With clear path to raze complex, city seeks most economic route

Driving down Kansas Street, Midland residents often notice a now familiar landmark — the Summer Place Apartments.

The attention the longstanding building draws, however, is not based in its historic value or nostalgia. Although, according to Keith Stretcher, Midland city attorney, Summer Place once was a stylish abode in which to dwell.

Today, what draws the eye and negative attention is the dilapidated condition, smoke stained and fire blackened walls, and rumors of nefarious activity within the confines of the now-deserted complex.

Summer Place has been the site of several fires over the years and a hiding place for various illegal activities.

In February, the city of Midland took the first step toward enhancing public welfare and safety by purchasing the property, with the eventual goal of razing it.

It has been a long process that could be drawing to a close.

Because of $34,753.59 in back taxes owed on the property, it was sold in February in an attempt to collect the taxes. The city submitted its bid and later convinced the area's other four taxing entities — school district, college, county and hospital district — to release their portion of the taxes. No money changed hands.

According to Stretcher, the city didn't immediately level the building because it could have made costly improvements to the benefit of the original owners.

MISD improves TEA ratings for 3rd year in row

■ MISD had three new campuses placed in "Recognized" category, but none landed in the "Exemplary," or top category.

By Jeff Stevens
Staff Writer

Academic improvement is in the air in Midland and MISD officials want the world to know.

For the third year in a row, Midland Independent School District has improved in the Texas Education Agency's rating system.

Each year, the TEA ranks districts and individual campuses using dropout statistics and TAAS scores as a database.

"It gives us a district accreditation rating and campus performance rating," said Joe Cummins, executive director of administrative services.

In addition to maintaining its 1998 rating of "Academically Acceptable," the district placed three new campuses into the "Recognized," category — De Zavala, Fannin and Greathouse elementaries.

"The principal and teachers at those campuses have done a good job of assessing the previous test performances and developing lessons that assist the students in the areas indicating weakness or the lack of performance," Cummins said.

In order to achieve "Recognized" status, a campus must have at least 80 percent of all students and 80 percent of each (ethnic) student group passing each subject area of the TAAS test, have a 3.5 percent or less dropout rate and 94 percent attendance.

Twenty-eight other campuses were ranked "Academically Acceptable," as were two alternative education campuses.

"Acceptable," ranking carries greatly reduced criteria. In order to receive such status, a campus must have at least 45 percent of all students and 45 percent of each student group passing each subject area of the TAAS test, a percent or less dropout rate and 94 percent attendance.

The three applauded campuses, however, don't tell the whole story of the district's accomplishments.

TEA ratings are based on dropout percentages and TAAS test passing percentages among all students and all ethnic student groups. During the 1998-1999 school year, MISD students improved in every TAAS subject and student group available — as high as 8 percent in some categories.

The greatest improvements came from black and Hispanic students. Sixty-eight percent of black students passed the TAAS reading portion (up 7 percent), 62 percent passed the math portion (up 4.2 percent) and 73.4 percent passed the writing portion (up 3.9 percent). Hispanic students had 70 percent in the passing column of the reading portion (up 6 percent), 68.6 percent passing math (up 7 percent) and 69.5 passing the reading portion (up 8 percent).

Economically disadvantaged students also marked improvements in all subject areas — 5.8 percent in reading, 7 percent in math and 7.1 percent in writing.

Likewise, the district decreased its dropout percentages in every ethnic group. The largest improvement came among black students. In 1996-97, 3.3 percent of black students dropped out compared to 1.8 percent in 1997-98. The district improved its overall dropout rate to 1.8 percent in 1997-98, down from 2.4 percent the previous year.

Matthews chooses Midland to announce re-election bid

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

As community and energy industry officials looked on, Railroad Commissioner Charles Matthews announced his bid to be re-elected to the commission.

At Midland's Petroleum Museum Tuesday, Matthews said he is looking forward to the challenges the commission will face as the state deregulates its electric utilities and in ensuring sufficient supplies of natural gas to power the generating plants.

"I'm excited because of electric deregulation," he said. "The debate over electric deregulation was really about Texas natural gas. Companies aren't interested in deregulation because they'd have to build a nuclear power plant or a plant that burns coal. They're interested because of abundant Texas natural gas."

Morris Burns, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, said local oil producers are pleased to support Matthews, someone he said is familiar with the industry.

"He's experienced, he wants to stay with the commission and we want continuity," Burns said. "Charles has taken a great interest in the industry and is well-respected."

Across the country, 80 new power generating plants are under construction, Matthews said, with 20 expected to be completed this year. All those plants, he pointed out, will be fueled by natural gas.

"They are enormous users of natural gas. The challenge will be to have enough gas for the plants and for individual needs, and it will require all of us to work hard. This is good news for the Permian Basin, it's good news for Texas."

Midland attorney: We should not be treated as 'terrorists' in courthouse

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Midland lawyer H.W. "Woody" Leverett Jr., who objected to the stringent security procedures enacted earlier this month in the Midland County Courthouse, said in a letter this week to Midland judges that lawyers as "officers of the court ... should not be treated as potential terrorists."

Leverett, 45, noted that he is compelled to relinquish his three-bladed, stockman Old Timer pocketknife when entering the courthouse. He picks it up upon leaving.

"When we lawyers have to empty our pockets and open our briefcases for examination before entering the courthouse," Leverett said, "we are being told that we cannot be trusted.

"When I have to place my small pocketknife in a lock box before entering the courthouse, I am being told that someone in the courthouse thinks there is a reasonable chance that I will come slashing away at you (judges), or the jurors, or witnesses, like a deranged and ill-equipped Jim Bowie."

Courthouse security, which was implemented Aug. 2 at the behest of the Midland County Commissioners' Court and with the support of the several judges for Midland County, is headed up by Sheriff's Lt. Benny J. Matlock under jurisdiction of Sheriff Gary Painter.

"I trust him," Texas 142nd District Court Judge George "Jody" Gilles said of Leverett, who has practiced law in Midland for about 20 years. "I don't think he's going to come at me with a Swiss Army knife or a fountain pen or a Bowie knife of any type."

As a result, Gilles, who is administrative judge for the Midland Judi-

Death toll in Turkey earthquake passes 2,000

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Terrified earthquake survivors sought the safety of open ground Tuesday as the enormity of Turkey's tragedy became clear: more than 2,000 people killed, 10,000 injured and thousands more missing after an overwhelming show of nature's power.

Layer by layer, from thousands of sites around western Turkey, the ruins of homes and apartment buildings gave up their dead — many in the pajamas and nightgowns they wore when the immense temblor wreaked its 45 seconds of terror and destruction in the chilly hours before dawn. Some bodies were shrouded in the blankets and sheets of their own beds.

Geophysicists at the U.S. National Earthquake Information Center described the quake as one of the most powerful recorded in the 20th century, nearly rivaling the 7.9-magnitude tremor that devastated San Francisco in 1906. It was felt as far east as Ankara, 200 miles away, and across parts of the Balkans.

As many as 10,000 people could still be trapped in rubble around the town of Golcuk, (pronounced GUL-jik) 80 miles southeast of Istanbul, according to the town's mayor, Ismail Baris. Thousands more were missing in Istanbul and elsewhere.

State TV reported some 500 dead in Sakarya, a city 90 miles east of Istanbul.

The semi-official Anatolia news agency, quoting the prime minister's crisis center, set the overall death toll at 2,011 and the number of injured at 10,764 late Tuesday.

U.S. scientists initially reported the earthquake has having a magnitude of 7.8, but acknowledged later Tuesday that its intensity might be downgraded as low as 7.4 as additional measurements were taken into account.

The memory — and fear — of quakes runs deep among Turks. Tens of thousands of people fled outdoors and refused to return home amid more than 250 aftershocks. Highway medians, parks and empty lots were turned into makeshift tent cities.

"We are terrified of returning home. We will have nightmares for a long time," said Leyla Osbeli, hanging blankets from trees to shade her three young children.

Authorities evacuated eight villages Tuesday near the town of Altinova, 175 miles southwest of Istanbul, because of a leak at a damaged natural gas station there, said Nihat Ozgol, the governor of the nearby town of Yalova. It was not clear how many people were evacuated.

Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit toured some of the worst hit areas before chairing an emergency Cabinet meeting Tuesday.

AP Photo

Rescue workers try to free a woman pinned by debris whom they believe to be alive following an earthquake in Izmit, Turkey, early Tuesday. Authorities said the deaths and injuries were mainly in the cities of Izmit, Istanbul, Bursa, Eskisehir and Bolu. The quake's epicentre was placed near Izmit 65 miles (104 Km) east of Istanbul.

"There is no water, there is no food, there is no electricity, so many people are still under rubble," Ecevit said.

Under a brilliant summer sun, the hunt through the rubble produced both woeful discoveries and joyful reunions.

In the Avcilar district on the impoverished fringe of Istanbul, a boy cried out from the cracked concrete slabs and splintered plaster that was once his home: "Help me, I'm still alive!"

His appeal was momentarily lost in the din of desperation and anguish. Survivors wailed for those who perished when buildings shook, then entombed, sleeping families. Trucks and backhoes rumbled as they peeled away debris. Rescue workers — some digging with picks or bare hands — carted away corpses and tried to listen for any signs of life.

"I'm here!" the boy yelled again. A worker touched his hand. "Oh, thank you," sobbed 6-year-old Memet Arsuglou. Soon he was free, weeping and hugging his mother.

Nearby, a mother tried to pry away a wall of cement blocks that she believed covered the room of her baby daughter. She eventually gave up and pounded her fists on the remains of her home.

"No, no, no!" she yelled. "Why God? Why?"

Although the quake left few marks on central Istanbul — the museums, majestic mosques and Ottoman sites familiar to tourists — the edges of the 12 million-strong metropolis revealed the potential hazards of communities hastily built to accommodate the crush of rural fortune seekers. Shoddy apartment blocks and shantytowns crumbled to pieces in the quake or collapsed floor upon floor.

To the southeast of Istanbul, the devastation was near total in some places.

In Izmit, an industrial city near Golcuk, medical workers smashed pharmacy windows to get supplies for hospitals swamped by the injured. More than 100 sailors were dead or missing in the ruins of barracks in Golcuk.

Local authorities appeared overwhelmed by the task of clearing debris. Frustrated residents tried to round up civilian crews as hopes of finding survivors faded.

"My loves, my children are there, my 15-year-old son and my daughter. But no one is fighting to save them," Gulser Onat cried in Golcuk.

A host of nations, including the United States, Germany, Switzerland, Iran and even Turkey's fierce rival Greece, offered rescue teams and equipment, including dogs trained to sniff out humans trapped in the rubble.

Global positioning glitch threatens Japan's urban navigators

TOKYO (AP) — It's enough to unsettle any Japanese driver: In the thicket of Tokyo's chaotic maze of nameless streets and alleys, the electronic navigator breaks down.

That could happen to nearly 100,000 Japanese drivers this weekend, when Global Positioning System satellites reset their timing mechanisms — and throw unprepared receivers out of whack.

GPS is used by airlines, ships and businesses around the world, but in no place outside Japan do as many people — an estimated 2 million — rely on it to simply get across town.

The change will occur in Japan on Sunday at 9 a.m. local time, when the device's timing system — set to run 1 024 weeks starting on Jan. 5, 1980 — rolls over and starts a new sequence.

Japanese officials don't expect any problems on planes or ships, which use more recent navigating systems, have updated older models or rely on several other methods to determine their locations.

But car navigators are another story.

The Ministry of International Industry and Trade has urged the top navigator producers in Japan to get the word out to owners of pre-1997 systems that they need to reset their gadgets.

AP Photos

The latest models of car navigators were on sale at a Tokyo electrical appliances shop Tuesday. In the thicket of Tokyo's chaotic maze of nameless streets and alleys, an estimated 2 million people rely on the devices just to get across town.

The results so far have been mixed. Of the estimated 260,000 older models still in use, the ministry says about 95,000 still have not been adjusted.

Officials aren't fearing any pileups on Tokyo highways. But for the legions of Japanese drivers who haven't looked at a conventional map for years, the satellite glitch could be jarring.

"The car navigation system just won't turn on, or it'll take time to turn on," said Hidehiko Shimizu, spokesman for Pioneer, the producer with the highest number of unadjusted older models still in use: 55,000.

Car navigators might sound like a luxury in most places. But in Tokyo and other Japanese cities — where address systems are complex and grid layouts are unheard of — they can be a necessity.

Drivers typically plug in the address of where they want to go, and the navigator charts several possible routes. A triangle that moves along a map on a screen mounted on the dashboard shows the driver's location.

Navigator producers are getting in touch with Japanese customers by alerting retailers, putting out newspaper ads and posting warnings on their Web pages about the change.

Another major producer, Hitachi, said its customers can update the system by inserting a special CD-ROM. Setsuko Minamikawa, a spokeswoman, said 45 percent of their 6,500 older models have been upgraded.

The Hitachi model won't turn off entirely — but it might not give very accurate directions either.

"You might think you're driving on the road next to the one you're driving on," Minamikawa said. "It'll be a little off."

General warns army could intervene in Belgrade rally

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Two days before a major anti-government rally in Belgrade, a top general warned Tuesday the army would intervene in case of violence and a key protest leader said he would not attend the demonstration.

The surprise announcement by opposition leader Vuk Draskovic, who in the past has led the biggest protests against President Slobodan Milosevic, was a blow to attempts to form a united front to demand that the Yugoslav president step down.

The protest rally Thursday in Belgrade, which has the blessing of the influential Serbian Orthodox Church, would be the first major gathering in the capital since weeks of anti-government protests in 1996-97. It is expected to be a test of the public's discontent with Milosevic and its readiness to trust opposition leaders.

The economic and political crisis in Serbia, already deep after years of international isolation and wars, has intensified since the 78-day NATO bombing, which ended in June. Serbs increasingly blame Milosevic's hard-line policies for the worsening situation in the country.

Adding to tensions is a soccer match today between Yugoslavia and wartime rival Croatia that many fear could turn into a major anti-government protest.

Draskovic's balking at Thursday's rally — the first opposition protest in the capital since the NATO bombing — came amid a stepped-up government campaign against Milosevic's critics and signs he may use force to stay in power.

Belgrade police on Tuesday arrested and beat up Bogoljub Arsenijevic, an anti-government activist from central Serbia who went into hiding after leading thousands of rock-throwing followers in a raid on a government building in his native Valjevo.

Milosevic's public prosecutor, meanwhile, called for an investigation Tuesday against prominent opposition leader Vesna Pesic for allegedly urging followers to use violence to overthrow the regime.

Milosevic's government has toughened its position lately toward the growing opposition movement, and harsh verbal attacks against opposition leaders have appeared daily in the state-run media.

On Tuesday, the Politika daily accused opposition leaders of "destroying the people's political unity" and trying to trigger civil war in Serbia, the main Yugoslav republic. The paper labeled them "political midgets and losers."

Milosevic has used force to curb anti-government protests many times in the past. In March 1991, when street demonstrations turned violence, Milosevic sent tanks into the streets to end the uprising.

In an ominous sign that such a scenario could be repeated, Gen. Nebojsa Pavkovic told the newspaper Glas that "the army has to stand between the divided people to prevent civil war."

"The army will not stand against people, but (against) all those telling various stories, those who want to come to power illegitimately," Pavkovic said, adding that the army was right to intervene in 1991, when two people were killed.

"Our tanks came out on the streets not to attack anyone, but to create a buffer zone to put an end to the upheaval," Pavkovic said. "There were human losses and destruction. Can anyone imagine what would have happened if the army had not come out?"

Draskovic led the protests in 1991 and afterward spent several days in jail. He was also one of the leaders of weeks of huge anti-Milosevic demonstrations in 1996-97.

But he later moved closer to Milosevic and served as deputy premier in the Yugoslav government before being sacked during the NATO bombing.

Democratic Party leader Zoran Djindjic, a rival in the opposition movement, has questioned whether Draskovic was really committed to toppling Milosevic. Draskovic has been calling for an agreement between the regime and the opposition on Milosevic's peaceful resignation.

In an interview with B2-92 radio Tuesday, Draskovic warned "there is real danger of civil war in Serbia and we have to insist on a peaceful concept at the opposition rallies."

"Serbia is full of poverty, hatred and weapons. It would take little for us to go against each other," he said.

SECURITY: Lawyer feels new system infringes on people's rights

cial District, said that he "can understand Woody's frustration in the sense that he sees it as just another erosion of the personal freedoms and liberties that we have enjoyed in America."

The security system, which includes a staff of peace officers checking out courthouse visitors and regulars and operating metal detectors and X-ray machines rigged to detect firearms, explosives and other weapons and contraband, is similar to units operated by the United States Marshal's Service at the Federal Courthouse in Midland since late 1994.

There is no intent, Gilles said, for the security system to cause any distress or anger.

At the same time, "I don't want folks to be hurt in any manner in a physical way in this courthouse whether it be an attorney, a litigant, a juror, or someone who is merely accompanying a friend to do business at the courthouse," Gilles said.

LEVERETT'S LETTER was addressed to Texas District Court judges Gilles, John Hyde, Willie DuBose, and Dean Rucker; to County Court-at-Law judges Al Walvoord and Marvin Moore, and to County Judge Bill Morrow.

As an attorney, Leverett is "concerned about people's rights and liberties," Gilles said, "because the Constitution is not dead.

"It is not a historic document that we all look back to. It is something that is very well and alive," Gilles said. The courts and the courts' officers, including lawyers, are "protectors and defenders" of the Constitution "because we have taken an oath to protect it and to preserve it, not only what it says but what it represents.

"That's a delicate balance," Gilles said, between freedom and security.

Leverett said he understands that the "recent shooting rampages in Colorado, Georgia, California, and elsewhere have everybody feeling fearful, on edge, and under attack.

'Why don't they confiscate sharpened pencils and ball-point pens? You could stab somebody in the neck or the chest. People do it in prison all the time, using pens as weapons. Where do you stop?'
— H.W. "Woody" Leverett Jr., Midland lawyer

"SUCH TERRIBLE events invariably tempt us to overreact, just as the preceding generation overreached when they imprisoned our ethnic Japanese citizens after the attack on Pearl Harbor."

Leverett suggested that Americans can "live in freedom, or we can live in fear; we cannot live in both."

In the years to come, Americans will "look back with shame and regret at the way in which we have eagerly surrendered, inch by inch, so much of our freedoms and civil liberties in a quixotic quest to be 'safe.' "

Sheriff Painter said that he has "all the trust in the world in Woody Leverett and has no doubt that he would never flip out and cause some kind of tragic incident to occur. But that doesn't mean that somewhere down the line someone else might not. And in an effort to be fair to everybody, everyone is treated the same" in the courthouse-security system procedures.

District Attorney Al Schorre, who noted that Leverett is "probably as close to an ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union) lawyer as we've got, once in a while he goes off on a diatribe.

"UNFORTUNATELY, IT (the security system) is a necessary evil," Schorre said. "And we put up with it in airports, down at the federal building," as library-book monitors, "and you put up with security devices in the major stores" and in shopping malls.

"There are security cameras all over that mall (Midland Park Mall)," Schorre said. "There's a lot of it going on that we're not even aware of."

However, "I think the public really doesn't mind the intrusion that much. The lawyers have been more outspoken and against them than have the regular citizens who come up here to conduct business," Schorre said. "The lawyers have been more outspoken than the regular citizens have been. I don't think most people mind it."

And from a "strictly legal standpoint," Schorre said that Midland County is "not doing anything in this building that every other building owner couldn't do."

RATHER THAN having an all-encompassing security system, Midland lawyer Allen McFall said that a system should be used with discretion as to selected cases and in selected courtrooms, such as Judge Rucker's, which handles divorces" wherein "tensions run high or in a particular criminal case like a gang vs. gang matter. Then I believe it would be appropriate, but not as a daily requirement for everybody who comes into the courthouse."

But the problem with that limited-security system, Schorre said, is "that you don't know who is going to domestic-relations court.

"If you're going to do it, you're going to have to do it for the whole building," Schorre said. "There were a lot of people who were a little skeptical about it, but it seems to have worked out smoothly."

Leverett said to "consider this old pocketknife as a potential lethal weapon" would be akin to "old-time cowboys checking their pistols with the marshal when they came into town.

"Why don't they confiscate sharpened pencils and ball-point pens?" Leverett asked. "You could stab somebody in the neck or the chest. People do it in prison all the time, using pens as weapons. Where do you stop?"

LEVERETT CHARACTERIZES Matlock as "an honorable man and an outstanding peace officer."

"I think he is a great guy," Leverett said. "When you are given that responsibility, I guess you think your job is to imagine every conceivable, worst-case scenario. And when you do that, what's under the bed at night? Are there enough chemicals in their (women's makeup kits) to make a bomb? The mind runs wild."

U.S. District Court Judge Lucius Bunton, who noted that federal courthouse security "is out of my hands now," said that "You can't even go into a federal courthouse now without one of those darn (metal detectors) nationwide. I don't have a whole lot of say. But that's the way it is. It was a longtime coming here.

"We've had so many security problems with schools and shoot-ups in courthouses," Bunton said. "But you have to go through one (security system) to get on an airplane."

And of carrying a pocketknife, such as Leverett's Old Timer, Bunton said in that regard, "I'm kind of like President Clinton. It depends on what your definition is of a pocketknife. Some pocketknives don't even fit in the pocket."

MIDLAND DISTRICT Clerk Vivian Wood said that, "I feel that some security was needed" in the courthouse.

Of the Midland County Courthouse policy to ban firearms, explosives, and "edged weapons," among others, Leverett suggested that the policy-makers could "kind of back off the nail-file and pocket-knife deal. To my way of thinking, that's not any kind of threat at all. Only the most active imagination would perceive that as a threat.

"If you were going to carry a gun up there (into the courthouse)," Leverett said, "the first thing you would do would be to pull it out and shoot the guards and just waltz on in and start shooting everybody else."

BID: Matthews has been recognized for Severance Tax Relief Act

(From 1A)

The challenge, he said, will be meeting demand, especially if the country sees a cold winter, which will tighten supplies. And supplies, he noted, are related to drilling, which he said is at 50 percent of last year's levels.

"As prices fell, the oil industry stopped. Drilling stopped, people were laid off. The service industry has been hurt. Now, with prices at a healthier level, we'll be asking 'where is the service industry? Where are the roughnecks?' The hydrocarbons are in the ground, the technology is here, the capital is here, we just need reasonable prices," he said.

Burns said Matthews' concern is farsighted.

"Oil prices are up, but drilling activity is not," he said.

Burns compared Basin drilling activity to the Alaska Pipeline, which he said took nine months to fill up before any petroleum products came out the other end.

"It's like a pipeline that has to fill up. This will take six, nine, 12 months before drilling activity picks up, and then there'll be concern about whether or not there'll be enough workers," Burns said.

Matthews said he has made a number of trips to the Midland area this year as the area suffered through then began rebounding from energy prices at 12-year lows.

"I came here to support an industry that's now 100 years old and is still the number one industry in Texas, and it's still number one because of Railroad Commission oversight."

Matthews, hoping to become the first Republican elected to a second full term on the commission, has been recognized for his initiatives in digitizing the agency's records and, most recently, the Severance Tax Relief Act the state enacted earlier this year.

He credited the agency's partnership with educators for passing the tax relief initiative, as officials from West Texas school districts testified that the drop in mineral valuations cost schools $150 million in ad valorem tax revenues.

RAZE: City plans to sell property after building's demolition

(From 1A)

Under the property tax code, "The owner of real property sold at a tax sale ...may redeem the property within six months after the date on which the purchaser's deed is filed ..."

In other words, had the city made any improvements before the six months expired, the owners could have reclaimed the property by paying the taxes.

The city filed the deed Feb. 9, and the six months expired earlier this month, leaving the city a clear path for its bulldozers.

At least, that is the hope.

Deputy City Manager Rick Menchaca said just as the city was being fiscally responsible by waiting, it is now being fiscally responsible by finding the most economical way in which to destroy the structure.

One obstacle to that end is that the age of the building makes asbestos removal necessary and preliminary estimates are floating in the quarter million dollar range.

"Right now we're appealing to the Texas Department of Health on the asbestos removal and basically they have not granted us a complete waiver," Menchaca said. "That's a concern because we were initially looking at about the $120,000-$150,000 range (total demolition and removal costs)."

Menchaca added that a new law enacted a year ago limited the availability of asbestos abatement waivers, but that the city staff is still working on ways to get some relief from the health department.

An additional cost factor involved in the removal is that the nearest landfill licensed to accept asbestos waste is in Monahans.

Once the asbestos problem is satisfied, the city will proceed with demolition plans and intends to sell the property to recoup tax dollars spent on the project.

"The council is very committed to clearing that off as soon as we can," Mayor Bobby Burns said. "But at the same time, we're trying to protect taxpayer's money."

Menchaca said that the staff would update the council on the status of the project at Tuesday's council meeting.

"We should be getting very close," Burns added.

RANK: Schools aiming for 'Exemplary,' MISD officials say

(From 1A)

"Well, All right!" MISD board president Rebecca Oekerman exclaimed upon hearing about the improvements. "I'm very pleased to see that the hard work of all MISD educators and across the board increases in scores show their commitment to the education of our children — particularly to those students and teachers at Greathouse, Fannin and De Zavala."

The latest report marks the first time MISD has had three recognized campuses. In 1998, Sam Houston Elementary had the honor of being MISD's first "Recognized" campus but fell to "Academically Acceptable" this year.

"I'd like to express my appreciation of the hard work of a large number of students and teachers," said Superintendent Joseph Baressi. "I think, also, we are not satisfied with our current level of achievement but we are very pleased with the positive trend that is evident over the last few years."

No MISD campus, however, landed in the "Exemplary" ranking. To achieve that lofty goal, a campus must have 90 percent of its students and each ethnic group passing each subject of the TAAS, one percent or less of all students dropping out and 94 percent attendance. And though the district has improved its TEA rankings every year, it has yet to achieve an "Exemplary Campus."

Ector County Independent School District had two "Exemplary Campuses," named in the latest report — Gale Pond Alamo Elementary and El Magnet at Reagan Elementary.

Still, "This has been a good report for us," Cummins said. "A number of our schools want to have higher recognition levels — recognized and exemplary — but 1998-99 was a good school year for students at MISD."

Study: Secondhand smoke increases stroke risk

LONDON (AP) — Breathing in other people's cigarette smoke makes nonsmokers 82 percent more likely to suffer a stroke, a new study suggested Tuesday — indicating the dangers of so-called passive smoking are much worse than originally believed.

The study by researchers at the University of Auckland in New Zealand is the largest and most rigorous to date, and gives more ammunition to those campaigning to have smoking banned in all workplaces and public areas.

Current estimates of how smoking increases the risk of various diseases are dramatically underestimated because the ill effects of secondhand smoke inhalation are not taken into account, say the researchers, whose work is published in the British medical journal Tobacco Control.

That means research into the hazards of tobacco smoke has artificially narrowed the true gap between smokers and people whose bodies really are tobacco-free, said Dr. Rodney Jackson, a professor of epidemiology at the University of Auckland and one of the authors of the study.

"We've never really had the right comparison group because everybody has been slightly poisoned," Jackson said.

Because New Zealand's anti-passive-smoking legislation is among the most progressive in the world, it is easier to separate out people who have been exposed to secondhand smoke, he said.

Two previous studies have linked stroke with secondhand smoke. Studies also show passive smoking increases the risk of heart disease, heart attack, lung and breast cancer, and breathing-related diseases.

The suggestion that studies into the dangers of smoking underestimate the real risk is "an important point that has not been well appreciated," said Stanton A. Glantz, a secondhand smoke expert at the University of California-San Francisco who was not connected with the study.

The study examined 521 stroke patients in Auckland and compared them with 1,851 randomly selected healthy people matched by sex and age to see the effect of smoking and secondhand smoke on the chances of suffering a stroke. None of the subjects was older than 74.

"Half the people who have strokes are 75 or older, so these are premature strokes that should not be happening," said Ruth Bonita, the lead author of the study, who now runs the non-communicable disease section at the World Health Organization.

Anyone who smoked at least one cigarette a day was termed a smoker. Those who had either never smoked or hadn't smoked for at least a decade were considered nonsmokers. Other former smokers were divided according to how long it had been since they stopped.

People were classed as having been exposed to secondhand smoke if they lived with or worked in the same room as someone who regularly smoked in front of them for more than one year during the past 10 years.

The fewer cigarettes people smoked each day, and the longer ex-smokers had abstained, the better off they were, but the difference between them and nonsmokers was not as dramatic once secondhand smoke was taken into account.

Overall, smokers were four times more likely to suffer a stroke than nonsmokers. But when the nonsmokers exposed to secondhand smoke were excluded from the equation, smokers were six times more likely to have a stroke. That's a difference of about 50 percent.

Again in the basic investigation, people who had quit smoking more than two years before were no more likely to suffer a stroke than those who had never smoked. But once the passive smoking factor was removed, those people still had nearly double the chance of suffering a stroke.

Lifetime nonsmokers and those who had quit smoking more than a decade earlier were 82 percent more likely to have a stroke if they were breathing secondhand smoke.

Men fared worse, with a doubling of their stroke risk, compared with a 1.5 times increased chance for women.

Dr. Konrad Jamrozik, a smoking and heart expert at Harvard University, wrote in an editorial in the journal that the study is "a very significant step forward in our knowledge."

He said based on the research in New Zealand, where fewer than 20 percent of adults smoke, secondhand smoke is potentially implicated in one in eight of all strokes before age 74.

Yeltsin's ex-allies form coalition to contest elections

MOSCOW (AP) — Challenging the weakened Boris Yeltsin, ex-prime minister Yevgeny Primakov joined a coalition of the Russian president's rivals Tuesday that plans to contest upcoming elections.

For his part, Yeltsin spent Tuesday in the Kremlin cautioning his latest prime minister, Vladimir Putin, not to stray from his political line. Yeltsin has fired four premiers in the past 17 months.

Primakov was one of those dumped by Yeltsin — apparently because he was becoming too popular in his own right. Primakov's new alliance is with Moscow Mayor Yuri Luzhkov, another former Yeltsin ally who now has a score to settle with the president.

Primakov and Luzhkov are two of the country's most popular politicians, and either would be a strong contender for president in elections set for next summer.

The duo has linked up with several prominent regional governors in a bloc that has set its sights on the December parliamentary polls. A strong showing would serve as a springboard for either one to run for president.

However, both were noncommittal Tuesday when asked which one of them would enter the presidential campaign.

"I haven't yet made up my mind," Primakov told a joint news conference. "Much will depend on whether I feel that people trust me."

"Don't you hurry us," Luzhkov said. "Let us get into (parliament), and then we will make a decision."

Yeltsin, 68, is not allowed to run for a third term and has grown increasingly isolated as his current term winds down.

Parental support is important for child's education

"The object of education," observed Robert Maynard Hutchins, "is to prepare the young to educate themselves throughout their lives."

Hutchins, whose unconventional theories about higher education raised a few eyebrows in the first half of the 20th century, had solid credentials as an educator. He served as president of the University of Chicago, dean of the Yale Law School and eventually as chancellor of the University of Chicago. So, his comment about the "object of education" would seem to have validity.

Toward that end, the effort now under way by the Midland Council of PTAs to get parents involved in the education of their youngsters is one we wholeheartedly endorse. That one simple step can make all the difference in the education of children.

...The effort now under way by the Midland Council of PTAs to get parents involved in the education of their youngsters is one we wholeheartedly endorse. That one simple step can make all the difference in the education of children.

For one thing, it tells the child that the parents are serious about education and willing to do what is necessary to ensure that the child obtains a good education. And for another, it underscores that fact by showing the child the parents are even willing to commit a significant portion of their own time to the child's school involvement.

Parental support and encouragement of school activities, plus help with homework, making certain the child knows how to use a public library and reference books and materials in it, and other assistance can not only help the student to get a firmer foundation in their subjects, it can also help the child develop a real thirst for knowledge. That's important because once a person develops that thirst, it typically will continue throughout his life.

As Hutchins said, that is the object of education. We encourage all parents to get involved in the education of their children.

Today in History

Today is Wednesday, Aug. 18, the 230th day of 1999. There are 135 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 18, 1587, Virginia Dare became the first child of English parents to be born on American soil, on what is now Roanoke Island, N.C.

On this date:

In 1227, the Mongol conqueror Genghis Khan died.

In 1846, U.S. forces led by Gen. Stephen W. Kearney captured Santa Fe, N.M.

In 1894, Congress established the Bureau of Immigration.

In 1914, President Wilson issued his Proclamation of Neutrality, aimed at keeping the United States out of World War I.

In 1920, Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the 19th Amendment to the Constitution, which guaranteed the right of all American women to vote.

In 1958, the novel "Lolita" by Vladimir Nabokov was published.

In 1963, James Meredith became the first black to graduate from the University of Mississippi.

In 1983, Hurricane Alicia slammed into the Texas coast, leaving 22 dead and causing more than $1 billion in damage.

In 1991, Soviet hard-liners launched a coup aimed at toppling President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who was vacationing in the Crimea. (The coup collapsed three days later.)

In 1997, Beth Ann Hogan became the first coed in Virginia Military Institute's 158-year history.

Ten years ago: The Labor Department reported that the Consumer Price Index rose only 0.2 percent in July 1989, easing fears of a recession. In Colombia, leading presidential hopeful Luis Carlos Galan was assassinated outside Bogota; the Medellin drug cartel was strongly suspected.

Five years ago: Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles declared an immigration emergency and demanded federal help to cope with the largest surge of Cuban refugees since the 1980 Mariel boat-lift.

One year ago: A day after his grand jury testimony, President Clinton left Washington on a vacation with his family. Meanwhile, some lawmakers called for Clinton to resign in the wake of his admissions concerning Monica Lewinsky while a spokeswoman for Hillary Rodham Clinton said the first lady "believes in this marriage."

Pentagon anthrax vaccine causing mutiny

Mass resignations, disobeyed orders, litigation, congressional hearings — what is going on in the armed forces?

In a word: anthrax.

The response: mutiny.

Here is the situation, unparalleled in American military history:

Anderson

The U.S. government is aware of 10 countries that have weaponized the anthrax bacterium, but Iraq and North Korea are the only two the military will mention. The others undoubtedly are the usual suspects.

Easily produced, anthrax can be stored for years, dispersed over a wide area and kills 99 percent of the people who have any kind of exposure to it. It is a "clear and present danger" to U.S. service personnel.

Under these circumstances, the government began an anthrax immunization program in 1997 with plans to immunize all 2.4 million active and reserve military personnel. Full immunization is an 18-month process requiring six shots and a booster every year thereafter.

However, medical officials acknowledge that the military has encountered a higher rate of reactions than expected. Fifty percent of those who received the shot experienced soreness or lumps, mild fever, flu-like symptoms, joint pain or swelling. Only about four in 1,000, according to Major General Robert G. Claypool of the Army Medical Corps, have systemic reactions from the shots.

A recent review of 200 medical reports of personnel experiencing side-effects found that:

- 151 experienced skin reactions, 15 of which were serious.
- 12 reported nausea, fatigue, diarrhea, hair loss, moodiness and three had serious allergic reactions.
- Eight were diagnosed with sustained disorders after immunization, such as bipolar psychiatric disorder, diabetes, lupus, and multiple sclerosis, which authorities characterized as "coincidental."

Not surprisingly, the program has been met with more rebellion than enthusiasm, but as Pentagon spokesmen, Jim Turner, explained to us: "If you disobey an order — and the vaccine is an order from the top of the Pentagon — you will be punished."

The result? Resignations and mutiny.

The Government Accounting Office estimates that 30 percent of Air Force reserve pilots have resigned rather than take the shots, a figure sources tell us is low by a factor of two. Several military officials reported on the record that they have lost 60 percent of their squadrons due to the vaccine. Here are some examples:

- 32 pilots in 301st Airlift Squadron at California's Travis Air Force Base have resigned or are planning to do so due to the vaccine.
- An Air National Guard unit in Connecticut lost one third of its pilots due to the vaccine.
- As many as 25 of 35 pilots in 122nd Fighter wing of the Indiana National Guard refused to take the vaccine.
- One-third of F-16 pilots in the Wisconsin National Guard refused to take the vaccine.

Six congressmen introduced a bipartisan bill on Aug. 11 that would make anthrax immunizations voluntary. Rep. Walter Jones, R-N.C., has introduced a bill to make the immunizations voluntary until the FDA approves the new vaccine.

Turner said: "We are updating FDA licensing early next year and we are retesting the stockpile (from 1970) that is currently being administered. ... It is not a matter of if we will be hit, but when. People don't know when they are hit with anthrax and it is so lethal that if you develop the symptoms, you are going to die in a few days. It would be unconscionable not to prepare our troops for this threat."

Apparently, the troops must also be prepared for the vaccine. Clearly, it has become a matter of protection or retention that only can be solved by informed consent.

Bonds don't match crime

Recently two assailants came within a half inch of killing a local bartender with an illegal switchblade knife. The victim was subjected to multiple stabs and slashes requiring more than 100 stitches to close.

There is no way this attack can be construed as less than attempted murder. Yet the bonds were set at $20,000 on each suspect. Why? Inquiring minds want to know.

Wadley still needs work

The construction on Wadley Avenue is done and it's about time! The only problem is they didn't fix the problem. In fact, they spent all that money and even worsened the problem.

An example is the heavy rains we had a month ago. The "new" drainage didn't seem to work. It used to be that the water would come up in people's driveways on Wadley. Now it comes up to their garage doors.

The money would have been better spent on something that would work or at least last longer. Also, where the construction on Wadley was done needs a new coat of asphalt to smooth out all the bumps and dips left by the construction company.

Wadley Avenue still isn't totally repaired and probably never will be!

Phone bill fees are insult

Used to be that one paid for the telephone bill and had an option of making long-distance calls without charge except for the actual calls, which were reasonable.

Then all at once AT&T began billing separate from Southwestern Bell. Those of us who stuck with AT&T out of loyalty when this long-distance fuss began are getting the shaft. They advertise on TV to dial zero; zero and the operator will even dial it for you and it's free.

Hah! That is exactly what I did and it cost me $6.90. Hardly free. We did not even get the party we were calling. Not a single long-distance call was made on our phone, yet the entire bill was $21.19. That is an insult!

Extra charges, taxes, etc., on phone bills are excessive.

Southwestern Bell bills have a $1.40 municipal charge. Monthly service charge is $9.28, but we are taxed on $14.34. What items on the bill are equal to $14.34? Well, surprise! In addition to the $9.28 (which is all that should be taxed), the $3.50 FCC approved customer line charge, $1.40 municipal charge and .16 expanded local calling service surcharge. In other words, we are paying taxes on taxes — an absolute insult. Also $1.05 state and local taxes.

Instead of raising dust about it costing more to call Marfa than California, let's raise plenty about these taxes, surcharges, etc.

Residents thank officials

I am writing this letter to let several people know how much we appreciate them for the support they gave us Aug. 3 for National Night Out!

First, I would like to thank Sgt. B. John McDaniel, the crime prevention officer for Midland County, for all the help he has given us on starting our Neighborhood Watch. He has been a big help.

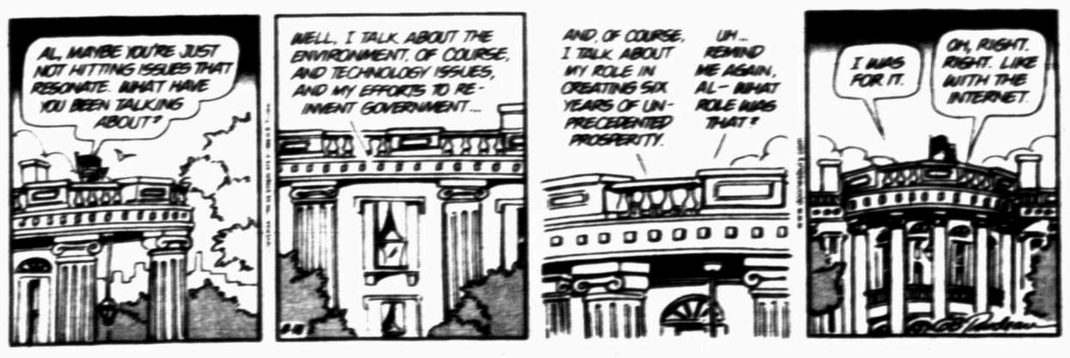

Also thank you to my neighbors of Spring Meadows Mobile Home Estate for caring enough about your neighbors and neighborhood to get involved.

Thank you to the county of Midland for showing us who you are. County Judge Bill Morrow, Sheriff Gary Painter, County Fire Marshal Dale Little, Deputy John Reese, Deputy Kris Hoban. I want to give a special thank-you to the two deputies, Bill Stone and Dale Burns, who with their horses "Cricket" and "Sid," short for "Presidio," endured the heat just so they could give the neighborhood kids a ride.

We have all learned that it is just as important for the people who live in the county to have a Neighborhood Watch as it is for the ones who live in the city. We should all appreciate the hard work and dedication given to us by the officers of Midland County and the city of Midland.

Chinese are forced to argue in English

"We believe there is one nation and two countries," said Chen Chien-jen, chief spokesman of the Republic of China on Taiwan, speaking in English.

Seth Faison, The New York Times' man in Beijing, asked him to say that in Chinese. Chen was stumped. "We are still looking for the right words," he said.

That's because in Chinese, state, country and nation are expressed in the same word: guojia, pronounced gwo-jah. But the Chinese leaders on Taiwan, which Beijing considers a renegade province of China, want to put a few degrees of separation between the two political entities. How to do this without declaring independence, which might start a war? "So they use the English words," writes Faison, "even though Taiwan is a Chinese-speaking country, or state, or nation — or whatever."

Safire

Though the Chinese language often uses pronunciation to express different nuances of meaning, the English language has a glorious range of synonymy.

Nation, from the Latin of the same name, stems from "breed, stock, race" — leading to the notion of "a people." When we speak of the Iroquois Nation, or the Nation of Islam, we mean the culture, religion, race and/or language that binds people who may be dispersed.

"He hates our sacred nation," says Shylock in Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice." (The Chinese word for this racial sense is minzu.) Although that early sense is still in use, in the last two centuries the primary meaning of nation has shifted to "an independent political unit."

Is that later sense the same as a country? Yes. Its Latin root is contra, "against," originally the land or region separate from, or up against, other discrete areas. Though it has a second sense of "bucolic region" as in "I can't stand the beach; let's go to the country," the primary meaning is "an independent state; native land." (U.S. presidents traditionally began their inaugural addresses with "My countrymen" until it was desexed to "Fellow citizens.")

Sometimes the old meaning of nation can be used to make a contrast with the new meaning of country, as in: "The Kurds are the largest nation in the world without a country."

Note the use above of "independent state." The use of the modifier independent shows that state need not be wholly separate from a nation. The 50 American states are not sovereign, no matter what they say in Texas and Hawaii (the only states that were once sovereign nations).

State, from the French etat, "class, ranking," is a unit of government that may or may not be independent, which is why it requires a qualifier. Palestinians, for example, rarely say they want a state; they specify an independent, or separate, or "our own" state.

Now we can see what the spokesman for Taiwan was getting at when he said "one nation and two countries." He meant the early sense of nation — in this case, "the Chinese people" — with one part of that people on Taiwan set up against, contra, in a country next to but apart from the mother country.

Mainland China is not having any of this English linguistic hair splitting. It insists on "one China," a fiction of both sides that U.S. policy gladly acknowledged in the Shanghai Communique of 1972, provided ultimate reunification would be peaceful. The point here is that Chinese prefer their own language to gloss over differences but turn to English to introduce degrees of difference. Our language is as subtle as their minds.

Across U.S., students return with caution, hope

By Anjetta McQueen
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The doors opened, the hallways filled, the cliques reunited, the classes began. So it goes each year, when students across the country head back to school.

But is it just like any other year?

A few months after the Colorado and Georgia school shootings — and within weeks of summer shooting incidents seemingly spurred by racial or ethnic hatred — schools nationwide are opening their doors warily.

"It's a mixed mood," said Bruce Hunter of the American Association of School Administrators. "There's a real current of optimism running smack into just a dread of potential violence."

School officials — recovering from last spring's shootings in Littleton, Colo., and Conyers, Ga., and the prank threats that followed — spent a busy summer installing metal detectors, practicing emergency drills, adding security cameras and two-way radios, crafting dress codes and bookbag bans and trying to hire counselors.

Students vowed to break the conspiracy of silence about dangerous classmates; parents promised to parent; lawmakers promised to get tough — no matter where they stood on gun control. On Tuesday, the White House launched a series of television and radio public service messages featuring students talking about their fears and President Clinton urging parents to talk to young children about safety.

Now, as classes resume across the United States this month and next, and almost every family faces the issue in school newsletters, classroom discussions, assemblies and practice drills, many agree fear might just be the biggest threat.

President Clinton makes remarks during a youth violence event Tuesday in Washington. The president introduced new public-service announcements to be shown on television that urge parents to talk to their children about violence. Attorney General Janet Reno is seated behind the president.

"We'll probably have more metal detectors and preventing bookbags," said Maya Hughley, 17, who starts her senior year at Joseph Scott High School in Toledo, Ohio, next week. "Columbine had a major impact on schools, but you can't make too big a deal of everything. You just have to mentally be prepared."

Along with increased security, many recent school openings included rallies and assemblies to ease community fears. Before classes began at Columbine High on Monday, students, teachers and staff held a "Take Back the School" rally. A U.S. flag that had been at half-staff since the April 20 shootings was finally raised.

In Charlotte, N.C., where schools also opened Monday, parent Blanche Penn was reassured of her two children's safety at an earlier open house by the district. That, she said, gave her hope for the new year.

"I think you know how the news media can get everybody hyped up," she said. "It's good to know schools are taking every precaution that they can."

Last year, Penn's son was afraid to go to his middle school after the Colorado shootings; on Monday he and his sister both went back to school happily.

"We felt safe sending our children to school this morning, and they came home safe," she said. "There was not a lot of talk about it."

However, elementary school principals reported in a recent survey that more parents were asking about their children's safety after the spring incidents.

Parents and children also are worried about how school officials will treat students who seem different. Though Columbine's principal asked students to be more tolerant, given that the gunmen had been viewed as social misfits at the school, many other schools will welcome back students with increased monitoring of their dress and other behavior.

"We don't want to see a model where children who wear trenchcoats or go on the Internet become instantly classified as kooks and crazy," said Larry Gray, father of 17-year-old Quentin, who attends Duke Ellington School for the Arts in Washington. "A lot of these kids are really underestimated and sharp as tacks."

Beverly Barry, a parent and town official in Ludlow, Mass., says the tragedies elsewhere have given parents there a new resolve to pay more attention to their children.

"You keep thinking it's never going to happen," said Barry. "But everybody is trying to stay aware of it. People aren't closing their eyes to things."

"You have to get back to the basics and you have to get back to family atmosphere and family support."

FDA blocks some who visited Britain from giving blood

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some Americans who traveled frequently to Britain during that country's mad cow disease crisis are being banned from donating blood back home — a restriction that will cut the U.S. blood supply during a critical time of shortage but one the government deems a necessary precaution.

The Food and Drug Administration on Tuesday imposed the ban on blood donations by anyone who has traveled to, or lived in, Britain for a total of six months since 1980.

The average tourist who spent just a few weeks in Britain can still donate blood — but people who went to Britain repeatedly between 1980 and 1997, the crisis years, will have to add up their trips to see if they're under the six-month limit.

Canada issued a similar restriction Tuesday.

The donor ban is strictly a precaution — there is no evidence that any mad cow-type illness has been spread through blood transfusions.

But the mad cow disease that swept through Britain's cattle has been linked to a human brain-destroying illness, and both illnesses are so mysterious that scientists simply can't rule out the possibility they could infect blood.

Still, the FDA's donor ban is controversial. It is sure to frighten Americans whose blood is refused.

Worse, the American Red Cross estimates the ban will cut U.S. blood donations by 2.2 percent at a critical time. Even before Tuesday's action, experts were predicting severe, nationwide blood shortages to hit as early as next year because blood donations already were falling.

As many as 200,000 to 250,000 blood donors could be turned away by the new ban, said James MacPherson of America's Blood Centers, which represents blood banks that provide half the nation's supply.

"We certainly do not intend by this to scare people," said Mary Elizabeth Jacobs, the FDA scientist who coordinated the policy's development.

The FDA plans to work with blood banks to find ways to ease the donor loss, but MacPherson said the government also needs to help blood banks explain the issue to the confused or frightened donors they turn away.

At issue is an infection that kills by literally eating holes in brain tissue. In cattle, it's called mad cow disease, and it swept through British herds starting in the late 1980s.

The worry about blood stems from Britain's discovery in the mid-1990s that some people apparently caught a new strain of CJD by eating beef infected with mad cow disease. Named "new variant CJD," it has killed 41 Britons.

There is no known mad cow disease in U.S. cattle. The United States has not allowed importation of British beef for over a decade and no American is known to have caught new variant CJD.

But because these brain diseases can incubate for years without causing symptoms, some scientists say the possibility exists that they'll one day discover a link between blood transfusions and infection.

Military depots remain open long after all the work is gone

By Larry Margasak
Associated Press

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa. — Tom Cohenour maneuvered his golf cart through a cavernous maintenance building at the Letterkenny Army Depot, past the hulking ghosts of busier days.

He glided past the huge structures where the Army's tanks were X-rayed and the turntables where specialists repaired equipment. He passed the machine shop that once manufactured any tank part that couldn't be bought. It now mostly sits idle.

"There were three shifts here. It's sad, really sad," said Cohenour, who earns $44,000 a year supervising mechanics. With the tank jobs gone, only one-fifth of the depot's past work force remains.

If he worked for a private company that lost a major contract, Cohenour might be out of work, too, and the facility closed. But Letterkenny — and other depots like it from Virginia to Hawaii — stay open because members of Congress have the political muscle to protect them.

Defense officials are eager to save money by consolidating the repair, storage and maintenance facilities known as depots and shipyards, which were built to serve a larger military during World War II and the Cold War.

"We could take that money for weapons modernization and quality of life issues like family housing," said Randall Yim, the Pentagon's deputy undersecretary for installations. "We don't need massive warehouses any more."

In a classic case of protect-your-district politics, the bipartisan group of 77 House members — they call themselves the Depot Caucus — have blocked the congressional action necessary to close a depot. The caucus includes members of defense and appropriations committees that control spending and military policy, and they can exercise enormous influence over their colleagues on Capitol Hill.

The Defense Department spends about $13 billion a year to store, repair and modernize its equipment. Most of that work was done at the depots in years past; now $6 billion of that money goes to private industry.

■ More national news/8B

The figure would be higher, but the lawmakers of the Depot Caucus pushed through legislation that requires the Defense Department to keep at least 50 percent of maintenance work within the military.

The 18 large depots and several smaller facilities still perform valuable functions, and some have proven they can do work cheaper than private industry. Letterkenny boasts state-of-the-art equipment to repair missiles, for example. But its work force, almost entirely civilian, has dropped to 1,320 from 6,200 at its peak in the 1960s.

Letterkenny and the Red River Army Depot in Texarkana, have suffered some of the largest losses since the last base closings in 1995. Defense Department figures show Letterkenny is operating at 73 percent of its capacity; Red River is at only 37 percent.

The Army depot in Anniston, Ala., is now operating at 68 percent of capacity. The Air Force logistics center in Ogden, Utah, is at 53 percent.

Caucus members protecting the depots argue that it is unwise to shut facilities that are essential in war time. A private business can be hit with a strike or have financial problems that could harm the nation in time of crisis, these lawmakers say.

The caucus boasts several influential members, including Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., chairman of the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, who holds sway over road and transportation projects in every member's district, and Rep. Tillie Fowler, R-Fla., a member of the House Republican leadership and the Armed Services committee.

Few want to tangle with them. Rep. Terry Everett, R-Ala., said he was threatened with losing a place on a key House-Senate conference committee when he tried to oppose the group in 1997.

"I would say they use no-holds-barred tactics verging on being ruthless," Everett said.

But Mrs. Fowler said the caucus doesn't bully opponents, and is simply trying to educate colleagues on the importance of the depots.

"I worry that in five years, 10 years they'll get rid of the depots. We learned that in these battles, we better be prepared," she said.

Democrats also are prominent in the depot-saving effort. Rep. Norm Dicks, D-Wash., who serves on the Appropriations defense and military construction subcommittees, is a caucus member. And Rep. Solomon Ortiz of Texas, ranking Democrat on the Armed Services readiness subcommittee, is co-chairman of the caucus.

Ortiz said the group has contacts throughout depots so it can be alerted to any efforts to cut work. "We are like the CIA," he said.

Pentagon officials say they're not trying to starve the depots by sending more work to the private sector, but rather are trying to save money.

"The overall policy is to outsource to the extent allowed by law, where it could make sense," said Robert Mason, the Pentagon's assistant deputy secretary who specializes in depot issues.

UTPB helps students move in

By Jennifer Cherry

Joanie Ward of Fort Stockton on Tuesday handed over Daughter No. 3 to the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Mrs. Ward's youngest daughter, Bryana, this year joins the UTPB ranks with sisters, Madlyn and Audrey.

They and other students moved into the Falcon's Nest Student Housing facility Tuesday. Teachers and administrators served as movers and tour guides for the school's fourth annual "Move-in Day."

"Most of the students don't know that everyone is going to help them," said Leta Blewett, UTPB student housing manager.

Indeed, parents and students were greeted by several administrators as they drove up to the two-story apartments on the south side of the UTPB campus.

Mrs. Ward had all good things to say about UTPB, saying the school provided some familiarity for her daughters.

Mrs. Ward, a native of Odessa, said UTPB was appealing because it is on familiar grounds and much of her family still lives in Odessa.

However, Bryana said the experience of actually living at UTPB is much different from previous visits to see her sisters.

Madlyn, the oldest of the three sisters, is a Presidential Scholar; Audrey is a second year student at UTPB, receiving a scholarship to the university.

Audrey said she liked the on-campus living arrangements because they "are more like an apartment, where everyone else has to find a place to live."

Mrs. Ward said she and her husband really liked the living arrangement at UTPB because they were so much nicer than the "horror stories" she had heard from other parents of college students who had to find homes for their students.

"This isn't a bad place at all," Mrs. Ward said.

Moving into a new place is not hard, Audrey said. The teachers' help did not go unnoticed. Audrey said that their help made moving all of her boxes a lot faster.

The Ward sisters will not live together. Instead, Bryana said she will share the two-bedroom apartment with three other girls.

She even has a plan for college survival, "getting an education, but at the same time, having fun meeting new friends."

Ms. Blewett said the moving part of "Move-in Day" lasts until almost 3 p.m. Lunch is served to all students during the day. After the moving ceased, students attended transfer orientation.

UTPB speaker to focus on preventing school violence

By Jennifer Cherry

Among the thousands of students across the country headed back to school this month are those at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colo., site of the worst school shooting in history.

Indeed, the mere mention of "Columbine" gets educators and parents — including those in the Midland-Odessa area — immediately thinking about school violence.

To that end, Jack Thompson, attorney and national advocate for a more responsible American entertainment industry, will present "Curbing Violence in the Public Schools," at 7:30 p.m. Sept. 16 at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin gymnasium. The event is free to the public.

"We hope to pack the gym," said Jim Olson, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The lecture is the first joint effort by The College of Arts and Sciences and The School of Education.

Thompson practices law in Miami, Fla., and since 1987 he has been actively involved in First Amendment issues. His latest involvement came nine days prior to the April 20 Columbine incident.

On behalf of the six parents of the three students killed by a classmate in Paducah, Ky., Thompson filed a federal products liability lawsuit. Defendants in the lawsuit include the makers and distributors of The Basketball Diaries, sexually violent Internet pornography sites and the designers, makers and distributors of point and shoot video games.

Federal hearing raises complex gun law question

By Art Sinclair
MRT Correspondent

Brian Scott Spruill, a Midland truck driver, has been in federal detention since July 1998.

Today he appears for sentencing in a case before U.S. District Judge Royal Furgeson in Midland. Spruill's sentencing raises a complex issue involving weapons, wives armed with protective orders and the individual citizen's right to bear arms.

Spruill was first arrested by the Special Crimes Unit of the Department of Public Safety on July 20, 1998, for violation of a family violence protective order. Before he could be released on bond, federal authorities placed a federal hold on him preventing his release. The hold was placed on Spruill because he was found to be in possession of a firearm, which violates a little-known Family Violence Protective order statute.

The order was issued as a part of divorce case involving his ex-wife.

The maximum penalty for violation of the Family Violence Protective order is 10 years in federal prison and a maximum fine of $250,000. Federal sentencing guidelines allow the judge to levy a much lighter sentence.

In February, U.S. District Judge Sam R. Cummings, of the Northern District of Texas in Lubbock, issued a lengthy ruling declaring the Family Violence Protective order law unconstitutional.

In the case of Timothy Joe Emerson, his wife Sacha, was granted a temporary restraining order against her husband, who had allegedly issued threats against her and her children. The order was issued by State District Judge John E. Sutton of the 119th District Court of Tom Green County on Aug. 24, 1998. Emerson was arrested for violation of the restraining order and federal authorities were tipped that he was in a possession of a firearm.

In February, Cummings dismissed the federal indictment against Emerson maintaining that the statue violates the Second Amendment of the U.S. Constitution that guarantees an individual right to bear arms.

Judge Cummings' ruling explores the two conflicting opinions on the Second Amendment.

The two schools of thought are referred to as the "states rights," or "collective rights school," and the "individual rights school."

The "states rights" school cites the opening phrase of the amendment, along with subsequent case law, as authority for the idea that the right only allows states to establish and maintain militias, and in no way creates or protects an individual right to own arms.

Due to changes in the political climate in the past two centuries and the rise of National Guard organizations among the states, states' rights theorists argue that the Second Amendment is an anachronism, and that there is no longer a need to protect any right to private gun ownership.

According to Judge Cummings' ruling, "The individual rights theorists, supporting what has become known in the academic literature as the 'Standard Mod-

Big Spring Heritage Museum adds railroad exhibit

By Johnnye Montgomery

BIG SPRING — Hear that lonesome whistle blow, and if you know the language, it will tell you something, according to one of the Heritage Museum's most popular exhibits.

Stand before the chart of train whistle codes with the whistle pull within easy reach and you can blast out a message that will rock the room.

n A short blast means stop. Apply the brakes.

n Two long blasts are the signal to release brakes ... proceed.

n A long toot, followed by three short ones tells the flagman to go back and protect the rear of the train.

For as long as Big Spring has been in existence, it has talked railroad talk. In fact, the railroad is Big Spring's reason for being, said Angie Way, curator of Big Spring's Heritage Museum.

"This town began because the railroad needed water," she explained. "You can see the railroad influence in all of downtown Big Spring, and even though the buildings may no longer be there, every downtown street is laid out so that it looks toward the railroad."

The Heritage Museum, which devotes roughly one third of its exhibit space to railroad-related memorabilia and educational exhibits, receives from 30 to 50 donations a year from railroad retirees and their families and collectors of railroad relics.

Earlier this year, it was the recipient of a major bequest from the late Wofford Hardy, who left the museum an extensive collection of miniature sets, railroad blocks, railroad hats and other T&P items, along with a cash bequest of $100,000.

Ms. Way said that although the museum plans no exclusive Hardy exhibits, the collection is an invaluable resource, especially in light of its relevance to the community.

"We'll be putting out more and more items from the Hardy collection, and they will serve to complete our exhibits, along with other items we've received from other donors. We look at these things a little differently than collectors, who may have a hundred different photos and models of old engines. We're most interested in individuals, and whatever might stir a memo-

TEEN BEAT

Looking for something to do on Mondays? Try Midland's Teen Court

By James Hershberger

Hershberger

Mondays are no picnic. After riding the weekend roller coaster, Mondays are the abrupt end.

After a hard day at school, most people are looking for a little entertainment. For those who are tired of TV shows and the mall, I have a solution for you. What would you say to some live, unscripted, entertainment assured by the city of Midland to be a good time on Monday? Look no further than Midland Teen Court.

Of course, it's not meant to be a show, but it always seems to be a little more interesting than your average episode of "Judge Judy." Though I'm not up to par on the technicalities, Teen Court more or less works as follows.

A juvenile commits a class C misdemeanor and receives a ticket from a police officer. If he pleads guilty at the hearing, he has a choice of doing teen court for a reduced fine, or paying the whole ticket.

If he picks the former, which most do, the kid then comes down to the Teen Court office and tells his story, which is typed up and mailed to the two teen court attorneys who will prosecute and defend the case.

A jury of the defendant's peers hears the testimony and sets punishment. (All defendants are guilty; teen court is just the punishment phase).

Punishment ranges from community service hours, serving on a teen court jury, to other special requirements, such as life-skill classes, or apology letters.

My eighth-grade year, I made it into the National Junior Honor Society. It was a pretty sweet deal to me, missing classes once in awhile and free refreshments. Then I found out the downside: we were required to do some community service work. So, not wanting to do any physical labor, I decided to try Midland Teen Court, something I had heard about.

As soon as the proceedings began and I saw the Teen Court attorneys in action, I knew how I wanted to spend my Monday nights from then on. So, after talking with the woman in charge, a few more jury services, and one very boring training session, I was the newest prosecutor in Midland Teen Court.

I remember my first case very well. I received it on Friday, and it just so happened, I was prosecuting a girl who was accused of breaking into a concession stand. My weekend centered around preparing for the case. My dad, who is a lawyer, told me to make sure I had my witnesses lined up, as well as my evidence. When I told him Teen Court didn't use witnesses or tangible evidence, he lost interest.

Finally, Monday arrived. I dressed in my best suit and bought a legal pad, as well as a brand new pen. Once I arrived in the courtroom, I realized I left the pen in the car. That was too bad. Then I realized all the other attorneys were in T-shirts and jeans. I wanted to go home.

When my case came up, the girl — who was about my age — said that she and her sister were at a park, when two girls they knew asked them to break into a concession stand with them. After refusing, the two sisters went walking around the park, and as they passed the concession stand, a woman with the police accused them of breaking into the stand.

After her story, the judge commented, "Well, young lady you're starting to sound innocent." So here I was, out of place in a suit with a borrowed pen, trying to convince a jury to give an innocent girl the maximum sentence. Needless to say, I lost.

Police Reports

Robbery

ODESSA — Odessa police Monday arrested a man in connection with an aggravated robbery that occurred at the Odessa Motor Inn on Aug. 7, leaving the clerk, Imelda Acosta, 44, injured.

Mark Allen Wren, 31, was arrested in the 400 block of N. Texas and charged with aggravated robbery, a first degree felony.

According to police reports, at approximately 3:43 a.m. on Aug. 7 a white male forced his way into the office of the Odessa Motor Inn and, once in, demanded money from the register. When the clerk attempted to push the man out the door of the office, he hit her on the head with a glass jar, causing lacerations. He ran out of the business and fled the scene on foot and Ms. Acosta was transported to Medical Center Hospital, where she was treated and released, police reports stated.

She described the man as a person registered at the motel and identified Wren from a photo line-up after Crimes Against Persons detectives conducted a follow-up investigation, according to police.

Wren's bond is set at $25,000.

UTPB: Students living on campus are part of student housing club

(From 1B)

Freshman students will attend freshman orientation today and Thursday. The pre-semester activities conclude next week following fall registration on August 23-24.

During the week, Ms. Blewett said students that live on campus play games in the gymnasium, eat ice cream or watermelon outside in the evenings and then meet on Friday so that they can learn the rules and regulations of the apartments.

"I'll probably feed (the students) pizza or something that night," Ms. Blewett said.

The on-campus housing is currently 98 percent full, Mrs. Blewett said. Some athletes moved into the facilities during the first week of August.

"We have some athletic students that live on campus. But they are not the majority," Ms. Blewett said.

Most of transfer students choose to move into the apartments later. About half move in on "Move-in Day," she said.

Rent for a two-bedroom apartment at Falcon's Nest Student Housing costs $930 per semester. A two-bedroom apartment houses four people. Rent for a four-bedroom apartment is $1,080 per semester. Students are responsible for telephone, television and cable bills. The rest of the utilities are paid.

Students who live at Falcon's Nest Student Housing participate in a student housing club. The group has pizza parties each month, Audrey said. They also do things with the community according to Ms. Blewett. This year, Mrs. Blewett said, she is going to incorporate more student attendance at UTPB athletic events.

Once all of the boxes are emptied, the Ward sisters plan to decorate their new apartments to resemble home. And while there is a sense of excitement in the air, Bryana acknowledged it would be hard to leave all of the memories and friends from high school behind.

AMENDMENT: Argument is between individual, state rights

el,' argue that the amendment protects an individual right inherent in the concept of ordered liberty, and resist any attempt to circumscribe such a right inherent in the concept of ordered liberty, and resist any attempt to circumscribe such a right."

In today's hearing, Furgeson could opt for a sentence as light as time served for Spruill who has been incarcerated for more than a year.

Cummings' earlier ruling overturning the Federal Family Violence Protective order act, has been appealed by the government.

Obituaries

Byron Greaves

Memorial services for Byron Hugh Greaves will be held on Thursday, August 19 at 11:00 a.m. at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church with the Reverend Stockton Williams and the Reverend Dr. Allen Whitman officiating. Ellis Funeral Home will be in charge of arrangements. Byron Hugh Greaves was born May 31, 1936 to Lawrence Hugh and Eunice Greaves in Forsan, Texas. Most of his childhood was spent in Andrews County where his father was a contract pumper in the oil fields. Byron received a B.S. degree in Petroleum Engineering from Texas Tech University and began his career with Texaco in 1958. In July of 1962, he married Elizabeth Ann Sonnen, together creating a home in Midland for thirty plus years. Byron worked with Great Plains Land Company from 1965-1969. In 1969, he joined Flag-Redfern Oil Company and ultimately served as Executive Vice President. Flag-Redfern merged with Kerr-McGee in 1989, and he continued on as VP and Production Manager of the Permian Basin Region until retiring on April 1, 1992. Drilling wells was in his blood and in 1993, Byron founded Pennant Petroleum as an independent oil and gas operator with operations in the Permian Basin.

Mr. Greaves served on the Board of Flag-Redfern Oil Company and Peterson Drilling. He also served on the Boards for the Permian Basin International Oil Show, Permian Basin Petroleum Association, Petroleum Club and the Petroleum Museum. He was a member of the Society of Petroleum Engineers, Society of Petroleum Evaluation Engineers, Independent Petroleum Association of America, Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists and was recently admitted to the Texas Tech Petroleum Engineering Academy. Greaves also served as a Vestry Board Member of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church and was a member of the Lamesa Masonic Lodge.

Mr. Greaves is survived by his wife, Elizabeth, his son, Troy Hugh Greaves of Houston, TX; his daughter, Julie Sonnen Chambers of Dallas, TX; his grandsons, Tyler Hugh Greaves and Austin Matthew Greaves; his sister, Charlene Barnes of Oregon; his three brothers, Bill Greaves of Edmond, OK, Basil Greaves of Plano, TX, and Burl Greaves of Lubbock, TX.

The many prayers from family and friends proved to be a constant blessing during the two-month struggle with cancer. Mr. Greaves died in Houston, Texas at M.D. Anderson Monday, August 16th, 1999.

In lieu of flowers, memorials may be directed to the American Cancer Society or the Trust Fund of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, 1412 W. Illinois, Midland, Texas 79701.

Obituary & Death Notice policy

There is no charge for death notices of residents or former residents of Midland or for those who have Midland relatives. We also publish death notices for residents of the surrounding West Texas area.

Free death notices include date and place of death, service and burial information, funeral home handling arrangements, date and place of birth, brief biography, survivors and memorials. A longer, more detailed obituary is available for a charge. It may include tributes, expanded biography, organizational associations, notes of appreciation, pallbearers, honorary pallbearers and a photo.

Deadline for both free death notices and paid obituaries is 3:30 p.m. and information must be either received from or verified by a funeral home.

TALK: Lecturer hopes to convey steps to prevent murders

(From 1B)

The message Olson said he hoped Thompson would convey is what steps can be taken to prevent the repeat of such murders in West Texas. He encouraged both parents and teachers to attend the lecture.

"I want to help school teachers and parents focus on really subtle influences given to these kids," Olson said. "(Thompson can) help parents become aware of early influences on children."

Those who work in schools are already much more aware of the potential for violence. "We are a whole lot more vigilant," said Davis Corley, Lee Freshman principal. He added that local teachers are very observant of their students and uniforms help administrators identify "strangers" more easily.

He said he did not foresee steps as extreme as those taken at Permian High School, which recently installed surveillance cameras, a new fence and issued picture identification badges to all students and staff. Those changes were made possible by a grant, which MISD did not receive.

The tightened security at PHS is not a result of recent violent events in schools, said Brian Rosson, PHS principal.

"This is not a knee-jerk reaction after what happened at Columbine," he said.

According to Rosson, tighter security was already an issue at the time of the shootings. Because of car vandalism, trespassers and truancy, Rosson said a PHS assistant principal called on an acquaintance at Sandia National Laboratories in Albuquerque, N.M. to investigate the "basic run-of-the-mill" high school crimes. Most of the new equipment on campus is the result of the National Institute of Justice, a federal entity, that gave $100,000 to the cause.

Olson said Thompson was different from other speakers who have visited UTPB.

The advisory committee that chooses speakers for lectures at UTPB is taking a new approach in the selection process. Lectures at UTPB usually feature individuals involved in higher education. This year, he said the advisory committee (made up of members from Odessa, Midland and Andrews) hopes to find speakers that deliver topics that include the community's concerns.

"I just think the time is right ... (school violence) is a nationwide issue," Olson said. "This will provide an awareness of some subtle influences that will spawn teens to violence."

Condemned killer wins court reprieve on grounds of mental illness

HUNTSVILLE(AP) — A Texas appeals court Tuesday spared condemned inmate Larry Robison from the death chamber and spared Gov. George W. Bush from having to decide whether to delay the execution of a convicted killer whose supporters insist is mentally ill.

Robison, convicted for a rampage that left five people murdered 17 years ago, won a reprieve about 4 1/2 hours before he could have been put to death. In a 5-4 ruling, the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, the state's highest criminal court, blocked the scheduled lethal injection of Robison after his attorneys questioned the inmate's mental competence.

"Because he has long suffered from schizophrenia, he does not understand the nature of the punishment to be imposed upon him," Judge Tom Price wrote in a concurring opinion to the full court's brief four-paragraph order.

The court was acting on a late appeal filed by Robison's attorneys to the trial court in Tarrant County, which referred the case to the appeals court in Austin.

Death penalty opponents and Robison's relatives had been arguing he should be spared from execution because he was insane and demanded Bush, running for president as a "compassionate conservative," show his compassion by postponing the punishment.

Bush could have issued a one-time 30-day reprieve but had announced no ruling by the time the appeals court made its decision. The governor customarily refrains from announcing a decision until all legal matters have been resolved.

"There is no appropriate action for Gov. Bush to take in this case at this time," the governor's office said in a statement after the reprieve. "This is a legal issue to be decided by the courts."

Bush has come under recent fire from death penalty foes and opponents in his own party for remarks attributed to him in an article last week in Talk magazine regarding his handling of the case of convicted pickax murderer Karla Faye Tucker. Ms. Tucker last year became the first woman executed in Texas since the Civil War despite pleas for clemency from around the world.

In the article, Bush is quoted mimicking Tucker and whimpering about her pleas to remain alive. The governor has labeled the description of him in the article as a mischaracterization.

"I take the death penalty very seriously," he said last week. "I take each case seriously."

Capital punishment opponents like Amnesty International and legal and religious groups, including the Vatican, had joined in pleas to the governor, the parole board and others about Robison.

"We believe that the citizens of your state and now all American voters are entitled to know just how real and deep your sense of 'compassion' reaches," William B. Moffitt, president of the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, an organization opposed to the death penalty, said in a letter to Bush. "We ... struggle to understand exactly what you mean by this."

Robison, who would have become the 99th Texas inmate put to death during Bush's 4 1/2 years in office, was en route from death row at the Ellis Unit to the Huntsville Unit prison in downtown Huntsville, 15 miles away, when the reprieve was issued.

"Such is life," Robison told Texas Department of Criminal Justice spokesman Larry Fitzgerald. "I'm going to get off death now one way or another. Maybe it's the Lord working."

Fitzgerald described Robison as calm and subdued.

"He did say he had given away all his stuff and he was just in a state of limbo right now," Fitzgerald said. "And he said he was hoping it wouldn't work out like this."

Edward Wilkinson, a Tarrant County assistant district attorney, said the inmate now would be examined by psychiatrists from the state and from his defense attorneys.

"In the order, he's met the (legal) requirements that he hasn't been given the opportunity to litigate his (competency) claim," Wilkinson said. "Both sides will get psychiatrists to look at him and see how allegedly ill he is.

"We're mildly surprised," he said of the reprieve. "We're not shocked."

Robison has been on death row since 1983 but the court pointed out Tuesday was his first execution date. According to law, the competency question as posed by his lawyers could not be raised until an execution was near.

TEEN: All types of teens are involved in the Monday night court

(From 1B)

The next time I showed up, however, I was ready. Dressed in a collared shirt and jeans (hey, I'm still a classy guy) and armed with a pack of pens, I prosecuted a girl who had shoplifted from the mall. The girl, who I imagine was used to getting what she wanted, smiled as she told of stealing a shirt for a friend. So, I asked a few clarification questions about her story and then asked, "Now, if I stole something of yours, would you like me to get the maximum sentence possible?" She replied, yes.

"How is that different from your situation?" The smile disappeared and after a long pause, the defendant softly responded, "It isn't." I then asked, "Do you deserve the maximum sentence?" Very emotionally, she replied, "Yes."

Her attorney tried to save her, but it was useless. After the jury decided in my favor I was on top of the world. Then I lost two other cases that night and realized I still had some work to do.

Certain stories about Teen Court cases get told and retold.

There once was a guy who was at a service station past curfew. The prosecutor asked if he was aware of the curfew laws in Midland; he replied, no, he was not aware.

"So why did you run from the police?" the prosecutor asked. "Because I didn't want to get a curfew ticket," he answered. Of course, he got the maximum sentence.

Another time, a kid was at Teen Court for some violation committed at school. His principal came to sit in as a spectator. After the youth gave his testimony, the principal rose and declared, "He's lying through his teeth." The principal was allowed to give testimony and has been the one and only witness at Teen Court.

Teen Court to me, is a cool place because you have all types of kids involved. You have the kids who are required to be there because of violations, you have the kids who need community service hours for National Honor Society and Texas Scholar and you have a unique brand, those who act as the attorneys. You see, being an attorney is a power trip, because we're the only people who really know what's going on. The jury members don't know what to expect, and neither do the defendants. But we've seen a ton of cases, and we've already written down our questions.

So next Monday night, when you just want to enjoy yourself and relax, come sit in the spectator section at Teen Court. The only thing on TV is "Seventh Heaven," and once you've seen one sappy melodrama, you've seen 'em all.

ry, whether it's a union card, or a cap, or a photo.

"So many people come into the museum and they'll see a photograph that reminds them of meaningful times of their lives. So many of our donations have deep relevance to people of this community."

Ms. Way added that the museum welcomes copies of newspaper clippings, photos and other collectible printed material dealing with members of the community, no matter what the age.

"People don't always think of items they have on hand as being old enough to be of historical value to us. But in our minds, we're obligated to collect all of West Texas history, whether it happened 20 years ago, or 120 years ago."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Wednesday, Aug. 18, 1999:
Your creativity opens many new doors; walk through them, even if you feel fearful at times. Realize that you can break patterns and change the way you live your life. A residential move is possible, or you might opt to remodel. If you are single, romance knocks on your door, but you could find an attraction rather compulsive. You might even start a fight to create some distance. Be more self-aware. If attached, you will find that there is much heat between the two of you. Learn to communicate your caring and to avoid power plays. SCORPIO can push your buttons.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ Close relating brings forth heated issues; some may be concealed in words of anger. A door opens permitting better relating and communication. Clearing the air allows new beginnings. How you view a situation could change substantially. Tonight: Go for togetherness.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Your social skills shine. You deal well with partners. Solve problems and reach a new understanding. Let others express their opinions. Don't worry about tension — it will pass. Domestic matters come forward. Tonight: Be receptive to another's overture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ Pace yourself. Know your limits, even though you're a bundle of energy and will speak your mind at the drop of a hat. Partners seek resolution, transformation and change. Keep communication flowing. As a result, you'll see life differently. Tonight: Working late.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★★ Ingenuity marks your work. Finances benefit from your innovations. Expenses could be incurred as a result of a new project. Take time before launching it; attend to personal matters first. Make an appointment for a checkup. Tonight: Have fun as only you can.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Clear out misunderstandings in a family discussion. New insights remove barriers with a loved one. You can create a relationship that's even better. Listen more. Follow through on a decision. Humor helps dissolve tension. You have that gift! Tonight: Indulge yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Listen, even though you don't have to agree. You see others in a different light because of what they say, but you may not want to respond in kind. Consider a domestic change; the timing is better than you realize. Brainstorm with a family member. Tonight: Where the gang is.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ New information could encourage you to make a financial change. Refuse to spend beyond your limits. A friend has many great ideas — still, do what you want. Establish limits. Stop being overly nice to everyone but yourself. Tonight: Handle funds carefully.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ You are in the limelight. A new financial perspective helps you make the decision to reorganize your budget. Check in with an expert or someone with great money ideas. You'll get what you want. It's hard for anyone to refuse you right now! Tonight: Your call.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ Rather than tell all, pick and choose your words. You have a greater impact than you realize. Move in new directions. Others respect your ideas; refrain from pointing out their limitations. Tensions mount over communication and possibly misinformation. Tonight: Head home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You are a goal-oriented sign, and you know how to get what you want. However, you often don't give enough credit to what your thought processes can accomplish. Open up to new possibilities through the power of your mind. Tonight: Where your friends are.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Accept responsibility, even if it isn't yours. Changing your role in your community and at work proves to be unusually beneficial. Take action and go for what you want. Demonstrate the courage of your convictions. Another easily follows your lead. Tonight: Working late.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Reach out for another. Stretch your mind and take an overview. Others respond to your inquiries. Information helps you at work. New ideas flow. Enlisting another in a project allows you to accomplish even more. Be willing to take a stand. Tonight: Rent a movie.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1NT	Pass	2♡	Pass
3♠	Pass	4NT	Pass
5◇	Pass	6♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Nine of ♠

How do experts seem magically to work out the distribution of the opposing cards? Consider this deal from the European Team Championships in Malta.

North's two hearts was a transfer to spades, and South's jump showed a maximum no-trump with good spades. The response to Blackwood showed four "aces" — the king of trumps counting as a fifth ace — and the good spade slam was reached.

West led a spade and won in the closed hand, and declarer drew a second round of trumps. Next came the ace and king of diamonds and a diamond ruffed high. On these to tricks West discarded a club and a heart. Declarer now knew all that was necessary to virtually guarantee the slam. Do you?

West, who held only three cards in spades and diamonds, had to have at least five clubs — with six or more hearts, West would never have parted with a club. So declarer ran all dummy's trumps, coming down to the ace of hearts and four clubs in hand. West must hold on to four clubs (otherwise declarer simply cashes the king of clubs and concedes a club) so the defender is forced down to only one heart. Declarer now cashes the ace of hearts. On this lie of the cards, that action fells the king, so dummy's queen becomes the fulfilling trick. But had the monarch not appeared, declarer would have simply crossed to the king of clubs and ducked a club to West, scoring the last two tricks with the ace-jack of clubs on West's forced club return.

Leasing company wants Artist to pay

DETROIT — A leasing company wants the Artist Formerly Known as Prince to pay thousands he allegedly owes for a rented tour bus.

Thides Leasing Corp. filed a lawsuit Monday claiming the Artist used the motor coach between May and October 1998 but never paid for it.

The Artist owes $42,109 for days he used the bus, the suit said. The Detroit company also wants $116,600 for seven months that he promised to use it but didn't, preventing the company from renting the bus to other performers.

Londell McMillan, the Artist's attorney, did not immediately return a call Tuesday.

Lawsuit claims the Artist Formerly Known as Prince owes money for a rented tour bus.

LOS ANGELES — Leslie Nielsen's career blossomed with spoofs like "Naked Gun" and the upcoming "The Big Bang," a send-up of space movies.

Now he's dreaming of another target.

"If anything is spoofable, it would be 'Titanic' because there must be very few people in the world who have not seen the film," he said in a recent interview.

"It would have been very ripe for it, but at the moment there's nothing cooking in that area," Nielsen added.

The 77-year-old actor's space spoof is due out next year.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The Nashville Network is canceling some country music-oriented programing, including the talk-variety format that has been its prime-time flagship for 16 years.

Executives at the cable network on Monday confirmed reports that "Prime Time Country with Gary Chapman" would stop production in September.

Three entertainment magazine shows that focus on country singers are also being canceled: "Crook & Chase," "Crook & Chase Tonight" and "This Week in Country Music."

The network is developing series and specials to broaden its audience, said TNN spokeswoman Cheryl Daly. The new shows will be announced in September and debut in December.

"Country music fans are not one-dimensional, and they want TNN to offer a wide variety of programs to address their interests," Ms. Daly said. "It's like MTV, which started with music videos, then added sports and lifestyle shows."

ROCHESTER, Minn. — Gov. Jesse Ventura, media shy?

The ex-wrestler says he's abstaining from national media interviews for six months — unless they're about Minnesota issues, such as his push for a one-house Legislature.

"I'm going to go away from that," he said in Tuesday's Post-Bulletin of Rochester.

Ventura said he doesn't want to be the focus of so much national attention.

ORLANDO, Fla. — The huge success of "The Blair Witch Project" has opened doors for the film's young creators. Now they're waiting for the attention to die down so they can concentrate on new projects.

"The fame part kind of gets in the way of the filmmaking part, so hopefully the fame will fade and we can get back to filmmaking," producer Michael Menello said Monday.

The film, which was made for about $35,000, has become one of the largest grossing independent films in history, bringing in around $108 million since it went into wide release three weeks ago.

The success has elevated the five former University of Central Florida film students from starving artists to press-hounded celebrities.

The mock documentary has given directors Daniel Myrick and Eduardo Sanchez and producers Gregg Hale, Robin Cowie and Monello the financial freedom to focus on the creative side of filmmaking instead of spending nearly half their time fundraising.

But fame has also created new demands on their time, including juggling interviews and phone calls from agents, fans and "long-lost friends."

"All we've been doing is struggling to keep up with things," said Sanchez. "It's amazing how much non-filmmaking there is."

Water supplies adequate, but cities wary as summer heat continues

DALLAS (AP) — Texans' water worries have mostly evaporated this year, thanks to a rainy spring and a later start to intense summer heat.

Fort Worth used an alternate-day plan last summer, but now has a system that lets residents water only every fifth day, said Mary Gugliuzza, public education program coordinator for the Fort Worth Water Department.

'You can't compare this summer to last summer. We were hitting 100 degrees in May of last year, while we didn't reach 100 until late July this year. That's vastly different.'

— Mary Gugliuzza, public education program coordinator for the Fort Worth Water Department

System capacity problems, including water main breaks and a flooded treatement center, caused more than two weeks of mandatory watering restrictions last summer, said Ms. Gugliuzza. However, no citations were issued.

This year, lake levels are adequate and the delivery system is holding up well, she said.

"We had a good wet spring, so have a good amount of water in the lakes," she said.

Another factor favorable to water supplies is the temperature, Ms. Gugliuzza said.

"You can't compare this summer to last summer," she said. "We were hitting 100 degrees in May of last year, while we didn't reach 100 until late July this year. That's vastly different."

Dallas has a four-stage plan that begins with a water watch, said Janell Mirochna, community relations manager of Dallas Water Utilities, whose system is designed to handle demand of 815 million gallons per day.

A watch, requiring a cutback in the city use of water and a stepped-up education program, was implemented July 30, 1998, when one-day water consumption hit a record 708.5 million gallons, she said.

No conservation measures have been taken this year, even though consumption reached 708.2 million gallons on Aug. 11, Ms. Mirochna said. The system serves almost 1.9 million people in Dallas and 19 surrounding communities.

However, they could yet be triggered by at least one of three conditions: low water supply, a short-term emergency such as the failure of a major pumping station, or increased customer demand compared to delivery capacity.

Levels at the five lakes that serve Dallas were at 84 percent, so supply was "not an issue," Ms. Mirochna said Tuesday.

Suburban Carrollton's water-use ordinance took effect Aug. 6 and is expected to remain in force through Sept. 15, said Kathy Ferguson, public works database technician. It provides for a fine up to $200 for violation of odd-even lawn watering days, but as of Tuesday, no citations had been issued.

In the North Texas city of Gainesville, residents were asked not to water Monday so the city could replenish the tanks. The city now asks homeowners to water only between 6 p.m. and 9 a.m.

Galveston, which imposed a ban Friday, also had issued no citations as of Monday, utilities director Brandon Wade said.

And City Manager Steve LeBlanc said the ban likely would be lifted Thursday, although island residents would still be asked to limit consumption.

LeBlanc said water levels in the city's reserve tanks over the weekend had begun to rebound after dwindling levels prompted city officials to call for voluntary and then mandatory restrictions.

"This is a particular concern during hurricane season, when a storm could interrupt our water supply from the mainland, leaving us dependent upon what is in our storage tanks," he said.

The Edwards Aquifer Authority, which monitors San Antonio's water supply, is urging voluntary conservation measures, although the level in the underground reservoir was 661.1 feet Tuesday at the Bexar County index well.

That's above the 650 feet at which the first stage of mandatory restrictions are imposed. Last summer, during a four-month drought, the aquifer level plummeted to 640 feet.

"Every drop counts, so be water-tight," urges a recording on the authority's telephone line.

is hosting the Project KidCare Photo ID event on SUNDAY, AUGUST 22
at the Midland H-E-B store located at 3325 W. Wadley as part of an effort to provide parents with personal safety ID's of their children.
From 11a.m. to 6 p.m., parents can obtain free, standardized, high quality photographs of their children for their KidCare ID booklet in which they can also record and maintain current vital statistics of their children.
Project KidCare, developed by Polaroid in conjunction with the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children(NCMEC), is a program designed to raise awareness of child safety and provide parents with an effective tool to aid law enforcement officials with all the appropriate information necessary if their child is lost or abducted.
Of course nearly all parents have photographs of their children, but most do not have suitable photographs for release to law enforcement officials and the press should their child become missing. The type of photos that is needed is an unobstructed head and shoulders shot of the child alone, which we will be providing to parents free of charge at the H-E-B/Polaroid KidCare Photo ID Event.
EVENTS INCLUDE:
• SIDEWALK SALE • HOT DOGS
• GAMES • TOURS OF POLICE & FIRE VEHICLES • SNACKS • COLOR CONTEST

Military depots live on after work is gone, some fighting to keep them

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Tom Cohenour maneuvered his golf cart through a cavernous maintenance building at the Letterkenny Army Depot, past the hulking ghosts of busier days.

He glided past the huge structures where the Army's tanks were X-rayed and the turntables where specialists repaired equipment. He passed the machine shop that once manufactured any tank part that couldn't be bought. It now mostly sits idle.

"There were three shifts here. It's sad, really sad," said Cohenour, who earns $44,000 a year supervising mechanics. With the tank jobs gone, only one-fifth of the depot's past workforce remains.

If he worked for a private company that lost a major contract, Cohenour might be out of work, too, and the facility closed. But Letterkenny — and other depots like it from Virginia to Hawaii — stay open because members of Congress have the political muscle to protect them.

Defense officials are eager to save money by consolidating the repair, storage and maintenance facilities known as depots and shipyards, which were built to serve a larger military during World War II and the Cold War.

"We could take that money for weapons modernization and quality of life issues like family housing," said Randall Yim, the Pentagon's deputy undersecretary for installations. "We don't need massive warehouses any more."

In a classic case of protect-your-district politics, the bipartisan group of 77 House members — they call themselves the Depot Caucus — have blocked the congressional action necessary to close a depot. The caucus includes members of defense and appropriations committees that control spending and military policy, and they can exercise enormous influence over their colleagues on Capitol Hill.

The Defense Department spends about $13 billion a year to store, repair and modernize its equipment. Most of that work was done at the depots in years past; now $6 billion of that money goes to private industry.

The figure would be higher, but the lawmakers of the Depot Caucus pushed through legislation that requires the Defense Department to keep at least 50 percent of maintenance work within the military.

The 18 large depots and several smaller facilities still perform valuable functions, and some have proven they can do work cheaper than private industry. Letterkenny boasts state-of-the-art equipment to repair missiles, for example. But its workforce, almost entirely civilian, has dropped to 1,320 from 6,200 at its peak in the 1960s.

Letterkenny and the Red River Army Depot in Texarkana, Texas, have suffered some of the largest losses since the last base closings in 1995. Defense Department figures show Letterkenny is operating at 73 percent of its capacity; Red River is at only 37 percent.

The Army depot in Anniston, Ala., is now operating at 68 percent of capacity. The Air Force logistics center in Ogden, Utah, is at 53 percent.

Caucus members protecting the depots argue that it is unwise to shut facilities that are essential in war time. A private business can be hit with a strike or have financial problems that could harm the nation in time of crisis, these lawmakers say.

The caucus boasts several influential members, including Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., chairman of the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, who holds sway over road and transportation projects in every member's district, and Rep. Tillie Fowler, R-Fla., a member of the House Republican leadership and the Armed Services committee.

Few want to tangle with them. Rep. Terry Everett, R-Ala., said he was threatened with losing a place on a key House-Senate conference committee when he tried to oppose the group in 1997.

"I would say they use no-holds-barred tactics verging on being ruthless," Everett said.

Northeast drought turns neighbor against neighbor

By Greg Toppo
Associated Press

ELLICOTT CITY, Md. — The restrictions on water use in the drought-stricken Northeast are turning neighbors into snitches.

Since the rules went into effect in Maryland, New Jersey and Pennsylvania earlier this summer, calls have been pouring in to police and public works departments from citizens pointing out their neighbors' too-green lawns and too-clean automobiles.

A woman in Queen Anne's County, Md., asked if it was legal for her neighbor to collect condensation dripping off her air conditioner for sprinkling her plants. (It's legal.)

In suburban Washington, police investigated neighbor complaints of a man washing his car and found him dousing the lime-green Mercedes with bottled water. (Legal, just expensive.)

One caller in Maryland asked if there was a reward for turning in scofflaws. (No, sorry.)

In the Philadelphia area, police radios are crackling with reports of "woman watering lawn" and "someone washing car."

Police also are being dragged into personal disputes. One couple on Maryland's Eastern Shore reported a neighbor for watering the grass — and added that they hadn't been invited to the neighbor's Christmas party.

Police Officer Richard Krause of Upper Makefield, Pa., said the people ratting out their neighbors figure "if their lawns are going to have to die, all the lawns in their neighborhood are going to die."

The region's worst drought in a century is killing crops and turning lawns brown in Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and parts of Virginia and New England. Rainfall is down by a foot and a half in some areas over the past 12 months.

Baltimore Sanitation Officer Sgt. Jack Nardella discusses with Kay Walton the water usage restrictions after noticing a large amount of water in the alley behind her house in Baltimore earlier in the week.

A drought enforcement hot line in Delaware last week received more than 2,200 calls. Since Aug. 5, the Fair Lawn, N.J., Police Department has gotten more than 100 calls from people reporting violations. Most calls have been anonymous.

Most police and public works departments say they are letting first-time offenders off with a warning. But one man in Upper Makefield was fined $300 after police twice found his automatic sprinkler watering a $6,000 bed of flowers and other plants. And police in Delaware temporarily shut off the water at the home of one repeat offender who wouldn't stop watering his lawn.

Dana Shillingburg, who lives in Ellicott City, a prosperous Baltimore suburb where the lawns are burned out, said he wouldn't hesitate to call authorities about a water-wasting neighbor.

"If I saw them do it two or three times, I'd probably make a phone call," he said. "We have a pretty severe water problem around here."

Climbing out of his dusty Mustang convertible nearby, Bill Blair said he would confront the water waster himself instead of calling police.

Asked if she'd snitch on a neighbor, Rosemarie Joyce gasped. "I can't imagine anybody doing that," she said.

There are some exceptions. It's OK to water flowers from a watering can or hand-held hose. But not everyone knows.

Rickie Martinez said he was confronted by a passing motorist as he watered his geraniums. "A guy stopped and said, 'Hey you can't do that, sir,' and I told him, 'I think you'll find that I can,'" Martinez recalled.

The water restrictions have reduced consumption considerably. In Maryland, water use has dropped 14 percent compared with last year's figures for early August. In Pennsylvania, it's down 10 percent to 20 percent in some areas. New Jersey's largest water utility reported last week that consumption is down as much as 39 percent in some places.

Suzanne Smith of the American Civil Liberties Union of Maryland said the use of hot lines to rat on neighbors "feels a little creepy."

"But on the other hand, they do it in all kinds of contexts. You're supposed to report child abuse," she said. "It would be much more problematic if you could call in and that was sufficient to get a citation issued."

Mike Morrill, Maryland Gov. Parris Glendening's spokesman, said the governor was hoping that folks would talk to one another before calling the cops. "We wanted this to be friendly," he said.

Plutonium-powered spacecraft to swing by Earth

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Worrying anti-nuclear activists, a plutonium-powered NASA spacecraft hurtled toward a close encounter with Earth on Tuesday in order to use the planet's gravity to sling it toward Saturn.

The $3.4 billion Cassini probe was scheduled to fly within 725 miles of Earth, over Easter and Pitcairn Islands in the southeastern Pacific, at 8:28 p.m.

Anti-nuclear activists feared that some kind of error would cause the 22-foot Cassini and its 72 pounds of plutonium to plunge into the Earth's atmosphere and shower the planet with deadly radioactive debris.

But NASA officials said there was only a 1-in-1.2 million chance of accidental re-entry. And even if that happened, the plutonium was well-protected, they said.

The swingby was designed to give the spacecraft momentum for the final leg of its seven-year journey to Saturn and its moons. Cassini will also make a December 2000 flyby of Jupiter before reaching its final destination in 2004.

In June, demonstrators protested against the flyby, but most activists conceded there was no way to prevent it. Before Cassini's launch in 1997, protesters filed lawsuits and threatened to chain themselves to the pad.

"NASA said in order to explore yo have to take risks, like Colu ous took risks," said Bruce G gnon of the Global Network Against Weapons and Nuclear Power in Space. "But Columbus only risked himself and his crew. In this case, they're risking people all over the world."

NASA has used "gravity assists" of Earth and Venus since 1973 to fling other spacecraft to their destinations, including the plutonium-powered Galileo probe that went to Jupiter. Galileo twice flew close to Earth without incident.

Cassini doesn't use the plutonium for propulsion but to power its dozen instruments. Heat from the element's decay is converted into electricity.

The Fright Stuff writing competition

By Georgia Temple

Darkness fell over the deepening shadows as the moon slipped behind the clouds. The moan of the wind through the rustling pines flanking the driveway echoed with each breath the sigh of a child lost in a world without rest. She willed herself to move on.

A mass of stone and brick and mortar rose in front of her. She stopped. No lights in the windows. What had she expected? The place was deserted, had been for generations. Cursed, the villagers said.

She didn't believe in curses, but they certainly did. Her sister had come here and never been seen again. And no one, not even the constable, would set foot on this property. But she would. With an unsure step, she moved toward the house, fighting the prickling sensation that had started at the base of her neck and now spread down her back.

As she neared the bleak structure, an odor of ripening decay tainted the breeze. She misstepped, stumbled over the loose bricks and stones that had fallen from the facade, and lunged toward the steps. The light from her flashlight fell on the 12-foot-high front door that gaped open. The door had been wrenched from its hinges. Without a backward look, she slipped inside.

For brief moments, the beam of the flashlight flickered inside the house. Screams challenged the moaning wind, then silence reclaimed the grounds. The moon slipped from behind the clouds, its soft light illuminating the earth below. The house stood dark and silent in the night.

The time has come to pause and consider what happens to our protagonist. Does she die? does she live? has she fallen? been captured? and if so by what or whom? Are the house and the grounds haunted? are they inhabited by a crazed scientist? are they part of a government plot a la "The X-Files"? does the place lead into another reality? or does the answer fall into a mysterious depth not thought of before?

Only you know.

Long shots hope for chance to shine as Dallas training camp comes to end

By Chris Newton
Associated Press Writer

WICHITA FALLS — With little more than a week left to make the impression that could get them on the roster, several wannabe Dallas Cowboys are feeling the heat.

Who survives depends on the final nine practices and the remaining three exhibition games.

Chief among those whose play during the next week could land them a number and a jersey is receiver MarTay Jenkins.

Jenkins had no big plays to speak of in Sunday's 10-3 loss to the Oakland Raiders, but he made a 35-yard touchdown reception the previous week against the Cleveland Browns. He has also been a show-stealer in practice, making several receptions with raw athleticism and showing finesse in running his routes.

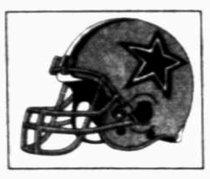

"I just need to relax and stay focused," Jenkins said Tuesday. "I definitely just want to get back to basics. I need to concentrate on the little things ... like looking at the defense."

Jenkins said he hasn't heard a peep about his chances of making the team.

"Everyone is very tight-lipped," he said. "Coaches probably say things to the organization heads, but none of it works its way down to the players."

If Jenkins does make the team, he would probably be the sixth receiver on the squad.

Also in the hunt for a spot is Mike Quinn, who hopes to be the team's third-string quarterback.

Quinn had a rough time Sunday when coaches put him on the field ahead of second-stringer Jason Garrett. The goal was to assess Quinn's ability with quality personnel on the field.

The result — numerous mistakes and not a single cohesive drive — left Quinn looking downtrodden as he headed to lunch Tuesday.

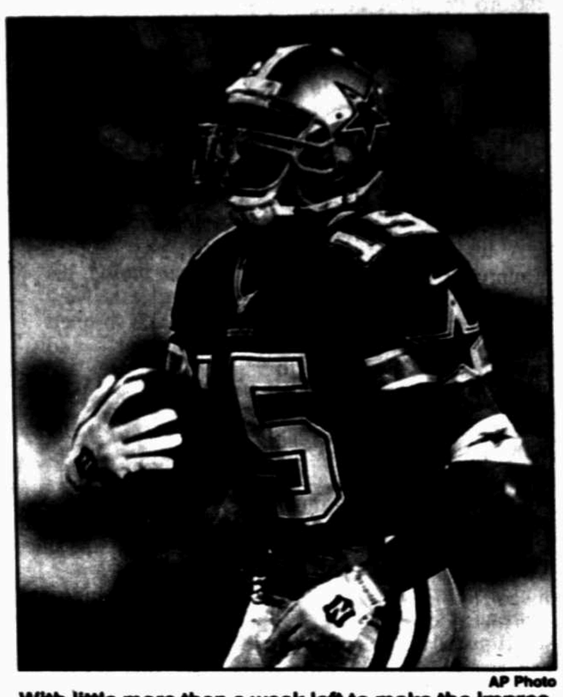

"I need to do a better job of going through the progression more quickly," Quinn said. "I need to get the ball out of my hand. I've got a lot of time and think I can improve."

Asked whether he expects to be a Cowboy when the finals cuts come Sept. 5, Quinn simply said, "Yep, I do."

At running back, Beau Morgan, Denvis Manns and Tarik Smith are battling for the third spot. Both Morgan and Smith have been recovering from injuries and hope to return to the field soon.

"You don't think about what might happen, you just go out

BATTLE FOR THE TEXAS LEAGUE WEST

Wranglers hang on for win

■ Wichita gets 3-run homer from No. 9 hitter in 7-6 victory.

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

Wichita Wranglers manager John Mizerock doesn't quite know the secret why his team keeps winning.

All he knows is that the Wranglers just keep finding ways to win.

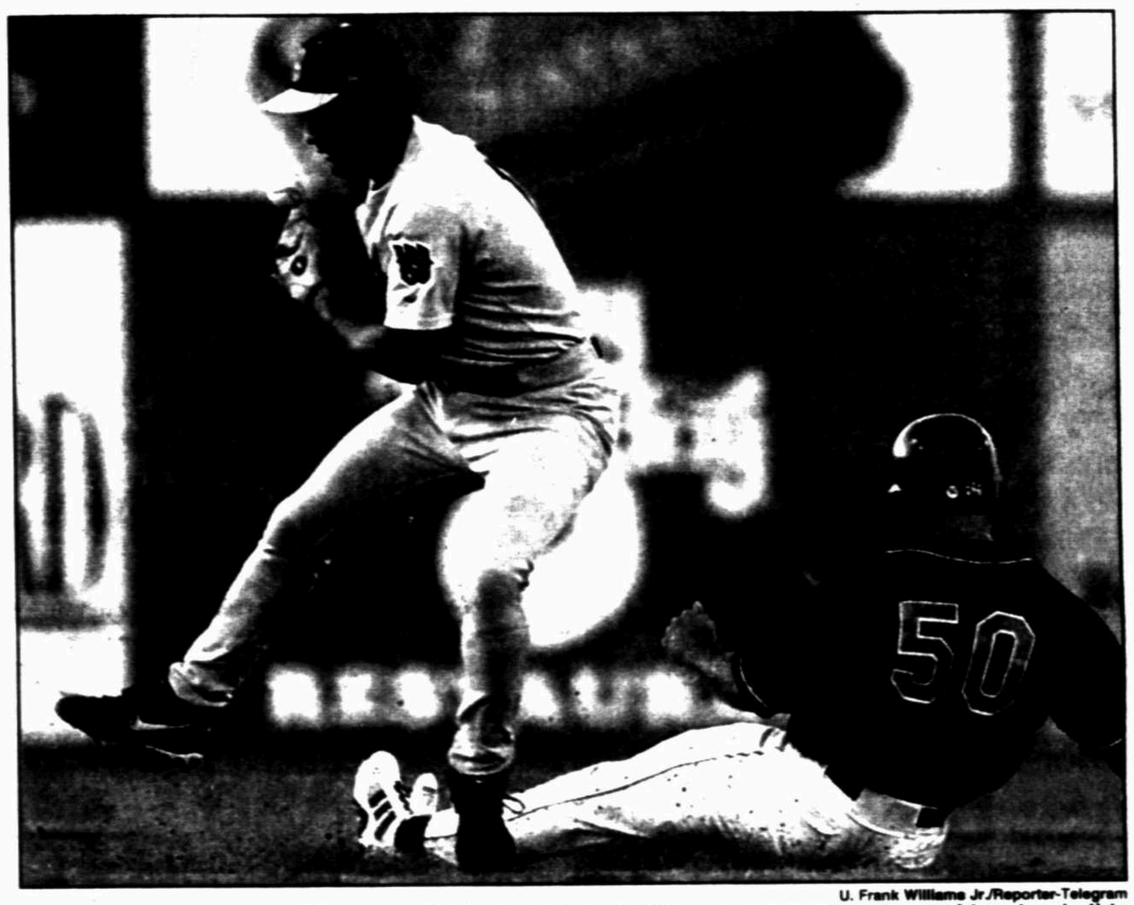

On Tuesday at Christensen Stadium, the Wranglers got a three-run home run by No. 9 hitter Alejandro Prieto in the sixth inning, and then Lance Carter came up with a clutch pitching performance in the ninth to give Wichita a 7-6 win over the Midland RockHounds.

With the win, the Wranglers go back up to 4 1/2 games over Midland in the Texas League West Division. The Wranglers also pull to within 2-1 in this current five-game series — a series which is very crucial for the 'Hounds if they want a chance to win the division and make the playoffs. For the Wranglers, there's really no pressure to win the division because they already won the first half and are guaranteed a Texas League playoff spot.

But if the Wranglers win the second half title, they automatically go to the championship series as the West division representative. So, in hindsight, Tuesday's victory might have been a big one for the Wranglers to keep one step ahead of Midland in the race.

"We lose that game, that gives them ('Hounds) the momentum and they've got a chance to win four maybe five games against us," Mizerock said. "Tonight we didn't play too well but we found a way to win."

Early on, the 'Hounds had to battle from behind against the Wranglers, who took a 3-0 lead after 1 1/2 innings. One of those runs came off a Sean McNally solo homer to left in the second inning. McNally now trails the 'Hounds' Adam Piatt by three in the Texas League home run race.

U. Frank Williams Jr./Reporter-Telegram
Wichita Wranglers second baseman Alejandro Prieto bobbles the baseball as he avoids a hard slide by Midland's Cody McKay. Prieto couldn't hold onto the ball, but he did hit a three-run homer and the Wranglers held on for a 7-6 win Tuesday night at Christensen Stadium.

Midland answered in the second with a pair of runs as Eric Byrnes and Justin Bowles each had an RBI double.

After the Wranglers added an unearned run in the fourth, the 'Hounds tied it in the bottom of the frame with an unearned run of their own and an RBI double by Josue Espada.

The game stayed tied until the sixth when Prieto gave RockHound reliever Juan Perez a rude welcome with a three-run blast to left field for a 7-4 lead.

The anticipated duel between two former first round picks never really developed as the Wranglers' Jeff Austin only lasted four innings, while Denny Wagner (1-1) went 5 1/3 innings and took the loss.

Midland managed to crawl back with a run at a time. Jose Castro homered in the sixth, and T.R. Marcinczyk added a two-out blast in the bottom of the ninth.

The 'Hounds had their best chance to tie or win in the bottom of the ninth against one of the league's best relievers in Lance Carter, who came into the game sporting a 0.78 ERA. Carter started the ninth with a walk to Espada but then got Piatt to ground into a double play. Carter then gave up the Marcinczyk homer and a Cody McKay bloop single to left to give Midland hope. Carter, however, regained his composure and struck out a swinging Willie Morales to capture his 11th save of the year.

So what's been the Wranglers secret this year?

"That's what scary about it. There is no secret," was Mizerock's response. "We find a way. Whether it be Prieto hitting a three-run homer or McNally, and then Carter

Frogs head into '99 with high hopes

By Katie Fairbank
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH — In just one season at Texas Christian, Dennis Franchione has brought renewed hopes and rekindled pressure.

As Horned Frogs fans continue to bask in the afterglow of last year's long-awaited winning season capped by a Sun Bowl victory, Franchione continues to tell his players that success breeds stress.

"It's always a lot more comfortable to have respect and be picked higher," Franchione said. "Obviously, there's pressure that goes along with that."

Preseason media polls have the Horned Frogs picked to win the slimmed-down Western Athletic Conference. Unlike some coaches, Franchione said he prefers looking down the list.

"I've been picked at the bottom of the conference and I've been picked at the top. I'd much rather be at the top," said the coach, who inherited a basement team last summer.

Senior quarterback Patrick Batteaux also likes being picked No. 1.

"It doesn't mean anything, but it does feel good," he said. "I think we're about there. We got a little exposure last year and that broke the ice. In the future, we're going to be a team that will be recognized."

Batteaux gives all the credit to Franchione.

"He's a great communicator," Batteaux said. "He's honest with you. He tells you upfront what he expects."

Safety Reggie Hunt said changes in attitude have changed the team. Last year's objective was to win half the games on the schedule, a goal met and surpassed. TCU finished 7-5,the only remaining WAC team that had a winning record last year, capped by a 28-19 Sun Bowl victory over USC.

"It's still sinking in," said Hunt, a senior. "I'm still wearing my ring. I think about it all the time."

TCU's decision to hire Franchione was pivotal for the school, which was going to have to decide whether to upgrade the program or abandon Division I-A.

The Horned Frogs lured him from New Mexico and after his first-year success did their best to keep him by upping his pay to nearly $900,000 if he reaches all his incentives.

Last year's exposure gave the school a good return on its money — or, at least, a good start on it.

Franchione, whose previous stops included Southwest Texas State, Pittsburg State and Southwestern (Kan.), cautions that this is a new season with new expectations.

"This would be a great job if I didn't have more games to win," he said, laughing.

The opener game for TCU is one that should give the team pause. The Frogs will play highly ranked Arizona at home on Sept. 5.

"I look at the Arizona game as a chance for us

Elliott recovering well after kidney operation

By Kelley Shannon
AP Sports Writer

SAN ANTONIO — A day after his kidney transplant, San Antonio Spurs star Sean Elliott was moved out of the intensive care unit Tuesday and was on his way to a full recovery.

"He has done just very well," Dr. Francis Wright said. "The kidney is doing a very good job."

Elliott underwent the transplant Monday at Methodist Specialty and Transplant Hospital. His 32-year-old brother, Noel, donated one of his kidneys.

"I think they're on the way toward a routine recovery," Wright said.

The 31-year-old Elliott may be hospitalized for about a week; his brother could go home by the end of this week.

Elliott, who helped the Spurs win their first NBA championship in June, needed the transplant because of a condition that prevents the kidneys from properly filtering waste from the blood. It is not clear what causes the disease, known as focal segmental glomerular sclerosis.

"Sean is doing so well right now. His spirits are still high," said Armando Rios, a spokesman for Elliott.

Sean Elliott was transferred to a regular hospital room in the transplant ward. He was expected to start moving around and begin eating food soon.

"He's had one or two complaints," Wright said. "He's complained that he can't log onto the Internet in the ICU" to check his e-mail.

So far more than 1,000 greetings for Elliott and his brother have been sent to a Web site the hospital established.

"Recover soon so my children can once again enjoy watching you and the Spurs. You deserve to do the things your love," Colleen Welnetz of Laredo wrote to Elliott.

Elliott, a 10-year NBA veteran, has said he wants to return to the Spurs. Such a move would be unprecedented in professional sports, but Wright said it's possible.

Good Day for Spurs

Elliott

Tuesday brought a double dose of good news to the San Antonio Spurs. Not only is star forward Sean Elliott recovering nicely from a kidney transplant, but the Spurs moved one step closer to getting the new arena they've wanted for years.

Spurs, Bexar County agree on arena plans

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Spurs and Bexar County have agreed the team will pay $28.5 million toward construction of a tax-financed arena next to Freeman Coliseum, officials said.

Team executives and county officials continued hammering out details of the plan Tuesday, a day after revealing a deal had been struck.

"They're issues out there that have impact," said County Commissioner Lyle Larson. "They're minor, but collectively they could complicate the negotiations. I think we just want to clarify."

A referendum is expected Nov. 2.

The agreement guarantees the Spurs will sign a 25-year lease, but provides the team with a buyout clause after 20 years. The Spurs would make annual lease payments of $1.3 million.

County officials released details of the agreement — a draft letter of intent — that calls for the Spurs to make the up-front cash investment in the proposed $175 million arena.

The contribution is large enough to reduce a proposed 2-percentage-point increase in the hotel-occupancy tax needed to help pay the debt, the San Antonio Express-News reported.

Spurs officials had no comment.

The referendum will seek voter approval to raise the hotel-occupancy and car-rental taxes to help finance the arena. A 2-percentage-point increase would tie the county with Houston for the highest rate in the country.

The Spurs, who won their first NBA championship in June with a victory over the New York Knicks, have said they need a smaller arena built for basketball in order to be profitable. Their current home is the Alamodome, a giant indoor stadium that can seat 65,000 for football.

Other cities with suitable arenas have approached the Spurs about relocating. A push for a tax-funded arena in San Antonio intensified after the Spurs won the title.

Rangers overpower Indians

CLEVELAND (AP) — Juan Gonzalez hit a three-run homer and Tom Goodwin had four of the Rangers' 19 hits as Texas hammered Cleveland pitching again in a 15-4 rout of the Indians on Tuesday night.

Aaron Sele (13-7), staked to a 6-0 lead before his first pitch, coasted to his sixth win in seven decisions. Sele, who contained Cleveland with slow breaking balls, allowed all four runs and seven hits in seven innings.

Texas, which rallied for a 13-5 win Monday night, scored 23 runs in a seven-inning span, taking a 12-1 lead after three innings. The last team to reach double digits in consecutive games against Cleveland had been Seattle on April 8-9, 1997.

Mark Langston (1-2) lasted just one inning, his shortest outing since Aug. 20, 1997, against the New York Yankees. Langston, who left with a strained quadriceps, allowed six runs — five earned — and six hits as his ERA rose to 5.34.

Carlos Baerga, re-signed by Cleveland on Monday, hit a two-run homer in the sixth. Rafael Palmeiro hit his 32nd homer for Texas.

Texas took a 6-0 lead in the first on Todd Zeile's two-run double, Royce Clayton's RBI double, run-scoring singles by Roberto Kelly and Goodwin and a run-scoring wild pitch.

Gonzalez hit his 28th homer off Tom Martin in the second for a 9-0 lead.

Luis Alicea, who had made two outs in the first inning and was hitting .179, joined the onslaught with a two-run homer in a three-run third that made it 12-1. The homer was Alicea's second in 135 at-bats this year.

Einar Diaz had an RBI double in the Cleveland second. He also doubled and scored Omar Vizquel's single to in the fifth.

Goodwin's fourth hit, an RBI single, made it 13-2 in the sixth. Another run scored in the inning on Alicea's fourth groundout.

Palmeiro homered in the seventh.

Astros' Caminiti comes through

HOUSTON (AP) — Ken Caminiti hit a go-ahead, two-run single in his second game since coming off the disabled list, and the Houston Astros won their second straight over the Milwaukee Brewers, 8-6 Tuesday night.

Craig Biggio homered to back Scott Elarton (7-3), who allowed four runs and eight hits in six innings, striking out seven and walking one.

Billy Wagner got the final out for his 29th save in 31 chances this season, striking out pinch-hitter Alex Ochoa with runners at the corner. Wagner has struck out four straight batters in two nights against the Brewers, needing just 14 pitches.

The Astros, three percentage points behind Cincinnati in the NL Central, kept pace with the Reds, who won 7-4 in 12 innings Tuesday night.

Caminiti, 0-for-3 Monday in his first game since May 21, gave Houston a 4-3 lead in the third when he singled to center off Cal Eldred (1-6) with the bases loaded. Lance Berkman added a sacrifice fly for a 5-3 lead.

Milwaukee, which lost its third straight, broke a 21-inning scoreless streak in the first, but has just six runs in its last 30 innings.

Eldred (1-6), who has lost six straight decisions in 11 appearances since May 4, allowed five runs, five hits and five walks in five innings.

Dave Nilsson's RBI single pulled Milwaukee to 5-4 in the fifth, but Carl Everett hit a sacrifice fly off Dave Withers in the sixth, and Biggio hit a two-run homer in the eighth off Rocky Coppinger, making it 8-4.

Ron Belliard, who was 3-for-5, hit a two-run single off Jay Powell in the ninth.

Mark Loretta's double-play grounder scored a run in the first, but Jeff Bagwell's RBI double tied the score in the bottom half. Eldred hit a two-run double in the second for a 3-1 lead, but Elarton hit an RBI single in the bottom half.

TCU: Frogs have new hope

to play a nationally ranked team and earn respect," Franchione said. "It is a chance to get exposure."

Last year's success has created a 1999 attitude and players say it's a new world where they're considered winners.

"It's good to be TCU," said Batteaux.

'HOUNDS: Wranglers stretch lead to 4 1/2

has been solid from the bullpen. We've got guys doing different things."

But even if the RockHounds win the next two games at home with the Wranglers, Wichita still has the advantage of finishing the season with 15 games at home.

"We've got plenty of games to play with and we're definitely the favorites," Mizerock said. "It doesn't mean it's over by any stretch of the imagination. We'll see."

ROCKHOUND BITES: The Wranglers got plenty of production from the bottom of the order as their Nos. 7 (Paul Phillips), 8 (Emiliano Escandon) and 9 (Prieto) hitters combined to get five out of the team's eight hits and drove in five... RockHound second baseman Mark Bellhorn has been sidelined with a minor right wrist injury. Bellhorn had to battle a left wrist injury earlier this year... Marcinczyk's homer now gives the 'Hounds first baseman 97 RBIs for the year, second on the team to Piatt's league-leading 112. McNally is second in the league with 98 RBIs.

DALLAS: Long shots hope to make roster

(From 1C)

there and play," Smith said. "It's time to play. Only tomorrow matters. What happened yesterday doesn't matter."

Defensive coordinator Dave Campo said there are many players whose destiny is in their own hands. The absence of Deion Sanders and Leon Lett and worries about Kevin Smith may allow a few players to make the roster that normally wouldn't have.

"Everyone in that position knows who they are," Campo said. "I want everyone out there to make the team. And at this point, we're always really positive about the fact that they can make it."

Of course, Campo pulls no punches when it comes to stating what will make the difference.

"The truth is hard — you've just got to go out there and lick the guy standing in front of you to show us you're the man for the job," Campo said. "You've got to show you're the better competitor."

Campo said the players who have showcased raw talent — speed, power and instinct — seem to have an edge.

If defensive back hopeful Zebbie Lethridge makes the team, it will probably be because of his quickness.

"He's a guy we're continually watching," Campo said. "He's been moved between receiver, fullback and he was a quarterback in college, so he doesn't have a lot of experience. But he does have speed and that is something you can't coach."

Big Spring beat Greenwood in three games, 15-8, 13-15, 15-11. Elizabeth Havelak and Smith each had five kills for Greenwood, and Stewart had 11 assists. Willis served up three aces, Stewart served two and Lindsey Lankford had one ace.

Niemann cards 2nd round 70

DALLAS — Midland Country Club professional Scotty Niemann fired a second-round 70 Tuesday to tie for fifth at the Northern Texas PGA Club Professional Championship at the Hills Course at Prestonwood Country Club.

Niemann recorded a two-day of 139 to finish in a four-way tie for fifth, three shots behind tournament winner Perry Arthur of Stonebridge Country Club.

Niemann was the only Midland pro to finish in the top 20 and earn a spot in the Southern Regional Club Professional Championship, which will take place Oct. 14-17 in Port St. Lucie, Fla.

Midland's Chris Carpenter, of Green Tree shot a second round 77 to go with a first round 67. He is the fourth alternate for the regional.

Randal Strickland, of the Masters Golf Center finished a stroke behind Carpenter with a two-round total of 145.

Former GTCC pro Clayton Friend, who is working at Dallas' Brookhollow C.C., posted a top 20 finish to qualify for regionals.

Dream Team improved to 41-10-1 for the season.

ELLIOTT: Spur may or may not return

(From 1C)

"I'm certainly not going to be the one who tells him he can't play basketball again," he said.

Doctors have said it may be two or three months before they know for sure whether he can play professional basketball again.

Spurs guard Steve Kerr, a longtime friend, said he believes Elliott will return.

Dow climbs

NEW YORK — Another late afternoon rally propelled stocks higher Tuesday after news of a mild increase in consumer prices suggested that the Federal Reserve might raise interest rates only modestly when it meets this month.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 70.29 to close at 11,117.08. Earlier in the session, the blue-chip index fell as much as 35 points from Monday's close, but traders blamed Hewlett Packard for most of the decline. The nation's No. 2 computer maker fell as investors took profits following a solid earnings report.

Broader stock indicators ended higher after trading in a narrow range for most of the day. The Standard & Poor's 500 rose 13.39 to 1,344.16, and the Nasdaq composite index rose 25.94 to 2,671.22.

Stocks initially rose after the Labor Department said its Consumer Price Index, a closely watched gauge of inflation, rose 0.3 percent in July. That matched analysts' expectations, and raised hopes that the Fed will take a moderate course in setting interest rates.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — With no surprises in the latest inflation data, the dollar turned in a mixed performance in volatile trading Tuesday, gaining against the euro but losing ground to the yen.

In late New York trading, the euro was quoted at $1.0509, down from $1.0575 late Monday. The dollar also was quoted at 114.05 Japanese yen, down from 114.68.

Foreign exchange analysts said a seesaw session for the dollar began early in the day, when Japanese traders sold large amounts of euros for yen. The selloff weakened the euro against the dollar, but strengthened the yen.

Dell

Dell sees 47 percent increase in 2nd-quarter profit

AUSTIN (AP) — Dell Computer Corp. posted a 47 percent increase in second-quarter profit Tuesday, beating Wall Street expectations with strong sales of computers to small businesses, home users and over the Internet.

Dell, the largest seller of computer directly to customers, said it earned $507 million, or 19 cents per share, in the quarter that ended July 30. That was up from a profit of $346 million, or 12 cents a share in the same period last year.

Revenues rose 42 percent to $6.14 billion from $4.33 billion.

The profit beat the 17 cents per share expected by financial analysts surveyed by First Call/Thomson Financial. The results were released after the close of financial markets Tuesday.

Dell, based in Round Rock, has set a scorching industry pace with its unconventional tactic of selling machines directly to customers and cutting out the retailers and distributors who can drive up prices. It sells a majority of its computers to businesses, governments and other large institutions.

'So far it looks like their business model continues to work for them.'
— Lou Mazzucchelli, senior vice president of Gerard Klauer Mattison

In the last month of the quarter, Dell sold $30 million a day in computers over the Internet, nearly 40 percent of the company's revenue. Results also were buoyed by a 67 increase in sales to small businesses and consumers.

The company's overseas sales also continued to grow. Dell said it now ranks first in PC shipments within the United Kingdom and that revenue in France increased 55 percent.

"So far it looks like their business model continues to work for them," said Lou Mazzucchelli, senior vice president of the New York investment house Gerard Klauer Mattison. "They are blessed with overall good demand."

In the six months ended July 30, Dell said it earned $941 million, or 34 cents a share. That was up from a profit of $650 million, or 23 cents a share, in the year-ago period.

Revenue rose to $11.68 billion from $8.25 billion. Shares of Dell fell 31 1/4 cents to $41.12 1/2 in trading on the Nasdaq Stock Market.

Government reports show strong economy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices edged up just 0.3 percent in July despite big increases for energy and airline fares. At the same time, construction of new homes staged a solid rebound and the nation's factories boosted production at the fastest pace this year.

All three government reports, released Tuesday, provided fresh evidence that the U.S. economy continues to power ahead without triggering worrisome inflation pressures.

The mild 0.3 percent gain in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index, the most closely watched barometer of inflation, came after two straight months of flat prices.

"This is certainly good news for everybody, including consumers," said Sandra Shaber, an economist with WEFA Group.

Many economists and investors still believe the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates when it meets next week to slow the economy and keep inflation at bay — but only by a quarter of a point. However, the inflation report could forestall further rake hikes, some said.

"I think a modest hike is really in the cards," Shaber said.

Russell Sheldon, chief economist with MCM MoneyWatch, said a quarter-point interest rate increase "is probably a done deal next week, but the CPI report could make it less likely that a series of increases after that one would follow."

Still, some economists said a surge in new home construction in July and a strong 0.7 percent advance in output at the nation's factories, mines and utilities last month could raise concerns at the Fed that the economy is still growing too quickly.

"The bottom line for the Fed is that home-building is still a bit too strong," said First Union economist Mark Vitner.

The Commerce Department said single-family homes and apartment construction rose a stronger-than-expected 5.7 percent last month to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.66 million units. In June, housing starts fell 5.8 percent.

Despite rising mortgage rates, housing construction last month increased everywhere but the Midwest.

"Rather than not buying, people are staying in the market but are shifting to adjustable rate mortgages" that carry lower interest rates than a 30-year fixed-rate mortgage, said David Seiders, chief economist for the National Association of Home Builders. The 30-year rate soared last week to 8.15 percent.

Specialist Donald Himpele Jr., second from left, conducts trading in Micron Technology on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, Tuesday . Stocks turned mostly lower today, despite the government's report of a mild increase in consumer prices. Hewlett Packard, which soared on Monday, dragged blue-chips lower amid profit-taking.

The Fed said July's increase in industrial output reflected increased demand for electricity during the heat wave. It was the biggest factory production gain since last October.

That advance pushed up the overall industrial operating rate to 80.7 percent of capacity in July, still far below the level at which analysts begin to worry about production bottlenecks.

On the inflation front, the 0.3 percent increase in consumer prices was the biggest gain since a 0.7 jump in April, which resulted from a 6.1 percent spike in gasoline and other energy prices. That April increase concerned the Fed, which nudged up interest rates June 30, the first hike in two years.

After falling in May and June, energy prices climbed by 2.1 percent in July, accounting for almost half the overall increase in consumer prices. Gasoline prices, which had soared 15 percent in April, rose 4.3 percent last month and were up 30.2 percent so far this year.

Production cuts from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and a pickup in global demand reflecting economic recovery in many countries damaged by the Asian currency crisis helped account for the gain in gasoline and other energy prices.

Airline fares, which fell in May and June, rose 6.5 percent in July, the largest increase since October 1992. Some economists said rising energy costs and strong demand for airline seats during the summer helped account for the increase.

So far this year, consumer prices are rising at an annual rate of 2.4 percent, compared with a 1.6 percent increase for all of 1998. This acceleration reflects the rebound in energy costs, which were rising at a rate of 12.4 percent in the first seven months of this year after dropping 8.8 percent for all of 1998.

Food prices, meanwhile, rose just 0.2 percent in July, after no change in June. A 3 percent drop in fresh fruit prices helped offset a 2.5 percent increase in vegetable prices.

Outside the volatile food and energy sectors, prices were up just 0.2 percent last month. So far this year, this core rate of inflation is rising just 1.7 percent, better than last year's 2.4 percent rise.

Consumer groups say cable deal violates antitrust laws

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer groups are asking federal regulators to block AT&T's bid to buy MediaOne, saying the cable merger would give the company too much control in the markets for cable TV and high-speed cable Internet services.

Consumers Union, Consumer Federation of America and the Media Access Project joined Tuesday in opposing the deal on grounds that it violates existing antitrust laws and federal rules that restrict the number of cable customers a single company can control.

With such a large percentage of the market, AT&T could block new companies from getting into the cable business — which already suffers from inadequate competition and high prices, say the groups. They fear the company would be able to hike cable rates even more.

"This is a failure to aggressively apply antitrust and competitive policy," said Gene Kimmelman, co-director of Consumers Union.

Under an agreement announced in May, AT&T would acquire the nation's fourth-largest cable TV company, MediaOne, and its 5 million cable TV customers. AT&T also would acquire MediaOne's 25 percent stake in cable systems owned by Time Warner Inc., the nation's largest cable TV company.

The deal would lead to AT&T, which recently took over the nation's No. 2 cable TV company, Tele-Communications Inc., becoming the nation's largest cable TV provider.

According to an economic analysis by the consumer groups, AT&T would have a 57 percent market share of homes with its ownership stakes in various cable companies.

The Federal Communications Commission has a cap limiting a company's share of total cable households at 30 percent, but the rule has not been enforced. The FCC is expected to review the ownership restrictions this fall.

AT&T spokesman Jim McGann disputed the consumer groups' figures and said they are inflated.

Consumer advocates say even if AT&T spins off some of its smaller holdings, it will still hit the federal limit.

"We just don't believe you can fiddle around at the edges of this and fix it," said Mark Cooper, research director for the Consumer Federation of America. The groups have filed a petition asking the FCC to enforce its ownership rules, which they say would automatically block the merger.

With such a large percentage of the market, AT&T could block new companies from getting into the cable business — which already suffers from high prices, the groups say.

Club changes format to rock, offers live entertainment

By Mella McEwen

Under new ownership and with a new format is DOC'S, formerly THE SWING, at Loop 250 and Garfield.

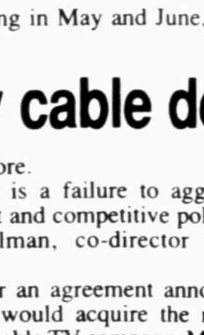

Manager Stevie B said Doc's is now "a rock and roll bar" offering live entertainment on weekends and, on special occasions, weekdays, with a disc jockey the rest of the week.

Instead of a full menu, Doc's offers "hamburgers and appetizers," he said.

The disc jockey will play classic rock to rhythm and blues to hard rock with some soul thrown in. As for live bands, "Last week I had a classic rock band; this week it's a rhythm & blues and classic rock band, next week it's a hard rock band."

Found at the establishment are pool tables, dart boards and foosball.

Hours are 3 p.m. to 2 a.m. Monday through Saturday. Doc's will be open Sundays during the football season.

DEAR ABBY

Complacency hides real threat of AIDS

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the discussion in your column about taking pictures at funerals: In 1986, my partner died of complications from AIDS. We were lucky that he was able to remain at home in comfortable surroundings. I am a floral designer and he loved my work, so I worked all day at my former place of employment to do his flowers.

Van Buren

Many friends sent sympathy tributes and wondered if I would photograph the flowers for them. I agreed. When I was alone in the funeral parlor, I took photographs of the flowers and of him lying in the casket.

And yes, he did look better that day in the casket than while he was dying. AIDS is a horrible way to go, so don't condemn anyone for saying that the deceased looked better on the day of the funeral. In some cases it's true.

Abby, please remind people that the AIDS virus is still out of control. The drugs are not effective for everyone. This epidemic is still far from over. — MIKE FROM ST. PETE

DEAR MIKE: You are absolutely right that the AIDS epidemic is still a threat here and around the world. However, a growing complacency is causing many people to let down their guard.

According to Dr. Mervyn Silverman, board member and former president of the American Foundation for AIDS Research (amFAR), new treatment combinations are helping many who have been infected. However, a growing number of people, sadly, do not benefit from the new drug therapies.

In addition, there are 40,000 new HIV infections in the United States alone each year. The infection rate is rising among our youth, women, and especially people of color.

And AIDS is increasing among our senior citizens, who represent 10 percent of all cases nationwide! Unfortunately, many of those over the age of 50 don't think they are at risk for AIDS — nor do their physicians — which results in delayed treatment.

Young people, gay and straight, believe nothing bad can happen to them. This is especially dangerous for gay youth, who have a significantly increased chance of being exposed to HIV through unprotected sex.

In short, people who have lulled themselves into believing this epidemic is over could be dead wrong.

DEAR ABBY: I just finished listening to a waitress on a local radio talk show. The topic was the rudeness of some guests, and how some "cheapskates" leave horrible tips.

Well, Miss Abby, I am a chef in one of the top restaurants in Los Angeles. I have to deal with servers coming into my kitchen and at times berating my staff: "Can't you even cook a steak right?" "Can't you read?" etc. The difference here is that my staff do not receive tips. They earn from $7 to $10 an hour. On a long night, they'll be on their feet nine to 10 hours. They do not receive overtime.

So, to restaurant guests: The next time you receive terrible service in a restaurant and the food is good, call the manager over and tell the person that the food was great — and give him a tip for the KITCHEN.

Even a couple of dollars would mean all the world to us. — HEAD CHEF IN L.A.

DEAR HEAD CHEF: After your staff works all night in a hot kitchen, I suspect some cold cash would be refreshing.

I'm sure many readers have offered their compliments to the chef — and crew — but far fewer have shown their appreciation with a tip. Thank you for mentioning it.

First, take corn off cob...

By Jack Bishop
N.Y. Times News Service

There's only so much you can do with a whole ear of corn. How many flavored butters can one cook devise?

But take the kernels off the cobs, and the possibilities expand exponentially. Chowders, salsas, salads, griddlecakes, breads, muffins and savory custards can all begin with fresh corn off the cob.

True, kernels cut loose don't have quite the glamour of a whole ear steamed and dripping butter or charred from the grill.

But at a time of year when daily indulgence may be making corn on the cob taste a little dull, a few knife strokes can open up new possibilities for making more of the American symbol of summer.

Whole kernels sliced off the cob — cooked or raw — work best in most dishes, but for baking, grated raw corn has better texture. The whole ears can be run over the coarse holes on a four-sided grater to produce a thick and juicy puree that can be added to batters for griddlecakes, muffins or corn bread.

To a novice cook, cutting the kernels off a long, pointed ear of corn may seem daunting. But there is an easy and safe technique: snap the ears in the middle to break them in half, then stand each piece up on its flat end, so it stays steady. Then slide a sharp chef's knife down the length of the cob on all sides.

Cooked kernels are even more versatile than raw, especially for salads. Grill the corn when you want a sweeter, caramelized flavor that can stand up to strongly flavored ingredients like chilies. Boil the ears when you want pure corn flavor.

Cutting off the cooked kernels is also an ideal solution for leftovers. An uneaten ear of corn is likely to be left moldering in the refrigerator. But it's hard to resist a bowlful of kernels, cleaned and ready for anything from muffins to quesadillas.

FRESH CORN GRIDDLE CAKES WITH PARMESAN AND CHIVES

4 medium ears corn, husks and silks removed
1 large egg
1/4 cup flour
1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese
1 tablespoon snipped fresh chives
1/2 teaspoon salt
Ground black pepper
1 tablespoon butter

Over large bowl, grate corn on large holes of box grater until cobs are clean; discard cobs. Stir in egg, flour, cheese, chives, salt and pepper to taste until batter is smooth. Melt butter in a large nonstick skillet. Take 1/4 cup of batter and scrape it (the batter will be thick) into pan to form a round cake. Repeat, using all the batter; you should get 6 cakes. Cook over medium heat, turning once, until griddle cakes turn a rich golden brown on both sides, about 9 minutes total. Serve immediately.

GRILLED CORN, TOMATO AND RED ONION SALAD

4 medium ears corn, husks and silks removed
2 medium ripe tomatoes, cored and chopped
1/2 small red onion, minced (about 1/4 cup)
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1-1/2 teaspoons red wine vinegar
8 large fresh basil leaves, cut into thin strips
Salt and ground black pepper

Grill corn over medium fire, turning several times, until kernels are tender and lightly charred, about 10 minutes. Remove corn from grill. When cool enough to handle, cut ears in half widthwise with a chef's knife, stand each piece on its cut end and slice downward several times to remove all kernels. Place corn in a large serving bowl; discard cobs. Add tomatoes and onion to the bowl with corn, and toss gently. Drizzle oil and vinegar over vegetables. Add basil, and salt and pepper to taste. Toss gently, and serve.

CREAMED CORN WITH ONION AND CHILI

2 tablespoons butter
1 medium onion, minced
1 medium jalapeno chili, stemmed, seeded and minced
3-1/2 cups fresh corn kernels (from 5 to 6 medium ears)
3/4 cup chicken or vegetable stock
Salt and ground black pepper
1/4 cup heavy cream
1 tablespoon minced fresh cilantro leaves

Melt butter in a medium skillet. Add onion and saute over medium heat until golden, about 6 minutes. Add chili, and cook until softened, about 1 minute. Add corn, stock and salt and pepper to taste. Bring to a boil, reduce heat, cover and simmer gently, stirring once or twice, until corn is tender, 6 to 7 minutes. Remove cover, and add cream to pan. Simmer until liquid in pan thickens, 1 to 2 minutes. Add cilantro, and adjust seasonings. Serve immediately.

CORN CHOWDER WITH BACON, LEEKS AND POTATOES

3-1/2 cups fresh corn kernels (from 5 to 6 medium ears), cobs reserved
4 strips bacon, cut into small dice
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
2 medium leeks, white and light green parts, sliced thin
2 cups milk
3/4 pound red potatoes, peeled and cut into 1/2-inch dice
Salt and ground black pepper
2 tablespoons minced fresh parsley leaves

Place corncobs and water to cover (about 4 cups) in a large saucepan. Bring to boil, reduce heat and simmer for 20 minutes. Pick out and discard cobs. Reserve 3 cups corn broth; discard remaining broth. Place bacon and oil in a large saucepan. Turn heat to medium, and cook, stirring occasionally, until bacon fat is rendered, about 3 minutes. Add leeks, and continue cooking until bacon is crisp and leeks have softened, about 6 minutes.

Add corn broth, milk, potatoes and salt and pepper to taste. Bring to a boil, reduce heat and simmer gently until potatoes are almost tender, about 15 minutes. Add corn kernels, and continue to simmer gently until corn and potatoes are tender, about 10 minutes.

Puree 2 cups of soup in a blender. Return puree to soup pot, and reheat gently. Stir in parsley, and adjust seasonings. Serve immediately.

BASKET CAKE 101

BASKET-WEAVING A CAKE

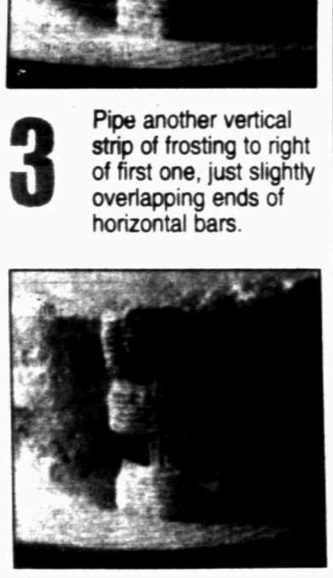

1 With basket-weave tip, serrated side of tip facing out, pipe vertical strip of frosting up side of cake.

2 Pipe three horizontal bars, evenly spaced, across vertical strip, extending 3/4-inch to left and right sides of vertical strip.

3 Pipe another vertical strip of frosting to right of first one, just slightly overlapping ends of horizontal bars.

4 Starting at right edge of first vertical strip, pipe horizontal bars across second vertical strip in spaces between bars in first row, extending 3/4-inch to right of second vertical strip. Repeat around cake to create a woven effect.

— Good Housekeeping Step-by-Step Great Desserts

STRAWBERRY BASKET CAKE

1 recipe (three layers) perfect white cake
2 pints heavy whipping cream (4 cups)
1 tablespoon vanilla extract
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
2/3 cup confectioners' sugar
1/2 cup strawberry jam
2 pints strawberries

Prepare cake according to recipe. While cake layers are cooling, prepare frosting. In a large bowl, combine cream and vanilla. In small saucepan, evenly sprinkle gelatin over 3 tablespoons cold water; let stand 2 minutes to soften. Cook over medium-low heat, stirring frequently, until gelatin completely dissolves. (Do not boil.)

Remove saucepan from heat; with mixer at medium-high speed, immediately begin beating cream mixture.

Beat about 2 minutes, until thickened and soft peaks just begin to form. Beat in confectioners' sugar, then beat in dissolved gelatin in a thin, steady stream. Beat cream mixture until stiff peaks form but mixture is still soft and smooth; do not overbeat.

Place one cake layer on cake plate; spread with half of jam, then spread with 1 cup frosting. Top with second cake layer, remaining jam, and 1 more cup frosting. Place remaining cake layer on top. Frost side and top of cake with a thin layer (about 1/8-inch thick) of frosting.

Spoon about 1-1/4 cups frosting into decorating bag fitted with 1/2-inch medium star tip; set aside. Spoon about 2 cups remaining frosting into decorating bag fitted with 3/4-inch medium basket-weave tip. Pipe basket-weave pattern around side of cake. Add remaining frosting to decorating bag as necessary to complete basket weave.

With frosting in bag with star tip, pipe decorative border around top edge of cake. Refrigerate cake until ready to serve. Just before serving, pile strawberries on top of cake. Remove berries before slicing cake; serve on the side.

PERFECT WHITE CAKE

Serves 8 to 10
1/2 cup butter
1-2/3 cups sugar
2-1/2 cups cake flour, sifted before measuring
1/4 teaspoon salt
1-1/4 cups cold water
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
2 teaspoons baking powder
4 egg whites

Cream butter and sugar. Sift flour and salt together and add alternately with water. Always start and end with flour. Add vanilla. Beat egg whites until frothy, then add baking powder, a teaspoon at a time, and beat until stiff.

Fold into batter. Pour into three greased and floured 8-inch layer pans.

Bake at 350 degrees for 20 to 30 minutes. Test by tapping center lightly with finger. When it springs back it is done.

Colorado Cache Cookbook, The Junior League of Denver Inc.

By Marty Meitus
Scripps Howard News Service

The timing was serendipitous. We needed a fancy cake.

The Good Housekeeping Step-by-Step Great Desserts arrived just in time for an event that entailed bringing a dessert. There was that basket cake similar to the one featured in Bon Appetit the month before (the recipe we had misplaced).

The basket cake, featured in both publications? Clearly we're talking trend here.

The cookbook is part of a series, a package of two of the sections from the Good Housekeeping Illustrated Step-by-Step Cookbook in softbound spiral cookbooks. We immediately zeroed in on the dessert one (the other is Step-by-Step Main Dishes) mostly because desserts always look so beautiful, so easy, so inspirational.

We toy with the idea of making the basket cake, which you top with fresh strawberries, and the checkerboard cake of yellow and chocolate, which looks especially cool when cut.

We opt for the basket-weave cake first. We quickly make a white cake (from scratch, recipe follows) and forget to set the oven timer. By the time a family member opens the oven just to see what's cooking, the cake is about 30 seconds from burned. The good news is that the layers are so firm they're easy to handle.

We leave the cake on the counter to cool while we do the usual family thing. Around 9 p.m. we get back to it. The house is quiet, no one's bothering us and we're ready to weave.

Decorating the cake involves weaving lines of whipped-cream icing. We practice on a piece of paper. ... Not great, but good enough.

But the real thing proves a lot more difficult, because you have to make the lines up and down, with your hand working vertically in space, unlike a writing motion. A turntable is handy if not essential to this project. We manage to make our first few lines, a vertical strip with three horizontal crosses through it. Then the next strip, with the crosses overlapping. They're not perfect, but they're OK.

We try to get more control over the pastry bag. Soon the whipped cream begins heating up from the pressure of our hands. It begins spilling out the top. The strips are blending. We're losing patience — and control.

The 10 o'clock news comes and goes. We start with a new pastry bag and fresh whipped cream. Eventually, we make it all the way around the cake. We top with the strawberries — and stand back. Not great, but OK. It looks vaguely woven.

A family member walks by. "Looks homemade," she says. We remove the strawberries, take a spatula and smooth over the woven lines, erasing them. The cake now has smooth sides. We were so close.

The next day we call the folks at Good Housekeeping. The test-kitchen associate has plenty of tips — and we recognize the places where we went wrong. Before you attempt to make the cake — and it really can be done — here's what you need to know. And if all else fails, do what we did. Smooth the sides and off you go:

■ The Good Housekeeping cake calls for a whipped-cream frosting, stabilized with gelatin. Gelatin can be tricky to work with, so try substituting a stiff butter-cream frosting. The advantage is that the butter cream is more stable than whipped cream, which can soften, causing the piped lines to blur. Good Housekeeping chose a whipped-cream frosting for its lightness and taste.

■ Practice before you begin. The test associate suggests piping solid vegetable shortening onto waxed paper until you get the technique down.

■ Make sure you use a pastry bag that's long enough, 12 to 14 inches. You'll have better luck with a metal, not plastic, basket-weave tip.

■ Add whipped cream to your pastry bag in small amounts and replenish as you go. Keep the rest chilled as you pipe.

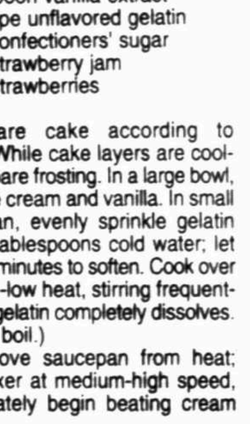

■ When working with gelatin, cook over low heat — do not boil — stirring with a heat-proof spatula until the gelatin is dissolved. Pour gelatin in a steady stream down the side of the bowl as you're beating. The gelatin will stabilize the whipped cream, allowing it to maintain its shape. Done correctly, the whipped-cream mixture will seem firmer.

Baked cheesy chicken doesn't escape that box mix taste

By Linda Anderson

If your kids are as picky as mine when it comes to dinner, you probably go through the same internal debates at the supermarket as I do: What about this — will they like it? Will they turn up their noses resulting in the dogs ending up eating it? Do they like chicken or fish or beef most? What do they want???

Anderson

I was at my favorite supermarket the other day, standing in the aisle where all the pasta and canned meals are, debating with myself over a new Stove Top product called Oven Classics One-Dish Dinner Bake. It's one of those boxed meals with all the ingredients inside — all you add is chicken.

Well, OK, I know the kids like chicken, but would they prefer Cheesy Chicken Bake, Traditional Roast Chicken Bake, Herb & Garlic Chicken Bake, Homestyle Barbecue Chicken Bake, Honey Mustard Chicken Bake or Lemon Chicken Bake? Decisions, decisions.

My next-door neighbor happened to be in the same aisle at the same time, so I asked her what she thought. Through the process of elimination, we agreed that the Cheesy Chicken Bake would be the one to try.

So I bought a box, and bought a couple of boneless, skinless chicken breasts, which is what is called for (although I prefer dark meat chicken and turkey myself), and took all of it home to the kids.

A 14.7-ounce box of the Oven Classics mix cost $2.89 and is supposed to make six servings, which I couldn't figure out because the directions call for four or five chicken breast halves, I can't imagine my kids sharing a chicken breast half if they didn't have to. Why not just use six? But oh well.

Each serving (one-sixth of the dish, as prepared according to package directions with less than a whole chicken breast half per serving) is listed in the nutrition label as containing 360 calories with 80 of them from fat.

All you do is pour hot water and milk into a baking pan (The box calls for a 9x13-inch pan. Don't do it. That's much too small. You will need a bigger pan — trust me on this one.), add the rice mixture and seasoning packet and stir; top with the chicken and squeeze the sauce over it, then top with the crumb mixture and bake for about 30 minutes.

I have to tell you, it smelled marvelous while it was baking. I love chicken and I really love cheese.

One taste-tester took one look at it and said, "Nope, it has rice." She wouldn't taste it. I told her the other option was to get a flavor that had stuffing in it and she didn't like stuffing. She said she didn't know if she liked stuffing or not since she never had any. I told her she told me years and years ago that she hated stuffing, which is why I never make it for her. Talk about a circular debate!

The other taste-tester said the chicken dish was wonderful!

I thought it tasted — well — like a boxed mix. Not as good as I wanted it to.

And there you have it. Oven Classics is easy to fix and has the potential of being really good. You might have to add your own touches to it to take away some of the boxed mix flavor, but it's worth trying. Just make sure everybody likes rice.

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.
