Distraught people emerge from St. Joseph's Church where friends and relatives of those involved in the office shooting were taken Tuesday in Wakefield, Mass. An employee wielding a rifle, shotgun and pistol allegedly opened fire at an Internet consulting company Tuesday, killing seven people before police wrestled him to the floor, authorities said.

Seven killed in shooting near Boston

WAKEFIELD, Mass. — An employee wielding a semiautomatic rifle and a shotgun opened fire at an Internet consulting company Tuesday, killing seven co-workers before being subdued by police, authorities said.

Prosecutors were investigating whether Michael McDermott, 42, was upset about an Internal Revenue Service request to garnish his wages to pay back taxes, Middlesex District Attorney Martha Coakley said.

She said Edgewater Technology Inc. had agreed not to begin taking out money from McDermott's paycheck until after the holidays.

Most of the victims — four women and three men — worked in the accounting department. Coakley said the shootings were apparently not random, since the suspect bypassed several people during the rampage.

Two people were shot in the reception area and the others were killed at their desks in another wing of the building. Shell casings and bullets were found all over the office.

"There was an enormous amount of firepower," Coakley said.

She said McDermott did not have a permit for any of the weapons he was carrying: a semiautomatic assault rifle, a 12-gauge shotgun and a pistol. She said he had no prior criminal record.

Police found McDermott sitting silently in the reception area, a body nearby, his weapons within reach. He was arrested without gunfire.

"They made a split-second decision to hold their fire to try to effect an arrest," said Stephen Doherty, the police chief in this city 10 miles north of Boston.

McDermott faces seven charges of murder at Wednesday's arraignment.

Defense attorney Kevin Reddington, who met with McDermott, would not comment on his demeanor or a possible motive.

McDermott was a software tester who had worked at the company since March, said Mike Stanley, a team projects leader. He said McDermott recently had been coming in late and his performance wasn't as good as it could have been, but declined to elaborate.

He said none of the victims was McDermott's supervisor.

"He had nothing to do with any of them," Stanley said, a tear running down his right cheek. "It seems like a random ridiculous thing."

Kevin Forzese, who lived upstairs from McDermott in Haverhill, said the suspect had never mentioned money problems. He also said McDermott had mentioned that he collected antique guns, but he had never seen any weapons in McDermott's apartment.

"He never talked about the company," Forzese said. "I talked to him about money and he said he was doing really well."

Edgewater employs approximately 240 people in Massachusetts, said John Cooley, director of investor relations. The company is in the process of moving its headquarters from Fayetteville, Ark., to Wakefield.

The company, which also has offices in Alabama, Arkansas, Minnesota and New Hampshire, has undergone several changes in the past few months, but Cooley said there hadn't been any layoffs and none were planned.

McDermott came to work as usual Tuesday morning and then opened fire shortly before 11 a.m., authorities

The worst winter storm in two years largely shut down Midland Tuesday, leaving the roads covered with a dangerous mixture of snow and ice, including the dreaded near-invisible black ice.

"This is probably the most significant winter storm to affect the area since Dec. 11, 1998, when we had 9.5 inches of snow," said Brian Curran, a meteorologist for the National Weather Service.

Curran described the road conditions as "a mixture of ice and sleet. The precipitation was mainly in the form of ice." But the problems were worse in the Lubbock area, where they got 9 inches of snow, and in southeast New

Weather knocks out power in parts of town

By Leslie Burleson
Staff Writer

Christmas lights went out and holiday cooking ceased Monday morning for a large swath of Midland.

"We had some significant outages — we lost from Wadley on north, a pretty good chunk of customers," said Midland district manager Mike Navarro. Power went off and on several times before the outages were controlled.

The outages were caused by weather conditions, not customer demand, Navarro emphasized. "There was real heavy mist and drizzle — it was hitting our conductors and freezing," Navarro said. "We call it galloping. The lines get real heavy with ice and start slapping together, and the substation would trip off."

There are 93,000 electric customers in the Midland district, which includes Big Spring, Lamesa, Snyder and Sweetwater. Navarro said outages Tuesday were "sporadic and scattered throughout our district." He added, "We've called all our field people back from vacation that were in town," with 51 people on duty instead of the normal 12 to 15.

Kevin Mathes, who lives in Green Tree, said his family delayed breakfast, but otherwise "just kind of kept on with Christmas. We have a lot of windows around our house, and we lit candles."

Bush White House: Lots of faith, friends

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The first Bush presidency ended with a spirit-crushing defeat, and the second one will begin after an excruciating, 36-day wait for the election's results. George W. Bush was sustained both times by family, friends, and faith, and all three are likely to be the emblems of the new Bush White House.

People close to the Texas governor say he has emerged from this unprecedented fight resilient and fortified because he drew on the resources of a strong extended family, his steady and sensitive wife, Laura, and a conviction that God's will would be done.

"It is absolutely in times like

Fugitives get at least $30 million a year in Social Security checks

By David Pace
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The long arm of the law finally grabbed Anthony Cummings in New York City last year, but only after he had collected thousands of dollars from a Social Security program while on the run from a child rape indictment in Georgia.

Cummings, now serving a 10-year prison sentence, is one of about 25,000 fugitives from state and federal felony charges who have improperly collected Supplemental Security Income, or SSI, checks from the Social Security Administration since 1996.

The agency has paid out at least $76 million in SSI benefits designed for poor Americans with disabilities since 1996 — and perhaps as much as $283 million, an internal review has found.

And the Social Security Administration is at risk of paying millions more to accused felons because it doesn't have complete lists of fugitives from the states, its inspector general warns.

"We estimate that SSA will continue to pay fugitives at least $30 million annually in SSI payments if state fugitive files are not used to prevent such payments," the agency's internal watchdog wrote in a recent report obtained by The Associated Press.

The agency hopes to negotiate agreements by July to get such records from all 50 states, officials said. So far, it had reached agreements with just six states and New York City, SSA spokeswoman Carolyn Cheezum said.

"We believe the negotiations are going on at a very good pace," Cheezum said. "These are legally binding agreements and require a lot of detailed review before they can be put in place. It can't be done up quickly."

Congress in 1996 barred felony fugitives from receiving SSI benefits, which are provided to more than 6 million elderly, blind or disabled Americans with low incomes.

Since then, only 2,000 of the estimated 25,000 fugitives who received SSI payments — fewer than 10 percent — have been caught, auditors said.

Social Security officials said privacy laws prohibit them from saying how much the agency paid Cummings during the 41 months he was a fugitive from charges he raped and molested a 3-year-old girl.

But based on the maximum benefit levels in effect during those months, the 27-year-old Savannah, Ga., man could have received as much as $19,556.

"That's outrageous," said Greg McConnell, the Georgia prosecutor who negotiated Cummings' guilty plea last May.

The checks, however, eventually led authorities to the address in New York City where Cummings was hiding.

"Federal marshals and our guys just knocked on his door and asked if he was Anthony Cummings," said Rich Rodhe, spokesman for the Social Security inspector general. "He said, 'Yeah, that's who I am,' and they arrested him."

Social Security officials contend that a new computer program should end such payments while helping law enforcement officers track down fugitives. It uses computers to match law enforcement records of fugitive felons against the data files of beneficiaries of SSI and other Social Security programs.

When a match is found, SSI benefits can be terminated, and Social Security investigators can provide law enforcement officials with the fugitive's most recent address — the one where he or she has been receiving checks.

The program, however, has been slow to start. The agency took almost four years to obtain fugitive records to match against Social Security files.

And those federal records, auditors discovered this summer, include only an estimated 28 percent of the felony fugitives receiving SSI benefits.

Using estimates, auditors projected that $76 million to $283 million in SSI payments have been made to felony fugitives since such payments were outlawed in 1996.

While felony fugitives are prohibited from receiving SSI payments, there is no such prohibition on benefits from Social Security's main program, which pays senior citizens, survivors and disability insurance benefits.

Using the same 10-state sample, auditors estimated that fugitives had collected between $108 million and $400 million in such benefits over the past four years and will continue to receive between $39 million and $179 million a year.

The auditors urged the agency to ask Congress to extend the prohibition on SSI payments for fugitives to Social Security's other benefit programs. Officials are studying the recommendation.

Fugitive felons getting benefits

In 1996, Congress passed a law denying Supplemental Security Income payments to felony fugitives. Elderly or disabled Americans with low incomes are eligible for the payments of up to $500 a month. Federal auditors used a random sample of 10 states and estimated that fugitives nationwide collected between $76 million and $283 million in SSI benefits since 1996. Here are the results of the study.

	Number of fugitives	Projected benefits since 1996
Alabama	244	$760,214
Colorado	681	4,192,638
Idaho	51	343,070
Illinois	2,267	9,423,299
Iowa	244	1,206,628
Maine	70	353,103
Nebraska	14	68,949
New Mexico	23	135,844
Oregon	1,308	11,683,145
Texas	2,814	10,973,394

Note: Six states and New York City have agreed to supply Social Security computer records of fugitives to help end such payments. The states are Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, New Jersey, South Carolina, Tennessee.

Shalala kills plan to allow sale of Canadian drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Health and Human Services said Tuesday that it would not implement an election-year law meant to enable cheaper prescription drugs to flow in from Canada, agreeing with critics that the law had "serious flaws and loopholes."

The legislation would have allowed drug stores and distributors to buy drugs in Canada that had been manufactured here and resell them to Americans. Approved by Congress just weeks before Election Day, the legislation was an attempt to address the clamor for cheaper prescription drugs — particularly among the elderly — as lawmakers were unable to agree on a more sweeping plan to add prescription drug coverage to Medicare.

But the legislation directed the HHS secretary to review the measure and determine whether it was cost effective and safe. In a letter Tuesday to President Clinton, HHS Secretary Donna Shalala said it was neither.

"I feel compelled to inform you that the flaws and loopholes contained ... make it impossible for me to demonstrate that it is safe and cost effective," she wrote. "As such, I cannot sanction the allocation of taxpayer dollars to implement such a system."

Accordingly, she said she would not request $23 million available to establish a system for overseeing the importation of drugs from Canada.

She added that the law could never replace a Medicare prescription drug option.

The law, which had bipartisan support, was prompted by high-profile trips led into Canada by members of Congress looking to spotlight that country's cheaper drug prices. The same drugs can be purchased for much less in Canada, principally because the government regulates prices, a solution fiercely resisted here.

For example, the allergy/sinus medication Flonase Nasal costs $46 in the United States, but just $23 in Canada. Likewise, 45 pills of the anti-depressant Prozac can cost about $106 in the United States, $43 in Canada.

During debate over the bill, Democratic critics called it a Band-Aid fix for the country's troubles with prescription drug prices, manufactured to give political cover to those who opposed broader solutions.

But the bill's supporters dared opponents to vote against it, and when it came time to vote, even the legislation's most vocal detractors went along.

Shalala cited several shortcomings.

She argued that under the plan, there's no guarantee that imported drugs will carry labels approved by the Food and Drug Administration, raising safety issues. And she complained that the plan did nothing to keep drug manufacturers from strong-arming distributors into raising prices on imported drugs.

But Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., who co-wrote the law, said the administration simply "chickened out."

"The best approach would have been to say, we'll pass a law that does something and then we will wait and see how the drug companies react," Dorgan said. "If they start playing games then at least we'll all know who the villain is. But this makes no sense at all. Now we know the drug companies will do nothing because we're doing nothing."

Chris Jennings, Clinton's top health policy aide, said Shalala's stinging assessment was on target.

"We have an obligation not to raise hopes with false promises," he said. "There are loopholes that allow the intent of the legislation to be completely thwarted."

Telemarketers barred from selling lottery tickets

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three Canadian telemarketing companies that allegedly sold foreign lottery tickets to U.S. citizens have been temporarily barred from operating and will have their U.S. assets frozen, the Federal Trade Commission said Tuesday.

The FTC, which requested the action from the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, will also ask the court to issue a permanent ban and to order restitution for the victims, the agency said in a statement. Buying and selling foreign lottery tickets is illegal in the United States.

The FTC charged that the telemarketers targeted elderly consumers, inducing them to buy shares in a Canadian lottery ticket or series of tickets at prices ranging from $39 to almost $600. The telemarketers allegedly told consumers that they had a very good chance of winning the lottery and related stories of U.S. consumers who won by playing through their firm.

The exact number of victims is unknown, but there may be thousands, FTC attorney David O'Toole said in an interview.

The telemarketers also allegedly violated federal regulations by claiming that it is legal to buy and sell foreign lottery tickets and saying that they were affiliated with the Canadian government, the FTC said.

The companies named in the suit are Toronto-based Growth Plus International Marketing, Inc., also doing business as Growth Potential International, GPI, and GPIM; Gains International Marketing, Inc., also doing business as Gains Wealth International; and Ploto Computer Services, Inc.

The owners and officers of the three companies named in the suit are Victor Thiruchelvam, Jessie Nadarajah, Kandan Nadarajah, Arudchelvam Nagamuthu and Julie Turgeon.

In a separate case involving Canadian gambling, the U.S. Customs Service warned on Dec. 19 that con artists posing as customs agents were targeting people in Vermont. The callers told their targets that they had won a Canadian sweepstakes, but had to wire money to a Canadian address to release the funds.

Southern California wind fans wildfires; four young men questioned

By Cadonna Peyton
Associated Press

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — Dry desert wind drove a 600-acre wildfire dangerously close to luxury homes Tuesday, and investigators arrested four teenagers for investigation of arson.

The fire broke out in the middle of the night but was fully contained with no homes lost by late afternoon, Ventura County Fire Department spokeswoman Sandi Wells said. More than 600 firefighters, four water-dropping helicopters and two air tankers battled the flames.

Three 16-year-old boys and an 18-year-old man were arrested for investigation of arson, sheriff's Sgt. Ron Nelson said. Authorities said only that the four were taken into custody near the fire.

Thousand Oaks residents were warned that they might have to evacuate as the flames advanced to within 100 feet of back yards, fanned by Santa Ana winds that gusted to 20 mph. But as daylight broke and the helicopters arrived, the wind and flames began to subside.

"I pulled up my curtains and saw a wall of flames coming right at me," said Nathan Brian Wine, after watching the blaze come within 250 feet of his condominium. "I didn't know if I was going to have enough time to get myself up and my 11-year-old son out."

Mandatory brush-clearance ordinances protected property in the hilly, brush-covered area where luxury homes are separated by swaths of open country. The town of 120,000 is some 40 miles west of Los Angeles.

Homeowner Gwen Schakett took no chances before the firefighters got the upper hand.

"I turned the water on and the kids and I are packing up and leaving," Schakett said. She said the smell of smoke woke her up and "I went outside and we couldn't see anything because of the smoke."

Elsewhere in Southern California, a nearly 400-acre blaze in mountainous terrain between Santa P la and Camarillo, also in Ventura County, was 85 percent contained Tuesday.

The Santa Ana winds, which are often blamed for fires in Southern California, are rare in December.

Rabbi accused of sexually abusing children

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — An Orthodox rabbi who led a national Jewish youth organization sexually abused women and girls and physically abused both boys and girls, according to a report commissioned after he resigned over the allegations last summer.

The internal investigation also concluded that some personnel of the Orthodox Union and its National Conference of Synagogue Youth failed to respond properly to "red flags" raised during decades of complaints against Rabbi Baruch Lanner.

No cover-up was found, but Lanner's "inappropriate and crude behavior" should have led to his firing, according to a summary of the report released Tuesday.

"We sincerely apologize for the pain and suffering these young people experienced as a result of Rabbi Lanner's actions. We also wish to apologize to the families of these young people who entrusted their children to us," union president Mandell I. Ganchrow said.

"We promise to use this sad event as an opportunity to assure that behavior such as this will never again occur within our organization."

Lanner, 50, who separated from his wife earlier this year, did not return a call for comment Tuesday.

In September, he denied any criminal wrongdoing in a statement to investigators provided by his lawyer. He said "his conduct, on occasion, was inappropriate" and included things that "should not have occurred."

The statement said that while the "social context" of the 1970s and 1980s differed from today, it acknowledged that Lanner's behavior "was unbefitting for anyone, particularly one in his position."

Lanner told The Associated Press in July that he violated Orthodox Jewish law by having romantic relationships with former female students — none teen-agers — but did not break any other laws. Physical contact was limited to hand-holding and putting arms around each other, he said.

Lanner resigned as director of regions for the New York-based youth group in June after The Jewish Week of New York, a leading Jewish publication, ran accounts from more than 25 former students charging sexual, physical and emotional abuse.

The students, now in their 30s and 40s, said that Lanner kissed, fondled and hit teen-age girls and kneed boys in the groin. His accusers also said he attacked a man with a knife.

The report found that some of Lanner's victims, including girls as young as 14, suffered long-lasting damage. It corroborated accounts that Lanner regularly made comments to girls about their physical attributes, and found that he tried to control the lives of vulnerable students.

It also said he solicited donations for the organization, but had the checks sent to his home and deposited some in his personal accounts.

Prosecutors in New Jersey are investigating.

The Orthodox Union, which has a membership of nearly 1,000 synagogues and puts a seal of approval on kosher food, said it has arranged for free counseling for current and former youth group members.

The report also includes recommendations for the union, some of which have already been implemented, including anti-harassment programs.

Asked if any union staff will be fired, Ganchrow said, "The issue of personnel is one of the areas that we are looking at."

Clinton signs bill banning shark finning

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton signed a bill Tuesday that bans the practice of cutting off shark fins — a culinary delicacy in Asia — and throwing the dying fish back into the sea.

The legislation is aimed mainly at Pacific Ocean fishermen supplying fins to Asian markets, where they are prized as a specialty and thought to be an aphrodisiac. Shark fin soup can sell for as much as $100 a bowl in some Asian countries.

The Commerce Department took administrative action in 1993 to halt finning in Atlantic, Caribbean and Gulf of Mexico waters after it became apparent the practice was reducing shark populations. Clinton's action establishes the ban in law and extends it to the Pacific Ocean.

The new law makes it illegal for a fishing boat to enter an American port or operate in the 200-mile U.S. federal water territories carrying shark fins without the carcass. The practice, called shark finning, is often a side business to swordfish and tuna fishing, and small fishing operations have no room to carry carcasses, which are of little market value.

Rep. Randy "Duke" Cunningham, R-Calif., who first introduced the legislation two years ago, says sharks are among the most biologically vulnerable species in the ocean because of their slow growth, late maturity and small number of offspring.

According to the Ocean Wildlife Campaign, tens of thousands of sharks, often ocean blue sharks, are killed for their fins in the U.S. Pacific Ocean, and that in 1998 the number of sharks finned in the waters surrounding Hawaii topped 60,000.

Coca-Cola to sell milk to kids

ATLANTA (AP) — Got milk? Think Coke.

The Atlanta soft drink giant plans to test-market at least five milk-based children's drinks early next year under a business plan dubbed Project Mother.

Coca-Cola Inc. is also looking at the possibility of selling juices, spokesman Rob Baskin said Tuesday.

Coke has been taking steps to move away from just carbonated drinks, looking into such ideas as in-home water purification systems.

Coca-Cola has asked researchers to find ways to counteract the feeling that milk isn't hip or something kids will want to drink in public.

John Sicher, editor and publisher of Beverage Digest, praised Coca-Cola's strategy.

"It's a very smart thing to do. It basically wants to sell more products to more people at different life stages," he said.

BUSH: Friends expect couple to entertain gracefully

these that the strong bonds of family, faith, and friends get you through," said Ron Kaufmann, a Massachusetts Republican who has been close to the Bushes for many years. "And the Bushes have an inordinate amount of all three."

Bush comes to Washington with this advantage: The White House is familiar territory, the home of his parents for four years. And if he and his wife's six years in the Texas governor's mansion are any guide, the Bushes will combine a respect for official duties with the low-key and casual lifestyle of a couple who surround themselves with children, parents, siblings, and old friends.

In particular, and what will serve the president-elect well now, Kaufmann said, is "a very healthy sense of self" that Bush inherited from his father, who Kaufmann remembers as the most resilient member of the Bush circle after he lost his re-election bid in 1992.

That same sense of self was evident on the night of Nov. 7, when Bush was declared the winner, took a concession call from Vice President Al Gore, and then had the prize slip away for a while.

"The most telling comment after election night came from Barbara Bush, who said, 'I was the mother of a president for 30 minutes, and it felt great,'" said Tom Rath, a Concord, N.H., lawyer and Republican activist. "I don't think George W. ever allowed himself to take property of it until it was done. He was the one person who could have walked away from it."

Nancy Weiss, who has known Bush since 1978, when he ran unsuccessfully for Congress, said it is not in George or Laura Bush's nature or religion to harbor bitterness about the trauma they have been through.

"They really believe there is some sort of divine order guiding this process, and the outcome was out of their hands," said Ms. Weiss, who lives in Lubbock and talks often to Laura Bush. "George and Laura have absolutely been at peace. They didn't watch all the TV and torture their minds the way I did."

Ms. Weiss said the Bushes coped with the stress in the same way they will handle the stress of the presidency: he by jogging and working out; she by reading and visiting with a circle of old friends.

Those friends have often heard Laura Bush speak of how painful her father-in-law's 1992 loss was, and it surely contributed to her initial reluctance to have her husband seek the same office. Once the decision was made, however, the former teacher and librarian made winning the White House her top priority: She fully committed herself to the campaign and her pivotal role of keeping her husband centered, calm, and comfortable.

Laura Bush also brought sound judgment, good people skills, and a broad intellect to her husband's campaign, and from the earliest decision-making through the post-election rollercoaster ride, she was on the inside, offering direction, support, and advice.

Friends expect her to play the same role as first lady, though without the public-policy edge and polarizing personality of her predecessor, Hillary Rodham Clinton.

"Laura has all these strong qualities — there is an equanimity and strength about her that is very helpful to her husband," said Mary Margaret Farabee of Austin, who chairs the Texas Book Festival, an annual event the Texas first lady created and that raises $1 million a year for public libraries. "She is very much a wife and mother, but she is also a leader who people love to be around."

Farabee said Laura Bush's grace, warmth, and "quiet charisma" will serve her well as first lady, and that she will be a good role model for women because she is accomplished and active in promoting literacy, her main interest.

"She is not hesitant to express her opinions, and she makes great strides without shaking up the world," Farabee said.

People who know the Bushes expect them to entertain graciously and, because Laura Bush has been something of a patron of the arts, with an eclectic mix of guests. But when they aren't guided by official protocol, the Bushes' tastes run more to barbeque and blue jeans.

"They are very warm and informal people," said Adair Margo, a friend and San Antonio artist who remembers how teenagers were constantly hanging out at the governor's mansion in Austin, wearing baggy pants and baseball caps on backwards. "It was like Grand Central Station."

The White House won't have quite the commotion because the Bushes' twin daughters are now in college. Jenna is a freshman at the University of Texas, and Barbara is in her first year at Yale University.

But the Bushes' desire to keep their daughters out of the media spotlight is likely to mirror the Clintons' obsession with their daughter Chelsea's privacy. Jenna and Barbara attended the GOP convention last summer in Philadelphia but played no public role in their father's presidential campaign or its aftermath.

The empty nest will free the Bushes for foreign travel, and friends think the president-elect is gregarious enough to enjoy the adventure. His father, a former UN ambassador and CIA director, had been an intrepid traveler during his and President Reagan's administrations, and Laura Bush occasionally takes bird-watching vacations on her own. George W. has not used his passport much as Texas governor.

Nobody thinks Bush, who enjoys an occasional nap and is early-to-bed, will keep his father's frenetic presidential pace. The elder Bush was renowned for playing "speed golf" and racing his cigarette boat in the waters off Kennebunkport, Maine. The president-elect's favorite sport is baseball, but now he will have to drive to Baltimore for the nearest professional game.

New England will not be the next president's home away from home. The vacation White House will be the Bushes' ranch in Crawford, where the couple has spent much of the last five weeks. Named Prairie Chapel, the ranch says a lot about the new first family, friends say: It's not pretentious, it's welcoming to friends and the big Texas sky, and its "herd" amounts to a couple of cats and a dog named Spot.

Acclaimed actor Jason Robards dead at 78

By Ron Zapata
Associated Press

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. — Jason Robards, the veteran stage and screen actor who won back-to-back Oscars for "All the President's Men" and "Julia," died Tuesday. He was 78.

Robards died at the Bridgeport Hospital, nursing supervisor Sally Dalton said. The cause was not immediately released.

Robards started out as a stage actor in the 1950s, gaining critical acclaim for his performances in Eugene O'Neill plays, including "The Iceman Cometh" and "Long Day's Journey Into Night." He won a Tony award for his performance in "The Disenchanted."

He made his film debut in 1959, playing a Hungarian freedom fighter in "The Journey." After the film was shot, Robards said he preferred theater to the movies.

"Once you're on, nobody can say 'cut it.' You're out there on your own, and there's always that thrill of a real live audience," he told Newsweek in a 1958 interview.

Yet he went on to make more than 50 feature films, winning Academy Awards for his portrayal of Washington Post Executive Editor Ben Bradlee in "All the President's Men" in 1976 and novelist Dashiell Hammett in "Julia" the following year.

Modern movie audiences knew Robards for his portrayal of Bradlee in the story of the Watergate scandal.

His other films included: "Divorce American Style," 1967; "Johnny Got His Gun," 1971; "Comes a Horseman," 1978; "Melvin and Howard," 1980; and "Philadelphia," 1994.

In 1997, he played the tyrannical land baron father in "A Thousand Acres," the film adaptation of Jane Smiley's Pulitzer-prize winning novel. The film featured Jessica Lange, Michelle Pfeiffer and Jennifer Jason Leigh as his daughters.

In 1999, Robards was one of five performers selected to receive the Kennedy Center Honors.

Despite his prolific film work, Robards stayed loyal to the theater.

"The theater has kept me alive and it's allowed me to work at my craft," he said in a 1997 interview.

Robards, who was known as a classical actor, shunned the notion of "method" acting and actors who look for motivation for their stage work.

"I look at the words," he said in a 1993 interview with The Providence Journal-Bulletin. "All I know is, I don't do a lot of analysis. I know those words have to move me. I rely on the author."

"I don't want actors reasoning with me about 'motivation' and all that bull. All I want 'em to do is learn the damn lines and don't bump into each other.' "

Robards was born Jason Nelson Robards Jr. on July 26, 1922, in Chicago, the son of Jason Nelson Robards Sr., a prominent actor.

Despite his father's prolific career in more than 170 movies, the young Robards had no interest in acting while he was growing up.

At Hollywood High School in Los Angeles, Robards was on the baseball, football, basketball and track teams, and thought about becoming a professional athlete. After graduating in 1939, he went on active duty with the U.S. Naval Reserve as an apprentice seaman.

While serving in the Pacific, Robards read some plays by O'Neill and told his father he wanted to try his hand at acting. At his father's urging, Robards enrolled in the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in 1946.

In 1953, director Jose Quintero gave him the male lead in Victor Wolfson's "American Gothic," which opened at the off-Broadway Circle in the Square.

He earned his first critical acclaim in May 1956, when he appeared in "The Iceman Cometh" at the Circle in the Square, again under Quintero's direction. Robards played Hickey, the salesman who forces the characters to accept death.

Robards was married four times — including once to Lauren Bacall — and had six children. In his later years, he lived with his wife of more than 30 years, Lois, in what he once called "a quiet life on the water" in nearby Fairfield.

After a bad car accident in 1972, Robard's face had to be surgically reconstructed. He said that he had had bouts of depression during his life and was once a heavy drinker. He said he gave up alcohol in 1974.

He sometimes rejected characterizations of him as America's leading actor, saying in 1993: "All I know about acting is that I just have to keep on doing it."

STORM: DPS tells drivers to stay off roads

(From 1A)

Mexico, he said, adding that in that section of New Mexico, all but a few major highways were closed.

Traffic in Midland was light but erratic, with swerving drivers trying to navigate streets that changed in quality from block to block. Parking lots downtown were largely deserted, and stores that are usually open on the day after Christmas were closed. Trees and bushes were bent over with an accumulation of ice.

Authorities were unanimous about one thing — unless it's absolutely necessary, drivers should stay off the roads. In the last two days, "We've answered over 2,000 phone calls," said Texas Department of Public Safety trooper John Barton. "We are discouraging vehicle traffic."

"People are asking if they can drive, and we say no," said DPS trooper Jay Webster. "Most of the calls have been from people wanting to leave. We don't have a lot of stranded motorists."

The Midland Police Department reported 23 accidents as of late Tuesday afternoon, all of them minor.

There were 39 wrecks on Christmas Day, said Tyson Eichholtz, with the Midland Police Department. "Each time (people) call up here we tell them to stay off the road, but they don't," he said.

Gus Guzman, a supervisor for the Texas Department of Transportation, said the department had five or six trucks spreading sand on Christmas night, and added, "We've got trucks rolling right now."

But the mixture of ice, sand and snow is still treacherous, causing Loop 250 and Highway 191 to be shut down. "It's not going to thaw," he added. "It would freeze right up on the sand, with snow on top of that," making a sort of sand sandwich. Both roadways remained closed late Tuesday evening, according to TxDOT officials, though frontage roads are open.

Guzman said there have been 128 accidents on Loop 250 and Highway 191 in the last few days, with frozen underpasses particularly treacherous. Both are expected to remain closed this morning.

Velma Espino, a dispatcher with B & B Wrecker Service, said of their employees, "They've been working all night." She said the calls were mostly from the I-20 area, Rankin Highway and Garden City.

The weather problems extended throughout Texas Tuesday, with 87 miles of U.S. 84 from Lubbock to the Scurry County line closed. The Abilene area was also particularly hard hit, with stretches of I-20 closed in the area.

Northeast Texas also suffered, with freezing rain knocking out power to more than 60,000 people.

Today's high is forecast to be in the upper 30s, with possible snow flurries in the morning. "We've dropped all the winter snow advisories," said National Weather Service forecaster Ray Fagen. "Our concern is with the roadways refreezing on the pavement."

Relief from the ice will come late in the week, with temperatures expected to reach the upper 50s by Thursday.

SHOOTING: Company history does not provide obvious motive said. The Edgewater headquarters are located in the Harvard Mills office complex, a three-story, red brick former factory that houses several companies.

Police cruisers surrounded the building after the shooting while dozens of SWAT team members searched for people too afraid to come out or other shooters.

Edgewater's company history does not provide an obvious motive.

"It's a great company, a wonderful company," said employee Nancy Pecjo, who rushed to the building after hearing the news. She said she didn't know of anyone who'd been fired recently or was disgruntled.

The victims were identified as Jennifer Bragg-Capobianco; Janice Hagerty; Louis Javelle; Rose Manfredy, 49; Paul Marceau; Cheryl Troy; and Craig Wood, 29. All ages and hometowns were not immediately released.

Survivors of the attack were in shock, said the Rev. Tom Powers, who helped with grief counseling at St. Joseph's Church, where about 100 employees, family members and friends gathered after the shooting. They left sporadically, their faces stained by tears and holding each other for support.

Powers said there was little he could do: "There's nothing you can do to take the grief away."

New presidential team to find cleaned White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is the hub of government, yet the new staff that walks into the West Wing on Inauguration Day will be lucky to find a scrap of paper to jot down a phone number.

When a president leaves office, the White House is swept clean. File drawers are emptied. Hard drives are yanked from computers. Office furniture is piled in the hallways. Institutional memory disappears.

"The White House they enter is whistle clean. It contains empty desks, no files from their predecessors," says Martha Kumar, one of several presidential scholars working to smooth the 10-week presidential transition, which is even shorter this year because of the postelection ballot drama.

This clean sweep is mandated by federal law, but presidential experts say starting from scratch might not be the best way to begin a new presidency.

"When I walked in, there was not a piece of paper in the drawers. I think the only thing I found was a paper clip in one drawer," said Edwin Meese, counselor to President Reagan in the early 1980s and later attorney general.

"There's some stuff at the National Security Council. And in the White House counsel's office there are some records, but not an awful lot. You kind of expect that the old administration is going to have cleared out, but you're a little bit surprised that the place is as bare as it is."

The Presidential Records Act, passed in 1978, requires the paper purge.

It says the official records of the president and his staff are the property of the United States, not the chief executive. The National Archives takes custody of them and preserves them for eventual public release.

In President Clinton's case, boxes of papers already are being shipped to a warehouse in Little Rock, Ark., site of his presidential library, which will be administered by the archivist's staff.

"The most surprising thing to many people is that the computers are not functioning," said Alvin Felzenberg, executive director of the President's Commission on the Federal Appointments Process in the Bush administration.

Kumar, a political scientist at Towson State University in Maryland, and others who have studied presidential hand-offs, think some material could be given to newcomers to help them get started. Kumar's "White House 2001 Project" has interviewed White House staff members from the Nixon, Ford, Carter, Reagan, Bush and Clinton administrations. The project is sharing the materials with President-elect Bush's transition team.

Help from old White House hands, however, hasn't always been welcome.

Vice President-elect Dick Cheney, who worked there during the Ford-to-Carter transition and now is Bush's transition chief, recalls: "The basic attitude is 'If you're so smart, how come we beat you? Why do we need to take your advice? You guys lost.'"

Compiling a kind of Cliff's Notes for the West Wing is just one of a host of projects under way in Washington to ease the new president's team into their jobs.

The American Enterprise Institute, a conservative-leaning think tank, has the "Transition to Governing Project" to improve the move from campaigning to governing. The Brookings Institution, a liberal public policy institute, has the "Presidential Appointee Initiative" aimed at simplifying and streamlining the process — and the blizzard of paperwork — involved in overseeing thousands of appointments from the Cabinet to the defense secretary's assistants.

The conservative Heritage Foundation is working on a project called "Mandate for Leadership," a series of publications and conferences to guide the next administration. And the nonprofit Center for the Study of the Presidency plans to deliver a report to the next president with case studies about presidential leadership styles.

"Americans deserve a functioning government," said Terry Sullivan, associate director of White House 2001 and professor at the University of North Carolina. "When presidents come in and stumble and fumble their way through their first three months, Americans are disappointed."

Police summoned after flight to Hawaii delayed over Christmas

SEATAC, Wash. (AP) — They expected a Christmas of sun and surf in Hawaii. Instead, dozens of would-be travelers got chilly drizzle, two canceled flights and a visit from police before their plane finally left for the islands Tuesday — two days late.

There were heated words on Monday after the second flight cancellation and police were called to calm the passengers down, but no one was arrested, said Bob Parker, a spokesman for Seattle-Tacoma International Airport.

"It's not illegal to be an unhappy customer," Parker said.

Passengers who had been waiting since Sunday for a flight on Hawaiian Airlines were given $200 ticket vouchers and a free round-trip ticket to the islands, said Keoni Wagner, a company spokesman.

One flight scheduled to leave late Sunday was canceled because an engine change took longer than expected to complete. All but 44 of the passengers were booked on other flights.

On Monday, a flight at the same hour was canceled because of a possible problem with the flaps. By the time the plane was cleared for takeoff, airline officials decided it was too late for the flight, Wagner said.

Police were summoned after some 200 passengers — including the 44 from Sunday — confronted the flight crew.

After busy year, Census set to release first numbers

By Genaro C. Armas
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It spent millions on advertising, hired temporary workers to knock on strangers' doors and weathered its share of political controversy. Now, the Census Bureau is poised to release figures that will remake the congressional map and document changing population.

The first results from the Census 2000 national headcount, to be released Thursday, are raw, state population totals. They are expected to confirm trends that estimates have hinted at since the last census a decade ago — booming populations in the South and West, slower growth in the North and Midwest.

That report will be followed by more detailed statistics in March, which will reveal America's new racial makeup. The 2000 questionnaires allowed people for the first time to check off if they were of more than one race, providing a rich portrait of racial identification never before available.

These numbers will have complex political implications. The Supreme Court ruled last year that the raw, state data will be used to reapportion the 435 seats in the House among the 50 states.

The March report may include two sets of numbers: the raw figures, and a second set adjusted by way of a statistical method known as sampling. The same court decision left it to states to decide which numbers to use when they redraw congressional and state legislative lines beginning next year.

But first, the incoming Bush administration will have to decide whether to even release the adjusted numbers, which many believe will help Democrats. President-elect Bush hasn't said what he will do.

Dig past the political implications, though, and Census Director Kenneth Prewitt believes the results will yield a demographic portrait of America as complex and diverse as ever. More detailed statistics will be released incrementally over the next two years, ranging in topics from poverty and income to immigration and same-sex-couple households.

"We are convinced that when the data are out, it will underscore what we've been seeing, which is that Census 2000 has been operationally a successful census," Prewitt says.

Not without some glitches though.

Earlier in the year, some of the roughly 120 million mailings sent to Americans to remind them of the count were misaddressed because of a printing error. And in March, just after most of the forms were mailed, some congressional Republicans questioned the intrusiveness of some questions on the 53-item long form: "How much money do you make?" or "Do you have plumbing at home?"

The public weighed in on editorial pages and radio talk shows, causing some problems for part-time census workers hired to go door-to-door to ask the questions.

"You would think it would be the income questions but the one I heard the most flak about was about how many toilets you had in your house," said Michael Zdan, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., who worked for the Census Bureau over the spring and summer.

But Prewitt said he remains optimistic about the overall prospects of success because more than 80 million, or about 67 percent of the 120 million forms sent out, were returned. That reversed a decades-long decline in participation. Also, it left just 40 million households to track down with door-to-door visits, a far smaller workload than the Census Bureau expected.

Throughout the year, both political parties bickered over sampling, implemented after the Census Bureau estimated it undercounted about 1.4 percent of the population in 1990, mostly children, the poor, minorities and inner-city residents.

Some Democrats and civil rights groups contend sampling offers better representation of minorities and inner-city residents — segments of the population that tend to vote Democratic — in the redistricting process. Opponents, including GOP leaders in Congress, contend that only an "actual head count" can be accurate.

Some Census officials and Republicans stress that rural areas, especially areas where many poor live, also were undercounted.

Bush spokesman Scott McClellan said Bush supports "an actual head count because he believes it is the best and most accurate way to conduct the census," but has not said whether he will block the public release of figures derived from sampling methods.

Inez Manion, of Rhododendron, Ore., a retired translator who worked part-time for the Census Bureau this year, ignores the political talk. She just wants to see some of the final answers to the questions she asked at the front doors of strangers.

"I certainly hope it pays off," she said.

Ice storm ravages southern Plains

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Snow and ice glazed roads and coated tree limbs across the southern Plains on Tuesday, knocking out power to more than 300,000 homes and businesses and grounding hundreds of flights.

Arkansas National Guardsmen were sent out in Humvees to rescue motorists stranded on slippery highways during the second huge ice storm to hit the state in two weeks.

Four traffic deaths were blamed on the storm in New Mexico, and Oklahoma had three deaths.

Several communities opened shelters across southern Arkansas after more than 100,000 homes and businesses lost electricity because of ice-heavy limbs falling on power lines.

"Going to sleep last night you could hear trees popping all over the woods," said Billy Ray McKelvey, managing editor of the De Queen Daily Citizen newspaper, which was unable to publish a Tuesday issue.

Across Arkansas, stuck and abandoned vehicles hampered efforts to clear roads.

Texas authorities closed some highways. "We can't salt the roads fast enough," said Garza County, Texas, deputy constable Cliff Laws.

All three runways were closed at the Little Rock, where flights had been halted beginning late Monday because of half an inch of ice.

People waited in lines at Will Rogers World Airport in Oklahoma City, where most flights were canceled.

"We came for the holidays and now we're never leaving," said Gregg Tiven, 22, who waited with his girlfriend for a flight home to New York City.

American Airlines canceled more than 700 flights at Dallas-Fort Worth because of weather problems elsewhere.

About 122,500 customers were without power Tuesday in Oklahoma. More than 60,000 customers had no electricity in northeastern Texas, and some 34,000 customers were in the dark in northeastern Louisiana.

In Oklahoma's rural Grady County, Ronald Goeller, 66, fired up a propane stove for heat after his power went out.

"I've got two or three neighbors who are older than me and the only heat they've got is electric heat," he said.

America looks toward 2001 with optimism

As 2000 draws to a close, many of us are worried about the financial hit we've taken as the Wall Street bull run has apparently hit a brick wall.

Giddy optimism swept through the United States over the past several years as the New York Stock Exchange and Nasdaq plowed to new highs day after day.

More and more Americans were trading online. Virtually everyone was invested in the market through a 401k or mutual fund. Transactions were taking place at a frenzied pace.

But several months later and after the failure of a couple dozen dot-com businesses, the optimism has diminished. We've had a hard, cold dose of reality.

The stock market has become the emotional center for our collective feelings about the economy.

This past week, the U.S. Commerce Department reported that the nation's economy slowed sharply to an annual growth rate of just 2.2 percent in the summer. It's the weakest performance in four years.

Meanwhile, the Labor Department said that the number of Americans filing new claims for unemployment benefits jumped a sharp 34,000 last week to 354,000. That pushed the four-week moving average for claims to the highest level since July 1998. Economists are looking for the unemployment rate, which is currently at 4 percent, to rise to close to 5 percent by the end of next year.

Now all eyes are on two men — President-elect George W. Bush and Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan.

Bush is pushing a $1.3 trillion tax cut. Like Ronald Reagan, Bush believes tax cuts will provide the economic stimulus that will get our economy moving again. For the most part, Greenspan remains poker-faced. He's holding steady on interest rates for the moment, but economists theorize that he will cut rates in the near term.

Those who have been duped by dot-com investments are working with their accountants as we close out the fourth quarter and look forward to tax season.

And the million-dollar question is: What does next year hold?

Once and a while we need a slight correction to take the wind out of our sails. We still believe America is a sound investment. The bulls may not run as wild in 2001, but as always we remain optimistic about tomorrow.

Today in History

Today is Wednesday, Dec. 27, the 362nd day of 2000. There are four days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Dec. 27, 1900, militant prohibitionist Carry A. Nation carried out her first public smashing of a bar, at the Carey Hotel in Wichita, Kan.

On this date:

In 1822, scientist Louis Pasteur was born in Dole, France.

In 1927, the musical play "Show Boat," with music by Jerome Kern and libretto by Oscar Hammerstein II, opened at the Ziegfeld Theater in New York.

In 1932, Radio City Music Hall opened in New York.

In 1945, 28 nations signed an agreement creating the World Bank.

In 1947, the children's television program "Howdy Doody" made its debut on NBC.

In 1968, Apollo 8 and its three astronauts made a safe nighttime splashdown in the Pacific.

In 1970, "Hello, Dolly!" closed on Broadway after a run of 2,844 performances.

In 1979, Soviet forces seized control of Afghanistan. President Hafizullah Amin, who was overthrown and executed, was replaced by Babrak Karmal.

In 1985, Palestinian guerrillas opened fire inside the Rome and Vienna airports; a total of 20 people were killed, including five of the attackers, who were slain by police and security personnel.

In 1985, American naturalist Dian Fossey, who had studied gorillas in the wild, was found hacked to death at a research station in Rwanda.

Ten years ago: The government reported that orders to manufacturers for big-ticket durable goods plummeted 10 1/2 percent the previous month. Gennady I. Yanayev was approved as the Soviet Union's first vice president on the last day of a stormy, 10-day session of the Congress of People's Deputies.

Five years ago: Israeli jeeps sped out of the West Bank town of Ramallah, capping a seven-week pullout giving Yasser Arafat control over 90 percent of the West Bank's 1 million Palestinian residents and one-third of its land.

One year ago: Space shuttle Discovery and its seven-member crew returned to Earth after fixing the Hubble Space Telescope. Former television executive Leonard H. Goldenson, who'd built ABC into a network powerhouse, died in Longboat Key, Fla., at age 94.

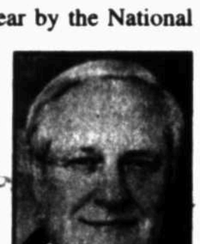
Obsolete computers pose threat to environment

WASHINGTON — The EPA estimates that in 1999 some 20 million personal computers in the United States became obsolete, and they pose a significant near-future threat to the environment.

A study conducted that year by the National Safety Council's Environmental Health Center found that by 2004 the figure will soar to 315 million obsolete computers, causing the public to deal with billions of pounds of lead and plastics, millions of pounds of cadmium and hundreds of thousands of pounds of mercury.



Anderson

Of the 20 million obsolete computers, 86 percent were dumped into landfills, burned in incinerators, shipped to overseas landfills, or were put in basements or attics, posing a significant environmental threat. Cathode ray tubes (CRTs) found in computer monitors and televisions are made up of as much as 27 percent lead. Ted Smith, executive director of the Silicon Valley Toxics Coalition says, "If you landfill a CRT, it will get crushed in the process. The fine particles of glass laced with lead eventually degrade. With rainfall getting into the dump site, the water will become contaminated with lead, and that lead-filled water will leach out of the landfill and into the groundwater."

According to EPA representatives, there are no federal laws specifically dealing with the disposal of personal computers. Moreover, "Used computer monitors or televisions generated by households are not eonsidered hazardous waste and are not regulated under federal regulations. ... Businesses and other organizations are not regulated under most federal requirements if the facility discards less than 100 kilograms of hazardous waste." However, "Wastes from facilities that generate more than 100 kilograms of hazardous waste per month are regulated under federal law when disposed." Such businesses must send their computers to permitted hazardous waste landfills.

Some states, however, have taken the initiative and banned the disposal of old computers and televisions at landfills. In Massachusetts, it is illegal to dispose of these products at landfills or combustion facilities. Instead, the state is implementing a program to promote recycling. Florida has a similar program in effect but no laws on the books that prohibit the disposal of CRTs in landfills.

Thus far, the EPA is recommending that companies and individuals look toward donating old PCs or recycling them. The Internet Nonprofit Center and Share the Technology provide lists of organizations seeking computer donations, such as Boys & Girls Clubs, nonprofit organizations and schools.

Recycling, however, is not cheap. According to the EPA, "the material value of retired electronic equipment does not cover the cost of dismantling or preparing the component materials for market. Prices for recycling old electronic products vary widely, depending on geographic area, quantities and other issues."

Renee St. Denis at Hewlett-Packard's Roseville, Calif., recycling facility says, "The cost of recycling — because there is a cost, it doesn't happen for free and it doesn't generate positive revenues — has never been a part of the commercial equation. To this day, the industry-wide solution to what we call 'breakage' (the mixed plastics, metals and glass left over after all the usable parts have been taken) is to put that stuff in a container and ship it to China."

In Europe, there has been a move to force manufacturers of electronic products to develop take-back programs for obsolete items. The European Commission has drafted the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment directive that, if passed, will hold producers legally responsible for recycling and reusing their products. It would also gradually phase out the use of some of the more dangerous toxins. This directive faces tough opposition from U.S. companies that produce electronics. We cannot be on the wrong side of this issue.

Republicans must commit to cut spending

Republicans have made some political hay in recent years by accusing Democrats of being the tax-and-spend party. Ronald Reagan rode into town on a dual platform of cutting taxes and reducing spending, along with the size of government. He managed to reduce taxes but he failed to slay the spending beast.

Thomas

The last Republican-dominated Congress behaved more like the party of FDR than the party of Ronald Reagan. The Department of Education, which Reagan pledged to eliminate, had its budget increased 17 percent by a Republican Congress, which added $2 billion more than what President Clinton had requested. According to Stephen Moore, of the Cato Institute, the Department of Education budget increased faster since 1996 than any previous four-year period in its relatively brief history.

In addition, programs conservative Republicans love to hate enjoyed budget increases. These included The National Endowment for the Arts, The Legal Services Corporation, corporate welfare and bilingual education. "You name a worthless liberal social program and chances are its budget went up," says an exasperated Moore.

Moore says the 106th Congress spent more money on social programs than any Congress since the late '70s when Jimmy Carter was President and Tip O'Neill was Speaker of the House. Too many Republicans have joined Democrats as co-equal partners in a single government party. Many of the more than 200 programs that Republicans promised to eliminate in the 1995 "Contract With America" now have larger budgets than before Republicans took control of Congress.

Congress has given reprieves to many programs condemned to political death row. These range from farm subsidies (up 162 percent) and AmeriCorps (up 248 percent) to bilingual education (up 80 percent) and the Goals 2000 education program (up 112 percent).

Apparently, Republicans never recovered from the government shutdowns engineered by the Clinton Administration for which the GOP, and then-Speaker Newt Gingrich received blame. So, rather than reduce spending, they've increased it, in the false hope that this will give them cover from the "mean-spiritedness" charges Democrats and their media pals used with such great effectiveness.

No wonder there are so many doubters about President-elect Bush's tax cut plan. Detractors seem credible when Bush talks of reducing taxes and they warn of the danger of new deficits. The response to this charge is to do what Democrats failed to do in the Reagan and Bush years. Having agreed to tax cuts under Reagan, Congressional Democrats refused to live up to the other part of the deal and curtail or reduce spending. That's how deficits are created.

Bush needs to appoint the equivalent of another Grace Commission, which listed scores of wasteful, outmoded and unworkable federal programs that could be eliminated with little effect on anyone except the taxpayers, who would save money.

Democrats once railed against wasteful spending when it suited their political needs. Former Wisconsin Democratic Sen. William Proxmire's "Golden Fleece" award was a devastating indictment of government waste which everybody understood. Democrats used expensive toilet seats to win debating points about what they saw as a too high Pentagon budget.

Illustrations like this should work for Republicans but they must first decide whether they wish to return to their fiscally conservative roots or behave like drunken sailors spending someone else's money.

A few tales on how the Army was back then

A reader expressed the wish to hear more of my Army adventures. They are, of course, all of a comical nature because I was born in a lucky year — too young for World War II and Korea and old enough to be in and out before Vietnam heated up.

Reese

There are two ranks and two ranks only that afford an individual the maximum amount of freedom. One is General of the Army. There are only about two people above him to tell him what to do. The other is private. The private's freedom is that of the song that says "Freedom's just another word for nothing left to lose."

Indeed, as long as you stay just shy of the line that can send you to the stockade, there is nothing the Army can do to you. The Army can't demote you — you're already at the bottom of the ranks. The Army can't give you bad work details — you are already getting those.

Recognizing that I was not likely to make five stars in a short enlistment, I elected to be a private. Once when I got stuck in a typing pool (the peacetime Army is awfully bureaucratic), a captain said, when I return a typed letter to him, "That's pretty (expletive) typing, Reese, I hope you don't have to make a living that way." I said nothing but made sure I got his next handwritten memo. I typed it perfectly, and as I returned it and the original to him, I said, "That's pretty (same expletive) handwriting, sir. I hope you don't have to make a living with it."

You can say a lot in the Army as long as you attach "sir" to it.

One hot summer at Fort Bragg, where I had been stuck as a company clerk, I decided to play a joke on a second lieutenant. He was a nice guy, but young and fresh out of ROTC. I looked up some obscure report in the Army Regulations and then went to a post exchange, where, from a telephone booth, I called my own company headquarters and gave my imitation of an angry colonel at 18th Airborne Corps Headquarters under whom we ultimately labored.

In a loud roar, I reprimanded him for having failed to send in that report and ended by warning him that unless that report was on my (the fictional colonel's) desk by 1600 hours, his career would be in ruins. Then I sauntered back. The poor second lieutenant was in a cold sweat and asked me if I knew anything about the report.

"Sure," I said. "No sweat. I'll type it for you right now and hand carry it to the colonel myself." And so I did, only I drove across the base to another post exchange, tossed the report in the trash and drank a milkshake. The lieutenant was always grateful, and I have always hoped he survived the Vietnam War. When I went home, he went regular Army, and it was only two years later that Lyndon Johnson began to pour men into that meat grinder.

Army life as an enlisted man is one of those events enjoyed more in memory than in actual experience. But thanks to the filtering power of memory, I can look back fondly on those uneventful 18 months of routine and ritual, of the friends and of the characters one meets. Our Army, in those pre-all-volunteer years, was definitely a politically incorrect army — profane, much given to alcohol and brawls, but ready to fight, as it proved in Vietnam. It is a quite different Army today, with higher-paid all volunteers, no draftees and more married enlisted men, even in the lower ranks.

By some bureaucratic quirk, I am classified as a Vietnam-era veteran. I'm very proud to be associated, even bureaucratically, with those who actually are Vietnam War veterans. They fought well. They died well. Every American can and should be proud of them.

Protesters challenge traditional fox hunt

By Bruce Stanley
Associated Press

LONDON — Emboldened by growing political opposition to fox hunting, animal rights activists lobbed eggs and jeered as hunters and hounds pursued their prey Tuesday across a frigid British countryside in traditional post-Christmas hunts.

More than 325,000 hunters and their supporters turned out for 300 Boxing Day hunts around the country, the pro-hunting Countryside Alliance said. The Hunt Saboteurs' Association said it had attempted to disrupt about 100 of the hunts while the League Against Cruel Sports said it protested at about 20.

Police at Maldon in southeastern England arrested one man and charged him with criminal damage after hunters there were pelted with eggs. The incident was a boisterous display of the passions dividing Britons as rural traditions clash with the concerns of an increasingly urban nation.

"I think the bell is now tolling for the end of fox hunting," said Laina Cracknell of the League Against Cruel Sports. Cracknell's group helped organize the Maldon protest, which police said attracted several hundred anti-hunting activists.

Several hundred fox-hunting enthusiasts also demonstrated at Maldon, and opposing groups faced each other from behind metal barriers as hunters and dogs trotted down the town's main street.

For Sam Butler, head of the Countryside Alliance's Campaign for Hunting, the large number of supporters at Maldon was "visible proof of the strength of feeling in the countryside that a ban on hunting is unnecessary, unpopular and unenforceable."

There has been increasing support in Parliament, however, for a ban on fox hunting. The House of Commons voted Dec. 20 to consider a bill that could prohibit the sport. The Hunting Bill easily moved on to the next legislative step despite impassioned protests from pro-hunting enthusiasts.

Members of the opposition Conservative Party argued against a ban. Michael Heseltine, a former deputy prime minister, accused Prime Minister Tony Blair's Labor government of provoking a "bitterly divisive urban-rural crisis" by introducing the bill.

The pursuit of the fox by a pack of dogs leading dozens of riders across open country is considered by many to be a cruel pastime of the upper crust. Opinion polls consistently have indicated that a majority of Britons oppose using dogs to hunt down and kill foxes.

But many rural Britons say city-dwellers don't understand the need to control the fox population, and point out that ordinary farmers hunt, not just aristocrats.

The bill before parliament contains three options: an almost total ban, compulsory licensing of hunts or self-regulation. A vote is not expected until at least January, but the bill is likely to encounter opposition in the House of Lords, the unelected upper house of parliament.

"Hunting with dogs is intrinsically cruel, and no amount of regulation or licensing will prevent the unnecessary suffering this inflicts. The only way to stop this cruelty is to prevent people from chasing and killing wild mammals with dogs," said Douglas Batchelor, head of the Campaign for the Protection of Hunted Animals.

Dozens of activists rallied at a hunt near Bolton in central England, while more than 100 protested far to the south at a hunt in Tavistock, Devon.

But fox-hunting advocates pressed their case with equal vigor. Police estimated that about 1,500 supporters converged at the Duke of Beaufort's estate in southwest England.

"It has everything to do with liberty and the freedom to do what you want on your land as long as it doesn't interfere with anyone else," argued Philip Marcq, a participant in the Duke of Beaufort's hunt.

According to the Countryside Alliance, a pro-hunting organization, more than 325,000 hunters and their supporters attended Boxing Day hunts across Britain, in what it called a sign of opposition to a potential government ban on the centuries-old practice.

Officials cancel most of volcano evacuation

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Authorities gave tens of thousands of people permission to return to their homes near the base of the Popocatepetl volcano on Tuesday, but warned them to remain on alert.

The announcement by the federal Interior Secretariat largely ends a large-scale evacuation that began Dec. 15 as scientists detected alarming tremors beneath the 17,886-foot mountain, which is 40 miles southeast of Mexico City.

On Dec. 18, Popocatepetl produced its most spectacular eruption in 1,200 years, though it caused no injuries.

After a relatively quiet week, the volcano spewed ash and hurled fragments of red-hot rock as far as 1/2 mile from the crater early Tuesday — a type of eruption that could be repeated over the coming weeks, according to the agency.

But officials said there has been a "notable reduction in the probability" of a larger eruption, so they lifted the evacuation order on some 40,000 people living in about two dozen towns and villages.

All activity remains banned within 6 miles of the crater and residents of two towns closest to the volcano must have their houses inspected due to danger from accumulated ash on rooftops or of possible volcanic mudslides down ravines.

The Interior bulletin said scientists believe the volcano is still capable of hurling hot rocks some 3 miles and cooled rocks 6 miles from the crater, as well as causing at least light showers of ash hundreds of miles away

Mission Control re-establishes contact, says no need to bring Mir down early

By Vladimir Isachenkov
Associated Press

KOROLYOV, Russia — Russian space officials lost contact with the Mir for 20 hours, raising fears Tuesday that the troubled space station would plunge out of control. Despite the problems, Mission Control said it was in no rush to send a rescue crew in or hasten the Mir's scheduled descent.

Russian ground controllers in Korolyov, just north of Moscow, lost contact with the unoccupied Mir on Monday morning and worked nearly around the clock to restore contact. A weak signal was heard Tuesday afternoon.

Mission Control chief Vladimir Solovyov said the loss of radio contact occurred because Mir's batteries had suddenly lost most of their power — an event he described as unprecedented. "It was one of the worst breakdowns in our history," he said.

During the next radio linkup, workers activated reserve batteries and declared the battle won.

'The Mir will not fall on your head on New Year's Eve. We have a plan to bid farewell to the Mir in a civilized and organized way.'
— Vladimir Solovyov, Mission Control chief

"First we breathed a half breath, and then took a full chest of air," Solovyov told reporters, his face pale and haggard from lack of sleep.

Despite the scare, Solovyov said officials were not in a hurry to bring down the Mir.

"The Mir will not fall on your head on New Year's Eve," he said. "We have a plan to bid farewell to the Mir in a civilized and organized way."

After years of debate over what to do with the nearly 15-year-old space station, seen as the last major symbol of Soviet space glory, the government said last month that the 140-ton Mir would be brought down into the Pacific Ocean, 900 to 1,200 miles east of Australia on Feb. 27-28.

Solovyov said two cosmonauts would be ready to blast off for the Mir and direct the descent should problems arise.

If Mir's descent is uncontrolled, large fragments could survive its fiery plunge through the Earth's atmosphere and potentially wreak havoc on the ground.

But even an uncontrolled drop would take at least three months because of the Mir's 250-mile distance from the Earth, officials said.

Mission Control spokesman Valery Lyndin said the information received during the hookups showed that the station had normal cabin pressure and temperature, and its systems were working normally..

Recharging the batteries through the station's solar panels should take until Wednesday morning, Solovyov said. It would take a few more days to analyze the data transmitted from the Mir to determine what caused the breakdown.

Observers long have been worried about the Mir's safety. However, after a fire and near-disastrous collision with an unmanned cargo ship in 1997 followed by a series of computer glitches, the Mir had been running relatively smoothly this year.

The Mir had only one, 73-day manned mission this year. Russian space officials decided in November to dump the Mir since it had no funds to keep it aloft and it could no longer guarantee the safety of its operation.

When the station was launched Feb. 20, 1986, it was the epitome of the Soviet technological edge, and it has far surpassed the three to five years it was expected to last.

Officials have said Russia should concentrate its funds on the new international space station instead of the Mir — something NASA has been urging for years. NASA is leading the 16-nation international project, which has suffered repeated delays because of funding problems for Russian modules.

NASA declined to comment on the latest Mir mishap.

A Soviet satellite crashed into northern Canada in 1978, in a major embarrassment for the Soviet leadership. Nobody was hurt, but radioactive fragments were scattered over the wilderness.

The unoccupied U.S. Skylab space station fell to Earth in 1979 when its orbit deteriorated faster than anticipated, spreading debris over western Australia. No one was hurt.

Air passengers remain mellow despite delays

By Leslie Burleson
Staff Writer

Travelers at Midland International Airport Tuesday faced a few delays, but most maintained a mellow mood.

The Talcotts — Martha, her daughter Robin, and her son Brad — waited patiently for their half-hour-delayed Southwest Airlines flight to Dallas, reading material at hand. Brad had flown from Dallas to Midland Monday, but when the plane tried to land, "They need a half mile (visibility) to land and they only had an eighth," he said. So the plane went back to Dallas, and Brad took to the road.

Ten hours later, including three hours spent driving from Big Spring to Odessa, he arrived in the Permian Basin, just not the way he expected. As he saw his mother and sister off Tuesday, Brad said he expected to stay a few days with his grandmother, Madeline Norwood of Midland, until the roads improve. "I'm going to go whenever the weather clears," he said.

"If our plane doesn't leave, then our son takes us back to our mother," Martha said. "We hit Blockbuster," Robin chimed in.

As they waited for the flight, Martha perused a knitting magazine, Robin scanned Ray Bradbury's "Something Wicked This Way Comes," and Brad read "The Bad Girls' Guide to the Open Road." He stressed the book had been one of his sister's Christmas presents, but added, "it's pretty funny."

Cora Sims was seeing her daughter Andrea Maxwell off to Dallas. "We came out here twice yesterday," Ms. Sims said Tuesday afternoon. On Christmas Day, "they canceled them all," Ms. Maxwell said of that day's flights.

Shane Hensley of Seminole waited for his girlfriend, Jennifer Crawford, to arrive from Dallas. He cradled a bag containing a blue candle in his hand, saying that

Icy roads also result in extended Midland visit

By Julie Jacobs
MRT Correspondent

While Tuesday's winter storm created problems for many, it also served as an excuse for others to extend their Christmas holiday ... in some cases allowing visitors to Midland to stay with family and loved ones an extra day.

That was the good news.

But the flip side was the inconvenience caused by the delays.

Just ask Louisianian Bryan Lege, 28, who spent the weekend visiting family here, but then couldn't leave once the holiday had ended.

Like many, he had planned on heading out Tuesday morning by car for his hometown of Lafayette, La., but now he can only hope the weather clears up enough so he can leave today.

He said he will probably hit the road regardless.

After all, he said, work awaits him once he gets home.

"I am working on a brief that is due in mid-January. This will now put me a day behind on that," Lege, an attorney, said.

Although cold temperatures were expected to result in icy streets again this morning, relief could be in store for Lege and other potential travelers later today as temperatures could creep into the upper-30s by early afternoon.

Meanwhile, Lege will spend a lot of time on the telephone.

"I will just keep calling the Department of Public Safety and see how things are looking," he said.

But despite the work-related problems, there were reasons to be thankful for the delays.

"It's really nice to have an extra day with the family. I've enjoyed it," he said.

Severe cold weather increases family's hardship

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

It was "shiny and pretty" when the Armando Jose Hermando family arrived in Midland on Dec. 17 in a vain search for farm work.

Then, the bleakness of winter hit hard: the sleet, the snow, the ice, the cold.

There was no farm work for the 43-year-old migrant farm worker, a United States citizen, who was raised farming cotton on the South Plains in the Lubbock area.

"That's all my daddy taught us how to do," said Hermando, who drove his wife and nine children from McAllen in South Texas, where his farm work had played out, to Midland in an old 1978 tan Oldsmobile sedan that has a non-working heater.

Hermando, who said he is adept at various facets of farm work, now is a $6-an-hour part-time dishwasher for an upscale Midland restaurant. "That don't pay bills, not even rent. No benefits.

"I've got to do what it takes," he said, while he looks for better-paying work, full-time work, or takes on more part-time jobs. "I've been at filling stations, looking for work. We need the money."

On the farm, "I'm a pretty good tractor driver," Hermando said. "I've driven a tractor all of my life. I like it. I know how to do it. I know how to weld, operate a cutting torch."

Midland agencies in line for more money in 2001

From Staff Reports

The Federal Emergency Management Program's Emergency Food and Shelter Program will provide Midland County with $93,940 to supplement emergency food and shelter programs during fiscal year 2001. The amount represents a 32 percent increase over the amount given to Midland County for 2000.

Qualified agencies can complete an application for EFSP funding through Monday, Jan. 8. Requests for assistance can be made by qualified agencies by contacting Alice Freidline, Planning & Funds Distribution Director for the United Way of Midland, 1209 W. Wall, Midland, 79701.

EFSP, created as part of the Stewart McKinley Homeless Assistance Act of 1987, is designed to supplement and expand ongoing efforts to provide shelter, food and supportive services for the homeless and hungry individuals nationwide. Locally, the United Way of Midland has been contracted to administer the distribution of the funds.

To qualify as a recipient for FEMA's EFSP funding, local agencies must:

- be a non profit organization,
- have an accounting system,
- practice non-discrimination,
- have demonstrated the capability to deliver emergency food and/or shelter programs, and
- if a private, voluntary organization, have a voluntary board.

Local recipient organizations use EFSP supplemental funds for mass shelter, mass feeding, food distribution through food pantries and food banks, provide one-month utility payments to prevent service cut offs and provide one month rent mortage assistance to prevent evictions or to assist people leaving shelters to establish stable living conditions.

In fiscal year 2001, $140 million has been appro-

MATT JOSEFY

A lifelong friend? No, much longer than that

Reserved, quiet, and shy. Better at listening than vocalizing. Everything I'm not, Jerod was. Actually when I first met him, I dismissed the notion that we would become good friends.

Josefy

The first time I saw him at A&M was extremely random and embarrassed me, as I'm somebody who attempts to remember people I've met before.

I was at the chapel on-campus for an all-freshman Bible study called Upstream. The format had us start with a large praise and worship time and then break into cell groups. When we had entered that night, we had each been given a name tag — well, your classic peel-off label combined with a Sharpie.

"What's your name?" the girl had asked the person in front of me. "Katherine with a K or with a C? Two n's or one in Johnny?"

"Matt, M-A-T-T," I said, intuitively trying to expedite the process as hundreds still waited behind me. I waded into a crowded sanctuary area, glancing out the windows that composed the wall on the left-hand side.

After the worship, we awaited anxiously to be split up into the units that participants of years past claimed would provide some of our closest friends. Turns out our closest friends were assigned by that which has nothing to do with any great spiritual discernment, assemblage of interests, or even matching of "I am a white male seeking" wish lists.

In fact, it boiled down to nothing more than a lottery system. And my winning number was found in the lower right hand corner of my nametag.

Group by group we were dismissed with two sophomores, one guy and one girl, who would be our leaders, mentors, friends, parents, encouragers, etc.

"If you're in group 12 follow Bunuhmuh and Muth," came the muffled direction, nearly obliterated by the excitement rustling through the air that had been quiet in expectation just moments before. Later I would hear a more clear pronunciation of Bethany and Matt.

So that's how I found myself meandering toward the small rooms, flashing 12 fingers to find my comrades. I introduced myself to a couple girls and a couple guys, whose names I would soon forget if I even heard them in the first place.

I did do my best to remember the name of the girl who most caught my eye, Stepeanie. My intuition told me I wouldn't mind her being one of those life-long friends.

Walking down the hallway, I found myself in stride with a normal height, normal weight guy with brown hair. In accordance with my freshman habit, I extended my right hand, getting ready to offer the "What's your name? I'm Matt. Where are you from?" line of questioning. But he interjected into the dialogue developing mentally in my head. (Yes, mental would normally happen in the head, so ignore the fact that I am being redundant AND repetitive, as my friend Josh would say.)

"Are you from Midland?" he asked. His question was easy enough to answer but difficult to take in context. I looked into his face, and I directed all of my processing power to finding his face in my "most recently seen faces" file. But I wasn't fast enough.

When I answered to the affirmative, he said, "Matt, right? Do you remember me?"

The four most dreaded words on the face of the planet. Forgetting a name may be classified as only a people skills misdemeanor, but there are few offenses that compare to the first degree nature of insulting somebody by forgetting their face. Sometimes murder may even be more bearable (OK, maybe not, but it sure does make you wish you could slide through the floor into solitary confinement momentarily).

Thankfully, I did not commit that crime, and a sincere "hold on, you're ——" escaped from my mouth.

He saved me any further agony.

DELAY: Some travelers did not find roads to be too bad

it was a sneak preview of the Christmas gifts waiting for her. To get from Seminole to the airport, "I had to go 30 or 35" for a while, he said. As he neared the airport, Hensley increased his speed from 45 or 50. "It was all right," he said of the trip.

Mark Brewer, waiting for the flight to Dallas, said of the area travelers, "People kind of freak out, and they don't want to get out. I came from Pecos, and it was fairly clear until we got to Odessa."

TIME: Families feel fortunate to see relatives a little longer

(From 1B)

Although he is missing work, he would have missed something even bigger had he left on time.

"My son Peyton rolled from his back to his tummy today for the first time," he said Tuesday afternoon, as he smiled at his baby boy. "That's the big news story of the day."

But even if he gets to leave today, the drive will still be slow moving.

"It (the drive) is usually about 12-13 hours. I'm sure it will take a few more hours now," he said. "It would have been worth the extra money to avoid all this (the weather)," he added when asked about his options of flying.

But his family was pleased everything turned just as it did.

"Now we have another couple of days with him," said his Carol Ann Hunt, his mother-in-law. "We only do this every other year because they switch off with the other in-laws. He is still leaving too soon."

priated for EFSP nationwide, which brings the total distributed to more than $2.05 billion in the program's 18-year history.

Ms. Freidline said some of the funds' recipients in the past have included Safe Place, a battered women's shelter, West Texas Food Bank, the Midland Soup Kitchen and AMOS, Area Missions Outreach Services.

"We never know how much (the grant will be) from year to year," she said. "We encourage all of our agencies to diversify their funding from any source they can."

Said Ms. Freidline of the United Way, "We are just the administrator of this fund, we just do the paperwork. The funds go directly to those agencies."

Five killed, two injured in East Texas traffic accident

ATHENS (AP) — Three women and two boys were killed and two other people were hospitalized Tuesday after a three-vehicle accident on a rain-slickened road in East Texas, authorities said.

Sgt. Gary Miles with the Texas Department of Public Safety said 61-year-old Carolyn Bishop and her daughter, 20-year-old Patricia Bishop, died when their eastbound car crossed the center lane of U.S. 175 about 2 p.m. It hit a sport utility vehicle, swerved into oncoming traffic and then collided with another car, he said.

Three of the five people in the third vehicle died, including two boys described to be between 5-10 years old, Myles said. Their names were being withheld until relatives could be notified, he said.

JOSEFY: Event constructs friendship

(From 1B)

Turns out, that though we were hours away from Anaheim or Orlando, we were taking a ride through the reality of "It's a small world after all."

Over Spring Break, I had taken a trip with the youth choir from my church. Each year we go on tour with a set of songs and skits. This particular year was an instate trip, and the grand city of Roundrock was one of our stops.

There, in a brief instant, I met a gentleman who had been my youth minister's Sunday School teacher not too many decades ago. And standing next to him, had been Jerod.

"He's coming to A&M too. Y'all should look each other up," the man said, and I added Jerod's e-mail address to the list of promised correspondences that rarely develop into fruition.

He did send me a forward once, which should have provided a clue as to his sense of humor, but I paid it little attention after I finished laughing-out-loud. Entitled the "Not-My-Job Award Winner," it was the image of a road, with fresh yellow center stripes all the way up the screen, right over a specimen of roadkill.

But here we were, passively rejoined at a university that boasts more than 40,000 students. What are the odds?

Even then, though he seemed like a neat guy, I still would not have predicted spending large amounts of time together. I had quite a few new friends to allot time to, meetings to attend, and studies to suspend through whatever means possible.

I don't remember quite how it happened after that. Going to a coffee shop after Upstream on Thursday nights. Hanging out at an "Upstream sister's" apartment. Teaming up to escort a pair of girls to a date party. Maybe it was the fact that he and that Upstream sister brought me medicine when I was sick.

Whatever it was, that original casual meeting did little to foreshadow the depth of the friendship that would develop.

I arranged the opportunity to stay the night at his house in Roundrock after the A&M-Texas game in Austin the day after Thanksgiving. Since it would be dark when the game was over, I found the house beforehand. Unexpected though I was, I went to the door anyway and was immediately glad I had.

With every bit of imaginable hospitality his family welcomed me, fed me, and entertained me. And they did the same when I returned later that night. The next morning, they provided renowned Round Rock doughnuts (if you're like me, a doughnut is pretty much a doughnut, but these ... you might consider making the drive one day, no matter how far it is for this food that should be classified as more of a specialty than a sweet. Mmm... I can still taste it melting in my mouth).

The warmth and generosity of such a giving family had definitely found its way into Jerod's genes as well. Lifelong friend? No, much longer than that. With the privilege of attending the finest university in the world, I've had the privilege of meeting a lot of people like that. No matter where you are though, I'd keep a pair of binoculars at hand. Friends like this may last forever, but their stock seems to be depleting at a rapid pace.

PLIGHT: Society helps farmer's family

(From 1B)

Since their Midland arrival, Hermando and his 37-year-old wife, Lydia, and nine of their 11 children, including two sets of twin girls, ages 13 and 16, have been living in three motel rooms, at $126 each per week, paid for by the Saint Vincent DePaul Society, a Catholic charity designed to help people in need.

Their two older children, married sons aged 20 and 21, are still in South Texas as farm workers.

"They don't know exactly where we are at," said Mrs. Hermando, who noted her "husband does everything" and can "run any kind of tractor" and is skilled at driving cotton-strippers.

The cotton-harvest season is over.

"They (in South Texas) said there was a lot of farming up here," Hermando lamented. "But we came at the wrong time of the year. That's the problem."

"We are hoping to find something soon," Mrs. Hermando said. "We want a house."

"The kids need to be in school," Hermando said.

Saint Vincent DePaul volunteer Jim Ameel helped the Hermando family get the motel rooms for a couple of weeks, noted fellow volunteer Don Hellinghausen, who, among others, helped get food and other necessities for the family and "dainties for the girls" and some Christmas gifts.

"I called people," Hellinghausen said, "and they couldn't help fast enough. If you ask, people will come forward. Midland has some great people."

Those who wish to help the Hermando family may call the Saint Vincent DePaul Society Helpline at 684-3887.

"That's the greatest need we have: emergency housing especially for women and their children and families," Hellinghausen said.

Hermando said his foremost concerns are the welfare of his children, his family.

"I don't give up," he said. "If I have to wash commodes to take care of these kids, I will do it.

"Yesterday (Christmas Day), we didn't have nothing to eat," Hermando said. "Don brought us some food" during the wintry cold.

Texans in waiting mode: some for power to return, others for roads to clear

BEDFORD — State troopers teamed with the National Guard to check on motorists stranded on snow-packed roads in the Texas Panhandle on Tuesday while tens of thousands of northeast Texas residents remained in the dark because of an ice storm.

Duane Barnett with the Texas Department of Public Safety in Amarillo said there was a rough estimate of a couple hundred cars along U.S. 287 between Amarillo and Dumas. It wasn't clear how many might be occupied.

As much as 14 inches of snow was on the ground in Amarillo and snow continued to fall. Barnett said a trooper reported the snow falling so heavily in Hereford that he couldn't see across the street.

U.S. 287 north of Amarillo was closed. Barnett said two National Guard Humvees were being used to take troopers up the highway to check on the cars to find out if they were empty or whether people wanted to remain with their cars or be ferried to Amarillo. Texas Department of Transportation crews were working the route south of Dumas.

Bruce Barrerra, a sales manager at the Pilot Travel Center in Amarillo, said he had eight trucks stuck in his parking lot. A man with a front-end loader was working to clear away the snow. The lot had about 20 trucks in it and more drivers were waiting to pull in.

"It didn't actually start until this morning about 7:30. It hit really hard," Barrerra said. It took him about an hour to drive the 20 miles from the home.

Barnett said U.S. 60 westbound into New Mexico was closed because of the weather and because there were no more motel rooms available in Clovis.

"We can't let any more people go to Clovis. There's no place to put them," he said.

In north Texas, more than 103,000 customers were without electricity after tree limbs covered with ice snapped, breaking power lines and knocking out power. The outages stretched from Montague County to the Arkansas-Texas border.

Crews were working to deal with repairs to transmission lines, which must be repaired before work can start on restoring service to homes and businesses, said Scott McCloud, spokesman for AEP/Southwestern Electric Power.

McCloud said it could be seven to 10 days after the transmission lines are back up and after the weather clears before customers will have power.

The utility provider has about 60,000 customers in the dark in northeastern Texas, including Texarkana, DeKalb and New Boston. TXU Electric and Gas spokesman Phillip Roth said as of 5 p.m. 35,000 customers in North Texas counties along the Red River were without electricity.

About 8,000 Grayson Collin Electric Co-op customers north of Dallas were without power.

Temperatures in North Texas were forecast to hover around the freezing mark late Tuesday and early today but may dip into the upper 20s, said Larry Nierenberg, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Fort Worth.

If the temperature falls into the 20s, roads in the Dallas-Fort Worth area will become icy when rain already on the pavement freezes, he said.

And "rain in North Texas will change to freezing rain with sleet possible," Nierenberg said.

Gang of prison escapees wanted in murder of policeman

By Michelle Koidin
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — When seven Texas inmates tied up prison employees, stole their clothes and escaped with an arsenal of weapons earlier this month, they left a note warning: "You haven't heard the last of us yet."

Two weeks later, all seven are wanted in the murder of a police officer in a Christmas Eve holdup at a suburban Dallas sporting goods store about 300 miles away.

The surprising thing to investigators and experts on crime was that the convicts — who by all accounts did not even know each other before they went to prison — apparently stuck together instead of splitting up.

"They've generated a discipline among themselves and a loyalty that has held up since Dec. 13," said John McAuliffe, inspector general for the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

The escaped convicts were behind bars for murders, rapes and robberies across Texas and were serving sentences ranging from 30 years to life in prison. They were seen as well-armed and desperate.

The FBI and state and local police departments hunted for the convicts.

"In light of the fact that Texas executes more prisoners than any other state, we have to recognize how vulnerable we are," said Dennis Longmire, a criminal justice professor at Sam Houston State University in Huntsville. "These men really have nothing to lose."

The convicts used a meticulous plan to break out of a maximum-security state prison ringed with razor wire 60 miles southeast of San Antonio.

Wearing street clothes stolen from prison employees, they bluffed their way into a guard tower, saying they needed to do maintenance work. Then they tied up a guard, stole 14 pistols, a loaded shotgun, a loaded rifle and 238 rounds of ammunition, fleeing in a stolen pickup that they ditched a few miles away.

The convicts were featured on TV's "America's Most Wanted" on Dec. 16, but the tips it generated did not pan out.

The next time anyone heard from the convicts was Christmas Eve, investigators said. The men are wanted in the slaying of Officer Aubry Hawkins, 29, who was shot in a robbery at a sporting goods store in Irving. Capital murder warrants were issued for all seven.

The Border Patrol was warned to be on the lookout for the men, though the convicts apparently spent the past two weeks moving north, away from the Mexican border, which is a three-hour drive from the prison.

Susie Sanchez, whose daughter was killed in a murder-for-hire arranged by one of the men in 1992, said police alerted her family about the breakout.

"I have four other daughters, and the police have told them to be cautious," said Sanchez, whose daughter, Theresa Rodriguez, was shot in the head in a scheme by her husband to collect $400,000 in insurance money.

The husband, 38-year-old Michael Rodriguez, pleaded guilty to murder and was serving a life sentence.

Another one of the escaped convicts, 29-year-old Joseph Garcia, was serving 50 years for murder. Among the others is a serial rapist and a man who beat a 1-year-old child.

Brian Olsen, executive director of the prison guards union, blamed the escape on understaffing and insufficient pay and training.

"It all combines and leads to the situation that we've got now, a very dangerous situation," said Olsen, head of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, which is seeking a raise for guards.

Bush to focus on fishing and transition during Florida vacation

By Scott Lindlaw
Associated Press

BOCA GRANDE, Fla. — President-elect Bush began a brief family fishing vacation Tuesday, but made plain that he was devoting much of his attention to building a new administration. His daughter Jenna stayed behind in Texas to recover following an appendectomy.

Bush picked up his parents in Houston en route to the island, a favorite family angling spot on Florida's gulf coast. It was his first trip to the state since the election recount here stalled his claim on the presidency for five weeks.

After Bush arrived at the airport in nearby Fort Myers, someone appeared with fishing rods, and the family departed in a small motorcade for Boca Grande, an exclusive resort town on Gasparilla Island between Sarasota and Fort Myers.

Bush later golfed with brother Jeb, the governor of Florida; brother-in-law Bobby Cook and Jeb's son, George P. Other family members walked the course with them, including brothers Marvin and Neil; their father, former President Bush, who used a cane following recent hip-replacement surgery; and former first lady Barbara Bush.

The family planned a fishing trip today off the island. They were staying at the Gasparilla Inn, a stately manor on the palm tree-dotted island within walking distance of the golf course.

Aides had said last week they expected a nonworking getaway. But with Inauguration Day 3 1/2 weeks away, Bush pressed on with assembling his Cabinet, now about half-completed.

AP Photo
President-elect George W. Bush smiles at the crowd as he prepares to ride his golf cart at the Gasparilla Inn Golf Course, Tuesday, in Boca Grande, Fla.

Additional nominations could come as early as Thursday during a trip to Washington, they said.

Stepping onto his plane in drizzly Austin, Bush said he planned "a little relaxation, a lot of phone calls."

Early Tuesday he conferred with Andrew Card, who will be his White House chief of staff. He also planned to confer with Vice President-elect Dick Cheney, followed by another round of calls on Wednesday.

"I've got a lot of transition work to do," Bush said.

"I'm obviously mindful of the fact that time is running short," he said. "We've done a very good job, I think, given the fact that over 30 days were taken out of the process."

The Cabinet announcements came to a halt Christmas weekend, after a 10-day wave of picks capped Friday by the nominations of Missouri Sen. John Ashcroft for attorney general and New Jersey Gov. Christie Whitman for Environmental Protection Agency administrator.

Gasparilla Island has served as a gathering spot for the Bush family for years.

The president-elect's wife, Laura, was not expected in Florida, spokesman Gordon Johndroe said. But Bush's daughter Barbara was, he said. Barbara is the twin sister of 19-year-old Jenna.

Jenna Bush was released from the hospital late Tuesday from St. David's Medical Center in Austin, after an emergency Christmas Night appendectomy.

"She's feeling great," Bush said.

But it was unclear whether she would join the family in Florida

"If not, she can clean out her room," he joked.

The family was having Christmas lunch at a friend's house in Austin when the abdominal pain struck, Bush told reporters. They returned to the governor's mansion, where the pain grew severe, he said.

She was rushed to the hospital, where doctors removed the appendix. It did not rupture, he said.

Bush left the mansion in a rain storm Monday night to visit his daughter in the hospital for about 45 minutes.

Arriving at the Charlotte County, Fla., airport Tuesday, Bush gave a hearty wave to journalists recording the event. Reporters and photographers were kept well away.

Bush's daughter recovers from appendectomy

AUSTIN — With her mother by her side, one of Presidei -elect Bush's twin daughters was released from the hospital Tuesday after an emergency Christmas Night appendectomy.

Jenna Bush, 19, was released from St. David's Medical Center late Tuesday, said Bush spokesman Gordon Johndroe.

Jenna spoke to her father by telephone before going home with Mrs. Bush, who had not planned to join her husband and other family members on a quick vacation trip to Florida.

Johndroe said he was unsure whether Jenna would join her relatives in Florida.

"She's doing fine," Johndroe said.

The illness wasn't expected to affect Jenna's attendance at the University of Texas at Austin, where she's a freshman. Spring classes don't begin until Jan. 16. "The doctors say everything's going just fine," he said.

Earlier Tuesday, when leaving to join the rest of his family in Florida, Bush said Jenna was recovering well.

"She's feeling great," Bush said. "My daughter's great," he told reporters, joking that if she cannot join the rest of the family for a Florida vacation, "she can clean out her room."

Jenna Bush underwent surgery Monday night after experiencing abdominal pains earlier that day.

Bush visited his daughter for about 45 minutes after the procedure. Bush himself had his appendix removed when he was 10 years old.

The president-elect said the family was having lunch at a friend's home when the attack occurred. The family returned to the governor's mansion, where Jenna's pain grew more severe.

Doctors removed the appendix, which is a small, finger-shaped pouch of intestinal tissue. The hospital refused to release details about the operation, referring all question's to Bush's office.

Bush said the appendix had not ruptured. When an appendix bursts, it spreads potentially fatal infection throughout the abdomen, and requires intravenous antibiotics during weeks of hospitalization. It also can cause infertility in girls and young women.

Jenna and her twin sister, Barbara, graduated from the public Stephen F. Austin High School last spring, where classmates voted Jenna "most likely to trip on prom night." She was senior class president and a member of the student council.

Texans brave freezing rain to find after-Christmas bargains

DALLAS (AP) — With only 364 days left 'til Christmas, Pam Wilson and her mother pulled into the parking garage of the Galleria shopping mall at 7:15 a.m. Tuesday, knowing they were already off to a late start on what is always one of the busiest shopping days of the year.

Most stores in the mall don't open until 10 a.m., but Macy's had been open for three hours by then. People were standing in line, waiting to get in, when Macy's opened its doors at 7 a.m.

"Let me put it this way," said Wilson, 44, of suburban Rowlett, "We had to go to the second level to find a parking spot."

"There are lots of bargains. I'd say we're finding everything about 50 percent off if you shop with the coupons. And the selections are good, but only if you get here early. The store was full of people when we got here," she said.

Someone asked if they'd participated in this madness before, doing their Christmas shopping on the day after Christmas.

"Just for the last 20 or 30 years is all," laughed her mother, Beverly Putnam, 61, of Garland, another Dallas suburb.

"We found mostly Christmas ornaments, dishes and clothes here. From here, we're going to The Container Store, then to another mall, and then to some of the independent stores. We'll be at it until 2 or 3. It's really a shop-'til-you-drop type of thing," Wilson said.

Across the street, Evelyn Lockett, 61, of Aubrey, about 50 miles north of Dallas, was upset when she and her two grown daughters walked up to a Crate & Barrel store at 9:50 a.m. and found the store already full of people. The store wasn't scheduled to open until 10.

"My mom just moved back to Texas from London, and she's got an empty house and we're buying stuff to decorate it," said Amy Pace, 33, of Plano. She said between her, her sister, Ann Wilson, 31, of Dallas and their mother, "we've probably spent $600 already."

Paul and Carol Dumont got to a Target store about 9:15 a.m. An hour later, they were at a checkout stand with three shopping carts full of merchandise.

"I don't know if we saved any money or not," Dumont said, chuckling. "It depends on if we need all of this. But we had a very good time." He and his wife spent more than $300. All kinds of items were in the carts, including more than a dozen rolls of Christmas wrapping paper.

"My husband is a very patient helper. He hasn't even had his coffee yet. I promised him a very good home-cooked breakfast for being so patient and going with me," she said.

"Everything is 50 percent off," said Mrs. Dumont, 56. "The best buy of the day was this polar fleece wrap for $3.40. It's very light weight, the type of thing you'd cover your lap with if you're at a stadium for a ballgame. We bought one for each of our three daughters.

"One of our daughters is living in an apartment for the first time, and we noticed she didn't have many ornaments for her tree. So we bought some ornaments for her. And I bought some glass apothecary jars that I'm going to use to put cookies in when I bake cookies."

Filmmaker Ken Burns jazzed about new 10-part documentary

RADNOR, Pa. — Filmmaker Ken Burns says jazz has something that pop music never will have, and that's why jazz is the subject of his new 10-part documentary.

"Let's be honest: Most of pop music is about sex," Burns said in the upcoming issue of TV Guide. Britney Spears and Madonna "can lead you to the bedroom door, but they don't tell you what to do about human intimacy. Then you need Miles Davis and Duke Ellington."

Burns said jazz is one of America's most important contributions to the world.

"I knew all the musicians, but I didn't know how powerful their stories were," he says. "In their own right, they're just as important as the founding fathers."

NEW YORK — Madonna and new husband Guy Ritchie are said to be honeymooning with rock star Sting and his wife, Trudie Styler, the friends who introduced them.

The singer and her movie-director husband arrived at Sting's estate in Wiltshire, England, late Saturday, and spent a quiet Christmas there after dropping in at a local pub for a pint and attending midnight Mass on Sunday, The New York Post reported Tuesday.

Madonna and Ritchie married on Friday at a castle in Scotland.

NEW YORK — Time is running out for interviewers who keep asking former child star Gary Coleman about his 1970s sitcom "Diff'rent Strokes."

"I've come up with the policy that, come 2001, I'll answer no more questions. We're in the 21st century here," he said.

The 32-year-old actor, whose next movie is "The Flunky" with Dean Stockwell, does not even watch much television anymore.

Instead, the sometime security guard occupies himself with model trains, DVDs, video games and the Internet, the New York Daily News reported Tuesday.

BRENTWOOD, Tenn. — Antiques and memorabilia hunters will have a chance to mingle with country music fans when Waylon Jennings and his wife, Jessi Colter, hold a yard sale this week.

Among the items for sale are a Dodge Charger from TV's "Dukes of Hazzard" — for which Jennings recorded the theme song — and tennis shoe boots made for Willie Nelson.

Jennings and Colter have moved to Arizona into a house one-third the size of the one they left. The yard sale will be held Thursday through Saturday at the couple's former home.

LOS ANGELES — Sean Connery says his co-star in the new movie "Finding Forrester" found little difficulty in his acting debut.

Rob Brown plays a brash teen-ager with literary aspirations who befriends Connery's character, the reclusive author of a Pulitzer Prize-winning novel from four decades ago.

Brown "has an amazing screen presence," Connery told the Orange County Register. "He could have a long career in films, if he wants it."

Brown, 16, had no acting experience before landing the role, nor had he studied acting.

Connery had advice for Brown: "He told me to be myself and to make sure my money's safe," the young actor said.

LOS ANGELES — Dick Van Dyke says he can relate to being in the doldrums during Christmas.

"I'm a reformed drunk, and I know what it's like to feel like you're never going to get out of the hole," said Van Dyke, clutching a paper food-service hat as he stood behind a table covered with pie slices at the Midnight Mission Christmas dinner in Los Angeles.

The actor and star of CBS' "Diagnosis Murder" joined Debbie Reynolds, Carrie Fisher and dozens of other volunteers who came to the mission to offer encouragement to the homeless and underprivileged.

"You can go through that terrible despondency of drug and alcohol dependency and not know there's a way out," Van Dyke said. "I'm here to tell them there's a way out."

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — Mickey Rooney made it home for Christmas, leaving the hospital after undergoing heart bypass surgery.

"He's more than happy to be out on Christmas Day," said Kevin Pawley, manager for the 80-year-old actor.

Rooney left Los Robles Regional Medical Center about noon Monday and had dinner at his mother-in-law's house that evening, Pawley said.

A blockage was discovered a week ago when Rooney was trying out a heart imaging machine a new company wants him to promote.

The former child star promises to be back on the road in February with his wife, Jan, in their "One Man — One Wife" stage show.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Wednesday, Dec. 27, 2000:

You make a difference wherever you are. Your personality energizes others, but at other times it triggers people. You have high energy, and others find it difficult to keep up with you. You also have unusual energy, which helps you gain both professionally and emotionally. Solidify your finances. If you are single, a flirtation at work could develop into a lot more. Romance sizzles from midsummer on. If you are attached, sharing a hobby draws you even closer together. AQUARIUS helps you make money.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Take charge, but listen to another. Be direct in your dealings. Bring co-workers together for a pep talk, and eye the end of the year. Set key goals for the week as well as for 2001. Your smile warms the heart of others. You have high energy. Tonight: Avoid a power struggle with a partner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Call distant friends and loved ones. Check out office gossip carefully. Not everything is as it seems. Evaluate recent spending. Consider working overtime if need be. You might not be ready to make a decision. Tonight: A partner flares up.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Your smile warms others up, and your curiosity draws others out. Do what you must in order to get the results you need. Do nothing halfway with a loved one. Make a point of extending yourself 100 percent to someone at a distance. Be upbeat. Check out what is possible. Tonight: Take the high road.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Deal with others fairly. Not everyone is in the mood you would like them to be in. Understand more of what is going on with others. Your vision of what is workable could change after a discussion. Step back from another's tantrum. Tonight: Play the night away.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ Your efforts and thoughts do make a difference. Don't allow anyone to interfere with your decisions. Think twice and review what is on your mind. A boss or someone in charge could be remote. You aren't going to change this person! Tonight: Do errands and clear out work.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Your creativity emerges, even now, with the holidays passing. You come up with answers. Your dynamic thinking breaks patterns. You draw good luck by taking charge and managing your work in your customary style. Think bonus; think pay raise. Tonight: Chug along.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Listen to family, but cruise on out the door. You understand your natural limits. Use your abilities to be detached and to resolve problems. News from a distance adds a twinkle to your eye. Nearly anything is possible. Loosen up and relax with a loved one. Tonight: Be careful with spending.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ You could easily lose your temper in a hot discussion. Think through a decision rather than finding a way to hush up a problem. Keep communication flowing, and stay cool. Don't take anyone's opinions personally. Use your sense of humor. Tonight: Get enough sleep.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Now is a good time to take a hard look at what is happening financially. Start reining yourself in before it is too late. Fortunately, there isn't a holiday every month. Refuse to allow a conversation to get touchy and angry. Tonight: Out and about.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Get an early start this morning, if possible. You might not see eye to eye with a friend. Your expectations of a situation could be very different. Stop and see where this misunderstanding began. Study your finances, with an eye to enhanced security. Tonight: Pay bills.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Take a deep breath and think before you take an important action. Your creativity opens the pathway to many options. Explore it carefully before deciding on your course of action. You come off far stronger than you realize. A boss or parent might be on the warpath. Tonight: Whatever makes you happy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ Use the daytime to accomplish a major project or to get plans in order. You will want to pull back later, feeling somewhat exhausted and pressured to the max. Take some time to answer your cards and write thank-yous. Others love hearing from you. Tonight: Vanish while you can.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
Pass	Pass	1♡	Pass
2NT	Pass	3♡	Pass
3NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ◇

Do not be lulled into a false sense of security because it looks as if there are tricks to spare at your contract. There are treacherous reefs lurking for the unwary mariner.

To argue that North's three-heart rebid is a request to bail out is simplistic. No one is good enough to decide that a particular hand will make exactly nine tricks at hearts and not eight or nine at no-trump. Even when partner has passed, the rebid should offer a choice of games, either in the suit or at no-trump. With a hand good for play at game in hearts only, North should rebid four hearts. And, with a featherweight third-seat opening, North must pass two no-trump.

West led the fourth-best diamond, won in the closed hand with the jack. Wasting no time, declarer cashed the king and ace of hearts, and was only slightly dismayed by East's spade discard. A heart was conceded to West, and the fate of the contract hung in the balance.

It was obvious to West that the defenders had to find tricks quickly to prevent declarer from romping home, and the only suit to offer any hope was clubs. A low club was led to East's king, and a club back assured west of two more tricks in that suit for five in all — three clubs and two hearts.

The defense was excellent, but the contract was ironclad against any distribution except at least four hearts headed by the queen-jack in the East hand. After winning the diamond at trick one, declarer should immediately have led a heart to the king. If an honor drops, declarer can simply concede a heart and claim. If none appears, declarer returns to hand with a spade and reverts to hearts, finessing the nine if West follows low. Whether that wins or loses, the defenders cannot come to more than three club tricks and one heart.

Fate of Palestinian refugees a key sticking point to peace deal

By Laura King
Associated Press

DHEISHEH REFUGEE CAMP, West Bank — Some have heavy old iron keys to homes destroyed long ago. Some have crumbling yellow land deeds. Some have faded sepia photographs. And all have memories — their own, or those handed down to them like a family keepsake.

Now, the nearly 4 million Palestinian refugees — whose families fled or were driven from their homes during Israel's 1948 war of independence and subsequent fighting — may prove the single biggest obstacle to a U.S.-proposed peace accord being weighed by leaders on both sides.

Alarmed and angry over word that Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat could agree to give up the "right of return" — ending their decades-old dream of returning to homes inside Israel — many refugees say they would fight rather than accept such terms.

In the Dheisheh refugee camp on the edge of the West Bank town of Bethlehem, a garbage-strewn shantytown where 11,000 refugees are crammed into half a square mile of concrete-block hovels, there is talk of a "refugee intefadeh" — an uprising — if Arafat concedes what many Palestinians consider a sacred tenet of their national struggle.

Since President Clinton outlined the main points of a proposed treaty to Israeli and Palestinian delegations in Washington last week, news reports and sources on both sides have indicated the proposed accord calls on Palestinians to effectively trade away the "right of return" in order to win a coveted prize: sovereignty over the Al Aqsa mosque compound in Jerusalem's walled Old City, Islam's third-holiest shrine.

But many refugees say no one — not even Arafat — has the authority to relinquish what they consider their birthright. "The right of return is holy to us," says graffiti splashed across gray walls in Dheisheh's hillside alleyways.

The explosive question of the refugees' fate stretches well beyond the boundaries of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, where a three-month outbreak of fighting has killed nearly 350 people, the vast majority Palestinians. Hundreds of thousands live in refugee camps in neighboring Lebanon, Syria and Jordan, where their presence is tolerated but largely unwelcome.

In the Dheisheh camp, 45-year-old Palestinian laborer Aziz Hamash said he has taught his five children they would some day reclaim the family farm near the Israeli town of Ramle — even though their Arab village, Beit Adatb, has lain in ruins for half a century.

On the wall of the family's chilly living room is a black-and-white photo of a crumbling stone wall in a grassy meadow — all that remains of what Hamash says was a comfortable house surrounded by vegetable gardens and a lemon grove.

He himself never saw the house when it looked like that; of his eight siblings, only two sisters were born in Beit Adatb, and the rest in Dheisheh. But like nearly all refugees, Hamash speaks of the family home with fluent familiarity — what kind of roses grew outside the door, the curving shape of the grape arbor out back.

To cultivate his children's sense of attachment to the plot of land, Hamash takes them to visit it. They do not have permission to cross into Israel, so they travel the 30 miles by back roads, sometimes driven by a sympathetic friend who has a car with yellow Israeli license plates.

"I tell them to keep loving their land forever," said Hamash. "I tell them, 'Look at it. This is ours.' "

The children give every sign of believing it. When asked if she'd live there someday, 9-year-old Fairouz, in a pink sweater and glittery hairband, replied with perfect assurance, "Of course I will. It's mine."

On one clandestine visit, Hamash said, the family was caught and detained for hours by Israeli police. Pointing to his 10-year-old son Ziad, Hamash said: "He told me, 'Dad, don't worry. Someday we won't have to sneak around to come to our home.' "

The refugee dilemma has grown greater over time — from about 1 million, according to the United Nations, in 1950, to nearly four times that today.

The Hamash family is a case in point. Mother and father and two little girls fled in 1948; now they are a 40-member clan in Dheisheh.

Israel has always flatly refused to discuss repatriation, saying that absorbing any significant number of Palestinian refugees would threaten its national character, swamping the country's 5 million Jews. Current peace proposals are said to call for Israel accepting a very small number of refugees for reunions with direct blood relatives.

Yossi Sarid, a dovish confidant of Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak, said he sympathized with the refugees' plight — "Their situation has been horrible for decades" — but insisted Palestinians know returning to former homes in Israel is unrealistic.

"We have no obligation to fulfill their dreams," he told Israel radio Tuesday. "Dreams are hard to fulfill — you wake up at some point. ... The Palestinians know it can't happen inside Israeli borders."

Perhaps reflecting that, camps like Dheisheh are striking for their air of permanence. Rather than being encampments, as their name implies, they are more like cities — rundown, ramshackle ones — with schools and clinics, shops and mosques.

For many refugees, though, all that keeps them going is a sense that their stay, as long as it has already been, is temporary.

"My flowers are plastic, not like the real ones I would grow in my own garden," said Hamash's wife, Miasr, 38, gesturing at a vase. "When we are home, I'll make the house nice, much nicer than this, because it will be ours forever."

Reports suggest a Palestinian repudiation of "right of return" would be sweetened by a massive infusion of international aid to pay compensation to families or even relocate them in countries willing to take them in. But most spurn that idea.

"We want our own land. We don't want money for it, and we don't want other land in Palestine or anywhere else," said Hamash, his voice rising with agitation. "Even if it's heaven, it's not enough. I don't want heaven. I want my land."

Anger among the refugees poses a festering long-term threat to any accord. It is no coincidence that camp children are disproportionately represented in the ranks of young stone-throwers who challenge Israeli troops almost daily. Many wind up dead or injured.

Hamash advised his son Zeiyd, 15, to take a different path.

"I tell him not to get himself killed throwing stones, not to throw his life away," he said calmly. "He should wait until he is a little older, get a weapon and get trained to fight. Arafat is weak now, and might have to agree to what the Americans say. But my sons will be strong and fight to get our land back."

Fairouz Hamash, 15, looks at a flower arrangement in the living room of her family's home in the Dheisheh refugee camp on the edge of the West Bank town of Bethlehem Tuesday. The fate of nearly 4 million Palestinian refugees is a key sticking point to a Mideast peace accord.

Yugoslavia's energy shortage, drought reaches catastrophic new level

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Yugoslavia's worst-ever energy crisis forced power cuts across the country's largest republic Tuesday, leaving thousands shivering in their homes and technicians scrambling to maintain electricity to hospitals and other essential facilities.

"We are facing a catastrophe caused by nature — after nine months of drought and the lowest water level in the Danube river, this is the result," said Srboljub Antic, Serbia's energy minister.

A drought beginning in the summer and continuing into December has lowered hydroelectric output in Yugoslavia and neighboring Albania. No investments have been made in the power system in either country in decades, forcing the infrastructure into crippling disarray.

But while power outages have become commonplace in Albania, major cuts in Yugoslavia are relatively unknown.

The state power company in Yugoslavia's main republic Serbia — home to more than 90 percent of the country's 10 million people — announced eight- to 10-hour blackouts throughout the country.

Belgrade, the capital, was divided into four sections, with electricity turned off in each sector for nine hours, twice a day.

As night fell Tuesday, scattered groups of up to 100 protesters set up roadblocks at two locations in Belgrade, claiming "unfair" distribution of power cuts and saying they had been without electricity for up to 36 hours.

In the central Serbian town of Cacak, local authorities introduced a state of emergency after a major relay station broke down and the population of more than 80,000 was plunged into darkness for more than 24 hours.

Cacak's deputy mayor, Mile Kandic, announced that all factories, shops, schools and kindergartens would be temporarily closed. Several factories throughout Serbia were also closed.

Serbs anticipating better conditions after pro-democracy forces triumphed in recent elections appeared shaken by the lengthy power cuts and some feared foul play. The pro-democracy advocates defeated former President Slobodan Milosevic's Socialists in Serbian parliamentary elections on Saturday.

"This is a clear sabotage," said Belgrade housewife Milica Stojanovic, 50. "How else is it possible that I had electricity under Milosevic and now I sit in darkness for more than 12 hours a day?"

Antic dismissed suggestions that the power outages were caused by Milosevic loyalists.

"If the former regime had wanted to cause this, they would have been in the position to do so on Saturday, not after election day," Antic said. "No one is doing this behind our backs."

While Antic urged patience and discipline, many Serbs phoned radio talk shows to share experiences — from getting stuck in an elevator to waiting in vain for an ambulance to arrive.

Others were angry that downtown Belgrade was ablaze with Christmas decorations while technicians struggled to maintain energy supplies for hospitals, bakeries and other crucial facilities.

Antic promised the decorations would be shut down, but claimed the effect would "only be psychological," since the energy they used was equivalent to lighting a "mere 20 homes."

For heating, Serbia relies heavily on Russian gas. But deliveries of gas have fallen behind, too, despite negotiations with Moscow. Temperatures in many private Serb homes fell below 50 degrees, leaving people shivering despite winter clothing.

The West has welcomed pro-democracy changes and promised humanitarian aid for energy purchases, but such assistance takes time to materialize.

Russians vote Lenin 'man of the century'

MOSCOW (AP) — Russians listed Communist leader Vladimir Lenin as their No. 1 choice of "man of the century" for their country, followed by dictator Josef Stalin, the Interfax news agency reported Tuesday.

The poll asked 1,500 people across Russia to name a choice without offering any suggestions.

After the Soviet leaders, human rights advocate and Nobel Prize winner Andrei Sakharov came in third, Interfax said. The first man in space, Yuri Gagarin, took fourth place, and Soviet reformer Mikhail Gorbachev was fifth, followed by actors and politicians from Russia's past.

Lenin won the most support, with 14 percent of respondents calling him the most important man of the 20th century, showing that many older Russians still revere him. Lenin's lasting popularity among the older generation has also been explained by years of Soviet propaganda, which lionized him.

The Public Opinion Foundation polling agency conducted the survey Dec. 16. The report did not mention the poll's margin of error.

Christmas fire kills at least 309 at China shopping center

By Martin Fackler
Associated Press

BEIJING — Fire swept through a shopping center in central China and engulfed Christmas revelers in a fourth-floor disco and construction workers on the floors below, killing at least 309 people.

Firefighters on cranes plucked people from the upper floors as others hung from windows and balconies to escape flames that shot out broken windows during the fire Monday night in the city of Luoyang. The blaze was put out three hours after it began.

By Tuesday morning, rescuers were pulling bodies from the wreckage of Dongdu Commercial building. With more Chinese holidays ahead, officials in Beijing urged local authorities to check on safety measures in other public venues to avert further tragedies.

Investigators believe the fire started in the shopping center's basement, where renovation work was under way, and that most of the dead were suffocated by the smoke, said an official with Luoyang's information office, who only gave his surname, Li.

Most of the victims died in the disco, which was illegal and privately run, the government's Xinhua News Agency said. Construction materials may have been blocking exits, local media reported. It was unclear whether the construction workers trapped were on the job at the time.

Firefighters tried to enter the fourth-floor disco but were forced back by thick smoke, the Henan Daily newspaper reported. A woman — her face and hands covered in soot and blood — said she and five or six others jumped from a balcony, the newspaper reported.

An employee at a cinema across the street said smoke poured from the building's top and back. Firefighters and police cordoned off the area Tuesday as they searched the building, said the woman, who asked not to be identified.

The scope of the tragedy underscored the rampant disregard for safety measures and lax enforcement despite repeated appeals from the government to better protect the public.

The vast majority of those caught in the fire were killed — only 60 people escaped the blaze and seven were injured — raising questions about the lack of safety equipment to rescue people, state media reported.

The disco was packed for a Christmas party, Li said. Although not a holiday in officially atheistic China, Christmas has become a fashionable occasion for parties among younger urban Chinese.

The fire occurred just ahead of the New Year and the Lunar New Year, China's biggest holiday, which this year falls Jan. 24 — a time when Chinese leaders sharpen vigilance for accidents.

The Public Security Ministry on Tuesday instructed "local governments to spare no efforts to ensure safety during the holidays," Xinhua said. The directive, it added, ordered checks of hotels, shopping malls, hospitals and other public venues, and demanded unlicensed and unsafe dance halls be shut down.

Luoyang, in the province of Henan along the Yellow River, is a cradle of Chinese civilization and until a thousand years ago was the capital of kingdoms and dynasties. Henan, China's most populous province, has undergone rapid economic growth in recent years but not all public services have kept up with the expansion.

The province came under criticism for public safety problems in March when a fire killed 74 people in a cinema in Jiaozuo city that was illegally showing adult movies.

Spain orders radiation check of 32,000 soldiers who served in Balkans

MADRID, Spain (AP) — European NATO allies have begun checking whether their soldiers may have been exposed to dangerous levels of radiation from depleted uranium ammunition used by U.S. warplanes in Kosovo last year. Spain said Tuesday that initial tests were proving negative.

The Spanish defense ministry confirmed it would examine all 32,000 soldiers who have served in the Balkan region since 1992. A ministry spokesman said none of the first 5,000 soldiers screened for exposure in recent months had tested positive.

Portugal's Defense Ministry said Tuesday that it would send a team of experts to Kosovo to check radiation levels on spent rounds, but did not foresee screening its 330 troops there.

Spain has just over 2,000 troops stationed in the Balkans, half of them in Kosovo.

Fears arose after NATO acknowledged early this year that U.S. warplanes operating in Kosovo fired armor-piercing rounds containing depleted uranium during the alliance's 78-day bombing campaign in 1999.

Italian Defense Minister Sergio Mattarella said last week that Italy was investigating cancer cases among its soldiers from Kosovo and Bosnia to see if there is a link with the ammunition.

A U.N. team that went to Kosovo in November is doing a similar study and is expected to report its findings in February.

Twelve Italian soldiers who served in the Balkans have developed cancer. In addition, three peacekeepers who served in Bosnia died of leukemia last year. Four soldiers involved in aircraft maintenance have also died of cancer.

Pentagon spokesman Jim Turner said Tuesday there have been no problems with leukemia or other illnesses among U.S. troops who served in the Balkans. He said soldiers receive regular health checkups after returning from overseas.

Spain's Defense Ministry medical chief, Col. Luis Villalonga, said the health tests were designed to calm any fears among the troops. He said last week that Spanish army studies coincided with others by allied forces that showed "there has been no radioactive pollution."

He said one case of a Spanish soldier dying of leukemia on returning home was unrelated. He said the soldier had been based in Macedonia, which was not directly involved in the war.

The Dutch Defense Ministry said it would keep abreast of Spanish and Italian inquiries via NATO. A spokesman said the ministry was looking into a National Soldiers' Union report about a peacekeeper with leukemia who served in Bosnia.

Earlier this year, the Yugoslav government reported that the region hit by uranium rounds in Kosovo stretched across a southwestern belt of the province. Most affected were areas surrounding towns such as Prizren, Urosevac, Djakovica, Decani and the Djurakovac village — areas where Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Greek and U.S. troops have been posted.

In its report, Yugoslavia claimed some 50,000 rounds had been fired, while NATO admitted to 31,000 rounds.

Iraq long has blamed an increase in rates of leukemia and other cancers, as well as neurological and muscular diseases, on the use of depleted uranium bombs during the Persian Gulf War. Official statistics show that the number of Iraqi children with cancer rose to 130,000 in 1997 from 32 in 1990.

Depleted uranium, which has low levels of radioactivity, is used in artillery shells because it is extremely dense and can pierce armor. On impact, the shells create an airborne dust.

Some experts believe uranium rounds are environmentally harmful, especially if people and animals inhale the dust that forms when the shells disintegrate. The U.S. Defense Department has defended the use of the uranium, saying the rounds contained no more health risk than conventional weapons.

Hearings open in case against Russian researcher

KALUGA, Russia (AP) — A Russian court on Tuesday opened the espionage trial of a Russian researcher whose family maintains his only crime was reading between the lines of military publications.

After Tuesday's hearing, the judges agreed to adjourn proceedings until Jan. 9 so defendant Igor Sutyagin, an analyst from the respected Russian think tank, the Institute for USA and Canada studies, could carefully review the charges.

The trial is the latest in a spate of espionage trials that human rights activists say signals a witch hunt for independent thinkers and a revival of the vast powers of Russia's secret services.

The Federal Security Service, which initiated the case, says it is cracking down on spies who it says infiltrated Russia amid the lawlessness that followed the Soviet collapse.

The closed-door trial took place in a run-down courthouse in Kaluga, the regional center of Sutyagin's home province southwest of Moscow.

It came three weeks after American businessman Edmond Pope was sentenced to 20 years in prison for espionage. Pope was pardoned by President Vladimir Putin on Dec. 14 and has returned to the United States.

The security service, the main successor to the KGB, claims that Sutyagin gave classified information on Russia's military to other countries. The indictment says he was enlisted to spy for the United States when he attended a scientific conference in Britain in early 1998, his lawyer Vladimir Vasiltsov said.

The USA and Canada Institute has no access to government secrets, and Sutyagin maintains he only worked with open sources — analyzing and piecing together separate bits of information.

"He would spread newspaper clippings around on the floor, on the couch, on his desk, everywhere — and crawl between them," said Sutyagin's wife, Irina Manannikova. "This would go on for days — and something would be born that way."

The powers of Russia's special services had been trimmed under ex-President Boris Yeltsin. But many analysts say the agencies have started to reclaim their ground since Putin, a 16-year veteran of the KGB, came to power.

In addition to the Pope case, two Russian environmental researchers have recently been tried for treason and espionage for reporting on environmental pollution by the Russian Navy.

Files in Sutyagin's study at his home hold scores of newspaper clippings, mostly from the official military daily Krasnaya Zvezda, with some passages underlined in red.

Another landslide victory for Tiger

■ Woods wins second straight AP Male Athlete of the Year Award.

By Doug Ferguson
AP Golf Writer

Tiger Woods was a repeat winner Tuesday as The Associated Press Male Athlete of the Year. Like so many of his amazing victories, it was no contest.

Fresh off his incredible season of nine victories, three straight majors, the career Grand Slam and shots that had to be seen to be believed, Woods joined Michael Jordan as the only three-time winner of the AP award since it began in 1931.

He received 47 first-place votes and 160 points from sportswriters and broadcasters to easily defeat back-to-back Tour de France winner Lance Armstrong.

Woods became the sixth player to win the award in consecutive years. The others were tennis great Don Budge, golfer Byron Nelson, track star Carl Lewis, quarterback Joe Montana and Jordan, who won it three years in a row.

"It's very humbling," Woods said. "It's a great honor to be in the presence of such great names. I didn't realized that Jordan was the only other three-time winner."

Armstrong had eight first-place votes and 72 points, while St. Louis Rams quarterback Kurt Warner was third with 34 points. Points were awarded on a 3-2-1 basis.

Rounding out the top 10 were Pedro Martinez, Shaquille O'Neal, Rulon Gardner, Jason Giambi, Derek Jeter, Josh Heupel and Marshall Faulk.

In a sport where two strokes is considered a comfortable victory, Woods won the U.S. Open by 15 strokes, a World Golf Championship by 11, the British Open by eight and two other tournaments by at least four strokes.

It was a year in which he kept raising the bar, and sailing over it. The higher the expectations, the better Woods played.

Five straight wins on the PGA Tour piqued a nation's interest. Then, Woods made it six in a row by coming from seven strokes behind over the final seven holes at Pebble Beach.

Winning the U.S. Open wasn't enough. Woods challenged history and whipped that the way he did the rest of the field — a 15-stroke victory, the largest margin in the 140 years of major championship golf, a 12-under 272 on a course where no one else broke par.

Could he complete the Grand Slam at the home of golf? Just barely. He won the British Open by eight strokes, set another major-championship record with a 19-under 269 and never once set foot in any of the 112 pot bunkers at St. Andrews.

He made it three straight majors at the PGA, the first player since Ben Hogan in 1953 to do that. He broke Nelson's 55-year-old scoring record with an unadjusted average of 68.17. He didn't have a round over par after May 7.

When asked at what point in the season he thought he was capable of winning three straight majors and more than half of all the tournaments he played, Woods replied, "On the first day of the year."

"My goal is to go out there and win every time," he said. "Obviously, it's not going to happen, but my goal is to compete and win everything. I did think this was possible. And I think it's possible in the future."

Woods transcended his sport like few others. His name alone — Tiger — became a new definition for the highest level of performance — in sports, politics and on Wall Street.

"He is something supernatural," five-time British Open champion Tom Watson said. "He has raised the bar to a level that only he can jump."

Woods does things like no one else, and not just some of the outrageous shots he produces at some of the most crucial times in tournaments.

He became the first player to finish under par in every tournament he played, and he has not finished over par since the 1999 British Open at Carnoustie, a streak of 25 starts. His record

A quarterback's dream

Tech's Kingsbury relishes role as trigger man in passing offense

By W.H. Stickney Jr.
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON — What began last spring as a five-man battle royal at Texas Tech ended in August with a one-man smackdown won handily by Kliff Kingsbury.

Although it might have seemed, as with those choreographed pro wrestling matches, the outcome was written long before two-a-day practices ended, rest assured the sophomore quarterback had to win the job the hard way.

But now, like the behemoths of the pretend mat world, Kingsbury is living a dream.

That's not to say that fighting as a freshman for a position under the previous regime of Spike Dykes was a nightmare.

"I got along with the other coaches great. I had fun in their offense," Kingsbury said Sunday. "But this offense is a quarterback's dream. With (first-year) coach (Mike) Leach, it gives me a lot of responsibility.

"And he's real open to ideas, which makes it a lot of fun for us."

When the Red Raiders hit the field for their first spring workouts, Leach probably was open to suggestions about what to do at quarterback. He knew the direction he wanted to take. His skill as an offensive strategist was unquestioned.

In one season as offensive coordinator at Oklahoma, Leach took the Sooners from being one of the worst units in the Big 12 to one of the best.

It helped that at quarterback, Leach could call on Josh Heupel, this year's Heisman Trophy runner up.

At Tech, Leach was only mildly familiar with what Kingsbury and the other quarterback candidates could do.

New bowl trying to catch on in Houston

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

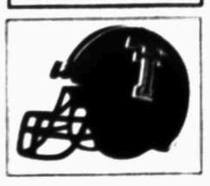
HOUSTON — Texas Tech and East Carolina will offer pass-proficient attacks in the galleryfurniture.com Bowl Wednesday night, the first bowl game played in the Astrodome since 1987.

Whether enough fans will show up to give the first-year bowl a prominent spot in the crowded postseason scene remains to be seen.

Despite early overstating on the progress of ticket sales, sponsor Jim McIngvale expects a good first year after giving away 250,000 memorabilia items to promote the game.

"If we do a good job marketing this, we should have between 30,000 and 40,000 people at the game," McIngvale said. "I think 40,000 would exceed my wildest expectations."

That might be a stretch since icy weather threatened to sock Tech fans from West Texas and East Carolina fans purchased only about 3,000 tickets, well below expectations. East Carolina athletic director Mike Hamrick said the Pirates took 8,000 to 10,000 fans to last year's Mobile Alabama Bowl.



Promoter Jerry Ippolito said in early December that 28,000 tickets had been sold. In reality, only 4,200 tickets had been sold at that point.

Still, McIngvale thinks the absence of the Bluebonnet Bowl, which played its last game in 1987, will have fans hungry for a bowl game.

"Houston is a football town," McIngvale said. "We have been without the NFL for several years now, and it's coming back. The college bowl game is coming back."

Texas Tech (7-5), the No. 7 team from the Big 12, and East Carolina (7-4), Conference USA's third place team, expect to put on a good show regardless of weather or attendance.

"If you are the first anything it's exciting," Tech first year coach Mike Leach said.

Both teams offer potentially high scoring offenses with Tech led by quarterback Kliff Kingsbury and East Carolina's more

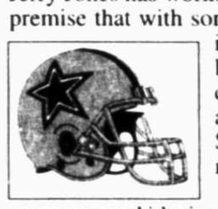
Jones, 'Boys face reality of 5-11 year

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — For several years, Jerry Jones has worked under the premise that with some fine-tuning the Dallas Cowboys could make another Super Bowl run.



The 2000 season proved it's time for an overhaul.

Dallas went 5-11, its worst record since 1989, and finished with more key players hurt than healthy, yet another sign the Cowboys need to stop relying on aging championship holdovers and start rebuilding.

"I thought when we started this year that we had a chance since we had a core base that won three Super Bowls as early as five years ago," Jones said Monday night following a season-ending 31-0 loss to Tennessee. "I will have to do some head-scratching and see how we go from here."

Whether Troy Aikman retires, returns or is released will be the major drama of the off-season.

Other looming decisions include whether to keep former Pro Bowlers such as Darren Woodson, Erik Williams and Leon Lett and what to do about recent, expensive acquisitions like Alonzo Spellman and Ryan McNeil.

Aikman, Woodson, Williams and Lett were all part of the Dallas teams that won three Super Bowls in four years in the 1990s. Two more are Chad Hennings, who is likely to retire because of a neck injury, and deep snapper Dale Hellestrae, who may be too expensive even at the veteran minimum.

If all six leave, Emmitt Smith would be the lone survivor — or, as he likes to put it, "The Last of the Mohicans."

"Obviously, changes will be made," said Smith, who needs 104 yards to pass Barry Sanders for No. 2 on the all-time rushing list. "Whether or not the changes will be productive, you cannot tell until the season gets started."

[illegible] the roster over the [illegible]

The Cowboys have traded their first, fourth and seventh-round picks in the April draft and [illegible] think of next year" plans are committed to players no longer on the roster. Jones may add to that total in 2001 to make things easier in '02.

"I see teams like New Orleans that have come back and are right in the thick of it," Jones said. "While I'm not pleased with the year, I don't feel dismal about the future."

Davis is big reason for 'Horns success

By Jim Vertuno
AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO — Big Monsta. Lenny Pooh. Big Len-Len.

A player as big as Texas All-American offensive tackle Leonard Davis needs a lot of nicknames. One just isn't enough.

"We get so we're not sure just how big he is," coach Mack Brown said of his 6-foot-6, 365-pound behemoth. "We've tried to get this weight down, but you just can't. He's not fat, he's just big."

Davis is a big reason why the 12th-ranked Longhorns (9-2) will play Friday in the Holiday Bowl against No. 8 Oregon (9-2).

With his team struggling at midseason after a devastating 51-14 loss to Oklahoma, Brown simplified his offense. The Longhorns took the mystery out of a complex passing game and plowed ahead on the ground behind an offensive line that averages over 300 pounds.

With Davis opening the holes, tailback Hodges Mitchell went over 1,000 yards for the second consecutive season and the Longhorns won six straight while averaging 196 yards on the ground.

"People were really dogging us about the way we played against Oklahoma," Davis said. "We were ready to needed to come back and redeem ourselves. I'm really proud of that."

So about those nicknames. Who dares to call a man who can bench press 515 pounds "Lenny Pooh" or "Duncan Bear"?

The nicknames started long before Davis got to the University of Texas.

The pride of tiny Wortham, Texas, Davis is the youngest of 12 brothers and sisters (his father had 11 children from a previous marriage, his mother 10).

"I'm the biggest in the family probably by a long shot," he said by seventh grade, Davis was 6-4, 300 pounds.

Former Steelers quarterback Joe Gilliam dead of apparent heart attack at age 49

By Teresa M. Walker
AP Sports Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Joe Gilliam Jr., who was one of the first black quarterbacks to start an NFL game but fell into drug addiction and spent two years living under a bridge in a cardboard box, has died at 49.

Gilliam, who was in such desperate straits at one point that he pawned his two Super Bowl rings, had finally seemed to be getting his life back together when he died of an apparent heart attack on Christmas Day.

Earlier this year, he started a football camp for boys at his alma mater, Tennessee State, and was counseling drug addicts and renewing old relationships.

"Joe had some difficult times and everybody knows that," said Dan Rooney, president of the Pittsburgh Steelers. Gilliam's team in the mid-1970s. He said that a players reunion earlier this year, Gilliam "was really upbeat and in great health, probably in better shape than anyone."

Gilliam was dead on arrival at Baptist Hospital late Monday, hospital spokeswoman Jessica Etz said. Etz said relatives believe Gilliam suffered a heart attack.

An autopsy was completed Tuesday, but the Nashville medical examiner won't declare a cause of death until toxicology tests results are returned in about a month.

Mavs give Nelson his 945th victory

Associated Press

DALLAS — Michael Finley scored 38 points, 27 in the first half when Dallas went ahead to stay, as the Mavericks beat the Seattle SuperSonics 114-93 Tuesday night to make coach Don Nelson the third winningest coach in NBA history.

With his 945th victory, Nelson moved into third place for coaching wins behind Toronto's Lenny Wilkens (1,192) and Miami's Pat Riley (1,012). Nelson, 945-763 in 23 NBA seasons, had been tied with Bill Fitch, who also lost 1,106 games.

After Finley started and ended an 11-0 run to wrap up the first quarter, the Mavericks trailed just one possession the rest of the game.

Finley's layup with 1:44 left in the first quarter started the pivotal run. Hubert Davis steal led to Steve Nash's 3-pointer six seconds later, and Finley later ended the quarter with a rebound and a pass to Dirk Nowitzki for a breakaway dunk that made it 26-19.

Finley then made all seven of his shots in the second quarter, including 10 points in the last five minutes of the first half. He finished 16-of-22 shooting.

The 38 points by Finley, who also had nine rebounds and eight assists, were the most by a Dallas player this season. The 27 first-half points were also the most scored by a Maverick in a half.

Seattle took its last lead on Gary Payton's driving layup with 5:53 left in the first half made it 38-37 and ended an 11-0 run by the Sonics. After Payton's miss on the next possession, Howard Eisley grabbed the rebound and Hubert Davis scored on a driving layup and made the free throw to put the Mavericks ahead to stay.

Payton had 23 points and nine assists to lead Seattle, which lost consecutive games for the first time since Nate McMillan replaced fired coach Paul Westphal.

Nowitzki had 21 points and 11 rebounds for his third straight double-double and 11th this season. Steve Nash had 22 points, including four 3-pointers.

Brent Barry added 20 points for Seattle.

Spurs 103, Rockets 95

SAN ANTONIO — Antonio Daniels scored a career-high 26 points and had 10 assists as the San Antonio Spurs beat the Houston Rockets 103-95 Tuesday night.

■ NBA Roundup

Daniels, filling in at the starting point guard for Avery Johnson, who is on the injured list, had 14 of his points in the second half as San Antonio won for the fifth time in six games.

Tim Duncan had 20 points and 13 rebounds, and David Robinson added 17 points and 12 rebounds for the Spurs. Derek Anderson scored 11 points.

Steve Francis scored 21 points and Cuttino Mobley added 17 points for Houston.

Leading 63-59, San Antonio went on a 23-13 run for an 86-72 lead after three periods. Anderson, held in check in the first half, scored nine of his 11 points during the decisive run for San Antonio.

San Antonio took its largest lead of the game, 90-72, with 10:58 left on a basket by Malik Rose.

Houston, which lost its fifth straight, closed within 97-89 on a 3-pointer by Walt Williams with 4:59 remaining.

A 6-0 run pulled Houston within 101-95 with 1:07 left, but Daniels' driving layup with 33.1 seconds remaining sealed the win for the Spurs.

Houston, which shot 55 percent in the first half, trailed 56-50 at halftime. Robinson had 14 points and nine rebounds at the break. Francis and Mobley combined for 31 first-half points.

San Antonio played most of the game without coach Gregg Popovich, who was ejected with six seconds remaining in the first quarter. He received a pair of technical fouls for arguing a foul call with official Blane Reichelt.

Hornets 115, Cavaliers 110

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Jamal Mashburn scored eight of his 27 points in overtime Tuesday night as the Charlotte Hornets beat the Cleveland Cavaliers 115-110 for their seventh consecutive win.

The Hornets have the longest current winning streak in the NBA and have won 11 straight at home.

The Cavaliers dropped their fourth straight and fell 3 1/2 games behind the Hornets in the Central Division.

David Wesley led the Hornets with 32 points. Elden Campbell scored 17 and Lee Nailon scored a career-best 12 points.

Andre Miller scored 30 for the Cavaliers, who scored just 11 points in overtime. Matt Harpring added 25 and Lamond Murray had 18.

Pistons 101, Celtics 96

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Jerry Stackhouse had 33 points and seven assists as the Detroit Pistons overcame a season-high 29 turnovers, including 10 in the fourth quarter.

Stackhouse, playing his first game since getting married on Christmas Eve, struggled, shooting 0-for-8 from 2-point range and 5-for-7 from 3-point distance. He committed nine turnovers, but hit 18 of 20 free throws. The nine turnovers and 18 free throws tied career highs.

Joe Smith added 20 points and nine rebounds and Ben Wallace had nine points and 16 rebounds for the Pistons.

Antoine Walker led Boston with 26 points. Paul Pierce added 19 and Tony Battie 18.

A Penguin comeback

Lemieux makes return to ice

By Alan Robinson
AP Sports Writer

PITTSBURGH — The comeback the NHL never dared to dream for begins Wednesday night, and not even the man making it knows exactly what to expect.

Mario Lemieux returns to the ice after a 3 1/2-year retirement, restoring some star power to what has been a largely faceless NHL since he and Wayne Gretzky quit — and, he hopes, some offense to the slumping Pittsburgh Penguins.

Lemieux's return would be dramatic and virtually unprecedented even if there wasn't the added element of the sport's first Hall of Fame player-turned-owner transforming himself back into a player.

But, despite the Jordanlike buzz Lemieux's return has created in hockey, and the huge number of tickets it has sold in Pittsburgh, it is difficult to predict how successful it will be.

Guy Lafleur and Gordie Howe renounced their retirements after a short time to return to the NHL, and Ted Williams and other baseball stars spent years fighting World War II and the Korean War before returning to the majors. Michael Jordan played minor league baseball for a year before leading the Chicago Bulls to three more NBA titles.

But Lemieux has been away nearly full four seasons — a virtual career for some less-skilled players — and is now 35, certainly not old but still not young in a sport where speed and leg strength are everything.

Lemieux's quick hands and strong stride returned quickly during seven weeks of workouts, but he still must deal with years of inactivity, a back that was balky even when he was much younger and bigger, stronger defensemen who don't care who he once was.

He also must deal with a sport that, despite his own remarks to the contrary, still has far too much clutching and grabbing and mucking and grinding to please fans more interested in offense, offense, offense.

"I have a lot of confidence to come back and play at a high level," said Lemieux, the only NHL player with 500 or more goals to average more than two points per game. "I'm going to have to be patient, but I intend to get back to the top of my game."

But just how high a level can he achieve? Can a player away from the game so long, even one as skilled as Lemieux, dare hope to dominate like he once did? Apparently, many want to know.

The Penguins expect to sell out all four games of a homestand that conveniently begins Wednesday, and they have more media credential requests for the comeback game — about 200 — than they usually do for an early-round playoff game.

Lemieux's comeback game will get saturation TV coverage in North America on ESPN, Fox Sports Net Pittsburgh, the CBC and Canada's French-speaking RDS.

Still, Lemieux warns he won't come back "scoring 4-5 points a night" and even his own teammates are trying not to get too worked up, lest they be disappointed if he is merely Lemieux the Good, not Lemieux the Great.

"It's going to be tough for him," Alexei Kovalev said Tuesday before the Penguins-Sabres game in Buffalo. "It will take some time for him to come back. The skill will be there, but the energy? It's tough to bring it back. It's going to take 3-4-5 games to get in game shape.

"Practice is one thing. He is definitely in good shape right now. But it's different when you practice and when you're playing."

Lemieux is coming back partly because he considers the Penguins a Stanley Cup contender, but they aren't playing like it. They were 0-3-3 in the six games going into Tuesday's game and have seemed distracted and unfocused lately, almost as if they can't wait for Lemieux to return.

They didn't resemble a cup contender Saturday, losing 8-2 to the Dallas Stars in their fifth consecutive home loss. They last had such a long home losing streak in January 1984, several months before they drafted the then 18-year-old Lemieux.

"I think anyone who comes back from such a period of not playing hockey, you need help from your teammates," said four-time NHL scoring champion Jaromir Jagr, who has slumped much of the season. "The way we're playing right now, I don't know if we can help him much. He's going to be on his own."

Of course, Lemieux is accustomed to that, having previously transformed what was the NHL's worst team in the 1980s into a two-time Stanley Cup champion in the 1990s.

"I think I'm very, very close, and I'm very excited about the future," Lemieux said.

Donnie Nelson set to coach Mavs

■ Younger Nelson will coach team in father's absence.

By Stephen Hawkins
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — When Don Nelson leaves the Dallas Mavericks next week for treatment of his prostate cancer, son Donnie will be the team's coach, not Del Harris.

Harris, who won 556 games in 13-plus season as an NBA head coach for three different teams, decided that he was better suited to continue in the role for which he was hired: an assistant coach in charge of the Mavericks' defense.

"It's a great system, but I found it to be a system different from the way my instincts are," Harris said. "I think I make a good helper in the system. In this situation, I thought it better for the team to keep doing it the way we're doing it here."

While Donnie Nelson has never been an NBA head coach, other than replacing his father following ejections and illnesses, he knows the system. He has been an assistant coach for his father nine years, the last two in Dallas, and also serves as director of player personnel.

"No preparation is needed. I feel like a pilot who has been through every possible simulator," the younger Nelson said Tuesday. "I don't know if there is such a thing as over-preparation, but I don't know what I else I could do, other than do it."

Donnie Nelson has coached summer leagues and Lithuania's Olympic team, which won the bronze medal in Sydney after nearly upsetting the United States in a semifinal.

The elder Nelson will leave the team following a home game against Detroit next Wednesday for an operation in Salt Lake City. Donnie's debut will come during a five-game road trip that begins Jan. 5 at Toronto.

After surgery, Don Nelson faces a recuperation time of 6-to-8 weeks, a time when the Mavericks will play 20-to-26 games.

When first told about Harris' decision late last week, Donnie Nelson flatly denied the job. It wasn't until after extended conversations with his father, Harris and Harris' son that he realized that this was the best decision.

"It became increasingly clear to me with this situation that I probably am the right person to do this. I think the game a lot like Nellie does," he said. "I'm the closest Nellie replacement there is, and am probably the right guy for this specific job. And that is what it is, a specific job, a month and a half to get through."

While surprised by Harris' decision, Dallas players understand and realize they still have the most important role.

"Secondary to that, we all have to come together and get through this situation together," said guard Steve Nash. "I understand his reasoning."

Christian Laettner said it will be hard for anybody to replace Nelson.

"We definitely do better when Nellie is there than when he's not," Laettner said. "We have to find a way to do well when his son is coaching us."

The Mavericks, who are off to their best start in 12 years and trying to make the playoffs for the first time since 1990, went 1-3 for Harris when Nelson took time off to seek treatment options.

Donnie came to Dallas after 2 1/2 seasons as an assistant at Phoenix. At the time, there was talk of him eventually replacing his father, who also is the Mavericks' general manager, as coach. Those plans were scuttled after Mark Cuban bought the team in January.

Cuban approved of the plan for the younger Nelson to take over on an interim basis, and respects Harris' decision.

"I give Del tons of credit. How many people would have courage to do what he did," Cuban said. "I'm proud of Del, proud of the whole scenario."

streak of 47 rounds at par or better included three majors, and he went 64 holes in a major championships without making a bogey.

"Cut him open and I'll tell you what you'll find — a bunch of wires and levers, and a big heart," Rocco Mediate said.

When Woods first rose to the top of golf with his 12-stroke victory in the 1997 Masters, some believed he did not have the patience or control to ever win a U.S. Open, that his game was suited to only certain styles.

Woods proved this year he has a game for every course, every condition, every occasion.

He never made worse than par over the final 26 holes in the U.S. Open, the toughest test of golf that puts the ultimate premium on par. He won the British Open with four rounds in the 60s. He owns scoring records in all four majors, thanks to his 18-under 270 at the PGA Championship, which he won in a thrilling playoff over Bob May.

Typically ho-hum about everything he does, Woods admitted his three straight majors were indeed something special.

"The reason is, they're played on three different types of venues, three different settings, three differing feelings, three different everything," he said. "Winning a major in and of itself is so difficult. And when you factor in the pressures of people coming at you on Sunday, career Grand Slam, all of those, it's a pretty impressive feat."

GILLIAM: Former NFL quarterback wanted to coach

(From 1C)

ing a starting role for the Steelers in 1974, six years after Marlin Briscoe of the Denver Broncos became pro football's first black starting quarterback.

Drug problems were partly to blame for Gilliam's benching and the end of his NFL career.

Gilliam talked about it during a reunion of former Steelers players for the final game at Three Rivers Stadium earlier this month, telling former teammates that his life was so tough at one point that he lived in a cardboard box under a bridge.

"I had it all and then it disappeared, and then my life disappeared and now, look, I'm back with my friends again," he said.

Gilliam said he was in his third year of sobriety, a turnaround his father, a longtime football coach, attributed to his son's wife of four years and his son's passion for football.

Gilliam Sr. now has the lost Super Bowl rings, returned to him by fans and friends a few years ago. He was waiting to give them to his son when he thought he was ready.

The family had no comment Tuesday when reached at their Nashville apartment.

Gilliam's big chance with the Steelers came in his third year, 1974, when several veteran players, including Terry Bradshaw, went on strike. Gilliam kept the job when Bradshaw and the others returned, and he led the Steelers to a 4-1-1 record.

But many Steelers fans were unhappy, and Gilliam said he and the team began receiving hate mail and threats.

"I thought if you played well you got to play," Gilliam told The Tennessean in a 1999 interview. "I guess I didn't understand the significance of being a black quarterback at the time."

Gilliam "was an excellent quarterback and could really throw the ball," said Dick Hoak, a Steelers assistant coach for 30 years. "But Joe had problems off the field, and that hurt."

Gilliam played little during the 1975 season, then was cut and didn't play in the NFL again. He played minor league football in the late 1970s and early '80s.

This year, his football camp had nearly 80 teen-agers, and Gilliam was planning another. He was hoping to become a football coach at a high school or college, said Woody Widenhofer, a friend and former Steelers assistant.

Howard Gentry Jr., former broadcast announcer for Tennessee State, said that when he last saw Gilliam a few weeks ago, the former quarterback told him he was working on a book and a possible movie about his life.

"Everything was just positive. He looked great," Gentry said. "He seemed to be on top of the world."

Among Gilliam's survivors are his father, his wife, three daughters and two stepsons.

Funeral arrangements were incomplete Tuesday.

Jacks postponed

ODESSA — The cold West Texas weather, which has made traveling anywhere risky, has gotten to the Odessa Jackalopes.

The Jacks, who were scheduled to travel north to Lubbock for a Western Professional Hockey League game with the Cotton Kings Tuesday night, were instead grounded by the icy roads, forcing the game to be pushed back to Sunday at 7 p.m.

Although the trip is only a little over 100 miles, short by WPHL standards, the closure of Highway 87 between Lamesa and Lubbock forced the postponement of the game.

It doesn't appear as if the weather will affect the Jacks' travel plans for the remainder of the week. As scheduled, Odessa will leave for Belton on Thursday for a 7:05 p.m. game against Central Texas on Friday, then the Jacks will go to Amarillo Saturday at 7 p.m. before making up their game with the Cotton Kings.

Ice storm delays Oklahoma's arrival in Miami

MIAMI — Top-ranked Oklahoma's long-awaited trip to the Orange Bowl lasted longer than scheduled.

The team's plane took off from Oklahoma City in sleet, four hours behind schedule and arrived in Miami at 6:30 p.m. It was 21 degrees when the 241 players, coaches and family members boarded the chartered plane, and 71 degrees when they got off.

"I left my jacket at home," coach Bob Stoops said.

Oklahoma's opponent, No. 3 Florida State, was scheduled to arrive in Miami on Wednesday to prepare for next week's national championship game.

Oklahoma's coaches took their wives and children along for next Wednesday's game rather than leave them at home the day after Christmas. Most of the first 40 passengers to get off the plane were children.

"Coaching this week will be easy," said Stoops, who was carrying his 18-month-old son Drake. "The hard part was getting all our families on the plane."

The players laughed as the coaches had a hard time quieting down their children before takeoff, said Stoops, who was also accompanied by his wife Carol, and Drake's twin brother, Isaac.

Oklahoma immediately went to Barry University to practice after a three-day holiday break, beginning with stretching exercises.

Cowboys-Titans ends 'MNF' season on low note

NEW YORK — "Monday Night Football" ended the season on a down note.

The overnight TV rating for the AFC Central champion Tennessee Titans' 31-0 victory over the Dallas Cowboys on ABC was a 10.6.

That's the same overnight rating generated by the game Dec. 4 between Kansas City and New England. That game, between two non-playoff teams, produced the second-lowest full national rating in 31 seasons of "Monday Night Football" — 9.9.

Only a 1986 game between the Giants and Redskins, opposite Game 7 of the World Series, drew a lower rating (8.8) for ABC's weekly NFL telecast.

Overnight ratings measure the nation's largest TV markets, covering a little more than 60 percent of the United States.

The national rating for the Cowboys-Titans game is expected to be released Wednesday afternoon.

DALLAS: Season ends in shutout loss

(From 1C)

The season came to a bitter end in Tennessee. It was the second time Dallas was shut out this season after being blanked only once in the previous 10.

The Cowboys trailed only 7-0 at halftime and had chances to be way ahead because of uncharacteristic mistakes by the Titans. Then Dallas began making turnovers in the second half and Tennessee cashed in.

"Very simply, we need to be better players or we're not going to be around," first-year coach Dave Campo said. "We want to remember this season and remember how it feels to be sitting here at 5-11. We don't want that to happen again, that's for sure."

The Cowboys are 29-35 since 1997. They've had three head coaches in those four years yet only two playoff games — both of them first-round losses.

This season, Dallas allowed the most rushing yards in franchise history (2,637) and failed to win consecutive games for just the fourth time in its 41 seasons.

Defense was the major problem the first half of the season, then it was the offense's turn. The Cowboys went through four quarterbacks and it's possible that the only ones returning will be Anthony Wright and Clint Stoerner, both of whom spent most of the year on the practice squad.

"We have to work awfully hard to avoid having this feeling at the end of next year," Campo said.

Bulldogs, Ags arrive for Indy Bowl

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — The Mississippi State and Texas A&M football teams arrived Tuesday and began practice for the Independence Bowl.

Bowl officials announced three weeks ago that the two 7-4 teams would meet in the 25th anniversary game Sunday at 7 p.m. Since then, there have been plenty of distractions: icy weather that knocked out power to thousands, the holidays, the presidential election mess.

Even now that the presents have been unwrapped, the votes counted and the power restored, the game itself will compete against some interesting story lines.

The biggest may be the ties between Aggies coach R.C. Slocum and the man he once worked for at A&M, Bulldogs coach Jackie Sherrill. Sherrill was the Aggies head coach from 1982-88 and he recommended that Slocum succeed him.

"Certainly with Jackie's ties to A&M and our friendship it should be an interesting matchup," Slocum said when the pairing was announced Dec. 3.

But that coaching matchup isn't the only attention grabber. Last week Mississippi State announced that cornerback Fred Smoot — one of the nation's best — is academically ineligible to compete in the I-Bowl. And earlier in the week, it was announced that former Homer High star Michael Mahan — a big contributor on the Aggies' offensive line — would not compete because of a heart condition that requires surgery and has likely ended his playing career.

BOWL: Garrard guides Pirates' ship

(From 1C)

balanced offense, led by junior quarterback David Garrard.

"It's going to be a big challenge," Garrard said. "We have to step up and play like it's our last game. It is the last game of the season but we've got to play like it's the last game you'll play in your life.

"We are kind of known as a slow-starting offense but we can't do that in this game. Once you put yourself in a hole it's hard to come out of it. We've had that happen to us this year."

Garrard, a solid all-around performer, completed 164 of 312 passes for 2,332 yards and 19 touchdowns this season and ranked 32nd nationally in passing efficiency. He was East Carolina's second leading rusher with 358 yards.

"The main thing is, don't let him get the big play on you," Tech defensive tackle Kris Kocurek said. "He's definitely a dangerous threat. He's been the heart and soul of their offense all season."

East Carolina's defense will also have a big problem with Tech's pass-oriented offense. Kingsbury was quick to grasp the offense Leach brought from Oklahoma that helped propel the Sooners into the national spotlight.

"We may come in with a different notion but the ball always ends up in the air about 50 times," Kingsbury said. "My arm's been tired since about the eighth game but you can't complain. Growing up, you dream of throwing that much."

Kingsbury, a sophomore, ranked eighth nationally in total offense at 286 yards per game and he led the Big 12 with 21 touchdown passes.

"We've seen Louisville and Tulane already, so we are ready for that type of game," Pirate safety Anthony Adams said. "We've gone against a bunch of good quarterbacks and we have seen (Kingsbury) on tape. But you cannot tell what is going to happen in a game off of tape. You have to just get out there and see."

DREAM: QB is having fun with offense

(From 1C)

Under the pass-oriented Leach system, the quarterback is required to make accurate, split-second decisions in addition to having a rifle attached to his shoulder.

There were three scholarship players, including Kingsbury, who returned at quarterback. Leach recruited another and brought in one more as a walk-on.

Kingsbury, who played at New Braunfels High School, emerged as the hope for the immediate future in a relatively short period.

"He took command of the offense quickly," Leach said, "and I think that certainly helped. We battled it out in the spring and Kliff did really good. But I feel we have several really good quarterbacks here.

"Kliff kind of took control, did a good job as far as reading and mastering the offense, got better each week."

There was never a doubt in Kingsbury's mind he wouldn't be the starter on opening day.

"I felt very confident. Ever since I came to Tech, I felt I was going to be the starter," he said. "It was just one of those deals where we had some great young quarterbacks and it was a good competition. But it's just fun to be the starter and I'm just trying to take advantage of it."

Kingsbury started all 12 games for the Red Raiders (7-5). Entering Wednesday's galleryfurniture.com Bowl, the 6-4, 200-pound sophomore ranks second in the Big 12 and eighth nationally in total offense at 286 yards per game.

He was first in the conference — better than Heupel — with 21 touchdown passes. Kingsbury passed for 3,418 yards.

When the Raiders went head-to-head with the Sooners, Kingsbury completed 41 of 61 passes for 295 yards and one touchdown, but threw two interceptions in the Raiders' season-ending 27-13 loss in Norman.

Against Kansas, Kingsbury was 32-of-48 for 405 yards and four touchdowns — all to senior receiver Derek Dorris — and didn't throw an interception.

And he was virtually unstoppable in the 38-16 win over Utah State in the season's second game. That night, Kingsbury found the mark on 34 of 48 passes for a school-record 456 yards and three touchdowns.

The Red Raiders started 4-0 before losing five of eight conference games. But it was when Big 12 play began that Kingsbury began feeling vulnerable.

A series of injuries had made the offensive line porous early on, and that left Kingsbury subject to a fierce pass rush.

"I think in conference they really started to improve," he said of his blockers. "It took everybody a little time to get on the same page.

"I thought once we hit conference, nobody really stopped us. We stopped ourselves a few times. But I think our offense really clicked pretty well."

Through the first two months of the season, Kingsbury was sacked 20 times, four by Kansas State. He never wavered.

"Any time you're going to throw that much, I'll take all the hits they're going to bring," Kingsbury said. "It's so much fun being in this offense and being able to throw that many times.

"It's (being sacked) just part of the job, comes with the territory. But the offensive line has really improved a lot."

As joyful as it has been, Kingsbury said the past few days in Houston have been a ball.

Saints fans long-suffering but loyal to football team

By Mary Foster
AP Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS — In the New Orleans Saints' Hall of Fame are tributes to players, memorabilia of Tom Dempsey's record-setting field goal, and one of the original paper bags shame-faced fans once wore to games.

The Saints, one of the worst teams in NFL history, with a hall of fame? The Saints, a team with just six winning seasons, including this one, in 34 years? A team that qualified for the playoffs only five times, including this season?

"The Saints aren't a team a lot of people would associate with a hall of fame," said Ken Trahan, general manager of the facility. "But New Orleans fans have had a longtime love affair with the team."

The Saints' hall of fame is 3,500 square feet, except for four months of the year when an atrium area is used for displays that boost it to 7,500. Either way, it's much smaller than the Green Bay Packers' 20,000-square-foot building — the only other team-operated facility.

That's not the only difference. The Packers' hall, opened in 1976 with tributes to coach Vince Lombardi and three Super Bowl championship teams, averages about 50,000 visitors per year. The facility in New Orleans, opened in 1988, draws 21,000 annually without offering so much glory.

"It's amazing how much feeling people have for this team," Trahan said. "We celebrate that feeling, with all its ups and downs."

There are busts of Archie Manning and Ricky Jackson, the original shoe Dempsey wore and the ball he kicked 63 yards to set an NFL record in 1969. The $7 million agreement signed by John Mecom when he purchased the expansion franchise in 1967 also is on display.

And there's the football John Gilliam caught on the opening kickoff of the first game the Saints played and returned 94 yards for a touchdown.

It took 20 years after that run, however, for the Saints to record their first winning season, which explains why the timeline depicting Saints history is divided into decades labeled — "When the Saints go Marching In," "When the sun Refused to Shine," and the third, "Lord, I want to be in that Number."

"You've got to admit that we have more unique things in this hall than most halls of fame," said Joe Washington, 67, who visits each year with his grandchildren. "I don't think we'd have survived this if we hadn't had some laughs along the way."

There are pictures of Ricky Williams running and wearing a wedding dress. shots of former quarterback Jim Everett on the field, and attacking sportscaster Jim Rome.

There are pictures of the elaborate halftime shows the Saints used to stage, ostrich races and parachute landings. The shows ended after a cannon blast blew off the hand of a participant.

There is an exhibit holding the first kicking shoe Morten Andersen wore. It shows little wear because Andersen hated it and wore it for just one game.

In the Saints' hall you can learn about the "World's longest Boo." The sound of disgust was so loud that the New Orleans offense couldn't hear the signals and became one of the few home-teams — if not the only one — to get a delay of game penalty because their fans wouldn't quiet down when they had the ball.

Perhaps the most popular display, however, is a simple white bag with eye holes cut in it, a gold tear drop below one, and the word "Aints" written across the top.

The bag was designed by a local bartender in 1980, when the Saints were going 1-15. It was designed to let diehards attend the game without the shame of being recognized

"People are amazed that we have it on display," Trahan said. "But it's part of the history of the team."

Also memorialized are the Saints' previous playoff trips, four games that capped the best seasons in franchise history with bitterness as New Orleans lost in the first round each time. Trahan will update the display after the Saints play the Rams on Saturday in the wild-card game. He hopes it will be a new theme.

Will Leaf hang on with Chargers?

By Bernie Wilson
AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO — The Ryan Leaf watch has begun.

Will the embattled San Diego Chargers quarterback stay, or will he go?

That's the biggest of the many offseason questions facing the San Diego Chargers, who will spend the next few months sifting through the considerable wreckage of a 1-15 season.

Leaf punctuated the Chargers' awful season when he fumbled away their final snap in Sunday's 34-21 loss to Pittsburgh. It was the last of San Diego's NFL-high 50 turnovers, and many wondered if it was the last time Leaf would be in a Chargers uniform.

The coming months will be key, as the Chargers look to see if Leaf commits more energy to offseason workouts than he does to his golf game. At the same time, the Chargers will decide how to use the first overall pick in April's draft, the byproduct of the worst season in the franchise's 41-year history.

"If Ryan Leaf is going to be our starting quarterback next year, then it's absolutely necessary that he has a great offseason," coach Mike Riley said Tuesday. "He's got to have a great personal plan. I'm a believer in one thing, that you make a personal choice to be good."

For instance, Riley said he doesn't have to try to motivate 10-time Pro Bowl linebacker Junior Seau, who always goes above and beyond.

But Leaf is different. He blew off workouts after his rookie season to play in a charity golf tournament. Last spring, he disappeared for a month after fullback Fred McCrary called him fat and out of shape.

This season, Leaf caused a distraction when it became public he played golf while telling the team his sprained right wrist was still too sore to practice or play.

"We'll give him every program, everything in the world to provide that," Riley said. "But it still comes down to a personal choice. I do think this last part of the season kind of gives him some hope. I think he's seen enough that he believes he can be that guy, which I think could be motivating."

After missing five games with the sprained wrist, Leaf started the final six games, which some viewed as a final audition. His play was alternately good and bad, and it became clear during the last week of the season he still hasn't won back his teammates' respect, which he lost as a bratty rookie in 1998.

There's been speculation the Chargers will trade or cut Leaf to rid themselves of the distraction. But Riley said he anticipates Leaf will be back, although the Chargers will bring in another veteran quarterback to compete for the starting job.

After Sunday's loss to Pittsburgh brought the season to a merciful end, McCrary declined comment on whether Leaf should be brought back.

"I'm going to leave it up to management," he said. "Whatever they chose to do, I'm behind them 100 percent. If he's here, though, I want him to pay the price just like everybody else. I think if he pays the price, he'll be a damn good quarterback.

"You know, this is his job," McCrary said. "I don't know if he really approaches it that way. Hopefully he approaches it that way this offseason. I'm wishing all the best for him, I really am."

Leaf avoided reporters after Sunday's game, dressing in a room that's off-limits to the media and then slipping out a back door.

Leaf, the second pick overall in 1998 behind Peyton Manning, is 4-14 as a starter, including 1-8 this year. He's thrown just 13 touchdown passes while committing 42 turnovers, including 33 interceptions.

Colts ready to play Miami yet again

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Officially, the NFL playoffs start Saturday.

For the Indianapolis Colts, they might as well have started three weeks ago. One loss over that span would have sent them home until next season.

But three straight victories, including a 31-10 season-ending win over Minnesota, clinched a wild-card spot and the AFC's No. 6 seed. Now the Colts head to Miami with momentum and rediscovered confidence.

"It's more important to be hot, and last year we weren't hot. Right now, we're on a little bit of a roll," quarterback Peyton Manning said. "We have a lot of momentum. We've beaten three very good football teams in some tough situations."

The Colts also beat Buffalo in a Monday Night game and then beat the Dolphins in Miami before their victory over the Vikings.

"They were all must-win situations," Manning said. "I can only compare it to last year, when we didn't have a whole lot of momentum going into the playoffs."

The Colts went 13-3 last year but lost their final regular-season game at Buffalo before a 19-16 loss to Tennessee in an AFC divisional game.

Tight end Marcus Pollard, one of six Colts with 40 or more receptions this season, agreed that it's a lot better to end the season with a victory.

"We kind of fizzled out toward the end," he said of last season. "This year, we had to come in through the back door. A lot of people were kicking dirt on us, and weren't giving us a chance. Now there's a new chance. It seems like a lot better feeling."

Although Indiana does not have a home-field advantage in the playoffs this year, their bid for the Super Bowl will begin in Miami's Pro Player Stadium, where they have beaten the Dolphins the past two times.

But Manning, the fifth quarterback in NFL history to throw for 4,000 yards in consecutive seasons, said it's harder to win on the road in the postseason.

"I don't know if comfortable is the word. The last time we played down there, it was extremely loud, as loud as I've heard in a long time," he said.

"It's going to be a tremendous atmosphere. I don't think it's going to be a situation of home or away. It's just making plays, or not making plays."

DAVIS: Tackle rated best by Kiper

that had fewer than 150 students.

As a freshman at Texas, Davis started three games as a defensive tackle in 1997. He switched to offense when Brown took over the program before the 1998 season and helped block for Heisman Trophy winner Ricky Williams.

But the transformation from tackler to devastating blocker didn't happen overnight.

There were times this season and last when Brown scolded his players about being physical and not wasting all that size. Texas struggled early running the ball and the mountainous offensive line was not moving anybody out of the way.

"He's come a million miles," since Davis switched to offense Brown said. "(Now) he's the best offensive lineman that we've ever coached."

Davis believes h worthy of such praise. But with his aw-shucks grin that softens his tough guy look, he never seems cocky.

"I think I played excellent this year," Davis said. "The mental aspect of my game is much better. This year, I can draw up defensive schemes in my head and know what the other guys are going to do."

And the accolades keep coming. Twice a finalist for the Outland Trophy given to the nation's best college lineman, Davis is rated by NFL draft analyst Mel Kiper Jr. as the best offensive tackle in ne t April's draft.

When he wasn't opening holes for running backs, Davis was protecting his quarterbacks. Texas coaches say Davis didn't give up a sack all season.

That aspect will be tested by Oregon's Saul Patu, one of the Pac-10's best pass rushers who has 11 sacks and 19 tackles for losses.

Even Brown is excited about the potential battle between two great players.

"Saul is as good of a defensive lineman as we've played this year," Brown said. "It'll be a great matchup. I'll watch it afterward on film."

Heating oil up

NEW YORK — Forecasts for freezing weather sent heating oil futures soaring at the New York Mercantile Exchange Tuesday, and crude oil and gasoline futures followed, analysts said.

Heating oil for January delivery rose 5.7 cents to 93.50 cents a gallon, February crude oil gained 46 cents to $26.64 per barrel and January unleaded gasoline picked up 1:95 cent to 76.04 cents a gallon.

Ice storms, bitter wind chills and snow continued in much of the nation while in the Eastern third of the country, frigid weather was predicted to worsen.

High temperatures were expected to reach the single digits in New England; the teens in the Midwest; 20s across the Rockies, Ohio Valley and the Great Lakes; and 30s in the mid-Atlantic.

Soaring natural gas futures, which hit a fresh record at an intraday high of $9.95 per 1,000 cubic feet Tuesday, also lent support. Natural gas for January delivery finished up 22.6 cents at $9.805 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Shares of oilfield-services and equipment companies also traded higher Tuesday. The Oil Service Index was up more than 6 percent. Higher oil and gas prices generally mean exploration and production companies spend more money drilling and help the services sector boost earnings.

Also Tuesday, talk of a production cutback underpinned the oil complex. Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries President Ali Rodriguez joined other members in calling for the group to cut output. Rodriguez said cuts could take effect as early as Jan. 8 if oil prices stay below $22 per barrel until then.

On Thursday, OPEC's price basket fell to $21.64 a barrel — its lowest level since April 11 — starting the clock on the ten trading days before a production cut.

Euro rallies

LONDON — The euro continued to rise against the dollar in thin trading Tuesday, flirting with the 93 cents level, while the U.S. dollar was mixed against other major currencies in European trading Tuesday.

The euro was quoted at 92.88 cents in late European trading, up from 92.61 cents. Later, in midday trading in New York, the euro traded at 92.92 cents.

Other dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Friday, included 113.57 Japanese yen, up from 112.85; 1.6342 Swiss francs, down from 1.6440; 1.5110 Canadian dollars, down from 1.5183.

In midday trading in New York, the dollar bought 113.60 yen, and the pound was worth $1.4784.

Based on euro rates, the dollar is worth 2.1046 German marks, down from 2.1105; 7.0586 French francs, down from 7.0784; 2.3714 Dutch guilders, down from 2.3780; 2083.58 Italian lire, down from 2089.42.

Stocks mixed in light trading

By Lisa Singhania
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Wall Street's Christmas optimism faded Tuesday as investors returned to their pattern of unloading tech stocks and shifting money into blue chips.

After sending stocks soaring in a brief holiday rally on Friday, investors retreated amid corporate earnings worries and profit-taking. Tech stocks fell and so-called old economy issues rose modestly in light trading as many investors took the week before New Year's off.

Analysts were glum about prospects for the last week of 2000.

"We're still very unsure of technology stocks going into the end of the year," said Brian Belski, a market strategist with US Bancorp Piper Jaffray. "But you can't really count today's activity as a definable trend because trading volume was really light and a lot of the players weren't there."

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 56.88 to 10,692.44.

Broader measures were mixed. The Nasdaq composite index slipped 23.50 to 2,493.52 and the Standard & Poor's 500 index rose 9.22 to 1,315.19.

"You have little impetus for any gains today or this week. We're probably not going to get an interest rate cut this week," said Barry Hyman, chief investment strategist with Weatherly Securities. "In the absence of that type of news, the market's going to err on the downside."

Shares of Yahoo! rose $1.63 to $31.19 on reports its shopping order volume nearly doubled during the holiday period.

But other tech losses offset those gains. Ciena fell $2.81 to $74.19, as did Cisco, off 75 cents at $40.75. IBM dropped $4.19 to $84.81.

Non-tech issues fared better. Banker J.P. Morgan rose $1.13 to $169, while fellow Dow component Coca-Cola was up $1.13 at $60.

Pharmaceuticals, a popular investment in times of economic uncertainty, also advanced. Pfizer rose 31 cents to $44.69 and Merck was up $2.19 at $92.63.

Although earnings worries and concerns the economy is slowing have sent the market lower since Labor Day, stocks were able to break the downward momentum on Friday, when bargain hunters sent tech and blue chip issues soaring in one of Wall Street's strongest performances this month.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners Tuesday nearly 5 to 3 on the New York Stock Exchange. Consolidated volume came to 1.01 billion shares, down considerably from Friday's 1.32 billion.

The Russell 2000 index was up 3.64 at 466.63.

Overseas, Japan's Nikkei stock average rose 0.5 percent. Germany's DAX index was gained 0.8 percent, Britain's FT-SE 100 slipped nearly 0.3 percent, and France's CAC-40 rose 0.4 percent.

Stores trying to salvage disappointing Christmas

By Anne D'Innecenzio

No sooner did Christmas end than shoppers were back at the nation's malls Tuesday, with many stores hoping to salvage what has been a disappointing season.

The weekend's sales were strong but were not enough to offset the sales slump for most of the month.

Already, Federated Department Stores, Wal-Mart and the jeweler Zale Corp. warned Tuesday that revenue for December will fall below expectations.

The bigger question is what the weaker-than-expected Christmas will mean for economy. Consumer spending accounts for about two-thirds of the nation's economic activity, and holiday sales typically represent 25 percent of retailers' annual sales.

"A weak Christmas is a precursor of next year's economic performance," said Michael Niemera, vice president of the Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi Ltd., who on Tuesday reduced his holiday sales forecast to a 3.5 increase, from 4 percent.

He added: "I think we are going to see more problems ahead for 2001, with store closings and liquidations."

Many stores are pinning their hopes on after-Christmas shoppers.

Suzanne Mulvaney of Pittsburgh was digging through sets of sheets in a clearance bin marked 50 percent off at Kaufmanns, which was packed with post-Christmas shoppers.

"I'm here for bargains," she said. "I come here all the time, not just the week after Christmas. But the prices get much better and it's worth getting through the crowds."

The traffic in many malls was lighter than expected on Tuesday, but John Konarski, vice president of research at The International Council of Shopping Centers, said he expects it will pick up. Sales generated this week could help stores make their revenue goals, he said.

The seven days after Christmas could account anywhere from 11 percent to 15 percent of holiday sales, according to analysts.

Stores have been hurt high gasoline prices, stock market volatility and an overall economic slowdown, which have dampened spending by shoppers.

Such worries are even putting a damper on post-holiday bargain buying for Deborah Sparks, 29, from Mechanicsville, Va., who was checking out a microwave marked down to $49 at Sears.

"I'm kind of not spending that much. Usually I would go down there and buy all those Christmas ornaments that they have done there," she said.

Online sales have turned out to be disappointing as well. Shoppers spent $5.29 billion via the Internet, excluding travel, from Nov. 24 through Sunday, according to BizRate.com, a research company. That is a 58 percent increase f om a year ago — well short of the projected 80 percen gain.

Slow-and-steady investment clubs feeling vindicated

NEW YORK (AP) — Invest regularly in growth companies. Buy and hold. Reinvest dividends and capital gains. Diversify.

Yawn.

During the 1990s boom on Wall Street, when many people were chasing double- and even triple-digit gains, investment clubs and their slow-and-steady-wins-the-race philosophy were considered pretty dull and timid.

But now, with the Nasdaq looking at its worst year ever, the investment clubs are feeling vindicated.

And so what if their returns are modest compared with those of those few lucky investors who managed to time the rise and fall of the hot stocks?

The technology-heavy Nasdaq composite index has skidded about 40 percent this year, and the overall market has turned bearish.

And yet, the National Association of Investors Corp., the investment clubs' national organization, is bragging that its Top 100 index has most major market indexes beat for 2000. The index, which NAIC boasts has a five-year annualized return of 22.7 percent as of Nov. 30, is made up of the stocks most widely held by clubs, including PepsiCo, Home Depot and Microsoft.

NAIC cannot help but gloat a little, declaring on its Web site: "Aesop was right. You may have to squint to see it, but our tortoise is clearly beaming."

For 49 years, the Madison Heights, Mich.-based NAIC has espoused buying stocks of companies poised for growth and then holding onto those shares for the long term.

Many investment clubs shunned high-tech companies and hot dot-com start-ups that traded at 30, 50, even 100 times their earnings. They stuck to their principles and focused on blue chip stocks, which are considered safer.

And now they say they are being rewarded.

Texas company fined by OSHA

TYLER (AP) — The Occupational Safety and Health Administration on Tuesday fined a Tyler-based iron foundry more than $1 million for safety and health violations that led to the death of a mechanic at the facility.

OSHA officials said they fined Tyler Pipe Co. $1,015,000 for 17 safety and health violations following a June 29 accident that occurred when a worker doing maintenance was pulled into a conveyor belt and killed.

OSHA investigators said the company broke safety rules when the unidentified worker was alone while the conveyor machinery was turned on. The agency also said the employee was working without a required permit.

The company, which employs about 1,600 workers, has 15 working days to contest the fine. Telephone calls to Tyler Pipe Co. seeking comment were not immediately returned to The Associated Press.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Are high-yielding stocks too good to be true?

By Eric Tyson

Tyson

Q: I came across a stock (a real estate partnership company) that is yielding 20 percent, which seems ridiculous. I am looking for high-income stocks for a relative who is nearing retirement age and has almost nothing saved. She needs very little money to live on, and I am researching income-generating investments. She is only 61, which gives us a long-term horizon, and I will be using my own money. Any suggestions?

A: You are right to look skeptically at a 20 percent dividend yield on a stock. Typically, such a high dividend yield is indicative of a company with a depressed stock price and financial position that might soon need to cut its dividend, or a firm which might be boosting its dividend yield by distributing back some investment principal to shareholders.

Real estate company stocks have had relatively high dividend yields in recent years, but most have had yields of 10 percent or slightly less. Real estate stocks, unlike most of the rest of the U.S. stock market, have enjoyed good returns this year as investors have shunned overpriced growth stocks in favor of those stocks offering good value.

I think you should purchase diversified mutual funds that meet your investment objectives and not mess around with the hassle and risk of picking individual securities. Among income-generating fund types worth considering are value stock funds, real estate stock funds and various types of bond funds (be sure to choose those suited to your tax situation).

Q: I know you are a believer of no-load mutual funds and have mentioned on several occasions that you like Vanguard and T. Rowe Price. I presume that when you mention DLJ Direct, Muriel Siebert and TD Waterhouse that you are speaking of discount brokerag e firms, as I am not familiar with any of them. I have for several years been with American Funds and either ICA or Washington Mutual within that family of funds. I am most disappointed with the performance of Washington Mutual over the past 10 months. W hat is your opinion?

A: Washington Mutual is a stock fund that generally invests in larger-company, so-called value stocks. Year-to-date, it's actually performing a little better than its peer group after a disappointing relative performance in 1999, when it underperformed i ts peers by more than 5 percentage points.

ICA has a similar investment approach but has a better performance track record than Washington Mutual, especially in recent years. ICA also has a reasonable annual operating expense ratio of 0.55 percent, slightly below Washington Mutual's 0.63 percent.

Both of these funds, like the others in the American family of funds, are load funds that levy a 5.75 percent commission on your purchases. For every $10,000 investment, that translates into $575 coming out of your money for commissions.

You can buy no-load mutual funds directly from companies such as T. Rowe Price and Vanguard or through the discount brokers you mentioned. I suggest that you learn how to do that and gain access to better investment choices.

Meal with a Mexican flair

Football fiesta

Watching college bowl games is the perfect excuse to throw a party and the food is often the best part of watching the games. With this in mind, here is a simple, yet flavorful menu with a Mexican flair. Since the whole nine yards can be prepared in about an hour you won't miss any of the action.

To satisfy pregame munchies, start with a creamy olive dip topped with shredded parmesan cheese and served with corn tortilla chips and a tray of assorted fresh vegetables. Everyone will also cheer for the light and tangy flavors in the Tequila and Lime Fruit Salad. It's quick to prepare and refreshingly different.

You're sure to score big with chili as a main dish. This crowd-pleasing recipe gains a fresh outlook with the addition of spicy sausage, tender black beans and the smoky, intriguing flavors of chipotle chiles. Use salsa, made from fire-roasted tomatillos and chipotle chiles, for a time-saving base. Mexican blend shredded cheese offers a combination of tangy Cheddar, buttery Monterey Jack, authentic sharp Asadero and creamy melting Queso Quesadilla.

Few hungry armchair quarterbacks will be able to resist a well-made submarine sandwich, so here's a takeoff on the torta, a Mexican street snack. Traditionally constructed on a crusty, torpedo-shaped individual roll, a 2-foot loaf of French bread can be used instead. Layer on sliced cheese, roast beef, spicy arugula and rich avocado. The giant torta can be made in advance, allowing all the flavors to come together.

Remember, no matter whose team wins or loses — it's what you serve at halftime that guests will remember.

Recipes courtesy of chef Rick Bayless, owner of Frontera Grill and Topolobampo in Chicago. He is also host of a 26-part PBSseries "Mexico — One Plate at a Time."

Fiesta tips

■ Rethink the run-of-the-mill choices on a fresh vegetable platter. Slices of peeled jícama, sweet red bell pepper, inner spears of Romaine and licorice flavored fennel will please the eye as well as the palate.

■ Turn ordinary chocolate cake into a unique Mexican treat. First, frost your favorite 13- by 9-inch chocolate layer cake with a cream cheese frosting (idea: use equal parts soft cream cheese and soft unsalted butter beaten together with a little fresh lemon juice and powdered sugar to sweeten). Then sprinkle with a generous amount of finely chopped Mexican chocolate (available in the ethnic food section of most large grocery stores) or chopped semi-sweet chocolate mixed with some finely chopped almonds and a little ground cinnamon.

TEQUILA AND LIME FRUIT SALAD

No fumbles here: fruit salad is easy to prepare.

Preparation time: 5 minutes for dressing, 15 minutes for fruit
Serves: 6

1 ripe pineapple
2 pints fresh strawberries, hulled, halved
2 cups green seedless grapes
2 to 3 tablespoons tequila
1 to 2 tablespoons fresh lime uice
1/4 to 1/2 teaspoon sugar

1. Peel and core pineapple; quarter lengthwise and cut each quarter into 1/2-inch-thick slices.

2. Combine pineapple wedges, strawberries and grapes in a large bowl.

3. Combine tequila, lime juice and sugar; drizzle over fruit. Refrigerate up to 2 hours. Garnish with lime slices, if desired.

ROAST BEEF TORTA

This is a Mexican version of the traditional submarine sandwich.

Preparation time: 20 minutes
Serves: 6

3/4 cup mayonnaise
1 to 1 1/2 tablespoon hot sauce
1/4 cup cilantro, chopped
1 long loaf (16 oz.) French bread, cut in half horizontally
1 pound thinly sliced medium-rare roast beef
Salt to taste
1 package (5 ounces) deli-style sliced Monterey Jack cheese, Swiss or provolone cheese
1/2 bunch arugula, watercress or leaf lettuce leaves, rinsed and patted dry
1 large ripe avocado, peeled, pitted and thinly sliced

1. Combine the mayonnaise, hot sauce and cilantro in small bowl.

2. Hollow out some of the interior of bread with fingertips. Generously spread spicy mayonnaise mixture on both cut sides of the bread.

3. Layer the roast beef over the bottom half of the bread. Sprinkle lightly with salt. Top with sliced cheese, arugula leaves and avocado slices. Sprinkle lightly with salt. Place top half of bread in place and press lightly to close sandwich. Cut into 2- to 3-inch portions and serve.

Cinnamon, chocolate add to aroma of baked treats

From Staff Reports

There's no better aroma than bread or treats baking in the oven. Treat family and friends to Cinnamon Swirl Crisps, an out-of-the ordinary creation, or Chocolate Kifle [pronounced KEE-full], a centuries-old Eastern European classic.

The Czechs call it kifle; Austria-Hungarians call it regelach, Germans call it schnecken. Whatever you call it, these cookies are delicious. Devotees claim that kifle was invented in 1683 and is the predecessor to the croissant. Kifle is a rich cookie, made with butter and sour cream and topped with powdered sugar. But it wouldn't be kifle without a center of tangy fruit or rich chocolate.

Cinnamon Swirl Crisps are formed of thin dough strips that gives them a crispness, or "snappy-ness," highly unusual for yeast-risen creations. And their ornate "C" shape entices the eye. Some will chomp their Cinnamon Swirl Crisps from the sides, while others will methodically uncurl and savor the cinnamon- and sugar-coated ropes.

CINNAMON SWIRL CRISPS

Ingredients
4 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
1 envelope rapid-rise yeast
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup butter or margarine
1/2 cup evaporated milk
1/2 cup water
2 eggs, large
1/2 teaspoon almond extract

Cinnamon Swirl Crisps

1/4 cup butter or margarine, melted
Cinnamon Filling (recipe follows)

In a large bowl, combine 1 1/2 cups flour, undissolved yeast, and salt. Heat 1 cup butter, milk, and water until very warm (120° to 130°F). Gradually add to dry ingredients. Beat 2 minutes at medium speed of electric mixer, scraping bowl occasionally. Add eggs, almond extract, and 1/2 cup flour. Beat 2 minutes at high speed. Stir in remaining flour to make a stiff batter. Cover tightly with plastic wrap; refrigerate for 2 hours.

Divide dough in half; returning half to refrigerator. Roll remaining dough to 12-inch square using 1/2 cup of cinnamon filling instead of flour on surface. Brush with melted butter; sprinkle with 1/2 cup of cinnamon filling. Roll opposite ends, as for jelly roll, to the center of square, making 2 parallel connected rolls. Cut double roll into 12 equal pieces. Place cut side down on greased baking sheets. Flatten to 1/4-inch thickness. Brush with melted butter. Repeat with remaining dough and cinnamon filling.

Bake at 375°F for 18 to 20 minutes or until lightly browned. Remove to wire rack to cool.

Cinnamon Filling: In a bowl, combine 2 cups sugar and 2 teaspoons ground cinnamon. Stir to blend.

* To maintain freshness, store completely cooled cookies in airtight containers or re-sealable freezer bags and freeze for up to 1 month. Thaw for 1 hour before serving.

* Baking tip: To attain a uniform thickness of cookies, flatten by rolling a lightly-floured rolling pin across the cut cookies which have already been placed on greased baking sheets.

Ingredients
2 1/4 cups all-purpose flour
1 envelope rapid-rise yeast
1/2 cup sour cream
1/2 cup butter or margarine
2 tablespoons water
2 egg yolks (reserve whites for filling)
1/2 cup granulated sugar
Chocolate-Nut Filling (recipe follows)
1/4 cup powdered sugar

In a large bowl, combine 2/3 cup flour and undissolved yeast. Heat sour cream, butter, and water until very warm (120° to 130°F). Gradually add to dry ingredients. Beat 2 minutes at medium speed of electric mixer, scraping bowl occasionally. Add egg yolks and 1/2 cup flour. Beat 2 minutes at high speed, scraping bowl occasionally. FAMILY HAMBURGER SOUP

2 pounds ground beef
2 tablespoons olive oil or salad oil
1/3 cup dried split peas
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon each pepper, oregano leaves and basil leaves
1/8 teaspoon seasoned salt
1 package onion soup mix
6 cups boiling water
1 can (8 ounces) tomato sauce
1 tablespoon soy sauce
1 cup thinly sliced celery
1/4 cup celery leaves, torn in pieces
1 cup thinly sliced carrots
1 cup elbow macaroni
Freshly grated Parmesan cheese

In a large saucepan or kettle with a tight-fitting lid, brown meat in oil over medium-high heat. Discard any fat. Add split peas, salt, pepper, oregano, basil, seasoned salt and onion soup mix. Stir in boiling water, tomato sauce and soy sauce. Cover and simmer for about 25 minutes.

Meanwhile, prepare celery, celery leaves and carrots. Add vegetables to simmering mixture and continue to cook, covered, for 15 minutes longer.

Add macaroni, cover and cook 12 to 15 minutes or until macaroni is tender.

Pass grated Parmesan cheese to be sprinkled over individual servings.

Makes 6 to 8 servings.

SPIFFY HAMBURGER HASH

3 tablespoons salad oil
1 pound ground beef
1/2 medium onion, chopped
Dash of pepper
1/4 cup soy sauce
2 cups shredded raw potato

Heat oil in large frying pan over medium-high heat. Crumble in the beef, add onion and cook until beef is well browned. Stir in pepper and soy sauce.

Mound potatoes over meat, cover pan, turn heat to medium-low and cook for 20 to 25 minutes, stirring occasionally from the bottom.

You can serve the hash at this point, but the potatoes will not be crisp. If you prefer crisp potatoes, remove the cover after 20 minutes of cooking and continue to cook, stirring until potatoes brown slightly.

Makes 4 servings.

STUFFED MEATLOAF WITH MUSHROOMS

1/2 pound medium mushrooms, sliced
1 large onion, chopped
1/2 cup finely sliced celery
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
3/4 cup tomato juice, divided use
1 1/2 slices firm white bread
1 1/2 teaspoon salt, divided use
1/8 teaspoon pepper
2 pounds ground beef
2 eggs

In a frying pan over medium-high heat, saute mushrooms, onion and celery in butter until vegetables are limp. Add 1/2 cup of the tomato juice and simmer for 10 minutes.

Break the bread into small pieces and whirl in a blender to make about 1 cup of fine crumbs. Mix crumbs, pepper and 1/2 teaspoon of the salt into the vegetable mixture; set aside.

Mix beef with remaining salt, remaining tomato juice and two eggs. Shape the meat into a loaf and place in a greased baking pan.

With a spoon, scoop out a layer of meat from the center of the loaf to make a lengthwise cavity. Evenly distribute the vegetable mixture in the cavity and pat the scooped out meat over the stuffing to completely enclose it with meat.

Bake, uncovered, at 350 degrees for 1 hour and 15 minutes, or until well browned.

Makes about 8 servings.

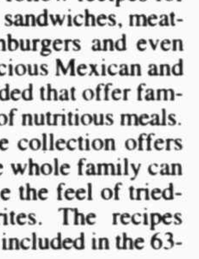
DEAR ABBY

Humor makes anything possible

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In the continuing saga of how men are different from women, let me share this with you.

Peter, my significant other, was involved in a men's counseling group. One of the topics about which they were to report back during their next meeting was "What Women Want From Men in Their Relationships." Members of the group discussed reading the "Women Seeking Men" personal ads to get a better understanding of what women want. (Pretty ingenious if you think about it!)



Van Buren

I told Peter he should do some home study and ask me. I explained that women need to feel loved, wanted, beautiful and needed by their partner. I was in the only bathroom of our home putting the finishing touches on my face, and I asked Peter if he thought he had recently met these qualities in our relationship.

His clever reply was: "I LOVED you last night. I WANTED you to make coffee this morning. You look BEAUTIFUL today — and I NEED you to get out of the bathroom RIGHT NOW!"

May I add that one important quality women need from men in a relationship is HUMOR. Humor makes anything possible — and I thank the Lord that my darling has it in abundance. — SUSAN IN SANTA FE, N.M.

DEAR SUSAN: Peter got his message across, so he is a skilled communicator. And because he's in a counseling group, it's apparent he's interested in personal growth. I think you've found a "keeper."

DEAR ABBY: My 10-year-old daughter, "Amber," stays home one or two hours by herself after school until I return home from work. She has rules to go by; however, she has been known to break them.

Amber answers the door when she shouldn't and leaves the door unlocked. She doesn't take seriously the bad things that can happen to her.

I have an idea that may put her in touch with reality. I'm thinking of asking a male friend to go to my house and knock on the door — which I know Amber will answer. At that time, my friend would pretend to be a pushy salesman. He would insist on coming into the house and waiting for her mother. That's as far as I've gotten.

Is this a bad idea? I don't want to scare her into having nightmares, but I want her to know how important it is to be wary of strangers and to follow the rules. — CONCERNED KNOXVILLE MOM

DEAR CONCERNED: Yes, it's a bad idea. I know it's tempting, but such a ruse would be dishonest and potentially traumatizing. When your daughter discovers you play "tricks," it might give her a false sense of security. Also, your credibility would be damaged for years to come, and your daughter would always wonder what kind of trick you would pull next — and I wouldn't blame her.

DEAR ABBY: If you think your husband is cheating with another woman, do you think it's all right for the wife to ask the woman if she's having an affair with her husband? — WIFE OF A WANDERING HUSBAND

DEAR WIFE: Absolutely. And who knows? She may be delighted to give you chapter and verse.

Georgia hires FSU assistant Richt as new football coach

By Paul Newberry
AP Sports Writer

ATHENS, Ga. — Florida State offensive coordinator Mark Richt was picked Tuesday as the new coach at Georgia, which fired Jim Donnan despite four straight bowl victories.

Richt, who is accepting his first head coaching job, was introduced at a news conference accompanied by his wife and four children — all wearing recently purchased outfits in the Bulldogs' red and black. A 1982 graduate of Miami, Richt has been on Bobby Bowden's staff at Florida State for 15 seasons, with a one-year break in 1989 when he served as East Carolina's offensive coordinator.

"I've been slow and particular about wanting to leave," Richt said. "I knew if I left, it would have to be a place where I could spend the rest of my life.

"It's not only a perfect place to raise a family, it's a place where you can win at the highest level."

Richt, 40, has been the Seminoles' offensive coordinator for seven years, directing some of the nation's highest-scoring teams. He also has spent 14 years as quarterback coach, sending five players to the NFL and working with Heisman Trophy winners Charlie Ward and Chris Weinke.

Richt will remain the Seminoles' offensive coordinator through the Orange Bowl — a national championship matchup against Oklahoma Jan. 3. He indicated he will try to do some recruiting for Georgia at night by telephone while in Miami.

"It's been a great pleasure having him on our staff," Bowden said in a written statement. "He and his family have been role models for our players and fans. We will miss them very much, but wish them well at Georgia."

Georgia athletic director Vince Dooley and university president Michael Adams conducted the search. They chose Richt after also interviewing two NFL assistant coaches: Green Bay Packers receivers coach Ray Sherman and Miami Dolphins offensive coordinator Chan Gailey.

Dooley also talked with Southern Mississippi coach Jeff Bower. Donnan was fired despite a 40-19 record, which included a 37-14 victory over Virginia in the Oahu Bowl on Sunday.

Georgia (8-4) notched four consecutive bowl victories for the first time in school history. For the first time since the early 1980s, the Bulldogs had eight or more wins four seasons in a row.

Pointing to that record, Donnan criticized the school for ousting him.

"I think that's going to hurt Georgia in the long run," he said after the Oahu Bowl. "I never dreamed this would happen, but it happened. I'm not going to slit my throat over it. ... But I'm not sure what it says about Georgia."

At the very least, it says the next coach had better take care of business against the Bulldogs' biggest rivals. Donnan's 6-14 record against Florida, Tennessee, Auburn and Georgia Tech was a sore spot for Georgia fans.

Donnan also took some parting shots at Adams, believing he was responsible for his firing. Dooley admitted that he wanted to give Donnan another season.

"I don't feel any vindication," Donnan said. "I've been humiliated publicly by one man, who didn't even discuss the problems he had with me. As far as fund-raising, I had to be one of the best they've had here. I think I'm respected as a coach nationally."

Richt also was reported to be one of the top candidates for the Virginia job, though athletics director Terry Holland denied that he made an offer. Just a week ago Dooley expressed concern about having a coach in place by the first on-campus recruiting weekend, Jan. 12-14.

Georgia receiver Terrence Edwards, MVP of the Oahu Bowl, said the Bulldogs will embrace their new coach.

"Coach Donnan is like a father to me, but I signed with the University of Georgia and that's who I play for," Edwards said. "Whatever the new coach wants me to do, I'll do it."

Houston's BFI will carry out trash for Salt Lake Olympics

By Robert Gehrke
Associated Press Writer

SALT LAKE CITY — They've done more Olympic cleanup than organizer Mitt Romney and the U.S. Justice Department combined, and they'll do a lot more of it during the 2002 Winter Games.

Browning-Ferris Industries Inc., which handled waste disposal for Atlanta's 1996 Olympics, won a contract to haul trash from Salt Lake's Olympic Village and already serves some venues. In a sweeping, tourist-driven event like the Olympics, garbage collection goes almost unnoticed, and that's fine with BFI.

"If you never hear about the trash and you never see it, then we've done our job," said Chad Hardy, BFI general manager for Utah and Wyoming.

BFI was awarded the Olympic village contract by the Salt Lake Organizing Committee and plans to bid on disposal contracts at Olympic venues.Keeping the miniature Olympic city clean won't be an easy job with tight security.

"It's basically a reverse prison," Hardy said of the Olympic Village. "In prison they're trying to keep everybody in. In the village they're trying to keep everybody out."

BFI's big blue trucks already haul trash from most of the Olympic venues, including the Winter Sports Park, Park City Ski Area and the Delta Center. Collection at other venues, such as Snowbasin Ski Resort and Soldier Hollow, will go to bid later. Hardy and three of his colleagues got a taste of Olympic trash collection last summer at the Sydney Games, which generated 22 tons of garbage a day, twice the city's usual amount.

While the magnitude of the Summer Olympics dwarfs the Winter Games, Sydney had certain advantages. For example, venues in Sydney were clumped together compared to Utah, where they will be spread across three counties.

Add a couple feet of snow to the equation, and it can make for slow going. Preparing for the unknowns, such as weather, is a big part of the challenge, said Brad Mertz, BFI marketing manager.

"We'll be bringing in extra equipment and personnel," Hardy said. "Another thing you don't think about are our normal businesses, like hotels and restaurants, how much more business they're going to have. You've definitely got to get geared up for it."

In Sydney, by contrast, Olympic officials advised residents who didn't want to see the games to leave town, and they asked schools to close down.

About 10 to 15 drivers will be added to BFI's normal collection route in Salt Lake City. The plan is to use the Olympics as a reward for the best, safest drivers in other states.

Exactly how much waste Olympic visitors will produce is unknown, so BFI will bill SLOC after the Games based on how much garbage is collected, Hardy said.

BFI will push recycling as hard as it can, Mertz said. SLOC's environmental committee has called for "zero waste," a lofty standard, but Mertz said BFI will give it a shot, and try to make the most of the opportunity.

"I see the Olympics as an opportunity to educate people on what can be done and set an example to the world as far as our abilities to recycle," he said.

Houston-based BFI is a subsidiary of Allied Waste, the second-largest waste disposal operation in the world.

"We do Super Bowls and NASCAR races, so it's nothing we can't handle," Hardy said.

U.S. soccer women take 7 Olympians

CHICAGO (AP) — Seven players from the U.S. Olympic soccer team were named to the U.S. Women's National Team on Tuesday.

Tiffeny Milbrett, Christie Pearce, Kate Sobrero, Siri Mullinix, Michelle French, Lorrie Fair and Nikki Serlenga will be among the 18-member U.S. national team traveling to China in mid-January to face that country's powerful national team. The six Olympic veterans give the national team experience in international play, said coach April Heinrichs.

The remainder of the team is made up of five collegiate players and six players who were high picks in the recent Women's United Soccer Association player draft.

The veteran players, all under the age of 24 except Milbrett, will lead the first trip by an American team to China since 1998. One of the college players is All-American midfielder Aleisha Cramer, who just finished her freshman season at Brigham Young University.

Cramer led the youth national team to the Nordic Cup championship last summer in Germany. She was the third youngest player ever to make the U.S. National Team in 1998 when she was 16 years old.
