Foreigners flee Rwanda

■ U.S. Marines arrive to help with evacuation.

Associated Press

MULINDI, Rwanda — Convoys of Americans set out Saturday from the blood-soaked capital of Kigali, where corpses litter the streets after three days of ethnic killing. French soldiers took control of the Kigali airport, and American and European citizens were evacuated.

The effort came as relief officials reported the fiercest fighting yet in Kigali, which has been in anarchy since the presidents of Rwanda and neighboring Burundi were killed in a plane crash Wednesday.

There were 255 Americans, mostly aid workers and missionaries, in the central African country. Many of them were evacuated safely by car convoy to Burundi Saturday, a U.S. Embassy source said.

There was no sign of an end to the bloodletting — the result of a decades-old struggle between minority Tutsis and ruling Hutus. The Hutu-dominated Presidential Guard has been blamed for much of the strife.

Mark Billot, of the Belgian branch of the humanitarian organization Doctors Without Borders, told Belgian BRTN radio that 8,000 people have been killed in Kigali alone. The British Broadcasting Corp. reported tens of thousands had died throughout Rwanda.

"I have seen hundreds of bodies including those of four women hacked to death with machetes near a Red Cross storage point. Kigali hospital cannot cope," BBC reporter Lindsey Hilsum reported from Kigali.

Officer assassinated

CAIRO, Egypt — Gunmen assassinated Egypt's top anti-terrorism officer in a fiery attack on his car in the Cairo area Saturday night. Maj. Gen. Raouf Khayrat, the deputy chief of state security in charge of religious terrorist activities, died instantly, the Interior Ministry said. Khayrat was assassinated three weeks after a military court sentenced nine radicals to death for trying to kill Prime Minister Atef Sedki with a bomb. The bomb instead killed a 12-year-old girl. During sentencing the defendants vowed their colleagues would take revenge on President Hosni Mubarak and others in the Egyptian power structure. Mubarak has confirmed the death sentences, but it is unknown if any have been hanged. Khayrat was shot by a torrent of machine-gun fire as he drove away from his house unescorted near the Giza pyramids. The assailants threw at least one grenade into the car, burning the general's body, police said.

■ Crowd demands reform of criminal justice system.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A diverse crowd — which included gays, lesbians, African-Americans and Hispanics — rallied together downtown Saturday to express their anger at the criminal justice system and demand reform.

The gathering at Centennial Plaza — which police estimated at more than 200 — was prompted by outrage over a 12-year prison sentence given to the murderer of a homosexual and evolved into an overall protest of the justice system.

People held signs that included "Justice for All," in English and Spanish, "Stop Hate Crimes," and "Amarillo Queers are Here, Stop Hatred."

Adjacent to the Midland County Courthouse, speakers called for better laws, stiffer punishments, higher bail bonds and equality to minority victims.

Hard-hitting questions jolt Clinton

By John King
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton ventured out into what he likes to call "real America" last week and it took just 15 minutes for Rebecca Fairchild to jolt him with this question: "How can you earn back our trust?"

After that rocky start in North Carolina, Clinton's town hall tripleheader ended before a friendlier — but still anxious — audience three nights later in Minnesota. Once again, Clinton was peppered with questions about his health care reform plan — and his political motives.

Rob Horner of St. Paul asked Clinton whether his plan was just a "power grab," and Shirley Kaiser said she "wondered about you(r) and Hillary's true concerns."

Professorial at times, emphatic and angry at others, Clinton spent the week trying to sell the public and some critical members of Congress on his plan and on the urgency of acting this year.

He repeatedly answered the three major criticisms of his plan: that it's too much government, that it will restrict patient choice of doctors, and that it will cost small businesses jobs.

"I feel like he's tackled a job that no one else has even tried, through five administrations," said George Hamm, 72, a retired rancher and farm equipment salesman from Butler, Mo.

Pfeifer: Life must be protected, respected from 'womb to tomb'

■ Bishop speaks at anti-abortion protest.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Prayers, hymns and anti-abortion rhetoric flowed at a peaceful protest in front of the Midland West Texas Planned Parenthood Inc. office on East Texas Avenue on Saturday.

The crowd stretched across Texas Avenue, which was closed and barricaded by Midland Police Department officers. The city of Midland granted permission for the protest, which was organized by Catholic Bishop Michael D. Pfeifer of the San Angelo Diocese.

Pfeifer spoke to the crowd from a raised platform directly in front of the Planned Parenthood office. He was flanked by an honor guard from the Knights of Columbus fraternal organization.

As Pfeifer — whose pastoral jurisdiction includes the Midland/Odessa area — read aloud from the Bible, protesters brandished placards bearing inscriptions such as: "Thou Shalt Not Kill" and "Babies Are Our Nation's Most Precious Resource."

Polls to open 7 a.m. Tuesday

Staff Report

Midlanders will go to the polls Tuesday in Republican and Democratic primary runoffs, helping to select their parties' nominees for the November general election.

The Republican ballot will include three local races. They are:

■ County judge: Jeff Norwood and Teresa Clingman.

■ Judge, County Court at Law, No. 2: Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer and Marvin Moore.

■ County commissioner, Precinct 4: Bruce Blake and James Brezina.

There are two statewide races on the GOP ballot.

There are no local races on the Democratic ballot. However, Democrats will be selecting their nominee for the U.S. Senate. The winner of the Jim Mattox-Richard Fisher runoff will meet Republican Kay Bailey Hutchison in the general election.

In addition, there are four other statewide races on the Democratic ballot.

Voting will be done from 7

'Phone home'

Boy makes calls until he finds family

By Brigitte Greenberg

SAN DIEGO — Hunched tight over the desk, pressing the receiver against one ear, then the other, the 16-year-old boy asked the operators the same question: Do you have a listing in Indiana or Tennessee for Beard?

Any city. Any number. Anything that might help him find his family, help send him home.

This was Alex Beard's ritual. Every weekend. For three years.

On weekdays, Alex assisted tourists at a visitors' center in Colonia Vicente Guerrero on Mexico's Baja peninsula. Saturdays and Sundays, working alone, he was permitted to use the phone in idle moments. Every moment he had, over and over again, he placed calls to the United States, eating up his meager pay.

U.N. orders troops to use 'all available means' to reverse Serb gains

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — U.N. troops were ordered to use "all available means" to roll back Serb military gains in the Muslim enclave of Gorazde as cease-fire talks remained deadlocked Saturday.

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali issued the order after Bosnian Serbs used tanks and artillery to capture a key ridge overlooking central Gorazde on Friday. His spokeswoman said air strikes were a possibility.

But the U.N. commander in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, said he had no immediate plans to use force against the Serbs and would continue pursuing negotiations.

Boutros-Ghali's order came after nearly two weeks of Serb advances on the Gorazde enclave, 35 miles southeast of Sarajevo. It was unclear what effect the order would have, because there are no U.N. peacekeeping troops in Gorazde.

But similar tough talk by the secretary-general preceded a NATO ultimatum in February that forced Serbs to pull back their heavy guns from Sarajevo under threat of air strikes.

Washington and NATO have urged a speed-up of the planned deployment of hundreds of Ukrainian peacekeepers in Gorazde, a town of 65,000.

Fighting there threatens recent steps toward peace in Bosnia, including a Muslim-Serb truce in Sarajevo that has held since Feb. 10, and an agreement by Croats and the Muslim-led government to stop fighting and form a federation.

In Sarajevo, talks between Bosnian Serb and government military chiefs yielded no apparent progress Saturday. Rose said he told the two sides to think over their options for 48 hours.

"I hope both sides will consider not pushing forward in any way at all on the ground during this period," he said.

The government commander, Gen. Rasim Delic, told Bosnian radio he "accepted completely" a U.N. proposal for a 14-day truce "which includes that the Serbs have to withdraw from the safe area of Gorazde."

He said Serb Gen. Ratko Mladic had countered with a proposal that would let Serbs keep their gains .

German opposition leader to visit U.S.

BONN, Germany (NYT) — Rudolf Scharping, the Social Democratic challenger to Chancellor Helmut Kohl in Germany's elections on Oct. 16, is taking his campaign to the United States in the coming week, hoping to persuade President Clinton and other leaders that he will be as reliable an ally as Kohl.

"There are some people in Germany who believe that NATO could be replaced by something else," he said before his departure, distancing himself from more radical members of his party who have suggested replacing the alliance with a 52-nation European security conference instead.

"There are others, like the Green Party, who believe NATO can be disbanded," he said, referring to the environmentalist grouping many German commentators speculate he would have to rely on for support in parliament if he won.

"I think both views are wrong," Scharping said. "We want NATO, and we understand it to be more than just a defense alliance. It's also accomplished a great deal politically."

One of its achievements, he believes from his experience as governor of the state of Rhineland-Palatinate, where 150,000 U.S. soldiers and their families were stationed at the height of the Cold War, is a gradual reconciliation between Germans and Americans.

Scharping, 46, was elected leader of the Social Democratic Party in June, and has concentrated on restoring the centrist image it had when it last held power, under Chancellors Willy Brandt and Helmut Schmidt, more than a decade ago.

Kohl's Christian Democrats say Scharping will be unable to escape the influence of his left wing, which since Schmidt was deposed in 1982 advocated accommodation with the Communists in eastern Europe and distanced itself from U.S. military policies.

Though Scharping got into trouble last month for botching an explanation of a campaign pledge to impose a 10 percent tax surcharge on higher incomes (above $35,000, not $30,000 as he said), Kohl said last week that his party would impose a 7.5 percent surcharge on all taxpayers next year for as long as it took to get the formerly Communist eastern sections of the country into decent economic shape.

The Social Democrats lead the Christian Democrats by about five percentage points in public opinion polls, but Kohl dismissed that as irrelevant six months before the elections. Both contenders insist that they will win in October.

Scharping, who speaks English, is scheduled to see Clinton in the White House on Tuesday, and said he wanted to discuss such things as the economic policies both men want to stimulate growth, create jobs and reduce budget deficits on both sides of the Atlantic.

During his talks with other officials and business representatives in New York City, Scharping also expects to be questioned about his party's opposition to German military participation in United Nations "blue helmet" peacekeeping missions that could involve the risk of combat.

The Social Democrats challenged Kohl's decision to send 1,500 German soldiers to northern Somalia last year, also arguing that the 1949 German Constitution barred German participation in military enforcement of the naval and air blockades around Bosnia. The German constitutional court is expected to rule on the issue this summer.

French TV networks air special on AIDS

PARIS (NYT) — Reflecting concern that France has the highest number of AIDS patients in Europe, six television channels coordinated their signals on Thursday night to broadcast a four-hour program aimed at increasing awareness of the gravity of the disease.

The broadcast, with appearances by popular entertainers and medical experts and messages from President Francois Mitterrand and Prime Minister Edouard Balladur, aimed to raise $20 million for research and associations working with patients. The $1.5 million cost was shared by the six channels.

Among those who appeared or sent messages were Marcello Mastroianni, Catherine Deneuve, Elton John, Liza Minelli, Charles Aznavour, and the model Vanessa Paradis.

"After tonight, no one will be able to say they didn't know," a young man who said he has the AIDS virus told a huge crowd at the Zenith auditorium in Paris, where the telethon was held. The program was also broadcast to Belgium and Switzerland.

At the end of 1993, France had 120,000 carriers of the AIDS virus, roughly three times more than Germany and Britain. Of 28,500 patients identified in France since 1981, 16,331 had died by last December. The number of AIDS patients rose 7.6 percent last year.

According to a poll released on Thursday, acquired immune deficiency syndrome is the disease most feared by 71 percent of French men and women between 18 and 24 and by 52 percent of the French of all ages. A poll in 1986 said cancer was the most feared disease for 52 percent of the French and AIDS for only 22 percent.

Public awareness of the syndrome increased after it became known in 1992 that blood contaminated with the virus had been given in transfusions to hundreds of hemophiliacs in the mid-1980s. Today, one-third of the estimated 150,000 heroin addicts in France are also said to be infected.

But Luc Montagnier, a researcher at the Pasteur Institute who was one of the discovers of the virus and who was part of the group that organized the telethon, said on Thursday: "Awareness of the danger represented by AIDS has come too late, both in the media and in the government."

Health Minister Philippe Douste-Blazy said he hoped Thursday night's program would serve as "a cry of alarm directed at those who do not feel affected and an expression of hope for those who are ailing and have the right to our respect."

French radio stations and newspapers also focused on the syndrome on Thursday. Salut, a magazine for teen-agers, distributed 180,000 condoms, and journalism students in Marseilles published a special magazine called Stop AIDS!

PLO envoy accuses Israel of stalling, warns of more bloodshed

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Chief PLO negotiator Nabil Shaath accused Israel of dragging out peace talks to force concessions and said Saturday that more delays would lead to more violence.

In Jerusalem, Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said he would meet with PLO chief Yasser Arafat next week if such a meeting was necessary to get the talks moving.

Their comments came on the eve of a fresh round of talks — one Palestinians hope will lead to a final agreement by Wednesday on withdrawal of Israeli troops from the occupied Gaza Strip and Jericho and the start of Palestinian self-rule.

An April 13 deadline for completing troop withdrawal was set in the accord signed by the Palestine Liberation Organization and Israel last September.

Israeli officials, including Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, have said the deadline will not be met. The initial Dec. 13 target for starting the withdrawal was also missed.

"Every time he (Rabin) talks about the dates not being sacred, he suggests Israel can hold on forever and we're supposed to buckle under," Shaath said.

Rabin's tactics were more those of a general going to war than a prime minister trying to make peace, Shaath said.

"He follows the philosophy that if you fight with someone, you want to weaken him," Shaath said. "If you're making peace, the opposite is true. You want to strengthen your opponent so he can deliver."

Shaath warned that further delays would lead to more violence by opponents of the peace process.

Eight Israelis died last week in attacks by Muslim extremists opposed to the negotiations, including seven in a car bombing in the northern Israeli town of Afula.

On Feb. 25, a Jewish settler massacred 30 Palestinians in a mosque in the West Bank town of Hebron.

"The longer the process drags on, the more it encourages extremists on both sides," he said.

Shaath said PLO and Israeli negotiators agreed last week that 9,000 policemen will be deployed in Gaza and the West Bank town of Jericho.

Negotiators, however, are still debating how many will be "outsiders" — Palestinians from PLO military units across the Arab world.

The two sides were also still debating the size of the initial contingent; Israel wants 300 members and the PLO demands 1,000, Shaath said.

He said Palestinian police would move into the territories at least a week before Israeli troops withdraw.

Violence spurs appeal from Jesse Jackson

JERUSALEM (AP) — Soldiers at a roadblock shot and killed a Palestinian teen-ager Saturday in the occupied Gaza Strip after he threatened them with an ax, the army said.

In Jerusalem, an 18-year-old Israeli woman was stabbed in the stomach on the boardwalk that borders the Arab section of the city, police said.

The girl was hospitalized in fair condition, police spokesman Shmuel Ben-Ruby said. Several Arab suspects were detained, he said.

The violence came a day after Israel's Security Cabinet decided to seek a closure of the occupied territories to keep Palestinian workers out of Israel, and to import foreign workers in their place.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson met Saturday with Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and urged Israeli and Palestinian leaders to quickly implement their Sept. 13 agreement for autonomy beginning in Gaza and the West Bank town of Jericho.

Earlier in the day he prayed with the hospitalized victims of a car bombing in the northern Galilee town of Afula that killed seven people Wednesday.

"We should redouble our efforts for a peace process that should create an environment that will reduce the likelihood that this will happen," Jackson said.

"It really is imperative on the leadership of all sides involved to quickly implement the agreement and not allow acts of terror to break our spirits and divert our attention away from such an historical agreement."

Jackson was warmly received at Haemek hospital, where 10 of those wounded in the attack are being treated for severe burns.

Nazem Hussein, 60, an Israeli Arab from Nazareth, was moved to tears by Jackson's appearance at his bedside.

Jackson and his wife, Jackie, held hands with Hussein and relatives. "Bless this brother. Heal his body. We pray this his suffering will not be in vain," Jackson prayed.

"Give us the strength to stop the violence, to stop the terror, to save the people and to live in peace."

Saturday evening in Afula dozens of youths burned tires and threw stones to protest government policy, Israel radio said.

Jackson made the two-hour drive to Afula after condemning Israel for banning a conference planned in Jerusalem to mark the 30th anniversary of the PLO. Jackson was scheduled as a key-note speaker.

Arab reporters said Atef Juma Abed, 18, of Gaza City, was killed while trying to attack soldiers with an ax at the Erez crossing between Gaza and Israel.

The handle of the ax was etched with the name of the Islamic fundamentalist Hamas movement, which has taken responsibility for the car bombing in Aful, the reporters said.

A military source confirmed that soldiers shot and killed a Palestinian after he tried to attack them with an ax.

Following the car bombing and the fatal shooting of an Israeli on Thursday, the army closed the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip to block about 60,000 Palestinians from reporting to jobs in Israel.

The Security Cabinet decided to keep the restrictions in force until at least next Friday, after Israeli Independence Day.

Today's high to be near 80

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high near 80 and southwest winds 10 to 20 mph, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be fair with a low in the mid-40s.

Monday is expected to be mostly sunny with a high near 70.

After an overnight low of 52, Saturday's high was 89 compared with the record high for that date of 93 set in 1939. The record low for today's date was 30 in 1952.

STATE

Strong winds blew across Texas on Saturday, while possible showers and thunderstorms are the expected fare Sunday.

In West Texas on Saturday, skies were sunny as scattered clouds moved over the region. Temperatures were mainly in the 70s and 80s. Winds were between 15 and 30 mph with gusts of 60 to 70 mph reported at Guadalupe Pass.

Today's forecast for West Texas calls for partly cloudy skies with a chance for showers and thunderstorms in the Panhandle. Highs will range from the 60s to the 80s. Lows will span from the 30s to the 50s.

In South Texas on Saturday, cloudy skies persisted through the afternoon, as temperatures climbed into the 70s and 80s. Winds were between 20 and 30 mph with occasional higher gusts.

In North Texas, low morning clouds cleared by Saturday afternoon with the sun making some appearances. High temperatures ranged from the 60s to the 80s. Strong winds gusted in the 30s.

Today, North Texans can expect mostly cloudy skies with scattered thunderstorms, some possibly severe. Highs will be in the 70s and 80s with lows in the 50s and 60s.

NATION

Over an inch of rain fell at some locations, including 1.27 inches at Quillayute, Wash., and 1.06 inches at Baker, Ore., the National Weather Service said.

Heavy snow fell in the mountains, especially in Utah, where up up to a foot fell near Duck Creek and 10 inches fell at Brian Head ski resort, the weather service said. In Colorado, 9 inches accumulated at Lizard Head Pass, with 8 inches near Wolf Creek Pass.

A winter storm warning was posted for the mountains of southern Utah and southwestern Colorado, and a winter storm watch was in effect overnight in the mountains of southeastern Wyoming.

A low pressure system developing over the Texas Panhandle was pulling moisture from the Gulf of Mexico northward into the southern Plains.

Showers and thunderstorms developed during the morning along a cold front extending from Kansas and Oklahoma into Missouri.

Severe thunderstorms dropped hail the diameter of nickels at Putnam, Okla.; Booker, Texas, and Slapout, Okla., the weather service said. Smaller hail fell in parts of Oklahoma and Kansas.

Associated Press contributed to this report.

flowing morgue, the Red Cross is appealing to people not to move the bodies but to bury them. The casualty ward is packed full of people with horrific open wounds from knives and machetes," she said.

Prisoners were ordered to dig mass graves for the victims, Radio France Internationale reported.

A correspondent for the radio described the morgue's yard as covered with body parts. Inside the morgue, dozens of bodies were "covered in blood, sometimes covered with a blanket, sometimes covered with flies," the reporter told Radio France Internationale.

Relief workers said the violence Saturday was "the heaviest they've seen or heard since the savagery began on Wednesday," said Samantha Bolton, a spokeswoman in Kenya for Doctors Without Borders.

More than 300 U.S. Marines arrived in Burundi to help with the evacuation, U.S. officials in Germany said. Belgium and France sent hundreds of soldiers to Kigali to assist any of the 1,500 Belgians and 600 French who want to leave.

"We are not only there to save or to protect our own compatriots. We are there to protect and to evacuate, if necessary, all the foreign elements who are there," U.N. Ambassador Paul Noterdaeme of Belgium said in New York.

Belgium, France and the United States will coordinate their actions, said Jean-Bernard Merimee, the French ambassador to the United Nations. A French official said the evacuation could be completed within 48 hours.

In the countryside of Rwanda, Tutsi rebels claimed to have advanced to within 10 miles of the capital. One commander said they wanted to reinforce 600 rebels battling the Hutu guard and government troops in Kigali.

The rebels, called the Rwandan Patriotic Front, shot mortars from ridges overlooking the government-held town of Biumba, 30 miles north of Kigali. Army troops returned fire from across a valley.

"We believe we should have our right as a people, as a nation. That's why we have been fighting off this dictatorship," Capt. Frank Tega told reporters in Mulindi, 45 miles north of Kigali, as explosions echoed through the hills.

Another rebel official, Emile Roua Massirabo, said negotiations with the Rwandan government were impossible because the government, army and presidential guard had killed so many people, Radio France Inernationale reported.

The fighting erupted hours after the presidents of Rwanda and Burundi — Juvenal Habyarimana and Cyprian Ntaryamira — died in a plane crash on return from a conference in Tanzania aimed at ending ethnic strife in their countries.

The Rwandan government said the plane was shot down by unidentified attackers. U.N. officials were prevented from going to the crash site to check on the cause.

Three convoys of vehicles carrying roughly 300 Americans and Europeans arrived in Bujumbura, Burundi, Saturday and early Sunday, a U.S. Embassy source there told The Associated Press in a telephone interview. He said they had not suffered any attacks, and expected to fly on to Nairobi, Kenya, on Monday.

President Clinton said in his weekly radio address from the Oval Office that he was concerned about the safety of the Americans in Rwanda. "I want you to know that we're doing all we can to assure their safety," he said.

About 80 U.N. staff and their dependents left Kigali by land, Fred Eckhard, a U.N. spokesman, said in New York. About 80 aid workers were still in the capital, but they may leave with the French and Belgians, he said.

The convoy of about 22 vehicles was stopped outside Kigali, and some of the people were slightly injured in a fight.

"They talked their way through the roadblock and I understand they were on their way safely to the Burundi border," Eckhard said. The group spent the night in a border town inside Rwanda, he said.

There were no plans to evacuate 2,500 U.N. peacekeepers sent to administer a peace accord between Rwanda's government and Tutsi rebels reached in August.

At dawn Saturday, some 280 French paratroopers landed at Kigali airport to help evacuate any of 600 French citizens who want to leave. Another 120 soldiers were to arrive Saturday afternoon.

The French military chief, Adm. Jacques Lanxade, said the soldiers could fly out "all those who want to leave in 48 hours."

About 330 U.S. Marines were sent to Burundi Saturday to help with an evacuation, U.S. Navy Capt. Gordon Peterson said from U.S.-European command headquarters in Stuttgart, Germany.

(From 1A)

Pfeifer said he organized the protest in response to Planned Parenthood's plans to establish a clinic where abortions can be performed. The bishop and other religious figures prayed that Planned Parenthood officials "will have a change of heart."

Pfeifer said Midlanders must fight against "this proposed death center."

He said the "pro-life" crowd is often perceived as being against people. "In our zeal, we have sometimes contributed to that deception," he said.

"We can never sanction the preconceived right to kill," he said.

The bishop made an appeal for all people who oppose abortion — regardless of religious affiliation — to join together.

"Mother Teresa ... said, 'The greatest destroyer of peace is abortion,'" Pfeifer said. Life must be respected and protected "from the womb to the tomb," he said.

Pfeifer castigated Planned Parenthood officials for "claiming to be in favor of parenting," while providing abortion services.

Planned Parenthood also provides contraception, testing for venereal diseases, prenatal nutrition and care for pregnant women and other reproductive services, according to Planned Parenthood literature.

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

The Walk-a-Thon for Life was held Saturday near Golf Course Road Church of Christ in conjunction with the anti-abortion rally.

"We are here to say, adamantly and strongly, that we are against abortion in our community," Pfeifer said.

Although the protest had little effect on the Planned Parenthood office, which was closed, an adjacent automotive parts store was severely affected.

"We've lost lots of business today — big time," said an employee at the empty store.

Toward the back of the crowd, tables were set up with anti-abortion literature available. Some partisan political literature was available as well.

After more than an hour, the protest and prayer service was concluded and the crowd dispersed without incident.

Planned Parenthood officials were unavailable for comment, but they have repeatedly defended the need for the service in Midland, the legal right to provide it and women's freedom of choice.

(From 1A)

But after Clinton spoke to residents of 12 states through his satellite health-care campaigning, it was also clear that many Americans are far from sold on the details.

And beyond health care, the three 90-minute televised sessions offered a telling glimpse at the restlessness of regular Americans when it comes to their government in Washington.

Many of their questions were hostile, examining Clinton's trustworthiness because of the Whitewater controversy, his hesitancy on the use of force in Bosnia, his resolve to keep North Korea from developing nuclear weapons and the wisdom of his health plan.

"Can you explain to us how the federal government can manage health care, another socialistic program, in an economical and efficient manner?" Paul Degener of Topeka, Kan., asked Thursday night.

Herman Cain, chief executive officer of the Godfather's Pizza chain, bluntly told the president, "The cost of your plan is simply a cost that will cause us to eliminate jobs."

But as the week drew to a close, Clinton said he was happy for the input, even if it came with a dose of skepticism.

Most remarkable about the week to those who have watched Clinton preside over numerous town halls was the tone of the questions, even those on subjects Clinton was eager to discuss.

"Usually with the president right there people don't ask things so aggressively," said Democratic pollster Celinda Lake. "There is a bit of an edge because people are getting frustrated. They don't have a clear picture of what has been done and what is being done for them."

Meanwhile, there was more wavering from lawmakers home on recess.

Even Pennsylvania Democratic Sen. Harris Wofford, a co-sponsor of Clinton's bill whose re-election may depend on passing health-care reform this year, labeled the president's plan "bureaucratic and regulatory."

But there was some good news for Clinton.

The palpable public anxiety over crime gives the president leverage as Congress makes an anti-crime package its first order of business this week.

"It is music to my ears to hear the president of the United States speak supportively about community policing," said Elizabeth Watson, the police chief in Austin.

Also, the president drew sustained applause as he replied to Ms. Fairchild's pointed questions about his Whitewater investment and Hillary Rodham Clinton's remarkable success in commodities trading. Clinton insisted he was cooperating with a special counsel investigation and voiced exasperation at all the attention and attacks. "Let him do his job and let me be president," Clinton said.

Ms. Fairchild said Clinton's response left her "definitely doubting" his candor over Whitewater. But most others interviewed after the forums were impressed with Clinton's grasp of the issues and willingness to meet with them, even if they didn't agree with everything he said.

"I thought there were some tough questions, some questions he didn't quite give complete answers to, but I thought he answered fairly well," said Jan Baird, 46, of Raytown, Mo.

Residents of a township outside Stanga, in S. Africa's Natal province, cheer a column of S. African army vehicles Saturday. The troops were deployed in an effort to stem the tide of Natal violence between supporters of the African National Congress and the Zulu-dominated Inkatha Freedom Party.

Leader: Zulus are angry, ready to fight

By Donna Bryson
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Zulus are angry and ready to fight for autonomy, nationalist leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi said Saturday, the day after the failure of talks seen as a last chance to end the political violence.

Buthelezi's Inkatha Freedom Party rejected African National Congress proposals to create a constitutional Zulu monarchy, saying they did not go far enough to meet demands for independence.

But Inkatha said negotiations should continue, and President F.W. de Klerk, vowing not to send troops into Buthelezi's volatile homeland, held out hope of a political settlement.

Buthelezi, de Klerk, ANC leader Nelson Mandela and Zulu King Goodwill Zwelithini had met for hours Friday. Mandela and de Klerk failed to persuade the Zulu nationalist leaders to join the April 26-28 all-race election that the ANC is expected to win.

Zwelithini and Buthelezi oppose the elections, fearing that an ANC government will trample Zulu culture. The ANC plans to abolish ethnic homelands such as the KwaZulu region within Natal province.

The government has sent hundreds of troops into Natal, including KwaZulu. The government used military power to back up its ouster last month of Lucas Mangope, leader of the Bophuthatswana homeland, who also opposed the elections.

Buthelezi acknowledged that he did not have the firepower to resist South African forces.

"The people themselves here are our last line of defense, because the people themselves are incensed by what is being done to them," Buthelezi told reporters in Ulundi, capital of KwaZulu, during a break in a 10-hour Inkatha central committee meeting.

De Klerk said the hundreds of troops deployed under a state of emergency in Natal were sent in solely to ensure that residents of the region would be able to vote. Campaigning Saturday in Bophuthatswana, he said no comparisons should be drawn between the ouster of Mangope and the situation in KwaZulu.

Bloodshed between supporters and opponents of the elections has exacerbated rivalries between the ANC and Buthelezi's Inkatha, and there are fears Inkatha's boycott call could lead to fighting at the polls in Natal.

Economy divides along stark racial lines

By Greg Myre
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The stock market has soared, luxury car sales are rising and IBM heads a growing list of foreign companies ready to reinvest in South Africa. That's the white economy.

Thousands of migrants flood the cities in a futile search for work. Beggars with cardboard signs and pained expressions plead for spare change in the shadows of skyscrapers. Unemployment is at least 40 percent and 7 million people live in shacks. That's the black economy.

White wealth and black poverty are not a new story in South Africa. But even as the country makes its leap from apartheid to democracy, the 5 million whites probably have more reason to be optimistic about their economic futures than most of the 30 million blacks.

After four painful years of recession, the economy grew a modest 1.1 percent in 1993 and 3 percent is projected for this year. The boomlet is benefiting well-to-do whites and the emerging black elite, but has done little for ordinary blacks.

Investors cheered as the Johannesburg stock exchange shot up 50 percent in 1993, driven in part by the deal between the government and black leaders for a democratic transfer of power.

With isolation ended and American mutual funds leading the way, foreigners pumped a record 500 million rand ($143 million) into the market on a single day in January.

New car sales are expected to top 200,000 this year for the first time since the 1980s. BMW expects to sell about 17,000 of its luxury cars for the first time in a decade.

When the last economic sanctions were lifted, IBM, Honeywell, Procter and Gamble and other corporate giants announced they would return to South Africa.

On a continent littered with economic basket cases, South Africa stands alone with a modern economy.

If democracy is achieved without great political turmoil, whites and the growing middle class will surely benefit. But most analysts agree that, even if the economy grows faster than the population — by no means a certainty — it could take years for the benefits to trickle down to most blacks.

"We will need to see much higher growth rates before it will start to cater to the poorer sector of society," said Ken van Rensburg, director of economic policy for the South African Chamber of Business.

Nelson Mandela's African National Congress, sure to win the first all-race elections April 26-28, has an ambitious building plan for roads, schools, housing and health clinics to improve black living standards and create jobs.

To the relief of businessmen, the ANC proposes a market-oriented economy, moving away from the socialist policies it espoused for decades before it was legalized in 1990.

But the jobs program could be overwhelmed by the sheer numbers it must serve. An estimated 5 million blacks need work. Squalid squatter camps have sprouted outside all major cities, filled with blacks who lack the education and skills needed for many urban jobs.

Two of the largest industries, gold mining and agriculture, have relied on huge pools of cheap black labor. Both are now stagnant, unable to provide new jobs.

"For an investor, the South African economy will offer some great opportunities," said John Thompson, an investment analyst with the private firm Equity International. "But everyone is going to be impatient when jobs don't come immediately after the elections."

The enormous gulf between white and black incomes has shrunk slowly in recent decades and that is expected to continue under a black government. Turbulence during the transition to black rule, which could last several years, is far more likely to hurt blacks living in poverty than whites or blacks of the middle class.

Ukraine agrees to shut down remaining reactors at Chernobyl

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Ukraine's government has agreed to shut down the remaining nuclear reactors at its Chernobyl power plant, which was heavily damaged in a catastrophic accident in 1986, the Clinton administration said Saturday.

After three days of meetings with an American delegation, Ukraine abandoned its insistence that nuclear production must continue at the plant, agreeing instead to a joint effort with the United States to find options like energy conservation and non-nuclear power generation to replace electricity from the plant, which generates about 1,700 megawatts of power.

The agreement is the first time that a former Soviet republic bowed to Western pressures to shut down any of the old Chernobyl-style reactors which, because of their unsafe design, have long troubled other nations. Armenia, citing safety reasons, closed reactors of a different design when it became independent in 1991.

There are two reactors still in operation at the Chernobyl complex, along with the one destroyed in 1986 and a fourth that was shut down after a fire in 1991. In addition, there are 11 reactors in Russia and two in Lithuania like the ones at Chernobyl.

A Ukrainian official suggested that it could be years before the reactors were actually shut down, according to Reuters.

Nor is it entirely clear that Ukraine's agreement, described as a "commitment in principle," is irreversible or would be supported by the Parliament, which has sometimes resisted the government's plans on matters involving nuclear energy and nuclear arms.

Any energy modernization program would take years and would require financial assistance from the West, and details of any such aid have not been decided, American officials said.

Ukraine's commitment to completely shut down Chernobyl "at the earliest possible date" was made by Vice Prime Minister Valeriy Shmarov followed three days of meetings in Kiev with an American delegation led by Deputy Energy Secretary Bill White.

Japanese scramble to choose new leader

TOKYO (NYT) — The maneuvering to choose a successor to Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa took shape Saturday not just as a battle for individual power but also as a broad realignment of Japan's four-decade-old party structure.

"The Liberal Democratic Party is disintegrating, and to some extent the same thing is starting to happen to the Socialists," said Takeshi Sasaki, a professor of politics at Tokyo University and a government adviser. Sasaki added that the prime minister "had kept them together until yesterday," when he suddenly announced his decision to resign in the face of financial scandals in which he has been implicated.

After his announcement, Hosokawa said he wanted to reformulate his seven-party coalition government under a single party-like structure called "kaikaku," or reform, and this led to the political battle.

The proposal is supported principally by the more conservative members of the coalition, who have been seeking to transform Japan's fractious political order into a two-party system. They are aiming for these parties to be located near the political center, rather than along the left-right axis that characterized Japanese politics during the cold war.

This group tends to favor a more active international role for Japan, strong relations with the United States and measured but real deregulation of some parts of the economy.

A leading contender to become prime minister, Tsutomu Hata, who is foreign minister, has backed the proposal and immediately sought to identify himself with Hosokawa's popular, if only partly successful programs.

"I would like someone" to become prime minister, he said, "who, like the current prime minister, is determined to carry out reforms. We must implement reforms in the truest sense."

Hosokawa's announcement has thus acted as a catalyst, forcing the more leftward-leaning members of his own small party and of the largest party in the coalition, the Socialists, to threaten to leave the government.

They could be replaced, however, with more defectors from what remains of the Liberal Democratic Party. Michio Watanabe, a former foreign minister and a conservative faction leader in the Liberal Democratic Party, dropped hints that he might join the new group, along with dozens of other Liberal Democrats. He is also regarded as a contender for the job of prime minister.

"The Liberal Democratic Party cannot realize a majority in the parliament," he said. "It's time to form a coalition with those who have a similar policy line."

The strongest opponents of economic deregulation are the parties that have traditionally relied for support on heavily regulated industries, such as agriculture and small retailers. That is where the Liberal Democrats and the Socialists have drawn many of their core supporters.

"Regulation is like air for many people in this country," said a government official.

REASONS TO RE-ELECT JUSTICE RAUL GONZALEZ

What is the real story behind the high-dollar, negative campaign against Texas Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez?

Justice Gonzalez's opponent, Rene Haas, is a personal injury lawyer from Corpus Christi. Her law partner/husband is David Perry, a former president of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association and one of the wealthiest personal injury lawyers in the nation. According to campaign reports filed with the Texas Ethic commission, a small number of personal injury lawyers have funded the Haas campaign with well over $1 million in an effort to get their hand picked candidate elected. One might wonder why.

Just think, if Hass wins the April 12 run-off, she, her husband and their trial lawyer buddies stand to make millions from her decisions on the court. That's why they are willing to invest so much cash in character assassination, innuendo, and misleading TV ads.

Let's send a message to the trial lawyers on April 12. Our Supreme Court is not their money-making machine. Support Justice Raul Gonzalez and ruin a trial lawyers day.

Let's Keep An Honest Judge on the Bench!

Hillary savors union leaders' cheers after weeks of criticism

By Tom Raum
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It was a brief time to be savored. After weeks of caustic criticism, a few moments of open affection.

Hillary Rodham Clinton basked in the adulation of United Auto Workers leaders, letting their applause and cheers swe p over her. UAW President Owen Bieber sought to quiet the audience. The first lady tried to wave him off.

"Thank you! Boy! Can you all come back every week? I really like being mobbed by friendly faces," she told the meeting.

Such moments of unambiguous approval are rare for a first lady who generates criticism on a startling number of fronts — from the way she wears her hair to how she shaped health-care policy, practiced law and played the markets.

And then there is the core of the enigma: her unfathomable relationship with the president of the United States. Only two people — Bill Clinton and Hillary Rodham Clinton — know how this pair works, how much of the presidency he shares with her, how much influence she exerts. It drives foes and allies alike crazy.

Her critics are now having a field day with the recent revelations that she turned a $1,000 stake into a $100,000 profit in little more than a year by trading in risky cattle futures. "Hillary-bashing" is in full swing.

Pecked almost daily on the Whitewater affair, America's new-age first lady has dug in her heels and emerged from a short brooding hiatus in a flurry of activity and public appearances.

Suddenly she's everywhere. Traveling around the country pitching health care. Visiting ailing children in a hospital. Walking hand in hand with her husband on a beach in Southern California. Pitching an opening day baseball. Attending a ceremony at the Netherlands Embassy to accept a new tulip variety named after her.

'Thank you! Boy! Can you all come back every week? I really like being mobbed by friendly faces.'

Hillary Clinton

Once again, she seems determined to soften what many perceive as an intimidating presence.

In a video spoof for a journalists' dinner, the Clintons played Harry and Louise, the insurance industry's fictitious couple earnestly doubtful about White House health care proposals.

That brought to mind efforts to soften the image of another criticized first lady, Nancy Reagan. Mrs. Reagan dressed in old clothes and sang "Second Hand Rose" at a Washington dinner to poke fun at her acceptance of gifts of expensive designer clothes.

Shelia Tate, an aide to Mrs. Reagan at the time, said Mrs. Clinton's image problems are in a different league. They stem from her decision to "make herself a semi-official of the government with her own power base," she said.

"Traditionally, first ladies have distinguished between their roles and that of their husband. In this case, there's a blurring of those roles. She chose to borrow some of her husband's authority."

But Paul Costello, who worked for former first lady Rosalynn Carter, said most of the criticism of Mrs. Clinton is partisan, with Republicans playing on the fears of some Americans that Mrs. Clinton "is too uppity" for a first lady.

"There's a built-in sexism: a spouse should not be interfering with the duties of her husband. The Republicans will not say that right out. But the Republicans believe they have a vulnerability and they're going to exploit it," Costello said.

He recalled that Rosalynn Carter was criticized, too, for attending Cabinet meetings and high-level White House briefings. So was Eleanor Roosevelt, who traveled the nation in the 1930s as the eyes and ears of Franklin D. Roosevelt who used a wheelchair, and constantly tugged him to the left.

Mrs. Clinton was the first presidential spouse to be given an office in the West Wing, the business end of the White House where the president and his top advisers work.

Even some White House insiders said that logistics can be difficult with two rival staffs — his and hers — occupying some of the same turf, with Vice President Al Gore at the hub of yet another power center.

Close associates say Mrs. Clinton has grown more guarded. She engages in less small talk and lapses into uncharacteristic silence at White House meetings.

The firings of two longtime White House employees, an usher and the chef, contributed to the image of a house in disorder. But it is Whitewater and its tentacles that are proving to be Mrs. Clinton's harshest challenge yet. Whitewater could even put her before a grand jury.

Like it or not, she finds herself at ground zero in the web connecting first couple, the Whitewater real estate deal, the bankrupt Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan and the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock.

For the first time, Mrs. Clinton is forced to deal with questions on her skills as a professional, her ethics as a lawyer and her handling of the family finances.

Talks between Teamsters, trucking firms fail

WASHINGTON (AP) — Talks meant to temporarily settle contract disputes between the Teamsters Union and 18 of 22 trucking companies it is striking broke down Saturday.

The union said industry negotiators were under a "gag order" from their negotiating cooperative, but Trucking Management Inc., which negotiates for the industry, said the Teamsters should "do the responsible thing" and work toward agreement on a master national contract.

As the strike entered its fourth day, the Teamsters hosted representatives of 18 freight hauling companies at its international headquarters, hoping to reach interim agreements and end walkouts against those operations. But the talks broke down after less than a hour and the industry representatives left the building after caucusing among themselves.

None of the company negotiators would discuss the talks as they left the building. They headed for a meeting with officials of TMI, which represents 23 companies. One company, Carolina Freight, averted a strike by signing an interim agreement.

TMI last week released the 18 relatively small companies to negotiate the interim contracts, called "me-too" agreements, on their own. That would allow them to end their strikes by agreeing to accept all provisions of a master contract once it is negotiated.

"They said that they would free them up, but when they did they said but here's a gag order," Teamsters President Ron Carey told The Associated P ess. "We cannot negotiate unless they get a clearance to talk freely."

The union said in a statement that when TMI learned that the companies interested in interim agreements were invited to meet with the union, "TMI issued a gag order claiming it would be illegal for its member companies to exchange views with the union about TMI's unreasonable bargaining position.

"It's clear that most freight companies no longer support TMI's demands," the statement said.

But TMI President Arthur H. Bunte Jr. accused the Teamsters of "attempting to deceive the public and their members."

TMI said it legally represents all of the trucking companies "and the union has no legal authority to bargain individually with them."

"Instead of prolonging the strike," he said, "perhaps the Teamsters should do the responsible thing by negotiating with the carriers' legally designated representative."

Bunte said TMI released the carriers to negotiate interim agreements "in an effort to preserve Teamster jobs" at the smaller companies.

Many of the smaller companies are eager to end the strike.

But four big companies are sticking to their guns in seeking a contract that will lower labor costs. Those four — Roadway, Consolidated Freightways, Yellow Freight and ABF — have made no overtures toward a reconciliation.

Carey accused those companies of allowing smaller carriers to suffer while they divert business to non-union subsidiaries.

"The people who are prolonging the strike are the people who are benefiting from the strike," he said. Roadway, Consolidated and Yellow together control 62 percent of the market.

Carey said there were no "major issues" awaiting resolution between the union and the 18 companies.

The strike by up to 75,000 drivers, dock workers and mechanics is the first by the Teamsters against freight haulers in 15 years. The primary sticking point is a plan by the trucking companies to hire part-timers and use trains more often for hauling.

Pentagon brass praise Defense Secretary Perry

By Susanne M. Schafer
AP military writer

WASHINGTON — After his Air Force Boeing 707 bounced to a white-knuckle landing in remote Kazakhstan, Defense Secretary William Perry strode to the back of the plane to reassure the passengers.

"We had such a heavy fog that the pilot asked me to take over," Perry deadpanned, getting a round of laughter.

The image of the soft-spoken, 66-year-old mathematician seizing the controls of a bucking jet may also be an apt description of Perry's first two months in charge of the government's largest agency.

Since taking over after the forced resignation of Les Aspin, Perry has garnered praise from the military's top brass and Pentagon political appointees. And he's easily assumed the role of policy spokesman so sought after, but never achieved, by his predecessor.

For example:

■ It was Perry, not Secretary of State Warren Christopher, who enunciated the administration's new goal of a "pragmatic partnership" with Russia, which envisions cooperation between the superpowers while keeping up a military guard as a hedge against a worsening of relations.

■ Perry has been blunt about the dangers emerging on the Korean peninsula, warning that the administration will stop North Korea from developing an arsenal of nuclear weapons, even at the cost of another war.

■ Instead of boasting of the success achieved in getting Serbs to pull artillery back from around Sarajevo under the threat of NATO air strikes, Perry used the event to warn of the limits of air power, offering Vietnam as a case study of the potential "quagmire" that could await the U.S. military.

Speaking on NBC's "Meet the Press," last Sunday, Perry said the United States would not use force to prevent the fall of Muslim enclaves in Bosnia, even though he left open the possibility circumstances could change. Still, that led to heckling from State Department officials and his first critical Herblock political cartoon — portraying Perry holding a sign in front of President Clinton saying, "To Serb aggressors . . . You don't have to worry about us!"

When Perry was first named, few anticipated the technocrat with the professorial demeanor would make waves so publicly, observers inside and outside the Pentagon say.

Perry "has emerged much more forcefully in the policy arena than people anticipated," said Lawrence Korb, an assistant secretary of defense in the Reagan administration, now a specialist on defense issues with the Brookings Institution.

Korb said Perry's clear and succinct enunciation of policy is a sharp contrast to former congressman Aspin, "who never made the transition from legislator to political executive. Bill Perry is the professional executive who doesn't speak until he's made up his mind."

Barry Blechman, the chairman of the Henry L. Stimson Center, a non-profit institution that supports research on international security issues, said Perry has managed to "show his good sense with his clear articulation of policy."

But Blechman said Perry "shouldn't be underestimated for all his niceness."

Air Force Secretary Sheila Widnall, who has known Perry for years in academic and government circles, says there is "a different atmosphere . . . a different organizational style" inside the Pentagon, primarily due to Perry's penchant for meetings that run on time and end with clear results.

When he was Aspin's No. 2, Perry focused on the more arcane issues of reforming the Pentagon's muddied financial and weapons acquisition systems, the Air Force secretary said in an interview.

Now, as secretary, Perry has moved to tighten coordination among the Pentagon's top officers, Widnall said.

Staff meetings are held at the beginning and end of every day. Perry tries to meet three times a week with the civilian leaders of each service, twice a week with the top military officers from each service branch, and frequently with Gen. John Shalikashvili, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Perry has also made a point to meet at length with the top enlisted officers from every service.

The new secretary has also been careful to keep in close contact with Capitol Hill. His first meeting after being sworn in as secretary was breakfast with Rep. John Murtha of Pennsylvania, chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on defense.

GATHER: Fathers denounce system

four times in the back of the head April 14. The murderer, 18-year-old Ramsey Harrell, was sentenced by a jury in February to 12 years in prison for the crime.

Rev. BillyCharles Cawley of the Prodigal Ministries Community Church in Odessa said key evidence — a confession of a co-defendant yet to be tried — was not legally permissible but clearly indicated a robbery and murder intent.

Hon and Cawley organized the event. Plans for the rally were recently expanded to include the plight of family and friends of two women recently murdered in separate incidents.

Angela Belcher, 21, was fatally shot outside a Midland nightclub in November and Catalina Chavez Mireles, 18, was fatally shot three times at her parents home in December. Suspects in both crimes have yet to be tried.

Ms. Belcher's father, Tony Belcher, criticized the low bond — $15,000 — set on the murder suspect, 20-year-old Sherry Henderson. He compared that to the $150,000 bond for a man recently arrested on charges of burglarizing "richy homes."

"What they're telling me is we base more value on property than on life," he said.

Belcher said he fears the possibility of a light sentence and reminded the crowd of Musick being shot in the head four times and the murderer's subsequent punishment.

"Our daughter was shot only once in the heart. Who knows what the verdict will be?" he said.

"We refuse to accept another Tommy Musick verdict," he said. The crowd stood and cheered.

Jose Chavez, father of Ms. Mireles, also denounced the $50,000 bond set on the man accused of gunning down his daughter.

"The man who killed our daughter is already out on the streets. I want to know if this is the justice we should have?" he said. The suspect, the victim's husband, Rogelio Mireles, recently rid himself of an electronic monitor and his whereabouts are unknown.

Others who spoke out about the criminal justice system included representatives from the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

People from several gay/lesbian groups from across the state turned out for the rally as well.

Dianne Hardy-Garcia, executive director of the Austin-based Lesbian/Gay Rights Lobby of Texas, categorized Musick's murder as one in another series of hate crimes across the state.

"I want to tell you this is a pattern in Texas, a pattern we cannot be silent about," she said.

Ms. Hardy-Garcia criticized Harrell's defense — that he was temporarily insane because of an alleged pass Musick made at the co-defendant, 19-year-old Michael Thomas.

"We know all you have to do to get off murdering a fag in Texas is allege he made a pass at you," Ms. Hardy-Garcia said.

"They used gay to get away and we can't let them do it," said Kathy Rhodes, who described herself as a heterosexual mother from Odessa.

Another speaker, Ed Bullard of Dallas, said Harrell should have been taken out behind the courthouse and shot in the back of the head. Ms. Hardy-Garcia denounced such extremes.

The rally, which lasted about two hours, ended peacefully. Police said they had received anonymous calls about a counter protest but no such opposition occurred.

U.S. deports accused ex-Nazi commando-killer to Australia

WASHINGTON (AP) — A man charged with serving in a Nazi commando unit that killed Jews and others during World War II has been deported to Australia, the Justice Department announced Saturday.

Konrads Kalejs, 80, of Winnetka, Ill., and St. Petersburg, Fla., was deported Friday because of his service as member of the notorious "Arajs Kommando," an execution squad in Nazi-occupied Latvia, the department said.

The commando group was responsible for the murder of Jews, gypsies and other civilians during the war.

PHONE: Persistent boy finds home

(From 1A)

On Feb. 27, in the directory for tiny Dale, Ind., the operator found a Walter Beard.

This had happened before. Alex had called other Beards, even other Walter Beards. "I would be, like, so nervous," Alex recalls. "I thought I found them and it would be somebody else.

"So it was a surprise when he said, 'Oh, yes, that's me.'"

Afraid the connection to his grandfather might go dead, Alex pushed him for the numbers of other relatives.

Alex hung up. And waited.

Alex was born May 24, 1977, in Tijuana to a 20-year-old heroin addict named Bernita Kaye Beard. Addicted in the womb, the infant suffered convulsions through his first months of life.

Two years later, his sister, Adriana, entered the world in similarly grim circumstances. Neither child knows a father.

Their mother, who ran away from Indiana in her teens and eventually racked up multiple drug, theft and prostitution convictions, lived south of San Diego, just a walk away from cheap drugs in Mexico.

Also cheap was child care, and in early September 1983, she left the children, then 6 and 4, with a baby sitter in Tijuana.

That was the last they saw her. In time, Ms. Beard told her mother she'd been arrested for shoplifting in San Diego that night, jailed for six months and prevented from going to her children. The baby sitter had no telephone.

But police and court records provide no evidence Ms. Beard was arrested or convicted at that time.

Two or three days passed. On Sept. 8, the baby sitter turned Alex and Adriana over to Mexico's welfare agency.

"I remember we were with a baby sitter," Alex says. "Then a policeman came to the house, so they took us to an orphanage, where there were little babies. I was scared. I just wanted to be with her."

Ms. Beard spent more years in and out of jail. She did not tell her mother she had lost her children until 1986. Two years later, after vowing to get even with an abusive boyfriend, Ms. Beard herself disappeared.

'We were both crying. We didn't talk very much. When we finally got ourselves pulled together, he kept saying, 'Thank God.' And I was saying, 'Thank God.''

— Grandmother Lois Keene

Alex and Adriana were shuffled among orphanages, sometimes together, sometimes separated. The youngsters spoke English, but they'd been born in Mexico and the government said they were Mexican.

Life was not drab or deprived. Most of the orphanages were run by Americans on idyllic ranches; Alex recalls riding horses, swimming and playing with other children. They did chores in the morning and attended classes in the afternoon.

But Adriana quickly forgot her English, and Alex grew confused about his past. He kept insisting to orphanage officials that he and Adriana were American, but doubts crowded him.

"I remembered my family and I knew English, so I knew that I had to be American," he says. "But then they told me I was born in Mexico . . . (and) I was Mexican."

The fair-skinned boy with shiny black hair was becoming defiant, often starting fights. At 14, he was packed off to a home for troubled youths in Mexico City. At the orphanage door, he was handed his background file, with instructions to give it to the youth home directors.

What he was handed was his life.

Naturally curious, Alex read the file on his way to Mexico City. Inside was his birth certificate, complete with names and birthplaces of his mother and grandparents. His mother was American, which made him American, too.

He was furious.

"They kind of made me think that I was Mexican," he says. "They tried to confuse me."

Devastated by the disappearances of her daughter and grandchildren, Lois Keene says she tried to search for Alex and Adriana but got only unsatisfactory responses from the Mexican consulate.

Mexican officials, however, say they were led to believe Ms. Keene did not want her grandchildren.

Soon after the children arrived, the officials contacted their U.S. counterparts, said Jesus Silva Lozano of Mexico's child welfare agency. An Indiana social worker visited Ms. Keene and, in a letter dated Sept. 23, 1983, told the Mexican agency Ms. Keene was ill with spinal arthritis and felt she couldn't care for the children.

The letter also notes that Ms. Keene was on welfare and would likely prove an unsuitable guardian.

But the letter is ambiguous. It makes clear that at the time of the inquiry, when her grandchildren had already spent two weeks in the orphanage, Ms. Keene believed Alex and Adriana were with her daughter. Ms. Keene said she had talked to her daughter Sept. 12 or 13, the social worker wrote.

Mexican officials also say they called Ms. Keene, but their file shows a phone number that connects to a northern Indiana law office in business since the 1960s. Ms. Keene formerly lived in southern Indiana, which has a different area code.

Ms. Keene recalls getting a call in 1986 from a Mexican social worker who said she would call back about the grandchildren. She never did, Ms. Keene says, and Ms. Keene did not write down the phone number.

Mostly, she relied on prayer.

A Pentecostal Christian, Ms. Keene says she was reading the Bible in her apartment dining room in Celina, Tenn., when the phone rang Feb. 27.

The news from Walter Beard, her ex-husband of 25 years, answered her prayers.

"I thought he was hallucinating," Ms. Keene says. "Since he's had that stroke he says things."

Then she realized little Alex was alive — and he wanted to come home.

Within moments, she was dialing the number to Mexico.

"We were both crying," Ms. Keene says. "We didn't talk very much. When we finally got ourselves pulled together, he kept saying, 'Thank God.' And I was saying 'Thank God.' That was about all we said for at least a minute.

"I asked him, does he think he can get across the border? And he said, 'Yeah.' And I started making plans."

The bus pulled into Indianapolis at 3:45 a.m. March 3.

Alex saw no one resembling the grandmother he still remembered, so he tried to telephone another relative.

Ms. Keene, not knowing what to expect of a 16-year-old she had last seen at 6, followed another dark-haired boy to the rest room and waited outside.

Eventually, she spotted the boy at the pay phone. "Alex?"

"He hung up the phone immediately," she says. "I grabbed him and hugged him."

Last Wednesday, a month after their own reunion, grandmother and grandson drove to the orphanage in San Vicente, Mexico, to rejoin their granddaughter and sister. More hugs and tears, deep sobs from Adriana. The girl, now 14, doesn't share her brother's desire to live with family.

"She said she didn't want to go," Ms. Keene said, weeping bitterly. "I told her I loved her, and we had not forgotten her."

Ms. Keene came away angry at the orphanage managers and says she may hire an attorney.

"They brainwash a little child and convince her to stay," she says. "I don't think a 14-year-old child is really capable of making this decision."

"She doesn't speak English. She learns slow, so she thinks she .... wouldn't adapt," he says, eyes bright with tears. "It's OK. As long as she's happy."

Dear Midland Citizens:

For 24 years I have been your County Commissioner and have fought to keep our county government responsive to the needs of the citizens of Midland County by keeping taxes low and services high. We are approaching a critical crossroads in county government, where we will operate efficiently or regress into a tax-and-spend bureaucratic operation. I cannot stay silent any longer and watch my friends and fellow taxpayers being misled and lied to by Jeff Norwood's well financed, slick, and deceptive advertising campaign which is orchestrated by an Austin based political consultant.

Jeff Norwood was recruited to return to Midland to run for County Judge. He has lived in Midland less than one year. He is 29 years old, has no experience, has never paid ad-valorem taxes in Midland, has never been responsible for a mortgage, yet he wants the taxpayers of Midland to vote for him to be the chief fiscal officer of Midland County, who will be in charge of a $20 million a year budget.

For over 30 years our County Judges have been attorneys and have carried a heavy judicial load in addition to their administrative duties. Jeff Norwood, after on the job training, would only be able to do 30% of the work that has been done in the past. You and I as taxpayers will have to raise additional taxes to create a new County Court-at-Law with the additional expense of $180,000 to $200,000 a year, just to take up the slack of a non-attorney County Judge.

In addition I presume Jeff Norwood has adopted new beliefs in order to be accepted and supported by the good people of Midland. It strongly appears that he is using the good people of Midland as a stepping stone for his political ambitions. He has been advised to become active with the "Right-to-Life and Traditional Values groups" regardless of his true beliefs. My fellow friends and taxpayers we are being deceived and misled by Jeff Norwood.

I strongly urge you to support and vote for Teresa Clingman for County Judge and keep efficient, responsible, and conservative county government.

Sincerely,

Win Brown

Some blacks raise questions about integration's effectiveness

By Charisse Jones
N.Y. Times News Service

It has been 40 years since Brown vs. the Board of Education, when the U.S. Supreme Court set the stage for all schools to be open to all children, no matter the color of their skin. It has been 30 years since Congress passed a Civil Rights Act that banished barriers to equal access, officially ushering in an era in which blacks and whites were to live and work together.

But for many black Americans, this year of anniversaries is more a time of reflection than celebration.

From the young, who never knew Jim Crow, to their elders who fought to destroy it, many black Americans are raising questions about what integration has done, and what it can ultimately accomplish.

"I think there is a growing feeling in the black community that integration is a tarnished goal," said Dr. Lawrence D. Bobo, a sociology professor and director of the Center for Research on Race, Politics and Society at the University of California at Los Angeles.

"It's viewed with greater skepticism by blacks then it was in the past. That doesn't mean it's been repudiated. There's not much evidence of that. But I think the benefits of it are more often questioned and the burdens that come with it are more prominent topics of discussion than they were in the past."

A March 1993 New York Times/CBS News poll found that a majority of both blacks and whites answered yes when asked if "generally speaking," they favored full integration.

But recent interviews with blacks who acknowledged that they have benefited from victories of the civil rights movement, elicited a range of views more complex than the straightforward answers to that straightforward question.

Among blacks who have worked, learned and lived in predominantly white settings, one theme occurs over and over again: such interaction has not made many whites accept blacks as equals, and perhaps never will.

"We were integration warriors," said Karen A. Phillips, who helped integrate the white high school in her hometown of Ocilla, Ga. "I chose a college and a major because I didn't know any black people who'd done it before."

"The only problem is, things opened up, but attitudes stayed the same," said Ms. Phillips, 41, and running Abyssinian Development Corp., which is building housing for middle- and low-income residents to help redevelop Harlem.

"We thought that if they saw we were intelligent and could compete with them, things would even out. It's taken us a long time to figure out giving up your community to go to theirs doesn't mean you're going to be accepted."

The Balance Sheet: The Losses And the Gains

The last three decades have definitely yielded progress. The percentage of all black families earning incomes of $50,000 or more (as adjusted to 1992 dollars) rose from 10.2 percent in 1970 to 16 percent in 1992, according to statistics from the U.S. Census Bureau.

But meanwhile, whites — already ahead — were also making gains; the proportion of white families with comparable earnings rose from 24.5 percent to 35.7 percent in the same period.

The percentage of blacks in professional or managerial jobs rose from 10 percent to 16.8 percent in the same period. And the percentage of blacks 25 to 29 years old who had completed at least four years of college more than doubled, from 6 percent in 1970 to 12.7 percent in 1989.

But as much as some things changed, others have stayed the same. The median household income for blacks compared to whites has budged little in the last 20 years, with black households in 1992 earning 58 percent of the income earned by white households — the same as in 1972.

A Harvard study last December found that in the 1991-92 school year, 66 percent of the 6.9 million black students in the nation's public schools attended predominantly minority schools — the highest percentage documented since 1968. (There are no comparable figures for the years before the Brown decision.)

Even on integrated campuses, students often do not interact across ethnic lines, in the classroom or outside.

Some blacks lament what they believe was lost in the quest to integrate — black neighborhoods, etched by the confines of segregation, that forged a bond between the poor and the middle-income who lived side by side; incubators for black commerce, and support systems for black families and institutions.

They emphasize they would never give up the hard-won right to choose where, and with whom to live. But they say there is a need for blacks to regain a self-reliance that flourished when it was painfully clear how important it was that blacks be able to count on one another.

"I think some of the things we enjoyed when we were living among ourselves need to be recaptured," said Pamela K. Johnson, 33, who believes that integration "dissipated our energies and our economic strength."

Ms. Johnson, an editor at Essence, a black women's magazine, lives in Harlem, the community in which she was born. "It's a choice," she said. "I could have gone in a lot of different directions. I had the intelligence and education. But I came to Harlem."

Star's death brings radio, MTV tributes

By Larry McShane
Associated Press

The apparent suicide of Kurt Cobain, just three years after his emergence as a powerful new force in popular music, left fans and critics comparing the grunge-rock guitarist to other groundbreaking musicians who died too young.

Radio stations around the country broadcast tributes to Cobain, MTV interrupted its usual programming for a career retrospective and fans mourned the star's tragic death after his body was discovered Friday at his Seattle home.

"It reminds me of Jimi Hendrix. This is a guy who hasn't even hit his prime," said fan Steve Kennedy of Pompton Lakes, N.J. "It's like Jim Morrison — you'll never know what else he could do."

Cobain, 27, had become an overnight spokesman for a disaffected generation of young Americans after Nirvana's 1991 hit single, "Smells Like Teen Spirit."

The flannel-shirted singer's woes were well documented: heroin addiction, discomfort with celebrity, domestic spats, the near-fatal ingestion of drugs and alcohol just last month that left him in a coma.

"Kurt's passions and feelings about his fame overwhelmed him," said a statement from Gold Mountain Entertainment, Nirvana's management company.

Cobain expressed those feelings in his music and lyrics. One of Nirvana's last songs, recorded for "The Beavis and Butthead Experience" album, was titled "I Hate Myself and Want to Die."

"There were all the things in the last two years," said Gus Hosseini, owner of a Milwaukee nightclub where the band played twice. "I knew it was coming. I didn't know when."

Cobain, 27, had become an overnight spokesman for a disaffected generation of young Americans after Nirvana's 1991 hit single, "Smells Like Teen Spirit."

On MTV, the usual pre-taped programming was pulled and replaced with a look back at Cobain's career — a particularly apropos gesture, since MTV helped boost Nirvana to commercial success.

"He was the closest his generation came to a John Lennon," Rolling Stone writer David Fricke said on the MTV tribute. "If you don't see the connection, you're missing something."

The tribute first aired Friday and was repeated Saturday. The band's videos and clips from interviews and live appearances were interspersed with remembrances of Cobain.

Record stores reported increased business for "Nevermind," the band's first album on a major record label, and "In Utero," its acclaimed platinum follow-up.

The Seattle record company Sub Pop, which released Nirvana's first singles in 1988 and its 1989 "Bleach" album, planned a party for Saturday night to celebrate nine years of success. Instead, the private gathering at the popular downtown Crocodile Cafe was turning into a wake for Cobain.

Police said the contents of a one-page note found near Cobain's body would not be made public and that decision was up the family.

Navy issues anti-sexual harassment manual

By Eric Schmitt
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — With its penchant for by-the-book precision, the military has manuals for just about everything — legal manuals to punish lawbreakers, technical manuals to assemble weapons. Now, the Navy has prepared a new manual on how to recognize, prevent and deal with sexual harassment.

Intended to serve as a comprehensive resource for thousands of Navy commanders worldwide, the manual defines the problem, tells how to handle complaints and holds commanders responsible for eliminating harassment in their ranks, with an implicit threat that promotions could be jeopardized if they do not. The Navy will distribute the manuals fleetwide by early fall.

Much of the 64-page handbook, with lengthy attachments and sample cases, is a compendium of orders and memorandums Navy leaders have issued since dozens of women were assaulted at the bawdy weekend of the Tailhook Association convention of naval aviators in Las Vegas, Nev., in 1991.

Using these new orders and regulations, the Navy has dismissed 89 officers and sailors for sexual harassment since 1992. But even the Navy acknowledges that the new regulations have achieved mixed results at best.

And outside experts are asking whether these new manuals will just gather dust on bookshelves and desk tops and whether more paper proclamations will change the ingrained attitudes of a male-dominated culture trying to shed a reputation for contempt toward women.

Naval officials are hoping that the mere existence of the manual will be regarded as a sign of new seriousness on the topic. But this handbook will have to address a difficult transition for the American military, which has always operated by the book, from the angle of a soldier's salute to the way recruits make their beds.

When it comes to sexual harassment, however, the military faces an issue etched in shades of gray that demands subjective judgments and interpretations. "When I go to the field, a lot of people still don't know what we mean by sexual harassment," said Rear Adm. Paul E. Tobin, Jr., who is head of the Navy's office for what it describes as personal readiness and community support. "We're trying to make sure they know where the line is."

Senior Navy officials say the release of the manual coincides with increased sensitivity training and stricter punishment for offenders to hammer home the service's "zero-tolerance" message. But lawmakers and independent experts say the tolerance has not yet dropped that far in practice.

"The Navy has taken some positive action but it really needs to look more at enforcing these new rules," said Wilma D. Powell, chairwoman of the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services, an independent advisory panel to the Secretary of Defense.

"You can have all sorts of rules and regulations, but if they're not enforced, it's a waste."

NASA to visit Carlsbad Caverns for Mars study

By Marcia Dunn
AP aerospace writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA researchers go underground on Earth this week to search for clues to the possibility of life on Mars.

Their journey through the dark, humid, precipitous passageways of Lechuguilla Cave in Carlsbad Caverns National Park in New Mexico will be sort of like a space mission: isolated, risky, team-dependent.

"It's kind of an inner trip to outer space," said NASA engineer Larry Lemke. "We're going in the opposite direction to get to outer space."

NASA planetary scientist Chris McKay and microbiologist Penny Boston, who consults for NASA from Boulder, Colo., want to see if the microorganisms living inside Lechuguilla can shed any light on the kind of life that might exist or might have existed on Mars.

"We know Mars is very dry. We know it's very cold, and we think in order to get away from the dry and cold, you'd have to go underground," McKay said late last week. "The proof that there was water on Mars (billions of years ago) is a good indication there was life as well."

What makes Lechuguilla so intriguing to McKay and Boston is that bacteria in the cave derive energy from sulfur and iron, believed to be two main ingredients of Martian soil. It's also in pristine condition; except for the entranceway, it was unexplored until 1986.

Lemke is more interested in the technology aspect: how to develop robots to collect and study the microorganisms in Lechuguilla if it proves to be an exobiology gold mine and, ultimately, look for life on Mars.

They and eight other scientists and cavers plan to enter Lechuguilla on Monday for a one-day orientation. They'll go back in Tuesday and, if all goes well, emerge five days later with samples of bacteria scraped from rocks and scooped from pools.

The expedition will be led by Larry Mallory, a soil biochemist at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and frequent visitor to Lechuguilla.

About all that's been found in Lechuguilla's more than 70 miles of passageways, besides bacteria, fungi and rock, are a few bat skeletons and the remains of a 25,000-year-old giant ground sloth and a 45,000-year-old ring-tailed cat.

Access is restricted by the National Park Service because of its scientific value and dangerous terrain.

A 90-foot drop at the entrance is followed by crawlway, walkway and then a 150-foot vertical drop. There's also a 270-foot drop, although Mallory doubts he'll subject the group to that.

Mallory plans to go down about 1,000 feet. The cave, with a known depth of 1,593 feet, is the deepest in the United States.

Each person will be lugging a 50-pound pack filled with test equipment, food, bedding and all body waste. Miner's helmets will provide light. There will be no communication with the outside.

McKay isn't easily intimidated; he's used to "unhappy places." His microbial searches have taken him to Antarctica, Siberia and the Gobi Desert, but never a cave — until now.

"I haven't found a good reason for doing one in Tahiti and the Cayman Islands," McKay joked, "but maybe we will."

Woodstock anniversary concert gets final permit

After months of wrangling over money matters, sanitation, environmental impact and cleanup, the red tape turned to a green light Friday.

"We didn't have a festival yesterday," said Ilene Marder, a spokeswoman for the Woodstock Music and Art Fair '94. "We have one today."

The Ulster County health commissioner's approval for a mass gathering permit allowed the county to sign the permit, which clears the way for concert site construction to begin in Saugerties, 40 miles south of Albany.

The concert is scheduled for Aug. 13-14 and will feature 30 groups. Organizers expect about 250,000 people to attend the show. The acts haven't been announced.

Details of the permit, including the county's share of festival profits, will be released next week, Marder said.

Study: Many young people think drug use isn't harmful

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many young people believe that using drugs is not harmful, according to a study released Friday by the Department of Health and Human Services.

The study, conducted by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, found that only 54 percent of 12- to 17-year-olds in 1992 believed that there is great risk associated with trying cocaine once or twice.

Only half — 49 percent — of those youths said they believed that smoking a pack or more of cigarettes per day is associated with great risk of harm. In both cases, youth see less harm associated with drug use than the rest of the population.

"These figures indicate a need for continuing and strengthening prevention work, especially among today's youth," said Dr. Philip R. Lee, the director of the Public Health Service. "We cannot afford to let any young person in America today grow up and be less than fully aware of the serious consequences of drug use."

Simple system may bring safe water to millions

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Salt, a small generator and a germ-resistant water bucket are helping villagers in the mountains of Bolivia turn a contaminated river into safe drinking water.

Its creators say the simple experiment has the potential to fight world epidemics of cholera and other waterborne disease, for pennies a week.

"This is a low-tech, low-budget approach that ... empowers these people to protect themselves," said Dr. Eric Mintz, an epidemiologist at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The Pan-American Health Organization considers the new system so promising that it's starting similar projects in Colombia, Nicaragua and the Dominican Republic next month. Officials in India, where a devastating new strain of cholera hit last year, also are interested.

"We're confident it's going to change the quality of the water," said Fred Reiff, a water expert at PAHO, which helped CDC pay for the system. "And it will cost a family less than $2 per year."

Some 1.5 billion people, mostly in developing countries, drink water tainted by sewage, natural bacteria and parasites.

Although boiling water kills bacteria, it doesn't kill many parasites, and many places have no firewood. Importing chlorine is expensive and doesn't stop family members from reinfecting the household water bucket by dipping water with dirty hands or cups — a big problem in the recent Latin American cholera epidemic.

The new plan, tested in the Bolivian villages of El Alto and Huaricana, attacks both problems.

A small generator, through electrolysis, turns ordinary salt and water into a disinfectant that makes water drinkable in about an hour.

The generator uses about as much electricity as a 120-watt light bulb and in 12 hours produces enough disinfectant to last 500 people a month.

CDC determined the best germ-resistant jug holds five gallons, enough to last a family one day; has a two-inch opening to pour in water but is too small for hands; has a large spigot at the bottom; and is lightweight and unbreakable.

An Ohio company sells campers that very jug.

"What's unique is combining the treatment with the vessel," Mintz said. "Either one alone may not be enough."

But to be cheap enough to work, communities must produce the disinfectant and water jugs locally. So CDC and the U.S. jug-maker, Toledo-based Telco Corp., are negotiating a licensing agreement to allow Bolivians to copy the jug, for a small royalty.

Gay clinics oppose AIDS home-test kits

WASHINGTON (NYT) — A proposed home testing kit to detect the deadly virus that causes AIDS was attacked this weekend by gay health clinic officials, who warned that a positive diagnosis, received impersonally over the phone without counseling, could have potentially devastating results.

The federal Food and Drug Administration is reviewing a license application for the test, manufactured by Direct Access Diagnostics, a division of Johnson & Johnson Co. The company claims the test makes detection of the AIDS virus at home quicker, cheaper and easier.

Using the home kit, a person simply pricks a finger, dabs blood on a special paper and mails it to a lab, accompanied by an unique ID code. One week later, a phone call announces the test result.

The new test promises to help more infected Americans learn they have the killer virus. But the home kits also pose a unique problem: How to counsel HIV-positive people if they never set foot in a clinic.

That was the message Friday from the leaders of the 11-member National Alliance of Lesbian and Gay Health Clinics (NALGHC), which warned of dire consequences if persons testing positive for the virus are simply notified over the phone, without proper counseling.

The 11 clinics test more than 150,000 people a year and provide pre-test counseling, post-test counseling and follow-up care.

"If they are alone, just talking on the telephone, how will they react?" asked Christopher J. Portelli, the alliance's national coordinator in Washington. "The potential for catastrophic impact far outweighs the intended advantages.

James Grant, an official with the Whitman-Walker Clinic, the primary provider of community-based HIV-AIDS services in the Washington area, said the realization one was infected "would be a savage assault on one's emotional well-being" without appropriate counseling.

"Once you say they're positive, the infected don't hear anything else," said Laura Hardesty, an HIV specialist at the Chase-Brexton Clinic in Baltimore. "They really need some kind of personal, long-term relationship to get any message across."

Hank Carde, a retired Navy commander who is afflicted with AIDS, said there is "a well established clinical record of extreme adverse reaction to the news of HIV-positive status."

Carde, a volunteer at the Whitman-Walker Clinic, cited the suicide of George Rankin, a 28-year-old United Airlines employee in San Francisco, who jumped from the Golden Gate Bridge on March 27 after learning he was infected with the HIV virus.

Still, not all gay and lesbian leaders, or physicians, oppose home testing.

In a joint statement, four prominent physicians involved in AIDS research, along with several prominent gay and lesbian activists, said "the benefits of home access testing far outweigh the risks."

The statement, issued at the coalition press conference, said that even though existing testing options have been available for the last six years, less than 15 percent of adults has been tested for HIV infection.

The statement said that while "lesbian and gay clinics may be offering quality counseling, most people report receiving inadequate counseling.

"As long as we require a face-to-face confrontation as a condition of getting tested, a significant number of Americans will continue to avoid being tested or will not return for the results," the statement added.

Among those signing the statement were Dr. Peter N.R. Haseltine, medical director of the Shrader HIV/AIDS Clinic at the University of Southern California, Dr. Michael Roth of the Pacific Oaks Medical Group in Los Angeles, Dr. Marcus A. Conant of the Conant Medical Group in San Francisco.

Also, Thom (cq) Mosley of the AIDS project in Los Angeles, Michael Weinstein, founder and president of the AIDS Healthcare Foundation, and Mark Senak, director of planning for the AIDS Project Los Angeles.

Promise of opportunities entices Chinese from their farms

By Kathy Wilhelm
Associated Press Writer

SHENZHEN, China — He's studied some English at night school, and likes to call himself Jesse.

The only son in a family of five children, Jesse left the farm at age 20 in search of a job. Six years later, he has little to show for it: Everything he owns is with him on a narrow, metal bunk bed at a television factory in Shenzhen, the booming Chinese development zone next to Hong Kong.

There is his one suit, shiny and gray-green, hanging loosely on his skinny frame. There are a radio and some books, a few dishes, a box of papers.

What's that brochure? It turns out Jesse spends his free time in direct sales for an American health-food company that is making a big push in southern China. That has given him ideas for getting out of the factory, he said, maybe even starting a business of his own.

Jesse hasn't made much money, but going back to the village is the farthest thing from his mind.

"People look down on you if you farm," he said. "Why did you Americans go West? Because there were more opportunities. It's just like that in Shenzhen. To go from a farm to a city factory, to go from peasant to worker, aren't the opportunities wider?"

There are at least 80 million Jesses across China, peasants who have left their villages in search of opportunity. Jesse, who has a high school education, has better prospects than most, but all share his ambition to create a life free from the tyranny of flood, drought and government grain quotas.

Since average rural incomes are less than one-third those of city dwellers, the migrants believe they have nothing to lose.

Their cheap labor has become a major factor in keeping China's economic growth at 13 percent annually for the last two years. They turn out the shirts, sneakers and toys so familiar on U.S. and European store shelves. They build the office towers, hotels and highways that are transforming Beijing, Shanghai and Canton.

More are always on the way, hitchhiking along highways or squeezing into rail cars. Ask why and the answer is uniform: There are no jobs at home. No one wants to farm.

For the first three decades of Communist rule, the people stayed mainly where they were born, bound by a strict population registration system and travel controls.

The controls relaxed enough in the 1980s to let peasants travel to cities for winter jobs, when the land was fallow. Then, in the 1990s, the "peasant army" became a year-round occupation force.

Now most urban construction workers, garbage collectors, street sweepers, maids, bicyle repairmen, shoeshiners and popcorn vendors are former peasants. So are most of the factory workers in such coastal boomtowns as Shenzhen.

"They do the jobs that are dirty, tiring and dangerous," said Han Jun, a researcher at the Rural Development Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences.

"City people don't just consider the income, they also consider whether a job has status," he said. "A city woman doesn't want to wash dishes" for a living.

Most migrants live as cheaply as possible in the cities and send money home that spurs development in the villages.

In Liujiaguanfang Village in Shandong province, eastern China, a survey found the average income was equivalent to $50 a year for families without migrant members and $147 for those with someone in the city.

Communities of migrants have grown up on the outskirts of major cities. Beijing's "Zhejiang Village" is home to more than 100,000 migrants from Zhejiang province just south of Shanghai, including many entire families.

The Chen family is typical. Chen Chuanbao, 32, his wife, infant son and two friends share a 10-by-12-foot rented room. With two sewing machines, they churn out leather bomber jackets and whatever else is in fashion.

'People look down on you if you farm. Why did you Americans go West? Because there were more opportunities. It's just like that in Shenzhen. To go from a farm to a city factory, to go from peasant to worker, aren't the opportunities wider?'

— Jesse, Chinese factory worker

"We can make to order, we're fast, our prices are low," said Chen, who wears a beeper on his belt. The family's annual income, he said evasively, is "several tens of thousands of yuan" — thousands of U.S. dollars, or several times that of most permanent residents of Beijing.

Unlike permanent city residents, the migrants have no watchful neighborhood committees to supervise their activities, their guests, their births.

"We are the ziyou pai" — the free faction — Chen said. "We can come and go as we please."

That makes city officials and residents nervous. Cities blame rising crime rates on the migrants. Shanghai says they committed half the crimes reported there last year.

Authorities also say many migrants are having second and third babies, violating the government's one-child-per-couple plan for controlling the population, now at 1.2 billion.

There are other social problems, many related to the migrants' exclusion from urban social services. Without a city hukou, or residency permit, a peasant migrant cannot send his children to school, get a telephone, obtain a marriage license or, in many cases, medical treatment.

The psychological pressures on migrants are many.

"Life on the farm is more secure than life here as a worker," said Zheng, 25, who left his village five months ago to work at a television factory in Shenzhen. "Today I may have work and tomorrow I may be out of a job, have no food and nowhere to sleep."

The Yangcheng Evening News of Canton, a city with several million migrant workers, noted that many are women in their late teens or early 20s who are away from home for the first time. At home they probably would have married, but many factory bosses forbid marriage. The result: rising numbers of single women giving birth and having abortions.

Peasants who move to cities "are in an alien cultural sea," said Greg O'Leary, senior lecturer at the Center for Labor Studies of the University of Adelaide, Australia.

"It's like the experience of people in the Industrial Revolution, people brought out of a work environment determined by the weather," he said. "It's an immense personal, psychological, sociological jolt. Crime is a natural response of people in those circumstances."

The natural response of Chinese authorities bent on maintaining order is to send the migrants home.

Canton and Shenzhen, the most popular targets of the "peasant army," have intensified efforts to round up new arrivals. They've dismantled some migrant tent cities and cleared campers out of the train stations.

But even after a month of extra police patrols, Shenzhen authorities acknowledged they had only caught perhaps one of six unauthorized migrants and could not prevent more from coming.

Economists and sociologists say the government should stop trying to control the flow and instead reform the residency permit system instead so peasants can obtain city hukous.

"If China excludes 80 percent of its population from the urbanization process, it can't really enter the ranks of developed countries," said Han of the social sciences academy.

He argues that residency controls interfere with the flow of labor where it is needed.

While authorities debate reforming the hukou system, many cities are quietly doing so, spurred by the same profit motive that gave rise to the peasant invasion.

Beijing's Fengtai District, where "Zhejiang Village" is located, sells temporary permits to most of its migrants, reaping hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. Pinggu County on Beijing's outskirts offers permanent residencies to people who invest 100,000 yuan ($11,500).

That's good news for the Jesses, with their boundless energy and ambition.

The young man fingered his health-food brochures and said hopefully: "I heard that 20 percent of American millionaires got their start in direct sales."

Grunge star Cobain's death sends Northwest town into mourning

By Ellis E. Conklin
N.Y. Times News Service

ABERDEEN, Wash — As torrents of rain drummed against the dark wood siding of the Pourhouse Tavern Friday afternoon, Jeannie Richards pushed back a pitcher of beer and began to cry.

Several hours earlier, she heard the news: Kurt Cobain, the most famous musician this long-depressed logging town ever produced, was dead at 27.

Now she had come to the Pourhouse, an old Aberdeen drinking hole, near the banks of the Chehalis River with a long bar, a short stage, and a pool room in back.

Cobain once played here not long after introducing Grays Harbor County residents to Nirvana's "grunge sound" at the Hoquiam Eagles hall in 1986.

"I knew something was bound to happen to him," Richards said. "He was just too good."

Richards, 36, tearfully recalled how she used "to party" with Cobain's mother, Wendy O'Connor, and the time she listened to Cobain play the guitar in his garage. He was only 15 then.

"We always complained and said it was too loud, and he just laughed," Richards said as residents began to stream in from the rain to talk about their vanquished hometown rock sensation.

"That's the only time he ever expressed himself," she said.

There were few, if any, girlfriends and he never used alcohol or drugs, said former schoolmates at Aberdeen High School, which Cobain attended until dropping out after his junior year.

"He was squeeky clean in high school," said Len Jacobs, a former schoolmate. "He was just always into himself."

"He had a heart of gold. He was wonderful, really wonderful," Richards said. "He never forgot his friends."

Down at Rosevear's Music Center, where Cobain took his first guitar lessons when he was 11, young customers buzzed about the loss of one of their own.

"I'm just disappointed in him. He had the world by the tail — fame, a wife, a little kid," said Polly Adams. "It couldn't have been that bad, could it?"

"He sort of gave Aberdeen a good identity, something to root for, and we needed that," said Glenn Johansen.

At the Hoquiam Eagles Hall, a handful of older residents lounged in the bar where Cobain eight years ago took his first step toward international fame.

"Everybody still talks about that concert. You'ld think the whole darn town was here instead of 300 people," joked one patron.

Bob Hunter, who was Cobain's art teacher at Aberdeen High, said it's been years since he has heard or seen his former pupil.

Kansas may become 37th death penalty state

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — A bill that would restore the death penalty in Kansas was sent to the governor this weekend, apparently ending more than 20 years of legislative debate over capital punishment.

Gov. Joan Finney personally opposes the death penalty but has said she would not veto the bill. Instead, she will allow it to become law without her signature.

"It's a closed case," said Mary Holladay, the governor's daughter and chief of staff.

The bill, allowing execution by injection in some murder cases, would take effect July 1. It would make Kansas the 37th state with a capital punishment law.

The state House originally approved a tougher bill that would apply the penalty to all premeditated murders and some unintentional killings.

But the House voted 67-58 on Friday for a bill passed by the state Senate that would limit execution to people convicted of multiple murders, murders for hire, murders of some kidnapping and sex-crime victims, and murders of prison guards, inmates and law enforcement officers.

Sen. Dick Rock, who drafted the proposal, said he wanted a death penalty law to be as narrow as possible so that the flaws of capital punishment would be minimized. Opponents argue that innocent people have been executed and that death penalty laws are applied unfairly to minorities.

The Legislature repealed a capital punishment law in 1907, but a new one was adopted in 1935 following dozens of violent bank robberies. That law, which provided hanging as the method of execution, was struck down in 1972, when the U.S. Supreme Court declared all states' death penalty laws unconstitutional.

The last Kansas prisoners to be hanged were James Latham and George York in June 1965. They had killed seven people in five states.

Authorities note 'disturbing' increase in juvenile self-mutilation

By Debera Carlton Harrell
N.Y. Times News Service

SEATTLE — A 17-year-old boy says he can't feel a thing when he carves the initials of dead friends into his skin.

Another boy, 16, took a comb, broke off all the teeth and inserted them, one by one, under the skin of his arm until they formed an ugly bubble.

"Maybe if I cut myself," he recalls thinking, "people will care about me more."

The three teen-agers represent what some mental health and juvenile justice professionals believe is a disturbing increase in self-mutilation, the most grotesque of numerous emotional disorders they're seeing more often in the juvenile justice system.

Statistics on self-mutilation are sketchy, but there is growing anecdotal evidence that teen-agers are wounding themselves more often with razors, glass, broken plastic, pens, knives, pencils, shredded pop cans and paper clips. They rub themselves to cause burns, swallow broken hairbrush handles or punch out windows and pull their hands over the jagged glass.

The fair-haired 17-year-old being held in Seattle's King County youth detention center on armed-robbery charges used staples to carve angry red letters into his pale pink skin — A.J. and T.K., R.I.P. — a permanent tribute to friends shot dead. More letters and lines cover his shoulders, wrists, stomach, arms. He is a human kiosk, his scars blaring a permanent notice of unhealed anger.

"Almost every scar on my body has a meaning to it," he says.

The two other young men were in the same detention center, one on charges of residential burglary, the other for criminal trespass.

Psychologists and physicians say self-mutilation stems from acute trauma — sexual abuse, physical abuse, domestic and gang violence witnessed or suffered — and is akin to stress disorders suffered by Vietnam veterans.

All too often, it isn't a suicide attempt but a "way of feeling something, of reconnecting with reality," said Jana Ewing, mental health services coordinator and lead therapist for the King County Department of Youth Services.

"These kids don't scare me; their future scares me," Ewing said. "We are seeing more self-mutilating kids, more psychotic kids, more kids with severe mental disorders. This population is a traumatized population, and it's become a serious issue because we're incarcerating more and more mentally disturbed kids."

Craig Apperson, a psychologist at the state-operated, 144-bed Green Hill School in Chehalis, Wash., said a study he conducted there in 1986 showed that 29 youths had committed 118 total acts of "deliberate self-harm," including wrist cutting, wall hitting, poison ingestion, stabbing and intentional burns. "If I did the study again, the rates would be higher," Apperson said recently.

Dr. Jim Owens, medical director the past 20 years for the State Division of Juvenile Rehabilitation based at Echo Glen, agreed that serious emotional problems, including self-mutilation, have become more common.

"Trauma is one of the major reasons we're seeing many more mentally ill children. The public is talking about 'three strikes and you're out,' but a lot of these kids were born with three strikes against them."

Self-mutilation is a longstanding problem among adults in psychiatric care — sometimes as a precursor to suicide, sometimes to tattoo oneself for gang or social group initiation. But doctors and mental health experts insist the self-mutilations seen in recent years are different.

"It is a form of coping with feelings they can't manage," Ewing said.

"This is not tattooing, it is not a hobby. They are secretive and ashamed of it when someone finds out. Most do not describe it as a suicide attempt, although most kids doing this are depressed. They cannot tell you why they do it except they're going crazy and losing themselves."

Probe eyes Bush funds given by IBM executives

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Election Commission is investigating senior executives of International Business Machines Corp. for possible violations of federal election laws, corporate documents show.

The investigation focuses on money that former IBM Chairman and Chief Executive Officer John F. Akers and more than a dozen other executives contributed at a fund-raising luncheon for then-President Bush.

The donations all came within several days of a Nov. 12, 1991, fund-raiser hosted by Akers in New York City, raising the question of whether the contributions were "bundled."

Bundling is a practice by which several individual contributions are lumped together and delivered in one batch. It can be illegal if the government determines the intent was to evade contribution limits.

For example, if a company or political action committee asks individual employees or members to make contributions and then reimburses them, that could be considered illegal. The specifics of the FEC investigation were not disclosed.

A review of political spending records by The Associated Press shows at least 17 IBM executives contributed a total of $13,500 to the Bush-Quayle '92 Primary Committee Inc. within several days of the fund-raiser.

IBM disclosed the existence of the investigation in a March 10 proxy statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. IBM spokesman Rob Wilson confirmed the proxy contains IBM's first disclosure of the investigation. The company denies any wrongdoing.

Akers secretary in Stamford, Conn., said the former IBM chief was out of town on vacation and unavailable for comment.

The Federal Election Commission declined substantive comment on the investigation, though spokeswoman Kelly Huff said, "It doesn't appear to be closed."

In the proxy statement, IBM said the investigation concerns solicitations of campaign contributions for a fund-raising luncheon in the 1992 presidential campaign. Akers and "certain senior IBM executives" are involved in the investigation, the statement said.

In the document's words, the investigation is exploring whether IBM was in "violation of federal election laws and regulations governing the activities of federal contractors" through the possible misuse of its corporate resources or its personnel in fund raising.

Federal election laws forbid corporations from directly contributing money or other resources to aid federal political campaigns. Many companies instead form political action committees, or PACs, which make the contributions. IBM does not have a political action committee.

IBM said it has responded to the FEC's inquiries and is cooperating. The company "does not believe that its resources or personnel were utilized in a manner that violated any applicable law," the document said.

The FEC has not informed IBM about the outcome of its investigation, which began in November, 1992, the document said. IBM spokesman Wilson declined further comment on the case, saying the company doesn't discuss matters that are the subject of an investigation.

An April 1992 article in The Washington Post first disclosed that senior IBM executives funneled nearly three times the $5,000 contribution limit on PACs to the Bush campaign.

State Rep. Tom Craddick is to be the guest speaker at the Pop-Up Toasters weekly meeting at 6:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Best Western Hotel, 3100 W. Wall St. Craddick is to present a legislative update. The public is invited to attend.

New office

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Insurance has opened a new office to deal with international insurance issues.

Business changes, specifically approval of the North American Free Trade Agreement, prompted creation of the Office of International Regulatory Counsel, Texas Insurance Commissioner J. Robert Hunter said.

"With the passage of NAFTA and the probable opening of other insurance markets throughout the hemisphere, it is critical that we maintain a strong regulatory presence in order to safeguard the interest of Texas consumers," Hunter said.

Attorney Gloria Leal will be in charge of the new state office, which will be part of the Insurance Department. Ms. Leal is a former general counsel for the State Board of Insurance.

Capitol meeting

"Because Texas facilities may be listed by the Base Realignment and Closure Commission for several closures next year, we need to develop a strategy and prepare now," Richards said.

The meeting, to be held in the Capitol extension auditorium, will be attended by state and Department of Defense officials.

Carrier shooting

LUBBOCK (AP) — A Lubbock Avalanche-Journal newspaper carrier was found shot in his vehicle about 4:40 a.m. Saturday by police responding to a traffic call.

Randy Lawson, 39, was pronounced dead a short time later at University Medical Center, Sgt. B.K. Hurst said.

Police found Lawson's vehicle had crashed into a mailbox. They were investigating the case as a homicide, Hurst said.

Parking issue plagues library

■ Expansion, renovation of public library resulted in less parking space, more confusion for patrons, officials.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Library patrons got their dream in 1993: a $3 million expanded and renovated library.

But with that gain they lost parking convenience at the downtown Midland County Public Library. And many patrons gained confusion about where to park.

In the library's southward expansion onto its own former parking spaces and in the building of the new Midland County Museum, additional parking spaces were sacrificed.

The library is virtually blocked in on north, east, south, and west but particularly on the south and east.

"We thought we always had the east-side easement," said Louisa Valencia, who is the Commissioners' Court's liaison to the library.

To the east, however, is a joint-venture Superblock private parking area. There is a relatively narrow north-south drive fronting the library's main entrance on the east side.

This sign — put up by the owner of the parking lot east of the Midland County Public Library — informs patrons which spots are for library parking.

West Texas Lions hold annual meeting in Midland

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

More than 200 Lions from throughout West Texas converged on Midland Saturday for the 53rd annual meeting of District 2-A-1 of Lions International.

The Lions conducted business sessions, a forum and a Governor's Banquet Saturday. The convention is to conclude today with a luncheon and the naming of the district queen.

Duke Jimerson, arrangements chairman for the convention, said he was very pleased with the turnout, which is about 15 percent higher than last year.

Ray Gwyn, one of the convention workers, said the first District 2-A-1 Convention was held in 1941 and is held about every five years in Midland. He said the district was comprised of 69 clubs and has 3,200 members.

Lions from Big Spring, San Angelo, Ozona, Sonora, Big Lake, Colorado City and numerous other towns were registered for the convention.

Also in attendance were Everett "Ebb" Grindstaff, Ballinger city attorney, who is the only Lions International president to have come from West Texas. Grindstaff, who was president in 1982 and 1983, said district conventions, like the one in Midland, are what ties

Police to meet former Cowboys players on court

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

The Midland Police Department will square off against former Dallas Cowboys players on the basketball court on April 17 in an effort to raise money for the Midland Shrine Club.

The game, which will begin at 3 p.m. at Midland High School, was organized by Glenn Flippin — past president of Midland Shrine Club — in an effort to offset costs of transporting area children to Shriners' hospitals in Houston and Galveston.

"Last year, we spent more than $20,000 taking about 60 kids to the hospitals," Flippin said. "We have already taken 11 children to hospitals this year."

Former Cowboy players who will participate in the game are to be Gordon Banks, who played from 1985-87; Michael Downs, 1981-88; Ron Fellows, 1980-85; Eugene Lockhart, 1984-89; and Aaron Mitchell, 1979-81.

Flippin said tickets are $7 for adults and $3 for children. A concession stand will be open during the game.

If the game is a success, Flippin said the Shrine Club hopes to make it a yearly event in conjunction with its annual Shrine Circus to raise money for the organization.

"Right now, we do not have a goal or amount that we are shooting for for this game," Flippin said. "There are no guidelines for this. If it works and draws a large crowd, we hope to do something like it year after year."

Ballet Midland sponsors Ballet Oklahoma's productions of "Peter and the Wolf" and "Fractured Fairy Tales," at 7 p.m. on April 16 at Midland High School auditorium.

Oklahoma troupe to stage fun, comedic ballet

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Familiar fairy tales will dance awry Saturday when Ballet Oklahoma performs "Peter and the Wolf" and "Fractured Fairy Tales" at 7 p.m. at Midland High School auditorium.

"This is a totally fun program," said Brian Pitts, artistic director of Ballet Oklahoma.

"When I created 'Peter and the Wolf,' I didn't want it to be just another retelling of the story, so I put a lot of comedic twists and effects into the plot. It's funny."

"Peter and the Wolf" is set to the music of Sergei Prokofiev. Each character in the story is characterized by a different instrument in the orchestra.

"Fractured Fairy Tales," a collection of nine tales with a "twist," is choreographed by Pitts and internationally known choreographer Peter Anastos.

Familiar stories such as "Cinderella," "Snow White" and "The Three Little Pigs" are set to music that ranges from Mozart, Tchaikovsky and Ravel to Johann Strauss and Leonard Bernstein.

Anastos is the founding director and choreographer of Les Ballet Trockadero of Monte Carlo, a comic troupe that performs worldwide. He also choreographed scenes in the "Addams Family" and "Addams Family II" movies.

"We have a great time twisting these tales," Pitts said. "We take a lot of liberties with sets, costumes, music, and movement. The audience won't know what to expect from one scene to the next, which is exactly our intent."

The program will appeal to the novice as well as the connoisseur of dance, Pitts said.

"It's great for people coming for the first time. We have great danc-

GARY OTT

There are worse things than to be modern-day Peter Pan

When a friend recently said, "Gary, you're like Peter Pan. You'll never grow up," I didn't know whether to be offended or flattered.

Ott

So I thought about it for a moment or two. Then I decided to be flattered. After all, there are worse things than being a kid all your life.

The problem is determining whether or not you have actually grown up. If you're going to be Peter Pan, then you need to know it.

That's where I come in. As the eternal kid, I have come up with a foolproof test to help you figure out if you are indeed a child or an adult. If you answer B to eight or more of the following 10 scenarios then you are well on your way to becoming a modern-day Peter Pan.

Ready?

Good. Here goes.

■ After a long day at the office, you prefer to:

(A) Prepare yourself an extra-dry martini and spend the next two hours at your home computer working on your personal finances, keeping every line item completely up to date so that there will be no surprises come tax time.

(B) Put the Rolling Stones' "Jumpin' Jack Flash" on the stereo and dance with your cat.

■ Your favorite reading material is:

(A) The Wall Street Journal.

(B) Back issues of Mad magazine.

■ If you are in the mood to watch something stimulating on TV, your No. 1 choice would be:

(A) The MacNeil-Lehrer News Hour, or anything else on PBS.

(B) The Flintstones.

■ The person who did the most to mold your political views is:

(A) Winston Churchill.

(B) Barney Rubble.

■ When you break up with a girlfriend, you:

(A) Attempt to maintain a mature friendship since the two of you have obviously shared many special moments in the past, and it would be foolish to throw it all away.

(B) Call her house at two in the morning and leave nasty messages on her answering machine.

■ When a person does something to upset you, your main course of action is to:

(A) Sit down with the person in question and have a heart-to-heart discussion about your inner feelings.

(B) Stick your tongue out at the person, and do your favorite Curly Joe imitation.

■ When asked what your all-time favorite movie is, you reply:

(A) "To Kill a Mockingbird."

(B) "Ernest Scared Stupid."

■ When a last-minute project is unveiled at the office and volunteers are needed to make it happen, you are most likely to:

(A) Step forward and do your part, even if it means having to work many hours of overtime at no extra pay.

(B) Hide in the bathroom.

■ When things get real bad in your personal life, the best way to counter your depression is to:

(A) Take a deep breath, realize things could be a whole lot worse and try to make the best of a bad situation.

(B) Lock yourself in your house for 48 hours and write hateful notes to everyone you know, blaming them for all your problems.

■ If you want to impress that really special someone, the one who just might be Ms. Right, you:

(A) Attempt to engage her in a sensitive conversation in which you make it clear that her feelings and needs are all that really matter.

(B) Crush a beer can on your head.

He married Wilma Milam in 1930 in Abilene. They lived in Hamilton.

She preceded him in death in 1937.

He married Emma Riley on June 22, 1941, in Dallas. They returned to Hamilton where he was county clerk for 14 years.

He moved to Midland in 1959 and worked as a barber for many years until he retired in 1984.

He was preceded in death by his wife in 1990.

Moore resided in Trinity Towers before moving to Mabee Health Care Center. He was active with the senior citizen group at Dellwood Mall.

He was a member of St. Luke's United Methodist Church and a lifetime member of the Lions Club.

Survivors include two daughters, Phyllis Walters of Escondido, Calif., and Betty Beyer of Pampa; and a brother, Windsor Moore of Port Arthur.

(From 1B)

The Midland Shrine Club helps area children get to the Shriners' hospital for crippled children in Houston and the Shriners' Burn Center in Galveston. If the child is in serious condition, the club buys an airline ticket for the child and a parent or guardian. In non-emergency situations, the club pays for gas and other traveling expenses.

Flippin said the club has also transported children to the Scottish Rite Hospital for crippled children in Dallas and to the Burn Center at the University Medical Center in Lubbock.

Any extra money made at the game will go to expenses such as utilities, Flippin said.

"No one in the club is making any money off of this," he said. "Nobody is getting an executive fee. It's all volunteer. All this money goes to the kids."

(From 1B)

Lionism together.

"It is the place where the local, district and international aspects of Lionism meet to discuss business and form a consensus on issues."

He said that presently, the biggest issue of importance to Lions is their $130 million Sight First Program, in which the Midland Downtown Lions Club is playing a big role.

Grindstaff said the Sight First program called for Lions International to raise $130 million to eradicate preventable blindness worldwide.

"A lot of people didn't think we could do it, but we have already raised $126 million that will go to furnish vitamins, medicines, eyeglasses and cataract surgery to needy individuals around the world.

"Getting a pair of glasses is something that we take for granted, but in Third World countries it can be nearly impossible."

Grindstaff said the Midland Downtown Lions Club is very active in the global sight-saving program because it is a Regional Eyeglass Center for Lions International. The club receives, cleans, and grades thousands of eyeglasses for use around the world.

POLICE REPORTS

Friday

Burglary of a residence: A 1991 Harley Davidson motorcycle was taken and there was an attempt to take a travel trailer from Cranford Ostrich Farms, 2611 E. Loop 250. The incident was reported at 4:19 p.m.

Vandalism: A woman made threats to the assistant manager of Whataburger, 3206 N. Midkiff Road, and possibly vandalized the manager's vehicle and the assistant manager's residence. The incident was reported at 5:25 p.m.

Saturday

Burglary of a residence: John Mach reported at 7:13 a.m. that a television, videocassette recorder and other items were taken from La Casita Apartments, 2900 W. Illinois Ave., No. 24. Entry was gained through the front door.

Vandalism: Lee Pickens reported at 8:15 a.m. that a rear window was broken out of a 1994 Dodge Duster at 1100 E. Illinois Ave.

Vandalism: Tony Wade reported at 8:27 a.m. that a side window was broken out at 4103 Harlowe Drive.

ISSUE: Parking problems remain for public library

(From 1B)

It affords adequate room for one-way traffic and barely room for two-way traffic, Ms. Valencia said.

Court records reflect that in 1987 Emil Kiehne & Sons of New Mexico and Jon Morgan of Midland purchased the 7.088-acre Superblock for $1.2 million from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC), which acquired the property in 1983 when First National Bank of Midland failed.

"Mr. (Gary) Kiehne has advised us that we don't have any easement on the east side or the south side," Ms. Valencia said on Saturday.

Fairly recently, the county made Gary Kiehne an offer to buy south-side easement.

"He rejected it," Ms. Valencia said. "He came back with a counter offer that was atrocious . . . too much."

Afterward, the commissioners found out that the county owned far less land to the east in the library's new front yard through which patrons often drive to find legitimate parking spaces. The north-south route also affords an alternate access to those who have rented private parking spaces from the joint-venture that owns the Superblock.

In a closed executive session on Monday, the commissioners are to meet with a retained attorney, Medfern Owens, to discuss the predicament.

Ms. Valencia said they "are going to have to (condemn)" property adjoining the library's east and south sides through the powers of eminent domain.

"We have to have easement around our library."

She said the county wanted to negotiate for the property and to "do it right."

To the immediate north of the library is Missouri Avenue. To the west is a book-drop drive-through lane. Beyond that are more private parking spaces.

Ms. Valencia said that Kiehne would sell space for library easement "for a pretty price, a lot pettier" than the county deems reasonable.

The county, Ms. Valencia said, earlier had paid "around" $300,000 for library parking spaces on the Superblock property.

Commissioner Gary McCrary, who, with Ms. Valencia, had negotiated with Kiehne on acquiring more space adjoining the library, declined to discuss the issue while the matter was being dealt with by legal counsel.

"It's an atrocious amount of money," Ms. Valencia said of Kiehne's offer. "It's more than a lot of buildings in town are selling for. All the prices he gave us were too high. It's a mess."

Edward "Ed" Cakl, who manages the 700-space parking lot for the joint-venture owners of the Superblock, said the county has 185 parking spaces for use by library patrons south and southeast of the library.

Both library and Superblock parking spaces have been misused, Cakl said. Sometimes library patrons will park in the Superblock area. Sometimes people on non-library business will park in the library parking spaces and then walk to office buildings or to the Hilton hotel.

"I'm having to control their (the county's) traffic, and I'm not getting paid for it. I done it when they had an attendant here. We worked together on illegal parkers," said Cakl, who managed the Superblock parking when it was owned by the FDIC.

Ms. Valencia said it was "not cost-effective" for the county to hire a parking-lot attendant to monitor library parking, but that the constable would issue tickets to illegal parkers.

Cakl said library patrons occasionally "are infringing on our property" by parking free on the Superblock. When he catches them, Cakl said he tells them the Superblock parking is privately owned and then asks them to move their cars to library parking spaces.

"The county commissioners ought to be out here directing this traffic," Cakl said. "They never know what's going on here. They never come by . . . except when a dignitary . . . a big shot . . . (such as U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm) comes in. Everybody wants to be here and be on TV."

Ms. Valencia said she frequents the library.

"I'm there (at the library) quite a bit," she said. "I'm the liaison of the court to the library."

James A. Guthrie

Services for James A. Guthrie, 55, have been set for 2 p.m. Monday at St. Lukes United Methodist Church with Rev. K. C. Blackketter officiating. Burial will follow at Sunset Memorial Gardens, with Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Mr. Guthrie died Thursday at his home following a lengthy illness.

Mr. Guthrie was born December 31, 1938 in Wichita Falls. He married Betty Hiegle in Wichita Falls on March 21, 1959. Mr. Guthrie was vice president of Gregory Rig Service. He was an alumni of the Boys Club of America. Mr. Guthrie was a member of the board of directors of Southwest Air Fair and Exposition, and he was a member of the association of Service Contractors. He was also active in Rainbows End and Hi Sky Emmaus Community, and was a member of First Baptist Church and the Permian Booster Club.

Survivors include his wife, Betty Guthrie of Odessa; two sons, Steve Guthrie of Midland, and David Guthrie of Odessa; one daughter, Lori Searcy of Odessa, and Parents, Frank and Mable London of Wichita Falls. He is also survived by two brothers, Eugene Guthrie and Ronnie London of Wichita Falls; one sister, Joyce Weaver of Wichita Falls; and five grandchildren: Linzy Searcy, Calvin Searcy and Jarod Searcy of Odessa and Allison Guthrie and Stephanie Guthrie of Midland.

The family suggests memorials be sent to the Bethel United Methodist Church Building Fund in Midland, or to Hospice of the Southwest in Odessa.

STAGE: Oklahoma Ballet to give performance in Midland

(From 1B)

Pitts

ing and the stories are very easy to follow. I say all the time — the ballet is not brain surgery. We are not building rockets here. It's very easy to understand.

On the other hand, all of the dancing is great . . . and those familiar with dance are going to see something (that is usually) treated seriously be totally satirical. You can have great dance and still have fun with it."

The performance is sponsored by Ballet Midland, which fosters and promotes the appreciation and enjoyment of ballet. Later in the year Ballet Midland is to present the Tulsa Ballet in "The Nutcracker Suite," which will feature local children.

Tickets for Saturday's production of "Peter and the Wolf" and "Fractured Fairy Tales" are on sale at Midland Park Mall. Adult tickets are $10; children's are $6. Children under 2 are free. Tickets are also available at the door beginning at 6 p.m. The auditorium will open at 6:30 p.m. For more information, call 682-9028.

Pitts is a former dancer with the New York City Ballet, where he trained under George Balanchine.

"Mr. Balanchine was and is responsible, as we all know, for the direction classical ballet took in the United States," Pitts said. "He was a genius.

"Mr. Balanchine had told me when I was 16 (that) on my next birthday, I would get into the New York City Ballet. On Oct. 5, 1969, I was in New York City Ballet."

At first, he was not cognizant of Balanchine's choreographic genius.

"I was so caught up in the fact I was dancing, in the beginning I failed to realize the real genius of his choreography. But so many of the things that I create now — even if they are story ballets, which he was not known for — I go back to my experiences of seeing different artists in the company he had assembled and all the works that he did.

"When George Balanchine created a story ballet, he always made the story very simple for the audience. And I think the audience will see that in 'Peter and the Wolf' and 'Fractured Fairy Tales.'"

Pitts believes that some people shy away from dance because they don't think that they will understand it. He said it does not have to be that way — "simplicity is the key," especially in story ballets.

"When we tell a story, we have to make the explanation of the story as simple as possible. Mr. Balanchine was a genius at doing that — compressing a lot into a short period in time and making it understandable, too."

Although he spent years as a dancer, Pitts actually set out in life to be a musician.

"I attended the first year of the North Carolina School of the Arts as a musician and classical guitarist. We had to take ballet for physical education because, at that time, there was no physical education program.

"And I did not want to do that. I hated it. I went home and begged my parents to write a note. I was a young man in North Carolina. I certainly didn't want to put on any tights. But the school said I had to in order to remain as a musician."

He forced himself to attend the dance classes.

"After about three months, I had fallen in love with it. So the following year, I came back as a dancer. And my parents were not very happy with me because ever since the age of 8, I was a musician and I had been studying music, and they had poured all this money into lessons and instruments."

Yet, within four months, Pitts said he had a scholarship to the School of American Ballet in New York. He was 15 when he went to New York City.

"And you have to love it 'cause you don't make a lot of money. If you are good, you get a lot of applause, recognition that way. And you are constantly every day of your life staying in shape and fighting the fact that you get older. Careers are very short. Most men finish their careers around 35. Of course, when I was 19, I didn't think about that."

Pitts, who is now 41, stopped dancing four years ago. Had he not taken the position of artistic director, he said he might have danced longer.

Since he joined Ballet Oklahoma in 1986, he has introduced more than 25 new ballets performed by the 20 dancers who come from all over the United States to audition.

"As the company grew, and we did more performances and I was asked to create more ballets, I ran out of time, and I think it got to the point where if you can't do it well you probably shouldn't be doing it. We don't want to have someone ask us to please leave the stage.

"And you have your own integrity, too. You have to live with yourself, and you know when you are doing a good job and when you are not doing a good job."

Police: Random gunfire comes from shooting range

PASADENA (AP) — Random bullets that whizzed by several construction workers in a parking lot were fired by a guest at the Pasadena Police Department's shooting range, the police chief said.

Several construction workers were in a south Pasadena parking lot Thursday afternoon when they heard the gunfire.

Lewis said he and four other workers ran into the store but still heard what sounded like 30 to 40 rounds of automatic-weapons fire.

No one was hurt, but a motorist reported a bullet hole in his car.

Pasadena police recovered a .223-caliber slug from a car door and found it was fired from an AR-15, a civilian version of the military's M-16 automatic assault rifle.

Police said Friday the gunfire came from a guest who was alone at the shooting range, about a mile from the parking lot.

Ellis said civilization has crept up on the once-remote range. He said he will likely change the department's policy of allowing outside agencies access to the range.

Silkwood's parents struggle with 1974 death

By Laura Tolley
Associated Press

NEDERLAND — Almost 20 years have passed since plutonium plant whistle-blower Karen Silkwood died in a car crash on an Oklahoma highway, but her father still can't put her mysterious death behind him.

Even if Bill Silkwood wanted to let go of the past, events won't let him.

He learned recently that Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico had several bone fragments left behind from post-mortem testing done on his 28-year-old daughter, who thought she had been contaminated with radioactive plutonium.

The lab wanted to know what the family wished to do with the remains. Silkwood is furious the lab still has them.

"I don't want them to have it," said Silkwood, his voice filled with anger. "I want it all. . . . It's the remains of what they did to her.

The latest disclosure has renewed the pain and frustration Silkwood and his wife, Merle, have endured since the 1974 accident killed their oldest daughter.

"It had gotten better until this happened," said Mrs. Silkwood, choking back tears.

Karen Silkwood, union activist and a lab-analyst for Kerr-McGee Corp. at its plutonium processing plant near Crescent, Okla., died Nov. 13, 1974, while driving to meet a reporter for The New York Times.

She had promised to bring evidence to the reporter to prove the plant was unsafe. However, no documents were found in the wrecked car.

Her family and union officials claimed she was forced off the road, but Oklahoma Highway Patrol officials concluded she fell asleep at the wheel after taking sedatives. The Justice Department said there was insufficient evidence to prove the allegations.

Her story later became the movie "Silkwood," starring Meryl Streep and Cher.

Silkwood, 69, still is convinced someone killed his daughter, and he has a standing $10,000 reward out for information leading to an arrest and conviction in the case.

"I thought maybe somebody who had been involved would come forward," he said. No one has yet.

As for the Los Alamos lab, site of government nuclear research since World War II, Silkwood is seeking legal advice before he crafts a response about the remaining bones. He also wants 113 vials of tissue samples from his daughter that he believes the lab still has.

Karen Silkwood was buried in the east Texas town of Kilgore after an autopsy was performed in Oklahoma. Some of her organs, including her brain, were removed and taken to the Los Alamos lab for additional testing.

Lab officials insist they did so with the family's permission, but Silkwood disagrees.

"They're liars. We only gave them permission to do an autopsy (in Oklahoma). That had nothing to do with stripping her body organs out" and taking them to Los Alamos, he said.

Silkwood said the family didn't find out that her organs had been removed and taken to Los Alamos until 1979, during the trial of a lawsuit filed against Kerr-McGee. (The company later agreed to pay his daughter's estate $1.38 million.)

"I feel now like I felt back during the trial, and that's pretty dad-gum rough," Silkwood said.

Over the years, Silkwood has spent his own time and money in his search for answers in his daughter's death. He said he has lost a lot of his trust in people along the way.

But he can't give up.

Silkwood continues to talk about his daughter as he walks outside the home in Nederland, the southeastern Texas town where he and his wife raised their three daughters.

She was just a regular girl, he said.

Each evening millions of people lay down for a restful night of sleep.

NOW, THERE IS A CURE FOR SNORING.

Through a series of three to five 15-minute laser treatments, performed under local anesthesia, snoring is being cured approximately 85% of the time. A laser is used to reshape with precision the back of the throat to allow more room for air passage thus alleviating the cause of snoring.
It sounds easy... and it is.
To find out if you or a loved one is a candidate for this new laser treatment breakthrough, schedule your appointment today.

This is the fifth year that the Tandy Technology Scholars program has made awards to teachers and graduating seniors at American high schools.

The academic top two percent of graduating seniors are eligible to receive certificates recognizing their academic achievement. This year the Tandy Technology Scholars program will honor 24,360 seniors.

Each school may nominate a senior who is outstanding in mathematics, science or computer science. These students receive a certificate recognizing them as a Tandy Technology Scholar. In addition, they are eligible to complete for one of the 100 $1,000 scholarships awarded annually. This year one third of all schools in the U.S. participated in this area of the program.

Each certified school also may nominate an outstanding teacher in mathematics, science or computer science. These teachers receive a certificate of recognition and are eligible to compete for one of the 100 $2,500 cash awards presented annually.

Graduate center to offer course on waterfloods

Staff Report

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will be offering a course on "Operating & Monitoring Waterfloods" Monday through Friday. The course will be offered Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Friday from 8 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

The course is designed to demonstrate how to operate equipment and the reservoir to improve profitability: why monitoring is necessary: time-proven operating and monitoring techniques for waterfloods: to apply these techniques to improve efficiency of existing and future waterfloods; to recognize problem areas in existing waterfloods and those to avoid in new installations.

The instructors combine many years of application and teaching experience in installing, operating, monitoring and evaluating the performance of secondary and tertiary recovery projects.

To register or for further information, call the PBGC at 683-2832.

Swarms of squirrels drive some people nuts

By Steve O'Neil
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

LUBBOCK — On any given morning, when the weather is nice, Calvin Thomas and his wife, Betty, can be found on their back porch, drinking a fresh pot of coffee and tossing pecans to squirrels.

But not everyone shares the Thomases' affinity for the peppy nut eaters. Some people see them as nothing but trouble and fire off angry letters to the city, denouncing the squirrel situation.

"There are people who have had their pecan trees raided by squirrels, and there are others who have found them eating their way into their homes and chewing up insulation or phone lines," says Charles Overstreet, the director of Lubbock Animal Control. "Simply put, there are people out there who just don't like the squirrels."

Squirrel trouble is not a new phenomenon in Lubbock — or anywhere else. But back-to-back mild winters, coupled with an absence of disease and a plentiful food supply, have squirrel experts expecting a bumper crop in Lubbock this year.

"They are successful little breeders — there is no doubt about that," says Carol Mitchell, the director of the South Plains Wildlife Rehabilitation Center. "Given the right conditions, they thrive."

The most fertile squirrel stomping grounds seem to be in the heart of Lubbock — between 34th Street and 50th Street, especially between Memphis and Flint avenues.

"These are the areas that seem to offer the best habitat," Overstreet says.

For starters, killing a squirrel without a permit is illegal, says John Rische, a game warden with Texas Parks and Wildlife.

The best solution seems to be capturing the offending squirrels in traps designed not to harm them. Lubbock Animal Control recently purchased 50 squirrel traps that Lubbock residents can check out for a $20 deposit, Overstreet says. After they're caught, the squirrels can be taken to Lubbock Animal Control, and officials there will release them in locations as far away as Farwell.

"There are places around that don't have squirrels but really want them," Overstreet says. "We usually have no problems finding homes for them."

Overstreet says there are some simple rules to follow when trying to ensnare a squirrel.

"You will first want to place a trap near an area where the squirrels roam," he says. "Go ahead and put some food in it, like pecans or apples, and give them a chance to get used to it. Then after a day or two, go ahead and set the trap and try your luck."

But Overstreet says that no amount of traps will banish squirrels from an area unless entire neighborhoods are committed to giving the rodents the boot.

While the squirrel problem festers in the minds of some, people like Calvin Thomas will be out there pitching nuts to his backyard friends.

"I think they are nice to have around," Thomas says. "It's relaxing just to watch them hop around, and I would hate to see them go."

Long Term Care Forum to be held

Staff Report

There will be a Long Term Care Forum at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Crestview Baptist Education-Activity Center, 3300 Thomas Ave.

The forum will review the recent history of how things have worked in Long Term Care planning and how they have been drastically by OBRA 1993 in ways that have not yet been implemented, said Paul Gentry of Midland, associate state director for the American Association of Retired Persons. The economics and demographics of Long Term Care in the 1990s and beyond will be examined, along with a focus on President Clinton's plan for revamping the health system.

Also, the AARP agenda regarding the administration's plan will be discussed with proactive suggestions for members, which can make a difference in the outcome of the debate, Gentry said.

Joining Gentry at the forum will be Bill Gilluly of Midland and Ed Harris of San Antonio.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

To meet unusually heavy demand, Aptitude Inventory Measurement Service (AIMS) has scheduled an additional weekend of testing at Midland College on May 6-8.

The AIMS aptitude testing and evaluation program is suitable for both high school and college-aged students seeking help with college and career choices. It also is useful for adults considering career changes.

Testing is not restricted to Midland College students, but is open to the public at Midland College as a service to residents of the Permian Basin. The local testing weekends eliminate a trip to the AIMS headquarters in Dallas.

Fee for the complete testing battery and interpretative consultation is $550.

Persons wishing to enroll or wanting a free brochure describing the program should call (214) 234-8378. Some information also is available at the Midland College testing center in the Student Center building.

THE 3rd ANNUAL Midland High School Spirit Fair, an annual event featuring booths from every organization, booster club, and academic department at MHS will be held on Monday, April 18, from 6:30-8 p.m. on the MHS grounds.

This is a way to introduce incoming students, their parents and the entire community to the extra-curricular programs available at Midland High School. There will be many types of food at the fair, including hot dogs, hamburgers, sausage on a stick, chili pie, nachos, popcorn and desserts. There also will be a dunking booth, basketball throw, football toss, putting green, face painting, legs contest, balloon dart throw, and other activities.

The fair will feature the MHS Band, Golden Girls, Cheerleaders, Choir and the Showmobile, which will feature talented MHS performers throughout the evening.

Admission is free, and there will be prizes given away at many of the booths. For additional information, call Vicki Leaverton at 687-3800.

THE UNIVERSITY Graduate Women of Midland is offering the Norma Anderson Memorial Scholarship to a Midland woman who wishes to return to college to obtain a degree in education.

The scholarship is based on academic ability, ambition, and need.

Reverend believes nation has lost its identity

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

Historian, scholar and writer the Rev. Peter Marshall has issued a warning for Americans.

He thinks the nation "could cease to exist as a viable, constitutional republic in as little as five years, unless it returns to its foundation of Christian morality."

Marshall said America is being brought to its knees by a multitude of social problems — rampant drug use, violence, crime, family disintegration, abortion, sexual perversion and promiscuity and failed education and welfare systems — but doesn't know how to fix any of them because the nation doesn't know what it's supposed to be.

"America is confused because it has lost its original vision and has no idea of why it exists," Marshall told a gathering Saturday at Golf Course Road Church of Christ. "We have lost our identity and purpose as a nation."

The founding fathers' "original vision and purpose" was to build the only nation in the world based on the Bible and the biblical principal of self-government, Marshall said. America was a divine experiment based on a covenant between God and the founding fathers.

"The Pilgrims were well aware that they were walking on to the stage of world history," Marshall said.

In a two-day seminar sponsored by the Eagle Forum, Marshall — son of noted Presbyterian minister and former chaplain of the U.S. Senate Peter Marshall and author Catherine Marshall LeSourd — presented numerous historical references to support his position that America was founded as a Christian nation and that the founding fathers had no intention of America ever being anything but a Christian nation.

Marshall, who is also the grandson of the real-life mountain missionary upon whose life the TV series "Christy" is based, said the founding fathers' original intent was to build a Christian nation where people of all origins, color and faith could live in harmony and peace.

He said the framers of the Constitution knew that such a nation could never be built unless it was built on Christian morality; that view was repeated often.

Marshall, a Yale graduate and author of several books on American history, said educators today will not teach the facts of America's Christian foundation.

Marshall, taking the U.S. Supreme Court to task, called its position on separation of church and state a "giant hoax on the American people."

Noting an 1892 Supreme Court decision that proclaims "America was founded to legitimize Christianity," he said the laws and government of the United States are built on Christian morality and that the government cannot be separated from its foundation.

Referring to a University of Houston study of more than 3,000 historic quotes made by the founding fathers, he said, "About 94 percent of them were directly from the Bible.

"There was no separation of church and state in the founding of America. They were one. The church was Christian, and the government was Christian," Marshall said.

He said the First Amendment provision that "Congress shall make no laws respecting the establishment of religion or the free exercise thereof" was written to forbid the formation of a state church and not as a device to root Christianity from all American institutions.

Marshall said the Constitution of the United States is an almost word-for-word version of a 1638 sermon by Puritan minister Thomas Hooker. The sermon was also the model for the Connecticut Constitution.

"Put the three side by side and it is hard to tell which is which," he said.

"Our concept of government 'by the people, for the people and of the people' came directly from the founding fathers' understanding of the Bible."

Local races top runoff election

Although all the political races to be decided by voters in Tuesday's runoff election are important, there are three that are of particular interest to Midland County voters. Those are the races for Midland County judge, the Republican Party nomination for judge of Midland County Court At Law No. 2 and the Republican Party nomination for Midland County Commissioner of Precinct 4.

Teresa Clingman has our endorsement for Midland County judge.

There has been much rhetoric in this campaign about the importance of having a lawyer in this position, and while it's true that one does not have to have a law degree to serve in this position, having such a degree and legal expertise is a decided benefit. Ms. Clingman, who has worked in both the county attorney's and district attorney's offices here, has strong qualifications. We encourage voters to look beyond the rhetoric and cast their vote for the most qualified candidate — Teresa Clingman.

Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer is our choice for the important position of judge of Midland County Court At Law No. 2. Seltzer has extensive legal experience that would serve the cause of justice in this important position. With the increasing demands on our judicial system, it's critical to keep the best qualified people on the bench in order to dispense justice in an evenhanded, wise manner. We encourage voters to cast their ballots for Seltzer.

The final local race to be decided is that for the Republican nomination of commissioner of Precinct 4. The candidate we had endorsed lost in the primary election. Now our endorsement goes to Bruce Blake, a Midland landman and management consultant who is also qualified by his education and work experience to capably represent the people of Midland County.

Blake said he will find innovative ways to not raise taxes, which is of primary importance to this county's voters in this age of the escalating cost of government. We encourage voters to cast their ballots for Blake.

Republican Party

Attorney General — Patricia "Pat" Lykos.

Democratic Party

U.S. Senator — Richard Fisher.

Judge, Court of Criminal Appeals, Place 2 — Betty Marshall.

Judge, 8th Court of Appeals, Place 2 — Ann McClure.

Clinton ties to Tyson hold national interest

On Wednesday, (March 31) we took note of the fact that the effort to escalate the involvement of President and Mrs. Clinton in the Whitewater affair into a major scandal has been out of all proportion to what is currently known about the failed Arkansas land-development scheme. . . .

But even though we object strenuously to the sort of speculative coverage of the Whitewater matter that leads to such journalistic excesses, that does not mean that we do not have serious concerns about President Clinton's ties to Tyson (Foods) — especially when those ties become instruments to determine federal policy. . . . Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy ordered personnel in his department to stop working on a zero-tolerance fecal matter policy for poultry processors — including all 66 plants operated by Tyson.

This selective enforcement of meat inspection standards can only be seen as an extension of the look-the-other-way policy that Mr. Clinton pursued during his years as governor of Arkansas, when Tyson and other poultry processors in Arkansas were allowed to foul the state's rivers with enormous loads of chicken excrement, and Mr. Clinton's campaigns were rewarded with handsome contributions from Tyson.

Understanding violence can help expand safety net

Because "Ozzie and Harriet" and "Leave it to Beaver" remain imprinted on our culture as the family norm, the reality and tragedy of family violence is often hidden and denied.

Not only is it repudiated by the actual victims and the perpetrators of family violence, it is far too often denied by the legal system. The parents of Michelle Gomez — who was killed by her husband March 25 before he turned the gun on himself — blamed a failed legal safety net for the tragedy. Two little girls, a 4-year-old and a 2-year-old, are now orphans because of the tragedy. . . .

Most people want to think of families as comfortable, safe harbors. For too many, they are not. With more understanding about family violence and better communication methods, the legal safety net will not permit as many people to fall through.

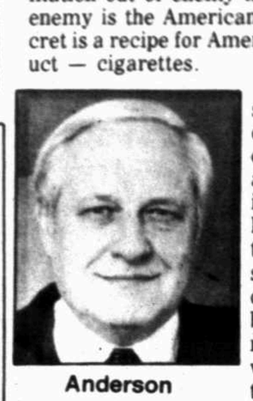
Cigarette ingredients remain top secret

WASHINGTON — Public health officials and members of Congress have accomplished something that the CIA seems unable to handle: Keeping secret information out of enemy hands. In this case, the enemy is the American consumer, and the secret is a recipe for America's most deadly product — cigarettes.



Anderson

The cloak-and-dagger secrecy surrounding the official list of ingredients in cigarettes rivals anything the CIA has in its vaults. The 700-item list is not available to the public, and has been seen by only a handful of people outside the tobacco industry. If a member of Congress wants access to the three-ring black binder containing the list, the security precautions can take months to wade through. To release it publicly would constitute a crime, and likely land the perpetrator in prison. Even more incredible, this conspiracy of silence is the direct result of a law designed to increase consumer awareness.

"This is all a big camouflage by an industry that loves to say it's for free choice, and then works its head off to try to keep the public from getting information that would allow it to make a more informed choice," says Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., a leader in the escalating congressional war against tobacco. "I think the arguments in this law about trade secrets is bogus." Wyden is introducing legislation that would make the contents of the list public information.

The origins of the list stem from a decade-old law — the Comprehensive Smoking Education Act of 1984 — that was written in part to "provide a new strategy for making Americans more aware of any adverse health effects of smoking." As part of the law, many members of Congress wanted to compel the cigarette companies to make their ingredients public — the way makers of food products have been required to do for years.

The cigarette companies balked at making this information available to the general public, however, so a deal was struck: The six largest cigarette manufacturers would submit a list of their ingredients each year to the Washington, D.C., law firm of Covington and Burling, which represents the tobacco industry. The firm would then combine the six lists into one "master list" which would be made available to the Office of Smoking and Health, a division of the Department of Health and Human Services. Copies would also be made available to other federal public health agencies, and by request to members of Congress who have jurisdiction over tobacco-related issues.

GEORGE WILL

Outsider makes bid for GOP nomination

WASHINGTON — Lamar Alexander was a two-term governor of Tennessee and U.S. secretary of education, but more to the point he was president of a university (the University of Tennessee). Having dealt with faculty parking and football boosters, the U.S. presidency hardly seems daunting, so he probably will seek the Republican nomination for that office, sounding an anti-Washington theme with which Americans usually agree: "Leadership cannot come from Washington because solutions are not in Washington."

Will

Because senators work where television cameras are concentrated — in the capital, in the Capitol — their prominence lends them an aura of presidential plausibility. But the last two serving members of the national legislature to win presidential nominations — McGovern and Goldwater — carried a combined total of just seven states. Kennedy, Harding and Garfield are the only presidents elected while serving in Congress.

Americans may think Congress is no place to prepare for the presidency, perhaps because the capital's political culture is unwholesome. Another reason may be that legislators specialize in coalition-building and difference-splitting, whereas presidents should be prepared to take polarizing decisions. Governors take them. Alexander did, overcoming the public education lobby's resistance to reforms, including pay differential based on teachers' merits.

"I assume," says Alexander dryly, "the Republican Party was voted out of office for a reason." The reason, he thinks, was that the party "could not say what the promise of American life is in the 90s." To have his say about that he has organized a continuing series of cable and satellite Republican "meetings," featuring Republican luminaries (including his rivals for the presidential nomination) and watched by the party faithful at about 2,500 places, from Big Dog's Sports Bar and Grill in Las Vegas to the house with a satellite dish in western Nebraska where four women gather. This is, he knows, preaching to the choir, but, he says, "the choir needs practice."

Alexander dismisses Clinton's "credit card security blanket" view of America's future and sounds a theme he acquired from Howard Baker, for whom he worked long ago, the theme of "the citizen legislator." Congress, he says, should convene in January, pass the authorization bills, and be back home by the beginning of the baseball season. It should reconvene after Labor Day, pass the appropriation bills, and adjourn "by Thanksgiving, maybe Halloween."

Congressional salaries should be cut "at least in half" and all the so-called ethics rules, except those requiring full disclosure of income, should be abolished, so legislators could hold jobs and lead normal lives.

The 1996 primary season will be so compressed that there will be virtually a national primary in March. About 70 percent of the Republican delegates — and probably the nominee — will be chosen by the third week of that month. This may mean a huge advantage for the well-heeled, such as, Bob Dole. However, it is conceivable that a fresh face making a strong early showing could be propelled through March by the "slingshot effect" of free media — remember Gary Hart's giddy weeks after beating Walter Mondale in New Hampshire in 1984.

Alexander believes that if he runs he will be able to supplement any slingshot effect with hefty spending. His first electoral challenge may be to finish second to Dole in Iowa, but his immediate challenge is to start finding the $22 million to $25 million that he thinks a candidate will need to have raised before armageddon — California's winner-take-all primary, currently set for March 26.

Alexander believes a candidate will need $10 million in the bank by the end of 1995. "I'm going to be prepared to do that. I've had some practice." He has raised $4 million for his television operation and expects to pick up the pace.

Alexander, who is 53, says he is getting "intellectually, physically and financially prepared," adding, "It's like a country music singer who's been slogging out there for 25 years and is suddenly discovered — here comes the spotlight." Spoken like a man who lives in Nashville but might want a change of scene.

RUSSELL BAKER

Kuralt vanishes like other parts of America

Charles Kuralt is gone.

What is going to happen to America? The barber pole is vanishing, and Charles Kuralt is gone.

Russell Baker

America is vanishing bit by bit. The barber pole is vanishing, the last telephone booths are even now headed down the bay aboard garbage scows, the very fate mehitabel envisioned for herself, and now mehitabel herself is vanishing from the American memory. And Charles Kuralt is gone.

Going, going, so much of America is going, like Charles Kuralt.

The Princess telephone is headed for the Smithsonian. Gone are The Saturday Evening Post, Collier's, Doc Savage, The Shadow. America, you are slipping away fast. So fast. And now Charles Kuralt is gone.

What has happened to the baseball crowds of men, vast crowds of men wearing suits and neckties and hats? Gone. Gone with the Brooklyn Dodgers and New York Giants. Charles Kuralt is not so gone as those crowds of suited, necktied men watching baseball in snap-brim fedoras are gone, but he is gone nonetheless. Yes, Charles Kuralt is gone.

Gone is Guy Lombardo playing the New Year in at the ballroom of the Roosevelt Hotel. Since his death New Year's Eve has turned its back on America, leaving millions no way to celebrate on that famous midnight except to watch an electrical display on a building in Times Square. Guy Lombardo has gone and taken New Year's Eve with him. Thus America vanishes bit by bit.

And now Charles Kuralt . . . gone.

Chesterfields, which satisfied, and Camels, for which men once would walk a mile, and Lucky Strikes, which sent Lucky Strike green to war — all are going, if not gone. Worse, the great black-and-white movies in which everybody smoked and smoked until the action was obscured behind curtains of smoke — gone are those movies that once made America what it was.

Charles Kuralt, who must have loved those movies because they were so vital to the American character, is gone as they are gone. Fortunately Charles Kuralt, unlike those movies, can never be colorized by Ted Turner.

How quickly, how finally it all goes. The indestructible Royal manual desk-model typewriter, gone. Gone with the Underwood. Gone with the straight-up telephone with the earpiece you lifted off the hook, bringing on the Operator, to whom you said, "Operator, get me Central," or — if you were covering the police beat — "Hiya, sweetheart, give me the city desk."

The city desk is gone, alas, crushed under the great sprawling mass of the metropolitan desk. And now, gone too is Charles Kuralt.

Brushless shaving cream in a jar, one of the great American inventions that should survive forever, can no longer be found. One thousand miles of American highway can you drive without once sighting a Burma-Shave roadside verse like

Pity all
The mighty Caesars
They pulled
Each whisker out
Burma-Shave.

What will become of a nation that has quit providing motorists with roadside poetry, and forgotten mehitabel, and disposed of the Operator whom you could call "Sweetheart" without risking trial for sexual harassment?

What hope is there for a nation that let Charles Kuralt go — for he is gone, all right — yes, gone is Charles Kuralt, whose language art was such that he would have known whether it is correct to end this absurd sentence with a question mark, though so great that he would never have written it in the first place?

As with so much of vanishing America, we took it for granted that Charles Kuralt would always be with us, so failed to cherish him sufficiently, just as we failed to cherish mehitabel, and brushless shaving cream in a jar, and the movie stars who smoked, and the barber pole whose beauty had to be revealed to us by Edward Hopper, all of which now belong to America the Gone.

In the same way we failed to treasure the gone Edward R. Murrow, the great TV news man who showed us how fine TV news could be until TV discovered that it could also be a troublesome, no-profit use of valuable entertainment time. Murrow would have approved of Charles Kuralt, who is now gone, alas.

Blake seeks solutions to community issues

We would like to commend Bruce Blake on his honest campaign for county commissioner, Precinct 4. Bruce is a gentleman who truly cares about the issues in our community and creatively and responsibly seeks solutions to those problems.

Bruce Blake is a man who can get things done. He is primarily responsible for the improvement of playground equipment and drainage of Cowden Park. He has volunteered countless hours with the Republican Party, attending numerous state conventions as a delegate since 1978. He is active in his church and children's extracurricular activities.

Bruce Blake is a family man and a businessman. He represents traditional family values. He is a fiscal conservative who will hold the line on spending and taxes to best represent all the residents of Midland County.

We heartily support Bruce Blake for county commissioner, Precinct 4.

Legal training is important for county judge position

When you select someone for a job, shouldn't you take into account their qualifications to perform the duties required by the position? I know that in the oilfields, a landman isn't hired to go out to a drilling rig to work samples and, conversely, a geologist isn't sent to the courthouse to check records.

I do not personally know either of the two county judge candidates in the GOP runoff. I have looked at their qualifications, and it is readily apparent that only one has the necessary education and experience to competently handle the job and be a "county judge."

It has always been important to have a person with legal training in that position when dealing with county business. I cannot see any need to dilute the job to "county administrator" and place an unnecessary burden on other judges or have to go to the trouble and expense to create an additional court.

I hope that Midlanders will consider the importance of this position and, in view of her qualifications, vote for Teresa Clingman.

Norwood will clean up county government

I read with great interest Winfree Brown's mudslinging letter attacking Jeff Norwood. Brown tries to fool us into thinking he is doing the right thing for Midland taxpayers by trashing a terrific candidate like Jeff.

I wonder if Brown was also protecting the taxpayers when he voted himself a pay raise and higher property taxes for everyone else. This is also the same Winfree Brown who voted to increase county retirement benefits shortly before he announced his own retirement.

Jeff Norwood is committed to cleaning up the mess made of our county government while Teresa Clingman will practice politics as usual and sweep mismanagement under the rug.

I'm ready for real change in county government, and I will again vote for Jeff Norwood as our next county judge.

Charles W. Brown
Midland

Norwood has clear plan for efficient government

Teresa Clingman must think Midland voters are pretty stupid if she thinks we are going to buy off on her negative campaign against Jeff Norwood. She is far behind in the race, evidenced by her lackluster showing in the primary. On March 8, two out of three voters rejected Clingman and her divisive campaign because the vast majority of people want change in the courthouse.

Jeff Norwood has outlined a positive agenda for Midland County with a clear plan to make our government more efficient and less costly for taxpayers. He is the only candidate with proven management experience. Jeff Norwood is a native Midlander with deep roots in the community. He is without question the best qualified candidate for county judge.

Experience makes Moore most qualified candidate

In an obviously transparent attempt to divert the voters' attention from his record as county judge, "Bro" Seltzer has declared qualifications to be the only issue in the race for County Court at Law No. 2 judge. As a taxpayer and Marvin Moore supporter, I fully agree.

Moore's years of experience trying cases in the court in which he now seeks judgeship makes him the most qualified candidate for that position. As a prosecutor for Midland County, Marvin Moore has experience in over 4,000 prosecutions, represented Midland County in all child-welfare cases, assisted in defending Midland County against civil suits, and proven himself to be a man of character and integrity.

As Midland County taxpayers, we have afforded Marvin Moore the opportunity to gain a wealth of experience in our county courts at law. On April 12 we all have the opportunity to ensure that our values as a community are reflected by our judge of County Court at Law No. 2 by voting for Marvin Moore.

Steve Miller

Our county judge should understand judicial system

In a campaign for public office and the ensuing mud slinging that inevitably accompanies it, it is a sad fact that we often are drawn away from the truly important issues at hand.

In this case, I am referring to the Clingman/Norwood campaign for Midland County judge. How many of us are really aware of the types of decisions that are made in this court? How many of us have considered the long-term impact of these decisions?

In the capacity of county judge, a significant responsibility is helping the two county court at law judges with cases pending in the county courts, which include criminal misdemeanor cases, civil jury and non-jury cases, probate of wills, administrator of estates, guardianships, commitments of the mentally ill and substance abusers, juvenile cases and the like — family issues.

The issue here is: Who is qualified to make decisions that impact the future of Midland's families? People who come before this court are dogged by complex problems that can only be decided by individuals with maturity and sensitivity — someone who has made a commitment to Midland and understands the values we hold dear.

Midland families — your family and mine — deserve the best in an elected official. We deserve a county judge whose deliberation is tempered by maturity, experience and a caring attitude. Someone who is here to stay and who understands the judicial system. What we don't need is an individual who might make purely expedient decisions fueled by political ambition — whose life experiences can't begin to prepare him for the tasks ahead.

I am casting my vote for Teresa Clingman — the only qualified candidate.

Midland should be proud Norwood returned to serve

I find rather disingenuous the charge by Jeff Norwood's opponent in the Republican race for Midland County judge that he is not qualified to run as a candidate because he is neither a property taxpayer or a longtime resident of the city. I assume that his opponent would disqualify any and all who would rent their places of residence as well as those who might be living with parents or others. As far as I know the payment of property taxes is not a requirement for political office.

As for not being a longtime resident, unless I'm mistaken, Jeff Norwood grew up in Midland, went to school in Midland and following graduation from college lived in Midland until he got involved in the state's political system. He has lately been serving to help conduct this state's business in Austin as a staff member with the Railroad Commission. His parents have lived in Midland for 40 years. He is a Midland native, and we should be proud to have him return to serve his community. I don't believe the time has yet arrived when anyone who is fortunate enough to be able to serve their state in Austin should be denied the opportunity to run for a local office.

Blake states opponents statement out of context

At the recent Republican County Convention, which I attended, each candidate in the April 12 runoff was given the opportunity to address the convention. The runoff candidates for county commissioner, Precinct 4, are James Brezina and Bruce Blake.

During Blake's speech, he stated that his opponent would be in favor of increasing county taxes. This statement was taken "out of context" from a speech made by Brezina before a local group.

James Brezina has stated from the beginning of the campaign that he is for fiscal responsibility in government, which means the most efficient use of every tax dollar. He also believes that county government must be frugal, because its revenue is based upon taxes of hard-working property owners.

I thought that the comment made at the convention was a rather cheap shot, but that's politics. To each his own.

Clingman's opinions on issues are inconsistent

In the time that I have personally known Jeff Norwood, I have found him to be a very kind, intelligent and honest young man.

I feel that Jeff has run an honest campaign and is consistent with his opinions on the issues — unlike his opponent Teresa Clingman.

I was disappointed to read Clingman's remarks regarding term limits — saying in her press conference on April 4 that she had not expressed an opinion when she opposed term limits during a radio interview on March 7.

We need a Midland County Judge with integrity, and that is why I am supporting Jeff Norwood.

I hope the voters of Midland, (including the Midland County Republican Women), will join me in voting for Jeff Norwood for county judge on Tuesday, April 12.

People usually fit into 3 political categories

More than 40 years of observation of the political processes and the Texas electorate now leads this writer to believe that based on campaign pronouncements and dialogue, people generally can be divided into just three categories.

One of these is made up of individuals who are ready, and even trying to find themselves insulted. They are prone to turn their backs on others who honestly disagree with them. They ignore any possible validity in opposing arguments. Many of these furiously inject their moral positions into the political process. And they forgive no person who dares to question the sanctimony of their personal moral convictions.

A second group of political activists have no real moral convictions. They are hungry for political influence and power and are beyond being insulted by any charge from any adversary, at least a political one. They have not only disciplined themselves not to react to an insult but, without apparent appeal to divine direction, have anointed themselves political mentors to us ordinary hard-working taxpayers (whom they will forever believe naive). The immediate reward for this second group is the ability to have the railroad commissioner, the governor, or the judge on the other end of the line, first telephone call! In most such cases, other more substantive rewards will follow.

The third group of citizens is a probable majority but not necessarily so at the polls. Precisely because they are not driven by either egocentric desires or delusions of moral compulsion, these good citizens often tend to more personal interests than exercising their privilege to vote! But, as individuals, this third group is most aptly characterized as people of honesty and common sense. They seek neither favor from the politicians nor admonitions from the moralists. They do not lie, even in political campaigns, and they will not tolerate being lied about (and certainly not called liars) by campaigners any more than they would by their neighbors. Traditional Texans of all ethnic groups are capable of being insulted, but not usually by another challenging their political views. They are capable of being insulted, though, by some of the new, single issue, political activists attempting to impose their moral convictions on the political conventions and the election process, and in so doing impugning the purpose or integrity of all those who should dissent.

This week in Midland we will watch an improbable, even an unholy, alliance of the first two groups of people described above go to the polls and vote for Jeff Norwood, a young ambitious, deceptive and unqualified candidate for county judge, while the steadfast and conscientious citizens of the intermediate group will vote for Teresa Clingman, an honest, experienced and entirely qualified candidate for judge of Midland County.

Evetts Haley Jr.

Important issues are focus of Norwood campaign

I am appalled by Teresa Clingman's negative campaign. She finished far behind in the March primary, and now she is attacking Jeff Norwood in a last ditch effort to prop up her failing campaign. Teresa is absolutely reckless with the truth and will tell any lie if she thinks it will help her campaign.

Jeff Norwood is an outstanding person who has run a positive campaign. He has focused on the issues important to Midland County voters. Jeff will stand up for the taxpayers and stop the out-of-control property taxes that Clingman's courthouse crowd wants to increase. He is a fiscal conservative and has proven management experience in a large organization. Jeff is qualified to do the whole job of county judge and do it well.

That's why he had such a strong lead in the primary, and that's why he will win again on April 12.

Lying seems to be easy for some politicians

In the 1992 elections, we heard Lena Guerrero say "I remember well my own commencement." We all know the rest of the story.

Now that another election year is upon us, we hear Teresa Clingman say she had "never expressed an opinion on term limits."

Beg your pardon, Teresa. Three weeks earlier you told listeners of KJBC radio that term limits "does a disservice to their (elected officials') constituency to limit them to the office as far as how long they can be there."

That's a direct quote. It's too bad lying comes so easy for some politicians . . . but considering the negative campaign she's run, I'm really not surprised.

Judgeship needs person who will be unbiased

The very important position of County Court at Law No. 2 judgeship is up for election. This job requires a great deal of 1) respect, 2) honesty, 3) integrity, 4) knowledge, 5) the presence of a "non-biased" person to make the right decision in critical matters. We've all heard about how experience is the key issue here. Well, we all as taxpayers and voters have been "privvy" for three-plus years as our present county judge has indeed let biased opinions and deep personal animosities get in the way of doing a job.

Do we want to give this job to a person who has clearly shown that he cannot be unbiased or rely on him that personal feelings won't again get in the way of getting the job done?

Please vote for Marvin Moore, a much needed and respected individual.

Norwood has government management experience

Jeff Norwood is the best candidate in the race for county judge. He is a native Midlander and has an impressive background of management experience in business and government. Jeff has outlined a positive agenda for Midland County and will fight against higher property taxes and for more efficiency in county government.

Jeff Norwood is the only conservative candidate in the race for county judge. He will be an outstanding leader for our community, and I am proud to strongly support his campaign.

IRS comes through with winning tax tip

Today I am pleased to present the results of the Amateur Tax Tips contest, in which I asked readers to submit their tax-preparation tips on postal cards and send them in for a chance to win a valuable used pair of men's briefs signed by humor writer Roy Blount Jr. Needless to say, this prize stirred up plenty of excitement. Many of the entries mentioned it by name ("DO NOT SEND ME THE UNDERWEAR").

Barry

I pored over the postcards for hours, and I have concluded, via a complex and sophisticated statistical analysis, that a lot of them feature photographs of semi-naked women. These are postcards from seaside resort areas. Most of them show women standing on a beach, wearing swimsuits no larger than Sweet 'n Low packets and smiling brightly to express the theme: "Greetings From Ocean Squid Isle! Here Are Our Bosoms!" Of course if you actually GO to a beach resort, this is not what you will generally see. What you will generally see is hairy-backed men the size of Madison, Wis. I think this represents postcard fraud, and I think the authorities should look into it.

But getting back to the contest: In poring over the postcards, I also briefly glanced at the sides that had writing on them, and I found some excellent tax tips that you will definitely want to try out this year if you have not already done your taxes and have no more sense than a musk melon. So get a pencil and paper ready, because here come the:

RUNNER-UP AMATEUR TAX TIPS

"The IRS encourages taxpayers to round off numbers. For example, my income is $34,500, so I round this off to $30,000." (John Soennichsen-Cheney)

"Don't report any income from Jeff Gillooly." (Steve Peters)

"You will never get audited if you write possibly insane statements all over the margins of your tax return like, 'The C.I.A. is monitoring my shoes and YOU KNOW IT!!!'" (John Averill)

"I list a different occupation each year that accurately reflects the theme in my life for the year. Real occupations that I've listed include 'wage slave,' 'alchemist' and 'saboteur.'" (M. Dennis Moore)

"If you are dead as of midnight, April 15, you may request an extension to file." (George Ellerman Jr.)

"Use that standard $20,000 deduction for church donations. WHAT TO SAY IF AUDITED: 'Look, did you see that Popemobile? Well I PAID FOR IT.'" (Darrell VanDyke)

"When you file electronically, you can send in your payment by repeatedly running a dollar bill through your fax machine." (Harold Tapper)

"DO NOT CHEAT ON YOUR TAX RETURNS. I cheated last year and was immediately given a high-ranking congressional office. It really scared me." (Phil Harvey)

"MARRY YOUR CAR. Assuming your car produces no income and you file jointly, you can save up to 50 percent of your tax bill. The tricky part is finding the right minister. Before he would perform the ceremony, my minister asked me, 'Son, did you get your car in trouble? Because I won't do weddings like that.'" (Jon Kelly)

"Being poor has always worked for me." (S. Dailey)

I think we can agree that these are all excellent tax tips, and in an ordinary year, any one of them would be good enough to win used underwear signed by Roy Blount Jr. But this is not an ordinary year. This is a year when a truly wondrous Amateur Tax Tip has been suggested BY THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE ITSELF.

Here's what happened: In 1992, the IRS got audited, for the first time ever, by the General Accounting Office. The results were just released, and guess what, taxpayers? It turns out that the IRS has been doing a TERRIBLE job of record-keeping. The Associated Press states: "The IRS system for administering its own money was so bad that auditors were unable even to review 64 percent of the IRS's $6.7 billion budget in 1992." In auditing the IRS's cash accounts, the GAO also found "unresolved differences of $63 million."

Now get this. In response, IRS Chief Financial Officer Morgan Kinghorn explained that — I am not making these quotes up — the IRS had been using an "old system" of accounting that "just was simply not auditable and not designed to be auditable." But now, he said, the IRS has a new system.

"My guess," Kinghorn said, "is we'll have a clean opinion next year."

Isn't that MARVELOUS, taxpayers? Doesn't that just make you want to hurl your tax forms and your cardboard box full of 12,837 unintelligible tax-related pieces of paper into the air with joy? Finally, we have an Official IRS Excuse! From now on, if you have ANY problem with the IRS, and the amount in question is $63 million or less, simply state that your accounting system was "not designed to be auditable," but that you have a new system, and that your "guess" is that everything will be OK next year. I'm sure this will be FINE with the IRS.

So that is our winning tax tip, and I am going to launder the grand prize and mail it to Mr. Kinghorn. I'm sure he'll accept it with grace and good humor. Please bring me food in prison. Also bring some for Roy Blount Jr.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On April 10, 1912, the luxury liner Titanic set sail from Southampton, England, on its ill-fated maiden voyage. (On the night of April 14, the ship struck an iceberg in the North Atlantic and sank almost three hours later. About 1,500 people perished in the disaster.)

On this date:

In 1847, American newspaperman Joseph Pulitzer was born in Mako, Hungary.

In 1866, the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was incorporated.

In 1880, Frances Perkins, the first woman to serve in a president's Cabinet as Franklin D. Roosevelt's secretary of labor, was born in Boston.

In 1925, "The Great Gatsby," by F. Scott Fitzgerald, was first published by Scribner's of New York.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The shorter the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis.
- We do not publish 'open' letters or copies of letters sent to others.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Report: Director fails to disclose conviction

AUSTIN (AP) — The program director at a drug treatment facility failed to disclose on his 1991 application to become a counselor that he had been convicted of theft, bankruptcy fraud and insurance fraud, a newspaper reported.

Ron Whittington faces possible disciplinary action for failing to disclose his convictions and for allegedly using Austin Rehabilitation Center funds for his own benefit, the Austin American-Statesman reported Saturday.

This is considered a lopsided score in sports. It is also considered extremely one sided when it comes to legal experience. This is the difference between the two candidates for Judge of Midland County Court at Law #2.

The varied legal background of Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer includes experience as a U.S. Air Force attorney, felony prosecutor, private practitioner with concentration in oil & gas, wills, trusts, contracts and domestic relations, and for the past three years, Midland County Judge. Judge Seltzer has also represented criminal defendants in both misdemeanor and felony cases. 21 YEARS of solid and diverse legal experience.

On the other hand, his opponent's entire professional career consists of 6 years as an assistant county attorney, prosecuting misdemeanors and juvenile cases.

It helps to know the score when it's time to decide who is best qualified.

Chorale, vocalists to perform musical selections

By H.A. Tuck

For only $3 you can receive a heaping helping of timeless musical treats in "An Evening With Gilbert & Sullivan," plus a cup of English tea.

Tuck

That's the menu for a delightful evening on Saturday when the Midland College Chorale and several community vocalists perform selections from such all-time favorites as "HMS Pinafore", "The Mikado" and "Pirates of Penzance". It begins at 8 p.m. in the Allison Auditorium in the Allison Fine Arts Building.

Proceeds go toward the college's music scholarships fund. Students will be admitted free. Tea will be served during the program's intermission. Rob Hunt conducts the MC Chorale and might even join in brewing the tea.

A full, catered dinner, along with an entertaining speaker and generous applause, await those who attend the 20th annual Midland College Creative Writing Contest Awards program on Friday evening in the Roadrunner Room, Student Center.

The cost is just $5 a person for the meal, which will be catered by London House Restaurant.

For those who wish to attend the awards ceremony, that begins about 7:45 p.m. in the same locale, but without charge.

Dinner reservations should be made with a member of the English instructional faculty or by calling 685-4624 not later than 5 p.m. Wednesday.

Cash awards are in store for the first, second, and third place winners in the categories of short story, essay, and poetry. Pamela Howell is serving as contest coordinator.

Those tough Chaparral golfers are in Round Rock Monday and Tuesday for the Texas State Junior College Tournament, which the Chaparrals have won previously.

If you'd like to watch the MC golf team in action without having to drive several hundred miles, they'll be hosting their own invitational on Monday and Tuesday, April 18-19.

The fame of the Chaparrals is quite widespread. A family from London, England, visited the campus last week to determine what their 15-year-old son would need to do in order to come play for the Chaps in a few years. The quick answer was for the young man to become a scratch golfer!

For basketball enthusiasts, yesterday's triple-header at Chaparral Center was a unique experience. Two women's games and a men's game provided fast-paced action by extremely talented players, all sophomores who will be showing their talents at various NCAA and NAIA colleges and universities next fall.

Coaches and talent scouts from all over the country were on hand to check out the talent to fill possible holes in their rosters for the fall schedule.

For local fans, the two women's games also displayed the skill levels that will be shown on a regular basis next fall when the first-ever Midland College women's team begins playing.

Special thanks for the triple-header goes to Delnor Poss, who extended the invitation on behalf of MC to play the games here; to Mike Stevens, Chaparral Center director, who handled most of the details; and to Bill Williams Tire Center, which was the primary sponsor of the event. Thanks also to the players and coaches who combined to bring together 60 players for three exciting games.

If you are driving along Loop 250 between Garfield and North Big Spring streets from 3-5 p.m. Friday, give a friendly wave to the folks from MC who will be doing their spring highway clean-up project. The two-mile stretch between those two streets is adopted by the college, whose faculty, staff, and administrators gather twice yearly for the clean-up chore.

They make it a bit more interesting by having contests such as "most valuable treasure" or "most unique item" found during the clean-up.

If you ever participate in one of these clean-ups, it almost guarantees you'll be more careful about keeping litter in your vehicle and not tossing it out the window as you drive.

Russell Goodyear recently attended the annual convention of the Texas State Historical Association in Austin, which included sessions on Texas literature and the legendary folklorist J. Frank Dobie. He also attended the annual Cowboy Poetry Gathering in Alpine last month where cowboys from Montana to Texas read poems and told tales about life on the range.

Pamela Howell has received word that her review on Quanah Parker is scheduled for publication in the October, 1994, issue of American Studies of Texas.

If you'd like to be a blood donor, but haven't found it convenient, you can drop by the MC campus on Wednesday, April 13, from 8 a.m.-1 p.m. The Permian Basin Blood Bank folks will be in the Small Game Room in the Student Center to draw your blood in exchange for a cookie and glass of orange juice.

Psi Beta, the national honor society for psychology in two-year colleges, was approved for membership in the Association of College Honor Societies during the recent 69th meeting of the association. It is the first two-year college honor society to be accepted for admission to the ACHS.

HEREFORD (AP) — After months of flirtin' and courtin,' Hereford's most famous Cowgirl still seems stumped by her proposals.

Four cities — Abilene, Granbury, Fort Worth and Dodge City, Kan. — remain in the running to win the hand of the National Cowgirl Hall of Fame & Western Heritage Center.

Museum officials know their collection must leave Hereford to expand and attract more tourists. But they can't decide where it should go.

"We're trying to find a community where the Hall of Fame would be a complete fit," said executive director Margaret Formby. "We don't want just real estate — we want to be integrated, promoted, continue to have tender-loving care."

The Hall of Fame opened in 1975 in the basement of the Deaf Smith County Library. Six years later, it took over a 10-room house off a gravel road that winds around a Hereford neighborhood.

And that house got cramped as 121 women were inducted into the Hall of Fame and museum workers documented the contributions of 600 others.

Ms. Formby said there's not nearly adequate space to show off the growing assortment of spurs, saddles, sequined hats, muddy boots and rifles that pay tribute to pioneering women of the American West.

Photos and paintings — along with diaries and research books — capture glimpses of broncobusters, rodeo clowns, postmistresses, auctioneers and suffragettes.

Memorabilia is tucked inside display cases and eucalyptus-scented hallways to honor the likes of novelist Willa Cather, sharpshooter Annie Oakley, artist Georgia O'Keeffe and exploring guide Sacajawea.

Ms. Formby says women's stamp on the Old West was largely ignored until about 25 years ago, even though women "brought the culture, opened the hospitals and orphanages, kept the histories."

But this farm- and cattle-rooted city hasn't lured consistent crowds to the museum: Only about 2,000 visitors stop by each year.

"We owe it to the honorees, that it needs to be in an area where, quite frankly, there would be more traffic," Hereford Mayor Bob Josserand said.

So officials last October announced they were seeking a new city as home for the Hall of Fame. Ten bids were cut to four in February.

Ms. Formby said she hopes the museum board can choose one this month.

Fort Worth offers about 1.3 million tourists annually to its stockyards, where the Hall of Fame would inherit a former mulebarn.

Petroleum short course to be held at Texas Tech

Staff Report

The 41st annual Southwestern Petroleum Short Course is scheduled for April 18-21, at the Petroleum Engineering building at Texas Tech University in Lubbock.

The program, which is sponsored by the Petroleum Industry of West Texas in cooperation with the Texas Tech Petroleum Engineering department, will feature two separate schools.

The Artificial Lift School will be held Monday and Tuesday, April 18-19 and will be taught by John Patterson, Jim Curfew and Mike Bucaram with Arco Oil & Gas Co. The emphasis of this course will be on minimizing failures in rod-pumped wells.

At the same time, an Environmental School will be taught by Dave Blazer, Vice Newsom and Jerry Adams with Amoco Production Co. The focus will be on understanding what actions are required to meet the goal of being an environmentally sound operating company and what is required to meet the regulatory requirements surrounding these operations.

Forty papers are scheduled for presentation on April 20-21. Major topics include artificial lift, stimulation, production handling, reservoir operations, well completions and general interest. Some of the notable authors and industry experts presenting papers include S.G. Gibbs and K.N. Nolen of Nabla Corp., J.F. Lea of Amoco Production Research, J.N. McCoy, Echometer Co., John Ely of Ely and Associates, S.A. Holditch of Holditch and Associates, T. Scott Hickman, Hickman and Associates, Marion Arnold and Scott Frailey, Texas Tech, and Leonard F. Koederitz, University of Missouri at Rolla.

Fees are $210 for the Artificial Lift or Environmental School, including the April 20-21 conference, $110 for the conference only and $90 for one-day conference attendance.

For more information, call Larry Gates with Anadarko Petroleum Corp. at 682-1666 or Dean Prather with Halliburton at 682-4305.

Fort Worth zoo gets Komodo dragon

But the animal, a Komodo dragon, won't go on public displace until money is available to build it a home, officials say.

The long-necked, greenish-brown animal is approximately 3 feet long, weighs about 10 pounds and has strong claws, sharp teeth and a powerful tail. Adult specimens have been known to reach 10 feet and 300 pounds.

"When people first laid eyes on this huge lizard, to them it was a dragon" because of medieval mythology, said Rick Hudson, assistant herpetology curator at the zoo.

The creature is the first of its kind in Texas and one of about 10 in the country. It feasts upon almost anything it can catch and overpower including deer, goats, birds, fish and even its young.

Approximately 20 humans have been reported killed by Komodos in the past two decades.

OSU wants pigskin

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Ohio State agreed to play in the Pigskin Classic against Fresno State on Aug. 29 in the second game of the 1994 college football season.

"I think it's a nice catch," Don Andersen, executive director of the Orange County Sports Association, said Saturday. "It makes it doubly pleasing to have a Big 10 team. I don't think we've had it any better than Ohio State as far as tradition and winning goes."

Ohio State (10-1-1) tied Wisconsin for the Big 10 championship, but the Badgers won the conference tiebreaker and played in the Rose Bowl, beating UCLA.

Angel bats erupt again

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Once Wichita starter Jose Martinez left the game after five strong innings, the Midland Angels made Angels Stadium look like the lighted carnival merry-go-round that was turning in the adjacent lot.

The Angels scored eight runs in their last three at-bats for a come-from-behind 9-6 win over the Wranglers to open the season with two consecutive victories.

Martinez was pulled by Wichita manager Keith Champion after five innings with a 3-1 lead. Martinez had given up only three hits and had six strikeouts on just 67 pitches, but Champion apparently has his starters on a pitch count. The Wrangler bullpen was murdered as Champion had to parade four relievers before lambs that suddenly turned gorillas.

About the only mistake Martinez made was a solo homer to Luis Raven in the fourth inning. The other two hits he gave up were bloopers by Midland's Chris Smith and J.D. Ramirez just over the Wichita infield.

Meanwhile, Midland starter Mark Ratekin was hanging on for things to happen in his favor. He had one bad inning in the second when former Abilene Cooper star Scotty Pugh and Scott Bream connected for solo homers before Keith Thomas added another run with an RBI single. Until Martinez left, it looked like Ratekin might take a loss even with a good outing.

"I knew it was just a matter of time before we scored some runs," Ratekin said. "I have confidence in this team. I had the one bad inning when I got away from my two-seam fastball. I knew I could still win if I just held them where they were."

Lehman masters No. 16 for lead

AP Sports Writer

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Tom Lehman, a 35-year-old pro who quit the tour a decade ago after three terrible years, leads the Masters by one stroke going into the final round, shooting a 3-under-par 69 Saturday.

Lehman punctuated his brilliant round, the lowest of the day over the tough Augusta National course, with a 50-foot birdie putt on the treacherous par-3 16th hole.

"That was the luckiest putt I've ever made in my life," Lehman said.

Lehman, who has never won on the tour, was at 7-under-par 209 going into Sunday's final round after bogeying the 18th hole when he hit a greenside bunker and exploded beautifully only to miss a slick, downhill 5-foot par putt.

The only other player to break 70 in the third round was Jose Maria Olazabal of Spain, who shot 69 and is at 6-under 210, one stroke back.

Tom Kite was alone in fourth place at 212 after shooting 71. Ian Baker-Finch of Australia and Jim McGovern were at 213, four strokes behind.

Tom Watson was at 214.

Greg Norman all but played himself out of contention, shooting a 75 and finishing at 1-under-par 215, six strokes behind Lehman, tied with Ernie Els, Raymond Floyd and Loren Roberts.

Lehman, who has three sixth-place finishes this year and is 27th on the money list, missed the cut at The Players Championship two weeks ago, where Norman shot 24 under par.

Bulldogs place 4 on squad

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

The Midland High boys soccer team complimented its Region I championship season with four players, including offensive and defensive MVPs, on both the first and second team All-District 5-5A squads. Midland Lee landed two players on the first team of a list voted on by 5-5A coaches.

Midland High coach Tom Esikhati was named coach of the year for directing the Bulldogs to a 11-1 district championship season.

■ 5-5A All-District

The other Bulldog first-teamers are both seniors: defender Toby Walker and goal keeper Brandon Lang. Lang had six shutouts in district play.

Owens sparks West past East

By Pete Herndon
MRT Correspondent

Midland College's Andre Owens scored seven of his nine points in the final five minutes Saturday to help the Western Junior College Athletic Conference basketball all-stars defeat the North Texas all-stars, 108-100, in the Southwestern Junior College Shoot-Out at Chaparral Center.

Owens, a sophomore from South Bend, Ind., hit a three-pointer with 4:21 remaining to break an 89-89 tie. He then added a pair of free throws and a basket to give the WJCAC a lead it never relinquished.

"I just thought I'd take a few more shots," Owens said. "This is an all-star game. Everybody is looking for their shot.

Perhaps the most spectacular play of the day was a dunk by 6-foot-6 Terrance Fitzpatrick of New Mexico Junior College in the waning seconds. He tossed the ball high off the backboard, went up over a defender to collect it and flush it. He finished the game with 10 points.

Martyn Norris and Larry Johnson, both of Odessa College, led the WJCAC with 21 and 18 points.

By John McFarland
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH — Billy Tubbs, the Sooners' winningest basketball coach, said Saturday he will leave Oklahoma after 14 seasons to take on a new challenge: the struggling Texas Christian Horned Frogs.

"I came here because I think it's an exciting adventure. It's a tremendous challenge, and it brings with it a lot of excitement," Tubbs said at an afternoon news conference with TCU officials.

Tubbs replaces Moe Iba, who was fired in March after seven seasons. TCU TCU athletic director Frank Windegger said the school sought Tubbs because "he is a builder."

"He builds programs. He builds young men," Windegger said.

Tubbs said he decided to make the move because he believes TCU is committed to building a winning program.

He also said he was ready for a change of pace.

"You can only get excited about going to Manhattan, Kan., so many times. I'd like to see some other places around the U.S.A.," he said.

As for the uncertainty over which conference TCU will be aligned with after Texas, Texas A&M, Baylor and Texas Tech leave the Southwest Conference, Tubbs said, "That's what makes it exciting — the unknown factor out there."

Tubbs, 59, was interviewed by TCU officials Friday in Fort Worth. He said he had been talking to them for a couple of weeks.

Whitaker keeps welterweight championship

AP Boxing Writer

NORFOLK, Va. — Pernell Whitaker entered the ring to the blasting strains of a marching band from Norfolk State, then the WBC welterweight champion paraded all over Santos Cardona Saturday night at the Scope.

Whitaker stayed in the challenger's face for most of the 12 rounds, slipping and blocking most of Cardona's punches while landing freely to the head and body.

"It's not about fighting for world titles for me anymore," the 30-year-old Whitaker said. "It's about defending the pound-for-pound title."

"I think the fans deserved a great show," he said.

Permian edges Lee for Tall City championship

Midland Lee's Michael Nunn set a meet record in the long jump with a leap of 23-feet 9¼-inches.

■ Odessa Permian wins warmup to district track and field meet next weekend.

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

The countdown for next Saturday's District 4-5A track and field meet kicked into high gear Saturday as soon as final event was run at the Tall City Relays at Memorial Stadium.

Coaches from Midland High and Midland Lee were furiously tallying up their teams' points, trying to guess what the teams that were absent from the meet were capable of and sweating, probably, as the days before the trip to Abilene's Elmer Gray Stadium at Abilene Christian University narrowed to six.

In the end, however, the Odessa Permian boys and the San Angelo Central girls displayed talent and a black hole of depth which could be a taste of which teams will dominate the team race.

Permian, winners of eight-straight 4-5A titles, had several lackluster performances, but it didn't matter as the Panthers scored 138½ points to edge Midland Lee with 116. Midland High finished fifth with 69.

Competing without their state high jump champion and owner of one of the best 400-meter times in the district, senior Vanessa Garcia, didn't seem to phase Central. Without Garcia, who was high jumping at the Texas Relays along with teammate and fellow state qualifier Mary Newkirk, the Lady Bobcats used tremendous depth to take any excitment out of the team race and ran away with 252 points in the three-team

Martin takes defeat from jaws of victory

BRISTOL, Tenn. — David Green was awarded a bizarre victory Saturday in the Goody's 250 when leader Mark Martin mistakenly pulled off the track 300 yards before he was to take the checkered flag under caution.

"That's the dumbest thing I've ever done in my life, I think," said Martin, who dominated the Busch Grand National event at Bristol International Raceway, leading 195 of the 250 laps. "What can I say? I thought it was over."

■ Goody's 250

Martin was about 10 car-lengths ahead of Green when the final caution flag flew after Robert Pressley slammed into the third-turn wall on lap 246.

The extent of the damage to Pressley's car and the fluid spilled on the track made it almost immediately apparent that the race would end under caution.

All the cars bunched up behind the pace car and began slowly circling the track. When the leaders crossed the start-finish line to begin the final lap, the flag man clearly displayed the white flag, meaning there was one lap left.

AP Laserphoto

But as the field came out of the fourth turn and the flag man reached for the checkered flag, Martin ducked down out of the racing groove and headed for victory lane.

It was the only lap he led.

"He's won his share," Green said of Martin, who was headed for his 16th career Grand National victory. "It was time for me to get one."

Green said he had resigned himself to finishing second.

"On the white flag lap, I pulled up next to Mark and waved to him — congratulated him," he said.

Instead, Martin handed Green career victory No. 2, and his first since April 1991, a span of 56 races.

"I've been pulling for David Green, wanting him to win a race," Martin said, "but not like that."

NASCAR officials said it was the first time ever in either Winston Cup or Grand National competition that a driver mistakenly gave away a victory on the final lap.

"I feel bad for Mark," Green said.

Tommy Houston, who led once for 36 laps, came in third. Jeff Green, David's brother, and Dale Jarrett and Larry Pearson rounded out the top five.

Canadians take front row seats for Slick 200

PHOENIX (AP) — Paul Tracy and rookie Jacques Villeneuve, the first all-Canadian front row for an Indy-car event, led a record-breaking Saturday of qualifying for the Slick 50 200.

■ Slick 50 200

Tracy's fast lap of 176.266 mph buried the Phoenix International Raceway qualifying mark of 172.804, set last April on the one-mile oval by another Canadian, Scott Goodyear.

"It feels good to be on the pole here at Phoenix where I won my first Indy Lights race," Tracy said. "And it's good to get my first oval pole. That's been tough to do."

It is the fourth career pole for the 25-year-old Tracy, who crashed into the slower car driven by Jimmy Vasser last year while leading this event by more than a lap.

"Race conditions were just right for my car (last year)," Tracy said. "Everybody would like to have a day like that, except for what happened at the end. Now we just have to get past last year and concentrate on tommorrow (Sunday)."

The son of the late Gilles Villeneuve, a Formula One star killed in 1982 in a crash during qualifying in Belgium, made his impressive oval debut exactly 10 years after his uncle, also Jacques Villeneuve, won his only Indy-car pole on the same track.

"The car felt great right out of the pits and I just had to trust it," said the talented youngster, who seemed somewhat stunned to be sitting next to Tracy and defending Indy-car champion Nigel Mansell of England during the post-qualifying press conference.

Villeneuve was asked how it felt to have Tracy alongside and Mansell right behind for the start of the 200-lap race. Looking at Tracy and Mansell, who was third at 175.478, Villeneuve said sheepishly, "I guess that's terrible being surrounded by these guys. They're very tough and very fast.

"Today is a completely different thing because you've got 28 cars going at the same time," he added. "Aerodynamically, the car will change a lot. We'll just take it easy."

Mansell missed last year's race, which would have been his oval debut, after suffering a concussion in a crash durring practice. He went on to finish third in the Indianapolis 500 and win the last four oval races of the year, becoming the first driver to win four straight oval events since A.J. Foyt in 1965.

"I think this is probably the hardest oval to drive," Mansell said. "Track conditions are changing all the time, with the wind and the sand. There's only one line that really works, so it's going to be a tough race."

Mark Smith, who spent Friday night in a Phoenix hospital with a concussion after crashing during a morning practice session, was released on Saturday, but was not cleared to drive this weekend. His team withdrew to begin preparations for next week's race at Long Beach, Calif.

Brocco wins Santa Anita, readies for Kentucky Derby

ARCADIA, Calif. — Brocco flashed his Breeders' Cup form Saturday and won the Santa Anita Derby, once again making him the horse to beat in the Kentucky Derby.

For at least a week.

With two second-place finishes since winning the Breeders' Cup Juvenile here last Nov. 6, Brocco won this important Kentucky Derby prep after a stirring duel in the stretch with Tabasco Cat.

The winning margin was a three-quarters of a length, and Brocco once again is the leader in the 3-year-old division, at least until Florida Derby winner Holy Bull goes in the Blue Grass at Keeneland next Saturday.

Brocco, ridden by Gary Stevens, stalked the early lead of Fly'n J. Bryan into the turn for home, never worse than third. At that point, Pat Day took Tabasco Cat to the lead on the inside, and Brocco began his move on the outside.

Coming out of the turn, Brocco took the lead by a nose on the outside, and the two horses dashed for the wire. Tabasco Cat, trained by D. Wayne Lukas, was one length ahead of Strodes Creek, who took third by five lengths over Charlie Whittingham-trained stablemate Numerous.

Robannier, never in contention, was fifth, and Fly'n J. Bryan faded to last in the field of six.

Brocco went off the 3-5 favorite and returned $3.40, $2.40 and $2.20. Tabasco Cat, the second favorite at 5-2, paid $2.60 and $2.20, and Strodes Creek, ridden by Corey Black, paid $2.20. All starters carried 122 pounds, four less than Kentucky Derby weight.

■ Santa Anita Derby

This was considered one of the toughest preps for the Kentucky Derby on May 7 and remained so, even after a rash of defections and scratches cut the field to six.

Valiant Nature, who beat Brocco last Dec. 19 in the Hollywood Futurity, passed up the Santa Anita Derby at his home track and will go in the Blue Grass instead. Soul of the Matter, who beat Brocco in the San Felipe here on March 20, developed a skin blister on his left foreleg and had to be scratched Saturday morning.

Soul of the Matter will go in either the Blue Grass or, more likely, the Lexington on April 23 at Keeneland.

Brocco, owned by James Bond movie producer Albert Broccoli and trained by Randy Winick, earned $275,000 of the total purse of $500,000 and now has career earnings of $968,550. He has won four of six lifetime starts.

Tabasco Cat, winner of consecutive stakes races coming into this one, is expected to join Brocco and probably Strodes Creek in the Kentucky Derby field. Eight Santa Anita Derby winners have gone on to win the Kentucky Derby, including Sunday Silence in 1989, Winning Colors in 1988 and Affirmed in his Triple Crown year of 1978.

Lukas was trying to break a drought of 2½ years without a Grade I stakes victory with Tabasco Cat, the same horse who got loose in the barn area last Dec. 15 and ran over Lukas' son, Jeff.

Jeff, a trainer himself, sustained life-threatening brain injuries in the collision and was in a coma for three weeks. He now is recovering at a rehabilitation center and watched the Santa Anita Derby from a secluded spot under a grove of trees outside the far turn at the track, accompanied by his wife, Linda, and two other couples.

Remington Derby

OKLAHOMA CITY — Unheralded Smilin Singin Sam took the early lead and outran heavily favored Silver Goblin to win the $300,000 Remington Park Derby.

Smilin Singin Sam, with Larry Melancon in the irons, entered the race as a 22-to-1 longshot. The 3-year-old bolted out of the gate from the No. 5 hole and, after clearing traffic, never trailed in the 1 1-16 mile event that quickly became a two-horse speed race.

"He broke running and I just wanted to ride him away from there," Melancon said. "If he can make the lead, go ahead. If not and someone really wanted it, I was going to let him have it. He rode the first sixteenth and got the lead."

Silver Goblin, the 2-5 favorite ridden by Dale Cordova, stayed about two lengths off the pace during the early going as both horses pulled away from the eight-horse field.

"I thought Silver Goblin rated real nice off that fast pace and I thought he'd sure come back," Cordova said.

Down the stretch, Silver Goblin slowed and gave up second place to Blumin Affair, the runner-up to Brocco in the Breeders' Cup Juvenile last fall.

Burton blazes past field in Food City qualifying

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Ward Burton was the big winner and fellow rookie Loy Allen again came up a loser in Saturday's second-day qualifying for the Food City 500 at Bristol International Raceway.

Burton turned a fast lap of 124.082 mph in a Chevrolet Lumina on the .533-mile, high-banked oval.

Had Burton recorded that lap in Friday's opening round of time trials, he would have earned the ninth starting position. Instead, he will begin today's 500-lap event from the 21st spot.

Jeff Burton, Dale Jarrett and Darrell Waltrip all had to use provisionals to get into Sunday's race. They will start 35th, 36th and 37th, respectively.

Patterson retains WBC title with decision

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Tracy Patterson stuck to his game plan and outboxed scrappy Richard Duran on Saturday to retain his WBC super bantamweight championship with a unanimous 12-round decision.

"I knew the jab would be the key in the fight, keeping him at bay," Patterson said. "Whenever I caught him with anything it seemed to hurt him."

Patterson, of New Paltz, N.Y., improved his record to 50-2-1 with 35 knockouts and set the stage for a meeting with Kennedy McKinney to unify the World Boxing Council and the International Boxing Federation titles.

"I'm probably the strongest junior featherweight in the world and that includes the weasel over there," Patterson said, gesturing toward McKinney.

"You won't go six rounds with me," McKinney retorted. "I guarantee you're going to get knocked out."

On the undercard, Johnny Avila, 137, of Reno, improved to 17-1-1 with 10 knockouts by decking Bobby Brewer, 135, of Denver, at 2:14 of the eighth round. Brewer is 16-15

Aaron Steadman, 140, of Virginia City, Nev., stopped Mike Dallas, 136, of Sacramento, at 2:59 of the fourth round of a scheduled six-round fight. Steadman is 4-1 with three knockouts. Dallas is 6-4.

Richard Munoz, 134, of Sacramento, improved to 7-4-1 with a split decision over Jose Ferrara, 135, of Fresno. Ferrara is 4-4.

Dear Mr. Courtney:
Last week, after noticing your ad in the newspaper, I had you align the front end on my Volvo. I am pleased with the alignment and the very reasonable cost. I also want to thank you for informing me of a possible tread separation in one of my tires, of which I was completely unaware. The tire company replaced it without a hassle, thus prevent a possible dangerous situation since my daughter is driving that car to California within the week.
Thanks again for a job well done.
Sincerely
Wes Perry

MASTERS: Spaniard lurks near leader

(From 1C)

But Lehman played like a champ Saturday, making just two bogeys and five birdies, including Nos. 13, 15 and 16 down the stretch.

The putt on 16 could easily have been a three-putt. Once again, Augusta National played tough as the hard greens failed to hold shots and the slick, undulating greens made putting a nerve-wracking adventure.

Olazabal, the 28-year-old Spaniard who started as a pro so young it seems like he's been around forever, is positioned well to win his first major championship.

"I feel fine about it," he said about being a stroke back. "I have to do what I did today, get out on the golf course and enjoy the game.

"If I can do that I think I have a good chance," Olazabal said. "It will be a long day. I'll have to be calm and very patient and don't try to be too greedy."

It was a long day for Norman, who had seemed in good position to win his first Masters. He made no birdies and three bogeys.

Lehman, who played on the tour from 1983-85 but quit after never winning more than $20,000, birdied No. 2 and No. 7 and turned the front nine in 2-under-par 34. He bogeyed No. 12 but then birdied three of the next four holes.

He returned to the tour in 1992 and has been consistent, but a non-winner.

Olazabal eagled the 535-yard 8th hole, hitting his second shot within 5 feet of the hole, and turned the front nine in 33. He took the lead at 7 under par when he birdied No. 11 but gave it back with a boegy on the par-5 13th hole when he hit into the water.

Mize, who three-putted Nos. 1 and 3, settled down and made a 5-foot birdie on 9 and was at 5 under par at the turn. He birdied No. 12 with a spectacular sand shot from the back trap, landing it on the fringe and deadening it just enough to roll down the slick slope and into the hole to go to 6 under.

He gave fell back to 5 under when he bogeyed No. 18.

Defending champion Bernhard Langer shot an even-par 72 to put him at 4-over-par 220 after three rounds along with Jeff Sluman, Lanny Wadkins, Ben Crenshaw, Australian Wayne Grady and Fuzzy Zoeller.

Nick Faldo, considered by many the best player in the world, continued to struggle, shooting 73 and finishing 54 holes at 6-over-par 222.

John Daly and Ian Woosnam both shot 77 and were at at 10-over-par 226. They have played together all three rounds and have shot the same score all three rounds. John Cook also shot 77 and also was at 226.

Many of the pins Saturday were tucked tight to the front edge, making getting close on the hard greens no easy task. But on 12, the 155-yard par-3, it was smack dab in the center, begging for a shot that must fly the water and plunk down between the front and back sand traps.

The wind was chugging from the familiar southeast, but gusting to 15 mph, just enough to create doubt about club selection.

The 12th hole was playing more by ear than by sight. Players listened to the wind swirl through the top of the towering pines at Amen Corner and tried to gauge how to keep their shots out of Rae's Creek in front.

Just standing on the tee you can't feel the wind and the flag on the green gives no indication of what it will do to a high, floating short iron shot.

Officials question player of Baylor tactics

■ League officials probe into recruit tactics by Baylor basketball program.

HOUSTON (AP) — Southwest Conference officials conducting an investigation of the Baylor men's basketball program questioned an Oklahoma State player and his former girlfriend about a recruiting trip on which the woman was invited, according to a published report.

Oklahoma State player Ian Phillip and his former girlfriend Becky Bryant, told the Houston Chronicle they were questioned this year by SWC investigators about the events surrounding Phillip's official, expense-paid recruiting visit to Baylor in September 1992.

The SWC has been investigating the Baylor program since November over questions of academic propriety.

Ms. Bryant, a student at Cameron University in Lawton, Okla., told the Chronicle she traveled to Waco on the same weekend as Phillip and received free lodging and meals.

She said the trip was arranged by Baylor assistant basketball coach Gary Thomas and portrayed to her as an opportunity to interview for a student manager's position in the basketball program.

However, she said there was little discussion of the manager's position during the trip. She told the Chronicle she now believes she was part of a scheme designed to entice Phillip into signing with the Bears.

The way I always looked at it was, 'Look, Ian, if you come down here and play, we'll get your girl down here, too,'" Ms. Bryant was quoted as saying in Sunday's Chronicle.

NCAA recruiting regulations prohibit coaches from providing, or offering to provide, financial assistance or other benefits to recruits, their relatives and friends.

Thomas told The Associated Press Saturday night he could not comment on any aspect of the SWC investigation.

JUCO: Hicks scores 29 for East

(From 1C)

Mike Harris of Ranger Junior College led the North all-stars with 17 points as seven players scored in double digits.

Eric Cardenas, an All-America from Weatherford, scored six unanswered points on layups late in the third quarter to pull the North within 65-64 after the WJCAC had led throughout most of the second half. Weatherford's Lamond Ford hit back-to-back three-pointers early in the fourth to give the North a 78-72 lead.

TUBBS: TCU names new coach

(From 1C)

Published reports indicate Tubbs will be paid between $200,000 and $400,000 a year. Tubbs' base salary at OU has been $107,000, but he may have doubled that with money from other sources such as television and radio contracts.

The Sooners were 15-13 last season, breaking a string of 12 straight seasons with 20 victories.

Tubbs joins Barry Switzer, another former OU coach, in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. Switzer, the most successful coach in Sooners football history, is now head coach of the Dallas Cowboys.

According to The Oklahoman, a top candidate to replace Tubbs is St. Louis University coach Charlie Spoonhour, a former OU assistant.

Spoonhour has an 11-year head-coaching record of 232-104. He is 35-23 at St. Louis, which last season was 23-6 and an NCAA qualifier for the first time since 1957.

Since taking over the Sooners in 1980-81, Tubbs is 333-132. His overall head-coaching record is 439-200 in 20 seasons.

Things haven't gone well lately at OU. Last season's 15-13 record was OU's worst since Tubbs' first season.

Also, attendance slid for the fourth straight year and the Sooners missed the NCAA tournament for the third time in four years.

Cole, Koch lead MCC Masters

Steve Cole and Barry Levin lead the blue division while Charles Koch and Bob Bledsoe lead the gold division in the Midland Country Club Masters golf tournament after the first round.

The tournament is played in conjunction with the PGA Masters tournament and each two-man team is paired with one of the professional golfers. The Midland golfers play a best-ball round and add their score with that of their Masters' partner.

Cole and Levin finished with a 133 after adding Jose Maria Olazabal's score to their score. Koch and Bledsoe finished with a 126 and were paired with Jim McGovern.

Play continues today at Midland Country Club.

Bulldogs making the second team are junior forward Sean Parnell, senior midfielder Paul Rounding, senior forward David Farias and junior goal keeper Jared Richardson. Richardson filled in for Lang for five games to give Midland two keepers of the four named to all-district.

Second-place Abilene High and third-place San Angelo Central placed three players on the first team. Abilene Cooper and Odessa Permian each have one. Odessa High was the only 5-5A team not represented on either the first or second team.

Midland Lee's honorable mention players are Jeff Stallings, Jasper Havermark and Scott McLeod. Midland High's are Jesse Dominquez, Tyler Berry, Paul Rounding and Mario Paredes.

Three Bulldogs were awarded all-tournament status from the state tournament played Friday and Saturday in Pflugerville. They were Hunter, midfield; sophomore J.D. Garcia, midfield; Lang, goalkeeper; and junior Sean Parnell, forward.

Van Poppel begins life in the big leagues

By Steve Campbell
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON — For the record, all the ones that Todd Van Poppel was going to assault just as soon as he cashed his signing-bonus check remain safe.

They haven't even been scratched, let alone broken. The one record Van Poppel did get his hands on — most money paid out to a high school baseball prospect — slipped away in a year.

When he threw his last pitch for the Arlington Martin High School Warriors and declared his intentions to become a Texas Longhorn, Van Poppel was 18 years old.

Whereupon a $1.2 million contract and some friendly persuasion sold him on the merits of becoming an Oakland Athletic. Five cities, one shoulder injury and approximately a lifetime later, Van Poppel will get every opportunity to deliver on all the promises made by his right arm.

Manager Tony La Russa has given Van Poppel one of the five spots in the Oakland starting rotation. Van Poppel, who has six major league victories and a career earned-run average of 5.28 on his resume, is scheduled to make his first start of the season on Sunday against the Minnesota Twins.

Can it really be that after all this, Todd Van Poppel is only 22? Can it really be that in baseball terms, Van Poppel isn't alarmingly-off schedule for somebody who made throwing a 95 mph fastball past hitters look so easy, so effortless, as a teen-ager?

It is high-70s noon in late March in Phoenix. The Athletics will play an exhibition game against the San Francisco Giants in less than an hour, and sun-soaked spectators are trickling into Phoenix Stadium. Van Poppel is sitting in the shade of the Athletics' dugout, a day removed from having pitched four scoreless innings against the Colorado Rockies.

"People think it's so easy," Van Poppel says. "People are just coming to the ballpark, and they think we just came out of the clubhouse. They don't know we've been here for five hours. Running. Throwing. Lifting weights. There are mornings I'm up at 5 o'clock to go lift weights. It's tough. There's a lot of hard work and long days. I spend 12 hours at the ballpark every day.

"I don't think anything is easy. Hard work makes it a little less difficult, but it's never easy to me. There is so much hard work that goes into it, so much determination, so much time you put into it."

Van Poppel has had time to make only 74 professional starts, 17 at the major league level. Sixteen of those big-league starts came last season, when he went 6-6 with a 5.04 ERA. His only complete game as a professional, a shutout with Double-A Huntsville, Ala., came in 1991. A strained right shoulder in 1992 limited Van Poppel to nine games and 45.1 innings, but he did avoid injury.

"I think it's amazing where he is," La Russa says. "Just look around at 21-year-old pitchers and see what they look like. Most of them are in college. Others are in the minor leagues. This guy won six games for a struggling club. It's amazing. It's also amazing that five years from now, he'll be better than he is today."

Rebs knock out Bobcats

Staff Report

SAN ANGELO — Midland Lee's Britt Harper hit 3-for-4 with one RBI as the Rebels powered to nine hits in the first five and one-third innings and Lee went on to defeat San Angelo Central 12-4 in District 4-5A baseball action here at Nathan Donsky Field.

Lee improved to 17-3 overall and 8-0 in league play to remain in first place. Central dropped to 4-14 and 2-5.

Mark Holly got the win for the Rebels and gave up four hits in five innings of work and improved to 4-0 on the mound. Sean Low got his first save of the season when he struck out two and allowed only two hits in the final two innings.

Kevin Jordan hit 2-for-5 for the Rebels and had two RBI and a double. David Galvan, Daniel Carrasco, Eric Benavidez also added doubles for Lee and Galvan stole two bases. Mike Phillips was 2-for-4 with three RBI.

Lee jumped out to a 7-0 lead in the fourth inning before the Bobcats rallied with four runs of their own in the bottom of the fifth. Lee, however, scored five more runs in the last two innings to put the game away while the Rebel defense, backing up Low, gave up only two hits in the final two innings.

Bengals' star Billups dies in high-speed automobile crash

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Former Cincinnati Bengals defensive back Lewis Billups, mired in legal troubles since leaving the NFL, died Saturday when the car he was driving on Interstate 4 spun out of control, police said.

Billups was driving at about 100 mph when the accident occurred. Also killed was Danny Green of Kissimmee, a passenger in the Corvette, police said.

Billups, 30, died at Orlando Regional Medical Center after being thrown from his convertible in the 1 a.m. accident, Lt. Jack Stacey of the Orlando Police Department said.

The accident occurred after a car driving in front of Billups' Corvette changed lanes to exit the interstate in Orlando. The driver of the car, 20-year-old Marisol Soto of Orlando, stopped to tell police about the crash. She will face no charges.

The two passengers died after they were thrown from the Corvette, which hit a signpost and then a guardrail that impaled the car, Stacey said.

"It was awesome wreckage, the way the guardrail impaled the car," Stacey said. "Billups was ejected and died from injuries sustained in the accident."

Stacey said it was not known whether alcohol or drugs were involved in the crash, but autopsies were planned.

Billups, who lived in Orlando, was drafted by the Bengals in 1985 out of North Alabama. He played for Cincinnati until 1991. He also played briefly for the Green Bay Packers.

He had faced legal troubles in recent years. He was named in a lawsuit by a Seattle woman who claimed she was sexually assaulted by numerous members of the Bengals.

Billups pleaded guilty in March 1993 to making threatening phone calls to pro basketball player Rex Chapman in a dispute over Chapman's sister, who had dated Billups. Billups was sentenced to a year in prison.

Air Jordan transforms into minor league breeze king

HOOVER, Ala. (AP) — As a superstar in the NBA, Michael Jordan got all the calls. As a rookie in the Southern League, forget it.

Jordan struck out three more times, prompting his first argument, and went 0-for-4 Saturday night for the Double-A Birmingham Barons in a 5-3 loss to Chattanooga.

Jordan, twice called out on close pitches, is hitless in seven at-bats as a baseball pro with five strikeouts. He started slowly in spring training for the Chicago White Sox, too, going 0-for-14 before getting three hits in his next six tries.

"I can't be concerned about how umps are going to call me. I can't blame anyone but myself," Jordan said.

"Today I was tense because I wasn't confident. I'm off-balance, I'm chasing pitches I shouldn't be. I'm out of rhythm," he said. "You start searching when you're in doubt. That's exactly what I'm doing."

Jordan, who usually answers postgame questions as long as people ask them, politely cut short the session. He went off to the weight room for more work late into the night.

A crowd of 8,626, about 2,000 short of a sellout, saw Jordan catch both flys hit his way in right field, each time taking a hop-step before the ball settled into his glove. He was perfect on Friday night on four chances.

One lucky fan also got to catch Jordan's bat, which slipped out of his hands on a swing and skittered into the front row of the seats above the third-base dugout.

Jordan, meanwhile, wasn't feeling so special after he was called out by plate umpire Ray DiMuro on a 2-2 pitch at the knees in the fourth inning. Jordan spun around in the batter's box, yapped at DiMuro, tossed his bat toward the dugout on the first-base side and said a few more words to the umpire.

As the teams changed sides, Barons manager Terry Francona met DiMuro for a brief discussion.

"That can't be my concern," Jordan said. "I shouldn't be chasing from day one."

In the second inning, Jordan, batting seventh, was called out on a 2-2 pitch on the outside corner. He did not dispute the call, although the fans did with loud booing.

Both strikeouts came against right-handed side-armer Scott Sullivan. Jordan, whose first hit in spring training came against Minnesota side-armer Jeff Innis, almost got even in the seventh.

Jordan tapped a slow grounder to the left side, but third baseman Bobby Perna cut across the diamond and made an off-balance throw that got Jordan by a step.

Rockets pull away from San Antonio

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Hakeem Olajuwon tried to respond to the shouts of "MVP, MVP" but guard Vernon Maxwell stole the show with 27 points as Houston beat San Antonio 100-89 in a Midwest Division showdown on Saturday.

Houston increased its lead over San Antonio to two games in the Midwest Division and evened the season series 2-2. The teams meet again April 19 at San Antonio.

A sellout crowd came to see Olajuwon battle the Spurs' David Robinson, but both big men were saddled with five fouls over the final eight minutes.

Olajuwon finished with 20 points and 13 rebounds. Robinson, after scoring only one point in the first quarter, led the Spurs with 30, including 15 after drawing his fifth foul with 8:10 left in the game.

But it wasn't enough.

Houston took a 47-39 halftime lead, aided by San Antonio's cold start but the Spurs pulled even at 51-51 with 7:40 to go in the third quarter and appeared to be making a comeback after Olajuwon drew his fourth foul with 6:22 to go.

Bulls 125, Bucks 99

CHICAGO — Chicago scored the first 15 points in the game on the way to a 37-19 lead after one quarter and coasted to its seventh straight victory with a win over Milwaukee.

The win, the Bulls' 13th in 15 games, kept them just one game behind first-place Atlanta in the Central Division. It was the fifth straight game Chicago has held its opponent under 100 points.

Scott Williams led the Bulls with 21 points, while Scottie Pippen scored 19 and Horace Grant 16.

Ken Norman had 20 points and Vin Baker 17 for the Bucks, who dropped their fourth consecutive game and their 17th in 19 games. Milwaukee has lost 12 straight on the road and their last 16 at Chicago Stadium.

Warriors 117, Timberwolves 105

MINNEAPOLIS — Chris Mullin scored a season-high 29 points and Latrell Sprewell added 11 of his 17 points in the fourth night as Golden State beat Minnesota.

Chris Webber had 20 and 10 rebounds for the Warriors, coming off their most decisive loss in almost two years — Thursday's 134-102 defeat at Houston.

Hawks 117, Bullets 103

ATLANTA — Stacey Augmon hit 12 consecutive shots and scored 26 points as Atlanta beat Washington.

Kevin Willis had 25 points and grabbed 15 rebounds for the Hawks, who shot 60 percent from the field in winning for just the second time in five games.

Mitchell Butler scored 21 points and Tom Gugliotta and Rex Chapman 15 each for the Bullets, who remained in last place in the Atlantic Division.

Hornets 127, 76ers 122 OT

PHILADELPHIA — Larry Johnson scored 20 points and Tyrone Bogues had 19 points and 13 assists as Charlotte improved its slim playoff hopes with an overtime victory over Philadelphia.

The Hornets, with eight games remaining, must catch either Miami, Indiana or New Jersey to get a postseason berth. They now trail the Pacers and Nets by four games and the Heat by 4½.

Magic 125, Heat 105

MIAMI — Shaquille O'Neal warmed up and Miami cooled off in the fourth quarter as Orlando pulled away for a victory.

The Magic defeated the Heat for the third time in five meetings to win the season series for the first time in Orlando's five-year history. The Heat lost all three games at Miami Arena this season.

O'Neal, limited to 10 points through three periods, scored Orlando's first five in the final quarter to spark a 14-4 spurt that gave the Magic a 102-92 lead.

Jazz 128, Clippers 104

SALT LAKE CITY — Karl Malone scored 15 of his 25 points in the decisive third quarter as Utah won consecutive games for the first time in a month, defeating the Los Angeles.

Tom Chambers, John Stockton and Tyrone Corbin scored 20 points each for the Jazz, who failed had failed to win two straight games since the end of their 10-game winning streak on March 8. The Jazz defeated Dallas 99-82 Thursday night and won the season series from the Clippers 3-1.

Underclassmen walk eligiblity line into NBA

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP) — By carefully following all the new rules, undergraduates can go into the NBA draft for the first time this year without surrendering their eligibility.

The NCAA is hoping nobody surrenders it by accident.

"The core issue of entering the draft is not complicated," said Rick Perko, an NCAA legislative assistant. "But all the other issues related to it can be complicated."

Legislation adopted at last January's NCAA convention is sweeping, and simple: One time in his college career, a kid can declare for a professional basketball draft as an undergraduate without automatically losing his eligibility.

By Thursday, five already had, including 6-foot-8 Cincinnati freshman Dontonio Wingfield and sophomores Jason Kidd of California, 6-4, and Yinka Dare of George Washington, 7-1. The biggest impact seems likely to land on freshmen and sophomores.

If they do not like their offer, or do not get taken, undergraduates can come back to school simply by petitioning their athletic director within 30 days. Previously, their eligibility ended the minute they declared for the draft.

There are a couple of big catches that NCAA officials figure most athletes will know all about: They cannot agree orally or in writing to a pro contract, and they cannot retain an agent.

But will they, in this new era of freedom of movement, beware the other pitfalls that bring early ends to college career?

Eligibility could be endangered, Perko said, by such things as "accepting anything from anybody wishing to represent him. This could even be a soft drink or a ride."

The NCAA has been mailing out thousands of advisories as the June NBA draft, the first under the new system, draws near.

The mailings went to every Division I basketball coach, athletic director, conference commissioner, compliance coordinator and athlete advisory panel.

Athletes can have relatives or legal guardians join them in talks with pro teams, and Perko said about 125 of the 300 Division I schools have set up advisory panels authorized by NCAA legislation several years ago.

Usually consisting of 3-5 people from the school's staff and faculty, the panels can give contract advice to athletes and even help in contract negotiations.

NCAA enforcement chief David Berst said there is a misunderstanding that pro teams will retain the rights to any undergraduate they draft until one year after his class graduates.

Other undergraduates who have declared for the draft are Jamie Brandon, 6-4 junior from LSU, and Sharone Wright, 6-11 junior from Clemson.

By Rick Gano
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — The long shadow of Michael Jordan is gone. Scottie Pippen no longer is the second-best player on a team that has won three straight NBA championships.

His skills, always evident, have blossomed, and the burden of leadership on the Chicago Bulls that was Jordan's for so long is now Pippen's.

Pippen has readily accepted the role. But he's also learned, sometimes painfully, that leadership goes beyond the basketball court.

"It's been tough," said Pippen, who has led the Bulls back into the playoffs this season.

"But having teammates and guys you can count on has helped me through the tough adjustment. But as for being a team leader, everything does not come easy. You've got to be patient at best."

Leadership has meant more than taking the big shot at the end of the game, beyond directing his teammates, bringing the ball up, jawing with opponents or referees or facing the media.

It also has meant living in a spotlight that hasn't always highlighted his best side.

In January, he was arrested for having a loaded handgun in his car. He apologized but said as a visible sports star, he needed to protect himself in the light of recent attacks on athletes.

In February, during a Bulls slump, a frustrated Pippen was booed by Chicago Stadium fans during a disappointing loss and performance. Pippen berated the fans, claiming they only booed black players, but later apologized.

There also was a reported rift with rookie teammate Toni Kukoc, the Croatian star.

"I don't know who started that we weren't getting along," Pippen said. "If you didn't hear me say anything or Toni say anything, then you know it was a rumor. But, if I've got something to say about a player that I think will help him or encourage him, I'll speak out."

Pippen's peers in the NBA say they see a big difference this season.

"He's much more confident than he was in the past, much more assertive and vocal," Detroit's Isiah Thomas said. "He has a difficult task now to try to motivate the team, management and the city in trying to win another championship."

"It's not as bad as it could have been but there has been a lot of controversy for me," Pippen said. "I've been able to handle it, deal with it, and I don't think I've carried anything on to the court to allow my playing to disrupt me.

Pippen's talents were most evident in the NBA All-Star game. He was chosen MVP after scoring 29 points, hitting five 3-pointers and grabbing 11 rebounds.

Overall, Pippen is averaging nearly 22 points, nearly nine rebounds and more than five assists per game, and is considered an MVP candidate.

"He's the best player on our team," Steve Kerr said. "He's the guy we look to."

When Pippen plays well, the Bulls have shown they can beat any team. And as they showed during the post All-Star slump, when Pippen plays poorly, they can lose to any team.

"The defenses are putting hands on him, making sure they're roughing him up, just to see if they could bug him enough to see if they could get him out of the game. That's the respect. Teams know, if they can get Scottie unnerved or out of the game, they've got a chance to beat the Bulls."

Vikings put on best manners for Oiler QB

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Minnesota Vikings coach Dennis Green has met with Houston Oilers quarterback Warren Moon to try to persuade the 10-year veteran to come to Minnesota.

Moon declined to comment and Green offered little insight when he returned Friday from Houston.

"We just visited and chatted about football," Green told the Saint Paul Pioneer Press. "We chatted about the state of Minnesota. We chatted about the Minnesota Vikings."

"I think he has a clear understanding of how we feel about him and the role he'd play on our football team. We're not looking for a miracle worker. We're looking for a good, solid quarterback.

"If we would be fortunate enough to have Warren Moon end up with the Vikings we'd be very pleased."

Green said he and Moon did not discuss the terms of Moon's contract. That is up to Vikings vice president Jeff Diamond and Moon's agent, Leigh Steinberg, he said.

Green said he knew of no plans for Moon to visit the Twin Cities.

The Vikings and Houston Oilers continue to deny that a trade is imminent.

"We're still a ways away," Oilers general manager Floyd Reese said.

When asked if Moon's approval is the only stumbling block remaining, Vikings president Roger Headrick said, "I don't know if there is a stumbling block.

"I think Denny went to make sure (Moon) was aware of our interest and at the same time to gauge his interest in coming here. It's a big move for him if he makes it, and it's a big move for us to make it. We want to make sure everyone is on the same wavelength."

Even if that happens, Diamond said, there is more holding up the deal than Moon's approval.

"Warren is obviously a key factor, but there are more pieces of the puzzle that have to be put together," said Diamond, who is handling the negotiations for the Vikings. "We're working on it. We're talking. I don't know how it will all work out."

The Vikings reportedly have offered a fourth-round draft choice this year and a third-round pick next year in exchange for Moon, 37. A $1 million pay cut in Moon's $3.25 million salary also has been proposed. Neither side will confirm that, but Reese said Friday, "It very well could be that."

Redskins begin rebuilding process

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Hogs are all gone and the Posse is down to its last member. There's no clue as to who the quarterback will be, and the new coach is from — of all places — Dallas.

Small wonder that the Washington Redskins may have an identity crisis as they prepare for spring practice.

Mark Rypien, the 1992 Super Bowl MVP, is still on the payroll at $3 million. But after finishing two years in a row as the lowest rated quarterback in the NFC, his future here also seems bleak.

Turner is looking at Rypien as well as several free agents still on the market to possibly hold down the job or serve as a backup just long enough for him to groom a new signal caller, as he did Troy Aikman at Dallas.

But despite the third pick in the draft on April 24, the Redskins' hopes of getting Tennessee's Heath Shuler or Trent Dilfer from Fresno State appear dimmer since the Colts traded Jeff George to Atlanta and the Bengals let David Klingler know he's vulnerable.

In his first head coaching job after helping guide Dallas to consecutive Super Bowl titles, Turner gets his first look at his new team Friday when he opens a "voluntary" three-day minicamp.

The last time he saw them was from across the field in Texas Stadium the day after Christmas, when his Cowboys offense scored four touchdowns to hand Washington its worst defeat since 1961.

The 38-3 score put the final nail in the coffin of Richie Petitbon's one-year career as a head coach. Petitbon wouldn't get the formal word until 10 days later at the conclusion of the Redskins' worst season in 30 years.

But he had to have had an idea of his fate when Cowboys owner Jerry Jones ran onto the field during the pre-game warmups to break up a chat between Turner and Redskins GM Charley Casserly.

After Jones and Jimmy Johnson parted ways, Turner may have had second thoughts about leaving Dallas. If so, he won't say. "I have the best job in football," he said last week when asked about the turmoil at Valley Ranch.

He certainly doesn't have the best players, despite bringing John Gesek with him to bolster Washington's aging and crippled line and spending $11 million on the Cardinals' Ken Harvey in hopes he'll be the pass rusher the Redskins have lacked since trading away Wilber Marshall a year ago.

Gone, too, are the last of the Hogs, the legendary offensive line that carried Washington to four Super Bowls. Center Bostic made his retirement official last month; tackle Joe Jacoby, sidelined most of last season with back spasms, is expected to do the same soon.

To meet the NFL's new $34.2 million cap on player salaries, the Redskins are having to cut their payroll by $10 million. The brunt has fallen on their aging veterans.

Bostic took the hint and retired. Four-time Pro Bowler Charles Mann, sidelined most of the last two seasons with knee injuries, didn't and was waived.

Dallas Highland Park's Shannon Marshall (7) and her teammates count down the last seconds of a 3-0 win over Arlington Martin that gave the Lady Scots the state soccer championship Saturday in Pflugerville.

New Braunfels, Highland Park capture soccer titles

Associated Press

■ Soccer Playoffs

PFLUGERVILLE — Kyle Reneau scored the game's only goal and goalkeeper Ryan Rogers had 11 saves as New Braunfels beat Tyler Lee, 1-0, to win the state UIL boys soccer title.

Reneau lofted a shot that hit the crossbar and Tyler goaltender Eric Smith then went into the goal with 8:32 left in the game.

New Braunfels (20-3-4) won the title in its second playoff appearance. Last year it lost to El Paso Hanks, 2-1, in the semifinals.

Smith had seven saves for Tyler (19-3-2), which was also making its second playoff appearance.

The first half of play was relatively uneventful as both teams played a conservative offense. Tyler Lee dominated the second half, outshooting New Braunfels 11-2. But the Unicorns took advantage of their best opportunity to win the game.

Girls Finals

Dallas Highland Park 3, Arlington Martin0

PFLUGERVILLE — Meredith Florence scored two goals and Kristen Raggio added a third as Dallas Highland Park beat Arlington Martin 3-0 to win its first UIL girls state soccer title.

Rizzuto picks up accolade

The award was established in 1957 to honor those who excelled in the field prior to 1957, the year Rawlings established its Gold Glove Award for top fielders at the various positions.

Rizzuto retired in 1956 with a .968 fielding average. He spent his entire 13-year career as a shortstop with the New York Yankees.

Until Rizzuto was presented with the award only one other player had been so honored — Rizzuto's Yankees teammate Joe Dimaggio.

The 76-year-old Rizzuto was elected this year to the Hall of Fame.

Streaking O's rip Rangers, 7-5

Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

BALTIMORE — Mike Devereaux and Chris Hoiles homered Saturday as the Baltimore Orioles, off to their best start in seven years, beat Texas 7-5.

Juan Gonzalez hit a three-run homer in the eighth to bring the Rangers within 6-5. But a sacrifice fly by Jeffrey Hammonds in the eighth put the Orioles up 7-5, and Lee Smith got the final three outs for his third save.

The victory improved the Orioles to 3-1 for the first time since 1987.

Tigers 5, Yankees 2

NEW YORK — Detroit's Mike Moore, routed in his first start on opening day, came back to stop New York, ending the Tigers' four-game losing streak.

Mickey Tettleton hit a three-run home run for the Tigers, who handed Jimmy Key his first April loss in four years.

Moore (1-1) allowed six earned runs in 2 1-3 innings in the Tigers' opener at Boston and came in with a 23.14 ERA. Against the Yankees, though, he was in charge from the start, pitching hitless ball through the first five innings. He allowed three hits in seven innngs before giving way to Storm Davis. Mike Henneman finished for his first save.

Blue Jays 8, Mariners 6

TORONTO — Joe Carter, evoking memories of last year's World Series, hit a two-run homer off Bobby Thigpen in the ninth inning to give Toronto a victory over Seattle.

Tony Castillo (1-0) gave up one run and on two hits in three innings, allowing Seattle to tie the score 6-6 in the seventh on Griffey's 439-foot drive.

White Sox 6, Red Sox 5

CHICAGO — Julio Franco tied the score with a two-out, two-run single in the seventh inning and Robin Ventura followed with the go-ahead single, rallying Chicago past Boston.

Jack McDowell (1-1), last year's AL Cy Young Award winner, outpitched three-time winner Roger Clemens in their fifth career matchup.

Angels 6, Brewers 4

MILWAUKEE — Jim Edmonds and Eduardo Perez hit consecutive RBI singles in the ninth off Jesse Orosco as California rallied past Milwaukee.

Trailing 4-1 in the eighth, the Angels scored three times to tie. The Brewers were one out away from winning in the ninth but elected to walk Chili Davis.

Chad Curtis opened California's ninth with a single off Mike Fetters (0-1) and, two outs later, Davis drew an intentional pass. Orosco replaced Fetters, and Edmonds and Perez followed their hits.

Athletics 14, Twins 0

MINNEAPOLIS — Oakland hit four homers for the second straight game and Steve Karsay pitched seven shutout innings as the Athletics pounded Minnesota.

Terry Steinbach and Ruben Sierra homered for the second consecutive night as the A's spoiled the major-league debut of Twins starter Carlos Pulido (0-1). Geronimo Berroa and Stan Javier also homered for Oakland, which had 18 hits.

Javier and Berroa each had three hits, while Sierra, Steinbach and Scott Brosius drove in three runs apiece. The A's, who had nine runs in their first two games of the season, have scored 24 in their two against the Twins.

Karsay (1-0), acquired in the trade that sent Rickey Henderson to the Blue Jays at the trading deadline last season, allowed six hits and struck out three in his ninth major-league start.

Saberhagen returns to mound

■ Bret Saberhagen comes off a five-day suspension for his first start of the 1994 season and pitches a five-hitter against Houston.

■ NL Roundup

HOUSTON — Bret Saberhagen, fresh off a five-day suspension, pitched a five-hitter Saturday night to lead the New York Mets over the Houston Astros 8-2.

Saberhagen took a two-hit shutout into the ninth before allowing consecutive homers to Andujar Cedeno and pinch-hitter Chris Donnels.

He struck out five and walked none against the Astros. It was his first complete game since he beat the Florida Marlins 7-1 last June 30. The victory stopped Houston's eight-game winning streak against New York.

Saberhagen, two days shy of his 30th birthday, served the suspension at the start of the season because he sprayed bleach at reporters in the Mets' clubhouse at Shea Stadium last July 27. He made only 19 starts last year and didn't pitch after Aug. 2 because of knee and elbow surgery.

Pete Harnisch (0-1) allowed six runs and six hits in 3⅓ innings for the Astros. He had been 4-0 against the Mets.

Marlins 15, Padres 1

SAN DIEGO — Jeff Conine homered twice and drove in five runs as Florida set a team scoring record.

Conine hit a three-run homer off A.J. Sager during an eight-run outburst in the seventh inning, and added a two-run shot off Mark Davis in a six-run ninth.

Cubs 4, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Sammy Sosa hit a sacrifice fly in the ninth inning off John Wetteland on as Chicago rallied to beat Montreal.

Montreal led 3-2 in the eighth but John Wetteland (0-1), who blew just six saes in 49 chances last year, walked Sammy Sosa and threw away a pickoff attempt for an error that set up a game-tying single by pinch-hitter Mark Grace.

Braves 2, Dodgers 1

LOS ANGELES — Jeff Blauser had three hits, including an RBI single in the 10th inning, as Atlanta beat Los Angeles for its season-opening sixth straight win.

Greg Maddux (2-0) pitched four-hit ball over nine innings. The two-time Cy Young Award winner struck out four and walked one before rookie Tony Tarasco pinch-hit for him in the 10th.

Reds 2, Phillies 1

CINCINNATI — John Smiley, the Reds' biggest disappointment last year, anchored their third straight victory with 7⅓ shutout innings as Cincinnati beat Philadelphia.

Giants 4, Cardinals 3
Cardinals 5, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Bob Tewksbury allowed one run in seven innings and drove in the go-ahead run to give St. Louis a victory and a doubleheader split with San Francisco.

In the first game, Matt Williams' two-out, run-scoring single in the 11th gave the Giants a win.

The Cardinals didn't get a hit off Giants starter Salomon Torres until the fifth inning of the second game. Then the right-hander fell apart, giving up five hits and three walks in two innings.

Pirates 10, Rockies 5

PITTSBURGH — Carlos Garcia homered and drove in three runs, and Jay Bell had three hits as Pittsburgh finally got some production from the top of its batting order to beat Colorado.

Pittsburgh's top two spots in the order — filled by Garcia, Bell and Al Martin thus far — were a combined 1-for-31 as the Pirates lost their first four games, their longest season-opening losing streak an 0-6 start in 1974.

Puckett reaches milestone with big night

■ Kirby Puckett crosses 2,000 plateau with a five-hit performance against Oakland Friday.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — It took Kirby Puckett four games this season to get four hits and break the 2,000-hit barrier.

Once he got there, he immediately headed for 3,000.

Puckett finished with five hits Friday night during the Minnesota Twins' 10-9, 10-inning loss to the Oakland Athletics. It was the sixth time in his career that he had five or more hits in a game.

He became the 195th player in major league history to reach the 2,000-hit plateau, even though his 10th season with the Twins won't be complete until May 8. Only three players in major league history collected more in their first 10 years: Wee Willie Keeler (2,065), Paul Waner (2,036) and Stan Musial (2,012).

Puckett's 2,000th came in the third inning off Bob Welch.

As he stood on first base, the fans gave him a standing ovation and Oakland first baseman Mark McGwire shook his hand. Welch threw the ball to Twins third base coach Ron Gardenhire, who tossed it out of play.

Puckett doffed his batting helmet twice during a one-minute standing ovation.

"The first thing I said is, 'Thank God, man,' " Puckett said. "I realize I'm fortunate to play this game. I have to give thanks to Him, first. And I thank my kids for being here, and my wife and friends.

"There are a lot of things I could say. It could take all day."

After his historic hit, Puckett had four more hits.

"It got lost in all of the action of the game, but it's quite an accomplishment," Twins manager Tom Kelly said of Puckett's 2,000th. "I'm proud to have seen all 2,000 of them. It's something special for me to see one player get 2,000 hits."

His fourth hit — the 2,003rd of his career — was a single to left against Dennis Eckersley in the eighth. It knocked in two runs and tied the score 8-8.

Puckett moved to third on Kent Hrbek's grounder to first, but stayed there as Dave Winfield grounded to shortstop and Matt Walbeck flied to left, ending the game. What could have been an even more memorable night evaporated.

"We were just a hit away from winning the thing," Kelly said.

ANGELS: Cohick, Raven get hot

(From 1C)

"I like the pitching we have had," said Midland manager Mario Mendoza. "Shad Williams on Friday and Mark Ratekin tonight looked just the same. They each had one bad inning, but was strong other than that. We made two errors tonight, but we've also had some great plays behind our pitchers. This team has got some talent."

And then the bats exploded with the arrival with Wichita's firemen. In the sixth inning, Midland scored three runs to take a 4-3 lead as Cohick highlighted the inning with a two-run double. Cohick now has seven RBI with five hits in two games and has scored seven times. Not bad for a player known as a notoriously slow starter.

"Maybe, I'm just eating the right food this year," Cohick said of his torrid start. "I've worked hard with the hitting coach this spring and changed a few simple things, but other than that I can't explain this. And it all goes together when you get guys on base in front of you when you're hot."

Midland scored four in the seventh. Raven had a run scoring triple. Cohick and Smith had RBI singles and Chris Pritchett had a sacrifice fly.

"I was guessing too much in the first game, but I had a good idea of what I was doing tonight," said Raven, who homered and tripled for two RBIs. "I could have had a better night, but I hit into the double play in the eighth with the bases loaded. I think I was trying to do too much."

ANGEL DUST: Game three of the series is at 7 p.m. tonight with Midland's Pete Janicki facing Wichita's Glenn Dishman, who are both new to the Texas League this year ... Wichita's Pugh now has three hits in five at-bats, with a homer, double and two RBIs ... Wichita pitchers walked seven Angels, five of which scored ... Catcher Fausto Tejero is the only Angel starter left without a hit, but has walked three times, scored twice and has an RBI ... Harkrider made the Angels first error of the year in the second, but the UT grad could make fans stop thinking about some of the greats of the past like Shawon Dunston and Gary DiSarcino to name two. Harkrider made three brilliant plays at short and isn't afraid to give up his body to stop a ball...

Mother pleads for understanding

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — Ruby Strawberry knows how her troubled middle son Darryl is perceived by the world at large. Naturally, she does not think it fair.

"It hurts me, being a mother," the mother of the Dodgers outfielder said. "For instance, you look at what happened to Magic (Johnson). That must have hurt his mother, too. And what happened with Magic might have affected other people, too. Darryl only hurt himself. But Magic is treated as a royal king and Darryl is a dog. Why is that?

"If you live long enough, you're going to make mistakes. Everybody wants to look at the negative, but sometimes we need to just forgive people. We're not here to judge."

Ruby Strawberry, speaking from the office of the Blood Covenant Church in Pomona where she works as a secretary, said her son "just got off on the wrong path," but appears to be ready to redirect himself through the substance-abuse treatment center he entered Thursday night.

But although she sensed the pressures of her son's turbulent and very public life were catching up to him, she admitted even she was surprised by his disappearance last week and subsequent admission of a drug problem.

"I'm not a prying person. My children know they can call me. But I guess there are some things you can't talk to your mother about," she said. "I was surprised, by what it actually was, but I saw a lot of pressures on Darryl. As a mother, sometimes we're the last ones to see because we're trying to help him solve the problems.

"I've known the pressure's always been there for Darryl, right out of high school. Trying to live up to people's expectations is hard and he's had a lot to carry. We must remember that he's a human being, too, but people seem to think he should be superhuman."

The pressures of trying to salvage his career after two years of back problems, trying to win Los Angeles fans back over after his ill-chosen remarks during the October fires and the looming threat of indictment for tax evasion were well known.

What wasn't known was another strain on Strawberry's life. Ruby, 53, underwent surgery to remove a cancerous tumor only a few days before Strawberry left for spring training in February. Darryl, who lived with his mother after his parents split up when he was 13, took the news very hard and kept in touch with her almost every day.

"I realize there were things bothering Darryl a long time before this came out, but it was another part of all the different things he was going through," Ruby said. "When we found out the tumor was malignant, he said, 'Mom, why didn't you tell me?'

"I just knew it was something I had to go in and take care of. But when the doctor told him and Michael (Strawberry's older brother, a former Los Angeles police officer), they were devastated."

Ruby said the surgery was a success and she is in remission. Now she hopes to help her son heal, too.

REBELS: Nunn leaps over competition at Tall City

competition. Midland High was second with 138 while Lee was third with 102.

Among the missing were the Abilene High and Abilene Cooper boys and girls teams, along with Permian's and Odessa's girls. The Odessa boys were without their relays and regional qualifier in the 400 Russell Collins.

Lee's Michael Nunn pulled off the best performance for the host teams, garnering gold medals in the long jump and the triple jump. Nunn, also competes in the high jump, did not enter that event because it was run at the same time as the triple. Nunn broke the meet record in the long jump of 23 feet, 6½ inches set by Roosevelt Fort of Lee in 1982 with a leap of 23-9¼.

Lee coach Mike Quimby said he was more excited about the Rebels' 400 relay, which nearly nipped Permian's team despite the fact that Mojo had sprinting star John Williams anchoring the relay.

The Rebels had good handoffs all the way around and Melvin Dunson, who later beat Williams in the 100, made up about six meters on Permian but came up short with a time of 41.65 to Permian's 41.60. Jerry Stanford, Marlon Henry and Roderick Mayfield made up the rest of the Lee relay. Midland dropped the baton on the second exchange and was disqualified.

"I was real proud with the way the sprint relay competed," Quimby said. "They've been running well but it was good to see them have a good race right before district."

Mayfield also competed well for Lee in both hurdle races. He and Permian's Brandon Berger have somewhat of a rivalry going since the season began and Berger got the first punch with a winning time of 14.15 in the 110 highs to Mayfield's 14.26. Mayfield, however, took the tape in the 300 intermediates in a time of 38.72 to Berger's 39.34.

The Midland boys also ran well but came up short in the 1,600 relay. Again the culprit was Permian. The Bulldogs led for the first three legs but LaVorick Robinson, who raced to the 200 title just minutes earlier, was able to overtake Roy Coats on the final stretch in a time of 3:19.46. Midland finished in 3:19.49 behind Tim Warren, Charlie Juarez, Charles Christ and Coats.

The officials at the meet kept a furious pace between events and Midland coach Monty Stumbaugh said that Juarez, who had moments earlier cruised to victory in the 400, was still sick in the locker-room just before he ran the second leg.

"I thought we did well, though," Stumbaugh said. "That is the best we've run all year. We switched around our runners a little bit and I think it helped. We'll probably do the same at district and there the kids will have a little bit more time to rest in between events. The kids are kind of mad, though, because this is the first time Permian has beaten us."

Juarez ran away with the 400 in a time of 50.52 while defending district champ Christ won the 800 for Midland in a time of 1:59.59.

The Midland girls were led by speed — namely that of Toya Zachry, Teresa Nobles, Courtni Harris and Ogonna Merritt. The quartet had great handoffs in the 400 relay to beat Central with a time of 50.30.

Harrison was second in the 100 hurdles in a time of 17.12 while Zachery won the 100 in a time of 12.59. Merritt and Nobles blazed to a 1-2 finish in the 200. Merritt broke the tape in a time of 26.97 while Nobles finished in 27.22.

"It's a great time for us to compete like we did right before district," Nix said. "The girls are pumped and now they can see the future of what they're capable of. They really came together as a team."

Lee coach Bill Martin said his team doesn't have the foot speed that Midland has and thinks his team competes better in the middle distances. They proved that by taking three places in the 400 and winning the mile relay.

"We'd like to think the mile relay is our best event," Martin said. "The girls have worked really hard on that and with our speed, we can compete better at that distance."

Farrah Fisher, Andrea Neal, Kristen Dunn and Kelly Erl walked away with the 1,600 relay in a time of 4:22.66 to Central's 4:26.17. The Lady Bobcats should improve in that event and in the 400 with the return of Garcia.

Erl (1:02.83) finished second in the 400 behind Kim Hennessy (1:02.60) of Midland while Lady Rebels Andrea Neal was fourth in 1:03.78 and Kim Ward was sixth in 1:06.13.

Lee's Marshel Tennen won the shot put with a throw of 33-5 while teammate Shanika Hopes was second in the discus.

Relay posts year's best time

■ Carl Lewis guides the Santa Monica Track Club to the world's best 4X100-meter relay time this year.

AUSTIN — Carl Lewis ran the anchor leg as the Santa Monica Track Club set a Texas Relays record and posted the fastest time in the world this year in the 4x100-meter relay Saturday.

■ Texas Relays

Mike Marsh, Leroy Burrell and Floyd Heard built a big lead for Lewis, who ran the last leg of the race into a gusting wind of 2 meters per second as the 67th annual Texas Relays came to a close.

The team posted a mark of 37.89, breaking the previous Texas Relays record in the invitational division of 38.94 set by Santa Monica last year. The world record — set in 1992 by Marsh, Dennis Mitchell, Burrell and Lewis — is 37.4.

"We were very happy with the time we ran today because of the wind," Lewis said. "We came in expecting to try to break 38 seconds. But once we saw the weather conditions we were just shooting for the low 38s.

"I am pleased that we are in this type of shape so early in the season," he said. "It can lead to only good things the rest of the year."

Burrell, a former world record holder in the 100 meters with a best time of 9.88, posted a wind-aided time of 9.86 on Saturday, matching the world-record time held by Lewis. Because the runners had a wind of 2.47 meters per second at their back, the time won't be recognized in the record books.

Wind must be 2 meters per second or lower for record times to be recognized.

Burrell edged Daniel Effiong, who was ranked third in the world in the event last spring with a time of 9.98. Effiong finished Saturday in 9.94.

Tech, TCU sweep through SWC foes

Associated Press

LUBBOCK — Saul Bustos hit a three-run homer and Mitch King had a three-run double in the bottom of the eighth Saturday to rally Texas Tech to an 11-8 victory over Houston in the second game of a doubleheader.

The Red Raiders also won the first game, 11-4, to sweep the three-game series from Houston. Tech improved its record to 31-11 and 7-2 in the Southwest Conference, while Houston fell to 25-19 and 4-8.

In the second game, Tech was down 8-2 in the eighth when Bustos homered. The Red Raiders scored a total of nine runs in the inning to seal the victory.

Tech reliever Eric Newman (3-2) earned the win in 1 2-3 innings of work. Shane Buteaux (5-3) took the loss.

In the first game, Tech was led by Jason Totman, who was 2-of-4 and had five RBIs and a triple. Jason Whittle (8-3) earned the win, while Matt Beech (4-3) took the loss.

TCU 4-4, No. 9 Texas 2-3

FORT WORTH — Adam Robson hit home runs in both games of a doubleheader Saturday as Texas Christian beat No. 9 Texas, 4-2 and 4-3.

The victories completed a three-game sweep for the Horned Frogs (26-14, 7-2 Southwest Conference), who beat Texas (28-15, 6-6) in their first matchup Friday.

Robson hit a homer in the first inning of both games and was 3-for-6 on the day with six RBIs.

The Longhorns were led by Shea Morenz, who was 3-for-6 on the day with two RBIs.

Rice 7-12, Baylor 4-9

HOUSTON — Jose Cruz hit a two-run homer and had six RBI to lead Rice to a victory over Baylor in the second game of a doubleheader.

The Owls (28-12, 9-3 Southwest Conference) also won the first game.

In the second game, Cruz was 4-for-4. His homer in the fourth inning put the Owls ahead for good.

MIDLAND CHAMBER NEWS

Angels, Chamber set Pack the Park festivities

The pitch may be high, inside or straight across the plate, but it will be great entertainment for everyone Monday April 11, Tuesday April 12 and Wednesday April 13 at Angels Stadium.

For the 19th straight year, the Chamber and the Angels invite all Midlanders to show their support by filling the stands these nights. Monday and Tuesday the Angels take on Wichita and Friday it's a match-up with the always-tough El Paso Diablos. Game times are 7 p.m.

The Chamber has a limited number of free tickets or fans can buy regular-price tickets at the stadium.

Small & big businesses meet at Networking Breakfast

If you own a small business, you know how challenging it is to approach a large corporation or organization, especially if you are selling your product or service. Sometimes just finding the right person to talk to can be difficult.

Ironically, large organizations often want to do business with local small businesses - especially "historically under-utilized businesses" or HUBS. These are typically businesses owned by minorities or women.

Purchasing managers of large companies outline their current needs and small business owners are introduced. About 8 to ten small businesses talk for two minutes each about their product or service. Afterward, buyers and sellers exchange business cards.

The next networking breakfast will be Tuesday, April 19, from 7:30 to 8:30 a.m. at the Midland College Student Center, 3600 N. Garfield.

The meeting room opens at 7 a.m.

Cost is $5 and includes breakfast. Call 684-4100 for further information.

Marketing seminar provides low-cost info

On Wednesday, April 20, the Chamber's Small Business Council presents "Marketing on a Small Business Budget." from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

This quarterly luncheon forum will be held at Midland Center, Room 5, lower level. Cost is only $5.

Topics include:

- The difference between marketing, selling & advertising
- Defining your product or service
- Defining your target market
- Strategic planning
- Preparing a marketing budget

Sponsors of this luncheon forum are Morrison, Reinert & Company, Inc., Certified Public Accountants and BenMark Supply Company.

Karl Painter of the UTPB Small Business Development Center is featured speaker.

Pete Sampras returns a shot against Sweden's Henrik Halm during the Japan Open Saturday. Sampras won 6-2, 6-1 and will face Michael Chang today in the finals.

Sampras vaults to finals; Sabatini wins

Associated Press

■ Tennis Roundup

TOKYO — Top-seeded Pete Sampras and second-seeded Michael Chang won semifinal matches Saturday to set up an all-American final in the Japan Open.

Sampras, the defending champion, defeated Henrik Holm of Sweden 6-2, 6-1 in just 67 minutes.

Chang beat third-seeded Boris Becker 7-6 (7-2), 6-2.

Kimiko Date, the top-seeded woman player who is seeking her third consecutive Japan Open title, moved into the final with a victory over fellow Japanese Naoko Sawamatsu 6-4, 6-2.

Date's opponent will be Amy Frazier, who advanced earlier.

Sampras, the world's No. 1 player, will be going for his sixth victory of the season when he plays Chang.

Chang beat Becker with deep shots and well-placed passing shots while Becker failed to control his shots, hitting passing shots either long or wide.

Becker slammed seven service aces but doublefaulted six and hit 60 percent of his first services to Chang's two aces and 70 percent.

Conde De Godo

BARCELONA, Spain — Richard Krajicek of the Netherland came through with a 6-4, 6-2 victory over Haiti's Ronald Agenor in the semifinals and will play Carlos Costa for the title in the Conde de Godo ATP tournament.

Costa, seeded sixth, eliminated fellow Spaniard Alex Corretja 6-3, 6-3.

The seventh-seeded Krajicek is playing in his first singles event since taking five months off because of tendinitis in both knees.

He has won every match in straight sets, including a 7-5, 6-3 quarterfinal win over No. 2 seed Sergi Bruguera of Spain, the 1993 French Open champion.

Bausch & Lomb Championships

AMELIA ISLAND, Fla. — Gabriela Sabatini felt there was no way she could lose.

Playing with renewed confidence, Sabatini started quickly and finished strong in a 6-2, 6-4 victory over Lindsay Davenport in the semifinals of the Bausch & Lomb Championships.

The No. 4 seed advanced to the final of a tournament for the first time in nearly a year and will try today to win her first title since the 1992 Italian Open against either Martina Navratilova or defending champion Arantxa Sanchez Vicario.

Sabatini, who hasn't been in a final since losing to Steffi Graf in last May's German Open, won the last three games of the first set and led 4-0 in the second before Davenport, the sixth seed, rallied to stay in the match.

Davenport, coming off an upset of No. 2 Conchita Martinez in the quarterfinals, won four consecutive games to pull even. However, she didn't rattle Sabatini, who broke the teenager's serve in the ninth game to regain control.

When Sabatini ran down a shot and returned it between her legs to win the first point of the 10th game, she knew it was her day — and her match.

The victory was the third for Sabatini in five career matches against Davenport.

Patterson, others stand behind Indiana coach

By Harvey Araton
N.Y. Times News Service

Neil Reed is a coach's son. Abilene Cooper star Andrae Patterson is an Air Force brat. Reed is a 6-foot-2-inch point guard, Patterson a 6-9 power forward. Reed is white, Patterson is black. They became fast friends last summer when their lives intersected at Bob Knight.

When Reed announced he would play next season for Indiana University, there were classmates at East Jefferson High School in Metairie, La., who feared he had lost his mind. When Patterson said he was going to Knight after he graduates Cooper H.S. in Abilene, neighbors sent letters to his home suggesting the local star and member of the school choir re-think his choice.

Didn't they know, Knight's critics asked, what a hot-tempered, self-righteous boor he was?

"I've seen what it's like with my own eyes," said Reed. "I lived in Bloomington. I've been to Coach Knight's practices. That stuff is always being blown out of proportion. I know all those guys. They all say he didn't mean to kick his son. He was trying to kick the chair. He didn't intentionally head-butt Sherron Wilkerson. Even Sherron said so."

I met Reed and Patterson last week, when they roomed together in New York before the McDonald's All-America Game. I wondered, given the negativism surrounding Knight, given the choice to name the Division I program they wished to attend, what would possess them — anyone — to choose IU.

"Loyalty," said Reed. "Every guy who plays for Coach Knight tells you the same thing. It's going to be tough. But if you work hard, he'll always help you out."

"Coach Knight said, 'You'll play good basketball. You'll get a degree. You'll get a good job,'" Patterson said. "It's simple, not like a lot of the others who would say you'll get this and you'll get that."

Some of the best talkers in America undoubtedly are coaches of big-time college athletic programs. They dominate a stage, fill a room up with smoke in record time. Their success, their jobs, depend on being able to sell themselves.

They talk. We listen, often until it is difficult to distinguish legitimate issues from celebrity dogma, student-athlete benefits from the perks that make coaches larger than campus life.

When college basketball's annual tournament telethon climaxed last week, we were reminded by Nolan Richardson that it is not so much a forum for players as it is a soapbox for coaches. The Arkansas coach, however good his intentions, became bigger than his players, than even their championship game against Duke.

When Andrae Patterson's mother visited Bloomington with her son last summer, she wasn't interested in coach's talk. She interviewed players, faculty and students. She consulted relatives in Indianapolis. She studied graduation rates, investigated what kind of jobs Knight's players eventually got.

"People said he is tough but fair," said Brenda Patterson. "The graduation rate was something like 90 percent. I said, 'How bad can this man be?'

"My oldest boy, David, was a ballplayer, too. We sent him to college in Minnesota. He didn't go for a degree. He played ball. He's 29 now. He can only look back and regret what he didn't do with his chance.

"I don't want Andrae to be 25 and have to look back with regret. If it takes someone being hard on him, fine. If he isn't doing what he's supposed to, then I want Bobby Knight to be hard on him. That's his job. I'm putting my son in his care."

NOTICE OF APPLICATION
DOCKET NO. 08-0205114

Notice is hereby given that the applicant, Parker & Parsley Development Company, P.O. Box 3178, Midland, Texas 79702, has made application under the provisions of Railroad Commission Statewide Rule 38 (16 Tex. Admin. Code Section 3.38). Applicant seeks exception to the between well distance requirement by recognition of its Midkiff Unit (Lease ID. No. 15254) as an entity for density purposes in the Spraberry (Trend Area) Field, Midland and Upton Counties, Texas. The Midkiff Unit is comprised of 23,161 acres, more or less, located in Block 38, Twp. 4 South, Block 38, Twp. 5 South and Block 37, Twp. 5 South, T & P Railway Company Survey, Midland and Upton Counties, Texas.

By the approval of this application Parker & Parsley would be exempted from compliance with the between-well spacing rule as to wells within the subject unit and would not be required to file proration plats for any wells until the unit has been drilled to final development.

Pursuant to the terms of Rule 38(e), this application may be granted administratively if no protest to the application is received. An affected person is entitled to protest this application. Affected persons include the operators and unleased mineral interest owners of all adjacent offset tracts, and the operators and unleased mineral interest owners of all tracts nearer to the proposed well than the prescribed minimum lease-line spacing distance.

If a hearing is called, the applicant has the burden to prove the need for an exception. A protestant should be prepared to establish standing as an affected person, and to appear at the hearing either in person or a qualified representative and protest the application with cross-examination or presentation of a direct case. The rules of evidence are applicable in the hearing. If you have questions regarding this application, please contact the applicant's representative, Van Rodgers, Senior Landman, at (915) 683-4768.

If you have any questions regarding the hearing procedure, please contact Carey Holtzendorf with the Commission at (512) 463-6718.

IF YOU WISH TO REQUEST A HEARING ON THIS APPLICATION, YOU MUST FILL OUT, SIGN AND MAIL OR DELIVER TO THE AUSTIN OFFICE OF THE RAILROAD COMMISSION OF TEXAS A NOTICE OF INTENT TO APPEAR IN PROTEST. A COPY OF THE INTENT TO PROTEST MUST ALSO BE MAILED OR DELIVERED ON THE SAME DATE TO APPLICANT AT THE ADDRESS SHOWN ABOVE. THIS INTENT TO APPEAR IN PROTEST MUST BE RECEIVED IN THE RAILROAD COMMISSION'S AUSTIN OFFICE BY MAY 9, 1994. IF NO PROTEST IS RECEIVED WITHIN SUCH TIME, THE REQUESTED PERMIT WILL BE GRANTED ADMINISTRATIVELY.

PERMIT WILL BE GRANTED ADMINISTRATIVELY.

Zack Swaney McKandles

We wish to thank all our friends and friends we did not know we had since the loss of our little Zack. We are very greatfull for the clothing, furnishings and money so many of you have sent. We wish to thank the fire department for their help and support and the people at the hospital for being so kind. To Johnny Gomez who risked his life to try and get to Zack we thank you most of all. May God Bless all of you.

Sharon, Mike & Jennifer
McKandles and Pat Swaney

Family Character

Located in the prestigious Warwick subdivision, this elegant five bedroom house, is perfect for those who appreciate the finer things in life and who need a lot of space.

Recent renovations to the house have resulted in a home with a unique ambience: the totally remodeled kitchen, the addition of a second sequestered bedroom suite and a whole host of decorative and structural additions have created a family residence with real character.

As befits the area, this house at 2301 North 'L' Street, has a classical 'red-brick' exterior complemented with a wood shingle roof. These earthy tones, coupled with the mature trees which surround the property, are reminiscent of older towns in milder climes.

Great attention to detail has been lavished throughout the house, but no-where is this more obvious than in the open-plan kitchen and family room.

New lighting, appliances and decor have resulted in the kitchen being spacious and convenient enough for formal entertaining as well as practical enough for family suppers: the point here is flexibility.

The family's den has received new decor throughout and sets the tone for the design themes, such as the white-painted plantation shutters.which are to be found throughout the house.

The addition of a new master bedroom suite has created masses of extra space in the house, enough for the addition of a home office and large utility room.

As what used to be the garage is now the master suite, there is now a brand new 3-car garage complete with work space at the side of the building: an example of how this house has grown.

There is an opportunity to view this house, listed at $235,000, this afternoon between 2 p.m. and 4 p.m., Sandy Scott of Remax, which is holding a city-wide open-house on all its properties, will be on hand to answer questions and to provide tours of the property.

KENT KWIK

WHO, ME --- WORK IN A CONVENIENCE STORE?

Like most Kent Team Members, you probably never had a dream of working in a convenience store when you were a kid. But you probably didn't like a lot of things when you were a kid that you like now.

Talk to our Team members on the job. They'll tell you that Kent Oil is the premier retail employer in the Permian Basin. It's not unusual for our Team Members to average 5 -20% more than their base salary on an annual basis due to our bonus plans. That means if your salary is $5.00 an hour, that you could earn $5.25-$6.00 an hour annually with your bonus figured in! We have individual, store and store group bonuses. Why would you want to work at any other retail business?

In addition, 95% of our store managers started at the entry-level and worked their way up in the company. It takes an average of six months to become an assistant manager (earning $5.50 an hour and up, before bonuses) and an average of another six months to become a store manager (starting at $375/week --- and our top managers made over $30,000 last year!)

We'll give you strong initial and ongoing management training to help you learn and grow in our industry. We'll give you 40 hours a week (if you want them.) We have part-time hours available too. If you want to work full-time, some night and/or evening hours are required. A limited number of manager trainee positions are available for qualified applicants.

If all of this interests you, please come by our office for initial screening from 8-3 Monday through Friday. The first step is to take one hour of testing (math, reading, and work attitudes) which tells us if you have the potential to be a good candidate for our team. Please pick up an application at one of our locations, fill it out, and bring it with you when you come for testing. We also do criminal and credit background checks, and a drug screen is required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
- ★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
- ★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
- ★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- ★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?

Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?

LOSS CONTROL REPRESENTATIVE

For over 85 years, Federated Mutual Insurance has been providing comprehensive solid insurance coverage to families and businesses. Today, we are a highly respected multi-line company with assets totaling in excess of $2 billion. Our continued success and growth have prompted our search for a knowledgeable individual whose dedication to product and service excellence matches our own.

We are seeking a self-starter capable of working under minimal supervision to be our Loss Control Representative based in the Lubbock, Texas area. This position requires 60% overnight travel. The territory consists of a major portion of west Texas and a portion of eastern and southern New Mexico. Primary duties involve conducting fire and safety surveys, preparing building evaluations using a laptop computer, and developing safety programs with our commercial insureds.

The person selected for this position must be currently certified as a FIELD SAFETY REPRESENTATIVE by the Texas Workmans Compensation Commission or eligible for this certification. Individuals generally eligible for certification possess a bachelor's degree in science, engineering or industrial safety, or have earned the Registered Professional Engineer, Certified Safety Professional, Certified Industrial Hygienist, Occupational Health and Safety Technologist, Associate in Loss Control management designation or the World Safety Organization Specialist, Executive or Manager designations or have ten years of active, documentable experience in the field of occupational safety and health. A professional manner and appearance along with good computer skills are a must for this position.

FEDERATED MUTUAL INSURANCE offers competitive salaries commensurate with education and experience and generous benefits that include travel expense reimbursement and company car.

OIL REPORT

BRIEFING

Prices recover

Oil prices showed unexpected strength this past week, gaining $1 to $15.79 a barrel on Monday on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Traders traded up the price of oil largely on rumors of production cutbacks by non-OPEC producers and civil unrest in Algeria, the world's 17th largest oil producer.

Former TRC member Kent Hance, recently returned from the recent OPEC meeting said Thursday that he expected oil prices to average around $16.75 for the year. That delays on bringing Iraq oil back into the market was still a factor in pricing as is all out production by Iran.

Local crude purchasers put the posted price, the actual price for a barrel of oil, at $14.25 a barrel. This was the highest level seen since early February, when the posted price hit $14.50 a barrel, boosted by record cold weather in the Northeast.

Prices traded in a narrow 5 cent range part of the week then, late in the week, futures prices closed at $15.58 a barrel and the posted price at $14 a barrel, weakened slightly be reports of increased OPEC production and talk of more shipments from Great Britain and Africa.

Natural gas prices closed late in the week at $2.085 per thousand cubic feet on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Supplier alliances

Suppliers of goods and services are, being subjected to new ways of thinking as they learn to cope with the new move toward alliances. Its part of a search for win/win situations in the oilpatch.

Rig Count

Rig activity increased for the last week of March, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

During a holiday-shortened week, the Permian Basin rig count rose five to 108 and surpassed the year-ago count of 105.

Eddy and Lea counties, N.M. were the most active in the Basin with 12 rigs each, followed by Sutton and Glasscock counties, eight rigs each.

Among major producing states, Texas showed the sharpest gain, seven rigs, while California, North Dakota and Ohio posted the sharpest drop, one rig each.

Oil field alliances take over

■ New partner practice is changing structure of oilpatch.

By Julie A. Wiseman

For a decade Permian Basin producers and suppliers have wrestled intensely to come up with a strategy, system or plan that would allow them to remain profitable as oil prices drift generally downward. Now many are looking toward alliances as the winning strategy.

When boiled down to its basic components an alliance is a commitment from two or more separate entities to act as a team to take on industry challenges to profitability.

A natural step from internal team building, successful outside alliance teams are apt to include both executives from each company who set the strategy and a cross-company committee of people involved in the daily operations.

Nothing new, the concept of using alliances to improve the bottom line was perhaps first adopted by the automobile industry. Detroit's giants realized that they could cut their costs by cutting their number of suppliers.

That worked so well that the companies went one step further by forming alliances with suppliers. By insuring the suppliers of their continuing business, the customer companies were able to get better prices and play a role in directing the suppliers' research programs. With the arrangement in place the customers could cut their own research cost.

Trading crude oil for CO_2

■ Major, independent partnership could set the pace for things to come.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

A unique alliance between a major oil company, a major pipeline company and an independent oil company may set an example that could shape the future of enhanced oil recovery in the Permian Basin for decades to come.

In what is probably the first company to company alliance in which a major oil company swaps CO_2 for oil, Amoco Production Co., Enron Liquids Pipeline Co. and Union Royalty of Midland have joined in a venture that will transform the aging and declining El Mar (Delaware) field in Loving County into a new an viable CO_2 tertiary project.

Alliances are 'made in heaven'

■ Consultant works at making perfect marriages between oil companies and vendors

By Julie A. Wiseman

If the supplier and producer are the bride and groom and the oil patch the chapel, then consultant Bob Sevin wants to be the preacher and marriage counselor.

When Sevin talks about alliances, he talks as one called to a holy task of joining oil patch companies in special unions. He sprinkles matrimonial images throughout his description of oil field alliances.

Sevin's first opportunity to take part in such a union was in 1989 or 1990 when he assisted Fiberflex and Unocal in forming a Permian Basin alliance. Since that time he has helped negotiate alliances throughout the oilpatch and has worked on an equal number that never made it through the final courting stages. One of few doing seminars on alliances he calls them "pre-marriage enrichment retreats?"

John Paul Pitts/ Reporter-Telegram

"An alliance is like a marriage," Sevin says. "It needs to be made in heaven."

Barring that possibility, good oil field counseling and preparation are recommended to improve the odds of forming lasting, beneficial relationships.

Since "alliance" has become the buzz word in the industry, many energy-based companies are anxious to get in on the trend. The problem is they are not sure what an alliance is, little on how to form them. Moreover, Sevin muses, they don't know where to go to get information on alliances.

Many companies have sought consultants outside the oil industry.

"They have MBAs from Harvard, but they don't know nothin' 'bout the oil patch," Sevin maintains, comparing the choice to buying picante sauce from "New York City!"

With 35 years of experience in the oil and gas industry, Seven offers some advice to would-be alliance members: The two biggest problems with marriages, oil patch or otherwise, are lack of trust and money.

"Many customers look at alliances as a way to beat a supplier down on pricing and get a top service guy at a cheap price. You can't do that. Once they realize they

The four functions of alliance

■ MEASURE VALUE — Measurement of a supplier's value to the customer must be established first, and should be a measurement of true value in the expertise a supplier can provide.

■ REVIEW PERFORMANCE — Trust displayed as a supplier builds on his performance history is a key ingredient in reducing total operating costs and measuring the supplier's commitment to the industry. Alliances should never be formed based on promises alone.

■ MANAGE COMMITMENT — There must be commitment from all involved from upper management down to the people in the field. An alliance is an opportunity in work clothes.

■ WIN/WIN — Customer wins when a quality product and/or service is provided.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

What's behind the Coastal alliance?

When one begins to put together a comprehensive editorial review of oilpatch alliances, as we have done this week, one name keeps popping up — Coastal Management Corp.

Pitts

"Coastal is the model."... "Coastal is probably the best going today."... "Coastal has had some very good successes with alliances."..."Coastal is setting the standard."

You hear it from competitors, from those inside and outside the alliances. So what's all the bally hoo about?

"It's all about a win-win situation. Everyone in the oilpatch is looking for win-win arrangements, and I think we found one in the Coastal alliance," says James Williams, Southeast Regional Manager for Highland Pump, the pump side of the alliance.

As contract operator for Meridian Oil of the 80,000-acre Waddell Ranch field in Crane County, Coastal Management Corp. is responsible for production from 14 horizons in 47 fields as well as exploitation, accounting and administration. Owners in the Waddell are: Meridian, Exxon, Permian Basin Royalty Trust, Penn Resources and Torch Energy, and Coastal is charged with operating the project as efficiently and as profitably as possible for its owners.

When Coastal Management assumed management of the field on a two-year contract in 1991, it found that one of the first things it had to address was the unusually high rate of well failures in the field, which were approaching 200 per month. It immediately set out to form a management-vendor alliance to tackle the problems and turn the failure curve downward.

The alliance was composed of a Coastal representative, well service company representative, pump company rep and chemcical company rep. Teams were designed to meet at the field level and management level to concentrate the best expertise possible toward solving problems.

Three years later, the alliance has not only had extraordinary success in curbing well failures and keeping the Waddell Ranch pumping along at 7,500 barrels per day, but it has also appears to have been the spark to ignite a new interest in alliances in the Permian Basin, and has become something of a bell cow for vendor-company alliances. Similar alliances, patterned after Coastal, are being considered around the Basin.

Consider the results: When the alliance was initiated in 1991, the well failure rate from all causes — pulling, pump and corrosion — was 194. Today it is well under 50. On the eastern side of the ranch, failures have gone from 81 to 27.

"Overall, we have had about an 80 percent reduction in failures as a direct result of this team work," said Jim Byerlotzer, vice president and general manager of Pride Petroleum Services, the well service part of the team. Of the 70-80 rigs Pride has operating each day, Byerlotzer says about 35 percent of them are involved in alliances around the Basin. He speaks highly of the alliance concept and the Coastal alliance in particular.

Discovered in 1959, the El Mar represented the second largest accumulation of hydrocarbons in the Delaware-Brushy Canyon, second only to the neighboring Tunstill field.

Thanks to a waterflood instituted in the field 10 years after discovery, the field has produced 17.5 million barrels to date, but production rates have declined to only 130 bopd. Now, thanks to the creative Amoco-Union Royalty-Enron deal, the operator hopes to recover an additional 10 percent of the original oil in place, and extend the economic life of the field another 20 years.

"Without this innovative deal we would have probably had to abandon the reserves left in the El Mar," said Tom McKnight, owner and operator of the El Mar field.

"We have worked out an arrangement that we think is unprecedented, in which Amoco essentially trades CO_2 for an interest in Union Royalty's future oil production," said Bill Dukes, business development manager for Amoco's North Permian Basin Unit. "By pioneering this innovative arrangement, we are able to breathe life into an oil field that might otherwise dry up."

To bring CO_2 to the El Mar, Enron agreed to build a 40-mile lateral line from the Central Basin system in the Dollarhide field in Winkler County. Enron does not take oil for its part in the venture, but expects that the El Mar connection will open other CO_2 business in the area.

"There are several, smaller candidates nearby and we hope the availability of CO_2 will stimulate business," said Russell Martin, Enron manager of busiess development.

McKnight, an aerospace engineer turned Schlumberger executive turned independent, praised the complex arrangement, which required over two years of negotiations, a "synergy" that was good for all parties — a win-win-win situation.

"We are probably the bell cow for these type of deals, but I see such alliances as the future of the Basin, as majors and independents join in partnerships to capitalize upon the strengths of each."

He said the partnership marries the cost control management expertise of an independent oil company like Union Royalty with the technical expertise of a major like Amoco, and also allows for the CO_2 supplier to share both the cost of capital and the investment risk with the producer.

Amoco engineers David Merchant and Ron Brokmeyer provided reservoir management support studies that indicated the CO_2 flood would work. No pilot project was necessary, said McKnight. In other services that were factored into the contract, Amoco will also provide monitoring studies for the life of the project, while Union Royalty will be responsible for day-to-day operations and capital improvements.

The cost of converting producers to injectors, which involves putting in all new noncorrosive plumbing, is about $15,000. The elimination of electrical costs at the wells, however, drops this cost and factors into the payout.

The field will be flooded in four stages. Phase one, now underway, involves the conversion of seven producers to injectors. Each well will inject about 7 Mmcfd of CO_2 gas, or 1 Mmcfd per well.

There is no on site compression or processing in the field. Gas is delivered to the field header at 1900 psi and choked back to 500 psi for injection. When the CO_2 breaks through in six months, the wet gas along with incidental amounts of natural gas will be reinjected.

If there are inefficiencies involved with re-injecting the wet gas stream, McKnight says avoiding the cost of processing far offsets it. He notes that inefficiencies involved in re-injecting wet gas usually involve San Andres type reservoirs.

"We don't expect any problems," he added.

The El Mar reservoir was so similar to the Geraldine reservoir that neither McKnight nor Amoco thought a pilot was necessary. McKnight said he bought the field in 1988, because it was a "look-alike" for Conoco's Geraldine field, another close by Delaware field that had experienced good response to CO_2 flooding.

McKnight, who joined George Horst in 1983 to form the independent oil company of Horst & McKnight after serving six years as the District Manager for Schlumberger, had an eye for the potential in the El Mar field.

He later bought out George Horst and in 1992, the company became Union Royalty. Over the next five years he increased his interest in the field.

Other owners were Pennzoil, Conoco, Chevron, and Exxon, and over a five year period, with the help of energy loans from Midland National Bank, McKnight was able to buy them all out.

"Midland National Bank has played an essential role in this project," said McKnight, "in financing both capital investment and acquisition costs. Thanks to bank financing, we don't have any investors."

Purchased when oil was $12 a barrel, McKnight said he bought the El Mar strictly on its upside potential and thereafter became very tightly focused on the potential of recovering large amounts of oil from the field. He began to systematically sell other production and make loans to buy out other operators in the field, and all the while dreamed of how he could establish a CO_2 flood in the field.

"That was when I hit upon the idea of a trade. I started negotiatons with Enron, and they provided Shell, Amoco and Mobil contacts. Amoco seemed the most interested in a trade, so we went with them."

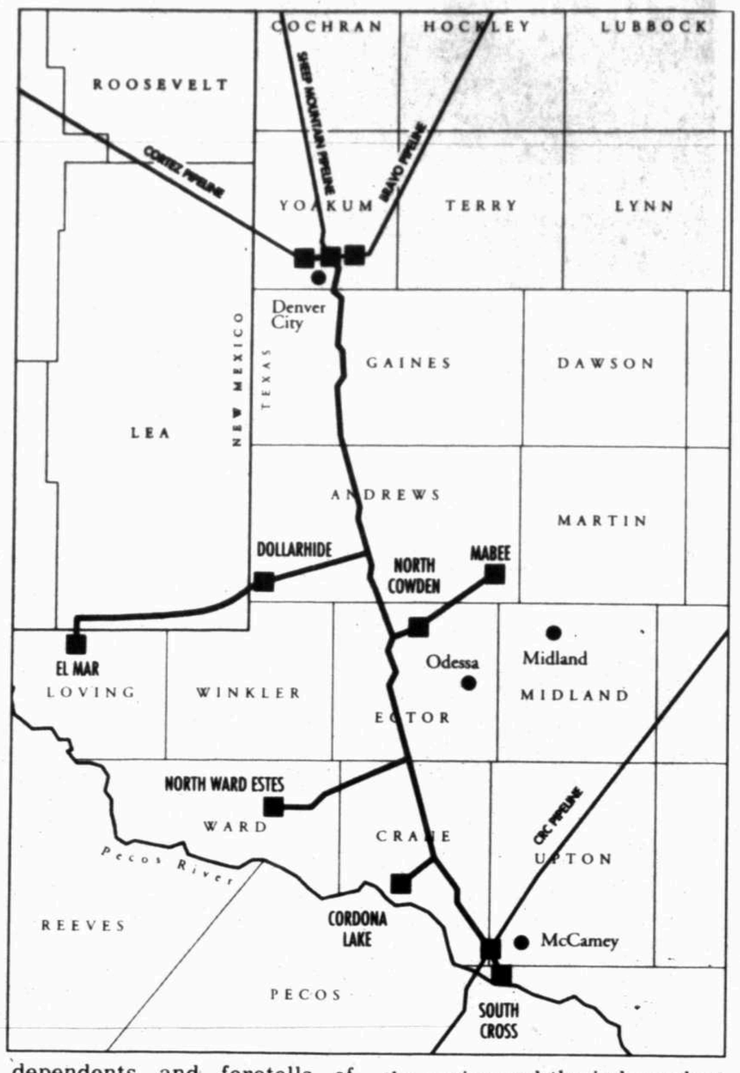
Said McKnight: "I am very proud of my relationship with Amoco. As you might imagine the contracts in a trade like this are very complex, but so far we have had no snags. I feel like I am working with warm-blooded people."

While the pie will be smaller, Union Royalty will still make money on the deal and Amoco will have traded its CO_2 for oil, and reserves that might have been abandoned will be produced.

"I think this signals a new era of cooperation in the oil patch between majors and independents and foretells of things to come. These type of arrangements may be just the thing for independents to look at, as waterfloods come to an end."

He said such deals allow both the major and the independent to do what they do best.

"At the least," he said, "it is a formula that will keep both busy until better times come along."



PITTS: Coastal has benchmark alliance

(From 1E)

The old system for well service companies was: "This is what we want, and this is how we want it done. We want the lowest bid possible — even if you lose money. And if you drop the ball one time we will run your you-know-what off!" It was not uncommon for a well-servicing company to lose a job, even though it was doing a good job, because another company offered $5 an hour less.

Coastal's alliance in the Waddell, however, has changed the low-bid adversary system to a team system with an eye toward win-win for all. It is an arrangement that has those on the team singing its praises.

"It gives us a base income, because we have rigs going to work everyday at the same place. Our crews love it, because it is steady. They consider working in an alliance choice duty, because they are working toward solutions. They take time to look for pitting and will change out bad rods, and they are always on the lookout for improper handling and makeup. It's everybody looking out for everybody."

It is an attitude that is infectious. Byerlotzer tells the story of the crew that left the alliance and went to work for another operator.

"The crew laid out several damaged rods and would not run them back in the hole until the operator had seen them. They told the operator that if the rods were run back in the hole, he would just have to call them back in a week or so. The operator was so impressed that this is the only crew he will use now."

James Williams says the alliance eliminates finger-pointing, accentuates communication, and opens the door for innovation.

"It allows us all to bring our level of expertise to the team and do what we do best. I don't know of too many companies that have ever asked a pump company what they think, but who knows more about pumps than the people that make and sell them?"

Byerlotzer said Coastal reps not only want to know what you think, but they want you to tell them what you think of them and what they can do to improve.

"When I first took one of my employees to one of these put-it-on-the-table meetings, he was tense and thought we were going to be raked over the coals. He was pleasantly surprised at the outcome."

One suspects that alliances really are a lot like marriages when vendors tell you they are they are more concerned about relationship than revenues. Williams says his pump revenues in the Waddell have decreased by 60 percent in the alliance, but the relationship and mission was right on target.

"The mission was to develop the most efficient and effective integration of operations and service company in order to achieve stated goals and objectives, while benefitting all the team members," said Williams. "I am not as concerned about revenues now, because as Coastal expands and grows, I feel we will expand with them."

Senator seeks input from oil, gas industry

Staff Report

Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, was among those presenting testimony to Sen. Pete Domenici of New Mexico this past week in Hobbs, N.M.

Domenici travelled to Hobbs to hear testimony from various representatives of the oil and gas industry, seeking input from them as to what incentives the industry needed from Congress to improve their economic state.

Spannaus began by observing that he may live in Midland, Texas, "but when it comes to oil and gas issues and the importance of domestic production, there are no state boundaries to favor. What's good for New Mexico is also good for Texas, Oklahoma, all producing states and the nation. Unfortunately, many in Washington don't share this belief.

"In this light, we are delighted to have Senator Domenici serve as Texas' unofficial elected spokesman and congressional servant in Washington, D.C. Many others join me in believing that if Texas is to have the best representation in Washington, we better get Pete to move Southeast — at least to the Midland/Odessa area," he said

The majority of Spannaus' remarks centered on the growing number of environmental regulations that he said are not only threatening the oil and gas industry but other industries as well.

He called for less regulatory control of the industry, insisting that the federal government, through its increasing demands on state governments, is increasingly responsible for dismantling the domestic energy industry.

"While the Secretary of Energy preaches to us that we need to work on our image and we need to bring on board a nationally recognized spokesman like Lee Iacocca, she travels to London, Houston and elsewhere and badmouths us for our poor image and basically says she has little hope for the small independent producer and that her attention must go to the more promising elements of the petroleum business, natural gas and alternate fuels," he said.

Then, Spannaus said, Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary said, after President Clinton's Domestic Natural Gas and Oil Initiative was unveiled in December, that she would begin a renewed effort to educate the public and work with Congress on the importance of natural gas and oil.

According to Spannaus, the iniative consists of three primary strategic activities, the first being advancement and dissemination of natural gas and oil technologies and practices.

"In essence," he said, "this action mandates a working relationship between the federal agencies such as EPA, DOI, including BLM, and others who have a shareholders interest for the benefit of the American people and the environment."

Spannaus told Domenici there is a lack of coordinated effort between federal agencies in regards to environmental decisions, and said regulatory action is causing great economic hardship to area citizens and threatening to dismantle homes, jobs and businesses.

"Not only does the Washington arm of the environmental protection agency and the department of interior, including the Bureau of Land Management, not know what decisions are being made at their subordinate levels, there is no coordination, advanced notice or even a courtesy call made to the accused, nor even calls to the state authority responsible for environmental and petroleum production regulatory control. These are lower level decisions that reflect illogical and irrational decision-making - which usurp individual rights and appear to be movements for nothing less than money, power and control."

"Are we displeased, are we rebellious? You bet we are!" Spannaus stated. "We are bonded together to do anything we can to help you put a stop to the federal government's persecution of the domestic petroleum industry. Yes, price is of great importance to our recovery, but so is lawful protection against a governmental bureaucracy that is spreading infection throughout the total industrial base of the nation.

"Senator, we can press the president and the congress for tax incentives, for a floor price and for import fees, but none of these will kindle a domestic petroleum turnaround until we put a stop to irresponsible decisions in environmental protection and the KGB-style tactics used to force compliance. We know you are with us on this issue. The question is how do we bring the naive, the misinformed and the skeptics over to our side. What's it going to take?"

Mitchell completes five gas producers

THE WOODLANDS — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. reported the completion of five natural gas producers in Limestone County, east central Texas. The development wells' test rates averaged 3.2 million cubic feet of gas per day.

The largest of the gas producers was the J. Jackson Jr. No. 2, which tested at an average daily rate of 4.1 Mmcf on a 10/64 inch choke with 4,500 psi of flowing tubing pressure. Perforations were made between 10696 feet and 10,868 feet in the Cotton Valley Lime formation of the North Personville field.

Four additional Cotton Valley Lime completions and their test rates were:

- The Herod No. 1, 3.8 Mmcfd on a 14/64 inch choke with 2,700 psi of flowing tubing pressure from perforations between 10,778 and 11,036 ft.
- The Browder No. 4, 3 Mmcfd on a 15/64 inch choke with 2,990 psi of flowing tubing pressure from perforations between 10,666 and 10,808 ft.
- The E.L. Smythe No. 5, 2.9 Mmcfd on a 14/64 inch choke with 1,985 psi flowing tubing pressure from perforations between 11,118 and 11,302 ft. and
- The Renfroe No. 3, 2.4 Mmcfd on a 13/64 inch choke with 2,870 psi of flowing tubing pressure from perforations between 10,966 and 11,198 ft.

Mitchell's working interest in the five wells range from 50 percent to 99 percent.

Suppliers cope with rise of alliances

■ Supply companies have mixed reactions to producers' growing preference for alliances.

By Julie A. Wiseman

The alliance concept has pushed Permian Basin producers and suppliers out of a "business as usual" mode and into a transition which may put many suppliers in a tail spin.

Suppliers are finding lengthy questionnaires from loyal customers in their mailboxes. The questionnaires are designed to help producers select a few vendors to interview for possible alliances.

Other customers are sending out notices that they will "bid out" their alliances. Though this is not the true spirit of an alliance, the process is new enough in the oil patch that confusion reigns.

In the midst of these confusing signals being sent by producers, some suppliers are refusing to "bid" for the alliances. They see the process as a ploy to get lower bids, not a genuine attempt to improve team work. They expect this type relationship to be short-lived, so they are standing back and anticipating an opportunity to expand their business after trust has been broken.

Other companies feel their survival depends on getting involved in the process, despite the current confusion.

Oryx Inc. recently awarded an alliance worth $1.2 million to Electric Submersible Pump Inc. in Midland after a process which began as a bid.

Oryx began by bidding out the opportunity to three companies. ESP was already a major supplier for Oryx. Suddenly the company was asked to compete on a basis of low per unit price.

Brian Sevin, an employee of ESP and son of alliance consultant Bob Sevin, worked to explain the benefits of an alliance based on total operating cost rather than per unit price. He felt like competitors, who had nothing to lose on the possibility of gaining a new client, could underbid his per unit price but would not necessarily be as valuable when it came to total operating costs.

ESP was able to pull data which revealed that the company had already saved Oryx $8.2 million over a three-year time period. This was then used to benchmark the expected value of a three-year alliance. ESP prevailed.

This has not always been the case for the local pump company. Several times they have lost the opportunity to form alliances with established customers. In one instance, Conoco was trying to form a world-wide alliance which naturally left the small local pump company in the dark.

ESP is not approaching customers about the possibility of forming alliances, but is attempting to be proactive by gathering and compiling data which will show major customers on a continuing basis a case history of their savings in total operating costs.

With continuing confusion among producers about the nature of alliances, ESP feels like it's risky to approach a current customer who may simply "bid out" the arrangement. In fact, though they are delighted to have some alliances, Sevin said, at times they wish the idea had never visited the oil patch.

Lee Crawley, the new president of Flint Engineering and Construction, said his company is taking a little different approach to this industry transition.

By 1991 Flint had one strong alliance with a major oil company. Without disclosing confidential information, Flint is using this alliance as a benchmark for approaching other customers about forming an alliance. This is a long-term game plan which requires a lot of time in terms of educating customers about the potential benefits of alliances.

Not only is the company spending time like this with customers, they also called Pecos River Learning Center in Santa Fe, N.M. to help them through the process. They had to begin, however, by educating the consulting firm about the nature of business in the oil patch. Crawley feels like the investment of time has been well worth it.

Crawley described the transition time as a move from a win/lose mind-set to a win/win approach. The customer/supplier relationship has traditionally been viewed as a win/lose proposition. The customer felt like the winner when a supplier's profits were minimized. The supplier came out on top when circumstances allowed for higher pricing which cut the customer's profits.

If alliances can help producers raise their profits through increased efficiency and enable suppliers to improve their standing by developing core business with rewards for exceptional performance, then business in the oil patch can become a win/win proposition.

Sevin's seven signs of defective alliances

1. LACK OF LOCAL MANAGEMENT COMMITMENT — A large number of alliances are formed in the home office. This generally creates serious problems at the local level. In many cases, the local managers of the suppliers and customers refuse to become involved in the alliance agreement.
2. ALLIANCES FOR THE WRONG REASONS — Just because other producers are forming alliances does not mean that everyone in the oil patch must do the same. Using the alliance as a way to lower price per unit will increase total operating costs. The customer should emphasize the total operating costs.
3. RUSHING THE COURTSHIP — The longer the courtship, the better chances that the alliance will be successful. In essence, customers should form alliances with suppliers presently involved and in good standing in their business.
4. COMPANY DRIVEN — The Total Quality Management Process teaches that one be customer driven, not company driven. It would be advantageous to form alliances with companies that have a quality process in place.
5. GOING NATION WIDE — An alliance can and should be formed with various suppliers depending on the supplier's capabilities in various geographical areas.
6. LACK OF DATA — The only way to improve on anything is through measurement. It is a mistake to initiate a measurement process AFTER an alliance has been formed. Companies should obtain background data of problems or costs and establish goals that are agreed upon by the supplier and customer for improvement.
7. ABSENCE OF QUALITY AUDIT — A quality audit can qualify many suppliers and may be the determining factor in selecting a supplier. Unfortunately, in some cases, the quality audits are conducted by the customer's steering committee and personality will influence the audit outcome. Having an outside auditor involved can be an asset when making the important decisions for a long term alliance.

ALLIANCES: Idea of forming partnerships hits oil patch

(From 1E)

Within the last five years the idea hit the oil industry. In the Permian Basin, Chevron probably initiated the first alliances in the late eighties as it sought to reduce its number of vendors. By 1990 industry consultant Bob Sevin of Sevico had worked on his first Permian Basin alliance which involved Fiberflex and UNOCAL.

The trend is still in its infancy, but seems to be much more than a fad that will quickly fade.

Alliances are taking on many forms with varying levels of commitment. There are at least three forms: producer/producer alliances, producer/supplier alliances and supplier/supplier alliances.

Producer/producer alliances are perhaps the most challenging to form in the U.S. when it comes to legal issues. Anti-trust laws make this very difficult, though it may be accomplished with a team of lawyers and no mention of market share.

Six majors in Canada formed this type alliance to improve their profitability and ability to compete internationally by sharing "reservoir management practices, drilling methods, maintenance procedures, management of vendor services, and accounting practices," according to the Oil and Gas Journal dated November 8, 1993.

Producer/supplier alliances offer benefits with few legal complications. This is the main type of alliance being pursued in West Texas.

It's not unusual for upper management to set goals requiring a certain percentage of vendors to move into alliance status. Frequently, the people charged with carrying out this process seek to "bid out" the alliance to competing suppliers.

This, however, may throw suppliers into a tail spin as they try to prove their value to an established customer, while simultaneously educating their customers on the team concept of alliances, which emphasize quality and total operating cost rather than per unit pricing.

Many customers are beginning to mail out questions about company operations and capabilities to suppliers. Based on the responses and interviews, producers will then pinpoint alliance prospects.

Suppliers benefit by having assurance of a core of business over a set period of time, provided the terms of the agreement are met.

Oil producers can find the same benefits that the auto industry did in customer/ supplier alliances. There is a tremendous difference, however, because of the service segment of the business. In addition to dealing with product specifications, price and delivery schedules, oil companies depend on service from people. So, oil patch alliances generally include a commitment to put the best skilled people to work on projects for allies. This prevents severe pounding on the unit price, but can lead to lower total operating cost.

ESP, Inc. formed a three year alliance with ORYX. ORYX intends to spend $1.2 million with the supplier. This gives ESP, Inc. some dependable core business.

In turn, ESP, Inc. was able to document for ORYX ways they had already saved ORYX $8.2 million by developing and using a new testing procedure for pumps. ESP's representatives are confident that this kind of cost-saving team work can be extended into the period the alliance will cover.

The third alignment possibility supplier/supplier is also being wisely exploited in West Texas. Oddly enough, a producer was the initiator of these agreements.

Coastal Management Corp., contract operator for Meridian's Waddell Ranch field, frustrated with well failures, facilitated a supplier/supplier alliance so that action teams or well analysis teams could be formed to actually solve the problems. The results have been phenomenal.

Critics expected the pulling unit companies, pump companies and chemical companies to end up in a shouting match, but that was not the case. So far the alliance has saved an estimated $1.8 million on well failures in 1993.

Whether the alliance is producer/producer, producer/supplier or supplier/supplier, the level of commitment and degree of control can vary.

Informal alliances are generally sealed with a handshake and involve the agreement to work together to solve some specific problems.

Formal contracts can be drawn up to define explicit commitments. This generally involves a significant risk for both parties and shared control.

Shared risk alliances go one step further and require the customer to share in the capital outlay that a supplier must make in order to serve the customer in new areas. This may be accomplished through a long term purchasing agreement or by the supplier actually contributing to the capital project.

Despite the value of alliances, many are failing. It goes in a cycle that lasts 12-18 months. As the alliance begins to fail, the parties destroy it and start over again.

"The problem with oil industry alliances is that many are just not done the way they should, creating problems," said Sevin.

He said oilfield alliances are different, because of the service aspect: "You can't put your best people in the service side of this business when you can't afford to pay them what it takes to keep them there. Many customers look at alliances as a way to beat suppliers down on pricing and get 'top service guys' at a cheap price. You can't do that."

Studies show that 90 percent of alliances fail if based on the low bid, and 70 percent of such alliances actually increase total operating cost. In three such incidents, a Rocky Mountain oil company experienced 42 percent higher total operating costs, and two in West Texas increased costs by 24 percent and 17 percent.

With this kind of history in mind, many companies are refusing to enter into alliances which they view simply as pressure for a low bid. Instead, the companies plan to mop up the business when alliances fail and companies have lost faith in one another.

So, will oil patch alliances survive their infancy and move on to maturity?

On November 8, 1993 Oil and Gas Journal's API Report writers Gregory Bruce and Richard Shermer claimed, "Those firms that take advantage of these opportunities by bundling operations in new ways to create new organizations will be the industry leaders in years to come."

A number of companies such as Sevico of Stafford, Texas, McKenzie of Los Angeles and Pecos River Learning Center of Santa Fe, N.M., and Bob Sevin have sprung up to help companies form better alliances.

Experts say benchmarks would also help the process. Some companies are using alliances they have already formed as benchmarks.

Sevin recommends looking at Coastal Managment for a domestic, in-land benchmark, British Petroleum for international projects and UNOCAL for offshore operations. UNOCAL gets a lot out of their suppliers. Though they are not doing much with alliances, they seem to be moving that direction.

So if alliances work, what will happen to the number of vendors?

"In the oil patch you don't have 20-30,000 vendors out there. There's a small number of vendors to start with. Some producers want to reduce that number. That's a mistake because a lot of these smaller suppliers will have the best technology. You're always looking for the silver bullet. The silver bullet is the one thing that will kill all of your demons in the patch," Sevin said.

So, he predicts, that the team work should increase without actually reducing the number of vendors.

Lee Crawley, president of Flint Engineering and Construction Co. of Tulsa, sees it differently. Companies that don't adapt to the changing business environment may fail, he said, but the number of jobs should remain steady with bigger companies picking up the business and the workers.

Right now majors seem to be the leading player in alliances in West Texas, but that may soon change.

"If I was an independent producer it would be of tremendous interest to me. We are moving into a global market. The best products and best people are going overseas. I'd like to see companies start to go after alliances so they can get their hot little hands on the best products and services that are available for them domestically. If your larger independent has any smarts at all they'll do that. Even major supply companies would be happy to wire an independent because majors are selling off production and independents are picking it up," said Crawley.

MADE: Trust key factor in successful alliance

(From 1E)

are not going to make any money off of it then they start to distrust one another. Once the trust factor is gone the alliance is going to be gone," Sevin says.

Damaged reputations and hard feelings will follow the corporate divorce.

Numerous top-level managers are issuing edicts demanding a certain percentage of alliances among the company's working relationships with suppliers.

"This top-down approach doesn't work. People don't know how to form the alliances. They don't want to form the alliances. Finally, you have a foreman upset with suppliers he doesn't know but has to use. Divorce is down the road on that one," Sevin warns.

"The people that are going to suffer, unfortunately, are the people who do the work: The foremen, the pumpers, the field engineers and the service companies. Those are the ones you really don't want to hurt. It should be benefiting them," he added.

So, what's the point of having these oil field marriages if the outlook is so bleak?

When two companies can work together in harmony, the result seems to be greater than the sum of the parts. A supplier, feeling confident of a long-term relationship, can pursue research and strategic planning that will ultimately reduce the customer's total operating cost. The customer who can trust his supplier to be looking out for him is freed to spend more resources on business expansion and less on watchdog activities.

Ultimately, Sevin waxes philosophical, saying, "It's really about putting trust back into the oil patch."

"Like a marriage, an alliance is unpredictable at the start and the success of the alliance hinges on mutual trust and understanding," he explains.

Sevin has designed a pyramid depicting a strong foundation for strategic alliances. The process resembles a cautious courtship.

Martin County yields dual discovery

Staff Report

COLLINS & WARE INC., Midland, has reported its second Silurian Wristen discovery in Martin County, this one a dual producer from both the Silurian and Mississippian zones, nine miles southwest of Sparenburg.

The No. 1 Prospector was potentialed from Silurian perforations 11,649 to 11,655 ft. to flow 155 barrels of 39.3 gravity crude and a trace of gas.

The operator has asked for a new field designation of Nugget (Silurian) for this discovery.

From Mississippian perforations 11,197 to 11,213, ft., the well was potentialed to flow 338 barrels of crude and 44 Mcfd on a 12/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 1,650 psi. No field designation has been requested for this discovery yet.

Mark Hawkins, a geologist with the company, said the well was located with 3-D seismic, which located a structural feature the company has begun drilling.

Currently, he said, the company is not drilling ofsets but rather drilling the individual high spots that were mapped in the survey.

"We're drilling all over the place," he said. "We shot 265 square miles of 3-D, and we've got lots of prospects to drill."

The company's first Silurian find was the No. 1 Nugget., tested from perforations 11,621 to 11,634 ft. to flow 157 barrels of crude, 16 Mcfd and 20 barrels of water. Production was natural. Hawkins said the Nugget and Prospect were in different areas but had similar features.

Hawkins said Collins & Ware is currently completing a third find, the No. 1 Jumper, and drilling a fourth, the No. 1 Oneida, in the area.

Total depth was 11,655 ft., where seven inch casing was set.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,718 ft., include the Wolfcamp at 9,064 ft., Strawn at 10,516, Upper Mississippian at 10,800, Lower Mississippian at 11,197, Woodford at 11,520 and Silurian at 11,649 ft.

Location is 1,474 ft. from north and 1,212 ft. from north and 1,212 ft. from west lines of Section 72, Block B, Bauer & Cockrell survey, Abst. 348.

Dawson discovery flows 272 barrels

HILLIN-SIMON and PRIME EXPLORATION have completed a third discovery in Dawson County, 13 miles west-northwest of Lamesa.

The No. 1 Patrick Petroleum-Eiland "128" was potentialed to flow 272 barrels of 38 gravity crude and 150 Mcfd on a 3/8 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 100 psi. The well flowed from unidentified perforations at 12,215 to 12,217 ft. The interval was acidized with 300 gallons of 15 percent NeFeHCL acid.

Permitted as a 12,600 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 12,218 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 12,216 ft.

Pecos recompletion nets Queen gas find

A recompletion effort in Pecos County has yielded a Queen gas discovery 6.4 miles southwest of Imperial.

PERMIAN RESOURCES INC. reentered the No. 1 Adobe Fee, testing it for a calculated absolute open flow of 200 Mcfd from perforations 1,811 to 1,846 ft. The interval was acidized with 2,500 gallons 15 percent HCL acid.

Total depth was 2,200 ft.

Marathon completes horizontal sidetrack

MARATHON OIL CO. has recompleted an existing vertical wellbore as a horizontal sidetrack in the Yates field, three miles southwest of Iraan.

The No. 35B57 Yates Field Hnit was recompleted to flow 275 barrels of 31 gravity crude, 149 Mcfd and 100 barrels of water from open hole interval 1,498 to 2,298 ft.

The well was originally drilled to 2,298 ft. with 8-5/8 inch casing set at 1,564 ft. Kick-off point for the horizontal sidetrack was 1,498 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,604 ft., include the Base Cretaceous at 536 ft., Smith Sandstone at 756, Seven Rivers at 840, Queen at 1,296, Grayburg at 1,332, and San Andres at 1,385 ft.

SERVING THE OIL INDUSTRY WORLDWIDE AND THE PERMIAN BASIN AT HOME.

At Highland, we manufacture, distribute and service a complete line of artificial lift components for the oil industry. Our product distribution and service network has been expanded to all of North America, and we're building facilities to serve the Commonwealth of Independent States and China. Our products are among the best known in the industry.

And Highland calls the Permian Basin home. Our headquarters are in Odessa, and manufacturing facilities are in both Odessa and Midland.

At home, we're actively supporting our community with activities such as participating in an Enterprise Zone program, supporting Zavala Elementary in the SPARK program and donating computers and software to the school, working with the Boys Club, sponsoring the Special Olympics, supporting the United Way and the March of Dimes campaigns and working to make the Permian Basin an even better place to live and work.

We're international – but the Permian Basin is home.

Petroleum wildcatters fear they're endangered species

By Ted Bridis
Associated Press Writer

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Bill Dost loads his four-wheel drive with tools and a chainsaw to make the rounds among his 50 petroleum wells scattered across Oklahoma.

Sometimes, he brings his 2-year-old daughter to keep him company on trips that can stretch 600 miles in a single day. At each well, he must check oil in the gearboxes and sometimes grease the pumps. He checks the bearings and the stuffing box that prevents oil from leaking.

But always he must check the bottom line for his company and its 15 employees, a depressing prospect among wildcatters these days. Crude oil prices, hovering near $14 per barrel after breaking a five-year low, mean cheap gasoline at the pumps but a crisis for the nation's small-time producers.

"By the time you take into consideration the manpower costs and the electrical costs, we need $14 oil to break even," says Dost, 40, who with his wife owns WFD Oil Corp. in Claremore. "We're not these little J.R. Ewings running around. We're just trying to make a living."

A glut of oil on the market — fed by steady supplies from the 12-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries — is driving prices down. They hit bottom in December at $13.88, and since have climbed just above $14.

Oil fetched $30 per barrel in 1983.

Motorists are paying less to fill their tanks, as a gallon of regular unleaded dipped late last year as low as 88 cents in some areas of the state despite the new federal gas tax of 4.3 cents per gallon.

But prices are decimating profits for independents, who typically run few wells but together produce roughly a fifth the U.S. oil supply. The industry is nursing the loss of 500,000 jobs in the past decade, including 10,500 lost since October.

"The cheap gas prices are a symptom of the real problem," says Jack Browder, who employs six workers to run 75 petroleum and natural gas wells across northeastern Oklahoma. "As long as gasoline is relatively inexpensive, everyone thinks it's pretty neat. It's worse than ironic."

Independents can't simply stop pumping until prices rise, Browder says. Many operate on leases they would lose; others need cash to pay running debts.

"This is a crisis like we haven't seen before," says Denise Bode, the president of the International Petroleum Association of America, who has issued similarly dire warnings since early 1992.

"A lot of people are talking about how wonderful this is for the consumer. It's a horrible thing for the consumer. They're going to be in one hell of a fix. We're going to be completely dependent on foreign oil."

The industry, led by the 8,000-member IPAA, is lobbying heavily in Congress for tax breaks and other cost cuts. Later this month, 114 congressmen from 33 states led by Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., plan to meet with President Clinton to ask for help.

They include at least 21 congressmen who received between $500 and $1,000 last year from the IPAA's political action committee, according to records from the Federal Election Commission.

The industry also wants the Commerce Department to rule whether increased oil imports from OPEC threaten national security. That request is supported by Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary, who once angered independents by suggesting they might be beyond saving, then claimed she was misquoted.

"All of us have been screaming bloody murder because we're trying to make sure the policy makers know how serious the situation is," says Ms. Bode, a former Boren aide. "We're all working together on this out of fear and necessity and fright.

Dost, who started his company in 1982, appreciates efforts in Washington. But, he says bluntly, mere tax incentives won't solve his problems. Browder calls such moves "only a Band-Aid."

"We need $20 (per barrel) oil to give us some stability," Dost says. "The tax breaks are great, everybody likes those. But you've got to make money to have a tax break against it."

'A lot of people are talking about how wonderful this is for the consumer. It's a horrible thing for the consumer. They're going to be in one hell of a fix. We're going to be completely dependent on foreign oil.'

Denise Bode, president
Independent Petroleum Association of America.

'Rapid price fluctuations, dictated by foreign producers motivated more by political rather than economic reasons, have wreaked havoc on our domestic industry. Political reality being what it is, it appears unlikely that we will be able to wean consumers from the narcotic that is cheap energy,'

Cody Graves,
state regulator

What producers are asking

Associated Press

What the nation's independent petroleum producers are asking from Congress and the White House to help their ailing industry:

- Permit them to export crude oil to other countries.
- Prevent the Environmental Protection Agency from tightening its oilfield regulations.
- Rework the Oil Pollution Act of 1990 to make producers less liable in case of a spill, thereby cutting insurance costs.
- Approve tax credits to encourage new wells far offshore, where waters deeper than 1,200 feet make drilling especially expensive.
- Approve tax credits for existing low-output petroleum and natural gas wells, which typically produce three barrels or less of crude oil or 18 million cubic feet of gas or less each day.
- Approve tax credits for up to 15 barrels a day from new crude oil wells drilled after June 1, 1994. They also want credits for up to 300 million cubic feet of natural gas from new wells.

Whooping crane habitat site for major oil search

By Bill Dawson
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Conoco is planning the biggest search for oil and gas reserves ever undertaken at Aransas National Wildlife Refuge in Texas, winter home of the endangered whooping crane.

The refuge manager says the environmental impact of the seismic project will be minimal, but the state Sierra Club is calling for a formal public notice and comment period, which federal officials say is not required.

About 7,000 narrow holes will be drilled to detonate dynamite 100-120 feet underground. The holes and sensors will be placed along separate sets of intersecting lines where workers will clear brush-free "corridors" in some areas, said Brent Giezentanner, refuge manager.

The lines will total about 500 miles in length, he said, while the largest previous seismic project at the refuge involved about 112 miles, he said. Such investigations produce pictures of underground formations.

The "window" of time for the new work is April 15 to Oct. 15, when the whooping cranes — a migratory bird — are away from the refuge north of Rockport, Texas, Giezentanner said. Because of the whooping crane, Aransas is arguably the most celebrated of the national wildlife refuges.

"My bottom line is, I'd rather not have an oil company here," Giezentanner said, but added that he cannot reject Conoco's work because it holds mineral rights for most of the property and those rights predate the refuge's founding in 1937.

He said Conoco, a Houston-based subsidiary of DuPont, has agreed to all requested safeguards, such as staying out of especially sensitive areas and hiring biologists of his choice to supervise the brush clearing.

"I don't think there will be any significant impacts, especially over the long term," Giezentanner said.

"I think they're bending over backward to do what they think they must do with as little environmental damage as possible," said Pat Suter, who chairs the Sierra Club's Corpus Christi chapter and has conferred with officials at the refuge about the project.

Scott Royder, an official at state Sierra Club headquarters in Austin, agreed Conoco enjoys a good environmental reputation. Still, the organization remains "concerned about the precedent of not following open procedures," he said.

Royder said Sierra Club attorneys believe federal law requires a formal "environmental assessment" of the work, followed by a period for comments by the public or other agencies.

Royder said he is confident the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which manages the refuge, is examining the impacts conscientiously, but extra review by people outside the agency could identify other concerns.

Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt "has talked about protecting refuge lands, and this is great example of not using existing regulations to protect them," Royder said.

OPEC's end may have been seen too early

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — There was a time when the meetings of the OPEC oil cartel were covered by every major news organization in the world with all the intensity and fascination of a superpower summit.

Any minister emerging from the closed-door sessions who cocked even an eyebrow hinting at a price rise would send hundreds of journalists stampeding to the phones.

These days, though, OPEC meetings attract about as much attention as a Save the Whales convention, and there are some beginning to ask again whether the oil giant isn't becoming just as endangered as the world's biggest mammal.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has been declared dead more times than Franco and revived more times than Elvis. No question, it is down again, for some very interesting reasons, but it will rise again — not just because Detroit keeps making cars that run on gasoline, not just because oil is a diminishing resource, but because when more of China's 1.2 billion people start trading in their bicycles for Toyotas the world will witness the gas-guzzle of all gas-guzzlers.

But first the latest obituary.

Delegates from the 12 OPEC member states gathered in Geneva last weekend and failed again to agree on who should cut back production how much, triggering another drop in oil prices. The main reason that OPEC could not agree to cut from its current ceiling of 24.5 million barrels a day was because Saudi Arabia, which accounts for about a third of OPEC's total output, refused to participate.

The failure to reach agreement pushed crude oil prices down over $1 a barrel to near their five-year low of $13.75 a barrel.

"It is strange," said John Lichtblau, chairman of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation. "Before you would go to an OPEC meeting and the world would tremble. The only question was how high will the price go. Now you go to meetings and at the end of them the price falls. The only question is how low. But OPEC is not dead. Yes, it has been struggling to keep up prices for some time now, but given its hold over world oil reserves it's bound to come back."

But time has not been kind to OPEC lately. Indeed, when adjusted for inflation, the present OPEC oil price is now roughly where it was in 1973, before the first oil price explosion, when crude was selling for about $4 a barrel.

What that means is that despite all of OPEC's incredible financial gains over the years, and all the fears it instilled in world markets, it has effectively been stuck in neutral in real price terms. How could that be?

OPEC's history is textbook proof that the free market works. OPEC teaches that when you raise the price of a commodity far above its production costs — as OPEC did in the 1970s, when it yanked prices up above $30 a barrel — you trigger a counterreaction.

In OPEC's case it triggered heightened oil exploration in non-OPEC countries, long-term movements toward conservation, improvements in oil-drilling technology to suck crude from the remotest spots on earth and a search for alternative energy sources — all of which combined in the 1980s to shrink demand for OPEC oil.

When this first became apparent in 1985, OPEC changed strategy. It shifted its focus from hiking prices to maintaining its market share in the face of all sorts of new competitors.

To this end, OPEC, which accounts for 37 percent of world oil production, agreed on a strategy of effectively lowering prices, or holding the line on them, on the calculation that this would kill off some of the alternative energies and non-OPEC competition, while gradually rebuilding demand for OPEC oil so that prices could again be ratcheted upward.

Wrong. The market-share strategy has yet to really work, because OPEC underestimated the forces of conservation, exploration and alternative energies it unleashed in 1973.

These, combined with the fact that OPEC countries like Saudi Arabia and Iran instituted huge social-welfare and infrastructure projects that had to be paid for, meant the market remained saturated.

At the recent Geneva meeting, Iran and other OPEC members ganged up on Saudi Arabia, demanding that it cut back some of its huge production. But the Saudis refused. They argued that it made little sense for them to cut back now, because the other OPEC members would just cheat and gobble up their market share and the price would stay the same.

The Saudis said they would consider a cutback only to make room for massive Iraqi production, when Baghdad is permitted to resume oil exports after fulfilling United Nations conditions imposed after the Gulf war.

Analysts wonder how long Iran, Saudi Arabia's much larger neighbor, will sit quietly for such a strategy. Iran may be tempted to send King Fahd a message "by other means," as they say in the neighborhood. No wonder with all of its budget woes, Saudi Arabia has not halted its military modernization program.

OPEC's long-term hopes are pinned on one region: China and its Asian neighbors. While growth in oil demand in Europe and the United States is expected to be flat over the next decade, Asian demand is expected to grow by the year 2000 by 5 million barrels a day, according to Fereidun Fesharaki, energy expert at Hawaii's East-West Center.

China's oil consumption alone is growing 10 percent a year. In 1990, China exported 500,000 barrels a day. By 2000 it will be importing 1.3 million barrels a day, or the equivalent of virtually all of Kuwait's export production.

"All the big growth will come out of Asia," said Fesharaki. "We see demand for OPEC oil increasing by 10 million barrels a day by the year 2,000, with 7.5 million barrels coming from Asia, 1 million from Mexico and Brazil and the rest from inside OPEC. It means prices will remain roughly where they are for the next five years, and then we will see fear and increases coming back to the market."

MADE: Alliance like marriage

(From 3E)

First a customer and supplier "date," while the supplier has approved vendor status. Gradually the relationship grows as the supplier becomes a preferred vendor, then first call vendor. Finally, an alliance can be build on an established, trusting relationship.

Forming an alliance simply based on low bid can be likened to marrying someone you've never courted. Separation and divorce are almost inevitable.

In fact, 90 percent of alliances based on low bid alone fail, and 70 percent of such alliances increase the producer's total operating costs.

"If you want to form an arrangement with a service company to buy inexpensive goods and services, do it. There's nothing wrong with that, it's just not an alliance. An alliance includes a commitment on the part of two companies to work as a team to solve or prevent major problems, a commitment to look for a silver bullet, a commitment to assign better people to that account, a commitment to be sure the customer has the best products that are available, a commitment to collect data in a manner that can be beneficial to both companies," Sevin preaches.

Both parties need to begin the discussion by defining what an alliance means to them and by establishing rules for the game. A third party may be a good buffer during this process.

When companies have completed the courting process and are prepared to form an alliance, several approaches can be taken ranging from an informal agreement to formal contracts.

When the management and steering committees from producers and suppliers come to a verbal agreement, "you have people's word. That's like it used to be in the old days and people will stand up for that. They'll fight for that harder than they'll fight for the contract," Sevin says.

While many of today's poorly-formed alliances are crumbling, Sevin remains optimistic about the future of carefully-constructed alliances in the oil patch.

"The supplier must keep in mind that an alliance is merely an opportunity in work clothes which will produce a profit for the customer. The customer, on the other hand, must remember that the supplier, in order to stay in business, must make a profit. Hence the win/win situation. Some of them are just so, so sweet."

Clayton Williams Energy, Inc. announced that a combination of depressed oil prices and poor drilling results, primarily associated with two unsuccessful wells, resulted in a decrease in 1993 earnings and a loss for the fourth quarter.

Net income for the year ended December 31, 1993 was $403,000 or 9 cents per share, down 80 percent from net income of $2.0 million, or 62 cents per share a year earlier. Revenues in 1993 declined 8.7 percent to $59.6 million from $65.3 million a year earlier.

Results for the quarter ended December 31, 1993 include a net loss of $2.6 million or 46 cents per share on revenues of $14.1 million. This compares to net income of $1 million on revenues of $14.1 million in the fourth quarter of the prior year.

The company also announced that its oil and gas reserves, on a barrel of oil equivalent ("BOE") basis declined approximately 11 percent from levels at December 31, 1992, while its discounted future net revenues, computed in accordance with Securities and Exchange Commission guidelines, declined 27 percent due largely to sharply lower oil prices.

In response to lower oil prices the company has reduced general and administration expenses by 20 percent on an annualized basis.

Mr. Williams also announced that T.M. "Milt" Shephard, Vice President-Exploration and Development has resigned as an officer and director of the company. Mr. Sheperd has been retained by the Company for consulting purposes. Gary Hampton, the company's chief geologist for the Trend, has been named Exploration Manager for its South Texas operations.

"MEET OUR ELITE"

Congratulations to Carol Bradshaw who has qualified as an "Elite Temp" at Temporary Resources. Carol has a B.A. in English from U.T.P.B. and has recently become a certified elementary school teacher. She is listed in Who's Who Among Students in American Universities & Colleges and has earned numerous writing awards at both U.T.P.B. and Midland College.

Carol brings a high level of quality to each of the assignments that she accepts. Her skills are exceptional and her ability to adapt to varied situations makes her an asset to any office. When not substitute teaching or working as a temporary, Carol enjoys writing poetry and essays, reading, camping and studying nature.

Carol says Temporary Resources' excellent reputation is what prompted her to choose their service. Temporary Resources has earned this reputation by providing Midland with high quality employees for 14 years. Let the "POWER IN PERSONNEL" work for you!

Arch completes Lea County acquisitions

FORT WORTH — Arch Petroleum announced that it has completed its acquisition of producing properties in Lea County, N.M. from Chevron U.S.A. Inc. for $17.9 million on March 31.

Arch estimates the proved reserves attributable to the purchase to be 2.3 million barrels of oil and 18.1 Bcf of natural gas, yielding an acquisition cost of $3.34 per BOE or 56 cents per Mcfe. Because the properties are concentrated within Arch's existing area of operations, no additional administrative personnel are required.

Arch also reported net income of $176,000 or 1 cent per share on revenues of $44.2 million for its latest fiscal year ended December 31, 1993. Net income for the fiscal year ended December 31, 1992 was $68,000 on revenues of $7.2 million. Cash generated from operations before changes in working capital was $757,000 in fiscal 1993, compared to $811,000 in fiscal 1992.

At December 31, 1993, Arch reported proved reserves of 1.6 million barrels of oil and 59.6 Bcf of natural gas, including about 16.1 Bcf dedicated to satisfying the production payment. At December 31, 1992, Arch reported proved reserves of 2.5 million barrels of oil and 64.2 Bcf of natural gas, including 18.5 Bcf dedicated to satisfying the production payment.

Pro forma reserves using December 31, 1993 volumes and adding Arch's estimates of the volumes acquired from Chevron as of April 1, 1994 would be 4.1 million barrels of oil and 77.3 Bcf of natural gas, including 16.1 Bcf dedicated to satisfaction of the production payment and before making an adjustment for Arch's production for the three months ended March 31, 1994.

Larry Kalas, Arch's president, commented, "Exploitation of the newly acquired Lea County, N.M. properties will commence immediately. The Texas Railroad Commission has set a hearing for June to evaluate the results of two years of operations in the Keystone Ellenburger field pursuant to its final interim order issued in 1992. At current rates, Arch will have earned a bonus allowable of over 6 Bcf in the Keystone Ellenburger field by the date of the hearing. Arch has three separate 3-D seismic programs under way which should generate significant exploration possibilities, with drilling commencing later in 1994. Each of our gas transmission subsidiaries has recently expanded the scope of its operations and several potential additions are currently under review. Arch's opportunities have never looked better."

Gas Producers present two awards

TULSA — The Gas Producers Association has recently awarded two prestigious awards.

Dr. Lyman Yarborough, research director for Amoco Production, Tulsa, has been named the 1994 recipient of the association's Hanlon Award.

The Hanlon Award is the gas processing industry's highest honor, and one of the ranking awards of the petroleum industry. It was established in 1937 by the late E.I. Hanlon, a pioneer in the gas processing industry, founder of the Hanlon Companies and chairman of the board of the National Bank of Tulsa.

Yarborough was cited for his leadership role in gas processing research. He received his bachelor's degree, master's degree and doctorate in chemical engineering from Oklahoma State University. After graduation, he joined Amoco Production at Amoco's Research Center in Tulsa. Since that time, he moved through the Amoco organization serving in various capacities in the research, process engineering and construction areas.

Throughout his career, Yarborough has placed his influence and his emphasis on the development of a strong foundation for gas processing research: Fluid properties data and its precise thermodynamic correlation for predictive use. He is the holder or co-holder of six U.S. patents. He has made major contributions in the application of equiations-of-state for correlating and predicting fluid properties. His focus on the acquisition and application of data was pivotal in the design of early carbon dioxide recovery and nitrogen removal facilities — the foundation of enhanced oil recovery.

Dr. K.C. Chao, professor of chemical engineering at Purdue University, has been named the 1994 recipient of the Donald L. Katz Award of.

The award is named in honor of the late Donald L. Katz, a pioneer experimentalist and educator at the University of Michigan, whose early research defined much of the engineering and production criteria for natural gas production and processing. Initiated in 1984, the Katz Award is conferred in recognition of "outstanding accomplishments in gas engineering research and for excellence in engineering eudcation."

Chao received his bachelor's degree in chemical engineering from the National Chekiang University in 1948. He then received both his master's degree and doctorate in chemical engineering from the University of Wisconsin. Upon graduation, he served as a research engineer for Chevron and as an associate professor at both the Illinois Institute of Technology and Oklahoma State University.

Chao was a pioneer in the application of solution thermodynamics to engineering calcualtions. In the late 1950s, he collaborated in the development of the Chao-Seader Correlation which was widely used for predicting vapor-liquid equilibria of hydrocarbon mixtures. This work helped transport the engineering profession from the use of empirical, graphical correlations to the modern-day, theoretically-based computer-applied correlations.

NAME DROPPING

JOSEPH KILCHRIST has been named to the newly elected position of vice president, operations at Abraxas Petroleum Corp. He was most recently employed by Graham Royalty Ltd. in Covington, La.

Also, RICK CLARY has been promoted to manager, engineering.

ROBERT K. BURLESON has joined Noble Gas Marketing Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Noble Affiliates Inc., as vice president of natural gas marketing.

He has 14 years experience in the industry, most recently serving as director of business development for Arkla Energy Resources.

Baker & O'Brien Inc. of Dallas announces staff additions.

DARYL D. ATTAWAY has joined as senior consultant. He was previously a senior consultant and shareholder in Muse, Stancil & Co.

DONALD L. FLESSNER has joined as a consultant. He was formerly a consultant with Purvin & Gertz Inc.

DILEEP N. SIRUR has become affiliated with the firm as a senior associate consultant. He was previously a management executive with Arco.

Baker & O'Brien is an independent professional energy consulting firm providing technical and commercial consulting services to the downstream oil, gas and related industries.

MEETINGS

WTGS plays host to Amoco researcher

Treitel

Dr. Sven Treitel, an AAPG Distinguished Lecturer, will speak at Tuesday's meeting of the West Texas Geological Society. The meeting will be at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Treitel will present a paper on "Reservoir Management: What Can Geophysics Contribute?"

According to Treitel, the past few years have seen an increasing interest in the use of geophysical methods to delineate the reservoir as well as to monitor its production history. Because the material changes in a reservoir over time alter its geophysical signature, it should be possible to produce time-lapse maps of the evolution of secondary and tertiary recovery processes.

Cost is $7 per person and reservations can be called by calling 683-1573.

Slag mix topic for SPE study group

The Drilling Study Group of the Permian Basin section, Society of Petroleum Engineers, will meet Tuesday at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Speakers will be Tom Griffin of Dowell Schlumberger and Craig Gardner of Chevron U.S.A. Inc. Their topic will be "Slag Mix — An Alternative to Cement."

Cost is $10 per person.

Gas group to host Clayton Williams

The Natural Gas Society of the Permian Basin will meet Tuesday at 11:45 a.m. at the Midland Country Club.

Clayton WIlliams will be the guest speaker, discussing "Where Do We Go From Here?" He will address some of the pressing issues of the natural gas and oil industry and answer questions from his perspective.

Cost is $15 per person.

SPE group to discuss injection processes

M. Duane Cregory will be the guest speaker at Thursday's meeting of the Reservoir Study Group of the Permian Basin section, Society of Petroleum Engineers. The meeting will be at the American Legion Hall beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Gregory of Conoco Production Research will present a paper entitled "To WAG or Not to WAG" and review industry experience with the WAG process and discuss some of the operational, economic and reservoir characteristics that influence the choice of an injection process. Slug, WAG and Hybrid WAG processes will be discussed.

He joined Conoco in Ponca City in 1968. His work experience includes chemical flooding, rheology of polymer solutions in porous media,various aspects of production chemistry including corrosion inhibition, emulsion problems and dispersed oil removal from produced water.

Cost is $8 per person.

Desk and Derrick Club sets meeting

The Midland Desk and Derrick Club will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club. Social hour will begin at 6 p.m., followed by dinner at 6:30 p.m.

Guest speaker will be Brian C. Ball, a geologist with Union Oil Co. of California.

Reservations can be made by calling 682-5371.

EMPLOYERS: TAKE NOTE OF THIS IMPORTANT EVENT!

Professional Secretaries Week
April 24-30, 1994

If there's someone special who handles everything from memos to meetings, why not thank him or her with some kind words of greetings? It will make a big impression though the cost is so small, so pick up the phone and give us a call!

Secretaries Greetings

Your Message Will Be Published In A Special Section Of This Paper On April 27, 1994

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Family visit tops busy weekend

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

In visiting with Patti DeFrance, it was fun to hear about Patti and David's children, Michele (Mrs. John Robert) Matney and John David DeFrance, who came in from Lubbock last weekend.

McKnight-Harrison

Their visit was filled with celebration. In addition to Easter, they observed John David's April 2 birthday.

However, it was not all play for the soon-to-be Texas Tech grad. John brought along a painting he is currently working on in preparation for a one-man show at the R. Carroll Gallery of Contemporary Art in Ouray, colo. After the show's June 3 opening, he will be the artist-in-residence there. He is scheduled to receive a bachelor of fine arts degree in May.

John presented on of his paintings, "The Dead Christ," to First Christian Church, where it now hangs permanently after being on display over Easter Weekend.

Michele, who is employed by Job Source while her husband finishes law school at Tech, had the pleasure of spending time with a close girlhood friend, Ellen (Mrs. Alan) Orr, and her one-year-old daughter, Meredith, of Houston. They were visiting here with Ellen's parents, Cathe and Bob Leggott.

GREG DOVE has returned from a whirlwind visit to London, with a side trip to Amsterdam.

A member of the Play Selection Committee at Midland Community Theatre, Greg was interested in seeing as many plays as possible. In the short time there, he managed to see the drama, "Oleanna," which MCT will be producing in the fall; a musical, "Blood Brothers," and the mystery, "An Inspector Calls."

During his brief visit to Amsterdam, Greg particularly enjoyed tours of the van Gogh Museum and Riljks State Museum.

A FEW FRIENDS dropped by the home of Sarah and Russell Neisig recently to say farewell to the Neisigs' daugher, Jennifer (Mrs. Michael) Alvarado, and her children, Michelle and Blake.

The threesome left April 1 to join Michael in London, where he is with an engineering and consulting firm. The family is residing in the town of Cobham in Surrey in Greater London. They had been living in Prairie Village, Kan., prior to their move.

Jennifer and Michael are both 1982 graduates of Lee High School. His parents are former Midlanders Slyvia and Frank Alvarado of Horseshoe Bay.

ERMA BOMBECK'S column in last Sunday's Reporter-Telegram on the responsibilities that come with having animals reminded us of our first pet, an Easter bunny that appeared on our doorstep sometime during the latter part of World War II.

The rabbit had a large pen, which he quickly learned to dig out of and hippity hopped off to a neighbor's Victory Garden for his daily lettuce fix.

Of course, Miss Hyde was not too pleased with that turn of events, and it wasn't long before Mr. Bunny disappeared. In retrospect, we assume he later turned up on someone's dinner table. We only hope it wasn't ours!

VICTORIA LOUISE Mandy Roberts, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Collins Roberts Jr. of Corpus Christi and formerly of Midland, will be presented as a debutante in Austria this summer. She is the niece of the late Midlander, Mrs. Mandy Miller.

The ball will take place on June 17 in Vienna's historic and magnificent Palais Schwarzenberg. It is thé highlight of Debutante Holidays abroad 1994, which is comprised of house parties, social and cultural events in castles and embassies in Vienna and Salzburg June 13-22 before the young women spend June 22-27 in Sofia and the surrounding area in Bulgaria, under the sponsorship of the new Bulgarian government.

This segment of the tour is a social and cultural program of historic dimensions, promoting relations between our countries and highlighted by receptions in the United States Embassy and palaces, to be hosted by the government's elite.

STARS: Programs planned

The study of the stars is nothing new — in fact, it may be as old as humankind. "All of our ancestors were astronomers to a certain extent because they had to figure out the calendar to know when to plant their crops and how to navigate their ships," Hartman said. "Those who could do that were held in high esteem by the culture they were part of."

'All of our ancestors were astronomers to a certain extent because they had to figure out the calendar to know when to plant their crops and how to navigate their ships. Those who could do that were held in high esteem by the culture they were part of.'

— Mark Hartman
director, Marian Blakemore Planetarium

If astronomy is part of our collective past, it also is part of our hope for the future. "I think everybody wants to know about space," Hartman said. "That probably has something to do with the popularization of science fiction movies and novels."

"Little green men from Mars" have been part of our cultural fantasies for decades, and "now we have real pictures from Mars," he said.

"The landing on the moon in 1969, the whole space race of the '60s and '70s, the popularization of space and space-related subjects" have increased interests in astronomy "to the point we are seeing a real effect," he added.

"A lot of people say the landing on the moon in 1969 was the single most important event in the history of the human race," Hartman said. "I don't know if I agree with that, but it certainly had some substance."

THE PLANETARIUM in Midland offers programs for budding astronomers throughout the year.

West Texas Skies is presented 7:30 p.m. every Tuesday. "What's up in West Texas skies and how to look for it" is the basis of this ongoing program, Hartman said. "It also goes through current events that have to do with space, keep up with space probes." Each program consists of live lectures with supporting visuals.

Sundays, the planetarium shows astrological-related programs in a multi-media format, "slides and videos and such," Hartman said. These programs are presented at 2 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. "Essentially these are not star talks. Tuesday night shows could be called star talks. On Sundays, we don't point out constellations as much."

Beginning today, the planetarium's show will be "More Than Meets The Eye," which Hartman said is "about the difference between what you would see through the telescope with your eye in reality as compared with sensational photos from large observatories."

The Sunday programs are changed about five times a year, he said — "four seasonal shows and a Christmas show" — with the one planned for this summer called "Footsteps."

The West Texas Astronomers also use the planetarium as their meeting place, meeting the second Monday of each month. "They are involved in other events we offer," Hartman said.

"About five times a year the West Texas Astronomers bring telescopes out and we have a telescope viewing session. It starts with a 30-minute program and then we go out to Haley Park and look through the telescopes."

THE NEXT VIEWING session is planned for May 20, he said. "West Texas Astronomers have a lot of sophisticated equipment. Amateur equipment today is as good as professional equipment 100 years ago," he said.

For spring, plans are being made for viewing the annular solar eclipse May 10. While the eclipse won't be total in Midland, residents should be able to see about a 90 percent eclipse of the sun between about 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. that day.

But, Hartman warns, be sure to view the event safely. The planetarium will have safe viewing devices available. "You can do a lot of damage to your eyes if you use unsafe viewing practices, and not ... even know you did it" until later.

"People use sunglasses or two pairs of sunglasses (to view a solar eclipse) and think they are OK," Hartman said. "It's like watching someone arc weld — you never know it's hurting your eyes until the next day."

The planetarium offers programs for school children in Midland, Odessa and many of the surrounding towns as well, Hartman said.

"When I see a group of kids out here, I never know which one is going to go out there and do something. There are a lot of mysteries to be solved in the universe and the solar system, but maybe one will be solved by these kids."

Astronomy is a fascinating science — a glimpse of worlds beyond our own that as triggered imaginations since man first looked up at the night sky.

But one thing Hartman wants to make perfectly clear: "Don't confuse it with astrology," he laughed. "It's not the same thing."

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Where can I order more of those Please Call Police banners you mentioned in your column a year or so ago? I shall be ever grateful if you'd print the address again because my banner disappeared at a service station, and it had been a real lifesaver for me.

Van Buren

My car was loaded from stem to stern, as I was relocating from the west coast to the east coast of Florida and traveling alone. The left rear tire blew: the temperature was 98 degrees and so was the humidity. I suffer from a severe obstructive pulmonary disease. If it hadn't been for the Please Call Police banner and two beautiful young couples who stopped to help, I would not be writing this request.

I shall be watching for the address, Abby. At 76 years young, I still have to travel alone and will feel that my "security blanket" is back with me as soon as the banners arrive. — NANCY PLESS MONROE, SUN LAKES, ARIZ.

DEAR MS. MONROE: You are not the only reader who has written to tell me how valuable the banners can be. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I recently bought a Please Call Police banner, and in less than a week it paid off. My daughter and her three children were stranded, and in less than 10 minutes, a wrecker and three policemen arrived. — GOLDIE BAKER, LOUISVILLE

DEAR ABBY: I am 76 years old and still "perky." My husband is 74 years old and has terrible arthritis that takes its toll. He would be unable to walk any distance for help if we were stranded on the road, and I'd be a darn fool to even think of walking along a highway alone. Would you please send me the address of where to order those Please Call Police banners? I have misplaced it. — ALAMOGORDO, N.M., READER

DEAR ABBY: I read about the Please Call Police banners in your column some time ago and ordered them.

This past August, we had a frightening experience on a lonely road in northern Minnesota. Our car broke down. We are close to 85 years old. I remembered the banners and displayed them on the windshield and rear window, and we promptly got help. We are, of course, most grateful — and now, I cannot think of a better Christmas present for our children and grandchildren. Thank you, Abby! — GRATEFUL IN MINNESOTA

DEAR ABBY: Would you please publish the address for those Please Call Police banners again? They were recommended to us in an over-55 defensive driving class here in Houston. — MRS. EVA ROSENCRANZ, HOUSTON

DEAR MS. MONROE, MS. BAKER, "ALAMAGORDO," "GRATEFUL," MRS. ROSENCRANZ, AND DEAR READERS: Write to WCIL-Banners, P.O. Box 92501, Los Angeles, Calif. 90009. You will receive one Please Call Police banner as a premium for a $5 contribution to WCIL, and another banner with each additional $4 contribution. (Many people want two, one for the windshield and one for the rear window.)

Make your check or money order (U.S. funds only, please) payable to WCIL-Banners. Allow eight weeks for delivery. The Westside Center for Independent Living is a not-for-profit organization that helps disabled people live independently.

For everything you need to know about wedding planning, order "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

PARADE OF HOMES
REFLECTIVE AMBIANCE

This living area has an atrium-like atmosphere due to the skylights that direct the sunlight toward the limestone fireplace.

This living area features a redwood table cut by Dan Veirs' parents on their honeymoon, as well as many glass, vase and pottery collectibles.

TEXT AND DESIGN BY ELIZABETH EDWIN

PHOTOS BY JOE D. WILLIAMS

It was even featured in a 1951 issue of House and Garden Magazine.

Upon the entering the home, visitors are greeted by a curved wall sporting a paper-mache Elvis look-a-like image peering down. Collections of art glass, prints, vases, pottery, wall pockets and hands that seem to reach out for you are scattered throughout the house, giving it a personality all its own.

When the Veirs moved into this house, everything was white, Mrs. Veirs said. "My husband says it has been my goal to get rid of all the white in the house. And he may be right, I've just about done it."

HOME: Veirs' home anything but square

(From 4F)

Stavern, who helped Mrs. Veirs decorate the home, found on the side of the road while returning from Big Spring.

There is not a square room in the house. For example, the dining room — to the right of the entry — is circular. It features a round, custom-cut blue pearl granite table, set with colorful hand-blown goblets from Santa Fe, and the first peek at a portion of Mrs. Veirs' "hand" collection. The dining room hands are actually gold vases in the shape of gloved hands propped on their fingertips that Mrs. Veirs uses as napkin holders.

Three staggered shelves meld to the circular wall above the buffet and hold part of the couple's pottery vase collection. The buffet is adorned with beautiful silver serving pieces which have been handed down through both families.

A bright green door leads to the kitchen which is fashioned in true "retro" style. The pantry doors also are painted green and the floor is covered with red tile, which Mrs. Veirs refers to as her grocery store floor. The curtains and wallpaper-border echo these colors in a vintage fruit motif in shades of cherry and green. A collection of Roseville wall pockets dating from 1910 to 1940 and family heirlooms hang in almost every nook and cranny of the room.

Another door from the kitchen weaves visitors through a living area where there are more displays vases, modern art glass and art pottery. The coffee table is a horizontally-cut section of a redwood tree which Veirs' parents cut while on their honeymoon.

A second living area, up a couple of steps yet open to the first, has an atrium-like atmosphere due to the skylights that direct the sunlight toward the limestone fireplace. The opposite wall features ceiling-to-floor windows that offer a view of the backyard pool. The desk in this room is from Veirs' hometown library.

Crystal, 16, has a bedroom that might very well be many teenage girl's dream. From the tapestry upholstered headboard in black, melon and green, to the original prints and old magazine covers, the room sets an atmosphere of young sophistication. The bright melon painted walls accented with neon lights add to the retro look of the home. The three-quarter bath next door to her room is decorated in black and white horror movie scenes with touches of accent red.

For the youngest, John's room is everything a 2-year-old could hope for. Bright yellow textured walls make the perfect background for his framed original movie posters and National Geographic maps. The vast area features a combination of zoo and western decor, with a teepee set up to play in and a fireplace that has become a cage for all of his stuffed toys. A giant paper-mache lion's head hangs over the fireplace. The adjoining bath, the painted ceilings lets the sun look down in the main area and the moon take a peek in the private toilet area. The floor is like a mechanic's floor, or as Mrs. Veirs describes it, "a Wester Auto tile."

From redone chairs and lamps found at junk stores, to heirlooms, various collections and imported European pieces, the Veirs' home shows their love of the eclectic.

"I guess we have a thing about going to the bottom or to the top. We just don't seem to like the middle, there isn't much fun there," Mrs. Veirs said.

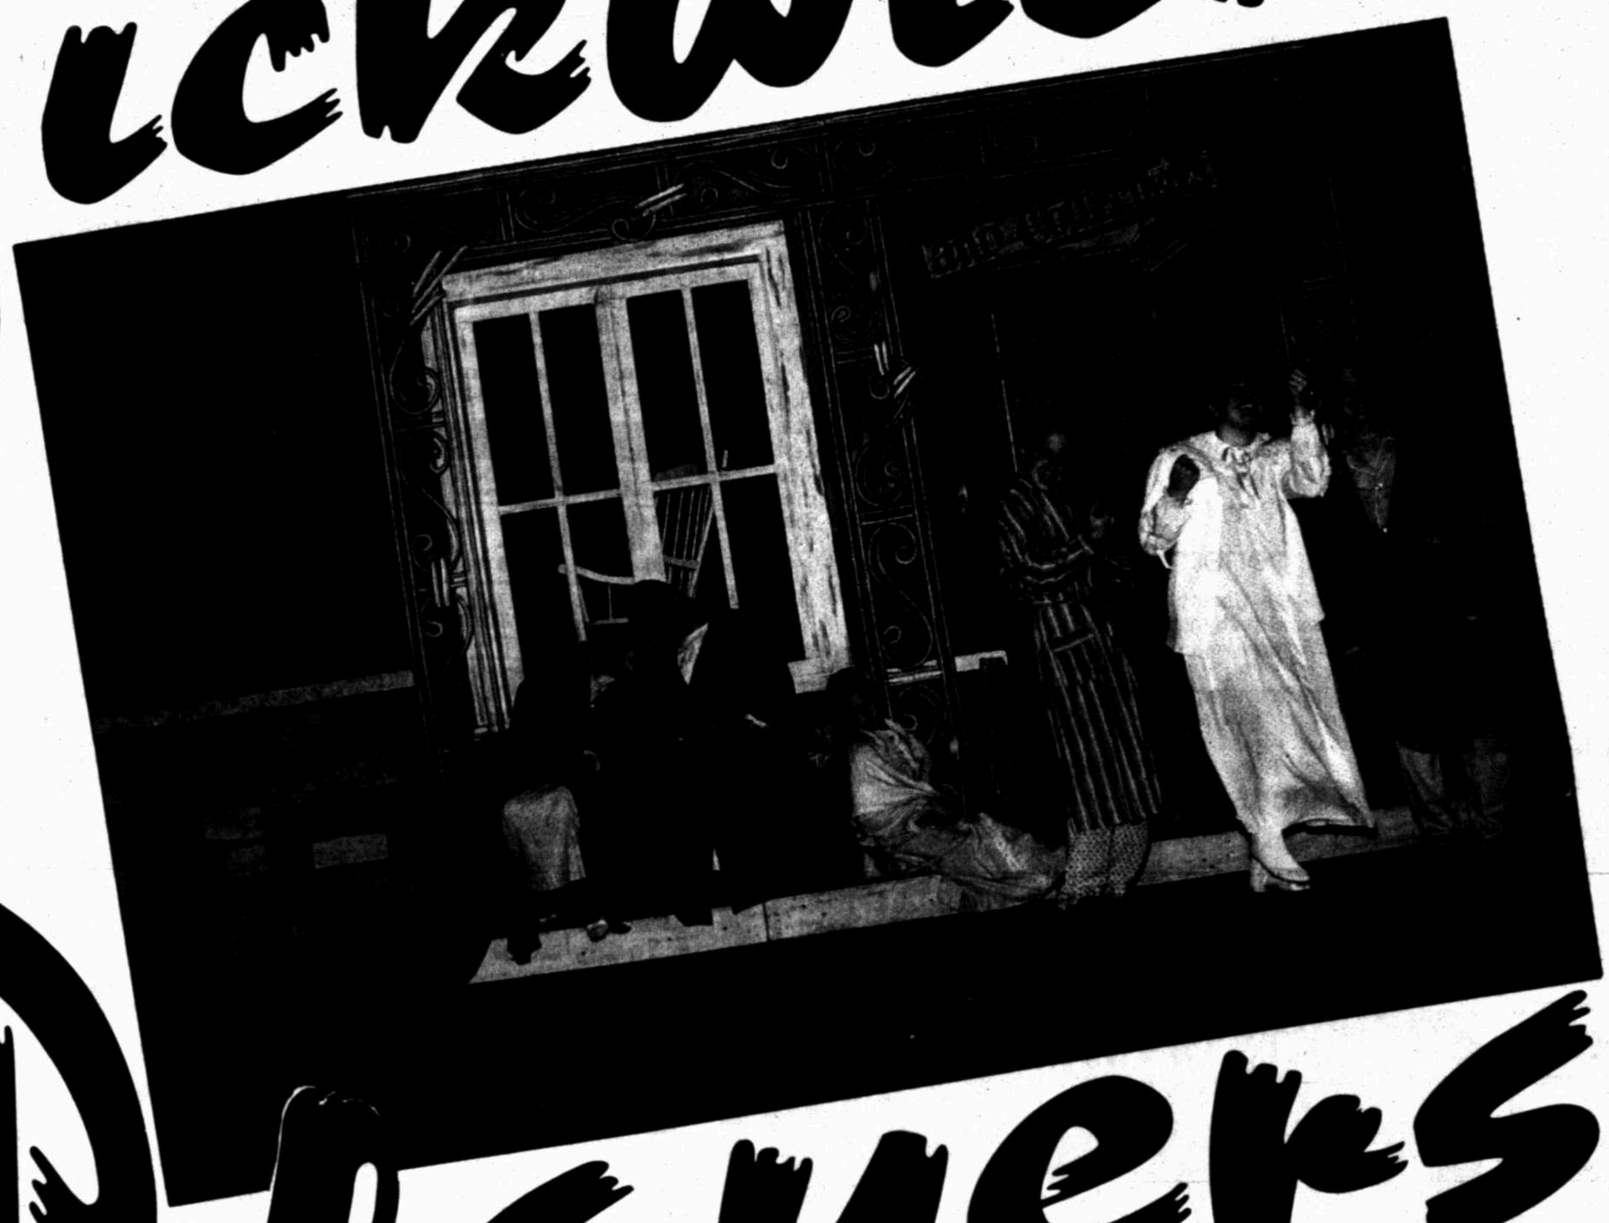
Pickwick Players



Pied Piper

Performing troupe to present 'The Pied Piper of New Orleans'

The pied piper brings his magic to Midland's Yucca Theatre Saturday and April 17 in the Pickwick Players' spring show, "The Pied Piper of New Orleans."

"Audiences can expect the traditional story of the 'Pied Piper' but set in the 1930s in New Orleans," said director Rene Brister Chambers.

The rats have overrun a cul-de-sac, and the businesses operating there have tried everything. In desperation, the owners turn to a mysterious man from the bayou named Abernathy, played by Doug Henitz.

"He says that he can eliminate their rat problem for a rather high fee," Ms. Chambers said. "After the rats are gone, the people on Hamelin Street decide to renegotiate the fee. That's what the show is about — what Abernathy decides to do."

Cast members include Matt Nicholson and Whitney Lanier, the proprietors of an antique store; their children, Carl, played by Tyler Rhodes, and Phoebe, played by Whitney Stanco; Madeline, who owns a fabric shop, played by Kristy Messer; Keith, Madeline's son who has a mysterious secret, played by Clayton Cross; and Leah, owner of a tea shop, played by Amy Mills.

(From 1G)

"This cast is like middle-aged Pickwicks" — Midland Community Theatre's youth performing troupe — Ms. Chambers said.

"They're not junior and seniors, but they are not seventh-grade beginners. Everyone in the show has been on stage at least once before."

Because the play was written as an ensemble piece, "there's really no lead, and everyone has a lot of stage time," Ms. Chambers said.

"And the cast has been very good at working in that ensemble environment where everyone gets equal focus."

Ms. Chambers said it's good practice for the Pickwicks to be working at the Yucca Theatre.

"This is only the second time the Pickwicks have done a production at the Yucca, and it's a different theater. It's acoustically different than Theatre Midland. It's exciting to be working here and learning how to project in this building and how you play to the audience in this theater."

With a New Orleans setting, the play provides for classic jazz music of the period, she said. The music of the piper's pipe is brass clarinet.

The American setting provides more immediacy. It's still a fantasy, but it seems more possible to contemporary audiences." Ms. Chambers said.

And it has a broad appeal, she said. "It will play to quite a bit younger than fourth- and fifth-graders and I think adolescents and adults can really enjoy it. With Pickwick shows, we don't play down to the children. When you do that, it makes it a better play for people of all ages. It doesn't limit it to children."

Before opening the play to the public, the Pickwicks will present the comedy to fourth- and fifth-graders in Midland Independent School District.

"It's very challenging to do a play for young people because you have to hold their interest," Ms. Chambers said. "Young people are not as polite as adults. If a play doesn't hold their interest, they will talk or move or throw spit wads.

"So we have to make sure that the play moves along at a good pace, that it is interesting to the audience, and it pulls them in and they care about the characters. And, we also have to make sure the humor is effective, or funny."

She said she trusts her instincts to know in advance if people are going to laugh at the playwright's jokes.

"Comedy is all in the timing and with these young actors, they have to learn how to play the moments, how to make the action crisp and clean, how to deliver a punch line, how to make a double take work and be effective."

The director said the troupe has been invited to the 10th International Austrian International Youth Theatre Festival in October. She said 16 performing companies will be attending — 12 from Austria and four from the rest of the world. "And, we are one of those four."

In recent years, the Pickwicks have held a fine-arts camp to raise funds for special trips and other activities.

"The fine-arts camp is just a phenomenal success," she said "The Pickwicks love it. The kids love it and the parents love it."

"We had 100 children. They performed for their parents on Friday, the last day of camp, for about an hour and a half. And the parents were stunned by how much the kids learned in one week. Without a doubt, this is our must successful educational program within the last 15 years."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ Symposium set

Shakespeare enthusiast Bob Anson is to present a Shakespeare Symposium from 9:45 a.m. until 3 p.m. on April 23 in Room 201B, First Presbyterian Church, 800 W. Texas Ave.

The symposium, entitled "Shakespeare Beyond Beyond" or "Where There's a Will There's a Day," is in celebration of the 430th anniversary of the poet's birth.

Reservations are required for the free program. The lunch break is from noon to 1 p.m. A question-and-answer session will follow the symposium.

Seating is limited to 120 adults. Minimum age is 21. To make reservations call 683-6442 between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m.

In 1973, Anson founded Midland's reading/discussion group known as "Shakespeare As We Like It." He taught three different Shakespeare courses in the Classics Division at Midland College and he presents talks from time to time to various Midland groups.

The symposium will feature an informal demonstration and discussion of the playwright's art.

■ Club features artists

Their works may be seen from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Woman's Club building at Hogan Park.

■ Week recognized

Texas Archaeology Awareness Week, April 9-16, is being recognized by the Museum of the Southwest and the Midland Archaeological Society with Native American crafts demonstrations and exhibition of pre-historic style dwellings Friday and Saturday at the Museum, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Public and private schools may schedule a 40-minute tour for 4th graders Friday by calling Enid Davis, 683-2882 or 570-7770. The tours are planned between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. There is no charge.

The public is invited to come between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Saturday to see the demonstrations and dwellings. No reservations are required for Saturday.

The Archaeological Society will construct replicas of a pit house, a wickiup and a shade arbor and will erect a tipi on the grounds of the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum. The dwellings will remain up through April 17.

Pottery making, weaving and flint knapping will be demonstrated while a story teller will relate Native American stories.

Groups also may see the "Under Starry Skies" and "Search for Ancient Plainsmen" exhibits currently on display at the museum.

Texas Archaeology Awareness Week is a project of the Texas Historical Commission, office of the State archaeologist. The purpose is to promote public awareness and education to encourage and support the protection of archaeological sites in Texas.

■ Choir to perform

The Austin College Choir will perform at First Presbyterian Church, 800 W. Texas Ave., at 8 p.m. Friday.

The public is invited to attend. Austin College is located at Sherman.

■ Reservations accepted

Musicians performing this year include Milt Hinton and Jack Lesberg, bass; Ken Peplowski, clarinet; Joe Ascione and Jake Hanna, drums; Bucky Pizzarelli, guitar; Ralph Sutton and Ray Sherman, piano; Harry Allen and Jim Galloway, saxophone; Dan Barrett and George Masso, trombone; and Ed Polcer and Randy Sandke, trumpet.

Admission per person is $150 and includes all sets. Buttons may be picked up at the Holiday Inn Centre between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. and at 7 p.m. May 17. Make checks payable to Odessa Jazz Association, P.O. Box 7948, Odessa, 79760. For more information call 1-332-7871.

■ Day trip planned

The Museum of the Southwest is sponsoring a day trip Tuesday, May 17, for museum members to see "Impressionist Masterpieces from the Barnes Collection: Cezanne to Matisse" on exhibition at the Kimbell Art Museum, Fort Worth.

This "greatest single collection of its kind ever assembled on this continent," according to the New York Observer, is rarely seen outside the confines of the Barnes Foundation galleries in Merion, Pa., a suburb of Philadelphia. The showing at the Kimbell is its only appearance in the Southwest.

The exhibition includes an unprecedented number of masterpieces of modern painting including works by Renoir, Picasso, Modigliani, Monet, Manet and Braque.

French impressionist, post-impressionist and early modern paintings were collected before World War II by Dr. Albert C. Barnes for his private collection. None of the works were reproduced or lent out and only students and scholars were able to see the collection until 1961 when the galleries were opened for limited times to the public.

The collection is now traveling while the galleries are being renovated. The Kimbell is one of only three U.S. venues to display the works. The others are Washington, D.C., and Philadelphia.

Membership cost at the Museum of the Southwest range from $20 for a senior membership to $1,000 for the President's Club. Individual memberships are $30 and family memberships begin at $50. For more information on the trip or memberships at the museum, call Enid Davis, 683-2882 or 570-7770.

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, APRIL 10, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Act decisively if you want to move your career or family life to a higher plateau. Refuse to waste time fretting about what might have been. The most important ingredient for success is personal effort! Emphasize the positive in romance and marriage. Several joyous events in December will confirm that you made the right choice. A business boom is likely in early 1995. Learn new marketing strategies.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: sportscaster John Madden, author David Halberstam, actor Steven Segal, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The best has just begun for you. Strengthen a new relationship by extending a helping hand. A problem will be quickly corrected. A social occasion fills you with joy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You find that your mate or another loved one has the heart of an angel. A child's activities are a source of pride. Make sure you understand just what you are about to do.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20: A prompt decision must be made about a personal matter. Procrastination could bring a relationship to the brink of disaster. Nothing can be taken from you if you act from pure motives.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Prepare and freeze some dishes that will make cooking dinner easier this week. You will need your energy to fight for something or someone you feel strongly about.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not let people with limited vision spoil your day. Move on, following your excellent intuition. You must make your own choices when and where you can.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An inexpensive recreational activity can be just as much fun as a costly outing. Enjoy some of the free things your community has to offer. Getting involved in a service project lifts your spirits.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Use high-quality materials and equipment and your home repairs will last longer. Travel may be available to you at economy prices. Investigate immediately.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make the most of your intellectual and financial assets. You have a talent that is much rarer than you think. If you feel unappreciated where you are, look around.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Curb your sweet tooth and eat more vegetables. Good eating habits will boost your energy level. The kindness you show a newcomer will be amply repaid. Go all out.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): There has never been a better time for improving family relationships. Love is in the air. Take the first step towards solving a financial problem.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Use tact. In just one minute, you can turn a sensitive situation around in your favor. Stick with your diet no matter how much party goodies tempt you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An important signal comes from an unexpected corner this morning. Wake up to the intrigue around you at work. A financial plan can win approval if the facts and figures cited are for real.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are independent and highly motivated. A lot of the time, they will prefer to play, work and study by themselves. Energetic and physically fit, these children usually enjoy organized sports, camping and hiking. An early interest in medicine or scientific research should be gently encouraged. Ambitious and hard-working, these Aries must learn how to take time off now and then. Otherwise, they risk physical exhaustion or emotional burnout. A late marriage will probably have the best chance for success.

The bidding:

3 NT	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
6 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♠

Sometimes it is easy to spot an additional chance to make your contract. Nuggets that are buried deep, though, are difficult to unearth.

This hand occurred in a duplicate event. South's first two bids showed a balanced hand of 25-27 points and North decided the six-card suit made slam a possibility. Despite the fact it was a pairs contest, South's decision to correct to the higher-scoring contract was, at best, debatable.

West led a low spade, knocking out a key entry to dummy before it could be put to use. Declarer cashed the ace and king of clubs, only to receive the bad news that there was no way to enjoy the table's long clubs.

The only suit to offer any hope was diamonds. Declarer crossed to the jack of hearts, discarded a spade on the queen of clubs, then successfully finessed the queen of diamonds. When declarer cashed the ace of diamonds, East defended perfectly by jettisoning the king, so West was able to win the third diamond and cash the jack of clubs for a one-trick set. A combination of bad luck and fine defense was declarer's undoing.

Despite East's heroic effort, the contract should have been fulfilled. After unblocking the high clubs, declarer should have led a low diamond from hand! After winning the spade return, declarer can get to the board with the jack of hearts, cash the queen of clubs for a spade discard and then take the diamond finesse. When that succeeds and both defenders follow to the ace, the 13th diamond becomes declarer's 12th trick.

■ Language class set

ODESSA — Time is running out to sign up for Odessa College's two-week Spanish language class in Cuernavaca, Mexico, the last two weeks in May.

Those attending will earn college credit for Spanish 1370. In addition to attending classes and living with families, the trip includes optional sightseeing on weekends.

For more information call Larry Hoover, OC language instructor, at 1-335-6555.

Registrations have to be in early to secure air fare rates.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ Pianist to perform

Doug Montgomery, a Santa Fe pianist, is to perform at a benefit for Midland Opera Theater set for 7 p.m. April 23 at The Petroleum Club.

He will be accompanied by Lindsey McKee, a soprano from England who now lives in Kansas City.

The event will include dinner and a cash bar. In addition to reserved seating, reserved tables are available for eight and 10 persons for $100 a couple or $50 a person.

For more information call 699-1162.

■ Series continues

The Museum of the Southwest continues its Under Starry Skies Lecture Series Thursday with writer Joyce Gibson Roach of Texas Christian University presenting music and poetry by and about cowboys.

"Sing a New Song: Music of the West" starts at 7 p.m.

Ms. Roach edited and wrote the afterword for "Ride for the Brand," a volume of poetry and songs by Red Stegall, the state's official cowboy poet. A frequent participant as storyteller, singer, moderator and scholar at cowboy poetry gatherings, she also plays fiddle, mandolin and banjo.

Her 1976 award winning non-fiction book, "The Cowgirls," has been reissued in revised edition. She received several awards for the 1989 book, "Eats: A Folk History of Texas Food," co-authored with Ernestine Sewell Linck.

She is a member of several history organizations, including the Texas Folklore Society, Texas State Historical Association and West Texas Historical Association.

She received a bachelor's of fine arts degree in 1958 from TCU where she is an adjunct faculty member teaching composition, the Western novel and Southwestern literature.

Admission to the program is $3 for museum members and students with identification and $5 for non-members. Reporter-Telegram EXTRA card holders receive a discount.

■ Broadcast planned

Giacomo Puccini's "Tosca" will be broadcast live from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House at 12:30 p.m. CST Saturday over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera International Radio Network.

It will be heard locally over KCRS.

Maria Guleghina will sing the title role, with Luciano Pavarotti as Cavaradossi, James Morris as Scarpia and Christian Badea conducting.

■ Auditions held

Auditions for Midland Community Theatre's production of "Gargoyles & Scarecrow Sins" are being held at 7:30 p.m. April 25 and 26 in the Redfern Room, Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Roles are available for four men, ranging in age from mid-30s to mid-40s, and five women, ranging in age from late 20s to late 40s.

For more information call 682-2544.

■ Book signing set

Author Linda Herring will be signing copies of her books from 2 to 4 p.m. Saturday at Pages and Prints, Plaza Shopping Center.

Ms. Herring is the wife of a Monahans minister. Her most recent books, "Yesterday's Tomorrows" and the newly released "Song of Captivity," are set in West Texas but separated in time by more than 60 years.

For more information, call Pages and Prints.

■ Entertainers needed

Deadline for vendors is June 1. Deadline for entertainers and musicians is Friday. For more information call 4th on Broadway, 1-806-741-7145.

■ Production planned

LEVELLAND — Neil Simon's "Biloxi Blues" will be staged as the spring production at South Plains College.

The comedy will be produced Thursday through April 19 at the Theater for the Performing Arts on the Levelland campus. Admission is $3 for adults, $1 for students and $1 a person for those in groups of 10 or more. For more information call 1-806-894-9611, Ext. 266.

■ Singer to perform

FORT WORTH — Johnny Mathis is to perform at 8 p.m. April 22 and 23 at the Will Rogers Coliseum, 1 Amon Carter Center.

Tickets range in price from $14 to $30.

For more information call 1-817-332-CASA.

■ Presentation set

FORT WORTH — Casa Manana Children's Playhouse is to present "Ali Baba & The Forty Thieves" Friday, Saturday and April 22 and 23. Performances are Friday evenings at 7:30 p.m. and Saturday matinees at 2 p.m. Tickets are $6.

At Casa's Theatre on the Square, 110 E. Third, "Nunsense II — The Second Coming" is on stage through April 24. Performance times are 8 p.m. Thursday and Friday, 5 and 9 p.m. Saturday and 2 p.m. Sunday. Tickets are $15 to $18.

For more information call 1-817-332-CASA.

■ Show scheduled

JUNCTION — The eighth annual Kimble County Gun, Knife, Coin and Indian Artifact Show is set for Saturday and April 17 at the Coke Stevenson Center, Highway 83 at 377, a mile north of Junction.

Hours are 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. April 17. Admission is $2 a person. Children under 12 will be admitted free when accompanied by a parent.

Close to 80 trade tables will be set up.

In conjunction with the show, an outdoor flea market will be held. No admission will be charged for the flea market.

For more information call Roy Cooper, 1-446-3361.

■ Homemaker to speak

Gail Sachson speaks on "Fads & Fashion in Art" to the Midland Country Club Ladies Association on April 22.

A Plano homemaker and mother of two, Ms. Sachson takes paying students once a month to some artistic destination, usually galleries, museums and art studios. Her goal is to expose her groups to "the hottest happenings in the art world."

Her private teaching and consulting business is called Ask Me About Art.

Social hour April 22 begins at 11:30 a.m. Lunch is at noon followed by Ms. Sachson's presentation.

■ Spring show set

The Marian Blakemore Planetarium's spring show, "More Than Meets the Eye," begins today and will be shown through May 29.

This program, which will be shown at 2 and 3:30 p.m. Sundays, compares what is seen in the sky by the human eye through a small telescope with observatory astrophotos and images from spacecraft.

Museum of the Southwest members will be admitted free. Nonmembers are charged $2 for adults and $1 for children. Reporter-Telegram EXTRA card holders receive a discount.

The Planetarium's "West Texas Skies" continues at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays. For more information call 683-2882 or 570-7770.

■ Club features artists

Their works may be seen from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Woman's Club building at Hogan Park.
