Leftist guerrillas hold crippled jetliner, hostages in Colombia

CALI, Colombia (AP) — Leftist guerrillas were reported holding 74 hostages on a crippled Colombian airliner at the Cali airport today, threatening to blow up the Boeing 727 and all aboard if they were not given another plane.

Shots or explosions reportedly were heard aboard the jetliner Wednesday night when it hit an army jeep that blocked the runway as the plane attempted to take off from Cali. But it was not known if there were any injuries in the collision or in the reported "detonations" aboard the aircraft.

The collision appeared to damage the plane's landing gear and part of the fuselage, but the hijackers would not let mechanics inspect it.

A control tower official said the guerrillas were demanding another plane to take them and some of the hostages to an unspecified destination. They also demanded that the mayor and the Roman Catholic bishop of Cali be brought to the airport to negotiate with them.

The official said one of the guerrillas told the control tower: "Don't delay the matter too long. This is a warning."

Seven guerrillas seized control of the Aerotal jet with 121 other people reported aboard shortly after it took off from Bogota Wednesday afternoon on a domestic flight to Pereira, in west-central Colombia. They returned briefly to Bogota, then forced the pilot to fly to Cali, 275 miles southwest of Bogota.

The hijackers reported by the plane's radio that they were members of M-19, the nation's most active guerrilla group, and claimed they were armed with automatic weapons, fragmentation grenades and explosives.

A communique signed by M-19 indicated that the hijacking was an attempt to force the government to grant it amnesty and let the organization's leader, Jaime Bateman, run for the presidency in the May 30 election.

The guerrillas had just freed 44 women, children and elderly people Wednesday night, and the plane was starting down the runway to take off from Cali when it slammed into an army jeep that sped across the tarmac, air traffic controller Oscar Franco reported.

He said the freed passengers were still on the runway in a bus, and the bus driver told him he heard shouts and "detonations" when the plane hit the jeep. Franco said he did not know if the driver was referring to shots or explosions, and there was no other word on this.

The plane jerked to a stop after the collision, and soldiers milled around it. Franco said. The hijackers ordered the soldiers back and shouted that they would blow up the plane and everyone aboard if they did not get another aircraft.

About three hours later, the guerrillas freed an ailing man and two women, bringing to 47 the number of people released.

M-19, the April 19th Movement, is thought to have about 1,000 members and takes its name from the date that the late Gustavo Rojas Pinilla, a right-wing dictator who ruled Colombia from 1953 to 1957, lost a presidential election in 1970.

Police rescue Dozier from Red Brigades

PADUA, Italy (AP) — Police commandos burst into an apartment in this northern Italian city today and freed U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier as terrorists from the Red Brigades held a pistol to his head, Italian and U.S. officials said.

The rescue ended his 42-day ordeal in a "people's prison."

"At the time they arrived, a pistol was being held to the general's head," National Security Adviser William Clark told ABC in Washington. He said one shot was fired.

"He's a bit tired and a bit shaken by events, but in good health," said a U.S. Embassy official in Rome.

A special commando unit of the Italian security police had located the apartment Wednesday night but held off the raid until daytime for fear a night attack might endanger the 50-year-old general's life.

Five terrorists holding Dozier gave up without resistance, police said. All were Italians.

One of the police who raided the apartment told the Italian news agency ANSA "we found Dozier barefoot but in good condition."

According to U.S. officials, Italian police in recent days cracked the Red Brigades terrorist "column" which operated in the area of Verona, where Dozier was kidnapped Dec. 17.

"It was a textbook operation. They cracked the column, the people talked and they followed up every single lead. They did it right and it worked," said a U.S. official, who asked not to be identified.

Shortly after being taken to police headquarters, Dozier telephoned his wife, Judith, who left their apartment in Verona and went to West Germany about 10 days ago, U.S. officials said.

The terrorists, several of whom were dressed as plumbers when they kidnapped the NATO general, transported Dozier 40 miles east, in the direction to Venice, to this city.

Dozier is the highest-ranking U.S. military official at the NATO base in Verona.

The White House said President Reagan was awakened at 6:50 a.m. EST by William Clark, director of the National Security Council and the president's national security adviser.

"A lot of prayers have been answered. It's difficult to express gratitude to all those who assisted in his release," deputy press secretary Peter Roussel quoted Reagan as saying.

Dozier's sister, Joan Townsend, of Alvin, Texas, told a Houston radio station that she had clung to the hope he would be rescued. "We got used to the hopes. I did have a sense of calm all along that this would turn out positive," said Mrs. Townsend.

A Vatican spokesman expressed "relief and satisfaction" at the release of Dozier.

ANSA said word of Dozier's release was relayed to the head of Rome police by the prefect of Verona, the local representative of the national government, who has directed the probe of Dozier's abduction.

Interior Minister Virgilio Rognoni immediately informed President Sandro Pertini, Premier Giovanni Spadolini and U.S. Ambassador Maxwell M. Rabb.

Spadolini, who was in Palermo, Sicily, addressing a national mayor's association meeting, interrupted his speech to tell the officials, "The fight against terrorism has recorded a new success. The soldier of a friendly nation has been returned to his loved ones, to his family."

The Italian Parliament was in session at the time and the deputies burst into applause when the session was interrupted by the news.

Ambassador Rabb said he had expressed "enormous gratitude" to Italian officials for the way the investigation was conducted.

Word of Dozier's release was greeted with cheers at the U.S. Embassy in Rome where a round-the-clock crisis desk kept track of developments and coordinated U.S. Defense, State Department and NATO efforts to help the Italians find the general.

An undisclosed number of U.S. Defense and State Department specialists, using electronic monitoring equipment, assisted Italian police during the long manhunt. However, a U.S. official said there had been no specific U.S. assistance in the final operation that led to Dozier's release.

During the long captivity, Italian and U.S. officials emphasized they wouldn't negotiate with the Red Brigades because of their hard-line policy against dealing with terrorists. NATO officials confirmed earlier this month that unidentified "friends" of Dozier were offering a $2 million reward for information leading to the general's release.

On Monday, a Rome newspaper retrieved a Polaroid photo of the general, and authorities said it was "the most hopeful sign" since his disappearance that Dozier was alive.

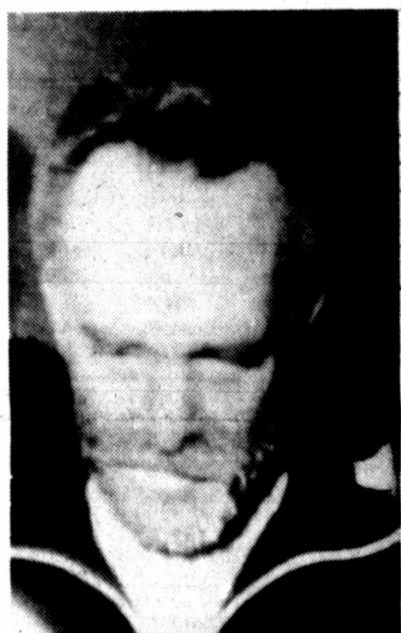

The photo showed the general, with a thick beard, in front of a flag with a five pointed star, symbol of the Red Brigades, and holding a propaganda statement. A communique that accompanied the photo neither set demands for Dozier's release nor gave any information about him.

During the 42-day hunt, police were plagued by a series of false leads and hoaxes. Investigators speculated some of the red herrings might have been arranged by terrorist sympathizers to slow down the search.

At least twice Dozier was reported to have been killed, and once authorities partially drained a lake looking for his body. But even though the Red Brigades murdered former Premier Aldo Moro in 1978 after holding him captive for nearly two months, police and officials remained convinced that Dozier was alive.

At no time did the terrorists set conditions for his release or make ransom demands. They said in communiques to newspapers that he was being put on trial before a "people's tribunal."

They issued one purported transcript of his interrogation. One U.S. military official said he was apparently giving them no more than harmless biographical information.

Dozier's sister says she felt brother would survive ordeal

ALVIN, Texas (AP) — Joan Townsend, sister of rescued Air Force Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier, said today she felt all along her brother would survive his ordeal with Italian terrorists.

"I was surprised when I got the call this morning — I was sound asleep — but I felt it was going to work out all right," said Mrs. Townsend, who said she was awakened by a radio station about 5:15 a.m.

"A local reporter called and read the communique to me and that certainly got me awake," she said from her apartment in this small town just south of Houston.

She was worried at times during her brother's six-week ordeal — "Was he warm, was he being taken care of physically?" "I figured he would be able to handle the emotional and psychological part," said Mrs. Townsend, 48.

She spent the morning answering the telephone and talking with a half dozen reporters in her living room.

She said she would not report to work today at Alvin Community College, where she is chairman of child care development.

"I'm going to stay at home and just react. I haven't had time to plan any specific activities."

Between receiving calls from reporters all over the country, she tried several times to telephone her brother in Italy but got no answer at his Verona apartment. She did not know her brother, two years older, had been taken to a hospital at a nearby NATO base.

Mrs. Townsend lives alone in the two-bedroom apartment. Her 15-year-old son, David, was there today helping her answer the telephone. He lives with his father in Alvin.

One reason Mrs. Townsend was optimistic during the time her brother was missing was the release of photographs by Red Brigade terrorists who claimed responsibility for the kidnapping.

"The first one seemed to be mockery, the way his lip was turned," she said. "The second one looked like 'I will endure this' — kind of a blank stare."

"It was good to see him but it did alarm me, he appeared so dull, such a dull look in his eye," she said.

National Guard plans mock hostage drill

About 150 members of the local National Guard, the city police tactical team and members of the Pampa High School drama class will participate in a mock hostage situation during all-day drills Sunday, Feb. 7, from 9 a.m. to about 4 p.m., according to Training NCO Kenny Kent of the National Guard here.

Kent said the streets surrounding city hall will be closed except for Frost Street and Kingsmill will be closed between Cuyler and Somerville Streets.

Kent said a scenario involving two snipers holding a hostage on the rooftop of city hall is being prepared by Police Chief J. J. Ryzman, using local high school drama students as city employees to be rescued by the local guardsmen. The drill will be performed several times to include all guardsmen.

The public is invited to watch the drills but is asked the stay out of the closed area.

Local guardsmen are members of Company B, Second Battalion of the 142nd Mechanized Infantry of the Texas National Guard, which includes rifle platoons from Borger and Shamrock.

Wreckage of Boston jet washes ashore

BOSTON (AP) — Four pieces of wreckage from a World Airways jet that skidded off a runway into Boston Harbor have washed up about 40 miles away on a Cape Cod beach, officials said today.

Divers searched again for the bodies of two passengers who were reported missing Tuesday — three days after the DC-10 ran off a runway at Logan International Airport and broke apart in the harbor.

Two of the 208 people who made it safely off the plane have reported they saw a man floating in the water about 25 feet from the plane shortly after the accident.

A Coast Guardsman also reported that he saw a body during rescue operations in the front section of the plane, which broke off and fell into the harbor during the Saturday night accident, said the Coast Guard, which did not identify the guardsman.

But the Coast Guard's Boston operations chief, Richard Griggs, said no search was made because World Airways had reported that all passengers and crew members were accounted for.

Port Authority spokeswoman Jo Ryan said the search for the two men has been confined so far to the area around the stranded plane.

"I don't believe it will shift attention to the Cape," she said of the discovery of the wreckage.

Bruce Smith, operations supervisor for the Massachusetts Port Authority, said two steel gray oxygen bottles, a piece of engine covering and a section of aircraft cabin ceiling were found on the beach Wednesday night.

"I'm told that it is consistent with a DC-10, and there was a World Airways sticker on one of the oxygen bottles," Smith said.

According to passengers, there was ice on the runway when the plane came in for a landing. Immediately after the accident, which is under investigation, airport officials described runway conditions as safe.

Ozark Country Jubilee takes to the stage tonight

The sounds of country music will fill M.K. Brown Auditorium tonight as the Ozark Country Jubilee takes to the stage with their unique brand of entertainment.

Tonight will be their second appearance for the police association. To accommodate the large crowds expected tonight, two appearances have been scheduled, the first at 6:15 p.m. and again at 8:45 p.m.

For those who were missed in the ticket sales campaign, tickets will be available at the door tonight.

All proceeds from the night of entertainment will be used to fund several community projects.

The jubilee features bluegrass musicians, comedian, sketches and all around family entertainment. A few new faces will be seen within the jubilee cast, including Stubbs Meadows who is replacing Garry White who appeared last year as the floppy-hatted comedian.

The entertainers last year informed the audience that they had supported Pampa for years.

"Why we put Pampers on every one of our babies," the jubilee members exclaimed.

Premier quits after budget defeat

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Ireland today headed for its second general election in eight months after Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald resigned when Parliament defeated his minority government's budget of sharply higher taxes and price hikes.

The six-month-old coalition of FitzGerald's right-wing Fine Gael — Family of the Irish — Party and the Labor Party lost the 81-82 vote Wednesday night in the Dail, the lower house of Parliament, when a handful of independents who had supported the government defected over the budget.
They refused to support an austerity plan calling for higher taxes on gasoline, liquor and a wide range of other goods, and cancellation of butter and milk subsidies that would have hiked prices for the staples.

President Patrick Hilery called new elections for Feb. 18 after FitzGerald telephoned him to submit his resignation.

FitzGerald, 56, told a news conference early today that he would run for re-election on the budget, claiming it was needed to ease Ireland's financial ills, including a 23 percent annual inflation rate and 11 percent unemployment.

Observers predicted he will lose if he runs on the defeated budget that would hike the price of gasoline by 21 cents to $3.62, push up the price of a pint of beer by 6 cents to $1.37 and impose an 18 percent purchase tax on clothes and footwear.

FitzGerald's chief opponent is former Prime Minister Charles Haughey, who held the premiership from December 1979 until the defeat of his Fianna Fail — Soldiers of Destiny — Party at the June 1981 election.

In addition to the budget, FitzGerald faces likely opposition from the Roman Catholic Church over his plans to end a constitutional ban on divorce, and from Irish nationalists opposed to his overtures to the Protestant majority in Northern Ireland.

Poland takes chance with price hikes

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's martial law regime takes its biggest chance to date with the public next Monday by tripling and quadrupling the controlled prices in government stores of milk, meat, butter and other staples.

Radio Warsaw announced that the Council of Ministers approved the new price schedules designed to make prices reflect the cost of production and reduce the government's huge bill for subsidies to keep prices down. The broadcast said they would take effect Feb. 1.

Sugar will jump from 6 cents a pound to 26 cents. The worker whose average wage is the equivalent of $87.50 a month will have to pay $2.39 a pound for beef sirloin if his wife can find it in the under-stocked government store. Butter will cost $1.37 a pound.

In an effort to head off the strikes, demonstrations and food riots that forced previous governments to cancel such increases, Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski's military regime has been carrying on a propaganda campaign for weeks justifying the increases.

It also promised a system of "compensations" for low-income families to ease the burden of the price increases on them, and Radio Warsaw said the Council of Ministers approved this also.

PAP, the official news agency, indicated there might be hope for more food at controlled prices in the government stores. It said Communist Party officials and representatives of the government farmers organization met and recommended measures to get private farmers to sell more of their production to the state and less on the more lucrative free market.

The government already has made allocations of seed grain dependent on farmers selling it food grain. PAP said the new measures would include an increase in farming credits and changes in farmers' taxes.

Public opposition to previous food price increases resulted in their cancellation, the ouster of Communist Party leader Wladyslaw Gomulka in 1971 and a nationwide liberalization movement in 1980 which produced the independent labor union Solidarity and 16 months of crisis that culminated in the proclamation of martial law.

However, any strikes or demonstrations in response to the latest attempt to raise prices would be a violation of the stern and strictly enforced martial law regulations that have been in effect since Dec. 13. And many of the potential leaders of public protests were rounded up when martial law was imposed and are still in detention camps.

Chamber of Commerce to offer seminars

Carl Kennedy, president of the Pampa Chamber of Commerce, announced today that the Chamber, in a continuing effort to offer seminars for the benefit of the citizens of Pampa, will conduct two seminars during the first part of February.

The first seminar will be a Defensive Driving Course. The course will be offered on Monday and Thursday, Feb. 8 and 11, from 6 to 10 p.m. each evening at Clarendon College, Pampa Center, 900 N. Frost.

Frank Anderson, teacher in the Pampa Independent School District, will instruct the course. He is a Certified Defensive Driving Instructor for the National Safety Council and has taught many Driver Education courses for the school district.

The course will be a typical Defensive Driving Course covering defensive driving, mental preparation, driving attitudes, traffic laws, driving environment, etc. Persons taking this course will be eligible for a reduction on their automobile insurance.

Kennedy stated that with inflation the way it is, the savings on insurance premiums for the next three years will be very beneficial.

Other benefits, such as referral from a judge to remove traffic tickets are also available. People enrolled in the course must have eight complete hours of classroom instruction with no exceptions being made.

The cost of the course is $20 per person with all the materials being furnished. Enrollment will be limited in each course, therefore, only those who enroll and pre-register at the Chamber office will be guaranteed a place in the class.

The second seminar will be a Firearms Use and Safety Seminar for Women.

This course has proved to be very popular over the past year, as classes have been full for each session.

The course will be taught by Detective Ken Neal of the Pampa Police Department. Neal is a Nation Rifle Association Certified Police Firearm's Instructor and currently serves in that capacity for the Pampa Police Department.

The seminar will be conducted Saturday, Feb. 13, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the training room at the Pampa Police station which is located in City Hall.

It will cover the care and use of firearms and also a self-protection in the home and all legal aspects of owning a handgun. Practical experience in using personal handguns will be gained at the Police Department (indoor) firing range, as approximately four hours will be spent at the range. The cost of this course is $15 per person and each participant is to furnish her own handgun and 50 rounds of ammunition for it.

Enrollment is limited to 20 persons and to be guaranteed a place in the course, participants must enroll in the Chamber office and pay their fee prior to the date of the course.

Kennedy stated that students may enroll in either of these seminars on the day of the class in the classroom if space is available. However, enrollment and pre-registration is currently being conducted at the Pampa Chamber of Commerce office in the Hughes Building, Telephone 669-3241.

For more information, interested persons can contact the Chamber office at the above number.

Family needs assistance

On Jan. 25, Jim and Beverly Tompkins and their three boys lost all of their personal belongings in a fire that gutted the home they were renting at 408 Lefors.

The house belongs to Fred and Betty Osbin of 407 Lefors. Mrs. Osbin expressed noticable concern for the family. She said, "Everything they own, all their clothing and furniture was destroyed. The Tompkins are staying in a trailer house in Lefors until we get the house re-built."

Jim Tompkins moved his family from Graham to Pampa on Dec. 29, 1981. He is employed by Northwest Wire and Rope. Shane, 10, and Chris, 6, attend Woodrow Wilson Elementary.

Persons interested in helping to replace household items and clothing lost may contact Betty Osbin at 669-7723.

Jim Tompkins wears 29 x 31 pants and 14 1/2 shirt; Beverly wears 30 x 32 pants and 14 blouse; Shane wears 14 regular pants and 16 or 18 shirt; Chris wears 6 slim pants and 8 shirt; add Dusty, 4, wears 4 slim pants and 8 shirt.

The family needs clothing, beds, bedding, towels, coats and furniture because their contents were not insured.

Redistricting battle prompts political potshots

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Democrats say the redistricting squabble that threatens the May primaries is the Republicans' fault. Republicans blame the Democrats.

Each party says it is watching out for the interests of black and Mexican-American voters. Each claims the other is using minorities for their own political benefits.

It's a political year in Texas, and redistricting brings out political potshots from both camps.

On Tuesday the U.S. Justice Department — a Republican-controlled agency — said Texas' plans for redistricting of the Legislature improperly diluted minority voting strength.

The plans rejected by the federal officials had been approved by the all-Democratic Legislative Redistricting Board.

Gov. Bill Clements, a Republican, agreed with the Justice Department and told Texas Attorney General Mark White to ask a three-judge federal panel in Dallas to draw the lines. That panel is considering a lawsuit filed by Republicans against House and Senate plans.

White, a Democrat seeking his party's nomination to challenge Clements, said Wednesday he would do the opposite of what Clements' asked. White said his department would ask the judges to OK the maps rejected by the Justice Department.

White said he also would ask for a meeting with U.S. Attorney General William French Smith to discuss the case. White said minority legislators and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby would accompany him to see Smith.

Monday is the filing deadline for legislative races. White says court approval of the previously rejected districts would allow the May primaries to go on as scheduled. Clements said a court version of the plans would mean postponing the filing deadline, but no delay in the primaries.

Democratic leaders on Wednesday, during a rapid succession of news conferences, said they would fight Clements' idea.

"In (Clements') letter he has urged me to surrender to an obvious political decision by the current Republican administration in Washington," said White. "If the governor and his secretary of state want to surrender, that's their privilege. But I do not intend to do so."

The Justice Department ruling, he said, was "a new low in partisan politics."

Texas Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle said the decision was a "blatantly political act."

Hobby, also a Democrat, said, "The Justice Department is merely supporting the Republican Party in their suits filed in an effort to increase their chances in the election."

Often oil field thefts by employees

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas independent oil and gas operators say often their own employees are the culprits in thefts totaling $100 million a year in crude oil and equipment.

"Dopers" seeking money to feed drug habits also are among the thieves that "will take anything left above ground in isolated" fields, says Tom Haywood of the North Texas Oil and Gas Association.

Haywood on Wednesday attributed part of the theft problem to industry growth that is so rapid employers do not have time to screen prospective employees.

Some employees are "in collusion," Haywood said, while others "turn their back at the right time, presumably for a price."

He and other independents told a news conference they would hire armed guards and special prosecutors to stop oil field losses that cost them $40 million last year, with losses by major companies accounting for at least another $60 million.

Spokesmen for more than 10,000 independents also said they would try to develop group theft insurance to protect operators they described as "risk-takers" that have "no way of covering their losses."

They announced the formation of Petroleum Industry Security Council, Inc., a statewide, non-profit organization, to direct the anti-theft effort.

Haywood said the council was considering hiring special rangers who could carry weapons, similar to agents employed by railroads and cattle raisers.

President L. Frank Pitts of the Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association and Gene Wright, chairman of TIPO's task force on theft, pledged a "vigorous special prosecution program" to secure theft indictments and convictions.

Wright stressed that the security council would act in support of — not in place of — law enforcement agencies.

Defense testimony ends in Cauble trial

TYLER, Texas (AP) — Millionaire Rex Cauble says he sold cattle not marijuana to raise the huge cash bank deposits that prosecutors contend links the wealthy rancher to an elaborate drug smuggling scheme.

Prosecutors have introduced thousands of documents to in an attempt to bolster their claim Cauble financed and profited from a scheme to smuggle 106 tons of marijuana into Texas during 1977 and 1978.

Cauble, whose attorneys rested their case Wednesday, says the documents only show his employees kept poor records.

U.S. District Judge William Steger, who told attorneys to present final arguments this morning, said he hopes the jury in Cauble's racketeering, conspiracy and embezzlement trial can begin deliberating by noon.

Cauble testified Wednesday that he and his ranch foreman, Charles "Muscles" Foster, decided to sell a large number of cattle in 1977 and 1978 because the market was good.

Cauble, 68, said Foster sold the cattle and brought him the proceeds in cash. He said the only documentation of the cash cattle sales were in the form of deposit slips and a list of buyers' names provided by Foster.

"Muscles wasn't the best record keeper in the world," Cauble said. "He knew what he was doing but he didn't keep good records."

Foster, who was targeted as a ringleader in the scheme, pleaded innocent by reason of insanity and acquitted of all charges in 1980.

Washington leaks are here to stay

Almost every president in recent times has hit the ceiling sooner or later over leaks of sensitive information from within his administration. President Reagan apparently will be no exception.

The exception would be if the crackdown he announced recently actually works.

Lie - detector tests and strict new rules about the subject matter which officials and employees may discuss with reporters can create an atmosphere of caution and restraint, but a leakproof federal establishment may be impossible to attain and is not necessarily desirable.

Mr. Reagan has good reason to be caulking the seams. His problem goes beyond the political embarrassment of having policy decisions leaked prematurely to the press. There have been leaks of classified information dealing with defense and foreign policy which can be damaging to the national interest. When the Washington Post publishes an account of what happened at a meeting of the Defense Resources Board, attended only by top military and civilian brass, the administration has a serious problem.

When the White House speaks of using "all legal methods" to ferret out offenders, we trust it is mindful of the past. Experience with the Nixon administration's notorious "plumbers" provides a casebook of how NOT to trace down leaks. Nor will the Reagan administration be inspiring public trust if its campaign results in the withholding of information when there is no justification to do so.

An administration which makes a wholesale condemnation of news leaks is verging on hypocrisy. A deliberate leak well timed and targeted can be as valuable to a government as it is to the reporter who receives it. This is one way of testing reaction to an idea before making a public commitment to embrace it.

The Reagan administration needs to keep persons privy to classified information from talking out of turn, but the news leak as a Washington phenomenon is no doubt here to stay.

By ROBERT WALTERS
WASHINGTON (NEA) — When the country's largest corporation deploys its awesome resources behind a misleading propaganda campaign, a great many people (including some who ought to know better) are going to be deceived.

That's essentially what the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. has done in promoting the myth that any attempt to break up the corporation would surely lead to staggering increases in the price of local telephone service.

The play has been used incessantly in recent years to stimulate public opposition to initiatives in Congress, the federal courts and the Federal Communications Commission that would force AT & T to divest itself of some of its subsidiaries.

Thus, it was hardly surprising that the same fraudulent formulation promptly reappeared after AT & T agreed to a major restructuring of the company in order to read an out-of-court settlement of a Justice Department antitrust suit.

The proposed divestiture would require AT & T to relinquish control over the 22 operating companies that comprise the Bell System while retaining its Long Lines Department, which provides long-distance service, and other components.

Company officials were quick to renew their longstanding propaganda campaign. "The long distance subsidy will be gone and obviously the local companies will be under a lot of pressure to raise prices," announced one AT & T spokesman.

"AT & T's long-distance charges are still supporting local service," added the president of a major Bell System company. "After divestiture, we will receive no subsidy. Local rates will have to double in the next five years."

Some of the country's major news organizations were echured by those proclamations. "Consumers to Face Higher Bills for Local Calls," said a front-page headline in The New York Times.

In fact, there is not now and never has been any long-distance "subsidy" of local telephone service. Moreover, the divestiture proposal contains no language whatever that would affect the current arrangement.

In a simplified example of a typical long-distance call, three companies are eligible to share in the revenues obtained from the customer placing the call — the two local service companies in the communities where the call is originated and terminated and the AT & T Long Lines Department.

(One or both of those local service companies could be Bell System affiliates, but there also are more than 3,500 local telephone companies throughout the country that are not affiliated in any manner with AT & T.)

The payments to the companies participating in the transmission of the call are apportioned through an arcane process, known as "separations and settlements," that assigns a value to the service provided by each company.

The formula governing the separations and settlements process is established by an obscure organization, known as the "Joint Board," composed of three officials from the Federal Communications Commission and three representatives of the state agencies that regulate telephone service.

As part of the separations and settlements process, AT & T's Long Lines Department does indeed make payments to local telephone companies. But they are payments for services rendered — providing the local connections without which all long-distance calls would originate and terminate in microwave towers rather than in people's homes and offices.

Under pressure from AT & T, the Joint Board is in the process of revising the formula to allocate more of the revenues generated by long-distance calls to AT & T's Long Lines Department and less money to local companies.

But those modifications are the result of AT & T's need to compete more effectively with MCI, ITT, Southern Pacific and other firms that in recent years have drastically undercut AT & T's prices for long-distance service.

The revised formula will require local telephone companies to raise additional revenues — but those rate increases will be wholly unrelated to the pending settlement of the antitrust suit.

The man's story

By ART BUCHWALD

I watched "Washington Mistress" on television the other night. It added to the legend that sex, power and politics are all we think about in the nation's capital.

In the show, the heroine is done wrong by an ambitious heel, a lobbyist who has political ambitions, but time to hop in bed with his "mistress" throughout the two hours, whenever he isn't having dinner with the Vice President of the United States or partying with the "right" people so he can become a Cabinet officer.

While everyone seems to dramatize the plight of the bright, young girl who comes to Washington, and is then victimized by some rat fink who just uses her as a doormat to power, no one ever talks to the young men who are seduced by the ambitious women here, intent on climbing up the ladder of success.

I interviewed one such man, who came to Washington starry-eyed, only to discover that if he didn't play the game of sexual politics, he would remain a passport clerk for the rest of his life.

Here is Arnie's story:
"I was a kid from Warren, Pennsylvania, and all my life I dreamed of working for the government. After finishing college and earning a master's degree in international relations, I got a job in the passport division.

"One day a congresswoman came in for a new passport. Our eyes met as she handed me her two photographs and I could feel goose bumps go up and down my arms. As I pasted one of the photographs in her passport she said to me, 'How would you like to have dinner tonight?'

"I knew it was wrong, but there was something about her that made me say 'yes.' Besides, I was lonely in Washington and I saw no harm in just having dinner.

That night as I was dressing, I told my roommates who was taking me out and they were flabbergasted.

"Don't you know she's married?" my best friend Charlie said. "You're asking for a pack of trouble."

"Don't worry, it's just a dinner date, and I'm sick and tired of sitting home watching television every night. I can handle it. I wasn't born in Warren, Pennsylvania, for nothing."

"We had dinner at a fancy restaurant. 'Z' knew exactly what wines to order and I couldn't believe all the famous people she said hello to in the restaurant.

"After dinner she took me for a walk to the Lincoln Memorial. The moon was shining and there was a slight breeze blowing off the Mall. I stood with my head against a pillar and suddenly she took me in her arms and said, 'I want to make love to you.' I didn't know what to do. At first I tried to push her away, but suddenly I melted into her arms. I didn't care anymore what happened. I was in love.

"What started out as an innocent one-night fling turned into an obsession. At work I could think of nothing else except 'Z.' I kept making mistakes such as stamping in people's passports 'NOT GOOD FOR TRAVEL IN SWITZERLAND' or 'THIS PASSPORT IS ONLY VALID IN ALBANIA.' My supervisor called me in and said 'Arnie, I know what's going on. It's all over town you're having an affair with Congresswoman 'Z.' Believe me, she'll break your heart."

"How can you say that?" I cried. "She promised me she was going to divorce her husband and marry me."

"She'll never leave her husband. She is a very ambitious woman and wants to be chairman of the House Subcommittee on Student Loans. Her husband's family has the connections to get her the job. Do you think she'd give that all up to marry a passport clerk?"

"A few months later when we were in bed at the Twin - Marriott Motel, 'Z' told me, 'I'm going to have your baby.'"

"I hugged her. 'Great, now we can get married.'"

"We can't right now. No one would ever accept a divorced woman as chairman of the House Subcommittee on Student Loans."

Arnie concluded, tears running down his cheeks, "I knew it was all over then. She would never marry me, because in Washington power is the name of the game, and except for issuing her a new passport without waiting in line, there was nothing I could do for her to further her congressional ambitions. It's no fun being a man in Washington — but then again it's not fun being a man anywhere."

Dear Editor:

Freedom Stands Upon Righteousness
Righteousness is the foundation upon which any free society stands.

On the contrary, any departure from right principles results in some loss of liberty.

History proves it!
From about 1930 until the present time we Americans have lost many of our freedoms through the left-handed regimentation of the federal government. At the same time some doubtful things have been legalized which have weakened the moral character of our people.

Less righteousness equals less freedom.

This is significant: There is a direct relationship between those laws making self gratification easier and other laws robbing us of some of our freedom.

A person or a nation is no more free than they are righteous. Freedom is the direct result of right living and bondage is the consequence of a self-centered lifestyle.

America today is milling about in the valley of decision (or indecision). Many voices offer many solutions to our problems. But nothing works.

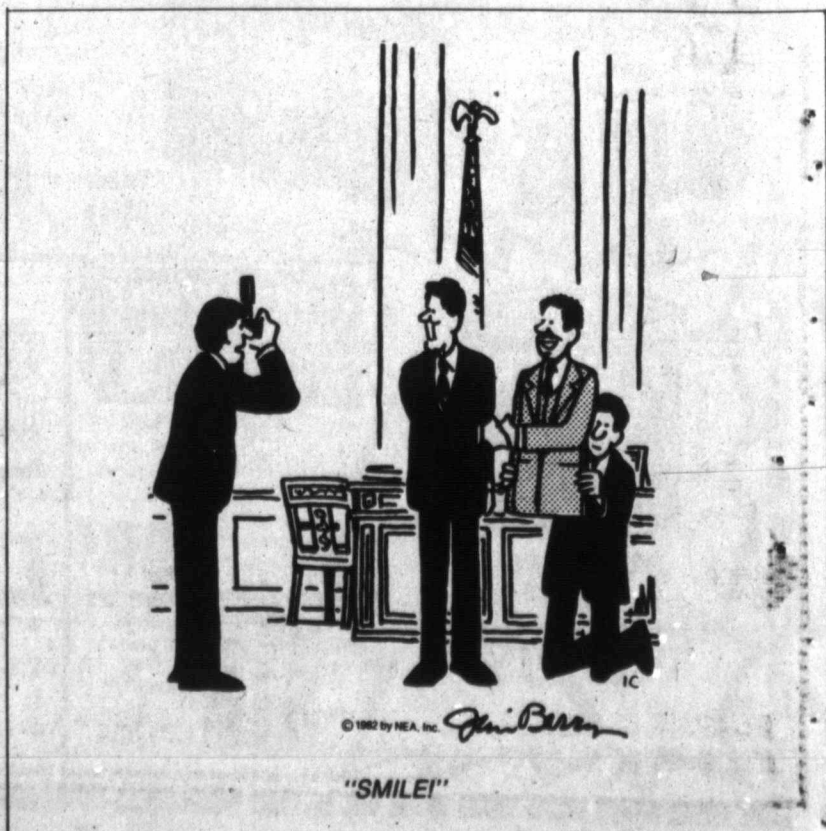

There is only one thing left for us to do:

Return to the top of the mountain as Moses did where we can meet God and receive again His clear instructions on how to maintain an orderly and free society.

But even in a society which is not completely free, we, as individuals, can be free — free in spirit. And that is real freedom. Christ said (John 8:36), "If the Son makes you free, you shall be free indeed."

Sam Godwin

Wedging into the private sector

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan said he will stick to his goal of diminishing Washington's role in a host of local and private sector activities, but he made one huge and possibly dangerous exception.

That exception was the budget deficit, the financing of which intrudes deep into what the private sector considers its territory, sopping up a limited supply of capital that otherwise might help finance industry.

Since industrial expansion has been a high priority of the Reagan administration, a contradiction seems to exist. Can industry expand, that is, if Washington won't give it the room in financial markets?

The argument has been well aired even before the president indicated he had abandoned major remedies for quickly closing the budget gap, which he now places at nearly $100 billion in this fiscal year.

Henry Kaufman has been especially outspoken about that gap. A credit authority and partner in the Salomon Brothers investment firm, Kaufman early this month said: "A confrontation between the credit needs of the U.S. Treasury and those of business is shaping up for 1982." Interest rates will rise again, he said. The rebound will be "substantial."

Paul Volcker, the Federal Reserve Board chairman, never has ceased to be concerned, seeming to feel he has but two choices for handling the credit demands of the federal government: Keep a firm hold on the money supply and watch interest rates rise; or let the printing presses run, making credit available for all, and watch inflation resume its rise.

Either way, the economy gets damaged, so again and again Volcker has sought to get the budget gap reduced. Just hours before the State of the Union Message he suggested that heavy Treasury borrowing could work against the very objectives of the Reagan administration.

Donald Regan, the Treasury secretary, apparently isn't as concerned. The marketplace, he is quoted as saying, has had several weeks to digest the news about the federal deficits, indicating that existing prices for borrowing already reflect the news. Time will tell.

Whatever might be done to return responsibilities to states and reduce the size of federal government, that deficit remains a tremendous factor in the marketplace.

Salt rubbed in civil rights wounds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civil rights leaders are accusing the Reagan administration of rubbing "salt in our wounds" by recommending that provisions in the 1965 Voting Rights Act be relaxed.

NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks said Attorney General William French Smith's testimony before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee "convince us beyond the shadow of a doubt that this administration has no interest in enforcing anything affirmatively in the field of civil rights."

But Smith responded that the right to vote "is sacrosanct and must not be compromised in any way."

Hooks and Smith testified Wednesday on proposals to renew key provisions of the voting rights statute, which expire in August.

President Reagan said he wants the provisions extended, even if it means accepting the more restrictive bill passed by the House last year.

"I believe I can support the House version... I don't know of anything in it that would justify a veto," Reagan said Wednesday in an interview with CBS News.

Nonetheless, Smith said in his testimony that the administration firmly opposes the House bill.

The biggest issue to be decided by the Senate is how easy it will be for civil rights lawyers to prove that a state, county or city discriminated to dilute the voting strength of blacks or other minority voters.

During the first of eight hearings on the extension, Smith said the administration favors a test under which a judge would have to be persuaded that a local jurisdiction intended to discriminate against minorities.

Hooks and Senate liberals like Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Charles McC Mathias Jr., R-Md., want the requirement confined to a test of whether the effects of a government action is discriminatory regardless of the motive. Such a test was included in the House bill.

Smith said the effects test would allow a judge to order a city to completely revise the way its public officials are elected even if there had never been voter discrimination.

The attorney general said it also would lead to racial quotas on city councils and schools boards and perhaps state legislatures would be required to reflect the racial makeup of the state.

Smith cited at-large elections in which whites may be elected in cities with large black populations because the system prevents minority block voting.

But Hooks said civil rights groups are uninterested in quotas or proportional representation.

"There are no sinister agendas, no hidden agendas," he said.

Hooks, a former judge, said if civil rights lawyers have to prove intent it creates "an impossible burden to achieve equity."

He said the administration's position "only rubs salt in our wounds."

Midnight deadline for auto talks

DETROIT (AP) — With a midnight deadline looming tonight for talks on wage and benefit concessions, the United Auto Workers and General Motors Corp. remain far apart on several key issues, a top UAW negotiator says.

Meanwhile, Owen Bieber, UAW vice president and head of the union's GM department, said the two sides had discussed a UAW proposal that automatically would reopen a revised contract if some economic measure — such as car sales — should improve.

He declined to elaborate. "I think we still have time to meet that deadline," Bieber said. "We obviously still have some ground to cover. We are still far apart on several key issues."

And at Ford Motor Co., where talks were to resume Friday, the automaker's top negotiator said Wednesday that bargainers may come up with a different proposal than the one for GM, which would mark the first time since World War II that there would be three wage and benefit contracts at the Big Three automakers.

Chrysler Corp. already has a lower scale of wages and benefits.

Negotiators returned to the GM bargaining table Wednesday morning and continued until 12:30 a.m. today. Bieber said "some progress" was made but he would not discuss details of the talks.

The idea of writing an automatic reopener clause into the contract was raised Sunday by UAW President Douglas Fraser during a speech to union leaders in Washington for the UAW's annual political strategy conference.

"What if the economy really takes off? What if we're wrong about the outlook in the economy?" Fraser said. "Well, the way to manage that and the way we intend to manage that is to negotiate a reopener so that given a certain set of economic circumstances — perhaps a certain level of sales of cars — we get an automatic reopener."

If accepted by GM, the reopener could increase chances for approval of any new contract by union rank-and-file members who fear the automaker would benefit unfairly in the event of a sales upturn.

UAW spokesman David Mitchell said the automatic reopener clause is something the union wants, but leaders have not made it an absolute must.

George Benson keeps getting hits

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

George Benson has a problem a lot of performers would like to have. Every time he decides to slow down and not work very much, he gets another big hit record.

That puts him in demand for more recordings right away, concerts and other appearances and projects.

Last June, he staged five sold-out concerts in London's Wembley Arena. "There was a seven-week U.S. tour, with six concerts at Carnegie Hall," Benson says. "And I did a lot of bits and pieces, running back and forth a lot. It was a very busy year. I didn't plan it to be busy. You come out with a blockbuster record and your peace will end."

Benson had a big single in 1980, "Give Me the Night," and a big single in 1981, "Love All the Hurt Away," a duet with Aretha Franklin.

"To get as far as we have with records and throw it all away by not touring seems ridiculous," Benson says. "If I wouldn't take advantage of a hit record, it is irresponsible. I try to keep things in perspective. When things do slack up, I won't be unhappy."

"But if Aretha and I make a duet album, which I'm inspired to do, I can see us doing stadium dates."

Another achievement of Benson's that other performers can envy is his records' propensity for selling in more than one category. His latest single, for instance, "Turn Your Love Around," is No. 8 and climbing on the pop best-selling chart. The Warner Brothers album it's from, "The George Benson Collection," is No. 20 and climbing on the pop chart. No. 9 and climbing on the rhythm 'n' blues chart and No. 1 on the jazz chart of Jan. 16.

He wins honors that way, too. In 1981, he won a Grammy for best rhythm 'n' blues vocal, male, for "Give Me the Night." And he won a Grammy for best rhythm 'n' blues instrumental performance for "Off Broadway" and a Grammy for best jazz vocal, male, for "Moody's Mood." Both "Off Broadway" and "Moody's Mood" are tracks on the "Give Me the Night" LP.

The current "Collection" album is being called a retrospective instead of greatest hits. Benson had the idea of taking musicians from some of those past tunes and playing the "Collection" in concert in New York and Los Angeles.

Then, he decided he could get more mileage — a possible live album — if they didn't duplicate numbers on an album just released. He says, "Earl Klugh and I recorded together on 'White Rabbit' in 1972. We did a new version of it. The rest of the tunes were jazz standards basically plus some new things."

Benson was born in Pittsburgh, lives now in Hawaii and has six children, ages 2½ to 20.

Growing up, he both played guitar and sang. He first became known in the music world as a jazz musician. The first of his four albums to be certified platinum, "Breezin'," is considered the all-time jazz album best-seller. The other three platinum LPs are "In Flight," "A Weekend in Los Angeles" and "Give Me the Night."

It is often said that when Benson was on jazz-oriented CTI Records, in the first half of the 1970s, he didn't sing. "I had several vocals," he says. "I had a disco hit, 'Superhip.' I didn't particularly like the song but it became very popular. It made the top 10 in England."

"It was written for Esther Phillips but she couldn't make the date. I was in CTI's office; they were playing; I heard it and said it was interesting. They asked if I would like to try putting a vocal on it. It was in the wrong key for me. I asked them if they would put a new instrumental track on it for me. They said absolutely not. Those were desperate days. I put my voice on her track."

Benson doesn't do things like that anymore.

Though he plays mostly pop-oriented rhythm 'n' blues these days, Benson enjoys playing jazz. "The freeness of the music really allows musicians to be what we can be. "It's nice to just lay back and swing a little. You don't have to worry too much about it; you play it like you want and play what you feel. It is freer than anything."

"You know, it's fun to play background, too. You're just doing rhythm, still you have a certain freedom there. There are a lot of different ways of connecting chord changes and making harmonic passages. I like to try as many as I can."

And what about the audience for jazz? A jazz combo's propensity to draw out a tune at length and for each instrumentalist to take a long solo cuts down the audience for jazz, Benson believes. "When people come out at night, they want to be refreshed. If you take up too much of their time with the same thing, they get restless. They like to put a little variety in their lives."

"For some segments of an audience, jazz is new. I think if it is done right, with a good feeling, they're ready for it. But I don't think jazz would be their choice to hear in most cases."

Benson recorded "Masquerade" — the record that really made him a superstar — after a producer sent it to him four times, urging him to record it. "I asked several people about it and they said it was their favorite song. Everybody had heard it except me. I'd never heard of Leon Russell, either, and didn't know a lot of people had recorded the song. It's a good thing I didn't. I wouldn't have touched it."

"It has the same chord changes as 'Angel Eyes.' You could play the tune over the same chords."

Dear Abby

Gay marriage may be happy, but it won't be legal

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Two weeks ago I received a telephone call from my youngest son (29) who has been living in San Francisco for the last three years.

He told me that a priest had just married him to his friend, Jerry — another guy. He said he has never been happier in his life, and he asked me to tell everyone in the family about it.

So far I haven't told anybody because I'm not sure how some of our relatives will take it. For my part, I love my son, and all I want is for him to be happy.

Abby, is marriage between two men legal in California? This is a new one for me. And I would like to know what kind of a "priest" would perform this kind of ceremony.

PENNSYLVANIA MOM

DEAR MOM: Congratulations. You haven't lost a son, you've gained another son. Same-sex marriages are not legal anywhere, but there are members of the clergy (Metropolitan Community Churches) who perform such ceremonies.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 18, the oldest of three children in our family. Our father died a year ago. We all felt terrible for a long time, but gradually the hurt subsided — except for Mom. She was always so active and cheerful, but since Dad died she has changed so much. She quit her part-time job and rarely leaves the house, except for church. She sleeps a lot, and when she isn't sleeping she just stays in her pajamas or housecoat, lying around the house. She's gained a lot of weight and doesn't seem to care about herself anymore.

She's still a great mother. She cooks and keeps house for us, but she doesn't want to go to the movies or even for a walk. She says nothing is any fun anymore without Dad. We have tried to get her to see a counselor or someone to help her deal with her grief, but she keeps saying she'll be all right, it just takes time. She hardly sees any of her old friends, and we have no close relatives.

She's only 42, but she acts like her life is over. Is there anything we can do to help her?

HER CHILDREN

DEAR CHILDREN: Yes. Enlist the help of your clergyman. He will know what help is available in your community. There are counselors who specialize in teaching people to learn to handle their grief. There are also support groups, comprised of others who have experienced grief and learned how to cope with it. Your mother can be helped. Please don't take no for an answer.

DEAR ABBY: "Curious" asked you to define "success" and you replied by quoting Christopher Morley: "There is only one success — to be able to spend your life in your own way." Please consider another point of view from Ralph Waldo Emerson: "To laugh often and much; to win the respect of intelligent people and the affection of children; to earn the appreciation of honest critics and endure the betrayal of false friends; to appreciate beauty; to find the best in others; to leave the world a bit better whether by a healthy child, a garden patch, or a redeemed social condition; to know even one life has breathed easier because you have lived. This is to have succeeded." Sincerely,

New way with frozen lime 'pie'

Until recently we followed the usual directions for frozen pies: crumb crusts filled with various sorts of mixtures suitable for freezing. But, we confess, we were often dissatisfied with the results. For one thing, the crust never tasted as deliciously flavorful and crunchy as we thought it should. Moreover, when the dessert was left at room temperature for a short period before serving, the crust was apt to be too cold and hard to cut while the filling became softer than we wished.

Now we've made a reversal. In the following recipe we layer the filling in the pie plate first. Then when the filling is partly frozen — but its top is still not entirely firm — we spread the surface with a crustlike crumb topping that has been prepared ahead. If you try this method, as given in the following recipe, we hope you enjoy the reversal as much as did our tasters.

FROZEN LIME 'PIE'
2 large eggs
1 teaspoon grated lime rind
1-3rd cup fresh lime juice
Topping: recipe follows
In a medium bowl with an electric beater, beat the eggs until they are thickened and lemon color. Gradually beat in the sugar, continuing to beat if necessary until thick and ivory color. Add the corn syrup, half-and-half, lime rind and lime juice, beat gently until blended.

Pour into an 8 by 2-inch cake pan; place in freezer until mixture is frozen around the edges. Turn into a bowl and beat until just smooth. Pour into a 9-inch pie plate and place in freezer. Make Topping. When the lime mixture is partly frozen, but the top is not entirely firm, press the Topping evenly over the surface. Place in freezer until Topping is frozen, then wrap appropriately and store in freezer.

Topping: In an 8-inch skillet, melt ¼ cup (½ of a 4-ounce stick) butter; off heat stir in ¾ cup finely crushed graham cracker crumbs and ½ cup (fairly coarsely broken) walnuts. Distribute as evenly as possible in a 13 by 9 by 1-inch pan (crumb mixture will not cover bottom); bake in a preheated 375-degree oven, stirring once or twice, until lightly browned — about 8 minutes. Cool completely.

Dr. Lamb

Acne a common occurrence in teen years

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Can you please tell me why teenagers get pimples? I am a 19-year-old male with pimples. I am trying to get rid of them but they will not go away. The doctor gave me some cream. It did not help. I am very disgusted with pimples and oily skin. I've had this problem since I was 17. That is two years of embarrassing acne.

DEAR READER — About 90 percent of males and almost as many females develop acne when they enter the teen years, or before. It coincides with sexual maturation. The sex hormones literally make the skin more juicy. The sebaceous glands in your skin are oil glands. They produce sebum, which is nature's own skin moisturizer. There may be nearly 6,000 of these small sebaceous glands per square inch of skin.

The sebum may form a plug in the opening of the gland which you call black heads or white heads, depending upon whether they are pigmented or not. These are beneath the surface and cannot simply be washed off with soap and water. Soaking the skin helps soften them so they will be extruded easily but the black heads are not dirt as some people erroneously think and do not mean a person is not washing adequately.

In some instances the sebum is broken down by bacteria living beneath the surface of the skin within the opening to the glands. The broken down fatty material is irritating to the skin and causes the reddened inflammation that you may have experienced.

The approach to treating acne then is to help cut down or eliminate the excess oily sebum formation. Washing or soaking the skin with a warm cloth twice a day helps — more often if oil accumulates. Antibiotics may be given to kill the bacteria, preventing the breakdown of sebum and the subsequent red pustules. And peeling agents may be used on the surface of the skin to peel off the outer layers and permit the sebum to escape naturally. These are vitamin A acid (not vitamin A pills) which is tretinoin marketed as Retin-A. The creamy salve is not so good as it adds to the greasy problem but there is a gel product that works better.

I am sending you The Health Letter number 8-2, Acne Can Be Treated, to outline management of acne for you. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I would like to know what platelets in the blood are. I always have blood counts taken. What causes them? Is it what I eat? What should I eat and what can I do? Is it serious? I'm 86 years old.

DEAR READER — Sometimes we doctors forget that our patients don't always speak our language. Be glad you have platelets. All healthy people do. They are formed by your bone marrow just as other blood cells are. The tiny cells are essential to your blood clotting mechanism.

When the wall of a blood vessel is injured the platelets clump together to form a vascular plug to prevent bleeding. Some medicines used to prevent blood clotting as in heart attacks and strokes have their effect by preventing this clumping or stickiness of the platelets.

Without platelets you cannot form a normal blood clot and there is an increased tendency to bleed. You should have from 150,000 to 350,000 in each ml of blood or about three to four times that number per teaspoon of blood.

Valentine cards have 'new look'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Romance has taken a turn to the unconventional in this year's Valentine cards, according to a designer of such greetings for 1982.

"Valentine's Day was once a very traditional holiday, and despite different fads that came and went, the sentimental American usually stuck to hearts and flowers, lace and bows, and colors of mostly reds and pinks," says Hallmark designer Miriam Cuddy. This time around, she reports, the lid is off.

"Valentine motifs and colors have gone wild; about the only rule today's greetings must follow is the trend toward cleaner and more graphic styles. More mauves, lavenders and various shades of blue will make their appearance on many cards."

One reason for the swerve from sticky sentiment, says Ms. Cuddy, is that card buyers for Valentine's Day have the youngest median age of any holiday's purchasers (upper 20s, low 30s) and these card customers are demanding smarter, more sophisticated, and even more daring, designing.

The influx of women into the work force also has had a continuing effect on card tastes, resulting in more tailored and less frilly valentines.

Football coach's high salary irks academics

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

Agriculture professor John Ross at the University of Wisconsin calls it "outrageous."

Abe Chanin, a University of Arizona journalism professor, says it is "completely out of line."

Mathematics professor Wilfred Kaplan of the University of Michigan thinks it is "inevitable," though "a sad sidelight on American society."

At best, they accept it grudgingly as a fact of academic life. At worst they are infuriated.

But overall, a sampling of campus opinion shows that a reported $287,000-a-year contract University of Pittsburgh coach Jackie Sherrill signed last week to coach Texas A&M's football team is not sitting well with college professors who can only dream about such a salary.

The terms of Sherrill's six-year contract announced by the university put the coach's base pay at $95,000 a year. But he will also receive cash and other benefits from Aggie fans and alumni, and published reports have put his total compensation at around $287,000 a year.

"If that were to happen in Madison, there'd be a faculty revolt. We'd be out marching in the streets," said Ross of Wisconsin, which pays its head coach Dave McClain a $42,000 salary plus about $12,000 in fringe benefits.

Sherrill, 38, became a hot property during five years as head coach at Pitt, where his teams compiled a 50-9-1 record. The Panthers finished 11-1 each of the last three years and were strong contenders for the national championship each time, finishing fourth in national rankings in 1981.

Still, even some athletic directors expressed shock at Sherrill's salary.

"I just wonder how they can do that," says Dave Strack, athletic director of the University of Arizona, which pays football coach Larry Smith about $59,000. "It appears that in some areas the priorities get a little mixed up."

Coaches' salaries reflect the premium colleges place on successful athletic programs nowadays. Some benefits are intangible — the added prestige and attention paid to a football power, increased alumni support.

Grim future seen if dairy surplus unloaded

WASHINGTON (AP) — A senior Agriculture Department official has painted a grim picture of what could happen to milk producers if the United States decides to compete on the world market to unload its huge dairy surpluses.

Seeley Lodwick, undersecretary for international affairs and commodity programs, told a farm group Tuesday that the United States has two options if it chooses to sell butter and other dairy products competitively on the international market. One would be to "join Australia and New Zealand with lowered price supports or emulate the heavy subsidization" practiced by the European Common Market.

Lodwick made his comments in a speech prepared for a meeting of the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives.

While Lodwick made no assertion that the Reagan administration actually would seek lower domestic supports to compete in world dairy markets, he virtually ruled out using subsidies to do so.

According to Lodwick, a reduction in the federal support price paid for surplus butter, cheese and non-fat dry milk would result in prices of manufacturing milk dropping from the current price of about $13 per 100 pounds to about $10 in the first year.

The price of manufacturing-grade milk — the basis for dairy supports — then would rise to around $11.50 "as milk supplies dropped and consumer use responded to lower retail prices," he said. Retail milk prices would decline about 14 cents a gallon and cheese about 16 cents a pound.

"In the absence of any increase in dairy product imports, the domestic price of milk

PAMPA NEWS Thursday, January 28, 1982 9

could be expected to reach an equilibrium above world price levels, but U.S. milk supply and domestic use would be in balance, and government purchases of dairy products would be negligible," Lodwick said.

If that kind of plan were carried out, it "would put a tremendous price-cost squeeze on dairy farmers and would be almost certain to result in significant income and structural changes" at the farm level, he said.

'Buck's Brats' Scout troop dazzles audiences

EDITOR'S NOTE — In their home town, they are known as Buck's Brats, but around the nation they are the Koshares, a Boy Scout troop that dazzles audiences with authentic Indian dances. The remarkable man behind their success is Buck Burshears, the only leader the Koshares have had for half-a-century.

By TAD BARTIMUS
Associated Press Writer
LA JUNTA, Colo. (AP) — On his honor, Buck Burshears has done his best to do his duty to God, his country, and thousands of boys who've looked up to him for half-a-century.

James Francis "Buck" Burshears is the only leader Boy Scout Explorer Troop 2230 has ever had. He founded it in February 1933 with 27 members and one motto: "You don't have to wait to be a man to be great. Be a great boy."

Now, at 72, the childless widower looks back on the years he dedicated to teaching other men's boys how to become men.

His devotion to "his kids" has brought him an honorary doctorate from the University of Colorado, along with scouting's highest honor, the "Silver Buffalo." But his proudest title is "Head Chief of the Koshares."

To be asked to join Troop 2230 at the age of 12 is a boy's invitation to spend the next six years learning to become a Koshare, a Pueblo Indian word meaning "fun-maker."

Burshears' Koshares, affectionately known in this southeastern Colorado railroad and ranching town as "Buck's Brats," are distinct because of the step they have taken beyond traditional scouting.

Burshears' Boy Scouts have gained a national reputation for their Indian dancing.

Since Buck's boys gave their first performance for $5 at a La Junta church supper nearly 49 years ago, the troop has attracted a wide and enthusiastic following. The youngsters now average 50 shows a year and travel thousands of miles.

With the help of a soda-pop machine, countless rehearsal hours and their tirelessly dancing feet, Burshears' boys have amassed a $3 million Indian and Western art collection. They have also helped raise another $1 million to build a showplace that not only houses the art, but provides a spectacular clubhouse.

Troop 2230 has produced the highest number of Eagle Scouts — 516 — of any troop in the nation. Ninety percent of its membership goes on to college.

Buck's Brats now live in every state of the union. Two are university presidents. Dozens are doctors, lawyers, engineers. Three are judges. More than 100 of Buck's Eagle Scouts have their doctorate degrees. One says his proficiency as a surgeon stems from sewing thousands of tiny beads on his Koshare costume.

Burshears joined the Boy Scouts in 1921, and in 1925 became La Junta's first Eagle Scout. He went off to college, came home during the Depression to help his father manage the town's stockyards, and decided to start an Explorer troop. Its first meeting place was a remodeled chicken house.

"I realized that when kids got to high school, I started to lose them, so I knew I had to find a way to hold their interest, involve them in a lifelong hobby, and capture their imagination," recalls Burshears, a big man with a hearty voice, a fat cigar and a ready handshake.

Throughout his boyhood, he had spent countless hours roaming the sagebrush in search of Spanish, Indian and U.S. Cavalry artifacts. Before long he was an amateur expert on Western and Indian lore.

"I decided that starting such a program was the key to keeping my boys interested in scouting," says Burshears. "By then I'd learned some of the Indian dances and I started teaching the kids. One thing led to another, and the Koshares were born."

Using his own funds, Burshears piled his charges into cars and hauled them off to Indian reservations in search of history.

Through his persuasion and diplomacy, Indian leaders began teaching the young white boys many of their ancient rituals and dances. Today the Koshares perform more than 200 native American dances, clad in authentic costumes handcrafted by the youths themselves.

"Buck opened up a whole new world for a lot of kids," says Frank McKenzie, 32, now a La Junta farmer. "He was always shoving culture down our throats. We would go to a city to perform, and all our free hours were spent touring art galleries, museums, seeing plays, meeting new people. And we never had to pay any of our money to go anywhere. Our dancing paid for part of it, but I know Buck must have made up the difference from his own pocket."

Ed Garlington Jr., a La

Junta attorney, credits Burshears with instilling in him a love of art, music and history. Ed's father, now 60, was one of the original Buck's Brats, and his son, Brian, 12, now dances with the troop and wears the costumes made by his father and grandfather when they were Koshares.

"What chance did average kids from a little Colorado town have of seeing the Smithsonian, traveling to both coasts, visiting Washington, seeing a dozen Broadway plays?" asks Garlington, 37.

"Buck made it all happen for us."

earliest days, the boys had been acquiring paintings, baskets, antique Indian clothing, pottery and books to preserve Indian and Western heritage. Grown-up Koshares sent back gifts from the Amazon, Southeast Asia and Africa. And Buck contributed boxes full of artifacts from some of the 56 countries he's toured.

Phillip F. Malouff Jr., another Koshare alumni from La Junta, says initially Buck left the decision to collect art up to the boys.

"We realized, through him, that we'd be buying things for posterity," says Malouff. "We'd be helping the Scouts who followed by investing, but we'd also contribute to our community, state and nation by saving all these treasures."

The soda-pop machine money goes for art. Half the performance receipts are earmarked for the boys' travel and fun expenses, the rest for investment. But Buck demands that recreation comes first.

The troop owns more than 500 paintings and 6,000 books, most of them out of print. Items of Indian and Western history overflow boxes and drawers. The collection is valued at $3 million. Burshears has willed his own collection, valued at nearly $1 million, to the Koshares.

DC-10s must be modified

WASHINGTON (AP) — Operators of all DC-10 aircraft are being told they must modify devices that control the plane's lift to assure that they operate properly even if an engine is severely damaged, the Federal Aviation Administration said Wednesday.

The FAA directive, which requires the changes to be made during normal maintenance by Jan. 31, 1983, makes mandatory modifications suggested by McDonnell Douglas Corp., the plane's manufacturer, several weeks ago.

The concern about the leading edge wing slats, which control lift in an airplane, arose after an incident involving an Air Florida DC-10 last September in which an engine broke apart during takeoff from Miami International Airport.

Although the crew was able to bring the plane to a halt on the runway, authorities later raised concern that such an incident could result in damage to the wing slats if struck by flying parts of the engine.

If that were to occur, the slat on one wing might not be properly extended, causing the plane to go into a dangerous roll and crash. That was in part the case in the crash of an American Airlines DC-10 in Chicago three years ago that killed 273 people. In that crash, one engine fell from the plane, damaging the slats.

On Jan. 6, McDonnell Douglas suggested in a bulletin to all DC-10 users that they modify the slats "as a precautionary measure to increase protection against severe external damage" to the slats if an engine breaks up.

In vast arid area, Pyramid Lake drying up

EDITOR'S NOTE — There, in the midst of the Nevada desert, a seeming mirage in an arid setting, is Pyramid Lake. "It broke upon our eyes like the ocean," wrote its discoverer nearly 140 years ago. Now, however, the lake is drying up and the local Paiute Indians, especially, are unhappy.

By MITCHELL LANDSBERG
Associated Press Writer
PYRAMID LAKE, Nev. (AP) — On the eastern shore of this stark desert lake stands a Buddha-like stone statue carved by wind and rain. The Indians call it the "Stone Mother." In ancient times, according to legend, the Stone Mother lost her two sons, who were banished because of their incessant fighting. The Stone Mother wept big rivers of tears, creating a lake out of the barren desert floor.

She sits there now, crouched on her haunches, her alkali face bowed over her thick white chest. But she has no more tears, and the water has fallen away around her.

For half-a-century, Pyramid Lake has been drying.

Its demise is not obvious to the casual observer, who, driving across the desert northeast of Reno, suddenly comes upon a broad expanse of turquoise water set gem-like in a ring of treeless mountains.

But it is a daily fact of life for the Paiute Indian tribe which has occupied the rim of the lake for an estimated 500 years, and whose ancestors, archeologists believe, settled its shores more than 3,000 years ago.

In 1906, the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation built a dam on the Truckee River — Pyramid's sole source of replenishment.

Derby Dam diverted about half the river's water into a canal, carrying the vital supply to farms in the sagebrush-covered valleys to the southeast of the lake. The valleys flourished, growing alfalfa and cantaloupes. But Pyramid began its long decline.

Roy Garcia, born in 1915 on the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, is chairman of the Pyramid Lake Paiute tribe. A stocky man with leathery skin, trim gray hair, and a peppered white moustache, he speaks with a slight accent unfamiliar to most ears.

"As far back as I can remember — we're talking about 1920 — I could say water was not really much of a problem," Garcia says, sitting behind a wide desk at the tribal office in Nixon, on the south end of the lake.

"In those years, the fish were plentiful. I don't know what year the fish started disappearing. We still had good fishing in the '30s, but in the '40s it started getting more noticeable."

For centuries, the Paiutes at the lake relied on two unique species of fish for their food: the Cui-ui, a prehistoric sucker fish found only in Pyramid, and the Lahontan cutthroat trout, the largest species of cutthroat in the world.

That was before the lake began to drop. In 1867, the U.S. Geological Survey measured the level of Pyramid Lake at 3,876 feet above sea level. A century later, the surface of the lake had dropped 87 feet.

The fish were left stranded and refused to spawn in the lake. By the late 1940s, both species had nearly vanished. Since then, fish spawning programs have helped replenish their numbers somewhat, but the Lahontan cutthroat is on the federal "threatened" species list and the Cui-ui is considered an endangered species.

Now, he says, few Paiutes fish at all, the ducks they hunted have gone elsewhere, and unemployment on the reservation is high.

The Indians, who surprised and overwhelmed a white attack party in the 1860 Battle of Pyramid Lake, now fight the settlers in court. Nine lawsuits in U.S. District Court pit the Paiutes against the Truckee River farmers, the city of Reno, the states of Nevada and California, and other interest groups.

Their principal rival is the Truckee Carson Irrigation District, the agency responsible for getting water from Derby Dam to some 2,200 farmers along the Truckee Canal.

In 1926, the Bureau of Reclamation turned over the federal Newlands Project, consisting of Derby Dam, Lahontan Reservoir and the irrigation network southeast of Pyramid — to the TCID. The farmers, then and now, have contended that they bought the Truckee River water rights fair and square; if there is a villain, they say, it is the federal government.

Dick Lattin, project manager for the TCID, says: "The government is responsible for having sold us the water rights, the land and the irrigation project."

The farmers, while publicly sympathetic to the plight of the Paiutes, will not back down.

According to Bob Green, a hydrologic engineer for the Bureau of Reclamation in Carson City, the Truckee River carries an average of 500,000 acre feet of water a year into Derby Dam. Of that, about 200,000 acre feet go into the Truckee Canal, nourishing the alfalfa fields of the TCID users, and about 300,000 acre feet go into Pyramid Lake.

Green says experts "seem to agree that 385,000 acre feet are required on the average to maintain the level of the lake."

Negotiations are under way seeking a compromise between the farmers and the Indians. The TCID has proposed that if the federal government will pay for improvements to the irrigation system, extra water might be made available for Pyramid.

Course in obverse English

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN, AP Special Correspondent, HARVARD YARD, CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — This is our first seminar in Obverse English in the winter term. Class, please come to order.

Obverse English is the splendidly individualized speech form that turns every cliché into a verbal banana peel, so that we end up with a fly in the oatmeal and a monkey wrench in the cookie jar.

From Canada, we begin today's lecture with a really world class entry that fell twisted and broken from the lips of Bob Thompson, a much quoted politician: "If this idea ever catches fire, it will snowball all across the land."

Thompson, my Canadian sources tell me, had an original way with words that threw even the Royal Canadian Mounties off the trail of his logic. His style is reminiscent of Sir Boyle Roche, the logician in the old Irish Parliament, who apologized for missing a committee meeting because of a prior speaking engagement. "Not being a bird," he told the Dail, the Irish Parliament, "I can't be in two places at once." He brought down the house one day with "The cup of Ireland's sorrows has been overflowing for centuries and isn't full yet."

It was Sir Roche who thundered out the memorable "Damn posterity, what's posterity ever done for us?" Or, as a member of the Louisiana House once phrased a similar question: "What will our future forefathers say?"

In the glory days of Yogi Berra, the Yankee dugout was often littered with fractured phrases as well as broken bats from his habit of lunging at a mot juste as if it were a low sinking curve.

When the loud speaker announced one day that only 9,000 were in attendance for a double-header against the last place club, Yogi philosophized: "If fans don't want to come out and see the games, you can't stop them."

He is supposed to have said of his favorite steak house near Yankee Stadium, "you'd have to go a long way to find a restaurant this close."

WHITE HOUSE SESSION. President Reagan holds a prism he was presented by members of the Association of Independent Television Stations Wednesday at the White House. The president used the session to discuss goals he outlined in his State of the Union message Tuesday.

(AP Laserphoto)

Reagan to go on road with new federalism

WASHINGTON (AP) — His 1982 debut before Congress behind him, President Reagan is taking his show on the road.

Reagan, who opened his all-new, 1982 economic drama before Congress on Tuesday evening, will try out his script for transferring social programs to the states on the Republican Party faithful and state legislatures in the coming months.

With Congress less than certain to rush to the president's side, his aides are charting a late winter and early spring schedule that will send Reagan around the country drumming up support for the program he outlined in his State of the Union address.

It was just such a series of trips that was planned for Reagan a year ago to build support for his 1981 plan of tax and spending cuts. The attempt on his life forced cancellation of the travel.

It is on the legislatures and governors that most of the burden of Reaganomics '82 will fall, as the states take over responsibility for welfare and food stamp programs.

The plan, said Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., "has extraordinary implications for the improvement of federal, state, and local government relationships."

In drawing up the plan, Reagan listened to his White House advisers, said to be unanimous in advocating increases in excise taxes, and heard an opposing view, according to a White House source, from "the wise men" — private economic advisers — and "the money managers" from Wall Street.

Having wound up that round of consultations with the script writers, the president will see how the show plays, if not in Peoria, well, then, in other towns around the Midwest and other sections of the nation.

Over the next two months, said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, "a very thorough process of consultations" will be undertaken, while the "nuts and bolts" of the program are developed.

Under the guidance of Rich Williamson, the president's assistant for intergovernmental relations, the White House has been contacting governors — and will have reached all very soon, Speakes said — to go over the program.

In addition, said Speakes, "the president will go all out to present his program to the people and the Congress."

Withholding taxes proposed for interest and dividends

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration will ask Congress to authorize a tax withholding program for interest and dividend payments, similar to the payroll withholding system now used for income and Social Security taxes, says Treasury Secretary Donald M. Regan.

The proposal, part of the administration's strategy to reduce the federal deficit, should increase revenues by $1.4 billion in fiscal 1983, Regan told the Joint Economic Committee Wednesday.

If Congress approves, savings and loans, banks and corporations would withhold and forward to the Treasury 5 percent of the interest and dividend payments to people with annual incomes more than $15,000, said Regan.

Similar proposals have been rejected by Congress in the past.

President Reagan also will seek congressional approval to raise $24 billion through 1984 by closing business tax "loopholes," such as tightening a law requiring profitable corporations to pay a minimum federal tax, said Regan.

In other congressional business:

—Attorney General William French Smith said the administration supports renewing the Voting Rights Act which will expire in August. But critics told the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on the Constitution that the version the administration supports would hurt efforts to bring minorities to the ballot box. They urged support for a House version passed last year.

—Administration officials said the decision by the Western allies not to renegotiate outstanding loans to Poland or grant new ones is a key element in pressuring that nation to lift martial law. But Robert D. Hormats, assistant secretary of state for economic and business affairs, told a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee the State Department had no plan for resuming economic aid to Poland if the crackdown is

Higher interest rate encourages itemizing

EDITOR'S NOTE — This is the fourth in a series of five articles written to help taxpayers prepare their 1981 tax returns. This article explains advantages of itemizing deductions.

By JIM LUTHER

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — About 30 percent of Americans itemize deductions when filing a federal tax return, but soaring interest rates and inflation in general could make the extra work worthwhile for millions more.

A couple filing a joint return usually will save money by itemizing if total deductions exceed the $3,400 standard deduction. For a single person, itemizing could pay off if deductions exceed $2,300. One drawback: The extra calculations increase the chance of error, which could delay your refund and cause even more work.

For most itemizers, the biggest deduction is for interest paid on a home mortgage. Since interest rates were at record highs for most of 1981, anyone who took out a new mortgage during the year or whose old loan rate rises with inflation could find the deduction worth more than ever.

Itemizing requires the filing of the long Form 1040 and the accompanying Schedule A, on which deductions are listed by categories.

Although you don't have to file proof of your deductions with your tax return, you must be capable of substantiating any item you claim. While there is no "magic figure" that Internal Revenue Service considers acceptable for itemized deductions, IRS statistics from 1978 tax returns serve as a guide for averages claimed by others.

Couples and individuals with incomes of $12,000 to $14,000 claimed deductions averaging 35 percent of their earnings. This included $1,004 for medical expenses, $1,255 for taxes, $1,868 for interest and $557 for contributions.

Those earning between $20,000 and $25,000 had deductions of 24 percent, including $561 for medical expenses, $1,876 for taxes, $2,280 for interest and $570 for contributions.

Again, these figures are not guidelines for what you may claim, they are simply averages of what were claimed in 1978.

A new provision on this year's returns allows a deduction for up to $1,500 of expenses paid in 1981 in connection with the adoption of hard-to-place children, such as older or handicapped children. Check IRS to see if you qualify.

Some of the more-common deductions:

—MEDICAL: Anyone who itemizes may claim half the cost of medical insurance premiums, up to $150 a year. Any medical and dental expense above that must exceed 3 percent of adjusted gross income — which for most taxpayers is the same as total income. If income is $20,000, only medical expenses above $600 may be deducted.

Once that threshold is crossed, deductible expenses include the other half of medical insurance premiums, medicine and drugs whose cost exceeded 1 percent of income, unreimbursed hospital and doctors' fees, transportation for medical purposes (actual expenses or nine cents a mile), nursing care, and such devices as eyeglasses, hearing aids and wheelchairs.

—TAXES: Including state and local income taxes; property taxes on your home and (if based on value only) on such personal property as cars and boats; and general sales taxes. To claim the sales-tax deduction, you may use tables in the instructions or (if you can prove it) list exactly what you paid.

You may not deduct license and inspection fees, excise taxes on alcohol or tobacco, gasoline taxes or assessments — such as for paving and sidewalks — that increase your property value.

—INTEREST PAID: For such non-business purposes as a home mortgage, automobile loan, credit cards, or installment loans. Do not deduct service charges, loan fees or interest paid for money borrowed to make tax-exempt investments.

—CONTRIBUTIONS: Including cash, property or out-of-pocket expenses to charitable, religious or educational organizations. A deduction for a gift of property must include a statement showing the recipient and how the value of the gift was determined. Don't deduct lodge fees, lottery tickets or the value of your time or services.

College basketball roundup

Southern Cal shocks seventh-ranked Kentucky

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

When he was coaching at Southern Cal in the Pac-10 Conference, Bob Boyd's teams played in the shadow of UCLA and generally played second fiddle.

Now that he's with Mississippi State in the Southeastern Conference, Boyd has another college basketball giant to contend with in Kentucky. But he got off on the right foot against the Wildcats Wednesday night.

"I certainly don't want to negate this fine victory, but I think we caught Kentucky a little flat," said Boyd after a shocking 56-51 upset of the nation's No. 7 team.

To make the game even more significant in Boyd's first year, it was the first victory for Mississippi State in the SEC after 16 losses.

"It was a great win for us, and it was nice to end the conference losing streak," said Boyd. "Our Kalpatrick Wells was by far the best defender on the court. I don't think there is a post man in the league that can play defense better."

Wells blocked three Kentucky shots and made two critical steals late in the game, while Butch Pierre sank key free throws for Mississippi State.

Mississippi State was leading 52-49 with 33 seconds to play when Jeff Malone hit two free throws. Kentucky's Jim Master responded with two of his own, but his team couldn't score in its last four possessions.

Mississippi State last beat a Top Ten team in 1976 when it edged Kentucky 83-76.

Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall credited Mississippi State with "an exceptionally fine game. The tempo was such that it messed up our game. They broke us down offensively and defensively. Their defense intimidated us. They did what they had to do to win, and they deserve it."

In other games involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 1 Missouri whipped Iowa State 86-73. No. 2 North Carolina defeated Clemson 77-72. No. 3 Virginia downed Wake Forest 69-66. No. 4 DePaul outclassed St. Louis 99-80. No. 13 Alabama beat Auburn 67-65. Oklahoma upset No. 14 Kansas State 56-53. No. 15 Tennessee nipped Georgia 66-64 and No. 20 Villanova wallowed LaSalle 117-82.

The Top Ten Ricky Frazier collected 21 points and four other Missouri players scored in double figures as the Tigers defeated Iowa State. The Tigers, playing their first game since taking over the No. 1 spot, improved their record to 17-0 for the season and 6-0 in the Big Eight. Iowa State was led by Ron Harris' 20 points.

"Our players didn't react any differently," said Missouri Coach Norman Stewart of the No. 1 ranking. "It was great the way our players came out on to the court very loose and it showed in the way we shot the ball. I thought we played better in the first half than in our last two to three games."

Jimmy Black and Matt Doherty each scored a career-high 21 points as North Carolina overcame a nine-point deficit in the second half to defeat Clemson.

The scoring honors were especially welcome because Doherty did not score in the last game against Georgia Tech and Black scored only three points. Doherty, who averages 8.2 points, was 8 of 16 from the floor. Black, averaging 7.1, was 8 of 11.

Tim Mullen scored a career-high 21 points as Virginia held off Wake Forest. Mullen, a 6-foot-5 forward, got 12 of his points in the first half when Virginia twice spurred to 11-point leads. The Cavaliers made those leads stand up, although the Demon Deacons trimmed the margin to two on several occasions, including a 68-66 score with six seconds left.

Virginia guard Othell Wilson then provided the final margin with the first of two free throws and 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson blocked Scott Davis' shot at the buzzer.

Terry Cummings contributed six of his 24 points in a 12-2 spurt midway through the opening half, leading DePaul to an easy triumph over St. Louis. The victory, DePaul's 12th in a row, was the 66th career triumph for Blue Demons Coach Ray Meyer. The 66-year-old Meyer moved into a tie with John Wooden for fifth place among all-time winningest college coaches.

Gold wins overtime thriller in Optimist girls basketball action

City tournament games got underway Wednesday night at Optimist Gym as the girls played two games which was highlighted by an exciting overtime win for the Gold over the Maroon by a 51-37 count.

The regulation game was tied at 37-all at its conclusion and the Gold scored 14 points in a three-minute overtime while the Maroon was unable to score, but as Paul Harvey would say—here is the rest of the story.

The Maroon started the game with only five players and were able to stay with the Gold throughout the contest until the waning minutes of the fourth period.

First, the Maroons' high scorer, Deenya Waters, fouled out with three minutes remaining, then a short time later Kristi Brock fouled out, but still the Maroon was holding onto a meager one-point lead.

Then with just 15 seconds remaining, little Keitha Clark hit an eight-foot jumper for the Maroon, giving them a three-point lead.

The Gold quickly threw the ball in and while bringing it upcourt, Clark committed her fifth foul, sending the game's high scorer, Lisa Lindsey, to the foul line. Lindsey hit the first shot, cutting the margin to two, missed the second shot, but it was tipped in just before the final buzzer to send the game into overtime.

With only two players remaining in the game for the Maroon, Megan Acfield and Melinda Richter, the Gold had its own way and came out with the victory.

Lisa Lindsey led all scorers, hitting 17 field goals and one foul shot for 35 points. Keitha Clark had 16 markers to lead the Maroon team.

In an earlier contest, the Green team stopped the Red team, 24-12. Hope Henson led the victors with 12 points, while Leslie McQueen with eight topped the Red team.

Action will continue tonight in this double-elimination tourney, which will end this Saturday night. First game tonight will begin at 6 p.m., followed by a second game at 7 p.m. There will also be boys' action tonight, beginning at 8:30 when the Celtics, 3-0, will attempt to continue their 40-game unbeaten streak against the 2-0 Spurs.

In a boys' game last night, the Bullets scored their first victory after two defeats, taking a 37-14 decision over the Lakers. Leading the way for the winners was Troy Owens with 13 and Dustin Miller with 12. Jason Farmer also pitched in eight points for the Lakers.

Skellytown basketball roundup

Skellytown won one of three games with McLean in junior high basketball action Monday.

Skellytown won the seventh-grade boys' game with Keith Tice leading the way for the Little Bucks with eight points. Joe Brown and Rabbit Rogers had six points apiece. Shelby Davis had four points and Freddie Hutchinson, two.

Clint Herndon led the Cubs with eight points, followed by Andrew Harris, four; Mark McCarty, two, and Bob Patman, one.

McLean jumped out to a 12-0 enroute to a 26-19 win over Skellytown in the seventh-grade girls' game.

Lee Ann Tate was McLean's high scorer with 11 points.

Jean Ann Rice had seven points while Wendy McDowell, Dedra Watson, Tanya Cummings and Shawn Crockett added two points apiece.

High point girl for Skellytown was Sissy Giddeon with eight points. Lori Marlar had six points, Esther Gallegos, three, and Lorien Woods, two.

McLean won the eighth-grade boys' game, 39-22, with M. Gately and D. Via scoring 12 points apiece for the Cubs.

The Little Bucks led at halftime, 15-13, but went scoreless in the third quarter while McLean took the lead with eight points.

D. Adamson added 10 points for McLean. Kirk Anderson and Russell Littlefield added three and two points respectively.

Ty Cross led the Little Bucks with 10 points. Brent Bridwell and Rabbit Rogers had four points apiece, Todd O'Dell, two, and Kane Barrow, two.

In another basketball outing, Skellytown junior high teams made a clean sweep of Lefors in three games.

Skellytown defeated Lefors, 25-10, in the seventh-grade boys' game.

Joe Brown led Skellytown with seven points. Rabbit Rogers and Freddie Hutchinson had six points apiece. Keith Tice, Mike Holloway and Shelby Davis added two points apiece.

The Little Does won the eighth-grade contest, 20-12. Lori Marlar was high scorer for Skellytown with seven points. Sissy Giddeon added five points. Jo Lyne Russell and Esther Gallegos had three points apiece and Becky Wise had two points.

Kane Barrow and Ty Cross had 12 and 10 points respectively to lead Skellytown to a 38-9 win in the eighth-grade boys' game.

Joe Brown contributed eight points for Skellytown while Max Hinds had four. Brent Bridwell and Keith Tice, two points apiece.

The Pampa High Athletic Director's Office has been bombarded with phone calls and letters regarding the vacant Harvester head football coaching position.

Although Athletic Director Loyd Waters could mention no names, he said a number of outstanding high school coaches and college assistants have inquired about the job.

"Right now the names have to be kept confidential because no formal applications have been filed yet, but I am just real pleased with the prospects," Waters said. "I feel I will be able to recommend to the school board someone of the caliber they're looking for in a coach."

Buddy Epperson, president of the Pampa Independent School Board of Trustees, along with board members Dr. Robert Lyle and Darville Orr, are members of a screening committee that will act upon Waters' recommendation.

SPORTS AFIELD, one of the world's leading outdoor magazines, has announced the appointment of Ogden and Son of Pampa as an official state fishing awards station.

The fishing awards program is not a contest to see who can catch the biggest fish. Rather, it is a program to commemorate memorable moments in fishing by citing meritorious catches in two ways: 1. The immediate awarding of a parchment certificate to each angler catching a qualifying fish. 2. The awarding of a special certificate and a silver SPORTS AFIELD Sportfish Pin to the "Best in State" of each species, annually.

The eligible species and their qualifying minimum weights have been chosen by the Texas fish and game department. Entry blanks listing these species are available at Ogden and Son, located at 501 West Foster.

Fishermen can qualify for these awards by entering their catches within a 60-day period. Fish must be caught on sporting tackle in Texas waters. There is no charge for entering.

Recipients of the top awards will be listed each year in SPORTS AFIELD.

and kept in a national register for record purposes in the years ahead.

Pampa has climbed a spot this week in the Class 5A basketball poll, conducted by state high school coaches and published by the Fort Worth Star Telegram.

The Harvesters, currently on a 12-game winning streak, are ranked No. 8 with a 20-3 record. Just ahead of the Harvesters is Houston Wheatley with a 23-6 record.

Dallas Roosevelt is ranked No. 1 with a 25-1 mark.

Pampa was ranked No. 9 a week ago.

You've heard of ivy-covered walls. How about carpet-covered gymnasium floors?

The new junior high gym in Panhandle has a completely-carpeted floor. Although the fabric looks out of place, it's not something that's just been introduced into school athletic systems.

"Carpets are becoming popular in the northern states," Panhandle coach Terry Simpson said. "You really can't tell that much difference between it and a regular floor. A basketball doesn't bounce any different on it."

Simpson said the gym carpet has a seven-year guarantee, but it does have to be cleaned daily. Carpet burns are a problem.

"We used to practice some over there, but a couple of players scraped their legs so bad that they almost bled," Simpson said. "I told the players if they ever gave me trouble we would start working out there again."

Wonder what the odds are of San Francisco and Cincinnati returning to the Super Bowl next season? Both will be marked teams.

The first time San Francisco and Cincinnati met in NFL play was in 1974. The Bengals won, 21-3. The next meeting was in 1981. The 49ers won, 21-3.

Flashback: Jan. 1977. Pampa routed Lubbock Monterey, 68-49, for coach Robert McPherson's 150th victory against just 54 losses. Brian Bailey led the Harvesters with 16 points. Don Hughes and Rayford Young added 12 points apiece.

JAMES BRADY ARNOLD PALMER

Names in the news

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House press secretary James Brady gave a thumbs up sign at a Washington Press Club "Salute to Congress" dinner, his first real public appearance since he was shot in the head during an assassination attempt on President Reagan.

Brady and his wife, Sarah, received the good wishes of the president Wednesday via closed-circuit television. Brady received a standing ovation from the crowd of more than 1,200 Washington journalists, members of Congress and political figures.

Reagan, who appeared at the club's annual dinner last year, made a few jokes during the short closed-circuit TV presentation.

He said he wasn't telling age jokes any more and then added, "They called me as an eyewitness at that creationism trial."

Brady is undergoing what is expected to be a long period of therapy and recovery from the head wound he received March 30. He appeared earlier at the re-opening of the White House press room after repairs.

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Arnold Palmer reportedly will build the first golf course on mainland China later this year.

Palmer's company will hire about 4,000 Chinese to help build the course in Canton, the Orlando Sentinel Star reported Wednesday.

The golf pro said he's hoping the course will be finished by October. Details of the course are still being worked out, the newspaper said.

"Palmer said he met with Chinese officials at Bay Hill Club near Orlando this week and agreed on a contract."

Palmer visited Canton for a tour of the proposed site, part of a $50 million resort complex. "I think this is great," Palmer said. "Very shortly, we will see a lot of action (in China)."

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United Nations' new secretary-general, Javier Perez de Cuellar of Peru, has presented a gold U.N. peace medal to his predecessor, Kurt Waldheim of Austria.

After the ceremony Wednesday, both men went down to a basement coffee shop where Perez de Cuellar was presented gifts from Waldheim's native country to the United Nations: tables and chairs for the coffee shop and a box of Sacher tortes for himself.

The 16 tables, with marble tops and cast iron legs, and the 64 chairs, replaced less-exotic furnishings in use since the shop opened more than a year ago.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A divorce suit filed by Jaren Lewis, the estranged wife of entertainer Jerry Lee Lewis, has been dismissed in Shelby County Circuit Court.

Breaking up of Ma Bell: from telephones to tomorrow

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Since its creation in 1885, Ma Bell's roll has been the telephone. But now American Telephone & Telegraph Co. is turning its back on the past — and, in some ways, the telephone, too.

AT&T, which for years has been the world's largest company, has positioned itself to enter the Information Age of talking computers and "electronic" newspapers as a smaller but unshackled competitor.

People will use home computer terminals to send personal and business letters instead of writing longhand and using the mail.

"What we see out there is a very large, growing market that is particularly well suited to our kind of business," says Charles Brown, chairman of AT&T.

Ma Bell's transformation was begun earlier this month when AT&T agreed to settle a seven-year-old federal antitrust suit by spinning off 22 local telephone operating companies, which accounted for about two-thirds of its total assets. The decision, if approved by the courts, will relieve AT&T of the segment of its business that required the most capital and labor. At the same time it will retain the most profitable and flexible of its operations.

Eighty percent of AT&T's slightly more than 1 million employees work for its local telephone companies, and Bell spokesmen have said the majority are expected to remain with the local exchange businesses.

In return for dropping its telephone monopoly, AT&T will be freed from a 1956 federal consent decree that had barred it from entering unregulated businesses, such as the fast-growing fields of data processing, cable television and electronic information systems.

Morris Tanenbaum, the company's executive vice president for planning, said in an interview that AT&T will form a separate subsidiary, popularly dubbed "Baby Bell", to offer new services.

Three of Ma Bell's biggest advantages are the subsidiaries it will be allowed to keep: Bell Telephone Laboratories Inc., Western Electric Co. and AT&T's Long Lines Department.

With Bell Labs, AT&T has one of the best research institutions in the world. Bell Labs produced the first transistor and has turned out more than 19,500 patents in its 57 years of operation.

Leonard Hyman, a telecommunications analyst at Merrill Lynch & Co., says that under the antitrust settlement with the U.S. Justice Department, AT&T will not have to make Bell Labs' patents available to everyone, as it has during its history as a regulated monopoly.

Western Electric will make the equipment AT&T sells and leases.

AT&T will keep not only its interstate and international long-distance lines but also the intrastate long-distance lines of the 22 operating companies. That business will continue to be regulated by the Federal Communications Commission.

The settlement still must be reviewed by Judge Harold H. Greene, the federal judge in Washington, D.C., who heard the antitrust case, and it is subject to possible modification by Congress.

Brown says it is the opportunity to explore new technology — and the prospects for profit — that prompted AT&T to leave behind the chunk of the Bell monopoly that Theodore Vail created in the early 1900s.

If the settlement stands, AT&T will be free to enter the computer market dominated by International Business Machines Corp. The government dismissed its antitrust suit against IBM the same day it settled with AT&T, setting the stage for a battle of two behemoths.

Industry analysts believe the center of competition between IBM and AT&T will be small computer terminals and office systems and the long-distance transmission of data between computers and terminals.

For example, AT&T is developing what it calls its Advanced Communications Service, a computer-to-computer communications network that, among other things, will be used to send electronic mail between different types of computers and terminals. Computers talk different languages, depending on their make, but Bell Labs scientists have figured out how to make unmatched computers, say IBM and Honeywell, understand each other.

For competitive reasons, AT&T isn't saying much about its plans. But in newspaper advertisements explaining its potential for the future, it cited examples of computer-to-computer technology it could pursue. In one case, AT&T described a device that would allow a medical patient to be monitored through the telephone wires by a device in the home that communicates with his doctor's office.

AT&T is seeking to develop a computer system to fit the trend toward more two-income families in which neither spouse is home in the day.

Envisioned is a home computer that can accept commands by telephone to turn off lights, start an oven and perform other chores while you are at work. You would dial your command on a telephone and the home computer would talk back, confirming it had performed the tasks. AT&T is not expected to enter the market for large mainframe computers that is dominated by IBM, says Charles Schelke, an analyst at Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. But it is likely to use Western Electric to build small computers for the home that can be used as "electronic newspapers."
