Unexplained rioting rocks factory town

By JOHN MULLINS
Associated Press Writer

LAWRENCE, Mass. — Nearly 80 police surrounded two blocks of this factory town today, keeping an uneasy peace after scores of young men went on a five-hour arson and rock-throwing rampage that left at least 13 people hurt.

A liquor store and two apartments were heavily damaged after being firebombed and a bar was ransacked in the disturbance, which began Wednesday night and was put down by dozens of city police and helmeted state troopers wielding clubs, authorities said today.

"They were going crazy out there," Deputy Fire Chief Al DeCelle said. "They were throwing firebombs all over the street."

Young men pelted the police and firefighters with rocks and tossed firebombs in the Tower Hill section, a densely populated area that is home to poor blacks, whites and Hispanics, said city Police Capt. Frank Foley.

Police said 13 people were taken to Lawrence General Hospital. Seven had been shot, and two of them were seriously wounded. One person was treated for a knife wound and five were treated for injuries caused by flying debris.

Authorities said they had no definite idea what sparked the violence in the northern Massachusetts city of 63,000 people, but they were investigating the possibility that it began as an argument between two families.

Police Capt. Samuel Aliano said, "It all started over a broken window, I understand. One family alleged another broke a window. One fellow came out with a baseball bat and swung it. One thing led to another."

The dispute was between a Hispanic family and a white family, he said, but "I wouldn't really call it racial." A member of one of the families was taken into protective custody, he said.

Foley estimated at least 100 participants and bystanders were in the streets during the rampage.

Three people were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct, police said. Another man was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon and harassing a police dog.

Aliano said a man believed to have been involved in the initial disturbance was taken into protective custody at headquarters.

Investigators had not determined who fired the shots that caused the injuries.

Police surrounded the neighborhood after the disturbance, and made plans to walk through the scene of the violence later today.

"Our main concern is containing the situation and keeping it contained," said Foley. "It's explosive. We cordoned off the block and we're showing strength. ... The greatest fear is that once there is a pulling back, it will start again."

Fourteen people were injured in the melee, seven of them with buckshot, he said.

A nursing supervisor who would not give her name at Lawrence General Hospital said nine people were treated, including six people brought in with wounds from "small buckshot." She said one person was treated for a broken shoulder, one man was treated for abrasions and a woman was treated for cuts.

The supervisor said one gunshot victim was admitted in stable condition and the others were discharged.

Foley said the first police cruiser answered a call about 9:25 p.m. Wednesday involving "a couple of people fighting and throwing rocks."

The cruiser found no trouble and left, but was quickly called back.

"They were sent right back," said Foley. "They stoned the cruiser and its backup. From there on, it was hit and run. Whatever we sent in was stoned. They threw Molotov cocktails, people were firing weapons, and several fires broke out."

Police officers and attack dogs from all over the region, 30 miles north of Boston near the New Hampshire border, were called in to assist the Lawrence force.

DeCelle said small fires erupted in several homes and were extinguished by residents.

Police Officer Willie Arleque said the block as under control at about 2:30 a.m.

School days about to begin

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

A survey of local merchants probably reveal that the items most difficult to keep in stock these days are gremlin lunch boxes and book bags.

That can only mean one thing. In just 2½ weeks summer officially ends for school children. No more sleeping late, cruising the mall or watching soap operas.

It's that time of year when some parents tearfully see their first-born off to his first day of classes, and others skip all the way home because their last child has finally entered school.

Midland Independent School District opens its doors Aug. 27. A 17,090 enrollment is expected. Buildings, boundaries and clusters remain virtually unchanged from last year.

Fall bus schedules, supply suggestions and a variety of back-to-school hints provided

— Section D

The only difference is that junior high school students living in the Fannin Elementary School district, and those riding rural buses 58, 10, 14, 6, 9, 30, 68, 77 and 24 will attend San Jacinto instead of Goddard Junior High School. Exempted students should have already applied for and received a transfer.

Although no new schools will open this fall, construction has begun on an elementary school, located west of Loop 250, which is to be completed and ready for classes in a year.

Students new to MISD and those who have moved to a new attendance area during the summer must pre-register at the school they will attend. Pre-registration for elementary school children will be 8 a.m. to noon and 1-4 p.m. Monday. Pre-registration for secondary school students has already begun and will continue, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., through Aug. 24. New students who wish to register and/or receive an individual orientation may call for an appointment at 682-7367 during August.

Parents or students who are unsure what attendance area they live in can obtain boundary maps and cluster information at the administration building, 702 N. N St., or call the office of a neighborhood school.

A child must be five years old on or before Sept. 1 to enroll in kindergarten or six years old at that time to enroll in first grade. First-time students should have a birth certificate and immunization record. Other students new to MISD need immunization records to register. A report card or withdrawal form from the district last attended is also helpful.

Texas law requires all students to be immunized for the following diseases: tetanus/diphtheria, polio, measles, rubella and mumps. A student entering school for the first time must also have received a polio and tetanus/diphtheria booster shot after his fourth birthday.

Committee to iron out Salvador aid differences

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — With a better than 2-to-1 victory in the Senate, the Reagan administration hopes to salvage emergency military aid to El Salvador when senators sit down for what is expected to be tough bargaining with House Democrats.

The Republican-controlled Senate rejected by a 69-29 vote Wednesday a move to follow the lead of the Democrat-dominated House and deny President Reagan's request for $117 million to buy trucks, helicopters and other equipment for the Salvadoran army.

The issue now goes to a House-Senate conference committee, which will iron out this and other differences in the two houses' versions of a bill to keep various government programs going until Sept. 30, when the current fiscal year ends.

Asked whether the Senate-approved funds for El Salvador

Leftists ambush patrol as Salvadoran military sweeps continue

Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Leftist rebels ambushed a military patrol in northern El Salvador and killed three national guardsmen, a military source said, while thousands of soldiers continued anti-guerrilla sweeps in four other provinces.

The source, requesting anonymity for security reasons, said the ambush occurred in San Vicente province near Santo Domingo, 46 miles north of the capital, on Wednesday. He said he had no information on guerrilla casualties.

In another northern province, Chalatenango, and the eastern provinces of San Miguel, Usulután and Morazan, the army has been conducting sweeps to flush out guerrillas. About two infantry battalions reportedly are involved in each province.

The U.S.-backed government is fighting leftist forces that launched a civil war in October 1979.

In Nicaragua, the leftist government said anti-Sandinista rebels in speed boats sprayed machine gun fire at the town of El Marañón, six miles west of the port of Potosi on the Gulf of Fonseca. It said a government soldier was wounded in the six-minute attack Tuesday.

The Foreign Ministry said the rebel boats retreated to the Honduran port of San Lorenzo, which also is on the Gulf of Fonseca. The Sandinista government again accused Honduras of supporting the rebels of the Nicaragua Democratic Force, which is based in Honduras. The Honduran government denies giving them aid.

In Honduras, the Reagan administration's special envoy to Central America, Harry Shlaude-man, told reporters he met with Honduran President Roberto Suazo Cordova and briefed him on U.S.-Nicaraguan talks last week in Mexico.

Republican source, declining to be quoted by name, told reporters.

A State Department official, also insisting on anonymity, said, "The administration remains hopeful of getting funding in this fiscal year."

In a foretaste of battles still to come, the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations approved $123 million in Salvadoran military aid for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, rejecting by a 6-5 vote a move to slash the funds by one third. William L. Schneider, undersecretary of state for security assistance, indicated the administration would continue to press for its original request of $132 million.

The Senate passed its version of the supplemental spending bill for this fiscal year, totaling $6.9 billion, by a vote of 62-32 after defeating Sen. Daniel K. Inouye's amendment to delete the funds for El Salvador. The Hawaii Democrat argued that the administration had not exhausted the $126 million Congress had already appropriated for the purpose in this fiscal year.

Sen. Robert Kasten, R-Wis., responded that the additional money was needed to buy 230 trucks, eight helicopters and other equipment the Salvadorans need.

Did Hawthorne pen in poisonous plot?

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON — A physician believes he has discovered — and solved — a twist of plot in "The Scarlet Letter" that has eluded a century of literary critics of the classic novel.

To most readers, Nathaniel Hawthorne's book is a tale of sin and guilt, subtle in meaning but straightforward in plot.

Dr. Jemshed A. Khan saw something else: the poisoning of the adulterous parson by the cuckolded husband, he concluded in a report published today.

"This poisoning of a major character in a widely read novel, written by a celebrated author, has escaped forensic detection for more than a century," Khan said in the New England Journal of Medicine.

One Hawthorne expert agreed that the theory is unique but said she doubted it's an accurate interpretation of the novel.

The story, set in Puritan Boston, revolves around Hester Prynne and her affair with minister Arthur Dimmesdale while separated from her husband, Dr. Roger Chillingworth. The young woman bears an illegitimate daughter and is forced to wear a scarlet "A."

Chillingworth suspects Dimmesdale, who is consumed by guilt. Dimmesdale's behavior grows increasingly bizarre, and he eventually confesses and dies.

Khan contends that Dimmesdale did not die of neurotic guilt, as most experts presume, but instead was slowly poisoned by Chillingworth. He even thinks he can identify the murderous potion — atropine.

Khan, a resident in eye surgery at the University of Missouri in Columbia, pieces together his theory from clues strewn through the novel.

"I think that what I've uncovered are the ruins of a submerged plot," Khan said in an interview. "When Hawthorne was formulating the novel, he had this idea, but later on, he went on to things that were more interesting to him."

Gramm: Doggett spokesmen give misinformation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican U.S. Senate candidate Phil Gramm charged Wednesday that spokesmen for his Democratic rival, state Sen. Lloyd Doggett, are spreading misinformation about their candidate's support of a homosexual rights bill.

The College Station congressman also told a news conference in his Capitol Hill office that a Doggett campaign spokesman erroneously denied that Doggett actively sought a campaign contribution from a homosexual group.

"My opponent has people speaking for him that don't know what they're talking about," Gramm said, citing reported comments by Doggett campaign manager James Carville and press secretary Mark McKinnon.

Carville responded in a telephone interview from Austin that Gramm "conveniently neglected to provide the true facts."

STATE

Gramm said the proposed Civil Rights Amendments Act of 1983, supported by Doggett, would give courts the authority to order "affirmative action" for homosexuals along with other minority groups. But Gramm defined "affirmative action" to mean such legal relief as hiring, reinstatement and back pay.

He said Doggett spokesmen have denied that Doggett supports homosexual "affirmative action."

Carville said that Doggett does not support "affirmative action" for homosexuals — which he defines as hiring quotas — and that such programs are specifically ruled out in the bill.

"Lloyd Doggett is not and never has been for any affirmative action program (for homosexuals), and Mr. Gramm knows this and should retract immediately," Carville said.

Gramm also disputed a reported statement by McKinnon that Doggett did not actively solicit a contribution from a homosexual group.

"The issue is not the gay lifestyle," Gramm said. "I think it's an issue when a candidate actively solicits a campaign contribution and then supports special interest legislation."

Gramm said Doggett sent a questionnaire to a homosexual group saying he supported the rights bill.

"We never said that we didn't fill out a questionnaire," Carville said. He said the campaign responded to the group's questionnaire "just like we fill out questionnaires for the realtors or whatever."

Doggett returned a campaign donation from a San Antonio gay group after he learned that it came from a fund-raiser that featured a male strip show, Carville said.

Missing TDC witness believed to be alive

MADISONVILLE (AP) — A man who disappeared a day after it was publicly announced he was a witness in a prison investigation is believed to be alive in Ohio or Pennsylvania, authorities said.

A man matching the description of James R. Pitts, who has been missing since July 3, was seen trying to use Pitts' American Express credit card to check into a Pittsburgh motel Tuesday night, Madison County Sheriff Ed said in an article published in The Houston Post today.

Pitts worked for seven years at Texas Department of Corrections, where he was a construction superintendent before resigning in January to work for a small oil company.

His bloody, bullet-ridden van was found near a roadside park in Madison County July 3, the day after Attorney General Jim Mattox announced Pitts had agreed to cooperate in an investigation into TDC's handling of construction bids. Mattox said Pitts also agreed to pay $25,000 for violating state bidding laws.

Fannin said American Express provided authorities with an address in Cleveland, Ohio, where a man using the name James R. Pitts rented an apartment.

Two witnesses at the apartment complex reported seeing a man whose description fit Pitts "to a T," Fannin told the Post. The man renting the apartment listed TDC as his former employer and said he now works for an oil company, the sheriff said.

Fannin said the apartment was vacant Wednesday and the whereabouts of its tenant unknown, but said he is sure the renter is Pitts.

"From the information he gave the lady he subleased from, the only one who knows that information is Pitts," Fannin said.

Fannin said American Express told him a man claiming to be Pitts reported Monday that his credit card was missing and asked that it be sent to the address of the Ohio apartment.

But the sheriff said he will not search for "in Ohio because the former TDC employee is not wanted for any crime and said he considers the case closed."

Fannin said weeks ago evidence showed the shooting of the van was staged.

Lufkin city manager, police have right to deny use of Civic Center

LUFKIN (AP) — Spurred by the Ku Klux Klan's rental of the Lufkin Civic Center last month, the City Commission here has unanimously passed a resolution giving the city manager and chief of police authority to deny rentals to groups likely to incite violence.

The resolution also calls for any civic center renter to pay, in advance, for any extra police protection the rental might cause.

"We're not necessarily trying to direct it at the Ku Klux Klan," said City Attorney Robert Flournoy, author of the resolution. "Of course, the question came up because of them."

Controversy erupted over the KKK's use of the civic center July 14 to show a film. Some residents protested that the group shouldn't be allowed on city property, while others said it would be a violation of the 1st Amendment to deny the group access.

U.S. Rep. Charles Wilson sparked commission discussion of the rental policy by offering the assistance of his office to find ways to prevent future rentals to the KKK. At that meeting the commission instructed Flournoy to investigate legal options.

Since the KKK's rental of the civic center, the Klan has said it would apply for a parade permit, although it has yet to do so formally.

The city attorney said he will study the possibility of enacting a similar ordinance for parades.

Police protection for the Klan's last visit cost the city $1,600, Flournoy said.

Mayor Pitser Garrison said the resolution wasn't necessarily targeted at any one group.

"But I will say that I personally hope it discourages the KKK from coming back," he added.

Garrison said the City Commission will again consider the resolution at its Aug. 21 meeting.

Corpus Christi man steals his neighbor's water

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A Corpus Christi man has been accused of stealing his neighbor's water, the first report of water theft in three years of drought.

The man, who owns a pasture on the edge of the city, had hooked a garden hose to the outside water faucet of a neighbor's house and was using the water for his horses.

Corpus Christi instituted mandatory water conservation measures July 1 and will initiate stricter measures Aug. 25.

Wife buries hope along with husband

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Under hazy skies on a sultry Oklahoma morning, Kathryn Fanning surrendered 17 years of hope.

A seven-man Marine rifle detail fired three volleys through the still air on Wednesday as Mrs. Fanning, of Fort Worth, Texas, buried the remains of her husband, Maj. Hugh Michael Fanning.

She buried, too, a "haunting" hope her husband would come back to her alive. Fanning was last seen 17 years ago, when, five months into a tour of duty in Vietnam, he didn't return to his base in Danang after a mission.

The remains of eight Marines were returned to the United States by Vietnam on July 17. Last week, military coroners in Hawaii confirmed one of the eight was her husband.

On Wednesday, Fanning was buried in an Oklahoma City cemetery after a short Catholic service.

"The greatest gift in life is not in its possession but in its surrender," said the Rev. Lawrence Breedlove of Fort Worth during services in an Oklahoma City funeral home.

Burial followed at a nearby cemetery, where Fanning's steel gray casket covered with an American flag was escorted by Marines in full dress and black armbands.

The sounds of two Air Force buglers playing "Taps" hung on the humid air as the flag was folded with military precision and given to Mrs. Fanning, who was accompanied by their two daughters and son, ages 17, 18, and 20.

Woman who killed two husbands hangs herself in isolation cell

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A woman who met men through lonely hearts clubs and poisoned two of her four husbands with arsenic hanged herself with a prison bedsheet and left a note saying "at last I have found peace," authorities said.

Ada Wittenmyer, 39, was found hanging in her cell Wednesday evening, six days after being sentenced to life in prison for the 1974 murder of her third husband, William Hayes. She had pleaded innocent by reason of insanity.

Hayes' body was exhumed after Mrs. Wittenmyer's fourth husband died of arsenic poisoning. She was convicted of that killing in 1982 and sentenced to a 25-year prison term in the poisoning of wealthy Oklahoma rancher John Wittenmyer, whom she met through a lonely hearts club advertisement. Her other two marriages ended in divorce.

Authorities discovered last week that Mrs. Wittenmyer was continuing to correspond with at least one man she had met through a lonely hearts club advertisement.

In one of several handwritten suicide notes she left in her cell at DeBerry Correctional Institute here, Mrs. Wittenmyer said, "I want to remain as I lived — alone, just a bittersweet memory."

In another note, Mrs. Wittenmyer asked prison officials to call her parents and "tell them at last I have found peace," Warden Aileen Love said.

"I've brought shame and disgrace on my family. God knows they tried to love me, but it's hard to love a mentally ill child that you don't know what's wrong with them," the note said.

Mrs. Wittenmyer was alone in her cell under mandatory isolation at the time of her death, Ms. Love said. She had been held at DeBerry since last winter to await trial in Hayes' death.

States to get stars in Great Seal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Twenty-five years after Alaska and Hawaii were admitted to the Union, the Senate has voted to recognize the fact by adding two stars to the 48 that rim the Great Seal in its ceiling.

The senators adopted the suggestion Wednesday night as an amendment to a $6.9 billion supplemental appropriation bill for the balance of the present fiscal year.

The amendment was offered by Sen. Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, who said he got a similar one adopted when he was in the House.

Matsunaga said the stars could be added with money already in the bill and would not cost more than $900.

Child support bill goes to president for signature

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation providing for mandatory withholding of wages from parents delinquent in child support payments goes to President Reagan for his expected signature after winning final congressional approval.

"I expect him to sign this landmark action into law within the next few days," Rep. Marge Roukema, R-N.J., said Wednesday when the House voted 413-0 in favor of the legislation. The Senate already had approved the measure.

"Today we score a victory in the battle against the feminization of poverty, against parents who abdicate their responsibility to support their children, and against growing economic inequity in our country," said Rep. Barbara B. Kennelly, D-Conn.

Secretary of Health and Human Services Margaret Heckler called the legislation "a classic example of bipartisan unity."

She said it "gives me precisely the tools that I've requested from Congress, which can help me put teeth into the program and advance forcefully toward the day when child support payments will never be overlooked again."

Argentine moviegoers swallow bitter pill with 'Boys of the War'

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Moviegoers in this strongly nationalistic country are getting a dose of recent, bitter history — the Falkland Islands war and the young men who fought it.

"Chicos de la Guerra" or "Boys of the War," the first movie ever about the conflict, made its debut Aug. 2 in theaters across the country.

"This film is very powerful. It is very close to the people's memories and feelings," director Bebe Kamin, 41, said in an interview.

Daniel Kon, 29, who wrote the book on which the movie is based and collaborated in the filming, asked: "Will the people go and see it? We have our doubts."

More than two years after its end, the South Atlantic war remains an unhealed wound in the Argentine psyche. The movie's opening scenes recreate the most painful recollection — the surrender of the country's troops to British forces who retook the Falklands in June 1982 to end the 74-day war.

The film then moves backward to the childhood of its protagonists — three fresh-faced boys, two from the city and one raised in the country. They do not meet until the war, and the movie ends with their return to the mainland following their ejection from the islands.

Argentine losses in the fighting — 712 killed — were nearly three times that of Britain, which lost 255 fighters. Many of the Argentine victims were barely old enough to shave, raw youths with few combat skills. They were known by their countrymen as "the boys."

With its focus on these young, inexperienced combatants, "Chicos de la Guerra" is unusual fare for the

"This film is really very unusual for our culture. I'm not sure how much people want to see their own faces looking back at them from the screen."

— Bebe Kamin, director of Boys of the War

Argentine movie fan.

The country's own movie industry traditionally has avoided controversial themes, being content with romance, action and comedy. Under the military government that ruled for eight years until last December, politics as a subject for movies was taboo. Now, with a democratic government, things are changing.

"This film is really very unusual for our culture," said Kamin. "I'm not sure how much people want to see their own faces looking back at them from the screen."

He and Kon recently visited a Buenos Aires movie theater to see the reaction to previews of the movie. Jaws dropped, they said, when on the screen flashed the image of an embattled Port Stanley — recreated in a small provincial town, complete with British Land Rovers and warehouses bearing the words "Falkland Island Company."

Some viewers put their hands over their faces and shook their heads. Kon remembers the scattered applause that broke out when the preview ended. Kamin recalls only the stunned silence.

It is the first South American-produced picture to recreate a contemporary battle, and presented formidable technical obstacles for a crew working with a budget of about $250,000 — a pittance by American standards.

Bombs had to be made from scratch. Uniforms and weapons for the 100 actors and 500 extras had to be borrowed from a local military unit, which refused to supply the items until the civilian government applied pressure.

"The military didn't like my book," Kon explained.

War scenes were filmed outside Tandil, 225 miles south of Buenos Aires on rolling rural landscape similar to that of the Falklands. The streets of Sierra Bayas, a tiny town west of Tandil became Port Stanley.

"These boys (in the film) were 13 years old when the military took over in the coup (of 1976)," said Kon. "So they grew up in one of the most terrible periods of our history."

He said he wanted to show how the youths' adolescence was squandered in a period of brutal political repression and intense censorship. "The tragic story ends with the war, which was only the last gasp of a terrible regime."

"Chicos de la Guerra" does not challenge the age-old claim of sovereignty by Argentina over the Falklands, although it appears to condemn the futile attempt to take them by force.

Kamin and Kon are hopeful "Chicos de la Guerra" will have a market in other Latin American countries, which followed the war with Britain closely.

Women's theater unveils production of 'Lucky Chance'

LONDON (AP) — The recently founded Women's Playhouse Trust (WPT) has unveiled its initial production, "The Lucky Chance," to mixed reviews from the male critics — and a passionate defense from the comedy's female director, Jules Wright.

Calling the WPT's bow "an auspicious and historic occasion," critic Michael Ratcliffe wrote in The Observer that "The Lucky Chance" was, nonetheless, "a far from convincing production of the wrong play."

But Ms. Wright, a founding member of the WPT, was unperturbed by the reaction.

"Several critics wrote under the presumption that because one chooses Aphra Behn (the author of 'The Lucky Chance'), she is automatically going to be a modern feminist writer in the modern feminist mode, and it's just not true," Ms. Wright said in an interview. "This is a very distinctive play. There's a sense of history there."

Ms. Wright said "The Lucky Chance" marked a significant choice for inaugurating the WPT, an organization formed in 1980 to advance the cause of women in all aspects of the British theater.

"During the period of the Restoration from 1640-88, you had the same burgeoning of women writers then as you do now in a society that was not necessarily conducive to letting them be heard," she said.

Written in 1686, the Restoration comedy is on record as the first English language play written by a woman. A spy for Charles II, Mrs. Behn turned to the writing of plays and novels to rid herself of debt. "The Lucky Chance" has not been seen in London since 1713.

The critics were divided about the merits of the play, a comedy centered on the amorous pursuits of three young women, beyond its value as an historical first.

"On the evidence of 'The Lucky Chance,' it seems that Mrs. Behn set out for a theatrical career by beating the men at their own game," wrote Irving Wardle in The Times of London.

"She has none of the lapidary wit of her contemporaries Congreve, Dryden, and Wycherly," wrote Francis King in the Sunday Telegraph.

Ms. Wright, a former psychotherapist and headmistress, said the reviewers were "not precise in their assessment of the play. The women in the play work with a directness and truth and simplicity not found in many Restoration comedies."

She said a more comprehensive critique came from Lady Antonia Fraser, who reviewed "The Lucky Chance" for the British Broadcasting Corp.'s arts show, "Kaleidoscope."

"I'm astonished that the play hasn't been done over the last 250 years," said Lady Fraser, calling the show "a very encouraging start for the WPT."

The fact that the production is 85 percent sold-out for the remainder of its run must be encouraging as well. The WPT hopes to put any profits toward the eventual purchase of a theater in London's West End.

The theater would be named for Sarah Siddons, a noted Shakespearean actress who retired in 1812, and it would provide a home to new female writers, directors, and creative personnel.

For the moment, the WPT, whose founding directorate also includes actresses Diana Quick, Glenda Jackson and Jane Lapotaire, is readying the Christmas bow of a new adaptation by Louise Page of the "Beauty and the Beast" legend.

Ms. Wright also looks forward to women taking on the classics written by men.

"It's important to bring a woman's sensibility to bear on the classics," said Ms. Wright, arguing that female characters in Shakespeare are "too frequently undervalued" by male directors.

She pointed to Adrian Noble's 1982 production of "King Lear" at the Royal Shakespeare Company as an instance of Shakespeare's women being treated "like cardboard cut-outs." "After all, Lear had three daughters," she said.

CBS to present vignettes to honor U.S. individuals

LOS ANGELES (AP) — While the Statue of Liberty undergoes an extensive facelift, CBS will keep the torch lit with a daily one-minute celebration of individuals who have left their mark on America.

From epic sculptor Gutson Borglum to Rosie the Riveter to Rosa Parks, who helped spark the Civil Rights movement — from the inventor of barbed wire to Vladimir Zworykin, the father of television — these one-minute vignettes are designed to illuminate the unsung hero or heroine.

"An American Portrait" will be telecast Monday through Friday beginning Sept. 24, until the 100th anniversary of Lady Liberty on Oct. 18, 1986. In all, 130 vignettes will be made.

Each story will be told by a celebrity, such as Gregory Peck, who will open the series with a look at Emma Lazarus, who wrote the poem inscribed on the base of the Statue of Liberty.

"Like 'The Bicentennial Minute,' we'll provide information but we'll deal more with people," said producer Alex Pomasanoff. "They will hinge on the unsung hero, people who aren't in the common knowledge of history. Many of them will deal with immigrants who entered this country under the arm of the Statue of Liberty."

The idea for the series began as a celebration of the centennial of the Statue of Liberty, which is now being refurbished and re-enforced.

"Originally, it was going to be just the story of immigrants," said Pomasanoff. "But it's a broader spectrum now, although the emphasis is still on immigrants."

"We've got researchers reading everything they can lay their hands on pertaining to American life and culture. We're not going to do any Rockefeller or Carnegie or any of the well-known people."

Don't let the threat of a ruff cause you to panic. Take time to see if there is a cure for the malady.

We are not enchanted with the auction, even though it propelled North-South to an excellent slam. Since he had bid only one spade at his first turn, North intended his jump rebid to show an excellent suit and a full opening bid. South cue-bid clubs and then went on to slam when North belatedly supported diamonds.

It might have been a good idea for West to lead the king of hearts and then decide what to do. However, he opted to try for a spade ruff instead, and chose his singleton jack for the initial attack.

It was obvious this card was a singleton, and South hurried to prevent a ruff. He won the first trick in dummy and led a trump to the ace. All would have been well had trumps split 2-1—declarer would have been able to get back to the table with the king of diamonds while drawing the last outstanding trump, and then take three discards on high spades to make an over-trick. But when East failed to follow to the first trump declarer could not recover. He ended up losing three tricks.

Since he was only in a small slam, South could have made sure of his contract for the price of one trick. If West was so eager to get a ruff, declarer should have given it to him! At trick two, declarer should have continued with a high spade from the table, discarding his heart loser on this trick.

West can ruff (it does not help not to—declarer simply continues leading high spades), but now he is down to only two trumps. The defense has shot its bow. Declarer can win any return, cash the ace and king of trumps to end up on the board, and take two club discards on the high spades. Making six-odd.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY:

"The Yellow Rose's" Noah Beery, Detroit Tigers' Tom Brookens, Kansas City coach Rocky Colavito, Eddie Fisher, basketball's Red Holtzman and tennis' Dianne Fromholtz were born today. Also born on this date: President Herbert Hoover, actor Jack Haley Sr. and actress Norma Shearer. The events of the next few months bring out your leadership qualities. Use your new power and money wisely and the sky is the limit. Your optimistic attitude is a major asset. You have good luck in the marketplace. Romance and marriage enjoy especially favorable influences in October. Take that special vacation you have talked about. Loyal and generous, you have many friends.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Although a sudden change in plans is upsetting, the alternative arrangement turns out fine. You are lucky to get financial tips from a private party. Romance begins to heat up.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Getting an early start today will help you attain a personal goal. You are handsomely rewarded for your past efforts. Move quietly ahead with a new venture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Favorable money trends continue. Your popularity helps you reach your goals. Squelch any feelings of jealousy before they cause trouble. A small gift puts you on the right track with loved one.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get an early start today so that you can make a quick exit this afternoon. Keep your distance from difficult people. Good timing is part of your success formula.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Inspirational thinking will benefit your work or family. A new home or decorating project brings greater physical comfort. A school reunion could put you in touch with a former flame.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A younger person seeks your help, do everything you can. Your concentration on a creative project pays off handsomely. An authority figure admires your work. An infatuation could be the real thing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Curb a tendency to be too assertive lest romantic partner get turned off. An unusually talented individual wants to team up with you. You reap new rewards for past favors.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A study or research project builds your confidence. A local club or community project deserves your attention. Seek financial support from those behind the scenes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Check the references of any prospective employees. An invitation enlivens the social scene this afternoon or evening. Meeting new people puts you in a romantic mood.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A sudden change in plans could work to your advantage. Spend sparingly on entertainment. An out-of-town visitor offers new insights and contacts. Use familiar routes if traveling by car.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Real estate and financial matters look promising. Concentrate on activities close to home that will put you in touch with relatives and friends. Small gatherings hold more appeal than large ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take advantage of a moneymaking idea advanced by experts. You seem to be on the right track where study or research is concerned.

Watergate lesson

Looking at the entire Watergate episode and the ultimate resignation of Richard M. Nixon, which occurred 10 years ago today, it all seems a little exaggerated — a surrealistic drama played for the attention of the nation at the end of the Vietnam War.

After all, the implications present in the burglary at Democratic National Committee headquarters on June 17, 1972, weren't really all that treacherous, were they? And the revelation that individuals with connections to President Nixon were involved really wasn't all that dramatic was it? Ultimately, of course, history tells those of us who lived through Watergate — and those of us who were too young to realize what was happening — that too many fingers of guilt pointed to Nixon and his power base in the Congress eroded. An impeachment move was gaining support.

So Nixon stepped down in a move that, from the vantage point of 10 years, looks in the best interests of the country. Perhaps the trauma of a president falling from the seat of political power doesn't appear that serious now, a decade later. But it was.

Then, on Aug. 8, 1974, when President Nixon announced he would resign the office the following day, a heavy gloom hung like a black cloud on the nation. Americans didn't know what to expect. The nation was left, for a moment, seemingly vulnerable to outside or internal attack; we were at a low ebb.

But crises pass and so did Watergate. Today the principals are still visible: The former president, named as an unindicted co-conspirator while still in office, is returning to public view more frequently. He gained financially from books he wrote following his resignation and now his opinions are eagerly sought — and given. Others such as White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman, White House counsel John W. Dean III, G. Gordon Liddy — the man who hired the Watergate burglary team — and even Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein, the two Washington Post reporters who largely covered the Watergate scandal, turned their participation in the episode into success, financial or otherwise.

Yes, over the span of 10 years the entire incident takes on a surrealistic flavoring. But that does not mean its lesson for this republic has been or should be lost.

There was a danger present in the abuses of power during the Watergate era that can't be discounted. In one respect the illegal or unethical activity of those involved in the burglary and events that followed it have already been addressed via increased public scrutiny of politicians' activities. More and more politicians today are being held accountable for their actions by both their peers and their constituents.

Another significant revelation of Watergate and the Nixon resignation is the resiliency of this country. The nation survived the stress of the scandal and bounced back stronger than ever. Americans have healed their wounds and forgiven those involved. Not forgotten, but forgiven. Americans must never forget that abuses can occur in government.

That is the real lesson of Watergate.

Words to repeat

During the past week comments were made worth repeating regarding how to protect yourself against burglaries and the political situation in Nicaragua.

A New York detective said the best way to protect yourself against a burglar is to "think like a burglar." Here is his advice:

"A criminal has three major enemies — time, noise and light. If you increase the time he takes, the noise he has to make or the likelihood that he will be seen, you increase your security."

The House of Representatives

Another View:

Hell to high water

The politicians who bellow "No more Vietnams" mean, of course, that they'll keep America out of war. They seldom have a word of sympathy for those who have lost their lives and freedom since all of Vietnam fell to communism. Yet Vietnam's communist government has proved to be every bit as bloodthirsty, totalitarian and aggressive as was feared before the U.S. pull-out.

Before the pullout, those who warned of just that were met with scoffs and the line that the South Vietnamese government was just as brutal and corrupt, if not more so, than the Communists. That's the same line heard today from those who would refuse to so much as send aid to keep El Salvador from falling to communist terrorists, even though, unlike Vietnam, El Salvador is not far from our southern borders.

As Michael Barton of the United Nations high commission for refugees put it, referring to all the heart-rending stories of Vietnamese refugees recently voted to deny financial aid to the rebels fighting the oppressive government in Nicaragua. Rep. Henry Hyde, a Republican congressman from Illinois, complained about this negative action as follows:

"They say prayer can move mountains. That's all we're leaving the freedom fighters in Nicaragua — prayer and the mountains."

The Nicaraguan rebels do indeed have the prayers of millions of Americans, but it is unfortunate we do not back up our supplications with more substantial support.

abandoned to starve at sea by other ships. "It's a screaming outrage."

Here's another screaming outrage: the conditions in Vietnam that, eight years after the communist takeover, still create so many "boat people" willing to risk their lives and endure so much unbelievable torture to escape. But where are the screams in the free world?

Arms dealer fed off Gulf War

WASHINGTON — Basil Tsakos, a Greek arms dealer who entangled Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., and other Washington power brokers in a $15 billion trans-African oil pipeline scheme, was up to his collar in deals. For example, he tried to sell U.S.-made attack helicopters to the Iranian government from his Washington, D.C., office last February in apparent violation of U.S. law, according to an intercepted cable.

The sale of arms to Iran has been forbidden since that country was officially declared a terrorist-supporting nation. Eight people were arrested a year ago for trying to sell similar helicopters to Iran.

Besides trying to peddle arms to Iran, Tsakos reportedly dickered with Iraq over the purchase of Soviet-made weapons. Why was he dealing with both sides in the 4-year-old war between Iran and Iraq?

Aside from the historic greed of arms merchants, the shipments might help to prolong the Persian Gulf War. This would lend credibility to the bizarre plan for a trans-African pipeline, which would enable Saudi Arabian oil to reach the United States and its Western European allies without passing through the exploding Persian Gulf.

It's obvious that Tsakos didn't want his American friends to know that he was trying to fuel the Persian Gulf War to make his pipeline project more appealing. So he tried to keep his arms dealings with Iran and Iraq hidden from the Washington crowd.

My associate Corky Johnson has obtained an intercepted cable to Tsakos which indicates that United General Enterprises, the Greek arms dealer's Athens office, got an agreement with Iran for the purchase of 25 Cobra attack helicopters, each with eight rockets. The Iranians were willing to pay $8.45 million for each gun ship.

This was $50,000 less per chopper than Iran had paid for an earlier purchase of Cobras from Brazil, according to the intercepted cables. Brazilian officials have steadfastly denied selling any arms directly to Iran.

The documents do not show whether Tsakos ever completed the helicopter deal with Iran. But they make clear that he would have made a bundle on the transaction: roughly $400,000 on each helicopter, or a total of about $10 million. The payment would have been funneled to Tsakos through a European bank.

Iran was also looking for spare parts to keep its armada of U.S.-made weapons in working order. Ayatollah Khomeini's regime has been critically short of spare parts since relations with the United States ruptured during the hostage crisis.

The Iranian deal was only the latest in a long line of questionable munitions transactions negotiated by Tsakos. According to documents and other sources, the Greek arms merchant has also tried to sell Soviet-made tanks to Argentina from his office in downtown Washington.

According to knowledgeable sources, Tsakos' modus operandi almost invariably involved bribes to officials of the purchasing government.

"There was always talk of bribes," one source said. "You can't make an arms deal without it."

Countries identified by the sources as places where Tsakos sought cooperation by greasing official palms include Morocco, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Sudan and Tunisia. Usually, the sources said, Tsakos would offer a key official 10 percent of the purchase price once the deal was completed.

SUCKERING THE UNWARY: Several members of Congress unwittingly gave a boost to the leader of a terrorist organization that has the blood of American servicemen on its hands. The group claimed credit for the murders of Air Force Brig. Gen. Harold Price, Col. Paul Shaffer and Lt. Col. Jack Turner, and Army Lt. Col. Lewis Hawkins — members of the U.S. military mission to Iran during the shah's regime.

Yet recently such prominent members of the Senate as Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Gary Hart, D-Colo., sent letters to Massoud Rajavi, chairman of the National Council of Resistance, in response to the Iranian exile group's call for recognition of its mass demonstration against Ayatollah Khomeini on June 20, 1981.

The senators were unaware that the council's parent group, Mojahedin-e Khalq, a leftist anti-shah terrorist group, has boasted of killing the American officers in the mid-1970s. Without checking the background of Rajavi and the "council of resistance" that he runs from exile in Paris, they praised the group's struggle against Khomeini.

GEORGE F. WILL

Grace's 'good ideas' won't fly

WASHINGTON — If you have tears, prepare to shed them for one of President Reagan's 2,478 favorite ideas.

He got these ideas from Peter Grace. When conservatives say "Let Reagan be Reagan," they mean "Let Reagan be Grace."

One of the most radical fellows in or around government, Grace, a businessman, chaired the commission that recently rendered 2,478 recommendations for "cost control" in government.

Reagan has seized upon these recommendations as a refutation of the notion that a tax increase will be required to reduce the deficit to manageable proportions. Vowing at a press conference to rely instead on spending cuts, Reagan said, "We have a task force working on 2,478 recommendations ... of ways in which government can be made more economic and efficient by simply turning to modern business practices."

Reagan has not read the 10-foot-high stack of documentation for the 47 Grace volumes, so he can be forgiven for not knowing that they involve a lot more than "modern business practices." Brigades of public-spirited persons donated their time to the commission, and identified hundreds of possibilities that could indeed save billions of dollars. But most of the large sums pertain not to more efficient administration of policies — not with diminishing "waste, fraud and abuse" — but with changing policies.

For example, the report proposes cutting federal pensions for more than 5 million federal workers, and their spouses. Were Reagan to endorse all 2,478 ideas, he would lose 50 states.

He and other conservatives who use the Grace report to suppress talk of tax increases are, shall we say, selective in their enthusiasm for the particular recommendations. This was shown when Congress recently tumbled over itself in antic haste to send to Reagan a bill that does the opposite of the Grace proposal concerning federal sales of hydroelectric power.

The proposal was that federal power-marketing administrations charge for their electricity something more than mere cost-recovery rates, if not the full rate the market would bear. Congressional conservatives recently had a chance to stop praising and start implementing the Grace recommendations with respect to the Hoover Dam.

Since 1937 the dam has been generating electricity under a contract that guarantees cheap power to parts of Nevada, Arizona and southern California for 50 years. Although the contract still has three years to run, although Congress has so much work and so little time that it can not pass even appropriation bills in a timely manner; although the Depression-era Hoover rates are from one-fourth to one-fourteenth those that unsubsidized Americans pay — nevertheless, Congress has rushed to extend for 30 years, until 2017, the cheap sale of this federal resource.

The vote in the Republican-controlled Senate was 64-34, with every senator from west of Missouri voting to continue the subsidy. That is Reagan country, partner, but it also is where there are other cheap federal power arrangements.

Furthermore, conservative cowboys can spot trouble coming across a far mesa and they saw a slew of troubles in the suggestion that federal resources should be sold at something approaching market rates. Suppose that obnoxious principle were applied to water, or grazing, fees. All those folks whose church-going clothes include cowboy boots and Adam Smith neckties worship at the altar of the GFM (Glorious Free Market), but this is hitting close to home.

Conservative Republican senators said (hang on tight — this argument can give you ideological whiplash) it would be "laissez-faire economics — the public be damned" to end federally subsidized rates. They said it is good conservative government-bashing policy to continue this subsidy. Why? Because it is "consumer protection" to prevent big government from charging big (market) rates. Anyway, they said, it is sound anti-government policy to prevent government from going "into business to make a profit." (What happened to Reagan's sound business practices? Hush.) Besides, subsidized power is — stand up and salute, conservatives — a "tradition."

As Mark Twain said, get the facts first — you can distort them later. The fact is that the Congress has again demonstrated the real conservatism of modern government, which labors to protect people from disagreeable change.

Twain also said that thunder is impressive, but lightning does the work. The Grace report is thunderous, but Congress must do the work. Will Reagan, who praises the Grace approach, veto the bill by which Congress shreds a Grace idea? No.

Reagan now says he will veto any increase in "personal" income taxes. The adjective is a modifier, modifying his opposition to taxes. He pledges leaves — as it should — lots of kinds of taxes unmentioned. The Hoover Dam vote illustrates why today's 2,479th idea — that tax increases are coming — will not go away.

ART BUCHWALD Business booming for CIA

Many stories have come out about the CIA, but this is one that is still buried secretly in the archives. It has to do with an agent named Greensleeves. He was young, energetic, and imaginative. The CIA decided to set him up in a souvenir shop across the street from the palace of a Central American dictator, where he could keep tabs on the comings and goings of government officials.

They gave him enough money to buy the shop and the souvenirs so the operation would be legitimate. This exchange of cables, after they were decoded, tells the story.

Art Buchwald

"CIA Headquarters, Langley: Business excellent. Have sold $16,000 worth of souvenirs thanks to Dictator Tacos' three-day anniversary celebration in front of palace. Please tell our people in Taiwan I need more Tacos ashtrays, paperweights, and letter openers. If all right with you, am planning a sale on Tacos music boxes that play 'South of the Border.' — Greensleeves."

"Greensleeves: Glad to hear you are doing well businesswise, but what the hell is going on at the palace? We hear Tacos may be overthrown by right-wing colonels. Please advise at once. — Frogmaster."

"CIA Headquarters, Langley: Sorry I have been too busy taking inventory to pay much attention to palace, but have good news. Discovered a factory outside Siesta that makes cuckoo clocks and hand-painted scarves. Have bought three gross at half-price. Expect sales figures in June up 20 percent over May. Had to pay off customs to get cigarette lighters into country, but will add bribe to price of item. — Greensleeves."

"Greensleeves: Why no word from you on Tacos assassination attempt and his exile from country? Who is now in charge of Paella? Urgently need list of junta and whether it's pro- or anti-American. — Frogmaster."

"CIA Headquarters, Langley: Agency has nothing to fear from Tacos overthrow. I got wind of it two weeks ago and had Tacos Birthday Sale on Saturday, where I marked down all Dictator Tacos items 50 percent. The bronze busts moved especially well. We also unloaded 4,000 plates with portraits of Mrs. Tacos. Only item that didn't sell as well as expected was night-light of Tacos standing next to Virgin Mary. Tell our Hong Kong people that I am sending them photograph of Colonel Chili which I would like them to have framed with sea shells. Also send 3,000 beer mugs commemorating the Junta's revolution of July 5. — Greensleeves."

"Greensleeves: What information do you have concerning naval attack on Paella by neighboring country of Enchilada? Understand shelling destroyed half of downtown as well as Soviet, British, French, and Chinese embassies. — Frogmaster."

"CIA Headquarters, Langley: Your information correct. I heard about it 10 days ago from Enchilada defector and moved all breakable items to the basement. Also boarded up windows. You'll be happy to know we had the only souvenir shop in Paella that opened for business the next day. — Greensleeves."

"Greensleeves, Paella, Central America: What has happened to U.S. Ambassador? Is he being held hostage by revolutionary urban guerrillas as reported by AP, UPI, Reuters, and Agence France Presse?"

"CIA Headquarters, Langley: U.S. Ambassador was kidnapped three days ago. One of my salespeople has a brother who told her about kidnapping plans last week. I immediately took steps to check Ambassador's charge account. He owed us $89. I managed to get his check before he was grabbed. We haven't lost a dime on him. Any chance of shipping Fidel Castro baseball caps? They're expecting 15,000 armed Cuban tourists, and it could be hottest item this summer."

'Rascality on the Rig' continues

"Rascality on the Rig" or "Oil's Well That Ends Well," plays Thursday, Friday and Saturday through Sept. 1 at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

Now in its 39th season, the Midland Summer Mummies returns to a play that has delighted audiences on three past seasons.

The plot focuses on the efforts of one Terrence Trueblue, a young petroleum engineer who is everything a hero should be, to clear his father's name, blackened by the evil doings of Lester Leasehold, who is naturally everything a villain should be.

The two come face to face when both attempt to win the heart of beautiful Patience Plugback, the heroine who is, of course, everything a heroine should be.

This year's production is under the direction of Midland Community Theatre's executive director, D. Matthew Bachmann, who leads the valiant group of thespians to success or disaster. Performing in this year's summer madness are J. Malin Craig and R.S. Tilley as truthful Terrence; D. Wayne Ward and M.B. Trost as learning Lester; and Mls. P. Parker and J. McElligott as pretty Patience.

Ms. S.S. Mogford and Mlle. M.G. Gibson return in the role of guardian of the heroine, Peaches. Sliderville Simpson, trusted friend of the hero, is played by J. Marc Coffey and C. Galloway. The role of Odessa Delilah, the temptress of the play, will be filled by Mme. S. Grayson Hitchcock and Mlle. M.S. Schaller.

Others in the company are J. Newkumet, Curt Hadaway, W. Wilson, D. Hiding, D. Garmeson, F. Wagoner, S. Lamm, P. Shaw, J. Judah, S. Voltz, T. Rosborough and C. Beare.

The melodrama is followed by an entertainment of olio performers.

Coming up Aug. 16 is a special dry night — "no booze" — for those who prefer a quieter atmosphere. Soft drinks and popcorn will be sold.

This year, in order to alleviate confusion at the box office and in the minds of the patrons, the charge for a table reservation has been eliminated. This cost has now been included in the ticket price. Tickets at the large tables in front of the stage are $8, while the orchestra and lower balcony are $6.50. Tickets in the rear balcony are $5.

All tickets must be paid for within 48 hours of making reservations. Mail orders need to be accompanied by payment.

For more information call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Puppets to act out Dr. Seuss stories

BIG SPRING — Dr. Seuss's "A Day on the Loose" will be presented by Kelly Draper and his puppeteers at the Big Spring City Park Amphitheater as part of the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce Starlight Specials. The performance is set for 8 p.m. Saturday.

Starring in this production of three of Dr. Seuss's most popular stories and several of his songs are Mary Kenny, Peggy Payne, Carla Relaford, Brenda McCutcheon, Draper and 150 handmade puppets from Draper's puppet house.

Students from Laurie Churchwell's Dance Gallery will perform to, among others, "Ah Choo!" "My Uncle Terwilliger Waltzes with Bears" and "I'm Hungry."

Admission is $2 for adults and $1 for ages 12 and under. Concession stands will be handled by the Blue Blazers — the Women's Division of the Chamber of Commerce.

Oprea to host male vocalist contest

ODESSA — The Odessa Brand New Oprea will host its annual Male Vocalist of the Year contest at 8 p.m. Saturday at the Globe of the Great Southwest.

The contest is open to all male vocalists who have performed on the Oprea during the past year. Winner of the competition will appear on the annual Odessa Brand New Oprea Entertainer of the Year show Oct. 6.

Contestants scheduled to perform during Saturday's show include, among others, Doug Bailiss, Jonie Hartman, Fred Altom, Charley Brannon, Brice Harrell, Luke Groves, Kirby Blackwell, Lynn Alexander and Larry Motley.

West Texas Edition will be the featured house band. Admission is $4 for adults, $2 for students and senior citizens and $1.50 for children under 12. Tickets may be purchased at the Globe box office during the week from 1 to 5 p.m. or on Saturday starting at 7 p.m.

All seats are general admission.

'Really Rosie' to open in Midland

Six years ago, one of the most delightful new children's musicals premiered in New York. Midland Community Theatre is presenting the West Texas children's premiere of "Really Rosie," written by Maurice Sendak with music by Carole King, at 1:30 p.m. Aug. 16, 17 and 18 at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

This is the story of Rosie and her friends in the "Big City" and of their adventures together. Some of the songs are "Alligators All Around," "The Ballad of Chicken Soup," "Such Sufferin'" and "Really Rosie."

All tickets are $4. For reservations to this Pickwick Players' production call 682-4111.

Hits unexpected

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nobody expected "Breakin'" to be a hit movie. And nobody, including Polygram's Russ Regan, expected the soundtrack to be a hit album.

But the movie, which cost $1.7 million, has taken in $34 million so far. The album, which features the work of such unknowns as Hot Streak, 3V, Chris (the Glove) Taylor, Fire Fox, Re-Flex and Ollie and Jerry, has sold 1.2 million and is currently No. 8 on the Billboard pop chart.

NATION in brief

Mondale: Deficit tallies like Pinocchio's nose

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale says the Reagan administration's upcoming estimates of federal budget deficits will be like the story of Pinocchio, bringing with them "the longest nose you ever saw in your life."

Mondale invoked the classic story of the little boy whose nose grew longer when he told a lie as the Democratic presidential nominee spoke at a reception for hundreds of South Carolina Democrats on the lawn of the state governor's mansion Wednesday evening.

After attacking Reagan relentlessly for huge budget deficits — and for failing to present a plan to reduce them — Mondale warned of what might be in an administration report revising deficit projections, which is expected out this week or next.

"You know the story of Pinocchio, how that nose kept getting bigger? When that report comes out, I think you're going to see the longest nose you ever saw in your life," Mondale said, drawing laughter from the crowd.

"And I'll tell you, the American people know better. I'm telling it straight. I'm telling the truth, and that's what the American people expect of leadership."

The report is an update of earlier budget projections by the Office of Management and Budget. Mondale, who has been hammering away at the high deficits all week, has suggested the administration may "cook" the figures to present an overly optimistic economic outlook.

Postal Service projected pay hikes for managers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service, which is demanding that more than 600,000 employees accept a wage freeze, projected pay hikes of about 8 percent for its managers, according to an internal agency document.

A working paper prepared in connection with testimony the Postal Service gave to defend a proposed hike in first-class mail rates contained the projected pay raises in the budget year starting Oct. 1.

The document, prepared in conjunction with testimony given to the independent Postal Rate Commission in February, also projected a 3.3 percent increase for rank-and-file workers in fiscal 1985, which starts Oct. 1.

Since that time, the Postal Service has insisted that rank-and-file employees take a three-year wage freeze. And it has implemented a policy of paying newly hired personnel at rates 23 percent below those of existing workers, a move which is being challenged in the courts by four unions.

Jury still out on De Lorean

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jurors in the John De Lorean trial, fortified with five months of testimony and weighty instructions in the law, spent their first day in deliberations without reaching a verdict on the automaker's guilt or innocence.

As the six men and six women prepared to resume deliberations today, prosecutors, defense attorneys and the former automaker nervously awaited the outcome of his cocaine conspiracy trial.

"It's all in God's hands," De Lorean said, smiling as he left the courtroom Wednesday after jurors had been instructed in the law.

"We're nervous, scared, anxious and hopeful," said his attorney, Howard Weitzman. "We hope the jury will do what we think is the right thing."

De Lorean, 59, is charged with conspiring to distribute cocaine worth $24 million to save his failing Northern Ireland car company from bankruptcy. If convicted on all eight counts, he could face a maximum of 67 years in prison and $180,000 in fines.

Chemical fire injures 37

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A blaze at a paint thinner company hurled fireballs 50 to 75 feet into the air for more than three hours as 24 companies of firefighters tried to hem it in with a deluge of water and foam.

Thirty-seven firefighters suffered smoke inhalation or minor chemical burns from the paint thinner and other chemicals that mixed with water from their hoses, fire officials said.

The blaze, which fed on thinner and other solvents, was extinguished early today after raging for 3½ hours. More than 100 firefighters were needed to fight the blaze with water and chemical foam, a fire department spokesman said.

Roller coaster car derails

KINGS MILLS, Ohio (AP) — A new stand-up roller coaster capable of speeds up to 50 mph lost a wheel and jumped the track on a corkscrew curve, injuring eight riders, officials said.

"We heard the King Cobra going clang, clang, bang, bang. It sounded real unusual," said Jim Reynolds, who had just gotten off another ride at Kings Island amusement park when the accident occurred.

Holly Cook, 19, of New Orleans was in Bethesda North Hospital today with a concussion, a neck sprain and minor bruises, said Sandy Weiskittel, the hospital spokeswoman.

Lewis, Louganis win

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When Carl Lewis lunges and Greg Louganis plunges, they inevitably come up No. 1.

Lewis, still running in high gear on the road Jesse Owens traveled 48 years ago in Berlin, dove across the finish line Wednesday to lead a 1-2-3 United States sweep in the 200-meter sprint and win the third of his prospective four gold medals. Saturday he anchors the 400 relay.

Louganis, barely creating a ripple by expectedly running away from the field in the three-meter springboard diving, set his sights on Sunday's platform competition and an unprecedented two diving golds by one man in one Olympics.

The women began platform preliminaries today, and Daley Thompson of Britain led Jurgen Hingsen of West Germany 4,663-4,519 entering today's final five events of the decathlon. Going into today's competition, the United States had 124 medals, 54 gold. West Germany was second with 38 total medals and Romania runnerup in gold with 16.

Like Louganis, Valerie Brisco-Hooks is seeking a double, the first woman to win the 200 and 400 meters in the same Games and only the third U.S. woman (Wilma Rudolph and Babe Didrikson the others) to win two track and field golds in one Olympics. Brisco-Hooks won the 400 Monday night. On Wednesday she cruised through 200 qualifying. Tonight she goes for the 200 gold.

South African-born Sydney Maree of Philadelphia said Wednesday he has withdrawn from today's 1,500 meters because of a hamstring pull. And Steve Ovett of Britain, hospitalized with bronchitis after Monday's 800 and discharged Wednesday, said he would announce early today whether he'd run the 1,500.

The United States finished 1-3 in Wednesday's springboard, Ron Merriott of Ann Arbor, Mich., getting the bronze. And Americans were 1-3 in the men's 400 — but in an unexpected order.

Olympics

Antonio McKay of Atlanta figured to battle Jamaican Bert Cameron for the gold. But just before the final, Cameron pulled out with a pulled muscle. And in the race itself, Alonzo Babers of Montgomery, Ala., pulled away to win, leaving McKay third.

The United States defeated Canada twice, 78-59 in men's basketball as Chris Mullin of St. John's University scored 20 points, and 15-6, 15-10, 15-7 in men's volleyball. Each now goes for gold, the basketball team against Spain Friday night, the volleyball team against Brazil Saturday night. The American men's handball team tied South Korea 22-22 Wednesday night.

Judi Brown of East Lansing, Mich., won silver in the women's 400 hurdles, finishing behind Nawal El Moutawakil, Morocco's first gold medalist in Olympic history; five U.S. boxers advanced to the semifinals; Mike Tully of Encino, Calif., got the pole vault silver, finishing second to Pierre Quinon of France, and Earl Bell of Jonesboro, Ark., shared bronze.

Also, Robert Berland of Wilmette, Ill., became the first U.S. medalist ever in Olympic judo, winning the middleweight silver after being defeated by gold medalist Peter Seisenbacher of Austria; Mario Martinez of San Francisco finished second to Dinko Lukim of Australia in super heavyweightlifting, and the United States won gold or silver in all seven yachting events.

Lewis, of Wilkesboro, N.J., didn't break Italian Pietro Mennea's world record of 19.72 seconds in the 200, finishing in an Olympic-record 19.80 to beat silver medalist Kirk Baptiste of Beaumont, Texas, and third-place finisher Thomas Jefferson of Moreland, Ohio. But he did break the back of the hostility directed at him earlier by the Memorial Coliseum crowd, and then he broke his silence.

"I think the most important thing for me is to win as many gold medals as I possibly can, because that's what people are going to remember from these Games, how well the American team did," said Lewis, who had refused in previous days to talk following his competition.

He hadn't tried for a world record Monday night in the long jump and many in the crowd reacted angrily. "When I got the boos, at first it was shocking," he said, "but then I wasn't really disappointed."

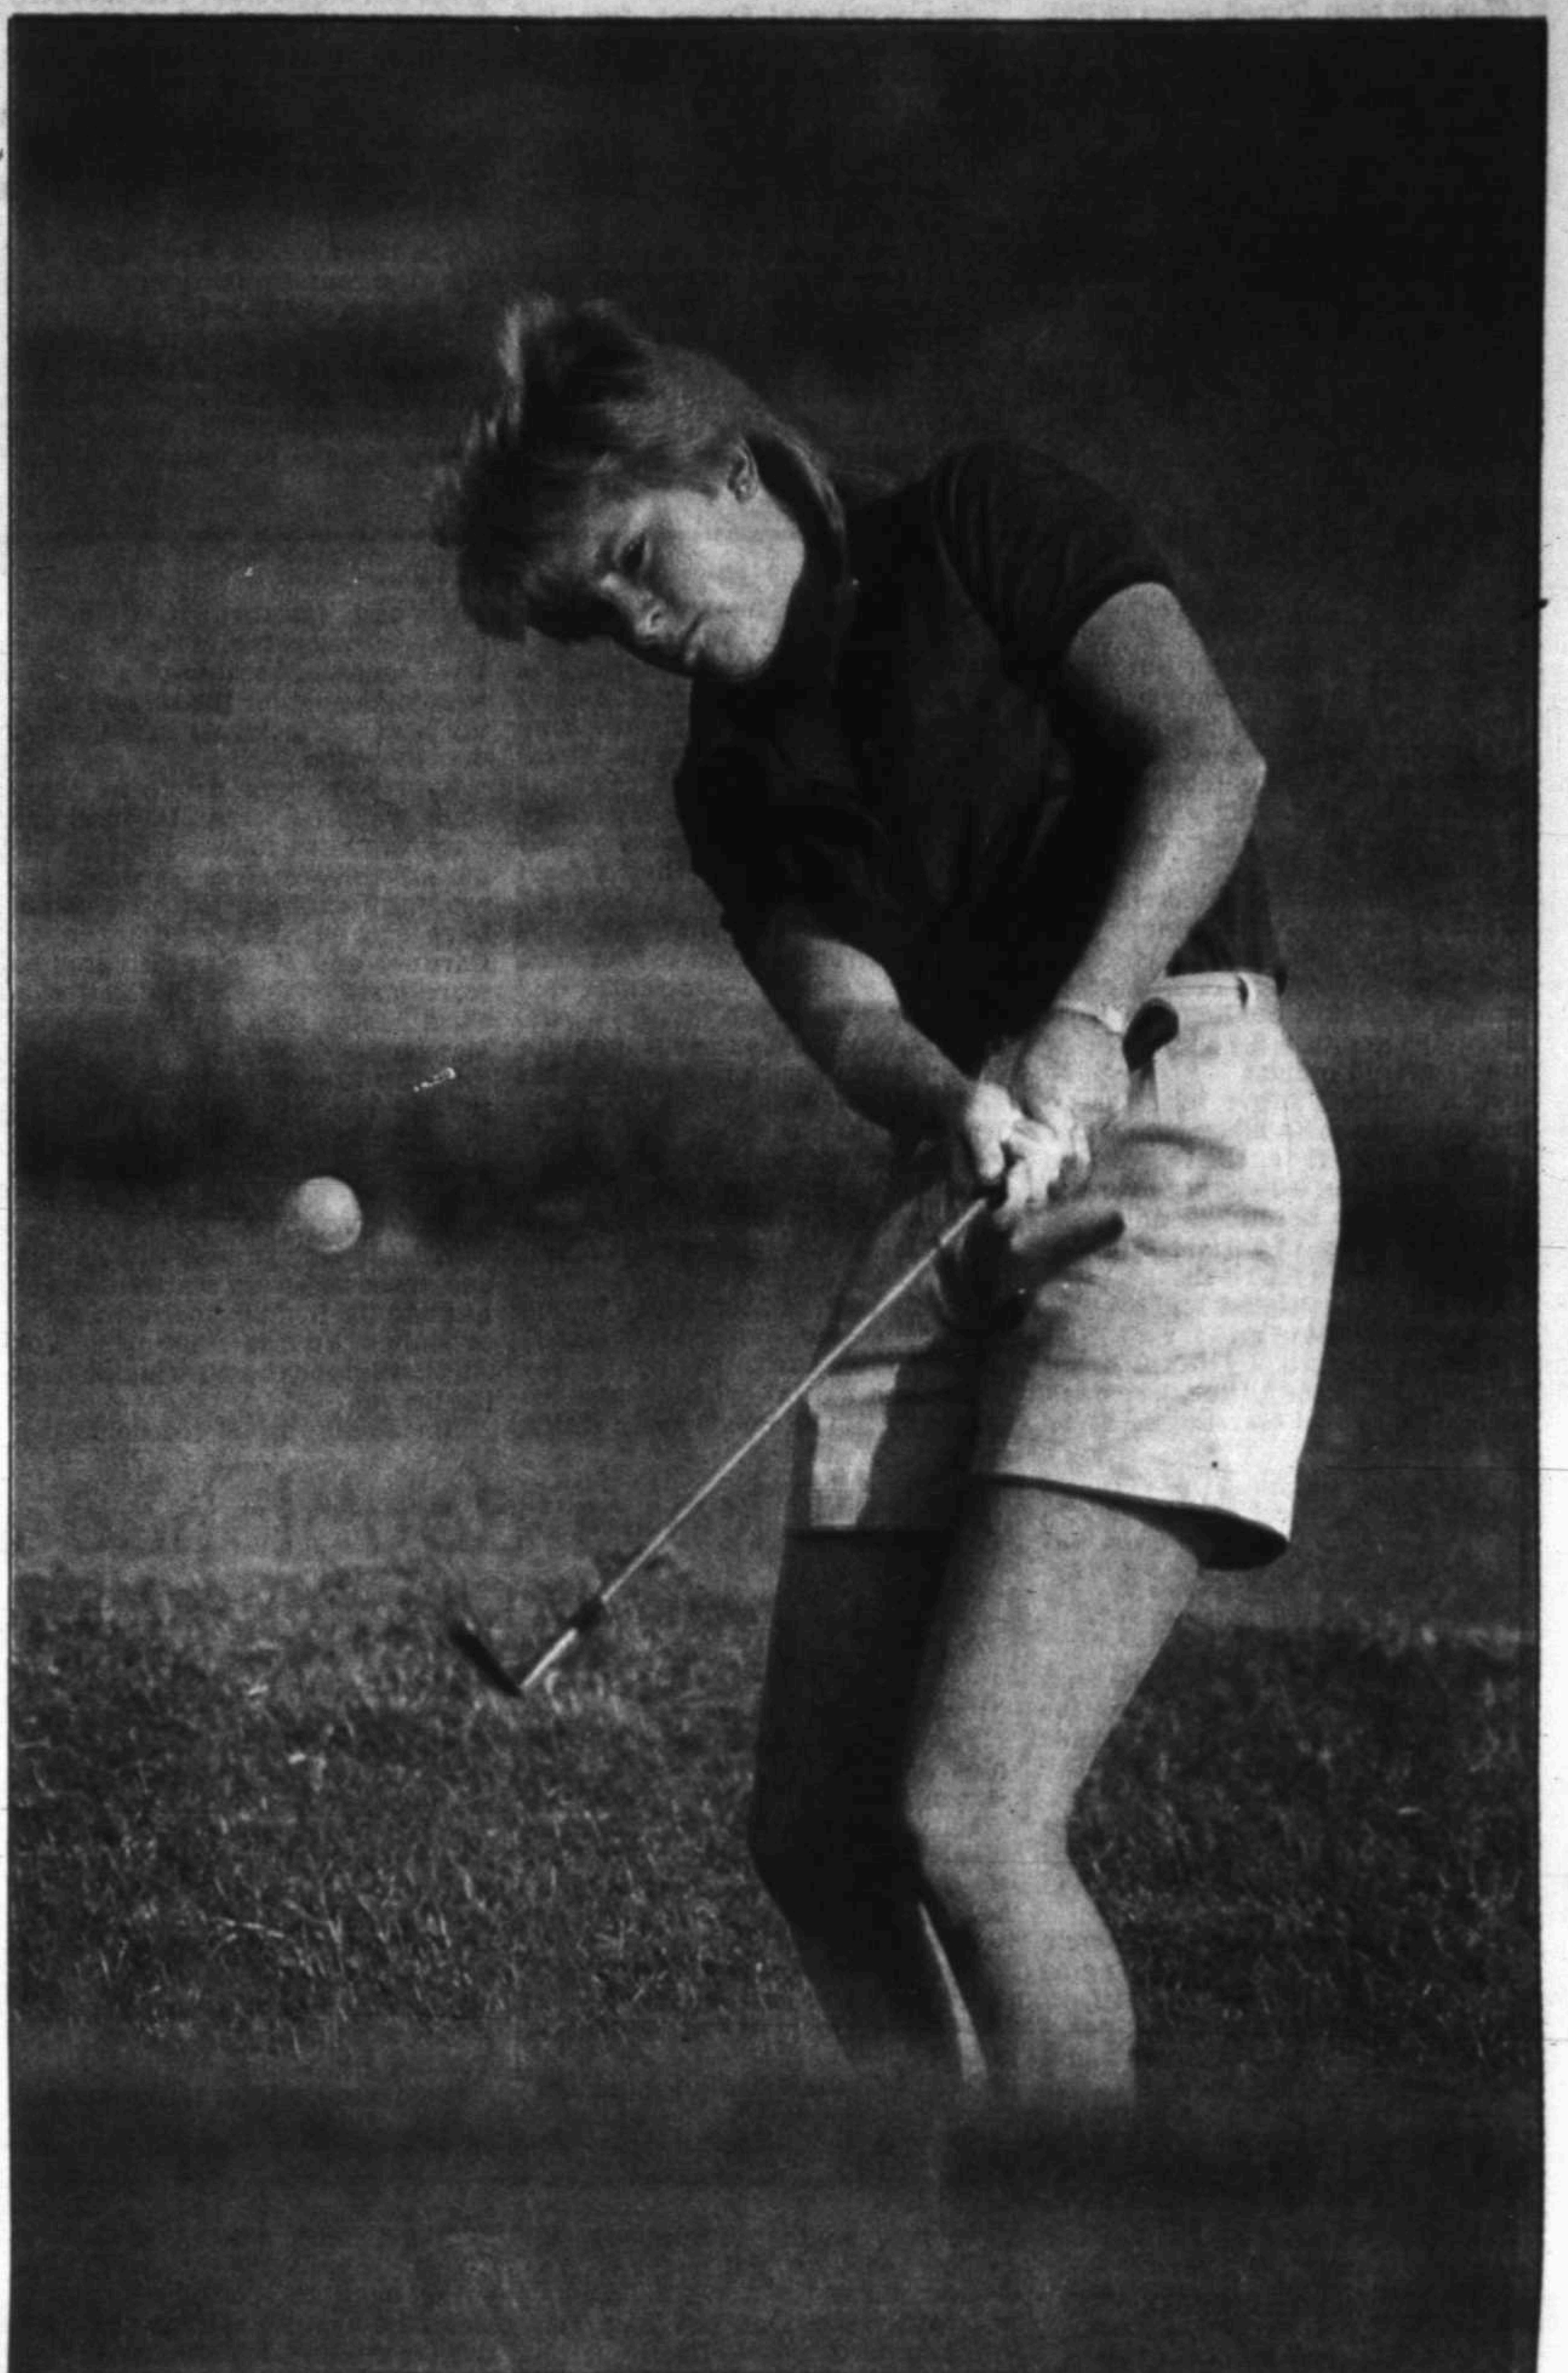

And on Wednesday, neither was the crowd of 80,909, cheering him and his teammates as they circled the track in victory, celebrating the first 1-2-3 U.S. finish in the event since 1956. "Our whole goal here was to sweep the event," Lewis said. Mennea, incidentally, finished seventh.

Louganis fell short of his goal of 800 points in the springboard, finishing with 754.41 to the 661.32 by Tan Liangde of China. But Louganis said he wasn't disappointed. "Records can be broken any time," the 1976 Olympic platform silver medalist said, "but gold medals are hard to come by. It meant a lot to get a gold here. It was something missing in my career. The platform is another goal and if I don't obtain it my life is still full."

Babers was third coming out of the turn in the 400, then turned on the jets to sweep to victory in 44.27, beating Gabriel Tiaoh, whose silver gave the Ivory Coast its first Olympic medal ever. McKay got the bronze.

"I felt really sorry for Antonio, felt sorry for everybody out there who didn't win," Babers said. "I know everybody wanted to win that race as much as I did." McKay certainly did. "This is the saddest day of my life," he said. "I ran my best and still got defeated."

Littlefield setting sights on Amateur golf crown

For most, the game of golf is a hobby, a way to relax after a hard week's work. To others, it can mean an education, maybe even a profession.

Midland High graduate Janice Littlefield, class of '82, falls into the latter category.

Littlefield went from being a high school golfer who took third place in the state medalist race her senior year to a collegiate golfer for New Mexico State University in Las Cruces. A few years from now she hopes to try her luck on the LPGA tour.

But that's still in the future. More recently, she's been preparing for the U.S. Women's Amateur golf tournament in Seattle, a tournament she qualified for with a third-place finish in Fort Worth. She's one of only 144 women in the United States to gain entry.

"I had to qualify in Fort Worth at Shady Oaks," said Littlefield. "I shot a 76 and tied for third low qualifier. Forty girls were trying for the U.S. Women's Amateur (in Fort Worth) and 19 are going."

Littlefield leaves for Seattle Friday morning, and will have two days of practice before going into a two-day qualifying round (starting Monday) to make the cut to 64. Once the final field has been established, players will move into a single elimination match-play format.

Qualifying for match play is her first goal against a field she expects to be very tough.

"I'm hoping to qualify. That will be the major thing," said Littlefield. "I'm not sure who will be there but a lot of the players will probably be people I've played against in college. For a lot of the women, this will be the last (amateur) tournament they'll play before turning pro. If I shoot in the mid-70s both days of qualifying, I'll have a good shot at making the cut."

Littlefield likes the match-play format for the remainder of the tournament since it "will be easier because it's one-on-one. If you have one bad hole — say you take a double bogey — that's only one hole you lose and it's easier to win it back, a lot easier than making up two, three or four shots from one hole."

LITTLEFIELD WILL soon be returning to NMSU and her fall golf schedule. Because of a tough summer of practice, she has hopes this season could be better than last year's.

"Last year was probably my best year," said Littlefield. "I finished in the top 20 in every tournament I played and I finished fifth in our conference (High Country Athletic Conference). Last year, at the start of the season, I was ranked 168th out of about 600 and I moved up to 87th."

That ranking was the highest on the NMSU squad which includes two former Midland High teammates: Ann Coombes, a 1981 graduate, and Kelle Mobley, 1983. This season, NMSU has also picked up Penny Sutcliffe, a 1981 Midland Lee grad.

The summer practice schedule has "been my toughest so far because Rex (Worrell, head professional at Hogan Park Golf Course) has helped me a lot," said Littlefield. "He's really helped me apply myself. I go out and hit 250 balls (at the driving range) and that takes about three hours. Then I go through a putting drill and if I'm putting good it only takes about 30 minutes. If not, it can take three hours. Then I go through a chipping drill which lasts about an hour."

Better than a curveball

The State Seniors Baseball Tournament has had a rough week, but arson has not been officially suggested. After moving to Lee Diamond from Cubs Stadium to accommodate Midland's Texas League team, rains caused the postponement of the finals. Fire was set to the plate area to dry out the dirt, but more rains cancelled the day's events. Some like it hot.

1912 — The first decathlon ever contested in the Olympics was won by Jim Thorpe, an American Indian. Thorpe's performance was so impressive that his point total would have earned him the silver medal in the 1948 competition. King Gustav V of Sweden was so impressed with Thorpe's performance that he presented the athlete with a bronze bust of himself, saying "Sir, you are the greatest athlete in the world." Thorpe, who had also won the pentathlon in Stockholm, replied: "Thanks, King."

1960 — Rafer Johnson and C.K. Yang, teammates at UCLA, engaged in one of the closest decathlon competitions ever. Johnson, competing for the United States, and Yang, wearing the colors of Taiwan, were separated by just 67 points entering the last event, the 1,500 meters. Yang had to beat Johnson by 10 seconds for Taiwan's first gold medal ever. Johnson ran behind Yang throughout the race and wouldn't allow him to pull away for the margin he needed. As the competition ended the friendly rivals fell into each other's arms for support.

"There are certain times during the year that you wish someone else were coming up. But not this time. I was pumped... Olajuwon signs for $6 million HOUSTON (AP) — Akeem Olajuwon is $6 million richer, Houston Rockets owner Charlie Thomas is poorer by the same amount and Coach Bill Fitch is ready to go to work.

"It's not sweat-proof," Fitch cautioned Wednesday as he presented Olajuwon with a No. 34 Rockets jersey after the National Basketball Association's No. 1 draftee signed a six-year pact.

Olajuwon, who led the University of Houston Cougars to NCAA Final Four appearances in each of the past three years, blurted in reply: "I am very proud to be a Houston Rocket."

And so, history repeated itself two years in a row. In 1983, in the same room of Thomas' restaurant, the Rockets inked No. 1 draftee Ralph Sampson to a four-year, $5.3 million contract.

Rockets officials declined comment on terms of Olajuwon's contract and would not compare it to Sampson's, but Olajuwon is believed to be in line to earn about $6.3 million over the next six years if he fulfills all bonus requirements.

General Manager Ray Patterson didn't even want to compare the excitement of signing Olajuwon to the rush he felt when he put Sampson in a Rockets uniform. He was just happy.

"It's unbelievable," Patterson said. "If you set out to invent three people with the temperament and physical abilities to complement each other, you couldn't get three better to go together than these guys," Patterson said.

ChiSox tighten up AL West race

Associated Press

The Chicago White Sox gained ground on both teams ahead of them in the American League West Wednesday as they beat the New York Yankees 5-4 while both Minnesota and California were losing on the West Coast.

Harold Baines had three hits, including a solo homer that triggered a five-run third inning, then Chicago held on. Floyd Bannister, 10-7, allowed six hits and three runs before needing relief help from Ron Reed in the seventh. Reed allowed three hits over the final three innings for his eighth save. Bannister raised his lifetime record to 10-2 against New York.

Chicago, in winning for the seventh time in its last eight games, sent nine batters to the plate in the third inning. Baines, who now has a

Baseball Roundup

12-game hitting streak, opened with his 19th home run, the first of six straight hits off New York starter Phil Niekro, 13-6. Greg Walker doubled and took third on Roy Smalley's single. Vance Law, Mike Squires and Marc Hill followed with successive run-scoring singles, Hill's chasing Niekro. Jerry Dybzinski greeted reliever Bob Shirley with a sacrifice fly to cap the inning.

Rookie Brian Dayett slugged a three-run homer for New York and Don Baylor had a solo shot.

"It was one of my favorite wins," said White Sox Manager Tony LaRussa. "We have got to get everybody involved. A lot of guys celebrating is good for the team."

"We have to win a bunch of games

now. We're not in a healthy situation yet with only a few games over 500."

The White Sox are 57-55, 1 1/2 games behind Minnesota.

Oakland right-hander Ray Burris allowed only four hits in seven innings and teamed with Bill Caudill to shut out the Twins 5-0. Caudill pitched the final two innings for his 25th save, a team record.

Mike Heath homered and Dave Kingman upped his major league-leading RBI total to 90 with a two-run double.

California fell to Seattle 7-2 as Alvin Davis drove in two runs with a single and his 22nd homer and Mark Langston and Edwin Nunez combined on a five-hitter. The Mariners snapped a six-game losing streak.

Mark Breland of Brooklyn, N.Y., led the parade of U.S. boxers into the semis with a first-round knockout of Mexico's Genaro Leon in a 147-pound bout. Tyrell Biggs of Philadelphia (super heavyweight), Mel-drick Taylor of Philadelphia (125), Frank Tate of Detroit (156) and Henry Tillman of Los Angeles (201) also are assured of medals, since even the losers in the semis are awarded bronzes.

Zola Budd, Britain's transplanted South African, posted the fourth-best qualifying time Wednesday for the women's 3,000 final Friday night. She finished third in her heat, behind Cindy Bremser of Madison, Wis., and Romanian Marica Pulca. Mary Decker of Eugene, Ore., had the third fastest time.

"It's hard to say in the preliminaries what people really have. They could be saving it," said Bremser, who flew past Budd in the closing 50 meters.

Mac Wilkins of Eugene, Ore., led Wednesday's qualifying in the discus with a throw of 216 feet, 1 inch. With John Powell of Cupertino, Calif., and Art Burns of San Jose, Calif., also eligible for Friday's final, Wilkins said an American sweep was possible. "I'd be happy to see it," he said, "just so long as I'm standing taller than anyone else when they play the Star Spangled Banner."

Berland, hospitalized for nearly three weeks last May with a knee injury, was the victim of a clean inner thigh throw by Seisenbacher, the European judo champ.

"It was a good throw. ... There was a moment of a lack of concentration at this level you can't afford that," Berland said. "Peter was very strong, a worthy opponent with great technique. But I was not in my normal condition because I am not fully recovered from the knee injury. It's not an excuse. It's a fact."

Seven preliminary track and field events have been scratched for lack of sufficient entries.

The latest cut, on Wednesday, was the first-round qualifying race for the women's 1,500-meter run.

The Soviet-led boycott is possibly responsible for many if not all of the cancellations. It also wiped out some preliminary rounds in weightlifting where eastern Europeans predominate.

But cancellations of preliminaries are not uncommon in Olympics where schedules are drawn as long as a year in advance.

Only 23 women entered the 1,500-meter event, and were to run for the first time in semifinal heats today.

Other preliminaries called off in track were qualifying in the women's shot put, women's 400-meters first round, men's 110-meter hurdles first round, women's 3,000-meters first round, and the first rounds in the women's 1,600-meter and 400-meter relays.

In weightlifting, the super-heavyweight Group B competition was cancelled as were three early elimination rounds in other divisions.

Midland's Mike Timlin gets a high five after slapping his third tournament home run Wednesday before rain halted the State Seniors Baseball finals at Lee Diamond.

Rains take victories over baseball, 2-0

From Staff Reports

The Midland Cubs, opening a five-game home stand with the Beaumont Golden Gators, were forced to postpone Wednesday night's game because of heavy afternoon rains in Midland.

Wednesday's game will be made up tonight in a double-header at Ciba Stadium, starting at 6:30 p.m. The second game will begin approximately 20 minutes after the conclusion of the first.

RAIN ALSO delayed the finish of the State Seniors Baseball Tournament at Midland Lee Diamond.

The tournament, which started Monday at Ciba Stadium, is down to the championship playoff between Midland Elcor and Snyder. The playoff game will begin at 5 p.m. in Snyder's Tole Park today with an if necessary game to follow.

In the double elimination tournament, Elcor is the lone unbeaten team while Snyder has one loss. Should Elcor win the first game, it wins the championship. Should Snyder win, a second game will immediately follow.

When the rains hit Wednesday, Elcor lost a 6-0 lead in the second inning of play. Kevin Tredaway and Mike Timlin each had two-run homers to establish the lead before the game was called.

Timlin's homer was his third of the tournament, including a grand slam at Ciba Stadium on Tuesday.

Midland Baseball

IN BROWNWOOD, the J.I. O'Neill Midland Shamrocks dropped a 7-4 decision to Conroe Tuesday to fall into the Hi-Junior State tournament loser's bracket. The Shamrocks played today at 8 a.m., needing a victory to remain alive in the double elimination tournament.

IN LITTLE LEAGUE action in Waco, Midland's North Central All-Stars saw their brilliant season come to a close with a 4-2 loss to Fort Worth University.

The defeat came in the quarter-final round of the state tournament Tuesday. However, before going down to defeat, North Central eliminated Eagle Pass 7-3 on Monday.

Midland pitcher Jason Stone went the distance for the victory Monday and aided his own cause with a pair of home runs while teammate Greg Rich added a third homer.

The loss left North Central with an impressive 28-2 season record, including a 25-game winning streak. Pecos ended the long stretch of victories in the first game of a best-of-three regional playoff series last week. Midland rallied from the loss to win the next two games to gain its state berth.

Langston, 10-9, struck out seven and walked four, surrendering four hits before giving way to Nunez in the seventh inning. Langston has 135 strikeouts, eight behind leader Mike Witt, 11-9, who started for the Angels. Witt fanned four batters in 3 2-3 innings.

In AL night games, Mike Young cracked a three-run homer and scored twice and Mike Boddicker and Tippy Martinez combined to scatter nine hits, leading the Baltimore Orioles to a 7-4 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Rich Gedman drove in a career-high five runs with a homer, a single and a sacrifice fly as the Boston Red Sox rolled to an 8-0 victory over the Detroit Tigers behind Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd in the 1984 windup between the two AL rivals.

Willy Lozada tripled and singled to drive in two runs and Bill Schroeder slugged a 410-foot home run as the Milwaukee Brewers edged the Kansas City Royals 3-2 to end a 10-game losing streak.

Dave Collins and Tony Fernandez belted three hits each and Jim Clancy scattered seven hits in eight innings to lead the Toronto Blue Jays to a 7-2 victory over the Texas Rangers.

In the only National League day action, the Chicago Cubs completed a four-game sweep of their closest rival in the East, the New York Mets, with a 7-6 comeback win.

Keith Moreland drove in four runs with three singles — including one in a four-run seventh inning — leading the Cubs to their sixth straight victory and seventh in a row against New York. Chicago has a 4½-game lead over the Mets.

The Mets had taken a 5-3 lead with three runs in the top of the seventh on a sacrifice fly by George Foster and Mike Fitzgerald's two-run single.

But Chicago rallied, helped by the ejection of Mets starter Walt Terrell in the bottom half of the inning. Jay Johnstone led off with a pinch-hit triple. Terrell hit Bob Dernier with a pitch and was thrown out of the game, along with Mets Manager Dave Johnson, because of a blanket warning issued for the series following beanball incidents in Tuesday's doubleheader.

Ryne Sandberg drove in Johnstone when he forced Dernier, and Gary Matthews followed with a single off reliever Wes Gardner, 1-1, sending Sandberg to third. Sandberg scored on a wild pitch by Gardner and Moreland singled to score Matthews with the lead run. Thad Bosley then singled to score Moreland.

In the top of the ninth, Chicago reliever Lee Smith threw near Foster and was ejected from the game, as was Cubs Manager Jim Frey. Tim Stoddard came on to earn his seventh save.

In NL night games, Bob Welch and three relievers scattered eight hits and the Dodgers took advantage of sloppy Atlanta fielding as Los Angeles surged to a 5-1 triumph over the Braves.

Jim Wohlford doubled home two runs to back Bill Gullickson and Jeff Reardon's six-hit pitching as the Montreal Expos defeated the Philadelphia Phillies 3-1.

Tom Foley's two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth inning followed Eric Davis' eighth-inning solo shot and sent the Cincinnati Reds to a 4-2 victory over the San Diego Padres.

Dale Berra belted a grand slam home run in the sixth inning and added an RBI single to lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 6-4 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Relievers Dave Smith, Frank DiPino, and Bill Dawley held the Giants scoreless for six innings to set up Phil Garner's game-winning single in the 12th inning to give the Houston Astros a 7-6 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Winning pitcher Dawley, 6-4, scored the winning run in the 12th inning after he reached first on a fielder's choice, took second on a walk, went to third on Enos Cabell's fielder's choice grounder, and scored on Garner's one-out single.

Mets' Mad Max keys doubleheader sweep

Associated Press

Bill Max went on a rampage with the key hits in both games as the Jackson Mets swept a Texas League baseball doubleheader from the Shreveport Captains, 3-2, and 7-4.

In other Texas League action Wednesday night, Arkansas edged Tulsa, 5-4, and San Antonio defeated El Paso, 4-1.

Max had a tie-breaking RBI single in the top of the seventh inning as Jackson edged Shreveport, 3-2, in the first game. Jackson also got a two-run homer from Ed Hearn and a solo homer from C.L. Penigar.

Texas League

Floyd Youman, 5-6, was the winning pitcher. The loser was Kerman Roman, 5-9.

Max and Hearn each had two-run homers in the second game as the Mets prevailed, 7-4. Steve Springer had a solo homer for Jackson in the nightcap.

Max had three hits in the second game and had a total of four hits in five trips to the plate for the doubleheader.

Everett Graham had a solo homer for Shreveport. The winning pitcher was Mark Lockenmeyer, 2-1. The loss went to Jeff Gladden, 2-1.

The Mets may have been watching their parent club on television as third baseman Dave Cochrane charged Gladden after the Shreveport pitcher hit him with a pitch. A bench-clearing brawl followed and when it was over the umpires ejected both Cochrane and Gladden.

The New York Mets had been involved in bean ball incidents and one bench-clearing brawl during a series with the Chicago Cubs on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Pinch runner Mike Harris walked home with the winning run in the bottom of the ninth inning as the Arkansas Travelers edged the Tulsa Drillers, 5-4.

Tulsa took a 2-0 lead in the second inning when Darryl Cias homered after Whitney Harry singled. The Drillers made it 3-0 in the sixth when Javier Ortiz homered.

Arkansas got a run in the sixth when an infield out by Curt Ford drove home Gotay Mills. The Drillers built a 4-1 lead before Arkansas tied the game in the seventh inning with three runs on a walk, an infield hit, an error, a groundout, a single, a wild throw.

LITTLEFIELD

"I do putting and chipping every day and practice drives every other day. About a week before a tournament, I start playing rounds, I try to play every day. Playing rounds of golf helps my mental game and that's one of my weakest points right now. I can't concentrate long enough. It's hard to concentrate that long on one thing."

When in school, her training also consists of work on a nautilus machine, not to strengthen but "to tone muscles," said Littlefield. "I try to run three times a week but nothing strenuous. Really, hitting balls is best for me because it strengthens my legs and arms."

"MY MAIN goal this year at school is to win the conference medal and then make it to the NCAA tournament and that will be tough," said Littlefield. "But, if I keep getting help from people like Rex, it'll give me a better chance."

At NMSU, where she received a tuition, books and room scholarship, Littlefield is majoring in business management. However, because of the hectic schedule her golfing demands, her course load has been light and she doesn't expect to get her degree before her collegiate golfing career is over. That leaves her with a choice of graduating or joining the LPGA tour.

"I want to go on the tour. I always have for as long as I can remember," said Littlefield. "I may not graduate in four years so I might have to go back and finish school and then go to tour school and try to qualify. I'm going back to school because it would be a waste of four years not to have a degree to show for it."

She has excelled in other sports besides golf. In high school, she was also a member of the Midland High girl's basketball team and has been playing MUGS softball "for 10 years," said Littlefield. "I could have played again this year (because, at 19, she's within the age limit) but I decided to concentrate on golf. It's kind of strange not playing softball this year."

But, since a choice needed to be made for her future hopes, golf was probably the best one. After all, there isn't much room in professional United States softball to make a living!

WT State to leave Missouri Valley Conference

AMARILLO (AP) — As one of the dwindling southwestern teams in the Missouri Valley Conference, West Texas State University will withdraw from the league no later than the spring of 1986.

West Texas State will compete in the MVC this season, with an option for the 1985-86 season. The school has been a member of the conference since 1970, and is the sixth to withdraw in the past 11 years.

West Texas State currently competes in Division I-AA in football and Division I basketball.

Feds to share offshore revenue

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interior Department announced Wednesday it is ready to divide $270 million in offshore oil and natural gas revenues among five coastal states.

The revenues are from wells adjacent to — but not in — state waters and have been held in a $5.3 billion escrow fund for five years while federal officials have battled with state governments over the money.

California, Alaska, Alaska and Mississippi would each receive millions of dollars if they accepted the offer, part of a proposal by Interior Secretary William P. Clark under which states would get a one-sixth share of most revenues from offshore wells adjoining their state waters.

Florida would receive $16,000, the department said.

An Interior Department statement also expressed hope that the two major offshore producing states, Texas and Louisiana, would accept the offer. The two Gulf Coast states have filed suit against the government in the dispute.

Texas Gov. Mark White said July 5 that a 50-50 split of the revenues would be appropriate. He also said Clark had offered a "substantial increase" over the 2 percent to 3 percent suggested by his predecessors but gave no details.

Texas Land Commissioner Gary Mauro said Wednesday that the offer did not amount to "a slap in the face" but that talks would continue and "any negotiations at this point will be lawyer to lawyer."

Until 1978, the federal government kept all revenue from oil and gas production more than three miles offshore. In that year, Congress required a split of revenues from wells immediately adjacent to state tracts.

Congressional proponents argued that the sharing was justified because oil pools often overlap the three-mile boundary. Even without such overlapping, supporters argued, sharing the revenues would eliminate any incentive for drillers to operate outside state waters but slant their wells to obtain oil and gas beneath those waters.

Under Clark's proposal, California would receive $204 million; Alabama, $36 million; Alaska, $22 million; Mississippi, $8.5 million and Florida, $16,000.

Alaska's figure could rise to $100 million, depending on the solution of a current boundary dispute. The $5.3 billion fund also includes $100 million in production royalties not covered by Clark's proposal, the department said.

Meanwhile, a plan to share up to $300 million in federal offshore oil money annual with coastal and Great Lakes states was approved by a House-Senate conference committee but immediately came under the threat of a presidential veto.

Tanker suit could cost $20 million

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — An attorney representing beachfront property owners in Galveston said a class-action suit filed against the owner and operator of a British tanker that caused the Gulf of Mexico oil spill should net his clients "at least $20 million."

Houston attorney Charles R. Housiere filed the suit, which could total $100 million, in Galveston federal court Wednesday on behalf of five individuals and two companies that own oil-blackened property along Galveston's west end.

The British tanker Alvenus ruptured July 30 off the Louisiana coast and spilled some 1.8 million gallons of oil into the Gulf. The tanker is owned by Lloyd's Leasing Ltd. of London, leased by Alvenus Shipping Ltd. and its oil cargo was owned by Conoco.

Stock market sees loss

The Associated Press

The stock market's first loss in seven sessions came despite Treasury Secretary Donald Regan's forecast that the economy this year should record its biggest expansion in more than three decades.

Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker, meanwhile, said considerable progress has been made in the past two years in resolving the international debt crisis, but warned that more "hard-slogging" work remains. Stocks fell Wednesday as trading volume, although still brisk, slowed from its recent record-breaking pace.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 8.51 to 1,196.11 amid further profit-taking by investors following last week's historic rally, analysts said.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange fell to 121.24 million shares from 127.95 million Tuesday and the record 236.57 million set Friday.

Regan, in revising upward the Reagan administration's earlier forecasts, said the economy should grow at an inflation-adjusted 7.2 percent in 1984, the strongest expansion since the 8.3 percent rate of 1951.

Also, unemployment and inflation will be lower than previously thought, to 6.8 percent and 4.4 percent, respectively, he said. Interest rates will be higher than initially forecast, but those high levels do not appear to be harming the economy and they should decline slightly before long, Regan told the congressional Joint Economic Committee.

Regan said the economy wouldn't grow as strongly in the second half of the year as in the first — expanding at an annual rate of 4 percent to 4.5 percent compared with rates of 10.1 percent and 7.5 percent for the first two quarters.

Dollar trade mixed; Gold steady

LONDON (AP) — The dollar turned in a mixed performance in early European trading today. Gold bullion prices were little changed. Currency dealers said the market was dominated by technical factors. They said the dollar stabilized from a weaker opening after investors moved in to buy the currency at its lower level.

VA homes available

From Staff Reports

House-hunting Midlanders now have a place to shop that few would probably think of.

The Veterans Administration owns many houses that are for sale to the public, not exclusively veterans. The Waco VA Regional office has lifted its 10 percent down payment requirement. Many properties may be purchased with no down payment. Qualifications are based on income and credit rating, not VA eligibility.

Traditionally, most VA-owned properties have been sold with VA financing. To increase cash sales, the Administrator of Veterans Affairs has authorized the payment of discount "points" on the sale of cash properties when the purchaser obtains outside financing.

Beginning August 8, 1984, the Waco Regional office will list properties for sale on 10 percent discount for cash terms. The sales price will not be subject to the 10 percent reduction if the VA must pay loan discount points for other financing.

Anyone interested in purchasing a VA-owned property may contact a local real estate broker or call the Waco VA Regional office at 817/756-6511, ext. 646.

GREENWICH, Conn. — AMAX Inc. has reported net earnings of $9.8 million, equivalent to six cents per common share, for the second quarter of 1984, compared with a net loss of $21.2 million, equivalent to 40 cents per common share, in the 1983 second quarter. Pretax earnings from operations improved to $57 million compared with $25 million for the 1983 second quarter.

For the first six months of 1984 AMAX reported net earnings of $18.0 million, equivalent to 10 cents per common share. This compares with a net loss of $69.9 million, equivalent to $1.24 per common share, incurred in the first six months of 1983.

DALLAS — Texas Instruments Inc. chairman Mark Shepherd, Jr., and president J. Fred Bucy reported second quarter results as follows: "Net sales billed for the three months ended June 30, 1984, were $1,464 million, an increase of 33 percent from the second quarter of 1983. Shipments increased in semiconductors, government electronics, data systems, metallurgical materials, and electrical controls. Billings in geophysical exploration services were unchanged, and consumer products shipments were below those of second quarter 1983.

"Net income in the quarter was $85.9 million, compared with a net loss of $119.2 million in last year's second quarter arising from the consumer home computer business. Earnings per share were $3.57, compared with a net loss of $5.00 per share in second quarter 1983.

"For the first six months of 1984, net sales billed were $2,803 million, up 23 percent from the same period in 1983. Net income was $165.7 million, in contrast to a net loss of $112.0 million in the first half of 1983. Earnings per share were $6.89, compared with a net loss of $4.71 for the year-to-date period.

DALLAS — Diamond Shamrock's second quarter net income increased to $64.3 million, more than double the $29.5 million generated in the second quarter of 1983. On a per share basis, the company reported 48 cents per share compared to 43 cents per share in the previous year, which included an extraordinary gain of 5 cents per share from an exchange of stock for debentures. Sales and operating revenues for the three months reached $1.1 billion, an increase of 16 percent compared to $978.4 million in the same period of 1983.

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. — Phillips Petroleum Co. had higher earnings for both the second quarter and first half of 1984, Wm. C. Douce, Phillips chairman and chief executive officer, has announced.

Phillips second quarter 1984 earnings were an estimated $231 million, or $1.50 a share, on total revenues of $4.05 billion.

This was 37 percent higher than a year earlier, when Phillips had second quarter earnings of $169 million, or $1.10 a share, on total revenues of $3.79 billion.

HOUSTON — Pennzoil Co. reported 1984 second quarter earnings of $51.6 million, or 91 cents per share, an increase of 76 percent from the $29.3 million, or 55 cents per share, earned during the same period last year.

Net income for the first six months of 1984 was $120.8 million, or $2.16 per share, an increase of 71 percent over the $70.6 million, or $1.33 per share, earned during the first half of 1983.

Sales for the second quarter of 1984 amounted to $606 million, versus $567 million for the same period last year. Sales were $1.3 billion for the six months, versus $1.1 billion for the 1983 period.

Workout reached for Wilson Companies

Staff Reports

The RAM Group Ltd., an Oklahoma City based financial consulting firm announced today that on July 30 it successfully completed a workout agreement of $8.3 million for The Wilson Companies of Midland.

The Wilson Companies include: John M. Wilson, John Wilson Drilling, Wilson Energy, Perfojet Services, Big Chief Well Service, and Big Chief Supply, all of Midland.

The workout agreement involved 400 trade creditors with the RAM group acting as agent in dispersing cash payments to the 98 percent who accepted the agreement as well as making provisions for creditors who have not yet accepted the workout.

William W. Talley II, president RAM Group Ltd., said that creditors who have not yet accepted the workout may receive immediate payment by acceptance of the plan.

The financial consulting firm was engaged by the Wilson Companies in October of 1983 to help analyze cash flow problems resulting from the failure of First National Bank of Midland and a downturn in the oil and gas industry.

Analysis at that time indicated that a workout agreement could be effected that would return trade creditors with substantially more cash than would have been received under bankruptcy proceedings. Also, payment could be received immediately, rather than over a 2-7 year period.

In bringing about the agreement, RAM Ltd. worked closely with the FDIC officials and an Informal Trade Creditor Committee, headed by Bill Crowell of the Western Company of North America, headquartered in Fort Worth and Doug Almon, of Wilson Industries (no relation to Wilson Companies) of Fort Worth.

Loffland opens Midland office

From Staff Reports

Loffland Brothers Company, a large independent drilling contractor, has opened a sales office in Midland.

Robert Fowler is the new area sales manager for the office, which will serve Midland, Odessa, and the Permian Basin. The office will handle requests and drilling requirements for customers with well locations throughout the U.S. and Canada.

"The opening of the Midland sales office is our response to the continuing growth and drilling needs of the Permian Basin," said Larry Larson, Central Division Manager, based in New Braunfels.

Loffland also continues to maintain its Equipment Repair Center in Odessa.

New Misco Supply reopens in Odessa

The New Misco Supply Company, Inc. has reopened its Odessa store at 1312 W. Second St. The Greater Odessa Area Chamber of Commerce welcomed the reopened store with a ribbon-cutting ceremony August 3, 1984.

The store reopened May 16, 1984, after AmTech Resources, Inc. acquired certain assets, including fifteen oil and gas field supply stores and related inventories from the trustee of a bankrupt company, Misco Supply Co. AmTech Resources, Inc. created a wholly-owned subsidiary named the New Misco Supply Company, Inc.

Comanche prepared to load fuel

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Utilities Electric Company has asked the Atomic Safety and Licensing Board for a limited license to allow fuel load and certain precractical tests at Comanche Peak Nuclear Power Plant Unit 1, TUEC officials said Wednesday.

TUEC officials said the procedure would have no implications regarding public safety, and the license, which would be issued by the director of Nuclear Reactor Regulation, would not authorize the unit to generate any power. Officials also said that the loading of fuel and testing activities would not involve nuclear reaction.

TUEC is the majority owner of Comanche Peak, southwest of Fort Worth.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission would continue its detailed review of plant construction during the fuel load and testing process. Also, the ASLB's licensing hearing would continue, if it hasn't been completed beforehand.

BBB opens new office

The Better Business Bureau will open its new office with a ribbon cutting ceremony at 4:30 p.m. on August 9, 1984. The new office is located on Airport Road 20 behind the Airport Executive Motel and across from the Gooch Meat Packing Plant.

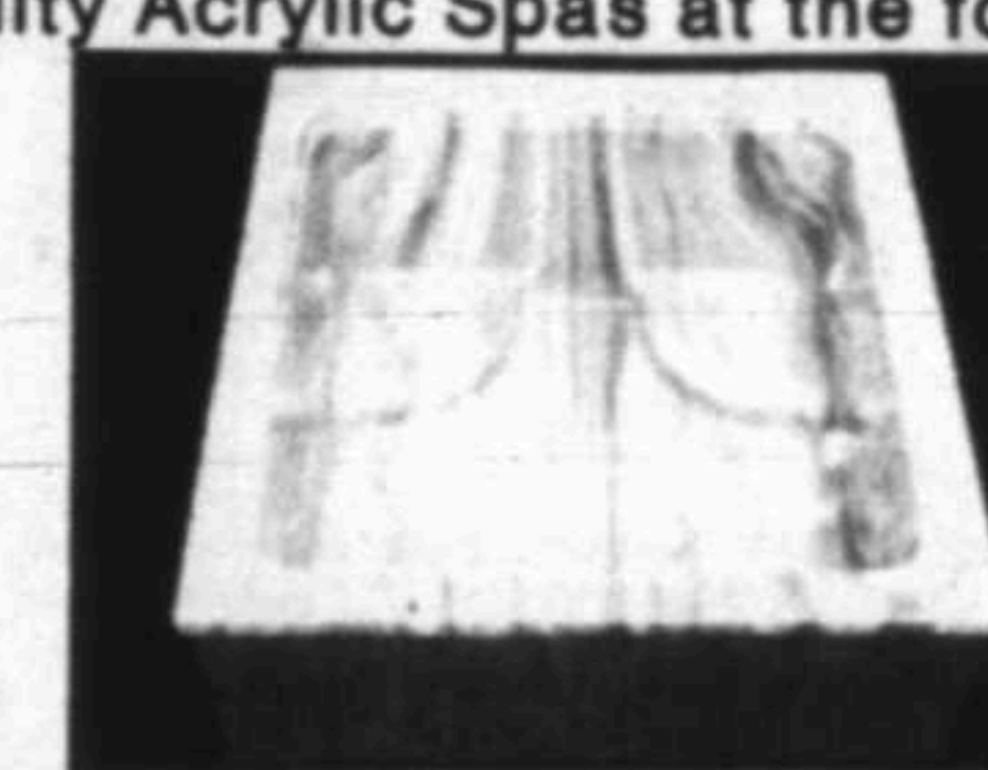

Both the Midland and Odessa Chambers of Commerce will be there, as will Midland Mayor Thane Atkins and Odessa Mayor John Minor.

OIL & GAS REPORT

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Gas discovery finalized in Crockett

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

J. CLEO THOMPSON, Dallas, has finalized an Ellenberger gas discovery in Crockett County.

The firm's No. 1 Henderson finalized for 1.2 Mmcfd CAOF of dry gas. Drilled to a total depth of 9,530 ft., it was completed in an open hole section at 9,317 ft., where 4.5 in. casing was set.

On a ground elevation of 2,230 ft. formation tops were established at 6,150 ft. for the Canyon; 8,408 ft. on the Strawn; 8,529 on the Detrital; 8,760 ft. for the Fusselman and 9,310 on top of the Ellenberger.

The well is 1.5 miles east of Canyon gas production and 3 miles southwest of Ellenberger gas production in the Perner Ranch multipay field.

It is located 697 ft. from north and 2,719 ft. from west lines of Section 38, Block ST, TCRS survey, 15 miles southwest of Ozona.

The operator has applied for designation of the discovery as Henderson (Ellenberger) gas.

Moore field extension continues in Howard Co.

REPUBLIC MINERALS CORP., Big Spring, continues a 190 well expansion and definition program for the Moore field in Howard County.

The firm is drilling north of the old Moore field, and to date has 200 producing wells in the field. It has launched a 190 well program that finds 69 wells completed, 60 drilled and waiting for completion and 60 more locations to drill. Most of the drilling is being done by Safari Drilling of Abilene.

The expansion is the outgrowth of a geological hunch, according to Chris Barden, Western Division Manager for Republic Mineral Corp. "One of our geologists had lived in Big Spring and suspected that the old more field might continue further north. We initiated a 15 well program on the basis of his information; hit two or three spots and have been going ever since. That was three years ago."

The firm feels it has pretty well defined the eastern limits of the San Andres production, but will continue to drill on the northern and western flanks to better define field limits.

Business to locate in Midland

From Staff Reports

An electronics service operation that will test integrated circuits used in military products will be opened at Midland Industrial Park, it was announced this morning at a news conference hosted by the Midland and Odessa Chambers of Commerce.

An official of KES Systems & Service, an electronics service firm with operations currently in Singapore, Taiwan and Malaysia, said the Midland-Odessa project would be the company's first operation located in the United States.

Edward Boothman, partner in the overseas KES operation and head of the new U.S. subsidiary, said the company initially will employ about a dozen persons and that hiring has begun. With rapid growth, more than 50 persons are expected to be hired by the end of the first year.

Representatives of the chambers hoped efforts to improve communication and cooperation between Midland and Odessa in handling industrial prospects received a reinforcing boost with the announcement.

KES has leased and begun alterations of a 40,000 square-foot facility formerly occupied by Levi Strauss & Co. in the Midland Industrial Park, located at the intersection of U.S. Highway 80 and Loop 250. The building is owned by the Industrial Foundation of Midland, which is an arm of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

KES is recognized as a prime service subcontractor to companies which manufacture integrated circuits for military and defense-related uses. In its overseas operation, KES provides a service wherein finished integrated circuits and semi-conductors are put through a series of tests under varying conditions to ensure the circuits' ability to operate within the highly demanding and restrictive requirements placed upon products used in military products.

The company plans to offer this same service from the new plant to new and existing customers whose manufacturing operations are located in the U.S. but who previously have been served by the overseas operation.

Officials from both cities pointed to the location as evidence of the potential for enhanced industrial locations as a result of increased communication and cooperation between the two cities. Boothman said the existing building in the Midland Industrial Park best suited the company's needs but said his review and analysis of the local market was made easier through the coordinated tours and visits that covered both cities.

"We are extremely pleased that KES has located in our area and, though not large in the beginning, we all recognize the great potential that the company offers our area in terms of economic diversification," said W.P. Franklin, president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

"Odessa would like to congratulate Midland on your successful efforts to bring KES to your city," said Art Lish, chairman of the board of the Greater Odessa Area Chamber of Commerce.

"This is a good example of how the combined efforts of the two communities can work together for our mutual benefit. We enjoyed working with Midland in the recruitment of this company and we're sure that Odessa will directly benefit by our combined efforts in the very near future."

Officials from Midland and Odessa hope to use publicity about the KES plant to educate and attract other electronics manufacturers and service companies.

Public hearing not well attended

From Staff Reports

Taxpayers of Midland Independent School District declined to express their opinions about a 7.6 percent increase in the effective tax rate.

Only five people attended Wednesday's legally required public hearing to receive community comment on the proposed rate of 71 cents per $100 valuation. Of those, only three testified. The three men, all teachers, voiced support of the increase needed to finance teacher raises.

"Before anybody gives you any flack, I want to thank you," Goddard teacher Gilberto Garcia began. But criticism was not forthcoming.

"I appreciate what you've done this summer, too," added Sam Manning, president of Midland Federation of Teachers. "Keep it up."

"I appreciate you putting yourselves on the line for a tax increase to help us out," concurred Bruce Anderson, who served on the salary advisory committee.

Board President Parker Humes called the tax rate and the $54 million budget "frugal and reasonable," and then adjourned the meeting 10 minutes after it began.

The tax rate will be approved at the board's next meeting, which will begin at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday.

The rate is actually 6 cents less than last year, but taxes will go up for most taxpayers because of reappraisals.

Bunton says prisoner wasn't denied rights

Sheriff's, deputies' actions 'in good faith'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The judge has laid Lee Roy Jackson's case to rest. U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton has ruled that the 37-year-old Jackson, who last year filed a $300,000 civil rights suit against Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith, was not denied any rights guaranteed by the United States Constitution and that any inconveniences caused Jackson were his own doing.

Actions taken against Jackson by the sheriff and deputies were in "good faith," the judge ruled.

Jackson, jailed for nine months in 1981 for the murder of a Midland grocer, had complained he was denied "proper" showers, was forced to "live in unsanitary conditions" in a cell, was served meals through a "filthy access door" to his cell, and was physically mistreated.

Jackson was involved in jailhouse fights and disputes which he instigated, according to the evidence presented to Bunton.

Jackson "by no means was a popular prisoner with the other inhabitants of the jail," Bunton noted. Fellow prisoners had "unanimously, successfully" petitioned the sheriff to have Jackson removed from their cellblock.

In September 1981, Jackson got into a dispute over the portions of food supplied by the jail kitchen, rammed his food tray back through the serving port in "defiant response" to his portion of food. He then refused to return to his cell to be fed alone and "incited a small scale riot" in the cellblock.

Thereafter, the sheriff took Jackson at gunpoint to an isolation cell.

For two weeks, Jackson was held in the six-by-nine-foot cell replete with shower, bunk, sink and toilet. Other disobedient prisoners were punished.

Bunton noted that Jackson was isolated from the other prisoners "because of his predilection to fight" with other prisoners.

In the single-man cell, however, Jackson was "yelling and pounding" on the cell's wall in demanding he be allowed to take a shower.

"True to form," wrote Bunton, "...[Jackson] was attempting to cause another major disturbance by having prisoners join in the demonstration."

Moments later, Jackson "jumped" a deputy sheriff who was removing commissary items from the cell "so as to quiet the situation." A trusty intervened, and struck Jackson, who was taken to the hospital's emergency room for treatment of his cut mouth.

Thereafter, the county's medical physician put Jackson on a soft-food diet. Back in jail, Jackson revolted over the diet and threw his tray of food at the deputy sheriff and attempted to attack the trusty who had intervened in the previous fight, according to reports.

Jackson was subdued and was returned to his cell. In November 1981, he was transferred to the Texas Department of Public Safety to begin serving a life sentence for murder.

Of some of Jackson's alleged mistreatments, Bunton commented:

"Owing to Jackson's 'violent and volatile nature,' it seems 'most prudent' to feed Jackson via the access door rather than opening the cell door. All prisoners are fed similarly.

"Jackson received the opportunity to shower every other day. But due to 'difficulties with various plumbing fixtures and with vandalism to those fixtures,' Jackson had to be escorted to other areas of the jail to take showers.

"Jackson's 'sojourn throughout the environs of the jail' was necessitated by his 'apparent lack of the most rudimentary diplomatic and social skills and graces.'"

Sheriff Smith said he was impressed with the judge's ruling.

"I think the court looked at the situation and gave the man ample opportunity to make his complaints... It's apparent that he (Bunton) really did his homework and that he was thorough, and I appreciate that. I was immensely impressed with the amount of work he did on it."

To cemetery supervisor 'it's just another job'

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Cemeteries exert a morbid fascination on the public imagination, and this has left cemetery caretakers with a somewhat sinister image.

The gravedigger has never been classified with the mailman, the nurse and the fireman on the approved list of childhood fantasy careers. Most people think a cemetery is an odd place to spend a lot of time in, so naturally it follows that people who work in cemeteries are rather odd themselves.

But to Paul Zarate, it's just another job.

"You just get used to it," he says. Zarate supervises Fairview Cemetery for the county, which has owned it for 99 years. Zarate has been there 11 years, first as a caretaker and for the past four years as supervisor.

Zarate doesn't fit the popular image of a caretaker — he's not old enough or grim enough, and he probably couldn't scare a child if he tried.

He and his four assistants seem uninhibited by their somber surroundings, though he says a certain amount of turnover does result from the peculiar nature of the work.

"A lot of people can't take that," he says. "A lot of people have left."

The work isn't nearly as gruesome as people might assume — it consists mostly of gardening.

The biggest part of the job, in fact, is cutting the lawn. It takes Zarate's crew of grim reapers all week to cut the whole cemetery. "And then they have to start all over again."

This rhythmic reaping might lead a man to contemplate the inevitable cycle of life, but Zarate isn't particularly given to philosophizing about the nature of his work.

"Everybody's going, sooner or later," he says with a shrug.

Fairview is the scene of five or six funerals each week, but most of the details are handled by the undertakers. The main responsibility for Zarate's men is digging the grave, but even that time-honored task isn't what it used to be.

The modern gravedigger has no need for pick and shovel — he merely lines up the gravedigging machine and watches while it bores out a perfect plot.

"It takes about 15 minutes to dig a grave, and that's fast," says Zarate, whereas two men using shovels would take at least 2 1/2-3 hours.

"That's the fastest I ever dug one," he says.

When not gardening or gravedigging, the caretakers spend a lot of time piling fresh dirt on top of graves to keep them from sinking. Most of the complaints Zarate receives concern graves which have settled into the earth, which apparently has an unsettling effect on cemetery visitors.

You, me, Uncle Sam inclined to buy now, pay later

I can identify with Uncle Sam and his loose pocketbook. He, like I, revels in prepayments. We can talk about frugality, Benjamin Franklin's pithy "penny" saw, the benefits of sound fiscal management and the ills of borrowing.

It's always tomorrow, it seems, when I'm going on a personal austerity program. I haven't the money today to be a spendthrift; I often forget that.

Spend now; pay later.

Good ol' Uncle Sam always waits until the next administration to put his prepayments into action. But, like the farmer who is looking to next year for that bonanza crop, Uncle Sam manages to put off debt-paying until another "next" year.

Next is never.

Uncle Sam, like you and I and our neighbors, is inclined to pass the buck, which Harry S. Truman supposedly stopped. Today, Uncle Sam does pass the buck on the national debt quite stealthily. It swings between the Congress and the administration with a noticeable lack of deftness.

Nobody in high political places wants to take the blame for getting this country into an abyss of debt.

No responsible party, surely, would want to embarrass this country.

But if blame cannot be avoided, then the "yet, but" buck-passing technique comes into play.

"Yes," a Congressman would say, "I will bear my share of the responsibility for the national debt. Blame me if you will. Name me the culprit. Burn me. Curse me. Fire me... But remember..." And here he'll try to lay a guilt trip on the few American people who care enough about the nation's plight to listen to his ramblings.

"Just remember, I did it for you... for the welfare of the people, for your community, for you, for your children and their children, and in the name of a strong national defense program."

That makes everything all right?

Perhaps Mr. Congressman did, in part, do his deeper-in-debt deeds for the "benefit" of the country. Perhaps. He also did it for himself. The more greenback dollars he funnels into his district, the more votes he can expect to win in the next election. He, too, craves immediate approval and job security. A few fancy government programs on the homefront generally pleases his clientele; they, too, like extra money even if it's borrowed.

Eventually, somebody is going to pay; somebody is going to suffer.

Congress and the president, I suppose, somehow could absolve the national debt and watch the nation go into the throes of chaos. Individuals and corporations sometimes absolve their debts via the federal bankruptcy courts. Their creditors, as well as they, often suffer.

Uncle Sam does it. You do. I do. We all justify our spending. We spend out of necessity or on a whim for the family and ourselves. We want it "now" instead of planning today to have it in another "now" off in the future.

Like the government, we're so impetuous. We'll pull out those plastic credit cards with the magic numbers on them, sign a promissory note or credit agreement, and temporarily forget that eventually those bills will have to be paid. Credit cards are not free.

Buckpassing is easy. But the problem is that the problem will recur unless it's dealt with now.

Ed Todd is a staff writer for the Reporter-Telegram.

Furr Standridge shows visitors how to handle a horse during "Cowboy Morning" at Figure 3 ranch near Claude in Palo Duro Canyon. For $15, visitors are treated to a typical chuck wagon breakfast, horseback riding and roping and cowchip throwing contests.

CLAUDE (AP) — Dozens of eggs and sourdough biscuits are already simmering in 30-inch skillets by the time the High Plains sun strikes the Palo Duro Canyon's aged, red walls.

Tom Christian and his chuckwagon crew are rustling up another breakfast for dozens of Yankees, or Australians, or Britons looking for a taste of the Old West.

Three to four days a week every summer, Christian and his family put on a "Cowboy Morning" for up to 140 city slickers who pay $15 a head to visit his 7,000-acre ranch, which sprawls along the canyon.

They arrive at the Figure 3 ranch in bus loads, stopping at the entrance for a wagon ride to the canyon's rim about 7 a.m. There, Christian's crew of several ranch hands and three of his four children have been working on breakfast for two hours over two rebuilt chuckwagons.

Except for a metal shed and picnic tables, the atmosphere is vintage 1800s.

The visitors, including many who came to nearby Amarillo to tour its huge feedlots, breakfast on boiled coffee, dozens of scrambled eggs, gallons of gravy, sourdough biscuits and sausage, all cooked over open fires.

"There aren't any hotels here. We're trying to make this as much like the late 1800s as possible," Christian's wife, Ann, told a bus load of visitors one summer morning.

After chow, the group breaks up for horseback riding and contests in roping and cowchip throwing. Christian, a 52-year-old former state legislator, gives demonstrations in branding before the wagon and bus rides back to civilization.

Christian, whose grandfather settled on the ranch in 1889, had been using the cooking gear for years with guests before Amarillo tourism officials approached him about starting the breakfasts.

"We used to camp outside for hunting trips. We just put the stuff together and enlarged it," he said. Amarillo's visitor and convention council was looking for some way to entertain guests whose only exposure to Texas may have consisted of old Westerns and episodes of TV's "Dallas."

"We were just interested in letting people know something of the history of this part of the country and the heritage," Mrs. Christian said.

The Christian family's "Cowboy Morning" took about two years to get off the ground.

"It really started moving out last year with its first big years," said Kevin Knapp, director of the city's tourism council. "Last year, we had 3,200. This year, and we haven't even completed the season (which ends in September), we've had 5,500."

DEATHS

Crime Stoppers seeks information on burglary

Midland Crime Stoppers this week is seeking information on a house burglary that occurred on County Road 1243, south of CR 60-West.

Sometime between 7:45 a.m. and 5 p.m. on June 4, burglars entered the Gordon Jenkins residence by kicking open the front door.

Once inside, the burglars removed several pieces of property, including a Sears 19-inch color TV set and an Atari 2600 game console. The most identifiable items taken were an 1886 Spencer-Banner 12-gauge shotgun and the double barrel to an antique Wesley shotgun made in 1890.

Sheriff's investigators believe the persons responsible for this burglary are also responsible for a number of other break-ins in the area. The burglars may be watching the houses and establishing the habits of the homeowners.

Crime Stoppers will pay a $1,000 cash reward this week only for information leading to the arrest and indictment of the person or persons responsible for the burglary. Crime Stoppers will also pay cash rewards for information on other felony crimes.

In Midland, call Crime Stoppers at 694-TIPS. In Odessa, call 333-TIPS. Callers do not have to reveal their identity.

Teen's parents again called to testify before grand jury

HOUSTON (AP) — A couple who were jailed for refusing to testify before a grand jury against their son, who is accused of killing a female carrier, were again subpoenaed as grand jury witnesses.

Prosecutors presented subpoenas Wednesday to Bernard and Odette Port, the father and stepmother of 17-year-old David Port, calling the couple to appear Aug. 21 before a grand jury.

But Randy Schaffer, attorney for the couple, immediately filed a motion to quash the subpoenas in the court of state District Judge I.D. McMaster.

An Aug. 21 hearing was scheduled for McMaster to decide the issue.

David Port is charged with murder in the June 7 shooting death of Debora Sue Schatz, 23, who disappeared while delivering mail in the Port's affluent west Houston neighborhood.

State District Judge William Hat-

ten held the Ports in contempt June 27 because they refused to testify before a grand jury last month. But Hatten's ruling was overturned by the Court of Criminal Appeals because Hatten and the prosecutors did not follow rules outlined for contempt cases.

CEMETERY

Other problems for Zarate include keeping the rows of headstones carefully lined up, and keeping people out of the cemetery at night. The Fairview gate has been locked every evening since an incident a few years ago when two murderers fleeing the scene of their crime in Abilene spent the night amongst the graves of departed Midlanders.

"We found some brand new boots out here, and one of our guys put them on and they fit him real good," says Zarate.

It turned out that the boots belonged to the murderers' victim. The two men were eventually captured in Hobbs, N.M., and the boots were confiscated as evidence, but not before they made their contribution to local cemetery lore.

Boot Hill, indeed.

Law enforcement authorities trying to identify body

From Staff Reports

BIG LAKE — Law enforcement authorities are trying to identify the body of a young woman found Wednesday night along U.S. 67 about five miles east of here.

The woman was white, in her early 20s, about 5 feet, 6 inches tall and weighed 150 pounds. A Department of Public Safety spokeswoman today said it is not known if she was the victim of a hit-run driver or was thrown from a passing vehicle.

Her body was discovered shortly after 9 p.m. and an autopsy is being performed by the Bexar County medical examiner's office in San Antonio.

An investigation into her death is being conducted by the DPS, Texas Rangers and the Reagan County Sheriff's Department.

California man killed in wreck in Big Spring

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — An out-of-state man was killed when he was hit by a car about 3:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Dead is 53-year-old James Mickey Roberts of Anaheim, Calif. According to the Department of Public Safety, Roberts ran into the path of a car driven by 76-year-old James Cecil Coffman of Big Spring.

The accident occurred on the south service road of Interstate-20 at the Refinery Road overpass inside the city limits of Big Spring. No charges were filed.

Soda water battle bubbles into taste-test

By LINDA ANDERSON

I don't like 7-Up. I know, it's light and pretty and caffeine free and contains no artificial colors (I watch commercials, too), but I have never liked lemon-lime-flavored soft drinks.

But my children have been nagging me to do the 7-Up vs. Sprite taste test, so I decided to go ahead and give it a try. At least doing the test would get the kids off my back.

Several soft drink companies recently have begun releasing commercials showing taste-tests of their products against products of their competition — Pepsi against Coke in the "Pepsi Challenge," Coke against Pepsi and 7-Up, Sprite against 7-Up, and Diet 7-Up against Diet 7-Up with NutraSweet.

We tested 7-Up and Diet 7-Up against Sprite and Diet Sprite for taste, price and advertising accuracy. Taste testers included a small child, adults and teenagers.

Commercials for 7-Up claim the soda is caffeine-free and contains no artificial color. Caffeine is not listed in label ingredients and 7-Up is clear, so it actually contains no color at all, artificial or otherwise.

Sprite is also clear and also contains no caffeine. Advertising claims the drink is made with the flavor of "lymon," which is supposed to mean lemon-lime. Just like 7-Up.

Caffeine has never bothered me. I can drink something loaded with caffeine and five minutes later fall asleep. However, too much caffeine bothers my husband, and our 3-year-old can drink one swallow of something containing caffeine and stay awake all night. (And guess who gets to stay up with her.) So finding soft drinks without caffeine is important to my family.

All the soft drinks purchased were in two-liter plastic bottles except Diet Sprite, which was in a 12-oz. can. (I have not been able to find Diet Sprite in a two-liter bottle. Anywhere.) Two-liter bottles of most soft drinks usually cost $1.49 to $1.59. I found these on sale for $1.29, which is not unusual. (All prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.) The 12-oz. can cost about 40-cents.

The tasting was "blind," with none of the testers knowing which of the four soft drinks they were tasting. (I disqualified myself because not only was I pouring, but I don't like lemon-lime soft drinks.)

The adult male and one teenager chose regular Sprite as the best. The other teenager preferred Diet 7-Up and the 3-year-old liked them all. (She calls all caffeine-free sodas "Coke-With-No-Caffeine.") All one word.) All the testers said the Diet Sprite was the worst, but couldn't tell if the flavor was bad because it was artificially sweetened or because it was in a can. And all said the taste of the Diet 7-Up was similar to the taste of the regular 7-Up.

The four sodas tested didn't vary in price (except, of course the Diet Sprite, which is priced comparably with the other three sodas in cans). Both 7-Ups and both Sprites were clear, bubbly and caffeine free. The taste-testers, while expressing favorites, said the drinks were extremely similar in flavor. (I thought it was interesting that while Sprite was first in this taste-test, Diet Sprite was last.)

But give me a Diet Dr Pepper any time. With or without caffeine.

Cheap stocks can be expensive investment

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Excited callers offering a chance to make a quick buck on cheap stocks that they say will soon rise in price have cost Americans millions of dollars in recent years, consumer and investment experts warn.

The so-called penny stocks, low-priced offerings that usually involve speculation in new companies, can be legitimate but need to be checked out carefully.

Failures of penny stock companies have resulted in losses of hundreds of millions of dollars, according to an investor alert issued jointly by the national council of Better Business Bureaus and the North American Securities Administrators Association.

"Penny stocks are a dangerous game in which the average investor often winds up on the losing end," warned Massachusetts securities commissioner Michael Unger.

The investor alert warned that in a typical penny stock fraud, the promoters assign themselves large blocks of stock at little or no cost and then begin selling shares at a nickel or a dime each.

High-pressure sales tactics can push prices as high as a dollar or two, at which point the promoters sell out, making a large profit for themselves. The company then goes out of business, leaving unsuspecting buyers with worthless stock.

"Although the profit potential for penny stocks may appear great, losses can also be large. Potential investors can protect themselves from fraudulent offers by carefully investigating them and learning just who is running the business and what they are promoting," said William H. Tankersley, president of the Better Business Bureaus.

In most states brokers need to be registered, and a call to the state securities administrator can determine whether any legal actions have been filed against the broker.

Suggestions that the broker has some sort of inside information or that the stock price can be manipulated to raise the value should be red flags.

Companies are required to file a prospectus before selling stock. But note: registering a prospectus with a government agency doesn't mean that the agency has approved the stock in any way. Get a copy of the prospectus and read it before buying any stock.

The securities administrators say some things to look for in a prospectus include:

— Management: Look for the background and experience of the company officers.

— Finances: Many penny stock firms have little or no capital to work with and will be using investors' money just to keep the doors open. Make sure you understand the financial statement and audit sheet.

BETTER BUSINESS

Models advised to check offers

By LINDA TRUITT

"Local models needed part time. Fashion shows, T.V. and business ads. No experience necessary. Training available. Good earnings."

Sound enticing? Commercials have appeared on local radio stations and ads in the form of flyers have been distributed on car windows. The ad claimed models could earn $25 an hour and models of all ages were needed.

People who responded to the ads were told to attend an orientation session at a local motel. At the orientation the respondents found the company really wanted to sell a 12-week model training course for a total cost of $538.

One inquirer to the Better Business Bureau claimed the company stated local businesses were anxiously looking for models and it was made to appear there were not enough models to fill existing jobs. An investigation by the BBB revealed there is little demand for models in the Midland/Odessa area. Many local businesses use friends, employees, customers or relatives in their ads, according to advertising agencies and retail clothing stores. If a professional model is needed most businesses will contact modeling agencies in Dallas or Houston.

One of the company's ads briefly mentioned a beauty pageant. It appears those people who take the course will be encouraged to enter a beauty pageant sponsored by the company.

While there are opportunities in the modeling industry, many reputable modeling agencies don't advertise in the employment section of the newspaper and then ask respondents for money.

Follow this advice:

— Ask for names and telephone numbers of satisfied customers. Call those people and find out what work they have gotten as a result of their contact with the agency.

— If big bucks are promised, try to decide just how realistic such a promise really is. Modeling is a very competitive business and a model training course will not guarantee success.

— Before handing over hard-earned cash, ask the agency for names of companies which use their models. Call those companies and ask if they do. Also ask how often they use the agency and how many models they employ.

— Some local photographers will help match experienced models with clients. A person who is truly interested in modeling should make an appointment with an experienced photographer to get his opinion the possibility of a modeling career.

— Call the BBB for a reliability report. The BBB may know something about the company that can help in the decision of accepting the company's offer or not.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Woman another victim of Nazism

CANNES, France (AP) — A 75-year-old woman whose husband, father and brother died in Nazi concentration camps was killed by a 19-year-old neo-Nazi because she was Jewish, police say.

Police said Wednesday that Raynald Leykens had confessed to fatally stabbing the woman, Henriette Cerf Barsky, with a scuba diving knife a week ago. Her body was found Friday in her apartment near Cannes.

Officers said a search of Leykens' apartment turned up a collection of replicas of arms, World War II German uniforms and Nazi literature. Further investigation determined that Leykens was expelled from high school in the northern city of Lille for putting anti-Semitic posters on school walls.

Police said Leykens, who did odd jobs for Mrs. Barsky, told them he dressed in a sweater bearing Nazi emblems and a camouflage jacket on the night of what he described as his "mission."

They said Mrs. Barsky was active in organizations concerned with the survivors and families of victims of Nazi concentration camps.

Coins approved 'at face value'

LONDON (AP) — Buckingham Palace says Queen Elizabeth II has approved two new images of her face for use on coins in Britain and Commonwealth countries. The 58-year-old queen's face will be unlined on the coins, a depiction intended to show her "humanity," Raphael Maklouf, the artist who created the new images, said Wednesday.

However, the royal law is heavier than it has been on previous coins. In the new images, the queen wears the crown she uses for the state opening of Parliament, and also wears a pearl necklace and earrings.

Maklouf said he had been told the queen was "delighted" with her new image, which will appear on British coins dated 1985. The new images will replace those by Arnold Machin on current coins, which first appeared in 1968.

Name change a problem for U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Upper Volta's recent name change to Bourkina Faso has presented the U.N. Security Council with a problem.

Upper Volta now holds the council presidency, which rotates monthly on an alphabetical basis. Alphabetically, as Bourkina Faso, it would hold the presidency again in October after Zimbabwe.

If it is not given the presidency of the 15-member council in October, the African nation might miss the next turn reserved for it as Upper Volta and thus be delayed two months in the rotation.

Security Council spokesman Joe Sills said Wednesday that the U.N. legal department is preparing a memorandum in an effort to help resolve the problem.

Military government lifts ban

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay (AP) — The military government has lifted some restrictions on political activity and also on the rights of the news media to report on it.

The changes, announced Wednesday, were the latest of several concessions by the government of President Gregorio Alvarez, which reached agreement with some political groups last week on a plan to return the country to civilian rule next year.

The changes were welcomed by journalists, but some restrictions on reporting information critical of the government remain in effect. Several political restrictions also continue, including a ban on political activity by more than 3,000 people whose civil rights have been suspended.

The accord between the military and three political groups calls for elections Nov. 25 and transfer of power to the new government March 1.

Cosmonauts walk in space again

MOSCOW (AP) — Two Soviet cosmonauts spent five hours outside the orbiting Salyut 7 space station carrying out "difficult assembly work," the official Soviet news agency Tass reports.

The news agency said Wednesday's excursion was the sixth time mission commander Leonid Kizim and flight engineer Vladimir Solov'yev have walked in space during their six months at the space station.

The cosmonauts removed part of the heat insulation cover on the back of the service module, shut off a pipe in the fuel line and dismantled a fragment of the solar battery panel for analysis back on Earth, Tass said.

There are three cosmonauts aboard the space station, and the Soviets have not said how long they will remain there. On Sept. 6, the cosmonauts would break the 211-day space endurance record set in 1982 by cosmonauts Valentin Lebedev and Anatoly Berezovoy.

Mexico to receive $500 million

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico and the World Bank on Wednesday signed credit agreements giving a total of $500 million to Mexico, the government news agency Notimex reported.

Notimex said $300 million would go into special trusts designed to stimulate agriculture. The remaining $200 million would be used to extend and modernize the country's highway system, the news agency said.

During signing ceremonies, Jesus Silva Herzog, the Mexican Treasury Secretary, said the credit is not "in any immediate way" an increase of the country's foreign debt.

Opposition leader freed from prison under amnesty

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Jacek Kuron, Poland's most prominent opposition intellectual, was freed from Warsaw's main prison today under last month's general amnesty, family members said.

Kuron was home at his Warsaw apartment, they said.

The 50-year-old leader of the now-disbanded workers' rights group the Committee for Social Self-Defense, known as KOR, was accused by the government of plotting to overthrow Poland's Communist system.

Three other KOR members were charged with similar crimes, but their trial was indefinitely adjourned last month three days before parliament approved a general amnesty that has freed hundreds of political prisoners.

Two other KOR members, Adam Michnik and Zbigniew Romaszewski, also have been freed. The fourth is Henryk Wujec, and there has been no word on whether he has been released.

Kuron was a prominent Solidarity adviser who helped unite Poland's intellectual community with its workers in the years leading up to the birth of Solidarity in August 1980.

Two Iranian teens jailed after hijacking

ROME (AP) — Two Iranian teen-agers identified as foes of their country's Islamic regime were in prison today after freeing about 300 passengers from an airliner they had hijacked. Police said their only weapon was a knife.

About 280 of the passengers were Moslem pilgrims who had boarded the Iran Air flight in Tehran bound for the holy cities of Mecca and Medina in Saudi Arabia, Iran's official news agency said.

The hijackers surrendered Wednesday afternoon more than five hours after the Airbus jetliner landed at Ciampino airport outside Rome, the aircraft's third stop since it took off late Tuesday from Tehran.

Both teen-agers were charged with hijacking and kidnapping, and face up to 21 years in prison if convicted.

A high-ranking official at Ciampino, speaking on condition that his name not be used, said the hijackers identified themselves as members of the People's Mujahadeen, a leading opposition group to Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

But in statements released Wednesday night in Rome and London, the People's Mujahadeen said it had nothing to do with the hijacking.

Hamid Rezaei, a Mujahadeen spokesman in London, said in a telephone call to The Associated Press bureau in Rome: "We know nothing about these two people and we have never organized such things as hijackings because it endangers the lives of innocent people."

Rezaei said the hijackers adopted the Mujahadeen banner because of "the popularity of our organization both inside and outside Iran." He added: "These (hijackings) are spontaneous actions by people in Iran to express their opposition to the regime."

In Iran, Prime Minister Hussein Musavi said the hijacking was "rooted in the confrontation of the world oppressive powers, particularly France, with the Islamic Republic of Iran."

Police identified the hijackers as Hosein Eftekhari, 18, and Mohsen Rahgozar, 17, both of Tehran. The two young men were armed only with a knife, police said, although they had claimed to have carried a bomb on board.

The airport official said the hijackers "got tired. It (the hijack) came to an end of its own accord." Rome Police Chief Giuseppe Porpora said that during the standoff, one hijacker had demanded fuel, food, medicine and navigational charts for routes to Paris, Frankfurt, London and Geneva.

Police said the two had intended to ask for political asylum in France but offered few other details about their political motives.

After preliminary questioning Wednesday night, the teen-agers were taken to Rome's Regina Coeli prison. They were to be queried again today as investigators seek to determine whether anyone else aboard the plane was involved in the hijacking.

After the hijack ended, police searched for explosives on the French-made Airbus but found none.

A report from the official Egyptian news agency in Cairo had quoted the pilot as saying there were 18 hijackers and that they had wired him with explosives. In Rome, authorities quoted passengers as saying the sky pirates were armed with a pistol and a grenade.

The passengers were taken to Rome hotels to spend the night, and were scheduled to return to Iran today on the same plane that brought them to Rome.

Drought scorching pastures, killing ponies

LONDON (AP) — A seven-month drought is killing ponies and trout, scorching pastureland and leaving millions of Britons with wilting gardens and empty swimming pools as they try to conserve water.

In unusually dry weather that has predominated since February, reservoirs are running low in parts of northern and western England and in Wales, which has received less than half of its average rainfall to date.

So far, authorities have not rationed water, but the drought could become worse than Britain's last major dry spell, which, stretching from May 1975 to August 1976, was the driest 16-month span since records first were kept in 1727.

By Monday this week, some 23 million of the 49 million people in England and Wales had been forbidden to water their gardens, wash their cars, fill their swimming pools and clean the exteriors of buildings.

Thanks to adequate rainfall this year, Scotland's 5 million people have been spared such problems.

The dry, hot weather in the rest of Britain has scorched many grazing pastures, decreased milk production, killed thousands of trout on fish farms and created forest-fire hazards on moors and in woodlands.

Half-wild ponies on Dartmoor in Devon are dying, said Joanna Vinson, secretary of the Dartmoor Livestock Protection Society.

Showers and baths were banned for the 12 residents and 110 vacationers on Lundy, a three-mile-long island in the Bristol Channel, after the natural springs dried up. The people have taken to using seawater for washing.

Education begins at earlier age

Copley News Service

Two decades ago kindergarten was a romp — a half-day of finger painting, puzzles and puppets with time-out for a milk break and a nap on the floor.

But these days kindergartners are learning rudimentary reading, basic math and penmanship. In many cases, they are expected to have learned the alphabet before they even enter the classroom door.

The old emphasis on developing motor coordination, speech and language now has been replaced with academics — learning the three R's.

"The pressure is on for kindergartners," says child development specialist Ellen Ostrie, whose hope is that kindergarten readiness testing can be provided to all prospective kindergartners.

Thousands of 5-year-olds march off to kindergarten each year but some, she says, aren't ready. She adds that many parents need help assessing whether their child is prepared.

Those who aren't ready aren't necessarily children with learning disabilities, but normal kids. "All children develop by their own timetables," Ms. Ostrie says. "You don't make a kid walk at 7 months, and just the same, you shouldn't accelerate a child into kindergarten if he isn't ready. Kindergarten is a child's first formal experience with learning. It is critical that the experience be a good one because it sets the tone for years to come."

Ms. Ostrie is convinced that parents should be aware of their children's developmental progress. Areas specifically monitored are motor coordination, speech and language, visual, social and emotional development.

Substantial growth in developmental areas is critical for 5-year-olds about to enter kindergarten. Without substantial growth in these areas, children may experience difficulty learning reading and writing and math. Ms. Ostrie, who has two young children, explains that learning is like a ladder — one step leads to another. Skills like putting together jigsaw puzzles help children learn to differentiate between shapes. Knowing this leads to being able to differentiate between the letters of the alphabet and numbers.

Children gather for a discussion of the days activities in a kindergarten classroom. Since kindergarten is a child's first exposure to the formal education system, a development specialist advises adequate preparation for both parent and child.

dren learn to differentiate between shapes. Knowing this leads to being able to differentiate between the letters of the alphabet and numbers.

In the same way, a child who can draw a picture of himself with all the parts intact and in the right place has learned how the body is put together. "You have to know how your body is connected before you can learn how other systems are connected," explains Ms. Ostrie. "That includes the alphabet and numbers."

There is no simple method for determining that a child is ready for kindergarten. But Ms. Ostrie lists the following developmental skills as important for a child if he is to function happily in the kindergarten classroom.

Speech and Language

- Asks meaning of words.
- Describes pictures and experiences.
- Uses appropriate verb tense and grammar.
- Recognizes simple jokes, riddles, absurdities (Do cats fly?).

Gross Motor Coordination

- Walks down stairs using alternate feet.
- Hops on one foot.
- Jumps along a 6-foot line with both feet.
- Walks scissor steps across a line.
- Begins to skip, alternating feet.

Fine Motor Coordination

- Can use scissors to cut a straight line.

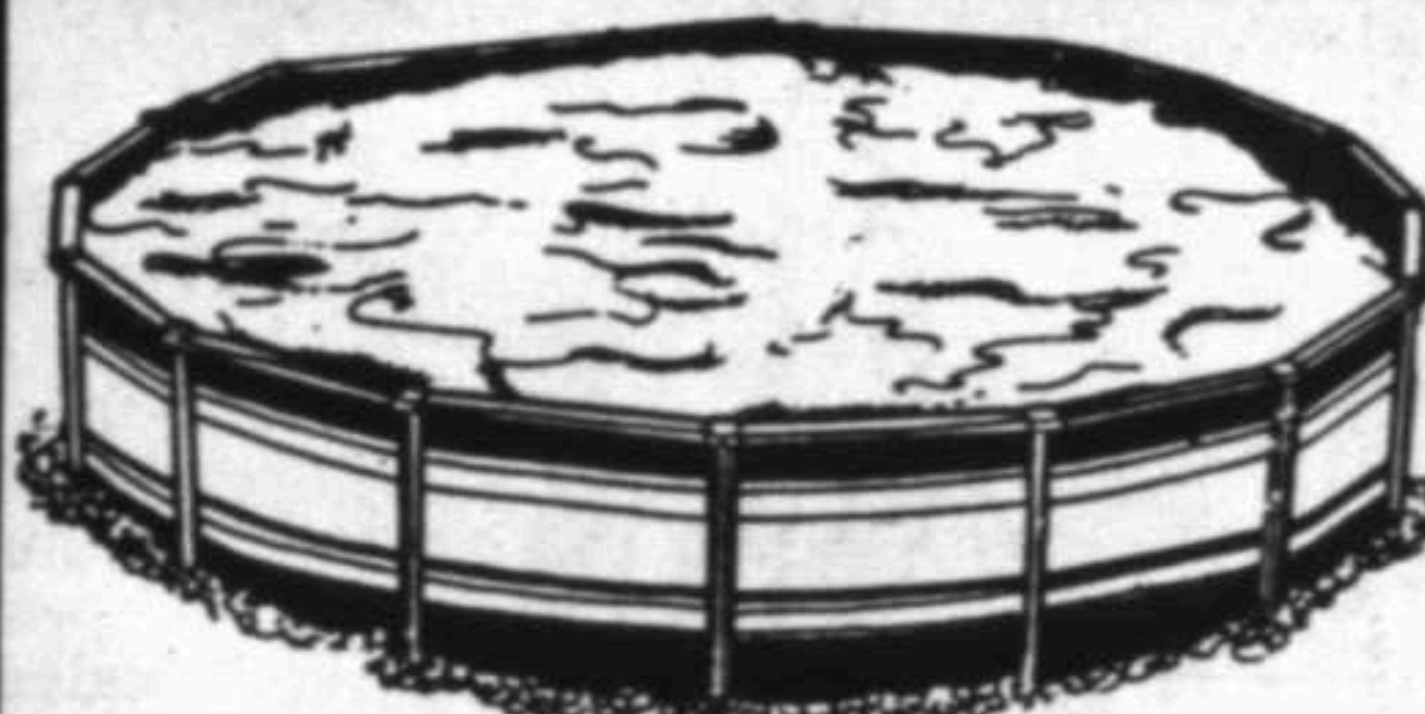

— Copies a circle, square and cross.

- Draws a person with body and four limbs.
- Traces within lines.

Social and Emotional

- Can handle snaps, buckles, buttons, zippers and begins to tie a shoelace bow independently.
- Independent toileting.
- Dresses and undresses independently.
- Able to function in structured group with rules (attentive and sits quietly).
- Shows concern and sympathy for others.
- Initiates sharing and taking turns.

Cost of college expected to climb another 8 percent

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

NEW YORK — How much does a year at college cost? A simple enough question, with one simple answer per college, right? No more. Today a parent asking that question is likely to hear about "tuition advance payment plans," or "parent aid loans," or "tuition rebate plans."

College costs have reached an average of $4,900 at public schools, and $9,570 at private institutions — and they're expected to climb another 8 percent this fall. Federal financial aid isn't as plentiful as it was several years ago, and many colleges are stretching limited financial aid resources to help students meet the rising cost of higher education.

"It's not going to be any easier this year, that's for sure," says Charles B. Saunders Jr., director of governmental relations at the American Council on Education in Washington.

IF IT'S NO EASIER for students, it's also no easier for the schools — and that can mean at least some good news for the college bound. If you look like a good prospect, colleges are after you as never before. With enrollments expected to decline for the next decade, students stand a better chance of going to school where they choose — and getting at least some financial help.

Still, there's the problem of how to pay a four-year tab that can reach $20,000 for public universities, and $40,000 or more at private schools.

"When you look at college costs, it's almost like being asked to pay completely for a house in four years. How many people are able to do that?" says Natalia Wickstrom, vice president of Student Assistance Services at The College Board.

The result is that a growing number of schools — mostly private liberal arts colleges — have been offering students and parents alternative financing plans that usually wind up serving the needs of both the school and the students. Some involve stretching out college payments to as much as 30 years — like a home mortgage.

So while college costs can look discouraging at first glance, financial aid experts say there may be big savings for parents and youngsters who do their homework.

STARTING THIS FALL, for instance, Hartwick College, in Oneonta, N.Y., will offer "parent aid loans" of $1,500 in each of the first two years of college at 9 percent interest.

The advantage for the student is that half the $3,000 loan is forgiven if repaid within six months after graduating. The advantage for the school is that since the deal is only good if the student graduates, it is a strong inducement to the student to stay at Hartwick for the full four years.

The University of Pennsylvania will offer a number of payment options. A student can borrow the full four-year tuition and repay it over 10 years at 10 percent interest. Or tuition can be paid in monthly installments. Or a student can prepay the entire four-year's tuition — about $8,900 a year or $35,600 for the full four years — and avoid tuition increases and financing charges.

SIMILARLY, University of Rochester (N.Y.) offers a smorgasbord of payment choices. Besides the option of prepaying all four years of tuition, the school allows students to pay 20 percent of tuition at the beginning of the year, and the balance in eight installments, with no interest or service charges.

Washington University in St. Louis was the pioneer four years ago in offering students the option of prepaying all four years of tuition. Yale University allows students to stretch college payments over 25 or 30 years under its Tuition Postponement Option Plan.

Sending more than one child to school at the same time? Consider schools that offer lower tuitions under family plans, like Elizabethtown College or Mercyhurst College in Pennsylvania, the University of San Francisco or Belmont Abbey College in North Carolina.

Sweet Briar College, a women's school in Virginia with a tuition of $7,850, offers a 50 percent tuition discount to women 25 years and older under its "turning point program." About 35 women took advantage of it this year, and 40 are expected to enroll next fall.

George Washington University offers a $65 discount off its $7,700 tuition to students who pay a full year's tuition in the fall. The University of San Diego also offers prepayment discounts.

MANY OF THESE alternative tuition plans call for parents or students to surrender large sums of money up front. That's fine for the wealthy. But what can the rest of us do?

— First, build a college aid library. Excellent hints for the college-bound can be found in "Your Own Financial Aid Factory," a book recently published by Peterson's Guides for $6.95.

A helpful book for understanding how to use the tax code to save on college costs is "Early Planning for College Costs: A Guide for Parents," available for $2 from the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, P.O. Box 467, Rockville, Md. 20850.

And youngsters can receive "Meeting College Costs," published by The College Board, for free through their high school guidance counselor.

"The College Cost Book," published annually by The College Board, is available at bookstores for $9.95, and details current costs at 3,200 colleges and universities.

— Make the tax laws work for you. Start saving for tuition when a youngster is born. Money put aside in a college fund keeps taxes on those savings low, and helps ease the sticker shock of tuition years later.

Reviewing vaccinations advised

The Midland City-County Health Department recommends parents of school-age children review shot records and make certain their children receive needed immunizations as soon as possible. By bringing children in during July, parents can avoid crowded conditions and long waits typical at health clinics during August and September.

Immunizations can be obtained at a family physician's office or at the Midland City-County Health Department, 501 Andrews Highway, on Mondays from 8-11 a.m. or 1-4 p.m.

School lunch guidelines provided

Regular lunch prices for Midland school children are $1 in the elementary grades and $1.10 in secondary schools.

Children from families whose income is at or below the level shown on the accompanying income guidelines chart may be eligible for either free meals or meals at a reduced price of 40-cents for lunch and 30-cents for breakfast.

Parents may apply for benefits at any time during the year by completing an application form and returning it to the school. Within 10 days of receiving the form the school will notify the parent or guardian of eligibility. Also, students who were eligible for free or reduced-price meals at the close of school last year will be eligible for the same benefits during the 10-day approval period for the new application.

Application forms and a copy of the guidelines will be given to each student the first day of school. The application requires the name and social security number of all adult family members. Adults without social security numbers must indicate that they do not have one. Schools may verify the source and amount of income as well as household composition.

Jan. 14 — Student holiday, teacher work day.

Feb. 18 — Washington's birthday holiday.

March 4-8 — Spring break.

April 5-8 — Easter holiday.

May 29 — Last day of classes.

Basic supplies needed for elementary students

Secondary school supply needs will be specified by teachers the first day of school.

Elementary students will need: two No. 2 pencils, one rubber eraser (not art gum), white glue in a plastic container (first graders need paste), a pair of five-inch sharp point scissors, a box of facial tissue and a box of 16 crayons (first graders need eight flat-sided crayons).

First-grade students also need a school box, two primary pencils, a box of watercolors and a butter tub or plastic container.

Second graders require a ruled tablet and third graders an 8-by-10½ inch notebook with paper. Fourth, fifth and sixth graders need an 8-by-10½ inch notebook with paper as well as spiral notebooks.

It's time for annual eye examination

By ERIC JUDE
Copley News Service

If you're like most parents, back-to-school season means taking your child for his annual eye exam. As everyone knows, fall is the time when children return to close reading work, detailed math assignments and the creation of colorful art collages. Your child will need the best possible vision skills in order to be successful in these endeavors.

A comprehensive eye examination, according to the American Optometric Association, should include:

- A review of the patient's and family's general health and eye health history.
- Examination of the eye's exterior and interior.
- A check of eye coordination and eye muscle function to check that the eyes are working together.
- Tests to determine nearsightedness, farsightedness or astigmatism.
- A test of the ability to change focus easily when shifting the eyes from one distance to another.

A child's first eye exam is recommended for no later than age 3. It should include all of the above, plus motor tests to determine eye-hand-foot coordination and tests of depth perception and color vision.

Visiting an eye doctor for the first time can be an unsettling experience for a child, but fears can be avoided says Y.Y. King, M.D., director of the South Arkansas Outpatient Surgi-Center and King Eye Health Clinic. Some suggestions:

- Plan for an appointment early in the day, before the child is tired.
- Don't suggest that there is anything to fear. Tell your child that the exam is painless and avoid bribes or promises.
- Describe the eye exam equipment in a fun way so your child will feel comfortable with it. For example, compare the instruments to a tiny flashlight and kaleidoscope.
- Do not mention the possibility of your child needing glasses because in the majority of cases, corrective lenses are not prescribed.

If the doctor does prescribe corrective eye wear, you may choose glasses or contact lenses. Like adults, many children may be reluctant to wear glasses, believing they will look ugly or that their peers will tease them. You can help your child select frames that will be attractive.

Contact lenses are the answer for children who prefer not to wear glasses. They can be fitted on children as young as 5 although the usual age is 10. The doctor will discuss care requirements of a variety of lenses with you. As long as your child is mature enough to care for the lenses, they can be prescribed.

Soft contact lenses often are recommended for children because they stay in place and rarely are lost. These lenses "breathe," allowing oxygen to pass through them so they are more comfortable than hard lenses. However, soft lenses are more difficult to care for than hard lenses.

Hard lenses often are prescribed for children who have a high degree of astigmatism or those who cannot achieve sharp vision with soft lenses.

Rigid gas permeable lenses, because they are rigid, offer easy care and sharp vision similar to hard lenses. But they also allow oxygen to reach the eye and so offer comfort similar to soft lenses, according to scientists at Polymer Technology Corp., manufacturers of the material used to make The Boston Lens II, a rigid gas permeable contact lens.

In addition to regular eye exams and proper corrective eye wear, vision problems can be minimized by developing proper habits and skills for your child and yourself.

- Teach your child good reading skills. Your child should hold all reading material at least 12 inches from his eyes and read only when seated upright.
- Teach your child to take breaks from close work.
- Encourage proper TV viewing habits.

'Back to basics' movement still subject of debate

By TERRY L. COLVIN
Copley News Service

A popular battle cry has fueled the education reform movement — "Back to basics!"

But nobody can agree on what "basics" means, or how they should be taught.

"We ought to be able to reach some consensus on what every student from kindergarten through college should learn," laments educator William J. Bennett, chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities. "We're getting closer to that goal but we're still not there."

Every recent study on the problems of America's schools has come up with new, and sometimes contradictory, definitions of basic academic skills and what students need to learn in the 1980s.

"We must define what we mean by basics," says Yvonne Larsen, vice chairman of the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

The debate, especially between conservative and liberal education groups, has been spirited.

Conservative groups call for emphasis on reading, writing and math. They also want stronger discipline, an emphasis on drill-and-practice teaching methods and an end to such concepts as the "open classroom" and team teaching.

Liberal groups call for a well-balanced education incorporating the three R's, science, history and the arts.

Why not simply roll back the clock to the curriculum of a generation ago?

"Quite simply because those are not the academic standards students need to survive today," says New York City schools Chancellor Anthony Alvarado. "A child cannot be literate today using the standards of 50 years ago."

By those standards, recent studies show, students are as literate today as their parents and grandparents were.

The National Assessment of Educational Progress, a barometer that measures scholastic performance, found that 87 percent of all high school graduates can read at the functional level, 75 percent write at the functional level and 90 percent can do simple computations.

But the same survey shows that performance in higher-order thinking skills — tasks defined as those necessary to compete in the labor force or college — are falling.

A report two years ago by the Education Commission of the States estimates that each year some 2 million high school graduates are not prepared for higher education and will fail in the job market.

This has sparked concern that often has resulted in a quick political fix where local school boards establish minimum competence levels and batteries of tests in the hope of restoring public confidence. According to the excellence commission, back to basics often has resulted in schools teaching how to pass tests, rather than academic skills.

But states continue to use standardized tests as a major determinant of academic achievement — 37 states now require students to pass basic skills tests to get a diploma.

"The problem is that the so-called 'academic floor' established by the school board or the Legislature has become a ceiling, instead," says North Carolina Gov. James B. Hunt, chairman of the National Task Force on Education for Economic Growth.

"We are testing 12th-grade students on sixth-grade materials and calling that competency," says Larsen.

The movement also has led to an overconcentration on testing, says University of California at Los Angeles education Professor John Goodlad. "Skills not testable by multiple-choice exam are largely ignored," he adds.

What has evolved from such concerns are new, more expansive, definitions of the basics.

One of the most ambitious efforts to define what students need to know was completed by the College Board, an 83-year-old national association of more than 2,800 secondary schools, colleges and universities.

The report identifies six basic academic subjects and the board's rationale for recommending them:

— English, including reading and literature, writing, speaking and listening and the principles of language. "Competence in language serves a variety of purposes: accomplishing the business of daily life, communicating attitudes and ideas, expanding thought and informing the imagination," the report says.

— The arts, including visual arts, theater, music and dance. These provide a means of expression beyond ordinary speaking and writing to "extend the human experience."

— Mathematics, including computing, statistics, algebra, geometry and trigonometry. "Mathematics is an indispensable language of science and technology, as well as business and finance," the report says.

— Science, including biology, chemistry and physics. Science "provides a sense of order in the universe and is one of civilizations' major intellectual achievements," the report says.

— Social studies, including world history, geography, cultures and U.S. history. "We live in a distinct kind of society and all people need to understand how such modern societies function and how they have developed," it says.

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — This is one Texas city where higher education is not afraid to get its hands dirty.

Breaking from the traditional pattern of many colleges, Corpus Christi Del Mar Community College and Corpus Christi State University have recognized the difference between "higher" education and a "college" education and teamed up to do something about it.

"We're kind of like a grocery store," says Dr. Jean Richardson, president of Del Mar, speaking of his two-year college. "If someone wants to buy beans — and doesn't want Shakespeare — then I sell him beans."

The school is determined to teach skills and trades which are marketable even if they don't result in college degrees.

Del Mar assures that marketability by keeping its hand on the local economic pulse through a Program Advisory Committee, composed of representatives of the "real world."

As a result, programs come and go at Del Mar, depending on economic demand.

"For example, we've formed and dismantled auto body classes several times according to the demand for workers," says the school president. "When our advisory committee tells us the market is saturated, we stop offering the program until the need arises to start it up again."

Often, the relationship with business and industry is even closer. Richardson cites a "roughneck" training program that was started during the latest burst of oil exploration.

Roughnecks do the heavy work on an oil rig. It can be extremely dangerous, especially for a worker without training.

"A Texas farm boy might have the muscle to do the job, but in a few days he might not have his head," says Richardson.

In response to the demand for skilled roughnecks, Del Mar set up a training program that ran in eight- to 10-week cycles. And when a Houston-based construction company wanted to train employees to be welders, Del Mar obliged by setting up classes taught from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m.

"Our shops were full during the day with regular classes," Richardson explains.

Del Mar's relationship with Corpus Christi State University underscores the adaptability of the two educational institutions.

Del Mar, which has some 8,600 freshmen and sophomore students, grants an associate's degree. CCSU, with about 3,350 juniors, seniors and graduate students, confers bachelor's and graduate degrees. Most of its enrollment is made up of Del Mar grads.

As a result, a careful dovetailing of the two institutions has resulted, a process aided by a personal relationship between Richardson and Dr. Alan Sugg, president of CCSU.

"We are friends," says Sugg, "but we also have a very close working relationship in terms of programmatic concerns. We make sure students have the right foundation."

Sugg compares the combination of the two schools to a four-year institution using a university college setup in which students concentrate in particular fields of study only in the last two years.

Richardson calls the arrangement the "inverted degree concept" in which students learn "the meaty stuff" in their last two years.

But is giving college credit for learning to use a wrench a lowering of standards, a dilution of the college degree?

Soviet Union revamping its educational system

By ROXINNE ERVASTI
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW — Education in the Soviet Union is to undergo an overhaul over the next few years aimed at giving every school graduate a labor skill through on-the-job study that will start in early grades.

In addition to mandatory practical learning of labor skills, the education reform planned under a law passed this spring also will see students start school at the age of 6 in 1986, instead of 7. They will attend school for 11 instead of 10 years.

The earlier start appears designed to give schools a younger intellect to mold to the state's desires for more ideologically committed citizens, and to overcome overindulgence by many parents of their children.

It is necessary, the Communist Party Central Committee said in announcing the school reform legislation, "to heighten vigilance toward the machinations of the aggressive forces of imperialism which furiously attack socialism and which count on the political inexperience of the young people." The Soviet press has also complained that youngsters are becoming too materialistic because of doting parents.

Valery Polyakov, deputy director of the Research Institute of Labor Education and Vocational Guidance Schools, said in a Soviet newspaper interview that as life improved in the Soviet Union, people began to protect their children with an attitude of "they will have plenty of time for work later."

Academic marks in school took precedence over acquiring respect for labor, he said.

The requirement that "all young people, including high school graduates, learn an occupation" resulted in part from a growing labor shortage caused by a declining birth rate and the increasing reluctance of youngsters to be manual workers.

"It is an open secret that the country is experiencing a shortage of working hands, especially in sectors not requiring highly skilled labor," Education Minister Mikhail Prokofiev said in a recent Soviet newspaper interview. "Direct participation in socially useful labor of young people who have received some professional skills at the school will be very useful in every respect."

Education officials say one-third of high school graduates have enough training to be skilled workers, but that the intent is to "give everyone a skill, to prepare them for work, irrespective of whether they will continue studies or not."

"No matter what turn of life they take, they will need the ability to work in any sphere," says the education minister.

Soviet leader Konstantin Chernenko has defended the school reform, saying in answer to what he called hostile foreign propaganda about the law that it would not amount to exploitation of student labor.

But Soviet officials have said the on-the-job training will help the state economy.

The program is to be implemented in stages through 1990, the state says, with an ambitious construction project of new general schools for seven million students, 800 new vocational schools and introduction of equipment.

Primary school students will have workrooms with simple equipment. Junior high schoolers will spend two to three hours a week in vocational training and senior grades three to four hours a week.

"As well as learning elementary methods of material processing and growing crops, children will also be introduced to a range of trades in junior high school," says another education specialist. From the eighth grade, students will "learn a valuable trade in keeping with the economy's requirements."

"Students will be engaged in work suitable for their age, sometimes at factories," says Yuri Babansky, a vice president of pedagogical sciences.

Education officials say many students wrongly think they have science or arts talents. Allowing them to concentrate only on those fields does students and society a disservice if they later cannot work in those fields and also lack a trade, the officials say.

"We do not have to worry about people of genius, even potential ones," says Polyakov, saying special programs and boarding schools will continue to cater for them. "Society, for its part, ensures that they have expertise, which will always come in handy whatever their inclinations. I cannot ever remember an instance when the habit of working harmed a person."

Another aim of the education reform was to improve the pay and standard of teachers.

Teachers in the United States and other Western countries frequently complain of low pay for the hours spent in classrooms, preparing lessons and caring for children's needs with such unpaid labor as meeting with parents.

But they are well paid by Soviet standards. An elementary school teacher with higher education earns $147 a month for teaching 24 lessons a week in a country where the average wage is $255. Teachers must often wait up to 15 years for good housing given to industrial workers in three to five years.

Almost $5.6 billion were set aside for pay increases when the reform was passed into law last April. The reform also vows to try and attract more men into teaching.

Volunteers, parents help schools in variety of ways

By CHERYL DOWNEY-LASKOWITZ
Copley News Service

They are the men in emblazoned red Windbreakers parking cars and selling hot dogs to raise money for sports. They are the women sweating over registration tables at high schools and the chaperones carting instruments for band members. They are the retirees serving as unpaid tutors and the extra pairs of hands in a classroom filled with kindergartners.

They are the loyal legion of school volunteers.

While politicians focus on educational quality as the issue of the 1980s, parents across the country have been toiling quietly in classrooms, bake sales and school yards to make schools better.

Volunteers interviewed all said they must take some personal responsibility for the quality of education.

"They feel that by participating, they're supporting public education and they're showing their children they care about what's happening in the school," said Shari Jones, president of the Orange County PTA in Southern California.

"I've found that PTA volunteers are a very selfless lot. Usually, they're doing it for all kids, not just their own."

The donated time and money make a difference.

In one district, PTA volunteers started school libraries by carrying district books from school to school in apple boxes. Once the system was decentralized, volunteers staffed each school library for 12 years until librarians were hired. They still help out.

At one school, parents concerned about class size donated enough money to hire an additional teacher. In another district, parental donations and fund-raisers brought in $90,000 just for computers.

The National School Volunteer Program, a non-profit organization headquartered in Virginia, estimated that 6 million people are donating time to the nation's schools.

Parental involvement, said a high school principal "is THE difference" in a school.

Rookie volunteer Diane Adame, who became a room mother when her daughter entered kindergarten, made the same point.

"Education is not solely the responsibility of the teacher or solely the responsibility of the parent," said Adame. "It's both."

Not everyone understood what she was doing, however.

"Someone told me I was crazy. You usually send your kids to school to get rid of them."

Marion Robboy, a working mother of four, does need someplace to send her children after school but wasn't excited about shuttling them to a baby sitter.

When vocal music and other electives were cut from the elementary school program in the financially hard-pressed schools, Mrs. Robboy volunteered to start a non-profit school enrichment program, charging students a fee to take classes after school.

Now, her children take after-school enrichment classes each semester and Mrs. Robboy sees it as a boon for working parents.

"I'm selfish. I want this for my children," she said. "I work. I need this for them and I need to know they're spending quality time."

Children have only one chance at education and if that education is not a good one, Mrs. Robboy said, "we have only ourselves to blame."

Ruth Sharples, a 56-year-old grandmother, said that because of her five sons she has spent 28 years and thousands of hours as a PTA volunteer and officer.

"I believe in public education," said Mrs. Sharples. "If I did not, I wouldn't volunteer my time."

Leida Kindelberger, another mother of five who spent 25 years volunteering, also talked about the concern for children and support for public education that are at the root of her activism.

A volunteer helps school children with a difficult reading assignment.

Moods affect teens' performance

CHICAGO (AP) — Teen-agers' ability to do well in school may depend more on their moods than on their intelligence, according to new research into students' activities, private thoughts and emotional ups and downs.

"Too much research has focused on cognitive processes, on thought, and how you can help or hinder thinking," according to Dr. Mihaly Csikszentmihalyi, a psychology professor at the University of Chicago and chairman of the university's committee on human development.

"What we think is more important is how kids feel when they're involved in various activities," he says. "How they feel will have an important effect on how they are motivated to continue to use what they are learning."

Csikszentmihalyi and his colleagues studied 75 students chosen at random from a 4,000-student Chicago area high school. The researchers equipped each student with an electronic beeper. A transmitter was used to activate the pager at random moments, signaling the students to record their thoughts, feelings and activities at the time.

Students were signaled while eating breakfast, sitting in class, playing basketball, even while using drugs.

The researchers combined the data they collected — a total of 2,734 usable responses recorded during a year — with information they had gained from interviews that covered the students' background, family and school situations.

Other findings showed that:

In general, teen-agers who spent more time home with their families were the ones who had higher grades, fewer school absences and were judged by teachers as being more intellectually involved.

Time spent on schooling, including class time and homework, took up about one-fourth of the students' waking hours — about 38 hours per week. Students in Japan and the Soviet Union spent significantly more time on studies.

Marilyn Simon says Americans share a widespread dread of math. Her book, "I Can Do Math," and special courses are designed to help students, both young and old, overcome the fear.

Sometimes man, math just don't add up

By JOSEPH THESKEN
Copley News Service

Do your palms sweat when you face a row of figures and a calculator isn't handy?

Does balancing a bank statement give you a headache?

And when your youngster brings you a fourth-grade math problem, does your mind go blank?

If the answer is yes to any of the above, you may be suffering from "mathphobia" — a fear of mathematics.

You're far from alone, however, said Marilyn Simon, a math teacher, lecturer and author, who is doing her bit to wipe out a widespread dread of math.

"It's estimated that 87 percent of all people have some form of this phobia," she said. "The range is from a mild dislike of math to actually hating it."

"Mathphobia often becomes a double syndrome. On the one hand, it may be math avoidance — people will do everything to avoid it in their lives. On the other side is math abhorrence, in which they actually are repulsed by math."

Simon, an enthusiastic exponent of the virtues of mathematics, is attacking the problem on two fronts — as a teacher and as a writer.

She conducts seminars to persuade those with a dread of math that their fears are groundless.

As a writer, she co-authored a book with the title "I Can Do Math," an attempt to brush away the mystery associated with the study of mathematics.

"Most people get turned off to math at an early age, and from then on avoid it with a vengeance," said Simon.

"It's such a traumatic experience to some that they have a total recall of when the turnoff occurred in their lives, even if it was 40 years ago," she said.

"I remember one older woman said she can still recall the dress her teacher wore and what she said when she chastised her in front of the class for not knowing the answer to an arithmetic problem."

"The teacher called her stupid and that did it. From then on, she felt she couldn't cope with mathematics."

Simon, who has a master's degree in math from the Illinois Institute of Technology at Chicago, has taught high school, university and adult classes for 16 years.

"On the first night of class, I try to get the students to tell their feelings about math, why they dislike it," she said. "I've heard 20 different reasons. Most of them concern the teacher they had. Usually, if students don't like their teachers, they don't like the subjects."

"A lot of elementary teachers have mathphobia themselves, and this feeling carries over to their students."

"Also, math builds on itself. So when a student misses classes for a few days, he or she may miss one whole concept, making it difficult to catch up. Math is like building blocks."

"There are many other reasons. But I try to address these dislikes so they develop a neutral feeling about math."

So how does Simon preach a positive approach to math?

"After clearing their minds of objections (to math), I try to lay down some simple rules in learning math," she said.

Is your child ready for self-care?

By PATRICIA DIBSIE
Copley News Service

Years ago, one of a mother's biggest worries on the first day of school was whether her child would remember to finish his lunch.

Today many working parents have another concern: Who will care for their children from the time school lets out until they arrive home from work?

Often, the children are left to fend for themselves. They are called latchkey children — many wear house keys on a string around their necks or carry a key to let themselves into an empty house at the close of the school day.

The latchkey experience is not for everyone, however, so how do you know if your child is ready to assume the responsibility of self-care?

"Careful planning," says Lynette Long, co-author of "The Handbook for Latchkey Children and Their Parents" (Pram Books).

Mrs. Long, who wrote the handbook with husband Thomas, says, "Before placing a child in self-care, a parent must carefully assess the child's abilities to carry out the duties and responsibilities demanded."

Long, who holds a doctorate in education, is associate professor of education and director of the program of counseling and guidance at Catholic University in Washington, D.C. Mrs. Long, who also holds a doctorate, is assistant professor of education at Loyola College. Together they offer the following checklist for evaluating whether a child is ready for self-care. Answer each question yes or no:

— Do you believe your child is mature enough to care for himself or herself?

— Has your child indicated a willingness to try self-care?

— Is your child able to solve problems?

— Is your child able to communicate with adults?

— Is your child able to complete daily tasks?

— Is your child generally unafraid to be alone?

— Can your child unlock and lock the doors to your home unassisted?

— Is there an adult living or working nearby — someone your child knows and can rely on in case of an emergency?

— Do you have adequate household security?

— Do you consider your neighborhood safe?

"If you answered 'no' to any of the above questions, it is highly recommended that you delay or abandon plans to leave your child in self-care until positive responses can be given for all the questions," says Thomas.

If you're pretty sure the child is ready, go ahead and try the arrangement but be certain to set down rules.

Some guidelines:

Keys

"Letting a child wear his or her house key on a chain around the neck in view is an open invitation to trouble. Strangers are aware that the child will be spending some hours after school alone. Instead, make sure your child wears his 'house key necklace' inside a shirt, out of view.

"Parents should also hide an extra key outside or leave an extra key with a neighbor in case the child loses his or her key."

Survival kits

"The survival kit should include an identification card which contains the child's name, address, home telephone number and parents' work numbers. This card would prove indispensable to children lost or injured on the way to or from school."

"Parents should also include enough change for an emergency call if necessary. Some parents include enough money for bus or cab fare home. This survival kit should be placed where it is always accessible to the child (some parents tape the survival kit inside their child's coat pocket.)"

Rules

"Print all rules on a large sheet of paper and post them in a conspicuous place, perhaps the kitchen. Each rule should be explained and discussed so that children understand not only how they are expected to behave, but why they are expected to behave in a certain way."

Telephones

"This is the lifeline between parent and child. Many parents require that their children telephone as soon as they arrive home — a good practice for reducing a child's anxiety (and it helps reduce a parent's anxiety, too)."

"Emergency numbers should also be posted in a conspicuous place, including the telephone number of a helpful neighbor."

Emergency procedures

— Fires: "Simply telling children what to do in case of fire isn't enough. Go over the procedures with them by staging drills."

— Accidents: "Teach your children basic first-aid techniques. Teach your children how to telephone for an ambulance."

— Robberies: "Children can be prepared by a parent telling them where to go if they hear someone breaking in and how to call the police. Children should know not to enter the house if they see a door ajar, a window broken or anything else unusual."

Teddies can makes class bear-able

By DIANE M. BALK
Associated Press Writer

OXFORD, Ohio — The Teddy bear, cherished by many a child, can be a valued friend and a valuable teaching tool, say two women who have written a book for kindergarten teachers on using bears in the classroom.

"Everybody loves bears. You don't hate bears. You might choose to ignore them but you still feel confident about them and enjoy them," says Arleen Steen, an assistant professor of teacher education at Miami University.

Miss Steen never had a Teddy bear as a child in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Now, she has several hundred bear items. Recently, she and Marty Lane, a kindergarten teacher at Shiloh View Elementary School in Tirowood who had taken one of Miss Steen's workshops, finished writing "Teddy Bears At School."

The reference book for kindergarten teachers tells how to use Teddy bears to teach basic skills such as math, language arts and motor skills, as well as improving a child's self-image.

Miss Steen, who has a doctorate in education, became interested in bears after watching kindergarten teachers respond to books about bears in a library corner organized by themes.

"Once I accidentally chose bears. There are lots and lots of bear books. The kids made it very clear that that was a preferred thing to read about. They feel more comfortable with something that they know and understand and a little kid feels an expert on the Teddy bear," she says.

The children also responded well to bear games, and didn't view counting Teddy bears or working with Teddy bears and weights as work, Miss Steen says.

"A 5-year-old doesn't discriminate between work and play," she says.

Teddy bears seem to strike a universal responsive chord. Even a shy child identifies with a bear and responds well, Mrs. Lane says.

"We find all sorts of language development, through children talking to the bears, bears talking to each other. Sometimes the bears help to get problems out in the open," she says.

Bears have the added virtue of being more durable than a doll, which is often cast aside after it is broken, she says.

'Tidal wave of reform' washes educational world

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — A year ago the education world was abuzz with talk about the "rising tide of mediocrity" that a Reagan administration panel had found washing over American schools.

Today, the talk has turned to what Education Secretary T.H. Bell calls "a tidal wave of reform, unprecedented in its breadth and support, that promises to restore excellence as the hallmark of education."

The quality of America's schools has re-emerged on the top of the national agenda, and in virtually every state legislators, school boards, business leaders and parents are pressing to reverse what is widely viewed as two decades of decline.

Despite what its Democratic critics say has been an unremitting record of being anti-education when it comes to funding the public schools, the Reagan administration has succeeded in sparking this debate and prodding the education establishment into looking at new ways of going about the business of teaching the 45 million students in elementary and secondary schools.

The cutting edge of reform has been at the state level, where legislatures from Mississippi to California have been passing school improvement bills and levying taxes to pay for them at an astonishing rate.

A few years ago, lawmakers who specialized in school issues were complaining that their ablest colleagues were avoiding assignment to education committees to concentrate on such "hot" issues as energy and the environment.

Today, led by such education-minded governors as Bob Graham in Florida, Lamar Alexander in Tennessee, Jim Hunt in North Carolina and Pete du Pont in Delaware, education is the hottest item on the solons' agendas.

The polemical report that ignited the school reform debate was "A Nation At Risk: The Imperative for Educational Reform," issued in 1983 by Bell's National Commission on Excellence in Education. It took only 36 pages to catalog the sins of America's schools and to offer a laundry list of improvements.

By contrast, it took Bell's department 229 pages to list all the state activities in a new report, "The Nation Responds: Recent Efforts to Improve Education."

Bell says that 34 states and the District of Columbia have moved to raise their high school graduation standards, and 13 others are still weighing tougher diploma requirements. Many of those same states relaxed standards in the late 1960s and 1970s in a more permissive era when electives proliferated, grades were inflated and college entrance test scores sagged.

Bell counted 21 states considering or actually trying longer school days and years, and 30 that were embarked on or planning pay reforms to provide career ladders for teachers and extra rewards for so-called "master" teachers.

The commission had suggested that teachers' salaries "should be increased and should be professionally competitive, market-sensitive and performance-based." President Reagan jumped on the latter phrase last year to mount a publicity juggernaut for merit pay. The National Education Association's opposition to merit pay, Reagan argued, was an impediment to school reform.

Now, a year later, the administration has toned down its rhetoric on merit pay, which even advocates admit is not a simple idea to implement in a profession with two million practitioners whose pay traditionally has been determined by simply counting their college credits and years on the job.

But several of the major state reform bills — including the one in Tennessee, where the NEA's state affiliate initially waged a pitched battle with Alexander, the Republican governor, over his master teacher idea — have included some form of career ladder leading to higher salaries for outstanding classroom teachers.

In many cases, such as in California where the legislature voted to raise beginning teachers' salaries by 10 percent a year over three years to $18,000, large sums were set aside for general pay raises.

One education report last year noted that affluent Montgomery County, Md., which runs its own liquor stores, pays liquor clerks with high school diplomas more than new teachers with college degrees.

Enrollment in college education departments has plummeted. In 1971, the 176,614 education majors accounted for 21 percent of all new college graduates. In 1981, the 108,309 education majors were less than 12 percent of their graduating classes.

One consequence is the possibility of teachers shortages in many areas, not just math and science, as the post-World War II baby boom generation sends its children to school and enrollments grow again.

Some states, including New Jersey, have taken steps to make it easier for liberal arts graduates to get teaching certificates without taking the how-to-teach courses traditionally taught in education departments.

It appears now that American education was headed for a course correction, regardless of whether Bell had empaneled his fault-finding commission and without waiting for the other blue-ribbon 1983 reports from the Carnegie Foundation, the Education Commission of the States and others.

Indeed, Bell's update on school reforms stated: "Much of this (reform) was already under way prior to 1983, but the issuance of the reports stimulated additional reforms over the past year."

But the education secretary says the real payoff from the current wave of reform won't be felt for four or five years when students who have had a chance to take more math and science courses get their crack at those tests.

Some critics fear that tougher standards will just aggravate the already high dropout rate of 28 percent, and that minorities in particular will feel the lash. Bell says, "Anybody who can think, can learn."

He believes students will perform better if more is demanded of them, and he emphatically rejects "any implication that we ought to have low standards to coddle to the minority students."

While Bell's enthusiasm for making comparisons by standardized test scores dismisses some educators, the results of Florida's first-in-the-nation minimum competency tests seem to support his position.

Sixty-nine percent of Florida's black 10th graders passed the math section of the functional literacy test this year, a gain of 16 percentage points over last year and 46 points over 1977 when the test was first given. Ninety-two percent of white students passed it. Florida last year won a protracted legal battle that had barred the state from denying diplomas to students who flunked the test.

School reform movement takes on different character state by state

Associated Press

Here is a closer look at how the school reform movement has played out in several states:

GEORGIA

This year's new freshman class will have to take four years English instead of three and two years' each of math and science instead of one thanks to a decision by the State Board of Education last November.

Georgia students will also have to prove that they have learned something. Starting next year, third-graders will have to pass an "exit" exam in basic skills before they can be promoted to the fourth grade.

The state board also recently raised the passing grade for the basic skills tests in reading and math given high school students since 1980, and it ordered more time spent in class and less on extracurriculars. The board has prescribed that students must spend at least 173 days of the 180-day school year in uninterrupted instruction.

IOWA

The Iowa Legislature has provided a small carrot for Iowa students to increase their math and science load in high school. Those who take heavier loads qualify for college tuition grants of $300 instead of the usual $250.

Gov. Terry Branstad, a Republican, recently vetoed a bill that would have required prospective teachers to pass a test and spend a year as interns before being certified. Branstad said that a new, nine-member board of educational examiners envisioned under the bill would have been "an expensive, duplicative bureaucracy."

In Des Moines, school officials have established a "central campus" at Technical High School, where students from any high school in the city can take intensive instruction in certain academic and vocational subjects for one half-day a week. Among the new offerings this fall will be Chinese and Japanese.

MARYLAND

The Maryland General Assembly this year enacted the largest education program in the state's history: $616 million in new funds for local school districts over five years. The state is looking to narrow the gap in funding among richer and poorer districts.

The Maryland Board of Education is considering new graduation requirements, including an extra math course and a new course in fine arts — an area that has generally been passed over in the current wave of school reforms. Students who take a dozen advanced credits, including an extra science course and a foreign language, and who maintain a B average would qualify for a "certificate of distinction" with their diploma.

Maryland already sponsors a program for the gifted and talented in each of its 24 districts, as well as summer programs for the gifted.

OREGON

State Superintendent of Public Instruction Verne Duncan has proposed an eight-point plan to improve public schools, including creation of an honors diploma, increasing the number of credits required for graduation from 21 to 23, and making students pass reading, writing and math tests at grades 3, 6, 8 and 10.

Duncan also wants to crack down on the time that students spend away from class on athletics and extracurriculars, and to add computer literacy to the list of skills students must master in high school. The state already has doubled to two credits each the number of required math and science courses.

HAWAII

Hawaii, which operates the nation's only statewide school system, was one of only three states

(Iowa and Massachusetts were the others) where Bell's department found no evidence of any moves to raise high school graduation requirements. Its efforts to improve its schools are focused more on the educational climate than on actual classroom work, according to Kathleen Jones, a spokeswoman for the Hawaii Department of Education.

One major project involves 30 schools on the windward side of Oahu where officials are canvassing everyone from teachers, students and parents to janitors, businessmen and nearby residents for their ideas and suggestions about the schools.

The schools will feed the information into computers and look for ways to accentuate the positive, according to project coordinator

Annette Moriyama.

"This is a real departure from the historical way of doing things. Instead of attacking the system's wrongness, we are looking at areas of positive impact and trying to reinforce them," she says.

NORTH CAROLINA

North Carolina's largest school system — Charlotte-Mecklenburg schools with 72,000 students — is tightening teaching standards with a pilot program starting in the fall.

In the $500,000 Teacher Career Development Program, 150 tenured teachers will receive extra training and evaluation for one year, says Myra Joines, public information coordinator.

Under the pilot program, teachers will work toward career status at three different levels — each increasing in responsibility. Teachers gaining the highest status could earn up to $38,000 a year.

"The idea behind it obviously is to improve the quality of teachers in our schools and to make sure that we can compete with private industry to get the best persons into teaching," says Ms. Joines. "The sad fact is our high school teachers see that very few of their brightest students are going into teaching."

Also starting with the next academic year, it will take Charlotte-Mecklenburg teachers at least five years to get tenure, instead of the current three years.

The city-county school system also raising its academic requirements, requiring high school students, who now take one math and two science courses, to take an extra class in each of the two disciplines.

MICHIGAN

William Pappas, principal of Northview High School in suburban Grand Rapids, Mich., says his school and many others in Michigan are working to comply with a report by the Michigan High School Commission calling for a longer school day and school year, tougher graduation requirements and a school accreditation plan. Almost six months after the recommendations were released, Pappas says his own school and many others are putting many of the proposals into place for the upcoming school year.

Layered look scoring big wins for boys in back-to-school styles

By ERIC JUDE
Copley News Service

The layered look in boys' clothes will be getting top grades this school year according to the Kaynee Co., a producer of boys wear. Coordinated layers of pants, jackets, shirts, sweaters and vests will be present throughout the school term — from early fall right through to spring — simply by adding or subtracting pieces.

Learning a lesson from men's and women's fashion, boys wear now is taking advantage of the comfort and fashionability of multiple layers. By mixing and matching several tops with one pair of trousers, boys can make a variety of good-looking outfits.

And these outfits span the seasons — just put a sweater or a jacket over a shirt; top a sport shirt with a knit shirt, or top that with a vest and a jacket for really cold weather. Layering provides as much warmth as you like.

Knit shirts, the perfect weight for early autumn, are usually the favorite for those first back-to-school days. And with the new approach to dressing, they become the first layer under a flannel or cotton sport shirt once the weather turns colder. Junior simply can tuck the extra shirt into his school bag in the morning and layer it on after football practice when the late afternoons become cool.

Winter sports always have required layering with many lightweight pieces for warmth and comfort. Skiers have known all along that several cotton or thin wool tops keep you more comfortable than a heavy jacket. Now school kids are learning to take these sports ideas and turn them into their own style — practical and upbeat.

Layered clothes go from school to play with ease. Boys just throw on an extra sweater and off they go on their bikes or to the playground. In warmer weather, they like to put a vest over one or two shirts. And layering is easier on a parent's pocketbook, as well. Why not wear one shirt over another in place of a jacket? And why buy two jackets when one will do?

A typical layered look for the back-to-school boy could be a combination of a gray cotton canvas pant teamed with a blue cotton knit shirt with gray canvas trim. Top that with a gray, blue and black striped knit top and a canvas shirt jacket or bomber jacket and your boy is set for any activity in any weather.

He could layer a rugby striped shirt or a knit shirt with a pouch pocket or snaps or a polo-type collar — all in the same gray and blue color combination — over the same canvas pants.

Parents and students are both "studying" the new fall clothes to put together a layered wardrobe that will pass every test during the coming term. And coordinated clothes are bound to win top honors in class after class.

Graphic prints give girls 'softwear'

By PATRICIA ROSENAU
Copley News Service

In recent years a new era has developed. Characterized by technological advances, it's the age of computers. Since the early '80s, the use of computers has become widespread. As adults, we bank by computer, shop by computer and use home computers to assist in household chores.

However, no group has been influenced more by the electronic revolution than children. It has affected their education, their leisure activities and even their fashions.

Classroom computers and specially designed programs allow children of all ages to practice the alphabet, improve mathematical skills and even rewrite compositions in a less tedious and more enjoyable manner.

A 1982 study conducted in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area indicated that since the advent of computers in the classroom, children have become receptive to learning. Computers have permitted children to become more active in their own education, so children have become more independent. And with the dramatic increase in personal computers, children are able to continue their computer studies outside of school.

In addition to being an aid for schoolwork, children have found computers to be a source of entertainment. Video games have become one of their most popular leisure activities.

While it is possible, and convenient, to play these games at home, many Pac-Man professionals prefer to perfect their skills at the numerous arcades. Large groups of children gather at these game centers to see who can score the most points against their computer opponent. Video games definitely have altered how children entertain themselves.

And this year back-to-school clothes definitely will be affected by the computer craze. According to Bette Adcock, vice president of design for Nannette, a children's wear manufacturer: "This year's back-to-school fashions reflect the new high-tech environment by featuring graphic prints in bright primary colors."

Dresses in large windowpane checks are designed with exciting collar treatments and artful appliques. In response to the popular classroom computer that takes its name, the apple, traditionally a fruit reserved for the teacher, is used as a popular fashion motif.

Corporate gifts surpass grants to colleges

Associated Press

Contributors gave an estimated $5.16 billion to colleges and universities in 1982-83, with corporate gifts surpassing foundation grants for the first time, according to the annual survey taken by the Council for Financial Aid to Education.

The total was an increase of $300 million, or 6.2 percent, over the $4.86 billion estimated for 1981-82.

The survey involved information from 1,137 schools, about 65 percent of the colleges and universities engaged in raising funds.

"The continued large increase in corporate giving are particularly noteworthy," said John R. Haire, president of the Council, "considering that corporate profits have been depressed for the past several years."

However, he added that the gains were offset by increasing costs, particularly for salaries.

"Universities and colleges are just about holding their own in light of increased costs," he said.

In addition to corporations and foundations, the gifts came from alumni, non-alumni individuals and religious denominations.

Harvard University led in the amount of voluntary support received, followed by Stanford and the University of Minnesota. Also in the top 10 were Columbia University, Cornell University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Yale University, Princeton University, University of Southern California and University of Pennsylvania.

Open to possibilities.

You'll be wide-eyed at the versatility of the new Honda Civic Wagon.

All four seats fold down independently. For a total of 10 different seating and cargo arrangements. There's a drawer under the right front seat and a compartment in the rear floor. As well as child-proof rear door locks, remote liftgate lock release, a rear window wiper/washer and a spacious interior.

Out on the road anything goes, thanks to front-wheel drive and torsion bar front suspension with front and rear stabilizer bars. And you can choose automatic transmission with lock-up torque converter.
