Burmese soliders fire on marchers

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Troops fired into crowds of students, Buddhist monks and other peaceful marchers today in Rangoon as thousands of Burmese protested the military coup, witnesses said. Unofficial estimates said about 150 people, including 17 soldiers, died.

The military announced that soldiers firing on "violent and unruly mobs" in the capital and other parts of the country killed 23 people and wounded another 23. The announcement said the figures were incomplete.

However, unofficial estimates based on eyewitness accounts and interviews put the number of dead at about 150, including 17 soldiers, with an unknown number of people wounded.

Soldiers were preventing armed demonstrators from entering the capital, witnesses said.

The clashes between army troops and protesters began in and around the capital Sunday after after hardline army commander Gen. Saw Maung ousted civilian President Maung Maung.

"Many students are being mowed down. Can't anything be done?" a reporter said by telephone from the scene of one confrontation before breaking down in tears.

On Sunday, Saw Maung abolished key government institutions, ordered striking government employees to return to work, imposed a nighttime curfew and banned public gatherings of five people or more. He said the moves were aimed at halting economic and social chaos that has forced the resignation of two Burmese leaders since July amid public demands for an end to 26 years of repressive one-party rule.

Among the government institutions abolished by Saw Maung were the Council of State — the highest government body — Parliament, the Council of Ministers, and all the local people's councils.

In the past month, strikes, demonstrations, looting and lawlessness have paralyzed the economy and pushed the nation to the verge of anarchy.

Battles between troops and protesters were reported today around the main government administrative building, the U.S. Embassy, the central Sule Pagoda and other locations.

"There's a lot of shooting," a diplomat said on condition of anonymity. "It's a bad situation."

Witnesses said corpses were taken away by military trucks while residents dragged some dead and wounded into their houses or placed them onto the seats of three-wheeled taxis for rides to the nearest hospitals.

Residents of buildings near the U.S. Embassy said they saw demonstrators being cut down by military fire. Others saw two monks falling to the ground after being hit by bullets around the Sule Pagoda.

A Western diplomat, contacted by telephone from Tokyo, said soldiers hidden from sight and possibly positioned on rooftops were firing at demonstrators in front of the U.S. Embassy, which may have been struck by bullets.

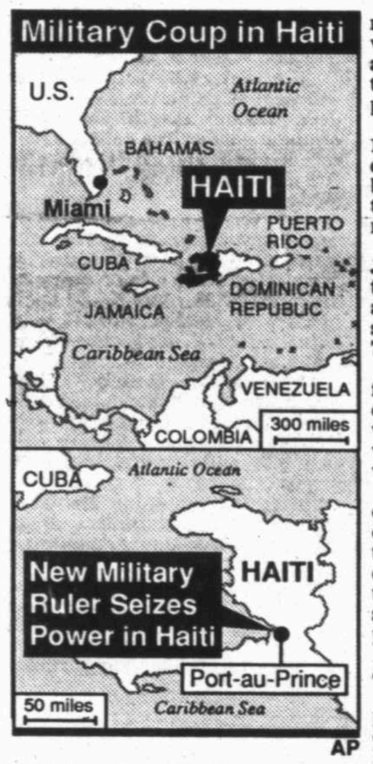
Haitians hope for reform after ouster of ruler

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Advocates of democratic reform expressed hope that Haiti's new military leaders would open a dialogue with the people after ousting Lt. Gen. Henry Namphy, who ran the country for more than two years.



Brig. Gen. Prosper Avril, the army's chief administrative officer, went on national television Sunday and declared himself president of the Western hemisphere's most impoverished nation.

He said Namphy was ousted by the 1,000-man Presidential Guard Saturday night because it was "sickened" by his rule, which was marked by a tolerance for the murder of government opponents.

Avril was a military adviser to Jean-Claude Duvalier before the dictator's February 1986 flight into exile and has since managed to ally himself with the prevailing forces in the 7,000-man military.

The government said an unspecified number of soldiers were reported killed in the coup, and Namphy was sent to the Dominican Republic, which shares the island of Hispaniola with Haiti.

Port-au-Prince appeared calm Sunday night, though the U.S. and Canadian embassies advised their citizens to stay off the streets. Small groups of people milled in the streets and traffic was light. Television and radio stations resumed their normal programming.

The airport, which was closed Sunday, was expected to reopen today.

But for the four-month civilian presidency of Leslie Manigat, which ended in June with a bloodless coup, Namphy had run Haiti since Duvalier's departure, heading a military-led junta until Manigat was elected in January in junta-run balloting that was widely boycotted.

On Nov. 29, independently run elections were thwarted by armed thugs supported by the army who killed 34 people at the polls.

And a week before the coup, about 20 men armed with machetes, handguns and steel pikes attacked a Roman Catholic Church during a Mass being celebrated by the Rev. Jean Bertrand Aristide, a vocal critic of the Namphy government. Thirteen people were killed and 77 wounded.

Opposition leaders blamed the government for the attack and another church burning two days later.

Heavy gunfire was heard in the capital Saturday night shortly before the coup, but Susan Clyde, spokeswoman for the U.S. Embassy here, said "it appeared to be mainly celebratory shooting in the air, nobody shooting at anyone or anything."

Frantz Lubin, Haiti's director of information, said an unspecified number of soldiers were killed.

Storm's remnant moving to north

Hurricane Gilbert's remnants swept from Texas to Illinois today with heavy rain and flooding that forced evacuations in one Oklahoma town. The storm earlier spun off 41 tornadoes and killed three people in Texas and Oklahoma.

The tropical depression that last week was the strongest hurricane ever recorded in the Western Hemisphere spread showers and thunderstorms along a line toward the northeast.

It picked up speed to about 45 to 50 mph early today, said Dan McCarthy, of the National Weather Service.

"It's scooting," said McCarthy, of the Severe Storms Center in Kansas City, Mo.

Meanwhile, workers in Monterrey, Mexico, searched for the bodies of up to 200 people swept away when a river swollen by hurricane rains poured over its banks and overturned four buses. Ninety bodies were recovered and a total of 191 people were confirmed dead in the aftermath of Gilbert outside the United States.

Late Sunday, the storm moved over Wichita Falls, Texas, with rain and high wind, and today it was over eastern Oklahoma.

An area west of Wichita Falls was deluged with 4½ inches of rain, and some roads in Ozona, in western Texas, were under water. The mass of moisture extended to Chicago.

Parts of Oklahoma received up to 8 inches of rain in two days, causing minor flooding.

About a dozen residents of a low-lying area in Kingfisher, Okla., evacuated late Sunday, and others were told to be ready to leave. Kingfisher Creek was expected to rise as much as 4 feet above flood stage today, said police dispatcher Lois Darling.

"It's already a foot past flood stage and rising," Ms. Darling said early today.

Elsewhere in Oklahoma, a 50-year-old pilot from Santa Fe, N.M., was killed late Saturday when his plane broke apart while flying near Muskokee, northeast of Oklahoma City, in heavy rain produced by Gilbert, authorities said.

Although the brunt of the hurricane missed the U.S. Gulf Coast, residents and businesses in Texas spent Sunday clearing debris scattered by at least 41 tornadoes whipped up by the storm.

The Rio Grande River rose 30 feet Saturday night in southwest Texas. The rains were expected to raise the river to 12 feet above flood stage, the weather service said.

In San Antonio, a 42-year-old man was killed Friday while watching television when a twister knocked a utility pole onto his home, officials said. A 59-year-old woman was killed early Saturday after a tornado ripped through a bedroom in her mobile home.

"We'll take one day at a time. We'll clean up and eventually we'll get our own house put up if we get some money to buy lumber and tin," said Deborah Dickens, whose mother-in-law, Emily Dickens, was killed.

Other tornadoes in San Antonio uprooted trees, snapped power lines and tore roofs off homes, businesses and buildings at Kelly Air Force Base, causing at least $3 million damage.

Sylvia Sulsh, 54, said she was taking a shower early Saturday when a tornado struck her apartment at a San Antonio complex where at least 120 units were destroyed, 264 others damaged and 300 tenants left homeless.

Bentsen slates Basin appearance

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, will make his first appearance in the Midland-Odessa area since being selected as running mate to presidential candidate Michael Dukakis.

According to Yvonne Harris, spokeswoman for the University of Texas at the Permian Basin, Bentsen will discuss the Democrats' position on energy at 6 p.m. Tuesday in the UTPB student lounge.

In addition to seeking the vice presidency, Bentsen is also running for re-election to the U.S. Senate.

Bentsen is very popular in Texas and his presence on the ticket has led many political observers to rate Texas a toss up in the presidential sweepstakes.

Before Dukakis selected Bentsen, Texas was considered a cinch state for Republican presidential candidate George Bush.

Senate ready to phase out Canadian tariffs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is taking final action on plans to phase out tariffs between the United States and Canada and end a variety of other trade barriers.

"I consider this the most significant economic agreement the United States has ever entered into with another country," Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., a leading supporter, said in a statement Friday.

All tariffs between the two countries would be phased out over 10 years under the agreement, which was signed Jan. 2 by President Reagan and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. Some other barriers also would be ended.

The bill to start the phaseout won strong House approval Aug. 9 and the same is expected in the Senate in a vote set for today.

The measure then goes to Reagan's desk. But that does not mean the agreement will go into effect anytime soon.

The bill would authorize Reagan to put the agreement in effect starting Jan. 1. How soon the ball gets rolling, however, actually depends on when the Canadians can get their counterpart legislation through Parliament.

Canadian legislation has won approval from the House of Commons in Ottawa but will die in the Senate if, as expected, Mulroney calls parliamentary elections within the next two or three weeks.

The Canadian legislative process would have to start from scratch when the new members of Parliament met after the election.

A free-trade agreement ends tariffs on shipments between the countries involved.

Israel is the only other country with which the United States has a free-trade agreement. But the volume of trade with Israel is minor compared with the flow of goods in both directions across the northern border.

In 1987 alone, $131 billion in merchandise flowed over the U.S.-Canadian border, marking Canada as the No.1 trading partner of the United States.

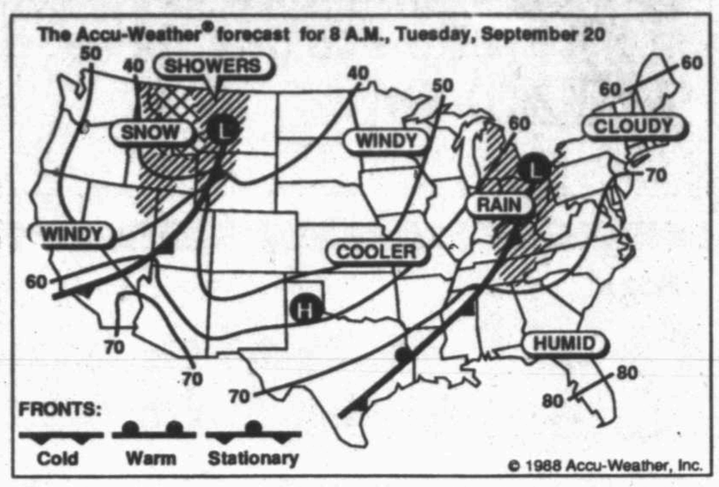
WEATHER SUMMARY



Fair skies forecast for Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

With Hurricane Gilbert now history, forecasters with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport have a bright weather outlook for tonight and Tuesday.

Tonight calls for fair skies, with a low near 60 degrees. Winds will be out of the northeast at 5 to 15 mph.

On Tuesday, skies will be mostly sunny, with a high in the upper 80s. Southeasterly winds will gust between 10 and 15 mph.

Sunday's high of 84 was 14 degrees cooler than the record of 98, set on that date in 1945. The overnight low of 67 was 21 degrees warmer than the record of 46, set on this date in 1971.

STATE

Strong southerly winds raked across Central and North Central Texas early today, as the remnants of Hurricane Gilbert raced rapidly northeastward across Oklahoma.

The National Weather Service reported wind speeds at 20 to 35 mph with higher gusts were common in the area. But a cold front moving into the Texas Panhandle brought northerly winds of 20 to 30 mph with higher gusts into that area.

Elsewhere across the state, winds were mainly from the south, except in the western Trans-Pecos area, where westerly winds prevailed. Wind speeds were mainly in the 10 to 20 mph range.

The greater part of the Lone Star State was dry, except for a small area of showers from northwest of Hondo to just west of Bandera near the Balcones Escarpment.

Skies skies were partly to mostly cloudy over the eastern half of the state, while fair skies were common elsewhere.

Temperatures at 4 a.m. were in the 50s in the mountains of the Big Bend and in the Panhandle, north of the cold front. Readings elsewhere were in the 70s, except south of the cold front in the High Plains, where the temperatures were in the 60s.

Extreme temperatures ranged from 55 degrees at Dalhart to 81 degrees at Dallas Love Field, the Dallas Naval Air Station and Corpus Christi Naval Air Sation.

Forecasters called for isolated evening showers or thunderstorms over the Edwards Plateau, Hill Country and into South Central and inland Southeast Texas. Considerable cloudiness was expected during the late night and early morning inland southeast and South Central Texas. Fair in the West, with decreasing cloudiness north and generally partly cloudy in the South.

NATION

Rain from what had been Hurricane Gilbert extended from Texas to Illinois this morning, and winds whipped cold air through the northern and central Rockies and knocked out electricity in several Colorado towns.

Strong thunderstorms stretched across the northern Plains and across the upper Mississippi Valley, middle Missouri Valley and central Plains.

Winds up to 92 mph felled trees and utility lines and caused power outages in several cities from the Wyoming border south to the Denver metropolitan area, authorities said.

The biggest outage occurred in Fort Collins, Colo., where some 5,000 utility customers lost power Sunday night. All but about 500 had their power restored by this morning.

Bodies of flood victims sought as Mexico recovers from storm

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — People using picks or their bare hands dug through rubble where their homes had stood, and the search wore on for the bodies of people who died when a river overran its banks and swept away four buses.

As of Sunday, rescue workers had found the bodies of 90 of the nearly 200 people believed killed the previous day when a flash flood spawned by Hurricane Gilbert caused the normally dry Santa Catarina River to overflow.

The torrent ripped a 40-mile path of destruction through northern Mexico's most populated region, on which Gilbert had dumped about 12 inches of rain in 24 hours after leaving the Gulf of Mexico.

Gilbert, which killed at least 194 people during its week of life, was today a tropical depression that was spreading showers and thunderstorms from Texas to Illinois.

In Mexico, 31 died when the storm slammed into Mexico's Yucatan peninsula Wednesday with winds of up to 200 mph. One woman drowned in floodwaters Sunday in the coastal state of Tamaulipas.

The storm killed 30 people in Haiti, 26 in Jamaica, five in the Dominican Republic and eight in Honduras in its deadly rampage through the Caribbean. Two people were killed in Texas by tornados spawned by the storm and a pilot died in Oklahoma when his plane broke apart in heavy rains.

President Miguel de la Madrid, surveying the destruction in this northern industrial city on Sunday, said Mexico has "a lot to lament."

Parts of two major thoroughfares and hundreds of homes built by the poor in the dry Santa Catarina riverbed were swept away by the raging waters.

Although homes had been evacuated hours before the destruction hit, most residents lost their life's possessions. Officials said about 30,000 in the region were homeless.

Many residents used picks or bare hands to dig through the rubble that remained where their tiny concrete and tin houses had stood.

Rescue workers continued to search for bodies, and Jose Natividad Gonzalez Paras, Nuevo Leon state secretary, said a "considerable number" of people still were missing.

Journalists saw soldiers uncover the body of one man caught in the mangled remains of an electricity tower.

The man, who appeared about 20 years old, had been covered by clothing, tree branches and mud trapped by the tower, one of several downed lines along the Santa Catarina's bank at the hardest-hit area.

Further downstream, two dozen soldiers used cranes to pull the crushed and overturned body of an intercity passenger bus from the mud and sand of the riverbed.

"They hope to find bodies because they don't know exactly how many people were in the bus or how many were able to save themselves," said rescue coordinator Lt. Col. Vicente Gamez of the 7th Military Zone.

The first bus yanked from the riverbed and hauled away revealed only empty seats, twisted metal and piles of shoes and clothing. The three other buses remained buried upside down Sunday night.

Gamez said rescue crews were searching for bodies in Cadereyta, about 20 miles downstream, where the flood wiped out homes and killed more than a dozen people.

Hundreds of families farther downstream were evacuated to public buildings on higher ground Sunday because of flooding, said Fernando Gonzalez Villarreal, assistant secretary in the federal Water Resources Ministry.

"The situation is critical. The rain was very strong," he said.

Nuevo Leon state authorities estimated damages to public roads, bridges and other facilities alone at $60 million.

Thirteen U.S. Coast Guard airplanes and helicopters flew rescue missions on Sunday throughout Nuevo Leon and Tamaulipas states, assisting Mexican air forces.

A Coast Guard helicopter being used for evacuation lost power as it took off on Sunday and fell about 50 feet, brushing a house under construction, police reported.

"The chopper made a forced landing. Fortunately, no one was hurt," said Lt. Commander John Wcislo, U.S. Coast Guard attache in Mexico.

Police said the three Americans and one Mexican on board were taken to the local hospital for a checkup and released.

Wcislo said Coast Guard aircraft would continue ferrying people and Red Cross supplies today if needed.

Booklet has 'x-ray vision' of new trade legislation

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In what has already become a best seller, published by the United States Chamber of Commerce, there are cartoons showing Superman battering foreign trade barriers and a timebomb labeled Agricultural subsidies ticking away under a trade negotiating table.

The chamber's international staff put together the booklet describing the nation's newest trade law and business leaders say it is unusually readable.

In its first 10 days the booklet has sold 1,000 copies, something of a record for the chamber.

The aim of the 66-page publication, which has a glossary, charts and short sentences, is to explain the landmark legislation in a straightforward way that anyone can understand, said the William T. Archey, the chamber's international vice president.

CONGRESS

When services are added to the calculation, total trade between the two countries amounted to $166 billion. Japan was No.2 with $116 billion in merchandise trade with the United States last year.

Despite heavy support for the measure in the Senate, a rear guard of critics is expected to turn a spotlight on defects before the vote.

"I'm going to oppose it, there's no question of that," Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., said Friday. He said Canadian wheat would "come down and fill our elevators. ... We never have enough elevator space during the harvest anyway and to crowd them further isn't very good for us."

Meanwhile, the House is set to resume work on a $2 billion bill that would create a sub-Cabinet position to wage war on illegal drugs.

A broad plan of attack on the drug problem would be fashioned by the "drug czar" who would replace the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board.

The House last week approved minimum sentences of five years for second-time offenders convicted of possessing as little as five grams of crack.

It also approved a system of financial incentives to prod action by states against drunken drivers.

The House is expected to complete action on the measure this week.

On another front, a showdown in the Senate is expected Tuesday on a proposed $1.20 an hour increase in the minimum wage over three years. Final action is possible by the end of the week.

The minimum wage has been frozen at $3.35 an hour since 1981 and inflation has reduced its purchasing power to about $2.60.

The bill sponsored by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., would raise it 40 cents an hour in each of the next three years, providing direct benefit to about 15 million workers.

"The working people of this country have been waiting eight years for a cost of living increase," Kennedy said.

Reagan and Vice President George Bush have softened their opposition but only on condition that any increase is coupled with a subminimum training wage.

Neither Reagan nor Bush has specified how much of an increase he favors. Bush's running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., in June proposed an increase to $4 an hour over two years.

An amendment introduced on the Senate floor last week by Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, would allow employers to pay 80 percent of the minimum to newly hired workers for the first 90 days they are on the payroll.

The key vote will be on a substitute amendment by Kennedy to Hatch's proposal. Kennedy's plan would slightly expand coverage of an 85 percent subminimum wage — currently $2.85 an hour — for full-time students that is now in the law. About 100,000 students are paid that subminimum.

HAITI

Radio stations reported that at least six people were killed in the capital in coup-related clashes and that mobs pillaged two homes owned by Namphy and the home of Port-au-Prince Mayor Franck Romain.

Although motives for the coup were unclear, it appeared the soldiers and non-commissioned officers of the elite Presidential Guard were disenchanted with Namphy's authoritarian rule.

A Western diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the Presidential Guard had given the army's High Command a list of 19 demands for forming a new government, including democratic reform and better living conditions for soldiers.

All the demands were accepted, the diplomat said, except the nomination of Col. Jean-Claude Paul as military commander-in-chief. Paul has been indicted on federal drug-trafficking charges in Florida.

Paul, commander of the dreaded 700-man Dessaline unit, had been regarded as the most powerful figure in Haiti after Namphy. It was not known if Paul played a part in the coup, but sources said he and Namphy were at odds.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said the United States still wanted Paul extradited to face the drug charges.

Initial reaction to the coup from advocates of democratic reform was positive, ut cautious.

"I will support the military government if they say as soon as possible when they will call elections," said Louis Dejoie II, leader of the national Agricultural Industrial Party. "We are ready to speak with any government that respects human rights."

In his statement to the nation early Sunday, Avril said Haiti will respect all international treaties, liberties and human rights and that "dialogue will be honored for the sake of national reconciliation."

The statement was considered significant because it echoed a recent offer for dialogue from opposition leader Marc Bazin, a conservative leader of the Committee for Democratic Understanding.

Bazin and Dejoie were among four leading candidates for president in the Nov. 29 elections and boycotted the elections won by Manigat.

Dejoie said he expected the military to announce when elections would be held in the next week or so.

"They must do it or they won't have any support," Dejoie said. "The army right now has to regain its credibility. We want to give them a chance with this new change of guard."

Avril has been a key behind-the-scenes figure in a succession of governments since nationwide riots forced Duvalier to flee to France. Duvalier had been president since the 1971 death of his father, Francois Duvalier, who ruled since 1957.

Although most demonstrators faced the troops without weapons, some carried swords, spears, crossbows and other primitive weapons. There were reports that they were hurling firebombs in some areas.

The Western diplomat said 1,000 demonstrators were moving peacefully around a corner near the U.S. Embassy when troops opened fire, possibly with heavy weapons and automatic rifles.

The diplomat said he could see three young men who had taken refuge behind a tree. Two appeared to be fatally wounded while another, whose shirt was bloodsoaked, seemed in pain. An ambulance later evacuated the three.

More than 40 demonstrators and 17 soldiers were reported killed Sunday night in the Bangalisu area of the city, where protesters were seen taking weapons from fallen soldiers.

Transportation was at a halt.

State-run Radio Rangoon said Sunday that Saw Maung, who has been defense minister since July, was assuming control as chairman of the Peace Restoration Committee. Saw Maung is widely regarded as a hardline officer and a right-hand man of Sein Lwin, who resigned as president Aug. 12 after riots in which diplomats say hundreds of protesters were killed.

Sunday's coup came amid speculation the government and key opposition leaders were paving the way to an interim government and a return to full democracy.

"Predictably, the demonstrators who thought they were close to achieving the capitulation of the government and setting up an interim government are not accepting this military regime," the Western diplomat said.

The fate of Maung Maung, who had promised multiparty nationwide elections, was not known.

On Sunday night, troops sealed the offices of all six government newspapers. Although nominally under government control, the papers have in recent weeks carried reports about Burma's mass anti-government movement.

According to the radio, the 18 other military officers in the Peace Restoration Committee included the army, navy and air force commanders, eight of Burma's nine regional miliary commanders, and the widely hated military intelligence chief, Col. Khin Nyunt.

The broadcast, preceded by martial music, said military authorities would "restore law and order, peace and tranquility in the country ... and ease the daily livelihood of the people.

"After accomplishing the above objectives, (the authorities will) hold general elections under a multiparty system," it said.

Maung Maung, a Western-educated lawyer, on Aug. 19 became the nation's first civilian leader since the 1962 military coup led by strongman Ne Win that installed the Burma Socialist Program Party.

STORM

"I got out of the shower and braced myself against the door and then I saw the roof fall down in the living room," Ms. Sulsh said.

Mayor Henry Cisneros said the city was lucky the death toll was low.

Crews restored power and telephone service Sunday and removed debris from streets, as those whose homes were damaged made repairs.

The storm killed at least 98 people while coursing the Caribbean, including 29 in Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula where it hit land Wednesday with winds of up to 200 mph, 26 in Jamaica, 30 in Haiti, five in the Dominican Republic and eight in Honduras.

Investigators continue scrutinizing possible crash causes

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — Federal investigators say the meticuluous job of determining what caused the crash of Delta Flight 1141 still could take months as they scrutinize virtually every piece of the plane's flight control surfaces.

"We're going to have to take all these things apart and see if there are any 'witness marks' — bends, nicks, cracks and other possible problems that could lead to some sort of failure," said Bernard Loeb, deputy director of the National Transportation Safety Board's bureau of accident investigation.

The Dallas Morning News reported investigators in Washington are examining engines, fuel pumps, fuel lines and fuel-air adjusters on the Boeing 727 that crashed at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport Aug. 31, killing 14 people.

Officials close to the investigation suggest that a combination of problems may explain the crash, the newspaper reported.

Rudolf Kapustin, an aviation consultant and former NTSB investigator who led the probe into the 1985 Delta Flight 191 crash, warned that placing too much emphasis on one theory is counterproductive in the early stages of an investigation.

"The fact is that nobody — including the guys working on it — has the slightest clue at this point," Kapustin said.

One question troubling investigators involves the plane's flaps. Investigators say an improper flap setting could have prompted pilot Larry Davis to put the plane in a nose-high attitude, increasing lift and perhaps disrupting the airflow to at least one engine.

Wing flaps on the trailing edge and slats on the leading edge ususally are extended from the wings to provide even more lift on takeoff. But interviews with the three-man flight crew who survived the crash failed to establish the position of control surfaces.

If control surfaces, such as the flaps, are not in proper takeoff positions, a device called the Takeoff Warning System should sound at the moment power is increased for takeoff. The cockpit voice recorder picked up no such alarm.

Some pilots, however, argue that even if Delta Flight 1141's flaps were left in the up position, that alone might not account for the crash if the crew realized the problem in time.

If the case of an engine stall, the pilot of an aircraft in a "nose-high" attitude can attempt to land, add power or dip the nose to gain speed. Davis has told investigators he attempted to "fly out" of the problem.

Investigators have not ruled out the possibility that a "compressor stall" contributed to the crash.

Del Rio homes hit by tornado

DEL RIO (AP) — Sixty-five homes were damaged, including 15 that were destroyed, when a tornado spawned by remnants of Hurricane Gilbert swept through a northwest neighborhood Saturday evening.

Two people were treated for minor injuries and released, but scores of others spent the night with relatives or stayed in shelters set up in the city, said Police Dispatcher Officer Don Weaver.

Although Gilbert was downgraded to a tropical depression Saturday morning, it continued to be a threat as it pushed through northern Mexico affecting weather as far off as north central Texas.

Beth Taubert and her four children hid under a mattress in the bathroom when the twister touched down about 6 p.m. CDT.

"We were all praying real hard all the time," Ms. Taubert told the Del Rio News-Herald. "But the louder it got the harder we prayed." The tornado peeled the roof off every portion of her house except the bathroom, she said.

Another woman said her sliding glass door exploded behind her as she and her husband ran into their house. "I saw a black misty cloud from the east moving real fast and then I saw shingles moving in a circular direction," said Linda Dietz, 25.

"Everything started rummbling as we ran past the fireplace and then the windows started popping out," Ms. Dietz said.

A retiree said he watched the tornado from his kitchen window as he prepared his dinner, but made no attempt to flee, even when the roof of his home was ripped off.

"I've been through three wars and 9 campaigns. Nothing much excites me anymore." said Charles D. Davis, 60, a retired infantry colonel.

Flash floods threaten state

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — State officials kept a watchful vigil Sunday, but said Texas appears to have the worst of the visit from Hurricane Gilbert behind it.

Bob Gibson, controller at the state's Emergency Operating Center in Austin, said his office had no reports of flooding Sunday night but was continuing to monitor the areas where flash flood and tornado warnings were in effect.

"We're keeping an eye on great big chunks of the state right now," Gibson said Sunday night. "But we're not really getting any more additional tornadoes being reported."

Numerous tornadoes touched down in San Antonio Saturday, overturning a mobile home and killing a woman and uprooting trees and roofs at Kelly Air Force Base, homes, an apartment complex, businesses and damaging an air-conditioning system at Audie Murphy Veterans Admnistration Hospital.

Other tornadoes were reported in Del Rio, in southwest Texas on the United States-Mexico border late Saturday, but damage there was minimal, officials said.

Gibson said Sunday nigfht that his office had not learned of tornadoes in West Texas on Sunday that damaged trees, power lines and a barn, but he said his office was receiving information from the National Weather Service.

"It's been actually pretty light tonight," Gibson said. "I think we're still lucky."

State officials reported early Sunday that the Rio Grande in Terrell County in southwest Texas rose 30 feet overnight and was expected to rise even more.

Christine Holleyman, spokeswoman for the Terrell County Sheriff's department, said two farm-to-market roads in the area were closed because of rising creeks and rock slides.

"This happens all the time when it rains. We have lots of low crossings and dry creeks. It's a very common occurrence," Mrs. Holleyman said. "We haven't had any problems."

By Sunday afternoon, skies were clear and the high water had subsided, sheriff's deputy Sonny Holleyman said.

The roads were reopened and the rock slide was cleared, he added.

Hundreds of residents continued to dig out of the rubble from more than three dozen tornadoes spun off by the storm.

In northeastern Mexico, U.S. Coast Guard aircraft from New Orleans were picking up people threatened by swollen rivers.

Flash flood watches were in effect Sunday over much of north, west and central Texas, the National Weather Service reported.

Authorities in the Texas Hill Country were keeping a watchful eye on the Guadalupe River, which easily overflows its banks during rainstorms, but no flooding was reported there on Sunday.

In San Antonio, residents of apartment buildings and homes continued their cleanup effort while city and telephone crews worked Sunday to restore service.

One twister struck a lone mobile home southeast of downtown early Saturday, killing 59-year-old Emily Dickens, who was thrown about 100 feet from her bedroom.

Mrs. Dickens, whose husband, Alvin, succumbed to lung cancer three weeks, had opened up her home to her son, Clifton, and his wife, Deborah, who had lost their jobs in recent weeks and whose own mobile home and pickup truck were repossessed.

"We're all pretty much in a daze. We really don't know how to react to anything right now," Deborah Dickens said Sunday.

"We'll take one day at a time. We'll clean up and eventually we'll get our own house put up if we get some money to buy lumber and tin," she said.

Seven-year-old girl abducted block away from home

STAMFORD (AP) — Stan and Candy Clayton expected a tiny West Texas town like Stamford would be a safer environment for their three children than their home in San Diego, Calif. So, six years ago, the Claytons moved.

But now, they've learned that even a West Texas town with fewer than 10,000 residents cannot guarantee safety. Two weeks ago, the Claytons' 7-year-old daughter, Cortney, apparently was abducted as she walked a block away to get a soft drink.

"We cannot seem to get it out of our minds that the reason we left San Diego was because of child abductions and violence," Clayton told the Wichita Falls Times Record News. "We moved to Texas to get away from violence and fear of things like this."

Clayton said he gave his daughter 50 cents to get a soft drink at a neighborhood grocery store. The clerk, who knew her, rang up the sale at 8:47 p.m. A motorist saw her walking toward home at 8:53 p.m. But police said when one of the girl's older brothers looked for her at the store at 8:55 p.m., she was gone.

"We don't have any enemies or know anyone who would want to do this," Clayton said. "We have never had any problems with anyone, nothing to even suspect, but we are hoping through newspapers and television that someone who has seen something will come forward."

Officials from the Jones County Sheriff's Department and the Stamford Police Department believe the girl may have been abducted by a "suspicious-looking suspect" seen outside the store minutes before Cortney Clayton's disappearance. Police are circulating a drawing of the suspect done from witnesses' descriptions.

Meanwhile, some 200 to 300 volunteers have organized a door-to-door search through the community, stores have posted flyers with Cortney's picture and game wardens in six neighboring counties have been searching by air and land.

Rewards for information are offered by the family, friends and law enforcement agencies, officials said.

The Claytons describe Cortney as a vibrant, happy tomboyish girl who likes to ride bicycles, loves baseball, T-ball and rock-n-roll music from the '50s and '60s.

"She was not bashful and she had been warned about strangers," Mrs. Clayton said.

Bentsen says message in two races simple: Vote for me twice

Bentsen

DALLAS (AP) — Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen waved his hand and his three-helicopter entourage climbed into the sky, black against the setting sun.

On the ground, his staff waved back and the national press corps shuffled away. For that evening, vice presidential candidate Bentsen had become Texas Sen. Bentsen campaigning for re-election.

Nearly everywhere he goes in his vice presidential campaign travels, Bentsen makes time to slip away — sometimes by helicopter or private plane — to tend to his Senate campaign.

He campaigns publicly for the vice presidency. For the Senate election, he is relying on a strong organization, millions of dollars in advertising and a reputation built over three terms.

Bentsen, asked once by reporters if his dual campaigns weren't confusing to the voters of Texas, said the answer was simple. "Vote twice for Bentsen," he said.

Vice presidential campaign manager Joseph O'Neill said this awkward system is the result of Bentsen's effort to comply fully with federal election laws which have never been tested in regard to Texas' unusual provision for dual campaigns.

"This is virgin territory," O'Neill said.

"We're working very hard to see that we follow not only the letter of the law but the spirit of the law," Bentsen said in an interview.

"I leave it up to the lawyers and accountants to be damn sure we comply,' Bentsen said. "Then I don't worry about it. I go ahead and campaign."

As Michael Dukakis' running mate, Bentsen receives public funding for his vice presidential campaign. For his Senate race, the sky is the limit in fund-raising, and he's spending his millions in the state on organization and television.

One of the reasons that Bentsen is carefully dividing the two campaigns is that Bentsen's Republican Senate opponent, Rep. Beau Boulter, asked the Federal Election Commission to step in and block what he contended was an unfair advantage.

The FEC declined to act, and so did the federal courts, but the case caused Bentsen enough political grief that he bought television time in Texas to explain his reasoning to the voters.

Resigning from the Senate seat, Bentsen said, would automatically hand a six-year term to his opponent. If he ran, won, and then resigned, the voters would get to select a new senator in a special election.

Boulter has tried to ridicule the dual candidacies with his own television spot, featuring old-time cowboys trying to ride two horses at one time. So far, the polls consistently show Bentsen ahead of Boulter by a 2-to-1 margin, but Republicans say their effort has helped keep Bentsen pinned down.

Bentsen has been forced to keep separate his Senate campaign, and the $8 million it plans to raise — including putting its Austin headquarters in a building separate from the Democratic Party and the presidential campaign.

"If Bentsen were not on the ticket, we probably would have had joint operations," said O'Neill. "We now don't have that (advantage)...to avoid even the appearance of overlap."

Since his selection as the vice presidential candidate in July, Bentsen has not made a single public appearance billed as a Senate candidate.

Although legally O'Neill said there was no question Bentsen could do a Senate campaign trip, if he did, "He would be perceived as a vice presidential candidate." That might give the Republicans "an excuse to make a charge that had no foundation," he said.

"We don't expect him to do any Senate campaigning," O'Neill said.

Bentsen's campaigns guard against at least any overt cross-pollination, although the division isn't airtight. Bentsen's top national campaign aides often tag along to Senate events, and O'Neill, Bentsen's former top aide in the Senate, regularly consults with the Senate campaign as they set up the schedule.

The schedule given to the national press coyly puts those Senate fundraisers in the category of "private meetings."

Boulter makes no secret about the fact he wants to tie his campaign as closely as possible to George Bush's, to ride Bush's coattails and help Bush win Texas.

Boulter sent out a fund-raising letter saying that, while voters cannot legally give directly to Bush, they can "help win Texas for Bush and Boulter, and defeat Lloyd Bentsen by giving urgently needed dollars to my campaign for the U.S. Senate."

Jack Devore, spokesman for Bentsen's Senate campaign, says Boulter's actions illustrate the "very fine point" being pressed by the Republicans.

Houston businessmen divided over race

HOUSTON (AP) — Many major corporations in the Houston area faced with a choice between Vice President George Bush and U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen have solved the dilemma by supporting both, political insiders say.

Both Bush, the GOP presidential nominee, and Bentsen, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, have Houston ties.

Bush was in the oil business in Houston for many years and represented Houston's 7th Congressional District for two terms. Bentsen is a former Houston insurance executive and three-term Texas senator who heads the powerful Finance Committee.

"The Houston business community is torn and therefore they are giving to both," political consultant George Strong told the Houston Chronicle.

The benefits of supporting both parties, Strong said, are "first, you help someone you know personally get elected, and No. 2, you get access to them."

Two months ago, Texas Commerce Bancshares Chairman Ben Love said the political choice "will produce probably more ulcers than the plunge to $10 per barrel in the price of oil."

But as the Nov. 8 election nears, many are starting to publicly voice their support and money to the candidates.

During both the Democratic and Republican national conventions, Enron Corp. underwrote social events. This week, the energy corporation's president is helping to host a Democratic fund-raising event while the company chairman is heading a Republican gathering.

At Enron, president John Seidl is supporting the Democratic ticket of Michael Dukakis and Bentsen while chairman Kenneth Lay is giving his support to Bush and Dan Quayle.

Seidl is listed as a host of a $1,000-a-person Democratic Party fundraiser scheduled for tonight with Dukakis and Bentsen as the featured speakers.

Lay is keeping himself busy this week as Harris County chairman for Thursday's $1,000-a-person Republican fund-raiser featuring President Reagan and Bush.

Like Enron, many energy corporations, law firms, banks, investors and important individuals in Houston are split, according to politial insiders.

Like Seidl and Lay, other Houston businessmen have started taking sides.

Love has decided to support the Democratic ticket and is another host of the Democratic fund-raiser.

Oilman George Mitchell, a Bush acquaintance for 30 years who donated money to the Dukakis candidacy before Bentsen was picked, said two months ago that he might make his decision at the last minute. He's also listed as a supporter of the Democratic function.

Network says American Indians must learn cultures

ARLINGTON (AP) — American Indians who have spent years being educated in English-dominated schools have lost their cultural indentity and tribal languages. Now a Tribal Network says Indians have to regain their roots if they are going to shoot down discrimination and derrogatory stereotypes.

"Members of tribes do not know their culture or history," Frank McLemore, 43, of Dallas, told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "We were penalized for speaking our own language."

McLemore, a Cherokee and program manager for the federal government in Dallas, was among the 30 members of the Tribal American Network of Fort Worth-Dallas who attended the organization's 10th annual conference in Arlington this weekend.

McLemore said a cultural illiteracy among American Indians has led to an identity crisis among many Indians, as well as high levels of poverty, suicide and alcohol- and drug-addiction.

"We have a double-pronged challenge," McLemore said. "We have to work with our own people, and we have to work with other people."

In 1980, there were 1.4 million American Indians in the United States, according to U.S. Census figures. Some 45,000 of those were in Texas and 25,000 in North Central Texas.

The network, which includes volunteers from several tribes, addressed such issues as tribal governments' legal authority, discrimination, and the cultural education of American Indian children in mainstream America.

New dictionary may save language of Alabama tribe

DENTON, Texas (AP) — A group of linguists is working to save the language of the Alabama Indian tribe, which had no books, no grammar, no records and no dictionary.

Heather Hardy, an associate professor of English at the University of North Texas, is leading the effort concerning the East Texas tribe.

After receiving a newspaper clipping in 1980 about an Alabama tribe member who was using note cards to create a dictionary of her native language, Ms. Hardy decided to contact the woman.

"I knew not much had been done on the Alabama," she told the Dallas Times Herald. "When you've got languages in your own back yard that have hardly been described at all and are dying out, that takes priority."

The Alabama live with the Coushatta tribe on a joint reservation nestled in the Big Thicket National Preserve, 70 miles northeast of Houston.

Ms. Hardy drove to the reservation and found Cora Sylestine, a former teacher. The two women struck a bargain: Ms. Sylestine would guide Ms. Hardy through the thickets of her native language if Ms. Hardy would help her create the dictionary of her dreams.

Women in scandals spell success for magazines

Hahn

Murphree

Parkinson

Hall

Rice

CHICAGO (AP) — Fawn Hall and Donna Rice didn't. Paula Parkinson, Jessica Hahn, Rita Jenrette and Debra Murphree did.

Getting scandal-entangled women to bare all is a major coup for men's magazines, which pay hundreds of thousands of dollars to titillate.

Besides dangling six-figure fees, such magazines as Playboy and Penthouse wine and dine these formerly obscure women and offer the promise of nationwide publicity. The reason is simple: scandal sells.

"Women, or even men who are at the center of a storm, of any kind, are always best-sellers," said Penthouse publisher Bob Guccione.

When Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle was chosen as the Republican vice presidential candidate, Penthouse and Playboy rushed to resurrect features on Paula Parkinson, the comely blond lobbyist who accompanied Quayle and two other politicians on a golf outing eight years ago.

Playboy's November issue includes new coments from Parkinson, claiming Quayle propositioned her on the Florida weekend, and a nude photograph of Parkinson taken in 1980.

Penthouse's story, also for November, includes fresh remarks from a 1981 interview about an alleged dalliance with Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., as well as statements about Quayle.

"The idea behind this is to get somebody who's in the public eye...and show something about that person that you can't find any place else," said Nat Lehrman, a former Playboy publishing executive and now chairman of Columbia College's journalism school here.

Jessica Hahn, the former church secretary whose sexual encounter with Jim Bakker led to the PTL evangelist's downfall last year, got her second Playboy feature in the September issue.

Her first spread appeared in Playboy's November 1987 issue, featuring several nude photographs and Hahn's version of what happened with Bakker. The issue sold more than 5 million copies at newsstands, about 1.5 million more than usual.

Hahn contends Penthouse offered her $12 million to appear. She chose instead to tell her story to Playboy for a rumored $1 million.

"Playboy approached me and Penthouse (too) pretty much when the story broke," Hahn, 29, said in a telephone interview from Phoenix, where she's working in radio.

Penthouse, she said, "was making a lot of promises that they could not keep. The money was endless. I mean it was ridiculous."

Playboy contends Hahn and an agent first approached the magazine, which Hahn denies. Regardless of who made the first move, Playboy acknowledges she was a big catch.

"If there is another magazine out there that we feel competitive with...we try to get our offer on the table first, and I think there was probably some of that that went on with Jessica Hahn," said Jeff Cohen, managing photo editor for Playboy.

Penthouse struck it rich with its July issue, featuring the woman at the center of the scandal involving televangelist Jimmy Swaggart. The magazine includes explicit photos of Debra Murphree showing the things she contends Swaggart asked her to do in a motel room.

The Murphree issue sold out in five days, selling more than 4 million copies, double the normal newsstand sales, according to Penthouse officials.

Guccione and an attorney for Murphree declined to reveal how much she was paid, but it was rumored to be $75,000 to $100,000.

Murphree, jailed in Louisiana on an unrelated prostitution charge, was not available for comment. Her attorney Tom Weymann, explained her motivation.

"Primarily, she was trying to get out of the life that she had found herself in. There was the motivation of not only the money, but also to set the record straight of exactly what happened," he said.

Scandals, especially those involving sex, are guaranteed hits for magazines because the public wants "to see the naked woman who played Delilah to whatever Samson of the moment," said Barry Blackman, a New York photographer. Blackman's photographs of Elizabeth Ray, the non-typing secretary and ex-mistress of former Ohio Rep. Wayne Hayes, wound up in Hustler magazine.

Nude photos of Ray also appeared in Penthouse and Playboy.

But capitalizing on scandals can be tricky, said Nancie S. Martin, editor in chief of Playgirl magazine. "You have to get to people at the right time. You have to pay them a lot of money. You have to hope it's still a scandal when the magazine comes out.

"There's always the concern that it might be exploitive, that you might be taking somebody involved in a sex scandal and giving them more limelight than they deserve," she said.

Often, posing nude is a way for women linked to scandal to create or advance careers, said Martin. But why would someone like Rita Jenrette, ex-wife of former South Carolina Congressman John Jenrette, want to bare her body to millions?

"I thought it would be a hoot, a funny thing to do," said Jenrette, 38, who appeared in Playboy in April 1981 after her husband's bribery and conspiracy conviction in the FBI Abscam investigation.

"People caught in the midst of turmoil, you do a lot of uncharacteristic things," said Jenrette, now living in New York and pursuing an acting career. "I never anticipated the criticism."

She said a Washington reporter and his wife persuaded her to pose, and Playboy says it willingly agreed.

"There is a curiosity about these people that the other news media pick up. Rita Jenrette was everywhere," Cohen said. "(But) we had her story, and we had glamorous nude photographs of her."

Presidential candidates ready for debate

Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis heads South today, while Republican George Bush makes a day trip to Pennsylvania as the two candidates open a week of relatively light campaigning so they can get ready for their crucial first televised debate.

While Bush's only public appearance Sunday was to go to church in Washington, his surrogates were attacking Dukakis, with one, GOP Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, calling the Democratic presidential nominee "nuts."

Bush today was to meet with Philadelphia's Roman Catholic Archbishop Anthony Bevilaqua and retired Cardinal John Krol during a campaign swing through Pennsylvania that was bringing him back to Washington early in the afternoon.

Dukakis was flying to Little Rock, Ark., to deliver a speech before heading on to Houston. He planned to return to Boston on Tuesday after a stop in Bowling Green, Ky.

The Massachusetts governor spent last week outlining his views on foreign policy and defense issues, both of which are considered to be political weaknesses for him.

In a speech Sunday to the California Republican Convention, Gingrich accused Dukakis of being a "left-winger" who opposes weapons systems supported by Bush.

"It's not that Dukakis isn't a patriot. It's that Dukakis is nuts," Gingrich said. "His value system has no relation to reality."

Dukakis spokesman Mark Gearan responded by saying, "Americans are increasingly tiring of Gingrich's one-liners."

"His attempt with innuendo and lies and misrepresentation of the governor's position is typical of his nasty approach," Gearan said.

Bush and Dukakis both have lightened their calendars in preparation for their face-to-face meeting next Sunday night in Winston-Salem, N.C., the first of two televised debates between the presidential candidates.

Both candidates commented on the weekend's military coup in Haiti, with Bush saying "It's too early to say what happened." But he added, "We want democracy for Haiti, for the whole of the Caribbean and for the whole of Central America."

Dukakis issued a statement calling for the United States to recall its ambassador from Haiti for consultations while refusing to recognize the country's military government.

"The people of Haiti have suffered far too long under successive repressive regimes," the Dukakis statement said.

The Republican vice president, speaking to reporters after attending Sunday church services, said, "I think I've done the homework" for the debate.

"It's like a ball game, getting up for it, mentally up and physically up," Bush said.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, who lost to Bush in the race for the GOP presidential nomination, said the debate next week could cause a shift in the political landscape.

"The stakes are high. This is hard ball," Dole said in an appearance in Ohio on Sunday. "I don't worry about George Bush. The big difference is he knows what he's talking about. Now, maybe Dukakis can memorize enough to get through the debate, but he'll forget it right afterwards."

However, Dukakis was not without his defenders.

Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, took the Republicans to task for their criticism of Dukakis' veto of Massachusetts legislation that would have required teachers to lead classes in the Pledge of Allegiance.

"There is no greater phony issue that's been raised in this campaign," Mitchell said on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley." "In America, the pledge means something because we say it freely...We are not forced to do so."

Surveys show Dukakis unfavorable among men; Bush erases gender gap

WASHINGTON (AP) — Recent surveys showing that Vice President George Bush has erased a double-digit deficit and drawn even with Michael Dukakis among women voters also show deteriorating support for the Massachusetts Democrat among men.

The polls show that Dukakis' unfavorable ratings among men are now much larger than Bush's unfavorable ratings among women.

"If George Bush continues to run even with women, then he wins the election big and at the moment, he is doing extraordinarily well," said Republican consultant Doug Bailey.

"The gender gap right now is a much bigger problem for Dukakis than for Bush," he continued.

Bailey as recently as last July 7 said at a news conference sponsored by the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs that "if he (Bush) doesn't bridge the gender gap, he will not win."

Now, that's all changed and Bush "has solved the gender gap problem, although he has not closed it completely," Bailey said.

Gender gap is the term politicians use to describe the differences between the way men and women vote. It was evident in the 1980 election, when President Reagan won far more support among male voters than among female voters, according to polls. The trend repeated itself, although to a lesser degree, in Reagan's 1984 landslide re-election.

A New York Times-CBS poll released last week showed that among men, Bush held a commanding 53 percent to 37 percent lead; while among women he held a 43-41 percent lead, which statistically is a dead heat.

That's a far cry from just a few months ago, when Bush trailed Dukakis among women voters by more than 20 points and was even with Dukakis among male voters. Furthermore, a poll in July by Hamilton, Frederick and Schneiders showed that working women then preferred Dukakis by a 2-to-1 margin.

Irene Natividad, chair of the National Women's Political Caucus and a former harsh critic of Bush's sensitivity to women's issues, said the narrowing of the gender gap directly reflects positive steps that Bush and his campaign strategists have taken to court the women's vote.

"Whether it's political expediency or real commitment doesn't really matter," she said. "When you have child care as part of the political dialogue along with foreign policy, then I think all women win. This is the first time we've had such a thing happen."

Ms. Natividad said Dukakis needs to do more to stress his own commitment to issues deemed important by women — or risk seeing his remaining 50 percent female support erode further.

Bush's recent emphasis on his family, on the environment, his "kinder, gentler nation" acceptance speech, his proposal for a $1,000 child-care tax credit, calls for an increase in the minimum wage and for a parental leave program, all have helped him build support among women voters, analysts say.

Also helping have been his hiring of women for several key campaign roles and his emphasis on peace as well as economic issues, these analysts add.

"I'm not bright enough to figure out which of these is the most important. But, collectively, they have worked," said consultant Bailey.

Redesigned space shuttle like new vehicle

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Outwardly, Discovery looks the same as it did when it last flew three years ago. Beneath the surface, however, are hundreds of design changes intended to make the space shuttle a safer vehicle.

There are so many changes that Rick Hauck, who will command Discovery on the first post-Challenger flight, says it will be like testing a new vehicle. And that, he says, adds certain risks.

"We're treating it like a test flight," Hauck said. "We'll probably see some surprises, but I don't think they'll be life-threatening surprises."

Mike Lounge, one of Hauck's crewmates, said, "The worst thing you can do to an airplane is put it in a hangar for three years and make a lot of changes. When you bring that airplane back, the first thing you do is a test flight to wring out every system and find the surprises. I expect we'll see some.

"But I'm satisfied all the changes are necessary, and that we'll have a safer vehicle."

The alterations range from relatively minor, such as repositioning thermostats to keep the cabin temperature more comfortable, to a major overhaul of the solid fuel booster rocket joints that caused the destruction of Challenger and the loss of its crew of seven on Ja. 28, 1986.

"We're treating it like a test flight. We'll probably see some surprises, but I don't think they'll be life-threatening surprises."

— Rick Hauck, Discovery commander

In all, there are 56 major and more than 400 lesser changes to the booster rockets, the liquid fuel main engines, the external fuel tank and the orbiting vehicle.

Most are a result of Challenger, although some were instituted before the accident. The program to redesign all three shuttle vehicles so far has cost about $2.4 billion, NASA says.

Since the accident, every one of the shuttle's millions of parts have been reanalyzed, reappraised, tested and retested and where necessary redesigned. Additional redundancy has been added where needed to minimize risk. A separate file is kept on the history of each part.

Following the accident, the focus was on the faulty joints in the 149-foot booster rockets. Investigators said rubbery O-rings intended to seal the joints became stiffened in the cold launch day temperatures, allowing flames to escape.

Engineers added to the joints a third O-ring; new insulation; a metal lip, or capture feature, to contain gases that may leak, and heaters to protect them from cold weather.

They also redesigned the booster rocket nozzles, fuel igniter and the large bracket that attaches the rockets to the external fuel tank.

The 122-foot orbiting vehicle has undergone 210 changes, including rewiring, brake, steering and auxiliary power unit improvements, stiffening of the landing gear, strengthening of structures in the wings and engine pods and improvements in fuel disconnect lines and in the thousands of heat-absorbing thermal tiles on the surface.

There also is a new emergency escape system featuring a blowout cabin hatch and a 12-foot aluminum and steel telescoping pole so that the astronauts could slide down and then parachute to safety in case of a problem during a landing attempt while the shuttle is in gliding flight.

About 30 changes have been made to the shuttle's main engines, including strenghthening of turbopump blades and bearings and improving hydraulic actuators, temperature sensors, fuel valve housings and the main combustion chamber outlets.

The 154-foot external fuel tank, which holds 528,000 gallons of liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen for the three main engines, has had eight changes, including strengthening of a fuel line housing, use of a more reliable battery and redesign of an explosive bolt that disconnects electrical cables on the launch pad.

Fire season far from being over

Associated Press

The long-awaited autumn weather and snow is helping cool a record fire season in the northern Rockies, but officials say the worst is yet to come in hotter areas such as California.

Wildfires have burned over 4.1 million acres of forest and brush this summer in the West and Alaska, the worst fire season in 30 years, according to the Boise Interagency Fire Center, which coordinates the firefighting.

If hot, dry weather persists in California and southern Oregon, where the peak fire season is just starting, more than 5 million acres may burn this year, a survey of firefighting officials shows.

California has "critical drought conditions over most of the state," says Karen Terrill, a spokeswoman for the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection.

Conditions rival those of last year, when about 800,000 acres of California timber and brush burned in the state's worst fire season since the 1920s, she said.

A fire near Sacramento last week burned more than 52 square miles, destroying 97 homes and forcing thousands to evacuate. Firefighters said that fire was nearly contained by Wednesday, but two other blazes in northern California this weekend burned 15 homes and forced hundreds of people to evacuate.

Nine homes burned to the ground 15 miles west of Vacaville, southwest of Sacramento, and six were destroyed 20 miles east of Redding, officials said.

"The worst is still to come," Terrill said before the onslaught of those two fires.

California's fire season starts as early as April but usually peaks in September or October.

This year, "it could go well into November," Terrill warned.

In the northern Rockies, the autumn chill has taken some fury out of the area's worst recorded fire season in history. Fires have charred nearly 1.5 million acres in Yellowstone National Park and adjacent national forests in Montana, Wyoming and Idaho.

Up to 6 inches of snow fell last week in parts of Yellowstone and rain averaged about a quarter-inch in the park. Forecasters expected the same amount of snow this weekend but most of the park got only a dusting. But temperatures remained low, limiting fire activity, officials said.

Teamsters expected to strike

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — At issue was the Hollywood balance of power, and the Teamsters chief didn't mince words. Negotiations with producers yielded "the worst contract offer ever made to a union in the history of our great and prosperous business."

The letter Earl Bush sent Wednesday to his 2,200 studio drivers echoed a familiar refrain. For the second time this year, a Hollywood labor leader was telling his membership that television and movie producers were picking a fight, forcing a strike.

As scriptwriters did in March, Teamsters are expected to do later this month — walk off the job. Though the unions represent vastly different talents, their disputes share a common theme: determining the split of the entertainment industry's spoils.

While big-name studios, producers, actors and agents consolidate clout and record income, a variety of entertainment industry workers — such as writers, plasterers and screen extras, who just lost their pension plan — are being asked to make do with less, union leaders say.

"We don't have any demands," said Bush, secretary-treasurer of Teamsters Local 399. "We're trying to stop the take-aways. They're taking care of themselves awfully well. And they're talking about our demands being high."

There's no question that some Hollywood power brokers and power hitters are pocketing monumental paychecks. Last year, Disney head Michael Eisner took home at least $26 million in salary, stock options and bonuses. Actor Bruce Willis collected more than $5 million for several weeks' work on "Die Hard." And the annual incomes of any number of Hollywood hotshots easily exceed many lottery jackpots.

But producers still complain about rising costs, tougher competition and dwindling television advertising revenues.

"The urgent need to curb below-the-line (behind-the-camera) costs associated with filming motion pictures and television shows in Los Angeles...has reached crisis proportions," said J. Nicholas Counter III, president of the 217-member Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers.

U.S. considers debt pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials are considering a new proposal by Philippine Foreign Secretary Raul Manglapus aimed at resolving military bases negotiations and helping the Philippines with its $28 billion debt.

The proposal, according to Philippine sources, would include about $460 million in U.S. aid and another $100 million that would be used to buy U.S. Treasury bonds in a complex "debt swap."

Congressional sources have said U.S. negotiators in Manila offered a package totalling $489 million for fiscal 1989, but it was turned down by the Philippine panel which reportedly has been demanding more than $1 billion a year.

Manglapus said the new proposals do not represent a scaled-down demand because the two sides always have been fairly close on the amount of money the United States actually would have to appropriate. And another Philippine official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the plan would result in long-term interest savings that could make the total benefit close to the $1 billion the Philippines wants, without costing the United States so much.

Manglapus, who heads the Philippine negotiating team, told a Filipino-American group Saturday night that he was pleased with response to his proposal from members of Congress and Treasury Department officials. He said agreement could come soon after he returns to Manila early next month.

The U.S.-Philippine talks are over terms of the final two years of the agreement that allows the United States access to its two largest foreign bases, Clark Air Base and Subic Navy Base, along with smaller Philippine facilities. Separate negotiations before 1991 would have to decide the long-term future of the bases.

"I would have to say that I am much more positive," Manglapus said after a week of meetings in Washington.

The Washington Post reported on Saturday that the administration was considering a new Philippine proposal but said State Department officials were not convinced it was practical or affordable. Both Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci have said the United States will consider pulling its bases out of the Philippines if the demands are too high.

Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Asia, said Manglapus' proposal was "worthy of the most serious and sympathetic consideration," the Post reported.

Philippine officials, who asked not to be identified by name, outlined some details of the new proposal after Manglapus referred to it in his speech.

One official said it would include the issuing of U.S.-backed bonds that would be used to buy off some of the Philippine debt at the market rate, which is about 50 cents on the dollar. The plan has some similarities with that used to help ailing Mexico and Brazil.

NATION IN BRIEF

Democrats favored to retake positions

Associated Press

A former governor, the wife of another, and sons of a former senator and a former governor are on the ballots as 12 states hold elections for their top office in November.

In three of those states — Utah, West Virginia and Indiana — Democrats are favored to retake the governor's mansion from Republicans; in a fourth — North Carolina — a Democrat is giving the GOP incumbent a hard time.

Currently, 27 Democratics and 23 Republicans serve as governors. Nine incumbents — six Republicans and three Democrats — will be on the ballot. Republican Robert Orr of Indiana is barred by law from a third term; Montana Democrat Ted Schwinden and New Hampshire Republican John Sununu are retiring.

If Massachussetts' Michael Dukakis is elected president, Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy, also a Democrat, will serve out his term, which expires in 1990. In Nevada, Lt. Gov. Bob Miller will complete the two years remaining in fellow Democrat Dick Bryan's term if Bryan is elected to the U.S. Senate.

Other states electing governors this fall are Delaware, Missouri, North Dakota, Rhode Island, Vermont and Washington.

In Missouri, Democratic state Rep. Betty Hearnes, wife of former Gov. Warren Hearnes, who served in 1965-73, lags behind Republican Gov. John Ashcroft in fund raising and in polls.

Book describes meeting

WASHINGTON (AP) — A political adviser to President Reagan described him in 1984 as a candidate who had "run out of ammunition" but whose strength was that he believed he couldn't be held responsible for his own administration's record, according to a tape-recorded account reported in a new book.

The book, "Landslide," by reporters Jane Mayer of the Wall Street Journal and Doyle McManus of the Los Angeles Times, describes a meeting of three Reagan advisers on June 30, 1984, in a conference room of Reagan-Bush campaign headquarters.

"The meeting was highly confidential," the authors write. "But in this case the discussion was tape recorded, and although the participants intended that the tapes stay secret, they did not."

The authors do not say how they obtained the tapes, which they say ran for four hours.

Stuart Spencer, a veteran Reagan strategist who chaired the meeting, is quoted as saying at the outset, "The problem is, we've been talking to everybody at the White House over the past few days — and the Reagan administration fired all its bullets very early and very successfully in the first two years."

Sweeps net 870 arrests

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police swarmed through gang-infested territories and arrested nearly 900 people, half of them gang members, but street violence raged with at least two dead and eight wounded, authorities said.

Nearly 400 officers arrested more than 360 people Saturday night and early Sunday, police said. Officers brought in at least 510 people Friday night.

"Part of the purpose is the message to the gang members — the message to the community that we're here," Police Lt. Fred Nixon said Sunday. "We can show it's statistically significant also."

More than 200 people have died in gang-related killings in Los Angeles County this year.

U.N. must apply brakes on weapons

The chilling question of Iraq's reported use of poison gas against its Kurdish minority has been put to the United Nations, which is heartening as far as it goes. Whether the world body will attempt to formulate preventive action for the future is uncertain.

A strong attempt must be made, and it was good to see the United States, Great Britain, Japan and West Germany implore the United Nations to take the necessary initial action. Those nations asked Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to send an investigating team to northern Iraq to determine if Iraqi forces used gas against Kurdish guerrillas and civilians.

Reagan Administration officials said Wednesday the United States had intercepted Iraqi military communications indicating Iraq had used poison gas. The State Department called such attacks "abhorrent."

Washington lashed out at the Baghdad government, which it had no wish to alienate in the midst of Iran-Iraq peace talks. The Senate went a step further to vote strong economic sanctions against Iraq. The action followed the accusation by Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Claiborne Pell (D-R.I.) that the regime of dictator Saddam Hussein was committing "an act of genocide, a crime abhorred by civilized people everywhere and banned under international law."

Good for the Senate. Now the United Nations needs to launch a powerful effort to stop the rebirth of chemical warfare. There is no doubt that Iraq used poison gases in the war with Iran, helping Saddam Hussein to prevail with smaller forces in the eight-year, million-fatality conflict that finally has wound down.

Whether a fateful example has been set may depend on the efficacy of U.N. control efforts. Across the Mideast, fearsome new weaponry is accumulating in a rush, and gas someday could trigger a calamitous conflict. Syria, Israel's most dangerous enemy, is said to have two plants producing chemical weaponry.

Syria also is adding to its long-range missiles that can hit every city and town in Israel. Saudi Arabia goes to incredible lengths in buying even longer-range ones — the CSS-2s from the People's Republic of China that can reach southern Europe. As if this introduction of potential devastation were not enough, Britain sold the Saudis $17 billion worth of fine military wares in July. Other nations also hasten to fuel the accelerating Mideast arms race for high profit. If the region blows sky-high some day, we shall wish the United Nations had done better at applying brakes. Maybe there still is time.

Humanities concerns

The humanities, in college and out, often are considered soft courses. Parents and career counselors frequently urge students to spurn majors in literature, philosophy, history or religious studies. Majors in business, law and medicine are so much more practical, the advice goes.

The advice is taken, as Lynne Cheney, chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities, points out in her newly released report, "Humanities in America." She notes that only one in 16 students is majoring in the humanities today compared with one in six 20 years ago. One in every four students is majoring in business.

Those are troubling statistics for people who believe, as Cheney does, that the humanities enrich lives. They also are troubling for those who believe that liberal arts majors who venture into business or the professions are likely to bring qualities of judgment and perspective they might not have gained from a narrower undergraduate focus.

The statistics also remind us of the vital role the humanities play in a kaleidoscopic culture. Any culture, particularly one as dynamic and restless as this one, needs an ever-renewing acquaintance with the ideas and ideals that bind the culture together. That's what an awareness of history and philosophy, literature and languages — the humanities — can offer a people.

Ironically, the decreasing interest in the humanities as an undergraduate major may be nourishing a growing interest in humanistic learning as an adult avocation. More and more people outside the academy, Cheney maintains, are taking advantage of burgeoning opportunities to engage in literary, philosophical and historical study.

Museums, libraries, educational television, state humanities programs and college-extension offerings in the humanities are becoming what Cheney calls "parallel schools." Books that are challenging and substantive — Paul Kennedy's "The Decline and Fall of the Great Powers" and Allan Bloom's "The Closing of the American Mind," for example — now appear regularly on best-seller lists.

Cheney takes note of the fact that Americans are spending more money on cultural events than on sporting events. To some extent, that could be because dance, theater and other cultural offerings cost more these days, as cultural organizations try to make up for cuts in government funding.

Without question, however, interest has increased. Cheney mentions that, between 1957 and 1987, attendance at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., is up 660 percent. Locally, the large attendance that Balboa Park's cultural institutions attract on "free day" is but one example of a nationwide phenomenon. Increased government subsidies would allow cultural institutions to reach an even broader spectrum of Americans eager to experience this nation's rich and diverse cultural offerings.

The impression Cheney leaves with her report, and we suspect it's a valid one, is that the humanities are thriving everywhere but on campus. As student interest lags, academic overspecialization continues; there's sure to be a correlation. The challenge for Lynne Cheney and others devoted to "the pleasures of the mind" is to persuade academic humanities scholars that their work has meaning and significance to the larger community.

Cheney recalls a pertinent observation by the late Charles Frankel, himself a philosopher, a teacher and a government official in the Johnson White House: "Plato, Machiavelli, Erasmus, John Locke, Diderot, James Madison, Ralph Waldo Emerson are not remembered for being intellectual recluses."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Sept. 19, the 263rd day of 1988. There are 103 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

In 1796, President George Washington's farewell address was published. In it, the first chief executive of the United States advised: "Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all."

On this date:

In 1777, American soldiers in the Revolutionary War won the first Battle of Saratoga over the British.

In 1881, the 20th President of the United States, James A. Garfield, died of wounds inflicted by an assassin 11 weeks earlier.

Drug cartel's influences being felt

WASHINGTON — In past columns, we have turned the spotlight on the murky world of the Medellin drug cartel, which has put the government of Colombia under a state of siege. Colombia has had more than its share of heroes who have tried to defy the cocaine kingpins and have paid with their lives. At this writing, 57 judges and 250 journalists have been murdered because they got in the cartel's way.

Jack Anderson

The lucrative cocaine trade has flooded Colombia with so much money that it has overwhelmed the economy. With fists full of dollars, the drug barons have conducted a campaign of bribery and intimidation, of payoffs and violence. They have approached authorities with offers that are hard to refuse — "ploma o plato," lead or silver, a bullet or a bribe.

Many of those who dared to stand up to the cartel have been murdered in cold blood. In some cases, hit squads have wiped out entire families, even dumping out their fish bowls and stomping on their pet goldfish.

With dramatic violence, the warning has been driven home to Colombian officials and journalists. From cabinet ministers to cops on the street, some have buckled under to the drug cartel. Hundreds of judges and police officers are now taking orders from the criminals they are supposed to prosecute.

One Colombian judge, tearfully told U.S. authorities that the narco-gangsters had threatened to kill all her living predecessors and descendants.

Another judge recounted how he had turned down two bribes. Then the cartel thugs laid before him more money than he ever expected to see in a lifetime. He rejected that offer, too. The next message from the cartel was a photograph of his 9-year-old daughter, taken through the crosshairs of a gunsight as she was climbing the steps of her school. The judge resigned from the bench.

Colombian justice minister Rodrigo Bonilla fought back with uncommon courage. He was gunned down by a hit-and-run assassin who sped away on a motorcycle.

Now, this same pattern of corruption and violence is beginning to develop against the United States. The cartel is a prime suspect in the attempt to assassinate Secretary of State George Shultz by planting a bomb on the route of his motorcade in Bolivia on Aug. 8. This brazen assassination attempt amounts to a declaration of war by the Colombian drug lords. Apparently they now feel powerful enough to branch out from their campaign against the Colombian government and strike back at the United States for interfering with their operations.

The cartel, since it pays no taxes, can afford to spend millions on bribes. Already, dazzling amounts have been offered to American law enforcement officials.

One officer told us about a typical incident. A drug trafficker was stopped on the highway; a cache of cocaine and a briefcase containing $100,000 in cash were found in the car's trunk. The trafficker told the cop, "That isn't my briefcase. It must belong to you."

Gerald Arenberg, executive director of the National Association of Chiefs of Police, estimates that less than 10 percent of the nation's police can be bought. But it takes only a few corrupt lawmen and judges to corrode the system.

The cocaine cartel is passing out bribes today at the local level. Some U.S. neighborhoods are already under its control. It's just a matter of time before the cocaine kingpins — applying the methods that have forced Colombia and Panama to bend — undermine law enforcement and break down the government across the United States, unless they are checked.

That is not simply the job of the police. It is the responsibility of the people who still think cocaine is a "recreational" drug and who use it without regard to the carnage that comes with it. It is also the responsibility of people who think their lives are untouched by drugs. The Medellin cartel supplies 80 percent of the cocaine used in the United States, diverting billions of dollars out of the legitimate U.S. economy and sending execution squads to eliminate the opposition.

HODEL UNDER FIRE — White House sources have told us that President Reagan is not happy with the way the Interior Department and the National Park Service have handled the Yellowstone National Park fires this summer. Some top White House aides are even pressing Reagan to ask for the resignation of Interior Secretary Donald Hodel.

Because of a policy to let fires burn themselves out in national parks, the Yellowstone blazes scorched more than 800,000 acres. Americans saw a daily barrage of media reports on the unchecked destruction of a national treasure. The burn policy may have worked in a wet year, but was a gamble that did not payed off in a drought year.

MINI-EDITORIAL — If N.Y. Governor Mario Cuomo isn't going to run for president, he should have the courtesy to lie low during the campaign and not remind ambivalent voters of what they could have had. Instead, while the real candidates exhaust themselves trying to look like tough guys, Cuomo is running through the streets of New York chasing a suspected subway bandit. The governor saw the suspect on the run and jumped out of his car in hot pursuit. Then he had the bad taste to recount the details at a ceremony to open the state campaign headquarters of Michael Dukakis — Michael Dukakis, who does no running without his Heavy Hands weights and a Secret Service escort.

Today's young people spoiling all the fun!

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — There I stood on stage at the University of Alabama field house. There were 4,000 in attendance, mostly students.

Everybody else has been taking presidential polls, so I decided to take one for myself.

Grizzard

"How many of you support Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen?" I asked.

The Democratic ticket got maybe 10 percent of the crowd.

"And Bush and Quayle?" I went on.

Thunderous applause. Wild cheering. Whistles, and somebody got up and yelled "Roll, Tide!", Alabama's answer to "How 'Bout Them Dawgs!", "Hook 'em, Horns!" and "Let's go, Mets!"

I should have expected that. I was in a strongly conservative part of the country where anybody from Massachusetts is geographically undesirable in the first place.

Add to that the fact this individual is said to hold certain liberal views and you've got somebody about as popular as a canker sore.

What is truly amazing to me, however, as one whose collegiate years ran smack through the middle of the '60s, is how obviously conservative college students have become.

One Alabama campus leader said to me, "The faculty here, believe it or not, is more liberal than the student body."

And it's not just happening in the South. Recall the students at the University of California at Berkeley heckled Walter Mondale when he campaigned there in 1984.

It's got to be money. Students in the '60s wanted peace and love and justice.

Students in the '80s want a starting salary of $35,000, a personal home computer and car with initials for a name.

What angers me is now that I'm an adult, I don't have a lot of young people doing things that truly disgust me.

Think what kind of youth adults of the '60s had. They had hippies with long hair who wore sandals and didn't bathe.

They had rock concerts and free love and LSD and vans with peace signs painted on the sides.

An adult can get thoroughly disgusted with something like that for hours at a time.

Yes, there are still a few punk rockers around today with orange hair and earrings who dress like there's been a fire and they grabbed whatever they could out of the closet, but I expect them eventually to be wiped out by large dogs that think they are some new hybrid of cat. So how can I stir up much resentment for them.

I had looked forward to being able to say, "These young people today are going to hell in a handbasket."

Where most of today's young people are going is to find a good financial planner.

Maybe their kids will wear flowers in their hair, support liberal Democrats, and show up on the evening news burning their American Express cards.

It's what they deserve for ruining all my fun.

CHARLEY REESE

American president actually has little power

It always happens. Presidential campaign rhetoric frames the election as good versus evil, as paradise versus hell, as success versus disaster. In fact, however, our presidents have little or no control at all over many problems and potential dangers.

Charley Reese

An American president is actually one of the weakest executives, in terms of personal power, in the West. Under the parliamentary system, such as Great Britain's, the chief executive — the prime minister — becomes prime minister only if his party wins a majority in the legislative body.

Whatever British Prime Minister Maggie Thatcher wants to do, she has the votes in Parliament to do it — provided, of course, she can keep her own party members in line.

In our republican system, however, the legislature and the executive branches are separate and independent of each other. No American president can order Congress to do anything. He must rely entirely on persuasion. In the postwar era, for most of the time, Republican presidents have had to deal with congresses in which the Democrats were the majority.

This is far more inefficient but the positive side and the reason our forefathers designed it thus is that it makes it very difficult indeed for anyone to establish a dictatorship or to go too far in eroding the rights of the people. It's the famous check and balance principle.

The parliamentary system, on the other hand, comes close to providing for an elected dictator so that quite drastic changes can occur with a single election — such as going from capitalist to socialist or vice versa. Furthermore, as often happens in many countries which make it easy for political parties to be formed, the parliamentary system can end up with no one party having a clear majority and thus having to form coalition governments which are even more inefficient than our system.

No matter whom we elect as president the degree of changes he can make legally are quite limited by the Congress. As a further safeguard, we have the opportunity once in each president's four year term to throw out the entire House of Representatives and a third of the Senate.

Our Constitution indeed is a marvelous document in providing the American people with the means to control their own destiny. It is not the Constitution's fault if we choose, by acting like dumb sheep, not to exercise our rights.

But beyond the limited domestic power of a president, he has even less influence on events beyond our national boundaries. Covert action and foreign aid notwithstanding, our influence within even small countries is quite limited and within powerful countries is zip.

We can supply guns and money or withdraw guns and money but we cannot control who will use them or who will be denied them or how our aid will be used or abused. We can help persuade a Marcos to leave the Philippines but we cannot make the Aquino government efficient and honest and adept at dealing with communist guerrillas.

We have no control at all over such countries as the Soviet Union or China. They will do what their government leaders are pleased to do or feel compelled to do and they will, of course, pursue their own selfish interests as they, not we, perceive them to be.

That's why we should, during presidential elections, keep control of our expectations. It does make a difference whom we choose. That person will have choices to make and some of them could be beneficial or destructive.

On the other hand, no matter whom we elect our problems, great and small, are not going to vanish. One second after taking the oath of office, the new president will be in the same predicament as every other president has been in — an ordinary human being facing an extraordinary array of tasks and problems and armed with quite limited options and powers.

If you're looking for Heaven, you should go to church or synagogue — not to the voting booth.

Workers dig for gold in a rice field in Camarines Norte province, where officials estimate as many as 20,000 are involved in a new Filipino gold rush.

'High graders' bank on Filipino gold rush

By ROBERT H. REID

PARACALE, Philippines (AP) — Six years ago, Macario Galero made a modest living by farming coconuts and operating a small food shop. Today, he is one of the "high graders" exploiting a gold boom in this small coastal town and has moved up the ladder of affluence.

Officials estimate that as many as 20,000 people are involved in gold mining or prospecting here in Camarines Norte province. More than 100,000 others work the mines in Davao del Norte province, northern Luzon, Masbate Island and other areas of the Philippines.

Gold had been mined in Camarines Norte since before World War II, in the hills overlooking the Pacific in this town of about 25,000 about 120 miles southeast of Manila.

But in December 1952, a mine cave-in here killed 56 miners and brought a halt to large-scale mining operations. The town's source of livelihood reverted to fishing and coconuts, and many young men sought work abroad.

In the early 1980s, however, the rise in the world gold prices rekindled interest in mining and triggered a "gold rush" here and other areas of the Philippines.

"I think it was a gift from God that they found gold here," said Pepito David, the town judge. "Because otherwise, the people would be suffering. Before gold, there was nothing but fishing."

About six major mining corporations, including Benguet Consolidated Mining Corp., and Abcar-Paragon Mining Corp., operate in Paracale and nearby towns.

Officials at Abcar-Paragon, which employs about 300 people, declined to give details of their operation. But local engineers estimate the Philippine-Australian joint venture is mining about 500 tons of ore a day.

In general, refiners can extract about 4.5 grams of gold from each ton of ore, for a total daily yield from the 500 tons of about 2,250 grams, or 78,75 ounces. At current world prices, that much gold could fetch around $34,000, depending on the quality.

Mining sources believe the company's claim includes veins with an estimated richness of 14 grams per ton, making it one of the country's richest reserves.

But much of the mining here is done by "high graders" — independent prospectors who scour the riverbeds and sink deep shafts in the hills in hopes of a strike.

Although few are getting rich by world standards, most are earning more than they would by fishing or harvesting coconuts.

Galero's operation is typical of the "high graders." He owns the land and finances digging operations in return for a share of whatever the prospectors find.

Startup costs, including tools, generators, refining equipment, chemicals and food, run from $500 to $1,000, mining sources said.

Like other "high graders," Galero declined to say how much he has earned. Much of the gold is sold on the black market to avoid taxes. Some miners say they are afraid jealous rivals will jump their claims if their profits are made public.

But Galero said that in April, his crews were mining ore with a richness of 15 grams of gold per ton, a rich find. Fifteen grams would fetch about $226 at world prices.

Some engineers say small-scale "high graders" in Camarines Norte average up to one gram of gold a day.

Miners in Davao del Norte, a larger operation than those in Camarines Norte, receive as much as $225 a week, more than 10 times what a farm worker normally earns in the Philippines.

With his profits, Galero has been able to build a stone house in a neighborhood where others live in huts of coconut leaves. His home includes a color television set and a video, luxuries in this area.

"Certainly, it's meant more money for the people," said banker Frank Garcia. "We've noticed an increase in deposits, because people are directly benefited by the boom."

At one site, atop a jungle ridge south of town, about 50 miners dig at three shafts, each 50 to 100 feet deep and about five feet square.

From the base, tiny, crawl-space tunnels fan out toward hoped-for veins. Miners descend into the pits on makeshift rope pulleys, working for about an hour before returning to the surface for a respite from the heat below.

Laborers on the surface haul up the ore in large sacks, then transfer it to "milling stations," where the stones are ground into powder in gasoline- or diesel-powered cylindrical drums.

Mercury is added to the powdered ore. The gold dust then sticks to the mercury and is separated from the ground stone.

Gold mining has also spawned a number of other businesses, from vendors who sell miners soft drinks and fried bananas to jewelry smiths who buy gold from middle-men and then sell finished products as far away as Manila.

"Most of our inhabitants are engaged in small-scale mining nowadays," said Vice Mayor Edgar Dasco. "The people are employed, and the number of business establishments is increasing."

Swedish party retains its power

WORLD

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The Social Democratic party, presiding over a booming economy, fought off a challenge from the environmentalist Greens to retain its hold on a minority government in parliamentary elections.

Nearly complete results from Sunday's balloting gave the Greens a place in the 349-member Riksdag, or parliament, for the first time with 20 seats. However, the Greens were denied the key role as a legislative power broker.

Results today from all but a few mailed ballots, invalid returns or votes for splinter parties showed the Social Democrats won 156 parliament seats, or 43.6 percent — a loss of three seats from the 1985 elections.

The Communist party won 21 seats to finish fifth with 5.9 percent of the vote, a gain of two. Although there is no formal agreement, the Communists tacitly support the Social Democrats and guarantee their ability to govern.

The conservative opposition Moderates, with 66 seats, or 17.9 percent, finished a distant second.

The Liberals came in third with 44 seats, or 12.2 percent; next came the Center Party, with 42 seats, or 11.4 percent; the Communists; and the Greens, with 5.5 percent. The Christian Democrats won no seats although they got 3 percent of the vote.

The Greens, the first new party to enter parliament in 70 years, drew most of their support from non-socialist opposition parties, which suffered their worst combined defeat since World War II.

Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson, who took office after the 1986 assassination of Olof Palme, said, "We have ridden out the storm and stood steady in the wind, and we have won."

Carlsson admitted he had felt "a bit nervous" leading the Social Democrats in an election for the first time.

Moderates leader Carl Bildt claimed the outcome showed hope for the opposition and the beginning of a decline for the Social Democrats, which lost support in the big cities "where political attitudes change faster."

Pre-election polls incorrectly predicted the Communists would fail to win the 4 percent minimum for a seat in the unicameral chamber. Many people were believed to have voted for the Social Democrats to ensure the party's survival, resulting in what party leader Lars Werner called its best election in 40 years.

The entry of the Greens will have little impact on the workings of the Riksdag, but could prove disruptive in the future, some political commentators said.

Voter turnout was 86.4 percent, the lowest in 28 years.

Swedish television, broadcasting the official results, said about 2 percent, slightly more than ususal, cast blank ballots or voted for one of about 100 fringe parties as a protest vote.

According to pre-election surveys, about 10 percent of the voters made up their minds in the last few days.

The Social Democrats, architects of Sweden's welfare state, had been shaken by a series of mishaps earlier this year, including a politically risky attempt to sponsor a private investigation into Palme's unsolved murder. The popular justice minister, Anna-Greta Leijon, was forced to resign in June for overstepping her authority in the affair.

Carlsson admitted the irregular probe and reports of illegal arms sales by Swedish companies had hurt the party. "We would have done better" if not for the scandals, he said.

South Africans critical of pontiff's visit

MAPUTO, Mozambique (AP) — Pope John Paul II ended a 10-day tour of southern Africa today with a call for peace and racial justice in the region, but South African anti-apartheid leaders said he was not tough enough on Pretoria.

In a farewell speech at Maputo's airport before flying to Rome, the pontiff said southern Africa is a region "where woeful violations of human rights persist."

He said each person should enjoy "fundamental rights, without any restrictions or limitations justified by racial segregation or social discrimination."

Officials of Mozambique's Marxist government, who previously have denounced local Roman Catholic bishops for urging negotiations with guerrillas, said the pope's visit would improve church-state relations.

But activist clergymen from South Africa said the pontiff should have spoken out more forcefully against their white-minority government's policies of apartheid, under which 26 million blacks have no say in national affairs.

The pope has "given the South African government more comfort than it deserved," said the Rev. Allan Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches.

He spoke at a news conference after he and other Protestant clergy from South Africa attended a papal Mass and joined Mozambican church leaders at a meeting with John Paul.

The pontiff began his trip in Zimbabwe. He also visited Botswana, Swaziland and Lesotho and made a brief, unscheduled stop in South Africa when his plane was diverted in bad weather.

Boesak said the three-hour papal stop in Johannesburg was a propaganda coup for South African authorities, who had complained about the omission of their country from the official itinerary.

South African Foreign Minister Pik Botha greeted the pope, ordered a security force escort for a motorcade to Lesotho and later boasted about South Africa's hospitality.

"Anyone who enters into dialogue with the South African government must be aware that they are going to use you for their own purposes," said Boesak.

One of Boesak's colleagues, the Rev. Frank Chikane, said the pope had met with officials who "hurt us and cause us pain" and had been escorted by "people who torture us."

Chikane is secretary-general of the South African Council of Churches, which is leading a civil disobedience campaign challenging emergency regulations and apartheid laws.

Polish prime minister, his government resign

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Prime Minister Zbigniew Messner today announced the resignation of his government, which had been under fire for its ineffectual handling of the nation's ailing economy.

The resignations come less than a month after Poland's most serious labor unrest in seven years.

The government has been criticized as sluggish in implementing a broad economic reform plan this year and for its handling of price hikes, which have resulted in annual inflation of 60 percent.

In a speech to parliament, Messner offered a defense of his government's performance but admitted to "mishaps," implicitly acknowledging that his government had lost public confidence.

It was not announced when a new government would be named, and it was possible that Messner or some of his ministers could be reappointed by the Sejm, or parliament. Under Sejm rules, a new government need not be appointed immediately.,

In Poland, the Communist Party is the actual seat of power and appoints the government through its majority in parliament. The government is responsible for executing the goals of the party, which is led by Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski.

The party has criticized the price-hike operation because wages, under pressure from workers, were allowed to rise faster than prices, wiping out any benefits to the economy from the higher prices.

The inflation sparked a wave of strikes in April. A second wave broke out in August, and ended only when authorities and Solidarity chairman Lech Walesa agreed on entering into broad-based discussions that could include the reinstatement of the banned free trade union movement.

In his speech, Messner, the prime minister since 1985, appeared to dispute a recent emphasis on dialogue with the opposition and to make an appeal for support from hardliners within the party.

"We are paying for (the strikes) now with escalation of demands and greater chaos in the market, loss of authority of management. We again have become a symbol of anarchy in the world," Messner said.

"Political methods of solving tensions cannot mean tolerance for lawbreaking," he said.

Before Messner's speech, the Sejm, or parliament, heard a critical report from an extraordinary committee set up to monitor the government's performance in implementing economic reform.

Jaruzelski had recently distanced himself from Messner.

At a Communist Party meeting Aug. 28, during the last strike wave, he criticized the government's performance and called on parliament to decide its future at this month's meeting.

Poison gas charges stir Iraqi reaction

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — American allegations that Iraq is using outlawed chemical weapons against Kurdish rebels have touched off a wave of anti-Americanism in Iraq.

But although the conflict may damage U.S.-Iraqi relations, there appears little likelihood of a return to the bitter hostility that made Iraq a leading foe of U.S. Middle East policies in the 1970s.

The U.S. Senate on Sept. 9 accused Iraq of using poison gas in a campaign of "genocide" against its autonomy-seeking Kurdish minority.

The State Department said it had proof of Iraqi poison gas attacks, based on American examination of Kurdish refugees in Turkey. Britain also condemned Baghdad, citing "compelling evidence" provided by Washington.

Mafia suspect killed

REGGIO CALABRIA, Italy (AP) — A sniper killed a suspected Mafia member as he strolled in a prison yard, police reported. The victim was to have appeared before a judge to answer questions about a mob war in the region.

Pasquale Rocco Libri, 26, died after receiving a single shot in the face on Sunday, police said. The sniper apparently was hiding in a partially constructed building near the prison, police said, and escaped in a car.

Libri was in jail on charges of attempted homicide and membership in the 'ndrangheta, a local version of the Mafia, according to authorities. His father and uncle reportedly head a 'ndrangheta clan.

The victim, his father and uncle were indicted recently on charges of Mafia membership at the conclusion of an investigation into the 3-year-old war between organized crime gangs in Calabria, the tip of the Italian "boot."

Hirohito running fever

TOKYO (AP) — Emperor Hirohito was running a fever today for a second straight day and Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita canceled a scheduled meeting with the 87-year-old monarch, officials said.

Hirohito had a fever of about 100.4 degrees during a checkup this morning, but "he is feeling well and his appetite is normal," said an Imperial Household Agency official.

Hirohito, the world's longest reigning monarch, will stay in bed "all day," the official added, speaking on condition of anonymity.

On Sunday morning, Hirohito had a fever of 100.4 degrees that forced him to cancel a planned visit to watch a wrestling meet.

Islamic group says it will free hostage if U.S. backs uprising

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A group holding three American professors and an Indian said Sunday it will consider freeing the hostages if Washington declares support within a week for the Palestinian uprising in the Israeli-occupied lands.

The declaration, similiar to one released Thursday, came in a handwritten Arabic language statement from Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine. It was delivered to the Beirut office of a Western news agency and Beirut's independent An-Nahar newspaper.

The statement was accompanied by a photograph showing the four hostages, all bare-footed, playing cards with soft drinks on the table.

The hostages are Alann Steen, 49, a journalism instructor; Jesse Turner, 41, a visiting professor of mathmatics and computer science; Robert Polhill, 55, a lecturer in accounting; and Mithileshwar Singh, 60, a visiting professor of finance and a legal resident alien of the United States.

The kidnappers first offered to free the men in a statement released Thursday. The latest statement, like the previous one, said the hostages would be freed if the United States declares support for the Palestinian uprising that began Dec. 8.

The group is believed to be made up of Shiite Moslem zealots loyal to Iran and sympathetic to the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"This initiative still stands and we are waiting for responses in light of which we shall take the next steps required by the interests of the blessed uprising," the statement said.

"Our inclination to free the hostages is not an invitation for negotiations, but it comes within our conviction of human and ethical values," it added.

That remark appeared to be a reply to the U.S. State Department's assertion, in response to Thursday's statement, that it was unwilling to negotiate with the kidnappers.

The offer by the kidnappers has triggered speculation that they are softening their demands.

88 years after big storm, classic account gets paperback release

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — John Edward Weems can't visit Galveston without thinking of the great 1900 storm which claimed the lives of an estimated 6,000 people, making it the nation's most deadly natural disaster.

"I still look for signs of the hurricane," says Weems. "A lot are no longer around."

Weems, of Waco, heard much about the storm while growing up because his Aunt Gale was born on Sept. 8, 1900, the day the storm crashed ashore.

But not until 1956, while working at Baylor University, did Weems decide the storm was worthy of historical documentation in the form of a book.

"I was looking at the old volumes of The Galveston News in the library, looking through some of the fading pages and came across it," he said. "The few missing issues represented the Galveston storm. In the first edition after the storm, it was full of the Galveston storm. That gave me the idea the Galveston hurricane would be a good subject to handle."

After six months of research and about another six months of writing, Weems' "A Weekend In September" was published, the first of 10 books he has written.

Thirty-one years later, the book — hailed by reviewers as the ultimate example of the terror and violence a hurricane can bring — is being released for the first time in paperback by the Texas A&M University Press. It will debut Thursday, the 88th anniversary of the storm and the heart of the annual hurricane season.

Sadly, Weems believes none of the scores of people he interviewed to tell the story of the storm through eyewitnesses remains alive.

But the terror they experienced, as the wind howled and waves and storm surge toppled buildings with ease, is as vivid as they lived it 88 years ago.

"Most of them wanted to talk," Weems recalled of his 1956 research. "A few of them, very few, didn't. But 56 years after the hurricane, they still remembered the tragedies. The tragedies were still with them but enough time had passed so they could talk about them.

"I got the idea some of them might be paying respect to their dead friends and relatives by talking about them."

Galveston was Texas' largest city at the turn of the century with almost 38,000 people. The storm, first noticed in the high tides of morning, gained strength throughout the day, culminating in the darkness of night. And when the sun rose Sept. 9, nearly one-sixth of the city's residents were dead, victims of buildings toppled by winds and waves, drowned in the 15-foot storm surge, mangled by flying debris or washed out to sea.

Weems' story starts and finishes with Daisy Thorne, a young Galveston teacher whose room in an apartment building known as Lucas Terrace was the only one of 64 in her building to withstand the storm. Twenty-two people crowded inside the tiny room and lived to tell their story.

The book ends with Daisy's marriage to Dr. Joe Gilbert on Sept. 13, 1900. It was the first Galveston wedding after the storm hit, and the aisle at Grace Episcopal Church was caked with mud several inches deep.

"I don't know there was anything remarkable about her, but she let me look through many of her old letters that pertained to the hurricane and she talked to me at length about her experiences," Weems said.

Mrs. Gilbert died in the mid-1960s. Weems donated books in her memory to the University of Texas library in Austin. Her husband was the first physician at the school.

While flashing back to the worsening situation at Lucas Terrace, Weems weaves the tales of other people who survived the hurricane by huddling in a lighthouse or inside a storm-tossed ship, of clinging to wreckage or crammed inside the upper stories of their homes. Some even admitted they slept through the storm.

"I wanted to avoid all feeling of morbidity," Weems said. "Fifty-six years afterward, it was a matter of historical record. And I don't believe it's possible to forget about history."

Even now, when he visits Galveston, it's impossible to not think of the storm.

"That book always runs through my mind," Weems said. "I always think of the research I did and what happened where and how deep the water was."

He says television gives people a good idea of what a hurricane is like but the image on the screen can't duplicate the real thing. In 1961, with Hurricane Carla swirling in the Gulf of Mexico, he went to Galveston to write about the approaching storm.

"I caught a bus," he recalled. "I didn't want to bring my car down there. It wasn't that bad and it wasn't frightening. But the wind was really blowing. You had to lean against it to stand up.

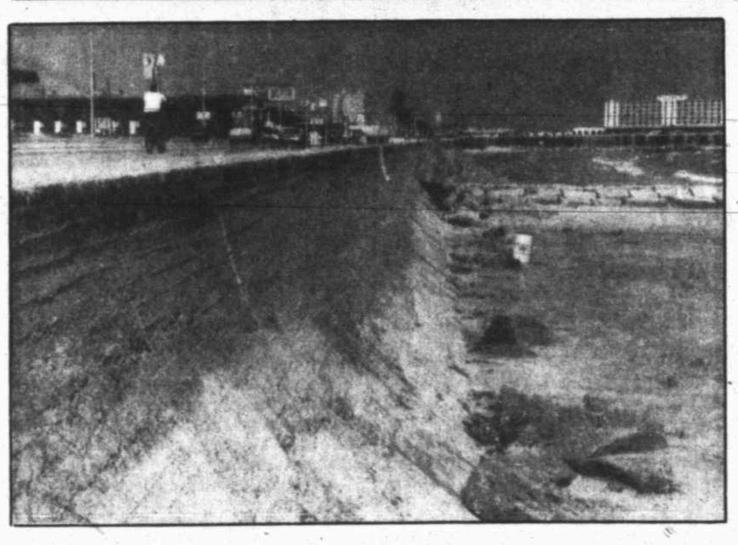
"You dont really appreciate it until you get out in the real situation. This isn't show business but the real thing."

Perhaps the most lasting monument to the 1900 storm is the Galveston seawall, a concrete embankment 17 feet above mean low tide.

Since the big storm, it has helped moderate the damage from hurricanes later this century. But Weems still does not view it as a perpetual safeguard, especially now that beachfront development in the coastal city has extended beyond the seawall.

"I've never desired to build in Galveston," he said. "But I didn't want to say too much about that to the people in 1956, especialy to the people who were helping me out.

"I think it's only a matter of time. One of those surely will come along some time and probably come in the coast the same place."



The area, above, around 25th and Beach streets in Galveston were flattened by the 1900 hurricane that hit the city. An estimated 6,000 people were killed. The seawall, left, was erected after the hurricane and is a lasting monument to the big storm.

Family tree has more law officers than some police departments

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Gladys Moryl's family tree includes more law officers than some suburban police departments.

Eleven current and former officers are related to the 82-year-old South Side woman.

"I'm proud of all of them to tell you the truth," the widow said. "Someone needs to enforce the law. It's an important job."

Three of Mrs. Moryl's four sons got jobs in law enforcement and three of her seven daughters married policemen.

"They (sons) wanted to work for the police department," she said. "It was their choice. We didn't influence them."

Four of her grandchildren have decided to follow in the footsteps of their grandfather — an Army military policeman.

"They made up their own minds," she said. "That's what they wanted to do. You let the children make their own decisions."

However, Mrs. Moryl noted her late husband, Joseph T. Moryl, made no secret of his fondness of law enforcement work.

"He used to talk about his experiences in World War I," she said. "He was gassed in Germany and recovered in France."

She said their children listened in on the wartime tales her husband told customers at the family-owned grocery store off South Hackberry. He died in 1978.

Mrs. Moryl applauded her sons' decision to pursue a career in law.

"I'm glad they decided to serve their community. Someone needs to do the job," she said.

Mrs. Moryl says the family is fortunate that none of her sons, son-in-laws, or grandsons have been seriously injured in the line of duty.

"There is danger everywhere," she said. "You can get run over by a car. You live today and are gone tomorrow."

Joseph T. Moryl Jr. — a state trooper — said his father taught his children to respect policemen during those crackerbarrel sessions.

"I grew up with policemen in the family," he said. "I've had close calls. I was shot at once when I first came on.

"You don't see too many families with 10 or 11 officers. It's kind of unusual. You'll see may be two or three brothers but that's about it."

The veteran of 21 years with the Texas Department of Public Safety said he was attracted by the job security afforded by the work.

"It's a good job," he said. "It's got security. They're not going to close down the police department or the fire department."

Helen Farley, Moryl Jr.'s sister, said another brother, Thomas J. Moryl, also wanted to join the police department.

"Tommy applied to the police department but got into the fire department first," she said. "Otherwise, he'd be a policeman now."

Mrs. Farley is the wife of retired police Sgt. Tom Farley Sr. Two of their sons opted for a career in law enforcement against their wishes.

"We wanted our boys to be attorneys," Mrs. Farley said. "But they said they couldn't represent someone who is guilty."

Donkeys gaining popularity again

FOREST CHAPEL, Texas (AP) — They've been serving man since biblical times, those flop-eared, often stubborn animals called donkeys.

But their popularity seemed to give way to other forms of transportation and animal-power, namely horses and mules. Of course, the mule was a close kin to the donkey, the result of breeding a jack, or male donkey, with a mare.

Now, donkeys and mules are again growing in popularity — as a novelty, for garden plowing, and for the increasingly-popular jumping contests at fairs, as guardians of sheep, and as sure-footed mounts for hunting and traveling in rough terrain.

"Donkeys and mules have more sense than a horse," says Al Salomon of Forest Chapel. Salomon, who with his wife, Pauline, run Chisum Optical in Paris, also raises donkeys on his 30-acre farm.

"If you've been to Colorado, you see them riding donkeys and mules around the mountains...They are a lot more docile and fun to fool with (than horses)," Salomon says.

In addition to donkeys and mules, there are "hinnies," Salomon said. Hinnies, which are not as common as mules and donkeys, are the result of cross-breeding a jenney, a female donkey sometimes referred to as a jennet, with a stallion. Hinnies are much like mules, but their ears are shorter. The animals, Salomon explains, are very durable and often used in races.

The Salomons now have seven jenneys and three colts, and Salomon wants to expand and upgrade his herd in the fall. He's hoping to improve the blood lines, adding large jenneys or a Mammoth jack, one of the bigger donkeys.

Salomon now has Cecilian, Spanish and Mammoth donkeys in his herd. The Cecilian donkeys, he says, are those with the line down their back and a line across their shoulders. It is said, he adds, that the lines on the back of the Cecilian donkeys form a cross, a cross representing that carried by Jesus at the time he was crucified.

The Mammoth donkeys are larger and do not have the cross. They're considered "draft" donkeys due to their size and power.

Donkeys generally have three colors, Salomon says, with the most prevalent being black, gray sorrel or red sorrel.

Salomon is obviously attached to his donkeys, who live on a hillside not far from his comfortable country home. There's Suzy, Sallie, Red, Rosie, Bullet, Speedy and Jessie, all vying for his attention when he opens the pasture gate.

"I'm the same way with my cats...I'd rather have some animals for friends as I had some people," he says.

The Salomons like birds too.

Last winter they were putting out 12 pounds of wild bird feed a day as their feathered friends found a virtual gold mine of food. "It costs me more to feed the birds than it did to feed a mare, two donkeys, and a mule colt," he said.

The donkeys are not the only thing that sets the ranch apart. There's the name "Oleo Ranch," followed by the much smaller letters that read "One of the Cheaper Spreads."

And there's the shop building, filled with harness and custom bridles frome the days when Salomon owned Belgian horses, a John Deere buggy dating back to the turn of the century, a "Governess Cart" much like the used by England's royal family years ago, and an old peddler's wagon that traveled up and down Denton County roads with its pots and pans dangling from each side in a noisy chorus.

A native of Dallas, Salomon bought his first donkey, "Festus," about 10 years ago while living in Denton County. Since that time both he and his wife have showed donkeys in competition and, for a time, showed giant Belgian horses at fairs across the country. They showed the grand champion stallion at the Kansas State Fair both in 1978 and 1979. The following year, Salomon had heart surgery and they sold the Belgians.

Salomon considers his donkeys a hobby.

Man returns to alma mater as music dean

By STELLA WINSETT

DENTON, Texas (AP) — Thomas Wolfe notwithstanding, you can go home again. At least you can if you're the new dean of the School of Music at the University of North Texas.

Dr. Robert L. Blocker, who was named to the UNT position in May, received his doctor of musical arts degree from the university in 1972 after earning his master's in music at UNT in 1970. Much has changed since then.

The university's School of Music now is the second largest in the nation, with internationally recognized programs. And the then-new graduate has since served as dean of music at Baylor University, dean at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and chairman at Stephen F. Austin, Brevard College in North Carolina and at Western Texas College.

But much remains the same: Blocker's identification with students and his love of his alma mater.

His memories of his graduate student days are vivid and he sees enough of himself in the students here to put himself in their place.

"If I were to greet the graduate students with tales of my time here, I would be met with the same kind of blind stares, the stare of someone thinking, 'I've got to take a practicum test in 30 minutes and this joker is going down memory lane.'"

So, Blocker's emphasis will be on dreams and plans for the future and a healthy respect for the past.

Blocker recently outlined his goals for the UNT School of Music, goals that will take the university into the 21st century.

He says he would like to help build a program at UNT that would be marked throughout the nation by its artistic and administrative excellence. He also would like to help build a program that would make an international impact on art and culture, something the school already has begun with existing or planned programs in Taiwan and the People's Republic of China.

Blocker maintains an active schedule as a concert pianist, choral director, adjudicator and lecturer — a schedule he said he will try not to neglect.

"I'm certainly going to try, because I can't do anything else, but do it," he said. "If one really loves his art, he is consumed by his art. Though the seed was planted much earlier, I first discovered I had that love when I was a student here.

"It is a way to lose oneself in a very special journey that carries a world of beauty and joy. I find (performing) compliments administrative duties."

Blocker said he selected the program purposefully, with the works representing historical moments in his life as a university student and a student of piano.

Blocker's first formal event to preside over will be the Emerald Rhapsody Ball to be held Sept. 30 in the Amon G. Carter Roundup Inn in Fort Worth.

He recognizes the importance of faculty in the curriculum planning process and remembers their central role in the life not only of the school, but of their students.

"My memories of this school are warm because of the caring faculty here," he said. "I know of many students who would not have been able to continue in school without the faculty, some actually paying tuition."

His plans and goals for the school also include scholarship endowment development and the aggressive pursuit of gifted students and the scholarships to support those students.

"We must persevere. We want to plant the seeds of the genuine love of music."

DIAMOND BESSIE

J. Parker Doelling, Diamond Bessie's owner, rides Docs Budha as the horse works a cow.

Cutting Horse Ranch Has All The Right Moves

Photos by Doug Sehres / Story by Julie Hillrichs

J. Parker Doelling arises each morning at 7 a.m. and prepares a breakfast menu for his horses, which consists of a bucket of oats and a trough of hay.

Then it's off to the corral for daily workouts, which often last until sundown.

That's not quite the lifestyle Doelling, a 27-year-old Gardendale resident, had envisioned for himself as a child dreaming of a career in professional baseball.

"Things went one way and I went the other after I met my wife," the owner and manager of the Diamond Bessie Cutting Horse Ranch said. "I was sort of left without anything to do."

Doelling credits his uncle, the late Jack Parker — a past president of the famous Sandhills Hereford and Quarter Horse Show — for steering him toward the cutting horse business.

"I got on a cutting horse one day, but I didn't know what to expect. It was just a blast so I started looking for a cutting horse of my own," he said.

More than two dozen mares and ranch horses now comprise Doelling's thriving little enterprise.

But he's placing all of his hopes on one horse — a stallion called Docs Budha — which he claims is the key to his future success as a Quarter Horse breeder and trainer.

After spending several years buying bits and pieces of the horse, Doelling acquired full-ownership of Docs Budha in 1986.

The 12-year-old stallion was a semifinalist as a three-year-old in the 1979 National Cutting Horse Association Futurity, a finalist in the 1980 NCHA Derby, a NCHA bronze and silver medalist, and was rated among the Top 10 Quarter Horses in the world in 1984.

Hispanics' goals unchanged since 1970s

By JOE OLVERA

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Raul Estrada no longer wears the Mexican serape that symbolized the Chicano Movement back in 1971.

But his goals are unchanged: he's still demanding justice for Hispanics.

Debbie Frieze Torres, a radical activist in turbulent early 1970s, is now a conservative Republican who sees her goals transcending equality for a single ethnic group: "Now, I'm concerned with do we really accept each other as humans? God accepts us, but do we accept ourselves?"

Ramon Reyes is still dedicated to educating Hispanics and to the ideal of equality, but he envisions different tools than the confrontations of the early '70s: "I believe the new movement will be more intellectual, more thought oriented, rather than physically violent, as it was in the 1970s."

Estrada, Ms. Torres, and Reyes helped form the core of the Chicano Movement in El Paso in 1971 — a movement that began with the takeover of the president's office at the university and led to increasingly violent confrontations with police.

As students battled with local riot police and chained themselves to university doors, the Chicano Movement was born — if never formally organized. Its basic goals: to increase opportunities for Hispanics, and to protest the war in Vietnam.

Seventeen years later, Estrada, Ms. Torres and Reyes agree the changes they sought have not come about. At least, not in the way they had thought or to the extent they demanded.

Estrada, a playwright and political activist, said he no longer wears serapes, but his hunger for social change has not been filled. "My clothes may be different. I'm at least 18 years older. But, I still don't see the changes in our society that I would like to see, and for which I fought.

"Politically, the Chicano still has a long way to go. We haven't reached the levels of sophistication I expected. But, that's coming. I can feel it. As long as we don't give up the fight, and as long as we continue to make demands for change, something will give.

From left, Ramon Reyes, Debbie Frieze Torres and Paul Estrada helped form the core of the Chicano Movement in El Paso in 1971, a movement that led to violent confrontations with police.

"Eventually, we will get what we desire, which is equality and the end of discrimination against Chicanos. We could also use a lot less government. It's ridiculous that we're even forced to wear seat belts in our own vehicles."

Ms. Torres, who now counsels students for the Ysleta Independent School District, said she sees Chicanos dealing with the same problems as they did then. She, however, has changed radically from her days as a student activist.

"I'm no longer the radical I was. Or, at least, my radical views now take a different slant." For example, Ms. Torres said, the way to change someone is to change their heart first. The rest will follow.

"I now consider myself a conservative Republican, which is quite a departure from my radical student days. I tended to go to the extreme left, but now, because of my life experiences, my philosophies have expanded.

"Discrimination is just a symptom of society. When I came to grips with the question of God, my whole life changed.

"I learned you can't legislate respect, but the law picks up where an individual fails," Ms. Torres said. "People who have personal relationships with God cannot be racists. That's what we need to change. We need to change people's hearts."

Reyes predicts a return to Hispanic activism, but this time with a new twist.

He envisions a day when lawyers donate services to the poor, when schoolteachers develop literacy programs on their own time, and when people cooperate in grass-roots efforts to solve their own problems.

"We need to use channels now that were not opened to us before," Reyes said. "It was necessary to confront the establishment as we did in those days. The need is still there, but the battle needs a different focus."

Lawyers told minorities underrepresented in large firms

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Hispanics and other minorities have been severely underrepresented at large law firms, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy said.

"If the promise of a society without racial barriers is to be fulfilled, it must first become a reality in our own profession," he said Friday during an address to the 13th annual Hispanic National Bar Association meeting in Albuquerque.

Kennedy said also told the group immigration law has been neglected for years because there is no money in it.

More attention has been paid to immigration law in recent years, "but the need is still there," he said.

Courts need guidance from bar associations and academics to help improve the situation, Kennedy said.

Kennedy, who praised the association for its goals, urged members to consider working toward a dialogue between legal professionals in the United States and Latin American countries.

Kennedy said an extensive dialogue exists among judges, lawyers and legal scholars in Europe and the United States. Kennedy helped teach a course in Europe on human rights and fundamental liberties this summer in just such a dialogue.

But Kennedy, who was sworn in as a Supreme Court justice Feb. 18, 1988, said he does not believe such a full effort exists on a north-south line.

Michael Martinez, outgoing president of the association, said Kennedy's speech addressed many of the goals of equality espoused by the group. Martinez, a Utah attorney, said Kennedy was made an honorary member of the association.

Kennedy was in private practice from 1963 to 1975, part of the time as a partner in what he called a medium-sized firm in Sacramento, Calif.

He was a federal appellate judge for 12 years after leaving private practice. He also served as a professor of constitutional law at the University of the Pacific's McGeorge School of Law from 1965 to 1988.

He replaced Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr., who retired from the Supreme Court last year. Kennedy was President Reagan's third choice to fill the vacancy after the Senate rejected Robert Bork and Douglas Ginsburg withdrew after admitting to marijuana use.

Kennedy praised the legal profession in general.

"The legal profession makes a great contribution when it preserves the aspirations and hopes and dreams of people who come to the lawyers' offices," he said.

Kennedy also said the words that adorn the Supreme Court building in Washington, D.C., "Equal Justice Under Law," must be remembered.

"It is unimpeachable as a maxim," he said.

Rules and laws that initially appear to treat all equally sometimes turn out not to, Kennedy said.

Whooping cranes flock reaches 200 this year

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — The world's whooping crane population, down to 16 in 1941, probably will exceed 200 this winter, perhaps the highest number of the regal white birds this century.

"They have taken a nice jump in the last few years," said James Lewis, whooping crane coordinator for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Albuquerque. "We have to give nature an awful lot of credit for that.

"This is our best year since probably early this century or late last century. We're not sure really. We didn't have good figures back then, but I'd say it's probably the best since early this century."

Lewis said he expects about 145 cranes from Canada at their winter grounds at the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge on Texas' Gulf Coast.

A flock of 18 birds from Grays Lake National Wildlife Refuge in southeastern Idaho is expected at its winter grounds primarily along the central Rio Grande Valley in New Mexico, Lewis said.

The Grays Lake flock was started in 1975 in an attempt to create a second whooping crane flock in case disaster should befall the Canadian flock.

For more than a decade, biologists have been removing eggs from whooping crane nests in the Canadian flock and placing them in sandhill crane nests at the Idaho refuge to boost the number of whooping cranes there.

The adopted whooping cranes are raised by their sandhill foster parents and travel with the sandhill cranes 750 miles to their winter grounds in New Mexico.

A captive flock of 47 cranes is at the Patuxent Wildlife Research Center at Laurel, Md.; another whooping crane lives at the International Crane Foundation at Baraboo, Wis., and a single whooping crane lives in a zoo in San Antonio, Texas, Lewis said.

The long-necked whooping cranes, protected by the federal Endangered Species Act, are white with black wing tips, typically stand about 5 feet and can have a 7½-foot wingspan.

In autumn, the largest flock flies 2,500 miles to Aransas from its summer nesting grounds at Wood Buffalo National Park in Canada's Northwest Territory.

"In Canada, it's been a good year," Lewis said. "They had 20 to 22 chicks and banded 17 of them in a one-day operation."

Wood Buffalo had plenty of water, which could make a prime nesting season in 1989, he said.

When there's water, there's plenty of food such as frogs, crayfish, aquatic insects and tubors for the whooping cranes, Lewis said.

Police investigate stabbings

From Staff Reports

Midland police today continued their investigation into two separate stabbings Saturday that left two men injured.

Johnny Vela, 21, 1700 S. Loraine St., was listed in satisfactory condition today at Midland Memorial Hospital, spokeswoman Sue Ristom said. He was stabbed several times when a fight broke out early Saturday outside Red's Drive-Inn, 1807 E. Front St., according to a police report.

At least one witness told police Vela was attacked by as many as six men at the establishment, and at least one of the men stabbed Vela four times. Police were unable to interview the victim, the report said.

Police have released no descriptions of suspects in that case.

Lupe Rodriguez, 19, 703 S. Fort Worth St., was listed in stable condition today at MMH, Ms. Ristom said. He was injured at about 11:15 p.m. Saturday in the parking lot of the Crown Royal Club, 1110 E. Scharbauer Dr, police said.

Investigators said Rodriguez and another man had a "short confrontation" inside the club, and when the victim walked outside he was attacked. He was stabbed several times in the back and was hit with a chain, the report said.

One suspect was described as a Hispanic man, 5 feet 7 inches tall, weighing about 160 pounds. The other man was described as Hispanic, 5 feet 8 inches tall with a thin build, police said.

MC offers freelancing class

From Staff Reports

Freelance writer Mary Frances Beverley will teach a Midland College Continuing Education class, entitled How to Sell What You Write, beginning Thursday.

The class will meet from 7 to 10 p.m. Thursdays through Oct. 27 in the Allison Fine Arts Building.

Ms. Beverley will cover such topics as thinking like a writer, writing query letters, finding the right markets, perfecting manuscripts, getting books published, networking and coping with rejection.

She has been publishing her work for more than 30 years in such publications as Texas Highways, New Mexico magazine, Southwest Airlines Spirit, the Dallas Morning News, Houston Chronicle, Fort Worth Star-Telegram, Toronto Globe and Mail, City Life and Business Journal of the Permian Basin. Her story on the rescue of Jessica McClure was the January cover story for Emergency magazine. She recently contributed to the 1989 edition of Fodor's guide to Texas.

Her guidebook to 100 Texas homeowned restaurants, Great Hometown Restaurants of Texas, was published in 1984, and her latest book, Cowbells and Coffins: The Old General Store, won first place for nonfiction in the recent Texas Press Women Communications Contest.

Ms. Beverley taught English and speech for 23 years in Fort Worth and Midland.

Registration for the course is at the Midland College Administration Building in the office of Continuing Education.

Teen-agers die in car accident

MEDINA (AP) — Two teen-agers were killed and one was injured Saturday when their car missed a curve and ran off the road into rain-swollen Medina River, authorities said.

The driver of the car, Man Pham, 17, and Vinh Duon, 14, both of Houston were trapped inside the vehicle and were pronounced dead at the scene, according to a report by Department of Public Safety Trooper Nolan Metz.

The accident occurred about 6:20 a.m. on state Highway 16 about 4.4 miles north of Medina, officials said.

Duc Truon, 15, of Houston was injured and taken to Sid Peterson Hospital in Kerrville, authorities said.

HORSES

Docs Budha's life-time earnings total $70,000 to date, Doelling said.

"I'd like to be a world contender every year because I think my horses are good enough," said Doelling, who travels across the Southwestern United States to enter his stock in cutting horse shows.

"But that's not the most important part of it," he said. "I'm also in the business to make a contribution."

Cowhands use quarter horses for cutting (sorting out) cattle from a herd and for other ranch work. They respond instantly to the slightest shift of the cowhand's weight or movement of reins.

Though business is tough at the moment, Doelling said he's had no trouble making a name for himself or his stock.

For those who aspire to breed and train cutting horses for a living, Doelling has one piece of advise: "You need to make sure that this is what you want to do because it is a long-term investment," he said.

"Hopefully, you'll find someone who's honest and who will take their time to help you make the correct investment so you can support yourself."

Writer gives insights to pregnancies gone awry

By SHEILA SOBELL MORAMARCO
Copley News Service

It was the first session of a class I was teaching on breaking into free-lance magazine writing.

I began as I normally do, going around the room, asking students why they had decided to take the class and what they hoped to achieve as a result. The answers were pretty much what I expected of would-be writers.

Except for a woman I'll call Janet. She was a handsome Chicana in her mid-30s who spoke in a husky voice tinged with the effort of holding back tears.

"A year ago I had a stillbirth," she said, crossing and uncrossing her hands to keep from crying. "I haven't been able to get myself back together, even though I'm a social worker.

"I thought perhaps that writing about what happened to my husband and me after our baby was born might help me get through the grieving process and maybe even help some other couples as well. That's why I've come to the workshop."

Janet never did write that article on her lost pregnancy, though more than a year has passed since we first met. But the memory of her anguish has stayed with me, so today I am writing the story that Janet never managed to tell.

ACCORDING TO the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, almost 600,000 women like Janet lose children every year through miscarriages, stillbirths or deaths during the first weeks after birth.

But other experts like Bonnie Gradstein, M.P.H., co-author of "Surviving Pregnancy Loss" estimate the figures to be substantially higher with about one in four pregnancies ending in miscarriage and one in 100 resulting in stillbirth.

The disparity in figures is probably the result of difficulties in accurately reporting miscarriages, since many occur so early that a woman may not even realize she is pregnant.

Numbers aside, unless women have had consistent trouble carrying their babies, few actually consider the possibility their pregnancy might have other than a happy ending. The shock and grief of such an event are complicated by confusion over why the pregnancy went awry, feelings of embarrassment over an unwillingness to be around other expectant mothers and a feeling that no one else understands the loss.

Sometimes, even those closest to the woman herself are unable to really respond appropriately to her loss, including her husband.

Perhaps the miscarriage occurred early in the pregnancy before it was actually confirmed by a physician, though the woman herself suspected all along that she was with child. While her condition was very real to her because of the changes in her body she alone may have recognized, others may have difficulty understanding the dimensions of her grief over a pregnancy barely begun.

SOME EXPERTS, like Gradstein and co-author Rochelle Friedman, M.D., believe that even a man who may share his wife's desire for a child may not feel the immediacy or reality of a pregnancy since it is not part of his physical self.

Indeed, for some men, relating to becoming a father is impossible until the child is actually born.

"Consequently, when the pregnancy is lost in the early months or even later, as with a stillbirth, the father may not yet have formed an attachment to his child, and so may not mourn its passing as intensely," they explain.

Of course, the experience is different for every man. Whatever his first reaction to the news, it is certainly true that too often his feelings are ignored in the rush to console the mother. One of the sad things for fathers is when people ask how the baby's mother is doing because they realize how great a loss it is to her, but they forget that he is hurting, too.

BECAUSE THERE are no shared memories of the baby to cherish, the whole experience often has an air of unreality to it. Instead of uniting husband and wife, their loss and the different ways they express their grief, plus the added difficulty of coping with the reactions of friends and family can devastate a marriage.

"There is a great deal of stress on a couple when such a tragedy occurs," says Ann Nickel, a mother who 14 years ago lost her second child shortly after birth. "Each tends to express pain differently. I was at home with a young baby, having expected another, and having to cope with all the reminders of that loss. My husband, on the other hand, went back to work and had a routine to get caught up in.

"But when you love someone, you believe you can help him through the grief process, but that's not always true when both of you are really hurting.

"For example, you may want to talk about the baby, but at that moment, your husband may be feeling 'up' and may not want to talk. That can hurt because you feel cut off.

"What you really need is someone else to share your feelings with so you don't have to depend on each other."

Few people know how to help the grieving couple; in fact, most friends and even the medical staff at the hospital avoid the subject entirely.

The admonition, "You are still young enough to have another baby," is the way many health professionals deal with women who have miscarried, experienced a medical abortion or stillbirth. A response like that demeans the woman's grief and makes the recovery process more difficult.

HOSPITALS ARE often insensitive enough to put these women in the same room or ward as mothers who have just successfully delivered a baby.

"I was in a room with a mother who had a healthy baby and it was more than I could take," Nickel remembers. "I felt like an aberration; the staff was very awkward with the situation, particularly because there was, at first, lots of confusion about our son's diagnosis."

But there are signs that this ineptness is changing. Recently, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists sponsored a symposium for physicians on a new way of working with parents who experience a lost pregnancy.

Of course, there is no easy, surefire guide to help ease the transition from grief to recovery, but experts who deal with pregnancy loss point out that one of the biggest problems couples must handle is the feeling they inadvertently caused the pregnancy to fail.

Most have misconceptions about the cause of miscarriage, for example. They believe, incorrectly, that failure to carry the baby to term will affect future ability to bear a child.

Nor are miscarriages a woman's fault. They are not caused by falling, traveling, cleaning house or having intercourse. Instead, most miscarriages occur during the first three months of pregnancy and are due, in the majority, to an abnormality in the chromosomes of the fertilized egg. Hence, the old wives' tale that "it was a bad egg" is often true.

Probably one of the most important steps toward recovery is to join a support group for parents who have faced similar experiences, such as SHARE. (Write SHARE, c/o Southern California Pregnancy and Infant Loss Center, 5505 E. Carson St., Suite 215, Lakewood, CA 90713.) They have nationwide chapters.

These groups provide an opportunity for parents to meet with other couples who have had similar experiences, sponsor films, lectures and lending libraries to help families survive a pregnancy gone awry.

Wanted: Someone to love them

AP Laserphoto

Ed Belling, an unmarried box-office clerk, is one of several 60-minute parents who volunteer their time and love to help care for infants forced to live in sterile hospital conditions.

NEW YORK (AP) — The infant gingerly reaches for Ed Belling's mustache. Their eyes meet and a big baby grin spreads across the 2-month-old's face.

The boy's teen-age parents, homeless and drug addicted, aren't there to capture the moment. But Belling is.

He is one of a growing number of 60-minute dads and moms. They give their time and love to help cuddle and care for the city's small army of boarder babies — infants forced to live in sterile hospital settings.

Looking around the crowded nursery at St. Luke's Hospital in Manhattan, Belling, an unmarried box-office clerk, prefers to dwell on the positive: "What I've done is given a tiny baby some nourishment, some comfort, even if it is only for an hour."

The babies wind up in hospitals for various reasons. Some have been abandoned or have parents who can't afford to take care of them. Most have parents who "aren't fit to take care of them," usually addicts, says Anne Ormsby of the city's Human Resources Administration, which oversees the boarder baby program.

THERE ARE about 300 such infants in the city, most of them black or Hispanic; children who, at one point, spent as much as three months lying in steel-sided cribs and plastic bassinets, waiting to be put in foster homes.

Reforms in the system have since helped reduce that wait to an average of five days for healthy infants. But those with special needs can stay as long as eight months, says Carolyn Yordan, of the Greater New York Hospital Association, which represents 70 hospitals.

Boarder babies are fed and changed at regular intervals by already overburdened staff nurses.

But what about love?

That's where people like Belling come in. They're part of St. Luke's-Roosevelt Medical Center's volunteer program to give the infants the human touch they crave.

Nine women and eight men donate an hour each week to care for the hospital's boarder babies.

"Before the volunteers came up to hold the babies in the nursery, the babies were not reactive to anything," said Virginia Crosby, director of volunteers at the medical center. "They would just lie there.

"The staff would go in and feed them when they could. The babies didn't even react to sound after a while.

"Once the volunteers started, it was totally different," Ms. Crosby said. "They began to react to the love and you could see a real difference."

IT WAS there in the face of the month-old boy Loretta Donato gently rocked in a dilapidated rocking chair inside St. Luke's boarder baby nursery, a small, gray-walled room that would be cheerless if not for the efforts of the staff nurses who used their own money to decorate it.

Eight tiny "cribs" — actually, miniature hospital beds, their iron sides disguised with white paint and brightened with colorful mobiles — dominate the room. The desolate hospital walls are masked with a wallpaper border of skating bunnies.

The "Alice in Wonderland" curtains remind Ms. Donato of the story of Alice's tumble down the rabbit hole, and she tells it to the baby content in her lap.

Across the room, Ian McCart, who like Belling is single, expertly changes a 2-week-old girl's diaper.

McCart, a Manhattan banker who lives in Westchester County, went to the hospital 18 months ago to volunteer to help AIDS patients and met Ms. Crosby.

One day, she coaxed him into going upstairs to look at the babies. "I was hooked," he said.

NOW, EVERY Thursday after work, he takes care of AIDS patients for an hour and then goes up to the nursery.

"I just love to sit quietly with the child and play (tape-recorded) classical music," McCart said. "It's the first peace I have all day long."

For Mel Heiko, a 65-year-old lawyer with two grown daughters and a 9-month-old grandson, the volunteer program is a second chance to experience fatherhood.

When his own children were young, he said, "I was too busy trying to carve out a career."

"Sometimes you sit there and wonder what's going to happen to them," said the 41-year-old Ms. Donato, a married advertising executive who would like to have children.

"I often sit there and create whole futures for them," she said. "I like to think positive things. Maybe in some small way it will rub off."

Good health prior to pregnancy is important

By JANE E. BRODY
New York Times News Service

Citing grim national statistics on prematurity and neonatal death, American obstetricians are trying a new approach to producing healthy babies: to improve the health of future mothers even before they become pregnant.

Recognizing that conscientious prenatal care often is not enough to assure that a pregnancy will have a good outcome, the March of Dimes, among others, is now stressing the need for preconception care.

The goal is to have women in top shape before they conceive, and to prevent harmful exposures during the first weeks of pregnancy so that babies will have the best possible chance of being born full term, full size and healthy.

Of the nearly 4 million babies born annually in this country, about 1 percent die in their first year, with more than two-thirds of those dying in the first month. They die primarily because they were born too early or too small.

While other industrialized countries have dramatically reduced their infant mortality rates in recent decades, the American improvement has been slight, despite significant technical advances in obstetrics and perinatal care.

The nation's infant mortality rate, which once ranked 6th out of 21 developed countries, is now at least 17th.

LACK OF adequate prenatal care is clearly a factor.

"We are the only industrialized country that doesn't guarantee access to prenatal care for every pregnant woman," said Dr. Joyce Thompson, director of the nurse-midwifery program at the University of Pennsylvania, at a recent seminar sponsored by the March of Dimes.

Proper prenatal care is unquestionably highly effective in preventing the birth of babies too small to survive.

In a special program in California that brought comprehensive prenatal care to 5,000 women living in medically under-served areas, 4.7 percent of the participants had babies with a low birthweight, compared with a rate of 7.1 percent for women not in the program.

In the South Bronx in 1976, a prenatal care program for Hispanic and black teen-agers cut the incidence of low birthweight to 6.3 percent, from 18.1 percent in just one year.

But it is also becoming increasingly apparent that prenatal care is not enough.

Too many women start their pregnancies with one or more strikes against them.

They may be poorly nourished, too thin or too fat.

They may have hidden infections.

They may take drugs (recreational or medicinal), smoke cigarettes or drink a lot of alcohol. Or they may be exposed to harmful substances at work.

AND IN the first weeks following conception, too many women encounter factors that could compromise the well-being of an unborn child even before their first prenatal visit.

Dr. Irwin R. Merkatz, head of obstetrics at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine and Bronx Municipal Hospital Center, said at a recent seminar that with modern methods of birth control, "it's now a matter of choice and planning when a couple should undertake a pregnancy."

He said that in addition to the usual factors, like career and financial considerations, couples trying to determine when to have a baby should also consider medical and lifestyle factors.

Of primary concern before conception are these:

MATERNAL AGE

From a physiological viewpoint, the ideal time for a woman to have a baby is between the ages of 20 and 30, when her body is physically mature, her circulatory system is most responsive and her chances of producing a genetically abnormal child are low.

But social, economic and career considerations may necessitate a delay in pregnancy until the mid-30s or later.

Merkatz said that if such a delay results in two parents who are ready, willing and able to assume responsibility for producing a healthy child, the outcome can be better, not worse.

"Almost all pregnancies among women aged 35 and older are successful," he noted.

"Three-fourths of the genetically abnormal babies are born to younger women, because these are the women who have most of the babies."

Nearly one-third of pregnancies end in miscarriages

A study in The New England Journal of Medicine reported that 31 percent of all "implanting" embryos miscarry, many times even before the woman realizes that she is pregnant.

An estimated one in four women realizes that she has had at least one miscarriage.

Births to teen mothers are dropping

The number of girls having babies while in their teens is decreasing. Several factors, including advances in birth control, availability of abortions, sex education classes in schools and increased abstinence during the era of AIDS are believed to be contributing factors to the decrease.

STRESS AND ANXIETY

There is increasing evidence that emotional stress constricts the blood supply to the placenta and uterus.

Thus, a woman whose job or life circumstances places her under excessive stress would be wise to delay pregnancy until she can reduce that stress, perhaps by modifying her professional responsibilities or by establishing a more effective support system at home.

Thompson emphasized that pregnancy is a two-person job, and the responsibilities should be shared by the woman and her partner.

"Social support is beginning to be seen as an important predictor of a good pregnancy outcome," she said.

INFECTIONS

Obstetricians at New York Hospital reported in the May issue of Obstetrics and Gynecology that women who had a history of pelvic inflammatory disease or who had used an intrauterine device (which increases the likelihood of a pelvic infection) were more likely to give birth prematurely.

Also increasing the risk of prematurity was a history of multiple sex partners, which in turn increases the likelihood of venereal infections.

Sexual activity during pregnancy did not cause premature births, but sexually active pregnant women who had evidence of bacterial infections in the genital tract (presumably transmitted by a sexual partner) were at greater risk of delivering prematurely.

Two infectious diseases, rubella and toxoplasmosis, can cause serious birth defects if a woman becomes infected during pregnancy.

Women can be tested for susceptibility before becoming pregnant.

If found to have no protection against rubella, women should be immunized and advised to wait three months before trying to conceive.

If women are found to be susceptible to toxoplasmosis (transmitted by cat feces and by eating raw meat), they should avoid all contact with cat feces and potentially contaminated soil and warned not to eat raw meat during pregnancy.

Women who may be exposed at work to cytomegalovirus or hepatitis B should be told how to avoid infection and, in the case of hepatitis, they can be vaccinated before becoming pregnant.

CHRONIC ILLNESS

Health problems like diabetes, hypertension, thyroid disease and epilepsy can compromise a woman's chances of having a healthy, full-term baby.

These chances are highest if the woman receives expert medical care both before and throughout her pregnancy.

In some cases, medications may require adjustments, and careful monitoring may be needed to assure a healthy pregnancy.

NUTRITION

Poor nutrition before pregnancy, as well as during pregnancy, can impair fetal growth and result in infants that are smaller than normal at birth.

Although the fetus usually takes what it needs at the expense of the mother, the protection is not perfect.

Women with poor intakes of iron, zinc, calcium or protein would be wise to increase their consumption of foods rich in these nutrients before pregnancy.

The March of Dimes suggests starting prenatal vitamin-mineral supplements (but discontinuing all megadoses) as soon as a woman plans to become pregnant.

In addition, women who are significantly underweight or overweight should try to achieve a more ideal weight before starting a pregnancy.

SUBSTANCE ABUSE

Abuse of any substance like drugs, alcohol, caffeine or cigarettes can be hazardous to an unborn child, resulting in birth defects as well as premature birth and small birthweight.

The March of Dimes strongly urges that before becoming pregnant, women discontinue all tobacco, alcohol, non-essential drugs and large amounts of caffeine (more than three cups daily of strong coffee or the equivalent).

Merkatz said that while a pregnant woman need not worry about an occasional glass of wine or small amount of caffeine, excess use can be harmful.

Merkatz emphasized that both the woman and her partner should be evaluated at the preconception visit, which can be conducted by an obstetrician, nurse-midwife or family physician.

The examination should include a thorough evaluation of both partners' health and health behavior, including diet, exercise, stress, use of cigarettes, alcohol and recreational drugs.

The doctor should also analyze factors that could result in a risky pregnancy, such as family and personal medical history, menstrual and reproductive history, use of prescription or over-the-counter medications and the social and emotional environment.

The visit should include a complete physical exam, and laboratory tests for anemia, sexually transmitted diseases (including syphilis and chlamydia) and susceptibility to rubella and toxoplasmosis.

If factors are found that could impair a healthy pregnancy, the woman should be counseled to modify them before she conceives.

For example, she should consider entering a stop-smoking or drug rehabilitation program, or obtaining dietary guidance.

THE FALLOPIAN TUBES

WHAT: The Italian anatomist, Dr. Gabriello Falloppio, first described these tubes in the female reproductive system.

WHERE: The two slender tubes connect the left and right ovaries with the upper part of the uterus, or womb, which is located in a woman's lower abdomen.

FUNCTION: Fallopian tubes carry ova, or eggs, from the ovaries where they are produced to the uterus, where they will either be sloughed off during menstruation or fertilized.

At times, an ovum may become abnormally deposited and fertilized in a fallopian tube instead of in the uterus. This results in an ectopic pregnancy, which can be life-threatening and must be surgically terminated.

Also, when a woman has a tubal ligation (a method of sterilization), it means her fallopian tubes have been tied or severed to prevent ova from traveling to the uterus.

Infant, maternal survival rates not being met

By ROBERT BYRD

ATLANTA (AP) — The nation's infants and mothers will not have the survival rates in 1990 that health officials hoped for a decade ago, according to a new report from the Centers for Disease Control.

Of the 13 top-priority goals concerning pregnancy and infant health in the government's 1990 health objectives for the nation, only three are likely to be met, the CDC said Thursday.

"It's certainly sobering and concerning," said Dr. Ann Koontz, a specialist with the Health Resources and Services Administration in Rockville, Md. "This indicates that we have some significant problems relating to maternal and infant health."

The CDC, using National Center for Health Statistics data, projects that the nation's infant mortality rate — infants dying before age 1 — will be 9.1 per 1,000 live births.

That's a drop from the 10.6 rate in 1985, but still short of the 9.0 rate in the 1990 objectives, which were published in 1979.

Based on earlier data from 1970-81, health officials had projected a 1990 infant mortality rate of 7.8, but "the decline in the infant mortality rate has slowed," the CDC said.

The reasons, Ms. Koontz said, are not known for certain: "It's a very complex field. We'd all like to see improvements, but there's not been a simple solution."

Another objective was that no racial or ethnic group should have an infant mortality rate worse than 12 per 1,000. Among black Americans, the rate stood at 18.2 in 1985 and is projected to decline only to 15.9 by 1990, the CDC said.

The infant mortality rate among whites stood at 9.3 per 1,000 in 1985 and is projected to fall to 7.9 by 1990, the CDC said.

Economics may play a part in the discrepancy between the mortality rates for blacks and whites. "We know that poor economic circumstances are distributed disproportionately among minority populations," Ms. Koontz said.

But the complete reason is not clear, she said, noting that previous studies have shown that among college-educated mothers, black infants still have nearly twice the mortality rate of comparable white infants.

Among the other goals not likely to be met:

■ No county, racial or ethnic group should have a maternal death rate above five per 100,000 live births. The 1990 national rate is projected at 7.0, with black mothers at 20.5.

■ No more than 5 percent of babies should be born under 5.5 pounds. The 1990 projection: 6.7 percent.

■ No more than 10 percent of pregnant women in any county, racial or ethnic group should go without prenatal care in the first three months of pregnancy. The 1990 national projection: 23.6 percent, 38.5 percent for blacks.

One of the goals that is likely to be met concerns the nation's neonatal mortality rate — babies dying in the first 28 days of life. That rate is projected to be 5.7 per 1,000 in 1990, below the target of 6.5.

Two other goals are considered likely to be met: having most babies leave the hospital in car safety seats, and putting into place programs to screen newborns for metabolic disorders.

A 1987 survey found safety-seat use at hospitals of 75 percent, and all states now have such metabolic screening programs, the CDC said.

Readers clash on how to care for old, sick cats

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I couldn't believe your telling "C.B. in Phoenix" to have Brandy and Spice, his two cats, put to sleep just because they were old and sick.

If they were too much trouble, surely he could find another home for them. Lots of people love animals enough to care for them even when they are old and sick.

If you approve of "putting cats to sleep," how about people? When they get old and sick, maybe you would like to solve the problem by putting them to sleep, too.

I thought you were an animal lover, Abby. I was very disappointed in your answer. — OHIO FARM GIRL

DEAR FARM GIRL: Sorry I disappointed you. Please read on:

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to respond to "C.B. in Phoenix," who faced the dilemma about what to do with Brandy and Spice, the two cats who became old and sick. Find a new home for them? Or put them to sleep?

First, cats have a strong sense of place. Having lived for so long with you, they would very probably be disoriented and unhappy if they were moved into a strange environment at their age.

Second, if you, who loves them, can't cope with their illness, what makes you think someone else can? If someone does impulsively take them, then finds the task of caring for them impossible — what then? (I have learned from sad experience that there are a lot of people who simply put old cats out, even though the cats have lost what ability they had to fend for themselves.)

The thought of "putting them to sleep" may be painful, but having done it once, I would not hesitate to do it again. Our big cat, Riley, was not only old, he was dying of leukemia. We cared for him lovingly, but when his pain became too intense, we took him to the vet who had cared for him for years. I held Riley in my arms so he would not be upset or frightened (never mind how hard I was crying at the time) while the doctor gently administered the fatal injection.

Riley laid his little head against my hand, and slowly stopped breathing. There was not a twitch or quiver. He was neither hurt nor frightened.

Of course, we missed our old friend for a long time, but I felt good about having spared him a painful, lingering death. I hope when MY time comes, it will be as easy. — NORA IN LITTLE ROCK

DEAR ABBY: All right, here is my pet peeve. And I am sure others will say it is also theirs:

Why don't people who are sick stay home instead of going to work and giving everybody else their cold, their flu, or whatever they have that "seems to be going around"?

A co-worker dragged herself to work when she was feeling lousy with some undisclosed sickness, and you guessed it — she gave whatever it was she had to the rest of us. Please print this, Abby, but please don't use my name. I need this job, and she is my superior. — OUT FOR A WEEK

AAUW to sponsor workshop

From Staff Reports

American Association of University Women will sponsor a workshop titled "Women in Transition," 9 a.m.-3 p.m. Saturday at the Petroleum Club, 501 Wall St.

Sylvia Newman, president of the Texas Division of AAUW, will be special guest speaker. After her opening speech, three workshops will be presented simultaneously. Workshops planned will be:

■ "Balancing Life's Demands: Coping with Dual Roles of Family and Career."

■ "Re-Entry or Later Entry into the Job Market: What Are Your Choices?"

■ "How to Keep from Becoming a 'Couch Potato.'"

Afternoon session will be on "Legal Rights of Texas Women," and will include discussion on child custody and support, property rights, juvenile rights and will.

Cost will be $12.50 and will include lunch. Deadline is Tuesday.

Ms. Newman, a West Texas native, earned a bachelor of science degree from Texas Tech University and a master of education degree in guidance from Hardin Simmons University.

Other speakers are Sylvia Quinones, executive director of the Volunteer Center; Terri Pease, therapist with Clearview Hospital in Midland; Diane Rhoden, counselor at Samaritan Counseling Center in Midland; Patricia de Little, president Temporary Resources Inc.; Carmen Elaine Eiker, attorney; Mary Lou Cassidy, attorney; and Vickie Gomez, associate director of admissions and foreign student adviser at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Giants take bizarre win

Interception, 'phantom' safety spill Cowboys

IRVING (AP) — New York linebacker Harry Carson thought about waving to Tom Landry as he ran by the Dallas Cowboys' bench with a game-saving interception.

In Sunday's bizarre 12-10 NFL victory by the New York Giants over the Dallas Cowboys that included a "phantom" safety, it would have been considered perfectly normal behavior.

On the game's opening kickoff, the Cowboys surrendered a safety that shouldn't have counted, then lost by that margin.

DARRYL CLACK muffed the ball at the 1 and tried to run it out when he picked it up in the end zone. Mark Collins tackled him, and referee Pat Haggerty ruled it a safety.

In the second half, replay official Armen Terzian ruled that Haggerty made the wrong call although the damage had been done.

"I'm taking the blame for it, because I was remiss in not reviewing that play," Terzian said. "The rule states that if the return man muffs the ball and it goes into the end zone, he must recover the ball but has no responsibility to take it out."

Tex Schramm, Cowboys' club president, said the team shouldn't use that as an excuse for losing.

"There were 59 minutes and 50 seconds left," he said. "I wasn't sure of the ruling myself. I thought it must be OK because nobody was making a big deal out of it."

It was only the third time since 1974 that New York had won in Texas Stadium.

New York Coach Bill Parcells said Carson's interception on the Giants' 2-yard line and 66-yard return to the Dallas 32 with 7:51 remaining and New York clinging to its two-point lead was the big play of the game.

"Carson's interception couldn't have come at a more opportune time," Parcells said. "I thought he played the best game he ever played, and that interception proved it."

CARSON SAID: "I just kind of saw the ball floating and reacted to it. There was nobody out in front of me, and going down that sideline I wanted to wave to Tom Landry. I thought that would be a little fancy and I'd better not do that."

As Dallas made a final bid to get the ball close enough for a field goal try, cornerback Perry Williams intercepted another Steve Pelluer pass at the New York 45 with 41 seconds left to preserve the victory.

The scored was 5-3 at the half, and the Giants built a 12-3 lead when Phil Simms hit Lionel Manuel with a 9-yard scoring toss in the third period.

Pelluer's 27-yard scoring pass to Herschel Walker cut the margin to 12-10, but Carson's interception ended the Cowboys scoring threat in the fourth quarter.

"I'm just thankful we got out of here (Texas Stadium) in one piece and not allow them to come back like they have done in the past," Carson said. "I don't believe in jinxes, but something always happens to us here. Today it happened to them."

Landry said he should have spoken up on the safety call.

"We should have argued more. I didn't ask for a replay," Landry said. "It was a muff in our end zone, and we can do what we want to do. I don't know why the officials didn't replay it."

Landry said Pelluer is still his quarterback despite the damaging fourth period interceptions.

"I still have to go with him," Landry said. "He's just a young quarterback trying to make it in the NFL"

PELLUER SAID Carson "made a really good play. I just have to make better decisions when I'm in that situation. It's hard to come up empty like that. There's nothing I can say that will change things.

"It seems it's always the plays at the end that hurt us."

Simms said the "safety thing was trivial. We had some bad calls against us too."

The victory tied the Giants with Washington for the lead in the NFC East with 2-1 records. Dallas dropped to 1-2.

The Cowboys may have lost more than the game. Running back Herschel Walker strained a calf and won't practice next week. Dallas doctors said he should be ready to play against Atlanta next Sunday.

Britains capture Connolly crown

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Great Britain clinched its second straight Maureen Connolly Trophy Saturday by taking a 6-2 lead in the 11-match international competition, but Sunday looked like an opportunity for the U.S. to save some face and take the sting out of defeat as the top seeds squared off.

Jennifer Santrock gave Britain's Clare Wood a losing sendoff to the Olympics with a business like 7-5, 6-3 win in the battle of the No. 2 seeds of the teams.

Despite the weather outside, things looked particularly sunny for the U.S. when Halle Cioffi took a 3-0 lead and hung on for a 7-6 win in the opening set in the matchup of No. 1 seeds. It seemed the U.S would finish with a flourish, even though Saturday's clinching took some of the competitive fire out of Sunday's matches.

MONIQUE JAVER, Britain's No. 1 player, would have none of it, rallying 6-0, 6-0 to remove any "yes, the Brits won, but...." speculation.

So decisive was Javer's game that it soon became a question of whether NCAA finalist Cioffi could even salvage a game. She couldn't.

It was a little closer in the day's final match between the No. 1 doubles teams, but the outcome was the same and Great Britain took home an 8-3 victory, their most decisive win in the series.

MEREDITH McGrath and Debbie Graham won the first doubles set 6-2, but Valda Lake and Clare Wood came back for a 7-6 tie-breaker win in the second set and then blew the Americans off the court 6-0 in the final set.

It all added up making good on the "we're here to give the Americans a good hiding," Wood predicted before the play began. Even so, the British have a lot of catching up to do.

This was only their second win since the series for women 21 and under began in 1973. There are a lot of 6-0, 10-1, 9-2 and 8-3 bludgeonings in the past, but the Brits haven't been the same toothless lionesses they were before Ann Haydon Jones was named coach.

In Jones' first year, Great Britain lost 6-5. She missed the Connolly in 1986, but her girls have won the last two and by this year's impressive showing, there may be a lot more where those victory came from.

THE BRITISH girls arrived from London a week ago Sunday and were all business as Jones put them through two-a-days Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

In contrast, Coach Sharon Walsh Pete's U.S. team began arriving Tuesday and practiced at is own pace. Pete's reasoning was that the girls had had a long and busy season and were ready...

The final two days were moved inside, both good and bad news for the NCNB Texas National Bank sponsored event.

It was fortunate a facility like The Midlander was handy to escape the final ravages of Gilbert. But, while The Midlander does have a gallery, it lacked the seating capacity to handle the size crowds that could have been accommodated at the Racquet Club...

Now that it's over, the U.S. girls return to college while the British girls, except for Seoul-bound Clare Wood, return home for the European tour..."and the cold weather," as Teresa Catlin put it....

Although Cioffi reached the NCAA finals at Florida State in the spring, her loss to Javer really wasn't that much of an upset. Javer won the Singapore Open earlier this year and was named Pacific Coast Athletic Association singles champion and Athlete of the Year.....

Jets slap Oilers in Mayhem Bowl

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Ken O'Brien and Wesley Walker kept their minds on football while just about everyone around them was concentrating on mayhem.

With most of the New York Jets and Houston Oilers bent on proving their manhood, Walker caught three touchdown passes Sunday. O'Brien threw for two of those and also hit Kurt Sohn with a scoring pass as the Jets registered their largest victory margin ever with a 45-3 rout of the Oilers.

The teams combined for 190 yards in penalties, with nine personal fouls called. Shoving matches were the norm and just about every play was followed by some verbal combat.

"I think we sent them a message early that we were not going to be pushed around," O'Brien said.

"It went bad both ways," Oilers defensive end Sean Jones said. "These were two physical teams playing feisty. We played aggressive, as we always do.

"Everybody is going to try and test us. We are the new bullies in town."

The Jets lost All-Pro receiver Al Toon for the second half when he was belted — cleanly — by safety Jeff Donaldson late in the second quarter.

In the midst of that, Walker was having his best game in 1½ years, the defense was shutting down Houston's run-and-shoot attack and O'Brien was enjoying a 17-for-26 performance for 260 yards.

"I try not to pay attention to that stuff or get involved in it," said Walker, a 33-year-old, 12-year veteran receiver. "Too much is made of it.

"I knew we wouldn't take anything.

"I dedicated the game to Al," Walker said of his partner, who suffered a slight concussion and lacerated lip. "He was pretty battered in the locker room at halftime.

"I took his hand and told him I was going to pray for him. He didn't say anything, he just squeezed my hand. He knows how this team feels about him."

Walker would be happy to hear how O'Brien feels about him.

Evans wins gold; Hembrick misses bus

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Janet Evans won America's first gold medal Sunday, easing — but not erasing — the sting of Matt Biondi's lost chance at swimming history and a boxing bungle that claimed yet another U.S. medal hope.

Evans, a triple world record-holder from Placentia, Calif., won the 400-meter individual medley swimming event easily, taking the lead in the second 100 meters — the backstroke — and holding on handily through her two best disciplines, breaststroke and freestyle.

"When they were in the breaststroke, I wanted to be even with them because I knew I could bring it home in the freestyle," Evans said. "But I was ahead, so it really wasn't that hard."

Evans was timed in 4:37.76, well off the world record of 4:36.10 by Petra Schneider of East Germany but better than her own American mark of 4:38.58. World champion Noemi Lung of Romania was second in 4:39.46, and Daniela Hunger of East Germany won the bronze in 4:39.76.

Biondi, meanwhile, saw his attempt to equal Mark Spitz's seven gold medals in 1972 go by the wayside in his very first race. Biondi, of Moraga, Calif., had to settle for bronze in the men's 200-meter freestyle as Australian Duncan Armstrong won in world record time of 1 minute, 47.25 seconds.

"I thought I swam well enough to win it," Biondi said. "Obviously, I didn't."

Biondi actually held the lead in the second 50-meter lap, but with Armstrong swimming powerfully in his wake, Biondi faded to third behind Swede Anders Holmertz. Homertz's time was 1:47.89, Bondi's 1:47.99.

The old world record of 1:47.44 was set at the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics by Michael Gross of West Germany, Biondi's friend and rival who was fifth this time.

Defending champion Greg Louganis, seeking his fourth Olympic medal, led after the first five dives of the men's springboard preliminaries, pursued by his two toughest rivals, Chinese divers Tan Liangde and Li Deliang.

Near tears as he left the boxing arena, Anthony Hembrick was eliminated from the Games when he was late for his middleweight bout against South Korea's Ha Jong-ho, conjuring memories of two U.S. sprinters disqualified for the same reason at the 1972 Munich Games.

Hembrick's coach, Ken Adams, took the blame for the foulup that cost the U.S. team its second medal hopeful in two days of boxing.

Kelcie Banks, a good prospect in the 125-pound class, was released from the hospital Monday morning. He was the victim of a first-round, one-punch knockout by an unheralded Dutchman the day before.

Adams misread the boxing schedule, thinking Hembrick was in the 11th bout, in the afternoon, when he actually was in the fourth, in the morning. When Hembrick did get to the bus to the venue, it was so crowded they couldn't get on.

"We had no idea it was that close to the time," Adams said. "I feel bad about it. I'll take the blame. I feel for Hembrick. I wish there was something I could do."

Hembrick left the venue and did not talk to reporters.

The United States filed a protest with the International Amateur Boxing Federation, and the vote on the appeal ended in a 2-2 tie. Taieb Houichi of Tunisia, chairman of the boxing committee, said he would announce the deciding vote Monday evening, early Monday morning EDT.

At Munich in '72, Eddie Hart and Rey Robinson missed the second round of the 100 meters when their coach misread the schedule. Hart had won his earlier heat with a time equaling the world record.

World champion swimmer Kristin Otto won the women's 100-meter freestyle, giving East Germany its second gold of the Games, and Adrian Moorhouse provided Great Britain with its first, winning the men's 100-meter breaststroke.

Otto won in 54.93 seconds, .20 off her world record. Zhuang Yong of China was second, Catherine Plewinski of France third, and Dara Torres of Beverly Hills, Calif., was seventh.

Torres was swimming in the event only because Angel Myers was banned from the team earlier when steroids were discovered in her drug test.

Calcavecchia sinks Pooley

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Mark Calcavecchia can legitimately say that he won the Bank of Boston Classic with his eyes closed.

A 30-foot birdie putt on the final hole gave Calcavecchia a one-shot victory over Don Pooley, who knocked on the door with a record-tying 63 Sunday. Calcavecchia never saw the ball go in.

"I flinched it right in there," the 28-year-old touring pro said after his winning round of 5 under 66. "I didn't even see it go in because I closed my eyes with six inches to go because I knew it was in."

PGA

Calcavecchia capitalized on a late collapse by Fuzzy Zoeller, who double-bogeyed two holes on the final nine to finish in a group of three at 8 under par, two shots off Calcavecchia's 10-under 274 finish.

The $108,000 payday for Calcavecchia moved him to sixth on the 1988 PGA Tour money list and marked his first victory this year. He has finished second by one stroke in three tournaments this season, including the Masters.

"I'm going, 'Man, what does it take to win out here?'" a relieved Calcavecchia said.

He said he played much of the final round in a relaxed state of mind, thinking there was almost no chance he could catch Zoeller.

"I wasn't really worried about it until I heard (a spectator) shout to me that I was tied for the lead," said Calcavecchia, who pulled even on the 16th hole, then reached the 583-yard 18th with two drivers and a sand wedge before sinking his winning putt.

Pooley, an early starter, played with a similarly easy-going attitude, figuring there was no chance to make up a seven-shot deficit. Instead, he found himself in the hunt after firing an 8-under-par 63, matching the course record at the 7,110-yard Pleasant Valley Country Club, to finish 9-under at 275.

Inkster recovers from head cold

KENT, Wash. (AP) — Juli Inkster caught a cold on the eve of the $225,000 Safeco Classic, and her early golf in the LPGA tournament reflected her misery.

But she recovered nicely over the weekend to claim the tournament title by three strokes over South Korean Ok-Hee Ku.

Inkster opened with a 76, improved to 70 on Friday, then fired a healthy 7-under-par 65 Saturday, the lowest round of the tournament. She closed with a 67 on Sunday to win her 11th career title by a comfortable margin.

LPGA

She totaled 10 under par 278 for 72 holes on the 6,222-yard Meridian Valley Country Club course. Ku finished with a 69 on Sunday.

"I can't remember playing this well on a weekend, going from two over and into the tournament," said Inkster, a 28-year-old from Rancho Murieta, Calif. "It's the best I felt in a Sunday round, and the most relaxed I've played in a final round."

The victory was her third this year and second in this tournament. She won this title in 1983 on the way to tour rookie of the year honors.

"I had six birdies Friday and seven Saturday, so I knew I was going to make some more," Inkster said. "I hit good iron shots when I had to, and got birdies."

She went into the final round in a second-place tie with Beth Daniel, JoAnne Carner and tour rookie Danielle Ammaccapane, all a stroke behind Jan Stephenson.

Falcons rock 49ers, 34-17

Chiefs shock Broncos; Vikings bury Bears

Associated Press

Last year, Chris Miller was bewildered and befuddled. Call him confident and in control now.

Miller, the second-year quarterback of the Atlanta Falcons, was confused much of the time last season after missing training camp because of a contract dispute. His first NFL start came on the road against the 49ers late last season and he suffered four interceptions in a 35-7 defeat.

Miller returned to Candlestick Park on Sunday, and this time it was the 49ers who suffered as the Falcons exploded for 21 points in the second period and stunned the 49ers 34-17.

"There was no comparison with last year's game," said Miller, who passed for 130 yards and ran for a touchdown during the outburst. "In that game, I didn't even think about what the guys on the other side of the line were doing. That was the first week I'd practiced with our first unit. I didn't know where my protection was coming from, and I had trouble remembering our receivers routes.

"We came in this time and beat them, after they won their first two games," he added. "We didn't just slip by them, either."

Chiefs 20, Broncos 13

Steve DeBerg had a ball against his old teammates, throwing two touchdown passes, and the Kansas City defense intercepted two John Elway passes to hand the Broncos their second loss in three games.

"I thought I might have the game of my life. There was no question in my mind that we were going to win and I was going to perform well," said DeBerg, who hit 21 of 35 passes for 259 yards and was not intercepted.

Vikings 31, Bears 7

Tommy Kramer has his job back, and the Chicago Bears aren't too happy about it. Kramer, who began the season on the bench and asked to be traded after the Vikings lost to Buffalo on opening day, passed for three touchdowns.

Kramer completed 15 of 28 passes for 258 yards, hitting Anthony Carter with touchdown passes of 40 and 16 yards and Hassan Jones with a 19-yard scoring strike before departing midway through the fourth quarter.

Bengals 17, Steelers 12

Boomer Esiason hit Eddie Brown with a 65-yard fourth-quarter scoring pass to rally the unbeaten Bengals over error-prone Pittsburgh. The Bengals are 3-0 for the first time since 1975, when they finished 11-3.

"I'm very happy right now, but I've seen teams start 3-0 and totally fizzle," said Esiason, who threw for two touchdowns. "We've still got a lot of work to do because it's a very long season."

Redskins 17, Eagles 10

The Redskins spent much of the afternoon chasing Randall Cunningham, and for once they had some success, sacking him six times as Washington remained tied with the Giants for the lead in the NFC East.

The Redskins scored touchdowns on each of their first two possessions. Timmy Smith scored on a 19-yard run and rookie Jamie Morris added a 27-yard TD run.

Saints 22, Lions 14

Bobby Hebert completed 23 of 32 passes for 282 yards, including a 29-yard scoring toss to Lonzell Hill to lead the Saints.

But Detroit misfired on a fake punt to set up the go-ahead touchdown. On a fourth-and-18 situation at the Detroit 12, Lions punter Jim Arnold appeared to have Carl Painter open for a pass, but Painter didn't turn around in time and the throw was incomplete.

Two plays later, Dalton Hilliard scored on a four-yard run to put the Saints ahead 19-14 with 50 seconds remaining in the third quarter.

Bills 16, Patriots 14

The Bills remained undefeated and atop the AFC East with another solid defensive performance and strong kicking from Scott Norwood, who converted a 41-yard field goal with 11 seconds left to give them their first victory over New England in 12 games.

Cardinals 30, Bucs 24

Cliff Stoudt relieved injured Neil Lomax and hit Jay Novacek with a 42-yard touchdown pass with 3:14 to play to give the Cardinals their first victory of the season.

Tampa Bay's Lars Tate scored on a 47-yard run and Donald Igwebuike's extra point, which bounced off the left upright before going through, had given the Bucs a 24-23 lead.

Dolphins 24, Packers 17

The Dolphins started fast, then held on for their first win of the season.

Marino threw for two touchdowns and went past the 20,000-yard mark in career passing.

Chargers 17, Seahawks 6

Linebacker Keith Browner intercepted two passes, including one he returned 55 yards for the first touchdown of his five-year career, as San Diego ended an eight-game losing streak.

"Two (interceptions) in one game is the best I've ever had in professional football, and a touchdown at that," said Browner, who switched from the line to replace holdout Chip Banks. "If this is what it means to play linebacker, I'm glad they made the switch."

Seattle quarterback Dave Krieg left the game in the fourth period with a separated shoulder and is expected to miss six weeks.

Steve Largent had a better day — he caught four passes for 71 yards to move past Charlie Joiner and become the all-time receiving yardage leader with 12,167.

Rams 22, Raiders 17

The Rams defense registered nine sacks and Jim Everett threw a 54-yard touchdown pass to Aaron Cox with 2:13 left in the game to clinch the victory.

"This was a game for the bragging rights of Los Angeles," Everett said. "I wish we could play them every year."

Bosox, Athletics near playoffs

Associated Press

The Boston Red Sox took a giant step toward taking the small step the Oakland Athletics hope to take tonight.

The Red Sox, plagued by a long history of failure, took control of the American League East race Sunday with a 9-4 victory over the New York Yankees. After losing the opener of a four-game series to the Yankees Thursday, the Red Sox won the next three.

"And I guarantee we won't lose three in a row in Toronto. Why should we?" Boston manager Joe Morgan said as his team, holding a six-game lead, prepared to visit the Blue Jays tonight.

The Athletics, meanwhile, can clinch the AL West this evening at home by defeating Minnesota. Oakland's magic number is two and can be cut to zero with a victory over the World Series champions.

The Yankees, who beat Red Sox ace Roger Clemens in the series opener, fell 6½ games back. Detroit and Milwaukee trail Boston by six.

"We just didn't get the job done. In this game, you have to learn to accept the good and the bad," Yankees manager Lou Piniella said.

In 1978, Piniella was a member of the New York team that swept four games at Fenway in late September — a series that which became known as the "Boston Massacre." The Yankees, behind then-ace Ron Guidry, went on to beat the Red Sox in a playoff for the division title, climaxing an improbable comeback.

Guidry, far removed from the form that won him the Cy Young a decade ago, started again Sunday. This time, it was a different story as the Red Sox beat their long-time rivals and roughed up their pitching nemesis.

Ellis Burks hit a three-run homer in the first inning and Marty Barrett's two-run double chased Guidry in the second. Dwight Evans met reliever Neil Allen with a two-run homer that made it 7-1.

Evans, whose eighth-inning homer won Saturday's game, is one of three Red Sox with the team during collapse 10 years ago.

"Everybody kept bringing up 1978, and maybe it was in the back of our minds," Evans said. "Now it's dead and buried."

Mike Smithson, 9-5, got the victory. He got relief help in the seventh from Bob Stanley before Lee Smith recorded the final four outs for his 28th save.

"It's time for somebody else to pick up this team besides Roger Clemens," Smithson said. "He's carried this club for three years."

Guidry, 1-3, took the loss.

The Red Sox won for the 11th time in 14 games and completed an 8-2 homestand. The Yankees had won seven of eight before Boston bounced back.

"Now we go to Toronto and we've got Mike Boddicker and Wes Gardner and Roger Clemens going up there," said Barrett, who had three of Boston's 13 hits. "We want to win two there, then go to New York and win two next weekend."

Athletics 3, Royals 2

Jose Canseco hit his 40th home run and Dave Henderson walked with the bases loaded in the bottom of the 11th inning to force home the winning run.

Canseco leads the majors in homers and is tops with 117 RBI, matching his career high.

Luis Polonia led off the 11th with a double against Steve Farr, 5-4, and Stan Javier walked. The runners advanced on Canseco's fly ball and an intentional walk loaded the bases before Farr unintentionally walked Henderson on four pitches.

AL Roundup

Greg Cadaret, 5-2, shut out visiting Kansas City for three innings.

Royals starter Bret Saberhagen allowed only three hits in nine innings, including Canseco's two-run homer.

Orioles 2, Tigers 0

Bob Milacki, making his major league debut, held Detroit to one hit for eight innings as visiting Baltimore ended a five-game losing streak.

The Tigers lost for the 20th time in 26 games. Detroit led the division by four games on Aug. 21.

Milacki left the game after a rain delay of 1 hour, 17 minutes in the top of the ninth inning. Tom Niedenfuer pitched one hitless innings for his 18th save.

Tom Brookens got Detroit's only hit, a line-drive double in the third inning. Last year, Milacki pitched a no-hitter for 11⅓ innings with Class AA Charlotte.

Pete Stanicek homered in the sixth off Frank Tanana, 14-10, to break a scoreless tie.

Brewers 10, Mariners 2

Jeffrey Leonard's fourth career grand slam led Milwaukee over host Seattle and kept the Brewers' hopes alive in the AL East.

Leonard hit his eighth home run in the third inning against Mike Campbell, 6-10. Leonard came to bat with the bases loaded in the fourth but struck out.

Juan Nieves, 7-5, won his third consecutive decision, giving up six hits in seven innings. His shutout string ended at 19 innings when Darnell Coles homered in the fourth.

Robin Yount hit a two-run single and Jim Gantner had a two-run triple.

White Sox 8, Twins 5

Dan Pasqua hit two homers, went 4-for-4 and drove in four runs as Chicago won at the Metrodome.

Pasqua's three-run homer highlighted a five-run rally in the seventh inning. Pasqua, batting .107 since Aug. 17, led off the ninth with his 19th home run this season, all against right-handed pitchers.

Rookie Dave Gallagher opened the game with his fourth home run. His leadoff double sparked the White Sox rally in the seventh.

Reliever Tom McCarthy, 1-0, won in his second appearance since being called up from the minors and Bobby Thigpen got the final out for his 31st save. Mark Portugal, 3-3, took the loss.

Angels 6, Ragers 5

Wally Joyner blooped a two-run single with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning that rallied California over Texas.

The Rangers had taken the lead in the top of the ninth on a grand slam by pinch hitter Pete O'Brien.

But singles by Darrell Miller, Johnny Ray and Bob Boone loaded the bases for Joyner, who looped a single to left field against Dwayne Henry.

Bryan Harvey, 7-5, got the victory despite allowing the slam to O'Brien, the first bater he faced.

Blue Jays 4, Indians 0

Dave Stieb pitched a four-hitter and Toronto beat visiting Cleveland and remained on the fringe of the AL East chase.

Stieb, 14-8, struck out four and walked two in his second shutout of the season. He escaped a bases-loaded, no-out jam in the fourth as the Blue Jays remained 8½ games behind Boston.

Rod Nichols, 1-5, was the loser. He retired the first 10 Blue Jays before Lloyd Moseby and Fred McGriff hit successive doubles in the fourth. Ernie Whitt later hit a solo home run, his 14th.

Astros hit practice field after loss

Associated Press

After throwing batting practice to the San Francisco Giants, the Houston Astros stayed late and threw batting practice to themselves.

Following a 10-3 loss to the Giants on Sunday, Houston manager Hal Lanier was so angry he ordered his team back on the field for a 1½-hour workout. He was angry after Houston lost its fourth consecutive game and dropped into a second-place tie with San Francisco, nine games behind the division-leading Los Angeles Dodgers.

The Astros, one-half game out on Aug. 9, have lost 21 of 37 since.

"I don't know if it will help," Kevin Bass said. "They don't throw the ball right down the middle in games."

While Bass was making light, Lanier was painting a dark picture.

"You have to have pride. If you can't finish first you certainly want to be second," Lanier said. "We've worked too hard to let the whole season go down the drain the last three days. We're going to have to have the intensity to win every ballgame. I want to stress this to every ballplayer."

In the barren, Astrodome, cleared of fans after the game. Houston players took batting practice and did situation drills. The players weren't happy but understood Lanier's anger.

"We do what the manager says," Buddy Bell said. "It's his decision. Fifteen or 20 guys can't manage this club. Things are not going the way we want them to go. He knows we are trying. Sometimes you have to do things you don't want to do. It was unexpected, not on the agenda. But Hal thought it was necessary. Another hour and a half can't hurt."

San Francisco players were bewildered.

"Are they really having a workout?" Chris Speier asked out loud.

National League

Don Robinson, 8-4, won for the fourth time in five decisions and hit a two-run homer. He allowed four hits and one run in seven innings.

Will Clark hit a two-run homer, scored three runs and walked four times. He is 22-for-62 against Houston this season with six home runs and 19 RBI.

Mike Scott, 13-8, lost his fourth straight start for the first time in his career. Scott, who has lost six consecutive decisions, gave up six hits and six runs before he was knocked out in the fourth.

Mets 5, Expos 3

Dwight Gooden won his 18th game and Darryl Strawberry hit his league-leading 34th home run as New York lowered its magic number to three and increased its lead to 12 games over Pittsburgh.

The Mets have won five straight, 10 of 11 and 20 of their last 26 and have beaten the Expos in eight straight.

Dodgers 2, Reds 0

John Tudor and Alejandro Pena combined on a five-hitter and Jeff Hamilton broke a scoreless tie with a seventh-inning double off Frank Williams, 3-2.

Los Angeles lowered its magic number to six as it nears its first National League West title in three seasons.

Cardinals 5, Cubs 4

Larry McWilliams, 6-7, gave up five hits in 5⅔ innings and hit a two-run single and Greg Maddux failed to win for the 11th time in 13 starts since the All-Star break.

Todd Worrell got the final six outs for his 32nd save, giving up RBI singles to Shawon Dunston and Mitch Webster in the ninth. With runners on first and second, Ryne Sandberg flied out and Andre Dawson struck out to end the game.

Braves 6, Padres 5

Pinch-hitter Ozzie Virgil singled in the winning run in the 10th inning after the Braves wasted a 5-1 lead.

Andres Thomas singled with one out off Mark Davis, 5-9. Mark Lemke walked, pinch-hitter Ted Simmons popped out and Virgil lined his hit up the alley in left-center.

Phillies 6, Pirates 5

Phil Bradley hit a 10th-inning sacrifice fly after Lance Parrish tripled off Randall Kramer, 0-1.

Steve Bedrosian, 5-6, the fourth Phillies pitcher, entered to start the 10th.

Palmer ends three-year title drought with Senior win

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — After a three-year drought on the PGA Seniors Tour, Arnold Palmer says "it's always going through your mind, 'I haven't won for a while and why haven't I won?'"

Nevertheless, after a four-shot victory Sunday in the $325,000 Crestar Classic, Palmer said, "I wasn't concerned other than the fact that I wanted to win very much."

The 58-year-old Palmer, whose last triumph was in the 1985 Senior TPC, was in cruise control for most of the day over the 6,644-yard Hermitage Country Club course as he posted a 2-under-par 70 for a 54-hole total of 203 that earned him $48,750 to push his earnings for the year to $115,366.

It was the 10th PGA Seniors Tour title for Palmer, who now has won $923,000 as a member of the over-50 set. Palmer, whose 61 victories on the regular PGA Tour included four Masters, one U.S. Open and two British Opens, pushed his all-time earnings on both tours to $2,816,000.

Despite the fact no one got closer than two shots, Palmer said he never felt he had the tournament in his grasp until "I got on the last green and knew I could five-putt and win."

The only real challenge came from defending champion Larry Mowry, who started the day six shots behind Palmer. Mowry, whose first tour victory came here last year as a rookie, was 5 under par for the day and two shots back when he pulled his second shot into the water on the par-5 15th hole and bogeyed.

Another bogey on the 17th, where he missed the green and a 12-foot par putt, ended Mowry's chances. He "misjudged the wind," hit under the bleachers but then chipped in from 70 feet for a birdie on the final hole.

The 68, fashioned with six birdies and two bogeys, earned Mowry a share of second place at 207 with Jim Ferree, who had a 69 with five birdies and two bogeys, and Lee Elder, whose 70 included five birdies and three bogeys. All three picked up $23,716.67.

Left-hander George Lanning, who said, "I was very, very relaxed," set a tournament 18-hole record with an 8-under-par 64 — eight birdies, no bogeys — that tied him for fifth at 208 with tour money leader Bob Charles, who shot a 68, and Gene Littler and Dale Douglass, both of whom shot 69. It was worth $12,187.50 for each.

Walt Zembriski and Bobby Nichols, three shots behind Palmer when the day began, faded into the pack, Zembriski at 75—211 and Nichols with 76—212.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your past experiences and common sense make it easier for you to put deals together. More money comes your way. Luck will travel with you most of the time. Take calculated chances. Do not risk more than you can afford to lose. A romantic relationship needs a firm commitment from both parties. Do not think you can find happiness and make someone over at the same time. What you see is what you will get.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Sophia Loren, novelist Upton Sinclair, fashion designer James Galanos, comedienne Anne Meara, jazz great "Jelly Roll" Morton, hockey's Guy Lafleur, the Boston Celtics' Red Auerbach.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your top priority now should be strengthening your relationships. Mixing business travel with pleasure is fine, so long as you observe company policy. You have a good shot at a better job.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Today is the time to break out of a rut. Someone who shares your beliefs will enter the picture and enrich your life. The warmth of your loving nature endears you to others.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A heart-to-heart talk could escalate into more than you bargained for. Keep closer tabs on your credit cards and cash. Someone's enthusiasm for a venture lifts your spirits. Your co-workers pitch in.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your ability to remain cool when under fire attracts the attention of someone with both wealth and power. Keep doing what you have been doing and opportunity will seek you out.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be most concerned with finding out the truth. Member of opposite sex will pursue you by phone and in person. Hasty pronouncements could throw mate for an undeserved curve. Explain your intentions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Winning someone's respect is your most important goal now. Use finesse to get what you want. A heavy-handed approach is doomed. You cannot spend too much time on any one project this week.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Beware of creating the wrong impression with a new boss or associate. Partner wants the same things you do, but may not be able to communicate as well as you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A relationship that is troubled now will survive the storm, emerging stronger than ever. Travel to get the right advice on a money matter. Good health depends on sticking to a routine.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Take whatever steps are required to restore a relationship's stability. Change investments if returns have not been what you hoped for. Bold moves lead to new success in the workplace. Your popularity rises.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are as vulnerable as the next, but are able to survive setbacks thanks to your great inner strength. Your foresight wins the admiration of friends and competitors alike. Little escapes your attention.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A dream vacation requires careful planning. Start now. Heed the advice of someone who has had the same problem you face in a relationship. Travel may be the best route to a new job.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You must be willing to compromise if you want a partnership to grow and become profitable. Keep your goals in clear focus. Reading technical papers and studying new procedures will help your career.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q. 1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K8 ♡AQJ53 ◇Q103 ♣KJ4
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?
A.—There's an old saying that covers this situation: "When the opponents bid your best suit, pass!" Although you probably have the best hand at the table, there's nothing you can do. Don't bid one no trump—you have no source of tricks!

Q. 2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠QJ54 ♡A107 ◇Q986 ♣104
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you respond?
A.—There is a school that believes that, in response to partner's minor-suit opening bid, you should automatically respond in a four-card major, if you have one. Include us out! We show our four-card suits up-the-line, so our choice would be one diamond.

Q. 3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ76 ♡Q85 ◇A104 ♣Q98
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Whether or not you play four-card majors has no bearing on this problem—on this auction your partner almost surely has five hearts. Since you don't want to play game in no trump with only a single stopper in the unbid suit, four hearts is an obvious choice.

Q. 4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AKJ ♡AKJ76 ◇83 ♣732
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Pass, and hope you make your contract. Partner's bid is preemptive. He rates to have a singleton and five trumps, and if he does not toss an ace into the bargain, your contract is going to be "iffy."

Q. 5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AKJ ♡AKJ76 ◇83 ♣732
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	3 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a pretty good hand, but it does contain seven losers. For his forcing jump raise, you can expect partner to cover four or five of them, which still leaves you with at least two losers. Don't jeopardize your vulnerable game—bid four hearts.

Q. 6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q98742 ♡Void ◇Q865 ♣J102
Your partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—You have a hand devoid of any trace of defensive values, but potentially strong on offense. From your point of view, the opponents might have a slam. Don't give them the chance to get together. Jump to four spades.

Jackson overtakes Cosby as highest-paid entertainer

NEW YORK (AP) — He's bad, and he makes a lot of money at it: Michael Jackson is the world's highest-paid entertainer with total projected earnings of $97 million for 1987 and 1988, Forbes magazine says.

Jackson, who ranked ninth on last year's Forbes list of the 40 best-paid celebrities, moonwalked his way past Bill Cosby to No. 1 by raking in an estimated $60 million this year, the magazine said in its Oct. 3 edition.

The 30-year-old entertainer made approximately $40 million from his recent worldwide tour, with the rest from sales of his album "Bad," his autobiography, "Moonwalk," Pepsi endorsements and other music publishing, the magazine said.

Cosby, who had a 1986-87 income of $84 million, was No. 2 on the current list with $92 million in earnings for 1987 and 1988, Forbes says.

The youngest entertainer on the list was 22-year-old heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson, whose earnings skyrocketed from $10 million in 1987 to approximately $45 million this year, the highest 1988 income behind Jackson's, the magazine estimates.

Two other boxers, Sugar Ray Leonard and Michael Spinks, made the list, with $27 million and $17 million, respectively, in earnings for the two-year period.

In contrast, the income of America's top-grossing executive, Charles Lazarus of Toys 'R' Us Inc., averaged $31.5 million a year for 1986 and 1987, the most recent two-year period for which executive pay records are available. Lazarus made $60 million, including about $56 million in one-time stock gains, in 1987.

After Jackson and Cosby, the rest of Forbes' top 10 are: filmmaker Steven Spielberg, $64 million; actor Sylvester Stallone, $63 million; comedian Eddie Murphy, $62 million; Peanuts cartoonist Charles M. Schulz, $62 million; rock star Bruce Springsteen, $61 million; Tyson; singer-actress Madonna, $46 million; and actor Arnold Schwarzenegger, $43 million.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music singer Hank Williams Jr. says he doesn't miss the early years of his career when his fans saw him as a rebel.

"And I don't miss the fact that I wasn't the happiest person in the world back then," said Williams, the Country Music Association's reigning Entertainer of the Year.

"You know, I did some pretty wild things. To myself, to houses and cars. No, I don't miss that part of me at all," he said in Sunday's edition of The Tennessean of Nashville.

Williams, 34-year-old son of the legendary singer Hank Williams and whose hits include "Family Tradition" and "All My Rowdy Friends are Coming Over Tonight," made 35 albums between ages 14 and 26.

It wasn't until he was in his 30s that awards began pouring in.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Esther Williams, whose movies include "Bathing Beauty" and "Neptune's Daughter," is diving into a new career: designing swimsuits to help women look like million dollar mermaids.

"Buying a bathing suit is a difficult moment for women, so I decided it was time to put my expertise to work to try to eliminate the pain," said Miss Williams in a statement announcing her new swimsuit line.

Miss Williams, 65, whose films were known for lavish swimming and underwater ballet sequences, will design 96 styles for The Esther Williams Collection, to be manufactured by Misty Swimwear, a division of Excelsior Inc.

The collection will be unveiled in Los Angeles next month, according to Irwin Greenblatt, Excelsior president.

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — America is heading into another era of change but with some familiar themes, such as the civil rights movement, says Pulitzer-Prize-winning historian Arthur Schlesinger Jr.

"If the rhythm of politics holds true, the 1990s in the United States will be much more like the 1960s," Schlesinger said Saturday at the annual meeting of the Ohio Historical Society.

Schlesinger said he believes change is near because politics tend to move in 30-year cycles.

"We're reaching the end of conservatism," Schlesinger said.

People who were influenced as youngsters by John and Robert Kennedy will rekindle some of the Kennedy ideals in the 1990s, Schlesinger said.

"Their beliefs were swept aside the last 20 years, but they will be coming back," said Schlesinger, who served as a special assistant to President Kennedy.

MUSKEGON, Mich. (AP) — Organizers of a Jewish centennial celebration say they were just dreaming when they asked Itzhak Perlman to open their festival. But when the violin virtuoso agreed, it became a reality.

Perlman's solo concert Saturday night marks the first of a series of events running through May 1989 to help the city of 150,000 honor the culture and heritage of fewer than 90 families.

"We all were just dreaming at the first several planning meetings three years ago," said Henry Matthews, curator of the Muskegon Museum of Art and one of 20 civic leaders who served on the planning committee.

COLBERT, Ga. (AP) — Singer-actor Kenny Rogers said the combination of basketball, golf, tennis and bass fishing worked well during the star-studded Classic Weekend at his Beaverdam Farms.

Sixteen athletes and celebrities competed in teams of four this weekend for profit and for charities.

The Green team — basketball player Larry Bird, tennis pro John McEnroe, golfer Lanny Wadkins and actor James Caan — won the event by placing first in basketball, second in tennis and third in golf. The four split $95,040.

"It went well," said Rogers, adding that there were some initial logistical problems.

Trammell Crow offers to buy thrifts

DALLAS (AP) — One of the nation's largest real estate developing firms, Dallas-based Trammell Crow Co. plans a multimillion dollar acquisition of three Texas thrifts with assets of more than $4 billion in a deal with federal regulators, a Dallas newspaper reported.

The Dallas Morning News reported banking sources said the Federal Home Loan Bank Board could announce as early as next week that Crow and perhaps other private investors would buy the thrifts to create one combined institution.

The thrifts include Guaranty Federal Savings and Loan Association of Dallas, First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Austin and Delta Savings Association of Texas in Alvin.

The transaction comes as FHLBB tries to meet a self-imposed deadline of resolving another 50 insolvent thrifts by month's end as part of the Southwest Plan.

Under the Southwest Plan, regulators intend to close or sell about half of the 279 thrifts that operated in Texas at the beginning of 1988. The bank board so far has completed seven transactions that included 46 thrifts in Texas and Oklahoma.

Banking sources told the Morning News Crow and other investors could spend as much as $100 million to combine the three thrifts. Analysts say that much capital could ease pressure on the bank board, which has been under fire for its inability to attract much interest from private investors for insolvent thrifts.

Industry sources also told the Morning News another large deal next week would feature Olney Savings Association of Olney, which is seeking to acquire a number of West Texas thrifts.

The Crow and Olney transactions have yet to receive final approval from the three-member bank board, sources cautioned, but competing bidders for Guaranty Federal said Friday they were notified that the Crow company had prevailed.

Crow company partner Ray Golden said last fall that the firm's interest in the plan focused on the real estate assets held by Texas savings and loans.

Guaranty Federal represents a prime opportunity to speculate on the turnaround of Texas real estate values, with a quarter of its nearly $2.8 billion in assets invested in commercial real estate or raw land. But depressed Texas real estate values, Guaranty Federal posted a negative net worth of more than $200 million.

Guaranty Federal spokesman Gene Coleman said company officials have heard numerous rumors of the thrift's fate but no official word as of Friday.

In a similar pattern, First Federal of Austin ran into problems from extensive investments in commercial real estate. As of March 31, it reported assets of $992 million and a negative net worth of $12 million.

The smaller Delta Savings of Alvin reported assets of $231 million and a negative net worth of $97 million.

Under chairman Alan D. Myers, Olney Savings has negotiated for months toward acquiring a number of smaller thrifts around its hometown. With assets as of March 31 of $1.3 billion, Olney Savings maintained a positive net worth of $29 million — and is said to have lined up additional capital as part of its proposed transaction.

Many traders betting on lower oil prices

Hearst News and Feature Service

Oil prices will continue to zigzag and could dip lower than they did last Monday without solid signals from OPEC to shore them up, say energy futures analysts and traders.

"If oil futures prices fall in the next few days below last Monday's mid-day low of $13.75, it will signal a very bearish outlook for prices in coming weeks and months," one New York oil futures analyst said.

"The sooner (the futures market) falls, the more significant it is, because that shows the upside move Wednesday (in response to hurricane Gilbert's threat to key Gulf Coast energy hubs) was a weather scare, and it's headed much further down," said John O'Dea, manager of Dean Witter Reynolds' international energy futures group in New York.

The threat that Hurricane Gilbert might knock out key Houston-area refining capacity and offshore oil and gas production in the Gulf of Mexico drove October deliveries of West Texas Intermediate up to $15.40 Wednesday.

But news that the storm would not directly hit those areas — coupled with reports that Iraq does not intend to cut its production any time soon — sent prices south.

WTI closed down 33 cents Friday at $14.57 a barrel. That big drop probably will send the market lower again Monday, O'Dea said, and several traders and analysts said they would not be surprised if oil futures fell to the high $13-a-barrel range.

OPEC Secretary-General Subroto last week called for a Sept. 25 OPEC pricing committee meeting, which sent a wave of temporary of optimism through the market.

Daniel Yergin, an analyst with Cambridge Energy Research Associates, said he expects worried OPEC ministers to do a lot of murmuring about production restraint in the days leading up to that meeting, and the market will continue to zigzag almost daily in response.

But unless the meeting falls apart, Yergin said he doubts prices throughout September will fall much below last Monday's levels — if they go that low again. He declined to speculate about what good might come from that meeting.

"OPEC has relied on rhetoric to prop the market up every now and then," O'Dea said, adding that for the last two years OPEC members have demonstrated they have no intention of moving toward strict production discipline, despite their optimistic pronouncements.

Still, such a large contingent of futures speculators have bet their money that oil prices will continue downward that the slightest indication from OPEC of an upward tick sends those speculators into a tail spin, and they scurry to cover their positions to avoid losing a lot of money, analysts said.

Analysts expect higher short-term interest rates

By KENNETH N. GILPIN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Short-term interest rates are likely to move higher during the remainder of the month, without the prodding of the Federal Reserve Board, credit market analysts said.

Slightly higher rates are anticipated because the difference between yields on short-term securities and the rate on overnight bank loans in the federal funds market has become unnaturally narrow since the market's strong rally on Sept. 2.

The Fed could re-establish a more normal pricing relationship by voting to ease monetary policy when its Open Market Committee meets Tuesday. But few analysts, if any, expect that the Fed will do anything but maintain the overnight funds rate in its current trading range of 8 to 8¼ percent.

On Friday, yields on the Treasury's 8⅝ percent two-year notes had dipped to 8.36 percent, about one-quarter of a point higher than the recent average for federal funds. That differential is much smaller than the six-tenths of a percentage point that existed between the two rates for several months before the rally earlier this month.

"There is no premium at all for taking two-to-five-year risk in the marketplace," said William H. Gross, managing director at the Pacific Invesment Management Co., a concern in Newport Beach, Calif. that has a fixed- income portfolio of about $16 billion. "Those rates have to back up if the funds rate doesn't move lower."

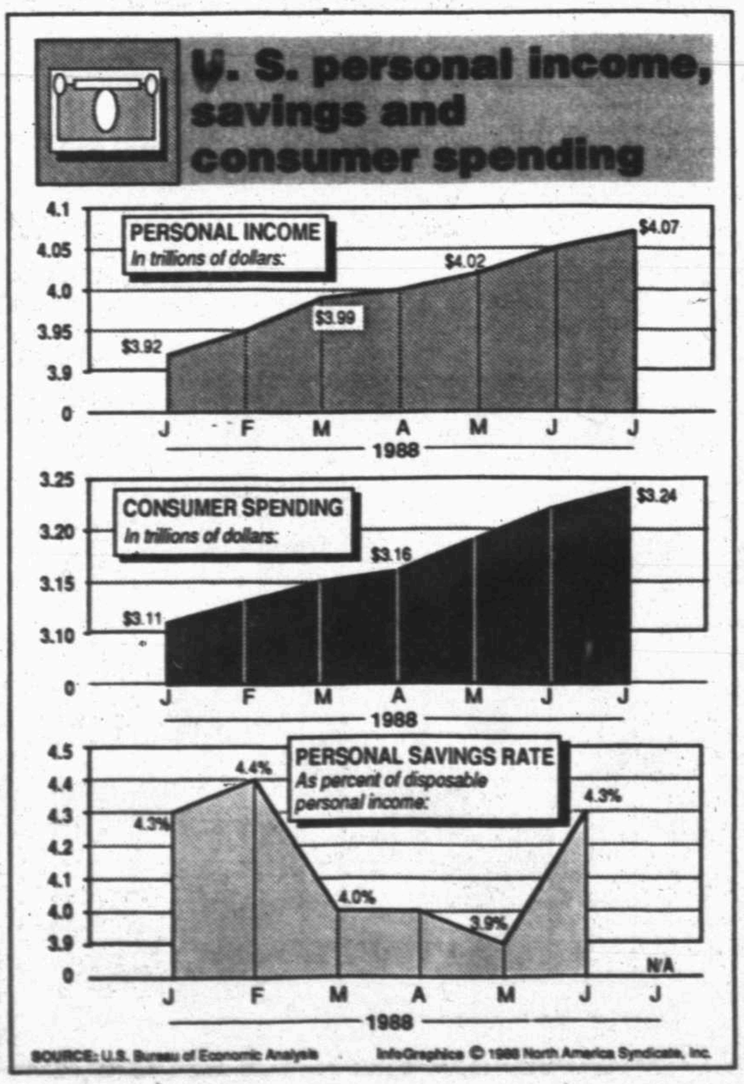
The weakness seen in August economic data, most recently a decline of 0.2 percent in retail sales, may tempt some Fed governors to argue that easing is needed, analysts said. But the chances of a cut in the funds rate appear remote.

"I would be inclined to believe that as long as the economy is not sinking, and it isn't, Alan Greenspan would like to leave the funds rate right where it is through the November election," said Edward Yardeni, chief economist at Prudential-Bache Securities. "I have to think that the conversation will be more about economic weakness than about strength, but that when it comes to a vote they will leave policy unchanged."

While short-term rates could come under upward pressure, there is little to suggest that bond yields will move much between now and early October, analysts said.

Yields on the Treasury's 9¼ percent bonds that mature in 2018 have fluctuated right around 9 percent since Sept. 2, when a weaker-than-expected report on employment conditions in August started a huge rally.

The optimism that long rates will remain stable for some time is based in large part on the prevailing view among market participants that Congress will not provide the Treasury with the authority to issue additional 30-year bonds before it adjourns next month. Legislation that would grant the authority is contained in a technical corrections bill currently pending before both the House and the Senate.



Hunts reorganization plan approved as new suit filed

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge has approved a reorganization plan for the three trust estates of the Hunt brothers that will result in their Penrod Drilling Co. becoming a corporation controlled jointly by creditor banks.

Meanwhile, Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. has filed a suit in Dallas against Nelson Bunker Hunt and William Herbert Hunt in an attempt to collect a $36 million personal loan made to the brothers four years ago.

In the reorganization move, U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Harold Abramson on Friday approved plans for the William Herbert Hunt, Nelson Bunker Hunt and Lamar Hunt estates, which are now in Chapter 11 bankruptcy.

"The plans are confirmed," Abramson said after four days of testimony on the plan in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Dallas.

Hunt representatives said the move assures the continued operations of Penrod, which is not in bankruptcy.

The previously announced plan, which had the approval of Penrod's 12 bank lenders and other creditors, is designed to settle $750 million in bank loans. It is a major step toward removing the Hunt trusts from Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection.

The court still must approve a reorganization plan for Placid Oil Co., which is owned by the Hunt trust estates and is in Chapter 11 bankruptcy. The trust estate in July offered to pay $803.5 million, including $663.5 million in cash, to Placid's lenders.

Under the plan approved Friday, Penrod will be transformed from a privately-held company controlled by the Hunts into a corporation managed by three voting trustees representing the Hunt trusts and the banks.

Named as Penrod's voting trustees are Charles Blackburn, chairman of Maxus Energy Corp. of Dallas; John Harbin, retired chairman of Halliburton Co. of Dallas; and Marvin Hambrick, retired former executive vice president of Kerr-McGee, an Oklahoma City-based energy company.

According to testimony last week, the trustees will act as Penrod's board of directors and will work closely with the trusts and William Herbert Hunt, who was previously managing partner of the company.

The bankruptcy proceedings of the trust estates have been at the center of the financial woes of the Hunts, whose fortune comes from their late father, Texas oilman H.L. Hunt.

The brothers in recent years have sustained heavy losses in oil, silver, real estate and sugar, causing their wealth to dwindle from more than $5 billion to an estimated $1 billion.

The suit filed Friday by Manufacturers Hanover is the first filed against the brothers personally since they agreed in principle with their lenders on how to settle $1.5 billion in bank debt secured by Placid Oil Co. and the three Hunt estates. About half of that debt will be paid through the bankruptcy plan approved Friday.

Futures price weakness lingers

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices sagged further this morning after last week's run-up on hurricane fears. Futures contracts for October delivery of West Texas Intermediate opened 19 cents lower this morning at $14.38 on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

The contract lost 33 cents Friday, dropping from $14.90 to $14.57 at the closing bell. Earlier in the week, prices jumped more than a dollar including an 84-cent hike on Wednesday.

Some calm may return to world oil markets after last week's wild ride, analysts say. But they add that market fundamentals remain bearish.

The price committee of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries meets Sunday which could spur another trading rally. But few expect much to come of the meeting and the markets could skid again if OPEC doesn't appear committed to restraining production.

The hangover from Hurricane Gilbert remains as they market assesses the impact of the storm which side-swiped much of the Gulf Costs's petroleum industry. There are conflicting views on whether the aftermath will be a tightening of supplies because of some facilities closing or a flood of new supplies that were held back during the storm.

Dollar's losses minimal in Europe

LONDON (AP) — The dollar eased in early European trading today and gold prices continued to fall.

Foreign currency dealers in Frankfurt, West Germany, said there was some light selling pressure as some market participants tested the dollar's downside looking for weak points.

In Tokyo, the dollar inched up 0.04 yen to close at 133.80 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 133.90 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

—1.8690 West German marks, down from 1.8763

—1.5800 Swiss francs, down from 1.5835

—6.3500 French francs, down from 6.3795

—2.1087 Dutch guilders, down from 2.1151

—1,393.35 Italian lire, down from 1,398.50

—1.2225 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2232

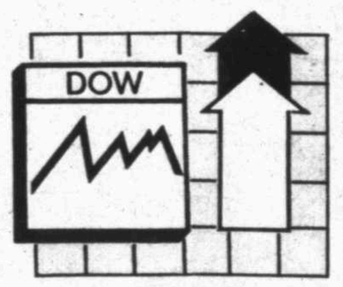
In London, one British pound cost $1.6765, little changed from $1.6758 late Friday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $407.25 a troy ounce, down from $412.00 bid late Friday. At midmorning Monday, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $409.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.27 a troy ounce, down from Friday's $6.40.

Dow beats triple witching hex

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gained ground Friday, riding out the so-called triple witching hour involving a set of expiring futures and options on stock indexes.



The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 5.87 to 2,098.15, finishing the week with a net gain of 29.34 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 8 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 889 up, 562 down and 508 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 211.11 million shares, up from 161.21 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 238.33 million shares.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $19 billion, or 0.71 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks added 1.19 to 152.79.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Slower inventory growth a sign of strength

WASHINGTON (AP) — The slow decline in business inventories in July was seen as a sign that underlying economic growth remains strong.

The Commerce Department said Friday that inventories rose 0.3 percent to a seasonally adjusted $733.7 billion, the smallest gain since a 0.2 percent increase in August 1987.

Business sales fell 0.2 percent in July to $487.7 billion, the first decline since November.

Quality Inns lose out on motel McAttack

BALTIMORE (AP) — Quality Inns International must stop using the name "McSleep Inns" for its chain of economy hotels because it infringes on the good will and reputation of McDonald's Corp., a federal judge ruled.

U.S. District Judge Paul Niemeyer granted McDonald's a permanent injunction against Quality Inns on Friday because he said the use of the prefix "Mc" in the hotel name would lead the public to believe the hotels are owned by McDonald's. He said the name is "a deliberate attempt to benefit by the good will and reputation of McDonald's."

BUSINESS TRENDS

Jack Daniel's family expanding

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Jack Daniel whiskey, distilled in a rustic Tennessee hollow and promoted in advertising featuring weather-beaten men in bib overalls, may be going upscale.

The down-home sippin' whiskey reportedly will have a new, refined version called "Gentleman Jack," priced higher than its famous country cousin.

News media have been alerted to a small-town fair Sept. 30 in Lynchburg — population 361 — where the Jack Daniel distillery is located.

That's when they'll roll out the barrel for a taste.

"Gentleman Jack" would be the distillery's first new whiskey in 100 years.

The whiskey can be distilled in Lynchburg but not consumed because the town is in a dry county. Toasts to the new Jack will have to be held in an adjoining county.

The company said any new product would be "the first new whiskey to come out of the hollow since Tennessee rejoined the Union."

Earthquake survivors empathize with problems of storm victims

By PHIL DAVISON
Copley News Service

MEXICO CITY — Maria Elena Mendoza and her family feel special sympathy for the hundreds of thousands of Mexican victims of Hurricane Gilbert. They know from experience that the hurricane homeless are in for a long, tough haul.

The Mendozas are among thousands of Mexicans who remain homeless three years to the day after the terrible earthquake devastated Mexico City, on Sept. 19, 1985, despite government promises that all would be assisted.

They live in rows of one-room tin huts in camps, surrounded by barbed wire, which bear an eerie resemblance to the Nazi concentration camps of wartime Germany.

The Mendozas, 11 of them, share a windowless corrugated-iron hut with no water, toilet or kitchen, sleeping in a huddle in one bed and two bunks in a 6-foot by 9-foot area.

The entire hut measures 20 feet by 10 and includes a table, four chairs, a sideboard and a portrait of the Virgin Mary. Except for a carpet under the beds, the rest of the floor is the cold stone ground of the Calles Park in which the camp is located, not far from the city center.

Lounging on her bed as two of her grandchildren crawl around, Mendoza tells of the family's disillusionment with the Mexican government and its promises of housing for all of the 100,000 families — around 500,000 people — left homeless by the quake.

The government of President de la Madrid says almost all families have been rehoused and that the remaining 4,000 or so will have homes by the end of his term on Nov. 30 this year.

It is a fact that the majority have received homes, but, three years later, those still in camps see no relief.

The Mendozas, who have been refused a new home for three years, have heard nothing of receiving one and were forcibly moved from another camp last month, will believe a new home when they see it. They have been told virtually the opposite by city authorities, namely that they can expect nothing, at least until the new administration takes over on Dec. 1.

There are 400 other families like them in the Calles camp, almost 3,000 people, and several thousand others in similar encampments tucked away in various parts of the capital. The refugees at first camped near their destroyed homes but were moved before the World Cup soccer tournament was brought here in 1986, to "clean up" the city's image in the eyes of the world.

Since then, the Mendozas have been moved several times, most recently last month when "they threatened to send the Granaderos (police) if we didn't get out by the next day. Now we are here, and this is the worst camp we have been in.

"Apart from the lack of water, no kitchens and the fact that we have to buy bottled gas, the camp is dangerous. The young men are frustrated, they molest our girls and many are on marijuana and "cemento" (sniffed paint-thinner, a fast-increasing problem throughout the capital).

Senora Gomez takes the reporter on a tour of the camp, dodging families' washing strung across the narrow lanes between the corrugated iron huts.

"This was supposed to be the kitchen," she says, pointing to a totally-bare room with only a roof, no sides and daubed with the slogan of a camp gang, the "Warrios." Farther along are the communal toilets, their stench permeating the entire camp. There is rarely any running water in the toilet and the refugees take turns of cleaning the mess.

Each bathroom cubicle serves 70 to 80 people.

Then comes a row of crude outdoor sinks, where there is water, "only in the mornings," according to Mendoza, and women wash piles of dirty dishes while others attempt to bathe their children, naked in the early evening cold.

The huts themselves are like ovens during the day, refrigerators at night as a result of the unique climate of the high-altitude capital.

"We don't sleep much. It's difficult when there are 10 of you in such a space, including my husband, my grown-up son with his wife and child, my other children and grandchildren," says Gomez. "But we have to work or go out looking for food during the day, so we're not able to stagger our sleeping arrangements."

Gomez said the refugees were better treated for the first two years after the earthquake.

"They used to bring us food, sheets and toys for the kids. Now they bring us this," she says, holding up a red plastic rose given to her last Mother's Day by visiting representatives of the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) which rules the city and the country.

Many Mexicans believe the official response to the '85 quake was the start of a plunge in the PRI's popularity which led to their unprecedented losses in last July's elections. In the capital itself, the party and its presidential candidate Carlos Salinas de Gortari lost outright to center-left candidate Cuauhtemoc Cardenas.

But the PRI won nationwide and will therefore continue to control the sprawling metropolis, however unpopularly.

"On election day, the PRI people brought buses to take us to the polling stations. But they did not see how we voted," Gomez said with a wry grin.

The 11 Mendozas live off the salaries of her husband and grown-up son, the former around $70 a month, the latter just over $100.

'Miracle babies' thrive on attention

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The "miracle babies" who survived in the rubble of collapsed hospitals after the Mexico City earthquake in 1985 now are 3-year-olds, thriving on special attention from doctors and relatives.

Evelia Alvarez Gasca, good-humored and playful, likes to sing and dance. Her favorite is "Speedy Gonzalez," or was, before she broke the record and pulled the cartridge out of the turntable arm.

Sarita Valencia Corona, another of the 19 miracle toddlers, lives with her grandparents in a community with a view of snow-capped volcanos. She entertains herself with the chickens, ducks and cows in the small yard or helps her grandparents tend their crops.

Jesus Manuel Figueroa or "Chuchito," possibly the biggest miracle of all, finally is walking and beginning to talk.

All the babies except Chuchito were from a few hours to a few days old when the quake struck at 7:19 a.m. Sept. 19, 1985, bringing the two hospitals where they were born crashing down.

Government figures put the death toll at about 6,000 people; unofficial sources put the toll as high as 32,000. Including the hospitals, more than 400 buildings in the city of 18 million were destroyed and 5,700 damaged, the government said.

Chuchito was 21 days old when the quake hit, in an incubator and on intravenous liquids because of problems at birth. When the 12-story hospital fell, everyone except his mother gave him up for dead.

The 19 babies survived amid the rubble from eight hours to nearly nine days after the quake. Cold and almost unconscious, Chuchito was found after a week.

"Chuchito was just meant to live. No matter what happened he was going to live," said Edward Sawatzky, a Canadian who was in Mexico City when the quake hit and has been helping victims ever since.

"These babies were under very severe conditions, without food for a long period, with hypothermia, hypoglycemia," said Dr. Barbara Hernandez, who cares for 14 of them.

They had infected wounds and were dehydrated, but only one suffered lasting injuries, doctors say, a boy who suffered a deformed hip joint because of infection. The boy, Jesus Francisco, learned to walk four months ago.

Hernandez and other doctors say the other babies are normal except for one who was born without legs from the knees down and Chuchito, whose slowness in walking and talking they say are due to his birth problems.

Evelia will have to have surgery on her tear ducts and needs orthopedic shoes, her aunt said.

About half the children, including Evelia and Sarita, lost their mothers, but all are in what social workers consider to be good family situations.

In one sense the babies are lucky. They were from poor families and have had more medical attention and stimulation than they would have had otherwise. And they caught the hearts of everyone.

"The ones I worry about are the secondary victims" who aren't in the limelight, said Janet Rogozinski, head of U.S. Private and Voluntary Organizations here. The agency channels private donations from the United States to earthquake victims.

Tourism hurricane's prime victim

MONTEGO BAY, Jamaica (AP) — Hurricane Gilbert dealt a punishing blow to this Caribbean mecca, casting doubt over the immediate future of one of Jamaica's most vital industries — tourism.

On Mexico's Yucatan peninsula, officials said vacation havens will be paralyzed for up to three months after Gilbert crashed through last week, leaving behind nearly $430 million in damage to just Cancun, generates 25 percent of Mexico's tourist income.

Tourists waited days to get a flight home or salvage their vacations with a trip elsewhere. Locals who got through the hurricane wondered how to survive without tourist dollars.

Jamaican Prime Minister Edward Seaga last week estimated Gilbert caused $8 billion worth of damage, but of the nearly $600 million-a-year tourism industry he said, "I'm glad to say it's in reasonably good shape."

Seaga said Montego Bay and the other big resorts on the northern coast escaped the worst of the storm, which struck Jamaica on Monday.

Yet most major hotels in Montego Bay bore plain signs of Gilbert's ferocity — gaping holes in roofs and ceilings, shattered windows, standing water, mangled balcony railings.

Four of Montego Bay's five biggest hotels were shut down because of damage and the fifth, the Wyndham Rose Hall Beach Hotel and Country Club, faced costly repairs. Only two of the 15 big restaurants in the resort area managed to open.

The extent of the destruction was such that it was difficult to imagine the famous resort recovering anytime soon, barring a massive rebuilding program.

It is to the northern resorts of Montego Bay, Ocho Rios and Negril that the vast majority of tourists — nearly 75 percent of them Americans — flock to spectacular white sandy beaches, go rafting on Martha's Brae and dance to the calypso bands. All but a half dozen of Jamaica's 50-odd major hotels are located in the region.

Tourism is now the country's biggest foreign-exchange earner, accounting for 37 percent of total exports of goods and services. Last year, for the first time ever, foreign visitors to the island topped 1 million.

"It's a temporary setback, but we'll have our hotels and facilities back in first-class condition by the winter season," which starts Dec. 15, said Peter Rousseau, president of the Jamaica Hotel and Tourist Association.

Hugh Hart, minister for Mining, Energy and Tourism, was even more optimistic.

"A lot of people could be anxious to see the aftermath of a hurricane," he told reporters. "It might even be an attraction."

Antonio Erales, Cancun's tourism director, said Saturday tourism in Cancun and the neighboring islands of Cozumel and Isla Mujeres will be suspended for at least two months for repairs.

"Cancun will be back to normal possibly in December," Erales said. He estimated storm damage there at $429 million.

Jackson tours Jamaican storm damage

New York Times News Service

DALVEY, Jamaica — Eight days ago, the fiercest hurricane of the century swept across the beaches here on the easternmost tip of Jamaica, beginning a wild, thrashing journey that devastated the island.

On Sunday afternoon, with the seas once again calm and the winds stilled, two helicopters spiraled down from the pale blue sky. Aboard were the Rev. Jesse Jackson, Prime Minister Edward P.G. Seaga and two American congressmen.

"We're here because we care," said Jackson, the onetime Democratic presidential candidate, as he stepped from his helicopter onto an emerald-green soccer field ringed by low hills and covered with the splintered skeletons of leafless trees.

"We're here to let people know that just because they're homeless they need not be hopeless," Jackson said. "They're not helpless because they have friends."

Some Jamaicans in Kingston had suggested cynically that Jackson was coming here to further his political career rather than out of concern for the victims of the storm.

But the people here, many of whom have lost everything, and who were standing in the only clothing they could salvage, were thrilled to see Jackson and the prime minister.

Until Sunday, the main road to the capital had been blocked by fallen power poles, by the water from overflowing rivers and by landslides. Until Sunday, the people said, they feared that they had been forgotten.

"Nobody has come out to see how we're doing," said Alfredo Reid, a 58-year-old laborer wearing shorts and rubber boots. "We've got to have help. We're almost finished."

The winds from the hurricane, designated Gilbert, had reached speeds of 130 miles per hour when the storm made landfall in Jamaica, and this part of the island is where the greatest destruction can be seen.

Nearly every roof is gone. Some houses were simply swept away. Only portions of concrete foundations and sets of stairs leading to nowhere offer a clue as to where the houses once stood.

Yards are littered with twisted pieces of metal roofing and with bits of clothing and furniture.

But the most grievious losses are to the crops. This is the heart of Jamaica's coconut and banana industry, and sugar cane is grown here as well.

Some of the coconut and banana plantations look like they have been bombed, their trees flattened, the trunks and stalks strewn across the bald hills like the bodies of fallen infantry.

For young Isaac, cousins are siblings

By PHIL DAVISON
Copley News Service

ATIZAPAN, Mexico, — Isaac Alvarez Martinez was a day old when the terrible four-minute earthquake shook downtown Mexico city three years ago Monday today, toppling schools, hospital wings, offices and homes like babies' building blocks.

He and his mother Clementina, a 31-year-old mother of two other children, were on the top floor maternity ward of the eight-story Juarez Hospital when the building was reduced to a 30-foot pile of concrete at 7.19 am on the sunny morning of September 19, 1985.

Clementina never left the hospital. Her body was never found. She may have died almost instantly under the weight of tons of rubble, or trying to find and protect her child, or of hunger, thirst and exhaustion after several days of entrapment.

Her baby, later named Isaac, was dug out after six hours in his dark, concrete womb by a young Mexican "topo" (mole), one of many skinny student volunteers who pawed their way through rubble, formed tunnels and pulled out hundreds of survivors throughout the city for up to a week after the quake.

The baby was covered in dust and dirt, scratched and bruised, but cried lustily as his rescuer emerged from the rubble and into the afternoon sunlight with Isaac clutched tightly in his arms and to the cheers of other rescue workers and reporters.

Clementina had gone into heavy labor the previous morning and headed for the Juarez Hospital, leaving her other children, aged four and six, with friends.

Usually overwhelmed by mothers-to-be, the hospital takes in only those likely to give birth within 10 minutes. Clementina qualified, brought a healthy baby boy into the world immediately and was to have left the following morning after a day's rest.

As it turned out, she never got to know her son, nor he his mother.

Now, Isaac lives with his aunt, Rita Martinez, and Uncle Dionisio Alvarez — Clementina's brother — in this village in the State of Mexico not far from the capital. He is a big, healthy boy, with laughing brown eyes and a captivating smile, still too young to understand what happened to him, or his real mother. His foster parents say they will tell him the truth "maybe when he is 11 or 12, when he understands more."

"He knows that Clementina's other two kids, who live with other relatives and whom we see from time to time, are his brother and sister. But to him, Abraham, our own four-year-old son, is also his 'big brother,'" said Rita.

Excited by the presence of the visiting reporter, Isaac, the name Rita and Dionisio gave him, continued to crash his little truck. Then he borrowed "brother" Abraham's "avalancha" (cart) for a racing spree around the family's lime, fig, cherry trees and cacti in the back yard, where Dionisio also keeps a young pet eagle tied to a perch.

Dionisio said Isaac was given regular medical and psychological checks for months after the quake but now appeared to be perfectly normal. "He still jumps when he hears a passing truck, or a train, though," he added.
