NATO to offer olive branch

■ In London talks, NATO foreign ministers agree to invite Warsaw Pact nations to sign a mutual non-aggression agreement.

By Barry Schweid
AP Diplomatic Writer

LONDON — NATO's foreign ministers agreed early Friday on a draft communique inviting the Warsaw Pact to sign a mutual non-aggression agreement with the West, diplomatic sources said.

The tentative proposal "is basically stating that various countries who sign it are no longer adversaries and should refrain from threat or use of force," one source said.

The 20-paragraph communique, to be presented to the NATO heads of state for final approval later in the day, also included an invitation, as proposed by President Bush, for Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and other Warsaw Pact leaders to address a NATO gathering in Brussels later in the year, officials said.

The sources, who discussed the draft NATO summit communique on condition they not be identified, said it also calls for the establishment of "diplomatic liaison" between the military alliances and proposes the eventual elimination nuclear artillery shells in the region by "reciprocal arrangement."

On another major point, the document would certify Bush's proposed shift in longstanding NATO strategy regarding the possible use of any nuclear weapons in the face of superior conventional forces. The communique would describe them as weapons of "last resort," but still would make clear that use of them was not ruled out — a point insisted upon by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Dutch Foreing Minister Hans van den Broek confirmed "We have reached agreement on a communique" as the ministers left Lancaster House. "We are 99 percent agreed," he said.

It was Bush who pushed Thursday for the declaration that NATO's use of nuclear weapons would be a highly unlikely last resort, and for inviting Warsaw Pact leaders to meet directly with their NATO counterparts.

Bush's eye-catching proposals reflected recognition by the 41-year-old alliance of the easing of East-West tensions in Europe and the unraveling of the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact.

"We are reaching out to old adversaries to emphasize NATO's defensive character and desire to cooperate with adversaries," said Marlin Fitzwater, the president's spokesman.

French presidential spokesman Hubert Vedrine said the invitation to Gor-

WASHINGTON (AP) — Homeless advocate Mitch Snyder, who brought himself to the edge of death in many fasts to promote his cause, was found hanged Thursday at a homeless shelter with a note near his body.

Police issued a statement calling the death "an apparent suicide by hanging."

Snyder, 46, was one of the nation's best-known advocates for the homeless. He was a model for a movie dramatizing his 1984 hunger strike for federal funds to house the homeless.

Oil heir dies

HOUSTON (AP) — Robert Lee "R.L." Blaffer II, grandson of a Humble Oil founder and great-grandson of a Texaco founder, died Wednesday of an apparently self-inflicted gunshot wound at age 30.

His grandfather, Robert Lee Blaffer, was a pioneer in the early days of the Texas Spindletop oil field discovery in 1902.

Fifteen years later, the elder Blaffer and three partners helped found Humble Oil & Refining Co., which became Exxon. Robert Blaffer married Sarah Campbell, daughter of Texaco founder William T. Campbell.

Police were investigating the death in his condominium apartment as a suicide, said Sgt. D.D. Shirley.

Public credited in fewer grass fires

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Midland fire and police department officials said that the public's concern helped quell the incidence of fireworks-related problems during Independence Day celebrations.

Officials main worry over the holiday was the potential of a major grass fire because of extremely dry conditions this summer.

Firefighters responded to 71 fires — 53 in the county and 18 in the city — during the 24 hour period of July 4, according to Fire Marshall Jerry Petree.

"Virtually all those fires were caused as a result of fireworks," Petree said.

Nevertheless, the number of fireworks-related fires was down considerably from the same time last year when firefighters battled 144 fires in the city and county.

"As a whole the public was very cooperative to help us try to control our problem with fireworks," Petree said, adding that citations issued and fireworks confiscated, for violation of a city ordinance prohibiting their discharge and possession, were few.

The Midland Emergency Communication District (911) reported 140 fire calls on Wednesday, attributing the majority else was injured in the accident.

Officials at the scene said the truck was eastbound on Interstate 20 near Farm to Market Road 1788 about 10:30 p.m. when its driver swerved to avoid a slower-moving vehicle and lost control.

The truck apparently crossed the median and entered westbound traffic lanes, running over the victim's westbound Nissan Sentra with its rear trailer tires, investigators said.

Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe pronounced the victim dead at 10:54 p.m.

David and Ginger Twitchell

Ruling spurs debate on legal, religious issues

BOSTON (AP) — Although two Christian Scientists were found guilty of manslaughter for withholding medical treatment from their son, the debate continues over a key aspect of the case: When should the government overrule religious beliefs that affect children?

Medical experts on Thursday applauded the verdict against David and Ginger Twitchell, saying it would help protect children.

But a constitutional scholar said the decision reflects a "fundamental unfairness" because the Twitchells thought they were protected by a 1971 state law that exempted spiritual healing from child abuse statutes.

The prosecution argued that the statute — which states that children will not be considered neglected or abused when "treated by spiritual means alone" by an "accredited practitioner" — did not exempt the Twitchells from manslaughter laws.

After a two-month trial, the jury Wednesday found the Twitchells, former Boston residents now living in New York, guilty of involuntary manslaughter for not seeking medical treatment for their son, Robyn.

They were found to have recklessly and wantonly caused their 2½-year-old son's death by relying solely on Christian Science spiritual healing to treat his five-day illness. The

MMH becoming tobacco-free zone

■ Patients' rooms will join public areas as "smoke-free environments" as Midland Memorial Hospital takes a stand against tobacco use.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Come August, the cigarette a patient smokes as he's wheeled into Midland Memorial Hospital will be the last one he tastes until he leaves.

Midland County Hospital District's board adopted a tobacco-free policy for MMH patients at its June 27 meeting after receiving a unanimous recomendation from the medical staff.

The policy goes into effect Aug. 1 and patients will receive a copy of the guidelines before being admitted to the hospital.

"We believe there is sufficient evidence now about the residual effects of smoking to warrant the policy," said Ray Branson, president of the hospital.

"It's also a statement that it's time for hospitals to set an example for others to consider and follow, if we're to be truly recognized as leaders in preventative health care."

The patient policy comes on the heels of a tobacco-free policy for MMH staff and visitors that began May 16, 1989. Staff members can smoke and chew only in an atrium at the hospital.

"It's long overdue and about time," said Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, a staff physican and allergist. "We're aware of the dangers from passive smoke, not only for employees but for patients too."

He said MMH's policy is consistent with many Texas hospitals, which gave the medical staff incentive to pass the tobacco-free recommendation.

"In the past it was not seen that we could do something like this," he said.

Not only has tobacco been implicated as a cancer-causing substance in users, new research suggests that smoke inhaled by non-smokers can be a health hazard for them.

So-called second-hand smoke may be richer in nicotine, carbon monoxide and ammonia than that inhaled by the smoker, researchers report.

"We know asthma and emphysema are made worse by passive smoke," Wiesenfeld said. He has also seen an increase of lung cancer in his non-smoking patients who have smoking spouses.

"Tobacco impairs most of the body processes, especially the immune system," Wiesenfeld said. "I believe every smoker dies of smoking."

Branson is quick to explain that the policy is not an indictment of smokers.

"This action was not taken to make a moral judgment on the smoker," Branson said. "That's an individual right and the medical staff recognizes that.

"But we have a right to protect patients who may smoke but have some disease where their recovery will be delayed because of the residual effects of other smoking patients."

Branson said administrators had studied alternatives to a total ban on tobacco use, including isolating smokers and redesigning ventilation systems.

"The bottom line was unless we physically moved patients to another location not connected to the ventilation system or the rest of the hospital, we couldn't guarantee no residual effects," he said.

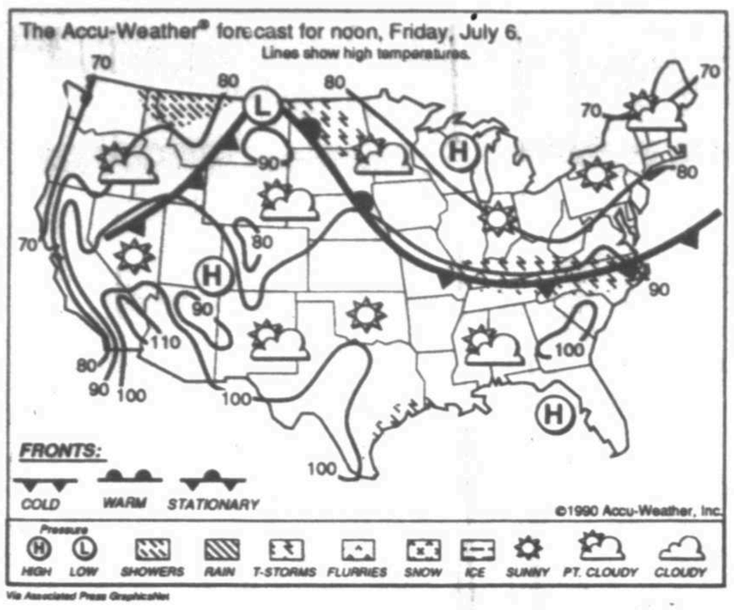

Branson estimates that about 30 percent of MMH's patients are smokers, but he doesn't anticipate problems with the tobacco-free policy.

"Some will elect not to come here. We hope that's a small number. And there are some who will come here anyway and challenge the policy," he said.

He believes that 95 percent of smokers will comply with the rules. Flagrant vio-

High in upper 90s likely

Staff Report

National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport are calling for sunny skies today with a high in the upper 90s. Winds will be from the southeast at 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight will be clear with a low near 70 and Friday will be sunny with a high in the upper 90s.

Thursday's 99-degree high marked the eighth consecutive day during which Midland temperatures failed to reach 100 degrees. The record high for a July 5 is 104, set in 1971.

Thursday's low was 70 degrees. The record low for that date in Midland is 57, set in 1931.

STATE

An upper level disturbance spread widely scattered thunderstorms and rain Thursday over the Coastal Plain, as well as the eastern central and southeast portions of the state, extending into the Gulf of Mexico.

Skies were cloudy over the upper Panhandle, Central Texas, and the southern parts of the state.

Winds of 15 to 20 mph blew across the lower Rio Grande Valley and northward over parts of the Edwards Plateau on Thursday. A cold front which passed through Amarillo had little apparent affect on temperatures across the state.

The Friday forecast calls for a chance of thunderstorms for sections of east, southeast, and eastern south central Texas.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

TRIAL: When should courts decide?

boy died April 8, 1986. An autopsy showed he suffered from a bowel obstruction.

Special Prosecutor John Kiernan said the case was not an attack on religion, but sent the message that parents must protect their children. Steve Lyons, a defense attorney, contends $2 million was spent by the Suffolk County district attorney's office to prosecute the Twitchells so that "the DA could put on a morality play."

The case does not end here. Defense attorneys Thursday filed an appeal in Suffolk Superior Court on behalf of the Twitchells, who were not present.

Kiernan recommended probation for the couple — who could have received up to 20 years in prison — and that their other children's health be monitored, according to Peter O'Toole, a spokesman for the prosecutor.

According to Lyons, Judge Sandra Hamlin said she would not exceed the recommendation. She scheduled sentencing for Friday.

Lyons said the appeal was based on Hamlin's failure to consider or instruct the jury on the spiritual healing exemption and her allowing a "mocking and sarcastic trial of Christian Science doctrine to occur."

The Christian Science Church, which has its world headquarters in Boston, has long taught that sickness and disease can be healed by prayer alone, just as sin can be washed away by spirituality.

Since 1980, there have been seven prosecutions of Christian Science parents. Five have been convicted, one acquitted and one case was thrown out, according to child rights activist Rita Swan, a former Christian Scientist who actively seeks such prosecutions.

Harvard law professor John Mansfield, a expert on church and state issues, says recent U.S. Supreme Court cases reflect a trend away from protecting religious beliefs as the nation moves toward a more secular society.

The Twitchell case, along with a recent Supreme Court case involving peyote use by a Native American church, retreats from former "special treatment" accorded a person's religious belief, Mansfield said.

"They believe what they believe. That's their faith; they're helpless in the grip of their faith," he said. But the recent cases ask: "Why should they have preferential treatment?'

Physicians, such as Dr. Michael Grodin, a pediatrician and medical ethicist for Boston University, applauded the guilty verdict. He said it sends a message that religious convictions do not exempt parents from calling a doctor when a child faces a serious or life-threatening illness.

"No religion is going to be allowed to be a defense against abuse and neglect," he said.

bachev, which also would be extended to other Soviet-bloc leaders, was readily approved.

Diplomatic sources said Gorbachev would be invited to address a session of the North Atlantic Council at NATO's headquarters in Brusels, Belgium, in December. A senior U.S. official said Bush and the other Western government leaders almost certainly would attend if Gorbachev accepted.

Georgy Shakhnazarov, a personal aide to Gorbachev, said earlier Thursday the Soviet leader was prepared to accept any such invitation. Shakhnazarov was interviewed on the U.S. Public Broadcasting System's "McNeill-Lehrer Newshour."

For a while, Bush's proposal for revising Europes's nuclear "flexible response" strategy enounctered some resistance. Mrs. Thatcher, the most reluctant of the allied leaders to lower the West's guard, questioned abandoning the threat to launch a nuclear attack promptly to stop a Red Army assault on Western Europe.

The proposal "does not leave ambiguity absolutely clear," complained a British spokesman, commenting only on condition of anonymity.

He referred to the fact that a commitment to use nuclear weapons only as a last resort could remove some of the uncertainty confronting a potential aggressor about possible retaliation.

But after a four-hour meeting of the 16 foreign ministers a British spokesman withdrew his government's objections.

He said the communique to be adopted at the end of the summit meeting on Friday would reserve the use of nuclear weapons as a "last resort." And he said that "no one will be left in any doubt that nuclear weapons might be used."

Mrs. Thatcher herself suggested that in the midst of warmer feelings for the Soviet Union, she was in danger of being called "Cold War warrior."

Fitzwater told reporters that "the debate is real, the discussion is real" as NATO embarks on a new approach.

But overall, he said, "we will show that NATO has a new dimension of cooperation with the Soviet Union."

In that vein, French President Francois Mitterrand proposed "a solemn declaration renouncing aggression or first use of force." He told the allies he was "not in favor of anything that would artificially perpetuate bloc-to-bloc relations when this no longer reflects the reality."

Bush, appearing tired after an overnight flight from the United States, steered clear of reporters aboard Air Force One and at the ceremonies that preceded the summit session. He flew to England from Pease Air Force Base, N.H., after a long work-and-play weekend at Kennebunkport.

In London, the leaders gathered around a long oval table in a chandeliered room of Lancaster House, a government mansion. Mitterrand was late.

The weather was chilly and it rained intermittently, and the traditional "family protrait" of the 16 leaders was moved indoors.

West German government spokesman Hans Klein said Gorbachev's mounting domestic difficulties "came up again and again" during the summit's first day.

But a U.S. official said there was no discussion in Thursday's session of direct aid to the Soviet Union — an idea pushed by West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

Bush, too, is easing toward supporting a Western aid package to assist Gorbachev's restructuring program and to smooth the way for German unification by mollifying the Soviets.

In the private talks, the 16 NATO leaders also were considering permitting East European countries to participate in some non-military NATO deliberations.

Fitzwater said Bush suggested the establishment of liaison offices between nations in the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact and the alliance.

"The general purpose is to find some way to give them access to NATO in a learning capacity and hopefully one in which they would appreciate where we're coming from," he said.

lators will be dealt with on an individual basis.

Wiesenfeld said that most admissions to the hospital are patients in medical crisis. "Oxygen is being administered and they can't smoke anyway," he said.

Patients with severe tobacco cravings will be given nicotine chewing gum or other medications, Wiesenfeld said, comparing the addiction with alcoholism. He hopes the temporary withdrawal may motivate some to quit permanently.

"I have no illusion that this will stop patients smoking," he said.

"We're not going to change the world, but it will improve the work place."

to fireworks. Although some of the fire calls were repeat calls, the number was well above the 12 fire calls per day average in the month of June.

In Odessa, Assistant Fire Chief Freddie Gardner reported that his department responded to 82 fires in the city and Ector County.

"We were happy with that number. We've had a lot worse years," Gardner said, adding that he also thinks the public's concern for grass fires and fireworks safety helped keep the number down.

Midland police officials expressed similar sentiment about citizens' concern with firework-related incidents. During the holiday, 98 complaints were called in and 32 citations were issued for violating the fireworks ordinance. Between July 1 and mid-day July 5, 183 complaints were called in, officials said.

In Odessa, police officials reported that the late shift (11 p.m. to 7 a.m.) had 108 fireworks-related complaints and "only a few calls earlier" in the evening.

As far as fireworks-related injuries in the area, Midland Memorial Hospital and Odessa Medical Center Hospital, both received only "two or three minor injuries" each, hospital officials said.

Another July 4 safety concern was on Texas highways.

The Texas Department of Public Safety reported that 15 people were killed on Texas roads in a 30-hour holiday period between 6 p.m. Tuesday and midnight Wednesday.

Of the 15, only one occurred in the Permian Basin area.

William Thomas Whittaker, 30, was killed on a motorcyle on U.S. Highway 385 about 8 miles north of Crane. Whittaker, whose motorcycle about skidded 320 feet, was not wearing a helmet at the time, DPS officials said.

There were three other motorcyle related deaths over the holiday inlcuding 32-year-old Del Rio police officer John Thomas Miller. Miller was killed when he was struck head on by a pick-up truck that veered into on-coming traffic, officiers said. The driver of the truck was charged with involuntary manslaughter and alcohol was determined to be a contributing factor in the accident, the report said.

Of the 15 accidents, alcohol was involved in nine, five of the fatalities were not wearing seat belts and two involved pedestrians being hit.

The driver of the tanker said he was driving the empty tanker to Midland from Wickett when the accident occurred.

Investigators did not release the truck driver's name and had not determined whether he would be cited in the incident at presstime.

The victim's body was to be taken to Ellis Funeral Home, Jobe said.

Houston leaders hope their city will make a favorable impression of ministers participating in next week's economic summit.

Summit city coming back from energy collapse

By Michael Graczyk
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — When world leaders visit Houston next week, they'll find a stunning recovery from the days of clogged bankruptcy courts, double-digit unemployment and vacant offices caused by oil's mid-1980s price collapse.

Houston officials hope the heads of state from Britain, Japan, Germany, Italy, Canada and France attending the economic summit take home an impression that although America's fourth-largest city may not be as wealthy as in the raucous boom days of pricey oil, it's healthier and a little wiser.

"The energy industry comprises 40 percent of the local economy and is not likely to drop below that level in the near future," said Lee Hogan, president of the Greater Houston Partnership, a business lobby group.

"However, the expansion of our economic base has made Houston's economy less vulnerable, and the relatively stable health care and space sectors will help to buffer Houston from shifts in the national business cycle."

That cycle for Houston notoriously has been boom and bust, going all the way back to its founding in 1836 by two land-speculating brothers from New York.

John and Augustus Allen took out ads to attract settlers by labeling the area a kind of tropical paradise near the Gulf of Mexico. Those who came found a swampy malaria-infested quagmire, home for every poisonous snake in North America. Thus came the first boom and bust.

The swamps have been filled for the most part. The mosquitoes and snakes are still common. Officials hope the wide economic swings are things of the past.

Oil and gas is the blood of Houston, and when oil prices soared toward $40 per barrel in 1981, the city basked in its glory as the "Golden Buckle of the Sun Belt."

By 1986, oil prices had fallen below $10 per barrel, leaving about 85 percent of the 4,500 drilling rigs that had been laying oil pipe five years earlier rusting in storage yards.

By 1987, unemployment totaled nearly 13 percent. At federal bankruptcy court, clerks were so busy at one point they refused to answer the telephone and left only a recorded message.

Another of the city's nicknames — "Space City," because it's home to NASA's Johnson Space Center — took on a whole new meaning as Houston led the nation in the amount of vacant office buildings.

But the growth of services, electronics, biotechnology and the medical industry, along with space-related businesses and an improvement in the energy industry, has fueled Houston's renaissance.

Employment at the end of 1989 was 1.54 million, vs. 1.35 million in 1980. Population in the Houston area grew by nearly 19 percent in the decade to 3.23 million, despite migration elsewhere during the lean years of the mid-1980s.

Houston also touts 41 percent of the job growth for all of Texas, with 50,300 new jobs in the year ending in March. Since 1987, more than 400 companies have expanded, relocated or opened new business in the area.

Figures from the Greater Houston Partnership show 77 percent of the 220,000 jobs lost to the recession have been recovered, with a majority of those positions unrelated to energy. The city started the 1990s with a jobless rate of less than 5 percent. Houston employment in recent months has grown at twice the national rate.

Even the real estate market, devastated a combination of oil's decline and earlier overbuilding, has shown gains. Empty skyscrapers are a thing of the past and there's even talk of a new skyscraper for the heart of downtown.

Housing prices, which collapsed as fast as the price of oil, also are reviving as the backlog of thousands of foreclosed properties is exhausted.

"Houston has fashioned a substantial economic recovery," said M. Ray Perryman, director of the Baylor University Forecasting Service.

Woman says she shared cocaine with Barry

WASHINGTON (AP) — A business partner of ex-model Rasheeda Moore testified Thursday that she shared cocaine with Marion Barry at a 1986 party and she was "absolutely positive" the mayor snorted the drug through a straw.

Carole Bland Jackson was the third witness in Barry's drug and perjury trial who has claimed to have seen Barry using drugs. Jackson said she, Moore and Barry and another man used cocaine powder in the bathroom of a Washington apartment after a city-sponsored cruise on the Potomac River.

"The mayor and Rasheeda were sitting on the side of the bathtub and ... cocaine was visible," Jackson said. "I snorted first, then Rasheeda took it, then the other gentleman and Mayor Barry."

Jackson said she later left after "the mayor came out and made sexual advances towards me which I declined."

Moore, who cooperated in the government sting against Barry, testified last week that she and Barry used drugs together more than 100 times. Convicted drug dealer Charles Lewis has also testified he used drugs with the mayor.

Meanwhile, a federal appeals court refused on Thursday to order that two black leaders be allowed to attend the Barry trial. Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson barred Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan and an excommunicated priest last week, saying their presence could be "disruptive and very likely intimidating."

Barry, 54, has pleaded innocent to 10 misdemeanor cocaine possession charges, one misdemeanor cocaine conspiracy charge, and three felony charges of lying to a grand jury about drug use.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Judith Retchin asked Carole Jackson if she was sure the mayor has used cocaine after the 1986 river cruise.

"Absolutely positive," said Jackson.

Homeless activist Mitch Snyder an apparent suicide

WASHINGTON (AP) — Homeless advocate Mitch Snyder, who brought himself to the edge of death in many fasts to promote his cause, was found hanged Thursday at a homeless shelter with a note near his body.

Snyder

Police issued a statement calling the death "an apparent suicide by hanging." Spokesman Reginald Smith said a note containing "suicidal references" was found near Snyder's body.

Police sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the suicide note indicated Snyder was despondent over personal problems.

"It was a domestic situation, something to do with his girlfriend," one source said. "The note indicates there were problems."

The sources said a second note was found in Snyder's room, one written during the spring.

"It was along the same lines" as the note found Thursday, one police source said. "It talked about this possibility, sort of outlined what he might do."

"We are greatly saddened by our loss," said Carol Fennelly, Snyder's companion of 15 years and his partner in running the shelter. Fennelly said last spring that the couple planned to marry in September.

She did not return phone calls for comment on the note.

Public Health Commissioner George Hamilton said an autopsy would be done Thursday night to determine the cause of death.

Snyder, 46, was one of the nation's best-known advocates for the homeless. He was a model for a movie dramatizing his 1984 hunger strike for federal funds to house the homeless.

"What a shock, what a loss," said D.C. City Councilwoman Nadine Winter. "What a loss to people all over the United States."

Robert Hayes, chairman of the Coalition for the Homeless in New York and founder of the national Coalition for the Homeless, called Snyder "a great ally."

"Mitch was driven, he was no moderate on anything," Hayes said. "He created, almost singlehandedly, a movement. It's just a great loss."

Snyder, who had beaten the federal government in numerous confrontations over the years, lost a battle with the city government on June 26 when a city law guaranteeing overnight shelter to everyone was scaled back because of budget pressures.

Shelter resident George Gilchrist said Snyder was under pressure from drug problems that had developed in the past year at the 1,400-bed shelter, a gray, three-story building several blocks from the U.S. Capitol.

"The man tried as best he could to help us out," he said of Snyder. "It's hard to stop something like crack."

Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D-Texas, chairman of the House Banking Committee, which handles legislation on homeless issues, said Snyder's "zeal sometimes led him to extreme despondency at the seeming futility of the street people's struggle."

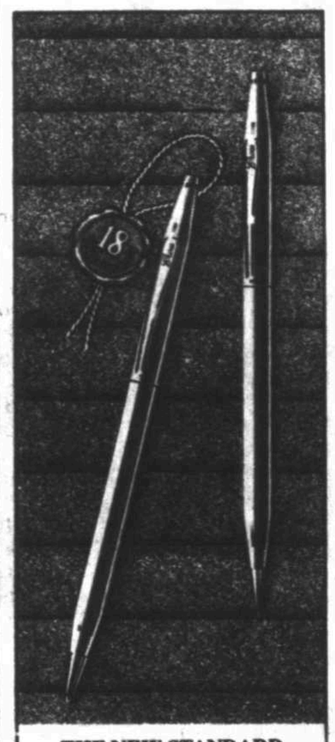

"Mitch Snyder was a rare blend of a man of action and an almost ethereal being," said Gonzalez.

Fennelly said the Community for Creative Non-Violence, which runs the huge shelter, was "in mourning."

Snyder's abrasive manner and extreme tactics — including frequent dramatic hunger strikes and a sleepout on grates outside the Capitol — won him allies ranging from politicians to Hollywood stars. Among them was Martin Sheen, who played him in the made-for-TV movie "Samaritan: The Mitch Snyder Story."

But his confrontational personality and approach also made him a controversial figure, even within his own organization.

One source close to CCNV, speaking on condition of anonymity, said "there has been a lot of dissension within the group lately."

NEA head says elementary students need 'Jump Start'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The head of the National Education Association Thursday called for a $2.2 billion program that would offer an intensive session to prepare elementary students in need of extra attention.

Keith Geiger proposed Operation Jump Start during the opening session of the NEA's annual meeting, explaining that the program would be an "all-out, full-alert effort to give every elementary child who needs it an educational booster shot."

About one-third of the nation's 26 million elementary students would be involved, he said.

In his first address as president to the union's policy-making body of about 8,100 delegates, Geiger asked the federal government to provide half of the estimated $2.2 billion needed for Operation Jump Start. States and local school districts would pick up the rest of the tab.

At a news conference, Geiger said those identified for Operation Jump Start would be given a head start on the school year, in classes limited to 15 students. The teachers would be those the students will have during the regular school year, Geiger said.

"We would release this educational surge in an intense two-week period before regular classes in the fall of 1991 — a little over a year away," he said.

"The focus would be on readiness — on a high-energy jolt for the millions of children for whom more personal relationships with teachers, greater confidence in the school environment, and closer relationships between school staff and families could make the difference between future success and failure."

Geiger also pointed to a position recently adopted by the NEA's board of directors that public schools should become the primary provider of preschool education.

"The arguments for this preschool position go beyond the child's own development," Geiger explained. "Every major trend points to public school being the center of the community in the years ahead."

In a key vote late Thursday, the delegates gave a qualified endorsement of alternative routes for certifying teachers.

"The National Education Association remains committed to ensuring that there is a fully licensed, qualified teacher in every classroom — but recognizes that there may be more than one way to prepare such teachers," said the NEA policy statement.

Alternative or nontraditional certification for teachers is a controversial issue among educators but has gained in popularity with predictions of future teacher shortages.

The NEA document signals the first official attempt by the union to show some support for the concept, although it takes a middle ground between outright opposition to alternative certification and those who feel any college graduate can teach school.

In the past, NEA officials have complained that inadequately trained teachers are allowed in the classroom when normal channels to teacher preparation are bypassed.

Schools should provide day care, meals, health screening, NEA says

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Public schools should offer day care, meals and health screening for preschool, kindergarten and elementary school children, the nation's largest teachers' union said Thursday.

The board of directors of the National Education Association approved a committee report that said public schools should be the primary provider of such early childhood services. It said they should be universal, with low or no cost to the child, and all children would have equal access.

With the exception of Head Start, most day care or preschool programs are offered by private or non-profit organizations. Head Start provides education, meals and health screening for needy youngsters ages 3 to 5 but officials said only a small percentage of eligible children are served by the program.

Public schools also are "an acknowledged socializing agent," with established systems that allow for easy handling of money, the report said.

The committee said its recommendations were prompted in part by changes in American families and the labor force. It also cited changes in the demographics of poverty, increases in the preschool population and its changing ethnic composition.

"The need for education and care programs for young children is not being met," the report said. "NEA believes that early childhood programs must be available for all 3- and 4-year-olds."

NEA statistics showed that between 1960 and 1985, the percentage of traditional households — mother, father, two school-age children — decreased from 60 percent to 7 percent.

It also said that more than 3.2 million mothers work outside the home, and 200,000 more mothers join the labor force yearly.

By 1995, it is estimated that 80 percent of children under age 6 will have mothers working outside the home.

The number of such children is expected to increase by 9 million this year, from 14 million in 1980 to 23 million. Of this increase,' 55 percent will likely live in poverty.

Mall trash hauled off before dawn's early light

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the rocket's red glare, National Park Service squadrons stood ready for battle. And by dawn's early light Thursday, they had vanquished an Independence Day layer of discarded pop cans, tissue paper and orange peels on the National Mall.

Hardy tourists who braved Thursday's 100-degree heat and humidity to visit the Washington Monument, tour Mall-side museums or attend a folk festival found only acres of trampled grass, some strewn pretzels and lines of portable toilets as reminders of the previous day's huge crowd.

About 400,000 people celebrated July 4th on the Mall with music, food and fireworks, leaving behind tons of debris on the wide expanse of grass that stretches from the Lincoln Memorial to the Capitol Dome.

But before the post-fireworks parties had finished, at least 200 Park Service maintenance staff were picking up the trash and hauling it away, spokesman Earl Kittleman said.

"They really swept in and scoured the site," said Mary Combs, press officer of the Festival of American Folklife, who arrived early Thursday to prepare the Mall for singing, corn-roasting and basket-weaving.

"By the time we got in, it was pretty well cleaned up," she said, waving at the empty expanses of grass on the Mall at 12th Street.

"It started about two hours after the fireworks," said Greg Carey, health services representative for the Red Cross, who manned a first-aid station late into the night and watched the operation begin.

"They do an excellent job of cleaning up," Carey said, taking a break from his inventory of bug sprays, sun creams and bandages left over from the previous night's work.

The overnight pickup produced about 30 to 40 cubic yards of trash, Kittleman said. He did not have a cost estimate for the operation.

In an innovation this year, the waste management company Browning-Ferris Industries set out bins for recyclable glass and aluminum, while another private firm, Science Applications International Corp., organized about 200 volunteers to encourage picnickers to separate their cans and bottles for recycling.

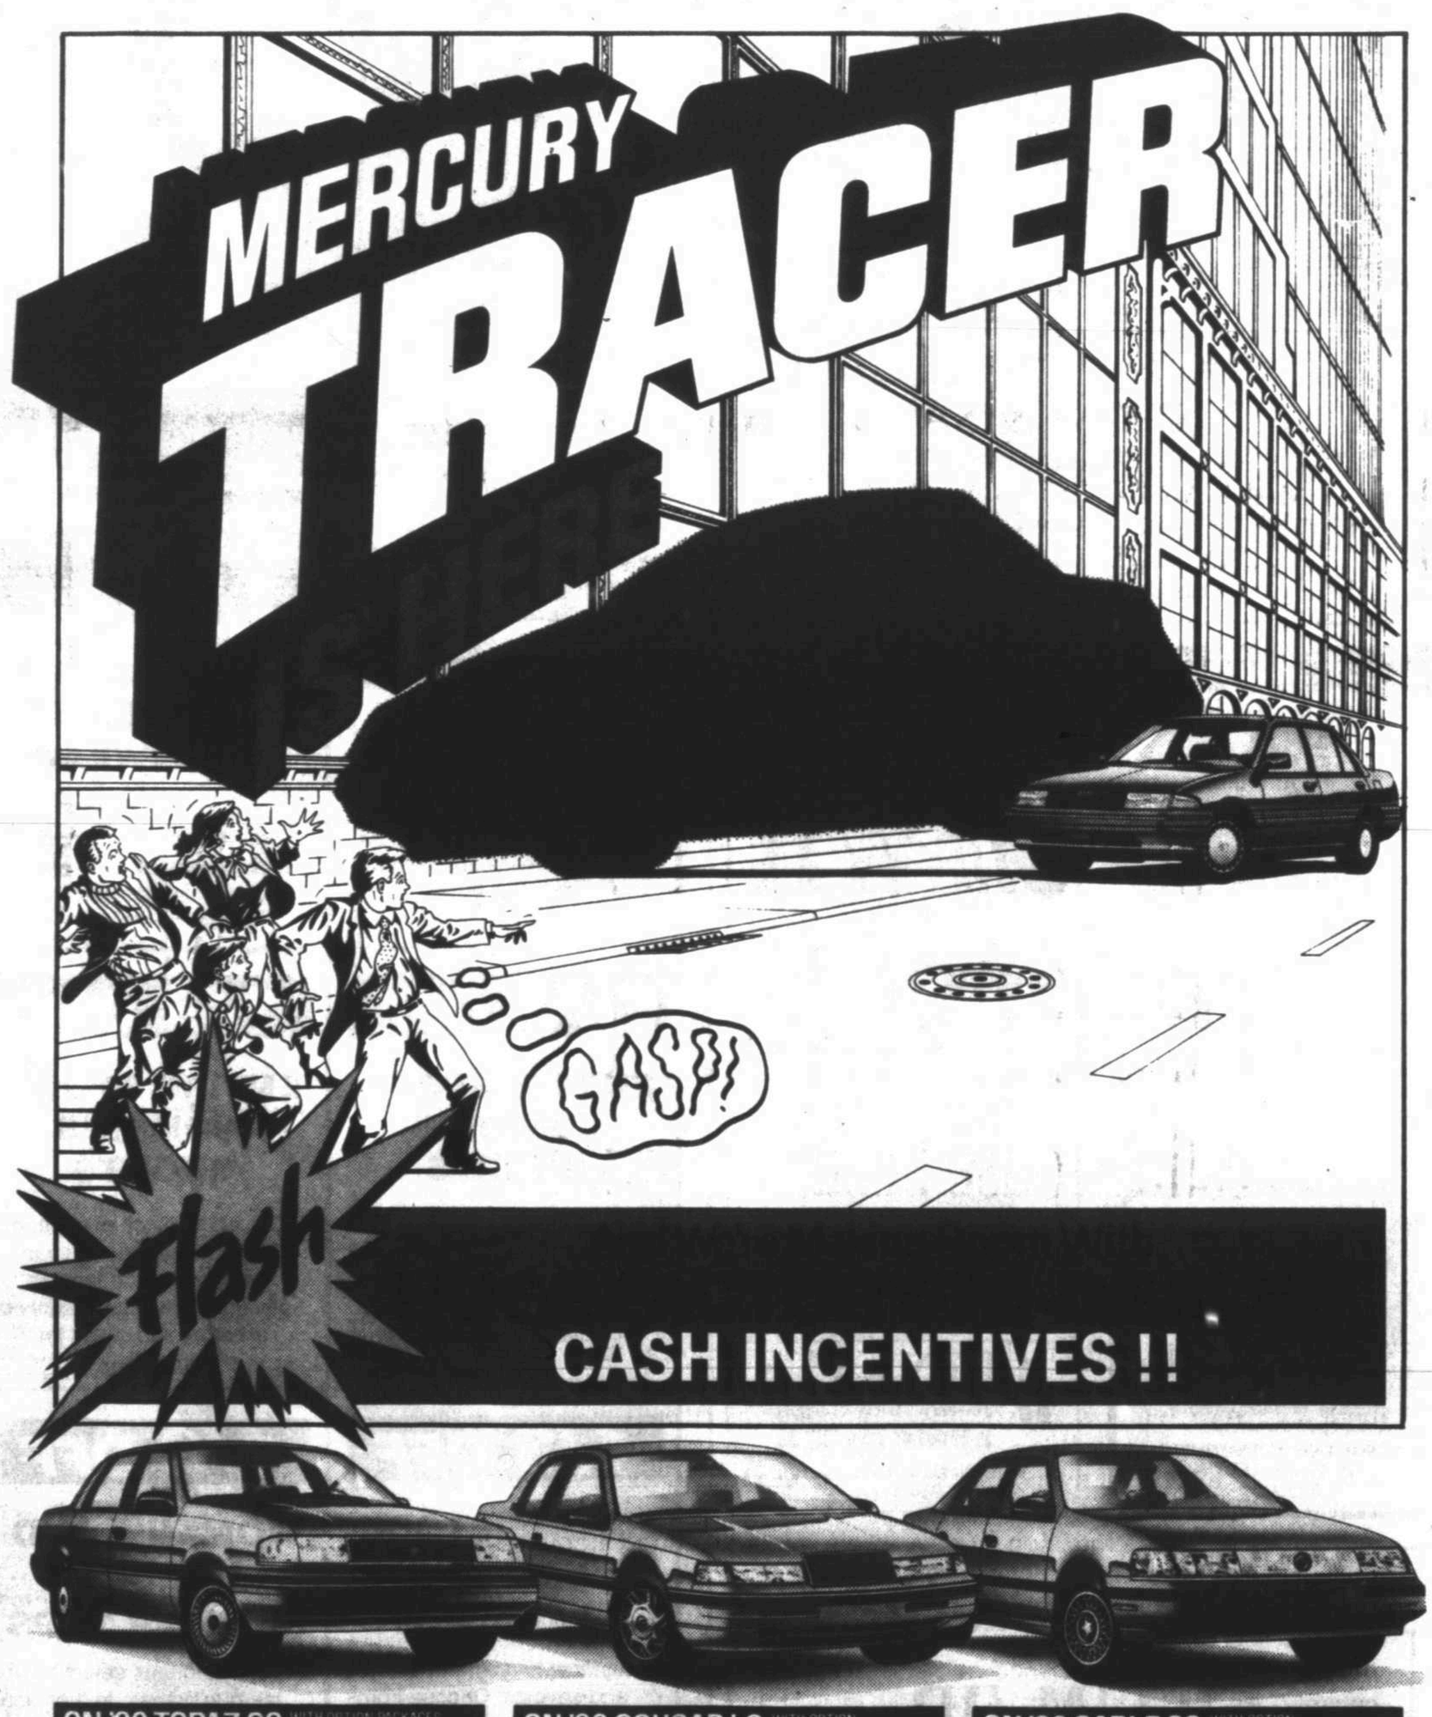

The effort produced about 1,000 pounds of glass and 3,000 pounds of aluminum for recycling, Kittleman said.

Rig's collision with train injures six

MERIDIAN, Miss. (AP) — An Amtrak train collided with a tractor-trailer rig Thursday, injuring six people, authorities said.

"The train's whistle was blowing the whole time and, Lord, it sounded like a bomb when they hit," said Nila Williams, who saw the crash from a window at the Torch Truckstop.

She said it appeared the train struck the truck's trailer rather than the cab.

Four of the injured were reported in good condition at Jeff Anderson Regional Hospital; the others were treated at Riley Memorial Hospital, hospital officials said.

Debbie Hare, spokeswoman for Amtrak in Chicago, said the injured included the engineer and an assistant engineer. She said as many as 20 passengers had requested medical attention.

50 arrested at center

MIAMI (AP) — Police in riot gear arrested about 50 people at a demonstration Thursday by Haitian-Americans at a shopping center where last week a Haitian immigrant was allegedly beaten by Hispanic employees.

The incident occurred at the Biscayne Plaza Shopping Center when police began trying to disperse the crowd, which swelled from about 50 to 100 demonstrators, said Officer George Law.

About 160 officers — outfitted with nightsticks, shields and helmets with face guards — were called to the scene north of downtown near Little Haiti, police said.

"We told them to disperse and they failed to, so we moved in," said police spokesman Roberto Navarro. "A community can't hold someone hostage like that."

Four of those arrested were in stable condition late Thursday at Jackson Memorial Hospital after treatment for minor facial cuts, scrapes and bruises, said hospital spokesman Don Del Vecchio.

Lightning fires contained

VERMEJO RANCH, N.M. — Firefighters contained or controlled three lightning-caused fires that burned more than 1,800 acres on the Vermejo Ranch in northeastern New Mexico, an official said Wednesday.

A fourth lightning-triggered blaze on the ranch that burned at least 1,300 acres was "still going and sending up a lot of smoke," said Terry Zubchenok, fire information officer for the state Forestry Division.

Backfires were being set to burn out any fuel that might cause the Mine Fire to spread further, she said.

The fire, which started last Saturday, was being fought by 10 people, and more firefighters might be added, Zubchenok said.

Prisoner caught on train

NEW YORK (AP) — A prisoner escaped Thursday while being treated at a hospital and was recaptured on a subway train a short time later, in his hospital gown and with an IV still attached to his arm, authorities said.

Elvin Sanchez, 29, bolted before dawn from Kings County Hospital in Brooklyn, where he was being treated for a swollen knee while awaiting trial on a grand larceny charge, said Ruby Ryles, a Correction Department spokeswoman.

Fire forces evacuation of small Alaskan town, blocks highway

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A raging wildfire Thursday forced residents of a small town to abandon their homes, burned a Coast Guard station and other buildings, and blocked the Alaska Highway, the main road into the state.

"The fire is out of control. We're throwing everything at it we have — tankers, bulldozers, people, and it isn't working," said state forester Bob Dick.

He could give no estimate of the fire's size, except to say it was "substantially larger" than the 14,000 acres it had consumed by Thursday morning.

The blaze was among 159 raging across some 172,500 acres of Alaska. The biggest fire covered about 30,000 acres near Beaver, about 110 miles north of Fairbanks, but authorities said no structures were threatened there.

Gov. Steve Cowper declared a statewide state of emergency, and called on the Alaska National Guard to help fight the fires.

Sirens sounded through Tok, a town of some 900 people about 175 miles southeast of Fairbanks, and emergency personnel went door to door telling residents to leave their homes and go to the community school in town.

Flames were within a mile of houses near the Tok airport and on the southeast edge of town, authorities said.

The fire was burning the Coast Guard's Loran Station Tok, which provides electronic radio signals to help guide aviators and mariners. Coast Guard volunteers flew to the station earlier in the day from Kodiak to try to clear a fire line around the building.

A weigh station along a nearby highway and an abandoned house outside town also were burning, authorities said.

The Tok and Tanacross airports near the community were closed.

The Glenn Highway was closed Thursday morning from about one mile south of Tok to about seven miles south, and the Alaska Highway was closed between the Tok Airport and the Tanana River crossing, about 10 miles east of town.

"Flames are crowning over the Tok Airport, swelling up over trees and rolling real fast," said a dispatcher at the Alaska state police office in Tok.

Congress, public aren't learning

Various polls indicate that Congress has sunk to its lowest level of public approval in modern times. More members are under investigation than at any time in the last decade.

Congress polices itself in its own way and in its own time. The ethics case of Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn., took two years to bring before the Senate Ethics Committee. Archaic rules have had much to do with that. But these delays are part of a process that slowed down cases so they might go away.

Durenberger is accused of engaging in schemes to increase his income. Other cases include those of Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., related to his relationship with a male prostitute, and five senators involved in the savings and loan scandal. Also Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., accused of improper lobbying.

Members now complain that the long process leaves them twisting in the political winds and harms the careers of some innocent lawmakers. Nevertheless, it is a process that, from the start, they have tightly controlled. That same control is evident in Congress members' ignoring minimum wage, civil rights and other laws that they have written. It is also evident that members continue their worst offenses for years, accepting big fees for speeches given to organizations whose interests they vote on. It is, in simple language, a Congress living a double-standard.

In their new pious pleas for earlier action on ethics cases, members have not suggested that Congress work a regular five-day work week like most Americans. Nor will it schedule longer hours except in the perennially chaotic last weeks of each session when members approve multi-billion-dollar federal deficits.

There would be no need for Congress to speak of speeding up ethics cases if members were more moral — or at least more ethical. But Congress continues its double standards and the American people keep reelecting most incumbents. They deserve one another.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Church serious about sanctity of human life

Scandal, oh, scandal! A Roman Catholic bishop undertakes — we probably should sit down for this — to back up Roman Catholic doctrine not just with words but deeds.

The bishop is Rene Gracidas of Corpus Christi. Bishop Gracidas recently excommunicated an abortionist and an abortion clinic director, having twice warned each to desist from actions the church deems immoral. A second abortion clinic director reports having received from Gracidas the same preliminary warnings the others received. The director vows to keep on doing what she's doing. Doubtless she knows what's coming next.

Murchison

Scandal, oh, scandal! I can visualize the newspaper cartoons: Grand Inquisitors, in heavy robes, chaining Free Thought to the stake. I can visualize some of the editorials: "In a free society, the spectacle of a Catholic bishop squelching freedom is horrifying, etc., etc. ... "

This is the Age of Pluralism, when, as Allan Bloom instructs us, "Openness — and the relativism that makes it the only plausible stance in the face of various claims to truth and various ways of life and kinds of human beings — is the great insight of our times."

Gracidas isn't talking about openness — my morality, your morality, and-let's-rap-about-'em-brothers-and-sisters. He's talking about an objective standard of truth and falsity; a standard whose source lies outside human minds. In short, he's doing what he gets paid (however little) to do.

Other Roman Catholic prelates have lately been talking in a similar vein. John, Cardinal O'Connor, of New York City, has raised the possibility of excommunicating Roman Catholic politicians who advance abortion rights. Out in California, a pro-abortion legislative candidate was barred from communion by Bishop Leo Maher.

This business is heating up. The Roman Catholic Church is getting profoundly serious about the sanctity of human life. Many Americans are sure to get profoundly uncomfortable, as is the case these days whenever churches get serious about theological, as opposed to political and sociological, concerns.

Excommunication for moral reasons is regarded in the 1990s as highly exotic. This is because the '90s are themselves highly exotic, viewed against the backdrop of human experience.

Previous historical eras, which accepted the connection between excommunication and damnation, were less likely to shrug off the consequences of losing the sacraments, which meant losing access to channels of invisible grace.

Now we're really getting exotic — invisible grace! In the '90s, it is not expected that church leaders will talk this way. No, no, no, it is expected that they will talk about homelessness, oil spills, arts subsidies, animal rights, nuclear plants, sexism, American policy in El Salvador (which has a nice theological name at least — The Savior). Droves of prelates and pastors cheerfully oblige.

On the other hand, you've got Gracidas and Maher and O'Connor, not to mention a multitude of what we media types usually call Fundamentalist Preachers. What do we do with such? I hope we wish them well. I hope we wish them Godspeed.

The rule of thumb for clerics of any and every communion should be: If you're going to have a church, have a church, not a lobbying organization or a foreign-policy think tank. We've got enough of those, thanks. Do churchly things. Make churchly pronouncements. Quit trying to outgush such wells of advanced social thought as Bryant Gumbel, Ted Turner, and Kris Kristofferson.

The church makes people uncomfortable precisely because that is its role — to make humans look around uneasily at the human condition and start wondering what can be done about it. The age — our age — understands this poorly, if at all. The age's underlying assumption is that, if you've got a nice car and a good job title, and if you tithe to Planned Parenthood, you've got it made. Not so, reply the churches. (Those serious about their mission anyway.) Something more is wanted — a whole new dimension.

Gracidas and like-minded clergy should expect to be gravely misunderstood by an age that misunderstands almost everything. At least let the media withhold the ridicule, the calumnies. Here are people doing what they're paid to do, heedless of consequences.

Engineer trying to legitimize nation

WASHINGTON — Looking to invest in the next exotic resort in the South Pacific? How about an offshore banking haven and communications hub with no income tax? Corterra, a nation of 12 tiny islands scattered north of Tahiti, is supposed to be just the opportunity.

Anderson

Never heard of it? Neither had we. But the country's purported representatives insist it is for real and are touting the tropical paradise to the affluent residents of Scottsdale, Ariz. Upscale Scottsdale is abuzz with talk of impending investment opportunities on the islands.

What these people don't know is Corterra doesn't officially exist; no one recognizes it as far as we could tell after contacting officials from Fiji to Hong Kong to New Zealand and back. It's largely the product of one man's claim to 12 desolate islands.

Patrick Watters, an aerospace engineer in Utah who moonlights as Corterra's prime minister, says he's spent nearly a decade seeking official recognition, unsuccessfully.

Watters nevertheless is already taking bids for development. His people are passing out Corterran business rules and have set fees for obtaining banking licenses, ranging from $2,500 to $10,000. Golf course developers and international investors have reportedly been consulted. Although Watters says that no money has changed hands yet, his appointed ambassador to the United States predicted, "We should begin development within two to three years."

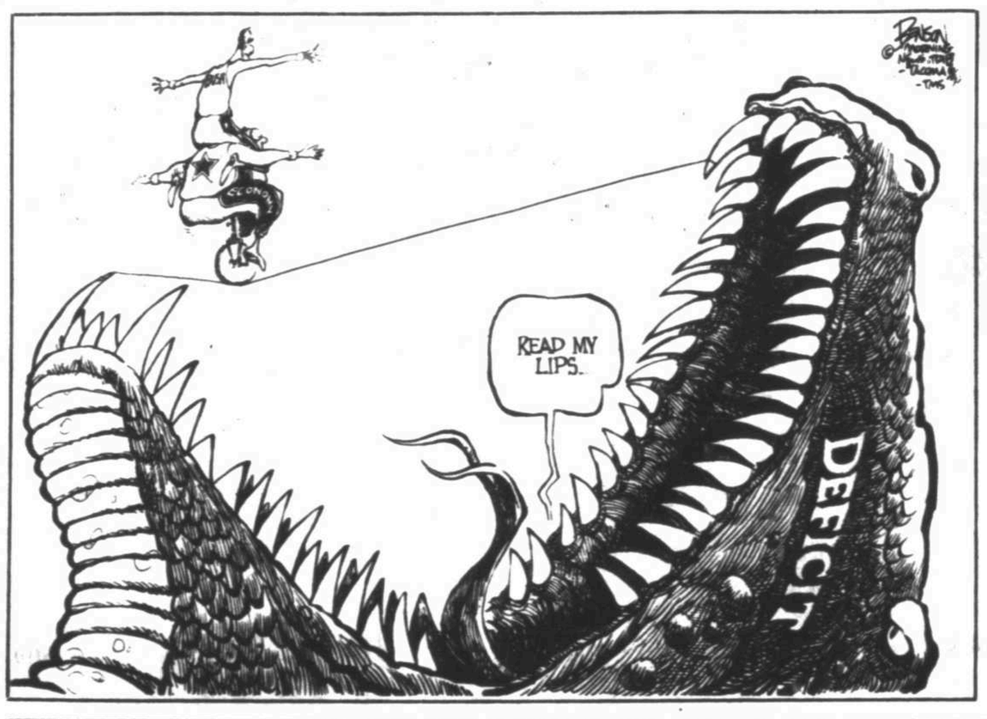

To persuade us as to Corterra's legitimacy, Watters sent our associate Dean Boyd a certificate of recognition from a Norwegian group called the International Council of Independent States.

But when we contacted its director, Geir Sor-Reime, in Stavanger, Norway, he told us his group is intended primarily for fun. "Most of our members are imaginary countries," he said. "In fact, you could call us the international council of imaginary states." Members range from postage stamp buffs who make stamps of imaginary nations, to exile groups that claim disputed territories by making up their own countries. Sor-Reime says Corterra is one of the few members trying to portray itself seriously as a nation.

Watters' literature on the islands also claims it has been a sovereign state since 1974. Watters claims to trace his lineage — and rights — to an Anglo-Saxon sailor named Hagoth who explored the area in 53 B.C.

Not everyone, of course, accepts Watters' interpretation of history. U.S. officials and numerous Pacific island governments say that according to international law, five islands of Watters' nation belong to Kiribatis, an independent country nearby. The foreign secretary of Kiribatis, Peter Timeon, declared Watters "must be living in a dream world." In his literature on the country, Watters' only mention of Kiribatis is the fine print on a map pointing out the five islands claimed by that country since 1979.

Watters tells us that some in Washington have been privately supportive of his efforts in the past. From 1980 to 1988, Washington let Watters register as a foreign agent here for Corterra's interests. The political activities listed in his registration papers include correspondence with a high-ranking State Department official. Watters said that his ties to this individual strengthened after Kiribatis negotiated a one-year joint-fishing project with the Soviets in the 1980s.

MINI-EDITORIAL — It's a shame that in the world's greatest nation, 20 percent of the children live in poverty. That's a million more than 10 years ago and a significant increase from the 12 percent of all U.S. children under the poverty line in 1970. Many of the young have inadequate or no health insurance. Plenty are undernourished. It is a costly crisis that will be with us for decades, but needn't be. At a time when taxpayers will spend untold billions to bail out the greedy and mismanaged savings and loan industry, you'd think we could spare some more to invest in our youth. Instead, the government is bailing out the failed leaders of yesterday while neglecting the needy of tommorrow.

CHARLEY REESE

Politicians often distort facts to fit position

There's an old saying among criminal defense lawyers: if your client is innocent, argue the facts; if he's guilty, argue the law.

With slight modification we can apply the rule to political issues in general. When the facts agree with your position, tell the truth; when they contradict your position, lie or dissemble.

Reese

The most foreboding aspect of political discussion in America today is that positions for the most part are based on ideology and facts are ignored altogether or distorted to fit the ideological position.

Thomas Jefferson was such an idealist. He thought in a free society where people could use their reason, they would in the process of their discussion and debate ultimately arrive at the truth.

That was the philosophical underpinning of the belief that ordinary people could govern themselves. It never occurred to Jefferson even in his nightmares that a day would arise when people would no longer care what the truth was and would even view it as an enemy.

As the joke goes, my mind's made up so don't confuse me with the facts.

This avoidance of truth has reached such an absurd level of public acceptance that politicians routinely listen to actresses testify, if you can call it testimony, about agricultural policies and environmental matters. The whole alar-apple scam worked because a Hollywood actress let herself be used as a mouthpiece to talk about something of which she was ignorant.

It is routine in Washington to have people who don't care what the truth is testifying to people who don't care what the truth is while the whole process is reported by people who don't care what the truth is.

Thus, if a $600 million government study shows the acid rain problem has been shamelessly exaggerated, just dump the study in the trash and proceed with a clean air bill anyway.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum once sought strenuously to ban the manufacture of a nonexistent plastic gun. Testimony that no such weapon existed, except in theory, and that present airport security devices could not do a good job of detecting steel weapons were like two drops of rain on a desert rock.

People routinely blame presidents for budget deficits despite the fact that a president has no constitutional authority over the federal budget. The power to levy taxes, the power to authorize expenditures, and the power to appropriate funds lie explicitly and exclusively with Congress. The only thing the president can do is veto bills which Congress may then over-ride. That's not an opinion. You can buy yourself an almanac and read the Constitution. If you do, you'll know more about the Constitution than most people in Washington who apparently have never read it.

The abortion controversy boils down to one question: under what circumstances is it appropriate to take a human life? The pro-abortion crowd goes to ridiculous lengths to avoid admitting that it's a human being which is aborted, not a wart or a tumor.

In a free society, the political liar and dissembler ought to be considered the ultimate enemy, and once found out, shunned and ostracized, for he attacks, as surely as any foreign invader, the very existence of self-government. Instead, we routinely re-elect them and treat them as if they weren't liars. See Sen. Joe Biden, for example.

Truth is a safe harbor not easy to find even when you're looking for it, but if we abandon the search, we're sunk.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Somebody goofed working on Hubble

You've probably heard about the giant Hubble space telescope fiasco. The Hubble is in trouble.

And "that starts with T and that rhymes with P and that stands for pool," as in "pool of money," which is what you and I and our taxpaying brethren and sisters paid for the gizmo.

Grizzard

The figure I heard most is $1.5 billion, or what Donald Trump spent on Marla last year when he was still in the money.

What precisely is wrong with the Hubble is it's out of focus. Somebody goofed. They finished the telescope about four years ago, but, if you will recall, that was about the time the space shuttle project was also faltering.

So the Hubble just sort of sat around until it was finally launched last spring.

And the $1.5 billion ticket doesn't include the $10 million that was paid to store this thing.

Why didn't they just find a trailer park somewhere and park it between a couple of doublewides.

The only possible thing you would have had to worry about there was a tornado, which always goes for the first trailer park it sees.

Once launched, the nearsighted Hubble — named after the famous teacher, Fred "Squints" Hubble — it was supposed to be able to read an eye chart in Cleveland from 380 miles up, all the way down to the tiny "x p t f q z" at the bottom.

After it got into orbit, however, it had some memory loss and now it can't see straight. Maybe somebody ought to pull this thing over before it crashes into a liquor store and kills a couple of Northwest pilots.

What went wrong? Engineers suspect that one of the two ground mirrors was made with slightly wrong specifications, "slightly" as in 1.5 billion, which brings to mind the quote of the late Sen. Everett Dirksen, who once said of government spending, "a billion here and a billion there and pretty soon you're talking about a lot of money."

Said a deputy manager of the project, "It was done very carefully but it was done wrong."

Will somebody please tell this man doing something carefully usually means doing it right.

Hughes Danbury Optical Systems made the mirrors with those oh-so-slightly-wrong specifications.

Hughes Danbury is a part of General Motors, which gave us the Corvair.

"The company is not prepared to accept any responsibility at this point," says a Hughes Danbury spokesman, Mr. Magoo.

Twelve years ago, they started planning and building the Hubble space telescope. That was about when Voyager was launched. But Voyager sent back millions of great pictures from Jupiter, Saturn, and Uranus, and then buzzed over to Neptune before heading on to Krypton.

So what went wrong with Hubble? All the really smart people were working on Voyager?

But at least you'd think we could fix Hubble now. We walked on the moon two decades ago and we found a way to change television stations without having to get out of our chairs.

Sorry. Because of its already crowded shuttle schedule, NASA says it can't make a house call on Hubble — with a couple of astronauts with corrective lenses — before 1993.

And wouldn't you know it? The warranty on Hubble expires in 1992.

Eight sites survive cuts in prison list

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — State prison officials narrowed a list of potential prison sites Thursday for four new facilities being built, a prison spokesman said.

Eight communities were chosen from an original list of 20 as possible sites for the new institutions, said David Nunnelee, a spokesman for the Institutional Division of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice

Representatives from the eight communities will have an opportunity to speak at a hearing scheduled for Tuesday in Austin, Nunnelee said.

Sites being considered include Angelina County, Bell County, Hondo, Jasper, Lamesa, Pampa, Polk County and the Trans-Pecos area, Nunnelee said.

The new prisons will consist of a 2,250-bed maximum unit and three 1,000-bed minimum to medium security units.

Bell and Polk counties are only vying for the maximum-security unit, Nunnelee said.

Boy dies in fire trying to kill ants

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — A little boy trying to protect his puppies from ants died when the gasoline he was using to kill the ants ignited and trapped him on a burning back porch.

Roger Dale Langston, 7, had seen his grandfather use gasoline outside the house earlier Wednesday to keep ants out and apparently decided to try the same thing to keep bugs away from five puppies on a screened porch, said Grand Prairie Fire Department Lt. Doug Conner.

"He just did it on his own," Conner said.

The gasoline fumes were ignited by a pilot light from either a gas dryer or gas water heater, Conner said. The boy's 8-year-old brother, Brian, tried to get to him but was pushed back by the heat from the flames.

Brian suffered burns to his legs. He was treated and released from a local hospital.

The boy's grandfather, Jesse Guerrero, also tried to get to the boy.

"They're pretty devastated," Conner said of the family.

Two Richards' bashers have ties to Williams

AUSTIN (AP) — Two Christian activists campaigning to portray Democratic gubernatorial nominee Ann Richards as an "honorary lesbian" have financial ties to her Republican opponent Clayton Williams, a newspaper reported.

In addition, the Williams campaign was consulted before the two promoted the issue at last week's state GOP convention, the Dallas Times Herald reported Wednesday.

But a spokesman for the Williams campaign denied Thursday that Williams had anything to do with trying to depict Ms. Richards as an "honorary lesbian."

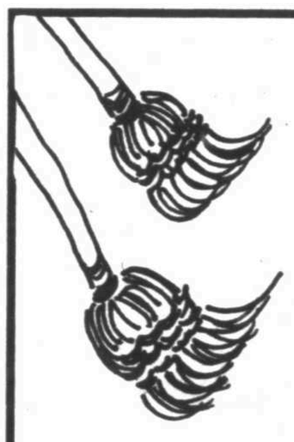

Adrian Van Zelfdan, president of the Austin-based Texas Grassroots Coalition and Rita Davis, a member of Women for Williams, have held numerous news conferences recently criticizing Ms. Richards for her support of repealing the state's sodomy law.

Ms. Davis declared Ms. Richards an "honorary lesbian" after learning that phrase appeared on a sign held by a supporter of Ms. Richards during a University of Texas rally.

During the Republican primary, Van Zelfdan's coalition received $21,000 from Williams for campaign mailings, the Times Herald reported.

Ms. Davis has previously worked for Charles Phillips, president of Coalition of Politically Active Christians and a political consultant whom Williams paid more than $112,000 during the primary.

Phillips said Williams' staff encouraged a resolution at the Republican Convention that named Ms. Richards an "honorary lesbian."

Reporter's source named by sheriff

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Bexar County sheriff dropped a bombshell in a jailed television reporter's case Thursday when he announced the name of a confidential source that the reporter had gone to jail to protect.

But it appeared the disclosure would not affect the status of KMOL-TV reporter Brian Karem, who has been in the Bexar County Adult Detention Center since June 27 serving a six-month term for contempt of court.

Karem has repeatedly refused to identify the person who arranged an interview with Henry David Hernandez, accused of killing a San Antonio police officer last year. In the interview, Hernandez said he shot the officer in self-defense.

Defense attorneys and prosecutors say they have to know who arranged the interview to determine if the Hernandez interview is admissible in his trial.

Karem's attorney Larry Macon immediately sought Karem's release after Sheriff Harlon Copeland announced to a crowd of reporters that the reporter's source was Hernandez' cousin.

"There's no reason for Brian to be in jail when the chief law officer for Bexar County has determined the identify of the informant," Macon said.

Macon filed a motion to dismiss the contempt of court finding, but State District Judge Pat Priest told Macon informally in chambers that the motion was meaningless. He said only Karem's statements, not those of another person, could relieve the contempt of court finding, said Cathy Granados, court coordinator for Priest.

Airport plans new facility, runway paving

■ Arrival of the Confederate Air Force will displace airport maintenance operations, which had already been approved by the FAA for partial funding of a new facility.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Midland International Airport officials have been hustling to crank out bid specifications on $5 million in proposed projects for the coming year, Victor White, airport director, said Thursday.

The airport has been in urgent need of a repaved runway and a new maintenance facility, with each project costing an estimated $2.5 million.

The Confederate Air Force's rapid descent into new facilities here will displace airport maintenance operations, which have been housed in the nearby Windecker buildings more than five years.

The Federal Aviation Administration, which is expected to fund about 90 percent of both projects, approved granting $2.5 million for

Vietnam memorial may join CAF site

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

The Confederate Air Force announced it could be expanding in more ways than in just a physical sense. The CAF concept of commemorating the World War II years, 1939-1945, will expand to include the Vietnam era when the proposed Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial is located on CAF grounds.

"Although our intent is to commemorate the WWII years of 1939-1945, period, we will be honored to have the Vietnam memorial on CAF grounds," said Joe Mabee, CAF chief of staff.

John Thilbeck, recently-elected president of the incorporated memorial committee, said, "We're just ecstatic at what this possibility could grow into." He said Mabee indicated the CAF may expand its focus to include the Korean War and Vietnam War years. "The focus would be on honoring those who gave the ultimate sacrifice to their country," Thilbeck said.

Thilbeck said no official contracts have been signed and details such as location and square footage haven't been ironed out. "We have yet to sit down and sign contracts or anything of this nature," Thilbeck said. "We haven't crossed all the t's and dotted all the i's yet." Nonetheless, Thilbeck said the verbal agreement "is causing plenty of excitement."

Thilbeck said he met with Mabee June 26, an hour after the City Council approved a contract to keep CAF planes in Midland for 50 years. At that time, Thilbeck requested space and Mabee said that the CAF "would love to have the Vietnam memorial on our grounds."

Mabee said he and Thilbeck are "basically in the same business of honoring those who fought in the wars."

Thilbeck said, "The memorial committee also met June 26 and voted unanimously to accept the new site."

The original site for the Vietnam memorial was off of La Force Boulevard near the Midland International Airport, and the original completion date was Memorial Day 1990.

Thilbeck said the memorial committee — which was formed in June 1989 — had problems with the landowner and legal snafus to iron out before ground could be broken or funds solicited from coorporations. "All those bridges have been crossed," he said. "And now with the CAF site, we expect to be ready to start construction in six to eight months."

Thilbeck said, "Speaking personally, and not for the memorial committee, I'd like to see this project develop into a museum — as a division of the CAF — commemorating the Vietnam era. With the drawing capacity of the CAF, the marriage of our two organizations would be phenomenal."

Mabee said, "We both are honoring veterans. The CAF is just honoring those from a few years earlier."

The granite Texas-shaped monument will be mounted on a pedestal with a 50-foot block wall built behind it. The monument will measure 8 feet by 10 feet and bear 208 names of the dead or missing, including 16 from Midland County and 52 from Ector County. Names of veterans from 27 West Texas counties will be included.

The memorial was designed by Randy Gilliam, a Vietnam veteran who served with the 101st Airborne Division 1969-70.

Anticipated cost of construction is about $150,000, according to Thilbeck. He said aprpoximately $25,000 has been raised.

Donations to fund construction of the Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial may be sent to Vietnam Veterans Memorial, P.O. Box 60774, Midland, Texas, 79711. For information on the memorial call 563-5636.

Sex ordinance allowed to stand

■ Ector County will be able to enforce an ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses despite the fact that a lawsuit has been filed by the owner of an adult bookstore.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton refused this week to issue an injunction preventing Ector County from enforcing an ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses.

B&L Adult Bookstore owner Sharon Lee Wright sought the injunction as part of a lawsuit she filed against Ector County in June which challenges the ordinance's constitutionality.

The ordinance, which regulates the location of cabarets, massage parlors and adult bookstores, requires licenses for such businesses.

John Cliff, one of Ms. Wright's attorneys, said Bunton's refusal Tuesday to issue the injunction would not stop his client from pursuing the lawsuit.

Cliff said Ms. Wright sought the injunction in order to ensure that the B&L could remain open during the lawsuit and not be arbitrarily shut down by the Ector County Sheriff's Department.

The B&L received its license June 25, Ector County Tax Assessor records show. Four businesses have been licensed under the ordinance, which went into effect June 1. Another business has been approved for a license, tax office officials said.

Cliff said that as long as the B&L's license remains valid, the store will not need an injunction to remain open.

"They haven't attempted to revoke the license," he said. "The fact that there wasn't an injunction doesn't make much difference. We just don't have the protection of a court order."

He said Ms. Wright will still seek to have the ordinance struck down. Recent amendments to the ordinance have improved it, he said, but have not made it fully constitutional.

"Some of the amendments...probably rendered some of our attacks moot," Cliff said.

Amendments approved last week by Ector County commissioners included a provision allowing for judicial review of licensing disputes in district court.

A section of the ordinance which would have prevented people indicted or charged with a crime from obtaining a license was changed to apply only to people convicted of a crime.

Finally, the amended ordinance ensures that an appeals board will review license denials within 20 days of a request.

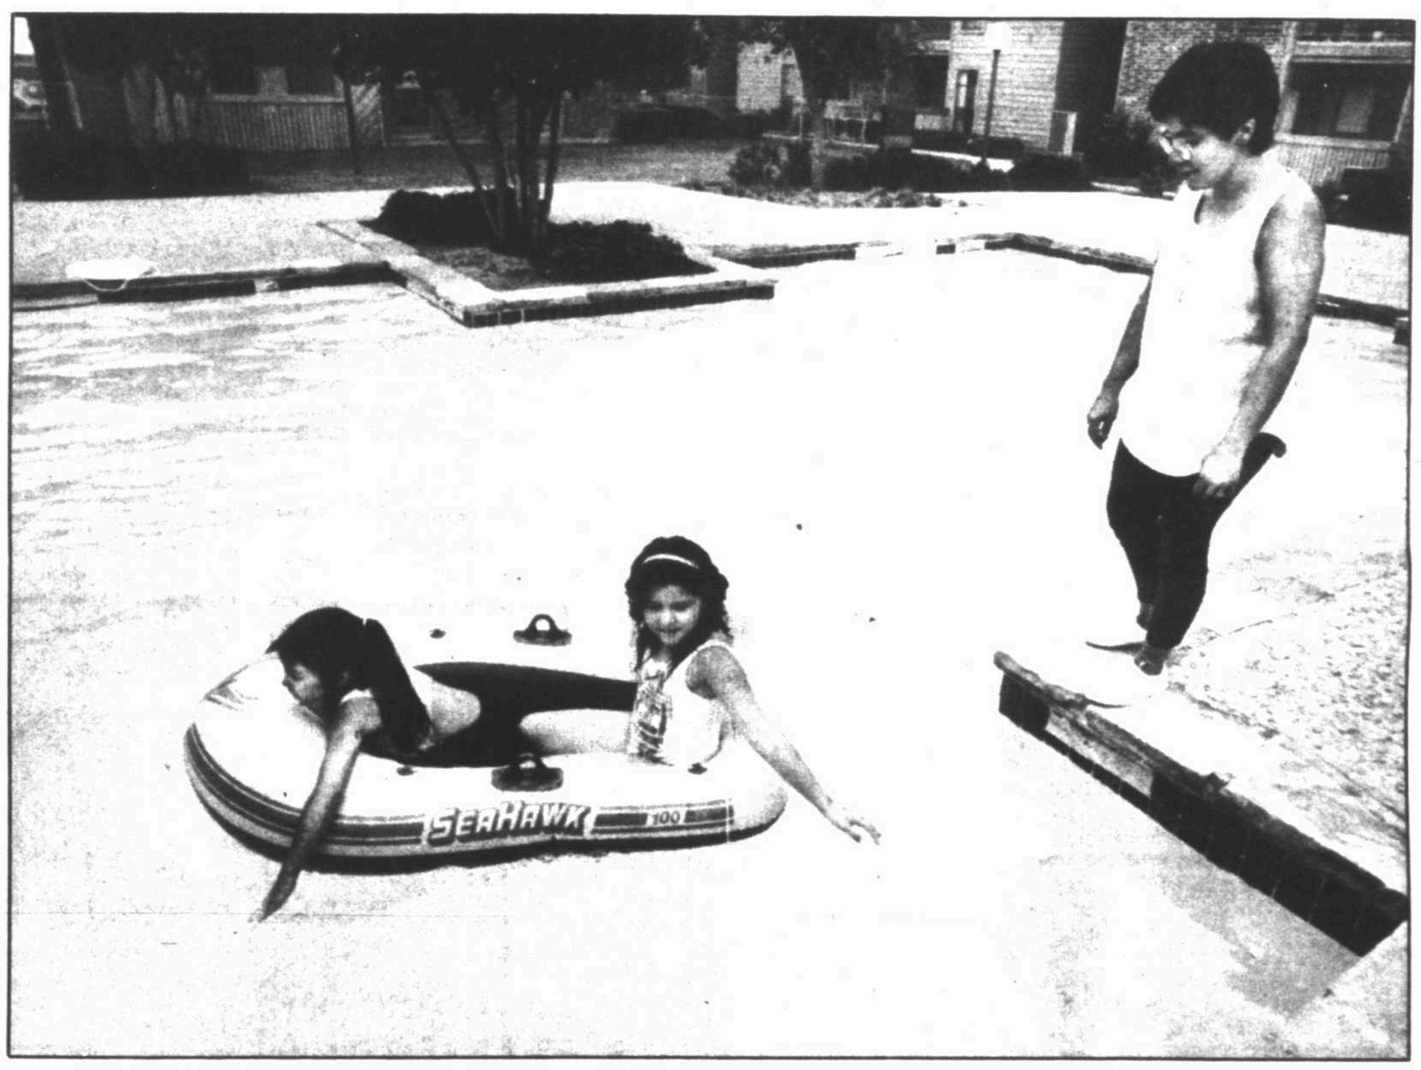

Jack Crider, Ector County Precinct 1 commissioner, said he was pleased with Bunton's decision not to enjoin enforcement of the ordinance. He added that he hoped Bunton would not overturn the ordinance when Ms. Wright's lawsuit comes to trial.

"I think there is a need for it (the ordinance)," Crider said. "I'm very glad we've got it in place and hopefully we'll be able to continue with it. I guess it's kind of a wait-and-see situation. It's a very controversial issue."

Crider said county officials are awaiting a written opinion from Bunton regarding the injunction refusal.

On June 11, Bunton issued a 30-day temporary injunction in favor of Ector County's Red Slipper nude dance club, allowing it to stay open while its license application was processed.

The Red Slipper and the B&L were among six businesses shut down June 1 for not having licenses. The ordinance, approved by commissioners in February, gave businesses 90 days to obtain licenses.

Local entities are keeping 'freeport' taxes

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Nearly three of every four taxing entities in Texas, including all local governments in Midland County, have kept taxes on "freeport" property, the State Property Tax Board reported Thursday.

Texas voters amended the state constitution this past November to allow local governments to exempt freeport goods from property taxes, effective Jan. 1, 1990.

Freeport goods are inventories brought into the state by manufacturers, distributors or other firms and held no longer than 175 days before they are shipped out of state.

Counties, cities, school districts and junior college districts were allowed to keep taxing freeport goods if by April 1 they passed resolutions stating their intentions to tax the goods.

All local governments in Midland County passed resolutions to keep the freeport tax, and the city of Goldsmith was the only government in Ector County that allowed the exemption.

In Howard County, the cities of Coahoma and Forsan allowed the exemption.

Taxing units that passed the resolutions may later eliminate the Cowboys will eat anything stirred up by the cook

Jerry Lee has stirred things up before. He has made batch after batch of chuck-wagon gravy over mesquite coals in a big, old iron skillet.

It didn't work out to taste before. But this time, it might be different.

Todd

"The one thing I'm not is a gravy maker," Jerry Lee considered, as he stirred the sauce that was supposed to be creamy. The color was about right: slightly browned and speckled. But the consistency was more than a tad runny.

Around the chuck wagon, Jerry Lee does everything else up to snuff, at least up to the standard set by his ideal camp cook, his father, Guy Lee, who ranches and cooks south of Marathon.

"I'll tell you one thing," Guy Lee said, as he was stirring around at breakfast time at the Ralph Powell chuck wagon. "He put too much water and milk and not enough flour."

The son knew of what his father spoke.

Even in his shyness, Jerry Lee was sorely disappointed.

"I don't think I can boil that (mess) and make a crust."

He kept on stirring.

Guy Lee already had cooked the camp bread and, of course, the bacon, which provided the grease for the gravy. The cowboy coffee was steaming, and a big mess of scrambled eggs was being served up.

"A cowboy can't make it without coffee," Midland rancher Ralph Powell reckoned rightly.

Everybody about the campgrounds, it seemed, was waiting on the gravy, maybe because Jerry Lee had made such a commotion over it and because good gravy just goes with a good daybreak breakfast out by the chuck wagon.

Jerry Lee, who does everything else well, seemed so disappointed with the gravy. But he shouldn't have been. He seems to have a knack for fouling up the gravy even while he is so adept, like his father, at making coffee, cooking beef, baking bread and preparing those sorts of vittles. He also makes a pretty good hand at cowboying, keeping the peace as a flying deputy sheriff, and piloting the helicopter to herd cattle and to corral bad guys.

Once again, he moaned. "I think I'm going to have to give up on this gravy. I don't think I can boil it long enough. I'm not a great gravy cook."

Presently, Jerry Lee lifted the heavy iron skillet off of the mesquite coals and carried the pan of gravy over to the chuck wagon.

"It's done, such as it is."

Breakfast of eggs, bacon, camp bread, and coffee was ready.

"I didn't bring any light bread," said Guy Lee, who runs the chuck-wagon for Powell at roundups when his son is cowboying and not cooking, "but I hope this (camp bread) is enough for breakfast."

It was — more than enough. And better than good.

And Jerry Lee's gravy, which, as it turned out, was in plentiful supply, became sopping gravy for the bread.

It tasted better than it looked, and it looked mighty weak.

Sometime back, Jerry Lee wasted 25 pounds of flour trying to make a batch of gravy.

"I threw the gravy and the skillet away," he said. "The gravy was so tough, you couldn't cut it with a chopping axe."

Jerry Lee was careful to mention that he didn't learn to make gravy from his 76-year-old father, but he did pick up other cooking skills from the old cowboy.

"I'll tell you this," the son said. "I did not learn to make gravy by watching him."

But out on the range, far away from any cafe, cowboys will pretty well take what the cook comes up with at the chuck wagon.

"I always tell a man it's not compulsory to eat," Guy Lee said in his West Texas drawl. However savory or bland the food might be, out on the prairie, it gets eaten.

"That's something you can't do," Guy Lee figured. "You can't cook something so sorry that they won't come out and eat it."

Seminary president apologizes

N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH, Texas — A seminary president has apologized for remarks he made at the Southern Baptist Convention, declaring that he is "truly sorry" if Baptist conservatives thought he had called them satanic.

Russell Dilday, president of the 4,500-student Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth, has been under criticism since June 12, when he described tactics used in the fundamentalist takeover of the Southern Baptist Convention as an "evil, satanic assault."

Dilday said in a statement Thursday that he never intended to label any individuals "satanic" but was denouncing political methods used by fundamentalists and moderates alike.

"I did not call the conservative movement in the convention satanic," the statement says. "I am a theological conservative and I am as determined as anyone to preserve the denomination's long-standing commitment to the Bible as God's perfect word.

Dilday said he never meant the remarks to come before the convention floor.

Bicycle tour benefits multiple sclerosis groups

Staff Report

At least 180 bicyclists are literally getting in gear for "Cactus & Crude," a two-day event kicking off at 6:30 a.m. Saturday. The second annual bicycle tour is sponsored by the West Texas Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Cyclists of all ages and abilities are invited to participate in the 150-mile tour which concludes Sunday. The first lag of the tour, 84.6 miles, will begin in Midland and end in Gail. The second lag is 64.6 miles from Gail to White River Lake, east of Lubbock. Bus transportation will be available for the return trip.

Registration fee is $20 and entrants must have a minimum of $150 in pledges. The registration fee includes all meals, use of rest areas every 8-12 miles, medical support, transportation for luggage and mechanical support.

Funds raised will be channeled into research, education and patient services with 60 percent of the funds remaining in the West Texas Chapter area. The local chapter serves Midland, Odessa, Big Spring, Lubbock, San Angelo and the surrounding 48-county area.

The first wave of bicyclists will leave at 6:30 a.m. Saturday from the County Exhibit Building.

According to Monica Childs, spokesperson for the West Texas MS chapter, $70,000 was raised at the previous local event.

"Anyone who can ride for one hour can complete the tour," she said. "This is a tour and not a race. Most of the cyclists who ride are recreational cyclists and not racers."

Sponsors include American Airlines, Albertsons, Peyton's Bikes, Taco Villa, the Permian Basin Bicycle Association, the Midland West Rotary Club, Students of Carver Occupational Development Lab, Permian Basin Road Runners Club, Inc., Chaparral Cycling Club and the Gold Wing Road Riders, Chapter "T" Midland.

the maintenance facility project in September 1989.

However, city councilmen told airport officials to delay that project until CAF officials decided whether to move here.

Now that the CAF is arriving, maintenance operations will be housed in Rich-Air Co. hangar space while the new facility is being constructed, White said.

"The CAF is going to kick us out any day," he said. "They were out there hooking up telephones today."

Construction on the new facility, which will be located on about 6 acres of land between the control tower and terminal, is scheduled to begin around Oct. 1 and be completed within a year, White said.

The building will be home for vehicle maintenance, a supply warehouse, maintenance offices and other repair shops, he said.

"For the first time we'll have a complete maintenance facility in one common area," White said.

In addition to building the maintenance facility, airport officials also are planning a $2.5 million facelift of the airport's north-south runway, he said.

"It's 10 years old and needs to be replaced," he said. "It's a major project."

An FAA grant for that project is pending but is expected to be approved sometime before this fall, he said.

Construction on the 9,500-foot runway will take place during the winter, with aircraft being diverted to the airport's 8,300-foot runway for about four months, White said.

The project has been slated for construction during the winter months because large aircraft such as commercial jets need more distance to take off as temperatures rise, he said.

"It's a very critical timing thing," he said. "It can't be too hot and it can't be too cold."

High temperatures could mean limiting an aircraft's cargo, passenger load and fuel to ensure that it can take off on a shorter runway, he said.

Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said the two upcoming projects are critical to the airport's future.

"They're both big capital improvements," McGregor said. "They're both really important."

White, however, said the projects only are a temporary solution to the airport's future needs.

In addition to the two projects, airport officials also are gearing up to apply for about $6 million in federal financing for extending the 8,300-foot runway by 1,000 feet, White said.

The project, which may not see construction for three years, is needed to make Midland's airport more competitive with those in Lubbock and Amarillo, he said.

tax, but in jurisdictions that failed to reserve the right, freeport goods are now permanently exempt.

Midland County Chief Appraiser Ron Stegall said he has not figured how much property might be eligible for the exemption in Midland County, but he said it probably would include a large portion of oilfield service equipment.

The state tax board survey showed that 1,738 of the 2,333 eligible taxing units, or 74 percent, elected to keep taxing freeport goods after 1990.

Roughly four-fifths of all counties and school districts will keep the tax, while one-third of cities approved the exemption.

Jim Robinson, the tax board's executive director, said he believes the majority of local governments reserved the option of continuing to tax freeport property because of uncertainty about their local tax base.

"While Texas is now recovering from the recession in real property values, most taxing units have seen considerable erosion in thier tax base since 1985," Robinson said.

"Local government revenue needs have continued to increase, however, and governing bodies appear reluctant to further reduce the tax base by exempting freeport inventories," he said.

Robinson said it is likely that as real property values improve, more taxing units will grant the exemption, which was designed to prevent the loss of warehouses and distribution centers to neighboring states that offer the exemption.

EARNEST KIKER

Mulch can reduce landscape's stress

Most problems in West Texas gardens and landscapes are caused by physiological stress, which can be avoided by maintaining near optimum soil moisture, soil temperature, soil fertility and reducing competition from weeds. A good mulch can do all these things for your plants.

Kiker

Both organic and inorganic mulches can be useful. Some of the most readily available ones include:

Hay or Straw: A 3-inch to 4-inch layer of hay provides good annual weed control, conserves moisture and adds organic matter to the soil as the underside of the layer decomposes. Hay decomposes quickly and additional layers need to be added to maintain weed control.

Sawdust: Sawdust is available from local stables where it is used for sanitation in stalls and pens. Fresh sawdust is available at cabinet shops and lumber yards. A 2-inch layer of sawdust promotes good weed control. If applied around growing plants in the summer, one-half pound of actual nitrogen should be added per each 10 cubic feet of sawdust to prevent nutrient deficiencies. Fresh sawdust will crust, causing impermeability to rainfall and sprinklers.

Grass Clippings: A 2-inch layer of grass clippings will conserve soil moisture and provide good weed control. Build up the layer gradually using dry grass to prevent the formation of a solid mat. Clippings will decompose rapidly and provide nitrogen to growing plants, as well as making a fine humus in the surface layer of the planting bed or garden. Dont' use grass clippings that are full of grass or weed seeds. Grass clippings can be used directly to the growing area or put in the compost pile in place of manure.

Plastic Mulches: Either black, black on white or clear plastic can be used to conserve soil moisture and control wees. Black or black-on-white plastic is the best for weed control while clear plastic creates greenhouse growing conditions for weeds. Black plastic raises the soil temperature by 8 to 10 degrees; this increase is good for starting plants in the spring but may be detrimental to plants in the summer. Plastic mulches should be used in combination with other organic or rock mulches that don't do a good job of controlling weeds and/or conserving moisture when used alone, such as cotton seed hulls, pecan shells, ground corncobs, gravel or stone and leaves.

Paper: Using 2 to 4 layers of newspaper provides a good mulch. It decomposes in one season and is readily available and cheap. Printers no longer use ink containing lead compounds for black newsprint; however, colored inks may contain lead. Newspaper is best used in combination with other organic mulches.

Other materials that might be used for mulches but may be expensive include bark, pine needles, peat moss and compost.

Lack of rain decimates cotton crop

LUBBOCK (AP) — Record high temperatures coupled with only scattered rainfall for more than a month have decimated more than half a million acres of young cotton on the Texas South Plains, officials said recently.

"We have never had this kind of weather this early in the season," said Don Johnson, a cotton farmer and executive vice president of Plains Cotton Growers Inc.

"Winds up to 30 miles per hour or better have pretty much sapped the moisture from the top of the soil at a very critical time," Johnson said.

The South Plains, frequently called the nation's biggest cotton field, usually produces half the state's cotton and about a fourth of the U.S. crop each year.

This spring, an estimated 3.25 million acres of cotton was planted in the 25-county area surrounding Lubbock. About 60 percent, some 1.9 million acres, has no irrigation. That portion is bearing the brunt of the drought, wind and heat.

Already, some 500,000 acres are beyond help, and the figure is growing with each day of excessive heat and no rain, said Dr. James R. Supak, cotton agronomist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

AP Laserphoto

Lubbock County farmer Bobby Richey kneels next to some of his dry-land cotton. The cotton should be eight to 10 inches tall, but is only three inches tall because of the high heat and near-drought conditions. Unless it rains, Richey said he would have to plow under his remaining crop.

There's no hope at all for the region's cotton that was planted in dry soil and never came up, Supak said.

Cotton likes hot weather, but only to a point. When temperatures get into the high 90s and stay there, plant development shuts down, Supak said.

Record high temperatures have scorched the area throughout June. For the month, Lubbock recorded 21 days when the thermometer reached 100 degrees or higher.

In the past, the highest number of June days hitting triple-digit temperatures was 12, occurring in 1928 and 1980. The current heat wave set a record of 110 degrees on June 24.

June is usually one of the wettest months for the area, averaging 2.66 inches of rainfall. This has been Lubbock's driest June ever, with only a trace of precipitation.

What the farmers need, Supak said, "is not just a shower or two, but a really good soaking rain. Even then, they might not get a crop."

Irrigated fields are doing well, but farmers had to begin applying water in late May and early June instead of July, when cotton irrigation normally begins.

Area farmers irrigating corn as well as cotton may have a difficult choice between diverting water from the less-tolerant corn to cotton.

"Everybody's pumping," said A. Wayne Wyatt, manager of the High Plains Underground Water District Number One.

Tractors may soon be running on empty

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Farmers have added another problem to their list of worries — where to find leaded gasoline for old but serviceable tractors.

"We know that in a few years it will virtually disappear from the market," said Martha Casey, spokeswoman for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. "I don't know how that market is going to turn out for farmers."

Major refineries and most service stations no longer sell gasoline containing lead, which the EPA has been trying to phase out for the past decade. Major refineries quit producing leaded fuel because of the EPA's tougher pollution controls and declining demand.

But leaded gasoline still is needed to run tractors, grain trucks, combines and other farm machinery bought in the '70s or before. Using unleaded gasoline can damage the engines, an EPA study found.

The majority of heavy farm work is done by diesel-powered large tractors and combines. The situation remains serious, however, for small farms and bigger operations that use light tractors for some work, said Gary Huddleston, information director for the Kentucky Farm Bureau Association.

'I don't know how that market (leaded gasoline) is going to turn out for farmers.'

— Martha Casey, EPA

Based on a 1985 questionnaire, the Federal Farm Bureau Federation estimates there are an average of 10 engines per U.S. farm that use leaded fuel, said Jim Porterfield, associate director of the federation's environmental division.

"Nearly half of the farmers said they want to continue using those engines for another 10 or 15 years at least," Porterfield said.

"It puts us in a difficult position. It will impose some hardship," said Mike Crouse, who was told his supplier would no longer have leaded fuel for two tractors he uses to farm 166 acres near Dixon, Ky.

Making things more complicated, the EPA requires service stations that sell gasoline containing a phosphorous-based additive, but no lead, to label the fuel as "leaded." Farmers may not realize they aren't buying fuel with lead, which is needed to lubricate and protect valve seats in older truck and tractor engines.

Crouse said he cannot afford to replace the valve seats on his tractors, which would enable them to accept unleaded gasoline. The work would cost several hundred dollars, he said.

Indiana farmers should have less trouble than some finding leaded gasoline because the Indiana Farm Bureau Cooperative Association's refinery will provide more of the fuel as supplies dwindle elsewhere, said Ronald Stover, vice president of the co-op's petroleum division.

"Our leaded gasoline sales continue to increase although the market is shrinking overall," he said. "We've gained about 7 percent per year in the farm market during the last couple of years, when most of the majors dropped out."

Farmers' spending tops $124 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers spent an estimated $124.1 billion on production expenses last year, up 4.9 percent from $118.4 billion in 1988, according to a preliminary report by the Agriculture Department released Tuesday.

But that was still far below the record level of $131.8 billion spent in 1981, just before a general financial crunch that stalled expansion in the nation's agricultural sector.

In 1986, annual spending by farmers dropped to less than $106 billion, reflecting massive cutbacks in capital investments as land values plummeted and debts weighed heavily on so many.

The last report by the department's National Agricultural Statistics Service showed 1989 expenditures rose for all major categories farm and land improvements, which dropped 6.3 percent, and fuel, which declined slightly.

Farm services, which include rent, comprised the largest expenditure by farmers at $26.7 billion, up 0.7 percent from 1988.

Vacation phobia strikes for different reasons

By Leslie Goldberg
Hearst News Service

Vacation-phobes are easy to spot: While everyone else around the pool is sipping daiquiris and smoothing on sunscreen, they are bolt upright in their lounge chair and clinging to a cellular phone.

Or you spy them in a drugstore in Thailand begging for a 2-week-old copy of the Wall Street Journal.

The problem of vacation anxiety seems to be spreading. Club Med, the ubiquitous resort, has installed fax machines at all of its so-called "villages." The Med is also now offering a "long weekend" package to accommodate the "busy professional," instead of the mandatory seven-day minimum.

But at least one stress management specialist is saying that the now-common hesitancy to take a vacation can be a health concern.

"We live in a very fast-paced world," says Jane Shannahan, director of social services at San Francisco's Children's Hospital. "It's essential to allow the body to recuperate and the mind to reflect."

The stressed-for-success execs in the 30-to-40 age bracket aren't the only ones who suffer from vacation reluctance. And not all relaxation phobia is caused by the guilt-ridden, identity-crisis-provoking terror of leaving the job for a week or two.

SOME OF this epidemic fear to take a vacation is based in reality. The fact is, the potential for vacation disaster is awesome. No one but the naive, the ill-informed and the desperate jump to fill out that next week's time card, "on vacation."

First to consider: the vacation price tag, especially if you are, as they say, "traveling with children." While many restaurants offer children's plates and the rest, other eateries employ waitresses who shamelessly tempt youngsters with expensive dishes of fried jumbo shrimp and $5 banana splits. Of course, there are children who need very little prompting in this area. The only thing worse than an all-out family war is an all-out family war in a restaurant.

Another thing many parents realize: Kids don't go for cheap hotels without swimming pools. And children appear to have an inborn need for souvenirs.

"Perhaps we need to rethink what is meant by vacation — it may not mean getting on a train or a bus or a plane," offers Shannahan, who runs the stress management seminars sponsored by the hospital. "Maybe we can stay home and do the things we don't get a chance to do. We can catch up on sleep and rest."

An alternative to hanging around the house or local park for two weeks is staying with extended family or friends. Shannahan warns, however, that the family visit can engender "sky-high expectations for an idyllic reunion of loved ones." The reality can fall short.

PUTTING ALL one's time off into one "vacation basket" is not recommended. "I try to encourage people to take several short vacations if possible," says Shannahan. "That way, if the vacation is horrible in February, you can still look forward to getting away in June. Another thing, if you plan to spend your only vacation all year with extended family and you find visits with extended family stressful, you might want to reconsider."

The idea that vacations can put pressure on marital (or whatever) relationships is no news. Everybody has a sister who likes to shop and a brother-in-law who would rather surf; an uncle who likes early-morning games of golf and an aunt who likes dancing until the wee hours; a co-worker who likes scuba-diving and her boyfriend who doesn't know how to swim. The problem is that different people have different "vacation ideas," says Shannahan.

A selection of solutions for the problem of opposing vacation concepts includes: bribery, wild displays of emotion, blackmail and separate vacations. Shannahan also notes, "The normal state of relaxation varies from individual to individual. Some people might find outdoor work relaxing and someone else might find lying on a beach tremendously relaxing. The idea is to compromise: 'We'll do what you want to do today. And we'll do what I want to do to tomorrow.'" Besides there's always next February. Relax.

FAMILY MATTERS

Grandparents favor grandson

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: We have a real problem that we just don't know what to do about. My husband's parents favor our son over our two daughters. Our son is named after his grandfather and is the only male grandchild in the family. My in-laws are nice people and we generally get along on most things, but this favoritism is becoming a real problem.

May

Our daughters were both old enough last Christmas to see the obvious difference (7 and 5). Our son was only 3 then and saw that he got lots of presents but wasn't really aware that he got so very much more than his sisters. Our 7-year-old was in tears on Christmas Day! I promised myself then that this wouldn't happen again.

To make things worse, my husband's parents are very well off and are very generous to us. My husband says that he's not sure what they would do if I made too much of an issue about this. I think that this is too important to let go. I don't want my daughters to grow up feeling that they are inferior to their brother.

Now the real problem. Last week my mother-in-law called and invited our son to go on a trip to London with them. I asked her about taking the girls too, and she said that they couldn't handle all the children. I was so stunned that I just said yes. After I hung up the telephone I sat and cried. Then I got mad and I'm still mad. I called my husband and he said to not rock the boat. His solution is to just let them do what they want to do. Now I'm mad at him too.

We have had several arguments over this since last week. I really feel like this is so unfair. I want to protect my daughters and my son from this kind of favoritism but I don't think that I can do it alone. My husband's solution is to take the girls somewhere or to send them to camp while (son's name) is away in August. I just really don't want to let him go under these conditions, but I don't know what to do about it. What do you think? Will it damage my daughters? SHOCKED

DEAR SHOCKED: Your family's difficult problem has both short- and long-term implications, but no simple answer.

Your in-laws are being very unfair. Unfortunately, favoritism from grandparents is a very common occurrence.

Your in-laws are sending a message that your son is "better" or "more loved" or "more worthy of love" than his sisters, which is an inappropriate and incorrect message about worth and value to all the children. In early developmental stages, children see adults as having "god-like" qualities and as being the ultimate judges of right and wrong. Many adults spend years seeking the approval from others that they never received as children.

What can you and your husband do about it? First, try to reach a level of agreement with your husband on this entire matter. What will be your (as parents) position on the treatment of your children? In this important boundary-setting process you "teach" his parents what is considered appropriate and inappropriate behavior in your family.

Expect consequences if you make a stand. You can, of course, stop your son from going with them. He may be a little unhappy, but at his age he won't know what he's missing. He would probably have more fun going swimming. However, he isn't the problem. Your in-laws may strongly disagree with the family decision and pressure your husband through guilt or other means. They may withdraw emotional and financial support.

You and your husband must be prepared to deal with those consequences. The longer-term issue is whether you will teach your children that favoritism is appropriate and accept in your family. We must teach our children by words and deeds that each and every one of them is a valued and valuable human being worthy of our love. This lesson is worth any price that we as parents have to pay. Good luck!

DEAR ABBY

Positive self-image lifts burden of weight

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Looking Beyond Looks" — the fat woman who had been humiliated, insulted and ridiculed by total strangers because of her weight. I have a different story to tell:

Van Buren

As a 21-year-old bride, I weighed 126 pounds. (I'm 5 foot 3.) Over the years, I gradually put on weight. I'm now 65 years old and weigh 245 pounds. Although I'd love to be slim to have more choice in clothes, no diet ever worked for me, so now I just don't worry about my weight.

I've always been able to get any job I applied for, and I've never lost a day's work due to illness. People always guess my age to be at least 10 years younger than I am, and I've never experienced any rejection or rude comments because of my weight. I am well-proportioned, have a waistline — large as it is — and wear a 20½ dress.

After 25 years of marriage, my husband died, and since then I've been having a wonderful love affair with a charming, slender man. I still get very positive attention from men, and I feel attractive. Last year, when I was at the beach in Europe with my boyfriend — if you can visualize me in a swimsuit — I was actually pursued by a good-looking Italian, much to the ire of my friend!

Abby, the point I want to make is this. I FEEL attractive, and am, therefore, treated that way. It's a matter of self-image. So let's dispel the myth that fat girls finish last. I'm fat, and I am ... ENJOYING LIFE IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR ENJOYING LIFE: "Thin" may not be "in" much longer. Hear this:

In the first hearing of its kind, a congressional subcommittee held an informational hearing investigating the safety and effectiveness of weight-loss programs and products. Rep. Ron Wyden of Oregon said: "American consumers are spending more than $30 billion a year on weight-loss products and programs. All too often the results are poor, and occasionally life-threatening. And federal regulators are doing very little to assure that products and procedures are safe, and that consumers aren't being ripped off by grossly misleading advertising."

According to the newsletter published by The National Association to Advance Fat Acceptance: "There are 65 million dieters in the USA — 50 percent are women and 25 percent are men. Sixty percent of all women are usually dieting in some manner. And 18 percent of all adults are constantly dieting."

I rest my case.

DEAR ABBY: Your column covers such a broad variety of interesting subjects, I find it fascinating. Please provide me with an answer to this mysterious question: Has anyone ever grown a third set of teeth? — OOPAH IN RAMONA, CALIF.

DEAR OOPAH: I asked Dr. Stan Golden, my dental consultant, who went to the root of the matter. His response: "Nature provides only two sets of teeth. Occasionally a person will grow a third tooth, but it is a rare occurrence. So, if a person is to have a third set of teeth, it will be made — by a dentist."

DEAR ABBY: In reference to the woman whose daughter was going to wear her mother's wedding gown but was concerned about who would "own" the gown after the wedding:

A similar situation arose when I let my daughter-in-law wear my wedding gown. We both understood that the gown was a loan and would be returned to me after the wedding. However, I wanted her to have something she could keep as her own treasure, so I went shopping for a veil to match my gown. Fortunately, I found a perfect match. So she wore my gown and her own veil, and after the wedding she returned my gown and kept the veil. Now we both have wonderful, wonderful memories of how we shared that very special day. — LUCKY MOTHER-IN-LAW, EPSOM, N.H.

Dictionary defines 'contemporary' words

NEW YORK (AP) — Slang may make English teachers cringe, but it has quite a different effect on writer Paul Dickson.

Dickson says that even though slang's detractors believe it "perverts standard English, I believe that slang enriches the language."

He is the author of a number of books on language, the latest of which is "Slang! The Topic-by-Topic Dictionary of Contemporary American Lingoes" (Pocket).

Dickson defines slang as "language that thumbs its nose at conventional English, one that goes in the opposite direction.

"It can be brutally frank or funny," he adds.

According to its publisher, "Slang!" is the first book in half a century to define slang terms arranged by subject. Among its 24 chapters are sections on sports, law, automobiles and real estate, as well as Pentagonese, bureaucratese and political slang.

Certain chapters can help "outsiders" better understand the language of such groups as teens, yuppies and "chipheads" — that is, computer people. And, even though flower children pretty much disappeared with the 1960s, the chapter on the slang of the counterculture reveals how much of this group's language — including "hang-up," "hassle" and "uptight" — has survived.

Of his "offbeat reference book," as Dickson calls it, the author says: "It's for people who are interested in worlds around them that they're not part of. Also, there's a large number of people who enjoy words — who do word puzzles and games — who might use this book. People use words for fun. The book can be useful as a reference and as entertainment."

Dickson said that he worked on writing the book's nearly 300 pages for "only a short time," but his files had already been started. "I always collect language tidbits and oddities," he said. "My files are on napkins and matchbook covers."

Some of the book's sections were fleshed out with the help of various people — doctors, lawyers, teens — who were familiar with and used the slang of their group. One of his experts was a man who collected race car slang, part of which Dickson included in the automotive slang section of the book.

To assemble his section on teen slang, Dickson went right to the source: He compiled information from questionnaires filled out by high-school students, and also got help from his own 15-year-old.

One reason Dickson doesn't regard slang lightly is that "the slang words of today could become accepted into standard English tomorrow: for example, 'rookie,' which came from 'recruit,' and 'chortle,' which was invented in a Lewis Carroll story."

Some words, he says, citing "humongous," "raunchy" and "bonkers" as examples, "just pop out of nowhere."

The book's index is a handy tool for researchers who may want to look up a word but aren't sure in which of the book's categories it can be found, as well as for those who want to entertain themselves by browsing.

Dickson plans to update the dictionary as it becomes necessary, and when he does, he expects he will have to pay special attention to the slang of teens. "Their language soon becomes archaic," he explained.

Speaking of slang in general, Dickson says: "I think it is a particularly 'boom' time for slang. It's when times are better — no wars — that things like slang pick up.

"We are in a wonderful time for wordplay."

Sunny attitude helps beat heat

By Valli Herman
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Like a refrain from a too-catchy song, the most popular phrase in Southern California this week has been "Hot enough for ya?"

Before you loose your cool, it helps to realize it could be worse — it could be April, with five more months of a superheated season ahead.

As with any problem impossible to control, a change in perspective helps. Look at the bright side.

- You have an excuse for staying home in front of the TV, which is conveniently near the air conditioner.
- You can forgive yourself for eating nothing but ice cream, iced coffee, shrimp on ice and cake with icing (it sounds cool).
- It saves you money. You don't need to run hot water for your shower.
- You renew your relations with forgotten friends, the ones with the pool.

Changes make independence easier

By Steve Edwards

To help older seniors maintain their independence, a physical environment more suited to their needs, especially in accessibility, mobility, safety and security, may be necessary.

Edwards

Most older people don't have the flexibility they used to have, and are also more vulnerable to falls.

To increase both comfort and safety, move frequently-used household items within easy reach. Appliances such as side-by-side freezer/refrigerators, self-cleaning ovens and cook tops with front controls are easier for older people to use.

Reorganizing and renovating living space to fit the needs of wheelchair users may be necessary. Lower kitchen counters with a cutout area for a wheelchair underneath allows them to prepare their own meals instead of depending on others. Redesigning a bathroom for wheelchair access also can reduce dependence.

To increase mobility in multi-level homes, install a chair-lift on the stairs or an elevator. Have all necessary rooms — bedroom, bathroom, kitchen, living room — on one floor, or consolidate several functions — cooking, dining, watching television or visiting with family or friends — in a small area.

Most wheelchairs require a 32-inch wide clearance through halls and doorways. Removing a door or installing a swing-clear hinge may allow a wheelchair user to move freely from room to room.

An environment for the physically frail should be free of physical hazards, offer protection against crime and allow them to get help in an emergency.

Even a home full of familiar objects can become dangerous for an individual who has trouble walking or hearing. Scatter rugs, unsteady furniture or lamps, frayed electric cords or those that are run across floors, shag carpeting, slippery floors, cluttered walkways and over-stuffed closets are all hazardous. If older relatives are willing, help them clean and reorganize, removing appliances, furniture and rugs that are no longer safe.

Because people become less sensitive to pain as they age, burns are a major risk. The risk of scalding can be reduced by installing stove tops with front controls, lowering water heater temperatures and making sure pots and pans have secure handles and are not too heavy to manage when full.

Install smoke alarms near the kitchen and in the bedroom. Battery-operated smoke alarms operate even if an elecrical fire breaks out.

The wrong lighting can be hazard too. Eyesight diminishes gradually with age, and shiny surfaces that reflect glare can impair vision. Installing non-glare lighting in the home and making sure hallways and walk areas are evenly lit will help prevent accidents. For the hard of hearing, install amplifiers on telephones and doorbells, and use whistling tea kettles instead of silent ones.

To protect against break-ins, make sure door and window locks are in good repair. Consider installing an alarm system. Install good lighting around the outside of the home so that anyone approaching the buiding can be seen by neighbors or passersby. And a dog can offer not only protection, but companionship and a reason for daily exercise.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Retirement age marks birth of career for law grad

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Peg O'Brien usually held her tongue when older women called the legal aid office for advice and then lamented that a "young thing" couldn't understand the woes of a 60-year-old widow.

"But once in a while, I'd say 'I do know,'" said Mrs. O'Brien, who was graduated in May from Boston College Law School. "I'm older than you are — and I'm a widow."

Mrs. O'Brien turns 65 in August.

"There are lot of second-career people, but this woman is highly unusual," Kathy Grove, an attorney who is a consultant on legal education to the American Bar Association.

Mrs. O'Brien has been clearing paths most of her life. She was among seven of about 70 girls in her high school class preparing for college.

After graduating from Emmanuel College with a math degree, she was hired by an insurance company and was told she was its first employee from a Catholic women's college.

In 1980, Mrs. O'Brien became the first woman elected to the Norwell Board of Selectmen.

After her husband's death in 1983, she took a paralegal course and went to work for an agency that provided guardian services for the elderly. Soon Mrs. O'Brien was thinking she could be a better advocate if she was a lawyer herself.

She took the law school admissions test on a lark, telling no one. The results were good. So, on another lark she applied to three Boston law schools. All three accepted her.

PI reports upswing in oil, gas drilling

■ Petroleum Information reports an upswing in drilling for oil and gas wells over 1989, but a decline in drilling for new field wildcats.

Staff Report

DENVER — Statistics from Petroleum Information indicate an increase in oil and gas wells drilled in the U.S. and Texas.

According to the company, wells drilled for oil and gas in the U.S. and its waters totaled 9,100 through June, 1990. The total represents an increase of 13.4 percent from the 8,033 well completions recorded at mid-year 1989.

The total for the first six months of 1990 included 3,563 oil wells and 2,634 natural gas wells. Oil well completions were up a strong 18.5 percent from the mid-1988 total of 3,008. Gas well completions increased 23.3 percent from 2,136 one year ago.

At the same time, drilling for new field wildcats, those wells drilled outside of known producing areas, declined by 4.7 percent. The 1990 mid-year total was 918, compared to 963 after the first six months of 1989. Only 101 new fields were discovered in the first half of 1990, down from 120 a year ago. The success rate for new field exploration dipped to 11 percent from 12.5 percent at the end of June, 1989.

Other exploration for new reserves in and near existing fields, dropped a little more than seven percent as only 932 such wells were completed in 1990's first half, 74 fewer than at mid-year 1989.

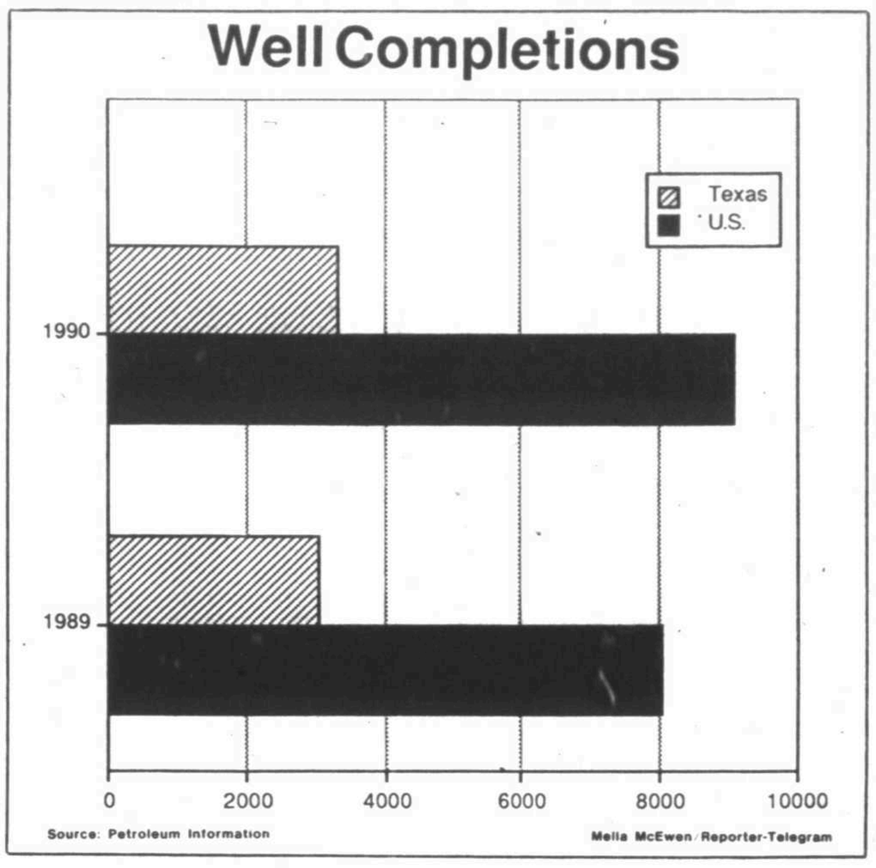

Texas was the leader among the states with 3,301 wells completed at the end of June. The other leaders were: Oklahoma, 938; Kansas, 790; California, 664; Louisiana, 435; New Mexico, 395.

PI said a leading indicator of future drilling activity rose in June. Permits to drill totaled 3,044 for the month, up from 2,767 in May. Year-to-date, total permits to drill in the U.S. were up 23.8 percent to 19,323 from the mid-1989 total of 15,613.

Well starts, also tracked nationally by PI rose by the identical percentage, 23.8 through the first six months of 1990. The U.S. total of 9,628. The increase essentially tracks with the nation's rig county which was up 22 percent from a year ago.

While drilling for oil and gas increased during the first six months of 1990, the current U.S. activity level remains severely depressed when viewed in historical

Futures tumble

NEW YORK (AP) — Energy futures prices finished lower but above the session's bottom levels Thursday after prices recovered amid renewed buying.

The contract for August delivery of West Texas Intermediate slumped 30 cents to $16.50 per 42-gallon barrel, resuming the slide that was temporarily interrupted by Tuesday's 8-cent gain. Contracts for delivery during September through November also posted losses.

In natural gas trading, the August contract fell to $1.514 per 1,000 cubic feet from $1.525 Tuesday. It was $1.519 on Monday.

Dollar up slightly

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar closed moderately higher on world currency markets Thursday in light and uneventful trading.

Gold prices fell. On New York's Commodity Exchange, gold bullion for current delivery traded at $361.40 a troy ounce.

U.S. financial markets were closed Wednesday in observance of Independence Day.

Earlier in Tokyo, the dollar rose to 151.00 Japanese yen. In London, one British pound cost $1.7795, cheaper for buyers than Wednesday's $1.7845.

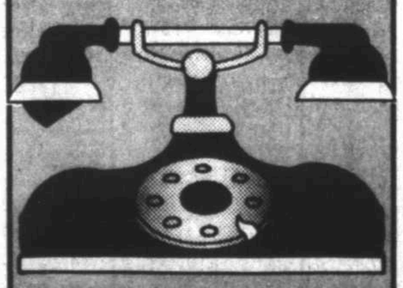

Dollar rates in Europe: 1.6497 German marks; 1.3990 Swiss francs; 5.5357 French francs; 1.8582 Dutch guilders; 1,210.25 Italian lire and 1.1627 Canadian dollars.

Bankruptcy case

DALLAS (AP) — Attorneys for Greyhound Lines Inc. largest bank creditor have asked the bus company's bankruptcy case be moved to Dallas.

In a motion filed with the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Brownsville, attorneys for Security Pacific Business Credit Inc. accuse Dallas-based Greyhound of "forum-shopping" in filing for protection from creditors in Brownsville.

"The filing of these proceedings in Brownsville exemplifies ... the use of the venue statue as a tactical weapon to unfairly disadvantage creditors in this proceeding," the filing said.

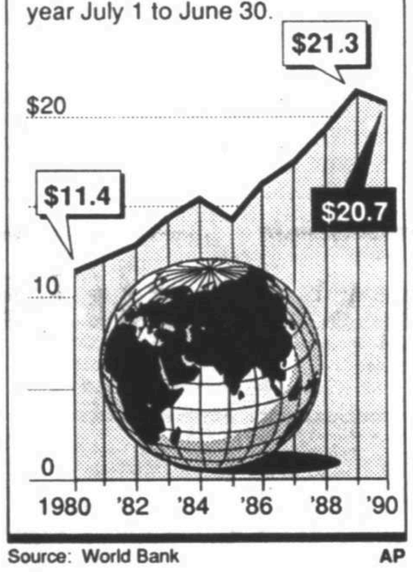

Phone fraud

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A vast telemarketing scheme with nationwide tentacles recruited small companies to launder credit card charges, Visa International and MasterCard International contend in a multimillion-dollar fraud lawsuit.

The suit, unsealed today, says consumers were lured into calling sales "boiler rooms" by mailings promising free cars, watches and $5,000 cash prizes. Pressure tactics were then used to sell water purifiers, security systems, travel packages and vitamins, and to obtain credit card numbers, it says.

World Bank Lending Declines

Yealy loans to Third World countries in billions of dollars. Figures are in the bank's fiscal year July 1 to June 30.

World Bank lending declines

■ Fewer loans to China has resulted in a decline in lending by the World Bank for the first time since 1985.

By Carl Hartman

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lending by the World Bank, the biggest source of aid to the Third World, has declined in the past 12 months for the first time since 1985, the bank reported Thursday. The decrease was due partly to a reduction in loans to China after tanks rolled into Tiananmen Square last year.

Figures for the bank's year, which runs from July 1 to June 30, were made public by Moeen A. Qureshi, a Pakistani who is the bank's senior vice president for operations.

New loans for the year just ended came to $20.7 billion. That was $600 million less than the $21.3 billion of the year before.

Loans to China dropped by more than $700 million falling to $590 million from $1.3 billion in the year before the suppression of the democracy movement.

Just after the Chinese government moved its military forces against demonstrators, Bank President Barber Conable withdrew $780 million worth of loans for China from consideration.

Then President Bush asked the bank to halt lending to China. Later there was international agreement that new loans should be limited to basic human needs.

The past year also brought a large drop in World Bank lending to India, where loans fell to $1.9 billion from $3 billion the year before. But bank officials said that was a coincidence and not the result of policy.

Mexico displaced India as the biggest borrower, taking $2.6 billion compared with $2.2 billion in the previous year.

Lending by the bank had been rising steadily, and is expected to increase again in the next 12 months.

The bank is now playing a much bigger role in what used to be considered the "Second World," European countries that have been under communist rule.

"We have initiated lending to Poland for a total of some $780 million this fiscal year ... and have continued our programs in Hungary," Qureshi said at a news conference last week.

"We are preparing support programs for Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia, both of which are expected to become bank members in the coming year, and are ready to resume our activities in Romania."

The late Communist dictator Nicolae Ceausescu paid off almost all Romania's debts but the country has remained among the bank's 151 member countries.

The Soviet Union has never belonged. Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady spoke recently of creating some tie between the Soviets, the bank and its sister organization, the International Monetary Fund.

Bush son faces hearing on actions as S&L officer

By Dave Skidmore

Neil Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — Savings and loan regulators Thursday released conflict-of-interest charges against President Bush's son, Neil, and ordered him to answer them at a public hearing in September.

The Treasury Department's Office of Thrift Supervision alleged that the younger Bush, as a director Silverado Banking, Savings and Loan Association in Denver, voted to approve loans or business deals totaling more than $100 million with a business partner, Bill L. Walters.

Bush, in a reply, denied he had violated his duty as a director and either denied the specific charges or said he "lacks sufficient present knowledge or information to form a belief as to the allegations."

Both the administrative charges, filed in February, and the reply, filed a month later, were made public Thursday for the first time under a new thrift office policy. The House Banking Committee had obtained and released a preliminary draft of the charges in June.

Auto industry split over gas tax increase

By John Flesher

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Big Three domestic auto makers are divided over the idea of raising the federal gasoline tax to help reduce the budget deficit, unusual in an industry that often puts unity ahead of competition in lobbying Congress.

Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. favor boosting the 9-cents-per-gallon federal levy on gasoline by a nickel a year for three to five years. Every penny increase would raise about $1 billion.

But General Motors Corp., the nation's largest automobile manufacturer, opposes any increase in gasoline taxes.

"We have constantly said and I think Congress has said that the gasoline tax is too regressive, that it hurts the poor people," GM chairman Roger Smith said. He discussed the issue with lawmakers during a visit to Washington last week.

JANE BRYANT QUINN

If you own stock you may be losing money

By Jane Bryant Quinn

Quinn

NEW YORK — If you own stocks, you may be losing money that you don't even know about. That happens when investors don't understand exactly what they've bought or are oblivious to what happens to the companies in which they own shares.

For example, you might have received a tender offer for your stock, and didn't respond. Shareholder Communications Corp. estimates, conservatively, that mergers in the 1980s alone produced $150 million in tender offers that haven't been claimed.

You may also own valuable stock rights or warrants that — unless exercised — will expire worthless.

If you don't pick up this money, someone else might do it for you. That's what happened to some customers of the Pershing Division of the brokerage firm, Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette.

Pershing handles trades and customer accounts for dozens of small brokerage houses around the country. When customers didn't exercise their warrants, stock rights and similar arcana, Pershing did it without their knowledge and pocketed the profits. They also figured out how to profit from tender offers for just part of your stock.

A former Pershing employee blew the whistle on the practice in 1988. Last April, Donaldson, Lufkin agreed to repay its customers $5.6 million plus interest. In 1988, the discount broker Charles Schwab & Co. returned $2.4 million to customers, after similar infractions.

This kind of thing can happen to customers who don't follow their investments closely and who keep their stocks at their brokerage house, registered in the broker's name (known as a "street name"). That makes it possible for the broker to use your shares without your knowledge. Here are some of the money-making offers that you shouldn't let get by:

■ A tender offer. A buyer wants your company and has made an offer for some or all of its shares, at something more than the market price. Sometimes a second buyer makes a higher bid.

Tender offers drive up the price of your shares on the open market, although not necessarily quite as high as the tender price. A quick way to profit is simply to sell your shares.

Tendering shares to the buyer is less certain. The offer might be part cash, part preferred stock and part debt — creating a package of uncertain value. If the deal falls apart, tenderers get their shares back, which might then be selling at a lower price.

With a partial tender, the buyer may take a portion of the shares surrendered by investors, and return the rest. Once a partial tender is complete, the share price typically falls.

That drop in price makes it possible for brokers to play games. They tender customers' shares, pocket the high price, buy the shares back when the price falls, and restore the securities to customer accounts. The customers are none the wiser.

What happens if a buyer tenders for all the shares and you never get around to surrendering yours? If a broker holds the certificates, the money goes to the brokerage house, which should alert you to the offer. If you don't respond within five to seven years, the money goes to the state as unclaimed property. You can get back your money from the state, but no interest is paid.

If you hold your own securities and don't respond to the offer, the company puts a stop-payment on your account after five to seven years and remits the money to the state.

■ Stock rights. When a company issues new shares, it might give first dibs to its current stockholders, charging them less than market price. The piece

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices fell today after the momentum of a week-long advance ran out.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 69.30 points over the five sessions before the July 4 holiday on Wednesday, dropped 28.46 to 2,883.17 by 2 p.m. on Wall Street.

Losers outnumbered gainers by about 3 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 347 up, 1,014 down and 507 unchanged.

Analysts said traders were reluctant to chase after the market's recent rally, given widespread doubts about prospects for corporate earnings in a sluggish economic environment.

Earnings reports for the second quarter of the year are due in large numbers over the next three weeks or so.

A monthly report due from the Labor Department on Friday isn't expected to dispal very many doubts about the business outlook.

If the figures don't show significant new weakness in the job market, analysts say, the Federal Reserve probably won't see any reason to move immediately toward any relaxation of its credit policy.

Interest rates were little changed in the credit markets today.

Losers among the blue chips included Philip Morris, down ¼ at 47¾; Exxon, down ⅜ at 47; General Electric, down ¾ at 70⅜, and American Telephone & Telegraph, down ⅜ at 38¼.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped 2.03 to 194.58. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 2.10 at 358.57.

Volume on the Big Board came to 96.88 million shares with two hours to go.

Norway's offshore strike crumbling

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Some offshore oil workers were returning to work on the fifth day of a strike over wages, and Norwegian petroleum production was up to half the normal level, the national news agency NTB reported Thursday.

Phillips Petroleum Co. of Norway said workers called off their walkout at the Ekofisk fields, a key junction for pipeline deliveries of natural gas to Europe. Production from some other Norwegian North Sea fields is routed through Ekofisk to Britain and West Germany.

"In theory production from all seven Ekofisk area fields can begin on Thursday, within 12 to 16 hours" said Sander Bull-Gjertsen of Phillips. Ekofisk produced 220,000 barrels a day of crude in April.

About 4,000 workers went on strike Sunday when the Norwegian Federation of Oil Workers and the Norwegian Confederation of Business and Industry failed to reach agreement on demands for wage increases and protection of jobs from automation.

The government invoked compulsory arbitration, making the strike illegal, on Monday. Officials said they acted to protect the national economy.

Phillips, meanwhile, dismissed several workers, sent lay-off warnings to 161 people and flew in alternate crews.

About 1,000 oil workers initially defied the government order and appeals from the Norwegian Federation of Oil Workers union to return to work. But the strike gradually lost support during the week.

Workers were reported on the job at fields besides Ekofisk Thursday and the national oil industry association said "there is now a certain hope" of the strike ending at additional fields.

Odessa oil company names new president

ODESSA, TX — Falcon Oil & Gas Company, Inc. announced that at a recent board of directors meeting Spencer M. Murchison of Houston was elected director, president and chief executive officer of the company.

Edward V. Ryan, the founder of the company who was previously the president and chief executive, will continue to actively serve the company and will have the title of chairman and chief administrative officer. The company further disclosed that on June 26, 1990 a partnership controlled by Murchison acquired 92,000 restricted shares of Falcon from Ryan at a price of $4.25 per share.

Murchison, who holds a chemical engineering degree from the University of Texas and an MBA from the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania, has over twenty years experience in the engineering, financial, and executive areas of the exploration and production aspects of the oil and gas business.

During the last five years, he has been the general partner of Murchison Partners Ltd. Murchison Partners, a financial and managerial consulting firm to the energy industry, owns in excess of 19 percent of the outstanding common stock of the company making it the largest single shareholder of Falcon.

Oklahoma City to pay for water reservoir

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahoma City residents will begin helping to pay in October for the $88.6 million McGee Creek Reservoir in Atoka County.

The reservoir, located north of Farris, is expected to provide a nearly unlimited supply of drinking water for years to come. Also, because Oklahoma City's population is below the levels when the project was proposed, the city is trying to sell water to communities in eastern Oklahoma and northern Texas, city officials said.

In 1979, the federal government authorized the reservoir's construction and the city agreed to pay for it. Customer connections were growing at 3 percent a year in 1979, said Bill Ingraham, business manager for Oklahoma City's water and wastewater utilities system.

"We are at 10 percent of the growth rate experienced during the boom," he said. The city's population is now 9.5 percent lower than was estimated 16 years ago, he said.

Besides the water, Glen Russell, superintendent of the McGee Creek Authority, said there's another benefit.

"You'd be hard pressed to find a prettier sight in all of Oklahoma," he said.

The reservoir has tree-covered banks, many inlets and two large arms. At the north end of the lake is an 11,000-acre wildlife management area. An 8,000-acre Natural Scenic Recreation Area surrounds McGee Creek itself.

A 4 percent water bill increase will help pay for the lake. Plans call for the reservoir to be paid off in 30 years through revenue bonds.

BUSH: Faces hearing

(From 1C)

An administrative law judge is scheduled to hear the Bush case Sept. 25 in Denver before making a recommendation to thrift office director Timothy Ryan.

James Nesland, an attorney for the younger Bush, said a public hearing could be exploited for political purposes but expressed confidence that the judge would render a fair opinion.

"I think it's unfortunate if it creates a political sideshow or a media sideshow, but I'm still confident the administrative law judge will decide the case on its merits," he said.

Separately, the thrift office announced it was seeking a record $24 million in restitution and civil penalties from the former chairman of Columbia Savings and Loan Association of Beverly Hills, Calif.

The office alleged that Thomas Spiegel spent millions of the thrift's deposits on limousines, corporate jets, luxury condominiums in resort areas, trips to Europe for himself, $7,000 in tickets to a Michael Jackson concert and a $55,000 gun collection, including Uzi submachine guns.

Spiegel, a close associate of former Drexel Burnham junk bond chief Michael Milken, built Columbia into one of the nation's largest thrifts and the industry's biggest holder of junk bonds, with $3.7 billion at the end of 1989.

Columbia is still operating, but analysts predict it eventually will be seized by the government. Spiegel stepped down in December.

DRILLING: Activity still historically depressed perspective. As recently as 1985, the Baker-Hughes rig count averaged 1,980 for the year. Depressed activity levels will continue to accelerate the nation's dependence on imported crude and petroleum products, PI said. Total imports in May amounted to about 52 percent of domestic needs.

PI added that it expected imports to continue to increase as operators respond to first-half 1990 price declines. In January, West Texas Intermediate Crude averaged $22.60 per barrel. The average was only $16.87 per barrel. Prices for natural gas on the spot market averaged $1.85 per thousand cubic feet in January. Last month the average was $1.35 per thousand cubic feet. In June, 1989, the average was $1.52 per Mcf.

Drilling moratoria on the Outer Continental Shelf recently announced by the Bush Administration will further depress domestic activity, as will enactment of additional taxes, such as a hydrocarbon tax, a gasoline tax or other taxes now under consideration.

SPLIT: Makers disagree over impact on car sales

(From 1C)

Chrysler chairman Lee Iaccoca is an outspoken supporter of higher gas taxes, which he says would encourage people to drive more fuel-efficient cars. In the 1980s, Chrysler's marketing strategy emphasized more fuel-efficient vehicles.

But Iaccoca said the higher taxes would boost conservation, lower the nation's trade deficit and help counter global warming by curbing emissions.

"Consumers must demand more fuel-efficient vehicles, and today they have no reason to do that," Iaccoca said. The cost of driving has been cut in half since the 1960s when adjusted for inflation and improved fuel efficiency, he said.

Ford would accept a gradual increase in the gasoline tax as part of a package of consumption taxes, company spokesman Mark Miller said. "But we believe it should go toward reducing the deficit and not toward increasing government spending," he said.

The gasoline tax frequently is mentioned as a potential source of new revenue as the White House and congressional leaders negotiate a deficit-reduction plan.

President Bush has indicated a willingness to abandon his no-new-taxes pledge. Senate Republican leader Bob Dole said this week he expects Bush to reject income tax increases in favor of other sources.

At the heart of the Big Three domestic auto makers' disagreement is how a gas tax increase would affect auto sales.

GM contends many people would delay new-car purchases. The company has predicted that a 15-cents-per-gallon increase would reduce sales by 500,000 and eliminate 120,000 jobs.

"I don't think the country wants to see lower car sales," Smith of GM said.

Chrysler agrees that a higher tax might hurt sales, "but not significantly," spokesman John Guiniven said. "We also feel that reducing the budget deficit would reduce interest rates and that could spur car sales and the entire economy."

QUINN: Lack of attention can cost stock investors of paper that stockholders get, giving them this cut-rate deal, is called a "right." If you don't exercise your rights to the cheap shares within a specified period of time, you lose them.

■ Warrants. When you buy certain speculative securities, like new issues, they might come with "warrants," which give you the right to buy more shares at a specified, higher price. If the market moves above that price, your warrants become especially valuable. But if you don't sell them, or use them to claim the stock, they may expire worthless.

If you're not prepared to follow your investments closely enough to keep track of these offers, do yourself a favor and buy mutual funds, instead.

Correction: My June 28 column, on checking up on your stockbroker, contained an incorrect telephone number for the North American Securities Administrators Association. INVESTORS' GUIDE

Avoid 12b-1 fees and front-end commissions

By Bill Doyle

Q. On the advice of a broker, I transferred my individual retirement account from a matured certificate of deposit to a mutual fund. This fund has a 4.75 percent front-end commission charge and a 12b-1 fee. Will these charges cut deeply into my investment returns?

Doyle

A. Of course they will. The front commission, better known as a "load," has already done its damage to the value of your investment. The 12b-1 fee will keep eating away at what you have as long as you own shares of that fund.

We'll take the two charges, one at a time.

The front load comes right off the top when you invest in a fund which has such a charge. Let's say you moved $10,000 into that mutual fund. The 4.75 percent commission amounted to $475, which went to the broker and his firm. That left $9,525 for you to invest in shares of the mutual fund.

You're behind the eight ball by $475 right off the bat. And the $9,525 of mutual fund shares you bought earn less dividend income than $10,000 of shares would have produced.

Unlike the front load, which is a one-time charge, the 12b-1 fee is a continuous thing. It is a charge levied on total fund assets for "distribution" — the cost of getting fund shares into investors' hands. In effect, it is another sales charge.

The maximum 12b-1 fee allowed is 1.25 percent. Let's say your fund has that maximum fee and collects enough dividends and interest from securities it holds as investments to pay dividends to fund shares equal to 6 percent of the fund's share value. The 1.25 percent 12b-1 fee will reduce your dividend yield to 4.75 percent. That's a 25 percent cut — the difference between 6 and 4.75 — in dividend yield.

It must be stressed that, although more than 1,600 mutual funds have 12b-1 fees, many others do not. There are still plenty of true no-load funds, without 12b-1 fees, front loads or rear-end loads in the form of a contingent deferred sales charge or redemption fees.

Q. I fail to see why you pick on mutual funds with 12b-1 charges. Isn't a company justified in using some of its own money to distribute its products?

A. The answer to your query is a loud YES. But that is not what happens with 12b-1 plans.

When a mutual fund has a 12b-1 plan, its management company, which has a contract to handle the fund's operations, dips into the fund's assets to promote sales of fund shares. The management company isn't using its own money. It's using fund shareholders' money. Fund assets belong to fund shareholders — not to management.

An increase in share sales through the use of 12b-1 money makes a fund bigger. That benefits management because the fund pays a separate charge, known as a "management" or "investment advisory" fee to the management company. The bigger the fund, the larger that fee and the greater the management company's profits.

But 12b-1 fees do not benefit mutual fund shareholders. A strong argument can be made that, on average, smaller mutual funds turn in better investment performances than larger mutual funds.

And I have to take issue with your statement that I "pick on" 12b-1 plan funds: I simply spell out the facts; just the facts, Ma'am.

Q. I am 47 and preparing for retirement at 62 by putting my IRA money into a mutual fund. It doesn't take long to figure out I could do better with a no-load fund. Where do I find such a fund?

A. Start by opening your newspaper to the listing of mutual fund share prices. You'll find plenty of funds with "NL," for no-load, in the "Offer" column. But ignore those with the following letters after their names: "p," for 12b-1 fee; "r," for redemption charge, and "t," for both of those charges.

Then go to the reference section of a big public library, where you will find manuals containing mutual fund addresses, investment objectives and past investment results.

Garrison stuns Wimbledon

■ Zina Garrison's fantasy tennis trip continues at Wimbledon after a key semifinal upset of Steffi Graf.

Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Zina Garrison didn't have a prayer against Monica Seles. Not a shot in the world of stopping Steffi Graf. Beat Martina Navratilova in Wimbledon's final? Get real.

Maybe it's time for the surreal after Garrison's daring, acrobatic attack on Graf, Wimbledon's two-time champ, in a 6-3, 3-6, 6-4 semifinal victory Thursday, two days after zapping Seles, the grunt and grind teen machine, in three sets.

Garrison is on a fantasy trip that not even Navratilova, looking remarkably rejuvenated in a 6-3, 6-4 semifinal romp over Gabriela Sabatini, may be able to derail.

So what if Navratilova is salivating over the thought of gobbling up a record ninth Wimbledon singles title. So what if Garrison has won only one match in 28 against Navratilova over the past eight years.

If Garrison can beat Graf — winner of 19 straight Wimbledon matches, a champion in nine of the last 11 Grand Slams and a finalist in 13 straight — anything can happen on Saturday when she plays her first Grand Slam final, an all-American match, against Navratilova. The sun may even shine.

So far it's been mostly upset weather at Wimbledon, when the wind howls across Centre Court and dark clouds hover portentously after morning rain. Maybe Princess Diana knew something was up when she came for her first match this year and was treated to Garrison-Graf.

Garrison, who once couldn't find a way to win even at match point, now can't seem to lose. She always had the talent, but too often yielded to pressure. Now with a new coach, a new trainer, a new husband, and a new relaxed attitude, Garrison, at 26, finally has made the leap into the elite.

"She didn't miss and she didn't make mistakes, like she's done before," Graf said. "I mean, she was really playing a solid match. From her side, it was great concentration."

Graf didn't blame her loss on her sinus problems, her father's problems, her injuries, the weather, or the officials.

"It was me who was playing bad, and nothing else," she said. "Is it a tragedy? A disaster?" No, she added, it was just a loss.

Navratilova and Ivan Lendl's obsession to win Wimbledon made headlines, but Garrison had been going unnoticed until she beat Seles.

"I've had a bit of obsession about this myself," Garrison said. "I just worked on a lot of sprints, a lot of running, eight, nine miles a day, lifted weights, trying to get into top shape and be ready if I have an opportunity to do it."

Graf predicted the tournament was now Navratilova's because "Zina doesn't have the game to beat Martina."

Garrison's response: "Oh, thanks. I like those compliments. They make me work harder."

Navratilova, 33 and seeing another Wimbledon as the crowning achievement of her career, took a cautious tone.

"Obviously my record is overwhelming," she said. "She has (beaten me) before, and this is the surface that she would be most likely to do it again. She has beaten Steffi, so she can certainly beat me."

Garrison, whose legs may be the strongest among the women, played aggressively against Graf, attacking the net more often than the 21-year-old West German. Graf finished with 16 unforced errors on her forehand.

"The main thing was, I wasn't afraid of her power," said Garrison. "A lot of people are afraid of her power when she hits the forehand."

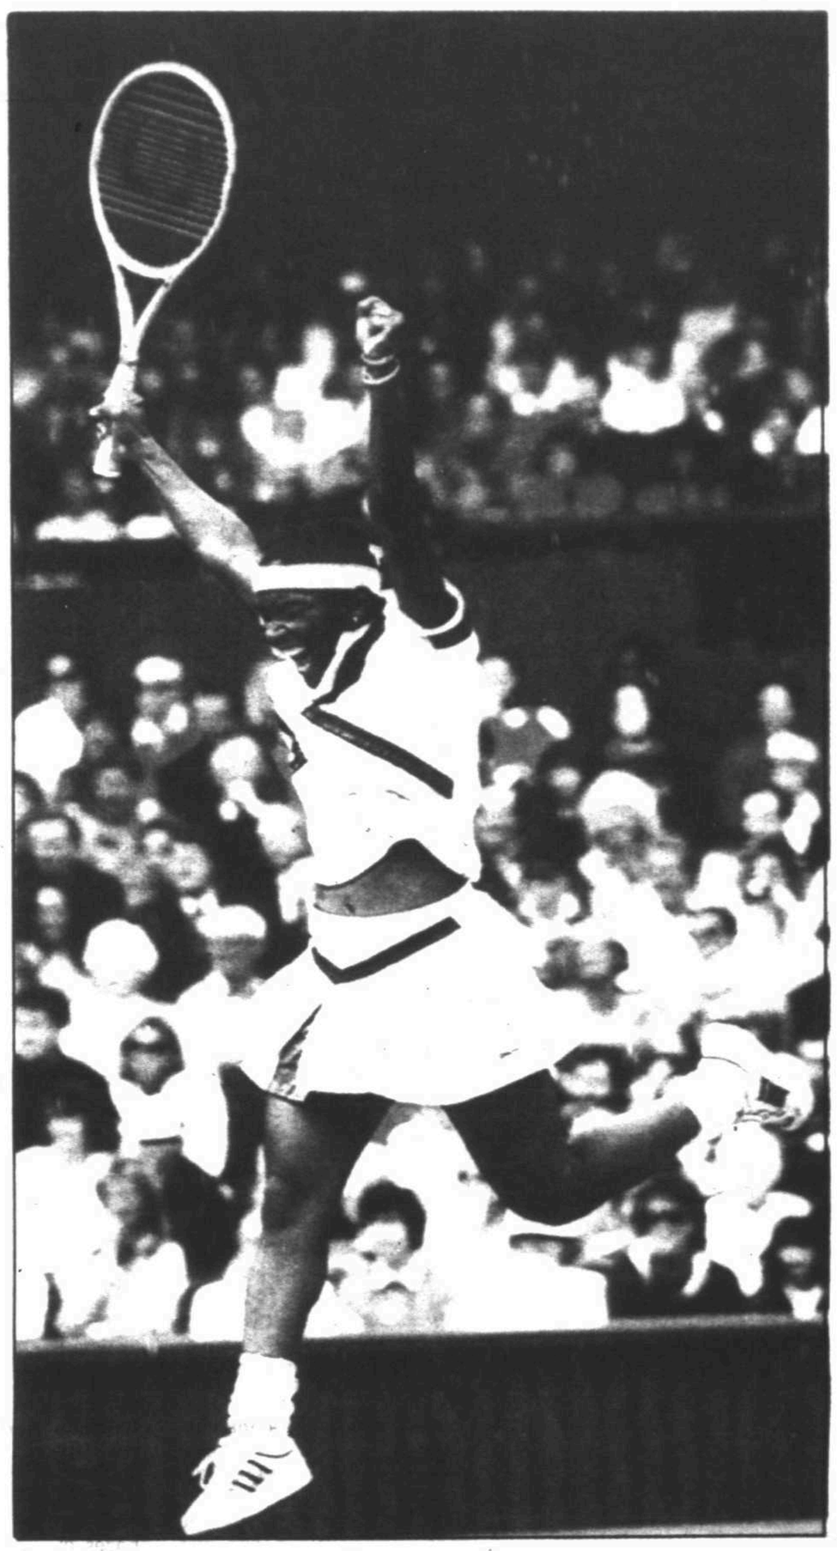

Graf came out blitzing on her service, but even three aces in the third game couldn't help her from suffering a break after two deuces as Garrison grabbed a 2-1 lead.

Garrison watched another ace go by her in the fifth game, but that was the only point Graf got as Garrison broke her again and shot ahead 4-1.

"She was going for the right shots, she was doing the right things, and she knew where I was going to hit the ball, so she played a tactically great match," Graf said.

Graf broke back, but Garrison kept up her net attack and put away two more volleys before holding when Graf mis-hit a forehand into the stands.

Graf's usually nerveless demeanor looked shattered in the final game of the set. Garrison, cheating in about five feet in front of the baseline on Graf's second serves, fought back from 40-15 to win four straight points.

Bowls hold wary eye on realignments

■ The major college football conference system is bracing for a face lift and ramifications could send bowls searching for realignments.

By Tom D'Angelo
NY Times News Service

Let's see. Miami and Florida State are headed for the SEC ... or is it the super-expanded version of the Metro Conference ... or maybe even the newly proposed Eastern Seaboard Conference.

Arkansas wants out of the Southwest Conference. Texas and Texas A&M could follow. The devastated SWC then would merge with the Big Eight. What about the ACC? A natural for South Carolina. Then there's the Big Ten (or is it Big Eleven) and the Pac-10, and ...

From all indications, the major college conference system is bracing for a face lift. The ramifications could spread throughout the industry and beyond.

One group keeping a cautious eye on the situation is the bowls. Depending on the realignment, the bowls could be diminished or in some cases, flourish.

"I think there is a concern on the part of the bowls that should some of the super structures form, you then have a scenario that is more conducive for a playoff," said Ken Haines, who headed the Raycom Sports study into Metro Conference expansion. "You'll see the bowls very aggressively looking at where these alignments are going."

The reaction of bowl officials range from denial, to concern, to the admission that restructuring is surely going to impact the 19 postseason games currently sanctioned by the NCAA.

Jim "Hoss" Brock, executive vice president of the Mobil Cotton Bowl and considered one of the most charismatic bowl representatives, isn't sure realignment is in the future. "We've only had one institution make a jump (Penn State to the Big Ten)," he said. "I don't know why everybody is getting so jumpy."

Mickey Holmes, executive director of the USF&G Sugar Bowl, also isn't convinced. "The only thing I know is what I read in the papers, and I don't become concerned about things when I read them in the papers," Holmes said.

Others are more realistic about the changing face of college athletics. The Federal Express Orange Bowl is carefully monitoring the situation. The Orange Bowl could be in for a showdown with the Cotton Bowl if the Southwest and Big Eight conferences merge. The Orange Bowl, which pairs the Big Eight winner against an at-large team, feels it would be the host bowl if the Southwest

Nolan Ryan's celebrity goes unnoticed in Alvin

■ Nolan Ryan is the toast of baseball, but in Alvin, his hometown, Nolan is just, well...Nolan.

ALVIN (AP) — You won't find any buildings named for this small town's hero. There are no billboards touting his celebrity, few bumper stickers, and there's never been a parade in his honor. The four-block street named after him doesn't even have any street signs.

Nolan Ryan, and Alvin, Texas, wouldn't have it any other way.

Ryan, the unassuming, aw shucks Texas country boy who, at age 43, throws no-hitters through back pain and holds baseball's all-time strike out record, goes into the All-Star break just four wins short of the 300-victory milestone.

He grew up in and still lives in Alvin, an unassuming, aw shucks kind of country town which now finds itself caught between its frontier past and the urban sprawl of Houston, 20 miles away.

If a town can reflect a man's personality, or perhaps more accurately a man can reflect a town's personality, then Alvin, Texas, population close to 20,000, and Nolan Ryan are very much alike.

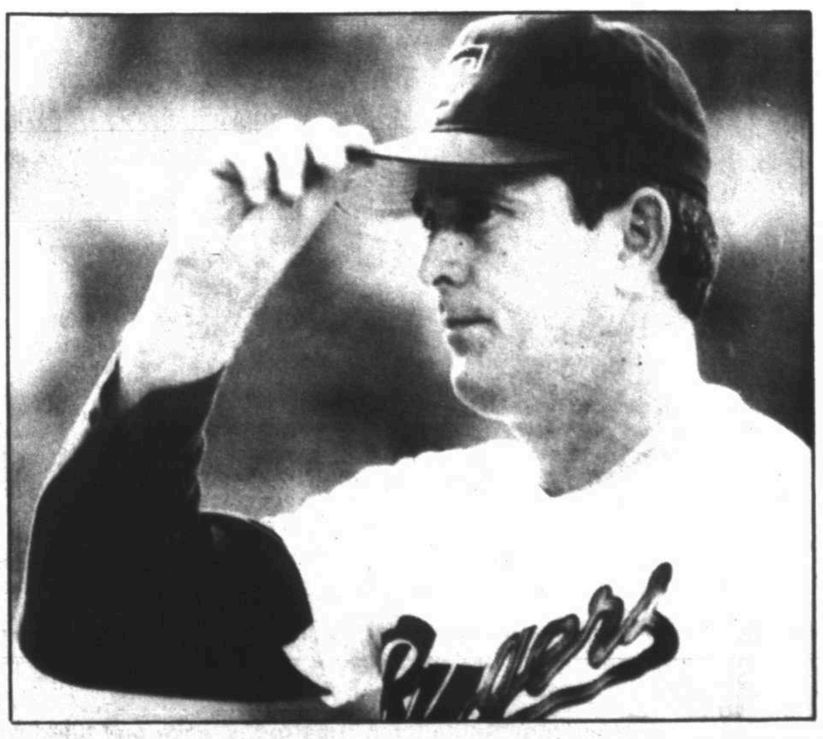

It's a town where the churches outnumber the lawyers in the Yellow Pages, 24-21. In gosh-golly Alvin, City Hall is one of the few two-story structures, many of the downtown stores are boarded up and the Wal-Mart out on the highway bypass thrives.

And Alvin's a town where the people, and the businesses, seem to always be on a first-name basis.

There's Ken's Auto Repair, Clem's Paint and Body, Jerry's Appliances, Scotty's Florist, Jodie's Hair Center, Robert's Cafe, Ted's Phillips 66, Barbara's Hair Masters, Frank's Furniture and Jim's Jewelry.

At Joe's Bar-B-Q, run by Ryan's high school chum Joe Saladino, you won't find a Nolan Ryan Over-The-Plate Special on the menu, because to folks

Nolan Ryan is big news in the world of professional baseball, but he's still just Nolan Ryan in Alvin, Texas. A four-block street named after him doesn't even have any street signs and neighbors just ask about his cows.

Baylor guides Brewers' win

Associated Press

Don Baylor didn't have time to get nervous when he suddenly became interim manager of the Milwaukee Brewers.

Tom Trebelhorn, normally in the dugout at game time, was suspended Thursday for five games for his role in a brawl in Seattle last weekend. When he decided not to appeal, Baylor, the Brewers' batting coach, was named to replace him.

Baylor was glad for a chance, but even happier for a victory.

"It's a big deal, there is no doubt about it," Baylor said after Milwaukee beat the Oakland Athletics 4-3. "We have to win games. That was Treb's parting words to me, 'Just win a game,' which we did," said Baylor.

The Brewers, who also have three players appealing suspensions after the incident last Saturday, have responded well to the controversy. Gary Sheffield, one of the suspended Brewers, homered.

Milwaukee, which had lost eight of nine, has now won two straight from Oakland. The victory ended Bob Welch's 10-game winning streak; on Wednesday the Brewers thrashed Dave Stewart in his first start since pitching a no-hitter.

Dan Plesac struck out the only batter he faced to earn his 14th save.

The Athletics scored all their runs in the sixth on three errors.

Rangers 3, Orioles 2

Rafael Palmeiro's solo homer in the sixth inning snapped a 1-1 tie and Mike Jeffcoat pitched a seven-hitter over 8⅓ innings as Texas beat Baltimore.

Baltimore's Cal Ripken established a major league record for consecutive errorless chances by a shortstop when he handled Jeff Huson's grounder leading off the Texas first. That gave Ripken 332 chances without an error, breaking the mark set by Detroit's Eddie Brinkman in 1972.

The crowd of 27,151 put the Rangers over the 1 million mark on the second earliest date in club history.

Palmeiro, who wasn't included on the American League All-Star team announced earlier Thursday, lined a 1-1 pitch from Bob Milacki (4-5) for his eighth home run.

Texas added the decisive run in the seventh when Julio Franco, the only Ranger on the All-Star team, hit an RBI single for a 3-1 lead, chasing Milacki, who gave up three runs and eight hits in 6⅔ innings.

Jeffcoat (3-3) didn't walk anyone and retired 13 consecutive batters from the third through the seventh. He was relieved by Kenny Rogers after Ripken's one-out double in the ninth.

Twins 7, Red Sox 4

Shane Mack and Fred Manrique hit consecutive, run-scoring doubles in the seventh inning to give reliever Tim Drummond his first major-league victory and lift Minnesota over Boston.

Drummond (1-3) relieved starter Scott Erickson to start the sixth. He gave up three hits but struck out three and walked none in 2⅓ scoreless innings. Rick Aguilera got two outs for his 20th save.

Rob Murphy (0-5) took the loss as the Twins beat the Red Sox for the seventh time in nine games this season.

Blue Jays 9, Angels 2

Dave Stieb, knocked out early in his two previous starts, gave up two hits in seven scoreless innings and struck out a season-high nine batters as Toronto defeated California.

AL Roundup

Stieb (11-3), who earlier in the day was selected to the American League All-Star team for a record-tying seventh time for pitchers, gave up a pair of doubles and walked two after lasting a total of 18 batters in his previous two outings.

He left after 1⅓ innings trailing 6-0 against Oakland last Saturday and failed to retire any of the seven batters he faced against Boston on June 25. He was charged with six runs in each game.

It marked the first time in Stieb's 12-year career that he has won 11 games before the All-Star break. The Blue Jays pulled within 2½ games of the first-place Boston Red Sox in the American League East.

Mariners 4, Indians 1

Omar Vizquel singled and hit his second major league home run in his first two at-bats of the season and Erik Hanson pitched a three-hitter over eight innings as Seattle beat Cleveland.

Vizquel, called up earlier Thursday from Class AAA Calgary, gained revenge for a sprained left knee sustained in a spring training game against Cleveland. He spent the first month of the season on the disabled list before being sent to Calgary.

He singled off Tom Candiotti (9-4) in the third inning following Tracy Jones' single and Dave Valle's forcing grounder. Valle scored the first run of the game on a single by Harold Reynolds, who has been on base in 24 straight games.

Royals 15, Tigers 3

Bo Jackson and George Brett each homered and drove in four runs as Kansas City hammered Detroit for its fourth consecutive victory.

The Royals, who have hit doubles in 11 consecutive games and 17 of their last 18, had four against the Tigers to make a winner of last-minute starter Luis Aquino (3-0). Kansas City's 16 hits also included two triples and the two homers.

Expos riddle Astros' Scott, 11-0

Associated Press

Rookie Mark Gardner pitched a four-hitter as the Montreal Expos beat the Houston Astros 11-0 Thursday night, handing Mike Scott his first Olympic Stadium loss in over eight years.

Gardner (5-4), struck out a career-high 11 batters and walked four to record his second shutout and second complete game. Scott (6-8) had not lost in Montreal since April 25, 1982 when he was a New York Met, winning seven straight decisions in 10 starts.

After going 5-2 with a 2.47 ERA in his previous eight starts, Scott didn't survive the fourth inning and left the game trailing 8-0, having allowed seven earned runs on seven hits, walking six and striking out three in 3⅔ innings.

Dave Martinez broke a scoreless tie with a two-run homer in the third, when the Expos scored five times.

After Montreal loaded the bases on Junior Noboa's double, an intentional walk to Larry Walker and Tim Wallach's single, Scott walked Mike Aldrete to force Noboa home with the third Montreal run. Andres Galarraga then hit a two-run single.

The Expos added three more in the fourth on RBI-singles by Noboa and Wallach and an error by left fielder Craig Biggio, who let Wallach's base hit get by him, permitting Walker to score from first after a walk.

NL Roundup

Mets 9, Braves 8

Darryl Strawberry capped a five-run seventh inning with a three-run homer that led long-ball New York over Atlanta, its 22nd win in 25 games.

Strawberry's home run, his 21st, was the fourth of five the Mets hit in the game. The five home runs are the most the Mets have hit in a game since April 4, 1988.

Mark Carreon hit his ninth home run in the second inning and Dave Magadan his third in the third inning before Orlando Mercado hit his third leading off the seventh, all against Atlanta starter Charlie Leibrandt.

The Mets' attack overshadowed a great night by Atlanta's Ron Gant, who knocked in six runs and had four hits, including his 16th and 17th homers of the year.

Reds 9, Phillies 2

Jack Armstrong pitched seven strong innings for his third straight victory and 11th of the season as Cincinnati beat Philadelphia.

Armstrong, selected Thursday for the NL All-Star team, got offensive support from Hal Morris, who had three hits, including his first major league home run, and three RBI. Barry Larkin also hit a home run and single, while Paul O'Neill contributed two hits and a pair of RBI for the Reds.

The only run off Armstrong (11-3), was Carmelo Martinez' home run leading off the second inning. He gave up five hits, struck out five and walked one before Rob Dibble and Norm Charlton finished up.

Ken Howell (8-6), whose start was pushed back two days beause of pain under the right arm, took the loss, lasting two innings.

Cardinals 4, Padres 1

Tom Pagnozzi's tie-breaking double sparked a three-run ninth inning as St. Louis beat San Diego, sending the Padres to their eighth loss in nine games.

Greg Harris (4-3), pitching his fifth consecutive game, gave up a leadoff single to Jose Oquendo in the ninth before Pagnozzi doubled to left.

Pagnozzi then advanced on a groundout and scored on Ozzie Smith's squeeze bunt for a 3-1 lead.

Managers fill out All-Star teams

NEW YORK (AP) — Cecil Fielder, Matt Williams and Bobby Thigpen led a list of 16 first-time All-Stars picked Thursday as managers Tony La Russa and Roger Craig filled out their rosters with pitchers and reserves.

Seven of the National League's 10 pitchers, including 35-year-old Dennis Martinez and 22-year-old Ramon Martinez, were selected for the first time. Relievers Gregg Olson and Thigpen and no-hit man Randy Johnson are new to the American League staff for Tuesday night's game at Wrigley Field in Chicago.

They join three other first-timers who were elected by the fans to start — outfielders Ken Griffey Jr. of Seattle and Lenny Dykstra of Philadelphia and Cleveland rookie catcher Sandy Alomar Jr. Alomar's brother, second baseman Roberto Alomar of San Diego, was selected as an NL reserve.

Mike Boddicker, 11-3 with a 10-game winning streak, and Nolan Ryan were among those left off the AL team. Both are scheduled to pitch Saturday.

"I'm a little disappointed," Boddicker said. "But it's not going to crush me. I told you guys last week that I was going to go fishing."

Boston manager Joe Morgan was more upset that Boddicker was not picked.

"That's unbelievable," Morgan said. "There's something wrong there. That's terrible."

That's easy for him to say, La Russa retorted.

"Oh yeah. Anyone can take the top 20 pitchers in the league and figure out which ones were left out," he said. "It's tough to narrow it down. I'm not going to name names."

Oakland, the top team in the AL, and Cincinnati, the best in the NL, each have the most players with five. Outfielders Jose Canseco and Rickey Henderson and first baseman Mark McGwire of the Athletics were elected to start and La Russa named pitchers Bob Welch and Dennis Eckersley from his own team.

Cincinnati third baseman Chris Sabo was elected to start. He will be joined by Reds pitchers Jack Armstrong, Rob Dibble and Randy Myers — each named for the first time — and shortstop Barry Larkin.

Fielder, leading the majors with 27 home runs and 70 RBIs, and Detroit teammate Alan Trammell were added in the infield, as were Kelly Gruber of Toronto, Julio Franco of Texas and Ozzie Guillen of the White Sox. Also named were California catcher Lance Parrish for the eighth time, and outfielders George Bell of Toronto, Ellis Burks of Boston, Dave Parker of Milwaukee and Kirby Puckett of Minnesota, a five-time selection.

"It's an honor and a thrill, but my telephone's going to be ringing off the hook for tickets," said Puckett, a Chicago native. "Tickets are pretty scarce this year, since it's at Wrigley Field, so I'm going to have some family, friends and so-called friends mad at me."

The AL pitching staff also includes Roger Clemens of Boston, Chuck Finley of California, Doug Jones of Cleveland, Bret Saberhagen of Kansas City and Dave Stieb of Toronto. Saberhagen has a 5-7 record with a 2.98 ERA and was the only Royals player picked.

Welch and Burks each were injured in games Thursday. Burks strained his left hamstring and Welch strained his right hip.

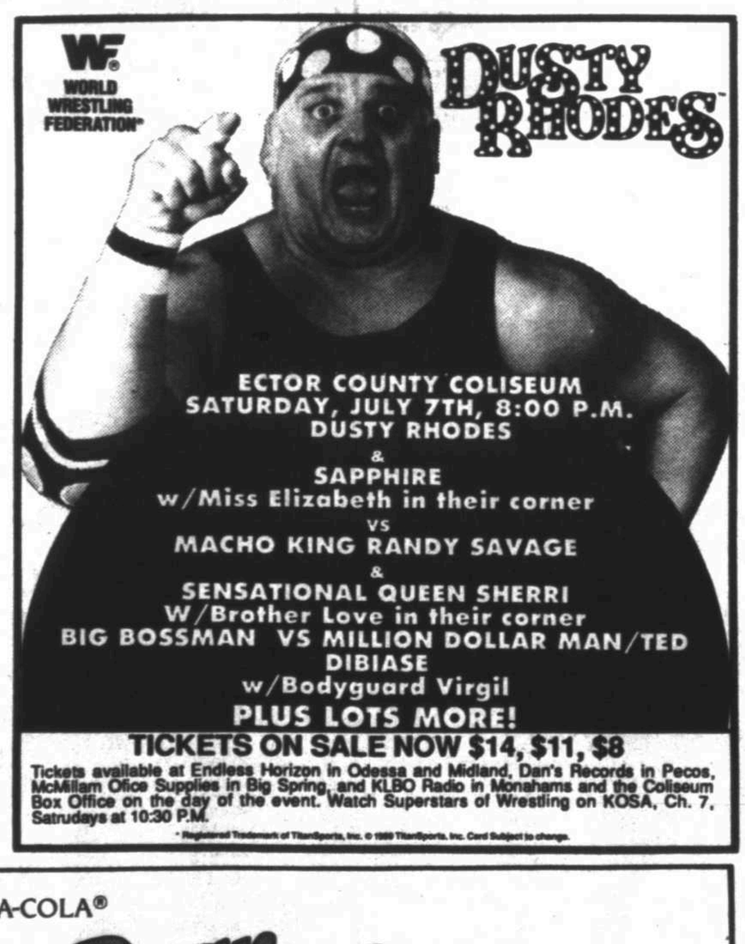

"If it feels as bad as it does now, I probably won't play on Tuesday," said Burks, another first-timer. "I won't jeopardize the second half of the season for it."

Williams, leading the NL with 66 RBIs, will back up Sabo at third base. Pitcher Jeff Brantley is another first-time All-Star from San Francisco.

Rookie Greg Olson of Atlanta and Mike Scioscia of Los Angeles were named catchers, with Scioscia likely to start in place of Benito Santiago, who was elected but is injured.

Craig, the Giants manager, named infielders Shawon Dunston of Chicago and Tim Wallach of Montreal, outfielders Barry Bonds and Bobby Bonilla of Pittsburgh, Tony Gwynn of San Diego and Darryl Strawberry of the New York Mets.

The pitchers include Frank Viola and John Franco of the Mets, Neal Heaton of Pittsburgh and Dave Smith of Houston.

Beckenbauer confident of World Cup title

ROME (AP) — How confident is Franz Beckenbauer? So much so that he's predicting his term as coach of West Germany's national team will end in a World Cup title.

Like his counterpart in Sunday's final, Argentina's Carlos Bilardo, Beckenbauer has led his team to a second appearance in the championship game in as many tries. In 1986, Argentina won 2-1.

This time, Beckenbauer is certain it will be different.

"We are now prepared to face Argentina and to try to avenge the 1986 defeat," he said. "Argentina did not improve since then, while West Germany is much stronger. We are very confident this time."

The Germans are in a World Cup-record third successive final.

"Italy was the best team in Spain and Argentina was the strongest in Mexico," Beckenbauer said of the last two finals. "This time we want to show we are the best. We want the title and we shall get it."

So, of course, does Argentina, which can equal two achievements of its South American rival, Brazil. It can win for the third time in four tournaments — Argentina also took the title in 1978 — and can become the only other non-European team to win the championship on European soil. Brazil did it in Sweden in 1958.

"This is my last World Cup and I want to bid farewell in style," said Argentine captain Diego Maradona, who has played 75 international games for Argentina, scoring 32 goals, including five in Mexico.

But he has none here and knows he needs to come alive on Sunday.

RYAN: Still hometown boy

(From 1D)

in Alvin, Nolan's just a neighbor.

"I thought about putting him on the menu, but it just wouldn't seem right," Saladino said. "When he comes in here, he's just like another person. He'll sit at this table and we'll say, 'Howya doing? How's your cows?'"

"Making a big deal out of him might spoil that."

Elsewhere, everyone's making a big deal of Nolan Ryan now. Fans mob him at Arlington Stadium and on the road. President Bush calls him up for golf dates. He ducks in and out of hotel back doors. Collectors say his autograph, baseball cards and other memorabilia have soared in value the last two years. Texas Republicans want him to run for office.

To Ryan, not being a big deal in Alvin is one of the attractions of staying in his hometown. When he's home, he works his ranch and frequents his children's athletic contests, sitting in the bleachers without being hounded for autographs.

"It's the town I grew up in. I'm very comfortable there. It's certainly not the most attractive place to live but I'm comfortable there," said Ryan, 7-4 for the Texas Rangers this year.

"It's flat prairie-land. There's nothing pretty about it. When people see it they wonder why I stayed there. But it's home. That's the best way to explain it," he said.

For years Alvin has resisted pressure from Ryan's teams and fans for celebrations honoring accomplishments, such as this season's record sixth no-hitter or last season's 5,000 strike-out mark.

But now there is talk of a Nolan Ryan Day, and there are committees studying a Nolan Ryan Museum, which in typical unassuming, low-key fashion may be combined with a community center, police station and jail.

"We're trying to come up with something to recognize him," said one of Ryan best hometown friends, Carl Gerjes, a director of the Nolan Ryan Historical Foundation.

"It's not that we don't love and respect the guy, we do. We just want to do it where everyone feels comfortable, most importantly Nolan," Gerjes said.

"If we have a day to honor him it's got to be hot dogs, soft drinks and Blue Bell ice cream in Alvin, Texas," Gerjes said. "Who's going to pay $1,000-a-plate for a dinner here?"

Gerjes has even made a trip to Cooperstown, N.Y., not to stake out Ryan's certain place in baseball's Hall of Fame, but to gather ideas for a museum.

"We don't have a Nolan Ryan statue. We don't have a billboard that says this is Nolan Ryan's home. I don't think he likes a lot of fanfare and undue attention, and everyone here knows that and respects that," said city attorney J. Kay Gayle.

Besides, Alvin is an unassuming kind of town that would be just as uncomfortable with a lot of splash as Ryan.

"People like for it to be a fairly provincial, small-town atmosphere here," she said. "There's no push to become a Houston suburb, or one of those master-planned communities."

Missions get Angels in shootout

Staff Report

SAN ANTONIO — San Antonio starting pitcher Jessie James gunned down Midland batters Thursday night as the Missions beat the Angels, 5-1. Midland was held to just four hits and for the second straight night were limited to just one run by Mission pitchers.

How serious was James? He retired the last 11 batters in a row, struck out four of the last five Midland hitters in the complete game victory and allowed only one Angel runner past first base in the final seven innings. With the win, James moved his season mark to 8-3.

The Angels' only run was hardly of the exciting variety. In the second inning, Howard Nichols, after reaching on an error, scored on a sacrifice fly to right field by Reed Peters.

The Missions opened up a 2-0 lead in the first when Henry Rodriguez singled to right to score Tom Goodwin; an Eric Karros double later scored Luis Martinez.

Karros struck again in the fifth, doubling in Martinez and Rodriguez. Karros finished the night with four RBIs and three hits, including two doubles.

Karros second double came in the eighth when the Missions' first baseman lined the ball in the left centerfield gap to drive in Rodriguez.

Martinez and Rodriguez both struck for three hits for San Antonio.

The Angels fall to 5-10 and remain in last place, six games out behind the first place Missions. San Antonio improved its record to 11-4 and pulled four games ahead of first-half winner El Paso, currently the Western Division's second place team.

In other action, Jackson shut out Tulsa 2-0 and Wichita defeated El Paso 8-7. Arkansas' game at Shreveport was postponed due to rain.

Greg Norman, PGA's leading money winner, is in the hunt for the Busch Golf Classic title after a 66 Thursday.

Baseball delivers mass suspensions, fines

NEW YORK (AP) — In one of the biggest mass suspensions in baseball history, eight players — four each from Milwaukee and Seattle — and Brewers manager Tom Trebelhorn were benched Thursday by American League president Bobby Brown for last week's brawl at the Kingdome.

Spokeswomen for the American and National leagues said their research showed no larger suspensions. Five players and both managers were suspended following a prolonged fight between Atlanta and San Diego in 1984.

Trebelhorn and Milwaukee pitcher Bob Sebra each received five-game suspensions. Brewers coach Don Baylor filled in for Trebelhorn during Thursday's 4-3 victory over Oakland.

Gary Sheffield, Mike Felder and B.J. Surhoff of the Brewers each were suspended for three games and fined $300. Seattle's Tracy Jones, Gene Harris, Randy Johnson and Jeff Shaefer all received three-game suspensions.

Every player except Sebra, who was sent to the minors Wednesday, has filed an intent to appeal and is eligible to play until a hearing.

Sebra's suspension would take effect if he returns to the major leagues.

The New York Yankees were ordered Thursday to pay $200,000 to California and fined $25,000 by Commissioner Fay Vincent, who ruled owner George Steinbrenner tampered with Dave Winfield after he was traded to the Angels.

The decision was released while Vincent was conducting a hearing with the Yankees owner concerning baseball's investigation of Steinbrenner's relationship with gambler Howard Spira.

The Yankees traded Winfield to the Angels on May 11 for Mike Witt and Winfield challenged the deal. Steinbrenner met with Winfield three days later and said the All-Star still had a place on the Yankees, but the trade was soon completed when Winfield accepted a three-year, $9 million contract extension from the Angels.

O'Meara cards 7-under

Busch Classic

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Mark O'Meara beat the heat and his mid-season blues with a 7-under-par 64, and shared the first-round lead with late-finishing Greg Hickman after Thursday's opening round of the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

"I certainly can't say that my confidence was riding very high when I teed off today," said O'Meara, who missed the cut in two of his last three events and tied for 66th in the other.

O'Meara had nine birdies and two bogeys on Kingsmill Golf Club's steamy layout along the James River. Then Hickman, a rookie playing in the next-to-last group, put together seven birdies, two bogeys and an eagle for a 64.

Their closest pursuers were Lanny Wadkins and Brian Claar, both with 65s.

Greg Norman, who leads the 1990 money list with $832,709, opened with a 5-under 66 and was joined at that figure by Larry Mize, Larry Rinker, Donnie Hammond, Russ Cochran and Jim Gallagher Jr.

A large group at 67 included Curtis Strange, who lives at Kingsmill, and Hal Sutton, whose round included a hole-in-one on the 177-yard 17th hole.

On a humid day when the temperature rose well into the 90s and there was virtually no [illegible] many of the golfers found Kingsmill played shorter than its 6,790 yards.

"The greens look like they pumped a lot of water into them last night, and it becomes just like a birdie shootout," Norman said. "It's a putting competition is all it is."

O'Meara, Claar, Rinker and Norman were among those who began play in the morning before the temperature soared.

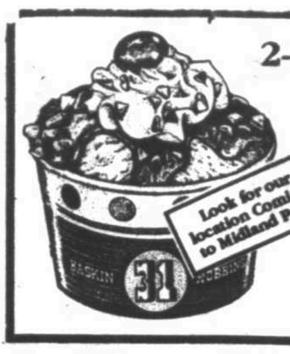

"I was very pleased to get off early today," a dripping wet O'Meara said after his round. "You really noticed the heat start kicking in after about seven or eight holes. Then the whole back side it was really sweltering."

Claar said the conditions reminded him of his home in Tampa, Fla..

"This is right up my alley. I'm used to this," said Claar, the PGA Tour's top rookie in 1986 who is 84th on this year's money list.

O'Meara, who finished third in the season-opening Tournament of Champions and got career victory No. 5 at Pebble Beach four weeks later, said he's unsure why he starts strong every year and tails off toward the middle of the season.

"Mentally I feel like maybe I play too much in the beginning of the year," he said.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South

Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♠

Yesterday we discussed control of a hand from declarer's point of view. There are situations where it's vital for the defenders to keep charge of the trump suit. Consider this example.

East was somewhat pusillanimous to let the bidding die in three diamonds. With two aces, three-card trump support and a ruffing value, it was unlikely that a nine-trick contract would be punished even if West had a minimum one-level overcall. Nine tricks could have been made on several lines.

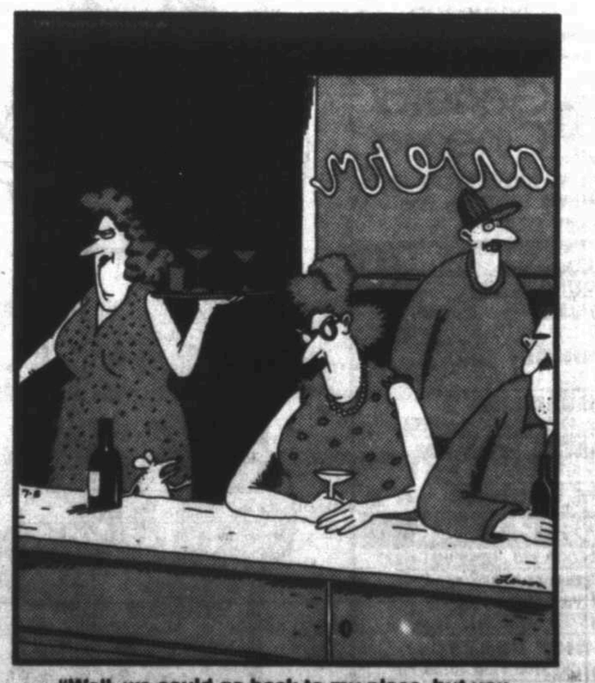

Against three diamonds, West made the normal lead of the fourth-best spade, and dummy's nine lost to East's jack. In an attempt to prevent declarer from ruffing clubs in dummy, East shifted to the ace of diamonds and another. A grateful declarer won, drew the outstanding trump and then banged out the ace and queen of hearts. When that fetched the king, declarer was able to discard two losing clubs on dummy's hearts, making his contract with an overtrick.

East's analysis was correct. Without a trump shift, declarer would have been able to ruff a club in dummy for his ninth trick. However, he switched to the wrong trump!

Note what would have happened had East led the ten of trumps at trick two! If declarer tries for a club ruff by leading a low club, the defenders can win and draw dummy's remaining fang before the hearts are established. A club continuation then ensures that the defenders net a spade trick, a heart, a diamond and two clubs. If South sets up the hearts first, West can get a heart ruff for the setting trick. And if declarer draws trumps, the defenders win the second round and go after clubs. Always down one.

Hackman averted heart attack

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Actor Gene Hackman, who soon will be appearing in a film called "Narrow Margin," may have avoided a heart attack by a similar measure when he checked into a hospital.

Hackman

An artery leading to his heart had narrowed dangerously and doctors had to reinflate it with a balloon catheter, the cardiologist who treated him said at a news conference Thursday.

"We think we got him just in the nick of time," said Dr. Herbert Semler.

Hackman, 60, had just finished filming a movie in Europe called "Dinosaur" and was vacationing on the Oregon Coast when he began suffering chest pain. He came to Portland and the pain expanded to include his arm.

He was admitted Tuesday to St. Vincent Hospital & Medical Center.

"We did a coronary angiogram and found narrowing in one of his arteries," Semler said. "It was in a very excellent area that we could easily reach with a balloon catheter and we dilated it."

Semler said that if Hackman hadn't entered the hospital when he did, "the artery would have completely shut down and he would have possibly had a heart attack."

The doctor said Hackman was feeling fine and would be released Friday at the latest.

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Zoning officials on Thursday unanimously rejected an appeal by Tammy Faye Bakker, wife of imprisoned PTL ministry founder Jim Bakker, to hold church services at a building in a busy industrial park.

The Orange County Zoning Board cited public safety concerns in upholding a staff decision to shut down services at the newest site of Mrs. Bakker's New Covenant Ministries — next door to a welding shop.

Mrs. Bakker, who did not attend the hearing, has authority to operate a radio-television production studio at the location. The ministry, set up in Orlando last year, previously was housed in a shopping mall, a hotel and a piano store.

Attorneys for the American Civil Liberties Union accused the zoning panel of "trampling on the First Amendment rights of Mrs. Bakker" because of her husband's conviction and imprisonment in the wake of PTL's collapse.

"It's a case of guilt by association," said Warren Keiner, the ACLU's central Florida chairman, referring to Bakker's 45-year federal prison term for fraud.

Zoning officials acted after several Sunday services were held in the building in March.

CHICAGO (AP) — Harry Smith, Paula Zahn and other members of the "CBS This Morning" staff are returning to their roots with a homecoming next week.

The "CBS This Morning" staff, virtually all born, raised or trained in metropolitan Chicago, is bringing the show to Wrigley Field on Monday through Wednesday to spotlight baseball's All-Star Game.

The show's hometown personalities say they expect it to be a sentimental journey.

Smith is from south suburban Lansing, and Zahn is from west suburban Naperville.

"I grew up at (television station) WBBM" in four years as a college intern, Zahn said Tuesday in New York. "It's going to be great going back and spending some time with Walter (Jacobson) and Bill (Kurtis) and all the people I used to fetch coffee for."

Weatherman Mark McEwen will appear in a "CBS This Morning" segment with the comedy troupe from Second City, where he once trained while working as a disc jockey with WLUP.

"Improvisational comedy is just that: it's improv," said McEwen. "You don't know what's coming next. Live television is exactly the same way."

Executive producer Erik Sorenson, who grew up in Waukegan in northern Illinois and also worked at WBBM, said he hopes the homecoming will improve the show's ratings in Chicago.

The third-rated morning show does poorly in national ratings and worse in Chicago. In the May sweeps, WGN's "Bozo the Clown" outrated "CBS This Morning" by 3-1 on the A.C. Nielsen Co. index.

ROME, Ga. (AP) — Marla Maples' mother and aunt are suing the National Enquirer, saying the supermarket tabloid published unauthorized photographs of the model who was romantically linked with businessman Donald Trump.

The lawsuit, filed Thursday in U.S. District Court, seeks unspecified damages from the Lantana, Fla., paper.

Miss Maples' mother, Ann Ogletree, of Dalton, and aunt, Pat Locklear, of Cohutta, allege that the Enquirer published without their permission photographs taken by the two women.

The pictures show Trump with Miss Maples and various members of her family. They were published May 1 under the headline, "Caught! Trump and His Mistress. World Exclusive Amazing Photos That Could Cost him $Billions."

The Enquirer also has been sued by Miss Maples' father, who said in an unrelated suit that the newspaper falsely claimed to have interviewed him.

The alleged romance between Miss Maples and Trump, who is married, sparked widespread media coverage earlier this year.

Enquirer Editor Ian Calder declined to comment on the suit until he had a chance to read it.

BOWLS: Post-season options open

(From 1D)

Conference loses three teams and is, in effect, absorbed by the Big Eight.

The Cotton Bowl (SWC winner against an at-large team) will not comment on that scenario.

If the Big Eight is devastated — Nebraska has talked to the Big Ten and Colorado could be a candidate for an expanded Pac-10 — then the Orange Bowl could terminate its contract with the conference. The contract between the Orange Bowl and Big Eight is renegotiated every five years. The new contract is valid through 1994.

"We think this is going to be felt by all the bowls and us in particular," Orange Bowl President Arthur Hertz said. "If the Big Eight realigns dramatically, by our contract we are able to look into other arrangements. Depending on the team, even the loss of one or two teams and we would have to consider other options."

The biggest change would come if the proposed super conferences are formed. The major bowls, already not the best of friends, would face off for the most attractive package, such as the Orange and Cotton bowls. Also, a Metro super conference would be open for bidding.

Brock even has expressed his displeasure with the SEC, which sends its champion to the Sugar Bowl, for courting Arkansas. The Cotton Bowl has suffered in recent years because of its affiliation with the downtrodden SWC. In recent years, Arkansas has been its most attractive contender.

"We've had the SEC 22 times and here they look like they're coming in and are going to bust up our bowl," Brock said.

Where does that leave the 12 bowls without conference affiliations? Some say they would fade away with the pool of independents being drastically reduced. Other say it would not matter if they took the runner-up or third-place conference finishers because that's what most do now.

"It may provide the opportunity for some bowls to tie up to a super conference and become either very viable bowls or increase their share to the bowl market they presently have," Haines said.

"I think we're in a little better position without that existing tie-in," said Keith Tribble, executive director of the newly-formed Sunshine Classic at Miami's Joe Robbie Stadium. "We would have that opportunity to get in line with a conference champion or bowl playoff, or take the two best teams left."

There isn't a bowl representative alive who is not wary of a playoff system. If the super conference structure is realized, this could be the genesis of the long-anticipated playoff system, and the end of the current bowl structure.

Two scenarios are possible if a playoff system is developed: The bowls could unite and work out a plan in which they become part of the playoff system. Or the bowls could be left with non-playoff teams. Unless the relationships between the bowls improve, the former is unlikely.

"The coaches have expressed they are not interested in a playoff, the presidents are strongly opposed to a playoff and the bowls don't want a playoff," said Chuck Rohe, executive director of the Florida Citrus Bowl.

Pursuit lands World Series tourney berth

Staff Report

Midland Pursuit Women's Softball team has captured a berth in the United States Slo-Pitch Association World Series to be played Labor Day Weekend.

Pursuit earned the right to advance to the series after winning the Budweiser Lady Luck tournament last weekend in Lafayette, La.

The upcoming Series is limited to the 16 top-ranked national open division women's teams who win regional qualifying tournaments.

In winning the southeast regional tournament, Pursuit defeated Kate Ladders of New Orleans in the championship game. Pursuit's Tammy McKinney was selected Most Valuable Player of the tourney with teammate Kena Gilpin winning top defensive honors. Pursuit, which finished the tournament undefeated, was paced offensively by Jackie Warrick, Deanne Hamilton and Carol Williams.

Pursuit finished second in last year's open division nationals and now has the opportunity of competing for the world title. The World Series will be held this year in Concord, Calif.

Midland players on the regionally selected Pursuit squad are Dina Sipes, Hamilton, Janet Sloan, Lori Reynolds, Aileen Miller and Benita Clark.

Pursuit's next tournament is the Western Open in Denver, Colo.

Bauer still owns Tour's yellow

SARREBOURG, France (AP) — Steve Bauer has done this before.

Two years ago, before the mountainous stages of the Tour de France, he wore the leader's yellow jersey.

But once in the Alps, the Canadian couldn't keep pace during the steep climbs.

Bauer, who lives in Belgium, had time to think and prepare for those climbs as the Tour took a day off Thursday to move from Rouen to Sarrebourg in eastern France.

The opening flat stages are behind them, and following a sixth stage on Friday, there is a critical time trial on Saturday. But everyone, including Bauer, is worried about the mountains.

"There's still a long way to go," Bauer said of next week's stages through the Alps. "I don't want to say that I have a chance to win. But a big hope to be on the podium in the first three is more realistic."

Bauer knows it can change very quickly. In 1988 he had the yellow jersey after the first stage and then again after the eighth stage. He kept it for four more stages before losing it in the Alps to eventual winner Pedro Delgado of Spain.

He went on to finish fourth in that Tour. He was 10th in 1985 when he won the best young pro award.

But Bauer, 31, is used to high finishes. Since turning pro in 1985, he has almost been around the top but never quite winning the big one.

In 1984, he won the silver medal in the road race at the Olympics in Los Angeles, beaten by American Alexei Grewal.

In 1988 he was involved in the controversial finish at the World Championships. He crashed into Belgium's Claude Criquielion in the final sprint in Renaix.

Liberian rebels reach Monrovian suburbs

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — About 5,300 rebels fought government troops in Monrovia's suburbs Thursday, according to an insurgent source in neighboring Ivory Coast, while soldiers ransacked stores and restaurants.

President Samuel Doe's advisers continued to desert as the rebels tightened their grip on the capital. On Wednesday, Doe's most trusted commander, Lt. Gen. Charles Julu, left Liberia, weakening the president's already fragile position, U.S. officials in Washington said.

Meanwhile, a senior rebel leader in the United States accused the U.S. administration of trying to prevent rebel leader Charles Taylor from taking power and said the rebels would not halt their advance to permit peace talks.

In the city's eastern and western suburbs, growing numbers of rebels battled soldiers for a fourth consecutive day. The rebels now control all roads into Monrovia.

Rebel sources in Ivory Coast said the 800-man contingent that attacked the capital's suburbs was reinforced by 4,500 others. The reinforcments brought up heavy armaments captured from army bases outside Monrovia.

The rebel source said the insurgents took Schiefflin, the military camp 12 miles east of Monrovia. The rebels estimated Doe still had 2,000 fighting men in the capital.

For the first time since the fighting began, the Christian missionary station ELWA did not broadcast Thursday evening. It broadcasts several times a day for several hours. The station is on the outskirts of Monrovia.

In Monrovia, government troops shot their way into stores, warehouses and restaurants under cover of curfew and emptied the shelves in the early hours of thursday.

Soldiers roamed the streets in stolen cars, firing in the air to frighten people and keep them back while they looted. The only vehicles on the streets were driven by soldiers who left dead and wounded civilians by the roadside.

As morning broke, frightened Monrovians ventured out into deserted streets and discovered at least 16 bodies.

A man with three bullet wounds bled for four hours in the city's main waterfront market despite pleas to soldiers to carry him to the hospital.

Monrovia's main John F. Kennedy hospital, which like the rest of the city has been without water and power for more than a week, has been abandoned by doctors and nurses and most of its patients.

A serious food shortage in Monrovia has forced people to beg for rice. "Give us food, we are dying," one man said.

Rebel leader Tom Woewiyu, based in the United States, said the Bush administration failed to keep a promise to force Doe out if the rebels held off from attacking the capital.

"The U.S. has had ample opportunity to take this man out ... But for some reason they don't want to do that. ... Maybe they want to see a government evolve that does not have Taylor involved in it. I don't know why. He's an unknown factor, I suppose."

Woewiyu said senior State Department officials who had supported Doe during his 10-year rule were trying to intervene to help him again now. The State Department has said it questions Taylor's commitment to democracy.

Doe, in his heavily guarded executive mansion, said Tuesday he would resign if his safety and that of his Krahn tribe were guaranteed, but so far he has shown no sign of leaving.

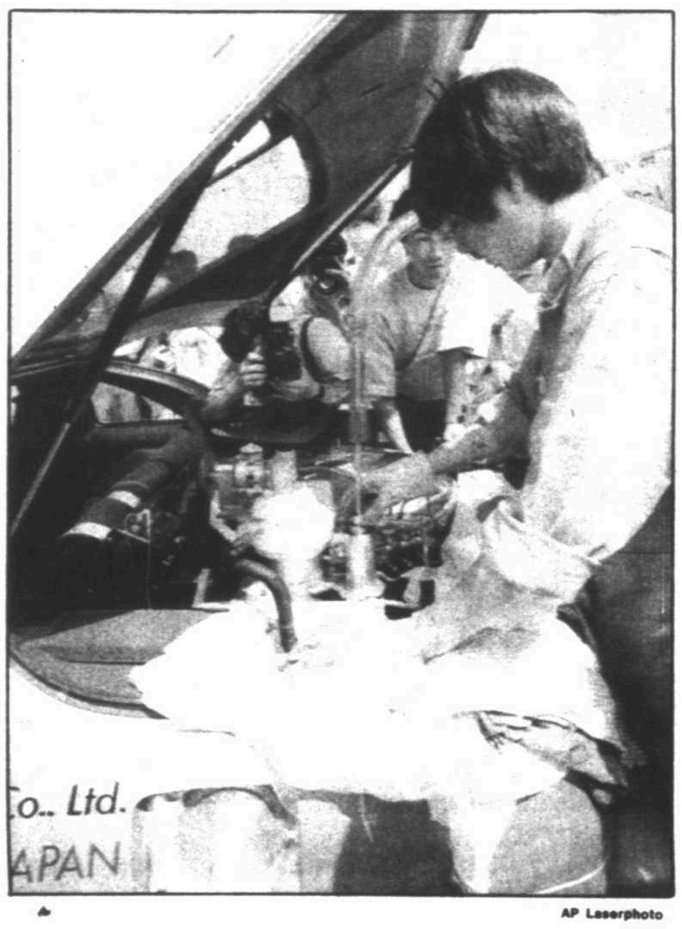

In Monrovia, soldiers fired on fishermen in canoes off the coast, claiming they were transporting rebels.

Shipping sources said 250,000 tons of rice bound for the stricken city is on board a ship, the Sea Star, steaming among U.S. navy ships off Monrovia. The captain reportedly feared the ship would be ransacked if it docked.

The sources also said a ship carrying 5,000 tons of rice put in at the rebel-held port of Buchanan. The British-owned Rizcup Enterprise was hijacked by rebels off Monrovia last week.

Health workers said young children and old people in Buchanan were falling sick.

Japanese professor shows his hydrogen-powered car

YOKOSUKA, Japan (AP) — A Japanese professor who has built a car powered by highly volatile liquid hydrogen demonstrated the vehicle today and said it causes almost no air pollution.

Industry officials said, however, it may take 10 years to produce a commercial version of the car, developed by Shoichi Furuhama, president of the Musashi Institute of Technology.

The car's liquid hydrogen fuel is made from water and costs $22.80 a gallon in Japan, officials said.

In a test drive today, the car, known as the Musashi 8, reached a speed of 82 mph. Test drivers at Nissan's Oppama factory, near Tokyo, said they believed the Musashi 8 could reach a speed of 94 mph.

The car does not backfire before combustion, a defect that has slowed previous research on hydrogen-fueled cars, Furuhama said. I has computer-run pumps and valves that keep the liquid hydrogen at minus 453 degrees.

Furuhama said the car creates almost no air pollution.

The engine is in a Nissan Fairlady Z body. Nissan has provided financial support and technical assistance to Furuhama's research team.

But the new vehicle still has many problems, its developers said.

Liquid hydrogen is exremely volatile and engineers are concerned about the dangers of explosion in a crash. Furuhama said the difficulty of obtaining liquid hydrogen has prevented scientists from thoroughly studying its safety.

A researcher working with Furuhama said on condition of anonymity the car also must carry a large volume of fuel. Hydrogen cars sometimes have been jokingly referred to as "cars which carry fuel and not passengers," he said.

Yasuhiko Nakagawa, a researcher at Nissan's Central Engineering Laboratories, said the fuel mileage is also not as high as for conventional vehicles.

Japanese teen-ager wins violin medal at Tchaikovsky competition

MOSCOW (AP) — Akiko Suwanai of Japan won top honors Thursday in the violin section of the ninth international Tchaikovsky musical competition, a spokeswoman announced early Friday.

Yevgeny Bushkov of the Soviet Union took second place, and Alyssa Park, a 16-year-old high school student from Lexington, Ky., took third place, said Margarita Trubitfina, a spokeswoman for the competition.

In addition to taking the first place gold medal, Miss Suwanai, 18, of Tokyo, also received a medal for best performance of the competition, the spokeswoman said.

Miss Suwanai had won second prize at the Japan International Competition in Tokyo in 1989 and second prize at the Paganini International Competition in Italy in 1988.

Miss Park received three medals in all: for third place, for most talented performer and for most artistic performer.

"I was very honored, but also very puzzled," she said in an interview afterward, noting that the international jury awarded her the medals for most artistic and most talented, but then only gave her third place.

She admitted to feeling some tension, "but I just tried to treat it as a concert, and play."

Anton Barakhovksy and Natalia Likhopoiy, both of the Soviet Union, tied for fourth; David Chan of Del Ray, Calif. finished fifth; Dmitri Berlinsky of the Soviet Union and Lucia Lin of Boston tied for sixth; and Maria Bachmann of Paramus, N.J. finished seventh.

Musicians competed in violin and piano, and for the first time since the event was first organized in 1958, voice and cello.

5 museums closed after art thefts

PARIS (AP) — Officials permanently closed five Paris museums to individual visitors Thursday, an unprecedented step prompted by three art thefts in one day, including a Renoir sliced from its frame at the Louvre.

The city's major museums will remain open, but security will be tightened, said Jacques Sallois, director of national museums. Authorities plan to examine existing security systems and develop new ones similar to those used in banks.

Police said it was possible that the same person or group hit all three museums during a span of several hours Wednesday, moving from one museum to another in the middle of the day.

In addition to the Renoir, an 1816 painting by Paul Huet was stolen from the Carnavalet Museum, and an 1870 work by Ernest Hebert was stolen from a museum named after the artist.

The Hebert was one of the five museums closed as of Thursday to individual visitors. The others — also relatively small institutions focusing on the works or the collections of a particular individual — are the Eugene Delacroix, Gustave Moreau, Jean-Jacques Henner and Ennery museums.

From now on, group visits to these museums must be arranged in advance, Sallois said.

Police have complained previously that museum officials were not aggressive enough or candid enough in dealing with security. Sallois, who took up his post only five weeks ago, vowed this would change, and said art theft would no longer be a "taboo subject" for public discussion.

The Louvre's director, Michel Laclotte, said the theft of Renoir's

Alain Brandenbourg, assistant director of French museums, examines the empty frame from Ernest Hebert's "Portrait of Monaluccia."

"Portrait of a Seated Woman" (1890-95) appeared to be the work of an "especially clever" professional.

"The canvas was very thin, the cutting instrument was probably extremely sharp and caused so few vibrations that the electronic sensor did not pick them up," he said.

Laclotte led reporters to the spot where the portrait had been hanging — an isolated stairwell leading to the Denon Gallery, on the top floor of the Pavillon de Flore overlooking the Seine.

Head painting curator Pierre Rosenberg said the Renoir had been on display in the stairwell for several years, due to renovations in other sections of the museum, once a royal palace.

He said the painting was donated to the Louvre in 1961 by French collector Victor Lion, and could not be transferred to the Orsay Museum of 19th century art, which houses France's major collection of Impressionist works.

Sallois said there was no evidence of negligence on the part of museum guards, and expressed confidence in the staff.

Investigators said the theft from the Carnavalet Museum apparently was the first to occur. The work by Huet, a French landscape painter, was lifted off its hook Wednesday morning at the history museum in one of the oldest sections of Paris.

The painting, "Les Moulins de la Glaciere," was estimated to be worth about $14,500.

Officials gave no estimates of the value of the Renoir or Hebert works. Rosenberg said he felt estimates of $300,000 to $600,000 for the Renior, given by independent experts, were high.

The Renoir and Hebert's "Portrait of Monaluccia" both were cut from their frames. They are small format paintings, a type often chosen by thieves because they can be easily concealed.

"Portrait of a Seated Woman" measures 13½ inches by 10½ inches, and Hebert's work is only slightly larger.

Rosenberg said Renoir was a "magic name" among art lovers, which could explain the theft — the first at the Louvre in about eight years.

The theft was discovered about 2:15 p.m., Louvre officials said. The Hebert was discovered missing about an hour later.

The Louvre and Hebert museums are run by the national government. The Carnavalet is run by the city of Paris.

The last previous Paris museum theft that occurred during the day was Oct. 27, 1985, when an armed gang held up the Marmottan Museum, stealing a number of impressionist works, including Claude Monet's "Impression Sunrise," which inspired the name for the impressionist movement.

The painting has not been recovered.

In 1983, a former security chief at the Louvre was sentenced to 18 months prison after being convicted of stealing seven small paintings in June 1982 from a Louvre storage room.

In 1911, the Mona Lisa was stolen from the Louvre, and found two years later in Italy.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Party may change name

MOSCOW (AP) — Communist Party leaders will consider a proposal to change their party's name to regain the people's trust, a spokesman said Thursday.

Col. Gen. Dmitri Volkogonov, a prominent historian, proposed that the party change its name to something like "The Party of Democratic Socialism," spokesman Alexander Lebedev said.

However, the idea was unlikely to win support at the 4,657-member party congress, a poll by the congress' sociological service found. It reported that 80 percent of delegates favored keeping the name as it is, and only 14 percent backed changing it, according to the nightly news program "Vremya."

But Volkogonov, a three-star general who has written groundbreaking biographies of Josef Stalin and Leon Trotsky, told the congress' section on party renewal that the name change was inevitable.

"In his (Volkogonov's) words, even if the proposal doesn't find support now, in two or three years it will nonetheless be necessary to take this step," Lebedev reported.

The proposal came at a section meeting that was closed to journalists.

Passports promised

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The Albanian foreign ministry on Thursday promised to grant passports to the hundreds of Albanians who have sought refuge in foreign embassies in a desperate attempt to flee their Communist homeland.

Several hundred more Albanians gained entry into embassy compounds as police guards did not interfere, raising the number of asylum-seekers to about 600, said Turkish Ambassador Teoman Surenkok.

Albanians were holed up in 12 foreign embassies, with 200 taking refugre in the West German Embassy and another 100 in the French compound, Surenkok told The Associated Press in a telephone interview.

Hundreds of other would-be refugees gathered outside embassies in the Albanian capital, Tirana.

In a statement carried by the official Albanian news agency ATA, the foreign ministry also appeared to deny a report that Albanians would no longer be able to apply for visas at embassies of the countries they wished to visit.

Officer retains post

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A high-ranking military officer accused of covering up the murder of six Jesuit priests remained in command of an elite infantry batallion Thursday, nine days after a judge ordered his arrest.

Lt. Col. Camilo Hernandez said last week he would turn himself in when ordered to do so by Defense Minister Humberto Larios or by Col. Rene Emilio Ponce, head of the joint chiefs of staff.

Ponce said the Defense Ministry did not receive a copy of the arrest warrant until Thursday, more than a week after it was issued.

"We will proceed with the detention of Lt. Col. Hernandez," Ponce said in a telephone interview.

But by midday Hernandez was still on duty at the headquarters of the elite Belloso infantry battalion just outside the capital and security forces had made no effort to arrest him.

More Kenyans held

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The one-party government on Thursday broadened its crackdown on proponents of multiparty democracy, arresting four more prominent Kenyans, including the son of a former vice president.

The wives of two detained opposition leaders pleaded with President Daniel arap Moi's government to refrain from torture in what appeared to be the harshest crackdown since 1982.

Thursday's arrests, of three lawyers and of the son of a former vice president, brought to at least 11 the number of people detained since Wednesday by the single-party government, according to detainees' families and other sources close to opposition figures.

Several other prominent Kenyans went into hiding Thursday night.

The arrests follow months of official criticism of those calling for reform, and come in advance of a rumored rally for multiparty democracy that the government has vowed to prevent.

Two of those detained, former Cabinet ministers Kenneth Matiba and Charles Rubia, had asked the government for permission to hold a meeting Saturday in support of legalizing political opposition, which has been outlawed since 1982.

Their request was not granted, but rumor has been widespread in this East African capital that crowds might nonetheless appear, and Moi has warned people against attending any meeting.

Matiba and Rubia were seized Wednesday by plainclothes security agents. In a press release Thursday, their wives, Edith Matiba and Hannah Rubia, said that "our husbands' arrest is intended to force curtailment of the multiparty debate (and) stop lawful and peaceful changes which are crucial if Kenya is to avoid the well trodden path of so many other African states."

Legislature dissolved

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Authorities in Yugoslavia's largest republic Thursday dissolved the local legislature and government in Kosovo, the troubled southern province it administers, sources and the media said.

Authorities from the republic of Serbia also took measures apparently designed to give the republic full control over Kosovo's media.

Several leading ethnic Albanian officials and journalists were removed from their jobs at Kosovo's radio, television and the Albanian-language Rilindia publishing house which publishes a daily newspaper.

Witnesses said Serbia's police entered downtown television, radio and Rilindia premises in the provincial capital of Pristina, arresting an unspecified number of ethnic Albanian employees.

Obstacles remain

LONDON (NYT) — British and Irish officials said Thursday that the unresolved question of when Dublin would enter proposed talks about returning a large degree of self-rule to Northern Ireland remained an obstacle to setting a date in the fall for beginning negotiations.

The British government had hoped to be able to announce a date on Thursday. But in a speech to the House of Commons, Peter Brooke, secretary of state for Northern Ireland, said, "I am not yet in a position to do so."

Calling Thursday's deadline artificial, he said efforts to get the talks going would continue. "The important thing is we have been making progress and will continue to seek to do so," he said.

In Dublin on Thursday, Charles J. Haughey, Ireland's prime minister, told Parliament, "Further consultations with the secretary of state for Northern Ireland are necessary at this stage, but we are confident that a satisfactory formula and basis for meaningful discussions can be found."

Elephants stampede

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — A herd of elephants went on a rampage in a northern village, trampling a man to death, smashing crops and forcing 200 people to flee their homes, a newspaper reported Thursday.

Panggung village chief M. Nafi said the herd was believed to have come to the village for revenge after seeing four elephant carcasses at the rim of the forest, the daily Jakarta Post reported.

The carcasses were of elephants killed by poachers for their ivory, it said.

The newspaper said a 25-year-old villager was killed during the rampage over the weekend at the village.

Bush, NATO allies gambling on Gorbachev

By Terence Hunt

LONDON (AP) — President Bush and Western allies are offering soothing reassurances, and considering a massive financial bailout, to brace Mikhail S. Gorbachev against an uncertain future. It's a big gamble on a Soviet leader who gives himself only two more years to succeed or fail.

Gorbachev dramatically raised the stakes for himself — and the West — when he imposed a deadline for fixing his country's economic and political problems.

"I think that in two years, if there are no changes, this leadership must go," Gorbachev declared Wednesday.

British sources said late Thursday Gorbachev had appealed for Western economic aid in a two-page letter to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the request was not specific, but expressed his hopes for "positive conclusions" at both the NATO summit and the economic summit in Houston next week which would enhance European security and bolster his economic reform program.

Gorbachev needs a shot of Western cash for a variety of reasons, including a balance-of-payments deficit topping $2 billion — half of that owed to West German companies and creditors — and to put a greater variety of foodstuffs and consumer items in Soviet stores at a time of rising domestic tensions.

For Bush and his colleagues, Gorbachev's message was clear: If you're going to help, do it now. Later might be too late.

Western leaders are fully aware that any successor to Gorbachev might not be as tolerant of democratic and economic changes in the Soviet Union and East Europe as he has been.

Gorbachev made his statement as leaders of 16 Western nations were gathering here for a NATO summit. Money for Moscow was not on the official agenda for the talks and there probably won't be any decision on it here. A decision is more likely when leaders of the world's seven richest nations meet in Houston next week for the annual economic summit of industrial powers.

An Analysis

However, financial aid for the Soviet Union was sure to be an underlying issue as NATO chiefs met behind closed doors in London.

West Germany and France are urging the West to come up with $15 billion or more for Moscow. Bush has been cool to the idea but appears to be softening his objections. At the least, U.S. officials say the president will not stand in the way of a Western European package of assistance.

Publicly, NATO chiefs went out of their way to persuade Gorbachev and his conservative critics that Moscow has nothing to fear from the West as the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact teeters on collapse.

"Confrontation and the Cold War belong to the past," declared West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

Echoing earlier proposals by Bush, Kohl said NATO and the Warsaw Pact should agree on a joint statement "that we no longer regard one another as adversaries" and that they renounce the use force.

French President Francois Mitterrand advocated "a solemn declaration renouncing aggression or first use of force."

Bush took the extraordinary step of urging NATO to throw open its doors for a visit from Gorbachev, reaching out to the leader of the West's longtime adversary. Gorbachev and other officials of the Warsaw Pact would be invited to address a NATO meeting, probably in December.

"There was no negative response to the proposal," said Dutch Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers.

One major purpose of the London meeting is to ease Soviet concerns about the thundering drive to German unification. The Kremlin is looking for reassurances that the new Germany's armed forces would be limited in some way.

NATO seeks to draw East Europeans closer

LONDON (AP) — The NATO allies Thursday searched for a way to draw East European countries, including the Soviet Union, closer to the Western alliance without giving away military secrets.

President Bush suggested at the opening session of the two-day summit of NATO leaders the establishment of liaison offices between nations in the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact and the alliance, according to White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

"The general purpose is to find some way to give them access to NATO in a learning capacity and hopefully one in which they would appreciate where we're coming from," he said.

A diplomatic source, who demanded anonymity, said Bush emphasized that the Warsaw Pact officials would "not sit at the table with us."

The novel idea is one of a number of proposals being floated by the United States and other countries to revamp the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to respond to diminished East-West tensions.

The allies want to make NATO, created in 1949 in an era of hostility and suspicion, appear less threatening to the Kremlin. In doing so, they hope to encourage Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev to drop his objections to membership in the alliance for a united Germany.

West Germany is an influential member of NATO, but East Germany belongs to the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact.

The idea of creating a special diplomatic status for the East European countries reflects the West's uncertainty about how to deal with its former adversaries.
