

Plenty of issues in Roberts County

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

MIAMI — With District Attorney Guy Hardin hoping to relocate his offices to the county seat and Celanese Chemical Co. hoping to pipe its wastewater into a county creek, there is more to the Roberts County Commission race than good roads and sound finances.

In the only contested local race in Roberts County, Democrat John Brogdon and Republican Don Morrison are hoping to fill the precinct 3 county commissioner position being vacated by Tim Flowers.

One task the new commissioner may face is to find an office for District Attorney Hardin, who feels that Miami is more compatible and centrally than Pampa. Hardin, whose district covers Roberts, Gray, Hemphill, Wheeler and Lipscomb Counties, announced his plans to move the office to Miami after scuffling with Gray County Commissioners over D.A. staff pay raises.

Another issue is the Celanese proposal to pipe wastewater into Red Deer Creek near the Pampa waste water plant. A permit application is pending at the Texas Department of Water Resources. But landowners and water users in the area are already expressing concern about the sodium content of the waste water.

Brogdon does not know the details of Hardin's plans relocate in Miami.

"I feel like it's more like a personal thing," he said, agreeing that Miami would be a more central location.

county, Brogdon said he "would not be in favor of the dumping at all."

"We have enough problem with dumping by oil companies," he said. "The preservation of the creek is important to Miami and to any farmer and rancher on Red Deer Creek."

He added that he would like to see progress on the Red Deer watershed.

He admits he's never been involved in politics. But he said that he does "live on a terrible road." Because of his involvement in Miami school activities, he feels he can adequately represent the people of the county.

"But there's more to being a county commissioner than taking care of roads," he said. "You have to take care of the county finances, too."

A member of the First United Methodist Church and the Miami Lions Club, Brogdon feels that his connection with Miami, the county's only town, is important and beneficial.

"I participate in more activities in Miami than the other candidate," he said. "You get acquainted with more of the local people."

Morrison, who is the general manager of the Morrison Cattle Co. in the southwest part of the county, feels "it is the duty of an individual to serve in public office."

"I feel like I am qualified to serve in this position," Morrison said, noting that he has been director of the Canadian Production Credit Association, Roberts Soil and Water Conservation Dist. The Top O'Texas Livestock Show and Rodeo Assoc. and various 4-H activities.

"I have the desire to operate Roberts County in a fair, equitable and economical way," he said.

He agrees that Hardin's proposed move is "a real fine idea."

"We have facilities in Roberts County for him," he said. "It might help cases here get through quickly and it would certainly help the sheriff."

As for the wastewater dumping proposal, Morrison said "we'll have to watch very closely how it will affect the water supply."

"I think it can be a problem not only in this county but also downstream into Oklahoma if it goes that far," he said, adding that if Celanese get approval to dump, the waste may get into the underground water supply.

Although his three children attended Pampa schools and he has two Pampa listings, Morrison is not hurt by his "Pampa connection." He said another commissioner, Sam Condo, is also Pampa based.

While Democrats and Republicans harp about their differences at the state and national level, political parties have a smaller role in Roberts County.

Brogdon says the voters in this race will look at the individual candidate.

"I don't think the commission is a political oriented office," Morrison said, adding that the conservatives at the top of the Republican ticket may be more appealing to voters in the county. "The incumbent in this precinct is a Republican."

Other county officers, sheriff Eddie Brines, tax assessor collector Carol Billingsley, Hardin and precinct 1 commissioner William Clark, are unopposed.

Indira Gandhi slain by own bodyguards

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was assassinated today outside her home, mortally wounded in a barrage of bullets reportedly fired by her own Sikh bodyguards.

The slaying of the woman who dominated Indian political life for two decades threatened to plunge this troubled nation into new turmoil. Her son, Rajiv, was quickly chosen to succeed her.

One or two of the gunmen were reported killed at the scene of the shooting, for which Sikh extremists claimed responsibility. "We have taken our revenge!" one militant proclaimed.

Mrs. Gandhi, 66, had been under heavy guard for months because of assassination threats from Sikhs angered by her crackdown on militant members of the sect in Punjab state.

She was shot after she emerged from her house at 9:20 a.m. (10:50 p.m. EST) to make a video recording.

"Suddenly, out of the blue, two persons carrying Sten guns — one uniformed and one in civilian clothes — shot at Mrs. Gandhi," the United News of India reported. "Eight to 10 bullets from the gun hit her."

Mrs. Gandhi, clad in an orange cotton sari, was rushed to the All-India Institute of Medical Sciences. Doctors said she died less than two hours later.

"She is no more," a member of her governing Congress Party announced to more than 100,000 people surrounding the hospital. Cries and sobs rose from the throng. Many prayed or beat their breasts.

Doctors said she was shot in the heart, abdomen and thigh. There were reports she had been shot at least eight times and possibly as many as 16 times.

The United News of India and a former foreign minister both said three security guards were involved in the attack, but UNI said only two fired on Mrs. Gandhi. There were conflicting reports as to whether one or two of the gunmen had been killed by other security guards.

The million-strong armed forces was placed on alert, and police sealed off New Delhi and surrounded Mrs. Gandhi's residence and the hospital, three miles away.

The Cabinet met in emergency session, and national legislators of the Congress Party unanimously chose Rajiv Gandhi, 40, as the new head of government, a government spokesman reported. Gandhi was then sworn in by President Zail Singh.

Unlike her predecessors, Mrs. Gandhi, prime minister for 15 of the past 18 years, had not designated a deputy prime minister or a Cabinet minister to succeed her.

It had been expected that her son might be sworn in as her temporary successor because he is effectively India's No. 2 leader as the first among five general secretaries of the Congress Party. National elections had been scheduled to be held late this year or early next year.

Rajiv rushed to New Delhi from the eastern state of West Bengal, where he was addressing a public meeting, after hearing his mother had been shot. He entered the hospital to view her body, security guards said.

In Washington, President Reagan issued a statement expressing "shock, revulsion and grief over the brutal assassination" of Mrs. Gandhi, 66.

"The prime minister and I had personal correspondence recently regarding the scourge of terrorism," Reagan said. "We agreed upon the necessity for freedom-loving states to strengthen our cooperation to stamp out this menace to humanity. Her senseless murder serves as a vivid reminder of the terrorist threat we all confront."

Several hours after the shooting, an unidentified caller told The Associated Press office in New Delhi: "We have taken our revenge! Long live the Sikh religion!"

Asked who he was, the man said: "This is the action of the entire Sikh sect." Then he hung up.

Mrs. Gandhi has been bitterly condemned by Sikh leaders for her government's handling of recent violence in the northern state of Punjab. In June, Indian army troops besieged and then assaulted the Golden Temple, the Sikhs' holiest place of worship, in Amritsar.

Child seat law now in effect

From Staff and Wire Reports

Pampa Police Chief J.J. Ryzman said local officers will give warning tickets until January to parents who violate the child - safety - seat law that went into effect today.

On-the-road freedom for the littlest Texans ended when the use of child safety seats became mandatory.

Ryzman said that starting in January, violators will receive a regular citation, which could result in a fine of up to $50.

State Representative Foster Whaley of Pampa opposes the law as an unnecessary violation of civil liberties, akin to barring football because players get injured.

"Are we going to tell people they can't ride Brahman bulls because they get beat up every time?" Whaley asked the Associated Press.

But the director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union says the law is not an unreasonable government intrusion into the privacy of the car.

"That's what we are all about, resisting government intrusions on civil liberties," Gara LaMarche said Tuesday. "But here we are talking about young people and their safety. It's an extremely minimal intrusion."

Texas became one of the last states to adopt the safety seat law when it was approved in the summer special session. Beginning today, children under age 2 must be secured in approved safety seats when riding in vehicles. Children ages 2 to 4 must be in either a safety seat or seat belt.

The fines to be levied starting in January can be dismissed by buying a seat within 10 days of the offense, according to the law.

Chief Ryzman said officers will use their own judgment and discretion in enforcing the new law.

"It's a pretty obvious violation when a child is standing up in the seat or playing around in the back of a station wagon, or riding around in the back of a pickup," he said.

The chief said officers shouldn't have much trouble deciding whether a child looks young enough to require the mandatory restraint.

"With most children four or under, their age is fairly obvious," Ryzman said.

"Hopefully, we'll see a lot of voluntary compliance. Most parents will comply. They don't want to see their child hurt any more than we do," he said.

The law left Whaley annoyed. He says it's not that he's against protecting children.

"We've got conservative people up here who think people are smart enough to make up their own minds about it," he said. "That law was passed by lobbyists down there who want to sell restraining seats."

Sales of the restraining devices are up, according to Jim Leatherman, assistant manager at an Edison's store in Austin.

The seats, which cost from about $30-$80, also are available from rental and loaner programs in some places.

Screaming Wells: A perfect spot for Halloween thrills

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Hauntings don't always occur in moss-covered mansions, cold castles, graveyards or Victorian houses filled with repressed residents.

Sometimes tales of ghosts, ghouls and mysterious lights surround an otherwise almost commonplace piece of land.

Such a place exists only a few miles outside Pampa. That is, if you can believe the stories that have endured over the years, passed on from one young person to another, one tale added to another.

Located southeast of Pampa, between Lefors and Bowers City, is a piece of land - its exact boundaries vague - often called Screaming Wells. And if rumors can be believed, it is delightfully haunted by a variety of strange events.

Actually, the place has two names, depending on how you choose to spell "wells."

Some, including me, call it Screaming Wells, supposedly referring to the screeching sounds coming at night from many of the oil pumps operating in the vicinity. Others call it Screaming Wails, referring to the sounds created by past victims who encountered strange happenings, their screams echoing from the hills and ravines in the area.

During the day, it seems an unlikely spot for hauntings. The hills are sparse of vegetation except for low shrubs, weeds,

Bodies hanging from trees reportedly appear mysteriously at Screaming Wells scraggly grasses and some yucca plants. Small oil and gas processing plants are nearby, as are a few homes in the countryside. Sandy creek beds wind throughout the region, a few narrow bridges providing crossing spots, cottonwoods dotted along their banks. But at night, especially when the moon is full, the scene becomes - well, kind of ghostly, spooky. Down in the ravines, most lights of the towns and homes disappear from view. The trees become lonely, silhouetted figures, breezes causing dancing shadows against the sky.

The silence is marred by the distant barking of dogs, night birds and sounds of other creatures of the dark. And there is the squeaking of the oil pumps, giving an eerie background symphony. At least, I hope it's only the pumps. One never knows.

I first heard of Screaming Wells when I was still young, a sixth grade student. I overheard my sister talking with some of her friends about some of the events allegedly occurring there.

Being a curious being and already acquainted with tales by Edgar Allan Poe, H. P. Lovecraft and Ambrose Bierce, I had to ask questions about what had happened.

The first story I heard I now realize is quite apocryphal, versions abounding throughout the United States. You probably know it: a couple out parked in some lonely spot, the radio on, some news about an escapee from some mental institution, a hook in place of one hand. The girl gets nervous, supposedly hearing some sounds near the car. She convinces her date to leave - and when they get back to town and open the door: there is a bloody hook on a door handle.

But over the years, I have heard too many other stories and have made several visits to the place myself. And there's always doubts - perhaps there is something strange there.

The next story I heard had actual witnesses to an event - more or less; at least, I had no reason to distrust their claims at the time.

As the tale was related to me, a group of local teenagers had gone to the Screaming Wells area for an evening picnic sometime in the late 1950's. Then, suddenly ("suddenly"), a group of lights appeared in the sky and headed toward the picnicers.

Harvester Band recognized

The Pampa High School Harvester Band received a plaque Tuesday afternoon from Manor Texas Fruitcake Co. for selling the most fruitcakes in Texas in 1983.

Ted White, Texas sales representative, presented the award to band members yesterday afternoon in the band room after marching practice.

White said the company, recently purchased by Anheuser-Busch, has initiated the awards this year to honor the bands selling the fruitcakes in fund raising projects. The Pampa band has been selling Manor products for the past 14 years.

The Harvesters are the first Texas band to receive the top award.

White said the Harvester "Pride of Pampa" Band has sold more cakes than any other school in the nation over the past four years. White also presented an award to band director Charles Johnson for his inspiration to other schools in the business.

The Pampa band was given the top honor for being the number one selling school in all of Texas for 1983. White said there are 450 accounts in the state selling the Manor fruitcakes.

The local band will be represented in the firm's national monthly magazine for being the top seller in the state, White said.

County meeting slated Thursday

Gray County Commissioners will discuss the transfer of county funds from various offices to the county treasurer, will consider an amendment to the 1984 budget of 223rd District Judge Don Cain and will discuss various legalities related to the general election in their regular meeting at 9:30 a.m. Thursday.

Other items on the meeting's agenda include a request from the Golden Spread Roustabout Co. to cross a county road with a pipeline; consideration of the purchase of a radar unit for the highway patrol; consideration of a request from General Telephone to install a phone line on the county right of way; a public hearing on proposed improvements to the Perry Lefors Airport; the designation of a member to serve on the Panhandle Regional Finance Development Board; nominations to the Regional Health Planning Advisory Committee and the State Health Coordinating Council; consideration of an agreement with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service for a predatory animal control program; the replacement of election judges as required; and the acceptance of the number of ballots used in absentee voting.

Revision of indicators shows economic drop

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said today its main economic forecasting gauge rose a modest 0.4 percent in September. But a revision in the August data showed the economy was headed down for a third straight month — a trend that has signaled previous recessions.

The Commerce Department reported that the September gain in the Index of Leading Economic Indicators followed a slight dip of 0.1 percent in August and steep drops of 1.7 percent in July and 0.9 percent in June.

The Reagan administration and many private economists have said the index is not infallible and has in the past signalled a recession when none came.

Optimists argue now that while the index may be signalling slower growth, no recession is on the horizon.

Other economists, however, contend that at the very least the country is on the verge of a "growth recession" — a period when the economy grows at such a sluggish pace that unemployment rises.

The last time the index fell for an extended period was from May through October 1981, when there were five monthly declines as the country slipped into the 1981-82 recession, the steepest downturn since World War II.

In another bit of gloomy news, the government reported today that the nation's foreign trade deficit soared to its second-highest monthly total on record. The $12.6 billion imbalance was 27 percent above the August figure of $9.9 billion but slightly below the $14.1 billion previous record of July.

The United States is on the way to its worst trading year in history. Through September, the trade deficits totaled $96.3 billion, well above the $69.4 billion deficit for all of 1983. The government is predicting the 1984 total will hit $130 billion as a strong U.S. dollar entices Americans to buy a flood of foreign goods while U.S. exporters find their goods are more expensive on overseas markets.

Halloween tale

Arriving together at the highway, they realized one of the boys was missing. Mustering up courage, several of the other boys went back to locate him. They found him, lying on the ground unconscious. When he awoke, they asked him what had happened.

But he said he couldn't tell anyone. If he did, he would die, he claimed.

During the next year, people always asked him to say what had happened, but he kept silent, refusing to divulge anything. Then, one night, he told a friend what had occurred — and the next day was killed in a car accident.

I knew this friend, a couple of years older than me. And he swore to the story. But when asked to say what had been told to him, he would look frightened and refuse to tell, saying he feared he too would die. And as far as I know, the secret still remains with him.

Well, the tales continued to come.

Something apparently happening several times concerned the appearance of a body hanging in a tree. People would be parked in a car near a tree at night, not paying much attention to anything. And then when they happened to look up at the tree, there would be a body hanging from a branch, a noose around its neck.

No one apparently stuck around to check the body out.

Rumors related that a hermit lived in the area, a big man who lived in a cave in one of the creek beds and who did not like visitors.

When I was in junior high, supposedly two teenaged youths drove out to Screaming Wells for some reason. They had parked the car and were talking — more likely, probably drinking. One looked up into the rearview mirror and saw a large, shadowy figure approaching the car, a huge link chain in its hands.

The driver reached to start the car up. Before he could get the car going, the huge chain came down across the top of the car, leaving dents across the car roof and on the hood and cracking a windshield. The two left quickly before the figure could bring the chain down again.

I overheard the driver telling his

Pesticides hearing started

AUSTIN (AP) — An extended hearing on proposed new pesticide regulations began today before the House Agriculture Committee.

"This may last through today and into Thursday," said Rep. Robert Saunders, D-LaGrange, committee chairman, in opening the public hearing.

About 200 people attended the session in the House chamber with about 50 of them indicating they intended to testify.

"We will not limit anyone's right to speak," Saunders said.

The House committee hearing precedes three public hearings over the state conducted by the Texas Department of Agriculture.

Ron White, deputy TDA commissioner, was the first speaker to explain the regulations announced by TDA last week.

"These regulations concern several closely related problems," White said. "One main problem was to keep workers and freshly-laid pesticide apart. Another big problem is protecting unknowing rural residents nearby."

The proposed rules set up re-entry periods from 24 hours to seven days for the various types of pesticide before workers can return to a field after treatment. Other regulations require warning for anyone nearby who asks for notification.

Water to be issue during upcoming legislative session

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Water planning is a critical issue that ranks with abortion as an unpopular subject and the matter has failed to capture the interest of many Texas decision-makers, a spokesman in Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's office says.

Despite the apathy, Steve Stagner, assistant director of research for Hobby, said he expects water to be at the top of the legislative agenda next year.

He said the issue of an ample water supply for the state presents a number of political challenges.

"Groundwater ranks with abortion and state income taxes as the most unpopular issue on a legislator's list," Stagner told about 175 water experts attending a symposium on groundwater Tuesday.

"Many key decision makers do not want effective groundwater management in Texas. They don't see the need for it. They don't see the benefits of it," Stagner said.

In addition, there are no interest groups — or haven't been until the recent past — who have made endeavors to push effective groundwater management, he said.

"I don't mean this as a comment on the legislature. They reflect public opinion on this issue," Stagner said.

Stagner said he foresees the day when the entire state will be divided into districts for water planning purposes.

The process, he said, will create an advocacy that will bring this (water issue) into the legislative process.

"If we can create interest groups on a local level with some solutions and they come to the legislature, it's (legislature) going to be willing to deal with them," he said.

A roadblock to establishing an effective statewide water plan is excessive allegiance to complete control by local (water) districts, he said.

"It is never going to be possible politically to move away from the local district concept. But we may be at a point where we should look at forming new districts," Stagner said.

Panel recommends revamp of the state's water agency

AUSTIN (AP) — The Sunset Commission says the Department of Water Resources should be restructured to give the Texas Water Commission more authority and enlarge the Texas Board of Water Development.

The name of the board would be changed to the Texas Water Resources Board, if the 1985 Legislature agrees.

The recommendations made Tuesday include taking over some duties of the Texas Railroad Commission and the Public Utility Commission.

The Water Development Board, increased from six to nine with three public members, would continue its primary duty of overseeing the financing of water projects in Texas.

The Texas Water Rights Commission would be given enlarged powers for granting water right permits and enforcement of the state water codes.

Under one commission recommendation, the control the Railroad Commission has now over water used in oil recovery programs would be transferred to the Department of Water Resources.

The jurisdiction of the Public Utility Commission over water and sewer rates also would be transferred to the water agency.

Both proposals have failed in previous legislative sessions.

In other action Tuesday, the Sunset Commission, which reviews all state agencies periodically, recommended a two-year study of air pollution by industrial plants in Texas to determine which plants and what areas were involved.

The Sunset staff said the Texas Air Control Board had readings of how bad pollution was but could not pinpoint the exact plants involved.

The study, to be delivered to the 1987 Legislature, would be made by nine people, three each appointed by the governor, lieutenant governor and the speaker.

Sen. John Sharp, D-Victoria, suggested the study committee after Sen. Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville, proposed that any plant releasing pollutants in the air be required to renew its permit every 15 years.

Survey shows high voter turnout could help Reagan

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Contrary to conventional wisdom, a higher voter turnout in Texas would help the Republicans instead of the Democrats in the November elections, according to a new study.

A survey of 1,020 Texans completed Oct. 11 and sponsored by the Texas A&M Public Policy

Resources Laboratory showed that President Reagan would do better in Texas if more voters go to the polls Nov. 6, researchers said.

Sen. Bill Sarpalis, D-Amarillo, successfully got the earlier vote erased Tuesday by a 5-3 vote, after he said he was afraid "we'll be closing down some plants and costing a lot of jobs."

The study will take the place of specific recommendations proposed by the staff for the 1985 Legislature.

In revamping the Department of Water Resources, Rep. Bruce Gibson, D-Godley, proposed a nine-person Board of Water Development named from geographic areas, including one "environmentalist."

The final version calls for nine members appointed by the governor with three public members.

Resources Laboratory showed that President Reagan would do better in Texas if more voters go to the polls Nov. 6, researchers said.

"Conventional wisdom says that the higher the turnout, the better the Democrats will do," said Dr. David Hill, who helped conduct the survey with Dr. James Dyer.

Democrats tend to do better among so-called "marginal" voters which include the young, low-income and less-educated, the survey indicated.

However, the survey also showed Reagan may even be doing better among some of those "marginal" voters than Mondale, Hill said.

Reagan had strong support among Anglos, men, conservatives, 18-to-29 year olds and those with an income of $30,000 or more, Hill said.

The study showed Reagan has 95 percent of the Republican vote, 63 percent of the independent vote, while Mondale has 61 percent of the Democratic vote and 13 percent of the independent vote.

Among the survey participants who said they would vote for Reagan, 66 percent said they would also vote for Republican Phil Gramm in the Texas senate race. Among those who said they would vote for Mondale, 72 percent said they would vote for Democrat Lloyd Doggett.

Survey results were categorized in two ways: a "high turnout" sample, which included 74 percent of those surveyed and a "low turnout" sample, which included 54 percent of those surveyed.

CLASSROOM LAUGHTER—Six-year-old John Willie Burrus enjoy his time with classmate Matt Heinze, left, at Miles Elementary School, near San Angelo. That Burrus is in school at all is a tribute to the townsfolk of Miles, who have raised more than $40,000 for medical expenses for him after he was born with multiple birth defects. (AP Laserphoto)

Neighbors help handicapped boy

MILES, Texas (AP) — Folks here look after each other.

From the grown-ups who raised thousands of dollars for little John Willie Burrus' medical bills to the youngsters who watch over John through kindergarten class each day, people take care of their own.

John Willie, 6, was born with multiple birth defects, including malformed ears, a micro-cephalic head and a kidney disorder.

When townspeople learned that the tiny child they'd known since birth would need an expensive kidney transplant, they set out to raise funds needed for the operation.

Their children are no different. "They help him out," said John's mother, Janice Burrus. "He had been in the hospital right before he first started school and was kind of weak. Even his lunch box was heavy, so somebody carried it for him to the lunchroom every day."

Elementary school Principal Mitchell West said being with his peers has helped John to become more outgoing.

"He's beginning to talk to other people other than his parents. He's beginning to talk to other kids," West said.

Most importantly, say his friends and parents, attending public school helps John learn to live a more normal life.

Although John still must be fed primarily through tubes, he now eats a few bites of solid food in the cafeteria with the other children.

Except for sessions in speech therapy and adaptive physical education, he is just an average kindergarten student, learning his ABCs and numbers with the other 31 children in the class.

"We in the community have grown up with him and know his problems," West said. "We all wanted to handle him with softer gloves. He didn't really need that."

Before attending kindergarten, John took special education classes in San Angelo.

Now, West said, "He's functioning like the greater group. In San Angelo, he was in a self-contained special education unit. We have him in the classroom where he's functioning like the regular kids. That's what his family wants. That's what his doctor wants."

"We're real pleased he's getting to go to public school," Mrs. Burrus said.

"He just loves it," she said. "I had always hoped that he would get to go. He was always so anxious to go to school where his brother and sister were that I felt like he was going to get to go. And he's loving every minute of it."

At first, the strain of staying in school proved more than the boy could handle. While other children stayed until 2:45 p.m., John went home at 1 p.m.

But after several weeks of school, kindergarten has become an all-day affair.

He is smaller than his classmates. Large glasses dwarf his tiny face, and John barely tops the shoulder of the smallest of his other classmates.

Moving into a circle for a song game, John tugs at his jeans, which stubbornly refuse to stay up on his diminutive frame. As the game progresses, his blue and white shirt becomes untucked.

Organ music swells underneath the shrill voices of the children singing out the numbers in the song, designed to help the youngsters learn to count.

John sings along, hammering with a clenched fist and hitting his feet against the floor at the appropriate times.

"He's real small," said Mrs. Drake, "but there's nothing he won't try."

The other children, Mrs. Drake said, "are kind of protective of him. They try to take care of him."

Walking to the playground for recess, a classmate places his arm around John's shoulder and helps the little boy on the merry-go-round for a fast and furious ride.

"Come on, John," the other boys say, hurrying for their ride.

One grabs John's blue hood, tucking it over the child's head to keep out the chilly wind.

The easy camaraderie between the children shows how far John has progressed since school began, Mrs. Drake said.

"When he first came to school, for about two weeks he wouldn't talk to anyone above a whisper. His mother had to bribe him at home to get him to talk," Mrs. Drake said. "He hasn't stopped since."

The boy moves with concentrated intensity, wasting few motions as he catches a ball during a special physical education session.

"That ball is almost as big as he is," said Mrs. Drake, smiling to watch the boy's skinny arms reach around the red, rubber ball.

"As far as academics go, he does everything they do," she said. "He just has some physical problems. But he tries everything."

Later, the children paste and glue pictures together. John works methodically to arrange his story for the teacher's perusal. His feet dangle several inches above the floor and he can only touch the ground by perching on the edge of his child-sized chair.

Just getting to school was an achievement for the child, who has been racked by illness and poor health since birth.

He now weighs 32 pounds, double what he weighed after a particularly severe relapse in February.

Already, John has undergone surgery seven times in his 6 years. The kidney disorder that has plagued the boy since birth worsened in the past year, necessitating the need for a transplant.

The transplant still is somewhere in the future, Mrs. Burrus said, postponed until John's bleeding ulcer is cleared up and until a donor can be found.

Teachers influence children

Who is raising our children?

Do you realize that for about 6½ to 7½ hours a day, five days a week, nine months out of the year for at least 10 to 12 years straight, your children's minds are being formed by the teachers in our school systems.

How many of us watch them go to school each day, not really knowing what's going on there, what they are being taught, what they are being subjected to?

In my opinion, few things are as valuable as a good teacher and few things as harmful as a bad one.

I was pretty fortunate. Of all the teachers I've come across, only a handful would I personally label as bad teachers and although they've left indelible marks on my mind, I've survived without too much emotional trauma. I remember the math teacher who failed me, but passed the handsome football player when I know we both had the same grade and the coach who would line us girls up against the gym wall and throw basketballs at us as hard as he could and if we didn't catch them, well, we got it in the face.

But I don't dwell on those people too much. What's done is done.

The ones I like to remember, though, are the teachers who inspired me... who knew I could do better and pushed me to reach my highest achievements.

I'll never forget one marvelous lady, Mrs. Ruth Morris. She taught in a small school, so she ended up teaching me English, math and Spanish at different times. She was always patient with her classes, and she had a wonderful sense of humor. She encouraged me in my first writing attempt — an American Heritage play that was performed for the whole school. No, I'll never forget Mrs. Morris.

I had an English teacher in college who could be quite a battle axe when she wanted to (that's why I'm not using her name). She had a brilliant mind and a brilliant wit along with a rapier tongue. But she pushed her students beyond the ordinary, she made us look beyond the surface into the intricacies of our language and how it could be used to the best advantage.

One common denominator was found in all the teachers who inspired me and who inspired my respect — they loved what they were doing. They knew their subject inside and out which lent a zeal to their work. They were so interested they couldn't help but pass on their interest in their students. Even the slower students tried hard for these teachers and these teachers never ceased to encourage them. They never humiliated their students and they were extremely patient. Yet they had control of their class, and the students knew it.

When I think of the impact teachers have on my children's lives, I can't help but realize how important it is that we, through our school system, support, encourage and reward our good teachers. And how important it is that the bad ones be weeded out.

Not that bad teachers are bad people. Most likely they are just not suited for the work they are in. It takes a special person to be a teacher. And I believe it is a God-given talent.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Comedy routine not really funny

While it may have been very amusing to watch Congress wind down to adjournment, it's not so amusing to consider how heavily Washington affects our lives.

The denouement of the 98th Congress was a fairly typical performance. The government had to shut down temporarily and operate under various stopgap measures because our "representatives" couldn't get together and come up with a bill to "temporarily" increase the national debt limit or anything resembling a budget.

Congress had to lay off 500,000 government employees, who were described as "non-essential," for one day, leading many of us to wonder why half a million "non-essential" workers were on the payroll in the first place. Then, after making them take the day off because the government didn't have the money to pay them, the next day Congress decided to pay employees for that day after all.

Politicians scrambled shamelessly for last-minute pork-barrel projects. Adjournment was postponed repeatedly as special-interest politics reigned supreme.

Consider, however, that this crowd extracts about 20 percent of the wealth produced in this country and decides how to dispose of much more through regulation and deficit spending. It seeks and wins an increasing amount of control over our money and our lives. Yet it can't even balance its own checkbook.

Many people deplore politics but look to government for wisdom, compassion, guidance and solutions to society's problems.

People cherish the illusion that government and politics are different. They are one and the same. The unseemly crowding at the public tough displayed by Congress prior to adjournment is how government works.

Remember that the next time somebody suggests that the excesses of the private sector need to be controlled by the government sector.

Small business our strength

"Something new is happening in America," writes Raymond Stata, co-author of "The Innovators," (Harper & Row), an important new book out this week. "One can see it in the recycled old mill building of New England, or in Texan enthusiasm for microelectronic research...A spirit of economic optimism is displacing once-fashionable gloom..."

The reason for Stata's and his fellow author's (James Botkin and Dan Dimancescu) confidence is in the book's subtitle, "Rediscovering America's Creative Energy."

Their thesis: "A simple proposition. America's competitive advantage in the 1980s...and beyond will be its capacity to innovate."

While they develop this thesis brilliantly in example after example of innovative revival, they expressed surprise over "the contrast between the sense of confidence in U.S. business resilience, and the sense of doubt in (their Japanese competitors') creative capacity, which signals something new for the 1980s."

"When we started our research for this book, this view of a reversing competitive posture (between Japan and America) did not strike us as realistic. Today it does."

Unfortunately, "The Innovators" seems to miss the main reason why American enterprise is now coming to life in a new burst of creative innovation, and, instead, promotes a surprisingly governmental - corporate approach, "a far-reaching national strategy that embraces and encourages the innovation process."

Yet, what has turned America's economic position around in the last four years is not revival of corporate structures - but the thunderous explosion of 2.4 million NEW businesses formed since 1980 - and over 4 million since 1977, an all-time record. This new explosion has fueled most of the technological and innovative energy about which Stata and his co-authors write.

The reason is simple: IDEAS are the product of individuals; and creativity, even in this corporate age, is still primarily and essentially an INDIVIDUAL function. Thus, over two-thirds of all the nation's new inventions are coming from companies with less than 100 employees. The secret to America's reviving economy is not corporate renaissance, but small business revival - and that is the theme of an equally fascinating new book called "A Business Plan for America (Putnam), by Donald Gervitz. In it, Gervitz develops the stories of dozens of typical new American entrepreneurs who are kicking over the traces of corporate institutionalism and striking out on their own.

He also reminds us that most of America's leading left - wing economists have missed this new business revival because of their long-term fixation on "bigness."

As that original economic dinosaur, John Kenneth Galbraith, wrote in 1952, "There is no more pleasant fiction that that technical change is the product of the matchless ingenuity of the small business man...Most of the cheap and simple inventions have already been made...A benign Providence has made the industry of a few large firms an almost perfect instrument for technical change." He could not have been more wrong.

Gervitz also reminds us that America's drive toward big business concentration was not so much from greedy right - wing capitalists as it was from the liberal establishment social planners, who understood, from the beginning, that the greatest enemy to the centrally planned economy was the small business community.

As Lenin warned, "The strength of capitalism lies in the strength of small business enterprise." As it turned out, of course, Lenin was a better forecaster of America's future than Galbraith, because exactly in proportion to America's corporate "bigness," our competitive position deteriorated.

As Gervitz noted, it was big steel and big autos whose world market share plummeted, even as America's small business economy was coming alive. Over the last thirteen years, "armed with only a samll amount of capital, with the weight of government regulation and taxation against them, America's entrepreneurs...have produced virtually all of the nation's net new private-sector jobs, and the bulk of its inventions."

"In the process," Gervitz claims, "they are moving American capitalism past the era of corporate leviathans and toward a new entrepreneurial configuration."

Curiously, America's left - liberal academic establishment, especially Ezra Vogel and Robert Reich of Harvard, have totally missed this revolution. As Reich wrote last year, "It is becoming clear that America's economic future depends less on lonely genius and backyard inventors than on versatile organizations."

And Vogel argues that, "Japan with its group orientation...has developed solutions that America, with its more individualistic history might never have invented..."

Yet, Jiro Tokuyama, dean of the Nomura School of Advanced Management, told Gervitz, "The entrepreneurial firms and the venture capital are the great advantages you have. If we cannot learn how to develop the Japanese entrepreneurial sector, Japan's companies will end up like the battleship Yamato at the end of the war, at the bottom of the Pacific."

When America really needs, Gervitz says is a SMALL business policy of low and simple tax rates, less complex regulation, and a monetary policy based on lower interest rates. Is anyone listening?

Legacy

In this feature, we excerpt material that has appeared on Freedom Newspapers editorial pages in previous years, whether from the editorials or the column written for many years by Freedom founder R.C. Hoiles.

The very size, vastness, inefficiency, convulsiveness, inconsistency and bulk of the federal bureaucracy are all that save us.

If it all operated efficiently and if all the laws, regulations, edicts and decisions were unfaithfully and effectively enforced, life in the United States would be unthinkable.

All that saves us, really, is the blessed inefficiency and ineffectiveness of the total government machine.

Editorial, Oct. 19, 1964

Paul Harvey

Don't look down; look up

How are things, really? Republicans are telling you you've never had it so good. Democrats are insisting the poor are getting poorer. How are things, really?

The inflation cancer is in regression. History says the "ailment" remains incurable - but it is enough that we keep it "in remission."

Wholesale prices declined two-tenths in September. The increase so far this year is a tolerable two-and-a-half percent.

That awful, often-fatal ill which infects most of the rest of the world, in the United States is "controlled."

The "crash" of 1929 taught us some painful lessons.

Fiscal reforms instituted by the terrible depression have moderated each of the 10 recessions since.

This past year, when a banking crisis threatened, it was intercepted. We've seen that government will do what it has to do to avert collapse.

Our inevitable cyclical economy has "pillows" to fall back on - FDIC guarantees of bank deposits, unemployment pay, farm subsidies.

Also, computers now keep business planners current; inventory levels are controlled.

The Wall Street Journal recently asked 10 economists with the best batting average for prognostication, "Might there be another great depression?"

Unanimously, in effect, they replied, "No way."

But what about the enormous budget deficit. Politicians of both parties are admittedly anxious about it. Some Democrats fear we may collapse under such an overburden.

The economists questioned by the Journal - and they included three Nobel laureates and two former FED chairmen - are concerned about it but not worried about it.

Milton Friedman says the big debt is helping the American people to understand that government spending must be curtailed; to this extent it is useful.

Month by month our economic news is almost "too good" - more workers working, increased after-tax income, increased industry earnings, a sound dollar.

When we are riding that high there is a tendency to acrophobia. Looking down from such a high place is dizzying, can make some people close their eyes and jump.

The builders who build the tall building tell you, "Don't look down; look up."

Letters to the editor

'Star wars' plan not a positive step

To the editor,
If the U.S. or the Soviet Union were to develop a "Star Wars" defense system to eliminate the nuclear weapons of the other, what do you think would happen?

A. The first one to develop the system launches a nuclear attack against the other because they feel the other country's ability to retaliate has been eliminated.

B. The first one to develop the system forces the other into an unconditional surrender, with the loser being dominated by the foreign power.

C. The first to develop the system resists the temptations of A. and B., and invites the loser to a peaceful demonstration of the system. They share the technology and live happily ever after.

D. The "Star Wars" plan proves to be only partially effective so that both countries seek to sabotage the other's system or to overwhelm the system with more and more missiles (back to square one).

The U.S. and the Soviet Union have not made progress on arms control during the Reagan administration. Instead, Phase II of the "cold war" has begun.

"Star wars" should have been explained to us for what it really is—a desperate all-out attempt on our part to win the arms race by destroying the element of nuclear deterrence. Mr. Reagan is not doing us any favor by suggesting that "Star Wars" is purely defensive and that that option "C" will be the result. "Star Wars" is not a positive development.

The Russians have found Mr. Reagan to be unreasonable on the subject of arms control. We strongly suggest that this is not entirely because of their own hard-headedness.

The goal of arms control negotiations has always been to reduce the possibility of nuclear war. This pre-supposes that both sides want to reduce that possibility. Mr. Reagan does not, and he has explained why. He believes that nuclear war is unavoidable because he thinks Armageddon passages in the Bible prove that nuclear war is inevitable.

This is what he said during the Sunday night debate. He cannot negotiate with the Soviet Union because of his own hard-headedness.

Negotiating a mutual arms control agreement with the Russians is a difficult and slow-moving process, but it is in their interest as well as ours. Full speed ahead on "Star Wars" should only be considered as a desperate last resort.

We believe negotiating arms control is our best bet for the future, but we must have a president who is able to negotiate in good faith. Because of his Armageddon philosophy, Mr. Reagan cannot negotiate in good faith.

Daddy Warbucks thinks the bear in the woods is a dragon with seven heads. We say a bear is just a bear and should be treated like a bear. What do you think?

Screaming Wells

story and talked to several people who claimed they had seen the car. But I never saw the car until after it was reportedly repaired.

By the time I was a junior in high school, I felt I had heard enough stories of the place and decided it was time to visit Screaming Wells myself.

One girl who lived near the place tried to dissuade me from visiting it at night. She said she had never done so though she was within easy walking distance from the location. She said she had seen enough to discourage her from wanting to go.

As she related her tale, when winds would be blowing, all the trees in the area would be swaying - except for the ones around Screaming Wells.

One summer night when the moon was full, she claimed, she let her dog - a German shepherd, I think - out of the house. A few minutes later, she heard the dog furiously scratching at the door. She let the dog in, and it ran under a bed, where it remained softly whining throughout the night, coming out only after the sun came up.

After that night, it never went near Screaming Wells, though it romped throughout the rest of the countryside.

Well, this only made me more determined to go.

I persuaded a friend to go with me on a warm spring night. We drove out there, located the landmarks indicating the place, got out, walked around. We were spooked, waiting for something to happen. But nothing did, so after an hour we gave up and drove back to the city.

After that, I went out there several times, usually on a double-date when a friend and I would entertain our dates with all the tales on the way out. A couple of times the girls would make us turn back before we got there, refusing to check it out. Other times we'd get there, but nothing happened.

Only twice did something supposedly occur, and both times were with larger groups during my senior year.

One night we had two or three cars make the trip, each full of boys and girls. We drove around, and one of the girls in my car suddenly screamed. She said she had seen some large, gray figure off in the weeds running along with the car. We tried to tell her it was only a dog, but she protested, saying she knew what a dog looked like and this was no dog.

We arrived at a spot and all got out, walking around. This same girl wandered by herself behind a nearby oil storage tank. There was a scream, and when we rushed to her, she had fainted and was lying on the ground.

Awaking in a few minutes, she claimed some furry, manlike figure had jumped at her from a bush. She was frightened, and I knew her well enough to feel she had seen something. Or at least, she thought she had. Whatever, that broke the party up, so we all went back to town.

Another night, three or four cars went out, all boys this time. We decided there was safety in numbers and were determined to explore the area on foot.

We all headed up one ravine, I bringing up the rear, already bored with the excursion. Then I heard screaming and yelling up ahead and started to join the others to see what was happening.

Instead, before I knew what was happening, everyone came running down the ravine. One guy literally ran over me, knocking me down to the ground. Two or three others also ran into each other, all trying to get back to the cars.

As we headed back into town, all I could find out was that the ones at the front of the line had seen some lights coming at them, looking like flaring eyes. Everyone panicked, apparently.

But it was a funny sight - afterwards, I laughed at seeing these guys, some football players, others in track, all running out of the ravine, yelling. Most of the others didn't laugh. Several of them said they would never go back.

I was in college soon, and I never really heard any more tales. The place continued to attract teenagers for awhile, but it became an occasion more for a party than for any attempt to seek out the secrets.

Soon the parties discontinued, except for intermittent excursions over the years since then.

Something more frightening has been seen in the area to keep teenagers away - DPS troopers and sheriff's deputies, coming to break up the parties.

But the tales continue, I understand.

Some say the area was once sacred ground belonging to Indians. And the visions and events have been sent by the spirits to repay the white men for running the Indians out and desecrating the place with oil drilling.

Perhaps.

Whatever, Screaming Wells has offered some entertaining tales to be revived around Halloween.

Family says handicapped son's progress is a miracle

By HARRIETTE GRAVES

Brownwood Bulletin
BROWNWOOD, Texas (AP) — He likes to sit quietly in a car at the edge of the road and gaze at the cows.

For most children, a cow is just a cow, but to 7-year-old Koby Shields, the delight of his young life is to observe the passive tranquility and serene atmosphere of cows grazing in a field.

As they watch their son's eyes sparkle at the sight of his favorite animal, Pam and Larry Shields inwardly voice a prayer of thanksgiving that Koby is showing more and more animation at his surroundings.

It wasn't too many years ago that the little boy battled for his life, suffering from a disorder that came upon him unexpectedly when he was four months old.

Koby was born a normal baby. He cooed, gurgled, laughed, cried, noticed people and watched, fascinated by his crib toys. There was no warning that at four months everything would change.

It was an ordinary day, Pam Shields remembered. She was busy in the kitchen while her 4-year-old daughter played in another room. Suddenly she heard some strange noise coming from the bedroom.

Shock and disbelief were her first reactions when she saw Koby, blue in the face, apparently choking.

"After I got to him I noticed almost immediately that even though he was not choking, his arms and legs were making little movements. I remember carrying him to the couch, putting him on his side, and opening his mouth to see if the airways were cleared," she said. "It seemed to me that God was directing my mind and my hands to do the right thing for my son."

"He was still thrashing around wildly but I managed to call the emergency room at the hospital, hysterically blurted out the situation," Mrs. Shields said.

Although this happened some seven years ago, the mother can still remember a nurse on the other end of the line giving directions, all the time reassuring her that the child would be all right. "She stayed on the phone with me the entire time until the ambulance came, calming me down, reassuring me and telling me what to do," Mrs. Shields said.

Contacted last week, the nurse, Zona Atkinson, said she had not forgotten the incident either. She simply said, "I was doing my duty."

It was one of those never-to-be forgotten days. Over and over the family relives those anxious hours. They remember the rush next door to a neighbor Mrs. Shields didn't even know, asking the woman to care for her daughter and a little friend that had been visiting. The two children had continued playing together in another room, oblivious at what was happening in the bedroom.

Koby received preliminary treatment at Brownwood Regional Hospital. Emergency room personnel brought the boy out of his seizures. He was then immediately transferred to Hendrick Medical Center in Abilene, where the family was bombarded with questions. Several times, she was asked if and when the baby had been administered the routine combination Diphtheria-Pertussis-Tetanus inoculation. The answer was always the same. The shot had been administered the day prior to the seizures.

Then came the years of testing, spinal taps, questions, and more questions. Over and over she was asked how soon after the inoculations had the convulsions started.

"The doctors at Hendrick did not think the vaccines caused the seizures because he had already had one inoculation the previous month with no complications," she said.

"But through the years I cannot help but wonder if there was any connection. After Koby's second shot and knowing that the seizures had followed so closely after the inoculation, we had to take him to a pediatrician in Abilene for his subsequent shots," Mrs. Shields said. "He stayed overnight in Abilene after he received the remaining required shots and each time after the inoculation, he had a seizure," she said.

A Brownwood pediatrician, Dr. Halbert O. Woodward, says the chance for a reaction to the DPT inoculation is about one in two million, with the greatest risk associated with the pertussis, or whooping cough, portion of the inoculation. He said that the risk of contracting whooping cough is considered a greater health hazard for children.

Epilepsy was the first diagnosis of Koby's problem. Although the boy was put on medication, he continued to have seizures, 10 or more a day, some lasting an hour.

Koby was taken to a neurologist in San Antonio where other tests were made including an EEG and CT scan. The CT scan showed no damage, but the EEG showed seizure activity in the brain.

"We went twice a year to the neurologist and various medications were tried. But despite all these trips, Koby did not develop normally. He did not talk much and what he said was unintelligible. Although he walked, it was only with great difficulty," his mother said.

"We saw no improvement up until he was three years old. The seizures never let up. Until I could cope with it and come to grips with myself, I would call an ambulance anytime I saw him turn blue," she said.

"I often wondered — why me? I had a handicapped brother who became deaf after having had whooping cough. He had not had the D.P.T. shot. Now, here's Koby who had the shots and is so handicapped. It's something we just don't understand," she said.

When Koby was 3 years old, the neurologist told the parents that their son would not advance any further than he already had. "He told us he would have the mentality of a 12-year-old child. Take him home and just love him and resign yourself to the fact that he is not going to get any better, the neurosurgeon told me," Mrs. Shields said with the hint of a tear in her eyes. "I told myself as I walked out of the hospital in San Antonio that I appreciated the honesty of the doctor, but I had made a little prayer to God that if

He would just let Koby live, there would never be anything that I would not try to handle," she said.

"I decided from then on to take one day at a time and not give up. I would bring him back home and work with him and never give up. I would continue to push and to encourage him," she said.

Larry and Pam Shields followed those guidelines. The first thing they did after returning to Brownwood was enroll the child in the infant stimulation program at the Central Texas Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center.

She spoke in great praise of Sarah Gale, formerly an occupational therapist there, who at that time was in charge of the infant program designed to help youngsters with handicaps. "Sarah taught me not to give up and gave me the hope and reassurance I so desperately needed."

Mrs. Shields also praised Martha Taylor Graves, who teaches speech therapy at Howard Payne University. "She is teaching my son to talk. Martha told me last week that we might soon be able to move on to whole sentences now that he has been able to grasp words," she said.

Today, the little boy is enrolled in a self-contained classroom of the special education program of the Brownwood Independent School District. "Irene Tolston and her teachers are doing wonders for him," she said. In 1983 he was enrolled in the Early Childhood program of the BISD.

More recently, in January this year, she was told by a friend of the "wonderful" work done by the Scottish Rite Hospital. "We were asked why we had never taken our son to the Scottish Rite Hospital. I told her we had tried years ago but at that time only crippled children were being admitted," she said.

A whole new world has opened up for the boy. He was accepted as an out-patient at the Scottish Rite Hospital in Dallas, and every three months he is examined.

Registered voters in Texas up by more than 1 million

By RUTH RENDON
For The Associated Press
AUSTIN (AP) — More than one million additional Texans have registered to vote since the 1980 presidential election, the secretary of state's office says.

The figures do not include tabulations from four of the state's most populous counties.

The incomplete figures received last week from Secretary of State Myra McDaniel show Texas has 7,841,309 registered voters compared to 6.6 million in 1980. Ms. McDaniel predicts the final tally will be close to 9 million.

Ms. McDaniel said the figures from the metropolitan counties of Dallas; Bexar, which includes San Antonio; Harris, which includes Houston; and Travis, which includes Austin, are not expected until later this week.

The number of registered voters, however, has increased by 713,651 since the May primary without those four counties, she said.

"We've had one of the best organized voter registration drives in the state," Ms. McDaniel said. "The volunteer effort that was made was the best I've seen."

Ms. McDaniel, the state's chief election officer, said since the registration process is non-partisan, it is impossible to tell which political party gained the most from the registration drives.

"I believe this tells us that there's a group of folks out there who have not voted before and may not be as firmly committed to a particular party as those who were already registered and vote regularly," she said.

With the increase in voter registration, Ms. McDaniel forecasts a heavy voter turnout but she said it was too early to predict what percentage of the voters will go to the polls on Nov. 6.

The Democratic primary for U.S. Senate last May showed that one or two voters really do make a difference, she said.

Ms. McDaniel referred to the May 5 primary which drew to a close with U.S. Rep. Kent Hance chalking up 31.23 percent or 455,768 votes, State Sen. Lloyd Doggett gaining 31.36 percent or 454,867 votes and former U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger tallying 31.14 percent for a total of 454,487 votes.

The June 2 runoff between Hance and Doggett was an even closer battle with Doggett edging out Hance by 509 votes.

Dan McClung, a political consultant to the Texas Democratic Party, said Republicans outregistered Democrats in six counties, including Dallas County. He said the parties were even in Harris County.

"The Democratic Party registered more voters in every other county in the state," he said. "There's just more Democrats down here to register."

He said about 10,000 volunteers were involved in registered voters at shopping centers or contacting them by phone or mail.

"At a minimum, I'd say 70 percent of the voters will turn out," McClung predicted. "We'll win by as much as we need, the rules say all we need is one vote. It's going to be a close one."

Sixty-seven percent of the registered voters in Texas went to the polls in 1980 when President Reagan carried the state. In 1982, 49.3 percent voted in the governor's race.

William C. Velasquez, executive director of the Southwest Voter Registration Education Project, said over 1 million Hispanics are registered. He said his group has registered 185,000 of them.

"The major reason for the increase is the number of registration drives," he said.

Velasquez predicts 60 to 65 percent of the Hispanics will vote on Nov. 6 and that 80 percent of those going to the polls will vote for the Mondale-Ferraro ticket.

"From history, you can predict what will happen," he said. "Reagan got the most Hispanic votes of any other president but I believe there will be an erosion. It will go back to the traditional Democratic candidates."

But GOP officials expect Republican candidates to make sharp gains from the increased number of registered voters.

"If our preliminary findings hold true, then I think you'll find that the bulk of those new voters are in Republican precincts," said John Maxwell, state Republican Party director.

Linden Kettlewell, executive director of the Texas Reagan-Bush campaign, said her tabulations show 560,000 new Republican voters have registered since the May primary.

"We are at least even with the Democrats," she said.

Ms. Kettlewell declined to make a prediction on the voter turnout for the November election.

Champ takes on all comers

By GARRY MITCHELL
Associated Press Writer
EAST FOWL RIVER, Ala. (AP) — A gentle coastal breeze rustles the trees on both sides of Bellingrath Road, signaling the onset of cooler days, and that's fine with Eugene Roach.

The cooler weather makes it more comfortable to play checkers outside his Country Plaza store.

Roach, 51, is the checkers champion of the store in rural Mobile County. He has gotten in a lot of practice. For years he has made it an almost daily routine to play checkers while sitting at a table between the snacks and soft drink machines, rising between moves to pump gas or sell store merchandise.

"Nothing is as easy as it looks. Let's play checkers," proclaims the sign above the playing table. "Free six pack of Cokes if you win. I will play anyone!"

That challenge has brought some vehicles to a screeching halt on the two-lane road that leads to Bellingrath Gardens, a popular tourist attraction. Roach said a tour bus had pulled in one day and the driver had kept the passengers waiting while he played checkers.

"I've never given any away," said Roach, referring to the Cokes. "This is the only fella who ever wins on me."

Roach was talking about the man on the other side of the checker board, Clyde Wallace of Mobile, a retired postman and one of the last remaining members of the Gulf Coast Checkers Association, a group that may not be all that widely known.

"We once had about 21 players in the association, but there are only about five or six of us left," Wallace estimated.

Wallace and Roach have been playing checkers for 25 years, most of them while sitting outside the Country Plaza.

"He's about the best friend I have," Wallace said of his checkers partner.

"Whoa. Looks like a draw," Roach said, wiping his checkers from the board and posting the score on the peg board. The game resumed in Roach's favor, 5-2, and three draws.

"It's more scientific than poker," said Roach, claiming some 360 million possible variations. "That's what they say."

Their first moves are determined by cards that have fixed opening patterns, eliminating a lot of repetition.

Roach said the store-window sign challenging checkers players is designed to aggravate them. "An ordinary player wouldn't mind it," he said.

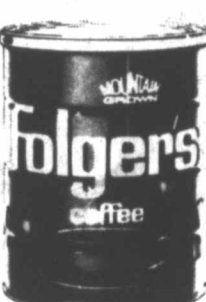

But the sign, winking with a spelling error, also says: "Only a few people have been able to play with almost human intelligence."

Roach said he had begun to master the 64 squares on the playing board while in the Army at Fort Benning, Ga., back in the '50s.

"The Georgia state champion beat me and I couldn't stand it," he recalled. "I started studying it, living in the library until I beat him. I've been playing ever since."

Wallace said he and Roach averaged playing about three hours on "checkers days."

It's quiet as they study the game, the two of them forming something of a rural Southern still-life with checkerboard, the silence often broken only by the periodic refrain: "It's your move."

Baboon transplant doctor avoids limelight as Baby Fae sets record

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — As ethical questions accumulate about the case of Baby Fae, the longest-lived recipient of an animal-to-human heart transplant, the doctor who gave her a baboon's heart is avoiding the limelight, "totally absorbed in nursing this child."

The 2½-week-old infant, whose name and exact age are being withheld, completed her fourth full day with the baboon's heart at 11:35 a.m. Tuesday, surpassing the record set in 1979 by a South African accountant who lived 3½ days with a chimpanzee heart.

Baby Fae, weighing in at 5.7 pounds, remained in serious but stable condition, smiling occasionally, drinking from a bottle every three hours and sleeping intermittently under an oxygen tent, said Loma Linda University Medical Center spokeswoman Joyce McClintock.

Officials Tuesday released the first videotape and color photographs of the infant, and said she showed no signs of rejecting the heart. They said their initial report that the baby was breast feeding was incorrect.

Dr. Leonard L. Bailey, 41, who performed the transplant Friday, didn't attend a Tuesday news conference to hail Baby Fae's milestone.

Instead, other doctors responded to key ethical issues raised by critics: Whether a human heart transplant or experimental corrective surgery would have provided a less risky means to deal with Baby Fae's fatally underdeveloped heart and prolong her survival, and whether her parents were fully informed.

But Baby Fae's mother didn't think much of the critics.

"I was riding in an elevator with (Baby Fae's) mama, and somebody asked her about all this," said Dr. John Mace, pediatrics department chairman. "Her answer was: 'Bull. They don't know what they're talking about.'"

Bailey hasn't appeared at a news briefing since Sunday because "he is totally absorbed in nursing this child," said Dr. David Hinshaw, a surgeon. "He is not a publicity seeker and he is very sensitive about this."

Dr. Ted Mackett, the university's transplant services chief, added, "He's been camped out on the floor taking care of this patient hour by hour... Dr. Bailey feels like he would not like to sensationalize the issue."

Animal rights activists first criticized the operation for sacrificing the baboon and causing ultimately useless suffering to the child. Controversy among doctors began when the transplant team confirmed it had not sought a human organ donor.

The dispute over corrective surgery came up Tuesday.

However, Mackett said Tuesday the heart of a potential human donor, a 2-month-old baby, didn't become available until after the Friday morning baboon transplant — settling the issue raised Sunday night.

Drought persisting despite rains

By The Associated Press
Recent deluges, floods, flash-flood warnings and pools of water soaking some front lawns are no indication the drought that has plagued Texas for more than a year is over.

October has been the wettest in recent Texas history, but weather officials say the cracked soil in some farm regions is soaking up water as fast as the rain falls.

It's been the third straight summer in which parts of Texas saw wells and lakes dry up, crops seared and thousands of head of cattle sold off because farmers lacked grazing grass and no money to buy feed.

Still, the October rains brought some relief.

"We know this has helped a lot of people. We are in better shape. There's no question about it. But we've still got a long way to go before it (the drought) is over," said Jack Stearman, who monitors water supplies for the Texas Department of Water Resources. "There've been some drawbacks, as well."

El Paso, which normally receives less than an inch of rain in October, has gotten twice its normal rainfall for the year. More than 3 inches of rain fell in the area during October and farmers are suffering because they can't get into the drenched fields to harvest cotton and lettuce.

"I don't know what the total loss will be in terms of dollars, but this will hurt us real bad," said Joe Menoz, vice president of the Southwest Irrigated Cotton Farmers Association. "At very best, the quality of the cotton will be much lower."

Wheat farmers in North Central Texas say their lands are too drenched to plant.

And other areas, like Houston, are trying to dry out. Last week, about 1,000 people were forced to flee their homes after heavy rains inundated the area.

But the good news since the water began falling some two weeks ago is the end of water rationing for many Texas cities.

In Corpus Christi, the city council has voted to end the water allocation restrictions that limited households to between 6,000 and 12,000 gallons per month since Aug. 25. Lawn and plant watering restrictions in that city will continue, however, even though officials said they are optimistic that the area's two reservoirs should be back to last year's levels in another two weeks if the runoff from recent showers continues.

But many sections of the state still are far below their average annual rainfall, said Stearman.

Austin has received almost 10 inches of rain during October, compared to 3.38 inches in an average October. But the area remains 6 inches behind for the year.

Abilene, San Angelo and other areas of West and South Central Texas are below normal for the year, according to meteorologist George Bomar.

About 27 cities have lifted voluntary or mandatory water restrictions imposed earlier this year because of inadequate water supplies.

Mattox considers reimbursing state

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox is considering reimbursing the state for a flight to Corpus Christi even though he was on official state business when he attended a political fundraiser, Mattox's press secretary says.

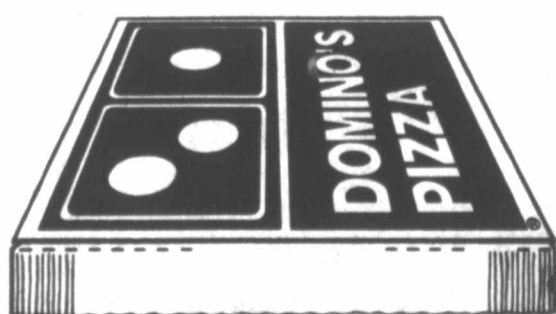

State Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower and Texas Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez have already reimbursed the state for the Oct. 9 flight after reporters asked questions about the official purpose of the trip.

State law prohibits the use of state airplanes for political or personal use.

All of those on the plane, including Mattox, attended a $25-a-person fundraiser for Democratic state Sen. Carlos Truan of Corpus Christi.

Hightower sent a $190 check to the state Department of Human Resources, which operates the airplane, to pay for himself and an aide. The Dallas Morning News reported Tuesday.

MEMORIAL CANDLES—A worshipper outside Warsaw's St. Stanislaw Kostka Church lights a candle in honor of the slain priest, the Rev. Jerry Ropieluszko, Tuesday evening.

Solidarity supporters mourn slain priest in all-night vigil

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa appealed for calm as stunned Poles today mourned a pro-Solidarity priest whose body was found in a river in northern Poland 11 days after his alleged abduction by three members of the secret police.

At St. Stanislaw Kostka church in Warsaw, where the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko's sermons defending Solidarity used to draw several thousand people, lights from hundreds of candles flickered before dawn today along the flower-strewn gates surrounding the building.

Polish authorities on Tuesday suggested the priest might have been abducted and slain as part of a broader conspiracy.

Before the announcement that police frogmen, braving the icy waters of a reservoir on the Vistula river, had found the body on Tuesday, the Communist government had said that three Interior Ministry officers — a captain and two lieutenants — would be charged with the Oct. 19 kidnapping.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban said the three were members of the secret police.

At St. Stanislaw's a middle-aged worker from the Ursus tractor factory near Warsaw brushed away tears as he spoke of Popieluszko's death.

"Father Popieluszko spoke the truth to us in those difficult moments for the nation after Solidarity was destroyed," said the worker. "But Solidarity still exists and will exist."

Walesa, who helped found the now-banned Solidarity as the Soviet bloc's first independent labor union, said after the news of the body's discovery:

"One wanted to kill, and he killed not only a man, not only a Pole, not only a priest — one wanted to kill the hope that it is possible to avoid violence in Poland in political life," he said.

He offered to step down as head of the outlawed federation if it would ensure a peaceful dialogue between Poland's communist authorities and the people.

Parishioners wept in disbelief when a Warsaw priest, the Rev. Andrzej Przekazinski, announced the news about Popieluszko's fate to several thousands of worshippers attending Mass Tuesday evening for the priest.

Popieluszko's church was one of the few places where Solidarity supporters felt unafraid to manifest their support for the labor movement, which was suppressed under the government's imposition of martial law in 1981 and later banned.

Przekazinski, raising his voice over cries of grief, said: "We cannot fall into despair... Our pain is enormous. There are such moments in our lives that we simply stand completely stunned and say 'Oh, God.'"

There were no reports of disturbances following the announcement on state-run television's evening newscast that the 37-year-old priest had been murdered and his body pulled out of a reservoir not far from Torun.

OPEC agrees to production cut

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — An emergency OPEC meeting ended today with agreement on a plan for cutting oil production to prop up prices, Saudi Arabia's Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani announced.

He provided no details of the plan, which calls for trimming the cartel's oil production by 9 percent. A spokesman for the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries secretariat said it would be explained at a news conference later.

Before the start of today's meeting on how to distribute the reductions among OPEC members, a key oil minister, Mana Saeed Oteiba of the United Arab Emirates, walked out of the hotel site, telling reporters he was going to Cologne, West Germany, to consult with his superiors. He said he planned to return to the OPEC meeting later today and declined to elaborate.

The chairman of the emergency meeting said Tuesday, after two days of private talks, that the group agreed to cut the production ceiling of 17.5 million barrels daily by 1.5 million.

The 13 ministers also tentatively agreed how to share the sacrifice, said the chairman, Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto. He said that while some ministers wanted to consult their government before signing, "the finalization of the distribution of the cuts" would be announced today.

The plan is an alternative to having to cut prices. OPEC was forced to consider cutting its production after non-cartel members Norway and Britain reduced their oil prices and OPEC member Nigeria broke ranks with the rest of OPEC and cut its price by $2 a barrel on Oct. 18.

But after the announcements, some ministers said their governments might not go along with the plan. And Gabonese Oil Minister Etienne Guy Mouvanga Tchibba told reporters later that "several formulas" for sharing the output cuts were still under discussion.

Tchibba also said his country, which is the smallest producer in OPEC, may not join in the production cut.

Neither Subroto nor any of the 12 other ministers would say exactly how the cuts would be shared.

Nigeria's oil minister, Tam David-West, told a news conference on Monday that it would be "suicidal" for his country to cut output by even one barrel. Even if the deal is completed and put in force as scheduled on Thursday, there is considerable doubt about whether OPEC will succeed in averting a price drop.

Subroto said Tuesday night: "Tentative agreement is reached on the distribution of this 1.5 million barrels a day cut among the member countries."

He also said "everybody will participate in the production cuts."

But many industry observers are skeptical OPEC can muster the discipline to resist selling more oil when demand rises in the winter heating season.

Oil prices on the open market, where OPEC has no control, edged down slightly Tuesday.

Dying woman will vote for first time

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman with terminal cancer in her hip says she regrets taking her right to vote for granted all her life and now plans to cast her ballot for the first time unless her disease prevents her.

"I'm awfully weak, but I know I'll make it," said Lonnie Parris, 59.

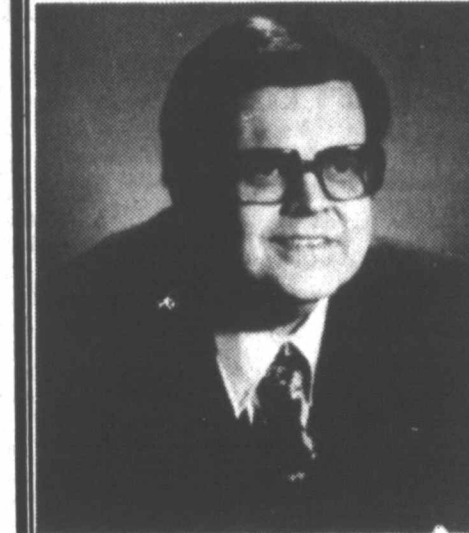

Ms. Parris said she was inspired by a broadcast two weeks ago from an evangelist urging listeners to get out and vote on Nov. 6.

Doctors told Ms. Parris in August that she would die in four to six months. Radiation treatments were discontinued because they were not helping her.

Ms. Parris said she registered two months ago to please an insistent friend. But she said she had not intended of voting until she heard a Houston radio broadcast by the Rev. Lois Wolfe.

Ms. Wolfe has been preaching about the importance of voting since spring.

Country singing star Margo Smith will be in Pampa Nov. 7

Country singer Margo Smith and her band will perform in Pampa at the M.K. Brown Auditorium Wednesday night, Nov. 7, in a special appearance sponsored by the Pampa Noon Lions Club.

Smith first broke onto the country music scene in the 1970s with her top-five hit, "There, I said it." She followed that with a string of hits, including "Save Your Kisses for Me," "It only Hurts for a Little While," "Don't break the Heart That Loves You," "Still a Woman," "Little Things Mean a Lot," and "Paper Loving."

Smith will give her Pampa audience a special treat with her show-stopping yodeling ability, the talent that earned her the nickname of "The Tennessee Yodeler."

Dear Abby

This priest is entitled to have lipstick on collar

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1984 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday, while walking down the street hand in hand with my wife and two daughters, we noticed many hostile stares, and received nasty comments from some of the people who passed by.

Why? Because as a priest of an Eastern Orthodox Church, I wear the traditional black suit and white collar, but it is generally assumed that I am a Roman Catholic priest who has "strayed" and is flaunting it publicly.

Abby, you would be doing approximately 1,500 married Orthodox priests and thousands of Episcopalian priests in the United States a huge service if you would inform your readers that not all priests are Roman Catholic, which is the only church that forbids its priests to marry.

As for the rest of us, we are happily married husbands and fathers.

THE REV. FATHER JOHN BARTKE, ST. MICHAEL ORTHODOX CHURCH, VAN NUYS, CALIF.

DEAR FATHER BARTKE: Thank you for a letter that is sure to educate many, and I hope will still a gaggle of wagging tongues.

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Mad in Dallas," who complained because her husband had to pay $330 a month in child support to his ex-wife who lives in a $100,000 condo.

First, "Mad," let me congratulate your husband. He is one of a minority. In 1982, about 8.4 million households should have been receiving child support. Of these, only 2.9 million actually received anything at all, and only 1.89 million received the full amount ordered!

One of the biggest problems in the child support program is the lack of standardization of awards. Let's hope one of the provisions of the new Federal Child Support Law will fix that. That law requires each state to develop standards for the child support awards by Oct. 1, 1987. These standards will almost certainly take into consideration the needs of the child and the resources available to both responsible parents.

Please encourage your husband to continue paying. The one who will most appreciate it in the long run is his child.

WILLIAM D. KIRBY, DIRECTOR, VERMONT CHILD SUPPORT PROGRAM

DEAR MR. KIRBY: Until I saw my mail concerning child support, I had no idea there were so many millions of people who were angry about it. Let's hope the new Federal Child Support Law will fix the injustices. But instead of a cure, let's consider a prevention.

Hello, young (and old) lovers, wherever you are, hear this: It's all right to fall in love with a person who has children by a previous marriage, but don't marry until you figure out how much will be left after the child support is paid.

Love may be lovelier the second time around, but the law says, "First families come first." It may not be fair, but who said life was fair?

CONFIDENTIAL TO SUFFERING A TERRIBLE LOSS IN VANCOUVER: My condolences, sir. The philosopher Arnold Toynbee put it this way: "There are two parties to the suffering that death inflicts, and in the apportionment of this suffering, the survivor takes the brunt."

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Younger generation turning to neckwear

NEW YORK (AP) — Only a few years ago, it was impossible to sell ties to school- and college-age men, but now the youth market is a growing part of the neckwear business, reports the Neckwear Association of America.

"You couldn't give a young man a tie," says Gerald Andersen, executive director of the association. "Ties had establishment identification and that was a no-no. Also, the whole trend in fashion was dress-down — jeans, T-shirts."

Now, he adds, with the growing competition for jobs and career opportunities, young men want in with the establishment. In addition, the dress-up look, fueled by nostalgia, is in full swing.

And ties are selling briskly. Andersen says. Young men's clothing retailers who have never carried ties before are coming to manufacturers for advice about fixtures and displays. Customers themselves, most of whom have never worn ties before, are seeking instruction in the mysteries of knotting.

Though no definite figures are available, the young men's tie business probably generates $50 million at retail annually and is growing, Andersen says. Most major neckwear manufacturers now have young men's divisions to serve the special styling requirements of that market.

"Like youth itself, the popular looks in ties are diverse and even contradictory," Andersen says. "Colors are bright and electric, or they're black and white and monochromatic. And while skinnies as narrow as 1 1/4 inches are the preferred width, a new look is also emerging, a full 4 1/2 inches wide."

"However," he adds, "it has more in common with the wide ties of the late '40s and early '50s than those of the '70s. It is very narrow at the knot, and short."

While the mature market confines itself to traditional fabrics, anything that can be made into a tie probably will be for the younger set, Andersen notes. Leathers, knits, satins, sequins and even snakeskin are on the materials list.

Styling trends originally adopted by the more adventurous young folk are showing up around the necks of their older brothers, who shop designer lines and department-store neckwear racks. The trends toward narrower shape and bold, '50s-inspired patterns are the most notable, he says.

The market also differs from the mainstream in how ties are worn. Andersen points out. Many youths wear them knotted, but not drawn up to the neck. The top buttons of the shirt are then left open.

COUNTRY CAPTAIN A LA HUBERT'S — A restaurant's version of an old-time recipe.

Country Captain crops up again

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor
A recipe for Country Captain — a lightly curried chicken dish — appeared in a cookbook published early in this century. Ever since, numerous versions of that rule have cropped up.
Here is the latest variation I have come upon, created at Hubert's, a delightful New York restaurant.
COUNTRY CAPTAIN
A LA HUBERT'S
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
3 pounds chicken parts
1 1/4 teaspoons curry powder
2 cups diced tomatoes

1/4 cup water
1 teaspoon salt
Black pepper to taste
2 tablespoons finely chopped drained chutney
2 cups slivered (matchstick size) sweet red pepper
2 cups slivered (matchstick size) green pepper
2 tablespoons flour blended with 1/4 cup dry white wine
2 tablespoons currants
1/4 cup slivered almonds, toasted (see Note)
1 or 2 thinly sliced small scallions

In a large skillet, over moderate heat, heat oil; add chicken and brown on all sides. Push chicken to side of skillet.

Add curry powder to oil in skillet; stir until it darkens — about 10 seconds. Add tomatoes, water, salt, black pepper and chutney; bring to a boil. Simmer, covered, until chicken is almost tender — about 45 minutes.

Add red and green pepper; simmer, covered, until peppers are almost tender — about 3 minutes. Remove chicken to a serving platter and keep hot in a warm oven.

To skillet, add flour-wine mixture and currants; cook, stirring constantly, until thickened — about 3 minutes; pour over chicken. Serve over rice. Garnish with almonds and scallions.

Note: To toast the almonds, spread over bottom of an 11 1/4 by 7 1/2 by 1 1/2-inch baking pan. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven, stirring occasionally, until toasted — 5 to 7 minutes.

Tasty menu from New Zealand

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer
I had never eaten a New Zealand dinner until recently, when that island nation exhibited the art of its Maori people at New York's Metropolitan Museum.

To launch the show, the sponsors gave a banquet at Maxwell's Plum Restaurant in New York. It was a sumptuous spread, featuring a cross section of New Zealand's finest dishes, from the island's lamb to the emerald green kiwifruit that is becoming so popular in America.

Other specialties included a kiwi clam chowder, South Sea mussels and smoked eel with a horseradish sauce. All this was washed down with some excellent New Zealand wines and an island beer.

With cocktails we had tiny lamb chops served cold with a garlic and ginger sauce. Also offered was a pate made from New Zealand venison. Both the native deer and the lamb are frozen for the export market, we were told.

For dessert, kiwifruit was the star, including dishes topped with whipped cream and tarts where the fruit was combined with custard and chocolate.

It has taken Americans some time to get used to kiwifruit, with its fuzzy brown outer covering. But once you slice through that, you discover the bright green interior and tiny black seeds that are also edible. This unusual fruit is not only a delicious dessert, but it makes a fine snack and a good accompaniment to meat dishes.

New Zealanders use their lamb in many ways, including stuffed loin and a mustard-dressed rack. They also feature a cold lamb tossed with pasta and yogurt and mint dressing. That chilled salad and the chops served with the drinks were the first cold lamb dishes I have ever eaten. I can live without either of them, but the hot dishes are great.

New Zealand cooks often get three meals out of a lamb leg by asking the butcher to cut it into four chops, two steaks and a small roast.

Grapes enhance shrimp

Since the 1950s, recipes for chicken salad to which grapes are added have abounded. Much less known is shrimp salad made with grapes.

I myself had never tasted the combination until recently, when I came on a recipe in which the shrimp and grapes are marinated, then served with lettuce, avocado and mayonnaise. Finely chopped scallion or fresh chives make a flavorful garnish. It's a recipe for two or three, but it can easily be doubled. My tasters liked it and so did I.

Two varieties of seedless grapes are excellent to use in this recipe: Thompson Seedless, which varies from light green to golden, is available through November. Ruby Seedless, brilliantly red and comparatively new in markets, is available through January.

SHRIMP AND GRAPE SALAD
2 tablespoons olive oil
3 tablespoons white wine vinegar

2 teaspoons Dijon mustard
Salt and pepper to taste
1/4 pound medium shrimp (cooked, shelled and deveined)

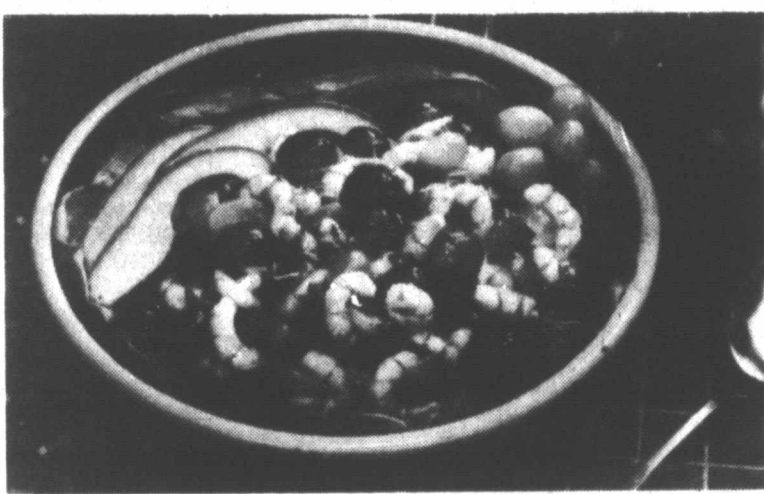

1 cup halved seedless green or red grapes
Lettuce
Avocado slices
Scallion or fresh chives, finely chopped
Mayonnaise, preferably homemade

In a 3- to 4-cup shallow bowl, whisk together oil, vinegar, mustard, salt and pepper.

Cut each shrimp in half lengthwise; fold into oil-vinegar mixture with grapes. Cover tightly and refrigerate for about an hour.

At serving time, arrange lettuce on individual serving plates; add shrimp-grape mixture. Garnish with avocado and scallion. Pass mayonnaise.

Makes 2 to 3 servings.
Note: If you buy cooked shrimp, you will need 8 ounces.

SHRIMP AND GRAPE SALAD — The fruit adds sweet flavor and contrasting color.

Is this someone you know?

Mary is 84 and has lived in her home for 50 years. She raised two handsome sons and cared for a loving husband. Her husband died five years ago, and her two sons left to start families of their own.

The neighborhood has changed over the years and Mary seldom goes out because she is afraid! She stays in and watches TV alone.

Mary always made sure her family was well fed. Now she rarely has the interest or inclination to cook for herself.

During the last few months, Mary's health has been declining and her visits to the doctor have been increasing. Two weeks ago she spent five days in the hospital because her blood pressure was up and she had been having fainting spells.

We have met many Marys over the years and understand their loneliness and despair. We've created a special living environment for important people like Mary, who need:

- a sense of security,
- the warmth of companionship,
- medical attention,
- nutritious meals
- and someone to rely on in emergencies.

Reserves overshadow Rockets' 'twin towers'

HOUSTON (AP) — The largest home opening crowd in the 18-year history of the Houston Rockets franchise came out to see twin towers Akeem Olajuwon and Ralph Sampson grind the Dallas Mavericks into the Summit court.

Instead, they ended up giving a standing ovation for a solid third-quarter defensive performance that allowed the Rockets to roll to 106-84 National Basketball Association victory Monday night. They are 2-0 for the season, with both victories coming over the Mavericks.

With Sampson and Olajuwon both hampered by foul problems, Coach Bill Fitch went to his bench and his oratory to whip the Rockets to victory.

"I told the guys that came off the bench and put some defense out there that they won the game," Fitch said. "That's what it takes to win in this league. In the fourth quarter we got them forced outside and their shots weren't falling."

Sampson scored 18 points and grabbed seven rebounds and Olajuwon hit 10 points and had nine rebounds, but the sellout crowd of 16,016 stood up and cheered the team's defense in the third quarter.

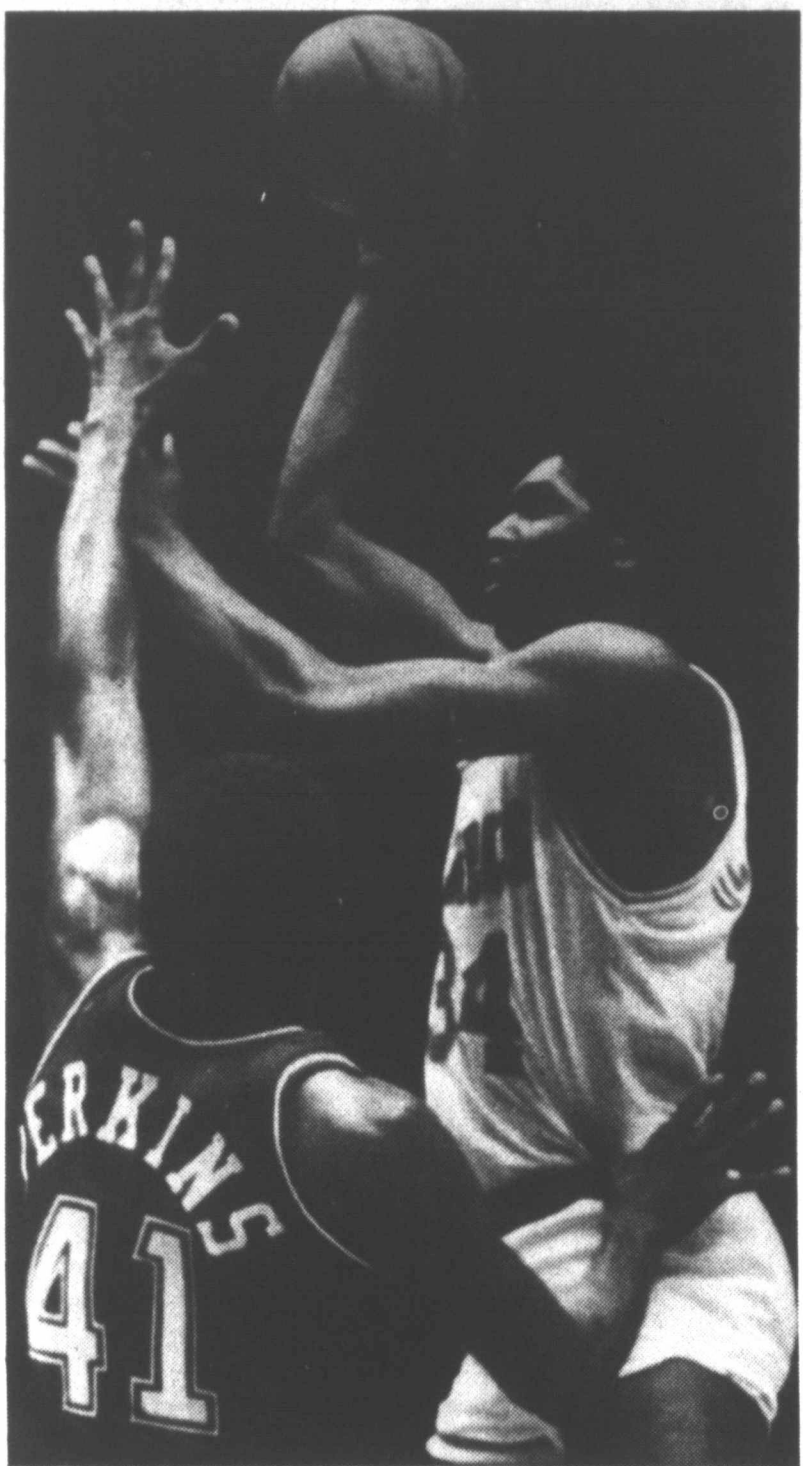

"That might have been a cardiac arrest for me when they give us a standing ovation for defense," Fitch said.

The Rockets didn't give the crowd much to cheer in the first half, falling behind 50-46 at intermission with both Sampson and Olajuwon nursing three fouls each.

Olajuwon had to leave the game in the second quarter with foul problems. "They let us play more in the pros, but I still keep getting called," the rookie from the University of Houston said. "I have to find out why."

Lewis Lloyd broke loose in the open court for 24 points and Rodney McCray added 16 to bring the Rockets back in the second half. McCray also was the leading rebounder with 12, leading Houston to a 54-42 advantage.

"They're too big for us," Mavericks Coach Dick Motta said. "They had ten more offensive boards in the first quarter and fourteen more at the half. I'm afraid to look at the second half, we really crumbled."

Spurs cruise past Denver despite Nuggets' top effort

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Doug Moe knows what he is talking about.

San Antonio defeated Denver 126-118 Tuesday night at Hemisfair Arena, and Moe, who coached the Spurs for four years, knows it takes more than a hot offense to win in San Antonio.

"This is the best game we have played here in years," said Moe. "But to win here you have to have the breaks. Fouls took away our aggressiveness in the fourth quarter."

The Spurs saw a 12-point second-half lead dwindle to 3 at the start of the fourth quarter before John Paxson and George Gervin went to work.

Paxson, a second-year guard from Notre Dame, scored 10 points in the final quarter while Gervin added 6.

San Antonio jumped to an 8-4 lead and reeled off 10 straight points for a 20-10 advantage midway through the first quarter.

Denver battled back to come within 1 at 55-54 with 1:28 remaining in the half.

The Nuggets took the halftime lead 58-57 on a layup from Dan Issel.

San Antonio scored 8 of the first 10 points to open the second half but Denver crept to within 3 before Paxson and Gervin found the hot hand.

"We really played well tonight," said Paxson. "We had some defensive stands when we needed them."

Gervin and Johnny Moore paced the Spurs with 18 points each. Mike Mitchell and Artis Gilmore had 17 each as seven Spurs scored in double figures.

"It was not your typical San Antonio-Denver game," said Nugget assistant coach Allan Bristow, a former Spur player and assistant coach.

"They're usually high scoring. The amount of fouls called took us out of the game," he said.

Denver was whistled for 35 fouls while the Spurs had 32.

Alex English led Denver with 27 points, while Calvin Natt scored 26 for the Nuggets.

It was the 10th straight victory for San Antonio over Denver in Hemisfair Arena and the Spurs' seventh win in the last 10 meetings with the Nuggets.

Franco released

Harris cut 192 yards short of old rushing record

SEATTLE (AP) — When Curt Warner was lost for the season in the Seattle Seahawks' opening game, they called on 34-year-old Franco Harris to try to fill the void.

On Tuesday, after seven games as a member of the Seahawks and still 192 yards short of Jimmy Brown's old record, the National Football League's No. 3 career rushing leader was released by Coach Chuck Knox.

"Franco Harris and I had a long talk and we kind of mutually agreed that it would be in everyone's best interest if we released him," Knox said in the surprise announcement. "He made a contribution to our football team. It may not be reflected in the statistics, but he gave us a big lift when we needed it and he's really a class guy. I wish him well."

In his 13th NFL season, the man who helped the Pittsburgh Steelers capture four Super Bowls was slow and tentative as a Seahawks' running back. He bore little resemblance to the slashing fullback who performed in a Steelers' uniform for 12 glory-filled seasons.

His so-called Immaculate Reception for Pittsburgh against Oakland in a 1972 playoff game was only a faded memory.

By releasing Harris, the Seahawks will make him available to the NFL's other 27 clubs.

Asked whether Harris had indicated he wanted to try to play for another club, Knox said, "We didn't get into that."

Harris' agent, Bart Beier, told KDKA-TV in Pittsburgh that the running back's chances of being picked up by another NFL team were slim.

"It's late in the season and unlikely unless someone were injured," Beier explained.

Harris could be not reached for comment. The Seahawks signed Harris — reportedly to a one-year contract for an estimated $500,000 — prior to their second game after Warner suffered a season-ending knee injury against the Cleveland Browns.

Harris' contract was not guaranteed and he was paid only through Seattle's 24-0 victory Monday night over San Diego, a club spokesman said.

He carried the ball three times for just three yards in the victory, which gave the Seahawks a 7-2 record.

Harris leaves the Seahawks with 12,120 career rushing yards. Brown's old NFL rushing record of 12,312 yards was broken by the Chicago Bears' Walter Payton earlier this season.

With Seattle, Harris carried the ball 68 times for 170 yards, a 2.5 average, and no touchdowns. He was released by the Steelers in the preseason following a contract dispute.

Knox said Harris officially will be released today. He said the decision to let him go was made Tuesday.

Asked what Harris had to say about his release, Knox replied, "My statement covers that."

Sooners may face forfeit

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A meeting of officials from the Big Eight Conference schools next week could decide whether Oklahoma's football team should forfeit its victory over Kansas State because of an ineligible player.

Big Eight Conference Commissioner Carl James said Tuesday league officials are trying to put together a meeting of school representatives for Nov. 7 to discuss the issue. The Daily Oklahoman reported.

Backup quarterback Mike Clifton played in the game against Kansas State but was found to be ineligible. His brief play for California State Polytechnic University several years ago used up a year of his eligibility early in his college career that Oklahoma coaches thought he still had.

The league's television committee has a meeting scheduled for Nov. 7 and several of the faculty representatives and athletic directors are on the committee.

Oklahoma faculty representative Dan Gibbons said Tuesday there's no doubt that Clifton is ineligible because he played eight downs at Cal Poly before transferring to a junior college. He used up two years of eligibility at the junior college, then played for Oklahoma last year as well as this season.

Oklahoma is asking the conference for an exception to the rule that a school must forfeit a game in which it uses an ineligible player.

"We're asking for an exception because we feel there are no indications of any intentional fault or negligence on our part or on Clifton's part," Gibbons said.

Danny to start, but he may not last

Landry won't hesitate to switch quarterback in mid-game

DALLAS (AP) — Danny White will start at quarterback against the New York Giants on Sunday but look out for a possible Tom Landry surprise later in the game.

The Dallas Cowboys' coach said on Tuesday that young Gary Hogeboom could see action at any time.

Hogeboom sat on the bench last week while White's 1984 starting debut was a smash success.

"I think Danny will start but I'll use a quarterback substitute from time to time and not necessarily whether the game is won or lost," Landry said.

Landry refused to give the Giants any help on "When" Hogeboom might get a call. "When that (bringing in Hogeboom) happens I'm not at liberty to say. Our team has confidence in both quarterbacks," Landry said.

Landry said one of the reasons he wanted to start White against the Giants is his experience.

The Giants whipped Dallas 28-7 last month with Hogeboom unable to handle the blitz from linebacker Lawrence Taylor.

"Surely Danny will handle it better," said Landry. "He sees things Gary doesn't see."

White threw two touchdown passes in his 1984 starting debut as Dallas beat Indianapolis 22-3 on Sunday.

The oddsmakers made the Cowboys 7-point favorites for Sunday's game in Texas Stadium and Landry called it "amazing."

"I'm happy they think so much of us," Landry said.

Landry said the Cowboys are a better team than the one the Giants beat earlier.

"We have more firepower now," Landry said. "We have (wide receiver) Tony Hill back and Danny had a good game at quarterback. That earlier game shouldn't have any effect on us."

Landry said the Cowboys, who are tied with St. Louis atop the National Conference

Eastern Division with 6-3 records, have a tough road.

The Cowboys must play in St. Louis the Sunday after the Giant game.

"We have a big hill to climb," Landry said. "But that's alright. If we can't climb it, we don't belong there (at the top) anyway."

Landry said the Cowboy running game was showing signs of life.

"It looked like it did last year against the Colts," Landry said. "It sure makes our passing game a lot better. I think we can be pretty good."

Landry said rookie middle linebacker Eugene Lockhart could see a lot of action against the Giants.

"We'll work him in as much as we can," Landry said. "Bob Breunig's back is still touch and go. When you have someone who hurts his back just bending over to tie his shoes, then you have to get somebody ready to fill his place."

Raiders capture Tiger League title

The Raiders downed the Colts 27-0 to win the Tiger League football championship Tuesday night, completing an unbeaten sweep through all league opposition.

The Raiders were undefeated and unscored on in five games this season, the first time such a feat has been accomplished in 14 years. Their victories were by margins of 39-0, 33-0, 30-0, 27-0 and 27-0.

In Tuesday night's game, Quincy Williams led the offense with three touchdowns. Chris Pollard had one touchdown and an extra point, while Paul Brown and Craig

Stevens scored a PAT each.

Defensive standouts for the champions included Quincy and Jason Williams, Ryan Smethers, Paul Brown, Wayne Cavanaugh, Patrick Jackson, Shawn Blackman, Brad Cryer and Rodney Brown.

Cananah came up with an interception, while Smethers and Brown recovered fumbles for the winners.

Standouts on defense for the Colts included Kurt Ridley, Phil Sexton, Steve Sanders, Jimmy Mayberry and Bryan Ellis, who recovered a fumble.

Volleyball team defeated

DUMAS—The Pampa High School volleyball team lost out in its bid for a spot in the state playoffs, losing to Borger in a sudden-death match for second place in final district standings Tuesday night.

Borger won the first game 15-10. Pampa rebounded for a 15-6 triumph in the second game, then was edged out 16-14 in the decisive contest.

The loss was not due to lack of effort, said Pampa Coach Phil Hall.

"They never quit and played hard all the way," said the coach. "The pressure was on us since we were the defending champions and we may have been trying too hard."

"The girls played well, but things just didn't go our way," Hall added. All 12 players saw action as he tried to get the right combination of the floor.

Monica Kelly had 13 kills in 24 attempts, Amy Voyles had six in 10 tries and Teresa Perkins played an inspired game in the backcourt to lead the Pampa effort.

Pampa finished 21-11 for the year.

Hernandez gets bargaining chip

Tiger ace Cy Young winner

DETROIT (AP) — Now that Detroit relief ace Willie Hernandez has won the American League Cy Young Award, he and the Tigers' front office can get down to some serious bargaining on a new contract.

Hernandez, whose near-perfect relief pitching played a major role in the Tigers' drive to the World Series championship, was named Tuesday as winner of the award as the American League's best pitcher.

"This is an incredible award, not only for me, but for all of Puerto Rico," Hernandez said by telephone from his home in Aguada, P.R. "I feel like I won the award for all of the people."

Hernandez made it clear the day before the award was announced, however, that he intends to cash in on his brilliant 1984 season when he officially requested a trade.

The Tigers now must satisfy him financially or trade Hernandez by March 15. Otherwise, he can become a free agent.

"I was one of the keys to Detroit winning the world championship, and that's the reason I was involved in the Cy Young Award," said Hernandez, who just recently asked his former agent, Brian David of Chicago, to enter the bargaining.

The Tigers are believed to have made Hernandez a four-year offer worth $4.6 million. That would make him the highest-paid pitcher on the club, ahead of starters Jack Morris and Dan Petry who currently earn about $800,000 a year.

Hernandez is believed to be demanding $5 million, meaning that he and the Tigers are only $400,000 apart.

"I don't want to be traded," Hernandez said. "I'll negotiate to stay in Detroit. I don't believe winning the Cy Young Award will change my demands for a contract in any way. Everything is the same."

Jim Campbell, the Tigers' president, said he didn't expect to have to increase the offer to Hernandez because of the award.

"We figured he'd win the award all along," Campbell said. "We don't need the award to tell us what Willie Hernandez meant to the Detroit Tigers this season. He's had a whale of a year and we're trying to compensate him accordingly."

Hernandez, who joined the Tigers in a trade with the Philadelphia Phillies just before the 1984 season, had 32 saves in 33 save opportunities, five more saves than he had in a mediocre seven-year career in the National League.

He combined that with a 9-3 won-lost record and a 1.92 earned run average as the Tigers coasted to the AL East crown, then went on to win the playoffs over Kansas City and World Series over San Diego. Hernandez saved the third and deciding game of the playoffs, then added two more saves in the World Series, in which he had a 1.69 ERA.

The voting was based on regular-season performances.

Dallas newspaper blamed for scaring Blitz investors

DALLAS (AP) — A local businessman who led a failed bid to bring the Chicago Blitz football franchise to Dallas says he'll keep trying to give fans "a less expensive alternative" to the Dallas Cowboys.

He blamed both of Dallas' newspapers for the demise of an earlier proposal he said was almost nailed down.

Jody Tallal, a wealthy investments broker, announced Tuesday that a negative column by a Dallas sportswriter scared off an investor that was almost ready to buy 60 percent of the Blitz' United States Football League franchise.

The public is invited to attend.

Miami downs Benjamin

BENJAMIN — Larry Back caught two touchdown passes in the second half as Miami defeated Benjamin, 14-6, last Friday night in six-man football action.

Benjamin opening the scoring on a rainy night with a 32-yard pass from Foster Giddeon to Glen Heard in the first quarter. The extra point kick was blocked and that 6-0 score stood for the first half.

On the opening kickoff of the second half, the Warriors drove downfield and scored on Andy Fountain's 46-yard pass to Back. The conversion run failed.

With 3½ minutes left in the game, Miami's David Scott intercepted a Giddeon pass on the Warrior 10 and returned it 25 yards to the 35. Miami marched deep into Benjamin territory and Scott threw a 9-yard scoring pass to Back, who also kicked the extra point.

Scott was Miami's leading rusher with 37 yards. Miami had 62 yards rushing and 120 yards passing in the game. Benjamin had 123 yards rushing and 78 yards passing.

Miami is in fourth place in the District 3-1A race and must win its remaining two games to have a shot at a playoff spot. Overall, the Warriors are 4-2-1.

Miami hosts Guthrie Friday night.

"I am beginning to understand the allegations in the anti-trust suit concerning the effects of negative press on the USFL's ability to compete," he said.

The USFL has filed an anti-trust suit against the National Football League contending the established league is attempting to run the USFL out of business.

Everything was in place for the team's move to the Cotton Bowl — including Tallal's exclusive lease for a USFL team at the stadium — until a Dallas Times Herald reporter found out about the impending deal, Tallal said.

"We had always thoroughly intended to keep this whole affair confidential," Tallal said. The reporter found "that I was party to an exclusive option to lease the Cotton Bowl for USFL football games."

Tallal said he planned to join two businessmen — Kit Bradshaw, main owner of Christoffers Gourmet restaurant chain, and Paul Zarynoff, a sports management consultant from Atlanta — in a plan to acquire 40 percent of the Blitz.

The 60-percent partner — whom Tallal would not identify — was to be "a very conservative, locally based institution" that felt a football team "could be a good image-builder for them," Tallal said.

But the day that institution's board of directors met to consider the purchase, "a very negative article" appeared in a Dallas newspaper questioning whether Dallas could support the National Football League's Cowboys as well as the Blitz, Tallal said.

The Dallas Morning News said the negative article referred to by Tallal was a column by sportswriter Randy Galloway that questioned the support a USFL team would receive in Dallas.

The deal subsequently fell through, Tallal said.

He noted, however, that he has had inquiries from other USFL teams considering making Dallas home, but he declined to name any teams "because we've already seen what can happen."

Blitz owner Eddie Einhorn had said Monday that an agreement was reached with Tallal.

Tallal said "we will continue to explore other alternatives."

"I firmly believe this community needs and should have a less expensive alternative to professional football than $18 per ticket," he said, referring to the price of a ticket to a Cowboys game.

Mexicans celebrate Day of the Dead with toy skeletons

MEXICO CITY (AP) — In the heart of Mexico City, a 10-year-old boy and his younger sister stare at a display of toy skeletons and sugar skulls in the window of a candy store.

"I want that one," the girl tells her mother, pointing to a tiny casket surrounded by mourning skeletons.

For weeks, Mexicans have been preparing for Nov. 2, the Day of the Dead — a bizarre blend of pagan and Roman Catholic tradition and for many the nation's most important holiday.

"In no other country will you find this," says Jorge Gonzalez Yergara, manager of the 110-year-old Dulceria de Celaya candy shop on Cinco de Mayo street. "It is a tradition we inherited from the Aztecs, who worshiped death as much as life."

Octavio Paz, Mexico's leading poet and essayist, has written: "Death is present in our fiestas, our games, our loves and our thoughts.... We are seduced by death."

The fascination with death is most evident in the weeks leading up to the Day of the Dead.

Children play with toy skeletons engaged in tasks ranging from typing to pulling teeth. Friends exchange poems that jokingly refer to each other's funeral. Radio stations play song after song about death and television stations air special programs about the subject.

Bakery shelves are piled high with special bread in the shape of bones. People buy and eat sugar skulls that carry their names.

"In Mexico death does not inspire terror. Families are intimate with death. Mexicans' relationship with their dead continues, especially on the Day of the Dead," anthropologist Victoria Miret says.

That intimacy comes from the ancient Aztecs, who saw death as a natural transition from life and honored their dead in commemorations sometimes lasting months. Life and death were represented in the same goddess, Coatlicue, who carried on her waist a human skull, the eyes still intact.

The Day of the Dead falls on the Catholic holiday, All Souls Day, Nov. 2, but incorporates some very un-Catholic rituals.

In remote mountain hamlets and jungle villages, families make altars in their homes, filling them with flowers and the favorite foods of dead relatives.

On Nov. 1, the Day of the Dead Children, they make tamales without peppers so the spirits of the "innocent ones" won't have to eat spices. To prevent the dead children from losing their way, a path from the altar to the front door using the petals of marigolds, known as the flower of the dead.

The following day, they carry food to local cemeteries, place it on the graves of their relatives, and wait for the "souls" to have their fill before joining in the feast. Children playing tag around the graves and the explosion of fireworks add to the festive atmosphere. People believe the dead have partaken of the offered food when its taste goes flat.

Mrs. Miret says the idea of sharing food with the dead is Indian, as is the Mexican attitude toward death.

"In the view of the Mexicans, especially on the Day of the Dead, there is no clear line between the dead and living. They are never far away, but on this day they approach even closer and rejoin the family," she says.

Mrs. Miret smiles, recalling an altar prepared by a widow for her dead husband that was decorated with photos of his favorite soccer team and "spectacular naked women."

For the widow, "the dead man was not some incorporeal spirit. He continued to be her husband, with his passions, with his defects," she says.

Despite government efforts to keep the tradition alive by putting up displays in museums and promoting it through schools, a growing number of educated Mexicans, especially in large cities, are turning away from the Day of the Dead because they find it embarrassing.

Instead, they are adopting a foreign celebration — Halloween.

Local outlets of stores like Woolworth and Sears do a good business in witches' costumes and ogre masks. On Halloween in middle-class neighborhoods children dressed as devils, ghosts and other decidedly un-Mexican fiends go door to door with plastic pumpkins asking for candy.

Psychiatrists and anthropologists say rejection of the ancient tradition comes at a price.

"Death has become threatening, something to be feared," Mrs. Miret says. "The middle class has forgotten how to incorporate death into their lives."

OPPOSITION MARCH—Riot policemen disperse opposition followers as they march along the main street in the financial district of Makati, Philippines. The marchers, led by Aqapito Aquino, brother of assassinated opposition leader Benigno Aquino, were calling for the resignation of Philippine President Ferdinand E. Marcos and the trial by the "people's court" of military men implicated in the Aquino murder. (AP Laserphoto)

Six die in anti-government protests

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Demonstrators battled police early today, defying a curfew imposed to curb violence that took at least six lives during one of the largest protests in 11 years of military rule.

Residents in at least a dozen working and middle-class districts in Santiago reported that demonstrators erected flaming barricades and threw rocks at riot police deployed in the capital by President Augusto Pinochet's military regime.

Authorities said 38 people were injured, including 16 police officers, and 48 were arrested as a Marxist-called national strike crippled public transportation Tuesday and erupted in disorders in scores of Santiago neighborhoods.

All of the reported deaths occurred on Tuesday, the second straight day of protests calling for an end to military rule and a return to democracy. The showdown only seemed to harden Pinochet's resistance to moving Chile quickly toward democracy.

Pinochet threatened in a speech Monday to declare a state of siege if the situation got out of hand. He also ruled out prompt legalization of political parties or any change in the four-man junta's prerogative to name Chile's president in 1989.

Police and military patrols moved through Santiago streets to enforce the 10 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew imposed by the Santiago military commander, Gen. Rene Vidal. At least three helicopters hovered above the city after the curfew started.

Despite the defiance of the off-the-streets curfew, reports indicated that the patrols did not move against the demonstrators but kept watch on some key areas and guarded strategic points such as power plants, government installations, subway stations and tracks.

The soldiers were only seen in the streets after the curfew began. Earlier during the protests, riot police confronted the angry demonstrators.

Several neighborhoods were blacked out, apparently by demonstrators who knocked down overhead power lines by throwing chains at them.

Braniff to cut fares

DALLAS (AP) — Troubled Braniff Inc. has announced price cuts up to 75 percent off normal coach fares effective Nov. 5, the same day it is cutting back service to 10 cities.

In another development, the airline announced Tuesday that Ron Ridgeway, a former Braniff executive, has been named company president succeeding William D. Slattery.

Slattery resigned last Wednesday, the day Braniff announced it was cutting service to half its major markets in order to survive.

In yet another development Tuesday, trustees of the BRNF Liquidating Trust filed suit in federal court in Fort Worth to stop Braniff from entering into agreements that may violate Braniff's lease for 30 aircraft from the trust.

Braniff's latest fare discounts are designed to attract sampling of the discount carrier's service. The discounts are unrestricted, requiring no advanced purchase or minimum stay.

They fare cuts drew a quick response from American Airlines Inc., which matched the Braniff fares on a "flight specific basis," offering cut-rate seats on flights that operate at similar times as Braniff.

The Braniff fares, which can be bought now, expire Nov. 19 and tickets must be used by that date.

During the two week "special" period, Braniff trips from Dallas to Chicago, Denver and Phoenix will cost $59 one-way. Tickets to Los Angeles, New York, Washington and Las Vegas will run $79. Tickets to San Francisco and Boston will be priced at $89.

A normal one-way coach ticket to New York, for example, costs $334.

In American's match, no advanced purchase will be required during the first week, although the airline said it would require round-trip ticketing and a Saturday night stay.

During the second-week of the sale, American will require a seven-day advance purchase.

Delta Air Lines Inc. said Tuesday it would match American's second-week pricing phase.

Despite the cuts in prices and routes, "We remain committed to building Braniff into a viable airline," said Braniff Vice Chairman Pat Foley, after making the announcement Tuesday of Ridgeway's appointment.

"The task of building the new Braniff requires the strongest possible leadership. We have therefore selected Ridgeway whose extensive airline background enhances his qualifications for this position," Foley said.

Ridgeway, 38, was with Braniff International from 1979 until 1983. His most recent position was senior vice president-customer service.

He resigned to join SMB Stage Line, Inc., an all-cargo airline based in Dallas-Fort Worth, as chief operating officer, and SMB Management Services, an aviation service and real estate company, as president and part owner.

Names in news

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan needs a facelift, Walter Mondale needs a "tea bag" treatment to reduce the puffiness around his eyes and George Bush's eyebrows need a trim. But Geraldine Ferraro needs only a "minor tune-up" to become a perfect 10, according to a Hollywood beauty expert.

Daniel Eastman, author of "Face Fitness," a skincare book for men, has rated the candidates in the upcoming presidential election according to their facial problems.

"I'll give President Reagan an 8½ on my image scale," Eastman said. "In a recent debate, Reagan proclaimed that he wore no makeup, which is hard to swallow. Do you suppose Nancy pinches his cheeks before he goes on TV?"

He said the president could use a facelift and should apply moisturizers to help smooth out and soften his wrinkles, which are "beginning to look like a road map of the back woods of Kentucky."

Mondale "needs to spruce up that drab, stiff, and 'wimpy' image," said Eastman, whose clients include Cher, Suzanne Somers, Johnny Mathis and Vidal Sassoon. He gave Mondale an 8.

Bush rated the lowest score, 7½. His eyebrows "remind me of an untrimmed hedge," Eastman said this week.

Ms. Ferraro scored a whopping 9. "She is skilled at applying her makeup, but she should try to play up her upper lip, which is her weakest facial feature," he said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Joan Rivers is deciding "day by day," based on her husband's improvement from a heart attack, whether to resume making professional appearances, a spokeswoman says.

Ms. Rivers was to host Johnny Carson's "The Tonight Show" this week, but was replaced by comedian David Brenner on Monday and Tuesday. Spokesman Richard Grant said he did not know whether she would appear on the talk show the rest of the week.

Edgar Rosenberg, 56, often the subject of Ms. Rivers' jokes, suffered a heart attack Oct. 18 and was in critical condition Tuesday at UCLA Medical Center, Grant said.

As soon as Rosenberg's condition stabilizes, Ms. Rivers will resume her busy schedule, including a rescheduling of activities postponed as a result of her husband's illness, he said.

HAGERSTOWN, Md. (AP) — Jessica Lange and Ed Harris are starring in "Sweet Dreams," a Home Box Office movie about the late country singer Patsy Cline, but the film company still is looking for supporting actors and extras.

Casting calls were held Tuesday in Martinsburg, W. Va., where part of the film will be shot, said casting assistant Darlyn Stringer. Shooting will also be done in Hagerstown.

"Sweet Dreams" is the story of the later years in the life of Ms. Cline, who was born in Winchester, Va., and died in a 1963 plane crash. HBO will release the film to theaters.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va. (AP) — James Petersen, who first took his "Playboy Advisor" column on the lecture circuit a year ago, says it gave him an eerie feeling he was reliving his campus life in the mid-1960s.

"The very first question I got at the very first lecture I did was, 'What do you think of premarital sex?' I couldn't believe anyone was still using the word 'premarital,'" Petersen said this week.

Rancher recalls roundups on Matador Ranch

By GERRY BURTON

Labbock Avalanche-Journal
MATADOR, Texas (AP) — It was a cattleman's paradise — springled range nestled in caprock canyons that formed natural pastures, separated and yet united. A cow, at the most, had to walk only two miles to water, and the creek bottoms were so solid she didn't bog down when she got there. An exception to the creek-laced range was one appropriately named Boggy.

Canyon walls protected cattle from winter winds. Breezes over water helped keep the temperature down in summer.

"My granddad had traveled all over, and he thought this was the best," said L. Bundy Campbell, looking over range around Mott Creek that moves on to pick up Chimney, Boggy and Salt before ending in the Middle Pease River.

His grandfather was H.H. "Paint" Campbell, a founder and manager of the Matador Ranch in 1879 and first manager for the Matador after it sold to a syndicate in Scotland in 1882.

When 15 corporations were formed to sell the massive Matador range in the 1950s, Bundy Campbell was original purchaser of the Mott Corporation. He retained eight sections and sold the rest to his brother, Harold, and J.D. and W.E. Burleson. The Burlesons took the Mott area.

Campbell recalls the first time, in 1926, that he ever came to Boggy country. The cattleman, son and grandson of cattlemen, was then what he termed a nester, a man who settled a pocket of land inside cattle range and went to raising cattle for himself.

Texas cattle range was in a checkerboard pattern, half of which could be bought from railroads, which got it from the state for surveying or building rails, and half of it school land that could be leased by cattlemen.

"A nester homesteaded a little land, usually on key water inside a range." Though his grandfather had built up the Matador's checkerboard range, the Campbells later became nesters with their nest of land when school land came up for homesteading.

When the Matador wagon came close to a nester's land inside the Matador perimeter, the nester joined the wagon for the sweep around the near pastures to help with roundup while rounding up any of his cattle that might be straying.

"Nothing," he said when asked what he was paid. "They were doing me a favor, rounding up my cattle."

Nesters were allowed to prowl around Matador range before the roundup to pick up strays, and Campbell could point out his own stock in a gathered herd.

Campbell left home about six miles away at 3 a.m. to arrive at the Matador wagon by breakfast and then on to the "splitting-up ground" by daylight.

The splitting-up ground usually was a rise where the lay of the land was explained to any newcomers who might get lost in the canyons. Then two leaders, one for right and one left, spread their cowhands to either side to drive all cattle to the

Inauguration the day after Super Bowl

By JANET STAIHAR

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Now that the election carping is drawing to a close, minds on Capitol Hill are busy tackling the question of whether folks will be up for the inaugural ceremonies the day after Super Bowl Sunday.

Washington, D.C., loves the Redskins. And while things haven't been going well for them lately, corporate executives are already making inquiries around the city about where to hold back-to-back Super Bowl and inaugural bashes Jan. 20 and 21.

Many cavernous rooms in the Senate and House office buildings are booked up for post-inaugural hooplas even at this early date. In years past, invitations to those receptions serving lobster or shrimp were the most cherished. Sometimes, though, gaining entry requires only showing up dressed fashionably — if you have tickets in the first place for the swearing-in ceremony itself.

If you want to watch the political Super Bowl, here are a few tips from John Chambers, the chief aide for the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies.

Contact your senator or member of the House of Representatives to try to get one of the 100,000 tickets, all free, that will be printed for the swearing-in.

There will be a total of 25,000 seats and 75,000 standing spaces about evenly distributed to all the members of Congress. Senators may get slightly more because of their exalted status.

Front rows are reserved for the news media — somewhere about 600 seats are made available for print and broadcast reporters.

branding site. "The way the mesquite was then, we had to drive the cattle together into a mesquite thicket where there was a prairie dog town, the most open place for roundup."

Cowboys held the herd while the branding crew worked. Flankers who picked up and threw the calves were spelled now and then by those holding the herd. Those handling the irons, needles, knives and de-horners kept at their tasks all day.

A cowboy at roundup, Campbell said, had 12 horses to make it through the roundup.

The night horse was staked close to where the cowboy spread his bedroll. It was ready for any night work that might arise and on hand for the first pre-dawn ride to the splitting-up ground and the gather.

After the gather, cowboys took turns leaving the herd to catch a new mount from the remuda, brought close to roundup ground by the horse wrangler.

The 12 Matador camps had camp men and their wives at each. The wagon worked each camp in turn.

When screwworm infestation in branded cattle got too much for the camp man, the wagon moved on, cowboys came back through "to do the mavericking" — catching and branding any cattle that had been wandering when the wagon came by.

One isolated pasture was kept free of cattle except when used to hold cattle for shipping — sort of an early-day feedlot — on grass allowed to grow lush for just such an occasion.

An extra man was placed with the camp man to help out in winter. When the cowboys found a cow not wintering too well, they took her to the special pasture reserved for better feed.
