■ President Bush and his top aides tried to squelch speculation that he is about to announce a Cabinet shakeup or a new second-term economic job for James A. Baker III, who is already moving from secretary of state to White House chief of staff.

■ Bush vowed to go to "every corner of this nation" in the political fight of his life to beat Bill Clinton and "clear out the deadwood" in Congress. Bush appeared briefly at the Astrodome podium. He joined his wife in a picturesque tableau with their 22 children and grandchildren to personalize the GOP family-values theme.

■ A Florida mother from a wealthy, politically prominent family urged the Republican Party to put politics aside when they consider AIDS. The noisy Astrodome grew still and hundreds of delegates to the Republican National Convention froze in the aisles at the words of Mary Fisher, who learned a year ago that she has the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome./7A

First lady stirs delegates

Republicans formally nominate Bush, Quayle

By Scott Shepard
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — President Bush and Vice President Dan Quayle were formally renominated by the Republican Party on Wednesday after first lady Barbara Bush and her grandson, George Prescott Bush, stirred delegates to tears with tales of Bush as a loving husband and grandfather.

Mrs. Bush's speech — she called it "a conversation" — was capped by the surprise arrival of the president to join her and their family on the Astrodome podium.

92 REPUBLICAN CONVENTION HOUSTON

"Thank you, we'll see you all tomorrow. Thanks a lot," the president said, waving to the jubilant delegates and embracing his wife, children and grandchildren.

Delegates cheered wildly as Bush embraced his grandson.

The younger Bush, sharing a letter his grandfather had written him four years ago, described the president as "the greatest man I've ever known."

Despite the "enormous pressure" of the presidency, "he always has time for his grandchildren," George said. He ended by leading the delegates in a cheer of "Viva Bush."

Mrs. Bush, wearing her trademark faux pearl necklace, received the warmest welcome yet from the delegates, and during her address the delegates were so quiet that her voice echoed throughout the Astrodome.

Before inviting her family to join her, she spoke of family values, defining it as parents who teach their children "integrity, strength, responsibility, courage, sharing, love of God and price in being an American."

Adopting an inclusive tone sharply at odds with the "us and them" rhetoric used by other top Republicans this week, Mrs. Bush declared, "However you define family, that's what we mean by family values."

She also praised parents who have "sa-

Mosbacher blames Democrats for oil woes

By Max B. Baker
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — Problems in the nation's beleaguered oil industry are more a result of unsympathetic Democrats in Congress than the energy policies of the Bush administration, a top state Republican leader told Texas delegates Wednesday.

Continuing with the administration's intent to blame Congress for the country's economic and social ills, Rob Mosbacher Jr. said the Bush administration has done more for the oil industry than most people realize.

"The sad truth is that the Democrat leadership in the Congress has never, and will never, be sympathetic to this industry," Mosbacher said.

It was Bush who deregulated the natural-gas industry, repealed the windfall profit tax and lowered royalty payments paid by oil companies that tap into low-producing wells, Mosbacher said.

The Democrats typically support taxes on small businesses, unnecessary environmental regulations and constricting employer liability laws, he said.

Mosbacher, who is the head of the state party's Victory '92 re-election effort, made his comments during a break-

By Roberto Suro
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — Just 19 months ago, when the Republicans announced they would hold their convention here, President Bush seemed to have a lock on Texas. A little more than a month ago, Ross Perot seemed primed to take the state. Now, even some of Bush's most prominent supporters say he is fighting for his survival in the state that is the birthplace of his political career.

The political landscape in Texas has long favored Republicans at the top of the ticket. But the electoral terrain has been shifting in recent years, and now both he and Gov. Bill Clinton must clamber across uncertain ground.

In the suburbs, Perot exercised a mighty appeal over the STANTON — Cap Rock Electric Cooperative officials are viewing "very seriously" a threatening letter that singles out three Cap Rock officials, Cap Rock spokeswoman Peggy Luxton said Wednesday.

Federal Bureau of Investigation agents in Midland and Austin are investigating the source of the typewritten letter, which told the three Cap Rock officials they had "better resign" and "leave the area immediately," or "You will suffer the severe consequences. . . . Our plan is set."

The threats were not specific, Ms. Luxton said.

Vacant apartment complex on Pecos Street, Estes Avenue

Residents decry neighborhood blight

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

Rats and dead animals sometimes share quarters with vagrar ts in a central Midland apartment complex. And r sidents of the middle class neighborhood want the buildings torn down or repaired.

Statler Terrace Apartments at Pecos Street and Estes Avenue, abandoned about 10 years ago, and two other complexes — one left vacant only a month ago, are causing area crime to increase and property values to plummet, according to neighbors.

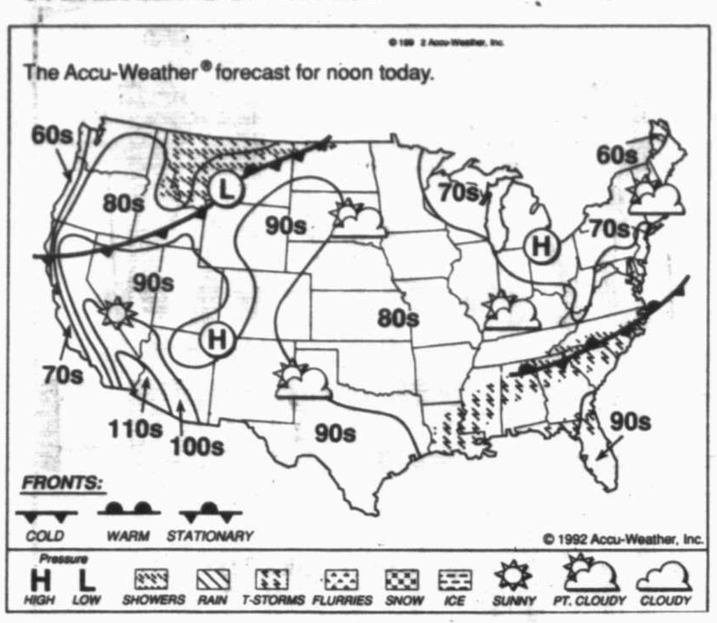

"This is a real eyesore for the whole neighborhood. It's a shame what has happened. Before the oil bust, they used to have parties by the pool — now look," said Ernest Barber, 71, as he pointed to 6-foot weeds, trash and rotted lumber that filled what used to be the Statler Terrace swimming pool.

Across the street, a complex labeled by a sign as Lakeside Park Apartments is filled with human and animal feces, a tattered couch, torn bed springs, a discarded doll and trash.

On the outside, tall weeds and more trash dot the landscape, and boards half-way secured to windows prepare to fall. Graffiti mars the yellow siding.

WEATHER SUMMARY

A day to blow clouds away

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for cloudy skies, turning fair by noon, with high in the upper 80s and south to southeast winds at 5-15 mph. Tonight should be fair, becoming cloudy by morning, with a low in the low 60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Friday should be cloudy, turning fair by noon, with a high near 90.

After an overnight low of 65, Wednesday's high reached 84, compared to the record high for that date of 103 set in 1977. The record low was 58 set in 1940.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms Wednesday helped keep Texas temperatures generally cool, with forecasters expecting precipitation to continue through the week's end.

Widespread showers covered most of North Texas Wednesday morning, with scattered thunderstorms later in the day in the Guadalupe Mountains. Spotty showers fell in deep South Texas, the upper gulf coast and just north of Austin.

Fog shrouded some parts of the South Plains and Panhandle.

Afternoon temperatures mostly ranged from the 60s to 80s statewide, with low 90s in far West Texas and along the coast.

Temperatures in North Texas Wednesday remained as much as 25 degrees below normal, the National Weather Service said.

Winds were mostly northerly to northeasterly at 5 to 10 mph, and easterly east of the mountains at 5 to 15 mph.

Skies should be partly cloudy today in western and central sections of the state and mostly cloudy with scattered thunderstorms in the east.

Forecasters expected scattered thunderstorms to continue with partly cloudy skies tonight and Friday. Storms could be more numerous along the coast.

Highs today and Friday should range from the 80s to 90s, with overnight lows in the 50s and 60s.

NATION

Record lows and rain were scattered across much of the South and Southeast on Wednesday, while a heat wave continued in the Southwest.

At midday, showers and thunderstorms extended across parts of Texas, southwestern Missouri, the lower Mississippi Valley, north-central Tennessee, the eastern Gulf of Mexico states, and the southern Atlantic Coast into western Maryland.

Record lows were 69, a tie, at Austin, Texas; 62, a tie, at Birmingham, Ala.; 61, a tie, at Chattanooga, Tenn.; 69 at Corpus Christi; 69, a tie, at Houston; 61 at Huntsville, Ala.; and 67 at San Antonio.

Chicago also reported a record low of 51.

Rainfall amounts during the six hours up to 1 p.m. CDT were less than 1 inch.

But during the past week, 6 to 12 inches of rain has fallen over the eastern half of North Carolina, with 14.35 inches at Goldsboro, the National Weather Service said.

Elsewhere, rain was scattered over parts of the northern Intermountain region between the Cascades and the Rockies, and over western New England.

In Southern California, heat advisories warning of humidity and temperatures around 100 were issued for the inland valleys of San Diego County.

In northern California, downtown Sacramento passed 90 by late morning, giving the city its 37th consecutive day of 90-plus weather.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

crificed" for their children and who have put their careers "on hold."

"I'm here to tell you that you're doing the right thing, and God bless you for it," she said.

Mrs. Bush, referring to her husband as "George" throughout her remarks, mixed references to Bush's accomplishments as president with reminisces of their younger life in Midland — a life of Little League, scouts, church, Fourth of July picnics and Christmas carols.

She also recalled the challenges and the death of a daughter at the age of 3.

And through it all, she said, her husband had proved himself "the strongest, the most decent, the most caring and yes, the healthiest man I know," she said. The president suffered from an irregular heartbeat and thyroid trouble in his first term.

Mrs. Bush appeared before a prime-time television audience as the image of a warm, matronly Grandmother-in-Chief, in contrast to Hillary Clinton, a high-powered lawyer who is the spouse of the Democratic nominee, Bill Clinton.

A 67-year-old mother of five and grandmother of 12, Mrs. Bush has steadfastly avoided projecting herself as a policy adviser to her husband of 47 years, largely to avoid comparisons with her predecessor, Nancy Reagan, who closely monitored everything involving President Ronald Reagan.

She has spent much of her time involved in non-controversial activities, promoting literacy, family and good works.

But in recent weeks, with the president trailing Clinton badly in public opinion polls, the hugely popular Mrs. Bush has taken on a new role, speaking out on abortion and other issues in a manner aimed at helping her husband.

Earlier, Marilyn Quayle underlined the Republican appeal to traditional families by telling the delegates that "having a profession is not incompatible with being a good mother or wife."

Although she described her marriage to Vice President Dan Quayle as "a partnership," Mrs. Quayle also criticized "the grandiose promises of the liberation movements" for women.

"Most women do not want to be liberated from their essential natures as women," said Mrs. Quayle, the mother of three children. "Most of us love being mothers or wives, which gives our lives a richness that few men or women get from professional accomplishments alone."

Noting that Quayles are baby boomers like Bill and Hillary Clinton, Mrs. Quayle said, "Not everyone demonstrated, dropped out, took drugs, joined in the sexual revolution or dodged the draft."

Quayle enlisted in the Indiana National Guard in 1969 after being called for a draft physical. His actions helped him avoid military service in Vietnam.

After the wives' speeches, the convention got down to its most important piece of business, the formal nomination of Bush and Quayle.

Lynn Martin, secretary of labor, nominated Bush in a speech that followed the pattern of previous speakers:

- She credited Bush with winning the Cold War, thereby drawing attention to Clinton's lack of foreign policy experience.
- She recalled his service as a fighter pilot in World War II, fulfilling "his responsibilities," unlike Clinton, who avoided military service in Vietnam.
- And she repeatedly referred to Bush's "values," alluding to Clinton's alleged marital infidelity.

Instead of the "despair, desolation and darkness" offered by the Democrats, Martin said, Bush is "fighting a new revolution for the future of our country."

Quayle was nominated by former Education Secretary William J. Bennett.

"Dan Quayle is not politically correct," Bennett said, but "he has stood for family values. He has stood up against his critics. He has been principled and courageous, and in response he has been belittled."

WOES: Texas GOP leader blames Democrats

fast sponsored by Arco Oil Co.

The Houston oilman, however, admitted the oil industry is not happy with the Bush administration.

"Any industry that has lost 470,000 jobs over the last 10 years probably will never feel that the government, or anybody else, has done enough to help them," Mosbacher said.

"But what we have lost has not been traceable to government, it has been traceable to prices, to the (amount of) oil and gas reserves in this country, to things beyond our control."

But the alternative is a Democratic ticket that includes Sen. Al Gore of Tennessee, whom Mosbacher called "an environmental extremist."

"Do you, if you are in the energy industry, feel any better in terms of your future with an environmental extremist as vice president?" Mosbacher asked. "All I'm asking for is balance. That is what we have in this administration."

A suggestion to the Texas delegation from state Bush campaign director Jim Oberwetter to "mind your Ps and Qs" around the press had reporters telling him to mind his own business.

Delegates were told by Oberwetter that the media would be hovering a lot during the convention, maybe asking some leading questions, so watch what is said.

As an incentive, Oberwetter said the most pithy quote to appear in the newspapers each day will win a prize.

That, however, stirred complaints from the television types that it discriminated against them because their work is on video tape.

And other reporters complained that now the delegates won't say anything. Period.

So now Oberwetter has changed the rules, saying he is looking for the worst, most pessimistic quote.

"I told you to be positive and I got criticized," Oberwetter told the delegates. "So now I'm going to look for the most negative and see if I get criticized."

And to add another twist to the contest, the grand prize for the best or worst quote is a hardback copy of the new biography of Democratic president Harry Truman.

"If anyone objects, we'll buy them a Republican book," Oberwetter said.

BLIGHT: Council allocates $45,000 for demolition

(From 1A)

"I would like the whole bunch knocked down," Nancy Cox said. "Crime is on the rise. Just the other day the police told us someone stole a van and left it parked there."

Neighbor B.R. Land said the apartments were high-priced housing only a decade ago. "They were well kept . . . had a gardener and everything. Then the owner went bankrupt a few years back. Soon it was full of outlaws and vandals wrecking the place," Land said.

City building official David Wayland believes there are about 100 other structures across Midland that also either need to be boarded up or torn down.

"To me, boarding up a building is simply putting off the inevitable," Wayland said. "But it's one step better than leaving it completely unattended."

Last month the Midland City Council allocated $45,000 to be used for demolition projects. The cost of tearing down a single structure usually runs between $1,500 and $1,800.

"We have limited manpower and money," Wayland said. "The responsibility of the property has to fall back on the owner."

According to the city attorney's office, the city has been trying since November 1987 to get the owners of the vacant apartments at 501 W. Estes Ave. to either repair the property or tear it down.

"It's been an on-going problem. We entered into an arrangement with the owner to repair the building to be inhabited or be boarded up and made safe . . . away from children," said Danna Gallegos, assistant city attorney.

Ownership of the property has changed hands several times since that time and the city is now trying to locate the present owner — who neighbors believe lives in another state.

Residents are concerned about drug deals in the abandoned apartments.

Last month, City Council members toured several abandoned Midland buildings. A police officer who led the tour pointed out discarded drug paraphernalia — including syringes — that were left on the floor.

"Those kind of buildings are a public nuisance," Wayland said.

Barber, a 29-year resident of the neighborhood, said he blames the economy — not the apartment owners — for the neglected apartments.

"It's a dilemma . . . bad investments," he said. "I wouldn't want to spend two or three hundred thousand to fix up and rent a place to people who couldn't pay the rent. It's the economy — people used to have jobs."

Wayland agreed.

"The demand for multi-family housing just isn't where it was 10 or 12 years ago," he said.

THREAT: Letter singles out 3 Cap Rock officials

(From 1A)

The letter said that homes of the officials, including members of the elected board of directors, staff and management, are being staked out.

"We are taking it very seriously, serious enough to offer a $500 reward" for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for the letter, Ms. Luxton said.

"We don't have any idea who sent it — absolutely not," Ms. Luxton said. "We really cannot imagine anybody unhappy enough about anything that Cap Rock is doing or not doing that would warrant something like this."

Cap Rock, which serves 8,000 rural and suburban members in 17 West Texas counties from the outskirts of the Midland-Odessa area to near Sweetwater and from the Big Lake area to near Lamesa, has been expanding its base. Recently, Cap Rock had been seeking to sever its agreement with Texas Utilities (TU) Electric, which supplies power to Cap Rock, in order to buy power at lower rates.

Some Stanton area co-op members have been concerned about Cap Rock's expansion and buying an office building in downtown Midland.

"Those people are our friends and neighbors," Ms. Luxton said.

Though founded in 1939 under the Rural Electrification Administration (REA) primarily to serve the agricultural community, Cap Rock increasingly is serving more and more oil companies and nonfarming suburban and rural homeowners.

"This (letter) came as a total and complete surprise. Nothing like that ever happened before," Ms. Luxton said. "We don't want to implicate anybody, but we sure are not happy about it."

The letter bears a Midland postmark, which indicates that the letter could have been mailed from most anywhere in West Texas from the Midland area to east of El Paso, Ms. Luxton said. The postmark is Aug. 11.

The penalty for sending a threatening letter through the United States mail is a five-year prison sentence and $1,000 fine.

TASK: Can Bush sell himself as agent of change?

paign, he faces the daunting task of shedding a status-quo image to appeal to a restive electorate.

Leadership, trust and experience are proclaimed as Bush's strong suit, and he's sure to emphasize these strengths when he takes the podium tonight to close out the Republican convention. But he'll need to go further to win a second term.

He has to offer fresh ideas and deflect attention from the faltering economy. He blames Congress and liberal Democrats for blocking his domestic agenda, but it's no secret that Bush prefers doing something else than grappling with problems at home.

When confronted by problems, Bush has always said he would rather err on the side of caution and prudence. Aside from his swift response to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, Bush's hesitation to act has become so much his trademark that "Saturday Night Live" comedian Dana Carvey has turned it into a routine, idw president saying, "Not gonna do it."

Bush's motto: Make no mistakes.

"I don't want to do anything dumb," he said after the 1988 election.

But 1992 is a year when voters are demanding something new. Americans say they are downbeat about the economy and worry about their future. Overwhelmingly, they believe the country is on the wrong course. And Bush has been the one with his hand on the tiller.

An election can get a politician's attention like nothing else. Last fall, Democrat Harris Wofford scored an upset Senate victory in Pennsylvania over Bush's friend, Richard Thornburgh, by stressing the need for a health-care program.

The White House panicked; Bush immediately postponed an overseas trip and the administration turned full attention to writing a health insurance proposal. It was rushed out in time for the campaign, and Bush made it a centerpiece of his re-election effort.

The momentum for change can't be ignored — and it can cause problems.

That was evident Tuesday after Bush promised to have "plenty of new faces" in his Cabinet if he wins a second term. "I wouldn't say every single person but . . . ," Bush said, his sentence trailing off tantalizingly.

Whatever Bush's intentions, his remark backfired as a storm of speculation swept the convention floor.

Cabinet secretaries and administration leaders — almost all of them are here — were put on the spot in live television interviews about whether they were being tossed overboard. What could they do? They said they'd go if the president wanted.

In an audience of more than 4,000 Republicans, rumors were flying: Jack Kemp will go. So will Bush's economic team, Nicholas Brady, Richard Darman and Michael Boskin. James A. Baker — plucked from the State Department to run the White House and Bush's campaign — would take charge of economic and domestic affairs in a second term. Or not.

The uproar got so far out of hand that the White House was forced to respond Wednesday with a statement. It said Bush feels his Cabinet is doing an "excellent job" and any changes at the start of a second term would be part of a routine turnover. Bush called Kemp and assured him there were no plans to replace him.

A sweep-them-all-out scenario really didn't sound right, anyway. It would be an embarrassing admission of failure as the election nears. Besides, Bush also has been known as a leader who prides himself on loyalty.

Another ticklish "change" subject awaits Bush when he accepts the Republican presidential nomination tonight.

Conservative Republicans are pressing Bush to announce a new economic program containing sharp cuts in taxes and limits on growth of entitlement spending.

Bush has refused to tip his hand about what he'll do, but aides are whispering that there won't be any big surprises. Bush is being counseled by many to explain why he felt compelled to break his 1988 "read-my-lips" pledge of no new taxes. Constrained by big budget deficits and the credibility problem from his 1988 promise, a bold statement on taxes would seem cynical.

Republicans say they just want to know what Bush would do for four more years.

"He has to tell us where he wants to go," said Wisconsin GOP chairman Dave Optiz. "We'll get him there — he just has to tell us where."

SWING: Texas electorial terrain shifts

state's white, middle-class voters and these notorious ticket-splitters are up for grabs now that he's gone. In the Piney Woods of East Texas and out on the staked plains of West Texas, oil drilling is down to levels not seen in a generation, and the blame is being leveled, not at the economy, but at the policy-makers of both parties in Washington.

And, in the dusty small towns of South Texas and in crowded urban neighborhoods, Hispanic and black voters are eager for a chance to exercise the clout that has come with their population growth.

Sen. Phil Gramm, the state's top Republican office holder, likened the campaign here to a group of pioneers under attack by hostile Indians. "We've got to pull out our sabers, spur our horses and head out for the wagon train and hope we get there on time," he said in an interview with ABC News. "I believe we're going to."

Not since the Democrats had a native Texan, Lyndon B. Johnson, at the top of the ticket has a Republican presidential candidate faced such difficulties in Texas.

"The Republican tide may have run as far as its going to go here; in fact it may already be running out," said John Connally, a popular Democratic governor in the 1960s who then switched parties.

When Bush first entered politics here in the 1950s, "Yellow dog Democrats," so-named because they liked to say they would vote for an ugly beast before voting for a Republican, had ruled the state as a one-party fief since Reconstruction.

The first cracks came when Texas went for Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1952, eight years before a Republican won any statewide office. Then, along with California and Florida, it became part of the Sun Belt triad that helped keep Republicans in the White House for 20 of the past 24 years.

With public opinion polls showing Bush just as far behind in his home state as he is in the rest of the country, some officials of both parties wonder if they are witnessing another fundamental change in Texas politics.

George Christian, a White House official in the Johnson administration who is a Democratic political consultant in Austin, said, "This has become such a ticket-splitting state that we've had some pretty strange elections recently, but this year the fundamentals look better for the Democrats than they have at any time since 1976 at least."

The economy, such a potent political motivator elsewhere, exercises a particularly profound influence here. While the rest of the nation is responding to a sharp downturn after a long period of prosperity, Texans had just begun to enjoy a recovery from the oil busts of the 1980s when things went flat.

"In the past we've had presidential campaigns turn on all kinds of ideological and emotional issues, but this one is very fundamentally a campaign of pocketbook issues," Connally said. "Things may be worse other places right now, but we Texans went through one hell of a ringer."

After their long experience of economic pain, he said, Texans are likely to be skeptical of Republicans' claims that they are the party of prosperity.

A key demographic factor in the success of previous Republican candidates has been the large number of independents and Republicans who moved to the suburbs of Texas cities during the oil boom of the 1970s and early 1980s.

"This tremendous migration overwhelmingly benefited the Republicans," said Richard Murray, a professor of Political Science at the University of Houston, but he noted that by the late 1980s this movement slowed considerably and even stopped in some places because of the economic problems here.

In 1990, Ann W. Richards narrowly won the race for governor using a novel strategy for a Democrat that included aggressively seeking suburban votes.

"We realized that the Republicans had so eroded the traditional Democratic base that we had to target the swing voters," said Mary Beth Rogers, the governor's chief of staff. She noted that the Richards campaign went after suburban voters with promises to improve the regulation of insurance companies and that Clinton was striking similar cords with his emphasis on a national health insurance program.

And the battle for the white, middle class has been inflamed by the peculiarities of this election season.

"We have a real problem in the suburbs because Perot made it possible for those people to say they are not for Bush," said a Texas Republican delegate here speaking on condition of anonymity. "Now they are loose and we have to get them back in the corral before Clinton gets them."

Clinton has already aggressively courted Hispanic voters, the fastest growing sector of the Texas electorate. Robert Stein, a professor of political science at Rice University in Houston, said poll results show "Clinton has locked the Hispanic vote and locked it early. If he can hold his margins in this community he'll be competitive in Texas."

Like a political frontiersman, Bush came to Texas when the Republican Party barely existed here and he has helped build it for nearly 40 years. As a result, he enjoys advantages in personal associations and in fund-raising abilities even beyond those normally bestowed on an incumbent president.

History was on his side when he returned to Houston this week, but he can not afford to take anything for granted.

"We have never just won this state," said Karl Rove, a Republican consultant and alternate on the Texas delegation. "We have to go out and earn it and this time we can't concede anything or assume anything."

U.N. moves to halt heavy weapons fire

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — The head of the U.N. forces in the former Yugoslav federation warned Wednesday that he didn't have enough troops to monitor an accord designed to spare Sarajevo from further shelling.

But Gen. Satish Nambiar told a news conference at U.N. headquarters that the capital's airport was likely to reopen today after a two-day shutdown. Warring factions had assured him relief flights would not be harmed, he said.

The airport, a lifeline for the besieged capital, closed Tuesday after militiamen locked radar onto a British Hercules transport plane and fired anti-aircraft machine guns, Nambiar said.

He said he did not know who fired at the plane, but that all sides had militias in the area. Privately, U.N. peacekeepers said they suspected only the Serbs had radar-aided guns.

Nambiar said an agreement to place all heavy weapons around the city under U.N supervision was to be concluded later in the day.

Civilians have suffered most from artillery attacks. Frequent targets have been hospitals and refugee hotels, most recently the Hotel Europa, which was torched when mortar rounds hit it Monday, killing five people.

Investigators estimated that 35,000 people have died and more than a million have been driven from their homes since Muslims and Croats in Bosnia voted Feb. 29 to break away from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia, setting off war with Serbian nationalists.

The Senate report, which criticized the United Nations and State Department for their slow response to the crisis, said the Serbs had evicted non-Serbs from about 70 percent of the republic.

Sarajevo, with a population more than 300,000, has been kept going on 200 tons of relief a day.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION
HOUSTON

Night showcases wives, family values

By Alan Bernstein
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — In the political year of the woman, it was the historical night of the wives.

The defense of tradition delivered by Barbara Bush and Marilyn Quayle on Wednesday won't be the most important oratory of the convention. That distinction belongs to the president's address tonight.

And the spousal speeches may not have the biggest impact on the election. The voters say they're more concerned with the economy than the ethics of home and hearth.

But the words of the first and second ladies will long be remembered for marrying marriage to politics — in ways that could shape presidential candidacies for years to come.

It wasn't the first time that a president's or vice president's wife has spoken to a nominating convention. But it was probably the first time that such women took on the double task of trying to alter the debate over "family values" while trying to improve their husbands' standing in the polls.

Mrs. Bush is thought to be more popular than Mr. Bush. Mrs. Quayle is thought to be smarter than her husband. Wednesday's events did nothing to dispel these notions.

But merely by making these extraordinary appearances, the women were asserting that the Bush-Quayle ticket is indeed a four-person package.

That, in Mrs. Quayle's words, marriage is a partnership. That you get two for the price of one when you vote for a man. That you're more bound to vote for the husband if you like the wife.

The idea, as acknowledged by Republican strategists, was to contrast their ticket's supportive wives with the persona of Hillary Clinton, a professional woman portrayed by the GOP as pushy, radical and independent.

Cheers embraced first lady Barbara Bush as she took the Astrodome stage.

But the attempt to draw the distinctions was not without contradictions.

The first lady, in an interview at the convention, chided Mrs. Clinton for posturing as a potential "co-president." Yet Mrs. Bush has spent much of the week displaying herself as a dynamic force who can set the personal tone, if not the policies, in the White House.

Mrs. Bush also said this week that she was jealous of her husband's opponents' wives' professional accomplishments.

Mrs. Quayle reminded the nation Wednesday that millions of people, by inference including herself, didn't join the '60s counterculture and didn't conclude "that American society was so bad that it had to be radically remade by social revolution."

■ Analysis

Yet it took nothing less than an uproarious women's movement for the law profession and other institutions of power to fully accept modern women such as Mrs. Quayle, who was a budding baby boomer attorney by the time she married her husband.

Contradictions aside, the women speakers helped their husbands get across the Republican argument that the Democratic agenda for "change" shouldn't be adopted.

By doing it themselves, Mrs. Bush and Mrs. Quayle may have freed Bush from using some of his precious time tonight to repeat his 1988 lines about honoring wholesomeness and "quiet voices."

"Now is not the time to turn away from the values that brought us here," the vice president's wife said.

That's an invitation for the middle class people to flock to the security of discipline, religion and work. The GOP platform tries to monopolize all three.

But the middle class may not be able to go along with the premise advanced by these two women, who have devoted their lives to their children and social causes such as literacy.

The majority of women work "outside the home." They can't afford the option of staying home to take care of their children. That's why their minds are on economics — the issue on which the Bush-Quayle ticket is trailing.

Robertson speech spotlights fundamental party movement

By James R. Owen
Reporter-Telegram Washington bureau

HOUSTON — When televangelist Pat Robertson delivered a scorching, prime-time attack on Democrat Bill Clinton Wednesday night, he demonstrated the strong impact that the religous right has had on the GOP national convention here.

Led by Robertson and cheered on by hundreds of fundamentalist Christian delegates here, the religious hardliners have put an unmistakable imprint on this convention and its party platform, one of the most conservative in years.

The GOP document contains such cherished Christian-right planks as a call for an absolute ban on abortion, opposition to gay marriage or adoption of children and a proposal for tax credits for parents who send their children to Christian schools.

Throughout the four-day GOP convention, Robertson was aided by such conservative activists as Beverly LaHaye, president of Concerned Women of America, and Phyllis Schlafly, head of the Eagle Forum.

At a "God and country" rally Monday, Christian singer Pat Boone entertained a cheering crowd just before Vice President Quayle referred to the newfound potency of the Christian right.

"In 1988, they said the Christian conservative movement was dead," Quayle said. "This is a resurrection here today."

Matthew Moen, a professor at the University of Maine and author of "The Transformation of the Christian Right," said such comparisons are overblown. But he added, "The Christian right has mounted a conscious, concerted effort to infiltrate and dominate the Republican party."

He said the movement's leadership has passed to Robertson, who fought Bush for the 1988 Republican nomination, from the Rev. Jerry Falwell, a Lynchburg, Va., preacher and president of Liberty University there. Falwell was the dominant force in the Christian right's efforts to elect Ronald Reagan in 1980, but the movement was disappointed when Reagan failed to appoint staunch Christian conservatives to the Supreme Court, Moen said.

"The modern religious right is carrying out its agenda much more quietly, and efficiently, than it did during the early 1980s," he added. "Back then, the movement was focused on the top; now, they're organizing a grassroots campaign across the country.

"Bush clearly needs these people, and the campaign has clearly accommodated their agenda in Houston," Moen said. "But some of the platform provisions are so hardline conservative that they may alienate mainstream voters, even some Republicans that Bush must have in his column."

On the volatile issue of abortion, for example, many polls suggest that the Republican position is out of step with the electorate.

The Democrats have lost no time in trying to exploit the GOP's hard-right tilt. On Tuesday, party chairman Ron Brown said, "The Republican party is in the hip pocket of the right-wing Christian ideologues. That is not the direction in which the American people want to go."

Asked whether the religious right is trying to capture the reins of the GOP, LaHaye, whose organization counts 600,000 members, said simply, "We're just fighting for what we believe in." Referring to the Republican platform, she said, "We had the votes. We won and they lost."

Glimpses around the GOP convention

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — "It's All My Fault. Blame It on the Media." Buttons and T-shirts bearing that message proved so popular among newspeople at the Republican convention that one vendor Wednesday was reduced to taking orders for future delivery of the shirts, because he had run out.

Distrust the media? There's a foundation-funded alternative for curious voters this year.

If you call 1-800-786-6885, one of the 21 minimum-wage volunteers working in Corvallis, Ore., for the Center for National Independence in Politics will supply a factual answer (no opinions) to your specific question on a candidate who made it through the primaries for the presidency, Congress or governor. Some reporters in Houston called in test questions, and the answers seemed quick and direct.

That's free. For $3.50, the center will also send you a packet of data on the candidate's biography, campaign finances, voting record, positions and past performance. To get that, call 1-900, instead of 1-800, but the rest of the number's the same.

The new center's founders include two former presidents — Republican Gerald Ford and Democrat Jimmy Carter.

WISH List (as in Women in the Senate and the House), a PAC helping only those candidates who are Republican, pro-choice and female, had a breakfast meeting in Houston this week. On the menu were Eggs Cuomo (guaranteed not to run), Nut 'n' Honey (Bill and Hillary), Poptart (Gennifer Flowers) and Murphy Brownies (not a Dan Quayle favorite).

GOP youth voice deep concerns

HOUSTON — Bill Clinton rapped with MTV viewers and played the sax on Arsenio Hall. President Bush turned down Music Television's requests for interviews, saying he doesn't want to look like a "teeny-bopper."

But that doesn't matter to the young Republicans gathered here for the party's national convention. When it comes to the White House, they want more than their MTV.

They're looking for a mature leader who will secure the nation's economic prosperity well into their adulthood. A tall order, perhaps, but one they believe Bush can fill.

"Clinton offers a short-term solution, which is good for now," said Robert Turner, 21, an Austin Community College student attending the Republican National Convention. "But that won't help 20 years from now."

Hsao-Hsion Chio, 18, a student at the University of Texas at Austin, said: "Those who support Bush will support him through any means. He doesn't have to rally us. We're here not because we saw him on television; we're here just to support him."

While these young Republicans are solid in their support for Bush and the GOP, they are in the minority for the first time in a decade, according to a nationwide poll released this week.

Robinson & Meunster Associates of Sioux Falls, S.D., questioned 1,012 voters between the ages of 18 and 40. They found that 54 percent of young voters have a favorable opinion of the Democrats, while 46 percent view the GOP favorably.

But that does not particularly worry GOP officials. After all, the survey was taken Aug. 6-10, while the Democrats were basking in the afterglow of their convention.

Fred Meyer, chairman of the Texas Republican Party, said he believes young voters will continue to find a niche in the Republican Party because of what he says is its core philosophy of preserving the rights of the individual.

"It's a freer environment (and) a freer society with the way Republicans view government and its role and the way the Democrats do," Meyer said.

The Republican Party has tried to attract young people by inviting more than 800 students, mostly members of College Republicans chapters, to the convention.

They attend workshops and discussion groups and get a chance to mingle with delegates, party officials and the media. Some College Republicans caused a stir by interrupting a forum held by Ron Brown, the Democrats' national chairman, at which he was rebutting GOP criticism of Clinton.

Race tightens in convention week

By Rebecca Trounson
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The race between President Bush and Bill Clinton has tightened this week, apparently reflecting a boost for the president from the GOP convention, according to nationwide opinion polling conducted for the Houston Chronicle and The Hotline.

The sampling of 1,500 voters taken Saturday through Tuesday shows the president now trailing his Democratic opponent by 12 percentage points, with 50 percent of voters saying they plan to vote for Clinton and 38 percent for Bush.

The results are the total of three polls, each involving 500 registered voters, that were conducted over the weekend, on Monday night and on Tuesday night.

In fact, the Tuesday night sampling, if taken alone, suggests that the race is even closer, with 48 percent for Clinton and 42 percent for Bush. That margin is believed the narrowest of any poll to date. The weekend sampling of 500 voters showed Clinton with a spread of 15 points.

Other national polls just prior to the convention gave Clinton an even wider lead.

The convention "bump" — the expected result of several days of speeches lauding the party's candidate and denigrating its opponent — also appeared to be reflected in a jump in recent days in Bush's favorable rating and in Clinton's unfavorable showing.

In addition, the Tuesday night poll showed that an overwhelming majority of voters — 59 percent — would not believe the president if he promised in tonight's acceptance speech not to raise taxes during a second term. His decision to break his memorable 1988 "read my lips" tax pledge is widely seen as a turning point in his presidency.

Rumors have been flying this week that Bush might use his speech to announce changes in economic policy, perhaps including a proposal to cut taxes.

But judging by the poll results, there would be little political gain. Only 27 percent of those surveyed Tuesday said they would believe the president if he made such a pledge.

If the speech does contain a tax cut announcement and that becomes the next day's headline, "then the speech misses its purpose," said Doug Bailey, publisher of The Hotline, the daily briefing on American politics.

Bailey said that if Bush does not articulate his vision for the next four years in his speech, "one line on taxes is not going to play very well."

Overall, Bush's favorable rating rose from 37 percent of those surveyed over the weekend to 46 percent on Tuesday night. His unfavorable number fell during the same period from 53 percent to 47 percent.

Clinton's unfavorable rating, meanwhile, rose from 29 percent in the first poll to 33 percent in Tuesday's, apparently reflecting at least the leading edge of this week's convention impact. But his favorable number stayed relatively stable over the same period, at 56 percent in the weekend sampling and 55 percent in Tuesday's.

The surveys were conducted by Ed Goeas of the Tarrance Group, a Republican pollster, in conjunction with Democratic pollster Celinda Lake.

Lake, who polls for Clinton, said Bush's improved figures were comparable to Clinton's gains at the beginning of last month's Democratic gathering in New York.

Although the change was relatively predictable, Lake said, the difference is that "the Republican convention so far has only spoken to (Bush's) base. It hasn't broadened out at all," unlike the Democratic convention, where Clinton made inroads beyond his base support.

Goeas pointed out, though, that Bush's gains so far reflect only the first night of convention speeches. The Tuesday night polling did not fully reflect whatever impact that night's speeches, which featured U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas and Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Jack Kemp, had on viewers.

"I have never seen the opposing party try to step on the news as much as the Clinton campaign has here," Goeas said.

The survey also asked voters for their opinions on this week's Republican attacks on Hillary Clinton.

A majority of voters, 51 percent, said they do not believe her public statements and writings are relevant to her husband's presidential bid and should not be raised by the Bush campaign. Thirty-seven percent said the issue was relevant and should be considered fair game.

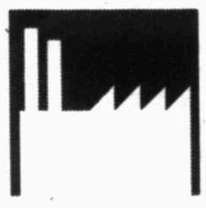

The cumulative polling of 1,500 voters has a margin of error of slightly more than plus or minus three percentage points. The margin of error for Tuesday's poll of 500 voters is about five percentage points.

Report card on

N.Y. Times News Service

Accepting his party's presidential nomination four years ago, then-Vice President George Bush energized the Republican National Convention with a speech that included many specific promises. Here is a summary of the pledges from that address and the Bush administration's record in fulfilling them:

THE ECONOMY

PROMISE: "On jobs, my mission is 30 in eight. Thirty million jobs in the next eight years."

RECORD: The number of employed Americans increased by less than 1 million in the first three and a half years of the Bush administration. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, the increase was 841,000 between January 1989 and June 1992. Unemployment is currently at 7.7 percent, one-tenth of a point below an eight-year high, with about 10 million jobless Americans.

ASSESSMENT: Unfulfilled.

PROMISE: "Read my lips. No new taxes."

RECORD: During heated budget negotiations with Congress, Bush released a statement on June 26, 1990, agreeing that "tax revenue increases" were needed. Four months later, he signed into law an increase in income tax rates from 28 percent to 31 percent for the wealthy, a five-cent-per-gallon gas tax, and luxury taxes for expensive cars, boats, and jewelry.

ASSESSMENT: Broken.

THE ENVIRONMENT

PROMISE: "I am going to stop ocean dumping."

RECORD: Vacationers in the summer of 1988 had been shocked to find syringes and other medical waste washing up on beaches. Congress, state governments, and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency teamed up to monitor and direct the disposal of such wastes. The problem abated.

ASSESSMENT: Fulfilled, without a prominent presidential role.

PROMISE: "We must clean the air. We must reduce the harm done by acid rain."

RECORD: He broke the logjam that had blocked a revision of the Clean Air Act. In late 1990, he signed the new bill into a law aimed at reducing emissions from factories and automobiles. But within months his administration, through a council headed by Vice President Dan Quayle, began weakening the provisions of the new law by writing lenient regulations.

ASSESSMENT: Partly fulfilled.

SOCIAL ISSUES AND CIVIL RIGHTS

PROMISE: "I want a kinder, gentler nation."

RECORD: After the sharp cutbacks in spending for the poor amid the financial excesses of the rich during the Reagan administration, Bush steered a more moderate course. He abandoned Reagan's budget-cutting campaign and permitted substantial increases for Medicaid, food stamps, and child nutrition. Bush aggressively promoted volunteerism and the individual's private responsibility to help those with disadvantages.

ASSESSMENT: Partly fulfilled.

PROMISE: "I hope to stand for a new harmony, a greater tolerance. We've come far, but I think we need a new harmony among the races in our country."

Gramm keynote lacks resonance

GRAMM SPEAKS

"Leadership is the difference. It has changed the world and it has brought us more than peace; George Bush's leadership has brought us victory."

"To paraphrase Winston Churchill: Give us the tools and we will finish the job. Give us a Republican Congress to work with President Bush and we will put America back to work and put criminals in jail where they belong."

"Democrats and Republicans agree on one thing: We both want change. The debate is not about who is for change; it's about the direction of the change."

By R.G. Ratcliffe
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Many Republican convention delegates said Wednesday a Mexia printer named Dickie was not the only thing flat about Texas Sen. Phil Gramm's keynote address to the Republican National Convention.

In fact, many delegates and convention observers said Gramm's use of print-shop owner Dickie Flatt to personalize his tough political messages was the only interesting part of the Tuesday speech.

"To me, he's just not a good speaker," said alternate delegate James Howard of San Francisco. "He's certainly a loyal supporter, a good soldier, but he's just not an inspirational speaker."

Gramm's keynote address certainly was not the disaster that Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton faced four years ago when he anesthetized his party's national convention with a long, tedious speech to nominate Michael Dukakis.

But Gramm's speech also did little to spark talk about him as a possible 1996 presidential candidate. Some delegates walked out during his stiffly delivered address.

"Phil Gramm blew an opportunity to enhance his reputation nationally," said Bill Price, director of the Texas Coalition for Life. "He's not going to get the bounce out of that speech that he wanted."

Hugh Gregg, the former governor of New Hampshire, said Gramm's speech did a good job defining the differences between President Bush and Clinton, "but it wasn't electrifying."

Gregg said the perception of Gramm's speech also was hurt by dynamic speeches given the night before by Patrick Buchanan and former President Reagan.

He said some people watching the speech at home on television may have turned it off.

At least one network turned Gramm off. NBC pulled the plug on Gramm's speech at 10 p.m., cutting away to give the time to affiliates' local news and Jay Leno's talk show.

"If it was a real riveting and compelling speech, we'd have stayed. But it wasn't. We missed about the last nine minutes," said NBC News anchor Tom Brokaw.

Texas Republican Chairman Fred Meyer railed in defense of Gramm's speech.

"Phil Gramm's speech is not meant for the eastern media elite. It's meant for the average working person of the United States. Those are the people who understand Phil Gramm and know what he said," Meyer said.

But many Texas Republicans privately admitted Gramm's speech was flat. Some said he may have suffered because it was only the second time in his political career that he had used a teleprompter.

Gramm spokesman Larry Neal said he had heard nothing but rave reviews from people outside the news media.

Robert Segura, a delegate from Fresno, Calif., said the speech hurt Gramm's presidential chances down the line because Housing Secretary Jack Kemp delivered a better speech just minutes before the Texas senator.

"Let me put it this way: People were very, very impressed with Jack Kemp," Segura said.

HIV-infected mother lifts 'shroud of silence'

By Mark Sherman
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — Mary Fisher's affliction does not match her pedigree. Mother of two young boys, daughter of prominent Republicans, a lifelong Republican herself and a veteran of Gerald Ford's White House, Ms. Fisher is in many ways the archetypal GOP conventioneer.

But she came to the Astrodome Wednesday to talk about AIDS. Last year, doctors diagnosed the 44-year-old resident of Boca Raton, Fla., with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. She does not suffer any of the symptoms of the disease.

"I am one with the lonely gay man sheltering a flickering candle from the cold wind of his family's rejection," Ms. Fisher said. She said the chance to speak and her polite reception marked the end of the "shroud of silence" her party had cast over AIDS.

Earlier, amid a flurry of interviews, Mrs. Fisher, who has two children, said, "I hope they'll hear me and I hope they'll listen to me and I hope they'll know that I am one with everyone who has this disease or who is infected. I don't discriminate and I don't think that we should as a people," she added.

"It can happen to anybody. We all need to respond. It doesn't matter how you got this disease," said the daughter of financier Max Fisher.

Even though — or perhaps because — she does not fit the profile of most of those infected with the virus or suffering its symptoms, Ms. Fisher hopes to be a bridge between the gay men and intravenous drug users who are most frequently AIDS victims and a less tolerant sector of the Republican body politic, including some who believe that AIDS is God's revenge against being gay.

Like Elizabeth Glaser and Bob Hattoy, two AIDS sufferers who addressed the Democrats in New York last month, Ms. Fisher is the first person to talk about the issue to her party's convention. Her message was one of education — what puts people at risk to contract the virus and sex education in the schools.

Bus rides turn into mini-parties

HOUSTON (AP) — Some Republican National Convention participants facing as much as 45-minute bus rides to get from their hotel to the Houston Astrodome don't seem to mind.

They're using the time for parties and pep rallies of their own.

"It's marvelous," Michigan delegate Michael Kelly said as he boarded one of the delegation's two chartered buses. "It's been so easy."

Convention officials had feared the more than 500 buses carrying delegates from their hotels to the stadium would result in traffic gridlock.

So far, there have been no problems outside of the usual Houston traffic, Jim DePitts, director of mass transit for the convention, said.

Kelly and other Michigan delegates are staying at the Sheraton Crown Hotel near Houston's Intercontinental Airport, about 35 miles from the convention.

Singing songs like a group of children on their way to summer camp, the delegates begin their trek armed with bottles of flavored mineral water.

Butch and Cathy Jones of New Orleans agree nothing beats the bus.

The couple drove their own car to Houston, but after driving around the city for a day, bought a pair of $35 tickets known as GOPasses. The passes are accepted on city buses providing shuttle service to and from the convention.

"It just takes a while when you're driving because the directions aren't always as easy as they seem," Mrs. Jones said. "The bus is the best way to go."

"We planned on an hour and a half and it's only taking 30 minutes," South Dakota Gov. George Mickelson said. His delegation is staying some 30 miles southeast of Houston near the Johnson Space Center.

The transportation plan, however, is not without critics.

"If you're going to events that aren't in the Astrodome, it's been very difficult," Sharon Miller, a Maine delegate and chief of staff to Gov. John Kernan said. "You put a lot of miles on your car or you drain your wallet real fast. It's like 45 minutes from event to event."

Pennsylvania delegates, also staying near the airport, have found the long rides taxing to their patience.

State Rep. Richard Geist of Altoona, referred to the bus rides as "like going to scout camp."

For visitors looking for another way to get around town, Virginia McCune of Michigan suggested renting a vehicle.

She and six others rented a van to drive the 45 miles to Galveston and its Gulf of Mexico beaches for a day. The $60 cost split among them came to $8.50 each.

"The hard thing abou Houston is it takes an hour to get anywhere, so you might as well drive an hour and a half to Galveston," she said.

Many rental car agencies stocked up for the convention and say they are having no problems filling last-minute requests.

Convention activity in brief

■ Kemp apologizes for mistaken identity

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — U.S. Housing Secretary Jack Kemp apologized Wednesday to a woman that he wrongly identified as a welfare recipient in his speech before the Republican National Convention.

"He called me. He apologized, and he will be sending me a statement apologizing," said Evelyn Lindsey of Syracuse.

Tuesday night, Kemp said in his speech, "Last year, I toured the home of a wonderful black woman named Evelyn Lindsey. After years in public housing and on welfare, thanks to our administration's public-private partnerships, she finally became a homeowner."

Lindsey said she has worked as a maintenance dispatcher at a public housing project in Syracuse for 21 years. She said she was on welfare more than 20 years ago for about a year while she was sick.

"Welfare is a program that is there if you need it and if you don't need it, don't abuse it," said Lindsey, a 58-year-old Democrat.

Jeni Norris, a Kemp spokeswoman, said the housing secretary "apologized if he offended her."

"He meant that she was a shining example of an underprivileged person who became a part of the American Dream," said Norris.

■ Barton boosts Bush as biggest Texan going

Texas Rep. Joe Barton is fed up with the phrases being used to describe non-native Texan George Bush.

Bush, a New Englander by birth, often is described as an adopted Texan. But Barton told Lone Star state delegates at the Republican National Convention Wednesday that the president deserves better.

He noted that Bush moved to Midland after World War II and went into the oil business, later moved to Houston and has been voting in Texas for four decades.

"I am so sick and tired of people talking about 'George Bush, alleged Texan,' and 'George Bush, who calls Texas home,'" Barton said.

"If Texas is a state of mind, George Bush is the biggest Texan here," he said.

■ Vermont delegate steamed over lost hat

The visit to the podium had been an honor, Mrs. Harwood said Wednesday, "but it wasn't worth losing a hat for."

The committeewoman had on her fur-lined hat festooned with buttons from every convention she has attended since 1964 when she was invited to the podium Tuesday night.

The Secret Service took the hat and set it aside in a side room. When Mrs. Harwood came back to retrieve it, nobody could find it.

"If they can't protect the president any better than my hat, we're in trouble," she said while pressing convention officials to pursue their search.

■ Shrimpers use forum to unreel complaints

FREEPORT — Some Texas shrimpers are using the Republican National Convention to complain about the Bush administration's regulations that have complicated an already diminished catch.

"To me, he just don't care," Douglas Brill Sr., 67, said of the president. "All (Bush) cares about is what happens in the foreign countries. Now he says he's going to take care of the economy, but why hasn't he done something about it in four years?"

Heavy rains earlier this year have reduced the shrimp catch in the Gulf of Mexico by as much as two-thirds, and imports flooding the shrimp market have kept prices low.

Some shrimpers are accusing the administration of sending their industry mixed signals for four years, particularly the government's mishandling of the issue of turtle excluder devices.

The excluder devices allow turtles to escape from nets while retaining the shrimp. Shrimpers contend the devices reduce their shrimp catch.

RECORD: Justice Department officials have vigorously upheld voting rights of minorities and brought lawsuits to fight housing discrimination. But far more publicized was Bush's veto of the 1990 civil rights bill, which sought to give women and minorities more protection from job discrimination. The Bush administration charged that the bill would set up "racial quotas." He signed a revision of the civil rights bill in 1991. In a sign that racial harmony was still not at hand, racial unrest broke out in Los Angeles and spread across the nation last spring.

PROMISE: "I am going to do whatever it takes to make sure the disabled are included in the mainstream."

EDUCATION

PROMISE: "I will encourage merit schools."

RECORD: Off to a late start on education reform, the president unveiled in 1991 his "America 2000" campaign, which has boosted the existing grassroots movement to improve the nation's schools. Congress rejected Bush's proposals for federally funded experimental schools in every state. His calls for giving parents "choice" in picking schools for their children made little headway.

Student test results have changed little during his administration. Federal spending for elementary education went up an average 11 percent per year, compared with only 3 percent per year under President Reagan.

ASSESSMENT: Partially fulfilled.

PROMISE: "I will give more kids a head start."

RECORD: Funding for the Head Start program for disadvantaged pre-schoolers soared up by an average 22 percent each year under Bush. The administration reported that 60 percent of eligible 4-year-olds were enrolled in 1992. Critics say that 3-year-olds should be included and the program expanded threefold.

RECORD: He has played only a minor role on the issue of financing college tuition. He went along with a congressional initiative this year, making federal student loans available to all families, including those with middle and higher incomes. Undergraduate tuition went up nearly 40 percent to an average $3,600 per year during his administration, according to estimates by the American Council on Education.

CRIME

PROMISE: "Zero tolerance" for drug use. "My administration will be telling the dealers: 'Whatever we have to do we'll do, but your day is over. You're history.' "

RECORD: He led the most expensive war against drugs in history, costing $45 billion over four years for law enforcement and treatment. "Casual" use of illegal drugs declined among whites and non-city dwellers, but federal studies found no improvement in long-term trends for hard-core heroin and cocaine abuse, especially among urban minorities. The Office of National Drug Control estimates the annual market in illicit drugs is $40 billion, but private estimates go as high as double that amount.

ASSESSMENT: Unfulfilled.

ENERGY

PROMISE: "I will put incentives back into the domestic energy industry, for I know from personal experience there is no security for the United States in further dependence on foreign oil."

RECORD: Late in his term, the president has pressed Congress to write an energy bill to help spur domestic oil production by reducing the tax liabilities for independent operators. The bill is still being debated on Capitol Hill. Meanwhile, oil producers complain that Bush retained most of the bans on offshore drilling.

During the Bush administration, dependence on foreign oil has increased from 41.9 percent to 48.4 percent as of May 1992. Production of crude oil in the United States fell from 7.9 million to 7 million barrels a day over the period.

ASSESSMENT: Unfulfilled.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS & NATIONAL SECURITY

PROMISE: "I will continue our policy of peace through strength."

RECORD: Military spending has declined during the last two years as the threat of the Soviet Union evaporated. However, Bush has resisted Democratic efforts to make even bigger defense cuts. He showed his willingness to use American military might, first by invading Panama to remove military leader Manuel Noriega and later by organizing the coalition to fight Iraq.

ASSESSMENT: Fulfilled.

PROMISE: "I will move toward further cuts in strategic and conventional arsenals of both the United States and the Soviet Union and the Eastern Bloc and NATO."

RECORD: He completed a Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty and then reached an agreement with Russia's President Boris Yeltsin to make even further cuts, which would reduce strategic nuclear arsenals by two-thirds by the year 2003. On conventional arms, Bush spearheaded a treaty in 1990 to reduce the numbers of tanks, artillery, and aircraft in Europe.

ASSESSMENT: Fulfilled.

PROMISE: "Ban chemical and biological weapons from the face of the Earth. That will be a priority with me."

RECORD: A treaty on chemical weapons, based on a proposal Bush made when he was vice president, is expected to be ready for signing early next year. Biological weapons were actually banned before this promise was made by a treaty signed in 1972, but the Bush administration has opposed efforts to add verification requirements to the accord.

ASSESSMENT: Partly fulfilled.

PROMISE: "And I intend to speak for freedom, stand for freedom, be a patient friend to anyone, East or West, who will fight for freedom."

RECORD: Bush traveled to Poland and Hungary to show solidarity with the democracy movement before the collapse of the Soviet empire. But he was slow to side with Soviet republics seeking independence from Moscow, and was among the last leader to recognize the independence of the Baltic states. For some months he favored Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev over Russia's democratically elected Yeltsin. Bush maintained close trade ties with China, despite the Chinese government's bloody crackdown on pro-democracy protestors.

ASSESSMENT: Unfulfilled.

Firm publishes 'Mein Kampf' in Hebrew for Israeli scholars

N.Y. Times News Service

JERUSALEM — For the first time since he wrote it seven decades ago, Hitler's "Mein Kampf" has been published in the language and in the country of the people he tried to exterminate.

The existence of a Hebrew version of the Hitler autobiography is so sensitive here that its publication was carried out quietly.

There is certainly no chance of its ever becoming a best seller, not with only 400 copies printed by Akadamon, a publisher of academic texts that emphasizes the book is intended only for Israeli students of German history and not for the general public.

Nor is the Hebrew version a complete text of "Mein Kampf" — "My Struggle" — written by Hitler in a Bavarian prison in 1923 and 1924, a decade before the Nazi rise to power in Germany.

It is an annotated manuscript of 130 pages, about one-fifth the original, and focuses on chapters offering Hitler's racial views and criticisms of the Weimar Republic. Like most of Akadamon's books, it has a plain black-and-white cover — no photographs of Hitler and no swastikas that might smack of sensationalism.

"It's targeted for people who are interested in learning about National Socialism in a course of study," said Moshe Zimmermann, a professor of German history at Hebrew University in Jerusalem. "But some people felt it should not be translated into Hebrew. If you even mention the idea of translating it, some suspect you of making National Socialism propaganda."

Barbara gives Bush chance for support

Before her address Wednesday evening at the Republican National Convention, political gurus said Barbara Bush's performance would be critical to her husband's re-election hopes. If that is true, then Mrs. Bush met the challenge with a speech that touched all the bases.

On an evening dedicated to family values, Mrs. Bush explained unequivocally what the term "families" means to her and in so doing, may have broadened the GOP voter base wide enough to give her husband the opportunity to regain support lost since the end of the Persian Gulf War.

In asserting that "to us, family means putting your arms around each other and being there," Mrs. Bush opened the door for people to return to the GOP. Many have left, feeling excluded because of the platform's embrace of a constitutional ban on abortion and other controversial stands.

There is no question that, at this time, the GOP cannot become a party of exclusion. If it does, it likely will sign its own death warrant for this presidential election.

Yes, the Republican Party will still be strongly directed at traditional families, but it does not hold a monopoly on the appreciation of family life. The party must remain broad enough philosophically to provide the vision given by Ronald Reagan of "a shining city on a hill" for a broad cross section of Americans.

Barbara Bush said that her husband is "a man of enormous integrity and love for his country — and for all of America."

Now, with Mrs. Bush's address behind her, the stage is set for Bush to underscore his realization of the need for strong measures on domestic issues, especially the economy.

Barbara Bush turned in the speech she had to provide. Now is the time for Bush to respond to the cry for help from America's families.

Believer in Lincoln's words hopes to revive standards

If only we had listened. . .

■ You cannot bring about prosperity by discouraging thrift.

■ You cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong.

■ You cannot help little men by tearing down big men.

■ You cannot help the wage earner by pulling down the wage payer.

■ You cannot further the brotherhood of man by encouraging class hatred.

■ You cannot help the poor by destroying the rich.

■ You cannot establish sound security on borrowed money.

■ You cannot keep out of trouble by spending more than you earn.

■ You cannot build character and courage by taking away men's initiative and independence.

■ You cannot help men permanently by doing for them what they could and should do for themselves.

After you have read the above words and philosophies of Abraham Lincoln please take time to read them a second time and reflect on how applicable they are to the current conditions and situations that are prevalent in our nation today. For most of three generations we have witnessed a continuing violation of all these stated principles, which has brought us many of the national problems we are now struggling to correct. As one of those who are members of the Party of Lincoln, we urge you to join us in our efforts to re-elect our leaders, change the membership in Congress and re-implement those standards which we must practice once again to get our ship back on course.

Midland wants opportunity for future with some dignity

A new park — that's what Midland needs. When we are taxed out of our homes, we will have a nice shady place to live.

JOBS, folks. We have got to pull together and brainstorm ways of putting people to work. If the city of Midland could back entrepreneur efforts in a place like Delwood Mall for a limited period, I believe the community would benefit from an investment in itself. What about partnership between the young and seniors in business ventures. It would require putting aside personal greed and need much community support, but it can be done here as we saw with Jessica. Now we need to pull together again for the sake of the less fortunate among us — and there are many.

Midland is blessed with a lot of talent but no one can afford the risks of acting on their ideas. Let's pretend like things will not be any better economically and learn to "use what we got." The $40,000 salary of (for mayor Carroll) Thomas to recruit businesses here to compete with already established businesses is insane. We have got to face the problems in our community and deal with them. If Thomas can stop sexually-transmitted diseases, stop tuberculosis, decrease crime, put families back on their feet with descent jobs, provide every citizen with affordable medical care and feed folks in our town who are going hungry, then he has earned his airport office and every dollar of that salary. Most of those hurting in our community do not want a handout — just a chance for a future with some dignity.

Hello . . . can anyone hear us?

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Aug. 20, the 233rd day of 1992. There are 133 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Aug. 20, 1940, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill paid tribute to the Royal Air Force, saying, "Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few."

GEORGE WILL

Republicans cling to numerical cliches

HOUSTON — Republicans huddled here — the comfortable in search of comforting thoughts — cling to cliches the way survivors of shipwrecks cling to spars. Many of the cliches are numerical.

Since the world's oldest two-party competition coalesced in 1856, the parties' presidential candidates have received 1,208,665,869 votes. Republicans have won 51.8 percent of the two-party vote. But since 1952 Republicans have received 53.3 percent; since 1968, 55.1 percent.

Will

In the 132 years since a Republican first won the presidency, Democrats have held that office just 48 years. They would have to win the next nine elections, through 2024, to catch up with Republican victories.

In the 1980s, Reagan and Bush won 1,439 electoral votes, more than any party ever won in a decade. In 1988 Bush won by 10 or more percentage points in 28 states with 263 electoral votes — only seven short of the winning number. In the last 36 years three Republicans seeking re-election (Eisenhower in 1956, Nixon in 1972, Reagan in 1984) won landslides, averaging 58.9 percent of the two-party vote.

But at this point Republicans run out of numerical novocain. Other numbers hurt.

One reason Bush could become just the second incumbent since Hoover to be defeated is that Clinton, in order to win, does not have to make an astonishing improvement on what Dukakis did. In contrast, Dukakis, to win in 1988, would have had to increase by 25 percent Mondale's 1984 total of 41 percent of the vote. Such leaps are rare. In 1952 Eisenhower, a world hero running in a war-weary country, made a 22 percent improvement on Dewey's 1948 portion of the total vote. In 1976 Carter made a 34 percent improvement on McGovern's 1972 total.

Dukakis, in his percentage of the total popular vote, ran the Democrats' second strongest race in 24 years — stronger than Humphrey in 1968, McGovern in 1972, Carter in 1980 and Mondale in 1984. Bush's victory margin of 7.8 points was well below the Republican average of 13 points in the other six Republican victories since 1952. To win, Clinton needs a smaller jump from Dukakis' total than Dukakis made over Mondale's total.

Bush is the first president since Hoover to become president by election and to succeed a president of his own party. Hoover was not re-elected. And the last time a party won a fourth consecutive election — 1944 — the nation was at war.

So, precedents send conflicting signals to worried Republicans. But then, Republicans here are also emitting conflicting messages.

For example, many surly conservatives here are most critical of Bush because there was a recession "on his watch," and because the recovery (there have been five consecutive quarters of growth) is anemic. But by blaming Bush for this, these conservatives are implicitly subscribing to the notion that presidents can, and therefore should, control the economy's destiny, even to the point of preventing business cycles. There was a time when conservatives understood that presidents shouldn't even if they could, and they can't.

Furthermore, Chris DeMuth, president of the American Enterprise Institute, correctly argues that conservatives who say the economy can be discombobulated by this or that action (or inaction, such as a failure to cut capital gains taxation) are implicitly subscribing to the heresy that a capitalist economy is a fragile thing, requiring deft and detailed management by government. The spread of that falsehood profits only its natural adherents on the political left.

Observer tries to find out about 'family values'

MARTHA'S VINEYARD, Mass. — I am grateful to both George Bush and Dan Quayle for having raised the issue of "family values." It is the one that must be addressed before we deal with unemployment. Summer is the best time to examine how we're doing with our family values, and there is no better place to study them than on the law-abiding, God-fearing island of Martha's Vineyard.

Buchwald

The first family I called on was the Avocados. I had to wait to talk to them because they were having a fight in the dining room. It seems that Lilly Avocado, the elder daughter, accused her mother of favoring her younger sister Selma ever since childhood days, and that is why Lilly had never made it as an Olympic gymnastic star.

Branch, the Avocado son, told Lilly she blamed everyone for her troubles but herself. Lilly's mother said she was sorry she came to the Vineyard and was not coming back to be abused by her children. Selma accused Branch's wife of excessive drinking. Everyone got up from the table, slammed a door and went to a different part of the house. Had I found the typical American family?

My next stop was the Sharknests. They were sitting on the porch, lips pursed, staring out on the pond.

"Do you believe in family values?" I asked Carl.

"We do," said Carl Sharknest, "but our children don't. We've been waiting for three days for our son Hatfield to show up. He promised to be here on Thursday."

"Why didn't he call you?"

"He's not talking to me because I told him it was about time he got a job and stopped mooching off his family."

"Maybe he felt he wouldn't be welcome."

"In our family everyone is welcome to the Vineyard no matter how screwed up they are. This includes my daughter who left her children with us and went off to Vermont with her new boyfriend."

"Why did she do that?"

"Because her ex-husband was supposed to take them for two weeks, but he changed his mind at the last moment so he could go windsurfing in Aruba."

"Where should I rate you people in regards to the family values?"

Sharknest said, "List us between Murphy Brown and Princess Di and Prince Charles."

I found a couple to match the Sharknests.

It was Tommy and Tina Teabag. They said they were going to vote the straight Bush-Quayle ticket. "We admire the President and Vice President's nuclear families," Tommy said.

"They aren't talking about their families — they are talking about yours. You do have a good family, don't you?"

"Don't ask Tommy," Tina said. "He wouldn't recognize a family unless it had a 12 golf handicap or jumped in his boat while he was trolling for bluefish."

I said, "What I believe Bush and Quayle have in mind is a loving mother and father and children who will never take the family car unless they have permission."

Teabag said, "Have you found anyone like that on Martha's Vineyard?"

"So far, no. But my next stop is the ferry standby line. Families without reservations to get on the boat tend to stick together more than those with confirmed reservations."

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Writer hopes there's still time to mend divisiveness

ATLANTA — Jack Talley of Atlanta recently retired as vice president for Georgia Power after 31 years in its employ.

After his last day on the job, friends treated him and his wife to dinner downtown. The dinner party broke up around 8:30.

Grizzard

Then, the Talleys and another couple began strolling up Baker Street toward Peachtree. Suddenly, Jack Talley' heard his wife scream.

He looked around and saw a man snatching his wife's purse, twisting her around and breaking the chain that secured the purse to her arm and shoulder.

The thief headed down Baker Street. Jack Talley and his male friend began to chase him.

"For every step I took," Jack said, the thief appeared to take two. "I felt a sense of hopelessness."

Then two cars, driven by two men who had never met each other before, fell into pursuit of the thief.

The two drivers maneuvered the purse snatcher into a hotel parking lot. They caught him and held him until hotel security could be summoned and a subsequent call could be made to the police.

But there's more.

In a letter to Police Chief Eldrin Bell, praising the two men who came to his and his wife's rescue, Jack Talley, who is white, wrote this:

"... When I have recounted this event to my friends, some have asked if the perpetrator was black or white. When I responded he was black, they quickly let me know they were not surprised.

"They assumed the two men who helped us were white. When I revealed they, too, were black, I get a look of true amazement."

The two black men who helped the Talleys were A. Moses White, publisher and founder of the Georgia Sentinel Bulletin. The other was Rory Dunn, a professional National Guardsman temporarily assigned to the Drug Enforcement Agency.

"While we were waiting for the police to arrive," said Jack Talley, "Mr. White kept repeating, 'Atlanta is not like this,' that 'Atlanta is different deep down.'

"He was afraid we were from out of state and would take back home an extremely distasteful opinion of a city he obviously felt a lot of love for."

"Can we all get along?" Rodney King has asked.

As Moses White and Rory Dunn held the purse snatcher, who admitted he was on drugs and had to steal to support his habit, Jack Talley said a black cab driver walked up and asked, "Why did you stop him? He's a brother."

To which A. Moses White answered, "We're all brothers."

I don't have to knock anybody down here with further explanations and pontifications. Like most other large cities, Atlanta's got an urban mess on its hands. While they were burning down L.A., there were hoodlums and punks who wanted to do the same thing here.

But Jack Talley and his wife and his friends were able to see, if just this once, the subtleties of good folk simply helping out other good folk, color be damned.

"We're all brothers," A. Moses White said.

Write it across the sky while there' s still a chance it might bridge at least some of the divisiveness that threatens us all.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States and its allies plan to fly reconnaissance missions over southern Iraq to monitor treatment of dissident Shiites Muslims and will warn Baghdad not to interfere or face attack, a source said Wednesday.

The source, who is from a Western country but spoke on condition of anonymity, expected the ambassadors of the United States, Britain and France to deliver the warning to Iraq's U.N. envoy in New York by early next week. The United States may be anxious to have Britain and France attend the meeting to avoid political overtones — President Bush has denied he is going after Iraq to help his re-election campaign.

The source's comments were the most detailed so far about the "no-fly zone" the allies intend to establish to help protect the Shiites, who reportedly have come under attack from Iraqi aircraft, artillery and other weapons.

Diplomats earlier had suggested Iraq would be warned that the allies would shoot down any Iraqi aircraft targeting the Shiites. On Wednesday, the source said the allies would attack only if the Iraqis interfered with reconnaisance flights.

Still, exactly what constitutes interference is subject to wide interpretation, giving the allies great latitude in deciding whether to shoot down Iraqi planes headed for Shiite areas.

Iraq has been on a collision course with the United States, its allies and the United Nations since its invasion of Kuwait in August 1990. Even after allied forces drove the Iraqis out of Kuwait in February 1991, Baghdad has violated U.N. resolutions prohibiting repression of its people and requiring elimination of its nuclear, biological and chemical weapons.

The latest confrontation was over 200,000 lightly armed Shiites, whom Saddam Hussein has targeted since their failed uprising after the Gulf War.

The Western source at the United Nations said allies would monitor a zone south of the 32nd parallel that is wider than the marshes where most of the Shiites are holed up, and would cover Iraq's main air bases.

Iraq has major air bases at Kut, Nasiriyah, Basra and Amarah and has been reported to use Soviet-made Mi-24 Hinds and French-built Alouette helicopter gunships, bomber planes and ground-based artillery against the Shiites. Warplanes and helicopter gunships could also use numerous smaller airstrips.

The reconnaisance flights would allow the allies to detect not only Iraqi military flights but artillery bombardment of the Shiites. They would leave only a small, central section of Iraq outside allied scrutiny, diminishing Saddam's authority. The allies began surveillance flights over Kurd-dominated northern Iraq early last year.

The new, southern zone could be policed by U.S. planes based in Saudi Arabia or on ships in the Persian Gulf. Britain has offered six planes.

New flights by helicopters in southern Iraq were reported Wednesday.

U.S. officials head to Somalia to prepare for relief operation

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — As U.S. officials visited Somalia on Wednesday to prepare for a massive relief airlift, people in the starving Horn of Africa nation were eating animal skins in a desperate effort to survive.

One family in Gofgadoot, 150 miles northwest of the Somalian capital, Mogadishu, sat round a pot where animal skin and leaves were simmering. On the ground behind them lay a toddler who had died Tuesday morning.

"People down there boil skin, grass, whatever they can lay their hands on," said Sayyid Abdul Azim, an AP photographer who saw families in the northwestern bush cook skins stripped from dead goats and camels during a recent visit.

The French medical relief group, Doctors Without Borders, reported Wednesday that Somalis in the region had resorted to eating animal skins for lack of food. Eighty percent of children under 5 were severely malnourished, and up to 20 people in each of the five towns it visited were dying daily, the Paris-based group reported.

Civil war and drought have combined to deadly effect in the country, and an estimated one-fifth of its roughly 8 million people face imminent starvation. Some 4.5 million more are suffering from malnutrition.

In what promises to be the most massive delivery of relief to Somalia, the United States plans to ferry in 145,000 tons of sorghum, cooking oil and other food over the next two months.

Baidoa, horrifyingly desperate even in a country where desperation has become a way of life, is to receive the first delivery of U.S. aid to Somalia. On Wednesday, four U.S. officials visited the desert town, several miles from Gofgadoot, to lay the groundwork for the airlift that is to begin next week.

The first flight won't take off from neighboring Kenya until U.S. experts arrange for humanitarian agencies to unload, store and distribute the food on the ground. On Tuesday, Marine Brig. Gen. Frank Libbuti, who will command the military airlift from the Kenyan port city of Mombasa, said U.S. soldiers will be responsible only for getting the food into Somalia, but not for getting it from airstrips to the needy.

That job will fall to the small staffs in Somalia of the United Nations, the International Red Cross and smaller humanitarian agencies, working with Somalis themselves. Some aid workers have said they were afraid the task would overwhelm the small humanitarian groups working in Somalia, where marauding gunmen and militias have looted an estimated half of the 88,000 tons delivered so far.

The Americans had hoped to launch their operation Thursday by flying food to northeastern Kenya for trucking to the hundreds of thousands of refugees living in camps along the border.

But it was unclear whether the Israeli-built runway at Kenya's military base at Wajir could handle the weight of a fully loaded C-141 Starlifter cargo plane. The operation could be delayed if smaller aircraft need to be brought in, U.S. embassy spokesman T.J. Dowling said.

None of the U.S. emergency supplies have yet arrived in Kenya, so the American effort initially will draw on 26,000 metric tons of wheat flour, grain, beans and vegetable oil currently in aid warehouses in Mombasa, Dowling said.

Baidoa is commonly cited as the most benighted place in the largely desert nation, where similar scenes exist on smaller scales.

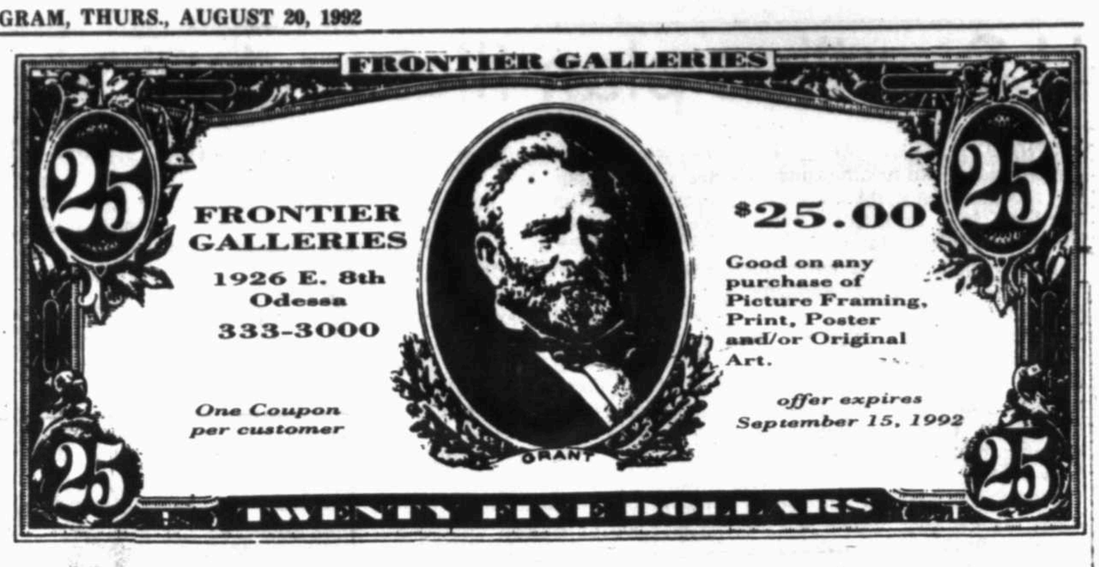

Scores of people die daily in the town with hundreds more perishing in the surrounding bush, according to estimates from aid workers.

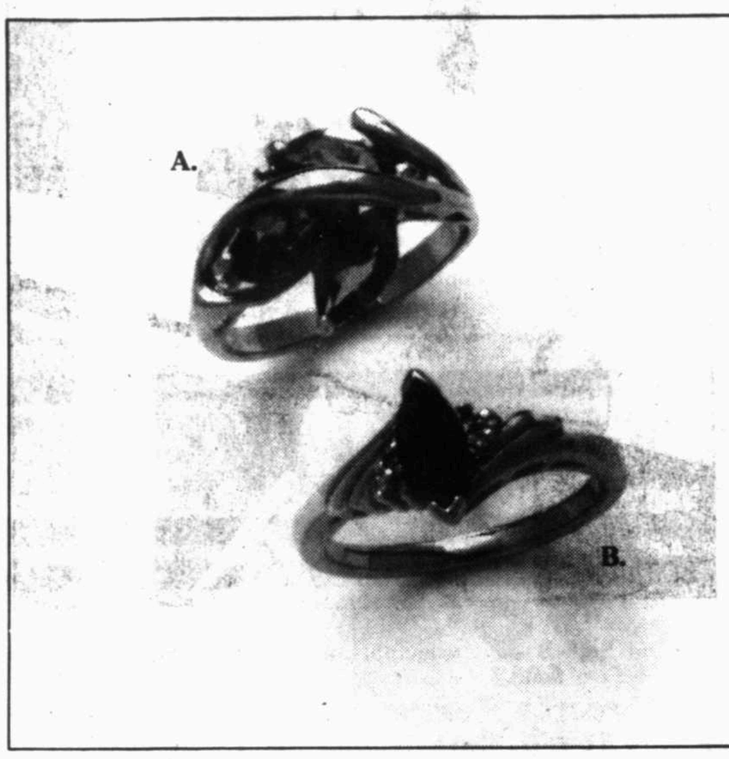

Although the drought in Somalia has been building for at least six months, it was largely ignored until U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali lashed out at the international community last month for paying what he called too much attention to the "rich man's war" in Yugoslavia.

In the past few weeks, Italy, Britain and France also have weighed in with new pledges of assistance.

The International Committee of the Red Cross and other smaller humanitarian organizations have worked in Somalia since rebels toppled dictator Mohamed Siad Barre in January 1991.

Five representatives of the Organization of African Unity, meanwhile, are scheduled to arrive in Somalia on Thursday in an attempt to mediate an end to the clan-based fighting.

'Eagles' to take flight at Airsho'92

The "eagles" of air power from World World II and 50 years later in the 1990s will be flying, saluted, and remembered on Oct. 10-11 when the Confederate Air Force stages its Airsho'92 at Midland International Airport.

"The Confederate Air Force has the largest fleet of World War II aircraft flying in the world," Don Luttrell, a CAF colonel and co-announcer of Airsho'92, said Wednesday in a press briefing.

The CAF, which is developing the "world class" American Airpower Heritage Museum at the Midland airport, is building a "force to be reckoned with again" following CAF's relocation to Midland from Harlingen in South Texas in 1990 and 1991.

The patriotic CAF is dedicated to finding, restoring, flying, and maintaining those rare remnants of 1939-41 warplanes from the World War II era. Currently, more than 140 aircraft from both the Allied forces and the Axis powers are in the CAF's Ghost Squadron, which was founded in 1957 in Mercedes in the Rio Grande Valley by the late aviator Lloyd Nolen and a band of flying farmers and crop-dusters.

Airsho'92's theme is "Honoring Our Eagles ... Then and Now."

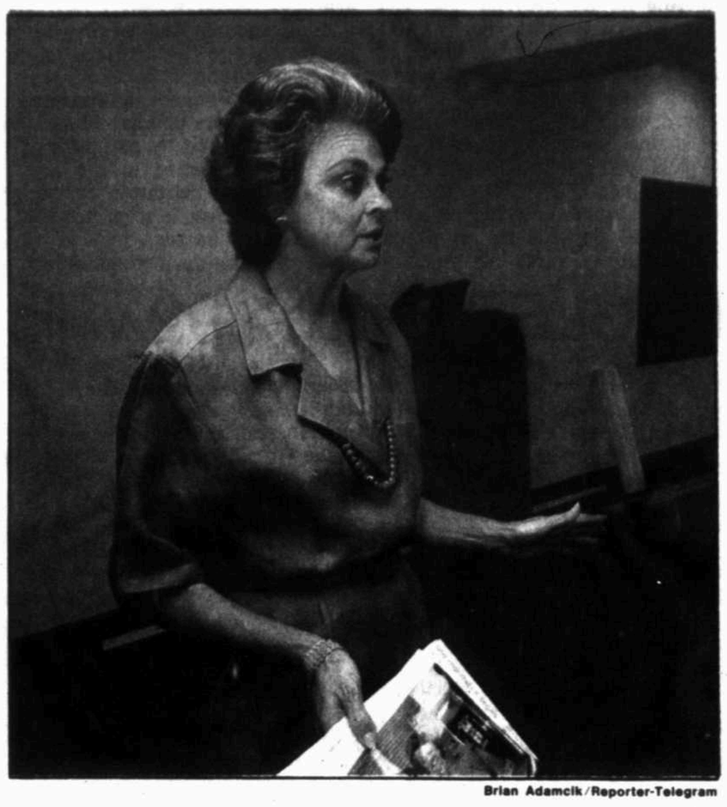

The two-day event, lasting from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. both days, will feature about one and a half hours of flying by World War II propeller-powered fighters, bombers, transports, and trainers and about one hour of flight by today's supersonic military jet aircraft.

Admission to the event is $8 for teen-agers and adults. Fee for children between ages 3 and 12 is $4. Children 2 years old and under will be admitted free.

Crossing to yield foot traffic

Midland High School principal Jane Carrens discusses the move into a new building.

■ A new building purchased by MHS will not only increase classroom space, but will also create an influx of students crossing A Street.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

The first day of school means thousands of students will be out in the streets, at bus stops and in crosswalks. It also means that hundreds of Midland High School students will be crossing A Street for the first time next Thursday.

Thursday is the first day of school for MHS students who will be starting school three days later than their peers due to a special program which gives teachers more inservice training.

MHS students will also have classrooms in a nearby building which previously served as a business office-complex.

School board trustees recently approved purchasing the building located on the northeast corner of the intersection of Carrizo and Illinois streets. Purchased at a cost of approximately $200,000, trustees said it was "a good deal for the school district."

"We purchased it for $200,000 from a holding bank and it is approximately 28,000 square feet, so that is about $7 per square foot — a bargain when you consider it's costing about $50 to $60 per square foot to construct new buildings," said Wilson Heidelberg, executive director of auxiliary services for Midland Independent School District.

"The building is a godsend for us. We were all over each other last year," said MHS Principal Jane Carrens, commenting on the high school's overcrowded conditions. Total enrollment for the school this year is projected to be between 1,700 and 1,800.

The building, purchased to house the science classrooms — while the science area is undergoing complete renovation — will also house vocational classrooms.

"Once the renovations are done, in January, this will primarily become a vocational building," Ms. Carrens said.

But for the first semester, science and vocational students will share the building resulting in 450

Supporters start petition drive to save office

■ A petition has been started in an effort to save the veterans' office from closing.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

A petition has been circulating among veteran groups to save the Midland County Veterans Service Office that faces possible closure.

But the word among those concerned with the fate of the office is that the service will remain open, but only part time.

Whatever the outcome, the decision will be made by month's end, according to County Judge Charles "Bro" Seltzer.

"I don't have a time schedule on that but we will have to do it pretty soon" because of the budget deadline, he said.

Commissioners will continue budget study next week to make the budget's due date of Sept. 1.

Talk of closing the office, or making it part time, comes in light of budget restraints that have led to questioning the practicality and use of the office.

Commissioners queried earlier this month about the office were split on what to do.

Arguments to close the office include that it is a duplication of services offered elsewhere, namely federal agencies, and to trim the budget without raising taxes.

Those in favor of keeping the office open say the services can't be received elsewhere.

The latest move to prevent closure has been a petition drive.

Travis Pipes Jr., acting veterans service officer, said several petitions have been circulated, with at least 400 signatures being secured thus far.

"I am trying to show the commissioners that the concerned citizens and veterans of Midland County ... want to keep the office open full time to provide assistance to all veterans residing in Midland County," he said.

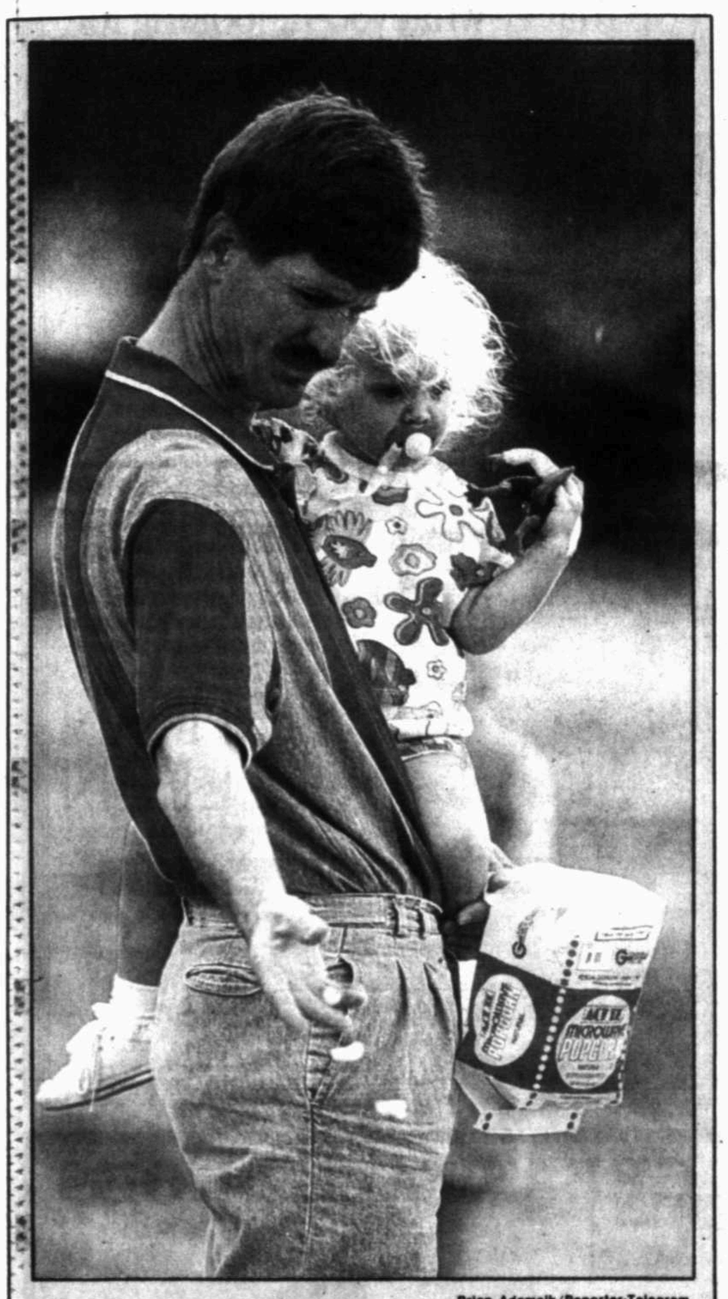

"I have already submitted up to 17 pages to Commissioners Court," he said.

Petitions are at various locations around town including the service office and veteran organizations.

Threat of the office closing also led to consideration of a protest.

Car accident kills Midland girl, injures 2

Staff report

A one-car accident near Midland early Wednesday left a Midland girl dead and two injured.

According to a Department of Public Safety report, a 1988 Jeep, driven by Steven Rossie Owens, 16, of Midland, was traveling westbound on County Road 270 when it ran off the right side of the road and overturned one time. Owens and two passengers, Sera Loree Ares, 16, and Joe Logan, 15, both of Midland, were thrown from the vehicle.

Miss Ares was pronounced dead on the scene by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe.

Owens was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital where he was listed in stable condition with undetermined injuries. Logan was treated and released.

None of the occupants were wearing seatbelts, according to the report.

Nothing beats hospitality topped by peach cobbler

CRANE — Last weekend, when I was wandering around in the sky, I happened to run onto some genuine West Texas hospitality topped off with sweet milk and homemade peach cobbler.

It's true.

Todd

There I was — out practicing flight and sweating. Unless you are on automatic pilot, that's part of learning to do things right up there: work, sweat, practice.

"Think. Stay ahead of the airplane."

That's what flight instructors and old pilots tell you.

"Know your limitations and those of the airplane."

Most of all, don't experiment up there in the air. Leave that to the test pilots.

"Be safe. Watch out. Know what's going on."

There's an old saying in aviation: "There are old pilots, and there are bold pilots. But there are no old, bold pilots."

Fly safely.

So, southeast of Midland's Skywest Airport, I was pursuing perfection in flight maneuvers by performing flow flight, stalls, 360s (making circles in the sky), turns-about-a-point, S-turns and squaring off a cotton field.

It was late afternoon. I had plenty of fuel aboard the airplane, Ragtime. There was enough altitude below me and the airplane. And I had sense enough to remember this saving advice: "Keep thee thy airspeed up, lest the Earth rise up and smite thee."

Presently, to my alarm, I was over Wiley Bob Whisman's old country: Midkiff. Bob, bless his soul, is now dead and buried, but his spirit is much alive. He was quite the humorist and was everybody's friend at his old corner service station. Down-to-earth fellow. So long, Bob.

Time to head back. Climb to 6,500 feet, head west into the sun and then turn north toward Midland. Simple. Should be no problem flying back home with or without radios.

Pretty soon, as familiar landmarks failed to appear and mesas rose from the flat West Texas plains, I knew I wasn't where I had planned to be.

"Plan ahead."

By now, I had well over two hours of fuel aboard, but the sun was rushing to the horizon to make ready for sunset and night.

What next?

"Always look for a safe place to land."

Providence happened along. There, south of me, firmly on the plains, was the community of Crane, which I figured out by reading the town's name on the water tower.

Thank you, Lord.

I dropped altitude, radioed my landing intentions, landed, and taxied Ragtime to a stop. I had beaten sundown.

Good show.

My gratitude suggested that I spend the night at the airport and take off early in the morning.

Hospitality greeted me.

There, outside their hangar, was K.V. Murphy and his son, Shawn, fiddling with K.V. Murphy's single-engine home-built aircraft. The wife and mother, Alana, was nearby.

"Howdy."

After their brief flight, father and son returned, hangared the airplane, and helped me hangar and tie down Ragtime.

Of course, I told them how I ended up at Crane near sunset and planned to bed down in Ragtime or in the pilots' old lounge.

Instead, the Murphy family invited me, a stranger in town, to their country home. They offered me a glass of milk and a bowl of peach cobbler, which I forthwith consumed. We talked a bit about flying and what lures men and women to flight.

I felt at home.

After I had cleaned up, there I was reading in their guest house.

Come morning, I was at the breakfast table relishing cowboy coffee, eggs, and bread and honey.

Soon, I was back at the airport and heading toward Midland town.

Thanks, folks. The experience was a Godsend. No doubt.

Mrs. Owen died Tuesday in a Lovington hospital following a lengthy illness.

She was born April 5, 1938, in Apache, Okla., and married Norman Owen on Sept. 4, 1976.

Survivors include her husband; one son, Lonnie Jackson of Los Lunas, N.M.; four daughters, Elizabeth Peterson of Midland, and LaWanda Jackson, Charlene Perrin and Cheryldean Owen, all of Lovington; her parents, Arthur and Donie Anderson of Lovington; one brother, Stanley Anderson of Lovington; and 13 grandchildren.

South Texas surfer adapts to disability

PORT ISABEL (AP) — When he lost part of his left leg in an automobile crash 17 years ago, surfer Barry Welch was demoralized and on the verge of suicide.

"Surfing was my life," Welch said. "I traveled all over the world, riding waves. I thought when I couldn't surf anymore, it was all over."

Today, however, Welch — who is known in this resort area as "Harpoon Barry" — not only is surfing on his artificial leg, but also has two-legged people lined up to take lessons from him.

"People with two legs pay me to teach them to stand up on a surfboard, and I can surf competitively against the best of them," said Welch, who lost his leg below the knee at age 27.

He designed and helped construct the artificial leg on which he routinely surfs off nearby South Padre Island, which he calls "the hobo Riviera."

"I am a unique, self-made sensation," he said matter-of-factly.

In addition to giving surfing lessons and entering competitions, Welch runs a tattoo shop here, and he is a walking advertisement for his talents with a tattoo needle.

The blond surfer's dark tan is covered almost completely by tattoos of his own design. A spider web snakes its way down his right arm.

About the only part of his body not tattooed is the artificial leg.

He sits in his shop here, surrounded by naked mannequins whose chests are painted with colorful designs and by paintings of red devils reflected in the mirrored walls of his tattoo parlor.

"I may not make it to heaven, but you can be sure I made no deals with the devil to get where I'm at now," he said.

Looking down at his false leg stretched out in front of him, Welch said quietly: "It is a real empty feeling when you put one of these on for the first time, especially if you are an adult on your own. And your mama'a not there and your daddy's not there, and the people in the hospital tell you, 'This is the best it's going to get.'

"I made my first leg myself, out of Hi-C cans. I couldn't wait for my leg to get finished. I wanted to walk. I guess I got the idea from the Tin Woodsman in "The Wizard of Oz.' That leg actually worked pretty well.

"I think the worst part was getting down on my knees and praying to God the first time and saying, "Thank you.' I do that every night. I thank God that I have one leg. Who knows when the other one could go? Then I would be like Tattoo in "Fantasy Island.' "

After he lost his leg, Welch said, he traveled with Willie Nelson as part of the road crew — a "roadie" — and learned to play the fiddle.

"It wasn't just traveling; it was dreaming music," he said. "The fiddle is a difficult instrument. At first I couldn't even play the simplest lullaby. But I figured that anyone that could surf could play the fiddle. So I learned. Music was the closest thing to surfing."

But the desire to surf again was overpowering, and Welch soon was back in the waves with his waterproof leg.

"I just copped an attitude," he said. "The first time I couldn't get up. The second time I fell. The third time I rode a wave. I just had to get in tune with the ocean. Old King Neptune has got a mind of his own."

EAGLES: Airsho'92 will feature 80 CAF airplanes planes, including the Boeing B-17 Flying Fortress and the B-29 Superfortress and the Curtiss P-40 Warhawk and the Grumman Wildcat, will be on display during the event.

When the warbirds are not flying, spectators may "get up 'close and personal,' " with the vintage airplanes and their pilots, aircrews and ground-crew members, said Bob Rice, executive director of the American Airpower Heritage Group, which includes the CAF and the American Airpower Heritage Museum and Flying Museum — the Ghost Squadron.

"It's truly a community effort," Rice said of Airsho'92, which will be the CAF's 29th annual show and its second show in Midland. "We have excellent support from the community."

Flying activity, from the "prop jobs" to the jets, will be sufficient enough "to satisfy everyone's appetite," Rice said.

Following Airsho'91, which attracted about 60,000 aviation buffs at Midland last October, the CAF formally opened its headquarters and the museum to coincide with the 50th anniversary of the Japanese attack of Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941.

The museum's Phase II exhibit, "A Sleeping Giant Awakens," will focus on "the home front" and "the revitalizing of the industrial base to support the war effort," Rice noted. The current Phase I, "Wars and Rumors of War: 1931 to 1941," highlights events that led to the war in Europe, in Asia, and in the Pacific.

"I think it is going to be really exciting," Luttrell said of Airsho'92, which will feature the CAF's "Tora! Tora! Tora!" flying act to recall the Dec. 7, 1941, attack of Pearl Harbor.

The CAF's air-power demonstrations are "not to glorify war," Rice said. "That's not the intent at all." Rather, the series of CAF airshows are to "reinforce to the general public the role of American aviation in World War II and in maintaining the democratic process."

TRAFFIC: 450 students will cross intersection at A street

students using the classroom per hour while school is in session.

"This means — when students are changing classes — 450 students will be leaving the building and 450 will be coming," Ms. Carrens said. "We have increased the time to get to class from 5 to 7 minutes because of this."

The principal said she walked the distance from the school office — going east on Illinois, and crossing "A" Street to the new building — in five minutes.

"We had a school architect draw up a diagram of a mandated student traffic route which will be in student handbooks. And teachers will be stressing that students cross the street at the traffic light, as we agreed with a city traffic engineer," she said. "We are taking all the precautions, but still, we are talking about a lot of students."

Ms. Carrens said the good news is that student pedestrian traffic will be lessened the second semester, once the newly renovated science classes are ready for occupancy.

Moving the science classes out of the building, however, won't result in an excess of space.

"We need it all," Ms. Carrens said, as she toured the building Wednesday, pointing out rooms awaiting computers and drafting tables.

As she walked from room to room, dozens of custodians and off-duty bus drivers carried chairs and desks up the stairwell of the one-story complex that is built on stilts.

"We also have an elevator, strictly for disabled students. When the other students find out it's slow as Christmas, they'll stay off it," the seasoned principal said.

While the science renovations are welcomed, space requirements for the new rooms and labs subsumed six other classrooms.

"What would we have done without this building?" Ms. Carrens asked.

The principal also noted that the building will house the Alternative Education Center. "Lee High School already has an alternative center in duplexes across the street from the school. Now we will have a unit over here," she said.

With minor renovations — knocking out walls, painting plywood with chalkboard paint to serve as classroom boards — the Carrizo building will be open for occupancy Thursday.

Students will begin arriving for classes as early as 7:30 a.m., but the regular school hours are 8:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m.

Ms. Carrens said second semester student pedestrian traffic will be eased with only 500, rather than 900, students changing classes, since science classes will be meeting back in the main school building.

But until January, hordes of teen-agers will be traversing back and forth to the building.

Rather than being slowed down, Ms. Carrens said that downtown workers, and other motorists, traveling "A" and Carrizo streets near Illinois St., "may just want to take another route."

VETERANS: Commissioners will make decision by end of month

her death in May of this year, confirmed that plan.

The protest was dropped after Ms. Kuykendall heard that three commissioners would vote in favor of keeping the office open part time.

Ms. Kuykendall said she joined the plight to save the office because her mother's dedication to running the office showed a clear need.

"Because my mother ran it for so long. She lived for this job. She went way out for this job. The veterans were real important for her," Ms. Kuykendall said.

The importance of the office became apparent after her mother's death — through the appreciation of the people she helped, she said.

"It seems ironic that they want to close her office" at this time, Ms. Kuykendall said.

The office serves about 25-30 people in person per week and about 40-45 others by telephone each week.

Cost of running the service is about $24,400 per year.

Woman held on drug charges

Staff report

A 28-year-old woman arrested for sale of cocaine to an undercover agent was temporarily ordered detained without bond by a U.S. Magistrate Wednesday, federal officials said.

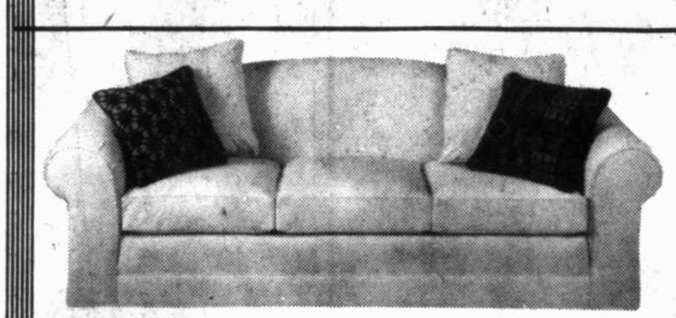

Pamela Castleberry is accused of selling nine ounces of the drug for $9,000 on Aug. 14 and was arrested that day, officials said. Authorities say she reportedly sold the drug to undercover agents in July.

Officials bemoan diminishing numbers of horned toads

WACO (AP) — Forget global warming. Don't worry about the ozone layer. There's something far more important for Texans to worry about.

The horned toads, ferocious-looking miniature dinosaurs that for ages have stalked red ants across the Central Texas landscape are vanishing.

Officials say horned toads are hard to find these days. They've been killed off by fire ants, pesticides and loss of habitat.

They're actually misnamed, scientists say, because they're not really toads, they're lizards.

"Horny toads like dirty, dusty, sandy, dry areas with lots of red ants to eat," said Bill Davis, publicity and marketing director for the Horned Lizard Conservation Society. "We don't have that anymore, so there's not many of them left."

In far West Texas and New Mexico, where there still is plenty of dust, dirt and food, horned toads continue to be plentiful.

The Horned Lizard Conservation Society, an Austin-based group, is asking people to report Central Texas sightings of the lizards.

The group hopes to eventually reintroduce the lizards in the landscapes they once roamed, where possible. However, their resurgence is unlikely wherever fire ants abound.

"A horned lizard can eat 200 red ants a day," Davis said. "They can eat fire ants, too, but fire ants swarm them and kill them."

Should something try eating them, the lizards can squirt blood from ducts at the corners of their eyes as a defense.

Fred Gehlbach, a biology professor at Baylor University, said the last horned toads in the immediate vicinity of Waco were seen in the late 1970s and early 1980s, with few sightings since.

He said they disappeared locally about the same time the state of Texas sprayed East and Central Texas with Mirex, a pesticide to kill fire ants.

Harvester ants have also become scarce, "so it's possible horned toads died out either because their food supply did or because of spraying," Gehlbach said. "We're just not sure."

Officials find six slain inside burning house

SOMERVILLE (AP) — A woman, her daughter and four of her grandchildren were stabbed to death before their home was set afire, police said.

Autopsy reports released Wednesday showed that Bobbie Davis, 45, and her daughter Nicole, 16, had been stabbed numerous times and beaten, said Mike Cox, spokesman for the Texas Department of Public Safety. The daughter also suffered several gunshot wounds, he said.

Ms. Davis' four grandchildren, Jason Davis, 4; Denitra Davis, 9; Brittany Davis, 6; and Lea Erin Davis, 5, all died of multiple stab wounds before the fire was set, autopsies found.

Ms. Davis was found in the living room of the three-bedroom home. Her daughter was sitting on her bed when she was killed, Cox said.

Lea Erin appeared to have been hiding under a pillow in a bedroom. Jason's body was found in a hallway, and he apparently had been trying to flee. The other children were killed in their beds, Cox said.

The motive for the killings was not known.

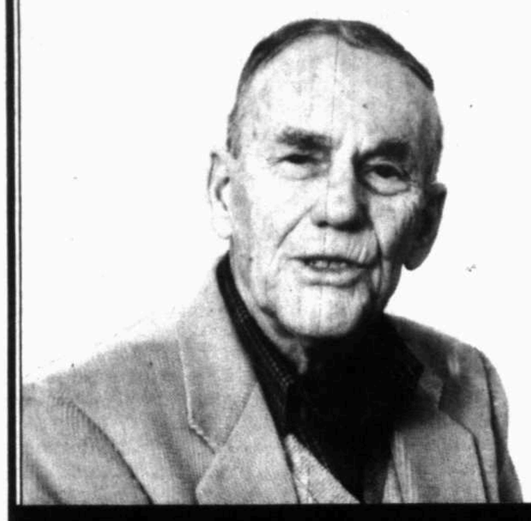

Ms. Davis had been selected as a juror Monday for an attempted murder trial. But Burleson County District Attorney Charles Sebesta said Wednesday there didn't appear to be a link between the death and her role as a juror.

The defendant in the trial, who is free on bail, was not a suspect, Sebesta said. A mistrial was declared after Ms. Davis' death. A new trial was planned.

The Texas Rangers and a state Department of Public Safety laboratory team were sent Tuesday to Somerville, a town of 1,500 about 80 miles northwest of Houston, to assist in the probe.

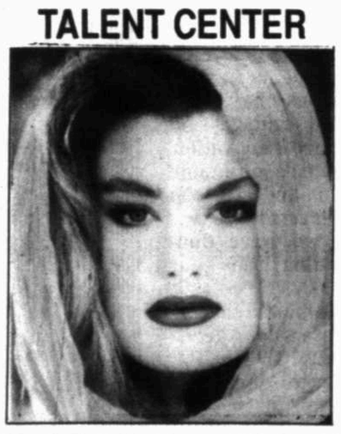

Ms. Davis had been a supervisor at Brenham State School for the mentally retarded and had worked there for 14½ years, according to Peg Barry, a spokeswoman for the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

Texas students, districts are getting poorer, study says

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas public school students and school districts are getting poorer, according to a study released Wednesday.

During the last school year, the number of children receiving free school meals increased by nearly 50,000, from 932,992 to 982,836, the Texas Education Agency reported.

Last year also saw the largest increase in student population growth; an increase of 82,000 students to more than 3.46 million.

Meanwhile, average school district property wealth per student dropped from $202,228 in 1990-91 to $186,841 last year.

That is a decrease of more than $15,000 per student, and the lowest figure recorded in four years since the TEA began compiling such statistics.

That drop was accompanied by an increase in local school property tax rates from an average of $1.04 to $1.17 as the state implemented a new way to equalize funding disparities between rich and poor districts.

The Texas Supreme Court has declared that system unconstitutional and given lawmakers until June 1, 1993 to fix it.

"Clearly, we as educators and policy makers have our work cut out for us," said Education Commissioner Lionel Meno said.

"Most of our students are at risk of falling victim to a number of social maladies that eventually drive them away from the one institution — the public school system — that can help improve their lives," he said.

He said less restrictive education laws can help schools adjust to the changing student population.

"Clearly, we cannot expect the traditional school models of 40 years ago, when the school population was largely white, middle class, and headed by two-parent families where only one parent worked, to be successful in today's schools," Meno said.

The TEA this year selected 83 campuses for a program that provides maximum flexibility from education laws for schools to develop programs aimed at their students.

And Meno cited the growing number of school districts going to year-round education as further evidence of breaking with tradition.

"We must emphasize results, instead of emphasizing compliance with a process," he said.

Meno said one bright spot in the statistical report was that it showed an increase in the number of high school graduates who said they planned to attend college.

Clinton campaign announces two-day Texas bus tour

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton will embark on a bus tour through parts of Texas and Louisiana starting Aug. 27, campaign officials said.

The two-day campaign trip will start in downtown San Antonio, said Chuck McDonald, a spokesman for the Clinton-Gore campaign.

The tour will move northward through Central Texas, East Texas and into Shreveport, La., and Arkansas.

"It'll be an opportunity for Bill Clinton to come to Texas and set the record straight after this snow job in Houston," McDonald said. "This bus tour will show how important San Antonio and South Texas is to the Democrats."

Stops were to include Austin, Waco, Corsicana, Tyler and Marshall, said Robin Rorapaugh, state director of the Clinton campaign.

Bird stealing increasing in Texas, authorities say

LEANDER (AP) — Ostrich and emu thefts are increasing in Texas as more people want to invest in the birds that are billed as a low-cholesterol alternative to beef, experts say.

The problem isn't news to Jody Giddens, who last weekend reported the theft of 52 emu chicks from his ranch near Leander.

The birds, valued at $150,000 to $200,000, were stolen despite fences, locks and a watchdog. The birds also had microchips inserted under the skin for identification.

"We've probably gotten more than $500,000 in birds stolen in Texas in the last two months," said C.B. Wiley, a private investigator working on the Giddens theft. "I think the majority of birds stolen in the state are already sold. They're stolen to order."

Giddens, a former banker who began raising emus in 1990, said the culprits circled behind his ranch late Saturday or early Sunday and cut fences to enter a pen holding 72 emu chicks.

"We thought the place was pretty secure," he said as he surveyed his remaining birds and considered additional security.

The thieves "knew what they were doing," he said. "These emus are tough to catch."

The flightless birds are evasive, will fight when caught and have large claws, he said.

The emu, native to Australia, grows to about 6 feet tall and up to 150 pounds.

Under terms of a will disclosed Wednesday, the late Caren Koslow left her husband, Jack, $500,000 in a trust apparently crafted to make sure her stepdaughter got nothing.

The couple were attacked in their Forth Worth home in March. Jack Koslow suffered a serious head injury but was able to run for help. Police found Mrs. Koslow dead, her throat slashed.

Kristi Koslow, 17, was accused of soliciting her boyfriend and a friend of his to kill her father and stepmother in exchange for a share of the girl's inheritance. The three are each being held on $1 million bond on charges of capital murder and attempted murder.

Although Mrs. Koslow had no children of her own, she said in a will signed March 30, 1990, that beneficiaries could include "my natural children ... but shall not include stepchildren."

Southfork Ranch reopens to tourists

DALLAS (AP) — A renovated Southfork Ranch, central stage of the long-running "Dallas" television drama, reopened to tourists Wednesday.

Although construction is not yet complete, the Arizona businessman who bought the 41-acre ranch in late May decided to open it for tours.

"It's kind of a pre-opening," said ranch spokeswoman Joy Johnson.

About 100 people came to the ranch, she said. It had been closed since a foreclosure auction in January 1991.

More than $1 million has been spent on improvements, including $250,000 on interior remodeling for the ranch house, which became the "Ewing Mansion" on the CBS-TV show, Ms. Johnson said.

She said renovations at a visitors' center are about 75 percent complete, with work on a parking lot in final stages.

A newly landscaped entrance, displaying 12 20-foot Southfork flags, is finished, said Ms. Johnson.

Improvements are expected to be complete in spring 1993. Plans also call for a tram to take people on a tour from the visitors' center.

Southfork is now open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. seven days a week, with admission prices of $4 for adults and $2 for children. The property is located about 25 miles north of downtown Dallas.

Rex G. Maughan, who bought the ranch for $2.6 million, is chairman of the board and president of Forever Living Products International Inc.

Clinton, Gore say they're builders, not Republican destroyers

ATLANTA (AP) — Bill Clinton and Al Gore grabbed hammers and tool belts Wednesday to help raise a house, casting themselves as "builders" up against Republicans they contend only know how to destroy.

"We thought it would be a good day to be building, not tearing down," Clinton said, referring to the Republican National Convention, where speaker after speaker has scorned him as a tax-and-spend liberal unfit to be commander in chief.

The Democratic ticket was celebrating double birthdays on Wednesday — Clinton turned 46; Tipper Gore, 44.

Former President Jimmy Carter, active in the "Habitat for Humanity" housing project for the poor where the candidates worked, joined in the counterattack.

Carter, himself long a target of Republican ridicule, said he hadn't heard GOP speakers trumpeting anything positive about America's future, and that instead, they'd focused on "tearing down the character of other people."

'We thought it would be a good day to be building, not tearing down.'

—Bill Clinton

The Republican barrage from Houston has, at times, aimed at Clinton's Vietnam draft record, youthful experimentation with marijuana and marital troubles.

"It's a sobering thing to me to see (Republicans) just devoting their time to negative attempts at character assassination," Carter said at a news conference on the job site.

"They ought to be talking about housing, about health care, about education, transportation, trade, jobs. Haven't heard any of that so far," Carter said.

"We're builders," declared Clinton, with his vice presidential mate at his side. "We hope America wants two builders."

Clinton said the Republicans with their attacks on his wife were trying to make her "a Willie Horton-like issue against all independent women."

He poked fun at the Republicans' family values focus, saying it was sad the GOP had to "slash and burn, trash your opponent" while making themselves seem like only they loved their families.

Clinton said Bush's statement he'd fill part of his Cabinet with new faces if given a second term was "a stunning acknowledgment of failure in the first term, isn't it?"

Mount Spurr blowup throws volcanic ash on Anchorage

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — As much as a quarter-inch of gritty volcanic ash coated Alaska's largest city on Wednesday, grounding aircraft, keeping workers from their jobs and prompting runs on car air filters and surgical masks.

Ash was blown more than 10 miles into the sky when Mount Spurr erupted Tuesday afternoon. The volcano is about 80 miles west of Anchorage, across the Cook Inlet.

Winds blew the huge plume over Anchorage, where it rained down a thick coat of gray-yellow ash, obscuring lane markers on roads, forcing officials to warn people with respiratory problems to stay indoors or wear surgical masks.

The ash also shut down Anchorage International Airport, stranding hundreds of tourists and business travelers. The airport expected to have one runway open by late afternoon, but most carriers had already either canceled the day's flights or diverted them to airports in Fairbanks and Kenai.

A light dusting of volcanic ash reached more than 400 miles from the volcano, to Yakutat on the eastern edge of the Gulf of Alaska and Kluane Lake in Canada's Yukon Territory, said Alaska Volcano Observatory spokesman Robert McGimsey.

Municipal street crews and airport maintenance workers were having trouble pushing the fine but corrosive ash out of the way.

"We tried clearing a runway at 4:30 this morning but had to give up because the winds picked it up and threw it on the runway again," said Sgt. Duane Hallman, a watch commander with the airport public safety department.

Although the ash cloud was long gone by sunrise Wednesday, visibility was reduced again when rush hour drivers sent plumes of ash back into the air.

Neither of Anchorage's major hospitals had much ash-related business overnight, officials said.

"It was actually not busy at all," said Janet Oates, a spokeswoman for Providence Hospital. "People seemed to be staying indoors. But we had lots and lots of calls about health information."

City buses were running normally, and municipal and state offices were open.

"Our maintenance people are out there washing sidewalks and wetting down streets," said Sue LaMunyon, with the American Red Cross.

John Paskievitch of the Alaska Volcano Observatory said scientists only had about a half-hour's warning of elevated seismic activity before the eruption began.

Shaking on the mountain was so strong that it was overwhelming the monitoring ability of ground-based instruments. "They haven't been able to keep up," Paskievitch said.

The eruption lasted about four hours, about a half-hour less than the first blowup on June 27.

Investors collect money off dying man's insurance

■ Investors buy discount AIDS patient policies; when the patient dies, the investor collects.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Investors are told they can earn "BIG BUCKS!" but the payoff comes when an AIDS victim dies. Securities regulators say they have no objection to trading in life insurance policies of the dying, but some fly-by-night operators are giving it a bad name.

North Dakota Securities Commissioner Glenn Pomeroy on Wednesday called the operations of two companies "ghoulish, insensitive, possibly violative of confidentiality rights, and flat-out illegal."

But Pomeroy, speaking on behalf of the North American Securities Administrators Association, said there was nothing inherently wrong with the industry that has sprung up to help victims of AIDS and other terminal diseases get access to the death benefits of their life insurance policies.

Pomeroy's complaint is that the two companies he's targeted are selling securities illegally.

The president of one of the firms said what's being sold is an insurance policy, not a security.

"Mr. Pomeroy doesn't like the idea of helping people with AIDS," said Brian Pardo, president of Life Partners Inc. "He views it, I think, as a gay problem."

Pomeroy said nothing about homosexuality at his news conference Wednesday, where he was joined by David Peterson, a financial planner who has AIDS and cancer.

In a nutshell, the companies line up investors to buy the insurance policies of the dying, typically at a 33 percent discount from face value, and pay the premium until the insured dies. Then the investor collects the money.

Here's how it works:

A healthy person takes out an insurance policy for $100,000 and later gets AIDS. An investor can buy that policy for, say, $67,000, most of which goes to the dying individual, often to cover medical and other expenses. The investor, who becomes the beneficiary of the policy, collects $100,000 — a profit of up to $33,000 when the person dies, usually in a few months.

But Pomeroy said two companies, National Insurance Marketing Inc. of Panama City, Fla., and Life Partners Inc. of Waco, Texas, are marketing individual policies to individual investors, providing information not only on the value and price of the policy, but also on the medical condition of the victim and when death is expected.

"Please review this package in its entirety and call me if you are ready to make some BIG BUCKS!" said a letter from Joe Sowell, president of National Insurance Marketing.

Washington's cherry tree story may be lie, museum curator says

DUMFRIES, Va. (AP) — The legend of young George Washington admitting he chopped down a cherry tree may have been early "spin control" designed to shore up his flagging reputation, historians say.

It also helped Washington's biographer sell books.

According to the story, young George admitted his misdeed with the ax and a small cherry tree by telling his father: "I cannot tell a lie."

Historians generally agree that's fiction. The tale appears nowhere in Washington's own writings or in those of family members.

"For several years, we've just dismissed it outright here," said John Riley, historian at Mount Vernon, Washington's home 10 miles south of the nation's capital. "Maybe that's not quite fair. We ought to give a little room that it might be true, but for me it certainly seems like a long shot."

The story apparently was created by a zealous biographer in 1801 — two years after Washington's death.

Biographer Mason Locke Weems feared that a fickle public, resentful over economic problems in the young nation, was not giving Washington proper respect, said Sam Bauckman, curator of a Dumfries museum devoted to Weems.

"He had to figure out ways to portray Washington's life so people would be interested," Bauckman said.

Citizens were angry at Washington for raising taxes — the very trigger that led the colonies to split from England.

And other politicians, including Thomas Jefferson, discussed publicly whether Washington had been fully committed to democracy.

"They said he had really wanted to be a king," Bauckman said. "And of course Washington wasn't there to defend himself. Weems thought it wasn't very fair."

Weems, an itinerant minister and bookseller, probably was also interested in penning a good tale that would sell well, Riley said.

"You have to look at his motives," he said. "He was writing sort of moral guidance for the country and he wanted to sell books."

The cherry tree parable reminded Americans that Washington was a great moral leader, said Robert R. Siegrist, who heads a project to restore the site of Washington's childhood home near Fredericksburg.

"It's a legend and it's a good legend," Siegrist said.

YOUR FOOD PHARMACY

Cereal, milk can fight colon cancer

By Jean Carper

If you are worried about colon cancer, your best dietary antidote may be a bowl of cereal with lots of low-fat milk. That's what new studies are finding.

Carper

Swedish researchers recently compared the diets of colon-cancer surgery patients with those of healthy people over a 15-year period. Two foods stood out as protective: cereal and calcium, which is found in large quantities in dairy products. The Swedes least apt to get colon cancer, as well as rectal cancer, ate more high-fiber cereal and high-calcium foods. Additionally, they ate less fat and drank less alcohol.

Other research finds that both wheat-cereal fiber and calcium help block colon cell proliferation, leading to cancer.

How much is needed? Researcher Harold Newmark, Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York, says the protective calcium dose against colon cancer is probably 1,500 to 1,800 mg a day — about five glasses of skim milk or equivalent in other food or supplements.

And cereal? A couple ½-cup servings of Kellogg's high-fiber All-Bran a day thwarted precancerous growths (polyps) in the colon, according to a Sloan Kettering study a few years ago.

Booze and blood pressure

Everybody knows sodium can boost blood pressure in some people. But what about alcohol? Booze is a greater threat to most people's blood pressure than salt, say two Australian physicians in a new review of the problem.

The evidence, they say, is compelling. Fully 50 population studies indict alcohol as an elevator of blood pressure in both men and women of all ethnic groups and ages. Although some studies find hard liquor most dangerous, the Australian researchers contend all alcoholic beverages, including beer, wine and spirits push up blood pressure. In general, they reported, taking three or more drinks a day doubles the number of men and women who have high blood pressure — over 160/95. Drinkers also must take more blood pressure medication to wipe out the effects of alcohol, they note, and many are at higher risk of stroke.

Further, studies show that when people, even those with normal blood pressure, cut back on alcohol, their blood pressure drops.

What is a "safe" amount? The Australian researchers say no more than one to two alcoholic drinks a day.

Fish oil for colitis?

Yes, fish oil may be a new medicine against ulcerative colitis, an inflammatory bowel disease. It makes sense. Fish oil is a proven anti-inflammatory agent, say experts.

Indeed, two new small studies suggest that the marine oil can help treat ulcerative colitis in some cases.

Fish oil was remarkably successful in a double-blind study of 11 men with mild to moderate chronic ulcerative colitis done at the VA Medical Center in Martinez, Calif. Patients who took 4.5 grams of omega-3 fish oil a day (equal to that in 7 ounces raw mackerel) for eight months had an average 56 percent drop in disease activity. Further, no patient worsened on the fish oil, and most were able to stop taking anti-inflammatory drugs.

Too little fat & cholesterol

Everyone warns against eating too much fat and cholesterol. But an "alarming" number of young women eat too little fat, says Laurence M. Demers, Ph.D., professor of medicine at The Milton S. Hershey Medical Center in Pennsylvania.

Demers finds that super-low-fat diets and a mania for exercise leave some young women with non-existent or irregular menstrual periods. That means they lack estrogen, making them extra susceptible later to bone-crippling osteoporosis. "Normal onset of osteoporosis is in the 70s," he says, "these women go into osteoporosis in their 50s."

There is a critical decade — from puberty to age 23 or 24 — in which women build bone-density, Demers says.

Videotape heats Woody, Mia dispute

NEW YORK (AP) — The public battle over the private lives of ex-lovers Woody Allen and Mia Farrow escalated Wednesday as her spokesman confirmed Miss Farrow videotaped her 7-year-old daughter discussing alleged sexual abuse.

Miss Farrow made several copies of a videotape involving her child, said spokesman John Springer. The tape was viewed by a reporter and two producers at WNYW-TV; they said Miss Farrow's voice was heard off-camera asking 7-year-old Dylan Farrow about an alleged incident with Allen.

Allen vehemently denied he ever abused his children.

Dylan, one of Miss Farrow's 11 children, also was adopted by Allen, who sued last week for custody of Dylan, Moses Farrow, 14, and Satchel Farrow, 4½, his biological son.

Miss Farrow's lawyer, Alan Dershowitz, also painted an increasingly nasty picture of the beginning of the Farrow-Allen breakup. He said Allen started having sex with Miss Farrow's adopted daughter, Soon-Yi Previn, on Dec. 1, 1991, while he was still involved with Miss Farrow.

Dershowitz said Allen formally adopted Dylan and Moses on Dec. 17 "while he was having sex with their sister." Miss Previn is believed to be about 21 but the Korean orphan has no birth certificate.

It has been widely reported that Allen and Miss Farrow adopted the children much earlier but, in fact, said Dershowitz, only Miss Farrow adopted them as infants.

Miss Farrow approved the adoptions without knowledge of the affair between Allen and Miss Previn, Dershowitz said.

But on Jan. 13, she found nude pictures of Miss Previn and immediately broke off her romantic relationship with Allen, he said. Miss Previn told her mother the affair had started Dec. 1, he said.

"I have come so perilously close to a genuine meltdown of my very core," Miss Farrow wrote in a letter to longtime friend Maria Roach, who released the text of the letter.

"I see now that I have spent long years with a man who had no respect for everything I hold sacred; not for my family, not for my soul, not for God or my goals," the letter said.

Lawyers for Allen and Miss Farrow will meet in court Tuesday, when a judge is expected to set a trial date in the custody case.

The videotape was not broadcast by WNYW-TV. Springer said Miss Farrow's lawyers warned the station against it. The station's management never planned to air it, said spokesman Ted Faraone.

The tape was just the latest broadside in the escalating war between Allen and Miss Farrow.

On Tuesday, Allen denied all allegations of abuse. He said they had been dreamed up by Miss Farrow as part of their child custody fight. He also admitted he was in love with Soon-Yi Previn.

Dallas wavers over wire move

Will departure of third-round draft selection start trend?

N.Y. Times News Service

IRVING — The saga of offensive lineman James Brown, the Dallas Cowboys' failed third-round pick whose name was retracted off waivers Tuesday while the team pursued a trade for him, ended as it initially began.

"Let's just say he was waived," coach Jimmy Johnson said.

After waiving him Tuesday morning, the Cowboys later rescinded the transaction and tried to trade Brown for a late-round draft pick. When that effort failed, Brown was finally — this time officially — waived. His departure may begin a trend involving the 1992 draft crop that observers view as alarming. But Johnson said the trend was to be expected.

Of the Cowboys' 15 picks in April, 10 are still active with the club. No more than six — cornerback Kevin Smith, linebacker Robert Jones, receiver Jimmy Smith, safety Darren Woodson, cornerback Clayton Holmes and guard Tom Myslinski — are given much of a chance to be contributors, or even to be on the roster, this year.

Johnson said he wasn't too surprised by Brown's disappointing showing, because he was one of several "long shots" the Cowboys gambled on late in the draft.

"With our first five picks, we were very confident," Johnson said. "After that, there were plenty of good players out there. But they weren't good enough to make our team. So rather than draft a well-known player from a top college program, we looked for players from smaller schools who might give us a special dimension (like Brown, from Virginia State). We knew going in all those players after the first five picks were long shots."

EMMITT SMITH POINTS FOR REDSKINS: Jimmy Johnson and running back Emmitt Smith share the same view of the Sept. 7 regular-season opener against the Washington Redskins — it's critical.

But they don't necessarily agree about gearing up for preseason games. Johnson has targeted Saturday's contest with the Denver Broncos as the starting point of a peak. And Smith?

"Coach Johnson has a lot of philosophies about the preseason," Smith said, "but as for myself, I'm trying to get prepared for the regular season. And nothing more. I'm supposed to be mentally prepared to play one series (in exhibition games so far). What kind of preparation is that?

'Canes vow to overcome aid scandal

Associated Press

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — The Miami Hurricanes, who traditionally thrive amid controversy, vowed Wednesday to overcome the financial aid scandal that could cost the team at least two players.

Standout receiver Lamar Thomas and reserve running back Jason Marucci were indicted by a federal grand jury Tuesday on charges they fraudulently obtained Pell Grant money.

"It's not a great distraction, because in the past Miami has been through a lot of trials and tribulations," receiver Kevin Williams said. "All we do is become molded into something to fight harder to accomplish our goals."

Thomas and Marucci, both seniors, will make their initial court appearance Thursday before a U.S. magistrate. Neither player has been suspended but both were excused from practice Wednesday and Thursday.

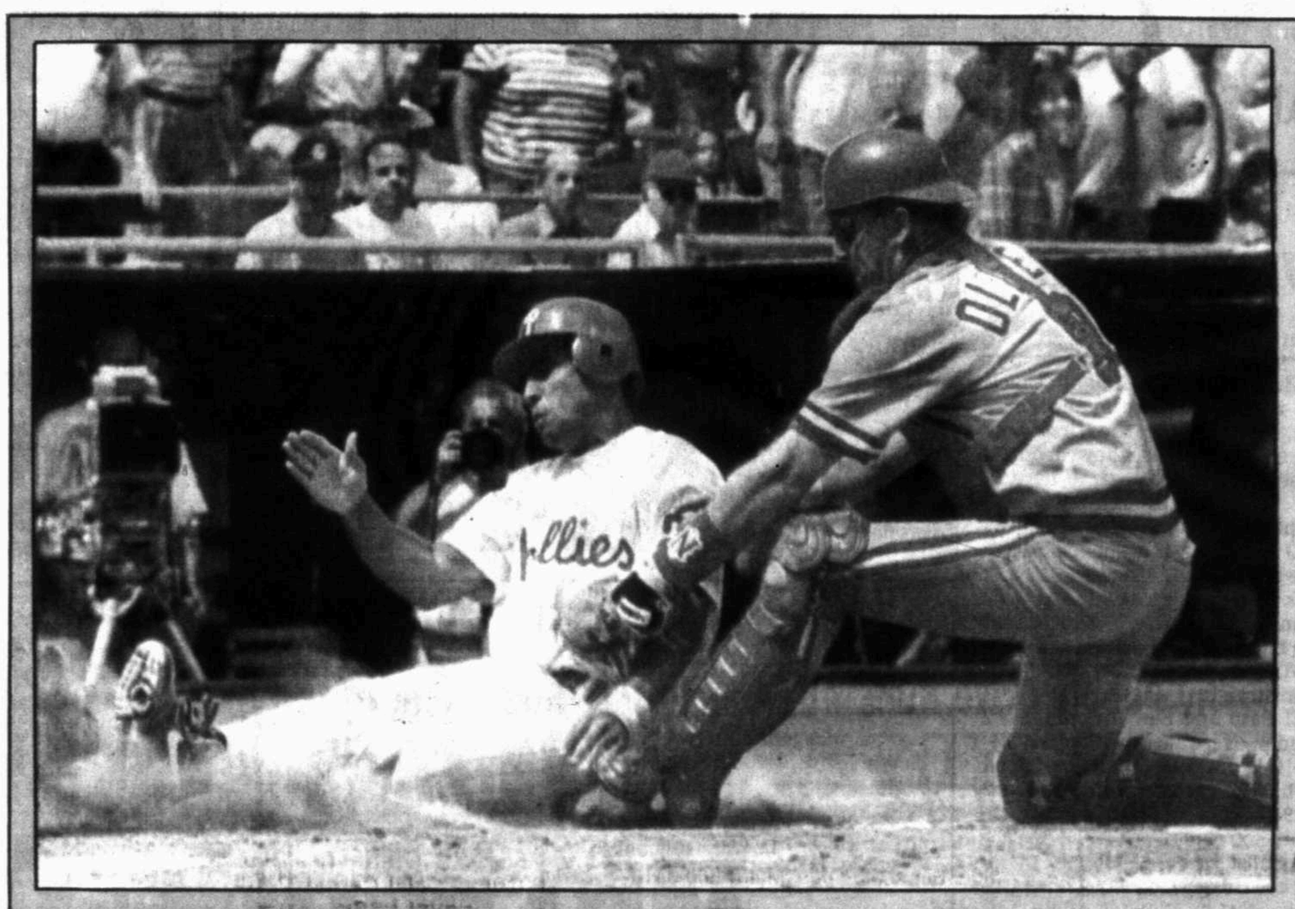

Beyond that, their status with the team remains undetermined, athletic director Dave Maggard said.

"The main thing right now," he said, "is to give them time to work with their attorneys and gather information."

The indictments were the first stem-

Sharks more like kittens at pool championships

■ Top prize worth $10,000 at U.S. Open Pocket Billiards Championship.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A dingy, smoke-filled room? Hundreds in side bets? Fingers snapped in desk drawers? Not around here, Fats.

The national pool championships arrived Wednesday in Manhattan, with nary a pool-sharking, Paul Newman lookalike in sight.

"It's hard to beat somebody out of their money, then tell 'em that Jesus loves 'em," explained Michael Massey, a born-again Christian among 32 men gunning for the $10,000 top prize at the U.S. Open Pocket Billiards Championship.

He's right, says Steve Mizerak, better known as a beer pitchman than one of the world's premier billiards players.

"The dark, dingy pool halls — that was 'The Hustler,'" four-time Open champion Mizerak said, referring to the classic Newman film. "You're not going to get your fingers broken going to a pool hall. That's a misconception."

No hustlers checking the color of their money, you say? So what's the attraction?

Well, there's Ewa Mataya, the favorite to walk away with the women's prize. The blonde-haired, green-eyed Swedish native first picked up a pool cue 14 years ago; she's been the world's top-ranked women for 2½ years.

"Being a man doesn't make you a better player. You should have seen me with my newborn changing diapers. Just because I was a women didn't make that easier," said the 28-year-old Matawa, a former model and Playboy bunny.

Ewa then moved to a practice table where she buried shot ... after shot ... after shot, 14 in a row, never breaking a sweat. Equal rights are not evident in the prize money: the 16 women will compete for a prize of $3,500.

While Mataya hustled the media, the competition was under way in a ballroom at the Roosevelt Hotel. Veteran character actor Paul Sorvino was expected at several of the sessions; Muhammad Ali also promised to stop by, said organizer Ron Blatt.

The Open is a single-elimination, 15-ball tournament, which has survived despite the sport's ups and downs. This is the 15th Open, but only the second in the last nine years.

Chicago hosted the tournament in 1989, the first time there was an Open since 1983. This is the first one ever in

Pirates may still have a shot at signing Barry Bonds

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Barry Bonds says reports he can't wait to leave Pittsburgh are untrue, and that he would re-sign with the Pirates for less money than he could get elsewhere if they remained committed to winning.

Bonds told The Associated Press that his new agent Dennis Gilbert, who negotiated Bobby Bonilla's $29 million deal with the New York Mets, has offered to reopen talks with the Pirates when the season ends. The Pirates have not formally replied.

Before signing a $4.7 million contract for this season, Bonds turned down a multiyear offer from the Pirates valued at about $25 million. Pirates president Mark Sauer hasn't said if the club will make another proposal.

At least publicly, Sauer has all but written Bonds off, saying the fiscally conservative franchise can't afford him.

"He's in another solar system," Sauer said last week. "I think he wants to test the free agent system and to play in a major market. We're hoping we can ride him to the World Series and we'll wish him well. There are no hard feelings."

Bonds, one of a number of big-name players who will become free agents this winter, is under pressure to establish market value and is almost compelled to test free agency, according to Pirates general manager Ted Simmons.

"It's very, very difficult to think we're in a position to work something out with Barry," Simmons said. "We're convinced he will test the market. As a realist, I expect him to.

"Barry Bonds is under an increasing amount of pressure from the largeness of this all. It's not as simple as Barry just saying what he wants to do, then doing it. Somebody has to set the market this winter ... and Barry is the most likely."

Even if another team were to offer somewhat more money than Pittsburgh, Bonds said he likely would re-sign if the Pirates also retained players such as Doug Drabek, another potential free agent this winter, and Andy Van Slyke, who is signed through 1994.

"The Pirates know I love playing here and I'd like to stay here," he said. "We made a phone call, but we never got a response. All I want is fair market value."

Simmons has said if the Pirates lost key free agents like Bonds and Drabek, "We'll go with the kids."

"They've got a good team here, why would they want to change that?" Bonds said. "I've never said I wouldn't negotiate again with the Pirates."

White Sox use late rally to defeat Rangers, 3-2

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Frank Thomas hit a two-run double with two outs in the eighth inning Wednesday night as the Chicago White Sox rallied to beat the Texas Rangers 3-2 for their fourth consecutive victory.

Chicago, which won for the 16th time in 21 games, trailed 2-1 when Steve Sax and Tim Raines singled with two outs in the eighth off Jose Guzman (10-10). Thomas then doubled off Jeff Russell, who failed to convert a save for the ninth time in 36 chances, the most blown saves in the majors this season.

Alex Fernandez (5-7) gave up four hits in eight innings, struck out four and walked one. Scott Radinsky pitched a one-hit ninth for his 13th save.

Guzman allowed all three runs and six hits in 7⅔ innings, struck out five and walked one.

Singles by Jeff Frye and Mario Diaz and Jeff Huson's foul sacrifice fly gave Texas the lead in the third, ending a streak of 23 scoreless innings for the Rangers

George Bell's 19th home run of the season tied the game in the fourth, but rookie Monty Fariss put Texas ahead 2-1 in the fifth with his third home run of the year.

Indians 5, Twins 1

CLEVELAND — Charles Nagy scattered eight hits for his ninth complete game as Cleveland beat Minnesota, sending the Twins to their fourth consecutive loss.

Nagy (13-8) struck out six and walked none as he improved his ERA to 2.52. He has all but one of Cleveland's 10 complete games.

Minnesota has lost 15 of 22. Bill Krueger (10-4) gave up five runs — four earned — and seven hits in six innings and dropped to 1-2 with a 6.42 ERA in seven starts since the All-Star break.

Shane Mack of the Twins had a 22-game hitting streak snapped going 0 for 4. He bounced to Cleveland third baseman Brook Jacoby in the fifth and appeared to beat Jacoby's throw to first, but was called out by umpire Durwood Merrill.

Junior Ortiz singled in the third and scored on a triple by Kenny Lofton to put Cleveland ahead. Brook Jacoby singled in the fifth, took third on Mark Lewis' single and scored on a groundout by Ortiz.

American

Yankees 14, Athletics 3

NEW YORK — Scott Kamieniecki, who had won just two of his previous 19 starts, pitched no-hit ball for six innings to lead New York over Oakland.

Randy Velarde drove in a career-high four runs for New York, which matched season highs with the 14 runs and 18 hits.

Kamieniecki (3-10) didn't allow a hit until Jose Canseco led off the seventh with his 21st homer. Harold Baines then doubled off the center-field fence and scored on Mark McGwire's single, but Carney Lansford hit into a double play.

Kamieniecki wound up allowing two runs and three hits in seven innings with five strikeouts and three walks.

Angels 3, Red Sox 2

BOSTON — Gary DiSarcina's two-run bloop single with two outs in the ninth saved Jim Abbott from another hard-luck loss and gave California a victory over Boston.

Abbott (5-12) was one out away from losing another game due to a lack of support when DiSarcina blooped a 3-2 pitch from Jeff Reardon (2-2) into center field, scoring Ken Oberkfell, who had singled, and Lee Stevens, who hit a ground-rule double.

DiSarcina, a native of Billerica, Mass., changed his number from 11 to 33 on Wednesday night in honor of Boston Celtics star Larry Bird, who retired on Tuesday.

Abbott allowed nine hits and two runs in eight innings, twice working out of bases-loaded jams. He struck out five and walked four before Joe Grahe worked the ninth for his 15th save.

Mariners 10, Orioles 8

BALTIMORE — Edgar Martinez hit his first career grand slam as Seattle beat the Baltimore Orioles.

Seattle has won four straight, its second-longest winning streak this season, while Baltimore has dropped four in a row, allowing 38 runs and 52 hits during its skid.

Mark Grant (2-3) won despite allowing six runs in 5⅔ innings. Russ Swan got six outs for his ninth save.

Brewers 10, Blue Jays 5

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Greg Vaughn, struggling at the plate most of the season, homered and drove in five runs as Milwaukee ended a scoring drought and beat the Blue Jays.

Vaughn, batting .213 entering the game, lined a three-run homer in the third for a 4-1 lead and capped a four-run fourth with a two-run single that made the score 8-1.

Royals 7, Tigers 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kevin Appier (14-5) pitched two-hit ball for seven innings, struck out six and walked three as Kansas City sent Detroit to its third loss in 12 games.

David Haas (2-1), a native of the Kansas City area making his fourth major league start, allowed four runs and four hits in four innings. He retired the first nine batters, but Gregg Jefferies walked leading off the fourth, and Wally Joyner and George Brett singled for the lead. Juan Samuel followed with a two-run single and Jeff Conine singled to put Kansas City ahead 4-0.

Angels fall from first with loss

Staff report

EL PASO — The Midland Angels fell from first place in the Texas League West for the first time since July 16, as they dropped their third straight game here to the El Paso Diablos Wednesday night, 6-2.

El Paso won the opener of this five-game series Monday, 4-3, and took Tuesday's game, also by a 6-2 count. With Sunday's 3-2 defeat at the hands of San Antonio in Midland, the Angels now have lost four straight games.

El Paso and San Antonio, a 9-2 winner over Wichita Wednesday, are tied for the second-half lead with 30-26 records, while Midland is 29-27. First-half champion Wichita is six games out at 24-32.

Against El Paso, Midland pitching ace Hilly Hathaway got off to a rocky start by allowing single runs in each of the first three innings. The Diablos got extra-base hits in each of those innings — a triple by John Finn, a double by John Byington and a Tony Diggs triple — that eventually led to each of those players scoring.

Still, the Angels were given a new life in the top of the eighth as, with two outs, Marcus Lawton hit a bases-loaded grounder to second base that was fielded cleanly by Finn, only to see the relay to first base dropped by Ed Smith.

Smith's error allowed Dan Rumsey and Rey Palacios to score, cutting the El Paso lead to 3-2, but in the bottom of the eighth Midland reliever Ken Edenfield gave up three runs with two outs, dashing any comeback hopes.

The series continues tonight with Game 4, set for an 8 p.m. (CDT) start. Radio coverage begins at 7:45 p.m. on KCRS 550 AM.

"The sport is in a transition now. We're not too far from Madison Avenue here, and all the ad people, the agencies are welcome to come by and take a look," said Mizerak, who's bulked up since his days as a trick-shot sharpie.

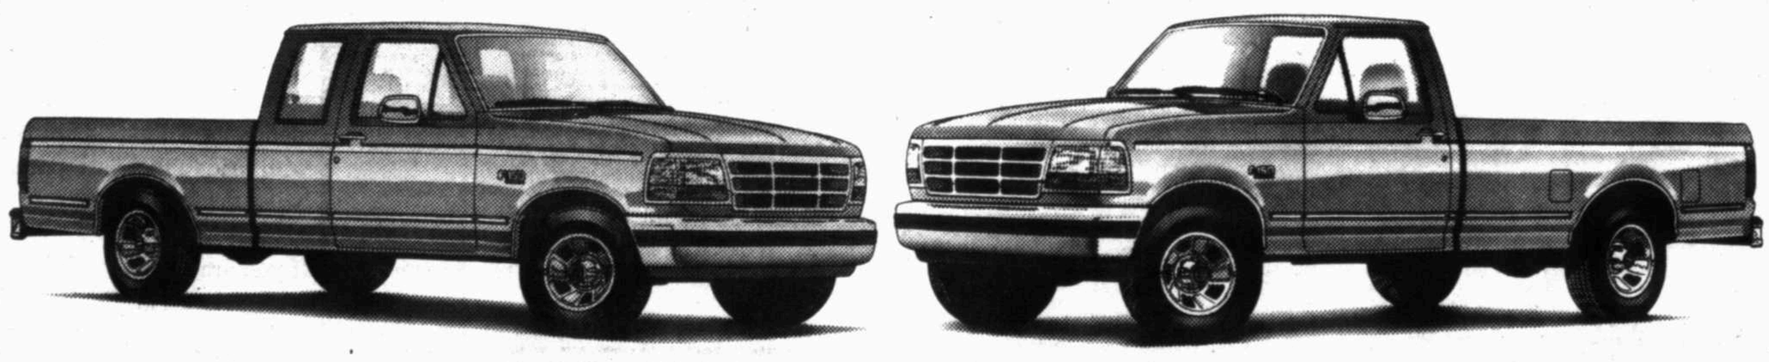

The sport's problem: it needs corporate sponsorship to keep its tour afloat; that in turn would help land a television contract. Mizerak, 47, said prize money is the same now as it was 15 years ago.

"If it doesn't happen now, it's never gonna happen," he said.

ming from a 15-month federal investigation into the university's Pell Grant scandal. According to the indictments, the players fraudulently obtained federal financial aid — $4,550 for Marucci and $2,300 for Thomas.

Last month the U.S. attorney's office mailed letters to 65 University of Miami students advising them that they were targets of the probe. The letters accused each student of four criminal violations by making false statements in applying for federal aid.

The letters offered protection from indictment if the students, including more than 40 current and former football players, entered a pretrial diversion program and made restitution.

Thomas, 22, and Marucci, 21, received letters but failed to meet a 30-day deadline for talking with the Pretrial Services Office.

Federal prosecutors would not comment about the case. Maggard declined to speculate as to whether there will be additional indictments.

"I really don't know," he said. "We don't even know the identities of some of the athletes who received the letter."

Thomas is part of a receiving corps billed as the nation's best. He led the team last year with 39 catches and has career totals of 97 receptions for 1,570 yards and 13 touchdowns.

"He's a wonderful player," Williams said, "but if you look at Miami's team, we're full of talent. Lamar will be very, very hard to replace, but we still will be a great team."

The Hurricanes made strides last year toward improving their image as a team that loved taunting and fighting as much as winning. But this summer has brought a series of setbacks — Williams, defensive tackle Mark Caesar and an assistant coach were arrested in unrelated incidents, and the federal investigation cast uncertainties on the program.

The focus of the probe, former university academic adviser Tony Russell, has yet to be charged. Last year he publicly admitted to falsifying Pell Grant applications, but said he acted alone.

Attorneys for Thomas and Marucci did not return phone calls Wednesday.

The NCAA will decide whether to launch an inquiry after federal officials conclude their investigation. The NCAA has no rules regarding the receipt of illegal Pell Grants, but does limit how much financial aid athletes may receive.

"There certainly is no indication that (Miami) did anything contrary to the rule in allowing students to participate or be over that limit," said Steve Mallonee, the NCAA's director of legislative services. "It's more of a legal issue in terms of the receipt of Pell Grant funds. It's not an NCAA issue per se."

NCAA rules do prohibit university employees from making a special arrangement to provide athletes with benefits not available to other students.

Bowden maps new route to national title

Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Florida State coach Bobby Bowden has a new map this year in his bid to find that elusive national title.

No longer an independent, the Seminoles' route to No. 1 now winds through the Atlantic Coast Conference.

"Winning the conference becomes very important," Bowden said as he prepared for his first season in the ACC. "To win a national championship, we have to win our conference along with beating Miami and Florida."

The Seminoles, who have won 54 of their last 62 games and haven't finished lower than fourth in the national polls since 1986, will have a different look. Florida State was ranked No. 1 for a dozen straight weeks last year until a 17-16 loss to Miami in mid-November.

"We have a lot more questions marks than we did a year ago," Bowden said. "But we're just as excited."

Bowden will have a new backfield, a rebuilt offensive line and perhaps his best defense in 17 years at Florida State, where he has averaged nine victories a season. The kicking game, as usual, remains a huge question mark.

The key will be junior quarterback Charlie Ward, a premier point guard on the school's basketball team, student body vice president and honors student.

"Anybody who has seen Charlie play is real optimistic," Bowden said. "I've got to be careful that the coaches and his fans don't put too much pressure on him."

The 6-foot-1, 190-pound Ward punted for Bowden as a freshman, and last season completed five of nine passes for 68 yards in limited action. He is considered a strong thrower and an elusive runner.

"Charlie is going to make it wide open," Bowden predicted. "But we can't expose him to tackling all day long either. We're completely inexperienced behind him."

Ward replaces Casey Weldon, junior Sean Jackson moves into the tailback position vacated by Amp Lee and sophomore William Floyd takes over at fullback for Edgar Bennett.

"The talent is there," Bowden said. "We just need to get that darned experience."

Senior Shannon Baker is the most experienced of the receivers, a group expected to show improvement from last season.

Versatile Robert Stevenson and center Robbie Baker will anchor an otherwise-inexperienced offensive line that will also include at least two redshirt freshman.

On defense, Florida State must replace linebacker Kirk Carruthers and cornerback Terrell Buckley, but otherwise much of the talent is back that limited such powers as Miami, Florida and Texas A&M to a combined 33 points in the final three games last season.

All-America linebacker Marvin Jones is one player everyone already knows about, but speedy 6-5, 270-pound defensive lineman Dan Footman could become as well known to opposing quarterbacks if he can remain healthy through the year.

Carl Simpson and Todd McIntosh will join Footman in what could be the best front ever during Bowden's tenure while Sterling Palmer and Ken Alexander provide Jones with help at linebacker.

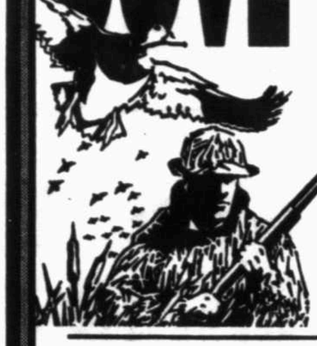

Sophomore Derrick Brooks was moved back to linebacker from the secondary during spring practice and Clifton Abraham has moved into the cornerback position that has produced All-Americans — Buckley, LeRoy Butler and Deion Sanders — the last three seasons.

Unlike last year, when a difficult schedule finally wore down Florida State's national championship bid, the conference schedule could help.

"Our toughest games appear to be pretty well spread out," Bowden said. "It's the kind of schedule that might be what you need. Not like last year when we played five top 10 teams."

Astros bombarded by 17-hit Cardinal attack

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Ray Lankford led a 17-hit attack with four hits and four RBIs to back Rheal Cormier's four-hitter as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Houston Astros 12-1 on Wednesday night.

It was the 22nd game of a 26-game, 28-day trip for the Astros, who were forced out of the Astrodome by the Republican National Convention. They're 9-13 on the trip and this was the worst loss by far. In fact, it was their most lopsided loss of the entire season and matched the most runs allowed by the Astros this season.

The 17 hits matched the Cardinals' season high.

Cormier (4-10) won for the first time in five starts, striking out three and walking four for his first complete game since Sept. 20, 1991. He wild-pitched home a run in the first but didn't allow a runner past second the rest of the way.

Lankford had his third career four-hit game. He doubled and scored in the first, hit his 14th home run with a man on in the second and had run-scoring singles in the sixth and seventh.

Phillies 9, Reds 3

PHILADELPHIA — Rookie Ben Rivera won his third straight start, and Dave Hollins, Mariano Duncan and Darren Daulton hit two-run homers to lead Philadelphia.

Rivera (3-2) allowed two runs and four hits in seven innings, struck out five and walked five. Mike Hartley gave up a run in the eighth and Mitch Williams finished.

Chris Hammond (6-8) lost for the sixth time in eight decisions, giving up four runs and five hits in three-plus innings.

Pirates 3, Padres 2

PITTSBURGH — Don Slaught and Gary Redus drove in runs in Pittsburgh's two-run fifth inning to back Bob Walk's strong seven innings as the surging Pirates beat San Diego.

The Pirates, winners of 15 of their last 19, have taken the first two games of the three-game series after losing their first six to San Diego. The Padres have lost four straight.

The Pirates improved to 30-20 in one-run games; the 30 victories are the most in the majors.

Walk (6-4), returning to the Pirates' rotation with Zane Smith back on the disabled list, limited San Diego to Benito Santiago's homer in the second inning in his first start since July 29.

Giants 9, Cubs 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Bill Swift won for the first time in five starts since July 22, and Mark Leonard broke a third-inning tie with a two-run homer as San Francisco beat Chicago.

Swift (9-3) allowed one run and seven hits in seven innings, struck out three and walked one. He lowered his ERA to 2.16, second in the NL behind Bob Tewksbury of St. Louis.

Frank Castillo (6-10) gave up five runs and five hits in 6⅔ innings, struck out six and walked two.

Braves 4, Expos 2

MONTREAL — Tom Glavine set a franchise record with his 13th consecutive victory and drove in two runs as the surging Braves beat Montreal.

Glavine (19-3) has not lost since he was beaten in Montreal on May 22. He came into the game 0-2 this season and 2-10 lifetime against Montreal, but shut down the Expos on seven hits over 8⅓ innings, striking out six and walking two.

Marvin Freeman relieved after Spike Owen doubled in the Expos' second run in the ninth and walked Tim Wallach. Mike Stanton got the last two outs for his sixth save.

Dodgers 2, Mets 1

LOS ANGELES — Orel Hershiser outdueled Dwight Gooden, pitching a six-hitter over eight innings in their third career confrontation as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the New York Mets.

Hershiser (9-10) was three outs away from his first shutout in 46 starts since undergoing reconstructive shoulder surgery in April 1990 before Bobby Bonilla — in his return from a broken rib — hit the first pitch of the ninth inning for his 13th homer.

After Hershiser walked Chris Donnels, Jim Gott relieved and got the last three outs.

Boone makes major-league history

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Bret Boone cheerfully made major-league history Wednesday night when he became part of the first three-generation family to play in the big leagues.

Boone is the grandson of Ray Boone, who played in the majors from 1948-60, and son of Bob Boone, a major-league catcher from 1972-90. Bret, 23, completed the triangle when he went 1 for 4 with two runs scored as the second baseman for the Seattle Mariners in their 10-8 victory over the Baltimore Orioles on Wednesday night.

The Mariners are becoming baseball's "family team" as the Griffeys, Ken and Ken Jr., became the first father and son to play in the same lineup when they did so for Seattle in 1990.

Boone, whose contract was purchased by the Mariners from Triple A Calgary late Tuesday night, said making it to the majors meant more to him than making history.

"The third-generation thing has never been my focus at all," he said. "It's always been getting to the big leagues as quick as I can and learning as much as I could on the way."

Boone is evidently a quick learner. The Mariners' fifth-round selection in the 1990 draft, he steadily moved up the team's minor-league system until finally landing on top after hitting .314 with 13 homers and 79 RBIs in 118 games with Calgary of the Pacific Coast League this season.

Boone was yanked in the third inning of his game in Calgary on Tuesday and told that he was headed for the majors.

McMahon irked by role with Eagles

Associated Press

Jim McMahon is back with the Eagles — as a backup. And he has his back up because he isn't getting a chance to compete with Randall Cunningham for the starting quarterback job,

McMahon, who when healthy was the starter last season while Cunningham was out with a knee injury, arrived at training camp Tuesday night. He complained that the Eagles had gone back on promises that he'd have a shot at the No. 1 job.

"What they told me last year, while I was playing hurt, was that I would have a chance to be a starter, that I would get a bonus, that I would have a nice contract, this and that," he said after reluctantly signing for half of what he'd sought.

"None of that seems to be coming true right now and that's what's really irritating."

McMahon arrived two days after coach Rich Kotite said he would have the No. 2 job sewn up, "just like Randall Cunningham is No. 1."

McMahon's new contract pays him $800,000. Performance incentives could raise his pay above that, but he might not earn those bonuses if Cunningham stays healthy. McMahon said he had asked the Eagles for a salary to match that of Phil Simms of the New York Giants, who will be paid $1.6 million to back up Jeff Hostetler.

Last year, Cunningham went down with a knee injury in the Eagles' first game. McMahon led the team to a 10-6 record, earning $575,000 in base salary, plus $500,000 in performance bonuses. Pat Ryan, Brad Goebel and Jeff Kemp all played while he was hurt.

The Eagles wente 9-2 in games McMahon played more than one quarter. But McMahon, who will turn 33 in two days, has not played a complete season uninjured since he was a rookie with the Chicago Bears in 1983.

The Philadelphia Eagles traded one of their six quarterbacks — Brad Goebel — to the Cleveland Browns on Wednesday for a undisclosed conditional pick in the 1993 draft.

Also Wednesday, kicker Roger Ruzek, wide receiver Calvin Williams and linebacker Byron Evans ended their holdouts and signed two-year contracts. Terms were not disclosed.

NFL Camps

Packers

Terrell Buckley, Green Bay's unsigned No. 1 draft choice, gained some leverage Wednesday when he signed a contract with the Atlanta Braves to play minor league baseball.

The Packers countered by acquiring defensive back and kick returner Dave McCloughan from the Indianapolis Colts for an undisclosed draft choice.

Buckley, the fifth pick overall in last April's NFL draft, plays cornerback in football and outfield in baseball, the same positions as the Braves' Deion Sanders. Sanders, also a product of Florida State, has played three seasons with the NFL's Atlanta Falcons but stayed with the Braves this summer rather than report to the Falcons' camp.

The Packers have offered Buckley a 4-year, $5.4 million contract. Buckley wants a football package higher than the 5e-year, $7.5 million contract the Los Angeles Rams paid defensive end Sean Gilbert, the third player taken.

Buckley last played college baseball in 1991, when he played in five games and did not get a hit in five at-bats.

His contract with the Braves calls for him to report to Atlanta's instructional team in mid-September. However, Buckley would not have to report if he signs a contract with the Packers, Braves' spokesman Jim Schultz said.

Colts

Seven players, including Plan B acquisition Carl Zander, were cut Wednesday as the Colts closed training camp at Anderson College a day early.

Coach Ted Marchibroda decided to resume practice Thursday at the team's complex in Indianapolis.

"Since we'll be playing on the road this week, we just decided to break camp and give everyone a little more time to settle into what will be our regular routine," Marchibroda said.

Zander, a linebacker who started 14 games for Cincinnati last year, was the most experienced player cut. A second-round pick of the Bengals in 1985, Zander started 94 games in seven seasons.

"It was just a matter of numbers at the position and we decided to let Carl go early, giving him a chance to catch on with someone else," Marchibroda said.

Others cut were defensive end Lester Brinkley, linebacker John Davis, defensive back African Grant, offensive tackle Darin Shoulders, linebacker Chad Thorson and defensive back Errol McCorvey.

Giants

The Giants' injury list diminished Wednesday as two banged-up starters resumed practice and a third prepared to.

Quarterback Jeff Hostetler, who missed a week with a hyperextended right elbow, returned to practice after missing Tuesday's session. Wide receiver Stephen Baker, who bruised his left wrist after catching a pass Monday, also practiced.

Running back Rodney Hampton, meanwhile, resumed hard running after swelling in his right knee went down and he said he hopes to practice Thursday.

Safety Myron Guyton was due to be released from the hospital after taking an injection of anti-inflammatory drugs to reduce swelling around a disc. Coach Ray Handley said he may return to practice next Monday.

Bears

The Chicago Bears have upped their contract offer to holdout center Jay Hilgenberg.

"The gap has been closed considerably after a meeting today. I'm happy to report that there has been some movement. The gap separating Hilgenberg and the Bears has been narrowed," Hilgenberg's agent, Steve Zucker, said.

Hilgenberg is seeking $1.6 million for one year. The Bears have offered slightly less than $800,000, and reportedly upped the ante in Wednesday's meeting between Zucker and Bears director of finance Ted Phillips.

Steelers

The Pittsburgh Steelers waived five players Wednesday including punter John Nies, essentially handing the punting job to Mark Royals.

Royals, who played previously for Tampa Bay, averaged 52 yards on five punts in the Steelers' 26-0 exhibition loss Monday in New Orleans.

Also waived were running backs Robert Drummond and Gerry Collins, defensive end Johnnie Black and linebacker Derrick Thomas.

New York reactivates Bonilla

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Right fielder Bobby Bonilla was reactivated by the New York Mets Wednesday after missing two weeks with a broken rib on his right side.

Peculiar format keeps International field guessing

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. — The peculiar, ever-changing format for the International tournament still causes concern for some of golf's leading lights.

PGA

Bruce Lietzke, for example, still follows the same game plan he formulated seven years ago in the inaugural of the tournament that uses a modified Stableford scoring system.

"I just go out and play as hard as I can," Lietzke said.

"Then, when we finish 18 holes, I ask my caddy if we get to play again tomorrow."

In all but one case, the answer as been "Yes." Only last year did Lietzke fail to advance to the final round.

And he, along with such other long hitters as Davis Love III and John Daly are among the favorites to do so again in the tournament that begins Thursday on the 7,559-yard Castle Pines Golf Club in the foothills of the Rocky Mountains south of Denver.

The format, which has been adjusted every year the tournament has been in operation, calls for the field of 144 to play two rounds before it is cut to 72 players for Saturday, then cut again to the low 24 scorers for Sunday's final round.

Medal scores do not count; only point totals. Points are awarded for the player's score on every hole, 5 for eagles, 2 for birdies, 0 for par, -1 for bogey and -3 for double bogey or higher.

Point totals now are carried forward through the first three rounds but are wiped out for Sunday's play with all 24 finalists again starting from zero.

"It's good for me because I usually make a lot of birdies, and under this format you don't have to worry about what you're shooting and you don't have to worry about making bogeys," said Daly, golf's longest hitter who recently established a residence on the Jack Nicklaus-designed golf course.

It also is "a good golf course for me," Daly said, citing the length, the generous fairways and 7,000-foot altitude that enables him to get up to 400 yards or more on his drives.

Davis Love III, a former winner of this title, is even more enthusiastic — both about the golf course and the format.

"It's a very good golf course for me, and I love the format. It's fun," said Love, who has won three titles and more than $1 million already this year.

He said a recent slump from his fast start could come to an end here.

"I've kind of been in a flat spot for the last few weeks," he said. "But I started hitting the ball real well last week in the PGA.

"I'm back to playing pretty good, solid golf again," he said.

"I'm really looking forward to starting my usual end-of-the-year spurt right here in this tournament.

"I usually play well at the end of the year and I'm looking forward to starting that push this week."

COWBOYS: Smith looks to opener

(From 1C)

"The only preparation I'll be worried about will come Sept. 7," Smith said. "Until then, my goal is to stay healthy. You've got to remember, these games don't even count."

WISE'S TOUGH DAY: Offensive line coach Tony Wise should have stayed in bed Tuesday.

First, he got the news that one of his sports heroes — Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics — had retired.

"It's really sad," said Wise, who wore a black arm band in honor of Bird at practice. "I'm going to have to go home and watch some old tapes of him."

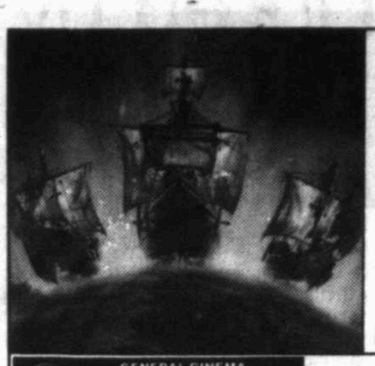

Then came practice, in which the defense dominated and ended with Wise having to break up a fight between rookies Anthony Butts and Tom Myslinski.

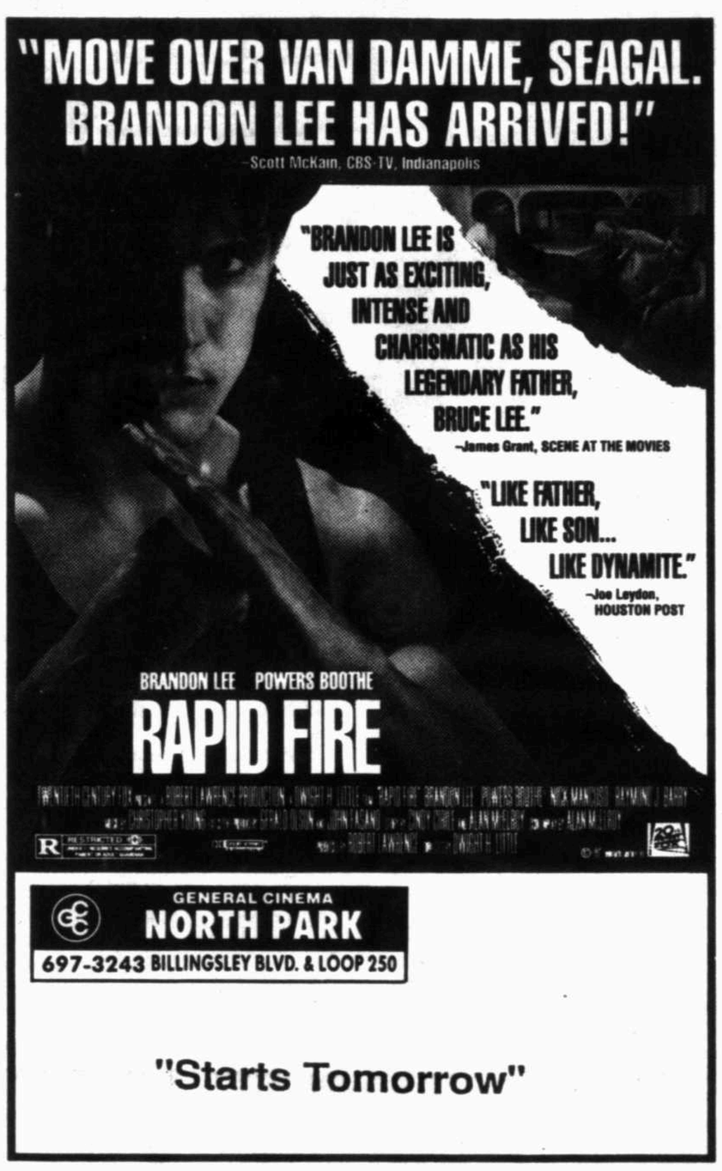

"It was a poor practice and then came the frustration and the fight," Wise said. "The offensive line was just not very good. It's was just one of those days."

DEJA VU: Kevin Smith had seen it before. Quarterback Bucky Richardson, using desperation left-handed passes and scrambling acrobatics, leading his team to a last-minute winning drive. But last weekend at Texas Stadium, Smith was on the opposite sideline.

"I had a feeling we were in trouble when he came in," said Smith, who played with Richardson at Texas A&M. "He's a winner, period. He did the same for us a million times. I'm behind him 100 percent in the pros, especially since we don't play them again in the regular season."

Richardson was 6 of 6 on Houston's 72-yard drive in the last minute.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Reach out to people with bold and innovative ideas. Your ability to attract talented people to your company will put you light years ahead of the competition. A family reunion at Thanksgiving or Christmas helps you mend important fences. Earlier feuds are forgotten. Let romantic partner know what would really make you happy. A favorite hobby could become a source of income by next summer.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: newscaster Connie Chung, outfielder Tom Brunansky, musician Isaac Hayes, singer Robert Plant.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Let the compassionate side of your nature come out. Someone influential gives you the green light for a pet project. Do not ignore relationship problems. Be honest about your feelings.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Put your best foot forward when going out. Important business people set great store by appearances. Dress to impress! A new hairstyle and nicely tailored outfit should do the trick.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A long-term contract should be signed only after consulting with your lawyer and accountant. Keep your opinions to yourself if you think they will offend others.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Financing a partnership or project may prove difficult, but it is not impossible. Refuse to give up! Patience and self-discipline can work wonders. A romantic maneuver could boomerang.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Artists, writers and composers enjoy special luck today. Your concern for a parent or child is natural. Try not to let it prevent you from answering important financial questions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Increased work pressures require you to do your best. Be sincere. Go all out for those who are helpful and constructive. You find romance without even seeking it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A loved one's success makes you proud. Say so! Home improvements could prove too expensive now. Wait until you can afford to do things right. A teen-ager shares a confidence; honor it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It could be time to break with tradition and invest in new technologies. You may have to hide your ambition to avoid frightening potential allies. Rally to a friend's support.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may not see eye-to-eye with your loved ones. Learn to be more flexible when dealing with stubborn people. Romance enjoys highly favorable influences.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Something you do today could make you a local celebrity. Your social life becomes quite active. Eventually you will find the job you want and think it was well worth the wait.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Community work holds new appeal. Do not conceal your delight at the beautiful possibilities of a social event. An attractive co-worker helps you achieve a professional goal.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not let romantic fantasies keep you from getting your work done. Greater understanding and tact will help resolve a domestic impasse. Consider your partner's point of view.

TODAY'S CHILDREN set high standards for themselves and those they love. They want the best life has to offer and will work long hours to achieve financial success. Although material possessions are important to these Leos, they treasure friends and family more. They think big where business is concerned and welcome any opportunity to demonstrate their leadership skills. Quick-witted and competitive, these lions will never shrink from a challenge. Lasting romance may be difficult unless these strong-minded Leos learn to moderate their somewhat domineering natures.

There is a droll definition of a pessimist being someone who has spent some time with an optimist. Be that as it may, there's no doubt that the bridge player who fears the worst is likely to be the one who prepares best to combat bad breaks.

We like North's decision to bounce the auction all the way to five diamonds. The North hand actually detracts from the defensive prospects of North-South's combined holding, while a few key cards in partner's hand could easily produce game.

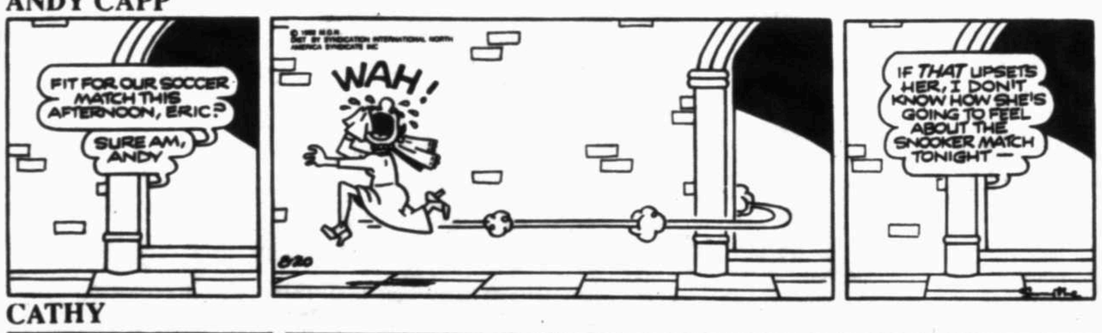

West led a club and, for those who view life through rose-colored spectacles, everything was easy. Declarer won in hand, drew trumps and started on hearts. Unfortunately, that suit failed to break, so declarer had to concede two spade tricks and a heart for down one.

When this hand was dealt in a match at the European Mixed Teams Championship, Marianne Serf of France was aware that a 4-1 heart split could present a problem. She found a textbook method to protect against that possibility.

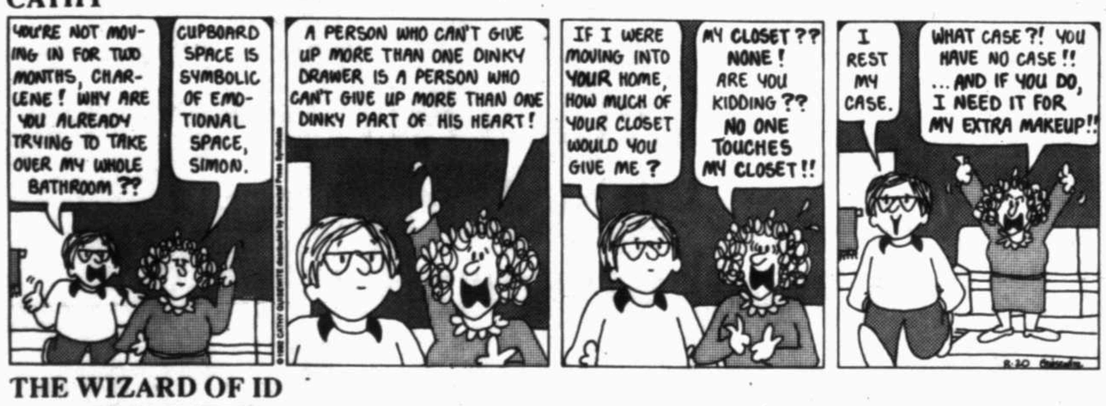

After winning the ace of clubs, Serf ruffed a club, drew trumps in one round and then cashed just one heart—the queen—before exiting with a spade. The best the defenders could do was take two spades, ending in the West hand. Since the lead of any suit other than a heart would give declarer a ruff-sluff, West was forced to return the jack of hearts. Declarer played low from dummy and, had East followed, all the hearts would have been winners. When East showed out, declarer was able to win in hand with the ace and finesse the nine to bring home the suit. Observe that the endplay would have functioned in much the same way had it been East who held the long hearts.

NEW YORK — Nicolas Cage seems to have mellowed.

"I feel like I'm cultivating a kind of calm and wisdom in my older age," the 28-year-old actor says in the September issue of US magazine.

Now, instead of plunging into "squalor and squander" or "felonious assault with meat," Cage says he prefers to "play firetruck" in Los Angeles with his 2-year-old son.

"I worked hard at that outlaw image for a while," Cage said. "It was something I desperately wanted, 'cause I thought that it was so cool when I was watching movies."

Kathleen Turner was reported to have wanted him fired from "Peggy Sue Got Married" because of his outrageous mannerisms. "Can you blame her?" Cage asked.

After "Peggy Sue," Cage played Cher's tortured lover in "Moonstruck," a movie that "was older than I was, in some ways."

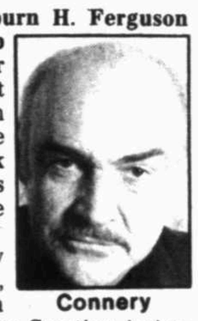

"Now I look at it and think it's a beautiful movie. But back then, I revolted and did 'Vampire's Kiss'" — a macabre comedy in which he ate a live cockroach — "because I needed to get back to that angry, young audience."

LOS ANGELES — A cancer researcher has sued actor Sean Connery, his agents and the makers of "Medicine Man" for $100 million, claiming the film was based on the doctor's life story.

Texas physician Wilburn H. Ferguson and partner Phillip Lambro allege in their copyright infringement lawsuit filed Monday in federal court that the 1992 film mirrors a book about the doctor's 1940s cancer research in the Ecuadorian Amazon.

Connery

The two say they showed the 1973 book, called "Tsanza," and a screenplay synopsis to the Creative Artists Agency in 1988. The agency subsequently packaged "Medicine Man" without giving Ferguson or Lambro compensation or credit, the lawsuit contends.

The lawsuit also names as defendants screenwriter Tom Schulman, Walt Disney Pictures and Cinergi Productions. Disney distributed the film and Cinergi was the production company.

A Creative Artists Agency spokesman, who would speak for Connery, said he had not seen the lawsuit. Cinergi also declined to comment. Walt Disney's phones were out of order Wednesday.

Lambro, a veteran film composer, said Tuesday the movie was not even a competent treatment of Ferguson's research. "It's a terrible film — it demeans Dr. Ferguson," he said.

RALEIGH, N.C. — Sen. Jesse Helms, recovering from heart surgery, said Wednesday he'll return to Washington after Labor Day.

"I haven't been there for three months," Helms, R-N.C., said in a telephone interview. "I miss my neighbors."

Helms

"Except for the weakness of my legs, I am ready to function," the four-term senator said. "The doctor did tell me not to do too much too soon. He did tell me none of these 14- or 18-hour days."

Helms, 70, underwent coronary bypass surgery and had a leaky heart valve replaced in early June. He has been recovering at home and exercising daily at a health center in Raleigh.

"I've been working up a little bit of a sweat," he said.

Helms, who champions tobacco rights as a representative of the nation's largest producer of flue-cured tobacco, also said he has continued his pledge to quit smoking.

"I haven't missed it (smoking) at all," he said. "I have never advocated smoking, but I did make a commitment as long as tobacco is a lawful product I am going to stand with the tobacco farmers of North Carolina."

ATLANTA — The Rev. Hosea Williams, a former lieutenant of civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., on Wednesday began a 50-mile march to encourage leaders in all-white Forsyth County to recruit black residents and businesses.

Williams and about 35 followers, who set out from the state capital in Atlanta, planned a rally at the county courthouse in Cumming, the Forsyth County seat.

During a half-hour rally at the capital, Williams recalled the marches he led in Forsyth County in 1987 that attracted as many as 20,000 protesters.

Those demonstrations prompted appointment of a biracial committee to discuss black grievances in Forsyth County, but it disbanded by the end of the year without a plan or agreement.

Williams said government leaders in the rural county 50 miles north of Atlanta haven't made any effort to attract black residents or businesses, or to hire blacks for government jobs.

"They're still talking so we're going to start walking," he said.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?

Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy phone call.

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:

1) Call the Stockquote Hotline at 560-2400; enter the category number which is 9988.

2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker symbol. These are based on industry-standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broker.

3) Once you've entered the numerical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key (*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update; which is a few minutes behind market activity.

4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options:
- You may request a quote for another stock by repeating steps 2 & 3.
- You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more pressing the Star Key (*).

Now the volume, high and low will be given, and then you will be asked to enter another ticker code.
- You may enter up to 10 ticker symbols per call.

5) To exit Stockquote Hotline, simply hang up the phone.

Prices retreat

NEW YORK — Oil prices fell Wednesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange on profit taking following weekly supply figures.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in September settled at $21.37 per barrel, down 10 cents.

After the market closed Tuesday, the American Petroleum Institute released figures that showed a 1.33 million barrel decrease in the nation's crude oil stocks for the week ended Friday.

However, much of the decrease was on the West Coast, which receives most of its oil via ships rather than overland pipelines and is largely considered separate from the rest of the country. The Gulf Coast region, which accounts for more than half the U.S. stockpile, rose by 2.78 million barrels.

Also, there was a lack of rhetoric between Iraq and the United States. Tension in the Persian Gulf has helped increase prices lately, even though Iraq has not been able to export oil under a United Nations-sponsored embargo.

Natural gas prices fell, with contracts for delivery in September settling at $1.838 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 0.9 cent.

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, lower-grade sour crude for delivery in September settled at $18.77 per barrel, down 10 cents.

Safety meeting

The Permian Basin chapter, American Society of Safety Engineers, will meet this evening at the American Red Cross in Odessa. An optional meal at 6:30 p.m. will precede the meeting, which will start at 7 p.m.

Guest speaker will be Joel Tietjens, who will discuss professional certification and Texas Workers' Compensation Commission requirements for professional safety sources.

Dollar slips

NEW YORK — The dollar closed mostly lower in listless trading Wednesday, with little news to affect the market.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Tuesday, included: 1.4535 German marks, down from 1.4570; 1.3035 Swiss francs, down from 1.3055; 4.9360 French francs, down from 4.9430; 1,104.00 Italian lire, down from 1,106.00; and 1.19685 Canadian dollars, down from 1.19855.

Stocks tumble

NEW YORK — The stock market tumbled in the last hour of trading Wednesday, pulled down in part by bank stocks and homebuilding shares.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 22.42 points to 3,307.06.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 2 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The NYSE's composite index fell 1.49 to 230.41. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index lost 0.92 to 385.89. The Nasdaq index fell 3.26 to 567.61.

Record exports cut trade deficit

■ Report cheers Republican administration; analysts caution that aircraft sales are volatile.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. trade deficit narrowed by 7.7 percent in June, to $6.59 billion, as sales of American aircraft abroad helped set an export record, the government said Wednesday.

But analysts cautioned that aircraft sales are volatile and said that weakness in the economies of major U.S. trading partners continues to threaten overseas sales.

The Commerce Department said exports, which had fallen for three months, totaled $38.28 billion. That was up 7.2 percent from $35.72 billion in May and surpassed the record of $37.65 billion set in February.

Imports hit a record too, due in part to the rising price of petroleum. But the 4.7 percent advance, to $44.88 billion, was not as steep as the gain in exports. The previous high was $43.47 billion in April.

In addition to the increase in capital goods, which includes aircraft, other major export categories — automobiles, agricultural and consumer goods and industrial supplies — posted modest gains in June.

The report cheered the Republican administration as President Bush awaited his party's renomination in Houston Wednesday night amid Democratic criticism of the nation's economy.

"This is good news for the more than 7 million Americans employed in export-related activities," said Commerce Secretary Barbara Franklin.

Exports have provided what little strength the economy has enjoyed for the last three years. Analysts have said the recession would have been twice as severe if growth in overseas sales had not picked up part of the slump in domestic demand.

Despite the June improvement, many analysts expect the deficit to reach $80 billion this year, surpassing the $65.4 billion gap in 1991. That was the first time it had fallen below $100 billion since 1983.

So far this year, the trade deficit is running at an annual rate of $70.94 billion.

"Foreign economies are still enduring varying degrees of stagnation, with robust recovery still very much in question," said Willard A. Workman, a vice president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Kevin Logan, an economist with the Swiss Bank Corp. in New York, said much of the improvement came from an increase in Boeing Co. aircraft shipments from 13 in May to 27 in June. "We won't see that again next month," he contended.

Logan also said any improvement in the U.S. economy would revive consumer demand for goods, including those produced overseas, and further widen the trade gap.

Imports were up modestly in all major categories, but rising oil prices were largely responsible for the record in June.

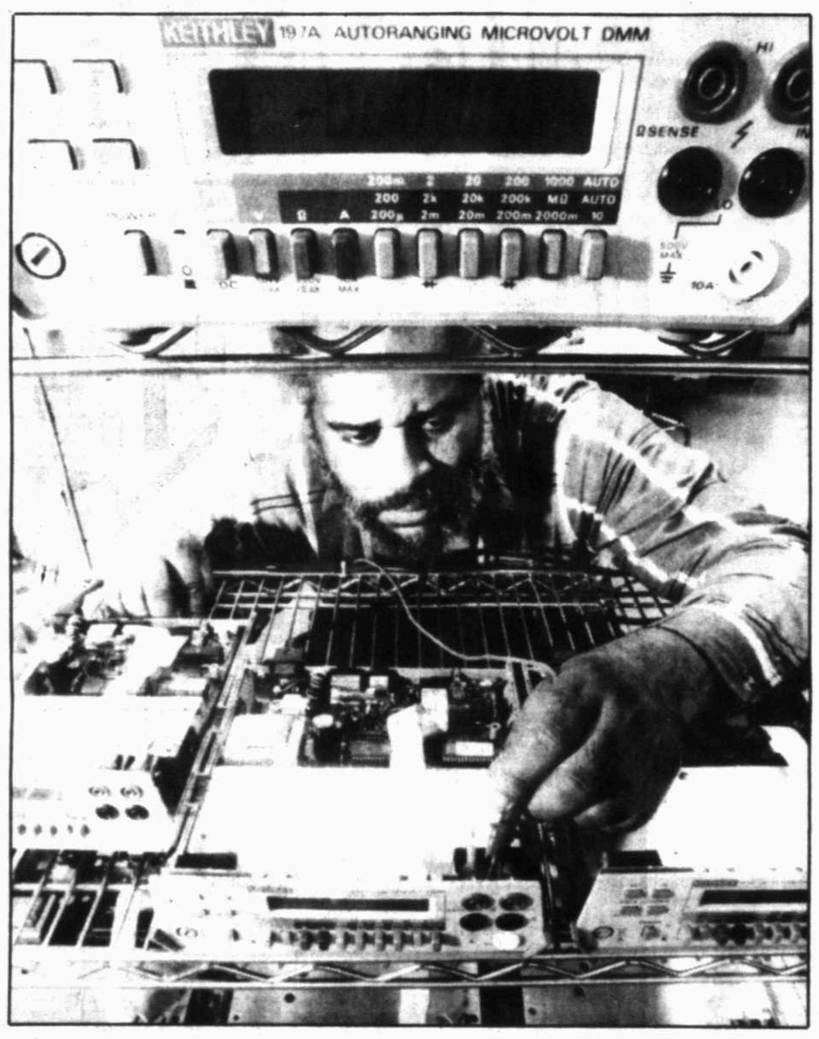

The price per barrel jumped 9.2 percent to $18.25 while the number of barrels imported per day rose 4.7 percent to 6.4 million. The combination produced an oil bill of $4.62 billion, up 12.6 percent from May.

Once again, the biggest deficit was with Japan, an imbalance of $3.39 billion that accounted for half of the total gap. Still, it was down from $3.5 billion in May.

Other deficits included $1.47 billion with China, $803 million with Taiwan, $441 million with Canada and $107 million with Brazil.

The United States ran an unusual deficit, totaling $90 million, with the 12-nation European Community.

It ran a surplus of $334 million with Mexico, one of its partners in the just-concluded North American Free Trade Agreement. Canada is the other.

Fortune: List of billionaires is up, average wealth isn't

By Philip I. Rosenbaum
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — They're not saving coupons, eating at home more often or trading Rolls-Royces for Hyundais, but the world's wealthiest people are showing some moderation in this era of fiscal sobriety, Fortune Magazine says.

In its 1992 ranking of the world's billionaires, issued Wednesday, the average wealth of the supremely affluent remained at $2.7 billion, the same as in 1991. But in 1991, the average wealth was up by $100 million from 1990.

"Money never goes out of style, but spending it sometimes does," the twice-monthly business glossy says in its Sept. 7 issue. It said many of the richest "seem to be cooling it a bit and turning to other pursuits."

For example, the sultan of Brunei, a tiny tropical Pacific island-nation sitting on a vast pool of petroleum, remained the richest person on Fortune's list for the sixth straight year with a hoard worth $37 billion.

Fortune said the Moslem monarch showed signs of financial restraint and made three trips to Mecca, where prayer takes priority over his favorite pastime, polo.

Though he remains the single-biggest customer of Rolls-Royce, with a fleet of 153, published reports say the sultan wants to sell some other ostentatious assets. Earlier this week, USA Today said he was trying to unload the swank Beverly Hills Hotel.

No. 2 on Fortune's ranking is America's richest family, heirs of Wal-Mart founder Sam Walton, with a combined stash worth $21.1 billion. But the magazine said they avoid flashy living just as he did, renting subcompact cars and staying at budget motels.

No. 3 on Fortune's list is Taikichiro Mori of Japan, who made most of his $14 billion in real estate. His wealth grew by $4 billion from a year earlier despite Japan's economic tailspin.

But Mori, 88, lives modestly and goes to his office every day. "Even if you say I'm the top billionaire in Japan, I find it just a little odd," he told Fortune.

Although the average wealth on the Fortune list stagnated, the ranks of the wealthiest grew to 223 names this year from 202 the year before. Forty-five new arrivals made the list and 24 departed. The United States dominated the list with 64 entries.

Newcomers include music label founder David Geffen, with $1.1 billion, and 7-year-old Athina Roussel, granddaughter of the late shipping magnate Aristotle Onassis. Athina's mother, Christina, died of a heart attack in 1988.

Whatever the economic climate, Fortune said it's useful to consider just how far a mere $1 billion will go. Even if just deposited in a money market account at 3.15 percent a year, $1 billion would earn $85,479.45 every day, the magazine calculated.

The Fortune survey differs substantially from one compiled by rival Forbes magazine, which published its ranking in July 8 issues. Both magazines use estimates and published information to compile their rankings, but Fortune's list includes heads of state and royalty.

Firms form communications venture

DALLAS (AP) — JCPenney Co. will join GTE Spacenet and Capital Cities-ABC in a venture to sell communications services to retailers, the companies said Wednesday.

They will form a company called Advanced Retail Communications to offer products like background music, merchandising TV channels, retail industry news programs and buyers services.

The company will also provide data services like credit authorization and inventory management. It will the services at smaller stores in shopping malls and other retail locations.

"They will have access to leading edge tools they might not access as individual stores," said Jean Davis, spokeswoman for GTE Spacenet in McLean, Va.

American, Delta airlines begin showdown in fare increases

DALLAS (AP) — A pricing showdown took shape in the airline industry today as Delta Air Lines criticized American Airlines' refusal to go along with a 5 percent across-the-board fare increase next month.

"It seems American once again is trying to dictate pricing in the airline business," said Jackie Pate, spokeswoman for Atlanta-based Delta.

American announced Tuesday that it wouldn't go along with the Delta-led hike because it "'would simply magnify the inequities that exist right now," spokesman Marty Heires said.

American plans to increase prices that are still below the level of early April, when the Fort Worth-based airline started a four-tier pricing plan most competitors have copied.

Despite heavy traffic, discouted air fares are still cutting into profits.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Bonds' marketplace risk is fluctuating values

By Bill Doyle

Q: I continue to read that investments in bonds are subject to "market risk." But isn't this so only if I have to sell a bond I own before it matures?

Doyle

It seems to me that I have made a good investment when I buy a bond whose interest rate suits my income goals. And I know I will receive 100 percent of my original investment.

A: You're correct, assuming you paid face value for the bond when you bought it, you hold the bond until its maturity date and the bond does not default.

The market risk in bonds traded in the marketplace is that their values can fluctuate between the time they are issued and the time they mature. If you sell during that time span, you might get more or less than the bond's face value.

However, if you continue to hold a marketable bond until it matures, the issuer is pledged to pay you the bond's face value.

Marketable bonds are U.S. Treasury, municipal, corporate and foreign bonds — but not U.S. savings bonds. The latter can not be bought and sold in the open market.

Q: When I buy stock, the brokerage commission is shown on the bill as a separate item. But no such information is provided on the purchase of a municipal bond, even though the broker must receive compensation.

Can you enlighten me about how the commission on municipal bonds is determined?

A: In the vast majority of cases, the compensation to the broker and brokerage firm is a markup — a slightly higher price than the brokerage firm paid for the bond or the price at which the brokerage held the bond in its inventory.

The brokerage confirmation statement — what you call a "bill" — should indicate whether a commission or markup was charged. But you might have to read it carefully to find out. If the word "markup" does not appear, look for a letter or mark referring you to an explanatory note.

You still won't know the size of the markup, so you won't learn whether it was equal to, larger or smaller than a commission on the purchase of stock.

Q: Many brokerage firms in my area refuse to take an order for a $5,000 municipal bond, saying the fee they receive doesn't make it worth their while. Is that fee a percentage of the bond's cost?

A: It usually is. But it's seldom a fixed percentage on all sales. On a percentage basis, it's higher on small transactions. Even so, the amount often is not enough to offset the time and paperwork a brokerage must expend on what, to most people, is not a "small" amount of money.

Most municipal bonds — those issued by states and their political subdivisions — come in $5,000 minimum denomination. But an increasing number of brokerages now shy away from handling $5,000 "muni" trades.

Q: Many times, I and many of my friends miss calls for early redemption of "bearer" municipal bonds we own. Why aren't notices of those calls printed in all newspapers?

A: Because there are far too many of those calls. And the numbers are increasing now that interest rates in general have come way down, enabling bond issuers to sell bonds at low rates and redeem previously issued high-interest bonds.

Every bond issuer is required to advertise a call for early redemption — usually in its hometown newspaper and only one or two other publications.

You and your friends can ask the brokerage firms or banks with which you do business to watch for calls on your bonds. Or you can make periodic visits to large public libraries and read financial manuals, such as Standard & Poor's "Called Bond Record," where all bond calls are reported.

Designer to show collection in Midland

Staff report

Designer Koos van den Adder will be Midland at Robbie Casey's Aug. 27 and 28 to show his fall and winter collection.

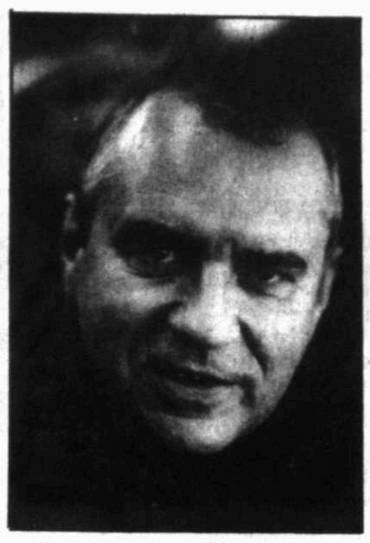

Known as Koos, he is billed as a true couturier, a ready-to-wear designer of international fame and an artist whose distinctive touch is evident in furs, sweaters, shawls and lingerie. He enjoys using fabrics daringly.

"Fabric is my inspiration," Koos said. "The most important thing is how it looks and feels. For the wearer, of course, it is a kind of personal expression. And for my women, there just has to be a touch of fun involved. Otherwise, what's the point."

He moved from Holland to New York City in September 1968 and opened his first store in New York City on Columbus Avenue in the fall of 1970. Two years later, he moved the store to West 72nd Street and three years later to 795 Madison Ave. After 15 years on the Avenue, Koos moved the store around the corner to 34 East 67th Street, where he now occupies a complete downstairs floor of a townhouse.

In the 20 years he has been in the United States, his loyal followers run the gamut from Brooke Hayward Duchin, Barbara Walters and Jane Pauley to Diahann Carroll, Erica Jong, Glenn Close, Marilyn Horne, Magic Johnson and Bill Cosby, who wears Koos' sweaters on his television series.

Koos will be at Robbie Casey's, 4410 N. Midkiff, 10 a.m.- 5:30 p.m. Aug. 27 and 28.

DEAR ABBY

Sorrows and joys of age are the richness of life

EDITOR'S NOTE: Dear Abby is on a two-week vacation. Following is a selection of some of her favorite past letters from 1972 and '73.

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: This concludes the series (from yesterday's column) of responses I received years ago from senior citizens, when I asked what were the biggest problems they faced: Money? Health? Loneliness? Boredom?

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I'm an "older woman" who stands 5 feet 8 inches tall, and I cannot find a dress to cover my knees! — C.P. IN ILLINOIS

DEAR ABBY: I'm 74, wear eyeglasses, false teeth, a hearing aid, and I walk with a cane. But I'm happy because I'm a born-again Christian.

I can smell the fragrance of my flowers and feel the softness of my cat, and I can eat anything I can afford to buy.

I'm on old-age pension and have lots of good books. I've always been poor, so it's no hardship.

Besides, I'll have a mansion by and by. — GLADYS IN CHILLICOTHE, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: I have a sister who married well. She is two years older than I am, and she has never known a lonely hour. Her children and grandchildren flock around her like bees. She is always handing out money and presents, and they treat her like she is some kind of queen.

I have nothing to give, so I am ignored. I am not homeless yet, and God forbid I ever should be, because I'd be dumped into a state home and forgotten. Money is power. — POWERLESS

DEAR ABBY: You asked to hear from senior citizens: Would that some compassionate, benevolent God would take this body and accept the soul of a man on the day he voluntarily retires or is arbitrarily retired from his work, and soon becomes ... USELESS AT 70

DEAR ABBY: I am 74 years old and have been a widow since the age of 29. I raised five children and 12 grandchildren, and what a thankless job I had.

My biggest problem is loneliness. But the reason for my loneliness is the fact that I am poor. Young people today don't want us older folks around unless we are well-fixed and can do for them. — POOR WIDOW

DEAR ABBY: I'm 75 and a widower. I made my first trip to a foreign country at age 70. At 71, I started making my own sourdough bread, and now I can't stand bakery bread. At 73, I started making my own jellies and jams. I enjoy life because I keep active.

I've sent for a copy of the Living Will, thanks to you. I wish to live, but I am not interested in existing. — F.E.W., KENT, WASH.

DEAR ABBY: We are both 77 years old, and we have been married 53 years. First we liked each other, then we loved each other, and now we adore each other. Our problem? We would like to die together! — HARTWIG AND HELEN IN BERKELEY

AT WIT'S END

Find a good man, or at least a good name

By Erma Bombeck

When baby boomers found their own identity, some of the women wanted to hang onto it — all of it, including their own last names when they married.

Bombeck

Consequently, we have a lot of hyphenated couples roaming around out there, and no one knows what to call them.

There seems to be a solution on the horizon. Newlyweds are combining their surnames to form a hybrid version. They are doing this to make it less confusing when children enter the picture and to announce to the world they have a marriage with shared power.

The best that can happen is if Elizabeth Forrester marries Al Cooperstein, they become the Forresteins.

The worst that can happen is if Kathleen Cochran marries Pierre Roachmont and they become Kathleen and Pierre Cochroach. Or worse, if Sarah Ducker marries Bill Doolittle and they are greeted with, "Let's give a hi and hello to the Duckdoos."

When I was married, this was not a problem. It was assumed that you got the name of the man you married. It was a package deal and was not negotiable.

My maiden name was Fiste. I cannot begin to tell you the embarrassment it created for me when people did not give it the long "i" and silent "e" pronunciation. Teachers on the first day of school would pause and call my name like a question, "Erma Fisteee?" The kids in the class would fall off their chairs in laughter. One erudite teacher felt compelled to share that the name in German meant "gutter dog." If the jerk had owned a car, his tires would have been flat.

Small wonder I started to shop for a husband when I was 12.

Given this recent trend of combining last names, I would have shopped longer rather than settle for a man with the letters Bomb in his last name. That is not a good name for an author. It's like giving headline writers a gift.

Women reading this column will be tempted to combine their maiden names with their married ones. I could have gone for Fibeck, which sounds like a discount store. ("Hey, Fibecks is having 50 percent off on all its plastic flowers.") Tebomb is worse. It sounds like an overpriced weapon the Pentagon is trying to shove down our throats.

On the other hand, this trend could give marriage the longevity that has been lacking. Maybe if couples contemplating marriage are faced with combining their names, Amy Lowry would think long and hard before spending her life with Mike Boser and becoming the Losers.

George Bush: Creates, remakes political image

By Maureen Dowd
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — It was torture, in 1988, for George Bush to try to explain who he was. Plucking at his chest, as though he could pull his soul out of a buttoned-down shirt, he told campaign aides, "We got to get me out there; we got to get more of me out there."

Throughout his presidency, he has known, as he once put it, that people were "trying to figure out what makes this crazy guy tick."

Perhaps there has never been a politician who has labored so long, and so reluctantly, to define and redefine, explain and explain yet again, who he is.

Four years after pledging to reveal his "heart-beat" in a convention speech, he was frantically working until the last minute on a speech intended to show "what is in my heart."

George Herbert Walker Bush is an existential Yankee — born in Milton, Mass., raised in Greenwich, Conn., and now living in the moment — who never seems to understand why he cannot just be.

He draws strength from his title. He is president, and therefore he is doing something right, he will tell those who challenge him.

But the problem is this: George Bush has projected many different versions of George Bush over the years, trying to court and hold a disparate coalition. His image now is not so much like his bold bronze statue in the Astrodome, with gaze fixed and body standing firm against the wind. It is more like a hologram that changes depending on the angle from which you look at it.

He can be charming. He can be whiny. He can be passive. He can be hyperactive. He can be conservative. He can be moderate. He can be firm. He can be, as an aide once said, a victim of his last conversation.

He bashes Democrats in Congress. He eats barbecue at the White House with Democrats in Congress.

With his mother's voice in one ear, reminding him not to gloat, he can be modest. With his own voice in the other ear, reminding him that he has completed many important missions, he can be proud and confident.

He can be principled, seeming unconcerned about the political cost, as he was when he stood up to Saddam Hussein and when he insisted that Israel freeze settlements in the West Bank as a condition for $10 billion in loan guarantees.

But more often, as with his shifting stands on abortion, taxes and civil rights, political costs seem to determine his principles.

In perhaps the most revealing comment ever made about Bush, the late C. Fred Chambers, a Texas oil executive and a very close friend, explained why Bush, as a young politician in Houston, had changed to a more progressive position on civil rights. "George understands that you have to do politically prudent things to get in a position to do what you want," he said.

Democrats, predictably, put it less kindly. "You can't find an issue in the last 30 years that George Bush hasn't been on both sides of, with the exception of cutting the capital gains tax," said James Carville, a strategist for Gov. Bill Clinton.

Indeed, Bush's strongest conviction has been born of his class. The boy nicknamed "Poppy" who rode out the Depression in a chauffeured sedan that ferried him to Greenwich Country Day School, the boy whose father was a pillar of the Wall Street establishment, grew up believing that what fuels America is capital and that its preservation is of paramount importance.

"He thinks Bill Clinton would be a disaster as president because he doesn't understand capitalism, as we perceive it," said Jonathan Bush, the president's younger brother, an investment banker in New York.

Ever since he began his political career in Houston in the early 1960s, when he appalled his moderate supporters by soothing the John Birch Society-types in the Goldwater movement, Bush has been making one Faustian bargain after another — veering between the right wing he needed and the moderate Republican wing that was his heritage.

He was brought up in a world that valued public service, internationalist goals and noblesse oblige, the responsibility of the powerful to help the less powerful.

It is the worst fear of some of his friends that he may have sold off too many pieces of himself, in the mistaken belief he could someday get them back; that in his boyish eagerness to avoid conflict, to knit together opposing groups, to please everyone, he may have lost the ability to project a simple, coherent set of political ideas and ideals.

Bush's friend, Thomas (Lud) Ashley, a Washington lobbyist who was a Democratic congressman from Ohio, said the president "finds it hard to get emotionally involved in passionate dislike of one side or another."

"He's not a confrontational guy; he'd rather get along," Ashley said of the president, who is about to stake his re-election on attacking the Democratic Congress. "He likes Tom Foley and George Mitchell personally."

Ashley said Bush's distaste for domestic affairs came from his belief that it is hard to get anything done.

"Domestically, he finds it very difficult to get away from what people expect in terms of programs, promises and benefits of one kind or another," Ashley said. "He finds it difficult to make appealing the idea of more individual self-reliance through better education."

Following footsteps

Bush had always strived to measure up to the standards of conduct set by his 6-foot-5 father, Prescott Bush, a craggy faced, bushy eyebrowed investment banker who preceded his son at Yale and in Skull and Bones, the Yale secret society, and in Congress, as a senator from Connecticut.

His father did not make much of a mark in his two terms in Congress, although he often played golf with his friend, President Dwight D. Eisenhower, at the Burning Tree Country Club, and, striding the Capitol corridors, he looked like Hollywood's idea of a senator.

But the senior Bush always made an impression with his rectitude. At an early manufacturing job in St. Louis, he turned his boss into the police for skimming profits. He would leave a party if anyone used dirty talk and, even as a freshman senator, he stood up to Joe McCarthy.

The first time George Bush returned to the family compound at Kennebunkport after his election as president, he landed on a green and excitedly told the assembled townfolk, "We zoomed in there in a great big helicopter, and I wondered what my old man would say if he could see his little boy now."

The president concedes he was in awe of his father and once even called him "really scary."

During the 1988 campaign, when it was suggested that Prescott Bush would have been shocked by the ferocity of his son's right-wing campaign themes, George Bush replied, "Well, I think my Dad would be pretty proud of me because I think we've come a long, long way."

Tellingly, Nancy Ellis, the president's sister, cited only one instance when her brother, normally mild-mannered and anxious to please, reminded her of their father: Bush's recent angry encounter with the families of American servicemen missing in Southeast Asia. "When George said, 'Shut up and sit down,' that was absolutely Dad," she said.

Although Bush gets intensely uncomfortable with personal scrutiny — "Don't put me on the couch," he says — his presidency has been largely based on personality.

He wants Americans to elect him, not because of ideas, but because he has been bred and educated for public service, and because he is someone they can trust in any situation that arises to do the "right" thing. He presents it as his great accomplishment that he has kept the White House "decent" and "honorable."

Bush is so focused on the ritual of the presidency and his role as the caretaker of the office that he usually refers to himself as "the president" or "the president of the United States."

Just so, his longtime supporters rarely point to his politics when they explain their devotion. They just point to Bush, himself.

The reason the "trust" theme will be the main theme of the 1992 campaign is not simply because Bush sees it as the most potent way to contrast himself with Bill Clinton.

When he says, "Trust me," he is not just saying, "Don't trust the other guy," although that is an important part of his message. Bush is also coming back to the idea that it is the person you elect, not the party nor the ideology.

When Bush campaigns, he puts on a new persona with the alacrity that he puts on a campaign T-shirt, and when the campaign is over, he takes it off just as fast.

The day after he was elected in 1988, he reassured reporters at a news conference that they would never again see "George the Ripper," the candidate who had conducted a campaign so negative and racially divisive that his campaign manager, Lee Atwater, would apologize for it before he died.

"Oh, that's all history," Bush said, dismissing the idea that campaign oratory has lasting meaning as though flicking lint off his lapel.though waving away a bad dream.

Again, when Richard G. Darman, Bush's budget chief, told the president that he could break his "no new taxes" pledge because Americans did not expect politicians to keep their campaign promises, that made sense to Bush — the disconnection between election oratory and just being yourself as president.

When comparing Bush with his predecessor, Ronald Reagan, those who know him often cite the fable about the fox, who knows many small things, and the hedgehog, who knows one large thing. Bush is the fox of scattershot governing, they say, while Reagan was the hedgehog of ideological clarity.

Gentle moments

His sister, Nancy, remembers the time last spring when she and her friend Jean Wallace Douglas were birdwatching amid the shrubs on the White House lawn near the tennis court.

"I heard this 'Tweet, tweet, tweet' that sounded like spring warblers," she said, "and we swung our binoculars around and it was George, hiding in the grass, surrounded by the Secret Service."

Although Bush has not consistently been seen as a strong leader, his brother Jonathan, said George was a pied piper as a youth. "Everyone was drawn to him," he said. "Morris Greenberg, the groundskeeper of Yale, spent more time at George Bush's house there than all the other baseball players. And George would never say, 'Hey Morris, it's time to go home.'"

His presidential counsel, C. Boyden Gray, recalls that in the midst of a bad week last week the president still had time to tease him about the mythical tennis-ranking committee, whereby Bush keeps track of how his tennis Cabinet is doing.

The president has not governed on the basis of ideas, but on the basis of people. He puts the people he believes in around him, and they make it up as they go along — most notably Secretary of State James A. Baker III, Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady, Brent Scowcroft, the national security adviser, and Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

"I would hate to be president without friendships," Bush said the first year of his presidency.

When he needed Baker to come back and run his campaign, he developed an ideological argument to justify a pragmatic move. He took his argument that foreign policy and domestic policy are intertwined and used it to explain that he wanted Baker in the White House to take care of the country while he is out campaigning.

It was clear to everyone, however, that Bush wanted Baker to take care of his campaign.

Baker was needed to rescue the president, even though that was a blow to Bush's pride, because Bush divides the world into peers and the help, and only a peer like Baker could really grab him by shoulders and get him to focus.

KENT OIL, INC.

KENT KWIK CONVENIENCE STORES

WHY KENT OIL COMPANY?

Kent Oil (operating Kent Kwik convenience stores) is a West Texas-based company, thirty five years old and still growing. We offer many benefits to our employees. These benefits include:

- Company-assisted medical, dental and life insurance
- Paid vacations
- Sick pay program
- Tuition reimbursement program
- Special incentive programs for all employees
- Profit-sharing and retirement plan
- Intensive new hire training
- Structured continual management training
- Flexible scheduling
- Full and part time hours available
- Work close to home
- Affiliation with Odessa 66 credit union

We attempt whenever possible to promote from within. All of our current store managers, middle and upper management started with the company at the entry level. It is possible to move up quickly based on your experience and level of education.

Working in a convenience store is both exciting and challenging. You have to be outgoing and enjoy serving the public, while at the same time be a self-starter, as you receive very little on the job supervision.

If you are considering a career in the retail industry, give Kent Oil your consideration. Please apply (and be ready for interview) at the Kent Oil office Monday-Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. 3314 N. Loop 250 in Midland.
