REPORT ADDRESS CHANGE TO SOCIAL SECURITY

Many people who are collecting social security checks do not get them as promptly as they could simply because they move and fail to notify social security offices of the new addresses, according to H. M. Cleveland, district manager of the Corpus Christi Social Security office.

A notice to the Post Office will not get an address changed on social security records, Cleveland explained. The best way of insuring the prompt and safe delivery of your social security check each month, he said, is to let the Social Security Administration know your new address as soon as you plan to move.

A change of address notice to the Post Office only will take care of having any checks already on their way forwarded to you, but it will not insure the prompt delivery of those to follow.

You may report your new address to the Social Security Administration by filling out and mailing the post card which was given to you when you first filed for benefits. Or send a short note to your Social Security Payment Center, giving your name and address, your claim number, your new address, and the date you plan to move, Cleveland said.

The address of the Payment Center is on your "Certificate of Award." If you prefer, you may send your letter to the Social Security Office at 830 South Water Street, Corpus Christi, or call that office to obtain the Payment Center address.

MARGARET ST. JOHN RECEIVES SCHOLARSHIP

Margaret Ann St. John, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas M. St. John, of Rockport, is one of 82 recipients of college or university scholarships awarded by the J. W. Van Dyke Scholarship Foundation of Philadelphia.

The foundation was established under the will of Van Dyke, a former president and chairman of the board of The Atlantic Refining Company. The grants are made on a competitive basis to children of current, retired or deceased company employees. Since its inception, the foundation has awarded nearly 800 scholarships.

A sophomore at Texas Women's University, majoring in English, Miss St. John graduated from Aransas County High School in 1961, where she was class salutatorian.

A pioneer in the petroleum industry, with which he was associated for 71 years, Van Dyke served as president of Atlantic from 1911 to 1927, and as chairman from 1927 until his death in 1939 at the age of 89.

John Lee Bissett of Bay City spent the weekend with his grandmother, Mrs. Stanley Bissett.

Mrs. Barnett Continues Travel Narrative of East

London, like New York, is famous for the large number and variety of its shows. Among the current shows are The Palladium Variety Show (where Ed Sullivan secures part of the talent for his shows), "My Fair Lady," in its fifth year, the world-famous Royal Ballet at Covent Garden Opera House, where opera is presented alternate nights with the ballet, "The Old Vic" company of Shakespearean actors, and that most durable of murder mysteries, "The Mousetrap" now in its 10th year.

We had the interesting experience of visiting Covent Garden Market early one morning, and in the afternoon attending a performance of "My Fair Lady," whose opening scene takes place in the very same market. Covent Garden is a huge wholesale market of fruits, vegetables and flowers. The main difficulty in visiting it is to dodge the many porters with their handcars and dollies loaded with produce, and not to jostle others with dripping loads balanced on their heads. Here a queer finger sign language is used by buyers to bid on produce from all over the world. In the fruit market we saw grapes from South Africa, apples and pineapples from Australia, peaches and plums from Italy, melons from Israel, and luscious English-brown strawberries. We revelled in the acres of lovely flowers in the flower market, packed in boxes or tied in bundles, as fresh as if they had just been picked. Carnations, gladioli, sweet peas, peonies, sweet william, and many others. Never had we seen so many flowers in one place before.

Another morning, we rose early to visit one of the best-known markets in the world, the Billingsgate Fish Market, on the Thames, where fish has been sold for over a thousand years. The porters, dressed in long overcoats, carry great loads of fish on their heads, balancing them on a curious flat leather hat. Missing however was the famed Billingsgate "language," said not to be fit for ladies' ears.

Early as we were, the odor was about all that remained of the brisk morning's bidding. However, we did see boxes of haddock, herzing, mackerel, sole, flounder and huge baskets of rock crabs, much larger than the rock crabs on the Texas coast.

From there we wandered into the nearby retail meat markets, open to the street, with carcasses hanging on meat hooks, and cut meat displayed on marble counters. Here, we also found wild pigeons, grouse, pheasant and hare. Wild game is sold on the open market because of the peculiar nature of the English hunting clubs. A member does not keep his kill, unless he buys it from the club. The game is all the property of the club, which sells it to help defray expenses.

These markets are located in the shadow of the financial district of London, in the city of London, a mile square borough. Here are the Royal Stock Exchange, the Bank of England, Lloyd's of London, and many other cold financial institutions. In this same ancient district are found many fine old churches, St. Paul's Cathedral and the Tower of London. We were early enough to meet large crowds coming to work. The men were elegantly dressed in striped trousers, black coat, black derby, and some even in winged collars. All carried rolled black umbrellas, the badge of a London business man. The young women were less formally dressed, but all wore coats on account of the 54 degree weather, and most had high "beehive" hairdos.

The most speedy way to get around London is by the underground and once the system is understood, it presents no difficulties. The system is a marvel of engineering, unlike any other underground system in the world. You buy your ticket at ground level, then step on an escalator that goes so deep that it makes you dizzy to look down. Quite often you step on another at the bottom to go on a still further descent. The trains run every two to three minutes and will whisk you anywhere in the city in a matter of minutes for a few pennies. Transferring from one line to another, often requires walking several blocks through a maze of tunnels. Often we found ourselves caught up in the flow of people and running as the Londoners do to catch the next train.

Walking is the best way to really see London. On one walk we started at Trafalgar Square, gathering place of pigeons and tourists. From here we saw down Whitehall to Big Ben Clock Tower, and the Houses of Parliament. In another direction was the Mall, a wide street leading to Buckingham Palace. Facing on the square is the National Art Gallery and St. Martin's-in-the-Field, with its lovely tall white spire. Leading off from Trafalgar is the Strand, one of the oldest streets in London, formerly a rutted road following the banks of the Thames. Walking down it we passed many fashionable shops, the luxurious Savoy Hotel, with our hotel, The Strand Palace, opposite. In the middle of the street stands the Church of St. Mary-Le-Strand, built by Gibbs in 1717, its beautiful belfry of white limestone, blackened by the London smoke. A little farther on is the other "island" church, St. Clements Danes, whose bells chime "oranges and lemons" (oranges and lemons say the bells of St. Clements.) It has been restored after its almost total destruction in the blitz. A statue of Dr. Samuel Johnson stands in its garden, for he was a frequent worshipper there. Nearby is the "Old Cheshire Cheese" tavern, also associated with Dr. Johnson, as well as the house where he lived. A sign outside the tavern says that the "new building" was built in 1606, after the Great Fire.

Facing each other across the Strand are two great Inns of Court (or law courts.) We wandered among the confusing winding walkways and brick courts of the Inner Temple, with its beautiful gardens facing the Thames.

At Temple Bar, where stands a bronze statue of a Griffin (an imaginary beast). The Strand becomes Fleet Street, a name synonymous with publishing the world over. Here are found the publishing houses of many newspapers and magazines.

After passing Temple Bar, we reached Somerset House, a great stone palace whose owner was beheaded before its completion and it became Crown property. Here Elizabeth I lived for a time. It is one of the most imposing buildings in London, and now houses Government offices.

Our return walk led us along the beautiful Victoria Embankment of the Thames. Across the river are the steps leading down to the water used by Sir Christopher Wren while he was rebuilding London after the Great Fire. Shakespeare also lived across the river though little remains of his associations there. From the embankment can be seen the famous old bridges, including London Bridge, the Tower Bridge, and Westminster Bridge. On the river were many launches filled with tourists, small steamers and barges loaded with produce of all kinds.

A drive down Oxford Street on top of a two-story bus brought us past busy Oxford Circus, past Band Street, with its exclusive shops, and, farther along, many large department stores, to Marble Arch, at Hyde Park. This Arch formerly was the principal entrance to Buckingham Palace, but it was too too narrow to admit the State Park in 1851. Today it stands in an island, with heavy traffic flowing all around it. We recalled our previous Sunday afternoon walks among the tall Chestnut trees of London's largest park, where we saw young couples "spooping" on the grassy lawns, oblivious of passersby, and anglers around the Serpentine, standing elbow to elbow, but catching very little except fresh air.

At the famous "Speaker's Corner," next to Marble Arch, we heard soap box orators holding forth on various world problems, each surrounded by a more or less sympathetic audience. One who was lambasting the Americans, was being heckled by the crowd whom we suspected were there just to have fun.

In the nearby Cumberland Hotel Lyons, a large chain of restaurants, each specializing in one item such as broiled steaks, barbecued chickens, bacon and eggs, etc. Here one can dine on sirloin steak, French fries, broiled mushrooms and a drink, all for $1.40.

On our last day in London we elected to visit Chelsea, a section of London comparable to the Left Bank of Paris. We found a quiet quarter, bordering the Thames, of antique shops, artist's studios, small high fashion boutiques and neat terraces of houses with bright flowers decorating the windows and glimpses of gardens beyond. In the early days Chelsea was a country village outside the capital and something of this village character remains. It has always been a favorite quarter for artists and visitors. Carlyle's home is maintained as when he lived there and is open to the public. One beautiful house facing the Thames was the home where George Eliot lived and died. Cheyne Walk, along the Thames embankment, has many attractive old homes and a beautifully planted parkway.

Chelsea is best known today for Chelsea Hospital, home for old or invalided soldiers, founded in 1682 by Charles II. They proudly wear their uniforms of bright red, and drill and march on special occasions as in the old days.

On our trip to and from Chelsea we had "grandstand" seats on top of a red London bus, for a colorful view of London. From Trafalgar Square we rode down Whitehall, past Whitehall Palace and Scotland Yard, both facing the well-known Horse Guards and No. 10 Downing Street. The home of the Prime Minister is now covered with scaffolding, undergoing a complete renovation. In the center of Whitehall is the Cenotaph a monument erected in commemoration of men of all creeds who fell in both World Wars. Our way then led into Parliament Square, ordered by the ancient Palace of Westminster, the Houses of Parliament, St. Margaret's Church and magnificent Westminster Abbey. We were fortunate to hear the bells chiming the noon hour as we passed. The center of the square is a bright garden containing statues of five Prime Ministers and of Abraham Lincoln.

Down Victoria Street we were surprised to find many fine new The face of old London is changing rapidly as tall modern skyscrapers with walls of glass are being built on sites which were once only bomb craters.

One afternoon, we visited the National Gallery, especially to see the famous Leonardo Di Vinci "cartoon," a pencil sketch of one of his famous paintings. We were surprised to see a notice posted that on the day before a vandal had thrown a bottle of ink at the picture. Though the damage was slight (the bottle didn't break), the picture had been temporarily withdrawn from view. However a photographed copy was on display, which only an expert could tell from the original.

London to Edinburgh, Inverness, Glasgow (767 miles.)

On June 30 we boarded the "Flying Scotsman" in London for Edinburgh. It is Britain's most famous train and celebrated its 100th anniversary this year. It is a fine modern diesel-electric train that makes the 392 mile run in 6 hours, running at speeds of 100 miles per hour at times. The lush green fields of the English countryside were a welcome change from the crowded city. The fields are large in comparison to those in other countries we have visited and the two-story country homes of stone are spacious and comfortable-looking. We saw fields of potatoes, cabbage and brussels sprouts. These soon gave way to bountiful crops of wheat and rye, part of which finds its way to the distilleries. The most abundant crop was hay, being harvested in unbelievable amounts. The country was colorful with banks of flowers, wild roses, daisies, Scotch broom, white elder and hedges of pink and white Hawthorn.

Through the flat Plain of York we sped to the city of York, famous for its fine cathedral and an ancient city wall, both visible from the train. We recalled visiting "The Shambles," a narrow street of shops whose half-timbered buildings project out over the street, almost touching in the center.

Our only stop was a brief one at Newcastle-Upon-Tyne. Here we could see vast dumps from the coal mines, and the high loading cranes of a busy port. It is one of the chief ship-building centers of England.

We sped along the picturesque rocky shores of the North Sea. People were camping everywhere, with bright red or blue nylon tents that would fold up into a small pack to carry on their backs, bicycles or motor-bikes. A common sight out the train window were flocks of wild pigeons, pheasants, skylarks, rocks and occasionally grouse and hare.

Edinburgh is a stately city of many steeples, monuments and massive buildings. Architects come from all over the world to study the fine buildings. But dominating the whole city is the "Castle in the Sky," Edinburgh Castle, which stands on a sheer mountain 450 feet high in the center of the city. The origin of the castle goes back to the Bronze Age. It is a natural fortress and became a royal residence in the eleventh century. Throughout the centuries it has been the scene of bloody affairs between Scottish kings and their nobles. In its confines is found the oldest building in Scotland, St. Margaret's Chapel, built in the eleventh century, a gem of Norman architecture still in use. In the Castle Mary, Queen of Scots, gave birth to her son James VI of Scotland, who became James I of England. Today the castle stands in its majestic splendor as a monument to the days of chivalry, when the lance and armor, the huge battle axe with its vicious hook (to hook the victim for a second blow), the shield and the huge sword were all weapons of war. Not so chivalrous was the witches post on Castle Hill, where witches used to be put to death by strangling and burning.

Edinburgh's promenade is Princes' Street, a street of fine shops facing Princes' Street Gardens, dominated by the romantic castle perched high in the massive rock. The "Gardens" is actually a spacious park, running through the center of the city, with colorful flowers, planted in interesting patterns, including a flower clock with even its huge hands covered in tiny blooming plants. At intervals along the street, are fine monuments to famous men of Edinburgh. The largest of these is the huge terracotta tower dedicated to Sir Walter Scott. The two hundred foot high tower contains a statue of Scott and his dog, standing under the center arch.

In the north-end of the Gardens stand two churches and an ancient cemetery. At the gate of the cemetery is an octagonal watch tower, built in the old days to house volunteer citizens to guard the cemetery against body-snatchers.

The Scotch people are proud of their many great men. We were shown the homes or birthplaces of Scott, R. L. Stevenson, Alexander Graham Bell, Field Marshall Haig, Sir Arthur Conan-Doyle, Dr. Lister, the discoverer of antiseptics, and Dr. Simpson, the discover of chloroform. We were impressed by the courteous, honest Scotch people who would go to any lengths to accommodate us.

The most famous street in the Old City, is the "Royal Mile" which runs from the castle to Holyrood House, the royal palace at its foot. Here we found many ancient buildings, rich in history, such as the Cannon Ball House (1630) which has a cannon ball said to have been fired from the castle, lodged in its gable; St. Giles Cathedral, with its beautiful Thistle Chapel, where John Knox preached for many years; Fishmarket Close (hall) where Dainel Defoe worked as a secret agent for the English; the home of John Knox, leader of the Reformation; Brodies Close, where lived Deacon Brodie, town councillor and respected citizen by day and murderer and thief by night. Brodie was the inventor of the guillotine and later was condemned and put to death by his own "humane" instrument. He is said to have been the inspiration for Stevenson's story of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

At the south end of the Royal Mile is the huge, massive, four-storied, turreted, blackened stone palace, Holyrood House. Built in 1671, it is associated with the romantic but tragic reign of Mary, Queen of Scots. It has an interesting history as a royal residence and is still in use today by Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip. The Queen was in residence at the time of our visit; her pennant was flying above the rooftops and on the lawns the Marquess were up for the garden parties. Unfortunately we did not rate an invitation but did see the gracious queen and all the Royal Family on a previous visit to England.

We rented a peppy English

Ford (Anglia) and through somewhat confused by the manual gear, shift, and left side driving, we managed to negotiate the Edinburgh traffic and headed for the Northern Scottish Highlands. We proceeded through the picturesque fishing village of Granton on the Firth of Forth where fishwives still peddle the day's catch, and made our first stop at Queens Ferry. We awaited the ferry in the shadow of the world's greatest cantilever-type bridge across the Forth. This is a railroad bridge, but a short distance away they are erecting an automobile bridge of the cable type, with its tall towers already in place and main cables hanging in a parabola. On top were tiny specks that on closer inspection, proved to be workmen.

We traveled along the narrow, winding roads through lush, rolling grazing land, with large pastures of shaggy, long-haired, black-faced highland sheep were grazing. This fine pastured land was once covered by forests of Scotch pine, fir and hardwoods. Under the Forestry Commission, much of it is being replanted, and in places there are already stands of dense forests.

It happened 100 YEARS ago

The oldest incorporated trade association in the country, the United States Brewers Association, was organized in 1862... the same year that

IN TEXAS... near Galveston, Confederate General J. B. Magruder piled cotton bales on the decks of little river boats. These famous "cotton clads," manned by the 26th Texas Cavalry, trounced the Federal war fleet then holding Texas' largest port. As the war ships hastily departed, the event was toasted in good Texas-brewed beer.

For then, as now, beer was the traditional beverage of moderation—light, sparkling refreshment that adds a touch of Southwestern hospitality to any occasion. Texans have always enjoyed the good fellowship that goes with every glass.

TODAY, in its centennial year, the United States Brewers Association still works constantly to assure maintenance of high standards of quality and propriety wherever beer and ale are served.

CITIES SERVICE REQUESTS PERMIT

Cities Service Petroleum Company has requested a permit from the U. S. Engineers to operate in St. Charles Bay, at locations in state tracts 366, 368, 369, 375, and 383, approximately 14 miles northwest of Rockport.

The company requests a Department of the Army blanket permit to authorize the erection and maintenance of structures to be used in connection with the drilling of wells at the above locations. The work at a well site would consist of placing a shell mat, sink-a-drilling barge, driving eight 3-pile clusters, erecting a drilling structure with a maximum top elevation of 172 feet at mean low water and constructing a protective structure.

Other structures would include manifold platforms and pile clusters with maximum dimensions of 25 by 68 feet and maximum elevations of 15 feet at mean low water.

Pipe lines would be placed 1 1/2 feet below the bed of the bay except through shell reefs or beds where they would be placed one foot below the bed. The pipe lines would be jetted, plowed, disced or placed by other similar methods, whereby there would be a minimum displacement of the bed and no spoil deposit would remain.

The spoil from dredged channels and basins would be placed in the bay in mounds with the points of discharge at least 1,000 feet apart and would usually have a top elevation of 6 feet at mean low water.

ARTICLE ON SIMON MICHAEL APPEARS IN BEEVILLE PAPER

The following item about a Rockport resident appeared in last week's Beeville paper:

Simon Michael, head of the Rockport School of Fine Arts, will resume his class at the American Legion Hall in Beeville Friday, Sept. 14, at 9 a.m., following a three-month vacation period.

Mr. Michael is a world-renowned artist, as well as teacher, and has paintings hanging in the principal galleries of the United States and Europe.

During the summer months he conducts classes at his studio in Rockport, and also takes a class to Fredricksburg for a two-week course. Associated with him as consultants in the summer school are Lincoln Borglum, famous sculptor of Beeville, and Buck Winn, an artist and mosaic muralist of Wimberly.

Michael takes students ranging from rank beginners to finished artists. He teaches all media of art expression, including charcoal, pastel, casein, tempera, and oil.

The Beeville American Legion Post nine years ago, voted in favor of giving the Bee County artists the use of the Legion Hall for lessons on Friday, since it was made known that Michael's agreement with the students included the furnishing of a studio. The Legionnaires gave the use of the building as a contribution to a cultural movement in Bee County.

Michael first came to Beeville to teach in the fall of 1953, and will be starting his 10th year next week. He also holds classes in Victoria, Bay City, Freeport, Corpus Christi, and Rockport.

A number of Navy wives are members of Michael's Beeville class. However, although most of the students are women, the class is not limited to females. Several men, including one doctor, have taken advantage of Michael's instruction.

The class during the nine years has ranged from 15 to 25 members. Just what the number will be this year will not be known until Friday morning of next week, when the students report for registration and work.

Michael is a native of Pittsburgh. He started his art studies in his home city, but later studied under great teachers in Chicago, St. Louis, Washington, D. C., New York, and Paris.

Martin Wheeler is constructing a damless tank on his place in Aransas County, which is in the San Patricio Soil Conservation District. Wheeler is constructing the tank in a swale in a Coastal Bermuda grass pasture. The ASCS will share in the cost of its construction.

Mrs. Bobby Close and children left Wednesday for Arizona, after visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Warden.

BEAUTY IS JUST SKIN DEEP ALL OVER THE WORLD

The American housewife has an everyday edge over the world's most beautiful girls.

Contestants in the International Beauty Congress, leaving Long Beach, California, made the admission themselves after seeing Miss Tania Verstack of Australia crowned "Miss International Beauty."

The average U. S. woman knows more about the art of flattering make-up than most of the beauties from more than 50 countries who competed in the beauty pageant. But the international lovelies learn a lot about cosmetics on their glamorous whirl in Long Beach.

Each contestant, throughout the competition, was made up with Merle Norman International cosmetics. Beauty consultants were constantly on hand to advise each girl on the colors and type of make-up that would accent her individual beauty to the utmost.

The tremendous variety of beauty represented, from dusky alive complexions to the fairest of the blondes, presented a real challenge to the Merle Norman consultants.

The firm of Merle Norman International was appointed the official cosmetics for the international contest for the second year, appropriate since Merle Norman Studios are found in many foreign lands.

Merle Norman presented each girl with a gift of a stunning white leather travel case filled with all the necessary cosmetics. All the girls returned to their native lands, not only with many wonderful gifts, but with a greater beauty knowledge which they can put to future use.—Merle Norman Cosmetics Studio, Townsend's Dress Shop.
