Justices delay abortion clinic protests case

States win right to ban write-in voting

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Supreme Court ruled Monday that states can prohibit write-in voting in elections.

However, the ruling is unlikely to affect Ross Perot's undeclared presidential bid because his supporters are expected to successfully petition to get the Texas billionaire's name on the ballot in all 50 states.

The 6-3 ruling came in a challenge to Hawaii's election law, but some other states also ban write-in voting and many more put restrictions on writing in the names of candidates.

"Election laws will invariably impose some burden upon individual rights," Justice Byron White wrote for the majority. Hawaii's ban on write-in voting "does not impose an unconstitutional burden," the court concluded.

However, Justice Anthony Kennedy protest-

WASHINGTON — In a surprise announcement Monday, the Supreme Court said it would defer until next term a ruling on whether federal judges have authority under a Reconstruction-era civil rights law to order protesters to stop blocking access to abortion clinics.

The case was one of the most closely watched of the current term and had been scheduled for decision before the term ends in the next few weeks. It will now be scheduled for a new argument after the next term begins in October.

The case gained high political visibility when the Bush administration joined the anti-abortion group Operation Rescue, which brought the case to the Supreme Court, to argue that the Ku Klux

Negotiators in Rio create watchdog environment panel

■ United States draws more criticism by pressing European allies not to break with its position on global warming.

Associated Press

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — Negotiators on Monday night created a new U.N. commission to monitor compliance with environmental treaties and review progress toward the goals of the Earth Summit.

EARTH SUMMIT '92

"I think it's one of the most important accomplishments" of the summit, said Kathy Sessions, an analyst with the United Nations Association of the United States.

Scott Hajost of the Environmental Defense Fund said the commission would be as powerful as countries allow it to be.

"The proof is going to be in the follow-up by government," said Hajost, a former State Department attorney. Nevertheless, he said, "I'm pleased we've got this on the table."

He praised the United States for its role in the negotiations establishing the commission, called the U.N. Commission on Sustainable Development.

It was the first piece of good news to emerge from the Earth Summit concerning the United States. Washington has been severely criticized for its opposition to many of the Earth Summit's goals. Europe and Japan have deserted it on most issues, leaving the United States nearly alone in its opposition.

Four environmental groups said in a news release the Commission vote adds courthouse bailiff post

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

The Midland County Commissioners' Court, in a 3-1-1 vote, on Monday created the post of courthouse bailiff to strengthen courthouse security.

The post was proposed last year by Midland jurists whose courts are in the Midland County Courthouse. These district court judges — Pat Baskin, Dean Rucker, and John Hyde — would fill the position, according to the motion proposed by Commissioner Win Brown.

'You can hardly come into the courthouse without seeing someone who has a gun.'
— Guy McCrary, commissioner

"Since this was requested by the district judges, we felt that the district judges should have the say-so on what to do on it," Brown said.

The judges are to select from five finalists.

British royal melodrama shakes political establishment

By Bernard D. Kaplan

■ Analysis

PARIS — Allegations in a new book about Britain's Princess Diana could trigger the monarchy's most threatening crisis since the abdication of King Edward VIII more than a half century ago.

The book's assertions about repeated suicide attempts by the Princess of Wales because of her husband Charles' indifference and his alleged liaison with another woman have shaken Britain's political establishment, raising fears for the future of the throne.

On the face of it, the latest media uproar about the tempestuous married life of the heir to the crown and his much-publicized wife is merely another in what recently has seemed to be a nonstop series of royal scandals.

But the new allegations, made by self-styled "royal biographer" Andrew Morton, go beyond the customary gossip-column sniping at the private indiscretions of the royal family.

Unlike past dirt-dishing exposes about members of Queen Elizabeth II's clan, Morton's book, "Diana: Her True Story," now being excerpted in The London Sunday Times, identifies its sources by name. They include two of Diana's closest friends.

Several British analysts agreed the book could have a damaging political impact because of its unflattering portrayal of the 44-year-old Prince of Wales as an uncaring husband who displayed little concern even when Diana tried to kill herself.

Two former cabinet ministers, Norman St.John-Steves and Richard Luce, while condemning what they call "gutter journalism," admitted that the latest episode in the royal soap opera has potentially serious political implications.

St.John-Steves, a constitutional authority and outspoken defender of the monarchy, said the latest imbroglio "throws a shadow over the future of our constitutional system."

Unless the media and public exercise greater restraint in their "intrusiveness" into the private lives of the royal family, he added, "the monarchy cannot survive."

Earlier, British political commentators had dismissed the recent divorce of the queen's daughter, Anne, and the stormy separation of her second son, Andrew,

Van crash kills 5

MINEOLA — Five people were killed and at least 10 injured in a fiery crash Monday when their church van ran a stop sign and collided with a cement truck near Mineola in East Texas, authorities said. The Texas Department of Public Safety had earlier mistakenly reported that six people had died. They later found they had counted one of the victims twice. Brad Tullis with DPS in Tyler said the van was one of three carrying teen-agers from the Dallas Chinese Bible Church to the Brookhaven Youth Camp in Hawkins for a weeklong retreat./3B

Poll: Perot leads

WASHINGTON — President Bush's approval rating dropped again this month in a nationwide poll released Monday, and likely independent candidate Ross Perot continued to lead in a three-way matchup with the president and Democrat Bill Clinton. The ABC News-Washington Post poll also asked respondents to name which candidate was strongest on specific issues. Thirty-five percent approved of Bush's job performance, down from 40 percent in an ABC-Post poll on May 12. His approval rating hit an all-time high of 90 percent in March 1991, just after the Persian Gulf War./7A

LOS ANGELES — Police Chief Daryl F. Gates on Monday said his threat to postpone his retirement was a bluff intended to show that the department was being controlled by "crummy politicians." Gates' statements did little to cool his critics, who accused him of trying to hold the city hostage to stroke his ego in the final days of his command of the 8,300-member department. A visibly angry councilman Zev Yaroslavsky, who took Gates' remark about politicians to mean him in particular, said he had "never dealt with a sicker mind" and called Gates a "megalomaniac."/7A

WEATHER SUMMARY

Trend: sunny days, rainy nights

Staff report

Rain, rain, go away, come again some other day. But the rain has no intention of leaving Midland, at least not for any extended period of time in the next week.

The more the rain falls, the greater the chances it will do so the next day, according to observers at the National Weather Service in Midland.

"Since the ground is so saturated with all of our rain lately, the daytime heating has caused a lot of unstableness later in the day," said an NWS spokesman.

Indeed, sunny skies and 90-degree afternoons have yielded to lightning and thunder, combined with the downpour, for three straight nights.

Midnight showers and mostly sunny days have become the trend and observers expect the pattern to continue for several more days.

By late Monday night, more severe thunderstorm warnings coupled with flash flood and tornado watches had engulfed much of West Texas, including Midland.

But observers thought Midland might escape much of the meteorological mayhem for the night.

"We had two systems moving right by us on each side this evening around 9 p.m. We seemed to have escaped the worst of it and there's not much moving behind it," the NWS spokesman said. "But we should still get some rain. In fact, Midland should see at least a chance of rain and thunderstorms in the forecast each day for about a week."

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of rain. High temperatures should reach the upper 80s and winds will be south at 10 to 20 miles per hour. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low in the lower 60s.

Wednesday should be partly cloudy with a high in the upper 80s.

After an overnight low of 59, Monday's high reached 85 compared with the record high for that date of 104 set in 1964. The record low for that date is 55 set in 1955, according to the National Weather Service.

STATE

Another upper-level low pressure system spawned thunderstorms, some severe, across North and West Texas Monday, with forecasters expecting more rainfall through the week.

Small hail and torrential rain fell in central Dallas County, while another severe storm was reported in Pecos County. Some Dallas rains were falling at the rate of 2½ inches per hour.

The National Weather Service posted a tornado watch for most of the western half of West Texas. A flash flood watch was in effect for the northern half of North Texas and portions of the west.

Scattered thunderstorms covered the Big Bend area and Coastal Bend.

A second upper-level low pressure system was moving northeastward from New Mexico toward West Texas, bringing the threat of more severe storms through the week's end.

Afternoon highs ranged from the upper 70s in the Panhandle to the 90s in South Texas.

NATION

Rain and storms were scattered Monday from the Rockies to the East Coast and from the Gulf of Mexico into New England.

At midday, showers and thunderstorms were scattered over the Rockies, Oklahoma, northern Texas, eastern Kansas, eastern Nebraska, the Mississippi Valley, the central and eastern Gulf of Mexico states, the southern Atlantic Coast, the Tennessee Valley, the Appalachians, the upper Ohio Valley, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, eastern New York state and New England.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours up to 1 p.m. CDT included 2.40 inches at Huntsville, Ala.; 1.37 inches at Anniston, Ala.; 1.15 inches at Mary Esther, Fla.; and 1.08 inches at New Orleans.

Thunderstorms lashed Laramie, Wyo., with hail and heavy rain.

Wind gusted to near 60 mph during a thunderstorm at Hampton, Va.

DEFERS: Supreme Court postpones dispute

(From 1A)

Klan Act of 1871 does not give federal judges authority to stop violent abortion protests. The law prohibits conspiracies to deprive people of their civil rights.

As is customary when it orders a new argument, the court gave no reason for its action Monday. The case, Bray vs. Alexandria Women's Health Clinic, No. 90-985, was initially argued last Oct. 16, a week before Justice Clarence Thomas joined the court.

Because the newest justice was therefore not eligible to vote in the case, it is logical to infer that the other eight justices were unable to produce a majority opinion without him.

But that does not necessarily mean there was a straightforward 4-to-4 split. There are several complex and interrelated legal issues in the case, and the court may have been deadlocked not over which side should win, but over what approach to take and how broadly to rule.

Statements from abortion-rights groups Monday reflected frustration over the development, which means the legal issues surrounding abortion clinic protests will be on a back burner until after the presidential election.

Leaders of abortion rights groups had calculated that a defeat in the Supreme Court, which many anticipated, would have embarrassed the Bush administration as violence against abortion clinics appeared to be growing.

On Saturday, a hand grenade was found outside an abortion clinic in Wichita, Kan., where a 46-day protest last summer led by Operation Rescue.

In the next few weeks, the court is scheduled to decide an abortion case from Pennsylvania that could substantially cut back on the right to abortion. All nine justices heard that case, Planned Parenthood vs. Casey, when it was argued in April, and there is no indication that the court is planning to defer a decision.

As a legal matter, the clinic case does not directly involve the constitutional status of abortion and does not depend on the outcome of the Pennsylvania case.

The civil right that a federal appeals court in Richmond, Va., found to be at risk from a threatened protest against abortion clinics in the Washington area in 1989 was not the right to abortion but the constitutional right to travel.

The court, the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, found that many women traveled across state lines to obtain abortions from clinics in suburban Virginia.

If the clinic they were traveling to were shut down, their right to travel would have been nullified, the court said. A 1971 Supreme Court decision held that the right to travel was one of the rights protected by the Ku Klux Klan Act.

The deadlock, if there is one, must have developed rather recently. In the weeks after Thomas' arrival, the court promptly ordered reargument in two cases it had heard in his absence, indicating that the clinic case would have received the same treatment if the other justices thought it was necessary. It is common for votes to shift while a case is under consideration.

SUMMIT: Negotiators create U.N. commission

new U.N. commission was important for two reasons: it will provide a forum where governments can be held accountable for their actions, and it will be a place to continue negotiations begun at the Earth Summit.

In other developments Monday, the United States drew more criticism when it pressed its European allies not to break with its position on global warming.

U.S. officials sent letters to Austria, Switzerland and Britain urging them not to support a declaration that would set target dates for reducing carbon dioxide emissions, according to European officials.

Michael Young, deputy head of the U.S. summit delegation, drew peals of derisive laughter from reporters when he dismissed the letters saying, "The United States never puts pressure on anybody."

The controversy over the so-called "like-minded countries" declaration on global warming threatened to widen the rift between the United States and some of its allies over Washington's steadfast opposition to the biodiversity treaty.

The European Community, which has expressed concern about the isolation of the United States at the Earth Summit, is drafting a weaker declaration that it hopes to offer as a substitute for the "like-minded countries" declaration, said Lauren Jan Brinkhoorst, the European Community's spokesman.

But Brinkhoorst insisted that the industrial powers — including the United States — had to show a commitment to halting global warming.

"This is a signal to the world, of course also to the United States, that industrialized countries are willing to take the heat and take our responsibilities seriously," he said.

Delegates from all 178 U.N. nations reopened formal sessions Monday. They are also are working to complete treaties so they can be signed by the more than 116 heads of state, including Bush, who are due to arrive by Friday.

The "like-minded countries" declaration — drafted by Austria, Switzerland and the Netherlands — includes language that the United States deleted from the global warming convention, according to an early draft of the document obtained by The Associated Press.

The declaration requires countries to "as a first step, commit themselves to reduce carbon dioxide ... to 1990 levels by the year 2000."

It would not have the legal force of the global climate convention, which the United States is expected to sign. But nations signing the declaration would underscore their differences with Washington over global warming.

"We think it's important to have the convention as a basis to stand on, but get started immediately to go beyond that," said Austria Environment Minister Ruth Feldgrill-Zankel. She said U.S. delegates "were disturbed about this initiative."

Marco Cameroni, spokesman for the Swiss summit delegation, confirmed that Switzerland's environment minister also received a letter from Washington.

A member of the British delegation, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said that while Britain backs the declaration, it would not sign in order to refrain from "U.S.-bashing."

Europeans had pushed hard for the 1990-level emission target to be written into the global warming treaty. But Bush threatened not to attend the summit if it was not removed, and it was.

The alternative declaration says developed countries "must take immediate action to limit their greenhouse gas emissions." Carbon dioxide and other gases are the main causes of global warming. The United States is responsible for one-fourth of the world's carbon dioxide emissions.

ROYALS: Melodrama could have political impact the duke of York, and his wife Sarah, as having no effect on the monarchy as an institution, although sullying its moral image.

The great popularity of the queen, who this year celebrates her 40th anniversary as sovereign, was thought to protect Britain's system of constitutional monarchy from lasting damage.

But exposing the marital troubles of the Wales couple has sent shock waves through Britain's political establishment.

Political writer Geoffrey Wheatcroft warned: "The Wales' marriage must survive if the monarchy itself is to ... There is a whiff of republicanism in the air at present."

Some editorial writers predicted that the episode will be more unsettling to the monarchy than King Edward VIII's abdication in 1936, caused by opposition to his insistence on marrying an American divorcee, Wallis Simpson. These writers pointed out that the monarchy was a stronger institution 56 years ago than it is today.

'The picture of a brutally indifferent husband and a petty man ... could prove a watershed for the monarchy.'

— member of parliament Keith Howell

In his book, Morton claims Diana was driven to five suicide attempts, beginning in the first year of her marriage, because of Charles's coldness and her royal in-laws' lack of sympathy for her plight.

Morton describes the suicide attempts as "cries for help" that were ignored.

The Sunday Times, generally considered a reputable paper, claimed it had affidavits from Morton's sources swearing to the truth of everything they told him.

The book charges that Diana's unhappiness — which also led to her becoming a victim of the obsessive-eating disease, bulimia — resulted from her discovery, soon after her marriage, of a longstanding affair between the prince and Camilla Parker-Bowles, the wife of one of the queen's aides.

Rumors of Charles' relationship with Parker-Bowles have, in fact, circulated for years.

Far more damaging than allegations of infidelity is the book's portrait of Charles as an unfeeling husband, utterly heedless of his much younger wife's emotional problems.

According to Morton, the distraught Diana, three months pregnant with her first child in 1982, threw herself down a flight of stairs after a marital quarrel. Charles didn't allow the incident to interrupt an afternoon of horseback riding at the royal Sandringham estate, Morton writes.

He quotes Diana's friend and former roommate, Carolyn Bartholomew, as saying Charles' "callous" reaction was typical of his attitude toward her.

At the same time, Morton describes the prince as jealous of Diana's popularity and as petulant when, on their many foreign trips, local people and the press showed greater interest in her than in him.

"The picture of a brutally indifferent husband and a petty man that's given by this book could prove a watershed for the monarchy," member of parliament Keith Howell said.

He stressed that the bad light in which it casts Charles "alters the image his future subjects have had of him as a thoroughly decent chap."

Equally bad, Howell said, is the book's portrayal of the isolated Diana receiving little or no support from an aloof royal family devoted to "its own narrow self-interest. Diana seems to have been told: Sink or swim; you are on your own."

British analysts note that the monarchy's main function in recent times has been to draw the British people together.

VOTING: States may ban write-ins

ed that Hawaii's election law too often leaves citizens with "no way to cast a meaningful vote."

The Democratic Party dominates the state's politics, he noted, and its candidates often run unopposed, especially in state legislative races. Indeed, in 1990, about a fourth of the voters left ballots blank rather than cast votes in these uncontested elections, Kennedy noted in his dissent.

"Given that so many Hawaii voters are dissatisfied with the choices available to them, it is hard to avoid the conclusion that at least some voters would cast write-in votes for other candidates if given this option," wrote Kennedy. "The write-in ban thus prevents these voters from participating in Hawaii elections in a meaningful manner."

Kennedy was joined in dissent by Justices Harry Blackmun and John Paul Stevens.

While conceding that "no right is more precious than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws," White said the right to vote "in any manner" is not absolute.

He said Hawaii has made it relatively easy for candidates who file petitions before the primary to get their names on the ballot in primary and general elections. And the state has supportable reasons for banning write-ins, he said.

"The prohibition on write-in voting is a legitimate means of averting sore-loser candidacies," by people who lose a party primary and then run as an independent in the general election, he wrote. The system "promotes the two-stage, primary-general election process by winnowing out candidates."

White was joined in the majority by Chief Justice William Rehnquist and Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Antonin Scalia, David Souter and Clarence Thomas.

Hawaii's election law was challenged in 1986 by Alan Burdick, a lawyer who moved to Honolulu from New Jersey. In a state legislative race where only one candidate had filed nominating papers, Burdick said he wanted to vote for someone who had not filed and whose name was not on the ballot.

A U.S. District Court said the ban on write-in voting violated Burdick's right of expression guaranteed by the First Amendment.

BAILIFF: Court creates new post by 3-1-1 vote

(From 1A)

Voting for the new bailiff's post were commissioners Brown and Louisa Valencia and County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer."

Voting against it was Commissioner Guy McCrary, who indicated that three full-time bailiffs now assigned to the judges, the bailiff assigned to Midland County Court and County Courts-at-Law, and the armed officers who frequently visit the courthouse on business provide adequate protection.

"You can hardly come into the courthouse without seeing someone who has a gun strapped on," McCrary said.

McCrary said that while he recognized the judges have had some concern about security, "I really believe these are temporary, periodic concerns" and that most courtroom activities do not present a "violent atmosphere."

Commissioner Durward Wright abstained from voting.

From his viewpoint, citizen input on the proposal for a roving courthouse bailiff was "50-50."

"I have received calls on both sides of this issue," Wright said. "And the feeling has been 50-50 in favor and against the appointment of a security officer. And after hearing the arguments, pro and con, I did not have a firm conviction" either way.

On another proposal, the Commissioners' Court voted 3-1-1 (McCrary voicing "nay" and Wright abstaining) to appropriate money to fund the position at a sheriff sergeant's salary. A sergeant's base pay is $24,024, but with incentives, the pay could approach and/or exceed $30,000 annually.

In a third vote, 4-0-1, Brown, Ms. Valencia, Seltzer and Wright agreed that judges should select the bailiff. McCrary abstained.

Earlier this year, Hyde said the roving bailiff's post primarily would be "for the citizens of the community that transact business in the courthouse and for the jury panels that report (to the courthouse)."

"They are entitled to have a measure of security provided for them," said Hyde, who presides over the 238th Texas State District Court.

Alternate-energy proponents combat gloomy predictions

By Charles Petit
N.Y. Times News Service

PALO ALTO, Calif. — Despite hopes that the Rio de Janeiro conference on the environment will begin turning mankind away from addiction to coal, gas, and oil, a utility industry report concludes world fossil fuel use will go up 60 percent or more in the next 70 years.

The report predicts conservation may allow industrial countries to expand their economies while cutting fossil fuel demand by 20 percent by the year 2060. But it adds that the savings will be overwhelmed by rocketing population and demands for a better standard of living in the rest of the world where fossil fuel use is likely to nearly quadruple.

The gloomy conclusions are meeting resistance from environmentalists who hope widescale use of solar, wind, plant material, and other renewable energy sources, plus unspecified breakthroughs in technology coupled with tax and regulatory policies, can radically decrease human reliance on conventional fuels.

Combustion now releases 5.6 billion tons of solar-energy trapping carbon dioxide into the atmosphere each year.

One energy analyst, John Harte at the Energy and Resources Program of the University of California at Berkeley, said predictions of unavoidable fossil fuel increases "are completely crazy."

"If you go back 70 years, there is no way people then could have predicted our energy use today, and if anything, the speed of technological change is accelerating. Our fuel use in the next century may be anywhere from modestly less than now, to who knows, but there is no way to say one crystal ball is better than another," he said.

Whatever the exact numbers, many other economists and energy analysts agree with the new utility industry analysis that mankind has committed the world to a dramatic increase in carbon dioxide in the atmosphere that will continue for at least 100 years. Already, carbon dioxide is up 25 percent in the past 100 years.

The new study, by senior workers at the Electric Power Research Institute in Palo Alto, is published in the journal Science.

'If you go back 70 years, there is no way people then could have predicted our energy use today, and if anything, the speed of technological change is accelerating. Our fuel use in the next century may be anywhere from modestly less than now, to who knows, but there is no way to say one crystal ball is better than another.'

"The only question," said Chauncey Starr, emeritus chairman of the institute, "is how much carbon dioxide will go up, and what the consequences will be."

Starr, a conservative analyst, is a longtime champion of nuclear power. But liberal and environmentally inclined analysts agree that curbing the world's appetite for fossil fuel, especially cheap and abundant coal, will be extremely difficult.

"I think the EPRI analysis is a little on the high side, but it is not outlandish," said Joel Darmstadt, an energy specialist at the Washington-based Resources for the Future. "My instinct is that you cannot get absolutely lower carbon emissions over that time span (the next century), not if you want to increase living standards."

The analysis comes as the world's nations prepare to convene in Rio de Janeiro from June 3 through June 15 for the Earth Summit on problems connecting poverty and environmental destruction.

The United States has watered down language in formal treaties to be signed, but a long-range goal of the meeting continues to be a pledge to reduce emission of carbon dioxide and other so-called greenhouse gases such as methane, nitrogen oxides, and chlorofluorocarbons.

Many European countries as well as Japan say they can cut carbon dioxide emissions by 20 percent early in the next century, and some countries already have imposed extra "carbon taxes" on use of fossil fuels compared to other energy sources.

The report uses a broadly accepted projection that world population will climb from its present 5.5 billion to about 11 billion in the next 70 years, and proposes that the world's gross national product per person go up 2.8 times in the same period.

It then looks at three scenarios: one in which energy is produced the same way as now, and two high-conservation models including expanded use of renewable energy such as solar, much more efficient lights and appliances, and advanced generators that burn less fuel to make electricity.

One of the conservation models assumes that nuclear power expands rapidly, and the other assumes very modest nuclear growth.

The business-as-usual projection is that world energy demand will increase more than fourfold, and carbon emissions will go up from their current 5.6 billion tons per year to 27.3 billion tons. With nuclear power, fossil fuel emissions will rise to 8.6 billion tons annually, 60 percent more than now. Without it, they will go to 9.9 billion tons, or 80 percent more than now, the report says.

The report comes on the heels of an even more pessimistic analysis of future energy use and its impact on chemistry and possible global warming. William R. Cline, at the Institute for International Economics, reported last week a conclusion that without major changes in policy, continued buildup of carbon dioxide will take its concentration from the present 353 parts per million to about 2,000 parts per million by the year 2275, with a worldwide warming of at least 10 degrees Fahrenheit.

Today

The air today...

... 70% of all city dwellers—more than 1.5 billion people worldwide—will breathe unhealthy air. At least 800 people will die prematurely because of air pollution.

... 56 million tons of carbon dioxide will be spewed into the atmosphere, largely through the consumption of fossil fuels and the massive burning of rain forests.

... More than 1,500 metric tons of ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons will be pumped into the atmosphere from leaking refrigerators and air conditioners, aerosol spray cans and some industrial processes.

The land today...

... 180 square miles of forest — covering an area about one-third the size of Los Angeles – will disappear. Largely as a result of the destruction of forests and coral reefs, up to 140 species of plants, animals and other living organisms will be doomed to extinction.

... Another 63 square miles of the Earth will become wasteland due to overgrazing and wind and water erosion. About 66 million tons of topsoil will be lost from the world's cropland.

... Nearly 400,000 tons of chemical fertilizer will be used in an effort to coax more food from degraded farmland.

The water today...

... At least 15,000 people, mostly children, will die from diseases caused by unsafe water.

... More than 500 million pounds of fish and shellfish will be harvested from the world's oceans, rivers and lakes—enough to fill 630,000 average refrigerators. Overfishing will threaten several of the globe's major ocean fishing zones.

... More than 12,000 barrels of oil will spill into the world's oceans, enough to fill 25 backyard pools. About 38 million pounds of litter will be dropped overboard—enough to create a one-foot high by one-foot wide strip reaching from Long Beach to Camp Pendleton, south of San Clemente.

Economic activity today...

... About $55 billion worth of goods and services will be produced worldwide. During the 14 days of the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro, global economic activity will nearly equal the entire output of goods and services in the year 1900.

... Nearly 140,000 cars, trucks and buses will be added to the global motor vehicle population.

... The world's vehicles, industries and utilities will consume more than 60 million barrels of oil and 17 million tons of coal.

... The world's 413 commercial nuclear reactors will produce about 5% of the world's energy and create more than 26 tons of irradiated waste fuel – enough to fill a small bedroom.

... More than $2.5 billion will be spent on the world's military, and $12 million will be spent on family planning programs.

Trees alone can't cope with rising CO_2

N.Y. Times News Service

Increased growth of trees in forests is not likely to stem rising levels of carbon dioxide, one of the heat-trapping gases associated with global warming, several studies have found.

Previous studies indicated that some trees could respond to increased levels of carbon dioxide by taking it up and growing substantially. That offered hope that the world's forests might act as a sink for the CO_2 released into the atmosphere by the burning of fossil fuels.

Scientists have warned that increases in carbon dioxide and the other heat-trapping gases could lead to a rise in global temperatures with potentially devastating effects on ecosystems.

But a study in the current issue of the journal Nature, as well as others to be published soon, indicates what forest ecologists had long suspected.

Unlike the cultivar trees that were well fertilized and irrigated in the earlier studies, trees under natural conditions appear to be unable to respond sharply to higher levels of atmospheric carbon dioxide because of limits on other nutrients.

Most of the world's trees are not being irrigated and fertilized, and scientists say significant uptake of increased atmospheric carbon dioxide is likely to be limited to the minority of trees in cultivation.

"There's been a desire to find a magic answer," said Dr. Richard J. Norby, a researcher who worked on the new study in Nature on tulip-poplar trees, "and trees soaking up CO_2 out of the atmosphere is an attractive answer to some. That makes it possible not to worry about it as a problem. The trees clearly have some positive responses to increases in CO_2, but it's not the spectacular increases in growth that allow us to ignore the whole problem."

Dr. Boyd Strain, a professor of botany at Duke University who is studying the effects of increased atmospheric carbon dioxide on the growth of pines, said of the new study: "I think it is a rather important finding. I think we'll find most of the world's forest will respond this same way and only the more exceptional cases will show some stimulation."

His work with pines indicates that unless fertilized and irrigated, trees will not respond to increased atmospheric carbon dioxide by increased growth and storage of carbon.

Norby and his colleagues at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee studied tulip-poplar trees growing in the forest that were given different amounts of atmospheric carbon dioxide.

Tulip-poplars, also known as tulip trees, are important forest trees and are commonly used in landscaping. Researchers found a decrease in leaf size and an increase in ephemeral root growth but not an increase in the growth of the tree's trunk and branches above ground.

Carbon can be stored more permanently in growth above ground than in the roots, which soon degrade, allowing the carbon dioxide to return to the atmosphere.

■ Indian officials seize assets in stock scandal

NEW DELHI, India — Authorities on Monday seized the assets of a leading stockbroker and his relatives in the first step toward retrieving $1.1 billion in illegal deals made in India's worst financial scandal.

The move came two days after the president authorized the government to confiscate assets of bank officials and stockbrokers charged with insider trading.

Many small investors went broke when the scandal caused India's largest stock market to fall 800 points, or 20 percent, during the last week of April. The market had reached an all-time high on April 2.

■ Experts: Russia's jobless may reach 4 million

MOSCOW — Undercutting Boris Yeltsin's promise of an economic turnaround, Russian labor officials predicted Monday that factory closings and army cutbacks could leave up to 4 million people jobless by year's end.

Unemployment — which former communist leaders refused to acknowledge — is considered a major threat to Yeltsin's free-market reforms. Rising claims for government unemployment compensation will further strain state finances, and some officials fear unrest from frustrated job-seekers.

"The biggest danger is that the unemployment problem could transform from a social and economic problem into a political one," Fyodor Prokopov, head of the Russian Labor Ministry's Committee on Unemployment, said at a news conference.

Four million workers is about 5.7 percent of the Russian work force. U.S unemployment was 7.5 percent in May, the highest level in nearly eight years.

■ Jungle hinders efforts to retrieve bodies

PANAMA CITY — Dense jungle and torrential rains hampered helicopter crews Monday as they began trying to retrieve the bodies of 47 people killed in the crash of a Panamanian airliner.

The COPA airlines Boeing 737 went down late Saturday about 20 minutes after takeoff on a flight from Panama City to Cali, Colombia. All aboard were apparently killed, including two Americans.

The wreckage was strewn in a six mile radius near Tucuti, 120 miles southeast of Panama City and about 60 miles north of the border with Colombia.

Officials said 10 firefighters equipped with chainsaws were lowered by helicopter to clear a landing pad so investigators could be brought in and the bodies brought out.

U.S. Army paramedics who reached the wreckage said there were no signs of life. A TV broadcast showed scorched vegetation and part of the fuselage.

There was no immediate report on the cause of the crash.

■ Japan passes bill allowing troops abroad

TOKYO — A bill that would allow Japanese troops to be dispatched abroad for the first time since World War II passed the upper house of Parliament early today after hours of delays and was expected to become law.

The bill, expected to easily pass in the lower house, would allow up to 2,000 Japanese troops to be sent overseas to take part in international peacekeeping operations.

Japan's Defense Agency chief, Sohei Miyashita, has said he plans to send soldiers to join peackeeping operations in Cambodia.

The bill is strongly opposed by the Japanese left and by others who fear a revival of Japanese militarism.

The 14 members of the Communist Party in the upper house were the last opposition holdouts to continue "cow-walking," a delaying tactic in which lawmakers take miniscule steps toward the podium to cast their ballots.

This time, the lawmakers took an average of about 8 minutes to travel the roughly 60 feet to the podium, but die-hard cow-walkers have been known to take up to half an hour.

The bill passed 137-102.

Japanese ground troops have not been dispatched abroad since World War II because the post-war constitution, written during the U.S. occupation, forbids the use of force in settling international disputes.

■ Pakistan torches $160 million worth of drugs

PESHAWAR, Pakistan — A mountain of drugs worth $160 million was burned Monday outside this city at the foot of the Khyber Pass.

"I am putting this to flames. It's against the very fiber of our society," Narcotics Minister Rana Chander Singh said as he set fire to 319,000 pounds of hashish and 6,274 pounds of heroin.

The drugs were seized over several years in raids throughout the Northwest Frontier province, a mountainous and mostly lawless area bordering Afghanistan.

Singh said the burning was delayed until the drugs were no longer needed as evidence in court cases.

Some of Pakistan's most notorious drug barons live in the Northwest Frontier, which is ruled by tribal lords. Their homes are fortresses surrounded by 10-foot walls capped with crushed glass.

Western drug enforcement agents, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said much of the heroin produced in Pakistan is consumed at home and the rest is shipped abroad. There are 2 million heroin addicts in Pakistan, Singh said.

Afghanistan is the biggest source of opium, the raw material of heroin; even conservative United Nations estimates put this year's crop there at 2,000 tons.

Gunmen kill leading PLO security official

PARIS (NYT) — A leading security official of the Palestine Liberation Organization was shot and killed early on Monday in front of a hotel in Paris where he was staying.

The official, Atef Bseiso, 44, the top intelligence aide to the PLO chairman, Yasser Arafat, was killed by shots fired by at least one gun equipped with a silencer, Palestinian and French officials said. Two gunmen escaped unhindered after the killing.

Arafat, who is recuperating from surgery in Amman, Jordan, immediately accused the Israeli secret service of responsibility, a charge echoed by other officials at the PLO headquarters in Tunis. "The Mossad ambushed him," Arafat said. "I want the Mossad to know it does not have a free hand."

In Jerusalem, a spokesman for Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir dismissed the charge as "totally and completely ridiculous."

The French Interior Ministry gave no indication of who was responsible, but some French officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the killing might be the work of the renegade Palestinian terrorist group led by Sabry Banna, better known by the code name Abu Nidal. The group has often attacked PLO officials and was responsible for the slaying in January 1991 of Bseiso's boss, Saleh Khalef, known as Abu Iyad, by an agent who infiltrated the PLO.

An anonymous caller to The New York Times offices in New York claimed responsibility for the killing on Monday afternoon on behalf of Kahane Lives, an offshoot of the militant anti-Arab Kach movement. The Associated Press reported from Paris that it had received two similar calls claiming responsibility on behalf of two separate Kach factions.

News agency reports from Jerusalem quoted Uri Saguy, head of Israel's military intelligence, as saying Bseiso was involved in the attack at the Olympic Games in Munich in 1972 and in an attempted attack on an Israeli airliner in Rome in 1973.

The killing was the sixth assassination of a senior PLO official in France since 1972, reflecting the close ties between the French and the PLO but also the transparency of the organization's apparatus to its enemies, including Israel and the Abu Nidal group.

A PLO official in Tunis said Bseiso had driven into Paris on Sunday night after visiting Germany and had checked into the Meridien Montparnasse Hotel on the Left Bank under an assumed name.

French and Palestinian officials said two men using guns equipped with silencers fired at Bseiso around 1:00 a.m. in front of the hotel as he returned from dinner with Lebanese friends.

Khalef had maintained regular contacts with French intelligence officials, and Bseiso, a secretive man with a taste for good living, took over the French contacts after his superior was killed last year. The two men had visited Paris every few months to confer with Interior Ministry officials and exchange information on potential terrorist action in Europe and elsewhere, Palestinian and French officials said.

Sarajevo enters 'decisive battle,' spokesman says

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Sarajevo shuddered under its heaviest bombardment of the war Monday. Muslims counterattacked, trying to drive Serbs from the surrounding heights they occupy to shell the city, Bosnian radio and TV said.

Barrages from cannon, mortars and multibarrel rocket launchers set off fires across the city. Residents rushed to shelters past bodies of victims and blazing buildings.

Flames billowed from buildings, clouding the skies with smoke. The chatter of machine guns and rifles indicated fighting on the streets.

"A decisive battle for our city has begun," said Dragan Marjanovic, a spokesman for Bosnia's Defense Ministry.

At least 14 people were killed and 350 wounded Monday, hospital officials said. Another seven people died and 21 were wounded elsewhere in Bosnia, news media said.

The U.N. Security Council late Monday approved sending 60 military observers to Sarajevo in a first step toward securing the city's airport for relief flights.

Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali earlier asked the council to authorize 1,000 peacekeepers to secure the airport. Serb and Croat gunmen have agreed to put their troops around the airport under U.N. guard.

Assuming the advance team can achieve the withdrawal of anti-aircraft guns from the hills around the airport, Boutros-Ghali would seek council permission to send the full contingent.

That would put U.N. peacekeepers on the fiercest battlefront of the Yugoslav civil war. If successful, they would ensure that besieged, battered Sarajevo gets food and medicine.

But in a war where agreements seldom hold, the troops could themselves be exposed to attack, increasing pressure for foreign military intervention.

Serbia's government again asked its Serb allies in Bosnia to stop shelling Sarajevo, its third such statement since tough U.N. sanctions were imposed on new Yugoslavia on May 30. Serbia was apparently trying to distance itself from the war in Bosnia, where it has armed and supported the nationalist Serb irregulars.

Muslim forces thrust from the city center toward Serb positions on the hills, the media reported. The Muslims were reported using heavy weapons left behind when the last Yugoslav army troops left the city Friday.

The Serbs fell back from some of the hills, but Radio Sarajevo said the were pressing attacks to gain ground in other sectors.

The leader of Bosnian Serbs, Radovan Karadzic, denied Muslims were advancing.

Prosecutor completes arguments in Demjanjuk case

JERUSALEM (NYT) — The chief prosecutor completed his arguments on Monday in the years-long "Ivan the Terrible" case, insisting to Israel's Supreme Court that it should have no doubts that John Demjanjuk had been a "direct servant of Satan" as a guard at more than one Nazi death camp in Poland.

But one of the five Supreme Court justices suggested in a sharp exchange that the prosecution may have no case unless it could prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Demjanjuk had been specifically at the Treblinka camp, where more than 850,000 Jews died. Without such proof, he said, "there is no point in proceeding."

With increasing intensity, questions have been raised about whether Israel has the wrong man, and they multiplied on Friday when a federal appeals court in Cincinnati, Ohio, ordered a reopening of the case involving Demjanjuk's extradition to Israel in 1986. The three-judge panel for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit, acting on its own initiative, said it wanted to hear more evidence in the matter because of a possibility that the extradition order had been based on "erroneous information."

The basic question is whether the sadistic Treblinka executioner known as Ivan the Terrible may have been someone other than Demjanjuk, a 72-year-old native of Ukraine who emigrated to the United States after World War II and settled in Cleveland, Ohio. After his extradition, he was convicted here of war crimes in 1988 and sentenced to hang.

Throughout the case, he has maintained that he is the victim of mistaken identity and that he had been a soldier in the Soviet army and then a Nazi prisoner of war.

His appeal has ambled though the Israeli judicial system. It is now near the end, however, and the five-man Supreme Court panel is scheduled to wrap up their hearings today after listening to a final round of defense arguments.

At the start of Monday's session, Chief Justice Meir Shamgar took note of the Cincinnati court action and, without elaboration, said it would be taken under consideration. He did not comment specifically on an opening statement from the prosecutor, Michael Shaked, that the Ohio decision should have no effect on what happens here.

Explosion destroys Stockholm statue

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — An explosion destroyed a stone statue of a young man on a horse early Monday, the fifth such attack on statues in central Stockholm this year.

Police said the 3 a.m. explosion in the medieval Old Town section reduced the statue to rubble and broke 20 windows in nearby buildings. No one was injured.

Other statues damaged in explosions since February include those of Hjalmar Branting, who led Sweden in the 1920s as the country's first Social Democratic prime minister, and Carl Wilhelm Scheele, an 18th-century chemist.

Police said they believe one person is responsible for the explosions.

Hillary Clinton recalls role as Watergate lawyer: 'It was unbelievable'

By William M. Welch
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The year was 1974, and the nation was consumed with Watergate. Not long out of Yale Law School, Hillary Rodham found herself helping lay the legal groundwork for what was once unthinkable: Impeachment of the president.

Pushed by a former professor, she signed on in mid-January as a lawyer on the impeachment inquiry staff of the House Judiciary Committee.

It was a job that brought her into the vortex of a history-making legal debate, surrounded by some of the brightest legal minds and under intense public scrutiny.

"Hillary was a star from the beginning," recalls Dagmar Hamilton, a former colleague who is now a University of Texas professor.

Today she is known as Hillary Rodham Clinton, wife of the likely Democratic presidential nominee, Bill Clinton, the governor of Arkansas.

Now a successful lawyer in Little Rock, she remembers her Watergate year as "one of the greatest personal and professional opportunities I've ever had."

"It was an unbelievable experience," she recalled.

"The staff that was put together was so professional, experienced. They were some of the greatest lawyers I've ever worked with. I was just a fresh, young law school graduate, and I got to work with these people, and it was such a historic experience."

Hillary Rodham was a 26-year-old lawyer for the Children's Legal Defense Fund when she joined the impeachment inquiry staff. She was one of only three women among the 43 lawyers on the staff and had the title of counsel, lowest in the professional pecking order.

"Any lawyer in the country would have wanted to work on this," said a colleague, Fred Altshuler, now a San Francisco lawyer.

"The job sought after you — you didn't seek the job," said another, New York lawyer Robert Sack.

"She was a very good lawyer and a very willing worker and an exceedingly pleasant person to work with," said Joe Woods, now a lawyer in Oakland, Calif. As senior associate special counsel on the impeachment inquiry staff, Woods was her direct supervisor.

Even then, before she was married, the future Mrs. Clinton began to feel the strains of a two-career couple in the public eye.

Hamilton, who was also a staff counsel, remembers the time she took a brief trip to Arkansas to see Clinton, whom she had been dating. Clinton was running for Congress, his first attempt at public office.

When she returned to Washington, Hamilton recalls, "She said, 'I'm not used to this — everybody wanted to know what the candidate's girlfriend thought.' "

The staff was headed by Special Counsel John Doar, and the Republican minority's special counsel, Albert E. Jenner Jr.

Doar's group of lawyers was separate from the permanent staff of the House Judiciary Committee, then chaired by Rep. Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J.

It was assembled as the case against President Nixon was reaching a climax and after the conclusion of the televised Senate Watergate hearings. There North Carolina Sen. Sam J. Ervin had engaged the nation with his tenacity and wit as he laid bare the crimes that would force Nixon from office.

A fellow counsel on the impeachment inquiry staff was William Weld, who now is the Republican governor of Massachusetts. Weld declined through an aide to comment on his work with Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Burke Marshall, a Yale law professor, knew both Clinton and his future wife. He recalls recommending her when Doar came to him in search of young lawyers.

"That job required not just brightness but some sense of balance, some discretion, prudence and integrity," Marshall said.

Doar had met both Rodham and Clinton when he judged a moot court competition they were managing at Yale.

"My first job," Doar said, "was to recruit lawyers. And one of the first ones I recruited was Hillary."

"Everybody was good. Everybody worked very hard. Nobody talked to the newspapers," said Doar, now a prominent New York attorney. "They followed the rules, and they performed a dedicated task with real distinction."

Rodham's principal assignment was establishing the legal procedures to be followed in the conduct of the inquiry and impeachment, Woods said. That meant handling subpoenas, making sure the proper legal steps were anticipated and followed.

She and her colleagues labored to compile the large notebooks that were on the desk before each Judiciary Committee member once the hearings began. They were filled with statements of information and legal analysis.

"It was like 18-20 hour days," Hillary Clinton said. "People just worked around the clock."

The staff worked largely out of sight in an annex building several blocks from the Capitol.

"It was a pretty intense kind of seven or eight months," Sack said.

'92 campaign marks dawn of media age

By Scott Shepard
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Future presidential campaigns may be waged on a radically different terrain, where underdogs try to score early on "Larry King Live," then battle for the Midwest on "Oprah" before squaring off in a final Western showdown on "Arsenio."

In the political landscape emerging from the haze of the 1992 presidential race, the would-be leaders of America will develop their campaign messages on "Donahue" and local radio talk shows and hone their communication skills through call-in shows, satellite hookups and toll-free telephone lines.

And after taking office, these leaders will use the same technology to hold electronic town meetings, and they will set the course of the nation on the basis of polls after these great common conversations.

No more trudging through the snows of New Hampshire, meeting voters face to face and responding to questions from baying packs of television and newspaper reporters.

No cross-country dashes from airport news conference to airport news conference, from fund-raiser to fund-raiser.

No more endless debate between the White House and Congress over the budget, taxes, health care, welfare — all the issues now deadlocked by the constitutional balance of powers.

And no more democracy, according to some experts who express concern about the dawning Brave New World of American politics.

"All of this is being advertised as an advancement for democracy, but the underlying assumption is that democracy is nothing more than catering to public opinion, that it has nothing to do with debate, dialogue and the cross-fertilization of ideas," said Jeffrey B. Abramson, coauthor of "The Electronic Commonwealth," one of the first books to examine the effect of technology on the electoral process.

"The danger is not the technology, but how it is used," said Abramson, a political science professor at Brandeis University in Massachusetts. "Machines have no politics. They won't automatically bring the democratic utopia that some of the candidates speak of. And used inappropriately, they could reduce leadership to who can watch the polls best."

Undeclared independent candidate Ross Perot and Bill Clinton, the presumed Democratic nominee, are the primary practitioners of this new brand of politics, waging their campaigns through talk shows, call-ins and satellite hookups while eschewing the traditional media of network news programs, major newspapers and magazines.

And now there are indications that President Bush, too, will join them in these forums that only weeks ago were viewed by the White House as not very presidential.

Bush dined with conservative radio host Rush Limbaugh at the White House last week, and White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater declined Monday to rule out an appearance by Bush on Limbaugh's program.

"Donahue" is still out for the president, Fitzwater said. But as for Limbaugh, he added.

Pool rates just took a dive.

Gaines offered Mad view of life

Mad magazine has changed hardly at all in the last 40 years. The main reason is that its founder and publisher, William M. Gaines, never outgrew himself either. Gaines, who died Wednesday at age 70, was a rumpled man with stringy hair "styled only by the force of gravity" and a wise adolescent's irreverence for pompous personages and sacred institutions.

In the beginning, Mad parodied other comic books. Mickey Mouse became Mickey Rodent and the Lone Ranger was left to burn at the stake by his not-so-trusty sidekick, Pronto.

Soon Mad was spoofing everything in sight — TV, advertising, the Boy Scouts, politics. Perhaps that should be — especially politics. Its goofy mascot, Alfred E. Neuman — whose philosophy was "What — me worry?" — made his political debut as a write-in candidate for president in 1956 and later appeared as the fifth face on Mount Rushmore.

The ageless Neuman graces the cover of a special issue published shortly before Gaines' death, its pages stuffed with the usual pranks and puns. "It's Waning Cats and Dogs" contains timely tips on how to tell when your pet has reached retirement age. There's a movie review by "Video Vic": "Putting Madonna and Sean Penn in the same film is like multiplying zeroes." And a spoof on President Ford by Harvey Kurtzman, Gaines' first editor.

Of course, Mad is viewed by many as simply irreverant fun, but it really made pertinent social commentary by satirizing life around us.

Mad's circulation, 2.4 million 20 years ago, has shrunk to 800,000. Gaines' improbable world, the spiritual antecedent of shows like "Saturday Night Live," now seems almost tame. There are moments when it seems almost real, however. Ross Perot for president?

We can't afford our budget

Imagine for a moment that President Bush and Congress had been able to come up with a balanced federal budget for fiscal 1993, and on top of that were able to put $10 million per day, or $3.65 billion per year, toward paying off the government's debt. How long would it take to erase the $4 trillion . . . debt?

One hundred years? Five hundred years? Try more than 1,000 years.

Clearly we have not only burdened our children with massive debt, but also their children, and their children's children, and it gets worse daily.

Congress is expected to vote this month on a constitutional amendment that would require a balanced federal budget. If it's approved by Congress, ratification by three-fourths of the states would be necessary before it would become part of the Constitution.

The balanced budget amendment isn't a solution for today. It may be part of an answer five years down the road. It should have been part of the answer a couple of decades ago when the pattern of deficit spending was emerging and the problem was of more manageable size.

We can't afford to let it get any bigger, to allow waiting for ratification of a constitutional amendment to be an excuse for not starting to make the painful choices now.

Science offers tastier tomato

Thanks to biotechnology, scientists have replaced the gene that makes tomatoes turn soft with one that doesn't, thereby creating a hothouse tomato that can be vine-ripened and remain tasty while it is shipped and stored, without refrigeration.

Those tasteless hothouse tomatoes now are picked green and sprayed with a gas to help them ripen later.

Civilization is measured by such advances. Some folks, however, aren't so sure, not when the advances are made possible by genetic engineering. They fear that tinkering with genes is a threat to public health and safety and that the government should require more stringent tests of genetically altered products.

They repeated their fears when the Food and Drug Administration . . . gave the go-ahead to the Flavr Savr tomato, the first genetically altered whole food intended for the market.

No one can give absolute guarantees of safety, but the latest approval seems well within acceptable margins.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 9, the 161st day of 1992. There are 205 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 9, 1954, a dramatic confrontation took place during the Senate-Army hearings as Army counsel Joseph N. Welch assailed Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy for his verbal attack on a member of Welch's law firm, Frederick G. Fisher. Said Welch: "Have you no sense of decency, sir? At long last, have you left no sense of decency?"

On this date:

In A.D. 68, the Roman Emperor Nero committed suicide.

In 1860, the first dime novel — "Malaeska: The Indian Wife of the White Hunter" — was published.

In 1870, author Charles Dickens died in Godshill, England.

In 1940, Norway surrendered to the Nazis during World War II.

In 1969, the U.S. Senate confirmed Warren Burger to be the new chief justice of the United States, succeeding Earl Warren.

In 1973, Secretariat became horse racing's first Triple Crown winner in 25 years by winning the Belmont Stakes.

In 1978, leaders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints struck down a 148-year-old policy of excluding black men from the Mormon priesthood.

In 1980, comedian Richard Pryor suffered almost fatal burns at his San Fernando Valley, California, home when a mixture of "free-base" cocaine exploded.

Taxpayers prepare for clean-up project

Memo to Ross Perot: While searching out instances of federal disconnection from real life, stroll over the Environmental Protection Agency. Better yet, send a team, equipped with radiation suits.

Murchison

EPA is a toxic waste dump of over-regulation. It glows in the dark with nitpicky requirements to do this, spend that. The people who work there mean well and, far too often, do ill — how much and at what cost, the regulators learned in a recent meeting with their victims. I mean, clients. Representatives of local government and utilities gave the regulators an earful about the soaring expense of complying with mandates government passes on to the taxpayers.

thing in the end. What I mean here is that Congress comes up with all these spacious requirements for cleansing the environment — and provides no federal tax money for the job. First, EPA tells states and utilities what it thinks Congress meant. Then the states and utilities try to comply. Frank Shafroth of the National League of Cities estimates that existing local resources cover only $1 of every $10 that EPA orders local government to spend. We taxpayers, and our likely reactions, don't come into the discussion. It's assumed we will smilingly cough up the required sums.

I wouldn't bet on that. The utility and local government people told EPA that financial meltdown impends. Take water rates. Jack Sullivan of the American Water Works Association said the average cost of waste water per thousand gallons is going to quadruple in the next few years to meet environmental requirements. The average cost of drinking water per thousand gallons will soar from $1.27 to $3.50. The average cost per ton of solid waste will jump from $27 to $50.

Already the United States spends $115 billion a year cleaning up — supposedly — the environment. Brace yourselves for a projected cost of $171 billion in a mere eight years.

Here two additional considerations come into play:

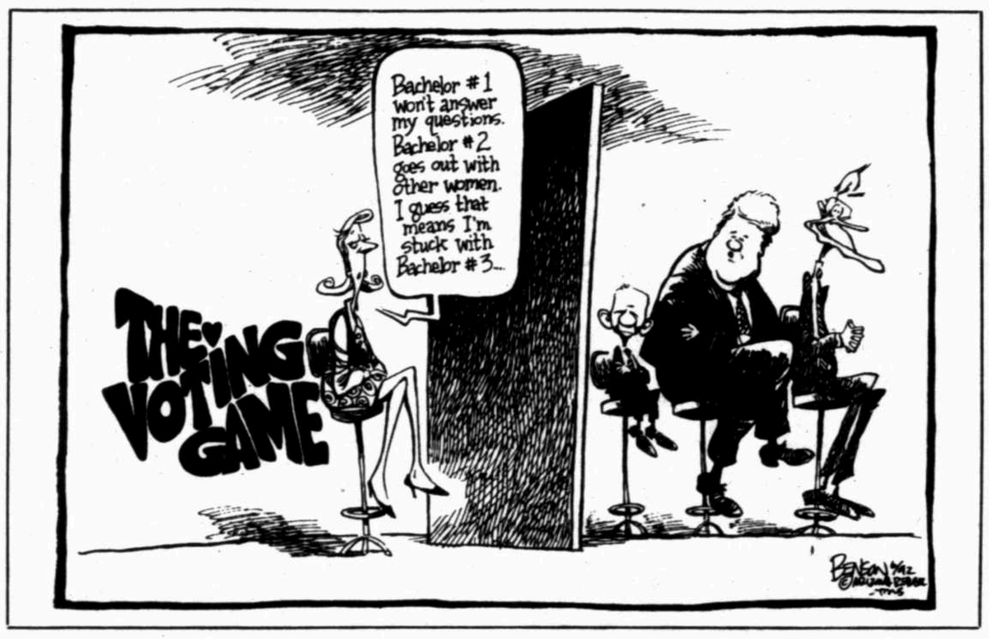

■ Is all this money really helping the environment? Not necessarily. Asbestos, a major environmental concern several years ago, no longer seems so major: not major enough anyway to justify the $64 billion spent on eliminating it over the past eight years. An EPA internal review last March suggested that the agency's own grasp of scientific calculations is "uneven and haphazard."

■ Money spent on "cleanup" is money diverted from other, possibly worthier, projects. Laurie Westley of the National Association of School Boards says: "New computers, new books, another second-grade teacher? — there's no way for the federal government to make those choices. That's why local school boards exist. But EPA has eliminated their ability to make choices that make the most sense." Radon, lead, underground storage tanks, pesticide control, drinking water, waste management come first.

What's the likelihood of change? Westley says that, well, the bureaucrats at least are talking to the bill-payers and exhibiting some signs of interest in their plight. But as we all know, bureaucrats don't spend vast amounts of time worrying about ordinary citizens; either they enjoy putting the screws to us — because we need it, being too insensitive to reform ourselves — or they spread their hands wide in innocence.

The business about Congress is at best a half-truth, but it points to a larger truth, namely, that the political process is the major culprit here. Frankly, we can't trust Congress or the bureaucracy — the first, a collection of self-important panderers; the second, a shelter where everything seems possible — to set broad goals for domestic policy, far less prescribe the means of metering those goals.

CHARLEY REESE

Americans' stand on violence is mostly sham

Most Americans it seems are not really against violence. They're only against violence committed by poor people, especially African-Americans.

Reese

The splash of commentary on violence in the inner cities by politicians and media-politicians is frankly sickening in its hypocrisy.

This nation was born of violence and we celebrate it continuously. We conquered the continent by committing violence against native Americans; then against the French, then against the Spanish, then against the British, then against the Mexicans, then against each other, and so on and so on.

The Earth had not made two orbits of the sun since millions of Americans were shouting and cheering, like football fans, at the violence we wreaked on Iraq. We celebrated it. We extolled it. The president even boasted that it proved America was still Number One.

But we think it is strange that some black teenagers occasionally shoot some others? That somehow it is wrong to burn 700 buildings in Los Angeles but glorious and triumphant to smash thousands in Iraq, or Libya, or Panama.

Actions teach more effectively than words. Who did the president choose to lead the nation's physical fitness program? Arnold Schwarzenegger, a former steroid user who owes his fame to films that drip with blood and celebrate violence.

If the fictional Murphy Brown sets a bad example, as Vice President Dan Quayle's speechwriter thinks, by deciding to love and care for a child without marrying the father, what kind of example is set by choosing Conan the Barbarian to go out and tell kids they should become physically fit? The message from all of Schwarzenegger's movies is, be physically fit so you can maim and kill people more easily.

Look at the most popular movies: violence in spades. Look at the continuous violence on television. And it's not just fictional violence, though there is plenty of that. Arts and Entertainment and the Discovery Channel seem to have an unlimited supply of old documentaries of every war ever fought and broadcast them virtually every night. It's weird, really. Whoever runs those channels seems to have an obsession with Nazis whose one and only government was destroyed 47 years ago.

Look at the continuous violence of U.S. foreign policy, which either commits violence against small countries, looks the other way when one of our so-called allies does it, or just ignores it if it happens to occur in a place with no oil.

Our minds are so saturated with violence that if we go to a movie and only six or seven people get killed, we think it's dull. Our minds are so warped that when we send an armada of advanced aircraft to bomb the hell out of defenseless people we think it is an enormous triumph.

But with all that, to hear the discussions going on in print and on the tube, you'd think white America is shocked out of its underwear that poor kids in poor neighborhoods haven't all become Buddhist monks or Quakers. How dare they not be pacifists? What in the world is wrong with those people? Where in the world did they get the idea that violence can solve a problem? Imagine, in one year, about 970 black youths died from homicide (hardly a drop in a bomb crater).

There's something almost sinister in the white establishment becoming obsessed with the criminal acts committed by a small percentage of a group of people who are only 12 percent of the population, and pretending publicly there is no reasonable explanation.

Blaming guns or "Murphy Brown" is not a cop-out explanation. It's deliberate disinformation. Quayle knows better. He may have thbught people in Latin America spoke Latin, but he knows a TV character is not responsible for the devastation of our cities. He just doesn't want you to know what the true causes are.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Race of Yitzhaks reveals differences in style

TEL AVIV, Israel — The legendary Brooklyn Democratic leader Hymie Shorenstein used to refer to FDR as "the Staten Island Ferry." Asked why, he replied: "You know how when the boat glides into the ferry slip, it drags in all the garbage from the harbor behind it? For the rest of our candidates, FDR is the Staten Island Ferry."

Safire

The election in Israel three weeks from now centers on one man: Yitzhak Rabin.

If the gut issue were settlements on the West Bank, the current prime minister, Yitzhak Shamir, would lead the right-wing Likud to victory. By populating the West Bank with Jews, he tells me, "we will make impossible the establishment of a Palestinian state."

Labor's Rabin, who was prime minister in the 70s, is for the less popular "territorial compromise." He would continue settlements in the Jordan Valley and the southern approaches and suburbs of Jerusalem for security purposes, but says, "I oppose political settlements." That opens the door to dealing — which, counters Likud, is the slippery slope to a PLO state.

That specific issue, paramount in the minds of diplomats and commentators, is not being fought out here. Nor does this campaign pit Socialist economics against free markets; Likud can proudly point to a 6 percent growth rate, but it has failed to remove the dead hand of government ownership from the Israeli economy.

The scrap is about the comeback of Rabin. In the TV spots just begun, Labor hardly mentions the party or other candidates; instead, Rabin's exploits as commander of the six-day war of 25 years ago this week are recounted and his familiar visage dominates the screen.

Contrariwise, Shamir is downplayed in many Likud ads; they picture the unpopular Labor candidates and warn they would run the country if Rabin won. The right's theme (which worked in Britain) is "Stop the left."

In the street campaign as well, Rabin is the issue. He was smeared early for a nervous breakdown decades ago, and — though a genuinely private public man — had to discuss it at length in an interview. He is also denounced as a drunk (as was Boris Yeltsin); some of his angry supporters responded with an attack on the 76-year old Shamir as impotent, nap-prone and short. America is not the only democracy where campaigns focus below the belt.

I like and respect both Yitzhaks, and as a card-carrying right-wing hawk I am leery of the lefties hiding behind Rabin. And I don't like the way the Bush administration is trying to influence the election by withholding loan guarantees in hopes of ousting the Shamir government.

But I think Likud is blowing this election all by itself. The dissension among the triumvirate under Shamir — Arens, Sharon and Levy — is something fierce.

That unresolved succession is in sharp contrast to the clear-cut victory of Rabin over his longtime rival, Shimon Peres. I mistakenly went to Labor headquarters, with its old pictures of Peres and halls filled with hacks, to meet Rabin; it turned out my appointment was at his "personal headquarters," with plain pipe racks and busy young people bustling about. He's running alone, and other Labor candidates know that Rabin's comeback is their comeback. "The problem in Israel's political system," he says, "is that we have no clear-cut decision. We tried to change the system to the direct election of the prime minister, but Likud torpedoed the idea this time. They were afraid of the verdict of the people."

Over at Shamir's office, after pointing out that the Rabin popularity "is baseless — he was a failure as prime minister," the short but potent Likudnik revealingly said: "I don't like the American personification, personalization of campaigns. I prefer the other way, where people vote for strategies and principles, not for a man. What is a man? Nothing."

To me, that illuminates the basic difference in approach to politics that characterizes this Israeli campaign. Rabin is a strong individual leader topping a listless list; Shamir is a principled movement politician on top of a bickering bunch of talented individuals.

Nation in brief

■ Super squirt guns awash in squabble

BOSTON — It's called the Super Soaker, it squirts water up to 50 feet and, not surprisingly, it's all the rage with the younger set.

But after one squirt-gun fight escalated into a fatal shooting, and people complained they had been sprayed with chemicals, some say the souped-up version of the old water pistol is a hazard and should be pulled from store shelves.

Mayor Raymond Flynn sought to do just that in a letter sent to local merchants Monday. He cited the fatal shooting of a 15-year-old boy after a water gun fight, saying the time may have come "for adults to discourage the use of toy guns to simulate violent activity."

Flynn urged parents and others to discourage children from using the guns, which cost from $5 to $50, to spray "unsuspecting bystanders."

The Bradlees department store chain said it would temporarily remove the guns from its three Boston stores to honor the mayor's request, then consider a permanent ban for those outlets.

■ U.S., Russia push for new nuclear cuts

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James A. Baker III and his Russian counterpart met Monday in a push to clear the way for President Bush and Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin to set guidelines at their summit next week for a new round of cuts in strategic missiles.

"We've got some substantial ground to cover," Baker said at the start of his meeting with Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev.

Kozyrev said the two governments have "a unique opportunity to make a major step beyond the START treaty" in a short time, rather than going through years of negotiations.

He said he hoped he and Baker could resolve the differences "just before the summit so the two presidents can strike the deal when they meet." Baker offered no such prediction.

Yeltsin is scheduled to arrive Monday and spend the next two days in talks with Bush.

■ Monster truck crashes into crowd, kills 1

GALESBURG, Mich. — A crash at a monster truck event killed a 6-year-old boy and injured at least 14 other people after a rough landing knocked the driver unconscious, authorities said Monday.

Doug Harland, driver of the truck "Over Excited," told investigators he didn't recall anything after landing Sunday night, said Kalamazoo County Sheriff's Lt. John Woods.

The crash at the Galesburg Motor Speedway killed Todd L. Abbott of Kalamazoo. Among those injured was his 11-year-old brother, Timothy Abbott, one of three victims hospitalized in fair condition Monday. Ten other spectators were treated at hospitals and released.

Monster trucks are souped-up custom pickups with oversized tires.

Harland's helmet showed stress cracks, Woods said.

"We theorize that after the jump had been made and once that truck came down, the shock was so great" that Harland hit his head on the roof and was knocked out, Woods said.

■ Oregon police arrest patient's daughter

HILLSBORO, Ore. — A daughter of an Alzheimer's patient abandoned at an Idaho racetrack was arrested Monday on charges she kidnapped her father, an official said.

John Kingery, 82, was found in March at a dog racing track in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. The labels had been cut from his clothing and a note misidentifying him was attached to his wheelchair. A bag of diapers was next to his chair. Kingery didn't know who he was or where he was from.

Sue Gifford, 40, a daughter of Kingery's by his second marriage, was arrested at work Monday afternoon, said Sherre Calouri, spokeswoman for the Washington County Sheriff's Office.

Gifford was jailed in lieu of $30,000 bail.

She was indicted on a charge of second-degree kidnapping and perjury. If convicted, she could face up to 15 years in prison.

■ California lottery suffers plummeting sales

Despite a new director and new ways to wager, odds still seem stacked against the beleaguered California Lottery.

Lottery sales in the fiscal year that ends June 30 are expected to barely top $1.4 billion, down more than 30 percent from fiscal 1991 and the lowest take in five years. As a result, public schools will receive only about $500 million, or about $80 per student.

That is down from $803.1 million, or $129 per student, in lottery contributions during the prior fiscal year.

"I don't believe we're through our troubles yet," said Sharon Sharp, a former top Republican Party officeholder and lottery director in Illinois who took over California's games in October. "I knew when I came it was going to be very difficult."

It was so bad when Sharp showed up that one of the first things she did was to inform legislators that the lottery would be in Bankruptcy Court if it were a private business. Since then, the sales slide has gotten worse.

■ Judge extends ban on Oregon timber sales

PORTLAND, Ore. — A federal judge Monday extended a ban against U.S. Bureau of Land Management sales of old-growth timber in western Oregon until the agency assesses how logging affects the threatened northern spotted owl.

The order appeared likely to halt the sales at least until the middle of next year.

U.S. District Court Judge Helen Frye, who on Feb. 19 granted a temporary injunction against the sales, granted a permanent injunction at the request of groups who sued under federal environmental law.

Frye gave the BLM 30 days to make a timetable for drawing up an analysis on what the logging would do to the owl.

"It is not up to the court to evaluate or to discount the opinions of responsible experts in a scientific field," Frye wrote in her ruling. "It is the duty of the BLM to identify, evaluate and address the new information, allow public comment, and formulate its plans accordingly."

BLM spokesman Ed Ciliberti said it wasn't clear how soon the agency could be back in the timber business, because agency managers haven't decided whether new 10-year resource management plans scheduled to be finished by the middle of next year will fulfill Frye's order.

Manual: Perot restricted dress, conduct

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ross Perot sought to exercise extraordinary control over his employees when he ran Electronic Data Systems, from reserving the right to investigate their private lives to detailing how they should dress, EDS documents show.

Perot also asked new employees to sign restrictive contracts that essentially shut them out of the computer industry for three years if they left EDS. Personnel experts said such a contract might have been difficult to enforce.

One form obtained by The Associated Press, dated May 1980, notified each new employee that EDS reserved the right to scrutinize his "character, general reputation, personal characteristics and mode of living." EDS workers were required to read and sign the document.

An 88-page EDS employee manual obtained by the AP contained a section entitled "Personal Standards," and explained that a worker's "character, integrity and behavior, both on and off the job, determine the image EDS has in the community. Therefore, your standards of conduct must at all times be above reproach."

Perot, preparing an independent run for the White House, did not respond to a reporter's written list of questions about the personnel documents.

But last week, Perot said he strongly believes in an individual's right to privacy.

"I have said again and again that what people do in their private lives is their own business," Perot said on NBC.

Milledge Hart III, a former EDS president, said that while the company conducted background checks of prospective employees, he did not recall a document that could authorize probes after a worker was hired.

"I don't remember the 'mode of living' thing, but there was nothing of that nature happening when I was there," said Hart, now a businessman in Dallas. "I don't think we ever investigated anyone."

Perot founded EDS in 1962 and built the computer services company into a multi-million dollar concern before selling it to General Motors Corp. in 1984.

He ran a tight ship at EDS, and insisted on tough standards for his employees.

The handbook for new employees spelled out what men and women could wear on the job.

Men were expected to wear "conservative shirts. . . . Following approval by the location manager, short-sleeved shirts may be worn during the warmest summer months."

These shirts were to be worn with "a conservative business suit," and complemented by "a conservative business tie, color-coordinated with suit and shirt." Footwear was to be "all-leather, lace-up, slip-on or wing-tip shoes."

"Neatly trimmed" moustaches were acceptable, but full beards were not, and hair could not be below the collar, the document shows.

Women were expected to wear "a skirted suit, dress, skirt and blouse or skirt and sweater." Pantsuits were not to be worn by "management personnel, systems engineers, corporate and financial personnel or secretaries," but exceptions could be made "during the coldest winter months."

A separate handbook prepared for clerical employees and some secretaries was less strict on the dress code.

Hart explained the dress code by saying, "Some of the managers said their guys had no idea what kind of clothes to buy. So we wrote up a document spelling it out."

Tony Goode, EDS's current spokesman, called the Perot-era dress code "very, very strict." In those days EDS was simply following the lead of computer giant IBM, he said.

"That's the way they were, and if you were trying to get the same respect they have, one way was to look like them," Goode said.

Perot apparently has no such requirements in his Dallas campaign headquarters, where the attire includes shorts and Hawaiian shirts.

The non-compete document notified new hires that any computer technology or product they developed while working for the company remained the exclusive property of EDS, and that they had to keep secret all research methodology and business strategies.

Those who left EDS were prohibited for three years from recruiting EDS employees for their own spinoff company, competing with EDS or any of its subsidiaries within 200 miles of any American city where EDS did business, or using any EDS-developed technology in their own private business pursuits.

EDS employees also were prohibited from taking a job with competitors during that three-year period.

Hart said the non-compete clause was like others in the industry at the time, and that EDS successfully defended it.

"Almost in every case, we were upheld," Hart said. "There was no attempt to be onerous or prevent anyone from making a living."

Bush's approval rating drops

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's approval rating dropped again this month in a nationwide poll released Monday, and likely independent candidate Ross Perot continued to lead in a three-way matchup with the president and Democrat Bill Clinton.

The ABC News-Washington Post poll also asked respondents to name which candidate was strongest on specific issues. The candidates were seen as strongest on the issues they've been pushing in their campaigns: Bush was seen as strongest on foreign affairs and traditional family values; Clinton on inner-city problems and the middle class; Perot on economic issues.

Thirty-five percent approved of Bush's job performance, down from 40 percent in an ABC-Post poll on May 12. His approval rating hit an all-time high of 90 percent in March 1991, just after the Persian Gulf War.

The 35 percent rating is the lowest of his presidency in an ABC-Post poll.

The poll of 1,152 people was conducted June 3-7 and had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

In a three-way general election matchup, Perot had 38 percent, Bush had 30 percent and Clinton had 26 percent, virtually unchanged from the May survey.

But the respondents said they were supporting candidates by default. Nearly half of Perot's supporters said they don't like him so much as they dislike the other candidates; 45 percent of Clinton's supporters and 40 percent of Bush's said the same thing.

L.A. Police Chief Gates says he was only bluffing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police Chief Daryl F. Gates on Monday said his threat to postpone his retirement was a bluff intended to show that the department was being controlled by "crummy politicians."

"I am anxious to be out of here by the end of June," he told reporters at police headquarters.

Gates' statements did little to cool his critics, who accused him of trying to hold the city hostage to stroke his ego in the final days of his command of the 8,300-member department.

"The bully backed down this morning," said Ramona Ripston, executive director of the Southern California American Civil Liberties Union.

A visibly angry Councilman Zev Yaroslavsky, who took Gates' remark about politicians to mean him in particular, said he had "never dealt with a sicker mind" and called Gates a "megalomaniac."

"He has left that Police Department in a total shambles. He has left this city in a lurch," said Yaroslavsky. "That's the thanks he gives to the people of this city.

Gates stirred City Hall last weekend by telling reporters he may stay beyond his announced retirement date of the end of June to take a stand on behalf of captains up for promotion to commander.

His comments further shook a city already reeling from deadly race rioting that followed the acquittals of four white police officers in the Rodney King beating. Gates was pressured into announcing his retirement after the March 3, 1991, beating of the black motorist.

In Monday's news conference, in which Gates took aim at everything from the Los Angeles Times ("miserable") to Police Commissioner Stanley Sheinbaum ("confused"), the chief said his threats were for a higher good.

He said he merely wanted the city to keep the captains on a 2-year-old civil service list that expired this month so that his successor, Philadelphia Police Commissioner Willie Williams, would have the opportunity to make the promotions.

Two old skulls challenge the evolution of man theories

By Malcolm W. Browne
N.Y. Times News Service

The two skulls and other contemporary fossils were excavated by Li and a Chinese team in 1989-90. Although Chinese authorities have not allowed either the skulls or plaster casts made from them to leave China on loan, Etler, who speaks Mandarin, was permitted to work with Li in a collaborative study.

Anatomically modern human beings, believed by many scientists to have first evolved in Africa, may have independently evolved in China and other parts of the world, a joint American-Chinese anthropological team has concluded.

That finding, reported Thursday in the British journal Nature, is based on the sizes and features of two very old skulls excavated from a site in China's Hubei Province.

The scientists, led by Dr. Li Tianyuan of the Hubei Institute of Archeology and Dennis A. Etler, a post-graduate student in anthropology from the University of California at Berkeley, believe the skulls are at least 350,000 years old and may represent a transition between Homo erectus and Homo sapiens. They describe the crania, or brain cases, of the two skulls as the most complete ever found in Asia for fossils of such great age.

Other scientists say the age of the skulls has not been determined precisely enough to support the conclusion that their owners actually lived at about the same time Homo sapiens appeared in Africa. But one matter on which paleoanthropologists appear to agree is that if the great age of the Chinese skulls can be confirmed, those specimens will be extremely valuable in helping to decipher the history of human evolution.

The two skulls and other contemporary fossils were excavated by Li and a Chinese team in 1989-90. Although Chinese authorities have not allowed either the skulls or plaster casts made from them to leave China on loan, Etler, who speaks Mandarin, was permitted to work with Li in a collaborative study.

From the structure of rock sediments in which the skulls were embedded and from the remains of other animals in the same sediments, the scientists inferred that the human skulls date from the middle Pleistocene epoch some 350,000 or more years ago. More precise dating by measurement of ratios of radioactive isotopes has not been completed, Etler said in an interview.

Li and Etler evaluated 28 characteristics of the skulls, comparing them with comparable characteristics of other fossil human skulls. The best preserved of the two Chinese fossils has a long, low cranial vault, parietal bones that converge in a characteristic way, and other features that mark it as belonging to the species Homo erectus, the precursor of Homo sapiens. Homo erectus appeared in the fossil record some two million years ago and survived until less than 500,000 years ago.

But Li and Etler found other characteristics in the Chinese fossils not typical of Homo erectus but more similar to those of Homo sapiens — the immediate ancestors of modern man (which is designated Homo sapiens sapiens). The more modern features include a rather flat face and sharply angled cheek bones. The Chinese skulls thus appear to the two scientists to represent a transitional blend of Homo erectus with Homo sapiens.

Paleoanthropologists are in broad agreement that Homo erectus originated in Africa and later migrated to other parts of the world. Among the first fossils scientists discovered of that species (formerly called Pithecanthropus erectus) were those unearthed before World War II in Java and China, and Homo erectus has also been found in Greece and elsewhere in Europe.

But there is little agreement among anthropologists as to where Homo sapiens started out.

"Dr. Li and I believe that alternatives to the idea that Homo sapiens originated in Africa are possible," Etler said. "We believe that modern man may have developed independently in various parts of the world from Homo erectus ancestors, migrating, intermingling, and finally fusing together as a kind of amalgam that we call Homo sapiens. Another possibility is that Homo sapiens actually began in China and radiated from there."

Dr. Philip Rightmire of the State University of New York at Binghamton is one of the scientists who sharply disagree.

"This is a controversial subject," he said, "but I do not believe in a multiregional origin for Homo sapiens."

■ Mechanic falls into Catch-22 situation, says Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer.

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

George Williams, the 29-year-old son of Midland County Road and Bridge Superintendent Johnny Williams, fell victim to the Commissioners' Court's policy to discourage nepotism within county government.

Because of the appearance of nepotism, George Williams was terminated within days after he had been unofficially hired as a mechanic. The commissioners had not yet ratified his job.

"That (nepotism) is not good for morale," Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer said in open court on Monday in the presence of George Williams, his wife, his father, and his lawyer, Vern Martin. "This is not good management."

But Seltzer lauded the younger Williams and said the court's action does not adversely reflect on the characters of Williams or his father.

"This was the most honorable way" to resolve the conflict, Seltzer said.

"I would take George as an employee of this county any time" but in another department, Seltzer said. "We cannot have him working for his father in the Road and Bridge Department ... because it would not look right to the public in general.

"It appears to smack of 'good old boy' " politics, Seltzer said.

The court's decision to reject George Williams as a mechanic wasn't easy, Seltzer said.

"You got caught in a Catch-22 situation, George," Seltzer said.

As a mechanic, George Williams has one of the best resumes, Seltzer said. "You certainly are well-qualified."

George Williams, apparently perplexed over just why he was let go, said "My termination was due to nepotism, is that right?"

"No," Seltzer replied. "You never were officially employed. We, as a court, think this is bad for morale."

Voting against Williams were Seltzer and Commissioners Durward Wright and Guy McCrary. Commissioner Win Brown wanted to retain Williams. Commissioner Louisa Valencia was not present for the vote.

"We need change," said Brown, a longtime advocate of having a personnel department screen applicants for county employment.

"We need long-range planning. We need a personnel department ... to help pick the cream of the crop. And this one was one of the cream of the crop," Brown said.

Seltzer said he supports a policy that

Paula Chavez works tirelessly to help others, said her friends. She says she only does what's needed.

Volunteer can't slow down as 'hidden hero'

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff writer

Whether it was an elderly neighbor who needed a meal or a church program or PTA function in need of a champion, people knew they could count on Paula Chavez.

"You never get tired when you're helping other people," said the east Midland mother of three. "I always wanted to help the sick and people in trouble. I think it's my calling."

Although she claims to be "about a third" as active as she used to be, Mrs. Chavez still has plenty of projects.

At various times, her dedication has led to work in the church, hospitals, schools and throughout the entire community.

"She is one of the hidden heroes we have in our barrio," said Ciro Sanchez, a longtime friend. "She always likes to help however she can. And everything she does is done right."

Her three children, Mrs. Chavez said, were her first priority, however.

"They say it always falls back to the parents — if they are educated they will get the kids educated," she said. "But that's not always true. I think sometimes the less you know, the more you want your kids to know."

Because she has no high school diploma, she's especially proud of her children — Sylvia, Robert and Arthur — all of whom graduated from Texas Tech University.

"You always have to strive to be better," she said. "That's a way of life to me."

Mrs. Chavez and her husband, Joe, always worked hard — at times they each held several jobs. She was a seamstress and took care of the house of a Midland family. He worked in a grocery store and then joined the city's work force.

They scrimped and saved to put their children through college. Mrs. Chavez said she wanted the children to learn one thing from their parents — the value of hard work.

"I told them, 'That's all I can give you,' " Mrs. Chavez said. " 'This is all you will inherit from me.' "

She is proud of her children, but says it is gratitude, not pride, she feels about her accomplishments.

"Everything that was said you can't do, I just went ahead and did it," Mrs. Chavez said.

"One thing about her, she'll stand up for her rights," Sanchez said.

Friends said Mrs. Chavez was instrumental in efforts to get a new building for her church, Our Lady of the Guadalupe. She was part of the 1973 east side housing rehabilitation and cleanup effort that later became Christmas in April.

Mrs. Chavez said while her children were young, the parent-teacher association was an important part of her life. Then she made the extra effort and got some other Hispanic parents involved as well.

"I tried to help them understand what they needed to do to get the Mexican-Americans involved," Mrs. Chavez said. "It wasn't easy. I went to people's houses and said, 'Let's do this. It's for our kids.' "

At times, the giving went to extremes, she admitted.

"I gave away my own bedspread. I brought home babies when their houses had no heat," Mrs. Chavez said. But she sees no end to the need.

"There is always more that could be done."

"She has worked very, very hard, but always quietly," said Oralia Corrales, another

Police sting operation nets 13 over weekend

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

The Midland police drug sting operation that resulted in 72 arrests Friday morning continued during the weekend as 13 additional indictments were delivered for various suspected drug offenses.

The seven-month police investigation targeted street-level dealing. Midland Police Chief Richard Czech expected the arrests to make a temporary dent in the street operations.

"We're hoping to hurt the wholesalers — the guys who are supplying these street-level dealers," Czech said. "But unfortunately, the wholesalers would probably find others to deal with despite these arrests."

According to jail officials, "nearly all" of the 85 people arrested this week had posted bond and were free by Monday.

Typically, bonds were set at $10,000 for each charge; no one had a bond set at more than $20,000, officials said.

Police expected to make nine more arrests later this week.

"Drug dealers in Midland have gotten careless. They don't worry so much about who they deal with, who they sell to," Czech said. "They view it (an arrest) as the cost of doing business."

A partial list, naming 39 of the people arrested on felony charges Friday appeared in Saturday's Reporter-Telegram.

Others arrested on felony delivery of cocaine charges, along with age and address, include: Tyrone Clayter, 20, 602 E. Cuthbert Ave.; Fred Lewis Jr., 40, 1906 Hudson Ave.; Finn Lee Patton, 27, 5101 N. "A" St.; Jerry Pennington, 54, 1405 E. Chestnut St.; Dexter Eugene Peterson, 30, 1116 E. English Ave.; Ellison Portis, 31, 4501 Irvin Court; and Christopher Lemar Strambler, 19, 2438 Whitmire Blvd.

Charged with delivery of marijuana are: Ed Holt, 22, 601 N. "D" St.; James Morales, 30, 4301 Raleigh Court; and Michael Dale Newton, 41, 306 Tanglewood Dr.

Carl Bryan Jackson, 34, 3601 Andrews Highway, was charged with delivery of a controlled substance.

Camp aims to help children cope with having diabetes

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

Dealing with diabetes, often a difficult task for children, should be made easier for about 40 youngsters headed for camp next week in the Davis Mountains.

The second annual camp, sponsored by Southwest Diabetes in Midland, will teach children between the ages of 6 and 17 how to comfortably live with the disease.

"But it's done in a fun way. We have sessions in the mornings and afternoons where we play games to learn about diabetes," said Tera Maxwell, director of Southwest Diabetes.

Diabetes continues to rank among the leading causes of death in the United States. About 11 million Americans have the disease, but half of them don't know they have it, according to a release.

The camp runs from June 14-20 at Prude Ranch at Fort Davis.

"It's a pre-existing camp, which makes ours so much better than anyone else's," Ms. Maxwell said. "We already have the facilities for horseback riding and the like."

Other activities will include shooting guns, swimming and archery.

"Our camp will be supervised by medical personnel as well," Ms. Maxwell said. "We will be sensitive to the needs of the children. Each child has a special diet, and

Drug abuse hotline to continue

Staff report

Midland-area students can get help fighting drug and alcohol abuse this summer through a free and confidential drug education system that will continue to operate now that local schools have closed.

The Midland Community Drug Education System (CDES) is a phone system students and parents can call to get information relating to alcohol and drug abuse, dealing with peer pressure and where to get help locally.

Officials with Luby's Cafeterias, Inc., which provides the free and confidential service to area schools, said the system operates over the summer months because students are more likely to be unsupervised and are without school counselors and teachers to turn to for guidance and information.

"We want everyone to know that this service is available over the summer — 24 hours a day,"

GARY OTT

No one seems to know why America is flat-out mad

The headline on a recent front page story in this newspaper sent out a rather ominous message.

In big bold type, it stated: "Malaise engulfs nation."

Ott

Underneath, there was a secondary headline that said, "Interviews uncover citizen outrage, anguish."

Yeah, that pretty much sums it up. America is flat-out mad. And no one seems to know why. Ask 10 people for the cause, and you'll likely get 10 different answers. There's no rhyme or reason. People are just angry.

In fact, one person who was quoted in the story probably captured the mood best. He labeled it a "nameless, shapeless dread." Others called it "fear of the unknown," some cited frustration in general, and more than a few just threw up their hands and said, "I'm disgusted with it all." They almost spit out the words, their disdain unmistakeable.

Call it what you will, but one thing has become painfully clear: This is not a happy time in American history. There is a negative attitude out there that has literally swept across the countryside, leaving a bitter and angry citizenry in its wake.

So-called experts shake their heads and marvel at the discontent. Over and over you hear them say: "I've never seen anything like it," or, "It wasn't this bad during the Great Depression," or, "The country is at a crossroads. Our future depends on which direction we go."

There is even talk of a revolution. There was a quote in the story that stated, "In this kind of environment, you run the risk of a demagogue grabbing the ball and running with it."

Some people have taken it a step further.

I heard someone the other day remark, "What's scary is that if a truly evil person, say a Hitler, came along and was really charismatic with a simple yet clear message, he just might be able to push the right buttons and rally the country around him."

Revolution? Demogogue? Hitler!?

What's going on here? Have I missed something? Did I fall asleep at the wheel?

Help. Someone fill me in. I need answers.

The irony is that I used to be the cynic. For years I took great delight in being the jaded, crusty cynic who could find a morbid brand of humor in the worst of scenarios.

Upbeat people — I scornfully called them "goody-goody two-shoes" — were my sworn enemy. They were perky little cheerleader-types who could find good in any situation. They exuded a "can-do" spirit I found nauseating. No obstacle was too big for them to overcome. Just put your mind to it, they chirped, and the job can be done. Be positive.

Yeah, right, and maybe Mickey Rooney will do another Andy Hardy movie.

Sarcasm, on the other hand, was my cup of tea. I could shoot holes in any upbeat message you cared to put forth. Want to feel good about America? Then stay away from me. I could — and would — bring you down quicker than a 17-year-old could lure his girlfriend into the backseat of a '57 Chevy.

In others words, get those goody-goody two-shoes as far away from me as possible. I wanted no part of their silly little message.

Cynicism was the name of the game, and I was the king. Nothing avoided my barbs. I could find fault with the most insignificant event. My theory was simple: "Let's have a protest."

Now something strange is happening. America's disgust with itself has caught up with me; indeed, in many cases it has passed me by. Suddenly, I find myself playing the role of Pollyanna.

Lighten up, gang. I want to scream out. It's not that bad. Sure, the economy has seen better days; and, yes, it's true, that many politicians are corrupt, but is it really necessary to tear everything down and start over? Can't we just sorta fine-tune the country a little bit?

Isn't our system of government still better than all other alternatives? Can't we avoid an all-out revolution? I mean, who knows? Maybe there really is a Hitler out there lurking in the shadows.

So calm down and laugh a little bit. Let's think this thing out. Sure, some changes, perhaps even big ones, need to be made, but let's not turn on one another. Let's work together to make this a better place ...

Gee. I'm beginning to sound like an old Andy Hardy movie. Where's Mickey Rooney when you need him?

DIABETES: Camp helps children cope with disease

we will be attentive to them individually."

A registered dietician will plan the meals for campers and help them understand the diabetic diet, known as the exchange system.

The camp staff includes three doctors and four nurses, two of whom are certified diabetes educators.

"Also a big thing we're expecting to boost morale is the return of former campers," Ms. Maxwell said. "We think their input and support of the younger campers about diabetes and coping with it will be invaluable."

Ms. Maxwell said counselors will focus on teaching preventive measures to help guard against future diabetic problems.

"Even the owner of the camp, who is a diabetic, has agreed to participate in the camp," Ms. Maxwell said. "He has generously opened it up for us."

All the children are attending the camp free of charge. Southwest Diabetes has accepted donations and is paying the remainder of the $500-per-child cost.

Parents may attend a rodeo and barbecue during the final day's award ceremony.

Anyone interested in attending the camp can still register at Southwest Diabetes this week. For more information call 686-0000.

DRUG: Information hotline to continue through summer

said Ralph "Pete" Erben, president and chief executive officer of Luby's. "Messages cover a wide range of topics, including information on specific drugs and their harmful effects, ways to say 'no' to drugs, the symptoms of drug abuse, as well as information directed at parents dealing with a child's drug problem."

More than 7,700 people in the Midland area have called the system since Luby's began providing the service in October 1987. For the 1991-'92 school year, the most frequently called CDES messages were, "Crack," "Marijuana: The Mental Effects," "Just Say NO Pledge," "The Three Steps to Say NO," and "I'm a Winner," which emphasizes the importance of taking pride in yourself and setting personal goals.

The CDES also includes a 24-hour crisis line and a list of local organizations people can contact for help. In Midland, the emergency phone number is 682-4721.

Through a special local telephonr number — 682-3737 — the Midland system can be accessed from touch-tone phones at no charge. CDES handouts list the three-digit codes that provide access to more than 50 messages. Handouts are distributed each year to school districts, police departments and other community organizations. CDES material also is available at all Luby's cafeterias.

According to Dr. Charles Granger, executive director of the Institute of Drug and Alcohol Prevention in San Diego, Calif., students are more likely to experiment with drugs or alcohol over the summer months.

"There are many interrelated factors that contribute to this," Granger said. "Many students are without adult supervision for hours at a time, which becomes dangerous when coupled with an increase in peer pressure. Also, during the summer, students who work have money on their hands and can be influenced by older coworkers to buy drugs and alcohol."

Unfortunately, Granger said, school counselors and teachers aren't readily available to answer students' questions and to offer advice to help make the right decisions.

The Institute of Drug and Alcohol Prevention, along with the Just Say No Foundation and other organizations, provide the information featured on the Community Drug Education System, which is available in 45 communities in nine states where Luby's has cafeterias.

The system is for students, parents and teachers who are looking for information on various aspects of alcohol and drug use and abuse, as well as related to social concerns.

COURT: Commissioners terminate mechanic job would discourage nepotism within county departments.

"The Commissioners' Court intends to take the lead in this matter by enacting a personnel policy that will prohibit members of the same family from working in the same county department or within the same chain of supervision within a county department," Seltzer said.

Even so, the Commissioners' Court offered George Williams a month's salary as a settlement, which he and his attorney said they would consider.

Earlier this year, the commissioners appointed George Williams' father as road-and-bridge superintendent. He succeeded 65-year-old Albert Stewart, who retired from the appointed post he had held since the mid-1970s.

Stewart's son, Guy Stewart, 35, works in that department as an equipment operator.

Albert Stewart said the commissioners "gave their blessing on me hiring him, absolutely." After that they decided to steer away from hiring relatives under direct supervision, he said.

The Commissioners' Court has direct authority over appointed departments, such as the library, Facility Management, Housing, Road and Bridge, County Welfare, and the Veterans Service and plans to set policy to prohibit nepotism within those departments.

Seltzer said he would hope that elected officials would adhere in spirit to the proposed policy, which would not affect present employees in conflict with the policy.

High court to consider Texas death penalty dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Monday agreed to resolve a Texas death-penalty dispute that could affect the fates of dozens of death row inmates in the state.

The court said it will decide whether convicted killer Gary Graham is entitled to a new sentencing trial.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Graham's death sentence and rejected, by a 7-6 vote last January, his bid for a new sentencing trial.

Graham was convicted of killing Bobby Grant Lambert at a Houston supermarket May 13, 1981.

At his sentencing trial, Graham cited his youth — he was 17 — and his troubled family history as mitigating evidence that pointed to life in prison rather than death as the appropriate punishment.

Under a since-changed provision of the Texas death penalty law, jurors were told they could consider Graham's youth and family history only in determining whether he acted "deliberately," and his future dangerousness.

In a 1989 decision in a Texas death penalty case, the nation's highest court ruled that sentencing juries must be free to consider all mitigating evidence in a way that allows them to express their "reasoned moral response."

After the 1989 ruling, the justices sent Graham's case back to the 5th Circuit court for reconsideration. The appeals court reaffirmed its earlier decision and again upheld Graham's sentence.

In the appeal acted on Monday, lawyers for Graham said his sentencing trial fell short of the safeguards provided by the high court's 1989 ruling in a case called Penry vs. Lynaugh.

The same issue was raised last month in an appeal filed in behalf of Texas death row inmate Jesus Romero.

The court, by a 6-3 vote, refused to halt Romero's May 20 execution so it could consider his appeal.

Justice John Paul Stevens, in a dissenting opinion in which he was joined by Justices Harry A. Blackmun and Anthony M. Kennedy, said the court should have ordered Romero's execution postponed until after it acted on Graham's appeal.

"It is unseemly not to stay (Romero's) execution until after that time so that his (emergency request and formal appeal) receive at least the same consideration," Stevens wrote.

The case acted on today is Graham vs. Collins, 91-7580.

Church van, cement truck collide; five die in wreck

MINEOLA (AP) — Five people were killed and at least 10 injured in a fiery crash Monday when their church van ran a stop sign and collided with a cement truck near Mineola in East Texas, authorities said.

Texas Department of Public Safety had earlier mistakenly reported that six people had died. Trooper Buddy Owles said they later found they had counted one of the victims twice. Owles said one of the dead was the van driver.

Brad Tullis with DPS in Tyler said the van was one of three carrying teen-agers from the Dallas Chinese Bible Church to the Brookhaven Youth Camp in Hawkins for a weeklong retreat.

Tullis said the van, traveling east, ran a stop sign on Farm-To-Market-Road 564 and was struck broadside by a cement truck moving south on U.S. Highway 69 near Mineola in Wood County. Skid marks marred the width of the road and grass was scorched where the burning van halted.

The truck is owned by Transit Mix LaFarge Corp. in Tyler, said Mike Cox, spokesman for the DPS in Austin. The truck's 60-year-old driver, Gene Caskey, was not seriously injured, company officials said.

DPS reported seven people were injured, but hospitals in Tyler and Dallas report that 10 injured people were admitted to their facilities and that none of them had died.

Seven people ages 14 to 17 were taken to East Texas Medical Center in Tyler said Marty Wiggins, hospital spokeswoman. Teresa Lo, 17, of Dallas was taken to Mother Frances Hospital in Tyler and was listed in fair condition.

The ninth and 10th patients were taken to Wood County Central Hospital in Quitman. David Wang, 23, of Dallas was treated and released. John Trinh, 16, was transported to Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas where he was reported in serious condition.

Only one name of the dead victims had been released. Adelinea Lau, was dead on arrival at Wood County Memorial Hospital in Quitman, said Luci Barrett of East Texas Medical Center in Tyler.

The accident occurred about 12:26 p.m. Mineola is about 80 miles east of Dallas.

"This is the worst accident I've seen in eight years as an EMS pilot," said Doug Zink, a pilot for East Texas Medical.

Bentsen attacks EPA auto inspection plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many Texans may be queuing in long lines to have their automobile emission levels checked if the Environmental Protection Agency has its way, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said Monday.

Bentsen is calling on EPA Administrator William K. Reilly to "reconsider the bias" that would develop under the agency's plan to streamline inspections.

While all Texas automobile owners must have their vehicles inspected annually, only those in Harris, Dallas, Tarrant and El Paso counties are required to have emissions tests. That's because the air quality in those areas does not meet federal standards.

The EPA is drawing up regulations that may require the state to alter the current system under which automobile emissions inspections are performed at 3,100 service stations around the state.

Instead, Bentsen said, the EPA may require the state to conduct expanded inspections at 95 stations. EPA and Texas Air Control Board officials questioned the figure, noting that a detailed plan has not been developed.

"This switch would cost many Texans in the automobile service industry their jobs and force all auto owners to drive long distances, wait in long lines and pay more to have their vehicles' emissions inspected," said Bentsen, D-Texas.

Martha Casey, a spokeswoman for the EPA, said the revamped inspection system is designed to lessen ozone and carbon monoxide pollution.

Air Control Board spokesman Steve Davis said the streamlined system would take effect in November if the EPA regulations are approved.

The board will consider at its June 18 meeting the specifications to be put out to bid, said Tom Kelley, another board spokesman.

Residents unite in effort to derail high-speed train

AUSTIN (AP) — Ranchers and farmers once were blood enemies here, but they are united these days against a common foe — a proposed bullet train that would whisk passengers across vast stretches of rural Texas at 200 mph.

The rail system would link Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and Austin, fencing in 600 miles of land to make way for trains that would run day and night.

"It's going to destroy people's whole lives," said Kenneth Johnson, who raises ostriches on his Central Texas ranch.

"Farmers have a tough enough time as it is," said Heather Morris, a second-generation farmer from Dawson, about 60 miles south of Dallas.

Johnson and Morris were among several opponents who spoke out against the proposal during a recent hearing in Corsicana. The hearing is one of 39 being held to help develop a report on the train's environmental impact.

A century ago, Johnson and Morris could have been on opposite sides. Ranchers once fought to keep the range open for their grazing cattle while farmers fenced in their land to protect struggling crops.

These days, there is no such split. Many, such as Gary Murphy, consider themselves both farmers and ranchers. The division is between agricultural interests and the railroad.

"I've got cattle, and am concerned about how the noise is going to affect milk production," said Murphy, who is from Dawson. "We feel the market value of our land is affected. The proposal's already hurting it, and it's certainly going to if it goes through."

Clint Miller, an executive with the company running the hearings, says rural Texans are worried that the bullet train could change their way of life. Some of the meetings have drawn more than 300 people.

Miller is a bit bemused by the reception he's gotten. "Other than being threatened to be chased out of town with a stick, things are going very well," he said.

A group of American and French investors, managed by Idaho-based Morrison Knudsen Corp., has been awarded the 50-year franchise to build and operate the nearly $6 billion train system. The initial routes are scheduled to be in operation by the end of the century.

Texans lash out at commissioners, demand court action to stop sludge dump

SIERRA BLANCA (AP) — Angry residents, fearing New York City sludge will turn their rangeland into wasteland, demanded Monday that Hudspeth County officials go to court to keep the waste out of West Texas.

In a standing-room-only commissioners' court meeting, residents scolded their government leaders for allowing MERCO Joint Venture to import at least 400 tons of sludge a day.

"Are we as a community so desperate we must invite these dangerous dumps?" asked Gloria Addington, a local business owner and member of the El Paso Interreligious Sponsoring Organization.

"The threat of this new effort, sludge dumping, has struck fear in our hearts," she said.

The residents left without a response to their demand, which has been made before. County Judge Bill Love said the item was not on the agenda Monday.

El Paso attorney Kit Bramblett, who owns land in Hudspeth County, urged the commissioners to set another meeting this week to consider the request.

He articulated many residents' fears that the sludge, which contains some heavy metals and pathogens, would contaminate the environment. MERCO has said the metal levels are within federal standards and the sludge will be treated to reduce pathogens.

"If it turns out to be very bad, they are going to go back to New York or Houston and those of us who live here are going to have to stay here," Bramblett said.

MERCO has a $168 million contract to spread the sludge, a by-product of wastewater treatment plants, on a portion of a 130,000-acre ranch it bought for $4.5 million.

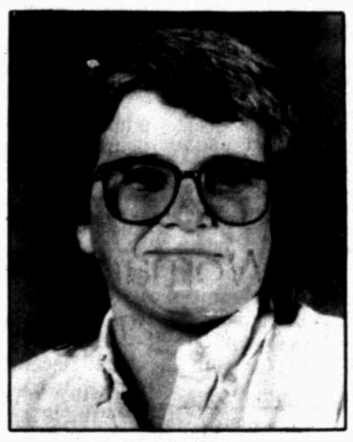

Ms. Addington said the stigma of the sludge already has affected the town, about 75 miles southeast of El Paso.

She said homeowners have told her the sludge is the reason they are selling their homes and the reason several ranch sales have fallen through.

Jon Masters, MERCO's county attorney, said the company would not delay the project because of contractual deadlines. He said the residents were misinformed.

"This type of project has been studied, exhaustive studies have been done by various government agencies, universities . . .," he said during a break. Masters said the project was not a dumping project but beneficial recycling of sludge.

Diet Center explains 'fat facts' and what all the fuss is about

A national research survey about nutrition indicates that consumers want to know more about fat, cholesterol, sodium and sugar.

Basic facts

First, let's make a distinction between fat in foods and fat in the body. Both play vital roles relating to your health status and well-being.

Fat in food

Fat found in food is an essential nutrient. It provides essential fatty acids for growth and healthy skin. It transports fat soluble vitamins (A,D,K,E) into the bloodstream. It provides energy (calories) and it contains compounds that give certain foods their characteristic flavor and aroma.

Fat in the body

There are several important functions that fat carries out in the body. It cushions and protects organs. It insulates the body from temperature extremes. It is part of the cell membrane that allows easy passage of fat soluble substances, including vitamins, in and out of the cell.

Putting fat facts to work for you

With all the talk about dietary fat today, many people think that fat isn't good for them. Actually, fat is a valuable nutrient necessary for your good health. The caution comes from the amount that is eaten. The typical American diet has significantly more total fat than many of us need.

Cut back fat for one of the smartest weight-control strategies around. When you compare calories in fat to those in protein and carbohydrates, you see why. Ounce for ounce, fat has more than twice as much, So it makes good sense to eat lean — tastes good too!

Besides the "trimmer-you-advantage," a low fat diet increases your odds for over-all good health. High fat diets are linked to many health problems, such as cancer and heart disease.

Before we appear to give fat a "bad rap," let's clarify some fat facts. You do need some fat to stay healthy, as mentioned above. The caution comes from the amount. Health experts recommend that you consume 30 percent or less of your calories from fat. (The Diet Center program recommends 23 percent).

Most of us get much more, about 37 percent.

Beware hidden fats

Whether you see it or not, fat hides in many foods you eat. Some have only trace amounts, others are surprisingly high in fat.

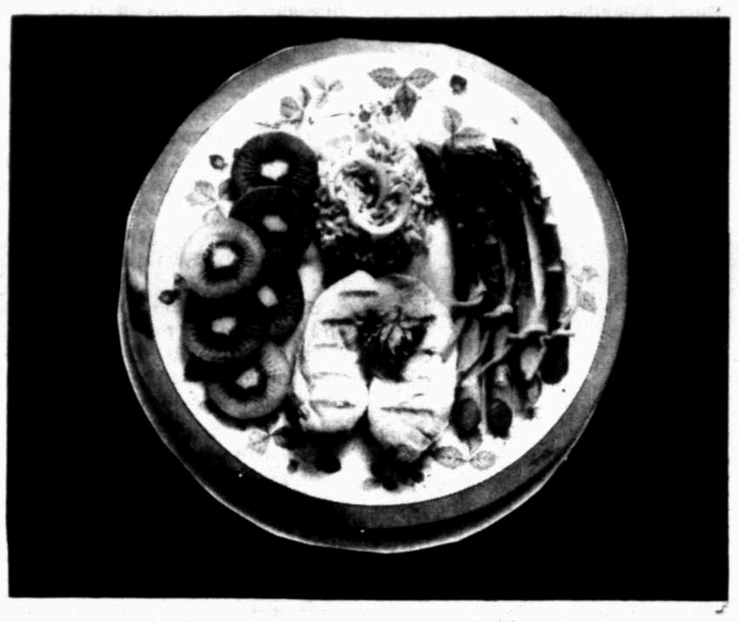

These fats are obvious — margarine, butter, oil and fat marbled in meat. But, "invisible" fats are disguised as egg yolks, cheese, fried foods, many baked foods, chocolate, chips, nuts and sauces, to name just a few.

For more information call the weight loss professionals at Diet Center — 684-5081. Besides creating an individualized diet Diet Center's weight management program analyzes and monitors body fat levels. Through an assessment technique called Body Composition Analysis, Diet Center tells clients their own ratio of lean-to-fat body mass. The the test is used to determine the source of weight loss, lean or fat.

The Diet Center program teaches that sound nutrition, with an emphasis on real food, is more important than counting calories, that the focus should be on long-term weight maintenance, not just weight loss.

There are no contracts to sign or hidden costs at Diet Center. A one-time registration fee is $75.

Sandwich Co.: Great breakfasts, lunches, catering, delivery

The Sandwich Co. owner Tom Ochs helps one of his many happy customers. The restaurant is open for breakfast and lunch weekdays and is available for private functions after hours and on weekends.

A comfortable atmosphere, good food at a fair price and friendly service encompass the philosophy of The Sandwich Co. owner Tom Ochs. "More than anything else, we're concerned with customer satisfaction," he said.

To keep his customers happy, Ochs makes sure that he's a "hands-on" manager. "I'm always available," he said. "In the kitchen, in the front, talking to customers, helping out in the kitchen. I want to personally make sure our customers get the absolute best. By that I mean the freshest ingredients and as much delicious homemade food, like our soups, as possible. Not to speak of good service."

The absolute best includes dynamite breakfasts, served from 7 to 10 a.m. every Monday through Friday. Several delicious combinations (like two eggs, two pieces of bacon, two pancakes and fresh-ground coffee or tea) are only $2.99 Breakfast offerings also include meat and cheese croissants, omelettes, bagels, cereal, hash browns and so on — all very reasonably priced.

Lunches, served from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. every weekday, present customers with a large selection of scrumptious sandwiches, including hoagies, croissants, burgers and clubs on various kinds of breads. Side orders include tasty homemade potato salad and soup.

For those too busy to "go out" for lunch, The Sandwich Co. offers free delivery in the downtown area from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The Sandwich Co. also offers catering for all occasions. This can mean anything from a luncheon for four to a function involving 100 people. Catering can include relish trays, sandwich and meat trays, cheese, fruit, vegetable and party trays as well as box lunches or specialized dishes. Ochs will be happy to work out menus to your specifications.

Ochs brings an impressive background in restaurant management to The Sandwich Co. He began his career as a waiter at Harrigan's in Lubbock. After a couple of years he moved to the Hilton where, in the course of five years, he functioned as sous chef, executive chef, assistant food and beverage director and bar manager. "I learned a lot about serving large numbers of people with varied menu themes at the Hilton, he said. "That's why I feel so comfortable with catering."

After the Hilton, Ochs functioned as a manager of an Italian restaurant for three years. He then returned to Midland as manager of Bar-B-Q Baron, Inc. for over two years.

Last December, he purchased The Sandwich Co. "We've kept essentially the same menu. We don't want to disappoint our regular customers. We have added a few things and we are serving larger portions and side orders of homemade potato salad or soup with most sandwiches, though," Ochs said. "What I'd really like is to know what's not on the menu that they'd like to see there. What we can add or improve to their satisfaction."

The Sandwich Co. is open from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. The restaurant can be used for private parties after hours and on weekends. For more information call 685-3844. The restaurant is located at 11 W. Wall St. in Midland. Major credit cards accepted.

Lottery finalists to be chosen

AUSTIN (AP) — The first seven finalists for the Texas Lottery's first million-dollar drawing will be chosen today.

Lottery Director Nora Linares said an Austin police officer would pick seven tickets submitted by lottery players. One of those will win a $1 million instant prize in a seven-way final drawing in Dallas on June 18.

"One of those seven will become the lottery's first instant millionaire," Ms. Linares said Monday.

The remaining six won't go home empty-handed. Second place in the drawing pays $50,000, while two finalists each win $25,000, two get $15,000 and two receive $10,000.

A series of 12 $1 million drawings will be held around the state from June 18 through early September.

Richards to meet with Intel Corp.

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards and the mayors of San Antonio, Fort Worth and Austin planned to meet today with officials from Intel Corp. to try to persuade the computer chip-making giant to build a proposed $1 billion plant in Texas.

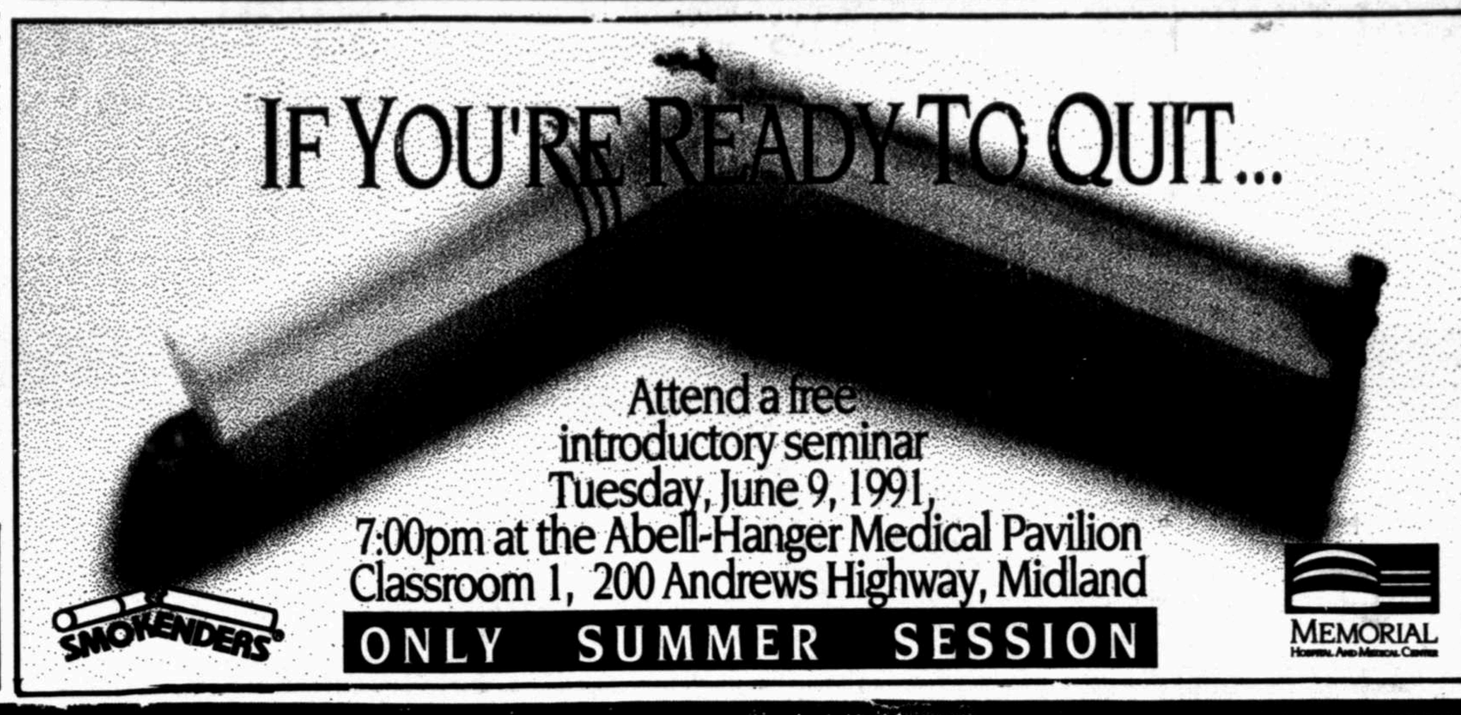

Richards was to meet with Gordon Moore, Intel's board chairman, in Santa Clara. Also scheduled to attend the meeting were Texas Department of Commerce Executive Director Cathy Bonner and mayors Nelson Wolff of San Antonio, Kay Granger of Fort Worth and Bruce Todd of Austin.

Intel expects to make a decision on the site by the end of the year. The plant will employ 1,350 people, officials said.

Investment broker imparts advice on mutual fund investing

Van Pearcy goes over a mutual fund prospectus with his assistant, Karen Hinton. A mutual fund prospectus is the legal document for the investment.

Van Pearcy, an investment broker ith Edward D. Jones & Co., has been serving individual investors in the West Texas area for a number of years. Because of Pearcy's knowledgeable, conservative approach to assisting his clients, he has become well-known in area investment circles.

"West Texas investors have become very interested in the business of no-load mutual funds," said Pearcy, who is a West Texas native and an MBA graduate from the University of Notre Dame. "This is because novice investors have confused the term no-load to mean no-cost, which is not true. Not only this, but many investors are not looking at long-term performance and this is the real key to mutual fund investing."

The business of mutual funds is managing money and their success depends largely on the skill of the money managers who select stocks, bonds and other securities in the fund. The managers are paid for their services. The costs are figured and reported as a percentage of the value of the fund. All funds have management fees that vary from less than half of 1 percent to 3 percent or more.

Pearcy said that typically, as a fund becomes larger, the management costs are reported in the condensed financial information of the fund's prospectus under "ratio of expenses to average net assets."

In the 1991 December issue of Mutual Fund Forecaster, management costs for more than 500 closely followed load and no-load funds were reported. The highest fee reported was 9.2 percent, followed by 4.43 percent for another fund in the same family. These are notable exceptions. High management fees are generally between 2 percent and 3 percent, with 1.25 percent being about average. Low management fees are in the .5 to .9 percent range.

Although these yearly management fees are often overlooked by investors, the newsletter cautions that they could be more costly than any load.

Pearcy said that mutual funds should be long-term investments, so even minor differences in fund expenses can result in significant costs when compounded over many years. An example shows how a relatively low .5 percent annual management fee on a fund whose average annual return is 10 percent would produce $7,888 more on a 20-year, $10,000 investment than if the expenses were a more typical 1.25 percent annually. However, if your fund's expense is 2 percent a year, you end up with $6,919 less than the owner with a 1.25 percent expense.

There are other fees that may also be uncovered in the fund's prospectus. These added expenses make it more important than ever to read and understand the fund's prospectus. In addition, make sure that the many services provided free through a conventional load fund are also offered by any fund you consider.

"The seemingly insignificant no-load charges can add up to a lot over the long haul. So, don't confuse no-load with no-cost and be sure to check the fund's overall performance over time," Pearcy said.

If you're interested in visiting with Van Pearcy on mutual funds and other quality investments, you should call 683-1516. Or drop by the E.d. Jones & Co. office at 1509 West Wall St. (next to Buddy's Flowers). There is no fee for consultation.

Incidentally, the office of Van Pearcy will be moving in July to 2020 W. Cuthbert, across the street from the football/track stadium.

Antarctic meteorites pose mysteries for researchers

By Malcolm W. Browne
N.Y. Times News Service

Their conclusion reopens one of the more contentious issues in planetary science: whether or not meteorites found in Antarctica are somehow different from meteorites found elsewhere.

Like bottles washed up from the cosmic sea, meteorites bring to Earth tantalizing scraps of information about the early solar system, the composition of the Moon and Mars, the nature of stardust, and eve ., perhaps, the possibility of extraterrestrial life.

But meteoritic information is written in a complex code that touches off as many debates as it settles.

In a new round of debate, two scientists report evidence from Antarctica that a spray of meteorites struck Earth about 300,000 years ago after an asteroid broke up.

Their conclusion reopens one of the more contentious issues in planetary science: whether or not meteorites found in Antarctica are somehow different from meteorites found elsewhere.

If so, a peculiar group of Antarctic meteorites may have something important to say about how the solar system environment has changed over the passing millennia.

Dr. Paul H. Benoit and Dr. Derek W.G. Sears of the cosmochemistry group at the University of Arkansas suggest that some peculiar meteorites recently collected in Antarctica came from an asteroid.

The asteroid itself, they believe, broke up some 8 million years earlier. The study so far has provided no hint of how large the asteroid was or why it broke up.

Besides its bitter cold, Antarctic ice has another quality that makes it an ideal collecting trap for meteorites.

When a meteorite hits one of Antarctica's great ice sheets it rapidly sinks below the surface to a depth at which glacial "rivers" constantly flow, some at speeds of several hundred feet a year. In some places, these glacial flows encounter rocky terrain features that force them upward.

On reaching the surface, the flowing ice is exposed to the erosion of the continent's ferocious winds and the ice is swiftly worn away, leaving a surface so smooth and transparent that the ice beneath it looks dark blue.

From beneath expanses of blue ice, like those near the Allan Hills and the Yamato Mountains, meteorites are swept up to the surface by ice streams. As the ice is worn away, the meteorites, of all different ages, collect on the surface in great numbers, some having spent up to a million years entombed in ice and virtually unchanged since the time they struck Earth.

Each year, teams of scientists using snow tractors and aircraft with radar comb the ice fields for these meteorites, and Benoit said so many specimens have been found that the organization of data has become very complex.

"During this last season alone, some 600 meteorites were harvested in Antarctica," Benoit said. "Meteorites give us a powerful tool for interpreting solar system history, and there seem to be plenty more where we've harvested thousands already."

More than 10,000 meteorites have been gathered from Antarctica. They are generally much older than the sparser crop of meteorites found in other parts of the world.

Analyses recently reported by Benoit and Sears in the journal Science suggest that some Antarctic meteorites are not just older but indeed significantly different from meteorites found elsewhere, and that one type of unusual meteorite probably came from a single asteroid.

The meteorite shower studied by the University of Arkansas scientists apparently lasted 10,000 years, judging from the range of ages of the specimens collected, Benoit said in an interview.

Although the bombardment was heavy and protracted, he said, its effects on life were probably minimal. Most of the meteorites were probably too small to cause extensive environmental damage.

The destruction of the asteroid may have also produced meteorites large enough to have survived weathering even in temperate regions of the world. But they would not be easy to identify because the skins of these rocks from the sky would have eroded away, and the skin contains the needed information.

Chemical and physical studies of meteorites can extract a surprising wealth of data about their history.

Part of the Arkansas researchers' study made use of a technique called induced thermoluminescence, a variant of a test devised in the 1960s to determine the age of pottery and other archeological ceramics.

In this test, heating a sample to a certain temperature causes it to emit a pulse of light that releases electronic energy stored from radioactive decay, cosmic rays or laboratory-made radiation.

The intensity of this light is a measure of the energy stored — and hence the age of an ancient ceramic object. The spectrum of the light pulse also contains clues to the mineral composition of the object.

The Antarctic meteorites on which Benoit focused were stony meteorites of a class known as H5 chondrites. These are commonly found in all parts of Earth, but some of the specimens found in Antarctica, he discovered, display a feature not found in meteorites anywhere else.

That feature is the extraordinarily high temperature to which they must be heated before emitting a thermoluminescence light flash after having been charged with energy from laboratory radiation.

Ordinary H5 chondrites glow brightly for a few seconds when heated to about 190 degrees Celsius (374 degrees Fahrenheit). But some Antarctic meteorites tested by the scientists glowed only when heated well above that temperature.

The reason for the difference, the scientists believe, is based on differences in the mineral composition of the two groups.

Benoit said he believed the unusual meteorites were distinguished from ordinary H5 chondrites by the extreme shock they must have sustained, causing disruptions in the crystal structure of one of their minerals, feldspar.

Testing the meteorites for the radioactive transformation of isotopes of helium and neon, the scientists determined that the special H5 chondrites drifted through space for nearly 8 million years after the breakup of the asteroid.

Throughout that time the meteorites were bombarded by cosmic rays, one effect of which was to produce a radioactive element, chlorine 36, in their outer layers.

Once they hit Earth they were shielded from cosmic rays, and no more of this isotope was produced. Since it is radioactive, the chlorine isotope then decays at a steady rate.

By measuring the remaining amount of it in the meteorites, the scientists were able to estimate the time at which most of them hit Earth as 300,000 years ago.

This age is much greater than the time similar meteorites could survive destruction by erosion in a temperate climate, and that may explain why none of the high-temperature thermoluminescent meteorites has ever been found outside Antarctica.

Benoit concludes that the rate of meteorites hitting Earth and their types change from time to time, and that these changes deserve further study.

But he acknowledges that his major premise, that Antarctic meteorites are different from those found elsewhere, is "accepted by only about half the scientists who have studied the question."

One who does not is Dr. John Wasson of the University of California at Los Angeles.

"My view," he said, "is that there is not a difference between Antarctic meteorites and those found elsewhere, if one examines meteorites of the same size." Apparent differences between the two groups are caused by skewed statistics rather than real effects, he suggests.

Certainly, the uniquely efficient meteorite-collecting mechanism of the Antarctic ice sheet creates problems for statistical analysts, although the ice has yielded immensely important discoveries in recent years.

Among the meteorites found in Antarctica in the last 10 years are fragments of the Moon that were blasted loose by meteorite impacts and hurled earthward.

Although identification of these rocks as lunar in origin was controversial at first, direct comparison of their mineral structure with that of lunar rocks collected by astronauts eventually laid all doubts to rest.

Another group of Antarctic meteorites are believed by most scientists to have reached Earth from Mars, propelled by the impact of a meteorite.

Although the Martian origin of some Antarctic meteorites cannot be proved until rock can be brought back from the planet itself for comparison, most scientists now believe that one class of meteorites almost certainly came from Mars.

Report: Debris may pose serious threat to space station

By William J. Broad
N.Y. Times News Service

Since station planning is too far along for a costly redesign, the publication reported, NASA officials are considering having astronauts attach protective panels to the metallic skins of the station's pressurized modules, which are to be occupied by the crew and key equipment.

A growing jumble of space junk could force NASA to wrap critical parts of its 350-foot space station in heavy shielding to protect the crew and equipment, a trade publication reported Monday.

Such shielding would probably raise the cost of the space station Freedom, which is to be assembled piecemeal beginning in 1995 or 1996 and to be permanently manned by the turn of the century. Its construction cost is estimated at $30 billion to $40 billion.

Space News, a weekly published in Springfield, Va., reported in its current issue that NASA experts adopted new debris calculations in February that suggested the risk of collision in the station's low-Earth orbit was greater than previously realized.

Since station planning is too far along for a costly redesign, the publication reported, NASA officials are considering having astronauts attach protective panels to the metallic skins of the station's pressurized modules, which are to be occupied by the crew and key equipment.

While relatively cheap, this solution would require changes in the modules to accommodate the shields, the lofting of the shields into space aboard the nation's space-shuttle fleet and additional space walks by astronauts to attach the protective gear.

The station project has previously been criticized as requiring more space walks than is practical or safe. Space walks are inherently dangerous, in part because speeding debris might cut through a spacesuit to hurt or kill an astronaut.

Space News also reported that a draft report by the General Accounting Office of Congress estimated that there was a 36 percent chance that debris would strike a key component of the station in its first decade of operation.

A redesigning of the station could lower that risk to 12 percent, the agency is reported to have said.

The draft report calls for station design work to be halted until NASA fully assesses the debris threat, Space News said. The station was first proposed by President Ronald Reagan in 1984. Nearly $8 billion has been spent on its design and prototype hardware.

The tens of thousands of bits of debris that threaten the station mainly originate from old spacecraft that have broken up, experts say. In addition, the space environment near Earth is polluted by paint flakes, spent rocket stages, abandoned nuclear reactors, inactive payloads and debris from tests of space weapons.

In 1990 Congress' Office of Technology Assessment warned that, unless space-faring nations worked together to reduce the orbital debris they generated, low orbits around Earth could become so clogged with space junk by the turn of the century that they would be too dangerous for many satellites and manned spacecraft.

Experts believe that 30,000 bits of debris one centimeter in diameter or larger may already orbit Earth. A centimeter is about the size of the diameter of an aspirin tablet.

Hubble spots galactic crash

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two spiral galaxies are colliding in space, 220,000 light years from Earth, creating stars and then exploding them like a string of firecrackers far more powerful than the sun, astronomers said Tuesday.

A study by the Hubble Space Telescope shows that a galaxy known as Arp 220 is really the dusty and violent collision of two massive galaxies. The discovery came from the Hubble's wide-field camera and a study by Edward Shaya and Dan Dowling of the University of Maryland.

Steve Maran, an astronomer at NASA's Goddard Space Center, said the Hubble detected at least six star clusters — or collections of billions of stars — formed within the collided pair of galaxies. He said the studies also reveal the presence of at least one black hole and an associated quasar.

Arp 220 was largely ignored by past astronomy studies because it appeared to be such an insignificant galaxy. But a 1983 study by the Infrared Astronomy Satellite showed that Arp 220 shone with dramatic brilliance in the infrared spectrum, which is not visible to the eye.

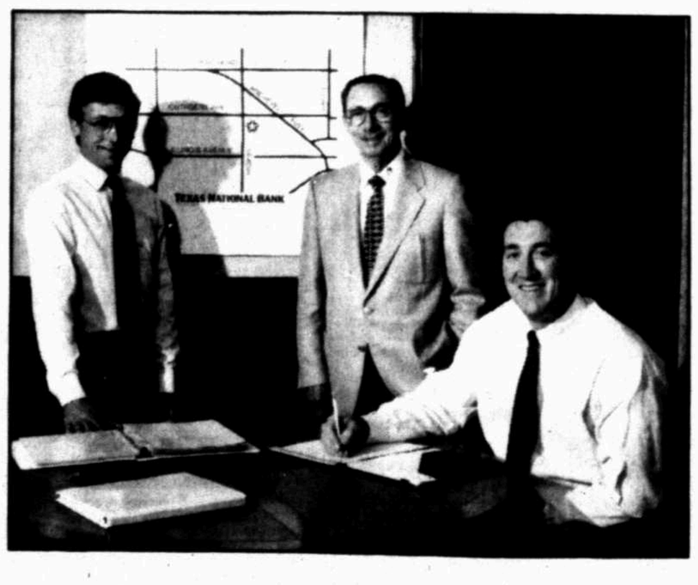

The Hubble study showed that the collision and other forces within Arp 220 have created so much dust and gas that about half of the infrared radiation and up to 99 percent of the visible light were being blocked from view. The light was heating up the dust and gas and the energy was escaping as infrared, the study found.

By filtering out the effects of the dust, the Hubble study showed that the six star clusters were creating the light equivalent of 90 billion suns each. The quasar was producing radiation about 400 billion times the light of the sun, Maran said.

"No star cluster previously seen has been this bright," said Maran. He said the clusters are brighter than some galaxies and are at least 10 times larger than any previously known star cluster.

The NASA astronomer said Arp 220 could become a factory for exploding stars, or supernovae, because it is believed that stars created in the clusters will be short-lived — only a few tens of millions of years — and will then explode.

Snyder hit .609 (14-for-23) with 11 RBIs and two homers last week.

LONDON (AP) — The Royals may finally get a chance to see Wrigley Field.

And no, this doesn't mean Kansas City will take on the Chicago Cubs in the World Series.

The Cubs, long part of America's viewing habits as one of the first team's on a cable superstation, will be beamed across the Atlantic Ocean to the shores of England.

Chicago's contest with the Montreal Expos at Wrigley Field on Saturday night will be shown on British television — the first full game ever broadcast live in the country.

Howe suspended again

Commissioner's office bans troubled Yankee pitcher for 7th time

By Susan Gallagher
Associated Press Writer

MISSOULA, Mont. — New York Yankees reliever Steve Howe was suspended from baseball for the seventh time on Monday after pleading guilty to a misdemeanor charge of attempting to buy a gram of cocaine.

"I'm sorry it came to this," Yankees general manager Gene Michael said within hours of Howe's appearance before a federal magistrate. "He was an outstanding left-handed pitcher, probably one of the best left-handed relievers in the game. We'll miss him."

Howe, who joined the Yankees in May 1991 after being out of the majors for three seasons, appeared in 20 games this season. He had a 3-0 record, six saves and a 2.45 earned run average in 22 innings, with 12 strikeouts and three walks.

"I'm sorry it came to this. He was an outstanding left-handed pitcher, probably one of the best left-handed relievers in the game. We'll miss him."

— Yankee GM Gene Michael

Howe entered his guilty plea before U.S. Magistrate Bart Erickson, but it was not immediately accepted. Erickson said he wants to study a pre-sentence report on Howe before acting on the plea and scheduled another hearing for Aug. 18.

By mid-afternoon, Commissioner Fay Vincent had announced the suspension and predicted Howe would file a grievance, sending the suspension to an arbitrator. Baseball officials have asked to meet with Howe next week.

"The Commissioner suspended Howe for violating Baseball's drug policy after Howe pled guilty in Montana to a charge of attempted possession of cocaine," Vincent's office said in a statement.

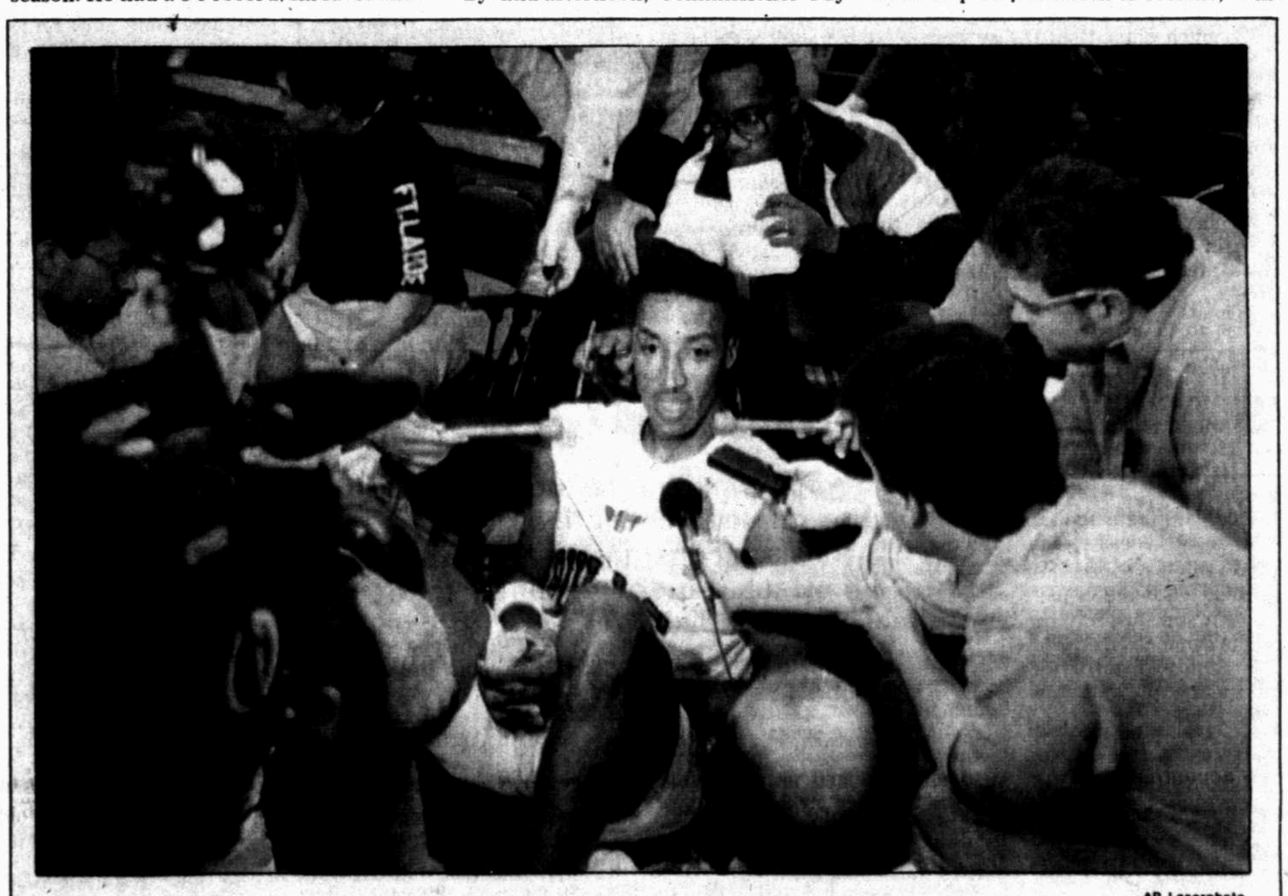

Howe, 34, becomes the second Yankee pitcher suspended this season. Pascual Perez was suspended for one year on March 7 for testing positive in two tests for cocaine use.

Howe, reached at his Whitefish home Monday night, said: "I have no comment. I will not violate the agreements and that's it."

The plea bargain negotiated by attorneys for Howe and the government calls for dismissal of a second misdemeanor cocaine charge against the Yankees pitcher. The agreement does not recommend any jail time for Howe.

Determination of a penalty rests with Erickson, however, and he could impose

Raging Bull a wild ride

By Bill Barnard
AP Basketball Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — The wildest roller-coaster ride in America right now isn't the Cyclone or Rolling Thunder or the Comet.

It's the Chicago Bulls' Playoff Express.

Although the defending champion Bulls are 13-6 in the playoffs, they haven't won more than three consecutive games and haven't lost two in a row.

After splitting the first two games at home in their last three series, Chicago has won Game 3 each time.

The Bulls also lost Game 4 against both New York and Cleveland, a pattern they hope to reverse Wednesday night at Portland's Memorial Coliseum.

Reminded on Monday of those Game 4 failures, coach Phil Jackson said, "I've tried a lot of things and haven't found the secret yet. There's a tendency to get full of yourself when you're the champions. You think you're better than you are."

"We haven't maintained the mental challenge of Game 4 after winning Game 3," said Michael Jordan, who was nursing a sore left heel Monday. "We have a chance to either break Portland's back or give them confidence."

The Bulls beat the Trail Blazers 94-84 Sunday for a 2-1 lead in the best-of-7 NBA Finals.

Chicago limited Portland to 36 percent shooting and 39 points in the second half. The Bulls handed the Trail Blazers their first home loss in nine playoff games and extended a 4-year streak in which the Eastern Conference champion has won nine consecutive Finals games on the Western Conference winner's floor.

"I'm surprised that streak has gone on this long," Jordan said. "The Western Conference teams have had great home records. But in Game 3, every time they made an adjustment, we adjusted very well, too."

The Bulls went into Sunday's game after losing in overtime at Chicago Stadium on Friday night. They led that

Real test next for Seles, Courier

By Hal Bock
AP Sports Writer

Now comes the tough part for Jim Courier and Monica Seles, each halfway to that most elusive of tennis prizes, a Grand Slam.

Now comes Wimbledon.

It's one thing to win on the quick, hard courts of the Australian Open and the U.S. Open, and the slow, red clay of the French.

It's quite another to win on the erratic grass of the very proper All England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club where, each June, they conduct a tournament known simply as The Championships.

Welcome to Wimbledon, where the ball bounces this way and that, sometimes skidding, sometimes scooting, rarely the same two times in a row.

It can drive the best players to distraction. Ivan Lendl, who never quite solved the mysteries of Wimbledon's skips and low bounces, once stayed home from the tournament entirely, announcing he was allergic to grass. Go argue with that.

The All England Club sits serenely on the outskirts of London, its pristine grass carefully cared for, fertilized and manicured, watered and waiting. By the end of the fortnight, center court will be a scuffed remnant, beaten up by two weeks of pounding, more dirt than grass.

Still it is Wimbledon, prim and proper and unlike any other place in tennis. It oozes aura and history. It can be an intimidating setting, even for the most mature player. And for all their success elsewhere, Courier and Seles remain kids, one 21, the other 18.

Each is flourishing right now, Courier a dominating winner at the French after Seles survived a marathon struggle with

Gonzalez regarded highly by Texas brass

■ Juan Gonzalez' three homer, five RBI performance in Texas' 5-4 win over Minnesota was no surprise to Ranger personnel — they've always recognized the outfielder's enormous potential.

By Jennifer Briggs
N.Y. Times News Service

ARLINGTON, Texas — It would be a long stretch to say the Texas Rangers have never had greater expectations for a young ballplayer.

In the arbitrary world of hitting, more than power, determination and expectation shape a young player's fate.

Not necessarily his personality. Not the unique, line-drive trajectory of his home runs.

Not even his credentials — Rangers' minor-league player of year in 1990, Rangers' home-run leader last season — suffice at face value for a backstage pass to the major-league limelight.

But, Rangers general manager Tom Grieve said, Gonzalez is a unique ballplayer.

And yes, they have had high expectations for him, but the season has started somewhat more slowly than last.

Then Monday night, Gonzalez hits three homers against the Minnesota Twins, accounting for every Rangers run in a 5-4 victory.

Call him a Type A batter.

His self-expectations are just as high.

"This is a big relief for me," Gonzalez said. "This year is a best for me. I'm hitting hard, swinging good now."

Gonzalez said he has never had three homers in a game in the majors, as if he were considering this merely a personal best.

Told he is the first to do it in the major leagues this season, he laughed boyishly as if half-embarrassed and half-delighted.

"That's nice," Gonzalez said, smiling, turning his head down.

No one has done it since Dave Henderson did it for Oakland against the Twins last August.

At 22, Gonzalez's career game highs have been four hits, twice.

He became the youngest player to hit three homers in a major-league game since Johnny Bench did it for Cincinnati in 1970. Only four players in Rangers history have done it. Al Oliver accomplished the feat twice. Larry Parrish and Willie Horton did it once.

"It's a great moment," Gonzalez said. "I'm hitting good."

"He's capable of doing something special," Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said. "He's going to have a heck of an RBI and home-run year.

"He's not in the league leaders. That's bad news for what hasn't happened, but good news for what is going to happen."

Sometimes it takes a while for young players, especially Gonzalez, to understand that 0 for 4 doesn't mean "Over-for-Juan."

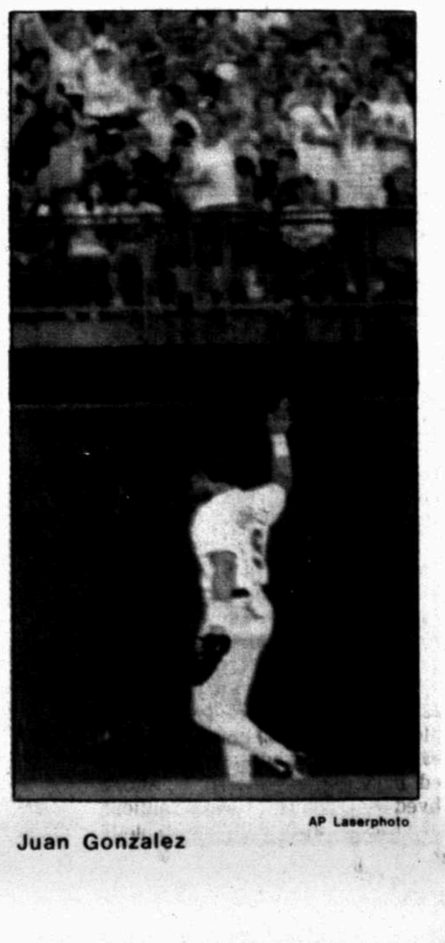

"He needed to get some more at-bats under his belt," Valentine said. "The more he gets, the more he'll know a bad night doesn't drop you right to the next category."

"Earlier I was trying to pull everything to left," the right-handed-hitting center fielder said. "Now I'm concentrating on center and right-center" — to the point that teammate Julio Franco stands on the dugout steps hollering "right field" when Gonzalez is batting.

"Ever since Juan signed with us as a 16-year-old, we knew he was a player with talent," Grieve said.

"What would make him a real good ballplayer is his mental frame of mind, his ability to adapt.

Brown wins 9th; Texas back in 1st

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Kevin Brown became the third nine-game winner in the major leagues Monday night and Juan Gonzalez homered for the fourth time in five official at-bats as the Texas Rangers routed the Seattle Mariners 14-3.

Brown (9-3) joined Boston's Roger Clemens and Atlanta's Tom Glavine as the winningest pitchers in the majors, surviving three unearned runs in the fourth. One shy of his 1991 victory total, Brown gave up five hits in six innings before being relieved by rookie Danny Leon to start the seventh.

The 14 runs and 18 hits were season highs for the Rangers, who got RBIs from seven different players. Ruben Sierra knocked in three runs.

Gonzalez followed his three-homer performance Sunday against the Minnesota Twins with a 440-foot solo blast in the third off starter Clay Parker (0-2). Gonzalez's 13th home run of the season was the longest at Arlington Stadium this year.

Sierra added a two-run homer in the sixth, the 149th of his career to tie him with Larry Parrish for the all-time club lead.

The Rangers swept a four-game series in Seattle to start the season and have outscored the Mariners 40-5 in their last four meetings.

Brewers 6, Athletics 2

MILWAUKEE — Robin Yount moved into 21st place on the all-time list with three hits, supporting Bill Wegman as the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Oakland Athletics for their ninth win in the last 11 games.

Yount singled three times to move past Jake Beckley and Rogers Hornsby on the career list. He now has 2,931 career hits.

Wegman (6-5) bounced back from a shaky outing against Detroit, when he yielded seven runs in four innings. He gave up a run in the first Monday on Jerry Browne's single, Jose Canseco's double and an infield grounder by Harold Baines.

Orioles 5, Red Sox 2

BALTIMORE — Randy Milligan's homer keyed a four-run second inning and Bob Milacki finally beat the Boston Red Sox, pitching 7 2-3 innings in the Baltimore Orioles victory.

Milacki (5-3) gave up four hits and two runs in the opening two innings, then blanked Boston on three hits until giving way to Storm Davis, who got the last out in the eighth. Gregg Olson pitched the ninth for his 15th save.

White Sox 5, Angels 1

CHICAGO — Jack McDowell broke a personal three-game losing streak and Robin Ventura drove in two runs with a double and a single, leading the Chicago White Sox over the California Angels.

The Angels dropped their fourth straight and 18th in the last 22 games.

McDowell (8-3) yielded four hits in 7 2-3 innings, walking three and striking out eight. Chuck Finley (1-5) was the loser.

Blue Jays 16, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Jeff Kent tripled, homered and drove in four runs as the Toronto Blue Jays routed the New York Yankees behind an eight-run fourth inning.

Todd Stottlemyre (5-4), who had lost his three previous decisions, allowed just three hits and one run in six innings for the Blue Jays, who won for the seventh time in 10 games. Manuel Lee also drove in four runs as Toronto set season highs with the 16 runs and 21 hits, including nine for extra bases.

Royals 9, Twins 6

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Keith Miller went 4 for 4 and drove in four runs as Kansas City rallied to beat the Minnesota Twins for the Royals' sixth straight win.

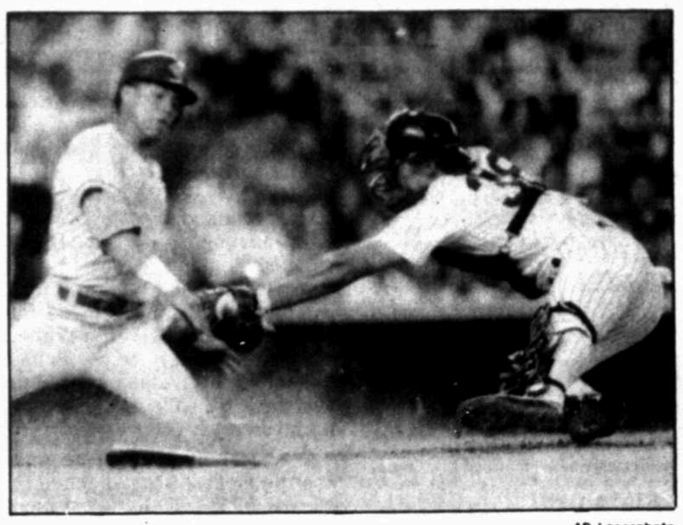

The Twins blew a 5-1 lead and helped the Royals to a five-run sixth by committing errors on three successive plays as Kansas City scored all its runs with two outs.

Tom Gordon pitched 2 2-3 innings of relief for the victory.

Tigers 9, Indians 2

DETROIT — Milt Cuyler's grand slam capped a seven-run first inning and led the Detroit Tigers to a fight-marred victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Cuyler's second career grand slam came after Cecil Fielder already had hit a three-run homer in the inning.

HOWE: Pitcher knew future was at stake if convicted up to one year in jail and a $100,000 fine on the single count.

Howe offered the plea under a legal mechanism called an Alford plea. Attorneys said that under that procedure, a defendant can plead guilty to a criminal charge without admitting the government's version of the facts.

"He does not stand convicted today," defense attorney Steve Nardi said.

Howe's attorneys said the guilty plea is similar to a no-contest plea in some ways, and Howe's status remains uncertain pending a decision by Erickson.

But the prosecutor, Assistant U.S. Attorney Kris McLean, called use of the Alford option nothing but a legal nicety.

"He pled guilty today," McLean said. "Guilty's guilty."

However, McLean confirmed, use of the plea gave Howe a means of going to Vincent and arguing he did not admit to the facts in the case.

Howe's agent, Richard Moss of Pacific Palisades, Calif., who also is an attorney, said before the suspension was announced that he didn't expect Vincent to take any action before August on Howe's status.

Howe arrived at the federal courthouse Monday holding the hand of his wife, Cindy. He also was accompanied by his minister, the Rev. Al Barone. The Howes and Barone prayed in a courthouse hallway before the hearing began.

Barone said he was "just here to support the family." The Howes are active in the Valley View Foursquare Church in Whitefish, Mont., where they live during the offseason.

Howe was arrested last Dec. 19 and charged with attempting to buy 1 gram of cocaine from a Drug Enforcement Administration informant in the parking lot of a Kalispell, Mont., auto dealer. Federal agents later added a second charge that he possessed 2 grams of cocaine between Nov. 23 and Dec. 19 in Whitefish.

NBA: Bulls say sweeping in Portland 'will be difficult' game by 10 points with less than five minutes left in regulation.

"We had to recover that game, not only physically and mentally, but also spirtually," Jackson said. "There's a spiritual aspect to this game that's often overlooked. But we recovered from what could have been a devastating loss."

"We've played well with our backs against the wall," said Jordan, who's averaging 34.7 points in the series. "Sometimes it takes a little danger to regain that edge. The Blazers will come into Game 4 with a must-win attitude. We have to take an us-against-the-world attitude."

Jordan scored 26 points for the Bulls on Sunday while Scottie Pippen and Horace Grant had 18 each. Clyde Drexler led Portland with 32 points, but none of his teammates had more than 12.

"Playing with Michael, we're always going to be part of a supporting cast, but sometimes the supporting cast steps up," Grant said. "We have to do in Game 4 what we've done in all the Game 3s — get the loose balls, get the rebounds and play aggressive defense."

The Bulls won their first NBA title last year by losing only two playoff games, and they won the last three games of the Finals on the Los Angeles Lakers' home floor.

"It will be difficult to do again what we did in L.A. last year," Grant said. "Portland is a team of pride."

Danny Ainge, Portland's hero in Game 2 with 9 of his 17 points in overtime, said the nine-game road winning streak by the Eastern Conference in the Finals is not surprising to him.

"The past couple of years, the best team has won, and the best team can always win wherever they play," Ainge said. "We still hope to prove we're the best team. It's not to late to do that."

Ainge said the Trail Blazers' "energy level and execution was bad at both ends of the floor Sunday. This is a game of momentum and when they got it in the first quarter, we weren't able to recapture it."

Jordan said the important thing for the road team in the Finals "is to take the crowd out of the game. The crowd will energize the home team."

Drexler said the Portland crowd did that earlier in the playoffs, "but we have to give them something to cheer about. I don't look at it as letting the homecourt advantage slip away, but it was a missed opportunity for us."

Trail Blazers coach Rick Adelman said there was no carryover effect from losing three consecutive games in Portland in the 1990 Finals against Detroit.

Schilling throws three-hit shutout at Pirates

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Curt Schilling pitched a three-hitter for his first major league shutout and doubled in two runs in a six-run second inning as the Philadelphia Phillies downed the Pittsburgh Pirates, 3-0.

Schilling (5-3) struck out one and issued an intentional walk as the Phillies handed the Pirates their sixth straight road loss and ninth in the last 10 away from home.

It also was Schilling's first complete game in 10 big league starts with Baltimore and Philadelphia. He extended his scoreless innings streak to 20.

Mariano Duncan contributed a three-run homer in the second inning off Vicente Palacios (3-1). Lenny Dykstra had four singles, including one as the Phillies batted around in the second.

The Phillies reached Palacios for six runs on six hits and two wild pitches in the second.

Darren Daulton hit his ninth homer in the seventh inning, his fifth in the last five games. He has 11 RBIs in that span.

Expos 6, Mets 0

MONTREAL — Ken Hill pitched his first career one-hitter and drove in a run as the Montreal Expos beat the punchless New York Mets for their third straight victory.

The only hit off Hill was pitcher Anthony Young's infield single to shortstop with two outs in the fifth inning. Shortstop Tom Foley ranged to his right and probably would have thrown Young out had he made the play, but he bobbled the ball.

Official scorer Bob Mann said he ruled the play a single because the ball was hit deep into the hole.

The Mets were shut out for the second straight game, losing 3-0 to Pittsburgh's Randy Tomlin on Sunday, and for the ninth time in 56 games this season.

Hill, who struck out eight and walked four, blanked the Mets for the second time this season. He beat the Mets 4-0 with a four-hitter at New York on April 10.

The Expos scored two runs in the fourth off Young (2-4). Larry Walker doubled with one out and Archi Cianfrocco delivered an RBI single with two outs. Cianfrocco took second on the relay home and scored on Rick Cerone's double.

Cardinals 5, Cubs 2

ST. LOUIS — Gary Scott and Jose Vizcaino, each batting under .200, keyed a four-run 13th-inning rally as the Chicago Cubs beat the slumping St. Louis Cardinals in the first game of a doubleheader.

Scott, batting .109, hit the first pitch of the 13th from Juan Agosto (2-4) for a ground-rule double and advanced on a sacrifice. Agosto then hit Jerome Walton with a pitch before Vizcaino, batting .181, singled up the middle.

Ryne Sandberg followed with a run-scoring single to make it 3-1 and Andre Dawson drove in a run with a groundout and Mark Grace had a run-scoring single.

Before the 13th, Cardinals relievers had retired 18 of 20 batters, allowing only two walks, since the seventh.

Padres 3, Astros 2

SAN DIEGO — Bruce Hurst, backed by homers from Tony Gwynn and Darrin Jackson, pitched a four-hitter to beat San Diego nemesis Pete Harnischin the Padres' victory over Houston.

Gwynn broke a 2-2 tie with one out in the seventh with his fifth homer. Jackson hit a two-run homer in the fourth as the Padres won for only the second time in seven games.

Hurst (6-4) won his third straight game and fifth in his last six, four of which have been complete games. He struck out six and walked two.

In his previous five starts, Hurst had thrown two shutouts, including a one-hitter against the New York Mets, and compiled a 1.93 ERA.

Hurst had lost his previous two games to Houston, both against Harnisch (3-6). Harnisch allowed eight hits in 6 1-3 innings.

Reds 4, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Greg Swindell, after giving up a leadoff homer to Darren Lewis, pitched eight strong innings as the Cincinnati Reds beat the San Francisco Giants.

Swindell (5-2) helped the Reds break a five-game losing streak against the Giants, who swept a three-game series between the teams here in April.

Chris Sabo homered and drove in two runs for the Reds, who have won 11 of their last 14 and lead the NL West by 2½ games.

Swindell also had unusual trouble with the leadoff batter in the second, walking Kirt Manwaring on a full count. That broke a streak of 219 innings in which Swindell had not walked a leadoff batter.

Swindell is 5-1 in his last nine starts since opening the season with two no-decisions and a loss.

Alomar injured

Alomar walked in the third inning, took third on Greg Cadaret's wild pitch and hurt himself trying to slide home ahead of Danny Tartabull's throw on Dave Winfield's fly to right.

Alomar, tagged out by catcher Matt Nokes, began the night with a .330 average, third best in the American League.

Midland win streak comes to grinding halt

Staff report

EL PASO — The Midland Angels' five game winning streak came to a rude halt Tuesday night with the opening of a six-game road trip in El Paso.

After two consecutive strong starts, Midland atarter Dave Adams was roughed up as the Diablos stopped Midland, 6-1.

Adams (3-5) had four wild pitches and yielded nine hits and four runs in six innings. El Paso collected five doubles off Angel pitching.

To top it off, Adams allowed his first base on balls in his last 28⅔ innings.

A typical inning on the night was the El Paso second, when the Diablos took a 2-0 lead and never looked back. John Byington singled with one out, went from first to third on an Adams' wild pitch, and scored one pitch later on another WP. Craig Faulkner then singled and went to second when Angel centerfielder Jim Edmonds booted the pick-up. Faulkner then went to third on Adams' third wild pitch of the inning, and scored on a bounce out by Ed Caceras.

Midland's only run came in the fourth, when J.R. Phillips singled in Dan Rumsey.

El Paso scored its final two runs in the seventh on three straight doubles off Steve Peck.

Phil Leftwich (2-2, 5.67 earned run average) starts for Midland tonight, while El Paso counters with David Martinez (4-2, 3.84 ERA).

SLAM: Wimbledon up next

(From 1C)

Steffi Graf. Now comes the real challenge, though — the crazy bounces off Wimbledon's grass.

Neither has really solved the surface so far.

Courier, at least, is making progress. He reached the quarterfinals a year ago following a first round elimination in 1989 and a third round wipeout in 1990. "I played well there last year," he said. "I feel I can play well there again. I'll do my best."

Right now, he is the No. 1 player in the world and enjoying every moment of it, displaying the kind of charisma America demands in its tennis heroes.

At the Australian, he celebrated his victory by jumping in the Yarra River. At Paris, with the Seine too far away, he topped off his win by taking a phantom Johnny Carson golf swing, a tribute to the recently retired television entertainer who was at courtside. Then he spoke to the crowd in French, butchering the language a bit but — speaking like a Spanish cow, he said — but at least making the attempt.

Now he has to get serious, tug down on the bill of his baseball cap, and go after the grass, beginning June 22. After that comes the Grand Slam climax, the U.S. Open in New York at the end of August.

Seles reached the fourth round at Wimbledon in 1989 and the quarters the next year before passing last June with what she said was a stress fracture in her leg.

She followed her last minute withdrawal with a Madonna act — mysterious comings and goings, often hidden under a huge hat. It was certainly not the first time a 17-year-old has pulled that routine, but it had the English tabloids speculating on everything from pregnancy to petulence.

Now a mature 18, Seles may bring a different perspective to Wimbledon this time. Her three-quarters Slam last year gave her some food for thought.

"I will always have to live with it," she said. "It will always be there. The little emptiness. For me, next year Wimbledon will be the most important. It's the only one I haven't won for my collection."

This, then, is her next year.

NASCAR point race jammed at the top

Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Six drivers are within one race of the NASCAR stock car racing national points lead after Sunday's 300-mile race at Sears Point International Raceway in California.

Davey Allison kept his lead in the chase for the $1.3 million Winston Cup championship, as he has since winning the season-opening Daytona 500 12 races ago. But his 28th-place finish Sunday let the rest of the pack catch up.

"You're going to have some bad luck every once in awhile. It happens to everybody and it happened to us at Sears Point," said Allison, who crashed early and spent much of the race working to stay in the lead lap.

"I've been saying all along that it's going to go down to the last race of the season," Allison said Monday. "So we'll head on to the next race and maybe things will go our way there."

Allison has 1,773 points and a 28-point lead over new second-place driver Dale Earnhardt, a five-time national champion and motorsports' all-time leading money-winner. Earnhardt, who was third in the standings before Sunday, has 1,745 points.

Bill Elliott, the 1988 national champion, is third with 1,742 points and is followed by Harry Gant, 1,741, Alan Kulwicki, 1,690, Terry Labonte, 1,658, Morgan Shepherd, 1,548, Ricky Rudd, 1,511, Geoff Bodine, 1,494, and Sunday Sears Point winner Ernie Irvan, 1,488.

With a possible 143-point difference between first and 40th in a single race, any of those six could take the lead by the end of the next NASCAR cup race, Sunday's 500-miler at the 2.5-mile Pocono (Pa.) International Raceway.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, JUNE 9, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your ability to take care of details quietly and efficiently wins new notice now. Lay the foundations for your family's future financial security this coming fall. Taking stock of your assets will help you make a wise investment in December. Overseas contacts will take on greater importance early in 1993. Forging a new alliance next March could be the key to lasting career success. Choose a partner whose strengths compliment your own.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: slugger Dave Parker, actor Michael J. Fox, newscaster Marvin Kalb, singer Jackie Wilson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An unexpected communication brightens the morning. Although a lunchtime incident is unsettling, the afternoon should unfold smoothly. Diplomacy helps you deal with family arguments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A surprising development regarding certain social plans may cause tension between you and your mate or another close ally. You could find yourself attracted to an older person. Keep an open mind.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A speculative venture remains much too risky. Protect jointly held resources. Singles can further their romantic aims by attending parties. Set aside more time for reading and learning.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your outlook changes following a confidential chat with a close friend or relative. Combine intellect with intuition on your way up the career ladder.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A change of lifestyle could boost your self-esteem and confidence. Greater tact will help you sidestep verbal confrontations. Deliver stressful news in person.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An early morning message helps you see a career or financial move in a new light. Postpone making a final decision. Spending the evening with an old friend will revive happy memories.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Work harder to reduce projected spending. A creative or artistic venture, properly developed, will bring lasting financial security. Romance becomes even more rewarding.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your studies or travels are interrupted for a good cause. Be flexible; appease an authority figure. Extravagance could land you in hot water with your partner.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Someone wonderful knocks on your door, possibly a visitor from afar. Making plans for the future brings you new hope and good fortune, too. Be supportive of your loved ones this evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A good time to make key changes, ones you have dearly wanted. Whatever you give, you will get back. Your finest career move may take place behind closed doors. Go for the gold!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take charge of your destiny and you will feel the thrill of success. You can definitely sense which plans are right. Loyal allies are everywhere both day and night. Adhere to a sensible diet.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A fortunate day for your finances. Look into shopping values and try to pull a few strings. If someone will not work with you, move along. Pick up the tempo in romance.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are affectionate, generous and eager for approval. They are easily disciplined as youngsters but sometimes turn rebellious in adolescence. However, even during their teen years, they will remain close to their parents. Count on these trend-setting Geminis to wear the latest fashions. Easygoing and tolerant, they will have many friends. Their excellent memory is a big asset in both school and business. They remember important details other people may forget.

Opening lead: Ten of ♡ Bidding a hand to the optimum contract is only half your objective. All will be for naught if you fail to make your contract.

North-South bid excellently to a fine small slam in spades. North judged that the hand was good enough to insist on game in spades and chose to make a splinter bid en route by jumping to four clubs to show a good passed-hand raise to game with a singleton club. With all prime values and not a point wasted, South first checked on aces, then made a grand slam try by cue-bidding six clubs. Holding none of the three top trump honors, North declined with alacrity.

West led the ten of hearts and declarer could see no losers except for trumps. After winning the king in hand South banged down the ace of spades—down one.

While declarer was unfortunate to find a 3-0 spade split, it is not all that unusual—when you are missing three cards in a suit, they will all be in one hand 22 percent of the time. That makes it well worthwhile to take some care about the play of the hand.

If all the missing trumps are in the West hand, declarer's fate is etched in stone—two trump tricks must be lost. But if all are with East, a safety play will limit the losers to one. Declarer can either cross to the table and take a double finesse or, if entries are tangled, as is the case here, declarer can accomplish the same thing by leading a low trump toward the jack at trick two. When West shows out, declarer can then get back to dummy with a club ruff to take a marked finesse for the remaining honor. If both defenders follow to the first round, the ace picks up the last outstanding trump.

Former porn film star Reems celebrates sobriety, marriage

PARK CITY, Utah — Harry Reems, who appeared in hundreds of pornographic films and co-starred in "Deep Throat," is a happily married church trustee.

Television talk shows have been after Reems to tell viewers about his films and his 30-year struggle with alcoholism, but he says his sole purpose these days is to save people from killing themselves with alcohol.

"I know today that those of us who are spared, every day we live, we live with the grace of God," said the 44-year-old Reems, now a real estate agent in this resort town 40 miles east of Salt Lake City. He was born Herbie Streicher.

He says he was given a glass of scotch by his father at age 11, and ended up drinking a gallon of vodka a day. His movie earnings bought him a palatial Malibu beach home, but he later wound up living in a Los Angeles supermarket trash bin asking for handouts.

On July 1, Reems will celebrate three years of sobriety. He's become a trustee in the Park City Community Christian Church and he's been married for two years.

"I have learned what a miracle is," he said.

LONDON — Comedian Joan Rivers didn't exactly bring down the house on a London stage leaving some theater-goers complaining that her show was too short, not spicy enough and "a bit of a fiasco."

Rivers

Her spokesman in Los Angeles denied most of the complaints.

Police said about 500 people who paid $36 for the show Sunday night besieged the box office demanding their money back. But Rivers' spokesman, Richard Grant, said only 31 asked for refunds.

The performance at the Queen's Theater was supposed to run two hours but ended after 45 minutes because it was being recorded for television, said a theater employee who spoke on condition of anonymity. Grant said the show was 56 minutes and there had been no promise about the length.

He said the show was not tame and, "they may even have to delete some of it for cable." The show was filmed for the Showtime cable network.

"It was a bit of a fiasco in there," said theater-goer Janice Long, "and we had to put on party hats afterwards while they televised this thing, involving somebody impersonating the queen and goodness knows what else. I mean it was just ridiculous."

Graham McNally, operations manager for Stole Moss Theaters, said people who complained directly after the show would be given their money back but later claims would be considered individually.

NEW YORK — Several years ago the writer A.E. Hotchner organized a benefit for the camp he and Paul Newman started for children with cancer. Hotchner's daughter, Holly Hotchner, director of the New-York Historical Society, was duly impressed but told him: "Museums are just as needy. Why not do one here?"

"One can't very well refuse one's daughter's request for something you know will be a lot of work," Hotchner said the other day. He explained how he had plunged into the 1920s for a party Monday night called "The Roaring '20s in New York" at the society, on Central Park West.

The benefit will take an illustrious cast — Isaac Stern, Beverly Sills, Anthony Quinn, Hildegarde, Cy Coleman, Celeste Holm and Newman, if he returns in time from an auto race in Detroit — back 70 years for songs, dances and vignettes of the period.

George Plimpton, Gay Talese, Pete Hamill, Peter Maas, Erica Jong and Hotchner, for example, will re-enact the glittering conversations of the Algonquin Round Table.

Stern and Miss Sills will recount the origins of Nathan's hot dogs, and Greg Burge will tap the dances of Bill (Bojangles) Robinson. "We'll do the whole decade in an hour and a half, and it will go by with the twinkling of an eye," Hotchner said.

UNION, W.Va. — Rep. Nick Joe Rahall had a difficult time convincing a pack of Cub Scouts he should be re-elected over opponent Ben Waldman in November's election.

Rahall

Rahall, D-W.Va., was campaigning Saturday at the Farmers Day parade in Monroe County when he approached Pack 502. Waldman is pack leader.

"I saw him there talking to my boys, so I walked over and introduced myself to him," Waldman said. "He looked a little taken aback when one of the Scouts called me 'daddy.'"

Waldman, a Republican, said he explained to the Scouts who Rahall is.

"I reminded them that part of their Cub Scout pledge is to do their duty to God and their country," he said. "Rahall is a member of Congress and the boys have to learn to respect their elected officials."

Prices retreat

NEW YORK — Oil prices retreated Monday in slow trading.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in July settled at $22.44 per barrel, down 18 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Oil opened lower and stayed down all day, with traders finding no news to motivate them. Volume was light.

Reports that Iraqi and United Nations officials might be getting closer to a deal to let Iraq resume crude oil exports had no major impact.

Natural gas prices were lower, with contracts for delivery in July settling at $1.625 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 2.8 cents.

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, lower-grade sour crude for delivery in July settled at $20.74 per barrel, down 18 cents.

Seminar starts

The Midland office of The Principal/Eppler, Guerin & Turner Inc. will host a seminar for investors averse to risk. The seminar will be this evening, beginning at 7 p.m., at the Plaza Club in ClayDesta Center.

The seminar will be presented by Gerald Scandore, senior vice president of Zweig Securities Corp., who will present "Dr. Martin Zweig's Approach for the Risk-Averse Investor."

T-bills fall

WASHINGTON — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities fell in Monday's auction to the lowest level in three weeks.

The Treasury Department sold $11.7 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.71 percent, down from 3.75 percent last week. Another $11.6 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.83 percent, down from 3.90 percent last week.

Dollar slips

NEW YORK — The dollar closed mostly lower Monday in extremely quiet trading.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 127.20 yen, down 0.35 yen from Friday's close.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.8345 from $1.8350 late Friday.

Dow rises

NEW YORK — Stock prices were mixed Monday in a session of fits and starts marked by uncertainty over the future course of Federal Reserve credit policy and interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 5.44 points to 3,404.13. But declining issues slightly outnumbered advances on the New York Stock Exchange.

Phone companies race to fiber optics

Industry wants customers to foot much of the investment bill in advance

By Edmund L. Andrews
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Armed with ambitious blueprints to build a communications network for the next century, the nation's local telephone companies are racing to replace their aging copper wires with optical fibers.

In time, the companies say, they hope to deliver everything from television images to libraries of data at a moment's notice — services that cable television companies also hope to deliver.

The catch is that the telephone companies want their customers to foot much of the bill up front — and the cost during the next 20 to 30 years is expected to run well over $100 billion.

Nationwide, local telephone companies are pressing for regulatory changes that would lead to rate increases — or in some cases cancellation of pending rate cuts — that amount to more than $1 billion a year.

The companies are making their case by seeking the right to depreciate more quickly their investments in old copper-wire networks, which they say have lost value more quickly than anticipated because of new technology and increased competition from cable television and private phone companies that provide business services.

The phone companies' approach is a sharp contrast to that of most other corporations. When an automaker wants to open a factory or a bank wants to install a computer system, they either tap their existing reserves or sell stock or bonds to raise fresh money, hoping to recoup the investment through increased profits.

But the rules are different for utilities, including phone companies, because the rates they charge are regulated and tied to costs.

The industry's pleas have already won support from top officials at the Federal Communications Commission and from some state regulators, who say they do not want to hamstring the development of advanced technology. But consumer advocates and some government experts say the telephone companies are merely begging for billions of dollars in risk-free, interest-free financing.

"This is a forced investment from rate payers, not from Wall Street, not from stockholders, but from ordinary customers," said Gene Kimmelman, legislative director of the Consumer Federation of America.

Mall's marketing director has eye set on aesthetics

By Mella McEwen
Staff writer

Sylvia Hernandez, new marketing director at Midland Park Mall, has a sense of the visual.

The El Paso native said that, since joining the Midland Park Mall management team earlier this year, she has worked with the mall's visual merchandiser to create attention-getting store windows and enhance the center's vacant areas by decorating the store gates with colorful streamers.

"Since I've arrived, one focal point is aesthetics," she said. The reason for this emphasis, she said, is that, "I see the visual as important in itself for the customers and mall employees. If we take pride in where we work, it will carry over to the people who visit."

Other visuals that catch the shopper's attention are changes and facelifts at existing retailers, something several of Midland Park Mall's retailers have either just completed or are about to begin.

"They keep shoppers motivated," she said. "People like to see a change in merchandise. It gives the store a modern, up-to-date look."

Working on a shopping mall staff and, more specifically in marketing, was a career Hernandez "stumbled upon" while a student at the University of Texas at El Paso.

She said she had finished a summer job and was offered a temporary job as assistant to the assistant manager, "a glorified gopher," she described it, at El Paso's Sunland Park Mall. She was asked to stay on and worked in customer service and worked primarily with temporary retailers. She also worked at another El Paso mall, Cielo Vista.

She became intrigued with how a mall operated, she said, never realizing beforehand that a mall had a management team and how that team operated. "I saw what the others were doing, and decided 'I could do that.' It seemed to fit," she said.

After graduating from UTEP with a bachelor's degree in business administration with an emphasis on marketing, she found a position with Melvin Simon & Associates — owner/operator of Midland Park Mall — and was sent to an MSA property in Wichita, Kan., as an assistant marketing director.

Nine months after being sent to Wichita, Hernandez was sent to Midland as marketing director. She said she is glad to be in the Tall City and expressed surprise at the warmth of the people she's met.

Her initial plans are to make the mall more community and promotions-oriented, with promotions geared to shopping seasons such as back to school and the holidays. She added that she is trying to build up a couponing program that could emphasize the Food Court.

She also plans — but this is further in the future — to market the mall on a regional scope, to outlying towns such as Stanton and Big Spring. First, she said, "I want a good knowledge of the Midland/Odessa market, then I'll branch out from there."

The mall has had several retailers close in recent months, which she said is not as much a reflection of the Midland economy as it is of the national economy and the result of national corporate restructuring.

Hernandez said she is pleased that traffic at the mall is up 20 percent from a year ago, and sales are up 4 percent from year-ago levels. And the mall's leasing staff is working to sign new tenants. Hernandez predicted that several new stores would be open in the mall by the end of the summer, including McDuff's Electronics, which will occupy the 10,000-square-foot space once occupied by O.G. Wilson's.

Gulf States, Entergy Corp. utilities merge

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Entergy Corp., the electrical utility company for most of Louisiana, Arkansas and Mississippi, announced Monday that it is merging with Gulf States Utilities, which serves 579,000 customers in South Louisiana and Southeast Texas.

"From the limited information I have received, it looks like it might be a good thing for everybody," said Louisiana Public Service Commissioner Louis Lambert of Gonzales.

Entergy Corp. has about 1.7 million customers served by Arkansas Power and Light, Louisiana Power and Light, Mississippi Power and Light and New Orleans Public Service, Inc.

Gulf State's sales in 1991 were $1.7 billion, and Entergy Corp. sales amounted to about $4 billion.

The new holding company, Entergy, will own all stock of GSU and Entergy Corp.'s subsidiaries.

"Right off the bat, there'll be a fuel savings of about $30 million for the first five years for the system," Lambert said. The companies estimated the savings on fuel at $646 million for 10 years.

The savings, even at the lower estimate, should enable GSU to avoid raising rates for its customers for at least five years, and LP&L had no plans for raising rates, Lambert said.

He said two other Texas-based companies — Central and South West Corp., and Houston Industries Inc. — had explored a merger with GSU, which has its headquarters in Beaumont, Texas.

Maker unfolds new dry diaper

N.Y. Times News Service

The diaper war is entering the "smart weapon" phase.

Using words like "breakthrough" and "revolutionary," the Procter & Gamble Co. said Monday that it had developed the driest diaper ever, one that a company scientist said would be far more absorbent than current diapers.

P&G's chairman, Edwin L. Artzt, said: "This is a major invention. This is a real significant technical invention for the company."

And an analyst with Smith Barney, Joseph Kozloff, said, "This is big stuff."

If P&G's diaper lives up to the company's boasts, Kozloff said: "Look out. They have just checkmated" Kimberly-Clark Corp. the company's main rival.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Financial planner reader spouts bad advice

By Bill Doyle

Q: As a registered representative of a firm offering insurance products and investments, I must say your columns about U.S. Treasury securities are, plain and simple, bad advice. You fail to point out the advantages of annuities and the disadvantages of Treasury securities.

Doyle

Firstly, investors holding Treasuries have to pay federal income tax on the interest, even if they don't need that money. Secondly, there are sales charges to both buy and sell Treasuries. Thirdly, owners of Treasuries are locked in to interest rates. Fourthly, when investors need to liquidate, they are exposed to extreme market risk and lose a great deal of money.

Why don't you end each column by directing readers to a financial planning professional?

A: Because readers might get inaccurate information and bad advice such as you spout. This is not a blast at all financial planners. Many are excellent, but you are horrible.

Let's take your points in order:

True, interest from Treasury bills, notes and bonds is subject to federal — but not state and local — income tax annually. That's the story with most interest-paying investments. Income tax on deferred annuity interest is put off until that money is withdrawn. That's about the only advantage of annuities over Treasuries.

Where did you get the notion sales charges must be paid on Treasury purchases and sales? Astute investors use the Treasury Direct system to buy Treasury bills, notes and bonds — and redeem those securities at maturity — through Federal Reserve Banks, with absolutely no charge.

As with all fixed-income securities, interest rates on Treasuries do not change between the time each is issued and the date it matures.

The Treasury Direct method is recommended only for investors who intend to keep the securities until their maturity dates. However, if the need arises to sell, the securities can be transferred to a commercial account at a brokerage firm or bank, which will levy a charge. The sale might result in a profit or a loss, depending on market conditions.

Q: Don't you agree that interest rates are near the bottom?

A: I don't know. If I did, I would be writing this column from the fantail of the world's largest yacht. No one can accurately and consistently predict the course of interest rates.

I'll give you "near the bottom," simply because rates in general have come way down. As I write this, they are lower than they were when you penned your letter. So, your prediction was off.

Q: I own $180,000 of Treasury bills, purchased through my local bank. If the bank should fail, would I lose the $80,000 above the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage? Or would the FDIC give me all $180,000?

A: Don't fret. You wouldn't lose a penny. FDIC coverage would not be involved, because Treasury securities held for customers by banks are not deposits.

Those T-bills belong to you. Your bank is handling them for safekeeping. If the bank goes belly up, its creditors could not touch those securities, which would be transferred to a different bank.

Q: I have been purchasing Treasury notes and bonds through major commercial banks. Is the safety factor any different if the securities are held by the banks, compared with buying them on my own through the Treasury Direct system?

A: No. Either way, Treasury securities are backed by the full faith and credit of our federal government.

The major difference is commercial banks and brokerage firms charge fees for buying, selling and redeeming Treasury securities, unless you are a wealthy and favored customer. Also, they usually charge for collecting interest paid by those securities.

You can duck such costs by going the Treasury Direct route.

Town's coffee lovers observe morning ritual

By John Churchill
Associated Press

It is a ritual carried out every day, rain or shine, war or peace. For the men of Brashear, it's no laughing matter. It's coffee drinking time.

BRASHEAR — It's early Friday morning, and a familiar ritual is being played out in the Brashear Grocery. One by one, the local men come in to the small store, say a few words to Mary behind the counter, and grab their mugs from the wall.

The mugs, each hanging from a nail under a sign that reads, "Brashear Grocery Coffee Drinkers Club," are even labeled with each man's name.

It is a ritual carried out every day, rain or shine, war or peace. For the men of Brashear, it's no laughing matter. It's coffee drinking time.

"They come in here every day, sit down with their coffee, and solve the problems of the world," Mary Rogers, store proprieter, said. "Some people ask me how I manage, being the only woman and all, but I tell them that they're the nicest bunch of guys around."

Maybe so, but the discussions around the picnic table in the corner of the store can become awful heated, awful quick.

"Every time I pose for the newspaper," said one man, coffee mug in hand, cigar in mouth, "my picture never makes it in there. I grew a 135-pound pumpkin one time, and took it down to the Fall Festival. I even put on clean clothes. The man took my picture and everything. I watched that paper for two weeks, but I never did make it in."

"Do you want some coffee?" asks one man. "We have some fresh coffee over there."

"Are ya'll from the New York Times?" asks another, egging the others on to more laughter. It only got worse from there.

As the morning continued, and more men rolled in for coffee and conversation, the once quiet little store became filled with laughter and the discussion of things political.

"I can't believe this stuff in Los Angeles," Brashear resident George Romack said, flipping through a morning newspaper. "Burning down your own town ... That's like burning the only mattress you have to sleep on. How can you do that?"

This starts the men to talking about the government. Then, the school system came under attack, leading the subject around to taxation, and eventually the status of one man's crops. "You got them taters in the ground yet?" asks a man with a mug in his hand, looking towards a farmer by the counter wearing knee-high rubber boots.

Suddenly, without warning, things turned nasty. Spurred on by some scathing, personal attack by another coffee drinker, no doubt, a man in overalls accuses another man of owning a Japanese-made radio. Accusations concerning the other man's employment status fly through the air, while up by a counter, a newcomer drops a quarter in the coffee can and grabs his mug. Round two.

"Most of these guys are government men," Romack said, puffing his cigar. "They don't work for the government, they just government men."

"There's just two out of the whole bunch that even works," he said, drawing laughter from just about everybody. When one man suggests that Romack himself is among the professionally idle, Romack replies, "I have a lot of social responsibilities around here. Besides, I'm the financial advisor.

"Actually, I collect cans on the highway for a living," he said, as the man across the table from him wiped his eyes from laughter. "That's how I bought my truck and my trailer.

"What does that mean, 'loamy soil?' asks one farmer of another, while discussing planting techniques. "Well, it's the stuff just in between regular soil and clay," says another. "It means 'good soil,' " he added. "Well, why don't you just call it good soil, then?" the first one retorts. "Or, if it's between soil and clay, you could call it 'tweener,' " his neighbor suggests, sipping coffee. The laughter continues.

Outside a red dog of mixed ancestry peeks through the screen door. Inside, talk switches to a recent tornado and thunderstorm. "That twister split one of the trees on my land half in two," Romack said, shaking his head slowly in apparent awe.

New drug puts paraplegic in bed that stays dry

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to thank you for your article printed in the Las Vegas Review-Journal about the woman with twin boys, age 20, who still wet the bed; then a chiropractor prescribed DDVAP, which put an end to their bed-wetting.

Van Buren

I immediately called my chiropractor to ask about it, and he said in Nevada they are not allowed to write prescriptions, so I called my physician and got an OK for same.

My son, who is a 42-year-old paraplegic, was taking Daracon, which worked well for him, but recently they stopped making that medication. He tried the DDVAP nasal spray, and it has worked every night this past month. It's not cheap, but it's well worth it.

I am very grateful to you, Abby, and have probably learned more in my 66 years from reading your columns than from any book or school. Thanks again, and the very best to you. — SHIRLEY HARRIS

DEAR SHIRLEY: Don't thank me. That's what I'm here for. All good wishes to you and your son. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: How much shame, and how many adult diaper ads were senior citizens supposed to endure, before the federal government stepped in to alleviate the growing problem of incontinence? Well, the day has finally arrived, much to the relief of the more than 10 million Americans who suffer from that disorder.

A government-sponsored panel of medical experts has announced new guidelines for detecting and treating urinary incontinence — a condition they say can be significantly improved or cured in 80 percent of the cases. The group said that sufferers often ignore symptoms, and end up depending on absorbent materials without seeking any medical help.

The guidelines the government has set provide important information to patients on various treatments for the ailment. But what may be most important in curbing incontinence is the role of the physician. He/she needs to ask the patient about the condition routinely and aggressively, and then run tests to determine the cause. Educating both the patient and the doctor is a one-two punch that should virtually knock out this highly stigmatized disorder.

The guidelines are in a booklet, "Urinary Incontinence in Adults," which is available free of charge. Write to P.O. Box 8547, Silver Spring, Md. 20907-8547. (Allow six to eight weeks for a response.) — MAURICE SANDLER, M.D., NORTHERN CALIFORNIA INCONTINENCE CENTER, SAN PABLO

DEAR ABBY: Now that summer is coming, please don't forget to remind your readers never to leave a dog in a parked car — even with the window "cracked" an inch or two. A dog can die in just a few minutes if the car is parked on the street under a blazing sun. — ANNA COATS, LOS ANGELES

AT WIT'S END

Battle against insects fought one bug at time

By Erma Bombeck

I entered my parents' home one afternoon for a visit and asked my mom, "Where's Dad?"

She said, "In the living room."

I walked in to see my father sitting erect on the edge of his Barca Lounger, holding a small plastic gun with a cork in the nozzle attached to a string. He said hello without looking at me and remained rigid while his eyes searched the walls.

Bombeck

"What are we stalking today?" I asked.

"A cricket," he said. "I hear her; I just can't see her."

A cricket in my parents' home had as much chance of growing old as a box of bran. My father, the terminator, believed that every cricket in the house was female, pregnant, and lived on a diet of wall-to-wall carpeting. If left to multiply, they would one day mobilize, cash my parents' Social Security checks, take over the house payments and drive them into the streets.

It has always been man against the animals. We build cute little roach motels to lure them to an untimely death, hang lights that seduce them, then zap them into eternity. We baste ourselves in lotions and oils and hope that they repel insects as much as they repel other people.

I saw the other day where Swiss technology has brought us a battery-driven mechanism with a high-pitched tone that simulates the sound of a male mosquito. Since only the pregnant female mosquito bites, she hates the presence of the male and moves on. Who comes up with this stuff? Do scientists sit around and figure out a sound that translates to, "Buzz off, Sly, I'll tell you when I'm in the mood"?

We used to have little electronic boxes that plugged into the wall and let out a sound that only bugs could hear and drove them to new territories. When I got to thinking about it, it occurred to me — how would I know if they were working or not if it was a sound humans couldn't hear? I never saw any dead bugs. What if it was a sound bugs liked to dance to and they invited all their bug friends over to our house to party?

You'd think with all those people swatting flies, gassing roaches, stepping on ants, crushing lighting bugs between their hands, zapping termites and terminating mosquitos, these insects would be on the endangered species list. They're still here in large numbers.

My dad died a little over a year ago, but I can still see him with his plastic gun cocked and ready to fire as he fought one cricket at a time.

By PAUL RAEBURN The Associated Press

THE EYES OF THE WORLD WILL BE ON RIO DE JANEIRO JUNE 3-14 as 40,000 people gather at the United Nations Earth Summit to set the economic and environmental agenda for the next century.

The Earth Summit, formally called the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, marks a historic shift in international relations.

East-West tensions have relaxed, and the threat of nuclear war has receded. But a new issue has arisen: the growing disparity between rich and poor.

Most of the world's wealth is in the industrialized countries of the Northern Hemisphere. Poverty, hunger and overpopulation shackle the poor countries of the South. East-West tensions have given way to North-South debate.

Much of the tension revolves around the twin issues of development and the environment.

In December 1989, the United Nations began planning the Earth Summit to address these problems. The summit comes 20 years after the Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment, which established the United Nations Environment Program.

Since then, the U.N. Environment Program has coordinated the negotiation of treaties to control hazardous waste exports, ocean dumping and trade in endangered species.

It also helped nations agree on a convention to reduce damage to the ozone layer, an agreement that is serving as a model for the agreement to be negotiated at the Earth Summit.

Foremost among the Earth Summit treaties is an agreement to try to limit the greenhouse gases that can lead to global warming. Delegates have completed work on a convention that asks nations to assess and report on their greenhouse gas emissions with the aim of reducing them to 1990 levels by the year 2000.

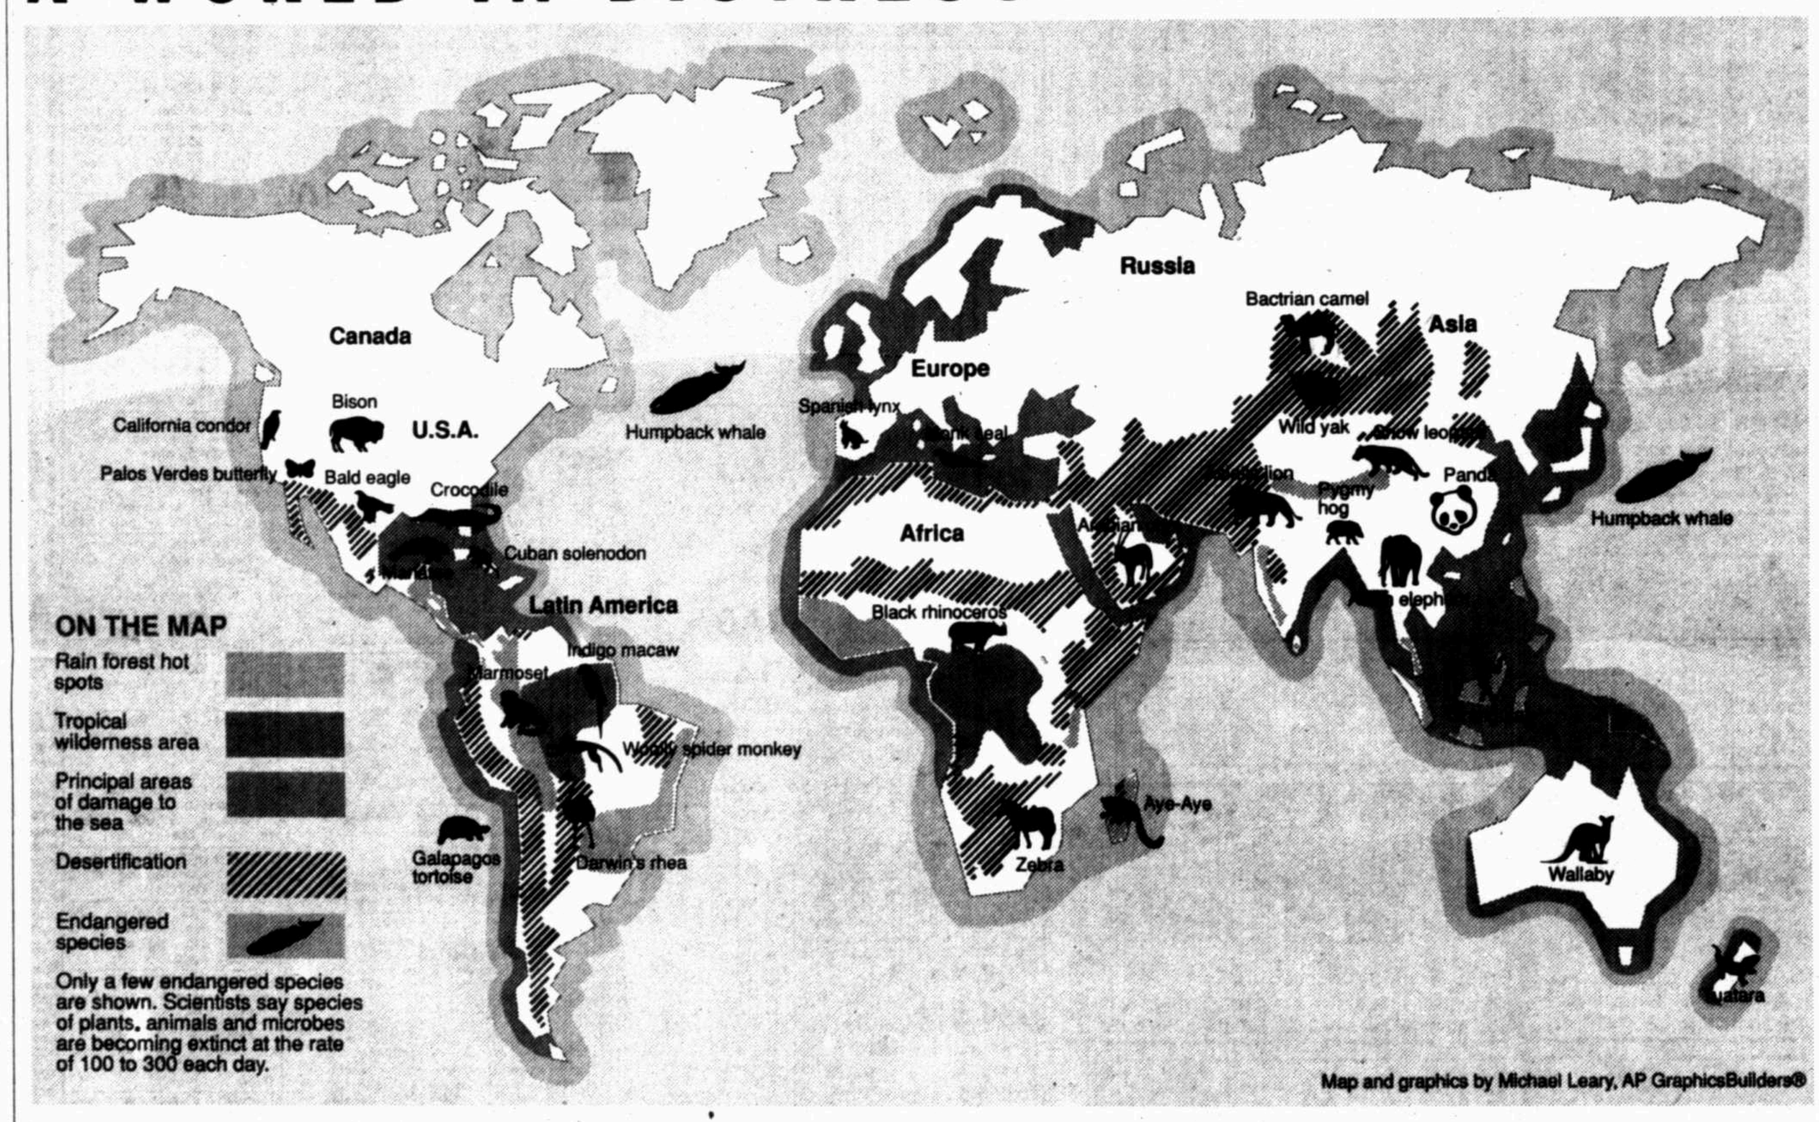

Delegates will also address difficult issues on the preservation of species diversity, the transfer of environmentally benign technology to developing countries and on the protection of the world's remaining forests.

Many environmentalists, diplomats and world leaders say the time to act is now. In a few decades, there will be few forests left to protect, and the oceans and atmosphere could be damaged beyond recovery.

"Breakdown at Rio will have a tremendous negative impact," says Maurice Strong, the secretary general of the Earth Summit. "The consequences will be very severe.

"And when will we be able to pick up the pieces again?"

A WORLD IN DISTRESS

NEGOTIATORS AT THE EARTH SUMMIT WILL ADDRESS SEVEN CRITICAL ISSUES THAT COULD MARK A HISTORIC TURNING POINT IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS: GLOBAL WARMING, TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER, OCEAN POLLUTION, FOREST PROTECTION, POPULATION CONTROL, THE PRESERVATION OF SPECIES AND THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT.

GLOBAL WARMING

Before the industrial age, the atmosphere contained 575 billion metric tons of carbon in the form of carbon dioxide. Now it contains 750 billion metric tons, and the number continues to climb. Carbon dioxide traps the sun's heat, and researchers worry that this excessive build-up of the gas could radically alter Earth's climate, melting polar ice caps, flooding coastal cities and shifting the U.S. grain belt northward into Canada. Negotiators are expected to sign a treaty encouraging — but not requiring — reductions in carbon dioxide emissions.

TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER

So-called "clean" technologies for producing energy and cutting pollution are being developed in industrialized countries, but developing countries can't afford them. Negotiators will be asked to find a way to pay for the transfer of these technologies to countries that aren't able to pay for them.

OCEAN POLLUTION

Much of the damage to the oceans comes from hundreds of miles inland. Winds carry pollutants from smokestacks to the oceans. Industrial wastes dumped into rivers flow into the sea. Fertilizers, pesticides and salt are washed into the sea by rain and irrigation. The coastal regions where this pollution ends up are home to 85 percent of the world's fish. Negotiators will try to devise better ways to manage marine ecosystems.

FOREST PROTECTION

Forests absorb carbon dioxide from the atmosphere. They protect watersheds and shelter millions of plant and animal species. Yet to farmers and ranchers they are obstacles that must be burned or cleared. Negotiations for a treaty to protect forests broke down. Negotiators hope at least to produce a statement of principles on environmentally benign forest management.

POPULATION CONTROL

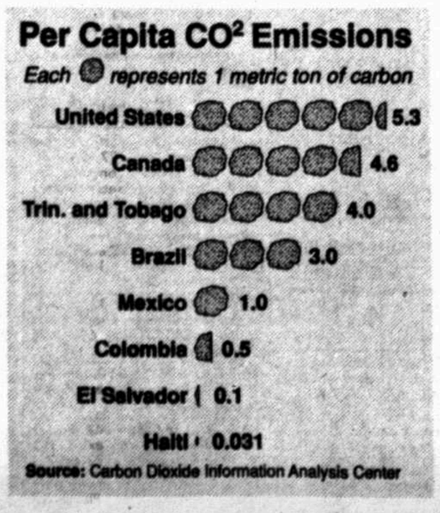

The population of industrialized countries has nearly stabilized. But in developing countries, population is skyrocketing. Up to 97 percent of population growth between now and 2050 will occur in developing countries. By that time, today's population of 5.48 billion will have reached 10 billion. Negotiators will try to draft measures to stabilize population.

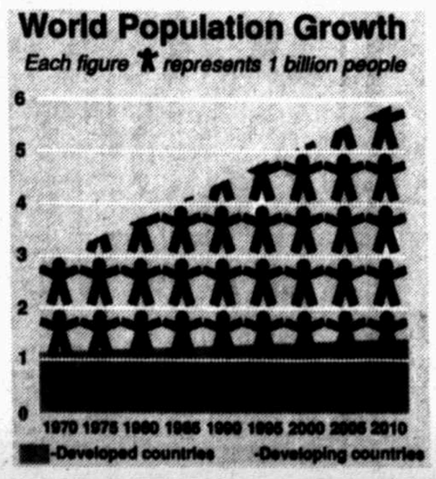

PRESERVATION OF SPECIES

Scientists estimate that there are 5 million to 30 million species on Earth. They are becoming extinct at the rate of 100-300 per day, by some estimates. Negotiators have been struggling to produce a treaty to conserve biological diversity. Whether such a treaty will be concluded at the Earth Summit is uncertain.

SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

Business leaders and environmentalists are increasingly realizing that they must be allies, not adversaries. "Sustainable development" refers to economic growth that doesn't plunder the environment. Earth Summit negotiators will search for standards and strategies to promote development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the future.
