Reagan critical of Soviet arms stance

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lifting the lid on secret arms control talks, President Reagan is accusing the Soviet Union of turning its back on his proposal to eliminate nuclear weapons from Europe.

In a report to the nation Monday night, Reagan sharply criticized the stance taken by Soviet negotiators, saying they had "shown little inclination" to reach an agreement.

But he also appealed to the Soviets to join in adopting measures to reduce the risk of nuclear war by accident or misunderstanding.

The central theme, however, was that the Soviets would reject U.S. arms control proposals "unless we demonstrate the will to rebuild our strength and reduce the military balance."

The speech, which followed by a few hours an announcement that new MX missiles would be deployed in Wyoming, offered nothing dramatically new to curb the nuclear arms race.

In its first reaction, the Soviet Union sharply condemned deployment of the MX missiles.

Calling it a "new dangerous step" in preparation for nuclear war, the official Soviet news agency Tass said the plan would upset the "rough strategic parity" between the two countries by giving the United States an additional 1,000 nuclear heads.

The president, who accused the Kremlin of bad faith in arms control negotiations, focused his criticism on the SS-20 missile, calling it the most threatening of the Soviet nuclear forces.

"Although the Soviet leaders earlier this year declared they had frozen deployment of this dangerous missile," Reagan said, "they have in fact continued deployment."

He said the Soviets are adding a three-headed missile to their SS-20 arsenal each week, and now have 600 targeted on Western Europe, the Middle East and Europe while the United States has none aimed at the Soviet Union.

"The bar has gone through the roof," Reagan told his television audience while a graphics display flashed on TV screens across the land. A thick red line marked the Soviet buildup while U.S. blue remained at zero.

A year ago, Reagan offered his "zero-option" plan. Under it, the United States and its NATO allies would shelve the scheduled deployment of 572 Pershing II and cruise missiles in West Germany, Britain and Italy if the Soviets would scuttle their Euromissiles arsenal.

The arms control negotiations in Geneva, Switzerland have been conducted in strict secrecy. But to make his point, the president lifted the veil a little and accused the Soviets of foot-dragging.

"The Soviet Union thus far has shown little inclination to take this major step to zero levels," he said.

He also urged action at the negotiating table on his proposed treaty to cut by one-third the current total of U.S. and Soviet intercontinental ballistic missile warheads.

"Our proposals would eliminate some 4,700 warheads and some 2,250 missiles," Reagan said. "I think that would be quite a service to mankind."

In his appeal to the Soviets, Reagan suggested measures the superpowers could adopt to cut down the possibility of nuclear war by accident or misunderstanding.

These included advance notification of all U.S. and Soviet test launches of intercontinental ballistic missiles and improving the emergency "hotline" teleprinter between Washington and Moscow.

And he offered the Soviets unspecified basic information about U.S. nuclear forces "in order to clear away some of the mutual ignorance and suspicion between our two countires."

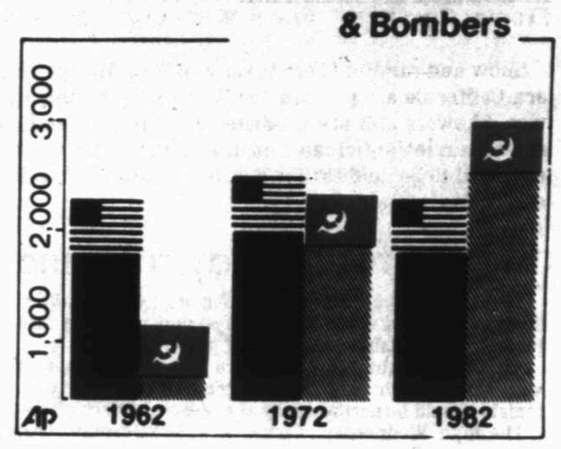

"It still takes weapons to prevent war," Reagan said of his decision to bunch 100 MX missiles — which he rechristened "Peacekeepers" — within 20 square miles near Francis E. Warren Air Force Base in southeast Wyoming.

But he hinted the plan, which will not be operational until 1986, may be used as a bargaining chip in the Geneva talks. "The United States wants deep cuts in the world's arsenal of weapons," Reagan said.

"Let us reaffirm America's destiny of goodness and goodwill," Reagan said in a brief Thanksgiving message at the end of his speech. "Let us work for peace..."

The long-awaited MX decision faces a doubtful future in Congress.

Battling the blaze

Midland firefighters, assisted by passerby John Vickery, above, battled a grass fire that charred about 50 acres of mesquite-choked pasture land Monday afternoon near Interstate 20 south of Garden City Highway. An off-duty fireman, Raymond Meek, was injured while responding to the blaze when the motorcycle he was riding collided with a car at the intersection of Garden City Highway and I-20. Meek suffered multiple contusions and was later treated and released from Midland Memorial Hospital.

Supreme Soviet to cast formal succession vote

MOSCOW (AP) — The Supreme Soviet met today in the Kremlin to elect a president to succeed Leonid I. Brezhnev, who died 13 days ago.

All 12 members of the Communist Party's ruling Politburo attended today's session at the ornate grand palace of the Kremlin, including 83-year-old Arvid Pelshe, the eldest.

It was Pelshe's first public appearance in more than six months, during which he was widely rumored to have died. He did not appear at Brezhnev's funeral Nov. 15 in Red Square.

Moscow Communist Party chief Viktor V. Grishin opened the two-day session at 10 a.m. (2 a.m. EST) with a resolution asking the 1,500 delegates to ratify Yuri V. Andropov as the new general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party.

Andropov's approval as party leader was a formality.

The 68-year-old Andropov also was widely believed poised to assume the largely ceremonial presidency, consolidating his grip on power. Brezhnev also held both posts.

Although the constitution delegates the task of naming a president to the Supreme Soviet, or national Parliament, the decision is thought to actually lie with the Central Committee.

Andropov, Stepan Shalayev and Nikolai G. Basov were elected to the presidium of the Supreme Soviet, whose 39 members execute day-to-day business.

Alexei Shibayev, who was dropped last spring as chairman of the Soviet Trade Union Federation and replaced by Shalayev, was released from the presidium.

Andropov addressed the party leadership Monday for the first time since taking the Central Committee made him party chief on Nov. 12, succeeding Brezhnev. The 75-year-old leader died of a heart attack Nov. 10 after 18 years in power.

Andropov, a former head of the KGB secret police, made it clear that Brezhnev's foreign policies would be carried out.

He said the Kremlin would make no "preliminary concessions" toward improving ties with the United States, but that "the future belongs" to detente.

Western analysts saw the speech, coming on the heels of particularly bellicose statements by Brezhnev in his final days, as a marked attempt to tone down the exchange of sharp messages between Moscow and Washington.

Andropov said the escalating arms race must not get out of control, and repeated Soviet calls for a freeze on making and deploying nuclear weapons while arms reduction talks with the United States continue in Geneva, Switzerland.

But President Reagan said Monday night that unless the United States demonstrates "the will to rebuild our strength and restore the military balance, the Soviets, since they are so far ahead, have little incentive to negotiate with us."

In a nationally televised address from Washington, he said: "You often hear that the United States and the Soviet Union are in an arms race. The truth is that while the Soviet Union has raced, we have not."

Andropov's 40-minute speech to the Central Committee cited Soviet support of the search "for a settlement of most complicated problems, especially of course, the problems of curbing the arms race, involving both nuclear and conventional arms."

Apparently referring to Reagan administration statements that the new Soviet leadership should send a signal such as pulling its troops out of Afghanistan, Andropov said:

"Statements in which the readiness for normalizing relations is linked with the demand that the Soviet Union pay for this with some sort of preliminary concessions...do not sound serious, to say the least.

"We shall not agree to this...we have nothing to cancel," he said, noting the Reagan administration sanctions after martial law in Poland, against the Soviet natural gas pipeline, and rejection of the 1979 strategic arms limitation treaty.

The speech, carried by the English language service of the official news agency Tass and read in its entirety on evening television news, dwelt at length on Soviet economic problems. It stressed the need for greater efficiency and less waste and glossed over Soviet defense spending.

County fails to set date for bond vote

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County commissioners, who seem to be waffling between politics and business, on Monday left undecided the date for a possible bond election to finance a proposed $8.6 million jail, and courthouse addition and renovation.

Commissioners had considered a Jan. 15 date, which would coincide with the special election to legalize bingo here, but made no commitment. However, Commissioner Durward Wright noted that he would prefer enough time between the calling for the election and the election "to coax the people to vote in favor of it."

"The people need to know about it," County Attorney Scott Henderson said of the particulars of the proposed courthouse addition and of the financing, which likely would entail a tax-rate increase.

And the commissioners reaffirmed their disgust at Odessa's waste water running down Monahans Draw and into Midland County but did not relent to Commissioner Charlie Welch's insistence that the county sue Odessa in state or federal court.

ODESSA'S PERMIT to allow its primary-treated effluent to flow into Monahans Draw, which meanders eastwardly through Midland County and south of Midland, has not been renewed by the Texas Water Commission (TWC). But, noted Henderson, Odessa has applied for the permit and for a hearing on the discharge, which Midland County opposes. Commissioners contend that the effluent may be polluting underground water zones in much the same way the city of Midland's waste water purportedly had been contaminating fresh-water zones along Midland Draw and in the Greenwood area.

"It's not Odessa that's dragging their feet," Henderson told the Commissiners' Court. Rather, he said that the three-member Texas Water Commission has been bogged down in paperwork and, with the aid of legal staff of the Texas Department of Water Resources, is scheduling a hearing.

Odessa's permit to dump the effluent has expired, Henderson noted, but the city apparently has nowhere else to dump the effluent.

"We are hassling them (TWC)," Henderson said. "Mainly, they just dropped the ball."

But Welch, who has vehemently criticized Midland's handling of its waste water, said the city of Odessa ought to be taken to court.

"I DON'T CARE where you file it," Welch said. "You better file it."

Henderson didn't concur with Welch's stance.

"Odessa may have an interest in dragging their feet, but it's being done for them," Henderson said.

Almost two years ago, commissioners retained the Kerr, Fitz-Gerald & Kerr law firm to look after Midland County's interests along Monahans Draw and possibly to prepare a federal case against Odessa. Too, the commissioners hired Ed L. Reed & Associates to make hydrological tests and studies along both Monahans and Midland draws. To date, the county has invested more than $77,000 in those studies and in legal fees.

Henderson said he has talked with Ted Kerr, who has been probing the

No charges likely in shooting death

No charges are expected to be filed against a westside woman who shot and killed a man after he broke into her house about 7:40 p.m. Monday.

Forty-two-year-old Eunice Marie Hodges of 2003 Northrup told officers the man, a former acquaintance of hers whose name is being withheld pending notification of relatives in Alexandria, Va., forced his way into her home after breaking a large rear window.

She said he was coming toward her in a hallway when she fired one shot from a .380-caliber automatic pistol, striking him in the forehead just below the hairline.

$6 million lawsuit filed for burn victim

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A $6 million damage suit has been filed on behalf of Randy Sellars, the 20-year-old resident of Warwick Apartments who was severely burned when a twin-engine Beechcraft Baron crashed into the north side complex Sept. 24.

Attorneys Hal Brockett Jr., J. Michael Cunningham and John F. Maner filed the suit in state district court Monday.

It charges pilot Alex Sheets, the state of Louisiana and the Louisiana Department of Corrections, for whom the 56-year-old Sheets worked, with negligence in the crash, which killed one passenger and injured two prisoners aboard the craft.

Sheets also was hurt. He and the two prisoners are recovering from their injuries in Louisiana. Sellars returned home Nov. 5 after extensive treatment for first-, second- and third-degree burns at Lubbock General Hospital.

Ken Hornsby, 41, of Baton Rouge, La., died of his injuries at Lubbock General two or three weeks after the crash.

According to Louisiana authorities, Hornsby was a friend of Sheets and "an unauthorized passenger" aboard the plane, which was being used to transport two prisoners back to Louisiana from California and Nevada when it stopped to refuel at Midland Air Park.

Sheets took off with the wind, as opposed to into the wind, and used only about half the runway available to him, according to preliminary findings by the National Transportation Safety Board.

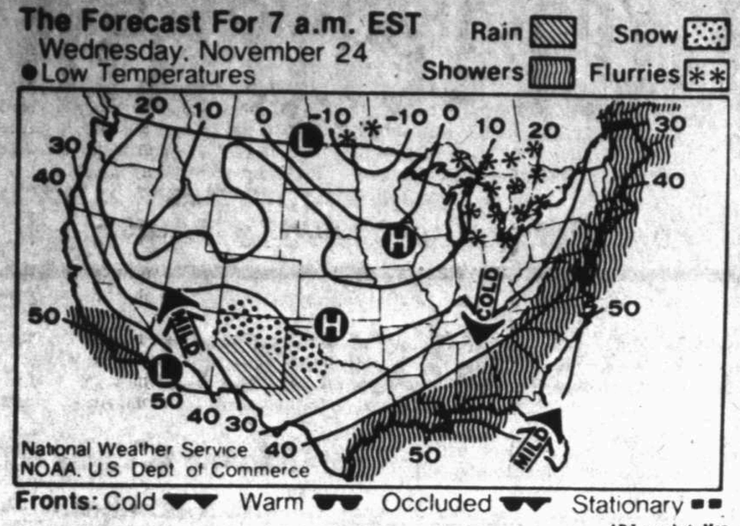

The plane lost altitude shortly after takeoff and exploded on a parking lot of the nearby complex after clipping the roof of one apartment building, which was destroyed by fire, along with six or seven parked vehicles, including Sellars' 1982 Buick Regal.

Sellars, an employee of Albertsons Super Market on Andrews Highway, was in his apartment at the time of the crash. According to the suit, he "went outside to investigate the noise and was suddenly and unexpectedly sprayed with fuel and flames from the burning aircraft, directly or proximately causing (his) damages."

AP Laserphoto Map

Snow and rain for West Texas and New Mexico and showers for southern California are forecast for Wednesday by the National Weather Service. Showers also are predicted for the Gulf and Atlantic coasts, with snow flurries anticipated in the Great Lakes area. Temperatures are expected to be mild for the South and East but much colder for northern and central states.

Chance for holiday rain, snow forecast

For those who need a good, stiff belt of cold weather and a chance of snow (brrrr) to remind them it's Thanksgiving time, the National Weather Service forecast is a veritable cornucopia of good news.

According to the NWS, there's a 30 percent chance of rain possibly mixed with snow tonight with a low temperature scuttling into the low 30s. Winds tonight should be northeasterly at a blustery 15-20 mph.

The high Wednesday, Turkey Eve, should only scrape the mid-40s with a 30 percent chance of rain, or rain mixed with snow, in the morning. The precipitation should become rain in the afternoon when winds will whistle from the northeast at 10-15 mph.

Monday's high of 77 degrees fell only four short of the record high 81 set in 1966. The overnight low of 49 was mild compared with a record low 17 set in 1938.

The precipitation forecast could boost monthly and yearly rainfall amounts, which currently sit at 0.01 and 12.64 inches, respectively.

Sunset tonight is at 5:46 p.m.; sunrise Wednesday is at 7:25 a.m.

President Ronald Reagan, as seen through a window of the White House Oval Office, speaks to the nation. Reagan proposes deployment of the MX missile in a string of Wyoming silos and urges Soviet leaders to takes steps with the U.S. to abate fears of accidental nuclear war.

Congress may not favor MX proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has proposed a "dense pack" plan to put 100 MX missiles in Wyoming, but the system he says will survive a Soviet nuclear strike may have a difficult time withstanding attacks from Congress.

"Based on the best advice I could get, I concluded that the MX is the right missile at the right time," the president said Monday night in a nationally broadcast speech from the White House.

While Reagan outlined his administration's plans for arms control, he also explained his belief that the United States needs to rebuild its long-range nuclear strike force with the MX, the weapon he dubbed "the Peacekeeper."

Reagan's MX basing plan, known as "dense pack," proposes putting 100 of the powerful new nuclear weapons in silos buried on what is now private land near Warren Air Force Base outside Cheyenne, Wyo.

U.S. defense analysts say the MX is needed to offset the increasingly accurate long-range Soviet missiles that endanger the current U.S. long-range force of 1,000 Minutemen and 52 Titan missiles. Each MX would have 10 warheads.

Early reaction from Capitol Hill indicated that Reagan's "dense pack" proposal is in for a tough fight in Congress, which has 30 days to accept or reject the MX housing plan.

Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., a close friend of Reagan's, said the president probably faces "one of his greater legislative battles" over the issue.

Laxalt supports the weapon but helped scuttle an earlier MX "shell-game" basing plan proposed by the Carter administration.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said he was "cautiously hopeful" about passage.

And Rep. Richard Cheney, R-Wyo., said his state "did not lobby for the MX," but "if Wyoming is the best place for it, we will support it."

Wyoming Gov. Ed Herschler, a Democrat who was attending a conference of Western governors in Denver when Reagan announced the basing plan, was coming to Washington today to discuss the MX with Reagan and Pentagon officials.

Herschler said he would support the president's decision, but considered the project both good and bad, "like a mother-in-law driving a new Cadillac over a cliff. Or a teen-age daughter coming home at 3 a.m. with a Gideon Bible under her arm."

Democrats in Capitol Hill, meanwhile, launched a pre-emptive strike. Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., said "dense pack" isn't survivable and predicted its demise next month when Congress takes up Pentagon spending during the lame-duck session.

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., called Reagan's proposal "a non-solution" while Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., agreed that it "is not the answer."

The Reagan proposal is based on the belief that MX would survive because of "fratricide," an untested theory which holds that incoming Soviet missiles would knock each other out.

The 71-foot-long, 192,000 pound MX, or "missile experimental," will be housed in silos that are "super-hardened" to withstand blast forces up to five times greater than the Minuteman silos. The first 10 weapons will be deployed in 1986.

Pentagon officials said Monday the exact site for the MX hasn't yet been picked, but it will be on a 14-mile-long by 1.5-mile-wide strip of private land near the Warren base.

Wyoming ready to 'live under the gun'

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — This prairie town has been next door to a military target for almost 25 years, so residents are taking in stride the prospect of MX missiles joining the neighborhood.

"We've always lived under the gun," said Mrs. Robert Gerard, whose husband is retired from the Air Force. She called President Reagan's proposal Monday to base MX missiles in Wyoming "not that startling."

On the outskirts of this town of 47,000 is Francis E. Warren Air Force Base, which got its first intercontinental missiles in 1958. It now commands 200 Minuteman III missiles scattered in silos in Wyoming, Nebraska and Colorado.

"I suspect we're a targeted area already, whether we have the MX or not," said Gov. Ed Herschler, whose official residence lies within a stone's throw of the air base. The Democrat said he supports the proposal, but called it a mixed blessing, something like "a teen-age daughter coming home at 3 a.m. with a Gideon Bible under her arm."

Reagan's plan, announced Monday, calls for 100 MX missiles to be located in Wyoming using a "dense pack" of missiles installed in superhardened silos 1,800 to 2,000 feet apart. The Minuteman III silos are separated by at least several miles.

Support isn't universal. Sister Francis Russell, a leader of a regional anti-MX group, said she doesn't want southeastern Wyoming to become a strategic Soviet target and promised "a vigorous program of grass-roots education" in an effort to block its deployment. She is a spokeswoman for the Tri-State Coalition Against MX.

State Rep. William Edwards, D-Cheyenne, said he is opposed "mainly because I don't have enough information to make a positive decision. Also, I feel that we may not need the MX anywhere."

Edwards said the MX may cost much more than the current estimate of $26 billion and use more than the anticipated 20 square miles of land.

"To those who say, 'We have the Minuteman so it doesn't make any difference if we get the MX,' I'd have to say from the economic standpoint that it makes a lot of difference," Edwards said.

"We will have a $200 billion deficit in the next couple of years and my concern is that the Soviet Union could bury us in a weapons race," he added.

High school history teacher Sydney Spiegel said all land-based missile systems are vulnerable to pre-emptive attack and the MX would be no exception. He is a member of the Cheyenne-based Wyoming Against the MX which opposes land basing of the MX.

Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm said he hopes that Congress kills the proposal before it "imposes making Wyoming, and thus Colorado, the central target in the United States."

Rancher Paul Etchepare, who owns much of the land where the MX would be based, said he supports the proposal. He said many ranchers already conduct their operations around Minutemen silos and share his sentiments. "I have absolute faith in our president," he said.

Republican Sen. Alan Simpson said he supports the president's decision, saying national security is "an overriding concern."

Added GOP Rep. Dick Cheney, "I have no strong objections to putting the system in Wyoming if that is what makes the most sense from the standpoint of national security."

legal aspects of Odessa's waste water flowing down Monahans Draw, about the county taking over the case; Kerr was agreeable, he said. Henderson noted that the county now has in Mark Dettman, an assistant county attorney, an able lawyer versed in federal court procedures who could take over the Monahans Draw case.

Monahans Draw has been designated as a navigable stream and as such could come under jurisdiction of the federal courts.

Henderson, however, noted that since Odessa's discharge again is flowing into Midland County, lawsuits could be filed in state district court in Midland County. "So, we're not limited to Ector County courts." Odessa's permit would allow for an effluent flow of 17 million gallons per day Henderson said.

MEANWHILE, Henderson indicated that he and Dettman would be in Austin whenever the TWC holds a hearing on Odessa's permit legally to discharge effluent into Monahans Draw, which links up with Midland Draw in northeast Midland County. The channel's flow eventually enters the Colorado River, which feeds the E.V. Spence Reservoir at Robert Lee. The lake, which is the principal reservoir of the Colorado River Municipal Water District, supplies Midland, Odessa, Stanton and Big Spring most of their tap water.

In another unresolved problem, the commissioners seem undecided on what avenues to take to resolve space needs for a growing county government of about 300 employees and between 80 and 100 prisoners.

Last month, when the court decided to retain E.F. Hutton, a stockbroker company, to determine the optimum bond financing for building the proposed $8.6 million jail-courthouse addition on the north side of the courthouse square, the commissioners seemed settled on calling for a bond election for the electorate's approval or rejection of a solution to overcrowded conditions.

HOWEVER, the commissioners bypassed agenda item No. 16, which allowed for the calling of a bond election, and instead went into an executive session to discuss possible land acquisition for an alternate site for the jail and courthouse addition or annex. At the commissioners' bidding, architect Walter Pate has prepared schematics of the proposed jail-courthouse addition.

In addition, the commissioners are experimenting with means to get an annex virtually free by working an agreement with private enterprise. The commissioners have been talking for months with investors who seem interested in building a hotel on county-owned land 1½ to two blocks east of the courthouse along Baird Street and between Texas and Illinois avenues.

The commissioners envisioned leasing land to a developer in that prime downtown location in exchange for the developer simply building and giving to the county a 50,000-square-foot courthouse annex and then providing parking space.

That proposal also appears to be in limbo.

The commissioners had proposed that the 1930-vintage courthouse again be renovated and that the courthouse and proposed adjoining addition would be primarily for the judiciary and related functions. The proposed annex to the east would be for non-court functions.

THE COUNTY'S most recent bond election was in December 1970, when the electorate approved a $1.95 million general obligation bond issue to finance renovation of the courthouse and to add a fifth floor — the jail. That expansion and renovation was finished in 1974.

In other business, the commissioners:

—Approved a week-long county training session to be conducted in mid-April by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) and which would be keyed to personnel management, time and office management, serving the public and use of computers. The session would be available for the county's 30 or so department heads, including elected officials, and all levels of workers would attend the identical sessions, which would be duplicated during the workweek. Conducting the sessions would be Dr. Dennis Fisher, an economist who specializes in business development; Dr. Michael Woods, a community services specialist, and Dr. Larry Brown, a community development specialist.

"I've gotten indications that everyone wanted the training, but bits and pieces of it," Fisher told the court after he had interviewed some courthouse employees. Those bits and pieces include styles of supervision and leadership, communication, motivation, performance evaluation, deskmanship, planning, scheduling, roles of computers in government and dealing with the public.

—Agreed to pay Bill Blalock $900 for the leasing and training of horses to be used in the proposed but rejected county stockade. However, the commissioners have not decided what to do with stockade fencing, 20 lights and a generator which the commissioners bought in preparing for the stockade as a temporary means to alleviate the overcrowded condition of the jail.

—Asked the county attorney to confer with Dr. Patrick Y. Leung, the county's jail physician, on working out a contract to hire full-time nurse or nurses assigned to the jail. "If we need anything," said Sheriff Dallas Smith, "we need more men (deputies)." But he said that "we're probably going to lose our doctor if we don't get the nurse."

Without Dr. Leung's or similar services, the county would be forced to return to its former procedure of taking complaining and ailing prisoners for check-ups and treatment at Midland Memorial Hospital.

"The (MMH) emergency room doesn't like our being there," Smith said. "It has been a little bit of a hassle and I can understand why. The emergency room is for emegencies, and most of our problems are not emergencies."

"I know we ought to have nurse," said County Judge Bill Ahders.

Smith noted that Dr. Leung has kept the county out of federal court by heading off medical-related grievances by prisoners. "You get sued, you lose, and you haven't done very well economically," the sheriff said. He said Dr. Leung had "wanted a full-time, around-the-clock deal" — nurses to look after the inmates, dispense medicine prescribed by Dr. Leung, to performer routine tests and to administer the electrocardiograph.

—Granted John Fournier, president of Ultimate Sound, permission to use the Midland County Exhibit Building at 1 p.m. Sunday for the first of 14 statewide talent shows which are headlined "Search for Tomorrow's Star."

Fournier, who is a vice president of Fleetwood Studios in Revere, Mass., said the winner would receive $30,000 and that at least 10 percent of the proceeds would go toward establishment of a home or ranch in the Midland-Odessa area for battered and abused children and teen-agers. "I'm sort of a crusader for kids," Fournier, who lives in Midland, said.

Though tickets to the show are $5 each, Fournier said he and assistant producer Robert Withrow are "relying on the contestants bringing their own audiences."

—Awarded horticulturist Len Newsom a $54,235 contract in 1983 to maintain grounds of the Midland County Courthouse, Museum of the Southwest, Culver Youth Home, Midland County Public Library, Midland County Exhibit Building and Courthouse Annex. The fee is a 13 percent increase over last year's contract but is the first increase in 3½ years, Newsom said.

$6 million damage suit filed on behalf of Sellars

Included in the list of alleged negligent acts are "failing to use all the runway available to him for takeoff, taking off with the wind (and) failing to use a sufficient amount of runway for takeoff in view of apparent obstructions in his immediate flight pattern."

Louisiana and its prison system are named in the suit because Sheets was acting as their agent.

Sellars suffered burns to his head, neck, back, chest, buttocks, arms, legs "and diverse other parts of his body and has suffered great shock to his entire nervous system," according to the suit, which goes on to say:

"These injuries are permanent in nature. As a result of the negligence of Defendants as aforesaid, Plaintiff has suffered severe physical and mental pain, anguish, embarrassment and humiliation and in all reasonable probability, he will continue to suffer in this manner for a long time, if not for the balance of his natural life."

The suit seeks exemplary damages of at least three times the amount of actual damages on grounds of "gross negligence for the reason that (Sheets acted in) heedless and reckless disregard of the rights and welfare of the persons likely likely to be affected by (his conduct)."

It also alleges that the state of Louisiana and the Department of Corrections "knew and had reason to know that Defendant (Sheets) was an incompetent pilot and was not qualified to fly the particular airplane that was involved in the crash."

Two months before the crash former Louisiana Department of Corrections pilot Donald Murray wrote a letter critical of Sheets' flying ability.

The letter, written to aviation officials in July, was released after the Warwick crash.

Louisiana officials, however, have dismissed the letter as a "case of sour grapes," saying Murray knew he was to be laid off when he wrote the letter.

All told, the suit asks for $6.55 million "and additional sums (such) as exemplary damages with interest thereon," court costs and any other damages "to which Plaintiff might be justly entitled."

Louisiana authorities could not immediately be reached for comment.

No charges likely in shooting death

scene and his body was taken to Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Police said the suit-clad, 56-year-old victim was found lying face down in a pool of blood. A backyard gate also had been broken.

Ms. Hodges, a Postal Service employee, said the man had been harassing her on the phone lately and called about an hour before the shooting to say he was coming over to see her, despite her objections.

She said the man began banging on the door about 7:30 p.m. and she would not let him in because he appeared to have been drinking and she was afraid of him.

A police spokesman said no charges will be filed but the case will be routinely referred to the grand jury at its Dec. 1 session.

Congress will try to fight unemployment with highway bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican and Democratic leaders, anxious to combat the nation's 10.4 percent unemployment rate, intend to develop a bipartisan highway jobs bill that can win swift approval in the lame-duck session of Congress.

President Reagan has yet to endorse such a proposal, which congressional officials said Monday would be financed through an unspecified increase in the federal gasoline tax.

But Sen. Howard Baker, R-Tenn., declared: "I think we can work something out and I think the odds are good the president will support something we can work out."

Baker, the top Republican in Congress, commented after meeting with Congress' leading Democrat, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Massachusetts.

"Our first priority must be to put the millions of unemployed back to work," O'Neill said in a written statement after the meeting. "To meet this goal, it is necessary for both parties to work together. Sen. Baker and I agreed today that we would schedule action during the current session on a highway bill."

Baker and O'Neill met to set an agenda for what is expected to be a three-week session of the House and Senate beginning on Nov. 29.

On another issue, Baker said a proposal under consideration at the White House to stimulate the economy by moving up the 10 percent personal income tax cut scheduled for next July is all but dead.

"I think we've already had the debate" on that proposal, he said. Reagan said last week he was considering the idea, but he has not yet formally proposed it, and there is no discernible enthusiasm for it in the House or the Senate.

As for the gasoline tax increase and highway measure, no details were mentioned.

But Baker said he and O'Neill agreed to draft a plan that would be patterned after a proposal that Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis has made to Reagan.

That plan would increase the current 4-cent-a-gallon federal gasoline tax to 9 cents, providing an estimated $5.5 billion for what officials say would be 320,000 jobs for highway and mass transit repair.

Baker and O'Neill pushed the proposal to the top of their agenda because unemployment was a major issue in the November election. Many officials expect joblessness to rise even higher than the current 10.4 percent, and administration officials concede it will remain high by historical standards for many months, even with an economic recovery.

Even so, Martin S. Feldstein, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, cautioned Reagan last week that Lewis' proposal could add to inflation without providing an immediate improvement in the unemployment rate.

While Reagan has not yet approved Lewis' plan for submission to Congress, Baker indicated he expects him to.

But Baker made it plain he intends to push the highway measure anyway. If Reagan opposes it, he said, "I would argue with him."

Baker, talking to reporters after a 45-minute meeting with O'Neill, said the session was marked by an unusual spirit of cooperation.

But there apparently were limits.

O'Neill made it clear that in addition to the highway bill, he intends to push for passage of a second jobs-creating bill in the three-week lame-duck session.

"Sen. Baker will work with us in developing this initiative," O'Neill said in his written statement.

But Baker told reporters that the second measure O'Neill referred to probably would not clear both the House and Senate.

On other issues, Baker and O'Neill agreed the two houses would pass as many of the regular money bills as possible for the current fiscal year, and would enact a catch-all spending bill to take the place of the measures that can't be completed.

Both houses also will debate legislation authorizing the Reagan administration's program of aid to certain Caribbean Basin countries.

In addition, the House will debate legislation requiring all automakers to have a fixed percentage of cars produced in this country.

The Senate will consider legislation to televise its own sessions, a measure that Baker has been trying unsuccessfully to pass for many months.

Ford: Reagan sees need to 'bend a little'

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan has eased his positions on several issues and moved toward the center of "Republican political philosophy," former President Gerald Ford says.

Reagan is moving away from the right because "I think he's recognized that to meet the problems of the real world, to solve the difficulties, he has got to bend a little," Ford said in an interview in today's New York Times.

Ford cited GOP losses in the House of Representatives as one reason for the shift by Reagan.

The former president said he supports Reagan's opposition to "make-work, dead-end jobs" to cut unemployment and "basically" supports Reagan's defense buildup.

He offered Reagan some advice on the 1984 budget, saying the president "must do something affirmatively to reduce the rate of growth in both defense spending and domestic entitlements."

If Reagan does not cut the rate of spending, Ford said, "we're going to have horrendous budget deficits."

Ford, interviewed in his suite at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, was in New York for a meeting of the directors of American Express. Ford has a seat on the board.

Walters makes hit with vets

WASHINGTON (AP) — Harry N. Walters, the civilian Pentagon official chosen by President Reagan to head the Veterans Administration, made a hit in his first meeting with leaders of his constituency — veterans' groups.

"If I had to judge him on what I saw, I'd see he's going to be an outspoken advocate for the veteran," said Cooper Holt, executive director of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

"He's kind of a take-charge guy," said Norman Hartnett of the Disabled American Veterans.

But Mylio Kraja, executive director of the American Legion, was more cautious. "Time will only tell whether he'll be good or bad."

"WE COULD have preferred a war veteran and a Vietnam veteran would have been most logical since they are the most visible of our veterans," Kraja said.

Leaders of organizations of veterans and retired servicemen who attended a meeting with Walters said he pledged to fight for the agency's $25 billion budget. He told them that he — and not budget director David Stockman — would run the VA.

Walters, 46, is an assistant secretary of the Army for manpower and reserve affairs. Previously, he was the chief owner of a paper factory in Potsdam, N.Y.

His confirmation is viewed as certain. A Senate hearing on the nomination is likely to be held during the lame-duck session of Congress after Thanksgiving. If confirmed, he would be the first VA chief who never served in combat.

THE AMERICAN Legion had urged Reagan to select a war veteran — a qualification Walters doesn't meet. But Walters served in the Army from 1959 to 1962 with the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii, Thailand and Laos. He was in the Army Reserves from 1962 until 1968.

Walters would succeed Robert P. Nimmo, a wealthy Californian and Korean War veteran who said last week he decided to resign because "I probably had done as much as I could do here and it was time to go home and take care of my own affairs."

During most of his tenure Nimmo was under fire from veterans groups, who said he was more interested in cutting costs than standing up for veterans.

Walters explained that he quit because he could make more money as a civilian and because he had a family to support.

BUT THURMOND said through a spokesman Monday that he thought Walters would do a fine job and said he would support him for Senate confirmation.

At West Point, Walters played fullback on coach Earl (Red) Blaik's undefeated Army team in 1959.

Good hygiene minimizes danger of contamination

Dear Dr. Solomon: Some time ago you had an item in your column about workers in certain industries who were exposed to chemicals or something like that. These workers brought home chemicals on their clothes so that the whole family was in danger of being sick. My husband works in a foundry and his clothes are covered with all kinds of dust when he gets home from work. I don't know if it's dangerous, but what can he do? He's not trained for any other kind of work. — Mrs. M.V., Detroit

Dear Mrs. V.: You raise an important point. There are people working in all kinds of industries where they are exposed to hazards of one kind or another. But, as you say in your letter, people cannot easily leave one job for another, and the industries themselves are important.

A study of lead workers by Dr. David E. Morton, of the University of Oklahoma Health Science Center, may be of some value. He and his colleagues found that 18 of 34 children of employees of a battery-manufacturing plant had a much higher level of lead in their blood than did a group of 38 children who served as controls. However, when the workers showered, shampooed, and changed their clothes before coming home, the lead levels in their children were about the same as those in the control children.

For people working in industries in which there is a possibility of contamination, therefore, good hygiene habits may minimize the danger to their families.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine had a baby with a cleft lip and palate, and she says that an operation will be done within a couple of months. What does the operation do? And do they really operate on such a young baby? — Millie, Easton, Pa.

Dear Millie: The first surgical repair for cleft lip is usually performed when the infant is about three months old. The cleft palate is usually closed when the infant is from 12 to 18 months old. Additional surgery on the soft palate may be indicated when the child is about four or five years of age.

In general, the aim is to complete the major surgical procedures by the time the child is ready to enter school.

Dear Dr. Solomon: When I was a kid, I remember my mother referring to the funny bone. I don't hear this any more. Doesn't the elbow have a funny bone? — Sam, Detroit

Dear Sam: I assume you are referring to the tingling sensation a person feels when the elbow is struck. This is not caused by a funny bone but by the stimulation of a nerve that runs down the arm and across the elbow.

For Mrs. J.F., Baltimore, Md.: Stimulants are prescribed for some hyperactive youngsters, but the drugs are not always free of side effects. In general, stimulant therapy should be avoided in children with tics, and should be used only with great care in children with a family history of tics. As with many other forms of treatment, the benefits must be carefully weighed against the risks.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Majority of junior high girls fear loss of parent; Boys fear nuclear war

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Junior high school girls fear the death of a parent most, while boys worry first about nuclear war, according to 11,000 young readers responding to a magazine survey.

Forty-two percent of the girls who answered a survey in Read magazine listed the death of a parent as the major fear over which they have no control.

But among boys, 33 percent of those responding said their chief fear is of nuclear war, said Terry Borton, editor in chief of the magazine for junior high school students. Twenty-nine percent of the boys listed a parent's death as their top fear.

Borton said that 20 percent of the seventh-, eighth- and ninth-grade girls responding to the question listed nuclear war as their No. 1 fear.

Of those responding, the top uncontrollable fear was the death of a parent, selected by 37 percent.

"These results knock down a lot of stereotypes about teen-agers," Borton said Monday in a telephone interview from the magazine's offices in Middletown. "Kids are saying they really need their parents and they know it.

"I think that most people would be surprised at these results," he said. "Most people think, 'Well teenagers, you know how they are and none of them get along with their parents.'

"We have seen this pattern come up before. Kids are much more concerned about their parents and respect them a great deal more than you would tend to think by reading newspapers," said Borton, who holds a doctorate in education.

In addressing the fear of a parent dying, a 12-year-old girl from Glendale, Calif., wrote, "I'm terrified to think my mom won't be there when I need her most."

A 12-year-old boy from Lowell, Mass., wrote: "I fear my parents' death because I want to be with them forever."

On nuclear war, a 13-year-old girl from Abbotsford, Wis., said the thought of one "bothers me because I know everyone on earth will die slowly or fast."

A question published in the magazine asked 500,000 readers to write in and list fears over which they have some control and those over which they have no control. The survey appeared at the end of an article discussing fears and phobias, Borton said, and got 11,000 responses.

Of the fears over which students had some control, 16 percent listed the fear of mugging at the top. Other fears the students believed they could control were fears of taking tests, losing friends and being emotionally hurt.

"Sometimes when I see a stranger I feel like he might attack me," wrote a 14-year-old girl from Wellsville, Kan., of her fear of being mugged.

In addition to a parent's death and nuclear war, students listed their own death, a crippling accident or illness and their parents' divorce as sources of fear they can't control.

A 13-year-old boy from St. Clair Shores, Mich., said to be crippled was his worst fear because he "would not be able to play sports or music."

Read magazine is subscribed to by average or above average students from middle-class families, Borton said. It is one of 12 magazines published by Xerox Education Publications, a subsidiary of Xerox Corp.

Stale fallout shelter rations, old medicines sent to starving people, paper reports

CLEVELAND (AP) — Stale fallout shelter rations that zoo keepers refused to feed animals have been sent overseas to starving people, along with deteriorated medicine, a Cleveland newspaper reported today.

Civil Defense kits 20 years old were taken from Los Angeles basements and given to charities for distribution, The Plain Dealer reported in a series on charities.

San Francisco zoo keepers refused the rations, saying they were unfit for animals, the newspaper said.

In 1976, the Civil Defense Preparedness Agency said medicine in fallout shelter kits had deteriorated and should be destroyed and that cereal-based rations probably were rancid, the newspaper said.

Manufacturers of the survival food, Nabisco Inc. and Sunshine Biscuits Inc., recommended that their products not be eaten by people.

In addition, the newspaper said, makers of the Civil Defense drugs said the medicine should have been thrown out when its expiration date passed.

Relief agencies were given the items by Michael J. Regan, civil defense deputy for Los Angeles, the Plain Dealer reported.

"If there is nothing else to use, it is better than nothing at all," Regan said. He said officials in Los Angeles tested the material and found it safe.

He estimated that in the last five years, at least 1 million pounds of the medicine and 3 million pounds of survival food were sent to India, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras, Tibet, Bangladesh, Guatemala, Thailand, Mexico, East Africa and other countries.

Two of the relief group were identified as Food for the Hungry Inc., based in Arizona, and International Christian Aid of California, the Plain Dealer said.

The newspaper reported that an unidentified official of Food for the Hungry said two Arizona laboratories tested the food and found it free of bacterial contamination, but that it was not checked for rancidity.

James Glazier, East Africa director for International Christian Aid, said no expired medicine would be used and that he knew of no problems caused by the food.

"All I can say is the people who ate these had a need for high-protein content. Their health improved, they gained weight," he said.

Dr. Shirley L. Fannin, Los Angeles County associate deputy director for communicable disease and public health programs, said the drugs should not be used.

Your horoscope

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Articulate, scholarly debater-author William F. Buckley Jr. was born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: actor Howard Duff, actress Geraldine Fitzgerald, Los Angeles Dodgers catcher Steve Yeager and basketball's Oscar Robertson. Your earnest and open approach to life will be richly rewarded in the year ahead. Your tolerance of other people's foibles helps you move easily through the corridors of finance and business. Someone influential finds you very refreshing. Make the most of your contacts. Your easy-going attitude keeps romance most satisfying. You find special joy in the time you are able to spend outdoors. Cooperation enhances family gatherings.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Ignore those who are trying to change your mind. Stick to your guns and the financial rewards will emerge. A romantic interlude puts you in touch with your feelings.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not let others sponge off of you! You give free advice to too many people who should be paying for your counsel. Keep a close eye on details.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your idea hits the right note with a new or prospective employer. Make the most of the opening it provides. Go easy on lunch if you are overweight. You need to shape up.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Changes make you conscious of some decisions you must make. Professional advice is more important than usual. Refuse to sign any document you do not understand.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A first-class day for work, business. You get an opportunity to meet someone you have admired from afar. A young person faces a difficult decision. Trust him to make the right choice.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If going on a blind date, you are in for a very pleasant surprise. Do what you can to build your savings. Keep a tight rein on your purse strings when shopping.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Member of opposite sex's desire for attention could be interfering with your ability to do business. Handle the matter quickly. Cooperation brings progress.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Re-evaluate a partnership arrangement. If it isn't working, perhaps one of you can buy out the other. Stop someone who is misusing your name to further his/her political fortunes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Look for a new home if unhappy with your neighbors, but consider all of the costs involved in moving. A proposal takes you by surprise. Refuse to be rushed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your past deeds benefit you now. Try to finish up your work early so you won't have to bother with it over the weekend. Give romance a second chance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your loyalties are divided today. Maybe you should turn down both invitations and spend a quiet Thanksgiving alone with romantic partner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not confuse turmoil with progress. You have tremendous talents if you can just find the right arena for them. Invite someone you have not seen recently to dinner.

After North showed three-card spade support, South knew that he wanted to play slam if his partner held a sufficient number of aces. The Blackwood convention revealed that his partner held two, and South elected to settle in small slam in spades.

West led the top of his diamond sequence, and declarer was delighted with his prospects. Since he could sluff two clubs on dummy's diamonds, it seemed that his slam would depend on finding East with one of the black kings. It was practical to try the trump suit first, so declarer won the diamond in dummy and led a trump to his queen. West ducked smoothly!

Had declarer been the sort of player who takes everything at face value, he would have been defeated. He would have crossed to the ace of hearts and repeated the trump finesse. West would have been able to score his king and exit safely with a heart. Since there were no more entries to dummy, declarer would have been forced to concede a club trick.

Declarer, however, was the sort that wears both suspenders and a belt. He realized that West might be indulging in a bit of trickery, and he found an elegant solution. He overtook the king of hearts with the ace and cashed a high diamond. On this trick he discarded the queen of hearts!

Now declarer led a spade from dummy and, when East showed out, declarer took the ace and gave West his king of trumps. No matter which suit West exited with, declarer would win in dummy and get two club discards on the high diamond and jack of hearts. He could then take the club finesse and, when East turned up with the king, the slam was in the bag.

A disturbing memory

Monday brought some disturbing memories to Americans, particularly and especially Dallas residents. The date marked the 19th anniversary of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy Jr.

On that dreary day in Dallas nearly two decades ago, Kennedy was shot to death as he rode in a car with his wife, Texas Gov. John Connally and Mrs. Connally. The president died a short time later in a Dallas hospital and a nation was swept into grief.

What began on that day nearly two decades ago continues today — a national need to know why John Kennedy died, who killed him and who participated in the death plot if, in fact, a plot existed. The necessity for finding answers to those and more questions is simple: to prevent, if at all possible, future presidential assassinations.

The number of theories to explain the assassination number into the hundreds. Although Lee Harvey Oswald was arrested and accused of killing Kennedy — and subsequently pinpointed by the Warren Commission as having acted alone — many Americans today remain unconvinced. Some theories say Kennedy was the victim of an assassination conspiracy involving the Soviets, the federal government or a number of individuals.

As recently as last year, the body of Oswald was exhumed in Dallas, dispelling a rumor that Oswald's grave held the body of a Russian imposter. The death of John Kennedy remained a mystery; one more assassination theory was discredited.

The assassination of any president is a tragic event. We've seen in recent months how quickly and unexpectedly it can occur (when John Hinckley shot and wounded President Reagan and others in Washington). We've been reminded how fragile is this earthly existence and how abruptly the light of life can be extinguished.

If John Kennedy was alive today — two decades later — it's safe to assume his brand of politics would be out of step with the times. This is the era of fiscal conservatism and social re-adjustment. His was the era of social awakening and civil rights assertion. The two philosophies have not been compatible in past practice, at least.

But John Kennedy's life was cut short before he had the opportunity to leave his full imprint on American society. We may never know the full story behind his death, but it is the duty of Americans to do as much as possible to prevent recurrences of this type of tragedy. His death reminds us that we, as a society, all share the tragedy.

No right to razor blades

It happened in Brooklyn. The principal of a high school got a little worried, as good principals should, that some rather dangerous weapons were being smuggled into his academic premises.

The principal shared his worries with the Board of Education, and they agreed that it was their professional responsibility to find out what was going on. They asked the local police to come in and take a look around. The police made a search of the pupils, and found things that should not be in a Brooklyn high school, or any other, such as:

— Knives.
— Razor blades.
— Iron pipes.
— Karate sticks.

Hundreds of students, feeling that their right to privacy had been intruded upon, rioted. They wrecked the school and beat up a teacher.

Whereupon a community group moved in and charged the principal and the Board of Education with "provoking a riot."

The courts can settle that. We stand with the principal and the school board, however, in believing that the right to privacy does not include the right to carry razor blades into the classroom.

Another View:

A significant move

As editor-in-chief of the Communist Party newspaper Pravda, Viktor G. Afanasyev is much more than a news executive. He is about as authoritative a spokesman for the Kremlin as you can find. So his remarks to a delegation of visiting Japanese journalists provide an interesting insight into the current conversations between the Soviets and the Chinese.

"It is possible," Afanasyev said cautiously, that China and the Soviet Union "might promise each other a reduction of military forces in border areas."

In the last few days, both Soviet and Chinese officials have gone out of their way to reaffirm their interest in continuing the talks — aimed at improving relations between the two Communist powers — that began last month before Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev's death.

On Wednesday, Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua, who went to Moscow to attend Brezhnev's funeral, spent 90 minutes with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko for talks that were held in an atmosphere that was officially described as "candid but peaceful." It was the highest-level meeting between representatives of the two countries in 13 years.

Diplomats assume that Huang's purpose in going to Moscow was in part to seize the chance to assess the atmosphere in the Soviet capital after Brezhnev's death. No doubt both the Chinese and the Soviets also hope to gain leverage in their dealings with Washington by making a public show of their willingness to narrow their differences. Afanasyev's remarks suggest, however, more substantial considerations almost certainly are involved. Yuri V. Andropov, who has succeeded Brezhnev as leader of the Soviet Communist Party, inherits grave economic problems, including a manpower shortage. Because of gross inefficiencies in agriculture, 23 percent of the Soviet work force is tied down in farming, far more than in any advanced Western country. The total work force will grow only 0.4 percent annually in the decade ahead.

Meanwhile, according to Western analysts, the Soviet Union has about 750,000 troops deployed along the border with China. To the degree that this troop presence was reduced, the Kremlin could — if it so decided — free substantial resources of men and money for the hard-pressed economy.

The "if" is important. The Soviets might instead transfer troops from the Chinese border to the frontier with Western Europe or to Afghanistan. Either step would be bad news for the West and a blow to hopes for better East-West relations.

It is unlikely that the Soviets and the Chinese are near a comprehensive settlement of their differences. The Chinese have demanded not only a reduction of Soviet forces on their northern border but also Soviet military withdrawal from Afghanistan and an end to Soviet support for the Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia.

But, while the two sides seemingly remain far apart, their contacts this week may well herald a new, more intensive effort to patch things up. Considering the effect of Sino-Soviet relations on the global balance of power, it is potentially a development of major importance.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Indian group target of shady federal action

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department will apparently go to any lengths to discredit the American Indian Movement.

Jack Anderson

Congressional investigations in the mid-1970s revealed that Indian activists were among the targets of the FBI's illegal domestic spying campaign, COINTELPRO — for counterintelligence program. And last August I reported that government prosecutors used false affidavits to extradite AIM leader Leonard Peltier from Canada; the woman who provided the contradictory sworn statements later recanted, saying she had been coerced by the FBI.

Concerning the Peltier case and other prosecutions brought against AIM leaders, Amnesty International concluded in a 1981 report that the FBI "appears willing to fabricate evidence against its 'targets' and withhold information which, according to law, should have been disclosed."

Now there's another questionable case, arising from the murder last July of Clarence Tollefson at Camp Yellow Thunder, an 800-acre AIM camp in the Black Hills of South Dakota. An Indian named Collins Catch-the-Bear has been indicted by a state grand jury for first-degree murder; he has pleaded not guilty.

The state produced two key witnesses at the preliminary hearing in September. Both charged that camp members and their attorney were trying to cover up the murder.

One witness, Sam Lone Wolf, also told radio and television interviewers that AIM activists were running guns into Camp Yellow Thunder and had received military training in Cuba. Camp members deny this, noting that few of them even have passports.

Lone Wolf's story was contradictory in one important respect. At the hearing, he testified that Catch-the-Bear had rubbed dirt on the door handles of the victim's car to obscure fingerprints. But in earlier grand jury testimony, Lone Wolf identified another man as the one who had rubbed dirt on the handles.

Confronted with this discrepancy at the hearing, Lone Wolf said: "I didn't state that ... I been over the transcripts and there's a lot of things there that I did not state."

Lone Wolf's background is bothersome, to the point where AIM members suspect that he is a federal informer. At the hearing, for example, he said he had been involved with the movement for eight years, and had marched in AIM's Trail of Broken Treaties march "early last year."

AIM members say Lone Wolf has never been part of their organization, and point out that the march in question actually took place in 1972, not last year. They also question his self-proclaimed credentials claiming to be of "Oglala and Taos" descent, and identifying his tribe as part of the Navajo nation. AIM members say the Oglalas are not part of the Navajo nation; they claim Lone Wolf is Hispanic.

Catch-the-Bear also faces federal charges for allegedly escaping from a halfway house in Rapid City. Lone Wolf is a government witness in that case as well and has been paid witness fees.

Adding to the mystery of Lone Wolf is the information given to my associate John Dillon by a Colorado karate instructor and Indian rights activist, Ron Rosen. He said he knew Lone Wolf as Joseph Lee, who had entered a karate tournament organized by Rosen and paid the entry fee with a bad check.

Rosen added that he had heard from friends that Lone Wolf-Lee was claiming to have been best man at Rosen's wedding and his karate sparring partner — neither of which was true. Rosen believes Lee invoked his supposed friendship as a way of getting close to AIM members.

Lone Wolf was sent at government expense to Hawaii, where an attorney tried to get him into the federal witness protection program. But the prosecutor in the Tollefson murder case, Rod Lefholtz, said the state has decided it will probably not call Lone Wolf as a witness at the trial.

At last report, Lone Wolf was in the Denver County Jail on burglary charges under the name Joseph Lee, "also known as Lone Wolf, Sammy."

Footnote: The other government witness during Catch-the-Bear's preliminary hearing was James Lee Jones, a convicted murderer who escaped from a federal prison last year. In return for Jones' testimony, the escape charges against him were dropped and he was admitted into the federal witness protection program. The federal and state governments also agreed to "assist Jones in obtaining parole as soon as possible."

DAMNED WITH LOUD PRAISE: Rumor has it that the East German border guards assigned to "Checkpoint Charlie," on the main road between Berlin and the West, win medals for obnoxious behavior. The reverse may actually be true, as NATO officers discovered when a particularly rude and obstructive guard was assigned to the checkpoint last year.

Instead of protesting and possibly assuring the man a gold star on his service record, the Allied officers tried a bit of negative psychology at the next liaison meeting with the communist authorities.

They praised the new guard to the skies as the most courteous, helpful member of the checkpoint team. He had even given a Frenchman a wonderful recipe for schnitzel, they said. The American commander added he was happy to see the East Germans becoming more cooperative.

The sneak attack worked. The next day, the obnoxious border guard was gone.

INSIDE REPORT:

European policy riding on West German vote

BONN, West Germany — Three months before an election crucial to U.S. policy in Europe, the stability of West German politics faces an ominous challenge unique in post-war history and squarely based on the "stab-in-the-back" charge against Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher by his party's former coalition partner, the Social Democrats (SPD).

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

When Genscher took his Free Democratic Party (FDP) out of the coalition run by SPD chancellor Helmut Schmidt and joined the new coalition with Chancellor Helmut Kohl and his conservative Christian Democrats (CDU), Genscher was marked for extinction by the SPD. That set up a personal vendetta against Genscher which Franz-Josef Strauss, the powerful leader of Kohl's party in Bavaria, has gleefully joined with his formidable resources.

Strauss wants — and many here think he deserves — Genscher's job as vice chancellor and foreign minister under Kohl after the March election. He could get it only if Genscher's party fails to achieve 5 percent of the vote necessary under the constitution for any party to enter Parliament.

Hence the unique and potentially-destabilizing forces in play as Helmut Kohl's party enters the campaign to confirm the conservative chancellor's right to run West Germany by popular vote, following the parliamentary coup d'etat of Oct. 1. In the background is the new and much-feared hyper-liberal Green Party, which established a parliamentary foothold in several state elections earlier this year.

Kohl's senior advisers say privately that the chances are not much greater than 20 percent that the Greens, an anti-establishment party that embodies organized chaos and has no regular leadership, can gain the 5 percent of the national vote necessary to sit in the Bundestag (Parliament).

Nevertheless, the personal vendettas against Genscher being waged with angry intensity by both Schmidt and Strauss are exploiting the "stab-in-the-back" charge. Whether 20 percent chance or more, if the Greens get a toehold in the Bundestag, Genscher's party does not, and the conservatives fail to reach an absolute majority, the result could be a coalition between the socialists and the Greens. That is the spectre that looms over the most critical election here in the life of the federal republic.

Such a left-wing coalition would mean disaster for next summer's deployment of modern nuclear weapons on European soil. With Schmidt having resigned his leadership of the Socialist Party, the SPD Left is riding high. The Greens started as environmentalist groupies but now include the strongest elements of the "peace movement" dedicated to blocking deployment of the new missiles and making "peace" with Moscow.

Chancellor Kohl has moved rapidly and skillfully to consolidate his new power. Perceived by some casual critics the past decade as a victim of "provincialism" who lacked the stature of a Schmidt or a Strauss, Kohl is exhibiting a subtle shrewdness and a zest for making tough decisions. He surprised Cabinet colleagues by speedily ordering a huge cut in the social-services budget of around $2 billion. He acted fast in approving expenditures for NATO that Schmidt's coalition was prepared to drop. "I would say," U.S. Ambassador Aruthur Burns told a friend, "That Helmut Kohl looks like a prince."

While Strauss employs every political device to undermine Genscher and deny the Free Democrats their 5 percent vote, Kohl supports his vice chancellor. To prepare his country for the coming trauma of new Pershing missiles, Kohl wants his coalition with Genscher to continue in order to show broad electoral support. Kohl and the muscular leader of his Bavarian wing are thus split on a fundamental issue: Strauss because he believes himself essential to the foreign policy success of the new government but cannot gain the post of foreign secretary over Genscher's claim; Kohl because post-war history shows that one-party government rarely works in West Germany.

Genscher and his small Free Democratic Party were shattered by their baldly self-serving decision to leave Schmidt and join Kohl in the new coalition. At the party's recent conference, Genscher won a scant 55 percent approval to continue as party leader. Wholesale defections have reduced the party's national strength to about 3 percent — well below the 5 percent needed to remain in the Bundestag and the coalition.

It is against this ugly crossfire of political acrimony that the campaign for the March election is being waged. For the U.S. and the West, the stakes could hardly be greater.

CHARLEY REESE

'Individual' rights should be stressed

In the beginning and at the end and in between, there is only the individual. Collectives are fictions created by a few individuals to manipulate or exploit other individuals.

Charley Reese

The fact that individuals divide and sell their labor and barter the results or cooperate does not change this fundamental truth.

For example, take a city park with a lake in it. In popular fiction it is "owned" by the residents of the city. In reality, it is owned by a specific corporate entity, the city government, which only permits individual residents to use it for specified purposes under specified conditions. All of the individual residents, however, are taxed to support it whether they use it or not.

An individual resident who is hungry and needs to grow turnips or to catch a fish would not be allowed to do either. This leads us to a simple definition of ownership, which is the right to use something as you choose.

Take, for example, a small river. The popular fiction is that a river is owned by all the people of a state. This, of course, is an impossibility. If anyone owns a river, it is the people who own the banks. If the river floods or goes dry, they will be affected. People two hundred miles away will not.

Public ownership in reality means government ownership. Since government is an organization of bureaucrats led by politicians, one of two things must happen in the management of so-called public resources: They will either be managed according to the theories of the hired hands, the bureaucrats, or they will be managed to serve the interests of those with the most political influence. Neither one seems particularly desireable.

People who imagine there are altruistic bureaucrats and politicians who seek to serve only the public good are naive. In the first place, it is impossible to arrive at a rational definition of public good since no public in reality exists — only individuals. All this is possible, occasionally, is a consensus of individual opinions on a few important issues.

Little effort is made these days to form a genuine consensus. What we have is the spectacle of organizations, claiming to speak for groups of individuals, competing and propagandizing for their selfish interests. Since nothing is without a price, any benefit granted to one gang of individuals can only be at the expense of other individuals.

We should dispense with fictions and approach every political question on the basis of reality-bound criteria: How does this affect all individuals? How does it affect the ownership of property?

The latter is important because no individual can achieve a state of true independence without the ownership of property. A person without property is necessarily dependent on others for his survival.

We are constantly bombarded with propaganda couched in terms of fictional collectives. We are told we must do this for "the elderly," that for the "poor," this for "women" that for "minorities." There do not exist any entities known as elderly, poor, women, or minorities. There exist only individuals, 230 million of them, each one of them different.

Each individual should stand before the law equal in his rights and equal in his responsibilities. No one is entitled to any special privileges granted by politicians at the expense of other individuals.

To restore justice to our communities, we must end quota systems, class action lawsuits, and the dispensing of special favors and privileges to groups on the basis of political influence.

We are born, we live, and we die individually. We must go back to a system in which we govern our affairs on the basis of individuals instead of collectives. The alternative is a steady evolution toward a totalitarian form of collectivism in which all rights and privileges belong to the group. Since the group is a fiction, what that means is that all rights and privileges belong to the rulers who claim to represent the group.

Scientists seek clues to mystery of why whales commit suicide

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Marine biologists are hopeful that information learned from the 65 pilot whales that beached themselves on Cape Cod last week will help unravel the mystery of why these giant sea creatures commit mass suicide.

Aristotle wrote about whale strandings more than 2,000 years ago, but scientists still do not have a good idea of why they occur. It is one more of life's little puzzles, like what to do about a bad back and how to fix the economy.

"It's a true enigma," said John Prescott, director of the New England Aquarium in Boston, which runs a worldwide Stranding Network to study these incidents. The Aquarium is coordinating the investigation of the whales that stranded themselves and died on the beach at Wellfleet, Mass., last Tuesday.

"It's not well understood," agreed Don Wilkie, director of the aquarium and museum at the Scripps Institute of Oceanography in La Jolla, Calif. "If you tow them off, they will continue to turn back and strand themselves again."

The theory currently in vogue is that the strandings are a behavioral response to some stimulus and are not caused by a pathological or anatomical malfunction. What the stimulus might be is anybody's guess.

Wilkie said he thinks the beachings occur when panic seizes the whales or, perhaps, just their leaders. "It's a reaction akin to cattle and sheep stampeding," he theorized. The beached whales remain panicked, so if they are dragged back into the water, they respond the same way.

"It may be due to a leader or a couple of leaders of the group being ill or disoriented, in some way causing the whole group to follow them into shore," said Karen Moore, a member of the Marine Mammals Project at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution in Woods Hole, Mass.

But, Prescott said, 50 of the 65 whales that died at Wellfleet have been examined, and none was sick. "These guys are robust, healthy appearing," he said, "If there's a leader who's sick who leads them ashore, we haven't found an abnormality yet."

The mass strandings, Prescott said, are quite different from individual strandings, which typically do involve sick animals. In single strandings, he said, "We generally find the cause of death: heart attack, liver-kidney failure, stroke."

For several years it was thought that mass strandings were caused by parasites in the whales' ears, which inhibited their hearing and their sonar faculties. The trouble is, many healthy whales have been found with parasites in their ears, and post-mortem examinations of parasite-infested whales has turned up no impairment of their hearing.

Furthermore, in the current group, no parasites were found in the whale's ears.

"Basically, it's not a pathological condition which causes this," Wilkie said. "It's a behavioral response."

Another theory is that the whales are feeding close to shore when they get confused by the tide and their prey, which lead them to shore. Here again, examination of the latest group of whales shows that their stomachs were empty and that they had not fed for several hours before they died.

One clue now being pursued involves the site of the beaching. In 1930 and 1957, large groups of whales were stranded in exactly the same spot, suggesting that there is something about its topography that draws the sea animals. Cape Cod has many coves and a strong tide, which could contribute to the phenomenon.

Judge rules on creationism

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The state attorney general says he will appeal a federal judge's ruling striking down Louisiana's law requiring public schools to teach creationism along with evolution.

U.S. District Judge Adrian Duplantier ruled Monday that the Legislature had no authority under the state Constitution to enact the law.

Duplantier passed no judgment on the larger issue of whether the law violates federal constitutional separation of church and state.

The ruling came on a motion for summary judgment sought by the state Board of Elementary and Secondary Education, which oversees the public school system. The board said that it, not the Legislature, has the authority under the state Constitution to order what courses are given.

DUPLANTIER agreed, adding the Legislature also erred by "dictating to public schools not only that a subject must be taught, but also how it must be taught."

The 1981 law required that whenever evolution is taught in public schools, creationism be given equal time.

Creationism holds that scientific evidence supports the Biblical account of creation. Evolution says life appeared gradually over a much longer time and continues to change.

The education board's motion that brought the ruling was filed during a challenge to the law mounted by the American Civil Liberties Union, which contended the law was a thinly disguised attempt to teach religion in public schools.

It was scheduled to have taken effect this fall, but was delayed by the legal challenge.

ATTORNEY General William Guste said he would appeal the ruling to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which could pass the issue to the Louisiana Supreme Court for a ruling.

The author of the 1981 law, state Sen. Bill Keith of Shreveport, said he would support an appeal.

"I think the judge is wrong," said Keith. "I think the judge's decision was a perfunctory one."

At a Monday afternoon news conference, the attorney general said the state has spent approximately $100,000 in defense of the law, not counting staff time. He said an appeal would cost nothing until a hearing is held, probably in six months to a year.

Last week, the Legislature for a second time rejected Guste's request for a $100,000 special appropriation to cover expenses caused by the legal fight.

MARTHA KEGEL, director of the Louisiana ACLU chapter, said, "We see this as a complete vindication of our position, and for every citizen that cares about quality education."

She said 33 other states have a state board with the powers claimed by the Louisiana panel.

The only other state to enact a creationism law was Arkansas, whose version was struck down as unconstitutional by a federal judge earlier this year.

The two rulings establish "a consistent pattern that creationism cannot be imposed on public schools," Ms. Kegel said.

Esperanza Medrano, mother of Dallas city councilman Robert Medrano, waits to place a flower arrangement on the John F. Kennedy memorial in downtown Dallas Monday. The city held a brief noon session honoring the late president, who was assassinated a few hundred yards from the memorial site Nov. 22, 1963.

Harrelson: Payoff money part of scam

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Charles Harrelson says he can explain away all the testimony and evidence prosecutors presented to show he killed U.S. District Judge John H. Wood for a briefcase full of $100 bills.

The money, he testified Monday, was simply the result of his life-long friend George Edward "Pete" Kay seizing the opportunity to give Harrelson credit for the assassination in a scheme to bilk high-rolling narcotics kingpin Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra out of his money.

It was simply coincidence, he said, that his wife's car was parked at the airport in San Antonio on the day before Wood was killed and two weeks earlier was parked at the Midland airport, where prosecutors allege Harrelson was stalking Wood.

HE SAID HE had never seen lawyer Chrys Lambros or taxi driver Wesley Coddington, two witnesses who testified they saw him in San Antonio hours before Wood's death.

Harrelson is accused of killing Wood on May 29, 1979, for a $250,000 payoff from Chagra, who is now serving a 30-year no-parole federal narcotics sentence.

Prosecutors contend Chagra paid Harrelson to kill Wood because he feared the judge, nicknamed "Maximum John" because of the stiff sentences he gave drug offenders, would sentence him to life in prison.

Harrelson is on trial with his wife, Jo Ann Starr Harrelson, and with Chagra's wife, Elizabeth. Mrs. Harrelson, 41, is charged with conspiring to obstruct justice. Mrs. Chagra, 28, is accused of conspiring to kill Wood and to obstruct justice. Chagra, 39, will be tried later for murder.

Kay "told me that Jimmy had so much money he didn't count it — he weighed it," Harrelson told the jury Monday. "Reports were coming back to Texas how much money he was blowing and how everybody was tricking him out of his money."

HARRELSON DESCRIBED himself as one of the best "card mechanics" in the world and said he went to Las Vegas in April 1979 to cheat Chagra either at gambling or with a phony drug scam.

He said it was not until after he appeared before a federal grand jury in October 1979 and denied killing Wood that Kay told him he had claimed credit for the assassination as part of a scheme to cheat Chagra out of money.

Harrelson was convicted and imprisoned for 10 years for the contract killing of a Texas grain dealer and he said Kay used that conviction to convince Chagra Harrelson also had killed Wood.

Harrelson said he believed the stacks of $100 bills he received from Chagra were the payment on a phony narcotics deal until Kay told him the real purpose of the money was to pay for a murder contract on Henry Wallace, the key prosecution witness in Chagra's pending drug trial.

"I really couldn't believe Pete was really saying this to me," Harrelson testified. "I told him I didn't think I wanted to have anything to do with it."

HE SAID WHEN HE asked Kay why anyone thought he would kill Wallace, Kay told him for the first time that he told Chagra that Harrelson had killed Wood.

" 'I saw a chance to do something to get in his pocket, so I told him (Chagra) that it was you (Harrelson) who killed Judge Wood,' " Harrelson quoted Kay as saying five months after Wood was killed.

Joseph Chagra, who pleaded guilty to conspiring to kill Wood, testified earlier that his brother, Jimmy, was a "braggart and bombastic liar" who put a price on Wood's head while throwing hundreds of thousands of dollars around on Las Vegas card and dice tables in the spring of 1979.

Joseph Chagra said both his brother and Harrelson had admitted to him their participation in the plot to kill Wood.

But in tapes of conversations between the brothers at the Leavenworth Federal Penitentiary, both said more than a year after the killing they were not actually sure Harrelson fired the fatal shot.

Harrelson said his wife's car was in the Midland and San Antonio airport parking lots because he had loaned it to Kay in Midland and Kay drove it to San Antonio and left it at the airport. He said he flew to San Antonio and drove the car back to Dallas on the day before Wood was killed.

Two men held without bond in death of teen

DALLAS (AP) — Two men were being held without bond today in the weekend shooting death of a teenage grocery store clerk who was gunned down by a single shot to the forehead.

A former used-car salesman from Tyler was arrested Monday after he went to police headquarters to answer questions, investigators said.

The man appeared before Municipal Court Judge Howard Banks, who ordered him held without bond pending an investigation. Police allege the man drove a car used in the robbery.

Lane was described by police as a drifter. Police prepared charges of one count of capital murder and two counts of attempted capital murder, said police spokesman Bob Shaw.

Police records showed Lane was paroled in 1981 from the Louisiana State Prison after serving more than eight years of a 15-year sentence for manslaughter.

He also is wanted by San Antonio police on two warrants alleging robbery by assault, police said.

MCALLEN (AP) — A Mexican man remains in the Hidalgo County jail in lieu of $100,000 bond after appearing before a federal magistrate on marijuana trafficking charges that stem from an aborted smuggling attempt.

Benjamin Requina Quintero, 39, of Los Guerra, Mexico, appeared before U.S. Magistrate Susan Williams Monday on charges of importing and conspiring to import about 161 pounds of marijuana, possession with intent to deliver and conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute the substance, said magistrate clerk Olga Sauceda.

Requina was arrested by U.S. Customs agents Friday shortly before a gunbattle erupted as agents attempted to round up a group of would-be marijuana smugglers near Fronton.

One suspect died in the shootout and two customs agents were wounded.

Customs officer Robert Steele was listed in good condition at Edinburg General Hospital with a bullet wound in the right shoulder, said house supervisor Claudia Collingnon.

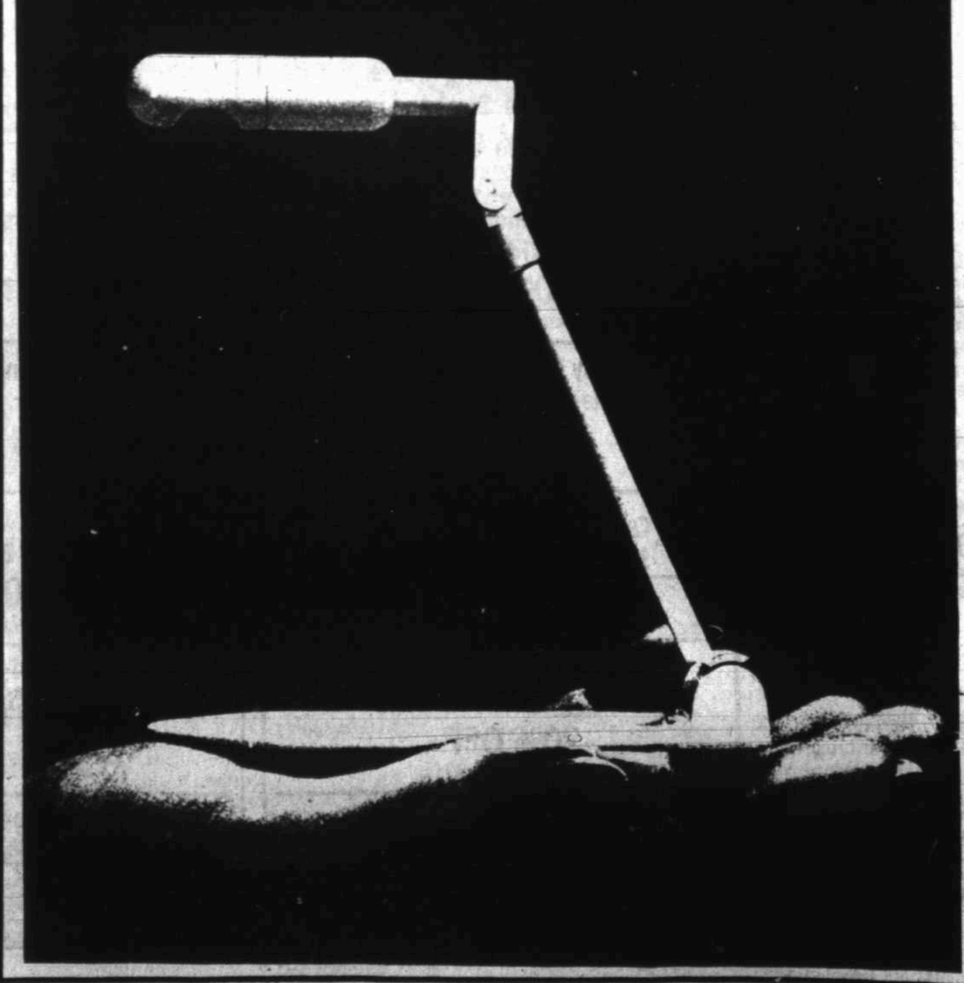

The shootout occurred when customs agents discovered a group of men transporting marijuana across the Rio Grande about 6:30 p.m. Friday.

Another man, Artemio Belmontes Jr., appeared before the magistrate on a charge of assualt on a federal officer and interfering with that officer's duty. Ms. Williams set bond at $40,000 for Belmontes, who was arrested Friday night.

Rene Tanguma Guerra of Los Guerra, identified as the group's leader, was killed by officer Steele after Guerra attacked Steele and other agents while trying to escape, said customs supervisor Guadalupe Alderete.

Lady Rebels win; boys drop opener

For the girls at Midland Lee, the opening night of the 1982-83 basketball season was a successful one as they posted three one-sided victories over Ozona in Ozona Monday night while the boys opened with a .500 performance at Sweetwater.

The Lady Rebels posted a 60-25 varsity victory over the Ozona Lions for a 1-0 record with junior Felicia Farias leading the way with 12 points, senior Yshun King contributing 10, Queen Sanders nine and Deanda Rhodes eight. Kay Williams led Ozona with eight points.

"We did a good job," said Lee coach Shirley Stephenson, "the kids are coming along real fine. Everybody gave a supreme effort and that's all I can ask of them I think."

Diane White and Tunya Mayberry led the junior varsity to a 53-21 victory with 15 and 11 points respectively while Tricia Sullivan and Brenda Hatch each contributed 10 toward the sophomore's 46-8 win. Like their varsity counterparts, the JV and sophs are 1-0.

Tonight, the Lee girls will be traveling to Del Rio for 4:30 and 6:30 JV and varsity action.

THE LEE boy's varsity team suffered a hard loss in their season opener Monday night as Sweetwater posted a 53-47 varsity victory over the Rebels following Lee's 50-48 win in JV play.

The game was knotted at the end of the first and second quarters, 10-10 and 20-20 and Lee held a one-point edge going into the final frame, 34-33. The Mustangs outpointed the Rebels 20-13 in the fourth quarter to claim the victory.

"My kids hustled real well," said Lee mentor Paul Stueckler. "They (Sweetwater) had two 6-foot-5 players out there and they outrebounded us. We had a three-point lead with about three minutes to play and they got a steal on us and scored before we could spread the floor (a version of the four-corner offense)."

Tyrone Thurman, a 5-foot-6 sophomore guard, led the Rebel scoring attack with 12 points while junior Alvin Henry added 11 and Bryan White was a distant third with six points. For Sweetwater, Randy Elder scored 13 and Earl Carrington added 12.

For the Lee junior varsity, Eddie Rabb and Willie Long scored 10 and nine points respectively to set the pace for the two-point victory.

Tonight, the Lee sophomores will cross town to take on Midland High at 6 p.m. at MHS gym while the boys have a few days off to enjoy Thanksgiving before playing host for the Tall City Tournament at Midland College on Friday and Saturday.

IN OTHER high school basketball action Monday night, Greenwood's varsity posted a 60-53 victory over Midland High on the Rangers' home court in the season opener for both teams.

The Ranger girls defeated the San Angelo Central varsity 52-38.

Tonight, Greenwood will host Sundown with a girl's game scheduled at 6:30 followed by the boys at 8:30.

For Midland High, the next JV matchup is scheduled for Monday when both the varsity and junior varsity travel to Plainview for games at 6:15 and 8 p.m.

Raiders win with 'Monday Night Magic'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After nearly half of their first National Football League regular-season game in Los Angeles as the home team, it appeared the Raiders needed some magic to escape with a victory. That's exactly what they got.

The Raiders overcame a 24-0 deficit to defeat the San Diego Chargers 28-24 at the Los Angeles Coliseum, raising their record in nationally televised Monday night games over the years to 19-2-1.

"I don't know what it is about Monday night football," said Flores after his team raised its record to 3-0. "We're very proud of our Monday night record. Monday night football just brings out the best in us."

It didn't for most of the first half. The Chargers were in complete control until Ted Hendricks recovered a fumble by Chuck Muncie at the San Diego 17-yard line with less than two minutes to play in the first half.

That was the beginning of the end for the Chargers, who fell to 1-2 in the strike-interrupted season.

The game completed the first weekend of action for the NFL's 28 teams following the 57-day players' strike.

Before the strike, the Raiders had played both of their games on the road. A Superior Court jury ruled last May that the team had the right to move from Oakland to Los Angeles, which it hurriedly did during the summer.

Following the fumble recovery by Hendricks, it took the Raiders five plays to get on the scoreboard for the first time. Quarterback Jim Plunkett fired a 1-yard scoring pass to tight end Todd Christensen on a fourth-and-goal play with 36 seconds remaining in the half.

Rookie tailback Marcus Allen of the Raiders, returning to the site of many of his greatest games while playing for the University of Southern California, scored twice in the third period on runs of 3 and 6 yards.

Then, following a missed 33-yard field goal by San Diego's Rolf Benirschke, the Raiders drove 80 yards in nine plays for the game-winning TD, which came on a 1-yard run by Frank Hawkins with 5:54 left to play in the game.

"We do play well on Monday nights, and not too bad on Sundays either," said Plunkett, who completed 18 of 25 passes for 163 yards. "Our play-calling wasn't the best in the first half. They gave us a lot of different looks and we made several mistakes. In the second half, we had the angles and blocked well."

The Chargers scored on their first two possessions, getting a 19-yard field goal by Benirschke and a 29-yard scoring pass from Dan Fouts to Dwight Scales. Muncie ran 2 yards for one touchdown and plunged 1 yard for another in the second period to give San Diego its 24-0 lead.

The Raiders won despite Fouts passing for more than 300 yards in a game for the 26th time in his 10-year NFL career, equaling the record of Johnny Unitas. Fouts finished with 25 completions in 42 attempts for 357 yards.

Following Hawkins' touchdown, the Chargers moved to the Los Angeles 18-yard line. But Vann McElroy intercepted a pass in the Raider end zone with 1:56 remaining.

The Chargers had one more chance when Ray Guy of the Raiders couldn't handle a snap from center while trying to punt and was tackled at the Los Angeles 30 with four seconds left, but a desperation pass by Fouts into the end zone fell incomplete.

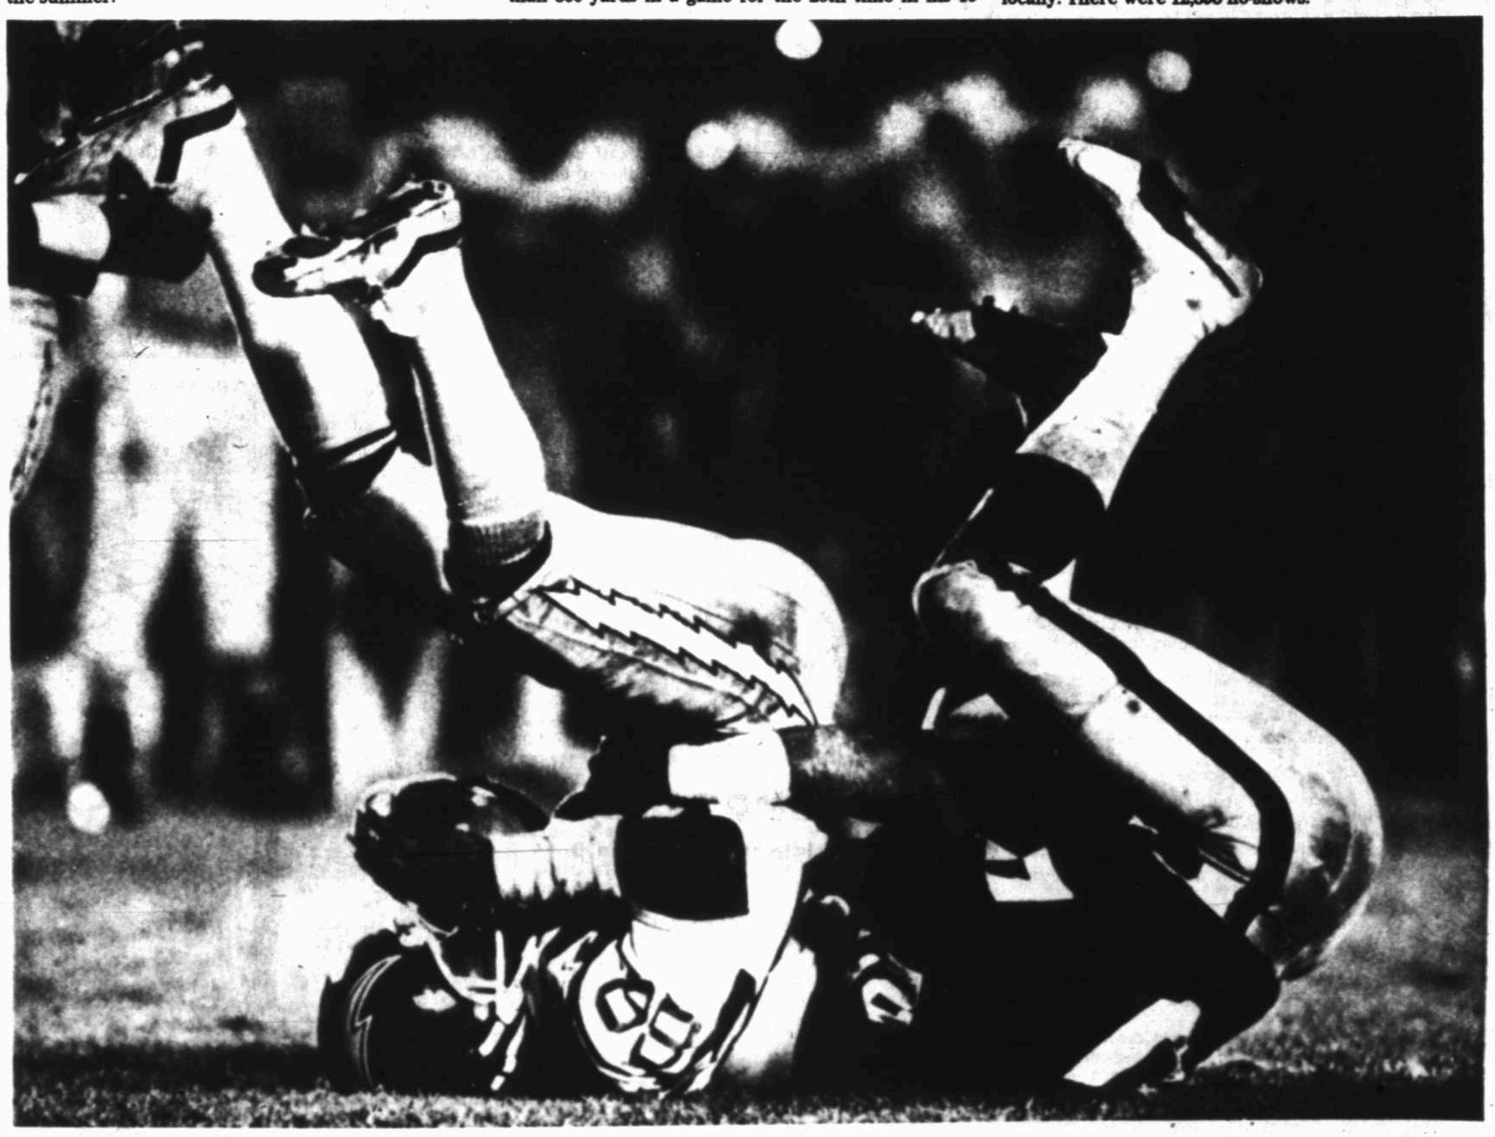

"It was a bitter pill to swallow," said San Diego Coach Don Coryell. "You have to, of course, give the Raiders great credit the way they came back and played the second half.

"I thought we looked great the first half, not so good the second. They were in the same situation we were, everybody got a little tired in the second half."

Allen led all rushers in the game with 87 yards on 18 carries. Kenny King added 68 yards on 13 attempts.

"We just stayed with our game plan," said Flores. "We didn't panic. We just felt we could put pressure on their defense and had some great play from our running backs. It was a very fine game. It was fun."

A crowd of 42,162, well below capacity of about 72,500, attended the game, which also was televised locally. There were 12,898 no-shows.

San Diego Chargers' wide reciever Wes Chandler and Los Angeles Raiders' cornerback Ted Watts seem to be cooling their heals during Monday nights NFL clash in Los Angeles. Actually Watts just tackled Chandler after the former Gator hauled in a pass from quarterback Dan Fouts in first quarter action. The Raiders came back from a 24-0 halftime deficit to win the game 28-24.

Georgia still No. 1, SMU drops to fourth

By Associated Press

Penn State's jump from third to second in the latest Associated Press college football poll may have set the stage for a New Year's night showdown in the Sugar Bowl for the national championship between the Nittany Lions and top-ranked Georgia.

But Penn State Coach Joe Paterno says the real national title game may be played Friday in State College, Pa., when the Lions battle fifth-rated Pittsburgh for Eastern supremacy.

"I think the winner of the Pitt-Penn State game should play for the national championship — and it still may work out that way," Paterno said. "We're in the same boat Pitt is. This is a big game for both of us."

The Panthers, ranked first for a portion of the season, will play No. 4 Southern Methodist in the Cotton Bowl Jan. 1.

"We still think we can win all the marbles," Coach Foge Fazio said. "We want to win so we can justify the faith the Cotton Bowl has in us."

"We'll have revenge on our minds," said Pitt tackle Jimbo Covert. "But revenge can only go so far. Ability has to take over after a while."

Georgia, the nation's only unbeaten, untied major college team, is seeking its second national title in three seasons. The Bulldogs were a near unanimous choice in this week's balloting, receiving 52 of 57 first place votes and 1,133 of a possible 1,140 points.

Penn State got two first-place votes and 1,057 points. Nebraska, a loser only to the Nittany Lions, climbs to No. 3 with the other three first place votes and 1,018 points.

SMU fell to fourth with a 10-0-1 record and 969 points, while Pitt collected 898 points after its 52-6 rout of Rutgers.

LSU climbed to seventh place from No. 12 with 749 points after its 55-21 rout of Florida State. The victory earned LSU a trip to the Orange Bowl, where the opponent will be the winner of Friday's Big Eight battle between Nebraska and No. 11 Oklahoma.

Rounding out the Top Ten were UCLA, Arkansas and Clemson, while Washington dropped from fifth to 13th after losing to Washington State 24-20 and Florida State fell from seventh to 15th.

UCLA, No.11 last week, went to eighth with 706 points by edging Southern California 20-19. Arkansas remained in ninth place with 676 points and defending national champion Clemson, handed stiff penalties Monday by the NCAA for recruiting violations, held 10th place with 654 points by downing South Carolina 24-6.

The Second Ten consisted of Oklahoma, West Virginia, Washington, Texas, Florida State, Maryland, Southern Cal, Ohio State, Tulsa and Michigan.

Notre Dame fell out of the Top Twenty by losing to bowl-bound Air Force 30-17. Ohio State moved back into the rankings after an eight-week absence by defeating Michigan 24-14. Tulsa moved from No. 20 to No. 19 with a 10-1 record, despite not getting a bowl invitation.

The Top Twenty teams in The Associated Press college football poll, with first-place votes in parentheses, season records and total points. Points based on 20-19-18-17-16-15-14-13-12-11-10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1:

Reagan County advances to regionals

Stanton, Andrews suffer losses, drop out of playoffs

Defense was the name of the game for Reagan County as the Owls upset New Deal 7-0 in the class AA area state playoff championship game in Snyder Friday.

The Owls held New Deal three times inside the five yardline, the final time with 28 seconds left in the game, making good their lone first quarter touchdown by tailback Gregg Fisher.

Fisher was the defensive hero on the last stand as he intercepted a fourth down pass by Lions quarterback Craig Harrington to preserve the win.

"I saw the reciever in the corner of my eye coming across the field so I stopped and their quarterback threw the ball right at me," Fisher said of his game-saving interception.

It was only the second shutout of the year for Reagan County, which has given up an average of 22.3 points per game.

"Our defense has been suspect all year so it's only fitting that the defense wins this one for us," said Owls head coach Richard Davis.

The victory marked the first time this season that the Owls have had a winning record as they improved to 6-5-1. New Deal finished 9-2-1.

The game's only score came on a 53-yard drive that took only 11 plays. Fullback Howard Williams busted for 12 yards to get things started. Fisher added a 14-yard burst to put the Owls on the 18. After Williams gained a yard, Fisher went wide, broke a couple of tackles and outran the pursuit to give the Owls the precious touchdown.

The Lions came storming back, driving 82 yards in 15 plays. With a first and goal on the two, the Lions tried to punch the ball over and gained one yard. Harrington then threw two incompletions. On fourth down he was chased out of the pocket by Allen Johnson, causing a hurried throw that also fell incomplete.

"We got down three times inside their five and didn't score," Lions coach Buster Leas said. "If you do that and don't score then you don't deserve to win."

Midway through the fourth quarter the Lions were again threatening. Harrington hit runningback Steve Johnson on a 22-yard completion, giving New Deal a first down on the Owls' 11. Fullback Robert Jackson carried for six, putting the Lions on the five with three chances to score.

Jackson was stopped for a one-yard gain, followed by an incomplete pass. On fourth down Harrington fumbled the snap, recovered the ball but then threw wide of his receiver in the endzone.

Harrington was 13 of 28 for 207 yards but couldn't get one into the endzone. Seven of his 13 incompletions occurred inside the five yardline.

Between the goal lines the Owls were outgunned. They managed only 95 yards rushing and 73 passing, while the Lions gained 140 yards on the ground in addition to Harrington's 207 in the air.

But the most important statistic, the 7-0 score, put the Owls into the regional playoff game against Hale Center at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Lamesa.

THE STANTON Buffaloes looked like they were knee-deep in water in their 28-0 loss to the Shallowater Mustangs.

The Buffs were unable to stop the Mustang attack and never got their own offense untracked in the lopsided

National champion Clemson hit with stiff penalties by NCAA

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — The news that the NCAA has slapped the Clemson football program with some of its stiffest penalties ever for a long list of recruiting violations doesn't appear to be causing much hollering or carrying on by the players.

"I just reckon we made a mistake and that we have to pay for it," junior defensive end Edgar Pickett told The Greenville News Monday, as the National Collegiate Athletic Association announced the long-expected sanctions against the 1981 national champions.

The NCAA said the violations included gifts of cars, cash and clothing to prospective players, as well as scholarships for friends and relatives of recruits. The association, from its headquarters in Mission, Kan., said the violations stretched from 1977 to 1982.

The NCAA stripped Clemson of 20 football scholarships, twice the maximum number ever taken from an offending school, according to an NCAA official.

Pickett said he figured some of the Tigers will want to transfer to another school that isn't banned from television appearances or bowl games, but said he hadn't heard anyone talking about doing such a thing. With one exception, other players surveyed said more or less the same thing.

The finale to the 19-month investigation of Clemson was expected to be played out today. University President Bill Atchley had scheduled a news conference to discuss the NCAA probation. Atchley also is expected to announce an Atlantic Coast Conference probation on Clemson for two to three years.

Meanwhile, the Tigers are heading for Japan today and their last game of the season. Clemson will face ACC opponent Wake Forest in the Mirage Bowl at Tokyo's Olympic Stadium Saturday. If the Tigers win, they'll grab the ACC crown, which should ease the probation pain somewhat. Clemson is 8-1-1 overall and 5-0 in the conference.

Coach Danny Ford has had to fend off reporters' questions about the whole affair at weekly news conferences because Atchley has been the designated speaker from the beginning. The coach had lunch with reporters Monday, well before the NCAA made its sanctions public. But he nonetheless indicated he was relieved the whole thing is almost done with.

"After this game, there won't be any more press, no more publicity for a while. We just want to phase out football and move on to basketball," said the coach, whose victorious Tigers gained him national recognition less than a year before.

ACC Commissioner Bob James told The Associated Press he wasn't surprised by the severity of the punishment. In a telephone interview from his Greensboro, N.C., home Monday night, James said, "I don't believe they made Clemson a scapegoat.

"I feel the penalties they enacted were what they deemed necessary for the allegations," he said.

James wouldn't confirm reports that the ACC will take action against Clemson, but said if such action is in the cards it would be announced today at Atchley's news conference.

"Due to the large number and serious nature of the violations in this case, the committee believed that institutional sacntions related to the appearances on television and in postseason football games were appropriate," Infractions Committee Chairman Charles Alan Wright said in the release.

"In addition, because the violations indicated a pattern of improper recruiting activities, the committee determined that a two-year limitation on financial aid to new recruits should be imposed to offset any recruiting advantage that was gained improperly by the university."

The news of the NCAA penalties didn't come as a big surprise. For the last few weeks, there have been reports that Clemson would be punished by both the NCAA and the ACC. One report said the ACC would put the school on probation for three years, while another said the NCAA had cited Clemson for more than 150 recruiting violations.

"Everybody is ... pretty happy we got only two years," Mark Johannsen, a 22-year-old bartender at the Study Hall, a popular Clemson watering hole, said late Monday night. Johannsen, a student at the university, said the reports had led people to believe the school was "pretty guilty" and to expect harsher penalties than were announced Monday.

Monday's news wasn't news for the players.

They learned about the probation situation at a series of meetings with Ford Sunday, said junior nose guard William Devane. He said the coach told the Tigers they have the option of transferring to another school under a new NCAA provision that allows them to do so without having to sit out a year.

Devane said Ford met with each class in four meetings.

Eight of nine players contacted Monday said they had heard of no plans to transfer and, if they were underclassmen, did not plan to leave themselves. The exception was freshman running back Terrence Flagler, considered the Tigers' prize recruit.

"We'll just have to wait and see," the Fernandina Beach, Fla., native said Monday before the announcement was made.

Clemson has 66 players on its roster.

The Tigers, who closed out an unbeaten season last January by beating Nebraska 22-15 in the Orange Bowl and taking the national championship, will be banned from televjsion in 1983 and 1984.

The Infractions Committee also ruled that the Tigers cannot play in bowl games after this season and next year.

NFL contract vote delayed by union

WASHINGTON (AP) — Union chief Ed Garvey said Monday that substantive issues must be resolved before the National Football League Players Association will poll it members and officially end the players' strike.

"In terms of volume, there is not much to initial; in terms of substance, yes," Garvey said.

"A lot of owners didn't want the season to resume without a signed agreement," said Jack Donlan, the league's chief negotiator. "From an economic standpoint, we realized we had to start the season on Sunday or else the 'money now" would have to come off the table."

The $60 million money now portion of the agreement represents a one-time cash bonus of between $10,000 and $60,000 for every player in the league to be paid two weeks after the agreement is ratified.

"If we don't have a ratified agreement, the money now comes off and that compounds the situation," Donlan said.

"It is not realistic to think the players will play without a contract," Donlan said. "If they vote to play without a contract, it will be up to the owners to make the decision. The players will have to know they are getting paid under the old agreement — the old salaries and old playoff payoffs and no cash bonus."

Garvey said one of the issues still under discussion was the league's attempt to add two games to the schedule next year.

Jim Miller, spokesman for the NFL Management Council, said league negotiators were at a loss to explain Garvey's feelings about an expanded schedule.

"We told him on Saturday we wouldn't make any changes in the schedule without discussing it with the players' association. As of now, there are no plans to expand the season to 18 games," Miller said.

The NFL has estimated that each team lost over $200 million during the 57-day walkout that caused the cancellation of 98 games.

The league's 1,500 players, who returned to their teams Wednesday and played over the weekend, originally were scheduled to vote Tuesday on whether to ratify or reject the owners' five-year, $1.6 billion package. That timetable, according to Garvey, has been indefinitely suspended.

"I don't know if the players will vote this week," Garvey said. "One thing is for sure, we are not going to vote on summaries. Every player must have a copy of the document and an explanation. We are not going to rush into a five-year agreement and have people say they don't know what they are voting on."

The player reps will gather at union headquarters Tuesday to discuss the status of the negotiations. Last week, the player reps voted 19-6 to allow the full membership to vote on the financial offer.

"If they voted last week to let the membership consider the vote, why are they meeting again?" Donlan asked Monday.

Holmes, Cobb all alone when bell rings

HOUSTON (AP) — Larry Holmes will spend Thanksgiving on the road, but he will have his wife Diane, infant son Larry Jr. and 2-year-old daughter Kandy Larie with him.

Then Friday night, Larry Holmes will go to work, and for at least 45 minutes he will be alone. His family will be nearby, yet light years away. Randall "Tex" Cobb will be in the same Astrodome ring with the World Boxing Council heavyweight champion, but the two men will be on separate planets built of their hopes, fears and skills.

A prize fighter performs under a public microscope colored by the knowledge of some viewers and the ingnorance of others; he performs his age-old rituals in a tunnel of noise — a babble of approval, disapproval, suport and dislike.

Larry Holmes has performed his lonely task extremely well. He has fought professionally 40 times and scored 40 victories, 30 by knockout. He became champion in 1978, and his match against Cobb will be his 13th title defense.

On Nov. 3, Holmes celebrated his 33rd birthday, and there are people who wonder why he continues to fight.

Only Joe Louis and Muhammad Ali made more heavyweight title defenses than Holmes, and Ali is the only heavyweight to have earned more money.

But the Cobb fight is not likely to be his last, although he says, "I'm not looking for another Cooney fight."

"I don't feel like being humiliated by the public or Gerry Cooney," said Holmes, who was treated by much of the public and the media as though he were the challenger when he fought Cooney.

It seems that Holmes now is fighting mainly for money. He could retire now as only the second heavyweight champion never to have lost a pro fight. Rocky Marciano, who had a 49-0 record, with 43 knockouts and had made six title defenses, announced his retirement April 27, 1956, a little more than four months before his 33rd birthday.

Another victory or two or three won't do much to boost Holmes' fighting reputation, which is high. A record of 42-0 or 43-0 doesn't look much better than the 41-0 Holmes hopes to achieve Friday night. But put replace the zero with a one after 42 or 43 and it looks a lot worse.

Holmes, who has investments plus business ventures and real estate in Easton, Pa., where he lives, recently purchased a hotel in the Easton area.

Now fighting for a couple of million dollars here and couple of million dollars there — Holmes reportedly is getting $2 million for his nationally televised fight against — is a quick way to cover an investment. But it can be a risk in the ring.

There is a serious side to Randall "Tex" Cobb, the always smiling, always joking challenger, who will try to take some of Holmes investment money and the heavyweight crown Friday night.

Cobb ducks a serious question with the same intensity he hopes to avoid Holmes' jab. Cobb likes to leave the impression a serious thought never passed through his brain.

But Cobb got serious several times in spite of himself Monday as he went into final preparations for Friday's scheduled 15-round title bout in the Astrodome.

On the call for an investigation following the death of fighter Duk Koo Kim in a fight with Ray Mancini: "What are they going to say, that boxing is a brutal sport, that it is crooked? Big deal, is that a new story?

"What happens in the ring is in the hands of God. I think Kim was lucky because he died doing something that he liked to do. I'm not looking forward to dying. I've got a good drunk coming up Saturday night.

"But when I do die, it will be an act of God and not something that is done in the ring."

Stanford defense has weak woodwinds

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — The University of California plans to sell video casettes of its incredible football victory over Stanford, and the item should be a best seller on the Berkeley side of San Francisco Bay.

Over at Stanford, they've seen enough.

"The damage is done," Stanford Coach Paul Wiggin said Monday. "The bowl game is out. A winning season is out, and some potential honors for John Elway may also be out. That play proved to be a very costly one for Stanford football.'

Wiggin studied film and videotapes of Cal's amazing 57-yard kickoff return play which ended Saturday's game. He did not change his mind on the question of whether Dwight Garner, one of four Cal players to handle the ball, was down when he lateraled off to a teammate.

"He was stopped, held, turned back and down on his knees," said Wiggin. "That along with four or five inexcusable calls made by a group of referees erased one of the great comebacks in the history of the Big Game."

The 85th Big Game between the neighboring Pacific-10 Conference teams seemed to be won by Stanford when Mark Harmon kicked a 35-yard field goal with four seconds left. Elway, Stanford's quarterback, had moved the Cardinal offense from deep in its own territory to the Cal 18-yard line in the final minute.

But, with five laterals, the Bears struck back to win amid one of the strangest scenes in college football history. Kevin Moen raced through Stanford marching band members on the final 20 yards of the kickoff return.

The jokes have started, and there are sure to be many more — mostly from Bear backers.

"It appeared to me that the weakest part of Stanford's defense was the woodwinds," said one fan, Ellen Edmonson of San Francisco.

But Elway probably spoke for all Stanford fans when he declared Saturday, "It's a farce."

Others on the field, besides band members, when the winning touchdown was scored included Stanford players, fans, and photographers. All thought the game had ended.

Moen admitted that even after he went into the end zone, where he knocked over Stanford trombone player Gary Tyrell, he wasn't sure the touchdown would count.

Sax named NL rookie of the year

BASEBALL — Second baseman Steve Sax was named the National League's Rookie of the Year to become the fourth consecutive Los Angeles Dodger to win the award, the Baseball Writers Association of America announced. Sax, 22, got nine first-place votes and a total of 63 points from a panel of two writers from each of the league's 12 cities. Pittsburgh second baseman Johnny Ray finished second with six first-place votes and 57 points. Sax batted .282 in 1982, with four home runs and 47 runs batted in.

Odds are even that Bob Horner won't be playing third base for Atlanta next season, according to Braves Executive Vice President Al Thornwell.

Horner has been offered as trade bait for a much-needed pitcher in discussions with "about 75 percent" of major league teamns, and "of the teams we've talked to, all but two have decided interest in Horner," Thornwell said Monday.

FOOTBALL — Red Wilson says he is considering other positions offerred him by Duke University officials who have decided to dismiss him as head as head football coach.

"I had no idea it was coming," Wilson said in an interview Monday. "I wasn't given any explanation. He (Duke athletic director Tom Butters) just said he thought I'd taken the program as far as I could."

Published reports named Boston College Coach Jack Bicknell and Furman Coach Dick Sheridan as top contenders to replace Wilson.

For the second week in a row, the Dallas Cowboys will lift the local television blackout of a home game, team officials said Monday.

Cowboys President Tex Schramm said the Thanksgiving Day game with Cleveland would not be blacked out, even if it is not sold out. Schramm lifted the blackout Sunday in Dallas' game against Tampa Bay, although it was not a sell-out.

TENNIS — Janine Thompson upset Kate Latham 6-3, 7-6 in the first round of the New South Wales Women's Open tennis. Most of the top seeds players in the tournament had byes. However, 13th-seeded Evonne Goolagong Cawley defeated Claudia Monteiro of Brazil 6-1, 6-2.

HOCKEY — Center Mike Rogers of the New York Rangers was named the NHL's Player of the Week after collecting four goals and six assists in three games last week.

BASKETBALL — Alex English, who averaged 38.7 points in leading the Denver Nuggets to a 2-1 record on the road last week, was named the NBA's Player of the Week.

TRACK — Mark Scrutton of Colorado captured the NCAA men's cross country championship after taking the lead 300 yards from the finish. Scrutton, who beat Zakarie Barie of the University of Texas-El Paso by two seconds Monday, was timed in 30:12.6 over the 10,000-meter Indiana University cross country course. Barie crossed the finish line in 30:14.8.

Tim Hacker and Scott Jenkins of Wisconsin finished fourth and fifth, leading the Badgers to the team title with 59 points. Providence was second with 138 followed by Arkansas 142, East Tennessee 158 and Texas-El Paso, which had won the team championship the previous four years and six of the past seven, at 173. Michigan was sixth, followed by Colorado, Clemson, UCLA and Oregon.

Manning has no illusions about Houston reception

HOUSTON (AP) — Newly acquired Houston Oiler quarterback Archie Manning has no illusions about having finally found a loyal home crowd despite his favorable reception in his first game as an Oiler.

"It's a common thing, if Captain Kangaroo came out there as the second team quarterback they would cheer him," Manning said in response to his warm reception in Sunday's 24-10 loss to Pittsburgh.

"The second team quarterback is always the most popular guy on the team. Just a few weeks ago I was in the same situation as Gifford is in now," he said.

Manning recalls the catcalls when he was the starting quarterback for the New Orleans Saints before being traded to the Oilers shortly before the start of the 57-day NFL players strike.

Now it is Nielsen's turn to feel the wrath of the fans.

The Oilers struggled offensively until the third quarter against the Steelers before Nielsen directed a 75-yard drive leading to his nine-yard touchdown pass to tight end Dave Casper. After one more series, Manning got the call.

"We didn't block, we didn't tackle, we didn't hold on to people," Stanton head coach Steve Park said. "They (Shallowater) have a heck of a good ball club."

Stanton finishes the 82 season with an 8-4 record and the first district championship the school has had in 32 years.

ANDREWS FELL to Lubbock Estacado 14-0 in the first round of the class 4-A playoffs.

Lubbock broke the scoreless tie with 7:02 left in the game on a 73-yard scoring drive. Wayne Dotson, who was six for eight, hit Tony Sowell in the corner of the endzone to finish off the final two yards.

Andrews' comeback drive was halted by an interception that led to the Matadors' final tally.

It was the second time the Mustangs have lost to Estacado in the playoffs. Two years ago the Matadors beat Andrews 14-7 in a bi-district clash.

Andrews finshed the season at 7-4.

Legs walk away with Heisman Trophy

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Hey, all you kids out there who dream of some day being a college football hero and winning the Heisman Trophy, don't try to copy Johnny Unitas, Joe Namath or even Joe Montana. Quit throwing that ball around. Stop trying to hit targets 50 yards away. Just pick up the old funny-shaped pigskin and run.

Run as fast and as hard as you can. Duck in and around fire hydrants and telephone poles. Smash over any thing or anybody getting in your way.

Super Bowls may be won by the arm — Montana's aerial heroics for the San Francisco 49ers last January being a prime example — but the Heisman Trophy is won by the legs.

The best pair of legs this year — or maybe any year for that matter — belong to Herschel Walker of the No. 1 Georgia Bulldogs. If he doesn't win college football's most distinguished award this year, selectors ought to be given a saliva test.

Walker, a 6-foot-1, 222-pound runaway tank, has been setting ground-gaining records ever since he joined the Georgia varsity as a freshman in 1980, leading the unbeaten Bulldogs to a national championship and a Sugar Bowl victory over Notre Dame in New Orleans.

He should have received the Heisman Trophy that year, after rushing for a collegiate freshman record of 1,616 yards (eclipsing the mark of Pittsburgh's Tony Dorsett). But, horrors, you can't give a Heisman Trophy to a freshman.

So South Carolina's very fine tailback, George Rogers, got it. Walker had to settle for third.

Many observers thought Herschel deserved the award in 1981 when, as a sophomore, he piled up 1,891 yards and scored 20 touchdowns. But, good gracious, you can't give the trophy to a sophomore — never been done. So Walker was beaten out by Southern Cal's Marcus Allen, another flashy runner.

Now comes 1982, and Herschel is still plugging away for the Georgia team that has lost only two games in the three years he's been in the lineup.

His credentials continue to be awesome although he suffered a broken thumb and made only a token appearance in the opening game, gaining 20 yards. He has carried the ball 308 times for 1,590 yards, most in the country.

Of all the collegians who have played the game, Walker is the first to soar over the 5,000-yard mark in rushing before completing his junior year. His total is 5,097 and, although he has professional scouts driveling, he almost undoubtedly will be shooting next year for goals never before reached by man.

Now, with only Georgia Tech ahead and a prospective Sugar Bowl bout against Penn State for the national championship, Herschel and his supporters must sweat out again the spectre of the "Wait 'Til Next Year" syndrome.

Heisman electors are reluctant to hoist even a junior to such a lofty tower. In all the past 47 Heisman awards, only six have gone to juniors — Army's Doc Blanchard in 1945, Southern Methodist's Doak Walker in 1948, Ohio State's Vic Janowicz in 1950, Roger Staubach of Navy in 1963, Archie Griffin of Ohio State in 1974 (Griffin repeated the next year) and Billy Sims of Oklahoma in 1978.

Walker's most serious rival is John Elway, the talented Stanford quarterback who has passed for more than 3,000 yards with 24 touchdowns and only 12 interceptions. Less formidable rivals are SMU's outstanding running back Eric Dickerson, tailback Ernest Anderson of Oklahoma State and quarterbacks Tony Eason of Illinois, Todd Blackledge of Penn State and Dan Marino of Pittsburgh.

Elway has the advantage of being a senior. Walker's big plus — other than his basic, line-shattering power and near-Olympic speed — lies in the fact he is playing with a championship team, one he has largely carried on his back.

The college game long has been dominated by power teams — in contrast to the air-minded pros — and, as a result, tailbacks and not quarterbacks have gained a corner on the Heisman, a figurine of a ball-carrier.

The last quarterback to win the Heisman was Pat Sullivan of Auburn in 1971. Then, after wingback Johnny Rogers of Nebraska followed a parade of running halfbacks — John Cappelletti of Penn State, Griffin, Dorsett, Earl Campbell of Texas, Sims, Charles White of Southern Cal, Rogers and Allen.

Cowboys will be hurting on Turkey day

After eight weeks without any practices or games, four National Football League teams have only three days of work this week before playing their second post-strike game Thanksgiving Day.

Detroit plays host to the New York Giants and Dallas entertains Cleveland in Thursday afternoon games, just four days after each played its first game Sunday following the 57-day players' strike.

"You have to figure everybody is going to be pretty sore," Cowboys Coach Tom Landry said after his team beat Tampa Bay 14-9. "You just have to hope that we're not too sore by Thursday. That's going to be the real test."

"Thursday is going to be ridiculous," said Dallas wide receiver Butch Johnson, who predicted the Cowboys would need a 25-man whirlpool this week. "You guys will be eating turkey and we'll be out there getting killed."

Cleveland Coach Sam Rutigliano said after the Browns' lackluster 10-7 victory over New England that he wasn't worried about the short preparation time because "Dallas has the same problem we do. We have to play the hand that's dealt us. We're in pretty good shape."

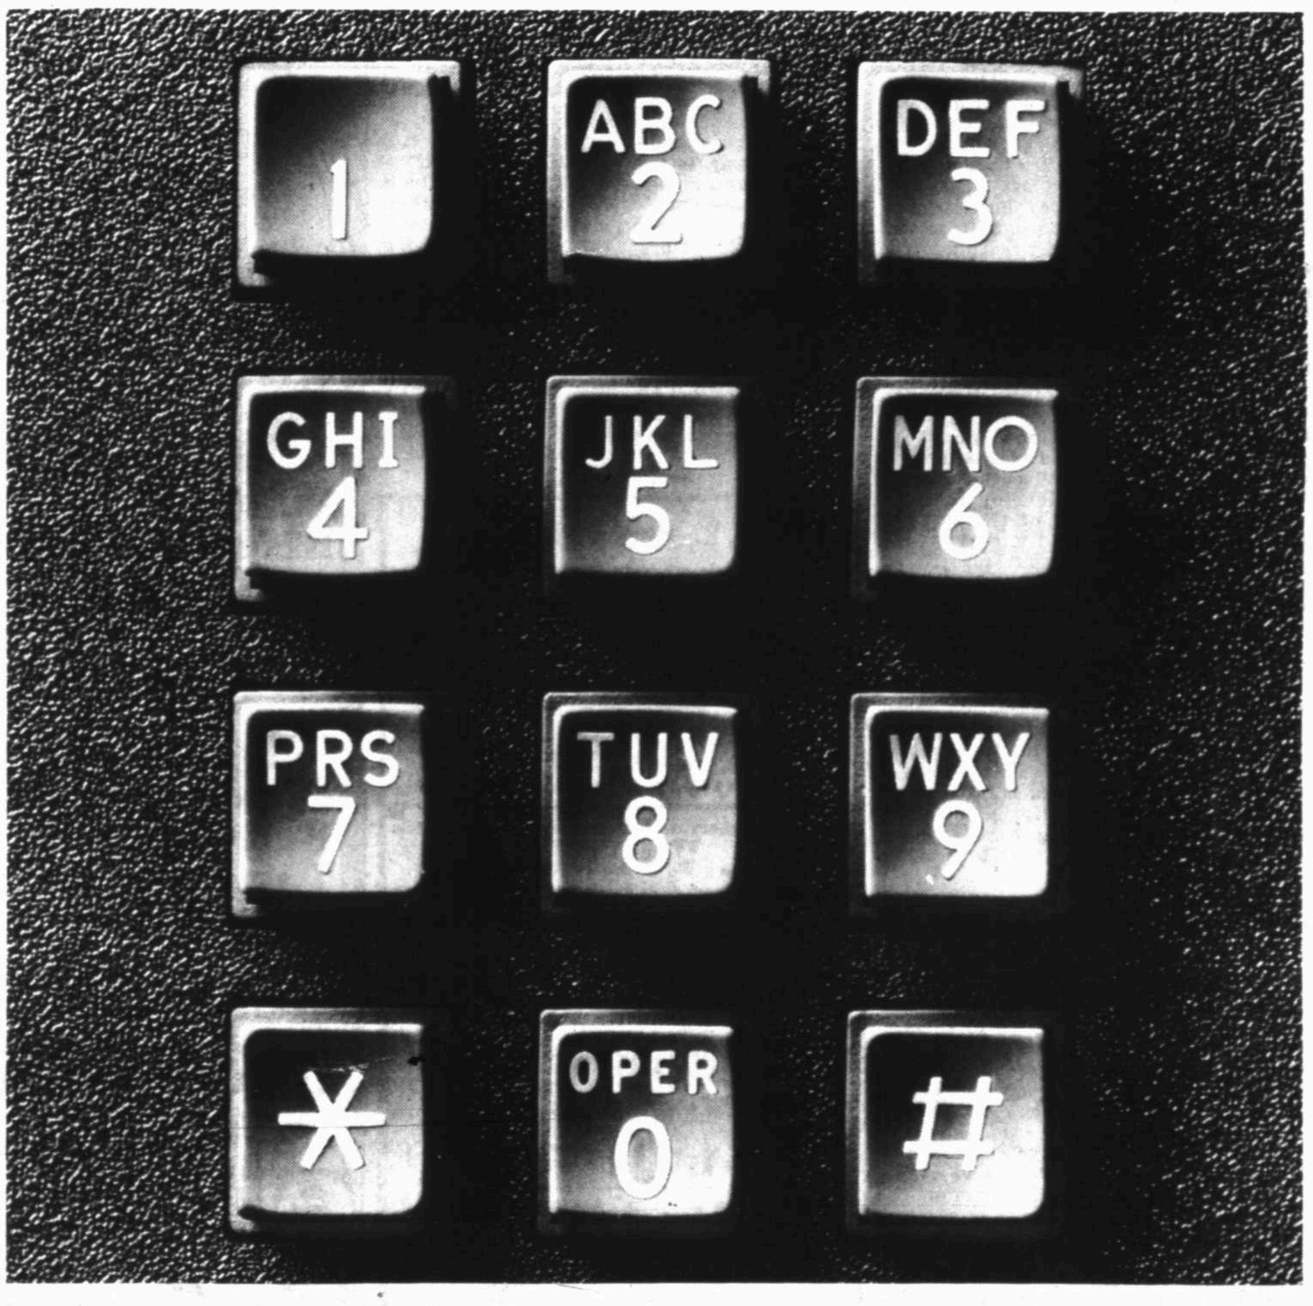

Rutigliano cancelled his regular Monday press conference because of the short work week. More practices were scheduled today, normally an off day, and the Browns will have another workout Wednesday before flying to Dallas at 6 p.m.

"Our players are sore, and so are the Cowboys ," Rutigliano said. "(Offensive lineman) Doug Dieken broke his hand, but Doug should be able to line up against (Cowboys defensive end) Harvey Martin."

Detroit wide receiver Robbie Martin said, "The coaches are going to put together together a good game plan; it's up to the players to digest it and get ready mentally to play."

Several Lions said the team's experience playing on Thanksgiving every year will help them on Thursday.

Coach Ray Perkins of the Giants, who are 0-3 after a 27-17 loss to Washington Sunday, said his players will "have to play themselves back into shape."

12 Keys to the Future

Let's Talk. The telephone. Today you can touch a few buttons and talk to someone across the street. Or around the world.

But what about tomorrow? What kind of things will you be in touch with when you touch those same 12 keys? The possibilities are endless.

Already some consumers are using the telephone to dial up news and weather maps. Shop from department store catalogs. And compare supermarket specials, right on their own television sets.

Soon, local utilities will be able to monitor a home's energy usage, taking remote readings of gas and electric meters.

What would happen if Americans could vote by phone? Only half of American voters went to the polls in 1980.

What would happen if almost everyone were to vote at home by phone?

What if you were able—just by touching a few buttons—to get information from computers located anywhere in the world?

Tomorrow all these services may be an everyday reality. And the telephone network is the key.

As a result, Southwestern Bell will become more important than ever before. Simply because Southwestern Bell is the gateway to The Information Age—the link between your telephone and a whole world of knowledge and services that will be at your disposal.

We know you have questions about what's happening in our industry. We want to make it easy for you to get answers. So call us. And let's talk.

Just call 1-800-555-5000 between 11 a.m. and 8 p.m., Monday-Friday.

Cost of business borrowing at lowest level in 26 months

By The Associated Press

The cost of business borrowing has dropped to the lowest level in more than two years, and many economists say they expect interest rates to continue falling next year.

Major banks cut their prime lending rate for commercial loans to 11.5 percent Monday, a reduction of one-half percentage point. Some bank officials said they acted in anticipation of further declines in other types of interest rates.

The Federal Reserve Board stirred expections of further declines in interest rates when it lowered its discount rate last Friday to 9 percent. That is the rate the Federal Reserve charges on loans to private financial institutions.

Banks generally lower the rates they charge commercial borrowers when their own borrowing costs go down, and Monday's cut in the prime brought it to its lowest level since September 1980.

A lower prime rate will relieve some financial pressure on businesses, easing high borrowing costs that pushed many companies into bankruptcy this year and forced others to reduce spending and cut payrolls.

But the good news on interest rates did not buoy Wall Street. The stock market took its sharpest drop in four weeks Monday, with the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials tumbling 21.25 to exactly 1,000.00.

Brokers said the drop in the discount rate was "old news" to many investors, who had been anticipating it for at least a month, and much of its impact on stock prices apparently was dissipated during that period.

Meanwhile, a survey of members of the National Association of Business Economists, released Monday, said they expect the prime rate to fall to about 10.5 percent by the end of 1983.

But the economists projected a slower-than-normal recovery next year from the recession. They forecast a 3.3 percent rate of growth in the gross national product, which the association said compared with an average 6.9 percent GNP growth during the first year of a recovery.

In other economic developments:

—Starting today, savings institutions may pay as much as 8.819 percent interest on six-month savings certificates, down from 9 percent last week. Banks may pay 8.569 percent, down from 8.789 percent. The new rates are the result of the government's auction Monday of six-month Treasury bills.

—The American Iron and Steel Institute, a trade group, reported Monday that steel production fell 4.6 percent last week to 1.055 million tons, its lowest level since 1971, while factory use slowed to a 49-year low. Production in the week ended Nov. 20 compared with 1.106 million tons the previous week and was the lowest weekly output since 947,000 tons produced in the week ended Aug. 7, 1971. The industry's production amounted to 35.7 percent of capacity during the week, compared with 37.4 percent the previous week.

—A survey by the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners said national electric rates rose by almost 10 percent last year, driving the average homeowner's monthly bill to $36. The association of state utility commissioners found that the average national cost per kilowatt hour rose from 6.6 cents to 7.2 cents. For the average residential customer using 500 kilowatt hours a month, that would mean a $3 monthly increase.

—Chrysler Corp. reopened talks with the United Auto Workers union to try to end a Canadian strike and agree on terms for U.S. workers. But a top company official said Chrysler still cannot afford an immediate pay raise. About 10,000 Canadian autoworkers at Chrysler Canada Ltd. struck Nov. 5 after the company said it could not afford the immediate raise they demanded.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government agency created to hand out billions of dollars of subsidies to spur development of synthetic fuels is in an unusual position — it's having a hard time spending the money.

One of the reasons is that the front-runners for awards by the Synthetic Fuels Corp. have developed the distressing tendency of pulling up lame at the finish line.

On Monday, Ashland Oil Inc. announced that it was withdrawing sponsorship of a multibillion project to produce synthetic oil from coal in Breckinridge County, Ky. The decision apparently spells the end for the plant, which was to produce 25,000 barrels of synthetic crude daily. Ashland had been seeking $3 billion in federal loan guarantees.

Last month, Standard Oil Co. (Ohio) announced it was dropping out of a partnership that planned to build a $2 billion coal-to-gasoline plant in Gillette, Wyo. The remaining sponsors are working to keep the project alive by finding a company to replace Sohio.

Both those projects were the remaining finalists for awards in a round of solicitations that began back in the spring of 1981 with 63 proposals.

Ashland's announcement marked the fifth major synfuels project to be canceled or indefinitely postponed since the onset of the world oil glut in 1980. That glut has held down the price of conventional oil and raised new doubts about the economics of synthetic fuel plants.

The corporation, created by Congress in June 1980, has yet to hand out one dime of its $15 billion in subsidies. With the problems experienced by its front-running candidates, it could be months before any actual awards are made.

Corporation officials are sensitive to criticism that their slow, methodical pace is one of the reasons the industry they are supposed to be helping is crumbling around them.

To combat that charge, the corporation's seven-member board is expected to announce at a meeting next week that it is signing letters-of-intent with a few of the 11 candidates remaining in the corporation's second round of solicitations.

The letters would not be the same as actual subsidy awards, but they would at least be more of a signal that assistance will be forthcoming if the projects meet certain conditions.

Some in the industry say the corporation is going to have to concentrate on smaller 10,000 to 20,000 barrel-a-day plants and be ready to put more government money at risk to entice industry to develop the technologies.

"If the corporation is going to show this country the commercial feasibility of some technologies, it is going to have to put a lot of money into them," said Michael Koleda, president of the National Council on Synthetic Fuels, a trade group.

But some members of Congress, seeking to play on the Reagan administration's general dislike of the synthetic fuels program, are mustering their forces to make another effort to abolish the entire program before it hands out any money.

Robert Roach, a synfuels export with the Environmental Policy Institute, said the demise of the Breckinridge project would make it harder for supporters to justify putting large amounts of taxpayer money at risk.

"We cannot afford to gamble with our nation's financial resources and its energy future," Roach said. "The corporation should be terminated. Government policies should accent fundamental research and small-scale development rather than rapid, large-scale development."

But Koleda said Congress, which created the corporation in response to the gasoline lines of 1979, has too much at stake to kill the program.

"Congress doesn't want to go to the American people and tell them they couldn't get the job done. They don't want gasoline lines again," he said.

In announcing its decision, Ashland chairman John R. Hall called on the government to widen its financial support for private projects.

"Under current law, the assistance that the Synthetic Fuels Corp. is able to provide has many limitations. These limitations must be reviewed if a viable synfuels industry is to be developed in the near term," he said.

Hall said Ashland was ending its 11-year involvement in the Breckinridge project because of the uncertainty of future oil prices, the massive capital investment needed, recent changes in U.S. tax laws which make the investment more costly to the company and the prospect of construction cost overruns.

In a statement, the Synthetic Fuels Corp. said Ashland's decision "demonstrates that even with maximum federal assistance ... the current oil market and other economic conditions dictate serious problems for projects as large as Breckinridge."

'Affordable house' sold

By CLYDE V. SMITH
Copley News Service

The first home to be sold under the national "Affordable Housing Demonstration program" was purchased in Lincoln, Neb., for $39,850 — a price that was billed as a 10-20 percent reduction in cost.

This price was figured by comparing it to the cost for similar housing in Lincoln which ranged from $45,000 to $50,000, the difference perhaps stemming from location.

However, the house, built under the program jointly sponsored by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), the National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) and NAHB's Research Foundation, is only an 800-square-foot duplex, with two bedrooms. The purchase of several options, including parquet floor tile in the kitchen, and a better grade of carpeting added $1,000 to the base price of $39,850.

The builder, Karl A. Witt of Empire Homes in Lincoln, was one of the first four chosen by HUD for the program, which is intended to cut housing costs by encouraging cooperation in planning between local officials and builders to avoid unnecessary regulation.

"We could not have achieved cost savings of this magnitude without the help of Mayor Helen Boosalis and the Lincoln City Council," said Witt. "They showed their concern that the citizens of Lincoln have access to affordable housing."

How was this savings achieved? Increasing density accounted for most of the cost reduction. The density in Lincoln was upped to 11.3 units per acre, compared with the usual five units an acre.

The Witt project was built under Lincoln's Community Unit Plan requirements with these modifications that allowed other savings:

— Although acreage in the development fell short of the 20 acres needed to qualify for a community unit plan, an adjacent project built by Witt was included to allow this project to qualify for the higher density and more flexible regulations.

— Recreation equipment in both a project across the street and an adjacent park were counted as the required recreation facilities.

— Setback requirements were decreased, in some cases for front and side yards.

— Parking requirements were modified. Lincoln requires two parking spaces for each unit and does not consider a driveway to be a parking space if it provides access to a garage. This usually necessitates a double-width driveway. In this case, some clustered guest parking was substituted.

— Curbs were deleted and drainage was provided by inverting the crown of the road — that is, the road slopes inward with drainage provided in the center of the road.

— The builder was allowed to construct his model units before all the details of the project were final.

Package plant built at Denton

A 210,000-square-foot plant, being built on a 53-acre site, is scheduled to open in spring 1984, said Brik Pak spokeswoman Rita Simpson. About 200 people will be employed by the factory, she said.

Inflation rate up again

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, spurred by sharply higher housing costs, rose 0.5 percent last month, the biggest gain since July, the government reported today. For the year, inflation is running at a relatively modest annual rate of 4.9 percent.

Price hikes were also posted for energy and food.

But the Labor Department said the acceleration in the overall index, which had posted scant gains in the two preceding months, could be largely attributed to the 1.1 percent jump in housing prices — enough to offset a 2.3 percent fall in mortgage interest rates.

The new report appeared to dampen economists' predictions that the generally improving inflation picture could, for all of 1982, leave the country with its lowest inflation rate in a decade.

If the 4.9 percent rate holds through December, the full-year rate would almost match the 4.8 percent of 1976. Inflation for all of 1981 was 8.9 percent.

In its new report, the department said mortgage interest rates, reflecting lower short-term borrowing costs, fell by their sharpest since August 1980. But housing prices posted their biggest gain since June and reversed the decline registered in September.

Economists have attributed the year's improved inflation picture largely to the severe recession. But they also credit bountiful crop harvests and the worldwide oil surplus for bringing the inflation rate under the double-digit levels of just a few years ago.

Overall, consumer prices rose a seasonally adjusted 0.5 percent last month, compared to a 0.2 percent gain in September and a 0.3 percent rise in August.

If prices rose for 12 months at October's rate, the yearly gain would be 5.9 percent. The annual rate reported by the department is based on a more precise calculation of monthly changes than the figure the department makes public.

The new report said that, for the 12 months ending in October, prices rose 5.1 percent.

Stretch marks may hide pockets of precious metals

By WARREN FROELICH
Copley News Service

It may well be the largest series of stretch marks on the face of the Earth, scarring the planet's skin from British Columbia in Canada to Sonora, Mexico.

Yet those scars — a huge series of recently discovered geological faults — may hide pockets of precious minerals, including gold.

"It's a realistic possibility there will be major, major discoveries out there," said Eric Frost, a geologist at San Diego State University.

To be sure, windfalls — if there are any — are probably several years away. By nature, those engaged in the mining business are cautious and therefore reluctant to make any firm predictions about the region's economic potential.

In the meantime, geologists and other earth scientists are trying to learn as much as they can about these recently discovered formations, realizing the region must be mined for intellectual nuggets before prospectors can start unearthing the golden kind.

"We're just entering the first or second grade when it comes to this," said one geologist.

It all began about 30 million years ago, a time when camels roamed the deserts of what is now southeastern California and volcanoes were regurgitating their molten contents in a fit of primordial temper.

DURING THIS MOMENT in geologic time, encompassing at least 10 million years, the Earth's crust through western North America stretched across hundreds of thousands of square miles of territory, as if it were resting on a large band of elastic.

In the process, the surface above was broken and re-sculpted, changing what was once a gently, rolling landscape into a series of mountain chains and basins — including the troughs through which the Colorado River and the Rio Grande would eventually wash.

"The number of earthquakes during this time must have been phenomenal," said Frost.

"It must have been really exciting for the camels," added Steve Reynolds, with the Arizona Bureau of Geology and Mineral Technology.

Today, this extensive series of fracture zones or faults is quiet; no one expects them to erupt again.

Yet, they are still generating an upheaval of sorts, among geologists and other earth scientists who weren't even aware of their existence until perhaps five years ago.

FOR ONE, the faults apparently were created in a way never seen before, at least in this part of the world — by stretching. Unlike its famous neighbor, the San Andreas fault, which plunges vertically into the earth's shell, this recently discovered series of earthly scars, known as detachment faults, is virtually flat, rolling under the surface like waves on a pond.

Also, by sheer size, they could well represent the largest network of faults anywhere in the world.

Perhaps what makes these faults even more interesting — from a practical viewpoint — may be their potential as a reservoir for precious metals, particularly gold.

Miners have long known there was "gold in them thar hills."

But what they didn't know is that if all the abandoned mines in the region of eastern California and western Arizona were connected, as if playing a game of dot-to-dot, you would essentially be creating a map of part of the fault zone.

Since all these aged mines were built in regions where the fault creased the earth's surface, that leaves large sections — hundreds and thousands of feet below — still unexplored and untapped.

"This suggests there should be a lot more places where you should find major deposits," said Frost. "It's not the kind of ore where you could go out and pan. It's very low grade. But if you get a lot of low-grade ore, you can still make a lot of money."

INDEED, NO ONE expects this to be the second coming of the California gold rush where large nuggets could be had with a pick, pan, a keen eye and a lot of luck.

If anyone is going to strike it rich again, it will be the large oil and mining companies that have the requisite financial and scientific resources to sink deep mines into precisely chosen geologic structures.

Today, one or two of these companies already are conducting initial surveys of the Whipple Mountains of southeastern California and the Buckskins of Arizona; a few others are waiting in the wings. The key word, for now, is caution.

"With this new concept there are many other new places to look that haven't been looked at before," said Reynolds, the state geologist from Arizona. "The mineralization that we just see at the surface may represent just a small fraction of what the total mineralization might be."

Chuck Houston, a spokesman for Gulf Mineral Resources in Denver, confirmed his company is exploring for gold and silver in California and Arizona, although it doesn't have any active mines as yet.

"We're conducting reconnaissance and exploration," said Houston, whose company is a subsidiary of Gulf Oil. "We're walking through the area and getting information from our geologists."

WILLIAM REHRIG, who recently opened a consulting firm in Denver to "promote that environment for exploration," said industry only recently has been made aware of this new geological discovery.

"It's received a lot of attention lately," he said. "It's part of a new geologic revelation, the full economic implications of, which are not understood yet."

Indeed, many questions surrounding these faults still go unanswered, including how far they extend, their precise location, the dynamics of their formation, how deep they are and what their mineral potential is.

For example, geology teachers and students at San Diego State have been patrolling territory from Las Vegas to Sonora, Calif., looking for telltale signs of detachment faulting.

Fortunately, San Diego State scientists have found the fault bears its own distinct isotopic signature, a telltale mark chemically etched by hot water running into its surface at the time of its completion.

The extreme temperatures were enough to reset a geologic clock in the rock, measured by the ratio of radioactive potassium to argon. Thus, rock that may have been as old as 70 million years apparently was chemically rejuvenated so that it measured roughly 15 million years instead.

"In a way, this tells us what the fault's fingerprints are," said Dr. Daniel Krummenacher, with the isotope geology laboratory at San Diego State. "Fifteen million years seems to be the age of the detachment fault surface. We have found this over and over again."

Geologists also recognize that groundwater, trickling in through cracked rock above, migrates over the detachment fault surface. As it travels over volcanized rock, the water picks up small amounts of minerals. These minerals remain in solution until the right conditions of temperature, pressure or chemistry causes them to fall out, to precipitate.

"The metals are no longer soluble then and deposit out as copper, gold, and iron," said Reynolds. "What happens is that small concentrations are deposited in the same place over a long period of time. That's where you look; that's a potential mine."

Reynolds added that more work must be completed before mining companies would be willing to invest large sums of money for new prospecting. Also, timing is important — industry won't start exploring until the price of gold rises significantly above its present level of about $500 an ounce.

Still, Reynolds and Frost see a glittering future within a decade.

"As more people understand these kinds of faults,"said Reynolds, "I suspect there will be more and more exploration out there. In 10 years, absolutely, there will be exploration out there."

Lot more money going into search for gold than coming out

By BRUCE WILKINSON
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

DENVER — There is a lot more money going into the search for gold and silver in the Colorado hills than there is precious metal coming out.

For, since 1977, more than a dozen small publicly held mining companies have raised roughly $30 million from investors to find and mine ore. But at least $20 million of that has been spent to acquire properties and to work on mining operations.

But a spot check of company records indicates that no more than $5 million in gold and silver has been taken out, with several companies forced to give up.

Some operators, however, still talk optimistically about making such mining pay in Colorado, including spokesmen for Silver State Mining Corp., Gold Ore of Colorado, Colorado Gold & Silver Inc., Saratoga Mines Inc. and Franklin Consolidated Mining Co. Inc.

Nonetheless, neutral observers predict that few if any of the new operations will be successful because of unstable metal prices and costs that have proved staggering for companies with limited resources.

"There are a couple of them that actually shipped gold. The cost of shipping the gold out isn't even close to economical," said one broker. "When you dig into their figures you find it cost about $1,000 an ounce to get.

"None of these little properties ever shaped up. All they did was blow their dough and end up bankrupt," he added. "I don't know of a stinkin' one of them that looks promising."

NONE OF THE companies has filed under bankruptcy laws, though some have expended their capital.

On the positive side, the company often cited as most likely to succeed is Silver State Mining Corp. of Victor, which began mining and milling in the Alma area on the strength of a $1.5 million offering completed late in 1979. It got a new lease on life with a $3 million secondary issue in 1981. The company closed the Alma operation in April when silver dropped into the $5 area.

A heap leaching operation was opened above Victor in March. "The gold operation itself has been in the black since the first day," said Fred Page, chief financial officer. "We're looking at 20,000 to 22,000 ounces of gold a year." But Page admitted that even Silver State so far has not been able to offset total expenses.

A company with a neighboring site near Victor is Gold Ore of Colorado, which went public with a $5 million offering in 1981.

Gold Ore, headed by Joe Wallace, opened its leaching enterprise May 15 and produces about 15 ounces of gold a day. Wallace said Gold Ore produced about 2,000 ounces this season from the four-acre pad.

He said the cost of producing gold is $150 an ounce compared with the current price of around $420 an ounce. Wallace acknowledged the company is down to about $250,000 in the bank after purchasing the 800-acre property and the Mary Nevin Mine and mill from Cripple Creek Gold Production Corp.

Colorado Gold & Silver Inc. is another company bloodied in the field, near Lake City. There the Denver-based company, funded with a $2.5 million underwriting in November 1981, operated the old Gladiator and the Ilma Tunnels until June, shipping about 1,000 tons of material for concentrating.

Colorado Gold & Silver was hurt by the failure of its underwriter, the G.S. Omni Corp. early this year, said M.C. "Coke" Reeves, president. The company, with nearly $1 million left in cash, is building a chemical refinery in Henderson, near Brighton, with a capacity of 15 tons of concentrates a day.

ONE OF THE more hopeful miners is Saratoga Mines Inc., headed by Arden Larson, a young geologist. The company has the old Togo Mine near Central City, the Frontenac between Central City and Idaho Springs, the Saratoga and a rebuilt 120-ton mill nearby.

Saratoga Mines, which was funded by a $2 million offering completed this year, still has more than $600,000 in the bank and is debt free. Heap leaching is being considered for a dump near Central City, Larson said.

Although veins in its Smith Mine above Black Hawk did not prove extensive and mining has been cut back sharply, Moritz Mining Co., headed by Charlie Moritz, continues to mill ore intermittently, mainly for other operators.

Moritz said the company hopes to keep busy this winter milling ore for Marquette Minerals. Despite the failure to find much gold, the company has acquired the Black Hawk mill, another in Ouray and the Fairmount Mine. "We haven't just wasted everybody's money," Moritz said of the nearly $500,000 received from an underwriting.

ELSEWHERE ON the mining scene:

— Franklin Consolidated Mining Co., which got $236,000 from an underwriting in 1978 and another $1 million from private funding, is in startup production at its mine and mill three miles north of Idaho Springs. Good assays have been reported and George Otten, chairman, said the near-term goal is 100 tons of ore a day.

— U.S. Minerals Exploration Co., which had a $2 million underwriting in 1980, has preserved $1.2 million of its cash and has acquired a number of leases throughout the West. It is looking at large-tonnage open-pit mining, said Gary Grauberger, president, but is nowhere near production.

— Intermountain Resources, headed by Lewis Watson, got started in January 1981 with a $1.5 million underwriting, and has evaluated its silver prospect in Park County but never produced commercially. Watson said the company could make money at present prices. He said it has more than $400,000 left in the bank.

— Lake City Mines has exhausted its share of the $1.5 million underwriting done early in 1980 on the old Golden Wonder Mine and Ute-Ule mill near Lake City. Operation was shut down last October, said Michael MacGuire, president.

— Equity Gold Inc., which had a $3 million underwriting in 1980, apparently has spent its initial capital acquiring the old Stanley Mines property and the Freeland Group-McClelland Tunnel near Idaho Springs. New management hopes to fund renewed operation.

— American Gold Minerals Corp. has held onto $2.5 million of its underwriting capital ($5 million gross) after acquiring properties in several states, including $795,000 worth of oil and gas property to provide a cash flow.

— Yellow Gold of Colorado Inc. has done some exploration on properties near Cripple Creek but never approached production after spending nearly all the proceeds from a $500,000 underwriting in 1978. The company controls a utility tunnel it hopes will be used by other operators.

— Cripple Creek Gold Production Corp., after mining at the Mary Nevin near Cripple Creek for five years, sold its mineral interests and mill to Gold Ore of Colorado.

UAW's talkers say Chrysler showing 'conciliatory' attitude

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — United Auto Workers negotiators say Chrysler Corp. is showing a "conciliatory'" attitude in the first contract talks in five weeks, even though the company hasn't raised its wage offer.

Although talks were to continue today, the main issue of an immediate pay raise probably won't come up until next week, and the No. 3 automaker says it still cannot afford what workers want.

"We didn't see the hostility or resoluteness that we saw" in earlier contract negotiations, Marc Stepp, UAW vice president in charge of the Chrysler department, said Monday after the talks resumed.

"There seems to be a conciliatory atmosphere" to work to resolve an 18-day-old Canadian strike.

However, "We haven't found any money anywhere" for the immediate raise demanded by both Canadian and U.S. workers, said Thomas Miner, Chrysler vice president of industrial relations.

Some 10,000 autoworkers at Chrysler Canada Ltd. struck Nov. 5 after Chrysler said it had no money for a raise then.

Chrysler's 43,200 working U.S. autoworkers had rejected a tentative contract earlier because it did not contain an immediate wage increase. However, they rejected a strike.

Analysts estimated the company is losing $15 million a week from the strike. It also has idled some 4,600 U.S. auto workers due to curtailed U.S. production.

The U.S. Chrysler talks were to have resumed in January. Last Thursday union leaders said they would try to settle the Canadian strike and get a new U.S. accord by negotiating simultaneously, which started Monday.

The first day's discussions in both countries centered on non-economic items such as ratio of supervisors to workers, absenteeism penalties and requiring a second opinion for some surgery covered by company health plans.

Stepp said Chrysler "will have to readjust its budget" to finance an immediate raise for workers. "The simple fact is that they have to find" the money.

He noted that Chrysler has publicized a $1 billion cash reserve that could be tapped for the raise. The company says the money is needed for the future.

"It would seem to us now that they have to take another look at those plans for the future," Stepp said. "We do not have the slightest intention of making any more concessions."

Asked if the company could rearrange items of the tentative pact to finance a pay raise, Miner responded, "We don't foreclose any possibilities."

Autoworkers in both countries earn an average $9.07 an hour in wages, $2.60 an hour behind their counterparts at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. Canadian workers are paid in Canadian dollars, so their hourly wage is equivalent to $7.48 in U.S. currency.

Chrysler autoworkers gave up more than $1 billion in wage and benefit concessions in 1980 and 1981 to help the carmaker stave off bankruptcy.

Chrysler lost $3.27 billion from 1979-81. It has earned $266.6 million in the first nine months of this year, mostly from the sale of its profitable defense subsidiary.

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Braniff International faces another deadline today in its attempt to stave off liquidation by flying in a joint venture with Pacific Southwest Airlines.

PSA officials have told the grounded airline that contracts with four labor unions must be signed today, or the proposed joint operating agreement will be canceled.

The unions — representing pilots, flight attendants, dispatchers and Teamsters — have agreed to tentative financial pacts which do not include a PSA stipulation that all Braniff employees be junior in rank to all PSA employees.

A Teamsters representative told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that laid off members of that union had agreed to the concession and a reduction in wages in return for the promise of jobs.

Pilots, considered by Braniff officials to be a holdout possibility, scheduled meetings Tuesday morning. Only 160 of about 1,000 former Braniff pilots would be included in the PSA deal since priority would be given to laid off PSA pilots.

Representative of flight attendants and dispatchers have not told Braniff if they will agree to the non-financial terms.

Also Tuesday, lawyers for Braniff will return to federal court for the second day of a trial on Braniff's pensions with the Teamsters and machinists unions.

The trial before U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Robert Flowers will set a date for termination of the pensions. Braniff has argued that the date should be May 12 — the day they airline shut down operations.

Attorneys for the machinists and Teamsters unions have asked for an Aug. 30 termination date. The federally backed Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, which will assume Braniff's pension obligations, also wants the Aug. 30 date.

After a four-day trial earlier this month, Flowers set Aug. 23 as the termination date for management pensions.

Braniff Chairman Howard Putnam has said the airline needs to have the penions terminated — and needs to be released from liabilities — before the PSA deal can be approved.

PSA and Braniff had hoped to have Braniff planes flying by Christmas under the PSA banner. The joint venture could employ 1,500 laid off Braniff employees — but all would be junior in seniority to current PSA employees.

About 150 members of the International Association of Machinists told their negotiators Saturday they would accept cuts in wages and benefits but no reduction in seniority.

"I'd rather see it go down the drain," Tom Pickett, a Braniff mechanic for 26 years, said at the union meeting.

The union, which represents 1,800 laid-off Braniff workers nationwide, broke off talks with airline officials more than a week ago.

PSA gave Braniff more time to either reach accord with the machinists, or terminate the company's contract with the union.

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Midwestern congressman Monday launched an effort to "jawbone" natural gas producers into redrawing contracts that are forcing dramatic increases in this winter's heating bills.

Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., said he would introduce legislation when Congress returns to Washington next week that would freeze gas prices at Oct. 1 levels for two years and would void contracts which force consumers to pay for expensive gas while cheaper gas goes unused.

"We are seeing a crazy, crazy pattern of high gas supplies and high gas prices" that defies normal supply-and-demand logic, Glickman told a news conference. "Although the nation's major pipeline companies expect to have about 10 percent more gas for sale this winter, homeowners will be paying, on a national average, about 25 percent more for gas heat."

Much of the problem was created by contracts which pipeline companies entered into in the late 1970s, when shortages forced curtailment of gas use by some customers. Believing the shortage was permanent, the pipelines told producers they would buy all the gas they could get — often from expensive new wells.

New discoveries have since created a glut of gas, but prices remain high because pipelines are bound by the "take-or-pay" contracts. The result is that pipelines must buy and pass along high-priced gas to customers, even when cheaper gas is available.

Glickman conceded that chances for action on the legislation — which joins a list of 44 other bills on natural gas pricing now before Congress — are slim, at least during the December "lame duck" session. And he conceded there could be a constitutional challenge to any effort to nullify existing contracts.

But he said pressure from consumers and from pipeline companies, which would like to get out from under the high-priced contracts, will mount as December and January gas bills arrive.

"I think there will be a legislative modification that will occur," he predicted, probably early in 1983 — not early enough to help customers this winter.

Exhibit on way to Dallas

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — The 57 paintings in the El Greco exhibit are headed for Dallas after being seen by an estimated 182,000 people during a two-month showing at the Toledo Museum of Art.

The showing boosted business in Toledo by an estimated $5 million.

The paintings were shipped to Toledo after being shown in the National Gallery of Art in Washington. An exhibit at the Dallas Museum of Fine Art is scheduled Dec. 12 to Feb. 6.

Many of the paintings are 400 years old and each has an estimated value of $2.5 million. But art experts said many of them are considered priceless.

Toledo Area Convention and Visitors Bureau Director Jerry Olson said the exhibit's contribution to the economy, hard-hit by layoffs in auto and related industries, "could be higher. My only problem is that we don't have it every year."

Some restaurants estimated that their business was up 50 percent because of the show. "It's been fantastic," said Tony Packo, part-owner of Tony Packo's Cafe.

Added Max Korl, treasurer of the Northwest Ohio Restaurant Association, "We should have something like this all the time. The out-of-towners were very complimentary about the show and about the town. It's a good feeling."

Hotels reported their business up as much as 30 percent.

"It's probably the most successful of non-convention type deals," said F.W. Reese, president of the Greater Toledo Hotel and Motel Association. "It really surprised us. It was a very prestigious thing for Toledo to do."

"It had never been held here before," said Don Derrenge of the association's Toledo chapter. "In the last 10 years, it has never come out of Columbus. El Greco made a little icing on the cake."

Man cleared in death

SANTA FE (AP) — State police say a man being held in Albuquerque in the death of a Texas priest apparently was not involved with the Aug. 5 slaying of a Santa Fe priest.

James Harry Reyos, 25, of Chama, was being held Monday at the Bernalillo County Detention Center in connection with the December 1981 death of the Rev. Patrick Ryan of Denver City, Texas. Ryan's battered body was found in Odessa four days after he was reported missing, authorities said.

Deputy State Police Chief Richard C' de Baca said Monday Reyos was questioned last Saturday about the shooting death of the Santa Fe priest, the Rev. Reynaldo Rivera.

Rivera apparently was lured to his death by a telephone call asking that a priest administer last rites to a heart attack victim, authorities said.

C' de Baca said the investigation of Reyos revealed, "He was working in Memphis, Tennessee, from May through November," indicating he could not have been responsible for Rivera's death.

Reyos was arrested last Friday at an Albuquerque motel after he telephoned police about the slaying of Ryan, said Albuquerque Police Sgt. Nick Alarid.

The clearing of Reyos in connection with the death of Rivera once again leaves police with no leads in the case, C' de Baca said.

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

When an elementary student comes home empty-handed in the afternoon his parents might ask him if he conveniently left his books at school. If he is a science student in Midland, he probably will reply that he doesn't have any science books.

Many parents automatically would think that Johnny was trying to pull one over on the ol' mom and pop. Or they might hold the school district at fault for not having enough books to allow students to bring them home.

The reason Johnny and Suzy don't bring home science books is because they rarely even use them in class.

For the past 17 years, elementary science classes from kindergarten through the sixth grade in the Midland Independent School District have used a science program implemented by director of program development and research Bryant Saxon. The program uses textbooks only as one means of reference and as a supplement to the other curriculum.

THE MAIN focus of the program is on discovery.

"Science is something you do — not just something you study," explained Yvonne Black, MISD coordinator of elementary math and science. "We don't want science to be an encyclopdia approach. We want it to be a process."

The program, SAPA II (Science, A Process Approach) employs basic approaches such as using the five senses for observation, time-space relationships, measurements, the number system, classification, communication and prediction in grades K-3, Mrs. Black explained.

Grades four through six use variables, record data, interpret processes and hypothesize "so that they are a little more sophisticated in the process," she said.

By conducting different experiments instead of relying solely on textbooks, Mrs. Black said, "We would hope it would lead to some good critical study by the students. (Experiments) have to be repeated and substantiated by other investigations and the purpose of those must be included in the study."

BY USING kits to study different modules at each level, science teachers can set up experiments to guide the students to results, or let the students make their own discoveries.

The kits are beneficial to teachers, Mrs. Black said. "There are several kits to choose from and we can service as many as 12 teachers per grade level."

Even more advantageous is that everything needed, including the "consumables" (i.e. paper, graphing paper, check lists, etc.) are included in the kits. "We (the school district) supply all of the material, both the consumables and the hardware," she explained, adding that in districts which rely mainly on textbook usage, a teacher who wants to set up an experiment for her students usually has to furnish the supplies herself.

"In other districts, a teacher also would have to write the objectives as well as go out and buy the material," Mrs. Black pointed out. "Obviously, they wouldn't provide as much (when they have to furnish it themselves).

"(Especially in textbook-oriented courses) you tend to rely more on your textbook because it's easier to do," she continued. "There is a hesitancy on the part of new (MISD) teachers (to not rely on experiments) because they don't feel that proficient with science." She explained that teachers of fourth through sixth grade usually only teach science and math and therefore, "go for it."

"BUT K-3 teachers have other subjects and demands and they may tend to (feel uncomfortable with the science kits). Often the new teacher will ask 'What if it (an experiment) doesn't work?' I tell them that that's how life is. You have to build on other experiences. With the same experiments, the same hypotheses, chances are if the variables weren't completely identical, you'll have different results. That's part of the teaching of scientific approach."

Due to a fire last March at Carver Cultural Center, where most of the science materials were stored, the district is operating with a significantly reduced number of kits. Luckily, several which were out in classrooms were saved and a few catalogs were found in the administration building, allowing for easier reordering.

Yvonne Black

"We've had $30,000 worth of material that has been coming in during the last six weeks," Mrs. Black said.

Originally, each science class had 15 of the five approved sets of textbooks in the classes. Presently, due to expanded classrooms, Mrs. Black said that probably isn't enough. Although the texts most likely are being used more on a supplemental basis than usual because of the loss of supplies, teachers are encouraged to continue requesting the kits, but to be patient if someone else has checked them out, she said.

Pointing out that students learn more in class by experimenting themselves instead of just watching the teacher or reading, Mrs. Black pointed out that if a student from a textbook-oriented class is asked to define science, he probably would say science is butterflies, the environment or whatever he was studying at the time.

In Midland, students hopefully would answer, "Science is a process you go through to set up and study problems and work out solutions," Mrs. Black said.

Everything from money to ducks is being donated to the Permian Basin Boys' Ranch, Inc., according to Frank Kiker, director of the ranch.

Located about 10 miles southeast of Midland on County Road 160, the ranch will house boys ages 7 to 17 who are orphans, neglected or abused run-aways.

"It's starting to snowball," Kiker told The Midland Reporter-Telegram. "We're getting about 10 calls (from volunteers) a day.

"We need everything we can get to get this off of the ground," he continued. "The monetary support is great. All the expenses for the ranch have been met but we're raising money for our new house and looking for a new board of directors."

A campaign drive for the new house will continue through the next two months, Kiker said, explaining that negotiations currently are being made for an addition to the present facility. The 500-foot addition will house four more boys.

Kiker, a court-appointed foster parent, said one child already is living at the ranch. With the support of the community and from judges already contacted and probation officers in each county in the Permian Basin and West Texas, he soon should be joined by others.

Monetary donations, including many from individuals and a large pledge from one company, have been coming into the ranch, which will be supported entirely by "tax-deductible donations from interested and concerned people," Kiker said.

"We've even had ducks, turkeys, cattle, pigs and a horse already donated," he added. Saddles and tack for horses, as well as feed, hay, sorghum and grain also are needed.

Frank Kiker

Last weekend, volunteers were planning on plucking turkeys for sale. All money received from projects such as this will go back into livestock, he said.

In a news release issued from the ranch, Kiker outlined the five goals of the ranch as: to teach a boy respect for God, others, work and self and to teach boys a sense of responsibility.

"Boys will remain in residence at the Ranch until completion of high school," according to the statement. "Many will attend college on Ranch-obtained scholarships. For those who are not academically inclined, vocational instruction in culinary arts, woodworking, auto mechanics, leathercraft, ceramics, electronics, photography and dark room techniques is in the planning.

Controllers' reinstatement hearing ends

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Hearings by the Merit Systems Protection Board on the fate of 15 dismissed air traffic controllers who are seeking reinstatement ended in Midland this morning, with the appeals to be decided by Dec. 31.

The appellants include eight former Midland Regional Airport controllers, five from Roswell, N.M., and two from Hobbs, N.M. They were dismissed by order of President Reagan when they did not return to work after a nationwide walkout by members of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers (PATCO) union in August 1981.

In testimony this morning, dismissed controller and PATCO member William H. Hines Jr., who now serves as president of Data Control Services in Midland, said he believed that when President Reagan gave the ultimatum to PATCO workers on Aug. 5, 1981, he could no longer return.

After establishing that Hines was off duty the initial two days of the strike, counsel George Brandon asked Hines if he was on strike at that time.

"No, I was not," Hines said.

"Were you supportive of the strike?" Brandon asked.

"Yes," Hines replied.

Brandon then asked if Hines had heard Reagan's speech regarding a deadline for workers to return. Hines said he had heard the speech.

"On Aug. 5, prior to your shift at 4 o'clock, did you have the opportunity to talk with any supervisory person with the FAA concerning your status?" Brandon asked.

"Yes, I did," said Hines, noting that he had spoken with William Hines Sr., assistant chief at the Houston air traffic control center. "I was told, 'if you missed President Reagan's deadline, eat it. You're gonna be fired.'"

"Prior to your shift and after the deadline you were under the impression that you could not return to work?" Brandon asked.

(See APPEAL, Page 2C)

Appeal decision expected next month

"No," replied Hines.

During redirect questioning, FAA attorney William Heller of Fort Worth entered into evidence a photograph from the Aug. 6, 1981, edition of The Midland Reporter-Telegram which showed Hines and fellow PATCO members picketing at Midland Regional Airport.

"Were you picketing and were you on strike at that time?" Heller asked.

"No sir, I was fired," said Hines. "...I was demonstrating my support."

Heller then established that a telegram notifying Hines of his dismissal was not received until Aug. 7. "So you weren really fired on the 6th when you were picketing, were you?" asked Heller.

"As far as I was concerned, I was fired," Hines said.

"Well, that's what you're saying; but I'm saying, as far as I was concerned, I was fired," Hines said.

Heller opted to present written closing remarks within the next 10 days, while Brandon and fellow attorney for the appellants, Paul Chretien, made oral statements in closing.

Chretien said the government's action in dismissing the appellants violated three basic principles. He said the government did not prove that each individual participated in the strike, that the dismissal constituted harmful procedural errors and that the penalty was too harsh and should be mitigated.

In addition to Hines, the Midland appellants include Robert E. Kielich, Michael Looby, Richard J. Szczawinski, Tommy Urps, Glen Vaughn, Ronny Williamson and Terry D. Ummer.

Further appeals by dismissed PATCO workers would have to be directed to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit in Washington, D.C., said Heller.

PECOS (AP) — An illegal alien accused of trying to kill a U.S. Border Patrolman goes on trial today, less than a day after federal agents foiled what they said was a plot to break the Mexican teen-ager out of jail.

Juan de Dios Levario-Quiroz, 18, is accused of shooting patrolman Paul E. Conover last August on the banks of the Rio Grande.

Levario-Quiroz also has been charged with the June 5 murder of a Monahans man and U.S. Marshall William Jonas said Monday authorities are investigating possible links to the slaying of a 12-year-old Redford boy, a state policeman in Chihuahua, Mexico, and the wounding of another man at a Presidio dance hall.

Federal authorities said they arrested two men and confiscated a handgun outside the city jail in this West Texas town, where Levario-Quiroz is being held on $1 million bond.

The men, charged with possession of marijuana and a handgun and illegal entry into the United States, "were in the wrong place at the wrong time," said Jonas.

Jonas, based in San Antonio, said informants warned authorities of a plan in which two armed men driving a Jeep would attempt to free the Mexican national before his trial.

The men, who were parked in a Jeep outside the jail Sunday afternoon, were arrested when police saw a snub-nosed, .38-caliber revolver on the vehicle's seat, Jonas said.

After the federal trial is concluded in Pecos, Levario-Quiroz will stand trial on state murder charges in Monahans, said Ward County deputy Ed Wootton.

Levario-Quiroz, also known as Roberto Hernandez and two other aliases, received multiple leg wounds in the border shootout.

interested boys a chance to learn outdoor skills in competition at campouts and other Scouting functions. A well-balanced schedule of seasonal organized sports is implemented by a Recreational Director," the statement says.

Two 16-boy dormitories, a vocational training center, complete food service center, all-faiths chapel, rodeo arena, central supply building, laundry, library, livestock training center, student center/gymnasium and an administration building are being planned, according to the release.

Persons wishing to make donations or obtain more information should contact Kiker at 686-1072. Donations can be made to Kiker or The Permian Basin Boys' Ranch, Box 84-H19, Midland, Texas 79701.

Employees told investigating officers four Mexican men came into the establishment and beat one employee before taking an undisclosed amount of cash and fleeing.

The injured employee was released following emergency treatment at Midland Memorial Hospital. No other details were available by press time.

Cell effect may be change in membrane

FORT WORTH (AP) — Abnormal red blood cells affecting sickle-cell anemia victims may be "sticky" because of a change in the cell membrane, according to a researcher at Texas College of Osteopathic Medicine.

Wise, who has received several major grants from the National Institutes of Health to study sickled cells, told The Dallas Morning News that his first research project at the college will explore reasons for the difference in cell stickiness.

Many sickle-cell anemia victims must be hospitalized when abnormal red blood cells stick to the lining of blood vessels and block circulation around joints, Wise said.

Sickle-cell anemia, a genetic disease that strikes one of every 500 U.S. blacks, is so named because red blood cells that contain abnormal hemoglobin bend into a crescent shape.

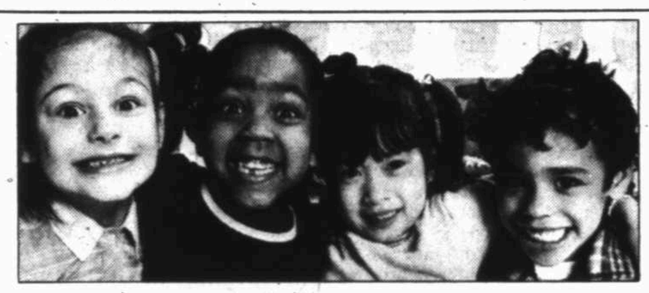

Wise said he suspects the stickiness may be caused by a mutation in the hemoglobin, which carries oxygen inside the red blood cells.

Scientists already know the sickling effect is caused by the substitution of one amino acid for another in the gene that governs the production of hemoglobin, Wise said.

Matthew Maxson Moore of New Caney, one of two men charged in the kidnapping of a Springfield, Ill., abortionist earlier this year, had his bond set at $1 million in Houston Monday. His brother was also charged and a third man remains at large.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Federal authorities are searching for the last of three Texas men wanted for the kidnapping of a Southern Illinois abortion clinic doctor and his wife.

The two other men, who are brothers, appeared Monday at court hearings in Illinois and Texas and each was ordered jailed in lieu of $1 million bond.

They were accused of engineering the August abduction of Dr. Hector Zevallos, 53, and his wife, Rosalie Jean, 45, from their home in Edwardsville. Zevallos operated the Hope Clinic for Women Ltd. in nearby Granite City.

In Springfield, U.S. Magistrate Charles Evans granted a request by federal prosecutors to have Wayne Allen Moore, 18, of New Caney, Texas, held on $1 million bond. Evans scheduled another hearing in the case for Dec. 1.

Prosecutors said they expected a grand jury to consider handing up an indictment in the case before that hearing.

In Houston, bond was set at $1 million for Moore's brother, Matthew Maxson Moore, 20. Authorities there set another hearing, also for Dec. 1.

In addition, U.S. Magistrate Frank Waltermire said Matthew Moore's case would "probably" be removed to Illinois but no extradition date was set.

Authorities said Wayne Moore was arrested early Sunday at a friend's home in Illinois' capital. His brother was seized later in the day in Alvin, Texas.

Anderson is considered a fugitive and believed to be armed and dangerous, according to Joseph E. Ondrula, special agent in charge of the FBI's Central Illinois office.

Ondrula said Anderson was believed to have been in Springfield as late as last Friday, but his whereabouts since then are unknown.

Authorities said the men made up a group calling itself the "Army of God," which claimed responsibility for the kidnapping.

After the Zevalloses were kidnapped, authorities received a tape and rambling letters laced with biblical quotations and references to abortion and the role of government. The letters were labeled "epistles."

According to FBI reports obtained by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch after the kidnapping, Zevallos told authorities the captors wanted to pressure President Reagan into publicly renouncing abortion and taking steps to end such operations in the United States.

"The motive (for the kidnapping), as was stated in the epistles, is the abortion issue," Ondrula said.

But Frederick Hess, U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, said at a Sunday news conference that investigators still are unsure of the principal motive for the kidnapping.

"At this point in time, I don't believe we know what is in the minds of the men," Hess said.

Hess said that in addition to a possible anti-abortion motive, profit may have played a role. He said a demand for money was made, but refused to disclose the amount. No ransom money apparently ever was paid in the case.

The three suspects have been charged with extortion and violating federal law barring travel between states for illegal purposes. Authorities said they will seek the eventual transfer of all the defendants to the federal government's Southern District of Illinois, where the crime occurred.

Ondrula said that as far as investigators can determine, the Moore brothers and Anderson were the only people involved in the abduction. The investigator said the "Army of God" was "most likely comprised" only of the Moores and Anderson. But he said officials have not found any evidence to link the suspects to two fires at abortion clinics in Florida.

Similar "Army of God" letters were received by authorities after the fires.

Hobbs teens sentenced on arson charges

HOBBS (AP) — A district judge has sentenced two Hobbs teen-agers to the Springer Boys School for up to two years after the youths admitted to charges of arson, criminal damage to property and burglary in the vandalism of three churches.

District Judge Don Hallum also on Monday ordered Kenny C. Perry, 16, and Jeffery H. Ackors, 14, to undergo psychiatric counseling.

Each youth was charged with one count of arson, four counts of burglary, three counts of criminal damage to property under $1,000 and one count of criminal damage to property over $1,000.

The youths turned themselves in to the sheriff's department Nov. 15 and were arrested after questioning, said Bob Gallagher, director of Hobbs fire and ambulance services.

Gallagher said the arrests stemmed from a Nov. 6 rampage in which three Hobbs area churches were vandalized.

Counseling program helps marriages end 'elegantly'

By JEANNE MILLER
Hearst Feature Service

SAN JOSE, Calif. — If need be, a marriage should be ended "elegantly, civilly and with mutual respect," according to Dr. Zena Linden, a psychiatrist who specializes in family therapy.

Linden and family law attorney Scott Betz have devised a program called Separate Paths to achieve just such a result for couples who are parting, about to separate or are already divorced. The focus of Separate Paths is unlike most marriage-counseling programs, Linden claims, in that it seeks not to reconcile, but to allow partners or ex-partners to go their own ways without bitterness, pain or recriminations.

While most people facing divorce focus on splitting community property, child custody, the amount of child support and other distressing aspects of severing an important relationship, the first step should be preparing themselves "to let go," according to Linden.

"Most people who enter the process of divorce are not yet emotionally finished with the marriage. Even the partner seeking the divorce is often unready to complete this relationship. Winding it down psychologically is a major factor in reducing the pain and trauma of divorce and achieving an amicable resolution to the legal aspects."

IN LINDEN'S EXPERIENCE, most marriages do not fail because of money, sex, the children, boredom or other attachments. "These are merely the battlegrounds on which the marital wars are fought," she says. "The unrealistic expectations of one or both partners is the single major cause for breakups."

Spouses often go into marriage with four different scenarios, she explains. "The wife has two scripts in her mind: one for her role and one for his. The husband also has two scripts. If the scenarios are unrelated to the partners' actual needs, goals and expectations, and these scripts are carved in stone in their heads, the marriage is likely to be rocky and ultimately to fail."

When the decision to divorce is made, Linden and her attorney partner advise their clients to seek a mediated settlement so "both can win." Head for an attorney who specializes in mediation rather than adversary action, she says, because "it's so much easier on the couple, financially and emotionally."

"Maybe there's something left between them," Linden says. "Not positive things like love or affection, but searingly painful memories of unexpressed resentments, old grudges. Before a divorced couple can establish meaningful, separate lives, they must come to terms with the rage, anger and hostility that are tearing them apart inside.

"THERE ARE WAYS to unleash and put aside destructive emotions, Linden said."

Some examples:

• "Communicate your feelings, rather than calling your partner names. People get less defensive when hearing your thoughtful reaction than when they feel put down.

• "Tell your partner: 'I feel mad, bad, sad, glad, etc.' That tactic works.

• "If you point a finger and say, 'You are bad,' that doesn't work. Your partner will need to get defensive and counterattack."

These tactics are only a start for people who harbor the kind of rage that exists only between marital partners or ex-partners, Linden said.

"You musn't swallow resentment," Linden cautions, "because it will crop up again and again, and pathological depression can and often does ensue. If there are children, it's inescapable that you and your ex-mate will always be part of each other's lives. So for all parties concerned, it's best to try to be friends rather than adversaries."

Linden, a divorced mother of two, has been a practicing psychiatrist for 23 years. She based her concept for separate paths on her own "successful divorce.

"My former husband and I were right for each other when we married and for many years thereafter."

"NO ONE MARRIES his enemy," she reminds her clients. "Your former spouse is still the same person, although the behavior may be different. If you can recapture the perspective about your ex-spouse that made you want to marry him or her in the first place, it will restore your confidence in your own taste and judgment and free you to go on your own separate path."

Dyslexics often intellectual geniuses

By TOM LACHMAN
Hearst Feature Service

BALTIMORE — What do Leonardo da Vinci, Albert Einstein, Hans Christian Andersen, George Patton, Woodrow Wilson and Nelson Rockefeller have in common?

All were dyslexics, and the international Orton Dyslexia Society feels that such a list of distinguished, accomplished people will dispel the image that children who read and write poorly are below normal intelligence.

But such a list bothers David Gow, headmaster of Gow School in South Wales, N.Y., particularly because that list is so often repeated in discussions of dyslexia. He sees more significance in the names of two people not normally included on the list: executed murderer Gary Gilmore and presidential assassin Lee Harvey Oswald.

The list of the famous indicates congenital reading disabilities are not a sign of inferior intelligence. The list of the infamous suggests that people who have trouble reading may be treated as cast-offs and run the risk of becoming society's deviants.

Dyslexia afflicts 25 million people and 15 percent of school children, according to David Malin, principal of the Jemicy (elementary) School for Dyslexics in Owings Mills, Md.

Though children may make fun of students who go to schools for dyslexics, the stigma of being "the dummy of the class" in conventional school is much more detrimental, Malin believes.

Malin and Gow were panelists at the 33rd Annual Conference on Dyslexia, held earlier this month in Baltimore. Attending the conference were members of the 6,000-member Orton Dyslexia Society, which was named after the pioneer of dyslexic research, Samuel T. Orton.

Orton, a neurologist and psychiatrist, began studying language learning problems in the 1920s. He developed a technique called the "kinesthetic method" that is still used today to teach dyslexics to read. The technique involves drilling students in listening and sounding the phonetic equivalents of individual printed letters and then blending sequences to produce words. To eliminate the frequent problem of reversing letters and words, he instructed students to trace and sound out the letters simultaneously. Orton also pioneered research into the causes of dyslexia, which he believed to be genetic.

Malin guesses that 50 percent of the students in college art schools are dyslexics. "I have not had an art school teacher in this school yet who can spell worth a damn. And in our society, poor spellers are the dummies."

Gow, who runs a college preparatory school for students of above-average intelligence, says dyslexics show several symptoms that can be easily identified at the kindergarten and first-grade levels. The most publicized symptom is reversal of letters. A child may write the letter "d" when he means to write "b." He may say to his mother that he doesn't want to walk the "g-o-d," when he means he doesn't want to walk the "d-o-g."

Dyslexics often have difficulty discerning between their left and right. They may have to draw signs on their hands to discern which is which. This kind of problem also may result in poor physical coordination.

Poor language skills may affect a dyslexic's ability to articulate properly. Dyslexics in the first grade may not have progressed past the baby-talk stage. Other signs are trouble tracing a dotted outline and poor handwriting.

Malin outlines three areas a dyslexic program should address:

• Remedial reading, writing and arithmetic. "The school isn't here just to make the child happy," he says. These subjects usually are the toughest, requiring painstaking drills, repetition and memorizing. Memorizing phonetic rules for spelling is considered important.

• "You have to address the child's intelligence and foster it." By the time a student may enter the Jemicy School, his ego may have been crushed by his inability to keep pace with other students in conventional classes. Jemicy teachers try to give their often-emotionally damaged students a sense of worth. Dyslexic students at public schools often get bored and fidgety because teachers fail to recognize that they are intelligent.

Answering service is often window on world

By ROBERT K. HAYS

STROUDSBURG, Pa. (AP) — You might say that Betty and Keith Van Horn handle everything from the cradle to the grave. Their clients range from pediatricians to funeral-home directors.

They also deal with electricians, exterminators, vending-machine operators, oil dealers, veterinarians, insurance-claims adjusters and the guy who won't get up without a wakeup call.

The Van Horns are a mother-son team. They own and manage Van Horn Telephone Answering Service in Stroudsburg, the largest enterprise of its kind in the Poconos.

Every month, their operators process almost 30,000 calls, ranging from the humdrum to the heart-stopping.

Years ago, when she was still on the switchboards, Betty Van Horn helped save three lives. She had a caller whose voice was so feeble that the only words she could decipher were "Hidden Lake," "cabin" and "help!"

She alerted firemen, who found the cabin in time to revive the caller and his wife and child. The family had been overcome by fumes from a fire left smoldering all night.

"In the course of a day, we have more happen on our boards than in a 10-block area of a city," reflected Mrs. Van Horn, an impeccably groomed woman. "So much is happening every minute. The calls sometimes are very sad, sometimes very humorous. Ours is an interesting, rewarding profession."

"The calls give you an overview of what people do for a living — that no matter how strange or inconceivable the situation, there's a person who can handle it."

The problems encountered are a microcosm of life — mice in the kitchen, bats in the attic, furnaces that shut off on the coldest night of the year, people panicked by sudden, severe chest pains.

"We've had people who said they were going to kill themselves," said Mrs. Van Horn, noting that her business serves many doctors and psychiatrists. "What these people really wanted was for us to help them."

The family business was launched in 1963 by Mrs. Van Horn and her late husband, Budd, a Bell Telephone employee for 40 years. Neither bomb threats nor blizzards have interrupted service.

Van Horn employees are a stubborn crew. The bomb scare, which occurred in 1979, didn't budge them from their posts, even after they were advised to evacuate the premises.

The blizzard, in 1977, was another matter. The morning operators were able to get home, but the Van Horns were forced to stick to their posts, because the evening shift couldn't reach the office. For 24 hours, mother and son worked alternating shifts.

"The job can be very demanding and grueling," Mrs. Van Horn said. "No matter what happens, somebody has to be here."

Keith Van Horn, a tall, easygoing man of 25, has been around the answering service business for a long time — he served his apprenticeship in his teens.

Van Horn, who studied business administration at Pennsylvania State University, maintains a hectic pace. His mother manages the scheduling of the 12 employees and he handles everything else, including marketing, advertising, purchasing and troubleshooting.

Dyslexia symptoms may alert parents to children's disorder

SYMPTOMS OF DYSLEXIA:

Dyslexics are not all alike. Some are more intelligent than others. Some are more coordinated than others. Some are good at math; others are not. Outwardly, dyslexics usually appear perfectly normal. However, there are a few clues that may alert parents to whether their children are dyslexic.

• Discrepancy between intelligence and ability to read. This can be determined as early as age 2 through testing at by reading specialists in the school system and by psychologists specializing in language skills.

• Oral language problems. This may be characterized by imprecise use of language. For example, a child may overuse the word "thing" in sentences, such as "I can't find the thing to cut with" instead of "I can't find the knife." Confusion of opposites is another sign — saying "forth" when one means "back," saying "up" when one means "down." Persistence of baby-talk into the first grade is another sign to watch for.

• Difficulty handling pencil and pen.

The Orton Dyslexia Society identifys psychologists who diagnose for dyslexia and also has names of tutors specializing in the condition, most of whom do not counsel adults. The Orton Society suggests that adults who have dyslexia consult reading centers at colleges for help.

Rare book acquired

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The University of Rochester Library has acquired a rare 1557 folio (large-page format) edition of the works of Sir Thomas More, the celebrated English lord chancellor, saint, historian, theologian, jurist, and scholar. It is the library's 2-millionth book.

The University's 2-millionth and first volume is a 1773 book of poems by Phillis Wheatley, an American slave who was the first black woman poet published in English.

DEAR ABBY

Mother to straighten family record

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My daughter is 4 years old. (I'll call her "Cindy.") I was not married when Cindy was born. (I'm still not.) I would like her to know the truth about what happened between her father and me, but I think she's too young to understand and also too young to keep it to herself. She's a smart little girl, very talkative, and tells strangers all our business, which should be kept at home.

She keeps saying she wants her daddy. I have told her that her father does not live with us and never will. She asks where her daddy is, and I tell her I don't know, which I don't. (He never knew I was pregnant, which is the way I wanted it.)

Last week a friend overheard Cindy tell someone that she had a daddy but he didn't live with us anymore. (Her daddy never did live with us, which I'm sure she knew.)

Out of the blue my child later asked, "Were you and my daddy ever married?" I was so shocked, I said "Yes!"

How do I handle this, Abby? I love her so much and don't want her hurt. I've already told her one lie and don't want to tell her another.

How much should I tell her? And when? — ON THE SPOT

DEAR ON: Cindy's question, "Were you and my daddy ever married?" indicates that she is much wiser than you suspect. Tell her the truth now, and stress the importance of keeping it in the family. If she talks, she talks. It's still the lesser of the evils. Children feel betrayed when they learn they've been lied to.

DEAR ABBY: I need your advice as soon as possible. I have four small children. They are all right-handed except the baby, who is 22 months old. She appears to be left-handed, but my husband is forcing her to use her right hand.

When she tries to eat with her left hand, he gets mad and roughly pulls the spoon out of her little fist and shoves it in her right hand. Then he stands over her, threatening to spank her if she tries to change back to her left hand. He has her crying and upset over this every time she eats.

He says all his brothers and sisters were naturally left-handed, but his mother whipped them into using their right hands because "left-handed people are clumsy and stupid." We have had some heated arguments over this.

I just let the baby use whichever hand she wants (and it's always her left hand when her daddy isn't around), but I'm afraid this is making a nervous and confused child of her. Please put this in your column with some advice for my bull-headed husband. I need somebody to back me up. — RIGHT-HANDED MAMA

DEAR MAMA: All my consultants on child development confirm your opinion and mine. Allow your child to use the hand she prefers. Forcing children to be right-handed when they are naturally inclined to be left-handed can cause stammering or emotional problems. Your husband is not only wrong, he's cruel.

(What's bugging you? Unload on Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

AT WIT'S END

By ERMA BOMBECK

The ailing economy has given birth to a new religion among families: Holistic Car Repairs, Spiritual Home Remodeling, and Divine Do-It-Yourself Projects.

Blessed is the woman who married a man who does not look at a leaky faucet and instruct his wife to tear a towel into strips.

Blessed is the man who has taken a wife who is not the sole support of a plumber at Hilton Head.

Neither my husband nor I should have been allowed to marry. We know that now. But when we were young and in love, we never figured that someday we'd be two unhandy people stumbling through life together. We just figured if something needed fixing, we'd hire someone to do it.

All that has changed.

We have a car now that is seven human years old. (Car years are 12 years to every one of ours, which makes it 84 years old.) It doesn't take care of us anymore. We take care of it.

The interior light is burnt out. The clock has stopped. A red light goes on for no reason. There is something knocking under the hood and as soon as my husband can find those little latches on the side that release it, he's going to look for it.

We have a sofa that looks like a trampoline with popcorn. It needs recovering. Do I have a sewing machine? Of course I have a sewing machine. What red-blooded all-American mother doesn't have a sewing machine? Do I know how to thread it? Of course I don't know how to thread it.

I know of other couples who are just as klutzy as we are when it comes to making their own repairs, but they're people of vision . . . people who looked ahead and could tell what was coming. They made friends with men who could put in ceiling fans on a weekend and women who are clever at labeling circuits in their fuseboxes, but we're not one of them.

We lived for the moment, dialing a plumber when something leaked, summoning an electrician when the power went dead, calling in a wallpaper hanger when a room needed brightening.

They say bad times really bring people together. My husband just put a sign on our front door, "HOUSE OUT OF ORDRE! GO NEXT DOOR!" He misspelled "order." I wouldn't count on it.

East finally meets west

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A play by the man said to be China's greatest living playwright will have its Western Hemisphere premiere this fall in Kansas City.

The play, "The Family," will be directed by Ying Ruocheng, an actor with the Beijing People's Art Theater in China.

Ying, who portrayed Kublai Khan in the "Marco Polo" TV series, is a visiting professor this year at the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, maintaining vows of prudence, prayed silently and alone Monday in a Gdansk church where 7,000 supporters of his outlawed union waited vainly for him the day before.

Walking past a few startled worshipers, the labor leader who was recently freed by martial-law authorities knelt alone and prayed at an altar in the nearly empty St. Brigyda's church, one of the largest in Gdansk.

Seven-thousand people had jammed the church Sunday, hoping to greet Walesa in what would have been his first major public appearance since he was freed from 11 months of internment. Walesa was widely expected to attend, but he decided instead to pray in a small chapel near home with his wife.

The 39-year-old labor chief, spending his first week of freedom behind drawn curtains in his Gdansk apartment, has vowed to be prudent about speaking out, apparently not wishing to provoke the Communist government into confining him again.

Walesa has held meetings with his Solidarity associates to discuss reviving the banned union under a strategy involving concessions to the military authorities, The New York Times reported Tuesday.

THE REPORT QUOTED an unidentified Pole who attended the meetings as saying Walesa now believed Solidarity should purge itself of dissident intellectual advisers who joined it in its early days.

In Warsaw, 2,000 Poles flashing victory signs attended the funeral of an optometrist who friends say died as a result of a police beating he suffered during scattered pro-Solidarity protests Nov. 10. The government has denied police were responsible for the death of 39-year-old Stanislaw Krolik.

Polish Archbishop Jozef Glemp, on an unrelated visit at a nearby church, joined the funeral service and said a rosary condemning violence while he stood above the body. But Glemp did not join the procession to the cemetery.

The government news agency PAP reported Premier Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski has ordered military squads called "operational groups" into the countryside to monitor administrative and economic changes under martial law.

The dispatch did not elaborate, but it raised more speculation that authorities were preparing to relax nearly one year of military rule. The speculation first arose when PAP announced a special Parliament session for Dec. 13, the first anniversary of martial law.

WALESA WAS SEIZED when Jaruzelski decreed martial law and suspended Solidarity after 16 months of strikes and challenges to Communist Party authority. The union was outlawed Oct. 8.

The government said Nov. 11 it was freeing Walesa because he was no longer considered a political threat. He returned home three days later from a government lodge in southeast Poland where he had been confined.

Since his release, Walesa has resisted answering questions from Western reporters, saying he needs more time to sort out his thoughts. But he has also sworn faithfulness to what he called the "spirit of August," referring to the independent union he helped form during August 1980 Gdansk shipyard strikes.

"He can see the support in society," Walesa's priest Henryk Jankowski said as Walesa strode from the church, dismissed questions from a reporter and flashed a victory sign before jumping into a car to go home.

"Solidarity lives," read one banner. "Who is with Solidarity is for peace and freedom. Workers — we all have to struggle for reactivation of Solidarity. Long live Solidarity with Lech Walesa."

JANKOWSKI SAID WALESA reacted "positively" when hearing of the church crowd that waited for him Sunday. But Walesa had received so many calls from supporters to make sure he would attend the Mass at St. Brigyda's that, in Jankowski's words, "he was afraid there could be some sort of provocation."

Jankowski, dubbed the "Solidarity priest" because he blessed the Lenin shipyard workers who organized Solidarity, has accompanied Walesa since he returned home, counseling him on how to behave publicly.

The priest, who accompanied Walesa to his meeting with Glemp in Warsaw on Saturday, said they discussed the "current political situation face-to-face." He said Walesa thanked Glemp for intervening to gain his release.

The visit was seen as a church show of support for Walesa. It came shortly after NBC News reported Polish security agents, in apparent attempts to discredit Walesa, had shown church officials photographs of him in "sexually compromising" positions with women, allegedly taken before he was interned.

The space shuttle orbiter Columbia lands at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida at 11:14 p.m. CST Monday for a well-earned rest and recuperation stay at the center. The orbiter Challenger was rolled out of its hangar and over to the Vehicle Assembly Building early this morning for preparation for its first flight in January.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Challenger, America's newest space shuttle, rolled out of its hangar today, just 17 hours after Columbia returned here following a five-day mission that ended in California last week.

The two spaceplanes were moved under separate tow early in the morning, Challenger to the Vehicle Assembly Building and Columbia into the hangar newly vacated by its sister ship at Kennedy Space Center.

Pronounced fit and ready for its maiden launch early next year, Challenger moved about 300 yards to the VAB for a fitting with its booster rockets and external fuel tank.

Columbia will undergo nine months of modifications in the Orbiter Processing Facility to convert it from a test-and-research craft into an operational one.

"It's the first time for Challenger and things are really going smoother than they did for Columbia," said Kennedy Space Center spokesman Hugh Harris. "I think this reflects the crews' experience."

Harris referred to a problem with vibration in a hydraulic line in the braking system which delayed Challenger's rollout by almost a week and said "it's not surprising. These problems come up from time to time. The line was replaced and the problem solved. We're moving right along and we're very pleased."

The new spacecraft began its 30-minute rollout at 4:58 a.m. EST, under the glare of special lights. As soon as its move was complete, workers unhooked its tow bar and sent it to the space center landing strip to be used in the tow job for Columbia.

The shiny new shuttle spent almost five months in the hangar getting outfitted to take over the space ferry job from Columbia for the next three missions.

Lighter than its predecessor, Challenger will carry a crew of four and a NASA tracking and relay satellite when it blasts off for the first time in late January or early February on a two-day mission.

Columbia's next flight is not scheduled until September 1983, when it will carry six astronauts and Spacelab, a reusable laboratory built by the European Space Agency.

Pope opens 'freewheeling session' of college

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II today opened a rare and "freewheeling session" of the College of Cardinals that will discuss the Vatican's troubled finances and other major issues confronting the Roman Catholic Church.

It is only the second time in modern history that the cardinals are holding a meeting outside of a conclave to elect a pope or a consistory to install new cardinals. The first was called in 1979 by Pope John Paul II, who said he wanted closer collaboration with his cardinals.

The pope, wearing a white cassock and skullcap, was greeted with warm applause by the 90 cardinals attending the meeting in the Vatican's Synod Hall. All 120 Roman Catholic cardinals were invited, but some could not attend because of health or other reasons.

The pontiff gave a brief welcoming speech in Latin in which he expressed "increasing concern for the (Vatican's) economic problems." Then the black-robed, red-capped cardinals settled in for four days of closed, highly secret talks.

"It will be a pretty freewheeling session. These things seem to have a life of their own," a Vatican official said before the meeting opened.

The official, who asked not to be named, said no final report would be issued publicly because the meeting is designed to let the cardinals exchange ideas freely and bluntly and to consult with the pope.

However, he said there is a growing feeling among the prelates that the Vatican should release two financial reports that will be presented to the cardinals.

One is on the Vatican's overall finances and the other deals with the Vatican bank's involvement with the collapsed Banco Ambrosiano, Italy's largest private bank and the center of one of its worst postwar financial scandals.

The source said the cardinals will hear a separate report on the Vatican bank — officially known as the Institute for Religious Works — which is headed by American Archbishop Paul C. Marcinkus.

They also will hear a report on the Vatican's finances by Cardinal John Krol of Philadelphia, a member of a 15-cardinal committee appointed by John Paul last year to study the Holy See's monetary problems. The committee met for four days just before the cardinals meetiing.

Krol said last week that the Vatican still faces a $30 million deficit this year.

He also told The Associated Press that three financial experts called in by the Holy See have concluded that the Vatican bank had done nothing wrong and was not responsible for $1.2 billion in bad loans that led to the collapse of Banco Ambrosiano.

The report has not been made public.

Marcinkus, 60, was implicated in the scandal because of a letter of patronage — similar to a letter of reference — he gave late Banco Ambrosiano President Roberto Calvi. Italian officials say Calvi, who committed suicide in London in June as his financial empire collapsed, used the letter to cover the loans, and therefore the Vatican bank should help repay them.

Marcinkus, the pope's trusted adviser and bodyguard, has denied any wrongdoing and insists the letter was not a credit guarantee.

Israel's broadcasting board upholds ban on Strauss

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Israel Broadcasting Authority has ordered the state radio to maintain its ban on music by Richard Strauss, charging that the German composer was a Nazi sympathizer.

The board of governors of the partially state-financed authority voted 3-1 Monday to reject a recommendation by the radio's music committee to abolish the ban. There was one abstention and two voters were absent.

Authority spokeswoman Ariella Ravdal said the plenary committee of the Authority would meet in six weeks for a final vote on whether to rescind the 34-year-old ban.

"The board felt that Strauss collaborated with the Nazis and there was no need to lift the ban, she said. "It felt that while survivors of the Holocaust are still with us, we must consider their feelings."

In 1933, at the age of 70, Strauss was appointed by the Nazis to head the German Musicians' Association. A post-World War II Allied de-nazification court cleared him of collaboration charges.

Islamic Tehran moves haltingly

By CHARLES J. HANLEY

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — In the age of Khomeini, this Mideast metropolis still buzzes with life — until 7 p.m. Shops are full — of unsold goods, not buyers. Construction cranes ride atop the cityscape — but they are motionless, frozen testament to an economy in retreat.

Almost four years after the fall of the monarchy, and as Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionaries strive to shape a "truly Islamic society," Tehran moves along at half-step.

In storefronts, in bus windows, on the stone flanks of great monuments, painted sayings from the Koran and stern portraits of turbaned, bearded clergymen remind Tehranis that they are living in an age of Islamic renaissance in Iran.

"It's insurance for when the komiteh (security men) come," explained a young U.S.-educated engineer who is quietly preparing to leave the country.

A revolutionary fault line runs through Tehran. It separates the middle- and upper-class north, where the anti-shah upheaval has transformed lifestyles, from the poor sections of the south, where life still revolves around the timeless themes of mosque and survival.

IN THE CROOKED, teeming streets of old south Tehran, the mosque has become more than a social center and place for daily prayer.

It is the distribution center for the ration coupons that mean survival, a "town meeting" hall for hearing the latest political news, a recruitment and training center for volunteers for the war against Iraq. The clergymen, or "mullahs," are more powerful than ever.

As a government propagandist noted, "The people who were poor before, they're still poor now. They haven't changed."

What has changed is that their traditional Shiite Moslem life of austerity, of spirituality, of shrouded women and self-denial is temporarily triumphant against the influences of the "corrupt West."

"The shah wanted women to show themselves off, to be 'free.' He wanted there to be alcoholic beverages....The law of God should be observed!" said this housewife, a small angry face lost in an enveloping black chador.

In north Tehran, where Western "corruption" once made its biggest inroads, there are fewer mosques. And these days there are also many fewer movies, concerts, non-religious or English-language books, and music programs on radio.

AS A RESULT, unofficial "video shops," selling cassettes of Western films, are one of the few booming businesses in Tehran. In a north Tehran apartment one night, a reporter found two teen-age boys and two girls huddled around a videocassette recorder watching "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest."

Not only would the mullahs have frowned on the film, but the gathering itself was illicit — putting boys and veil-less girls together is an offense punishable by a dozen or more lashes ordered by religious courts.

Tehran's video craze, like so much in Iran today, can be prohibitively expensive. A recorder costs the equivalent of $10,000, and a color television $6,000.

The Iranian economy is reeling from a series of blows — post-revolutionary disorganization, the flight of capital, Western economic reprisals connected with the U.S. Embassy seizure, and the war with Iraq.

Except for Iran's abundant fruits and vegetables, many staples are in short supply and strictly rationed — 1½ pounds of chicken per person per month, four ounces of butter, milk only for those with infants.

Supplies are not guaranteed. Men and women, in segregated lines, queue up early each day outside butcher shops and other food stores waiting for new provisions to arrive.

"It lasts about a week. Then you have to buy on the black market," said an Iranian journalist. The black market, which is open and tolerated, sells gasoline at four times the $1.34-a-gallon official price.

MIDDLE-CLASS IRANIANS rely heavily on the black market to fill many of their needs, but at a heavy price — $8 a pound for lean meat, $5 for a pack of cigarettes, $15 for an automobile sparkplug.

Banned items fetch stratospheric prices — a bottle of smuggled whiskey can cost $200, of homemade vodka $100. "I still drink," said an Iranian businessman, "but not whiskey. I make beer at home. So I've learned a skill!"

The government's shortage of foreign currency forced it to slash imports by one-third last year. As a visitor sipped a cup of instant coffee, his hostess pointed out that the 10-ounce jar of Maxwell House cost 80,000 rials, about $100. "And that's inexpensive," she said.

BRIH, Lebanon (AP) — Eid Saloum and his wife are one of the only two Christian families left in this tiny mountain village after repeated battles, bombings and assassinations between the right-wing Christian Phalange and leftist Druse Moslem militias.

Their house, just 10 yards from an Israeli tank and armored personnel carrier, is being used as a command post by a dozen Phalange fighters.

Brih is in the Chouf Mountains, where the deep valleys and narrow mountain roads have been the scene of at least 50 killings by both Christians and Moslems in the first half of November.

The continued violence is inflaming centuries-old sectarian hatreds, preoccupying the new Lebanese government in Beirut and complicating the task of negotiating an end to the occupation of Lebanon by Israelis, Syrians and remnants of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Israeli troops occupying the area say they are trying to stop the fighting, but both Christians and Druse accuse the Israelis of inflaming the situation by arming both sides.

AN ESTIMATED 300,000 people live in the Chouf, with Druse and Christians sometimes sharing the same villages although almost always in separate sectors. The two sects have been traditional enemies but had lived in relative peace for decades until the 1975-76 Lebanese civil war. Syrian troops who entered Beirut to stop that war moved into the Chouf, and many Christians fled.

After Israel invaded Lebanon June 6 to crush the PLO, the Syrians were forced out of these mountains southeast of Beirut. But the Israelis were followed into the Chouf by their Christian militia allies. Clashes soon began.

The latest and most serious round of violence began Nov. 1 in several villages including Brih, once the home of about 2,500 Christians and 1,500 Druse, 14 miles south of Beirut.

Saloum claimed that Druse from the leftist Socialist Progressive Party fired at a Phalange jeep, then went on a rampage in the Christian quarter, killing 20 or 30 men, women and children.

Other reports said the right-wing Christian militiamen attacked the Druse in their homes, assassinating seven or eight. Both sides agreed that two of the Druse who died that night were from Kfar Nabrakh, a village about a mile up the montain.

A WEEK LATER up to 100 Druse poured into Kfar Nabrakh in cars and on foot despite an Israeli checkpoint and tank 100 yards down the road. They attacked the Greek Orthodox funeral procession of 70-year-old Georges Khoury who had died in his bed the day before. Ten people were killed.

Since then, sporadic fighting, sometimes including artillery shelling, has continued in the Chouf, spreading as far north as Aley, a city of 10,000 just seven miles southeast of Beirut. More than 100 people have been kidnapped by one side or the other, with most being released but dozens still missing. Despite peacemaking attempts by the government and leaders of both sides the violence continues.

"I don't understand how it happened — this problem," said one Druse shopkeeper just outside Kfar Nabrakh, which remains blocked off by the Israelis. "We were just Christians and Druse living together for years."

"The Christians and the Druse are no problem," claimed Faisal Arslan, a prominent right-wing Druse leader. "The problem is the (Socialist Progressive Party) and the Phalange. And the Israelis are trying to make it bigger — feed the fire."

Lebanese Druse for decades have been divided along feudal lines between the Arslan family and the Jumblatt family, now headed by Socialist Progressive Party leader Walid Jumblatt.

ARSLAN AND A PHALANGE militia official who asked not to be named claimed in interviews that the biggest problem in stopping the fighting was the Israelis.

PLO council meeting will question Arafat's leadership

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — PLO officials meeting this week are expected to challenge the leadership of guerrilla chief Yasser Arafat, reject President Reagan's Middle East peace plan and condemn terrorism — except against Israel.

The 55-man Central Council of the Palestine Liberation Organization planned to convene at 10 p.m. (10 a.m. EST) Thursday and talk through the night if necessary, according to PLO officials who requested anonymity.

They said Arafat faces widespread dissatisfaction among hard-line followers. The PLO chairman was due to arrive in the Syrian capital by Wednesday.

Among the council's specific tasks is to set the time and place for the next PLO National Council meeting — often called the parliament-in-exile.

But the leaders also will discuss important questions of strategy and tactics now that PLO fighters are scattered throughout the Arab world since being driven from their west Beirut powerbase by Israeli invasion forces.

PLO leaders from both mainstream and more radical factions say the council is likely to take a vote of confidence in Arafat's leadership.

They said the meeting also would probably produce recommendations to the National Council to reject the initiative Reagan proposed in September, the same month an eight-point Arab peace plan was put forth.

Reagan's plan calls for Palestinian autonomy in association with Jordan for the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip. The Arab plan calls for creation of an independent Palestinian state on both territories under PLO leadership.

The PLO officials said the council also would probably urge the national body to strongly condemn terrorism, with the important reservation that "military action" against Israeli military and government targets will continue inside the Jewish state and the occupied territories.

Heated debate was expected over other questions, including Arafat's moves toward closer contacts with Jordan, Saudi Arabia, other conservative Arab governments and the West.

Also at issue are Arafat's contacts with Egypt, isolated in the Arab world because of its peace treaty with Israel, and reported attempts to make contact with Israel's opposition Labor Party.

Mitterand backs state

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — French President Francois Mitterrand was quoted by two leading Egyptian newspapers today as calling for mutual recognition between the Arab world and Israel, and for creation of an independent Palestinian state.

In an interview published in the Al Ahram and Al Akhbar newspapers, Mitterand said that "Israel should recognize their (the Palestinians) right to have their own land to build what they want on it."

Asked if he specifically called for an independent Palestinian state, Mitterrand was quoted as saying: "Yes, and this is something none of my predecessors has done before."

Mitterrand, who is scheduled to arrive here Wednesday for a three-day official visit, said that "there has to be recognition of Israel by the Arab world, and there has to be an Israeli recognition of Palestinian rights," the newspapers reported.

Haig receives honorary degree from Ben-Gurion University

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Former U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has received an honorary degree from Beersheba's Ben-Gurion University for his "outstanding services to the causes of freedom and peace."

Alexander Haig

Haig was awarded the degree in a ceremony Monday marking the ninth anniversary of the death of Israel's first prime minister, David Ben-Gurion. In an apparent slap at his former employer, the Reagan administration, Haig said Israel "does not need pedantic finger-wagging by other democracies."

Haig warned against democracies interfering with Israel, but added that the Soviet Union's failure to bail out Syria during the recent war in Lebanon shows other Middle Eastern countries "there is no alternative to a good relationship with the United States."

LONDON (AP) — Swedish actress Britt Ekland has lost her driving privileges for a year after pleading guilty to driving under the influence of alcohol.

Britt Ekland

The 40-year-old actress, who was once wife of the late British actor Peter Sellers, pleaded guilty Monday and was banned from driving for a year.

"It was a gruelling experience and I'm glad it's all over at last," Miss Ekland, wearing a black mini-skirt, told reporters outside London's Marylebone Court. She was driven away by a male companion in a Rolls-Royce.

Meanwhile, a Los Angeles modeling agency announced that Miss Ekland has signed a contract in hopes of landing commercial endorsements.

Miss Ekland's defense lawyer, David Jonas, said the actress was "rather depressed and upset" last June 11 when police spotted her driving through a red light and on the wrong side of the road in central London early one morning.

Jonas said Miss Ekland had taken an herbal "pick-me-up" tonic, which was found to contain alcohol. She then went out to dinner and drank wine and champagne before driving home in her black Mini Cooper, he said.

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II has edged out her popular son, Charles, and daughter-in-law, Diana, as London's favorite member of the royal family, a new poll shows.

The poll by Market Research Enterprises found that 37 percent of the 456 Londoners questioned liked the queen best. Her 82-year-old mother, the Queen Mother Elizabeth, was runner-up with 30 percent, followed by Charles, the heir to the throne.

Results of the poll, published Monday, also confirmed the unpopularity of Charles' sister, Princess Anne. Forty-seven percent said they liked her least. The queen's divorced sister, Princess Margaret, 52, with 36 percent, was the next least popular.

Family feeding whole town for Thanksgiving

PERU, Ind. (AP) — The Chuck Enyeart family is not expecting any leftovers this Thanksgiving. The railroad engineer, his wife, Beverly, and their eight children have invited the entire town to dinner.

Peru has a population of 14,000, but the Enyearts aren't worried.

One woman wants to come and play the piano and serenade the dinner guests.

Past Thanksgivings have found the Enyeart table loaded with food — "enough to feed 50 people; we'd be eating it for a week," says Mrs. Enyeart, who decided it was time to share their good fortune with the less fortunate.

"We're just doing it out of love for our fellow people," said Enyeart. "My wife and I were just talking onc day about having some people who are poor come over to our home for Thanksgiving dinner. We're just like everyone else. We live from payday to payday."

After thinking it over, Enyeart and his wife worried that strangers might feel uncomfortable coming into their home. So they asked officials of St. Charles Catholic school for help, and the result will be a meal for anyone who wants to come at the school gymnasium.

"People are donating pies, turkeys and everything," said Enyeart. "Anonymous donors have left money in our mail box and people have left food on our front porch. One lady donated a microwave oven to heat meals so we can deliver them to about 30 shut-ins. Some people are donating autos and vans so we can deliver."

Donations so far total about $180, eight turkeys and assorted pies and fruit baskets.

Enyeart says he doesn't know how many people to expect, but promises no one will go away hungry "even if we have to go buy something."

His anticipated cost? "Just a lot of love," says Enyeart. "Each day that goes by I get more excited.

"People have just been so gracious and so willing to do anything," he said. "It has just been an incredible, beautiful experience."

Mrs. Enyeart said she is urging people who will be alone on Thanksgiving to come to dinner. "Being alone — that's being poor spiritually," she said. "It's no fun to have a million dollars and eat Thanksgiving dinner alone. Come and be loved and fed at our dinner."

Harvard University ivy will grow again

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Harvard is back in the ivy league, but in a trimmed-down form.

Thomas Quinn, Harvard's director of facilities, told the Harvard Crimson student newspaper Monday that the plants that are still alive will be allowed to rejuvenate, but only to the height of first-floor windows.

"We have nothing against ivy," Quinn said, adding the decision was reached "as soon as we determined that allowing the ivy to grow to that height would not damage buildings."

"The plants that are still alive will be allowed to grow back," he said.

The Committee to Save Harvard's Ivy, a student group which rallied to the vegetation's cause last spring, proclaimed a victory.

"There's going to be ivy on the university's walls for the foreseeable future," said committee chairman David T. Stern. "We've won."

Stern said the university was "testing the water" when it cut down the ivy. "If they didn't get any reaction from students or alumni, they were going to poison the roots," he said.

"We prevented (Harvard) from taking out the roots," he said "They should be able to grow back within only a few years."

Well, Virginia, maybe there's a Santa Claus

NEW YORK (AP) — If your child says he sees Dancer, Prancer, Donner and Blitzen pulling Santa and his sleigh across the roof, don't tell him it can't be so. You may be doing the child harm, a psychologist says.

"Being the only one in the classroom who knows for sure that there's no such guy could make a child feel very different, very strange," David M. Kelley says in an interview in the December Parents magazine.

"In some instances, the denial could lead to a sense of strength — 'This is my family's way of doing things and I'm proud of it.' But that would be unusual," says the doctor from the Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York.

"Some mothers and fathers are too constricted to feel comfortable with fantasy and may not want their children to be fanciful either," he says. "You really ought to be able to get down on the floor and make believe with your children."

The main gallery of the MOA Museum of Art (MOA for Mokichi Okada Association) near Tokyo displays sculpture and Oriental graphics.

Creativity from beauty

TOKYO — As with so many things lately, the Japanese think they can make a better museum. So on a misty, pine-clad bluff overlooking the Pacific Ocean in Atami, near Tokyo, they have just built a spectacularly different kind of museum.

It may be the museum of the future, or at least the institution's last, best hope of avoiding replacement by videotaped home culture like Kenneth Clark's "Civilization" and Jacob Bronowski's "The Ascent of Man."

It's called the MOA Museum of Art (MOA for Mokichi Okada Association), but it is a museum dedicated not so much to art itself as to a single idea about art: That man's highest creativity springs directly from nature's original beauty, so the two are best experienced together.

Art and nature in the same environment? The odds against enjoying the two together are obvious enough to anyone who ever tried to park outside New York's Museum of Modern Art, much less ride there on the Long Island Rail Road. It would seem a sheer impossibility within the world's most crowded megalopolis, that unzoned sprawl of factories and apartments, railroad tracks and high tension lines — and 20 million people — known as metropolitan Tokyo.

WITH A $100-MILLION budget of private money, MOA's designers seized on technology to provide the necessary escape from technology, as it were. City dwellers may depart from the very center of Tokyo and within 70 minutes find themselves in a grove of pine and bamboo with a breathtaking vista of ocean at one hand, and MOA's rich collection of Chinese and Japanese art (and a handful of western work, soon to be expanded) at the other.

The famed Bullet Train deposits you at Atami station in 55 minutes, and from there a direct bus winds up the back streets of this hot-springs resort on Sagami Bay for another five minutes. The terminus is a sheer hillside, green with vines and bushes except where a large stone entranceway leads underground.

You buy your ticket there (for under $5 at the present exchange rate) and are swallowed in a huge upward-leading tunnel lined by escalators. In all, there are four banks of escalators, each angled away from the last to minimize the awareness of depth. A wild vista of forest and sea springs forth where the tunnel emerges into daylight, high above Atami.

Presiding over this plaza carved into the hillside is Henry Moore's "King and Queen," an oversized bronze of a man and woman seated, their placid gaze directed toward the wooded islands in Sagami Bay and the Pacific Ocean beyond. As the tunnel cordons off the city from nature, Moore's figures establish the new connection between nature and art.

The museum's only task is to be unobtrusive. It is brilliantly so — built of softspoken Indian sandstone to blend into the hillside, the surrounding forest intact in every view from inside. Even the gallery lighting is cleverly contrived to obscure the presence of the building itself.

IN THE JAPANESE HOME, decoration consists not of walls covered with pictures, but a corner with a single piece of art appropriate to the mood or the season — a flower arrangement, a woodblock print or perhaps a homemade piece of origami (folded-paper sculpture). MOA follows that tradition: a Monet painting of a lily has one large room all to itself, and a Maillol sculpture another. And though the museum has more than 3,000 items to choose from in its permanent collection it is meticulous in avoiding a sense of clutter in the galleries of oriental art.

There is also a Noh theater for classical Japanese drama, and a replica of Kyoto's imperial teahouse of gold.

Compared to MOA, the other radically innovative museum project of recent years, the Pompidou Centre in Paris, offers an atmospheric mix of Charles DeGaulle Airport and Times Square, busy beyond belief. Here there's a palpable air of reverence in the place and its personnel as one might expect to find in a gothic cathedral or Buddhist monastery — and quite appropriately so.

The Museum of Art is an arm of the Church of World Messianity founded by Mokichi Okada (the MO of MOA) after World War II.

Okada was an unconventional genius born 100 years ago this year in Tokyo. Misfortune stalked the man throughout his life: One career as a painter was abruptly terminated by eye disease, another as a creator of lacquer inlay by a hand injury. He lost his wife and child in childbirth.

HIS LATER CAREER as a wholesaler was marvelously successful, but he lost his entire fortune in the Great Tokyo earthquake of 1923. In 1935 he dedicated himself to religion, but his efforts to establish a church based on his eccentric ideas about esthestics and religion were banned by Japan's notorious "thought police" of the day.

After the country surrendered in 1945, Okada published a prescient blueprint for the role Japan should seek in the postwar world.

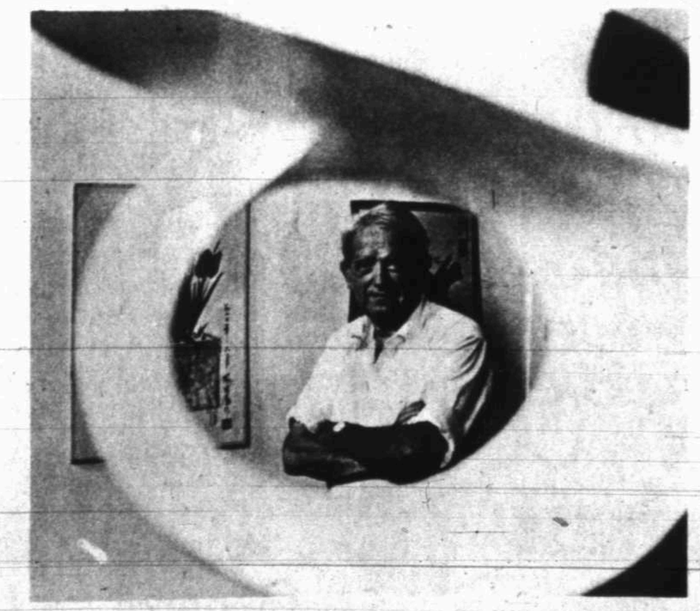

"One might say that Japanese history is nothing more than a record of power struggles, the last being the Pacific War," he wrote. "The Japanese people have been the greatest victims of this ceaseless strife...Yet, during the long periods of war there have been short intervals of peace in which esthetic expression flourished, and a legacy of painting, sculpture, and other decorative arts survives.

"Considering all these factors, one naturally concludes that the proper mission of Japan must be to employ the media of nature and human artistry to help enrich the higher sentiments of humankind, to give comfort and enjoyment, and to cultivate an ideology that advocates satisfaction derived from peace."

Okada died in 1955, just two days after he acquired the Japanese national treasure, "Wisteria Tea Jar," but he already had set in motion the planning for the museum, completed by his 800,000 followers in January to celebrate his centennial.

To their credit — considering the huge investment the church has put into the museum — there are no religious "commercials" to be found in the place beyond a small sign at ground level saying "Welcome to the sacred grounds."

Henry Riseman, director of the New England Center for Contemporary Art in Brooklyn, Conn., stands in the main gallery of the museum near Tokyo. Riseman has played a key role in arranging an art exchange with China.

The first year's payment and buydown qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 3/8%. Loan is rate interest will be changed at a rate of 1 2 3/8% per each 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4 2%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to serve as the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4 2%. The 7.50% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceed ...0%. At each 5 year anniversary date the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.875%

GAS. CLEAN ENERGY FOR TODAY AND TOMORROW. FHA/VA financing availble.
