Brady-bill background checks trigger gripes, anger in Texas

By Laura Tolley
Associated Press

HOUSTON — The Brady bill came to Texas a month ago looking to bring its own brand of order to the way Lone Star residents buy handguns.

But the new stranger in town hasn't received the traditional Texas welcome.

"I hate it!" said Cindy Smith, an Alvin resident.

"It's taking our rights away. We have the right to bear arms," says gun-owner Brenda Lege of nearby Dayton. "You don't want to depend on other people to defend you here in Texas."

This is the state where the most honored souls are those who fought and died for independence at The Alamo. Texans love their freedom, and they have a long history of fighting those who try to mess with it.

Working middle class carries heavy debt, Fed figures show

By Keith Bradsher
N.Y. Times News Service

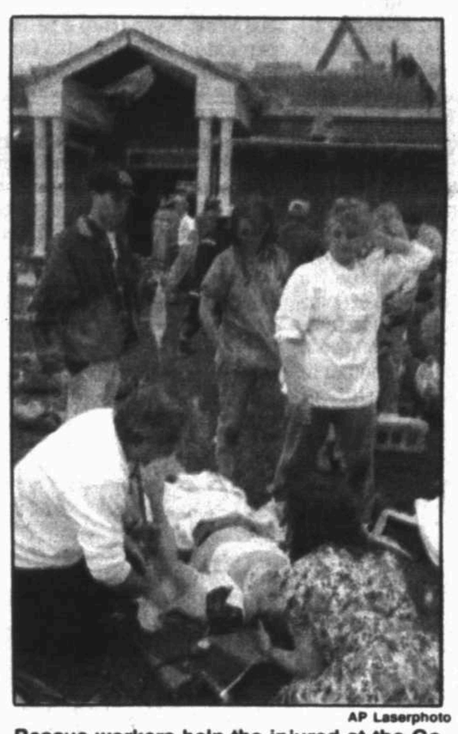

WASHINGTON — New figures from the Federal Reserve show a weak spot in the economic recovery: the heavy burden of debt being carried by the working middle class.

While the household finances of the rich and elderly have returned to normal levels, middle-class families remain stuck with unusually high debt payments as a proportion of their income, according to the Fed figures. Families that are not rich or old are paying nearly a quarter of their income to creditors, up substantially from levels in previous economic recoveries.

That high debt, resulting from stagnating wages while low interest rates have encouraged families to borrow, means consumers are living close to the financial edge, and ready to cut

Tornado kills 19 in church; 19 others die

Rescue workers help the injured at the Goshen United Methodist Church in Piedmont, Ala., after the church was hit by a tornado Sunday. At least 19 people were killed.

■ Violent thunderstorms sweep through Alabama, Georgia, tearing up houses, knocking down trees, filling hospital emergency rooms.

Associated Press

PIEDMONT, Ala. — A tornado caved in the roof of a church crowded with Palm Sunday worshipers, killing 19 people. Nineteen others died as twisters and violent thunderstorms tore through the Southeast, battering two other churches, hundreds of houses and a nursing home.

The tornado hit Goshen Methodist Church about 11:30 a.m., shattering windows and toppling a brick wall on a pew of children in Easter outfits waiting to sing in a pageant.

At least 90 people were injured, said authorities in this northeastern Alabama town. Six children, ages 2 to 12, were among the dead.

Worshipers said they heard wind against the church, then the lights went out.

"At that minute, things started hitting the side of the church, and something came through one of the windows," said Carol Scroggins, who was at the altar leading the Easter program. "I just started to scream, 'Everybody get down!' ... People were

Parole flap: Personal, legal webs mark serial rapist's life

By John Howard
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — His release from prison enraged residents of a sparsely populated northern California county and rocked the state parole system. The governor is now personally considering his case.

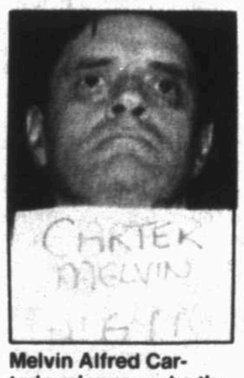

But who is Melvin Alfred Carter, the serial rapist of at least 100 women, by his own count, who so focused one state's attention on where it places parolees?

Carter, 49, who has served less than half his original 25-year prison sentence and is now living in a two-bedroom bungalow in a forest prison camp, grew to manhood with a profound hatred of women, according to a confidential Alameda County probation assessment obtained by The Associated Press.

"While he has dated 'a few' women during his adulthood, he has never had a close or satisfying relationship with a woman and he has never had sexual contact with any woman he has dated," the document said.

Carter had an unhappy childhood, tormented by a stern mother he says humiliated his passive father in domestic battles. Carter believes the hostility he holds for his mother caused him to rape repeatedly, said the court-ordered study.

WASHINGTON — For months, a federal investigator named Jean Lewis labored to get her superiors to take seriously a check-kiting scheme at an Arkansas savings and loan that she believed might have benefited President and Mrs. Clinton.

Lewis, an investigator in the Resolution Trust Corp.'s Kansas City, Mo., office, was for months the lone voice calling for a probe into the relationship among the Clintons, the Whitewater Development Corp. and the failed Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan.

Her actions came to light last week when Rep. Jim

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers demanded it, the Federal Communications Commission ordered it, but that's still no guarantee that bills for cable are about to fall.

The FCC decreed a cut in February, saying it would "bring prices down another 7 percent." But there's no guarantee that's what subscribers will see when the change is finally implemented.

That's because the FCC hasn't spelled out the formula that cable companies and local regulators must use to figure new rates. Additionally, rates depend on which services each subscriber takes.

The formula is contained in a rate order that the FCC is expected to issue this week. It is long overdue.

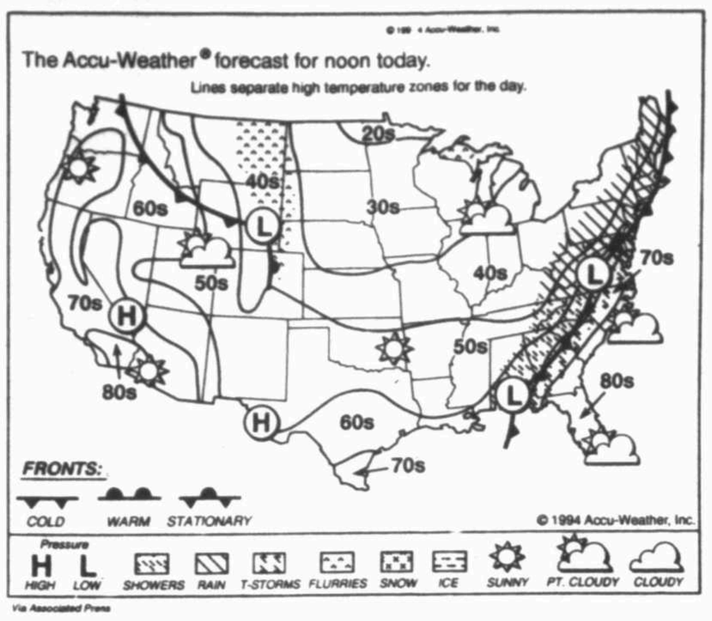

With so many details still in the air, cable companies have been thrown into chaos. Millions of dollars are at stake. Their bankers are jittery. And local regulatory authorities worry about what the new rules will do for consumers.

David Olson, director of the Portland, Ore., Office of Cable Communications and Franchise Management, said he doesn't expect all 140,000 cable subscrib-

Clouds to break; cold lingers

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls fo cloudy skies early, becoming mostly sunny with a high in the mid-50s and north winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be clear with a low in the lower 30s, according to the National Weather Service.

Tuesday should be mostly sunny with a high near 75.

After an overnight low of 41, Sunday's high reached 54, compared to the record high for that date of 95 set in 1971. The record low was 19 set in 1931.

STATE

Low temperatures filtered across Texas on Sunday.

A cold front brought cooler air to parts of South Texas on Sunday. Temperatures in the Hill Country were in the 50s but in the lower Rio Grande Valley were in the 80s. Skies were cloudy across the region with a few areas of light rain.

An early morning storm in San Antonio produced lightning, walnut-sized hail and winds in excess of 100 mph. That left crews responding to reports of downed power lines affecting 30,000 customers on the city's north side.

Today's forecast calls for South Texas calls for considerable cloudiness with a slight chance for precipitation. Highs will be in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

A series of violent thunderstorms swept from Texas to the Carolinas on Sunday, bringing tornados, large hail and wind damage. It was unseasonably cool in the Plains and the Rockies.

A tornado in Piedmont, Ala., caved in the roof of a church, killing 17 people. At least 11 other deaths and heavy damage were reported as storms moved through Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina.

Golfball-sized hail pelted parts of Alabama and Mississippi, and dime-sized hail fell in Arkansas.

Heavy winds caused damage in North Carolina and Mississippi. In Texas, winds gusted up to 104 mph at Randolph Air Force Base near San Antonio.

TORNADO: Twister hits church in Alabama

screaming, but it happened so quickly there wasn't much time for reaction."

The tornado ripped away an entire side of the low-slung, modern red brick building and blew the steeple into the parking lot. Pieces of pews and wooden children's chairs were strewn across the lawn.

"One man ran down the aisle yelling 'Get on the floor!' " said worshiper Elwanna Acker, 63. "Then the roof came down. The woman right next to me died."

"People were praying," she said. "People were worrying about their grandchildren."

A nursery filled with children in a church wing did not collapse.

Sixteen bodies were found inside the church, and one man was found outside in a van, apparently killed by part of a toppled telephone pole, Cherokee County sheriff's deputies said. An 18th victim died while being driven to a hospital, and a 19th died at a hospital.

About six miles away, the Union Grove Methodist church was demolished by a tornado during services, but its 75 worshipers took shelter in the basement and escaped injury, said Piedmont Mayor Vera Stewart.

A tornado also heavily damaged the Ten Island Baptist Church, about 30 miles west of Piedmont, and injured an undetermined number of people, Calhoun County sheriff's dispatcher Leon Hill said.

The tornadoes were part of an intense spring storm system that began with moist, unstable air off the Gulf of Mexico early Sunday. The air was pushed northeast by the jetstream and clashed with low pressure along a cold front.

Fifteen people were killed in Georgia. Barbara Turner said a tornado demolished her Pickens County home and killed six people in the mobile home next door, leaving their bodies strewn over a half-mile.

Turner said she, her 10-month-old granddaughter and four other relatives tried to ride out the tornado by crouching near the chimney. They all survived, but ended up across the road in a ditch.

"It just picked everything up and just twirled it around and then the ground looked like it was just coming up around," she said. "And then before you knew it everything was just — everything was clearing out of the way. Everything just turned to rubble."

Elsewhere in Alabama, tornadoes killed one person at a park and another in his car. In eastern Tennessee, a hiker in the Great Smoky Mountains drowned in a rain-swollen creek during an afternoon deluge. And in Charlotte, N.C., a man standing in front of his home was killed by a lightning bolt.

Another wave of violent storms pounded the region Sunday evening. Police in Piedmont cut short a news conference because of another tornado warning.

About 140 people were in the Goshen church, five miles north of Piedmont. Rescuers had feared others were buried, but all were accounted for after more than 100 searchers dug through the rubble by hand and used a crane to lift the roof.

Christa Rhinehart, 16, who had sung earlier in the service, said she was sitting near the front when the roof came down on her pew. "I started screaming for my mama," she said, "and she was right beside me."

The storm knocked out power and telephone service, hampering rescue efforts. Passing motorists helped ferry the injured to hospitals around Piedmont, a rural town of 6,000 residents 72 miles west of Atlanta.

A temporary morgue was set up at a National Guard armory in Piedmont, and the civic center was turned into a shelter for the families of victims. Pews were used to carry the injured, and dead bodies were laid in a carport across the street from the church.

BATTLE: Employee was lone voice for months

(From 1A)

Leach, R-Iowa, released a series of memos, notes and electronic mail messages between Lewis and her colleagues. Now, she is likely to be a key in special prosecutor Robert Fiske's Whitewater probe and the RTC's ultimate decision about whether to pursue civil actions against those involved in the failure of Madison.

Madison's owner, James McDougal, was acquitted in 1990 of federal bank fraud charges arising from the S&L's failure.

Lewis was assigned to take another look at Madison in 1991. As she probed, Lewis came to wonder: If the Clintons had put no money in Whitewater, and it was generating little cash flow, how was the $202,000 in loans being paid off? And, she wrote in a Feb. 2, 1994, memo: Shouldn't the Clintons' suspicions have grown since they knew that their Whitewater co-investor, McDougal, headed an S&L that was commonly known to be in bad financial shape?

In one memo to her own file, Lewis related how a lawyer with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. in Washington, April Breslaw, had told her "the people at the top" wanted to say that Whitewater did not cause a loss to Madison.

Lewis wrote that Breslaw said the superiors wanted a "honest answer" but would be "happier about certain answers that would get them off the hook." Lewis wrote that she reiterated to Breslaw that her belief that Whitewater had caused losses to Madison.

Breslaw did not return a call from The Associated Press. But in an interview last week with The New York Times, Breslaw disputed Lewis' assertion and criticized the quality of her investigation.

"I categorically deny the accusation that I said anybody from Washington wanted any particular outcome on any issue," she said. "That's a complete fabrication."

In the documents released by Leach, Lewis accused the Clintons of no wrongdoing. But after tracking $70,000 that McDougal shifted from Madison to Whitewater in 1985, she said the Clintons' might have been the unwitting beneficiaries of Madison's defrauding.

RTC spokeswoman Felicia Neuringer declined to comment on Leach's statements or anything in the documents he released last week.

Lewis did not respond to a message left on her office answering machine. But she told the Kansas City Star: "My hands are tied. I'd like to keep my job."

Several colleagues and one of her superiors spoke highly of Lewis' abilities as an investigator but declined to be quoted by name.

DEBT: Middle class bears heavy burden

spending at any sign of economic trouble.

But it is consumer spending that is fueling the recovery, and economists worry that overstretched middle-class families could put a powerful brake on the economy.

Further, more and more people's savings are in Individual Retirement Accounts and 401(k) plans — which save money on taxes now but impose stiff penalties for early withdrawal. This reduces families' financial flexibility — they are unlikely to dip into savings to continue spending when to do so is difficult and expensive.

"What seems to be one of the best of times financially for our country as a whole stands, in contrast, to what is arguably one of the riskiest times that large parts of the household sector have faced in many years," said Lawrence B. Lindsey, an influential member of the Federal Reserve Board who presented and analyzed the new figures in a speech in Baltimore earlier this month.

"I believe that the household sector poses one of the most serious risks to the continuation of this recovery."

Interest payments and repayments of principal continue to claim an unusually high proportion of household incomes for families that earn less than $200,000 a year and have no one old enough to qualify for Social Security or Medicare.

These payments by middle-class families consumed 22.9 percent of these households' after-tax income last year, down from a peak of 25.9 percent in 1990, but still far above the average in the 1960s and 1970s of a little under 18 percent, according to Lindsey.

By contrast, when elderly and wealthy families are included, the debt service burden for all households fell last year to 16.2 percent, only slightly higher than levels in the 1960s and 1970s.

Economists like Lindsey are worried about Americans like Jim Rice, a 39-year-old veterinarian in Cynthiana, Ky., who complains that his income has not kept up with rising prices, especially for cars.

Rice refinanced his home last year with a larger mortgage and used the extra money to buy an $18,000 Oldsmobile Bravada.

"What I save is my retirement plan, and that's zilch," Rice said.

Economists also worry about people like Charles Scheffold, a 48-year-old electrical systems technician in Brooklyn who puts most of his savings into tax-deferred annuities.

"I would say that my flexibility would be reduced by using those tax-deferred vehicles," he said. "I might lose opportunities on deals like a house or a co-op or a car."

FLAP: Rapist's presence prompts threats

(From 1A)

Carter has said he assaulted women almost monthly for 10 years.

Dubbed the "College Terrace Rapist," for a Palo Alto neighborhood near Stanford University, Carter never varied his methods, investigators say.

He stalked young women who lived alone near college campuses, including Berkeley and Hayward as well as Stanford. Wearing surgical gloves and carrying a knife, he entered the dwellings after the victims had gone to bed. Before creeping into the bedrooms, he cut phone and electrical wires.

"Victim would awake to find defendant on top of her with a knife at her throat," said a district attorney's report.

Carter was captured in 1980 and eventually convicted of 23 crimes, including rape, assault, burglary and attempt to commit burglary.

In the mid-1970s, rape investigators in the San Francisco Bay area began noticing common elements and started trading information. Gradually, crimes as far back as 1971 were clearly tied to the same rapist.

No charges were filed in many of the cases because legal deadlines had passed, prosecutors said.

"It's a woman's worst nightmare," said Tammy Bruce, head of the Los Angeles chapter of the National Organization for Women, "... an entire system that has no idea how to track its most violent offenders."

The break came when Carter was stopped and interrogated as a suspected prowler in Palo Alto. Authorities routinely fed his background into their College Terrace Rapist file and found remarkable matches with parts of a profile developed by police psychiatrists.

The profile identified the rapist as likely to be "unmarried, an engineer or a scientist of high intelligence, and meticulous in his attention to detail."

Carter, identified in one court report as a loner much of his life, is a research engineer who last worked for Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corp. in Livermore.

While attending the Colorado School of Mines, Carter was arrested several times on peeping Tom charges. He spent a year in a Colorado jail for assault and assault with intent to rape.

At his sentencing in March 1982, Carter confessed to some 100 rapes. But last month, prison officials realized they had no choice but to release Carter: His good behavior already had shaved off one-third of his 25-year sentence and a subsequent change in state law boosted good-time and work-time credits to half the time off.

Carter originally was scheduled for release in Hayward, conforming to a state law requiring release in the county of conviction. But protests in Alameda County prompted Gov. Pete Wilson to order him sent "out in the wilderness someplace," and Carter was secretly placed in the bungalow at the Devil's Garden Conservation Camp near tiny Alturas, 400 miles northeast of San Francisco.

Devil's Garden is one of the state' 38 minimum-security compounds, which house more than 4,000 inmates. The camps are considered the country clubs of the correctional system, taking only inmates with no history of sex offenses, arson, crimes of violence, kidnapping or escape. Because Carter is a parolee, not an inmate, the guidelines do not apply.

Wilson never specified Modoc County, which has 10,000 residents, as the "wilderness" area, but critics are accusing him of election-year politicking in demanding a rural area with few votes.

(From 1A)

Enter the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act, which took effect Feb. 28. It requires the state's estimated 21,605 federally licensed gun dealers to run background checks on anyone trying to buy a handgun.

A month later, law enforcement agencies across Texas are struggling with the extra work needed to complete the checks while gun dealers are handling questions from a confused public and buyers are mad for many reasons.

Opposition to the bill seems to often stem from the belief that the bill is causing much work but won't do much to reduce crime.

"Criminals can just buy them off the street," says Houstonian Robert Dodd. "Criminals are not going to go into gun stores. The way they're going about it is not going to hurt anybody but law-abiding citizens."

Gun dealers now must require would-be buyers to fill out an application that is then submitted to local law enforcement agencies to check.

The new task is proving to be a strain for many departments.

In the first two weeks, the Houston Police Department received 1,306 applications and denied 150. Police said the applications generally were rejected because of criminal records or outstanding municipal warrants.

"We've got additional personnel dedicated to this responsibility," says police spokesman Rick Hartley. "It's taxing the identification division — 700 is quite a few to take in in just a week."

The scenario is similar across the state.

"We are holding our own," said Sgt. Larry Cisneros, commander of the San Antonio Police Department's identification bureau, who handles the new load with a few others.

Between Feb. 28 and March 18, the division tossed out 31 of 849 applications, including one from a man wanted on an outstanding charge.

The Dallas Police Department refused 95 of 1,286 applications received in two weeks.

In West Texas, Lubbock police denied nine of the 109 applications. But police there say they have encountered few problems with the new bill.

"The computers have just been doing great — they have had a lot of speed," said Drue Jeffcoat, Lubbock police records supervisor. "It's going a lot better than I expected."

Austin, however, cannot boast the same.

"It's going pretty slowly. We're getting some of the stuff out, but some of it's not getting done by the five days," says Austin Police Department Lt. John Boyd.

DELAY: Don't count cable bill cut yet

ers in his city to receive a 7 percent reduction, no matter what the FCC said in its February announcement.

"The press releases announcing what the FCC is going to do (do) not always have a one-to-one relationship to reality," he said.

He noted that the FCC's first set of cable regulations, issued almost a year ago, sometimes resulted in rate increases — not cuts. That won't happen this time, local regulators predict.

At the time, the FCC predicted bills for two-thirds of all cable subscribers would drop by as much as 10 percent.

Sixty-eight percent did, but — to the FCC's surprise and Congress' dismay — 31 percent of consumers got increases.

This prompted demands that the FCC revisit the rules. It did so, last month.

Susan Herman, general manager of Los Angeles' Department of Telecommunications, said she is uncertain about the impact on the 520,000 subscribers she oversees. And New York state cable regulator William Finneran, who oversees 3.9 million cable customers, shied away from predicting the outcome.

But Bill Squadron, president of a local regulators' lobby group called the National Association of Telecommunications Officers and Advisors, predicted "a significant percentage of consumers will see rates go down."

If the new FCC rules come out soon, Herman thinks consumers could see a drop in their bills by late summer or early fall. Olson thinks December is a surer bet.

And some consumers may have to wait longer. If cable systems appeal local rate decisions, the new rates won't take effect until the disputes are resolved.

Basic cable rates are regulated by cities, not the FCC, but they use the FCC's formula. The FCC regulates rates beyond the basic package only if consumers file complaints.

The new rules mean more work, cable executives and local regulators said. Whether more work translates into a longer wait for consumers depends on the resources of local regulators.

"We essentially have to re-do what we've already done," said Mike Isaacs, governmental affairs director of the Providence Journal Co., which operates cable systems in nine states, serving 800,000 subscribers.

FCC officials predict the new rules will take effect in mid-May, dovetailing with May 15, the day when a freeze on cable revenues will be lifted.

The World in brief

■ Husband visits detained wife in Burma

RANGOON, Burma — The British husband of detained opposition leader Aung San Suu Kyi arrived Sunday for their first reunion since Christmas.

Last month, U.S. Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M., became the first non-family member to visit Suu Kyi.

The decision by the Burmese military to allow Richardson's visit, along with its release of about 2,000 prisoners, has raised hopes that Burmese authorities are reassessing their hard-line policies.

Suu Kyi headed a 1988 pro-democracy uprising that was brutally suppressed by troops. Two years later, her National League for Democracy scored a landslide election victory that the Burmese junta has refused to recognize.

The junta has said Suu Kyi could go free if she agreed to leave the country, a condition she has refused.

Suu Kyi was visited by her husband, Dr. Michael Aris, and the couple's two sons, Alexander and Kim, in December.

■ Yeltsin returns home after vacation

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin returned home Sunday after a Black Sea vacation that set off a rash of rumors about coup plots and failing health.

"I had a good vacation, even though it was rainy," he said at the airport in the resort city of Sochi before heading home, the ITAR-Tass news agency reported.

"I played tennis and swam in the sea," he said. "I worked four hours every day."

Yeltsin's two-week absence from the politically skittish Russian capital sparked coup rumors and speculation about everything from the president's bad back to his drinking habits.

Presidential aides were forced to issue frequent denials that Yeltsin was at death's door and to rebut a steady stream of conspiracy stories in the media.

Yeltsin, in an interview published Saturday in the newspaper Izvestia, condemned the "rich brew of lies, meanness and greed" that had steeped in his absence. Even his normally reticent wife, Naina, spoke out.

"I fail to understand why such an unhealthy concern with the president's health has arisen," she told the daily newspaper Komsomolskaya Pravda.

■ Chunk falls off Leaning Tower of Pisa

PISA, Italy — The Leaning Tower of Pisa is becoming the Crumbling Tower of Pisa.

A foot-wide chunk of stone fell from the tower overnight and was found by a guard, news reports said Sunday. No one was injured.

For years, experts have warned that the bell tower's exterior badly needs shoring up, but most attention paid to the 12th-century monument has been about efforts to slow or halt its lean.

After much debate, engineers stacked 600 tons of lead at the tower base last year to act as a counterweight. The strategy appears to be working: measurements in January found the tower had straightened up by about half an inch.

The 180-foot tower started to lean almost immediately after it was finished as the ground shifted beneath it and now leans 13 feet from the vertical. It was closed to tourists three years ago.

■ Pilgrim procession marks Palm Sunday

JERUSALEM — Waving palm branches and singing hymns, thousands of Christian pilgrims from around the world marched down the slopes of the Mount of Olives to mark Palm Sunday.

The day commemorates Jesus' entry into Jerusalem when the multitudes proclaiming him King of Israel laid palm branches before him. Palm Sunday falls on the Sunday before Easter.

The procession walked from the Mount of Olives into the walled Old City amid tight security. Border police with submachine guns accompanied the pilgrims on foot, and several jeeps were stationed at points along the route.

Israeli security forces are on high alert, fearing revenge attacks by Palestinian militants for the Feb. 25 massacre in Hebron carried out by a Jewish settler. Security officials have been warned that assailants might strike during the eight-day Jewish Passover holiday which began Saturday.

Fighting flares between Serbs, Muslims

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Government forces attacked Serb fighters in northern Bosnia on Sunday, leading the Serb leader to threaten a counterattack and hardened negotiating stance.

Bosnian radio claimed government forces had captured key Bosnian Serb positions near Maglaj, killing 70 Serb fighters, and were advancing. There was no confirmation of the report.

Belgrade's Tanjug news agency said Bosnian Serb military sources reported "intensive" attacks by government forces but claimed the attacks had been repelled.

On Friday, U.N. peacekeepers destroyed a Serb bunker near Maglaj, 50 miles north of Sarajevo, after a seven-hour battle. A few days earlier, Bosnian Serbs looted an aid convoy headed for Maglaj.

Speaking to his Serbian Democratic Party in Banja Luka, a Serb stronghold in northern Bosnia, Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said the government's "spring offensive must be broken."

"If they do not stop this offensive, I will order a counteroffensive and then they shall not be able to get the territories they would be able to by political negotiations," he said, according to Tanjug. "They can never get the territories on which they are now killing our men."

Another round of talks among Bosnia's Muslims, Serbs and Croats has not been scheduled, overshadowed by the creation of a Muslim-Croat federation in Bosnia. But Karadzic has never been willing to concede much land in peace talks anyway.

The Serbs control about 70 percent of Bosnia's territory.

For months, all sides in Bosnia's two-year war have threatened a spring offensive, but it wasn't clear if the weekend fighting was part of that offensive or an isolated attack.

It is much easier to get around Bosnia's snowy, mountainous and often bad roads in the spring.

In Sarajevo, meanwhile, ethnic Serbs loyal to the Muslim-led Bosnian government held an assembly and asked that their representatives be included in peace talks since Bosnian Serbs led by Karadzic want to form a separate state.

Ljubomir Berberovic, assembly president, praised the new Muslim-Croat federation for beginning "the process of stopping the war."

Charles Redman, President Clinton's special envoy on the former Yugoslavia, attended the assembly session, as did members of the Bosnian government and representatives of the city's ethnic and religious groups.

Redman said the assembly was a sign that "the political life of Bosnia-Herzegovina is still alive and well" and that "people are starting to think about the things that go with peace, rather than with war."

Redman was to travel to Pale, southeast of Sarajevo, today to meet with Bosnian Serbs who support Karadzic.

Settlers, army clash; Hamas supporters rally

JERUSALEM (AP) — Jewish settlers said Sunday they would defy an army ban and rally this week in Hebron, site of last month's massacre of 30 Palestinians. Israel's foreign minister hinted that the settlers will eventually be forced to leave the West Bank town.

The settlers' pledge followed a weekend of clashes between settlers and soldiers around Hebron. Six settlers were arrested Saturday when they tried to push through army barriers, and five were detained when they fired in the air in response to being stoned.

The army's new tough stance against the settlers contrasts sharply with its earlier hands-off policy.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said Sunday that peaceful co-existence between Hebron's 120,000 Palestinians and 400 Jewish settlers became impossible after the Feb. 25 massacre, in which a settler killed 30 worshipers in a Hebron mosque.

Peres hinted that Israel would eventually force the settlers to leave.

"We cannot maintain absurd situations that are completely unacceptable," he said on Israel TV.

"To put 120,000 Arab residents under curfew to protect about 400 Jews . . . We have to reach reasonable conclusions concerning our deployment in Hebron, not only from a military but also a civilian point of view."

Israel lifted a curfew Friday that had been imposed on Palestinians in Hebron since the massacre.

Settler leaders accused the government of cracking down on them to appease the PLO, which has demanded better protection for Palestinians as a condition for returning to talks on implementing autonomy in the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank region of Jericho. The talks have been suspended since the massacre.

Israel radio reported Sunday that a vanguard of several dozen Palestinian police will deploy in Gaza and Jericho on April 5.

But Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erakat said he hadn't heard of an April 5 deployment date and said security for Hebron needed to be worked out before autonomy talks could resume.

Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization are to meet Tuesday in Cairo, Egypt, to work out final details of a Hebron security force, which is to include Palestinian police and Norwegian observers. Norwegian newspapers have said the observers could be deployed within two weeks.

Peres urged the PLO to resume autonomy talks quickly so that Israel's withdrawal from Gaza and Jericho can be completed close to the original target date of April 13.

"If tomorrow the negotiations begin, we can be very close to the original target date, the first part of April," Peres said on Israel TV.

The army, citing security concerns, banned a settler rally scheduled for Wednesday in Hebron to mark the 26th anniversary of the first Jews moving into the town after Israel captured the West Bank and Gaza Strip in the 1967 Middle East war. The army said it would bar all outsiders from the town on Wednesday.

"If our government thinks it's going to succeed in limiting our natural rights, it won't succeed, we won't accept it," Rabbi Eliezer Waldman of the Kiryat Arba settlement near Hebron told The Associated Press.

Meanwhile, thousands of supporters of the Muslim militant group Hamas rallied in Hebron and urged PLO leader Yasser Arafat to break off negotiations with Israel.

South Korea backs Chinese proposal for North Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — South Korea, in an attempt to end the crisis over the nuclear program of archenemy North Korea, is backing a proposal made by China, the North's most important ally.

South Korea's foreign minister said Sunday that the U.N. Security Council should take China's suggestion for a milder measure than the widely suggested international sanctions against North Korea.

China on Friday urged the Security Council issue a non-binding statement, which would be adopted by consensus, urging North Korea to cooperate with international nuclear inspectors.

The alternative is a resolution, which would be legally binding and adopted by a vote.

"Before resolutions are adopted, China's suggestion of a statement may be effective," South Korean Foreign Minister Han Sung-joo said at a news conference before leaving for Beijing to join President Kim Young-sam.

Kim arrived in Beijing Sunday. His talks with Chinese leaders begin today.

Following North Korea's refusal to open all its nuclear facilities to inspections, the United States proposed a draft resolution Friday calling on the reclusive, communist country to permit new inspections within a month.

The resolution does not call for sanctions, apparently to avoid a veto by China. But it says the Council will "consider further action if necessary" — a reference to possible sanctions.

As a permanent member of the Security Council, China can veto any resolution, and as the main remaining ally of North Korea, it would probably veto one that provides for sanctions.

Han suggested that if North Korea did not accept inspections after the non-binding statement, then China would have to agree to support a resolution.

North Korea has refused to let inspectors of the International Atomic Energy Agency see a plant suspected of making plutonium, which can be used to make nuclear weapons. North Korea denies it is making nuclear weapons.

Pyongyang has threatened military action if the Security Council votes for international sanctions. Seoul has been attempting to increase the pressure without provoking a military response.

Berlin bids adieu to French military with festive parade

BERLIN (AP) — More than 10,000 Berliners bid adieu to the French military on Sunday, in the first farewell celebration for the four Cold War occupying powers, all of which are departing the city this year.

French soldiers, military bands, tanks and armored vehicles coursed down Berliner Strasse in the city's northwestern Tegel district, center of the French occupation zone after the Nazis' 1945 defeat.

French, British and American parachutists fell from the sky, trailing the French national colors in a finale followed by a big street party.

Mayor Eberhard Diepgen thanked the French, who kept about 2,000 troops in West Berlin for nearly a half-century, for helping protect the city from the Soviet threat.

The French military chief of staff, Adm. Jacques Lanxade, represented his country in the weekend festivities.

Under the 1990 agreement that restored German sovereignty over a united Berlin, the three Western allies and the Russians must quit the city and the rest of eastern Germany by year's end. Some French troops have already left.

The Americans, British and French will get a big send-off from Germany's military in September — but not the military parade that many officers of the three nations and Germany wanted.

Anti-theft technology improves in effort to halt British auto theft

By William E. Schmidt
N.Y. Times News Service

NEWCASTLE, England — When Sinclair Seymour bought a new Ford Mondeo station wagon two months ago, he took no chances.

Not only did he make sure his car had a factory-equipped anti-theft system, including deadbolts inside the doors, an alarm and a high-tech device that electronically locks the engine, but he also asked the dealer to install a backup alarm and mount a thick steel padlock over the gearshift.

Then, for extra peace of mind, he spent $225 more for a yellow wheel clamp, similar to the heavy metal boots some American police departments use to immobilize parking scofflaws.

Now, whenever Seymour leaves his new car in a public parking lot, he takes the clamp out of his trunk and locks it over his front wheel.

"I know, you think it's a little over the top," said Seymour, 50, a quality control technician at a local factory. "But then again, you don't live around here. If you don't want your car to be stolen, you have to take every precaution you can think of."

With drivers in England and Wales almost twice as likely as those in the United States to have their cars stolen, car security and anti-theft technology have become a kind of national obsession, drawing police, government regulators, insurers and manufacturers into a high-stakes game to stay one step ahead of the thieves.

According to U.S. statistics, 650 cars were stolen per 100,000 residents across America in 1992 (full figures for 1993 are not yet available). In England and Wales, the rate was 1,215 cars per 100,000 residents. The epidemic reflects not only a growing market for stolen vehicles in India, Pakistan, Nigeria and the West Indies, as well as Eastern Europe, but also the increasingly predatory tactics of young car thieves.

Given a sharp jump as well in thefts from cars, as thieves snatch purses, radios and portable phones, insurance payouts on theft claims jumped more than 800 percent in a decade to over $713 million in 1992.

At the urging of the government and insurers, British manufacturers like Ford and Vauxhall are now arming their latest models with sophisticated anti-theft technology as standard equipment.

For example, the 1994 Ford Escort, Britain's best-selling car, comes with a factory-installed electronic engine immobilizer, which relies on a tiny microtransmitter in the ignition key.

Unless the driver inserts the key programmed to match exactly a complex code inside the automobile's electronic control unit, the engine will not start.

An anti-theft system, including the electronic engine lockout, is also standard equipment here on Ford's new Probe, which is made in the United States.

Government officials, insurers and consumers in Britain say the equipment — coupled with growing public awareness of the problem — is making a difference. While car crime continues to grow, the rate of increase has slowed slightly.

In the United States, only the more expensive domestic models come with alarms or other electronic anti-theft devices as standard equipment.

In Detroit, manufacturers say Americans are not yet prepared to pay to have immobilizers and alarms included as standard features. Instead of paying the $200 to $700 such devices could add to the list price of a car, they say, motorists prefer the option of having dealers or accessory shops install them as extras.

John Emmert, a spokesman for Ford Motor Co. in Detroit, said the company was studying the systems being installed on its cars in Europe, but had no plans to make them available on its best-selling domestic models, except as options.

Part of the push in Britain comes from rising insurance premiums. In 1987, according to data from the United States and Britain, British drivers paid about half as much as Americans for car insurance.

Since then, the Association of British Insurers reports, the average annual cost of a car insurance policy has nearly doubled, to about $638. In the United States, according to insurance statistics, the average insurance premium increased just 25 percent over the same period and is now about $710 a year.

Italy's election results to turn government firmly to left or right

ROME (AP) — Voters began giving Italy a new political face on Sunday, the first day of national elections that promise to turn the government's sights to the right or the left.

With the centrist parties that led the country since 1948 discredited by a corruption scandal, the parliamentary elections pitted a conservative alliance formed by one of Italy's richest men against a leftist coalition dominated by former Communists.

"Today we vote, Italy changes," the Corriere della Sera newspaper trumpeted Sunday as the nation began two days of voting.

Pollsters and media are barred from disclosing exit poll results until voting ends this evening. The penalty is up to five years in prison. About 32 percent of eligible voters turned out on Sunday.

Both the centrist and pro-Catholic Christian Democrats and Socialist parties, which have led the country for four decades, fell from grace in a kickback scandal that has tainted many of the nation's political and business elite.

Former Socialist leader and ex-Premier Bettino Craxi is heavily implicated in the scandal, and more than a quarter of parliament is being investigated for possible wrongdoing.

Joining the former Communists in a campaign coalition were the anti-Mafia Network, Greens and hard-line Communists who, unlike Occhetto's party, oppose Italy's participation in NATO.

Under new campaign laws, no opinion polls have been published for two weeks, but the last ones gave a slight edge to Forza Italia and its partners.

Those partners include the heirs of the neo-fascist Italian Social Movement. Now called the National Alliance, it is the party of Alessandra Mussolini, the dictator's granddaughter, running for a second term in parliament.

Also allied with the conservatives is the Northern League, which advocated an anti-corruption, anti-bureaucracy line even before the kickback scandals broke.

Berlusconi, who made his fortune in real estate, supermarkets, media and entertainment, jumped into politics only two months ago. His holdings include Italy's three biggest private television networks, a Milan daily newspaper, film production companies and moviehouses, and top-ranked soccer team AC Milan.

Opponents claim Berlusconi would favor his business interests in policy decisions if he became premier. Berlusconi said he would abstain from decisions posing a conflict of interest.

If no single coalition gets more than half of the ballots, they will be forced to court the centrist parties.

Both Occhetto and Berlusconi promised more jobs, a critical issue in recession-hit Italy.

Berlusconi billed his party as an anti-Mafia force, but opponents insinuated that the Mafia was backing his candidates in Sicily, a charge he denied.

The elections are the first under new laws under which three-fourths of the seats will be chosen directly by voters, with the rest divided up according to the percentage of the overall vote won by each party. In the past, the proportional system was used for all seats in the 630-seat House of Deputies and 315-seat Senate.

Ukrainians vote in first elections since country gained independence

KIEV, Ukraine (AP) — Angered by an economy that's going nowhere fast, Ukrainians voted in large numbers Sunday to replace the Communist-dominated parliament that has blocked reforms and opposes nuclear disarmament.

Crimea and parts of eastern Ukraine ignored a presidential order by holding referendums on closer ties with Russia.

The brisk turnout for parliamentary elections, Ukraine's first since the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991, defied predictions of voter apathy. Preliminary turnout on a crisp, sunny day topped 67 percent by evening, well above the 50 percent needed for the election to be valid.

"The people of Ukraine understand very well these are not ordinary elections," said Viktor Pohorylo, deputy chairman of the Election Commission. "This is a vote for future social peace."

First results were not expected until at least today.

The election took place amid growing economic despair in Ukraine. After voting in central Kiev, President Leonid Kravchuk said he hoped for a pro-reform parliament but warned he would postpone presidential elections if the new parliament deepened political chaos.

The election could fuel tensions between the pro-Russian east and the nationalist west.

"The mood is mixed. Some don't know who to vote for and the rest are more radical. I don't think Communists will get votes in western Ukraine," said Yuri Hresko, who was helping get out the vote in Lvov, near the Polish border.

On the other side of Ukraine, in the Donbass mining region near Russia, elections officials said support for Communist and socialist candidates was strong.

The current parliament is dominated by former Communists opposed to economic reform and to giving up the nuclear arsenal Ukraine inherited from the Soviet Union. The government has been deadlocked, while hyperinflation eats away at living standards.

Voters seemed hopeful a new parliament might improve their lives, but many were confused by the vast number of candidates and platforms.

"There must be a little hope, otherwise why would we have dragged ourselves here?" said Lida Mikhaylenko, a seamstress whose last paycheck amounted to about $15.

Some ballots listed more than two dozen names. Voters were required to cross off the candidates they didn't want. Candidates who collect enough votes in the first round will face each other in runoffs April 10.

"It's very hard to pick. Before there was just one candidate. A simple guy can't choose," said Vladimir Kubisky, a farmer in the village of Vita Poshtova, 19 miles south of Kiev, where 26 candidates were running.

Election officials tried to create a festive mood. Rock music blared from a loudspeaker at the Vita Poshtova polling station. In the neighboring village of Boyarka, vodka, champagne and salami were on sale, and a folk ensemble performed.

Officials looked the other way when heads of households continued an old Soviet tradition of voting for the whole family.

In addition to parliamentary elections, the Black Sea peninsula of Crimea, the eastern city of Donetsk and the eastern region of Lugansk held separate votes on closer ties with Russia.

Kravchuk had banned the referendums, but local authorities went ahead anyway.

"Thanks to Kravchuk's action we got more people to go to the polls," said Sergi Nikulin, chairman of the Crimean plebiscite commission.

More than half of Crimea's eligible voters turned out and unofficial exit polls showed the majority approved closer ties, Nikulin said.

Somali kidnappers free two hostages for food, cooking oil

BRISBANE, Australia (AP) — Two employees of an Australian catering firm that provides meals to U.N. troops in Somalia were released Sunday by kidnappers in exchange for a sack of rice, cooking oil and some corned beef.

Wayne Hargreaves, a water-treatment expert from Australia, and cook John Warjui of Kenya were kidnapped by Somali gunmen March 12. They were released unharmed in the Somali capital of Mogadishu.

"The best part is they were exchanged for food and not money," Hargreaves' wife, Denise, said today. "That's what we all wanted. Anything else would have sent a message to others that kidnapping is a lucrative business."

The two men were not mistreated during their captivity, said their employer, Dave Morris of Morris Catering Co. He described them as tired but in good spirits.

Morris described the food package as "pretty small," but did not give exact amounts. The kidnappers — a gang of teen-agers unconnected to Somalia's feuding clans — initially had demanded $1 million, he said.

President relaxes, cheers Razorbacks on Palm Sunday

DALLAS (AP) — President Clinton attended Palm Sunday services before cheering on his favored Arkansas Razorbacks in their bid for a Final Four berth Sunday.

Clinton, up early the day after his brother Roger's wedding to Dallasite Molly Martin, was out jogging by 7:15 a.m. He said he felt good about the Razorbacks' chances against the Michigan Wolverines later Sunday.

Clinton greeted a few local residents during the course of his 25-minute jog along Turtle Creek, and signed the current issue of Sports Illustrated for Stanley Oberst, a Plano high school teacher. The magazine has Clinton on the cover holding a basketball, with the phrase "A Man from Hoop."

Oberst got the magazine signed only after he clashed briefly with Secret Service agents who thought he was getting too close to the president.

"I guess I was so excited, I seemed nervous and nervous people make them nervous," Oberst said.

After his run, Clinton readied for morning church services, where he was accompanied by his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, and daughter, Chelsea. The first family visited the First Baptist Church of Richardson, where the pastor delivered a sermon about Janis Joplin — her problems, her loss of hope and her descent into drug and alcohol abuse.

"I think she is a symbol of our day," said the Rev. Brian Harbour, who came here several years ago from Little Rock, Ark., where he had been pastor of Clinton's church.

"We're delighted to have our friends from Washington" with us, Harbour told his huge congregation. He reminisced briefly about the old days, specifically mentioning Clinton and Chelsea.

After the hourlong service, Harbour escorted Clinton to his limousine, the two wrapping their arms around each other's shoulders. As they reminisced, Hillary and Chelsea joined in, and they talked for several minutes despite the wind and cool temperatures.

Jan Harbour, the pastor's wife, said the approximately 2,600 worshippers responded warmly to the president and added that the children enjoyed seeing Chelsea.

"Everyone was real proud to have been there," she said.

The Clintons returned to The Mansion on Turtle Creek hotel and enjoyed a leisurely lunch.

Later, they went to Reunion Arena to watch the NCAA Midwest Regional championship game between Arkansas and Michigan.

A self-described noisy fan, Clinton told Sports Illustrated, "If you want to be calm and quiet, you shouldn't watch a game with me. I call the Hog. I change the defenses. I talk to all the players. I do all kinds of stuff."

Clinton called basketball a fabulous game, telling the magazine "It makes me wish I were two inches taller and 20 pounds lighter. With a four-foot vertical jump, I could be doing something else."

At halftime, with Arkansas leading 40-31, Clinton called the contest a "great game" and predicted a tight finish.

"Both of these teams have a lot to be proud of," he said.

The president said he's watched all the Razorbacks games and will be at Final Four in Charlotte, N.C., if Arkansas advances.

Clinton kicked off a weeklong trip on Friday. From here, the president heads to San Diego to begin the real vacation part of his vacation. Clinton and his family will be staying at a private residence near the beach after a rigorous start to 1994 proved that questions about Whitewater were a frustrating distraction.

Leach stays calm about Clinton aides' complaints

WASHINGTON (AP) — The leading Whitewater critic in Congress said Sunday he didn't want to draw premature conclusions about two top White House aides' complaints to a Treasury official over the hiring of a former GOP prosecutor in the case.

"I hope we don't make too much of this part of the story," Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"It's natural that they would be upset" with a decision by the Resolution Trust Corp. to retain form U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens to investigate the failed Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, Leach said of senior White House aides Harold Ickes and George Stephanopoulos.

However, "it was probably a mistake to convey this in a way that may or may not have implied trying to release him (Stephens) from this job," Leach said of the Feb. 25 call from Stephanopoulos and Ickes to Deputy Treasury Secretary Roger Altman.

Meanwhile, the White House challenged published speculation that Hillary Rodham Clinton did not put any of her own money at risk to realize roughly $100,000 in cattle futures trading profits in 1978 and 1979.

Newsweek magazine reported that Professor Marvin A. Chirelstein of the Columbia University Law School told it Mrs. Clinton did not invest any money of her own, an assertion Chirelstein denied making in a telephone interview Sunday.

Chirelstein, one of the experts called in by the White House to substantiate information on newly released Clinton tax returns for 1977-79, issued a statement — distributed by the White House — calling the Newsweek article "false and irresponsible."

He subsequently told The Associated Press that he had no knowledge of whether Mrs. Clinton put up any of her own money in the commodity trading because he was given no documentation concerning that portion of their tax returns.

He did acknowledge having a "speculative" discussion with a Newsweek reporter on the commodity trading issue, but says he was misunderstood and now regrets even discussing a matter on which he had no firsthand knowledge.

Chirelstein said he was given underlying documentation — such as canceled checks and bank ledgers — only on the Whitewater-related portions of their returns.

"The truth . . . is that Mrs. Clinton used her own money, and invested at her own risk, in making her commodities investment," said a statement issued jointly by Lisa Caputo, Mrs. Clinton's press secretary, and John Podesta, the White House staff secretary.

"It was her own money, every penny of it," White House spokesman Jeff Eller told reporters later as the president flew from Dallas to San Diego. "It was her account. She traded it. The story in Newsweek is false."

However, the White House has consistently declined to say how much of her own money Mrs. Clinton put at risk.

On the RTC matter, Eller said: "The entire White House staff stands behind George Stephanopoulos fully and completely and that includes the president, the chief of staff and the first lady." He said the fact that the president has not commented personally in public "does not mean he does not support George."

Newsweek said it stands by Chirelstein's quotes in its story — in the April 4 eddition appearing on newsstands today — and that "he offered his interpretation of Mrs. Clinton's commodities trading. He spoke without reservation and indicated that he had seen the relevant financial documents."

In another development, ABC reported Sunday evening that the Clintons will turn over to former Whitewater partner James McDougal documents on the land venture so he can file his tax returns. McDougal has complained publicly that he has been unable to get the records despite a contractual obligation that they be turned over to him .

Stephens, a former White House legal aide in the Reagan administration, was fired as U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia last March, two months after Clinton took office.

At the time, Stephens publicly implied that his dismissal was aimed at thwarting his office's still-continuing investigation of House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., in the House Post Office scandal.

The White House has acknowledged that Stephanopoulos and Ickes placed a conference call after learning that the RTC had retained Stephens a day earlier to pursue possible civil claims against the failed Arkansas thrift.

FDA commissioner takes on tobacco, surprises fans

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — David Kessler stunned even supporters when he announced he was considering regulating, perhaps banning, cigarettes.

It was merely the latest controversy for the fiery Food and Drug Administration commissioner. Now the public is waiting to see if the pediatrician who cracked down on everything from orange juice to powerful drug makers will really rein in the $60 billion tobacco industry.

"There is no greater public health issue," Kessler insists.

But critics say this time Kessler has gone too far.

"It's another example of Kessler seizing an issue to advance his agenda, which is to make the public think Doc Kessler is Mr. Enforcement," said Kim Pearson, a Washington lawyer who publishes an FDA-watchdog newsletter.

Kessler doesn't think that's bad; it's an image he has cultivated in his three years as head of the agency charged with protecting Americans from bad food or medicine. In that time, he has:

■ seized orange juice mislabeled "fresh."

■ banned silicon breast implants because of evidence they were sickening women, although he later allowed some for reconstructive surgery.

■ cracked down on drug makers that don't follow FDA manufacturing guidelines, saying the lapses could compromise product safety. The biggest company hit so far is Warner-Lambert, which in August briefly halted production at a loss of millions of dollars.

■ prohibited makers of dietary supplements from issuing unproven health claims.

But Kessler says a lack of authority sometimes hinders him. The FDA can't force the recall of contaminated products, can't even look at company records to see if food is properly chilled.

"I have had food decomposing in plants and I have not had the ability to look at where that food's been shipped," he said in a recent interview.

And that question of authority may halt his quest to regulate nicotine. To do so, Kessler must prove tobacco companies intentionally control nicotine levels to cause or sustain addiction.

While he's careful to say he hasn't proven that yet, he told Congress on Friday that he's getting close.

"The public may think of cigarettes as no more than blended tobacco rolled in paper, but they are more than that," he said. "Some of today's cigarettes may in fact qualify as high-technology nicotine delivery systems."

But he wants Congress' guidance, because naming nicotine a drug would force him to ban most tobacco products. "Millions of Americans would suffer nicotine withdrawal," he warned.

"It's not clear he's committed himself to anything," said Dr. Sidney Wolfe of Public Citizen's Health Resources Group, which monitors the FDA. "But if he doesn't believe FDA has the authority, he should say so," and ask Congress for help.

Kessler joined the FDA in December 1990, appointed by then-President Bush to revive an agency paralyzed by a scandal over generic drugs. When President Clinton took office, Kessler became one of only two Bush administration officials to keep his job. (The other is NASA chief Daniel Golden.)

FDA commissioner is a role for which Kessler has trained since college, when he simultaneously obtained medical and law degrees. He then worked for Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, by day while completing his pediatrics residency by night.

Kessler says his two proudest accomplishments are increasing government scrutiny of seafood processing to fight food poisoning and forcing industry to label foods completely and honestly.

Trooper goes on trial for charges of faking fingerprint evidence

N.Y. Times News Service

A New York state police investigator who was acquitted on evidence tampering charges last year is scheduled to go on trial Monday on charges that he faked fingerprint evidence in a separate case.

The trooper, David M. Beers, who was assigned to the criminal investigation unit of Troop C in Sidney, is accused of fabricating fingerprint evidence in a 1991 narcotics and weapons case.

He had previously been charged with helping a colleague fake evidence in another 1991 criminal case, but was acquitted of those charges in September.

Beers, a trooper for 15 years, is one of six troopers statewide who have been implicated in the case, in which evidence in more than 30 cases was faked from 1984 to 1991.

All five investigators who worked in Troop C's identification unit between 1982 and 1992, including Beers' supervisor and the troopers who trained Beers, have been charged with faking fingerprint evidence.

Three have pleaded guilty and are serving prison sentences, but Beers and another trooper have denied any wrongdoing. An investigator from Troop F in Middletown has also pleaded not guilty to fabricating fingerprint evidence in two cases.

The case began unfolding in the summer of 1992, when the state police learned that David L. Harding, one of the Troop C investigators who is currently in jail, had bragged about faking the evidence while interviewing for a job with the CIA in 1991.

The investigation into the activities of Harding and a partner who is also currently in jail, Robert M. Lishansky, prompted Gov. Mario Cuomo to appoint a special prosecutor, who is still looking into the case.

In the trial that begins today with jury selection in Tioga County Court in Owego, Beers is accused of claiming he had found a suspect's fingerprint on a machine gun when the fingerprint had actually been discovered someplace else.

The suspect, Christopher DeSivo, pleaded guilty to a separate weapons charge, but denied owning the machine gun that was found during police raids of his home and his parents' home in Tioga County.

Hatch golf plans reveal ethics need

Sen. Orrin Hatch has some good news. Tennis, he announced in a recent letter to congressional colleagues, has been added to the list of activities at the Utah Congressional Golf Challenge, an annual sporting event to which Hatch plays host in his home state.

Like other such junkets taken in the guise of helping charity or congressional business, this is a chance for lawmakers to enjoy an expenses-paid vacation at a luxury resort courtesy of big corporate sponsors, whose lobbyists and executives get to play right alongside the House and Senate members. These corporations, of course, care less about golf and tennis than forging personal ties that can help with legislation.

Hatch's tournament was not mentioned Thursday when the House debated gift-giving to members of Congress, which is too bad. The popular outing points to a critical flaw in the new gift restrictions pushed through by House Democrats who are now loudly proclaiming a victory for ethics.

Some victory. The bill, crafted by John Bryant of Texas to placate the peripatetic and bipartisan House Golf and Tennis Caucus, and shepherded to a lopsided victory by Vic Fazio of California, would not prohibit Hatch's sporting junket. A loophole-marred provision would bar lobbyists from picking up the tab for lawmakers' meals and entertainment. But the corporate executives who hire the lobbyists could continue to bestow these benefits without the embarrassment of disclosure.

It speaks volumes about the state of congressional ethics that House Republicans, most of whom ended up voting for Thursday's gift measure, initially balked at accepting even these deficient changes. Democratic leaders, meanwhile, happily latched onto that reluctance as an excuse for not strengthening the Bryant bill.

Realistically, the hope for strong gift reform now rests with the Senate. A tough gift ban measure recently proposed by Sens. Frank Lautenberg of New Jersey and Paul Wellstone of Minnesota provides a real chance to change Congress's lobbyist-subsidized lifestyle. It would forthrightly ban gifts of recreational travel, meals and other dubious financial benefits bestowed by lobbyists and the companies who employ them in an effort to influence legislation.

The Lautenberg proposal is now before the Senate's Governmental Affairs Committee, which, under an agreement with the Senate majority leader, George Mitchell, has until April 27 to act on the issue. Floor consideration is assured no later than May 4. The Senate's Democratic leadership should wait until the Senate's gift provisions are acted upon before scheduling a conference with the House.

Prompt action by the Senate on an honest gift reform bill would expose the House bill for the inadequate response it is. It could also force club- and racket-wielding lawmakers, kicking and screaming, onto higher ethical ground.

ANOTHER VIEW

Balanced budget bill was rightfully rejected

In a representative democracy, it is occasionally a good thing for lawmakers to stand up against what appears to be an overwhelming public sentiment.

Such was the case (March 17) when a majority of the House of Representatives courageously voted down the superficially popular Balanced Budget Amendment.

The amendment enjoyed a high level of public favor, not without good reason. Americans are generally convinced that Congress and recent administrations have not responsibly managed the government's fiscal affairs. The evidence, of course, is clear. That does not mean, however, that this particular radical populist proposal is the correct answer to the problem.

If taken at face value, the amendment requires a drastic and sudden change in the nation's economy, the kind that invariably leads to instability and loss of confidence.

Moreover, the amendment would change the power of Congress and the government to manage the economy even in a responsible way. It would come close to establishing a new form of government by formula instead of government by management and decision.

Despite its name, this was not just a simple little plan to balance the budget. It established a permanent formula for government spending and debt that would have tied the hands of future governments for eternity.

Politicians do not score easy points by voting against popular whims. But they do occasionally protect the country from being panicked into alluring mistakes.

This was one of those times.

Moynihan, Christopher fume over column

WASHINGTON — On the day when most of Washington was wearing green, two of the most influential men in Democratic politics were seeing red.

Anderson

Secretary of State Warren Christopher, known until now for emulating Ronald Reagan's habit of falling asleep at official events, became enraged upon reading our column on St. Patrick's Day. The column, which castigated Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., for a legislative favor to Ireland, prompted a hurried phone call from the State Department to the senator's office. Moynihan, who chairs the powerful Finance Committee, was particularly angered because we quoted an unnamed State Department source who wondered where Moynihan's loyalties lay.

His cool demeanor ruffled, Christopher barked displeasure into the receiver while trying to win back the senator's favor. "I don't know who I have in this building who feels it's OK to question a United States senator," he told Moynihan, according to State Department spokesman Mike McCurry. "But if I found him, I would fire him or send him to some place he wouldn't forget.

Moynihan was irked enough by the column that he canceled a scheduled subcommittee hearing to confirm three ambassadorial appointments — to Egypt, Bahrain and Kuwait. Moynihan's tantrum means that the three nominees, all career diplomats with significant experience in the Middle East, will have to cool their heels until Moynihan sees fit to proceed.

Moynihan's office declined to comment. One Senate source confirmed, however, that canceling the hearing was Moynihan's way of signalling his displeasure.

While Christopher capitulated like a lamb to the powerful senator, others in the foreign service establishment aren't being as diplomatic. One official was surprised that Moynihan, a former ambassador to India and the United Nations, would jeopardize relations between the United States and the Middle East just to exercise his pique.

On St. Patrick's Day, we reported that Moynihan worked behind the scenes during the budget debate last summer to preserve a tax deferral that encourages U.S.-owned companies to set up shop in Ireland. Clinton's original 1994 budget sought to close the deferral, with the hope of keeping businesses at home and generating $500 million in tax revenue. More than 400 U.S. companies have subsidiaries in Ireland that employ nearly 50,000 people — or one-fifth of that country's industrial workforce.

Concerned about losing U.S. investment in their country, Irish diplomats went looking for someone in Washington to carry their water. When they arrived at Moynihan's Finance Committee offices, Lawrence O'Donnell, Moynihan's top aide, invited them to sit down with the senator, our State Department source told us. Moynihan was moved enough by their plight to reinstate the tax break in this year's budget.

McCurry says Christopher knew little about the tax deferral when he called Moynihan. He was far more concerned with soothing Moynihan's feelings — not the confirmation of the three ambassadors or the lost tax revenue.

Perhaps if Mr. Christopher showed as much passion dealing with the world's despots and dictators as he did apologizing for our column, the Clinton administration would have fewer problems overseas.

CHARLEY REESE

Too many Americans don't rely on themselves

It is an odd twist of fate that a country built by people who valued independence and self-reliance is now largely peopled with folks who have a slave mentality.

Reese

Most Americans, it seems these days, believe it is the government's responsibility not only to repair potholes in the road but also to repair potholes in our souls and make sure our pursuit of happiness is successful.

Of course independence and self-reliance are two sides of the same coin. You can't be independent without being self-reliant. Dependency and the slave mentality are likewise two sides of the same coin. If you depend on others to provide for you, then you must please them.

People now seem to believe that not only are their problems caused by someone or something outside themselves, but that the solutions are to be found outside themselves.

An example of what I'm talking about are the thousands of Americans who take Prozac even though they have no medical need to do so. Prozac seems to be the drug of choice for the affluent, and their doctors have become the drug dealers for the affluent. The poor are stuck with crack cocaine and the corner dealer. But both are doing the same thing — turning to a chemical to create the sense of happiness and well-being they cannot supply on their own. It's only because of the hypocrisy of society, and perhaps the lobbying clout of the American Medical Association and the pharmaceutical industry, that the affluent drug-users are called patients and the poor, criminals.

Nevertheless, while the government can, though doesn't always, repair potholes in a road, it cannot do much else. People seem to think if parents don't love their children, the government can indoctrinate or train them to love them; that if children grow up mean and lacking self-respect and self-discipline, some government bureaucrat can inject them with virtue; that if students have no desire to learn, some magic system can be devised to teach them anyway.

It is all an illusion, a flight from reality, an attempt to flee from personal responsibility.

Whether we like it or not, we and we alone are responsible for our lives. Whether we are happy or unhappy is largely of our own making, a result of values we adopt and choices and evaluations we make.

The social engineers and policy wonks are fools living in a world constructed of false assumptions and self-deceptions. They protect their illusions by devising a system that cannot hold them accountable. I have a standard question I ask every public or private bureaucrat in charge of a social engineering program: What proof do you have that it works? And I always get the same answer buried under awkward verbiage: none.

But they are sustained by the people fleeing personal responsibility. Those people are a congregation of believers in social engineering. They believe it because to doubt it would throw them back on their own resources. Thus, as one often finds in nature, you have a symbiotic relationship — a claptrap priesthood avoiding accountability — and followers so afraid that their secular priests are not telling the truth that they do not demand accountability. The priests want to be believed; the followers want to believe. Together they sustain each other.

And that's how people enslave themselves — with their own minds, their own fears, their own dread of responsibility. When you see how eager people are to enslave themselves, then you realize what dummies the dictators of the sword are. Why spill all that blood? If you are clever enough, people will voluntarily put the chains on and wear them with a bizarre pride.

There's no doubt about it in today's America. If you can get rid of your conscience, you can become a millionaire or even a president.

DAVE BARRY

Dedicated Texans plan to hurl into 21st century

Today we have a heartwarming human-interest story about some guys in Texas who are fulfilling a dream — a dream that all of us have dreamt, but, for one reason or another, have had to abandon. That's right: These guys are building a device that will be capable of hurling a Buick 200 yards.

Needless to say, the origin of this idea involved beer. A lot of great ideas originated this way. Take the electric light. One night in 1879 at a bar in a little town called Menlo Park, N.J., some men were drinking beer, when suddenly one of them announced that he was going to invent an electric light. The others laughed, but that man got up, put on his coat and hat, and accidentally walked into the fireplace, thereby setting his coat on fire. This gave Thomas Edison, who was at another table drinking coffee, the idea of using carbonized cotton as the filament in his light bulb.

So we see that beer, if used correctly, can be a tremendous force for good, which brings us back to the Buick-hurling device, which I found out about thanks to a Fort Worth Star-Telegram article written by Paul Bourgeois and sent in by alert reader Robert Grimm. The beer consumers in this case were Richard Clifford, an engineer and artist; and John Quincy, a dentist. One day they were snorking brewskis, and, as guys often do when they're getting in touch with their feelings, they got to talking about medieval war weapons.

As you recall from dozing off face-down on your history textbook, medieval cities were surrounded by high stone walls with massive iron gates that would not open unless you punched in the secret digital Roman-numeral passcode. Thus the only way that an invading army could get inside was to knock holes in the wall by hurling large objects at it. Originally catapults were used for this, but they were eventually replaced by a more-powerful device — the atomic bomb of the medieval era — called a "trebuchet." It's basically a long arm with a big weight attached to one end; the weight is raised, then dropped, which whips up the other end of the arm, causing it to fling the projectile.

According to an article in the January issue of Mechanical Engineering magazine (alertly sent in by reader Bob Goetze), some trebuchets could throw 300-pound boulders as far as 300 yards. They also were used to throw DEAD HORSES. I am not making this up. The idea was to spread disease.

Yes, the trebuchet was an awesome weapon, and the more Richard Clifford and John Quincy thought about it, while drinking beer, the more they realized that they had to build one. And so they did. They used it to try to hurl a brick. It was not a major success.

At this point, most guys would have quit. But Clifford and Quincy are not "most guys"; they are an artist-engineer and a dentist. And so they did some serious trebuchet research. They read books on military history. Then they went to England to consult with the world's leading trebuchet expert, a historian named Hew Kennedy. Kennedy is generally considered to be "eccentric" in the same sense that the sun is generally considered to be "warm." He has built a large working trebuchet at his home in Shropshire, and he regularly invites his neighbors over to watch him hurl stuff across the fields. According to Mechanical Engineering, he has hurled small cars, dead pigs and grand pianos.

He hurled a piano for Clifford and Quincy.

"It went almost 200 yards," Quincy told me, with awe in his voice.

Clifford and Quincy returned home inspired. They printed up some official stationery (It says PROJECTILE THROWING ENGINES, Texas Division: "Hurling Into the 21st Century"). They hooked up with a welder, Don Capers, and together they developed and built an improved trebuchet, for test purposes. They've been using it to hurl bowling balls.

"We're throwing bowling balls now somewhere between 400 and 500 feet," Quincy said.

But that is small potatoes. What they plan to do is build — get ready — THE BIGGEST TREBUCHET IN THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD. The one that will hurl the Buick.

Here is how serious they are: When I spoke with Quincy, he had just purchased 80 acres of land adjacent to his property JUST SO THE BUICK WILL HAVE SOME PLACE TO LAND.

"Wherever it lands," said Quincy, "it's going to stay there."

Nation in brief

■ Thieves steal car from funeral procession

WORCESTER, Mass. — Alfred A. Mandella loved his car so much his family included it in his funeral procession. But the shiny, cream-colored sedan also looked pretty special to a thief.

Family members couldn't believe it.

"I guess you have to be very careful, even at your own funeral," said Mandella's niece, Delores Kachajian.

The 1992 Ford Ltd Crown Victoria was left unattended for no more than two minutes before somebody from the funeral home noticed it was gone, said Mandella's daughter, Marilyn J. Dobbs. People at the funeral noticed a man and a woman sitting at the back of the church who were unfamiliar and inappropriately dressed.

Mandella, 77, a retired truck driver, once won a first-place award for his driving and safety record in a competition with 3,000 other truck drivers. The Teamsters union also honored him with safety awards.

■ Measles outbreak hits Rutgers University

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — Students and faculty at Rutgers University, which faces the first outbreak of measles at a U.S. college in three years, will be required to get measles shots or leave campus, school officials said this weekend.

Beginning Monday, free immunization is to be available at three student centers for the 35,000 to 40,000 students, faculty and staff on the New Brunswick and Piscataway campuses.

Students have until April 8 to get their shots, either on campus or from an outside physician, said Dr. Robert H. Bierman, director of student health services. After that, he said, they will be barred from classes and dining halls and will be asked to leave campus.

So far only three measles cases have been confirmed, but more than 20 are suspected, Bierman said. "When there are 20 cases that you know about, you can pretty much assume there are a multiple of 10 times that," he said.

The number is great enough that on Saturday the New Jersey Department of Health declared a state of emergency for the campus.

■ Lawyers file affidavit in King assassination

An affidavit filed Friday by Ray's attorneys implicates Loyd Jowers, who already has told a national television audience that Ray wasn't the assassin.

Betty Spates' March 8 affidavit was filed in Memphis at Shelby County Criminal Court, The Tennesean newspaper reported Sunday. Spates used to work at Jowers' Memphis restaurant, Jim's Grill.

Ray pleaded guilty in 1969 to shooting King from a bathroom on the second floor of the building that housed the restaurant. He recanted a few days later and has insisted he was unwitting patsy in a plot to kill King.

Compiled from Reporter-Telegram wire services.

College flags fly half-staff for carjacking victims

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Flags at a tiny liberal arts college flew at half-staff Sunday for two students, one of them Japanese, who were critically wounded by a carjacker.

"It's such an appalling event. It's just very difficult for all of us to comprehend," said Janet Bremseth, co-director of college relations at Marymount College.

Takuma Ito and Go Matsuura, both 19, were shot in the head Friday night and were declared brain dead Sunday at Harbor-UCLA Medical Center in Torrance, said Dr. Curtis Doberstein.

The shootings focused new attention in Japan on violence in the United States, after the 1992 fatal shooting of 16-year-old Japanese exchange student Yoshihiro Hattori when he went to the wrong house looking for a Halloween party in Baton Rouge, La.

Ito, who is Japanese, and Matsuura, a U.S. citizen who grew up in Japan, were freshmen at Marymount, a secluded college on the affluent Palos Verdes Peninsula south of downtown Los Angeles.

Their families arrived from Japan on Sunday.

"He was dreaming of filmmaking, but he never dreamt of giving up his dream like this," Shuji Matsuura said of his son through an interpreter.

Marymount President Thomas F. McFadden expressed the school's condolences.

"Our community is devastated by this terrible tragedy," he said in a statement. "We have expressed our deepest sorrow to the students' families."

Flags on campus were at half-staff. The college's weeklong spring break began Friday.

Ito and Matsuura were shot as they got out of a car in a supermarket parking lot in the city's San Pedro area, police said. The gunman drove off in the car. Police said they had few leads.

The shootings were the lead item on many Japanese newscasts Sunday. Foreign Ministry official Hitohiro Ishida said in Tokyo that Japanese travelers should be careful to avoid violence in the United States.

Minister dies after SWAT team raids wrong home

BOSTON (NYT) — The Rev. Accelynne Williams, who for decades had comforted and counseled people throughout the Caribbean, retired to Boston six years ago to be near his daughter and to study the Scriptures. On Friday a police SWAT team searching for drugs broke down his apartment's door without warning and handcuffed him. Minutes later, the 75-year-old minister was dead of heart failure.

The police, it turned out, had misread a floor plan provided by an informant; they had intended to raid an apartment on the floor above Williams'.

The new Boston police commissioner, Paul F. Evans, acknowledged that the police had made a mistake and he spent the weekend publicly apologizing for the death of Williams.

The SWAT team had been acting on a warrant for a third-floor apartment, Evans said, though he added that the warrant did not specify the apartment number. The minister and his wife, Mary, who was at her bank secretary's job when the police arrived, lived on the second floor.

"There was a tragic mistake," Evans said in an interview Sunday. "It cost a man a life. Apologizing to the widow — I did it in person — was difficult."

The commissioner, a 24-year Boston police veteran who got the top job six weeks ago, promised there would be a full investigation.

The incident has raised anew questions about the department's use of informants and its procedure in drug raids. An investigation into the death in 1988 of a member of the Drug Control Unit — the same unit that raided the Williams apartment — revealed that officers had routinely fabricated informants to obtain search warrants. When questioned about the reliability of the informant in the Williams case, police spokesmen said the informant had been accurate in two previous raids.

"The confidential informant said that there were drugs and guns at that location," Evans said, referring to the third-floor apartment.

People watch driver burn in explosion of gas tanker

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A gasoline tanker blew a tire and overturned Sunday, bursting into flames and setting the driver on fire. A man ran past a dozen onlookers to save the driver as he rolled on the ground in flames.

The Getty Petroleum Corp. tanker was carrying 12,000 gallons of gas when it crashed about 7 a.m. at the merger of Interstates 95 and 195, state police said.

The driver, Jack Ordner, 50, received third-degree burns over 50 to 60 percent of his body and was in critical but stable condition at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center, said Rick Piester, a spokesman for Rhode Island Hospital.

John Santos said he felt the impact of the rollover inside a nearby YMCA, where he works as a security guard. He ran out and saw a dozen people watching Ordner, who was on fire near the tanker.

"I was screaming for people to drag him away, but no one did anything," Santos said.

Santos said he ran across both highways to reach Ordner, then used his hands to put out the flames on the driver. Ordner was trying to roll around to extinguish his burning clothes, he said.

"Disgust is what I feel," Santos said of the onlookers. "I can't believe people would stand there and watch a man burn without helping him."

Santos, 38, was treated for first- and second-degree burns to his hands and released, Piester said.

State police shut down portions of both highways as firefighters from several towns struggled to control the fire, which burned for nearly an hour before they could start hosing it down. The blaze sent out a 100-foot high pillar of smoke and a black cloud covered downtown Providence.

State police said the truck blew a tire and came to rest on a narrow patch of grass where I-195 West merges with I-95 North.

Burning gasoline from the truck apparently flowed down drainage ditches and into manholes, sparking fires several blocks away. Johnson and Wales University evacuated a dormitory near the scene of the crash.

The State in brief

■ Gunmen shoot wrong house, kill teen

SAN ANTONIO — A teen-ager who avoided gangs has been slain in a shootout between rival groups who targeted the wrong house, police said.

Adam Garza was fatally shot twice in the chest as he slept on his living room couch.

Police said 40 rounds of bullets and shotgun slugs riddled the sofa and the rest of a house Friday.

Garza's cousin, Roxanne Robles, was critically wounded in the hail of gunfire.

"It is thought to be gang-related, but the wrong house was shot up," said police Detective Joe Morris.

Garza, 15, never belonged to a gang. He was on his high school basketball team and had wanted to become a firefighter.

■ Government rules against aquifer board

SAN ANTONIO — Two separate agencies overseeing an underground water system that feeds Texas' two largest springs cannot co-exist, the U.S. Justice Department has ruled.

The Edwards Aquifer Authority, to be governed by an appointed board, was created by the Texas Legislature last year to replace the elected Edwards Underground Water District. The authority had been given power to regulate pumping from the 176-mile-long aquifer through issuance of well permits.

But James P. Turner, acting assistant attorney general in the Justice Department's civil rights division, wrote the Texas secretary of state that allowing both agencies to exist would violate the federal Voting Rights Act.

The government is under a U.S. district court's order to develop a plan protecting the aquifer, which is San Antonio's sole source of drinking water and the source of Comal and San Marcos springs.

Lawyers for the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund had challenged the law establishing the aquifer authority. The group contended that abolishing an elected board and replacing it with an appointed one discriminated against minority voters.

The Justice Department's ruling, which was made public Friday, was a response to a December inquiry from former Secretary of State John Hannah on whether the authority could be established if the old district ceased to exist.

■ Misread drug test leads to suspension

DALLAS — A highly decorated Dallas policeman was temporarily suspended this month, after a meal of Bagel Dogs seasoned with poppy seeds misled a doctor reviewing the officer's drug test.

The unidentified officer was placed on leave after a random drug test apparently showed high levels of morphine in his system. But after two days, the officer learned the doctor who reviewed the test had made a mistake. The results were caused by the meal laced with poppy seeds, the ingestion of which can cause higher morphine levels.

Dallas police said the officer's record has been cleared.

Since the department began random drug testing, 2,265 officers have been screened, with the tests revealing no serious drug abuse.

Legislator to push for reforms on school regents' spending

DALLAS (AP) — A state lawmaker said he plans to push for a law during the next legislative session to limit expenditures by university regents, following reports of questionable spending by Texas A&M University System regents.

In a copyright story in Sunday's editions, The Dallas Morning News reported that A&M System regents spent more than $1.6 million over the past three fiscal years and used the mostly public funds for trips to resort hotels, limousines and bar bills.

Records obtained by the newspaper also showed that regents have spent more than $900,000 in the past four years to criscross the state in system-owned aircraft. The trips included flying Board of Regents Chairman Ross Margraves and his wife to their son's college graduation in Louisiana and one trip that cost seven times more than flying commercial.

State Rep. Steve Ogden, R-Bryan, said the method of financing regents' expenditures at state-supported universities is a "byzantine system" that was purposely created to obscure accountability.

"There's a relatively simple solution for this, and I'll push for this in the next session of the Legislature," said Ogden, who holds a master's degree in business administration from Texas A&M.

Ogden, a member of the House Appropriations Committee, said he'll work to "limit and attempt to define what we think is a reasonable amount of expenditures for regents not only at the Texas A&M University System but at other schools."

Business practices of A&M officials and regents have spawned criminal investigations by the Texas Rangers and the FBI.

The spending by A&M's nine regents was $300,000 more than that of their colleagues at the larger University of Texas System. It also outdid that of all of the regents combined at the University of Houston, Texas Tech University and the University of North Texas, records show.

Money was spent on trips to resort hotels in Las Vegas, Colorado Springs, San Diego and Galveston for meetings of alumni and athletic booster groups. Regents spent $631 for limousine rentals in Baton Rouge, La., $144 for bar bills for three regents in Las Vegas and $495 for food and drinks for one football game at Anaheim Stadium in California.

Margraves defended the board's expenditures.

"We try only to spend money on those things we feel are necessary and appropriate in our capacity as regents," Margraves said. "Whatever I turned in for reimbursement was something I felt was prudent."

Records also show heavy use of the A&M-owned airline King Air by Margraves, including a trip last year to his son's graduation.

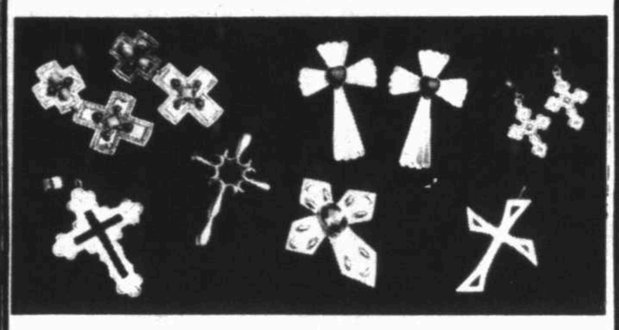

According to flight logs, Margraves and his wife, Madeline, were flown from Houston to Baton Rouge, La., on Aug. 4, 1993, to attend their son's graduation exercises at Louisiana State University and to meet with LSU's chancellor "to discuss joint programs and cooperative efforts between LSU and TAMU Systems." The cost to the A&M System was $1,435.

On another trip last year, regents Guadalupe Rangel and Raul Fernandez were flown from their homes in Corpus Christi and San Antonio to Houston for a meeting with Margraves and then were returned home. The cost to A&M was $2,450. Had they flown commercially on Southwest Airlines, round-trip airfare would have cost about $316, the newspaper said.

The Texas Rangers began its probe of A&M business practices last fall, after receiving an anonymous letter accusing Margraves and other A&M officials of using their positions for personal gain. Margraves denies the assertion.

Law authorities also are looking into whether Margraves and Robert Smith, Texas A&M's University's vice president for finance and administration, violated state or federal laws in taking trips to New York at the expense of Barnes & Noble Bookstores Inc., which won a multimillion-dollar contract to operate the A&M bookstore. The Associated Press first reported the trips in October.

Computers 'byte' into households

■ Computer makers are seeking ways to get plugged into more households.

By Vivian Marino
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — With a flick of a switch and a click of a key or two, today's families can balance their checkbooks, message friends around the world, compose music, even study mating calls of exotic birds.

The technological advances in personal computers have made all this and much more possible. Yet only a third of the 96 million U.S. households are plugged into that world.

Many of the unplugged confess they're scared by the sight of a "mouse," not to mention a keyboard, monitor and modem. They're perplexed by the techno-jargon of bits, bytes, baud, RAM, ROM, DOS.

Part of the problem lies with the computer industry, which in the past catered mainly to experienced commercial users. Individuals were dismissed as "dead-end" users, a term technicians used for the painfully obvious questions novices could pose.

But that has rapidly changed as high-tech firms, nearing a saturation point in the corporate market, turn to consumers as a source of business. The technology has also made computers more powerful for less money.

"The PC industry has historically never really addressed consumers," said Rick Martin, director of product marketing for Compaq Computer Corp. "We have to tell our story to the people ... and explain all the benefits of having a PC in the first place. Then we have to provide the technology to do those things.

"Our goal is to go after the two-thirds of the households that don't have a computer."

To tap into that market, Compaq has been heavily marketing its Presario PC brand, unveiled last summer with individuals and small businesses in mind. It includes all-in-one-units that require no assembly, a software program that organizes computer files like a notebook and easy-to-read manuals.

Gateway 2000, a mail-order company, has been "advertising in magazines that we have never advertised in before — more consumer-oriented magazines," said Wendell Watson, a company spokesman.

Savers' payoff from rate rise slow

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Any money-market savers who hoped to cash in fast on the early-1994 upswing in interest rates have been sorely disappointed so far.

Amid all the furor over the Federal Reserve's two moves since midwinter to tighten credit conditions slightly, rates on investments such as money market funds and bank certificates of deposit have edged up just a few basis points, or hundredths of a percentage point.

The increases to date have restored only a trickle of the cash flow that evaporated from money-market investments during the long decline of interest rates through the early 1990s.

"Very little benefit of the recent surge in interest rates has yet filtered down to money-market investors," notes Norman Fosback, editor of the newsletter Income Fund Outlook in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Why? Well, for one thing, analysts point out that short-term interest rates simply haven't risen as much as bond rates, which got most of the attention as they climbed from about 5.75 percent last fall to near 7 percent lately on 30-year Treasury bonds.

More than that, however, it is increasingly apparent that times have changed radically since the high interest-rate era of the 1980s, and those conditions aren't coming back in the foreseeable future.

In those days, when bank deregulation was new and credit demand was heavy, financial institutions were bidding aggressively for the saver's dollar. Now, in a cooler economic atmosphere, the competition is a lot less intense.

According to Bank Rate Monitor, the average yield offered on one-year certificates of deposit at mid-March stood at 3.13 percent — still four basis points below where it had been a year ago. Yields on money market deposit accounts remained flat at 2.30 percent.

What about money market mutual funds, where yields are determined by market developments and not by what some executive committee thinks ought to be offered?

'Very little benefit of the recent surge in interest rates has yet filtered down to money-market investors.'
Norman Fosback, editor
Income Fund Outlook newsletter

The average seven-day yield on money funds recently stood at 2.87 percent, up about 20 basis points from a few weeks earlier, according to IBC-Donoghue Inc. Still, that looked pretty paltry compared with a going yield of about 3.68 percent on three-month Treasury bills.

Money funds follow rising interest-rate trends with a lag, since they can increase their yields only when they replace old maturing investments in their portfolios with new, higher-yielding securities. As tracked by IBC-Donoghue, the funds average maturity now stands at 54 days.

For the impatient who have cash to invest now, T-bills can be bought directly, either through a bank or broker or from the federal government itself through your nearest Federal Reserve bank or branch.

While banks or brokers typically charge a commission in the $35 to $50 range, there are no fees for buyers at the Fed. But "if you plan to sell a Treasury security before it matures, it's best not to buy direct from the Fed because the institution's book entry system isn't designed for traders," says Standard & Poor's Corp. in its advisory publication The Outlook.

Once you own a Treasury security, you face the same problem money funds do if rates keep rising — you have to wait until your holdings mature to catch up with the market.

No matter how you approach money-market investing these days, it isn't realistic to expect future returns in this whole arena to get anywhere close to the lofty levels that prevailed in the late 1970s and '80s.

Pension contributions

Q. What is the maximum contribution that an employer can make to a SEP/IRA on behalf of an employee? And if the employer does not contribute the maximum, can an employee make up the difference?
— Alma Kubick, Tenafly, N.J.

A. A simplified employee pension plan, or SEP, is a special type of individual retirement account through which contributions are made by an employer and which can be greater than a regular IRA. The maximum contribution in 1994 is 15 percent of an employee's compensation up to $150,000, or $22,500 — whichever is less.

"An employee cannot contribute to make up any shortage," said Ronald L. Noll, an accountant in Malvern, Pa. "However, in some cases you can have both a SEP and a regular IRA where your modified gross income is no larger than $50,000."

Savings bonds and tax

Q. Would the IRS impose a penalty for making just one estimated tax payment on Jan. 15, 1994, instead of four installment payments, for U.S. Savings Bonds unexpectedly redeemed on Dec. 1, 1993?
— Jerome E. Bier, Yonkers, N.Y.

A. Under the rules in effect for 1993, an underpayment penalty is assessed if your total withholding and estimated tax payments are less than 90 percent of your actual tax liability this year. But no penalty will be assessed if these payments generally equal your previous year's tax or your liability on annualized income to date.

"The annualization method would be available to you since you received the Savings Bond income in the fourth quarter of 1993," said Joel S. Isaacson, a financial planner in New York whose firm bears his name. "To avoid being charged with an underpayment penalty, file IRS. Form 2210 to show the fourth-quarter income and fourth-quarter tax payment — and to demonstrate that no penalty is due."

403(B) account rules

Q. I am an employee at a nonprofit school and contribute regularly to several mutual funds under Section 403(b) of the tax code. Were I to leave, could I continue to make tax-deferred contributions to these same funds up to the statutory limit or would I have to forfeit my participation?
— Paul P. Galvin, White Plains, N.Y.

A. Employees of tax-exempt organizations receive special tax treatment for annuities purchased in a custodial account under Section 403(b) of the Internal Revenue Code. Taxes are not imposed until an employee gets payments under the contract, which is usually bought through a salary reduction agreement.

"Since contributions to the mutual fund custodial account are being made pursuant to a salary reduction plan by the employer on the employee's behalf, a former employee cannot make eligible contributions," said Paul A. Keller, a partner of McGladrey & Pullen, an accounting firm in New York. When you leave your employer you may keep your 403(b) account intact, or roll the account's balance over within 60 days on a tax-free basis to an individual retirement account.

Careless mistakes on tax returns can cause trouble

By Vivian Marino
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A forgotten signature. Missing forms. Miscalculations.

They're the nightmare of any self-respecting tax preparer.

Yet these and other careless mistakes crop up on millions of tax returns each year, resulting in delayed refunds and, in some cases, interest and penalty charges for the taxpayer.

"All of those things can slow the return process down. ... Most can be avoided," said Nancy Anderson, manager of special tax projects for H&R Block Inc. in Kansas City.

Mathematical errors are by far the most common. The Internal Revenue Service says 4.3 percent of all individual tax returns for 1992 contained some type of miscalculation, up from 4.2 percent in 1991.

Other frequent errors include failing to sign and date a return, note a change of address, write down a Social Security number, or enclose W-2 forms. Many also involve writing down the wrong tax liability from tax tables, filling in the wrong line on a tax form, or neglecting to claim a standard deduction.

The IRS computer system quickly spots the more obvious gaffes.

In cases of math errors, the computers will automatically correct the problem, then process the return. Other mistakes — particularly the more involved ones, like misinterpretation of the tax laws, — may first require an exchange of letters with the taxpayer, also known as a "tax contact."

The agency's computer system has been especially vigilant in catching discrepancies between documents supplied by a bank or employer and information listed on a return.

"Some people may not report all the income that's reported by companies to the IRS. That's a big mistake," said Fred Daily, a San Francisco tax attorney and author of "Stand Up To The IRS."

"They might say, 'Well, I only made $6 in interest on a savings account. Why should I include that on the return?'

"(Or) a handyman who works for cash may not realize that a company is obligated to report (to the IRS) ... if they pay him more than $600 a year."

Any mismatch usually will result in a tax contact, and could, in some cases, lead to a full-blown audit. There are about 5 million tax contacts each year and most are resolved quickly.

The IRS, though, has up to three years to assess a deficiency on a return, and up to six years if there's an error in calculations of at least 25 percent. The statute of limitations for fraud is unlimited.

"One thing that lulls people into a false sense of security is that the IRS may not get around to matching information on tax returns ... until two years after the original due date of the tax return," Daily said.

Whether deliberate or unintentional, mistakes can bring taxpayers significant penalties.

For instance, failure to place a Social Security number on a return, statement or other document that requires it can result in a $50 fine for each offense. More serious errors, such as a substantial understatement of taxes due, can result in a 20 percent payment on the underpayment.

If a reasonable cause exists, however, the IRS may waive any penalties, though it may charge interest on taxes due if a mistake causes a return to be filed late, said Larry B. Scheinfeld, a partner at KPMG Peat Marwick's New York office.

"I would think they wouldn't assess the penalty ... unless you're doing something underhanded. They tend to have some sort of sensitivity," he said.

Still, that hasn't always been the case.

Robert J. Garner, national director of personal financial counseling for Ernst & Young, recalls one client who was hit with substantial penalties and interest charges after writing in a deduction on the wrong line. The client had discovered the mistake, but instead of redoing the form, made his own editing changes.

Of course, the IRS also has been known to make a few mistakes of its own. The agency has an estimated 1 percent to 2 percent error rate in processing claims, according to Daily.

But it's not important who's responsible for the error: It's always up to the individual to correct the mistake, Daily said.

"The system is not self-fixing. If the IRS says you didn't report certain income and your return clearly says you did, it's up to you to correct that mistake," he said.

H&R Block's Anderson recommends individuals "prepare their returns as early as possible, set them aside for a couple of days, go back to review them for arithmetic, and make sure they're signed with the right address."

The return always can be amended later, she added.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Donor's basis used to value gift shares

By Bill Doyle

Q: Over the past few years, I have been giving my nephews two or three shares of stock in a local bank as Christmas gifts.

What is the "basis" -- cost for tax purposes -- on the gift shares for each of my nephews?

Doyle

A: That depends on whether a nephew sells the shares at a profit or a loss.

The basis of stock or other "capital assets" received as a gift and later sold at a profit is the donor's basis. The basis of a capital asset received as a gift and later sold at a loss is the donor's basis or the fair market value on the date of the gift, whichever is higher.

Let's say you bought 100 shares of Hometown Bank Inc. at $50 a share. Your total basis is $5,000 and your per-share basis is $50. Let's also say the stock was trading at $60 when you made the gifts.

If one of the nephews sells some of the gift shares at any price higher than $50, his per-share profit -- taxable as a capital gain --would be the difference between $50 per share and the proceeds from the sale.

A nephew would have to sell some at less than $50 per share to sustain a loss and establish a capital loss he could claim on his income tax return. Let's hope that never happens.

You'll do your nephews big favors and save them future headaches by giving them records of your basis and the market prices of the shares on the dates of the gifts. With that information, they will be able to figure their capital gains or capital losses accurately, in the event they do sell.

One more wrinkle: If the donor has paid a gift tax, the basis to the recipients is increased by a formula so complicated it could be dreamed up only by the warped minds in Congress who write our nation's tax laws.

Q: I have given away some of the stock I bought some years ago. For my record-keeping purposes, do I reduce my total basis by the price I paid for the shares I gave away or by the market price on the dates of the gifts?

A: By the price at which you purchased the shares. That's your per-share basis.

Using the example in this column's preceding answer, your per-share basis is $50 and your total basis on 100 shares was $5,000.

We'll say you gave away 20 shares. At $50 each, your basis on those 20 shares was $1,000. Subtract $1,000 from $5,000 and you see that the total basis on the 80 shares you still own now is $4,000 -- 80 times $50.

Your per-share basis didn't change. Your total basis did, because you now own fewer shares.

Q: On a recent financial broadcast, I heard that the Clinton crowd has levied a new tax of 39.6 percent on trustee accounts. Can you elaborate on this, if it is true?

A: I suspect you had only half an ear cocked to that program.

No new tax has been enacted on the trustee accounts with which most people are familiar: in one person's name "as trustee for" or "in trust for" another person.

However, the highest tax rate on income received by estates and trusts has been hiked to 39.6 percent from 31 percent, retroactive to Jan. 1, 1993. That top rate now applies to estate and trust annual taxable income of more than $7,500.

The Clinton tax law, officially the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993, also raised the maximum levy on taxable income of living people to 39.6 percent.

That bite starts at $250,000 for single people, married couples filing joint income tax returns and heads of household. But married folks filing separately get hit with the top rate on taxable income over $125,000.

COMPUTERS: Makers go after consumers

(From 1B)

Consequently, he said, sales have been brisk for its recently introduced Family PC, which comes equipped with a "multimedia" package that includes a CD-ROM player and speakers that allow users to both see and hear information from their software programs.

Other companies, including industry leaders like International Business Machines Corp. and Apple Computer Inc., have made their equipment easier to use and more fun to operate. Their lightweight laptop PCs pack the same punch as the larger desktops but can be used just about anywhere.

Improved software has helped. A standard installation in many machines now is the Windows program created by Microsoft Corp., which lets users point to on-screen pictures to tell the computer what to do.

Windows has made it easier to work with the computer's disk operating system, or DOS, the cumbersome foundation software that tends to the basic functioning of all IBM-compatible computers.

"The technology has come a long way in a relatively short time. You can do so much with your PC," said Lawrence J. Magid, author of the "The Little PC Book," written for PC novices.

While technological advances have leaped, prices have fallen. Today, a fast, well-equipped PC unit can be purchased for between $1,200 and $2,000, with portable units costing about a third more than desktops.

About a year ago, the average PC sold for around $3,000. Four years ago, it cost around $5,000. Six years ago it wasn't even available.

The normal reaction may be to wait until technological advances bring down prices even more. But Magid's book recommends, "If you need a computer now, buy one. If you wait a year or two, you'll save money or wind up with a more powerful system, but think of the opportunities you'll have missed."

Magid says the safest bet is to avoid both the ultra-high end models and last year's leftovers. "You should try to buy as much technology as you can afford ... It's sometimes more expensive to upgrade," he added in a recent interview.

Before shopping, decide what you want a PC for: Will it be used mainly as a word processor for occasionally working at home? To organize family finances? Help with your children's homework? Play games? Perhaps a little of each?

The initial choice boils down to either an IBM compatible PC or an Apple Macintosh. Either will do the job; the main difference is each uses its own proprietary software and the IBM standard is more prevalent. (Apple recently has introduced Macintoshes that are IBM-compatible, however.)

While it's not necessary to fully understand a computer's components to run one, it's helpful to become familiar with basic functions to make a more educated choice.

You'll need to know two key things: how powerful a PC is and its memory capacity.

The power, or main computing work, comes from the microprocessing chip, the computer's brain. IBM compatibles operate on the 8086-80486 family of chips or the new Pentium chip by Intel Corp. A chip's ability to process data depends on the level of megahertz. The higher the number, the faster the speed.

Each PC has random access memory, or RAM, which is where the computer stores programs and files in use. It also contains what's known as a hard disk, which acts as a warehouse by holding all data. Storage capacity is expressed in megabytes, with 1 MB storing 1 million characters. Again, the higher the number, the more information can be handled and the more you do with your PC.

Among the other important features: floppy disk drives, which provide access to data from card-like disks known as floppies inserted into the computer; the monitor, which displays data on a screen; the keyboard and hand-manipulated devices known as the mouse, which give the computer commands; the modem, which carries data over phone lines and lets users access on-line services; and the CD-ROM drive, which plays disks that contain multimedia programs.

Experts recommend a PC with nothing lower than a 386 chip, at least 4 MB of RAM and a hard drive with a minimum 105 MB.

Tips on buying a PC

Associated Press

A few PC buying tips:

- Decide on an IBM compatible or an Apple Macintosh. To help determine which one, ask an employer or local school system what they use.
- Decide on the use for the computer. Are you setting up a home office, or looking to organize your household finances?
- Pick your components based on those needs. Someone interested mainly in word processing won't need a machine loaded with embellishments.
- Select a reputable dealer. Retail stores usually charge the most but offer the best service, while discounters have better prices with less support. Mail-order buying can offer bargains, though support services vary.
- Consider used equipment. Check ads in newspapers and consumer magazines. The American Computer Exchange matches buyers and sellers, (1-800-786-0717).
- Do your homework. Books like "The Little PC Book," and the "Dummies" series are helpful. For added support take a computer class or join a PC user group. The Association of Personal Computer Users provides a list of local groups, (914-876-6678).

Required forms ease tax season worries

DENVER (AP) — Of all the tax advice floating around this time of year, among the most repeated is the mantra: The first thing to do is get organized. Pull together the necessary information and required forms.

What is unfortunately missing from this well-intentioned admonition is direction as to which forms, and what information, to collect and organize.

To clarify this point, Bryan Schmitt, an academic associate at the College for Financial Planning, developed the following list of documents and their roles in the tax-filing process. The 22-year-old college is a division of the National Endowment for Financial Education.

Most working Americans old enough to be filing their own taxes are already familiar with the Form W-2; therefore, it will not be included in the following breakdown. However, among the many other forms with which taxpayers will be faced over the next several weeks, the following are likely to be the most common:

- Form 1099-INT: This form is mailed to taxpayers holding interest-bearing investments like savings accounts, certificates of deposit, money-market accounts and bonds. The institution holding the investment sends the form; a duplicate is sent to the IRS. These forms are usually accurate, but Schmitt recommends comparing the amount of interest reported and the amount you actually earned.
- Form 1099-DIV: Similar to the 1099-INT, the 1099-DIV reports dividends and capital gains earned through ownership of common stock or mutual funds. The same guidelines apply to both forms.

WORKSHOP: Sessions free

(From 1B)

"Understanding the Home Buying and Mortgage Process" will be in two sessions, held April 23 and 26 and April 23 and May 3.

Tuesday sessions will be held from 7 to 8:30 p.m. and Saturday sessions from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

All materials, including a workbook and calculator, will be provided and refreshments served. A kickoff reception will be held before the first workshop on April 5 at 6:30 p.m.

Individuals completing the entire series are eligible to apply for personal loans or mortgage financing with special terms through Texas National Bank.

Space is limited and reservations can be made by calling Denise Strickland at 688-8680 or Patci Pendergrass at 688-8527.

Substance Abuse. Often It's Not The Only Problem.
Quite often substance abuse is a symptom of depression. And depression is a serious illness. Unfortunately, many people choose to 'treat' their depression themselves, often leading to:
■ Excessive drinking
■ Use of illegal substances, such as cocaine or marijuana
■ Abuse of prescription drugs
■ Overeating
If you or someone you know is experiencing any of these problems, call us 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Our experienced staff and innovative treatment programs can help over-come the obvious and not so obvious problems - the right way.

SWEETWATER — Services for Ruth Keith Knapp, 97, of Midland will be at 10 a.m. today at McCoy Chapel of Memories in Sweetwater with the Rev. Clark Ford officiating. Burial will be in Sweetwater Cemetery under the direction of McCoy Funeral Home in Sweetwater. Local arrangements are with Midland Funeral Home.

Mrs. Knapp died Friday in Midland.

She was born Dec. 10, 1896, in Palmer. She lived in Sweetwater before moving to Midland. She married Thomas E. Knapp in 1929 in Sweetwater. She attended Newman High School in Sweetwater and North Texas State College. She received a bachelor's and master's degree from Sul Ross University. She was a retired teacher. She was a member of the American Association of University Women, Book Review Club, Creative Art Club and First Christian Church.

She was preceded in death by her husband, Thomas Knapp, three sons, three brothers and two sisters.

Survivors include a daughter, Mary Fort of Scottdale, Ariz.; a sister, Gussie Bratcher of Sweetwater; four grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren.

Pallbearers are Glen Tennett, Carroll Kearney, Richard Armstrong, Harold Ward, Clovis Epps and Sam Wright.

Memorials may be made to Boy's Ranch in San Angelo or First Christian Church.

Timber framing remains historic, cherished craft

By Robbie Goodrich
Nacogdoches Daily Sentinel

NACOGDOCHES — Timber framers from across the country have brought the past and the present together here to raise a gazebo that will be the centerpiece of a new park.

It was history in the making, and what more appropriate place than along the El Camino Real in the Oldest Town in Texas?

The gazebo will be the centerpiece of the Eugenia Sterne park on Pilar at Lanana streets.

The Timber Framers Guild of North America spent a week in Nacogdoches recently carving each mortise, tenon and peg hole used in the gazebo, and then spent a day raising the structure as part of a special guild project.

Spectators, from youngsters playing in the dirt to downtown businessmen dressed in suits and ties, watched the craftsmen hoist frames, using a pulley dangling from a tree limb and then fit the pieces of the gazebo puzzle together.

As area residents came and left the site, the same comment could be heard: "This is something we may never see again."

Local volunteers are roofing the structure and putting finishing touches on the gazebo, which will serve as a bandstand for musical concerts.

The workshop project was a prelude to the guild's annual conference that brought as many as 300 of the unique craftsmen from throughout North America and from as far away as Europe.

Timber framing has a history dating back some 2,000 years, said Tim Chauvin, guild member and owner of Red Suspenders Timber Frames in east Nacogdoches County. Chauvin was workshop coordinator, and Red Suspenders served as workshop site.

According to Chauvin, people who become interested in timber framing are attracted to the craft for various reasons.

"Structurally, it is a very sound way to build," he said, "using available materials, and it can be done so that a building can last almost forever."

He said timber-framed buildings are expensive to build.

"There are arguments that these buildings cost more to build, but then they last so much longer. That makes it really a better investment," he said, adding with a laugh that he makes these rationales "so that the relatives and the neighbors won't think you're completely crazy."

But the reasons most timber framers love their craft go well beyond technically obvious ones.

"The love of the work almost just happens," he said, looking from his office loft at Red Suspenders as fellow craftsmen meticulously hone their skills below. "Some people love writing, some love painting, some love walking in the woods, and they don't always know why.

"From a more evolutionary and philosophical standpoint, there's the lineage of the trade," he said. "There's something unique about knowing that what I'm doing today could have been done by someone else just like me 500 years ago."

Chauvin said there's a high level of satisfaction in taking wood and crafting a house, or a barn, or even a gazebo, "with my own hands, taking an idea and a drawing and making it something real."

Another unique aspect of timber framing, Chauvin said, is "you can't do it in a vacuum — you have to have people helping you."

Just as in ancient times and the early days of North America, it takes more than one person to raise one of these structures.

"It's not a situation of 'look what I've done,' but of 'look what we've done,'" he said. "A special camaraderie develops in timber framing."

The work starts by actually drawing onto the timber the lines for the joinery so that each mortise, tenon and peg hole is shown. Crafting of the joints is done with a combination of power and hand tools. Power tools allow for quick removal of waste, leaving more time for fine tuning each joint with planes and chisels, Chauvin said.

"Once you draw the design on the face of the wood, all the other stuff has to go away," he said, over-simplifying the technique. "You take away what you don't want it to be, then you actually cut and fabricate the pieces."

Roger Clinton's wedding doesn't draw much excitement from Dallas residents

By Maureen Dowd
N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — The groom was nervous, bouncing around, breathing heavily, stammering and missing his cues.

The bride was serene, wearing a long white maternity wedding dress as she followed four small flower girls in white straw hats, her nieces, down the aisle.

And the tuxedo-clad best man was comforting, putting his arm around his jittery half-brother's shoulder and urging him to "settle down."

With the president there to hand him the ring, Roger Clinton married his live-in love, 25-year-old Molly Martin, on Saturday evening in her hometown of Dallas. The couple are expecting their first child next month, and, boy or girl, Roger Clinton plans to give the baby his mother's maiden name, Cassidy.

"It's going to be something Cassidy Clinton," the 37-year-old first brother told a television reporter, adding that the couple were thinking of Cassidy DeAnn Clinton for a girl and Austin Cassidy Clinton for a boy. Before she died of cancer in January, Virginia Cassidy Kelley went with the couple, at her son's request, to pick out wedding bands.

In an interview with a local radio station on the eve of the wedding, held under a big white tent at the Dallas Arboretum, the groom explained: "We had already decided to get married. The baby sort of sped things up." And he said in the a television interview: "We're trying to sort of, like trial and error, do the right thing at the right time."

The official White House story is that the president offered his little brother a White House wedding, but that Roger refused. Some people who know the star-struck and showy Roger doubt that he would have given up such a social coup and suspect that the president and first lady were reluctant about a White House wedding with a bride so visibly enceinte.

Hillary Rodham Clinton's younger brother, Tony Rodham, will marry Nicole Boxer, the daughter of Sen. Barbara Boxer of California, in an East Room ceremony in May.

Roger Clinton met Molly Martin, an alumna of the famous Kilgore Rangerettes dance drill team and the daughter of a Dallas policeman, at the race track in Hot Springs, Ark. She followed him to Los Angeles, where he has been pursuing a singing career and working as a warm up act for sitcoms for the television producers and Clinton pals Linda Bloodworth-Thomason and Harry Thomason.

The couple has lived together for a year in Redondo Beach, Calif., and Miss Martin works for a software company in the area. Roger Clinton has described his new wife as sweet and innocent. Following her famous sister-in-law's lead, she plans to use the name Molly Martin Clinton.

While Roger Clinton has faced some tough times — serving a prison term for selling cocaine, battling drug addiction, struggling to become a blues crooner and B-movie actor largely on the strength of a last name — he said he has never seen anything as tough as planning a Texas-sized wedding.

"I can understand now how some people just say, heck with it, let's just elope," he said in the television interview.

Although Ray Manzella, Roger Clinton's manager from Los Angeles, had made some inquiries about selling rights to wedding photographs, or giving "Prime Time Live" exclusive rights to cover the wedding, in the end no cameras were allowed in, except the official photographer's. Even guests had to hand over their cameras before going inside.

"They made a decision to have it be private," said Manzella, an extremely tanned George Hamilton look-alike who arrived at the wedding in a modish suit and stretch limousine.

The Texas press was underwhelmed by the celebrity wedding.

And the president's role drew some strange attention-seekers outside the Arboretum.

Jerry Neill from Coppell, Texas, an actor who claims he is a fifth cousin of the Clintons, was giving interviews outside about "The Real Bill Television Show." Neill, who dyed his hair a patchy blond to look more like the president, described the planned show in a news release as being about "a presidential look-alike with amnesia who has dedicated himself to being a lone ranger for positive community efforts."

Behind a police barrier were an odd assortment of protesters. Robert Spence, a 48-year-old Charles Manson look-alike who said he was the Imperial Wizard for the Knights of the Klan, was there in a purple satin Klan outfit with Confederate flag shawl. Next to him was an intense young man wearing a storm trooper's outfit who identified himself as Gary Evans, 21, the spokesman for the National Socialist White Workers Union. And, this being Dallas, where they are about to have a gun show at the Convention Center, there was also a protester against gun control.

Even though he was clearly nervous, taking deep gulps of air and bouncing on his toes, Roger Clinton was also enough of a ham to enjoy his moment in the sun, with more than 400 guests filling the white, flowery tent, including the Thomasons, Jan Hooks, the comedian from "Saturday Night Live" and "Designing Women," and, in the front row, Hillary and Chelsea.

As the bride came down the aisle, to a harp rendition of the wedding march, Roger Clinton reached out his hand to his brother, who obligingly squeezed it. He also put his head on the minister's shoulder at one point, and cried a bit when he and his bride lit a unity candle.

John P. Miles, an Arkansas minister who officiated, took a folksy approach.

"Roger didn't ask for a sermon, but he's getting one anyway," he told the crowd, as the president threw back his head and laughed. "If he'd come to church more regularly, I wouldn't have to do one."

Some friends of the prodigal groom chuckled when the minister said, "Marrying Roger — there will be bad days." He quickly added, "Marrying Molly — there will be bad days."

Some guests also buzzed a bit when the couple turned toward each other to exchange vows, and the bride presented a silhouette that looked startlingly imminent.

Once it was official, they exchanged a long kiss, as rain began to fall and the guests went inside for a reception.

There were rumors that the president might play his saxophone at the reception, since Roger Clinton was disappointed that he did not get to sing while his brother played at any of the Inaugural balls.

But Bill Tillman, the former lead singer for the band, Blood, Sweat and Tears, a friend of Roger's who entertained at the reception, said the president did not play.

Education commissioner: Few doctors educated in Texas return

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Hundreds of Texas-educated medical school graduates have left the state for residency programs in other parts of the country, taking with them knowledge gained in a $250,000 program partially funded by taxpayers.

Although residencies are traditional training grounds for young doctors, state officials said few return to practice in Texas.

"We're subsidizing other states by exporting more medical doctors than decide to practice in the state of Texas," State Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth said.

"We spend $250,000 per student in our medical school and then states like California attract them with their residency programs," he said. "They do their residency out there and get established and tend to stay."

As a result, not many are settling in South Texas, where almost a third of the doctors are nearing retirement age. The region has about half the number of doctors, dentists and nurses for each 100,000 people as the rest of Texas.

South Texas has only 6 percent of the state's doctors, but has 18 percent of its population, 1993 figures show. There are only 66 doctors for every 100,000 South Texans, compared with 93 for every 100,000 Texans and 105 for every 100,000 U.S. citizens.

Some residents say South Texas deserves a health science center or medical school and that the state should shift its priorities to make sure it gets one.

DEAR ABBY

Co-workers' lunch-room complaint brings full plate of confessions

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing in response to "Fed Up in the Break Room," who complained about a co-worker who seemed obsessed with food. I know they were referring to me.

Van Buren

I thought I was being complimentary when I asked my co-workers what they brought for lunch because it looked or smelled good when it was being rewarmed in the microwave oven.

Well, they don't have to worry. I will never mention food again. — FED UP AND SHUT UP

DEAR ABBY: Recently I read the letter in your column about the rude co-worker who always had to know what everyone else had for lunch.

Abby, I did not have to get past the first two lines to realize that the letter was about me. I was just trying to make conversation. I apologize to my co-workers, whom I offended. However, it isn't necessary for others to skip lunch to avoid me. A sudden change of subject, or the direct approach, would have turned a lightbulb on in my head. Sign me ... — SORRY IN ST. PAUL

DEAR ABBY: The person who thought it was necessary to ask you how to tell people to "butt out" of their lunch bags obviously can't handle the standard way to say, "Knock it off — you bother me." How about this: "It's a rude-a-begga sandwich" ... or is that too subtle? — VANCE IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR ABBY: I was disappointed in your response to "Fed Up in the Break Room." If the person's incessant talking about food is irritating, someone should tell her about it. No need to be brutal. You seemed to assume that the person was doing this deliberately to annoy people. Maybe she was just trying to make conversation, to be friendly.

I would recommend starting with a positive comment. For example: "You certainly have an interest in food. Are you a gourmet cook?" Then end with, "You seem very interested in what I am eating, but your curiosity about what I am eating detracts from my enjoyment. So how about talking about other things during break?" — JEAN, BETHLEHEM, PA.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Fed Up in the Break Room." I think I know who wrote that letter.

Prior to this job, I worked for a large firm in a large city. Every day all of us would ask the others what they were having for lunch, if they bought it, and if they cooked it, they would ask for the recipe.

We did not consider it rude — we considered it fun. We learned some new recipes from diverse ethnic groups, new restaurants and delis, and the price of carry-out food.

I think "Fed Up in the Break Room" made a trivial, childish complaint. I didn't realize I was being rude. And believe me, Abby, I have learned my lesson. Hell will freeze before I compliment anybody at work about her cooking again! — TICKED OFF IN TUCSON

Abby shares more of her favorite, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, More Favorite Recipes, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Old mining town's lack of records creates problem of ownership

By Carl Nolte
N.Y. Times News Service

VIRGINIA CITY, Nev. — This is a tourist town, famous for board sidewalks its saloons, its nickel slot machines and its memories, some of them true.

The town was built on silver, literally. Prospectors found the richest strike ever in Virginia City, and miners erected the city atop the mother lode. After taking out millions of dollars, the big mining companies gradually abandoned the place, leaving a nasty little joke on the present.

But the tycoons who became fabulously rich from the silver mines forgot a few things — like proper land titles. And now, more than 135 years after a couple of gold prospectors discovered that the bluish-colored sand they had been throwing away was almost pure silver, it turns out that nobody has clear title to Virginia City.

It's a mess: Storey County may not own the classic 1875 county courthouse. The Roman Catholic Church may not own the Catholic church. The bars that line C Street, the main drag, may belong to a mining company.

Even County Assessor John Flanagan, the official who sends out the tax bills, admits he doesn't know who owns the town of 1,000 souls and 10 bars.

"There is a whole lot of concern about this," said Flanagan. "We don't know what's going to happen."

Thirty years ago, nobody cared. In fact, lawyers say one of the patents, a mining claim that carries land title to what could be most of the town, changed hands in a saloon poker game. Out of that transaction came a complex lawsuit that produced a cloud on the title of nearly everything.

Now, the claims are worth a couple of million dollars at least, and one mining man has plans to rework the Comstock Lode, that rich strike, in search of more gold — another bonanza, maybe.

Land titles were never seriously disputed before. Everyone knew there was a problem, but no one did anything — until suddenly a couple of years ago an attempted sale of mineral rights raised questions no one could answer.

"According to the Bureau of Land Management, we don't even own the town," said Greg Hess, a surveyor, businessman and mine owner.

Perhaps, some say, the U.S. government owns Virginia City. You could make a case for that position, especially after it turned out a few years ago that the local school district bought land for a new high school, erected the building and then discovered that the land really belonged to the feds.

Steve McBride says he hears that every title has been tainted. McBride is secretary-treasurer of the Bucket of Blood Saloon Inc., which sits atop the claim of the old Consolidated Virginia mine. More than $105 million in gold and silver came out of that single mine.

Virginia City is directly atop the Comstock Lode — there are 600 miles of mine tunnels under the town, depending on who you talk to. Some say there are 750 miles. The tunnels are 2,000, maybe 3,000 feet deep. Some are full of boiling water, and some, people say, are full of gold.

The lawsuit, like everything else connected with precious metals, is complicated. It goes back to the days when the original owners of the claims were persuaded to sell them for a pittance. Other men grew rich on the lode, and legal papers flew through the air like so much dirt.

Insider trading was invented in Virginia City; it is said that people like James G. Fair, James Flood, John W. Mackay and William O'Brien made millions from manipulating the mine stock.

Certainly they made San Francisco: Machinery for the mines all came from San Francisco, and so did everything else, including shady ladies. The Fairmont Hotel was named for Fair, the Flood Building for Flood, and Nevada money built both the Palace Hotel and the Bank of California.

The problem started when John Piper commissioned a town-site map for Virginia City. It had been a mining camp, "just tents and shacks put up over the mining claims," said Dick Horton, a Reno lawyer.

Piper, who later built an opera house in Virginia City, got his map, but it had no fixed reference to anything. It was no map at all, really. Under the law, the map was filed with the land office, but the land office never filed it with a judge, as required by law.

The town-site law also forbade locating a town site on property that could be mined, but, of course, Virginia City was built on top of mines.

"So," said Horton, "the Virginia City town site was legally impossible."

Now it becomes awkward: For owners of the surface to have title they must have a town-site patent.

"The problem," said Flanagan, the assessor, "is that we can't find the patent." Or perhaps, he said, "it was never patented."

The mining claims were certainly patented, since they were worth a fortune. Some lawyers think that absent a town-site title, the surface belongs to whoever owns the mining claims.

It is a bit embarrassing, since all the records, except the key one, are in the huge old strong room of the 119-year-old county courthouse, which the county may not even own. In the meantime, Storey County has been collecting taxes for all these years.

Scientist invents new snack: 'meat puffs'

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — Instead of sweets, kids of the future may be snacking on "meat puffs."

But New Mexico State University food scientist Earl Ray said his invention needs some fine-tuning. The roast beef flavor lacks something, and the chili might be a little too hot.

He says, however, his meat puffs can stay unrefrigerated for years, which he hopes will attract government contracts for the military and for aid to starving populations around the world.

Meat puffs contain 108 calories per 1-ounce serving, 10 percent protein and only 6 percent fat. They're 87 percent potato flour and 13 percent dehydrated beef shank.

"They could replace a lot of candies and sweet snacks that children eat and of course potato chips," Ray said. "I've got grandchildren and, man, they just love them."

The 64-year-old scientist, who has a degree in genetics from North Carolina State University, previously developed a method of tenderizing beef by sending electrical currents through fresh carcasses.

He began working on meat puffs three years ago with a $30,000 grant from the National Livestock and Meat Board. His mission: develop a nutritious snack food containing meat.

Ray's extruder cooks the batter at upwards of 200 degrees and drives it through a eighth-of-an-inch bit with enough force to puff it. The puffs are coated lightly with vegetable oil and dusted with seasoning.

He says his next project is vegetarian jerky.

Massachusetts boy wins rotten sneaker contest

MONTPELIER, Vt. — Helmeted men wearing gas masks roamed the gymnasium as odor destroyers. The judges wore white coats labeled "odorologist." And a skunk named Flower was there to offer an opinion.

They braced for the stench of the feet, if not the agony of defeat.

The occasion was the 19th annual Rotten Sneaker competition, which Jimmy Twomey-Roux of Newburyport, Mass., won by showcasing his bedraggled sneakers with the tongue hanging out and his feet showing through the soles.

Nine contestants came from as far away as Alaska and the Netherlands to compete in the contest, which has been sponsored by the foot-care products company Odor Eaters since 1988.

"I run a lot. I play sports," he said.

And he helps his father, who hauls fish. "I help him move the fish so I walk through that a lot," Jimmy said.

Twomey-Roux's prizes: a $500 savings bond, a year's supply of foot care products, a teddy bear and other gifts.

While Odor Eaters sponsored the contest and paid to bring the out-of-state contestants and a parent to Vermont, the contest itself was organized and run by the Montpelier Recreation Department.

The contestants were chosen in a series of regional competitions. The judges look at all aspects of the sneakers, from the shape of the tongue to the thickness of the sole.

Magic wins

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The standing ovation lasted two minutes, and that was just for Magic Johnson walking to the Los Angeles Lakers' bench after the anthem. When his name was announced moments later, and the song "I Feel Good" came blasting out of loudspeakers, the giddy applause gave way to more than 17,000 fans dancing in their seats.

Hollywood stars were here again. The buzz was back. Showtime. Magic Time. For one spectacular Sunday night, Game 1 in the coaching career of Magic Johnson, the Forum rocked the way it rarely had since he played here last.

More than a game, this had the feeling of an event, a wonderful welcome home party thrown by the Lakers and attended by only the third sellout crowd in an otherwise dismal season.

And in case any cynics thought Johnson was here just for the show, just a big name to bring in more fans until the end of the season, he dispelled that notion by coaching like crazy from start to finish in a 110-101 victory over the Milwaukee Bucks.

The Lakers early on played as if Johnson were back on the court — in fact, he ventured past the sideline onto the court most of the game — and the Bucks seemed stunned by the commotion around them.

Robinson stays

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Glenn Robinson, the nation's leading scorer and Naismith college player of the year, indicated Sunday that he will stay at Purdue for his senior season rather than turn pro.

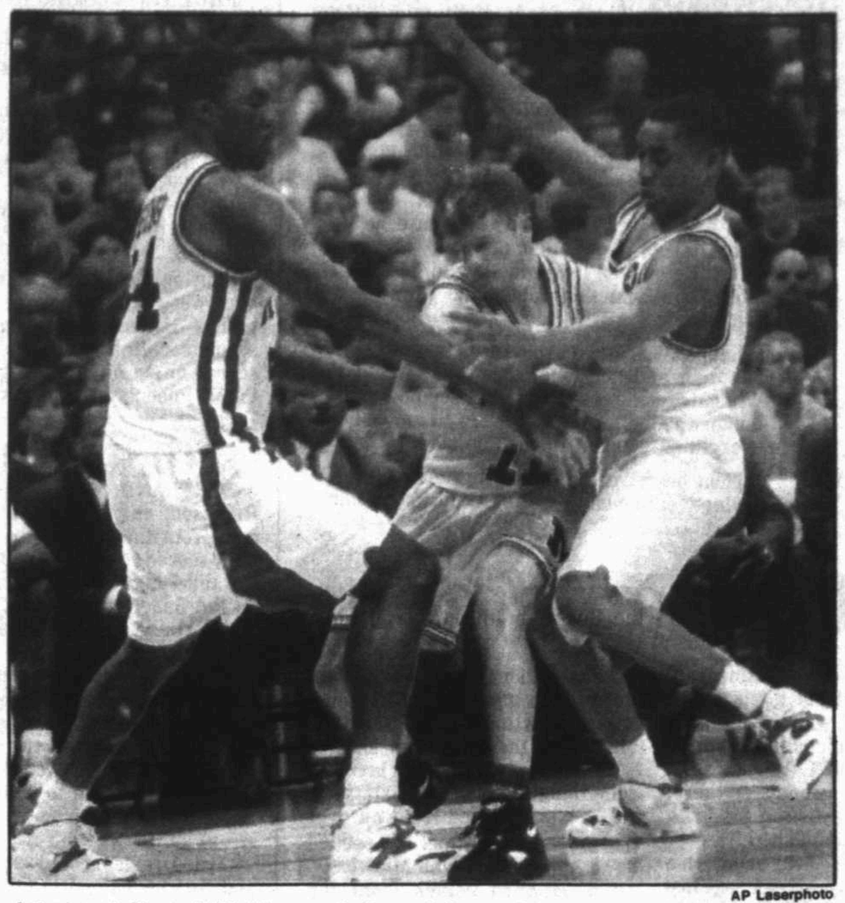

"I know it's hard to turn down money like that, but the money will be there when I want to leave," Robinson told CBS after being named the Naismith Award winner.

Robinson, who led the nation with a 30.3 scoring average, would probably be the No. 1 pick in the June 29 NBA draft if he decided to give up his last year of eligibility.

But Robinson said that is not much of a factor.

"Well, if I was the No. 1 pick now, then maybe I could be the No. 1 pick next year because, hopefully, my game will improve," he said with a laugh.

DALLAS — The Arkansas Razorbacks proved they were the best team in the NCAA Midwest Regional, even though Juwan Howard proved he was the best player.

The top-seeded Razorbacks got big contributions up and down the lineup Sunday to beat No. 3 seed Michigan 76-68 and deny the Wolverines their third straight trip to the Final Four.

With President Clinton, his wife and daughter watching from third-row seats, the Razorbacks (29-3) advanced to the Final Four for the first time since 1990, when they lost to Duke in the semifinals.

"We had to find a way to win, and we were able to do it," said coach Nolan Richardson, whose team will meet Arizona on Saturday in the national semifinals.

The Razorbacks overcame a 30-point, 13-rebound performance by Howard, who was voted the outstanding player in the Midwest Regional.

Howard picked up two fouls before the game was two minutes old, but he stayed in the game and had 17 of his team's 31 points in the first half. At times he seemed to be all the Wolverines had, since they struggled from the perimeter, making just 3 of 17 3-pointers.

"That Juwan Howard, he's awesome," Richardson said. "Every time he touched the ball, something good happened."

Florida vaults to first Final Four

MIAMI — Craig Brown's flurry of 3-pointers provided an appropriate path to the Final Four for the Florida Gators. The longshots won with long shots.

Brown hit 3-pointers on three consecutive possessions to break open a close game, and unheralded Florida won the East Regional by beating Boston College 74-66 Sunday.

The Gators (29-7) earned their first trip to the Final Four. Coach Lon Kruger's team will play Southeast Regional champion Duke (27-5) in Saturday's national semifinals at Charlotte, N.C.

"We feel great about our opportunity," said Brown, who scored 21 points and was named the regional's outstanding player. "After we cut down one net, we got in the locker room, and coach told us we forgot to cut down the other net. I told him, 'Hey, we're new at this.'"

Boston College, which at No. 9 was the lowest seed remaining in the tournament, finished 23-11.

"It's been a lot of fun getting here, but coming so far and being so close, it's going to hurt," said Bill Curley, who scored 20 points for the Eagles.

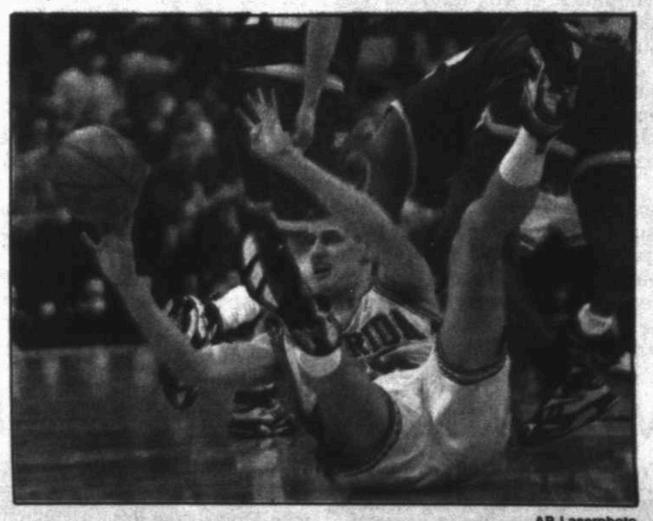

Florida entered the regional as the No. 3 seed but was still lightly regarded, in part because of the program's lackluster past. The Gators had made only three previous NCAA tournament appearances and were 7-21 just four years ago.

Losses by Connecticut, North Carolina and Indiana helped clear the way for Florida in the East Regional.

"These players have not been distracted at all by the low expectations," Kruger said. "We've read the papers and seen that everyone has played badly against us. We appreciate that. Today, we won a game."

Big-time bench boosts Bulldogs

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

Like any soccer team, Midland High plays with 10 men in the field and a goalie. But unlike most soccer teams Midland High doesn't stop at ten starters and a few backups.

When the Bulldogs come at opponents they come in waves. And the waves are close to washing Midland High up on the Region I Tournament beach.

If one trait marks the Bulldogs ascent to a region quarterfinal Tuesday against El Paso Austin at 4 p.m. at Midland High, it's depth, balance and the liberal use of substitutes. And Midland's group of talented non-starters shoulder their back-up roles without a hint of selfishness. If the Bulldog wave can beat Austin, its next high tide will come in the Region I Tournament of four teams.

"If they can do the job I'll be glad to sit down and let them do it," said senior forward and part-time starter, part-time backup Emmanuel Sanon.

Johnson, Jones tip-toe on issue

Associated Press

IRVING — Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones says he has to be careful about what he says concerning coach Jimmy Johnson so his words don't come back to haunt him if the two are unable to work things out.

"Any statements either of us make now could work against us because it could be used as proof that one of us did the firing or did the quitting," Jones said in Sunday's editions of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "We have to watch our words so we don't (mess) around and legally violate our existing contract."

Jones had said he and Johnson will meet Monday for talks that could evolve into negotiations toward a contractual settlement that would allow the coach to leave the team.

"I'm not even sure there will be a meeting tomorrow," he said.

Johnson said Saturday he'll hold a news conference this week to announce whether he'll be back next season to try for a third straight Super Bowl title.

The latest battle in their ongoing love-hate relationship occurred last week when Jones threatened to fire Johnson, who has five years left on his $1 million-a-year contract.

Johnson said he was infuriated Jones even mentioned former University of Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer as a possible successor.

In his interview with Star-Telegram, Jones said he has a "mental list" of possible replacements although he hasn't put it on paper. He says he's "certainly well aware of other potential candidates. I've had to be, given Jimmy's willingness to consider leaving before 1999."

Johnson said the only way he would resign would be if certain conditions were not met.

"I'm not going to resign without a job and without compensation," Johnson said in Pensacola, Fla., where he was attending a camp run by Cowboys running back Emmitt Smith.

"I had a phone call to Jerry a few days ago early in the morning and it was not positive. Nothing was resolved. Nothing was clarified. ... We had a very abrupt ending to the conversation and I will clarify everything in the news conference this week."

Norman scorches to Sawgrass win

By Bob Green
AP Golf Writer

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. — Greg Norman set his third consecutive scoring record on the home course of the PGA Tour and cruised to an unchallenged, four-stroke victory Sunday in the Players Championship.

■ Players Championship

The current British Open champion scored the 12th official victory of his American career, and 67th around the world, with a front-running 67 and a 264 total, 24-under-par, over the TPC at Sawgrass.

That compares with the 18-under record set by Nick Price last year on the course once cursed by players as unplayably difficult.

Norman, however, took full advantage of what he called soft conditions and opened up the tournament with a 63. He also set course records at 130 for 36 holes and 197 for 54.

He led by four shots going into the final round, increased the margin to six on the first hole and really wasn't threatened in a wire-to-wire triumph.

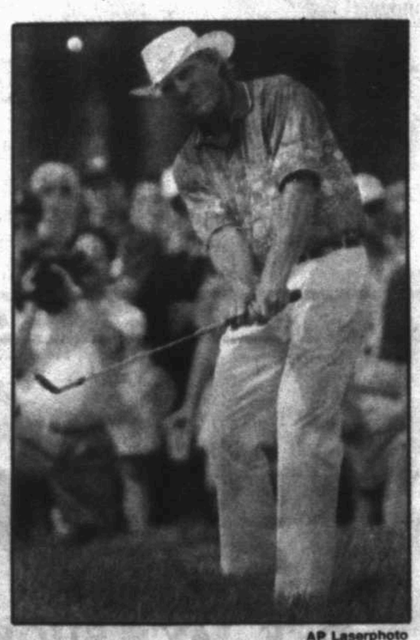

It was worth $450,000 from the total purse of $2.5 million and increased his earnings to $566,333, the best on the tour this year, in only four American starts.

Norman also slipped past Paul Azinger into second place on the all-time money-winning list at $7,173,986 and, perhaps more important, stamped himself a favorite for the Masters week after next.

Fuzzy Zoeller, the 42-year-old former Masters and U.S. Open champ, became a runner-up for the third time in as many starts after outlasting Jeff Maggert in a battle for second.

Although Norman never appeared to be in danger of being overtaken, he could not be totally secure until he got his tee shot safely on the island green of

NIT finalists try the NCAA plunge

■ Kansas State, Vanderbilt, Siena and Villanova hope to follow last year's finalists to NCAA tournament.

NEW YORK (AP) — For those stuck-up types who think the college basketball postseason begins and ends with the NCAA tournament, here are three little letters.

N-I-T.

The nation's oldest postseason tournament reaches its own Final Four with a Monday night doubleheader at Madison Square Garden when Kansas State plays Vanderbilt and Villanova takes on Siena. All four teams know there's plenty to be gained from this experience.

Last year's NIT Final Four were Minnesota, Alabama-Birmingham, Georgetown and Providence: and all of them used the tournament it as a springboard to successful seasons and NCAA berths this season. Minnesota and UAB were ranked all season. Providence and Georgetown played for the Big East championship.

If the NCAA tournament is the Big Dance, then the NIT is the junior prom. And this one offers some intriguing matchups.

Kansas State comes in riding the hottest hand in college basketball. Askia Jones scored 62 points against Fresno State in the NIT quarterfinals, nailing 14 of 18 3-point shots. And he did it in just 28 minutes.

"I kept taking him out," coach Dana Altman said. "And they kept telling me he was closing in on records. First it was Mike Evans' school record of 47. then it was Wayman Tisdale's Big Eight record.

"It was an unbelievable shooting performance. It didn't matter if he was guarded or he wasn't guarded. No matter where he shot it from, it went in."

Jones is the son of ex-NBA player Wali Jones and the effort against Fresno State may have been a head-turner for pro scouts.

"His lateral quickness is questionable, and we run a lot of set plays for him," Altman said. "But he's competitive and he's got great bloodlines. He'll get his chance."

That could also describe Vanderbilt star Billy McCaffrey, whose brother, Ed, is a wide receiver with the NFL's New York Giants. Coach Jan van Breda Kolff admires McCaffrey, who transferred from Duke after the Blue Devils won the 1991 NCAA tournament. He went over the 2,000-point mark this season.

"He's the first one at practice and the last one to leave," van Breda Kolff said. "He's thinking basketball all the time. He has the desire to be great."

And the coach added, McCaffrey has a chance at a rare perfecta — playing on both NCAA and NIT championship teams.

Siena coach Mike Deane and Villanova's Steve Lappas chatted through lunch, and Deane went public with the subject.

"I asked him what kind of defense he was going to use, man-to-man or zone," the coach said. "He said he had something different. He must know something about the game that I don't know."

Lappas was asked about the defense again. If not man and not zone, then what would the Wildcats come up with? He seemed dumbfounded as he turned to Deane. "They believe everything you tell them," he said.

Then he retreated to his mysterious mode, saying ominously, "We'll do something different."

Suns clinch playoffs with win over Rockets

Associated Press

■ NBA Roundup

PHOENIX — Charles Barkley and Cedric Ceballos scored 20 points each and Kevin Johnson had 15 points and 15 assists as the Suns qualified for the playoffs Sunday night with a 113-98 win over the Houston Rockets.

The Rockets' only lead was after the first basket, and the Suns held double-digit advantages going into the second and third quarters.

Spurs 107, Trail Blazers 95

PORTLAND, Ore. — David Robinson, in foul trouble and cold from the field in the first half, scored 20 of his 36 points in the third quarter Sunday night as the San Antonio Spurs beat the Portland Trail Blazers 107-95.

The Spurs, who moved into a virtual tie with Houston atop the Midwest Division, used a 10-1 run midway through the third period to take control of the game and went on to snap the Blazers' homecourt winning streak at 11.

Clyde Drexler scored 22 points and Rod Strickland 16 for Portland, which hadn't lost at home since Jan. 30 against New York.

Knicks 111, Magic 90

ORLANDO, Fla. — Patrick Ewing, held scoreless the first 16 minutes, roared back with 31 points to lead New York to a victory over Orlando, the Knicks' 13th straight victory.

Ewing scored 23 of his points in the second half, when the Knicks held off a comeback attempt after leading by 15 at intermission and 21 in the third quarter. Ewing also had 11 rebounds and five blocks.

Celtics 124, Sixers 122 (OT)

HARTFORD, Conn. — Dino Radja scored 36 points and grabbed 11 rebounds as Boston held off Philadelphia, extending the Sixers' losing streak to seven games.

Radja scored 34 points in regulation, including a layup that gave the Celtics a 117-115 lead with 30 seconds left. But he made a costly turnover in the final seconds that could have cost the Celtics the game.

Dana Barros drove to the basket on the Sixers' ensuing posession, but Sherman Douglas blocked his shot and time expired as Radja got the rebound.

Neither team scored in overtime until Douglas hit a layup with 2:14 remaining. Radja made it 121-117 before Jeff Malone cut it to 121-120 with a three-point play with a minute remaining.

Lakers 110, Bucks 101

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Magic Johnson brought his dazzling smile to the NBA's coaching ranks, guiding Los Angeles to a victory over Milwaukee in his sideline debut.

George Lynch scored a career-high 30 points as he became the first Lakers rookie since Johnson to score 30 in a game.

Cavaliers 111, Pistons 99

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Gerald Wilkins scored 28 points and Tyrone Hill came off the bench to get 18 points and 13 rebounds, leading Cleveland to a victory over Detroit.

Wilkins made 12 of 17 shots and also grabbed a season-high nine rebounds.

New finalists bring parity, excitement

Associated Press

■ Women's Tournament

Even as it continues fighting for equal footing with the men's game, women's basketball is achieving its own brand of parity.

Three of the teams that will play Saturday in the NCAA Women's Final Four in Richmond, Va., made it for the first time. This, after last year's field in Atlanta had four newcomers.

Alabama, North Carolina and Purdue all qualified for their first Final Four with victories in regional championship games Saturday. They'll join Louisiana Tech, a two-time national champion that will play in its eighth Final Four in 13 years.

"It should be exciting for the game," said Tennessee coach Pat Summitt, whose top-ranked team was vanquished in the regional semifinals. "We need the unpredictability we've seen the past couple of seasons. It brings about an excitement long needed in women's basketball."

Purdue is the only No. 1 seed in the bunch. The Boilermakers (29-4) beat second-seeded Stanford 82-65 to win the West Regional and will play North Carolina (31-2) in the national semifinals at the Richmond Coliseum.

"We've just taken a giant step for our women's basketball program," said Purdue coach Lin Dunn, whose team advanced on the same day the school's men's team was eliminated by Duke.

North Carolina, long hidden by the giant shadow of coach Dean Smith's men's program, earned its trip to Richmond with an 81-69 victory over Connecticut in the East.

Only three years ago, the Lady Tar Heels finished last in the Atlantic Coast Conference for the third straight year. This is their third consecutive year in the NCAA tournament, but they still have some unfinished business.

"It was one of our goals at the beginning of the year to be in the national championship game," forward Stephanie Lawrence said. "The Final Four is one step there. We're still not satisfied yet with what we've accomplished."

Louisiana Tech (30-3) brings in a 24-game winning streak against Alabama (26-6) after surviving what may have been the toughest regional.

The Lady Techsters, seeded fourth, beat No. 2 seed Southern California 75-66 in the Mideast Regional. Tech had to defeat top-seeded Tennessee to reach the regional finals, avenging a 94-60 loss to the Lady Vols in December.

"It was like fighting Mike Tyson Thursday and Rocky Marciano on Saturday," Tech coach Leon Barmore said. "I challenged them at halftime and told them if they won this game, they could win the national championship."

Tech runs into an Alabama team that has ridden to the Final Four on emotion and a frenetic offense that rushes the ball up the floor and takes the first open shot — whether it's a 3-pointer, a layup or something in between. Sixth-seeded Alabama scored from all over the floor in beating top-seeded Penn State 96-82 in the Midwest.

The emotion comes from the memory of assistant coach and recruiting specialist Dottie Kelso, who died last September when a cyst burst in her brain. The offensive spark comes from flashy point guard Niesa Johnson, who can drive, shoot from the outside and hit a teammate in full stride with a length-of-the-court pass.

"Niesa has been here three years, Madonna Thompson has been here three years and we have been in the NCAA tournament three years," Alabama coach Rick Moody said. "So I guess that has to say something about the kind of players and people that Dottie brought into our program."

MIDWEST: Arkansas holds off Michigan rally

Scotty Thurman scored 20 for the Razorbacks, including 12 straight during a second-half stretch and two big free throws in the closing seconds.

Freshman center Darnell Robinson scored 14 points and made a nifty jump hook after Michigan (24-8) had gotten within a basket with 5½ minutes left.

Arkansas' reserves outscored Michigan's bench 19-4. Clint McDaniel made three 3-pointers and Al Dillard had two in the first half to help the Razorbacks take control.

"I thought we had the best team in November when we started practice," Richardson said. "I have no reason to start thinking we don't have the best team."

Michigan trailed 47-33 three minutes into the second half before working its way back into the game. A 9-0 run cut the lead to five, then Arkansas outscored the Wolverines 8-2 to lead by 11.

A 3-pointer and a driving shot by Jimmy King got Michigan started on a 17-8 streak that brought the Wolverines within a basket, 63-61, with 5:33 left.

Michigan had a chance to tie moments later when Arkansas turned the ball over, but Jalen Rose missed the breakaway layup. Arkansas responded with an inside basket by Darnell Robinson and two by Williamson to get the lead back to six with 3:23 left.

EAST: Florida senior guard Brown was catalyst

(From 1C)

The catalyst was Brown, the only senior in Florida's starting lineup. His big baskets turned a 56-53 deficit into a 62-56 lead with 3:50 remaining. The turnaround marked the 15th and final lead change.

"Craig hit big-time shots," Kruger said. "They weren't easy shots. BC guarded it pretty well, but he stepped up and hit them like a big-time player does."

Boston College coach Jim O'Brien said Brown's 3-pointers made the difference.

"I thought we guarded him pretty well," O'Brien said. "He took the ball coming away from the basket, turned around and took the shots. Defensively, you don't mind if he takes shots like that. But give him credit — he stepped up and hit them."

Boston College squandered chances to close the deficit. The Eagles missed four free throws in the final 3:24 and committed three turnovers in the last minute.

Andrew DeClercq had 16 points and 13 rebounds for the Gators. Dan Cross scored 14 and Dametri Hill 12.

Howard Eisley had 19 points for the Eagles, who shot just 38 percent.

Florida has always been a football state, and it took awhile for fans to catch basketball fever. The Gators played 14 games before their first sellout at home. But on Sunday, Florida had a partisan crowd roaring with every basket.

Gerrod Abram's steal and breakaway dunk gave Boston College its biggest lead, 51-45, with 11:27 remaining. The Eagles scored only three field goals the rest of the way.

Aoki's disqualification opens door for Wargo

■ PGA Seniors

Aoki held a one-shot lead going into Sunday's final round but he was disqualified after it was discovered he broke a rule and signed an incorrect scorecard for Saturday's second round.

Wargo, the defending PGA Seniors champion, started the day one stroke behind Aoki but took over the lead when Aoki was notified of his disqualification after playing two holes Sunday.

"I never thought about it being a rules violation yesterday (Saturday)," Aoki said. "I guess I have to learn more rules."

Wargo birdied No. 6 with a 12-foot putt and dropped 8-under for the tournament. He had bogeys on Nos. 9 and 17 that kept him from running away from the field and finished with a 209 total for 54 holes, 7-under.

Wargo landed in a bunker on the final hole but he said he wasn't concerned.

"I knew the worst that could happen was a playoff," Wargo said.

Wargo and Rodriguez were in Aoki's threesome when the second-day leader was informed he had been disqualified.

"It really upset Chi Chi and I when they came and told Aoki," Wargo said. "But what can you do but keep playing."

Murphy had the day's best round with a 66 that equaled the best round of the tournament. Wargo had a 66 Saturday that included a hole in one on the 186-yard No. 8 hole.

Andrews handles pressure for LPGA win

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Donna Andrews, facing big-time tournament pressure, sank a 6-foot birdie putt on the final hole Sunday to win the Dinah Shore, her second victory in two weeks and her first in an LPGA major.

■ Dinah Shore

Andrews overtook Laura Davies, who was one shot ahead going into No. 18, but bogeyed to finish one shot behind. Andrews herself had bogeyed No. 17 to fall a shot back of Davies.

Andrews, an emerging star on the tour, finished with a 70 that put her at 12-under-par for the tournament at Mission Hills. Davies also shot a closing 70.

The final day provided a battle down the stretch between two players who already had victories this month. Andrews won at Tucson, Ariz., in mid-March, and Davies won at Phoenix the weekend before the Dinah Shore.

Davies, the longest driver on the women's tour, chose to play the final hole Sunday conservatively, but she hit her tee shot, a 4-iron, into trees along the right side of the 526-yard, par-5 hole.

Americans finish India

Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — Now comes the 3½-month wait.

Jim Courier and Todd Martin put the finishing touches on India in first-round Davis Cup play Sunday, and the United States next meets Holland in the second round in July.

Courier lost a first set tiebreaker but came back to defeat India's Leander Paes 6-7 (7-5), 6-1, 6-4 on the grass court of the Delhi Tennis Association. Martin later beat Zeeshan Ali 6-2, 7-5.

Meanwhile, Russia emerged as a potential major new force in Davis Cup play, while defending champion Germany survived Michael Stich's marathon defeat to squeeze past Austria.

The first-round losers enter the draw for the Sept. 23-25 qualifying round, where a victory will be necessary to return to the World Group next year.

Courier and Martin won their singles matches Friday, and Patrick McEnroe and Richey Reneberg ensured the victory on Saturday with a doubles victory over Paes and Gaurav Natekar.

Russia 4, Australia 1

Russia, led by top-20 veteran Alexander Volkov and exciting newcomer Yevgeny Kafelnikov, defeated last year's runner-up to gain its first-ever berth in the World Group quarterfinals.

Germany 3, Austria 2

Germany, tied 2-2 after inspirational team leader Stich lost a 5½-hour duel with Thomas Muster, advanced when Marc-Kevin Goellner came from behind to beat Horst Skoff.

Czech Republic 4, Israel 1

World No. 13 Petr Korda wore down Amos Mansdorf 6-4, 3-6, 6-7 (4-7), 6-1, 6-1 to clinch the victory at Ramat Hasharon, Israel.

Netherlands 5, Belgium 0

Spain 4, Italy 1

On clay at Madrid, Bruguera secured Spain's berth in the quarterfinals with a five-set, come-from-behind victory over Stefano Pescosolido, 6-4, 1-6, 0-6, 6-2, 6-3.

France 4, Hungary 1

On the hard court at Besancon, France, Arnaud Boetsch beat Jozsef Krocsko 6-3, 6-3, 6-1 to give France the victory.

Sweden 5, Denmark 0

On carpet at Lund, Sweden, world No. 3 Stefan Edberg beat Denmark's top player, Kenneth Carlsen, 6-7 (4-7), 6-1, 6-2.

Houston Slims

HOUSTON — Seventh-seeded Sabine Hack of Germany defeated fourth-seeded Mary Pierce of France 7-5, 6-4 to win the $400,000 Virginia Slims of Houston.

Hack, who had beaten top seed and defending champion Conchita Martinez to make it to the final, battled her opponent and blustery winds to claim the $80,000 first place money. Pierce takes home $36,000.

■ TranSouth 400

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — The man in black is back.

Dale Earnhardt, the six-time and defending NASCAR Winston Cup champion, overpowered the field Sunday, winning the TranSouth Financial 400 at Darlington Raceway, earning his first victory in 17 races, dating to the July 25, 1993 event at Talladega, Ala.

Earnhardt, who won this race a year ago when it was 500 miles, led 10 times for 166 of the 292 laps, including the final 33 in an event shortened by 100 miles in the interest of competition and fan comfort. It was the first 400-mile race at Darlington since the Rebel 400, won by David Pearson on April 16, 1972.

The win moved Earnhardt within one victory of Pearson's record 10 at Darlington and gave Earnhardt the 60th win of his career.

"This racetrack is tough to beat," Earnhardt said. "The key for us was a top setup and engine combination. We guessed on some spring changes before the race, and I think that was key."

Earnhardt's black No. 3 Chevrolet Lumina, fielded by Richard Childress Racing, came across the finish line 7.4-seconds — nearly a straightaway — ahead of Mark Martin's Ford Thunderbird.

"Darlington's been good to us, and Dale ran a smart race," Childress said. "It was a good win for the whole team, and one we really needed."

Martin said, "We gave it our best shot but Earnhardt just wore us out."

Bill Elliot was third in a Thunderbird, followoed by Dale Jarrett in a Chevy, and the Thunderbirds of Lake Speed and Ernie Irvan and the Lumina of Ken Schrader, the only other competitors on the lead lap at the end.

Irvan, who came into Sunday's race with two straight victories, was Earnhardt's strongest challenger, but suffered a serious blow during a green-flag pit stop on lap 222 when his team was penalized 15 seconds for having too many crewmen over the wall.

He was running second before that stop, but came out 12th and never again moved into contention.

Another contender who ran into trouble was Rusty Wallace, who led five times for 56 laps before tagging the turn three wall on lap 135. He drove the car to the garage area for repairs and fell far off the pace before returning.

Tire wear was a major problem in the race, with NASCAR at mid-race waiving a rule that prohibited teams from switching between Goodyear and Hoosier tires because Goodyear, the first choice of most of the teams at Darlington, was running out of its Eagle racing radials. The only admonition was that the teams had to use the same brand on all four wheels whenever they changed.

Both the 28 lead changes and 11 different leaders were records for a 400-mile event at Darlington, as were the seven drivers finishing on the lead lap. Earnhardt's winning speed of 132.432 mph was just shy of Pearson's 132.703 in May 1968.

Earnhardt won $70,190.

There were only five caution periods.

Duke in seventh Final Four

By Jim O'Connell
AP Basketball Writer

Duke, the team that has made the Final Four its postseason home for the past decade, gets Florida, the new kid on the block.

Arizona and Arkansas, teams which each made a recent trip to the national semifinals, meet in the other game.

That's it. The road to Charlotte is complete. The Final Four, what every coach, player and fan has been speculating about since practice started on Nov. 1 is set. Three more games and the 1994 national champion will be crowned.

Duke will be in the Final Four for the seventh time in nine years and if you don't think that's impressive, no conference can match the appearances of that one school. The Big Ten has sent six teams in that span and Kansas' four appearances are second to the Blue Devils' seven among schools.

All that experience should be quite an advantage when Duke faces Florida, a school which had made only three NCAA tournament appearances before this year, only reaching the regional semifinals once.

That could be playing into the Gators' hands, however, as they played the role all season of a team looking for respect. Think back to Selection Sunday, did any other No. 3 seed receive as little attention as Florida?

While the Gators may head to Charlotte, N.C., with their eyes wide open as Final Four rookies, the Blue Devils not only have the advantage of being regulars, but they have to travel only 150 miles and don't even leave the state to get there. To be fashionable on the streets of Charlotte make sure you're wearing blue.

The game will come down to Florida's outstanding backcourt of Dan Cross and Greg Brown facing the tremendous team defense second-seeded Duke used in shutting down Marquette and Purdue in the regionals.

Duke won it all in 1991 and 1992 and seniors Grant Hill, Tony Lang and Marty Clark are chasing ring No. 3.

Arkansas, which made its last trip to the Final Four in 1990, will bring along its biggest fan, President Clinton, and the most depth of any team by far.

Fab Four falls short of finals for first time

DALLAS (AP) — For the first time in their fabled collegiate career, the Fab Four aren't among the Final Four.

Despite the efforts of Juwan Howard, Jalen Rose, Jimmy King and Ray Jackson, Michigan couldn't reach its third straight Final Four, losing to Arkansas 76-68 Sunday in the Midwest Regional final.

"It's a hard time for Michigan basketball," Rose said. "I think we've been kind of spoiled by going to the finals every year. It's a kind of hard pill for us to swallow."

The Wolverines lost their shot at a third straight championship game, and with Howard and Rose possibly turning pro, this could be the end of the line for one of college basketball's all-time best recruiting classes.

And it ends without a title.

"We have no reason to hold our heads down because we had a great run the first two years," said Howard, the region's MVP who overcame two fouls in the first two minutes to get 30 points and 13 rebounds Sunday.

"This year, too, we had an outstanding run when people were counting us out, saying we didn't have any depth or we didn't have Chris Webber."

They could've used the inside force of Webber, the fifth member of Michigan's 1991 recruiting class, to counter the Razorbacks' inside size in Corliss Williamson and Darnell Robinson.

But Webber is now in the NBA, so the Wolverines' stars relied on their experience of 15 previous tournament games to stage a second-half comeback against Arkansas. The Wolverines pulled within two points after trailing by 14 early in the second half, but they never could overtake the Razorbacks.

"Every time we got close and had open jump shots, it seemed like we couldn't get it to go down when it could've put us a little closer," Michigan coach Steve Fisher said.

Michigan's best chance came with about five minutes left and Arkansas leading 63-61. Rose led a three-on-two fast break and put up a shot that bounced out.

"I knew I had two or three guys going with me, but 99 percent of the time I make that shot. It just didn't go in," said Rose, who scored 13 points on 5-of-19 shooting, including 1-of-7 on 3-pointers.

Michigan (24-8) has an 81-22 record with the Fab Four.

BENCH: Bulldogs weapon for Austin is depth son Fought and Mark Schwiening, and midfielders Stein Andersen and Bobby Smith.

Saturday in Abilene with temperatures in the 80s, Esikhati brought in seven different substitutes in a 3-1 sectional round win over Wichita Falls Rider. And the Bulldogs were without starter David Farias. Add that to the Bulldogs having 13 players score this year and its obvious how many quality players the team has.

"It's kind of sad that there can be only 11 players out there," assistant coach Chad Peterson said. "When we put bench players in we don't lose any team continuity, we don't lose any speed."

Besides giving starters a rest, the bench can improve the starters play.

"This is the first time in the six years I've been here we've had a strong bench," Esikhati said. "It puts pressure on players to play as well as they can because there is someone on the bench who can take their place."

With it's depth, Midland can use subs for different reasons than do most teams.

"Most teams when they make substitutions it's for players that are tired or worn out," Peterson said. "For us it (can be) for things that aren't working. We can take players out and talk to them about what they need to be doing."

Esikhati and others echo Sanon's sentiments of cooperation.

"There's no jealousy in their being on the bench. They know they're good but they know somebody has to start," Esikhati said.

Andersen, an exchange student from a town in Norway 50 minutes from Lillehammer, has a goal and an assist off the bench this year.

"There's no hard feelings if you come off the bench," Andersen said. "It doesn't really matter because everybody backs everybody up."

Krueger, who has one goal and one assist in the playoffs, knows what it's like to start and come off the bench.

"However coach wants us to play the game we just take our turns when we get them," Krueger said. "I don't think anybody who plays on the bench worries about it."

And with that remark, Krueger summed up the situation at Midland High. Most players don't sit on the bench for the Bulldogs, they "play" on the bench.

Morrison KO's Scott

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Tommy Morrison's return to Tulsa was a success Sunday night as he stopped Bryan Scott 1:37 into the second round with a jolting right uppercut.

Morrison cut Scott's left eye in the first round with a right uppercut but Scott appeared to shake it off. He landed four clean shots when he was on the ropes before Morrison connected with a right uppercut and followed with a left that put Scott on the floor.

It was the second fight for Morrison, 40-2 with 35 knockouts, since his stunning loss to unheralded Michael Bentt in Tulsa last October. The loss cost Morrison his World Boxing Organization heavyweight title and a $7.5 million fight with WBC champ Lennox Lewis.

Morrison promised to be a little more patient with Scott, a former sparring partner, but he almost repeated the mistakes he made against Bentt.

Scott, who suffered his first loss in 14 professional fights, was tentative in the early going.

TPC: Norman holds third-round lead little terror that is the par-3 17th.

When he did, throwing his short iron to within 2 feet, Zoeller gave him a high-5, acknowledging that the game was over.

After both drove off the 18th tee, Zoeller threw his arm around Norman's shoulder, patted him on the back and then, as they neared the green, led the cheers for the man he beat in a playoff for the U.S. Open title 10 years ago.

On the green, after Norman had lipped out a meaningless birdie putt, Zoeller halted him before the tap-in to wipe the perspiration from his face with a towel.

Zoeller birdied three of the last four holes for a 67 and a 268 total, 20-under and two strokes better than the record set a year ago.

Maggert once held second alone but 4-putted from long range for a bogey-6 on the 16th hole. He finished with a 68 and a 271 total, the only other man in the field within 12 shots of the winner.

Hale Irwin, 48, with a 69-276, was fourth alone.

Norman made only one bogey for the week, on the par-3 13th hole. He missed the green to the right, chipped to about 8 feet and was standing over that par putt when a butterfly fluttered across his line. He didn't flinch. And he didn't back away. But the putt missed on the left. It broke a string 92 consecutive holes without a bogey.

In the end, it mattered not at all.

FEUD: Johnson factor for Aikman

(From 1C)

the uncertainty of Johnson's future.

"If I could have anticipated something like this happening, I would have been hesitant about signing a long-term contract with the Cowboys," Aikman told The Dallas Morning News.

"The thing that has always been a factor for me in Dallas is having Jimmy as the head coach. I've always known there would be a winning effort made, that Jerry would put a premium on winning, as long as Jimmy was the coach of the team."

Earlier this year, Johnson hinted at being interested in coaching the expansion Jacksonville Jaguars, but Jones said he wouldn't let Johnson out of his contract.

"Jimmy talking about Jacksonville is a perfect example of how he isn't committed to fulfilling the 10-year commitment he made in 1989," Jones said.

"That's what started this whole thing. Maybe he's looking for other jobs. That was a concern of mine long before last week's comments. It motivated last week's comments."

JUST FOR KICKS

Hop in your car any Tuesday afternoon at 5:30 and it will likely seem like every kid on the face of the earth is practicing soccer in Midland.

With the spring youth soccer season only two weeks old, the city's parks are jam packed with kids of virtually every age. All have one goal in mind: Playing soccer. Well, most all are headed in that direction.

There is, though, an age group where it seems winning may not exactly be top priority.

Soccer begins as early as age four. And when you're that young, there are often other things to consider during practices and games. Things like sifting sand between your fingers; plucking blades of grass and watching them soar with the West Texas breeze; chasing your best friend; somersaulting; getting a drink from the hallowed, all-important water bottle. You know, the important stuff.

It is in this youngest group, the under-6 league, that it is oftentimes difficult for a coach to keep his players' attention for much longer than 30 or 45 minutes. Practices usually last an hour, but by the time the session is over, the kids are usually more interested in goofing around than scoring goals in a practice-ending scrimmage.

There are several words that adequately describe soccer for 4, 5 and 6 year olds. Fun. Funny. Always entertaining. Never boring. Those are just for starters.

Ask any four year old why they like playing soccer and you're likely to get one of four — or all four — responses:

1. "Because."
2. "I don't know."
3. "It's fun."
4. "Because I like wearing my uniform."

Lining kids up at that age to try and instruct them in the basics of soccer is at times futile and requires nerves of steal and a level of patience most people don't have.

It's still early for these youngsters, and there's still plenty to learn in order to ensure winning seasons for many teams. But winning is not the top priority at this tender age. Having fun is.

And if a winning season doesn't happen, never fear, they'll still have their water bottles and uniforms. You know, the important stuff.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, MARCH 28, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Family members' actions and comments could affect not only your financial and business prospects but also your love life. Be cautious where new investments are concerned. Although good luck aids your efforts from now until late September, you still cannot afford to throw money away. Early in 1995, look for fresh outlets for your managerial talents. Your observant eyes catch errors that other people miss.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: country music star Reba McEntire, actor Ken Howard, basketball player Byron Scott, actress Dianne Wiest.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can choose a new life by turning your efforts in a different direction. Just be certain to sustain interest in your ideas until results are obtained. Ignore distractions while doing important work.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An old friend offers you an opportunity that deserves serious consideration. An encounter with a new acquaintance seems somewhat mysterious. You can expect to find out more in the very near future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may have to handle two distinctly different propositions simultaneously. A business partner insists you take on an assignment that will require all of your energy. Pace yourself to get everything done.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Postpone signing contracts or committing to new projects. You need more data. A new friend may urge you to invest in a business enterprise. Wait at least two days before deciding.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Not a good week to make major changes at home. You really cannot afford to go on a spending spree. Be careful not to give a newcomer the wrong impression. Show loyalty.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Good financial news starts the day off right. Give events time to develop, then let a friend advise you on how to evaluate new opportunities. Use a windfall to build a firm foundation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do not make promises you cannot honor or seek concessions that are out of line. A proposed plan suits you. Happily, you are free from group obligations.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A heady mixture of extravagance, unrealistic promises and friendly bungling could prove quite expensive. Cool your relationship with someone who acts self-centered.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An offer comes from an unexpected quarter. Accept an undesirable assignment if you want to protect your job. Better still, think about starting a business of your own. Your expertise is valuable.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A long-hidden problem related to your work or love life could be revealed. Be diplomatic when discussing someone's weaknesses. You will win new admirers! Put your credit cards out of easy reach.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Authority figures may not be willing to compromise. A wait-and-see approach will work best. Your ESP is right on target. Avoid power plays. On the domestic front, your voice will be heard!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Working solo will help you accomplish great things. Closeting yourself behind closed doors enables you to get a project off the launching pad quickly. Seek new allies.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KQ ♡J73 ◇9873 ♣AJ102
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Your hand looks no-trump oriented, but with only one stopper in the unbid suits you can hardly try that strain. Since your two-over-one reponse promised a second bid, the only one available to you is three hearts.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KJ10 ♡86 ◇Q2 ♣AK8532
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East

What action do you take?
A.—What can you do? The auction has soared into the stratosphere before you could make a rebid. Despite your six-card suit, you have a seven-loser hand—definitely a minimum. Pass and see what action partner wants to take.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ964 ♡K6 ◇72 ♣KJ54
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♡	3 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—With the lead coming through your king of hearts, chances for an 11-trick contract have dimmed. However, some of the value of the king of hearts can be recouped by bidding three no trump.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K10 ♡3 ◇A98632 ♣J982
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 NT	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—If you are sure partner has four clubs, the hand is too slam-oriented for a raise. To save a level of bidding and cater to the possibility that partner might have jump-shifted with a three-card suit on an unbalanced hand and is probing for the right spot, we would temporize with three diamonds to see what develops.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J872 ♡K4 ◇K83 ♣KJ65
The bidding has proceeded:

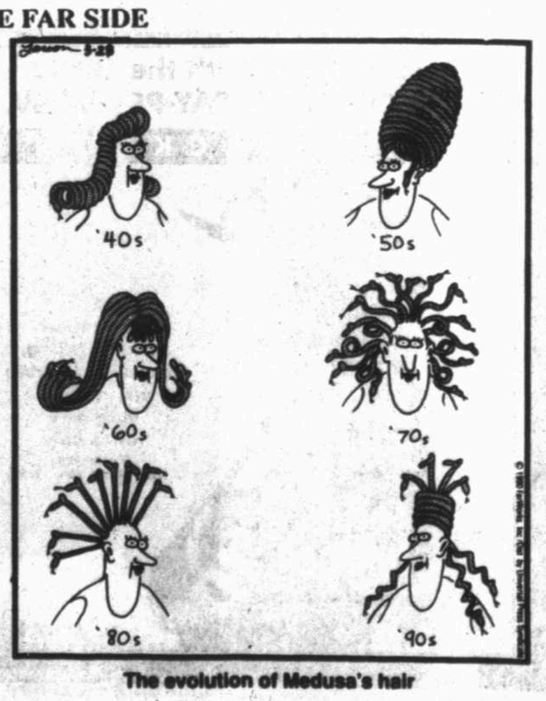

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Dbl	?

What action do you take?
A.—Your duty is to tell partner the hand belongs to you. The way to do that is to redouble. A jump to three clubs would be preemptive and to bid spades with that puny suit could get partner off to a costly lead should the opponents declare.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K6 ♡AQ1098 ◇A52 ♣K63
What is your opening bid?
A.—Obviously, the choices lie between one heart and one no trump. If you don't bid one no trump when holding a five-card major, your problem is solved—for the moment! We don't know what you intend rebidding should partner respond one spade. One no trump is a far more descriptive bid and less likely to get you into trouble.

NEW YORK — John McEnroe traded his tennis togs for tweeds in his latest venture — his own Soho art gallery.

Eventually, the tennis player wants to handle contemporary artists. For now, he's dealing only in previously sold art until he learns the business better.

After the breakup of his marriage with Tatum O'Neal and the terminal slowdown of his tennis career, McEnroe is eager to forge ahead, despite questions by some in the art community about his qualifications. He opened the by-appointment-only gallery two months ago.

"I'm sure people are asking questions," McEnroe said in Sunday's New York Times. "Let them. I love art. It's something I enjoy."

NEW YORK — Honesty is the best policy for Charlie Sheen when it comes to reports he was a customer of reputed Hollywood madam Heidi Fleiss.

Honesty is best policy for actor Charlie Sheen.

"I got a little nervous about it," he said of the reports that police found traveler's checks bearing his signature when Fleiss was arrested in June.

"But I'll tell you, when all the names finally do come out for real, and people realize I was the only bachelor among them ... that should take the onus off it," he told the New York Daily News in a story published Sunday.

LOS ANGELES — After his child-acting career was over, "The Paper" director Ron Howard considered becoming a journalist if his moviemaking ambitions didn't pan out.

Howard was co-editor of his high school newspaper in Burbank, he said in interview published Saturday in the Los Angeles Daily News.

"I loved it. I thought it was great," he said. "I thought, if I couldn't make the transition as an actor, or ... director, or if I couldn't get into a good film school, that it would be a pretty easy thing for me to drift into." "The Paper" covers a day at a fictional New York tabloid. It stars Michael Keaton, Glenn Close and Robert Duvall.

Carter and Michael Antonucci will tie the knot May 28 at an outdoor ceremony at the National Ornamental Metal Museum in Memphis, Tenn.

The couple, who announced their engagement last summer, met while attending Brown University. Antonucci, a history major at Brown, moved to Memphis with Carter, 26, while she attended the Memphis College of Art.

She graduated in 1992 and the two moved to Atlanta, where she worked at a bookstore. She then began work on a master's degree at Georgia State University.

No other details on the husband-to-be or wedding were released.

NEW YORK — Robert C. Woolley, Sotheby's senior auctioneer, conducts three or four dozen charity auctions a year. "I almost do as many for charity as I do for business," he said as he prepared the exhibition for tonight's fund-raising auction at Sotheby's, on York Avenue in Manhattan, for the Gay Men's Health Crisis.

So what could possibly make tonight's sale distinctive?

"I'm going to be selling Elton John's white concert grand Steinway piano," said Woolley, who also serves on the board of GMHC, an AIDS service organization. "I hope it brings in excess of $100,000. It costs $80,000 to buy it new. At $100,000 it's not expensive, it's just a lot of money."

NEW YORK — "I'm furiously rereading 'Middlemarch,' " Peggy Noonan, the former Bush and Reagan speechwriter, said the other day. "Have you noticed that everyone REREADS these days? No one ever says I'm reading Trollope. They're always REREADING Trollope."

Ms. Noonan says she did read George Eliot's "Middlemarch" in college. She's reading it again as a favor, in part, to Harold M. Evans, the president of Random House, which has just published its new Modern Library edition of "Middlemarch" and will publish Ms. Noonan's new book, "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness," in May.

Evans has invited Ms. Noonan — along with Brooke Astor, Erica Jong, Susan Cheever, Gail Sheehy and Sister Souljah — to discuss "Middlemarch" and attend a screening of a BBC adaptation of the novel, at the Museum of Broadcasting in New York, on April 4.

Ever the conservative, Ms. Noonan said she relishes the opportunity to promote traditional artistic values. "It's a good thing to help honor a great work in the western literary canon," she said.
