Trooper killed

OZONA (AP) — A 50-year-old Texas Department of Public Safety trooper was crushed by his patrol car and killed when a tractor-trailer rig slammed into the vehicle Saturday about five miles west of Ozona, authorities said.

Corp. Willie Dale Taylor had just completed making a traffic stop when the fatal collision occurred, said DPS spokesman Mike Cox.

The driver of the tractor-trailer rig, Ronald Bruce Anderson, 33, of Odessa, was arrested on a complaint of negligent homicide. Anderson required treatment for minor injuries sustained in the crash, then was booked into the Crockett County Jail, Cox said.

"There was no alcohol involved, but they're alleging there was some kind of negligence on the driver's part," Cox said.

Negligent homicide is a Class A misdemeanor.

Cox said Taylor, who has been with the DPS 28 years, was standing in front of his patrol car after releasing a suspected traffic violator when the truck struck his vehicle.

The accident was reported by a passing motorist who saw the collision. The witness drove on to the DPS station in Ozona to which Taylor was assigned and told other DPS troopers what had happened.

Cox said the trooper was the first killed in the line of duty since last May 21, when a sergeant and a trooper died in a similar accident near San Antonio.

They had stopped a drunken driver when a tractor trailer-rig struck their car from behind, he said.

Diller deal

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Phyllis Diller is going into the dinner-theater business and she's concerned about what's on the menu as well as the stage.

"After 35 years of room service and eating in restaurants, I'm ready to provide people away from home with something healthy and very different," said Diller, who is joining an Evansville farmer and son to open a chain of dinner-theaters in Florida.

The 72-year-old comedian, known for her jokes about the plastic surgery she has undergone, said she is excited about the business venture. The first theater is to open next year in the Tampa Bay-St. Petersburg-Clearwater area.

Dedicated effort

Joe Pickle introduces U.S. Rep. Charles Stenholm at Saturday's dedication ceremony of the S.W. Freese Dam and the O.H. Ivie Reservoir — commonly called the Stacy Dam Project. Pickle is secretary-treasurer of the Big Spring-based Colorado River Municipal Water District, which owns the $70-million dam and lake southeast of Ballinger.

Dam's dedication marred by protests over names

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

BALLINGER — There's a quarrel brewing over the official names of the lake and dam long-known as the Stacy Dam project.

Should it be Stacy Dam or S.W. Freese Dam? Should it be Leaday Lake or O.H. Ivie Reservoir?

The authorities have opted for Freese and Ivie.

The choice of a band of protesters at Saturday's dedication of the S.W. Freese Dam and the O.H. Ivie Reservoir and more than 3,000 petitioners, is Stacy Dam and Leaday Lake.

Stacy is the name of an old settlement near the dam site. Leaday was a now-extinct community — a part of the lake bed destined to be flooded.

Many local people wanted to retain the identity of those historic places. But the board of the Colorado River Municipal Water District (CRMWD), which owns the $70-million dam and lake basin, chose to name the lake and the dam that created it after engineer Owen H. Ivie, CRMWD general manager and leader of the Stacy project, and S.W. Freese, a Fort Worth consulting engineer who has worked on dam sites throughout Texas.

Cowboy and former rodeo star Dan Taylor was angry over the Ivie-Freese names, as State Sen. Bill Sims, a rancher from San Angelo, soon found out.

"Hello, Bill," Taylor greeted the senator after the ceremonial fanfare overlooking the two-mile dam southeast of Ballinger.

"How are you doing?" the senator politely asked.

"I'm madder than hell," the old cowboy said. "This is wrong, Bill."

"It will all work out," Sims assured him.

"No it won't, because this is wrong," Taylor said.

Few argue about the reasoning for a third CRMWD lake to serve West Texas cities, including Midland and Odessa. CRMWD also owns Lake Thomas northeast of Big Spring and Lake Spence west of Robert Lee.

The CRMWD board wanted to honor Ivie for his 17-year tenacity in completing the Stacy Dam project despite political and environmental barriers, and to honor S.W. Freese for his accomplishments in selecting sites for dams and lakes throughout the state.

But many of the locals want historic place names to prevail over personalities.

Bush praises breakthrough in arms talks

■ In his University of Texas commencement address, President George Bush shares encouraging news on the upcoming arms summit and changing world economics.

By Tom Raum

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — President Bush welcomed the outcome of arms talks in Moscow on Saturday as a major step forward in improved U.S.-Soviet relations and a breakthrough toward a reduction in nuclear weapons.

In a commencement address at the University of Texas, Bush heralded progress reported earlier in the day by Secretary of State James A. Baker III after four days of talks in Moscow.

"While there is additional work to be done, I think Jim Baker's meetings represent a major step forward," the president said.

"This breakthrough should allow us to reach the important goal we set in Malta — completing the major substantive elements of an historic strategic arms reduction treaty.

"In addition," Bush added, "we will be able to conclude other arms control measures with the Soviets, including an agreement on dramatic reductions in chemical weapons, as well as technical and commercial agreements.

"I am confident that the progress we have made will allow this summit to be another solid step forward in the vital U.S.-Soviet relationship."

Earlier in Houston, Bush had pronounced himself encouraged by the progress of the Moscow talks, but said it will "take some give" from the Soviet Union for his upcoming summit

First lady reveals her 'cure' for depression

WASHINGTON (AP) — First lady Barbara Bush says she suffered a severe case of depression after returning from China in 1976, but overcame it after throwing herself into volunteer work.

"I would feel like crying a lot and I really, painfully hurt," Mrs. Bush is quoted as saying in the May 28 issue of U.S. News & World Report.

Mrs. Bush, the subject of the magazine's cover story, recalled how depression overtook her when she and husband, George, returned to the United States after two years in China.

Bush had been the U.S. liaison officer in Beijing and the couple had been together much of the time. But that changed drastically when Bush returned to become director of the CIA.

She said depression preyed on her mind. "And I would think bad thoughts, I will tell you. It was not nice."

Her remedy was to volunteer for service work in the Washington Home, a health-care center for the seriously ill. In that role she performed chores ranging from changing bedclothes to washing the hair of patients.

Top students discuss issues, plans

■ LHS, MHS class leaders see a lot of ways in which to improve their world — and see college as the first step.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

The Midland and Lee high school valedictorians and salutatorians are an issues-oriented lot.

"I think a problem facing our country is the homeless situation," said 18-year-old Greg M. Crowe, Lee's top student. "You have homeless people sleeping underneath the Trump Tower — to bring more equity into the economy is an important goal."

Health care is another issue on their minds — especially for MHS valedictorian Michael Leung, who wants to enter the medical field.

"I'd like to see a form of socialized medicine in the United States," Leung said. "The system we have here, there's a lot of fallacy in. Health care should be provided for everybody."

Then there is the issue of environmental preservation, which Crowe addressed with a grim prediction.

"Within the next decade, if we don't recycle and treat our environment more responsibly, we're going to waste away our natural resources and ruin our world," he said.

■ Greenwood's leading students credit parental support, caring teachers for their success.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

GREENWOOD — The top two students at Greenwood High School say they cannot take full credit for their academic success.

Greenwood's valedictorian, 17-year-old Betsy Binnion, said her parents, Dayle and Wanda Binnion, were her inspiration.

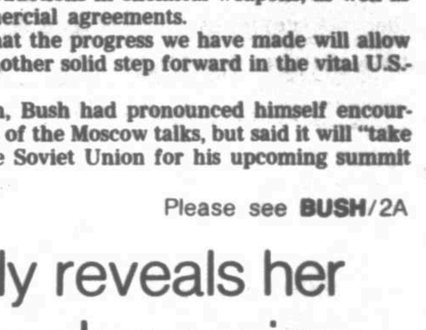

"I attribute my success to my parents, because they always knew that I would do it and they always encouraged me the best they could," said Miss Binnion, who plans to study accounting at Angelo State University next fall.

"Something about keeping track of people's finances and solving problems has always appealed to me," she said.

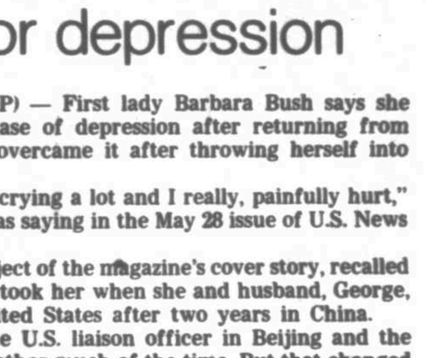

Salutatorian Tricia McInturff said her mother, Pattie Dyson, began grooming her early for academic success.

"I attribute my success to my mother," she said. "From an early age, my learning has been a priority for my mother — she began teaching me at a young age."

That attention apparently paid off.

"I'm the first person in my family to graduate," Miss McInturff said. "And graduating salutatorian is quite an honor."

Teachers, too, played a role in boosting

In the eastern half of the state, southernly and southeasterly winds were prevalent. In West Texas, most of the wind was from the southwest. Portions of the Panhandle were reporting north winds. Winds also were southeasterly in the northwest portions of the state.

Most of the winds were in the 10 to 20 mph, but much stronger gusts were common in many areas.

In was a warm Saturday in many Texas towns, with highs mainly in the 80s and 90s. The cool spot at 3 p.m. was the Guadalupe Pass in the Trans-Pecos. At the other extreme, was Laredo where it reached 98 degrees.

CRMWD: Lake will serve Basin cities

(From 1A)

Ivie didn't want to talk about it.

The senator did.

"I think it's wonderful," Sims said of the dam-lake project. "But it ought to be Stacy."

Both the dam and the lake often are called Stacy despite the new names.

"Some of us will always call it" Stacy, Sims said. "And I love Mr. Ivie and respect him. But we have always known it as Stacy. When I'm with my friends and everybody else, I call it Stacy. When I visit with Mr. Ivie, I'll call it Ivie."

Talk about a lake, along the watershed of the Colorado and Concho rivers and near the Stacy community in McCulloch County, reportedly has been going on since 1919 but apparently didn't get serious until Ivie took over the project in 1973.

"Controversy has followed this reservoir, this dam, and every other water project and every other building of significance for the development of this state and this nation," Stenholm said. "Progress has always come with controversy and always will."

CRMWD battled environmentalists and the Lower Colorado River Authority (LCRA), in pursuing the Stacy project and won.

Environmentalists' concern over the Concho River water snake stymied the lake's progress. The LCRA contested the granting of the permit to build a dam on the upper Colorado. There wasn't enough water to go around, they reasoned. The Supreme Court disagreed, and the Stacy project moved ahead.

Then there were the protesters who want to preserve the Stacy-Leaday identity. Stenholm seemed to appreciate their viewpoint.

"You have to grow up on a land to feel it — to really appreciate it," the congressman told crowd of about 1,000 at the dedication ceremony.

"It has always been known as Stacy," said 24-year-old Rex Stephenson, who grew up at Leaday and now lives in San Angelo.

Talpa schoolteacher Robert Talley, who was standing near a sign reading "Who is Ivie? Who is Freese?," said he didn't care what they call it. However, he said the project "is all about selling water and making money." The day's dedication was just the "continuing saga of men (Ivie and Freese) who have no peers," Talley said.

Shirley Rankin, 27, was raised at Leaday.

"I think it (Ivie-Freese) is a bunch of bull," she screamed. "It's a disgrace to the people of Leaday." The house she was raised in was razed, burned and buried.

The CRMWD's budget included funds for buying land, houses, barns, school houses, and relocating highways and graveyards in the lake basin.

"They (CRMWD) gave us a little hill for our church to be put on," Ms. Rankin said. "But we had to fight for that. The Leaday church is the only thing that has not been pushed down and burned."

After the fanfare, Taylor tried to confront Ivie on the name issue, but the engineer declined to argue.

Ivie spoke of the "absolute, essential" need that "the Stacy project be built to meet the growing needs for water for the cities of Odessa, Midland, Big Spring, Snyder, San Angelo, and Abilene."

The 66-year-old Taylor, who lives at nearby Doole, has sentimental attachments to the area.

"My granddaddy before me, we punched cows and herded sheep up and down this river," he said. "They've taken away these people's history and heritage."

Taylor's wife and daughter, too, were upset over the names.

"This has been the Stacy Dam (site) as long as I can remember," said the daughter, Dana Taylor, 37.

"Everybody wants it to be Stacy Dam and Leaday Lake," said Taylor's wife, Berva Dawn, 60. "When I talked to Sen. Phil Gramm's office, they didn't even know back there that it had been changed. Rep. Lamar Smith's office didn't know it. The Brown & Root employees (who built the dam and spillway) didn't know it had been changed. All their little plaques and awards all say 'Stacy Dam Project.' It's been Stacy Dam Project for better than 70 years."

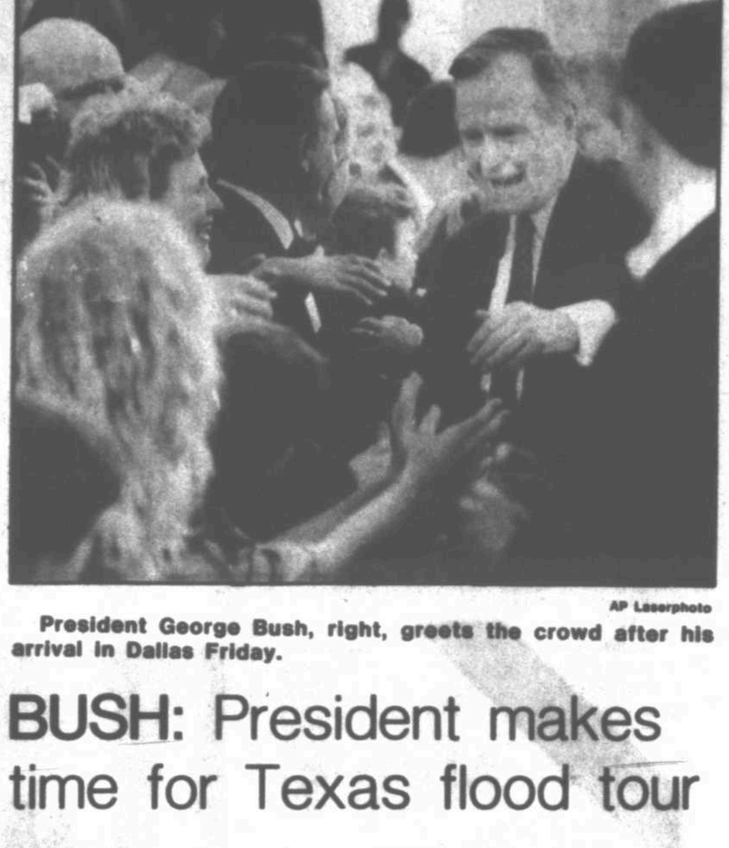

Many years before Ivie took up the cause, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers already had selected the site at the confluence of the Colorado and Concho rivers as a prime site for a dam.

Mrs. Taylor was critical of naming of the dam and lake after Freese and Ivie who, after all, she said, were paid for their expertise and services.

"But these men didn't live in this country," she said. "They didn't own land in this country."

The names should be Stacy Dam and Leaday Lake, insisted Mrs. Taylor, who took the Stacy-Leaday petition to the CRMWD board, and said her notion was turned aside.

'You've got Lake Texoma," she said. "You've got Possum Kingdom. Lady Bird Johnson just turned down naming a lake for her in Austin. So why aren't Mr. Freese and Mr. Ivie gentlemen enough to remove their names from this and call it Stacy Dam and Leaday Lake? That's the way it should be."

(From 1A)

with Mikhail S. Gorbachev to be a success.

"We still have some unfulfilled arms control problems I think we're all familiar with," Bush told reporters as he toured the site of July's seven-nation economic summit.

Bush also visited an area hard-hit by floods and was participating in a celebrity golf tournament.

The president gave what he called "a mixed review" on the outcome of Secretary of State James A. Baker III's four days of pre-summit arms negotiations with Soviet leaders.

"Some encouraging things and some things that still remain to be solved," Bush said.

In Moscow, Baker announced that a "trailblazing" agreement had been reached on banning chemical weapons and that major disputes had been resolved on cutting long-range nuclear weapons.

Bush, speaking to reporters at the John Kirby Mansion, the headquarters for the Houston economic summit, said, "We want the Gorbachev summit to be successful. It's going to take some give on the Soviet side in my view. But we're going to keep pushing."

Bush did not elaborate.

The president, in fact, seemed less optimistic about the outcome of the arms talks than did his upbeat secretary of state.

The president said his national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, planned to be in touch with Baker later in the day to get more details on the talks.

Scowcroft later told reporters aboard Air Force One that the tentative accord on cruise missiles is "a breakthrough in the sense that cruise missiles are the major elements that still have to be resolved in order to say we could conclude a START treaty."

He cautioned that such a treaty probably will not be ready for signing at the upcoming summit, but said the details yet to be worked out are not the kind of things "we would consider treaty stoppers."

"Indeed, most of them don't have to go to the heads of government at all," said Scowcroft.

As to conventional weapons in Europe, Scowcroft said the concern is that the Soviets "are now stonewalling" on reductions.

In his commencement speech, Bush said "the free world is now more vast than anyone dared imagine" and challenged the students to "live a life of adventure and meaning so brilliant that like a Roman candle, it lights up the world."

"Dazzle us. Astonish us. Be extraordinary," Bush said.

He called on the graduates to "spend your life doing" after years of learning. "Make your Czech or Polish lessons work for the Citizens Democracy Corps, put your Spanish in the service of the Peace Corps, or work with VISTA right here in our precious USA. Care for AIDS babies."

In earlier comments to reporters on the economic summit, the president said this year's annual meeting among leaders of the United States, Britain, Japan, France, West Germany, Italy and Canada was "taking place at a fascinating time as we see the evolution of democracy in Eastern Europe."

Bush also made a helicopter tour of flooded areas near Houston. He stopped briefly at the spillway of Livingston Dam, about 75 miles northeast of here, where overflowing waters from Lake Livingston and the Trinity River had forced hundreds of people on both sides of the dam out of their homes.

MISD: Students ready for new sights

Quayle — where does the list of crises, dilemmas and quandaries end? Even the world of sports is not immune.

Leung and Crowe, and their respective salutatorians Joseph P. Baressi III and James Bankson, don't want all the world's cares thrust upon their shoulders just yet.

After all, there is college to be experienced before they tackle their presumed roles of "leaders of tomorrow."

Crowe, Lee's student council president and an all-district basketball player, plans to enter the honors liberal arts program at the University of Texas at Austin next fall.

Having turned down an acceptance from Columbia University in New York City due to the high Ivy League price tag, Crowe said he may turn his affinity for the German language into a career.

"In the back of my mind I've thought of doing some foreign policy work for the government," said Crowe, the son of Harry Crowe and Sarah Collins.

Leung, 18, said he plans eventually to attend medical school. Meanwhile, he said he will begin pursuing a degree in biology or zoology at UT next fall.

A former all-state orchestra member and piano competition district winner, Leung also has been involved with the MHS National Honor Society, Computer Club and Latin Club.

Leung, son of Patrick and Nancy Leung, said he didn't make a conscious attempt to achieve valedictorian status, and advised other students to avoid being too grade-oriented.

"Often grades are not an accurate reflection of what you know," he said.

MHS salutatorian Baressi agreed that the people who work the hardest and learn the most are not necessarily the ones with the best grades.

"The (valedictorian or salutatorian) title itself is nothing to shoot for," said Baressi, 17. "You need to apply yourself and learn, but if you don't get the best grades, so what?"

Baressi, the son of Joyce Baressi and Midland Independent School District Superintendent Joe Baressi, plans to attend Harvard University next fall.

Cornell, Columbia and Princeton universities also accepted him, but he expressed disappointment about being put on the Stanford University waiting list.

"I'm going to keep my name on the waiting list, so if they do let me in I can turn them down," Baressi confided.

He said was unsure what he will study at Harvard, although he is considering economics and psychology.

"I'm going to get there and change my mind, I'm sure of if," said Baressi, a National Merit Finalist and former MHS tennis player. "They told me that the average student changes his major two or three times."

Bankson, the LHS salutatorian, is more certain of what he will study at Texas A&M University, which he will attend on a National Merit Scholarship.

After earning a degree in electrical engineering, the 18-year-old Bankson said he will turn his eyes to the stars.

"I would like to work for NASA in the space program doing electrical engineering — designing circuitry or heading some major department or something like that," he said.

"The possibilities of what we can do and the impact on society is really fascinating for me. If we do end up screwing the earth up, maybe we can move to another planet."

He and Crowe said they are both looking forward to leaving Midland.

"It's just time to get out of here," Bankson said. "It's great being under shelter with your parents, but I'm really ready to go on to college. I like trees and things like that. I grew up in Houston where there were a lot of trees, and I miss it. Plus, there's an air of conformity here."

Crowe also expressed dissatisfaction with Midland's conservatism.

"I would probably want to raise my kids in a place like this, but it's time to get out and see what else is out there in the world," Crowe said.

"I don't know if I would go so far as to compare Midland to Salem," he added, referring to the infamous Massachusetts witch trials. "But anything different here causes an uproar."

Leung and Baressi, meanwhile, credited Midland for its fine arts programs and relatively sophisticated populace.

"It's not just country folks here," Leung said. "The environment is conducive to learning."

Misses Binnion and McInturff to the head of the class.

"I think there are a few teachers ... that we really owe a lot of this to," said Miss McInturff, 17. "We had some teachers who really pushed us to learn and work hard."

Miss Binnion, 'who said high school has not been excessively difficult, added that she is looking forward to college.

"I like to be involved and I like the friendship I've had in high school," she said. "I'll miss it, but it is time to move on to a new part of my life. There'll be a challenge involved, and for social reasons I want to go."

Miss McInturff is bound for Richland Junior College in Garland, where she wants to study business.

"Being in such a small school, I'm ready to get out into a bigger area," said Miss McInturff, whose graduating class has 64 members. "I'm excited about going to college — I'm hoping that it's going to be a lot different than high school."

It was not the first time the first lady turned to volunteer work in time of stress, the magazine said. She threw herself into a volunteer project in 1953 following the loss of her 3-year-old daughter Robin to leukemia while the family was living in Midland, Texas.

"For a while after Robin died I played with my children all of the time," she said. "I one day heard little George out the window saying to his friend, 'I can't play with you today. I have to play with my mother.' And that's when I threw myself into the League project."

Calling on wealthy friends for contributions and spreading the news among the poor, she worked with a forerunner of the Junior League to establish a thrift shop to help clothe the needy.

Mysterious disease hitting Texas children

HOUSTON (AP) — State and federal health officials are mystified by an illness that has left dozens of children in eastern and central Texas suffering from high fevers, itchy rashes and temporarily crippling pain in joints, a Houston newspaper reported.

Seven children who appear to have the same puzzling disease are being treated by a single physician — Dr. Jeffrey William Jundt of Temple — who has called for help in identifying the disease.

"It's something strange," said Jundt, who specializes in the treatment of arthritis at the Scott & White clinic in Temple. "It could be a virus; it could be tick-borne. But we haven't identified it in the laboratory. It may be a mutant."

Physicians across the state have reported similar symptoms in dozens of patients, Jundt told the Houston Chronicle.

Jundt first suspected something strange was occurring in March when Dr. Michael C. Smith of Palestine called and asked him to take a look at an 11-year-old girl with strange symptoms. Smith said it looked like the girl had an unusual form of arthritis, and he wanted Jundt's opinion.

The girl had a persistently high fever and was confined to a wheelchair because of pain in her joints. She could not even straighten out her legs because of the soreness and had to be lifted from the chair onto an examination table.

Jundt sent her through a battery of tests while her fever at times rose to between 103 and 105 degrees. The tests gave no clue, but eliminated a number of possibilities, including rheumatic fever, strep, rheumatoid arthritis, cancer, measles and drug reactions.

While she was being treated, two more patients with similar symptoms were brought to Jundt. They were both boys — ages 10 and 12.

The father of one of the boys — a seventh-grader at Temple, told Jundt his son was very sick.

"He'd take a 2- to 3-hour nap in the afternoon and then go to bed early," said Bobby Dale Goats of his son, Robert.

Jurors not told about pastor's previous trial

McKINNEY, Texas (AP) — Jury members expressed shock, disbelief and anger that they were not told of a former pastor's previous conviction and background before they recommended he get seven years probation for indecency with a child.

One female juror broke into tears and quickly left the Collin County Courthouse Friday after state District Judge Curt Henderson informed the panel outside his chambers of Patrick O'Rarden's first trial in connection with the 1986 incident.

O'Rarden, 49, is the former pastor of The New Commandment Church of Plano. He was accused of fondling a 3-year-old girl, now 6. Her mother was his fiance, who was a member of his church at the time.

O'Rarden, who has always maintained his innocence, was convicted on the first-degree felony charge of aggravated sexual assault in 1988 and sentenced to 30 years in prison. That conviction was overturned on appeal.

The retrial, which began Monday, also was for aggravated sexual assault, but the jury announced Thursday night that it had decided to convict him of the lesser charge of indecency with a child, a second-degree felony.

Upon learning the details of the first conviction, angry jurors met with the prosecuting attorney to try to change their decision.

Saying they were outraged that they hadn't been told details of the minister's 1988 trial, jurors said O'Rarden "ought to go to jail."

Five of the jurors spoke with George Roland, the special prosecutor in the case, who explained why certain evidence about O'Rarden's background and beliefs could not be introduced during the retrial.

Part of that evidence includes O'Rarden's testimony from the first trial, when he said he had been to heaven and had affairs with female church members he called his "earthly" and "spiritual" wives, including the girl's mother.

O'Rarden also testified that he heard angels during his sexual encounters and that he believed sexual relations with him constituted his partner "being consecrated by the Lord."

"I can't even accept that we shouldn't know that," one juror said. "Why could you not tell us anything? Why?"

O'Rarden didn't testify in the retrial.

Quayle consultant won't be charged in sexual assault

AUSTIN (AP) — An 18-year-old Baylor University student who said she was raped by a member of Vice President Dan Quayle's advance team has decided not to pursue charges against the man, officials with the McLennan District Attorney's office said.

"It's been a traumatic event for her, and she feels it's in her best interest that it not be prosecuted," Ralph Strother, first assistant district attorney in Waco, said in Saturday's Austin American-Statesman.

Tim Unes was accused of raping the Baylor freshman in his Waco hotel room last month. Unes, who was never charged, claimed the woman willingly had sex with him.

The case was expected to go to a grand jury in the coming weeks, but Strother said, "After evaluating the evidence in the case we feel it's in the best interest of everybody that the case not be prosecuted further."

Unes' attorney, Charles M. McDonald, said the case was dropped "because this has been a mistake from the word go."

"Tim Unes has committed no crime, committed no offense. The wrong has been done by the so-called plaintiff in this instance," he said.

Unes was relieved of his duties as a consultant during Quayle's trip to Texas earlier this month. The vice president apologized for the incident, saying it was deplorable.

Leslie Goodman, press secretary for the Republican National Party, said Unes was never dismissed from Quayle's staff and will continue to work for the vice president in the future.

Drug scandal has A&I reviewing policies

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Texas A&I University President Manuel Ibanez has said he will review student admissions policies, now that he has learned former star running back Johnny Bailey and a current football player are serving probated sentences for felony convictions.

The Kingsville school, like many others, does not inquire about criminal records on its admissions applications.

Ibanez and head football coach Ron Harms said they did not learn until recently that Bailey, 23, is serving a five-year probated sentence for a 1986 cocaine-possession conviction in Houston. According to court records, Bailey was serving the sentence during the four years that he played football for A&I.

Jeffrey Wayne Phillips, an A&I linebacker, is serving a four-year probated sentence for a 1987 burglary of a vehicle conviction in Houston.

Harms said he had been notified of the probated sentences only within the past two weeks, in the aftermath of the arrests of five former or current A&I players on drug-related charges.

Bailey pleaded guilty to possession of a controlled substance and was sentenced to five years' deferred adjudicated probation.

College football's career leading rusher, Bailey is a ninth-round draft choice by the Chicago Bears. He also is a three-time winner of the Harlon Hill award, the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division II equivalent of a Heisman trophy.

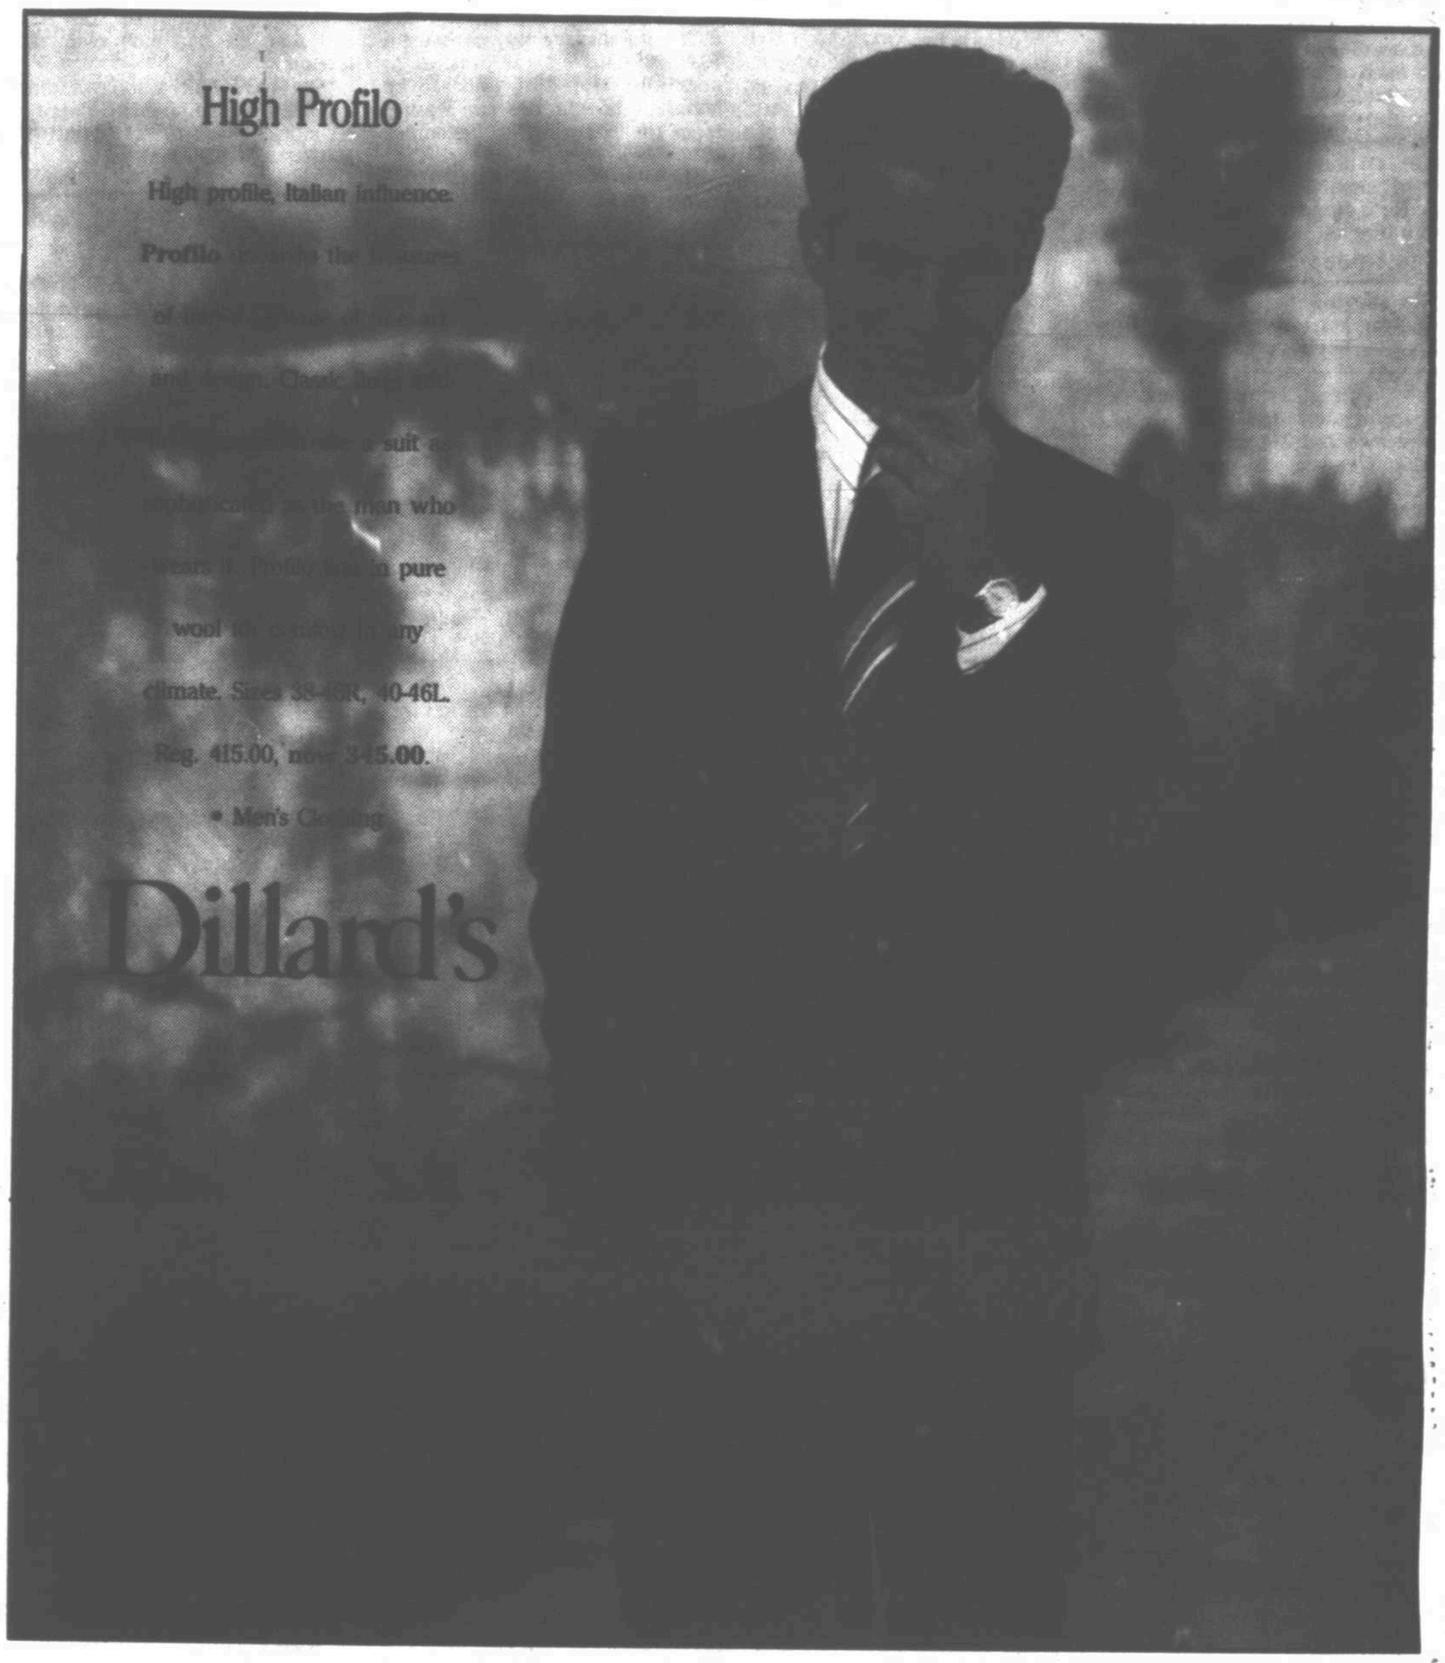

But his agent, Mark Mottaz of St. Louis-based Sports Management Group, said Friday, "He (Bailey) said it was a case of being in the wrong place at the wrong time. He would like to put it behind him, and that's basically all he wants to say."

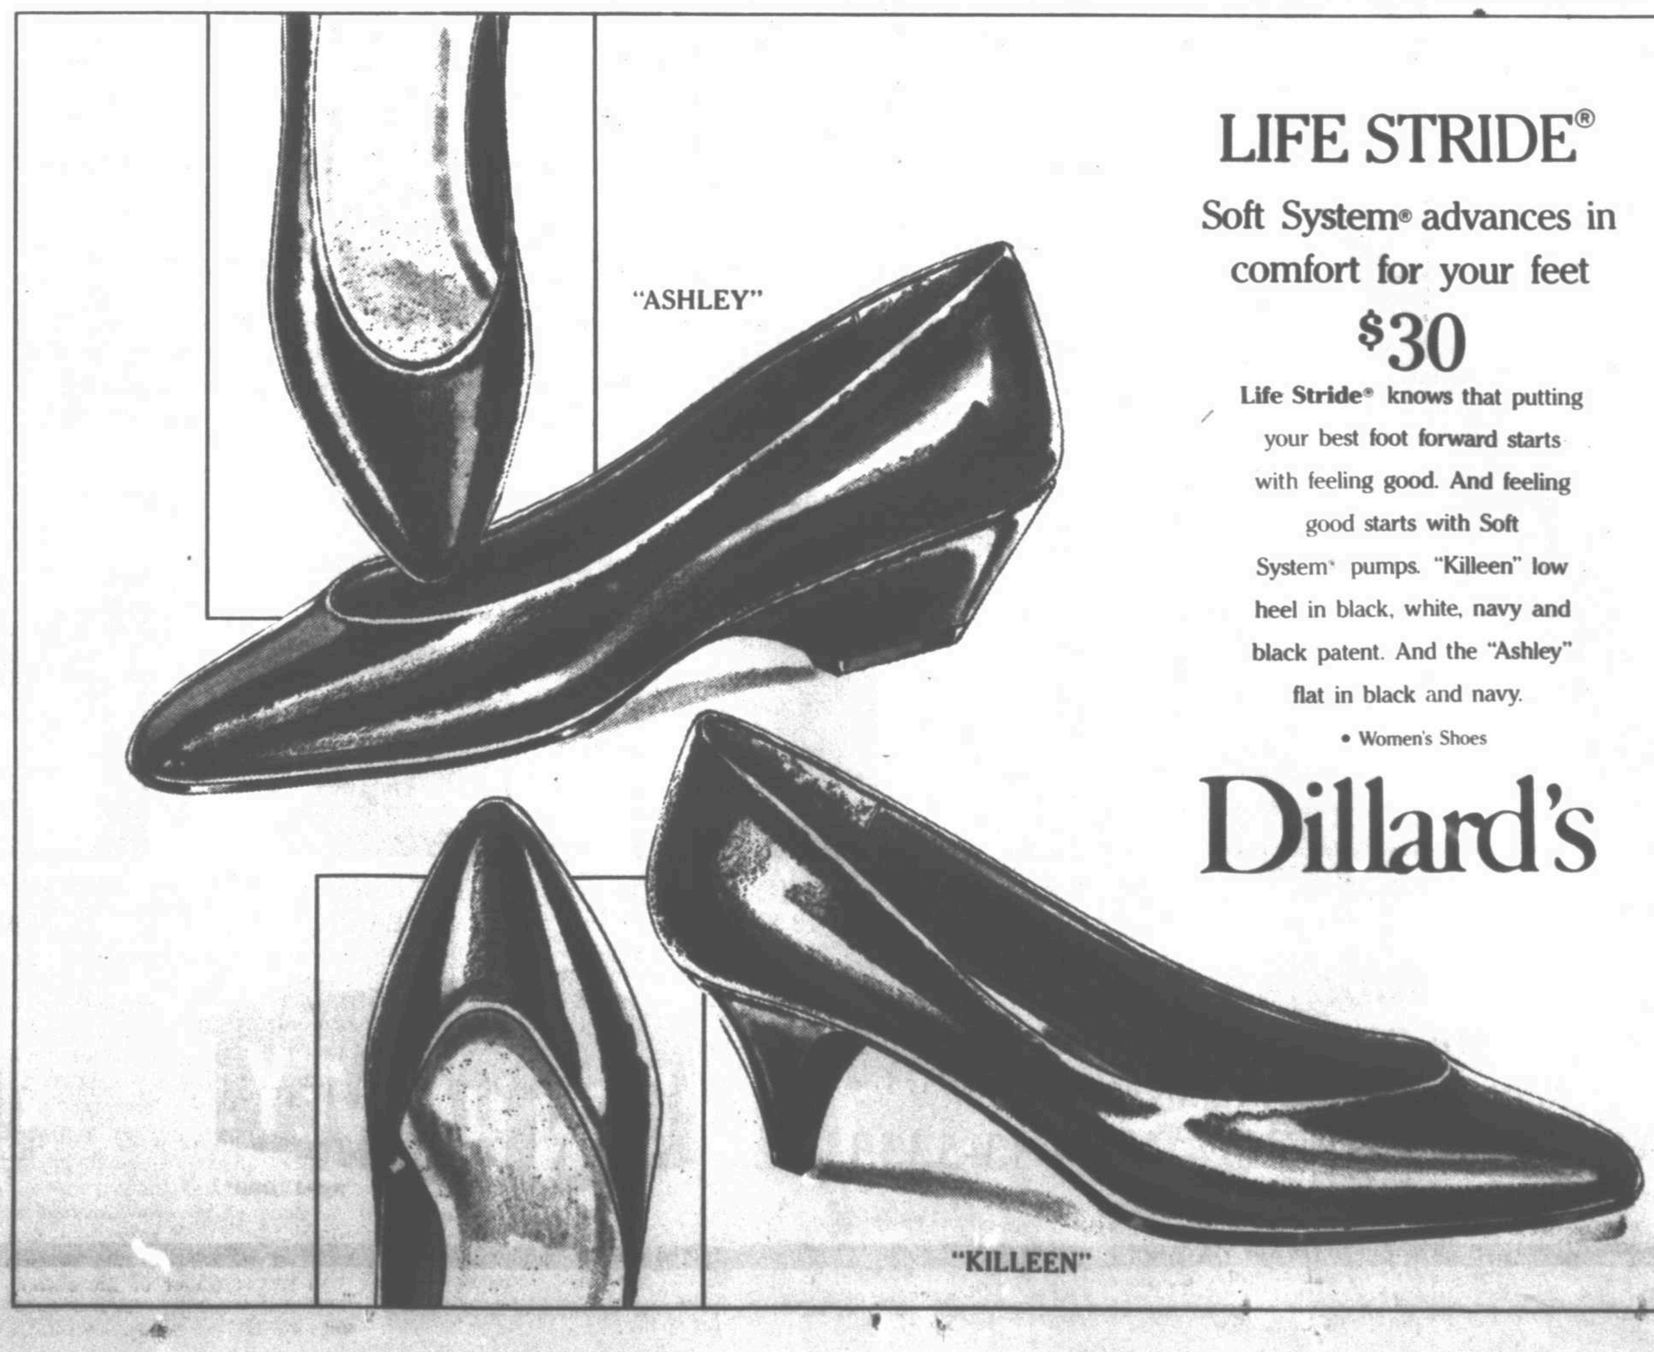

Phillips, who will be a senior at A&I next fall, said he is serving his probation without any problems and does not believe his criminal record should preclude his attending A&I and playing on the team.

Ibanez said he, Harms and admissions officials next week will review the admissions procedures not only for football players, but for all students.

"We need to check . . . if only to be forewarned," Ibanez said. "We're not going to keep a kid out of school when what they need most is to be educated.

"But at the same time it doesn't hurt to know what's going on."

STATE IN BRIEF

Stuckey's back near Linedale

LINDALE, Texas (AP) — The stately succession of billboards promises a better world just around the bend: a roadside respite for empty tummies and full blatters; a paradise of 99-cent breakfasts, 15-cent coffee, souvenirs, candy and sparkling clean restrooms; and a name that comforts the soul of anyone who has endured a family car vacation in the past half-century.

It's Stuckey's, and it's back.

In its heyday, an empire of 360 Stuckey's dominated the highways of the East, South and Midwest. But for a number of reasons, the chain fell on hard times in the 1970s, and it eventually dwindled to 92 stores. Today, the company has struggled back to 125, and plans for more are under way.

The appeal isn't just about the products or service. It's about nostalgia. In terms of childhood icons, this comeback ranks right up there with red M&Ms.

The Wandalls' is one of five Stuckey's in Texas. About 80 miles east of Dallas, it's the closest one to the big city.

Harris gets reprieve

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has given David Ray Harris of "The Thin Blue Line" fame at least 150 more days to live.

Harris, convicted of capital murder in the September 1985 death of a Beaumont man, was scheduled to die by injection Tuesday.

The state appeals court granted Harris a 120-day stay of execution to allow him time to apply for a writ of habeas corpus. After the 120 days, Criminal District Judge Larry Gist may set another execution date that must be at least 30 days from the scheduling date.

A Beaumont jury in 1986 found Harris guilty in the death of 30-year-old Mark Mays, a Beaumont car dealership finance manager.

Harris received national attention in 1988 and early 1989 in an unrelated Dallas case that later became the subject of the documentary "The Thin Blue Line."

Harris recanted his testimony in that case and cleared Randall Dale Adams who had spent 12 years in prison for the death of a Dallas police officer. Adams was released after the Court of Criminal Appeals upheld a ruling that he had been denied a fair trial.

This is the second stay of execution granted to Harris. The U.S. Supreme Court granted a stay in March while it decided whether to review his case. The court later refused to consider the appeal.

Texas A&M in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Texas A&M University opened a campus today in the northern city of Koriyama, seeking to educate Japanese and Americans to thrive in the world's increasingly borderless and high-tech economy.

"Our objective is to produce graduates who can function in two cultures," university President William H. Mobley said after addressing the opening ceremony in Koriyama, 120 miles north of Tokyo.

"As the seventh-largest university in the United States, we have the opportunity and the requirement to accelerate ... globalization," he said in a telephone interview.

The campus is the newest of about 30 branches established here by U.S. universities to meet Japan's desire for American-style higher education.

About 70 Japanese students will study liberal arts, science and engineering or business administration at the campus beginning May 28. Ten faculty members from Texas A&M will conduct the classes in English. After 27 months, the students may transfer to the main campus in College Station, Texas.

Firemen find money on fire under hood

Firefighters were dispatched to a car fire along Interstate 35 and expected to find a burning engine.

Instead they found burning cash, in the form of small bills that law officers believe were the profits of a drug deal.

"As I pulled it out, one of the other guys said, 'Guys, this ain't just paper — it's money,'" Georgetown firefighter Donnie Johnson said.

"I've never seen anything like this before. It kind of makes fire fighting a little more interesting," he said.

Fire Marshal Tom Leggett said the money was in a leather bag strapped across the underside of the hood with a thin wire. The heat of the engine melted the wire, burned through the bag and ignited the bills.

When police arrived, they got permission from the driver to search the car, and found marijuana residue in an empty suitcase in the trunk, said Paul Womack, an assistant Williamson County district attorney.

The two men in the car were arrested and charged with illegal investment in controlled substances, a second-degree felony that carries a penalty of up to 20 years and prison and a maximum $10,000 fine.

Mattox, siblings sued over car wash contracts

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox, his brother and sister face a $764,000 lawsuit over three car washes they operate.

The lawsuit, filed in state District Court by J.I.M. Inc., contends that Mattox and his siblings, Janice and Jerry Mattox, did not make a February payment on a $660,000 note on car washes in northwest and East Dallas. The Mattoxes bought the car washes from the company in December 1986.

The lawsuit also alleges that Jim Mattox failed to make a February payment on another East Dallas car wash that he agreed to maintain and manage in December 1987. As part of the agreement, he is supposed to pay J.I.M. Inc. a total of $180,000.

In addition, the lawsuit charges that Mattox failed to pay 1989 property taxes on the car wash amounting to $3,976.

In the suit, J.I.M. asks District Court Judge Anne Packer to appoint a receiver to take charge of the car washes. The company also seeks to be paid the balance on the real estate note, management agreement, 1989 taxes and other fees, totaling $764,000, plus interest.

Through a spokesman, Jim Mattox said he had not seen the lawsuit.

"We have had a longstanding dispute with the plaintiff. There is no money owed to the plaintiff," Mattox said in a statement.

Cobra bites handler

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A Bayside snake handler recovering from a potentially deadly cobra bite will think twice about picking up snakes to see if they are dead, his son said Saturday.

"He said he learned his lesson," said Brad Estep, 15.

David S. Estep, 37, was listed in good condition at Humana Hospital in Corpus Christi on Saturday.

NATO revisions to continue

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney joins NATO defense ministers in Brussels this week to evaluate the diminished Soviet threat and chart the future of the Western military alliance.

Cheney

The meeting follows U.S.-Soviet agreement, announced Saturday in Moscow, on cooperation to ban production of chemical weapons and resolution of major disputes on cutting long-range nuclear arms.

The defense ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's member nations will focus on NATO's plans for its armies and non-nuclear weaponry, and to hear an updated report on the threat posed by Soviet forces.

Cheney, in a speech Friday in Washington, termed the Warsaw Pact "a fiction," a military unit that "no longer constitutes a significant military threat to Western Europe."

"The threat may not have disappeared totally, but it certainly would appear to be headed in that direction," Cheney said in a speech to an executive exchange group at the State Department.

At the Brussels meeting, the ministers must assess the need for their own armed forces once an East-West accord is completed on slashing the number of tanks, artillery and other so-called "conventional" weapons.

Although the pace of the talks in Vienna has slowed, an agreement is expected to be reached later this year. In an attempt to erase a major sticking point, the administration has put forward new proposals that could allow a compromise on the number of combat aircraft allowed by either side.

The Brussels talks come only two weeks after ministers met in Canada, where they agreed to make more cuts in their arsenal of short-range nuclear missiles. The sessions have been scheduled as a series of consultations in preparation for the summit of NATO government leaders in London in July.

This week's session "will show that much useful work has been done at NATO and in its capitals to plan ahead for the environment we anticipate by the mid-1990s," said a senior Pentagon official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

At the session, the ministers are expected to formally scrap the longstanding, but rarely honored, budget target of a 3 percent annual growth in their defense budgets.

As well, the United States and the NATO allies have tentatively agreed on a plan for sharing the cuts in tanks, artillery and other weapons that are expected to be reached in the conventional arms accord later this year.

Alliance sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, have indicated the United States will get the largest share of the cuts.

Unchanged for NATO, the Pentagon official said, will be "a militarily significant U.S. force presence in Europe" and the presence of U.S. nuclear weapons on the continent as a deterrence to nuclear war.

In the coming months, the alliance faces two crucial tasks, the official said.

These include identifying the aspects of NATO "which can and should be revised," and developing a plan "for much broader changes" that will take into account the implementation of the conventional arms accord, the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Eastern Europe and the emergence of pluralistic systems in those nations.

Civil War buffs re-enact Union army victory march

WASHINGTON (AP) — Strains of "Kingdom Coming" echoed along Pennsylvania Avenue on Saturday in a re-creation of the last march 125 years ago of the victorious Union army.

Among those joining in an abbreviated — in time and troop size — reenactment of the Grand Review were a company of the 54th Massachusetts Regiment, the black soldiers made famous in the movie "Glory."

Although few blacks were in the original parade, representatives of the regiment's Company B in Saturday's gathering were given the honor position at the wreath-laying ceremony at the statue of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant at the foot of the U.S. Capitol.

Morale was high despite temperatures near 80. The Civil War enthusiasts seemed to take the heat in stride even though all wore authentic wool uniforms and many were in full pack.

Walter B. Sanderson, a 37-year-old area resident who had played a sergeant in "Glory" and managed the company's affairs offscreen, said the heat was worse in 1865. "It was hotter, no doubt of that."

Sanderson said black regiments were left out of the original march because they were on guard duty in Charleston, S.C.

About 2,000 people took part in Saturday's march from the Capitol to the Washington Monument, compared with some 150,000 victorious Union soldiers who marched on May 23-24, 1865.

Council of Churches criticizes Bush

By Jeffrey Bair

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The nation's largest ecumenical group welcomed the coming visit of anti-apartheid leader Nelson Mandela to the United States but said apartheid should be lifted before South Africa's president is invited.

The National Council of Churches wrapped up it policy-making meeting Friday with a resolution criticizing President Bush's decision to receive South African President F.W. de Klerk.

"Any signal of support of de Klerk will send the African National Congress a message we are backing away from our call for the dismantling of apartheid," said the Rev. Tyrone Pitts of the Progressive National Baptist Convention.

The church council, which represents most major Anglican, Orthodox and Protestant religions, but not Roman Catholics, comprises 32 denominations with 42 million members.

The council also regretted the U.S. congressional recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital, asked American companies to stop buying coffee from El Salvador and called for the withdrawal of all American soldiers from the Philippines by 1996.

The council said Jerusalem is threatened by actions favoring one religion, such as the non-binding congressional measure.

The church deplored the Supreme Court's decision in April that said a state could deny jobless benefits to American Indians who use the hallucinogenic drug peyote in religious rituals.

The council "urges its member communions to alert their constituents to this incredible loss of protection for religious rights because of an aggressive and radical exercise in judicial activism."

FRAME TRENDS

By looking at the results of a survey of nearly 200 eye professionals nationwide, one can get a good sense of the current trends in eyeglass frames.Who is buying what? The most popular material for eyeglass frames is plastic (48 percent), followed by metal (36 percent) and carbon (9 percent). Women's frames account for 46 percent of all frame sales, while men's frames comprise 33 percent of all frames sold. Unisex frames have 13 percent of the market share, followed by children's frames at 8 percent. Currently, the hottest fashion trend involves the use of decorative trims in contrasting materials. These frames hold the interest of 36 percent of the buying public, while fully 30 percent cite bright color as a factor in frame choice.

Twenty-six percent of those surveyed are opting for smaller eye shapes.

The first criteria for corrective eyewear should be for that which meets the visual correction needs. TEXAS STATE OPTICAL, Midland Park Mall, after a complete and thorough exam, will discuss corrective options with each patient. Based upon your needs, a prescription will be written so that you may attain the optimum correction available. You are invited to follow this column in the weeks ahead as we offer more detail on your visual health. Tel. 699-1300 or 697-7963. VISA, MasterCard, AMEX and Discover accepted.

P.S. Metal frames showed the biggest jump in popularity over the past year, even though plastic frames continue to be most popular.

Community involvement has always been key to ARCO's corporate philosophy. This past year Midland has benefited greatly from the increased support and commitment of ARCO and its employees. Their support in this year's United Way Drive was outstanding. Employee contributions increased 44% over past years donations. ARCO is actively involved in many community programs: Christmas in April, Meals on Wheels, Junior Achievement, Jesse Owens Games, Casa de Amigos tutorial program, just to name a few. The involvement of ARCO in these programs is so great that two agencies, Casa de Amigos and Community and Senior Services, nominated ARCO for 1990 Outstanding Volunteer of the Year in the Corporate Category. Besides participating in these group projects, ARCO, through its newly formed Corporate Council, encourages employees and their families to become active community volunteers. The Volunteer Center of Midland is proud to salute the community spirit of ARCO Oil and Gas.

BRANDT JORDAN
MIDLAND SPECIAL OLYMPICS

Today young people are making significant contributions to the programs and people serviced by nonprofit organizations. In the four months that Brandt Jordan has been working with the basketball program of Special olympics, he has proven himself to be a committed and responsible volunteer. Focusing on the needs of the atheletes, Brandt serves as a chaperone, provides refreshments and transportation, assists the atheletes in refining their skills, and cheers these Special olympians to achieve their best. But more importantly, Brandt has truly extended himself to become a friend to these atheletes beyond the court. MONA CRAIG
PERMIAN BASIN CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION PROGRAM

The Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program first gained the volunteer support of Mona Craig in 1988 when she joined one of the agency's educational committees. A year later Ms. Craig accepted a position on CAPP's Board of Directors. Soon she was to truly become a working board member, when, recognizing CAPP's need for an administrative assistant, she volunteered to fill this 20 hour a week position until funding became available. After one year, Ms. Craig continues to serve CAPP in this position volunteering 80 hours a week in her combined Board and administrative capacities. A committed volunteer, Ms. Craig has served Midland over the years through PTA, Volunteers in Public Schools, and church and political organizations. SKIP BALDWIN
BIG BROTHERS/BIG SISTERS OF MIDLAND

The Big Brothers-Big Sisters Program in Midland has received numerous benef its from the contributions of cost-free air time and advertisement from Skip Baldwin and KMID-TV. For six years KMID-TV has aired the Wednesday s Child feature to attract volunteers to Big Brothers-Big Sisters and has been very successful in attaining this goal. An average of 35-40 calls from potential volunteers are received monthly and 90% are placed as a result of this weekly spot. Before the Wednesday's Child feature, only an average of 6 calls a month were received from volunteers KMID-TV also donates air time for the Big Brothers-Big Sisters annual fund raising event. The number of children waiting for a Big Brother or a Big Sister has been significantly reduced through the efforts of these awar-dees. We are so thankful there is a Hospice. God bless all of you!" This note is just one of the many messages of appreciation written to Midland's Hospice volunteers: These special volunteers provide countless hours of being there for patients and their families. Volunteers provide respite care, assist with transportation, deliver equipment, run errands, answer questions and help allay fears. But most of all these special volunteers reach out to hurting families by simply listening. This loving support continues after death and is key to the families' success in coping with their grief. Secret jury convicts reputed Medellin drug lord

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A Colombian reputed to be an important figure in the Medellin cocaine cartel was convicted Saturday on two federal drug conspiracy counts.

Jose Abello Silva faces up to $8 million in fines and 30 years in prison. U.S. District Judge Thomas Brett set sentencing for May 29.

Jurors convicted Abello, 35, of conspiring to import marijuana and cocaine into the United States and conspiring to possess drugs with intent to distribute.

His attorneys said they would appeal.

"It's a normal human reaction," Haynes said. "He's devastated. He's hurt. He's terribly disappointed. He cried. I cried."

The jury deliberated a little more than 20 hours over three days before issuing its verdicts. Jurors' identities remained secret throughout, for security reasons.

Prosecutors called 23 witnesses during five weeks of testimony. Many were convicted drug smugglers who identified Abello in the courtroom and said he supervised drug shipments from Colombian airstrips through the Bahamas.

Abello testified that he was an honest rancher who sold imported cars and fought bulls on the side. He said he was a friend of the Ochoa family — alleged to be part of the leadership of the Medellin drug cartel — but said his visits were limited to dealings with cattle.

Haynes and co-counsel Patrick Williams said prosecutors' secrecy about witnesses hurt their case, and Haynes criticized pretrial publicity.

"We'll appeal. We think there are some errors in the case," Williams said. "This has been couched in secrecy. We were totally denied access to previous statements witnesses made."

The Administrative Security Department said Abello was the cartel's chief of operations for Colombia's northern coast, where dozens of clandestine air strips are used to smuggle 300 to 400 tons of cocaine into the United States each year. That region also has ports where cocaine is stashed aboard rusty freighters working the coast of Central America and Mexico.

NATION IN BRIEF

Pact frees up war archives

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Justice Department has reached agreement with East Germany for access to that country's World War II archives, a move that investigators say could result in important new prosecutions of Nazi war criminals living in the United States.

With the fall of the Iron Curtain, U.S. war-crimes prosecutors say they now have an extraordinary opportunity to gain access to records that could help them track former Nazi officials previously unknown to them who may have entered the United States illegally after the war.

As part of the agreement reached this month with the East German authorities, the Justice Department will also be allowed to examine prison archives at Buchenwald, the Nazi concentration camp located in what is now East Germany.

"From an investigative point of view, this holds out great potential," said Neal M. Sher, the director of the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations, which is responsible for tracking down and deporting war criminals.

Police implicated

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Cars stolen in the United States and taken to Mexico are sometimes winding up in the hands of Mexican federal police operating along the U.S.-Mexico border, American authorities said.

Mexican authorities deny any wrongdoing, contending any U.S.-registered cars being used by their police were properly confiscated from lawbreakers.

In one case last February, El Centro Police, in cooperation with Baja California state officials, seized six late-model vehicles from a Mexican agent based across the border in Mexicali.

U.S. officials estimated that about 20,000 stolen vehicles are taken into Mexico each year and hundreds are winding up in the possession of the federales, the Tribune reported.

INS agent charged

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A federal Immigration and Naturalization Service agent was charged with rape, kidnap and other crimes involving four women, including one who said she was attacked after refusing to prove she was a legal U.S. resident.

James Edward Riley, 32, was arraigned in Van Nuys Municipal Court Friday on charges stemming from three of the incidents that took place in September, January and February.

He pleaded innocent to all charges.

An INS spokesman said Riley was placed on unpaid leave while the INS conducts its own investigation.

Florist victimized

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — A rural florist vilified by his neighbors because they wrongly believed he had AIDS was robbed and assaulted Saturday, authorities said.

Bill Grealis, 41, was struck in the head and had his left arm slashed by an assailant, said Sgt. W.G. Slimick of the Kanawha County Sheriff's Department said.

The attacker painted "AIDS" on the wall and other epithets on the cooler in Grealis' shop in Campbells Creek, said his wife, Diana.

"I just don't care anymore," said Grealis. "They've ruined my life, they've ruined my business, they've taken my dignity. I don't have anything left."

Grealis was terrorized by people in the small mining community of 300 people since last December, after he lost 50 pounds from prostrate problems and split with his wife of 22 years.

Last Monday, Grealis and state Attorney General Roger Tompkins announced at a news conference that Grealis was free of the deadly acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Top chefs compete

CHICAGO (AP) — Seven chefs were up to their elbows in cornish game hens, veal, oysters and other ingredients as dawn broke Saturday, hoping to create the top taste and palate pleaser to earn them a spot at the culinary Olympics.

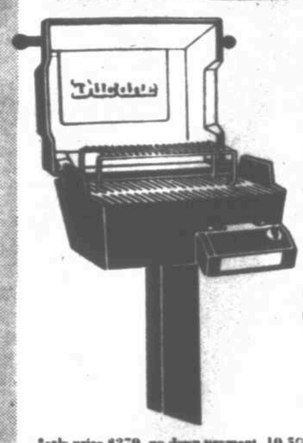

The cooking competition started at 6 a.m., kicking off the National Restaurant Association international trade show at the city's lakefront McCormick Place convention center.

More than 100,000 people from the restaurant and hotel industry in the U.S. and 70 other countries are expected for the conference.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The politics of AIDS has fundamentally shifted in Congress, turning lawmakers who once cringed at voting for money to combat the epidemic or assist its victims into vocal supporters of more federal aid.

Like other political turnarounds, this one reflects a combination of forces: constituent pressures, finely tuned lobbying efforts and a health care crisis too overwhelming to be ignored.

But lawmakers and AIDS lobbying groups say the most powerful factor has been the personal experiences members of Congress have had with those who suffer from the disease, experiences that have allowed them to see it and address it as a public health issue rather than one defined by morality and life style.

"I think more and more members have been sensitized by people in our own districts and neighborhoods who are afflicted," said Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., who is in some ways a symbol of the changing political equation on AIDS.

Lewis is a member of the Congressional Black Caucus.

Sen. Connie Mack, R-Fla., was one of a number of lawmakers whose vote on a bill approving emergency aid for hospitals came as a surprise.

— Jeff Levi,
Political consultant on AIDS assistance

Other lawmakers besides Lewis cited Ryan White, a hemophiliac who contracted the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome through a blood transfusion several years ago and died recently at 18.

Although Congress has steadily increased money for research and education programs over the past seven years, the additional money has generally been provided quietly, as part of broader spending bills that did not require a visible vote on AIDS.

That began to change in 1988, with passage of the first comprehensive AIDS legislation authorizing increases in research personnel.

But the most vivid demonstration of the shift came last week with the Senate's 95-4 vote approving a measure to funnel $2.9 billion in emergency relief to hospitals, community-based organizations and home-care programs in cities and states that have been hardest hit by AIDS.

"The last vote on an AIDS issue that lopsided was in 1987, when it went in the opposite direction," said Jeff Levi, a political consultant on AIDS assistance.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., who has sought money to battle AIDS since the early 1980s, said the change in the political climate was gratifying.

Both the Senate bill and Waxman's broader companion measure merely authorize the emergency relief money.

In the separate legislation needed to actually provide the money, the AIDS programs will be competing with other needs, and at a time when Congress faces new budget-cutting pressures.

NASA set to receive first photos

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Hubble Space Telescope, the most powerful astronomical observatory ever lofted into orbit, takes its first picture of the heavens Sunday.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced Saturday that engineers had completed the early part of an elaborate checkout of the $1.5 billion telescope and would open a shutter on one of its cameras on Sunday for a wide-angle photo of a distant cluster of stars.

Traditionally, a new telescope's initial glimpse of the heavens is called "the first light." For Hubble, the first light will have traveled across space for more than 12 centuries before reaching the orbiting telescope.

Space officials warned that the first effort will not represent the telescope's best work. Nor will the photo have any great scientific value. But "first light" will mark completion of weeks of work by engineers to test, focus and align the 25,000-pound telescope.

"We will consider it a total success if the first picture that comes down is as good as a ground-based exposure," said Ed Weiler, NASA's space telescope program scientist. "You'll hear a lot of cheering when that happens."

NASA engineers believe that Hubble, with its 94.5-inch diameter mirror and powerful light-amplifying and focusing equipment, eventually will take photos of stars that are 25 times fainter than the dimmest object visible from Earth.

Hubble was carried into space last month by space shuttle Discovery. On April 25, it was plucked from the shuttle's cargo bay and left to orbit on its own, 381 miles above the Earth.

Hubble's first light picture will be a one second exposure of a star cluster called Theta Carina. The target can be seen only south of the equator and is part of a constellation called Carina, a word that means "ship's keel."

The star cluster, identified in the New General Catalogue of stars as 3532, is thought to be 3 billion years old. Its distance from Earth is about 1,260 light years, or 7,400,000,000,000,000 miles.

A wide field camera, one of five instruments in the telescope, will capture the image and store it in a tape recorder on board. It will be sent, in the form of electronic bits, through a relay satellite to the Goddard Space Flight Center.

Computers at Goddard will assemble a picture from the electronic bits, take out any stray background signals, and send a visual image to a screen.

And astronomers of today will then be able to analyze light that erupted from Theta Carina in about the year 730 A.D., more than eight centuries before the first telescope was invented.

Mondello could be facing federal civil rights charges

NEW YORK (AP) — A federal prosecutor said Saturday he would discuss bringing civil rights charges against a white youth acquitted of murder in the death of a black teen-ager.

U.S. Attorney Andrew Maloney said he and District Attorney Charles Hynes would consider statements made to reporters by a woman who said she witnessed the killing of Yusuf Hawkins.

Her comments were publicized Friday after a jury acquitted Keith Mondello, 19, of murder and manslaughter charges. He was found guilty of 12 lesser charges, including riot, unlawful imprisonment and discrimination.

Prosecutors charged Mondello with being the ringleader of a mob that attacked Hawkins and three black friends when they went to the predominantly white neighborhood of Bensonhurst looking for a used car.

"I understand a new witness has come forward," Maloney told The Associated Press in a telephone interview. "I will be discussing with Mr. Hynes to find out if anything can or should be done."

The woman told reporters that she heard Mondello urge co-defendant Joseph Fama to shoot the 16-year-old.

Fama, 19, was convicted Thursday of second-degree murder in the killing of Hawkins by a second jury that heard the same testimony. Fama was accused of being the triggerman in the Aug. 23 attack.

Maloney, in dicussing possible civil rights charges, cautioned that the federal government's jurisdiction for civil rights prosecution was limited. The law requires "some effect on interstate commerce, (for example), prohibiting someone from using a lunch diner or rioting on a bus," he said.

The parents of Yusuf Hawkins are escorted from the state Supreme Court building in Brooklyn, N.Y., Friday, with Rev. Al Sharpton at their side. The Hawkins left after the trial of their son's accused killer ended in an acquittal.

"There has never been a prosecution authorized since the bill was passed 25 years ago for simply racial assaults involving people walking down the street," he said.

Supporters of the Hawkins family took to the street Friday night after the Mondello verdict, but there was little violence. Five local television news employees received minor injuries in attacks by demonstrators.

Meanwhile, prosecutors geared up for their case against Joseph Vento, 21, one of five white males still awaiting trial on second-degree murder and other charges for their part in the mob that surrounded Hawkins.

Vento is scheduled for a pretrial hearing at trial-level state Supreme Court on Monday, Clark said Saturday.

After the killing, Vento told investigators he saw Fama shoot Hawkins and was granted immunity from prosecution in exchange for his testimony.

But earlier this year, he fled the city. After surrendering in Ohio, Vento backed out of the deal and was indicted by a grand jury.

"We want the judge to push this case," Assistant District Attorney Edward Boyar told the Daily News. "It's certainly our strongest case. Vento hangs himself."

Gingrich urges stepped up self-help effort

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich on Saturday was host of an hour-long television show designed to kick off a "citizen's involvement movement" across the country.

Sitting at the counter of a barbeque restaurant in Newnan, Ga., in his home state, Gingrich took views of the nationwide television hookup to several sites around the country.

'Galloping pneumonia' cases resurface

ATLANTA (AP) — Muppets creator Jim Henson died of severe pneumonia caused by a rare complication from a common bacteria — but not as rare as it used to be.

The pneumonia began with an infection with group A streptococcus bacteria, which cause "a wide variety of infections, but most are mild infections, such as sore throat and impetigo," said Centers for Disease Control spokesman Chuck Fallis.

CDC researchers cautioned in January that group A streptococcus infections "have re-emerged as a public health problem." But the Atlanta-based agency said "factors contributing to the apparent recent increase ... are unclear."

Among several recent outbreaks of group A streptococcal illness was an outbreak of bacteremia — a severe bloodstream infection — in Denver last year. Nineteen cases were confirmed in one hospital in the first eight months of 1989, where just three had been reported in all of 1987.

Those serious bloodstream infections occur in just four or five cases per 100,000 Americans each year, Fallis said. "It's still uncommon." Of those severe infections, only one in five patients goes on to develop pneumonia,

Henson had complained of cold symptoms to a physician cousin the weekend before his death Wednesday. He did not see a doctor for treatment until he checked into a New York hospital Tuesday morning, after he began having trouble breathing.

By that point, doctors said, the bacterial infection from his lungs had begun attacking other organs and the illness could no longer be controlled with antibiotics.

The fatality rate associated with group A streptococcus bacteremia is between 20 percent and 30 percent, Fallis said.

Serious group A streptococcal infections "generally occur in the elderly, or in people with decreased immunity because of an underlying illness, such as cancer," Fallis said.

Good Fun, Good Cause

It's all in good fun—but along with the fun arrests, we are still serious about "arresting" Heart Disease. All bail and arrest fees are tax deductible and go toward the American Heart Association's programs of research, education and community service. Many Petroplex community leaders have already agreed to be arrested. Won't you join some of the finest cell mates you'll ever meet!

How to File a Complaint

To have one of your friends or foes arrested, just complete the attached complaint form and mail it in with your $15 arrest fee by May 18. Or after May 18, call in the complaint to 563-2008 or 689-7041. We'll take care of the arrest!

How to Set Bail

As the complainant, you have the right to set the initial bail. Begin by thinking about how much your "victim" can raise. Who do they know? How many $50 calls could they make?

How many $100 calls? Keep the bail high and worth their time. Remember, their debt to society is fighting heart disease. Most bails are set between $150 and $500, with a minimum bail of $50.

In any case, depending on the jailbird's charges, attitude or conduct at the jail site, the judge may set bail higher or lower! If you're stuck, call us at 563-2008 or 689-7041.

Pumice mine sparks fashion-over-forest battle

By Deborah Baker

LA CUEVA, N.M. (AP) — Bob Crostic bought his first pair of stone-washed jeans a couple of weeks ago. In one of the pockets he discovered a small chunk of pumice.

There was more than a bit of irony in the find. Crostic, a staffer with the U.S. Forest Service, oversees a controversial, open-pit pumice mine in northern New Mexico's scenic Jemez Mountains.

Because some of the mine's pumice is used to stone-wash or acid-wash denim fabric, critics contend the forest is being sacrificed for fashion.

"Great stuff to mine," the forester told recent visitors to the site as he grabbed a handful of the lightweight, volcanic rock and sifted it through his fingers.

"If you do it carefully you can keep it clean, which is what the garment industry wants."

The Las Conchas Pumice Mine in the Santa Fe National Forest was not in operation on that sunny, spring day. In the absence of machinery, the only sounds on the 8,500-foot-high ridgetop were the roar of the wind through the nearby century-old Ponderosa pines and the occasional hammering of a woodpecker.

But the mine is at the center of a noisy dispute about the use of public lands and a 19th-century law that allows private citizens to mine and appropriate such lands at negligible cost.

Last spring, as work began to prepare the mine site, about 20 members of the environmental group Earth First! converged to protest the operation, and three of them were arrested when they locked themselves to earthmoving equipment.

Under provisions of the General Mining Law of 1872, Copar Pumice Co. was given the go-ahead last summer by the Forest Service to strip mine — and then reclaim — 33 acres in the national forest just off a state highway about 15 miles west of Los Alamos.

Environmentalists went to court, contending the mine's impact had not been adequately assessed. Mining continues while the case is pending.

In September, Copar owner Richard Cook exercised his rights under another portion of the 1872 law. He applied for a patent, or outright ownership, of 1,700 acres of public land surrounding the mine.

If the tract is determined to contain valuable pumice, Cook can buy the land for $2.50 an acre. No state or federal reclamation laws would govern Cook's mining of pumice on his own property.

"It's essentially a major ripoff of public land under an archaic law," said Henry Oat of Santa Fe, who heads the East Fork Preservation Coalition.

The operating mine is barely one-fourth mile away from the East Fork of the Jemez River, a popular trout stream and recreation spot that has been approved by the U.S. House of Representatives for inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic Rivers system.

Nearly 180 acres of the land Cook seeks to patent fall within the quarter-mile corridor on either side of the river that would be protected by federal designation.

The Copar deposits are the remnants of a volcanic explosion that occurred 150,000 years ago.

Pumice goes into products ranging from building materials to toothpaste. Its use as an industrial abrasive, including stone-washing garments, is a small but growing segment of the market, said Donna Smith, a mineral economist who lives near the mine.

Campaign trail all but deserted

By Donald M. Rothberg
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the Democratic Party was having lunch with three former chairmen. Inevitably, the conversation turned to 1992 and who was making moves toward challenging George Bush.

"We couldn't come up with a candidate," said John White, one of the former chairmen at the table.

Where are you, Bill Bradley? Why aren't you out there, Mario Cuomo, Al Gore, Dick Gephardt? What about it, Bob Kerrey, Bill Clinton, Sam Nunn, Pat Schroeder?

"It's kind of spooky," said Bruce Babbitt, the former Arizona governor who was an early casualty in the race for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination.

In May 1986, New Hampshire was buzzing with overt and covert presidential campaign activity. Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., and Babbitt were campaigning actively. Others, including then-Vice President George Bush, had campaign people working in the state.

In the past six months, no potential candidates have visited the state that holds the first presidential primary and no campaign people are soliciting support for candidates.

Ditto for Iowa, where the first presidential caucuses traditionally attract some of the earliest maneuvering.

"Normally at this stage of the game you would have least one or two out making all the body language, doing the fund-raising, denying they were a candidate. But, obviously, you know, you can smell 'em," said White. "I don't find that anywhere now."

"By this time in the cycle, I'd been out there (campaigning) for two years," said Walter F. Mondale, who learned how tough it was to challenge a popular incumbent president.

The quietude is widely perceived as a general reluctance to jump into a race against the Republican president whose approval ratings in opinion polls are at near record levels.

There are a few stirrings.

Virginia Gov. L. Douglas Wilder plans to visit both Iowa and New Hampshire next month and get acquainted with people in the states that traditionally kick off the presidential nominating season.

A group of Texans is getting organized to promote Sen. Lloyd Bentsen for president, but the man who drew rave reviews as the 1988 Democratic vice presidential nominee insists he's not running.

"No plans," said Bentsen when asked if he might run. But the attention is nice. "It's amazing what some of them (presidential boosters) come in and say. I have people at airports walk up and say nice things, which I always enjoy."

On any given day Jesse Jackson is delivering a speech somewhere. Whether that's campaigning or just a way of life is anyone's guess.

Beyond those three, there are lots of other names, but very little activity.

Babbitt is practicing law in Phoenix and writing about the destruction of the rain forests in Brazil and showing no inclination to repeat his 1988 adventure. But, like other Democrats, he worries about the lack of activity in his party.

"It's not a good idea to be sitting in the bleachers," he said. "It looks like a tough game, but you never know what's going to happen. If everybody hangs back until the last minute it's going to make it all that much harder."

Even if Bush's popularity holds and he proves unbeatable in 1992, there's always 1996 and the prospect of running against Dan Quayle.

"I guess I'm more puzzled than troubled about why there seems to be so little activity," said Paul G. Kirk Jr., who was Democratic Party chairman during the 1988 campaign.

No-lick stamp makes debut

SEATTLE — U.S. technology may be taking a licking in some departments, but its new stamps don't.

Take a licking, that is.

The Postal Service made philatelic history Saturday by issuing the first plastic stamp. It is be sold in bank cash machines and doesn't need moisture to stick. You simply peel it off a sheet of backing and post it on your letter.

The 25-cent stamp, featuring an abstract American flag, is being offered on a six-month trial basis in the Seattle area to determine whether people will buy it, U.S. Postmaster General Anthony Frank said.

"Five years from now people will be telling their grandchildren, 'I remember when automatic teller machines didn't dispense stamps.' That's how fast things will go," Frank said Friday.

But, some may ask, why do we need a plastic stamp?

The stamps will allow consumers to buy stamps around the clock, Frank said. They are humidity and tear-resistant, and were designed to have the thickness of a dollar bill, so as to be dispensed through 24-hour bank machines.

People lined up in Seattle's Columbia-Seafirst Tower to buy the first-day covers after enjoying a jazz band, an honor guard, a choral group and a first-day-of-issue ceremony.

Benjamin Chew of the U.S. Postal Service demonstrates how automatic teller machines can now be used to purchase plastic stamps in the Seattle area over the next six months. The 25-cent stamp, enlarged for display at left, features a stylized American flag and is a limited edition.

The U.S. Postal Service and Seafirst Bank came up with the idea for the bank-dispensed stamp. Avery International Corporation, the largest maker of pressure adhesives, developed the stamp. Harry Zelenko of New York City designed it.

The stamp has ten layers and is basically a polyester film over a pressure-adhesive with a water-soluble primer. It is less than five-thousandths of an inch thick and will be dispensed in sheets of 12 the size of a dollar bill.

Only 2 million of the stamps have been printed, so they are likely to become a valuable collectors item, said Jim Hall, a member of the Collectors Club of Seattle and a part-time stamp dealer.

"It's quite innovative. It's just a test stamp so it will be above average in value, more valuable than other commemorative stamps," said Hall, who bought 30 sheets and 15 first day covers.

He estimated one of the stamps could be worth a dollar within a few years.

Smoker, non-smoker tiff ends in court

VANDALIA, Ill. (AP) — A 76-year-old man has been fined $25 and ordered to do community service for throwing coffee on a cigar smoker.

Veldie Kelley was sentenced Friday for his conviction on charges he threw lukewarm coffee at a man who brought a cigar into the no-smoking section of a McDonald's restaurant.

Fayette County Circuit Judge Joseph Fribley said Kelley's conduct was "pretty childish" for a man his age.

A jury last month convicted Kelley, who was responsible for establishing a no-smoking section in the restaurant, of battery. He faced a $1,000 fine and up to 364 days in jail.

Fribley put Kelley on nine months court supervision and ordered him to do five hours of community service a week for two months. Kelley also will be banned from the McDonald's, from which he once was ejected for throwing a glass of water on a cigarette-smoking employee, for the duration of the supervision.

"I'm not a lawbreaker," Kelley said after the sentencing. "I done it to protect my health. If he hadn't of let out the smoke, he wouldn't have gotten" the coffee thrown at him.

Kelley says he has a severe allergy to smoke. During his trial, Kelley said McDonald's employees and customers "made a game" out of smoking near him.

Colombia's campaigns center on drug talks

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The main issue in next Sunday's presidential elections is whether to negotiate with cocaine barons, whose henchmen police say have stalked and killed three candidates.

It's easy to tell where the four surviving candidates stand.

The two who favor talks with drug traffickers are out kissing babies. The two who reject negotiations speak only on radio and television. They make no public appearances, and small armies of security men surround their homes and offices 24 hours a day.

President Virgilio Barco, who ordered security forces to crush the traffickers after a leading presidential candidate was assassinated in August, has refused to negotiate. His four years end Aug. 7 and the constitution does not allow a second consecutive term.

The question of negotiations overshadows all others, many of which also relate to the drug trade.

They include constitutional changes giving the president more power to combat traffickers; agrarian reform, which would split up the traffickers' vast holdings; overhaul of an antiquated judicial system; and anti-corruption measures.

None of the four candidates agreed to be interviewed by The Associated Press.

Cesar Gaviria and Antonio Navarro have said they would give no quarter to drug traffickers.

Both replaced presidential candidates police say were assassinated by traffickers. Gaviria and Navarro say they have received numerous death threats and have relied largely on free air time on state-owned radio and TV stations to get their message to the people.

Gaviria replaced Luis Carlos Galan of the governing Liberal Party, who had urged the government to act against the drug barons while there was still time.

Galan was shot down Aug. 18 as he stood on a large wooden platform delivering a campaign speech in a lower-class Bogota neighborhood. About 60 heavily armed security men were in the crowd to guard him.

Gaviria, 43, would be Colombia's youngest president. He is a former treasury minister and former minister of government, which put him in charge of internal security.

He got 51 percent of the vote March 11 in a five-way party contest to choose a single candidate, and he is heavily favored to win the May 27 election.

About 60 percent of Colombia's registered voters are Liberals, and roughly 35 percent support the Conservative Party. The remainder favor the leftist Patriotic Union and other small organizations.

Terrorism plan will mobilize regular forces

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The government has announced a plan to fight terrorism but says it will not create a new unit to replace the hated secret police of the previous military regime.

Interior Minister Enrique Krauss said the government is instead reinforcing the nation's regular police services because "they are the only institutions legally in charge of guaranteeing public order and security."

Krauss told a new conference that the government is already allocating additional funds to police to hire more personnel and purchase new equipment. He did not elaborate.

Under the previous rule of Gen. Augusto Pinochet, the security work was carried out by a secret police agency known as National Information Central, which was widely accused of torture, killing and the illegal arrest of dissidents.

Pinochet's agency, made up mostly of military officers, maintained secret detention centers and its agents worked under assumed names. It was disbanded shortly before Pinochet handed over power March 11 to his elected civilian successor, Patricio Aylwin.

The secret police files were either destroyed or transferred to the army, which has not made them available to the new government. Pinochet remains army commander.

Since its inauguration, the Aylwin government has faced sporadic political violence and terrorism. In March, two retired army generals were shot and seriously wounded by a pro-Communist leftist guerrilla group.

Students protest prime minister

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Hundreds of students and professors held sit-ins today to protest the nomination of the nation's only four-star general as the country's next prime minister.

But a government spokesman dismissed as "hogwash" the protesters' claim that the appointment of Defense Minister Hau Pei-tsun as prime minister represents a move toward military rule.

The demonstrations came on the eve of the inauguration of President Lee Teng-hui, who will be sworn in for a regular six-year term today.

You chose nursing because you knew few professions would allow you to make such a significant difference in the lives of people. You made the sacrifices that come with long study hours and rigorous clinical training. You thrive on the challenges that come with striving to be your best.

"I knew I wanted to be a nurse from the time I was 15 years old. I saw the incredible difference nurses made in my father's life as he recovered from a heart attack.

"I made the decisions and followed the course that would lead me to my goal and, at the age of 21, became a registered nurse.

"After nursing school there was really no question where I wanted to practice my profession - Methodist Hospital. Because of its size and planned expansions, there are unlimited opportunities for graduating nurses. As part of the cardiac nursing team here, I have the opportunity to continually learn more and be an even better nurse. The people are wonderful; the physicians challenge me to be my best. And that's really what it is all about. If you want to be the best, you have to work for the best. That's why I'm at Methodist Hospital."

Agent beaten

An unidentified military intelligence agent, center, is rushed away from the headquarters of former Dominican President Juan Bosch's opposition Dominican Liberation party after he was disarmed and roughed up by a crowd awaiting their candidate's arrival Friday. Bosch's followers said the man drew a revolver as the candidate stepped out of his vehicle. An Army spokesman confirmed the man was a military intelligence agent but denied that he had drawn a weapon.

Prunskiene supports declaration

MOSCOW (AP) — Lithuania's prime minister Saturday urged lawmakers in her breakaway republic not to suspend their declaration of independence, despite Soviet demands and reports of a U.S. suggestion they do so.

Although Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev now insists on suspension rather than revocation of the March 11 action, Prime Minister Kazimiera Prunskiene said either step would put the republic back under Moscow's thumb.

She met with Gorbachev on Thursday in Moscow, and Lithuania's parliament held an emergency session Saturday in Vilnius, the republic's capital, to hear about the latest efforts at compromise in the standoff with the Kremlin over independence.

As Mrs. Prunskiene addressed the lawmakers, about 10,000 singing and flag-waving people rallied outside to show their support and to protect the building from anti-independence activists, Vilnius Radio reported.

Gorbachev has said the other two Baltic republics, Estonia and Latvia, violated the Soviet constitution with the steps they have taken toward independence. But he has not imposed economic sanctions on them, as he has against Lithuania.

Gorbachev has cut off all oil and most of the natural gas supplied to Lithuania, as well as some raw materials, for its secessionist moves.

"We must take as many steps toward the other side as we can," Mrs. Prunskiene said, according to parliamentary spokesman Ed Tuskenis.

She noted that both Gorbachev and Secretary of State James A. Baker III had urged a temporary suspension of the declaration of independence, Tuskenis said. She met with Baker on Friday.

But on Saturday, a senior U.S. official denied Baker had urged Mrs. Prunskiene to suspend the declaration of independence.

In fact, the official said, Baker had assured the Lithuanian prime minister that the Bush administration wanted the independence movement to succeed.

Huge asteroid may have shaped Cuba

MIAMI (AP) — An asteroid many scientists believe ended the dinosaurs' reign on Earth 66 million years ago may have struck just off the western tip of Cuba, say two U.S. researchers.

If they can overcome diplomatic hurdles caused by the U.S. economic embargo, Bruce Bohor of the U.S. Geological Survey in Denver and geophysicist Russell Seitz, a former Harvard visiting scholar, want to go to the island to confirm their theory.

"The very presence of Cuba itself may be due to the asteroid," Bohor said in a telephone interview last week. "The curved tip of western Cuban may be the crater rim, and the Isle of Pines could be the central uplift," or peak.

Clues pointing to a Caribbean landfall were assembled slowly in the decade since scientists first advanced the idea of a catastrophic end to the dinosaurs. Although the asteroid theory is not universally accepted — some paleontologists blame climate changes or disease for the dinosaurs' extinction — it now has widespread support.

The theory requires an asteroid about 6 miles in diameter gouging out a crater up to 150 miles wide. The resulting dust cloud, or perhaps impact-spawned fires, volcanic activity, climatic shifts and other factors, could have killed the giant reptiles directly or choked off their food supply.

"But there was a tough time accepting this because there was no crater to relate it to — so we had to find a crater," Bohor said. "The possibility was that it hit in the ocean, but that was hard to determine."

Researchers, however, began to notice what is in effect a geological directional arrow pointing to somewhere near North America.

A study by Arizona researchers Alan Holdebrand and William Boynton, published in Friday's Science magazine, agrees about the general area of the strike, somewhere in the Caribbean. They believe the asteroid fell more to the south of what is now Cuba, however — closer to Colombia.

Bohor and Seitz, who explained their theory in the April 12 edition of Nature, say without a close inspection of the Cuban site, no one can be sure. And, they say, all geologists are basing their findings on the same data.

All around the world, a layer of irridium, an element found in asteroids, has been found at about the 66-million-year level in geological formations.

But something interesting happens to those crystals in North America, says Seitz.

From Colorado south, the crystals get bigger — so big they could not have been blown there, but would had to have been ejected directly by the force of impact.

Protests block border crossings

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — More than 50,000 ethnic Macedonians blocked three border crossings with Greece on Saturday to protest that country's refusal to recognize them as a separate nationality, the state news agency reported.

The protesters, from the Yugoslav side of the border, also demanded abolition of Greek visas for Yugoslavs and discussion of the Macedonian issue by the United Nations, the European Parliament and other international organizations, the Tanjug news agency said.

Greece, like Yugoslavia's eastern neighbor Bulgaria, says Macedonia is a historical and geographical term and there is no Macedonian ethnicity.

On Friday, Greek consular officials in Skopje, capital of the Yugoslav constituent republic of Macedonia, turned back more than 100 Macedonians with the explanation that "conditions do not exist" for issuing visas to them.

On Saturday, the Macedonians shut three border crossing points with several hundred trucks and buses, but two of the points were opened six hours after they were blocked.

Bus crash kills 21

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — A speeding bus fell 66 feet from an overpass onto train tracks in southeastern Brazil on Saturday, killing 21 people and injuring more than 40.

"The bus was going at an absurdly fast speed, and the driver obviously lost control," said police officer Carlos Campos.

He said no other vehicle was involved.

The afternoon accident occurred near the town of Itaquaquecetuba, about 40 miles from Sao Paulo. The bus was on a local route and carried a total of 63 people.

Campos said the bus fell 66 feet and landed on part of the Rio de Janeiro-Sao Paulo railroad tracks.

TV Globo, Brazil's largest network, showed the overturned bus with its wheels in the air and its roof caved in.

Campos said the injured were being treated at several hospitals throughout the region.

Three officers slain

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Police said Saturday they had seized more than 1½ tons of cocaine in northern Colombia in a raid on a processing lab, and they blamed drug traffickers for killing three police officers in Medellin.

Police said Friday's raid by a special anti-narcotics police unit near the town of Puerto Triunfo, 75 miles north of Bogota, yielded more than 3,000 pounds of cocaine.

Authorities also seized processing equipment and about 25,000 gallons of ether, acetone and other chemicals used to make cocaine, they said.

In less than a month, police and army units have seized more than 22 tons of cocaine. They say that is a record amount for such a brief period.

The policemen were killed in separate attacks late Friday in the drug capital of Medellin, a police communique said Saturday.

In the last eight days, 20 police officers have been slain in the city, the base of the Medellin drug cartel. Police have said the cartel is paying more than $4,000 for each police officer killed.

Leaders discuss unity

PARKNASILLA, Ireland (AP) — European Community foreign ministers gathered at this southwest Ireland resort Saturday to work on a blueprint for a political union of Europe by 1993.

"This is the start of a major exercise," said Irish Foreign Minister Gerry Collins, chairman of the two-day meeting, in an interview with Irish radio.

He spoke as the ministers of the 12-nation community met at Parknasilla, a picturesque garden resort overlooking Kenmare Bay. Ireland holds the rotating presidency of the body of Western European nations.

The meeting was the ministers' first attempt to draw up draft proposals on a political union to present to the community's heads of state at a meeting at the end of June.

At a special summit in Dublin on April 28, community leaders agreed in principle to achieve a closer political union by 1993.

In June, the leaders are expected to convene an inter-governmental conference on political union, despite British reservations. The European Community plans to create a vast common market by the end of 1992.

Police on the run for special cause

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Lt. Lannie Lee of the Midland Police Department runs laps at Memorial Stadium in preparation for today's Torch Run benefitting Special Olympics. Lee will be joined by 19 other officers, who taking turns, will run more than 365 miles to San Marcos, where the games are being held.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Local law enforcement officials are on the run today.

About 20 members of the Midland Police Department are scheduled to run in the Law Enforcement Torch Run to benefit the Texas Special Olympics.

Taking off at noon, the officers will begin their trek to San Marcos — more than 365 miles. Participants will take turns running every one or two miles.

Torch Runners carry the symbolic flame of hope to the Texas Special Olympics — this year held in San Marcos — said Jamie Moyer, director of special projects for Texas Special Olympics.

The Special Olympics is a yearly competition of 15 sporting events, for people of all ages with mental retardation, who may or may not have a physical handicap.

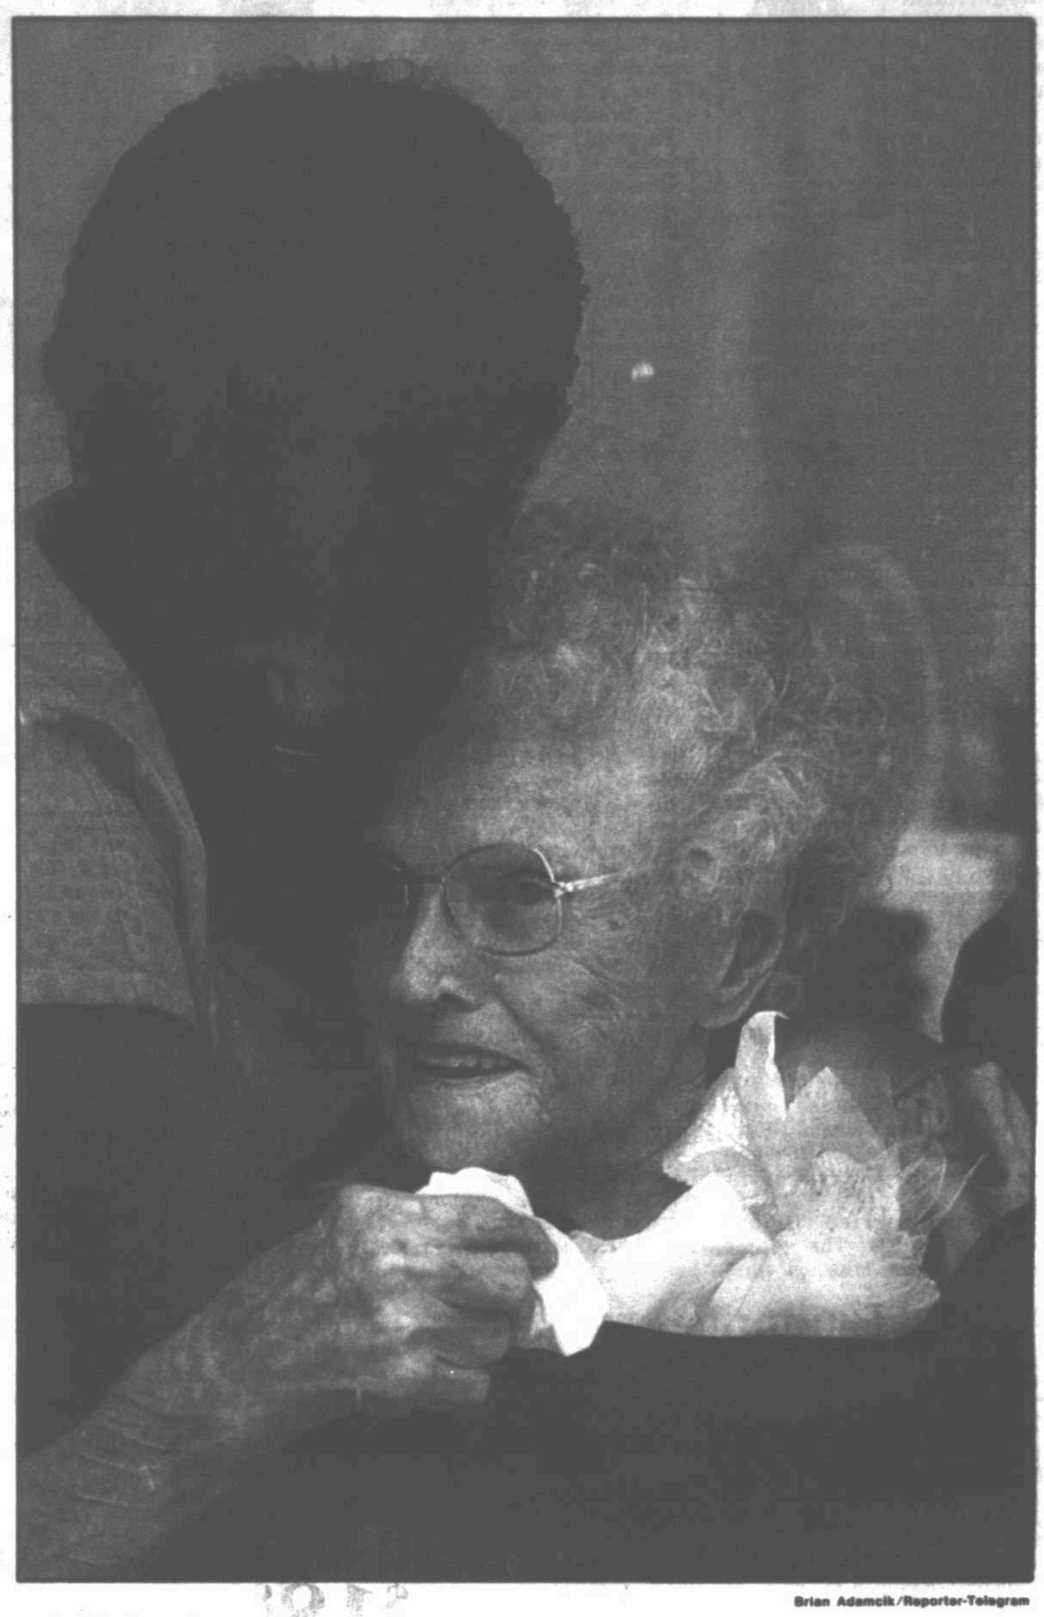

The purpose of the run, along with its symbolic merit, is to raise money for the games through donations. Last year the run raised almost $140,000; this year's statewide goal is to exceed $200,000. Midland officers have raised more than $2,000.

Participation in the run is a first this year for the Midland Police Department.

Not all the officers will be involved in the run for the duration. Lt. Lannie Lee is one of the 10 who will.

Lee said he was participating because he feels it is for a worthwhile cause.

A big hug

Birthday girl 102-year-old Minnie Reed gets a hug from Courtyard Care Center employee Belinda Wright during a party honoring Mrs. Reed this week.

At 102, Minnie Crisp Reed still won't waste a minute

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Minnie Crisp Reed isn't quite sure why she is still on this earth at age 102.

Regardless, she is resolute in her ways, particularly in her wholesome attitude toward life.

"Why I'm still here, I don't know," she smiled with the radiance of a person to whom age is kind.

"Old Gen. MacArthur said 'Old soldiers never die. They just fade away'," she mused, continuing, "Old ladies never die. They just get in nursing homes and keep on living."

Mrs. Reed turned 102 today at Midland's Courtyard Care Center. She doesn't get around too well. But when she does, it's mostly by wheelchair. Her poor eyesight inhibits her reading. And she is "not particularly" enjoying life nearly as much as she did when she was younger.

"I never did waste a minute," she reflected. "But in those days, we worked. I mean worked. We didn't have all the conveniences they have now."

Things today could be better.

"That's what's the matter with the world," she said. "There's not enough work in it. That's what's the matter with the children. They don't know what work is."

And the problem with the nation's economics can be traced to the demise of the gold standard, which checked inflation, restrained government spending and stabilized currency exchange rates. "It nearly broke my heart," she said of the phasing out of the gold standard. "That's when we fell down."

Mrs. Reed dates back to horse-and-buggy days, to days of home gardening and home canning, to days of children walking or riding horseback to school, and to days of propriety.

"When I went on a date, Mama would say, 'Now, Minnie, you let that young man know which side of the buggy belongs to him.'"

She did.

Minnie Crisp Reed was raised in Texas in an era of the work ethic, handshake deals, and discipline. She grew up on a Brown County farm and in the community of Blanket.

Her father, Eli Crisp, was an "all-around guy": farmer, blacksmith, horseshoer, horse trader, and cowboy who rode the Chisholm Trail.

"He was always the first one called for a grand jury. He did have (a good name.) I wish we had more like him today."

Crisp was such a "natural-born horse trader" that he stopped trading. "'I never traded horses

Foster mother recognized

■ Foster Parent Program volunteer and child advocate Robbie Warley has, with her husband Gene, taken in 11 children during eight years of service.

By Allen E. Howland
Assistant City Editor

No one could have guessed that watching a public service announcement outlining the desperate need for foster parents in 1982 would launch an eight-year labor of love for Robbie Warley and her husband Gene.

Warley

The couple, who had three sons, decided to open their home to a foster child. Since that first three-month stay, the Warleys have served as foster parents for 11 children — from four months to 16 years of age — including a young girl they adopted who is now a third-grader.

In the process, Ms. Warley has become a premier advocate for children's rights locally and across the state. Her tireless efforts on behalf of children needing foster care have been recognized with the most recent quarterly Trimble Service Award, sponsored by Leadership Midland and the Reporter-Telegram.

Nominated by the Foster Parent Program, where she has served for almost eight years, Ms. Warley exemplifies the spirit of volunteerism and community contribution the Trimble award was established to recognize, according to award coordinator Jane Bucher.

A founder of county and regional foster parent associations, Ms. Warley is currently vice president of the Texas Foster Parent Association as well as president of the Midland County and Permian Basin groups.

She doesn't limit her advocacy on behalf of children to those involved in the legal system. She works to help all children, including being active in the Parent-Teacher Associations in all the school's her children attend as well as serving as chairman of the organizing committee for today's Lee High School baccalaureate.

A great deal of her work with all foster parent organizations involves recruiting. "Foster parents are always in demand. And no one can recruit like someone who is already a foster parent," said the Nashville, Tenn., native.

"I can answer questions and let them know what to expect if they become a foster parent."

She works at de-mystifying the process, saying "it's really not that hard.

"Many people are hesitant because they think they don't have enough money, or a big enough house; that they don't live in the right part of town or that because they don't have children of their own they won't qualify.

"If you can financially take care of your own family, you can probably qualify," she said, adding that there are single foster parents locally, as well as those who have never had children of their own.

State and federal funds cover a per diem payment that typically meet food, clothing and transportation needs, Ms. Warley said.

Helping meet extra incidental costs is one place where the Midland County association comes in to help. Monies from the group's fund-raising events — everything from bake sales and garage sales to raffles and car washes — are used to help foster children with extra expenses, often those associated with school activities and graduation.

Funds also are used to augment parent training and for an annual Christmas party for the county's 15-18 foster parents, who generally stay full with children in need.

An average of 25-30 local children are in foster care at most times, with the numbers typically rising in the fall when school be-

This fan now handles losses with more style, grace

"One of the things my daddy used to tell me over and over when I was growing up was, "When you become an adult the losses will hurt a lot less and the wins won't seem quite as important."

Ott

He would usually pass on those words of wisdom while I was weeping over yet another loss suffered by one of my favorite teams, the New York Yankees, Baltimore Colts or Texas Longhorns, none of which I care much for any longer, especially the Colts since they now play their home games in that exotic playground of the rich and famous known as Indianapolis, Ind.

But the point is, my daddy was right. Wins and losses accumulated by sports teams just don't seem terribly important any more. I no longer cry when my team loses, for example. Likewise, it has been ages since I have kicked an inanimate object because of a final score. There are no more fists to the door. No more loud cursing.

In other words, maturity has replaced childish outbursts.

Still, this is not to imply that I have given up the art of watching sporting events. No indeed.

I remain an avid fan. It's just that we have learned to handle losses with a greater degree of style and grace. A shot of whiskey beats a fist to the door anytime.

OK, maybe winning still is important.

Let's put it another way. The pain suffered from a loss stings for a shorter length of time than it used to.

Let me give you example.

Return with me, if you will, to the fall of 1960. It's the seventh and deciding game of the World Series. Pittsburgh Pirates vs. New York Yankees. It's the bottom of the ninth. Ralph Terry is on the mound for the Yanks. Bill Mazeroski is at the plate. The crowd is on its feet, roaring. And, here's the pitch. It's a shot to deep left. It could be ... it is ... a home run for Mazeroski. The Pirates are world champions. The Yankees go home losers. And 8-year-old Gary Ott cries for two days straight and mopes around the house for another week-and-a-half.

It doesn't get any worse than that. Especially for an 8-year-old who thought Mickey Mantle, and all other New York Yankees from that era, could walk on water.

It was brutal and the tears flowed freely.

Now, of course, the above scenario could never take place. No game could be that important.

The aging process does that to us. We have become more jaded, or, perhaps, more realistic. We know it is just a game. The sun will indeed rise tomorrow, regardless of the final outcome.

And, we know our favorite players, no matter how great they might be on the field, can't walk on water. They are just regular human beings who happen to possess a special gift to play a particular game quite well.

They are not nuclear scientists. They haven't found a cure for cancer.

They are just folks, like you and me.

So if our favorite team loses a big game, sure, it hurts. But, so what? It's just a game. We handle it.

A half-a-bottle of scotch later, and we don't even care.

Ain't it great to be mature?

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

Fundamentalist endorsed for Baptist presidency

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The presidency of the Southern Baptist Convention is influential even beyond the United States, a Memphis pastor said in an endorsement of fundamentalist candidate Rev. Morris Chapman.

Adrian Rogers, pastor of Bellevue Baptist Church, said that evangelical Christians across the United States look to the SBC for influence that extends to the rest of the world as well. He endorsed Chapman during Bellevue Baptist Church's National Bible Conference.

Rogers was president of the Nashville-based SBC in 1979, 1986 and 1987. His first presidency launched the fundamentalist takeover of the 14 million-member denomination.

Chapman, of Wichita Falls, Texas, told a congregation of several thousand people at the conference who greeted him with a standing ovation that denominational unity cannot be achieved at the expense of truth.

Clutching a Bible to his chest, Chapman said, "This word is either all true or none is true ... If we have unity for the sake of unity yet hedge on truth we'll never have unity."

Fundamentalists have held the SBC's presidency for 11 years and are counting on Chapman to defeat moderate former Midland pastor Daniel Vestal, now of suburban Atlanta. The vote is set to take place at the SBC convention in New Orleans June 12-14.

Chapman focused his comments Thursday on the Bible being literally true.

"I've come to you totally, 100 percent committed to the inspired, infallible and inerrant word of God," said Chapman, who drew a standing ovation.

Rogers said in introducing Chapman that the presidency is critical because he sets not only the tone for the denomination but would appoint those who run its agencies and seminaries.

He said some say it does not matter whether Vestal or Chapman wins because both are Bible believers and the SBC has had enough controversy.

RUN: Officers begin long relay to San Marcos

(From 1B)

"Personally it's a challenge — I'm not an athlete," said the 40-year-old Lee. "I'm not even sure I can do this, that's why it's a challenge," added Lee, who has recently been training at the Memorial Stadium track for the event.

Lee and the other Midland officers won't be alone. They will join up with officers from El Paso at Sheffield. This is the first year El Paso, as well as Abilene and San Angelo police officers, will run.

"We are trying to expand in West Texas," Ms. Moyer said. Amarillo was the only department in the area to participate in the past, she added.

Organizers said that the run for Midland officers will take about 59 hours to complete.

Beginning at the police station on Texas Avenue, the runners will pass through Rankin, Iraan, Ozona, Sonora, Junction and Fredericksburg before arriving in San Marcos.

One obstacle that Lee and the other runners will have to face will be heat. The National Weather Service in Midland forecasts a high in the 90s for the area today.

"It's not going to be easy," Lee commented.

Other officers battling the elements include: Jesse Robledo, Doug Hurt, Phil Maxwell, Mike Roberts, Alvin Navarrette, Manuel Beltran, Kenneth Moten, Ricardo Candelaria and Lindy Therwhanger for the distance; Dusty Land, John Urby and David Wilks to Sonora; and Chief Richard Czech, Chief Billy Ray, Becky Hamm, Ed Nicks and Kay Therwhanger to Rankin.

The Law Enforcement Torch Run was begun in 1981 by Wichita, Kan., police Chief Richard LaMunyon for the Kansas Special Olympics. The benefit run spread to nine other states in 1984, adding Texas in 1985, and today includes all 50 states.

The Texas Special Olympics at the Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos will be held May 22-25, and the International Special Olympic International Games will be in Minneapolis/St. Paul July 19-27. There will be 57 athletes from the Texas delegation at the international games.

with a man that I didn't get the best of him, so I quit,'" Mrs. Reed recalled her father saying. "He knew every time he traded horses with a man, he got the best of him. He was the best judge of horses of any man you ever saw."

Her mother, Docia Crisp, was "the salt of the Earth," Mrs. Reed said. "She was the best cook and the best mother that there ever was. She didn't fail to give us instruction. If we (children) had gone wrong, it wouldn't have been her fault."

Mrs. Reed tried snuff briefly as a young girl, imitating the "little old ladies" who dipped snuff.

"I thought it looked so good." But her mother caught her sneaking around and "made me dip until I got as sick as a dog." She stopped dipping snuff.

Her parents were stalwarts in their community. "They buried all of the dead and borned all the babies. We didn't have all the doctors in them days — just one doctor to the county."

By age 18 in 1906, she was married to a Missouri pharmacist, John Reed, who was 12 years her senior. She met him in a drug store when her family traveled up to Missouri to visit relatives. They were married in Blanket and lived in Oklahoma and Oregon before returning to Texas, living in Amarillo and Graham before moving to Hobbs, N.M.

Mrs. Reed was widowed in 1953 and never remarried.

In recent years, a fellow asked her why she never married again.

"Could you give me a reason why?" she retorted. "That shut him up."

Though Mrs. Reed admits to getting lonely in the nursing home, her "consolation" is in her son, 63-year-old John Reed of Midland.

"John is all I have," she said, "and I love him better than anything in this world."

As a mother, she is proud of her son.

"John did some things when he was a little boy I'm not proud of, but I'm proud of John the man."

Reed, once the mischievous boy, is a crisis-intervention specialist in Midland.

And Mrs. Reed was most delighted in her son's wife, Helen, who died last year. "She was a darling," Mrs. Reed reflected. "She put up a good fight (against cancer). I was a good cook, but I didn't have a knack for making it look pretty like Helen did."

Minnie Crisp Reed could make tasty chicken-and-dumplings. "That was just my way of stretching that old chicken to give you plenty to eat," she said.

John Reed adores his mother, whom he described as "very strong-willed, very independent, very close in family ties, very intelligent."

"If she were in today's society," he said, "she would probably be the vice president or president of a big corporation. She's got that kind of drive, very ambitious." A talented artist, Mrs. Reed painted landscapes and the Gibson girl, the ideal of femininity in the late 1800s and early 1900s, in watercolor.

And she is "very socially conscious," her son noted. "She is very outspoken. Don't ask her for her opinion on something. She'll tell you. She's a character."

And if she opts not to associate with certain people, she simply will state: "They're just not my breed of cattle."

Today, Mrs. Reed's social life is fairly restricted, and she does delight in visits by her son. And she is pleased in her reticent room partner, 87-year-old Lucy Speeks, the quiet type, who said "I likes to listen to her."

Mrs. Reed reflected over the years.

"I've seen a lot in my life. Some of it I didn't like. I don't 'get' the way girls act now."

Outside of visiting with her son and friends and watching television from her bed or wheelchair, Mrs. Reed said "all I have to do is just lie here and look.

"There's no use to get sour" on aging, she reasoned, "because it's just like it is," she said. "And there's not a thing I can do about it."

Project Blueprint graduates 17

Staff Report

The first Hispanic to represent the 68th District in the State Legislature will be guest speaker for the United Way's Project Blueprint graduation Monday. The 7 p.m. ceremony in the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College will be preceded by a reception at 6 p.m.

Gallego

The 17 graduates of Project Blueprint's fifth Board Institute will hear Pete Gallego, 28, of Alpine, who is unopposed in his bid to become a state representative in the November general election. He currently serves as the First Assistant District Attorney in the 83rd Judicial District. In the March primary, he upset the incumbent in Texas' largest geographic district — covering Presidio, Brewster, Pecos, Terrell, Val Verde, Kinney and Maverick counties.

Gallego graduated in 1980 from Alpine High School and in 1982 from Sul Ross State University. He earned his law degree in 1985 from the University of Texas. He has worked as a congressional aide to U.S. Congressman Tom Loeffler and as assistant attorney general under Jim Mattox.

Project Blueprint is a leadership training program for minorities. Upon completion of the program, they are ready to be placed on United Way boards and agencies.

gins. The Foster Parent Program works closely with teachers to identify victims of physical, emotional or sexual abuse, she noted.

Abandoned and neglected children also require the services of foster parents, for anywhere from a few days to as long as two years or more.

Through the state group, Ms. Warley has become involved in lobbying for laws to benefit children, making it easier to remove a child from an abusive environment, to limit case workers caseloads and to define and limit foster parent liability.

The Warleys continue to serve as foster parents, although they have not had a foster child since before Christmas. Being a full-time behavioral science student at Midland College the last two semesters has cut into Ms. Warley's already scarce free time. She also works as bookkeeper for the family's auto parts business.

The newly opened First United Methodist Church Activity Building at Illinois Avenue and Baird Street will be the site of an open house at 11:30 a.m. today.

Open house at First UMC

Staff Report

First United Methodist Church is hosting an Open House for its new Activity Center at 11:30 a.m. Sunday.

The Activity Center has a full-size basketball court, volleyball courts, badminton courts, a shuffleboard court, basketball goals, bleachers, an exercise room, locker rooms and a snack bar.

In addition, the facility houses classrooms on the upper and lower levels. All the woodwork is oak, natural and stained. The facility is handicapped accessible.

"We look forward to expanded programs and new opportunities for people to learn and grow at First United Methodist through various activities that will begin in the near future," says the Rev. Jeff Lust, associate minister at First UMC.

In 1981, First UMC conducted feasibility studies on adding additional facilities. Since that time, the church has built a new Music Department, elevators, a new Children's Day Out office, Youth Ministries office and a new playground.

The total as of now for all three phases of the expansion program is $4.7 million.

The public is invited to attend the open house.

Oil industry's change exciting

Midland residents witnessed another indication of the community's changing role from an exploration center for the oil industry to a production center this week as Exxon officials announced the formation of a new onshore exploration division in Houston.

That will result in the transfer of approximately 75 Midland exploration employees to Houston. The Exxon announcement came on the heels of a decision by Chevron U.S.A. last month to consolidate three production divisions into one unit that will be based in Midland.

In recent months other oil companies also have been shifting divisions into or out of Midland, giving credence to the industry's changing view of Midland from a "discovery town" to a "recovery town."

In fact, the Chevron announcement plus others by Texaco and Conoco reportedly will mean nearly 300 production people will move to Midland. And while at first glance it appears that "incoming" numbers are higher than "outgoing" ones, the situation could level out eventually as the emphasis of local operations continues to change.

While the changing status of Midland oilfield activities has been obvious for weeks and will result in the eventual transfer of numerous oil company personnel, the new emphasis for the Tall City should not be viewed as a particularly negative development.

Much of the discovery work, which began in the early years of this century, has been completed and the oil industry is entering into a new and exciting period during which the emphasis will be on the recovery of known reserves.

The oil industry has changed. Today's oil producers evaluate fields using seismic techniques which provide a three-dimensional view of strata. The challenge is not so much in finding new reserves now, but rather on recovering oil that is present but unrecoverable with conventional technology.

Whereas sinking a drill bit for new fields provided the excitement of past years, the application of technology to recover new reserves within proven fields will provide the excitement for today. That's where tertiary recovery, horizontal drilling and other innovative techniques come in.

However, the change to a production town does not mean there will no longer be exploration activities around Midland. In fact, deep drilling for gas and other plays will continue and could bring a resumption of Midland's role in exploration.

But the emphasis will be more and more on getting already discovered oil out of the ground and to America's energy-using consumers. That's indeed an exciting future.

Hatch revisions constitute abuse

Just as the House had done last year, the Senate last week passed an assault on the Hatch Act, which for 50 years has effectively separated the permanent U.S. government bureaucracy from partisan politics.

President Bush has threatened to veto the measure. ... We urge him to do just that, and we urge cooler heads in Congress to support his view.

The revisions of the Hatch Act go too far in the name or providing federal employees with what supporters call basic rights of citizenship. (But) the Hatch Act ... has not prevented them from voting, merely from becoming identified ... with political fundraising and other partisan activities.

Under the Senate bill, the 3 million federal workers covered by the Hatch Act, mostly civil service and postal employees, could hold office in political parties, campaign for candidates and solicit political action committee contributions from fellow employees.

The House bill would go even further, allowing federal workers to run for office ... and requiring that they be given leave to do so if they desire.

At stake is public trust in the evenhandedness of the permanent government workers who provide continuity and stability to federal service. The potential for patronage and partisan abuse of the system would be intolerable.

Clean air amendment classic political pork

With notable chutzpah, Congress is fixing to pass a "clean air" amendment that will load costs onto ordinary drivers and make air pollution worse.

Needless to say, there's a special interest explanation.

In passing an amendment to the Clean Air Act the other day, the Senate caved in again to the growers of corn and the manufacturers of ethanol, a blend of corn-derived alcohol and gasoline...

The Senate's amendment to the Clean Air Act would require use of ethanol in cars in nine cities — despite the fuel's poor record on pollution.

Back in 1978, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency declined to approve an ethanol-gasoline blend because of its adverse effects on auto emissions. A new study prepared for the American Petroleum Institute by an independent company, Sierra Research Inc. confirms those effects.

...And even after tax subsidies, this environmentally dubious fuel would cost consumers up to 25 cents a gallon more than gasoline and get lower mileage.

If clean air is the goal, why not wait for the results ... of major research into reformulated gas undertaken by the oil and auto industries.

It's hard to escape the conclusion of responsible senators like Bill Bradley, D-N.J., and Phil Gramm, R-Texas: That the amendment had nothing to do with clean air but instead is a classic slice of political pork.

JACK ANDERSON

Child-support enforcement lacking

WASHINGTON — An estimated one in every four American children lives with only one parent, usually a mother. And in a staggering number of cases, the other parent, usually the father, pays little or no child support.

Anderson

As a result, nearly half of the American families headed by single mothers lives in poverty.

In 1988, the most recent year for which the federal government has the figures, about $18.6 billion in child-support payments were due to change hands between parents. Only $4.6 billion of that was actually paid. That's $1 collected for every $4 owed, when even the $4 was probably not enough to meet the child's expenses in the first place.

This inexcusable abdication of the most basic of human obligations — parenthood — has been matched by abdication of governmental responsibility, too.

Ronald Reagan signed the Family Support Act into law in November 1988, tightening the enforcement procedures for tracking down delinquent parents. But it took George Bush nearly a year and a half to appoint someone to the job of enforcing that law — the post of assistant secretary of family support in the Health and Human Services Department.

At least desperate mothers now have an assistant Cabinet secretary on their side. What they still don't have is the monthly check.

Single mothers like Mina Veazie of Washington, D.C., find ways to cope. They can pay the rent or the utilities, but not both. The father of Veazie's child is not on the lam. She knows where he is. The judicial system knows where he is. She has a court order forcing him to pay child support — a court order that cost her $3,500 of her own money for lawyers and other fees in three jurisdictions. She has been in court 10 times, and still no one is making the father send the checks. Veazie isn't on welfare, so the government hasn't pitched in to make up what she has lost in child-support payments.

The rising divorce rate isn't the only social phenomenon contributing to the child-support deficit. This is 1990, and marriage is not a prerequisite for having a baby. Before the courts can assess child support, they have to find out who fathered the child, and that has created a bigger web of red tape than collections alone.

In Washington, D.C., 90 percent of the child custody cases on the books are still at the stage of establishing paternity, and Washington is not unique among urban areas. Last year, the District of Columbia Office of Paternity and Child Support Enforcement took 2,500 blood tests at a cost of $300 each.

The office has 100 staffers and an annual budget of $9.5 million. Nationwide, state and local child-support collection agencies spend nearly $2 billion a year, all to track down people who have perfected conception but can't quite picture themselves as mommies or daddies for the duration.

Even that amount of money isn't enough. Irma Neal, who runs the child-support enforcement program in Washington, D.C., told our reporter Paul Zimmerman that her annual budget hasn't increased in the past three years. Her office can handle 7,000 enforcement cases a year, but it has a backlog of nearly 70,000. The office established a hot line in February for anyone with child-support problems to call. It has 12 lines operating 24 hours a day, and in the first two months, 26,000 calls came in.

RUSSELL BAKER

Will change make us insiders or outsiders?

It would lie outside the present beltway, so, naturally, it is already being called "the outer beltway."

Baker

This means the present beltway will have to be called "the inner beltway," and thus we embark on a rewriting of the dictionary of American politics.

For instance: What is now the noblest place in this old world of ours? It is that splendid region called Outside the Beltway.

Why so wonderful? Because that's where the real people live. The place inhabited by the other kind of people is called Inside the Beltway.

Since the real people live Outside the Beltway, you can readily imagine what kind of people live Inside the Beltway.

Let us not describe them in a family newspaper meant for breakfast reading.

No, they are not a people totally insensitive to the real people, but they have a highly undesirable form of mentality. It is called an "inside-the-beltway mentality."

Is there no cure for inside-the-beltway mentality? Yes, I have seen it cured many times when politicians from Inside the Beltway seek re-election. They come Outside the Beltway, often to our very own town.

Except for our blessedly healing effect on his psyche, he usually says, or words to that effect, he would be prostrate with inside-the-beltway mentality.

"That means he might get interested in government and start thinking like a statesman instead of a confidence man," I tell the family.

He makes us tremble describing the agony suffered by sensitive but heroic folks like himself thrust into daily contact with people among whom inside-the-beltway mentality is rampant.

Coming among the real people who inhabit Outside the Beltway bucks him up and gives him the heart to go back Inside the Beltway.

Naturally, we are delighted to send him back. We don't want him hanging around town for the next two or four or six years, stopping us on the sidewalk every time we take a walk, telling us we are real people.

All right, having heard so much about the situation Inside the Beltway, I selected my present abode only after maps showed it was safely located miles Outside the Beltway. And a shrewd move it was, too.

Occasionally we must visit Inside the Beltway when desperate for consumer goods more interesting than beer, carbonated soda pop, cigarettes and the top ten paperback sellers, and it is always an eerie moment when we cross the beltway.

But now with this outer beltway project, we may suffer beltway enclosure after all.

The insane worshippers of the highway god heed no pleas for mercy.

Even when their dream is realized — the entire country covered with asphalt — it is said they will not consider the highway god propitiated until they cover the continent with three upper decks for parking.

The old geography will inevitably change with an outer beltway. Everything will become more complicated, more subtle, more difficult to understand.

Inside the Beltway will no longer be sufficiently precise to indicate the Really Bad Place.

What we now call Inside the Beltway will become Inside the Inner Beltway.

There will be a new zone outside the inner beltway but inside the outer beltway.

Who knows what it will be called? "Between the Beltways," perhaps. Or maybe, "Inside the Outer Beltway." Surely not "Inside the Outer but Outside the Inner Beltway."

By having this far-out Washington gasoline alley looped around us, we will no longer be residents of wonderful old Beyond the Beltway where the real people lived.

Heed our pain, other real people. Washington's growth potential is limitless, and the lust of the highway god unslakable. You are all in danger of losing your realness.

1990's version of 'civil rights' mocks tenet

WASHINGTON — Suspense was less than intense when President Bush met with advocates of "The Civil Rights Act of 1990." Ostensibly, the question was whether he might abandon his veto threat. Actually, there never has been serious doubt but that he will sign whatever Congress enacts labeled "civil rights."

Will

This is so even though this year's bill, whose prime mover is Sen. Ted Kennedy, mocks the core tenet of what once was the civil-rights movement. That tenet is: Rights inhere in individuals and do not derive from membership in government-favored minority groups.

The bill will not, as its advocates assert, simply overturn some of the most important decisions rendered last year by the Supreme Court with its new conservative majority. It will, by traducing the principle that defendants are presumed innocent, drive America deeper into the quagmire of racial quotas.

Last year the Court acted to make enforcement of the 1964 Civil Rights Act compatible with assurances that were given when it was enacted. That act stipulates that no employer shall be required to grant preference to any individual because of race or other group attribute, or shall be required to achieve racial balance in his work force reflecting the composition of the available population.

Nevertheless, statistical disparities between employment patterns and the composition of local populations soon came to be treated by courts as sufficient to create a presumption against the legality of employment practices that have a "disparate impact" on various groups. But last year the Court re-established the correct interpretation of the 1964 Act. The Court adjusted the burden of proof so that mere statistical imbalance would not virtually guarantee that plaintiffs would prevail. Hiring practices could be invalidated only for discriminatory motives, or for statistical consequences that could not be explained by legitimate business considerations such as hiring or promotion by merit.

Critics of the Court argue, in a crashing non sequitur, that such condemnation is difficult to achieve, and therefore wrong. The strange premise is that plaintiffs' successes are the proof of justice.

The closed reasoning of many civil-rights organizations is: All standards (hiring, academic, etc.) are socially conditioned. American society is permeated by racism. Therefore, all standards are at best suspect and at worst illegal.

Such reasoning dovetails with the assumption that employers, who are part of "the system," should be presumed, on the basis of statistical disparities resulting from their practices, to be guilty of racial discrimination until they prove themselves innocent.

Now, the fact that a hiring practice has a disparate impact on a particular group may indeed be powerful (although by itself rarely decisive) evidence that the practice needs to be changed. Or it may indicate that the group needs to be. Here we come to "the pool problem." The available pool of qualified persons may be, for social and cultural reasons unconnected with racial discrimination, too small to generate the "correct" statistics.

The 1990 bill, ostensibly designed to halt the slide into "two nations," actually codifies that division by defining certain minorities as protected classes, permanent wards of government. However, the label "civil rights" gives to any legislation, even a travesty of civil-rights principles, powerful momentum.

Supporters of the bill have made minor modifications, so the Bush administration says its disagreements are now "minimal." So, it seems, is interest in achieving a colorblind society.

SPEAKING OUT

By Greg Rabidoux

Greg Rabidoux, a professor of government at Midland College, is a former congressional aide in Washington, D.C., and a United Nations intern. Currently, he is a business consultant. He holds the M.A. degree in government studies from American University.

Being professionally and personally interested in the political process, I considered myself fortunate to have witnessed firsthand such explosive and byzantine elections as Mayor Richard Daley (the younger) in Chicago, Mayor Dinkins biting the Big Apple of New York and as a congressional aide in Washington, D.C., the nation's cozy capital.

But being new to the colorful, macho posturing politics of Texas I have to admit all others must take a back seat to the Texas-tough rawhide style of campaigning.

Will Texans take pride or shame in the fact that new standards may be set or lowered in this governor's race? Probably a bit of both. Does this mean the rest of the nation's campaigning is more "normal and proper?" No, but inescapably the stage on which Texas plays out political drama looms the largest.

Desperately seekings signs of substance in this race as a way of demonstrating to my students that campaigns hinge on more than quick soundbites, image-making and vast resources of finances, I have been fortunate to have other meaningful dialogue to discuss from such chart-toppers as the "did she or didn't she" question over candidate Ann Richards' possible illegal drug usage, the "White Women Only" abortion comment and the morbid struggle to be credited with the most death penalty executions.

Not to be outdone the standard-bearer of the GOP, candidate Clayton Williams, by all accounts basically a well-meaning man, shared his one-step bustin' rocks therapy, reminisced on his youthful dalliances in Mexico's answer to Disneyland and uttered an unfortunate but telling comment involving rape, the rain and how to gain wide media coverage without spending a dime. All of which may not give insight to how each candidate will guide Texas in the coming years but it sure makes for dramatic coverage.

Which brings us to the real hazard that this campaign portends for the future of Texas, a man-child of a state in great need of competent, visionary leadership but also for the state of affairs of our nationwide campaigning. For any serious-minded person truly concerned over the budget deficits, drug abuse, the national and Texas crises in education, environmental concerns and the daunting challenge of foreign trade competition, there is an alarming dearth of honest, forthright policy proposals, solutions and just simply confronting of issues. In a state prideful of "taking the bull by the horns," both candidates have acted like this is all too heady for either them or their electorate to understand — much less demand answers to.

Are Richards and Williams solely to blame? Probably not. But by playing fractious, polarizing politics with an obvious dose of chauvinism thrown in, Texas may end up getting the candidate it wants but may not deserve.

The real answer may lie in codifying the limits which bucks, PACs, sound-bites and marathon campaigns dominate the playing field and by accepting to a person the responsibility of asking serious questions of "Texas-tough" politicians, and by not becoming so numb that we are satisfied with cavalier, cute and oftentimes superficial responses.

Rather than attempting to point fingers solely at our candidates for engaging in mudslinging or general platitudes, the media for being obsessed with sound-bites and drama, or ourselves for not being attentive, let's all sincerely care about the quality of our campaigning and our candidates, demanding excellence not only from our leaders but from ourselves. In an era of sweeping Democracy and crumbling Communism we owe it not only to emerging democratic leaders around the world realizing now the greatness of self-determination but to the many Americans and Texans who sacrificed their lives to keep the dream of Democracy alive.

Will Texas survive in either case? Most definitely, both Richards and Williams are decent, dedicated people. But for a state priding itself on being the largest and the best maybe we should make sure our candidates prove themselves to be much more than decent. At least Jesse Jackson has not yet crafted a way to show up in Texas and hope for a "Run Jesse Run" draft campaign, but then like Williams, he has never held elected office before so maybe this race hasn't yet hit its final stride. I mean its final Gallop (Poll).

Either way, Texans will soon be answering the Texas-tough versus the Cosmo Woman challenge, one that apparently remains unanswered despite the Billie Jean King-Bobby Riggs showdown.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 700 words or less.

Daughter displays Williams' attitude

I've stood by long enough and listened to the liberals talk about my dad's attitudes toward women. I'm Clayton Williams' daughter and I believe I know more about his attitude toward women than they do.

I think a man's true attitude toward women is shown through his family relationships — mother, wife, sister, daughter. Ask my grandmother and my aunt about my dad and they'll tell you how loving and generous he has been to them all of his life. Ask Modesta about him and she'll tell you how he has always encouraged her in all of her endeavors.

How did Clayton Williams raise a daughter in today's world? I'll tell you. From the time I was a small child he has encouraged me to do my best in many ways. While most men leave the females home when they go hunting, fishing, camping and working, he not only took us with him but also taught us to be good shots, to love and respect the outdoors, to clean our own game, to hike as far as any man and to be good sports. Not to mention teaching me about his business.

He has always encouraged all of his children to "do something" with their lives — to find their niche. We tried a lot of things: (1) Construction — He tried to teach me to drive a bulldozer with no luck. I helped him survey parts of the ranch with some success; (2) Cow work — It turned out that I'm not such a hot horsewoman since I stampeded a whole herd somehow; (3) Flight school — When I thought I might make a good pilot, he paid for and encouraged me during the three lessons I took ... airsick each time.

Finally, after earning a bachelor's degree at the University of Texas and working at a large Dallas bank, I started work on an M.B.A. in finance. With his emotional and financial support, I earned that degree in 1983. Now, here is a man who encourages his daughter in all her non-traditional pursuits, who teaches her the kinds of things most men only teach their sons. And the liberals say he has a bad attitude toward women. Balderdash!

The women of Texas ought to wish they'd had a father like Clayton Williams. Here is a man who believes in equal rights and has put it in practice to boot.

Clayton Williams is a friend to people from all walks of life. I truly believe he will prove to be a historically great governor for all the people of Texas.

Media put 'spin' on rally coverage

On April 28 I attended Rally for Life '90 in Washington, D.C. It was one of the three largest rallies in U.S. history. I have witnessed how the media distorted the number in attendance and used "spin" in its coverage Sen. Gordon Humphrey has launched a congressional inquiry into why two-thirds of those in the crowd were not counted by the Park Service.

Prior to the rally the Park Service described to the organizers what boundaries would constitute a population of 500,000 people at the Washington Monument. The crowd generously exceeded these boundaries. CNN reported its attendance one hour before it started! Other than C-SPAN's coverage and UPI, how is the public to know? UPI's estimate was 569,000. Rallies of lesser size were front-page news in the Washington Post, but this was placed in the Metro section showing only three people there.

Here's what you weren't told:

■ On behalf of all Catholic bishops, Cardinal O'Connor offered "... to help any woman pregnant and in need with hospital care, legal care with adoption or should she keep the child, help free of charge." He continued, "With all the television cameras here, I have to wonder what will happen to all the footage."

■ Speakers included: President Bush (speaking by phone); Vice President Quayle; James Dobson, Ph.D.; J.C. Willke, M.D.; Congressman Henry Wade; Geline Williams, former mayor of Richmond; Wanda Franz, Ph.D.; Olivia Gans, director of American Victims of Abortion; and celebrities.

■ Concerned Women of America is three times the size of NOW.

When news reporting becomes what they want us to believe instead of the truth we are in a grave situation.

Lee High School Band issue

Band planning 'outstanding'

In response to the letter by Frank Stapp published Wednesday, May 9, let me say that having opened Lee High School as its first principal in 1961 and having had two children go through the program, I have had a special interest in the band for 29 years. During that time I have sat in rehearsals, attended booster meetings, observed marching, concert and sight-reading contests, and have accompanied the band on bus trips.

The planning that goes into that program is outstanding. Last spring the director gave me a copy of his instructions to students in preparation for the 1989-90 school year. It was six legal-sized, typewritten pages with a schedule of dates for all football games, marching contest in November, concert schedules, Band Booster Club meetings, February solo and ensemble contests, special clinic with Dr. Harry Begian from Purdue University, concert and sight-reading contests in April and much more.

If Stapp had read the director's communications to students, attended booster meetings, read their monthly newsletter, read the many notices posted on the walls in the halls and bandroom, or scheduled an appointment with the director or principal he would never have written his criticism.

The Lee band has a remarkable record of 20 consecutive years of sweepstakes awards. For those who may not know the significance of this accomplishment, these are the requirements. First, the band must make a superior rating in the marching contest in November. This is a 10-minute performance of both required and chosen patterns and moves.

Second, they must prepare three very challenging concert pieces from the University Interscholastic League (UIL) list and perform them for a superior rating.

Finally, they must go into a sight-reading contest, be given a UIL piece that none (not even the director) has seen and perform it after only 10 minutes of instruction. Again, the rating must be superior.

Regardless of how well the students play their instruments, these accomplishments could not be done without tremendous planning, preparation and long hours of hard work on the part of the director. The current director has been responsible for the last 10 of those 20 sweepstakes awards.

Students given opportunities

As a Lee band parent, I would like to respond to the letter which appeared in the Wednesday, May 9, edition of the Reporter-Telegram regarding the Lee High School Band and Orchestra. Both students and parents were told how much each student's assessment would be and when each portion of the assessment was due at the beginning of the school year.

Not all families can afford to pay this amount. However, during the 1990-91 school year, the band and orchestra has sold city directories, candy, cheesecakes, video coupon booklets and ads. A portion of everything sold by each student is applied to his or her assessment. Students who really worked at these fundraisers were able to raise most, if not all, of their assessment.

If they chose to not participate in the fundraisers, they have had eight months to earn the money for their assessment.

I agree that it is unfortunate that whether or not a student is allowed to go on the spring trip comes down to money. However, travel to football games, food on those trips, travel to marching contests, spring trip, etcetera, take money. The assessment each student is required to pay covers only a small portion of these expenses, and I do not believe it is unfair for students to be expected to pay this small portion.

The Lee band and orchestra have done an excellent job this year representing Midland. They are to be commended. I also believe the band and orchestra booster club officers deserve our appreciation for their hard work this year rather than criticism because they required students to pay the assessment they have known they owed all year long.

A recent edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram reported that Paul Cullen has received a 9-year jail sentence for poisoning the treaty oak.

It is interesting to me that we put people in jail for endangering the life of a tree and yet we pay other people to kill our own babies by abortion. Think about it.

Bush's travel plans indicate summit confidence

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — My previously expressed confidence that the Bush-Gorbachev summit, which starts in Washington May 31, will lead to a START treaty for a big reduction in strategic nuclear weapons has been greatly encouraged by word from our Washington news bureau that President Bush is scheduled to visit Moscow in November.

Hearst

That good news, which came from John Wallach, our foreign editor, is expected to be announced at the summit meeting.

That the president has been scheduled for the trip to Moscow in November is evidence of his confidence the Washington summit will end successfully.

Further indication of its likely success was the breakthrough a few days ago in the Soviet-Lithuanian dispute. President Mikhail Gorbachev received in Moscow the Lithuanian prime minister, who brought concessions including the willingness to suspend all laws the Lithuanian government has passed to implement its March 11 declaration of independence. Gorbachev said if the Lituanian parliament confirms this offer, talks to settle the dispute could begin.

This could undoubtedly facilitate progress at the Washington summit, where both presidents plan to overcome any differences that might still exist after the talks Secretary of State James Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze had in Moscow this past week.

The two superpower leaders would then approve the framework of the treaty and instruct their negotiators to complete any necessary changes in the draft during the summer and fall.

The START treaty, the most historically important of all the contemplated agreements, would then be signed in the Kremlin in November. President Bush's visit to Moscow and the signing there of the treaty, which may call for a 50 percent reduction in each country's strategic nuclear arsenals, would undoubtedly bolster Gorbachev's popularity.

It could lessen mounting public discontent over his inability to make faster progress in coping with the catastrophic consequences of 72 years of communist management of the Soviet economy. The president is eager to render that aid to Gorbachev to help maintain him in power since he believes the downfall of the most democratically-oriented reformist and least threatening leader in Soviet history would be disastrous for disarmament and development of a peaceful new order in Europe.

By the time you read this report, the Moscow meeting between Baker and Shevardnadze will have ended. The purpose of that meeting was to resolve unsettled issues and some hitches which cropped up after the last meeting of the two foreign ministers in April.

At the Malta summit in December, 1989, both sides pledged they would wrap up a strategic arms (START) treaty by the time of the May meeting in Washington. Baker and Shevardnadze seemed to be well on their way until they met in April. Then, perhaps because of Pentagon objections to cruise missile concessions made at a February meeting, Baker proposed banning mobile missiles armed with multiple warheads. Since only the Soviets have such warheads, Moscow balked and insisted on postponing the issue.

Perhaps to counter the U.S. proposal, the Soviets stiffened their position on sea-launched missiles. They had previously agreed each side should simply declare how many such missiles it planned to build. In April, they renewed their previous insistence on legally binding limits. Since these are difficult to verify, Baker balked and revived an original U.S. position that only air-launched missiles with a 1,000-kilometer range should be limited. The Soviets promptly claimed the United States had earlier accepted Moscow's position that such missiles with a range of 600 or more kilometers should count as strategic weapons. The U.S. negotiators said they had no clear record of that.

These are examples of the jockeying that takes place in the penultimate phase of history-making diplomatic negotiations. It is a tactical maneuver that serves two purposes. One, to diminish expectations and cushion public dismay if the summit falls short of expectations or ends in failure. Two, to prepare for tough bargaining in the experts' final round before the leaders meet.

It is, of course, possible something could happen between now and the end of this month that would abort the summit or cause it to end in failure.

However, a leading member of the Soviet-American Women's Summit, which met in Washington last Tuesday, told Joe Kingsbury Smith, our national editor, that she was confident the Bush-Gorbachev summit would succeed. Elena Kamenetskaya, a member of the USSR Academy of Science and a specialist in disarmament, ecology, international law and space law, said Gorbachev definitely wants it to succeed and believes President Bush does, too. I share that view.

Bostick

Stoll

Heather Bostick is the Midland Chamber of Commerce's most recent secondary teacher of the month.

A librarian at Goddard Junior High School, she holds a bachelor's degree from West Virginia State University and a master's degree from Marshall University in West Virginia.

She worked at Midland High School from 1983 to 1986 and started at Goddard in 1987.

Heather is a librarian always ready to assist. I have assisted in the library and have witnessed firsthand her willingness to drop her work and help a student locate information or a book.

Unless someone has helped in a library, one can not understand how much detailed work is involved in keeping an excellent library. Our library at Goddard is one of those rare libraries. Heather is soft spoken and kind even though she deals with hundreds of students daily. Let's honor our dedicated librarians by choosing Heather Bostick as an outstanding teacher. She truly is a teacher for all of the students."

The latest elementary Teacher of the Month honor, bestowed by the Midland Chamber of Commerce, is to Jeff Stoll, an adaptive physical education instructor based at West Elementary School. He holds a bachelor's degree from Southwest State University in Marshall, Minn., and began his teaching career at Bonham Elementary School last fall.

Ron Hunt, the Midland Independent School District coordinator of physical education, and Jan Murdock, MISD special education supervisor, praised Stoll for his performance:

"As the district's only adaptive P.E. instructor, Jeff is responsible for making any necessary adaptations in order for handicapped students to participate in physical education.

Jeff currently serves 17 campuses working with students with a range of handicaps from cerebral palsy and spina bifida to severe mental retardation. In the year that the Adaptive P.E. program has been in place, Jeff has not only involved students in activities they could not have previously participated in.

He is making a difference in the lives of many, many MISD students and is quite worthy of this honor."

Five nursing scholarships created

Staff Report

Creation of five annual nursing scholarships at Midland College by the Fasken Foundation was announced today. Both Associate Degree and Vocational Nursing students are eligible, with at least one Vocational Nursing scholarship to be awarded annually.

The scholarships are for the period of the program: two years for ADN (Associate Degree Nursing) students and one year for LVN (Licensed Vocational Nursing) students. Scholarship recipients will be required to sign an agreement to practice nursing after graduation in the Permian Basin, preferrably in Midland, for the period of the financial assistance.

Pro rata repayment will be requested of recipients who do not fulfill the agreement.

"This is a rather unique scholarship, in that both ADN and LVN students are eligible," said Dr. Eileen Piwetz, chairman of the college's Health Sciences Division.

In addition to their commitment to work in the area after graduation, students will be selected on the basis of financial need and scholastic achievement prior to entrance in the nursing program.

Each scholarship will provide $2,480 for the first year and $1,940 for the second year.

Persons interested should apply through the Health Sciences Division, which has established a special screening committee.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC begins registration process

By H.A. Tuck

Time permits are being issued again this week for Midland College's first summer session. They'll also be available May 29 and 30. The time permits are used at specific times at registration on June 4. Summer I classes start June 5 and end July 10.

Tuck

Summer session classes meet Monday through Thursday, usually for two hours and five minutes for a three-credit-hour class. Labs times are additional.

Remembe that transcripts are required for all entering students and for those transferring from private colleges or out-of-state universities. This is a state law, mandated in conjunction with the TASP (Texas Academic Skills Program) exam.

Summer course bulletins are available at the college's Student Services Office, in the Administration Building, or the Midland County Library. You can call 685-4501 for details about obtaining time permits, the TASP test, or transcripts.

And don't forget that summer office hours at MC are 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Thursday. May 28 will be observed as Memorial Day.

Registration is scheduled on Wednesday for all sessions of Kids' College at MC as well as the new Teens On Campus program.

There was a pre-registration last week, but here's what you can do if you didn't get your children or grandchildren registered. First, come to the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building for a course bulletin and enrollment form. Then come to the Physical Education Building at 5:30 p.m. on Wednesday and the youngsters will be processed as quickly as possible.

Kids' College is for youngsters who have completed first through sixth grades, while the Teens On Campus program is for youngsters who have completed seventh and eighth grades.

The registration Wednesday is for all sessions of both Kids' College and Teens On Campus. Kids' College sessions are June 18-28 and July 16-26 with three sets of classes each afternoon Monday through Thursday for the two-week period. Fees are $28 per class. Some of the classes require a nominal amount of extra supplies.

There are three sessions of Teens On Campus. The first is June 11-14, the second is July 9-12, and the third is Aug. 6-9. TOC has two classes each afternoon. Fee is $20 per class, plus a few supplies for some classes.

You can call 685-4518 for more information about either Kids' College or Teens On Campus.

A whole bunch of students came last Monday to register for the Spring Interim. Whether they are machochists or eager beavers, they have to be motivated to take the three-week interim, where lectures are four hours daily, plus all the homework of the regular term. Almost 300 students enrolled for an interim session, which is probably the highest number ever.

While we write this, we're still waiting to see if the Chaparral women's tennis team can capture another national team title at the NJCAA tourney in Tucson. Regardless of their finish, it's been a great season for the team and for coach Joe Williams.

Right after the last match was played in Tucson on Friday, Williams headed for the airport and a trip to Tyler to join the men's team. The men are ranked first and begin action today as defending NJCAA champions.

Although the Student Center is closed for the summer, while remodeling goes on for the original portion and the new addition gets completed, there will be limited food and drink available from 7 a.m.-1 p.m.

A "Sidewalk Cafe" is opening tomorrow in the patio of the Science/Faculty Building. It's being operated by the Chaparral Center food service folks to provide coffee, cold drinks, and cold sandwiches for students and employees. If the experiment works, it will be in operation all summer.

MC photo students, current and past, had more than one-third of the 43 photographs accepted for the "Focus On Oil '90" photography exhibit now on display at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum. The MC students included G. B. Hart, Peggy Jezek, Clara King, Walter Kleweno, Karen Lanier and Jack R. Stanley. They combined to have 16 photos accepted.

Summer camp scholarships now available

Staff Report

The newly established Star Foundation Trust is offering partial scholarships to a summer camp for children with learning disabilities, attention deficit disorders and hyperactivity.

The camp program at Star Ranch in Ingram is designed to help children retain academic achievement often lost over the summer. Offering one-to-one and small group tutoring in areas of specific need — especially in reading, writing and math — the camp can help children re-enter school with little or no appreciable loss in achievement.

Classes in photography, music, art, journalism and drama, reading writing and math are interwoven to help make the educational process fun.

Traditional camp activities round out the program giving campers the opportunity to achieve success in a non-competitive, wholesome environment. Activities include field games, archery, swimming, snorkeling, canoeing/kayaking, fishing, camping, volleyball, basketball and exercise programs. Training staff supervise all aspects of the program.

For more information on Star Ranch or on the Star Foundation Trust Scholarship Fund, write to Star Ranch, HCR 7 Box 39-C, Ingram 78025, or call (512)367-4868.

Kids' College, teen program to register

Staff Report

Wednesday is registration day for two Midland College summer programs. The popular Kids' College at Midland College is being supplemented with Teens On Campus as a new program for students who have completed seventh and eighth grades.

Those who didn't mail in pre-enrollment forms should visit the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building on Monday or Tuesday to obtain course bulletins and registration forms.

"Time permits were issued earlier this week for those who had completed pre-enrollment forms," said Jan Reed, program coordinator.

Registration for those without time permits will be at 5:30 p.m. for Kids' College and at 7 p.m. for Teens On Campus. Both groups will be registered at the Physical Education Building.

Now preparing for its sixth year, Kids' College at Midland College is for students who have completed first through sixth grades. There are three groups of classes each afternoon: 12:40-2 p.m., 2:10-3:30 p.m., and 3:40-5 p.m. Classes are taught Monday through Thursday. Session I is June 18-28 and Session II is July 16-26. Different classes are offered for those in grades 1-3 and 4-6.

Students may register for one, two, or three classes in each session up a maximum of six per student.

Teens On Campus is having three one-week sessions. Session I is June 11-14, Session II is July 9-12, and Session III is August 6-9. Classes are two hours in length, from 1-3 p.m. and 3-5 p.m. TOC students may register for a maximum of six classes, two in each session.

Course fees for Kids' College at Midland College are $28 per class. The TOC classes cost $20 each. Supplies are required in some classes.

"Classes are taught by community residents in most instances, with some college faculty and staff personnel." Reed said, "The course content is designed for the specific ages of the children. For example, we offer many of the same classes in Kids' College, but tailor them for the first through third graders, with more advanced content for the fourth through sixth graders. We're doing this with different classes for the TOC youngsters, both by having longer class sessions and by upgrading the course content."

Persons wishing more information should visit the Continuing Education Office or call 685-4518 on Monday or Tuesday.

SKYALERT

Seconds count . . .

J. Gordon Lunn, Big 2 News

- Get away from windows, doors and outside walls.
- Protect your head.
- Get under something sturdy.
- In homes and small buildings, go to the interior part of the lowest level of the structure.
- Closets, bathrooms and interior walls are your best protection in many cases.
- In high rise buildings, move as far down as possible and then seek shelter in interior small rooms or stairwells.
- In mobile homes or vehicles, leave them and go to more substantial shelter.
- Outdoors, with no shelter available, lie flat in nearby ditch and protect your head.

TORNADO 2 WARNING Tornado detected, take shelter.

J. Gordon Lunn

BIG 2 NEWS The News Leader!

TORNADO QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

How fast do tornadoes move?
The average speed is about 30 miles per hour, but some have been reported up to 70 miles an hour. Most tornadoes travel from southwest to northeast, but their direction of travel can be erratic and may change suddenly.

Can you drive away from a tornado?
In most cases, no. While chances of avoiding a tornado in a vehicle may be better in open country, it is still best in most cases to seek or stay in a sturdy shelter. Even a ditch or ravine offers better protection than a vehicle if more substantial shelter is not available.

Does large hail mean a tornado is around?
Hail may or may not precede a tornado, however the portion of the thunderstorm with large hail is often the area where strong to violent tornadoes are most likely to occur. Once large hail begins to fall, it is best to seek appropriate shelter and remain in the protected area until the thunderstorm has moved away. This will usually be 15 to 30 minutes after the hail stops.

Is it still good to open a window to minimize damage?
Opening a window was once thought a way to keep damage from a tornado to a minimum by allowing inside and outside pressures to equalize. In fact, if a tornado gets close enough to a structure for the pressure drop to happen, the strong winds will already have caused the most significant damage. Plus, opening the wrong window can actually increase damage. Most structures have sufficient venting to allow for any sudden drop in atmospheric pressure.

How do most of the deaths occur in tornadoes?
Most tornado injuries and deaths result from flying debris which is why it is so critical to seek substantial shelter. Small rooms in the center of the shelter offer the greatest protection from flying objects and it is less likely the roof will collapse. Always stay away from windows or exterior doors.

When do most tornadoes happen?
Usually, tornadoes appear during mid-afternoon or early evening, but they can occur at any time, often with little or no warning.

What does a tornado sound like?
Tornado winds may produce a loud roar similar to that of an airplane. At night, or during heavy rain, the only clue to the presence of a tornado may be its roar. Thunderstorms can also produce violent straight line winds which produce a similar sound. If any unusual roar is heard during threatening weather, it is best to take cover immediately.

What else can I do to protect me and my family?
The key to survival is pre-planning. All family members should know where the safest areas of the house are. Identify interior bathrooms, closets, hallways, as the places where you should move at the first sign of danger. There may only be seconds to act.

Duke University honors 17 junior high students

Staff Report

Seventeen Midland junior high school students will be honored by Duke University for their outstanding academic achievement.

Five students will receive national recognition on June 2 at the Duke campus in Durham, N.C. Twelve students will receive state recognition in upcoming ceremonies in Austin.

The five students to receive national recognition are Jennifer Atkins, Eric Blake, and John Messer of Goddard Junior High School and Melia Fitz-gerald and Sarah McCullough of San Jacinto Junior High School.

Receiving state recognition are Michael Rhoads of Alamo Junior High School; Staci Bowden, Michael Grandy, Mariellen Harris, Laura Kamis, Lori Lane, Angela Lea, Katherine Martin, Allison Miller and Alison Owens of Goddard Junior High School; and Bobbie Scott and Claudia Wilson of San Jacinto Junior High School.

The seventh graders earned recognition through their participation in the annual Duke University Talent Identification Program (TIP). To be eligible to participate in the program, the student must have scored at the 97 percentile of higher on a nationally normed test. Over 70 seventh grade students in Midland public schools enrolled in the program. Participants are administered the Scholastic Aptitude (SAT), a college entrance examination taken by college-bound high school juniors and seniors.

To be eligible for national honors a student must score a minimum of 600 on the math portion of the SAT and 550 on the verbal portion of the SAT or a combined score of at least 1000. A similar score by a high school student would gain the test taker acceptance into several major colleges.

Eligibility for state recognition requires a minimum score of 500 for males and 450 for females on the math section and a minimum score of 430 on the verbal section.

Over 45,000 students nationally participate in this annual recognition program. In addition to being honored in state and national ceremonies, TIP provides information to the honoreees on a wide array of educational opportunities open to them as America's top junior high students.

Chuck Wentzel, director of the Scholastic Awards Program noted, "This is a real achievement since more than 25,000 entries representing all fifty states plus Canada and Puerto Rico were submitted. More than 200,000 entries were submitted on the local level as regional competitions began last fall."

Wentzel further commented, "Through the Scholastic Art Awards Program, Scholastic Inc. has for 63 years aimed to encourage achievement in creative work among high school students, foster appreciation of the arts and bring wider public attention to the outstanding work of the schools and their teachers."

Midland High School was awarded a National Achievement in Art for its superior art program.

Blanck received a Gold Medal for her ceramics creation. Less than 40 winners were named in this medium, with less than 450 national gold medalists being named in all 14 media categories. Only 525 students nationwide received any type of national recognition in this prestigious competition.

The MHS junior's artwork will be exhibitied at the State Center of Illinois in Chicago June 10-22. Blanck and her art teacher, Margo Hebert, have been invited to attend the opening of the show featuring a specail winner's reception, June 10, noon to 3 p.m.

Conducted by Scholastic Inc., this contest is co-sponsored by Hallmark Cards, Inc., Richo Camera and Video, and Strahmore Paper Company.

Texas flag hangs in Ardmore

ARDMORE, Okla. (AP) — One of two faded, scarred flags that Texans carried into the 1836 battle that won their independence is enshrined in honor on a museum wall — in Oklahoma.

Layton Sutton presented the family memento to the Carter County Historical and Genealogical Society when the group opened a museum in Ardmore in 1988. More than 30 years before, his family backed out of a decision to donate the flag to the Texas Historical Society, after Texans said the flag could only go on display every two or three years.

Sutton's family says his great-great uncle carried the banner into the Battle of San Jacinto as a 12-year-old boy. The 1836 battle won Texas' independence from Mexico, and avenged the massacre at the Alamo six weeks earlier.

Gen. Sam Houston himself gave the flag to ancestor John G. Moore, Sutton says.

The Ardmore museum was so impressed with the gift it sought the advice of the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C., on how to preserve the flag.

But Texas historians question the flag's authenticity.

Among their problems with the flag are the 30 white stars that surround a single large star on the flag's blue field, at a time when the United States had only 24 states.

Houston's battle rosters don't include anyone named John G. Moore, said Larry Spacic, curator of the Houston, Texas museum at the San Jacinto battle site.

Vidal, errors beat 'Dogs

Vidal gores MHS twice

■ El Paso Burges pitcher Eric Vidal eliminates Bulldogs from state playoffs with two victories.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Eric Vidal was the only El Paso Burges pitcher who proved he could shut Midland High hitting down.

Unfortunately for the Bulldogs, he did it in both Saturday games at Angels Stadium to give Burges a 2-1 area playoff series win and end MHS' season.

Burges fought back from an early 5-0 deficit in the first game of the day to take a 10-9 win, then closed the affair with a 7-3 victory. The 'Dogs ended the year with a 21-11 record, while the Mustangs moved to 26-4 as they prepare to enter the regional round in a best-of-three series this coming Friday and Saturday against Arlington High in Arlington.

"We wanted to come back and kick some butt today after yesterday's game (a 19-4 MHS blowout)," Vidal said after earning credit for both Burges wins. "We were a laughingstock yesterday, but nobody can say that after today. He who laughs last, laughs best."

Nobody laughed at Vidal — who did not throw Friday — as he came through in Saturday's opener after MHS had tied the game 8-8 in the top of the fifth. Vidal closed the game in 3⅔ innings by allowing only one run and three hits against a Bulldog team that pounded four Burges hurlers for 19 hits the previous day.

He then proceeded to toss six innings in the series rubber match, allowing three runs (two earned) on seven hits.

"Truthfully, I was feeling nauseous as the game got down to those last few innings. But I had a job to do and I did it," he said.

"We came out today with our backs against the wall, but we knew we could do it. Everybody on the team did their job. We didn't have many errors and we got some foul ball outs in some key situations," Vidal said.

Midland High baserunner Gabriel Salazar tries a headfirst slide into first base, but El Paso Burges first baseman Dan Beck already has the ball during Saturday's first game at Angels Stadium.

Computer lacks 'Dog math

■ MHS' two-man pitching staff strained in three-game baseball playoff series with El Paso Burges.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Somewhere in the depths of Midland High sits a worn out slide rule atop a smoking computer, neither of which had a solution to Bulldog baseball coach Tim Whalen's dilemma Saturday.

How can a two-man pitching staff be effectively divided for a three-game series in a two-day period? It cannot. Not if you have to play all three games, and MHS had to.

El Paso Burges, humiliated by a 19-4 defeat in Friday's area playoff opener at Angels Stadium, shrugged off the Bulldogs' five-run onslaught in the first inning of Game 2 Saturday, and went on to win the doubleheader and the cherished berth in the regional playoffs.

To accomplish the feat, Burges bested MHS ace Gabriel Salazar 10-9 in the middle game, then overcame the combined efforts of untested sophomore Brian Rounding and tried-true-but-weary James Madrid for a 7-3 decision in the finale.

The Mustangs' sweep slapped an abrupt punctuation mark on the 1990 chapter of Midland Bulldog baseball that included 21 wins and 11 losses.

Yet with their five-run first in the middle game, it looked like the Bulldogs were breezing toward another blowout and an easy sweep of their own.

"I think everyone thought that," said MHS curtesy runner Ruben Almager. "It looked like it was going to be so easy, and then we just kind of put it in neutral."

Burges, meanwhile, slipped into high gear and overcame that deficit in just two innings. And when MHS took back the lead with a four-run fourth, Burges — the home team for Game 2 — retook it with two runs in the bottom of the fourth. The Mustangs never trailed the Bulldogs throughout the remainder of the afternoon.

Blazers burn Spurs in OT

■ The Portland Trail Blazers use a clutch play by Jerome Kersey to pull ahead of the San Antonio Spurs with 30 seconds left in overtime.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The team that wouldn't fold finally won the series that wouldn't end. And the Portland Trail Blazers did it with a play that most players wouldn't make.

The Blazers, aided by a crucial breakaway foul call, beat the San Antonio Spurs 108-105 in overtime of Game 7 Saturday to reach the Western Conference finals for the first time since their championship season 13 years ago.

"The guys got together and really pulled it out," Portland's Clyde Drexler said. "It was a gutsy win. It was a true test of character. You've got to keep the faith, keep perservering and keep doing the things that got you here."

With the score tied 103-103 and less than 30 seconds remaining in overtime, Portland's Jerome Kersey came up with the big play.

San Antonio was working for the go-ahead basket when Rod Strickland's no look pass headed out of bounds on the Spurs' baseline.

Most players would have let the ball go out of bounds, but Kersey saved it and threw an off-balance length-of-the-court pass to Clyde Drexler, who was fouled from behind by Strickland with 26.2 seconds to go.

"That's Jerome Kersey," Portland coach Rick Adelman said. "Jerome Kersey makes more hustle plays than anybody in this league. He never surprises me when he makes a play like that."

Drexler made the two free throws and Portland got the ball out of bounds because it was ruled a breakaway foul. Drexler was fouled again, sank both free throws to make it 107-103 with 16.4 seconds remaining and the Spurs couldn't catch up.

AP Laserphoto

Portland's Terry Porter slams into San Antonio's Caldwell Jones.

Kersey said he decided to go for Strickland's errant pass because he saw San Antonio's Willie Anderson make a move toward it.

"When I first saw the ball I thought about letting it go," Kersey said. "Then I saw Willie make a step toward the ball and I thought, 'I better do something here because you never know.'

Terry Cummings of the Spurs made two free throws with 9.1 seconds to play to make it 107-105. Then Drexler hit one of two foul shots with 7.3 seconds remaining, giving San Antonio a chance at a game-tying 3-pointer.

But Terry Porter, who finished with 36 points and nine assists, stole Reggie Williams' inbounds pass to preserve the victory.

It was the second overtime game in the series. The Blazers won Game 5, 138-132, in double overtime in Portland.

"I think we were the better team," San Antonio coach Larry Brown said. "But it was a great, competitive series between two teams most people don't know much about and I was thrilled to be part of it."

Unbridled late effort falls short

BALTIMORE (AP) — Kentucky Derby winner Unbridled made another big move on the final turn, but Summer Squall bid a rousing farewell to the Triple Crown zeries with a victory in the Preakness on Saturday.

The runnerup in the Kentucky Derby took the lead just past the eighth pole from Unbridled and got to the wire in 1:53 3-5 on a fast track at Pimlico.

Summer Squall's owner and trainer had said the colt would now rest until the fall and skip the June 9 Belmont Stakes, the Triple Crown finale.

In a bid to repeat his Derby performance, Unbridled got the lead in the upper stretch. This time, however, Summer Squall, ridden by Pat Day, would not be denied and he drew away for a clear victory over the favorite.

Mister Frisky, the beaten Derby favorite who was eighth in that race, finished third on this pleasant sunny afternoon, while longshot Music Prospector was fourth in the field of nine 3-year-olds.

Since Summer Squall is not going to the Belmont, Unbridled will earn a $1 million bonus for points earned in the Triple Crown series if he simply starts that race. The colt earned five points for his victory in the Derby and three for being second on Saturday, and that total cannot be overcome.

Summer Squall, owned by a 28-person partnership managed by Dogwood Stable, returned $6.80, $3 and $2.60. Unbridled, owned by 92-year-old Francis A. Genter and ridden by Craig Perret, paid $3 and $2.80. Jose annd Marta Hernandez's Mister Frisky, ridden by Gary Stevens, was $3.40 to show.

Pecos sweeps Estacado

Staff Report

Pecos advanced in the Class 4A baseball playoffs by completing a two-game area sweep over Lubbock Estacado with a 14-9 win Saturday at Angels Stadium.

After downing the Matadors 13-5 in Friday's series opener, the Eagles jumped out to an 8-2 lead in the third inning Saturday. But Estacado fought back into an 8-8 tie with six runs in the top of the fifth.

That turn of events may have only infuriated the Eagles, who responded in kind with three runs in the bottom of the inning to break the logjam. Eagle Junior Williams led off the fifth with a single before Oswaldo Hinojos struck out and Ricky Flores fouled out, the only time in the two-game series he went without a hit.

Finally, Luis Cerna smashed an 0-2 Michael Irvin pitch to deep center for a triple to score Williams. On Irvin's very next toss, Cruz Abila tripled to left to score Cerna. James Silva closed the frame's scoring with an RBI single before Irvin could get out of the inning.

Flores finished the game with a 4-for-5 showing at the plate that netted him five RBI.

DOGS: Burges laughs last

From 1C

"You saw the real Burges Mustangs today. Yesterday we were just happy to be here, but today we came to play," said catcher Jesse Munoz, who was selected as El Paso's player of the year by the El Paso Times.

Munoz, the leadoff hitter, proved why such accolades come his way by getting on base 11 times in 12 at-bats over the course of the series. Also, at catcher he guided Vidal through bases-loaded and two-on situations in the final game, when the Bulldogs were never able to get a run across because Vidal forced them into inning-ending double plays.

"Fortunately, we got into a groove. Eric and I have been working together since we were 11 years old. He was pitching outside to them in the first, but after we started working them inside they didn't seem as effective," Munoz said.

In the first set, the Bulldogs marched out and put their first six batters on base with five hits off starter Robert Barrueta. Keith Gilbreath led off with a single, then scored on a triple by Scott Melzer. Patrick Mowles followed with an RBI-double before MHS pitcher Gabriel Salazar reached when Barrueta hit him with a pitch.

Will Sowders then singled, and Jason Stone earned an RBI on a 4-3 groundout. James Madrid topped the inning with two-run single to give MHS a 5-0 lead.

The Mustangs came back in this game, however, with two runs in the first and four more in the second to go ahead 6-5. Another pair in the third put Burges on top 8-5. But the 'Dogs returned the favor and took the lead in the fourth with four runs, all credited to Barrueta even though Vidal was on the mound when the go-ahead run scored.

Once more the Mustangs came roaring back, and drove two runs across in the bottom of the fourth to end the game's scoring. From there, Salazar threw two shutout innings while Vidal faced three MHS batters in the fifth, three in the sixth and five in the seventh.

One of the the few bright spots for the Bulldogs Saturday was the varsity debut of sophomore Brian Rounding, who got his first-ever start in Game 3 of the series. Despite allowing Burges to go ahead 1-0 in the top of the first, Rounding threw four effective innings before eventually giving up three earned runs.

MHS tied the game when Madrid hit a sacrifice fly to score Sowders in the fourth, but a four-run fifth ultimately did the 'Dogs in.

"Everybody thought we were a joke after yesterday and it kind of hurt our feelings," said Burges coach Bob Osborne. "It's a real tribute to a bunch of 15-, 16-, and 17-year-olds and the way they came back.

"Our approach today was that we were playing a 14-inning game, and that's the way we played it. I don't know how many heroes we had today, but there were a bunch of them."

OUCH: Bulldogs fall from state 5A playoffs

(From 1C)

"We just got real overconfident and we didn't take care of business the way we're supposed to," said MHS outfielder Keith Gilbreath, who hit safely and scored in all three games.

"You've got to do the things that got you here, and we didn't. We've relied on Gabe (Salazar) all year, and he did a good job. But we couldn't help him on the field," said Gilbreath, refering to four Bulldog errors in the game.

In fact, just four of the 10 runs were earned against Salazar, who fell to 10-6 with the loss that set up the rubber game, one that saw MHS's two-man rotation stretched to three out of dire necessity.

Whalen tapped his ever-slim bench between games and out poured Rounding, who had never before seen action at the varsity level. But the youngster answered the call with a varsity-like effort that kept the 'Dogs in contention and tied at 1-1 through the first four innings.

"I didn't expect to play, but it's the coach's call and I tried my best," said Rounding, who gave way to Madrid early in the fifth.

"I felt pretty comfortable out there, really," he said. "I figured it would be kind of easy to handle because that's a pretty good infield behind me."

Rounding gave up five runs — three earned — and six hits while striking out three. He left with the Mustangs holding a 4-1 lead and runners at the corners with no outs.

Madrid, who pitched the distance for Midland High in Friday's Game 1, said he was ready to take the mound, but his arm was not.

"I knew I could throw strikes, but I also knew I wasn't going to throw it by anybody," said Madrid, a right-hander with an 11-2 record.

"I told Coach Whalen that, and he just told me to do the best I could."

Madrid let Richard Martinez load the bases with an infield single for starters. But after a pop out and a sacrifice fly by Adrian Ceniceros, Madrid caught Bobby Casas looking to escape further damage.

But Bulldog bats were silenced by Burges pitcher Eric Vidal, who got both victories Saturday by finishing Game 2 and working the first six innings in Game 3. Vidal, aided by inning-ending double plays in the fifth and sixth innings, scattered seven hits in raising his record to 9-1.

"We hit the ball hard, but it was right at people," said Whalen after the dust had cleared. "But we had our opportunities to score, and we had our opportunities to play good defense.

"We didn't take advantage of either opportunity. Therefore, they (Mustangs) go and we stay," he sighed, taking a final look at the reminder he has inscribed inside his baseball cap which reads: 'Remember: They're just kids.'

Texas police ready to swarm into Basin

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Ever been wanted by the police before?

Well, they want you now.

On June 12, an expected 1,500 to 2,000 police officers from throughout Texas will descend upon the Midland-Odessa area. Not to worry, though. The uniformed types will be in the Permian Basin to take part in the 1990 Texas Police Games, a five day Olympics-style sports festival strictly for those in the law enforcement profession.

The Midland and Odessa Chambers of Commerce, as well as the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce petitioned in Austin for the games to be held in the area two years ago; the three chambers are largely responsible for the games and the expected $4½ million-to-8 million the event is expected to generate for the local economies.

Midland Community Services Officer Ron Sartor, who is serving as executive coordinator of the games, said approximately $29,000 of a $42,000 budget has been raised thusfar. Sartor said private or corporate donations are the best way the games can be assured of being a success.

"We're not receiving the same generous community spirit in contributions as we have in the past," Sartor said. "Small donations from merchants are insignificant when compared to the monetary impact this will have on the Permian Basin."

Contributions from citizens and merchants go to a general tax exempt fund at Odessa Bank. The money is used to pay for the events, judges, referees, rental fees, facilities and green fees.

Donations — private or corporate — can be made by calling the Midland Police Department's Community Relations Unit at 685-7130.

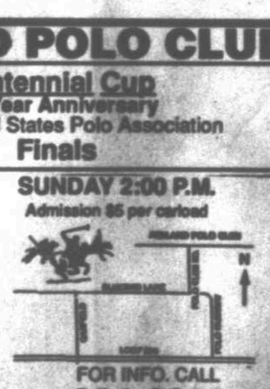

Some companies have donated goods, and volunteers from groups such as the Boy Scouts of America have helped cut the budget down, Sartor said.

SWC Track

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Former Midland Lee track star Quintus Hampton posted a 50.95 Saturday to win the 400 meter hurdles in the Southwest Conference track meet and Houston's Leroy Burrell won two events, including the fastest time ever under any conditions with a 19.61 wind-aided 200 meters victory.

Arkansas scored heavily in the distance events and won its third straight men's team title and the Houston Cougars won the women's division, ending Texas' string of five straight titles.

Burrell surpassed the world record of 19.72 by Italy's Pietro Mennea in 1979 but the 4-meters-per-second wind was well over the 2.0 mps allowable for world records.

Burrell caught Texas A&M's Andre Cason with about 40 meters left in the 100 meters and hit the tape at 9.94 with a 2.8-meters-per-second wind.

Cason was second at 10.08 and Texas Christian's Jon Drummond was third at 10.17.

Burrell's performance overshadowed the women's team race that came down to the final event, the long jump, with Houston and Rice tied for the lead.

Houston captured the women's title when jumper Cynthia Jackson, on her final jump, moved up from seventh to sixth place to give the Cougars the victory.

Houston won with 138 points and Rice had 135, followed by Arkansas with 121, Texas 114, Baylor 85, Texas A&M 65, Southern Methodist, 38, Texas Christian, 29 and Texas Tech 15.

Arkansas' men moved into the team lead when they earned 24 points in the 1500 meters.

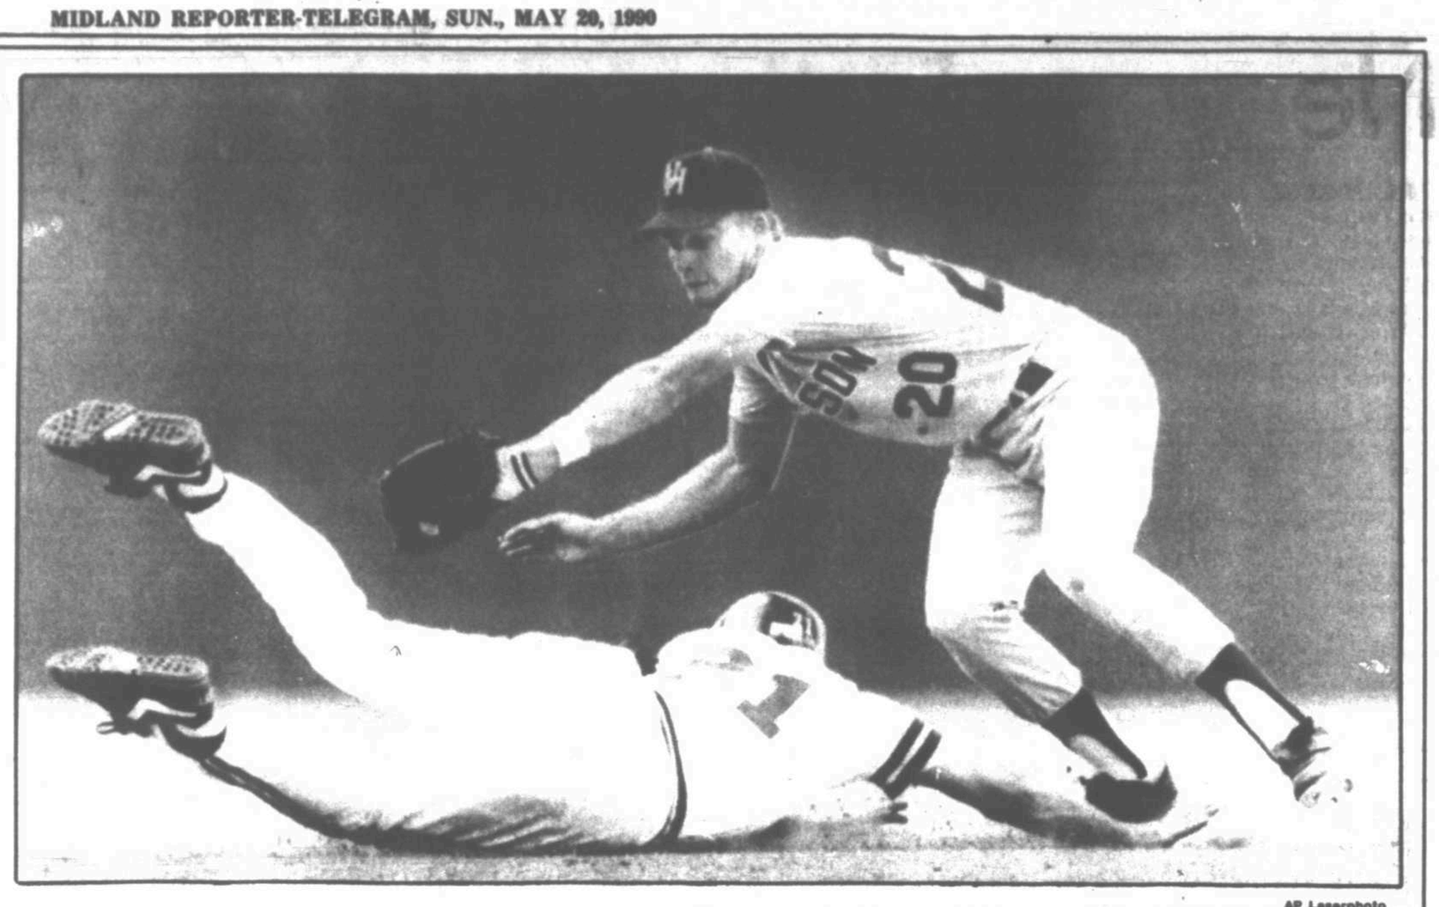

Razorbacks Johan Bockes and Gilbert Contreras finished 1-2 in the event and Brian Baker was fourth and Harrison Smith placed eighth.

Arkansas finished 1-2-3 in the 5,000 meters and earned 32 points in the event. Reuben Reina won in 14:35.38. Hogs Ian Alsen and Boakes were second and third.

Arkansas scored 162 points and Texas was second with 133 followed by Texas A&M, 128, Baylor 90, Houston 68, Rice 60, Texas Christian 53, Texas Tech 52 and Southern Methodist 32.

Burrell is the defending TAC champion with a 9.94 clocking, third fastest ever in the world and .02 off former Cougar sprinter Carl Lewis' world record.

Texas wins ninth SWC tournament

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Two-time All-American Kirk Dressendorfer picked up his first victory in nearly a month to lead the University of Texas to a 6-4 victory over Houston Saturday night for their ninth Southwest Conference tournament title.

Lance Jones and Kyle Moody, who had only four career home runs between them, each hit a homer to lead No. 5 Texas.

The Longhorns (48-15) will host the NCAA tournament Central Regional for the 12th straight year next week. The Cougars fell to 42-21, and will have to wait for an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament.

Moody, batting ninth in the order, added a three-run shot in the top of the fourth to make it 5-0. It was his first homer as a Longhorn.

The Cougars, playing in the tournament final for only the second time, came back in the bottom of the fifth, using four hits, two errors and a passed ball to rally for four runs.

Phil Lewis and Bret Bartley had doubles in the inning. Bartley had two hits for Houston.

Houston 7, Arkansas 1

Torres, a .261 hitter coming into the tourney, had nine hits in 11 at bats in the first three tournament games. He reached base a conference-record 10 straight times and was 2-for-3 on Saturday afternoon with a double and an RBI.

Pistons are confident they can stop Jordan

NBA Playoffs

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Can the NBA's No. 1 scorer deliver a championship? The Detroit Pistons don't think so.

The Pistons don't have anyone who can compare with Chicago's Michael Jordan.

Yet the Pistons, not the Bulls, have a shot at becoming only the third franchise in league history to repeat as champions.

The teams meet Sunday in the opening game of the Eastern Conference finals. The Pistons, who beat Chicago in six games in last year's finals, are favored again.

Why?

Jordan averaged 33.6 points per game and won the league scoring title for the fourth consecutive year this season. And he's averaging 40 points through nine playoff games.

"Our team is built to play playoff basketball," Daly said. "We play playoff basketball all year, 82 games. I don't know why people don't realize that.

Oilers hope to clinch Stanley Cup with home wins

Stanley Cup

EDMONTON (AP) — The Edmonton Oilers don't need many shots to win games or many games to win championships.

The team that crammed four NHL titles into five seasons from 1984 through 1988 swept Boston in the finals two years ago and can repeat that without leaving home again.

The Oilers were outshot in the first two games of the Stanley Cup finals, 52-31 and 27-22, but still won both in Boston.

"You look up at the shot clock and you're outshooting them 6-0," Boston defenseman Glen Wesley said after Friday night's 7-2 loss. "And then it's 6-1 and we're down 1-0. It's definitely frustrating."

"We're not even thinking that," Edmonton captain Mark Messier said. "Right now, we can't believe we're up 2-0."

The Bruins came into the best-of-7 series with the NHL's best record and defense during the regular season and en eight-game home winning streak in the playoffs. They are just as stunned.

"This was an unbelievable, an unforgettable game for me, because we played so well, and then ...," Boston coach Mike Milbury said after the second-game rout.

SPURS: Duckworth gives Blazers big lift

From 1C

"Our shot selection wasn't the best in the last part of regulation and overtime and we paid for it," Brown said. "We bailed Portland out with a lot of fadeaway jumpers. But our young kids learned a lot."

The home team won every game in the series. San Antonio center David Robinson said the loud Portland crowd was a big advantage for the Blazers Saturday.

"It helped them a lot," Robinson said. "The biggest thing they had going for them was their emotion."

Drexler 22 points, 13 rebounds and eight assists for Portland, while Kersey had 21 points and 15 rebounds. Buck Williams added 12 points and 15 rebounds for the Blazers.

Drexler, who made only three of his first 13 shots, scored 16 points in the fourth quarter and overtime.

"Even on nights when I'm struggling, Coach Adelman keeps calling my play and my teammates keep giving me the b ll," Drexler said. "Sooner or later you've got to do something good."

San Antonio, which lost its 13th straight in Portland, was led by Cummings with 27 points. Robinson, who had only two points at halftime, finished with 20 points and 16 rebounds. Anderson also scored 20 for the Spurs.

Portland center Kevin Duckworth was a surprise starter, playing just two weeks after breaking a bone in his right hand. He came on the court after the rest of the team to a rousing cheer from the crowd.

"Duck's presence turned this game around," Adelman said.

San Antonio trailed by as many as 11 in the first half, but rallied behind the play of Robinson to take a 97-90 lead on the rookie's tip-in with 2:32 left in regulation.

"We knew we still had a chance," Porter said.

Nervous Fittipaldi retains pole position

Indy 500

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Emerson Fittipaldi's qualifying records were untouchable Saturday, with the nervous defending champion holding onto the pole position for next Sunday's Indianapolis 500.

After six days of nervous anticipation, Fittipaldi, in street clothes, watched from pit lane as disappointed Al Unser Jr. and surprising Arie Luyendyk came up short, giving the Brazilian his first Indy pole.

Luyendyk was the fastest qualifier Saturday as first-round time trials, cut short by rain last weekend, were completed and the 33-car lineup was tentatively set.

Despite Fittipaldi's anxiety, nobody came close to his record four-lap average of 225.301 mph, which came during just 86 minutes of qualifying last Sunday following a Saturday rainout. The closest to the defending champion's speed was Penske Racing teammate Rick Mears, a three-time Indy winner who also turned his 224.215 last Sunday.

Unser, last year's race runner-up and considered the strongest challenger to Fittipaldi's provisional pole, was clearly upset after a run of 220.921 mph with a fast lap of 221.141.

That was far off the unofficial track record of 228.502 Unser ran a week ago in practice and the 226.7 he turned Saturday morning prior to qualifications.

"That's a heck of a difference," Unser said. "I don't know what happened. There was some changes in the track and there was a big change in my car. I had to get out of the throttle on every lap.

"It was frustrating. I knew it on my warmup lap. I tried to correct the problem by changing the bars, but that wasn't enough. I lost a shock or something."

After Unser's run, Fittipaldi said to him, "You have many years left. Don't get too upset."

Fittipaldi, the two-time Formula One champion and defending Indy-car series winner said, "I was more nervous today than I was on the day I qualified. I'm glad this is over."

The pole was worth $160,000, including $100,000 from series sponsor PPG, in cash and prizes to Fittipaldi.

Luyendyk, who never has started closer to the front than the outside of the second row in a 500-mile race, said, "It's got me nervous. It's going to be a new experience. I'm so excited I can't describe it."

Rain was forecast for Saturday and the skies were threatening and a strong wind was blowing most of the day. But the wet weather held off and the track remained open.

First out for qualifying were the drivers who remained in the first-day line — still with a chance at the pole — when qualifying was interrupted last Sunday.

Fifteen drivers qualified last week. There were 20 qualifiers Saturday, with rookie Mike Groff and three-time Indy winner Johnny Rutherford both bumped from the tentative lineup in the final minutes before the track closed.

More trials are scheduled Sunday. The slowest cars in the tentative lineup can be bumped by faster qualifiers until the close of the track at 6 p.m. EST. Rookie Buddy Lazier was "on the bubble" as the slowest qualifier at 209.418.

A.J. Foyt and Al Unser, the only four-time champions, were among them, with Foyt running his four fastest laps of the month for an average of 220.425, and Unser, putting an Alfa Romeo-powered car into the Indy lineup for the first time, turning a 212.087.

Foyt, who will make his record 33rd consecutive Indy start next Sunday, was asked where he found the extra speed. He grinned and replied: "My foot."

The 55-year-old Texan added, "We changed my setup on the (qualifying) line. I had no idea what it was going to do. They (his crew) gave me 110 percent and I had to give them the same. I was trying a different groove on every lap and I was using the whole racetrack."

The tentative lineup shows Rahal, Michael Andretti and his father, Mario Andretti, the 1969 Indy winner, in the second row. They are followed by the younger Unser, Foyt and 1985 Indy champ Danny Sullivan, the third Penske entry and Saturday's first qualifier at 220.310.

"I'm just glad to be in the race," Sullivan said. "I feel like we could have gone a little quicker, but ... we'll take it and get ready for the race."

Foyt qualifies for 33rd Indy

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A.J. Foyt, refusing to get caught up in the feverish search for speed until he felt comfortable, qualified for a record 33rd consecutive Indianpolis 500 Saturday with his fastest laps of the month.

"We got the cars way late, we had no test time," the 55-year-old Foyt said of the Chevrolet-powered Lola he placed in the field, tentatively in the middle of the third row, with an average speed of 220.425 mph.

Foyt's fastest lap in practice this month prior to qualifying was 219.138. The four-time Indy champion, who will be the oldest driver to start the race next Sunday, topped that with his first qualifying lap of 219.368 and gained speed with each of his four trips around the 2½-mile oval.

"I wasn't going to push the car. You do that and you put it up on the wall and it costs you and your crew a lot of work," Foyt said. "I wasn't really happy with the car, and then we had two or three different motors in the car. We were doing a lot of testing and developing (in practice).

"The other day when we were running, we were running with 40 gallons of fuel and a race setup," he said of the full fuel load. "We were trying to get our straightaway speed very fast. We took the wickers (wind-deflectors) all off the back and got reverse wing in it.

Earnhardt and Waltrip are psyched

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Brushing aside thoughts of the $200,000 winner's prize, Dale Earnhardt talked about his desire to become the first two-time winner of The Winston.

"Being the first two-time winner would be special," said Earnhardt, who won the pole Saturday with a top qualifying speed of 134.250 mph for three laps, including a pit stop for right-side tires.

Another former winner, Darrell Waltrip, who qualified third at 132.763 mph, also has a lot of incentive in Sunday's 105-mile race at Charlotte Motor Speedway. He also wants a victory after winning the race the first time it was held in 1985.

"This thing may not last 30 years," said Waltrip, who appeared to be on the verge of winning last year when he was spun out by eventual winner Rusty Wallace on the next-to-last lap.

"We don't know how long it will last, so winning it twice does mean something."

For the second straight year, the pole winner was decided by a three-lap qualifying run that included a pit stop for right-side tires.

Local youth hold city pin tourney

Nine years have passed since the youth bowlers have been able to compete in a city tournament. Recently that streak came to an end as Fairmont Park Lanes and Cactus Lanes joined forces to revive the city tournament.

Velasco

The tournament had more than 140 entries which included team, doubles, singles and all events.

With the help of Cactus Lanes youth director Betty Rodgers and Fairmont Park Lanes youth president Kyle Sullivan, the tourney was a success.

Bowling in the Lee High School Youth League, senior Geoff Quallis rolled a very nice 241, the highest game rolled in that league this season.

Summer leagues are now being formed in all local centers. For more information, contact the bowling center of your choice.

Rarick matches career low

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — Cindy Rarick tied her career low round Saturday, producing 12 points to take the lead after three rounds of the Pat Bradley International LPGA tournament.

Rarick has 19 points in the $400,000 tournament, being played under the modified Stableford scoring system, which gives points for birdies, eagles and double eagles, and takes points for bogeys, double bogeys and worse. Her round translated to a bogey-free 6-under-par 66, which she shot in Pasadena, Calif., in 1985.

"I was very steady all day long. The only time I think my nerves got me was when I made the putt on 16," Rarick said of the last of her six birdies, a tricky, downhill 4-foot putt to a cup near the front of the green.

"Even the first two rounds, I played very steady, except I had seven bogeys in two days. I had seven birdies, but I had seven bogeys," she said. "I thought if I have a hot weekend, I can win this tournament."

Rarick, who pulled out of last week's Crestar Classic with a cold, gave herself the chance at her fourth career victory with medium-distance putting for birdies on the front nine, and getting her fairway irons close to the hole on the back side to improve her lead.

"My plan was to just go out there, roll those putts in, just keep hitting the greens and go at as many of the pins as I can," she said.

Sherry Steinhauer scored 5 points on the warm afternoon at Willow Creek Golf Course and climbed into second place

Strange, Crenshaw tied

FORT WORTH (AP) — Curtis Strange rode a string of nine consecutive pars into a tie with Ben Crenshaw for the third-round lead in the Colonial golf tournament Saturday.

"I just hung in there," Strange said, after a 1-under-par 69 on the windy old Colonial Country Club course.

"It was tricky out there," the two-time U.S. Open champion said of the gusty, shifting winds. "You were never sure where they were coming from."

Cochran, winless in six seasons on the PGA Tour, shot a 73 and dropped into a tie for third at 207, one stroke back going into Sunday's final round.

He was tied with former Colonial champion Corey Pavin and Nick Price, a South African native now living in the United States. Price closed up with a 67 and Pavin matched par 70.

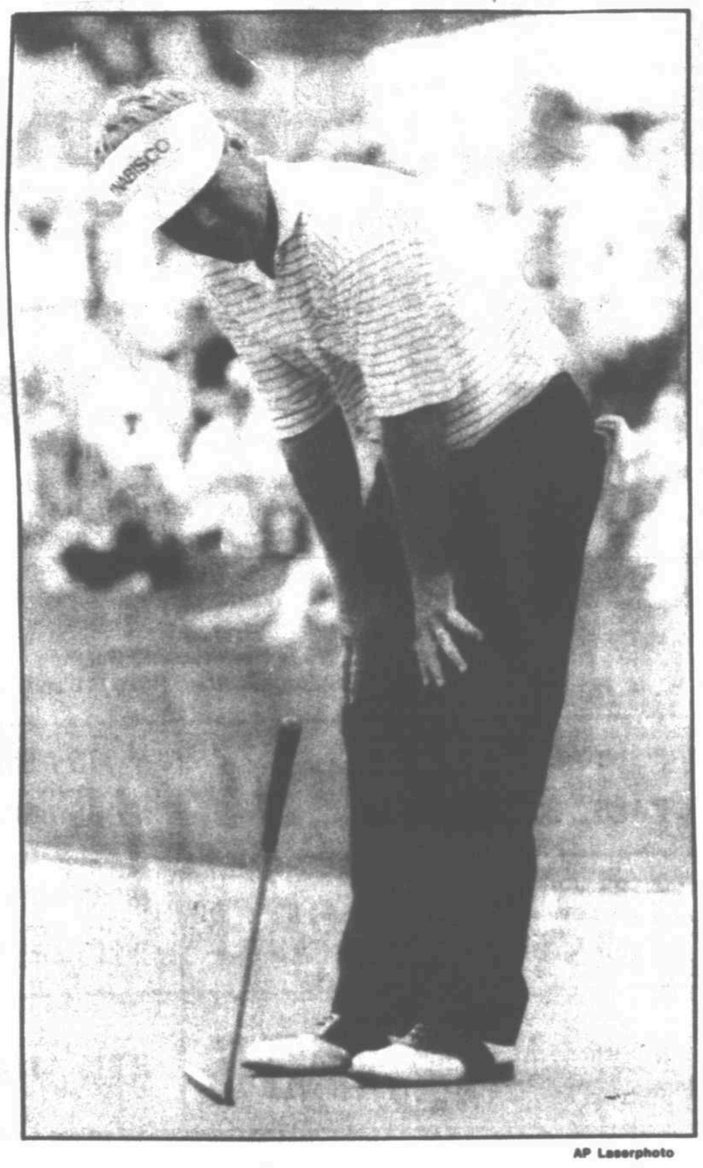

Scott Hoch and John Huston were next at 208. Hoch had a 68 and Huston a 72.

John Mahaffey and Stan Utley were the only others to be below par after 54 holes. They were at 209. Utley had a 69 in winds that gusted to 30 mph, and Mahaffey shot 70.

At par 210, PGA champion Payne Stewart was only four off the pace. Stewart, who finished first and second in his last two starts, had a 68.

Tom Watson also shot 68 and was at 211.

First Golfer hits Seniors Tour

KINGWOOD (AP) — President Bush asked spectators not to laugh at his golf game as he played Saturday in the Doug Sanders Kingwood Celebrity Classic.

"All you Houstonians here I would have but one request, keep on being the points of light, keep on with the concept that it really is right for one American to help another and please don't laugh at the drive off the first tee," Bush said.

Bush, the best known celebrity in the field of 56 amateur golfers in the final pro-am round, zoomed through the first four holes in about an hour. He finished 18 holes in 4½ hours.

The president teed off with PGA Tour commissioner Deane Beman, Sanders and the president's son, George W. Bush, part owner of the Texas Rangers.

Some players in the PGA Seniors Tour event had to give up their driving range Saturday morning and participants and spectators alike had to go through metal detectors, but no one seemed to mind.

The driving range and a putting green were closed so Bush's helicopter could land amid the tall pines on either side.

Sanders gave Bush an antique golf club signed by all the pros in the tournament.

"I was trying to watch the president play," said Lee Trevino, who shot a second straight 5-under-par 67 to head into Sunday's final round with a four-stroke lead over Bob Charles.

"I wasn't concerned with my game. I played about like yesterday."

Trevino played in the group ahead of the president.

"This is a big day for us," Trevino said.

Inneraritys lead Hi-Low

Staff Report

Lloyd and Ed Innerarity combined for a 58 Saturday to take the first round lead in Midland Country Club's Hi-Low golf tournament.

The final round is today with the same two-man low ball with full handicap format.

Kickers seek respect

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Years from now, if professional soccer catches on in the United States, sports historians may find a turning point on Nov. 19, 1989, the day Paul Caligiuri's goal put the U.S. national team into the World Cup for the first time since 1950.

But for now, Caligiuri and his teammates are toiling in relative obscurity as they finish a 14-game exhibition schedule in preparation for the cup next month in Italy.

"The average person doesn't know who we are yet," Caligiuri, a former UCLA star, said.

Dominated by former college all-stars like Caligiuri, the U.S. team enters the World Cup as a longest. London bookmakers have listed the Americans as 500-1 shots to win the cup — odds no better than those given to Costa Rica and the United Arab Emirates.

RACE: Horse praised by rival rider

From 1C

Summer Squall's official winnning margin was 2¼ lengths. Unbridled was nine lengths ahead of Mister Frisky, whose edge over Music Prospector was a half-length.

Summer Squall had caused a stir Friday when a trickle of blood was noticed coming out of one nostril after a gallop. The horse bled during a workout in Florida this spring and has raced on the diuretic Lasix for all five of his races. He did not work under Lasix on Friday.

Before the race, Cot Campbell, president of Dogwood Stable, said, "Based on our history of the horse, it would not affect his performance Saturday." He knew what he was talkig about.

Campbell and trainer Neal Howard have said that they would skip the Belmont because of Summer Squall's tough campaign — five races in 11 weeks — and because they felt this wasn't the time to try racing the colt without Lasix. New York doesn't allow horses to race on any type of medication.

Summer Squall's time was 1-5 of a second off the stakes record set by Tanks Prospect in 1985. Gate Dancer also won in 1:53 3-5 in 1984.

Completing the order of finish were Fighting Notion, Land Rush, Kentucky Jazz, Baron de Vaux and J.R.'s Horizon.

Day had Summer Squall fourth for most of the trip before the colt made his winning move along the rail.

Unbridled was back in the pack as Fighting Notion led Mister Frisky, Kentucky Jazz and Summer Squall past the stands for the first time, into the turn, and down the backstretch to the half-mile pole. Suddenly, Unbridled shot into contention. He was third behind Fighting Notion and Mister Frisky and ahead of Summer Squall when they reached the quarter pole.

The victory was a vindication for Day, who had ridden Unbridled to victory in the Florida Derby, but then decided that he would ride Summer Squall in the Triple Crown races.

"I was confident in my choice and I'm still confident," Day said before the race. "I still wouldn't trade places with Craig."

However, Carl Nafzger, the trainer of Unbridled who said his colt would go to the Belmont despite racing on Lasix, said Day might have been happy to change places with Perret if he hadn't gotten through on the rail.

"Everything was going right," Nafzger said. "It looked like everything was unfolding for us."

Stars lose opener

Armstrong hurls seventh win

Associated Press

Jack Armstrong was happy with his seventh win — and even happier about the way he got it.

Armstrong pitched a four-hitter Saturday night to become the major leagues' second seven-game winner as the Cincinnati Reds beat the St. Louis Cardinals 4-0. But he seemed more pleased with the complete game than with matching the New York Mets' Frank Viola as the top winner in the majors.

Armstrong (7-1) had never made it through the eighth inning in 28 previous major-league starts.

"I've done it time and time again in Triple-A, but it's not like doing it here," Armstrong said. "I'm glad to get it over. I can relax knowing that I can shut a team down and go nine."

The Reds (25-8) are off to their best start this century and have the best record in the majors. They've won 12 of their last 15 games.

Cincinnati has won six of seven from St. Louis, and hasn't allowed the Cardinals a run in their last 19 innings. St. Louis has scored just nine runs in seven games with the Reds this season.

St. Louis has been shut out six times in 36 games overall.

"We're just a pathetic offense, huh?" Manager Whitey Herzog said. "Ain't nobody hitting. Nobody.

"We've had one lead in seven games (against Cincinnati). We've never been ahead except that one game."

Rolando Roomes put them behind to stay with a three-run homer in the fifth off John Tudor (4-2), who showed some rebound from his recent slide.

Tudor has lost two of his last three starts after opening the season with four straight wins. In his previous start against San Diego, the left-hander gave up five runs in 1 1-3 innings, prompting him to ruminate about retirement.

Tudor's early innings Saturday were a turnaround — he allowed just two hits over four shutout innings.

National League

Things came apart for him in the fifth.

Joe Oliver opened the inning by reaching on shortstop Ozzie Smith's throwing error. Paul O'Neill then singled to right — his second hit off Tudor — and Roomes hit his second homer of the season into the second deck in left field. They were the first runs Tudor has allowed in four road starts this season.

Tudor allowed six hits in six innings overall, striking out three and walking one.

"Tudor threw the ball all right," Herzog said. "(Roomes hit) a bad change-up. He tried to make it too good and he got it up."

Roomes knew once it left his bat that it would be enough for the win.

"Jack had all his pitches," Roomes said. "That made it easy for us. All we needed was one run."

The Cardinals' only hits were Willie McGee's infield single in the first, Vince Coleman's single in the sixth and two-out singles by Terry Pendleton and Milt Thompson in the ninth. Armstrong struck out three and walked two.

"I had average everything tonight — average fastball, average slider, average curve," Armstrong said. "Nothing was outstanding, nothing was exceptional. But my concentration was very good out there."

Cubs 4, Astros 1

Andre Dawson hit his National League-leading 12th homer and drove in three runs to lead the Cubs.

Dawson now has 38 RBIs, tops in the major leagues, and has driven in 17 runs in his last 11 games, including six in the last two nights against the Astros, who've lost 11 of their last 13 games.

Les Lancaster (3-1) allowed one run and eight hits in 7 1-3 innings. He walked three and struck out three before being relieved by Mitch Williams, who earned his eighth save in 11 opportunities.

Chicago took a 2-0 lead in the third off Jim Clancy (1-3) when Mark Grace reached on fielding by first baseman Glenn Davis and Dawson homered over the left-field fence. The Cubs made it 3-0 in the fourth inning when Lancaster singled and scored on a double by Ryne Sandberg.

Houston cut the deficit to 3-1 in the sixth when Craig Biggio led off his second home run of the season.

Chicago added an insurance run in the seventh inning off reliever Danny Darwin. Sandberg drew a leadoff walk, moved to second on a single by Grace, went to third on error by left fielder Franklin Stubbs and scored on a sacrifice fly by Dawson.

Expos 7, Giants 4

Gross (5-2) lost his perfect game when he walked Brett Butler to start the seventh inning. One out later, Will Clark broke up the no-hitter with a controversial single.

On Gross' first pitch, Clark hit a roller that appeared fair and was fielded by first baseman Andres Galarraga, but umpire Greg Bonin called it foul. Clark singled cleanly to right field on the next pitch.

Gross then walked Kevin Mitchell and Kevin Bass hit a two-run double. Gross, who struck out six, was relieved by Tim Burke.

Burke gave up an RBI grounder to Matt Williams and finished for his ninth save, stopping the Giants' four-game winning streak. San Francisco got a run in the ninth on Bass' RBI grounder.

Braves 2, Pirates 1

Glavine (2-2), who had four straight no-decisions, struck out eight, one less than his career high, and walked two. He was helped by four double plays.

Glavine entered the ninth with a six-hit shutout, but was relieved by Joe Hesketh after John Cangelosi opened the ninth with a walk and went to second on Jay Bell's third hit, a single to left.

Arkansas' Gary Kisten got his first save of the year by getting the final two outs with two Midland and runners on base.

The two teams were locked in a tight game in the nightcap before Ruben Amaro hit a bases loaded triple in the top of the sixth inning to hand Midland a 7-6 victory. Amaro also had three hits in the first game. That brings Midland home from the road trip with a victory.

Midland has today and Monday off before beginning a long 10-game homestand Tuesday with Tulsa and Arkansas. It will be the only time of the season Tulsa and Arkansas will make a trip to Midland.

Hough knuckles down for win

Associated Press

Charlie Hough's fastball cost him a shutout Saturday night but his trusty knuckleball was good enough to get him a win.

Hough retired 18 of the first 19 Baltimore batters, Pete Incaviglia homered and Rafael Palmeiro drove in two runs as the Texas Rangers snapped a five-game losing streak by defeating the Orioles 5-3.

"These were perfect conditions to pitch under," said Hough (4-2), who set down the first five Baltimore batters before Mickey Tettleton singled. Hough retired the next 13 batters before Steve Finley opened the seventh with a double to right.

"Everything was great tonight. If you goofed up, it was strictly because of your talent," Hough said.

"Charlie was great tonight," Manager Bobby Valentine said. "It was just what we needed."

Hough held Baltimore to four hits in eight innings. He lost his shutout bid when Tettleton hit a three-run homer in the seventh. After Finley's double, Cal Ripken was hit by a pitch. Hough retired the next two batters before Tettleton hit a 3-0 pitch for his second home run of the season.

Tigers 6, White Sox 4

Lou Whitaker broke an 0-for-21 slump with a two-run homer and Gary Ward drove in three runs, including a two-run tiebreaking single in the sixth inning, for Detroit.

It was fifth straight victory for the Tigers, who have won six consecutive road games.

Winner Frank Tanana (3-2) gave up 10 hits, including a pair of homers, in seven innings and raised his lifetime record against Chicago to 26-13. Mike Henneman pitched two innings for his ninth save, yielding two hits.

Indians 4, Mariners 3

Jerry Browne doubled and scored the tiebreaking run on a wild pitch in the seventh inning and Doug Jones got his major league-leading 14th save for Cleveland.

Browne hit a leadoff double that knocked out starter Matt Young (1-4). Browne went to third when second baseman Harold Reynolds misplayed Mitch Webster's grounder for an error and, with Carlos Baerga batting, scored on Billy Swift's wild pitch.

Jesse Orosco (2-1) was the winner. He got the final out in the seventh inning, during which Reynolds tied the game at 3 with a two-run double. Jones, who has blown just one save chance this season, retired all six batters he faced.

Yankees 5, Royals 4

The Yankess, stung when Kansas City tied it with three runs in the ninth, won it when Sax led off with a single against Steve Farr (2-2) and Mattingly doubled with one out. Right fielder Willie Wilson relayed to second baseman Terry Shumpert, whose throw to catcher Mike Macfarlane arrived before Sax.

Sax slid around Macfarlane's tag and was called safe by umpire Terry Cooney. Macfarlane protested and Royals manager John Wathan charged from the dugout to argue with Cooney, and had to be restrained by the other umpires.

Angels 11, Blue Jays 9

Dave Winfield, Devon White, Dante Bichette and Wally Joyner each homered, powering California and sending the Blue Jays to their fifth straight loss.

Toronto's losing streak is its longest since Cito Gaston took over as manager on May 15, 1989. The Angels reached season highs for runs and with 14 hits.

Winfield got three hits and drove in two runs. His solo shot in the ninth inning was his third home run of the season and first since being traded to the Angels by the New York Yankees.

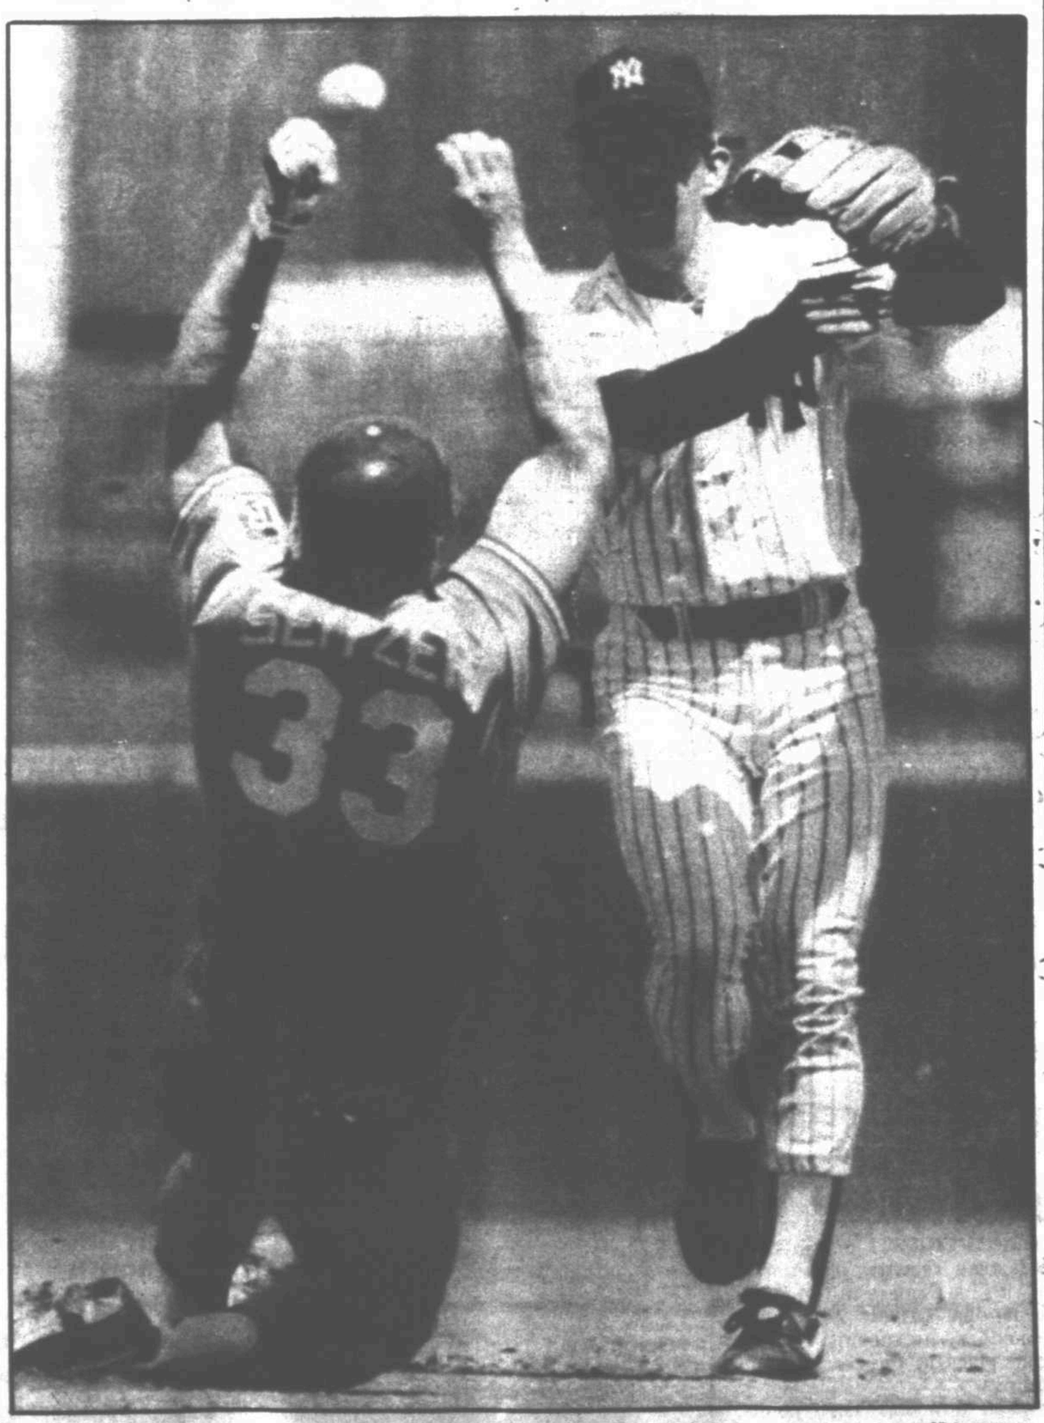

White's two-run homer capped a four-run rally in the seventh inning that put the Angels ahead 8-6 and Joyner connected for a solo home run in the eighth. Bichette hit a three-run homer off John Cerutti that made it 4-0 in the first.

Red Sox 13, Twins 1

Tom Brunansky went 5-for-5, hit two homers and drove in a career-high seven runs and Boston got a season-high 20 hits.

Brunansky, acquired from St. Louis for Lee Smith on May 4, also doubled in his first five-hit game. The Red Sox roughed up Allan Anderson (2-5) and three relievers, including outfielder John Moses, who gave up a run on two hits in the eighth.

Roger Clemens (6-2) improved to 11-1 lifetime against the Twins. He allowed one run on five hits in seven innings and sent Minnesota to its second loss in seven games.

CLICK and CLACK TALK CARS

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI

AN ANTIQUE QUESTION

Dear Tom and Ray:

I have a 1969 Cadillac and am wondering if this is a classic or antique vehicle yet. It needs both body and mechanical work, and the Cadillac dealerships have all told me that they won't work on such an old car. Should I hang onto it? — Alicia

TOM: Gee, Alicia, that's a tough call. The truth is, one person's antique is another person's junk (and vice versa, but not nearly as often). When your car gets to be 25 years old, it will technically be eligible for antique status, but that's only half the story. Like people, age is kinder to some cars than to others. Let see if we can give you an overview.

RAY: First, a car is "new." After a couple of years, it's "used." After that, it becomes "old." Now, here's where the two lines diverge. After it gets past "old," if it's in great shape, it becomes a "classic." If a "classic" is still in near perfect condition when it gets to be 25 years old, the owner can call it an "antique." On the other hand, the kind of old heaps my brother drives never make it to classic. They go directly from "old" to "jalopy." And when a "jalopy" gets to be 25 years old, the owner can call it an "antique," but everyone else will call it "junk."

TOM: So in four years, Alicia, you can call this Caddy an antique, but that's no guarantee that anyone else will.

RAY: If you're interested in holding onto it because you like to drive it, you have to find an independent mechanic who's willing to work on the car. Ask him to inspect it bumper-to-bumper and tell you what it will cost to get the car into good driving condition. If you can afford it, and you love the car, go ahead and fix it up. If nothing else, you'll have a car that is old enough and large enough to give you the right of way at every intersection from here to Kuala Lumpur.

TOM: But if the only reason you're holding onto this car is because you hope it will suddenly be worth a lot of money, I'd say get rid of it. If an investment is what you're interested in, see if you can trade the Caddy for a 1969 Hank Aaron baseball card. That's got a better chance of appreciating over the years, and it takes up much less space!

• • •

Dear Tom and Ray:

I drive a 1988 Acura Legend Coupe and will soon be looking for a replacement. The Legend has been trouble-free and drives beautifully. Can you recommend an American car that would be similar? — Norm

RAY: No, we can't. Get another Legend and write to us again in 1992.

TOM: By then, one of two things will happen. Either an American car company will have figured out how to make a car like the Legend, or Acura will be building their cars here and Legends WILL BE American cars.

RAY: Seriously, Norm. The Americans are making some very good cars these days, but at this point, there's still nothing directly comparable to the Acura Legend.

HOMES
WITH CLASSIFIED

The exterior of this three-story home features a contemporary design. The home is located on the golf course at Green Tree Country Club.

A Blueprint of Beauty

By JILL HANCOCK

Homes are designed to have more than one purpose — the master bedroom is used as the adult's retreat, a spacious kitchen serves as a hive of family activity and children's bedrooms are planned for study and play. Between work and family activities, homes need to provide family members a haven from stress. Outdoor recreation is a must, as are areas for relaxation and entertainment.

The interior of this week's featured home incorporates all of these qualities, plus a few more. Located along the golf course at Green Tree Country Club, this contemporary-style, three-story home includes a living area that wraps around the formal dining room, a breakfast room that views the back yard and a roomy master bedroom. Upstairs, a paneled study has a loft, a sun room opens onto a balcony and two spacious bedrooms which are connected by a full bath add to the home's one-of-a-kind floor plan.

The tile entrance extends from the front door, past the staircase, to a French door that opens onto the back patio. One wall of this corridor is lined with a green fabric and opens onto the uniquely-shaped living area which is situated to the right of the entrance. The U-shaped living area is divided into three parts and is separated from the formal dining room by an L-shaped wall. Green fabric also adorns a wall in the dining room and a china cabinet is inset at one end. The opposite end features a concealed wet bar with a refrigerator.

PLANNED AS the formal living area, the first section includes picture frame paneling and a tall angled ceiling. The formal living area turns to the left, creating a cozy sitting area that focuses on a fireplace. What is unique about this fireplace is the three sides which all have an opening with glass doors. This area is ideal on a cold winter night and during warmer months, and a door opens onto a side patio. Windows brighten this area year-round.

The third part of this room is located along the back of the house. Floor-to-ceiling windows provide a view of the well-landscaped back yard, with the golf course in the distance. The wet bar also opens into this part of the room.

The kitchen and breakfast room are situated across from the living area, at the left end of the entrance hall. A Sub-Zero refrigerator, a triple Jenn-air cooktop with grill, and a Whirlpool microwave, self-cleaning oven and trash compactor enables this well-planned kitchen to be very functional for a busy, active family. A bar is situated along one end, enclosing the kitchen from the breakfast room.

The breakfast area has a grand view of the back yard. Tall windows, a built-in china cabinet and a floral wallcovering are the amenities of this attractive room.

DIVIDING THE kitchen and breakfast room, a hallway leads past a walk-in pantry and the side-entry garage into the utility room. This large room has space for a freezer, storage closet, built-in desk and ironing board. A window allows for lots of sunshine into this area.

BEAUTY: Design of three story home very unique

(From 1D)

The master bedroom is situated at the end of this corridor. Decorated in a soft shade of peach, the bedroom has a tiered ceiling with a fabric inlay and a fireplace. A sitting area is ideal next to the door and window which overlook the back yard.

The bath is divided into two parts. The dressing area has two customized walk-in closets with a two-sink marble vanity lining one wall. A door allows for privacy into the bathing area. Homeowners can either relax in the marble jacuzzi tub or bathe quickly in the built-in shower. Mirrors adorn the wall and reflect the lush house plants.

A staircase leads upstairs to a private study, two bedrooms and a sun room. A door which is located at the head of the staircase opens onto a deck that has a great view of the golf course. A spacious cedar closet is located across from this door and is ideal for out-of-season clothing.

The design of the study is very unusual due to a staircase that leads to a third-floor game room or sleeping area. This room could be used as a fourth bedroom due to the private bath. The bath features a marble vanity, a shower and a walk-in closet. A door in the study also leads to the sun room.

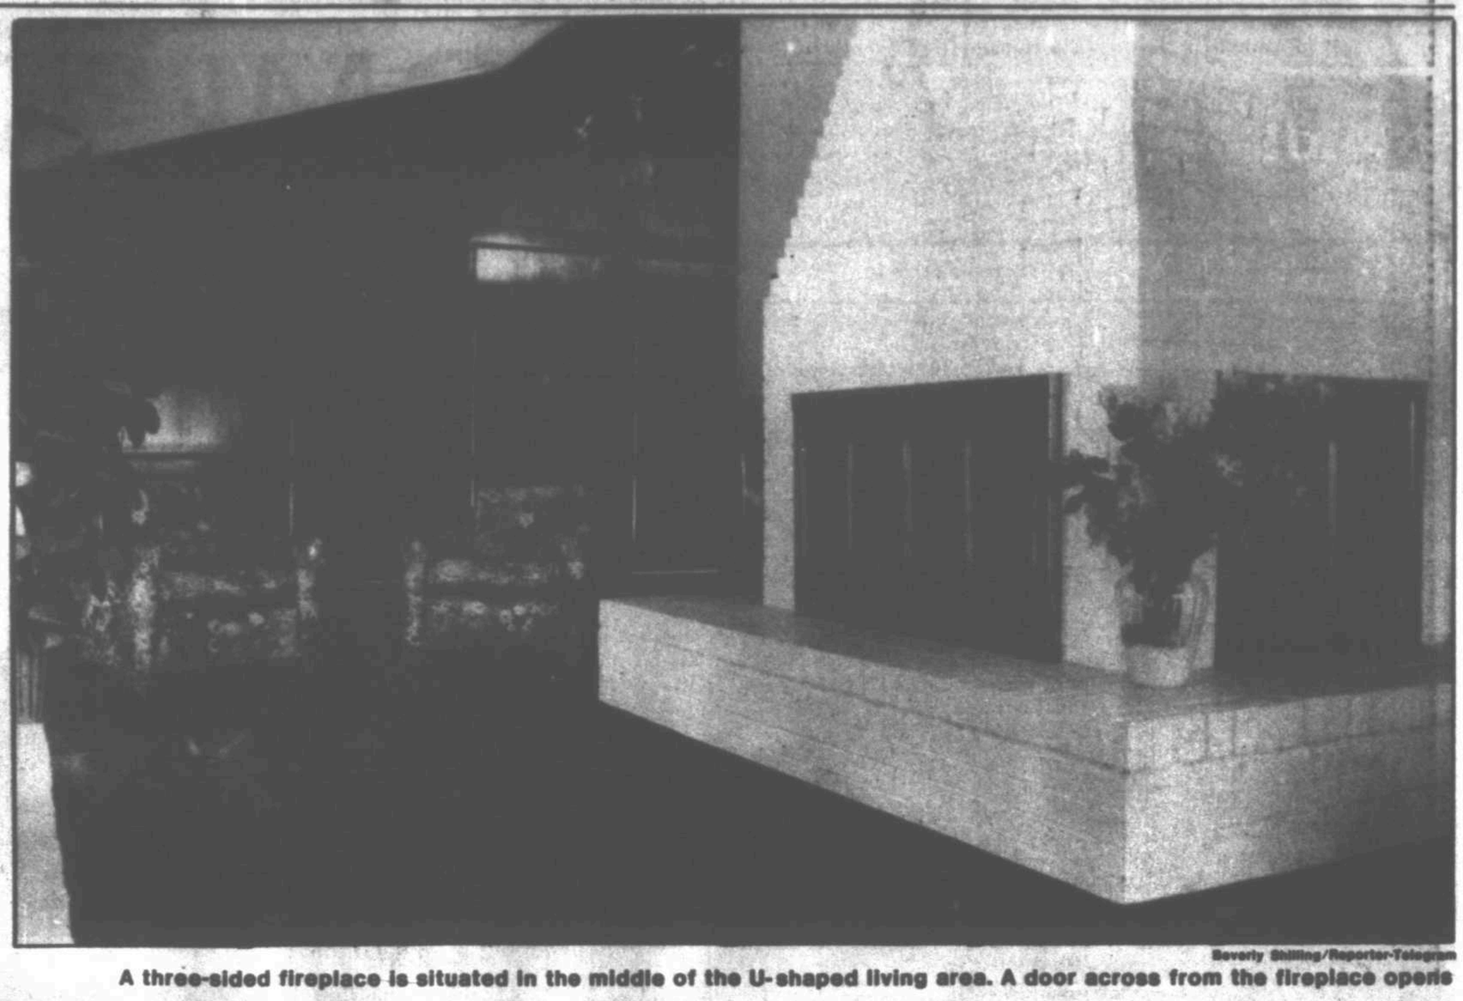

The second bedroom has three windows that provide a view of this lovely neighborhood. It has a spacious closet and a private dressing area with a vanity. This bath opens onto a bathing area that connects to the third bedroom.

An unbelievable loft highlights the third bedroom. The loft will delight an artist or can be used as a private sitting/television area for a teenager. This bedroom also has a private dressing area and a walk-in closet. A door opens onto the sun room.

Filled with natural light, the sun room is a wonderful retreat for a nap or to spend the afternoon with a favorite book. It leads to the second-floor balcony that extends along the back of the home.

The other amenities of this unbelievable home are an intercom system, ceiling fans, a sprinkler system, storage closets, Pella windows, exterior lighting and a work shop.

The Prudential Ruth Young Realtors is offering this home for $269,000.

Beverly Shilling/Reporter-Telegram

A three-sided fireplace is situated in the middle of the U-shaped living area. A door across from the fireplace opens onto a side patio.

RE/MAX has office filled with motivated agents

Jan Melton

RE/MAX is an incredible success story. It was an impossible dream started by a few idealistic individuals who thought that there had to be a better way. Today that dream has come true. It is proven success story. Thousands of multi-million dollar producers and hundreds of the most successful Brokers/owners and managers in the history of the real estate industry have banded together in a common cause that there is a better way, explained Jan Melton, owner of RE/MAX of Midland.

The RE/MAX network is the ultimate solution for the problems in our industry. "RE/MAX has achieved its outstanding growth because we have offered sales associates a better alternative. Managers can never forget that their assets walk out of the door every evening and it is the manager who must continually give them a reason to return the next day and I am trying to do just that," added Melton.

"Confidence is most successfully built by having an unwavering faith and belief that what you're doing is right. In other words, a total conviction that your business methods are the best for the prospects you're talking with. It is a commonly accepted principal of competition — whether it is war, competition between companies, athletics, or any other competitive environment — that it is far easier to fight more effectively and for a far longer period of time when you know that you are right. The RE/MAX network is proof positive that the RE/MAX is number one and still on the rise in literally dozens of major and rural areas throughout North America."

This leads Melton to the second common characteristic the associates at RE/MAX of Midland discovered about their top agents, and that is the characteristic of enthusiasm. "An analysis of our top recruiters proves that their optimistic, enthusiastic and energetic presentations are the key to their success of marketing your home. I asked them to share with me how most of our agents maintained such a high energy level and such an enthusiastic outlook on life when they were undergoing the same trials and tribulations that everyone else faces daily in the industry. It became apparent to us that winners attract winners, motivated people attract motivated people, enthusiastic people attract enthusiastic people. If you want to be enthusiastic, act enthusiastic. Listen to tapes, read motivational books and attend motivational seminars. Also, the more you tell the RE/MAX story, the more you get a RE/MAX charge. You can literally energize yourself by being around other enthusiastic and energetic people," said Melton.

The third characteristic of top agents, according to Melton, is that they are highly motivated individuals. This motivation to excel is apparent not only in their careers, but also in their personal lives. "Our top producers are all competitors full of drive and ambition."

"Financial considerations are very important to most people. Many are embarrassed to even discuss such a motivating factor. The world is made up of three types of people. People who are going somewhere, people who are following those going somewhere and people who don't know where they are going!" Melton said, "If you look at sales associates who go to work for real estate companies, most of them also have very strong financial motivations. They need to make a living so that they can provide for themselves and their families. However, even with that strong motivation, 80 percent of the beginners in the real estate industry fail. Therefore, it is our personal opinion that for most people, financial need is not necessarily an effective motivator."

"The need to succeed so your loved ones will be well provided for, will respect and love you, in addition to being proud of your accomplishments, is probably the strongest motivator of all. This overwhelming need to succeed so a person can give to others is the first attribute of a truly successful person."

The fourth common characteristic of RE/MAX's top agents is a total commitment of the goals that they have established. "The most powerful and motivating statements I've ever read was quoted in the book, 'Think and Grow Rich' by Napoleon Hill. In it is a sentence that states: 'Whatever the mind of a man can conceive and believe it can achieve.' The fastest way to success is to determine what you want to achieve, put that goal in writing, memorize it and make it an obsession," said Melton.

Melton suggests dividing goal into monthly, weekly and daily steps towards achievement. "Have you heard the riddle, 'How do you eat an elephant?' The answer is 'One bite at a time.' Use a 1,500 pound bull as an example. No person in the world could possibly eat that bull in one day. However, if you break the goal down into eating a quarter pound of beef a day, it becomes an easy and achievable goal to eat the whole bull over a period of time."

The four common traits and characteristic that Melton feels RE/MAX agents display are confidence, enthusiasm, motivation and commitment. "Now how as a homeowner or property buyer would a top producer help you? Well, without confidence, enthusiasm, motivation and commitment that agent will not perform at his top potential to sell your home or sell you a home," concluded Melton.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

City's market still showing improvement

What's happening in the market? Positive indicators continue to abound for an active strong market in Midland this summer. An article in last Tuesday's Reporter-Telegram predicted lower interest rates; John Paul Pitt's story in Sunday's issue told us of a promising outlook for the oil and gas industry; and virtually everyone is aware of the welcome influx of Conoco and Chevron transferees. Couple these indicators to an already rebounding market and the outcome can only be advantageous to sellers, to builders and to developers! We personally feel that last week's news from Exxon may temporarily create a pause in this rebound, but it should not set it back and may even have the positive effect of many nice properties being put into an up-to-now decreasing inventory.

How strong is the market rebound? The activity in our own office is unbelievable: in the first four months of '90, our sales colume is up 65 percent over the same time last year and our units sold are up over 50 percent. Overall MLS statistics reflect a very healthy 43.9 percent increase in volume and 34.4 percent in units sold. But probably the most significant statistic is found in the average sales price: up from $73,103 for January-April of 1989 to $75,054 for '90.

The "play's" the thing and it certainly was for our associate Bea McGrath and husband Searle who journeyed to California recently for the opening of their son Douglas' new play. It's a comedy and is scheduled for a five week run at the famous Pasadena Playhouse. Also attending were other McGrath offspring Mary and Sandy, Bea's 86-year-old aunt from New York, and many of Douglas' friends. Douglas, who lives in New York City, is very talented free-lance writer and is regularly published in The Nation and The New York Times.

What's new at Langston Realtors? Probably most exciting, at least to the agents, is the installation of our new telephone voice mail system. By next week we should all be on line to receive the personally recorded messages of our customers and associates, and we will even be able to leave outgoing messages for them! We are viewing it as a great way to stay in touch, so if you experience some inconveniences in getting through last week, please pardon and think of it as a sign of growth!

A career in real estate? We'll be writing lots about this next week, but for now, if you do have an interest we'd love to talk to you! We'll explain all the ups and downs, then help you on your way to being a Realtor. Please call me or our Administrative Director, Pat Orseth.

Adequate lighting very important throughout home

Providing adequate lighting both inside and outside of the home promotes not only aesthetic value, but also safety, says Bill Jackson, owner of Adobe Inc., Realtors. "Adequate lighting can prevent many of the serious injuries that occur to homeowners and their family members each year." "Many accidents occur outside during bad weather such as rain or ice. Many people misjudge distance, especially in the dark — this is where floodlighting or porch lighting can be a useful tool to the homeowner," said Jackson.

"Additional lighting near bushes and shrubs also add a factor of safety in addition to giving the home a welcoming appearance to visitors. Outdoor lighting used in strategic areas in relation to the home and landscaping can provide an elegant decorative accent," notes Jackson, whose company is a member of RELO/The network of Relocation Network, the nation's oldest and largest referral network of independent real estate brokers, headquartered in Chicago.

The RELO network provides a wide range of relocation services to assist transferees and their families sell a house in one community and purchase a new home in the new community. It will be celebrating its 30th anniversary this year.

Jackson adds that lighting is also an important issue inside of the home as well as outside. "Quite often homeowners will use bulbs with wattages that are either too large or too small. This can create discomfort for family members, in particular, if discomfort such as eye strain occurs while performing such activities as reading or sewing."

Bill Jackson

He added that newer lamps usually recommend the proper wattage to be used.

One solution to home lighting problems is track lighting. "Tract lighting can be a very inexpensive solution to home lighting because of its flexibility. The lamps can be moved individually to highlight different areas of the room and provide spotlighting to accent artwork or antiques," he adds.

Jackson stresses that it is important to use different areas of the home. "Bright fluorescent lighting in areas of the kitchen not only make working in the kitchen easier, but also gives the room a clean and cheerful appeal, however, fluorescent lighting in a reading area is not only hard on the eyes, but also lacks the charm of a reading lamp," Jackson said.

"Homeowenrs preparing to sell their home should take a close look at the lighting in their homes. Darkened hallways and stairways can be a 'turn off' to a prospective buyer," cautioned Jackson. Overall good lighting will also help to make the house visually accessible and inviting to people viewing your home."

In addition to providing a wide range of relocation services, the RELO network has entered into an agreement with the Dallas-based Associates Corporation of North America, allowing Adobe Inc., Realtors and other RELO members to further help homebuyers as well as sellers by offering a variety of expanded financial services, including mortgage services, homeowners insurance and a special mortgage program for transferees.

Adobe Inc., Realtors has 15 sales associates and has served the Permian Basin for 12 years.

If you need assistance in your home buying or a market analysis of your home, Jackson suggest you call any of their 15 agents who are ready to assist you. Also pick up a copy of Adobe's Buyers Guide at your local grocery store.

"We are very busy assisting transferees with Conoco and Chevron from Hobbs, Houston and Oklahoma City. If you are considering selling your home this may be a good time to do so. If we can assist you, don't hesitate to give us a call," concluded Jackson.

Jennifer Price of Midland is a friendly, active 10-year-old. A fifth-grader at Scharbauer Elementary School, she also is an A student in the Gifted Education of Midland program (GEM).

Like many children her age, Jennifer enjoys playing softball, swimming and Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles. And she said she likes to watch television and read, but "hates to do my homework."

To look at her, one would never know Jennifer has a serious illness, but two years ago her life-long asthma was designated as life-threatening, said her mother, Jeanette Jeffers.

Jennifer has been named this year's national poster child for the Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America (AAFA). "They did the ceremony (making her AAFA poster child) in May in Washington D.C.," she said. Some of her duties in this official capacity include meeting with famous people. "I've met Mr. Bush," Jennifer said, "but I haven't met Mrs. Bush."

Jennifer has had asthma "since I was a pretty little kid — about 3."

"She had problems when she was an infant, but she started going to a specialist when she was 3, and started her allergy shots," Mrs. Jeffers added. "She's allergic to trees and weeds and grass." She also is allergic to several other things, including some animals.

TODAY JENNIFER'S asthma and allergies are kept under control by a "stringent maintenance program," her mother said, that includes weekly shots, nebulizer treatment and other medications. "She's on a couple of inhalers and a couple of nose sprays," Mrs. Jeffers said. "She's able to maintain (an average lifestyle) as long as she stays on her medication."

Jennifer's lifestyle includes sports. She plays catcher and first and third bases for Midland United Girls Softball. "I played for one year several years ago," Jennifer said. "I started last year really playing ... The season starts in April and ends in June. It's a short season but you have two games every week.

"Next year I'm going to try basketball ... If I like it, I'm going to be on the basketball team," Jennifer said.

She also enjoys swimming. The family has a lake house at Colorado City, and although the lake's water is muddy, she said, "if you go out in the middle it's not very muddy — but I'm not that tall."

Jennifer likes to ride her bicycle, but "I can't because the tires are busted." And the family has a trampoline in the backyard, which Jennifer likes to jump on "just for fun."

A stringent medication program keeps Jennifer's illness under control — so much so that the family even can have two dogs, but the dogs do stay outside — but doesn't cure it. Mrs. Jeffers said that some seasons of the year are more difficult for Jennifer than others. "It (Jennifer's asthma) gets worse in fall, and the spring is worse because of the budding and all the pollen. Summer is best for her because of the dryness.

"We watch her real closely in winter because of the cold, and because flu is real bad on them (people with asthma). We get our flu shots early. Any kind of respiratory problem can develop into asthma."

Mrs. Jeffers said the goal of the AAFA is to teach more people about asthma and how it can be controlled. "The death rate from asthma is on the increase," she said, "maybe from lack of education."

Two years ago, when Jennifer's asthma necessitated her being hospitalized, her doctor put the family on an educational program. "We don't have asthma so we really didn't know what was going on," Mrs. Jeffers said. "Through education she has been able to maintain a normal lifestyle.

"We feel ... like it (asthma) is not an understood disease," Mrs. Jeffers said. "As long as the parents don't understand the disease, they can't communicate it to their children."

Persons interested in learning more about asthma can write to AAFA at 1717 Massachusetts Ave., Suite 305, Washington, D.C. 20036 or call 1-800-7-ASTHMA.

Mrs. Jeffers feels that her daughter's asthma is related to the environment. "It's true," she said. "You develop your allergies to whatever you're around."

The family's hope is that Jennifer's condition will lessen as she gets older. "We hope she'll outgrow it," Mrs. Jeffers said. But each individual case of asthma is as different as the person who has it. "My aunt got it when she was 50."

Jennifer's little brother, Nealon, 4½, also has allergies, his mother said, but not asthma.

Perhaps because of her little brother's allergies or perhaps because of her own, Jennifer said that she has decided she wants to become a pediatrician. "I like babies and I'd want to make them better — because they are cute and they don't need to be sick."

Opening night gala launches 'Cabaret'

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

McKnight-Harrison

On Friday evening, May 11, it looked like a scene out of long ago Germany as Act IX, Midland Community Theatre's women's auxiliary, hosted the opening night gala for the musical, "Cabaret."

Vintage cars lined the street in front of the Yucca Theatre, where the production is being staged, and inside, the foyer's walls were painted with greetings in different languages, which would have been used in a German cabaret during that period. The play takes place in late 1929 in Berlin.

The tables were decorated with top hats, tiaras with feathers, and horns, along with glitter, confetti and ribbon curlicues. The entrance doors were outlined with white twinkling lights.

Those who attended the gala enjoyed a dinner featuring German cuisine catered by Cafe West. The menu included Braised Pork Chops with Mustard and Red Wine Sauce, Roasted Chicken in Spiced Burgundy Sauce with Bratwurst, Creamed Fresh Potato Casserole, Bavarian cabbage and corn, assorted German breads and for dessert, Black Forest Cherry Cake.

The Dow Jones Average Band provided dinner music.

Among the 350 persons enjoying the festivities were Sally and Bill Stella, Gloria and George Eng, Claire and Doug Heck, Margery Samples, Rhonda and Lynn Durham Jr., Janet and Corby Considine, Ann and Don Wambaugh, Jere and Bus Hubbard and Doris and Gene Spires.

The Act IX planning committee included Tina (Mrs. Jack) Hood, president; Janie (Mrs. Steve) Hofer, vice president; Teresa (Mrs. Gary) Lamb and Andi (Mrs. Bob) Wiggins, project chairmen, and Kelly (Mrs. Mike) Cunningham, project co-chairman.

ETHEL SEXTON, known by many as the garage sale guru of Dallas, presented another of her entertaining and humorous programs, "Make Your Own Sunshine," for the May luncheon meeting of the Ranchland Hills Country Club Ladies Association.

She draws upon tried and proven experience from her own life and lives of others to motivate the audience toward acceptance of their "designer genes," creation of positive attitudes and enthusiasm for active participation in life. Mrs. Sexton challenged her listeners with the reminder that happiness is never a station we arrive at, but it is always a way of travel.

Among those attending were newly elected president Betty (Mrs. Wylie) Basham, Marsha (Mrs. Rodger) Dameron, Marsha (Mrs. Jimmy) White, Cathryn (Mrs. Arch) Lair, Joyce (Mrs. Cliff) Sherrod and Emma (Mrs. Bob) Howard.

ALL THE SENIORS at Greenwood High School were honored with a party recently at Greenwood School. The hosts were Allene and James Mashburn, Pam and Ronnie Flowers, Temple Ann and Handley Driver, Janie Bain, Linda Smith, Tricia and Johnny Banks, Judy and Joe Henson and Sharon and Roy Graham.

Invitations, entitled "Hats Off to the Past and Future," were distributed during activity period, and to carry out that theme, the honorees were required to wear funny hats.

Decorations consisted of signs of the various colleges the seniors plan to attend. They wrote their future plans on a paper quilt to be laminated and displayed at future class reunions.

High school teacher Renea Buckaloo and Judy Henson, dressed in outdated attire, played the role of kindergarten teachers, while the seniors played children's games and had story time. They were entertained with childhood pictures of themselves shown on a large screen.

PRE-NUPTIAL PARTIES for Mary Tarver and Mark Taylor, both of Midland, were held in Edgewood and Midland. The couple were married April 28 in Edgewood.

Local parties included a miscellaneous shower for the bride in the home of Pam (Mrs. D.J.) White. Other hostesses were Debbie (Mrs. Jeff) Atwell and former Midlander Sandra (Mrs. Donald, III) Dunbar of Austin.

The couple were feted with a bar shower in the home of Lora (Mrs. H. Lee III) Jones. Also hosting were Rhonda (Mrs. Ronald) Patterson, Kim Wilkinson, Rex Barker and Robert Thompson. Becky and Randy Bailey hosted a cocktail party for the couple in their home.

The groom's parents, Jane and Dr. Leslie Taylor Jr. of Litchfield Park, Ariz., hosted the rehearsal dinner at Van Zandt Country Club.

Activities for out-of-town guests the day of the wedding included a tour of Edgewood's Heritage Park and a brunch for the women and golf and lunch at Van Zandt Country Club for the men.

KATHRYN CLARK CHILDERS, a Corpus Christi morning talk show host, presented "Secrets of the Service" for the recent luncheon meeting of the Midland Country Club Ladies Association. She recounted her experiences as one of the first women to serve her country as a special agent of the United States Secret Service.

Mrs. Childers was the only woman among the 125 Secret Service recruits in 1969. She served as a bodyguard, assisted in arrests and investigations and also was a confidante and friend to heads of state, ambassadors and children of the Presidents. Some of those she served as a bodyguard were Tricia Nixon, Caroline Kennedy, Neal Armstrong, Henry Kissinger and the King and Queen of Spain. She spent one-and-a-half years with the Kennedy children.

Hostesses for the social hour preceding lunch were Jean (Mrs. Bill) Griffin, Sue (Mrs. Ted) Kerr and Ann (Mrs. Ronnie) Williams. Background music was provided by Daryl Knapp during the social hour and luncheon.

Among those attending were Modesta (Mrs. Clayton) Williams, Dorothea (Mrs. Bill) Smith, Rosalind Redfern, Susan (Mrs. Craig) Atchison, DeEtte (Mrs. John) Zant and Sue (Mrs. Sam) Conner.

New drug effective against rare form of leukemia

BOSTON (AP) — An experimental cancer drug that works after a single round of treatment appears to be the most effective medicine yet for a rare form of leukemia, according to a study.

The drug — called 2-chlorodeoxyadenosine, or 2-CdA — has produced complete remissions in almost all hairy cell leukemia patients treated, and none has relapsed so far.

Researchers who developed and tested the medicine report that it "may well be the drug of choice in the treatment of hairy cell leukemia."

The drug also has been used successfully against chronic lymphocytic leukemia. It, like hairy cell leukemia, is a cancer of the white blood cells, which produce disease-fighting antibodies.

The latest study, published in New England Journal of Medicine, was directed by Dr. Lawrence D. Piro of the Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation in La Jolla, Calif. Scripps made an agreement with Johnson & Johnson's Ortho Pharmaceuticals to produce and distribute the drug once it's approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

In the published work, doctors gave the drug to 12 patients as far back as four years ago. In 11, the disease disappeared and they remain disease free.

In all, the Scripps doctors have treated 24 patients with almost complete success. However, they caution that longer follow up will be necessary.

Worrywarts may get ulcers

Copley News Service

Humans aren't the only ones to get stomach ulcers. Studies show that racehorses have a habit of developing ulcers, too. Veterinarian Michael Murray says about 90 percent of racehorses have the acidic stomach condition that cuases a pain in the belly. People with ulcers usually are worrywarts who are emotionally stressed-out, but Murray says the reason racehorses get ulcers is probably exercise-related stress.

Even so, he treats equine ulcers with human drugs, which cure the horses' ulcers faster because horses have a different kind of stomach lining. Murray says the motive behind studying equine ulcers isn't just humanitarian, to help the horses feel healthy. It's so racehorse owners get maximum return on their investment.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: What do parents do when their beautiful, college-educated, 23-year-old daughter becomes engaged to a high school dropout, and it's fairly evident that she is going to end up supporting him? Her father and I are heartsick about this relationship, and it's killing both of us.

Van Buren

We realize that parents must let their adult children lead their own lives, but how do other parents handle a situation like this without losing their children altogether?

You must have heard from hundreds of other parents who have been through this. How have you advised them? — MISERABLE IN MARYLAND

DEAR MISERABLE: I have said: "Don't bad-mouth the fellow. If you do, your daughter will try to defend him, and then it will be them against you. Don't make any predictions concerning the young man's future. You could be wrong. "If the marriage fails, it's not the end of the world. Don't say, 'I told you so.' Just be around to pick up the pieces.

"Some people have to learn life's lessons the hard way, and your daughter could be one of them."

DEAR ABBY: Another night of sleeping with my back to my husband because of his bad breath and body odor, so I had to write to you. Some days are worse than others, but nothing that bathing and deodorant would not eliminate.

His excuse is that he is just too tired to bathe. In the past, I have tried to let him know in a loving way that the odor was offensive to me, but he says I am too picky and a nag. Abby, I am not picky, but he knocks me (not physically) with words, belittles me with put-downs and beats me up with his mouth, then he says he was "only joking" and tells others that I have no sense of humor.

We have two bathrooms with showers, and plenty of towels, soap, shampoo, toothbrushes, toothpaste and mouthwash. By the way, this man is no slob. If he is going somewhere else, no matter how tired he is, he gets cleaned up.

After years of holding my breath to have sex, I am convinced that my husband couldn't care less about me. I have never had sex with a man other than my husband. I enjoy sex, and am beginning to wonder how great it would be to cuddle and have sex with a clean-smelling man without holding my breath. It would also be nice to hear kind words instead of ridicule and criticism. Each year I'm getting older, and I would like to be young enough to enjoy it. What would you suggest? — AGING FAST

DEAR AGING: Surely, it must be obvious to you that this poor excuse for a man has no respect for himself — and even less for you.

You complain about having been brutalized and belittled by his cutting remarks and repulsed by his bad breath and body odor — which you have tolerated for years.

What would I suggest? I would suggest that you tell this selfish slob to either clean up his act, or you are leaving! Then I would make good my threat. I have no idea where you would go, or how you would live without him, but nothing could be worse than your present situation.

Wedding bells? Wedding bills! Who pays for what and everything else you need to know if you're planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage is included.

Stress causes overeating for some

NEW YORK (AP) — Happily married women gain an average of 18.4 pounds in the first 13 years of marriage, while unhappy wives gain an average of 42.6 pounds during the same time, according to marriage therapist Richard B. Stuart.

"These figures support the common clinical observation that many women turn to food when emotional support is weak. Any kind of emotional stress increases the likelihood of overeating, so if people want to lose weight they must learn better ways of managing stress."

YSL designs golden bridal gown

By Trish Donnally
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — In a golden, hooded sequined gown, 16-year-old Lucie de la Falaise brought Yves Saint Laurent's fall collection to a glorious close.

De la Falaise, niece of YSL muse Loulou Klossowski, carried a delicate bouquet of blush-pink roses, the giveaway clue that she was Saint Laurent's runway bride.

Bridal gowns have ended fashion shows in Paris since the days when wealthy young American women would make the oceanic crossings with their mothers and chaperones to order wedding gowns and trousseaus from Parisian designers.

Now, more than 100 years later, designers carry on the tradition, but their gowns are intended only to add a grand flourish to finish a show, not actually to be sold.

She was attended by about a dozen bridesmaids all in black with sweeping black velvet capes.

The "groomsmen" were another dozen female models dressed in black velvet smoking jackets and long matching skirts accented with hammered-gold metallic neckties.

■ Lolita Lempicka's bride wore a white bowler and a gown with white chiffon through the yoke and long sleeves. The poufed white taffeta train was lined in bas relief roses.

■ Claude Montana's newlywed wore a white minidress and short white satin cape with an asymmetrical hood that hid half her face.

■ With characteristic originality, Rei Kawakubo dressed the Comme des Garcons bride in a chef's hat and big bubble gown made from polyester fiberfill interfacing.

"It was a way to show the concept of the collection," said Comme des Garcons spokeswoman Maryon Greenberg.

Wedding gifts can be surprising

By Patricia Leigh Brown
New York Times News Service

This is the season of surprise. Those who doubt it need only talk to Anne-Marie Bratton, a bride-to-be.

Ms. Bratton returned home from work recently to find one of those suspenseful harbingers of matrimony, a wedding present, in the lobby of her Manhattan apartment building. This one weighed over 400 pounds and was too big to fit in the elevator. It turned out to be a 3-by-5-foot amethyst crystal geode. Her reaction? "Shock. Absolute shock."

Like Canada geese heading north, so come seasonal flocks of delivery trucks bearing wedding gifts. All over the nation, brides and grooms (and who knows how many empty closets) are awaiting the springtime deluge of gifts — blenders, crystal bowls, silver-plated icebuckets and gold-plated music boxes that play "We've Only Just Begun."

Like marriage itself, these gifts will invariably elicit both joy and disappointment.

For every coveted sterling-silver place setting, there will be the His-and-Hers plastic TV trays, elephant-head cheese cutters and claw-footed soup tureens in quadruplicate.

MINI-BAROMETERS OF consumer culture, objects of bridal desire once included deep-fat fryers, chafing dishes, electric woks and fondue pots. No more. This year, said Barbara Tober, the editor in chief of Bride's magazine, sought-after wedding gifts include smoke detectors, security alarms, lap-top computers, muffin tins and luggage.

America is the land of an estimated 5,000 bridal registries, Bride's magazine says; some, like Geary's in Beverly Hills or Ross-Simons of Rhode Island, are now armed with toll-free telephone numbers. First-time marriages alone generate an estimated $7.8 billion in home furnishings and household equipment annually, the magazine's market research department has found.

Registry-weary brides-to-be are easy to spot. "Some of them look a little tired," said Lorri Lanning, a bridal consultant for Williams-Sonoma. "Some want everything under the sun."

For others, though, the very idea of registering evokes gluttonous memories of the old television show "Supermarket Sweep." Rather than joy, it seems to generate ambivalence.

Stewart Charme, a professor of religion at Rutgers University, and Nancie Zane, a doctoral student in social psychology, who are both in their 30s and live in Philadelphia, decided to forsake the traditional route. They gave guests an alternative by suggesting they contribute money in their names to organizations "involved in social change."

Isabel Swift, senior editor for Silhouette Books, also decided to take matters into her own hands. Turned off by experiences returning gifts to department stores, she found china at a small shop in Little Italy in Manhattan, which didn't have a registry but was happy to accommodate her.

LISA GOTTLIEB, a Los Angeles film director and writer, and her husband, Adam Leventhal, a sculptor and production designer, did not consider themselves "crystal and china people." So before their wedding, they went to a garden center and registered for a hedge. Each guest was invited to buy a few feet worth, and the hedge now graces the yard of their Hollywood bungalow.

Sunscreens may be mixed blessing

Copley News Service

Wearing sunscreens with sun protection factors of 30 or higher could increase your chances of getting too much damaging ultraviolet-A radiation by encouraging you to sun longer.

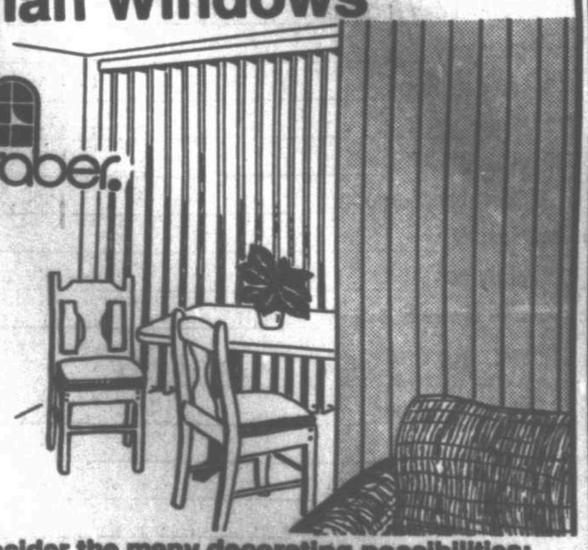

The SPF values advertised for sunscreens indicate only how much ultraviolet-B radiation can be blocked. But research suggests that UVA radiation may be just as bad for your skin.

If you want to experiment with sunscreens that shield UVA as well as UVB, look for the ingredients methyl anthranilate and benzophenones.

Finally, don't assume that you can stay in the sun for hours without consequence just because you use a high SPF sunscreen.

You Are Not Alone ...

Behind closed doors

Behind closed doors, often no one really knows what happens. Often right next door or across the street, a person is being abused by a family member who claims to love them. Usually it is a man who becomes violent and hits his wife.

Once the truth is known, it is usually the woman of domestically violent situation who is considered the victim, but the man who batters also is a victim, according to Carol Buchanan, coordinator for Project A.D.A.M. (Alternatives to Domestic Assault for Men).

Although it is difficult for many people to see an assailant as a victum, in the case of domestic violence, it is true; and the services offered by the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children extend to help these men who batter as well.

Because of culture-created roles for males and females, many domestic relationships struggle to maintain "the norm." When these stereotypical roles don't work, the resulting behavior may be violent.

Because the cycle of domestic violence cannot be stopped until the batterer stops his violence, two programs have been developed to help end the cycle. Batters Anonymous (BA) — a confidential support group — and Project A.D.A.M. — a program to help batterers learn about themselves and why they abuse others using private counseling, group support and training in alternatives to violence — are available.

These programs helped approximately 100 men in 1989 and have worked with about 40 men so far this year. Counselors also are available for women who batterer.

THE ENTIRE men's program is still very new, Ms. Buchanan said. Project A.D.A.M. started only last September. But there has been extensive research conducted since 1985 to initiate both BA and Project A.D.A.M.

"No man needs to batter or abuse in ignorance," said Ron Hanna, counselor for the programs.

"It isn't that these men don't love their families, they just don't understand that what they are doing is wrong or why they continue the pattern of violence," Ms. Buchanan said. "They are continually wounding themselves inside," as well as hurting their families.

"It's also against the law," Hanna added. "We're not here to give men a guilt and shame agenda. We just want to help them learn to deal with their emotions. It doesn't hurt to call."

By dialing (915) 683-8428, Ms. Buchanan and Hanna both can be reached 24-hours a day if needed.

"Even if it is at 3 o'clock in the morning, I would rather spend 10, 20, 30 minutes talking with someone to prevent the violence than to sleep," Ms. Buchanan said.

Part of the difficulty Ms. Buchanan and Hanna both must deal with is that there is no sure profile of a batterer, therefore there is no formula to help stop the battering.

"There is no specific group; they range from early 20s to men in their 70s," Hanna said.

"There is not a perfect profile for a batterer," Ms. Buchanan said. "They come from all classes, races and educational backgrounds. Sometimes there is substance abuse involved, but not always. Usually there is a history of abuse in their family of origin, but not always."

Some of the characteristics a batterer may exhibit include a belief in rigid or stereotypical sex roles, low self-esteem and idealization of his marriage. He also may have been a victim of child abuse or witnessed violence between his parents. He may abuse or neglect his children and have poor parenting skills while setting rigid family boundaries. Most batterers are socially or emotionally isolated and withdrawn and are extremely dependent or possessive of their partner. They often are extremely jealous, have an uncontrolled temper and deny there is a problem.

Any of these signs are easily hidden from others. Only the closest family members or friends ever see the batterers abusive behavior.

FAMILY OR friend intervention is sometimes a way to stop the immediate violence, but family members and friends are often hesitant to get involved.

"Sometimes it may make the situation worse if you do (intervene), but you may endanger someone's life if you don't," Ms. Buchanan said.

A brochure is available from Project A.D.A.M. and the PBCBWTC called "Helping the Battered Woman — A Guide for Family and Friends" which explains the best options for friends and family members to use in helping in a domestically violent situation.

"Usually, these men don't come to us until something is really wrong (from their point of view), until she has left him or the violence has gotten totally out of hand," Ms. Buchanan said.

From childhood, many men learn to be unaware of their feelings, and to be dependent on the woman in the relationship to take care of feelings in the family or relationship. Men learn that boys don't cry, only girls do, and that if they need a hug, they should go to mom, not dad. They also learn to be problem and action oriented, as opposed to process oriented and thinking things out.

In addition to society's determined roles, these men also may have a childhood history from a parent who used physical, mental or sexual abuse. If so, it is more likely that they will resort to the same source of abuse to try to control a situation.

THE GOAL of BA and Project A.D.A.M. is to change unacceptable behaviors.

The programs stress self-awareness and teach these men to recognize what feelings are and how they should be expressed.

"These men must learn to understand their emotions and feelings, to know what their physical cues are — such as their jaws clenching or their hands clenching — or their verbal cues — such as when the word 'bitch' comes to his mind," Ms. Buchanan said. "These are early recognition signs he may not know.

At that point, counselors suggest a "time out." Time out is a tool used to end a conversation at a particular point when the batterer feels he may lose control.

"We work with men to learn to work with themselves," Ms. Buchanan said.

"We often have to do a lot of redefining to find out what is really wrong in a individual situation We have had cases where the man has shoved his wife or pulled her hair, but because he hasn't actually hit her, he does not believe he has been abusive," Ms. Buchanan said. "He didn't realize he was doing anything wrong."

Substance abuse is often linked to battering and some men have said they only have a problem when they drink.

"But we don't work with excuses," Ms. Buchanan said. When substance abuse is involved, the counselors work with other programs such as Alcoholics Anonymous to help the batterer understand his situation.

"Most of the clients we have deal with physical abuse, and they (the abusers) tend to see emotional and verbal abuse as unimportant," Hanna said. "No matter what the reason, if your wife and children are afraid of you, then there's something wrong."

"When you live in a situation, you believe it is normal. If they grew up with that type of behavior, they do not know it is wrong," Ms. Buchanan said. "I have a saying, 'My rights extend right up to where they infringe on yours.' That's the line we have to teach them.

"They must learn to end the behavior, to deal with their feelings in another way. Progressively, they become more aware," Ms. Buchanan said.

By the time physical violence has taken place, all communication between the couple has stopped, and these programs help men learn how to communicate their new found feelings in another way besides violent behavior.

ONCE A man has started the program, one of the toughest battles Ms. Buchanan and Hanna have is keeping them in the program.

"Denial is still a big problem," Ms. Buchanan said.

"It's kind of like going to the doctor for an antibiotic. You take the medicine for a while, then you start to feel better so you stop taking the medicine even though you're not really well. Then you have a relapse," Hanna said. "Many of the men think they are better, quit the program and return to their homes only to find out they weren't really ready. ... No one can tell them they're not ready. It's an emotional experience they must experience again, for themselves.

"Sometimes they come back, sometimes they don't," Hanna said. "Some men start BA and come back because they recognize they are getting out of control, or they have entered a new relationship or something that triggers a point that make them feel they need to return for a booster shot."

"Our overriding rule is 'Violence is not acceptable,'" Ms. Buchanan said, a philosophy the Project A.D.A.M. brochure reiterates with, "It's all right to be angry; it's not all right to hit."

Bike design seat-of-the-pants

By Erma Bombeck

You would have to be out of it not to know that bicycles have staged a comeback for recreation enthusiasts.

Bombeck

They are everywhere — on highways and bike paths, on mountains and in deserts.

I have a bike hanging in the garage that you couldn't get me on if Paul Newman rode me around on the handlebars. I have always felt there was something seriously wrong with the design.

That's why my heart skipped a beat a few weeks ago when I opened Time magazine and saw a prototype of the two-wheeler of the future. It would have three-spoke wheels to make it more durable, hydraulic brakes to make stopping easier, a molded one-piece frame, a computer that could measure speed, distance traveled and altitude, a push-button gearshift, and ... and? I shuffled through the pages and scanned the story again. WHAT ABOUT THE STUPID SEAT?

Many do not love their bicycle seat. Ask them. It's like sitting on a flagpole for three days.

In my mind I have tried to imagine how the bicycle seat was designed and by whom. Was it the same man who brought us culottes? It has to be. Here is a man who has never viewed the human anatomy from the rear. If you put a woman in a skirt and divide it into two legs, she's going to look like a Disney parking lot from behind. The same thing will happen if you perch her derriere atop a little hard seat that fans out like a dead pigeon.

Wouldn't you have thought that someone in the office would have said, "Look, Hal, let's get Miss Simpson in here and let her sit on a piece of brown paper, and we can trace her outline with a Magic Marker just to get a handle on what we've got here"?

Hal probably would have said, "Who's going to notice what you look like when you ride a bicycle?"

"Hal! Are you saying you're not going to notice someone wearing a safety helmet and skintight neon Spandex shorts that glow in the dark?"

The Time article said that more changes will occur on the bicycle in this century and engineers will borrow materials from the aerospace industry. But a few things will likely remain the same: handlebars, pedals, a chain and two wheels.

Can you believe it? They didn't even mention the seat!

Husband-battering is no laughing matter

By Phyllis Battelle
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Michael had been coming home late from the office for weeks, and his wife suspected he was seeing another woman. First she asked, then begged, and finally demanded that he tell her about the affair. He refused to discuss it. So one night, she lunged — kicking, biting, beating him about the head with her fists.

"I was running around," Michael sheepishly told an interviewer the next day, "so I deserved it."

Why didn't he report the incident to authorities? Because he didn't want to look like a wimp. Why didn't he fight back? Because he felt guilty, "and I'm a lot bigger than she is. If I really let go, I could have killed her!"

According to startling studies over the last decade, Michael's story is far from unique. "For every wife-beating in this country, there is a husband-beating," claimed Dr. Murray A. Straus, who released one of the first such family-violence profiles in 1978. "A lot of my friends in the women's movement are angry with me for printing that statistic, but we have to realize that battering is more than just male domination. Women batter equally. The husbands just don't talk about it as readily," he said.

BUT THESE days, more and more males are speaking up, describing a generation of aggressive wives who are often more "severely" violent than men — hitting with heavy objects, or threatening with knives and guns. This charge was made in an issue of the publication, Social Work, by social-work researchers R.L. McNeely and Gloria Robinson-Simpson, who call domestic violence "a two-way street — a human problem, as opposed to a women's problem."

The ugly findings have spurred a furious reaction from feminists, who flooded the journal with complaints. After years of spreading the word about battered wives, they have seen 1,200 shelters established nationwide for abused women and children, and fear this publicity will result in funding cuts. Social Work responds, defensively "Acknowledging that some women can be abusive is not to detract from the needs of those who are abused."

Men's rights groups are as gratified by the research as women are distraught. According to a Wall Street Journal report, the Father's Rights Association of New York sent a letter to Gov. Mario Cuomo, along with the article, and said it may sue for violation of civil rights if the state doesn't provide more shelter services for battered men. Says the group's president, "If a woman has a black eye, everyone assumes her husband hit her. If a man with a black eye says his wife hit him, it would be a big joke."

BUT IT'S NO JOKE. The community-services officer for the U.S. Army in Ft. Devens, Mass., a woman named Anne Wilson, cites cases she's handled in which men are stabbed or shot by their wives. And the attacks were not motivated by self-defense (as feminists charge), Wilson claims, but rather by emotional problems, sometimes stemming from abuse the women suffered as children.

"Childhood is the foundation-stone on which the edifice of violence is built," maintained Dr. Straus, a University of New Hampshire sociologist who surveyed more than 2,000 "representative" families before submitting his sordid findings to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. "We've traditionally used physical punishment to establish family rules. 'That's dirty — don't touch it!' Slap, 'Don't go near the curb!' Spank. Much of our 'instruction' is hitting in anger, unintentionally training future husband and wife-beaters. We are establishing a line between love and violence, enforcing the idea that those who love you are those who hit you," he said.

AS A RESULT, these are the stunning statistics:

1.8 million U.S. wives, and an equal number of husbands, annually are beaten.

In about 50 percent of the incidents, both parties are violent simultaneously, one attacking, the other striking back. In 25 percent, only the man is violent while the woman submits; in another 25 percent only the wife is violent and the husband "takes it."

Wives tend to push, slap, scratch, bite and hurl objects, while men are more likely to punch and choke. In the use of knives or guns, the sexes were equal 10 years ago: now, the new research suggests, women prevail in the "ultimate violence" which is killing and police records have shown for the last 50 years that the sexes are equal.

Women are usually more severely injured, because of smaller physique and economic and psychological vulnerability; "But as more women find economic independence, and realize it's not their fate in life to accept abuse," Straus said, "that is changing."

But men are painfully injured especially when, like the aforementioned Michael, they don't fight back. Yet the husbands' woeful tales often go unheard, because they're ashamed to admit they've been battered. As one social worker put it, "Police are a symbol of manhood, and it is simply too much to approach a cop and say, 'the little woman beat me up.'"

SINCE THE release of the sad findings on equality-in-violence, many Americans, particularly feminists, are questioning not only the validity, but what possible benefit can be gained by knowing these things. The answer is that only if acknowledge that a problem exists can we begin to bring out the reasons why husband and wives drive each to violence.

Abuse awareness campaign kicks off

By Elizabeth Edwin Lifestyle Editor

When facing a difficult time, often one of the greatest consolations is knowing you are not alone. There is a comfort in knowing others have dealt with, or are dealing with, a similar difficulty and there are people who can help.

Letting people know they are not alone and do not have to live in an abusive situation is one of the main purposes of the "You Are Not Alone" campaign, starting today and continuing through May 27, sponsored by the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children (PBCBWTC). The campaign is designed to increase the awareness of services available to all victims of domestic violence and to let residents know they are not alone.

To help increase this awareness, many Permian Basin businesses — over 100 businesses and churches just in Midland — have agreed to place literature and posters from the PBCBWTC in strategic places in their work place.

"We feel we are only reaching a tenth of the people that are out there who could benefit from our help," said Eleanor Josting, community relations coordinator for the PBCBWTC.

The PBCBWTC serves 15 counties including Reeves, Ward, Loving, Winkler, Ector, Midland, Crane, Upton, Glasscock, Howard, Martin, Andrews, Gaines, Dawson and Borden.

The posters and other materials list two hotline numbers people can call for information about or assistance with domestic violence. The hotline numbers are 567-3800 or 683-1300.

The "You Are Not Alone" campaign, which Mike Barker of KMID-TV and Katherine Lee of Magic 102.1 FM radio are honorary chairmen of this year, was initiated by Pam Williams and the PBCBWTC staff in 1987, according to Ms. Josting. The Midland co-chairmen for this year's campaign are Pat Ellison and Suellen Prewit.

"Many times, the woman believes she is the only one dealing with this situation. She keeps thinking if she can just get her act together, then he won't hit her anymore," Ms. Josting said. But the situation usually continues, and the degree of violence escalates. "The woman eventually exhausts the support of her peer group because they keep thinking, 'If it's that bad, then why doesn't she get out.' She then feels she has no where else to go."

The Center serves as a safe house as well as a place where women can begin to redirect their lives. Services are provided without charge and clients participate in the cooperative house management program.

"Each case is individual, but the Center gives her (the battered victim) options, time to evaluate her situation," Ms. Josting said. "Sometimes the women will return to their homes, but at least they have learned something from the Center and they know we are here if they need help."

Last year, the Center served 535 resident women and 724 resident children. Residents are those victims who live at the Center because they are in physically dangerous situations with no place else to go. The Center also helped 486 non-resident women. Programs offered by the Center also served approximately 100 abusive partners.

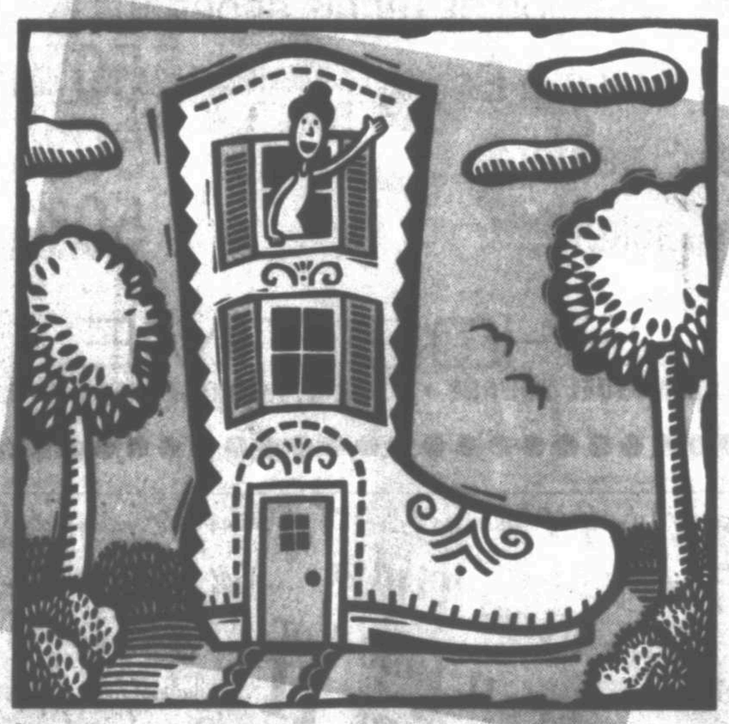

The Texas Department of Human Services estimates that at least 10,000 women per year in the Permian Basin need shelter services. With these 10,000 women is an estimated 25,000 children (based on estimate of 2.5 children per woman) and 10,000 abusive partners. That make a total of at least 45,000 people just in the Permian Basin who need the services offered by the PBCBWTC.

Women comprise the majority of battered victims, although there are battered men as well. Statistically, according to the Texas Coalition on Family Violence, 80 percent of women are battered. But according FBI estimates, one out of two women in this country will be abused at least once in her lifetime by a person with whom she lives.

Because domestic violence cannot be stopped until the batterer stops his unacceptable pattern of physical, mental or emotional abuse, there also are programs offered to aid the batterer. The program offers Project A.D.A.M. (Alternatives to Domestic Assault for Men) — which provides a safe place for the batterer to learn about themselves, abuse, causes of abuse and alternatives — and Batterers Anonymous (BA) — a confidential support group.

"It (domestic violence) is the story of the hour," Ms. Josting said. "We are encouraged because of the media attention the problem is getting. We are finally beginning to deal with something that has been going on for years. It helps people who are experiencing the problem to come out," she said.

Colorado ski resorts thrive with summer art fairs

By Laura Daily
Copley News Service

Every July, Vicki and David Curry load suitcases, fishing gear, mountain bike and Tuza, their golden retriever, into their 1985 Ford van.

As dawn breaks, they cross Texas on their way to six weeks in the Colorado Rocky Mountains.

But Vicki and David aren't merely escaping Dallas' torrid summer heat. For the past year, they have toiled in their home workshop crafting enough off-loom woven wall hangs to fill a 12-foot-long trailer.

For the Currys, art is the ticket to a summer of festivals and fairs across Colorado.

While small arts-and-crafts fairs fill almost every Colorado weekend from Memorial Day to Labor Day, this summer almost a dozen of the best festivals are juried or "prejudged" to ensure only the highest-quality crafts go on display.

In fact, through the "Colorado Arts Tour" (a cooperative effort among state arts groups), 9,000 artists and craftsmen across the country were invited to participate in this summer's fairs. The result is a season of the most extraordinary original products displayed at a most eclectic array of events.

ACCORDING TO festival organizers across Colorado, whatever your taste (or your budget), you'll find original, gallery-quality work, including earthenware pottery, wearable art, leather jackets and belts, stained glass, jewelry, spectacular wildlife photography, dried flowers, hand-made fishing rods, wooden toys, handcrafted mountain dulcimers, even ornate tennis shoes.

Says Vicki, "We love to escape the city, and by traveling from fair to fair, David and I can combine a summer vacation with our weaving business."

The Currys, who plan to operate booths at festivals in Snowmass Village, Carbondale and Steamboat Springs, believe that the Colorado arts-and-crafts circuit affords customers a high standard of crafted goods.

"I'm seeing a higher quality every year," says Vicki, "and, as an artist, I really appreciate the standards that the juries are setting."

Colorado art fairs attract buyers who enjoy both art and music set amid mountain splendor. No matter which festival you choose, you'll find most resorts utilize the same formula: upward of 100 artists' booths combined with a bevy of entertainment and food to create a fun-filled weekend for the entire family.

For example, Colorado's oldest civic celebration (93 years to be exact), Strawberry Days, is expected to attract as many as 25,000 to Glenwood Springs. Though this year's theme is a Spanish one — "Ole, Una Fiesta!" — festivalgoers will still gather in Sayre Park on Saturday for the free strawberries and ice cream, a tradition started at the turn of the century.

The Carbondale Mountain Fair will provide a venue for other cultures like Adetunji Joda and the Irepo Afrikan Dancers and Drummers, Scottish and modern dancers, cloggers and contra dancing, along with bluegrass, country and western, classical, folk and jazz music.

CARBONDALE ALSO has become something of a blacksmithing and artistic ironwork center, so the fair will spotlight nationally known blacksmith Francis Whitaker. Local ironworkers will join him at six forges.

At the Beaver Creek Resort, 10 miles west of Vail, festival organizers are planning to turn the resort's plaza into a fairyland for two weekends in August. Festival coordinator Pam Storey hopes "A Curious Enchantment" will attract buyers "looking for something out of the ordinary." The 70 artists, plus all entertainers and other workers will be fully costumed.

The historic mining town of Crested Butte closes Main Street and rolls out the red carpet to 150 artisans for its Annual Festival of the Arts.

According to Deb Cheesman, artists from across the country vie for Colorado festival positions. "We receive hundreds of applications, which are carefully reviewed. As a rule, we're looking for gallery-quality arts and crafts."

Adds Linda Kleaver of the Snowmass Resort Association, "Bargain hunters will find great buys, especially on pottery. Because there's no middleman, arts-and-crafts fairs are traditionally less expensive than boutiques and galleries."

"The best thing about a resort setting is that there's so much to do," explains Kleaver. "You can spend a few hours exploring all the different wares, sample some delectable food and listen to everything from country-western music to Chopin.

"But, there's so much more. Fly-fishing, horseback riding, tennis, golf, hiking or just lazing by the swimming pool are all options."

HERE IS A list of some of Colorado's best festivals for arts-and-crafts bargains and family fun. Contact each one individually for specific times and schedules.

■ BOULDER CREEK FESTIVAL. May 26-27.

Held along the banks of Boulder Creek, this festival combines art, entertainment, food, a farmers' market, children's fair, parade, even a ritual duck race! Call (303) 444-2380.

■ STRAWBERRY DAYS, Glenwood Springs. June 15-17.

Festivities in Sayre Park begin Friday evening, with approximately 125 craft booths, 30 food booths, a kids' carnival and bingo. There is a parade down Grand Avenue on Saturday at 10 a.m.

Other events include a rodeo, crowning of the Strawberry Days Queen, the "Strawberry Shortcut" — a 5K/10K race, free strawberries and ice cream, a mountain bike race and talent show. Call (303) 945-6589.

■ ART ON THE ARKANSAS, Canon City. June 30-July 1.

Near the Arkansas River as it flows through Canon City, the spacious and shady Veteran's Park enjoys a full view of the surrounding mountains. Located along U.S. Highway 50, the fair attracts thousands of summer visitors on their way to or from Royal Gorge.

Entertainment includes folk, big band, country, classical and ethnic music, storytellers, strolling musicians and jugglers. A children's activity tent offers projects such as face painting, paper sculpture and giant bubble blowing. Call (719) 275-2790 in the afternoon.

■ SNOWMASS ARTS & CRAFTS Fair. July 7-8, Aug. 11-12.

With more than 400 applicants for 100 spaces, Snowmass Village will have "the widest collection of works of art to date," says Linda Kleaver. "Plus, there will be few of the same artists at each event, so if you see it at the July fair, buy it."

■ VAIL ARTS FESTIVAL 7. July 15-16.

Vail's second-largest summer event is part of the "Balloons, Bluegrass & Brunch" weekend. The show, held at Lionshead Mall, is limited to 100 artists in the areas of paintings, drawings and prints, photographs, ceramics, sculpture, fibers, wearable art, jewelry and furniture.

Families will especially enjoy the entertainment by strolling musicians, mimes and puppeteers. Don't miss early-morning hot-air balloon launches over Nottingham Lake in Avon and the Bravo! Colorado series of concerts at the Gerald R. Ford Amphitheater. Call (303) 476-4255.

■ ART-IN-THE-PARK, Steamboat Springs. July 20-22.

Part of Steamboat's Rainbow Weekend, Art-in-the-Park features more than 100 local, regional and national artisans in River Queen Park. Youngsters will have a ball in the children's tent, complete with puppet show.

Other weekend activities include the Hot Air Balloon Rodeo, the Cowboy Poetry and Music Jamboree, tennis and lacrosse tournaments, professional rodeo and chamber music concerts. Call (303) 879-0880.

■ ARTFAIR '90, Boulder. July 21-22.

More than 100 booths cover all four blocks of the Downtown Boulder Mall. Upward of 20,000 people enjoy plenty of good food and a variety of musical entertainment. Call (303) 449-3774.

■ CARBONDALE MOUNTAIN FAIR, July 27-29.

The biggest small-town fair around combines a juried arts-and-crafts event with live entertainment, games, contests, races, international food booths, puppets, dancers and much more.

Look for such unusual features as demonstrations of ironwork, horseshoe tournament, traditional pie and cake judging and wood-splitting contests. Call (303) 963-1406.

■ PARK YOUR ART, Greeley. July 28-29.

Visual, performing, cultural and applied arts are spread across Lincoln Park in downtown Greeley. Besides dance performances, theatrical productions and concerts, there will be an assortment of ethnic foods for purchase. Call (303) 350-9455.

■ 18th FESTIVAL OF THE ARTS, Crested Butte. Aug. 4-5.

More than 150 artisans, including 15 local artists, are expected to exhibit a variety of unusual and unique gallery-quality works. The town of 1,200 residents also plans a gallery walk, live theater performances, food booths, street actors and musical entertainment. Call (303) 349-6438.

■ BEAVER CREEK ARTS FESTIVAL. Aug. 4-5 and Aug. 11-12.

Sixty artists set up booths on the plaza, with entertainment provided by jugglers, mimes and musicians. Call (303) 476-4255.

Mexico's scenic hideaways often ancient, exotic

By Richard Carroll
Copley News Service

VERACRUZ — Splashed with color and character, Mexico, like a Bogart movie, can lay hold of the sensibilities and fulfill a longing for adventure and discovery.

A merciful respite from daily routine and a mecca for the active traveler, the great swath of land is framed by 6,000 miles of long sandy beaches and lovely palm-laden coves. Splendid natural glories set the imagination aflight upon sight of brooding snow-capped volcanoes and thick jungle lands dappled with remote villages.

You can't help but feel an easing of tension and a sense of leisure when visiting the vast countryside where people are less dependent on television, and ancient customs and art forms continue to live.

For those who want to do more than soak in the sun or dangle their feet in a swimming pool, look south of the border.

Mexico, one of the few countries in the world that has a comprehensive program to develop and promote tourism in new and existing tourist zones, offers a dazzling selection of fun-filled learning endeavors — a travel trend that is here to stay.

VISITORS CAN FOLLOW the path of the intriguing pre-Columbian civilizations of Mexico's distant past to areas that remain curiously unknown. A timelessness in the state of Veracruz is seen in the rich archaeological ruins, cozy open-air restaurants that serve juicy shrimp bathed in garlic, and Veracruzano music that is guaranteed to put a smile on your face.

The area from Tampico south to Isla del Carmen, via Highway 180 that skirts the coastline, is where people go about their lives as they have for hundreds of years, tending their fields, selling and buying at market and fishing the Gulf of Mexico.

The villages reveal a pastoral setting that has never failed to charm the Mexican poets. Travelers can shoot basketball with townspeople in a plaza the Mayans might have trod on, watch a baseball game where centerfield is filled with grazing cows, and join a wedding, kiss the bride and feast on local delicacies.

Five miles east of Papantla, and 120 miles northwest of Veracruz, are the spectacular 2,500-acre El Tajin ruins, circa A.D. 600, one of Mexico's most important and least visited archaeological sites.

Surrounding the El Tajin pyramids are vanilla and tobacco plantations and the famed pepper fields that produce millions of pounds of the delicious jalapenos that are used in the Pace Foods picante sauce.

The Indians, shy but friendly, wearing the classic white straw hat and boots with pointed toes, will shake your hand and smile as they head to market with their crops. In the evening Chipotle, a smoked and saucy jalapeno, is enjoyed while the rich scent of peppers wafts across the countryside.

IN VERACRUZ, the oldest colonial city in Mexico, far removed from the tourist trail, browse through San Juan de Ulua Spanish fortress/prison, the first built in the Western Hemisphere and one of the best preserved.

Standing in the tower looking at the moats, dungeons, cannons and drawbridges, it's easy to imagine the gold-laden galleons sailing out to open sea on their way to Cadiz, Spain.

The Zocalo is lined with colonial buildings and a block-long maze of 10 sidewalk cafe/bars, home of exciting marimba musicians and mariachi bands with trumpet players who can rattle the coconuts in the towering palms.

The party, which begins at noon and lasts till the wee hours, rivals the Plaza de los Mariachis in Guadalajara and Garibaldi Square in Mexico City.

Inland and south, Oaxaca, a lovely crafts center, is proud of its hand-loomed textiles and popular black Coyotepec pottery. Saturdays, the Indians sell serapes and wares at a colorful market that looks like an artist's palette and is a traveler's highlight in this part of the world.

Delve into Oaxaca's regional art galleries, the Rufino Tamayo Museum and the spectacular National Museum, which houses jewelry and treasures excavated from nearby Monte Alban, a Zapotec city dating to 800 B.C.

At Mitla, 24 miles south and one of the few ancient cities actually occupied at the time of the Spanish conquest, hardworking Indian women still weave with wooden frames and shuttle. The lonely and isolated ruins consist of stone temples, underground chambers and unusual stone wall carvings that will remain etched in your memory.

ROMANTIC CANCUN, Mexico's most popular resort destination, is where windsurfers fly across the water like roadrunners, and snorkeling, scuba diving and fishing are a way of life.

Lingering sunsets, 240-plus days of sunshine every year and a countryside that is laced with palms, thick jungle and ancient ruins have made Cancun a hit from the time it was opened for tourism in 1974.

Pop over to Cozumel, 30 miles north of town and 12 miles off the coast to Chancanab Lagoon, Laguna Colombia, and the Palancar Reef area at the southern tip of the island, ideal for diving and snorkeling. Excellent instructors teach visitors how to best use fins and mask and the "ins" of quality viewing.

Beneath the sea's blue-green surface you can see a plane wreck, winding canyons, deep ravines, impressive dropoffs, giant turtles and miles of multihued coral embellished with brightly colored fish.

The diversity of the Yucatan is mind-boggling. Merida, the capital and gateway to the Yucatan Peninsula, has great columned estates, many built by the French, and an enchanting Old World ambience.

Broad, tree-lined streets and sidewalk cafes in the Montejo district, reminiscent of Rome, are a contrast to the narrow downtown streets and the oldest house in Merida, Casa Montejo, built in 1594.

The prestigious Museum of Anthropology and History, housed in a stunning palace, is a showplace for the Mayan culture and a solid introduction to the area. From Merida, allow time for exploration to some of Mexico's greatest archaeology sites such as Chichen Itza, Kabah, Dzibilchultun and hundreds of little-known temples and pyramids.

ACAPULCO, ON THE west coast, is finally making a comeback to its glory days of the past with classy, upscale boutiques and restaurants, glittering discos and fine hotels that have rediscovered the old-fashioned concept of personalized service.

Las Brisas, a haven for honeymooners, features a whopping 250 swimming pools and 150 pink jeeps for guests to zip about and discover their own favorite hideaway.

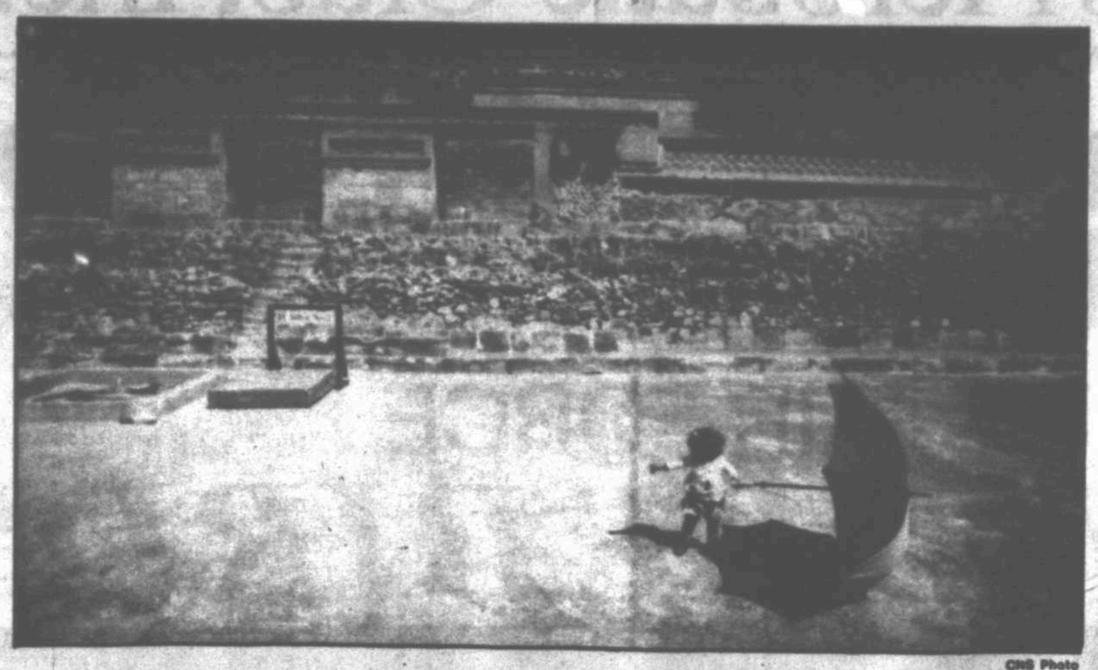

Although the beaches and activities are the main attraction, the city has an old section with a busy central marketplace and an unusual mosque-type cathedral. A few blocks east, overlooking the bay, is the 300-year-old Fort San Diego, which was built to defend the port from 17th century pirate attacks and is now a museum.

Mexico covers all the bases, from romance and sports to the days of the conquistadores and, best of all, warm, outgoing people who have always been our friends.

The devaluation of the peso has made Mexico one of the best values in the world and a hot spot for the careful bargain hunter.

For information, contact your local travel agent or the Mexican Government Tourist Office at 10100 Santa Monica Blvd., Suite 224, Los Angeles, Calif.; telephone (213) 203-8151.

Swing your clubs on a golfing cruise

I have finally been converted — converted after ten years in the travel business. Now I guess you are wondering what I've been converted to, and that's cruising.

I've sold cruises around the world and have told people the merits of cruising. After they came back happy, and told me everything was correct, I would pack my bag. Then off I would go to Tibet, Nepal, the Silk Route, up the Amazon or someplace that I deemed exciting. I certainly had no intention of ever going on a cruise!

In the first place, I'm not much for sun, and in the second place, I just figured I'd lose my mind sitting on a ship for seven days. But this spring we had a group going out and the cruise leader was unable to go — and I thought I had drawn the black bean!

If that was the black bean, it was the best black bean I have ever had in my life.

Cruising was something that was beyond my expectations. I came back more relaxed than I do from the type of travel I have done. The sun did not present a problem. I put on my manmade tan and didn't sit in the sun. I unpacked my clothes one time and from then on led just a totally relaxed existence.

It's almost a vacation where someone sprinkles fairy dust and you have a fairy tale time for seven days. The ship stopped at different ports — Cozumel, Cayman Islands and Jamaica. Each port had a different flavor and different things to see. There were a variety of tours that you could take or you could get off the ship and just wander around. On the Cayman Islands we took the opportunity to just get off and do our own hotel checking so that I would know all the hotels. Then we had a nice lunch and went back to the ship.

The only thing that presented any problem at all on the cruise is they serve way too much food and I ate every single bit of it. But I came back knowing what a truly relaxing vacation is. And certainly anxious for the people of this area also to experience this.

We've planned a golf cruise for this fall. It's seven days in the Caribbean. There will be tee off times at each island — San Juan, Barbados, Martinique, St. Maarten, Antigua and St. Thomas. These are some of my favorite islands because they are not the most popular ones so they still have some of the native influence. The sailing will go October 28, it is for golfers, and it will be discounted so the prices are excellent. We hope that you will call us at 684-7428 and go with us on a golfing cruise. It certainly is a wonderful vacation!

BUSINESS DIGEST

Poor Boone

T. Boone Pickens, one of the highest paid executives of the '80s, will start the new decade with no paycheck because of low natural gas prices.

Pickens

In a meeting Thursday with stockholders of Mesa Limited Partnership, Pickens noted that his salary is tied to cash distributions, which the company had suspended because natural gas prices were so low.

Pickens said the distributions would be resumed when natural prices improved, but the temporary elimination was necessary to protect the company's financial integrity.

"The turnaround won't come today, and it won't come tomorrow, but it will come," Pickens said in remarks prepared for delivery at the meeting.

In response to questions, Pickens estimated the distributions could be resumed by 1992 or 1993, when Mesa is predicting natural gas prices will reach about $3 per thousand cubic feet (mcf).

Belt-it-down

DETROIT — Safety-belt-use laws have been so well accepted by the public, a majority of Americans are limiting police officers to more actively enforce the laws, according to a recent public-opinion poll conducted by the nation's leading traffic-safety organization.

For the fifth consecutive year, a national survey is showing safety- belt-use laws are favored by a three-to-one margin. However, public perception is that police officers could more actively enforce belt-use laws. Less than 20 percent of those surveyed in states with safety-belt-use laws believe local police departments place a "high priority" on issuing safety-belt citations. Currently, 34 states and the District of Columbia have safety-belt-use laws.

Coke magic

ATLANTA — Coca-Cola Co.'s "MagiCan" promotion seems to have more tricks than treats, according to more than a dozen consumers who have complained about the cans containing prizes and water instead of the drink that refreshes.

The complaints have the soft-drink company taking a "serious look" at its $100 million summer promotional campaign.

"We are looking at some isolated incidents of failure," said Carlton L. Curtis, Coca-Cola's vice president of corporate communications. "We are concerned about any failure of any promotional device. We are looking into it and taking it very seriously."

Curtis said the company had received 12 complaints across the country since the promotion began May 7, but Curtis said it would be "speculation" to say the company was considering dropping the campaign.

"We are going to continue to do everything we can until we understand the significance of the malfunction," Curtis said.

While the incidents may have been isolated, at least one was very visible.

At a recent town meeting being televised live in North Andover, Mass., an 11-year-old boy — unaware of the "MagiCan" promotion — bought a can of Coke that "tasted awful and smelled awful," his mother, Robin E. Gendron, said Tuesday.

Marc Shapiro talks on banking, Texas

■ Marc Shapiro, the upbeat president of Texas Commerce Bankshares, shares his views on the turnaround in Texas and some aspects of banking in the state.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Harvard cum laude; MBA Stanford Business School and top of the glass; President and CEO of Texas Commerce Bankshares, Marc Shapiro is a rare breed in executivedom.

After taking the Texas Commerce reigns from Ben Love in 1989, he brashly proclaimed that Texas Commerce would make $100 million this year. At the end of the first quarter he had chalked up $31 million or nearly one-third the predicted sum.

He has been described as "an egghead that knows how to get things done."

Shapiro's view of Texas is strictly upbeat, and when he was in Midland this week to announce the Texas Commerce-United merger we asked him to share his views on banking, Texas and the economy with us:

ON RECOVERY — "The good news for the oil industry is that it has stopped going down. The good news for Texas is that we are seeing recovery throughout the state. Statewide total employment is higher than it was in 1985.

"Recovery is everywhere, but Houston is setting the pace for recovery. Three years ago Houston unemployment was 9 percent, last year it was 5.5 percent, and this year it is 4.5 percent. Over the last two years we have added about 50,000 jobs per year. Housing prices were up 7-8 percent last year. The petrochemical industry is rebounding, but most of the Houston recovery has not been oil related.

Cartoon characters bring big money

■ That popular cartoon family, the Simpsons, is bringing in big money to stores selling merchandise with its likeness, and the Midland stores carrying Simpsons goods are no exception.

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Such items as T-shirts, boxer shorts, bumper stickers, pins, pens, posters, hats and towels adorned with such characters as Batman, Teen-age Mutant Ninja Turtles and the Simpsons are leaving stores faster than they can be put on the shelves.

Sales of all licensed products hit a record $64.6 billion in 1989, according to the Licensing Letter, a New York newsletter, and cartoon characters like the Simpsons make up a solid $12 billion chunk of the business.

Last year, anything adorned with the "Batman" logo — sold in conjunction with the highly successful motion picture — sold and sold well. This year the hot items are those adorned with the Simpsons — particularly Bart — or Ninja Turtles.

"The Simpsons are knocking Batman out of the water," says Ray Reddig, manager of Coach House Gifts in Midland Park Mall. "Batman sales were real strong for about two months; Bart's been around for four months and is still going strong."

He estimates that, even though sales have declined slightly, sales of Simpsons merchandise comprises 20 percent of his store's weekly sales.

Ray Reddig, manager of Coach House Gifts in Midland Park Mall, displays a T-shirt with Bart Simpson on it. Sales of Simpsons merchandise comprises 20 percent of the store's weekly sales.

Demand has been so strong since The Simpsons debuted on Fox Television that suppliers are having difficulty keeping stores supplied with the merchandise. Reddig says between 40 and 45 T-shirts to adults a week, and can't keep children's sizes in stock. T-shirts and boxer shorts are the two top sellers, especially those bearing Bart's likeness, he adds.

Giving the Simpsons a run for their money in the merchandising game are the Teen-age Mutant Ninja Turtles, which began life as a comic book, become a line of toys and a television cartoon series and recently became the stars of a highly successful motion picture that has already earned over $100 million at the box office.

The Turtles are selling especially well at Kay-Bee Toys, according to manager Marty Hamlin. Coach House's Reddig laments that he hasn't been able to get much Turtle merchandise because suppliers are trying to fill demand from other stores.

The popular characters — both the Simpsons and the Turtles — have been greeted with some controversy. A number of children's advocates and media watchdogs called the Turtle movie too violent, and several elementary schools have banned Simpsons T-shirts.

Local painter prefers glass over canvas

Beverly Shilling/Reporter-Telegram

By Sue Gutierrez
Staff Writer

If you've driven by a car dealership lately and wondered who is responsible for those catchy windshield phrases that are designed to draw you in to take a closer look at the car, it's Joannie Eads.

She can be found many afternoons hunched over cars in her paint spackeled coat brightening the lot with colorful lettering. Eads, independent sign painter, says she got started in business about three years ago. She had gotten the idea from a friend who had been a sign painter in Midland, but moved out of town.

Eads says it was a natural transition for her, "I loved art in high school. My last semester I took three art classes and just loved it," so she found it easy to step into her friend's shoes. After painting a few windshields the word about her business started circulating and she began accumulating customers.

She's painted logos on airplanes, race cars and lettering on store front windows, car windshields and banners. Christmas is a busy time since many businesses want their windows painted for the holidays. "If I don't think I can handle it (the job) I don't do it, but if I feel confident enough I'll try it."

Eads added that most of her time is spent painting windshields and she considers that her specialty. "Up until the last month it's (windshield signs) been about 95 percent of my work. The amount of signs I paint vary from week to week. One day I might paint twice as many as the next. It depends on the detail work required per sign."

Although she currrently finds most of her jobs in Odessa she has worked for just about every car dealer in Midland and currently paints for Jack Sherman Chevrolet, Friendly Pontiac and Rogers Ford. Eads also finds work in Andrews.

She makes her rounds between dealerships quite often, "I only travel to Andrews about once every three to four weeks."

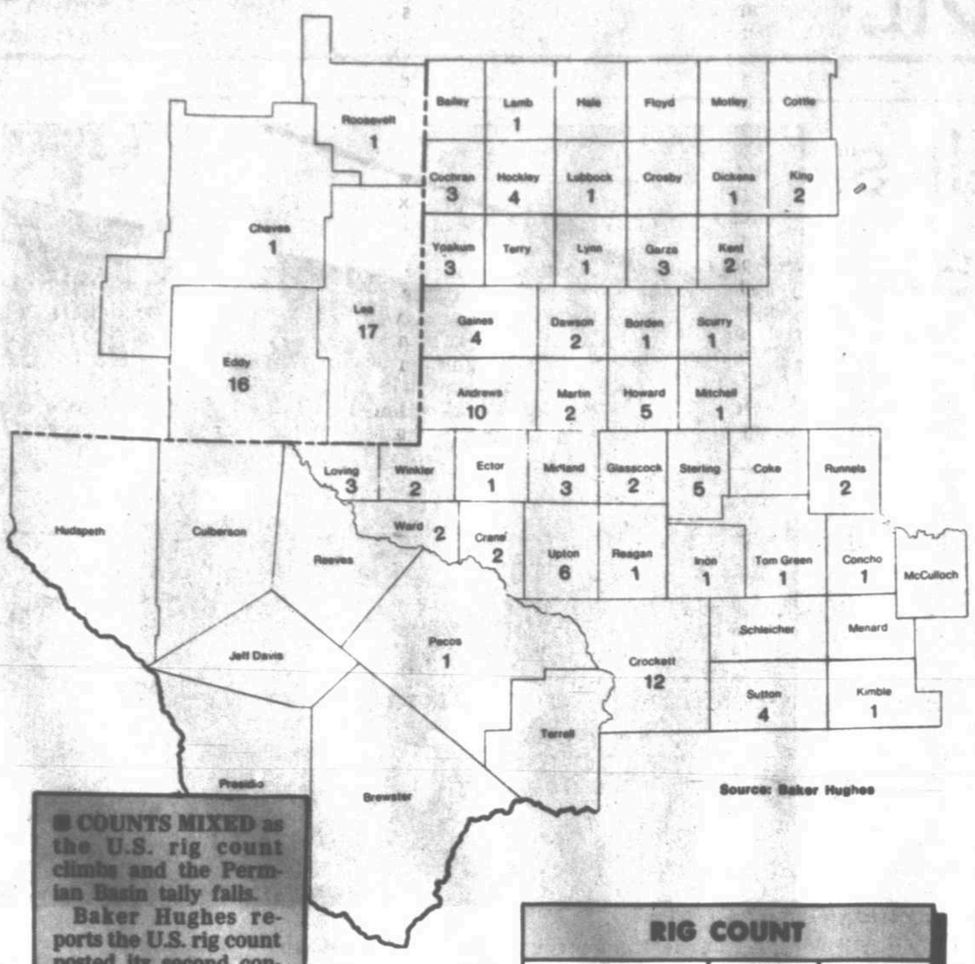

Since the word has spread Eads says she can barely keep up with the demand.

Sonat, Arcade form drilling venture

OSLO and HOUSTON (SWN) — Sonat Inc. and Arcade Shipping A/S have announced that a letter of intent had been entered into between Sonat Inc.'s subsidiary, Sonat Offshore Drilling Inc., and Arcade Shipping A/S to form a new Norwegian company to be known as Arcade Drilling A/S.

The new venture will own two of the most advanced semisubmersible drilling units in the world. Under the terms of the agreement Sonat Offshore will contribute the world's largest drilling rig, the HENRY GOODRICH, in exchange for $70,000,000 in cash and a significant equity interest in the new company.

Arcade Shipping will contribute to the new company a new Aker H-4.2 semisubmersible drilling rig it is acquiring from Hyundai Heavy Industry in South Korea in exchange for shares in the new company plus the assumption of existing debt on the rig. It is expected that the shares of Arcade Drilling A/S will be listed on the Oslo Stock Exchange and perhaps another European exchange in the near future.

Sonat Offshore will continue to operate the HENRY GOODRICH as well as the new Aker H-4.2 unit under the terms of a long-term management contract with the new company. The new rig is expected to be available for work in the North Sea later in 1990. The HENRY GOODRICH is presently operating in the North Sea under contract with Texaco.

Sonat's involvement in the transaction is contingent upon satisfaction of various conditions before the end of the year, including U.S. regulatory approval and a public offering in Europe of Arcade Drilling stock.

Sonat Offshore Drilling, headquartered in Houston, operates one of the largest international fleets of marine drilling rigs. Sonat Inc., headquartered in Birmingham, Ala., is a worldwide energy company involved in natural gas transmission and marketing, oil and gas exploration and production, and oil services.

Arcade Shipping A/S, headquartered in Oslo, Norway, is a public company quoted on the Oslo Stock Exchange. Its main activity is commercial operation of dry cargo vessels and tankers. Presently, the controlled fleet consists of about 20 vessels or about 1 million ton deadweight carrying capacity.

the demand. "I wish I had more time to go out and drum up business. Right now I'm just trying to catch up."

"I don't advertise, but I have business cards. Eads notes that because she doesn't advertise it might take several months or even years before an interested client will call and request her painting expertise. "I've got all I can do right now and I haven't really gotten into expansion yet.

"It used to be that I'd go drum up business, but now I'm just trying to keep up with the people who call me, I don't have time to go drop in on people."

Many of her jobs are landed by people driving by or through other satisfied customers. "I've had people say, I saw you working and I called and got your name from them or just driving by and stopped to ask if I paint signs. I charge $3.00 per window on cars, but store windows vary depending on how long it takes to do."

Eads works 35-40 hours per week and will work on the weekends if the need arises. "When I started I couldn't wait to go to work, but somedays I get tired and would love a day off. If it rains I'm pretty much out of business, but I don't mind a rainy day occasionally."

On those rainy days it gives her a chance to spend with her husband, Larry and their two children, Kristen and Jordan. If she isn't taking time off she might paint inside the showroom. "The paint doesn't dry as fast in the showroom. I painted a long banner on a rainy day and stored it in my hallway at home, since I don't have a shop. It took 4 days to dry, the kids where just getting used to it."

She is now training her niece to help her. "Maybe she'll go on to do it. Even if she doesn't it will give her something to fall back on. I trained my sister and she has her own business in Lubbock and I feel pretty good about that."

Although Eads makes it look easy, she says it's not. "You have to have talent and you have to love it."

BANKER: A visit with Texas Commerce

(From 1G)

ON BANKING — "Banking in Texas is getting better. Banking is moving away from being just a lender of money to being an arranger of loans. In 1980, 10 percent of our business was in fees, this year it is 30 percent. By then end of the decade, we expect it will be 50 percent. This is from fees we charge for arranging loans nationally or internationally.

"Deregulation has bought a world of change to the industry, but it has not been without pitfalls. It has offered more options for the customer. We don't see banks selling securities as a conflict of interest. We simply see it as a means of offering more options to the customer.

ON BRANCH BANKING — "We have elected not to go to a branch system, but to give every community a bank with its own board to make it more accountable to the community.

"There has been much controversy about branch banks not reporting loans and deposits, but we think they should report. We don't see any reason not to, and we believe the public has a right to know."

ON UNITED BANK — "United Bank is an extremely well run bank. We saw it as an opportunity to increase the size of our bank. We will still be in third place, but closer to second and we will be aiming at being number one in Midland. We have been working on the merger for six months. We see a lot of opportunity in this region. Our investment in United Bank signifies our confidence in Midland and the energy business."

ON ENERGY LENDING — "Currently 53 percent of our loans are energy loans, and over 50 percent of our board is composed of oil executives. We never really got hurt by bad energy loans. In 1982, we had the highest percent of energy loans of any bank in the state, but bad energy loans have accounted for less than than one percent of our loans for the past seven years. Our attitude toward energy lending has never changed: We look for the people who can find oil and gas, and properties that will pay out in their half life."

ON CHEMCIAL BANK — "The marriage with New York's Chemical Bank has given us tremendous resources to work with. It has given us worldwide connections that have proven very useful in making and arranging loans."

CARTOON: Licensing in billions

(From 1G)

Reddig has observed some mixed emotions from his customers about the bug-eyed characters with severe overbites.

Sales of Simpsons merchandise are strong at Spencer's Gifts, also in Midland Park Mall, according to store manager San Juana Carrillo. Like Reddig, she's noticed that more adults are buying — particularly the larger items.

There will soon be an addition to the line of Simpsons merchandise. Mattel Inc. announced earlier this month that it will begin selling a line of Simpsons toys this fall, part of an exclusive agreement reached with 20th Century Fox Licensing and Merchandising.

Mattel will manufacture and market Simpson "action figures" — 2-1/2 to 4-1/2 inch dolls plus vehicles, play sets and other child-size accessories.

TV's new first family is already proving to be a big money maker for Fox. At present, there are 90 licensees, producing Simpsons' hats, posters, T-shirts, key rings, bed linens and a talking doll, among other items.

Carrillo adds that the family is getting competition from merchandise featuring another Fox TV family, the Bundys from the show "Married With Children." Still, the Bundys are no match for the Turtles or the Simpsons, currently the two hottest licensees.

Merchandisers are also eyeing the reception Americans will give yet another cartoon character — Dick Tracy. Already Dick Tracy merchandise such as T-shirts, key chains, watches and jewelry have hit the stores in advance of next month's release of the motion picture, directed by and starring Warren Beatty and Madonna.

While the Turtles and the Simpsons may prove to be a flash-in-the-pan, merchandise bearing the likeness of favorite characters isn't. Favorites such as Mickey and Minnie Mouse, Donald Duck, Betty Boop, Sesame Street characters and the Peanuts Gang have been appearing on various products for decades.

Inventors show off creativity

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Some of the patents granted this week:

Eager to show off their latest bursts of creativity, inventors flocked last week to the Patent and Trademark Office's annual Inventors Expo in Crystal City, Va.

About 50 tinkerers were on hand, offering strong evidence that the independent inventor is far from extinct.

Among those participating were: an art dealer who patented a sailboat that turns in a banana-like arc; an insurance broker who invented a geometric toy called Polygonzo; an artist in Oakland, Calif., who invented "neon bubbles," and a Las Vegas, Nev., chemist selling a mail-order lotion that promises "Instant Relief (head to toe) From Daily Stress, Aches and Pains."

The smallest and prettiest inventions were several dozen miniature African violets patented by Reinhold Holtkamp Sr., a flower breeder. Plant patents can be obtained for a new plant that reproduces asexually. Holtkamp's plants look like traditional violets but grow in pots an inch in diameter.

The pot is so small that it is difficult to water the plant. So Holtkamp, who is president of Holtkamp Greenhouses Inc. of Nashville, also invented a device that allows the plant to draw water through a wick, as a kerosene lamp draws fuel from its base.

Rosenberger said his boat was faster and lighter than conventional catamarans and could be collapsed into a package small enough to fit on top of a car.

He received patent 4,757,777.

To protect swimmers who become exhausted far from shore, a triathlon racer in Warren, Mich., displayed an inflatable belt that can keep a person afloat. Called Hydrobelt, it features a balloon-like tube that straps across the body and can be inflated instantly by a carbon dioxide canister.

According to the inventor, Mark Supal, the device does not interfere with normal swimming but provides double the buoyancy the average person needs to stay afloat.

He received patent 4,842,562.

SCOTT BURNS

Mutual fund cuts mean better returns

By Scott Burns

Burns

Don't look now but mutual fund companies are starting to slash operating expenses.

The probable result?

Here's the story:

After nearly a decade of fat years and rising management costs for mutual funds, the clear new direction in money management is to reduce costs.

Evidence of the trend?

Abundant.

Average mutual fund expense ratios — the total of management fees and fund operating expenses — started to rise with the 1982 bull market and peaked in 1986.

When the October '87 crash dried up mutual fund sales, fund marketers went into high gear looking for ways to capture assets, to at least HOLD them until people felt like taking risks again.

Their tool?

Aggressive discounting of management expenses for money market funds. If you were scared out of stocks and bonds, you could keep your money in cash... and pay no management expenses. In a recent week, for instance, NINE of the top 10 yielding general purpose money market funds had high yields because the management company was foregoing fees; FOUR of the top 10 yielding government money market funds were subsidized in the same way; and SEVEN of the top 10 highest yield tax free funds were cost reduced.

If expense cutting stopped there, you could call it a marketing ploy.

But it doesn't.

Vanguard, a Valley Forge, Pa.-based investment company with a family of 35 low expense ratio funds and the "low cost producer" in the industry, has enjoyed runaway success in the last few years as indexing has caught on. In the 12 months ending March 31, their average equity fund gained 74 percent in assets under management and their average bond fund grew by 51 percent in assets under management.

Indexing, called "passive investing" by some, has become increasingly popular as investors and pension fund sponsors have found that active money managers generally underperform the return of the major market indices such as the Standard and Poors 500 index or the Salomon Brothers bond index. Studies have shown that roughly 70 percent of all managed equity accounts will underperform the index.

The logical conclusion is that if you can be in the top half of the class without management, why not fire the manager, save the fees, and beat competing investors by "joining" the market?

Now Fidelity Investments has joined the indexers. The nation's largest mutual fund firm has launched its own line of low expense ratio funds. Called the "Spartan" funds, they offer, like Vanguard, reduced operating expenses. The most recent fund, announced April 25, is a no-load fund designed to duplicate the performance of the Standard and Poors' 500 index. Fidelity has guaranteed that the funds' operating expenses will not exceed 0.28 percent for a year.

This is NOT a minor change.

Like who?

Like mutual funds sponsored by the major brokerage houses. You can understand why by comparing the average expense ratios for the funds offered by the three largest brokerage firms with the same figures for the major no-load mutual fund firms.

To be sure, there are some load funds distributed by brokerage firms that have competitive expense ratios. And there are no load funds that have very high expense ratios. But the leading broker sponsored funds, created in the fat years, tend to have much higher expense ratios than the leading no-load sponsored funds.

Bottom line?

The squeeze in financial services is just beginning... and investors will soon be enjoying more of the return on their own money than ever before.

Scott Burns' column, syndicated by King Features, is a new feaure of the Reporter-Telegram business pages and appears each Thursday and Sunday.

Airline head outlines industry's problems

By John A. Bolt

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A myriad of problems from government interference to rising fuel and labor costs threaten to slow growth of the world's airline industry, the head of the largest U.S. carrier says.

"Demand for our product ... is growing strongly all over the world," said Robert L. Crandall, chairman of AMR Corp., the parent company of American Airlines. "In every country, as incomes rise and curiosities awaken, customers are clamoring for accessible, affordable transportation."

"We must keep in mind that if the many factors pushing up our costs are not restrained, they may have the effect of pushing up prices sufficiently to curb the demand on which our future depends," Crandall told stockholders Wednesday at the company's annual meeting.

Crandall listed as problems the need for new equipment and terminals; meeting new standards of safety and efficiency; rising labor and fuel costs; and increasing government interference.

"We must charge fares to give us sufficient revenue to pay for the airplanes, pay for the facilities, pay for increases in compensation that our people want, pay for the improved maintenance procedures, pay for all of the improved things that people want from the airline system," Crandall told reporters later.

"So the answer is yes, fares must go up. That does not imply that they have to skyrocket."

American is pushing an international expansion program, but Crandall said foreign governments' control of landing rights make it difficult to crack those markets.

Domestically, "we are also bedeviled by a shortage of airspace and airport capacity, a problem that has been with us for far too long," Crandall said. "While the U.S. airline industry was expanding after deregulation, our government was sitting on its hands.

"As a result, we have too few controllers, too few airports, inefficient airspace management and inadequate planning for the future," Crandall said. "System capacity shortages are inconveniencing travelers, increasing costs, creating pressure for reregulation, constraining airline growth and reducing airline competition."

As a result, he said, "It is clear that the future of the airline industry is subject to many uncertainties."

"While we are encouraged by the continuing vigor of demand, it is clear that we at AMR — and our counterparts at other airlines — will have to work hard toward finding creative solutions to our capital, cost, environmental and regulatory problems if the industry is to realize the future it can and should have," he said.

As for the future of AMR itself, Crandall declined to forecast when the company would begin to benefit from a $21 billion, five-year expansion plan or whether the company's financial performance would improve this year.

AMR reported its first loss in nine quarters during the first three months of 1990. The loss followed two quarters of lower earnings.

Hertz sues competitors over CDWs

DALLAS (AP) — The Hertz Corp. car rental company is suing 11 competitors in Dallas and Miami, alleging they're breaking state laws by overcharging for collision insurance.

The companies named in the lawsuits generally are local franchises of national or regional car rental companies.

In Texas, Hertz is suing Hayes Leasing Co., an Avis Rent-A-Car licensee; AHL Inc., doing business as DFW Dollar Rent-A-Car Inc.; and Dynasty Express Corp., a licensee of General Rent-A-Car.

Stephen Susman, a lawyer who represents Hertz in Dallas, said recently enacted laws in Texas and Dade County prohibit rental car companies from charging collision insurance premiums, known as collision damage waivers (CDW), that are higher than the actual cost of providing the insurance.

Susman said that Hertz cut its collision insurance premiums by more than half in both Texas and Dade County in response to the laws.

Many of its rivals, he said, failed to follow suit, allowing them to reap additional profits while Hertz misses out.

The laws were passed in response to complaints that unsuspecting consumers were paying high daily insurance premiums to protect themselves in case they had an accident while driving a rented vehicle. In many instances, critics charge, the collision insurance premiums are artificially high and are used by rental car companies to increase profits.

"We think they're duping the consumer, and they're also hurting us," said Jeff Frazier, another Hertz attorney. "We can't compete with a company that doesn't follow the law."

'To Catch the Wind'

"To Catch the Wind," an exhibit of kites and kiting lore, will fly at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through Sept. 24. An overview of the exhibit, above, offers a child's-eye look at kite flight, while a drawing that might appear on an oriental kite, right, offers a historic perspective.

A cache of kites, a flight of fancy

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

"When you fly a kite, what is visible — the string, the sticks, the paper, the person — is united with the invisible — the wind, the air, the spirit."
— Pat Hammond, kite collector

Kites — the oldest form of aircraft — have an ancient history dating back at least 3,000 years. Although they may have an earlier placement in time, records show the Chinese military used kites during the Han Dynasty, 200 B.C. to A.D. 200.

"Kites have been used in the past in warfare," says Cristi Branum, on staff at the Museum of the Southwest. She recounts a story about how a Chinese general evened the odds when facing a superior force.

"Their general in the dark of night had them construct these hummer kites. The reason they're called hummers is they produce a humming sound. In their construction they have something like our vocal chords. The wind coming across the top of the kite goes across this construction. It starts vibrating, and it hums."

The general had his men attach small baskets to the kites. In the baskets they placed burning candles.

"They send the kites up over the camp of the larger army in the night. With their lanterns and the noise these kites are making, the larger army believes they are about to be taken from this earth — their guardian angels have come to take them," Ms. Branum says. "They were afraid and ran. The small army was not beaten."

Kites "To Catch the Wind" hang from the ceiling and on the walls in the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum at the Museum of the Southwest through Sept. 24.

THE KITE COLLECTION belongs to Pat Hammond of San Antonio, who began collecting kites in the 1970s.

"Cristi (Branum) had made kites with her dad Buddy when she was a kid, and she's been invaluable to us in terms of being able to construct kites and in leading tours with children," Museum Educator Cynthia Corley says of Ms. Branum, Master-in-Residence at the museum.

Ms. Branum, who has been in residence at the museum since March, will complete her time this month. The Museum is currently looking for a master-in-residence for the summer.

"I would like somebody with an art degree or an archaeology degree, principally someone working on their master's so they could utililize this experience in their education pursuits," Ms. Corley says. "We're hoping to develop out of our Master-in-Residence Program an internship with Texas Tech art department. That's in the works right now, although the Master-in-Residence Program will not be limited to interns only."

Ms. Branum was contacted about the Master-in-Residence Program by Ms. Corley who found her application in the files when she became the museum's educator in December. Both are from Midland and attended public school here thus Ms. Corley was familiar with Ms. Branum's work.

"I originally was only supposed to be here a month, but it is a very productive area for any artist to be involved in, and I have certainly gotten a lot of my own work done," says Ms. Branum.

MS. BRANUM'S WORK is on display at Gallery 1114, 1114 N. Big Spring St., and in Dallas at the Edith Baker Gallery. Her educational background includes three degrees — a bachelor in art from Texas Christian University, a master's in art from the University of Dallas and a master of fine art from the University of Dallas.

"I enjoy learning art theory. I enjoy the more conceptual or minimal or formal approach to making art. For myself, I would say I'm an emotional formalist which is almost an oxymoron.

"The formal approaches to making art are — how does this space relate to that space? is it a positive or negative relationship? what sort of value do these colors have? do I need more contrast here than I have over there? — those are the formal issues.

"The emotional ones would be — why am I doing it? how passionately do I feel about this work? — any artist has these same intense feelings I think, but most formal painters don't deal with a passionate release. Just like my work falls between the cracks, I think my platform has a few cracks in it, too."

"Most of the time when people talk about a painting they think immediately of something that has a gilded frame and either a rectangular or square format. These paintings have a three dimensional quality and an irregular shape, hopefully providing some stimulus to the imagination.

"I think that today we're all so bombarded by images and icons that about the only place to seek any sort of relief from that would be in your imagination. These forms are only acting as a visual stimulus for that."

"As a painter my concerns are with form, shape and color," Ms. Branum says. "So I would have the children do a color chart that I designed. Most children don't like to overlay colors. They will just use one color, and that's it.

"I was trying to get them to experiment and realize that you don't just get orange or purple or green, but you actually make those colors. You take red and yellow crayons and make orange. They are so delighted when they discover they have done something like this."

Art is, Ms. Branum says, the world's "time keeper."

"I don't think the general public understands how much art represents the current culture. It's not just something that's decorative. It's something that bespeaks the social issues, political issues, economic issues and historic value. Most often it's only the art historians who can see this, those who make a point of picking through the images."

"For myself, I would like the opportunity to show more," Ms. Branum says. "That's what I am seeking."

WHILE SHE IS Master-in-Residence at the museum, Ms. Branum has been working on a body of work she hopes to use as a traveling exhibition.

"I'm thinking about 10 pieces 36 by 48 inch scale — that can travel," says Ms. Branum, who has been interested in drawing since she was a "very small child.

"I think it's more the activity than it is the finished product. It's the process involved and the creativity of it. It's not so much what it turns out looking like it's what goes on during the activity."

In order to be able to survive as an artist, Ms. Branum has taught classes, sold paintings and done what was necessary to survive and be able to paint. She recalls a friend who turned down a job offered by the Journal of Art. Her reason was simple. "I'm a painter. I need time to paint.

"Artists will find a way. I've met some poor ones; I've meet some rich ones. They all find a way to make their art. It's something in our nature."

'Most of the time when people talk about a painting they think immediately of something that has a gilded frame and either a rectangular or square format. These paintings have a three dimensional quality and an irregular shape, hopefully providing some stimulus to the imagination.'

'Today' now going 'Back to the Future'

'It's deja vu all over again' for guest-host Joe Garagiola, returning team member

By Jay Sharbutt
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — It startled many when NBC's troubled "Today" show hired a guy named Joe. But Joe Garagiola, the show's past and future co-host, laughed as he recalled repeating the wisdom of Yogi Berra to surprised pal.

"I said, 'Hey, Yogi's right. It's deja vu all over again,' " said the 64-year-old ex-catcher, sportscaster and "Today" colleague of Hugh Downs and Barbara Walters, and later, Frank McGee, from 1969 to 1973.

Garagiola and another new hire, former CBS morning news anchor Faith Daniels, will make their debut on "Today" on June 4 in Washington — at the same time NBC affiliates are holding their annual meeting there.

The affiliates, who have not been pleased with the state of "Today," may be cheered by the return of the popular Garagiola. He will guest-host on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

It's NBC's version of "Back to the Future" at a time when "Today" is trying to halt a deepening drop in ratings with talk of restoring the "family" atmosphere of yesteryear, a new set, and a familiar face — his.

"Everybody knows Joe and what he brings to the table," said "Today" executive producer Tom Capra. "And that's intelligence, fun, irreverence and probably laughter. And all those things are things we need."

The show's slide to second behind ABC's "Good Morning America" began in January with NBC's much-criticized switch of co-host Deborah Norville for the well-liked Jane Pauley, a 13-year "Today" veteran.

It also was in January that Garagiola and other former "Today" hosts were reunited on the show. Afterwards, Gumbel, a friend, urged him to return to the show.

"Bryant said, 'We have a lot of fun, you ought to come back at least once a month,'" he recalled. However, he said, he was enjoying semi-retirement and watching his grandchildren grow. His reply: "What are you, crazy?"

About a month later, another "Today" friend, movie critic Gene Shalit, joined him at a benefit banquet and urged him to return to "Today," perhaps once a month, Garagiola said by phone from his home in Phoenix, Ariz.

"I said, 'Well, you be my agent, okay?' "

Last month, he said, Gumbel called, said changes were afoot, some people were being added, and that "I want to put your name in the hopper."

The three-day-a-week deal was agreed on Monday, said Garagiola, who left NBC Sports in 1988 after 27 years and has been doing play-by-play coverage of California Angels' home games for cable TV's SportsChannel.

Although better known as a sportscaster, "some of my happiest days have been on 'Today,' " he said. His interviews on the show weren't just about sports, and were with a wide variety of guests.

"It's nice to know people believe that you can say something besides curveball or back-door slider," he said.

'Gods II' continues bushman's tale

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — There's a reason why it took five years for "The Gods Must Be Crazy II" to reach American theaters. That's because South African filmmaker Jamie Uys says he hasn't learned to delegate.

"First of all, I spent a year of writing the story and the script, and I do research at the same time," he said. "Then I go out to the desert and look for locations; topography always plays a part in the films.

"Then once I've written it, I spend a lot of time designing the airplane, constructing the other props, finding the animals I need, casting, etc. Next thing you know, another six months have gone. I spent two years shooting it. I use a very small crew, only seven people. Next thing you know, four years are over."

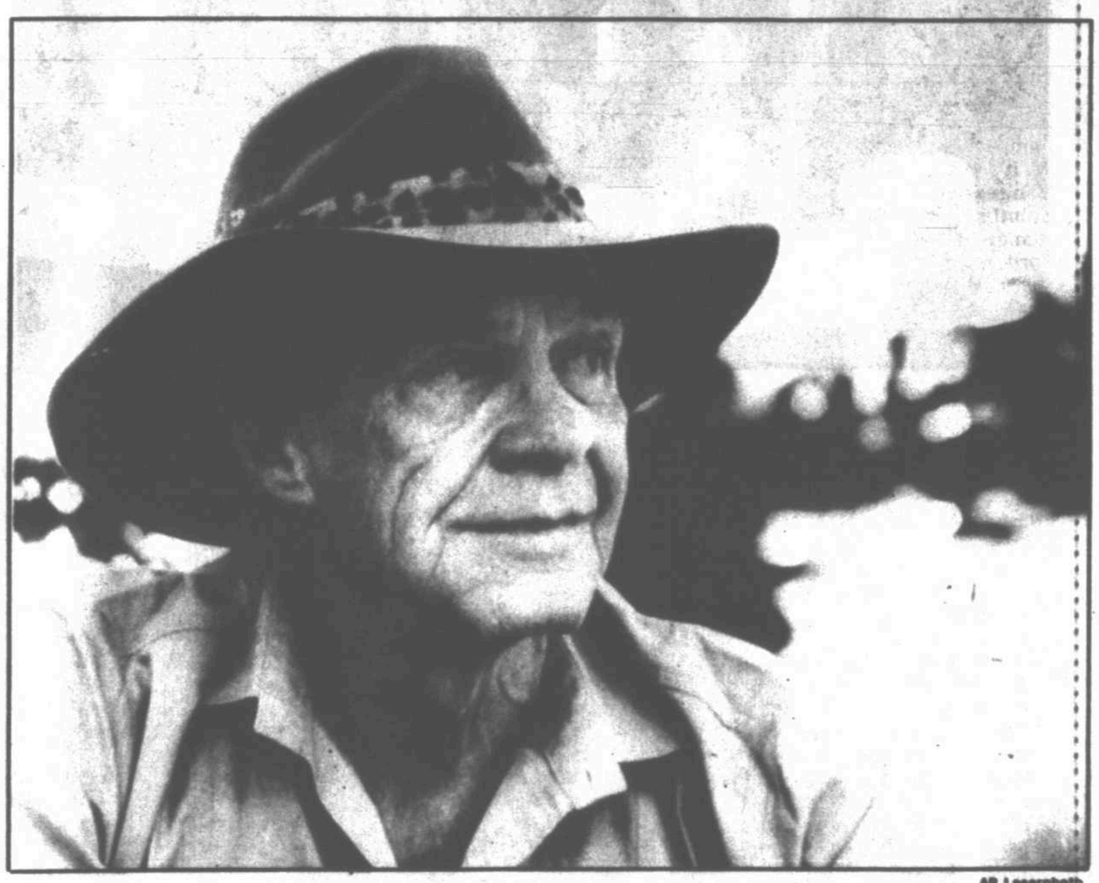

The sequel's arrival here was delayed a year because of the collapse of Weintraub Entertainment Group, which had bought releasing rights. Columbia Pictures opened the film in mid-April.

"The Gods Must Be Crazy" proved a phenomenon during its world release, attracting fame to Uys (pronounced Ace) and his star, N!xau (don't even try to pronounce it). N!xau is the bushman of the Kalihari desert whose discovery of a Coca-Cola bottle dropped from an airplane prompted the film's events. He returns in the new film, ingenuous as ever, speaking the click sounds of his tribe's language.

Some critics have complained that N!xau's stardom introduced him to a civilized world with which he might not be able to cope.

"He never showed any culture shock. (The Bushmen) are a very integrated people, you know; there is a wholeness about them that you can't break up," Uys said.

"We took him to Tokyo where there are 15 million people in one city. By the time we arrived, he was a national hero. Thousands of people were worshiping him. He enjoys it, and he's friendly back, but it never went to his head or made him conceited.

AP Laserphoto

Filmmaker Jamie Uys spent five years on a sequel to "The Gods Must Be Crazy."

"He went right back to his normal life. Lately, he's been moving to the outer edges of his hunting grounds, because his children are going to school. He's assuming some of the trappings of what we call civilization. At one time he started wearing shoes, but he soon gave that up."

N!xau needed no persuasion to join the sequel. "He is a born actor," commented the director. So are the two youngsters who play his children. "All Bushmen are natural actors. I suppose it's because they don't have television, and they spend their evenings telling stories and acting them out. And they don't have any hangups or inhibitions at all."

Jacobus Johannes Uys was born in Boksburg, South Africa, and taught school until he turned to making films in 1950. At first he did everything himself, shooting with a second-hand 16mm camera and his wife, Hettie, as co-star. The early films were shown to Afrikaners, but Uys began attracting attention at film festivals abroad with films such as "The Great Adjustment" and "Lost in the Desert."

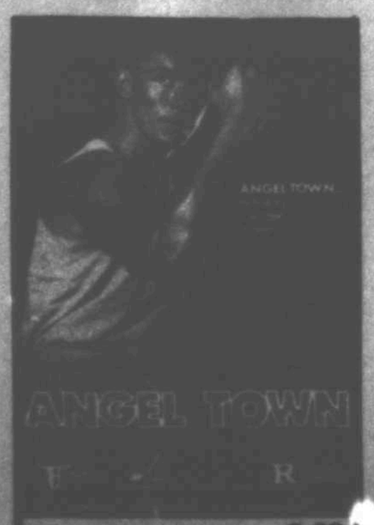

"The Gods Must Be Crazy" grew out of Uys' 25 years of filmmaking in the Kalihari.

"About 20 years ago, I first met the Bushmen," related the director, leather-faced from long days under the desert sun. "I fell in love with them. What struck me about them was that they have no sense of property, no sense of ownership."

Records fast becoming antiques

By David Bauder
Associated Press Writer

ALBANY, N.Y. — Anyone who's tried to forage for vinyl in a music store knows the frustrating truth. Records are dying.

But the speed with which they are disappearing has led some music fans — not just vinyl romantics — to wonder whether it's a natural death or if records are being killed off prematurely.

The bad news has been piling up this year:

■ Warner-Elektra-Atlantic announces it will cut out more than 40 percent of its vinyl catalog. That means 1,205 album titles owned by the conglomerate will no longer be available on records.

■ The Tower Records chain says it won't sell 7-inch singles anymore — that's after several major labels, including CBS and A&M, say they won't accept returns on unsold records.

■ Two major labels, PolyGram and Chrysalis, announce that, with a few rare exceptions, all their new releases will be only on cassette tape and compact disc.

"It's really kicked in with a vengeance for the last six months," said Robert Cohen, manager of the Finyl Vinyl record store in New York City. "Things that people took for granted — things that they used to see in the record bins for the last 20 years — are now gone."

AP Laserphoto

Music Shack owner Rocky Roy of Albany, N.Y., holds a release by Prisonshake. He's predicting vinyl's death.

THE DAY WILL come, sooner than most people expect, when it will be rare to find a new album released on vinyl, predicted Michael Stotter, Chrysalis' vice president for marketing.

"By Christmas 1990, when the next burst of CD hardware buying takes place, vinyl will be virtually nonexistent," he said.

The facts show record buyers are part of a minority group growing smaller every day. Manufacturers shipped out 34 million records in 1989, according to the Recording Industry Association of America. That's less than half what they shipped the year before, and a fraction of the 341 million during the pre-CD era year of 1978.

By contrast, manufacturers shipped out 207 million CDs and 446 million cassettes during 1989.

The reasons are simple. "Boom boxes" and small, portable cassette players are the favorites of kids these days, and wealthier music lovers have been seduced by the sound of CDs.

"We've seen this happen in the industry before," said Trish Heimers, RIAA spokeswoman. "From the 78s to the compact disc, the industry has always been changing. As the technology changed, people moved on."

THE MUSIC BUSINESS has powerful reasons for helping people move on as fast as possible. It doesn't pay to keep pressing plants humming when they're turning out a trickle of records.

Merchants, in turn, would like to ditch records so they'll have more room to store cassettes and the more expensive compact discs. Only 2 percent of sales in the 82-store Record World chain are in records, so vinyl is being phased out, said Mitch Imber, purchasing director.

"Something had to give," he said.

That's all ammunition for conspiracy theorists who think records are being killed off too fast.

"The industry itself has tried to make records obsolete, instead of the marketplace making them obsolete," said Johnny Konrad, who owns Johnny's record store in Darien, Conn. "It's the tail wagging the dog. The industry wants to make it harder to get records, to establish the CDs."

John Riopelle, a student at the Junior College of Albany, said he frequently feels like an antiques collector when searching for records. Riopelle can't afford a CD player, and said he prefers the look of an album, with its cover art and liner notes, to a cassette.

IT'S DISCONCERTING, he said, when he can find his favorite alternative rock albums only in the import bin — priced higher than CDs. "I would like to be able to continue to buy them and not have the latest technology shoved down my throat."

Merchants still interested in stocking records say return policies and reordering difficulties are putting pressure on them to relent.

Many record companies charge a penalty for return of an unsold record. For instance, Konrad said, he'll get only $4.50 to return a record for which he paid $6, even if it's defective. But there's no penalty for cassette and CD returns.

The decisions of so many record companies not to accept returns on 7-inch singles is what drove Tower Records out of the business of 45s. Store managers had to worry about ordering too few records and selling out, or ordering too many and being left with worthless extras.

Konrad said he's continually frustrated in ordering new copies of records. He's ordered copies of Keith Richards' "Talk Is Cheap" album every week since September and, in late March, still hadn't gotten any. He's had only one shipment of the B-52s "Cosmic Thing" album on vinyl — and it's a Top 10 hit.

Rocky Roy, owner of the Music Shack in Albany, tries to keep new records in stock because many of his music-hungry customers aren't willing to risk $15 for a CD of an artist they barely know.

A RECENT experience by Chrysalis shows the volatility of this changeover. The second album by Irish singer Sinead O'Connor, released in late March, was initially one of the albums the record company planned to release only on CD and cassette.

O'Connor, coming from a country where vinyl still reigns, cried foul. Chrysalis relented and printed records. And, Stotter said, the company received almost 40,000 orders for LPs before the album was even released — far more than it expected.

Stotter admitted he underestimated the appeal of vinyl for O'Connor's new album which has topped the charts since its release. But it doesn't change his opinion that the days of vinyl are numbered, and he says the industry is innocent of forcing the trend.

"I don't think the record companies are trying to kill it off at all," he said. "It's the people who frequent records stores who are showing less and less interest in records."

'Cabaret' struts its stuff at Midland's Yucca Theatre

"It's been wonderful to know this is based on a man's true experiences, this is a real life story," says Bobby Marshall, whose plays Clifford Bradshaw, the male lead. "There's a lot of material to draw from for the character."

Christopher Isherwood's book 'Berlin Stories" inspired John van Druten's 1952 play "I Am a Camera." Joe Masteroff based "Cabaret" on both works. Songs, including "Two Ladies," "Don't Tell Mama," "Tomorrow Belongs to Me" and the title song "Cabaret," are by John Kander and Fred Ebb.

Singer Pam Crawford makes her Midland Community Theatre leading role debut playing the flamboyant Sally Bowles. The character was based on the cabaret performer Jean Ross, whose string of admirers was endless and multinational.

"She and Isherwood became close friends in Berlin, despite the fact that she was quite cruel in her criticism of his writing," says a release from MCT. "Like the character in 'Cabaret,' Ross sometimes wore bright green fingernail polish and drove men crazy with her dancing."

McMahon says he'll follow Carson

NEW YORK (AP) — Johnny Carson still hasn't signed for his 29th season as the star of NBC's "Tonight Show." But sidekick Ed McMahon says it's likely Carson will stay on for two more seasons.

The big-voiced announcer with the booming laugh made his prediction during an interviewed tape this week for NBC's "Later With Bob Costas." The interview is scheduled for broadcast May 16.

McMahon said he'll leave "Tonight" when Carson does, and "the night he says goodbye, I say goodbye. That's gonna be a sad night."

Asked if he thought he personally will make it 30 years on the show, McMahon replied, "I think so. Yeah, I think so."

NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff has said he expects that Carson will return next fall. But McMahon noted that Carson is ambivalent each year about continuing on "Tonight," which has consistently beaten its late-night rivals in ratings.

CBS No. 1 for first time in two years

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Shattered Dreams" helped end a nightmare of last-place finishes for CBS by pushing the underdog network into the No. 1 spot for the first time in two years, according to figures released Tuesday.

The highly rated movie starring Lindsay Wagner as the battered wife of a Washington, D.C., official boosted the network into the top-rated slot as May sweeps season winds down, according to A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings.

"Shattered Dreams," the CBS Sunday Night Movie, beat out ABC's showing of "Platoon" and NBC's "People Like Us."

CBS, which has floundered in last place for most of the year, has not finished first since June 19, 1988.

NBC, usually No. 1, dropped to the No. 2 spot last week with a ratings average of 11.5, compared to CBS' 11.7. Each ratings point represents 921,000 households. ABC came in last with 11.

Although NBC fell to second place in the overall network race, half of the top 10 programs in last week's Nielsen race were repeats of that network's hit shows. "Cheers" finished fourth, followed by a tie between "The Cosby Show" and "Empty Nest" for fifth place. "A Different World" was eighth and "The Golden Girls" landed in 10th place.

Back-to-back episodes of ABC's "America's Funniest Home Videos" finished first and third. "Roseanne" on ABC was the No. 2 show, "Shattered Dreams" ranked seventh and "The Wonder Years" on ABC was ninth.

Fox Broadcasting Co. continued to climb in the ratings with its Sunday night lineup. The bickering cartoon family "The Simpsons" rose to No. 12 while the grousing parents of bratty kids on "Married...With Children" finished at No. 13.

Here are the top 10 shows, their network and rating: "America's Funniest Home Videos," ABC, 20.6; "Roseanne," ABC, 18.9; "America's Funniest Home Videos II," ABC, 18.3; "Cheers," NBC, 17.6; "The Cosby Show" and "Empty Nest," both NBC, tied, 16.9; "The CBS Sunday Night Movie 'Shattered Dreams,'" CBS, 16.8; "A Different World," NBC, 16.3; "The Wonder Years," ABC, 16.2 and The Golden Girls," NBC, 16.

Author Patricia Volk knows there's a little truth in fiction

By Hillel Italie

NEW YORK (AP) — Patricia Volk writes fiction and nonfiction — often at the same time.

She calls her short stories "riffs," narratives proudly made up as she goes along. But even Volk knows you can't avoid injecting a little truth in fiction. That's why she tears out pages from the newspapers and circles articles of interest, just in case.

One day, for instance, she read about "syzygy," which means the Earth, sun and moon are in rare alignment. Months later "Syzygy" became the title of a story included in her collection, "All It Takes" ($17.95, Atheneum).

"I was writing this story and I had a character press up against her ex-lover for the last time and I thought, 'Oh my God, this is like syzygy. Every part connects,'" explained Volk.

"And I thought, where is that article? I wondered whether people could line up like planets and I started rewriting it from that. Most of my characters are struggling for some kind of alignment, but they can't find a syzygy. It's very rare that you can."

She can turn anything into a story. That's how the Manhattan resident became a writer. Ten years ago, there was an incident at the playground with one of her two children, and she couldn't stop describing it to friends. Before long, the story was so polished Volk decided to put it into writing.

"I tell people all the time that the only difference between those who sell and those who don't sell are those who don't send it out," she said. "Some of the best writers don't send their work out. They're

Volk can't resist applying a little "creativity" to real life. The stain from a spilled cup of coffee gets a little bigger, that delay on the subway becomes a little longer, encounters with strangers keep getting more interesting.

"Your memory plays tricks on you," Volk said. "Any incident is like 'Rashomon.' Play that coffee spill back and it's entirely different. I think I bring a lot of fiction writing to the essay in terms of taking leaps and nuance. I think of something that might distort it, but it gives it a personal feel."

Volk's characters are often in danger of losing their lives in thought, trying to impose order on events as logical as the daily horoscope. In "Reckless Dreamer," a woman reflects on the personality of her former lover:

"He was an editor and lived the most censurious life she knew. He criticized things other people never thought about, labels on cans, the wording on menus, how people sat. He even criticized her syntax and her dreams. If she'd stayed with him, he would have criticized her into the ground."

In "Which Is Better?," Del analyzes everything from sex to lemonade. "Thinks Too Much But Can't for the Life of Her Stop" is included in a list of things she doesn't like about herself.

In the title story of "All It Takes," Lucy is so unhappy that she writes letters to the artist Georgia O'Keeffe, seeking advice from an "expert" on the meaning of life.

Volk, who grew up in Manhattan and Long Island, had plenty time to think as a child. When her older sister was born, her grandfather quit his job to spend time with the baby. Fortunately, Volk says, her birth was less eventful.

"Second-born children are different. Less is expected of them and less time is devoted to them. It's a very nurturing thing for a writer because there's less time physically for you. You don't have that intensity beamed on you."

She worked full time, with writing squeezed in during lunch hours. But Volk made the best of it, managing to compose 11 drafts of "White Light" with the help of daily trips to a nearby coffee shop.

"I'd get the coffee, I'd get the egg salad and the cheese and I'd go to the library, and it was so wonderful," she recalled. "The whole process was like Anne Tyler sharpening her pencils before she crosses the threshhold into the room where she writes."

Having quit her job and with the kids in school, Volk can write all the time now. The routine is simple: Just grab a cup of coffee, sit down, and get to work.

Benton works shown in San Antonio

When looking at a bridge hand, you sometimes can't see the forest for the trees. The winning line here is by no means difficult to find, yet a distressing number of good players overlooked it completely.

The auction was simple enough. South's jump to four spades said little about the hand, other than that it contained a self-sufficient spade suit and enough playing strength to offer hope for game opposite the right minimum response.

Most declarers elected to win the club lead in dummy, discarding a diamond and leading a heart to the ten. When that finesse lost, they eventually tried to drop the queen of trumps, then got back to dummy with a diamond to take a second heart finesse. Same result. Down one, since declarer still had to concede a diamond.

By now, we expect that most of our readers have found the way home. Actually, all you need is a 3-2 trump split and no evil breaks in the other suits; and if trumps are 4-1, there are still chances.

Declarer should discard a heart on the ace of clubs, then lead a low diamond toward the queen! If East has the king, declarer cannot lose more than one spade, one heart and one diamond. If the queen of diamonds loses to West's king, that defender must either allow declarer to ruff his remaining diamond on the board or else lead a trump away from his queen-third, sacrificing the defenders' trump trick.

What if trumps break 4-1 and West can thwart the diamond ruff by returning a trump? Declarer will learn the distribution soon enough and still has the ace of diamonds in dummy as an entry for the heart finesse.

Studio where Chuck Berry, Bo Diddley recorded now landmark

CHICAGO (AP) — Chess Studios, where so much musical history was made that the Rolling Stones once used its address as a song title, was voted a landmark Wednesday by the City Council.

The council voted unanimously to honor the two-story, brick and terra cotta building at 2120 S. Michigan Ave. where Chuck Berry, Muddy Waters, Bo Diddley and others made music together over the years.

A celebration commemorating the 79-year-old building was scheduled for June 7, timed in conjunction with the city's annual blues festival.

"I think it's one of the greatest honors bestowed upon us," Phil Chess said Wednesday in a telephone interview from his Tucson, Ariz. home. "I just wish my brother was around to accept the honor, really, but that's life."

Chess Records was born in 1950, evolving from another label owned by brothers Leonard and Phil Chess. In 1957, the Polish immigrants moved their label and studios to Michigan Avenue, across the street from the old Lexington Hotel, gangster Al Capone's one-time headquarters.

The studio was home to recording sessions that gave American music a whole new sound in the 1950s.

Berry recorded "Johnny B. Goode." Howlin' Wolf cut "Spoonful." Diddley made "You Can't Judge a Book by Looking at the Cover." And Waters recorded "I'm Your Hoochie Coochie Man."

Chess said radio station program directors were slow to broadcast the blues artists, but others were listening, mostly young people.

The urban blues and rock 'n' roll from Chess caught on, making its way across the Atlantic and returning transformed by groups forming the British Invasion of the early 1960s.

"The English groups are the ones that had the influence of making the pop stations play the blues, mainly by white artists, but later they started playing black artists too," Chess said.

Chess flourished until 1969, when the family sold the operation. Leonard Chess died of a heart attack that fall. The Chess catalog is now owned by MCA Records.

The building is owned by former Chess session-guitarist Gerald Sims. A crooked line of stick-on numbers gives the address. There are two remaining commercial tenants and an "Office Space for Lease" sign is taped to the front window.

But Sims has big plans for 2120.

He wants to build a museum on the first floor. The studios are still operable and were used by rock star John Mellencamp last fall to record a 90-minute performance aimed at promoting the building for landmark status.

The Dallas Zoo: Conservation, Research, Education, Recreation

In April, 1990, the Dallas Zoo celebrated the opening of a long-awaited 25-acre expansion, the Wilds of Africa. This is the world's first zoo exhibit to focus on all the major habitats of one continent—the continent of Africa. Desert, bush, river, woodland, forest, and mountain environments are clearly defined within the exhibit through the use of landscaping, rock work, water systems and streams, as well as sophisticated behind-the-scenes special effects such as water misters hidden in trees to add humidity for a mountain rainforest atmosphere. Animals native to each habitat roam about freely, unhindered by bars or cages. A one-mile monorail ride transports visitors through the environments, and the habitats are explained through a live narration that creates the feeling of actually being on a train ride through Africa.

Visitors view the animals at even closer range by trekking the 1,500 foot Nature Trail, which winds through a wooded area of the exhibit offering close-up views of African birds, mammals and reptiles.

While one purpose of this exhibit is to offer an exciting recreational facility to the public, the creative forces behind the exhibit's design, notably Zoo Director Warren Iliff, had a much more serious purpose in mind.

"The on-going agenda for the Zoo—for any zoo today—is the fostering of appreciation and respect for, and the conservation of, animals," says Iliff.

The design of the Wilds of Africa exhibit offers Zoo curators and staff unprecedented opportunities to study exotic animals and promote the propagation of species. One example is the Jake L. Hamon Gorilla Conservation Research Center, a two-acre reserve within the Wilds that allows the Zoo's lowland gorillas to roam freely in an environment that closely resembles their native African habitat. Within the Conservation Center stands a small building containing the most modern electronic equipment available—video screens, parabolic sound reflectors, computers—that will allow researchers to document data on gorilla behavior in a thorough, non-intrusive way never before possible, not even in the wild.

Called the Field Research Station, it will allow visitors to observe the research first-hand, ask questions, and, Zoo staff hope, understand gorillas in the context of their environment.

Educating the public about the importance of preserving wild animals and places is a fundamental goal of the Dallas Zoo. In conjunction with the opening of the Wilds, the Zoo has created some innovative educational programs including "ImagineAfrica." The "ImagineAfrica" program, made possible by funding from NCNB Texas through the largest corporate grant ever made to the Zoo, is targeted for 6th graders in the DISD and simulates for them the experience of going on safari to Africa, from filling out a passport to walking the Nature Trail conducting observational research. For the public, interpreters will be placed along the Nature Trail to explain various "biofacts" found along the Trail. These biofacts can be a nest of ostrich eggs or an entire environment such as the kopje, a rock formation that is home to meerkats, rock hyrax, and klipspringers. The interpreters will not only help people to fully participate in their Zoo visit by learning to closely observe nature, but will present a subtle message about appreciating the complexity and fragility of wildlife.

The live monorail narration reinforces the conservation message. It stresses the role of zoos today in providing conditions that encourage animals to reproduce, in the hopes of building stable populations of species and, where possible, returning them to a protected wild environment in their native country.

director Iliff feels that "we must not lose sight of our essential mission—to safeguard wildlife, to provide optimum conditions for propagation of the species in our care, and to promote—through public education—the conservation of habitats and wildlife."

With the opening of the Wilds of Africa, the Dallas Zoo will mamke significant progress in species propgagation, as well as public education. As Phases II and III of the Wilds are completed, bringing the Zoo's total area to 100 acres, the opportunities for research and animal breeding will increase ten-fold. These Phases, which include savanna, waterhole, swamp, and lake exhibits and a chimpanzee reserve, are scheduled for completion by 1999, and will firmly establish the Dallas Zoo in the arena of international zoo excellence.

'Pretty Woman' prevails

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "Pretty Woman" was No. 1 for the third consecutive weekend in the national box-office tally, entering the $100 million club along with Oscar-winning "Driving Miss Daisy."

"Pretty Woman" earned almost $7.6 million last weekend, followed by "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" with $3.7 million and "Tales from the Darkside" in third place with $2.9 million.

"The Hunt for Red October" was in fourth place with $2.2 million; "Spaced Invaders" was fifth with almost $2.0 million, trailed by "The Guardian" with $1.8 million.

"Q & A" took seventh with $1.5 million, followed by "Wild Orchid" at $1.2 million and "Driving Miss Daisy" with just over $1 million. In tenth place was "Short Time" with $1 million.

Disney's Touchstone Pictures said "Pretty Woman" had reached the $100 million level as quickly as "Three Men and a Baby," in just 52 days of domestic release.

It took longer for "Driving Miss Daisy" to make the grade, 22 weeks into release. The movie got a boost when it won best picture and best actress Oscars at the Academy Awards in March.

Here are the top movie ticket sales for Friday through Sunday as tallied by Exhibitor Relations, with distributor, weekend gross, number of theater screens, average per screen, total gross and number of weeks in release.

1. "Pretty Woman," Disney, $7.6 million, 1,794 screens, $4,233 per screen, $101 million, eight weeks.
2. "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles," New Line, $3.7 million, 2,267 screens, $2,047 per screen, $110 million, seven weeks.
3. "Tales From the Dark Side," Paramount, $2.9 million, 1,535 screens, $1,920 per screen, $9.3 million, two weeks.
4. "The Hunt for Red October," Paramount, $2.2 million, 1,323 screens, $1,670 per screen, $105 million, 11 weeks.
5. "Spaced Invaders," Disney, $2.0 million, 1,776 screens, $1,119 per screen, $11.0 million, three weeks.
6. "The Guardian," Universal, $1.8 million, 1,544 screens, $1,185 per screen, $12.7 million, three weeks.
7. "Q & A," Tri Star, $1.5 million, 917 screens, $1,650 per screen, $7.9 million, three weeks.
8. "Wild Orchid," Epic, $1.2 million, 760 screens, $1,582 per screen, $7.2 million, three weeks.
9. "Driving Miss Daisy," Warner Bros., $1.04 million, 914 screens, $1,143 per screen, $100 million, 22 weeks.
10. "Short Time," 20th Century Fox, $1.0 million, 574 screens, $1,757 per screen, $2.6 million, two weeks.

By John Horn
AP Entertainment Writer

HOLLYWOOD — Weekly box-office figures supplied by movie studios are sometimes as accurate as an old-fashioned Chicago vote count, say insiders, including some who admit to fudging the numbers to get ahead.

Making movies is more competitive than ever these days, and the charts that rank them as hot or flops represent free and, some think, persuasive advertising.

So why not crunch the numbers extra hard?

"It's gotten really out of hand," said an executive at one major studio who spoke on condition of anonymity. "I used to think that the independents were the only people who (cheated). But that's not true anymore."

Big studioslike Paramount and Disney and independents such as Miramax and New Line base their weekend grosses on surveys of about 75 percent of North America's movie houses. The polling, for the most part, is conducted by telephone by Entertainment Data Inc.

But drive-ins, Spanish-language theaters and some small theaters and movie houses in Hawaii are not surveyed — and that's the key.

Let's say "Ghostbusters 27: The Revenge of Casper" collected $4.5 million at the screens surveyed by EDI. "Honey, I Enlarged the Kids" made $4.3 million, EDI says.

Estimating ticket sales from the 25 percent of theaters not surveyed by EDI, "Ghostbusters" could report a correct final take of $5 million. The makers of "Honey," not wanting to land in second place, could rewrite the figures for the 25 percent for their movie to show it received $5.1 million.

And just like that, "Honey" ads appearing in newspapers the next day read: "The Nation's No. 1 Movie!"

"There is a lot of temptation to want to be in the top five," said Art Murphy, who analyzes box-office figures for the trade publication Variety.

He believes that tinkering has become commonplace but that any large-scale manipulation would be easily detected.

Said an executive from one top studio: "It's just a little game. ... You want to have a film in Top 10, but it's better to have it in the Top 5. ... It's an independent promotional vehicle."

Every Monday, the studios figure up their admission estimates. The numbers are compiled by EDI and Exhibitor Relations Co., which relay them to a variety of news organizations, including The Associated Press.

"It's not our job to police the studio's (final) numbers," said Phil Garfinkle, EDI senior vice president.

At the very least, a high box-office placement keeps a title in the public's eye. Oscar voters might forget a film that's no longer on the leader board. Ancillary markets can be affected, too. A producer pushing a film for home video can say to prospective video distributors: "But 'When Perry Met Polly ...' did $1 million its first weekend!"

"The box office grosses are very important today as a promotional tool because there is a tremendous amount of public interest in what is hot," said Martin Grove, business columnist for the Hollywood Reporter.

Creative accounting is a staple of Hollywood bookkeeping, but the box-office figures had always been somewhat sacred, like the Nielsen TV ratings or publishing's best-seller lists.

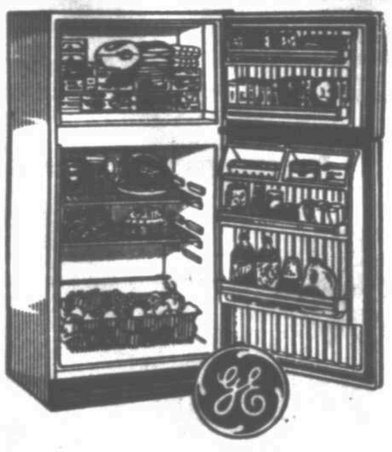

When Taurus reported not long ago that the low-budget exploitation film "Angel Town" made $300,000 in its opening weekend, the figure looked strange: The movie was making more per-screen ($5,455) than "Driving Miss Daisy" or the Steven Seagal hit "Hard to Kill."

How did Taurus explain the film's gross? "I added the numbers up seven times and I always got a different figure, so I just said $300,000," said a Taurus executive who spoke on condition of anonymity.
