in a "medium" that is generous enough to be picked up by Forgotten Woman, a retail chain that caters to larger sizes. This is profitable proof, she said, of another of her credos: You don't have to be slim to be glamorous.

Ewing's styles can include a lace veil on granny glasses and an outsize satin coat.

Men seeing red in neckties this year

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — More than 100 million of them are sold annually and they are, according to the designer John Weitz, "the only free form of personal expression a man has, except for cologne."

They, of course, are neckties, and the favorite expression of the moment, according to informal on-the-street surveys, is red running neck-and-neck with yellow.

Red, says Donald Davies, neckwear buyer for Brooks Brothers, has been the store's best-selling tie color for the past year. At Saks Fifth Avenue, a store spokesman reports that red has "always" been the best seller.

At Macy's New York, the men's fashion director, Bruce Binder, says that yellow and red have outpaced the more traditional navy. Red, says Gerald Andersen, executive director of the Neckwear Association of America, is the color most men associate with power. It is said to be the top color in neckties in Washington.

No such theories abound concerning yellow, except that so many Manhattan men seem to have realized how terrific a sunny-yellow necktie looks with a sky-blue shirt and a tan.

This was the second summer in succession that neatly patterned yellow neckties were popping up all over town, from Wall Street to the Upper East Side.

"The thing about yellow is that it's not an easy color to keep clean, and by the end of last summer my yellow tie was a mess," Bill Shaw, a graphics designer, was saying the other afternoon as he paid $25 for a new yellow tie with a tiny geometric pattern at Paul Stuart.

His old yellow tie? "It's had it, I'm afraid, and it's hanging on the far side of my tie rack where the old ties go."

WHICH BRINGS us to the question: Why do so many men, even those with ties to spare, seem to wear the same ones over and over again?

"Men prefer wearing what they are comfortable and familiar with," says Davies of Brooks Brothers, "and unless a man lays out his wardrobe the night before, he'll tend to wear what he's worn recently." Davies says that he himself owns only 20 ties and wears most of them. Richard Merkin, an artist, writer and one of the town's most elegant dressers, owns 300 ties, of which he wears 25.

Dr. Roger B. Granet, a clinical assistant professor of psychiatry at the Cornell University Medical College, explains it this way: "Man has a quest for structure and order, and after a rambling sleep and the uncertainty of facing the unfolding day, he has a yearning for what is known and refined. People, in general, tend to repeat what is safe and certain."

As for all those seldom-worn cravats languishing in all those men's closets, they might very well have arrived in a gift box. Department stores report that the return ratio of neckties is low and that they are consistently among the least-exchanged items, perhaps because a man cannot claim it is the wrong size.

"A tie," Granet says, "is a symbol of what happened when one has worn it, as well as of who has given it." He adds that it is a particularly masculine symbol.

IN THE suburbs, according to the Neckwear Association of America, which represents the country's more than 200 tie manufacturers, women buy 65 percent of the men's ties sold; only a few years ago, women were buying 85 percent. (Binder says that ties that carry designer labels are usually bought by men.) In Manhattan, it seems, men do most of their own tie-buying, most frequently at lunch time.

The ties they are currently purchasing have an average price range of $12.50 to $35. Their average width is 3¼ inches, although younger men prefer narrower ties. That width is expected to stay around for a while, even though it has been said that ties get wider during periods of prosperity.

As a sort of compromise, perhaps, the "spaced neats" — printed foulard patterns — are going to be a bit larger, even at Brooks Brothers, where changes, if any, are slow and subtle.

Weitz, one of the few menswear designers known to design his own prints, says he believes "the time is well overdue for men on TV to give up their maniacal affection for red" and that the next popular shade will be silver-gray. At the moment, the least-wanted color is brown.

ONE MORE thing, whatever it means. According to Granet, when people are admitted to a psychiatric hospital, they are frequently asked to draw a house, a tree and a person. When patients draw a figure wearing a tie, Granet says, it may indicate a suppression of feelings and perhaps an unwillingness to communicate these feelings.

By contrast, when patients draw a figure without a tie and with an open collar, they may be representing themselves as having a greater openness and a willingness to express feelings.

But to the man in the street, ties are a pure and simple expression of feelings — a flag — as well as a symbol of the 9-to-5 grind.

Fashion eyewear not overlooked

Copley News Service

Accessories play a key role in fall fashion, adding detail and spark to clothing. And eye wear, to enhance a wardrobe, should be chosen to coordinate with the season's colors and styles.

Most people have a complete collection of shoes, but just a single pair of eyeglasses. However, "just like shoes, belts, scarves and hats, eye wear can set the tone for fall ensembles," said Barton Levoy, president of Tura Eye Wear.

"Eye wear is an accessory to be chosen according to color — it should complement our wardrobes."

Dollar declines

LONDON (AP) — The dollar drifted lower in early European trading today as investors looked to new government figures to confirm worries about the American economy. Gold prices gained.

Dealers said currency trading was moderately active as the dollar moved downward amid widespread concerns that industrial output in America was tailing off.

Two key figures were due out later in the day — durable goods orders, a barometer of industrial demand, and consumer prices.

But dealers said the dollar was already week following the fizzling of a brief rally Tuesday, when an upward revision in gross national product figures failed to impress investors.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar slid to a closing 236.22 yen from Wednesday's 237.45. Later, in London, it was quoted at 236.10 yen.

Other dollar rates in Europe at midmorning, compared with late Wednesday:

—2.7488 West German marks, down from 2.7800.

—2.2490 Swiss francs, down from 2.2757.

—8.3975 French francs, down from 8.4690.

—3.0950 Dutch guilders, down from 3.1260.

—1,844.50 Italian lire, down from 1,862.00.

—1.35350 Canadian dollars, down from 1.35625.

The metal opened in London at a bid price of $336.70 an ounce, compared with late Wednesday's $335.50. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $337.60.

In Zurich, the noon bid price was $337.75, up from $336.00 late Wednesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose the equivalent of 84 cents to close at a bid $337.36.

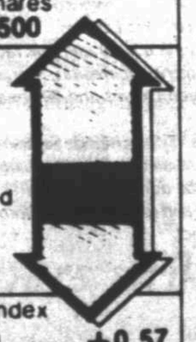

In New York Wednesday, gold rose $3.30 to close at $338.90.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.29 an ounce, up from Wednesday's $6.28.

Midland cost-of-living rises 0.5 percent

Rents fall after three-month climb

From Staff Reports

Midland's cost-of-living increased 0.5 percent during July, for an annualized inflation rate of 1.7 percent, according to figures released by ClayDesta National Bank this morning.

Generally, transportation, utilities and housing cost declines were offset by increases in grocery items, medical, clothing and restaurant costs.

While Odessa experienced a lower cost of living increase (.04 percent) in July its annualized inflation rate remained higher at 4.5 percent.

Basically, here's how the cost of living stacked up for Midland in July:

■ Housing costs in Midland fell 0.7 percent in July, following three months of increases. Lower rents and maintenance costs in the Midland area were given credit for the drop. Over the past six months, a 1.7 percent increase has been shown in Midland housing costs.

■ Lower gasoline prices led to a 0.2 percent decrease in transportation costs for the Tall City. Over the past six months, Midlanders' transportation costs have decreased 3.8 percent.

■ Both Midland and Odessa saw a 0.1 percent decrease in residential utilities costs during the past month, led by a small decline in gas rates. All other utilities remained stable. Midland utility bills have become 3.2 percent more expensive in the past six months.

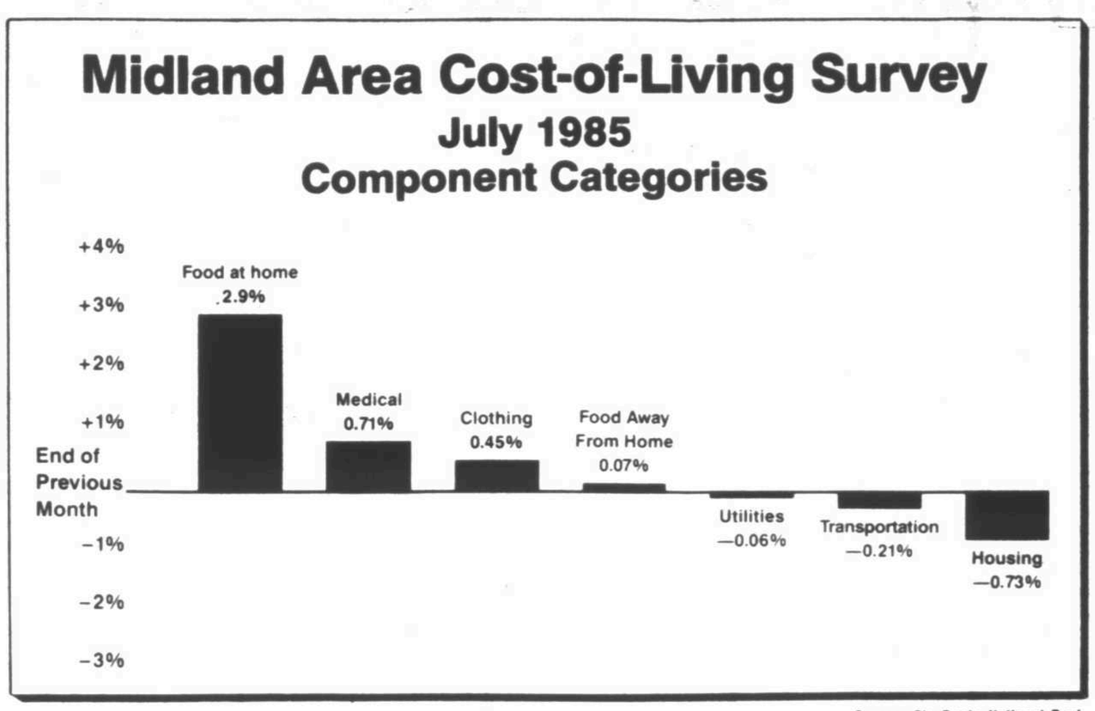

■ Midland experienced a sharp increase in food items at the grocery store during July. Midlanders paid 2.9 percent more at the grocery store during the last month, while Odessans paid 2.5 percent more. "This increase is not expected to start a trend," said ClayDesta National Bank president and Chief Executive Officer David Jones.

■ Lower prices for both wines and beers were offset by a 4 percent increase in shelf items and a dramatic 64.6 percent increase in the price of soda in Midland. "The war between the soft drink companies appears to be dying down for awhile, and prices are going back up to where they were before the introduction of the new Coca-Cola," Jones said. Produce prices rose 3.6 percent last month, while meat costs increased 3.6 percent.

■ Medical costs grew 0.7 percent last month, marking the third straight month medical costs have increased in Midland. The city saw slightly higher prices for over-the-counter drugs and slightly lower hospital fees. Over the past six months, medical costs in Midland have risen 1.8 percent.

■ The cost of clothing rose a third consecutive month in Midland, led by higher prices for children's apparel. A slight 0.1 percent increase has been measured in clothing costs in Midland over the past six months.

■ Midlanders eating out last month paid 0.1 percent more, especially for meals prepared with fish. Over the past six months, the cost of eating out in Midland has fallen 0.1 percent.

July inflation rate holds at 0.2 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — A slide in energy prices and only a small increase in food costs held the retail inflation rate to 0.2 percent in July, the government reported today.

Food prices, which declined at an annual rate of 0.8 percent during the previous three months, inched up by 0.1 percent last month.

Shelter costs, which include both renter and homeowner expenses, accounted for nearly three-fourths of the increase in July. Those costs have been rising at an annual rate of about 6 percent so far this year, and went up an additional 0.6 percent in July.

That was offset somewhat by a slowdown in the index for fuel and utilities, which are a component of the broader housing index, which was up 0.3 percent.

Energy costs — finally beginning to follow a general decline in world crude oil prices — were down. Gasoline prices fell 0.4 percent while fuel oil prices declined 1.3 percent.

The effect of the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index for July was to add further confirmation to analysts' long-standing predictions that inflation for 1985 could be the lowest in more a decade.

The July increase came on the heels of identtical back-to-back 0.2 percent rises in May and June.

AT&T announces plans to eliminate 24,000 jobs

From Staff and Wire Reports

It will be at least a month before it is known how proposed massive employee layoffs by AT&T's Information Division will affect workers in Midland and Odessa, according to an AT&T spokesman.

Communications workers are demanding immediate job-security negotiations with American Telephone & Telegraph Co. after AT&T announced plans to eliminate 20 percent of the jobs in one 117,000-employee division.

Robert E. Allen, chairman of the Morristown, N.J.-based Information Systems unit, announced the retrenchment to employee groups in a nationwide telephone call Wednesday and said market conditions could require additional cuts.

AT&T said it hoped to save hundreds of millions of dollars each year by eliminating approximately 24,000 jobs at the communications products unit to make the highly competitive business more profitable.

Approximately 54 workers are employed by the AT&T Information Division in Midland and another 24 in Odessa, according to Larry Norwood, AT&T spokesman for the division in Texas. Norwood said it was too soon to know what the exact impact would be on the operations in Midland, but that those employees considered surplus employees would be informed of their status by September 15. He said every effort would be made to find employment for the employees in other divisions, and some would be offered incentives for early retirement, but in the end some would be eliminated from the payroll.

Ed Smith, operations manager for AT&T Communications Division in Midland said he expected no employees to be eliminated from his operation, which employs approximately 35 in Midland and 100 in Odessa. To the contrary, Smith said he had job openings in the long distance operations in Midland and may be able to employ some employees from the Information Divison if and when they are eliminated and if they qualify.

"Sales of new products at Information Systems are up across all of the competitive markets we serve," Allen said. "Now we must strengthen our ongoing efforts to improve profitability."

The Communications Workers of America, which represents about 190,000 of AT&T's 360,000 employees, said in Washington that it was outraged. The union's executive board demanded negotiations on transfers of employees whose jobs are in jeopardy, pensions and existing contract provisions on job security.

"They're cutting people for profits — short-term profits," said Morton Bahr, the union's president. "They're laying off their skilled craft workers, who are their greatest resource, and in effect handing skilled workers to their competitors."

Brian Fernandez, an analyst for Nomura Securities in New York, said, "It's sad to see the leading technology company laying off people. These are trained people. It's not what the Japanese do."

Bahr complained that managers were not being asked to sacrifice as much as the company's workers.

About 30 percent of the positions being eliminated are in management, AT&T said.

"By its recent action, AT&T is creating an almost insurmountable obstacle to successful negotiations" on a contract next year, Bahr said.

He said the union would stage a national day of protest Aug. 29 to focus on the job cuts and a growing trend toward contracting out union jobs and foreign production of telecommunications products.

AT&T is establishing a factory in Singapore to make residential telephones that had been produced in Shreveport, La.

Tandy Corp. profits plunge more than $92 million in fiscal year

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Despite Tandy Corp.'s profit plunge of more than $92 million, industry analysts say they expect the company to make that up from its recent expansion in the home entertainment market.

Smarting from a computer-market slump, Tandy reported net profit of $189.1 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, down nearly 33 percent from the $281.9 million the year before, company officials said Wednesday.

That marks the company's first annual profit decline since 1978, but some industry anaylsts are predicting better times for the parent corporation of the Radio Shack retail electronics chain.

In response to sagging profits, Tandy has diversified into brand-name retailing since the first of the year. Earlier, it had sold only its own brand products.

"They have many exciting new products," said Don F. Sinsabaugh, who follows the company for the Swergold Chefitz investment banking house in New York.

"The video cassette recorder market will continue to grow. In audio, compact discs are strong, and cellular communications will have strong growth in the next couple of years as prices come down," he said. "Tandy will get its fair share of that."

Despite the earnings dip, Wall Street reacted favorably to Tandy's earnings Tuesday. Company stock rose $1.25 per share in trading on the New York Stock Exchange to close at $34.125.

Garland Asher, Tandy's director of financial planning, said the latest earnings were about what Wall Street expected.

"There was no negative surprise like the third quarter," he said. "And after the excellent sales gains we reported in July, a lot of analysts feel the worst is behind us."

Revenue figures looked a bit brighter for the Fort Worth-based computer firm: It reported total revenues for the year of $2.84 billion, up slightly from $2.78 billion for the prior year.

Ford plans white-collar reduction by 1990

DETROIT (AP) -- Ford Motor Co. plans to reduce its white-collar workforce by 9,540 jobs — a 20 percent cut — by 1990 in an effort to cut costs and improve efficiency, company officials say.

The company hopes to achieve the reduction through voluntary termination and early retirement plans, Peter Pestillo, vice president of employee relations, said Wednesday.

"There could still be some layoffs," Pestillo said. The nation's No. 2 automaker has 47,700 salaried employees in its U.S. automotive and diversified product operations.

"There is no great purge ... no impending drama. We feel we might be overmanned in some areas, and we've asked our people to look at plans to reduce salaried personnel in the area of 20 percent by 1989-1990," Pestillo said.

White-collar employment at Ford peaked at 85,300 in the boom year of 1978 and was 68,400 last year, company officials said. The new program is not likely to affect the 20,200 white-collar workers in Ford's financial, aerospace and electronics operations, said David Scott, executive director of corporate relations.

The company plans to begin offering a voluntary termination plan to mid-career salaried employees, including a lump-sum payment and career counseling, Pestillo said. It also will offer employees 45 or older an early retirement plan which normally starts at age 55.

Ford hopes to start a trial program soon at its Rouge Steel and Troy-based tractor operations, he said. "Those are both troubled businesses that could be facing large-scale personnel reductions."

Auto analyst Ann Knight of Paine Webber Mitchell Hutchins said productivity increases have reduced the personnel needs of automakers, including Ford.

Synfuels to draw up contracts for three major projects

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Synthetic Fuels Corp. agreed in closed session Wednesday to draw up contracts providing about $660 million in price supports and loan guarantees for three major synthetic fuels projects, sources said.

The contracts — the largest of which commits about $500 million to a troubled oil shale conversion project sponsored by Los Angeles-based Unocal Corp. — are scheduled to be ready for signing by the second week of September.

The action comes in the wake of strongly worded congressional criticism that the corporation had embarked on a "spending spree" and that the agency — targeted for extinction by the House — should make no further funding commitments until the Senate has time to act. The Senate, currently away on recess, will return Sept. 9.

Just hours before the synfuels board made its decision, chairman Edward Noble read a statement denying that the corporation had embarked on any "rush to judgment" to sign contracts before Congress could cut off its funding.

"Any commitments the corporation might conclude over the next weeks or months will be ... tough and based solely on merit," Noble said.

In addition to the $500 million for Unocal's plant in Parachute Creek, Colo., the tentative contracts provide $150 million for Geokinetic Inc.'s oil shale plant in Seep Ridge, Utah, and about $60 million for the Greenwich Oil Co.'s heavy-oil project in Forest Hill, Tex., the sources said.

Karen Hutchinson, a spokeswoman for the corporation, confirmed that the synfuels staff had been directed to prepare the contracts and said the numbers quoted by the Los Angeles Times were "about right." She said additional details would be provided at a news conference Thursday morning.

A letter sent Wednesday to Noble by a dozen congressmen and senators said that the 312-111 House vote last month to rescind nearly all synfuels funding — in effect, abolishing the corporation — was an "emphatic vote of 'no confidence'" in the corporation's program and performance.

"This is an unwarranted giveaway by a desperate agency and a crude usurpation of administrative authority," said Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, a principal author of the letter. "It is now up to the Reagan administration to stop this renegade agency from wasting billions of taxpayers dollars."

Letters sent last week by House Democrats and Republicans appealed to President Reagan to "place an immediate hold on the corporation's spending spree."

The $500 million figure for Parachute Creek is substantially lower than the $2.7 billion figure the corporation agreed to tentatively in a "letter of intent" signed in December 1983.

Woman seeks damages for sexual assault

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A woman who was sexually assaulted during a job interview is seeking $1.1 million damages from a box maker and its president, who was given a year's probation in the attack.

The Holyoke woman, who was not identified, said in a lawsuit she was interviewed Dec. 14, 1984, for a laborer's job in a private room with Eugene Tick of Ellington, Conn., president of Harlow & Tick, said her attorney, Mark Beauregard.

"He got very aggressive," Beauregard said Wednesday. "In her opinion, there was a connection between getting the job and cooperating. He originally restrained her from leaving. She eventually made her way out, but nobody came in to assist her."

The suit was filed Monday in Hampden County Superior Court.

Brick-maker merges with Australian firm

HENDERSON, Texas (AP) — A merger between a local firm and an Australian-based company will create the world's largest brick-making operation, officials say.

Henderson Clay Products Inc. announced Tuesday it will sell its brick-making operation here with Boral Limited Co. of Sydney if the Australian government gives its expected approval Monday, said Homer Bryce, Henderson's chairman and chief executive officer.

Bryce, who said the $40 million sale will make Boral the world's largest brick maker, made the announcement in a meeting of 300 employees from the two Henderson plants.

He said the transaction will have little effect on them and that their future was a prime consideration during negotiations.

Southeast businessmen promote their area

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Businessmen from three Southeast Texas counties have formed two corporations to promote their area and diversify the region's economy, a spokesman said Tuesday.

Former Beaumont Mayor Maury Meyers said businessmen from Jefferson, Orange and Hardin counties formed Southeast Texas Inc. to sell the the rest of the country on the region's high points.

The same group of businessmen also formed Southeast Texas Capital Inc., which Meyers said plans to buy a profitable business from elsewhere in the country and transplant it in Southeast Texas.

Meyers said local businessmen hope to raise $10 million for the Southeast Texas Capital project by selling shares in the corporation.

"This differs from venture capitalists who invest seed money in risky business ideas because we will only be going for profitable enterprises with a proven track record," Meyers said.

The corporation has not targeted any specific industries, he said.

Canyon gas discovery finaled in Schleicher

A San Antonio firm has completed a Canyon gas discovery, staked a location northeast of a 5,800 ft. dry hole, in Schleicher County.

PETROPOOL, INC. potentialed the No. 1 Charlotte Autrey et al for a calculated absolute open flow of 215 Mcfd through perforations 5,537 to 5,542 ft. The operator acidized the interval with 1,000 gallons of acid and fractured with 7,500 lbs. sand.

Permitted as a 6,000 ft. test, the well was drilled to 5,711 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 5,585 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,355 ft., include the Wolfcamp at 2,232 ft., Palo Pinto at 4,762, and the Strawn Lime at 5,530 ft.

The discovery is located 970 ft. from south and 2,423 ft. from west lines of Section 84, blk K, GH&SA survey, Abstract 907, five and a half miles southeast of Eldorado.

Petropool as suggested a field designation of Autrey (Canyon) for the discovery.

Lea County plugback nets Atoka discovery

A recompletion in Lea County has yielded a modest Atoka gas discovery.

THE STONE PETROLEUM CORP. re-entered the No. 1 Javelina Basin Unit, a wildcat Morrow producer located approximately one mile west of production in the Fairview Mills field, and plugged back to the Atoka formation for a potential of 101 Mcfd on a 16/64 inch choke.

After cementing the Morrow perforations 15,154 to 15,420 ft., the operator perforated the Atoka formation 14,594 to 14,604 ft. and treated the interval with 2,500 gallons of 7.5 percent HCL acid.

Original depth was 15,825 ft. with a 5 1/2 inch liner hung from 13,099 to 15,820 ft.

On ground elevation of 3,334.9 ft., formations tops include the Delaware at 5,320 ft., Cherry Canyon at 6,190, First Bone Springs at 9,300, Wolfcamp at 12,378, Atoka at 14,598, and the Morrow at 14,878 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from north and 1,980 ft. from east lines of Section 17, T25s, R34e.

No information on Morrow production was available.

East Tennessee to build pipeline

BRISTOL, VA (SWN) East Tennessee Natural Gas Company announced today plans to build a $20 million pipeline in Virginia for the delivery of natural gas into its system.

The gas will be supplied by Equitable Resources Energy Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Equitable Resources, Inc., from its extensive reserves in Virginia. The two companies signed a contract Aug. 8 for the sale to commence no later than January 1, 1987, for a period of 15 years.

East Tennessee will build the 33 mile, 12-inch diameter pipeline from Nora to Abingdon, Virginia. A 3,600 horsepower compressor station at Nora will be included in the construction plans. This pipeline will deliver the new supply of gas into East Tennessee's system near Abingdon.

East Tennessee said that government approval would be needed by April 1986 in order to construct the pipeline and have it ready to commence deliveries by November of that year.

Equitable will produce the gas in its fields in southwest Virginia and deliver the volumes to East Tennessee at the new facility near Nora. Equitable is expected to spend approximately $40 million in well development and constructing gathering lines.

In making the announcement, Thomas R. Bell, president of East Tennessee said, "The construciton of this pipeline makes new natural gas discoveries accessible to major markets in the southeast.

"In addition, it is a new source of natural gas which will provide a dependable supply to attract new markets," he added.

Although initial deliveries will be up to 35 million cubic feet per day, the new pipeline will be capable of transporting greater volumes and opens the possibility of providing storage services.

East Tennessee Natural Gas Company is a subsidiary of Houston-based Tenneco Inc.

East Tennessee serves more than 100 incorporated communities and approximately 175,000 consumers in its market area. Its headquarters are in Knoxville, TN.

Partners Oil hires financial advisor

Harold J. Muckley, chairman and E. Ralph Daniel, president of Partners Oil Company today announced the engagement of the firm of Underwood Neuhaus & Co. Incorporated to act as the company's exclusive financial advisor in developing the various financial alternatives available to the Company. Underwood Neuhaus will pursue sources for equity funding, merger or other restructuring.

Daniel stated that "a successful conclusion of a corporate financing transaction would, in addition to strengthening the company's financial structure, enable it to take better advantage of opportunities available to the Company in the areas of property acquisition and exploration."

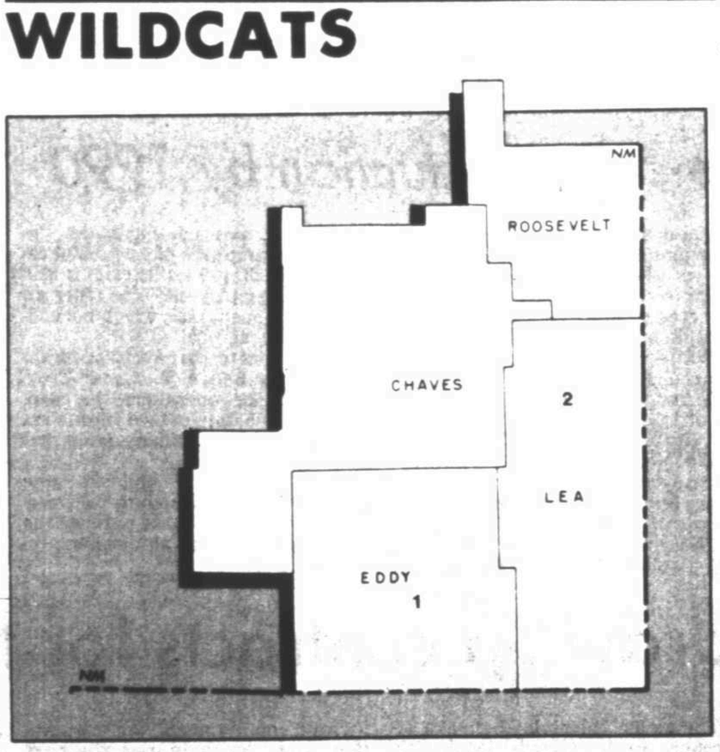

Partners filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Law on April 12, 1983. The Company's Plan of Reorganization was approved by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court on October 29, 1984, and became effective on December 24, 1984.

Since emerging from Chapter 11, the Company has continued its drilling program in the Arkoma Basin as well as the development of proven locations on its Gulf Coast properties. Additionally, the Company has successfully secured investors for exploration projects in Mississippi and Oklahoma.

Underwood, Neuhaus & Co., Incorporated is a leading regional investment banking firm headquartered in Houston, Texas.

Partners Oil Company ("Paroco") is a Houston, Texas headquartered oil and gas exploration, development and producing company owning interests in oil and natural gas properties in several states. Areas of exploration concentration are onshore and in state waters of the Gulf Coast regions of Texas and Louisiana, Oklahoma, Mississippi and the Arkoma Basin.

EL DIECISEIS DE SEPTIEMBRE FESTIVAL

U.S. Senator Phil Gramm

Ask me about the big International Celebration that will take place in Los Dos Laredos.

I'll tell you that the weekend festival will be an extravaganza that will create a unique atmosphere with that special Tex-Mex flavor.

Ask me and I'll tell you that where the Rio Grande bends and forms a crescent of land on the border with Mexico, there lie Los Dos Laredos, two communities known for their warmth and great "Fiestas."

The "El Dieciséis de Septiembre" Festival Celebration, which will take place September 12-15, celebrates the independence of Mexico in the spirit of friendship and "ambiente" that exists in Los Dos Laredos.

Come by and join our celebration. Join us at our parade, 10K race, bullfights, music festival, fashion show, golf tournament, charreadas, mariachi festivals, matinees and let's not forget, Nuevo Laredo Downs and the great Expomex festival that begins September 6th.

Metropolitan Life agrees to buy Century 21 Real Estate

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

IRVINE, Calif. — Metropolitan Life Insurance said Tuesday that it has agreed to purchase Irvine-based Century 21 Real Estate, the nation's largest real estate franchise company, from Transworld Corp.

Both companies refused to disclose the price, but industry analysts have previously estimated the value of Century 21 at $125 million to $200 million.

The transaction would complete Transworld's plan, which was begun last year with the spin off of Trans World Airlines, to restructure and expand as a food and lodging business.

In turn, New York-based Metropolitan Life would gain a nationwide network for selling its financial services, including home mortgages and homeowner insurance.

According to officials of both companies, Transworld last Friday beat out two other contenders in sealed bidding and Monday afternoon signed the sales agreement. The proposed sale still must be approved by regulators and Transworld shareholders at a meeting expected in mid-October.

The proposed alliance between the real estate franchiser and Metropolitan Life "looks like a marriage made in heaven," Century 21 President Richard J. Loughlin said.

With about 6,500 independently owned franchise offices and 75,000 sales agents in the United States, Canada and Japan, Century 21 had sales of $64 million in 1984.

The company's franchises sold 550,000 homes last year, or about 11 percent of those that changed hands in the United States last year. Century 21's earnings accounted for more than 10 percent of Transworld's pre-tax operating income of $173 million last year.

Loughlin said that Metropolitan Life does not intend to change Century 21's staff or management. Loughlin and Gary Cooper, Century 21's executive vice president of operations, have agreed to stay on, he said.

The affiliation with Metropolitan Life is expected to help Century 21 increase its market share in the fiercely competitive real estate brokerage business by giving it access to a variety of financial services. In addition to its real estate sales business, Century 21 started offering mortgages, insurance and real estate syndication activities in 1983.

But the cost of attempting to build a financial services system from scratch began to hurt Century 21's earnings, which fell from $27 million in 1982 to $20 million last year.

The Century 21 purchase is the latest of several for Metropolitan. Within the last 18 months, it has acquired CrossLand Capital in Los Angeles and MetFirst Financial in Oklahoma City. Both companies are in the mortgage business.

"Century 21 will serve as one cornerstone of a full range of financial relationships between homebuyers and Metropolitan," John J. Creedon, president of Metropolitan Life, said in a prepared statement.

Charles J. Bradshaw, Transworld's president and chief operating officer, said that after his company announced its interest in selling Century 21 last May, it received inquiries from 80 potential buyers, but in the end only three submitted written offers. He refused to name the other two bidders but said they also are financial service companies.

Bradshaw said that he would not disclose Century 21's purchase price until proxy information is filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission early next month.

He said that proceeds from the sale may be used to finance acquisitions such as Transworld's pending $92.5 million purchase of Chicago-based Interstate United, which provides food to institutions, stadiums and state parks, or to repurchase 4 million shares of Transworld stock on the open market.

INFLATION

Those two monthly increases marked a return to the typical pattern of the past year following healthy monthly increases of 0.5 percent in March and 0.4 percent in April — two spurts fueled by sharply higher energy costs.

Retail prices are up at a 3.5 percent annual rate for the first seven months of the year and have climbed 3.6 percent since July a year ago.

The department reported earlier this month that wholesale prices rose 0.3 percent in July. That means wholesale prices are up at an annual rate of 1.4 percent so far in 1985, but just 0.9 percent for the past 12-months.

Inflation came in at 4 percent in 1984 after a 3.8 percent increase in 1983 and 3.9 percent the previous year.

The department provided these additional details on consumer price activity for July:

—Grocery store food prices increased 0.1 percent, their first rise since February. Although the overall food and beverage component also was up in June, that increase was attributed mostly to higher costs for restaurant meals and alcoholic beverages. The grocery store price turnaround was due mostly to sharply higher costs for fresh vegetables, which were up 6.5 percent.

The cost of meals eaten outside the home rose 0.1 percent. Alcoholic beverage prices held steady.

—Within the shelter component, both homeowner and renter costs rose 0.6 percent.

—Overall transportation costs, which include gasoline and other fuels, declined 0.2 percent. New car prices rose 0.1 percent, but used car prices fell 1.2 percent.

—Medical care costs rose 0.5 percent in July, slightly less than the 0.6 percent average monthly increase for the first six months of the year.

Within that component, physicians' fees rose 0.6 percent, but charges for hospital rooms declined 0.4 percent.

—Clothing and upkeep costs declined 0.2 percent, largely because of a 0.8 percent drop in the cost of women's and girls' apparel and a whopping 2.1 percent decline for baby clothes.

—Entertainment costs rose 0.5 percent, the same as June. That reflects another sharp increase in prices for magazines and books.

All the monthly changes are adjusted for normal seasonal variations.

Llano Estacado Oil, Gas Show set for October in Lea County

The Llano Estacado Oil and Gas Show will open the first biennial exposition on Thursday, October 10, and will run through October 12.

This show will be a cooperative effort of the Lea County Chambers of Commerce, the community of Tatum and the Lea County Fair Board.

The show has booth space for 200 exhibitors from oil and gas related industrial firms. The show is intended to encourage business and professional interest in the petroleum industry.

Oil and Gas Show Borad Chairman Keith Spradlin says organizers hope the show will help oil and gas people share "ideas and experiences."

"The third day will be open to the public," he added. "We hope it will give a better understanding and appreciation of the oil and gas industry. We hope some local educational institutions will be among the exhibitors," he said, mentioning the possibility that students and other members of the public will be recruited to educational programs and eventually to jobs within the petroleum industry.

The Lea County Fairgrounds buildings can hold about 200 exhibits in booths of several sizes, Spradlin said. In addition, there will be outdoor space for up to 50 exhibitors.

Booth rental fees will include one electrical circuit, with additional electrical and stet hook-ups available at the exhibitor's expense. Moving service, night security and janitorial services will be provided.

Show organizers expect the event to attract exhibitors from the world-wide oil and gas companies, as well as local Lea County and Permian Basin industries. Spradlin says the show's Board of Directors hope to accommodate the larger companies as well as to help highlight and support local companies within their own market areas.

Booth reservations may be made and more information obtained by contacting the Chamber of Commerce of Hobbs, Lovington, Eunice or Jal, New Mexico, or the Lea County Fair Board in Lovington, New Mexico. Displays may be put in place beginning Tuesday, October 8 from 8 am. to 6 pm. and must be completed by 6 pm. on October 9.

Data processing knowledge can help in advancing a career

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Data processing knowledge can be useful in advancing a career. At least Rita Eusanio, 26, who works for Price Waterhouse, the big accounting and management consulting firm, has found that to be true.

Upon graduation from New York's Long Island University as a psychology major in 1980, she planned to earn a master's degree in business administration at Temple University, Philadelphia.

Instead, friends advised her to get work experience before graduate school. After finding a job as an administrative assistant in the continuing education unit at Price Waterhouse, she soon talked her way into the firm's special program, Management Consulting Services-Electronic Data Processing Consultants' Training Program.

Then she worked on the firm's general ledger, a computerized system, and more recently has been assigned to working with microcomputers developing software.

This fall she will take time off to start at the University of Chicago Graduate School of Business, a top business school, after retaking her Graduate Management Admission Test and getting a mark of 690 only five years after scoring 540.

"Perhaps the improvement in my GMAT score came because of the quantitative experience I had with Price Waterhouse," she said.

The firm will not pay tuition for her two-year MBA stint, but it will give her part-time work that she can do on a home computer. "That will help finance my studies," she said.

Daniel Constantine, 27, is another graduate of the firm's training program. Last week he had just returned from almost three years in Juneau, Alaska, where he worked with a team of 25 Price Waterhouse employees and five state employees automating the payment system for the State of Alaska so that it can keep track of expenditures more closely.

"I stayed beyond the end of the project because I wanted to see the thing run," he said.

A graduate of Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, N.C., and a native of Atlanta, he found that he enjoyed Alaska's cold climate despite his Southern background.

Although he majored in accounting and took exams to become a certfied public accountant, he wanted to broaden his experience at Price Waterhouse, which is why he chose the course. "I felt I needed more studying than just accounting," he said.

Despite little experience with computers, he found that asking questions helped him keep up with the class. "Some other people in the class seemed relieved when I asked questions," he commented, and he learned that many students in the program had liberal arts backgrounds.

As for the future, he said: "I will stay in data processing. It is less structured than accounting and more creative. Now I would love to go overseas."

Clare Antonucci, 26, another graduate of the Price Waterhouse program, laughingly recalled how she heard about the course. During college at Long Island University, she worked part time for a company that leases knives to butchers and chefs. "An external auditor for the firm suggested I see a personnel manager at Price Waterhouse," she said.

She began the program in the summer of 1979 during college and then returned to get her bachelor's degree. Since rejoining Price Waterhouse, she has obtained an MBA degree in accounting but has remained in the electronic data processing field.

"Now I work in the national office on general ledger packaging," she said. "I like it better than accounting. I am also involved in data security."

Recently, there have been arrests of teen-age computer whizzes who have been able to break into corporate and hospital computer systems by testing various combinations of letters until they find passwords.

"The biggest danger for a company as far as computer security goes comes not from the hackers but from disgruntled employees," she commented.

Geolograph Pioneer introduces new reservoir measurement system

OKLAHOMA CITY — Geolograph Pioneer, Inc. has introduced the 8400 reservoir measurement system as an effective alternative for the accurate recording of downhole pressure and temperature data when the use of an electric wireline becomes undesirable due to safety or other operational considerations.

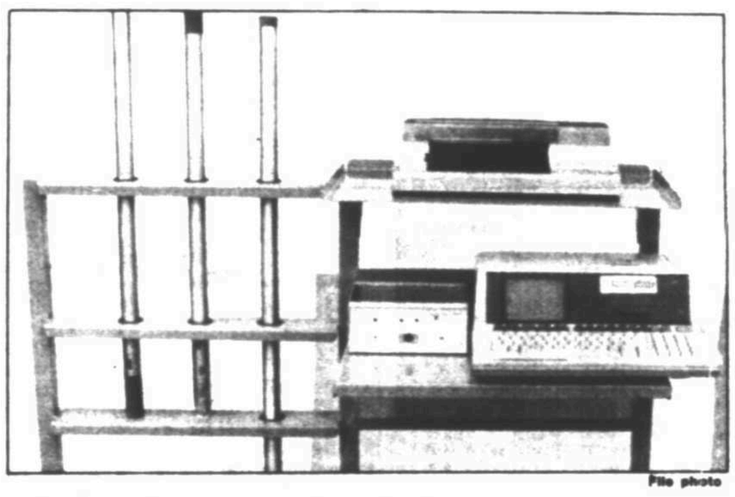

The 8400 system is the latest in a series of reservoir logging systems designed and manufactured by Valstar Oilfield Products and marketed in the U.S. by Geolograph Pioneer.

At the heart of the 8400 system is a versatile self-supporting memory module. This module can be coupled with strain gauge transducers to increase robustness, with quartz capacitance transducers to increase accuracy and sensitivity, or with the Hewlett-Packard 2013 B quartz pressure gauge to give the operator increased utilization of existing equipment.

The memory module also offers third channel capabilities where the incorporation of a third logging tool is necessary to satisfy customer requirements.

Memory module programming and data retrieval is accomplished through interfacing with RS-232 compatible micro computers. The memory module is capable of recording data in two modes: delta time and delta pressure.

In the delta time mode the memory module can store up to 16,000 data points. In this mode the operator also has the advantage of being able to preset pressure tolerance which will enable the 8400 system to shift into a faster scan rate in the event of unanticipated pressure changes.

Non-residential construction permits down

First-quarter 1985 dollar volume of non-residential construction permits for the Midland area was sharply lower than the 1984 quarterly average, but the volume of residential construction was relatively unchanged.

According to W.L. Born, assistant research economist with the Texas Real Estate Center at Texas A&M University, non-residential construction permits totaled $1.7 million in the first quarter 1985, while 1984's quarterly average volume was $4.7 million. Residential construction permits totaled $7.6 million in the first quarter 1985 compared to the 1984 quarterly average volume of $7.3 million.

"The dollar volume of residential permits increased steadily during the past three quarters while the voume of non-residential permits declined. There have been no two-to-four family or five-or-more family dwelling unit permits issued during the past two quarters," Born explained.

Compared to 1984's first quarter, the 1985 first-quarter Multiple-Listing-Service (MLS) sales volume, and the average sales price were slightly lower. The first-quarter 1985 sales volume was $20.6 million compared to $22.3 million in the first quarter 1984. The average sales price of a home sold in the first quarter 1985 was $85,100 compared to $93,400 in the first quarter 1984.

Statewide, the first-quarter 1985 dollar volume of non-residential construction permits was $1.42 billion—relatively unchanged from the 1984 quarterly average of $1.47 billion—slightly lower than the 1984 quarterly average of $2.1 billion.

Compared to 1984's first quarter, the statewide 1985 first-quarter MLS sales volume and the average sales price were slightly higher. The first-quarter 1985 sales volume was $1.7 billion compared to $1.5 billion in the first quarter 1984. The average sales price of a home sold in the state during the first quarter 1985 was $88,500 compared to $83,700 in the first quarter 1984.

First-quarter 1985 net savings volume at Texas S&L's totaled $2.9 billion, sharply lower than the 1984 quarterly average savings volume of $6.9 billion. Loans closed totaled $5.8 billion in the first quarter, slightly higher than the 1984 quarterly average lending volume of $5.5 million.

Pipefitters strike against steel firm continues

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — A strike by about 50 union employees of Bethlehem Steel Corp. entered its third day today.

Bethlehem officials refused to disclose the size of their total plant workforce and how many employees reported for work Wednesday.

The striking employes, who are members of Pipefitters Local 195, walked away from their jobs Monday night after turning down management's offer to lower wages by about $1.50 an hour, said union spokesman Pete Ellis.

The average pipefitter earns about $12 an hour at Bethlehem, Ellis said, adding that the work there is sporadic and is determined when the yard receives a ship for repairs.

Ellis said Bethlehem management also proposed eliminating the contract's seniority clause when the contract expires in 1989.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Company-owned treasury shares stay dormant

By BILL DOYLE

Q. From time to time I read about this company or that buying back some of its stock. I am puzzled as to what happens after that. Is there then still some stock? If a company buys back all its shares, who owns the corporation? Surely a corporation can't own itself.

A. You're very right on that last point. There always has to be some shares "outstanding" — owned by stockholders. Stockholders own the company. In a very unusual situation where XYZ Corp. has only one share of stock outstanding, the owner of that share would be XYZ Corp.'s sole owner.

Doyle

When a corporation buys back some of its stock, that reduces the number of shares outstanding and increases the percentage of company ownership each share represents.

Let's say UVW Corp., which had 20 million shares outstanding, buys back 10 million shares, leaving it with 10 million outstanding shares. Each of the 10 million remaining outstanding shares represents twice as much ownership in UVW as each of the 20 million shares did before the buy-back.

Only outstanding shares are entitled to receive dividends and to vote at stockholder meetings. After shares are repurchased by a company, they become "treasury shares" and stay dormant, as do "authorized but unissued shares" — stock never issued and that has never been outstanding.

A company can use treasury shares, as well as authorized but unissued shares, for a variety of purposes, such as buying another company, paying stock dividends and having shares available for dividend reinvestment, employee stock option or share purchase programs. Any of those uses, of course, results in the issue of stock and increases the number of shares outstanding.

• • •

Q. Hundreds of companies have dividend reinvestment plans through which stockholders can use their dividends to buy more full and fractional shares. Many of those companies allow stockholders enrolled in the dividend reinvestment plans to make additional "optional" purchases.

But they all restrict the amount a stockholder can purchase in any quarter or year. Why? It is highly unlikely that any one stockholder or group could purchase enough shares through optional cash purchases to gain voting control of a company.

A. Don't be too sure about that. If a company's dividend reinvestment plan allowed stockholders to purchase unlimited amounts of stock, some individual or group of stockholders might send in a check big enough to buy a majority of the company's stock, elect a new board of directors and take control of the corporation.

As you say, that's most unlikely. But, in these days of company mergers and takeovers, no technique is too farfetched for corporate raiders.

For practical purposes, the limitation on optional cash purchases through dividend reinvestment plans simply keeps such buying by each shareholder within reasonable bounds. Some companies allow optional cash purchases of as much as $5,000 a quarter, $20,000 a year. That should satisfy all but the wealthiest investors.

Also, a company might have difficulty providing enough shares, from either authorized but unissued stock or by purchases in the market, to fill unlimited buying through optional cash purchases.

There's still another angle. In virtually all dividend reinvestment and optional cash purchase programs, you pay little or no brokerage commissions. That doesn't make brokers happy.

If a company allowed stockholders in its dividend reinvestment program to make unlimited optional cash purchases, it's a safe bet brokers would stop recommending that stock. No company wants to make the brokerage fraternity screaming mad.

• • •

Q. Why do some companies issue new shares of stock for dividend reinvestment plans and optional cash purchases, while others buy shares for participating stockholders in the market?

A. The companies that issue new shares through such plans raise capital that way. It's less expensive than selling a new issue of securities in the marketplace.

Companies that buy shares for such plans in the market usually aren't in need of capital but they realize that dividend reinvestment plans are a great way to build stockholder loyalty.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE℠

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

1. Call the StockQuote Hotline number listed below. A computer voice will answer and ask you for the Account Code.
2. Enter the Account Code, then depress the star key (*) on your telephone. The computer will then ask you to enter your Stock Code.
3. Enter the Stock Code for the stock you wish quoted, the computer will quote the Ticker Symbol; Current Price and Net Change from the previous day's close.
4. After the stock is quoted, the computer will ask you to enter another Stock Code. You have two options:

A. You may request the quote for another stock simply by repeating Step 3, or...
B. You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more depressing the star key (*) in which case the computer will respond with the Price, Net Change, Volume, High and Low. The computer will then ask you to enter another Stock Code (repeat Step 3).

You may enter up to 10 requests per call.

STOCK CODES

All Stock Codes are based on industry standard Ticker Symbols provided by your broker or available from any Standard & Poor's Stock Ticker Guide. Codes are made up of a series of two-digit numbers, each representing one of the letters in the Ticker Symbol.

To determine the two-digit code for any letter of a Ticker Symbol, remember: The first key to be depressed is always the one on which the letter appears. The second key is always a "1," "2" or "3" indicating that letter's position on its own key (first, second or third position). EXAMPLE: "IBM"="43 22 61"; "BX"= "22 92." Remember to depress the star key (*) after entering each code.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE

Call the StockQuote customer service number (915) 682-5311 (Monday thru Friday 8 a.m. - 5 p.m.) for additional information or to report any problem with the service.

Hot checks not down in number, Dettman says

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Just how effective is the battle against hot-check writers?

"That's hard to tell," said Midland County Attorney Mark H. Dettman, who is launching "raids" to round up hot-check writers in efforts to make them responsible and to persuade them to make restitution and not to write hot ones anymore.

"It seems we get the same number of hot checks we always have," he said, "but we seem to be getting the attention of the more prolific hot-check writers, although we haven't stopped them completely."

In a year's time, the county attorney will process more than $275,000 in theft-by-check cases and will collect on 65 to 75 percent of those hot checks which the victimized merchants were unsuccessful in redeeming. And Dettman cited a case of a Midland woman, in her late 20s, who is responsible for $4,000 to $5,000 of those checks. She has a penchant for over-drafting her account.

The woman, an office worker, served a 10-day sentence in the County Jail on a hot-check case and then was placed on probation and ordered to make restitution by the installment plan in another case.

Months passed, and she hadn't paid a dime.

Then, well into her probation, she asked her probation officer if she could leave the state to take a vacation in Los Angeles, Calif.

"She told him she was going," Dettman said.

She went.

"We thought that vacation money would have been better spent on paying the merchants back," he said.

Upon her return this summer, she was greeted with a court motion to revoke her probation and to cast her in jail for six solid months unless she comes up with the full restitution. This time, Dettman won't allow piecemeal payments. "She can either pay all of the restitution or do six months (in jail). They either pay up or go to jail."

"All in all," he said, "you'd think that (threat of revocation) would deter, but we got another hot-check from her. That's why I say we're slowing them up but not stopping them. I can't believe she turned around and wrote another hot check, but she did."

Dettman said the woman "needs to get rid of her checkbook," which has afforded her both groceries and fashionable clothes.

"She's an impeccable dresser," Dettman said. "A lot of hot-check writers dress very nicely."

Her case is not particularly typical.

Despite their wayward ways, hot-check writers are accorded courtesy from the time of their arrest though the disposal of their cases, Dettman said.

"There's no reason not to be polite to someone who's being arrested." They're not handcuffed, and arresting officers are careful not to let the arrest interfere with the check-writer's job. Without an income, Dettman reasoned, the hot-check writer certainly would be unable to make restitution.

"Most of them are embarrassed, and lot of them have excuses. Few have legitimate excuses."

He recalled a "legitimate" instance when a woman wrote checks on an overdrawn account to pay for food and medical care for her baby. Her husband had left her and the child and withdrew funds from their joint bank account.

Those are rare cases.

Others who make empty excuses may claim that "the bank messed up," Dettman said. "That's rather common — to blame it on the bank."

Often, they're cunning.

"A lot of hot-check writers change banks regularly," Dettman noted. "A lot of people get high numbers on their checks so they can get them cashed easily and get driver's license numbers printed on them. You can't tell by looking at them that they're hot-check writers."

"It seems we get the same number of hot checks we always have, but we seem to be getting the attention of the more prolific hot-check writers, although we haven't stopped them completely."

—Mark Dettman, county attorney

County may get research center

Odessa company pledges $500,000

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The University of Texas of the Permian Basin has received a $500,000 pledge from the Odessa Industrial Development Corp. to help finance a new research center which may be located in Midland County, according to UTPB President Duane Leach.

"It's basically seed money for the project," Leach said of the contribution, which is to be paid out over a five-year period. "We're looking at some private investment from here in the Basin to make it a reality."

The Odessa organization changed its bylaws to allow a contribution to a project which may be built outside Ector County.

"It's symbolic of the recognition that this (the center) needs to be done," Leach said.

A director for the Energy Research Center is expected to be appointed next week, Leach said.

The center "will be a transforming agent for the economy of the area," bringing in new technology to help local industry and at the same time marketing local energy technologies and expertise to third-world countries, Leach said.

"What we're talking about is aiding and abetting the diversification" of the local economy, while also helping the oil and gas industry with research projects, he said.

"Every single component of the UT system is establishing some entity" to work with their local economies, he said. The state budget crunch has limited UTPB's funding for the project, but with local support and research grants from private industry and the federal government, the center can still be a reality, he said.

"Even if the physical structure isn't there yet, we're on our way."

Leach hopes to build a home for the center midway between Midland and Odessa, within easy access of Midland Regional Airport. If $3 million to $5 million can be raised, the center might be completed within two years, he said. But whether a separate complex is built or not, "The program's going to go ahead."

Dimension to grant 'amnesty' to those stealing cable service

Violation may result in $1,000 fine, six months in jail

From Staff Reports

Stealing cable television service may not seem like a major crime to those who are doing it, but starting Sept. 1 it will be increased from a Class C to a Class B misdemeanor punishable by a $1,000 fine or six months in jail.

Until then, Dimension Cable Services is offering violators a chance to unhook or sign up and pay for the service during an Amnesty Campaign. There will be no back billing, no questions asked, according to Gregg Holmes, regional vice president for Dimension Cable.

After Sept. 1, Dimension Cable has ways to find violators and will be pursuing them.

Holmes said an initial audit showed there are about 780 persons who are stealing Midland's cable service, and the loss is estimated at $290,000 each year. Statewide, cable theft amounts to $50 million in losses.

The theft occurs with people making illegal connections to cable lines, tampering with converter boxes or purchasing illegal decoder boxes. Even if someone moves into a house or apartment where the cable hasn't been unhooked, the company should be called to put that person on the billing.

In a situation like that, hooking up to cable and not paying for it is the same as running a red light in a town someone is traveling through, according to Holmes.

The State Legislature last spring passed the new cable theft of service law which should make prosecution and conviction easier, he said.

New technology makes detection of cable theft easier, Holmes noted. When someone tampers with cable equipment, signals leak out into the atmosphere. Technicians conducting audits pick up the strong radiated signals from houses with specially designed "sweep analyzers." These signals are matched with the billing system to see if the person at that address is on the list.

In addition, Dimension employees will be checking the cable from the pole to the house. If that address isn't listed on the billing service, "we'll approach the person about subscribing" or unhooking.

And, finally, Dimension Cable has hired a converter retriever-collection specialist to contact people suspected of using cable illegally or of not paying their bills.

The end result is to get the people using the service to become subscribers, according to Holmes. "I don't want to spend 24 hours a day prosecuting people. We want to convert the people. Our goal is not to put innocent people in jail. We want to give everyone fair notice. But, honest customers shouldn't have to subsidize the cheaters any longer."

Many people, he said, don't realize what they are doing is against the law. The Amnesty Campaign is to educate the public about the new law and its impact on cable thieves.

"There really isn't any excuse for stealing cable any more," said Holmes. "If they like the programming enough to steal it, they won't want to be without it legally. But the bottom line is after Sept. 1, 1985, 'Don't do the crime if you can't do the time.'"

Nun doesn't care about refugees' politics

SAN BENITO (AP) — Sister Ninfa Garza, the new director of Casa Oscar Romero, tells the caller, "I can't take anybody to the airport and I can't buy tickets for anybody. I just can't."

Three months ago, Sister Garza took over the Catholic Church-sponsored shelter for Central Americans, following in the footsteps of Lorry Thomas, 41, and Jack Elder, both of whom were convicted of transporting Central Americans.

Inspector finds same problems in Ector jail

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The Ector County jail once again failed to meet state jail standards during a two-day inspection ended this week by Joe Slater, supervising inspector for the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

Slater, who inspected the jail in April, found several of the same problems existing.

According to Slater's report, "Lighting is not adequate for normal activities in many inmate living areas" and "the smoke and fume removal system did not provide adequate smoke and fume removal when tested with a smoke bomb," he said.

Slater also noted that the "average daily jail population is increasing." For the past 80 days, he said, the daily inmate average has been 153.6, or 91 percent of authorized capacity. "The current average for August is 169.6 percent," Slater said, which means the Ector County jail has been at the 100 percent occupancy level. He noted that the "classification system breaks down at this level."

Following an inspection of the jail kitchen area, Slated said current usage points up the need for a dishwasher adequate for a facility of the size of the Ector County jail. He also said the kitchen needs a relief cook to cover days off each week as well as other normal time off.

While the jail staff is "adequate as planned," said Slater, "Many jail programs suffer when jailers are removed from the jail to perform other duties, such as bailiff, hospital guard, relief dispatching, jury assistance, law library visits with inmates, etc."

According to Slater, once his report is evaluated by the commission on jail standards, a formal letter of non-compliance will be sent to County Judge Jan Fisher. Failure by the county to initiate and complete corrective measures, he said, may result in issuance of remedial action.

Negotiating with reality game of fantasy, dreaming

Every now and then, you'll hear a comment with which you identify.

Here's one that caught my fancy.

"I tend to look at reality as if it were negotiable," said the speaker, a Brother Paul.

Right on!

I've been negotiating ever since I was in the cradle. I still do. It's a game of fantasy, a habit, but I don't dream dreams quite as much as I did way back then.

The futility of my role-playing comes in negotiating with myself. I end up bargaining with let's-pretend poker chips instead of with the real McCoy. It's entertaining when you're a child and are just beginning to differentiate between innocence and carnal knowledge, simplicity and sophistication, ignorance and knowledgeability, the cunning and crafty and free-wheeling trust and no suspicion.

When I was years from puberty and the age of accountability, I was already grown up. I already had negotiated. For instance, I was flying airplanes, especially high-performance pursuit aircraft — fighters — in a war that already had ended. I got into my dog's house, probably Old Shep's abode, and drew instruments and the controls on planks in the cockpit. I was magnificent. Never took on any flak or cannon fire and never fell into the drink. After all, I just had one aircraft, just as I had only one life.

Later on, I became more peaceable and humanitarian. I was flying a non-warring aircraft over Russia in my bid to proselytize the heathens. It was a monumental task, but, I believe, if you'll check the history books from the late 1940s, I succeeded. Look under the heading, "Flying Missionary," in the index. It was rare achievement by one person and was a monumental task which the whole of Christendom had not dared take on. I should have led the causes back during the Holy Wars; they wouldn't have been so bloody.

I was a hero. I negotiated by word, might and, of course, charisma.

So, before my teen-age years, I had reformed the world. Well, most of it. All that was lacking was this country. And the "lost" culprits, the last of the heathens and hypocrites, were this nation's very leadership — the congressmen and senators and their unsuspecting aides and accomplices, the bureaucrats.

I suppose my plan was to fly up to Washington, D.C., in a Super Constellation loaded with tons of Bibles and biblical literature and, of course, my soapbox. I was the master of any task. By then, I suppose I had learned to consult some of the world's wise men. So, I sought out my church minister on the steps of the church one fair Sunday and told him of my ambitious plans. He didn't share my exuberance. I got no encouragement. He just looked at me, smiled, and said something like, "I don't much think so."

Killjoy.

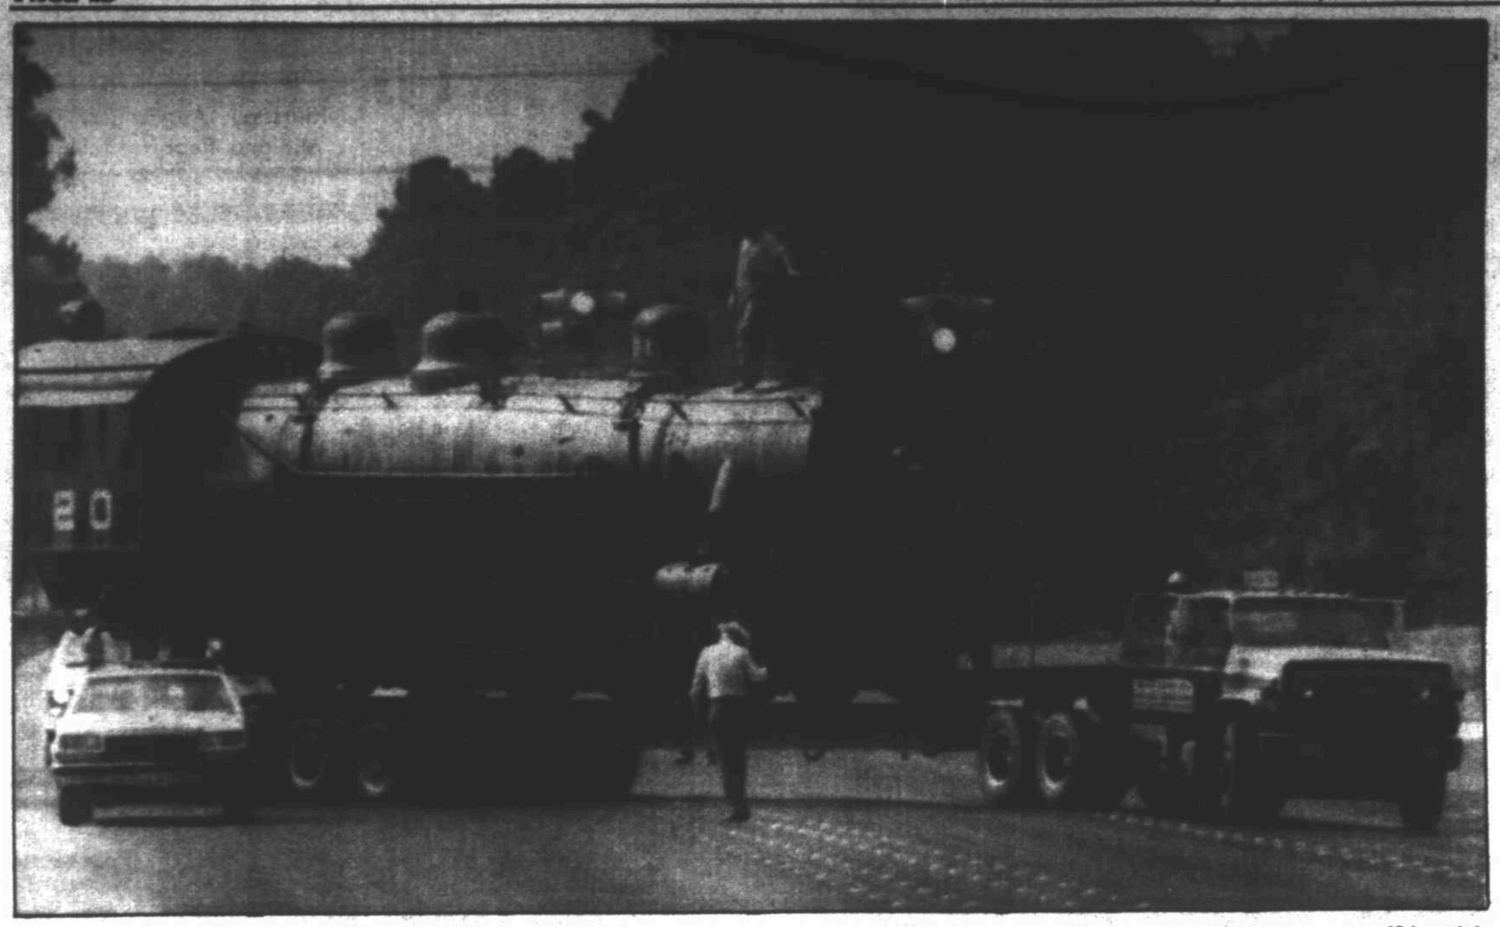

I'd show him. I canceled my flight.

And that, my friends, is why today there are no reforms in the nation's capital and that is exactly why Watergate and the Watergates to follow were allowed and are made possible. Since my counselor discouraged me, I've not seriously considered warming up the old Super Constellation. But, I've noticed after the passage of years, I've starting taking flying lessons, have soloed, and am readying to embark on great adventures. It appears I'm not negotiating as much as before and may be more in contact with reality. But I'm still in love with flying and, especially, with Amelia Earhart and her magnificent flying machines.

Those childhood and youthful delights and dreams are just a bit of my negotiations with reality.

And I suppose I'll continue negotiating reality to some fanciful degree. I'm primed for action.

Charges dropped in woman's death

AUSTIN (AP) — An Air Force staff sergeant was free today after authorities said it appears no crime was committed when his mother starved to death at his apartment.

But a Travis County prosecutor says the case will be presented to a grand jury, but he declined to say what sort of indictment, if any, might be sought.

Authorities decided Wednesday the murder charge filed Tuesday against Joe Victor Dixon, 26, should be dropped, said police homicide Sgt. Dusty Hesskew.

"After a careful review of the case by our office and the office of the district attorney, we find we that had to dismiss the charges because according to the state law, there was not a violation there," Hesskew said.

"He violated a lot of moral laws and he violated several of the commandments, but he did not violate Texas law," Hesskew told a news conference.

"It's very frustrating to me, because this makes you feel like you didn't do your job," Hesskew said. "I just hope our legislators do something to change this."

Under Texas law parents have an obligation to care for their child. But there is no law that says a child must care for his parents, Hesskew said.

"The law says that you cannot prosecute someone for failing to perform an act unless there is a statute that imposes a duty on them to do that particular act," said Stephen McCleery, executive assistant Travis County district attorney.

AP Laserphoto

Staff Sgt. Joe Dixon, 26, left, stationed at Bergstrom Air Force Base in Austin, was charged with murder in his mother's death.

"There's not even a general good Samaritan statute that requires you to come to the aid of some-one," McCleery said. "It's an oversight of the Legislature, and we're stuck with it."

McCleery said the case will be presented to a grand jury. He declined to elaborate about what indictment could be returned.

Paul Blanton of the adult protective services section of the Texas Department of Human Resources said the department has investigated 10,000 reports of abuse to elderly persons this year. He said the incidence of abuse may be much higher, because many cases of abuse are never reported.

A new case of abuse of the elderly is reported in Travis County about every day, said Carolyn Bivens, supervisor of the adult protective services for the Travis County Department of Human Resouces. In 75 percent of the cases, investigators find that some form of abuse has been committed, she said.

"It's disturbing to see the problem as widespread as it is," Bivens said. "But we did not receive a report in this particular case, and I'm sure there are other cases that are not getting reported."

Dixon had been jailed Tuesday in lieu of $40,000 bail after 68-year-old Vera Inez Dixon's body was found lying in human waste in the man's apartment, Hesskew said.

The Bergstrom Air Force Base non-commissioned officer had called for an ambulance for his mother about 11 a.m. Tuesday because "she wasn't moving or breathing," Hesskew said. An autopsy determined that Mrs. Dixon had been dead about 12 hours.

The living room and kitchen were strewn with feces and a sofa in the living room, covered with feces and urine, had been overturned before police arrived, he said.

SHELTER

Elder was released last week from a halfway house in San Antonio, where he served 133 days of a 150-day sentence. He was to return to the Rio Grande Valley this week, but not to the shelter, which has had a facelift and a change in philosophy since his departure.

"I don't know much about politics, about immigration, and I don't want to," Sister Garza said. "I want to get the refugees to feel comfortable in a house.

"When they come here, I never ask them where they're from. I give them something to eat and a place to sleep and tell them we'll talk in the morning," she said.

Sister Garza is a petite woman, who has been a nun for 26 years. Before she took over Casa Romero, she was director of Hispanic family ministries for the diocese.

She awakes daily at 7 a.m. and doesn't call it a day until after midnight. During the day, she visits with the Salvadorans, Nicaraguans, Hondurans and Guatemalans who seek refugee in a six-room house in this town, south of Harlingen.

She frequently has a black purse slung over her shoulder and a cross around her neck.

After she took over the shelter, she implemented rules in which the temporary residents do chores that Sister Garza said makes them feel at home.

Thousands of Central Americans have passed through the doors of the shelter — named after the slain Archbishop of San Salvador — since it opened in December 1982.

Some leave their war-torn countries and others, the depressed economies.

Donations of food, money and clothing always are needed at the shelter and Sister Garza frequently goes to grocery stores and meat markets asking for food donations.

More and more people are stopping at the house. Earlier this week, there were 135 temporary residents, double the number six months ago.

There are three bedrooms, some with queen-size and bunk beds, but many of the transients have to sleep on the concrete floor outside. Sister Garza said soon she hopes another room will be added to the house.

Restroom facilities have been expanded; an awning has been added to the house and electric fans are new amenities in the house.

Sister's Garza's other daily duties include making a seven-mile trip to Harlingen's Western Union office to collect money for the temporary residents of the shelter.

Relatives of the Central Americans send the money to her, and she relays it. She doesn't ask what the money is to be used for.

She lends an ear, gives a hug here and there and occasionally scolds rowdy children and adults who are smoking too close to the house.

"I just love it. I really do. I am in my element," she said.

Sister Garza still gets calls from reporters asking about the progress of the shelter and inquiring about Elder.

Elder was convicted this spring of transporting two Salvadorans from the shelter to a bus station in McAllen. He was replaced by Ms. Thomas, who was sentenced to two years in prison for transporting a Nicaraguan in the trunk of her car and trying to get past Border Patrol agents.

Another shelter volunteer, Stacey Lynn Merkt, 30, was convicted in two trials of conspiring to transport and of transporting Salvadorans. One of the convictions was overturned and the other is on appeal.

Sister Garza said she doesn't fear the possibility that immigration officials might raid the shelter, and authorities said the house was not on their priority list.

"It's not our priority to check places like Casa Oscar Romero," said Jerry Hicks, deputy chief of the Border Patrol in McAllen.

"Our priorities are to apprehend employed aliens. There also is more and more evidence that aliens at Casa Oscar Romero are documented, that they have papers to travel in the Valley," Hicks said.

Sister Garza said the Central Americans trekked across deserts and they can make the trip to an airport or bus station to get further into the United States.

She said the shelter's priorities are not to transport the Central Americans, but to feed, clothe and inspire them.

When one of the residents get ready to leave, Sister Garza gives them a sack lunch, a hug and a prayer.

"You suffer with them and sometimes you feel you can't do anything about it and it hurts. It breaks your heart," she said.

Odessan named to utilities board

From Staff Reports

Perry

DALLAS — Texas Utilities Co. has announced the election of Charles R. Perry to fill the vacancy on its board of directors. Perry, a resident of Odessa, is a prominent West Texas business and civic leader with interests in oil, gas and banking.

The board of directors also declared a regular quarterly dividend of 63 cents a share on the company's common stock at an Aug. 16 meeting. the dividend is payable Oct. 1 to shareholders of record on Sept. 3.

The Texas Utilities Co. System provides electric energy in 87 counties in North Central, East and West Texas to approximately 4.9 million people — about one-third of the state's population.

Perry has been a director of Texas Electric Service Co., a division providing electric service to Fort Worth, Midland-Odessa and much of West Texas. He also is president and chief executive officer of Perry Foundation Inc., Betona Aviation Inc. and Rivercourse Development Inc.

Midlander reports theft of battery, tools worth almost $800

From Staff Reports

A Midland man reported the loss of about $800 worth of tools in a theft which occurred over weekend, according to Sheriff's Office reports.

Charles Brown, Route 13, Box 390C, told deputies a toolbox was taken from the bed of his 1982 Chevy pickup sometime between Saturday and Sunday. Also taken from another vehicle was a $60 battery, reports said.

Proposal calls for list of X-rated movie renters

ARLINGTON (AP) — A City Council proposal to make video store operators record names of customers who rent or buy X-rated movies would discourage people from seeking adult movies within city limits, officials said.

The proposal would also allow police to have access to stores' records to ensure that customers are at least 17, city officials said.

"I think the social pressures and mores of this community would be such that people would go elsewhere for these materials," said City Manager Bill Kirchhoff, who sent the proposal to city attorneys for review.

Arlington police say they rarely receive complaints about pornographic materials. But reported homosexual activity in past months in a city park has triggered a heated campaign against all forms of adult entertainment. The campaign is led by Councilman Jim Norwood.

"I feel good that we live in a community where we don't have a major problem with this, but that's no guarantee that we won't have any problems at some point in the future," Norwood said.

Last week, the council held a public hearing on pornography, which drew about 200 people, identified as local church members, who called for a ban on adult movie and literature sales.

High court grants Pinkerton stay

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Death Row inmate Jay Kelly Pinkerton, spared minutes before he was to be executed, says the worst part of dying would have been his family's suffering.

Pinkerton, 23, who came within 30 minutes of dying when the U.S. Supreme Court granted him a stay, said he had been preparing mentally for his scheduled execution a week ago.

"I was ready to meet my maker," he said in an interview from Death Row. "I had my mind on the hereafter."

The former Amarillo meat cutter had been awaiting lethal injection for the mutilation slaying of a housewife and mother of three. He would have been the youngest prisoner to be executed since the Supreme Court allowed the death penalty to resume in 1976.

"I had finished my last prayer when the warden walked in," he said, recalling the scene in a holding cell just a few feet from the Texas death chamber. "It was a relief. I don't think I was that confident. I believe in God. I seek refuge in His hands. I don't rely on what the courts can do for you."

Warden Jack Pursley delivered the message from the high court. Then Pinkerton shook his hand and said, "Thank you."

"I didn't feel any pressure, but I had prepared for quite a long time mentally for death," Pinkerton said Wednesday from the visiting area of the Texas Department of Corrections Ellis Unit.

On Death Row, word of Pinkerton's stay prompted cheers from among the approximately 200 inmates, prisoners said.

"Someone heard it on the radio and hollered out, 'He got a stay!'" said Charles Rumbaugh, who faces death Sept. 10. "A lot of people clapped and whistled."

Pinkerton said when he was returned to his wing, prisoners applauded again.

"They were very happy to see me back," he said.

Pinkerton said some inmate friends gave him gifts upon his return, but he refused to say what they were because the items were prohibited by prison officials.

Pinkerton repeated his contention that he is innocent of the October 1979 slaying of Sarah Donn Lawrence. He also said he did not kill Sherry Welch, whose mutilation slaying five months later brought him a second capital murder conviction and a second death sentence.

The Supreme Court voted 6-2 to keep Pinkerton alive after deciding they needed further information in his case. Pinkerton on Wednesday acknowledged that the stay could be lifted any day and he could face a third death date.

Pinkerton said that in both trials, his attorneys withheld evidence that would have supported his alibis. In the Lawrence slaying, the conviction was based on a palm print. In the Welch case, prosecutors said Pinkerton's bite mark was found on the victim.

He also complained that Randall County Sheriff Harold Hooks was allowed to interview him just hours before the planned execution.

Hooks said last week he hoped to clear up some items in the Lawrence and Welch slayings, plus another killing in the Amarillo area, and left Pinkerton a list of questions he would like answered.

"I told him to continue to look for the killer," Pinkerton said. "I think these people (police authorities) have a guilty conscience and want to do everything they can to make the public believe I'm guilty."

Herman Whitten proudly displays the Purple Heart and eight other medals he finally received 43 years after his tour of duty in the Navy during WWII.

Navy man finally gets WWII medals

GALVESTON (AP) — Herman Whitten only recently received the medals he earned in World War II, but during the past 43 years he has had other reminders of his war service.

"I can still hear the screams of the men who didn't make it. Sometimes the screams wake me up at night," said Whitten, 66, a Navy man for 20 years.

He was a gunner's mate first class aboard the USS Colhoun when Japanese bombers attacked the ship on Aug. 30, 1942 in the South Pacific.

"There were 15 of them and they all unloaded on us," he recalled. "It was like an inferno. Everything was burning and everyone was covered with oil."

Whitten said he knew he had earned some medals but just assumed the Navy would automatically issue them.

"Last September, I went to Charleston, S.C., for a reunion of World War II survivors and some of the guys got to talking about their medals. An old commander of mine told me where to write about getting the ones I was entitled to," he said.

After writing the Navy, Whitten said he recently got a package from the Navy's personnel records center in St. Louis that contained the Purple Heart, awarded to soldiers wounded in action.

The package also had eight other medals, including the Navy Good Conduct Medal with three bronze stars, the American Defense Service Medal and the National Defense Service Medal.

Ambassador defends Reagan's policies

Tambs

DALLAS (AP) — The U.S. Ambassador to Costa Rica got cheers of approval from thousands Veterans of Foreign Wars members as he defended President Reagan's policies in Central America.

But after Ambassador Lewis Tambs' speech Wednesday, the commander of a California VFW post shook his hand and said, "I just want you to know that I didn't believe a word you told those guys."

The spat between Tambs and Post 5888 Commander Richard Anderson is just one indication of the growing discontent in the ranks of the nation's oldest veterans' organization.

Rifts over political issues, such as U.S. policies on Central America, nuclear weaponry and the defense buildup, have pitted some Vietnam veterans against their colleagues who fought in wars before them.

"At this very moment, brave men are dying in Nicaragua," Tambs told the group Wednesday. "They are fighting against the same type of tyranny, the same tyrants that you and I fought against..."

He urged delegates to support Reagan's policies to stop "a red wave rolling from the South."

But Anderson and five other members of his post, known as the "rebel vets," took issue with Tambs.

Anderson's group is offering a resolution calling for non-intervention in Central America. It is expected to be considered today, among other proposals that may be melded into a VFW platform.

Anderson attacked Tambs' speech, saying that adopting hard-line support for Reagan's Central American policies is an "extreme reaction."

"We feel the Veterans of Foreign Wars is a great organization, but we feel that it has strayed so far to the right that its credibility is threatened," Anderson said.

The VFW suspended Anderson's post for two months and later revoked its charter after a member of the post drafted a resolution criticizing U.S. involvement in Central America on VFW stationery and presented it to Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega.

The post filed suit against the VFW but reached an out-of-court-settlement that reinstated it with orders never to represent its views as those of the VFW as a whole.

"We have a right to be in America's traditional organization," Anderson said. "Once we're in there we have a right to express our views even if it's unpopular."

Lee Bookout, also a member of Post 5888, said many Vietnam veterans have not joined the VFW because of the far right view espoused by the organization.

"They're going to have to bring other Vietnam vets into this organization," Bookout said. "This organization is doomed without the Vietnam vets stepping up and taking the lead in this organization."

Bookout said his post has received "thousands of letters" from veterans who have dropped out of the VFW and "swore they would never come back" because of the organization's views.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, August 23, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Someone fumbles the ball at work, giving you an opportunity to display your special talents. Take your cue from someone who has been in the same situation. Travel is one option among many. The financial picture looks especially bright in October. Use persuasion, not threats, to obtain the assistance you need. You want to be the kind of manager that everyone admires. Pay more attention to the public relations side of your job. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: actress Barbara Eden, Mark Hudson of "The Hudson Brothers," sportscaster Sonny Jurgensen, band leader Bob Crosby, dancer-actor-director Gene Kelly, Baltimore Orioles' Mike Boddiker.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): This weekend could be just what you have wanted for so long! Finish a special project before starting a new assignment or job. Give romantic partner a chance to prove his/her sincerity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A summer job teaches a young person to be more independent and responsible. Keep your emotions under control in work situations. You have great potential but must learn to control your temper.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your financial position grows stronger. A better vision of the future helps you reach your goals. Tensions fade as you begin to build your savings. Check into new investment proposals.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): New gains are made when you take a more enlightened approach to work. Pool your resources with those of your associates. There are many benefits to being a team player!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not ignore your immediate needs when making long-range plans. Certain things cannot wait. Get expert advice on managing your money. You need a personalized financial strategy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The information you need now is as near as the telephone. A seminar or adult education program could boost your career. Mate wants you to realize your potential. Accept an offer of help.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You can't win a leadership position by following the crowd. Develop a style of your own. You find you were right all along on an important issue. Move forward with confidence.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You find there is no pat solution to a nagging problem. Ask family members for suggestions. Pre-packaged foods could be adding inches to your waistline. Steam some fresh vegetables for a change.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Work closely with a family member to develop a support system that will help all your loved ones. A new program could fit your business to a T. Get more information.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Being average is not good enough for you. The pursuit of excellence is what keeps you on top! Further education or training helps you move up several rungs on the career ladder.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Improve a program already in use instead of junking it and starting anew. You'll save both time and money. Put mate's needs ahead of your own. Devote more time to romance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be bold. Imaginative ideas capture the attention of someone influential. A highly disciplined approach helps you beat out a competitor. Put everything in writing to avoid future arguments.

The bidding:

3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♡.

Here's a chance for you to sit in judgment of your fellow bridge players. Study the bidding and play of this hand and then decide who, if any, of the characters involved are guilty of bridge crimes, and whether they are major or minor.

Against South's contract of three no trump West led the top of his heart sequence. Declarer won and, since he had to develop diamonds to make his contract, he led the king. West won the ace and tried to knock out dummy's entry to the diamonds by shifting to the king of spades. Declarer countered by ducking, and now he was in control.

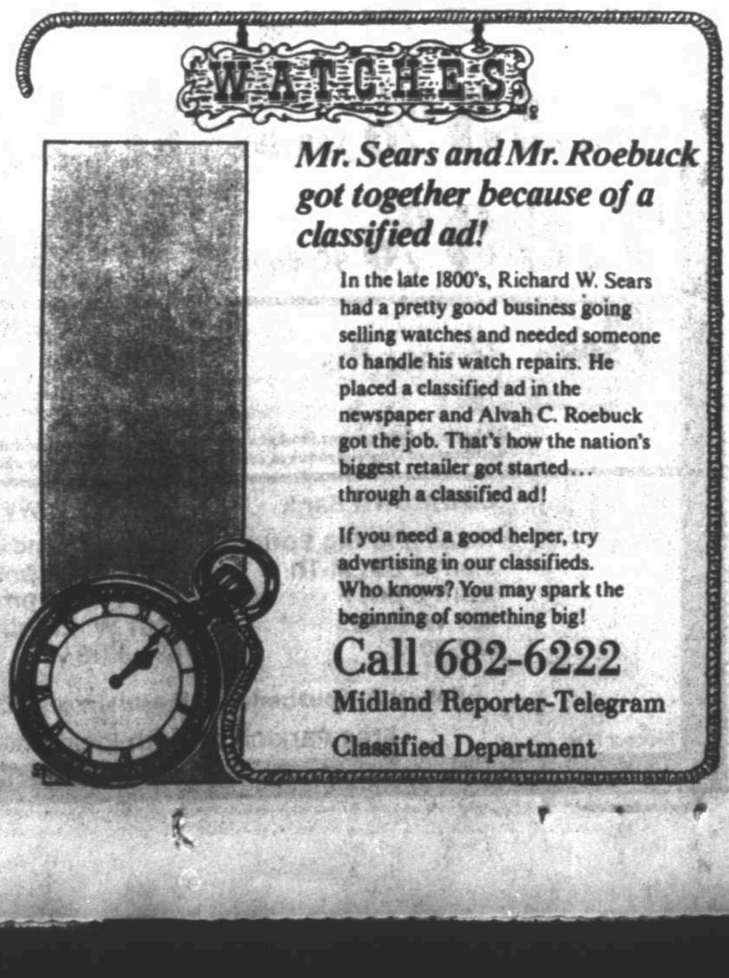

He won the spade continuation in hand and forced out the queen of diamonds. In all, he made 10 tricks.

All the evidence is before you. You are asked to render your verdict.

We agree with West's decision to make a takeout double at his first turn. While he has little to spare for that action, his hand does have the ability to play in any of the other three suits. We do not hold the same brief for North's decision to bid one diamond over the double. With his poor hand and three-card club support, there is absolutely no reason why he should not pass. We charge him with a major crime.

West's shift to the king of spades at trick three was a fine, if futile, defensive effort. However, it was a case of locking the barn after the horses had run away. West had presented declarer with his contract on the previous trick! He was guilty of murder in the worst degree when he failed to hold up the ace of diamonds. Had he refused the trick, declarer would have been able to come to no more than eight tricks.

Mr. Sears and Mr. Roebuck got together because of a classified ad!

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

Rock star Prince wishes 'more of my friends would come by' to visit him

NEW YORK (AP) — Rock star Prince says it's lonesome at the top.

Prince

"To be perfectly honest, I wish more of my friends would come by,"the rocker who starred in the film "Purple Rain" said in an interview for the Sept. 12 issue of Rolling Stone.

On another subject, Prince said he does not regret sitting out the taping of "We Are the World," the record which has raised an estimated $70 million for African famine relief.

"I think I did my part in giving my song (a tune he contributed to the USA for Africa album)," Prince said. "I hope I did my part. I think I did the best thing I could do."

NEW YORK (AP) — Former automaker John De Lorean says he hasn't dated since his divorce, which left him "devastated."

"In fact, I feel like an animal in a cage that's been beaten and is sort of cowering in a corner...I'm badly hurt," he said in an interview for the October issue of Playboy magazine.

De Lorean, 60, and Cristina Ferrare Thomopoulos, 35, now a talk show host in Los Angeles, were married nearly 12 years and are battling in a New Jersey court over how to divide their property and custody of their two children.

She obtained a divorce in California in April and 12 days later married ABC executive Anthony Thomopoulos.

The De Loreans separated last year after he was acquitted of conspiring to sell $24 million worth of cocaine to save his failing auto business.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — U.S. Chief Justice Warren Burger, chairman of the Commission on the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution, has meetings set this week to explore ways of marking the event.

Those scheduled to meet with Burger include Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and commission member Obert C. Tanner, a Salt Lake City businessman.

Hatch authored legislation that created the panel and will represent Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., a commission member.

The Constitution was signed Sept. 17, 1787, in Philadelphia.

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Academy Award winning director Frank Capra is back at home after being treated for a series of strokes, according to an official at the Eisenhower Medical Center.

Capra, 88, was released from the hospital Monday, said a hospital spokeswoman who asked not to be identified. Capra was admitted Aug. 11 after suffering a series of mild strokes.

Capra, a recent recipient of the American Film Institute's Life Achievement Award, apparently did not suffer any lingering effects from the attacks, another hospital spokesman said.

The influential filmmaker received best director Academy Awards for "It Happened One Night" in 1934, "Mr. Deeds Goes To Town" in 1936 and "You Can't Take It With You" in 1938.

He resides in La Quinta, about 5 miles southeast of Palm Springs.

The checks were cashed in May and June, Pfau said.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Associated Press and CBS News denied an entertainment and broadcast trade newspaper's report that they were exploring a news-sharing arrangement "just short of a merger."

"The Variety story is nonsense," AP President and General Manager Louis D. Boccardi said Wednesday. "The idea that we have talked about anything like a merger is ridiculous on its face, was never even remotely thought of and is unequivocally out of the question for the AP."

The companies have been discussing a possible joint venture to gather video footage abroad, Boccardi said in a statement.

Peter Kohler, a vice president in the CBS Broadcast Group, also denied the report of a near-merger but said the companies were exploring ways to expand video distribution overseas.

The Variety article, which did not identify its sources, said CBS News and the AP were considering a plan "to place a reporter and camera crew in every AP bureau around the globe."

"CBS approached us nearly a year ago about a possible joint venture involving the gathering of video footage abroad, not in the United States," Boccardi said. "The idea involves a totally separate entity from the present news staff of either AP or CBS."

Sheldon

JUNCTION CITY, Kan. (AP) — Sidney Sheldon usually sets his best-selling novels in Greece, Paris or other exotic locations, but this time, he's placing the heroine in northeast Kansas.

Sheldon, author of "The Other Side of Midnight" and "Rage of Angels," spent two days this week visiting Junction City and Manhattan getting the "touch and smell and feel" of the area before beginning his eighth novel, which he expects to publish in 1987.

The heroine will grow up in Junction City and teach political science at Kansas State University in Manhattan before becoming involved in some sort of international intrigue, Sheldon said.

He said he picked Junction City, a town of 19,000 people, off the map because it is near the center of the nation.

"People here are as warm and friendly as anywhere in the world," Sheldon said. "They made me feel very much at home."

CURIOUS SHOPPER

Orange rind adds zest to fresh orange juice

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. Is it possible that in squeezing oranges and consequently in drinking juice that we may be getting something harmful from the rind as well as the good from the juice?

The other day I read that insects in closed containers, exposed to cut orange peel, succumb very quickly. Barbara Girdler, Riverside, Conn.

A. I would imagine that if a human being were sealed in a container on top of a mountain of orange peels, it wouldn't take him long to die either. There are strong, pungent oils in orange peel designed by Mother Nature not to seal up in a jar but to hang on a tree and make itself unattractive to insects.

D.R. Genung, the technical services director of Sunkist, says that they too have seen the newspaper report you mention but have not seen any scientific data to back it up. What is curious is that insects are still attracted to orange peel in an open container and seem to thrive on it.

And if you ask any orange grove owner, he will tell you that there are many insect pests which unfortunately find the peel of whole oranges a desirable host, and apparently don't flock to the trees to commit suicide.

Genung states that a little bit of orange peel oils getting into your juice does nothing but enhance its fresh flavor.

Q. Someone told me the scallops you buy in restaurants or at a fish market are probably not really scallops at all but something else. Is there any way you can tell for sure just what you're eating or buying? Susie Cower, Palo Alto, Calif.

A. The only way to know for sure is to make a point of finding scallops that are the real thing beyond any doubt, eating them, and memorizing the taste and texture so that you'll be able to make a comparison.

Scallops have a very chewy, muscular texture, a delicate taste, and if the cook's in a hurry and isn't too careful, you get the impression that the scallop has been dropped in the sand.

If you go to a restaurant and get five or six huge nuggets on your plate that are covered in thick batter and deep fried and you mask the taste with dollops of tartar sauce, you could be eating scallops or you could be eating something else, such as skate.

A skate is a flat fish of the ray family. According to the "Encyclopedia of Fish Cookery" by A.J. McClane, "The edible portions of rays and skates are the 'wings,' which contain a firm white meat so similar to sea scallops in texture and flavor that it has been used as a substitute for many years. The wings are punched out with an instrument similar to a cookie cutter which produces perfectly round cylinders similar to a large scallop."

If skate tastes as good as scallops, none of this would really matter much if it weren't for the fact that one pays a premium price for scallops and would therefore expect to get the real thing.

Look carefully at the scallops in a fish market tray. If they are identical in size and shape, which is not how Mother Nature makes them, they have probably been stamped out.

Q. I've noticed for years that all the packaged baked goods we buy have printed on the label, "Registered with the Penna. Dept. of Agr." I'm curious to know why baked goods are registered in Pennsylvania. Ellen Dale, Richmond, Ind.

A. It's funny how we sit around time after time reading things and not even questioning what they mean. When I was 14, I finally asked someone what U.S. Pat. Pend. meant. And here I am immersed in food lore and it never even occurred to me to wonder about the ubiquitous notation that everyone in America must have read countless times in their kitchens. You see it not only on baked goods but also on pasta packages, pretzels, potato chips and any snacks containing cornmeal.

In order to sell any baked goods or similar products in Pennsylvania, even if they're made in Oregon or Canada, the manufacturer has to register his plant with the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture and obtain a license.

To qualify for the license, plants must be inspected regularly for cleanliness, and employees must have periodic medical examinations. The Pennsylvania people don't go all over the country making these inspections but rely on other agriculture departments to do the inspecting and submit their reports.

It all started in 1933 with the enactment of the Pennsylvania Bakery Law and has turned out to be a workable form of consumer protection for not only Pennsylvanians but all Americans.

Reader's feedback: A reader, Colorado Springs, Colo., writes, "In regard to your column regarding colored toilet tissue and how it affects the environment and human beings, a cleaning woman once told me I could avoid my constant plumbing bills from clogged toilets if I would change to white toilet tissue. The plumber verified this information, saying that a chemical in the colored tissue prevented it from disintegrating as well as the white tissue does. He also told me never to throw Kleenex in the toilet. Presto — end of plumbing bills!"

Sausage worth crowing about

By LINDA ANDERSON

Remember being a kid and waking up to the wonderful smell of sausage frying? Remember how good it tasted?

Unfortunately for many of us, those carefree, eat-anything-you-want days are long gone. Not only are we the ones who have to get up earlier than the rest of the family to fix breakfast and make sure everyone gets to work or school or day-care on time, but we are also the ones who are trying to limit fat and cholesterol intake. This makes familiar foods such as "pure pork sausage" off limits in our diet plans.

If the aroma and taste of sausage has proven too much to resist, chicken sausage, marketed by Lane Farms, may help. Label advertising claims the sausage — which is made of chicken instead of pork — has "50 percent less fat than USDA allowable for pork sausage" and "33 percent fewer calories than pork sausage."

In a family full of calorie-counters and sausage-lovers, this product was too much to resist. The usual bunch of adults, teen and children taste-testers checked out the chicken sausage for taste, aroma, price and advertising accuracy.

A one-pound roll of chicken sausage cost $1.89. Pork sausage in one-pound rolls cost about $2.29. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

Label information lists chicken sausage ingredients as boned chicken, chicken skin, textured soy protein concentrate (listed on the label at 3½ percent), water, salt, spices, dextrose, flavorings, monosodium glutamate, disodium inosinate and disodium gyanylate (whatever that is).

Nutritional information listed on the label claims a one-ounce serving of chicken sausage has 70 calories, 4 grams protein, 1 gram carbohydrate and 6 grams fat.

Chicken is a much leaner meat than pork, and it really showed when the chicken sausage was being cooked — the meat contained just enough fat to keep the sausage patties from sticking, but none rendered out.

The taste-testers were unanimous in their decision — the chicken sausage tastes and smells remarkably like pork sausage. Its flavor is mild enough for small children to enjoy, but its texture is a little finer than pork sausage's, more like that of hamburger.

The teen-age tester said she thought the sausage was terrific, and the adult male sausage pro said he could not tell the difference in taste between chicken and pork sausages.

All my arguments against buying sausage — it contains too much fat, too much cholesterol, too many calories — have been blown out the window with the chicken sausage (though 70 calories per patty is still a bit steep for some dieters). Now that we have tried this new product and liked it, I can feel the nagging for more getting ready to begin...

'Invitations' disappointing

By LINDA TRUITT

Most of us have received invitations to hear a sales pitch for timeshare property. Gifts are usually offered as an incentive to get us to either make a trip to see the property or view a slide show at a local hotel.

People have often discovered the gifts had little value and were not as represented on the invitation. Other problems involve misrepresentation about the ability to exchange the alloted vacation time with other resorts, high-pressure sales tactics not allowing the potential buyer time to consider the purchase and the developer going bankrupt before the resort was built.

Starting Sept. 1, a new law regulating vacation timesharing will go into effect. Called the Texas Timeshare Act, the new law designates that all advertising must include:

- A statement that the promotion is intended to solicit purchasers of timeshare interests;
- Complete rules of the promotion and the method of awarding, the odds of winning and the approximate retail value of prizes of other benefits offered;
- The name of the developer and seller of the timeshare property, and the marketing company involved in the promotion.

Before signing a contract, the developer must provide a disclosure statement that includes:

- A description of the accommodations, amenities and, if applicable, the number and type of units currently available;
- A complete budget for the operation of the property for one year after the first sale of timeshare interests;
- The amount of current or expected dues, assessments or other charges to be paid by purchasers for use of the accommodations and facilities such as swimming pools;
- The status of any pending lawsuit or administrative action involving the developer which may affect a timeshare interest;
- Specific details concerning participation in any exchange program, such as the name and address of the exchange company, a complete description of the required procedure for executing an exchange of timeshare periods and any required fees.

In the future, timeshare property will have to be registered with the Texas Real Estate Commission. The commission has the authority to revoke the seller's registration if it determines the law has been violated.

The developer must also deposit 50 percent of all deposits collected from the sale of timeshare interests in an escrow account. Both the buyer and seller are then partially protected if the obligations are not met by the other party.

One of the most important provisions of the law gives the buyer three days to cancel if the purchase was not made at the resort site or there was no chance to inspect a unit substantially the same as the one purchased. Any advance payment must be returned within 21 days.

Misrepresenting the value of the property or the prizes offered as give-aways, plus the failure to make the required disclosures, are considered violations of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act.

Home economics image changing

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The stereotype of home economics as the domain of those who want to learn to cook thicker stews or sew straighter hems has stuck in the nation's mind like burnt cake in a baking pan. "You figured you would be a homemaker or a teacher or, if you were really ambitious, a nurse," said Meredith Fernstrom, a graduate of the University of North Carolina, discussing what it was like to be a college home economics major in the 1960's.

But that image is misleading.

During the past 20 years, the field of home economics has diversified dramatically. College programs have both broadened and become more specialized. At Cornell, a student can major in Consumer Economics and concentrate in Financial Advising. At the University of Nevada, students can major in clothing and textiles and specialize in designing industrial apparel. Graduates are becoming economic consultants, medical researchers, interior designers and corporate vice presidents.

The number of male students in the field has tripled since the early 1960's. Professors, no longer generalists who majored in home economics, are now nutritional biologists, chemists, psychologists, sociologists, designers and specialists in other fields.

"IT IS A COMMON, gross oversimplification to see us as the cookers and sewers of the world," said Helen Groove of the Home Economics Association, whose job is to visit colleges across the country accrediting home economics programs.

Sharon Wallace, the dean of the School of Home Economics at the University of Nevada and the president of the Home Economics Association, said: "We don't teach cooking. We train dieticians, for example, or restaurant managers. We don't teach sewing. We examine, let's say, what pesticides do to clothing that may harm someone's skin."

Of the more than 3200 colleges across the country, 387 offer undergraduate degrees in home economics and more than 70 have changed the name "Department of Home Economics" to "Department of Human Ecology," according to the Home Economics Association.

"We did it because the traditional concept of home economics was not broad enough." said Jerome Ziegler, Dean of the Department of Human Ecology at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., which, in 1969, became the first school to change its name.

THE FIELD OF home economics was formed in the first decade of the 1900's when a group of professionals interested in studying the family gathered for a series of conferences in Lake Placid, N.Y. In 1902, the group defined the discipline as the study of "man's physical environment.. his nature as a social being... and, especially the relationship between the two."

In the 1910's, when women were still expected to be homemakers, classes taught women how to simplify household cooking and cleaning. In the 1920's, home economics became more oriented to health and nutrition research.

"Right after World War II, women were under pressure to stay at home so the field became preoccupied with homemaking again," said Lois Lund, Dean of the Department of Ecology at Michigan State University. "But now it is an eclectic mix of disciplines."

The change in the focus of home economics classes, however, is not as evident in high schools, where teaching of the discipline remains generalized and still has much to do with cooking and sewing, according to home economists. But on both an undergraduate and graduate levels, they say, the transformation has been dramatic.

THE MOST STRIKING change at colleges and universities, according to deans of home economics departments, is the breadth of courses now being offered.

This programming is particularly evident at land grant institutes — schools that receive federal funding provided they share their research with the community. Often done through local groups called co-operative extensions, the groups offer courses, publish handbooks and operate telephone hotlines. In addition, monies from federal and other sources have made research available to home economics departments.

At Cornell, researchers are learning that nutrients may promote or inhibit the growth of tumors which in turn may influence the onset of cancer. They are also studying physical abuse in marriage and the the question of whether the IQ is a true test of intelligence.

Students electing to major in home economics have changed as well. Most notable of all, there has been an influx of men into the field.

According to data supplied by the Home Economics Association, only 1.7 percent of all undergraduates studying home economics in 1969 were men, compared with 5.8 percent in 1983. In 1964 only 3.4 percent of master's degree candidates were men, compared with 7.7 in 1983.

"I GOT SOME RIBBING from the guys at first," said Robert Curry, a 6'3" football player at the University of Missouri who majors in home economics and hopes to own and operate day care centers. "But they're catching on."

"The field is also attracting more minority students than it did 20 years ago, when the stereotype of household labor played detrimentally against men and minorities," said Mrs. Lund of Michigan State University.

What is certain is that the career opportunities available to home economists are broader than ever before.

Consider Meredith Fernstrom who received a bachelor's degree in home economics from the University of North Carolina, and a master's from the Univerity of Maryland in 1972. As a senior vice president for public responsibilty at American Express in New York, she as a liason between customers and management.

'Miracle' diets not arthritis cures

By MARIAN FARR

Good nutrition will not cure arthritis, but poor diet may compound the problem. Arthritis is a chronic inflammatory process of unknown origin which causes discomfort and pain in the joints.

In an attempt to alleviate the pain, many arthritics become the victims of food faddists, quacks or self-appointed experts who advocate miraculous cures with a special diet plan. Dietary oil, vitamins, lecithin and blackstrap molasses have all been promoted for the relief of joint pain. But there is no scientific evidence that any food or any nutrient is of special help to people with arthritis.

Still, people with arthritis should pay attention to their diets since nutritionally balanced meals benefit overall health and muscle tone, and build resistance to the wear and tear of the disease. One recent study of rheumatoid arthritis patients indicated that one out of four was malnourished and deficient in a variety of proteins, zinc and folic acid.

An inadequate diet, the effect of arthritis drugs or the disease itself may be the cause of nutritional deficiencies. Whatever the cause, people with rheumatoid arthritis should make special efforts to eat well with a varied diet of fruits, vegetables, meats, fish, poultry, grains and dairy products.

Accepting the fact that no special diet or vitamin will cure arthritis will save disappointment and frustration. It will also save money otherwise wasted on expensive arthritis foods, health foods or other fad diets that have no effect.

Marian Farr is Midland County Extension Agent, Home Economics.

Computers in kindergartens

LOWELL, Mass. (AP) — Industry's call for more computer and high technology-oriented public school programs has reached down to the kindergarten level in the Lowell school system, reports MIS Week.

According to the publication, Lowell's 27 schools have launched a major computer literacy program, beginning at the kindergarten level and continuing through high school. They stress basic skills, reading computer literacy and word processing.

It is one of the nation's first school systems to establish a local area network of computers that can expand greatly the effectiveness of teachers in reaching students, according to the publication. The network ties the classroom computers together for overall monitoring and teacher assistance.

Educator says computer skills necessary for all

Copley News Service

BERKELEY, Calif. — "Not everyone is going to read 'Ulysses,' but everyone needs to be able to read. Not everyone is going to write a book, but everyone must be able to write. And not everyone will become a computer professional, but everyone needs to learn how to use and control a computer.

"Otherwise," warns Kay Gilliland, director of EQUALS in Computer Technology at the University of California's Lawrence Hall of Science, "computers will contribute to the further polarization of our society. In that case, only a few will exercise the power given by knowledge of technology, while many flounder, unprepared to make decisions on the technical issues that will affect their lives. Unless we take strong, positive steps now, the majority of those unprepared will be women and minorities."

That is why, Gilliland pointed out to a recent annual session of the American Association for the Advancement of Science held in Los Angeles, "it is as important for today's children to learn how to use computers as it is for them to learn to read and write. And action must be taken now to make computer education available to the nation's school children or society may find itself further polarized."

EQUALS in Computer Education is a 2-year-old program that has worked with more than 900 educators in an effort to increase their awareness of the importance of equal access and experience in computer education, she said. Under the program, teachers and school administrators learn how to acquire computer equipment, help fellow staff members put the equipment to the best use and develop ways to "involve parents and the community in a school's efforts to build a quality computer education program."

And, she added, "the focus is on materials and strategies that are usable immediately in the classroom and which can be shared with other teachers. This is essential because all teachers must get the message that computer education is necessary for all students."

Gilliland's program, she said, is part of a larger program called the EQUALS Project, which has been helping young women and minorities in learning mathematics through a variety of programs, some of which are operating from satellite centers located in many regions of the nation.

The 937 educators who have attended the program since 1983 have had an opportunity to investigate new computer software and to develop skills in choosing programs for school use. They have, Gilliland said, "increased awareness of career options and developed strategies for increasing student interest in the technical fields, and they have acquired strategies to encourage equitable computer use by female and minority students who are particularly school-dependent for this learning."

Surveys of results of these studies, Gilliland said, "have identified significant changes in participants' perceptions of their abilities to handle these computer-related decisions."

She added, "There has been an increase in female enrollment in computer classes in EQUALS school from 20 percent in 1979 to 47 percent in 1984. This is greater than the increase in California schools generally over the same period."

Because the computer education movement still is so new in the nation, EQUALS teachers are finding themselves on the frontline, having to become instant experts in the effort to develop a coherent computer education plan that will meet the needs of their schools, Gilliland said. "Their experience can save their schools hours of time and costly mistakes."

Trick shop practical jokers' haven

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, Ill. (AP) — Phil Johnson pointed to a counter on the other side of his store.

"Will you put this over there for me?" he asked a young girl.

Johnson began to hand a yellow, plastic mustard container to her. When the unsuspecting girl reached for it, a mustard-colored substance squirted out, prompting her to screech and jump back a couple feet.

"Oh, I'm sorry," Johnson said. "Did I get any on you?"

But there was no need for the young shopper to worry. The substance wasn't mustard as she originally thought. Johnson tucked a yellow string back into the container, another practical joke successfully completed.

A strange way to treat a customer? Not if you're the owner of P.J.'s Trick Shop at Town and Country Mall.

But Phil Johnson isn't always all fun and games.

"I never considered myself a prankster," he said. "The only thing I do is squirt the mustard or ketchup at them."

But for anyone looking for a good prank — or for a person in search of a simple novelty item — P.J.'s Trick Shop is a joker's favorite hangout.

Johnson, who has been in business in Chicago's northwest suburbs for more than 14 years, splits his business into sections: T-shirts; practical jokes; magic; rock 'n' roll; Halloween; posters; adults-only items; and joke newspaper headlines.

San Francisco meter readers enter age of electronics

Hearst News Service

No more pencil-scrawling into heavy, leather-bound meter books stuffed with yellow pages. No more pencil smears, rained-on paper or squashed bugs between pages.

As part of a nationwide move into high-tech meter reading, the Pacific Gas & Electric Company's meter readers in San Francisco began going electronic recently. By the end of next year, the company anticipates all its 6.8 million meters in California will be read by meter readers using hand-held computers. PG&E says it will save $3 to $5 million annually.

The hand-held computer leads a meter reader, who reads an average of 450 meters a day, around his route by displaying the next address on a two-line screen. A "special instructions" button may tell him that the key to the meter room is in the manager's office on the third floor. A "hazard" key blips "Watch out for mean dog" or "Don't walk across Mrs. Jones' lawn."

Because the computer does it for him, a meter reader doesn't have to subtract numbers anymore to get the reading. If he notices that a meter's lock has been removed, he types that in for the energy theft folks to retrieve later from the computer. If Mr. Mean Jeans' pit bull died, he'll note that for the next guy who gets the route.

At the end of a day, a meter reader plugs the computer into a metal box at a PG&E office. For about five minutes, the small computer dumps its data into a nearby personal computer, which then dumps them into the giant mainframe computer that makes up the bills.

It used to take an entire day for key-punch operators to record the readings from meter books. Those 18,000 books and the 50 to 60 keypunch operators (who are being phased out by attrition) will be history in a couple years.

Other utility companies have more ambitious plans that include not only being able to read meters remotely, but control our power usage as well.

DEAR ABBY

Rumors open wounds in broken hearts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: We are grieving over the recent loss of our 19-year-old daughter. Margaret was a beautiful, popular girl with everything to look forward to. She graduated from high school with honors and was maintaining a B-plus average in college. Her interests were nutrition and physical fitness, and she hoped to go to law school. She excelled in everything she did and was a joy to us for all of her 19 years, never giving us a minute of heartache. Margaret went into a sudden coma and died a week later. We learned that a malignant brain tumor ruptured an artery, causing severe cerebral hemorrhage.

Yesterday, a friend told me that two of her neighbors were under the impression that our daughter died of a "drug overdose"! These people didn't even know her, and I can't imagine where they heard this terrible lie. Our hearts are broken enough without this vicious gossip.

Please tell your readers to keep their mouths shut when they have no facts, and to have more respect for the memory of the deceased, regardless of their age or the circumstances of their death. — HEARTBROKEN IN NEW YORK

DEAR HEARTBROKEN: Please accept my sympathy on the loss of your beloved daughter. Concerning vicious gossip: It takes a friend and an enemy working hand in hand to cut you to the core: an enemy to make up a vicious lie, and a "friend" to tell you about it.

DEAR ABBY: I'm in my first year of junior high, and I've been going with this guy for a couple of months. Now he wants a more grown-up relationship, and I'm not ready for it.

I don't want to have sex before I'm ready, but I'm afraid if I say no I will lose him. I don't want to lose him, but I don't want to be pushed into something I'm not ready for.

Should I give in and risk getting pregnant, or should I tell him how I feel and risk losing him? He is very persistent, and I like him a lot.

I really hope you put this in the paper, because a lot of girls my age are going through the same thing and we are going to have to make a choice either way. — SCARED

DEAR SCARED: What a wise (and honest) girl you are. If you have to ask, you're definitely not ready. Furthermore, any boy who would put a girl in this position is selfish, uncaring, immature and a user. Don't worry about "losing" him; tell him you're not ready for that kind of relationship, and if you lose him, consider yourself lucky.

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for publishing the letter from "Discouraged in Jay, Maine," who complained about sesame seed buns served in fast-food places.

I don't wear dentures, but I have a colostomy and must chew my food well and eat nothing that might cause a blockage. I was told that some seeds can swell considerably while in the body, causing a blockage.

It's unfortunate that there isn't a Wendy's restaurant in his town. The food at Wendy's is delicious and the buns are unseeded. — COLOSTOMATE IN JOPLIN, MO.

DEAR COLOSTOMATE: There may be one after this hits print. And the competition just might provide a choice of seeded or unseeded buns. (At least you planted the seed.)

More bottles of tainted Austrian wine discovered

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal agents are warning consumers to stop drinking Austrian wines while the government attempts to find out how much of the product has been contaminated by a poisonous chemical used in auto anti-freeze.

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms issued the warning after bureau chemists found traces of the chemical, diethylene glycol, in more brands of Austrian wine.

The agency originally reported that the chemical, used illegally to sweeten wine, had been found in four brands, bottled in 1982 and 1983.

At the time, the bureau ordered wholesalers to test the wine in their warehouses before selling it.

However, officials said they decided to further alert the public to the dangers of buying Austrian wine while the testing process is under way.

Officials said they had not received any reports of illnesses from consumers drinking Austrian wine, but they emphasized that diethylene glycol can cause ailments ranging from nausea to kidney damage and even death.

There are approximately 1,500 brands of Austrian wine sold in this country, with some of the wine selling for as much as $50 a bottle.

Bureau director Stephen E. Higgins said in a statement that the indications of further contamination were contained in preliminary lab tests, but officials would not provide details on how many additional brands were involved.

"What we are saying is don't drink any Austrian wines, period," bureau spokesman Tom Hill.

Austrian officials have arrested two individual producers and charged them with illegally putting diethylene glycol into wine. Officials in West Germany, meanwhile, have issued a list of 220 Austrian wines that they believe were contaminated.

Beware of financial planning ripoffs, experts warn

WASHINGTON (AP) — Financial planning has grown at an explosive pace in recent years, and while it provides needed help to many people, the business has also attracted swindlers, securities experts warn.

Financial planners help people organize their finances by developing a plan covering such things as securities purchases, real estate and tax planning, savings and insurance.

But the profession is relatively new and unregulated.

"As things stand today, anyone can hang out a shingle and call himself a financial planner," says H. Wayne Howell, director of the Georgia Securities Division.

A Better Business Bureau review of consumer problems in just 20 states uncovered more than $90 million in fraud and abuse by financial planners over three years.

The study found con artists calling themselves financial planners operating abusive tax shelters, phony real estate partnerships, bogus money market accounts and other schemes, according to William H. Tankersley, head of the national council of Better Business Bureaus.

Federal law requires investment advisers to register with the Securities and Exchange Commission. However, only about 10,000 are registered, out of the 200,000 financial planners that the North American Securities Administrators Association estimates are in business.

Besides, the association reports, registration doesn't mean the planner has government approval or certification, only that he or she has paid a fee and sent in a short form.

To avoid problems, choose a financial planner carefully, the experts warn.

Check with your state securities agency and Better Business Bureau for any information on a planner you are considering hiring — especially to make sure he has no criminal record or history of investment-related complaints.

The securities association suggests being particularly wary of Ponzi schemes. Those are swindles in which a few initial investors are paid interest out of the proceeds from later investors. But the later investors wind up with nothing.

Ponzi schemes can masquerade as tax shelters, precious metals or commodities investments or high-tech stock plans.

The trick is to avoid planners who urge putting money into anything with guaranteed rates of short-term interest far above prevailing market rates. The no-risk promise is the No. 1 sign of a Ponzi ripoff.

Also, avoid planners who offer no alternatives in financial investments. Pressure to steer your money into a single investment is a yellow light to be cautious.

And be wary of planners who fly solo, with only a post office box address and an answering service. It's easy for them to move on quickly leaving behind a trail of bad advice and fraud. Proper financial planning requires either computers or a strong office staff and relationships with other professionals, particularly lawyers and accountants.

Some planners charge a flat fee, others get a commission. Either way the client should get certain basic services.

These include a clearly written, individual financial plan, including a balance sheet of assets and liabilities and a projected cash flow for at least one year.

The plan should discuss the amount of risk you are willing to take and make specific suggestions for improving cash management.

There should be a range of investment choices, with the pros and cons for each, and additional advice should be available from other professionals if needed.

The securities administrators association suggests a series of questions to ask when considering hiring a planner. These include:

- How long have you been a financial planner, and how long in this community?
- Will you provide references from three or more clients you have counseled for at least two years?
- Will I be dealing directly with you, or with an assistant? (If the planner will turn over your case to a junior associate, check him out, too.)
- May I see examples of plans and reports drawn up for other investors?
- What financial planning trade groups do you belong to? (And check the claims with those groups; some recent cases of fraud have involved planners who lied about their credentials).

Among the major trade groups are the Institute of Certified Financial Planners in Denver and the International Association of Financial Planners in Atlanta. Also, they may cite the College for Financial Planning in Denver or American College in Bryn Mawr, Pa., which offer courses in financial planning.

'Spy dust' charges not expected to inhibit summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S.-Soviet rift over Moscow's alleged high-tech spy techniques probably will be no more than a minor irritant in superpower relations when President Reagan meets with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in November, some officials say.

"It shouldn't have a serious impact on the summit," said one senior official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "I'd be very hestitant to call this a make-or-break issue."

The Reagan administration complained Wednesday that the Soviet Union has been using potentially cancer-causing powder to keep track of American diplomats in Moscow.

U.S. officials who briefed reporters Wednesday said that, according to preliminary indications, the levels of the substance to which the diplomats have been exposed are very low and that none has suffered any ill effects.

The officials said the Soviets used the substance on a limited scale up to 1982 and revived it this past spring at a more intense level.

As described by U.S. officials, the Soviets have spread the dust on objects diplomats routinely touch, such as door knobs. Once "contaminated," they unknowingly leave traces of the powder during their travels.

For the KGB, traces of the substance on, say, the front door of a suspected dissident would amount to evidence that the person has had unauthorized contacts with Americans.

U.S. officials acknowledged that the timing of the announcement, coming on the heels of the administration's controversial decision to test anti-satellite weapons, could raise suspicions that it is attempting to lower expectations for the summit by creating a hostile atmosphere with Moscow.

But the officials dismissed these theories as "Machiavellian" and said the timing of the statement was dictated solely by the sequence of events. Once the administration felt it had a clear grasp of the facts, the officials said, they decided to go public after lodging an unannounced protest with the Soviets a few days ago.

The officials said there are too many issues of greater consequence for the superpowers to deal with to allow "spy dust" to dominate the summit.

Vladimir Shustov, deputy Soviet representative to United Nations, denied use of the alleged powder, and told ABC-TV's "Nightline," "I hope that it will not worsen the prospects for the future summit meetings.... I say that there are better ways to prepare for this important event."

The U.S. officials suggested that Americans and others would not be very forgiving if the Soviets' spy tracking techniques blocked forward movement on arms control or on the goal of a general easing of superpower tensions.

In Los Angeles where President Reagan is vacationing, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the matter poses "serious dangers" to U.S.-Soviet relations and that it is "entirely possible" that Reagan will raise the issue with Gorbachev. He gave the same answer when asked whether Secretary of State George P. Shultz will discuss it with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shavardnadze late next month.

At one point, Speakes appeared to absolve Gorbachev of responsibility for the alleged Soviet actions when he said that the Soviet military and security services services "seem to act as if they are under no control by the political authorities."

Later, he amended that by saying, "certainly the political leadership is responsible for the conduct of their security services."

At the State Department, spokesman Charles Redman said the United States has protested the alleged Soviet practices "in the strongest terms" and has demanded that they be terminated immediately.

A team of U.S. technical experts will leave for Moscow at the end of the month to determine the extent to which embassy employees were exposed to the substance.

Substance 'mysterious' to American scientists

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — The chemical the Reagan administration says the Soviets have used to track U.S. diplomats stationed in Russia is somewhat of a mystery substance to Western scientists trying to assess health risks connected with its use.

In announcing U.S. protests of the use of the monitoring powder, State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman said Wednesday the chemical is potentially a cancer-causing substance.

But assessing the actual risk is difficult because the chemical, formally known as 5-(4-nitro-phenyl)-2,4-pentadien-1-al or nitrophenylpentadienal, is unfamiliar to American scientists.

"We know very little about it," said Langley Spurlock, an organic chemist with the Chemical Manufacturers Association. "It's certainly not made in this country, so far as we know, as a commercial product."

Nancy Enright, a spokeswoman for the American Chemical Society, said a computer check of chemical publications showed only a few references to the chemical over the last 15 years, and nearly all of them were in papers by Russian scientists.

"Abstracts of the publications make no references to toxic effects," she said.

The substance is a member of a general class of chemicals called nitrophenyls — yellowish-brown crystals with a variety of industrial uses. For instance, some are used as indicators in chemical processes, meaning they change color with different levels of acidity or when they encounter other substances, an indication of their presence.

A number of nitrophenyls are known to be carcinogens, cancer-causing substances, or mutagens, chemicals that change the genetic material of animal cells or bacteria and cause mutations.

What other chemicals is Russia using?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Disclosure that American diplomats in Moscow have been exposed to potentially cancer-causing spy dust raises questions about much more sophisticated chemical and biological agents the Kremlin is believed to be developing, U.S. specialists say.

Such advanced materials, according to the experts, range from radioactive tracers effective in "infinitesimally small" quantities to genetically engineered viruses and bacteria resistant to all known drug treatments.

"Soviet chemical and biological experimentation today will soon give them the capability — if they don't already possess it — to use far more insidious and subtle agents to track individuals, parcels, aircraft, whatever it might be," said Neil C. Livingstone, co-author of a forthcoming study on Moscow's large-scale chemical and biological research effort.

He added that "the kind of things that we could merely contemplate a decade ago are all too do-able today."

The Reagan administration's public protest Wednesday over use of tracking chemicals to monitor contacts between U.S. Embassy personnel and Soviet dissidents marked the latest episode in a long saga of unusual — and at times bizarre — risks facing Americans assigned to Moscow.

State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman told reporters, "We have protested the practice in strongest terms and demanded that it be terminated immediately."

The State Department's emphasis on potential health risks from exposure to the chemical recalled U.S. protests that were first aired publicly in 1976 over Soviet microwave bombardment of the U.S. Embassy in Moscow.

The searchlight-like beams aimed at the embassy chancery, initially detected in 1950s, were the focus of intensive classified research efforts undertaken during the late 1960s by the State Department, the CIA and the Pentagon's Advanced Research Projects Agency.

Those studies included laboratory experimentation on monkeys as well as chromosome tests run secretly on Moscow embassy personnel — under the guise of a routine "viral study" — to try to determine whether the low-level microwave radiation might be causing genetic effects.

Following public disclosure of the microwave problem by the Ford administration in 1976, the State Department conducted a special series of medical tests to investigate abnormally high white blood cell counts. It also carried out an epidemiological study, which found no "convincing evidence" that the microwave bombardment was linked with health problems among U.S. personnel.

Other incidents involving unusual hazards for Americans in the Soviet Union have included:

— A report by two Secret Service agents that strong levels of ionizing radiation were detected at the U.S. ambassador's residence during a 1959 visit to Moscow by then-Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

— Elevated levels of cyanide found in 1977 in drinking water at two Moscow apartment buildings housing U.S. diplomats.

— Apparent drugging of two physicians accompanying Nixon's presidential delegation to the Moscow summit in May 1972. One of the doctors reportedly showed signs of severe disorientation and suffered unexpected crying fits following the Soviet visit.

Livingstone and other specialists familiar with Soviet and U.S. counterespionage activities said they were not surprised by Wednesday's disclosure about Soviet use of tracking chemicals.

"This is old technology — it's just the stepped-up activity which must be of concern to people, as well as the potential health hazard," said Livingstone, president of the Institute on Terrorism and Subnational Conflict, a Washington-based research organization.

Jack McGeorge, head of a security consulting firm in suburban Woodbridge, Va., noted that tracking chemicals are widely used in this country to help trace stolen currency and to combat industrial theft.

"This is a technique that is taught in law enforcement," he said. "We're just a lot more careful about what kinds of chemicals we use for this purpose. The Soviets apparently put performance ahead of safety."

Livingstone contended that "the Soviet intelligence establishment uses chemical and biological agents on a regular basis to alter behavior, to drug diplomats, to commit assassinations, to track people."

Joseph D. Douglass Jr., a specialist on Soviet chemical and biological capabilities with Falcon Associates Ltd., a McLean, Va., defense research firm, said of the Moscow tracking chemical episode:

"It makes you wonder about what other practices the Soviets regularly employ against visiting foreign dignitaries and diplomats which haven't yet been brought into the open."

Senators suggest retaliation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some angry senators say the United States should retaliate against the Soviet Union's use of spy dust on U.S. diplomats by shutting down the U.S. Embassy in Moscow or expelling some Soviet diplomats and agents from this country.

But others say that both superpowers have overriding interests transcending such incidents and that efforts should be made to prevent the scuttling of the November summit meeting in Geneva between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Their comments came following the Reagan administration's accusation Wednesday that the Soviets are using a chemical spy dust with cancer-causing potential to detect contacts between U.S. diplomats and Soviet dissidents.

"I would go so far as to say if they are going to put chemicals on our people over there, subject them to cancer, that we close the embassy entirely if necessary," said Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.

"It's inhuman, it's barbarous, it's unreal and in my opinion a step Americans cannot accept under any circumstances," Thurmond said. "I was shocked to hear of it."

Thurmond said he will raise the issue with Gorbachev when he and seven other senators visit Moscow at the end of the month.

The senators said the U.S. response was inadequate. A State Department spokesman said the United States has "protested the practice in strongest terms and demanded that it be terminated immediately."

Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said the U.S. protest is "insufficient expression of the seriousness with which the American people view this direct and official Soviet attack on our citizens."

Durenberger urged that all Soviet citizens "affiliated with intelligence" be expelled from the United States.

"This is clearly a criminal violation of the personal rights and human dignity of our diplomatic representatives," Durenberger said. "The Soviet government must be held liable to the affected individuals for the harm the practice may have caused."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., the intelligence panel's vice chairman, said he was angered that the State Department hadn't announced sanctions against the Soviet Union.

Leahy said the administration should immediately implement legislation sponsored by himself and Sen. William S. Cohen, R-Maine, to reduce the Soviet diplomatic contingent here "even if it means the State Department has to expell some KGB agents who are masquerading as Russian diplomats."

But Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said there is a danger of losing sight of more important U.S. goals.

"These incidents occur from time to time," Warner said. "We can't take our eye off the main target." He said that target is the forging of "equitable agreements on arms control and confidence building measures" between the two superpowers.

Malcolm Toon, a former U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union, said the disclosure was "not terribly surprising" in light of the long-term Soviet campaign of bombarding the embassy with microwaves.

Angel bullpen takes it down to the wire

By TED BATTLES

Midland's Angels closed out their next to last homestand of the season by making it two in a row over the Beaumont Gators, a hang-on-by-the-fingernails 11-9 win at Angels Stadium Wednesday night.

If this hadn't clinched the Texas League West second half pennant for El Paso, the Diablos' win over San Antonio earlier in the evening would have. Since El Paso also won the first, the Milwaukee farmhands will represent the West against the East in the TL championship playoffs.

It should have been easy for the Angels, but the bullpen, as is their custom, made it exciting right down to the last out.

Phil Stephenson's grand slam home run in the second gave lefthander Ken Angulo, 9-5, a 5-0 lead, but the Gators had whittled it to 5-3 going into the home fourth. A four-hit spree routed Beaumont starter Mike McClain, 4-8, in the fourth as the Angels scored twice to make it 7-3 and Brian Hartsock's three-run homer in the sixth made it 11-4, but the suspense was still a long way from over.

FRANK CASTRO'S solo homer, a walk and single by Eddie Miller chased Angulo with one out in the sixth and after that Midland Manager Joe Maddon's task was to find a relief pitcher who could stop the Gators before they caught up.

Maddon ran through Byron Kemmerling, nicked for a solo homer by Tom Brassil before being chased in the four-run seventh, and Spiro Psaltis, who left in the eighth after a walk and double by Eric Hardgrave with none out before Julian Gonzalez came out of the bullpen to get the job done and notch his fourth save of the season.

A run scored on an infield out to reduce Midland's once-imposing lead to 11-9 before Gonzalez got the final four outs. Even so, a hit batsman and single by Shane Mack with two out in the ninth prolonged the suspense until the final out of the three hour, 32-minute marathon.

The teams pounded out 33 hits, four homers and seven doubles between them.

Stephenson stretched his consecutive game hitting streak to 10 games with his slam to right in the second, his fifth homer of the season. It came after a two-out single by Greg Key, a hit batsman (Mike Madril) and a walk to Mark McLemore. It was the big blow of the five-run inning in which 10 men batted.

Hartsock had a double that inning and a double in the seventh to go 3-for-4. But his most damaging blow, and what proved to be the difference in the game, came in the sixth off Jeff Childers, Beaumont's second pitcher. The three-run homer came with Billie Merrifield, who had walked, and James Randall, who had delivered his third single of the night, on base.

HALOCINATIONS—Midland goes to El Paso for five games before returning home for the season's final five games starting next Tuesday. The San Diego Chicken will perform in the opener of the final homestand against San Antonio.....Hartsock's homer was his 10th of the season, an impressive total since he didn't report to the Angels until July 12...Shortstop Kevin Davis, thought to be out for the season, came off the Disabled List Tuesday and may see action tonight...Hottest bat in the Angels' lineup belongs to Merrifield, who was batting .223 July 21. Since then he has gone 47-for-116, a .405 clip, to bring his average up over .260. Wednesday he hit a single and double in three trips to extend his consecutive game hitting streak to 13 games. During that stretch he is 21-for-45 or .467....

McGee twins spinning hoop world on their fingers

AP Laserphoto

Sports Editor

After leading the University of Southern California to a couple of NCAA championships and gaining national acclaim, the McGee twins tried to cash in on their talents as pros. Unhappily for Pamela and Paula, the world was not quite ready for women's professional basketball and the Dallas Diamonds folded last winter before the players had time to really break a sweat.

The McGee twins blame the Diamonds' failure, and that of the pro league, on a lack of a platform on which to perform.

If they make it as the first females with the Harlem Globetrotters, having a platform on which to perform will, be the least of their worries.

The McGees will be in Midland next Thursday and will give Tall City fans a look at the skills they hope will earn them places with the Trotters when final camp begins next month. That will be the time of decision. The Trotters make their final choices and open the season Oct. 13 in Australia. And the McGees hope to be there.

In Midland, the McGees will be playing in the Bill Williams Tire Center/Stadium Sports All-Star Basketball Classic at the Chaparral Center. The teams will be liberally sprinkled with NBA veterans and NBA hopefuls as well as some former Midland College stars.

It's the type of game that will provide a reading for the girls against top-grade male opposition.

OF COURSE, the demands of the Trotters require showmanship as well as superior basketball skills.

"It looks pretty good," says Paula, who with Pam is in Montclair, N.J., visiting friends and playing in all-star games in the area, She adds that the McGees aren't the only girls trying out for the Trotters, "But I think our chances are good...they are looking for creditable players and I feel we are that. We have personality and we are twins. I think that gives us an edge."

At the July tryout in Charlotte, N.C., "We did a lot of scrimmaging and hop and circle drills...but most of the time it was just scrimmaging," says Paula. "Playing ability is the important thing. Anybody can develop showmanship. They feel if you can play, they can teach you the tricks."

AS FOR last year's ill-fated Dallas Diamonds venture, Paula notes that women's pro basketball is in the embryo stage. "We drew about 2,500 a game for a short season, just 11 home games. I think one of the problems was a lack of exposure. It just wasn't promoted. The media can make or break a sport...people tend to go to what they are told to see."

What surprised Paula most of all was the caliber of play in the league. "There was a lot of talent, but not big names. A lot of the girls surprised me, girls I had never heard about."

The McGee twins recognize their roles as pioneers in women's basketball. "When we started in high school, there was nobody in the stands. As seniors, we played to packed houses. It was the same at USC." Paula still has hopes for the pro game, contending there's plenty of talent around for such a league, and is confident it will catch-on eventually. She just hopes it's in time for her to be part of it.

AS FOR the Trotters' demanding travel schedule, Paula philosophizes, "Besides travel has its rewards and you get paid for it."

Both girls are 6-2 and were better than 50 per cent shooters at USC. And while they may be twins, Pam contends their style of play gives them definable identities on the floor.

"Paula is a finesse forward-guard. I'm more of a physical player and I've always played center or power forward."

Adjusting to the Trotters' style of play has not been that difficult, according to Pam. "I think the big thing for us is having the opportunity to enter a male dominated game. Basically, I think it's a case of the Trotters finally realizing they want a new dimension, something that would add to the entertainment value of their show."

Like Paula, Pam hasn't abandoned hope for a women's pro league.

"Women's basketball is viable. It just needs exposure and we didn't have the marketing necessary to put it over in Dallas. No, I haven't given up on Dallas as potential market for a franchise. Dallas is a community that appreciates its athletics and the atmosphere is good. Toward the end people were starting to come out. The big thing is to get them in the stands."

ALTHOUGH RAISED in Flint, Mich., the McGees picked USC. "When it came down to a decision, it was a case of a college that would satisfy academic needs and athletic needs. USC offered both," says Pam.

It was a good move for USC. Long a national power in football and baseball and track, USC suddenly emerged as a national power in women's basketball with the arrival of the McGee twins.

"We were fortunate in arriving when the program was just beginning to excel," says Paula. The McGees just helped speed up the process.

Turner has Red Devils back on prowl

This is the first in a series of previews on area high school football teams. Today, a look at the Rankin Red Devils. Tomorrow, Stanton.

Area Football

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

RANKIN — The falls have been long and hard for the Rankin Red Devils the past two seasons, but don't expect coach Dwayne Turner's bunch to be down too much longer.

The Red Devils may still be a year or so away from the glory days of the early 1980s and the state finals loss to Boyd in 1980, but in 1985 they're starting out on the road back after identical 2-8 seasons.

It's a young squad that Turner has taken hold of this summer, but not one short on talent, and the rest of District 6-A is going to have to take notice.

"I'm excited about the future of Rankin football," Turner says proudly upon entering his 16th season as the Red Devils' head coach. "I think we'll be real contenders this year and next year both. We could see those two bad years were coming long ago. We just didn't have the numbers or the quality.

"Everybody is picking us about fourth this season, but we feel we can compete with all of them and be district contenders."

THIS SEASON, Rankin is a much more experienced club than last season's squad, though much of that experience is still young. Four sophomores will see starting duty, including quarterback Mic McCravey, who plays both offense and defense. McCravey boasts good speed, having clocked a 50.7 in the quarter-mile as a freshman in track last season.

With McCravey directing the show, look for the Red Devils to run the football this fall, and why not with four experienced hands returning in the backfield?

Senior halfback Jim Paul Lee, converted from an end position, should cause some damage to opposing linemen with his 6-2, 180-pound frame crashing through the line. Lee joins wingback Ronnie Thomas, fullback Randy Fulton and McCravey — all starters last season — to team for a potent offensive force.

MCCRAVEY, JUST a sophomore, but already with 10 games under his belt, is quick enought to do some running himself, but it is Fulton that could shoulder the biggest load.

A 5-7, 170-pounder, Fulton blossomed into a game-breaking threat at the end of 1984, compiling over 400 yards in Rankin's final two ballgames. Although he was sidelined at the start of summer drills with a back problem, Fulton was expected to be ready once the season rolls around.

"He's a good runner with power and on traps and all," Turner said. "He's had some back problems, but we expect him to back and ready for the regular season."

Turner welcomed 11 seniors among his 32 players to camp this year, but only six are expected to open the season as starters. Joining Fulton and Lee as seniors who play both offense and defense are linemen Martin Rodriguez (6-0, 191) and Shane Lindsey (5-7, 173). End Steven Cole (6-3, 176) and defensive back/receiver Bill Day (5-7, 161) also line up on both sides of the ball.

OTHER DEFENSIVE starters for coach Turner are sophomores George Abalos (5-6, 143), Brian Cook (5-7, 148) and Bruce Hooker (5-10, 147).

On offense, the look is also young and a little inexperienced. The loss of lineman Corey Turner, who moved to Grandfalls could hurt Rankin early, but coach Turner feels he has the players to step in and do the job with juniors Paul Wells (5-11, 197) and Stephen Shultz (6-2, 201) joining the front line. Senior Joe Garcia (5-7, 176) will also see starting duty on offense.

Rankin enjoys a favorable district schedule in 1985, playing three of its four 6-A games at home. The Red Devils open with Iraan at Iraan, then hosts Grandfalls, Wink and district favorite Sanderson.

The non-district schedule includes tough 2A opponents Eldorado and Greenwood, as well as Sterling City, Water Valley and Forsan from District 8-A and Klondike from 7-A.

Rankin Red Devils

Sept. 6—Eldorado at Rankin, 8 p.m.; Sept. 13—Rankin at Sterling City, 8 p.m.; Sept 20—Rankin at Water Valley, 8 p.m.; Sept. 27—Forsan at Rankin, 8 p.m.; Oct. 4—Rankin at Greenwood, 8 p.m.; Oct. 11—Klondike at Rankin, 8 p.m.; Oct. 18—Rankin at Iraan, 8 p.m.; Oct. 25—Grandfalls at Rankin, 8 p.m.; Nov. 1— OPEN. 'Super Dog' night Friday

From Staff Reports

Midland High's Super Dog night will be held Friday with a scrimmage at Memorial Stadium. It will be followed by a chicken fried steak feed at the Midland Youth Center at which the Midland Bulldogs and yell leaders will be introduced to Boosters and fans.

Since the Bulldogs' preseason scrimmage will be in Lubbock next Friday, this will serve as the home introduction of the players. The scrimmage will begin at 6 p.m. and the MYC feed will be at 7:30 p.m. and will conclude the five days of workouts.

1917 — Pittsburgh's Carson Bigbee set a major league record — since tied — with 11 at-bats in a 22-inning game against Brooklyn. The Pirates' Elmer Jacobs pitched 16 2-3 inning in relief. The game also was the fourth consecutive extra-inning game by the Pirates, for a total of 59 innings — a National League record.

1961 — The New York Yankees' Roger Maris, en route to his record 61 home run season, became the first player to hit his 50th home run in August. He connected off California pitcher Ken McBride in a 4-3 loss to the Angels.

1984 — Dwight Gooden of the New York Mets struck out nine San Diego Padres' batters and became the 11th major league rookie to strike out 200 batters in one season.

Yankees laugh into thick of race while Angels stumble

Associated Press

If judging in pennant races had a style category, the New York Yankees would have lost ground Wednesday night. Instead, they're closer to the Toronto Blue Jays than they have been since July 22.

The second-place Yankees beat the California Angels 13-10 Wednesday in a game that featured eight errors, nine unearned runs, and a bloop single that became, effectively, a two-run homer with the help of two errors.

"I guess you could call this a laugher," said Yankee Manager Billy Martin.

Martin's club won its seventh straight game and 14th of 15 while the Blue Jays were losing to the Cleveland Indians 5-2. New York trails Toronto by only three games in the American League East after being behind by seven games just a week ago.

"The errors? They're just part of the game. That's not the best we can play," said Martin.

Dave Righetti, the eventual winning pitcher, was on the mound when two unearned runs erased a 10-8 New York lead in the bottom of the ninth inning.

A single by Juan Beniquez with one on was transformed into a two-run play by two Yankee errors that tied the game.

Beniquez blooped a single to right field. Dave Winfield's throw to third base hit Rod Carew and rolled away. Carew beat the throw home and catcher Butch Wynegar, trying to get Beniquez, threw to an uncovered third base.

AL Roundup

Rangers 5, Red Sox 3

Gary Ward belted a three-run homer in the first inning and Texas handed Boston a sixth straight loss. The Red Sox have lost 11 of 12.

Starter Jeff Russell, 1-3, got his first AL victory with help from Greg Harris, who earned his eighth save with 3 2-3 innings of one-hit ball.

The Red Sox grounded into their 127th, 128th, 129th and 130th double plays —most in the American League, while Wade Boggs hit his seventh homer.

Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, 11-11, is winless since July 14. He also lost an encounter with Jim Rice in the Boston locker room after the game.

Boyd, 145 pounds, complained that the Red Sox "don't get me any runs." Rice, 205 pounds, advised Boyd to be quiet. "I respect you and I want you to respect me," Rice said. Boyd did not and Rice gave the pitcher a shove. Boyd tried to retaliate, but the two players were restrained.

Indians 5, Blue Jays 2

Neal Heaton's six-hitter and a home run and two RBIs from Joe Carter allowed Cleveland to survive back-to-back home runs by Toronto's Jesse Barfield and Cecil Fielder in the fifth inning.

Heaton, 7-13, pitched his fourth complete game, walked four and struck out six. Doyle Alexander, 12-8, took the loss.

"We're a young team, so we try to play the same against everybody. Everybody on this team is playing for their contract next year," Heaton said.

Carter's homer was his eighth, Barfield's his 20th, and Fielder's his first in the major leagues.

Orioles 11, Mariners 8

A 10-run third inning, highlighted by Eddie Murray's two-run double and Lee Lacy's two-run single, tied the AL's season high. Fifteen Baltimore batters rallied off three Seattle pitchers on five walks, four singles, a pair of doubles and a two-run throwing error.

Dennis Martinez, 10-7, pitched 5 2-3 innings for the victory. Seattle starter Jim Beattie, 5-6, walked the first three batters in the third inning and got the loss.

Don Aase pitched the last three innings and gave up two runs for his eighth save.

Gorman Thomas, Al Cowens and Donnie Scott homered for Seattle.

Royals 2, White Sox 1

Charlie Leibrandt and Dan Quisenberry combined on a six-hitter and George Brett's 17th homer broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth inning. Leibrandt, 12-6, reached a new career high for victories in a season.

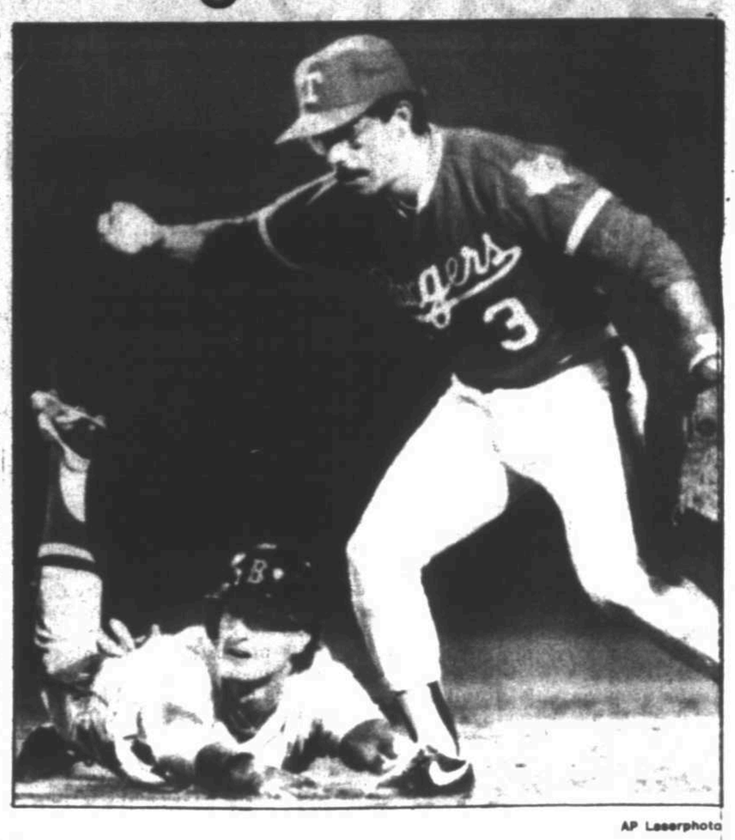

The Royals had only five hits off Chicago's Floyd Bannister and Bob James. Bannister, 5-11, has lost six straight decisions and has not won since June 10.

Brewers 3, Twins 2

Robin Yount's bases-loaded single in the bottom of the ninth inning gave Milwaukee a sweep of the three-game series with Minnesota. The Brewers rallied against Steve Howe, 1-3, and Ron Davis. Ray Burris, 8-9, pitched his sixth complete game of the year for the victory. Tim Teufel homered for Minnesota.

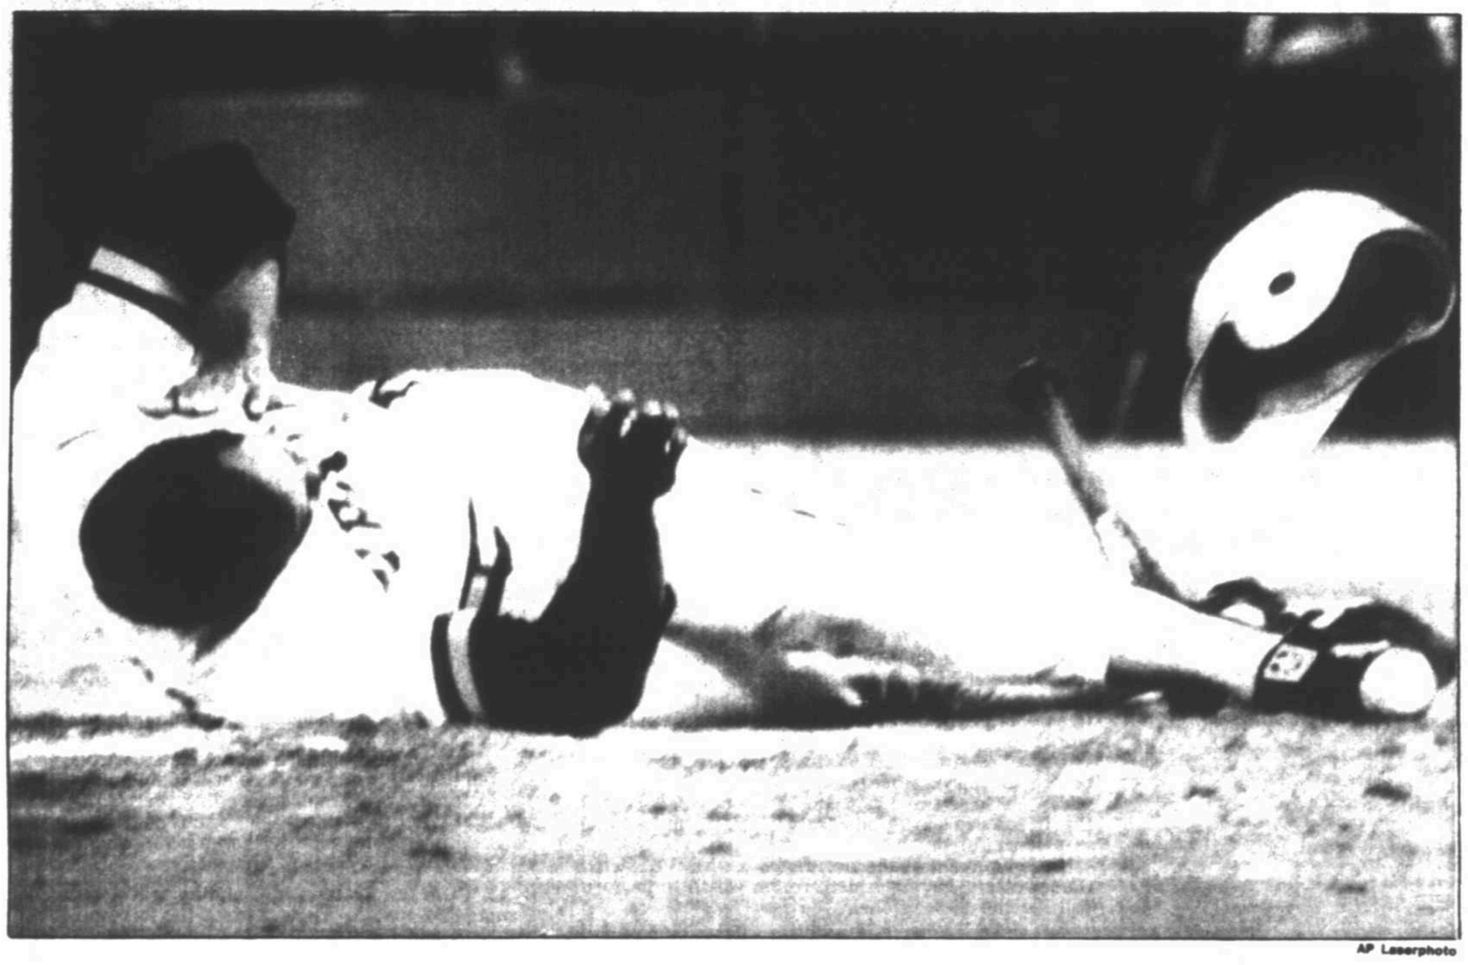

A's 4, Tigers 3

Oakland rallied for four runs in the bottom of the ninth inning against Willie Hernandez, 7-8. The winning runs scored on Steve Henderson's double off the center-field fence and a throwing error on the play by first baseman Dave Bergman.

Ninth-inning comeback changes LaPoint's mind

Associated Press

Dave LaPoint admits that the first losing record in his major-league career was starting to make him think like a loser.

When pinch-hitter Howard Johnson's homer in the bottom of the eighth inning gave the National League West-leading New York Mets a 2-1 lead, LaPoint was almost ready to concede that his record was going to fall to 5-12 for the season.

"Here we go again," LaPoint recalled thinking after giving up Johnson's homer. But some of the competitiveness that made him a key factor in St. Louis' world championship season in 1982 still shone through.

"I told myself to make some good pitches and get out of the inning and maybe something would happen," he said.

In the ninth, something good happened to LaPoint. Bob Brenly, an All-Star catcher in 1984, hit a two-run homer and Scott Garrelts stopped the Mets in the ninth for his 10th save, giving the Giants a 3-2 victory and cutting New York's lead to one-half game over St. Louis, which beat Houston 7-4.

LaPoint said that when his record fell to 5-11 despite a 3.11 earned run average, he knew he "was just going through the motions. Anytime a loss doesn't bother you, you know something is wrong."

A TALK with Mike Krukow, who has pitched in tough luck through his career, helped LaPoint.

"He told me you're going to have seasons like this," LaPoint said. "He told me you have to keep going out and doing your best."

Brenly, who has a .214 average, 17 homers and 41 runs batted in this year compared to .291 with 20 homers and 80 RBIs in 1984, struck out and grounded out twice in his first three at-bats off New York starter Ed Lynch.

"I had in the back of my mind to hit a groundball through the right side to keep the inning going," he said. "Maybe me compensating by trying to stay back worked with me being too anxious."

NL Roundup

Padres 6, Expos 2

Graig Nettles had three hits and knocked in two runs to lead San Diego's 14-hit attack and Eric Show held Montreal to eight hits.

Nettles started a string of four consecutive singles by the Padres that gave them a 2-0 lead in the third. Carmelo Martinez and Kevin McReynolds knocked in the runs in that inning.

Cardinals 7, Astros 4

Pinch-hitter Darrell Porter's three-run homer in the ninth inning gave St. Louis its victory over Houston.

Pinch-hitter Andy Van Slyke and Ozzie Smith singled in the ninth off reliever Dave Smith, 6-5, before Porter hit his seventh homer of the season.

"September is when the excitement really starts," Porter said of the close East Division race. "You never know what will happen."

Jeff Lahti, 2-1, pitched the last 1 2-3 innings for the victory after Houston tied the score 4-4 in the eighth on Mark Bailey's single.

Reds 8, Pirates 5

Nick Esasky hit a two-run homer and Pete Rose edged closer to Ty Cobb's hit record with a single and added two RBIs for Cincinnati against Pittsburgh, which failed for the ninth time this season to extend a two-game winning streak.

Rose, who was 1-for-6 and needs 14 hits to break Cobb's career record of 4,191, tied the score 1-1 in the third with an RBI groundout and made it 4-1 in the fourth with a single. Esasky's homer, his 14th of the season, gave the Reds a 3-1 edge.

Dodgers 15, Phillies 6

Los Angeles, which rolled to an eight-game lead in the West primarily with strong pitching, bombed Philadelphia with a near-record 22 hits, including five by Candy Maldonado and four each by Mike Marshall and Bob Bailor.

It was the most hits by the Dodgers since they had 22 against the Phillies on July 24, 1979. Their all-time high is 24 against Chicago on Aug. 20, 1974.

Marshall had a grand-slam homer in the first inning and added an RBI groundout in the second to make the score 7-0. It was the second time this season that Marshall hit a grand slam after the other team pitched around sluggers Pedro Guerrero and Greg Brock.

"That's a risk that sometimes works and sometimes doesn't," said Marshall. "But I guess I'd rather pitch to me too. You have to make 'em respect you, so next time they'll think before pitching around Pete."

Maldonado, batting .188 going into the game, had a homer after Marshall's grand slam in the first.

Guerrero added his 29th homer for the Dodgers, and Fernando Valenzuela, 15-8, won his eighth straight decision despite giving up three-run homers to Von Hayes and Derrel Thomas.

Cubs 9, Braves 5

Chris Speier's two-run homer broke a 5-5 tie against Atlanta in the eighth inning and Ryne Sandberg established a Cubs standard for combined speed and power with two homers and six RBIs.

Sandberg's three-run homer gave the Cubs a 3-1 lead in the third inning, he singled to tie it 5-5 in the seventh and added a homer in the ninth, giving him 20 homers this season and providing Chicago a four-run cushion.

He became the first Cubs player to have at least 20 homers and 30 stolen bases in a season. He has 38 steals.

Razorbacks' speed is key to defense

By HARRY KING
Associated Press Writer

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Buried in the University of Arkansas prospectus is an interesting, revealing quote from line coach Wally Ake.

"We proved last year size is not essential to be successful," he said.

Indeed.

In this day of 275-pound tackles and 260-pound nosemen, Arkansas had the best defense in the Southwest Conference last year with tackles that weigh 245 and 233 and a noseman that checks in at 231. The names with those numbers are Rodney Beachum, Jerryl Jones and Tony Cherico.

They're back along with six other starters from the defense that limited opponents to 121 yards per game on the ground and 12.5 points per game.

Defensive quickness is an Arkansas tradition, said head Coach Ken Hatfield, a defensive back for the Razorbacks two decades ago.

SWC Preview

"Last year, we were hungry," Hatfield said. "They paid attention to the coaches ... they had to to even stay on the field. They've got to maintain that hunger.

"LAST YEAR'S stats mean nothing now. People will be gunning for us since our defense led the league last year. If everyone on our defense doesn't come back at least 15 percent better, our defense won't be as good."

Cherico was named SWC Newcomer of the Year on defense after he made 67 tackles. His quickness, Ake said, will cause headaches for opponents. He can be the best noseman in the league, Ake said, but will have to be prepared for double team blocks and holding.

At 231, end Ravin Caldwell is a big-play man and All-American candidate, Hatfield said.

Four players are considered starters at the two inside linebacking spots. Seniors David Bazzel and Nick Miller made 113 tackles each last year. Linebacker coach says Bazzel and Miller, along with sophomores Rickey Williams and Erik Whitted, make up the best group of linebackers he has coached.

In the secondary, Kevin Wyatt and Kevin Anderson were starters at cornerback last year and Greg Gatson was a regular two years ago. Safety Greg Lasker is beginning his fourth year as a starter.

Gone are outside linebacker Mark Lee and rover Nathan Jones. David Dudley backed Lee last year while Steve Jones played behind Nathan Jones. Nathaniel White is also a possibility at rover.

OFFENSIVELY, the Razorbacks will play a couple of quarterbacks who have never completed a pass in college — sophomore Greg Thomas and fifth-year senior Mark Calcagni. They succeed Brad Taylor and Danny Nutt who passed for 1,686 yards in Hatfield's option offense.

Thomas made some leave-'em-grasping runs last year and Hatfield says Calcagni will run over anybody. Thomas can be an outstanding option quarterback, Hatfield said.

Last year, the Razorbacks' running attack consisted mostly of the fullbacks. Marshall Foreman and Derrick Thomas combined for 1,205 yards — half of what Arkansas made on the ground. Both Foreman, the darter, and Thomas, the bull, are back.

All the halfbacks return, but Arkansas had trouble getting outside last year. Bobby Joe Edmonds, wh M bV(hirt transfer J.R. Brown and freshmen Joe Johnson and James Rouse could supply swiftness.

Hatfield said Arkansas planned to use two wide receivers last year, but scrapped that when Donnie Centers was sidelined with a broken collarbone. His return should take some of the load off James Shibest, who led the Southwest Conference in receiving with 51 catches for 907 yards.

Hawkeye passer can 'Chuck it Long'

CHUCK SCHOFFNER
AP Sports Writer

IOWA CITY, Iowa — If all the optimistic projections about the 1985 University of Iowa football team bear fruit, quarterback Chuck Long will lead the Hawkeyes into the Rose Bowl, win the Heisman Trophy and promptly be nominated for sainthood.

OK, maybe that's being a little too optimistic. Long might only become governor of Iowa instead of a saint.

The point is, Long's decision to bypass the pros and play one more season with an Iowa team that also features All-American linebacker Larry Station and all-Big Ten running back Ronnie Harmon has fueled high hopes in Hawkeyeland.

Most publications have put Iowa in their preseason top 10 — Football News made the Hawkeyes No. 1 — and all cite Long's return as the main reason.

But if Long is feeling any pressure from those predictions, and from those that have him as a top Heisman Trophy candidate, he's not letting it show. In fact, he's ready to play now.

"LET'S GET on with it," Long said. "I'm tired of talking about the Heisman Trophy and the national preseason stuff. The national preseason stuff never ends up the way they say and you know what the odds are of getting the Heisman Trophy.

"There's so many good players across the country, you never know what's going to happen so I'm not going to worry about it. I'm just glad to be in the running for it. It doesn't put any pressure on me."

Long is accustomed to Heisman Trophy talk because he was mentioned as a candidate last year and finished seventh in the balloting that gave the award to Doug Flutie. That was before Long bombed Texas with six touchdown passes in Iowa's 55-17 Freedom Bowl victory.

But dealing with a prediction that his team is No. 1 in the country is something new.

"I really don't like to see us No. 1 to be honest with you," said Long, who completed 216 of 322 passes for 2,871 yards and 22 touchdowns last year. "It was fun to read, but I wish they wouldn't have done that. It's going to make it that much harder to prove it.

"BUT WE'RE not worried about it. I don't think we're going to get a big head about it because we were rated No. 1 in one publication. Pick up another one and we're No. 16 or 20. So we're not going to put a lot of stock in that."

Long said the Hawkeyes deserve to be in the nation's top 10, although he cautioned "we can't be injured and we still have to go out and prove it each week."

Injuries led to Iowa's undoing last year after the Hawkeyes appeared to be headed for the Big Ten title eight games into the season. Long and Harmon were among those who got hurt and Iowa stumbled to a 0-2-1 finish in conference play and ended up tied for fourth.

Long also warned Iowa fans that he's not infallible, even though his statistics — a 64 percent career completion figure and only one interception for every 23 passes — indicate his mistakes are few and far between.

"I'm sure I'm going to screw up, but everybody screws up," he said. "Dan Marino screws up, Joe Montana even screws up, Eric Dickerson screws up, they all screw up. You just gotta go on to the next play.

"You've got to take the good with the bad. And we've had our share of bad moments, believe me. Hopefully, nothing will end up like last year's regular season schedule."

LONG PROBABLY would have pocketed a couple of hefty paychecks already had he made himself eligible for the National Football League draft last spring, but he said he has no second thoughts about his decision to stay at Iowa.

"I wasn't ready to start when they (the pros) started anyway," he said. "They can go have their season and I'll have mine. I've still got a long life ahead of me and if everything works out right, hopefully I'll be there next year."

And if Long doesn't like pro football, he can always run for governor. Or wait for sainthood.

TENNIS

MASON, Ohio — Boris Becker used a high-powered serve to beat Brian Teacher 6-4, 6-4 and advance to the third round of the Association of Tennis Professionals Championship.

Two-time defending champion Mats Wilander of Sweden easily won his second match of the $375,000 tournament, demolishing Pavel Slozil of Czechoslovakia 6-1, 6-3. Other seeded winners were Anders Jarryd, Stefan Edberg and Joakim Nystrom of Sweden and Frenchman Yannick Noah.

GOLF

PINE VALLEY, N.J. — Peter Baker and Peter McEvoy scored a 6-and-5 victory over Randy Sonnier and Jerry Haas as Great Britain and Ireland took a surprising 2½-1½ lead over the United States after the rain-plagued opening foursome matches in the Walker Cup.

A constant heavy rain marred the 30th renewal of the world's oldest international golf competition.

The United States holds a 26-2-1 lead in the biennial competition and has never lost a match at home. It won 13½ to 10½ in 1983.

The last victory for the British and Irish team was in 1971.

TRACK

ZURICH, Switzerland — Mary Decker Slaney, unbeaten outdoors this season, held off Maricica Puica of Romania and broke the women's world mile record in the Weltklasse track and field meet.

Slaney, leading all the way after pacesetter Diana Richburg of the U.S. dropped out with two laps to go, was clocked in 4 minutes, 16.71 seconds.

Puica held the old record of 4:17.44, set two years ago.

It was Puica's first defeat in a major outdoor track race this season.

Ben Johnson of Canada and triple Olympic champion Valerie Brisco-Hooks of the U.S. won the men's and women's 100-meter dashes while Carl Lewis, the quadruple Olympic gold medalist, finished fourth in the men's 100-meter in a time of 10.31.

BASEBALL

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa.— Philip Demik's run-scoring single in the bottom of the sixth inning capped a dramatic five-run rally and gave Binbrook, Ontario, a 6-5 victory over Saudi Arabia Wednesday, lifting the Canadians into the semifinals of the Little League World Series.

Binbrook will face Seoul, South Korea, in Thursday's semifinal.

In the other semifinal, Mexicali, Mexico will face Morristown, Tenn., which defeated Minnetonka, Minn., 5-1 Wednesday behind Richie Conway's two-hitter and a home run by catcher Rocky McElheney.

FOOTBALL

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Paul Hornung is seeking $3 million from the NCAA because it refused to allow the former football great to be a commentator for college games in 1982 and 1983.

Hornung filed the lawsuit against the NCAA three years ago. The trial began Tuesday in Jefferson Circuit Court and is expected to last a week.

Hornung claims his career was damaged and the NCAA defamed him by not allowing him to work as a color analyst for Atlanta cable station WTBS.

An NCAA official told the station that the 1956 Heisman Trophy winner was rejected because he "does not personify college football" and that "he had at least one undesirable public situation while a professional player," referring to Hornung's one-year suspension from the National Football League's Green Bay Packers in 1963 because he had been placing bets on his team to win.

Childress, Oilers nearing pact; Detroit swaps for Montgomery

Associated Press

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers and first round draft choice Ray Childress apparently are near agreement on a contract that could have the third player chosen in the April 30 National Football League draft in an Oiler uniform soon.

"We're a lot closer than we were when we started today," Childrss' agent Ray Courrage said late Wednesday night. "There has been a good amount of movement on both sides. But there are still certain guarantees that we have to talk about."

Oiler General Manager Ladd Herzeg returned to the Oiler training camp at San Angelo following a session with Courrage in Dallas Wednesday.

Courrage said he planned further discussions with Herzeg today.

Childress is eager to get to training camp, Courrage said.

"He really likes what's going on now," Courrage said. "He's anxious to play.

Herzeg and started the latest round of negotiations with Childress seeking a four-year pact worth $2 million. The Oilers were offering $1.7 million.

Childress, 6-6, 267, was projected as a rookie starter at defensive end prior to the start of training camp last month...

The Philadelphia Eagles continued ridding themselves of players who are unhappy with their contracts by sending former All-Pro running back Wilbert Montgomery to the Detroit Lions just one day after they cut holdout tackle Dean Miraldi.

The Eagles traded Montgomery on Wednesday for linebacker Garry Cobb. Earlier this month, Philadelphia attempted to send Montgomery to Seattle but he failed a Seahawks' physical. But the 30-year-old running back, who has been plagued by a bad knee, passed a Lions physical and the trade was completed.

"Wilbert's not the type of player you can give the ball to 30 times a game anymore, but I think he can help us," Lions Coach Darryl Rogers said. "We needed another running Montgomery's presence could ease the pain of losing star rusher Billy Sims, who is slowly recovering from a knee injury and is on the reserve-physically- unable-to-perform list.

Montgomery, the Eagles' all-time leading ground gainer, refused to report to training camp in a dispute over renegotiation of his contract. He appeared ready to end his holdout earlier this month, but failed to show up at camp despite a promise to report.

On Tuesday, Miraldi, a starter, was waived by Philadelphia. He had told the Eagles that he was afraid the East Coast weather would damage his health.

Cobb, 28, played six seasons with the Lions after making the team as a free agent in 1979. He captained Detroit's defense the last two seasons.

Cobb, a free agent who never reported to training camp, said: "I'm satisfied with how things worked out. I got much more (money) than the Lions were offering, nearly double as a matter of fact. The contract has a lot of incentives, so if I play well, I get paid well."

Philadelphia still is without All-Pro wide receiver Mike Quick and starting defensive lineman Dennis Harrison and linebacker Jerry Robinson.

The Eagles acquired on Wednesday linebacker Tim Golden, who was cut by Indianapolis; wide receiver Judious Lewis, waived by Seattle; and wide receiver Tron Armstrong, dropped by the New York Jets...

The Cleveland Browns cut Steve Collier, an offensive tackle, and the Pittsburgh Steelers placed offensive tackle Russ Graham on injured reserve with a twisted left knee...

Seeing no alternatives on the horizon, Ralph Cindrich, the agent for Al Toon, the No. 1 draft pick of the New York Jets, has asked the National Football League team for a trade.

"Al wants to be traded," Cindrich told the New York Daily News in Thursday's editions. "The longer we wait, the less time the Jets have to obtain a top player."

"We didn't draft him to trade him," replied Jets President Jim Kensil. "We told him we didn't intend to trade him."

According to the Daily News, the Jets have offered Toon a $1.6 million package over four years, about $300,000 shy of what he is asking.

... Denver Broncos linebacker Tom Jackson was scheduled to undergo arthroscopic surgery on his left knee today, according to a spokesman for the National Football League team.

Jackson has been plagued with an inflammation in his knee throughout most of the Broncos training camp, said spokesman Barry Hawkins.

"They're going in to see if they can relieve the problem," Hawkins said Wednesday.

Jackson is in his 12th season with the Broncos.

'Too Tall' out on bond

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Ed "Too Tall" Jones, the veteran defensive end for the Dallas Cowboys, was arrested for investigation of misdemeanor drunk driving, the Ventura County sheriff's office said Wednesday.

The 6-foot-9 Jones was arrested after a sheriff's deputy spotted the football player's irregular driving on State Highway 23 and pulled him over, said Sgt. Bob Johnston.

An 11-year veteran with the National Football League team, Jones was travelling on Tierra Rejada Road when he was arrested Aug. 15. He was taken to the East Valley station and booked for investigation of drunken driving.

Jones was released after leaving a breath sample and posting $50 bond, Johnston said.

An arraignment was scheduled in Simi Valley Municipal Court for next Tuesday. Jones requested that the hearing be moved to Ventura Municipal Court, a Simi Valley court clerk said.

Bear defense spells r-e-p-e-a-t

Associated Press

The Chicago Bears, hoping for continued magic from Walter Payton and a full season from quarterback Jim McMahon, will try in 1985 to become the first team to repeat as NFC Central champion since Minnesota in 1978.

Chicago led the National Football League in defense last season in building a 10-6 record and winning its first title since 1963. The Bears defeated Washington in the playoffs before losing to San Francisco in the division finals.

Coach Mike Ditka says his goal is a Super Bowl title. "If we settle for less, we're foolish," he says. "We found out that it wasn't really that hard to get where we were last year, but it was a bit harder to go all the way."

Chicago's first title of any kind since 1963 was accomplished mainly by a defense that ranked first in the NFL.

Walter Payton finished second in the NFL with 1,684 rushing yards last season, when he also wrested the all-time rushing record from Jim Brown. Payton, 31, shows no sign of letting up as he enters his 11th season with 13,309 career yards.

BUT THE Bears ranked just 26th in pass offense, using six different quarterbacks because of injuries. Starter Jim McMahon played just nine games while throwing for 1,146 yards and eight touchdowns.

The defense featured four Pro Bowl starters and posted a record 72 quarterback sacks. But contract disputes kept several key veterans out of camp, including linebackers Mike Singletary and Al Harris, and safety Todd Bell.

Outside of Chicago and Green Bay, the division is home for three of the NFL's four new head coaches: Tampa Bay, Detroit and Minnesota, although Bud Grant is an old new coach for the Vikings, returning after a year away in retirement to pick up the pieces left by Les Steckel's regime.

Green Bay, under Forrest Gregg, is hoping to repeat the 7-1 second half of last year rather than the 1-7 first half.

The explosive offense was led by Lynn Dickey's 3,195 passing yards and 25 touchdowns. Pro Bowler James Lofton caught 62 passes for 1,361 yards, while Paul Coffman grabbed 43 passes. The rushing attack features Gerry Ellis and oft-injured Eddie Lee Ivery, with 552.

ON DEFENSE, rookie free safety Tom Flynn led the conference with nine interceptions, and the linebacking looks strong. But the line is in flux, with nose tackle Terry Jones lost for the season but end Ezra Johnson, troubled by back problems in 1984, has looking good in preseason drills.

The 58-year-old Grant, who has a career record of 161-99-5 from 1967 until 1983 with four Super Bowl appearances, will be trying to make something from a a team that finished 3-13 last season, its worst record ever.

"Our objective has to be to reach the Super Bowl," says Grant, reaching at once to the top. "But for anybody as far down as we are, it will probably take at least three years to get back."

NFL Preview

THE RETURN of quarterback Tommy Kramer, who threw for just 1,678 yards and nine touchdowns in an injury-plagued year, should produce more points.

Minnesota's deepest position is running back, where Chuck Muncie, traded by San Diego after drug problems, joins Alfred Anderson, Darrin Nelson and Ted Brown.

But Grant says the only area that doesn't need improvement is kicking. Jan Stenerud, oldest player in the NFL at 42, was 20 for 23 in field goals last season and made the Pro Bowl.

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers take the field for the first time in their nine-year history without John McKay as head coach.

Leeman Bennett, who coached the Atlanta Falcons from 1977 to 1982, takes over for McKay, who won only eight games in the past two years and was 6-10 last year.

Linebacker Hugh Green is back after missing eight games with injuries, but defensive end Lee Roy Selmon, a Pro Bowl selection the past six seasons, will sit out the year because of a herniated disc in his lower back.

The burden will fall on first-round draft choice Ron Holmes, a defensive end from Washington.

Quarterback Steve DeBerg threw for 3,554 yards and 19 touchdowns. His top receivers were Kevin House, with 76 receptions for 1,005 yards, and Gerald Carter, with 60 catches.

RUNNING BACK James Wilder was the NFL's No. 3 rusher with 1,544 yards, 13 touchdowns and a league record 407 carries. He also caught 85 passes for 685 yards.

The Detroit Lions were a sorry 4-11-1 in 1984. To make matters worse, new Coach Darryl Rogers will be without the services of leading rusher Billy Sims, who is recovering from knee surgery and will miss at least the first part of the season.

Rogers, who left Arizona State to replace Monte Clark, will choose between newly acquired Joe Ferguson and veteran Eric Hipple at quarterback.

"I like to go with one quarterback," says Rogers. That should please Lion fans tired of the endless duel between Hipple and the departed Gary Danielson for the starting job.

FERGUSON HAD 1,991 yards and 12 touchdown passes last season in Buffalo.

Whoever is throwing for Detroit will have to do so behind an offensive line that allowed 61 sacks, a situation aggravated by the holdout of top draft choice Lomas Brown, a tackle from Florida.

MEET OUR JULY NEWSPAPER CARRIER OF THE MONTH

Arnulfo Bonilla

Congratulations to our July, 1985, Carrier-of-the-Month, Arnulfo Bonilla. Arnulfo's outstanding performance since February 25, 1985, when he started his route, has been rewarded by his selection from votes cast by some of his 105 daily subscribers on Hamby, Hart, Keith, Bryan, George, and Eugene Streets.

Arnulfo will be an eighth-grader this Fall at Goddard Junior High School; he is a cornet player in the Band, enjoys riding his bicycle, purchased from route profits, and likes to play football.

Arnulfo will receive a $50.00 Savings Bond for his outstanding job.

Congratulations from the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

JAL finds faults in tail sections of three 747s

TOKYO (AP) — Following inspections on Boeing 747s ordered by the Japanese Transport Ministry last week, Japan Air Lines today reported minor faults in tail sections of three of the 24 jumbo jets it has checked so far, ministry officials said.

In a separate development, the national police said Wednesday they will investigate possible criminal negligence in the Aug. 12 crash of JAL Flight 123, which killed 520 people and led to the JAL inspections.

Officials of the Airworthiness Division of the ministry's Aviation Bureau today said JAL reported "minor findings," or minor faults, on the planes, and said the ministry would announce results of JAL's inspection later.

Airline spokesmen refused comment on the Airworthiness Division's findings, saying it was up to the ministry to make them public.

However, Japanese press reports said a JAL maintenance crew found a crack in the rudder hinge of one "older" plane with more than 15,000 takeoff-landing "cycles." The reports said the aircraft was a standard 747 leased by JAL to its wholly-owned subsidiary, Japan Asia Airways, which primarily serves Japan-Taiwan routes.

Kyodo News Service and the mass circulation Asahi Shimbun said JAL maintenance crews also found "scratches" on the surface of aft pressure bulkheads — the dish-shaped aluminum wall that helps contain pressure inside the cabin — apparently made during assembly or regular maintenance work.

A bulkhead rupture has been suggested by some investigators as a possible cause of the crash of JAL Flight 123, a 747SR, or short-range jumbo jet. The crash was aviation's worst one-plane disaster.

The crash occurred after the plane's tail fin disintegrated and its hydraulic systems failed in flight, sending the jetliner on an uncontrollable course that ended when it plowed into a ridge on Mt. Osutaka, 70 miles northwest of Tokyo.

The Transport Ministry today began its own series of on-the-spot inspections of JAL's maintenance centers.

Shiro Oshima, head of the agency's technical department, and 15 inspectors visited Tokyo International Airport at Haneda, where they examined maintenance and service reports and acquired "background" information on the service performance on JA-8119, the jet that crashed, bureau officials said.

The government inspection was to focus on repairs that were done following a 1978 incident in which the same plane scraped its tail on the runway on landing at Osaka. In making repairs, technicians of the Boeing Company, makers of the 747, replaced portions of the pressure bulkhead that divides the pressurized cabin from the non-pressurized tail section.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Third German disappears in widening spy scandal probe

BONN, West Germany (AP) — A third person has disappeared in a widening investigation of a suspected spy scandal, a spokesman for West Germany's chief federal prosecutor said Wednesday.

Alexander Prechtel identified the missing man only as "Lorenz B.," adding that Chief Federal Prosecutor Kurt Rebmann had begun an espionage investigation of him.

Prechtel said the man is an acquaintance of Ursula Richter, a missing bookkeeper who the state prosecutor has said also is being investigated in connection with suspected spying for Communist East Germany.

Ms. Richter, 52, disappeared after telling fellow employees at an exiles' lobbying group in Bonn on Friday that she was taking a one-week vacation.

The prosecutor's spokesman told The Associated Press that the missing man was "working as a messenger in the army administration offices in Bonn," but declined to say how long he had been missing.

However, the mass-circulation Bild newspaper of Hamburg said the man has been missing for three days.

Nobel prize has 99 candidates

OSLO, Norway (AP) — A record 99 candidates have been nominated for this year's Nobel Peace Prize, Jakob Sverdrup, secretary of the Norwegian Nobel Committee, said Wednesday.

"There are approximately 60 individuals among the nominated 99 candidates," he said. Sometimes organizations are nominated.

The five-member Nobel Committee never announce the names of candidates. The winner is usually announced in mid-October and award ceremonies are on Dec. 10.

Some nominations are occasionally leaked by people who have the right to propose candidates for the prize set up under the will of the late Swedish dynamite inventor, Alfred Nobel.

Seventy members of the West German national assembly are known to have once again nominated American author and humanist Elie Wiesel, who has been nominated many times before.

"Prime Minister David Lange of New Zealand has been nominated for his opposition to nuclear weapons," the Norwegian news agency Norsk Telegrambyraa said. The report did not say the source of the information or say who nominated him.

Priest: Hondurans used torture

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — An American priest says Honduran military intelligence officers subjected him to psychological torture during a two-day detention and accused him of training guerrillas and making bombs.

The Rev. John Donald, 46, of the Roman Catholic Jesuit order, told reporters Wednesday that soldiers arrested him Sunday for "investigation of crimes against the security of the state," and released him after determining that the charge was unfounded.

However, during their interrogation, the soldiers subjected him to "psychological torture," blindfolding and handcuffing him and threatening him with physical torture, Donald said.

At one point during the journey from northern Honduras to Tegucigalpa, the capital, two U.S. Army soldiers drove him and his four Honduran captors from a U.S. military camp to a Honduran military camp, he said.

"They didn't realize I was being detained, but I told one of the Americans I had a problem and I wanted him to let somebody know where I was and where I was being taken," Donald said. "He said he would do it but I don't know if he ever did or not...He knew I was being detained and he knew that I was in trouble."

The U.S. Embassy issued a statement saying: "We have no reason to believe that there was any U.S. involvement in the detention of Father Donald. However, in light of his statements today, we are looking into the matter urgently."
