Voter turnout light in local elections

James Fruge squeaks past VanZandt

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

A newcomer to elected office barely squeaked past a three-term incumbent to claim a seat on the Pampa Independent School board of trustees.

James Frugé, a mid-level manager at Hoechst Celanese, defeated County Extension Agent Joe VanZandt 364 votes to 339 votes during Saturday's election at the Pampa High School Choir Room.

Frugé claimed 51.77 percent of the vote, to VanZandt's 48.22 percent.

Poll observers pointed out that a late afternoon telephone campaign by Frugé's supporters helped him claim the Place 5 school board post.

Frugé and wife Carol said they were unaware of the telephone campaign, but grateful for the support.

"I had no idea," said Frugé, "I was out on the golf course this afternoon."

Basing his campaign on a pledge to fight tax increases and still be innovative, Frugé won the support of voters, who apparently said "no" to additional property taxes.

"The mandate is to do the best we can to improve the quality of education without increasing taxes," Frugé said. "I look forward to working with the school board and administration in achieving that goal."

"If we will work as a team and focus on the quality of education, we will find ways to do more with less."

He termed his ideas as "thinking outside the box" of traditional tax-and-spend logic.

VanZandt, in a prepared statement, said, "I appreciate the support that the community has provided me to serve on the school board for the last six years. I appreciate the broad-based community support for this year's campaign and the number of folks who worked for my reelection."

"I feel confident that the school board will continue in good hands and that the progressive educational programs will continue to provide our youth with adequate preparation for adulthood. I congratulate James for winning and wish him success in his new job."

Also winning Saturday was unopposed Place 4 candidate Phil Vanderpool, who collected 599 of the 703 votes cast.

Incumbents retain posts in city race

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Pampa City Commission incumbents in Wards 1 and 3 and the mayor's position retained their seats during uncontested voting Saturday.

However, Mayor Richard Peet, who garnered 221 votes, did face a minor challenge from former assistant city manager Frank Smith, who had 26 write-in votes, or roughly 10 percent of the turnout.

Smith said Saturday night he was surprised by the votes and first became aware he was on the ballot from the media.

"I wasn't running a campaign," said Smith, who retired shortly after current city manager Glen Hackler was hired by commissioners. Smith also interviewed for that post.

"I'd heard one or two people say something, but I thought they were joking. I think it is kind of amusing," Smith said.

Peet received 221 votes. Following Smith's 26 votes, Leon Holms landed two votes and former Mayor David McDaniel got one.

In Ward 1, Commissioner Ray Hupp landed 223 votes. Ward 3 Commissioner Robert Dixon got 226 votes.

In Ward 1, write-ins Kelly Randall and Don Reed got one vote each, while Cleo Meaker got two votes and Ken Elliott had three votes.

In Ward 3, Janie Street, Sid Robenci and Lee Ziegelgruber got one vote each.

Peet, referring to an upset write-in campaign last year for the mayor's post in Canyon, said, "I didn't assume anything. There were a number of write-in candidates."

Mayor Richard Peet and his son Tracy review results from Saturday's Pampa City Commission race.

Dixon, Hupp and Peet all expressed disappointment that voter turnout was so light.

"(Voters) need to show their support and show they are still enthused with what's going on," Peet said.

Dixon commented, "I was hoping there would be more votes, but I'm happy with the results. I think people are happy with the job we've done. None of the three candidates had an opponent, and that hasn't happened in a long time."

He credited it to an ability by the present Commission to "think as individuals, but work together."

Hupp said, "I would hope (the lack of an opponent) is a vote of confidence."

President expected to be released from hospital today

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — President Bush suffered shortness of breath while jogging at Camp David on Saturday afternoon and was evacuated to Bethesda Naval Hospital for treatment of an irregular heartbeat. A spokesman said the president was "relaxed, comfortable" and in good condition.

The 66-year-old president was diagnosed as having an atrial fibrillation, or irregular heartbeat. The condition can occur for a variety of reasons and does not necessarily represent a serious threat.

Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president was alert, stable and had no complaints. He said there was "no indication at this point that he had a heart attack." He said the president's heartbeat was still irregular, however, in initial tests after he reached the hospital.

Bush will take the medication Digoxin for several weeks, Fitzwater said. Digoxin, which is taken orally, increases the strength of the heartbeat while decreasing its rate. It carries no serious side effects.

Bush was expected to be released from the hospital early Sunday morning, said a White House official who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Fitzwater said there was no contemplation of transferring power to Vice President Dan Quayle. "This was never considered to be that serious; there was never any question of the president losing consciousness and being unable to continue his functions," he said.

The White House went to some lengths to describe the president as alert and able to walk on his own throughout the incident. He walked to the Camp David infirmary, to the helicopter and then into the hospital, aides said.

Bush had dinner with his wife, Barbara, at the hospital and was staying overnight. He joked with aides throughout the episode and asked one aide to put his briefcase on the helicopter so he could work. He even monitored Fitzwater's nationally televised news conference, and called to interject that he had jogged or walked for about 35 minutes. He described his dinner: steak, salad, mixed vegetables and skim milk.

Fitzwater spoke to reporters in the White House briefing room. He said Bush hoped to leave the hospital on Sunday and perhaps return to Camp David, the mountaintop retreat in Maryland.

Bush jogs a couple times a week, normally about two miles and frequently is accompanied by reporters and others. The president does not jog as frequently as he once did — five miles a day at his peak. He has slowed down in recent years on his doctor's advice.

Fitzwater said there were no advance warnings before the episode, which revealed itself as unusual fatigue and shortness of breath at about 4:20 p.m. He said Bush "mentioned to his Secret Service agents that he thought he should check it out." His doctor recommended Bush be tested further, and the entourage flew to the military hospital on the outskirts of Washington.

"He's in good spirits and ready to get back into the game," Fitzwater said of the president.

Vice President Quayle was at his residence in Washington, hosting an evening reception. His spokesman said the vice president was notified of the president's condition "a few minutes" after the episode occurred.

The 25th Amendment to the Constitution outlines a procedure for presidents to pass power to their vice presidents when they are incapacitated. Quayle and Bush met early in their administration to discuss how they would handle such an eventuality, but never disclosed their thinking. The amendment makes clear that a president can decide to transfer power, but the document is less clear about what would happen if there is uncertainty over whether the president is incapacitated.

Area voters select school board choices

By J. ALAN BRZYS
Staff Writer

Voter turnout Saturday for positions on area independent school district boards ranged from excellent to weak, district officials reported.

LEFORS

In the Lefors ISD election, seven candidates competed for two three-year positions, three newcomers sought a two-year unexpired term and two hopefuls ran for a one-year unexpired term.

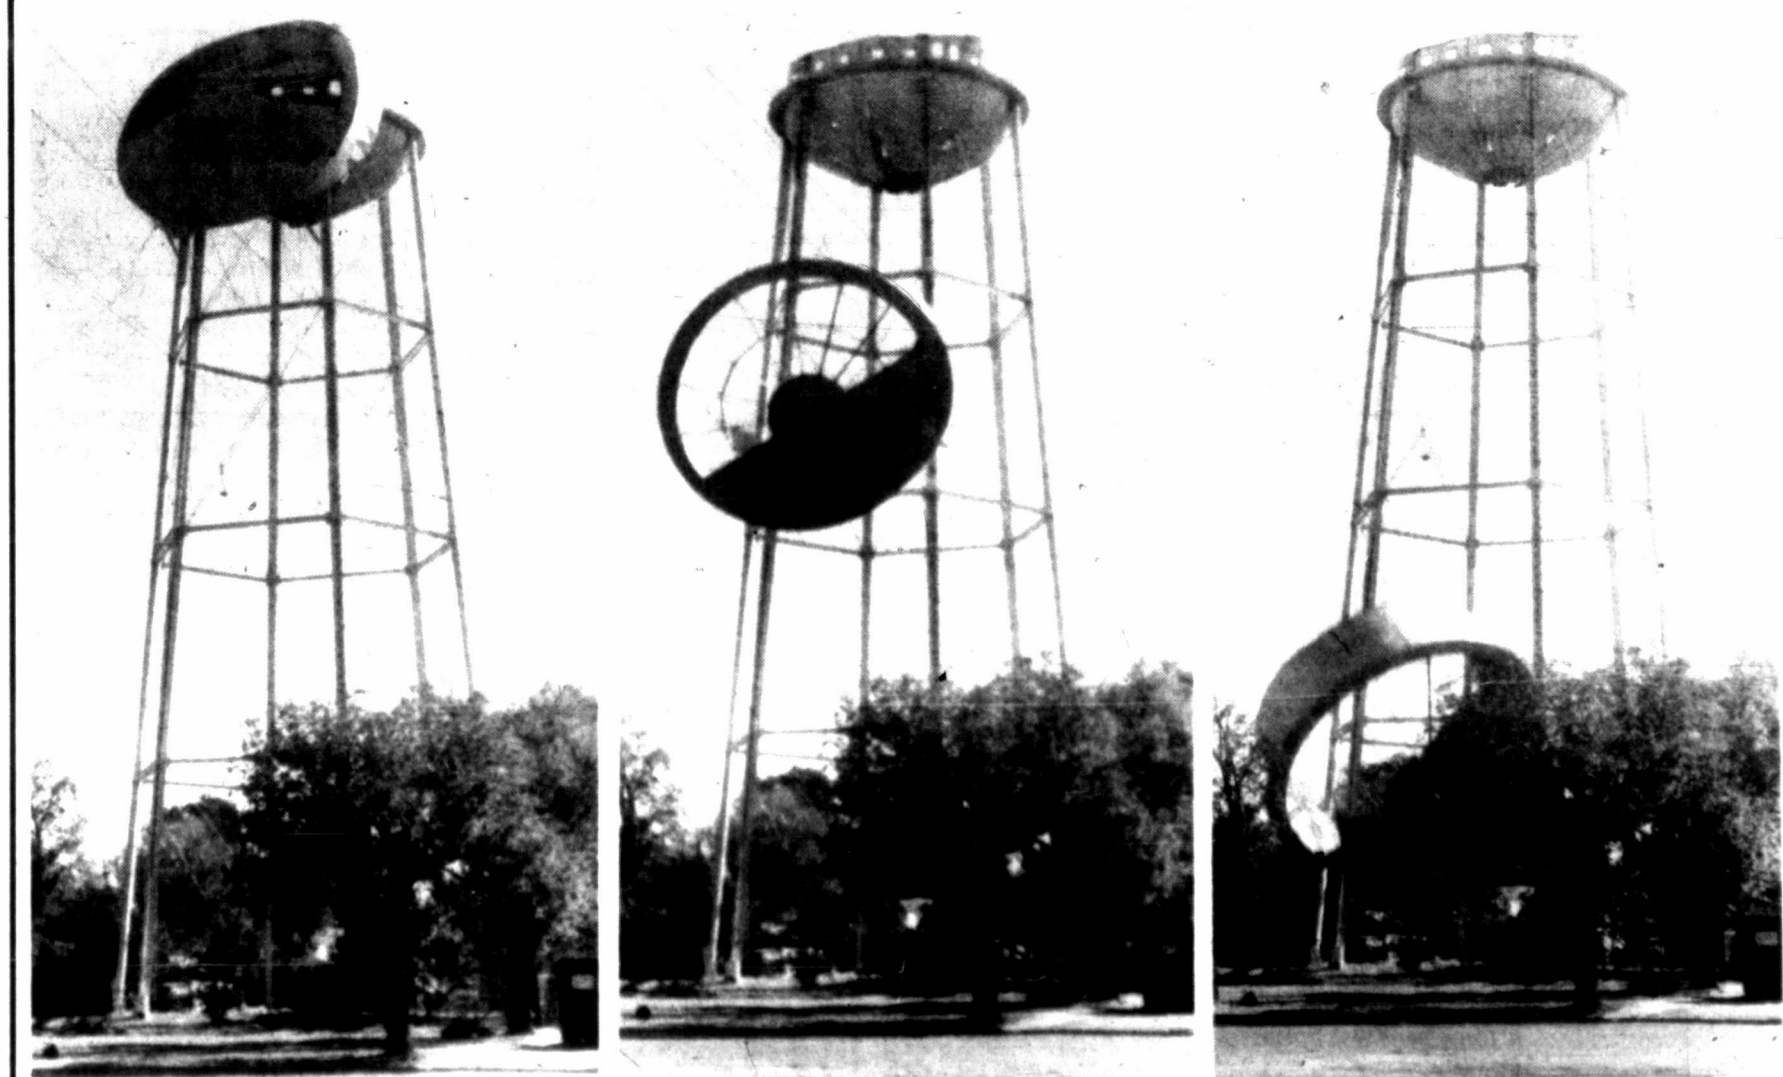

Charlie Sullivan tallied 107 votes and Ron Turpen garnered 54 to take the two three-year terms. Unsuccessful in that race were Mike L. Shedeck (37 votes), Karen Lake (35), Russell Jackson (31), Archie Summers (31), and Clay Lock (12).

Nora Franks won the two-year unexpired term with 103 votes. In a losing effort, Jeff Kent accounted for 49 votes and Sherry Swires received 5 votes.

Garrel Roberson captured the one-year unexpired term tallying 106 votes. Roberson defeated Michael Ray, who received 53 votes.

Going, going, gone

A landmark on the Pampa skyline disappeared Saturday when a water tower built in the late 1920s on West Street near North Hobart was torn down because of its deteriorating condition. Crews first pulled the huge top of the tank, which weighed a reported 11 tons, off with a steel cables, as pictured above. Then, throughout the day, sections of the remaining tower were removed with a cutting torch. City officials estimated a cost of $250,000 to renovate the water tower. Dismantling the structure cost the city $4,900. City Manager Glen Hackler said.

17 of 18 incumbents hold seats

By LARRY HOLLIS
Managing Editor

Incumbents in area city mayoral and councilman posts had a relatively easy time in retaining their seats in elections Saturday. Of the 18 incumbents who sought reelection, voters returned 17 of them to their posts.

In Skellytown, for example, incumbent alderman Dwayne Hall retained his seat while running against seven other candidates for two two-year posts. Two other candidates — Jessie Poole and Tim Yohn — face a runoff for the other seat.

In White Deer, where a near-record slate of 11 candidates were seeking election to three two-year councilman positions, Dean Wyatt retained his post, the only incumbent councilman seeking reelection there. Voters also returned incumbent Mayor Tommy Woods to office.

McLean voters chose incumbents Harold D. "Casper" Smith and Joe Billingsley to keep their alderman posts from a field of six candidates. Incumbent Mayor Sam Haynes, running unopposed, retained his seat.

Plant blast drenches residents in toxic cloud

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A series of explosions at a chemical plant in Veracruz state released a toxic cloud that sickened at least 500 people and contaminated the local water supply, Red Cross officials said on Saturday.

Another 1,500 people were evacuated from the densely populated area around the plant in Cordoba, 60 miles from the gulf coast port city of Veracruz, said Victor Hugo Lopez, head of the local Red Cross.

He said a huge cloud of toxic gas hovered over the area after a final blast rocked the plant shortly after 1 a.m. Saturday. The first explosion was 12 hours earlier, he said.

A strong chemical stench lingered well into Saturday afternoon, he said.

The privately owned plant, the Agricultura Nacional de Veracruz, manufactured, among other things, a product called Redon that contains parathion, said Emilio Murgia, another Red Cross official.

Parathion is a deadly insecticide used commercially, largely on fruit. The chemical can be lethal if ingested by humans or other animals.

Runoff from the water used by firefighters contaminated the local water supply, Lopez said.

At least 500 people had been treated by the Red Cross and local hospitals by midday Saturday, Lopez said. They suffered from symptoms ranging from fainting, fever and stomach pains to headaches and burning skin.

Marcella de la Llave, a dental surgeon who lives across the street from the plant, fled with her family after the first blast filled the air with black smoke.

She returned home briefly Saturday morning and found her pet birds dead in their cages.

"It smelled horrible," she said. "There was a yellow dust everywhere."

De la Llave said she was ordered to leave by soldiers who had cordoned off the neighborhood.

She said she and other members of her family were suffering from headaches and a burning sensation in their eyes and on their skin.

The Mexico City daily El Universal said area residents had been asking the government for years to shut down the plant, which covers three square blocks. De la Llave said there are several primary schools, kindergartens and nurseries near the plant.

"It would have been good if we'd had more voters out, but when you don't have opposition, I guess that's to be expected."

He stated that since the proposed city sales tax for economic development has yet to be voted on and the Sunday beer sales issue is "now in the county's court," there was little for people to criticize the current Commission for.

Vanderpool also pledged during his campaign to fight a tax increase.

"Now we're going to have to get down to the nitty-gritty," Vanderpool said. "Now is the time to do the job. If we raise taxes, we're going to have to do it very cautiously and make sure it's absolutely necessary."

He added, "The state may take (the tax issue) out of the local school board's hands. We may not have any choice."

"If there is fat, we want to trim it," Vanderpool said. "At the same time, you have to provide teachers with income and tools."

Seats

Incumbent councilmen Wendell Akins and Derl O. Boyd gained two of three seats for the Lefors City Council, with Pat Seely winning the other seat.

Following are the results for the area communities holding municipal elections Saturday.

CANADIAN

Micah Lewis, who left his council seat to run for mayor, gained 439 votes, running unopposed and winning the post.

Robert Ezzell received 355 votes and Keith Robbins 359 votes to take the two councilman posts up for election. Allen Hadaway received 285 votes. None were incumbents.

There were 545 voters, including absentee ballots, participating in Saturday's elections.

GROOM

Jimmy Britten was elected mayor with 179 votes, replacing Alfred Homer, who chose not to run for re-election. Britten ran unopposed.

Incumbents Ronny Fields, with 151 votes, and Jerry Thornton, with 143 votes, were re-elected to the two city council posts. Opponent Bobby Babcock received 67 votes in what election officials termed a "moderate" turnout.

LEFORS

Wendell Akins gained 96 votes and Derl O. Boyd had 82 votes to retain their Lefors City Council posts. Pat Seely, secretary with the Lefors Independent School District, gained the third council spot with 97 votes.

Other candidates receiving votes were Steven Franks, 73; and C.E. "Bud" Hess, 32. Cheryl Sims Butler had 36 votes; her name remained on the ballot though she had announced she would be moving from Lefors this summer and would not be able to take the post if elected.

MCLEAN

Incumbent Mayor Sam Haynes, running unopposed, won re-election with 190 votes. Brad Dalton received 10 write-in votes.

Incumbent aldermen Joe Billingsley, with 155 votes, and Harold D. "Casper" Smith, with 126 votes, retained the two posts up for election.

Other candidates gaining votes were Jessie Nell Allen, 64; Milton Best, 22; Ann Pierce, 66; and June Suggs, 10. Total ballots cast, including absentee voting, were 242.

MIAMI

More than 140 voters cast ballots in Miami's city council elections even though none of the candidates had any opposition.

Newt Cox, with 144 votes, gained the mayor's seat vacated by Monet Jenkins.

Incumbents Royce Bailey, with 142 votes, and Joe Bill Seuls, with 141 votes, retained their councilman posts without any trouble.

MOBEETIE

Dale Corcoran gained the mayor's seat with 18 votes, replacing Leona House, who had left the mayor's post to run for a two-year term on the city council.

House gained one of the two-year posts with 18 votes, with incumbent Don Moore, the only other candidate, retaining his seat with 16 votes.

No candidate ran for the one-year councilman position, but Randy Barr received three write-in votes. An election official early Saturday night said the seat is Barr's "if he wants it," adding that Barr had not yet been asked whether he would take the seat.

SHAMROCK

Two incumbents won re-election to alderman posts: J.L. Pepper, with 213 votes, and Charles Shields, with 275. Newcomer Keith Cunningham, with 231 votes, gained the third spot up for election from incumbent David Kindrick, who received 167 votes.

Election officials said the voter turnout was "pretty fair," with 336 ballots totaled, including absentee votes.

SKELLYTOWN

Incumbent Mayor Tommy Owens, with 85 votes, turned back challenger Bert Woods, who had 45 votes, to retain his post. Theresa Hands, who did not run, had 32 write-in votes, with three other candidates receiving one write-in vote each.

In the race for two alderman posts, incumbent Dewayne Hall retained his post with 93 votes. Two other candidates, Tim Yohn and Jessie Poole, gained 55 votes each, the next highest total, and will face a runoff election to decide who gets the alderman spot.

Other candidates receiving votes were Kathy Basham, 9; Bob Epperson, 20; Dianna Larkin, 37; Barbara Roe, 31; and Ruth Marcy, 13. Two write-in votes were recorded.

Skellytown had 150 voters cast ballots, including absentee votes.

WHEELER

In what election officials termed a "very light" turnout, three incumbent city councilmen, running without opposition, retained their seats.

Mark Frankenberry and Barbara Koelzer each received 30 votes, and Walter Simmons had 29 votes.

WHITE DEER

In a field of 11 candidates, incumbent councilman Dean Wyatt retained his seat with 108 votes. Also winning two of the three seats up for election were Diahana Hillman, with 87 votes, and Morlin Shuman, with 121 votes.

Other candidates receiving votes were Randal Barrett, 41; Nelson Britten, 80; Darrel Cathey, 71; Jeff Cotton, 24; L.E. "Gene" Kaler, 24; Al Macomb, 84; Charlie Sutterfield, 75; and Lela Wheeler, 34.

With absentee votes, White Deer residents cast 257 votes in the municipal election.

One has no way of knowing whether an animal is simply protecting its territory like this dog is, or whether it is suffering from rabies until it is too late. To help keep a rabies epidemic from occurring in Pampa, local veterinarians are offering rabies vaccinations at a reduced rate.

Monday final day for rabies vaccinations at reduced rate

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
News Editor

Monday is the final day in the citywide rabies vaccination drive at local veterinary clinics.

Rabies vaccinations will be given at each of the four local veterinarian offices during regular office hours at a reduced price. Other vaccinations for pets will also be available at reduced prices at this time.

Pampa's city ordinance states that all pets must be vaccinated by the time they are four months of age, with an annual vaccination within each 12-month period thereafter. The animal—dog or cat—must wear the tag at all times.

This drive has been conducted each year since 1968. This year it will coincide with National Be Kind to Animals Week.

The World Health Organization encourages communities to try to get at least 70 percent of the pet population vaccinated to prevent an epidemic of rabies.

Sandy Burns, Pampa Animal Control director, said that presently officials estimate that less than one-third of the pets in Pampa are now being vaccinated, despite the fact that rabies has been reported in Pampa as recently as six months ago.

On Nov. 9, 1990, a cat brought a bat into a house here in Pampa, Burns said. The bat was tested and found to be infected with rabies, she said. Because the cat had not been vaccinated, the cat had to be destroyed, she added.

The same situation occurred in Canadian last year, she added.

Last year, Pampa Animal Control records show officers handled 86 cases involving animals biting humans. Last week, a Pampa child was bitten by a ground squirrel.

Rabies vaccinations were given to 3,215 dogs and cats in 1990, up from 2,975 in 1989, Burns said. However, 3,520 animals were taken to the Pampa Animal Shelter in 1990, which she says clearly shows that there are far more pets within the city which are not being vaccinated. Of the 3,500-plus animals brought to the shelter, 3,110 had to be destroyed, she added.

Having the pet wear the tag, while complying with state and city laws, can also provide identification if the pet is lost, she said.

The color-coded rabies tags help identify how recently an animal has had its rabies shots. Tags are also useful in identifying an animal if it should be lost or injured, Burns added.

Rabies vaccinations will be available at the following veterinary offices: Easley Animal Hospital, North Loop 171 & Texas 70; Gray County Veterinary Clinic, 1329 S. Hobart; Hendrick Animal Hospital, 1912 Alcock, and Royse Animal Hospital, 1939 N. Hobart.

St. Vincent's school sets dates for pre-registration

St. Vincent De Paul Catholic School, 2300 N. Hobart, has chosen the week of May 6-10 for pre-registration in pre-kindergarten (ages 3 and 4) and kindergarten through fifth grades.

Registration will be held between 8:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. each day. All new and currently enrolled students need to pre-register during this period; birth certificates and records of immunization are needed for children entering the school for the first time.

St. Vincent's is committed to academic excellence in elementary education in a strong Christian atmosphere. The school's strong academic and religious program provides each child with a necessary educational and moral foundation.

In addition, St. Vincent's has a well-equipped computer laboratory that provides students with a wide variety of software from basic to enrichment. Computer instruction is offered to all students (pre-kindergarten through fifth grades). The IBM Writing-To-Read program is provided for students in kindergarten and first grade.

St. Vincent's is accredited by the Texas Education Agency and operates on a favorable teacher/student ratio. A day care for children operates in the building for children ages 3 through 12, and is licensed by the Texas Department of Human Resources. Day care is available all year.

Hemphill, Wheeler counties elect four to hospital boards

Three candidates topped a field of eight for positions on the Hemphill County Hospital Board and a single candidate running unopposed was selected to represent Mobetie on the Wheeler County Hospital Board in Saturday's election.

Three slots were open on the five-member Hemphill County board which drew eight candidates into the race.

Mike Gardner topped all candidates with 402 votes. Gardner, and runners-up Troy Patton with 374 votes, and Ralph Edwards with 272, were successful in their bid to be seated on the board.

Unsuccessful candidates and their vote tallies include John Baker (256 votes), Killebrew (221), Donna Donaldson (204), Clarence Heunsel (203), and Ayred Parks (188).

Lester Leonard received 24 votes running unopposed in his bid for the Mobetie seat on the Wheeler County Hospital Board.

Holding out for a 'true' hero

A new book called The Day America Told the Truth is kicking up a storm all over the nation.

When the Associated Press released a story on this new survey of American attitudes, family and friends from around the nation called to ask what I thought.

Why the fuss?

Results of this study show one in five Americans lost their virginity before age 13; 20 percent of all women have been raped on a date; 31 percent of all married people have had an affair; and seven percent of Americans would murder a stranger for $2 million.

Unlike most polls, this one was not conducted over the phone or in front of any witnesses.

Instead, participants were paid up to $10 each to complete a questionnaire, if they promised to tell the truth.

They were then put in a closed room and allowed to slip their answers into a locked box, guaranteeing anonymity.

Authors James Patterson and Peter Kim report finding there is no moral consistency in our nation any longer.

Remember the words, "We hold these truths to be self-evident"? That used to apply to more than our Constitution and Bill of Rights. It described how we looked at marriage, fidelity, family, work, ethics and God.

Now Patterson and Kim are confirming what many of us have suspected: The vast majority of Americans (87 percent) don't believe obeying any or all of the 10 Commandments is necessary in modern society.

My sixth grade Sunday School teacher used to say that not obeying the 10 Commandments was like not obeying the laws of gravity—if you don't, there'll be consequences.

Patterson and Kim said they pursued The Day America Told the Truth because they saw something happening in American culture that couldn't be explained through traditional advertising lingo.

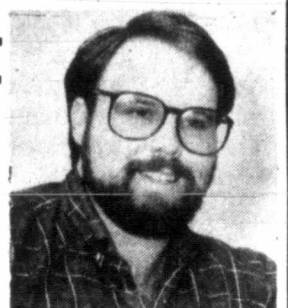

You and I see it, too. It's in those obnoxious Burger King ads that say, "Sometimes you gotta break the rules."

It's in waterbed commercials where people are shown gleefully tearing off mattress tags that say, "Do Not Remove Under Penalty of Law."

Someone recently referred to it as "a spirit of rebellion that is sweeping our nation."

Burger King is apparently riding a tide of disdain for laws (both man's and God's) that most Americans love.

Off Beat By Bear Mills

So who are Patterson and Kim? Religious right-wingers with an axe to grind? Nope. Advertising executives who get paid to stay on top of the latest trends.

Patterson said the book reveals America's darkest secrets and shows our nation to be in moral trouble.

Where does that leave you and me? Helplessly riding a tide that's carrying our nation down the toilet? Moving to a monastery? Giving up?

Certainly not.

Our only option is to be loud and proud in saying, "Sometimes you gotta obey the rules whether you like 'em or not!"

You'd be surprised how many people join in when you set an example for traditional values and decent behavior.

You'd also be surprised who reveals their true colors, because they like the current trend of moral erosion.

People will tell you, "You can't legislate morality." What many of them (but certainly not all) are saying is, "You're laws are cramping my desire to go out and do things that society doesn't approve of."

We can't legislate morality. But we can stand up and boldly say we WON'T TOLERATE behavior that is destroying our society.

Not be tolerant? How ghastly!

Well, I've tried being tolerant of those who have nothing but contempt for good health, common decency and moral standards.

Now, I'm about ready for them to be tolerant of a move back to traditional values.

One more thing revealed by this survey: Most Americans no longer believe there are any more heroes.

Stand against the trends revealed in The Day America Told the Truth and you'll be a hero.

Mine.

Researchers discover rare Lincoln papers

HAVANA, Ill. (AP) — Two legal documents written by Abraham Lincoln have turned up in the back room of the Mason County Clerk's office. The papers, dated 1845, were verified as authentic last week.

"It's unbelievable, for being folded up for 146 years there were no major tears and the ends weren't dogeared," said William Beard, assistant editor of The Lincoln Legal Papers, a state-funded study of Lincoln's legal practice. "It looks like Lincoln wrote them yesterday."

Both manuscripts deal with the same case — a lawsuit filed by a landowner against three men who built a dam near his property. Lincoln represented the builders. The landowner sued the trio for $300 in damages after his land was flooded.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

China continues its brutal policies

Since the June 1989 massacre in Tiananmen Square, China's communist government has tried to remain low-key. It used the Persian Gulf crisis as a cover to try several protesters, sentencing them to long term jail terms. But the Gulf war's short duration now means that the world can look back to China.

Two U.S. congressmen, Christopher Smith of New Jersey and Frank Wolf of Virginia, visited the People's Republic on March 30. They handed Premier Li Peng a list of 77 Protestant and Catholic religious leaders being jailed or detained. The congressmen also gave him a letter, signed by 100 of their colleagues in Congress, calling on Li to restore religious freedom. And they asked Li to respect political freedom, especially toward the jailed Tiananmen Square protesters.

The two congressmen also told of their "profound sorrow and deep sadness" at the communist regime's brutal "one child" family policy, which includes forced abortions. Said Rep. Smith: "Chinese women in particular have been the victims of the most brutal systematic invasion of their personal privacy in the history of the world. History will undoubtedly regard this dark experiment in government control of family life, replete with foreign apologists and unwitting boosters abroad, with horror."

According to official Communist Chinese radio, Li responded, "Since China and the United States have different social systems and different ideologies, there are different points of views on several issues." This is communist doublespeak. Communism is not a social system but a counter-system — an alien tyranny that destroys each person's innate right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

China's true social system is not communism — an ideology as foreign there as it has proven to be in Eastern Europe, Russia, Nicaragua and elsewhere — but a mosaic of Confucianism, Buddhism, Taoism and even Christianity, which has sent missionaries there for centuries. Confucius said, 2,400 years before Tiananmen Square, "In carrying on your government, why should you use killing at all?"

And if Li cares so much about respecting "different social systems," why doesn't he respect that of Tibet, a country the Beijing communists conquered in 1950, then proceeded to subjugate, killing thousands of people and destroying thousands of its ancient Buddhist monasteries? In March the Beijing regime even protested a welcome Britain gave to the Dalai Lama, the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize winner and religious/political leader of Tibet. Before that, Beijing protested a welcome Ireland gave the Dalai Lama.

Fortunately, the hope for freedom lives on in the hearts of people in China, who some day will build on the sacrifices made by the Tiananmen Square martyrs, throw off the alien communist regime, give themselves freedom and return independence to Tibet.

Treaties made to be broken

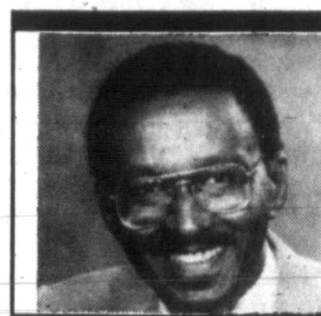

The most mindless bumper sticker is the one that intones, "If you want peace, work for justice." Let's think about war and peace.

The normal state of the world is war somewhere. Don't just take my word; pick a century. Do treaties prevent war? In this century alone, there were at least 10 major peace treaties, but they didn't stop the destruction of tens of million lives. Treaties and disarmament pacts simply gave aggressors the time to build armies and the nerve to attack.

Who's ready to say that war is the result of poorly worded peace treaties and disarmament agreements? Who is willing to bet it's going to be this generation that succeeds in treaty writing where others have failed?

There's considerable evidence to support the proposition that military might and preparedness is a much greater war deterrent than treaties and disarmament agreements. Europe is now going through its longest period of continuous peace. Do we want to chalk it up to treaties? Or do we want to chalk it up to the fact, that since World War II, Europe has been an armed camp bristling with weapons of mass destruction? Armed aggression would have meant intolerable losses.

People who attribute the Cold Wars' end to a change of heart in the Kremlin might want to think that one over again. Instead, we can thank Reagan's military buildup for the changes in Eastern Europe. Russia found that she simply could not compete effectively in an arms race against us. Moreover, even trying to compete came at a huge cost to the standard of living of her people.

The straw that broke the Russian bear's back was the Strategic Defense Initiative, ridiculed by America's leftists as "Star Wars." The liberal media and Union of Concerned Scientists said that we couldn't develop a defense against missile attack. But the Kremlin had greater confidence in our ability to build an effective missile defense. Maybe their spies were peeking at Patriots.

Here's where we are now. America already has the means and capacity to deploy modified versions of the Patriot missile and space interceptors known as "Brilliant Pebbles." If Jerusalem can be protected against enemy missiles, why not New York, Chicago and Los Angeles? Our ability to protect ourselves is not one of means but will. The U.S. Congress is far more interested in using tax dollars to buy votes, through a variety of handout programs, than it is in performing its constitutional function of providing for the national defense. It seems as though they'd much rather expose us to a terrorist missile attack than to cut the $30 billion plus handout to farmers.

We, the people, had better change this soon. According to CIA estimates, in 10 years or so there will be 20 nations capable of delivering crude nuclear weapons. You can rest assured that if Saddam Hussein had the means, he'd threaten to use a nuclear weapon on us. Yes, we'd turn any country that attacked us into a trash heap, but that wouldn't bring back tens of thousands of American lives lost.

Now that the Middle East war is over, the first order of business for the White House is to go on the offensive to get Congress to appropriate funds for development and deployment of President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative. You say, "Williams, the ABM treaty prohibits that!" I say: "What good are treaties if they aren't broken when it's expedient to do so?"

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Sunday, May 5, the 125th day of 1991. There are 240 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

One hundred years ago, on May 5, 1891, Carnegie Hall (then named "Music Hall") had its opening night in New York City with a concert that included works conducted by Peter Ilyich Tchaikovsky and Walter Damrosch.

On this date:

In 1494, during his second voyage to the New World, Christopher Columbus first sighted Jamaica.

In 1818, the political philosopher Karl Marx was born in Prussia.

In 1821, Napoleon Bonaparte died in exile on the island of St. Helena.

In 1904, Cy Young pitched the American League's first perfect game as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Philadelphia Athletics, 3-0.

In 1912, the first issue of the Soviet Communist Party newspaper Pravda was published. (In the Soviet Union, where the old-style calendar was still in effect, the date was April 22nd.)

In 1925, John T. Scopes was arrested in Tennessee for teaching Darwin's theory of evolution.

In 1926, author Sinclair Lewis rejected the Pulitzer Prize for his novel Arrowsmith, telling the selection committee in a letter that "all prizes, like all titles, are dangerous."

Kittiphobia — a new threat

A great many Americans, particularly those in the public eye, likely are developing "Kittiphobia."

This has nothing to do with the fear of cats. "Kittiphobia" is the fear Kitty Kelley is going to do an unauthorized biography on you.

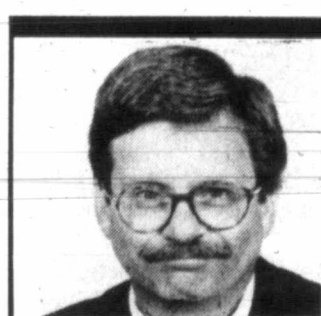

She's already nailed Jackie O and Frank Sinatra, and now she's gone after Nancy Reagan and taken her appendix out with a broken Budweiser bottle. Nancy Reagan slept her way through Hollywood. Nancy Reagan lied about her age. Nancy Reagan got it on with the same Mr. Sinatra.

I haven't read the book because there are none still available in a 100-mile radius.

A review of the book I read said it was "trashy, but entertaining." I said the same thing about a recent Geraldo, featuring men who have sex with giraffes.

There's supposed to be other lurid details involving even a "date rape" by Mrs. Reagan's husband, the famous gun control advocate.

I have no earthly way of knowing how much, if any, of this is true, but it's still scary. Not that I am the stature of a Reagan, a Sinatra or an O, but I did have a bad dream about Kitty Kelley doing an unauthorized biography on me and awakened the next morning with a bad case of "Kittiphobia."

How many people have grudges against me and would want to see me embarrassed by tales they would tell?

I've never had sex with a giraffe, but what if somebody said I had? Kitty Kelley could just put it right there in her book and no matter how much I denied, people would still look at me like I was a weirdo and say things to me like, "Hey, Lew. Goin' to the zoo?"

Kitty Kelley probably would dredge up the few skeletons I have and then add a lot of others, based on rumor and innuendo.

"I'm not saying Lewis ever got drunk and took off his clothes at a party and danced naked on the tables, but well ... I'd better not go on."

That would translate into, "Getting drunk and taking off his clothes at a party and dancing on tables, Grizzard is also said to have a great deal of belly-button lint."

And one of my ex-wives might tell her, "I'm not saying Lewis wasn't good in bed, but, well ... I'd better go on."

That would show up in the book as saying, "Lewis often dozed off during sex and thought foreplay was hitting a few puts on the practice green ..."

"It's all fabrication," I would say, but some book reviewers would call the book "trashy, but entertaining," and everybody would rush out to buy a copy and there I would be.

What would be fair is for somebody to do an unauthorized bio of Kitty Kelley.

"Drooling noticeably," said one of her oldest friends, "she phoned Ted Kennedy and said, 'I'll meet you at the Au Bar in Palm Beach and please bring that hunk of a nephew with you.'"

Roll that around in your belly-button a couple of times, Kitty.

Multiculturalism poses censorship

Every year America invests $160 billion in higher education, with 45 percent of this coming from federal, state and local governments. What are we getting for our money?

We're getting students who graduate from colleges and universities rejecting the traditional values of Western civilization, convinced that "white, male-dominated, Western European culture is the most destructive phenomenon in the known history of the planet." Such was the opening of a recent letter in Mother Jones magazine from a Yale graduate.

What produced such disdain for the West? It springs from an effort to introduce students to the works and ideas of non-Western societies. Called "multiculturalism," the new college curricula mandates the study of certain non-traditional literature from Asia, Africa, Latin America and the Middle East.

It should be called culture shock. Instead of teaching the classic works of other traditions — which have much in common with the West — the multicultural activists are ransacking other cultures for the literature that supports their radical-left "politically correct" agenda.

Another sample, this one from Becky Thompson, a sociology and women's studies professor: "I begin my course with the basic feminist principle that in a racist, classist and sexist society we have all swallowed oppressive ways of being."

Under the guise of diversity, these activists filter foreign cultures through a fractured lens of racial and sexual victimization.

Such a politicized agenda "ignores the true diversity of other cultures. It bears virtually no resemblance to the ideas most deeply cherished in those cultures," says Dinesh D'Souza, author of the widely reviewed book, Illiberal Education: The Politics of Race and Sex on Campus (New York: Macmillan, 1991).

In his book, D'Souza outlines the political goals of the multiculturalists and documents how professors who resist such indoctrination often are bullied into silence.

"I was a student during the days of Joseph McCarthy, and there is less freedom now than there was then," says Donald Kagen, dean of Yale College.

For a curriculum to be authentically multicultural, D'Souza says it must:

1) Offer non-Western ideas as a supplement to — not a substitute for — the great works of Western thought. Educated citizens should know the philosophical, historical and literary ABCs of their own culture. While it would be hard to find educated Chinese who know nothing of Confucius, U.S. college graduates unfamiliar with Thomas Jefferson or the Bible abound.

2) Teach the best that has been taught and said in other cultures. Non-Western teachers such as Mohammed and Zoroaster, for example, offered controversial ideas about human happiness and how to organize society. They — rather than the leftist fringe — deserve serious attention.

It defeats the purpose of multicultural education to cater to the prejudices of the new politically correct thought police. It amounts to a not-so-subtle form of censorship, one that belittles the classic traditions of other cultures and threatens our own.

Letters to the editor

Morality must be central to our laws

To the editor:

In response to the letter last Sunday, I would like to express my own deeply-held convictions about the sale of alcoholic beverages on Sunday in our community and the "separation of church and state."

First of all, the Constitution of the United States never mentions the phrase "separation of church and state" neither by word nor by implication. It is, on the contrary, only mentioned in the Russian constitution. The church has always had a major influence on our government. The references to religion made in the First and the Fourteenth Amendments are concerned with protecting the church from excessive control, tyranny and abuse from the state. This is, obviously, far different than separating church from state.

There is absolutely no way that church and state can be separated because both are made up of the same people. A man's God cannot be separated from his moral decisions. That is why Christians seek to elect government officials who are following Jesus Christ. The morality of the leaders will ultimately determine the morality of a city, state or nation.

And speaking of morality, both God and governments have a long history of legislating morality; both of them also at this present time legislate morality, and God help us if in the future they do not both continue to legislate morality. Murder is a moral issue, as are also prostitution, illegal drug use, suicide, polygamy and child abuse. We have laws prohibiting these things in order to protect the people of our nation. In my opinion, protecting a person's life is ultimately more urgent than protecting his feelings.

That is my concern in the issue of alcohol-selling on Sundays. With all of the medical information available concerning the effects of alcohol on the human body, and with all of the deaths that have occurred from its effects, can we afford to give even one inch more in the sale of it?

I am sure it is true that many people who drink alcohol have admirable qualities and are tired of being told what to do, but those are characteristics found in every one of us and should not determine our moral decisions. Many of us are extremely tired of being told when to stop at street corners and when to slow down in a school zone, but we should definitely not be allowed to "make our own decisions" about that. We certainly do not allow child molesters to "decide for themselves" about their moral actions.

What has happened to our great leaders who used to selflessly risk everything, be it job, business or reputation, in order to save just one more life? Surely there is some other way to establish justice in the county. If it is merely a question of economic justice, could we not prohibit the sale of all alcoholic beverages on Sundays?

I guess the bottom line question for me is, "Are we, as Christians, going to continue to allow our God to influence the laws that we pass and make Him a part of our governmental affairs at every level and at any cost, or are we going to try to keep Him out of the decision altogether, leaving some other god to be in control?" That is the real issue.

Proposed bill hurts rural medical care

To the editor:

State Rep. Mark Stiles of Beaumont introduced a bill (H.B. 2022) which is a slap in the face to those Texans who have chosen to live in the rural areas of our state.

The bill, if passed, would allow emergency ambulances in counties of less than 20,000 population to be staffed by only ONE individual with minimum training. There are 254 counties in Texas and, of course, 150 of them have a population of less than 20,000. To those Texans who live in counties of greater population and believe this law will not affect you—think again!—you probably do not spend your entire lives in one area, nor do your families and friends. If you travel, you do not have to go very far before you find yourself passing through one of these counties.

Texas already has the lowest standards in the country for minimum ambulance staffing, requiring two personnel with only 40 hours of training. This bill, if made into law, would be a state and a national embarrassment by reducing the standard to only one person.

The sad part about this is that Mr. Stiles' bill sailed unopposed through the House on April 18. This shows a definite uncaring attitude on the part of our elected representatives. As a long-time paramedic with a volunteer emergency medical service, I have no idea how only one person is going to drive an ambulance and provide proper life-saving care of a patient at the same time. If this bill becomes law, EMS in Texas will be set back 30 years in a large portion of the state.

Everyone who reads this letter needs to contact his or her state senator, as well as the offices of the governor and lieutenant governor, to show concern for our fellow Texans. Demand that your senator vote NO on this bill. It could literally make a difference between life and death.

Other cities permit Sunday beer sales

To the editor:

This letter is on the issue of selling beer on Sunday in the city limits of Pampa.

Cities such as Amarillo, Wichita Falls, Fort Worth, Houston, Dallas and small communities such as Howardwick do not have a city ordinance against selling beer on Sunday.

If this is good for these cities and communities, why wouldn't it be good for the city of Pampa?

More funds needed to stop child abuse

To the editor:

Today in Texas many problems abound around us. Police stations are flooded with calls. Prison overcrowding is constantly discussed at each level of government. Our state deficit, always in the news, provoked talk of a personal income tax in the Legislature. These and much more are why child abuse is on the rise.

Many people are involved in the investigation of child abuse. Sometimes a neighbor or a teacher notices something is wrong with a child. Even the child will report abuse if he becomes overwrought with pain, agony or disgust for his abuser. When abuse is discovered, it becomes the responsibility of the Texas Department of Human Services (TDHS). Diligent social workers carry the brunt of the burden of investigation. The case load of the social worker is strenuous. A social worker rarely works an eight-hour day, or a five-day week. Many times a "minor case" is overlooked if the case load will not permit the time to investigate. A problem for us, the social worker, and most of all the abused child is that TDHS is desperately understaffed.

Understaffing is directly related to the financial woes of our state. The state of Texas has seen fit to put a freeze on hiring new employees, which puts pressure on the workers now in service. We may have to consider a state income tax to fund the future of our children. Detesting any new tax is the popular thing to do; politicians are aware that if they want to stay in Austin, they must vote NO on any tax bill. But what is more important—being in Austin or the protection of innocent children? Maybe we should question the morality of our elected officials, as well as the public morality and education.

Our education seems important to school officials, businessmen and the general public. But the education of child abuse is poor. Many people do not know what abuse is. Is it a beating? Is it verbal punishment? Is it not providing the necessities of life? Is it uncleanness? The answer is YES to all of these things. Education will play a vital role in teaching people who have been abused that they were not bad children, but they had bad parents. Just because some people have been abused does not make it correct to raise their child in the same manner. We must help the adults to understand that they can have a better life and raise emotionally stable children.

The crime of child abuse is becoming a malignancy that is growing across our state. We have to produce the money, the social workers and the education to stop child abuse. The future of our children depends on us; we can ill afford to turn our back to them.

He should put his experience to use

To the editor:

I was surprised to read J. Knight's letter to the editor in which he said he had done some umpiring. Who does he think paid for his mask, chest protector and shin-guards? Also, while he was standing there, did he ever consider who put the uniforms on the nine boys on the field and many more in the dugouts? Has he counted the balls and bats they are using? This is only two teams!

Yes, I had four kids go through this program, and yes, I "hollar" also. When my kids were in sports, we cinched up our belts and made sure they were out there because this is a good club and it keeps your kids off the streets.

Twenty dollars ... just how much do you think that pays toward your kids' "privilege"? If your kids aren't out there to play, learn teamwork, to win, lose and be a good sport, then why do you have them out there?

This is what is wrong with our country today. Everyone wants to know "what can you do for me" and not "what can I do for you." These 25 tickets—what they are trying to teach your kids is if they want to play All-Star bad enough, they are going to work hard and sell their tickets because that is the first leg of getting there.

Another thing he forgot was that kids on All-Stars are at least 11 years old. These kids usually go out of town to represent Pampa. My kids have played on All-Stars and I have never received a letter from the Optimist Club asking me to pay my kid's way to the tournament. Did he ever stop to think about that cost: three meals a day, rooms and gas?

It takes everyone in this community, all families and friends, to run and support a program such as this. You don't hear a coach say "what can you do for me." He is doing what is good for our kids, volunteering his time, even when he and many others don't even have kids playing.

As for Mr. Knight, instead of writing letters on something he knows nothing about, he should go join the Optimist Club and put his 17 years of experience to valuable use for the youth of Pampa. I spoke to three board members and asked questions to find out where the money I donated is going. These people care about our kids.

'Kids will be kids' is not good excuse

To the editor:

This letter is directed at parents, in particular those parents who overlook the thoughtless and careless acts of their undisciplined children in public places.

Recently, while shopping in the grocery store, a child pushed a full shopping cart into me. The child did not apologize, after which I had a verbal exchange with the mother in which she said "kids will be kids," as if that made her child's actions acceptable.

"Kids will be kids" is not an excuse for careless behavior of children. Also, it is not the apology that I expected to receive, if not from the child, then from the parent.

Children learn from what they see. If, after a rude and careless act, your child hears you dismiss it with the statement "kids will be kids," they will feel they can do anything no matter what happens to other people, and they will not learn common courtesy towards others.

The comments "I'm sorry" or "excuse me" each have only half the words of "kids will be kids" and mean more and set a better example.

Texas' honor days should be observed

To the editor:

I failed to see or hear any mention of our two state honor days in the Pampa or Amarillo newspapers, radio and/or television stations.

March 2, 1836, IS Texas Independence Day. Framed copies of the Texas Declaration of Independence were presented to all Texas schools by the Summerlee Foundation this year. Pampa schools received theirs, yet there was no news coverage locally on this gift either.

April 21, 1836, IS San Jacinto Day—the day Texans won their independence.

How many times have you heard someone say, "Those people in Austin don't know the Panhandle is part of the state." Acceptance is a two-way street. Local acknowledgement and news coverage of our two most important Texas honor days—March 2 and April 21—would be a good start in BEING TEXANS.

Kathleen Anderson
Pampa

Editor's Note: It is hard to give news coverage to the presentation of framed copies of the Texas Declaration of Independence to the schools when the news media is not even informed of the event. This is the first we have heard of the matter. If someone had brought it to our attention, it would have been worth a photograph and story.

As to reporting on the "two state honor days"—neither one is much observed, either in the Panhandle or in other parts of the state, nor are they official holidays. There's no big parades or festivities or celebrations, which would warrant coverage. Perhaps more attention should be given to those two days, though Texas is no longer a republic; it is now a state of the United States of America—which happened, by the way, on Dec. 29, 1845, another "honor day" for the state which is not observed with any great attention.

Perhaps those days should be given more notice, outside of our classrooms, but we tend to concentrate more on the national holidays, for some reason. If any associations or groups arrange some special event for those important days in our state history, they should contact the media and arrange for the coverage. It might be a good way to remind us all of our state history and heritage.

What's happened in Celanese case?

To the editor:

Pampa has "kind of" settled down about the toxic lawsuit against Hoechst Celanese. Most have made up their minds about the issue, and I am not writing to change anyone's opinion.

However, there are a few "facts" that I think everyone should be aware of.

#1. Most of these suits are settled out of court.
#2. In the settlement agreement, the plaintiff vows never to EVER talk about the case to anyone EVER again.

#3. All court records are permanently sealed. It would be like it never happened. How could research be done about the cancer rate and health problems here?

I'll spare you my opinion on this and just say: How much money would it take for you and your lawyer to just SHUT UP and GO AWAY?

Police officer shoots suspect at nightclub

AMARILLO (AP)—A 30-year-old man was fatally shot by an Amarillo police officer who was trying to keep the man from assaulting a woman at a downtown nightclub early Saturday.

The officer arrived at the nightclub shortly after 1 a.m. and became involved in a struggle with Foubert Lawrence Harris, Amarillo Police Lt. Gene Clouette said. During the struggle, the officer, whose name was not released, fired three shots at Harris.

Harris was pronounced dead upon arrival at Northwest Texas Hospital, Clouette said.

Witnesses disputed the police report, saying that Harris did not fight with the officer and that the shooting was racially motivated. Harris was black. The officer is white.

Company official says corporation paid for Sununu's family ski trips

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House Chief of Staff John Sununu accepted payment from a ski corporation for family ski vacations he said were funded by a non-profit charity, a corporation executive said Saturday.

The payment, apparently a matter of bookkeeping that may conflict with federal ethics requirements, was first disclosed in Time magazine's edition released Saturday, and confirmed by the president of the Waterville Valley ski resort in New Hampshire.

The disclosure came as President Bush told reporters he will announce changes in the travel policy that allowed Sununu to use government aircraft for extensive political and personal travel in addition to official business.

"We're very close to coming out with these changes," Bush told reporters traveling with him to Ann Arbor, Mich.

Bush has said Sununu's travel did not violate existing policy, but aides have said the president will tighten the policy in the wake of a review by White House Counsel Boyden Gray.

Sununu uses a government jet for all travel, but must pay reimbursement for personal use. The government also must be reimbursed when such a trip is solely for a political purpose.

How Sununu reimbursed the government for non-official use of the aircraft is another issue. Federal law bars officials from receiving significant payments or gifts — except from non-profit charitable or educational organizations.

The Waterville Valley ski resort, which hosts the annual Christa McAuliffe Ski Invitational charity event that Sununu helped launch as governor of New Hampshire, picked up the lodging, lift tickets and meals for Sununu and his wife and children this year and in previous years, said resort president Thomas Corcoran.

A special account set up by the resort to put on the tournament also reimbursed the government for Sununu's family's airfare, he said.

The account receives donations from corporate interests, including Coca Cola, McDonald's and Siemens Nixdorf, an electronics company that won a $7 million computer contract with New Hampshire when Sununu was governor.

Time reported that Sununu also accepted corporate payment for airfare for an undisclosed number of family members when he flew in June to Lawrence, Mass., 10 miles from his Salem, N.H., home.

Sununu spoke at an Eagle-Tribune newspaper banquet, listing the trip as official business, with no airfare reimbursement required.

He did provide reimbursement of $1,920 for family members traveling with him on the military jet, White House records show. That was paid by the newspaper, Time said.

Dan Warner, Eagle-Tribune editor, confirmed Saturday that the newspaper did pay the airfare for Sununu family members who attended the banquet.

White House spokesman Sean Walsh said Saturday the White House would have no comment on any new allegations regarding Sununu's travel.

"We will not comment until the review is complete," he said.

Sununu flew to Florida on Saturday aboard a military plane to give a commencement speech, which Bush said "would be considered clearly an official trip."

Sununu flew to the Christa McAuliffe tournament in 1990 and 1991 on a military jet. He listed the trip as official business. He did provide reimbursement in equivalent coach fares for family members he took with him, $845 in 1990 and $4,330 in 1991.

Sununu aides had said the reimbursement was paid by the non-profit Christa McAuliffe Sabbatical Foundation, named for the New Hampshire schoolteacher killed in the explosion of the Challenger space shuttle.

But Corcoran said the money actually came from a corporate checking account, the Christa McAuliffe Sabbatical Trust Fund Ski Race, which the resort set up for corporate donations to put on the tournament and pay for expenses.

He said Sununu's travel reimbursements and expenses were handled from the account just like any other expenses.

Rescue workers recall helplessness after tornado

ANDOVER, Kan. (AP) — Patrolman Bill Duggan felt helpless, standing in a tank top and shorts on the edge of what was once the mobile home park where he lived.

"There were a lot of people crying for help," he said. "There wasn't anything standing that I remember."

In this town were 13 died in a tornado April 26, residents are struggling with their memories. Duggan, an emergency medical technician as well as a police officer, recalled last week that he tried to help injured people but he lacked even basic first-aid supplies.

Duggan, 21, was off duty that night, relaxing with his 20-year-old wife, Kristy, at his parents' home in Andover. Television and radio weather warnings prompted the family to go to the basement.

At the Golden Spur trailer park, meanwhile, the couple's trailer became one of more than 200 lifted into the air and slammed back to Earth as the twister struck town.

"I've lived in this town all of my life. I was born here," Duggan said. "I've always done whatever I could for the town. I'd seen the park. I knew the trailer wasn't there anymore. I knew my wife was safe.

"There was no property in there that was more important than helping other people."

Sgt. Troy See, another officer who lived at the Golden Spur, spent the last few minutes before the twister hit warning residents.

He did not pause at his home to collect a few personal belongings or keepsakes. He kept his patrol car cruising up and down the streets with its red lights and siren operating. His only action for himself was to race for City Hall when he realized how near the twister was.

Police Chief Tom Mathes took a walkie talkie with him when he sought shelter at home. From beneath a mattress in the basement where he huddled with his wife and children, Mathes radioed the dispatcher when the twister blew his house away.

Andover's death toll included 11 dead at the trailer park and a father and son who jumped from their car and tried in vain to save themselves by lying in a ditch. The same twister killed four in Wichita. Other tornadoes that night killed two others elsewhere in Kansas and three people in Oklahoma.

Red Cross disaster workers return from aiding flood victims

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
News Editor

"I unloaded so many 18-wheelers, I thought 18-wheelers would start coming out of my ears!" exclaimed Lynda Duncan, director of the Pampa Area Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Duncan had just returned from a 17-day stint as a disaster coordinator in Harlingen. She and local Red Cross volunteer, Larry Brawley, were called to the Harlingen area on April 12 following the massive flooding caused by approximately 17 inches of rainfall on April 5.

"It was the best kind of tired I ever had," she added. "And when those women would look up at you and say 'Gracias' it was all worth it — all worth it."

Duncan and Brawley drove the local chapter's emergency relief van (ERV) to the disaster site and set to work immediately on arrival. Daily the 18-wheelers would come filled with food, clothing, and other items to aid the flood victims, and each time they came the volunteers would have to unload the items, log them, and store them for later use or dispersal.

"We worked as many as 12 to 14 hours a day. We'd serve, do paper work, drive back to Harlingen, turn in paper work, then go back to the motel," she explained.

In addition to unloading the trucks, Duncan and Brawley were responsible for serving meals three times a day to families in San Benito, a small, mostly Hispanic community six miles south of Harlingen.

The Pampa Red Cross representatives ran a route which encompassed an eight-square block radius. In that area, they served 750 meals a day. "Sometimes we would run out of food before the route was finished," Duncan remembered. "Then we'd supplement with snacks and fruit if we had them."

"It was so sad to see kids come up all filthy and dirty with no shoes," she said. "They're clothes looked like they had been wallowed in the mud."

Sometimes Duncan would be so overcome with compassion for the flood victims that she would have to sit in the van and weep.

"It seemed to hit the lower income people the hardest," she said. "They all seemed to be living where the floodwaters came. Some of them didn't even have bathrooms in their homes."

The streets of the route they worked were lined with the ruined possessions of the people who lived there, she said. The only thing they could do was pile them up in front of the houses. Yet, despite this, the citizens there tried their best to put their community back in order. To demonstrate, Duncan showed a photograph of a teenage boy sweeping the street.

Two San Benito residents stand outside their flood-ravaged home after piling some of their ruined belongings on the street curb.

After a good cry, Duncan said she would dry her face, laugh at herself, and get back to work.

Duncan and Brawley served a small portion of the more than 3,200 families which suffered losses in the Rio Grande Valley due to the extensive flooding there.

"To date, more than $1.2 million in direct relief has been given to those who applied," Duncan said, explaining the flood victims were provided with places to live, clothing, food and furniture. "More than 10 percent of the 30,000 homes there had received damage to the living area."

During the initial days of the disaster, the Red Cross providing housing for 6,858 people with 10 mobile units providing food, she said. During the first two weeks, nearly 500 volunteers and paid staff came to the disaster area, she added.

The Southern Baptist disaster team prepared more than 50,000 meals — three hot meals a day. "It was a lot of beans and rice, but there was always meat in it," Duncan said. "And there was a lot of fruit, milk and juice served. Especially these elderly people, they wanted leche — milk. I got two calls for coffee the whole time I was there."

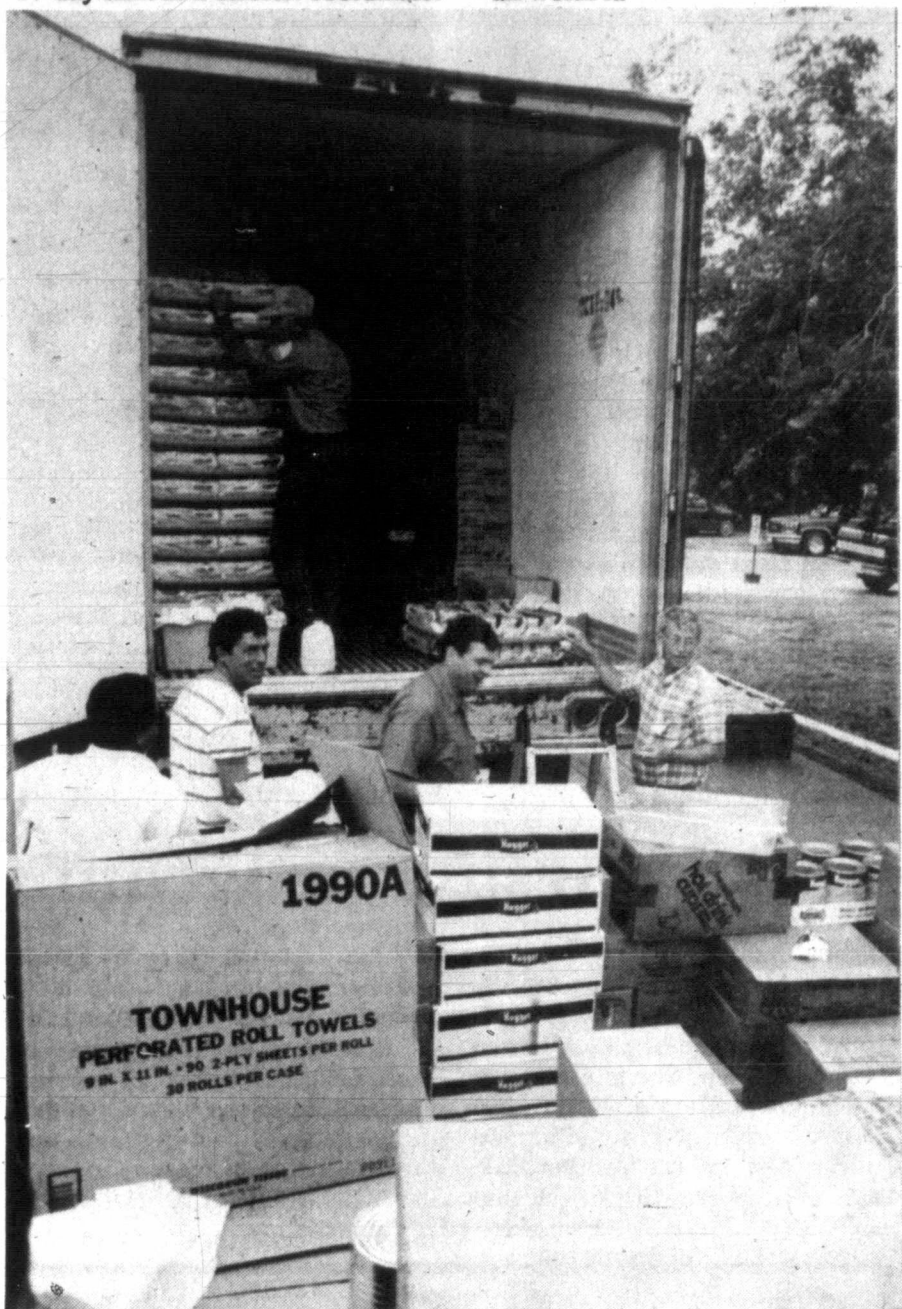

Duncan said members of the National Guard brought in drinkable water, and dug up streets to drain off the flood waters.

"On the whole, people worked together great," she said. "I met people I had met at disaster college."

Working this disaster has brought home to Duncan just how important it is to be prepared for such an event, she said. As a result of disaster donations, the Gray County Area Chapter will now receive disaster radio equipment for three vehicles. And she will continue to teach disaster courses at the local Red Cross, she said.

"I want everybody involved, because there's something everyone can do," she said. "No job is unimportant in time of a disaster."

Magazine: Air Force sent two huge bombs to attack command posts in Iraq

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force developed and deployed two giant bombs in just 17 days in an effort to destroy hardened Iraqi command bunkers where Saddam Hussein might have been, a defense industry publication said.

The 4,700-pound laser-guided bombs, designated the GBU-28, were dropped by two F-111F fighters on a military bunker complex just north of Baghdad in the last week of February, Aviation Week and Space Technology said in its May 6 edition.

One hit the wrong bunker but the other was on target, creating a huge explosion and reportedly killing a number of senior Iraqi military staff officers, the publication quoted Air Force officials as saying.

An Air Force spokeswoman, Capt. Sylvia Freeman, confirmed the development of the GBU-28, but could not provide details of the program.

Aviation Week said the makeshift bomb was built and fielded in 17 days after a request by Desert Storm officials that the Pentagon provide a weapon that would be more powerful and penetrate deeper than the 2,000-pound BLU-109 warhead.

The BLU-109 was being used with success against hardened Iraqi aircraft shelters.

The big bombs were targeted against the dug-in Iraqi high command and Saddam himself, although Air Force officials said they didn't know who was in the bunkers at the time of the attack, the magazine said.

It quotes Gen. Ronald Yates, commander of Air Force Systems Command, as saying the bombs were fabricated from old Army 8-inch artillery gun barrels, filled with molten explosives and loaded onto aircraft before they were fully cooled.

One bomb tested at Nellis Air Force Base in Nevada penetrated so deep into the ground that researchers still haven't recovered the weapon, Yates said.

He said C-141 transport planes carried the bombs to the Middle East, and within five hours of landing they were on their way to Iraq.

The bomb is capable of penetrating 100 feet or more of earth or 20 feet of concrete, Aviation Week said.

The remanufacturing of the bombs was done at Watervliet Arsenal in New York, with technicians at the Air Force Munitions System Division at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., putting in the explosives, the magazine said.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

By Danny

Plain cookies look — and taste — more exciting if they're dipped half way into melted chocolate. The French call them "petits four en demi-deuil," cookies in half mourning.

The color red makes food look sweeter. That's the conclusion of a taste-perception test by the Department of Food Science at the University Of Michigan. To most people, red represents riper, sweeter fruit, the scientists say.

While the pasta is cooking, warm 6 ounces of crumbled gorgonzola cheese with a cup of heavy cream, stirring all the while. Toss with the al dente pasta, then sprinkle with chopped walnuts and pignoli.

Make a citrus dessert — grapefruit and orange sections, perhaps — extra special with a dressing of one part lime juice to two parts honey. Sprinkle with a touch of grated lime zest.

The trick to creamy mashed potatoes: warm the milk or cream before beating it in.

Sarpalius recognized for business efforts

WASHINGTON — Congressman Bill Sarpalius' efforts on behalf of American business were recognized today by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which awarded him its 1990 "Spirit of Enterprise" award.

Sarpalius formally will be presented the award — his second during his two years in Congress — at a special ceremony June 11.

In giving the Amarillo Democrat the honor, U.S. Chamber President Richard L. Leshar cited Sarpalius' support of American business during 1990.

"We are proud to formally salute the accomplishments of a select group of Congressional members," Leshar said in a letter to Sarpalius. "To honor you and your colleagues, we have planned a reception (in your honor). I am very much looking forward to presenting you with this year's 'Spirit of Enterprise' award."

Sarpalius, a member of the House Small Business Committee, said he is deeply honored to receive the award for a second straight year.

"Throughout my public service career, I have tried to promote legislation that will create a positive business climate and oppose those bills that place unnecessary regulations on businesses," the congressman said. "Our ability to maintain a strong economy and a high employment rate in this nation hinges on business' ability to operate without unwarranted, excessive government intervention."

"I am flattered that a respected organization like the U.S. Chamber of Commerce has recognized these efforts, and I thank them for the honor."

In addition to the Chamber awards, Sarpalius also was honored last year with a Guardian of Small Business award from the National Federation of Independent Business.

Dreams of better life lead impoverished people to Bangladesh's storm-endangered islands

By DILIP GANGULY
Associated Press Writer

CHITTAGONG, Bangladesh (AP) — Dreams of owning a patch of land and the hope of eating at least one meal a day drive thousands of impoverished people to lead precarious lives on the vulnerable islands of Bangladesh.

Most of the silt islands off the east coast are just a few feet above sea level and become submerged in a normal monsoon tide in the Bay of Bengal. Every few years, a colossal cyclone or tropical storm kills thousands of people.

"To a foreigner, it almost looks like a death wish," said Mohammad Akram Bhuiyan, a government official in the port city of Chittagong. "You need to live in Bangladesh to feel how difficult it is for the poor to survive, even in best of times."

Tuesday's devastating cyclone claimed at least 125,000 lives, by official count. More than 635,000 people have died in storms in the last 21 years alone.

The pressure on land is enormous in Bangladesh, a nation of 110 million people the size of Wisconsin. An average of about 2,000 people pack each square mile, the third-highest density in the world after Hong Kong and Singapore.

Sixty percent of the people are landless, hungry for even a tiny patch of territory. Reliable estimates say four of every five Bangladeshis live below the poverty line, meaning they cannot afford two meals a day of rice with some vegetables or a piece of fish. The per capita income is just $170 a year.

The islands, which are less crowded, seem an attractive alternative.

Rich landlords in Chittagong organize and encourage new settlers on remote islands. In return, the settlers are bound to give them a percentage from the fish catch.

Often the settlers turn into virtual slaves, through a bonded labor system where the debt to the landlord goes on increasing and becomes unpayable.

"So you see it is not just nature that plays with the lives of these poor people, but their fellow man also is cruel to them," said a government relief official in Chittagong, who asked not to be identified.

The islands' romantic names belie the hardship and death many settlers find there. Nijhumdeep means Island of Silence, Sonadeep is Island of Gold, and Sonaimuri means Gold Cove.

"Tens of thousands of people migrate to the areas every year in search of a little land," said Karim Dad, one of the directors of the government's Relief Ministry.

The government estimates that 200,000 poor people are displaced by floods in the Meghna, Yamuna and Padma rivers every year. Some come to cities and live in slums, but most go to the islands in search of new homes.

Especially attractive to settlers are smaller islands newly created by the silt from the three mighty Himalayan rivers that empty into the bay.

Settlers make huts from palm leaves, stitch together a fishing net and ferry fresh water from other islands.

"Many of them know the danger, but still they migrate in thousands," Dad said. "Some die horrible deaths, as they did this week."

"Before we came here life was very very difficult," said Mohammad Kabir, a 30-year-old settler on Sonadeep, one of the worst affected islands along the 250-mile-long coastal belt that was hit by the storm. "Since we came here three years ago we often had fish and we had rice."

But his family paid a terrible price. Kabir, who had come to the island from Dhaka, lost his two daughters in the catastrophe.

The storms are not the only peril in the islands. In 1980, relations between India and Bangladesh were strained when they both claimed a newly emerged island. New islands often witness bloody clashes when rival groups fight for possession.

"Here we live with death," sighed a resident of Kutubdia island. "There is no escape."

Mother Teresa brings supplies to Bangladesh

By FARID HOSSAIN
Associated Press Writer

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Nobel laureate Mother Teresa arrived Saturday with sacks of milk powder and biscuits for victims of the deadly storm that ravaged Bangladesh.

"I have come here to give my love and care to the suffering people. It's good to share the suffering with them," said the 80-year-old Roman Catholic nun.

On Sunday, she is scheduled to visit areas damaged by the cyclone, possibly with Pakistan Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif, a Foreign Ministry official said.

Mother Teresa arrived from Calcutta, just across the border in India, where she runs a worldwide organization of more than 400 homes for the orphaned, poor, sick or dying. She won the Nobel Peace prize in 1979.

She set up a branch of her Missionaries of Charity in Bangladesh in 1972 and last visited in 1988 after a flood that killed 1,400 people. More than 125,000 people were killed by last week's storm.

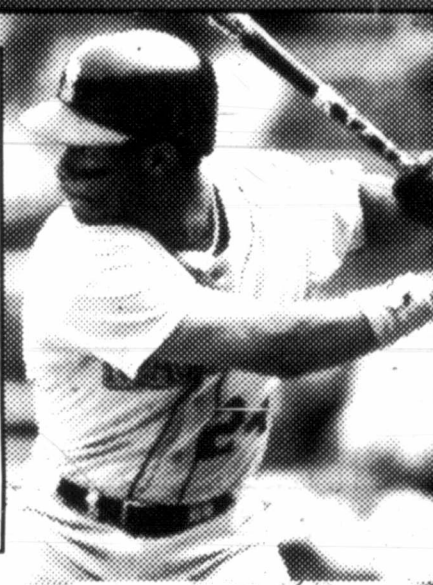

Mother Teresa brushed aside a government offer to stay in a luxury hotel and chose to stay in one of her organization's two missions in Dhaka. Her organization has six other missions in Bangladesh, but none in the areas affected by the storm.

Morrison sees future in natural beef

In more than 75 years of ranching on the High Plains northwest of Pampa, Canadian Production Credit Association (PCA) Board Chairman Don Morrison and his family have seen numerous changes.

The family's original 10,000-acre ranch has expanded to 36,000 acres, spread over Roberts and Hutchinson counties. Today, more work gets done with fewer ranch hands. And at round-up time, all-terrain vehicles often play a larger role than horses.

But the biggest change at Morrison Cattle Co. is the product, itself. Last year, the Morrises, in cooperation with Bradley's B3R meats in Childress, began producing hormone-free beef under the name, Horseshoe Feeders.

Recognizing a increasing demand for natural beef, the family bought a feedyard at Rule "where we thought we might have a better feeding climate," Morrison explains.

While they select their best Hereford, Angus and Beefmaster crossbred steers to finish in the feedyard, they also target custom feeders who do not use hormone implants.

"There is a willingness on the part of the consumer to pay more for natural beef," Morrison observes. The premium is based on carcass quality and can be as high as 10 cents per pound carcass weight, he says.

No implants, no hormones of any kind and no low-level antibiotics are used at Horseshoe Feeders where the cattle are fed an additive-free whole corn ration.

"If there is a sick animal, we just isolate it and don't sell it on the natural beef market," Morrison says. As for the growth factor, he says, "we've used hormones in our stocker cattle and felt we didn't get that much difference in gain."

The custom feedyard is managed by Don and Fran Morrison's eldest son, Dusty, with assistance from Jim, the youngest Morrison. Second son Frank lives in Pampa where he does the bookkeeping for both the ranch and feedyard. Morrison's cousin, Edrie Jones, is the other major stockholder in the family corporation. Her son-in-law and one other employee complete the ranch staff.

The cattle are slaughtered and marketed individually by B3R Meats when they reach optimum weight and finish. Bearing the federal natural beef label, most of the meat is retailed to upscale restaurants and food stores.

While the introduction of the hormone-free beef operation is probably the biggest change in four generations of ranching, Morrison also has seen dramatic changes in the cost of ranching.

"Since I became ranch manager in 1981, our ranch operating costs have doubled. And then when we took on the feedyard, they doubled again," he says.

Morrison Cattle Company has financed with Production Credit since the mid-thirties and Don Morrison has served on the board of Canadian PCA since 1974.

As chairman since 1984, "he does a crackerjack job," according to Canadian PCA President Larry Albin. "He's very dedicated and very knowledgeable, especially in the ranching area."

Those characteristics helped earn Morrison the position of Roberts County Commissioner. He also serves on the Soil and Water Conservation District board.

Although Horseshoe Feeders only marketed its first lot of cattle last October, Morrison is confident that "the future for natural beef is great." As the feedyard's slogan says, "We're taking the cattle industry into the 21st century."

Obstacles rather than incentives?

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Some economists sat around during the past weekend, talking like other people, ordinary people, about why the economy won't come out of recession.

The statistics just aren't working out the way they were forecast, they agreed. They wondered why. Before they abandoned the consensus forecast of a short and shallow recession they needed to know what was happening.

There are no incentives out there, said one. This is a consumer economy, he said, and consumers are frightened. Unemployment is rising, job security is tenuous, and pay raises have all but stopped.

Maybe interest rates need to come down another point or so before people will bite, said another, but they all agreed that the Federal Reserve was more concerned with restraining inflation than with making borrowing attractive.

Unattractive borrowing affects industries, too, added another economist. Why expand if the sales aren't out there? Besides, whatever they can borrow is only used to reduce debt — not to expand — so that doesn't help matters.

While they found few incentives in the marketplace, they agreed that there were lots of obstacles to expansion.

In Boston, one said, they can't connect new structures into the sewer system until the harbor is cleaned up, and something of that sort, on a lesser scale perhaps, is occurring all over the country.

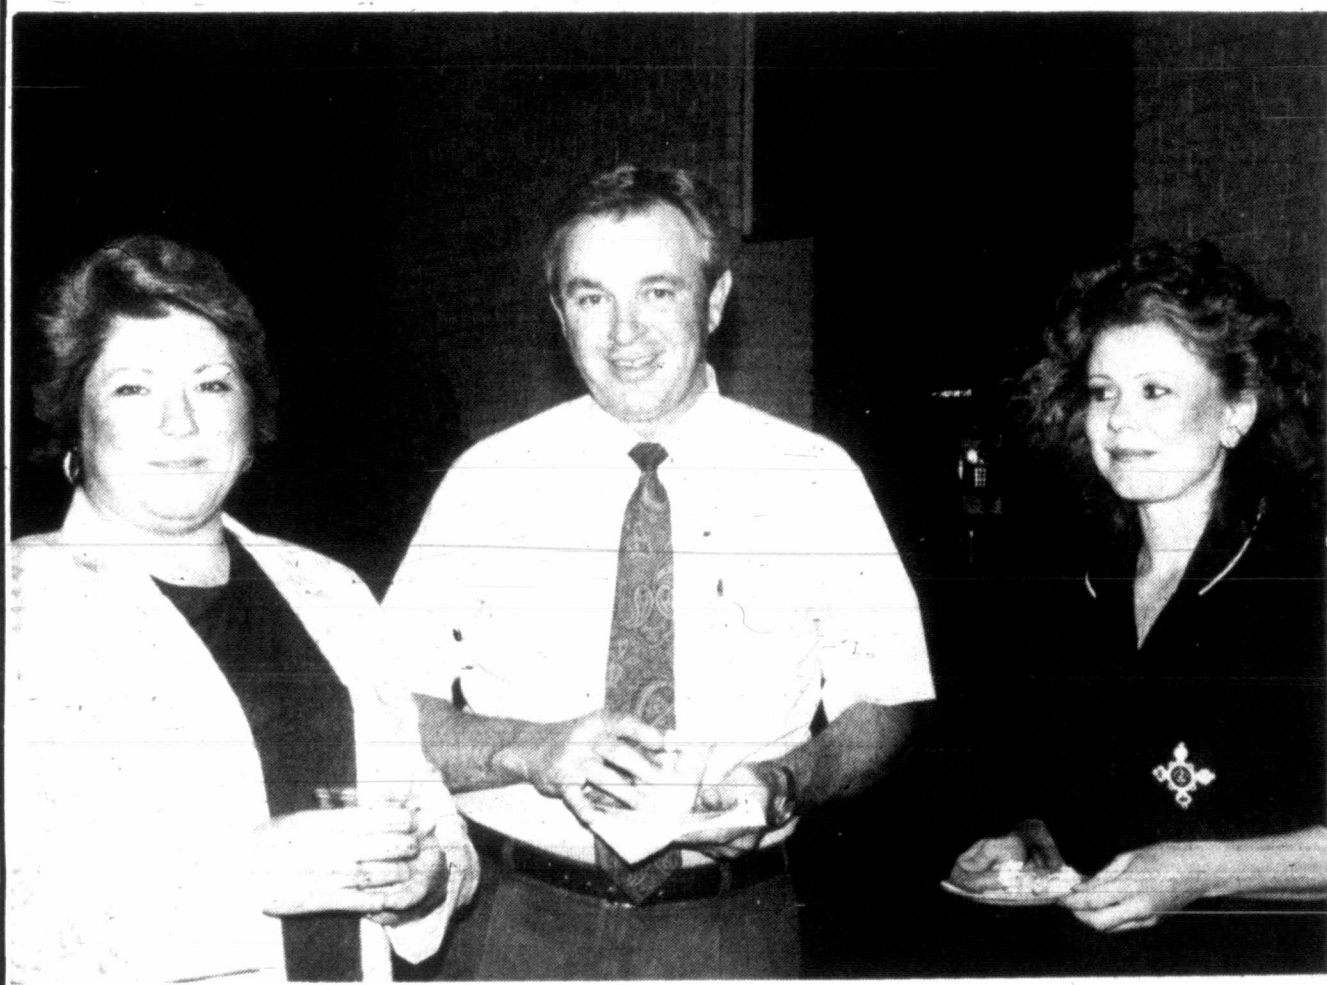

In Detroit, a group of U.S. legislators came away from a tour of automotive factories aghast to find the industry ensnared in regulations and directives and limitations that threatened the ability to compete.

All agreed that the tax situation also was an impediment to recovery. They noted that taxes are higher this year than last, and that even under more normal circumstances that would burden an economy.

But taxes atop a recession? Why that's supply-side economics in reverse, one said. He contended that if such a rationale were followed to conclusion it would mean ever higher taxes because high taxes would shrink the tax base.

The low savings rate, the high debt levels, the uncertainties, all were discussed.

Defense secretary explores more public role in the gulf

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney is heading to the Persian Gulf to present a framework for U.S.-Arab military cooperation in the region, which Pentagon officials say could include temporarily stationing American officers in the area.

Cheney is expected to discuss Pentagon proposals for placing a group of U.S. Central Command officers in the region — "fewer than 100 people," said spokesman Pete Williams.

Pentagon sources say military officials are also looking to station enough tanks, trucks and artillery to support a heavy division of 15,000-20,000 troops for weeks at a time and at setting up a near-constant flow of joint exercises for air, sea or ground troops.

It will be "something that will make clear to everybody, in particular to anybody who wants to mess around, that we will be back again if we are needed — and very, very fast," said a senior Pentagon official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The official, who is involved in the policy-making process, stressed that the United States has no intention of placing a permanent ground force in the region. President Bush is "very, very strong," against it, the official said.

"We want it to be sufficiently routine for us to turn up that it doesn't require a major sea change, or huge political gulf to cross, for the governments to ask us to come in" again if need be, the official said.

Cheney's surprise tour — announced only Friday afternoon — will take him to Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain, Qatar, Oman and the United Arab Emirates. On his last such Persian Gulf tour in August, Cheney obtained the first-ever agreements allowing U.S. troops in those nations in support of Operation Desert Shield.

"We're entering a new phase of our relationship with the nations of the Persian Gulf," Williams said of the four-day visit. Cheney leaves for the Mideast Sunday night.

Williams said no formal agreements would be signed during the visit, but that the administration wants to determine "what is the proper kind of presence for the United States in the region. ... We're interested in helping those nations protect themselves" in the postwar era.

"Cheney ... is going to present a framework of what we think the right mix of things should be," Williams said, with any agreements signed later.

However, the senior Pentagon official said "there might be some agreements in principle" reached during the trip.

He said the withdrawal of the 547,000 U.S. soldiers, sailors and airmen from the gulf has produced some "anxieties," among the Kuwaitis in particular, and the trip is designed to show them exactly what the United States is prepared to do instead.

While the numbers Cheney will discuss "are very, very small" compared with the 193,000 men and women still deployed in the region, the official said the overall plan is "the basic seed" that will allow a much larger U.S. force to return within days.

Several Pentagon sources said enough materiel could be placed in the region to support an armored division. That amounts to about 300 tanks, 300 armored troop carriers, 5,000 to 10,000 trucks, several hundred artillery pieces and more than 100 armored or scout helicopters.

Only several hundred people might be needed to maintain such a supply, military sources have said.

"The point is, if we'd had a division's worth of equipment on the ground on Aug. 3, we would have had a heavy division in place in four or five days ... instead of basically a month," the Pentagon official said.

A team of officers from the Joint Chiefs of Staff is in the gulf to assess the long-term security needs of the gulf states, in particular the longer-range arms sales agreements that Cheney won't delve into, the official said.

However, Cheney's meetings are expected to help answer the question of whether some U.S. war materiel will be left behind or sold to allies in the region.

Cheney has called for an "enhanced naval presence," in the gulf, which is expected to mean an aircraft carrier on a rotation basis, or even an amphibious Marine task force. And he has suggested that visits by U.S. Air Force tactical fighter squadrons and a "robust schedule" of troop exercises with nations in the region would be enough to deter any new threat.

"It used to be in this part of the world the United States' presence was welcomed, but not very publicly," Williams said. "Well, the war changed all that."

Fisherman abandons ship, uses cellular phone to call for help

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — When fisherman James Clemons' boat started sinking he grabbed his cellular telephone, jumped into a raft and dialed for help.

After abandoning his 45-foot trawler, Net Income, Clemons used the portable phone to call his wife and ask her to look up the number for the U.S. Coast Guard station.

"He said 'I'm on a life raft and the boat is sinking,'" Ann Clemons said. "It was a little bit odd."

Clemons then dialed the Coast Guard, said his boat sank and that he was in a raft with his crewman, Lyman Kennedy. He also asked if they'd send someone to pick them up, 17 miles out to sea.

"We were pretty surprised," said Petty Officer Robert Van Gorden, who took the call Friday morning. "It's the first time the operations department here can recall a cellular phone call from a life raft with that type of scenario behind it."

Van Gorden said he issued an urgent marine information broadcast, dispatched two aircraft from the Cape Cod Air Station and a 44-foot vessel. But two fishing vessels arrived first to rescue the two fishermen.

Strike the Gold captures Kentucky Derby

(AP Laserphoto)

Jockey Chris Antley takes Strike the Gold (bottom, far left) to victory in Saturday's 117th running of the Kentucky Derby.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Strike the Gold won the Kentucky Derby Saturday, thanks to the winning instinct of trainer Nick Zito and the winning move of jockey Chris Antley.

"I don't want to lose this horse," Zito told owner B. Giles Brophy last year, when it appeared that another of his owners, Calumet Farm, was going to sell the colt.

Brophy and two partners bought the son of Alydar, and Zito had his wish.

Going through the final turn at Churchill Downs, it looked as if the trainer's would collide with a tightly packed field inside. That's when Antley moved outside and took over.

Sensing a victory-denying traffic jam ahead of him at the top of the stretch, Antley found a hole and took Strike the Gold six horses wide. It was the path to a 1 3/4-length victory over the gelding Best Pal before the usual roaring throng at Churchill Downs, including Desert Storm commander Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf.

Antley sensed Strike the Gold was the horse of the moment even before he hit the home stretch.

On the backstretch, he told Angel Cordero, who was riding Quintana: "I've got the horse today."

There was an omen of things to come earlier in the program when Brophy's Thirty-Six Red, also trained by Zito, won the Churchill Downs Handicap. Thirty-Six Red finished ninth in last year's Derby.

"How much greater than this does it get for one guy on one day," said Brophy, who besides racing horses sells Holstein cattle all over the world. "I think I have the best trainer, the best jockey and the best horse going."

Strike the Gold was the third choice in the odds and the victory in an unspectacular 2:03 over a fast track maintained several Derby jinxes.

Hansel, 5-2, was the 12th consecutive beaten favorite, finishing 10th.

Spectacular Bid was the last winning favorite in 1979 and he was also the last champion 2-year-old of the previous year to win the Derby. Fly So Free, second choice at 3-1, was the 1990 juvenile champion — but fifth on Saturday.

Best Pal was trying to become the first gelding to win the Derby since Clyde Van Dusen in 1929, and the first California-bred winner since Decidedly in 1962.

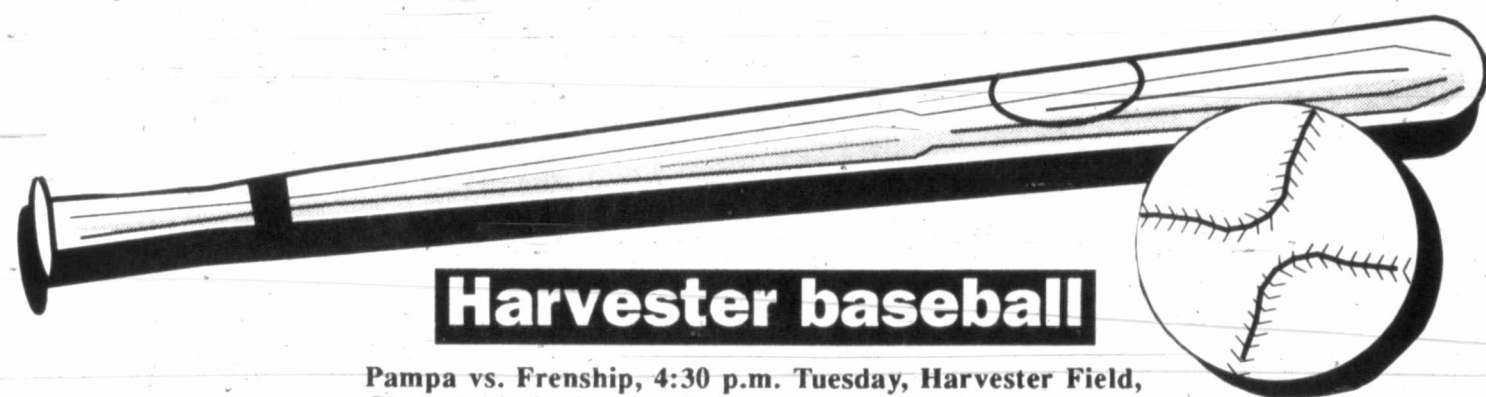

Mane Minister, a 60-1 shot, finished third, 1 3/4 lengths behind Best Pal and a head in front of Green Alligator, a member of the mutual field. The last field horse to win the Derby was Canonero II in 1971.

Zito certainly had Strike the Gold finely tuned and Antley certainly knew what to do with the pulsing, pounding colt beneath him. Known as "Boyfriend" for his playful manner around the barns, Strike the Gold turned into a tiger in the stretch.

Strike the Gold, also owned by William J. Condren and Joseph M. Cornacchia, carried 126 pounds. His second straight stakes victory and only his third win in eight career starts was worth a mutual payoff of $11.60, $6.20 and $5.40, and his share of the purse of $905,800 was $655,800.

Best Pal, ridden by Gary Stevens, paid $6.40 and $5.40. Mane Minister, ridden by Alex Solis, returned $25.60.

Frenship makes playoffs for first time

Pampa wins coin toss to get homefield edge

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Editor

The Pampa Harvesters have cashed in on timely hitting, aggressive baserunning, a strong defense and consistent pitching this season, but sometimes it helps to be lucky as well as good, especially in off-the-field maneuvers.

When an agreement couldn't be reached on a neutral site for the Class 4A bi-district game, Pampa and Frenship coaches decided to have a home and home coin toss to settle the issue.

The coin came up in Pampa's favor, giving the Harvesters the homefield advantage for the bi-district tilt, which will be played at 4:30 p.m. Tuesday at the PHS field.

Frenship, the District 2-4A runner-up, finished the regular season with a 22-8 record.

"We're a team without stars, but we've got four pitchers who have done a good job for us," said Frenship coach Bobby Davis.

Davis said a team slump at the plate probably prevented the Tigers from overtaking 2-4A champion Lubbock Estacado.

"We went three games where we had trouble scoring runs. Otherwise, we've hit the ball pretty good," Davis said.

Chris Matthews is the team's leading hitter at 444.

This is Frenship's first venture into the playoffs, but the school has only had a baseball program for five years.

"We feel like we've got a good program going now. Being in our first playoff, we're hoping we can get some kind of baseball tradition started here," Davis said.

The Harvesters are in the playoffs for only the third time in school history, posting an 8-2 district record and defeating Borger, 5-3, last Tuesday for the title.

Pampa, coached by Rod Porter, compiled an overall 20-3 record this season.

Last season under Porter the Harvesters were 22-4 for the year and shared the district championship with Lubbock Estacado. Pampa lost to Estacado in one-game playoff to determine the No. 1 and No. 2 seeds in the playoffs. Pampa's season was ended by Andrews, 5-2, in the bi-district game.

Pampa's 1979 team was the school's first post-season representative, defeating Amarillo High for the district championship in a playoff game after the two teams tied for first at the end of the regular season. The Harvesters lost to Lubbock Monterey in bi-district that year.

For Tuesday's game, Pampa's Quincy Williams (8-1) will be opposed by Frenship's B.J. Klier (7-1) on the pitcher's mound. Williams has a 2.10 earned run average for the season while Klier's ERA is 3.05.

Should Williams run into trouble, Porter can call on either Tarin Peet or Bryan Ellis to relieve. Peet has a 6-3 record and three saves to his credit. Ellis has won five of six mound outings and has saved one game.

The Harvesters have a pair of 400 hitters in outfielders Steve Sanders (432) and Russ Stephens (431). Sanders also leads the team in stolen bases with 15.

The Harvesters' RBI leader is catcher Kurt West, who has knocked in 40 runs to go with his .385 batting average. Third sacker Zach Thomas, who is batting .338, leads the team in home runs with five, one ahead of Williams and West.

Williams, second baseman Brad Smilie and outfielder Donnie Medley are hitting over .300 to help give the Harvesters a team batting average of .334.

Pampa High School girls' softball program gets underway at Optimist Park Four Pampa High School teams have been formed to begin the first Lady Harvesters' girls' softball program.

League play among the four teams started April 13 at Optimist Park with 55 players from the high school and middle school entered in the program.

Each team has 13 or 14 players ranging in age from 13 to 18 years of age. All of them must be academically eligible to participate and varsity letters will be awarded to deserving players at the end of the season May 23.

Head coach is Benny Horton, who along with seven other volunteers, conduct the practice sessions, manage the four teams and umpire the games.

Horton said there were plans to take two teams to play in the Abilene Tournament May 18. However, the tournament was canceled because several teams from that area had to withdraw.

"No area schools at this time have a program for girls' softball. It is hoped that the program started here will get the ball rolling and in the next few years other schools in the Panhandle will form teams for district play between the schools," Horton said.

Pampa's program is currently being funded by the National Bank of Commerce, First National Bank, Citizens Bank, Cabot-Pampa Plant, Randy's Foods, Fatheree Insurance and Warner-Horton Supply.

Coaches are Horton, Gary Epperson and Brad Chambers, Green Team; Randy Ratzlaff and Tacy Powers, Gray Team; Rick Nix and Pat Montoya, Gold Team and Gil Phetteplace and Fran Kludt, White Team.

The Green Team and the Gray Team are presently tied for league lead at 4-2. The Gold Team has a 3-2-1 record while the White Team is 0-5-1.

In Thursday night's action, the Green and Gray Teams both notched wins to move into a first-place tie.

Meredith Horton struck out eight while allowing five walks and six hits against the Gold Team in an 11-4 win for the Green Team.

Gia Nix took the loss, giving up six walks while striking out nine and allowing eight hits.

An eight-run outburst in by the Green Team in the first inning was the difference.

Meredith Horton and Crystal Mercer led the Green hitting attack with two hits each. Lorie Fulton, Kasey Bowers, Susan Thornton and Marissa Bailey each had one hit.

Joy Cambern made the play of the game, catching a line drive off the bat of Misty Plunk in right center field. She then threw Leslie Roberts out at first base for a double play in the third inning.

Julie Montoya had two hits, followed by Leslie Roberts, Gia Nix, Katie Hamilton and Dawn Fox with one hit each for the Gold.

In the following game Kelley Ford was the winner as Gray won over White, 19-9.

Ford gave up five hits, 12 walks and struck out four while losing pitcher Amanda Kludt allowed seven hits, 16 walks and struck out six.

Ford led Gray's hitting with three, while Rocky Pritchard had two. Heidi Phetteplace paced White with three hits. Irma Leal and Michelle Cassados had two hits each.

All games are played at Optimist Park on Thursday at 6 and 8 and Saturday at 11 and 1.

Former Pampa coach named TABC president

Former Pampa Harvester basketball coach Garland Nichols has been named president of the Texas Association of Basketball Coaches.

Nichols took over as TABC president at the annual TABC meeting last month in San Antonio. His term runs through the 1991-92 basketball season and concludes at the the Association's next meeting in 1992.

Nichols, a Byers native, is now coaching at South Garland High School in Garland. His 1991-92 team advanced to the area round of the state playoffs.

Bulls blitz 76ers in second-round opener

NBA playoffs

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan scored 29 points and Scottie Pippen had 24 as the Chicago Bulls beat the Philadelphia 76ers 105-92 Saturday in the opening game of their second-round NBA playoff series.

A hands-up, trapping defense kept the 76ers in check except for Charles Barkley, who scored 34 points before sitting out the final quarter, when the Bulls were in command. Jordan also sat out the final period.

The Bulls opened a 20-point lead in the first quarter, saw it dwindle to 10 points late in the half, then came on with another rush to open a 23-point lead early in the second half.

Bill Cartwright scored 14 points for the Bulls, all in the first half, and Horace Grant had 12. Andre Turner had 11, and Hersey Hawkins and Manute Bol each scored 10 for the 76ers.

The teams meet in Game 2 Monday night at Chicago Stadium, before the best-of-7 series shifts to Philadelphia for Games 3 and 4.

The Bulls took an 8-2 lead, then outscored the 76ers 11-4 with Pippen, Cartwright and Jordan leading the assault for a 19-6 lead. Pippen and Cartwright kept pouring it on as they helped build a 34-14 margin.

A three-point play by Barkley and a 3-point goal by Ron Anderson cut it to 34-20 at the quarter.

Barkley hit a pair of free throws to open the second quarter and three-point goals by Barkley and Hawkins helped the 76ers pull within 40-29, but the Bulls scored six quick points, four by Jordan, to go up 46-29.

The 76ers got it down to 10 points at 52-42 with 1:36 left in the second quarter, but Pippen scored three points and Jordan hit a pair of free throws with 5.9 seconds left. The Bulls then trapped Rickey Green, got the ball back and Jordan scored with one-tenth of a second left for a 59-42 halftime lead.

Pippen hit a 3-pointer to open the second half, extending what turned out to be a 17-4 run that carried over from the first half as the Bulls took a 69-46 lead with 8:50 to go in the third period. It was 83-63 after three quarters, with the reserves playing for both teams in the final period.

Trail Blazers 119, Sonics 107

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The Portland Trail Blazers returned to their basic strengths, defense and rebounding, to beat Seattle 119-107 Saturday and finally eliminate the SuperSonics from the playoffs.

Terry Porter had 23 points, Clyde Drexler added 22 and Porter had 11 assists as the Blazers won the best-of-5 series 3-2 to advance to a second-round matchup against Utah. Game 1 of that series will be Tuesday night at Portland.

The Sonics, trying to become the first No. 8 seed to win a playoff series, beat Portland twice in Seattle to force Saturday's deciding game. But the Sonics never challenged seriously after the second quarter on Portland's homecourt, where the Blazers have lost only five times this season.

Portland led by 22 in the second quarter and 20 at halftime. Seattle never got closer than the final margin in the second half and trailed by as many as 30.

Cliff Robinson came off the bench to score 20 for Portland. Eddie Johnson and Shawn Kemp scored 17 apiece for Seattle, but Johnson had only seven in the final three quarters.

The Blazers, who had the NBA's best regular season record at 63-19 but were on the brink of the biggest playoff upset in league history, used an 11-0 run to take the lead for good late in the first quarter.

Portland, led by Robinson's 11 points, outscored the mistake-prone Sonics 33-18 in the second quarter. An 18-5 Portland run gave the Blazers a 62-40 lead on Porter's driving layup with 52 seconds left in the half. Portland led 63-43 at halftime.

The Trail Blazers ended any faint hopes for a Seattle rally by outscoring the Sonics 8-2 to start the final quarter, building their lead to 28 points. Drexler, playing with four fouls, scored six during the spurt.

The Sonics made the final score respectable with a late surge against reserves.

Harassing defense put Portland in control in the second quarter.

The Blazers had 22 points off Seattle turnovers in the first half, compared with seven for the Sonics. The Sonics averaged 12 turnovers in the first four games against Portland, but had that many by halftime Saturday and finished with 19.

Portland also had a 22-6 advantage in offensive rebounds, 13-3 in the first half. The Blazers out-rebounded Seattle 49-31, led by Buck Williams with 12.

Porter had 10 points and five assists in the third quarter.

Warriors 110, Spurs 97

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The San Antonio Spurs' early exit from the NBA playoffs with an opening series loss to the underdog Golden State Warriors symbolizes the troubled year the Spurs endured.

What began with hope soon gave way to hardship and heartbreak.

"We just didn't deserve to go any further than we did," said Spurs guard Willie Anderson. "We've been an inconsistent team all year. I've been an inconsistent player all year. That's the way we played this series."

Golden State defeated the Spurs 110-97 in Oakland Friday night to win the best-of-5 Western Conference series three games to one. The Warriors advance to play the Los Angeles Lakers.

The Midwest Division champion Spurs, 55-27 in the regular season, were seeded second in the conference. The Warriors, at 44-38, were seventh.

Still, Golden State and its on-target outside shooters overpowered the Spurs and their inside game dominated by 7-1 center David Robinson.

"We just let them get aggressive and take the game away from us. This loss is a tough one, and I don't feel I fulfilled my responsibility," Robinson said.

San Antonio began the season still reeling from a Game 7 overtime loss to the Portland Trail Blazers in the semifinals last year after having set the all-time NBA record for the best single-season turnaround from one season to the next.

Red Sox Clemens' returns to beat White Sox

By STANLEY D. MILLER

Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — After an unwanted five-game vacation, Roger Clemens had energy to burn.

Clemens, returning from a five-game suspension, threw a five-hitter Friday night as the Boston Red Sox beat the Chicago White Sox 7-2 — then went for a run.

"You never get your legs enough of a workout when it's cold," Clemens said.

It was 47 degrees at game time at Comiskey Park with a brisk north-east wind. Drizzle started late in the third inning and continued throughout the game, but it didn't dampen Clemens' pitching.

"He told me he didn't even feel like he pitched tonight, that's how strong he was," Red Sox manager Joe Morgan.

Clemens was suspended for his verbal battle with umpire Terry Cooney in last year's AL playoffs, putting his 30-inning scoreless streak and 4-0 record on hold.

The scoreless streak came to a quick end, as Clemens gave up a leadoff single to Tim Lincecum, then bobbled Lance Johnson's pop-up bunt 40 feet from the plate. Robin Ventura laid a perfect bunt down the third-base line to load the bases, and after Carlton Fisk fled out, Clemens walked Frank Thomas to score Raines.

Dan Pasqua hit a sacrifice fly to deep left field, scoring Johnson, and Clemens appeared to be in trouble. Emphasis on appeared.

"I thought it was going to be a long night. I had to settle in, try to get some momentum going," Clemens said.

"I thought we had something going," White Sox manager Jeff Torborg said. "But we only got two hits the rest of the way. That's what a dominating pitcher can do."

Clemens got out of the first without further damage and went on to strike out seven, walk two and allow five hits for his fifth win without a loss. He retired 11 straight batters from the third out in the third through the first out in the seventh.

"He threw the ball about as hard as I've seen the ball thrown," White Sox manager Jeff Torborg said. "He threw some rockets. I've caught Nolan (Ryan) when he's thrown 102 mph, and from the side those sure looked pretty close to that to me."

Ironically, Cooney had a good view of Clemens' return — he was the first base umpire.

"It's been a long winter," Cooney said before the game. "Roger had his two hearings and they both came out the same way."

Hopes for peace rise as Lebanese army restores state authority

By DONNA ABU-NASR
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — These days, hospital wards are filled with accident victims and soccer players with broken ankles, not wounded militiamen or civilians hit by shell splinters.

Beirut is rising from the ashes once again.

Thousands of Lebanese who fled the carnage now plan to return and are enrolling their children in schools. Workers are scraping morbid photos of militia "martyrs" off the city's walls and putting up colorful posters for concerts and carnivals.

Peace really seems at hand this time, after 16 years of civil war that cost an estimated 150,000 lives and displaced one-fourth of the 4 million people who lived in Lebanon.

On the orders of President Elias Hrawi, soldiers moved into the cantons of Maronite Catholics and Druze Muslims northeast and southeast of Beirut this week, exerting government authority there for the first time in years.

The main Maronite and Druze militias are surrendering their heavy weapons in the second phase of a peace plan arranged by the Arab League. Militias withdrew from Beirut during the first phase, in December.

Disarming other factions, the final and most difficult stage, is to begin July 1.

That will put the army in direct confrontation in the south with the Palestine Liberation Organization and Israel's surrogate South Lebanon Army, and in the east with the Iranian Revolutionary Guards and their Shiite Muslim protegee militia Hezbollah, or Party of God.

These groups refuse to surrender their weapons. The Israelis and their allied militia occupy a border zone and refuse to relinquish it because of the threat from the PLO and other guerrilla factions.

Still, the civil war that began in April 1975 appears to have ended.

Gone is the Green Line, a detested no-man's land running for five miles between the Christian and Muslim sectors of Beirut. The army bulldozed it.

People are visiting old friends on the other side for the first time in a decade.

Christian militia commander Samir Geagea and Walid Jumblatt, the Druze warlord, have declared publicly that they consider the war over.

"A new peace is dawning," said Geagea, once a medical student and now commander of the Lebanese Forces. "Arise in welcome, salute it and be happy for its arrival."

As-Safir, a leftist Beirut daily, declared in response: "This is like an official obituary for the era of the militias."

Hrawi's authority depends largely on the support of Syria, which has 40,000 soldiers in Lebanon under a 1976 peacekeeping mandate from the Arab League, but the army now controls about one-fourth of the country.

More importantly, many of the militiamen who strutted the Beirut streets and fought each other in turf wars have resigned themselves to the loss of power — at least for the time being.

Some feel bitter. "We're the ones who risked our lives for Lebanon," one said. "The army's just taking over after we did the dirty and dangerous work for them."

Most Lebanese seem to feel their nightmare is finally over and Hrawi can start putting the shattered economy back together.

Beirut will need years of rebuilding to become the commercial center of the Middle East, as it was before 1975.

It may never again be the playground of Arab oil sheiks and high rollers, but with financial backing from Saudi Arabia and other Persian Gulf states, the Lebanese are ready to take their best shot.

"The war's over. It's really true. It's no longer just a dream," said Hiyaam Shami, a Muslim secretary. "It's the first time since the war started that I've felt this way, this good."

More than 50 restaurants and boutiques have opened in recent months. Gutted stores have acquired new facades, and churches and hotels have been renovated.

Stone blocks and sandbags that protected stores and apartments from shrapnel and gunfire are being moved away. Underground shelters, where thousands of families spent weeks on end when the fighting raged, are being cleaned and closed, in hopes they won't be needed again.

Police, after years as hapless bystanders to militia battles, are beginning to reassert their authority.

They also have a new mission: wiping out packs of stray dogs that lived in the Green Line ruins, feeding off the corpses of slain gunmen.

The dogs now scavenge in residential areas, terrifying the people.

Operations are resuming at the battered international airport, but it is used only by Middle East Airlines, Lebanon's national carrier, and a few eastern European airlines. The Dutch airline KLM and others are sending teams to discuss resuming flights, many for the first time in at least 15 years.

Gorbachev makes concessions, but Armenian leaders are still angry

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev has halted plans to deport Armenians from violence-torn areas of Azerbaijan and ordered helicopters to evacuate the wounded, Armenia's president said Saturday.

Tens of thousands of Armenians, meanwhile, jammed Independence Square in Armenia's capital of Yerevan to mourn the latest victims of the ethnic violence. Soviet television showed two coffins hoisted shoulder-high amid the huge crowd.

At a Moscow news conference, Armenian President Levon Ter-Petrosian said he won the concessions from Gorbachev in a 90-minute meeting in the Kremlin on Friday. The meeting followed fighting this week that cost 36 lives.

Gorbachev also met separately Friday with Azerbaijani President Ayaz Mutalibov to try to quell the latest bloodshed between the southern republics. Neither Mutalibov nor Gorbachev commented on the session.

Ter-Petrosian angrily accused the Soviet leadership of waging "state terrorism" against his tiny republic.

He said he had complained forcefully to Gorbachev that mass deportations of Armenians from Azerbaijan would represent an escalation in the conflict. After the meeting, he received a phone call from KGB Chairman Vladimir Kryuchkov, who told him "the question of deportations has been taken off the agenda," he said.

Armenian officials have accused Azerbaijan and Soviet troops of deporting some Armenians from border areas and planning to deport many more. No independent figures on the number of deportees or refugees are available.

Ter-Petrosian said 36 civilians were killed and scores wounded when Soviet and Azerbaijani troops attacked the villages of Getashen and Martunashen on Monday. The villages are inside Azerbaijan, but most of their 2,760 residents are ethnic Armenians.

An Armenian lawmaker charged Thursday that people injured in the fighting were dying because Soviet troops were preventing doctors from treating them. Ter-Petrosian said he raised the issue with Gorbachev, who agreed to allow helicopters to evacuate the injured.

Ter-Petrosian, who has been Armenia's president since August, claimed the attack was part of a plan to force Armenians out of disputed areas of Azerbaijan.

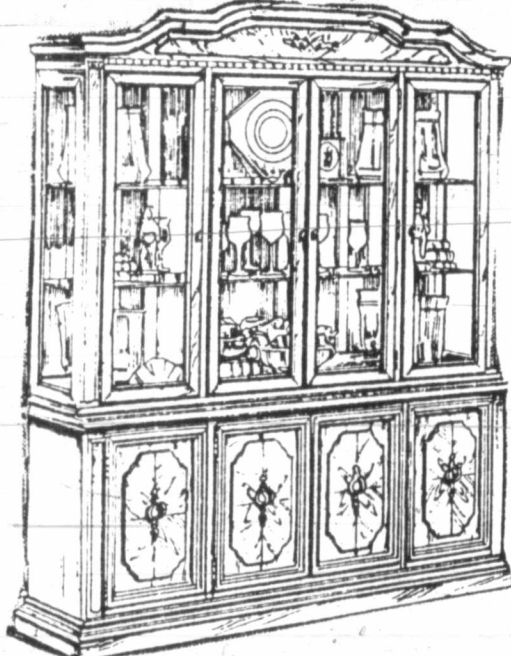

He also called it an attempt to prop up the pro-Moscow leadership of Azerbaijan and to punish Armenia's efforts to secede from the Soviet Union.

"Armenia has begun the process of obtaining independence ... Naturally, the totalitarian regime in Moscow cannot tolerate this. Punishment must follow," he said.

He compared the recent attacks to riots last year in which scores of Armenians were killed in the Azerbaijani cities of Sumgait and Baku. But he said there was one major difference.

"In Sumgait and Baku, the pogroms were carried out by an enraged mob. In Getashen the pogrom was organized by the Soviet army and Interior Ministry troops. That's a completely new phenomenon and a terrible precedent."

Pampa Elementary Chorus presents "The Music Man", May 6-7, M. K. Brown Auditorium

"The Music Man" presented by the Pampa Elementary Chorus opens Monday, May 7, and plays again, Tuesday, May 8, 7:30 p.m. at M. K. Brown Auditorium.

Cast members include: Christopher Harrison, Wayne Bryan, Jarrett Parsons, Tommy Caldwell, and Seth Lewis as travelling salesmen; Dustin Laycock as Charlie Cowell; Brian Doss as the conductor; Spencer Neff as Harold Hill; Michael Plunk as Mayor Shinn; Preston Reed as Ewart Dunlop; Tyson Alexander as Oliver Hix; David Dennis as Jacey Squires; Matthew Kirkpatrick as Olin Britt; Chad Epperson as Marcellus Washburn; Blake Bass as Tommy Dillas; McKinley Quarles as Marian Paroo; Amber Crosswhite as Mrs. Paroo; Vanessa Vining as Amaryllis; Thann Scoggin as Winthrop Paroo; Sarah Landry as Eulalie Mackecknie Shinn; Donielle McNabb as Zaneeta Shinn; Rose Fruge as Gracie Shinn; Mindee Stowers as Alma Hix; Katie Cavalier as Maud Dunlop; Faustine Curry as Ethel Toffelmier; Kristi Johnson as Mrs. Squires; and Brent Story as Constable Locke.

River City, Iowa, 1912, is the setting for Meredith Willson's, "The Music Man". Professor Harold Hill is a flamboyant salesman who came to River City to sell a boys band to the stubborn Iowans. They fall for him, hook, line, and sinker—all except for the stuffy librarian, Marian Paroo—for whom Professor Hill falls. The town comes alive as the townspeople get excited about the boys band, and the ladies of the community start a ladies dance committee. River City is no longer a stuffy, stubborn town, thanks to the fast talking salesmanship of Professor Hill. Mayor Shinn is skeptical of Hill's credentials, and repeatedly sends the school board after him. Professor Hill manages to allude them by getting them to sing everytime they corner him and with the help of his friend, Marcellus, gets out of many a scrape. The audience will see how Professor Harold Hill gets his foot caught in the door, and how "The Think System" changes the lives of those who live in River City, Iowa.

Parents call different tunes for son's post-prom party

DEAR ABBY: Our oldest son, "John," is going to his first prom. He is 16 1/2 years old and a junior in high school.

John and three other couples planned to rent a hotel room for a post-prom party, and, of course, drink beer. I suggested to my husband that we should have the kids back to our house for a post-prom party. No. 1: I won't have to worry all night about John and his friends being out and drinking. No. 2: We live five miles from the school where the prom will be held. No. 3: It won't cost us a cent because the kids will pay for their own beer and snacks.

I could keep all of the car keys so no one would have to drive. Also, I could give them all coffee in the morning before they leave.

Well, my husband went nuts! He says I am encouraging the kids to drink.

I tried to explain that this was a special occasion, and they are going to drink anyway. He thinks I am 100 percent wrong in suggesting they come here, and I think I am 100 percent right. Also, I would feel a lot better knowing the kids will be in our house after the prom.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

CONCERNED MOTHER

DEAR CONCERNED MOTHER: I vote with your husband. To condone teen-agers drinking beer or any kind of alcoholic beverage in one's home because "they are going to drink anyway" is, in my view, a feeble excuse. Furthermore, providing minors with alcohol is in violation of the law.

If the children were mine, I would insist on hosting the party in my home and providing the snacks, the soft drinks—and the supervision.

DEAR ABBY: For me, the war in the Persian Gulf and its end have brought to mind that fine film "To Kill a Mockingbird." The story was about Atticus Finch, a Southern gentleman, a competent attorney, a good father and husband, a peaceful man. Some might even call him a boring man.

One summer afternoon, a rabid dog came down the street and sent the residents into a panic. Finch came out of his house with a rifle and calmly and expertly killed the beast with one well-placed bullet.

Finch did not smile, strut, raise the rifle, exchange high fives, or in any other way celebrate his accomplishment. An unpleasant task had been thrust upon him, he did what had to be done, he solved the problem, and then went back to the business of being Atticus Finch.

To those who so expertly performed the unpleasant tasks thrust upon you in the Persian Gulf, thank you and God bless you. Accept the appreciation of a grateful nation. We are glad to have you home, and are pained by the memory of those who will not return.

Take a full measure of quiet pride in a job well done. And then, let's all get back to the business of peace.

CHUCK EVANS, ERIE, PA.

DEAR CHUCK: Thank you for a thoughtful letter. And to all the men and women who will not return home for many months (or years) due to their commitment to the military, we owe a special debt of gratitude.

CONFIDENTIAL TO WONDERING IN SAN JOSE, CALIF.: No man gets mean when he drinks. He was mean to begin with—but he managed to cover it up in his more sober moments.

Pampa's Enrichment Program, PEP, opens nominations for fall term

In an effort to meet the needs of more students in the Pampa Independent School District, Pampa's Enrichment Program, called "PEP," is being developed. This is according to a press release submitted by Cay Warner, a member of the committee which developed the proposal.

All grades, kindergarten through seniors in high school, will be offered enrichment activities to stimulate further academic development. The academic enrichment activities will begin with the 1991-1992 school year.

Broad-based enrichment will be given to all students, but there will be a large group of identified students who receive further services. This group may be nominated by parents, teachers, or community members.

Following nomination, a screening process will take place. Those qualifying will receive academic instruction in their area of identified strength. In upper grade levels, these students will be able to take specialized instruction within specific subject areas, such as language arts or science.

According to the release, those who wish to nominate students for PEP may contact the building principal where the pupil attends.

Nominations for students presently in kindergarten, first, or second grade will be taken May 6 through May 10. Others may be nominated after school begins in August.

PEP is the result of a committee's work which began in March. The committee has been guided by Jane Steele, Assistant Superintendent for Instruction. Karen Black, Boy's Ranch Independent School District, has consulted with the committee, which is composed of parent, teachers, counselors, and administrators.

Members are Edith Bailey, Sue Burrell, Sara Carmichael, Kay Crouch, Jim Duggan, Sharron Hurst, Bill Jones, JoAnn Jones, Janyce Osborne, Cheryl Robbins, Peggy Rodriguez, Lynn Smith, and Cay Warner.

Pampans attend credit union meeting; PHS looks forward to 50th anniversary in building

All kinds of weather and all kinds of activities make for a good way to check on friends and neighbors.

A couple of weeks ago, Pampa was well represented at the Texas Credit Association's annual meeting in Dallas. The Cabot Credit Union had 25 there: Weldon and Elizabeth Carter, Bob and Mike Keagy, Bill and Leona Willis, Dalton and Jean Lewis, Maynard and Georgia Johnson, Keith and Melody Oliphant, Mark and Karen Lane, Hollis and Rosella Stout, Gene and Eldora Willis, George and Hazel Clark, W.H. and Elva Lewis, Bill and Cathy Hammer, Colleen Devore. Representatives from other credit unions were Charlene and Roy Morris, Pampa Branch, Amarillo Credit Union; Eva Joyce Timmons, Lefors; Shirley Waller, Pampa Teachers; Leanna Cowan, Phil-pet; David McKinney, Carol Houck and Pat Lee, Pampa.

At least a dozen of Pampa High School students of the classes of 1942, '43, '44, and '45 generated a lot of enthusiasm for a whopping celebration on September 13-14, 1991, to mark the 50th anniversary of the opening of the present PHS building. Principal Dan Coward expressed interest in the celebration from the school's standpoint. Attending were Juanita Romines, Tom Teague, and Lemond Hall, 1942; Martha Holt and Tillie Stephens, 1943; Julia Dawkins, Margie Moore, John Paul McKinley, J. C. and Pattie Hopkins, Eleanor Williams, 1944; Bob Carmichael and Jean Casey, 1945.

If you have out of town addresses for students from 1942 through 1945, please call anyone mentioned. This celebration should be a special one.

At the April Chamber of Commerce membership luncheon Johnnie Donaldson and Hildred Bates received a 'pat on the back award' for brightening the days of others. The Regional Eye Center, Dr. George Walters, was spotlighted by Kayla Pursley. By the way, did you know Kay Walters recently purchased the Pampa Travel Agency?

Little Braden Bliss of Amarillo and the five-month-old son of Paula and Gregg, spent last weekend with his grandparents Ann and Dick Wall. Surely he was the perfect house guest! Ann, known for her expertise in the designing and tailoring departments, takes great delight in creating all kinds of cute clothes for the little one. Sunday he was dressed in navy denim rompers with an elephant appliqued on the front.

Karen is sporting a brand new, completely different hairdo. Very spiffy!

Lots of Pampans shopped the local nurseries last Saturday and Sunday, then hurried home to get them set out. A few of the eager landscape improvers were Jessie Newberry, Barbara and Ferrell Baird (for their rural home), Yong Menkhoff, who stays busy around the clock, Katie Taylor, who plants two gardens, one for her mother, and Leon, who helps after the planting is done: Kathleen Hipkins and her daughter Janice Porter. Is Kathleen a former flower-ship owner? She is so artistic and full of good ideas, backed by plenty of know-how. Kay Roberts was busy as a bee putting out flats of colorful flowers and enjoying the beauty of each. Weekdays Kay works at National Bank of Commerce.

Katherine Taylor was seen shopping, but not doing her daily walks because of an injured ankle. Kathering always has a broad smile and a kind word to share where ever she goes.

Shoppers at the recent Lilli Ann Trunk Show at Images had fun while viewing and ordering fall duds. Some of the ladies were Wylene Curtis, Freda Lemond, Charlene Morris, Burma Baker and her daughter Melissa Nichols, visiting her mom, Fannie Cree, here for a family and friends visit, Betty White.

Vic Raymond and Jack Reeve are back home after a several week business trip in Russia. Welcome home!

Thanks to the person who dropped a note reporting two special birthdays. Chris Wells, a retired oilfield worker, celebrated his 85th birthday early in the week. Chris spends several hours a week sitting in front of Wal-Mart where he can visit with friends and shoppers. At 85, Chris still takes time to see about and often share a dish he concocted with some of his old cronies. He's another good Pampa gardener. Belated birthday wishes, Chris!

Birthday wishes to Dr. R. M. Bellamy, who celebrates his 90th birthday today. Dr. Bellamy was a well-respected, well-loved Pampa physician for more than 55 years, and a joy to remember.

Rebecca Lewis graduated from Clarendon College-Pampa Center with honors. She is a computer and music teacher at St. Vincent's School.

Last week, an error was made in the spelling of a name. Hattie Roche, a Pampa citizen, wrote to tell me the correct spelling of her name; plus that her name has been well-known in Ireland since the 12th century. That's a long time to carry on a family name!

See you next week. Katie.

Mary Chesher, left, awards Tamara Lane a $500 scholarship from the Gray County Extension Homemakers Council.

Lane is scholarship recipient

The Gray County Extension Homemakers Council awarded a $500 educational scholarship to Tamara Lane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Lane.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Lane. Lane has been a 4-H member for nine years with her major project area in the 4-H fashion show contest, fashion revue and recordbook competition. She was selected as Pampa's ambassador to the Hugh O'Brien Leadership Conference in 1989 and she was awarded the 4-H Gold Star that same year.

In addition to her 4-H involvement, Lane has been active in the Pampa High School band, all-region band, and the marching band. She served as an officer in the Fellowship of Christian Musicians, served as youth representative on the First United Methodist Church Administrative Board, and volunteered at Coronado Hospital. Lane plans to attend Texas Tech University to study optometry/ophthalmology.

Each year the Gray County Extension Homemakers Council awards a scholarship to a 4-H boy or girl in Gray County. To be eligible, a 4-H'er must have completed a minimum of three years of 4-H work, have at least a B average, and plan to attend college during the fall and spring semesters following selection by the scholarship committee. Scholarship recipients are selected based on 4-H project work, 4-H leadership, community, school, and church involvement.

While the federal government struggles to write regulations for nutritional labeling of meat, consumers are still trying to make sense out of required labels on other foods. Many times it is hard to choose the right foods because their nutrition labels can be extremely confusing, if not misleading.

More consumers today are concerned about their health and realize how important it is to cut fat, sugar, and sodium in their diets. While many consumers value nutrition labels, all are not clearly understood.

The Food and Drug Administration requires a food label to state the name and address of the manufacturer and to list ingredients in the descending order of weight. Calorie information is optional.

Terms such as "light" and "lite" are misleading because they have no standard definitions. Yet, they are used to appeal to consumers. "Lite" can refer to color, taste, texture, or calories. For example, a "lite" pancake syrup may refer to its color only. The ingredient list or nutrient chart on the label may help determine what a term means.

A nutrition issue of major concern is sodium or salt content in foods. Most Americans consume between 4000 and 6000 milligrams (about 2-1/2 teaspoons) of sodium a day, which is safe amount for people.

Understanding nutrition labels

Homemakers' News

Donna Brauchi

ple in good health. Quantities would be noticeably less in low-salt diets. The minimum daily requirements for sodium for adults is 500 milligrams - less than one-fourth teaspoon of salt.

Some of the most commonly misunderstood terms are defined here:

- Sodium free or no sodium - Less than 5 milligrams (mg) of Sodium per serving.

- Very low sodium - No more than 35 mg per serving.

- Low sodium - Less than 140 mg per serving.

- Reduced sodium - At least 25 percent less sodium compared to the food it replaces (which must be named on the labels).

- Unsalted, Salt free, No salt added, Without salt added - Salt cannot be used or added during processing. Note, however, that some foods such as celery and carrots naturally contain salt.

- Low in calories - Less than 40 calories per serving. But always check the label to find how much is considered a serving; these can vary widely, sometimes to make a high-calorie food seem less so.

- Reduced calories - One-third fewer calories than similar product. Meat and poultry must contain 25 percent fewer calories than similar product.

- Lean - No more than 10 percent fat by actual weight, not by calories.

- Extra lean - No more than 5 percent fat by weight, not by calories.

- Leaner - At least 25 percent less fat (by weight) than the original product.

- Sugar-free, sugarless - Contains no sucrose, but may contain corn syrup, fructose (levulose), honey, sorbitol, or other sweeteners; not necessarily low in calories.

- Dietetic - One or more ingredients has been changed, substituted, or restricted; not necessarily low in calories.

- Enriched - Replacement of nutrients lost in manufacturing.

- Fortified - Addition of nutrients to foods that did not originally contain them.

PINEAPPLE-GRAPEFRUIT ICE

1 cup sugar
1/2 cup warm water
One 16-ounce jar refrigerated unsweetened grapefruit sections
One 15 1/4-ounce can crushed pineapple (juice pack)

In a 4-cup measure stir sugar into warm water until nearly dissolved. In a blender container or food processor bowl combine half of the sugar mixture, half of the undrained grapefruit, and half of the undrained pineapple. Cover; blend or process until nearly smooth. Pour into a 9-by 5-by 3-inch loaf pan. Repeat with remaining ingredients and another loaf pan. Cover; freeze for 4 hours or until almost firm.

Transfer the frozen mixture to a chilled large mixer bowl. Beat on medium speed about 2 minutes or until fluffy. Return the beaten mixture to the cold loaf pan. Cover and freeze for 6 hours or until firm. If necessary, let stand for 20 minutes before serving to allow it to soften for scooping. Cover and store any leftover ice in the freezer for up to 1 week. 8-10 servings.

Use pot gardens for variety

By HOUSE BEAUTIFUL
For AP Newsfeatures

More home-lovers than ever are learning to grow plants in pots — on rooftops, balconies, decks or modest patios.

Small-space garden solutions need not be confined to small spaces, according to an article in the current issue of House Beautiful, and pots containing beautiful plants in inventive combinations can have a place in anybody's landscape.

You can use containers to change the scale of an entry. If the paved area by your front door seems too broad or too empty, containers filled with vines that cling to an ornamental trellis can make the space more inviting. Even a small entry can look more gracious if containers of flowering plants flank the door.

Rhode Island landscape architect Raymond W. Thayer bought a house with an enormous flagstone-paved area that took up a third of his land. He transformed the space into a movable visual feast by decorating it with container plants — rose trees, baskets of fuchsia, houseplants and perennials such as delphiniums. Other ideas:

— Disguise an eyesore by creating a privacy screen with containers staggered at different heights.

— Direct attention to a desirable view by framing it with containers of tall plants — juniper "Skyrocket," or other columnar evergreens.

— Enhance a plain wall with an array of containers — some in hanging brackets or raised stands, others placed on the ground.

For air circulation and better drainage, containers should always be elevated. The lowest ones can be set on bricks.

— Use containers to direct traffic. If your guests tend to head for the side door, a cluster of carefully placed containers can point the way to the front entry.

— Grow twin pots of flowering plants in the sun. Move one pot to a shady area where you need color. When flowering diminishes, switch the shaded pot with its mate.

— Plant hostas and ferns in containers to create a garden in a densely shaded spot where tree-root competition would make in-ground planting impossible.

Mark Chesnutt

Mark Chesnutt's frantic pace

By JOE EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — It was a hectic Tuesday for rising country music singer Mark Chesnutt.

After just three hours of sleep, he got up at 5 a.m. for a radio station appearance. He performed on a TV show at 9, taped another TV show at 10, did radio and newspaper interviews all afternoon, went to a nightclub to check equipment at 5 and, beginning at 8 p.m., sang there for more than an hour.

As he rushed around, he found out his tour bus had broken down in another part of town. His voice was hurting from talking so much. And he faced a 7 a.m. wakeup call the next morning for a 17-hour ride to Houston.

Mark Chesnutt will be appearing at FunFest/Thompson Park in Amarillo on Monday, May 27, at 5 p.m. Tickets will be available at the gate.

It was just another typically frantic day for the 27-year-old Chesnutt, one of an emerging handful of country stars who will shape the country sound this decade.

He's already had two hit songs in the past few months, "Too Cold at Home" and "Brother Jukebox."

He used to sing for a few hundred people at smoky nightclubs in Beaumont, Texas, where menacing drunks spill beer and start fights. Now he's on package shows with performers such as Alabama and Reba McEntire. Sometimes he peers out from the stage and his audience is 25,000.

On this frenetic day, Chesnutt plopped down in a chair in his manager's office while wearing the standard issue country-music uniform: jeans and a T-shirt.

"My life has altogether changed," the soft-spoken, fragile-looking singer said. "There's no time for myself any more. It's not a job but a 24-hour-a-day way of life."

"Since August, I've been home a total of maybe 15 days. There's no time off any more, just steady rolling. It goes from daylight until after midnight every day."

Chesnutt has been singing professionally since he was 18, mostly in and around Beaumont. Only recently did his horizons broaden from regional act to national newcomer.

He gave up jobs as a warehouse employee and dock worker. Those menial posts prompted a brief chuckle and the observation: "I always did the dirty stuff."

But he preferred singing and the east Texas night life. "It's where I could make better money and have more fun," he said.

The memories flood forth from his Texas toiling days: "I had a lot of fun hanging out with my friends and the regulars who were there every night supporting us. We'd play all night long. I'd sit there for two or three hours without a break sometimes."

His pay: $500, occasionally more, for four nights a week.

His baritone voice eventually came to the attention of MCA Records in Nashville, which signed him to a recording contract and released his debut album, Too Cold at Home.

The songs he sings are traditional country "drinking songs." Nothing fancy, just close-to-the-vest Texas twang.

The single "Too Cold at Home" is about a man seeking refuge in a bar because of a disintegrating relationship at home. In the key line, he sings: "It's too hot to fish, too hot for golf and too cold at home."

The song "Brother Jukebox" is a metaphorical tune about going to a cafe to wash one's troubles away because of a departing lover. According to the lyrics, the only family left is a jukebox, time, wine and freedom.

His forthcoming single, "Blame It on Texas," is an uptempo, fiddle-filled song about having a good time and being yourself.

His style of music has drawn comparisons to country music veteran George Jones, who also is from Beaumont.

"He's always been my favorite," says Chesnutt. "I like people saying I remind them of him because he's the best." The two had enjoyed supper together the night before.

"Mark Chesnutt sings country music from his heart," Jones says.

Chesnutt, whose slender frame is often accented by a white cowboy hat, says the most exciting part of his young career has been "hanging out with other country singers."

"The entertainers enjoy working together. I never feel there's any jealousy or tension," he said. "I don't get intimidated by the others. I like to watch them and learn from them."

"The change in my life has been pretty unbelievable. It makes all those years of beating our heads in the beer joints worth it now."

Young actors learn how to get ahead in films

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — More important than having a powerful agent or lunching at all the right places, auditions are the actor's key to success in the film world. Even Patrick Swayze had to audition for his role in Ghost.

And so it is that auditions are a way of life for Sean Astin, 20; Keith Coogan, 21, and Wil Wheaton, 18. The three actors tried out for the role of Billy Tepper, ringleader of a gang of misfits at an exclusive boys' school, in Toy Soldiers. Astin won the role, but the other pair were cast as members of the gang.

Toy Soldiers, which also stars Lou Gossett Jr. and Denholm Elliott, concerns the takeover of the school by Colombian terrorists. Tri-Star Pictures released the movie on April 26.

The young actors recently talked about auditions and their profession in an interview with The Associated Press. Here are the highlights:

Coogan: "I've been turned down thousands of times. That's hard to take. When you get the same 'no' all the time, you have to think, 'Well, I gave 100 percent and they said 'no.' Does that mean I don't have to give as much next time?' No, you have to work harder the next time, give 110 percent."

Astin: "I never go into an audition unprepared. Some people read off the page to audition; I need to have the lines and study them. I try to wear the clothes that 'feed' you as an actor. If you're wearing a suit, your posture is affected. If you're wearing torn jeans and a ripped shirt, you're affected differently."

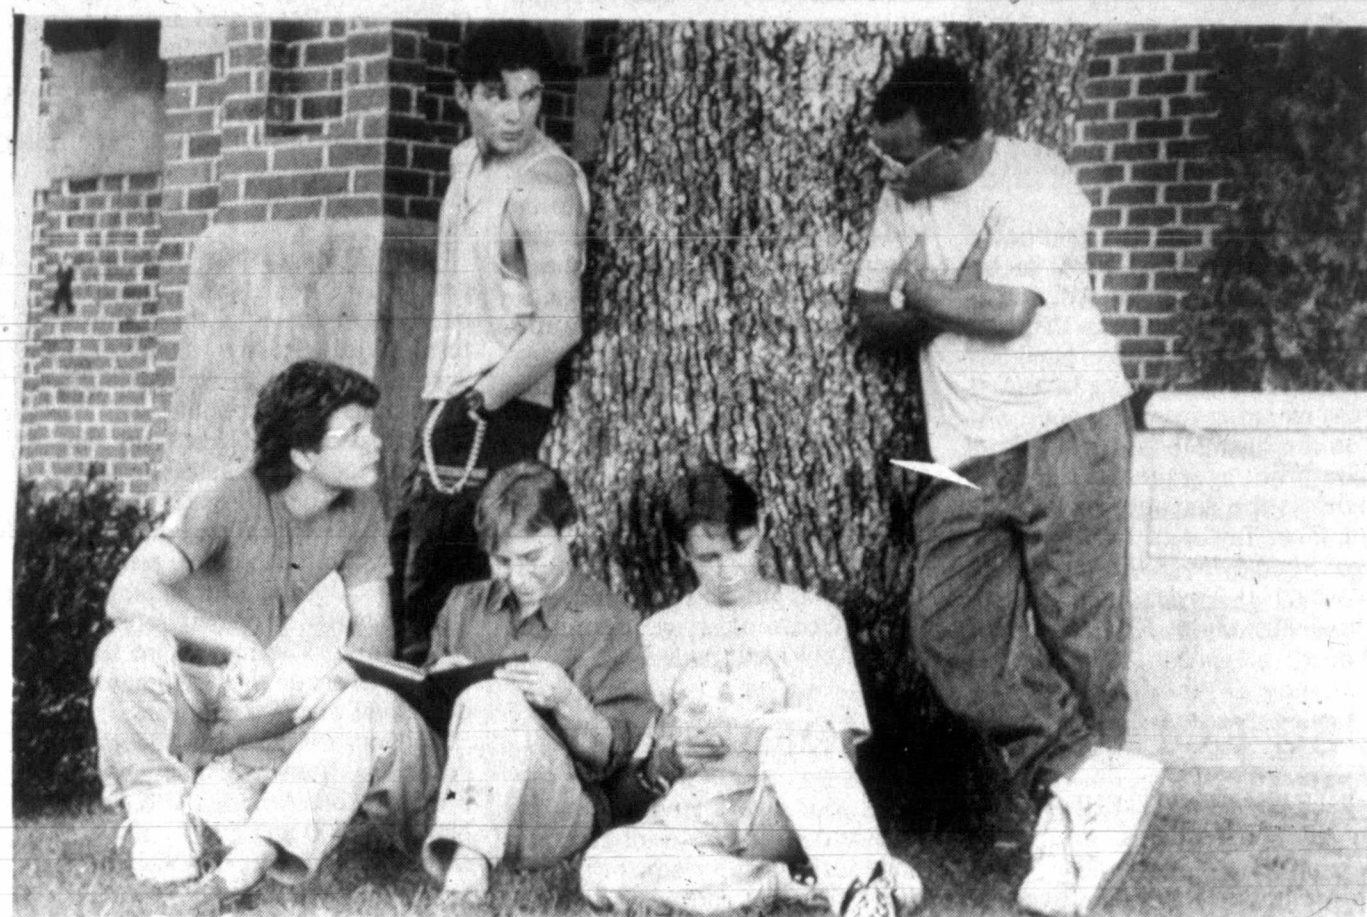

Wheaton: "Like any actor, I spend a lot of time in auditions. A lot of it is futile. You go on auditions, give 110 percent, and get nothing. That's just part of it. Unfortunately, that's a very big part of the industry. I've been doing it for so long that it's just something that I accept."

All three actors started auditioning as youngsters. How did they learn to deal with rejection?

Coogan: "It took me a long time to learn that it wasn't me, Coogan, they were turning down. I just wasn't right for the part. I learned not to take it personally."

Astin: "My parents (Patty Duke and John Astin) have always made me aware of those kinds of judgments. The tendency is to fall into the feeling of being judged as a human being. In an audition, you're saying: This is who I am, this is what I'm capable of, this is what I've dedicated my life to. You're waiting for the person to say, 'Great!' or 'This is not what we're looking for.' Hopefully, you can be confident in your craft to find the right role."

Wheaton: "You spend a lot of your time going on auditions and getting nothing. I've gotten very discouraged on a few roles I really wanted. When I was younger, I had my mom to fall back on; she was very supportive. She prepared me for rejection and to know the ins and outs of the industry."

Coogan, who has appeared in Adventures in Babysitting, Cousins and Book of Love, is carrying on a Hollywood tradition. His grandfather was the late Jackie Coogan, famous child star in silent movies and inspiration for California's "Coogan Law," designed to protect the earnings of child actors. The millions Jackie earned in the 1920s had been appropriated by his stepfather and mother.

"Watch your money," Jackie advised his grandson, whose mother managed Keith's earnings. The older Coogan, best known to a later generation as Uncle Fester in TV's The Addams Family, also gave Keith some acting tips.

"My grandfather told me not to try to mug or steal scenes," the young actor said. "I still do it today, and I'm embarrassed by it. I think it's important to the group. If you get selfish, it's no longer an ensemble."

Astin made his feature debut in The Goonies and has appeared in Like Father, Like Son with Dudley Moore and as the son of Michael Douglas and Kathleen Turner in War of the Roses.

In Toy Soldiers, Astin plays the honcho of a band of rebels, and says there are some similarities between himself and his character.

"I have anger, I have passion in my life, I have fury and rebellion," he said. "I don't know that I manifest it in the same way. I think I'm a little more cautious."

Like Coogan and Astin, Wheaton was started on an acting career by his mother, an actress in commercials. He appeared in a TV movie with Timothy Hutton, and next played Susan Sarandon's son in The Buddy System with Richard Dreyfuss. Wheaton's role as the supergenius Wesley Crusher in the TV series Star Trek: The Next Generation has made him a teenage idol.

Wheaton confessed his own rebel past: "I went through the standard teenage rebellion. I was pretty much a pain in the butt when I was about 14. I feel so bad for my parents because I was such a little jerk at home that it's amazing I didn't get kicked out."

"I think I was coming home with the pressure from Star Trek and people expecting me to be an adult all the time. Then I was a kid at home, and I wanted to be an adult all the time or a kid all the time."

All three actors began their careers at early ages. Astin made his debut at 7, appearing in an after-school special with his mother. Coogan began making commercials at 5 and grew up in three TV series including The Waltons. Wheaton started acting at 7; when he was 13, he played Richard Dreyfuss as a boy in Stand by Me.

Did they miss having a normal childhood?

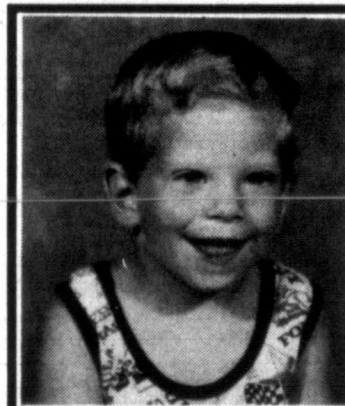

Coogan: "I love to work. I loved getting excused from school. I missed Little League and the beach and all that stuff. But I think to myself: That was the ultimate childhood, working with great actors and on great shows. How better could I have spent my childhood than playing on the set?"

Wheaton: "I missed school and Little League and things like that. I'm making up for it now by playing ice hockey; that's my sport of choice. I missed out on high school, and I regretted that a little bit. But my brother's now in high school, and he tells me it's not all it's cracked up to be."

Busted drug bust focuses on that Washington institution: The leak

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was going to be one grand drug raid. But this bust was a bust.

The police spent six months plotting an undercover operation. They envisioned putting hundreds of drug dealers behind bars, confiscating a mountain of drugs and an arsenal of weaponry.

But word leaked out, and by time the army of officers made their move they were able to scoop up only 27 suspects who somehow didn't get the word.

Now the fizzled raid may claim another victim. Linda Wheeler, a Washington Post reporter caught up in a side issue, could go to jail this week.

Her case is raising a fresh look at that unsinkable Washington institution, the News Leak.

And for members of the Washington press-politics-government network for whom leaking is a way of life, it has raised a new question—whether newsmen may refuse in court to identify their news sources if they've banded the sources' names about to friends.

Ms. Wheeler, 47, is alleged to have confided to two U.S. Park policemen that she was leaked a copy of the confidential raid handbook by Isaac Fulwood, then the Study: Kansas ranch suitable as national prairie monument

WASHINGTON (AP) — An 11,000-acre ranch in the Flint Hills of Kansas is suitable for establishment by the government as a tallgrass prairie preserve, the National Park Service concluded in a study.

The study said the Z-Bar Ranch "depicts significant natural history, architectural and historic themes which are not adequately represented elsewhere" in the national park system.

The agency said the ranch near Strong City, Kan., about 130 miles southwest of Kansas City, could be designated a national historic landmark or national natural landmark.

Most of the area from central Texas to southern Saskatchewan, covering all or part of Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and the Dakotas, was tallgrass prairie when Spanish explorers in the 16th Century came across a "sea of grass." Settlers put the land under the plow and little original prairie is left.

"When traveling to the Z-Bar Ranch, a visitor is exposed to some of the most dramatic landscapes of tallgrass prairie that exist anywhere," the study said. "Seemingly endless miles of rolling grasslands stretch out to surround the visitor from horizon to horizon."

The study said the Flint Hills region contains the most extensive segments of undisturbed tallgrass prairie on the continent.

Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., has said he will introduce legislation seeking money to buy the ranch and establish it as the Prairie National Monument.

However, a group of local ranchers and landowners oppose the park proposal. Opponents object to government ownership of the property and say it could lead to federal controls on surrounding private ranch land.

The National Park Service did not formally propose the ranch be immediately acquired, but said it "will consider pursuing" specific proposals when money becomes available.

The study estimated it would cost as much as $8 million to buy and develop the land, and $450,000 to $750,000 a year to operate and maintain the ranch as a national monument in the park system.

deputy, now the chief of police here.

Complicating matters even more, one of the policemen, Hugh Irwin, subsequently became Wheeler's husband.

He has sworn that she told him that Fulwood leaked the plan to her. The other officer, Thomas Moyer, has sworn the same.

She has sworn she doesn't recall. Judge Richard A. Levie took the officers' word against hers. Levie said he found her can't-recall testimony incredible and late last month, he ordered her to identify her source.

When she wouldn't, Levie held her in contempt of court and ordered her jailed. An appeals court delayed action so it can hear arguments on Friday.

Wheeler, a photographer who became a reporter, wrote nothing in the Post to tip off the underworld about the 1986 raid. But six policemen want her to testify that Fulwood was her source.

The six were removed from narcotics cases after the raid fizzled. Their careers stymied, they filed a civil suit seeking $9 million from the city and top police officials. They claim the bungling was done by Fulwood, not them.

They claim they were made scapegoats because they are white in a force that is more than 66 percent black. They say Wheeler's testimony is necessary to make their case against Fulwood's credibility. He has sworn he did not give Wheeler the plans for the raid.

Wheeler has raised the customary defense: that if she revealed her source, other sources would be reluctant to share information in the future and the public's right to know would suffer.

The new element is whether she lost her right to keep her source secret — it's known as "newsman's privilege" — if she identified her source to anyone.

In court papers, the Post argued that Wheeler's conversations with the two Park Police officers were part of her newsgathering process because she was trying to learn more about the forthcoming raid.

Readers of news, when they see the phrase "a source in a position to know," may envision someone with an ax to grind whispering to a reporter in a darkened basement — a "Deep Throat." But 99 times in 100, the Washington leaker is someone talking from an upstairs office, someone with a title.

Leakers leak for a variety of reasons, almost all self-serving. Because information is a weapon in Washington's myriad negotiations, they want the word out, but don't want their name associated with it. So they put out the news on a don't-quote-me-but-basis.

It may not shock news sources that reporters bandy the identities of their sources, perhaps over a beer. But it still is seen as an offense, a violation of the rules of the game.

More often than not, the information is confidential but not especially sensitive — more likely about something that's going to happen next week than a state secret that can cause heads to roll or governments to shake.

Sometimes it is leaked because the source knows his information will get more attention if the reporter he hands it to knows he has it exclusively.

It may not shock news sources that reporters bandy the identities of their sources, perhaps over a beer. But it still is seen as an offense, a violation of the rules of the game.

"In a lifetime of speaking to political reporters," said Richard Moe, former chief of staff to former Vice President Walter F. Mondale, "I don't recall ever having a confidential relationship breached."

"But I don't know what conversations go on in newsrooms or elsewhere. I assume there are conversations. I think you almost have to assume it," Moe said. "That's why I prefer to speak for attribution. I assume that, sooner or later, nothing is really off the record."

Frank Mankiewicz, former New Frontiersman and press secretary to the late Robert F. Kennedy, admits to having been "the source of stories" from time to time. He said he finds it troublesome that a reporter would talk to anyone about a source.

"Reporters are probably as gossipy as anybody else, or more so, but even if you're gossipy you're supposed to keep secrets," Mankiewicz said. "I suppose there is an inter-spousal allowance, but I don't know if I would extend it to boyfriends and girlfriends."

Gary Bauer, domestic policy adviser to former President Ronald Reagan, said he was surprised when he was in the White House how well reporters kept confidences.

He recalled that often he'd see something in the newspapers damaging to Reagan and would try to get reporters to tell him their sources. It never worked, he said.

"I'd say, 'Boy, that's really outlandish. Who in the world would have told you that?' But even when the press person was a friend, they'd say, 'Gary, I can't tell you.'"

If Wheeler winds up in jail for keeping quiet about her source, she will be about the 21st reporter in the last 10 years who has done so, according to the Reporters' Committee for Freedom of the Press.

But it still won't answer the question: How did all those drug dealers know back in February 1986, that it was time to lie low?

And it won't stop leaks here either.

Special ed gets unaccustomed scrutiny as state budgets tighten

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

Prompted by hemorrhaging state budgets, officials are giving unaccustomed scrutiny to special education — to its spiraling costs, and to its effectiveness.

This attention is virtually unprecedented in the 17 years since the federal Education for All Handicapped Children Act entitled all such youngsters to a "free, appropriate public education."

Armed with that mandate and steadfast political support from parents and advocacy groups, special education has until recently been nearly sacrosanct in most states, even as other education programs have felt the budget ax.

The current questioning is not over whether the 4.6 million disabled school-aged children deserve their hard-won right to educational opportunity. And everyone agrees that that right necessarily costs more than regular education.

But some state education officials now say that in the current austere climate they fear a taxpayer backlash. Several are considering cost-cutting ideas such as raising class-size limits for the handicapped.

Other states, including Virginia, Kentucky, Iowa, California and New York, are for the first time collecting dropout and graduation data to examine whether their special education programs work.

Iowa is facing a $200 million state shortfall; Hawkeye legislators, alarmed by an $11 million special education deficit and the addition of 2,000 students into classrooms for the handicapped last year, are considering a freeze in that state's $250 million special ed budget.

"I am anticipating a backlash, and I'm trying to get ahead of the curve. I know there's an increasing inquiry by legislators who are asking, 'Why in the world are we seeing the increases in special ed?'" said William Lepley, Iowa's education director, whose own son went through special education.

At least one governor — Robert Casey of Pennsylvania — has spoken recently about putting the brakes on special education's mounting costs.

"State directors of special education are being asked to explain, defend, justify, how come? How come the numbers are so much bigger than last year?" said William Schipper, executive director of the National Association of State Directors of Special Education in Alexandria, Va.

Nationwide, special education enrollments have risen by 24 percent from 3.7 million in 1976-77 to about 4.6 million in 1988-89, the latest year for which federal statistics are available. State, federal and local spending climbed from about $5 billion in 1977, to $17 billion in 1986-87, to an estimated $20 billion this school year.

Officials agree that the first wave of crack babies, youngsters suffering from fetal alcohol syndrome, and other medically fragile children have swelled the ranks of special education. More children are also winding up in special ed classes with emotional problems related to family crises.

Costs have also mounted as the 17-year-old special education system matures and teachers move up the salary scale, state administrators say.

But Gov. Casey and others contend that part of the blame rests with funding systems that lack accountability and reward districts as they refer more kids into classes for the handicapped.

Nearly 19 percent of Pennsylvania's public-school students are attending special-education classes, Casey said, compared to the national average of about 12 percent.

A recent study by the state directors group found that in some states, special education spending has risen at a far faster rate than other education spending.

From 1980 to 1988, total education spending in Florida rose 125.4 percent, while special ed spending increased 210.2 percent, according to a study prepared for Congress by the state directors association.

During the same period, total education spending in New York was up 90.1 percent, and special education spending rose 186.4 percent. In Maryland, total spending rose 55.9 percent, compared with 130.8 percent for special ed. And in Massachusetts, overall education spending was up 47.7 percent, but special ed increased by 135.8 percent.

State officials insist that basic services will be preserved. But budget problems have spawned talk of larger class sizes and an acceleration of the trend toward teaching the handicapped in regular "mainstream" classrooms rather than segregated settings.

New York, grappling with a $6 billion state deficit, is considering raising the limit on special education class sizes from 12 to 15 pupils.

But cost alone doesn't account for the changes afoot in special education. The school reform movement has led regular and special educators alike to question the wisdom of shunting the handicapped into separate "resource rooms" for instruction.

In Kentucky, where a year-old court order is forcing a statewide overhaul of education, Linda Hargan, associate commissioner of the state's office of education for exceptional children, says it's likely that the learning disabled and mildly handicapped will receive most or all of the extra help they need in regular classrooms. Separate special education will be reserved for the more severely disabled.

"A lot of big-time players are looking at the efficacy of special education. It's not just the researchers now. It's elected officials and employment officials," said Schipper.

In Pennsylvania, which is struggling with a $300 million state budget gap, Casey warned that special education costs, now $380 million, could increase by over $1 billion in the next five years unless changes are made in the way funds are allocated.

Casey argues that the current system lacks incentives for holding down costs because the state fully reimburses special ed expenses. He has proposed setting a limit on state reimbursement and having districts come up with any excess.

"The question isn't why costs are so high, but why they're growing at such an astronomical rate," Casey said. "In some cases, we're serving the same number of children."

Iowa is in the third year of a wholesale restructuring of special education involving 200 school districts, said Lepley. The thrust of the state plan is to allow districts more flexibility in how they spend special ed funds, and to require educators to prove why a disabled child can't be educated in a regular classroom setting.

In New York, Bob Scalise, fiscal manager for the state's office of the education of children with handicapped conditions, said the state now spends upwards of $3 billion on special education. Along with possibly raising class sizes, officials are considering cutting down on costly meetings to develop individualized instructional plans for handicapped children, and removing the mandate that all candidates for special education receive a psychological exam.

Officials stress that the hard look special education is now getting won't turn the clock back to the days when disabled children had little hope of getting the full educational benefits they now receive.

"We need to double check our values. These kids in special education are high-cost, and difficult to educate. It is difficult to socialize them," said Schipper. "It takes extra time, and it takes extra money."

Farmers' ethics took a beating in 1980s, magazine study says

By PAM SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

NORTH BRANCH, Minn. (AP) — The moral lapses of the 1980s were not confined to executive suites, trading pits or political backrooms — there also was backsliding in the cornfield, farm observers say.

"The older fellows had a definite sense of right or wrong," says Burt Peterson, proprietor of Peterson's North Branch Mill. "Their word was their bond. Now, that's not true. They'll walk away from a deal."

The 80-year-old Peterson has served as a sounding board for farmers in the three decades he's owned the mill in eastern Minnesota. And he ascribes a slipping standard of agricultural ethics to "too dang-much bureaucracy."

"The restrictions and paperwork are getting so tough, the farmers are saying, 'I can no longer run my farm any more. The government wants to run it for me,' and they get discouraged," he said.

Some experts agree, while others point to frustrations at shrinking profit margins or increasing environmental questions.

But whatever the cause, questions of right and wrong have become a growing concern for many farmers as they cope with debt restructuring, animal welfare, pesticide use, crop insurance regulations and a host of other situations.

"Between themselves, you'll find farmers are totally honest," said Cy Carpenter of Bloomington, former president of the National Farmers Union.

"But in terms of operating their farm as a business, you'll find their ethics have changed greatly."

Farm Futures magazine posed a series of ethical dilemmas to its 205,000 readers last year. In January, it reported that 59 percent of 900 respondents believed farmer ethical standards had declined in the past decade.

Many conceded their own ethics have deteriorated. More than a third agreed that, "It would be impossible to make a living if farmers followed all the rules and regulations made in Washington."

Senior editor Bryce Knorr was surprised that "people thought the situation was as bad as it was. We were also disturbed that people reported seeing ethical violations so often, at least several times a year."

More than 40 percent agreed it would be acceptable to claim tax depreciation on a pickup truck that a son kept at college most of the year, or to ignore reporting a $100 rebate from a herbicide company as taxable income.

And only 70 percent said they would notify proper authorities if a pesticide tank spilled into a creek, while 19 percent said they would wait and see if problems developed. Nine percent said they wouldn't do anything.

Most often, the farmers blamed a decay in agricultural ethics on "bad examples from Washington."

But the survey showed that many of the same farmers who say Washington has set the ethical standard also admit that the IRS and government farm program present them with their toughest ethical choices.

Policies emanating from Washington have angered farmers. They see their political power base shrinking and many believe their interests are being savaged by people who understand little about a barnyard.

"Farm programs are changed midstream. They most often favor the super-big and super-rich," Carpenter said. "The programs are not implemented as written, and that causes an attitude of disrespect on the part of farmers."

Said Howard Schmid, a wheat farmer from Oberon, N.D.: "There's no question there is a reaction. When you get pushed, you tend to push back."

The economic plight of many farmers hasn't helped their ethics, either. As thousands watch their property being foreclosed and are forced off the land, some of those still around say they're more apt to make questionable ethical calls just to keep what they have.

"I see farmers wanting to be able to do the right thing, and they know pretty much the ethically right thing to do," said Tom Ruehr, an agricultural ethics instructor at California Polytechnic.

"But many of them are feeling squeezed by economic pressures to take a shortcut, and that tends to slide them into unethical practices."

Many farmers maintain that slipping ethics are an unavoidable byproduct of the hard times they face.

"It's human nature for people to keep from getting themselves backed up against a wall," said Richard Lunz, a cash crop farmer near Fairmont. "It makes people do things they normally wouldn't be able to live with."

Said Burkhardt: "I don't know whether farmers themselves are any less ethical (than their forebears). They probably have, in many respects, the same values that their grandparents did. But the system has changed. The business has become more competitive. There are lots of regulations and programs that they've got to negotiate through to make a living."

According to the magazine survey, farmers believe the ethical choices they confront are indeed thornier than those faced by earlier generations. Many attribute that to mounting concerns over the environment.

"Expectations about farmers in the environmental sphere are much higher than they were a couple of decades ago," said Jeffrey Burkhardt, director of the ethics and policy studies program at the University of Florida.

As examples, he cited the growing alarm about pesticides' effect on groundwater and the call for wetlands preservation.

Carpenter said there's bound to be conflict between farmers and environmentalists.

"The good environmentalist has the same objective as the farmer — to preserve the land," he said. "But the farmer feels he's being imposed upon and ... he feels it's an infringement on his family operation and his business."

Carpenter insists that farmers remain as moral as any group in the nation. And if the family farmer eventually is overrun by corporate enterprise, he said, America's values will be forever altered.

"Farming has always been seen as the ideal. If corporate agriculture takes over, you lose that whole sense of community. We will lose a national treasure."

autos and trucks, feeder livestock and other machinery, but decreased sharply for fuels," the report said.

The price index for fuels and energy dropped 9.6 percent from January, when the previous reading was taken, but it was still 5.3 percent above the year-earlier mark.

"Bulk delivered diesel fuel averaged 81.5 cents per gallon, down 23.5 cents from January," the report said. "Bulk delivered LP gas averaged 71.6 cents per gallon, down 15.9 cents from the previous quarter. Gasoline prices declined 10 cents from January 1991."

Crop prices collectively rose 2.3 percent from March but were the same as a year earlier.

The livestock index was down 1.8 percent from March and averaged 2.4 percent below April a year ago.

Poultry and eggs declined 10 percent from March, averaging 7.6 percent below April 1990.

The meat animal price dropped 1 percent from March but was up 2.1 percent from April of last year.

USDA economists forecast 1991 consumer food prices will climb an average of 2 percent to 5 percent, compared with a 5.8 percent gain in 1990. Larger output of some major commodities is expected to help cool the price climb.

The net cash income of farmers in 1991 has been forecast by USDA at $53 billion to $58 billion, which could put it down from the record of $58 billion in calendar 1990.

Net cash income is defined as the difference between gross cash income and cash expenses.

In another way of accounting, 1991

net farm income may be in the range of $42 billion to $47 billion, compared with the 1990 record of $49 billion.

The report said:

• Cattle averaged $78.20 per 100 pounds of live weight nationally, down from $78.50 in March. A year earlier, cattle averaged $74.70 per hundredweight. Those are averages for all types of cattle sold as beef.

• Calves were reported at $104 per hundredweight, down from the record of $107 in March. In April 1990, calves were $100 per hundredweight.

• Hogs averaged $50.60 per hundredweight, down from $51.40 in March and $53.80 a year earlier.

• Corn, at $2.44 per bushel, was up from $2.39 in March but still trailed the year-earlier average of $2.51 per bushel.

• Wheat prices at the farm, according to preliminary figures, averaged $2.63 per bushel, compared with $2.53 in March and $3.49 in April 1990.

• Rice averaged $7.25 per 100 pounds, compared with $7.08 in March and $7.41 a year earlier.

Farmers' prices unchanged as expenses rise

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's an old story for farmers. The Agriculture Department says commodity prices are down, but costs of items they need to buy are up.

Prices farmers get for raw products were unchanged from March to April, according to preliminary figures released last week by the department's Agricultural Statistics Board.

But the overall commodity index still was 1.3 percent below its year-ago level, the board reported.

Higher prices for potatoes, onions, cotton and wheat had the most upward effect on the index, while lower prices for eggs, hogs, cattle and tomatoes were said to be the main factors on the downside.

Most prices are mid-April averages and will be revised by the board in a report May 31.

For example, a revision for March showed the prices received by farmers was slightly higher than the preliminary reading of a month ago.

Looking at the 1.3 percent price decline from a year earlier, the report said "lower prices for milk, wheat, potatoes and hogs were the major contributors to the decline from April 1990. Higher cattle, tomato, apple and peanut prices were partially offsetting."

New quarterly figures showed that prices paid by farmers to meet expenses were up 1.1 percent from January and averaged 3.8 percent more than in April 1990.

"Since last surveyed, prices increased for agricultural chemicals, actively engaged in farming or ranching. Each soil and water conservation district in State District One selects one delegate to attend the election.

Each State Board member serves a two-year term and represents one of five State Districts. Each member must own agricultural land and be actively engaged in farming or ranching.

State District One, which consists of 51 counties in the Panhandle and South Plains region of the state, has 49 soil and water conservation districts within its boundary. Collectively, Texas has 211 SWCDs within its statutory five State Districts.

The Texas State Soil and Water Conservation Board's chief responsibility is to coordinate the programs of Texas' Soil and Water Conservation Districts and assist them to develop and carry out local conservation programs.

GOLDASTER CONTROL INCREASES GRASS

Long term benefits to increased grass production from goldaster control have been documented. Ranchers in the Eastern Texas Panhandle have found that control of Goldaster will more than double grass production.

The month of May is an excellent time to apply herbicides for goldaster control. Some data suggests that dry conditions increase the probability of good, long term control of goldaster infestations.

There are several ways to push a pencil. Without a doubt, you can calculate an economic benefit when you spend approximately $6 per acre on rangeland heavily infested with goldaster.

Numerous demonstrations have proved that excellent control can be expected from any one of the three herbicide recommendations that follow:

1. 1 lb. of 2,4-D LVE + diesel.
2. 1 lb. of Weedmaster + diesel.
3. 1 lb. of Grazon P+D + diesel.

These are per acre rates and the amount of diesel depends on whether it is applied by air or a ground rig. The most expensive treatment is number 3, approximately $11 to $12 per acre; treatment 2 is about $8 to $9 per acre, while treatment 1 is the cheapest at approximately $6 per acre when applied aerially.

Additional information is available in the Gray County Extension Office.

GAMEBIRD CONFERENCE

Texasans continue to show an increasing interest in production of gamebirds for both meat and sport.

To provide the latest information in this field, the 1991 Texas Gamebird Conference will be held May 25 at Kleberg Animal and Food Sciences Center at Texas A&M University.

Charles Ramsey, wildlife specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, said supplementing wild populations with pen-reared flight birds continues to increase in importance as recreational hunting pressures increase.

Decline in farm prices slow to reach consumers

WASHINGTON (AP) — When hog prices go up, so do pork chops. But Agriculture Department economists say consumers have to wait four times as long when farmers see hog prices decline.

It's not a new market phenomenon, nor is it confined to hogs and pork. Dairy farmers saw milk prices plummet sharply the past year, but consumers have been much slower to see rewards.

In November 1987, says Bill Hahn of the department's Economic Research Service, the price spread between what farmers get for live hogs and what pork sold for at retail stores widened to a record of $1.17 per pound.

But last year, as hog prices rode a roller coaster through the months, the farm-to-consumer price spread widened again.

In December, Hahn said, the spread grew to $1.46 per pound, surpassing the old mark set three years earlier by 29 cents.

Since then, the pork price spread has tightened a bit — down 6 cents in January, 2 cents in February and slightly more than 1 cent in March, he said Monday in a telephone interview.

Each month, government analysts compute a "blended" or all-cut price for pork and meats at the retail level. A net "farm value" is also assigned, indicating the producer's equivalent share of what the consumer pays.

The difference between the two represents the farm-to-retail price spread that covers costs of the product after it leaves the farm, including transportation, marketing, slaughter, processing, wholesaling and retailing.

For example, Hahn said that in March the retail price of pork averaged $2.139 per pound. The net farm value was 82.7 cents per pound, leaving the farm-to-retail spread at $1.312 per pound.

Writing in the May issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine, Hahn said higher marketing costs accounted for some of the growth in the price spread between 1987 and 1990.

But had it grown only at the inflation rate, the spread last December would have been $1.36 per pound instead of the record of $1.46.

"Over time, price spreads tend to widen as inflation increases the costs of marketing processing and retailing," he said. "In addition, consumer demand for more trimming and improved packaging adds costs. Moreover, productivity growth in food retailing is too low to offset the effects of these higher marketing costs."

Hahn added in his report that shortcomings in the marketing system also are to blame for some of the growth in farm-to-retail spreads.

"These include poor-quality and high-cost information, adjustment

"In addition, more families are raising small number of gamebirds for home consumption," Ramsey said.

Dr. Fred Thornberry, Extension Service poultry specialist, said the conference program is designed to meet education needs relating to industry problems. He said the conference will open at 9 a.m. after registration at 8 o'clock.

Pre-registration is $25 per family or farm, and registration at the door is $30. A barbecue lunch will cost $6 per person.

Subjects will include desirable traits of pen-reared birds, dogs and guides; quail habitat development; preventing problems in breeder flocks; gamebird diseases; nutrition and other subjects.

The program will be conducted by the Extension Service in cooperation with the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

For more information, contact the co-chairman, Dr. Thornberry, at (409) 845-4318 or Ramsey at (409) 845-7471.

BUSHLAND WHEAT FIELD DAY

The annual Wheat Field Day will be held on May 23 at the Texas A&M Research and Extension Center in Amarillo and the USDA Conservation and Production Research Laboratory 0.75 miles west of Bushland.

The morning session conducted by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service begins at 8:30 in the Texas A&M Center Auditorium, 6500 Amarillo Blvd. West. The program is chaired by Dr. Brent Bean, Extension agronomist, and is designed to quality people for three continuing educational units needed for renewal of Pesticide Applicator Licenses.

The wheat research and demonstration bus tour begins at 1 p.m., according to Dr. B.A. Stewart, research director at Bushland.

Stops will include irrigated and dryland nurseries, wheat rooting depth study, wheat classification, grazing management and tillage. This year's tour will highlight two new releases by Foundation Seed, TAM 202 and TAM 109.

The Field Day will be sponsored by Texas Agricultural Experiment Station; Texas Agricultural Extension Service; USDA, Agricultural Research Service; and the Texas Wheat Producers.

lags, potential flaws in the competitive structure of pork marketing and retailing, and other factors," he said.

Industry people cite a couple of reasons for the lag in "price transmission" from the farm level to the consumer, Hahn said.

One involves the time it takes for products to move from farms to retail counters. As a result, the farm-to-retail spreads are frequently narrowing when farm prices rise and widen when farm prices decline.

"Second, consumers react negatively to frequent price changes (especially price increases), and stores consequently 'smooth out' such changes," Hahn said. "In the long run, however, the marketing system cannot keep the retail price of pork constant and still balance production and consumption."

Hahn said recent research at Purdue University using a USDA computer model of monthly farm-to-retail pork price information "implies that farm price increases are passed on four times as rapidly" as the farm value of pork declines.

"Farm price increases for pork are fully reflected in retail prices after about three months, while retail prices have adjusted to only 50 percent of a farm price decrease after about three months," he said.

"A year is needed to react fully to farm price decreases."

Indian catacombs hold promise of window on past, tourist dollars in future

SPRINGVILLE, Ariz. (AP) — Where archaeologists see the unique discovery of 700-year-old American Indian catacombs, local officials also see a future national park and rivers of tourists spending money to see it.

"We are the proud parents of an addition to the national treasury," said Gordon Howe, economic development director for this town of 1,852 people in eastern Arizona 14 miles from the New Mexico state line.

The windswept 15-acre Casa Malpais complex on a hillside contains the first reported Indian underground burial chambers in the United States. Discovery of the rock-enclosed catacombs was reported last week at a meeting of the Society of American Archaeology.

Howe estimates a national park or national monument could bring in $3 million to $5 million annually from tourism.

"We want to see it move forward. We want to develop it as a major tourist attraction and protect the integrity of it," Mayor Dennis Silva said.

The site currently belongs to the state and the city wants to buy it but no figures have been disclosed.

State Land Commissioner M.J. Hassell, meanwhile, is working ultimately to obtain federal status for Casa Malpais as a park or monument, Silva said.

State grants already have paid for security to protect the site from vandals and to get the project started. Gov. Fife Symington will dedicate the site Aug. 7.

The ruins amid five volcanic terraces were once home to hundreds of Mogollons. The ancient site is on a bluff a few hundred feet above and two miles northwest of Springerville. It overlooks rolling, grassy hills 7,000 feet above sea level.

The catacombs first explored by archaeologists in July were made from natural fissures and used by Indians when they lived in the area between 1265 and 1400.

What officials have in mind isn't hotels and restaurants at the site, but further excavation to get a better look at an ancient world.

The Mogollons laid stones across gaps in fissures of the volcanic rock in cave-like areas halfway up the bluff, creating the vaulted chambers that are the catacombs.

In 1911 an archaeologist identified the ruin as "a large and distinctive site." In 1948 it was designated a national historic site.

"As kids we used to play in the caverns," Silva said. "We used to call them 'las cuevitas (the little caves).'"

One room that once may have contained human remains is reached by climbing through the rocks and down a 10-foot hand-hewn wood-and-rawhide ladder. It's about 50-feet long and 20-feet deep, with many crannies and nooks.

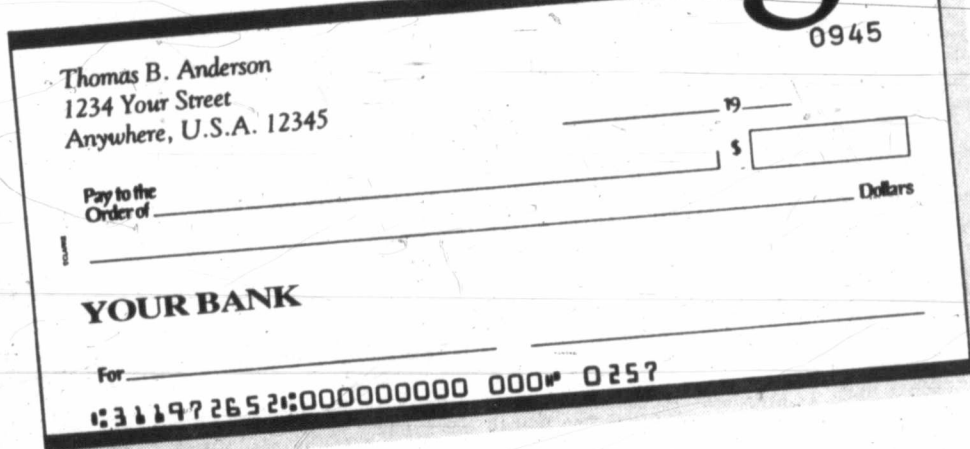

Phoenix-based archaeologist John W. Hohmann, who assessed the site for the town, said the goal of any development will be "to protect the catacombs and the deposits within," to seal and preserve them, with no excavation, mapping or photography of burial material or associated artifacts.

This policy is intended to respect Indian beliefs. In addition, federal law prohibits disturbing or taking remains from Indian burial sites.

Higher on the bluff, archaeologists have uncovered the stone walls of a kiva, or ceremonial meeting room one and a half units in a pueblo, a series of dwelling and work rooms resembling a two-story apartment.

Networks take Saturday morning TV seriously

By DEBORAH HASTINGS
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Saturday morning. Early Saturday morning. Mom and Dad were still asleep. Dragging a bowl, spoon, milk carton and cereal box, you parked in front of the TV.

Sitting as close to the screen as you darn well pleased, you stared at the test pattern and waited. 6 a.m. finally came. And so did the cartoons.

Bugs Bunny. Elmer Fudd. Wile E. Coyote.

"Sshh," you whispered along with a slinking Elmer Fudd. "Be vewy quiet. We're hunting wabbits."

Depending on which generation you belong to, there were a whole host of other not-so famous cartoons that came and went with whims and fads.

Remember animated versions of the Jackson 5 and the Osmond Brothers? The Smurfs? How about Magilla Gorilla?

No matter how many cartoon crazes have passed before the glazed-over eyes of countless kids, the institution of Saturday morning has remained constant.

And so has its classic members. Although some of today's shows are more sophisticated in story lines and animated details, young viewers are loyal to the same characters their parents watched.

New lineups announced for September by the four networks mix sports stars, movie spinoffs and Yogi Bear, Tom and Jerry, Bugs Bunny and Winnie the Pooh.

"Kids like the classic characters," said Jennie Trias, vice president of children's programs for ABC. "Children are not very discriminating about the production value" of cartoons. "They are very discriminating when it comes to characters."

"If they really like a character, they don't care if the background moves," Trias said.

The business of creating Saturday morning programs has moved considerably.

It is no longer just the Big Three networks broadcasting such fare. Upstart Fox Broadcasting Co. has launched a whole line of programs under its Fox Children's Network.

With the advent of VCRs and toddlers who learn to punch "play" before their ABCs, video tapes of Disney classics and other cartoon fare have made the marketplace increasingly combative.

"Competition is very intense," Trias said.

Fox's Saturday lineup for fall includes Attack of the Killer Toma- toes (spun off from the cult film), Tom & Jerry's Kids Show and Bill & Ted's Excellent Adventures (also spun off from a film and dropped this year from CBS' cartoon schedule).

Margaret Loesch, president of the Fox Children's Network, acknowledges that classic cartoon characters are a stable favorite of young viewers. But, she added, Fox likes to mix those shows up with "sillier, crazier gags."

In keeping with that, Loesch said, she passed on Hanna-Barbera's lavishly produced Dark Water cartoon, which chronicled the planet Mer, high seas adventures and ruthless pirates.

"Fox can't afford to be traditional," Loesch said. "Maybe the biggest mistake we made was going after Dark Water in the first place. We really have to be an alternative to succeed."

The show, which cost Hanna-Barbera $500,000 per episode (and is the most expensive cartoon ever made by the veteran animation house), has been picked up by ABC for its new season and redubbed The Pirates of Dark Water.

CBS, the No. 1 network among 2- to 11-year-olds on Saturday mornings, has the biggest childhood phenomenon going (Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles).

Research organization details herbicide use

WASHINGTON (AP)—Individuals and groups concerned about use of herbicides on crops can find how their areas stack up in a new compilation of the type and quantity of chemicals by an environmental research organization.

The information would be particularly useful for any agency or citizens' group that is concerned about the effects of herbicides on groundwater, said Leonard P. Gianessi, a researcher for Resources for the Future, which compiled the data.

"It also will allay certain kinds of concerns," said Gianessi, noting that some pesticides end up in the news because of the environmental damage they cause when used in excess.

If someone is worried about his own community, he can turn to this survey and see if the particular chemical is in use where he lives and whether the quantity could lead to future problems.

The study was financed jointly by Resources for the Future, the federal government and chemical companies.

It estimates use of 96 active ingredients on 84 crops in the 48 contiguous states.

Reports are available for the nation at large, on a state-by-state basis and county by county.

Gianessi said the information comes from Agriculture Department reports, state data, interviews with Cooperative Extension Service agents, chemical companies and the Environmental Protection Agency.

The organization's work was necessary because the federal government's data was comprehensive only for corn, soybean, potato and rice growers, said Gianessi.

He said certain states have done a good job publishing data on pesticides, but those reports didn't cover all the states or all the crops.

"There was very little published data for fruits and vegetable crops," he said.

Gianessi said the reports will probably have to be updated in 18 months to two years. In about nine months, similar data will be available from Resources for the Future on fungicides and insecticides, he said.

Use of herbicides to control weeds among crops increased dramatically during the 1960s and 1970s. Of all the agricultural chemicals used to control pests, about 60 percent are for weed control.
