Kurds block soldiers

HABUR BORDER POINT, Iraq — Thousands of Kurds fearing reprisals by Iraqi forces temporarily blocked withdrawing allied troops Saturday, but the commander of Western forces said the pullout will continue as planned.

About 4,000 Kurds, some carrying banners, stormed razor-wire barriers on a bridge linking Iraq and Turkey. A few scuffles broke out during the protest, which disrupted the allied withdrawal for three hours. No one was injured.

The withdrawal from northern Iraq, ending a nearly three-month allied presence, was under way as U.N. teams stepped up the search for Iraqi nuclear materials.

U.S. officials have said Iraq could face military strikes if it fails to disclose the full extent of its nuclear program, as required by cease-fire accords. A Western diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Saturday the five permanent U.N. Security Council members demanded that Iraq fully disclose its Iraq's nuclear facilities by July 25.

Britain's ambassador, Sir David Hannay, said, "We don't issue ultimatums, but we did have some questions."

Kurds, who staged a failed uprising against Baghdad in March, are worried about Iraqi attacks despite a tentative accord with Saddam Hussein on Kurdish autonomy. Talks between Saddam and a Kurdish leader resumed Saturday.

Nearly 2 million Kurds fled to the Turkish and Iranian borders after Saddam's forces crushed the rebellion, which followed the Persian Gulf War.

Some of the protesting Kurds on the Turkish border carried banners saying, "Thank you, but the job is only half done." Allied leaders have announced that all troops will be out of Iraq by Monday.

Summit symbol of world's changes

■ Whereas past summits addressed Soviet strengths, this one will address weaknesses, says a former official.

By Matthew C. Quinn
Hearst News Service

LONDON — Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's historic visit to the economic summit in London this week to ask help for his nation's crumbling economy is dramatic evidence of the new era in world affairs.

The 17th annual meeting of the leaders of the world's seven largest industrialized democracies is expected to be dominated by the unprecedented appearance by a non-member at what one analyst calls "the world's premier power session."

The leaders of the United States, Britain, Japan, Germany, France, Canada and Italy will meet together Monday and Tuesday before inviting Gorbachev to join them for six hours of talks Wednesday. Gorbachev is expected to outline his plans for moving the Soviet Union to a free-market economy and to seek Western assistance.

Robert Hormats, a former assistant secretary of state who helped plan a number of economic summits, said Gorbachev's appearance will be rife with symbolism.

Previous summits "have had to cope with Soviet strength," said Hormats, citing condemnations of the 1979 Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and Poland's 1981 martial law crackdown. "This one will address the implications of Soviet weakness," he added.

"The fact that this summit is taking place and Gorbachev has been invited is almost a metaphor or a micro-

Skies should clear over Midland area

Staff Report

The Permian Basin should begin to dry out after three days of intermittent heavy rainstorms, the National Weather Service in Midland said.

Thunderstorms pounded the area Friday and Saturday, turning streets into raging urban rivers, making driving difficult and causing many stalled vehicles as drivers attempted to navigate flooded thoroughfares.

No weather-related injury accidents were reported by local police.

NWS reported that almost 2 inches of precipitation had fallen by Saturday evening, since the storms began Thursday.

Smith: Midland may remain in 21st District

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Midland was nearly lumped into the same congressional district as Odessa and Lubbock, but state legislation may prevent that, U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith said Saturday.

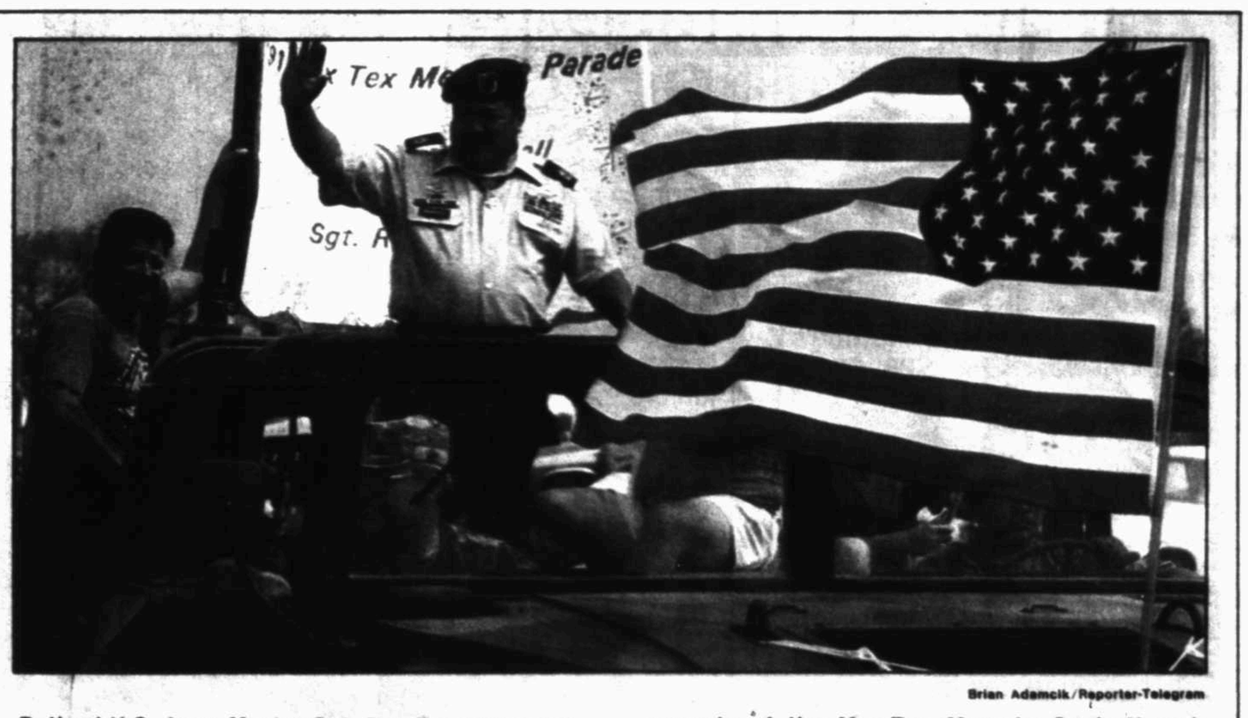

Smith

Smith, R-San Antonio, made the announcement before more than 200 people attending a barbecue supper at the H & H Stable Club, 5401 Polo Club Drive.

He said legislative sources have told him that a Texas House bill that would keep Midland in the 21st Congressional District is expected to be announced Monday. The bill will be introduced by Rep. Donald

Medal-of-Honor winner thinks it's important to serve as role model

■ Vietnam veteran Roy Benavidez leads Mex-Tex Menudo Cookoff and Family Festival parade.

By Allen E. Howland
Assistant City Editor

Growing up as an orphan shining shoes and selling newspapers in El Campo, Roy P. Benavidez would have seemed an unlikely candidate to one day lead a parade through the streets of Midland.

But six harrowing hours in a Cambodian jungle clearing in 1968 transformed the South Texas soldier into the last Medal of Honor recipient of the Vietnam War.

Since surviving the 28 wounds he suffered that day, Green Beret Master Sgt. Roy Benavidez has devoted his life to speaking to youngsters, telling them of the importance of a high school diploma and the value of hard-won freedom.

"I believe God spared my life for a reason and I promised my buddies I would tell the stories of those who sacrificed their tomorrows for others' todays," Benavidez said Saturday afternoon, relaxing in the Midland County Exhibit Building at the Mex-Tex Menudo Cookoff and Family Festival.

Benavidez accepts invitations like the one from the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce to lead their fourth annual parade as a platform for his pro-education, anti-drug message and to maintain visibility for Vietnam-era veterans.

"I think it's important to serve as a role model to today's youth, who are the leaders of tomorrow. They need to know how we all served proudly, stuck together and have shown our patriotic colors," he said, with only the slightest slur, betraying the broken jaw he received from

Turnpike birth

JUPITER, Fla. — Florida Turnpike worker Mary Davis said a man in a van drove up to the toll-booth on Thursday and told her he had a pregnant woman in the back. While another toll worker called for paramedics, Davis and co-worker Rhonda Dietrich helped Tatana Sterling of Tampa from the van and timed her contractions. By the time paramedics arrived, contractions were less than two minutes apart, said Davis. Ms. Sterling leaned against a wall "and the baby popped out," said Davis. A paramedic caught the child. Mother and child — a 5-pound, 10-ounce girl — were in good condition.

Sister says kidnap suspect 'needs help'

The State

ARLINGTON (AP) — The family of the woman charged with kidnapping a newborn from a Fort Worth hospital say they don't want her released from jail until she receives psychological treatment.

Sandra May Engle, 33, was ordered held on $20,000 bail after her arrest Wednesday night. Police said she went to John Peter Smith Hospital in Fort Worth earlier that day and posed as a hospital photographer to trick Tammy Hagerman into handing over her 2-day-old baby.

Mrs. Engle had told her husband and other family members that she was pregnant. After abducting the infant, she called her husband to say she had delivered their baby, police said.

That was impossible, family members said, because Mrs. Engle had undergone a hysterectomy five years ago. Several times since, she had said she was pregnant and had even convinced others that she was still capable of having a child.

"She has said she was pregnant before, but then she always had a miscarriage or something," said her sister, Judy Dayton. "But this time she was so convincing, even I believed she was going to have a child despite the fact that I knew it wasn't possible ...

"I knew she would have to come up with something to explain this whole pregnancy thing," Mrs. Dayton said. "But we never dreamed she would do anything like this."

The infant, Felicia Nicole Hagerman, was returned unharmed to her 19-year-old mother 10 hours after the abduction.

Mrs. Engle was arrested by FBI agents Wednesday night at her North Arlington apartment, and was ordered held at the Tarrant County jail Thursday on a kidnapping charge. Her bail has been set at $20,000.

"Even if we had the money to bail her out, we probably wouldn't," Mrs. Dayton said. "We wouldn't because she needs help. And if she gets out, she will run away or kill herself because she doesn't know how to face this."

Mrs. Engle's husband, Tom, said he believes the death of the couples' 2½-year-old grandson to cerebral palsy in February influenced his wife's actions.

The Engles had custody of the boy and another grandchild at the time of his death.

Jury finds woman guilty of shooting husband to death

Kimberly Madelyn Ray, 24, was found guilty Friday of shooting and killing Luther "Bud" Lee Ray, who suffered gunshot wounds to his forehead and upper left leg and was found dead in the couple's home.

In Judge Bill Coats' 7th District courtroom, Mrs. Ray testified Thursday that the shooting occurred when an ongoing argument between the two turned into a physical struggle.

Ray, 32, died in the early morning hours of April 23, 1990.

Jurors are to begin hearing testimony in the punishment phase of the trial at 9 a.m. Monday. Possible punishment ranges from two years probation to life in prison, said assistant district attorney Rod Boyles.

In closing arguments Friday, Boyles told jurors Mrs. Ray intended to shoot and kill her husband, not out of fear for her life, but because Ray threatened to take away her children.

The couple had a 5-month-old son and Mrs. Ray has a 9-year-old daughter from a previous relationship.

Mrs. Ray said her husband had a volatile temper and hit her during arguments. She had testified that she shot him because she feared for her life and her children's safety.

Bureau warns about envelope-stuffing scam

WESLACO (AP) — Companies that offer financial success through envelope-stuffing offers have bilked Rio Grande Valley residents of hundreds of thousands of dollars, the South Texas Better Business Bureau warns.

"It's a million-dollar a year scam. They prey on people who have credit problems or middle income families, promising them huge profits usually for easy-at home work," said Harold Palmer, president of the South Texas BBB in Weslaco.

Palmer says he knows of at least six "envelope stuffing operations" in the Valley that have "hinged on the edge of chain letter scams" for years.

People who inquire about the offers after seeing them in newspapers are told to send between $10 and $20 to a post office box for directions on how to start up their own business stuffing envelopes, Palmer said.

The directions show them how to make money by obtaining a post office box, taking out ads and recruiting others to get into the envelope-stuffing business.

People usually spend several hundred dollars to obtain a kit before stuffing a single envelope, Palmer said.

"It's the same vicious cycle. We've been fighting this for years claiming that its nothing but a chain letter and pyramid scheme that keeps building up."

Retirees, growing families, and individuals seeking extra income frequently fall victim to the false or misleading offers printed in newspaper or tabloid advertisements, he added.

"We're looking at about hundreds of thousands of dollars that have been lost in the Valley by people who have fallen for this," Palmer said.

The U.S. Attorney's office in Brownsville filed a lawsuit Thursday against one envelope-stuffing company.

U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela issued a temporary restraining order against the company, blocking it from conducting any business while the Postal Service investigates whether it obtained money through the mail by false representations.

Postal inspectors have probable cause to believe that the company is using the postal system to "enrich himself" through the envelope-stuffing offer, Assistant U.S. Attorney Nancy Abell said.

"We're asking a judge to let us hold on to the mail that's coming in to (the company) until this is settled," she said.

RAIN: Basin should dry out

tem, which was part of a recent tropical depression in the Gulf of Mexico that moved inland over Mexico, brought the rain, NWS said. The system was coupled with a high amount of low-level moisture in the area.

Today is expected to be mostly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms and a high in the mid-80s with 10 to 20 mph southeast winds, NWS said.

Tonight will continue mostly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of rain and a low in the mid-60s, NWS said. Monday will be partly cloudy with a high in the upper 80s.

The record high of 107 for Saturday's date was set in 1933, while the record low for today's date was 50 in 1936. Saturday's high was 79, with a low of 68.

STATE

Skies were partly cloudy over most of Texas on Saturday. Showers and thunderstorms continued in the western part of the state, including the Panhandle.

Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms developed out of Mexico across the Big Bend, Winter Garden and Edwards Plateau and Hill Country. Isolated thunderstorms dampend Southeast Texas.

Forecasters expected today would be partly cloudy with thunderstorms in the west spreading eastward Monday. Locally heavy rain possible tonight in Far West Texas. Highs temperatures in the 90s were expected with lows in the 70s.

NATION

As much as a foot of rain drenched parts of the East Coast on Saturuay, and severe thunderstorms spawned two tornadoes in Florida.

A twister touched down at Port Manatee, Fla., on the southern edge of Tampa Bay, damaging the roofs of several buildings, the National Weather Service said.

Another tornado touched down near the Port Orange Bridge, south of Daytona Beach, breaking windows and downing power lines. No injuries were reported in either tornado.

Showers and thunderstorms were forming at mid-afternoon along a warm front curving through southeast Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey.

A cold front crossing the Northwest dropped rain across Washington state and northern Idaho into western Montana.

Thunderstorms over central Florida shortly after daybreak produced more than two inches of rain at Orlando in one hour.

The Associated Press also contributed to this report.

the butt of a North Vietnamese rifle in hand-to-hand combat.

Benavidez is proud that the 224-page story of his ordeal, "The Last Medal of Honor" was written by Pete Billac without using obscenity or vulgarity, making it suitable reading for the youngsters he most wants to get his message of "faith, determination and a positive attitude."

The war hero, who had to wait 13 years before receiving his honor, was reluctant to include diagrams outlining his 57 scars and injuries, for fear of appearing to exploit his injuries in order to sell books. But his friend Billac convinced him that readers "have to see the wounds to understand the story."

Billac's company, Swan Publishing, is the sole distributor of the $12 book and can be reached at (800) 933-3939. Proceeds from the book go to benefit homeless Vietnam veterans and toward construction of a women's memorial.

The MHCC festival wraps up today at the exhibit building, with continuous entertainment from noon until 9 p.m.; menudo judging from 2-4 p.m.; a traditional Mexican charreada rodeo at 3 p.m.; and the finals of the Nina Hispana Beauty Pageant at 4 p.m.

Modern-day Santa Maria sets sail

■ Japanese millionaire wants to fulfill Columbus' dream of sailing from Spain to Japan.

Associated Press

BARCELONA, Spain — With a thrill-seeking Japanese millionaire at the helm, a replica of Christopher Columbus' ship the Santa Maria set sail Saturday on an Asian journey Columbus dreamed of five centuries ago.

The new Santa Maria is scheduled to spend nine months on the 17,000-mile voyage from Barcelona to Japan, a goal of Columbus and other 15th century European explorers seeking a new trade route to the Far East.

The trip is one of many events planned to commemorate the 500th anniversary of Columbus' first journey to the Western Hemisphere in 1492 aboard the Santa Maria, the largest of the explorer's three ships.

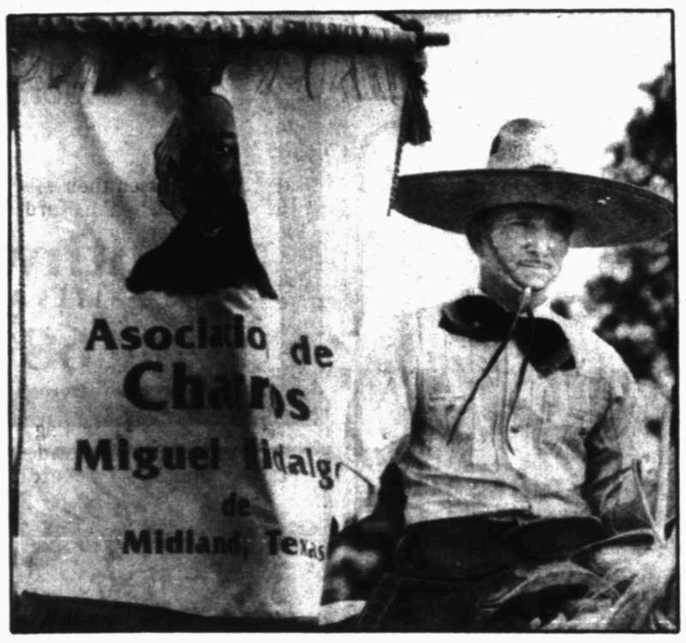

Funded by Japanese film mogul Haruki Kadokawa, the Santa Maria project took three years to complete at a cost of $3.14 million. The vessel is scheduled to sail through the Panama Canal and dock in Mexico, Honolulu and Guam before reaching Kobe, Japan, in April 1992.

"If I am to have a place in the future, it may be as a man of achievement. If we complete this voyage, and the 21st century is peaceful, I will be very pleased," said Kadokawa, whose epic 1980s film "Heaven and Earth" cost $40 million.

The Santa Maria carries a 21-member Japanese crew and was designed in the style of the origi-

Prince rides around track

SILVERSTONE, England (AP) — Prince William, 9, eldest son of Prince Charles and Princess Diana, tried a racing car for size on Saturday.

The boy, wide-eyed with excitement, was allowed to sit in a Formula 1 Benetton Ford during a tour of the Silverstone track and pits with former world champion Jackie Stewart.

Stewart, a friend of the royal family, then used his own car to drive the prince on a tour of the inside of the track, stopping at various points for a closer look.

Cars roared around them in final practise for today's Grand Prix on the circuit, 60 miles northwest of London.

The prince saw British ace Nigel Mansell hitting 190 mph to claim pole position for the race.

The prince wore protective ear plugs as he watched Mansell and championship leader Ayrton Senna blast down Hangar Straight, with sparks streaming from the underside of their cars.

William's 6-year-old brother, Prince Harry, watched his father play polo at Cirencester Park near their Highgrove House mansion in western England.

21st: Smith optimistic about district legislation

(From 1A)

Uher, D-Bay City, Smith said.

"I'm delighted with this turn of events," he said.

Other proposed legislation would have placed Midland in a congressional district with Odessa and Lubbock, where either Larry Combest, R-Lubbock, or Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, would have been the incumbent representing Midland, Smith said.

He said keeping Midland would be more important than any of his other cities.

"I honestly have more friends per capita in Midland than any other town in the 21st Congressional District," Smith said.

Rick Davis, Midland County Republican Party chairman, said a congressman representing Midland, Odessa and Lubbock would have to weigh competing interests.

"He would not have to be torn between three cities," Davis said. "Those cities are all of comparable size and would be competing for the same federal progams and federal dollars."

In addition, Midland would lose a good congressional friend, he said.

"We have a long relationship with Lamar," Davis said. "I think everybody in Midland ought to be excited about the new legislation."

But Midland County Judge Charles "Bro" Seltzer, a Republican, expressed cautious optimism over the new bill.

"I'm really glad to here about the proposed redistricting plan, but I'll believe it when I see it," Seltzer said. "It's certainly what we need to have."

In his brief speech to the crowd, Smith also voiced his support of President Bush's efforts to push a crime-fighting package through Congress. He blamed Democratic interference for holding back the much-needed legislation.

"This is a bona fide, substantive crime bill," Smith said. "It's a good crime package."

SUMMIT: Gorbachev to meet with G-7 leaders

cosm for the sorts of changes that have taken place in world," he said.

Although Gorbachev will not appear until after the official conclusion of the annual conclave, his impending appearance may mean that such pressing economic issues as world trade will get short-shrift from the seven nations attending the economic summit.

Said a senior U.S. summit planner: "The question of the Soviet Union is going to dominate a lot of the time. It will have a tendency to drive some of the more traditional issues into the background."

Barry Bosworth, an economist with the Brookings Institution and a former official in the Carter administration, told reporters last week: "Basically, the summit, until Gorbachev shows up, is likely to be a social occasion."

Although the economic alliance faces what many analysts fear will be dire consequences if world trade talks fail to progress, the pre-summit politicking has been consumed with what to do about Gorbachev.

The Bush administration has made it clear that Gorbachev should not expect, as Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady said, a "pot of gold" from his attendance.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III said: "All of us recognize that you cannot build a market economy by throwing money at a disintegrating command economy. But you can help a market economy develop by establishing the political and legal conditions necessary for markets to flourish and attract private capital."

Gorbachev is expected to receive pledges of technical assistance to help the Soviet economy make what economists believe will be a wrenching transition to capitalism. Associate membership in the International Monetary Fund and World Bank, the two largest international lending institutions, will also be offered.

But membership in the world's most exclusive club, known as the Group of Seven or G-7, is not in prospect. "The G-7 is the G-7," said Brady. "It's not the G-8 or the G-29."

The main dividend for Gorbachev will be the chance to boost his battered political position at home.

"His motives are political," said Michael Mandelbaum, an expert on the Soviet Union at the Council of Foreign Relations. "He believes he can strengthen himself on all fronts as the man who can deliver the West to the Soviet Union," said Mandelbaum. "He is going to ask, in one way or another, for a commitment from the West."

Bush, Baker, British Prime Minister John Major and other summit leaders have taken great pains in recent days to signal Gorbachev not to make unrealistic demands in London that could leave him embarrassed.

But there was an element of surprise surrounding Gorbachev's visit, with conflicting signals emerging from Moscow in recent days as to whether the Soviet leader would unveil a detailed economic plan.

After Bush and other summit leaders received a 23-page letter from Gorbachev Thursday offering an advance preview of his presentation, they launched a flurry of last-minute consultations about how to react.

SHIP: Trip to commemorate 500th anniversary of voyage

(From 4A)

nal 100-ton vessel, the Mariagalante. The other vessels, the Nina and the Pinta, were 60-ton caravels.

The 15th century Portuguese king, Joao II, called Columbus "a man of caprices and daydreams of Japan." Only Queen Isabella of Spain agreed to back his project.

The original Santa Maria, described by Columbus as "not suitable for sailing for discovery," carried him to San Salvador Island in the present-day Bahamas. But it was wrecked on Hispianola Island, now shared by Haiti and the Dominican Republic, on Christmas Day 1492.

Columbus returned to Europe on the Nina and made three more Atlantic crossings, the last in 1504.

The modern-day Santa Maria left Barcelona following a two-hour Shinto ceremony, presided over by Kadokawa, head of one of Japan's largest Shinto shrines.

"Shogun" author James Clavell, International Olympic Committee vice-president Richard Pound and Kobe Mayor Kazutoshi Sasayama were guests.

"This project will recall the dream of Columbus," said Angel Serrano Estellez, head of Spain's state-run 5th Centenary Commission that is organizing events to mark the 1492 voyage.

IRAQ: Kurds protest allied troop pullout

mander of the allied forces in the security zone, told the Kurds that Iraqi military forces would not be allowed into the 3,600-square-mile zone carved out by allies beginning April 18.

"We have told (Saddam) not to come back in here," he said. "And he won't come back here. If he comes he knows that we will come back."

Garner and several other officers trampled over a razor-wire barricade holding back the Kurds and strode through the crowd. Garner was carried shoulder high by Kurds before they dispersed.

Garner told reporters the Kurdish protests would not hold up the timetable for the allied withdrawal.

Fadhail Merani, a top official of the Kurdistan Democratic Party, accompanied Garner and argued with some in the protesters.

"Shame on you," he said. "These people came here to help us. They suffered for us, and look at the way you treat them."

Customs officials said about 100 allied military vehicles left Iraq on Saturday before the protest.

It was not immediately known how many troops left Saturday. On Friday, 3,326 coalition soldiers remained in Iraq, including 1,506 Americans.

Garner said the Military Coordination Council, currently holding daily meetings between allied and Iraqi army officers, will remain in the Iraqi border town of Zakho.

Garner and other members of the allied force will remain near the Turkish border town of Silopi.

"We will put a pretty good force in Silopi," Garner said.

The Pentagon announced Friday that a force of 2,500 to 3,000 allied troops will be based in Turkey in the aim of preventing any Iraqi government violence against the Kurds. But the exact location of the force and which countries will join the United States, Britain, Italy and France have not been finalized.

Kurdish leaders had pleaded with the allies to remain in the security zone while talks were held between Kurds and Iraqis on an autonomous region for Iraq's 3.5 million Kurds.

But the allies stressed their mission was to repatriate the Kurds who fled to refugee camps.

Talks between the Kurds and the Iraqis have been going on since early April, stumbling on Kurdish demands for more territory and Iraqi conditions linking the Kurds to the ruling Baath Party.

Saddam met Saturday in Baghdad with Masoud Barzani, leader of the Democratic Party of Kurdistan.

Budget woes strangle states

Associated Press

Neither side gave ground in Maine's budget battle Saturday and Gov. John R. McKernan was ready to keep 10,000 state employees off the job for a third week unless a compromise is reached.

The House failed again to approve a two-year budget. The Democratic majority pushing for passage of a budget was unable to obtain enough Republican votes and failed 91-37, 10 votes short of the number required.

The Senate met but didn't take a final vote on the budget.

Maine shut down state government Thursday for the second time in 11 days because the Legislature's Republican minority refuses to vote for a new budget until it gets concessions on a workers' compensation overhaul package.

McKernan urged his legislative allies to keep insisting on workers' compensation changes, aimed at cutting business costs, before they approve a new spending plan.

Budget impasses also continued in Illinois, Pennsylvania and Connecticut. Lawmakers in North Carolina approved a budget. Most states' fiscal years began July 1.

After the Maine Legislature recessed Saturday, McKernan's budget chief, Sawin Millett, said the governor was prepared to allow the shutdown to continue. About 3,000 workers are staffing essential services.

A scheduled legislative session Sunday night "opens the door to the prospect of government reopening on Monday, but it would require resolution of both budget and workers' compensation," Millett said.

In Illinois, legislative leaders and Gov. Jim Edgar inched closer to a compromise Saturday in a 13-day budget impasse, but major hurdles remained in closing a $1.9 billion budget gap. Negotiations narrowed the gap to under $100 million, but Edgar said he was still insisting the budget be balanced.

Next week will be the third without a budget in Pennsylvania. Paychecks due 53,000 of the state's 107,000 employees Friday will not be issued. The impasse will halt payments to transit agencies and county programs for child welfare and mental health and mental retardation services.

In Connecticut, Democratic House Speaker Richard J. Balducci said he could support a new income tax plan taking shape among Senate Democrats, but he can't predict how it will be received by other Democrats in the House when the Legislature meets Monday.

Gov. Lowell Weicker, an independent, wants an income tax enacted. He has vetoed two budgets that didn't include one. State government shut down for several days, but workers went back to work temporarily while negotiations continued.

North Carolina's Legislature approved a $7.7 billion budget that includes record cuts and tax increases. The budget, which takes effect immediately, includes a penny increase in the sales tax and a three-cent increase in the tax on cigarettes.

In California, a Democrat-backed plan to overhaul workers' compensation laws has emerged, but Republican Gov. Pete Wilson promised to veto the measure if it reaches his desk.

Pair told 35-year marriage illegal

EVANSTON, Wyo. (AP) — After 35 years of marriage, children and laughing at each other's jokes, James and Joan Bunker thought they had run out of surprises.

Then they got the surprise of their lives. They were not legally married.

"You should have seen his face," Mrs. Bunker said.

When the couple wed on July 14, 1956, the 14-year-old bride told the parson she was 16 — old enough to marry under Wyoming law.

For 35 years, the Bunkers hadn't given it a second thought.

Then they heard that a woman who had been in a car accident with her husband was denied insurance benefits because she had lied about her age in order to marry.

The Bunkers started calling authorities to find out if their marriage was illegal and found out it was.

Mrs. Bunker said the Social Security Administration told them "if Jimmy were to precede me in death, they would prefer to see the second certificate from a marriage official."

So on their 35th wedding anniversary Sunday, the two have vowed to do it again, only better.

The first time, the wedding was a small affair, with their parents the only guests. This time, there will be five bridesmaids, two flower girls, two ring bearers, a matron of honor, a best man and a big reception.

Thomas denies anti-Semitism

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas says he is not an anti-Semite, but the American Jewish Congress wants more proof after learning that two Thomas speeches cited his longtime admiration of black separatist Louis Farrakhan.

"I cannot leave standing any suggestion that I am anti-Semitic," the black federal judge said Friday. "I am, and have always been, unalterably and adamantly opposed to anti-Semitism and bigotry of any kind, including by Louis Farrakhan."

The Dallas Times Herald reported Friday that it had obtained texts of two 1983 speeches in which Thomas, who then chaired the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, described Farrakhan as "a man I have admired for more than a decade."

Farrakhan did not obtain national notoriety until a mid-1984 speech in which he called the Jewish faith a "dirty religion," and described Adolf Hitler as "wickedly great."

Henry Siegman, executive director of the American Jewish Congress, called for a thorough investigation by the Senate and the White House to determine whether Thomas "has allied himself with one of the nation's most notorious anti-Semites."

"If, in fact, Judge Thomas has expressed admiration for Rev. Farrakhan, we believe that he has disqualified himself from service on the Supreme Court," Siegman said.

Thomas, in a statement released through the office of Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., said, "I repudiate the anti-Semitism of Louis Farrakhan or anyone else. While I support the concept of economic self-help, I have never supported or tolerated bigotry of any kind."

Danforth, who is helping guide Thomas' nomination through the Senate, said Friday the 1983 comments about Farrakhan were written by an EEOC speechwriter and may not have been delivered by Thomas.

Arthur Kropp of the liberal People for the American Way said he did not think Thomas' remarks about Farrakhan would be "much of a factor" in the Senate confirmation process "because I doubt they had any of the anti-Semitic connections."

Kropp noted that Thomas' emphasis on black self-help long had been shared by the Nation of Islam, the religious sect to which Farrakhan is connected.

But William Taylor, a Washington civil rights lawyer, said Thomas' comments on Farrakhan are relevant. "I don't know whether the difference in dates is the critical factor," he said. "Farrakhan was on record as being strenuously anti-Semitic long before that 1984 speech in Jesse Jackson's campaign."

Pulliam remembered for inspiring journalists

FRANKLIN, Ind. (AP) — Martha Ott Pulliam, grandmother of Vice President Dan Quayle, was remembered Saturday as an inspirational matriarch tc two generations of Indiana journalists.

Quayle, his wife, Marilyn, and their three children attended the funeral service in the chapel at the United Methodist Home, where Mrs. Pulliam lived since 1974.

She died Thursday at 100.

"In the days when a woman's place was 'quote, in the home, unquote,' she was blazing a career as a newspaper publisher," said W.T. Murphy, executive director of the retirement home.

Mrs. Pulliam was publisher of The (Lebanon) Reporter from the early 1940s until last December.

In 1919, she married Eugene C. Pulliam, founder of Central Newspapers Inc. and publisher of newspapers in Indianapolis, Muncie and Vincennes, Ind., and in Phoenix, Ariz. The couple, whose daughters included Quayle's mother, Corinne, divorced in 1940.

Mrs. Pulliam was the stepmother of Eugene S. Pulliam, publisher of The Indianapolis Star and The Indianapolis News.

Survivors include her two daughters, 10 grandchildren and 23 great-grandchildren.

ATTENTION NINTENDO CONSOLE OWNERS

Did you buy a Nintendo® Entertainment System game console (NES Console) between June 1, 1988 and December 31, 1990? IF SO, YOU ARE ENTITLED TO A $5 COUPON.

Texas Attorney General, Dan Morales, the Corporation Counsel of the District of Columbia, and the Attorneys General of 49 other States brought lawsuits against Nintendo of America Inc., claiming that in some instances consumers were overcharged for the NES console at retail stores. Under a proposed voluntary settlement in these cases, you are entitled to a $5 coupon redeemable at any retailer on any NES 8-bit game marketed either by Nintendo of America Inc. or a Nintendo licensee company that can be played on your NES 8-bit video game console.

This is your legal notice of the settlement. Please read it carefully.

You will automatically receive a $5 coupon if, between June 1, 1988 and December 31, 1990, you mailed in your warranty card, subscribed to Nintendo Power magazine or your name was otherwise entered on the Nintendo consumer list.

If you are not on the list to automatically receive a coupon, you must request a coupon and show that you bought a NES console between June 1, 1988 and December 31, 1990. To request a coupon or verify your eligibility, you must do either of the following by September 19, 1991.

1. CALL TOLL FREE 1-800-255-3788, from 4:00 a.m. - midnight, Pacific time, Mon. thru Sat.; or Sunday, 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m., Pacific time. Be ready to tell the operator your name and address, the approximate date you bought your game console, where you bought it & the serial number (located on the bottom of the control deck),

2. Write in, giving your name, address, approximately when you bought your game console, where you bought it & the serial number. Send your information to:

Nintendo Settlement Fund,
P.O. Box 97063, Redmond, WA 98073-9763

THE SETTLEMENT

These cases were brought by the Attorneys General of 50 States and the District of Columbia after an investigation into whether Nintendo and unnamed dealers agreed to sell NES consoles at or above certain minimum prices in violation of the antitrust laws.

No trial has been held on the merits of these allegations and Nintendo denies them. After extensive negotiations, the parties to the lawsuits agreed to a proposed settlement agreement to avoid long and costly litigation. The States have concluded that the settlement gives significant relief to buyers of Nintendo products during the period of the alleged conspiracy (March 1, 1987 - December 31, 1990). Nintendo has agreed to settle but without admitting wrongdoing or liability. The proposed settlement must be finally approved by the Court, which has preliminarily approved the settlement. This notice does not express any opinion of the Court as to the merits of the claims or defenses asserted by either side in the lawsuits.

In summary, the terms of the settlement are as follows:

Nintendo will mail up to $25 million in coupons to consumers who bought NES consoles between June 1, 1988 and December 31, 1990.

If fewer than $5 million in coupons are redeemed by consumers, Nintendo will pay the difference up to $5 million to the States to use for antitrust enforcement, a public purpose to benefit consumers, or to deposit in the state treasury. In addition, Nintendo will pay the States $3 million for these purposes.

Nintendo will also agree to an injunction prohibiting future violations of the antitrust laws and will notify its dealers that they are free to price Nintendo products independently at whatever level they choose.

The Attorneys General will release Nintendo from any further liability resulting from the alleged agreements between Nintendo and dealers, between March 1, 1987 and December 31, 1990, regarding the price at which any Nintendo products would be sold.

The legal rights of all buyers of Nintendo products between March 1, 1987 & December 31, 1990; including game consoles, game cartridges, accessories or related items; will be affected by this settlement. If you bought any of these products within this period and you do not want to be bound by the settlement, you must expressly exclude yourself. To opt out of this settlement or for more information, write to Nintendo Settlement Trustee, 1525 Wilson Blvd., Suite 1225, Arlington, VA 22209.

New attitude pushes police toward violence

Associated Press

The streets are growing meaner on both sides of the law.

While reports of police attacks on citizen have grown, so have the number and severity of assaults on officers.

But some police officers — and the people who study them — say police brutality in Los Angeles and other cities happens because officers lack the training, counseling, and, most importantly, the leadership needed to fight violence within their own ranks.

"There's no question that it's a lot tougher to be a police officer. It's a terrible, terrible job," said Jim Fyfe, a justice professor at American University in Washington, D.C. "We've put them in a no-win war and people in a no-win war commit atrocities."

The debate about police violence comes after years of increasing assaults on officers. The FBI received 71,794 reports of attacks on officers nationwide in 1990, up from 64,251 in 1986.

In 1986, 22 percent of the officers attacked were injured; last year, 36 percent were hurt.

Fyfe, a New York City policeman for 16 years, said the incidents are often used by police administrators to reinforce a dangerous "them-against-us" attitude among officers.

"Historically we have told them they are a thin blue line," he said. "In Los Angeles, there has been the philosophy that the police are this small noble army surrounded by a hostile tribe."

A special commission looking into the beating of a black motorist by Los Angeles police blamed incidents of excessive force by police on a "siege mentality that alienates patrol officers from the community."

The commission's report, issued last week, said superiors ignored warning signs, such as racial slurs in radio communications. Such incidents showed a "significant breakdown in the department's management responsibility," the commission said.

Although some argued that administrators cannot be responsible for the actions of a few rogue cops, those who study police violence say consistent acts of excessive force result from the tone set by the department.

"When other people around them close their eyes to what they are doing, it makes it easier for them to get away with this stuff," said Hans Toch, a criminal justice professor at the State University of New York's Albany campus.

Toch, who has studied police brutality, said violence springs up more in departments that focus on arrest numbers.

"Officers are held in high esteem for bringing in people, with or without broken bones," he said. "When you add the silence and support they get from their peers for using excessive force, you get a combined package that is Los Angeles or a city like it."

One remedy to problems like these is training. "It translates policy into action," said Fyfe.

Many departments, strapped by budget cuts, can't afford the cost.

Movie opening sparks violence

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The debut of the inner-city drama "Boyz N the Hood" triggered largely gang-related gunfire that left one moviegoer dead and at least 23 wounded across the nation.

Several theater owners on Saturday promptly pulled the critically praised Columbia Pictures movie from their screens.

The film's 23-year-old writer-director, John Singleton, was said to be enormously concerned that a movie that encouraged peace had been linked to so much bloodshed and called a news conference to vent his feelings.

The violence, similar to that surrounding the March premiere of the drama "New Jack City," could have a profound impact on the future of black-oriented films, just at a time when a new generation of black directors, like Singleton, are becoming prominent.

"Who will show these movies anymore?" said an executive at Columbia Pictures, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Released by Columbia in about 800 theaters nationwide, "Boyz N the Hood" is set in the gang-plagued neighborhoods of south-central Los Angeles. It stars Cuba Gooding Jr. as a young man trying to avoid the traps of crime and make something of himself.

While the film features some gang violence, its message is pacifistic. The film's final frames carry the plea: "Increase the Peace."

In the Chicago suburb of Riverdale, Ill., a man was fatally shot early Saturday after a midnight showing at a drive-in.

Michael Booth, 23, of Chicago was pronounced dead at a hospital after being shot at the Halsted Twin Outdoor Theater. Police said they had made no arrests.

Five people were wounded in or near an 18-theater complex in Universal City, just north of Hollywood. The Cineplex Odeon complex canceled future showings of the film.

The scene at Universal City was pandemonium after gunfire broke out seconds after the lights dimmed at the "Boyz N the Hood" screening.

All movies at the complex were shut down after the shootings. The theater later canceled all showings of "Boyz N the Hood," said Los Angeles County sheriff's Sgt. Larry Lincoln.

Centenarian invites town to party

BELLE, W.Va. (AP) — John Smithers is planning a party for his 100th birthday and he has invited everyone in town. That means 1,600 guests.

"Ain't it going to be wonderful to be 100 years old? You're lucky to be alive," Smithers said.

Friends will sing "I've Been Working on the Railroad" as a gift to Smithers, a retired railway worker who will turn 100 on Aug. 20. The party will be Aug. 24.

The Du Pont Co., which operates a chemical plant in town, will spring for a cake.

"We're going to send an invitation to everyone in Belle," Mayor Bill Croye said. "I'm 47 and I've known him all my life. He's a heck of a guy."

"It's just been kind of a mutual admiration society between him and them," said Anabell Day, who's married to one of Smithers' numerous nephews.

U.S., U.N. await Iraqi answers to warnings

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The head of an international inspection team said Saturday Iraq was expected to respond to a U.N. warning and U.S. threats of a military strike by providing an expanded list of its nuclear facilities this weekend.

Iraq was taking the threats so seriously it asked for an emergency meeting of the 21-nation Arab League to discuss the issue.

The five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council warned Iraq on Friday to disclose its nuclear capabilities by July 25 or face serious consequences, Western diplomats at the United Nations said.

Egyptian President Honsi Mubarak outlined the consequences in a message to Iraqi President Saddam Hussein on Saturday.

Mubarak's message pointed out to Saddam "the danger of his present position, which might lead the Iraqi people to the possibility of another attack by allied forces that could destroy some strategic targets inside Iraq," presidential spokesman Mohamed Abdel-Moneim said in Cairo.

The chief U.N. nuclear inspector, Dimitri Perricos, said he expected an answer from Saddam soon.

"I hope tomorrow they'll do their best to give (the list) to us," Perricos said.

Washington says Iraq could face military strikes to eliminate nuclear facilities, but that an attack was not imminent.

President Bush's national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, said Saturday, "We're looking at various things that might be necessary to bring about compliance." He declined to elaborate.

If military action were ordered, Scowcroft said, the United States would prefer not to act unilaterally. "If there were anything involving the military, we would hope there would be coalition forces," he said on CNN's "Newsmaker Saturday" from Bush's vacation home in Kennebunkport, Maine, and in speaking to reporters afterward.

Under the U.N. cease-fire terms that ended the Gulf War, Iraq is required to disclose all its nuclear, chemical and biological weapons capabilities in preparation for their destruction.

The United States says previous Iraqi disclosures have fallen short and that Baghdad has been trying to develop a nuclear weapon. Iraq denies that it is trying to develop nuclear weapons.

Iraqi Foreign Minister Ahmed Hussein wrote to Arab League Secretary-General Ismat Abdel Meguid asking for an emergency session to discuss the U.S. threats.

Baghdad radio quoted the envoy as saying Iraq had cooperated fully with the United Nations.

"The United States is now preparing a comprehensive new military aggression against Iraq. As a pretext for this aggression, the United States is announcing that it intends to strike the sites and equipment that interested the high-level (U.N.) committee," the Iraqi minister wrote.

If Iraq produces a new list, it would be the third since April 27. It would be, in effect, another admission that the Iraqi government has not fully disclosed its nuclear capabilities.

Thursday the 37-member U.N. inspection team paid a surprise visit to a uranium production plant near the northern city of Mosul, Perricos said. The plant had not been included on previous lists.

The government's initial list included 24 facilities. Since then, the U.N. Special Commission overseeing destruction of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction has acquired intelligence indicating there were more sites.

The U.N. team, which arrived here a week ago, said it had seen evidence the Iraqis destroyed nuclear equipment recently. To its surprise, much of the equipment was "very sophisticated" and Iraqi-made rather than imported.

Contrary to Iraq's claims that its nuclear program was only for peaceful purposes, a source said what the team has seen was far too expensive for civilian purposes.

U.N. inspectors now want an exhaustive list "of facilities involved in research and development of the (uranium) enrichment technology, when the equipment they have put on their list has been installed and-or used, and where such equipment was manufactured," said Perricos.

Israeli troops kill teen-ager

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli troops shot to death a Palestinian teen-ager Saturday when they opened fire in response to a firebomb attack in a West Bank city, the military command said.

Arab reports said at least six other Palestinians were wounded in four clashes in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The clashes erupted as soldiers backed by helicopters conducted a large arrest sweep and house-to-house searches in the city of Nablus after imposing a curfew on the area's 120,000 residents at dawn.

In the raid in the city's Kasbah section, dozens of suspected uprising activists were rounded up and knives, axes and homemade guns were confiscated, the army said.

Witnesses said it was the largest military raid in the West Bank's largest city in more than a year.

The fatal clash was in the northern West Bank city of Jenin, where firebombs, empty bottles and rocks were thrown at border police, the army said.

Mystery troops attack villages

MOSCOW (AP) — Armed units in black uniforms attacked three villages in the southern Soviet republic of Azerbaijan on Saturday and ordered all ethnic Armenians to leave, the Interfax news agency said.

The report said troops backed by helicopters and armored vehicles entered the Azerbaijani villages of Erkech, Manashid and Buzlukh, which are heavily populated by Armenians.

The gunmen threatened the ethnic Armenians with death if they did not immediately comply with the orders to leave, the report added. The report did not identify the gunmen.

The Soviet Ministry of the Interior, the KGB, and the Ministry of Defense denied any involvement in the attack as did Azerbaijan's Interior Ministry, said a statement from Armenian officials based in Moscow.

The region along the border between the two republics has been tense for months, with the Armenians accusing Azerbaijani Interior Ministry troops of attacking mainly Armenian villages in Azerbaijan and ordering the villagers to leave the republic.

However, the worst ethnic fighting has occurred farther north in Nagorno-Karabakh, controlled by Azerbaijan but claimed by Christian Armenia.

Bear bites in on beer break

MOSCOW (AP) — An escaped circus bear bit the hand of a surprised pub patron and made off with his beer in the Ukrainian city of Kharkov, the Tass news agency reported Saturday.

Viktor Kozlov received a rough slap on the back just as he was about to enjoy his beer. He turned around to see a huge brown bear with a thirst as large as his own.

When Kozlov declined to share his glass, the bear bit him on the hand and captured the beer and a bag of food, the agency said.

Three other people offered the bear a large jar of beer while Kozlov called the police.

Latin American states call for Castro to reform Cuba

MEXICO CITY, (AP) — Fidel Castro, the only non-elected president at next week's summit of 20 Latin heads of state, is expected to hear privately what some leaders have said publicly — Communist Cuba must change.

The summit, to be attended the presidents of Spain and Portugal and the leaders of 18 Latin American and Caribbean nations, is the first gathering of its kind.

Mexico, mindful of its good relations with Cuba, said through Foreign Minister Fernando Solana that there will be no public discussion at the July 18-19 meeting of the need for greater democracy in Cuba.

But diplomatic sources say they expect other leaders to raise the issue in private talks with Castro, whose government seems increasingly out of step with trends toward elected governments, both in Latin America and in the former East bloc.

Cuba's deputy foreign minister, Ramon Sanchez, told the official Mexican news agency Notimex on Friday that Cuba would "not be on the defensive" at the summit.

The meeting has no fixed agenda and no hard decisions are likely to be made.

However, Notimex, citing diplomatic sources, reported that President Bush is sending Castro a letter through President Fernando Collor de Mello of Brazil, urging him to bring democratic change.

The White House denied the report, calling it a "trial balloon." Bush sent Castro a message to that effect in May but Castro did not reply.

The meeting is limited to Spanish- and Portuguese-speaking nations.

Mexico hopes to use the gathering to broaden its regional influence, and other countries hope to convert Latin America's linguistic and cultural ties with Spain and Portugal into something more concrete.

The gap between the Iberian nations and the former colonies was never fully bridged after the wars for independence in the early 1800s.

Attempts to bring Cuba back into the Organization of American States have fallen short.

Slovenia walks tightwire to freedom

LJUBLJANA, Yugoslavia (AP) — In a few heady weeks, Slovenians blew up Yugoslav army tanks, braved air raids and achieved some trappings of a sovereign nation. Just in case, however, they are lining up for gas masks.

Most people feel it is a fait accompli: Slovenia has broken free of Yugoslavia and is independent for the first time since it was known as Carinthia 1,000 years ago.

"We are neither idealists nor overly optimistic, but we expect full recognition after three months," Prime Minister Lojze Peterle said in an interview. "We will negotiate only as a sovereign state."

But in the government offices of the republic, the militia barracks and out on the streets, euphoria is tempered by concern over making the right moves and dread that the price may still be left to pay.

In a revolution that loves symbols, Ronny Hadzic has sold 2,000 "Slovenia Independent" T-shirts. Nearby, another vendor's stereo blares Bob Dylan's "A Hard Rain's Gonna Fall."

Thursday, the day after Parliament approved a peace accord, Slovenes in the capital bought at least 1,200 gas masks, waiting in block-long lines, amid rumors that desperate Serbs might launch a chemical attack on the republic.

Slovenian leaders spent six months preparing for their declaration of independence June 25. Their move coincided with the neighboring republic of Croatia's.

Boris Pleskovic, a World Bank senior economist, came home from Washington with a recipe for new economic management: hard currency, balanced budgeting, and control over the money supply.

If steps follow the plan, Pleskovic said, Slovenia could achieve economic growth of up to 10 percent annual growth. Foreigners and Yugoslavs seem eager to invest, he said, but attracting capital will depend on stability.

Cambodian factions meet in Beijing to plan council meeting

BEIJING (AP) — Representatives of Cambodia's warring factions will open a two-day meeting here Tuesday, the Chinese Foreign Ministry said Saturday.

In Bangkok, Thailand, Cambodian leader Chea Sim was reported as saying Saturday the talks would pave the way for the next full meeting of Cambodia's Supreme National Council.

The 12-member council includes the leaders of the three main guerrilla factions and the Phnom Penh government. It is designed to govern Cambodia with U.N. assistance during the period before elections.

Chea Sim, chairman of the National Assembly of the Vietnamese-installed government, said negotiators will try to build on progress made at last month's peace talks in Thailand.

His comments were reported by Thai Foreign Ministry spokesman Saktip Krairerk. Chea Sim met Saturday with that nation's foreign minister, Arsa Sarasin.

The meeting will bring Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen to Beijing for the first time. China arms the Khmer Rouge, the most powerful of the three guerrilla groups battling the Hun Sen government.

The Khmer Rouge is loosely allied with two non-communist guerrilla groups: the forces loyal to former monarch Prince Norodom Sihanouk and the Khmer People's National Liberation Front of Son Sann.

The talks were expected to involve Hun Sen, Sihanouk, Khieu Samphan of the Khmer Rouge and Son Sann. The other council members will not be present.

Also invited were the U.N. secretary-general's special representative on the Cambodian peace process, Rafeeudin Ahmed, and officials of France and Indonesia — who together chair the Paris conference on Cambodia, the main forum for a settlement.

During the June talks in Thailand, the faction leaders agreed to an indefinite truce and to stop receiving foreign arms supplies, but did not settle how these agreements would be monitored or the matter of disarmament.

The Khmer Rouge killed hundreds of thousands of people from 1975 until the Vietnamese invasion while trying to turn Cambodia into a communist utopia. The fighting began when Vietnam invaded Cambodia in late 1978, drove the ruling Khmer Rouge into the jungle and installed the present regime in Phnom Penh.

British security force foils data sales plot

LONDON (NYT) — The MI5 security service emerged briefly from its customary secrecy this week, showing itself to be almost as bumbling as the two British would-be spies it foiled in a plot to sell nuclear submarine secrets to the Soviet Union.

MI5, which only came out of the cold three years ago to be legally acknowledged by the British government as "the Security Service," routinely monitors calls to the Soviet Embassy in Kensington Park in London. That is what people in the intelligence business say, but the service would never admit it.

Thus a Crown Court in Preston in northern England was told only that "someone" had informed the police that an unidentified man had called the Soviet Embassy.

The caller offered to sell the embassy one of the secret acoustic tiles used to cover the hulls of Britain's giant American-designed Trident nuclear submarines, built at the Vickers shipyard at Barrow-in-Furness, to make them undetectable by Soviet sonar.

"Do you want to buy a rubber tile that goes on the outside of a sub?" was the jocular approach that Joseph Wilson, a former security guard at the shipyard, told the police he made to Aleksandr Madrichyk, who he said was an official of the Soviet trade delegation in London.

Wilson and Arthur Price, a driver for Trident Taxis in Barrow, said they also called Capt. Mikhail G. Shadrin, an assistant naval attache at the embassy, and tried to interest him.

Wilson, using the name John Stuart, mentioned a figure of 3 million pounds ($4.8 million), the court was told, and Madrichyk laughed so hard that Wilson had to hold the telephone away from his ear.

But it was apparently no laughing matter to the Security Service, which had no idea at the time who "John Stuart" could be, or what else he might have to offer the Russians.

MI5 and the police took out advertisements in the personal columns of local newspapers that made it look as if Madrichyk had suffered pangs of remorse.

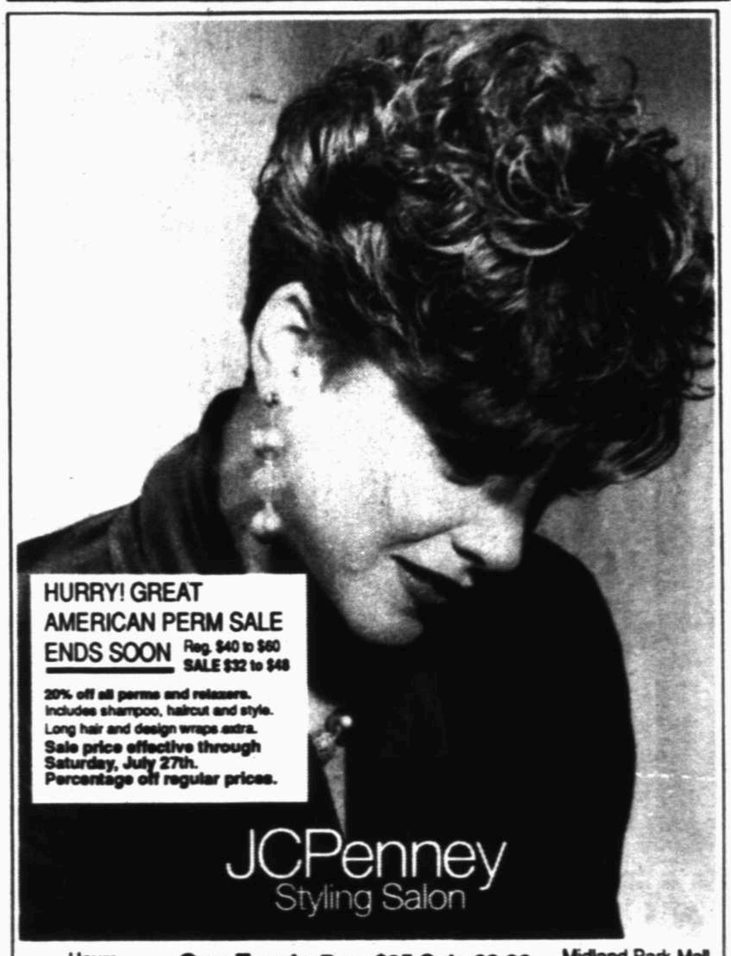

"John Stuart from Alexander M.," said one ad, "I repeat that you should not telephone us on our London numbers. Please understand that they cannot be used to discuss such matters.

"Also I am not an expert in this business. Instead please telephone my colleague Nick who wants to help you on 0836 632363 any weekday between 1600 hours and 1700 hours starting Wednesday, 29th August."

Wilson and his cohort had almost forgotten about the plot by then, perhaps because, as they told the court, they had dreamed it up over glasses of bitter in the Conservative Club of Barrow-in-Furness. Both were members.

But Wilson, who had worked at the shipyard for 15 years and told the court that the acoustic tiles were stacked out in the open all over the place, spotted the advertisement and contacted "Nick" on the 0836 number.

So How Do I Pay For It?

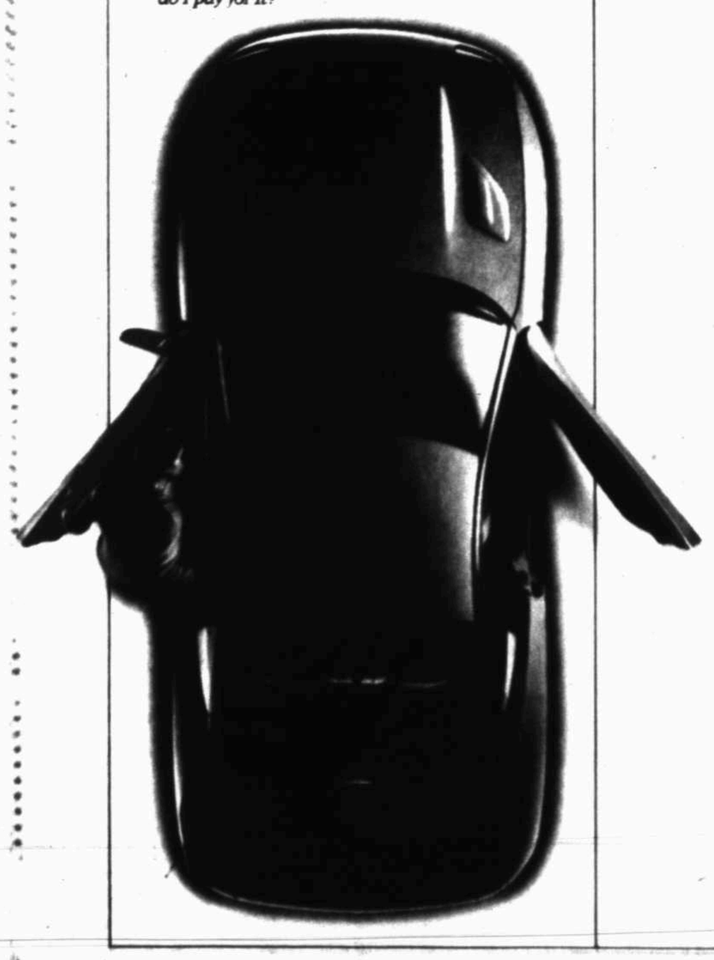

I can't believe my little girl is getting married. Everything seems to go so fast. I'll have to talk to caterers. Florists. Find a band.

And then there's the question: How do I pay for it?

I know exactly the car I want. I know the model. I know the options. Even the color and choice of fabric for the seats. What I don't know is: How do I pay for it?

We've talked about redoing the kitchen for years. I think we're serious now. We've got a rough plan. Know a couple of good contractors. The only question is, how do I pay for it?

We've been out with our realtor every weekend for months it seems. We've looked at dozens of neighborhoods. Hundreds of homes. And then last week we finally found it — the perfect house. Now, how do I pay for it?

Just Ask.

We've always lived for the weekends. Done things together. Gone camping. Now, I've got my eye on a boat. It would be perfect for us. Question is, how do I pay for it?

Gospel music singer to perform in U.S.S.R.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Award-winning gospel music singer Larnelle Harris will perform in the Soviet Union and in Finland this September as part of a concert tour.

Harris, winner of five Grammy awards, will sing in Leningrad on Sept. 5 and in Moscow on Sept. 7. He is also scheduled to sing Sept. 2 in Helsinki, Finland, and Sept. 3 in Tallinn, Estonia.

The appearances are part of a series of religious rallies and concerts.

Rick Hoganson, spokesman for the singer, said Friday the rallies will be sponsored by Youth for Christ International, International Bible Society and the Evangelical Christian Publishers Association.

Performing with him will be Thurlow Spurr and the Spirit of America concert choir.

HOUSTON — Action-film star Chuck Norris is seeking to launch a program here to steer youths away from drugs and crime by building their self-esteem through martial arts, the cornerstone of his movies.

Norris

Norris, who is planning to move to the area, said his non-profit Kick Drugs Out of America Foundation has tentative approval to begin the program in three schools in the Houston Independent School District.

If the program is approved, the foundation would hire experts to tutor six-graders at least twice a week in martial arts, exposing them to physical and mental discipline and goal-setting, Norris told members of the Houston Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

The actor, who now lives on the West Coast, said that for the past two years, he has been searching for a ranch in the Houston area.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country-music singer Dottie West said she can barely remember the Internal Revenue Service's auction of her belongings to pay a $1 million debt.

West

"I hardly remember it happening," she said Thursday night in an interview on the Nashville Network's cable television show "Nashville Now."

"I was in such a state of shock," she said.

The auction was June 14 and 15 to satisfy debts listed in a 1990 bankruptcy petition.

West, 58, said she decided to attend the first day of the auction "to prove to myself that I could really do it."

"I made it through the first day, but I couldn't make it the second day," she said.

West is known for hit records such as "Every Time Two Fools Collide," a duet with Kenny Rogers.

DURHAM, N.C. — Three supermarket chains in the state have banned the new issue of Vanity Fair magazine because of its cover featuring a nude picture of pregnant actress Demi Moore.

Officials with the Food Lion, Winn-Dixie and Harris-Teeter chains said they wouldn't allow the issue on their shelves, even though it was wrapped and covered.

The cover features the actress standing with one hand under her belly and the other across her breasts.

"We feel the cover is controversial enough to offend a fair number of our customers," Vince Watkins, vice president of special projects at Food Lion Inc., told Durham television station WTVD.

A spokesman for Winn-Dixie Inc. said experiences with controversial covers made the decision easier.

"We run a family store and cater to families," spokesman Ivan Hardesty said. "We're not in the business of being controversial."

PAMPLONA, Spain — Film director Spike Lee joined hundreds of others Saturday running with the bulls in the festival made famous by Ernest Hemingway.

While Lee completed the run unscathed, three Spanish youths were gored and seriously injured. Four others suffered minor injuries, officials said.

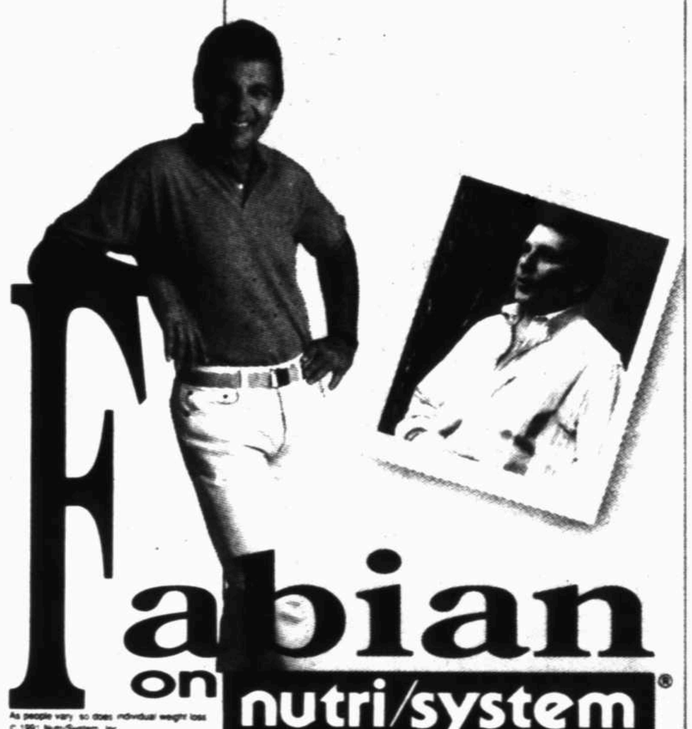

Lee, in Pamplona to shoot a television commercial, ran well ahead of the bulls in the half-mile run from the city pens to the bullring in the old quarter. Saturday was the seventh of eight days of the running of the bulls.

A Swedish man and a Norwegian woman injured Monday remained in the hospital, where they were described as progressing well.

Ump's future

DALLAS (AP) — American League umpire Steve Palermo's chances of ever returning to work are uncertain, according to the president of the umpires union.

"We are not counting on him this year, and at this point we're not sure about next year or in the future," Paul Runge said. "We are not terribly optimistic."

Runge, president of the Major League Umpires Association, made his comments to The Dallas Morning News.

Palermo has been unable to fully move his legs after being shot in the back Sunday when he and two other men came to the aid of two waitresses who were being robbed.

Terence Mann, a former Southern Methodist University football player, and one of the others wounded, is recovering at home from bullet wounds to his chin, right arm and stomach.

Palermo, an AL umpire since 1977, will begin rehabilition this week.

"It is generally hopeful that Mr. Palermo can return to normal function," said Esther Bauer, a spokeswoman for Parkland Hospital.

The overall prognosis is good, Palermo's treating physician said Friday.

On Thursday, doctors said Palermo suffered injury to the nerve controlling his leg function and was suffering "some degree of leg immobility."

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Midland Angel general manager Monty Hoppel (left) escorts Fernando Valenzuela away from the media crush Saturday night at Midland International Airport.

■ Fernando Valenzuela is now with the Midland Angels, but the day of his first start has yet to be determined.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

West Texas clouds parted just long enough for the Texas League third coming of Fernando Valenzuela at Midland International Airport Saturday.

However, Valenzuela's long awaited arrival did little to shed any light on just when Midland Angel fans can expect to see him take to the mound at Angels Stadium.

"It's hard to say just which day I will pitch," Valenzuela said after his 7:30 p.m. arrival in Midland. "My arm feels good, but I don't want to rush things. It's better for me and the fans if I pitch when I'm ready. I'll take a couple of days and see how things go."

Of course, if Valenzuela takes longer than Monday night to pitch, he would probably get only one start with the Midland club on this homestand. He will get at least one start.

Valenzuela made two starts for Midland in June in his Texas League second coming, posting a 2-0 record and allowing no runs in 12 innings of work. But those games were played in Jackson, Miss., and Little Rock, Ark., before moving on to the California Angels.

He got roughed up in two starts with California before being diagnosed with a heart problem that since has been called insignificant. He now has a full medical release to resume his pitching career and it will start here as part of a 30-day minor league contract that has him pitching three games for Midland and then three more for Triple-A Edmonton. So, in effect, this

Bradley, Pitcock tied at 1 over par

■ Pat Bradley and Joan Pitcock stay in front at the U.S. Women's Open, but Amy Alcott and Brandie Burton loom one stroke back.

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Two former U.S. Women's Open champions put themselves into position to win again on Saturday but they'll have to conquer the LPGA's young guard to do it.

Pat Bradley and Amy Alcott, who have won 56 tournaments between them, face talented youngsters like Brandie Burton and Joan Pitcock on Sunday on the final day of the 46th Open.

Bradley, the LPGA's top money winner, battled back from a triple bogey and non-winner Pitcock made a late birdie to share the 54-hole lead over sun-seared Colonial Country Club.

Bradley, who won the 1981 Open and has 27 tournament victories, shot a 1-over-par 72 despite making a triple-bogey 7 on the dangerous "Hogan Alley" fifth hole, a 390-yard par-4 that cuts along the Trinity River.

Midland designated hitter Edgar Alfonzo hit the ball hard a couple of times in his first four at bats Saturday night, but none of his attempts at a base hit was destined to look anything like a line drive in the box score.

Then came his bloop single in the ninth. It looks like a rope in the box score and first place in the Texas League West standings.

Alfonzo's two-out Texas League single scored pinch runner Marcus Lawton from second base to cap a three-run ninth inning at Angels Stadium, where Midland toppled the Tulsa Drillers 10-9. El Paso lost to Shreveport, 12-9, Saturday, falling ½-game behind the first place Angels.

"Sometimes you hit the ball hard and somebody catches it, and sometimes you hit the ball easy like the last one and you get a hit," Alfonzo said. "But this time I'll take it."

Midland lifted its record to 11-9 in the Board delays 5A playoff decision

Associated Press

AUSTIN — The State Board of Education voted 11-4 Saturday to defer action for one year on a University Interscholastic League proposal to expand the Class 5A championship playoffs in team sports.

But proponents of the plan said they believed it still was likely the changes would be implemented in the 1992-93 school year, as originally proposed.

Under the plan, the three teams with the best record in each 5A district would advance to the playoffs in football, baseball, boys' and girls' basketball, boys' and girls' soccer and volleyball.

The UIL already has tried the idea in 5A football, sending three teams to the playoffs, with two championships determined, among so-called big and small schools in that division.

Board member Will Davis of Austin moved to defer consideration of the expansion for a year pending completion of a UIL report on the 5A football playoffs.

Davis made the motion after several board members complained that the move appeared to put too much emphasis on sports playoffs at the expense of academics. Some also said they were worried about added expense.

"We have to be very honest about what we're doing, and I think we're sending the wrong message," said Mary Helen Berlanga of Corpus Christi.

"Our focus is just not at the right place, and I really feel that our message has to be that these children have to perform well academically," she said.

Oilers, Cowboys report for camp

Pardee wants improvement from secondary

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Right after Jack Pardee introduced himself a year ago as the Houston Oilers' new coach, he scrapped the existing offense for a high-powered run-and-shoot and changed the defense from a three-man line to the more traditional four-man approach.

"You can't change much more than that in one year. I didn't want it to appear as a rebuilding year or a step backward. I wanted to stay good along the way," Pardee says. He and his staff are preparing for a different but equally difficult task as the Oilers open training camp this week at Trinity University in San Antonio.

But rather than implement an entire system like last summer, Pardee says they must try to maintain the team's positives and improve on negatives.

Johnson hopes Turner will be offense's cure

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys drew fans to their Austin training camp last year as if they had won the NFL championship.

Actually, they were the league's worst team, winning only one game in 1989. But the Cowboys were kings to the people of Travis County.

The Cowboys, one of the most glamorous of NFL franchises, relocated last year to Austin after decades of training at Thousand Oaks in cool and comfortable California. Nearly 100,000 fans trekked to the St. Edward's campus in three weeks of practice.

Dallas officials are expecting many more fans to turn out when they check in Sunday for the start of practice. Two-a-day workouts begin Tuesday after a day off on Monday for a big golf outing.

Baker-Finch, Sauers tied

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Gene Sauers, seeking to become Pleasant Valley's first two-time winner since the PGA's initial visit in 1965, and Australian Ian Baker-Finch shot 5-under-par 66s on Saturday to share the lead after three rounds of the New England Classic.

Sauers and Baker-Finch were at 200 and three strokes clear of the field heading into Sunday's final round of the $1 million event.

Sauers, who beat Blaine McCallister in a playoff for the 1986 local championship, and Baker-Finch broke out of an eight-way tie for second place as 36-hole leader Bruce Fleisher was unable to hold a three-stroke advantage on a rain-soaked 7,110-yard course.

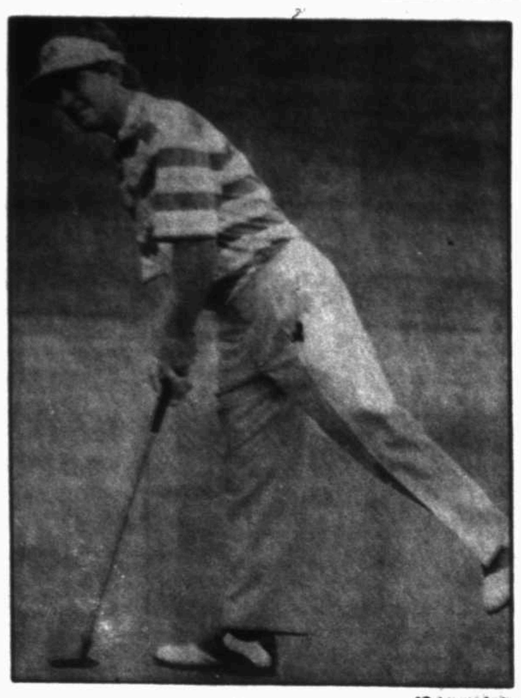

Fleisher, who equalled the tournament record of 131 for the first two rounds, faltered to a 73 on Saturday. Fleisher, 42, trying to compete on the tour again after an eight-year absence, had opened with rounds of 64 and 67.

Sauers, who shot 67s in each of the first two rounds, had six birdies and just one bogey on Saturday. He went to 14-under and a two-stroke lead with a birdie on No. 15, but then took a bogey on the par-3 16th when his 6-iron tee shot found the rough.

Baker-Finch, who has won more than $1.25 million in less than three years on the PGA Tour, caught Sauers at 13 under with a birdie on No. 17, a par-4.

The 6-foot-4 Australian, who has been in the money in all 14 events he has played on the tour this year, took his first bogey of the tournament on the first hole, then added six birdies en route to a share of the lead.

Brad Faxon, a former New England amateur champion who was runnerup at Pleasant Valley two years ago, joined the hunt for the top prize with a 6-under 65 for a 54-hole total of 203.

Gene Sauers grieves over a missed birdie putt on the 12th Saturday at Sutton, Mass.

Faxon was in a three-way tie with tour rookie John Daly, who had a third-round 69, and Barry Jaeckel, who had a 68.

Joining Fleischer at 204, nine strokes under par, were John Adams, who had a 67; Brad Bryant, who had 69, and Mike Springer, who shot 70.

On the 74 players who made the cut, 70 were under par entering the final round.

LeMond retakes first

Tour de France

ALENCON, France — Greg LeMond returned to a familiar place Saturday — first in the Tour de France.

The three-time Tour winner regained the overall lead with a strong showing in the eighth stage, a 45-mile individual time trial from Argentan to Alencon.

LeMond finished second in the trial, eight seconds behind Spain's Miguel Indurain, but that was good enough to overtake Erik Breukink of the Netherlands in the overall standings.

Breukink, who won two of the three time trials in last year's race, led LeMond by 26 seconds at the last checkpoint on Saturday. But he faded near the finish and ended up fourth in the time trial, more than a minute behind Indurain and LeMond.

"I was surprised to beat him in the final kilometers," LeMond said. "Mentally, it's going to be more difficult for Breukink because the time trials are his specialty and I'm better than him in the mountain stages."

LeMond now leads Breukink by 1 minute, 13 seconds in the overall race. Djamolidine Abdoujaparov of the Soviet Union finished seventh in the time trial, dropping him from second to third overall. He trails LeMond by 1:21.

It is the third time LeMond has held the lead in this year's race.

He took the lead after the first stage last Sunday, then lost it during the team time trial the same day to Rolf Sorensen of Denmark.

Sorensen fell and broke his collarbone during the fifth stage. He withdrew before the start of the sixth stage on Thursday and LeMond, who had been in second, technically moved into the lead.

Midland American slips past Midland National

Staff Report

Rain again played havoc Saturday with the three District 3 youth baseball tournaments being held in Midland, but Midland American did beat Midland National by a 4-3 margin in a key Junior League matchup at Redfern Field.

All action in the Little League tournament at Bluebird Park was postponed for the second day in a row. Those games will resume at 2 p.m. today in Bluebird Park.

Senior League action was also postponed again at Simon Field. They hope to get back on track today, and hopefully, hold its finals Monday.

But the one Junior League game played Saturday was a dandy. American scored three runs in the seventh and final inning to take the 4-3 win. Lance Watters took the victory with a three-hitter and nine strikeouts. Keith Lant absorbed the loss, forcing the National team into the loser's bracket.

Loser's bracket games in the Junior League are scheduled today at Redfern Field.

WOMEN: Bradley to be the sentimental favorite

(From 1B)

Open and a professional since she was 19, also shot 72 thanks to a 15-foot birdie putt on the par-3 No. 16 as the two playing partners tied with 1-over-par 214 totals.

"Everybody will probably be pulling for Pat tomorrow and I don't think anybody thinks I'm going to win but I just might," Pitcock said.

Two players were just a shot back on the 97-degree day in which the wind dropped to only 14 mph and made Colonial a more inviting target.

Alcott, who needs only one more victory to secure a spot in the LPGA Hall of Fame, shot 72 and was tied at 2-over 215 with teen-ager Burton.

Alcott, the 1980 Open champion and owner of 29 championship trophies, held the lead until two bunkered irons cost her back-nine bogeys.

Burton, 19, of San Bernadino, Calif., is bidding to become the youngest winner of the Open. She shot a 2-under-par 69. The youngest winner was Catherine Lacoste, who was 22 when she won the 1967 Open.

Betsy King, who became so emotional she cried after Friday's 7-over-par 78 that left her 10 shots behind the leaders, shot a 3-over par 74 and had no hope of winning her third consecutive Open with a plus-13 total.

King declined interviews, saying "I'm sorry" when pressed for comment on her third round.

Ziegler paces Seniors

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Larry Ziegler's second 66 in as many days earned him a two-shot lead over Tom Shaw and Jim Dent after Saturday's second round of the $350,000 Newport Cup senior golf tournament.

Ziegler had birdies on three of the four par-5s on the Newport Country Club's par-72, 6,722-yard seaside layout, site of the first U.S. Amateur and U.S. Open tournaments in 1895.

Orioles' foursome combines to no-hit A's

Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — What a weird way for a no-hitter to end.

"I didn't believe I did it. Wait, let me check that; I didn't believe we did it," Gregg Olson said Saturday after four Baltimore pitchers combined to hold Oakland hitless in the Orioles' 2-0 victory.

Bob Milacki (5-3) pitched six innings before leaving the game with an injury to his hand, hurt while deflecting the Athletics' best chance for a base hit.

Mike Flanagan, Mark Williamson and Olson each pitched one inning to finish off Baltimore's first no-hitter since 1969. Only once before have four pitchers combined on a no-hitter — on Sept. 28, 1975, Oakland's Vida Blue, Glenn Abbott, Paul Lindblad and Rollie Fingers shut down California.

Even when it was over, the Orioles couldn't quite believe they did it. Instead of a big pileup up the mound, there were several little celebrations scattered around the diamond.

"I think it was kind of strange for them,"'Oakland manager Tony La Russa said. "Everybody congratulated different people. Nobody knew who to shake hands with. But it all counts."

American

Blue Jays 3, Rangers 2

TORONTO — Kelly Gruber hit a two-out, two-run homer in the eighth inning, rallying Toronto past Texas for its sixth straight victory.

The Blue Jays, held to one run for 6 1-3 innings by Nolan Ryan, bounced back to win for the 18th time in 21 games. John Olerud was hit by a pitch from Jeff Russell (3-2) with one out in the eighth and Gruber atoned for an earlier error by hitting his seventh home run.

Mike Timlin (8-4) won in relief off Todd Stottlemyre. Tom Henke pitched the ninth for his 18th save in 18 tries.

Twins 3, Red Sox 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Jack Morris, who bruised his foot in the All-Star game, allowed five hits in 8 1-3 innings as Minnesota beat Boston and sent the Red Sox to their fourth consecutive loss.

Morris (12-6) won for the eighth time in nine starts, struck out two and walked none. Rick Aguilera finished with perfect relief for his 24th save in 31 chances.

Tigers 8, Royals 5

DETROIT — Mickey Tettleton hit a three-run homer, Cecil Fielder doubled home two more and Detroit spoiled Bret Saberhagen's return from the disabled list, beating Kansas City.

Walt Terrell (5-9), gave up nine hits, walked two and struck out three. He left with an 8-4 lead after a walk to start the ninth innning.

Brewers 8, White Sox 2

MILWAUKEE — Rick Dempsey broke a tie with a three-run homer and Don August won his fifth consecutive decision over the White Sox as the Milwaukee Brewers beat Chicago.

August (7-4) allowed six hits and both runs. Mark Lee finished with one-hit relief.

Yankees 2, Angels 0

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Rookie Jeff Johnson pitched 8⅓ shutout innings, limiting California to four hits as surging New York dealt the impotent Angels their seventh consecutive loss.

Johnson (2-3) struck out five and walked two as the Yankees (41-40) went over the .500 mark for the first time since they got off to a 4-3 start last season.

Indians 6, Mariners 3

SEATTLE — Cleveland ended a 27-inning scoreless streak in the seventh inning, then rallied for four runs in the ninth to beat Seattle and stop an eight-game losing streak against the Mariners.

Mets' win streak goes to 10 games

Associated Press

NEW YORK — David Cone matched a career high with 13 strikeouts as the New York Mets won their 10th straight game, moving within a victory of a team record by beating the stumbling San Diego Padres 3-1 Saturday night.

Cone, who had a run-scoring grounder to account for the first New York run, has struck 10 or more 23 times. He leads the National League with 126 strikeouts.

Cubs 4, Astros 3

CHICAGO — George Bell drove in three runs, including the tie-breaker in the seventh inning with his third hit, and the Chicago Cubs beat the Houston Astros.

Les Lancaster (5-3) survived a rocky first inning for his first complete game of the season. He gave up three runs on four hits in the first inning, then shut out Houston on six hits the rest of the way.

Pirates 5, Reds 2

CINCINNATI — Bobby Bonilla hit a two-run homer and Jay Bell had three hits as the Pittsburgh Pirates maintained their mastery of the Cincinnati Reds.

The Pirates have won the first three in their four-game series at Riverfront Stadium and their last seven overall against the Reds, who beat them four games to two in the National League playoffs last year.

Pittsburgh has won four straight games and 11 of 15 overall to maintain its grip on first place in the NL East.

National

Braves 10, Cardinals 5

ATLANTA — Ron Gant and Terry Pendleton hit three-run homers and Greg Olson added a two-run shot, leading the Atlanta Braves past the St. Louis Cardinals 10-5 before a season-high 43,424 fans.

Gant's 17th home run off Ken Hill (8-6) made it 5-0 in the third inning. Gant also homered Friday night as Atlanta beat the Cardinals 6-2.

Pendleton hit his ninth homer in the fifth off Willie Fraser. Olson connected for his fourth in the sixth against Juan Agosto.

Giants 7, Phillies 5

PHILADELPHIA — Consecutive doubles by Will Clark and slumping Kevin Mitchell sparked a two-run ninth inning as the San Francisco Giants beat the Philadelphia Phillies.

Clark opened with an opposite-field hit to left against reliever Wally Ritchie (0-1). Mitchell, with only two hits in his previous 22 at-bats, doubled to left and scored two outs later on Kirt Manwaring's RBI single.

VALENZUELA: Lefty should pitch this week is Valenzuela's third stop in the Texas League.

"I'm happy to be back in Midland. I pitched here in 1980 when I was with San Antonio, the year I made it to the big leagues," Valenzuela said. "This is another opportunity for me to get back to the big leagues, and I'm happy to have the chance."

Valenzuela said he had no specific goals to reach in his comeback bid while with the Midland Angels.

"What I need is to face a lot of hitters and be in different situations on the mound. I felt I pitched good when I was with Midland in Jackson and Little Rock. I know I can pitch."

The trim-looking Valenzuela didn't look on top of his game when he reached Anaheim's Big Show.

"I didn't pitch bad in the first game, but I made a few mistakes," Valenzuela said. "I was disappointed in the second game because I can pitch a lot better. I think I felt too good and was trying to overthrow.

"I'm not a power pitcher. I have to think a little bit and hit the spots. The arm felt good, but I tried to do too much."

Valenzuela now has 30 days to once again impress the Angels and he will start in a park where he has had good success. His last outing in Angels Stadium (then Cubs Stadium) was a 2-0 victory over the Midland Cubs. He had a 1-3-9 record in 174 innings and a 3.10 ERA in 1980 with San Antonio before being called up by the Los Angeles Dodgers where he was 2-0 in 18 innings, allowing no runs. The following year, he was the National League rookie of the year with a 13-7 record and a 2.48 ERA, leading the league with 180 strikeouts.

"I liked pitching in Midland. I like this game and I still want to pitch," he said.

The Dodgers released Valenzuela at the end of spring training this year, leaving him without a team. He holds little animosity toward the Dodgers.

"The Dodgers gave me a chance to pitch in the big leagues and I was with them for 10 years. Few of them, except maybe (catcher Mike) Scioscia, can say that.

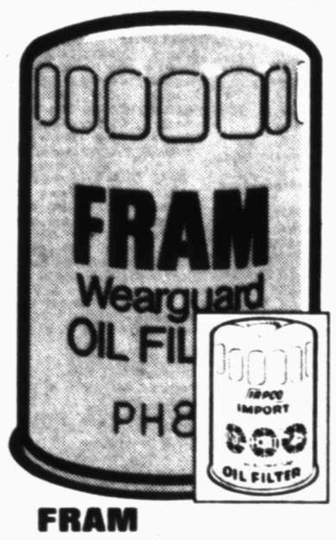

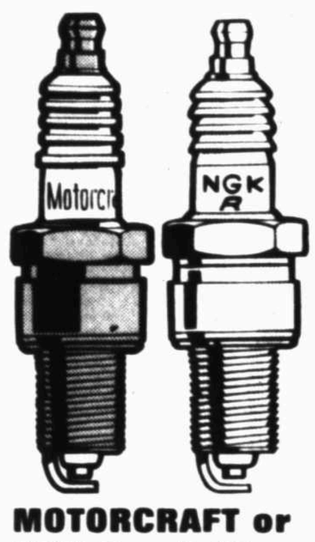

"They (the Dodgers) have to do what is best for the team. I understand the business. The only thing that really hurt me was being released as the end of spring training when all the teams had completed their rosters. That left me with no place to go. I'm glad to have this opportunity."

DALLAS: Big crowds expected again

(From 1B)

"We should be getting some big turnouts even with the heat," said Dallas public relations director Rich Dalrymple.

For one thing, the Cowboys fell just a game shy of the playoffs with a 7-9 record that was such a dramatic improvement that it earned coach Jimmy Johnson NFL Coach of the Year honors in just his second year on the job.

Dallas was 1-15 in Johnson's rookie season after replacing Tom Landry.

The Cowboys have worked hard in the off-season with numerous minicamps. Also, quarterback Troy Aikman has healed quickly from shoulder and elbow surgery and is throwing the football with more velocity.

Johnson, who loves to work his team in a hot climate, said Dallas will have to earn its respect all over again in the NFC East.

"Even though we were pleased with our progress last year, we are still not where we want to be," Johnson said. "What we did realize is that the hard work put in by our people during the off-season can pay off in wins."

One of the biggest items to watch will be the progress under the offense now that the much-criticized David Shula has left the Cowboys.

Johnson hired Norval Turner, who developed the passing game of the Los Angeles Rams and has drawn praise from Aikman.

"I enjoy working with Norval and I think we'll be much improved," Aikman said.

It wouldn't take much. The Cowboys were 27th in passing in the NFL last year, averaging only 161 yards per game passing. They were 26th in scoring with an average of 15 points per game.

Both rookies and veterans were expected to report to training camp on Sunday. The Cowboys have already signed their first three draft picks.

The first Blue-White scrimmage will be on Sunday, July 21. Dallas once again will scrimmage the Houston Oilers, who are working in San Antonio.

HOUSTON: Oilers seek consistency

(From 1B)

The Oilers finished second last year in the AFC Central at 9-7 but were eliminated in the first round of the playoffs.

Looking back, Pardee says he was able to install his new defensive scheme but did not have time to teach his secondary how to react at the line to different offenses.

The new offense was not a problem, except to opposing defenses. Quarterback Warren Moon set numerous records while piling up yardage to help the team become the NFL's top-ranked offense.

For this season, Pardee says his goal for the offense is to sustain its high level and add a few more wrinkles.

The Oilers had many memorable moments in 1991, mostly from the offense. Moon and his crew were impressive in victories over Kansas City and the AFC Champion Buffalo Bills.

But the Oilers' problems came from their inconsistency. They never won more than two straight games and suffered disappointing losses to the New York Jets and the Los Angeles Rams.

"We're not so overly talented that we can just show up and beat everybody," Pardee says.

"We did play pretty well at times, but we didn't scratch the surface of our best ball. We played some really good games, but we've got to do it every time out."

Many forecasters have named the Oilers the pre-season favorite to win their first AFC Central title and first conference crown. Some magazines even have the Oilers penciled in for a Super Bowl trip to Minnesota in late January.

"The encouraging part for this year is that there's high expectations," Pardee said. "But the reality of it is that you can't wish your way into it. You have to work."

The Oilers also need to avoid a repeat of last year's 0-2 start. Half of this year's games, including their first three, will be against 1990 playoff teams.

"Right off the bat, we've got to be pretty darn good just to be a .500 club," Pardee said.

Associated Press

The San Francisco 49ers' quest for a successor to Roger Craig as a heavy-duty running back was set back Saturday when the team learned that rookie Ricky Watters will be out six to eight weeks with a broken right foot.

Watters, a second-round pick from Notre Dame, was injured Friday during the team's first workout in pads. He twisted the foot as he turned and planted to try to gain more yardage.

Initially, the injury was diagnosed as a severe sprain. But X-rays showed that Watters broke the fifth metatarsal bone in his right foot.

"There's no question this is a setback," coach George Seifert said.

"When you draft somebody like this, you're going with positive expectations. But at the same time you have to have alternate plans, really for everybody. So now we just have to pay attention more to some of the other players and the veteran players that we have."

Both running backs drafted by the 49ers have been injured. Sheldon Canley, a seventh-round pick from San Jose State, strained his right hamstring Thursday and could miss up to three weeks. The two had been expected to compete with Dexter Carter for the position.

NFL Training Camps

Lions

All-Pro running back Barry Sanders, linebacker Mike Cofer and cornerback Ray Crockett, all seeking renegotiation of existing contracts, remained absent as the Lions prepared for Monday's opening of camp for veterans.

All three are under contract and have been subject to daily $1,500 fines since rookie camp opened last Wednesday. Sanders, last season's NFL rushing champion, continues to seek a renegotiation of his five-year, $5.9-million contract.

Eagles

Philadelphia prepared to open camp Monday with 21 players still unsigned — 15 veterans and six draft choices, including four defensive linemen and Seth Joyner, who emerged last year as one of the NFC's top linebackers.

Joyner expects a long holdout.

"They probably won't even seriously start sitting down talking until after the London game," Joyner said, referring to the July 28 preseason opener against Buffalo.

ANGELS: Midland 11-9 in second half

second half and has three games to play in the present series with the Texas Rangers' Double A club, including a double-header today beginning at 6 p.m.

Alfonzo's RBI made a winner out of Marvin Cobb (2-2), but he may not have gotten the chance at glory if Angel first baseman Don Barbara had not had an earlier say in the inning.

Barbara knotted the game at 9-9 with a two-run home run well over the right-field wall with no outs in the bottom of the ninth. Barbara's fifth round-tripper of the campaign followed a base on balls to Walt McConnell.

"I was just thinking about getting Walt (McConnell) over and getting me on the bag," Barbara said. "He just threw me a pitch inside and I hit it outa-here."

Barbara's game-tying blast came off Brian Romero (4-4), who entered the game in the seventh to protect a 7-6 lead for Tulsa starter Cedric Shaw.

The Drillers upped the lead to 9-6 on Kevin Belcher's two-run home run in the eighth, but as they had all night long, the Angels came back.

Larry Gonzales scored on a ground ball by Bobby Jones in the bottom of the eighth, drawing first blood off Romero. But the Angels entered the ninth trailing by three.

McConnell, who replaced the slightly injured Mark Howie at third base to start the seventh, drew a walk to lead off the inning. Barbara's homer came on an 0-1 pitch.

"I watched it a little bit and it was nice, then I took off. I knew it was out," Barbara said.

"We have a 'don't-give-up' attitude, and we've been playing like that the whole second half," Barbara added. "Midland hasn't done too well the last couple of years, but we want to change that. We feel like we have the team this year to do it."

The Drillers scored once in the first and added two more in the third on David Green's sacrifice fly and an error by Larry Gonzales on the play at the plate. That was all before Midland had managed a hit off Shaw, a left-handed product out of Grambling State University.

But when the Angels finally got to Shaw, it was in ferocious fashion. Kevin Flora got the first safety, a triple to start the fourth. Howie, Tim Salmon and Damion Easley turned in RBI doubles before the three-run rally knotted the score at 3-3.

Dave Shotkoski started on the mound for Midland, lasting through the fifth before three consecutive sixth-inning singles chased the right-hander. Tulsa tallied four times in the sixth to take a 7-3 lead, but the Angels ended Shaw's day with a three-run sixth.

One comeback more and the Angels had themselves another victory.

THE REAL VALUE OF LEASING AN S-CLASS SEDAN TODAY.

The rewards of driving a Mercedes-Benz. Of course you covet the magnificent S-Class sedan. But you wonder: Is leasing a Mercedes right for the times? Yes. Because right now, leasing can help make what may have been slightly beyond your reach within your means.

Higher resale value – Lower monthly payment. Since two factors that determine monthly payments are interest rate and resale value, and since the cars of Mercedes-Benz, as a line, have consistently had the highest resale value in America,* it could actually cost less to lease a 1991 Mercedes than you thought possible.

PUC should not forget its role

When the three-member Public Utility Commission meets Monday to referee TU Electric's request for a 10.2 percent rate increase it will be in the unenviable position of deciding between that request or an 8.2 percent increase "recommended" by the PUC's hearing examiners.

Obviously, the examiners' lower recommendation appears to be in the "best interest" of the utility's consumers, right? In this particular instance, that may not be the situation.

Normally, it's prudent for the PUC's hearing examiners to reduce a utility company's request and that's precisely what they did in this case, saying the utility should get 80 percent of its rate request. But TU officials say the examiners' recommended rate would devastate the company financially and seriously impair its ability to serve customers adequately.

Primarily that's due to the fact that when TU made its 10.2 percent rate request it was exactly on the mark as to what it needed. Even with that request approved, TU's rates would still only be at 1984 levels and since that time inflation has increased 30 percent, spokesmen note.

The complex case — which has involved 10 months of hearings and more than 10,000 pages of documents — involves numerous matters that muddy the water, not the least of which is TU's construction of the $10 billion-plus Comanche Peak nuclear power plant. The cost of the power plant vastly exceeded original estimates and federal requirements added to TU's costs, but the most damaging move thus far, according to the utility, is a $1.6 billion disallowance by the examiners which would, in effect, wipe out TU's earnings for more than a year and make it virtually impossible to raise funds for construction of other new power plants needed to keep up with the growth in North-Central Texas.

There's little doubt that there is an understandable intention on the part of the PUC examiners to penalize TU for mistakes it made on Comanche Peak nuclear power plant. But the disallowance of costs goes far beyond reason in this case. In addition such a penalty most likely will filter down to the utility's customers in future years in the form of poor service.

Is it in the public interest to "penalize" a utility's customers for mistakes the utility made? Not in this instance since the penalty will eventually trickle down to customers. TU officials have admitted their mistakes, but the company also is widely regarded as one of the best-managed utilities in the nation. The PUC would not be wise to tie the company's hands so tightly through disallowances that it cannot do the job it's supposed to do: give customers dependable electrical service at reasonable rates.

ANOTHER VIEW

Policy-makers see flaw in Yugoslavia

Washington policy-makers have apparently realized the folly of backing a united Yugoslavia dominated by Serbian Communists. In a letter to Yugoslav President Stipe Mesic, President Bush urged an end to Belgrade's use of force against breakaway republics.

Slovenia and Croatia, whose democratic governments declared their independence ..., are being held in the union by force.

The Bush administration ... sent Secretary of State James Baker to Belgrade last month as an afterthought with instruction to communicate vague and unrealistic support to hold the Yugoslav federation together. It is apparent that Yugoslav Army generals felt free to interpret Baker and U.S. policy as advocating enforcement.

That scenario is still disturbingly reminiscent of the still-mysterious episode of botched communications between the U.S. ambassador and Saddam Hussein, after which the latter felt he could confidently invade Kuwait.

The failure to effectively comprehend the Yugoslav crisis exposes an increasingly apparent flaw in the Bush administration's self-celebrated ability to completely function in a New World Order — let alone offer any timely influence to prevent the fratricidal bloodletting in Yugoslavia.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, July 14, the 195th day of 1991. There are 170 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On July 14, 1789, during the French Revolution, citizens of Paris stormed the Bastille prison and released the seven prisoners inside.

On this date:

In 1798, Congress passed the Sedition Act, making it a federal crime to publish false, scandalous or malicious writing about the U.S. government.

In 1853, Commodore Matthew Perry relayed to Japanese officials a letter from former President Fillmore, requesting trade relations.

In 1881, outlaw William Bonney Jr., alias Billy the Kid, was shot and killed by Sheriff Pat Garrett in Fort Sumner, N.M.

In 1921, Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were convicted in Dedham, Mass. in the killing of a shoe company paymaster and his guard. (Sacco and Vanzetti were executed six years later.)

In 1958, the army of Iraq overthrew the monarchy.

In 1966, 25 years ago, eight student nurses were murdered by Richard Speck in a Chicago dormitory.

Disaster waits in the wings in Baltics

TALLINN, Estonia — The Soviets have removed all medium and long-range nuclear weapons from the powder keg that is the Baltic republics, and may also have taken the smaller, short-range nuclear devices home to Moscow. Sources here assured us that the United States need not fear that the breakaway republics will turn into nuclear-armed hotheads.

Anderson

But there is a nuclear threat in the Baltics about which the West should sound the alarm. It is a huge nuclear energy complex in Lithuania built on the Chernobyl model — a disaster waiting to happen. When a nuclear threat is discussed in the Baltics, that is the threat the Baltic leaders wish the West would take seriously.

Instead, the Baltic people take it as an insult that the Bush administration thinks they would have escalated their differences with Moscow into nuclear war by taking over the nuclear weapons that were once based here. Such threats are seen as something cooked up in Moscow, or even Washington, to prove the case that world stability is threatened by a breakup of the Soviet Union.

"This is a story to scare children," Lithuanian President Vytautus Landsbergis told us. "The three Baltic states do not have and do not want to have their own or any other kind of nuclear weapons."

Romualdas Razukas, leader of the Latvian Popular Front, called the nuclear weapons issue, "a myth which is cultivated and has support in some circles of the United States government. It is the myth that if the Soviet Union disintegrates, there will be 15 republics armed with nuclear weapons. It is a very dangerous myth and it's nonsense."

One Estonian official complained that Baltic people would not turn to nuclear weapons even if the Soviets left them lying around. "It is in nobody's interest to start throwing nuclear bombs thick and fast in the air," he said. "This could only happen if a madman does it."

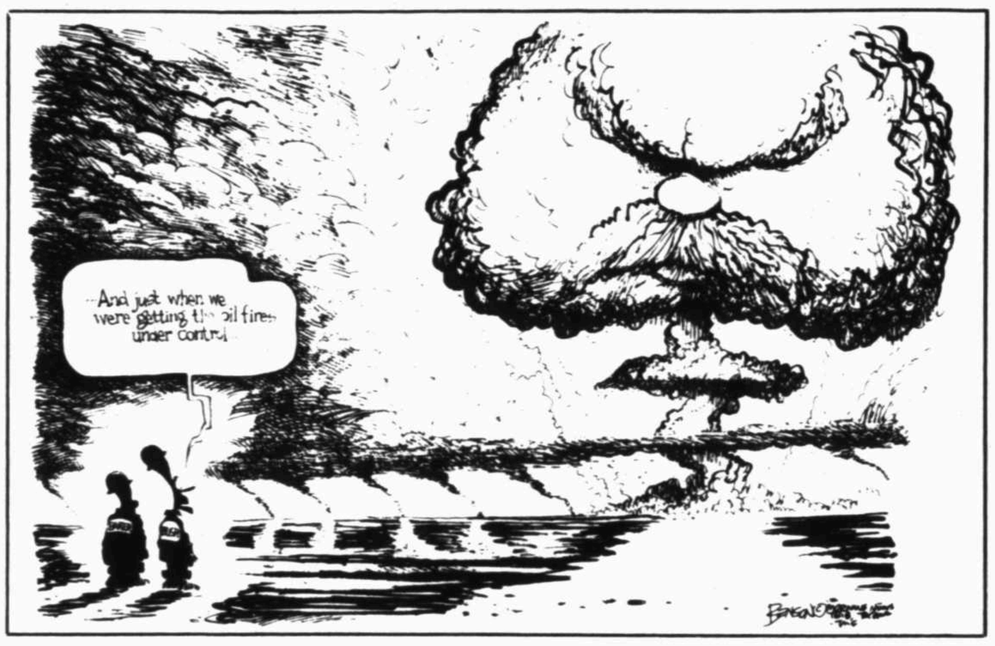

Tunne Kelam, chairman of the Council of Estonia, was one of those who pointed to what the real Western fear should be. "The greatest danger for the whole world is, in fact, the Soviet nuclear energy plants like the Chernobyl plant."

Baltic leaders are already secretly negotiating with the central Soviet government to take control of the lone nuclear power plant in the Baltics — the Ignalina complex in Lithuania. It was originally planned to be the largest reactor complex of its kind in the world. The Soviets built two of the proposed four nuclear reactors before loud protests from environmentalists halted the construction in 1989.

People around Ignalina do not sleep easy. The two reactors are the only graphite Chernobyl-style reactors brought into operation since the terrible Chernobyl accident in 1986. That accident killed 31 people immediately. It threatens to continue killing and maiming tens of thousands of people in and out of the Soviet Union who will fall victim to cancer and genetic abnormalities.

So far, the Soviets have refused to turn the Ignalina plant over to Lithuanian supervision, and won't even allow inspections of the plant, which appears to be placed, incredibly, near an active fault. Structural damage is inevitable over the next 25 years from the geological shifting along the fault line.

Ignalina is one alarming example of why the Baltic people are wary of keeping their future in the hands of the Soviet Union. They want to get control of the nuclear power plant as much as they want to get control of their destiny. And they see continued Western aid to the Soviet Union as a misguided attempt to prop up a lost cause.

Jack Anderson's and Dale Van Atta's column is distributed by United Feature Syndicate.

GEORGE WILL

Therapeutic history: How nice, how wrong

WASHINGTON — Congress is about to rename Montana's Custer Battlefield as Little Bighorn Battlefield with appropriate acknowledgement of the Indians who fought there. This small, suitable act of moral reparation is but one skirmish in a multi-front battle about the presentation of America's past, and hence the shape of its future.

Will

The battle rages around "multiculturalism." The issue is how to give various participants in America's drama their due without damaging the nation's animating premise.

In New York and California, the two most ethnically complex states, and elsewhere, school curricula are being revised, and sometimes improved. A valid aim is to show that baking bread, not just making laws, has mattered to the nation — that history should not neglect the anonymous. But the din now drowning civil conversation and common sense is the whine of axes being ground by groups trying to turn the teaching of history into political preaching.

Fortunately, Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., distinguished historian and dissenting participant in New York's curriculum revision, has written "The Disuniting of America," a trenchant dissection of today's "therapeutic history." Such history is not a craft, it is a weapon.

America originally aspired to be a transforming nation, severing roots and dissolving ancient manners and mentalities. But today there is a contrary vision, an America of prickly groups irritably asserting their inviolable identities. Instead of a nation of individuals exercising free choices, it is to be a nation of indelible group identities.

Today, says Schlesinger, black Americans, who have suffered generations of "psychological and cultural evisceration," understandably seek "an affirmative definition of their past." But what they get from some fraudulent "historians" are absurd and poisonous blends of cultural myths and biological determinism of a sort once favored by white supremacists.

Some black teachers proclaim black racial superiority based on "a high level of melanin," a chemical associated with skin pigmentation. A black professor involved in New York's curriculum revision professes to believe that Europeans, formed by living in caves, are cold, materialistic aggressive "ice people," whereas Africans, shaped by sunshine and melanin, are warm, humanistic "sun people."

Schlesinger tartly replies, "The West needs no lectures on the superior virtue of those 'sun people' who sustained slavery until Western imperialism abolished it." And he adds, "If some Kleagle of the Ku Klux Klan wanted to devise an educational curriculum for the specific purpose of handicapping and disabling black Americans, he would not be likely to come up with anything more diabolically effective than Afrocentrism."

The preposterous premise of feel-good history is that inspiration necessarily and only, comes from studying people of one's own ethnicity. (Do American children of Greek and Italian descent benefit more than others from studying ancient Greece and Rome?) But as one black historian rightly says, a black American and the grandson of Polish immigrants have more in common than the former has with a Nigerian or the later with a resident of Warsaw. This is because American nationality has always been creedal rather than racial or ancestral.

The new curricula of group grievances reflects the loss of faith in the unifying force of the democratic creed. These curricula, says Schlesinger, contribute to making America "a tangle of squabbling nationalities...a quarrelsome spatter of enclaves, ghettos, tribes."

The cult of ethnicity produces what Schlesinger calls a culture of self-pity and victimization. There is a "contagion of inflammable sensitivities" which makes the bonds of national identity brittle. It is instructive that this, perhaps the most serious counter-revolution ever mounted against the American Revolution, comes from the left. The stakes are high because, as Schlesinger says, "history is to the nation as memory is to the individual."

Let them eat photo ops and points of light

Washington's serenity is amazing. What do these Bush people take? They'd faint if offered pills or smoke, and you can't get Peruna anymore unless you know somebody with a great cellar.

Baker

So how do they manage to stay way out in space treating the wrack and ruin with this magnificently cool indifference?

Whole states are going broke, cities bankrupt, booming unemployment — boy, there's a dull word — and Washington's response?

Should the Feds do something about the wrack and ruin? Sure, but you can bet this crowd won't. They hate domestic problems. Press them about people sleeping in the streets or 34 million Americans without medical care, and they talk public-relations cant about "points of light."

Besides, refusing to concede that domestic problems should concern them is justified by the wisdom of the philosopher Reagan. "Government is the problem," he declared. George ("Read My Lips") Bush hews faithfully to this Gipperesque principle, and with sound reason.

It was the federal government that led the states, cities and counties into the present pickle. They used to get back a lot of the money their voters sent to Washington. Then, obedient to Reagan philosophy ("government is the problem"), Washington adopted a new policy. Basically, it said, "Your buck stops here."

The theory was that once you sent your buck to Washington, it became a government buck. And since government was the problem, terrible things would result if any fragment of this tainted money got back to its source. People would get hooked on good schools, fancy police work, clean water and such.

The government buck had to be disinfected, as it were, to prevent it from infesting the country. So it was sent to the Pentagon, which used it to buy goods for countries like Panama and Iraq, where its evil effects wouldn't matter much, since they needed to be taught a lesson anyhow.

Still the problem that government had caused long before Reagan made everyone see the light was gnawing at the national vitals. States, cities, towns, counties had become dangerously accustomed to getting their tainted bucks passed back.

So when Washington said, "The buck stops here, for your own good," the states, the cities, the towns and the counties were not altogether sincere when they said, "Mighty art thou, O Gipper and O Bush, and we thank thee for not burdening us with the terrible problem-causing buck which we have rendered unto thee."

Why were they not altogether sincere? Because if the buck stopped in Washington, they couldn't replace it with the buck necessary to keep state, city, town and county voters contented unless they raised state, city, town or county taxes.

The end of all this is predictable: Hordes of governors, mayors and county supervisors will be voted out of business in 1992. At the same time the usual 95 to 98 percent of Congress and President Bush will enjoy re-election, on ground that by doing nothing about the wrack and ruin they are saving us from that awful government that is the problem.

All right, much of this is ham-handed irony. I don't apologize. Stating some of the truly silly arguments conservatives invoke to explain why "government is the problem," such as the theory that welfare breeds unemployment, would make me indictable for high-school sarcasm.

In Washington there are people who believe such stuff, those cool, cool, serenely re-electable Washington cats.

Beribboned oaks in downtown Centennial Plaza

Ribbons symbolize love and devotion

I read Tod Roush's letter in Sunday's, July 7, newspaper with great interest. He is quite obviously uninformed about the tradition of yellow ribbons. These ribbons, which proudly fly from the Centennial Plaza trees, are an outward and visible sign of great love and devotion of the person who hung the ribbon, expressing their hope and prayers for the safe return on a serviceman or servicewoman. By tradition the ribbons do not come down until the person returns and personally takes the ribbon down.

How we wish that the ribbons didn't have to be hung in the first place. We most carefully asked permission to hang them and were granted permission to leave them until "they all come home." Yes, those ribbons are tired, faded, weather-beaten and still they do their job as our young people (all 48,000) still on foreign soil are doing their job. Yes, Mr. Roush, I want those ribbons down, too.

As for the ribbons being an "eyesore," they have been symbols of pride for many, many Midlanders...the pride of visitors to our city...I know of two cases where visitors returned to their homes and installed yellow ribbons on their town squares.

One young man returned home last week; to his great surprise he was greeted with yellow ribbons on his street, on his house, on his trees. He thought "there won't be anything left for me when I get home." His ribbon was watched after by friends and neighbors until he could go to the plaza and retrieve his own ribbon, with tears in his eyes.

When the time comes that "they all come home," the ribbons will come down. We are honored to have been accorded the use of our plaza to pay tribute to our kids.

Keep the ribbons up till war's end

I was very surprised to read the letter from Tod Roush who worked for the City of Midland and had to clean up after parties at Centennial Plaza. As I understand it, the Parks Department can and does many times require a substantial deposit for the use of any park facility. This insures that the facility is cleaned up and looks the same as it did before the event.

If Tod feels too good to earn his salary cleaning up, maybe we could let someone whose job is being phased out under the new budget volunteer.

Our son is in the Army and served in Saudi. When he came home, one of the first things we did was to drive him around Midland and downtown to the plaza. We had sent him a copy of the paper showing the ribbons being tied to the trees but someone forgot to tell us that this event was a party. No one was doing much celebrating at the time here, and he and many others were pretty busy fighting a war, etc. Anyway, he was so surprised to see all the yellow ribbons and signs supporting the troops. I was glad that they were still up. I heard him tell friends on the phone, "Mom had told me they supported us here, but I just had to see it for myself."

He took down his ribbon and one of those of a friend who asked him. I guess he was too interested in the feeling behind the ribbons to see how "tacky" they were and so happy to be home after two and half years to notice that he and others who fought in Saudi were yesterday's news.

I know that some of the troops that I spoke with there left their ribbons up until the war was declared to be over and everyone had an opportunity to return to Midland. Some of these same kids are back in Saudi today. I don't think they considered leaving these ribbons up as doing Midland a disservice or that they were keeping people from moving to this city.

Friendliness, patriotism and working hard may be out of vogue some places, but that's the kind of people I'd like to see visit and settle here.

When the war is declared to be over and all our kids have had an opportunity to come back to Midland, we'll be glad to volunteer to clean up this mess!

They're not trash; ribbons are special

I would like to make a few comments in response to Tod Roush's letter (Letters, July 7). First, I agree that it is everyone's responsibility to keep Midland clean.

Secondly, what really gets my goat is the lack of patriotism he has regarding the yellow ribbons tied to the trees at Centennial Plaza. Yes, the war is over; however, there are still troops serving America in the Persian Gulf. Even though the war has ended these men and women still need and deserve our support. Most of them feel that Americans have forgotten about them and with an attitude like his it's no wonder. While yellow ribbons may be an "eyesore" for Roush, they remind me, on a daily basis, of the relatives and friends who put their life on the line for me.

I have felt the joy of seeing a yellow ribbon untied and removed by a soldier that has safely returned home. I also feel a great deal of sadness in knowing that all the troops have not yet returned home. The names may have been washed away but the principle remains that same — our troops are supported and each of those ribbons symbolizes an individual whose family or friends thought enough of them to "tie one on."

We eagerly await a plaza sans yellow

May I express my view concerning the yellow ribbons that were referred to as "eyesores"" in Centennial Plaza.

Each one of the yellow bows was made with love by a spouse, parents, or other family members and by people who did not have a family member serving in Desert Shield-Desert Storm. People would gather after working and cut ribbons which were hand tied into a bow. A soldier's name and branch of service were printed on it.

After I read Tod Roush's letter (Letters, July 7), I wondered how many soldiers you supported during Operation Desert Shield-Desert Storm. Do you know what it feels like to receive a letter from a soldier thanking you or a group for the support given them and their fellow soldiers? There were hundreds of pieces of yellow ribbons placed inside letters that went to these soldiers and they loved them. One soldier tied his ribbon on his truck and it stayed on it through the war.

I wish I could give each soldier their ribbon but cannot because many are still involved in Desert Storm. In many towns, some soldiers will not see their ribbons because they gave up something very precious — their life! How would these soldiers'families feel knowing the ribbon representing their son or daughter was considered an "eyesore?"

How many civilians would volunteer to replace these soldiers so they could remove their ribbons?

I helped make those yellow bows and did it with pride, respect, and love. So the next time you see a ribbon or bow on the ground in Centennial Plaza, would you please be kind enough to pick it up and put it back on the tree. As you do this, think about that soldier and what he or she is doing for each one of us and pray that soldier is home or will soon be coming home. Also remember that the bow or ribbon you hold in your hand belongs to a soldier who risked the most precious thing they have — THEIR LIFE.

Thank you and God Bless America!

Cindy Vorheis

If you can't say something nice...

I am a soldier that just arrived home from Operation Desert Storm. I was truly amazed of how wonderful Centennial Plaza looked. The City of Midland has shown the world how much love and support they can give to the troops of the U.S.A.

In response to Tod Roush's letter, I don't care about his opinion, or how he feels, but he should keep his negative attitude to himself. Don't ruin the fun for the rest.

Long shall those 'eyesores' wave

I neither have nor need a maid. May I take Tod Roush's points as he presented them on July 7:

First: The yellow ribbons were placed in Centennial Plaza to remind passersby that American service personnel were serving and protecting our freedom on foreign soil, not as a part of a party but as a reminder that there should never be another Vietnam.

Second: The war is not over. There is a negotiated ceasefire, only. That ceasefire is holding only because of the perserverance and patience of the U.N. committee responsible for certifying Saddam Hussein's compliance. To this date his compliance is questionable at best.

Third: The condition of ribbons on the trees has been considered, and the lettering repaired more than once. Many of those represented have returned. Some have personally removed their ribbons to become part of good memories. More of those who have returned have requested the plastic bows remain until all their comrades return. As for Mr. Roush's "eyesores," long shall those eyesores fly with love, pride and prayer for each person individually and the multitudes who served and continue to serve in the armed services of our country.

When there are no Americans serving on foreign soil, all the yellow ribbons will come down. If that time happens in Roush's lifetime and mine, I will be more than happy to personally hand him the last ribbon from Centennial Plaza.

LETTERS

What are we really getting with Thomas?

It was no surprise when two articles appeared on the same day commending the nomination of Clarence Thomas to the Supreme Court of the United States. It was just what some Americans needed to ease their conscience and relieve them of any responsibility for actions both past and present, which still make this a dual society in terms of opportunity.

As an African-American I applaud Thomas' success and his rise from poverty in Georgia. However, I lament the fact this kind of struggle was necessary for one who is only 43 years old. I have to question why minority Americans still have to fight their way from such social and economic deprivation.

When the Reporter-Telegram published the editorial that said President Bush had no thought of color in mind, the Reporter-Telegram was being either uniquely naive or just plain dumb.

Do you really want people to believe that Bush had no thought of color or quota in mind when he recommended Clarence Thomas? It might not have been his overriding concern. I think his first concern was getting another voice on the court that would perpetuate the conservative philosophy that says, "I've got mine and if you haven't gotten yours it's because you haven't tried hard enough." The president gets the best of both worlds: an integrated court, at least in color, and another conservative.

The thing that bothers me most about the recommendation of Clarence Thomas is that most majority Americans see him as an oddity, a black man who had the strength of character to work and make something of himself, despite the odds. Well, I've got a news flash for you. There are hundreds of thousands of people like Clarence Thomas out there, some older, some younger, who have done and are doing the same thing.

They hold down jobs everyday, pay their taxes, clothe and feed their children, send them to school, and do it on a third of what the "normal" American family earns and very often in a restricted environment.

The basic difference between Clarence Thomas and the majority of African-Americans is this: As we struggle against society's impediments to our progress, we nonetheless choose to embrace the concept that we are our brother's keeper. And we try to clear the path for those who would come after us.

It remains to be seen if Clarence Thomas still remembers that concept.

If not for Dynagen I'd breathe easier

Dynagen of Odessa is the 'bad guy.' No one else did it to them.

Dynagen's emissions gave me constant sinusitis (I lived more than two miles downwind), ruined my enjoyment of Odessa — an otherwise lovely and progressive city, and caused me to accept a lateral transfer back to Midland in April.

I now live more than 20 miles from Dynagen, but even now when we get a steady wind for two or three days from Dynagen's direction (about every six months), I get the same old "Dynagen Sinusitis."

Don't let Tim Gorman brainwash you. He is just a hired public relationist.

I have no interest in enjoining the suit. I just do not and I never have enjoyed Dynagen's disgusting, unhealthy odor.

Planned Parenthood not getting my money

I read with interest the "Women Going Backwards" letter from Sue Dorrell July 10th.

It seems ironic that she, like most pro-abortionists, finds the issue basically a "women's rights" issue, while at the same time denying the most basic right, that of life, to the thousands (millions?) of aborted babies which are female. Where are the rights of the women of tomorrow who are being killed today? Do we have the option of literally destroying their life in the interest of our own convenience?

As a taxpayer, I feel that I have the right to ask the federal government not to spend my hard-earned tax dollars to support death through abortion. If other citizens feel the need to promote abortion, let them use their own private dollars to do so. Is Planned Parenthood nothing more than just another government entity which must be federally-funded to survive? Let them support themselves using funds other than my tax dollars.

SPEAKING OUT

Where have all our role models gone?

By Margie Mills

Be Cool! Stay in School! This plea is ever-present on our TV screen encouraging young people to find a better way to make their lives productive.

There is a desperate need for black teachers in our society, and the best way to fill this need is to get more high school graduates to enter the profession.

Our black children need role models who will enhance their culture, their identity and prevailing worth. They need to be taught that there is nothing bad about being different.

In our system there are are so few black teachers, because they have retired or changed professions, which leaves a very small percentage on each campus. According to statistics received from Midland Independent School District's records, in 1988-1989 school year there were 7.9 percent black teachers, 1.9 percent Hispanic and 90.2 percent whites nationwide. In MISD for the year 1990-91, there were 5 percent black teachers, 9.5 percent Hispanic and 90 percent white and in neighboring Ector County Independent School District, there were 4 percent black, 9 percent Hispanic and 87 percent white teachers. As shown in these records, the number of black teachers is declining.

There are unlimited opportunities to succeed and blacks need to become unusually determined and deeply committed to the profession. Perseverance, application and persistence are the main ingredients.

At the age of 40-plus, and with great inspiration from my best friend, my grandmother, I decided to pursue an education.

I chose to be a teacher.

I started with the opening of Midland College. I continued my studies at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, working at Pease Elementary School's Special Education department as an aide and going to class at night to earn my B.A. degree.

Although this task had many, many difficult moments, sleepless nights, earnest prayers, shedded tears, sacrificial energies, I fulfilled my promise to Grandmother and myself. She had lived to witness it all. Her prayers and encouraging words, advice and wisdom meant more to me than anything else.

My advice to readers is: don't give up no matter what your age, race or national origin. It can be done; it takes initiative, determination, and hard work.

There are many programs to financially assist you, through scholarships, grants, and loans. So please don't put it off; it is a rewarding experience to be an effective instrument in the shaping of a child's life. The work through the years is one of the exciting and untold stories in the field of education.

Even so, the teachers who remain are not sufficient to meet the demand. Students themselves continue to increase in number. Curriculums continue to increase in complexity, demanding specialties hitherto unanticipated. It is now painfully clear that teaching — once the bulwark of professional life among black Americans and an important factor in their ongoing education strivings — is declining in appeal. The consequences of this can be devastating. If it continues it will mean not only that blacks who are in the education field will drop out of one of the oldest and most honored professions, but also that young blacks will be deprived of the role models and a special kind of caring that are essentially irreplaceable. And the dropout rate among them will continue.

Turn back the clock, we need to return to the situation in which teaching is so attractive that it will once again draw in vast numbers of able, dedicated, committed black teachers. We need to do everything possible to retain young blacks in secondary schools and beyond. Otherwise, they will be recruits for unemployment and greater marginality. The need for black teachers has reached the point of desperation. As a result, the trend in both areas (teachers and students) must be stopped if we are to see anything like a healthy attitude toward — and respect for — education in the black community.

A 30-year resident of Midland, Margie Mills is a second grade teacher at Pease Elementary School.

America, heal thy cultural arteriosclerosis

Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — For reasons that I hope my readers will understand, I have again asked Bernard Kaplan, the Hearst Newspapers' foreign affairs writer, to fill in for me in writing my column this week. Here is his report.

Hearst

Yugoslavia is a long way from America, and the ethnic violence that is threatening to tear that country apart may, at first glance, seem to have little pertinence to U.S. problems.

The deadly animosity between Croats, Slovenes and Serbs — ethnic groups that many people had barely heard of until a few weeks ago — is puzzling to Americans who manage to live in comparative harmony with neighbors of the most diverse ethnic backgrounds.

However, the failure of the Yugoslav communities to meld into a single nation after more than 70 years together should provide a warning to those in the United States who advocate excessive "multiculturalism," urging blacks, Hispanics and other minorities, especially those of non-European origin, to opt out of the American mainstream in favor of cultural "separateness."

Many foreigners shake their heads in despair and disbelief at this idea.

To them, America's achievement in creating a great and stable nation out of so many disparate elements remains one of history's miracles.

They simply don't understand the apparent readiness of some Americans to deny and destroy one of the foundation stones of their country's greatness.

Jean d'Ormesson, a leading French writer, returned from a recent visit to the United States bewildered by the thinking he encountered among many leftwing intellectuals and academics. "In the guise of social objectivity," he wrote, "they disparage the undoubted triumphs that have been achieved by their society."

Visitors like d'Ormesson aren't starry-eyed. They recognize where America society falls short, perhaps with greater acuity than some natives do.

But the French author emphasized that those who denounce racial and ethnic discrimination in America should also be "aware that nowhere else has as much been done to bring about racial equality and justice."

He spoke, d'Ormesson explained, as the citizen of a country which boasts an enviable tradition of freedom but is, nonetheless, being rocked by explosive social tensions and mounting violence as a result of its inability to bring about racial integration on a modest scale compared with that in America.

The French are experiencing enormous difficulty in integrating African and North African immigrants who comprise fewer than 5 per cent of their population.

France's handicap is that it lacks the American tradition of the melting pot.

The scorn poured nowadays on the melting pot ideal, particularly on some U.S. campuses, strikes onlookers like d'Ormesson as completely wrong-headed.

Colors mark spot where not to park

By Lyn Miller

To park or not to park, that is the question.

And, the answer is — if the curb is painted yellow, blue, white, green or red, it is unlawful to park there because that area has been designated for a specific purpose in the control of traffic.

In accordance with the Texas Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices and with the City of Midland Code, these markings are used to supplement the regulations and warnings conveyed by other traffic control devices, such as signs and signals, or, in some cases, used alone to produce results that cannot be obtained through the use of any other device.

With regard to the latter, painting the curb with the proper marking serves as an effective means of indicating certain regulations or warnings that otherwise could not be clearly understood.

A curb painted yellow indicates that a vehicle may not be stopped or parked by that curb, except as is necessary to avoid conflict with other traffic or in compliance with law or the directions of a police officer or traffic control device.

White marking on a curb indicates a freight loading zone of 30 minutes between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, and use of the zone requires a permit issued by the City of Midland in the form of a permanent nontransferable leading zone sticker. Vehicles not displaying that sticker are not allowed to stop or park in the white zone for any purpose or length of time.

An application to permit use of a loading zone may be obtained from the Traffic Division of the Midland Police Department and requires approval of the chief of police.

Permits are issued for placement on the right hand side of the windshield on commercial vehicles, which must display the name of their firm, as specified in the City Code, on both sides of the vehicle.

Curbs painted blue signify a zone for use in the loading and unloading of passangers, whereby, persons should not stop or park in the roadway for this purpose, but should drive to the right hand sidewalk, as nearly as possible, or to the extreme right hand side of the road as nearly as practicable.

Green curbs signify a bus loading zone and are, primarily, used in school areas for the loading and unloading of passengers. No other vehicles are authorized to stop or park in the green zone.

Curbs painted red indicate a fire zone, whereby, parking is prohibited except by emergency vehicles.

The curbs of traffic islands are also marked with either reflectorized yellow or white paint indicating delineation of traffic. Yellow paint is placed on curbs of islands located in the line of traffic flow and serves to channel traffic to the right of the obstruction. White paint is used to indicate that traffic may pass on either side of the island. For those islands without curbs, the appropriate color of paint is placed on the street beside the island.

The use of traffic control devices in Midland is under the direction of the Traffic Division of the city's Engineering and Transportation Department.

For additional information regarding curb markings, or procedures for the installation of a loading zone, contact Gary Saunders, traffic coordinator, at 685-7280.

Lyn Miller, an employee at City Hall, coordinates the information for this column.

City's police officers must be fit for the job

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

The stereotype of the police officer who spends too much time in a donut shop doesn't sit well with the Midland Police Department.

As a result, the department maintains a physical fitness requirement for officers — one of only a few such programs statewide.

"We feel like it's extremely important because their life or the safety of the public could depend on it," said Sgt. Lindy Therwhanger, physical fitness training coordinator for the police department.

Fitness requirements begin when someone applies to become an officer.

"We at the Midland Police Department are trying to insure that the people we hire are able to do the job they were hired to do," Therwhanger said.

Applicants must be at or above the 40 percentile of the population in four areas of fitness: aerobic power, flexibility, dynamic strength and body composition. Guidelines for those level are set by the Institute for Aerobic Research in Dallas and determined by age and gender.

Aerobic power is measured through a 1½-mile run. For example, a man between 20 and 29 years old must complete the run within 12 minutes and 51 seconds to meet the 40 percentile. A woman in the same age group is allotted a maximum time of 15 minutes and 26 seconds.

Flexibility is determined through stretching tests that focus on the lower back and hamstrings. Flexibility helps prevent injuries, Therwhanger said. It is also one of the hardest areas to improve, he added.

Dynamic strength, or muscular endurance, is calculated by the number of sit-ups and push-ups a person can do in separate one minute periods. To pass, at least 38 sit-ups and 29 push-ups must each be accomplished for a man, 20 to 29 years old. For similar-aged women, 32 sit-ups and 23 off-the-knee push-ups are the minimums.

'It takes a long time to train a police officer and if you lose him to bad health, you can't replace his experience.'

— Sgt. Lindy Therwhanger, MPD physical fitness training coordinator

"We lose more of our new applicants on sit-ups and the run — probably the majority from the run," Therwhanger said.

Finally, an applicant must meet body composition — or lean mass versus fat — requirements. Men, 20 to 29, are allowed up to 17.4 percent body fat, and women, same age group, 23.7 percent.

The body composition portion of the test can be waived by the police chief, as in the case of someone who doesn't grossly exceed the 40 percentile and excels in other areas.

Once someone becomes a police officer, he or she must submit to physical fitness test every six months. The goal is not to make officers great athletes, but to get them to take care of themselves, Therwhanger said.

Women Lawyers' Association gains members, clout

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Ten years ago, there were only about half a dozen female lawyers practicing in Midland County.

Now, there are 48.

And as women have gained greater prominence in the legal community here, their ability to influence the community as a whole also has grown.

A medium for that influence is the Midland County Women Lawyers' Association, which is preparing to enter its second year with this week's installation of new officers.

Outgoing association President Dorothy Palumbo said members are looking forward to tackling an expanded agenda of projects next year.

"We never really got it off the ground this year," she said of the association's attempt to provide pro bono legal services to disadvantaged Midlanders. "We tried to organize it and I think that's something (incoming President) Sara Fagan is going to concentrate on this year."

Other legal groups — the Midland County Bar Association and the Midland County Young Lawyers Association, for example — do a number of community service projects every year. But many local women attorneys would like to do such projects within the context of a group that is especially attuned to their needs, Midland attorney Carmen Eiker said.

"Most of us are very active participants in the Midland County Bar Association and the Young Lawyers Association," said Ms. Eiker, a retiring vice president of the Women Lawyers' Association. "We are very active in the other bars, but this gives us the opportunity to enjoy

Bluebird Park meets needs of baseball players, public

■ Major portions of $650,000 development project for park are complete.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

In a city where caliche, thorny brush and grass rife with cockle burrs dominate the open landscape, a well-manicured park provides an aesthetic punch.

And Bluebird Park, the city's third largest, has just entered the environmental ring in northwest Midland.

City parks officials said the crowds gathering to watch a little-league baseball tournament now under way at Bluebird underscores the desire to recreate here.

A 541-space parking lot jammed with vehicles and proud parents sitting in lawn chairs around baseball diamonds are signs that the park already is a public hit.

Major portions of the $650,000 development project for the 33-acre park off Bluebird Lane were completed last week when final touches were put on baseball fields.

Bluebird is unique among Midland's parks because it is the result of extensive long-range planning, said Chuck Swallow, administrative assistant of community services.

"It's a good development. It's the first park here that has been planned and done in a logical manner," Swallow said. "Fully developed, it's going to be real nice."

The city, private sector and a local foundation have all pitched in to create Bluebird, which will soon see yet another phase in its three-year development scheme.

When fully completed next year, the city will have spent $186,000, while private donations will pay $214,000 of the project. The Abell-Hanger Foundation has contributed $250,000.

"Building this park would have been tough without private donations," Swallow said. "With everything we've had happen the past few years with the economy, there wasn't hardly any money in the city for capital development for parks."

The fund-raising muscle behind private-sector donations were the Midland Junior Baseball Association and Midland

Cholera crops up every year or two in Texas

Hearst News Service

Cholera is no stranger to southeast Texas.

"We have a case every year or the other," says Dr. Herbert DuPont, director of the Center for Infectious Diseases at the University of Texas Health Science Center at Houston.

In 1981, 17 men on an offshore drilling rig near Port Arthur came down with cholera in what Texas public health officials described at the time as the largest single outbreak of the disease in the United States this century.

Only two of the victims were hospitalized, and all recovered. Health officials said a Louisiana worker probably caught the disease at home and contaminated the brackish waters surrounding the rig with the cholera bacteria. The rig's drinking water was contaminated after a worker accidentally left open a valve in the water system, allowing tainted water to enter the tank.

The gentle world of collecting baseball cards has lost its flavor

Is nothing sacred these days?

I mean, really.

Does everything that was once good and innocent eventually have to be taken over by the moneychangers? Can't we keep a few things as they were?

Ott

Life doesn't have to resemble a Mark Twain novel or even Mayberry, N.C., but can't we — at least once in awhile — sit back and enjoy things for what they are without worrying about their price tag or, worse, their longterm investment value?

I speak of baseball cards.

Surely, you remember how it used to be. On a sweltering Saturday afternoon, you and your friends would gather at the corner mom and pop grocery store and spend an entire week's allowance on terribly important items — a NuGrape soda pop, a small bag of salty peanuts, a Baby Ruth candy bar, a comic book or two and several packages of baseball cards, the kind that had a stick of bubble gum inside.

Then you would sit around with the gang, sipping your NuGrape, and working out trades. "I'll give you two Clete Boyers for that Brooks Robinson you just got."

"No way," your friend says while pouring peanuts in his Coca-Cola. "Throw in a Moose Skowron and I'll think about it."

"That's highway robbery," you counter. "Brooks Robinson ain't worth that much."

"Maybe not," the friend says. "But that's what it's going to take." He grins an evil grin and chews on a toothpick.

You ponder the offer for several minutes and finally decide against it.

A considerable discussion follows over who the best centerfielder is — Mickey Mantle or Willie Mays — before someone finally says, "Let's go to the park and get a game going." And, everyone hops on their bicycles and peddles away.

Life was so simple back then.

But the point is, kids collected baseball cards because it was fun and because we loved the game. The major league players were our heroes and we fully realized that a baseball card was in all likelihood the closest we would ever get to seeing them.

Everyone, it seemed, had shoe boxes full of cards. We would spend hours looking at them and memorizing the stats on the back.

We may have worked out trades for our favorite players, but it certainly couldn't be considered a major business transaction. Money rarely changed hands.

It was just the thing that kids did on a slow hot summer afternoon.

Now all of that has changed.

The art of collecting baseball cards has become big business. No longer is it a leisurely summer hobby for small boys whose eyes get big when they hear their grandfathers talk about heroic exploits of ballplayers from a bygone era.

That would be too harmless. A love of money has entered the picture.

We shouldn't be surprised.

Wheeling and dealing has become a part of modern day life. It is not unusual, for example, to hear reports of grown men selling a particularly valuable card for several thousand dollars. Many of them, in fact, have quit their regular jobs and entered the collecting business fulltime.

Even the ballplayers themselves have gotten into the act.

It used to be that youngsters would gather at the ballpark, lean over the rightfield railing and plead with players to autograph anything they could get their hands on — a program, a ball, a glove or even an old scrap of paper.

The players, of course, would oblige. The more accommodating ones would patiently sign until the last child was satisfied.

Today it doesn't work that way.

Players, who are already getting paid millions of dollars to play a kid's game, charge for their signature. They attend giant shows and for a set fee will sign a predetermined number of cards — or other pieces of memorabilia. The people then take the items that have been signed and attempt to sell them to other collectors for a profit.

In a way, you can't blame the players. They are being used by the professional collectors. It is not the stary-eyed youngster who is pleading for today's autograph. It is a shrewd businessman with a keen eye on a future profit.

The athletes are merely looking out for No. 1. "If you're going to turn this into a business deal," they seem to be saying, "Then I want my cut, too."

Kind of sad, isn't it?

The age of innocence passes much too quickly.

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

DEATHS

the fellowship and the company of each other.

"It's adding to what the other bar associations are doing, not detracting from it."

Among the projects planned for next year is a series of legal clinics on a variety of subjects, including wills and probate matters, Ms. Eiker said.

The clinics, which will be presented in cooperation with West Texas Legal Services and Casa De Amigos community center, represent an ambitious undertaking for a group that started off as little more than a lunch club.

Last year, the Women Lawyers' Association presented Christmas gift baskets to women at the Permian Basin Battered Women's Shelter. Other projects, however, remained only in the planning stages.

"I think for any organization, it takes awhile to get things going," said Ms. Eiker, who headed the association's pro bono committee. "I feel that for our first year, we accomplished a lot."

Ms. Palumbo said it hasn't been easy to make the transition from a purely social, informal group of attorneys who met occasionally for lunch to a full-fledged civic organization.

And the association still remains a social outlet for the 15 or so women who pay dues and regularly attend the monthly meetings.

"Most of the time we just like to meet and visit," she said. "It's kind of an outlet, I guess. It's nice to get together with a group of professional women to discuss things that happen in your profession."

Unique problems face female attorneys and other female professionals, she explained, not the least of which involve juggling professional and family concerns.

"It's nice to hear that they go through some of the same things I go through," said Ms. Palumbo, who balances her job in the city of Midland's legal department with the demands of two young children. "I think that most people who have a job have the same problems."

One problem that Midland's female attorneys don't seem to be faced with is discrimination.

"I've been able to successfully have a solo practice in Midland for nine years, and I don't think I could do that without the confidence of the other members of the bar," Ms. Eiker said.

Mary Lou Cassidy, who has been practicing at Midland's Stubbeman, McCrae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder law firm since 1979, said she has not encountered overt discrimination in Midland. However, she said, it has taken a long time for women to establish a toe-hold in the legal community here.

"There were no women in our law firm at the time I joined, and very few practicing in firms in Midland ... and now there are quite a few," said Ms. Cassidy, an oil and gas lawyer. Still, she said, there are only four women at the Stubbeman firm, which employs about 27 lawyers.

Figures like that ought to change now that more women are attending law school and preparing to enter the work force, Ms. Cassidy said.

"There are many more women in law schools — most law schools are nearly half women now," she said. "You want to hire the best coming out of law school, and many of those are female."

It's a slow process, but women are gradually making inroads into the legal profession in Texas. The number of licensed female attorneys in the state climbed from 3,839, or 10.7 percent of the total, in 1981, to 11,342, or 21.2 percent of the total, this year.

Martha Dickey, an Austin attorney who is Travis County's state bar representative, said many women see law school as a fast track to a prestigious career.

"They realize that if you're interested in changing things, the law is a pretty good field to be in," she said. She also speculated that the flexible nature of a legal career is attractive to women.

"There are many other things you can do besides going to work for a big law firm," she said.

In spite of the flexibility, however, legal careers are demanding. And Ms. Dickey expressed hope that organizations like Midland's Women Lawyers' Association would work toward making the profession "saner" for all attorneys.

The issue of childbirth may be a catalyst for the transformation of legal careers into something less stressful than they currently are, Ms. Dickey said.

"The issue that I'm noticing now is how they can accommodate doing both," she said. Law firms are "grappling" to accommodate the demands that women are bringing to the work place, and in the end firms will have to accede if they hope to succeed, she said.

"They (law firms) are learning that they can't afford to waste the skills of the these really bright women attorneys. They're going to have to accommodate them."

BLUEBIRD: Park will help alleviate space problems at city's ballparks

(From 1C)

Junior Soccer Association.

James Stanton, a baseball association board member, said Midlanders are fervent supporters of park development, especially when it includes sports facilities.

"It's really not too hard to raise money," Stanton said. "People are always willing to help youth activities in Midland. People will always help and get involved in these types of projects.

"But I don't want to take anything away from the city. The city does a lot of work."

But private involvement does not end with financial aid, Stanton said. Members of both associations and others around the city, he said, pitch in to maintain the parks.

"People want their kids to play in a good facility," he said.

Bluebird, which has the only lighted fields among city parks, will help relieve overcrowding at other baseball complexes in the city, he said.

Planning for the park began in the early 1980s, when the Bluebird blueprint was etched into municipal master plans that included three other parks. Bluebird joins Windlands in north-central Midland as two of the developed parks.

Land for a third park on the city's east side off Fairgrounds Road was purchased last year. The land-clearing phase is under way.

Swallow said plans for the fourth park, which would be located somewhere in southwest Midland, are five to 10 years away.

Bluebird construction started in January 1989. Since then, seven T-ball baseball fields, four little-league baseball fields, 11 soccer fields, three rest rooms and concession stands have been built there.

Developing a 4-acre section of Bluebird into a neighborhood park is next on the construction agenda.

Walkways, trails and playground equipment will be installed sometime before February 1992, Swallow said.

The city, working with Keep Midland Beautiful, is planning to ask a nationwide tree-planting organization for a $30,000 grant, he said. The grant would be matched with $30,000 in local money, he said.

The money would cover planting 300 more trees to join the 70 already at the park, Swallow said. It also would include site preparation, materials, irrigation and a three-year maintenance program, he said.

TOP: Program part of three-year effort to boost officers' fitness

plemented this policy May 1, 1989, as part of a three-year progam to boost officers' fitness.

By April 1992, the department hopes to peak at a fitness compliance for officers at the 50 percentile.

Currently the department is working to attain a 40 percentile for officers. In October, the goal will be 45 percentile.

At this time, 50 percent of all officers are at the 40 percentile or above.

"The officers at least 40 percent are probably at 50, 60 or 70 percent range," Therwhanger said.

Of the 50 percent that are not yet up to par in this phase of the program, many are lacking in just one of the four areas. The leading deficiency is the aerobic test, Therwhanger said.

Overall, the force is in good shape, he said.

"We don't feel we have anyone that can't go out and do their job," he said.

And doing the job — sometimes a matter of life and death — hinges on being fit.

In addition to the welfare of officers while on the job, the program also aims at long-term survival: the average mortality rate for police officers is 59 years old.

Being in good shape and having a good appearance is also beneficial for the confidence of the officer himself and the confidence the public has in him.

The program can also be cost effective, Therwhanger said.

"It takes a long time to train a police officer and if you lose him to bad health, you can't replace his experience. We look at the program as an investment in our officers, a valuable resource," he said.

The majority of fitness training by officers is on their own time, Therwhanger said.

Therwhanger said he can't imagine not having the program, which he feels all departments should have.

Another public service agency in Midland isn't as lucky as the police department.

The Midland Fire Department has not required fitness testing for its firefighters for about the last four years, said Fire Chief James Roberts.

"It was one of the luxury things we couldn't afford to do any more," he said, adding that his department hasn't had a budget increase in about five years.

Roberts said he would like to see the program redeveloped though, which he estimated cost about $30 to $50 per person.

"Firefighting is a rigorous job ... physical fitness is a plus. Healthier people do a better job," he said.

"I'd like all of us to be in better shape," Roberts said.

Longtime free-press advocate dies at 83

FORT WORTH (AP) — Funeral services were held Saturday for Homa S. Hill, 83, a Fort Worth attorney for more than 60 years and staunch advocate of the free press and freedom of speech.

He died Thursday at a Fort Worth retirement center after a two-month illness.

Hill was the father of John Hill, a judge on the state 2nd Court of Appeals in Fort Worth.

Funeral services were at Broadway Baptist Church in Fort Worth, followed by burial in Shannon Rose Hill Memorial Park.

Texas-based cable system decides it does want its MTV

NEW YORK (AP) — A Texas-based cable TV system that dropped MTV after complaints about sex and violence in music videos has re-signed with the rock 'n' roll channel, the companies announced Friday.

There was no explanation for TCA Cable's change of heart, but protests by customers in Texas may have contributed. "TCA has a number of customers who want MTV in their homes," said MTV spokeswoman Carole Robinson.

TCA, based in Tyler, Texas, agreed Friday to carry the Nickelodeon, VH-1 and MTV: Music Television services, the three cable TV programming networks owned by Viacom International Inc.

"TCA will relaunch MTV in certain of its systems during the next 30 days," it said in a statement. "The agreement terminates all legal claims between the parties."

On June 28, TCA dropped MTV from the services it offers to 53 cable companies in Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, New Mexico and Idaho. TCA has about 420,000 subscribers, 175,000 of them in Texas.

TCA also presented MTV Networks with a restraining order to keep the Nickelodeon and VH-1 channels available.

Pete Oppel, a spokesman for TCA, said the company didn't know in which or how many of its systems MTV would be relaunched.

"The choice was how to carry MTV. They wanted to give it to the viewers as an option. Now these people have the option."

TCA announced June 25, its decision to drop MTV while keeping VH-1 and Nickelodeon.

"As a corporate citizen, we don't feel we can continue to offer borderline pornographic materials," said Randy Ellisor, a Huntsville, Texas-based TCA executive.

Robert Rogers, TCA's chairman and chief executive, added, "We're had so many complaints from teachers' groups, the city council, parents' groups, that we realized it is not suitable for a general audience."

The decision did not sit well with staffers at radio station "Z-93," KQIZ of Amarillo, Texas, who polled their audience and put together a protest song, "It's Unavailable," based on the group E.M.F.'s hit "It's Unbelievable."

"There had been small demonstrations outside TCA Cable here," said KQIZ program director Stu Smoke. "As of Wednesday, they moved them to City Hall."

"The majority were not so much in favor of MTV so much as they were against the appearance of censorship," Smoke said. "A lot of people weren't saying, 'Hey, I want my MTV.' They were saying, 'Hey, I want my freedom of choice." me."

At Bryan-College Station, Texas, graduate student Gwynne Ash of Texas A&M University was bothered that TCA had based its decision on a small, unreleased number of complaints.

Ms. Ash and several friends distributed fliers on campus — where most of the students are away on summer break — urging people to call TCA in protest of the MTV decision. More than 700 callers responded the next day.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Look for MC fall bulletin in today's MRT

By H.A. Tuck

Elsewhere in today's issue of the Reporter-Telegram is, potentially, one of the most important printed pieces you'll ever read.

The 1991 Midland College fall bulletin is an insert in the paper. The bulletin includes a listing of both credit and non-credit courses being offered during the fall term.

With July just two weeks old, why would the fall bulletin be distributed so early? Because early registration for returning and former students starts in just eight days — on July 22.

The bulletin lists the early and regular registration days, when classes start, holidays, when the sessions end, fees, entrance requirements, all that pertinent stuff.

You'll have a week to look through the bulletin, pick out the courses you'd like to take and then register. Even the non-credit courses are being filled this early, so don't be disappointed by waiting too long to sign up. Since the bulletin is separate, you might wish to keep it for reference during the entire semester.

Chaparral Center Director Mike Stevens has had a great youth baseball season, or even seasons, this year. He helped coach the City League Little League champions for the second straight year, plus an undefeated T-Ball and machine-pitch season. With sons in two different age-groups, it keeps him pretty busy. His youth basketball team also had a successful season.

One of the little-known aspects of Midland College's success has been its advisory committees. Before any vocational or technical program is allowed to start, several steps have to take place. The state requires that "needs surveys" must be made.

These determine whether there are needs for certain skills that the college proposes to teach. For example, if MC decided to start a forestry program it might have a hard time proving that there is a need for trained forestry personnel. The needs survey can take care of such questions before major expenditures are made on equipment and instructional personnel.

When a need is established, an advisory committee is formed to provide input to the college about what needs to be taught, in what sequence it should be taught, what types of equipment will be needed, what the instructors' qualifications should be, and what the students should know when they completed their training.

Some of the courses are mandated by state agencies.

Even after a program is established, needs can change and the advisory committee usually knows about those before anyone else.

When a program has been established, and is running smoothly, the advisory committee might meet only one or two times per year. When a program is new, or when rapid change is under way, the committee may meet monthly.

Advisory committee members usually are business or industry owners, top management personnel, or technical persons. Sometimes all three are involved to provide the input necessary. If you are dealing with Health Care programs such as nursing, radiography technicians, respiratory care personnel, then you will have physicians, chief nurses, hospital administrators, and department heads on the various committees.

Auto or Diesel Technology programs, on the other hand, likely would have auto dealerships, trucking companies, independent garages, and parts retailers represented on their committees.

The advisory committees, in short, provide direct communication about how a program should operate, what its content should be, and what is expected of the program's graduates.

Then there's the reality of some vo-tech programs. Our electronics instructor claims he has never had a person graduate from his program.

Gracious, is this program a total failure? No, it's a complete success, says the instructor, who notes that industries have hired every student before the student could complete the two-year program.

Our hat is off to the hundreds of local residents who serve as advisory committee members without pay to assure that our vo-tech programs are consistently top-quality and in tune in the needs of local employers. They do a great job and we appreciate their contributions!

The second session of this year's Kids' College at Midland College starts tomorrow afternoon. When last we checked, there were some openings in a few of the classes. If you have a child or grandchild who has completed first through sixth grade, come to the Kids' College office in the Physical Education Building on Monday between 9 a.m. and 12 noon.

The session is July 15-25 with classes Monday through Thursday.

There are three class periods each day, starting at 12:20 p.m., 2 p.m., and 3:30 p.m. The final period ends at 4:50 p.m.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

PUBLIC HEARING ON
1991 COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

50 Legal Notices

The City of Midland City Council will hold a public hearing to review programs and projects proposed to be funded under the 1991 Community Development Program. The public hearing will be held in the Council Chambers, City Hall, 300 N. Loraine, Midland, Texas, on Tuesday, July 23, 1991, beginning at 5:15 p.m.

A total of $831,000 from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development will be allocated to the City for 1991 CDBG projects. An additional $32,000 of anticipated program income will be available for 1991 projects.

At the Public Hearing, the City Council will also consider amending the Policy on Amendments to the CDBG Program. The policy is proposed to change so that a CDBG amendment is needed whenever a project will exceed its budget by ten percent or $10,000 whichever is greater.

For additional information on the CDBG Program or the public hearing, call the City's Planning Division Office at 685-7408.

SHOULD OUR TAX MONEY GO TO SO-CALLED "FAMILY PLANNING" PROGRAMS THAT DO NOT WORK?

SHOULD OUR TAX MONEY BE USED TO PROMOTE ABORTION FOR MINORS WITHOUT PARENTAL CONSENT?

For years now we have known that "Family Planning" programs such as Planned Parenthood's, DO NOT work...

"As the number and proportion of teenage family-planning clients increased, we observed a corresponding increase in the teenage pregnancy and abortion rates..."

"Our interest was prompted by the rising trends in teen-age pregnancy rates, despite large federal expenditures to help fund family-planning clinics and extend contraceptive services to teen-agers.

CURBING BIRTHS, NOT PREGNANCIES Stan E. Weed
The Wall Street Journal 10/14/1986

If any tax money should be spent, it should be spent to promote the health and well-being of teen-agers and the poor...not to promote medical killing (i.e. abortion) as a valid solution for personal or social "burdens".

SHOULD YOUR TAX MONEY BE USED TO PROMOTE ABORTION?

LET YOUR FEDERAL OFFICIALS KNOW HOW YOU FEEL!

Pretty as a picture...practical design

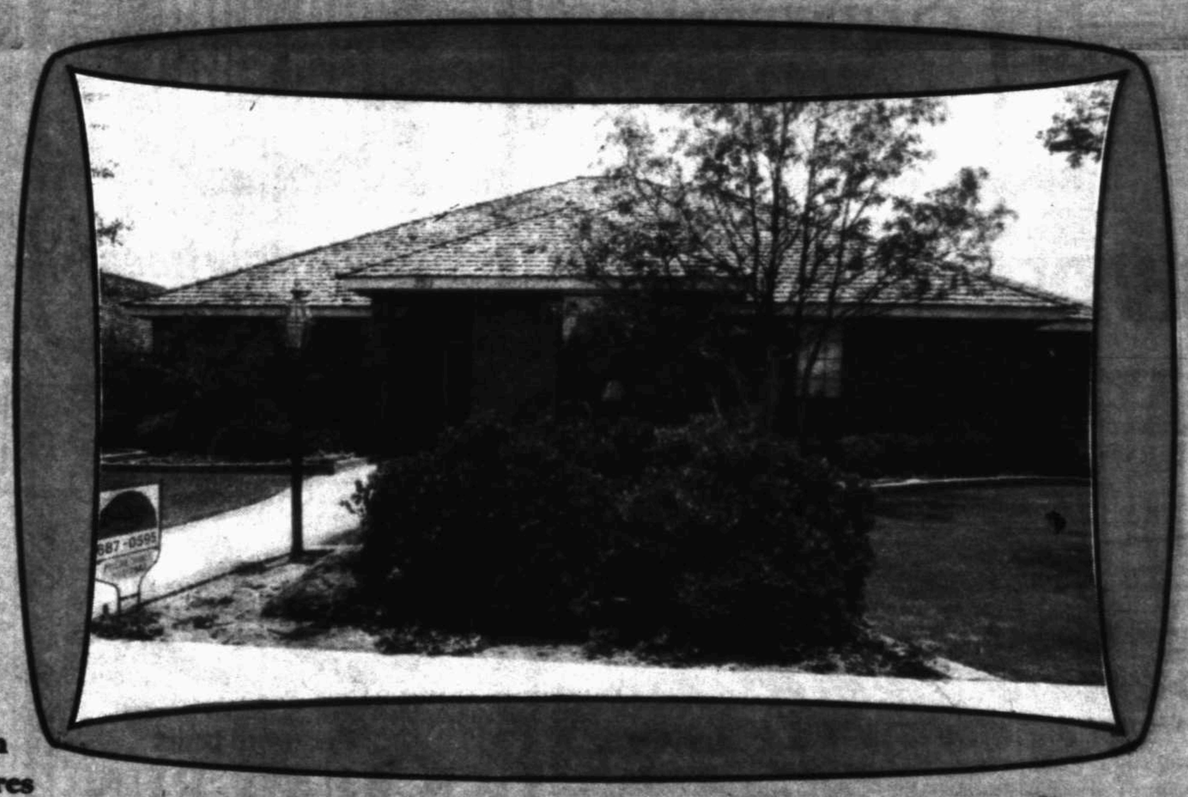

At first glance this four bedroom, three bath home in Trinity Meadows is pretty as a picture, but a closer look reveals an even deeper beauty in the practical design. High efficiency heating and cooling, insulated windows, atrium doors and an abundance of skylights are just a few of the beautiful features in this bright, spacious home.

Formal living and dining areas are located just off a gallery near the entry hall. Glazed, ceramic tile covers the floors in the gallery, hallways and a hall bath, while 10-foot high ceilings grace the entry and formal living area. Nine-foot ceilings are found in the remainder of the home.

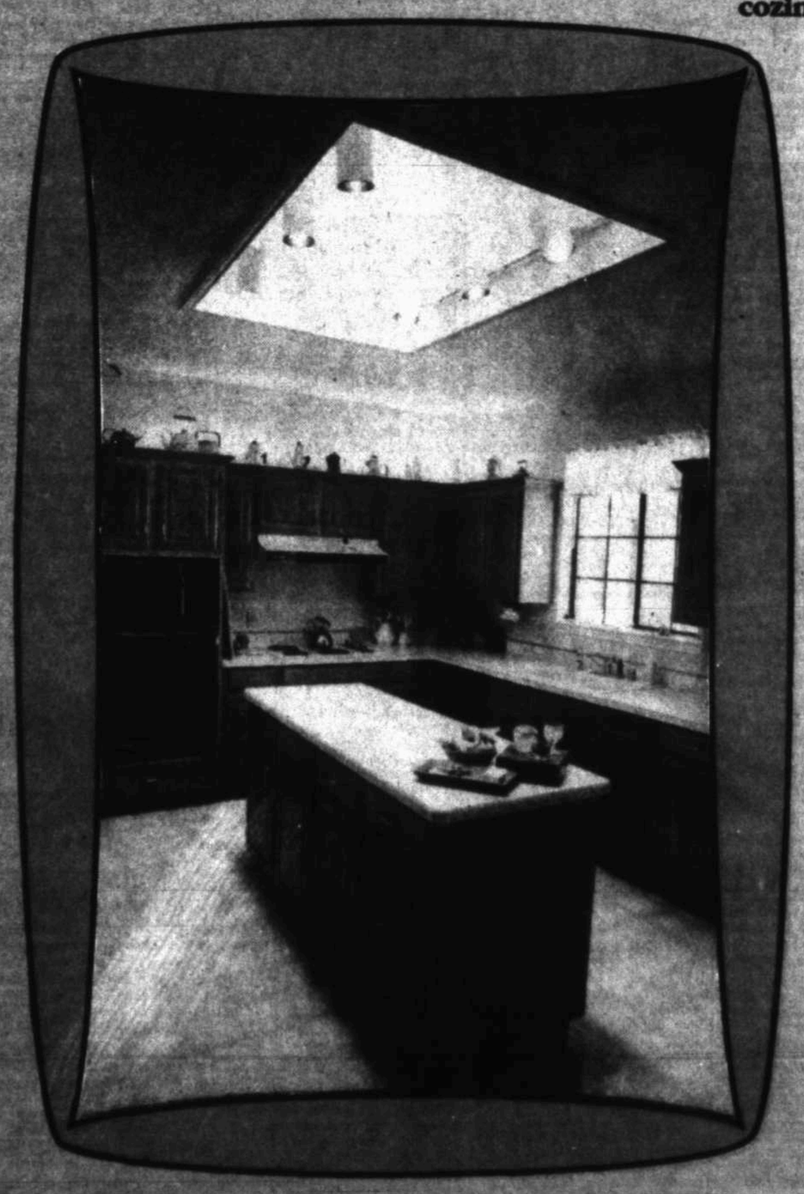

A wet bar is conveniently located in the hall- way between the formal dining room and the sequestered den. Large windows in the den offer a view of the professionally landscaped back yard and the 18 ft.. x 32 ft.. swimming pool and heated spa. A large covered patio has its own ceiling fan and decorative inlaid brick flooring to make outdoor entertaining a delightful experience.

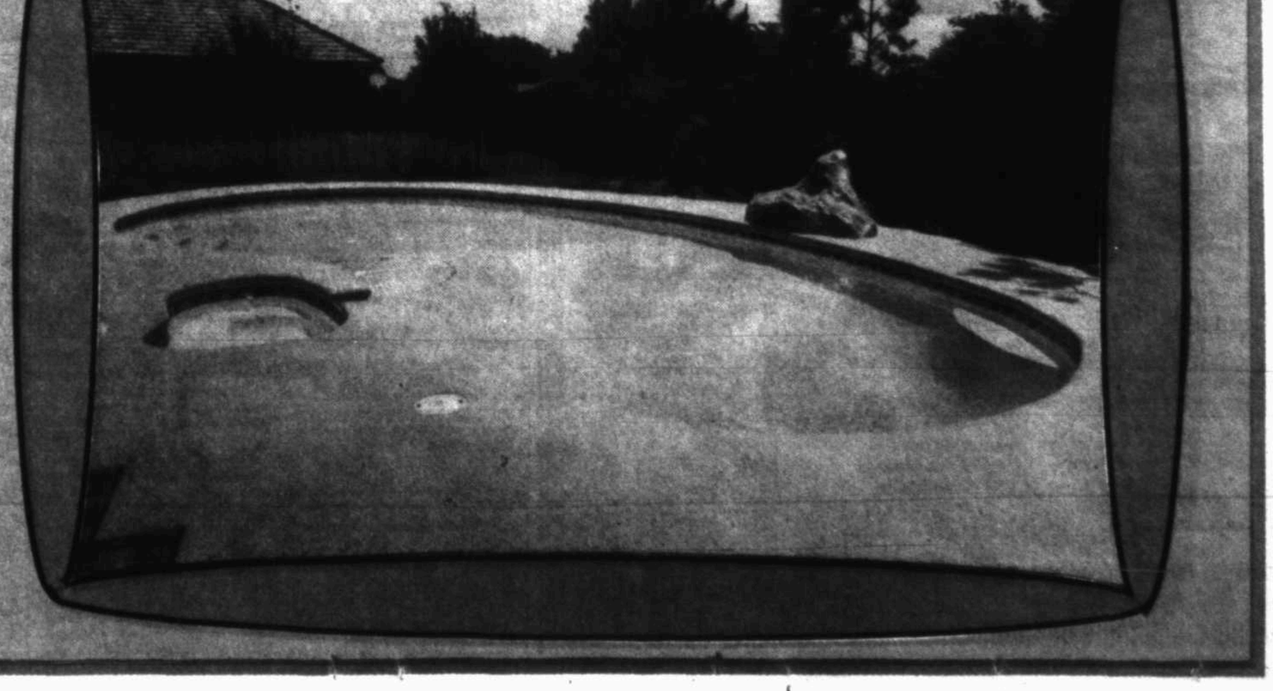

Picture frame paneling and a large brick fireplace add warmth and coziness to the spacious den which also features built-in book shelves and cabinets. The fireplace is equipped with a gas log lighter.

The kitchen is equipped with every modern amenity. Whirlpool appliances include a microwave, self-cleaning oven, dishwasher, cooktop, garbage disposal and trash compactor.

Please See CABINETS 2D

Abundant foliage, above, gives this home unique street appeal, while the backyard features a lavish pool and jacuzzi, below.
A built in microwave, trash compactor, and skylight are just a few of the many amenities of the modern kitchen, left.

an extra large skylight is located above the 6 ft. island which features ample work and storage space.

In addition, to the abundance of beautiful ash cabinets, the kitchen also features a built-in desk with shelves above it. Touches of wallpaper in the breakfast area coordinate with counter tops and cabinets in the kitchen.

A large utility room with a sink and built-ins is located just off the kitchen. In addition, a bath is located just off the kitchen near one of the bedrooms. This bedroom could be used as a study or guest room.

Two other bedrooms are joined by a beautiful bath with double vanities and lots of storage. All bathrooms in this home feature skylights.

The three lovely bedrooms mentioned prev-iously are located on one end of the house while the master bedroom and spacious master bath are sequestered.

Gorgeous draperies and coordinating wallpaper in the master bedroom suite give this room that "professional decorator's" touch.

Special features of the master bath include separate his and her vanities, a large sunken tub and extra large separate shower. Sunshine pours through a large skylight which is located above the tub. Mirrors cover the wall behind the tub. Also featured in this delightful master suite is a huge double closet with built-in storage.

Amenities inside and out make this home more than just beautiful.

From the professional landscaping with mature plants to the window coverings and ceiling fans,this home is "family friendly."

One of the most economic amenities of this home is the water well which provides water for the pool and yard.

The home also features cultured marble vanity sinks and cast iron bath tubs.

Other amenities include an automatic sprinkler system with bubblers in the flower beds, a monitored security system, intercom system, sodium security lights in back, automatic coach light in front and storage shed in back.

In addition, the rear entry two-car garage offers enough extra space for a work area.

This home is offered by Dene Kelly Realtors for $165,900, and is scheduled to be open for tours today. Contact Pauline Turney for details.

Statewide CRS meeting draws record crowd

The largest attendance at a CRS state meeting was recorded at the recent meeting conducted in Lubbock, according to Winifred McNabb, CRS, GRI, Chapter President.

McNabb said the crowd was overflowing from the beginning of the 7 a.m. breakfast meeting where participants heard Dave Dalzell, CRB, Abilene, speak on "Building Your Personal Business Plan."

New officers for 1992 unanimously elected include: president, Kay West, CRS, of Ft. Worth; vice-president, Sandra Hathaway, CRS, GRI, of Beaumont; Treasurer, Peggy West, CRS, GRI of Houston and secretary, Virginia Williams, CRS, GRI, LTG, of Denton.

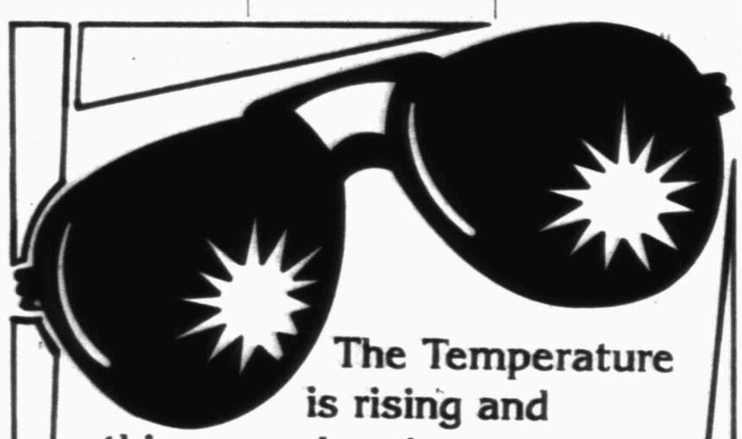

According to McNabb, the new 1991-92 Lone Star CRS Director and Referral Guide was the hit of the convention and boasted over 400 members in the rapidly growing chapter. A January supplement is scheduled to include an anticipated 100 new members...bringing the chapter membership close to the 500 mark!

And the state of Texas has more bragging rights, McNabb said. Texas was the first sate to have a local CRS chapter. The first was formed in Austin, followed soon by Houston, Ft. Worth and San Antonio chapters.

"We anticipate having local CRS chapters in every major city in the state within a year!" McNabb said.

Local realtors interested in starting a CRS Club in Midland should contact Jo Dennis at 915-689-8841. Realtors must be working toward the CRS rating to be a member.

■ "I scream, you scream, We all scream for ice cream."

With the temperatures staggering in the 90s, most West Texans have one thought on their minds, keeping cool.

And while air conditioners work wonders indoors, the scorch of the sun beating down outside is almost impossible to get away from.

That's when a heat-soother is needed, and many people "scream" for America's favorite dessert, ice cream; that ice-cold, creamy sweet delight. In fact, the dessert is so popular that July is designated as National Ice Cream Month, according to Chase's Annual Events.

But with all the concerns voiced about high-fat, high-cholesterol foods, many of those same people believe they can no longer enjoy the cool, refreshing feeling of eating an ice cream cone to help ward off the heat. They find themselves in a battle of passion over the desire to taste the rich, delicious flavor of ice cream and the desire to eat healthy and have a slim and fit physique.

Well, now ice cream lovers can have their cake ... er, ice cream and eat it too, without feelings of guilt.

The makers of ice creams are well aware of consumers health concerns, and although sales of regular and premium ice cream have not been dropping, the manufactures have responded to consumers health needs by creating "light" versions of the originals.

BUT DON'T PANIC; these products are not consider inferior to their regular counterparts, just healthier.

These new low-fat versions are not like the "diet" varieties of yesteryear that lacked taste, texture and variety of flavors. Today's low-fat, low-cholesterol treats are much more than diet food. Although not considered health food, they are considered a healthy alternative for those who believe life isn't worth living without a scoop of creamy delight.

Although these low-fat, low-cholesterol frozen delights are like ice creams, according to the Food and Drug Administration, they cannot be called ice cream, so they scoop up names such as frozen dairy desserts, ice milk, sherbet and yogurt, and they can be readily purchased at specialty ice cream shops as well as supermarkets.

Several local ice cream shops have added lighter versions of the specialty ice creams to their menus for those who, whether for health or dietary concerns, are cutting back on calories, fat or cholesterol.

Getting 'the scoop' on low-fat choices helps lick demand

By Alan Sverdlik
N.Y. Times News Service

It looks like ice cream. It tastes like ice cream. But don't dare call it that. The government says you can't.

You can call it ice milk, frozen dessert, dietary dessert or simply light. We're talking about products that don't have enough fat to qualify as ice cream, so they go by vague — and, some believe, denigrating — names.

There's a dizzying array of ice ... er, frozen dairy desserts, on the nation's supermarket shelves, making it difficult for shoppers — particularly health-conscious ones — to choose.

"For clarity's sake, you should be able to call any of these varieties non-fat or low-fat ice cream," says Jodie Silverman, communications director for Public Voice, a consumer advocacy group in Washington, D.C. "The names that are commonly used connote an inferior product. But these are not inferior products. They're healthier."

CONSUMER GROUPS and ice cream manufacturers, normally adversaries, have joined forces in an effort to end the confusion.

Although their positions differ slightly, they essentially are asking the Food and Drug Administration to permit the term "ice cream" to be used on containers of low-fat, non-fat and reduced-fat products as long as the fat content is listed. Now a product must have a minimum of 10 percent milk fat to call itself ice cream. The ice cream manufacturers believe that a product should have 2 percent to 7 percent milk fat to call itself reduced-fat ice cream; Public Voice believes the range should be 2 percent to 5 percent.

The FDA has promised to issue a ruling this year.

The federal Food, Drug and Cosmetics Act of 1938 set the fat requirement for ice cream to protect people from unscrupulous manufacturers who might try to skimp on ingredients and increase volume with water or air.

Ice cream is one of about 300 products, including peanut butter, mayonnaise and canned fruit, that must follow a set recipe known as a "standard of identity." (Optional ingredients may be added to the basic formula.)

However it is named, ice cream remains the quintessential American treat, sometimes artery-clogging, always irresistible. But unlike many other indulgences, it has nutritional benefits.

One cup of vanilla ice cream contains 200 milligrams of calcium, a quarter of the daily requirement for adults, says Barbara Bowman, an associate professor in the nutrition and dietetics department at Georgia State University.

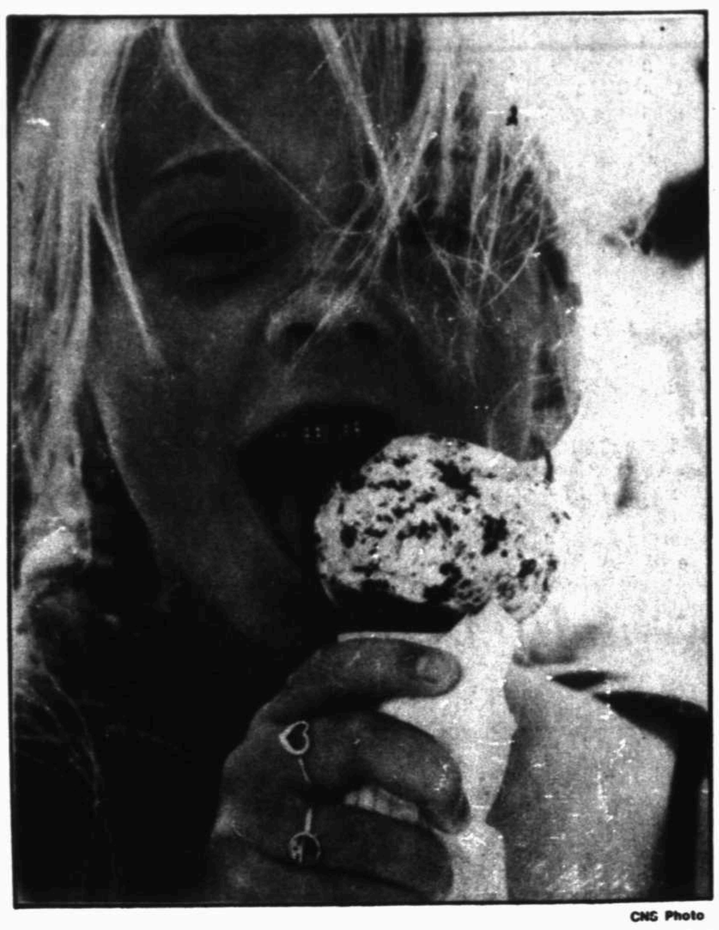

Calcium is needed to maintain bones, she points out.

ICE CREAM and other dairy desserts are a $9.2 billion-a-year industry. The average American eats 22 quarts a year, about a cup every four days. That's more than in any other country, according to the International Ice Cream Association, a Washington trade group.

And our national obsession with ice cream shows no signs of abating. Per-capita consumption is up 2 quarts from a decade ago, says Tracy Boyle, the association's spokeswoman.

But there is evidence of a shift away from the richest, fattiest brands to those with significantly lower fat counts.

"Americans are searching for a balance between two passions" — one for ice cream, the other for fitness and slimness, Ms. Boyle says.

Ice cream by any other name still tastes as good. Low-fat versions of America's favorite dessert must be called by other names, such as ice milk, frozen dessert or even just plain "light.'

'For clarity's sake, you should be able to call any of these varieties non-fat or low-fat ice cream. The names that are commonly used connote an inferior product. But these are not inferior products. They're healthier.'

communications director for Public Voice

Sales of ice milk, the top seller of the low-fat line, doubled at the end of the 1980s and are "still on the rise," Ms. Boyle says. Sales of packaged frozen yogurt nearly tripled during that period.

Meanwhile, consumption of gourmet and regular ice cream has dropped 5 percent since peaking in 1989, though they still command 88 percent of the market.

"Ice cream consumption has trailed downward," says Linda Eatherton, spokeswoman for Kraft, which makes Breyers, Sealtest and other brands of frozen dairy desserts.

The reason: Low-fat alternatives "cannibalized," or cut into, the market for premium and super-premium ice cream, she says.

Ms. Boyle, whose group represents 85 percent of U.S. ice cream makers, says that about half of them had ventured into the ice milk or frozen yogurt business by the 1990s.

EVEN THOSE who made their reputations on ultra-rich formulas have succumbed to the trend.

Ben and Jerry's introduced Ben and Jerry's Light in 1989 due to a "relatively flat market" and "high consumer demand," says spokesman Rob Michalak. The company is test-marketing a frozen yogurt in three cities.

Haagen-Dazs, famous for ice cream that gets about half its calories from fat, now offers a frozen yogurt that gets little more than 20 percent of its calories from fat.

It hasn't been easy satisfying the new breed of ice cream lover, who wants a guilt-free (read low-fat, low-calorie) treat that tastes like the real thing.

It's fat, after all, that gives ice cream its irresistibly creamy, rather than icy, texture. Manufacturers of low-fat frozen desserts, on the other hand, rely mainly on gums, which come from plants, and carrageenan, a seaweed extract, to achieve a similar effect. These additives are used in ice cream, too, but play a bigger role in light products.

Simplesse, a fat substitute made from egg whites and milk protein, gives the Simple Pleasures line of frozen desserts their richer taste. In other low-fat products, yogurt and tofu (such as Tofutti) help solve the texture problem.

Groups representing Idaho potato growers have even suggested that potatoes could serve as a creamy, virtually fat-free base for ice cream.

"Ice cream manufacturers have made a lot of strides in coming up with products that look and taste like ice cream but don't have the fat," says Randolph Harrison, the lobbyist for the Center for Science in the Public Interest, one of the Washington consumer advocacy groups pushing for reform.

WITH MORE alternatives to high-fat ice cream, Ms. Eatherton of Kraft predicts there would be a "shift in preference" — but not one that would lead to dominance by either end of the ice cream spectrum.

Consumers, she says, will experience a dietary lapse someday and splurge on the dense, rich super-premium, then heed health warnings and choose low-fat the next.

"The answer is, 'They'll want both.' "

LIGHT: Get a scoop for health

(From 1E)

Zody's Ice Cream Parlour, 4706 N. Midkiff, carries four flavors of frozen yogurt, including chocolate, vanilla and two additional flavors that change daily, according to store manager George Matta.

"We would sell the (light) ice creams if Blue Bell would package them in the 3-gallon containers, but they only sell them in half-gallons," Matta said. "We have requests for it all the time by the dip, but since we can't get it from Blue Bell, we can't package it ourselves."

According to Matta, the majority of their costumers are interested in the light frozen desserts because they have become more health conscious. "Also, people who are diabetics and can't have sugar also like to come have ice cream with their friends," and the no-sugar varieties give them that option, Matta said.

BJ's Baskin Robbins, with locations in Plaza Center and Dellwood Mall, serves ice cream in varieties of light, fat-free and sugar-free as well as frozen yogurts.

"We keep eight flavors (of the light ice creams) in the store, but I think we actually have 12 flavors in all," said Doug VanZandt, assistant manager of the Plaza Center Baskin Robbins.

VanZandt believes the lighter ice creams are more popular now than in the past, and that people are changing to the lighter versions for health conscious reasons, not just to lose weight. "I think people like to know what they're eating," he said.

HE ALSO ATTESTED to the quality of taste of the lighter varieties of the ice creams.

"We always get to taste the new ice creams that come in, and one day we were tasting this ice cream that was one of the light flavors and none of us realized it. We thought it was regular ice cream," VanZandt said.

For comparison, a 4-ounce scoop of regular vanilla ice cream at Baskin Robbins has 240 calories, 14 grams fat and 52 milligrams cholesterol. Comparatively, the same size serving of Praline Dream light ice cream has 130 calories, 6 grams fat and 11 milligrams cholesterol and Strawberry light ice cream has 110 calories, 3 grams fat and 9 milligrams cholesterol.

In the parlour's fat-free version, a 4-ounce scoop of chocolate-vanilla twist has 100 calories and no cholesterol or fat, and the same size serving of sugar-free strawberry has 90 calories, 1 gram fat and 3 milligrams cholesterol.

Quite a difference, especially to those who are trying to watch what they eat.

Low-fat and non-fat frozen yogurts and sorbets are also available at Baskin Robbins which offer about the same health advantages at the light frozen dairy desserts. A 4-ounce serving of low-fat strawberry frozen yogurt has 120 calories, 1 gram fat and 5 milligrams cholesterol.

For soft-serve light ice cream, Skinny Dip, 4324 Andrews Hwy., is the place to tempt the taste buds. The shop carries six flavors at one time, with vanilla, chocolate and cheesecake being standards and rotating three other flavors. The frozen delights average about 23 calories per ounce with less than 1 gram fat and 5 milligrams cholesterol per ounce, so a typical 4-ounce serving would contain about 92 calories, less than 4 grams fat and 20 milligrams cholesterol, according to Rosemary Hollums, day-shift manager of Skinny Dip.

"Our light ice cream is high in calcium too," she said. In fact, "Weight Watchers will allow an 8-ounce serving of Skinny Dip to substitute for an 8-ounce milk and 1 fruit, for those who are familiar with the diet."

Ms. Hollums said that her store's clientele seems to be a good mixture of those who are striving for weight reduction and those who are being more health conscious. "It used to be more people for weight loss, but now it's a good mixture of both."

A RELATIVE newcomer in the ice cream industry in West Texas is Blue Bell, which is now available in supermarkets in numerous flavors and versions.

In a half-cup serving of Blue Bell Homemade Vanilla there are 180 calories, 9 grams fat and 50 milligrams cholesterol. In comparison, the company's vanilla light ice milk's half-cup serving has 100 calories, 2 grams fat and 10 milligrams cholesterol. For those who wish to cut down a little more, Blue Bell offers extra light, free and and diet versions of their frozen dairy desserts as well as Blue Bell low-fat and nonfat yogurts.

For half-cup servings, the vanilla extra light version contains 90 calories with no fat or cholesterol while the strawberry-flavored free contains 80 calories with no fat or cholesterol. The company's vanilla low-fat frozen yogurt offers 130 calories with 2 grams fat (cholesterol listing was no given) and the nonfat vanilla yogurt is listed as having 100 calories with .5 grams fat and no cholesterol. A Blue Bell sherbet also is available.

Borden also is a popular brand in the area, offering such summertime delights as frozen yogurt, sherbet and fat-free frozen dessert.

The Borden regular vanilla ice cream contains 130-140 calories, with 7 grams fat and 30 milligrams cholesterol per half-cup serving. Comparatively, a half-cup serving of Borden's vanilla premium ice milk offers 110 calories, 3 grams fat and 10 milligrams cholesterol; the regular vanilla ice milk contains 90-100 calories, 2-3 grams fat and 10 milligrams cholesterol; and the fat-free frozen dessert in the strawberry flavor has only 90 calories, less than one gram fat and no cholesterol; a definite healthy eating improvement over the company's regular ice cream.

THE COMPANY'S premium frozen yogurt in strawberry offers consumers 100 calories, 2 grams fat and 10 milligrams cholesterol per half-cup serving.

Other varieties of light frozen dairy fare include Simple Pleasures which in chocolate chip flavor has 150 calories, 3 grams fat and 15 milligrams cholesterol for a 4-ounce serving; a half-cup of strawberry Slim n' Trim deluxe ice milk has 100 calories, 2 grams fat with no listing of cholesterol; half-cup of Weight Watchers Grand Collection Premium Ice Milk in vanilla has 100 calories, 3 grams fat and no cholesterol listing given; and Blue Bunny strawberry frozen yogurt has 100 calories, 3 grams fat and no listing of cholesterol per half-cup serving.

As is evident when looking over the long list of available options for those wishing to cut down on calories, fat or cholesterol, many of the statistics are very similar. Therefore, the choice may come down to taste, and what better way to stay cool throughout the heat of summer than taste-testing every variety in every flavor.

And just think, it can all be tasted guilt-free.

Eat favorite foods in healthy way

By Teresa S. Johnson
N.Y. Times News Service

If there was one food that you would never give up, what would it be?

That was the question asked 1,000 consumers in a survey conducted for Kraft Light Naturals cheeses, and the answers were surprising.

"We expected people to list sweets and snacks as foods they would never give up," said Edith Howard Hogan when Kraft revealed the findings of the survey at the International Food Media Conference in Dallas. "Instead, consumers are refusing to give up the basics."

The top 10 foods consumers refuse to give up are:

1. Meat
2. Fruits and vegetables
3. Bread
4. Pasta
5. Ice cream
6. Potatoes
7. Pizza
8. Milk
9. Chocolate
10. Cheese

"People still value the mainstream meal components like meats, dairy products, fruits and vegetables and grains," said Hogan, founder of Nutrition Consulting Services in Washington.

"The survey also revealed that 89 percent of the consumers are concerned about nutrition when they shop for food," Hogan said. "This means that these consumers need to reconcile their nutrition concerns with their insistence on eating their favorite foods."

THE GOOD news is all these foods can be part of a healthy diet, Hogan said. Consumers just need to be careful how they prepare some of the items, look for repared without adding oil or fat. This means broiling or baking rather then frying. Look for lean cuts of beef, which means you don't see a lot of fat on it. And try to limit meat portions to three to four ounces per meal.

That's not to say you can't enjoy a fat, juicy steak once in a while. Just try to make it an occasional treat rather than a way of life.

Seeing fruits and vegetables on this top 10 list is encouraging, since most of these provide vitamins and nutrients without many calories.

A publication from the Department of Health and Human Services provided the following calorie counts for some selected fruits and vegetables.

With almost no calories per ½ cup serving are celery sticks, lettuce, cucumbers, green peppers, mushrooms, cauliflower and broccoli. With 25 to 30 calories are 1 small tangerine, ½ cup watermelon, ¼ cantaloupe, 1 small tomato and 1 medium carrot. With 35 to 40 calories are 1 medium peach, 1 medium nectarine, ½ grapefruit and ½ small banana. And providing 50 to 60 calories are 1 small apple, 1 small orange, 15 grapes, 12 cherries and 1 cup strawberries.

THE CATCH here is in preparation. The above figures are for raw fruits and vegetables. Try to eat them that way or slightly steamed instead of slathered in butter or margarine, topped with fat-laden cream sauces or covered duced-fat versions of others and be moderate in consuming some of the higher fat favorites.

Meat is an example of all three precautions. To fit into a healthy diet, meat, which would include beef and pork and probably to many respondents also means chicken and turkey, should be prewith sweetened syrups.

The same holds true for pasta and potatoes. Both of these items suffer an undeserved image problem as high-fat foods. Actually it's not the pasta and potatoes that are the calorie culprits but the sauces heaped on them. Instead of making pasta sauces with meat and butter, use vegetables and olive oil. Or if you serve a meat sauce, use it sparingly.

For potatoes, the butter-flavored sprinkles are a low-fat alternative to high fat butter or margarine. Use low-fat or no-fat yogurt instead of sour cream.

Reduced-fat versions of milk and cheeses are becoming increasingly popular as people look for ways to cut fat. Choose skim milk, which generally has about 1 gram fat per 1 cup serving compared with 8 grams of fat in the same size serving of whole milk.

Cheeses made with part skim milk are somewhat lower in fat than those made with whole milk, although cheese of any kind is going to be high in fat. So when choosing reduced fat cheese, be sure to check the nutrition information. Remember that the words "reduced fat" on a label don't tell you how much the fat has been reduced.

TO FIGURE what percentage of the calories in cheese come from fat, multiply grams of fat by 9 (the number of calories in a gram of fat), then divide that number by the number of calories. For instance, part-skim mozzarella cheese averages 5 grams of fat and 80 calories. Five times nine is 45, divided by 80 is 65 percent. If that seems like a lot, consider that cream cheese, with about 100 calories and 10 grams fat per ounce, gets about 90 percent of calories from fat and cheddar cheese, with 110 calories and 9 grams of fat, gets almost 74 percent of its calories from fat.

There are some reduced fat alternatives to ice cream, pizza and chocolate, but many people don't find them satisfactory. But even eating premium ice creams, chocolate and pizza loaded with high-fat meat isn't out of the question for most people.

As with the other items, moderation remains the key. Instead of a huge bowl of ice cream every night, try to limit yourself to one scoop on occasion and savor each bite. Instead of half a pizza, just have a piece or two, supplementing with a large salad. And save chocolates for a special treat.

Insects make West Texas gardening more difficult

By Deborah A. Benge

Summer is the time of year when many gardeners are faced with an invasion of garden pests.

Benge

Most of the calls to Texas Agricultural Extension Service concern the white grub worm. These pests are seen most frequently in late spring and summer as fat C-shaped grubs, about the size of a quarter, with reddish-brown heads and white bodies with a gray-blue color showing through the abdomen.

The adult stage of the grub worm is a June beetle, which is reddish-brown in color and about ½-inch long and ¼-inch wide. Adults can be quite a nuisance in May and June, gathering around the lights. Mating begins soon after the adult beetles are seen. Female beetles' favorite place to lay eggs is in healthy lawns. The greener, lusher and moister the lawn, the better the hatching site.

When you begin to see adult beetles, begin to time lawn-watering times as far apart as possible without stressing the grass. Soil surface will become dry and hard, making it difficult for the female beetle to lay eggs there.

Time of treatment, and treatment itself, for grubs is confusing. Dr. Charles Allen, extension entomologist for West Texas, recommends treating in mid-July and mid-August. He recommends giving your lawn a deep soaking irrigation just before insecticide application, and following up with another lighter watering to move the insecticide into the top few inches of soil. Heavy initial watering will cause the grubs to move up to the soil surface where they can breath, and where the insecticide will have greater effectiveness.

To determine whether or not you have a grub problem, check your lawn in several places by slicing out a one-square-foot section of sod (retaining most of the roots). Fold this section back and look through the roots and soil for small immature grubs. Four or more immature grubs found in a section is enough to warrant a chemical treatment. After visual inspection, tamp the sod back in place and water.

Fescue lawns or sections of fescue lawns can be killed by an active infestation of grubs. Bermuda grass lawns are also very susceptible to grubs, but the damage is not as devastating. Signs of advanced grub damage include brown or dry-appearing areas, sections of grass that pull up easily or roll back like a rug, and grass with almost no roots.

Bagworms are another major pest. Early in the season bagworms and the damage they do are small and not very noticeable; however, by now the pest and the damage they cause are large enough to be seen.

Bagworms live in a very tough, spindled-shaped bag made of a very tough silken material. The bagworm is constantly attaching bits of leaves, twigs and other plant material to the outside of the bag. As the worm feeds, it comes out of the bag just enough to feed and use a fore secion of legs to pull itself around.

Bagworms aren't too picky about what they eat. They can be found on juniper, arborvitae, Arizona cypress, pines and other evergreens, and also on a huge variety of deciduous plants, including pecan, oak, fruit trees, elm and other broadleaf plants.

Bagworms may completely consume the plant tissue or may leave a leaf "skeleton" (green leaf tissue removed but the leaf epidermis and veins remain). The difficulty with controlling bagworms is recognizing them. Since they camouflage themselves with bits of matching plant tissue, they look like part of the plant they are devouring.

The first symptom is a noticeable thinning of foliage. A closer look will reveal the spindle-shaped worms. The best and safest way to control bagworms in a small tree or an isolated spot is by hand picking, but many trees and shrubs are too big for that method to be practical. Several insecticides are available to control bagworm infestations in larger areas. Bacillus thuringensis is a biological pest control that will elminate bagworms, and at the same time be completely safe for the environment, people and pets.

Elm leaf beetles are commonly found on Siberian Elms (commonly and incorrectly called Chinese elm). Adults are small, ⅜-inch, oval-shaped, army green beetles with yellowish stripes on each side of the back. They also like to come in your house.

The immature form of this beetle is destructive to elm trees. These small black and yellow larva feed on the underside of the leaves, removing the green part but leaving the epidermis. Trees begin to look brown, and then the leaves start dropping.

This pest is very difficult to control because so many elms are in the area and because multiple generations of the elm leaf beetle hatch each year. Cover sprays can be made but must be repeated, and so can become quite expensive. Trunk treatments can help control the insect a little easier than cover sprays. Soil applied systemic insecticides and trunk injections can be used, but should be done by a professional pest control operator.

The real solution to this pest may not be helpful now, but should be considered: Elm leaf beetles will have to be dealt with every year. Selection of superior trees for replacement of the pest-ridden trees is the long-term and practical solution.

Permian Basin Vegetable Tour will be 6 p.m. Wednesday in Gardendale. Persons wishing to take the tour should meet at Hopper's Grocery on Highway 154. Dr. Sammy Helmers, extension horticulturist for West Texas, and Victor Lucero, extension entomologist, will lead the tour through two large West Texas gardens and discuss how gardening is done in the area. No fees or pre-registration is necessary. For more information call 335-3071 or 687-1351.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

DEAR ABBY: You recently published a letter from a reader complaining about tacky wedding invitations. Let me add my 2 cents' worth with a story that will top that one.

Van Buren

As you can see from the enclosed memo (which was stuffed into the same envelope as the wedding invitation AND the bridal shower invitation), this couple, "Carole and Rick," had the gall to allow their travel agent to solicit contributions for their Hawaiian honeymoon.

This couple is known around town to be tightfisted with a buck, but this kind of solution is a new "low." Obviously, either the travel agent or the sponsor of the bridal shower felt awkward sending the memo out, as someone typed in, "Requested by: Rick."

By the way, Abby, I was going to cross out the names in the original memo, but I didn't want you to think this was a hoax, so if you publish this, please change the names. — AMAZED IN DELAWARE

DEAR AMAZED, AND DEAR READERS: Well, now I've seen everything. Read on:

"TO: The Family and Friends of Carole and Rick

"FROM: Chutzpah Travel Agency

"RE: Hawaiian Honeymoon

"We are pleased to advise you that we will be handling the travel arrangements for Carole and Rick's honeymoon. Our agency has set aside a separate account for payment, so Carole and Rick's friends and relatives may share in giving this terrific couple a memorable honeymoon. We would appreciate it if your gift would be a check made out to Chutzpah Travel Agency, for Carole and Rick. Please add your telephone number, so that we can call to thank you, upon receipt of your check. — MAX SMITH, TRAVEL AGENT"

P.S. And "aloha" to etiquette.

DEAR ABBY: I came across this very unusual obituary in The Seattle Times. I did not know the person, but I thought it might be something you would want to share with your readers:

"Rowena L. (Brown) Edelbrock passed away on June 12, 1991. She left us with these thoughts:

"'When I quit this mortal shore
"'And mosey 'round this earth no more
"'Don't weep, don't sigh, don't grieve, don't sob;
"'I may have struck a better job.
"'Don't go and buy a large bouquet
"'For which you'll find it hard to pay.
"'Don't stand around me looking blue;
"'I may be better off than you!' "

Abby, I think this poem is a winner, don't you? — LORNA SCHOFIELD, MOUNTLAKE TERRACE, WASH.

DEAR LORNA: It is, indeed, a winner. It is inevitable that one day we shall all "quit this mortal shore," and to do so as lightheartedly as Rowena did makes the journey less grim.

DEAR ABBY: In regard to your recent letter from the bride who found that their honeymoon suite contained no bed, I heard of another bride who had the same experience. When asked what her reaction was, she replied, "I was floored!" — JACK RUNNINGER, ROME, GA.

By popular request, Abby shares more of her favorite prize-winning, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: More Favorite Recipes by Dear Abby, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. AT WIT'S END

'Having it all' much ado about nothing

By Erma Bombeck

Do I "have it all" yet? I hope so. I'm half-dead.

We're only two years into what I call our Paula Zahn decade, where women are balancing home/husband/children/physical fitness/social conscience, not to mention a cello between our knees, and if I become any more fulfilled, I'm going to have to sleep on fast-forward.

Bombeck

It sounded so great when I heard there wasn't anything as a woman I couldn't do. "All" sounded so all-encompassing. Now it's turned out to be the same "all" as in one-size-fits-all. All of what?

I'm from a generation that remembers what it was like to be bored, shallow, depressed and unfulfilled. After we put our kids on the yellow school bus, we went back to our kitchens, drank coffee and knitted until lunch. Then we'd take a plate of cholesterol and park ourselves in front of the TV and watch "As the World Turns" until 2:30. We'd watch Ralph Nader on "Donahue" so we'd have something meaningful to talk about at dinner. We had an hour to whip through the house, put two cookies on a plate and meet the school bus.

I don't know how I got to be Robo-wife, but it probably started with the peanut butter commercials that told me I was responsible for the well-being of my children, and the laundry detergent manufacturers who dumped on me, saying my husband would never make it in the corporate world unless his shirts were sparkling white. It was up to me.

And if that didn't put me on guilt overload, I began hearing about what a source of untapped energy and talent I was and that I should volunteer it for the community. I did that. Then someone suggested that I should be paid for all this expertise and get a job. I did that. The slick magazines came along and said, "Why work for someone else? You should be running the company." Running for Congress. Running for your health. Running for the bus. Running ... running ... running.

I've been doing it ever since. I iron while I watch TV, shop for groceries at midnight, and if I have something to worry about, I have to do it during my good-time period. There's no quiet time for me anymore, which is the price I pay for "having it all."

I wondered the other day if I could go home again. Was it possible for just one day to recapture the suburban slow-down of two decades ago? While I was having coffee, three calls arrived from the East. I picked up a rug I'm needlepointing and was interrupted by flashes of guilt for things I'd have to do tomorrow if I didn't do them today. Donahue had on transvestites who were their own prom dates. It wasn't the same.

Cookie dough is coolest new flavor

By Natalie Haughton
N.Y. Times News Service

Is raw chocolate-chip-cookie dough your secret passion? Do you thrive on making chocolate-chip cookies just so you can eat the raw dough while you're making them?

If so, the latest ice-cream flavor to land on supermarket freezer shelves is for you.

It's Ben and Jerry's Chocolate Chip Cookie Dough ice cream. My teen-age daughter alerted me that it's the hot, chic, "in" flavor among teens. According to the Ben and Jerry's Ice Cream store in Sherman Oaks, it has been the top-selling flavor for the last six months.

And, in fact, if you saw the May issue of Redbook magazine, you noticed that actress Mel Harris of television's "thirtysomething" calls it her favorite edible sin.

Not being a dough devotee, I wasn't overly enthused about the idea. But I'm always game to try something new. Once my daughter got her hands on a pint of it (she located it at Hughes market) and I tried it, I found it delicious. What intrigued me was that there were blobs of soft, raw dough scattered throughout vanilla ice cream; the dough pieces were not hard and crumbly from being frozen, as you might expect.

Chocolate Chip Cookie Dough ice cream isn't new. Ben and Jerry's has been making it in small batches since October 1984 (it was a customer flavor suggestion), but until it was introduced in pints last month, it has only been available at their scoop shops. (The first scoop shop in the Los Angeles area opened in Santa Monica three years ago; the one in Sherman Oaks opened two years ago.) It has been one of the hottest flavors in the franchise system, noted Lee Holden, public relations coordinator, Ben and Jerry's Homemade Inc., Waterbury, Vt., adding that it has a cultlike following.

FINDING A WAY to produce it commercially in pints without the dough getting caught and gumming up the machine took five years, noted Peter Lind, primal ice cream therapist (research and development) for Ben and Jerry's.

In the Redbook article, Harris says, "I used to buy it at the store, but the company that makes it changed its recipe, so now if I want it, I make it myself.

"Just mix a pint of vanilla ice cream with one of those tubes of unbaked cookie dough you can get at a supermarket and you'll be in seventh heaven."

Redbook didn't indicate the name brand.

According to Lind, however, Ben and Jerry's has never changed the ice cream (it has a cookie-dough flavor as well) or the cookie-dough recipe (it's a basic Toll House cookie-dough recipe without any baking soda or baking powder), only the size of the globs of dough.

But if you plan to concoct your own version of the ice cream with store-bought vanilla ice cream and your own homemade cookie dough, be careful. Consumers don't have access to pasteurized eggs, and raw eggs might contain salmonella.

Ben and Jerry's formula uses only pasteurized eggs.

If you're intrigued about how the cookie dough stays soft in the frozen ice cream, it's because the sugar in the dough retards freezing, Lind said.

There's something else new on the supermarket freezer shelf. It's Haagen-Dazs Crunch Bars in three flavors - Vanilla Crisp, Caramel Almond and Peanut Butter.

MY HANDS-DOWN favorite was the Peanut Butter: chocolate ice cream with a layer of chunky peanut butter sandwiched in the center, then covered with Belgian milk chocolate and roasted peanuts. It is reminiscent of a candy bar. The crunch bars are 2.1 ounces each and are available in single- (99 cents) and three-bar packs ($2.59).

Micky Kolar of Fountain Hills, Ariz., is the grand-prize winner in Kraft's Search for America's Best Marshmallow Recipe contest with her recipe for Rocky Road Caramel Corn Bars. She won $5,000, and her recipe will be printed on the back of the company's marshmallow bags.

Priscilla Yee of Concord, Calif., won the $500 first prize for her Banana Fudge Mallow Pie recipe.

Yee, who learned to bake in her high school home-economics class, is a recipe-contest veteran and has won many prizes for her cooking skills. Here are the winning recipes to try.

ROCKY ROAD CARAMEL CORN BARS
(Grand Prize Winner Micky Kolar, Fountain Hills, Ariz.)

¼ cup (½ stick) margarine
1 package (10½ ounces) (6 cups) miniature marshmallows
½ cup semisweet chocolate pieces
5 cups caramel corn
1 cup peanuts

Place margarine in microwave-safe bowl and microwave on high (100 percent) power 45 seconds or until melted.

Reserve 1 cup marshmallows. Add remaining 5 cups marshmallows and chocolate pieces to melted margarine; toss to coat. Microwave on high power 1½ minutes or until smooth when stirred, stirring after 45 seconds. Pour over combined caramel corn and peanuts in large bowl; toss until well coated. Stir in 1 cup reserved marshmallows. Press into greased 13x9-inch baking pan. Cool; cut into squares. Makes 24 squares.

CONVENTIONAL COOKING DIRECTIONS: Melt margarine in saucepan over low heat. Reserve 1 cup marshmallows. Add remaining marshmallows and chocolate pieces to melted margarine; stir until melted and well blended. Continue according to above directions.

BANANA SPLIT FUDGE MALLOW PIE
(First Prize Winner Priscilla Yee, Concord, Calif.)

1½ cups chocolate wafer crumbs
2 tablespoons sugar
¼ cup (½ stick) margarine
1 package (8 ounces) plus 1 package (3 ounces) cream cheese, softened
½ cup jarred caramel topping
1½ cups semisweet chocolate pieces, melted
2 cups banana slices
1 cup whipping cream, whipped
2 cups miniature marshmallows

Mix together crumbs, sugar and margarine; press onto bottom and up sides of deep dish 9-inch pie plate. Bake in preheated 325-degree oven 10 minutes. Cool.

In large bowl of electric mixer, beat cream cheese and caramel topping on medium speed until well blended. Blend in chocolate; pour ½ of mixture over crust. Arrange bananas over chocolate. Fold whipped cream and marshmallows into remaining chocolate mixture. Spread over bananas; cover. Refrigerate several hours or overnight. Garnish with additional whipped cream, chocolate curls and banana slices.

Carmelized Pecan Sauce tops ice cream

By Nancy Byal
Associated Press

This buttery-rich sauce is a wonderful topping for ice cream or pound cake.

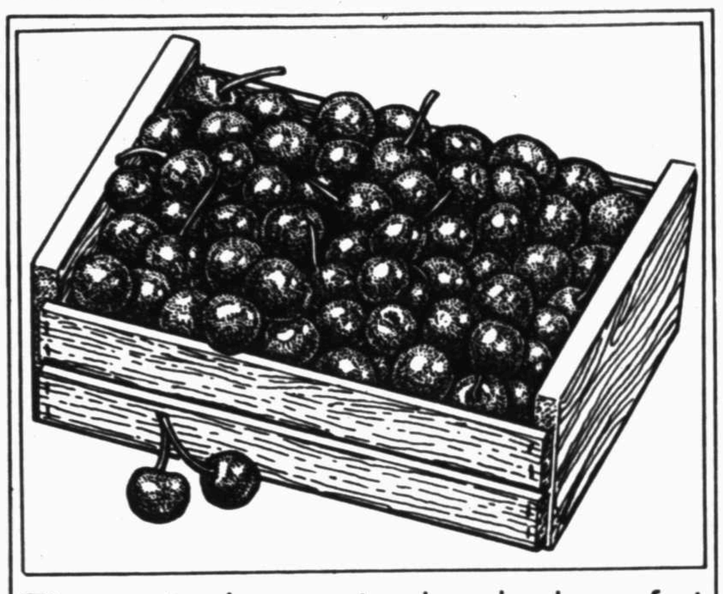

CARAMELIZED PECAN SAUCE

¾ cup sugar
½ cup hot water
¼ cup butter or margarine
1 tablespoon rum or brandy
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
½ cup pecan halves or walnut pieces
Ice cream

In 10-inch heavy skillet melt sugar over medium heat to golden brown syrup, about 5 minutes. After sugar starts to melt, turn heat down to low. Cook and stir constantly for 1 to 3 minutes or until sugar completely melts and turns golden brown. After sugar melts, watch syrup closely. It will taste scorchead if it gets too dark. Remove skillet from heat.

Carefully stir in hot water. (Syrup will spatter and harden when liquid is added.) Stir in butter or margarine, rum or brandy, and cinnamon. Return to low heat; cook and stir for 3 to 5 minutes or until caramel re-melts.

Add pecans or walnuts. Cook for 1 to 2 minutes more or until nuts are warm, stirring occasionally. Serve warm over ice cream. Makes 1 cup.

Elegant dessert also is low-fat

By Nancy Byal
Associated Press

Who needs high-fat ice cream when you can have this chi-chi champagne sorbet for dessert instead?

BLACK CHERRY SORBET

1¼ pounds fresh or frozen unsweetened pitted dark sweet cherries (5 cups)
1½ cups water
1 cup sugar
1 cup champagne
2 teaspoons finely shredded lemon peel

In blender container or food processor bowl combine cherries and 1 cup water. Cover; blend or process until pureed. Strain cherry mixture through sieve; discard pulp.

In bowl combine strained cherry mixture, remaining ½ cup water, sugar, champagne and lemon peel; stir until sugar is dissolved. Pour into 13x9x2-inch baking pan; cover and freeze about 4 hours or until partially frozen.

Break partially frozen mixture into chunks; transfer to chilled large mixer bowl. Beat with electric mixer on medium speed until smooth but not melted. Return to pan; cover and freeze for 6 to 8 hours or until firm. Makes 10 servings.

NOTE: To use canned cherries, prepare recipe as directed, except substitute two 16-ounce cans pitted dark sweet cherries for fresh or frozen cherries and omit water. Drain canned cherries, reserving syrup. Measure syrup and add enough water to make 1½ cups. Puree cherries, as directed, substituting syrup mixture for water. Continue as directed.

Nothing beats cool homemade ice cream on hot day

By Carrie White
N.Y. Times News Service

No dessert captures the spirit of summer like ice cream.

Cool, creamy ice cream that requires little time in the kitchen is a real treat for kids and adults. It's also a great way to end that holiday barbecue.

Although ice cream is still a bit of a chore to make even with electric machines, it isn't half as hard as it once was with the old hand-cranked ice cream makers.

Of course, the simplest machine is the Donvier, in which a metal cylinder is frozen to eliminate the use of rock salt and ice.

But to get the old-fashioned feel for it — without the shoulder ache — try an electric model.

We did, and it really instilled in us an appreciation for our forefathers. Not only did we make more of a mess than we thought possible (it's best to make ice cream outside), but it took more time than we thought.

Make sure you start your ice cream preparations at least three hours before you plan to eat it. That will allow time to mix the ingredients in the ice cream maker and freeze the dessert to a good firmness in the refrigerator freezer.

In fact, some people believe ice cream needs to "ripen" for a few hours in the freezer. It all depends on how long everyone can hold out. In addition to time, homemade ice cream is going to cost you more than if you bought a gallon at the grocery store. For the amount we made, it cost about $20 for the ingredients, ice and rock salt. About 30 people partook of the dessert. And the flavor, as everyone agreed, was an improvement over prefabricated varieties.

While we are supplying a recipe for your use, many of you already have a "favorite" recipe. Now might be a good time to double-check those ingredients because many "older" recipes call for uncooked eggs.

After contacting a home economist with the University of Arizona Cooperative Extension in Phoenix, we were told that such recipes are definitely not recommended, considering problems with raw eggs in recent years.

Although the recipe we are supplying is a very basic one, it can be easily dressed up using seasonal fruits — as we have done with strawberries — broken-up candy bars or nuts.

The following recipe is for a 6-quart freezer and makes 1½ gallons of ice cream.

VANILLA CUSTARD ICE CREAM

6 eggs, beaten
6 cups milk
2¼ cups sugar
½ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons vanilla extract
6 cups whipping cream

Prepare freezer according to manufacturer's directions. Combine eggs, milk, sugar and salt in saucepan. Cook over low heat, stirring constantly, until mixture coats a metal spoon. Cool. Add vanilla extract and cream. Pour into freezer can. Freeze as directed.

STRAWBERRY ICE CREAM

Wash, hull and mash 3 pints of fresh strawberries. Stir in ¾ cup sugar. Add with the cream. Omit vanilla extract.

Concept of wedding party has new meaning

By Woody Hochswender
N.Y. Times News Service

As party concepts go, this one was a trifle formal: guests were asked to wear the clothes they were married in. But it all came off without a hitch (that having been taken care of some time ago).

On a photo-album June day, about 150 no-longer-blushing brides and 150 not-very-nervous grooms turned out in wedding dresses, morning suits and various states of the dinner jacket.

The party, held last month on a horse farm near Kingston, N.Y., celebrated the 50th anniversary of I. Kleinfeld & Son, the Brooklyn bridal emporium. It was a very big day for tulle.

Not everyone wore original wedding clothes. ("Oh, please," said one woman, "I couldn't get my hand into my wedding dress.") Laurie Mallet, a fashion executive, wore a borrowed Badgley Mischka wedding dress with platform sneakers. "Nothing like them for country weddings," she said. Especially in horse country.

Dresses that were once white had become yellow with age. Some were almost beige. Formal trousers that once fox-trotted dashingly across a hotel ballroom were left in the closet in favor of Sansabelt shorts. (A lot of the men cheated, combining shorts or jeans with dinner jackets.)

But somehow, there in the foothills of the Catskills, against a deep blue, cloud-streaked sky, time not only stood still, it flashed charmingly backward. Picture it. Birds singing. Horses neighing. A sea of white on a field of green. So romantic.

Anthony Kahn, a lawyer from Westport, Conn, showed up wearing overalls, a plaid shirt and a straw hat and carrying a hoe and a rake.

"Mine was a shotgun wedding," Kahn said. "She wore a dress," he added, pointing to his wife, Joanne. "Her father saw to that. He dragged me out of a field and put a bow tie on me." They were married in 1964, Mrs. Kahn said, under quite respectable circumstances.

Cocktails and champagne were served at bars set up beside a pond and under the eaves of an octagonal barn. A horse-drawn carriage took guests over a meandering stream. And the memories flowed.

Jacques Bouhet, the general manager of the Societe Generale, the French banking house, recalled his wedding in a 14th-century church near Dusseldorf, Germany.

"On the way to the altar, I stumbed on a loose cobblestone, and my wife whispered, 'Darling, did you hurt yourself?'" he said. "On the way back down the aisle, I stumbled again and she said, 'Watch where you're going!' And I knew I was married."

The event was the inspiration of Michel Zelnik, a partner in Kleinfeld's, who gave his sprawling horse farm over to the affair. He got into the spirit of things with black tie and jeans that had a black satin stripe sewn down the side.

"The return to traditional weddings definitely represents a reaction to the '80s," Zelnik said. "After all the money that came and went, people want things that last."

Guests were served a luncheon of cold salmon and roast beef in the horse barn, whose floors had been washed with high-powered water hoses. There were haystacks decorated with ribbons and flowers. Birds fluttered in the rafters.

As at any wedding, the band segued from Gershwin to "I Heard It Through the Grapevine" with wild abandon.

When the group got around to "Vogue," the Madonna song, there was a blinding white swirl of bridal trains and satin skirts on the dance floor. Men in black barathea wool trousers brushed disastrously with an enormous wedding cake ("Fred Astaire ... walk on air"), leaving whipped-cream smears down the front of the trousers.

A note of delicious drama was struck when a professional model made her entrance wearing an enormous wedding-cake dress, fashioned from real cake, by Byron Lars, a clothing designer.

The dress had a white satin bodice over a wedding-cake cage constructed of large plastic-foam rings, with sheet cake cut to size and mounted in tiers. The model, Ann Marie Regal, had to be pushed out on rollers.

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of the Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Monday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

Announcements of pageant winners will only be published for teenage pageants and older. Photographes will be published only for winners, not runner-ups. These announcements are published Thursdays. Deadline is 5 p.m. Monday.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

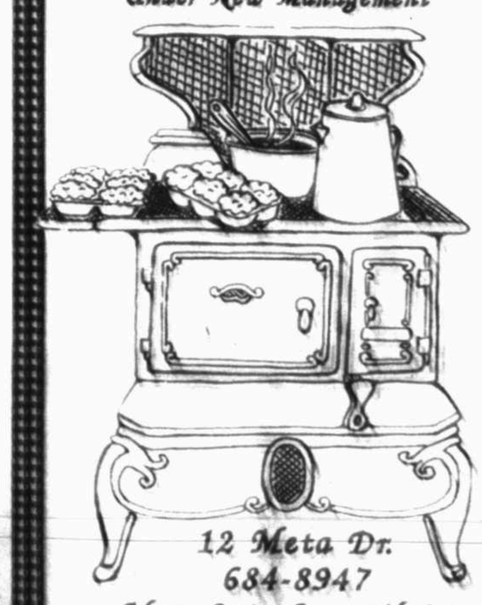

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Frozen yogurt tasty, but no health food

By Marian Burros
N.Y. Times News Service

Ever since Alison Weiss, a homemaker and sculptor from Short Hills, N.J., discovered that frozen yogurt is "permissible," because it has virtually no fat, she has been eating it almost daily.

"Eating ice cream has a stigma now, like smoking," Ms. Weiss said. "If someone comes into the store while I'm waiting for my frozen yogurt and asks for ice cream, I stare at them. There's a whole guilt thing about ice cream."

Yogurt's "aura of health," as Ms. Weiss puts it, hasn't hurt the reputation of frozen yogurt either. "You know, if you eat yogurt you'll live to be 100," she said. "No one ever says that about ice cream."

Frozen yogurt is enjoying a renaissance. Just about every ice cream maker and many yogurt makers have jumped into the business.

In 1989 sales of prepacked frozen yogurt reached $160 million, according to the International Ice Cream Association. Last year, sales were $355 million.

"Frozen yogurt brought a lot of people into the frozen dessert market who were not there before," said Sandy Wood, director of research for the association. "It also took a lot away from ice cream."

FIRST MARKETED in 1972, frozen yogurt almost expired, unmourned, because its characteristic tart flavor did not appeal to people who wanted an ice cream clone without the fat.

But there was a second coming in the late 1980s. Manufacturers learned from their mistakes, and today you would be hard pressed to find a frozen yogurt that had much, if any, of the characteristics of ordinary yogurt.

Of 21 frozen yogurts tasted at The New York Times, only one had even a hint of tartness.

Yogurt's reputation for healthfulness extends to frozen yogurt, whether or not it has active bacteria cultures, and whether or not there are enough in it to be beneficial.

The reputation even clings to frozen yogurt topped with M&Ms or filled with bits of Heath Bar. People think yogurt added to chocolate cakes and candy bars makes them good for you, too.

"Some of my colleagues are very incensed because frozen yogurt has lost its yogurt," said David Bandler, professor of food science at Cornell University. "Frozen yogurt is not yogurt; it's a frozen dessert."

One of the characteristics of ordinary yogurt is the high level of bacteria that ferment the milk and make it tart. Federal Food and Drug Administration regulations require yogurt to have two types of bacteria, lactobacillus bulgaricus and streptococcus thermophilus.

Some yogurts contain another, lactobacillus acidophilus. Under federal regulations, it is permissible to treat the yogurt with heat after the bacteria cultures are added. There are no federal standards of any kind for frozen yogurt, though some have been proposed.

SOME STATES have standards. California, New Jersey and New York, for example, require the presence of active, live bacteria cultures in the finished product: the regulations do not specify the amount. Ordinary yogurts with live bacteria contain hundreds of millions, even billions of bacteria.

There is substantial evidence that ordinary yogurt with live bacteria helps to overcome lactose intolerance and combats digestive tract infections.

It is also possible, though incontrovertible evidence is lacking, that yogurt can improve the immune system, lower cholesterol levels and even prevent the formation of some cancer-causing compounds.

No one is certain what levels of bacteria are needed to produce these therapeutic effects.

But those who agree that live yogurt bacteria are beneficial are not convinced that there are enough in frozen yogurt to be helpful.

"Even though frozen yogurt touts its addition of yogurt cultures," says the August 1989 issue of the Mayo Clinic Nutrition Letter, "no evidence suggests these bacteria will aid your digestion if you have trouble tolerating lactose. Frozen yogurt likely retains some yogurt cultures, but, if so, the amount is much less than regular unflavored yogurt."

Which is why Bandler says, "Anyone who eats frozen yogurt for whatever therapeutic value it has is fooling himself."

Frozen yogurts tested for The Times by Certified Labs Inc. of Corona, N.Y., confirm the newsletter's suspicion.

For example, in a nonfat plain Dannon yogurt, there were 2.6 billion bacteria per gram.

THE CLOSEST any frozen yogurt came was Haagen-Dazs, with 130 million organisms per gram. The rest ranged from the low thousands to tens of millions.

One sample of Elan Premium Frozen Yogurt had just over 6,210 organisms.

"I'm a little shocked by the low number" said James Biltekoff, president of Elan Foods, of Buffalo, N.Y. "It is not within our specifications. The public expects that a product labeled as yogurt will have active cultures in it. There seems to be some correlation between people who consume a lot of those organisms and certain health benefits."

Biltekoff said Elan's frozen yogurt formulation should have in the range of 10 million organisms when it is finished.

Samuel Kaymen, chairman of Stonyfield Farm in Londonderry, N.H., which produces regular and frozen yogurt with lactobacillus acidophilus, was chagrined at the level of lactobacilli in one sample of his product that was tested, 655,700 per gram.

He said the blast freezing process may have been excessive and killed much of the bacteria.

SURELY SOME consumers buy frozen yogurt because it contains active bacteria.

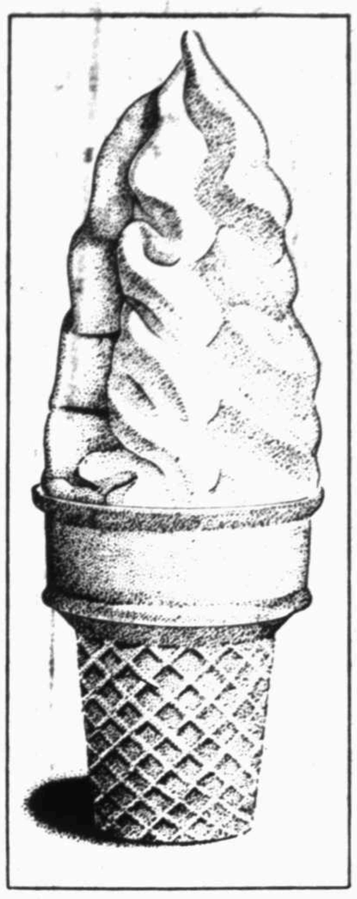

Otherwise why would products that contain live cultures proudly display the information on the label? Even those that don't still make reference, as does the Dolly Madison brand, to the "wholesome benefits of yogurt."

Are consumers being cheated because the levels are so low? If the New York State Department of Agriculture tested frozen yogurts for their bacterial counts, which it doesn't, it would expect them to have "hundreds of thousands, even millions" of organisms to qualify as yogurt, said Harold Rudnick, assistant director of the division of milk control.

But because the state has set no level for these bacteria, Rudnick said it would have trouble prosecuting on that basis. "We might write them a letter," he said.

Bandler is a little more forceful about the manufacturers. "It's a form of deception," he said.

With or without active bacteria, many frozen yogurts provide a more healthful and satisfying dessert than ice cream. The lower-fat and no-fat versions are nutritionally similar to ice milk and lower in fat and calories than regular ice cream.

But when manufacturers start adding Heath Bar chips and praline to frozen yogurt or coating it with chocolate, the low to moderately low fat content — anywhere from 0 to 6 grams in a six-ounce serving — skyrockets.

THE SAME six-ounce serving now has 10, 12, even 14 grams of fat. Right up there with regular ice cream. Even more. Elan, for example, makes a chocolate covered yogurt bar that weighs 3.6 ounces. It contains 13 grams of fat, almost half an ounce.

Manufacturers prefer to use small serving sizes on their labels because this improves the nutritional profile of the product.

But it is unrealistic for them to suggest, as many do on the nutrition labels of their frozen yogurts, that a serving is three ounces, occasionally four.

To most people a serving is at least six ounces. The U.S. Department of Agriculture considers about seven ounces the average serving size.

Chocolate Cherry-Almond ice cream summer favorite

Associated Press

End your summer cookouts with a spectacular dessert! Let family and friends take turns cranking the ice cream freezer to make Chocolate Cherry-Almond Ice Cream. The dessert is made with light cream, cocoa and maraschino cherries.

CHOCOLATE CHERRY-ALMOND ICE CREAM

2 cups sugar
1 cup cocoa
6 egg yolks, beaten
6 cups light cream
1 teaspoon almond extract
½ teaspoon vanilla extract
1 cup chopped maraschino cherries, drained
1 cup slivered almonds, toasted and coarsely chopped

In a large saucepan, stir together sugar and cocoa; stir in egg yolks with 2 cups of the cream. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly until mixture is very hot. Do not boil. Remove from heat, cool to room temperature.

Stir in the remaining 4 cups cream, almond and vanilla extracts; set aside. Refrigerate at least 6 hours; pour into the cylinder of a 5-quart ice cream freezer. Freeze according to manufacturer's instructions. Immediately fold in cherries and almonds. To harden the ice cream, re-pack the cylinder in ice and salt. Let stand several hours. Makes about 2½ quarts.

To toast almonds: Spread almonds in a thin layer in a shallow baking pan. Bake in a 350-degree F oven for 8 to 10 minutes, stirring occasionally until light golden brown; cool.

'Frozen Delight' is low-fat dessert

NEW YORK (AP) — Ultra Slim-Fast Frozen Delight is a combination of skim milk, low-fat flavors and mix-ins. It is fortified with vitamins, minerals and 1 to 3 grams of dietary fiber.

The product is available in pints and half pints, ranging from 90 to 120 calories per 4-ounce serving. Flavors include vanilla, chocolate, vanilla fudge cookie and peach. Chocolate fudge swirl and pralines and cream are available in pints.

Stick bars (75 calories) are available in fudge and vanilla topped with cookie crunch. Sandwiches (150 calories) come in a classic vanilla with chocolate wafer, vanilla with oatmeal cookie, or half chocolate-half vanilla inside a chocolate wafer. All products in the line are 90 to 99 percent fat-free.

France spends billions on Paris building boom

By Sarah Raper
Associated Press

PARIS — Not since Emperor Napoleon III ordered the reconstruction of Paris in the 1850s, officials boast, has the French capital seen such an explosion of public building.

From the eastern end of Paris to La Defense, the industrial park beyond the city's western limits, and on both banks of the Seine, a highly controversial program of construction and renovation is costing French taxpayers 30 billion francs (some $5.2 billion). It includes science and art museums, an Arab cultural center, a library and an opera house.

And it's all been realized since Francois Mitterrand took over as president of France 10 years ago.

"The 'grands projets' were considered a presidential fantasy in a country and a capital which had lost the tradition of building ambitious projects," Dominique Jamet tells National Geographic. "The people were surprised to see the president renewing this practice in the tradition of the kings."

JAMET IS chairman of the commission responsible for the most expensive single project, the Library of France. With groundbreaking scheduled later this year, the library will probably be the last of the grand ventures.

"We've perceived two things once the projects are completed. In general, they prove their usefulness, and people are more or less proud to watch Paris move and change and attract so many people," Jamet says.

But taxpayers grumble that the facilities are too expensive, ill-conceived and sometimes aesthetically jarring amid their more conventional neighbors.

Nothing is sacred — besides a facelift, the Louvre got a pyramid in the middle of its mostly 19th-century court. No one has escaped the president's will — the powerful finance ministry was exiled from its royal offices in the heart of Paris to a new fortress on the outskirts.

No project has proved too big — the Great Arch at La Defense is as wide as the Champs Elysees boulevard and taller than Notre Dame Cathedral. Or too expensive — the Library of France will cost more than $1 billion.

But tourists appear delighted. Visits to the Louvre are up 40 percent since the glass-and-stainless-steel pyramid entrance opened in 1989. La Villette, with its ultra-modern Center for Science and Industry and exhibition halls in the north of Paris, has attracted nearly 5 million visitors a year since it opened in 1986.

And at the white-marble-and-aluminum Great Arch, which houses the transport ministry and prominent international companies, about 3,500 visitors ride the glass elevators to the roof each day.

SUCH SUCCESS has escaped the $483 million Opera at the Bastille, Paris' second opera house. Initially it was criticized as redundant, too expensive and inappropriate in design for the Bastille site. Now, nearly two years after its opening, taxpayers are still complaining that it was unnecessary.

"The 'grands projets' were considered a presidential fantasy in a country and a capital which had lost the tradition of building ambitious projects. The people were surprised to see the president renewing this practice in the tradition of the kings.'

— Dominique Jamet
chairman of the commission for the Library of France

Another problem with the "grands projets," some say, is that they're all concentrated in Paris.

There are suspicions too about Mitterrand's motives. Are these projects critically needed cultural facilities or "Monuments to Mitterrand," designed to preserve the memory of the first Socialist president since the Fifth Republic was founded in 1958?

That's a question the French are again asking as the Library of France gets under way amid intense controversy.

Both advocates and critics agree that the present National Library is overburdened. The new facility will offer some 4,000 places for library users, compared to the National Library's 900.

Although the National Library, with its 10.5 million volumes, ranks as a premier library internationally, its budget in recent years has been less than world-class.

While critics applaud politicians for having rediscovered the library, they bemoan the new four-tower design as dangerous for the books and exorbitantly expensive to build and maintain. The L-shaped glass structures will tower nearly 300 feet.

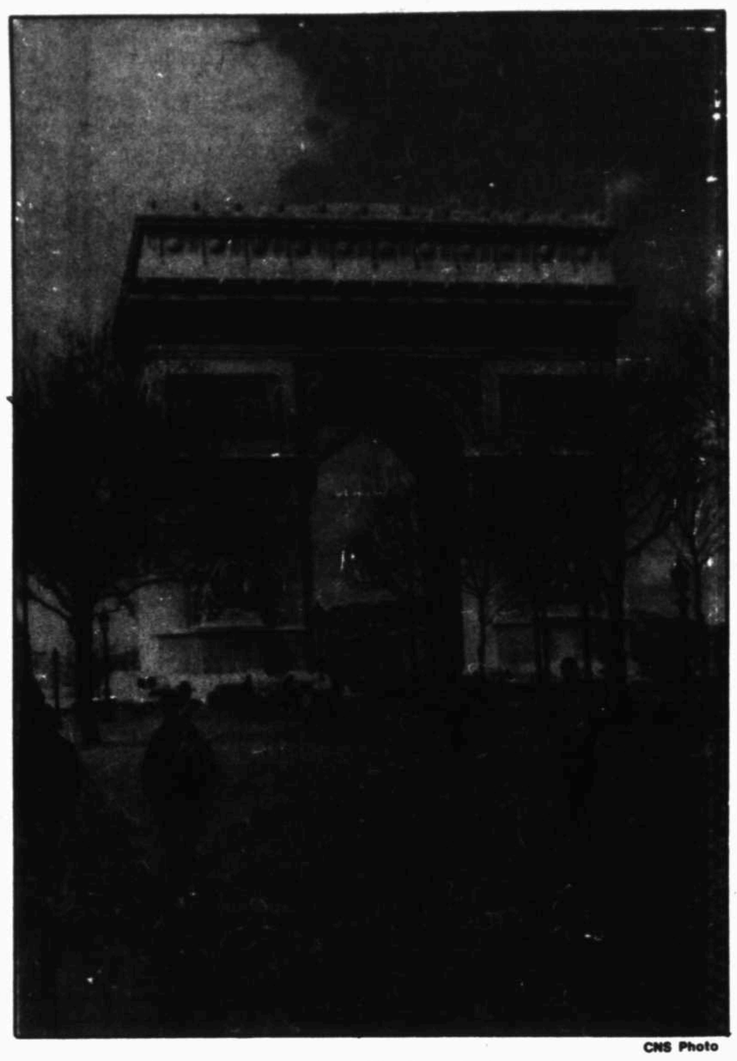

"Will these solar ovens in the form of open books become bonfires consuming the books which France has collected over four centuries?" Mark Fumaroli of the College of France asked in a Le Figaro newspaper article last year.

OTHER CRITICS, including Patrice Higonnet of Harvard University, say that housing books in towers, especially glass ones, is outdated. Changes in wind and sun hamper climate control. Book stacks, Higonnet says, should be in underground vaults.

Mitterrand, Higonnet contends, is jeopardizing the library's success by demanding its completion before he leaves office in 1995.

"Mitterrand sees this project as his own masterpiece," Higonnet wrote in the London Times literary supplement last year. "The project as now conceived should be stopped, and its design resubmitted to a jury mindful of what the settled purpose of the library will be."

While political analysts snipe at Mitterrand's policies, it is the "grands projets" that bedazzle the Parisian cafe-goer, tourist and "l'homme de la rue."

When traveling, put back pain behind you

NEW YORK (AP) — Travelers who are otherwise physically fit find backache a common problem while on the road.

Common sense and a little extra care can help.

Back trouble can start before you leave home when anxiety or tension you feel about the trip settle into your lower back. You can alleviate aches and avoid painful crises through daily exercise routines for a week or so before departure.

Constance A. Bean's "The Better Back Book" and Judith Scott's "Good Bye To Bad Backs," among several books about back care, have easy-to-follow illustrated exercises. Most emphasize the gentle stretching of tension-filled back muscles while you're developing stronger stomach muscles.

For some exercises you need to lie on the floor, but several can be done almost anywhere. For example, one is based on the idea of leaning against a wall: Stand with your back about a foot from the wall, lean back until your shoulders touch the wall, then press your back into the wall. Slide downward until you are almost in a sitting position, with your back resting against the wall. This can help significantly with lower backache.

Bean's book and "The Goodbye Back Pain Handbook" by James A. Peterson and James Wheeler have sections on how to avoid back strain during travel.

Packing, for example, can bring on back strain. Most people put their open suitcase on a bed, pile clothing next to it and then twist from side to side as they pack each article. This bend-and-twist method may seem efficient, but it can play havoc with back muscles.

There's an easy solution: put your suitcase on a higher surface, such as a chest of drawers, and pack it there. The reduction of wear and tear on your back muscles easily offsets having to lift the case from a higher perch to set it on the floor.

Lifting is another danger point. If you can't get help, lifting from the proper posture will protect your back. Stand close to the object, with your feet spread apart, and tighten your stomach muscles before you lift. Bend your knees and try to distribute the weight of the case evenly over both legs. As you lift, straighten your knees. In other words, let your legs do the lifting, while you keep your back as straight as possible.

Hold the load close to your body and avoid twisting your back. If you need to change directions, move your feet to do so.

Decide where you're putting the luggage before you pick it up and clear your path of any impediments.

When putting luggage down, bend your knees, not your back.

If possible, pack in two small suitcases rather than one large one. This will equally distribute luggage weight and prevent asymmetrical exertion that can strain your back.

Use luggage with wheels or a portable luggage cart.

Ask for assistance in placing heavy carry-on items in overhead bins on airplanes.

Long hours of sitting on an airplane or in an automobile take their toll on your back. To protect yourself, sit upright with your knees about level with your hips and both feet on the ground. Support your back with small pillows or rolled towels.

In airplanes, use your carry-on bag to elevate your feet. Get up frequently to walk around the cabin. If you're tall, ask to be seated behind a bulkhead or next to an emergency exit, where seats usually offer more leg room and you can stretch out.

TRINITY CENTER, Calif. — When Hank Butterfield heard from a fellow Los Angeles mobile-home magnate that they would be visiting Coffee Creek Ranch, he did the sensible thing. He rushed out and bought $5,000 worth of garish Western wear.

"We were going to a dude ranch," reasons Butterfield, who also outfitted his wife and son, "so we had to have dude ranch clothes."

Butterfield envisioned driving dogies all day on a wide-open range. A chuck wagon would pull up at night, followed by another hauling his wardrobe.

"I thought there'd be moo cows everywhere," he says. But Coffee Creek is no cattle drive — fortunately, as it turns out, for Butterfield. The closest thing to cows at Coffee Creek are some lazy porch dogs that tag along only on the food rides.

Coffee Creek sits in a lush river-canyon gorge of the Trinity Alps Wilderness, six hours from San Francisco. It offers pleasant rides in the high country woods.

Destinations are a waterfall or mountain-top lake, then visitors turn around and hurry back to a cool swim or hot shower. There isn't a packing house in sight.

"This is less ranch-oriented," says Ralph Berg, a veteran dude from San Diego. "You could pretend this is a mountain resort and lay by the pool all day."

At Coffee Creek, one doesn't get the duped feeling of paying money to do the dirty work that paid cowboys avoid. As Billy Crystal whines, when forced to serve as midwife to a cow in the hit film "City Slickers," "This was not in the brochure."

"CITY SLICKERS" is about three New Yorkers, all age 39, who go west to soul-search on a cattle drive. Crystal, in a quest for the one thing in life that matters, comes under a cowpoke's spell. Though viewers are never sure what that one thing is, many are taking horseback vacations this summer trying to find out.

Anyone heading for a dude ranch can expect some "City Slicker" jokes around the water cooler.

"I got ribbed relentlessly by my co-workers when they heard I was coming here," says Berg, 29, a computer programmer. "They thought, 'Life imitates art here.'"

Whether they have seen the movie or not (and it has become a prerequisite) guests do a good job of imitating it. They start out unsure which end of the horse goes in front. The hired help is soothing and sympathetic, though the workers know a good laugh when they see one.

Coffee Creek's wrangler C.W. Williamson, 45, is a stoic "saddlebag with eyes," as Crystal says in the film. When a guest asks for some chaps, pronouncing the "ch" as in "cheese," Williamson responds, "You say chaps out West, people think your lips hurt. It's shaps," as in chaparral.

Later he is asked if it's OK to dismount a horse on the right side.

AT COFFEE CREEK'S log archway portal, there's a ranch-hand in a broad Stetson, neckerchief and Slim Pickens smile. He doesn't say much; "yep" or "nope" is about all.

The rest of the staff spends a lot of time porch-sitting. "Howya-doin" (one word) is a standard greeting.

Hank Butterfield, all 268 pounds worth, minus the trimmings, commands a little more attention. His suitcase carries three pairs of boots (including elephant skin), 10 shirts (in every pearly buttoned possibility), three pairs of jeans, three broad-brimmed hats, a full-length raincoat and a slew of scarfs and bow-ties.

He strolls about, resembling Ralph Kramden at the Raccoon Lodge Hoedown. Then he is ready to ride.

"My first morning I went out and there was a little bit of a weight problem," he says. "They put the horse in a hole and let me climb on top."

He rode around for a few minutes. "After I got off I said, 'Did you see my legs shake?'"

"Did you see the horse's legs?" retorts his sidekick Neil Landes, 56, cast perfectly in the Ed Norton role.

At the beginning of "City Slickers," the host warns, "This is not a dude ranch. This is not pretend." Guests like Butterfield and Landes quickly learn one of the great assets of Coffee Creek: It IS pretend.

You don't have to ride. It isn't included in the summer rate (a high of $550 for adults to $250 for an infant), so you needn't feel guilty for sitting by the pool playing pinochle. A ride costs $25 extra, and some wouldn't do it even if it came with a rate reduction.

UPON ARRIVAL, Landes' wife, Cindy, 37, marches in her white cowboy boots to the front desk to complain that there are no door locks to protect her young daughter.

"What are you worried about?" drawls the clerk, "her getting out?"

Landes gets the point. "By that evening," she recalls, "it didn't matter."

It's more likely, in fact, that her child would be swapped than swiped. "This is one of the few places we've been where everybody gets to know each other. We even traded kids last night," says Karen McIntyre of San Diego.

"It worked out pretty well. Lease with an option to buy."

McIntyre and her husband, Jonathan, both turned 39 this year and decided to try something bolder than a week at the beach. They got what they came for.

Coffee Creek has a weekly square dance. Caller Ron Nilson drives 2½ hours each way, commuting to Reno on weekends.

"The square dancing is harder than the riding," says Karen McIntyre, dripping sweat during a break. "It's hotter in there, and the embarrassment of having my kids see me looking like a fool."

Coffee Creek's owners, Ruth and Mark Hartman, aren't exactly Roy and Dale, or even Ron and Nancy. He is a Dutch emigrant who dreamed of becoming a cowboy in the pictures, not the real thing. She is a fourth-generation San Franciscan, which says enough about her horsemanship.

Fredericksburg plans December event

FREDERICKSBURG — Christmas in July? Not exactly.

But the members of the Gillespie County Historical Society (GCHS) do want people to start thinking about their holiday travel plans.

The GCHS will sponsor the "Christmas Candlelight Tour of Homes 1991" 6-9 p.m. Dec. 13 and 3-9 p.m. Dec 14 at various home sites throughout Fredericksburg. The tour includes two churches, the Pioneer Memorial Museum, Vereins Kirche, historic homes and newer homes in the town which are decorated for the holiday season.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for children under 12 years of age. A map is provided so spectators can view the homes at their own pace.

Tickets will be available from Dec. 1 through the day of the tour at the Vereins Kirche on Market Square and at the Pioneer Museum, 309 W. Main Street in Fredericksburg.

For more information, contact the GCHS at P.O. Box 765, Fredericksburg, Texas, 78624, or call (512) 997-2835.

Pecos Cantaloupe Festival scheduled

PECOS — The area known for its luscious sweet melons will celebrate harvest time with a Little Miss Cantaloupe pageant, cantaloupe show, recipe contest, booths, 10-K run, sporting contests and other melon-related events at Reeves County Civic Center. A special Pecos Cantaloupe exhibit will be on view at the West of The Pecos Museum. Festivities will be Aug. 2-4.

For more information, contact the Cantaloupe Festival at Box 27, Pecos, Texas, 79772 or call (915) 445-2406.

BRIEFING

Weighted down

A weight indicator shows the weight on a drill bit. Uncertainty again weighed down the rig count, according to figures released by Baker Hughes Inc. The company reported that the Permian Basin rig count fell seven to 94 while the U.S. rig count, which had risen 16 the previous week, fell 22 to 859, less than the 1,011 at work a year ago. Of the rigs working, 332 were drilling for gas, 488 oil and 39 miscellaneous.

Weaker earnings

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Depressed natural gas prices and lower margins in petroleum products and chemicals will likely lead to lower second-quarter earnings for Phillips Petroleum Co., officials.

C.J. Silas, chairman and chief executive officer, said Phillips expects a substantial reduction in the earnings compared to the second quarter in 1990, when net income was reported at $105 million, or 43 cents a share.

Phillips' net income in the second quarter of 1989 was $197 million. The decrease last year was blamed on lower crude oil revenues and lower chemical margins.

Celeron cuts

Celeron Corp., the crude-oil pipeline subsidiary of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., said it would furlough 48 workers, more than one-fifth of its work force of 218 people.

George Hargreaves, president and chief executive of Celeron, said the reductions were part of what the company called "an intense evaluation of every department."

Celeron's primary business has been an unprofitable 1,750-mile crude-oil pipeline between California and Texas, which it bought in 1985 as a diversification move. Although the pipeline was designed to carry more than 400,000 barrels of oil a day, it is now handling only about 100,000.

Profits down

SEATTLE (AP) — Burlington Resources reported that second-quarter profits were down $13 million from the same period last year, when the energy company benefited from substantial one-time natural gas contract recoveries.

Profits of $33 million mean a 25 cents per share dividend this quarter, the Seattle-based energy company said. In the year earlier period, profits were $46 million, or 33 cents per share — 11 cents of that due to the non-recurring contract recoveries.

Lower natural-gas prices also helped hold down profits.

Is there life after El Paso?

■ A one company town for decades, Jal is battered but moving on without El Paso Natural Gas Co.

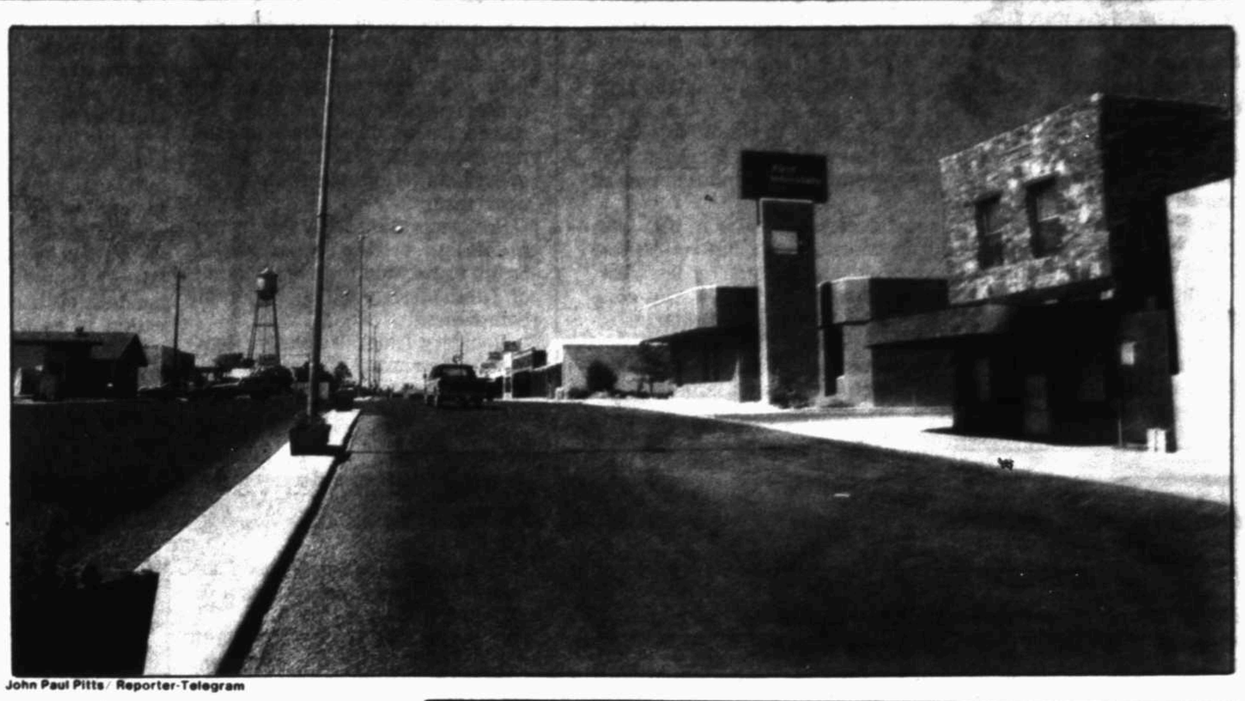

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

For decades Jal maintained an economic stability uncommon to the oilpatch, but now that stability, based primarily on a single company, is gone and this tiny New Mexico town is struggling to build a new future.

While other towns in the Permian Basin boomed and busted with the rig count, Jal was somewhat immune to the extreme cycles. Its economy was based not so much on working rigs, but El Paso Natural Gas Co., a pipeline company created to pump an ever-increasing supply of natural gas to an ever-growing market at a constant price.

It was an ideal business formula that allowed the remote oilpatch town to prosper. The task of gathering, processing and pumping natural gas from the Jal area to El Paso and eventually California, required hundreds of jobs, and

More DOE bucks for independents?

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

If Congressman Lamar Smith gets his way more Department of Energy research dollars headed for the Permian Basin will end up in the hands of independent oilmen.

In a letter sent to Energy Secretary James Watkins this week, Smith said he was concerned that independent oil producers may not get their fair share of federal research and development money.

"I'm concerned that most of the money — which could go as high as $16 million — will go to the major oil producers," Smith said. "I just want to make sure that the independent producer receives a sizable chunk of that."

Smith noted to the Energy Secretary that he had worked long and hard to make sure the Department of Energy's Oil Program Research Implementation Plan became a reality, but was afraid that independent oil producers who were his primary concern when he pushed for this project would be left out.

"It has come to my attention that the majority of the benefits of the new research plan are scheduled to go to the major oil producers," said

Halliburton layoff may be painless

Staff Report

DALLAS — The Permian Basin may not be hit too hard by announced Halliburton layoffs, according to a spokesman for Halliburton.

Halliburton annouced earlier this week that, in the face of a 41 percent decrease in earnings in the second quarter it would layoff 1200 employees nationwide to achieve a savings of approximately $40 million over the next six months.

"About 900 of those cuts will be in the energy services divisions, with 450 taking place in the Duncan area," said Jeff Chastain, investor relations analyst for Halliburton. "That means the remaining 450 will be from all the Halliburton units throughout the nation. So it is not likely any one area, like the Permian Basin, will be hit that hard."

The remaining 450 layoffs will be spread among the 30,200 of Halliburton's 77,000 employees that work in the energy services group.

Chastain said Halliburton was blaming low gas prices for the lack of drilling activity and decreased earnings. "When prices are low, our customers are not as active and don't use our services as much." He said the company looked toward a turnaround in gas prices sometime in 1992.

Fuel cells may impact natural gas market

Fuel cells have arrived. This space-age technology, conceived more than 100 years ago, could be on the verge of shaking up the energy industry.

Pitts

Energy experts say fuel cell technology, long touted as a futuristic form of energy, is finally poised for an energy breakthrough. If and when the breakthrough does come, it could result in another significant market for natural gas producers.

El Paso Natural Gas reports in its corporate publication Pipeliner that the little "black box" which chemically converts natural gas into electricity may be on the verge of revolutionizing the energy industry and could have major implications for energy producers, including oil and gas producers.

If the technology takes off, it could open up an entirely new market for natural gas. Fuel cells are currently used on the Apollo mission flights to generate electricity, but the first commercial version is set to go into operation sometime this year and will produce 200-kilowatts of electricity — enough to supply the power and hot water needs of a 30-unit apartment complex or small office building.

Southern California Gas Co., which has been involved in fuel cell research for the past 25 years, says it will install 10 of the 200-kilowatt units at customer facilities throughout Southern California.

About the size of a mobile home, the units operate by feeding natural gas into a fuel processing unit where the natural gas reacts with steam to produce a hydrogen-rich gas. In a second stage power converter, electrons are stripped from the hydrogen to produce a direct current. Also produced is heat which is used to make steam for the first stage fuel processor and to heat water.

Since the only exhaust is non-polluting carbon dioxide, emissions from the noiseless units are 20 less than conventional electrical generators.

Not so odd, the first customer for the fuel cells will be the South Coast Air Quality Management District, the multi-county agency responsible for enforcing Southern California's strict air pollution laws.

Fuel cells will supply about five percent of the electricity and hot water at SCAQMD's new 370,000 square-foot headquarters. Officials of the clean-air agency say the unit will utilize 46,000 cubic feet daily of natural gas and save it about $10,000 annually on electricity.

However, as production of the $500,000 units increases, their cost and the cost per kilowatt is expected to drop even lower, making fuel cells a very viable competitor for electrical power generating companies.

While current fuel cell cost per kilowatt is approximately $2,500, the cost is eventually expected to drop to $1,000 per kilowatt. Current research is being directed at making fuel cells smaller and stronger, reports Pipeliner.

Generated electricity will still be needed to supply large industries, buildings and public facilities, but the most likely market may be residential. Scientists have long talked about the possibility of residential fuel cells which would be standard equipment for each home, producing all its energy needs. That day may be closer than we realize.

Energy experts estimate that as the

LAYOFFS: May spare Permian Basin

(From 1F)

Drilling activity was down about 12 percent in the second quarter compared to last year, the company said. In offshore areas, drilling was down 18 percent.

The company had anticipated significant revenues from the rebuilding of Kuwait to be added to the bottom line the second quarter, but has not yet materialized. Kuwait revenues, however, are expected to help revenues in the third and fourth quarter.

In the meantime, layoff notices will be given during the next two weeks, he said.

In addition to the layoffs, Halliburton plans to consolidate some of the group's administrative functions and field facilities. The company will also stretch out the group's 1991 capital spending budget of about $365 million.

Halliburton expects second quarter earnings to be in line with those of the first quarter, about 26 cents a share, but well below the 44 cents a share performance of the second quarter last year.

Halliburton's engineering and construction group is the company's best performing segment. The group's second quarter income is expected to exceed last year's, the company said.

Its insurance services group will show break-even results for the quarter due to poor underwriting results in property and workers compensation lines.

SMITH: Wants independents to get fair share

(From 1F)

Smith, who added that independent producers are responsible for more than 41 percent of our domestic production in the lower 48 states and are a critical link to maintaining a strong domestic oil production base.

Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, said he was delighted by Smith's move to bring more of the research dollars into independent projects, because reservoir and recovery research being conducted by the majors would not likely be of great help to independents in the near term.

Spannaus said PBPA was instrumental in calling Congressman Smith's attention to the imbalance of funds designated to major oil companies.

Geoffery Tudor, legislative assistant to Lamar Smith, said he was hopeful the congressman for the 21st District of Texas would be able to persuade DOE to modify their planning to focus on independents.

"It makes a lot of sense," said Tudor, "because it is independents who normally have the responsibility of keeping marginal wells pumping. Major oil companies usually sell marginal wells to independents."

He said major oil producers already have the large research budgets to conduct advanced recovery research, and that profits of majors are seldom driven by the economies of producing from marginal wells.

In his letter Smith noted: "Due to tight budgetary constraints, the independents often cannot afford to conduct research themselves in new Enhanced Oil Recovery projects, therefore the Department of Energy should actively seek independent oil producers for participation in its research projects."

Smith was instrumental in pushing for the oil recovery research which was formalized in June 1990 as the Oil Program Research Implementation Plan (OPRIP). Central to the DOE Office of Fossil Fuels' oil research program is the concept of cost-sharing, in which DOE and operators will engage in cooperative ventures to prove new recovery techniques in proven oil fields.

In particular, the OPRIP identifies several large oil fields that represent reservoir characteristics typical of a given class. In the Permian Basin, the McElroy and the North Cowden have been identified as possible candidates for reservoir research. Both are operated by major oil companies.

Smith feels that such reservoirs operated by majors and are not in danger of being plugged in the near or mid term, and that the intent of the research was to prevent the premature plugging of wells through near-term, mid-term and long-term projects.

"The near-term projects involve taking on-the-shelf technology and showing smaller independents how to make it work to prevent plugging," said Tudor. "The mid-term projects are aimed to take laboratory technology to the field and prove it up within five years, while long-term projects will involve high risk projects that may pan out in the next 10 years."

Tudor said that $16 million could be spent on the projects over the life of the program and that the first contracts would probably be let early this fall.

The program has been criticized both for the small sum designated for oil recovery research and the fact that the program is still not off the ground.

PITTS: Fuel cells are here

next century rolls in, fuel cells could account for 1.5 percent of total U.S. electrical output; others, however, feel the percentage will be much higher.

Fuel cells, which improve energy efficiency 45 to 60 percent (86 percent if heat and steam are recycled) while combusting only 30 percent as much fossil fuel as conventional electrical generation, get high marks from environmentalists and those who feel America should be more energy self-reliant.

With the ability to save energy dollars now while reducing emissions, fuel cell technology could be one of the major growth markets of the next generation. A conservative estimate is that it could become a $10 billion market by the next decade.

MEETINGS

WTGS to hear paper on Grayburg formation

Bob Lindsay of Chevron in Midland will be the guest speaker at Tuesday's meeting of the West Texas Geological Society, at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Lindsay will present a paper titled "Grayburg Formation (Permian-Guadalupian): Comparison of Reservoir Characteristics and Sequence Stratigraphy in the Northwest Central Basin Platform with Outcrops in the Guadalupe Mountains, New Mexico."

Cost of the luncheon is $7 per person, and reservations should be made by Monday by calling the WTGS office at 683-1573.

Hazardous waste compliance course set

Safety-Kleen Corp. will sponsor a Hazardous Waste Law compliance course for Midland small businesses Tuesday at the Midland Hilton.

The course is described as a practical guide for understanding the intent and specifications of environmental law and the penalties incurred for non-compliance and will let participants plot their own compliance strategies. It is designed for small quantity generators of hazardous waste.

The seminar is free with the purchase of a manager's guide and employee training materials for $260. Non-customers pay an additional $100 fee.

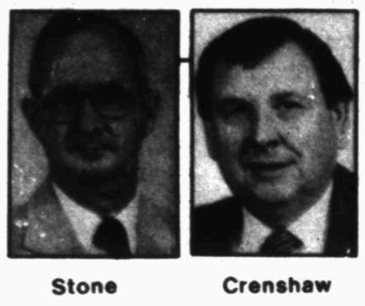

Information is available by calling 1-800-669-5740.

NAME DROPPING

Two promotions have been announced at the Permian Basin division of Ref-Chem Corp.

B.L. CRENSHAW has been named executive vice president and chief operating officer of the division and will be responsible for all engineering, construction and maintenance activities

G.L. (Sonny) STONE has been promoted to vice president of maintenance of the division and will be responsible for coordinating all maintenance activities.

Stone Crenshaw

He replaces TOM LEBLEU, who has been named district manager, east and south Texas, based in Kilgore.

GENE GERBER has joined Parker & Parsley as human resources manager. He comes to the company after one year as regional director of the Texas Workers Compensation Commission.

D.V. EDWARDS has been promoted to national accounts representative based in Midland for Welchem Inc.

BRUCE INSALACO has joined Pacific Enterprises Oil Co. as district geologist in the Central Region office in Denver. He comes to the company from the Permian Basin district of Santa Fe Energy Resources.

JAL: Town lives on without El Paso Natural Gas

many around Jal thought it might last forever. It didn't.

When the regulatory climate shifted, the oilpatch went into an extreme downturn and consolidation was almost mandated. El Paso launched, during this volatile period, a controlled sell out, phase out and pull out of its operations in and around Jal. Hundreds of jobs were transferred out or eliminated and the economic crunch was on.

Four camps, including General Camp, which was an extension of the city of Jal were closed, and an estimated 300 jobs were removed from the economy, as employees were transferred to Midland, El Paso and other points.

Over a five-year period the population dropped from 2,675 to 2,100. School enrollment dropped from 220 to 150. and gross sales dropped 18 percent. Businesses were forced to close, and a 50,000-square foot junior high was closed. So was the hospital.

Homes went begging for buyers. "There was probably 30 homes on the market at one time, and you could have bought a nice frame house here for $5,000," said Fran Schooley, who has lived in Jal for 40 years and is a saleslady for the Jal's only real estate agency. "For over a half century Jal was a company town, and El Paso Natural Gas was the company. Jal was El Paso Natural, but now we are going to have to look elsewhere." She said real estate values have improved some since the uncertainty of employment cuts has been eliminated, but that homes are still selling for a bargain.

"It was a good marriage for many years, but life goes on even after a divorce," said Jal High School Principal Rick Ferguson. "We are barely hanging on to our AA status, and may have to drop to Class A next year."

Formerly a ranch town, named for the JAL ranch, Jal started on the road to becoming a company town in 1929, when Paul Kayser, a Houston school teacher and attorney learned that El Paso was the only metropolitan city in Texas without natural gas service and decided to fill the need.

The solution was El Paso Natural Gas Co., Kayser raised the money to buy three gas wells near Jal, New Mexico and build a 204 mile pipeline from Jal to El Paso. On the day the gas arrived at El Paso, then Mayor R. Ewing Thompson, opened a valve and ignited the Permian Basin gas with a roman candle to begin a long and harmonious relationship.

"There's no question about it El Paso Natural got its start at Jal," said John McFall, a spokesman for El Paso Natural Gas.

McFall noted that some considered the sale of El Paso Natural Gas to Burlington Northern Railroad in 1983, as the reason for the company pulling out of Jal. "Actually," said McFall, "it was a shift in the regulatory climate. When FERC Open Access laws stripped us of our merchant status and made El Paso strictly a transporter of gas, we had to shut down some of our processing facilities."

More jobs were lost in a restructuring period in 1988, when Burlington Northern, combined some of its units including El Paso Natural Gas and Meridian Oil Co. to form Burlington Resources.

Today, after the "divorce," Jal is looking to new directions for help in re-building its economy.

"We have been to see Governor Bruce King, to try and get some sort of state office in this area. We have a hospital, a junior high school and El Paso's former office building that would serve as ideal office complexes," said Aubrey Hobson, Jal City Clerk.

Hobson says Jal city fathers have proposed the state establish a law enforcement training school in either the former 20,000 square-foot El Paso headquarters which were donated to the City or the former Junior High.

He said that a furniture manufacturer from California had also discussed the possibility of relocating to one of the facilities, but nothing had yet come of the discussions.

Attracting new industry, however, may be an uphill battle. New Mexico towns are at a disadvatage over nearby Texas towns, because the state constitution forbids them from offering tax incentives.

Joey Hunter, manager of the Jal Chamber of Commerce, noted that the city was even trying to capture some tourist traffic. "We have a small lake here, and we would like to get some of the RV traffic on the way to the Carlsbad Caverns to at least stop for the night," she said.

"El Paso Natural Gas was a very good thing for a very long time," said Hobson, who noted that the town must now put its eggs into more than one basket.

ENVIRO-CHEM

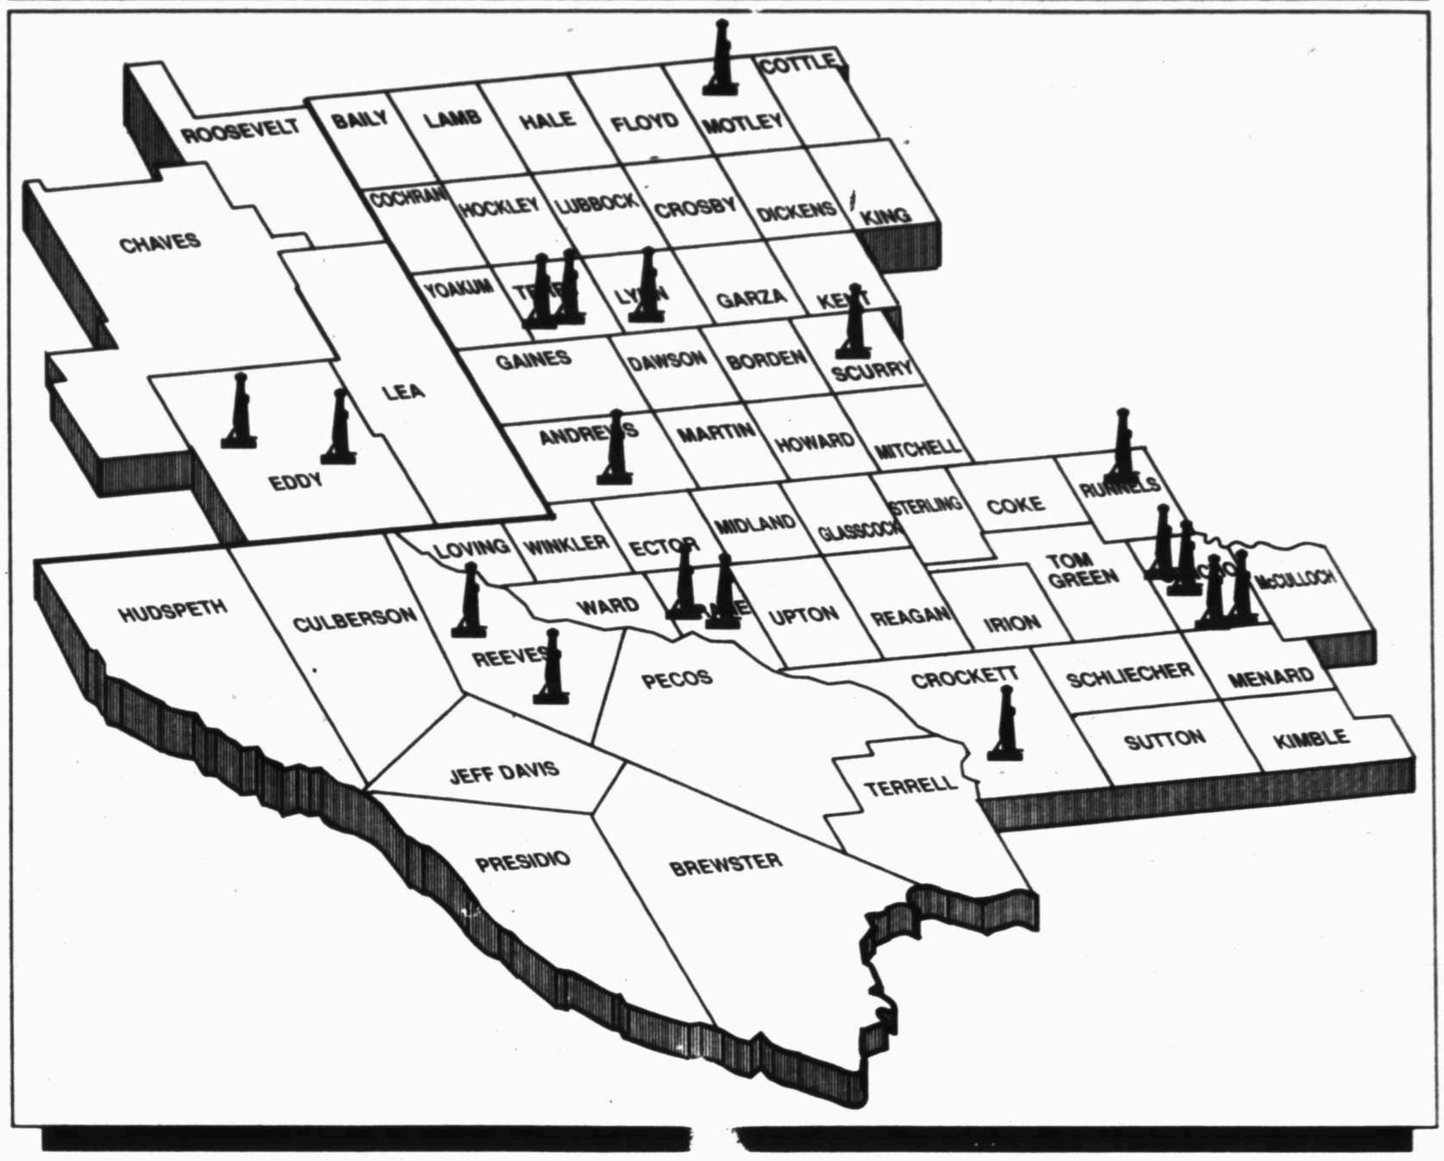

Bioremedial Solutions For :
Petroleum Contaminated Soil and Water,
Sludge Pits, Oily Waste Waters,
Underground Storage Tanks,
Pavement, Landfarming,
Refinery Sludge.

The major benefits of bioremediation over disposal methods and landfill techniques is the permanence of the bioremediation solution, that is, unlike alternative techniques that merely contain or transfer contaminants, bioremediation destroys toxic organic compounds. Once the process is complete, you can be assured that site ecology is back to normal with no continuing adverse effects. As a result you minimize potentially serious long-term liabilities posed by stringent "cradle to grave" regulatory requirements.

BACTERIA USED IS NON-TOXIC, NON-PATHOGENIC, NON-CONTAMINATING, NOT ACIDIC OR CAUSTIC

ENVIRO-CHEM is an approved consultant / contractor for TESORO PES product line.

Italian, Mexican oil groups sign accords

ROME (AP) — State-run oil companies in Italy and Mexico signed a number of accords Monday, including one to market Mexican crude in Europe.

The accords were signed by the chairmen of Italy's Ente Nazionale Idrocarburi (ENI) and its Mexican counterpart, Pemex, as Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari visits Italy.

ENI officials said the accords provide for an exchange of crude oil and products and a joint effort to market Mexican crude in Italy and in other European countries.

ENI and Pemex also signed a letter of intent to jointly produce and market MBTE — methyl ter buthyl ether — in Mexico and North America. The substance is a high-octane fuel additive used in making unleaded gasoline.

The accords are part of ENI's strategy to expand in Latin America.

K N Energy, Phillips trade facilities

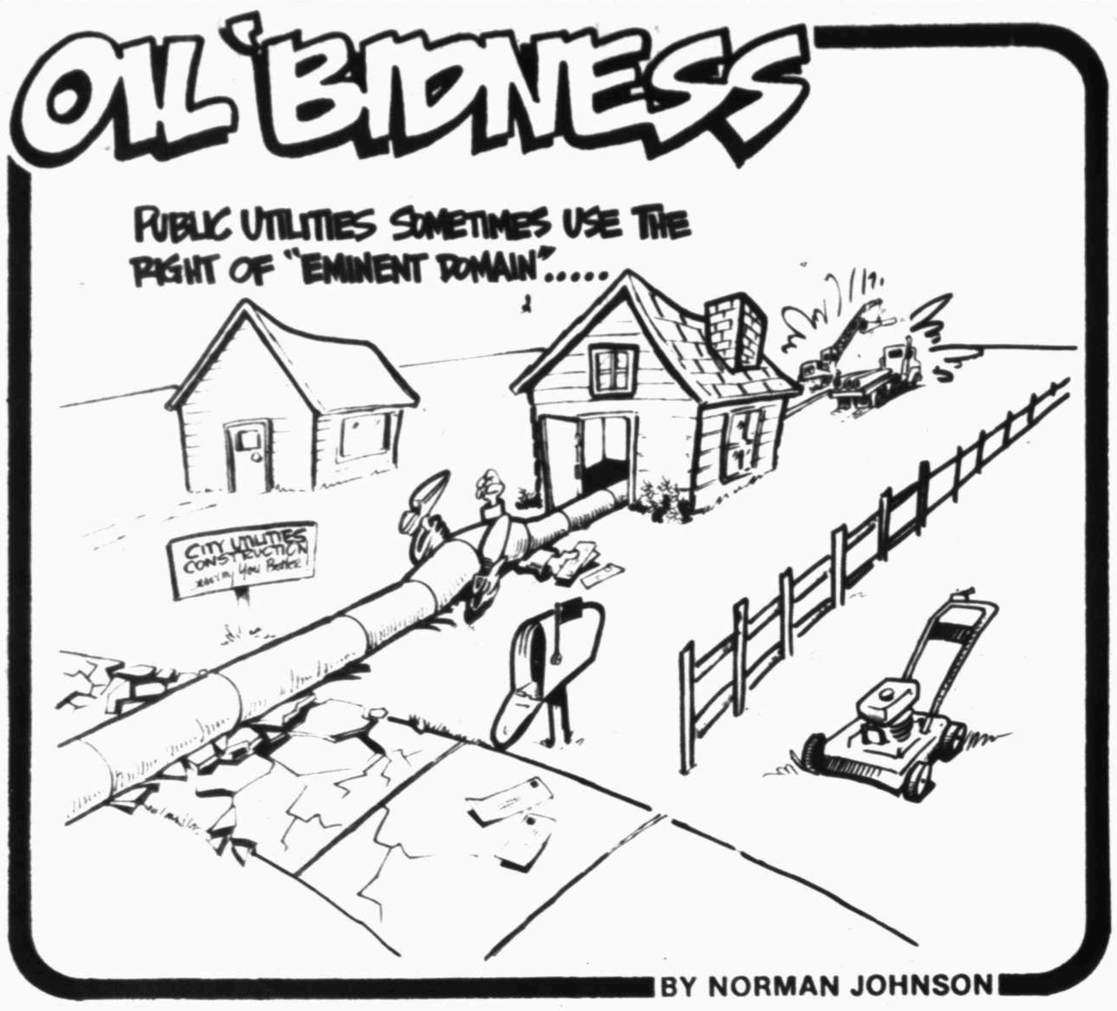

LAKEWOOD, Colo. (AP) — K N Energy Inc. and Phillips 66 Natural Gas Co. have proposed an exchange of some natural gas facilities in Wyoming and Oklahoma, officials announced.

The two companies said the exchange, which is subject to certain conditions and regulatory reviews, would benefit them strategically and operationally.

Under the proposal, K N would acquire Phillips' Douglas, Wyo., processing plant and gas gathering system in Converse and Campbell counties, a K N news release said.

The system, which already is connected to K N's interstate transportation network, would enhance the company's operating flexibility for system supply and incremental gas transportation, the release said.

In exchange, Phillips would receive K N's Tyrone gas gathering system in Beaver and Texas counties in Oklahoma and an undisclosed amount of cash, K N said. Phillips plans to link the Tyrone system to its gathering systems in the Texas and Oklahoma panhandles.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Coke yields 73-barrel oil discovery

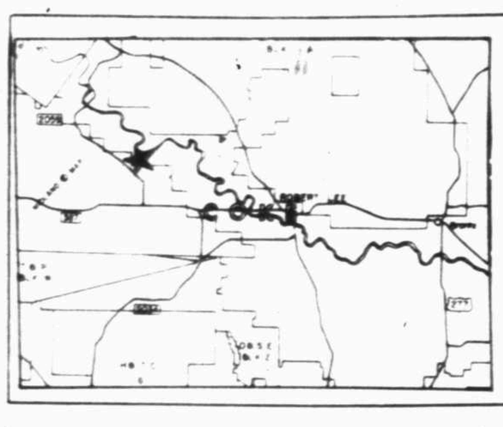

Staff Report

A Canyon Sand discovery has been completed in Coke County, 3/8-mile northeast of Strawn Reef production in the Frank Pearson field, 2.5 miles south and slightly west of 5600 South production in the Bloodworth Southfield, 15 miles northwest of Robert Lee.

SMC OIL & GAS INC., Midland, tested the No. 1 R. Massarano et al to flow 73 barrels of 39 gravity crude and one barrel of water on a 22/64 inch choke from perforations 6,059 to 6,075 ft. The interval was acidized with 1,500 gallons of acid and fractured with 28,000 gallons of gel and 26,000 lbs. sand.

Permitted as a 6,350 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 6,180 ft. and plugged back to 6,145 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 6,165 ft.

Location is 1,689 ft. from north and 767 ft. from west lines of Section 1, Winfield Scott survey, Abst. 640.

Coke discovery

SMC Oil & Gas of Midland has completed a Canyon Sand strike in Coke County, northeast of the Frank Pearson field.

Mitchell completes new field discovery

MITCHELL ENERGY AND DEVELOPMENT CORP., The Woodlands, has completed a new-field gas discovery in Lea County, N.M.

The No. 1 Coyote State flowed at an average daily rate of 1.3 Mmcfd and 95 barrels of condensate on a 30/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 800 psi. Perforations were between 12,416 and 12,654 ft. in the Morrow formation of the Delaware Basin.

The company said it has identified additional potential pay zones in the well and plans further drilling to exploit the Morrow and other objectives.

Nearburg reports Bone Spring strike

An abandoned well has been reentered and completed as a Bone Spring discovery in Lea County.

NEARBURG PRODUCING CO. reentered the No. 1 Perla, testing it to flow 146 barrels of crude and 306 Mcfd on a 24/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 442 psi. Production was natural from perforations 8,893 to 8,904 ft.

Originally drilled to 13,104 ft., the well was cleaned out to 12,780 ft. and plugged back to 9,885 ft. A 5-1/2 inch liner was hung from 10,891 to 13,063 ft. Pay was topped at 8,891 ft.

Location is 2,310 ft. from south and 1,980 ft. from east lines of Section 19, T19s, R36e.

Irion reentry nets San Angelo discovery

An Irion County reentry has yielded a San Angelo discovery, 1-1/4 miles west-northwest of San Angelo production in the Brooks field, four miles southeast of Mertzon.

VERDAD OIL & GAS CORP. reentered the No. 1 Tankersley, former producer in the Brooks (Canyon) field, completing it to pump 44.6 barrels of 42.5 gravity crude and 168 barrels of water from perforations 1,505 to 1,512 ft. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 22:1.

Drilled to 1,673 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 1,619 ft.

Location is 1,750 ft. from north and 2,100 ft. from west lines of Section 25, GC&SF survey, Abst. 125.

Runnels gas strike flows 1.4 Mmcfd

THE TOWNSEND CO., Abilene, has recorded an Upper Gardner gas discovery in Runnels County, five miles northwest of Winters.

The No. 2 Bredemeyer had a calculated absolute open flow of 1.4 Mmcfd from perforations 4,210 to 4,214 ft.

Drilled to 4,801 ft., the well was plugged back to 4,390 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 4,417 ft.

Location is 1,215 ft. from southeast and 503 ft. from northeast lines of J.B. Shaw survey 540.

Andrews reentry extends Giebel field

An abandoned Andrews County well has been reentered and completed as an Abo producer in the Giebel field, extending the field south.

ARCH PETROLEUM INC. reentered the No. 1 Faye R. Wilcher, finaling it to pump 96 barrels of 38 gravity crude, 29 Mcfd and no water from perforations 7,406 to 7,539 ft. The interval was acidized with 4,500 gallons of 10 percent acid. Gas-oil ratio is 300:1.

Permitted as a 7,650 ft. wildcat workover, the well was cleaned out to 8,155 ft. and plugged back to 7,979 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 8,025 ft.

The well topped the Yates at 2,945 ft., San Andres at 4,403, and Wichita Albany at 7,278 ft. on ground elevation of 3,448 ft. Pay was topped at 7,278 ft.

Location is 700 ft. from east and 3,400 ft. from south lines of Section 9, Block A-30, PSL survey, 26 miles west-northwest of Andrews.

Meridian Oil to drill horizontal producer

A horizontal well has been staked in Winkler County in the Keystone South field, eight miles southeast of Kermit.

Meridian Oil Inc. will drill the No. 420H Keystone Cattle Co. in Section 2, Block B-6, PSL survey. Top footage is 1,220 ft. from south and 2,140 ft. from east lines. Bottom footage is 140 ft. from west and 1,220 ft. from south lines. Contract depth is 11,000 ft.

PETROLEUM PERSPECTIVES

Gas producers need help

By Harry Spannaus

Spannaus

Natural Gas is taking a terrible beating at the wellhead market place. While less than one year ago there were more Permian Basin natural gas wells being drilled than crude oil well, the situation has now reversed.

There has never been much fairness about the gas market for producers since federal price deregulation commenced several years ago. Producers who had "signed and sealed" gas sales contracts were basically swindled out of "take or pay" provisions when contractual purchasers reneged on such contracts under the safe haven attitude of "sue us if you can afford the costs of taking big business to the courts."

There was also the "gas bubble" threat (overage of gas supplies) which kept the gas market depressed. It was predicted to burst in every year since 1988, thereby giving the gas producer the "carrot on the stick" hope that demand would exceed supply and gas prices would react accordingly. The gas bubble today, of course, remains inflated as usual and shows no sign of rupture.

The gas market problem became even more intensified when the major purchasers of natural gas became gas transporters — pipelines. Transporters then became selective on who could or could not transport gas, thereby putting the squeeze on many producers who were forced to curtail their production because of their inability to find a way to deliver their product to the consumer.

Added to all of this was — and still is — the massive and confusing natural gas regulatory process by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, special state rulemaking which was to promote equality of production takes and rights among all natural gas producers and the threat of non-competitive low price gas from Canada. From this and more, one comes up with a terribly complex system that requires a dedicated natural gas office within producing companies, legal counsel to insure that all avenues of drilling, production and sales are covered and protected, a consultant or two to keep up with regulatory requirements and a special marketer to find a reliable purchaser for the wellhead product. It all spells increased costs for the producer.

The shame of it is, the natural gas industry has been weak for several years because of the unfair price received at the wellhead. When comparing it on a BTU basis with all other conventional fuels, the gas wellhead price takes a position of "back burner" which is totally inconsistent with its properties, i.e. a clean, environmentally accepted premium fuel that is plentiful and has hundreds of applications and thousands of possibilities.

Energy economists blame the depressed gas market on a mild winter, a weak economy, above-normal natural gas inventories and a deliverability surplus, but the real problem may be the growth restrictions and constraints natural gas has faced due to the gerrymandering of the system by federal regulators and the power of lobbyists who have been successful in preventing natural gas market expansion in the northeast and into the industrial base of the nation.

Natural gas consumption in the United States has risen by 2.1 trillion cubic feet or 13 percent in the last five years from 16.7 Tcf in 1986 to 18.8 Tcf in 1990. Consumption is expected to grow to around 22 Tcf by 1995 with an increase in demand coming from the electrical generation and industrial markets. The demand within the industrial segment is shifting to more efficient and economical boilers, including coal burners which use natural gas injection to clean up the coal burning process. While in the late 1980s the industry outlook was viewed from a broad range of limited supply to an abundance for the next 50 years, I believe that the attitude of today is that natural gas is the energy of the future and that it represents a wellhead price up to $20 per MMBTU by the mid-nineties. Over the longer term, gas looks even brighter. The Clean Air Act will boost natural gas consumption by the conversion of fleet and private vehicles to compressed natural gas. Electrical utilities will use more natural gas generators and it is likely that the nuclear plant shutdown will provide another opportunity for natural gas. Residential usage will also increase with the expansion of a pipeline network across the United States. Even the aviation industry is experimenting with liquid natural gas as a future aircraft fuel. There appears to be no limit to the application of natural gas.

The problem of natural gas growth, of course, is price, not to the end user (burner tip) but to the producer. A natural gas producer who produces from a 25 percent royalty lease and who also must sweeten and compress the gas to get it into a transporter line, then pay a transportation charge, cannot make a profit at $1 to $1.50 per Mcf. It is no wonder that drilling for natural gas is on the decline. If the trend continues, our natural gas reserves and the movement for expanding natural gas usage will suffer considerably.

I get a lot of calls of concern about automobile gas pump price variations when the crude posted, spot or futures price fluctuates, especially when posted prices fall but pump prices remain stable or even increase. But I never hear a complaint about residential natural gas burner-tip prices — why they stay high regardless of the depressed market, why they don't vary according to the highs and lows producers are faced with on a daily basis. Perhaps it is our inattention to our once-a-month residential gas bills and our lack of awareness that the bulk of gas profits may be going to other than the natural gas producer who is the foundation for finding, producing and making natural gas available to the end user.

In summary, today's natural gas prices to the producer equate to the 1940 nickel candy bar and dime ice cream cone. The producer is the only one who bears the burden of low prices. The consumer pays a high rate disproportionate to wellhead prices. Those in between the producer and end user rake in the high profits. It's an unjust system that must be corrected if natural gas is to be the premium fuel of the future.

Phibro acquires JM Petroleum assets

Staff Report

NEW YORK — Phibro Energy Inc., a unit of Salomon Inc., has acquired the crude oil gathering business and assets of JM Petroleum Corp.

JM Petroleum, headquartered in Dallas, purchases and gathers at the wellhead approximately 78,000 barrels of crude oil per day in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, New Mexico and Kansas.

Phibro currently gathers approximately 30,000 barrels per day at the wellhead and will absorb the operations of JM Petroleum into its current organization.

WHEN YOUR TARGET IS THE PERMIAN BASIN

The Permian Basin is an oil and gas producing empire of 100,000 square miles with an oil well for every square mile. Comprised of 54 counties in Southeast New Mexico and West Texas, this petroleum industry accounts for roughly 20 percent of the nation's total oil production.

Yet, a long standing problem has been the lack of a single newspaper to serve the thousands of companies and over 40,000 people involved in exploration and production, as well as the related service and supply businesses and construction, refining and transportation.

Beginning in May '91, the Permian Basin Oil Report published weekly by the Midland Reporter-Telegram will become the information source for the Permian Basin oil industry.

Packed with information and articles about oil and gas people, products, companies, issues, events, drilling, exploration and production, the Oil Report will appear each Sunday as a section of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Additionally, it will be mailed to every producer, operator and oilfield service company throughout the Permian Basin.

If the Permian Basin is your target market, the Permian Basin Oil Report is the way to reach it.

For advertising rates and information about the Permian Basin Oil Report please call Sam Bakke at (915) 687-8873.

steve wariner

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Country recording artist Steve Wariner finds life's highway running on a smooth stretch.

"It's going great," Wariner said in a telephone interview from North Carolina. "I made a record label change. I left MCA and I'm now with Arista Records . . . and I'm working on my first album for them. Soon as I can ever get back off the road long enough, I'll work on it some more."

Before that, Wariner will come to West Texas for a Friday night concert at the Dorothy Garrett Coliseum in Big Spring. Dean Dillon opens the show.

Wariner is no stranger to West Texas.

"I like that area. I've been coming out there for years and years. I've had some really good times out there."

Through the years, Wariner has had nine No. 1 country hits including "I Got Dreams," "Where Did I Go Wrong," "Lynda," "The Weekend," "You Can Dream Of Me," "Small Town Girl," "Some Fools Never Learn," "Life's Highway" and "All Roads Lead To You" and as many additional Top Five hits. His current single is "There for Awhile."

His band members, with the exception of the keyboard player, Dwain Rowe, have been with Wariner for years.

"They're fabulous. I have to brag on them; they're top notch. They've been with me a long time."

Along the way he has been nominated for numerous writing and performing awards as well as performing at the Texas Inaugural Ball for President Bush, co-hosting TNN's 1988 "Ths Year in Country Music" special, a USO-sponsored tour of Alaska and Japan, singing the theme song for the TV series "Who's the Boss" and appearances on the Pat Sajak, Arsenio Hall and Today shows.

Most recently, Wariner has been involved in what he called "real fun" projects, including working with Mark O'Connor, Vince Gill and Ricky Skaggs on the song "Restless,"

WARINER: Singer wants gold album

which was written by Carl Perkins, playing bass on four tracks on "Neck and Neck" — an album by Mark Knopfler of Dire Straits and the Notting Hillbillies and Chet Atkins — and working on "Now It Belongs To You," written by Wariner and performed by Wariner and O'Connor.

"We just did a video on it, and that just came out this week. This song that I wrote for Mark, it's my song. I saw it from the creation all the way to the end, then to see somebody else recreated it actually on the video, it's really neat to see that especially as a writer."

When asked what he has not done that he wants to do, Wariner said, "I don't know. I'd like to hang some gold albums on the wall. That's my next stop I would think. I'm just tickled to death to be with Arista. I've been looking for this kind of a change. The chemistry seems to be really right between me, (record producer) Tim Dubois and this whole label. The goal is definitely something we've been talking about.

"I don't really have any big goals. I heard a guy the other day tell me, he said, 'Well, when I came to Nashville, I told myself four years. I set myself a time limit. I quit my job, sold everything I had and I moved here to write songs and to make it. I gave myself four years, and I'm on about the third year now.'

Through the years, Wariner's attitude about music videos has changed.

"I think they've really become important. I wouldn't have said that a few years ago, but nowadays I think they're particularly a useful tool for new people. It's a great way to introduce an artist to the public. And I think the industry's really changed its opinion in the past few years.

"They're a lot of work to make; I know that. They're just a lot of work for four minutes. And it's a lot of money, so everybody's still kind of looking at the dollar factor."

It's difficult for Wariner to pinpoint what he most likes about the business he's in.

"I just love so many parts of it. I try to wear several hats. I love making records, and I love being in the studio with the players and stuff, but I like the songwriting part of it very well.

"Of course, I love guitar. I love to play the guitar.

"I don't know. I probably would have to put my finger on the live performance. I love playing live more than anything, I believe.

"There's nothing better than getting out in front of a nice audience when it's live and things are going right and it's just going good. Of course, on the other hand, when things are going bad and it snowballs, it can be negative, but most times that live performance, there's nothing better."

Sometimes, the things that go wrong during a live performance are what's remembered later. Such was the case recently when Matt Campbell sat in with Wariner during a portion of his show.

"I play these guitars that have a little mechanism on the back, it's called a B-Bender," Wariner said. "It's like a little lever that the guitar strap hooks onto and if you pull down on that, it raises the second string like a steel guitar. It raises the tone.

"He didn't know that, and he sat in, grabbed my guitar and was going to sing with me. He started playing, and this thing started going errrr, errrr, errrr. He's looking around like, 'What in the hell?'"

Overcome with laughter, Wariner paused briefly, then continued, "I guess I should have told him about that, but he came onstage so quick, and he just grabbed that guitar, I didn't have a chance to tell him."

Wariner enjoys working with other talented artists, and is not one to dissuade any newcomer. When young musicians ask for his advice, in addition to calling on his own experience, he recalls the advice that he was given years ago by an established Nashville talent, Chet Atkins.

"If you want something bad enough and are willing to work hard enough for it, you can have anything.

Atkins said, "Listen, there's no short cuts to success. It's just what you put into it," he recalled.

"Be ready for some rejection because it's going to happen. Being able to hang in there and not give up, that's the important thing.

"Sometimes people say, 'Well, should I get into it?' I always say, 'You should know in your heart if you should do it or not. It's not a question that even has to be answered by anybody but you.'"

Wariner's playing career dates to his childhood when he performed with his father's band. He began touring in 1973, first with Dottie West for around three years, then with Bob Luman. Wariner secured a record contract with RCA in 1977. Following Luman's death in 1978, Wariner began making records with Atkins, who finally fired him.

"Atkins tells people he fired me. I had my first Top Ten hit, and then he fired me," Wariner said, laughing.

"He said, 'You've got a hit record. You need to get out of here and get a band and get on your own, so you're fired.'

"He was laughing when he did it. He was absolutely right. He knew it was time, and I knew it was time. I was already sort of putting together a little band and working some. What he wanted me to do was really get out and get after it big time, really go for it. And that's what I did."

When he looks back over his years in the business, Wariner has few regrets. Those he has, which occur only "occasionally," date back to childhood.

"I remember in the summertime when it was time to go play, it was still really bright outside and all my friends were playing baseball or something.

"I think, 'Boy, I remember those times when I didn't want to.' I didn't mind playing once I was there, but it was leaving the game or leaving whatever I was doing at the time.

"But, in general, I wouldn't change a thing. I love what I do; I feel real lucky to get to do this. I've put a lot of time and hard work into it, but you get back what you put into anything, I think."

After touring for so many years, Wariner, who has been married for 11 years and has two children, finds it takes understanding to keep a family together when one parent is frequently gone. Wariner said he is sometimes joined in the summertime by his wife, Karen, and their children, ages 7 and 4.

"It takes a lot of understanding, I think, on everybody's part. In my case, everybody understands that that's the way it is. Nobody's ever known any different.

"I'm looking at my dates and how they are put together a lot closer these days. I try not to do any real crazy runs where I go out for a month or something."

Wariner is grateful to be at that point in his career where he had more decision-making control over when he goes on tour and how long he stays.

"Nowadays, I look at a date and I say, 'Well, how does it fit in with all the other dates and how long is it going to keep me away from my family? Do we need the money that bad?' I look at it and see what it's going to do for my career."

Even on the road, Wariner takes time to pursue his hobbies, which include painting, magic and basketball.

"I've been painting a lot lately again. I take my junk with me on the road and paint a little bit here and there. I do some close-up magic. I'm a little rusty on that right now.

"I try and stay in shape out on the road. I play a little basketball here and there just for fun. I've always got something going on. I can't sit around and do nothing. I've got to do something."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ Mesozoic Era focus of museum display

"The World Through the Eyes of Quetzalalcoatus" exhibition continues at the Fredda Turner Durman Children's Museum, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through Aug. 18.

The exhibition features the creatures and environment of the Mesozoic Era, the age of dinosaurs, and is sponsored in part by grants from the Abell-Hanger Foundation and the Junior League of Midland.

Each time period of the Mesozoic is illustrated. Hands-on components show some aspect of the inhabitants of the period.

Dominating the space over the entrance gallery is the flying reptile Quetzalcoatlus. Remains of this reptile have been found near Del Rio. This model, with a wing span of 40 feet from tip to tip, was designed and constructed by the exhibition staff of the museum.

Questions are posed throughout the exhibition about the controversies surrounding dinosaurs and other inhabitants of the period. An archaeological sand-pit dig gives youth an idea of how an archaeologist works.

In one area, Keep Midland Beautiful illustrates how archaeologists of the future will determine how people of today lived by the trash in our garbage dumps. Keep Midland Beautiful also offers suggestions for lessening the amount of throw-away items.

For information about arranging group tours call 683-2882 or 570-7770. Docented tour may be scheduled for a fee. The Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum is part of the Museum of the Southwest complex.

■ 'Cause for Paws' set

The seventh annual "A Cause for Paws" benefit is set for 8 p.m. Friday, July 26, on the grounds of the Midland Racquet Club.

The evening includes a buffet dinner, a silent auction and music by Rotel and The Hot Tomatoes.

Cost is $50 per person.

All proceeds go to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The event is co-sponsored by KMID-TV and Magic 102.1. Invitations may be obtained by calling 694-7287.

■ Rodeo to be staged

PLAINVIEW — The KKYN/Bar None Rodeo is set for July 25 through 27 here.

Nightly performances begin at 8 p.m. in the Bar None Rodeo Arena, South FM 400. Maverick Rodeo Co. of Tulia is the stock broker this year.

Books for entries will open July 22. Rough Stock entries will be from 10 a.m. to noon and all others from noon to 6 p.m. To register call 1-806-995-4416.

Merchants will be having sidewalk sales all three days. Performing for the rodeo dance July 26 and 27 will be the Crystal Creek Band.

For more information call 1-806-293-2661.

■ Demolition derby set

Twin Cities Speedway will be the site Saturday, Aug. 17, of the 1991 Texas Championship Demolition Derby, sponsored by the Midland Suburban Lions Club.

The derby carries a first prize of $2,000 and pays 10 places back with 10th place receiving $1,000.

In addition, the first 40 that pre-enter and run in the derby will receive a free race jacket. Also, the first 10 that pre-enter who are coming from more than 100 miles away will receive a free room for Aug. 17 courtesy of Best Western Airport Hotel, and the owner of the demolition derby car which is towed the longest distance will receive a $100 cash bonus.

The annual event also features a Kids Day Great Bicycle Race at 6:30 p.m., with six bicycles being given away compliments of Coca Cola; radio control racing cars at 7:30 p.m.; auto racing at 8:30 p.m.; spectator drags, where participants drive the car they drove to the track, at 9:30 p.m.; and the derby at 10 p.m.

Gates open at 5 p.m. Aug. 17. Twin Cities Speedway is located off Coors Road between Midland and Odessa between Highway 80 and Interstate 20.

For more information on this special event at the three-eighths mile asphalt oval track call 683-8541 or 563-5456. Races are held Friday nights during the summer at the speedway.

■ Water festival slated

FORT STOCKTON — First Stockton Water Carnival is a celebration of the joy of water in the desert which will be held this year Thursday through Saturday.

It is not a traditional carnival with rides and game booths, said a release from the Fort Stockton Chamber of Commerce. It is a show, centered around the historic Comanche Springs swimming pool, that features synchronized swimming and dances at pool-side. A cast of more than 300 uses swim and dance numbers to tell a story.

The water carnival is now in its 55th year. It is an all-volunteer community project, with participants ranging in age from 4 up.

This year's show, "No Bad News," will be preceded each night by a review of local bathing beauties. The event begins at 8 p.m. Tickets are $4 per person for July 18 and 19 and $5 for July 20.

For tickets or more information call the chamber of commerce, 1-336-2264.

■ Lynne to sing at cafe

County music artist Shelby Lynne will perform at the Cactus Moon Cafe Wednesday. Showtime is 9 p.m.

Ms. Lynne's initial Nashville recognition came in late 1987 when she appeared on TNN's "Nashville Now" on the strength of a demo tape. The next morning she had offers from four record labels and a call from the legendary Billy Sherrill to produce her music.

She signed with Epic Records and in 1989, "Sunrise," her debut album, was released.

Her second album, "Tough All Over," was released in 1990. The first two singles from "Tough All Over" — I'll Lie Myself to Sleep" and "Things Are Tough All Over" — were accompanied by videos. Both songs went top 20.

Her next single, "The Very First Lasting Love," is a duet with country-soul singer Les Taylor.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, JULY 14, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Career success comes when you develop a latent talent: writing, music or painting is involved. Romance could have a beneficial effect on your finances in late fall. Start new business ventures in December, but delay making a move to another city or state until next February. A long-sought reconciliation is possible in March of 1992. Enter contests in April — you could win a very special opportunity.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have been drawing on your resources for too long. Frankly, you need a change. Short trips enjoy especially favorable influences. Romance is mostly happy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Today features new contacts and conquests! Friends prove helpful with introductions. Make peace with a younger rival. Take advantage of today's good luck. Observe all traffic regulations if driving.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your reviving spirits reflect improved conditions at home. But family members could still be unsettled. Spend more time outdoors and you will feel correspondingly healthier.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have the ability to inspire others today. Pursuing a new friendship or romance figures prominently in your plans. Sort out your priorities and devote more time to achieving your long-range goals.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do all you can to develop your hidden artistic potential. You can get things done, even if you are still upset about something. Meditate in a quiet place if you need inspiration.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You need to get more rest. Kick back and stop pushing yourself so hard. Postpone making important decisions until next week when more information will be available. Entertain smaller groups at home.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may be in the mood to take a few chances. Secret communications help resolve an emotional conflict. Try to figure out what your romantic relationship lacks. Greater personal effort is advised.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your strong beliefs will help get you through any trial. Be willing to admit your mistakes to your loved ones. Keep close tabs on your parents; they may need more of your time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You should be feeling more energetic now. As for that important favor, chances are it will be granted. Keep your life moving forward in a positive direction. Replace bad habits with good ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A sermon holds an important message. Your positive attitude toward life will rub off on your loved ones. Other people may be puzzled by your dramatic mood swings. Keep your temper in check.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Tailor your approach to your audience. Someone may act from selfish motives. You need to make a deal seem good for everyone involved. Socializing within a small group proves very enjoyable today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Stop listening to every suggestion and go with an idea that is yours alone. Power comes from joining certain groups. Have a serious talk with a child, but do a lot of listening, too.

Of the 10 original Life Masters named by the American Contract Bridge League in 1936, a year before it's official founding, only one still survives—Sam Fry Jr. of New York City. A skilled rubber-bridge player and feared opponent in team contests, Fry also demonstrated remarkable skills at match-point play in the early days of duplicate. This deal is from the Masters Pairs championship of 1934.

The bidding is textbook even by today's standards. North-South were using a 16-18 point range for their no-trump opening bids, so one diamond was automatic. The jump response showed a balanced hand of 13-15 points, and North looked no further than the no-trump game.

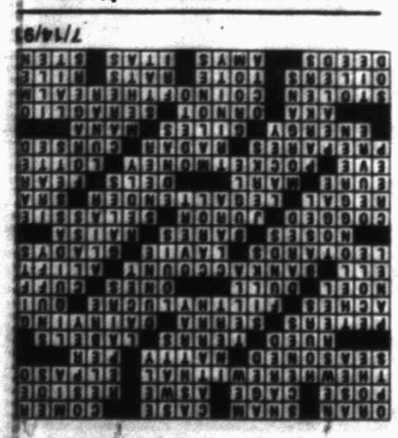

Had this deal cropped up at rubber bridge, it would never have come to anyone's attention. Declarer would have cashed out nine tricks—one spade, three hearts and five diamonds—the cards would have been tossed in and the next hand dealt. But this was duplicate, and Fry was acutely aware of the importance of overtricks, even at the risk of the contract.

The queen of spades was played from dummy, and it held the trick. If spades were 4-4, or if West held the ace of clubs, the contract was safe. Indeed, overtricks were guaranteed if West held the missing black ace simply by going after clubs. The only danger was if spades were 5-3 and East held the ace of clubs. Nevertheless, declarer decided the risk of immediately tackling the clubs was worth it because of one additional factor.

At trick two declarer led the ten of clubs from dummy! Coming so early in the hand, East did not realize it was imperative to rise with the ace and revert to spades, so that defender followed low. With an overtrick in the bag, declarer did not further tempt the fates. South cashed out for 10 tricks and a top score.

Art Institute for the Permian Basin has exhibits on hunger, portraits

Staff Report

ODESSA — The Art Institute for the Permian Basin has two new exhibitions including one which looks at "Hungers of the 90s" and another which displays contemporary artists.

"Hungers fo the 90s: Not By Bread Alone," will be on display through Aug. 18. This traveling exhibition of various media, which is sponsored locally in part by Ruff Ahders, cuts across ethnic, lingual, cultural and geographical boundaries by incorporating a wide variety of artists from across the United States. The works express the spiritual hungers of the present generation.

"Dealt with in the art work are such spiritual hungers as hunger for family, hunger for love, hunger for world peace, hunger for a healthy earth, hunger for freedom and hunger for equality and understanding," said Art Institute staff member Brenda Wharton. "The exhibition is meant for all audiences and is intended to evoke intellectual and emotional responses from the viewer."

Also on display is Christopher Felver's "The Face of Art," which remains at the institute through Aug. 30. Organized by the New England Center for Contemporary Art, this exhibition travels to the Permian Basin from Brooklyn, Conn. The 35 black-and-white photographic portraits by Felver include such noted contemporary artists as Marisol, Dennis Oppenheim, Ansel Adams, Willem deKooning, Louise Nevelson, Jasper Johns, Roy Lichtenstein, Robert Motherwell, George Segal, Christo, Antonio Tapies and David Hockney.

Felver often photographs the artists in fromt of their work. Text panels with information on the artists depicted accompany the photographs.

As a cinematographer, Felver has produced and directed numerous films. Since 1987, "The Face of Art" has been touring Europe. The Odessa showing, which is sponsored by Courtroom Intelligence, is the first in the Southwest.

Hilton event to benefit Casa
