

Texans face important decision Tuesday, Wright says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Jim Wright, for whom water has been a pet project for many years, says Tuesday is a big day in Texas.

The House majority leader said the future economy and well-being of Texas may hinge on whether its voters go to the polls and approve a proposed constitutional amendment to create a water trust fund in the state.

Approval of Proposition 4 in Tuesday's statewide vote "is a good step in the right direction. I'm surely supportive of that and am happy to stress that support," said Wright, D-Texas, of Fort Worth.

The amendment, the brainchild of Texas House Speaker Bill Clayton, would set aside half the state's surplus for water development loans and allow the state to obligate up to $500 million in credit for water bonds.

THE AMENDMENT also could benefit many of the small cities of Texas that cannot finance badly needed water projects without outside help.

Opponents complain that the billions of dollars that Proposition 4 earmarks for water projects could be better spent to improve education, prevent crime or modernize public transportation.

Wright disagrees. Without sufficient water, no phase of Texas' economy can prosper, he said in arguing for the amendment.

It is rapidly reaching the point, Wright contends, that a community blessed with an adequate supply of usable water "will be better off by far than if it had gold or oil or uranium or any other resource in the earth but lacked water."

Wright was a longtime member of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee. He would have been chairman had he not been elected majority leader, a position that allows no committee service.

His support for Proposition 4 is in keeping with his oft-stated calls for more long-range planning for water. He wrote a book in 1966 called, "The Coming Water Famine."

ON THE FIRST page of that book, he emphasized in everyday terms the importance of water in all phases of life.

"In the United States today, it takes 300 gallons of the indispensable fluid to produce a single loaf of bread. To grow a pound of beef and to get it to your dinner table requires at least 1,000 gallons of water. About 100,000 gallons go into the manufacture of each automobile."

In his office a few days ago, Wright made it clear his views of a coming water crisis haven't changed.

"I've been interested in this particular subject for all these many years, and I am concerned about the future of our state from the standpoint of water. I think the Clayton proposition is a good step in the right direction," Wright said.

He said President Reagan's new economic policies, stressing cuts in programs across the board, make it even more important that Texas find money to replace funds that once came from the federal government for water programs.

"I think without some long-term water plan in Texas — and a source of money to stop flooding, to store water when we need it, to pump water — our state and our economy will be in serious trouble," Wright said.

"At the present time, we have come to rely on the federal government for water pollution abatement, flood control, and so forth, but that's tightened up, just like all domestic programs are tightening up."

THRIFTY agricultural land in Texas, without adequate irrigation, would benefit from passage of the amendment. But so would urban areas, proponents say.

More than 40 major flood protection and drainage projects in urban areas of Texas are planned over the next 40 years, at an estimated cost of $7.5 billion.

Nun raped, slain in convent

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — The nuns of St. Francis convent offered prayers today for Sister Tadea Benz and for the man who beat, raped and strangled her in her second-floor convent room.

"We're saddened, of course, but now we've offered her up to God," said a nun who identified herself only as Sister Martha. "We've offered prayers for her just as we've offered prayers for the man who did this."

"We're heartbroken," added Sister Bernice Noggler.

Funeral services for the 76-year-old nun, a native of Switzerland who had been a resident of the convent here since 1944, were scheduled at 4 p.m. today. Peace Justice L.B. Bartlett said she had been strangled, noting "her larynx was crushed," and ruled the death a homicide.

Sister Tadea was found dead on the floor of her room early Saturday by other nuns who went to see why she had not attended mass that morning. However, they initially thought she had died from an accident or natural causes.

"There was not blood all over the place," said Sister Bernice. "There was a little spot of blood on her pillow as if she had had a hemorrhage."

Later that day, when the nuns found a broken pane of glass in the convent's common room, police were summoned to investigate a possible burglary. In the course of that routine police visit, one of the nuns mentioned the death of Sister Tadea, but said she probably died from a fall.

THEY SAID THEY had washed her face, wrapped her in blankets and sent her to a funeral home for embalming, a funeral and burial.

Officers called Bartlett, the acting coroner. He ordered the funeral home to stop the embalming, then asked pathologist Dr. Ralph Erdmann to conduct an autopsy.

He said Erdmann found that Sister Tadea had been sexually assaulted, strangled and badly beaten. Her left eye was blackened and her body was covered with "gouges," knuckle marks and stab wounds from her thighs to her neck, Bartlett said.

The nuns who found Sister Tadea in her room did not notice the black eye because blood covered it and missed the other injuries because she was "covered with a sheet and we didn't uncover her," said Sister Bernice.

"I noticed the wound on her neck," she said, "but the nurse said that when people have hemorrhages, they can't catch their breath and they sometimes scratch themselves."

"We're heartbroken," she added. "We know old nuns die but it was the manner in which she died. ... We want this guy caught."

"We don't have anything at this point," said police homicide Capt. Jimmy Davis on the progress of the investigation.

He said officers found two knives in the room, one of them with a bent blade. They also found a board outside the broken window and confiscated bloody sheets the nuns had taken from the room, he said.

It appeared the intruder's purpose was assault, not burglary, since nothing was taken from the convent, Davis said.

SISTER TADEA was last seen alive by the other nuns about 10 p.m. Friday, as she was sewing in a workroom. She was said to be a skilled seamstress who sold embroidery work to help support the convent. She also taught at St. Laurence Elementary School.

She was born in Marbach, Switzerland, and came to the United States from Colombia in 1932. She became a U.S. citizen in 1937 and a resident of the convent in 1944.

The slaying recalled the attack on a nun at the Sisters of Charity convent in New York Oct. 10. The nun was beaten, raped and had 27 cross cut into her body.

Begin urges rejection of Saudi peace plan

By The Associated Press

Prime Minister Menachem Begin says the Saudi blueprint for peace is a plan to "liquidate Israel" and urges President Reagan to reject it. Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak says the plan offers a basis for dialogue some time in the future but contains nothing new.

The Israeli prime minister appealed to Washington in a TV interview Sunday "to reject without any equivocation whatsoever the eight points (outlined by) Crown Prince Fahd because they mean the opposite of peace."

In a letter sent Friday to Reagan, Begin said he disagreed with the U.S. position that the Saudis might be on the verge of recognizing Israel's right to exist as a state, according to an official who said he saw the letter.

THE OFFICIAL, who asked not to be identified, said the letter was friendly but firm and indicated Israel's fear that Washington is drifting too close to Saudi Arabia after Reagan's victory in winning Senate approval for the sale of AWACS radar planes and other arms to the Saudis.

In a switch in positions, the State Department said Friday it welcomed some aspects of the Saudi plan and had "some problems" with other parts. It said the United States was "encouraged" by the clause "asserting the rights of all states in the area to live in peace." State Department officials interpreted this to include Israel.

OTHER POINTS in the Saudi plan call on Israel to withdraw to surrender all; the territory it occupied in the 1967 Arab-Israeli War, dismantle its settlements in occupied territory and agree to proclamation of an independent Palestinian state with East Jerusalem as its capital.

Begin, interviewed on ABC-TV's "Issues and Answers," said Israel will not withdraw to its 1967 boundaries because the long-range weapons its neighbors have acquired since then pose a threat to his country. And Israel has made all of Jerusalem its own capital and regards a Palestinian state as a potential base for its enemies.

In Cairo, Egyptian President Mubarak told a group of visiting American businessmen and journalists the Saudi peace plan "didn't bring anything new, but there are some points which are encouraging. Other points...could be negotiated or be a good matter for any new dialogue in the future — but not now."

"WE ARE optimistic about the prospects for peace and stability," he said. "We are pursuing (the Palestinian) autonomy talks vigorously."

Egypt, Israel and the United States have postponed their next round of negotiations to try to work out a plan for local self-government for the Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip until Nov. 11, Cairo newspapers reported.

Mubarak said things are "now back to normal" in Egypt following the assassination of President Anwar Sadat on Oct. 6. He said police have arrested about 500 Moslem extremists linked to the assassination and subsequent unrest.

Jordan may be allowed to buy more U.S. weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jordan's King Hussein is opening talks with President Reagan amid signals that he may be allowed to buy additional U.S. weapons to keep him from turning to the Soviet Union for arms.

In advance of today's meeting with Reagan at the White House, however, U.S. officials said they did not expect to draw Hussein into the Camp David process for Middle East peace.

The 45-year-old monarch, who arrived in Washington on Sunday, also is to see Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and members of Congress before flying to Los Angeles on Thursday.

U.S. OFFICIALS, speaking anonymously before Hussein's visit, said he has expressed recent interest in buying weapons from the Soviets.

Jordan's military has been largely supplied with American arms for more than two decades, and one official said the United States may be receptive to a Jordanian request for more U.S. weapons.

"We have an interest, obviously, in what Jordan would purchase its arms," the official said. "There could be problems with the introduction of Soviet weaponry in another country in the Middle East."

Other officials speculated that Hussein may be keeping his options open in an attempt to exert leverage on behalf of his own viewpoints on the future of the Middle East.

Hussein has remained aloof from the Camp David process.

He has expressed what one U.S. official describes as "deep-seated skepticism" that the talks between Egypt, Israel and the United States will produce a just and acceptable autonomy plan for Palestinian Arabs living in the Israeli occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

"WE WOULD NOT expect that at the end of this visit he would have his name on the line," said one official.

"In the final analysis what we want him to do is to develop a sense of confidence that this administration is going to move ahead with determination to produce a settlement," another official said.

Reagan and Haig said last week that an eight-point peace plan offered by Saudi Arabia is encouraging because it accepts the principle that all people in the Middle East should be permitted to "live in peace." They said that implies recognition of Israel.

Israeli leaders, however, oppose the plan's call for a Palestinian state, with its capital at Jerusalem.

"The king says he knows Israel better than any other Arab leader in the Middle East," one Reagan administration official said.

Polish strikes continue despite Solidarity's pleas

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's worst wave of wildcat strikes continued today despite Parliament's no-strike appeal, and there were indications that the leaders of the independent labor movement would be unable to stop them.

Poland's Roman Catholic primate, Archbishop Jozef Glemp, called for cooperation and moderation "in these difficult days for the country."

More than 250,000 workers were on strike in four cities protesting food shortages or demanding redress of local grievances. Leaders of the Solidarity labor federation in six cities announced plans for new strikes this week.

Solidarity's national committee was to meet Tuesday to discuss the union's response to the resolution in which the Sejm, the Polish parliament, threatened "to equip the government with legal means dictated by the situation."

SOLIDARITY chief Lech Walesa has already called for an end to wildcat strikes. But leaders of striking locals indicated the protests would continue until their demands were met.

"We won't end the strike until we have a real guarantee of conditions in which we can at least survive," said Grzegorz Popielec, spokesman for some 12,000 women textile workers in Zyrardow. They have been on strike for three weeks to protest scarce supplies and poor quality of food.

In Tarnobrzeg, 120 miles south of Warsaw, where more than 120,000 workers have struck heavy industrial plants for over two weeks, the strike committee accused government negotiators of "stubbornness" for demanding the strike be ended before talks begin.

"The strike committee considers all important matters and it will have to consider both the Solidarity leadership and the Sejm resolutions," a committee spokesman said, adding, "There is almost no chance that the strike committee will decide to stop it in the next day."

A parliamentary deputy from Tarnobrzeg said the strike there has cost Poland $5 million in lost sulphur exports.

Prosecutors in the Baltic port city of Szczecin began a criminal investigation of Marlon Jurczyk, a local Solidarity leader and onetime candidate for national union chief.

Local woman hospitalized after accident

A Midland woman was listed in satisfactory condition at Midland Memorial Hospital this morning after the car she was driving collided with a tractor-trailer rig on Interstate 20 Sunday afternoon.

Petra Bernia, 33, of Route 3, Midland, suffered multiple contusions and a compound fracture of the leg in the accident, which occurred six miles west of Midland about 3:45 p.m.

According to police reports, her eastbound 1975 Ford struck the rear of a truck driven by Eugene Lawrence, 45, of Louis, Miss. She was pinned in the wreckage and the Fire Department's Jaws of Life had to be used to extricate her. Lawrence was not injured. A small fire erupted but was quickly extinguished.

Services scheduled for Odessa man

Time is running out for Clark's wedding

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Condemned killer Colin Clark said his mother and fiancée visited him Sunday in a vain effort to persuade him to change his mind and fight his execution scheduled for Thursday.

"Yeah, it's something we've talked about quit a bit. It is tearing them up and me up," Clark said by telephone after meeting with his mother, Jean Beavans; his fiancée, Shirley Hunter, and their 3-year-old son, Dylan, in the state prison at Angola.

But he said his decision to die remains firm, even though Richard Shapiro, the lawyer he fired when he gave up his most recent appeal, told him resuming it would put off electrocution for at least six months to a year.

"It's really difficult," he said, his voice flat and subdued. "I know it's really hurting a lot of people and I can see their view when they're here. But when they leave, I'm still here. And I'd stay here. I look down the road and there just isn't any hope."

Meanwhile, death penalty opponents planned somber protests in three Louisiana cities.

The Louisiana Committee Against the Death Penalty arranged evening gatherings in New Orleans and Lafayette, and a mass in Shreveport. Another rally was planned for Monday in Baton Rouge.

Mrs. Beavans, of Cairo, Ga., has an appeal pending before the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, but Clark said he didn't expect it to be granted.

"I'm not really worried about it. I don't think anything's going to happen from that," he said. No ruling was expected before Monday.

Mrs. Beavans contends that Clark has become deranged from prison life and drugs. Her appeal, filed Saturday, said he needs psychiatric testing to show he is irrational.

Clark has said his mother was being influenced by the American Civil Liberties Union, which hired a lawyer to handle her case.

He said in Sunday's interview that he is not sure if he will be able to get documents from Tallahassee, Fla., in time to allow him to marry Miss Hunter before the execution.

"I don't know. It is looking on the bad side. If I can't get my divorce papers by Tuesday it may be off," he said.

He has said he wants to marry Miss Hunter, of Houma, La., so his son will not bear the stigma of illegitimacy.

Clark, 27, asked for death from the jury that convicted him of killing Baton Rouge restaurant manager Fred Schmidt in 1978, although he maintains he is innocent of the murder.

He once changed his mind and got a stay of an April 5 execution date this year. He then reversed himself again this summer and announced his willingness to die.

Another death row inmate, Timothy Baldwin, is scheduled to die Nov. 14 for the 1978 bludgeoning death of an 85-year-old West Monroe woman during a robbery.

FBI plans to review Levi rules on domestic security

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI plans to review its rules on domestic security investigations following the discovery that four radical leftist groups may have been involved in a murderous Brink's truck robbery.

At issue is whether those rules hamper the agency.

Five radical leftist Weather Underground members are under arrest following the Oct. 20 Brink's job in the New York City suburbs, a subsequent shootout and searches. Five members of the Black Panthers, Republic of New Africa and Black Liberation Army also are held or sought.

Reappearance of the four leftist groups, believed dormant or dead since the early 1970s, seems certain to renew a debate between the FBI and some conservatives over rules established in 1976 by Ford administration Attorney General Edward Levi.

Levi drew up the rules with the FBI to prevent abuses of civil liberties by the bureau like those uncovered by a Senate committee in the mid-1970s, some of which ultimately led to the criminal conviction of two of its top officials.

"We look regularly at these guidelines, and an incident like this automatically triggers a review to see whether we should have known about these people earlier," FBI assistant director Roger Young said in an interview last week.

"Their activities appear to be linked to a certain extent. There may have been some criminal activity on the part of these people in the past I review has to await more details from the investigation to determine whether there were reasonable investigative techniques that would have been available...but for the guidelines."

"At first blush, it's hard to say there were any reasonable investigative steps that would have prevented this, but there's no clear answer yet," Young said.

The Senate security and terrorism subcommittee staff is collecting information on the case and will probably hold hearings, but not before next spring, said Steve Allen, an aide to subcommittee chairman Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala.

"This goes to what the subcommittee is all about: finding ways to prevent the epidemic of terrorism in other countries from coming here," Allen said. But, he added, "We're careful not to jump to conclusions and not to hold hearings before we're ready."

Young said the Brink's figures had not been targets of the FBI's 25 current domestic security investigations, because "we had not been able to connect criminal activity to them."

The debate centers on the criminal standard in the rules. Three years before the standard was imposed, the FBI had more than 21,000 open domestic security investigations, one of which had gone three decades without producing a criminal charge.

To open a full domestic security investigation with informants or agents infiltrating a target group, the bureau must have "specific and articulable facts giving reason to believe that an individual or a group may be engaged in activities which involve or will involve the use of force or violence and which involve or will involve the violation of federal law," the Levi rules say.

In a report by the conservative Heritage Foundation last January, San Francisco, now on the terrorism subcommittee staff, said that standard should be scrapped in favor of investigations "initiated and pursued according to the best judgment of professional counterintelligence officers, limited only by the letter of applicable statutes."

One conservative congressional aide, who asked not to be identified, called the rules "a Catch-22. How can you know when a group begins planning a crime if you can't put an informant inside until they start?"

The Heritage report suggested some government surveillance — from keeping files of publications up to wiretaps and break-ins if necessary — of a list of groups ranging from the Progressive Labor Party to the Ku Klux Klan.

But in an interview three months later, FBI Director William Webster said, "We won't just pick and choose organizations to see if they are doing something they shouldn't be doing. The American people don't want us to do that."

Calling the standard "pretty good," Webster said, "I interpret it now to mean that if anyone is advocating force or violence whose background supports the conclusion that they have the ability and intention to carry it out, we have the right to find out just what's going on."

"We want to be sure we can get in soon enough to head off the bomb if that's possible, although we know it's not always possible," Webster added.

Since Webster took over the FBI, terrorist incidents in the United States dropped from about 100 a year to just 29 last year, though attacks are more frequently against life than property now.

FBI officials say they averted alleged terrorism with arrests of Croatian nationalists in New York last December and prevented alleged racial attacks in Michigan the summer before. In the last year, the FBI has arrested what it believes are leaders of major Croatian and Puerto Rican terrorist groups.

FBI experts say terrorist acts usually require criminal preparations such as illegal purchases of weapons or explosives which can be picked up by normal criminal informants and law enforcement officials before violence occurs.

tures about the FBI's COINTELPRO operation in the 1960s and 1970s to disrupt and discredit civil rights and antiwar demonstrators. The rules also were designed to prevent the kind of activities the FBI undertook in the early 1970s as it unsuccessfully tried to track down the Weather Underground.

Two top FBI officials of that era, Mark Felt and Edward Miller, were convicted in federal court last year of approving illegal break-ins in 1972 and 1973 against innocent friends, relatives and supporters of the Weathermen. The two have since been pardoned by President Reagan.

"The Levi guidelines are far too restrictive," Felt said in an interview last week. He said he was difficult to penetrate the security-conscious leftist radical groups with informants or agents under any rules, but that the Brink's job "is just the tip of an iceberg, and the FBI should advocate to investigate an organization advocating violence before their bombs are about to go off."

Plan man drowns

COMMERCE, Texas (AP) — Rescue workers hoped to mount a full-scale search effort today in the rain-swollen Sulphur River, where a 20-year-old college student disappeared during a weekend outing.

James Robert Sprague of Plano fell into the river Saturday as he and two friends rode the waters in an aluminum canoe, investigators said.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Field-testing Reaganomics

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — If recent indicators are worth a thing, Americans over the next year or so are going to observe how well Reaganomics does when the chips are down and the cards aren't cooperating.

Heretofore, it has had pretty smooth sailing. The public has been with the president. And though it is inevitable, the economic downturn from restrictive policies has been mild and probably late in showing up.

But the economic atmosphere is changing now. Customer's aren't buying. Red ink is spreading. Unemployment is moving up. Plants are closing. Bankruptcies are soaring. The statistical indicators are looking awful.

It now appears that the automakers aren't going to recover this year or probably next, that the administration will be unable to balance the budget in fiscal 1984, and that living standards won't be rising.

As all this happens, the political climate is likely to change. To date, the Reagan administration has been promoting the vision of better times to come. Soon, it may have to ask that people bear with it.

Very few institutional economists have issued forecasts of a major recession, but in reading their remarks nobody can fail to detect that their private worries are greater than their official utterances.

A simple example: Many economists foresee interest rates falling, which on the surface is what everyone seems to want. But at what price? Will rates fall because bidders for money have been killed off?

That is, will conditions be such that business is forced to cancel plans to expand and individuals are compelled by job insecurity and tight budgets to wait another year to buy a car, a house or a new set of furniture?

Will the private sector, on which so much rests, be unwilling or unable immediately to pick up the economic slack from government, leaving the economy in such a state that supply side economics loses credibility even with its advocates within the administration?

With economic discontent translatable into votes, as Reagan himself demonstrated in being elected, will the White House feel compelled to step in with a spending plan contrary to its long-term goal?

"Will the White House panic?" That question headlines a "special analysis" issued last week by Albert Cox Jr., president of Merrill Lynch Economics and a strong supporter of the Reagan economic program.

Cox says he doesn't think so, but he concedes the possibility of "a major recession" and concern in financial markets that Reagan might "throw in the towel" in his fight to bring inflation down.

Such suspicions probably are made to appear more plausible, suggests Cox, by efforts of his former boss, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, to exhort the Federal Reserve to ease up on the money supply.

Though Cox doesn't say so, the same viewpoint might apply to Regan's congressional testimony in regard to budget projections that "things seldom turn out the way you think they're going to." Such projections, of course, were the very keystone of the president's economic program.

And so we come to the first test in the real world, a political world, of the great experiment in new economics, of theories that look very sound in the lab but which have never really been tested in the field.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Making the most of retirement funds

BY BILL DOYLE

Q. My husband opened an individual retirement account (IRA) at our local bank in 1976. Recently, we were presented with material on rolling over that money into an IRA annuity at a life insurance company. The insurance agent had a print-out showing what my husband, who is now 40, could expect to receive in monthly installments from the annuity when he retires at age 65.

The annuity plan, as presented by the agent, looks good. But, we wonder. Would it be better to keep the IRA with the bank?

A. No one can say, for sure, which of the many types of IRAs will perform the best over the next 25 years and provide you with the most income during your retirement years. But, because of recent changes in federal banking regulations, it could be a serious mistake to move that IRA now.

Beginning Jan. 1, "depository institutions" — banks, savings and loan associations and credit unions — will be allowed to offer IRAs without any federal regulatory ceiling on interest rates. And, effective Dec. 1, those institutions will be permitted — but not required — to allow people with existing IRAs to switch their retirement funds to the new higher interest paying accounts, without any early withdrawal penalty.

The same rule changes apply to Keogh plans for self-employed people.

As a result, individual banks, S & Ls and credit unions will be in hot competition for IRAs and Keogh plans. Any depository institution that doesn't raise its interest rates on IRAs and Keogh plans will see the business go elsewhere.

So, the natural advice is to hold off on any move of your husband's IRA until your bank announces what interest it will pay, come Jan. 1, and whether the bank will allow transfer of existing IRAs into higher interest accounts.

Q. When I retire, would it be a good idea to withdraw all the money from my individual retirement account (IRA); pay the income taxes immediately; redeposit the balance; and use the interest to supplement living expenses?

A. It could be a very bad idea, because it would most likely cost you a bundle of tax dollars. The money you have put into your IRA and the money it has earned — interest and/or dividends — is tax-sheltered until you withdraw it. If you withdraw it all at once, you'll be kicked into a higher income tax bracket and be hit with a big tax bill.

There's one "out" here. You could use the "10-year averaging" method for a lump sum withdrawal to reduce your taxes.

For most people, however, it's better to withdraw the money gradually each year and pay taxes on the money you take out of the IRA. Hopefully, you'll live a good deal longer than 10 years past your retirement date. Once you reach age 70½, you have to start withdrawing money from your IRA at a rate based on your life expectancy.

Q. My son, who is single, works for a company that has a small pension plan. He is also self-employed. He has an individual retirement account (IRA) based on his self-employment income. Under the new tax law, will he be able to put $2,000 a year into his IRA?

A. The new federal tax law will allow your son to "triple-dip" in the retirement planning pond, beginning in 1982. He can stay in his company pension plan. He will be able to put $2,000 a year in his IRA — just as any person with earned money income. And he can set up a Keogh plan, based on his self-employed income.

Q. I am the only wage earner in a family of spouse and child. I believe I can put about $2,200 a year into an individual retirement account (IRA) beginning in 1982. Does the money have to be put in as a lump sum, or can it be spread out?

A. You can make your annual IRA contribution any way you like — as a lump sum or in installments. Assuming you have the cash, it's smart to pay in early, so that your money starts earning tax-sheltered interest or dividends sooner.

Because your spouse is not employed, you'll be able to have a "spousal" IRA and tuck away $2,250 a year into your family's own tax shelter.

Eulogy set for anti-Klan victims killed at rally

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Approximately 80 people attended a one-hour service Sunday to honor the five Communist Workers Party members shot to death at an anti-Klan rally two years ago.

The services were held in Maplewood Cemetery on the outskirts of Greensboro, where the shootings occurred at a "Death to the Klan" rally Nov. 3, 1979 and where four of the victims were buried.

Four bouquets of roses were placed on a 4-foot-tall marker above the graves of James Waller, Cesar Cauce, Bill Sampson and Michael Nathan. Nelson Johnson, a local party leader, placed a wreath in the middle of the granite marker.

DEATHS

Joe W. Burke

ANDREWS — Services for Joe W. Burke, 63, of Andrews, were Sunday in the Singleton Funeral Home Chapel of the Chimes in Andrews, with the Rev. John Johnson, L.Z. Hallmark and R.L. Donohoe officiating. Burial was in Andrews Cemetery.

Burke died Saturday in an Andrews hospital.

He moved from Louisville, Ky., to Andrews in 1949, and was self-employed in real estate. He married Jackie Wairner on Oct. 12, 1980, in Andrews. He was a U.S. Army veteran of World War II, a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Seminole, the Moose Lodge, the Senior Citizens' Club in Andrews and the 55-Plus Club in Midland.

Survivors include his wife; four brothers, Chester Burke and Billy Burke, both of Wichita, Kan., Harold Burke of Wichita Falls and Melton Burke Jr. of Medicine Park, Okla.; a niece and a nephew.

William Carter

BROWNWOOD — Masonic graveside services for William Allen Jackson "Bill" Carter, 81, of Clovis, N.M., and formerly of Stanton, were to be at 10 a.m. today in Greenleaf Cemetery in Brownwood with the Rev. Leon Aduddell officiating under the direction of Morelock Funeral Home.

Carter died Thursday in a Clovis hospital.

He was born Jan. 11, 1900, in Tricham. He was married to Lillian Samples on Aug. 1, 1920, in Dougherty, Okla. He had lived in Clovis for 20 years. He was a former train master and retired as a superintendent of Santa Fe Railroad. He was a member of the board of directors of Clovis Hospital Board and the Clovis Salvation Army. He was a member of the Clovis Masonic Lodge, Scottish Rites and Shriners. He was a past patron of the Order of the Eastern Star.

Survivors include his wife; a daughter, Coleta Ludwick of Brownwood; a son, William L. Carter of Temple; two sisters, Mallene Driskell of Brownwood and Evelyn Secrest of Pleasanton; two brothers, Dale Carter of Plainview and Maj. Gen. Warren Carter of Von Ormy; and three grandchildren.

The family has requested that memorials be made to the Shriners' Childrens Hospital.

If space shuttle doesn't succeed, try, try again

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Trade in your car and the dealer might have it on the sales lot an hour later after a quick oil change and a wash. Getting a used spaceship shipshape is a lot more complicated — as NASA is finding out.

When the shuttle Columbia glided majestically to Earth after its maiden flight April 12, officials said the craft had performed so smoothly they hoped to send it aloft again in four months.

But crews encountered unexpected problems, and the August launch target became September, then October and finally Nov. 4 — this Wednesday.

Technicians inspecting Columbia discovered that five struts supporting fuel tanks aboard the vehicle were bent or buckled. It took nearly six weeks to isolate the cause: A shockwave that rippled upward through the vehicle when its two rocket boosters ignited for blastoff.

The pressure generated by the ignition was four times greater than anticipated, and officials feared the force of future launches might seriously damage the shuttle or its payloads.

Several fixes were tested before the National Aeronautics and Space Administration settled on a system of pipes and pumps that spray 400,000 gallons of water into the rocket exhaust holes to dampen the pressure waves. The cost: $2 million and delay.

Columbia, meanwhile, was being serviced in a hangar here. Extensive tests confirmed the engine and electrical systems were in working order. An auxiliary power unit, some electronic boxes, the main landing gear wheels and a few other parts were replaced.

Developing the 30,752 silica tiles that protect the spacecraft from re-entry heat was a major headache before the first launch, contributing to more than two years of postponements. Before the April flight, technicians replaced or strengthened most of them, but left more than 1,000 to be done after Columbia returned from orbit.

In addition, some non-critical tiles were scratched or slightly gouged during the mission — most by ice chips that shook free of a super-cold fuel tank. A total of 350 tiles were replaced, 818 strengthened and about 2,000 repaired.

To prevent an ice buildup on this week's flight, engineers modified a fuel tank venting system.

Workers also fortified the launchpad in areas slightly damaged by rocket exhausts, and crews also removed test equipment needed only on the first flight. And they installed in the cargo bay a 5,300-pound earth resources payload for flight No. 2 and a 50-foot-long mechanical arm that eventually will be used to deploy and retrieve satellites.

There were other nagging, minor delays. A complete systems check in July took five extra days due to minor problems with ground support equipment.

On Aug. 4, Columbia returned to the Vehicle Assembly Building for mating with booster rockets and a fuel tank. Technical trouble forced another five-day delay.

On Aug. 28, the launch schedule was pushed back from Sept. 30 to Oct. 9. Three days after the announcement, Columbia rolled out to its seaside pad for fueling and countdown tests.

All went well until the morning of Sept. 22, when technicians started pumping caustic nitrogen tetroxide propellant into a forward fuel tank. A valve failed and about three gallons of propellant spilled down the outside of the shuttle over an area about 20 feet long.

The propellant reacted chemically with the glue holding the tiles in place and many of them fell off. None was damaged, but 379 had to be decontaminated, waterproofed, tested and glued back on — a painstaking process that, along with other repairs, took several weeks.

Caskets

returned to Haiti

HOMESTEAD AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (AP) — The bodies of 10 of the 33 Haitian refugees who drowned off Hillsboro Beach to a Miami were released to a funeral home, and caskets with the bodies of 23 others were returned to Haiti, the Air Force said.

State Department and Broward County officials decided Saturday on the burial procedure, ending an international tug-of-war over the Haitians who drowned Monday when their tiny sailboat was swamped in heavy surf off the Florida coast.

Base spokesman Sgt. Glen Everett said the bodies had been kept in a refrigerated truck in a Homestead Air Force Base hangar since Thursday, were embalmed Friday by a local funeral home and placed in caskets Saturday.

Late Saturday night, a van and a limousine from Potlter Funeral Home, which is near the north Miami neighborhood known as Little Haiti, arrived at the base for the first of two pickups, Everett said. The funeral home vehicles returned, and by 4:30 a.m. Sunday the 10 bodies had been transferred to the Miami funeral home, Everett said.

Funeral arrangements were, incomplete Sunday.

Masked demonstrators use pickaxes and sledgehammers to smash the wall protecting the construction site of another runway for Frankfurt, West Germany, airport when violent protest against the project erupted Sunday.

MX missile and B-1 bomber may have to wait

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With Congress deeply divided over calls for further spending cuts and tax increases, a top Senate Republican is suggesting that the backbone of President Reagan's military buildup — the MX missile and the B-1 bomber — may have to wait.

Sen. Bob Dole, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said Sunday that he sees little likelihood of passing a "laundry list of 15 to 25 little tax increases" totaling $50 billion to $70 billion over three years. The prospects for any tax increase in 1982 are dim, he added.

If anything, the Kansas Republican said, one or two large tax increases would stand a better chance. Possibilities, he said, include new import fees or excise taxes, a windfall profits tax on natural gas, or a Btu tax on all energy, based on the British thermal unit system of measuring energy production. "It's more and more difficult to get any consensus on increasing taxes, starting with the president, I might add, on down," Dole said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Dole also said government benefit programs such as food stamps and school lunches cannot be cut much more.

And in response to a question, he said delaying Reagan's plan to build the MX missile and B-1 bomber is "a possibility, particularly on the B-1."

The MX and the B-1, the foundation of Reagan's strategic defense buildup, will be the subject of hearings this week by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger testifies on Tuesday and Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. on Wednesday.

Dole said some members of Congress who have supported the B-1 development wonder "can we now afford that expense when we're looking at more cuts in social programs or in increasing taxes. And those of us who have the responsibility are probably taking a little closer look at some of the defense spending, whether it's the MX or the B-1." Dole said he expects word from Reagan within 10 days on what course the administration wants to follow in an effort to rein in the federal deficit. Congress begins work this week on binding budget figures for the rest of the fiscal year that began Oct. 1.

In addition to the tax and budget cuts Reagan got through Congress last summer, the president said he wanted an additional $13 billion in spending cuts and $3 billion in selective tax increases. But the plan was never formally submitted after running into formidable opposition from Democrats and Republicans alike.

World War II returns

Text by Ed Todd

The 1940s returned. The Big Bands played. The Andrews Sisters sang. And an air war was fought. The machinery of war was primed.

Many soldiers, sailors and airmen died for victory on one side. Many more died in defeat on the other.

Let's Remember Pearl Harbor As We Go To Meet The Foe
Pilots scrambled. Fighters and bombers took flight. Airplanes with stars fought those with the swastika and the rising sun markings.

Bombers dropped bombs. Fighters strafed and fought one another in aerial-duels-to-the-death called dogfights.

Victory was sought by the Allies. It was also the quest of the Axis Powers.

The scene was World War II air power re-enacted in air space over Midland Regional Airport Sunday afternoon. And the starring cast of pilots flew vintage aircraft in a show staged by the Confederate Air Force's Desert Squadron of Midland and Odessa.

THE SCENE was nostalgic. The whole show, witnessed by 20,000-plus people, reflected patriotism, freedom from bondage, the drama of climactic warring moments, and the imagined glory of war.

"We do not give this show to glorify war, but to show what it was like in World War II," said CAF Col. Jack Morgan, as he and CAF Col. Don Luttrell teamed up to narrate the four-hour show of U.S. Army Golden Knights skydivers; civilian aerobatic pilots doing loops, rolls, hammer-head stalls and flip-flops; fighter planes strafing and attacking bombers; fighters fighting fighters; and bombers bombing.

Yes, Indeed
"(Those) who fought in World War II say it wasn't very glorious, and it wasn't," assured Morgan, who flew in two wars since he flew combat missions in WWII in the P-47 Thunderbolt and the P-40 Warhawk.

But the CAF show sought to put glory in the missions of the rare old warbirds.

Coming In On A Wing And A Prayer

For awhile, the CAF-staged "war" was held in abeyance, as four aerobatic pilots did some precision flying: Doug Warren in the DeHavilland Chipmunk, Buzz Hurt in the clipped-wing Taylorcraft, Gene Beggs in the Pitts Special, and the barnstorming Jim Franklin in the Waco.

"That doesn't take just a good airplane; that takes guts," said Morgan, as a pilot recovered from a hammer-head stall and went into a half Cuban 8 maneuver.

THE PAST returned. Franklin D. Roosevelt's voice came over the radio: He declared Dec. 7, 1941, as "a date which will live in infamy." Japanese aircraft — the strafing

The Norden bomb-sight in the B-17 Flying Fortress offers an ominous, cross-hairs view of Midland.

Zeros, the bombing Vals and the torpedoing Kates — assaulted the United States Pacific Fleet. A U.S. B-17 Flying Fortress already was airborne and unaware of the sneak attack.

The U.S. Army Air Forces P-40 Warhawk and the Navy Wildcat launched a counter-assault.

Jack Edwards, a Wildcat aviator who got caught up in the war after the 1942 Battle of Midway, reflected on a warbird.

"It (the Wildcat) was the only one that could turn with the Zero and damn near climb with it. They were really nimble."

So was the Warhawk of Flying Tigers fame. The lone P-40 in the CAF battle did a victory roll, and, piloted by Col. Joe Mabee, returned to base.

Another CAF scene depicted the U.S. building up its air power; trainers, such as the PT-17 Stearman, PT-20, PT-19, C-45, AT-6, Harvard, SNJ and BT-13 became airborne.

THE U.S. and its Allies were deep into the war against Japan and Germany.

Praise The Lord And Pass The Ammunition
Three B-25 Mitchells took to the air for bombing runs. The P-51D Mustang, the F4U Corsair, Hellcat, Wildcat, and TBM Avenger took to the air. The Zeros and other Nip aircraft were in pursuit. The bombers' bomb bay doors opened, and the old "warbirds" made low passes again and again. Explosions followed, and flashing orange balls of fire and billowing black smoke appeared in the distance.

"We're going to have to get (oil-field firefighters) Boots 'n' Coots or Red Adair," quipped one spectator to another amid the pyrotechnics. Airplanes were in helter-skelter combat.

Air battles, from Midway to Normandy, and bombing raids, from Ploiesti to Tokyo, were depicted by the old warbirds.

AS THE WAR wore on, "We (the U.S. and its Allies) established air supremacy," said Col. Luttrell.

The B-29 Superfortress and the B-24 Liberator headed skyward. Prop blasts from the show's two P-51D Mustangs and the Warhawk stirred the air and turned light breezes to strong winds. Nazi Germany's air power was represented by pre-war Messerschmitt Me. 108s.

The show again flared up. The B-29 flew again. The A-20 Havoc, which flew earlier, was grounded due to a flat nose wheel.

On the flight line, bona fide American aces, including Tex Hill of the American Volunteer Group's Flying Tigers, took in the show.

Behind the flight line, aviation artist Robert Carlin, displayed his works. And Japanese Zero Ace and Kamikaze commander, Masajiro "Mike" Kawato, and an American Navy aviator, "Ensign" George Gay, who was the only survivor of Torpedo Squadron Eight in the Battle of Midway, autographed copies of their books: "Bye Bye Black Sheep" and "Sole Survivor."

Kawato, at age 18, shot down Gregory "Pappy" Boyington of the Baa Baa Black Sheep Squadron in Boyington's Corsair.

The CAF show, which certainly did not de-glorify the war of the 1940s, began to wane. The blast of the props had died down.

American Craft Museum celebrates anniversary

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

This is a year of celebration for the American Craft Museum — 1981 is the 25th anniversary of the founding of the museum as a permanent record of the excellence of American crafts.

If it were simply a matter of recording the passing of a quarter century, there would be little reason to note the occasion, according to Paul Smith, director of the museum in New York, which is sponsored by the American Craft Council.

However, what is being noted is not merely the passage of years. Instead, the vitality and continued growth of American crafts is where the focus should be and is, in Smith's opinion.

Besides numerous exhibitions and special events this year (the latest exhibit is a kind of bird's eye view of all 233 former shows), museum officials recently announced the projected opening of a second exhibition space of 3,500 square feet to be housed on the main lobby floor of the new headquarters of a large manufacturing concern.

The space (donated by International Paper Co.) will have three contemporary craft shows a year after it opens in the spring of 1982. It is the latest in what has been a career of innovation.

As August Heckscher, director of the Twentieth Century Fund and a former New York administrator of cultural affairs in the early days of the museum, recalled, "The craft museum played a courageous role of leadership from the beginning."

Aileen Osborn Webb, the impetus behind the opening of the museum and a potter herself, saw crafts as a way of providing employment and giving meaning to the lives of Americans.

The museum was established at a time when new ideas were invigorating many areas of life, and inevitably the artistic revolutions of the Bauhaus in design and abstract expressionism in art would be reflected in the methods and images of the craftsman, says Heckscher, adding "Mrs. Webb looked puzzled or sad at times and some craftsmen objected to the avant garde nature of some of the exhibits."

But the museum continued to support experimenting craftsmen. In the late 1960s, when the pursuit of crafts became a way of life for some young people as well as a way of making things, there was a burst of public interest in crafts.

The museum responded to the ferment of the '60s by "kicking up its own heels and joining the general exuberance," recalls Heckscher.

In various themed shows — such as those on the bed, amusements, paper and body coverings — "the museum explored the limits of artistic craftsmanship, reminding us that no corner of the imagination — and no cranny of the home — need be immune to the contagion of the handmade," says Heckscher.

The exhibits continue to explore various aspects of American culture. The message, according to Smith is that "crafts in all their forms are among America's most vital contributions to the world and they provide a significant alternative to an increasingly technical and coldly materialistic world."

Smith says crafts have matured unusually quickly, from what started as a kind of alternative movement with, overall, not very high standards of workmanship, to a fully-developed art form with the highest standards.

"Americans are recognized by all of the world as leaders in crafts. American inventiveness, experimentation and execution are highly admired," he said.

Although the American Craft Museum is in New York, he sees its role as a national one — to introduce to the public through publications and traveling exhibits the best work of today, to report on new directions and to document and collect the works of American craftsmen.

The new gallery to be opened next spring will not only double exhibition space, according to Smith, but will also introduce crafts to new audiences.

"I like the idea of bringing exhibits to people — wherever they gather. One of our most successful shows in this regard was at the San Francisco airport," he recalled.

As for the future, Smith sees a growing role for handmade objects of quality:

DEAR ABBY

Incest illness too lightly treated

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Please give more publicity to a problem that has been "in the closet" much too long. It concerns incest and child molestation.

When this catastrophic crime hit my family of highly respectable, educated people, I handled it all wrong. In our case, it was a grandfather. Half the family was outraged. The other half thought the first half was overreacting, or possibly that we were mistaken about the intentions of a loving old grandfather.

Out of family loyalty, we did not prosecute. We were wrong. Consequently, nothing has been done to get the offender the help he needs.

Abby, this crime must be stopped. I am certain there is much more of it going on than most people realize. The child must be the first concern. Then treatment (forced, if need be) for the sick offender. Please let your readers know that ignoring child molestation hurts everyone.

WITHHOLD MY NAME AND CITY

DEAR WITHHOLD: Child molestation and particularly incest already have one foot out of the closet. There is an organization that has proven to be very helpful.

"Parents United and Daughters and Sons United" chapters have sprung up in many parts of the country. This self-help group is affiliated with a professional treatment program and works closely with the courts. While protection of the child is always given top priority, support is provided for families who want to work out their problems and stay together, and even for those who don't!

Information is available free by writing to: Parents United, P.O. Box 952, San Jose, Calif. 95108. Because this is a non-profit organization, please enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope for a reply.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 39 and work in the stockroom of my father's sportswear store. A man about my father's age (60), who happens to be a good friend of my father, works with me. This "friend" steals merchandise all the time. I'm the only one who knows it because there are just the two of us back there. He makes no effort to hide his stealing from me — he just takes whatever he wants as though it belonged to him!

Should I tell my father, or should I say something to this man? — "C"

DEAR "C": First, tell the "friend" that you've noticed him helping himself to your father's merchandise, and ask if he has some kind of arrangement with your father that permits him to take what he wants without cost.

Then, check it out with your father.

DEAR ABBY: Tears of anger burned my eyes when I read the letter from "Smothered in Maine," who claimed her mother-in-law was doing too much for Karla, her 2-year-old granddaughter. ("She has bought her way into our lives," she said, "and I am sick of it.")

She ridiculed "Gamma's" offer to baby-sit every weekend and resented all the lavish gifts she showered on Karla.

This is to MY Gamma:

Thank you for your generous gifts that often allowed my parents the extra money to add to my education fund.

Thank you for providing time for my mother and dad to be alone together.

Thank you for letting me bake cookies in your magic kitchen and never mentioning the mess.

Thank you for the nights spent in your big bed, and for not being cross when I threw up on your comforter.

For my first roller skates, for telling me when Grandpa went to Heaven, for holding my hand at the dentist, for helping me look for Snuffy for three days when he was lost, and for all the wonderful years and endless hugs, thank you, Grammie. Dear heart, wherever you are, I love you. — BONNIE

Available jobs

NEW YORK (AP) — Environmental problems caused by some products and industrial plants are leading more and more companies to look for qualified engineers and other experts who can cope with these issues, reports an executive recruiter.

According to Dr. Jeffrey Honig of Richards Consultants Ltd., there are more jobs now available for those individuals capable of coming up with solutions that can help solve or deal with such problems as hazardous waste, air pollution and water pollution than at any time previously.

Hobbies for profit

NEW YORK (AP) — The word "investment" should not be used in the collectibles market.

Tell dealers you are a collector so they will respect your knowledge and give you a fairer price, says Abbot Lutz, a professional philatelist.

Stamps, coins, books, paper money, maps and prints are included in the portable collectibles marketplace, Lutz says.

Taxing times

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — Taxpayers should find more "how-to" books on preparing tax returns this winter than ever before.

Susan Reich, director of merchandise buying at Waldenbooks, says there will be "twice as many consumer 'how-to' books on taxes, compared with last year."

Urban voters may influence amendments

By SALLY CARPENTER
Associated Press Writer

Attitudes of urban voters, especially those in Houston, are expected to wield a major influence on the fate of seven proposed constitutional amendments in balloting today.

Of the 750,000 Texans expected to go to the polls today, Secretary of State David Dean predicts 300,000 will be in Houston, where a mayor and city council are being elected.

He says the balance will consist largely of voters in Dallas, where a school board will be elected, and Austin, where voters will decide whether to sell the city's share in the South Texas Nuclear Project.

The proposed amendments range from a long-range water development program to a plan that would let an 81-year-old East Texan keep his farm.

Texas House Speaker Bill Clayton sponsored the proposition that would dedicate half the state's revenue surplus to water development. It would raise the interest rate permitted on state water bonds and would let the state guarantee $500 million in water development bonds issued by local governments.

The second proposed amendment would let the state land commissioner issue titles for land held in good faith for at least 50 years but for which no legal title was obtained. It would help folks such as Jesse Johnson, who bought his 120-acre Leon County farm in 1928 but recently learned the state technically owns the land because of a defect in the original seller's title.

Proposition 1 would allow local governments to grant tax exemptions for renovating property in underdeveloped, abandoned or deteriorated areas. Elected officials could freeze taxes in the "reinvestment zones" and could issue bonds to finance new services to the areas.

No. 3 would create a panel to supervise state spending when the Legislature is not in session. The committee would consist of the governor, lieutenant governor, House speaker and the chairmen of four legislative committees, and could make state budget changes after the appropriations bill is in effect. The panel also could manage distribution of federal block grants that are not designated for a specific purpose.

The fifth proposal would extend a farm products tax exemption to livestock and poultry. An attorney general's ruling five years ago said the animals were not covered, although most local governments don't tax them anyway.

Under the sixth proposed amendment, cities and school districts could grant homeowners tax exemptions with a minimum of $5,000, in addition to the $50,000 writeoff provided by the 1978 Tax Relief Amendment. Exemptions would be up to 40 percent through 1984, 30 percent from 1985 to 1987 and 20 percent thereafter.

Another $250 million in state bonds could be issued for the Veterans' Land Program under No. 7. The proposal also would raise the maximum interest rate from 6 percent to 10 percent. It would permit loans to the 13,500 veterans now in line for them.

Levi Strauss closing its Midland plant

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

The first major non-petroleum related industry to open up in Midland, the Levi Strauss jeans-making plant, will shut its doors Nov. 30, according to a statement released today by the San Francisco office.

"The jeanswear division leased facility has proven itself to be uneconomical despite our extensive efforts to remedy the situation," Levi Strauss officials explained in the release as the reason for closing.

"Levi Strauss & Co. will assist its 210 Midland employees in securing employment in the area, which enjoys an unusually low unemployment rate," officials added.

Grant Billingsley, acting executive vice president for the Midland Chamber of Commerce and manager of the Economic Development Division, said, "The Chamber is sorry to hear of the closing, but we recognize the economic realities. They (Levi Strauss) are representative of an industry that is subject to cyclical changes of the economy.

"Most business people will understand the reasons for them making this decision," Billingsley added. "The employees, he said, 'will be absorbed very quickly' by other companies."

The decision by this company to locate in the industrial park was one of the first successful efforts of the Midland Area Sales Team, which was set up during the oil slump of the late 1960s and early 1970s to try and diversify Midland's economy.

Levi Strauss was the first to open up in the Midland Industrial Park on the southwest edge of the town. During opening ceremonies April 27, 1970, the plant was described as "the first stitch in what promises to be a new pattern of development for this era," by then Chamber President John M. Grimland Jr.

At that time, the facility cost $300,000 and was to employ 300 persons. However, this was envisioned as only a pilot plant with future plans calling for a "super plant" that would employ 1,500 to 2,000 workers. But those plans were never realized.

National sales tax plan considered

WASHINGTON (AP) — A national sales tax to finance Pentagon spending is being considered by Senate Republicans searching for ways to curb swelling budget deficits, sources say.

"It may not go anywhere, but it may," said one source who insisted that the plan is "purely, purely in a talking stage."

"There has just been some discussion about it, no written proposal," the source said.

Tom Griscom, a spokesman for Senate Republican leader Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee, refused to confirm that such a proposal is under consideration.

"My boss, at this point, is not considering any specific tax proposal," Griscom said. "We're awaiting a chance for the (Republican) congressional leaders to meet with the president. It is the president's program and it is his decision to make as to what is in his program."

Griscom did acknowledge, however, that "Senator Baker has discussed the possibility of establishing a national defense fund, but there have been no recommendations for how such a fund should be established and if, it was, how it would be funded. He (Baker) has not advocated a sales tax for such purposes."

The sources, who insisted on remaining anonymous, said Baker has discussed the plan with Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, and it also has been mentioned to other Republican senators and White House budget director David A. Stockman.

The idea would be to provide money for defense spending "entirely from one source of revenue," such as a sales tax which would be in effect nationally for "a couple of years," the source said.

There was no indication of the level at which such a tax might be imposed or what goods would be covered.

Sources said it is not contemplated that such a measure would be enacted next year — an election year — although the aim would be to provide revenues for 1983 and 1984.

The Reagan administration has requested $181.8 billion for defense in 1982, $214.9 billion in 1983 and $242.6 billion in 1984.

Public opinion polls show that increased defense spending enjoys widespread support, suggesting that linking a new levy to the military budget might be one way of lessening traditional opposition to higher taxes.

A national sales tax is among numerous plans that congressional Republicans have under study as they search for methods to shrink the budget deficit.

Budget writers in the House and Senate begin work Wednesday on legislation that will set binding revenue floors and spending ceilings for the 1982 fiscal year that began Oct. 1. The resolution that both the House and Senate finally agree upon will set guidelines for tax-writing and other committees to follow as Congress decides on a mix of spending reductions and tax increases to hold down deficits.

Democrats on the Senate Budget Committee called a news conference this afternoon to announce their plans for dealing with the budget resolution. A draft "statement of principles" obtained by The Associated Press says the Democrats "can neither condone nor support those administration policies that would force additional spending cuts in areas that are critical to the safety and well-being of our nation's future."

While not mentioning the national sales tax, Baker told reporters Monday that Senate Republicans are still in the "list-building stage" in trying to come up with tax proposals.

He said that while he expects Congress to approve a tax increase in 1982, he doubts it would have much effect in the current fiscal year.

Tax increases for the current year are a "diminishing possibility," he said. "Three or four billion (dollars) would probably be an upper limit," he said. The bulk of the tax bite would come in fiscal 1983 and 1984, he added.

However, Baker made an unusual departure from President Reagan's legislative script when he said Congress should approve a new windfall profits tax if it decides to phase out price controls on natural gas.

Baker said he favors a "phased and gradual" decontrol of natural gas, along with "some kind of tax."

One recent study estimated that immediate lifting of controls, coupled with a tax like the one voted on the oil industry, could raise $75 billion over four years.

But White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Monday that the president remains opposed to a "windfall profits" levy and would veto any legislation imposing one.

been reported that the Soviet Union is prepared to sell Jordan those weapons not available from the U.S.

Hussein wants Soviet weapons

Demonstration of U.S. missiles on agenda

By STEVE BREWER
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — King Hussein of Jordan will get a demonstration of the U.S. Army's I-Hawk ground-to-air missile system during his weapons shopping trip to Fort Bliss next week, officials say.

Defense officials have said the monarch is in the market for such a system and Jordanian soldiers are being trained at Fort Bliss to operate the I-Hawk, according to Lt. Col. Ed McDonald, a spokesman for the army base.

McDonald said the 16-foot missile will be fired at a lying drone on Bliss ranges by the U.S. Army's 11th Brigade as Hussein watches during his Nov. 11 visit.

Jordan has purchased weapons, including the original Hawk system, from the United States for the past two decades.

Officials said the arms topic did not arise during Hussein's talks with President Reagan on Monday, but it is expected to be discussed when the king meets with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig.

Fort Bliss officials were hesitant to discuss the missile firing and it was not on a schedule of events for the visit released to the press.

McDonald at first said only that the king would "go out and observe U.S. air defense units," but he later confirmed the missile firing.

Nine Jordanian soldiers currently are being schooled in the I-Hawk system at Fort Bliss and two other Jordanians are in officers' school there.

"We think there are hopeful things about the Saudi peace plan that indicate at the very least that it is possible for countries which have been enemies to sit down and begin a peace process," Weinberger said after a visit with Hussein at Blair House, the government guest house.

"We hope very much that that is what will ultimately come out of it all," Weinberger said. "I think the president's statement earlier about it is the adequate expression of what we feel."

Another senior U.S. official, briefing reporters on Hussein's visit under the ground rule that he not be identified, said Reagan believed the Saudi plan "indicated that there was an initiative where none existed before."

But he said Reagan "did not deviate, nor did he intend to deviate, from the adherence of the U.S. government to the Camp David process as the framework for achieving peace in the Middle East."

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin has condemned the Saudi plan in a letter to Reagan, warning that U.S. encouragement of a Saudi role could endanger chances for achieving a comprehensive Middle East peace.

Begin called the plan a description of "how to liquidate Israel in stages."

The Saudi plan calls for Israeli withdrawal from all occupied territory, the establishment of an independent Arab state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, as well as the affirmation of the right for the states in the region to live in peace.

Israeli diplomatic sources said a primary objection to the plan is that it does not mention Israel by name — an implicit symbol of recognition — and has no provision for peace negotiations with the Jewish state.

At a black-tie state dinner for 100 guests in the State Dining Room of the White House, Hussein told Reagan in a toast that their meetings had left him "more encouraged than I have been for a long, long period."

"I have a greater faith that all will eventually be right," Hussein said.

Reagan led off the toasts by describing the quest for peace in the Middle East as "one of the most vexing problems of the post-war world."

He praised Hussein as one who "has never abandoned the belief that people of good will through dedication and vision can find the means to bring peace with justice, dignity and security to his region."

In public welcoming ceremonies on the South Lawn of the White House on Monday morning, Hussein portrayed himself as a champion of the Arab cause.

Officer Lowe resigns force

A city police officer whose Oct. 20 suspension was upheld by an administrative appeals panel last week has resigned from the force, apparently as a result of having his duties changed when he returned to work Monday.

Officer Terry Lowe, a three-year veteran of the force, was suspended indefinitely without pay by Chief of Police Wayne Gideon after allegedly mistreating a prisoner Oct. 16. An appeals panel composed of the city manager, the personnel director and a police officer of Lowe's choice voted 2-1 Friday to uphold the suspension but limit it to 12 days. The panel refused to go along with Gideon's recommendation that the suspension be permanent, however.

When Lowe showed up for work Monday, he reportedly was told by Gideon that he was being reassigned from night patrol duty to duty at Midland Regional Airport, a job many officers feel is a "punishment tour" for experienced officers who fall out of favor with Gideon, according to police sources.

Neither Gideon nor Lowe could be reached for comment by press time.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Alcoholism an 'equal opportunity' tragedy

Dear Dr. Solomon: In one of your columns, you mentioned that men who drink too much and brag about their sex lives are doing just that — bragging — because alcohol interferes with a man's sexual performance.

My question is: What about women? Does alcohol affect them the same way? Or don't women drink too much? — Bryan, Detroit, Mich.

Dear Bryan: Alcoholism, like smoking, has become an equal opportunity disease. It does not discriminate between men and women.

A study conducted at the University of Utah College of Medicine revealed that many women alcoholics suffer from sexual, gynecologic and obstetric problems. The study included 44 women, 17 to 57 years of age. Their marital status ranged from single to divorced to separated to widowed.

Almost twice as many of these women (19 percent) said they had never experienced orgasm as is true of the general population (8 to 10 percent). An additional number of women said they even experienced difficulty in becoming sexually aroused.

In regard to gynecologic and obstetric problems, 40 percent of women alcoholics had had at least one miscarriage. Moreover, those with the longest histories of alcoholism were more likely to have problems with infertility. Other significant problems included venereal disease and menstrual difficulties.

To repeat: Being female does not provide immunity against sexual dysfunction associated with excessive drinking.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Two years ago I had an abortion because my husband and I simply weren't prepared to have a family. Now we would like to have a child. Will the abortion have any effect on the pregnancy? — Fran, Anchorage, Alaska.

Dear Fran: The available evidence on the effect of an induced abortion on a subsequent pregnancy has been conflicting. One recent review of a number of studies suggests that it is not so much whether a woman has had an abortion, but the method used that determines whether a subsequent pregnancy will be complicated.

According to Dr. Willard Cates, chief of the Abortion Surveillance Unit of the Centers for Disease Control, none of the studies proves that induced abortions led to complications such as spontaneous abortion, prematurity or low birth-weight. When one of these does occur, however, it seems to be associated most often with dilation and curettage.

As I noted, however, the issue is still controversial, and the evidence still inexact.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine, who is in his early 30s, has been told he has multiple sclerosis. Isn't this unusual at his age? — Don Dear Don: There's nothing unusual about the age. Most people with multiple sclerosis are between 20 and 40 years of age. The disease rarely occurs after age 45.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've read that some drug companies are starting to produce human insulin for diabetics. If diabetics have not been using human insulin until now, what have they been using? — Carl, Madison, N.J.

Dear Carl: Most diabetics who use insulin now take a combination of beef and pork insulin, which is slightly different from human insulin. One of its side effects is an allergic reaction which occurs in five percent of patients. It is hoped that human insulin will not cause an allergic reaction since it will be the same as that produced by the body.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine was treated in a hyperbaric chamber because of a foot infection that the doctor said could require amputation.

Will you explain how this treatment is supposed to work? — Lil, Norfolk, Va.

Dear Lil: During hyperbaric treatment, the patient is given oxygen while he or she is in a chamber in which pressure greater than surface pressure is maintained. If an air bubble is obstructing a blood vessel, the pressure shrinks the bubble and thereby helps restore circulation. The oxygen also helps repair damage to small circulatory vessels and speeds the healing process.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My doctor says he's not going to advise for or against a coronary bypass operation; all he's going to do is give me the facts. What's your opinion? Is a bypass operation a good idea? — Keith

Dear Keith: It is difficult enough to make a recommendation about the advisability of surgery when the patient is known; it is impossible to make an intelligent recommendation from a distance.

Even among experts in the field, the value of the coronary artery bypass operation is in some dispute, partly because it is so difficult to evaluate the patient's quality of life following surgery. This is a very subjective area; a quality of life that may be very satisfactory to one person, may be intolerable to another.

A study of 100 coronary artery bypass surgery patients at the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York City showed that most of the 76 long-term survivors said they had substantial relief from pain and were generally satisfied with their condition.

The same percentage of patients who were working before the operation were working nine months after the operation. But a return to work may not be a useful indicator of a successful outcome since it deals with only one facet of life.

The fact is that any recommendation for surgery must be individualized; what may be right for one person may be a disaster for another. Apparently your doctor believes in giving you the facts and letting you make the decision. If this approach does not work for you, why not get a second opinion? But be advised that differences of opinion about the benefits of coronary bypass surgery continue to be the rule in the medical community.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been told that I have gallstones, but that I do not need an operation — yet. The idea of surgery frightens me. Is there any way — for example, diet — that gallstones can be eliminated without the need for an operation? — Ginny

Dear Ginny: Experiments that have been under way for some time indicate that gallstones, which are bits of cholesterol in the gallbladder, can be dissolved with a natural bile acid present in the gallbladder, called chenodeoxycholic acid. The findings are now being reviewed by the Food and Drug Administration before approval for its manufacture is granted.

More than 900 subjects were included in the studies, and they have been followed for two years, while chenodeoxycholic acid produced some adverse side effects, such as diarrhea, it was found to be safe and effective in many patients. On the other hand, very little dissolution of gallstones was found in patients given a placebo.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I remember being told that normal blood pressure is 100 plus the person's age for the upper figure, and 70 plus the person's age for the lower figure. Does this rule still hold? I haven't heard it mentioned lately. — Peter, Great Neck, L.I.

Dear Peter: The "rule" you cite is not only misleading, it could be downright dangerous. A 35-year-old man walking around with a diastolic pressure (the lower figure) of 105 (70 plus 35) had better get to a doctor.

DEATHS

Otto Lupardus

Otto O. Lupardus, 89, died Sunday in a Midland nursing home.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Wednesday at the Newbie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Bob Blazer, pastor of Midland Christian Church, officiating. Burial will be at Resthaven Memorial Park.

Lupardus was born Oct. 2, 1892, in Tusculum, Mo. He spent his early life in Missouri and started work in the oil fields at Sapulpa, Okla. He worked in a number of places in other parts of Oklahoma before moving to East Texas and Illinois, returning to Oklahoma in 1936. He moved to Hobbs, N.M., in 1946 where he worked for Getty Oil Co. He retired as district clerk in 1957 and moved to Midland. He was a member of the Midland Christian Church.

Survivors include his wife, May E. Lupardus of Midland; a son, John W. "Bill" Lupardus of Midland; a brother, Lynn Lupardus of Eldon, Mo.; five grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Beulah T. Moran

Rosary for Beulah T. Moran, 88, of 2206 Princeton Ave., will be recited at 7 p.m. today at the Newbie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel. Mass will be said at 10 a.m. Tuesday at St. Ann's Catholic Church with Father Leo Gavin officiating. Burial will follow at Fairview Cemetery.

Mrs. Moran died Sunday morning at her residence following a lengthy illness.

She was born April 29, 1893, in Bellevue, Mo. She grew up in Georgetown and graduated from Southwestern University in 1918. She then taught school in Kirbyville, Fredericksburg, Midland and Dallas. She came to Midland during World War I and taught for several years. She married Earl J. Moran June 25, 1924, in Dallas. She was a member of St. Ann's Catholic Church.

Survivors include a daughter, Mary Nell Moran of Midland; two sisters, Lula T. Barnes of Clarksdale, Miss., and Nell Hodges of Fort Worth; and several cousins, nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to a favorite charity.

Berkeley

newspaper
mentor dies

BERKELEY, Calif.

(AP) — Max Scherr, whose strident, sexy Berkeley Barb chronicled and celebrated the New Left of the San Francisco Bay area from the inside for 15 years, has died of cancer at age 65.

Friends said no memorial services are planned for Scherr, who died Saturday.

Scherr's creation was often called the nation's premier underground newspaper, with a circulation that reached 90,000 in 1968 as it followed — and sometimes helped lead — the political and social eruptions that centered in and around Berkeley in the 1960s.

The first issue, with its crude, blackboard graphics, was laid out on Scherr's kitchen table and he sold it for a dime in the coffeehouses of Telegraph Avenue, just south of the University of California.

The publisher himself was often the target of anger — his low-paid workers once founded their own newspaper and called him a "capitalist bloodsucker."

The paper also was often attacked for exploiting women in its thick section of sex ads.

Cecil Rumfield

WINNSBORO — Services for Cecil W. Rumfield, 61, of Winnsboro and formerly of Midland, were to be today in the Tapp Funeral Home at Sulphur Springs. Burial was to be in the Como Cemetery, Sulphur Springs.

Rumfield died of a heart attack in a Sulphur Springs hospital Sunday.

The son of the late Mr. and Mrs. H.A. Rumfield, he was born June 29, 1920, in Hamlin. He moved to Stanton in 1933 and attended school in Courtney. He began his career as a butcher in Stanton and moved to Midland in the 1950s. He married Jewell Bennett in 1956 and retired in 1976.

Survivors include his wife; two daughters, Barbara and Nancy, both of San Antonio; a stepdaughter, Jackie Wilson of Odessa; a stepson, Danny Bennett, also of Odessa; three brothers, Claude Rumfield of Tustin, Calif., Turner Rumfield of Seattle, Wash., and R.D. Rumfield of Grand Saline; three sisters, Wanda Coomer of Midland, Minnie Corley of Abilene and Mrs. Jerry Burns of San Antonio; three step-grandchildren and several aunts and uncles.

Dome growth continues at Mount St. Helens

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — A "moderate" level of rockfalls, avalanches and steam emissions in Mount St. Helens' crater indicates the volcano is continuing its latest non-explosive eruption, officials say.

That eruption, which began Friday, is producing a new lobe of lava on the northern portion of the lava dome in the volcano's amphitheater. "Seismic activity at the mountain is going down, but it's not down to low levels," Thom Corcoran, a U.S. Forest Service spokesman, said Monday.

The U.S. Geological Survey says dome growth is continuing, but at a much slower rate than on Friday and Saturday, Corcoran said.

Two fighter
jets collide

EGLIN AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (AP) — Two F-15 fighter jets collided during a refueling mission 22,000 feet over the Gulf of Mexico, sending one plane plummeting to a crash while the second limped back to base, an Eglin Air Force base spokesman said.

The pilot of the downed Eagle aircraft, who may have ejected from his aircraft, is missing. The second pilot was not hurt and his plane had only limited damage, according to spokesman Lt. Craig McDaniel.

Air Force and Coast Guard planes, boats and helicopters were scouring an area about 60 miles south of Panama City, Fla., where the plane crashed Monday night, McDaniel said.

An Air Force base systems command spokesman who refused to be identified said the pilot of the KC-130 refueling tanker reportedly saw what appeared to be an ejection seat pop out of the craft.

The KC-130 pilot also "saw something flying from the colliding aircraft, which may have been an ejection seat," he said.

"Someone reported seeing a flash," said Maj. Bill Campbell, a base information officer. "But the aircraft was not on fire when it was last seen," he said.

The least damaged jet made it back to Eglin with "some structural damage" and extensive fuel leaks, he added.

"We were lucky the second one made it back," McDaniel said.

Ford suffers case of pneumonia

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — A bout with bronchial pneumonia forced former President Gerald Ford to cancel a speaking engagement in Montgomery today.

J. Walker Whittle, president of Alabama Christian College, said Monday that Ford could not attend the fund-raising dinner for the school because of the illness, which he described as "not serious."

Whittle said Gov. Fob James and Montgomery Mayor Emory Folmar would substitute for the recuperating Ford at the dinner.

TOKYO (AP) — Both orchestras are celebrating their 100th anniversaries, but one conductor says he still feels like the other conductor's student.

Herbert von Karajan, 73, conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic, was Seiji Ozawa's teacher 20 years ago. Now Ozawa, 43, conducts the Boston Symphony.

Both are appearing here this week.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Film and television star Rock Hudson is expected to spend the next two weeks in a hospital after heart bypass surgery, described by his manager as "an unqualified success."

"His heart is functioning perfectly on its own, with no signs of any complications," said Tom Clark, personal manager for the 55-year-old actor.

Arteries feeding the heart muscle were bypassed in surgery Monday at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center.

"We're lucky they caught it this early," Clark said. "The doctors said he could have had a fatal heart attack within a month."

After his hospital stay, Hudson will recuperate at home for about six weeks, Clark said.

EWEN, England (AP) — "When are you going to stop making my life a total misery?" Prince Charles snapped at a posse of press photographers when they outfoxed him on a fox hunt.

Charles, looking forward to a day away from the glare of publicity, chasing foxes across the countryside, glowered angrily Monday when he realized that he had failed to give his pursuers the slip.

The 32-year-old heir to the British throne had been expected to join the Beaufort Hunt near Tetbury in the County of Gloucestershire for the first hunt of the fox season.

Tetbury is just a mile from his new home at Highgrove House where he and his wife, Princess Diana, have gone to live.

Everett paternity case goes to jury

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jurors must not be influenced by sympathy or passion in deciding whether actor Chad Everett is the father of an 8-year-old boy born to former movie extra Shelia Scott, a judge advised.

In his instructions to the Superior Court jury Monday, Judge Raymond Cardenas said the key question to be resolved is whether Everett, 45, had sexual intercourse with Ms. Scott on the day she claims her son was conceived.

A jury began deliberations Monday in the paternity suit lodged against Everett by Ms. Scott, 44, a sometime extra on Everett's since-cancelled "Medical Center" television series.

Everett claimed during the trial that he never had sexual intercourse with Ms. Scott on the night of Aug. 16, 1972. Her son, whom she named Dale Andre Lee Everett, was born May 25, 1973.

Cardenas told the jurors to disregard the boy's name in reaching their decision.

He said that if the jury decided Everett did have intercourse with Ms. Scott as she claimed, it must then take into consideration the results of relatively new human leukocyte antigens blood tests introduced as evidence at the trial.

LHS band takes top honors

The Lee High School Rebel Band rifles, flags and percussionists received top honors in the recent San Angelo Auxiliary Championship contest.

Receiving first division ratings were the color guard, which is a combination of rifles and flags; the rifle line; a rifle duet by Sandy Millwee and Lori Brewer; and a rifle duet by Valerie Hicks and Shelley McCombs.

The flag line took second place and the percussionists received third place honors.

Bands from all over the West Texas region entered the contest. The Rebel Band presented its trophies to Lee High School at a pep rally Oct. 30.

Thatcher, attorney general accused of covering up spy ring

LONDON (AP) — A Laborite member of Parliament has accused Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and her attorney general of trying to cover up the extent of the Soviet spy ring in British intelligence services. He renewed his demand for a full investigation.

"It seems that the attorney general misled the House," Dennis Canavan told the House of Commons Monday. "It seems, too, that the prime minister was involved in a cover-up."

Canavan's charges stemmed from the revelation during the weekend by a former military intelligence agent, Leo Long, that during World War II he passed secrets to the Russians through art historian Anthony Blunt and confessed in 1964 when Blunt did.

Long said he had not been formally given immunity from prosecution when he confessed, as Blunt was. But he said he was told by counter-espionage officials that he probably would never be prosecuted.

Canavan and other members of Commons were angered because Attorney General Sir Michael Havers told them in 1979, after Blunt's treachery came to light, that he was the only double agent in the security services who had been granted immunity since World War II.

"It seems to me that this man (Long) did, in fact, receive immunity from prosecution," said Canavan. "I am still convinced that there is a massive Establishment cover-up here."

Canavan said he would "reiterate my demand for a public inquiry into the operation of the entire British security service system" since the war.

A Conservative member of Commons, Harvey Proctor, said he would demand that Mrs. Thatcher specify whether Long had access to information about British counter-intelligence operations against the Russians in Germany between 1946 and 1950.

Long was a member of a spy ring of pro-Communist Cambridge students that included Blunt, who later became one of the world's leading art historians; Donald MacLean and the late Guy Burgess, who defected to Moscow in 1951; and Harold "Kim" Philby, who joined them in 1963.

After Blunt's connection with the group was revealed, there were reports of spying for the Russians by other members of the intelligence service. But none had been proved until The Sunday Times tracked Long down.

British Leyland workers vote to call off 3-day-old walk-out

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — Striking British Leyland car workers, defying their shop stewards, were voting 2-1 today in favor of calling off a 3-day-old walkout over a pay dispute that could cripple the state-owned company.

Engineering union officials said the overall vote from all the plants would be added together and the collective majority would decide whether the strike continues.

Union shop stewards voted Monday 208-12 to reject the contract and urged the company's 58,000 striking workers to follow suit.

Company chairman Sir Michael Edwardes had said Saturday that if there was no further disruption and strikers voted to return to work he would withdraw his threat to liquidate the company and fire strikers without notice or lay-off pay.

MERANO, Italy (AP) — World champion Anatoly Karpov and challenger Viktor Korchnoi appeared headed for their seventh draw today in the 12th game of the world chess championship.

"It should be a draw," said one of the Soviet champion's seconds, grandmaster Lev Polugaevsky, shortly after Korchnoi sealed his 41st move Monday night.

"It looks like a draw," said another grandmaster, Jan Timman of the Netherlands. Karpov, playing white, was a pawn ahead, but experts said they believed the challenger could hold the game to a draw with accurate play.

U.S. grandmaster Lev Alburt said he thought Karpov missed a good opportunity at move 23 when he could have used the pawn instead of the bishop to capture the bishop.

Her face covered by a scarf, Sonya Staff walks from the Rockland County Courthouse Monday after a bail hearing for her daughter Eve Rosahn. Ms. Rosahn is charged with aiding members of a gang that held up a Brink's armored car Oct. 20.

Cynthia Boston bail set at $250,000

NEW YORK (AP) — With her lawyer protesting that charges against her were "totally fabricated," bail was reduced from $500,000 to $250,000 for Cynthia Boston, charged with conspiracy involving a Brink's truck robbery and three killings last month.

Meanwhile, in Rockland County Court in New City, Eve Rosahn, the woman accused of supplying two vehicles used in the bloody heist in which two policemen and one Brink's guard were killed, also was held Monday on $250,000 bail.

Miss Rosahn, 30, faces up to 15 years in prison if convicted on charges of criminal facilitation.

Earlier in the day, in U.S. District Court in Manhattan, Miss Boston's arrest in Mississippi on federal conspiracy charges last week was denounced by her lawyers, William Kunstler and Chokwe Lumumba, who is also a regional vice president of an organization calling itself the Republic of New Afrika.

MISS BOSTON, 33, was said to be minister of information for the New Afrika group, which seeks to make an independent black nation out of the territory of five Southern states.

Lumumba charged that Miss Boston was arrested by "a heavily armed band of U.S. terror troops" on "totally fabricated" charges and that "she was thousands of miles away at the time of the Brink's incident."

At Miss Rosahn's bail hearing, Judge Harry Edelstein fixed the $250,000 bail despite a claim by the state that she was a poor bail risk.

"The court feels this is a serious matter and it would be very easy to set no bail," Edelstein declared. But he added that he was persuaded that the defendant, who has lived all her life in New York City, and whose mother was present in court, should have bail set in a sum "large enough to make sure she appears in court."

"That bail isn't reasonable; it's punitive," declared Miss Rosahn's attorney, Sharon Flood.

EDELSTEIN ORDERED the defense bail application and the district attorney's answering papers sealed from press and public. The judge said they contained hearsay information from New York City police and the FBI about Miss Rosahn's reputation and character.

Outside court, Rockland County District Attorney Kenneth Gribetz denied a defense charge that his office was responsible for Miss Rosahn being fired from her New York City job during the course of the Brink's investigation. He did not say where she had worked.

plans to move her from the Rockland County Jail, as has been done in the case of four suspects charged in the robbery-murders.

Three of four people arrested in Nyack, N.Y., and charged with taking part in the Oct. 20 heist and killings were described by the FBI as members of the radical Weather Underground. They were the long-sought Katherine Boudin, Judith Clark and David Gilbert.

MISS BOSTON'S arrest resulted from a photo identification of her as one of the people seen loading the contents of a Weather Underground "safe house" in Mount Vernon onto a van after the Brink's robbery.

The apartment contained bloody clothing and a fingerprint of another person, William Johnson, for whom a warrant has been issued.

Clark to fight for life

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Condemned killer Colin Clark, who once said he'd rather die than live out his days in prison, now says the reprieve his mother won from an appeals court is a sign from God that he should fight his death sentence.

"It has to be," said Clark, whose execution — scheduled for early Thursday — was postponed Monday by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

"Being two days within death and then having this happen — it's a sign," Clark said.

"I didn't want to die. There were things that were brought to my attention in the last couple of days that make it look a lot better for my case," he said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press a few hours after he was returned to Death Row. He did not say what he had learned.

ALTHOUGH CLARK has always maintained he is innocent in the death of 24-year-old restaurant manager Frederick Schmidt, he gave up his appeals last summer, saying he would rather die than spend the rest of his life in prison.

The 5th Circuit ruled on a plea from his mother, Mrs. Jean Beavans of Cairo, Ga. She contended her son was suicidal and deranged by drugs and prison life.

The appeals court ordered state District Judge John V. Parker to hold a "full and meaningful hearing to determine the mental competence of Colin Clark to waive future legal action in his behalf."

"That's my miracle!" said Clark, 27. Last month he said only an act of God could keep him from walking to Louisiana's electric chair Nov. 5.

He had been moved to the Death House that holds the electric chair last Thursday. Mrs. Beavans took the case to the federal appeals court late Saturday after Parker rejected her argument Thursday and rejected a request for a stay on Friday.

"I was ready to see the Lord, but I don't think the Lord was ready to see me," he said.

"I hope I will get a new trial," he said.

CLARK MAINTAINS Schmidt was stabbed 30 times and shot in the head by Michael Glover, an accomplice who received a life sentence after testifying against Clark.

The Rev. Jimmy Spillman, Clark's pastor, said they were talking about the possibility of a stay just before Clark learned of the 5th Circuit order.

"He and I had just been talking about it and he had told me just what he told you, that if he got a stay he would look at it as a miracle from God," Spillman said. "But he didn't anticipate a stay."

Clark said his fiancée, Shirley Hunter, and another minister were with him when a reporter from WAFB-TV in Baton Rouge told him about the stay during a telephone conversation.

Miss Hunter had arrived at the Death House cell only five minutes before that happened, Spillman said.

"I was standing right beside him, anticipating him hanging up because he had said, 'Good-bye,'" said Spillman.

"All of a sudden he said, 'Really?' and he looked at me and said, 'I got a stay.'"

The four-paragraph order imposed an indefinite stay on the execution. Lawyers had said such action could put it off at least six months.

Nordiques rally to beat Canadiens

QUEBEC (AP) — For most teams, being down 4-1 to the Montreal Canadiens after one period might be a sign of poor preparation, but the Quebec Nordiques apparently are no ordinary National Hockey League club.

"I think we were perhaps even a little too well prepared," said Coach Michel Bergeron, of the Nordiques' first-period problems in Quebec's 5-4 victory over Montreal in Monday night's only NHL game.

"But we are a young team with a lot of character and we never gave up. We did not depart from our game plan except for the first period, when we made a few mistakes.

"We eventually forced the play and created our own openings, starting in the second period."

Left wing Marc Tardif, who scored two goals for the Nordiques, and played what Bergeron described as the "best game I've seen him play for Quebec," had a somewhat different interpretation of his club's slow start.

"We only arrived back in town on Sunday night from Edmonton," said Tardif, in reference to the team's return from an 11-4 drubbing by the Oilers on Saturday that featured a four-goal performance by Wayne Gretzky.

"This is possibly why we took a while to get going. But we caught our breath after the first half of the game and found our legs as well."

Real Cloutier scored the winning goal for Quebec at 10:02 of the third period, the last of three unanswered goals in the final 20 minutes by the Nordiques.

Anton and Marian Stastny had the other Quebec goals while Guy Lafleur, Mario Tremblay, Rejean Houle and Steve Shutt replied for Montreal.

Georgia players beaten up in romp over Temple

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — University of Georgia football coaches say you couldn't tell by the condition of the players that the Bulldogs had just romped to 49-3 victory over Temple.

"All the coaches were a little bit disturbed that there were so many beat up players after the Temple game. Some of our players couldn't even move around without pads today," offensive coordinator George Haffner said after Georgia practiced Monday in preparation for Saturday's game against Florida in Jacksonville.

"With the players who were able to practice today," he said, "we tried to get a good recognition of Florida's offenses and defenses. We had an excellent scouting session on Florida's personnel. We will have to get to know Florida's personnel very well because they are the best team personnel-wise we have faced this season."

The Bulldogs worked out in sweat clothes for about 90 minutes before breaking up for offensive and defensive team meetings to study Florida.

The game will be nationally televised. Starting time of the contest in the Gator Bowl has been shifted from 1:30 p.m. to 3:50 p.m. to accommodate television.

"I think it's really good for both schools to have a nationally televised game," Coach Vince Dooley said. "All our players are pleased and excited to be playing in front of such a large audience. It is certainly excellent exposure for both Georgia and Florida."

"I feel that ABC probably recognized the great tradition of the Georgia-Florida game and the many exciting contests the two schools have provided," Dooley said. "The game is always hard-fought and physical. Now that it is on national television, it will add even more color and excitement to the game."

"We only have one incentive going into the game, the SEC championship, but Florida has about 400 incentives to win after last season's game."

Georgia won last year's contest 26-21 on a last-minute, 93-yard touchdown pass from Buck Belue to Lindsay Scott.

Georgia is 7-1 overall and 4-0 in the Southeastern Conference. Florida is 5-3 and 2-2 in the SEC.

Royals lose to Japan All-Stars, 7-3

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese rookies-of-the-year Tatsunori Hara of the Yomiuri Giants and Hiromichi Ishige of the Seibu Lions walloped home runs Tuesday to spark the Japan All-Stars to a 7-3 victory over the touring Kansas City Royals.

Playing before Crown Prince Akihito and 48,000 fans in Tokyo's Korakuen Stadium, the Royals used pitchers Larry Gura, Dennis Leonard, Paul Splittorff and Dan Quisenberry in a vain effort to hold the Japanese in check.

And they got a two-run homer in the first inning from Willie Aikens.

But the Japanese, made up of the best players from 12 professional teams, came back in the bottom of the first inning to take the lead, and were never headed. Hara's home run proved the difference.

The loss was the first for the visiting American

Eagles may have sights on Thurman

DALLAS (AP) — Dennis Thurman says he will probably be a marked man when the Dallas Cowboys and Philadelphia Eagles tangle again Dec. 13 in Texas Stadium.

The Cowboys' cornerback knocked Eagle wide receiver Harold Carmichael out of a game last year to end his 127-game reception streak.

Thurman decked quarterback Ron Jaworski Sunday in Dallas' 17-14 National Football League victory and was flagged for spearing with his helmet. Jaworski left the game in the fourth quarter with sore ribs and a bruised left arm and did not return.

"I probably will be (picked on) by the Eagles...they'll probably try to get me on the specialty teams," said Thurman Monday.

"I didn't know tackling with the helmet was illegal...but if I had to do it again under the same circumstances I would probably have done the same thing," Thurman said.

Thurman tackled Jaworski just after he threw a touchdown pass.

"I'm not a dirty player," said Thurman. "Everybody knows that...I didn't mean to hurt Ron. I sent word with a couple of Eagle players that I was worried about Ron."

Jaworski said after the game, "I don't know if the hit he put on me was late or not...I don't worry about the hits. They're part of the game."

Thurman also knocked running back Wilbert Montgomery down near the sidelines on a tackle the Eagles thought was late. There was no flag.

"The play on Wilbert was an obvious foul," said Jaworski. "It was the same type of play on which we lost Harold."

Thurman said, "I'm not going to worry about being a marked man. If they want to pull a guard and have him come after me, fine...if he can hit me a solid shot he deserves a solid hit."

He said the victory over the Eagles "was one of the big wins since I've been here...we are at the top of the (National Conference) East now and the Eagles have to come here to play us."

Guerrero not hurt in accident

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (AP) — World Series hero Pedro Guerrero was involved in an automobile accident early Monday in the Dominican Republic, but he was not injured, police said.

Authorities said the car driven by Guerrero and another vehicle collided and that damage to both automobiles was slight.

Guerrero, an outfielder for the champion Los Angeles Dodgers, returned home Sunday for the first time since the Dodgers' victory over the New York Yankees and was received by hundreds of fans at La America Airport just outside Santo Domingo, the capital of the Dominican Republic.

A spokesman for the Escogido Lions, a winter league baseball team here, said that following the accident, Guerrero left Santo Domingo, heading for New York City where he was to attend an awards ceremony Monday. A spokesman for Sport Magazine said Guerrero was not aboard his originally scheduled flight to New York.

Guerrero was selected as one of the three Most Valuable Players in the Series.

Expected back in the Dominican Republic in 10 days, Guerrero will play winter ball with the Lions, a team spokesman said.

Morelos 100 Pesos Mexico's Last Silver Dollar

Available Only Until Midnight Tonight

October, 1981, Philadelphia. IMM announced today the release for sale of a small cache of brilliant uncirculated Mexican 100 Pesos legal tender silver coins. Silver dollars today happen to be the most collected type of coin in the world. However, due to the unstable price of silver bullion, one government after another has discontinued their minting. This historic Morelos 100 Pesos Silver Dollar is the last in a series of four coins issued in tribute to Mexico's freedom fighters. Morelos, a Mexican priest of humble origin, was a brilliant tactician who played a vital role in the liberation of his people, and who now holds a revered position in that country's pantheon of martyrs. Issued for just three years, this beautiful coin was struck in .720 fine silver and measures a large 39mm. Moreover, it is the last Silver Dollar to be struck for circulation in Mexico.

International Monetary Mint is offering these brilliant uncirculated Morelos 100 Pesos at the Special Investor Opportunity price of only $25 each. Investors who respond from this publication by midnight, tonight, may purchase from 1 to 10 individual coins at this price until supplies are exhausted. Because of the limited number available, orders will be filled on a first-come, first-served basis with a strict limit of 10 coins per customer.

All Pesos from this collection are "Brilliant Uncirculated" and will be accompanied by a certificate of authenticity to that effect. Coins classified brilliant uncirculated have never been placed in general circulation and are still in mint state condition. To qualify for this offering call Lee Collins toll free at 1-800-345-8502 (Dept. MED-1558).

Orders will be accepted on major credit cards only. An additional $2.75 is requested to cover insurance, postage and special handling. If not satisfied, you may return your Mexican 100 Pesos in their original condition within 30 days for a full refund.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market, responding to declining interest rates, rolled up a strong gain for the second straight session today.

Trading was heavy. Open-market money rates fell sharply late last week and today. After the close on Friday, the Federal Reserve lowered its discount rate — the charge it sets on loans to its member commercial banks — from 14 to 13 percent.

Analysts say that move as a clear signal that the Fed was relaxing its credit policy to try to cushion the impact of the developing recession.

Today numerous large banks across the country reduced their prime lending rates from 18 to 17 percent. There were forecasts of more cuts to come in the basic charge on blue-chip loans.

Energy stocks paced the advance for the second straight session following Mobil Corp's bid for Marathon Oil on Friday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 14.27 to 866.82 on top of Friday's 19.60-point gain.

New York Stock Exchange volume reached 55.10 million shares, up from 58.56 million Friday and the heaviest total since a 66.40 million-share day on March 24.

On Monday numerous large banks across the country reduced their prime lending rates from 18 to 17 percent, amid forecasts of more cuts soon in the basic charge on blue-chip loans.

Open-market money rates, which fell sharply late last week, declined further in early activity Monday. They later turned upward, however.

The daily tally on the NYSE showed almost four gainers for every stock that lost ground, and the Big Board's composite index picked up 1.41 to 72.05.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 76.72 million shares.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials rose 2.71 to 138.77, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up 2.31 to 124.20.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value changed 8.29 to 320.31. The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market closed at 197.25, up 2.01.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 14.27 to 866.82 on top of Friday's 19.60-point rise.

Advances outnumbered declines by close to a 4-1 ratio on the New York Stock Exchange.

Big Board volume reached a seven-month high of 55.10 million shares, against 58.56 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index jumped 1.40 to 72.04. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 8.29 to 320.31.

Investor's Guide

Management not easy decision

By BILL DOYLE

Q. As a widow, 78, with life savings of $120,000, I can't make up my mind whether to turn my money over to my bank in a "living trust" or to continue to invest in savings certificates. I can't handle the confusion of owning stocks and other securities.

The bank would take care of my income taxes and other things and, of course, charge an annual fee — $1,000, in my case. Would I get better income with the living trust at the bank? There must be many widows in my situation who would like an answer to this question.

A. Ma'am, every person — widowed or otherwise — with accumulated wealth faces the problem of whether to handle things on his or her own or to turn it over to a professional money manager, such as a bank trust department.

In your situation, my recommendation is the bank trust department. I can't promise you that you'll get higher income than you would receive from savings certificates. But, assuming the bank invests your money wisely, you should do well. It has to be noted that different banks have different investment performance records. Ask your bank how well it has done in the past. Don't be bashful. Check out a number of banks that handle this kind of business.

Also, fees vary from one bank to another. Again, ask. On $120,000 an annual charge of $1,800 works out to 1.5 percent. That's about average and reasonable.

You don't have to establish a living trust. Many banks handle money investment management accounts. But a living trust would probably be a wise thing for you. That way, you'll have control over your money and receive the income from it while you're living. And everything will go to the beneficiaries you name when you die.

Before you set up the trust, however, sit down with a good lawyer and have all the details explained.

Q. I would like to set up a trust fund to pay for my grandchild's education. College costs have gone up and will undoubtedly continue to rise. What will be the best method to accomplish this?

A. There are a variety of trusts that can be used for the purpose you have in mind. The most popular is the so-called "Clifford" trust. With that type, you deposit money or other assets in the trust. The beneficiary — your grandchild in this case, gets the income from the trust. When the trust ends — after at least 10 years and one day — you get the assets back.

Again, this column keeps stressing that you shouldn't even think about setting up a trust, without individual advice from a lawyer.

As investments in a trust intended to meet college expenses in the future my recommendation would be "growth" stocks — those with past records and future potential of increasing in value — or a mutual fund investing in growth stocks.

Q. I own stock in four companies, all of which have dividend reinvestment plans. I participate in those plans and use my dividends to buy additional full and fractional shares. I now plan to sell all these stocks. What is the best way to dispose of the fractional and small number of full shares?

A. The easiest and probably best way is to notify the agent for each dividend reinvestment plan that you want to end your participation in the plan and instruct the agent to sell your shares held in the plan.

Some companies act as their own agents for dividend reinvestment plans. Most, however, have banks as plan agents. The details are spelled out in the literature you receive from each company.

In each case, your fractional share will be converted to cash — based on current market value. Your full shares will be sold for you in the market by the agent.

You could request certificates for the full shares and then sell them yourself. But, when you sell, you would most likely pay higher brokerage commissions than if the agents handle the sales for you.

The NYSE's composite index jumped 1.40 to 72.04. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 8.29 to 320.31.
